E. Diagnostic Questions: Challenging the Ruling

An attorney considering a challenge to a court's ruling on motions for summary judgment or summary adjudication should ask the following questions:

1. Opposing Party

§36.213 a. If Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication Is Granted

1. Are there new or different facts justifying a motion for reconsideration under CCP §1008(a)?

2. Has the 10-day limitation period after the order was made or known expired?

3. Is there a legally sufficient explanation of why these facts were not presented earlier?

4. Is there a basis to seek relief under CCP §473 on grounds of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, e.g., inability to make a strong showing for legally excusable reasons?

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.214 b. Additional Procedures If Only Summary Judgment Is Granted

1. Is there a basis for requesting a new trial under CCP §659, e.g., newly discovered evidence not previously available?
2. Is there a basis to set aside the judgment by motion or separate action in the trial court on the ground of extrinsic fraud or mistake?
3. Has the motion been made diligently?
4. Can a meritorious claim be established?
5. Is there a basis for review by appeal after final judgment is entered?

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.215 2. Moving Party: If Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication Denied

1. Does an alleged different state of facts exist that would justify a motion for reconsideration in the trial court?
2. Has the 10-day limitation period after the order was made or known expired?
3. Is there a legally sufficient explanation why these facts were not presented earlier?
4. If they do not exist now, can new facts be developed to fill gaps in the moving party's evidence? If so, the motion may be renewed later under CCP §1008(b).
5. Does the order denying summary judgment or summary adjudication comply with CCP §437c(g)? If not, there may be a basis for a writ.
6. Does the order identify at least one triable issue of fact?
7. Does the order refer to the evidence showing that the fact identified is disputed?
8. Does the order identify any other basis for the denial (e.g., inability to obtain controverting evidence)?
9. Is there some other basis for a writ under CCP §437c(m)?
10. Should consideration be given to appealing the order denying the motion after final judgment is entered in the case?

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that on _ _[date]_ _ at _ _[time]_ _, or as soon thereafter as the matter may be heard, in _ _[department]_ _ of the _ _[court]_ _ located at _ _[full address]_ _, defendant _ _[name]_ _ will and hereby does move the Court under Code of Civil Procedure §437c for an order that summary judgment be entered in favor of this defendant and against plaintiff, _ _[name]_ _. The grounds for issuance of this order are that no triable issue exists for any material fact in this case, and defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law.

If for any reason summary judgment cannot be granted, defendant moves in the alternative for summary adjudication and requests that the Court:

1. Order that the following causes of action and claims have no merit and are eliminated from this case:

a. Plaintiff's first cause of action for medical malpractice, which is barred by the statute of limitations as set forth in Code of Civil Procedure §340.5 (see separate statement of undisputed facts, fact nos. 1-3).

b. Plaintiff's claims for punitive damages asserted in the fourth count of the second cause of action and the fifth cause of action (see separate statement of undisputed facts, fact nos. 4-7).

2. Find that the defendant did not owe a duty to the plaintiff with respect to matters alleged in plaintiff's second and fourth causes of action (see separate statement of undisputed facts, fact no. 8).

These alternative motions are based on the attached documents and exhibits, including the separate statement of undisputed material facts; the signed transcript of plaintiff's deposition taken on _ _[date]_ _; the declarations of _ _[name]_ _ and _ _[name]_ _; specified contents of the file in this case, of which the Court is requested to take judicial notice, as shown in the notice of request to take judicial notice; the supporting memorandum; and any evidence received at the hearing.

FACTS: _ _[Succinctly state facts underlying motion]_ _.

I. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS FOR MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTIONS IS THREE YEARS AFTER DATE OF INJURY OR ONE YEAR AFTER PLAINTIFF DISCOVERS, OR THROUGH USE OF REASONABLE DILIGENCE SHOULD HAVE DISCOVERED, INJURY.

Code of Civil Procedure §340.5. See also Knowles v Superior Court (Labo) (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1290 [13 CR3d 700].

Plaintiff _ _[name]_ _'s medical malpractice claim is barred by Code of Civil Procedure §340.5 because the alleged acts of so-called medical malpractice occurred on or before March 3, 2004, the date of surgery (plaintiff's amended complaint at p 3; defendant's declaration, Exhibit E). In addition, plaintiff became aware of defendant _ _[name]_ _'s alleged medical malpractice and all injuries allegedly sustained as a result on or before March 12, 2004 (defendant's declaration, Exhibit E; plaintiff's deposition at p 13, lines 5-8). This action was not filed until April 1, 2007 (plaintiff's original complaint). Accordingly, plaintiff's action is barred by the statute of limitations.

II. AN EMPLOYER IS NOT LIABLE FOR PUNITIVE DAMAGES BASED ON ACTS OF AN EMPLOYEE ABSENT ADVANCE KNOWLEDGE OF THE EMPLOYEE'S UNFITNESS.

Civil Code §3294(b); College Hospital v Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal 4th 704 [34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898].

Even if Defendant _ _[name]_ _ acted with malice, it is conceded that Defendant _ _[name]_ _ neither had, nor could have had, any knowledge of _ _[name]_ _'s alleged unfitness to act as a physician and surgeon. (See defendant's declaration at p 3; plaintiff's deposition at p 7, lines 13-16).

III. PLAINTIFF WAS FULLY INFORMED ABOUT THE POTENTIAL CONSEQUENCES AND COMPLICATIONS THAT COULD RESULT FROM THE SURGICAL PROCEDURE.

Plaintiff read, dated, and executed a form titled "Consent to Surgery—Binding Waiver of Liability," which included the following language: "I have discussed with my doctor in considerable detail the nature, extent, and dangers of the surgery to be performed, as well as the possible consequences, complications, and side effects of that surgery, all of which I fully understand. I still want the surgery. I do NOT want a second opinion."

Plaintiff read, dated, and executed this form after having been fully informed of the consequences and complications that could result from the surgical procedures (defendant's declaration at p 5; Exhibit E of defendant's declaration).

IV. NO PHYSICIAN-PATIENT RELATIONSHIP EXISTED BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT _ _[NAME]_ _.

Felton v Schaeffer* (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 229, 235 [279 Cal. Rptr. 713].

Plaintiff was the patient of Dr. _ _ _ _ _ _. He had no relationship with Dr. _ _ _ _ _ _, who was merely an observer at the surgery. (Exhibit E of defendant's declaration.)

Defendant, _ _[name]_ _, in support of his motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of issues, submits that the following material facts are undisputed in this action:

ISSUE NO. 1—THE FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MEDICAL MALPRACTICE IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE §340.5, WHICH PROVIDES THAT MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTIONS MUST BE BROUGHT THREE YEARS AFTER DATE OF INJURY OR ONE YEAR AFTER PLAINTIFF DISCOVERS, OR THROUGH USE OF REASONABLE DILIGENCE SHOULD HAVE DISCOVERED, INJURY.

MOVING PARTY'S UNDISPUTED MATERIAL FACTS AND SUPPORTING EVIDENCE	OPPOSING PARTY'S RESPONSE AND SUPPORTING EVIDENCE
1. The alleged acts of medical malpractice on which plaintiff _ _[name]_ _'s first cause of action is based occurred on or before March 3, 2004. Plaintiff's second amended complaint, 3:15-23; plaintiff's answers to requests for admissions, answer no. 8, p 3 (copy attached as Exhibit E to defendant's declaration).
2. Plaintiff became aware of defendant's alleged medical malpractice, and of all injuries allegedly sustained as a result, on or before March 12, 2004. Plaintiff's answers to requests for admissions, answer no. 14, p 3 (copy attached as Exhibit E to defendant's declaration); plaintiff's deposition, 13:5-8.

3. This action was commenced on the filing of plaintiff's original complaint on April 1, 2007. Filing stamp on plaintiff's original complaint in this action, of which the Court is requested to take judicial notice.

ISSUE NO. 2 — THE FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MEDICAL MALPRACTICE IS BARRED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAS FULLY INFORMED OF THE CONSEQUENCES AND COMPLICATIONS THAT COULD RESULT FROM THE SURGICAL PROCEDURE.

4. Plaintiff verbally expressed his understanding of the consequences and complications that could result from the surgical procedure. Defendant's declaration, 3:13-16; plaintiff's deposition, 8:3-8.

5. Plaintiff read, dated, and executed a form titled "Consent to Surgery-Binding Waiver of Liability," which included the following language: "I have discussed with my doctor in considerable detail the nature, extent, and dangers of the surgery to be performed, as well as the possible consequences, complications, and side effects of that surgery, all of which I fully understand. I still want the surgery. I do NOT want a second opinion." Defendant's declaration, 3:14-18; copy of form, attached as Exhibit F to defendant's declaration; plaintiff's answers to requests for admission, answer no. 13, p 4 (copy attached as Exhibit E to defendant's declaration).

6. Plaintiff read, dated, and executed this form after having been fully informed regarding the consequences and complication that could result from the surgical procedure. Defendant's declaration, 3:1-3; plaintiff's answers to requests for admissions, answer no. 14, p 4 (copy attached as Exhibit E to defendant's declaration).

		Action filed: December 3, 2009
		Trial date: August 25, 2010

Defendant Smith submits the following statement of undisputed material facts with references to supporting evidence pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure §437c(b)(1). These facts establish that defendant Bruce Smith did not owe any duty to plaintiff Jones and that plaintiff's first cause of action against Smith for premises liability has no merit.

ISSUE NUMBER 1: BECAUSE DEFENDANT SMITH DID NOT OWN THE PREMISES UPON WHICH PLAINTIFF JONES WAS INJURED, DEFENDANT DID NOT OWE PLAINTIFF ANY DUTY TO MAINTAIN THE PREMISES, AND PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER AGAINST DEFENDANT SMITH ON HIS FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION FOR PREMISES LIABILITY.

MOVING PARTY'S UNDISPUTED MATERIAL FACTS AND SUPPORTING EVIDENCE:	OPPOSING PARTY'S RESPONSE AND SUPPORTING EVIDENCE:
1. Defendant Bruce Smith owned the house at 123 Tenth St., Anytown, California, from January 10, 1988, until March 13, 2009. Declaration of Smith, Exhibit 1 at 1:5-8. Certified copy of original deed attached to Smith declaration as Exhibit 1(a).
2. On March 13, 2009, defendant Bruce Smith sold his entire interest in the house at 123 Tenth St., Anytown, California, to Steve Smart. Declaration of Smith, Exhibit 1 at 1:12-16. Certified copy of grant deed attached to Smith declaration as Exhibit 1(b). Deposition of Steve Smart, Exhibit 2(a) at 3:5-10, attached to Peterson declaration, Exhibit 2.
3. Since March 13, 2009, defendant Bruce Smith has held no interest in the property, received no income from the property, and paid no taxes on the property. Declaration of Smith, Exhibit 1 at 2:11-18. Deposition of Steve Smart, Exhibit 2(a) at 4:2-20, attached to Peterson declaration, Exhibit 2. Tax records of Smart, exhibit 2(b), attached to Peterson declaration, Exhibit 2.
4. Plaintiff John Jones slipped and fell on the steps of the property at 123 Tenth St., Anytown, California, on August 31, 2009, more than 5 months after defendant Smith sold the property. Plaintiff Jones' complaint at paragraph 5. Deposition of Jones, Exhibit 2(c) at 4:8-15, attached to Peterson declaration, Exhibit 2.

The motion of defendant, _ _[name]_ _, for summary judgment or summary adjudication of issues was heard at the above date and time. Appearing as attorneys were: _ _[List names of attorneys and parties represented by each]_ _.

After considering the papers filed in support of and in opposition to the motion, the Court finds that defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law under Code of Civil Procedure §437c.

IT IS ORDERED that:

1. Motion for summary judgment be granted.

2. Judgment be entered in favor of defendant _ _[name]_ _ and against plaintiff _ _[name]_ _.

3. _ _[State any additional orders]_ _.

[It can be useful, in a proposed order, to formulate for the judge specifications of reasons, with references to supporting and opposing evidence, for determinations that there is no triable issue of material fact. See CCP §437c(g), discussed in §36.168. For example:]

There is no triable issue of material fact with respect to the following matters for the reasons indicated:

1. Defendant _ _[name]_ _ owed no duty to plaintiff _ _[name]_ _ with respect to obtaining the latter's informed consent to the surgery performed on March 12, 2004, because they had no contractual or physician-patient relationship as shown by _ _[name]_ _'s uncontradicted declaration.

2. Defendant _ _[name]_ _ cannot be liable to pay punitive damages to plaintiff _ _[name]_ _, because this defendant had no knowledge of any unfitness on the part of its employee, Dr. _ _[name]_ _, as is shown by the declaration of _ _[name]_ _. The declaration of _ _[name]_ _, stating that there was such knowledge, is insufficient to raise a triable issue of fact because it contains no factual statements showing that the declarant had personal knowledge of what this defendant knew or could have known.

After considering the papers filed in support of and in opposition to the motion, the Court finds that the following causes of action and claims have no merit and are eliminated from this action:

1. Plaintiff _ _[name]_ _'s first cause of action for alleged medical malpractice, which is barred by the statute of limitations as set forth under Code of Civil Procedure §340.5 (see separate statement of undisputed facts, fact nos. 1-3).

2. Plaintiff _ _[name]_ _'s claims for punitive damages asserted in the fourth count of the second cause of action and in the fifth cause of action.

The Court also finds that defendant _ _[name]_ _ owed no duty to plaintiff _ _[name]_ _ with respect to plaintiff's second and fourth causes of action.

Plaintiff, _ _[name]_ _, submits this separate statement of disputed and undisputed facts in opposition to the motion of defendant, _ _[name]_ _, for summary judgment or summary adjudication and in response to defendant's separate statement of undisputed material facts:

ISSUE NO. 1—THE FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MEDICAL MALPRACTICE IS NOT BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE §340.5 BECAUSE PLAINTIFF DID NOT DISCOVER THE INJURY UNTIL APRIL 3, 2006, LESS THAN ONE YEAR PRIOR TO FILING THE ACTION.

Opposing statement:

1. The alleged acts of "medical malpractice" on which plaintiff _ _[name]_ _'s first cause of action is based occurred on or before March 3, 2004.	Undisputed
Plaintiff's second amended complaint, 3:15-23; plaintiff's answers to requests for admissions, answer no. 8, p 3 (copy attached as Exhibit E to defendant's declaration).

2. Plaintiff became aware of defendant's alleged medical malpractice, and of all injuries allegedly sustained as a result, on or before March 12, 2004.	Disputed. The date on which plaintiff became aware of defendant's medical malpractice was April 3, 2006. Plaintiff's declaration, 3:12-14.
3. This action was commenced on the filing of plaintiff's original complaint on April 1, 2007. Filing stamp on plaintiff's original complaint in this action, of which the Court is requested to take judicial notice.	Undisputed
4. Plaintiff was fully informed of the consequences and complications that could result from the surgical procedure. Defendant's declaration, 3:20; plaintiff's deposition, 13:5-8.	Undisputed
5. Plaintiff verbally expressed his understanding of the consequences and complications that could result from the surgical procedure. Defendant's declaration, 3:13-16; plaintiff's deposition, 8:3-8.	Undisputed
6. Plaintiff read, dated, and executed a form titled "Consent to Surgery—Binding Waiver of Liability," which included the following language: "I have discussed with my doctor in considerable detail the nature, extent, and dangers of the surgery to be performed, as well as the possible consequences, complications, and side effects of that surgery, all of which I fully understand. I still want the surgery. I do NOT want a second opinion." Defendant's declaration, 3:14-18; copy of form, attached as Exhibit F to defendant's declaration; plaintiff's answers to requests for admission, answer no. 13, p 4 (copy attached as Exhibit E to defendant's declaration).	Undisputed
7. Plaintiff read, dated, and executed a form titled "Consent to Surgery—Binding Waiver of	Undisputed Liability" after having been fully informed regarding the consequences and complications that could result from the surgical procedure.

Defendant's declaration, 3:1-3; plaintiff's answers to requests for admissions, answer no. 14, p 4 (copy attached as Exhibit E to defendant's declaration).

PLAINTIFF SUBMITS THAT THE FOLLOWING ADDITIONAL FACTS ARE BOTH MATERIAL AND DISPUTED IN THIS CASE:

Disputed Facts	Supporting Evidence
1. Plaintiff was not informed of the possible consequences and complications of the surgery until March 15, 2004, after it had been completed.	Plaintiff's declaration, 2:23.
2. Plaintiff signed the form titled "Consent to Surgery—Binding Waiver of Liability" on March 15, 2004, after the surgery had been completed.	Plaintiff's declaration, 2:25. Copy of form, attached as Exhibit B to defendant's declaration supporting this motion.

The motion of defendant, _ _[name]_ _, for summary judgment or summary adjudication was heard at the above date and time. Appearing as attorneys were: _ _[List names of attorneys and parties represented by each]_ _.

After considering the papers filed in support of and in opposition to the motion, the Court finds that defendant is not entitled to either summary judgment or summary adjudication.

The Court finds that there is a triable issue as to each of the following material facts:

1. Whether the date plaintiff became aware of defendant's alleged medical malpractice was March 12, 2004.

CONFLICTING EVIDENCE: Plaintiff's answers to requests for admissions, answer no. 4 at p 3; transcript of defendant's deposition at p 27, lines 3-5.

2. Whether plaintiff was not informed of the possible consequences and complications of surgery until March 15, 2004, after the surgery had been completed.

3. Whether plaintiff did not sign the form titled "Consent to Surgery—Binding Waiver of Liability" until March 15, 2004, after the surgery had been completed.

4. Whether plaintiff sustained loss of wages as a result of defendant's acts.

CONFLICTING EVIDENCE: Plaintiff's answers to requests for admissions, answer no. 3; plaintiff's declaration at p 1, lines 12-14.

IT IS ORDERED that defendant's motion for summary judgment or for summary adjudication be denied.

I. INTRODUCTION

§37.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter covers "judicial arbitration," a procedure by which certain civil actions are heard and decided by a court-appointed arbitrator before they become eligible to proceed to a court or jury trial. It discusses placing the action on the arbitration hearing list (see §§37.6-37.14), the arbitrator (see §§37.15-37.23), prehearing preparation (see §§37.24-37.33), the hearing (see §§37.34-37.42), the award (§§37.43-37.45), trial after arbitration (see §§37.46-37.49), and vacation of the judgment (see §37.50).

It also contains a checklist (see §37.51) and forms (see §§37.52-37.58).

§37.2 B. Governing Law

Judicial arbitration is governed by the following statutes and rules:

- Code of Civil Procedure §§1141.10-1141.31;
- California Rules of Court 3.810-3.830 (which prevail over other provisions of law except CCP §§1141.10-1141.31); and
- Local court rules and policy manuals that are consistent with the above code sections or statewide court rules (see, e.g., Los Angeles Ct Arbitrator's Handbook).

WARNING: Despite efforts by the Judicial Council and the California Supreme Court to provide statewide uniform court rules that preempt local rules (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.20, 2.100(a)), local rules, procedures, and practices remain a trap for the unwary. Counsel should investigate the local procedures and practices, and follow all local rules, for judicial arbitration.

Arbitrators in the judicial arbitration program are subject to the ethics standards set out in CCP §1141.18(d), Cal Rules of Ct 3.816, and the California Code of Judicial Ethics (see Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 6(D)). On judicial arbitrators' ethics rules, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§11.55-11.58 (Cal CEB 2005).

NOTE: Although the contractual arbitration statutes (CCP §§1282-1294.2) are exclusive and independent of the judicial arbitration statutes (CCP §§1141.1-1141.31), the ethics standards for contractual arbitrators must be consistent with the ethics standards for arbitrators in the judicial arbitration program. CCP §1281.85(a). Thus, statutory and case developments in disclosure requirements and the grounds for disqualification of contractual arbitrators may sound a cautionary note for arbitrators and parties participating in judicial arbitration. On ethics standards for contractual arbitrators, see Effective Use of ADR, chap 10.

§37.3 C. Judicial Arbitration Defined

Statutory arbitration under CCP §§1141.10-1141.31 is generally referred to as "judicial arbitration." This phrase is somewhat of a misnomer, however, because neither is the arbitration judicially conducted nor is the arbitration award immediately irrevocably binding. Rather, a judicial arbitration hearing is conducted by a neutral appointed by the court or selected by the parties (usually an attorney or a retired judge or commissioner). The arbitration hearing occurs before any trial, and is conducted under specific procedures and rules found in Cal Rules of Ct 3.823 for the introduction of documentary evidence. See §§37.37-37.42. Within a limited time after the arbitration hearing, any party may elect not to accept the arbitrator's decision and elect a trial de novo under CCP §1141.20. See §37.46. If that party does not obtain a judgment more favorable than the arbitration award, however, the party may be assessed certain costs and prevented from recovering his or her own costs. See §37.49.

Mandatory judicial arbitration will be ordered "if the amount in controversy in the opinion of the court will not exceed fifty thousand dollars ($50,000) for each plaintiff." CCP §1141.11(a). If the parties stipulate in writing that the amount exceeds $50,000, the court will not make a determination of the amount in controversy. CCP §1141.16(a). See §§37.11-37.13.

On history and purpose of judicial arbitration, and how judicial arbitration differs from arbitration by contractual agreement, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§11.3, 11.5 (Cal CEB 2005).

§37.4 D. Actions Subject to Judicial Arbitration

In a superior court with 18 or more judges, all nonexempt unlimited civil cases (see CCP §88) must be submitted to arbitration if, in the court's opinion, the amount in controversy is $50,000 or less for each plaintiff. CCP §1141.11(a). In a superior court of fewer than 18 judges, the court may provide by local rule that all nonexempt unlimited civil cases be submitted to arbitration if the amount in controversy will not exceed $50,000 for each plaintiff. CCP §1141.11(b). Each superior court may provide by local rule that all nonexempt limited civil cases be submitted to arbitration. CCP §1141.11(c) (excluding small claims and unlawful detainer actions).

Judicial arbitration is mandated in the following cases under California Rules of Court 3.811(a), unless otherwise exempted (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.811(b)):

- Any action in any court regardless of the amount in controversy if the parties stipulate to arbitration (see §37.7; see also CCP §1141.12);
- Any action in any court if the plaintiff files an election for arbitration and agrees that the award will not exceed $50,000 (see §§37.8-37.9); and
- All civil actions in a superior court with 18 or more judges if the amount in controversy does not exceed $50,000 for any plaintiff.

California Rules of Court 3.811(a)(2)-(3) permits the courts to make arbitration mandatory by local rule in the following actions:

- All unlimited civil cases in a superior court with fewer than 18 judges if the amount in controversy does not exceed $50,000 for any plaintiff; and
- Any limited civil case.

WARNING: As noted in §37.2, it is extremely important to consult local rules regarding which actions are subject to judicial arbitration.

§37.5 E. Actions Not Subject to Judicial Arbitration

Certain actions are exempt from judicial arbitration under Cal Rules of Ct 3.811(b), including class actions, unlawful detainer proceedings, and small claims cases. See §37.13. The judicial arbitration statute expressly excludes actions for equitable relief unless the prayer for equitable relief is "frivolous or insubstantial." CCP §1141.13. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.811(b).

§37.6 II. PLACING ACTION ON ARBITRATION HEARING LIST

There are three ways that a case may proceed to judicial arbitration:

- The parties' voluntary stipulation, regardless of the amount in controversy (see §37.7);
- The plaintiff's election, if the plaintiff also voluntarily agrees that the amount in controversy does not exceed $50,000 (see §§37.8-37.9); and
- By court order, after the court makes a determination that the amount in controversy does not exceed $50,000 and the case is nonexempt (see §§37.10-37.14).

NOTE: Submission of a case to arbitration—whether by court order or plaintiff's election—does not suspend the time periods specified in CCP §§583.110-583.430 governing dismissal for failure to prosecute (CCP §1141.17(a)), except that the 5-year period specified in CCP §583.310 does not include any time that the action is under submission to arbitration in the period that begins 4 years and 6 months after the date the plaintiff filed the action and ends on the date on which a request for a de novo trial is filed under CCP §1141.20. CCP §1141.17(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.7 A. Arbitration by Stipulation

Parties may stipulate to judicial arbitration in any case, regardless of the amount in controversy. CCP §1141.12(a). When the parties stipulate to arbitration, the case must be set for arbitration forthwith. The stipulation must be filed no later than the time the initial case management statement is filed, unless the court orders otherwise. Cal Rules of Ct 3.812(a).

NOTE: A stipulation to arbitrate may affect a party's ability to engage in discovery after a date 15 days before the hearing. See §37.24. It will also affect the running of the 5-year period under CCP §§583.310-583.360. See §37.6.

In addition to stipulating to arbitration, the parties may stipulate to, e.g., who will act as arbitrator, the maximum amount of any award, and whether the arbitration will be binding. On these and other areas for possible stipulation, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §11.9 (Cal CEB 2005).

For form Stipulation to Submit to Judicial Arbitration, see §37.52.

B. Plaintiff's Election to Arbitrate

§37.8 1. Use of Election

A plaintiff may file a written election to arbitrate if the plaintiff agrees that the arbitration award will not exceed $50,000. CCP §§1141.11, 1141.12(b). See form in §37.53. On written election of all plaintiffs to submit a case to arbitration, the case must be set for arbitration immediately, subject to a motion by the defendant for good cause to delay the arbitration hearing. The election must be filed at the time the initial case management statement is filed, unless the court orders otherwise. Cal Rules of Ct 3.812(b).

PRACTICE TIP: Although neither the California Rules of Court nor the Code of Civil Procedure expressly requires that the plaintiff's election be served on other parties to the action, it is advisable to do so because certain other matters are keyed to the date of a notice of election, e.g., defendant's motion in opposition to plaintiff's election (see §37.9) and the parties' ability to engage in discovery after an arbitration award. See §37.47.

The court may, on motion, remove a case from judicial arbitration when the amount in controversy changes to exceed the amount specified in CCP §1141.11. Invicta Plastics, Ltd. v Superior Court (1981) 120 CA3d 190, 174 CR 476 (plaintiff initially filed election to submit cause to judicial arbitration, agreeing that arbitration award should not exceed arbitration limit, but thereafter plaintiff filed amended complaint seeking award in excess of limit).

PRACTICE TIP: Plaintiff's counsel should evaluate the case fully before deciding to limit the plaintiff's claim to the arbitration amount. For an example of the possible ramifications of not doing so, see Robinson v Superior Court (1984) 158 CA3d 98, 204 CR 366 (court held that plaintiff, who made CCP §1141.12(b) election for judicial arbitration and who received arbitration award for full amount requested, could not obtain trial de novo even though plaintiff later concluded that case was worth more than award).

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.9 2. Motions Opposing Plaintiff's Election to Arbitrate

When the plaintiff elects to arbitrate, the defendant may move to delay the arbitration hearing for good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 3.812(b).

PRACTICE TIP: The time between the plaintiff's election and the hearing will vary greatly depending on the county and the local calendar, but in making a motion to delay a hearing, the defendant should act promptly to avoid prejudicing the plaintiff.

In cases involving a cross-complaint in which all plaintiffs have elected to arbitrate, a cross-complainant may move to remove the matter from the arbitration hearing list within 15 days after receiving notice of the plaintiff's election on the ground that the amount in controversy relating to the cross-complaint exceeds $50,000. Cal Rules of Ct 3.812(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Arbitration by Court Order

§37.10 1. Requirements

A court will order judicial arbitration if it finds that the case is not exempt from arbitration (see §37.5), that any prayer for equitable relief is merely frivolous or insubstantial (see §37.13), and that the amount in controversy does not exceed $50,000 for any plaintiff (see §37.11). The determination of the amount in controversy and whether a prayer for equitable relief is frivolous or insubstantial is not appealable. CCP §1141.16(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.11 a. Amount-in-Controversy Determination

The court must make its determination of the amount in controversy after all named parties have appeared or defaulted. CCP §1141.11(a).

The amount in controversy is based on each party's claim; amounts are not aggregated. If the action has more than one plaintiff, each claim that is less than $50,000 may be ordered to arbitration.

In determining the amount in controversy, the court does not consider questions of liability, defenses, and comparative negligence. CCP §1141.16(a). Any determination and stipulation to the amount in controversy will be without prejudice to any finding by an arbitrator or in a subsequent trial de novo. CCP §1141.16(b).

WARNING: See Robinson v Superior Court (1984) 158 CA3d 98, 204 CR 366, in which the court held that the plaintiff, who made a CCP §1141.12(b) election for judicial arbitration and who received an arbitration award for the full amount requested, could not obtain a trial de novo even though plaintiff later concluded that the case was worth more than the award.

If all parties stipulate in writing that the amount in controversy exceeds the amounts specified in CCP §1141.11, the court will not make a determination under CCP §1141.16. CCP §1141.16(a).

NOTE: The court, on its own motion, can remove a case from judicial arbitration when the amount in controversy has changed to exceed the amount specified in CCP §1141.11. See Invicta Plastics, Ltd. v Superior Court (1981) 120 CA3d 190, 174 CR 476. See also §37.8.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/37 Judicial Arbitration/§37.12 b. When Determination Is Made

§37.12 b. When Determination Is Made

The amount in controversy must be determined at the first case management conference or review under Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.730 that takes place after all named parties have appeared or defaulted. Cal Rules of Ct 3.812(d); CCP §1141.16(a).

WARNING: Counsel attending the case management conference must have sufficient knowledge of the case to inform the court about the suitability of arbitration. Cal Rules of Ct 3.722(a), 3.727(6), 3.728(2). The case management conference may be used for setting trial or trial-setting dates for cases not ordered to arbitration. Cal Rules of Ct 3.727(14), 3.729. The court may also conduct settlement discussions if appropriate. Cal Rules of Ct 3.727(7).

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.13 c. "Frivolous or Insubstantial" Equitable Relief

When the court makes its amount-in-controversy determination, it must also determine whether any prayer for equitable relief is "frivolous or insubstantial," i.e., whether the case is nonexempt and subject to arbitration. CCP §1141.16. If the case meets both the amount-in-controversy and equitable relief requirements, and the case is not otherwise exempt from judicial arbitration (see §37.5), the court must order the case to be arbitrated. See CCP §§1141.11, 1141.13, 1141.16; Cal Rules of Ct 3.811(a)-(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.14 2. Scheduling of Arbitration Hearing

Except as provided in CCP §1141.16, the arbitration hearing may not be held until 210 days after filing of the complaint, or 240 days after the filing of a complaint if the parties have stipulated to a continuance under Govt C §68616(d). CCP §1141.16(c). A case must be submitted to arbitration at an earlier time in any of the following events (CCP §1141.16(c)):

- The stipulation of the parties to an earlier arbitration hearing;
- The written request of all plaintiffs, subject to a motion by a defendant for good cause shown to delay the arbitration hearing; or
- An order of the court if the parties have stipulated, or the court has ordered under CCP §1141.24, that discovery other than that permitted under CCP §§2034.210-2034.730 will be permitted after the arbitration award is rendered.

III. THE ARBITRATOR

A. Selection of Arbitrator

§37.15 1. By Stipulation

Parties may stipulate to any arbitrator, including a nonattorney. CCP §1141.18(a); see Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(a). For tips on selecting an arbitrator, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §11.18 (Cal CEB 2005).

WARNING: Local rules may encourage parties to stipulate to an arbitrator who is a member of the court panel (see §37.16). See e.g., Alameda Ct R 3.720.

If the parties select a person who is not on the court's arbitration panel to serve as the arbitrator, the stipulation will be effective only if:

- The selected person completes a written consent to serve and the oath required of panel arbitrators under Cal Rules of Ct 3.810-3.830; and
- Both the consent and the oath are attached to the stipulation.

The oath of office may be obtained from the arbitration administrator.

A stipulation may specify the maximum amount of the arbitrator's award. The stipulation must be filed no later than 10 days after the case has been set for arbitration under Cal Rules of Ct 3.812. Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(a). See form in §37.52.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. By Appointment From Arbitration Panel

§37.16 a. Panels of Arbitrators

Every court is required to have a panel of arbitrators for personal injury cases, as well as additional panels as the presiding judge deems necessary. Cal Rules of Ct 3.814(a). Lists showing the names of panel arbitrators available to hear cases must be accessible to public inspection in the ADR program administrator's office. Cal Rules of Ct 3.814(e); see e.g., San Francisco Ct R 4.1(F). On composition of arbitrator panels and appointment of arbitrators to a panel, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §11.19 (Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.17 b. Local Selection Procedures

A court that has an arbitration program may, by local rule or by procedures adopted by its ADR committee, establish any fair method of selecting an arbitrator that (1) gives each side an opportunity to challenge at least one list arbitrator peremptorily and (2) ensures that an arbitrator is appointed within 30 days from the submission of a case to arbitration. The local rule or procedure may require that all steps leading to the arbitrator's selection occur during or immediately following the case management conference or review under Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.730, at which the court determines the amount in controversy and the suitability of the case for arbitration. Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.18 c. Selection Absent Stipulation or Local Procedures

If the arbitrator is not selected by stipulation (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(a)) and the court has not adopted local rules or procedures for the selection of the arbitrator as permitted under Cal Rules of Ct 3.814(c), the arbitrator will be selected under the procedures set out in Cal Rules of Ct 3.815.

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.19 d. Procedure if Arbitrator Declines to Serve

If the first arbitrator selected declines to serve, the administrator must vacate the arbitrator's appointment and may do either of the following (Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(d)):

- Return the case to the top of the arbitration hearing list, restore the arbitrator's name to the list of those available for selection to hear cases, and appoint a new arbitrator; or
- Certify the case to the court.

If the second arbitrator selected declines to serve, or if the arbitrator does not complete the hearing within 90 days after the date of his or her assignment to the case, including any time due to continuances granted under Cal Rules of Ct 3.818, the administrator must certify the case to the court. Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(e).

When a case is certified to the court under either Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(d) or (e), the court must summon the parties or their counsel. If the inability to hold a hearing is due to the neglect or lack of cooperation of a party who elected or stipulated for arbitration, the cause must be removed from the arbitration hearing list and restored to the civil active lists. In all other circumstances, cases may be ordered reassigned for arbitration, or the court may make any other appropriate order to expedite disposition of the case. Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(f); but see Los Angeles Ct R 12.2 (if ADR hearing has been scheduled, action cannot be ordered or referred to ADR again).

NOTE: In Cabrera v Plager (1987) 195 CA3d 606, 612, 241 CR 731, the court held that the remedy for violation of former Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(b) (which provided that if arbitrator failed to hold hearing within 60 days of assignment, administrator must vacate arbitrator's appointment) was to return the case to the top of the hearing list and appoint a new arbitrator. The court further held that the party's objection to the arbitrator, which was based on the delay, was waived by the party's appearance and participation at the arbitration without raising the objection. 195 CA3d at 613 n8.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Rejection or Disqualification of Arbitrator

§37.20 1. Rejection

When presented with a list of arbitrator names under Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(b), each side has 10 days from the date of mailing of the list of arbitrators to file a written rejection of one arbitrator from the list; if there are multiple parties on one side, they must agree on the rejection. Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(b)(3). See §37.55 for a rejection form.

If each side rejects the maximum number of arbitrators, one name will remain, and that person is automatically the arbitrator unless otherwise disqualified. If more than one name remains on the list, the arbitration administrator must randomly select the arbitrator from the remaining names. The administrator then assigns the case to the arbitrator selected and notifies all parties. Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(b)(4)-(5).

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Disqualification

§37.21 a. Disqualification by Arbitrator

A proposed arbitrator must determine whether any cause exists for his or her disqualification on the grounds set out in CCP §170.1 (which governs disqualification of judges). If any member of the proposed arbitrator's law firm would be disqualified under the provisions of CCP §170.1(a)(2), the proposed arbitrator is disqualified. Cal Rules of Ct 3.816(a).

Unless the grounds for disqualification are disclosed to the parties in writing and expressly waived by all parties in writing, the proposed arbitrator must notify the court's ADR program administrator of his or her inability to serve, and another arbitrator must be selected as provided in Cal Rules of Ct 3.815. Cal Rules of Ct 3.816(a).

NOTE: Certain grounds for disqualification cannot be waived, e.g., personal bias or prejudice about a party, and service as an attorney or material witness in the matter. CCP §170.3(b)(1)-(2).

On grounds for disqualification and process by which an arbitrator is disqualified, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§11.24-11.25 (Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.22 b. Disqualification by Party

Any party may seek to disqualify a proposed arbitrator on the grounds and under the procedures in CCP §170.1 or §170.6. CCP §1141.18.

If the arbitrator should disqualify himself or herself under CCP §§170.1-170.5 and refuses or fails to do so, any party may file with the court clerk a verified written statement of objection, including facts constituting grounds for disqualifying the arbitrator. CCP §170.3(c)(1). This statement must be presented "at the earliest practicable opportunity after discovery of the facts constituting the ground for disqualification." CCP §170.3(c)(1); see also CCP §170.4(c)(1). Under CCP §170.6, an affidavit of prejudice is filed or an oral motion is made under oath (the oral procedure is frequently used in court but rarely used in arbitration); a request for disqualification under §170.6 must be made within 5 days after the arbitrator is named. CCP §1141.18(d).

PRACTICE TIP: It is not clear if filing the arbitrator disqualification request with only the arbitration administrator fulfills the "file with the clerk" procedural requirements of a CCP §170.1 or §170.6 disqualification under CCP §1141.18(d). In any event, any arbitrator disqualification request under CCP §§170.1-170.5 should also be served on all parties and the proposed arbitrator. CCP §170.3(c). Although not required, an affidavit under CCP §170.6 should be served on all parties as a professional courtesy. For a disqualification form, see California Civil Litigation Forms Manual §43.14 (Cal CEB 1980). Local rules should also be consulted for procedures and forms. For examples of local rules regarding disqualification, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §11.25 (Cal CEB 2005).

On motion of any party, made as promptly as possible under CCP §§170.1 and 1141.18(d) before the arbitration proceedings are concluded, the court must vacate the arbitrator's appointment to the case if the court finds the following (Cal Rules of Ct 3.816(d)):

- The party has demanded that the arbitrator disqualify himself or herself;
- The arbitrator has not done so; and
- Any of the grounds for disqualification specified in CCP §170.1 exist.

If the arbitrator's appointment has been vacated, the ADR administrator must return the case to the top of the arbitration hearing list and appoint a new arbitrator. The disqualified arbitrator's name must be returned to the list of those available for selection to hear cases unless the court orders that the circumstances of the disqualification be reviewed by the ADR administrator, the ADR committee, the presiding judge, or a judge designated by the presiding judge for appropriate action. Cal Rules of Ct 3.816(d).

NOTE: Failure to complete a hearing within the 90-day period required by Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(e) is not grounds for disqualification of the arbitrator under Cal Rules of Ct 3.816 and 3.828(d) and is not a basis on which the judgment can be set aside. See Cabrera v Plager (1987) 195 CA3d 606, 241 CR 731 (decided under former Cal Rules of Ct 1605(b), see now Rule 3.815(b), and holding that arbitrator's failure to hold timely hearing is not ground for disqualification).

No disclosure of any settlement offers may be made to the arbitrator before the award is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.820(a). An arbitrator must not initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications or consider other communications made to the arbitrator outside the presence of all the parties regarding a pending or impending arbitration, except as follows (Cal Rules of Ct 3.820(b)):

- An arbitrator may communicate with a party without the other parties regarding administrative matters, such as setting the time and place of hearings or making arrangements for the conduct of the proceedings, only if the arbitrator reasonably believes that such communication will not result in a procedural or tactical advantage for any party. When such a communication occurs, the arbitrator must promptly inform the other parties and must give them an opportunity to respond before making any final determination concerning the matter discussed.
- An arbitrator may initiate or consider any ex parte communication when expressly authorized to do so by law.

PRACTICE TIP: Problems can arise when the arbitrator or local procedures require that documents be filed with the arbitrator before the hearing. If such prehearing filing is required, counsel can avoid the prohibition on ex parte communication by serving copies of documents on the other side or by obtaining an agreement from the other party waiving the prohibition solely for specific and limited activities.

IV. PREHEARING PREPARATION

§37.24 A. Discovery

In judicial arbitration, the parties may use all conventional discovery rights, remedies, and procedures in preparing for the arbitration hearing; however, they must complete discovery no later than 15 days before the arbitration hearing, unless the court grants a time extension based on good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 3.822(a)-(b).

WARNING: Under CCP §1141.24, in cases ordered to arbitration (as opposed to those proceeding by stipulation or plaintiff's election), no discovery is permitted after an arbitration award other than discovery permitted by CCP §§2034.010-2034.730 (e.g., the exchange of expert witness lists) except by the parties' stipulation or leave of the court. In light of Cal Rules of Ct 3.822, which requires that discovery be completed before the arbitration hearing, counsel seeking the court's permission to engage in discovery after an arbitration award should be prepared to explain to the court why discovery was not completed before arbitration.

B. Using Documentary Evidence

§37.25 1. Admissibility

The court rules governing judicial arbitration facilitate the admission in a judicial arbitration hearing of a wide variety of documentary material that would face hearsay and foundational objections at trial. Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b). All evidence must be admitted in the presence of all parties and the arbitrator, unless a party has waived the right to be present or is absent after due notice of the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(a).

The arbitration hearing is governed by the same rules of evidence that govern civil cases; however, there are certain rules on admissibility that apply specifically in the judicial arbitration context, including rules regarding written reports and other documentary evidence (Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(1); see §37.27), written witness statements (Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(2); see §37.29), and depositions (Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(3); see §37.31).

PRACTICE TIP: Given the expedited rules for admitting evidence at a judicial arbitration hearing, it is vital that all parties make prehearing preparation a priority. Counsel should identify the evidentiary items that might be subject to objection and prepare arguments regarding admissibility. It may also be advisable, and the arbitrator may require, that counsel meet and confer to narrow the issues and to reach stipulations regarding what documents and exhibits they intend to use at the hearing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.26 2. Requirement of Delivery Before Hearing

To avail oneself of the expedited procedures for admitting documentary evidence under the judicial arbitration Rules of Court and as an exception to the California Rules of Evidence, a party must deliver copies of certain types of documentary evidence to all opposing parties at least 20 days before the hearing, and a party who intends to offer a deposition into evidence must deliver notice of this intent to all opposing parties at least 20 days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(1)(A), (3)(A). See form of notice in §37.56.

A party may deliver the document and notice either manually or by mail (see CCP §1013). If service is by mail, the times prescribed in Cal Rules of Ct 3.823 for delivery of documents, notices, and demands are increased by 5 days. Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(d).

An opposing party who does not wish to have the material offered into evidence must take appropriate action before the hearing. See §§37.28, 37.30, 37.32.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Reports, Records, and Bills

§37.27 a. Admission Into Evidence

Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(1), if the party has complied with the required prehearing delivery (see §37.26), the arbitrator must receive into evidence any of the following items:

- Written reports of any expert witness;
- Medical records and bills, including physiotherapy, nursing, and prescription bills;
- Documentary evidence of income loss;
- Property damage repair bills or estimates (for additional admission requirements, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(1)(C));
- Police reports of an accident that gave rise to a case (but see Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(1)(D) (arbitrator may not consider any opinion about ultimate fault expressed in police report)); and
- Other bills, invoices, purchase orders, checks, written contracts, and similar documents prepared and maintained in the ordinary course of business.

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.28 b. Opponent's Procedures

Any other party may subpoena the author or custodian of documents admitted under Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(1)(A) and examine him or her at the hearing as if it were cross-examination. Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(1)(B). See §37.36 on subpoenas.

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Written Statements of Witnesses

§37.29 a. Admission Into Evidence

Any other witness's written statement (not otherwise qualified as a report, record, or bill under Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(1)) may be offered and must be admitted into evidence if (Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(2)):

- They are made by affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury;
- Copies have been delivered to all opposing parties at least 20 days before the hearing (see §37.26); and
- No opposing party has delivered a written demand that the witness be produced in person to testify at the hearing. See §37.30.

The arbitrator must disregard any portion of a statement received under this rule that would be inadmissible if the witness were to testify in person; however, the inclusion of inadmissible matter does not render the entire statement inadmissible. Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(2)(C).

See §37.56 for form of notice. The statements may include opinions that the witness would be qualified to express if testifying in person.

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.30 b. Opponent's Procedures

The opponent can preclude admission of a written statement by delivering to the proponent, at least 10 days before the hearing, a written demand that the witness be produced in person to testify. Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(2). See §37.57 for a form of demand to produce a witness. This demand does not operate as a subpoena requiring the attendance of the statement's author; it operates only to prevent the written statement's admission into evidence under Rule 3.823(b). If the opponent wants to assure attendance and testimony of the author, a subpoena is necessary. See §37.36 on subpoenas.

© The Regents of the University of California

5. Depositions

§37.31 a. Admission Into Evidence

The deposition of any witness may be offered by any party and must be received in evidence, subject to objections available under CCP §2025.410, notwithstanding that the deponent is not "unavailable as a witness" within the meaning of Evid C §240 and no exceptional circumstances exist, if (Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(3)):

- The deposition was taken in the manner provided for by law or by stipulation of the parties and within the time provided for in these rules; and
- At least 20 days before the hearing, the deposition's proponent delivered to all opposing parties notice of intention to offer the deposition in evidence (see §37.26).

See §§37.25-37.30 for a discussion of requirements for admission of documentary evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.32 b. Opponent's Procedures

An opposing party may subpoena the deponent as a witness. If the witness is subpoenaed, the arbitrator may either refuse to admit the deposition or admit it and allow the deponent to be further cross-examined by the party who subpoenaed the witness. Notwithstanding this rule, a deposition that would be admissible at a trial under CCP §2025.620 is admissible at an arbitration hearing even if the deponent is subpoenaed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(3)(B). See §37.36 on subpoenas.

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.33 C. Settlement

When a case settles, each plaintiff or other party seeking affirmative relief must notify the arbitrator and the court as required in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1385 (duty to notify court and others of settlement). Cal Rules of Ct 3.829.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. THE HEARING

§37.34 A. Setting the Hearing

The arbitrator, within 15 days after appointment, must set the date, time, and place of the arbitration hearing and provide written notice of date, time, and location to each party and the administrator. Cal Rules of Ct 3.817(a). Unless all parties and the arbitrator agree otherwise, the arbitration date must not be set at either of the following times (Cal Rules of Ct 3.817(b)):

- Earlier than 30 days after the date the arbitrator sends the notice of the hearing under Cal Rules of Ct 3.817(a); or
- On Saturdays, Sundays, or legal holidays.

The hearings must be scheduled so that they will be completed no more than 90 days from the arbitrator's assignment to the case, including time due to continuances granted under Cal Rules of Ct 3.818. Cal Rules of Ct 3.817(c).

WARNING: Counsel should check local rules; courts may differ on scheduling.

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.35 B. Continuances

The parties may stipulate to a continuance with the arbitrator's consent, which must be given if it appears that good cause exists. Notice of the continuance must be sent to the arbitration administrator. Cal Rules of Ct 3.818(a).

If the arbitrator does not consent to the continuance, the court may grant a party's motion for continuance based on good cause. A party who successfully moves for continuance must notify the arbitrator, who will reschedule the hearing and notify all parties. Cal Rules of Ct 3.818(b).

NOTE: The arbitration hearing cannot be continued more than 90 days after the case's assignment to the arbitrator, including any time due to continuances granted under this rule, except by court order on the motion of a party. Cal Rules of Ct 3.818(c). If the arbitration is not held within the 90-day period, including any time due to continuances granted under Cal Rules of Ct 3.818, the administrator must certify the case to the court. Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(e). On cases certified to the court, see §37.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.36 C. Subpoenas

Subpoenas may be used to compel the attendance of witnesses. The party requesting the subpoena must modify its form to show that the appearance is before an arbitrator, and give the time and place set for the arbitration hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(c)(1).

PRACTICE TIP: You may use the Civil Subpoena for Personal Appearance at Trial or Hearing (Judicial Council Form 982(a)(15)), with the modifications discussed above, to request the subpoena for the judicial arbitration hearing.

At the arbitrator's discretion, the hearing may be adjourned or continued because of the nonappearance of a properly subpoenaed witness. Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(c)(2). Further, a properly subpoenaed witness's nonappearance or refusal to be sworn or to answer may be the basis for proceedings before the superior court to compel compliance with the subpoena on penalty of contempt under CCP §1991. Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(c)(3).

On when to use the subpoena process, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §11.39 (Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Conduct of Hearing

§37.37 1. Civil Trial Concept

The hearing normally progresses like a civil trial without a jury. The arbitrator has powers similar to those of a judge, although the arbitrator's powers are limited to those listed in Cal Rules of Ct 3.824(a). See §37.38 on arbitrator powers. The arbitrator sets the tone of the hearing, which is often less formal than a court trial. For example, an arbitrator may be more inclined to permit leading questions or to take witnesses out of a particular order than would a judge.

PRACTICE TIP: If the parties are to submit briefs after the close of evidence, counsel for the parties should ensure that the arbitration hearing is "concluded" only after they complete such briefing. A short stipulation and order, which provides for a briefing schedule and a "submission to the arbitrator for award" date, can be handwritten before leaving the arbitration hearing room and signed by the parties or their attorneys and by the arbitrator. Be sure to pick a submission date that enables the arbitrator to review the evidence, formulate a reasoned award, and file it within the time period required of the arbitrator. The arbitrator will appreciate your consideration of his or her time constraints.

On suggested topics to include during closing argument at the hearing, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §11.40 (Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.38 2. Arbitrator Powers

The arbitrator's powers, including the power to permit testimony and evidence to be offered and deciding the law and facts of the case, are listed in Cal Rules of Ct 3.824(a). Orders outside the scope of the arbitrator's specified powers, e.g., contempt, are reserved for the court.

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.39 3. Evidence

The rules of evidence governing civil cases apply to the conduct of arbitration hearings, with some exceptions. Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b). See §37.25. The arbitrator rules on the admissibility and relevancy of the evidence offered and decides what evidence will be received.

PRACTICE TIP: If possible, stipulate with opposing counsel before the hearing regarding evidence that will be admitted. If you cannot reach agreement and expect an objection, be prepared to provide the arbitrator with a short brief outlining the legal arguments. Additionally, if the arbitrator rules against admission of your evidence on the basis of your failure to comply with the judicial arbitration court rules, do not overlook the possibility that your evidence still may be admissible under a standard exception in the California Rules of Evidence. Renew your request for admission of the evidence on those grounds. For example, your failure to give notice of intent to introduce a party's deposition under Cal Rules of Ct 3.823(b)(3)(A)(ii) does not preclude you from offering portions of the party's deposition on other grounds. See, e.g., Evid C §§1220, 1290-1294.

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.40 4. Record of Proceedings

The arbitrator may, but is not required to, record the arbitration proceedings. Cal Rules of Ct 3.824(b)(1). Any such records made by or at the direction of the arbitrator are deemed the arbitrator's personal notes and are not subject to discovery.

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.41 5. Representation by Counsel

The parties have the right to be represented by counsel at any arbitration hearing or proceeding. Parties may choose to waive the right to counsel. If a party waives the right to counsel and then later revokes that waiver, the other party will be entitled to a reasonable continuance to obtain counsel. Cal Rules of Ct 3.821(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.42 6. Absence or Nonparticipation of Party

The arbitration may proceed despite the absence of a party if the absent party received due notice of the proceeding and fails to be present and fails to obtain a continuance. However, any award must not be based solely on a party's absence. If the defendant defaults, the arbitrator must require the plaintiff to submit such evidence as may be appropriate to make an award. Cal Rules of Ct 3.821(b).

Refusal to participate in the arbitration hearing may justify sanctions. See Rietveld v Rosebud Storage Partners, LP (2004) 121 CA4th 250, 256, 16 CR3d 791 (court awarded monetary sanctions against plaintiffs' attorney for failure to participate in judicial arbitration proceedings). A party's failure to participate, however, is not sufficient to justify dismissal of the action. See Lyons v Wickhorst (1986) 42 C3d 911, 231 CR 738; Salowitz Org. v Traditional Indus. (1990) 219 CA3d 797, 268 CR 493, superseded by statute on other grounds (trial court's denial of request for trial de novo was inappropriate sanction for failure to participate in judicial arbitration).

VI. THE AWARD

§37.43 A. Formal Aspects of Award

The award must be in writing and signed by the arbitrator. CCP §1141.23. It should determine all issues properly raised by the pleadings, including a determination of any damages and, if appropriate, an award of costs. The arbitrator's award may exceed the amount in controversy as specified in CCP §1141.11. CCP §1141.26. An arbitrator is not required to make findings of fact or conclusions of law. Cal Rules of Ct 3.825(a).

NOTE: Generally, attorney fees are determined postjudgment on a noticed motion. See CCP §1033.5(c)(5). When the arbitrator awards costs but does not specify the amount of recoverable costs, the portion of the court's judgment awarding specific costs, under the cost bill, is appealable. Dickens v Lee (1991) 230 CA3d 985, 281 CR 783. The only way to challenge a judicial arbitrator's denial of costs is by requesting a trial de novo. Wagy v Brown (1994) 24 CA4th 1, 7, 29 CR2d 48. On trial de novo, see §37.48.

The award must be filed with the clerk, together with proof of service on each party, within 10 days "after the conclusion of the arbitration hearing." Cal Rules of Ct 3.825(b)(1); CCP §1141.23. If the case is unusually lengthy or complex, the arbitrator may ask the court to allow 20 additional days to file and serve the award. Cal Rules of Ct 3.825(b)(1). The arbitrator's jurisdiction to amend an award is limited to the time within which the award must be filed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.825(b)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.44 B. Entry as Judgment

The award will be entered by the clerk as a judgment if, within 30 days after the award was filed with the clerk, no party has filed and served a request for trial de novo and the award is not vacated. CCP §1141.23; Cal Rules of Ct 3.827(a). On entry of the award as a judgment, the clerk must mail notice of the entry of judgment to all parties that have appeared in the case, and he or she must execute a certificate of mailing and place it in the court's file in the case. Cal Rules of Ct 3.827(b).

A judgment so entered has the same force and effect as a regular civil judgment and may not be appealed or attacked, except as set out in CCP §473 (relief from mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect), CCP §1286.2 (vacation of contractual arbitration award), or Cal Rules of Ct 3.828 (arbitration award may be vacated on ground that arbitrator failed to disclose grounds for disqualification of which arbitrator was aware). CCP §1141.23; Cal Rules of Ct 3.827-3.828. See Pierson v Honda (1987) 194 CA3d 1411, 240 CR 148. See also, e.g., Yeap v Leake (1997) 60 CA4th 591, 70 CR2d 680 (application of CCP §473 to grant relief from arbitration award). On the finality of an arbitration award, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California, chap 9 (Cal CEB 2005); and on vacating the judgment, see §37.50.

PRACTICE TIP: In a case in which settlement is reached before an arbitrator, one of the surest ways to guarantee that the case remains settled is to have the arbitrator file the award (which reflects all the terms of the settlement reached before the arbitrator, together with the parties' signed stipulation waiving a trial de novo) so that it will be entered "automatically" as a judgment. Under certain circumstances, parties to an arbitration may also have a stipulated settlement entered as a judgment under CCP §664.6. See, e.g., Marriage of Assemi (1994) 7 C4th 896, 30 CR2d 265; see also Effective Use of ADR, chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.45 C. Arbitrator Fees

Before the arbitrator's fee is paid, the arbitrator must either timely file the award with the court clerk (as required by Cal Rules of Ct 3.825(b)) or file a notice of settlement. Cal Rules of Ct 3.819(a); CCP §1141.18(b). On the arbitrator's verified ex parte application, the court may for good cause authorize payment of a fee in the following situations (Cal Rules of Ct 3.819(b)):

- If the arbitrator devoted a substantial amount of time to a case that settled without a hearing; or
- If the award was not timely filed.

The arbitrator must submit a fee statement to the administrator promptly after completing the arbitrator's duties. For contents of the fee statement, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.819(c). Compensation for arbitrators may not be less than $150 per case, or $150 per day, whichever is greater. A court may set a higher level of compensation for that court. CCP §1141.18. However, because CCP §1141.18 also provides that "[a]rbitrators may waive compensation in whole or in part," local rules, custom, or practice often result in arbitrators' serving for a lesser sum or zero fee on a pro bono publico basis.

PRACTICE TIP: Before the arbitration, request a copy of the arbitrator's fee schedule, which should specify how fees will be assessed. This will eliminate the element of surprise regarding the fee.

VII. TRIAL AFTER ARBITRATION

§37.46 A. Requesting Trial After Arbitration

A party dissatisfied with a judicial arbitration award may request a trial de novo, by court or jury, by filing a request

- With the court clerk with proof of service of a copy on all other parties appearing in the case. Cal Rules of Ct 3.826(a); see Usher v Soltz (1981) 123 CA3d 692, 176 CR 746 (filing with arbitration administrator is not sufficient); and
- Within 30 days after the arbitrator files the award with the court. CCP §1141.20.

A request for trial filed after the parties have been served with a copy of the award by the arbitrator, but before the arbitrator has filed the award with the court clerk, is deemed valid. Cal Rules of Ct 3.826(a).

PRACTICE TIP: If you want a jury trial, you should state this in the trial de novo request to avoid possible waiver arguments. However, it is possible that this jury demand may be treated as ineffective if the court administration takes the position that the initial Case Management Order irrevocably governs. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.728(4). Always check local practice to determine the required timing for a jury demand.

California Rules of Court 3.826(a) states that the 30-day limit for requesting a new trial begins when the arbitration award is filed with the court clerk and may not be extended. Nevertheless, in Domingo v Los Angeles County Metro. Transp. Auth. (1999) 74 CA4th 550, 88 CR2d 224, the court held that the 30-day period does not start until the arbitration award is served on the parties. In the absence of proper service, the 30-day period does not begin to run until the party requesting trial de novo receives actual notice of the arbitrator's award. 74 CA4th at 554. The trial court has no authority to modify the 30-day period in which to file the request for a trial de novo. Karamzai v Digitcom (1996) 51 CA4th 547, 551, 59 CR2d 139 (court is prohibited from extending 30-day period (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.826(a)) and lacks any authorization to shorten the 30-day period).

NOTE: Although the statutory language states that any party may obtain a trial de novo on a timely request, the court in Robinson v Superior Court (1984) 158 CA3d 98, 204 CR 366, concluded that a plaintiff who elects to arbitrate and who obtains an arbitration award in the full amount sought is not ordinarily entitled to a trial de novo, because that would frustrate the purpose of the Judicial Arbitration Act as a means for speedy resolution of disputes.

If a party requests trial de novo, the court is required to recalendar the case for trial as near as possible to the same position it had on the civil active list before the arbitration was ordered, or with civil priority on the next setting calendar. CCP §1141.20(b); see Cal Rules of Ct 3.826(b).

NOTE: Although it would be unusual for a case to be in the legal system for so long, given court rules requiring judges to manage cases in accordance with the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620), counsel should be aware that trial must be set before the 5-year period to bring a case to trial under CCP §583.110 expires.

A plaintiff who loses at arbitration may not request a trial de novo and then voluntarily dismiss the case to avoid an arbitration award in favor of the defendant. Kelley v Bredelis (1996) 45 CA4th 1819, 53 CR2d 536 (dismissal with prejudice); Herbert Hawkins Realtors, Inc. v Milheiser (1983) 140 CA3d 334, 189 CR 450 (dismissal without prejudice). The courts reason that to permit otherwise would defeat the purpose of judicial arbitration. Instead, a dismissal filed after a request for trial de novo will operate to reinstate the arbitration award.

A trial de novo that is requested by only one of the parties in a multiparty judicial arbitration covers all claims and vacates the award in its entirety if those claims are interdependent. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. v Mendez Trucking Inc. (1998) 66 CA4th 691, 696, 78 CR2d 236; Trump v Superior Court (1981) 118 CA3d 411, 417, 173 CR 403. However, when the claims of those requesting a trial de novo are separate and distinct from the remaining claims, one court of appeal has held that a trial de novo need cover only those separate and distinct claims. Demirgian v Superior Court (1986) 187 CA3d 372, 231 CR 698. But see Lewco Iron Metals, Inc. v Superior Court (1999) 76 CA4th 837, 842, 90 CR2d 671 (Demirgian result is inconsistent with plain meaning of statutory scheme, which permits entry of judgment on arbitration award only if no party requests trial de novo).

PRACTICE TIP: In practice, parties may choose to accept the judicial arbitration award rather than request a trial de novo because the party requesting a trial de novo may be liable for specified fees and costs incurred in connection with the action if the outcome of the trial is not more favorable to that party in either the amount of damages awarded or the type of relief granted. See CCP §1141.21(a); §37.49. For similar reasons, parties are often able to negotiate a settlement soon after a party requests a trial de novo, by using the arbitrator's award in the settlement negotiations as evidence of a neutral view of the value of the case and using the avoidance of the additional costs as additional incentive. On the use of objective standards, such as an arbitrator's valuation, in settlement negotiations, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§3.201-3.216 (Cal CEB 2005).

Absent extraordinary circumstances, courts are reluctant to permit postarbitration discovery. Under CCP §1141.24, no discovery other than that permitted by CCP §§2034.010-2034.730 (exchange of information and depositions concerning expert witnesses) is permissible after an arbitration award, except by parties' stipulation or by leave of court on a showing of good cause. The court in Regan v Lanet (1987) 197 CA3d 353, 361, 243 CR 20, lists the following six factors to determine whether good cause for postarbitration discovery exists:

- The necessity and reasons for discovery;
- The diligence of the party requesting discovery;
- Whether discovery will delay trial;
- Whether the purposes of arbitration, i.e., prompt, equitable, and efficient conflict resolution, will be thwarted;
- Whether the party seeking discovery is also the party requesting trial de novo; and
- The prejudice or hardship to both parties.

In McCormick v Sentinel Life Ins. Co. (1984) 153 CA3d 1030, 200 CR 732, the court found that the unavailability of a long-known witness and the alleged complexity of the case were insufficient grounds to establish the required "good cause" to permit further discovery after judicially mandated arbitration. The court noted that "if the case is unduly complex now it was also complex prior to arbitration." 153 CA3d at 1051. But see 153 CA3d at 1052 n20 (court expresses concern about underlying policy assumptions of CCP §1141.24).

© The Regents of the University of California

§37.48 C. The Trial De Novo

In a trial de novo following judicial arbitration, the case will be tried as if no arbitration had occurred, and no reference to any phase of the arbitration or to the fact that there was arbitration may be made at trial. CCP §1141.25. Further, nothing occurring at the arbitration may be used as evidence, even for purposes of impeachment. Cal Rules of Ct 3.826(c). See Jimena v Alesso (1995) 36 CA4th 1028, 43 CR2d 18 (expert witness's testimony from judicial arbitration is not admissible to impeach his testimony at subsequent trial); Weber v Kessler (1981) 126 CA3d 1033, 179 CR 299 (after trial de novo requested, court required to make independent determination and could not rely on arbitrator's findings in reaching its decision). However, if the arbitrator makes a record of the arbitration proceedings, that record is subject to subpoena issued in a criminal investigation or perjury prosecution. Cal Rules of Ct 3.824(b)(2). On the arbitrator's record, see §37.40 and A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §11.43 (Cal CEB 2005).

NOTE: The rule of CCP §1141.25, forbidding reference to an arbitration proceeding or award during any subsequent trial, does not apply to pretrial proceedings. See Shannon v Sims Serv. Ctr. (1985) 164 CA3d 907, 914, 210 CR 861.

§37.49 D. Costs and Fees After Trial De Novo

If the party requesting a trial de novo does not receive a judgment from the trial that is more favorable than the arbitration award, either for the amount of damages awarded or the type of relief granted, the court will order the party requesting the trial de novo to pay the following costs (CCP §1141.21(a)(1); see Cal Rules of Ct 3.826(d)):

- The arbitrator's compensation payable to the court less compensation paid under CCP §1141.28 (see below);
- "All costs" incurred by the other parties;
- Reasonable costs of expert witnesses (not regular employees of a party) actually incurred or reasonably necessary to the case's preparation and trial; and
- Compensation paid under CCP §1141.28 by the other parties to the arbitrator.

Except for the arbitrator's compensation, the costs allowed include only those incurred from the time of election of the trial de novo. CCP §1141.21(a)(2). Attorney fees are not included in the phrase "all costs." See CCP §1021 on recovery of attorney fees.

NOTE: A party may be relieved of the obligation of costs if, on motion, the court finds in writing that the imposition of such costs and fees would create substantial hardship not in the interest of justice. CCP §1141.21(a)(1); see also CCP §1141.28(b).

A party who elects to have a trial de novo and does not receive a judgment more favorable than the arbitration award may not recover costs on the trial de novo. CCP §1141.21(a)(1)(B). Although subject to some question, CCP §1141.21(a)(2) appears to limit this cost disallowance to those costs incurred after the party has elected the trial de novo.

If the arbitration award exceeds $50,000 and the judgment after a trial de novo is also in excess of that amount, the cost provisions in CCP §1141.21 do not apply. CCP §1141.26.

NOTE: If the party electing a trial de novo proceeds in forma pauperis and does not obtain a more favorable judgment after trial, the costs listed in CCP §1141.21(a) can only be assessed and used as an offset against damages awarded in favor of that party. CCP §1141.21(b).

§37.50 VIII. SEEKING TO VACATE JUDGMENT

An appeal from the judgment entered on the arbitrator's award is not permitted. CCP §1141.23. However, a party against whom a judgment based on an arbitration award was entered may move to vacate the judgment within 6 months of its entry. Cal Rules of Ct 3.828(d). Courts view such motions with disfavor and they must meet rigid criteria. The grounds for moving to vacate a judgment based on an arbitration award are limited to the following (CCP §1141.22; Cal Rules of Ct 3.828(d)); see also CCP §1286.2 (vacation of arbitration award), discussed in A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §9.83 (Cal CEB 2005):

- The arbitrator's failure to disclose before the hearing that he or she was subject to a disqualification of which he or she was then aware or the arbitrator's failure to disqualify himself or herself as required by CCP §1282 on receipt of a timely demand;
- The award was obtained by fraud, corruption, or other undue means;
- Corruption of the arbitrator;
- Substantial and prejudicial misconduct of a neutral arbitrator;
- The arbitrator exceeded his or her power and the award cannot be corrected without affecting the merits of the decision; or
- Any of the grounds listed in CCP §473.

A party moving to vacate the judgment must serve notice on the arbitrator and the adverse parties. The court may grant the motion only on clear and convincing evidence that the grounds alleged are true and the motion was made as soon as practicable after the moving party learned of the existence of the grounds. Cal Rules of Ct 3.828(d). Declarations accompanying the motion should show clearly that the motion was brought promptly. On vacation of judgments, see generally California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§25.72-25.77 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

An order denying a motion to vacate is appealable. Cabrera v Plager (1987) 195 CA3d 606, 241 CR 731. However, at this point, neither the arbitrator's award nor the judgment on the award may be modified. Pierson v Honda (1987) 194 CA3d 1411, 240 CR 148.

Placing Action on Arbitration Hearing List

- By stipulation:
- File stipulation (and timely demand for jury if desired) no later than the time the initial case management statement is filed, unless the court orders otherwise (CCP §1141.12(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.812(a)).
- Case is placed on arbitration hearing list forthwith (Cal Rules of Ct 3.812(a)).
- By plaintiff's election:
- File election (and timely demand for jury if desired) no later than the time the initial case management statement is filed, unless the court orders otherwise (CCP §1141.12(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.812(b)).
- Case is placed on the hearing list subject to motion by defendant to delay arbitration hearing for good cause (Cal Rules of Ct 3.812(b)).
- Cross-complainant has 15 days after notice of election to arbitrate to move court to remove case from hearing list on ground that amount in controversy on cross-complaint exceeds $50,000 (Cal Rules of Ct 3.812(c)).
- By court order:
- Case is placed on hearing list at case management conference or review under Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.730 that takes place after all named parties have appeared or defaulted (CCP §1141.16(a); Cal Rules of Ct 3.812(d)). (Make timely demand for jury if desired.)

Assigning Arbitrator

- Arbitrator is assigned to hear case within 30 days after its submission to arbitration (CCP §1141.18(c)).
- Parties may stipulate to nonpanel arbitrator effective on written consent and required oath of such person (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(a)).
- Arbitration administrator, within 15 days after case is placed on arbitration hearing list (Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(b)),
- Sends parties nominees equal to number of sides plus one;
- Each side has 10 days to reject a name, after which
- Arbitration administrator appoints at random a nonrejected person as arbitrator and gives notice to all parties.

Setting for Hearing

- Arbitrator, within 15 days after appointment,
- Sets date, time, and place for hearing; and
- Gives notice in writing to each party and the administrator (Cal Rules of Ct 3.817(a)).
- Arbitrator may consent to continue hearing date up to 90 days, or court may grant a continuance (Cal Rules of Ct 3.818).

Award and Judgment

- Arbitrator files award with proof of service on each party within 10 days after conclusion of hearing. (If trial de novo has been waived, file properly executed stipulation to that effect with the award.)
- Court may allow up to 20 additional days (Cal Rules of Ct 3.825(b)(1)).
- Award is entered as judgment 30 days after filing unless during that interval:
- Request for trial de novo is made (Cal Rules of Ct 3.825(c)(1)). (Repeat jury demand if jury is desired.)

This checklist reflects statewide statutes and rules; local variations should be checked.

Comment: Even though the court orders arbitration, parties may stipulate to their arbitrator if they act before the arbitration administrator appoints an arbitrator. If the parties select as the arbitrator a person who is not on the court's arbitrator panel, the stipulation will be effective only if (1) the selected person completes a written consent to serve and the oath required of panel arbitrators under Cal Rules of Ct 3.810-3.830, and (2) both the consent and the oath are attached to the stipulation. A stipulation may specify the maximum amount of the arbitrator's award. The stipulation to an arbitrator must be filed no later than 10 days after the case has been set for arbitration under Cal Rules of Ct 3.812. The oath of office may be obtained from the arbitration administrator. Parties stipulating to a particular arbitrator should follow up to be sure that their choice files the oath of office on time. See §37.15.

Comment: California Rules of Court 3.815(b) does not require that the opposing parties be notified of an arbitrator's rejection. Under certain circumstances, counsel may find it useful to confer with opposing counsel both on possible rejections and on possible agreed selections before filing a rejection with the court, to see whether there is any agreement on the choice of an arbitrator. See §§37.15-37.20.

Under California Rules of Court 3.823(b), plaintiff, _ _[name]_ _, intends to offer the following documentary material into evidence at the arbitration hearing set for _ _[time]_ _ on _ _[date]_ _:

1. The following medical and hospital reports, records, and bills:

a. Bill from _ _[specify]_ _, dated _ _[specify]_ _ (attached);

b. Report of Dr. _ _[name]_ _, dated _ _[specify]_ _ (attached); and

c. Plaintiff's medical records from office of Dr. _ _[name]_ _ (delivered to defendant at deposition taken on _ _[date]_ _).

2. Evidence of loss of income in the form of a declaration dated _ _[specify]_ _, from _ _[name]_ _, plaintiff's employer (attached).

3. Property damage repair estimate dated _ _[specify]_ _, from _ _[name]_ _ (delivered to defendant at deposition taken on _ _[date]_ _). Repairs have been made in part. See item 4 for details of repairs and costs to date.

4. Invoice no. _ _ _, dated _ _[specify]_ _, from _ _[name]_ _ (attached).

5. Police report by Officer _ _[name]_ _, dated _ _[specify]_ _ (attached).

6. Declaration of _ _[name]_ _, dated _ _[specify]_ _ (attached).

Plaintiff intends to offer into evidence the depositions of _ _[name]_ _, taken on _ _[date]_ _, pursuant to notice, and _ _[name]_ _, taken on _ _[date]_ _, pursuant to stipulation.

Comment: Although this demand may be sufficient to block the admission into evidence of a witness's written statement under Cal Rules of Ct 3.823, a subpoena served on the witness personally is necessary to ensure the witness's attendance at the hearing. See §§37.29, 37.36.

I. INTRODUCTION

A default occurs when a defendant served with a complaint fails to file the appropriate response (see §§38.20-38.28) within the time allowed (see §38.19). CCP §§585-586. After a defendant is in default, a plaintiff may file a request for entry of default (see §§38.35-38.39) and then apply for a default judgment (see §§38.41-38.74). This chapter covers procedural and substantive requirements for entry of default and for obtaining a default judgment. The procedure for setting aside a default judgment is covered in §§38.75-38.107.

In addition to a timely filed answer (chap 25) or demurrer (chap 23), certain timely filed motions, e.g., a motion to strike, to remove to federal court (chap 22), to change venue (chap 20), to dismiss or stay for inconvenient forum (chap 21), will prevent entry of default. See §38.20.

Checklists appear in §§38.109-38.110. For forms, see §§38.111-38.117.

§38.2 1. Governing Law

The statutory authority for obtaining a default judgment is CCP §§585-587.5. Additional procedures are prescribed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(g)-(h), 3.1800. The statutory authority for obtaining relief from default or default judgment is CCP §§473 and 473.5.

2. Definitions

§38.3 a. Default

A default occurs when a defendant served with a complaint fails to file the appropriate responsive paper (see §§38.21-38.28) within the time specified in the summons (see §38.19). CCP §§585-586.

NOTE: The term "responsive paper" rather than "pleading" is used in this chapter to refer to the documents that would prevent default. See §38.20 for a list of appropriate responsive papers. The term "defendant" is used in this chapter to refer to the party who is in default for having failed to file a responsive paper, and the word "plaintiff" is used for the party who seeks that party's default. The term "defendant" includes cross-defendants served with a cross-complaint, and the term "plaintiff" includes cross-complainants. See CCP §587.5.

The critical act is failure to file the response; it is immaterial whether the responsive paper was served on the plaintiff. Fletcher v Maginnis (1902) 136 C 362, 68 P 1015.

§38.4 b. Entry of Default

A default has no legal consequences unless the court clerk enters the default into the court records. The entry of default does not happen automatically; the plaintiff must request it within 10 days of the date the defendant's response was due. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(g). See also §§38.14, 38.18-38.20. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(g)-(i). After default has been entered, the defendant's ability to file an answer, or any motion other than a motion for relief from default, is cut off. Devlin v Kearny Mesa AMC/Jeep/Renault, Inc. (1984) 155 CA3d 381, 385, 202 CR 204; Forbes v Cameron Petroleums, Inc. (1978) 83 CA3d 257, 262, 147 CR 766. See §38.15.

§38.5 c. Default Judgment

A default judgment is a judgment entered by the clerk or court on the plaintiff's application at or after entry of the defendant's default, depending on the nature of the action. See §38.42. A default judgment may be entered by either the clerk (see §§38.42-38.60) or the court (see §§38.61-38.74), depending on the type of case involved. Once a default is entered, the plaintiff has 45 days to obtain a default judgment against the defaulting defendant, unless the court has granted an extension of time. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(h).

A default judgment is a judgment on the merits in the plaintiff's favor and is res judicata for all issues pleaded in the complaint. People v Sims (1982) 32 C3d 468, 481, 186 CR 77, quoting Fitzgerald v Herzer (1947) 78 CA2d 127, 132, 177 P2d 364. For discussion of the res judicata effect of default judgment, see §38.13.

B. Compare—Other Court Proceedings

§38.6 1. Dismissal

The court must, on its own motion or on motion of a nondefaulting defendant, dismiss an action that is not brought to trial within 5 years after it is commenced. CCP §583.360. The court has discretion to dismiss an action for delay in prosecution if it is not brought to trial within 2 years after the complaint is filed. CCP §§583.410-583.420; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1340. See §§39.25-39.62 (dismissal). However, a defendant whose default has been entered may not file a motion to dismiss under these sections. See Devlin v Kearny Mesa AMC/Jeep/Renault, Inc. (1984) 155 CA3d 381, 202 CR 204 (defaulting defendant can bring motion only for relief from default).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.7 2. Uncontested Trials

A default judgment is generally not available when the defendant has answered but fails to appear at trial after having been given proper notice. Instead, the plaintiff's remedy is to proceed with the matter as an uncontested trial and introduce evidence on which the court may render judgment. CCP §594; Wilson v Goldman (1969) 274 CA2d 573, 79 CR 309; Heidary v Yadollahi (2002) 99 CA4th 857, 864, 121 CR2d 695. But see Bill Benson Motors, Inc. v Macmorris Sales Corp. (1965) 238 CA2d Supp 937, 48 CR 123 ("for certain purposes, [default] means a failure to appear at trial as well").

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.8 3. Default as Discovery Sanction

In some circumstances, a default judgment may be obtained against a defendant who has filed a timely answer but then fails to comply with the discovery laws. The court has the power to order terminating sanctions, including the entry of a default judgment for willful obstruction of the discovery process. CCP §2023.030(d)(4); Greenup v Rodman (1986) 42 C3d 822, 231 CR 220.

For discussion of terminating sanctions, see California Civil Discovery Practice §§15.99-15.101 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

C. Preliminary Considerations

1. Restrictions on Default Judgments

§38.9 a. Relief Limited to Amount Demanded

The amount granted by a default judgment may not exceed the amount demanded in the complaint, the statement of damages (see §§38.29-38.31), or a statement reserving the right to seek punitive damages (see §38.32). CCP §580. See also CCP §585(a).

The purpose of these requirements is to inform a defendant of its maximum liability on default. Marriage of Lippel (1990) 51 C3d 1160, 1167, 276 CR 290 (due process requires notice of specific relief sought); Greenup v Rodman (1986) 42 C3d 822, 231 CR 220 (default judgment that exceeds demand would deny fair hearing to defaulting party).

PRACTICE TIP: An attorney who is entitled by statute or contract to fees should allege so in the complaint and include a demand for fees in the prayer. CCP §585(a); Wiley v Rhodes (1990) 223 CA3d 1470, 273 CR 279. In Becker v S.P.V. Construction Co., supra, the Supreme Court reversed an attorney fee award in a default judgment because the complaint did not pray for attorney fees.

A judgment rendered in excess of the proper amount is void. Schwab v Rondel Homes, Inc. (1991) 53 C3d 428, 280 CR 83. However, an appellate court will not void the entire judgment if the complaint will support a judgment for a lesser amount; it will simply modify the judgment to strike the excess damages. Becker v S.P.V. Constr. Co. (1980) 27 C3d 489, 165 CR 825; Gudarov v Hadjieff (1952) 38 C2d 412, 240 P2d 621; Hearn v Howard (2009) 177 CA4th 1193, 1208, 99 CR3d 642 (body of complaint alleged amount of damages sought, but because neither body of complaint nor prayer for relief specified amount of attorney fees, those were stricken); Janssen v Luu (1997) 57 CA4th 272, 66 CR2d 838 (complaint sought damages "in excess of $3000, and according to proof"; judgment modified to award $3000). See §38.95.

If the plaintiff alleges merely that damages exceed the superior court's jurisdictional minimum, that minimum sets the upper limit for the default judgment, which applies to punitive as well as compensatory damages. See Greenup v Rodman (1986) 42 C3d 822, 231 CR 220.

Limited civil cases. In a limited civil case, in which no statement of damages is required (see §38.29), the relief granted cannot exceed the demand of the complaint. CCP §580. See Janssen v Luu (1997) 57 CA4th 272, 275, 66 CR2d 838 (amount of damages specified in complaint sets ceiling for default recovery even if plaintiff proves greater damages). Even assuming that defendants have constructive notice of the amount-in-controversy limits of limited civil cases, due process requires they be given notice of the exact nature of the risk they are taking by not responding. 57 CA4th at 277.

§38.10 b. No Default in Certain Proceedings

In the following proceedings, entry of default judgment without an evidentiary hearing before the court is prohibited by statute:

- Quiet title actions (CCP §764.010; but see Yeung v Soos (2004) 119 CA4th 576, 14 CR3d 502 (default judgment in quiet title action not rendered void by court's failure to properly conduct evidentiary hearing); see also CCP §585(c));
- Actions to reestablish destroyed land records (CCP §751.14);
- Actions to reestablish boundaries of land disturbed by earth movements (CCP §751.59);
- Proceedings for judgment of nullity (see Fam C §2336, which provides alternative procedure of proof by affidavit only for marital dissolution and legal separation proceedings);
- Mandamus proceedings (CCP §1088; but see People ex rel Kottmeier v Superior Court (1987) 194 CA3d 1536, 1540, 239 CR 920; Coppinger v Superior Court (1982) 134 CA3d 883, 885, 185 CR 24; Rodriguez v Municipal Court (1972) 25 CA3d 521, 102 CR 45);
- Prohibition proceedings (CCP §§1105, 1088);
- Corporate dissolution proceedings under Corp C §1804 (former Corp C §4657; Rosner v Benedict Heights, Inc. (1963) 219 CA2d 1, 32 CR 764); and
- Class actions (Kass v Young (1977) 67 CA3d 100, 136 CR 469).

§38.11 c. No Default Against Certain Defendants

A default judgment may not be obtained against the following defendants, regardless of the nature of the proceeding:

- A fictitiously named defendant, unless
- The copy of the summons, process, or pleading served on the defendant specifies in the statutory language that the defendant is being sued as, or on behalf of, a fictitiously named defendant;
- The proof of service states the name under which the defendant was served and that the notice was given; and
- The complaint is amended to state the defendant's true name. CCP §474; Armstrong v Superior Court (1956) 144 CA2d 420, 301 P2d 51.
- An unwilling plaintiff joined as a nominal defendant under CCP §382. See Estate of Kuebler (1978) 81 CA3d 500, 146 CR 481; Watkins v Nutting (1941) 17 C2d 490, 110 P2d 384.
- A defendant in the military service, unless the court appoints an attorney to represent the defendant's interests and directs entry of judgment in compliance with the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act of 2003 (50 USC App §§501-596).
- An indigent prisoner, unless the court appoints counsel. Payne v Superior Court (1976) 17 C3d 908, 927, 132 CR 405 (due process and equal protection require "meaningful opportunity to be heard").
- A debtor in bankruptcy. 11 USC §362(a); Raczynski v Judge (1986) 186 CA3d 504, 510, 230 CR 741 (trial court did not enter judgment on debtor's default until bankruptcy dismissed).

§38.12 2. Ethical Considerations

Case law provides some standards of ethical conduct in using default procedures:

Notice. The plaintiff's attorney has an ethical duty to inform opposing counsel before requesting entry of default, and failure to do so is grounds for setting aside the default under CCP §473(b). Fayusi v Permatex, Inc. (2008) 167 CA4th 681, 701, 84 CR3d 351 (although defendant's legal department had helped plaintiff's counsel to effect service, plaintiff's counsel accepted default without any warning); Smith v Los Angeles Bookbinders Union (1955) 133 CA2d 486, 500, 284 P2d 194, disapproved on other grounds in Grover v Tribune Publishing Co., Inc. (1959) 52 C2d 536, 343 P2d 36 ("[t]he quiet speed of plaintiffs' attorney in seeking a default judgment without the knowledge of defendants' counsel is not to be commended"). See Farrar v Steenbergh (1916) 173 C 94, 159 P 707.

PRACTICE TIP: Plaintiff's counsel should always give written notice to known defense counsel of the intent to seek entry of default, and a reasonable extension of time to respond. Note, however, that local case management rules may prevent the plaintiff's counsel from granting more than a short extension of time to respond. On judicial case management and time disposition goals, see chap 40.

Robinson v Varela (1977) 67 CA3d 611, 136 CR 783, provides a good example of the attitude of the courts toward plaintiffs who obtain a default without giving notice to known defense counsel. The plaintiff filed an unlawful detainer action on Friday, December 19, and served the defendant on December 22. Defense counsel sought an extension of time to answer but was unable to reach the plaintiff's attorney on December 24. On December 29, defendant's attorney learned that the plaintiff had just filed for default. The appellate court upheld an order granting the defendant's motion to vacate the ensuing default judgment, either because the attorney's conduct was "excusable" under CCP §473 (see §38.79) in view of the limited office hours during Christmas week and the attorney's preoccupation with other litigation, or because "the quiet taking of default on the beginning of the first day on which defendant's answer was delinquent" was the sort of professional discourtesy that justified vacating the default. 67 CA3d at 616.

PRACTICE TIP: If counsel fails to give notice to opposing counsel, the court will probably set aside the default under CCP §473. However, the court may very well deny §473 relief (see §38.75) to a party who ignores the notice and extension of time to respond.

Use of deceit. The attorney taking the default must not use treachery or deceit to mislead opposing counsel. Farrar v Steenbergh, supra (court affirmed order setting aside default judgment on cross-complaint because cross-complaint was buried obscurely in document labeled "answer," which gave every appearance of being an answer). See Westport Oil Co. v Garrison (1971) 19 CA3d 974, 97 CR 287. Furthermore, the plaintiff's counsel may not lull the defendant's attorney into a false sense of security. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v Superior Court (1983) 143 CA3d 95, 109, 191 CR 549.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.13 3. Res Judicata Effect of Default Judgment

Whether entered by the court or the clerk (see §38.42), a default judgment is a judgment on the merits in the plaintiff's favor and "is res judicata as to all issues aptly pleaded in the complaint." People v Sims (1982) 32 C3d 468, 481, 186 CR 77, quoting Fitzgerald v Herzer (1947) 78 CA2d 127, 132, 177 P2d 364. By defaulting, the defendant admits the truthfulness of all material allegations of the complaint. Robinson v Early (1967) 248 CA2d 19, 56 CR 183. See also Muller v Muller (1965) 235 CA2d 341, 344, 45 CR 182. When a default judgment is entered, the defendant is treated as though there had been a trial on the material allegations and a judgment rendered in the plaintiff's favor (Martin v General Fin. Co. (1966) 239 CA2d 438, 48 CR 773 (citing Fitzgerald v Herzer, supra)).

However, a default judgment is not an admission of matters not raised by the complaint or unnecessary to uphold the judgment. Mitchell v Jones (1959) 172 CA2d 580, 342 P2d 503.

Admissions of the defaulting defendant cannot be used against other parties to the action. Taliaferro v Hays (1961) 188 CA2d 235, 10 CR 429. But see Drinnon v Oliver (1972) 24 CA3d 571, 101 CR 120 (plaintiff not estopped from enforcing default judgment in separate action against insurance company that denied coverage).

For a discussion of the collateral estoppel effect of a default judgment, see 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Judgment §§448-451 (5th ed 2008).

II. ENTRY OF DEFAULT

A. Reasons to Seek Entry of Default

§38.14 1. Entry of Default Is Prerequisite for Obtaining Default Judgment

Entry of default by the court clerk is a statutory prerequisite to both a clerk's default judgment (CCP §585(a)) and a default judgment by the court (CCP §585(b)-(c)). However, even under §585(a)-(c) (Norman v Berney (1965) 235 CA2d 424, 429, 45 CR 467, citing Drake v Duvenick (1873) 45 C 455, 462), > a valid default judgment may be rendered by the court even though no formal default has been entered.... The only purpose of a default is to limit the time during which the defendant may file his answer, and that time never extends beyond a trial and judgment.

Once the court has obtained jurisdiction over a defaulting defendant by proper service of the summons and complaint, it may enter a default judgment even though no default has been entered or the clerk erred in entering a default. Crouch v H.L. Miller & Co. (1915) 169 C 341, 146 P 880; Herman v Santee (1894) 103 C 519, 37 P 509. The same reasoning applies to a default judgment by the clerk entered under §585(a). Norman v Berney, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.15 2. Defendant Can No Longer File Responsive Paper

Once default has been entered, the defendant's ability to file an answer, or any motion other than a motion for relief from default, is cut off. Devlin v Kearny Mesa AMC/Jeep/Renault, Inc. (1984) 155 CA3d 381, 385, 202 CR 204; Forbes v Cameron Petroleums, Inc. (1978) 83 CA3d 257, 262, 147 CR 766. The defendant is "out of court"; i.e., the defendant cannot oppose or object to the relief to which the complaint shows the plaintiff is entitled and need not be served with notice of subsequent proceedings or papers. Heathman v Vant (1959) 172 CA2d 639, 343 P2d 104. See also CCP §1010.

For example, once default is entered, the defendant

- Is not entitled to notice of trial or to request a trial continuance (Hanson v Hanson (1960) 178 CA2d 756, 3 CR 179);
- May not appear at the hearing to prove up the amount of damages to prevent entry of a default judgment (Devlin v Kearny Mesa AMC/Jeep/Renault, Inc., supra); and
- May not raise the issue of whether the judge who granted a default judgment was qualified to hear the matter (Muller v Muller (1965) 235 CA2d 341, 45 CR 182).

If the plaintiff substantively amends the complaint after obtaining entry of default, however, the defendant may respond to the amended complaint. The amended complaint supersedes the original complaint and reopens the default. See §38.40.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.16 3. Court Rules Require Entry of Default if No Timely Response

If a responsive pleading is not served within the time limits specified in Cal Rules of Ct 3.110 and no extension of time has been granted, the plaintiff must, within 10 days after the time for service has elapsed, file a request for entry of default. Failure to timely file the request for the entry of default may result in an Order to Show Cause (OSC) being issued as to why sanctions should not be imposed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(g) (not applicable to unlawful detainer, family law proceedings, or proceedings with different service requirements prescribed by law).

NOTE: California Rules of Court 3.110(d) allows the parties to stipulate to one 15-day extension beyond the 30-day time period prescribed for the response after service of the initial complaint.

When the court issues an OSC under this rule, responsive papers to the OSC must be filed and served no less than 5 calendar days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(i). See also §38.33.

Once a default is entered, the party who requested the entry of default must obtain a default judgment against the defaulting party within 45 days after entry of default, unless the court has granted an extension of time. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(h). See §§38.59-38.60.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.17 B. Prerequisites to Entry of Default

Before plaintiff can seek entry of defendant's default, the following must occur:

- Defendant has been served (see §38.18);
- The time for defendant to respond has expired (see §38.19); and
- Defendant has failed to file a response (see §§38.20-38.28).

In addition, in certain cases, plaintiff must:

- Serve a statement of damages (see §38.29); and
- Serve a statement reserving the right to seek punitive damages (see §38.32).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.18 1. Service of Process

Default may be entered against a defendant only if he or she has been served with the summons and complaint. CCP §585. A default entered against a defendant who has not been served as required by §585 is void and can be set aside at any time. Westport Oil Co. v Garrison (1971) 19 CA3d 974, 97 CR 287 (discussing personal service requirements of former CCP §585). See §§38.97-38.100. However, a defendant that took active steps to avoid being served and had actual notice of both the action and the request for entry of default may be denied relief from default. See Khourie, Crew & Jaeger v Sabek, Inc. (1990) 220 CA3d 1009, 269 CR 687.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.19 2. Time for Response Has Expired

Default can be entered against a defendant only if he or she has not filed an appropriate response within the time specified in the summons or such further time as may be allowed. CCP §585.

Ordinarily, the summons specifies a 30-day period after service has been completed within which to file an appropriate responsive paper. CCP §412.20(a)(3); Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(d). See also CCP §586(a)(1) (30 days to respond to amended complaint). In unlawful detainer actions, however, the time to answer or demur cannot exceed 5 days, excluding judicial holidays. CCP §§1167, 1167.3, 1170.

Service is completed:

- If personal service was used, at the time of delivery (CCP §415.10; see §§17.27-17.29);
- If substituted service (CCP §415.20; see §§17.30-17.31), service by certified mail on an out-of-state defendant (CCP §415.40), or service by posting and mailing in an unlawful detainer action was used (CCP §415.45; see §§17.41-17.42), on the 10th day after mailing;
- If service by mail was used, on the date of signing the acknowledgment of receipt (CCP §415.30; see §§17.32-17.35); or
- If service by publication was used, on the 28th day after publication (Govt C §6064; CCP §415.50; see §17.36).

The time to respond may be extended by stipulation or by the court on motion for an order extending time. CCP §1054. However, an order extending time for more than 30 days without the plaintiff's consent under §1054 is void, and it does not prevent entry of default, although the defendant's reliance on the order might provide grounds for relief from default under CCP §473. See Kennedy v Mulligan (1902) 136 C 556, 69 P 291.

On late-filed responses, see §38.34.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.20 3. Responses

A default may be entered only against defendant who has not filed one of the following (CCP §585(a)):

- Answer;
- Demurrer;
- Notice of motion to strike;
- Notice of motion to change venue under CCP §396b;
- Notice of motion to dismiss under CCP §§583.210-583.250 (failure to serve within 3 years);
- Notice of motion to quash service of summons under CCP §418.10(a)(1);
- Notice of motion to stay or dismiss the action under CCP §418.10(a)(2) (inconvenient forum); or
- Notice of filing a petition for writ of mandate as provided for in CCP §418.10(c).

NOTE: Filing certain papers (e.g., a petition to compel arbitration under CCP §§1281.2, 1281.7) will have the practical effect of preventing entry of the defendant's default. See note in §38.23. However, not all motions or responsive papers will prevent entry of the defendant's default. See, e.g., Barragan v Banco BCH (1986) 188 CA3d 283, 232 CR 758 (motion for summary judgment not a "pleading" that would prevent entry of default). For further discussion, see §§38.21-38.28.

A default may be entered on an amended complaint when the defendant has failed to file an answer, demurrer, or notice of motion to strike of the type discussed in §§38.21-38.22. CCP §586(a)(1).

If the defendant has filed a responsive paper, the clerk may not review it to determine its legal sufficiency. Stevens v Torregano (1961) 192 CA2d 105, 13 CR 604. The clerk is entitled to rely on the document's caption to ascertain whether it is covered by CCP §585. Once the defendant has filed a response that appears to be one of the permissible responses, the clerk may not enter the defendant's default. Stevens v Torregano, supra.

WARNING: The reverse is also true. If the defendant files a permissible response that is miscaptioned, the clerk must rely on the title of the document, not on an examination of the document. See, e.g., Wisdom v Ramirez (1985) 177 CA3d Supp 1, 222 CR 923 (erroneously designated response will not prevent entry of default).

a. Responsive Papers

§38.21 (1) Answer or Demurrer

A default cannot be entered when the defendant has filed an answer or demurrer to a complaint (CCP §585), amended complaint (CCP §586(a)(1)), or cross-complaint (CCP §585(e)) within the time allowed. Whether the answer or demurrer is legally sufficient is immaterial. Stevens v Torregano (1961) 192 CA2d 105, 112, 13 CR 604. On the time defendant is allowed for filing, see §38.19.

Effect of amended complaint. When the plaintiff intends to file an amended complaint that differs from the original in form only, the usual practice is for the parties to stipulate that the defendant's answer to the original complaint will stand as the answer to the amended complaint. If the plaintiff is allowed to file the amended complaint, and the defendant fails to obtain such a stipulation or order and fails to answer the amended complaint, the plaintiff may have the defendant's default entered if it is determined thereafter that the amendment is one of substance rather than form. Bristol Convalescent Hosp. v Stone (1968) 258 CA2d 848, 863, 66 CR 404. On what constitutes an "amendment of substance," see §38.40.

If a demurrer is sustained. If the defendant's demurrer is sustained with leave to amend, the defendant need not respond until the plaintiff serves and files an amended complaint. The defendant must respond to the amended complaint within 30 days unless the court orders otherwise (CCP §471.5), or within 5 days in an unlawful detainer case (CCP §1167.3). If the defendant fails to respond within the time allowed, the plaintiff may have default entered. CCP §586(a)(1).

If a demurrer is overruled. If the defendant's demurrer is overruled, the defendant must answer within the time allowed; otherwise, the plaintiff may take the defendant's default. CCP §586(a)(2). The time for the defendant to answer is usually stated in the court's ruling on the demurrer (CCP §472a(c)) but is 5 days in forcible or unlawful detainers and 10 days in all other actions when the order is silent (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g)). The time begins to run when the defendant is served with notice of the order or decision unless notice is waived in open court and the waiver entered in the minutes. If an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend is reversed or remanded by a reviewing court, any amended complaint must be filed within 30 days after the clerk of the reviewing court mails notice of the remittitur. CCP §472b.

Plaintiff's demurrer to answer. A default may be taken against the defendant when the plaintiff's demurrer to the answer is sustained and the defendant fails to amend within the allotted time. CCP §586(a)(5).

NOTE: In federal practice, a motion to dismiss is the functional equivalent of a demurrer. In a removal action, when a motion to dismiss has been filed in federal court, a default may not be entered on remand to the state court. Laguna Village, Inc. v Laborers' Int'l Union (1983) 35 C3d 174, 197 CR 99.

§38.22 (2) Motion to Strike

A default may not be entered when the defendant has filed a motion to strike the whole or any part of a complaint (CCP §585), amended complaint (CCP §586(a)(1)), or cross-complaint (CCP §585(e)) within the time allowed. The motion must be noticed for no more than 30 days after filing of the notice and served as required by CCP §1005. CCP §418.10(b). For discussion of setting the hearing on the motion, see §§12.97-12.103; for the time to file motion, see §38.19.

If motion to strike granted. A notice of motion to strike may be filed alone or with a demurrer. See CCP §586(a)(2). If the motion to strike the entire complaint is granted with leave to amend, the defendant need not respond further until the plaintiff has filed an amended complaint. If the motion is granted for part of the complaint, and no demurrer is pending or was overruled, the defendant must answer the unstricken portions of the complaint within the time allowed by the court; otherwise, the plaintiff may take the defendant's default regarding the unstricken portions. CCP §586(a)(3).

If motion to strike denied. If the defendant fails to answer the complaint within the time allowed, after a motion to strike is denied and any demurrer is overruled, the plaintiff may take the defendant's default. CCP §586(a)(2).

Plaintiff's motion to strike answer. If the plaintiff's motion to strike the defendant's answer in whole or in part is granted, and the defendant thereafter fails to amend the answer, the plaintiff may take the defendant's default. CCP §586(a)(7). The wording of §586(a)(7) could lead to an anomalous result if the court grants a motion to strike an insubstantial portion of a defendant's answer but leaves intact a substantial portion of the answer. If the defendant does not file an amended answer, the plaintiff could proceed to default even though a substantial portion of the original answer remains of record.

If a plaintiff files a motion to strike the entire answer and the motion is granted without leave to amend, the plaintiff may take the defendant's default. CCP §586(a)(7).

§38.23 (3) Motion to Change Venue Under CCP §396b

A default cannot be entered when the defendant has filed a timely notice of motion to transfer the action under CCP §396b. CCP §585. On the time allowed for filing the motion, see chap 20 (motions to change venue), §38.19. Under CCP §396b, a motion to change venue is proper when the complaint was filed in a court having subject matter jurisdiction that is not the proper court for the trial of the action.

If motion to transfer denied. If the motion to transfer under §396b is denied, the court will set a time for the defendant to file another appropriate responsive paper. CCP §396b(e). If the defendant does not do so within the time allowed, the plaintiff may request entry of the defendant's default. CCP §586(a)(6)(A).

If motion to transfer granted. If a motion to transfer is granted and the action is transferred, the clerk of the transferee court will mail notice of the filing of the case and the case number. The defendant has 30 days after the mailing of the notice to file an appropriate responsive paper; otherwise, the plaintiff may take the defendant's default. CCP §586(a)(6)(B).

If review is sought. If review of an order granting or denying a motion to change venue is sought and a stay is granted, no default may be taken while the stay is pending. CCP §586(a)(6)(C). See chap 20 for discussion of review of venue orders. On termination of the stay, the court that has jurisdiction of the trial must afford the defendant a reasonable opportunity to file an appropriate responsive paper. Notice of the time for the defendant to file an appropriate responsive pleading must be given by the party who procured the order or by the court clerk if the order was made on the court's own motion. CCP §586(a)(6)(C). On motions to change venue generally, see chap 20.

NOTE: Although motions to change venue or transfer under CCP §§396 and 396a are not specified in CCP §§585-586 as appropriate responsive papers sufficient to prevent the entry of default, in some instances they have the same effect. If review is sought of an order granting or denying relief under CCP §396a, the time when a default may be entered is governed by the same rules pertaining to review of orders to transfer under §396b. CCP §586(a)(6)(C).

b. Other Responses

§38.24 (1) Motion to Dismiss for Delay in Prosecution

A defendant may respond by filing a motion to dismiss for failure to serve the summons and complaint within 3 years after filing under CCP §§583.210-583.250. CCP §§418.10(a)(3), 585(a). On dismissal, see chap 39. The motion must be noticed for no more than 30 days after the notice is filed. CCP §418.10(b). The motion must be filed on or before the last day to plead. CCP §418.10(a). See §38.19. Service and filing the motion extends the time to plead to 15 days after service of written notice of the order denying the motion. The court may extend the time for up to 20 additional days for good cause. CCP §418.10(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.25 (2) Motion to Quash Service of Summons or Stay or Dismiss for Inconvenient Forum

A default may not be entered when the defendant has filed, within the time allowed, a notice of motion to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction, or to stay or dismiss the action on the ground of inconvenient forum under CCP §418.10. CCP §§418.10, 585. On the time allowed for filing and hearing, see CCP §§418.10(a), 1167.4. See also §38.19. For discussion of motions to quash, see chap 19; for motions to dismiss on inconvenient forum grounds, see chap 21.

If the motion to quash or to stay under CCP §418.10 is denied, the defendant has 15 days after service of written notice of the order denying the motion to respond. The court for good cause may extend the time for an additional period not exceeding 20 days. CCP §§418.10(b), 586(a)(4). For time to respond in an unlawful detainer action, see CCP §1167.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.26 (3) Motion Under CCP §418.10 and Simultaneous Answer, Demurrer, or Motion to Strike

A defendant may move under CCP §418.10 (to quash for lack of personal jurisdiction, to stay or dismiss on ground of inconvenient forum, or to dismiss for delay in prosecution) and simultaneously answer, demur, or move to strike the complaint or cross-complaint. CCP §418.10(e). Despite CCP §1014, no act by a party who makes a motion under CCP §418.10, including filing an answer, demurrer, or motion to strike, constitutes an appearance, unless the court denies the motion made under this section. If the court denies the motion under §418.10, the defendant or cross-defendant is not deemed to have generally appeared until entry of the order denying the motion. CCP §418.10(e)(1).

If the motion under §418.10 is denied and the defendant petitions for a writ of mandate under §418.10(c), the defendant is not deemed to have generally appeared until the proceedings on the writ petition have finally concluded. CCP §418.10(e)(2).

Failure to make a motion under §418.10 at the time of filing a demurrer or motion to strike constitutes a waiver of the issues of lack of personal jurisdiction, inadequacy of process, inadequacy of service of process, inconvenient forum, and delay in prosecution. CCP §418.10(e)(3).

It was the legislature's intent in enacting §418.10(e) to conform California practice with respect to challenging personal jurisdiction to the practice under Fed R Civ P 12(b). Stats 2002, ch 69, §2.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.27 (4) Petition for Writ of Mandate

Within 10 days after service of notice of denial of the motion, or within such further time as the court for good cause may allow (not exceeding 20 days), the defendant may seek review by petition for writ of mandate. CCP §418.10(c). If the defendant files a petition for a writ of mandate and gives notice of the petition to the trial court, default may not be entered until 10 days after service on the defendant (unless the court, for good cause, extends the time for an additional period not exceeding 20 days) of written notice of final judgment in the mandate proceeding. CCP §§418.10(c), 586(a)(4).

§38.28 (5) Petition to Compel Arbitration

A defendant may also file a petition to compel arbitration under CCP §1281.2 instead of answering the complaint. CCP §1281.7. See chap 45 (participating in alternative dispute resolution) for procedures for filing petition. The petitioning defendant has 15 days after the petition is denied to plead to the complaint. CCP §1281.7.

4. Additional Requirements in Certain Cases

§38.29 a. Statement of Damages in Personal Injury or Wrongful Death Cases (CCP §425.11)

Before a default may be taken in an action for actual or punitive damages for personal injury or wrongful death (other than a limited civil case), the plaintiff must provide notice to the defendant of the actual amount of general and special damages sought. CCP §425.11; Schwab v Rondel Homes, Inc. (1991) 53 C3d 428, 280 CR 83 (prayer in complaint asking for statutory damages of at least $250 "according to proof" and punitive damages of $500,000 not sufficient notice to justify default judgment for general damages of $50,000 plus punitive damages of $100,000 for each of two plaintiffs).

NOTE: The requirement that a statement of damages be served before a default may be entered also applies when default is entered as a discovery sanction against the defendant. See Morgan v Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1987) 192 CA3d 976, 237 CR 756, disapproved on other grounds in Schwab v Rondel Homes, Inc. (1991) 53 C3d 428, 434, 280 CR 83. Further, when seeking such a discovery sanction against a recalcitrant defendant, the plaintiff should make sure that a statement of damages has been served a reasonable time before the hearing on the motion. Otherwise, in the default prove-up hearing the plaintiff may be limited to damages in the amount of the court's jurisdictional minimum. On timing of service of statement of damages, see §38.31.

Exception in limited civil cases. In a limited civil case, no statement of damages is required. See CCP §425.10. The relief granted cannot exceed the demand of the complaint. CCP §580. See §38.9.

Other cases that may require statement of damages. The rationale behind the requirement of a statement of damages in personal injury and wrongful death cases—the avoidance of unfair surprise—is also potentially applicable to actions for accounting, e.g., marital and partnership dissolutions, in which it may be difficult or impossible for the plaintiff to specify the amount of damages in the complaint. In Ely v Gray (1990) 224 CA3d 1257, 274 CR 536, the Court of Appeal for the Third District set aside the damage award in a default judgment for insufficient notice, holding that a plaintiff seeking an accounting of partnership assets must, before entry of a default judgment, serve a statement of damages on the defendant similar to that required under CCP §425.11.

In Cassell v Sullivan, Roche & Johnson (1999) 76 CA4th 1157, 90 CR2d 899, another court of appeal declined to follow Ely v Gray, supra, holding that, in an action by a former partner seeking an accounting, a complaint specifying the type of relief sought gives defendants adequate notice of their potential exposure. Compare Marriage of Lippel (1990) 51 C3d 1160, 276 CR 290 (setting aside default judgment in marital dissolution that included child support because complaint did not specify that wife was seeking child support), with Marriage of Andresen (1994) 28 CA4th 873, 34 CR2d 147 (upholding default and default judgment against defaulting husband; complaint that requested division of community assets and included property declaration listing assets and liabilities provided adequate notice of amount in controversy despite complaint's failure to specify amount of relief requested). For a detailed discussion of defaults in family law matters, see Practice Under the California Family Code: Dissolution, Legal Separation, Nullity (Cal CEB Annual).

§38.30 (1) Printed Form; Service

Use of the Judicial Council form Statement of Damages (Personal Injury or Wrongful Death) (Judicial Council Form CIV-050) is mandatory. See Fayusi v Permatex, Inc. (2008) 167 CA4th 681, 688, 84 CR3d 351. This form may also be used to request punitive damages, if sought. See §38.32.

The statement of damages must be served in the same manner as a summons when the defendant has not appeared. CCP §425.11(d)(1). See Sakaguchi v Sakaguchi (2009) 173 CA4th 852, 860, 92 CR3d 717 (statement of damages may be served on prisoner by serving sheriff or jailer). Service may be by publication or substituted service if personal service cannot be made using reasonable diligence. CCP §415.20. See Parish v Peters (1991) 1 CA4th 202, 210, 1 CR2d 836 (statement of damages must be served in same manner as summons; demand in complaint for "compensatory damages according to proof" no substitute). One court, however, has held that a plaintiff's failure to serve a statement of damages does not prevent entry of default if an attempt to serve would be futile. See Candelaria v Avitia (1990) 219 CA3d 1436, 1441, 269 CR 32 (defendant's whereabouts unknown to plaintiff and defendant's insurer).

PRACTICE TIP: Some attorneys serve the statement of damages with the summons and complaint whenever there is a likelihood of default, e.g., when the defendant is uninsured or when service is by publication. (Note: In the latter case, an order authorizing publication of summons and the statement of damages should be obtained at the same time, although at least one court has held that a plaintiff who obtains a court order allowing service of summons and complaint by publication need not obtain a separate order to simultaneously serve the statement of damages by publication. Anastos v Lee (2004) 118 CA4th 1314, 1318, 13 CR3d 716.) This method saves the time and expense of personally serving the defendant twice and permits filing a request for default 30 days later. See CCP §412.20.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.31 (2) Timing for Service

One line of cases holds that the statement of damages must have been served at least 30 days before entry of defendant's default. See Plotitsa v Superior Court (1983) 140 CA3d 755, 761, 189 CR 769 (statement is in effect a substantial amendment to complaint). See also Twine v Compton Supermarket (1986) 179 CA3d 514, 224 CR 562 (trial court lacks jurisdiction to enter default 3 days after statement served by mail).

However, another line of cases holds that there is no hard and fast rule regarding the timing of service of the damages statement; the court must determine in each case whether minimum due process standards have been met. Schwab v Southern Cal. Gas Co. (2004) 114 CA4th 1308, 1322, 8 CR3d 627 (service of statement of damages 15 days before entry of default was reasonable; nothing in CCP §425.10, §425.11, or §585 provides minimum notice period before default may be entered); California Novelties, Inc. v Sokoloff (1992) 6 CA4th 936, 7 CR2d 795 (no hard and fast rule on timing of service of statement of damages; court required to determine in each case whether minimum standards of due process met; 17 days before entry of default was reasonable amount of time to respond); Connelly v Castillo (1987) 190 CA3d 1583, 236 CR 112 (CCP §425.11 requires merely reasonable notice; whether service 27 days before request to enter default was reasonable should be determined on timely CCP §473 motion, not 2 years later when defendant moved for relief from default judgment).

PRACTICE TIP: To eliminate the possibility that a court will find the timing of the service of the statement of damages unreasonable, it is a good idea to wait 30 days before having default entered.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/38 Default/§38.32 b. Statement Reserving Right to Seek Punitive Damages (CCP §425.115)

§38.32 b. Statement Reserving Right to Seek Punitive Damages (CCP §425.115)

When a default judgment includes a request for punitive damages under CC §3294, counsel may use the Judicial Council form Statement of Damages (Personal Injury or Wrongful Death) (Judicial Council Form CIV-050). To preserve the right to seek punitive damages, the form must be served on the defendant's attorney or directly on an unrepresented defendant before a default may be taken. CCP §425.115(f). The requirements for service of the statement of punitive damages are similar to the requirements for service of the statement of damages required by CCP §425.11 and may be served as part of the statement of damages. CCP §425.115(e). See §§38.29-38.31. The statement should be in the following or a substantially equivalent form. CCP §425.115(b).

NOTICE TO _ _[Name of defendant or cross-defendant]_ _:

_ _[Name of plaintiff or cross-complainant]_ _ reserves the right to seek $_ _[dollar amount]_ _ in punitive damages when _ _[name of plaintiff or cross-complainant]_ _ seeks a judgment in the suit filed against you.

Date: _ _ _ _ _ __[Name of attorney or party appearing in propria persona]__

The statement of punitive damages must be served in the same manner as a summons when the defendant has not appeared. CCP §425.115(g)(1). When the defendant has appeared, the statement must be served on the defendant's attorney or the defendant, if he or she appeared in pro per, either in the same manner as a summons or in the manner provided for service of papers (CCP §§1010-1020). CCP §425.115(g)(2).

C. Timing: When to Request Entry of Default

§38.33 1. Within 10 Days After Deadline for Responsive Paper Passes

If no timely responsive paper has been served and no extension of time has been granted, the plaintiff must, within 10 days after the time for service of a responsive paper has elapsed, file a request for entry of default. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(g). Failure to file timely the request for the entry of default may result in the court issuing an Order to Show Cause about why sanctions shall not be imposed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(g) (not applicable to unlawful detainer, family law proceedings, or proceedings with different service requirements prescribed by law). When the court issues an OSC under this rule, responsive papers to the OSC must be filed and served no less than 5 calendar days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(i).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.34 2. No Default if Responsive Paper Is Filed Late But Before Entry of Default

A default may not be entered if the defendant files a responsive pleading after the time to do so expires but before the plaintiff obtains entry of the defendant's default. The plaintiff's failure to request the entry of default is considered the equivalent of granting the defendant an extension of time to respond. Reher v Reed (1913) 166 C 525, 137 P 263; Goddard v Pollock (1974) 37 CA3d 137, 112 CR 215. However, the plaintiff may object to the defendant's responsive paper as untimely in a motion to strike; if the motion is granted, the defendant's default can then be entered. Buck v Morrossis (1952) 114 CA2d 461, 250 P2d 270.

D. Procedure: How to Obtain Entry of Default

§38.35 1. Request for Entry of Default Form

The plaintiff must request entry of default on the printed form designated Request for Entry of Default (Application to Enter Default) (Judicial Council Form CIV-100), reproduced in §38.111. The form includes a venue declaration (CCP §585.5) that must be completed for entry of default under CCP §585(a) and a declaration of mailing (CCP §587) that must be completed before entry of default under CCP §585(a), (b), or (c). The form also contains a memorandum of costs and a declaration of nonmilitary service; completion of these sections is not required until the plaintiff is seeking entry of a default judgment. See §§38.53-38.55. See also Comment in §38.111.

The Judicial Council Request for Entry of Default form may be used to:

- Enter default only;
- Request a court judgment under, e.g., CCP §§585(b)-(d), 989;
- Enter a clerk's judgment for restitution of the premises only and issue a writ of execution on the judgment;
- Enter a clerk's judgment under CCP §585(a); or
- Enter a clerk's judgment for a default previously entered.

Entry of default against several defendants can be requested on the same form. The names of the defendants against whom entry of default is requested should conform to the names as set forth in the caption of the summons and complaint. If entry of default is requested against defendants who have been fictitiously named or named incorrectly in the complaint, the plaintiff must amend the complaint to state their true names before filing the request. See CCP §§473-474. For forms and procedures to amend a complaint, see chap 16.

The Judicial Council has also adopted forms for mandatory use when requesting default in Family Law matters. See, e.g., Request to Enter Default (Judicial Council Form FL-165). For a detailed discussion of defaults in family law matters, see Practice Under the California Family Code: Dissolution, Legal Separation, Nullity (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.36 2. Venue Declaration (CCP §585.5)

Every application to enter default under CCP §585(a) (action on contract or judgment) must include "an affidavit stating facts showing that the action is or is not subject to Section 1812.10 or 2984.4 of the Civil Code or subdivision (b) of Section 395." CCP §585.5(a). A venue declaration is not required to enter default in other cases.

The purpose of the CCP §585.5 affidavit (or declaration under penalty of perjury (CCP §2015.5)) is to require a party to disclose whether the action is subject to the particular venue provisions of CC §§1812.10 and 2984.4, e.g.:

- Actions on installment sales contracts for consumer goods (Unruh Act (CC §§1801-1812.20));
- Actions involving automobile sales financing (Rees-Levering Act (CC §§2981-2984.6)); or
- Actions based on the sale of goods or services, or loans or extensions of credits intended primarily for household use (CCP §395(b)).

When the declaration discloses that the action is subject to these requirements, the clerk will examine the complaint to ascertain whether the venue allegations of the complaint meet the requirements of the particular statute. If the allegations are insufficient, the clerk will refuse to enter the default. Any default or default judgment entered without compliance with these venue provisions may be set aside by the defendant on noticed motion and the defendant may recover actual damages and costs, including reasonable attorney fees, unless the plaintiff shows reasonable diligence to avoid filing in the wrong court. CCP §585.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.37 3. Declaration of Mailing (CCP §587)

Every request for entry of default under CCP §585(a), (b), or (c) must include an affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury (CCP §2015.5) stating that a copy of the request has been mailed to the defendant's attorney of record, or if none, to the defendant at his or her last known address. CCP §587.

When the defendant's address is unknown to the plaintiff or the plaintiff's attorney, e.g. when service was by publication, the declaration must state that fact, and no mailing is required. CCP §587.

WARNING: The plaintiff must make a "reasonably diligent search" to ascertain the defendant's address, e.g., by investigating city and county directories, utility companies, employers, friends, acquaintances, and relatives. Failure to conduct such a search is grounds for setting aside the default and default judgment. Slusher v Durrer (1977) 69 CA3d 747, 138 CR 265. A party who has not received actual notice may move to set aside a default or default judgment up to 2 years after entry of the default judgment under CCP §473.5 (see §§38.97-38.100). If the defendant simultaneously moves to quash service because the publication order was not based on sufficient evidence of "reasonable diligence," and the motion is granted more than 3 years after the complaint was filed, the complaint will be subject to mandatory dismissal under CCP §583.210. Courts, however, are reluctant to grant these motions because the court has already found reasonable diligence when it grants the publication order.

Even a valid publication order does not toll the time to bring a case to trial under CCP §583.340, because the finding required for service by publication—that a party cannot with reasonable diligence be served by another method—is not the same as a finding that the "defendant was not amenable to the process of the court" for purposes of computing the time within which service must be made under CCP §583.240(a). Watts v Crawford (1995) 10 C4th 743, 42 CR2d 81 (case dismissed for failure to serve within 3 years when order for publication issued 1 day before expiration of 3-year period).

No default can be entered unless the declaration of mailing has been filed. CCP §587. But see Marriage of Harris (1977) 74 CA3d 98, 141 CR 333 (default judgment held proper even though no declaration of mailing had been filed as required by §587, when respondent/defendant had actual notice of petitioner/plaintiff's intent to take default and no harm resulted from defect).

The mailing requirement is designed to prevent entry of a default against an unwary litigant (Davis v Thayer (1980) 113 CA3d 892, 907, 170 CR 328) or through chicanery (Westport Oil Co. v Garrison (1971) 19 CA3d 974, 978 n1, 97 CR 287). However, CCP §587 does not specify when the request must be mailed to the defendant or the defendant's attorney, only that it "has been mailed." In practice, the request is usually mailed immediately before filing, and it is probable that the request will not be received until after the request for default has been entered by the clerk. Moreover, nonreceipt of notice does not constitute grounds for setting aside the judgment. CCP §587; Flood v Simpson (1975) 45 CA3d 644, 119 CR 675. See also Rodriguez v Henard (2009) 174 CA4th 529, 94 CR3d 313 (no error to deny defendants' motion to set aside entry of default and default judgment, based on defendants' claim that incorrect zip code was used on affidavits of mailing and that they did not receive notice).

§38.38 4. Other Papers Accompanying Request

The following documents should accompany the request for entry of default:

- Proof of service and copy of the summons (CCP §§417.10-417.30; see chap 17);
- Proof of publication, if service is by publication (CCP §585(c); see §17.36); and
- Proof that service of the statement of damages (if statement of damages is required) and service of statement of punitive damages (if punitive damages are sought) has been made in the same manner as the summons and complaint (CCP §§425.11(d), 425.115(g); see §§38.29-38.32).

§38.39 5. Clerk Must Enter Default if Application Shows Conditions Exist

When the plaintiff files an application that shows that the conditions for entry of default exist, the clerk must enter the default. CCP §585(a)-(c). The clerk must determine whether the statutory conditions for entry of default are satisfied from the face of the record and must enter default if they are. The clerk's duties are ministerial; the clerk can neither take evidence nor determine disputed matters. See, e.g., Wisdom v Ramirez (1985) 177 CA3d Supp 1, 222 CR 923; Baske v Burke (1981) 125 CA3d 38, 177 CR 794; Potts v Whitson (1942) 52 CA2d 199, 125 P2d 947. The clerk enters the default in the register of actions of the court. Govt C §69845. Copies may be microfilmed (or similar process) in lieu of a register of actions. Govt C §68150.

If the clerk improperly fails or refuses to enter a default, the plaintiff can apply to the court for a default judgment even though no default has been entered. The plaintiff can also compel the clerk to enter the default by writ of mandate. W.A. Rose Co. v Municipal Court (1959) 176 CA2d 67, 1 CR 49.

§38.40 E. Effect of Amended Complaint on Previously Entered Default

An amended complaint supersedes the previous complaint. Therefore, if the plaintiff enters default against a defendant, and later files an amended complaint that varies in substance rather than form from the complaint on which the plaintiff obtained the default, the default has no force and effect, and judgment cannot be entered on it. Cole v Roebling Constr. Co. (1909) 156 C 443, 105 P 255; Engebretson & Co. v Harrison (1981) 125 CA3d 436, 178 CR 77; Leo v Dunlap (1968) 260 CA2d 24, 66 CR 888. The amended complaint is said to open the default, because the defendant must be served with the amended complaint and has the right to respond to it. It is immaterial whether the amendment is accomplished by filing an amended complaint or an amendment to the complaint. Ford v Superior Court (1973) 34 CA3d 338, 109 CR 844.

Examples of amendments of substance, as opposed to those of form, include amendments that:

- Seek damages when the complaint contained only an open-ended prayer for damages (Engebretson & Co. v Harrison, supra (prayer sought damages "in excess of $5000"; plaintiff mistakenly believed that CCP §425.11 separate statement of damages was required and served statement concurrently with filing request for default; service of separate statement precluded simultaneous entry of default (see also §38.18));
- Seek substantially higher damages (Leo v Dunlap, supra); and
- Add a cause of action based on a different legal theory (Ford v Superior Court, supra).

Entry of default is not affected by a later amendment when the change affects only matters of form even though the defendant is not served with a copy of the amendment. Rardin Logging Co. v Bullok (1953) 120 CA2d 67, 260 P2d 81 (in action for conspiracy to destroy plaintiff's business, amendment stating facts having evidentiary value in proof of conspiracy was amendment of form only).

III. DEFAULT JUDGMENTS

§38.41 A. Reasons to Seek Default Judgment

Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.110, a party that obtains an entry of default does not have the option to forego pursuing the default judgment, assuming the defaulting party remains in default, nor may the party wait indefinitely to obtain a default judgment. Once the entry of default is made, the party who obtained it must obtain default judgment against the defaulting party within 45 days after entry of default, unless the court has granted an extension of time.

Failure to obtain entry of judgment against a defaulting party or to request an extension of time to apply for a default judgment may result in an Order to Show Cause (OSC) being issued to state why sanctions should not be imposed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(h). When the court issues an OSC under this rule, responsive papers to the OSC must be filed and served no less than 5 calendar days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(i). See §38.18 and chap 17 for discussion of service of summons.

B. Default Judgment by Clerk (CCP §585(a))

§38.42 1. Proceedings in Which Clerk Is Authorized to Enter Default Judgment

In an action on a contract or judgment for recovery of money or damages only, a plaintiff may apply to the clerk for entry of a default judgment if the defendant was served by means other than publication and the defendant failed to file an answer, demurrer, or motion to strike. CCP §585(a). For examples and further discussion of cases in which the clerk is or is not authorized to enter a default judgment, see §38.43.

In these cases, the clerk (or court, if there is no clerk) must, on the plaintiff's written application and on proof of service of summons, enter the defendant's default and, if the plaintiff requests, "immediately thereafter" enter a default judgment. CCP §585(a).

The clerk's duty under §585(a) is ministerial. The clerk may not take evidence or exercise discretion to determine the amount of damages. Lynch v Bencini (1941) 17 C2d 521, 110 P2d 662; Liberty Loan Corp. v Petersen (1972) 24 CA3d 915, 101 CR 395. If the clerk refuses to enter default and a default judgment on a proper written application and proof of service of the summons, the plaintiff may petition for a writ to compel performance. W.A. Rose Co. v Municipal Court (1959) 176 CA2d 67, 1 CR 49.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.43 2. Examples

Because default judgments under CCP §585(a) are processed entirely by court clerks without any judicial intervention, courts have strictly limited the situations in which they may be used. Following are factors that may affect the clerk's authority to enter a default judgment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.44 a. Demand for Attorney Fees

Although the clerk has no authority to set the amount of attorney fees, the clerk may enter judgment on a complaint that demands attorney fees if the contract provides for fees in a fixed amount (see, e.g., Alexander v McDow (1895) 108 C 25, 41 P 24 (clerk could enter default judgment when promissory note called for 10 percent as attorney fees)) or if the court has adopted a schedule of attorney fees. CCP §585(a). See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1800(b) (authorizing court by local rule to adopt schedule to be used in establishing reasonable attorney fees). Thus, if the court has not adopted a fee schedule, or if the plaintiff is unwilling to accept the scheduled amount, the plaintiff must apply to the court to set reasonable fees. See §38.65.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.45 b. Cross-Complaint

The clerk cannot enter a separate default judgment on a cross-complaint. A default judgment on a cross-complaint can be obtained only if a separate judgment may properly be entered and the court determines that a separate judgment will not substantially delay the final disposition of the action between the parties. CCP §585(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.46 c. Unlawful Detainer

The clerk's authority to enter default judgments in unlawful detainer cases is limited to cases in which the plaintiff seeks a default judgment for restitution of the premises only. Any request for a monetary award, including costs, is made by application to the court. CCP §1169. For instructions on completing the Judicial Council form in support of the clerk's default judgment for restitution, see §38.111.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.47 d. Multiple Causes of Action

When a defendant is in default on a complaint that pleads several causes of actions, at least one of which justifies a clerk's judgment under CCP §585(a), the clerk can enter a default judgment on the qualifying cause of action. Norman v Berney (1965) 235 CA2d 424, 45 CR 467 (complaint included causes of action for breach of contract and to foreclose mechanics' liens); Fallon & Co. v United States Overseas Airlines, Inc. (1961) 194 CA2d 546, 15 CR 354 (complaint on account stated and for money lent). As with all clerk's judgments (see §38.42), entry of default judgment in a case with multiple causes of action is subject to strict rules.

A clerk's judgment is impermissible when an account stated is pleaded only as an alternative theory of recovery and not as a separate cause of action. Brown v Superior Court (1966) 242 CA2d 519, 525, 51 CR 633; Liberty Loan Corp. v Petersen (1972) 24 CA3d 915, 101 CR 395.

§38.48 e. Defendants' Several Liability

Code of Civil Procedure §579 provides: "In an action against several defendants, the Court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper." Because §579 leaves the determination to the discretion of the court, the clerk has no authority to enter the judgment. Lynch v Bencini (1941) 17 C2d 521, 110 P2d 662; Kooper v King (1961) 195 CA2d 621, 15 CR 848 (court judgment required against defaulting defendant when two defendants sued on contract). The court's exercise of discretion is necessary to determine if defenses raised by an answering defendant affect the plaintiff's right to recover at all, e.g., if the answering defendant alleges that the plaintiff is an unlicensed contractor.

A clerk's default judgment under CCP §585(a) is proper when all the defendants are in default, and they are jointly or jointly and severally liable on a contract. CC §1659; Diamond Nat'l Corp. v Golden Empire Builders, Inc. (1963) 213 CA2d 283, 28 CR 616. However, when the pleadings raise any question over whether defendants' liability may be exclusively several, the plaintiff will have to obtain a default judgment by court.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.49 3. Clerk's Duty to Enter Default Judgment

If the case falls within §585(a) and all requirements are met, the clerk must enter the default judgment. Fallon & Co. v United States Overseas Airlines, Inc. (1961) 194 CA2d 546, 15 CR 354.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.50 a. Remedies if Clerk Fails to Enter Default Judgment

The plaintiff may compel performance of the clerk's ministerial duty by prohibition or mandamus (W.A. Rose Co. v Municipal Court (1959) 176 CA2d 67, 1 CR 49), and the defendant acquires no rights if the clerk refuses to perform (W.H. Marston Co. v Kochritz (1926) 80 CA 352, 251 P 959).

When the clerk erroneously fails or refuses to enter a default (as opposed to a default judgment), and the defendant thereafter files an answer or other permitted pleading, the plaintiff's remedy is to move to strike the defendant's response. If the rules are adhered to strictly, the defendant's response should be stricken and the defendant would have to seek relief under CCP §473. See generally §§38.75-38.108. Alternatively, the plaintiff could file a petition for writ of mandate to compel entry of default. See, e.g., W.A. Rose Co. v Municipal Court, supra (mandate proper to compel trial court to enter default).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.51 b. Judgment Void if Clerk Lacks Authority

If the court clerk enters a default judgment under CCP §585(a) without authority to do so, the judgment is void and may be set aside at any time. Brown v Superior Court (1966) 242 CA2d 519, 51 CR 633. The court has a duty to set aside the judgment on its own motion. Lewis v LeBaron (1967) 254 CA2d 270, 61 CR 903. See §38.95.

4. Procedure: How to Obtain Default Judgment by Clerk

§38.52 a. Request for Entry of Judgment Form

Application for clerk's entry of judgment under CCP §585(a) must be made on the same form that is used to request entry of default (see §38.35), designated Request for Entry of Default (Application to Enter Default) (Judicial Council Form CIV-100), reproduced with commentary in §38.111. The form includes a venue declaration (see §38.36), a mailing declaration (see §38.37), a memorandum of costs (see §38.53), and a declaration of nonmilitary status (see §38.54).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.53 (1) Memorandum of Costs

A party who is claiming costs must request costs on the Request for Entry of Default form when judgment is sought. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(a)(2). See form in §38.111. Although completion of the form is not required until a default judgment is requested, some court clerks require that the memorandum be completed before they will enter a default. Counsel should consult the court clerk for local practices. Recoverable costs include filing and motion fees, service of process fees, fees for service by publication, attachment fees and notary fees. CCP §1033.5. For further discussion of allowable pretrial costs, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§27.67-27.74 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.54 (2) Declaration of Nonmilitary Status

A default judgment cannot be obtained against a defendant who is in military service, as defined by the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act of 2003 (50 USC App §§501-596), unless certain requirements are met. See §38.11. A default judgment rendered without compliance with this act is voidable by defendant on a showing of prejudice within 90 days after leaving the service. People v Vogel (1956) 46 C2d 798, 299 P2d 850. Anyone with personal knowledge, including the plaintiff or the plaintiff's attorney, may sign the declaration of nonmilitary status. Occasionally, delays occur between execution of the declaration and filing the request for default judgment, e.g., when the declaration is obtained from a process server.

NOTE: The declaration of nonmilitary status need not be filed before entry of default, but only before entry of judgment. Each court has its own policy on how recently the declaration must be filed before the date of entry of default judgment, and counsel should consult with the court clerk to ascertain local policy. In practice, the declaration is usually not filed when entry of default is requested unless the plaintiff's attorney is (a) reasonably certain that default judgment will be entered within the time in which the declaration is considered current by the court in which the action is pending, or (b) seeking a clerk's default judgment under CCP §585(a), and requests in the Judicial Council form that the clerk enter judgment immediately after entering the default (see form and Comment in §38.111). Some court clerks, however, may refuse to enter the default unless the declaration is executed and submitted with the request, and the attorney should consult the court clerk for local practices.

For further discussion of compliance with and waiver of the requirements in the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act of 2003 (50 USC App §§501-596). For the prerequisites to a default judgment, see Debt Collection Practice in California §7.7 (2d ed Cal CEB 1999).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.55 b. Papers Accompanying Form

Other papers required for a clerk's default judgment under CCP §585(a) are:

- The original written contract (see §38.56);
- A request for dismissal of unserved defendants (required in some courts, see §38.57); and
- Additional papers that local rules may require (see §38.58).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.56 (1) Written Contract

If the action in which entry of default is requested is on a written obligation to pay money, the clerk must, at the time of entry of judgment, note across the face of the original contract the fact of rendition of judgment, the date of the judgment, and the title of the court and cause. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1806. The apparent purpose of this rule is to note the merger of the written instrument into the judgment and prevent a second suit on the same instrument. Bill Benson Motors, Inc. v Macmorris Sales Corp. (1965) 238 CA2d Supp 937, 48 CR 123.

If the original written contract has been lost or destroyed, the clerk can decline to process a default judgment, and the plaintiff may proceed with a default judgment from the court. Alternatively, an ex parte order may be obtained from the court instructing the clerk to proceed with a clerk's default judgment based on a copy of the written obligation. See chap 13 for discussion of ex parte motions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.57 (2) Request for Dismissal of Unserved Defendants

Before entry of a clerk's default judgment under CCP §585(a), many courts require a dismissal of all named defendants who have not been served. Defendants should be dismissed without prejudice, so they can be sued again on the same cause of action if necessary.

The California Judicial Council has adopted a printed form for mandatory use when requesting a dismissal of unserved defendants called Request for Dismissal (Judicial Council Form CIV-110), available from the court clerk. It is reproduced in §39.130.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.58 (3) Additional Papers

Many counties have local rules and unwritten local policies that require additional documentation before a clerk's default judgment will be issued. Counsel should consult local rules and contact the clerk's office in the court where the action is pending to learn what documentation is required in that court before the clerk will enter a default judgment. The following items are frequently required:

- Declaration re open book account. Because a large percentage of default judgments by the clerk arise from collection actions, and because the commonly used collection complaint contains generalized allegations in the form of common counts, courts are concerned with the potential for abuse afforded by those pleadings. For example, by pleading common counts, plaintiffs may seek to evade the venue provisions of CC §§1812.10 and 2984.4 or to circumvent the rule that the clerk cannot enter a deficiency judgment under CCP §585(a) after the plaintiff has resorted to the collateral (Liberty Loan Corp. v Petersen (1972) 24 CA3d 915, 101 CR 395), by seizing the collateral and suing for the deficiency. When there is any indication that the underlying debt was secured, the clerk will not enter a default judgment unless there is a verified allegation in the complaint that the plaintiff has not resorted to the security. Otherwise, the plaintiff will have to obtain the default judgment by court.

NOTE: To ensure that the generalized allegations of common counts used in a collection action have not been used as a subterfuge for an action for breach of a written contract, some courts require that a declaration re open book account be filed stating that there are no written agreements between the parties. The declaration is typically executed by an employee of the plaintiff. A form that includes the necessary statements for a declaration re open book account is set forth in §38.112.

- Statements and invoices. Some courts require additional documentation to support a default judgment in an action on an open book account, i.e., copies of invoices and a complete statement of the account, including an interest calculation. From these the clerk can determine whether the complaint has included any nonrecoverable items, e.g., late charges (Garrett v Coast & S. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1973) 9 C3d 731, 108 CR 845) and unearned finance charges (58 Ops Cal Atty Gen 166 (1975); Mann v Earls (1964) 226 CA2d 155, 37 CR 877). A form declaration that combines the requirements of a declaration re open book account and sets forth necessary bookkeeping documents required by some clerks can be found in §38.112.

5. Timing: When to Request Entry of Clerk's Judgment

§38.59 a. Generally When Request for Entry of Default Made

Generally, the application for entry of a clerk's default judgment is made at the same time as the request for entry of default, although it need not be done simultaneously. For instance, in a case involving multiple defendants, the plaintiff may request entry of the defendants' defaults as they occur and wait until all defendants are served to request entry of judgment.

PRACTICE TIP: Alternatively, plaintiff's counsel may not be able to secure the original of a written contract to file with the clerk (see §38.56) by the time the defendant's time to plead has expired. In these situations, counsel should have default entered before the request for the entry of a clerk's default judgment if he or she wishes to cut off the defendant's opportunity to respond.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.60 b. 45-Day Time Limit

Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.110, once the entry of default is made, the party who obtained it must obtain default judgment against the defaulting party within 45 days after entry of default, unless the court has granted an extension of time. Failure to obtain entry of judgment against a defaulting party or to request an extension of time to apply for a default judgment may result in an Order to Show Cause (OSC) being issued to state why sanctions shall not be imposed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(h). When the court issues an OSC under this rule, responsive papers to the OSC must be filed and served no less than 5 calendar days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(i).

C. Default Judgment by Court

§38.61 1. Proceedings in Which Judgment Must Be by Court, Not Clerk

A court may enter a default judgment in any case, including a case in which a clerk's judgment is available. Only the court may enter a default judgment, however, in the following three basic situations (CCP §585(b), (c)):

- An action arising on a contract or a judgment when the damages are not fixed or determinable from the contract;
- Cases not arising on a contract or judgment; and
- All actions in which the defendant has been served by publication.

NOTE: Entry of default judgment by the court is also required if the plaintiff is seeking reasonable attorney fees when (1) the court has not adopted a fee schedule or (2) the plaintiff is seeking more than the scheduled fee. CCP §585(a). See §38.65.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Procedure: How to Obtain Default Judgment by Court

§38.62 a. Required Papers

The basic papers required to set a matter for a court judgment are the same as those required to obtain a clerk's default judgment. To request a court judgment, the plaintiff must use the same multipurpose Request for Entry of Default (Application to Enter Default) (Judicial Council Form CIV-100, reproduced in §38.111) that is used to request entry of default (see §§38.35-38.38) or a clerk's judgment (see §§38.52-38.58). Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1800, a plaintiff seeking a default judgment on declarations must, except in unlawful detainer cases, include the following with the documents filed:

- A brief summary of the case identifying the parties and the nature of the plaintiff's claim;
- Declarations or other admissible evidence in support of the requested judgment;
- Any necessary interest computations;
- A memorandum of costs (Request for Entry of Default (Application to Enter Default) (Judicial Council Form CIV-100), question 7) (see §§38.53, 38.111);
- A declaration of nonmilitary status for each defendant against whom judgment is sought (Request for Entry of Default (Application to Enter Default) (Judicial Council Form CIV-100), question 8) (see §§38.54, 38.111);
- A proposed form of judgment;
- A dismissal of all parties against whom judgment is not sought or an application for separate judgment under CCP §579;
- Any necessary exhibits; and
- A request for attorney fees, if agreed on between the parties or allowed by statute (see §38.65).

If suit is on a written contract, the original contract should be submitted. See §38.56.

As is the case with a clerk's default judgment, the attorney should consult the clerk of the court to determine whether other papers are required under local practice. See §38.58.

© The Regents of the University of California

b. Additional Requirements

§38.63 (1) If Summons Was Served by Publication

If the summons was served by publication, the plaintiff must show proof of the dates on which the summons was published. CCP §585(c). For service by publication, see §17.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.64 (2) Actions Affecting Real Property

In a hearing for entry of default judgment following service by publication in a suit involving title to or possession of real property, the plaintiff must establish more than mere occupancy of the property unless that occupancy was of sufficient character to confer title by prescription. In an action involving only the possession of real property, the plaintiff must show by proper allegations in a verified complaint that no other party claims title (either by prescription, accession, transfer, will, or succession) but rather only possession. The court may render default judgment on proof of occupancy by the plaintiff and ouster by the defendant. When the plaintiff's claim is based on a "paper title" the court must require evidence of the plaintiff's equitable right to judgment. CCP §585(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.65 (3) Attorney Fees Under CCP §585(a)

In an action that is otherwise amenable to a clerk's judgment, but in which the plaintiff seeks reasonable attorney fees (e.g., under a contract provision providing for a fee award) and either (1) the court has not adopted a fee schedule or (2) the plaintiff seeks fees in excess of the scheduled fee, the plaintiff must file a written request at the time the entry of default is requested to have the court set reasonable fees. CCP §585(a). Once the default is entered, the court must hear the plaintiff's application for determination of attorney fees and must render judgment for the fees and the other relief demanded in the complaint, less any credits acknowledged. CCP §585(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.66 3. Timing: When to Request Default Judgment by Court

The party who obtained a default must obtain default judgment against the defaulting party within 45 days after entry of default, unless the court has granted an extension of time. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110. Failure to obtain entry of judgment against a defaulting party or to request an extension of time to apply for a default judgment may result in an Order to Show Cause (OSC) being issued to state why sanctions shall not be imposed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(h). When the court issues an OSC under this rule, responsive papers to the OSC must be filed and served no less than 5 calendar days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(i).

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Hearing Required

§38.67 a. Calendaring the Hearing

Counsel must usually contact the court clerk to calendar a hearing on default judgment, often referred to as a "prove-up" hearing. In some courts, the court clerk sets the matter for a prove-up hearing on receipt of the application and any supporting documents.

When a court default judgment is sought on affidavits or declarations, there usually is no formal hearing; the matter is determined by a judge or commissioner in chambers without the presence of counsel. If the court finds that the documents are defective or insufficient, counsel is usually notified of the nature of the deficiencies and given an opportunity to cure them.

At the hearing on a default judgment (CCP §585(b)-(c)):

> the court shall hear the evidence offered by the plaintiff, and shall render judgment in his or her favor for such sum (not exceeding the amount stated in the complaint, in the statement required by [CCP §]425.11, or in the statement provided for by [CCP §]425.115) as appears by such evidence to be just.

The plaintiff must introduce sufficient evidence to support the claims for relief. CCP §585(b). The court may not disregard any uncontested credible evidence that is presented by affidavit, declaration, or oral testimony. When such evidence is offered, the court must enter judgment in the plaintiff's favor. Morehouse v Wanzo (1968) 266 CA2d 846, 853, 72 CR 607; Csordas v United Slate Tile & Composition Roofers (1960) 177 CA2d 184, 2 CR 133. The default is deemed an admission by the defendant of the material allegations of the complaint, which can replace the need for the plaintiff to introduce evidence in support of the admitted allegations. City of Los Angeles v Los Angeles Farming & Milling Co. (1907) 150 C 647, 89 P 615; Bristol Convalescent Hosp. v Stone (1968) 258 CA2d 848, 66 CR 404.

NOTE: A complaint on which a default judgment is sought must state a cause of action against the defendant. If it does not, no amount of testimony can cure the defect. Taliaferro v Davis (1963) 216 CA2d 398, 31 CR 164. But see Trans-Pacific Trading Co. v Patsy Frock & Romper Co. (1922) 189 C 509, 209 P 357, quoted with approval in Thorson v Western Dev. Corp. (1967) 251 CA2d 206, 59 CR 299 (when court has jurisdiction over parties and subject matter, judgment not void regardless of whether complaint states cause of action, as long as complaint apprises defendant of nature of plaintiff's demand).

In a matter involving a long account, the court may send the matter out for a reference. The court may also order that any question of fact, e.g., the amount of damages, be determined by a jury, even if a reference has been ordered. CCP §585(b). However, the findings of the jury or the referee are not binding on the court (Cyrus v Haveson (1976) 65 CA3d 306, 318, 135 CR 246); the court must render the judgment (CCP §585).

§38.70 (2) Burden of Proof

The plaintiff in a default proceeding need establish merely a prima facie case to show that he or she is entitled to an award of damages. That is because the defaulting party generally admits the material allegations of the complaint by the act of default, and, when the complaint states a cause of action, and the plaintiff introduces supporting evidence, the court must render judgment in the amount stated or in an amount that appears to be just. Johnson v Stanhiser (1999) 72 CA4th 357, 85 CR2d 82 (trial court erred in finding that plaintiff should receive only costs and fees, because plaintiff established prima facie case that he was damaged by defendant's misrepresentations, deceit, and conversion of plaintiff's assets to his own use).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.71 (3) Hearsay Testimony

The plaintiff may use hearsay testimony to support the allegations of the complaint to obtain a default judgment when the testimony is of a witness present in court. See, e.g., City Bank v Ramage (1968) 266 CA2d 570, 584, 72 CR 273. If the testimony is offered in a declaration or affidavit, the testimony must be competent evidence, because the statute requires that the facts stated in the declaration be within the witness's personal knowledge. The witness must affirmatively establish that he or she could competently testify to the facts set forth if sworn as a witness. CCP §585(d). But see Flood v Simpson (1975) 45 CA3d 644, 119 CR 675 (court permitted use of declaration containing hearsay statements to support default judgment).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.72 (4) Affidavits or Declarations

The court may permit the plaintiff to present evidence by affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury (CCP §2015.5) in lieu of personal testimony. CCP §585(d). The affidavit or declaration must be based on the personal knowledge of the witness and must set forth the facts with particularity. The affidavit or declaration must also affirmatively show the declarant's competency to make the statements set forth. CCP §585(d).

NOTE: Proceeding by affidavit or declaration is a common practice. Some courts even require it. However, the court always has the discretion to require live testimony and will usually exercise its discretion when the case involves a large personal injury or wrongful death claim or when the plaintiff fails to present sufficient evidence by affidavit or declaration.

When counsel is uncertain whether the court will accept affidavits or declarations in lieu of oral testimony, the plaintiff may seek, before the hearing, an order permitting the use of affidavits or declarations. This procedure enables counsel to present the case as scheduled and not have to seek a continuance at the time of the hearing. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1800(a) for documents that the plaintiff must file when seeking default judgment on declarations.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.73 (5) If Evidence Is Insufficient

If the plaintiff fails to present sufficient evidence to support the claim, the court may refuse to enter judgment, even though default has been entered. Taliaferro v Hoogs (1963) 219 CA2d 559, 33 CR 415. For example, a default judgment may be denied in a contract action when the complaint demands an amount different from that specified in the contract or when the contract does not specify the amount of liquidated damages. Lynch v Bencini (1941) 17 C2d 521, 110 P2d 662.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.74 D. Entry of Default Judgment

In all courts, when the complaint has not been answered by any defendant, the summons and complaint, proof of service, the request to enter default—together with a memorandum indorsed on it and showing entry of default (see bottom of page 1 of Request for Entry of Default (Application to Enter Default) (Judicial Council Form CIV-100) in §38.111)—and a copy of the judgment are included within the judgment roll. CCP §670(a). If service was by publication, the judgment roll also includes the affidavit for publication and the order directing publication.

The defaulting defendant is not entitled to a statement of decision under CCP §632 because (1) there has been no trial as required by that section and (2) there are no factual issues in controversy, i.e., on the entry of default, the allegations of the complaint are deemed admitted.

IV. RELIEF FROM DEFAULT OR DEFAULT JUDGMENT

A. Introduction

§38.75 1. Overview of Available Relief

Default due to mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect. Most requests for relief from entry of default or default judgment are made when the defendant has not filed a responsive pleading within the time permitted, despite having received actual notice of the action. Requests for relief in this situation usually rely on a showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect by the defendant or the defendant's attorney, or inexcusable neglect by the defendant's attorney, and must be made within a reasonable time, not exceeding 6 months from the entry of the default or the default judgment. CCP §473(b). See §§38.79-38.88.

Default due to extrinsic fraud or mistake. If the request for relief is not made within 6 months after entry of default, the defendant will have to establish that the failure to respond is because of extrinsic fraud or mistake. This relief may be sought at any time, but the party must act with due diligence. The court's authority to grant this relief arises from its equitable powers. For discussion, see §§38.89-38.94.

Void default judgment. In addition to any other grounds for relief, the defendant may seek relief at any time if the original default judgment was void. CCP §473(d). See §§38.95-38.96.

Default due to lack of actual notice. If defendant is seeking relief from a default that was entered after defendant failed to appear because he or she did not receive actual notice of the action in time to defend—either because personal service was defective or because service was accomplished by means other than personal service, e.g., by substituted service or publication—relief must be sought within 2 years after the judgment or 180 days after service of notice of the judgment, whichever is earlier. CCP §473.5. For discussion, see §§38.97-38.100.

Excessive damages in default judgment due to judicial error. If the judge erroneously awarded default damages that are "excessive as a matter of law," a motion under CCP §473 is not the proper means of seeking relief; rather, the defendant should move for a new trial, i.e., "a new judgment." Don v Cruz (1982) 131 CA3d 695, 704, 182 CR 581 (defendant's motion treated as motion for new trial although not framed as such). See also Misic v Segars (1995) 37 CA4th 1149, 1154, 44 CR2d 100.

If court has assumed jurisdiction of attorney's practice. If a judgment is taken against a party represented by an attorney after the court has assumed jurisdiction over that attorney's practice under Bus & P C §§6180 and 6190, relief from the judgment may be sought under CCP §473.1. For discussion of this ground for relief, see §38.101.

Mandatory or discretionary relief. Except for a motion based on mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect by the moving party's attorney, all motions for relief from default are addressed to the discretion of the court. CCP §473(b). If the attorney files an affidavit of fault, the court must grant the application for relief "unless the court finds that the default or dismissal was not in fact caused by the attorney's mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect." CCP §473(b). See §38.83.

NOTE: Discretionary relief from attorney or client mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect may also be granted for events other than default, such as "judgment, dismissal, order or other proceeding." CCP §473(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.76 2. Who Seeks Relief?

In most cases, the party moving for relief under CCP §473(b) is the defendant. However, the plaintiff may also seek relief, e.g., from a dismissal based on discovery violations. See Aldrich v San Fernando Valley Lumber Co. (1985) 170 CA3d 725, 216 CR 300. Elston v City of Turlock (1985) 38 C3d 227, 211 CR 416.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.77 3. Compare—Independent Action in Equity

An independent action in equity may be brought to set aside the default or default judgment; the grounds for this action are the same grounds that form the basis of a motion to set aside a default or default judgment. Engebretson & Co. v Harrison (1981) 125 CA3d 436, 178 CR 77. An independent action in equity is seldom used, however, because filing a motion is quicker and less costly.

PRACTICE TIP: Unlike an equitable motion, filing an independent action also permits a party to (1) conduct discovery proceedings and (2) present its case by oral testimony instead of declarations. It is likely that the court will be able to devote more attention to the matter in a trial setting than in a law and motion hearing.

The procedures for filing an independent action in equity are similar to those for filing any other action. The time limits for commencing the action are the same as for the filing of a motion addressed to the court's equity powers. The defendant should attach a proposed answer or other responsive paper to the complaint and incorporate it by reference. See CCP §473; Shields v Siegel (1966) 246 CA2d 334, 342, 54 CR 577. Because the action seeks equitable relief, there is no right to a jury trial. Holt v Parmer (1951) 106 CA2d 329, 235 P2d 43.

§38.78 4. Judicial Policy in Favor of Deciding Case on Merits

A long-standing judicial preference in favor of determining a matter on its merits guides the court in deciding a motion for relief from entry of default or default judgment. Rappleyea v Campbell (1994) 8 C4th 975, 980, 35 CR2d 669. Courts look with disfavor on a party who, regardless of the merits, seeks to capitalize on the adversary's mistake, surprise, inadvertence, or neglect. Weitz v Yankosky (1966) 63 C2d 849, 48 CR 620.

Appellate courts are more disposed to affirm an order that compels a trial on the merits than one that permits a default judgment to stand—particularly when it appears that a meritorious defense can be made. Weitz v Yankosky, supra; Slusher v Durrer (1977) 69 CA3d 747, 138 CR 265. See also Ford v Herndon (1976) 62 CA3d 492, 133 CR 111. On appellate review, see §38.108.

This judicial policy applies regardless of whether relief is sought by motion under CCP §473(b) (Elston v City of Turlock (1985) 38 C3d 227, 211 CR 416), by equitable motion in the trial court (Weitz v Yankosky, supra), or by an independent action in equity to set aside a default judgment (Shields v Siegel (1966) 246 CA2d 334, 54 CR 577).

However, some courts have shown an willingness to sustain the entry of defaults and default judgments; counsel for defendants can not expect that such motions will routinely be granted. See, e.g., Transit Ads, Inc. v Tanner Motor Livery, Ltd. (1969) 270 CA2d 275, 281, 75 CR 848 (moving party must make substantial showing, and "unusual pressure of business" is not by itself sufficient). See also Davis v Thayer (1980) 113 CA3d 892, 170 CR 328; Goodhue v Tureaud (1979) 100 CA3d 205, 160 CR 677; Uva v Evans (1978) 83 CA3d 356, 147 CR 795. But see Hamm v Elkin (1987) 196 CA3d 1343, 242 CR 545 (court questioned analysis in Uva and set aside default judgment on similar facts).

B. Relief in Cases of Mistake, Inadvertence, Surprise, or Neglect

§38.79 1. Discretionary Relief Under CCP §473(b)

If the defendant was served in a manner that gives the defendant actual notice of the litigation, the court may relieve a party or the party's attorney from a "judgment, dismissal, order or proceeding taken against him or her" based on "his or her mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." CCP §473(b). For the time limits to seek relief on this basis, see §§38.85-38.88.

A motion for relief from entry of default or default judgment under CCP §473(b) must be accompanied by a copy of the answer or other pleading proposed to be filed. Carmel, Ltd. v Tavoussi (2009) 175 CA4th 393, 401, 95 CR3d 694 (finding that movants "substantially complied" with requirement by proffering answer at motion hearing).

A motion seeking relief under CCP §473(b) is addressed to the court's discretion, unless the attorney files an affidavit of fault. On mandatory relief in cases of attorney affidavit of fault, see §38.83. Because of the strong judicial preference for deciding matters on the merits, the court's discretion under §473(b) is extremely broad, and the court's ruling will be reversed on appeal only on a clear showing of abuse of discretion. Shamblin v Brattain (1988) 44 C3d 474, 243 CR 902; Uriarte v United States Pipe & Foundry Co. (1996) 51 CA4th 780, 59 CR2d 332.

NOTE: The same rule applies when the motion is addressed to the court's equity powers, although to the extent the court's power to grant relief under its equity powers is different from its power under §473, its power is narrower. Weitz v Yankosky (1966) 63 C2d 849, 48 CR 620.

A defendant may be entitled to discretionary relief under CCP §473(b) for an attorney's excusable neglect regardless of whether his or her attorney submits the "affidavit of fault" required for mandatory relief. See State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v Pietak (2001) 90 CA4th 600, 610, 109 CR2d 256 (defendant entitled to discretionary relief from dismissal based on attorney's excusable misinterpretation of interpleader statute even though mandatory relief not proper); see §38.83. A motion under CCP §473 that seeks discretionary relief but is accompanied by an attorney's declaration suggesting attorney fault does not require the trial court to grant relief under §473's mandatory provisions. Luri v Greenwald (2003) 107 CA4th 1119, 1124, 132 CR2d 680.

On motions for discretionary relief under CCP §473 for summary judgment, see §§36.174, 36.211.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.80 a. Mistake

Relief from default may be granted when the default occurs because of a reasonable mistake of fact or law of a party or the party's attorney. City of Ontario v Superior Court (1970) 2 C3d 335, 85 CR 149; Salazar v Steelman (1937) 22 CA2d 402, 71 P2d 79. However, mere ignorance of the law is no excuse. City of Ontario v Superior Court, supra. A self-represented plaintiff cannot assert that choosing to act as his or her own attorney is a mistake of law. Burnete v La Casa Dana Apartments (2007) 148 CA4th 1262, 1267, 56 CR3d 437. An honest mistake of law is a valid ground for relief when the legal problem posed "is complex and debatable." McCormick v Board of Supervisors (1988) 198 CA3d 352, 360, 243 CR 617; see also 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Attack on Judgment in Trial Court §§152-155 (5th ed 2008). A paralegal's mistake that results in default is attributable to the attorney responsible for supervising the paralegal. Hu v Fang (2002) 104 CA4th 61, 63, 127 CR2d 756.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.81 b. Excusable Neglect

"Excusable neglect" means neglect that might have been committed by a reasonably prudent person in the same or similar circumstances and that was the actual cause of the default. Transit Ads, Inc. v Tanner Motor Livery, Ltd. (1969) 270 CA2d 275, 75 CR 848. The court will look to see whether the default could have been avoided through the exercise of reasonable care. Elms v Elms (1946) 72 CA2d 508, 164 P2d 936. The court may grant relief from a default judgment that results from both attorney mistake or neglect and the client's unintentional conduct. Benedict v Danner Press (2001) 87 CA4th 923, 927, 104 CR2d 896.

The moving party must be sure that the neglect shown in the declaration is the actual cause of the default. Transit Ads, Inc. v Tanner Motor Livery, Ltd., supra. For example, the declarations may show excusable neglect by the defendant in relying on his insurer but fail to show that the insurer's failure to respond was excusable. See, e.g., Scognamillo v Herrick (2003) 106 CA4th 1139, 131 CR2d 393.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.82 c. Examples

Examples of excusable neglect include:

- Illness or disability of the defendant or the defendant's attorney (Stone v McWilliams (1919) 43 CA 490, 185 P 478);
- Fraud or unfair conduct of the plaintiff or the plaintiff's attorney (Starkweather v Minarets Mining Co. (1935) 5 CA2d 501, 43 P2d 321);
- Accident or inadvertence (Bernards v Grey (1950) 97 CA2d 679, 218 P2d 597);
- Reasonable reliance on a third party to defend (Fayusi v Permatex, Inc. (2008) 167 CA4th 681, 697, 84 CR3d 351);
- Reliance on opposing counsel to warn before taking default (Robinson v Varela (1977) 67 CA3d 611, 136 CR 783);
- An attorney's abandonment of the client (Seacall Dev., Ltd. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1999) 73 CA4th 201, 86 CR2d 229); and
- Death in defendant's family (Shapiro v Clark (2008) 164 CA4th 1128, 1137, 80 CR3d 398).

In contrast, the following has been found not to be excusable:

- When an attorney-defendant's excuse was that his answer was stolen from his mailbox even though (1) he was fully aware of the complaint against him and (2) after he did not receive a conformed copy from the court, he failed to check to see if an answer had in fact been filed (Lockyer v Brar (2005) 134 CA4th 659, 36 CR3d 272).
- Attorney's unsupported, subjective belief that she had been served when court gave her courtesy copy of complaint and thus still had time to respond to complaint (Hearn v Howard (2009) 177 CA4th 1193, 1206, 99 CR3d 642).

See 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Attack on Judgment in Trial Court §§158-172 (5th ed 2008) for additional examples of excusable and inexcusable neglect.

2. Mandatory Relief Under CCP §473(b)

§38.83 a. Attorney Affidavit of Fault Required

Under CCP §473(b), the court must grant relief from default or a default judgment for "attorney neglect," even inexcusable neglect, when an application for relief:

- Is made within 6 months after entry of judgment;
- Is in proper form; and
- Is accompanied by "an attorney's sworn affidavit attesting to his or her mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect."

This relief is often referred to as "mandatory" because the court must grant relief unless it finds that the attorney was not actually the cause of the neglect, e.g., when the attorney is merely covering up for the client. See Jerry's Shell v Equilon Enters., LLC (2005) 134 CA4th 1058, 36 CR3d 637; Rogalski v Nabers Cadillac (1992) 11 CA4th 816, 14 CR2d 286. See also Standard Microsystems Corp. v Winbond Elec. Corp. (2009) 179 CA4th 868, 896, 102 CR3d 140 (error to deny motion for relief from default judgment, because facts establishing attorney fault entitled defendant to mandatory relief under CCP §473(b)); Carmel, Ltd. v Tavoussi (2009) 175 CA4th 393, 399, 95 CR3d 694 (no error to grant mandatory relief from default even though attorney expressly denied fault; facts in attorney's declaration clearly demonstrated his fault).

If relief is granted based on the attorney's affidavit of fault, the court must order the attorney to pay reasonable compensatory legal fees and costs to the opposing counsel or parties. CCP §473(c).

On motions for relief under CCP §473 for summary judgment, see §§36.174, 36.211.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.84 b. Relief From Dismissal

Mandatory relief under CCP §473(b) applies to a dismissal only when it occurs under circumstances similar to a default. See Yeap v Leake (1997) 60 CA4th 591, 70 CR2d 680 (counsel's failure to calendar arbitration hearing triggered mandatory relief under CCP §473(b) because resulting zero award was analogous to default).

Thus, mandatory relief does not apply to a discretionary dismissal based on a plaintiff's failure to timely file an amended complaint, when dismissal is entered after a hearing in which the court evaluates the reasons for failure to meet the deadline. Such a dismissal is not the "procedural equivalent" of a default, but is a motion lost on the merits after an opposition is filed. Leader v Health Indus. of Am., Inc. (2001) 89 CA4th 603, 618, 107 CR2d 489. Similarly, mandatory relief from a dismissal that was a terminating sanction resulting from counsel's intentional strategy not to comply with discovery requests was impermissible in Jerry's Shell v Equilon Enters., LLC (2005) 134 CA4th 1058, 36 CR3d 637; it was also impermissible after a trial conducted in defendants' absence that resulted in amended judgment but was not a default in Vandermoon v Sanwong (2006) 142 CA4th 315, 47 CR3d 772.

3. Timing: When to Request Relief Under CCP §473(b)

§38.85 a. 6-Month Time Limit

Under CCP §473(b), a motion for relief from the entry of default or default judgment must be made "within a reasonable time, in no case exceeding six months," after entry of the default or default judgment. See Manson, Iver & York v Black (2009) 176 CA4th 36, 42, 97 CR3d 522 (trial court lacked jurisdiction to grant motion for relief from entry of default, and default judgment, filed more than 9 years after entry of default, based on mistake, surprise, and excusable neglect).

The period begins to run when the clerk enters the default (Koski v U-Haul Co. (1963) 212 CA2d 640, 28 CR 398), not from the time the judgment is entered (Rutan v Summit Sports, Inc. (1985) 173 CA3d 965, 219 CR 381), unless the defendant wants relief from merely the default judgment, not entry of default. The motion is deemed to be made when the notice of motion is filed and served. CCP §1005.5; First Small Bus. Inv. Co. v Sistim, Inc. (1970) 12 CA3d 645, 90 CR 798.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.86 b. Time Limit Computation

When relief is sought under CCP §473 outside the default judgment context, courts have held that the time period does not start on the date the deadline was missed; rather, it runs from either of the following dates: (1) when a procedural time limit is raised as an objection by an adversary or (2) when a procedural time limit is in some manner enforced by the trial court. Lee v Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2001) 88 CA4th 1187, 1196, 106 CR2d 726, citing Save Our Forest & Ranchlands v County of San Diego (1996) 50 CA4th 1757, 1700, 58 CR2d 708 (relief sought from order denying request for fees and costs). The Second District Court of Appeal in Wells Fargo concluded that, while courts have looked to both dates, the better rule is that relief under §473 begins on the date that the trial court enters an order enforcing a procedural time limit because using the alternative date when an objection is made by an adversary would be confusing and difficult to enforce. Lee v Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., supra.

If the action seeks a determination of ownership or right to possession of real or personal property, a shorter time period may apply. In these actions, if the defendant and the defendant's attorney of record are personally served in California with a written notice stating that the judgment or order has been entered and that the defendant's right to relief under CCP §473 expires 90 days after service of notice, the defendant's right to relief under §473 will expire 90 days after service on both the attorney and the defendant. CCP §473(b).

The limitations under §473 apply to an original motion as well as any renewed motion following denial of the original motion. Northridge Fin. Corp. v Hamblin (1975) 48 CA3d 819, 122 CR 109.

If the motion is made after entry of judgment, when the court has assumed jurisdiction over the practice of the party's attorney under Bus & P C §§6180-6190, see §38.101.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.87 c. 6-Month Limitation Is Jurisdictional

The 6-month time limit of CCP §473(b) is jurisdictional; the court has no power to grant relief under §473(b) once the time has lapsed. Manson, Iver & York v Black (2009) 176 CA4th 36, 42, 97 CR3d 522 (no jurisdiction under §473(b) to grant motion for relief filed more than 9 years after entry of default); Lee v An (2008) 168 CA4th 558, 563, 85 CR3d 620 (judgment was void, not voidable); Sporn v Home Depot, Inc. (2005) 126 CA4th 1294, 24 CR3d 780 (no relief under §473(b) because motion was filed more than 6 months after entry of judgment and defendant had been served with complaint on both its designated agent and in-house counsel).

NOTE: Courts have construed "6 months" to mean either 182 days (Davis v Thayer (1980) 113 CA3d 892, 170 CR 328) or 182 days plus 10 days for mailing of notice of default (National Diversified Servs. v Bernstein (1985) 168 CA3d 410, 214 CR 113), not 6 calendar months (e.g., March 20 to September 20).

§38.88 d. Diligence Requirement — Motion Must Be Made Within "Reasonable" Time

In addition to the 6-month maximum time limit, CCP §473(b) requires that the motion be made "within a reasonable time." Whether this requirement has been met is a matter for the trial court's discretion, based on the circumstances of the particular case. Benjamin v Dalmo Mfg. Co. (1948) 31 C2d 523, 190 P2d 593; Smith v Pelton Water Wheel Co. (1907) 151 C 394, 90 P 934. The defendant has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence not only that the default or default judgment was entered as a result of the defendant's "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect" (CCP §473; Luz v Lopes (1960) 55 C2d 54, 10 CR 161 (see §38.79)), but also that the defendant sought relief diligently and that any delay in filing the motion is excusable (Kendall v Allied Investigations, Inc. (1988) 197 CA3d 619, 243 CR 42 (motion denied when there was 5-month, 24-day delay without explanation); Benjamin v Dalmo Mfg. Co., supra (no explanation for 3-month delay)). But see Romer, O'Connor & Co. v Huffman (1959) 171 CA2d 342, 341 P2d 62 (4-month delay excusable when defendant was out of the country and defense counsel promptly contacted plaintiff's attorney); Waite v Southern Pac. Co. (1923) 192 C 467, 221 P 204 (5-month delay owing to mistake of law held excusable when no prejudice to adverse party shown).

C. Equitable Relief in Cases of Extrinsic Fraud or Mistake

§38.89 1. Court's Equitable Authority

The trial court has inherent equitable power to set aside a judgment obtained through fraud or mistake whenever the fraud or mistake is discovered. The burden is on the movant to prove the elements of extrinsic fraud or mistake. See Moghaddam v Bone (2006) 142 CA4th 283, 47 CR3d 602.

A motion for equitable relief from the entry of default or default judgment will be granted only when the moving party shows that a different result is probable in a trial on the merits. Smith v Busniewski (1952) 115 CA2d 124, 251 P2d 697. Parties seeking equitable relief should attach a proposed answer or other responsive paper with the motion, indicating a probability of success on the merits. Shields v Siegel (1966) 246 CA2d 334, 342, 54 CR 577.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.90 2. No Time Limitation

Although the grounds listed in CCP §473(b) for relief from entry of default or default judgment (party or attorney mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect (see §38.75)) are lost if the motion is not made within 6 months after entry of the judgment, no such limitation applies to a request for relief from a judgment obtained through extrinsic fraud or mistake. Weitz v Yankosky (1966) 63 C2d 849, 48 CR 620. See also Sporn v Home Depot, Inc. (2005) 126 CA4th 1294, 24 CR3d 780. The party moving for relief must, however, demonstrate diligence in having the default judgment set aside once it is discovered. Manson, Iver & York v Black (2009) 176 CA4th 36, 49, 97 CR3d 522.

To the extent that the court's equity power to grant relief from default after 6 months differs from its powers under CCP §473(b), the equity powers must be considered narrower, not wider. Weitz, 63 C2d at 857; Jackson v Bank of America (1986) 188 CA3d 375, 233 CR 162. However, the terms extrinsic fraud or mistake have been broadly construed to "encompass almost any set of extrinsic circumstances" that prevent a fair adversarial hearing. Estate of Sanders (1985) 40 C3d 607, 614, 221 CR 432. See also U.S. v Throckmorton (1878) 98 US 61, 65, 25 L Ed 93, which enumerates those circumstances:

> Where the unsuccessful party has been prevented from exhibiting fully his case, by fraud or deception practiced on him by his opponent, as by keeping him away from court, a false promise of a compromise; or where the defendant never had knowledge of the suit, being kept in ignorance by the acts of the plaintiff; or where an attorney fraudulently or without authority assumes to represent a party and connives at his defeat; or where the attorney regularly employed corruptly sells out his client's interest to the other side—these, and similar cases which show that there has never been a real contest in the trial or hearing of the case, are reasons for which a new suit may be sustained to set aside and annul the former judgment or decree, and open the case for a new and fair hearing.

§38.91 3. Same Rules Apply to Limited Civil Cases

The same rules apply to limited civil cases. See chap 6. A court hearing a limited civil matter has equity jurisdiction to vacate a judgment or order obtained through "extrinsic fraud, mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect." CCP §86(b)(3). Unlike CCP §473(b), CCP §86(b)(3) contains no explicit time limits, but case law has established that a motion to set aside a default on the grounds of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect by a party or attorney must be made within 6 months, whereas a motion based on extrinsic fraud or mistake may be made whenever the problem is discovered. Marianos v Tutunjian (1977) 70 CA3d 61, 64, 138 CR 529.

4. Examples

§38.92 a. Extrinsic Fraud Found

Examples of extrinsic fraud include:

- Plaintiff's continued proceeding against defendant, even after realizing he had neither misnamed defendant in complaint nor served the wrong person with complaint (Manson, Iver & York v Black (2009) 176 CA4th 36, 48, 97 CR3d 522);
- Appellant's false offer to compromise claim on estate with children of deceased, which caused them to forgo opportunity to contest her claims (Estate of Beard (1999) 71 CA4th 753, 775, 84 CR2d 276);
- Plaintiff's granting defendant extension of time to plead and then requesting entry of default before extension expired (H&H Inv. Co. v T-J Constr. Co. (1969) 275 CA2d 58, 79 CR 890);
- Defendant's reliance on reasonable belief that defendant's employer would respond to complaint (Desper v King (1967) 251 CA2d 659, 59 CR 657); and
- Wife's reliance on husband's assurance that he would respond to complaint (Higley v Bank of Downey (1968) 260 CA2d 640, 67 CR 365; but see Marriage of Stevenot (1984) 154 CA3d 1051, 202 CR 116 (no extrinsic fraud in dissolution action when wife waited more than 1 year to seek legal advice and husband had done nothing to mislead her into believing that he would not proceed)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.93 b. No Extrinsic Fraud Found

The plaintiff's failure to enforce a default judgment until after expiration of the 6-month time limit does not in itself constitute extrinsic fraud. Ford v Herndon (1976) 62 CA3d 492, 496, 133 CR 111, disapproved on other grounds in Salas v Cortez (1979) 24 C3d 22, 154 CR 529; Dahler v American Pipe & Constr. Co. (1968) 257 CA2d 816, 65 CR 259. See 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Attack on Judgment in Trial Court §§225-234 (5th ed 2008).

Intrinsic fraud or mistake (i.e., fraud or mistake that goes to the merits of the action) when the defendant was not prevented from participating in the action is not a ground for relief. Marriage of Stevenot (1984) 154 CA3d 1051, 202 CR 116. For example, an attorney's mistaken belief about the applicable law is not extrinsic fraud or extrinsic mistake, but is intrinsic and as such cannot be the basis for equitable relief. Westinghouse Credit Corp. v Wolfer (1970) 10 CA3d 63, 88 CR 654. However, when the defendant's failure to answer results from the attorney's mistake of fact (Hallett v Slaughter (1943) 22 C2d 552, 140 P2d 3) or from the attorney's total failure to represent the defendant (Orange Empire Nat'l Bank v Kirk (1968) 259 CA2d 347, 66 CR 240), equitable relief is available if the attorney's failure to represent amounts to "positive misconduct" (Lopez v Superior Court (1986) 178 CA3d 925, 935, 223 CR 798).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.94 c. Extrinsic Mistake

Extrinsic mistake occurs when the mistake of a third party prevents a defendant with a meritorious defense to the action from appearing. Baske v Burke (1981) 125 CA3d 38, 44, 177 CR 794. Examples of extrinsic mistake include:

- Incapacity or disability of the party or attorney (Humes v MarGil Ventures, Inc. (1985) 174 CA3d 486, 220 CR 186);
- Reliance on a third person (Weitz v Yankosky (1966) 63 C2d 849, 48 CR 620);
- Reliance on attorney who commits positive misconduct (People v One Parcel of Land (1991) 235 CA3d 579, 286 CR 739; Aldrich v San Fernando Valley Lumber Co. (1985) 170 CA3d 725, 216 CR 300); and
- Error of court clerk resulting in defendant's lack of notice of proceedings (Baske v Burke (1981) 125 CA3d 38, 177 CR 794).

An example of a court not finding extrinsic mistake is Cruz v Fagor Am., Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 488, 506, 52 CR3d 862 (failure of corporate chairman or claims officer to receive properly served summons and complaint due to internal mistake).

D. Relief if Default Judgment Is Void

§38.95 1. Relief May Be Requested at Any Time

If the default judgment is void, the court, on motion of one party with notice to the other parties, may set it aside at any time. See CCP §473(d) (court may set aside "any void judgment or order").

NOTE: The distinction between "void" and "voidable" judgments is important: Voidable judgments must be set aside before they become final. See Johnson v E-Z Ins. Brokerage, Inc. (2009) 175 CA4th 86, 95 CR3d 782 (judgment was not void but voidable and therefore could not be set aside under CCP §473(b) 12 years after entry of default and default judgment); Lee v An (2008) 168 CA4th 558, 565, 85 CR3d 620. See also §§38.79-38.94.

A judgment is void if a court lacks fundamental authority over the subject matter, question presented, or party (168 CA4th at 565), e.g.:

- The court that renders it lacks personal or subject matter jurisdiction (Airlines Reporting Corp. v Renda (2009) 177 CA4th 14, 99 CR3d 66; Marriage of Goodarzirad (1986) 185 CA3d 1020, 1030, 230 CR 203);
- The court clerk enters a default judgment under CCP §585(a) without authority to do so (CCP §473(d); Brown v Superior Court (1966) 242 CA2d 519, 51 CR 633);
- The defendant received no actual notice (Wisdom v Ramirez (1985) 177 CA3d Supp 1, 222 CR 923); or
- The damages awarded in a default judgment are in excess of what is demanded in the complaint (Marriage of Lippel (1990) 51 C3d 1160, 1167, 276 CR 290; Heidary v Yadollahi (2002) 99 CA4th 857, 864, 121 CR2d 695).

NOTE: A default judgment that is not subject to set aside may be modified if the damage award is in excess of the prayer and thus violates CCP §580; Becker v S.P.V. Constr. Co. (1980) 27 C3d 489, 165 CR 825.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.96 2. Examples

Examples of void default judgments that were set aside include:

- Manson, Iver & York v Black (2009) 176 CA4th 36, 43, 97 CR3d 522 (default judgment void because party was misnamed in complaint, service, and judgment; party had no notice that ex parte order substituted her name for incorrect name, 6 years after entry of judgment);
- David S. Karton, a Law Corp. v Dougherty (2009) 171 CA4th 133, 149, 89 CR3d 506 (default judgment void because it exceeded amount specified in complaint); Levine v Smith (2006) 145 CA4th 1131, 52 CR3d 197 (same);
- Strathvale Holdings v E.B.H. (2005) 126 CA4th 1241, 25 CR3d 372 (lack of personal jurisdiction rendered default judgment void; thus, it may be challenged at any time);
- Falahati v Kondo (2005) 127 CA4th 823, 26 CR3d 104 (default judgment was void and subject to set aside under CCP §473(d) because (1) it was based on complaint that did not apprise defendant of nature of plaintiff's demand against him or amount of damages sought, and (2) defendant was denied opportunity to respond to amendment purporting to add him as defendant); and
- Wisdom v Ramirez (1985) 177 CA3d Supp 1, 222 CR 923 (court may set aside any void judgment or order when summons was not properly served and defendant had no actual notice).

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.97 E. Relief if No Actual Notice to Defendant

When service of summons did not result in actual notice to a defendant in time to defend the action and a default or default judgment has been entered, the defendant may move to set aside the default or default judgment and for leave to defend the action. CCP §473.5(a). The lack of actual notice must not have been caused by the defendant's avoidance of service or inexcusable neglect. CCP §473.5(b).

Grounds for relief under CCP §473.5 usually result from service of process by means other than personal service, e.g., substituted service or service by publication. See, e.g., Tunis v Barrow (1986) 184 CA3d 1069, 229 CR 389 (motion under §473.5 proper when service of process completed by publication that did not result in actual notice to defendant).

Relief has also been granted under this section when there was apparent personal service under circumstances creating doubt over whether the defendant received actual notice from the personal service. Rosenthal v Garner (1983) 142 CA3d 891, 191 CR 300; Goya v P.E.R.U. Enters. (1978) 87 CA3d 886, 151 CR 258.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.98 1. Equitable Authority

When entry of default or default judgment has resulted from the defendant's not having had actual notice of the action in time to defend, the court may also grant relief under its inherent equitable power to set aside the default or default judgment. The grounds for an equitable motion are limited to extrinsic fraud or mistake. See §38.89. These terms are given a broad meaning and include all circumstances that deprive an adversary of fair notice of hearing regardless of whether the particular conduct would constitute fraud or mistake in the strict sense. Munoz v Lopez (1969) 275 CA2d 178, 79 CR 563 (decided under former CCP §473a). See Bennett v Hibernia Bank (1956) 47 C2d 540, 305 P2d 20.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Timing: When to Request Relief if No Actual Notice to Defendant

§38.99 a. CCP §473.5

A motion for relief from default or default judgment made under CCP §473.5 must be filed "within a reasonable time," and no later than the earlier of (1) 2 years after entry of a default judgment against defendant or (2) 180 days after service on defendant of written notice that a default or default judgment has been entered. CCP §473.5(a). Thus, both CCP §473 and CCP §473.5 establish a jurisdictional outer time limit and a diligence requirement.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.100 b. Equitable Powers

A motion addressed to the court's inherent equitable powers must be made within a reasonable time, but it is not subject to the §473.5 time limits. Munoz v Lopez (1969) 275 CA2d 178, 79 CR 563 (decided under former CCP §473a). Although there is no jurisdictional time limit, a motion for equitable relief is subject to the same requirement as for a CCP §473 motion—that it be made within a reasonable time, i.e., the moving party must move diligently on learning of the entry of default or default judgment. Weitz v Yankosky (1966) 63 C2d 849, 48 CR 620; see §38.90.

The most important factors in determining whether the moving party has exercised due diligence are

- The length of time from discovery of the entry of default and the filing of the application;
- The reasons for any delay; and
- Anything that has occurred that would prejudice the plaintiff if the motion were granted.

McCreadie v Arques (1967) 248 CA2d 39, 56 CR 188; see, e.g., Weitz v Yankosky, supra.

NOTE: If the motion is made on the ground that the summons was not properly served, the judgment would be void, and the motion to set aside could be filed when the defendant learns of the default. Sipe v McKenna (1948) 88 CA2d 1001, 200 P2d 61. See §38.95.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.101 F. Relief When Court Has Assumed Jurisdiction of Attorney's Practice

Under Bus & P C §§6180 and 6190, a court may assume jurisdiction over the practice of an attorney. If, after an application for the court to assume jurisdiction over the attorney's practice, a judgment is taken against a party represented by that attorney, relief from the judgment may be sought under CCP §473.1.

Like motions for relief under CCP §§473 and 473.5, a motion under CCP §473.1 has a jurisdictional time limit as well as a requirement that the motion be made within "a reasonable time." The jurisdictional time limit is usually 6 months after the court assumes jurisdiction over the attorney's practice. However, if the judgment for which relief is sought was entered in a proceeding that determines the ownership or right to possession of real or personal property, the jurisdictional time limit is different. In this event, it is the earlier of 6 months after the court takes jurisdiction over the attorney's practice or 90 days after service of a notice within the state on both the party and the attorney appointed under Bus & P C §6180.5. The notice must state that the judgment or order has been entered and advise them of their right to seek relief within 90 days.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.102 G. Court May Condition Relief

Motion under CCP §473 or court's equitable powers. The court may grant relief subject to conditions, whether the motion is made under CCP §473 or under the court's equity powers. This rule is explicit under CCP §473(b) (court may grant relief on "any terms as may be just") and implicit under the court's equity powers. Moreover, whenever relief from a default judgment is granted under §473, the court in its discretion can (CCP §473(c)(1)):

- Impose a penalty of no more than $1000 on an offending attorney or defaulting party;
- Direct an offending attorney to pay no more than $1000 to the State Bar Client Security Fund; or
- Grant such other relief as is appropriate.

A penalty, when justified, can be assessed directly against both the party and the attorney.

Given the desire of courts to decide cases on the merits, counsel for plaintiff is likely to have more success in seeking to fashion appropriate conditions on the granting of relief than in opposing the motion. However, the conditions must be just, i.e., "reasonably proportionate to the other party's prejudice or expense." Shapiro v Clark (2008) 164 CA4th 1128, 1148, 80 CR3d 398 (no justification for conditioning relief on security for prospective award of punitive damages); Kirkwood v Superior Court (1967) 253 CA2d 198, 201, 61 CR 316. Excessive conditions can be attacked by writ of mandamus. Kirkwood v Superior Court, supra.

Motion under CCP §473.5. Under CCP §473.5, the court may grant relief "on whatever terms as may be just." On CCP §473.5, see §38.99. Also, the court has the discretion not to impose any conditions in granting a motion under §473.5. Goya v P.E.R.U. Enters. (1978) 87 CA3d 886, 151 CR 258. For form of order, which may be modified, see §38.117.

H. Procedure: How to Obtain Relief From Default or Default Judgment

§38.103 1. Motion Under CCP §473(b)

Frequently, a defendant first learns of the entry of a default judgment when a levy of execution is threatened or has occurred. To avoid the levy of a writ or to stop additional levies from being made, the defendant may need to obtain a stay of execution pending hearing and determination of the motion for relief from the default judgment. If timely requested, a stay may be obtained ex parte when the motion for relief from default judgment is filed. The request for the stay will require its own moving papers, including supporting declarations. The declarations in support of the motion to vacate are usually sufficient, with minor additions (e.g., the fact that the levy is threatened), to support the request for the stay.

For most money judgments, the court's authority to grant a stay lapses 10 days after the final date on which an appeal could have been filed. See CCP §§917.1, 918(b). California Rules of Court 8.104(a) provides that for judgments entered in superior court the appeal period is the earliest of:

- 60 days after the clerk serves the party filing the notice of appeal with a document titled "Notice of Entry" of judgment or a file-stamped copy of the judgment, showing the date that either was served;
- 60 days after the party filing the notice of appeal serves or is served by a party with a document titled "Notice of Entry" of judgment or a file-stamped copy of the judgment, accompanied by proof of service; or
- 180 days after entry of judgment.

Service in the first two situations listed above may be by any method permitted by the Code of Civil Procedure, including electronic service when permitted under CCP §1010.6 and Cal Rules of Ct 2.250-2.261. Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a)(4).

California Rules of Court 8.800 provides that the rules relating to the superior court appellate division apply to appeals in the appellate division of the superior court. California Rules of Court 8.822(a) provides that for judgments entered in a limited civil case the appeal period is the earliest of:

- 30 days after the date of mailing of notice of entry of judgment by the clerk;
- 30 days after service of written notice of entry of judgment by a party; or
- 90 days after entry of judgment.

If the time for granting a stay has passed before the defendant becomes aware of the default judgment, the defendant should make an ex parte application for an order shortening time for hearing of the motion for relief from default. On time for service of motions, see CCP §1005(b). On form of order, see §38.117. On ex parte motions, see chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.104 b. Opposition

On a motion to set aside a default or default judgment, the plaintiff may controvert the defendant's moving papers with counterdeclarations. See, e.g., Elms v Elms (1946) 72 CA2d 508, 164 P2d 936. If the plaintiff was prejudiced by the delay, the counterdeclarations should set forth facts showing the prejudice. The burden of proof to show prejudice is on the opposing party. See, e.g., Aldrich v San Fernando Valley Lumber Co. (1985) 170 CA3d 725, 740, 216 CR 300. However, it is improper for the plaintiff to attempt to factually dispute the defendant's defense if the defendant has attached a copy of the proposed answer or other pleading as required by CCP §473. First Small Bus. Inv. Co. v Sistim, Inc. (1970) 12 CA3d 645, 90 CR 798. The motion is not a substitute for a trial on the merits. Skolsky v Electronovision Prods., Inc. (1967) 254 CA2d 246, 62 CR 91.

Given the court's inclination to hear matters on their merits and thus grant motions to set aside defaults or default judgments, plaintiff's counsel may have more success in endeavoring to convince the court to grant relief on the imposition of appropriate conditions. See §38.102.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.105 c. Hearing and Evidence

Usually a motion to vacate default or default judgment is heard on declaration and counterdeclaration, but the court has the discretion to take oral evidence. See, e.g., Reifler v Superior Court (1974) 39 CA3d 479, 114 CR 356 (family law issues); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(a). Local practice varies. Some courts may permit oral testimony of the parties or witnesses, at least for cross-examination on specific matters in dispute. If oral testimony is permitted, parties or witnesses who will be testifying must be present in the courtroom at the time of the hearing. Some courts may also grant a continuance of the hearing to allow discovery to be taken of the parties or witnesses whose declarations have been filed.

After hearing the arguments and considering the evidence, the court may rule on the motion from the bench or take the matter under submission. On making its decision, the court enters an order granting or denying the motion. The court may deny the motion without prejudice if the showing in support of the motion is deficient but can be cured on a new motion. In some cases, a party can renew the motion even if the original motion was denied. See §38.107.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.106 2. Motion Under CCP §473.5

A notice of motion under CCP §473.5 must designate a hearing date as prescribed by CCP §1005(b) (normally, at least 16 court days after date of service; longer if notice of motion is served by mail; subject to court order shortening time). CCP §473.5(b).

A motion under CCP §473.5 for relief from entry of default or default judgment must be accompanied by:

An affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury (CCP §2015.5) showing that the defendant's lack of actual notice was not caused by the defendant's avoidance of service of process or inexcusable neglect.

PRACTICE TIP: It is advisable, whether required or not, to include such a declaration and copy when the motion is made under the court's equity powers independent of the statutory grounds of CCP §473.5.

For forms of motion and a declaration that can be adapted for use, see §§38.114-38.115.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.107 3. Renewal if Motion Denied

Both as a statutory requirement and as a practical requirement to avoid being burdened by multiple applications for the same relief, courts require that any motion for renewal or reconsideration be based on facts different from those presented in the original motion. CCP §1008. Like the original motion, a renewed motion must be made within the same time, i.e., 6 months after the entry of default or default judgment. Northridge Fin. Corp. v Hamblin (1975) 48 CA3d 819, 122 CR 109 (motion for renewal untimely when made 24 days after 6-month period expired).

A renewed motion should be noticed and supported by declarations in the same manner as the original motion, although the renewed motion can incorporate by reference applicable portions of the original motion, such as the proposed answer. It must also be shown by declaration that a prior motion was made, the date of the prior motion, the judge who heard the original motion, the disposition of that motion and what new facts are claimed. CCP §1008.

© The Regents of the University of California

§38.108 I. Appellate Review

An order granting or denying relief from a default judgment is appealable as an order after judgment. CCP §§904.1(a)(2) (unlimited civil cases), 904.2(b) (limited civil cases); Tunis v Barrow (1986) 184 CA3d 1069, 229 CR 389 (order denying motion to vacate appealable; order denying motion to reconsider not appealable). Because of the availability of a direct appeal, relief by mandamus will be granted only in unusual circumstances. A court's prejudgment denial of relief from default is interlocutory and not separately appealable. Shapiro v Clark (2008) 164 CA4th 1128, 1137, 80 CR3d 398.

Because judicial policy in favor of a trial on the merits takes precedence over the policy of upholding a trial court order denying relief unless abuse of discretion is shown, appellate courts are usually more willing to uphold an order granting relief than an order that denies relief. This result is not automatic, however, and appellate courts will uphold orders denying relief particularly when the defendant has not been diligent in seeking relief. A default judgment in excess of the prayer can be raised for the first time on appeal. Such a judgment is an act in excess of jurisdiction and is never waived. Petty v Manpower, Inc. (1979) 94 CA3d 794, 156 CR 622.

Timing. The notice of appeal must be filed on or before the earliest of:

- 60 days after the superior court clerk serves the party filing the notice of appeal with document entitled "Notice of Entry" of judgment or a file-stamped copy of the judgment, showing the date either was served;
- 60 days after the party filing the notice of appeal serves or is served by a party with a document entitled "Notice of Entry" of judgment or a file-stamped copy of the judgment, accompanied by a proof of service; or
- 180 days after entry of judgment.

Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a). On filing an appeal, see California Civil Appellate Practice, chap 7 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

Copies: Original (file with court clerk); ___ copies for service (one for each attorney of record or unrepresented party); ___ office copies.

Comment: The following instructions are keyed to the multipurpose Judicial Council form. For further discussion, see §§38.52-38.58. The moving party must check the box for entry of default and/or clerk or court judgment.

Entry of Default

Item 1 (Request for Entry of Default): Section 1a of the form must be completed to obtain entry of default.

Item 5 (Declaration Under CCP §585.5): The plaintiff must complete the venue declaration when seeking entry of default, if a clerk's judgment under CCP §585(a) will be sought. See §§38.42-38.60 (clerk's judgment), §§38.61-38.73 (default judgment by court).

Item 6 (Declaration of Mailing): The mailing declaration must be completed, stating that a copy of the request has been mailed to the defendant's attorney of record or, if none, to the defendant at his or her last known address. If the defendant's address is unknown to the plaintiff or the plaintiff's attorney, e.g., when service was by publication, the declaration must state that fact. CCP §587. See §38.37.

Clerk's Default Judgment

Item 1 (Request for Entry of Default Judgment): Sections a and b should be completed, even if they have been completed earlier in connection with a prior request for the entry of a default. Section e should be completed in all instances of a request for the entry of a clerk's default judgment. Under section e, the appropriate box or boxes should be checked. Box 1 pertains to a request for the entry of a clerk's default judgment in unlawful detainer proceedings that seek only the restitution of premises, but no monetary damages are sought, and the landlord has not elected to declare a forfeiture under the conditions set forth in CCP §1174(c). Box 2 of section e applies to all cases under CCP §585(a). Box 3 of section e should be completed in all instances in which a default of one or more defendants was entered before the request for the entry of a clerk's default judgment.

Item 2 (Judgment to Be Entered): Sections a and c through f should be completed as appropriate. The form requires the inclusion of information about the demand of the complaint, and the interest, costs, and attorney fees sought. The totals of these items as requested in the complaint, any credits to which the defendant is entitled on any item, and the balance due on each item must also be provided.

Some courts require that a partial satisfaction be filed with the clerk whenever credits are to be acknowledged. Other courts will accept the statement included in the column for "Credits Acknowledged" as sufficient. Consult the court clerk for information on local requirements.

The costs in section d are, as noted on the form, the totals from Item 6 on the reverse side of the form.

Item 5 (Declaration Under CCP §585.5): Section 585.5 requires this information at the time of a request for default when a clerk's judgment (CCP §585(a)) will be sought, not, as the caption of the document indicates, at the time of the request for judgment. If the judgment is not being sought at the same time as entry of default, however, prudent practice would dictate that the §585 declaration be included in both filings.

Item 6 (Declaration of Mailing): If default was previously entered, there is no need to complete this section at the time of the request for default judgment. Notice must be mailed to the defendant before entry of judgment. Once default is entered, nothing further need be mailed to the defendant. See §38.37.

Item 7 (Memorandum of Costs): The plaintiff is required to complete this section of the Request for Entry of Default form when judgment is sought, either to seek costs or to waive the right to seek costs. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(a)(2). See also CCP §1034. For items recoverable as costs, see CCP §1033.5; California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§27.67-27.68, 27.72 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995). See §38.53.

Item 8 (Declaration of Nonmilitary Status): No clerk's default judgment may be entered without a showing that the defendant is not in the military service. 50 USC App §§501-596. This item must be completed for every individual defendant at the time of the request for default judgment. The declaration must be completed by someone who has personal knowledge that the defendant is not in the armed services. Counsel should have the process server ascertain this information and complete the declaration if the defendant's status is not known to the plaintiff. If there is a delay from the date of the declaration until the request for entry of judgment, counsel should consult the local clerk to ascertain the length of delay that is acceptable. See §38.54.

Court Default Judgment

The Judicial Council form is completed in the same manner as noted in the comment as for a clerk's judgment with the following exceptions:

Item 1 (Request for Entry of Default Judgment): Section (c) is completed only if a default of one or more defendants is being requested along with the entry of a judgment. Section (d) should be checked.

Item 2 (Judgment To Be Entered): If the judgment is being sought in a personal injury or wrongful death action (other than limited civil case; see chap 6), section (b) (statement of damages) should be completed. If attorney fees are sought in a non-§585(a) action, section (e) should be completed. If judgment for unlawful detainer damages are sought, section (g) should be completed.

Item 6 (Declaration of Mailing): This declaration must be completed if the defendant's default has not been entered previously.

NOTE: Some courts may require a second declaration of mailing when a court judgment is sought, e.g., when a money judgment is sought after a judgment of restitution so the defendant will have notice of the specific amount sought.

Item 7 (Memorandum of Costs): Attorney fees recoverable by statute should be included in the memorandum of costs. See, e.g., T.E.D. Bearing Co. v Walter E. Heller & Co. (1974) 38 CA3d 59, 112 CR 910 (attorney fees recoverable by statute are element of costs; recoverable under cost bill procedure).

Comment: See §§38.61-38.74 (court default judgment). This form may be used for a default judgment by the court under CCP §585(b) or a default judgment under CCP §585(c) when the defendant was served by publication. It may also be adapted for use when the plaintiff requests that the court set attorney fees under CCP §585(a). See §38.65.

Many courts have their own printed forms for default judgment by court, and some have printed forms for default judgment following service by publication. These forms should be used whenever possible. If the attorney drafts a judgment similar to the form shown above, the format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On the many specific details required, see chap 11 and the sample form in §11.35. On when preprinted Judicial Council forms must or may be filed with the court, see Cal Rules of Ct 1.30-1.44 and 2.131-2.134 and the discussion in §11.27.

Comment: See §§38.75-38.108 (motion for relief from default and default judgment) and §§12.7-12.29 (formal requirements for notices of motion). Some attorneys routinely include in a notice of motion a request for "other just relief." This language is unnecessary with respect to a motion to set aside a default or default judgment because the court has the express authority by statute to base the granting of the motion on the defendant's satisfaction of conditions. See CCP §473; §38.102. This form, with minor adaptations, may also be used to seek to set aside defaults or default judgments entered as a result of extrinsic fraud. See §§38.89-38.94.

The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On the many specific details required, see chap 11 and the sample form in §11.35. On when preprinted Judicial Council forms must or may be filed with the court, see Cal Rules of Ct 1.30-1.44 and 2.131-2.134 and the discussion in §11.27.

Comment: See §§38.75-38.108 (motion for relief from default and default judgment) and §§12.43-12.53 (formal requirements for declarations). The supporting declaration for a motion to set aside a default or default judgment should be made by either the attorney or the defendant, depending on who has knowledge of the facts. It may occasionally be necessary to use the declaration of more than one person. A declaration framed only in terms of the conclusory language that there was excusable negligence is insufficient. Kendall v Allied Investigations, Inc. (1988) 197 CA3d 619, 243 CR 42. When the motion is addressed to the court's inherent equity power on the ground of extrinsic fraud or mistake, the declaration of a third person may be needed. See §§38.79-38.82 for discussion of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. If a significant delay occurred between the time the defendant or the defendant's attorney learned of the default or default judgment and the time the motion was filed, the declaration must state facts on which the court can conclude that the delay is excusable and that the defendant acted diligently in seeking to have the default or default judgment set aside. See §38.88.

The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On the many specific details required, see chap 11 and the sample form in §11.35. On when preprinted Judicial Council forms must or may be filed with the court, see Cal Rules of Ct 1.30-1.44 and 2.131-2.134 and the discussion in §11.27.

I. INTRODUCTION

§39.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses involuntary dismissal for the failure by the plaintiff's attorney to comply with California state statutory provisions requiring reasonable diligence in the prosecution of a civil action. CCP §§583.110-583.430. It describes the uses of involuntary dismissal (see §§39.3-39.7), failure to return summons within 3 years (see §§39.8-39.24), failure to bring an action to trial within 5 years (see §§39.25-39.62), failure to bring an action to new trial within 3 years (see §§39.63-39.64), other grounds (see §§39.65-39.70), and procedures (see §§39.71-39.80).

This chapter also discusses the procedures for voluntary dismissal requested by the plaintiff, with or without prejudice, as well as those entered into after the consent of all parties, which are governed by CCP §581. That section also permits the court to dismiss on its own motion (e.g., for plaintiff's abandonment of case during trial; see CCP §581(d)). See §§39.95-39.125.

Dismissal after failure to post security for costs as ordered is covered in chap 29.

§39.2 B. Governing Law

Involuntary dismissals are governed by CCP §§583.110-583.430, which set forth the grounds for dismissal and the applicable exceptions (see chart in §39.7). Mandatory dismissal for failure to serve a defendant with the summons and complaint within 3 years after commencement of an action is governed by CCP §583.210. Mandatory dismissal for failure to bring action to trial within 5 years is governed by CCP §§583.310 and 583.360. Mandatory dismissal for failure to bring action for a new trial within 3 years is governed by CCP §583.320. Discretionary dismissal for delay in prosecution is governed by CCP §§583.410-583.430.

Voluntary dismissals are governed by CCP §581. Dismissal under §581 may be with or without prejudice.

NOTE: As used in this chapter, as in the statute, the terms "complaint," "defendant," and "plaintiff" include "cross-complaint," "cross-defendant," and "cross-complainant," and "action" means any civil action or special proceeding. See CCP §581(a).

In addition to the statutory dismissal provisions applicable to civil actions generally (see chart in §39.7), there are other statutory provisions concerning dismissal of particular actions. For example, in the absence of a written stipulation between the parties, the court must dismiss an action for a tax refund, unless summons has been issued and served and the return made within 1 year after commencement (Rev & T C §5147); another example is that the trial court may dismiss an action to foreclose a mechanics lien if not brought to trial within 2 years after commencement. CC §3147. On the effect of the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620), see §39.5.

The general dismissal statutes contained in CCP §§583.110-583.430 do not affect the court's authority to dismiss an action or impose other sanctions under a local rule adopted by the court under CCP §575.1, by the Judicial Council according to statute, or otherwise under inherent judicial authority. CCP §583.150.

II. DESCRIPTION AND USE OF INVOLUNTARY DISMISSAL

§39.3 A. Scope of Dismissal Statutes

The dismissal statutes apply to civil actions but not to special proceedings, except to the extent the statutes are incorporated by reference in the special proceeding and the courts choose to apply them to such special proceedings. CCP §583.120(a).

The dismissal statutes are designed to apply to complaints, cross-complaints, and any other initial pleadings (CCP §583.110(b)), and to governmental agencies as well as private parties (Superior Oil Co. v Superior Court (1936) 6 C2d 113, 56 P2d 950; Bank of America v Superior Court (1948) 84 CA2d 34, 189 P2d 799; People v Kings County Dev. Co. (1920) 48 CA 72, 191 P 1004).

The dismissal statutes do not apply to petitions filed under Fam C §2330 (dissolution or legal separation) if certain specified conditions exist. CCP §583.161. See Marriage of Dunmore (1996) 45 CA4th 1372, 53 CR2d 450.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.4 B. Purpose of Dismissal Statutes

The purpose of the dismissal statutes, like statutes of limitation, is generally twofold (Hocharian v Superior Court (1981) 28 C3d 714, 724, 170 CR 790; Holder v Sheet Metal Worker's Int'l Ass'n (1981) 121 CA3d 321, 175 CR 313):

- To promote the trial of cases before evidence is lost or destroyed, or the memory of witnesses becomes dimmed, thus ensuring that defendants have a reasonable opportunity to prepare a defense; and
- To protect defendants from being subjected to the annoyance of an unmeritorious action remaining undecided for an indefinite period of time.

The policies underlying the California dismissal statutes are declared in CCP §583.130, among them that the plaintiff must "proceed with reasonable diligence in the prosecution of an action" and that all parties must "cooperate in bringing the action to trial or other disposition." However, the policy that requires dismissal for failure to proceed with reasonable diligence is generally subordinated to policies favoring the right of parties to make stipulations in their own interests and to have a trial or other disposition of an action on the merits. CCP §583.130.

When policies conflict, the court must examine every case "on its own particular facts to assure a dismissal of an action is consistent 'with the spirit of the law and with a view of subserving, rather than defeating, the ends of substantial justice.'" 121 CA3d at 325 (decided under former law).

§39.5 C. Effect of Trial Court Delay Reduction Act

The Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) has had an impact on involuntary dismissals. A court may not dismiss an action for noncompliance with local court rules implementing the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act if noncompliance is the fault of counsel, not the litigant. Garcia v McCutchen (1997) 16 C4th 469, 66 CR2d 319. Code of Civil Procedure §575.2(b) also prohibits dismissal as a sanction when noncompliance with local court rules is counsel's fault.

NOTE: Counsel should carefully review local court rules, particularly those implementing programs under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act, that may affect the time periods specified in the California statutes.

For further discussion of trial delay reduction rules, see chap 40.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.6 D. Involuntary Dismissal Is Not Res Judicata

A judgment of dismissal is not on the merits and thus is not res judicata. If a new lawsuit is not barred by the statute of limitations, it may be commenced after its predecessor has been dismissed. Gonsalves v Bank of America Nat'l Trust Sav. Ass'n (1940) 16 C2d 169, 172, 105 P2d 118; Watson v Superior Court (1972) 24 CA3d 53, 60, 100 CR 684.

Even though dismissals are not on the merits, one court has held that a dismissal under former CCP §583 is a favorable termination for purposes of a later malicious prosecution action because it "does reflect on the merits of the action." Minasian v Sapse (1978) 80 CA3d 823, 827, 145 CR 829. The court, however, left open the possibility of a later explanation of the failure to prosecute. 80 CA3d at 828. The question of whether such a dismissal is a "favorable termination" appears to be left as a factual issue in any later malicious prosecution action, with the presumption being that one does not abandon a meritorious action once instituted.

Even though a judgment of dismissal is not on the merits and is not a final judgment within the meaning of CC §1717, a defendant may be entitled to attorney fees, especially if the action is on a contract that provides for them. See CC §1717(b)(1); Scott Co. v Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1103, 86 CR2d 614 (CC §1717 requires that any contractual provision for attorney fees to "prevailing party" must be applied mutually, even if contract specifies that only one party may recover fees); Nasser v Superior Court (1984) 156 CA3d 52, 57, 202 CR 552; Bank of Idaho v Pine Ave. Assoc. (1982) 137 CA3d 5, 15, 186 CR 695. See also CCP §1032(a)(4).

This chart compares the statutes governing involuntary dismissal in California. CCP §§583.110-583.430. It does not include dismissals for plaintiff's failure to:

- Pay transfer fees after certain orders changing venue;
- Appear at trial; or
- Amend the complaint within the time allowed after a demurrer is sustained with leave to amend.

For discussion, see section on other grounds for involuntary dismissal in §§39.65-39.70.

III. FAILURE TO SERVE SUMMONS WITHIN 3 YEARS: MANDATORY DISMISSAL

A. When Appropriate

§39.8 1. Three Years to Serve Summons

Failure to serve a defendant with the summons and complaint within 3 years after commencement of an action requires mandatory dismissal under CCP §583.210(a) unless the plaintiff can show that certain conditions tolled the period of service or that a certain statutory exception or estoppel applies. See discussion in §§39.16, 39.19-39.24.

An action "commences" when the complaint is filed. CCP §583.210(a). If service is not made on a defendant within the required time, that defendant is entitled to the protection of CCP §583.250(a)(1): "The action shall not be further prosecuted and no further proceedings shall be held in the action."

NOTE: In an action against more than one defendant this language is applicable only to a defendant who has not been served as required; a contrary interpretation would allow other defendants who had been served in a timely manner to avoid liability.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.9 2. Additional 60 Days to File Proof of Service of the Summons

Filing proof of service of the summons must occur within 60 days after the time for service of summons and complaint on a defendant. CCP §583.210(b). The plaintiff thus has an additional 60 days beyond the 3-year period to file proof of service of the summons. On service of process generally, see chap 17.

Filing the proof of service of the summons with the court is sufficient; "returning" the summons is no longer applicable under CCP §583.210. The original summons is retained by the clerk in the court records and copies of the summons are issued to the plaintiff making the request. See CCP §412.10.

EXAMPLE: If a nonresident is served by certified mail requiring a return receipt (see CCP §415.40), or if service by publication is made on a defendant who cannot be served otherwise (see CCP §415.50), all that is required to prevent dismissal is that the plaintiff can show that the necessary acts (i.e., mailing or publication) were completed within the 60-day period. It is irrelevant that service by mail on the nonresident is not deemed complete until the tenth day after the mailing, or if by publication, not until 30 days after the last publication—and that these events occurred after the 60-day period had expired. Note that the service sufficient to prevent dismissal would not be satisfactory for purposes of obtaining a default.

Failure to file proof of service of the summons within 60 days following the expiration of the 3-year period results in a mandatory dismissal, regardless of whether service was timely. For discussion of procedures for dismissing an action for failure to return summons, see §§39.71-39.80.

Both of the following actions must be performed to comply with the requirements of CCP §583.210:

- Service of summons within 3 years after date the complaint is filed; and
- Filing proof of service of the summons to the court within 60 days after the 3-year period has expired.

NOTE: The term "complaint" includes "cross-complaint" or "other initial pleading." CCP §583.110(b). Summons on a cross-complaint is required if the cross-defendant has not appeared in the action; when the cross-defendant has already appeared, it may be served in any manner prescribed in CCP §§1010-1020. CCP §428.60.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.10 B. When 3-Year Period Begins

The 3-year period for service of summons and complaint begins with the filing of the complaint. CCP §583.210(a).

An amended complaint seeking recovery based on the same general set of facts as the complaint relates back to the date of the filing of the original complaint and thus does not extend the 3-year period for service. Austin v Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. (1961) 56 C2d 596, 601, 15 CR 817. However, if an amended complaint alleges a new cause of action based on different operative facts, the action is considered commenced from the date the amended complaint is filed, even if the defendant under the new cause of action was an original defendant. Barrington v A.H. Robins Co. (1985) 39 C3d 146, 155, 216 CR 405.

PRACTICE TIP: Plaintiff's counsel can avoid disputes over whether an amended complaint alleges a new cause of action based on an entirely different set of operative facts by promptly serving the original complaint on all named defendants.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.11 1. Fictitious Defendants Named in Complaint

The 3-year time limit for service of summons and complaint applies to defendants sued by fictitious names. CCP §583.210; Comment to CCP §583.210. Failure to identify and serve Doe defendants within 3 years of the filing of the complaint bars future action against those unidentified defendants. Brennan v Lermer Corp. (ND Cal 1986) 626 F Supp 926, 934.

NOTE: Aside from this 3-year time limit, it has been held that CCP §474 implicitly requires the plaintiff to amend the complaint to add the true names of Doe defendants within a reasonable period of time after learning of their identity. A.N. v County of Los Angeles (2009) 171 CA4th 1058, 1066, 90 CR3d 293, citing Barrows v American Motors Corp. (1983) 144 CA3d 1, 192 CR 380.

When a complaint is amended to identify a party previously named as a Doe defendant, the amendment relates back to the original complaint unless the cause of action is based on different operative facts and involves different "instrumentalities" and "accidents" from those in the original complaint. Barrington v A.H. Robins Co. (1985) 39 C3d 146, 216 CR 405. See §39.10. Thus, for the Doe defendant, the 3-year period begins when the original complaint is filed. See Warren v Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. (1971) 19 CA3d 24, 96 CR 317.

If new defendants are added, however, the action commences from the date of the amended or supplemental complaint adding those defendants. 19 CA3d at 38. See discussion in §39.13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.12 2. Federal Removal After Period Expires for Serving Summons on Doe Defendants

After the period for service and return of summons expires, a defendant is deemed on notice that the Doe defendants are no longer part of the action. Mike Silverman & Assocs. v Drai (CD Cal 1987) 659 F Supp 741. Consequently, Doe defendants cannot destroy diversity for the purposes of removal to federal court after the period for service and return of summons expires.

Under 28 USC §1446, the petition for removal must be filed within 30 days of the expiration of the 3-year period for service and return of summons. For further discussion of federal removal, see chap 22.

NOTE: Before the period for service and return of summons expires, some "bright line notice" in the form of the plaintiff's affirmative action severing the Doe defendants is required before a cause of action becomes removable. Preaseau v Prudential Ins. Co. (9th Cir 1979) 591 F2d 74, 76.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.13 3. When New Parties Added to Action

If new parties are added, the 3-year period for serving summons and complaint is commenced for those parties at the time the amended pleading is filed. Warren v Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. (1971) 19 CA3d 24, 96 CR 317. This rule applies to both new plaintiffs and new defendants. American W. Banker v Price Waterhouse (1993) 12 CA4th 39, 14 CR2d 916, aff'd sub nom Mariani v Price Waterhouse (1999) 70 CA4th 685, 82 CR2d 671 (reversal of dismissal of new plaintiff who failed to serve summons and complaint within 2 years after original complaint filed).

When defendants are added to an action under CCP §389 (compulsory joinder of parties), the action is considered to have commenced with respect to them at the time they are joined, rather than when the action was originally filed. Warren, 19 CA3d at 39. This rule applies even though defendants were originally named as parties, then dismissed, and then ordered joined as parties under CCP §389. The original dismissal makes the parties strangers to the action; when they are later ordered joined and are named as defendants in the amended complaint, they come in as new parties, and the action commences anew with respect to them. See Monrovia Hosp. Co. v Superior Court (1967) 253 CA2d 607, 61 CR 737; Taliaferro v Riddle (1959) 167 CA2d 567, 334 P2d 950.

However, when defendants are named in the original complaint, the 3-year period for service of summons begins to run when the action is filed, even though the complaint does not state a cause of action with respect to those defendants, and is later amended to state a cause of action for them based on the same operative facts. Elling Corp. v Superior Court (1975) 48 CA3d 89, 123 CR 734.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.14 4. Cases With Multiple Defendants

Plaintiff's counsel should be wary in actions against several defendants, particularly when some of those defendants are associated in some way.

EXAMPLE: B permits A (who is not an employee or agent) to borrow his car. B has an automobile liability insurance policy with $100,000 coverage for the injury or death of any person while his car is being driven by himself or another with his permission. A has no assets or liability insurance. While driving B's car, A strikes C, inflicting injuries entitling C to $100,000 in damages. C sues and serves both A and B. B's attorney answers solely on B's behalf, but C's attorney overlooks this fact and fails to return the summons served on A within 3 years. After the 3-year period expires, B's attorney offers $15,000 in full settlement of C's lawsuit. Under Veh C §17151(a), B, as owner of the car, is vicariously responsible for A's conduct, but his liability is limited to $15,000. If C's action against A were not barred, C would be able to recover the full $100,000 against A's insurer, who under the policy had extended permissive user coverage to A and would have to pay the entire judgment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.15 5. Intervenor or Cross-Complainant

When 3 years have passed without the summons being served, the court has no power to permit intervention. Chambers v Santa Cruz City Sch. Dist. (1987) 193 CA3d 518, 523, 238 CR 356; Floyd Neal & Assoc. v Superior Court (1977) 72 CA3d 734, 140 CR 301. If service is not made within that time, "no further proceedings shall be held in the action." CCP §583.250. A complaint in intervention filed after the 3-year period had run on the initial complaint should be dismissed even though the action had not been dismissed under former CCP §581a before the filing of the complaint in intervention. Floyd Neal & Assoc. v Superior Court, supra. But an action by an intervenor or cross-complainant that is filed before the plaintiff's 3-year period has run is separate from plaintiff's action and is not put in jeopardy by plaintiff's failure to make service or return service. Deutschmann v Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1982) 132 CA3d 912, 183 CR 573.

For discussion of whether an injured employee who fails to timely return summons in a lawsuit against a tortfeasor may then intervene in an action in intervention filed by the employer who did effect a timely service and return, see California Workers' Damages Practice §§3.31, 3.32 (2d ed Cal CEB 2001).

§39.16 6. Conditions That Toll Period for Service

In computing the 3-year period for service of summons, the time during which any of the following conditions existed must be excluded (CCP §583.240):

- The defendant was not amenable to service;
- Prosecution of the action was stayed, which affected service;
- Validity of service was the subject of litigation by the parties; or
- Service was impossible, impracticable, or futile owing to causes beyond plaintiff's control.

The requirements of CCP §§583.210-583.250 are mandatory and are not subject to extension, excuse, or exception, unless expressly provided for by statute. CCP §583.250(b). In addition to the conditions excusing the time for service listed above, see discussion of statutory exceptions in §§39.19-39.23. For circumstances in which defendant is estopped from moving for dismissal, see §39.24.

The finding required for service by publication under CCP §415.50, that a party cannot with reasonable diligence be served by another method, is not the same as a finding that the "defendant was not amenable to the process of the court" and does not toll the time to bring the case to trial under CCP §583.340. Watts v Crawford (1995) 10 C4th 743, 42 CR2d 81 (case dismissed for failure to serve within 3 years when order for publication issued 1 day before expiration of 3-year period).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.17 a. Defendant Not Amenable to Service

- Death of defendant tolls period for service. The 3-year period for service of summons is tolled during the period between the death of the defendant and the appointment of a personal representative. Since there is no one to serve, effective service cannot be made until appointment of a personal representative. See, e.g., Polony v White (1974) 43 CA3d 44, 117 CR 341 (former CCP §581a tolled).
- Defendant's absence from state usually does not toll service. California has many procedures available for serving defendants. See, e.g., CCP §415.20 (leaving copies at home or office and mailing duplicate copies effects service). Thus a defendant hiding from a lawsuit is unlikely to avoid being served with summons.

PRACTICE TIP: Because a defendant's absence from the state may toll the statute of limitations on filing a lawsuit (see CCP §351), it would not usually help a defendant who had been absent during the 3-year period to move for dismissal for failure to serve and return summons. The plaintiff could often merely dismiss the action and refile it.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.18 b. Service Impossible, Impracticable, or Futile

If service is impossible, impracticable, or futile due to causes beyond the plaintiff's control, the time period during which summons must be served may be tolled. CCP §583.240. However, the statute specifically states that failure to discover relevant evidence or facts is not a cause beyond the plaintiff's control for this purpose. CCP §583.240(d).

This provision (CCP §583.240(d)) was enacted to repudiate the view developed in former case law (e.g., Hocharian v Superior Court (1981) 28 C3d 714, 170 CR 790) holding plaintiff's "reasonable diligence" to be sufficient to toll the period for service of summons. The Law Revision Commission made it clear that the excuse of impossibility, impracticability, or futility should be strictly construed against the plaintiff. See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §§346-350 (5th ed 2008). See also Williams v Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist. (1994) 23 CA4th 84, 28 CR2d 219 (CCP §583.240(d) exceptions construed strictly against plaintiff).

The 3-year period is not tolled by attorney misconduct. Shipley v Sugita (1996) 50 CA4th 320, 57 CR2d 750. In Shipley, the plaintiff incorrectly believed that the defendant had been properly served because of his own attorney's false statements. See also Bishop v Silva (1991) 234 CA3d 1317, 285 CR 910 (failure to serve summons within 3 years not excused by claim of impossibility on account of its loss by counsel who did not follow "lost summons" procedure).

The existence of nearly identical pending federal and state actions against the same defendant arising out of the same or similar facts does not fall under the impracticability or futility exception. Valerio v Boise Cascade Corp. (1986) 177 CA3d 1212, 1219, 223 CR 592 (bringing state action to trial when federal action pending may be difficult, but plaintiff's ability to serve summons not affected). Compare, however, Deas v Knapp (1982) 129 CA3d 443, 181 CR 76, which the Valerio court both distinguished and criticized.

C. Statutory Exceptions to Three-Year Period

§39.19 1. Written Stipulation Extends Period

The parties may extend the time within which service must be made if the defendant enters into a written stipulation or does another act (see §39.21) that constitutes a general appearance. CCP §583.220.

The stipulation extending the time within which service must be made need not be filed with the court. CCP §583.230(a). However, a stipulation not filed must be brought to the attention of the court if relevant to a motion for dismissal. CCP §583.230(a).

A letter from the defendant's insurance carrier to the plaintiff's attorney, confirming an oral agreement giving defendant an open extension of time to plead, was a sufficient written stipulation to preclude dismissal under former CCP §581a. Knapp v Superior Court (1978) 79 CA3d 799, 145 CR 154. But see Woodruff v McDonald's Restaurants (1977) 75 CA3d 655, 142 CR 367, requiring the stipulation to be between attorneys. On oral stipulations, see §39.20.

PRACTICE TIP: It is good practice for counsel to draft the stipulation expressly either to extend the time for service and return of summons or to waive the defendant's right to dismiss.

A stipulation extending the time within which service must be made is not a general appearance; nor is it a motion to dismiss. CCP §583.220(b). See Dresser v Superior Court (1964) 231 CA2d 68, 78, 41 CR 473. For discussion of what constitutes a general appearance and what does not, see §§39.22-39.23.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.20 2. Oral Stipulation in Court Extends Period

The parties may extend the period of service by oral agreement made in open court, if entered in the minutes of the court or a transcript is made. CCP §583.230(b).

PRACTICE TIP: Failure to comply with CCP §583.230 for an extension of time for service may not be fatal to the plaintiff's claim. Because CCP §583.140 provides that nothing within the involuntary dismissal statutes affects the principles of waiver and estoppel, if the requirements for an oral or written stipulation are not met but an agreement to extend the period of service existed, a plaintiff may be able to extend the period for service by arguing that the defendant is estopped from moving to dismiss the action under CCP §583.140.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.21 3. Defendant's General Appearance

The appearance by the defendant is equivalent to a valid service and return of summons. CCP §583.220. Therefore, there are no grounds for dismissal if a defendant has made a general appearance within the 3-year period. See §§39.22-39.23 on what constitutes a general appearance and what does not. Further, if the defendant makes a general appearance by filing an answer within 3 years and 60 days after the complaint was filed, the plaintiff is relieved from the need to file return of service of summons within that period. Wong v Armstrong World Indus. (1991) 232 CA3d 1032, 1034, 283 CR 870 (definition of "service" in CCP §583.110 read into CCP §583.220 to block dismissal under CCP §583.250).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.22 a. Matters Constituting General Appearance

The following actions constitute a general appearance:

- Motion to strike the pleadings (CCP §1014; but see CCP §418.10(e)(1) (no general appearance until after entry of order denying motion under §418.10));
- Demurrer (CCP §1014; but see CCP §418.10(e)(1));
- Answer (CCP §1014; but see CCP §418.10(e)(1));
- Acknowledgment of service (General Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 449, 124 CR 745);
- Notice of a motion to transfer under CCP §396b (CCP §1014);
- Motion for reclassification under CCP §403.040 (CCP §1014);
- The defendant's written notice of appearance to the plaintiff (CCP §1014);
- The attorney's notice of appearance for the defendant (CCP §1014); and
- Written stipulation between attorneys acknowledging jurisdiction (General Ins. Co. v Superior Court, supra (stipulation entered into before expiration of 3-year period)).

A defendant also makes a general appearance by conduct indicating an intent to submit to the court's jurisdiction. General Ins. Co. v Superior Court, supra. See Chitwood v Superior Court (1971) 14 CA3d 522, 92 CR 441 (general appearance found when defendant answered interrogatories). But see Semole v Sansoucie (1972) 28 CA3d 714, 104 CR 897 (no general appearance even though plaintiff served interrogatories on both corporation and one of its employees).

NOTE: Answers to interrogatories filed by an employee do not constitute a general appearance by that employee in his or her individual capacity.

A signed, unfiled stipulation extending the time for the defendant "to appear" indefinitely, subject to termination on 10 days' written notice has been held to be an agreement to appear as well as a general appearance that prevents dismissal. RCA Corp. v Superior Court (1975) 47 CA3d 1007, 121 CR 441. A written stipulation merely extending the time for service, however, is not a general appearance. See §39.23.

PRACTICE TIP: An extension of time "to answer" is probably a general appearance in that it could be considered an agreement to answer within the meaning of General Ins. Co. v Superior Court, supra, because it evidences an intent to submit to the court's jurisdiction. However, an extension of time "to plead" or "to answer or otherwise plead" is not a general appearance. See discussion in §39.23.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.23 b. Matters Not Constituting General Appearance

The following events do not constitute a general appearance:

- Stipulation extending the period of service (CCP §583.220(a));
- Motion to dismiss for delay in prosecution, whether or not joined with a motion to quash or a motion to set aside a default judgment (CCP §583.220(b));
- Motion to quash service (CCP §418.10; see also CCP §418.10(e)(1) (answer, demurrer, or motion to strike, when made simultaneously with §418.10 motion, does not constitute general appearance until entry of order denying §418.10 motion));
- Extension of time "to plead" (Blank v Kirwan (1985) 39 C3d 311, 333, 216 CR 718 (defendant's purpose may be to obtain adequate time to determine whether to submit or to object to court's jurisdiction; see also Owen v Niagara Mach. & Tool Works (1977) 68 CA3d 566, 137 CR 378));
- Extension of time to plead following a motion to dismiss for delay in prosecution (CCP §583.220(c); Palmer v Superior Court (1961) 192 CA2d 302, 13 CR 301);
- Extension of time to obtain representation (Busching v Superior Court (1974) 12 C3d 44, 115 CR 241);
- Appearance as a witness in a deposition or court proceeding (Slaybaugh v Superior Court (1977) 70 CA3d 216, 224, 138 CR 628);
- Answering in a representative capacity (Semole v Sansoucie (1972) 28 CA3d 714, 722, 104 CR 897); and
- Answering a complaint in intervention (Duckett v Superior Court (1989) 207 CA3d 1419, 255 CR 733 (complaint in intervention is action distinct from complaint; no general appearance by defendant's answer to complaint in intervention)).

Nor does a general appearance in response to a cross-complaint constitute a general appearance with respect to the complaint within the meaning of former CCP §581a. Botsford v Pascoe (1979) 94 CA3d 62, 156 CR 177 (35 months after complaint filed, plaintiff served additional defendants who, until then, had appeared only as cross-defendants; plaintiff failed to make timely return of summons; new defendants successfully moved to dismiss complaint in regard to them).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel for a codefendant who has not yet appeared should be cautious about how he or she participates in the action. An attorney present solely as an observer in court without participating in the proceedings has not made a general appearance on behalf of a codefendant. Also, a codefendant who voluntarily executes a declaration in support of another defendant's motion to change venue but does not join in the motion has not made a general appearance. Slaybaugh v Superior Court (1977) 70 CA3d 216, 138 CR 628 (declaration simply testimony regarding knowledge of residence).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.24 D. When Defendant Is Estopped From Dismissal

If the defendant induces the plaintiff to delay the return of summons, the period of the delay is not included in determining whether the 3-year requirement for service of summons has been met. Tresway Aero, Inc. v Superior Court (1971) 5 C3d 431, 96 CR 571.

The statute specifically provides that none of the statutes governing dismissal for delay in prosecution affects the principles of waiver and estoppel. CCP §583.140. A defendant may be estopped from seeking dismissal if the defendant:

- Makes a misrepresentation to a plaintiff unrepresented by counsel regarding the action, which causes plaintiff to delay (Flamer v Superior Court (1968) 266 CA2d 907, 72 CR 561);
- Stipulates in open court to extend the period in which to serve (Woley v Turkus (1958) 51 C2d 402, 334 P2d 12); or
- Induces the plaintiff to delay service, or to overlook errors in service, if plaintiff's reliance is reasonable (Tresway Aero, Inc. v Superior Court (1971) 5 C3d 431, 439, 96 CR 571; Lesko v Superior Court (1982) 127 CA3d 476, 179 CR 595; Regus v Schartkoff (1957) 156 CA2d 382, 386, 319 P2d 721).

PRACTICE TIP: A plaintiff's attorney engaged in settlement negotiations may protect the plaintiff by serving summons within the required period anyway, or by obtaining defendant's written stipulation to extend time to serve until after negotiations are terminated.

A person who does nothing to mislead a plaintiff (who is proceeding against a similarly named defendant) is not estopped from invoking CCP §583.210 when substituted for a "Doe" and served more than 3 years after suit was filed. Brookview Condominium Owners' Ass'n v Heltzer Enters. (1990) 218 CA3d 502, 510, 267 CR 76.

IV. FAILURE TO BRING ACTION TO TRIAL WITHIN FIVE YEARS: MANDATORY DISMISSAL

§39.25 A. When Available

An action must be brought to trial within 5 years after it is commenced. CCP §583.310. Failure to proceed to trial requires dismissal by the court on its own motion or motion by any party. CCP §583.360. Dismissal is mandatory and is not subject to extension, excuse, or exception, except as expressly provided by statute. CCP §583.360.

If an answer admits all the allegations stated in the complaint, the defendant is not entitled to seek mandatory dismissal under the 5-year statute. Smithers v Ederer (1956) 146 CA2d 227, 303 P2d 771; Martin v Gibson (1941) 48 CA2d 449, 119 P2d 1012. By admitting all of a plaintiff's allegations, a defendant is agreeing there is no need for a trial. Consequently, the legislature did not intend to "compel a dismissal where there would be no trial, the object being to expedite the administration of justice in the matter of the trial of any issues of fact." 48 CA2d at 451.

Likewise, when the case is submitted on an agreed statement of facts, there is no mandatory dismissal under the statute. Ryerson v Riverside Cement Co. (1968) 266 CA2d 789, 72 CR 595. The statute is satisfied when issues of law leading to final determination of the action have been submitted before the 5-year period expires even though technically the action has not been brought to trial. Berri v Superior Court (1955) 43 C2d 856, 279 P2d 8.

In an action by property owners over construction of a subway, a private judge, appointed to try the matter under a stipulation of the parties, had jurisdiction to toll the 5-year statute of CCP §583.310, and a commissioner in the eminent domain department of superior court who retained jurisdiction over "discovery and other pretrial matters" was without jurisdiction to dismiss the action for failure to bring the case to trial within 5 years. Health Indus. of Am., Inc. v Los Angeles County Metro. Transp. Auth. (2002) 102 CA4th 1372, 1376, 126 CR2d 294.

§39.26 1. When Action "Commenced"

The 5-year period for bringing an action to trial begins when plaintiff files the complaint. Gray v Firthe (1987) 194 CA3d 202, 239 CR 389. For a cross-complaint, the period begins when the cross-complaint is filed. See Tomales Bay Oyster Corp. v Superior Court (1950) 35 C2d 389, 217 P2d 968 (treated as independent action).

When a non-Doe defendant is added by amended complaint, the 5-year period commences on filing of the amendment, but for "Doe" defendants, the period begins with the original complaint. Gray v Firthe, supra.

The 5-year period is not extended for either an amended complaint or a complaint in intervention that asserts the same cause of action as the original complaint. Bosworth v Superior Court (1956) 143 CA2d 775, 300 P2d 155; Douglas v Superior Court (1949) 94 CA2d 395, 210 P2d 853. See Bright v American Termite Control Co. (1990) 220 CA3d 1464, 269 CR 793 (intervenor's complaint dismissed 5 years after original complaint filed; causes of action "essentially the same").

If an amended complaint alleges a new cause of action based on different operative facts, the action is considered commenced on the date the amended complaint was filed. Brumley v FDCC Cal., Inc. (2007) 156 CA4th 312, 67 CR3d 292.

Trial in an action has commenced within 5 years when trial on at least some of the claims begins before the 5-year period expires. See Marriage of MacFarlane & Lane (1992) 8 CA4th 247, 254, 10 CR2d 157 (trial in marital dissolution had commenced within 5-year period because court conducted partial trial on contested factual issues within 5-year period and reserved jurisdiction over related issues following judgment of dissolution); Patapoff v City of Los Angeles (1959) 171 CA2d 635, 644, 342 P2d 428 (statute satisfied when one of two consolidated actions began trial within 5-year period). However, when bifurcated matters do not involve interrelated claims, trial of one claim within the 5-year period is not "commencement of trial" within 5 years with respect to other, separate claims. Sagi Plumbing v Chartered Constr. Corp. (2004) 123 CA4th 443, 19 CR3d 835 (in consolidated action for breach of three separate contracts, bifurcated trial on one contract did not constitute commencement of trial within 5 years for remaining causes of action).

§39.27 2. When Action "Brought to Trial"

An action must be "brought to trial" within 5 years after commencement of the suit against that defendant or it is subject to dismissal. CCP §583.310. Generally, any pretrial motion within the 5-year period resulting in a final judgment (e.g., a motion for judgment on the pleadings disposing of all causes of action) is considered to have been a trial if that judgment is later reversed. See §§39.28-39.34 for case law on whether, and under what circumstances, an action has been "brought to trial." See §39.5 on local rules implementing the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act that may provide for earlier dismissal.

In determining whether an action has been brought to trial, "[t]he essential thing is that the action be brought to a stage where final disposition is to be made of it." Berri v Superior Court (1955) 43 C2d 856, 859, 279 P2d 8. The trial need not be completed, but it must have begun within the 5-year period, e.g., by having one witness sworn and then continuing the case. City of Los Angeles v Superior Court (1940) 15 C2d 16, 98 P2d 207. Merely setting the action for trial is not sufficient. Stuart v Hollywood Turf Club (1956) 146 CA2d 261, 303 P2d 897.

For purposes of former CCP §583(b), taking testimony and entering judgment under CCP §594 (absence of adverse party) constitutes bringing the matter to trial. Briley v Sukoff (1979) 98 CA3d 405, 159 CR 452 (defendants answered but failed to appear for trial). This is so even if the judgment is later set aside because of accident or surprise under CCP §657.

NOTE: In an action against several defendants, the action must have been brought to trial against the defendant moving for dismissal. Fanain Corp. v Superior Court (1974) 36 CA3d 745, 751, 111 CR 920.

§39.28 a. When Jury Impaneled

An action is brought to trial when the jury is impaneled. Hartman v Santamarina (1982) 30 C3d 762, 180 CR 337; Kadota v City & County of San Francisco (1958) 166 CA2d 194, 333 P2d 75. An action is also brought to trial in a jury case "when the parties commence the examination of prospective jurors." 166 CA2d at 195. It is not necessary that the jury have been selected and sworn. Thus, the 5-year requirement is satisfied as soon as voir dire examination begins. Hilliard v A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 CA3d 374, 390, 196 CR 117.

In a nonjury trial, the action is brought to trial when the first witness is sworn. Hartman v Santamarina (1982) 30 C3d 762, 180 CR 337. However, if defendant does something to prevent plaintiff from calling the first witness, the trial is still considered commenced. Clements v Ragghianti (1957) 155 CA2d 188, 317 P2d 706 (defendant moved for nonsuit and while court had motion under submission, the 5-year period expired; dismissal was reversible error). It is common for the parties to call the court's attention to the approaching deadline, have one witness sworn, and then continue the hearing to a mutually convenient time for the court and parties. Hartman, 30 C3d at 765.

§39.29 b. Motions in Limine

A motion in limine does not qualify as having brought an action to trial within the meaning of CCP §583.310 unless the judge's ruling on that motion constitutes a final determination of the case. Hendrix v Hendrix (1985) 171 CA3d 859, 217 CR 609 (motion in limine involved question of law or fact not raised by pleadings; plaintiff removed case from civil active list to amend complaint rather than proceed to trial on existing complaint).

The Hendrix court, quoting Nelson v Specialty Records, Inc. (1970) 11 CA3d 126, 140, 89 CR 540, stated (171 CA3d at 863):

> An issue of law as to pleadings raised on the date of trial before a court sitting without a jury may be construed as having brought the case to trial if the ruling constitutes a final determination of a case, but otherwise … the action of [the] court does not constitute a final disposition [emphasis added].

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.30 c. Summary Judgment Motions

The granting of a motion for summary judgment is considered a trial when there is a determination of an issue of law or fact that results in a final disposition of the entire case. King v State (1970) 11 CA3d 307, 310, 89 CR 715. See also Lemaire, Faunce & Katznelson v Cox (1985) 171 CA3d 297, 217 CR 281; Southern Pac. Co. v Seabound Mills (1962) 207 CA2d 97, 24 CR 236.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.31 d. Binding Arbitrations

When parties submit to binding judicial arbitration and waive their right to a trial de novo, a trial occurs within the meaning of former CCP §583(b). Dodd v Ford (1984) 153 CA3d 426, 200 CR 256 (written stipulation of parties to submit to binding arbitration). Nonbinding arbitration does, however, toll the 5-year statutory period if the action is still submitted to arbitration more than 4 years and 6 months after the complaint was filed. CCP §1141.17(b). See §39.57.

In an action that has been stayed pending contractual arbitration proceedings, the 5-year period is tolled under CCP §583.340(b). See §39.40.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.32 e. Demurrers

A judgment of dismissal following the granting of a demurrer without leave to amend is a determination of the issues of law raised by the demurrer and constitutes a trial within the meaning of CCP §583.310. A demurrer also results in final disposition of the case for purposes of the dismissal statutes when the demurrer is granted with leave to amend and plaintiff fails to amend within the allotted time. See McDonough Power Equip. Co. v Superior Court (1972) 8 C3d 527, 105 CR 330 (not mere sustaining of demurrer, but entry of judgment acts as final disposition, disposing of case). See also Berri v Superior Court (1955) 43 C2d 856, 858, 279 P2d 8.

A hearing on a demurrer to a complaint does not constitute a trial when there is no final disposition of the entire case. See California Ammonia Co. v Macco Corp. (1969) 270 CA2d 429, 432, 75 CR 753. Because no trial has occurred, the action is subject to dismissal under CCP §583.310.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.33 f. Hearings to Enter Default Judgments

A hearing to enter a default judgment is not considered a trial for purposes of satisfying the 5-year statute for bringing an action to trial under CCP §583.310. Misic v Segars (1995) 37 CA4th 1149, 44 CR2d 100. Nor does a hearing on a motion to set aside a default judgment constitute a trial under former CCP 583(b). Meier v Superior Court (1942) 55 CA2d 675, 131 P2d 554. See §39.44 on tolling of 5-year statute during period when defendant is in default.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.34 g. Preliminary Injunctions

An application for a preliminary injunction is not considered a trial for purposes of satisfying the statute that an action be brought to trial within 5 years (CCP §583.310). Superior Oil Co. v Superior Court (1936) 6 C2d 113, 56 P2d 950.

§39.35 B. Statutory Extensions, Excuses, and Exceptions

Dismissal under CCP §583.360 is mandatory and not subject to extension, excuse, or exception unless expressly provided by statute.

The exceptions that do allow extensions, excuses, and exceptions are listed below:

- Written stipulation to extend the time in which an action must be brought to trial (CCP §583.330(a); see §39.36);
- Oral agreement made in open court to extend time of trial, if entered in the minutes of the court or a transcript is made (CCP §583.330(b); see §39.39);
- Court's jurisdiction to try action is suspended, or prosecution or trial of the action is stayed or enjoined, e.g., because of appeal, writ, arbitration (CCP §583.340(a)-(b); see §§39.40-39.45);
- Bringing action to trial is impossible, impracticable, or futile (CCP §583.340(c); see §§39.46-39.57).

If fewer than 6 months remain to bring the action to trial at the end of a statutory period of tolling or extension, the action may not be dismissed if it is brought to trial within 6 months after that period has ended. CCP §583.350; Him v Superior Court (1986) 184 CA3d 35, 228 CR 839. But see Waxman v Boren, Elperin, Howard & Sloan (1990) 221 CA3d 519, 270 CR 540 (cross-complainants who have given, then rescinded, an open-ended extension of time to answer and had not acted diligently to bring case to trial not entitled to 6-month grace period).

On tolling the period for bringing an action to trial when the plaintiff or defendant is on active duty in the military service, see 50 USC App §525 (Servicemembers Civil Relief Act of 2005); Buttler v City of Los Angeles (1984) 153 CA3d 520, 200 CR 372 (service member, or any plaintiff, may apply under 50 USC App §521 for stay of entire action if going forward without service member would adversely affect that party's rights). On tolling for judicial arbitration, see §§39.58-39.59. On waiver and estoppel, see §§39.60-39.62.

§39.36 1. Written Stipulation

The 5-year period within which an action must be brought to trial may be extended by parties' written stipulation. CCP §583.330(a). The stipulation need not be filed with the court but must be brought to the court's attention if relevant to a motion for dismissal. Counsel should check for local rules (particularly those to reduce trial delay) affecting the parties' right to stipulate to a later trial date.

A defense attorney's presence at a pretrial or trial-setting conference at which a trial date is set beyond the 5-year period is not a waiver of or substitution for the written stipulation requirement under former CCP §583(b). See Taylor v Shultz (1978) 78 CA3d 192, 144 CR 114.

A stipulation entered into after the 5-year period, e.g., extending the time for trial to a certain date, is enforceable. Estate of Thatcher (1953) 120 CA2d 811, 262 P2d 337. However, such a stipulation does not constitute a permanent waiver of the right to dismiss, and the action is subject to dismissal if not brought to trial on the date originally set. Fisher v Superior Court (1958) 157 CA2d 126, 131, 320 P2d 894.

Extending the time of trial to a date within the 5 years does not toll the 5-year period, absent a contrary intent. J.C. Penney Co. v Superior Court (1959) 52 C2d 666, 669, 343 P2d 919.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.37 a. Drafting Stipulation

A written stipulation is effective if it expressly extends the date of trial to a date beyond the 5-year period (General Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 449, 124 CR 745; Anderson v Erwyn (1966) 247 CA2d 503, 507, 55 CR 634) or expressly waives the right to dismiss (Bank of America v Superior Court (1937) 22 CA2d 450, 71 P2d 296).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should draft the stipulation carefully. A stipulation that the trial date "be reset for some convenient date" is not sufficient to extend the 5-year period. Hastings v Superior Court (1955) 131 CA2d 255, 258, 280 P2d 74.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.38 b. Effect of Agreement Extending Time to Answer

Courts have held that a written agreement to an open extension of the time to answer evidences a mutual intent to defer the action and must be enforced. The agreement is the equivalent of a stipulation extending the 5-year period indefinitely. Wheeler v Payless Super Drug Stores, Inc. (1987) 193 CA3d 1292, 238 CR 885. The Wheeler court stated (193 CA3d at 1302):

> When the written agreement precludes plaintiff from taking a default judgment prior to expiration of the five-year period, the defendant may not rely on plaintiff's failure to take default to obtain dismissal of the action.

In one case, the parties had stipulated to an open-ended extension of the time to plead subject to termination on notice. Before the 5-year period had expired, the plaintiff gave the defendant notice to answer the complaint. No answer was filed, and after expiration of the statutory period, a motion to dismiss was made. The court held that both the parties' written stipulation and the defendant's conduct waived the diligence normally required of plaintiffs under former CCP §583(b), thus tolling the statutory period and barring dismissal. Farrar, Herrick & Assoc. v Safecare Co. (1981) 115 CA3d 123, 171 CR 191. See also Meraia v McCann (1978) 83 CA3d 239, 147 CR 756.

No tolling occurs, however, when an open extension of time to answer is terminated by the defendant's answer before the expiration of the statutory period under circumstances that do not preclude the plaintiff from bringing the case to trial within the statutory period. See Gentry v Nielsen (1981) 123 CA3d 27, 31, 176 CR 385.

Failure to bring the action to trial within a reasonable time after an open-ended stipulation to answer has extended the statutory period can result in a dismissal notwithstanding a defendant's waiver. Chapin v Superior Court (1965) 234 CA2d 571, 44 CR 496 (trial date to be set for a time convenient to all parties subject to implied condition of reasonableness). On the plaintiff's diligence requirement, see §39.48.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.39 2. Oral Agreement in Court

If the stipulation is oral, it must be made in open court and either entered in the minutes or taken down by the court reporter. CCP §583.330(b). See Wright v Groom Trucking Co. (1962) 206 CA2d 485, 24 CR 80; Govea v Superior Court (1938) 26 CA2d 27, 78 P2d 433.

PRACTICE TIP: An informal oral agreement not meeting the requirements of CCP §583.330(b) might still provide a basis for the plaintiff to argue that the defendant waived the statutory requirement and is thus estopped from moving for dismissal. See discussion in §§39.60-39.62.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.40 3. Court's Jurisdiction Suspended

The time during which the court's jurisdiction is suspended, or when the prosecution or trial of the action is stayed or enjoined, is not included in computing the 5-year period for bringing the action to trial. CCP §583.340. The statutory period is extended for the length of time the court was divested of jurisdiction. CCP §583.340. See Spanair S.A. v McDonnell Douglas Corp. (2009) 172 CA4th 348, 90 CR3d 864 (jurisdiction suspended from removal to district court until district court mailed certified copy of remand order to superior court); Brock v Kaiser Found. Hosp. (1992) 10 CA4th 1790, 13 CR2d 678 (petition to compel arbitration and stay action; time when action is stayed is excluded under CCP §583.340(b)). But see Wheeler v City of Santa Monica (1990) 219 CA3d 1554, 269 CR 175 (court's jurisdiction not suspended when superior court's failure to assume jurisdiction resulted from plaintiff's failure to pay fee required to transfer case). Examples of situations in which the trial court's jurisdiction is suspended follow in §§39.41-39.45.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.41 a. Appeal Pending

The 5-year period is tolled during the time in which the matter is on appeal, commencing with the filing of the appeal. Bergin v Portman (1983) 141 CA3d 23, 25, 190 CR 81.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.42 b. Writ Pending

The 5-year period is tolled during the period a writ is pending for an appellate court to review whether a settlement is in "good faith" under CCP §877.6(c). CCP §877.6(e). For discussion of procedures required under CCP §877.6, see chap 50.

The 5-year period is also tolled during the period a writ is pending for an appellate court to review a denial of a motion for summary judgment. See Perez v Grajales (2008) 169 CA4th 580, 593, 86 CR3d 784. See also, e.g., Christin v Superior Court (1937) 9 C2d 526, 71 P2d 205 (writ of prohibition staying proceedings during review of pretrial matters).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.43 c. Automatic Stay in Bankruptcy Proceedings

As long as an automatic stay of all actions by creditors is in effect, the time in which a defendant is in bankruptcy proceedings under Chapter 11 (11 USC §§1101-1174) suspends the court's jurisdiction and tolls the statutory 5-year period for bringing the action to trial. Hughes v Portsmouth Square, Inc. (1982) 135 CA3d 170, 184 CR 926. See also Lane v Newport Bldg. Corp. (1986) 176 CA3d 870, 222 CR 443 (court's jurisdiction not suspended in respect to other defendants who are not in bankruptcy). See also form in §5.58 (Notice of Stay of Proceedings (Judicial Council Form CM-180)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.44 d. Defendant in Default

The period during which a defendant is in default, including the period during which the default judgment is in effect, is excluded from the 5-year period. Ford v Superior Court (1973) 34 CA3d 338, 343, 109 CR 844 (period between entry of default judgment and issuance of remittitur not included in applying 2-year and 5-year diligent prosecution provisions of former statute). For discussion of default generally, see chap 38.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.45 e. Period Between Party's Death and Appointment of Personal Representative

The time period between the date of either plaintiff's or defendant's death and the subsequent appointment of a personal representative is excluded from the calculation of the 5-year period. Pham v Wagner Litho Mach. Co. (1985) 172 CA3d 966, 972, 218 CR 476 (tolling provision applies whenever a trial court lacks jurisdiction to proceed).

The Pham court noted that the impossibility excuse (see §39.46) was also applicable because after plaintiff's death any proceedings taken in the absence of her personal representative would have been void. 172 CA3d at 973 n11. See also Herring v Peterson (1981) 116 CA3d 608, 172 CR 240 (counsel's authority expired with defendant's death; personal representative of estate can hire other counsel).

NOTE: There appears to be no time limitation on how long the 5-year statute will be tolled. 116 CA3d at 615. The Herring court found that the statutory period was extended indefinitely as long as the court lacked jurisdiction; in that case, jurisdiction was not restored for 7 years, and while that 7-year delay violated the former CCP §583, the court observed that statute itself did not set a time limitation on the tolling period. But see Pham v Wagner Litho Mach. Co., supra, suggesting that the statute was tolled only for the period of "temporary impracticability" during the time reasonably consumed in search of decedent's heirs.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.46 4. Impossibility, Impracticability, or Futility

The 5-year statutory period is tolled whenever it is impossible, impracticable, or futile to bring the action to trial. CCP §583.340(c). The impossible, impracticable, or futile exception to the 5-year period, developed by case law, was codified in 1984 in CCP §583.340(c) (Comment to CCP §583.340); thus, older decisions are often still viable under the present statute.

Plaintiff must show a causal connection between the circumstances of impossibility, impracticability or futility and bringing the case to trial. Sierra-Nevada Mem.-Miners Hosp., Inc. v Superior Court (1990) 217 CA3d 464, 473, 266 CR 50. See Tamburina v Combined Ins. Co. of Am. (2007) 147 CA4th 323, 333, 54 CR3d 175 (unusually long illness deprived plaintiff and counsel of substantial portion of 5-year period). Plaintiff must also show reasonable diligence in bringing the case to trial. De Santiago v D & G Plumbing, Inc. (2007) 155 CA4th 365, 372, 65 CR3d 882.

Courts are to interpret CCP §583.340(c) liberally to promote the policy that favors trial on the merits. Comment to CCP §583.340. The period is tolled for the duration of the excuse without regard to the remaining time following the removal of the disability. Comment to CCP §583.340. For example, the tolling of the 5-year period includes court-ordered trial continuances because of courtroom unavailability. Chin v Meier (1991) 235 CA3d 1473, 1 CR2d 499; Rose v Scott (1991) 233 CA3d 537, 284 CR 487 (time also tolled during periods case was continued on defendant's motions).

In De Santiago, 155 CA4th at 375, the Fourth District Court of Appeal rejected the holding of Chin that court-ordered continuances automatically toll the 5-year period, and held that a court must consider reasonable diligence in determining impracticability.

§39.47 a. Burden on Plaintiff to Prove Excuse

The plaintiff has the burden of demonstrating by clear and convincing evidence that (Lane v Newport Bldg. Corp. (1986) 176 CA3d 870, 873, 222 CR 443):

> the existence of either impossibility, impracticability or futility of bringing the matter to trial within five years. Absent such a showing, the five-year statute applies without any further consideration or determination of prejudice.

§39.48 (1) Excuse Conditional on Plaintiff's Diligence

As a condition to being excused from the 5-year requirement, the plaintiff must have exercised reasonable diligence in prosecuting the action. Moran v Superior Court (1983) 35 C3d 229, 197 CR 546. An assessment of the plaintiff's diligence requires an examination of all the circumstances present throughout the 5-year period. Cannon v City of Novato (1985) 167 CA3d 216, 223, 213 CR 132; Bennett v Bennett Cement Contractors, Inc. (1981) 125 CA3d 673, 178 CR 633.

The existence of impracticability is determined in light of all the circumstances in the individual case, including the acts and conduct of the parties and the nature of the proceedings themselves. The critical factor in applying the exception to a given factual situation is whether the plaintiff exercises reasonable diligence in prosecuting his or her case. Him v Superior Court (1986) 184 CA3d 35, 39, 228 CR 839, citing from Moran v Superior Court (1983) 35 C3d 229, 238, 197 CR 546. But see Lazelle v Lovelady (1985) 171 CA3d 34, 40, 217 CR 145 (5-year statute tolled for 69 days while courtroom unavailable in spite of plaintiff's "questionable diligence" earlier in case).

NOTE: An attorney's inexcusable neglect is generally chargeable to the client, except in those extreme instances in which the neglect amounts to positive misconduct that effectively obliterates the existence of the attorney-client relationship. Baccus v Superior Court (1989) 207 CA3d 1526, 255 CR 781 (delay in prosecution alone does not constitute abandonment or positive misconduct sufficient to excuse compliance with 5-year statute (CCP §583.310)).

§39.49 (2) Plaintiff's Duty to Inform Court of Statutory Deadline; Motion for Trial Preference

As expiration of the 5-year period approaches, the plaintiff must be especially diligent in informing the court of when trial should be set. Hoffman v State (1985) 171 CA3d 1100, 1107, 217 CR 867 (proximity of end of 5-year period charges plaintiff with constant vigilance).

Many cases support the rule that plaintiff has the burden of calling the court's attention to the necessity of setting the trial date within the period fixed by CCP §583.310. See, e.g., Baccus v Superior Court (1989) 207 CA3d 1526, 1535, 255 CR 781; Hill v Bingham (1986) 181 CA3d 1, 225 CR 905; Cannon v City of Novato (1985) 167 CA3d 216, 213 CR 132.

A plaintiff cannot avoid dismissal by acquiescing to a trial date beyond the 5-year period. Reliance on an improper date set by the court clerk or miscalculation of the time, or inadvertence in selecting a trial date, are not considered excusable. Sizemore v Tri-City Lincoln Mercury, Inc. (1987) 190 CA3d 84, 89, 235 CR 243. See Wilcox v Ford (1988) 206 CA3d 1170, 1175, 254 CR 138 (plaintiff not permitted to shift blame to defendant for lack of diligence); Taylor v Hayes (1987) 199 CA3d 1407, 1410, 245 CR 613 (duty to keep track of pertinent dates crucial to maintenance of lawsuit).

PRACTICE TIP: The best way a plaintiff can satisfy the duty to inform the court that the 5-year statute is nearing expiration is by making a motion for preference under CCP §36(e). See chap 42. Some courts have stated that under most circumstances it would be an abuse of discretion to deny a defendant's motion to dismiss if the plaintiff had not made a motion under former Cal Rules of Ct 225 (now see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1335) (motion to advance or specially set case for trial). See, e.g., Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v Superior Court (1983) 143 CA3d 95, 191 CR 549; State v Superior Court (Garner) (1979) 98 CA3d 643, 159 CR 650.

Alternatively, the plaintiff may use the technicality of having the action "brought to trial" approved in Hartman v Santamarina (1982) 30 C3d 762, 180 CR 337 (see §39.27); that is, call the court's attention to the situation, request that one witness be sworn, and then move for a continuance to a later date. See also Central Mut. Ins. Co. v Executive Motor Home Sales, Inc. (1983) 143 CA3d 791, 795, 192 CR 169. For discussion of when an action is "brought to trial" for purposes of the 5-year statute (CCP §583.310), see §§39.27-39.34.

§39.50 b. Court Not Under Mandatory Duty to Set Case Within Five-Year Period

A trial court is not under a mandatory duty to specially set a preferential trial date, even if the 5-year deadline is approaching. Salas v Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1986) 42 C3d 342, 228 CR 504. The considerations involved in ruling on a plaintiff's motion for trial preference under CCP §36(e) (see chap 42) are the same as those on a defendant's motion for discretionary dismissal under CCP §583.410-583.430. 42 C3d at 347. See Biondi, Flemming & Gonzales v Braham (1990) 218 CA3d 842, 847, 267 CR 365 (cross-complainant's motion for preferential setting should not have been denied when cross-complainant diligently filed at-issue memorandums; court should consider criteria listed in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(e) in deciding motion under CCP §36(e)). The trial court must look at the total picture, the 5-year limitation being an important, but not the sole, consideration; rather, all factors must be weighed, including:

- Plaintiff's diligence or dilatory action;
- Prejudice to defendant from delay;
- Condition of the court calendar;
- Rights of other litigants; and
- Likelihood of mandatory dismissal if an early trial date is not set.

See also Wilson v Sunshine Meat & Liquor Co. (1983) 34 C3d 554, 194 CR 773; Nye v 20th Century Ins. Co. (1990) 225 CA3d 1041, 275 CR 319 (no special setting for plaintiff whose counsel let two and a half years pass without acting and asked for special setting only 41 days before 5-year period expired; no need to show that defendant was prejudiced); Parlen v Golden State Sanwa Bank (1987) 194 CA3d 906, 240 CR 73.

NOTE: A trial court may not cite "court congestion" as the sole ground for refusing to specially set a case for trial. Dick v Superior Court (1986) 185 CA3d 1159, 230 CR 297 (trial court abused discretion, plaintiff diligent in prosecuting case; ample days remained in 5-year period to try case); Goers v Superior Court (1976) 57 CA3d 72, 74, 129 CR 29.

On duty to reset after timely request for trial de novo following mandatory arbitration, see Moran v Superior Court (1983) 35 C3d 229, 197 CR 546; §39.58.

c. Examples of Impossibility, Impracticability, or Futility

§39.51 (1) Motion to Disqualify Judge (CCP §170.6)

The time that elapses while a party disqualifies a trial judge under CCP §170.6 is not included when calculating the 5-year period for bringing an action to trial. Nail v Osterholm (1970) 13 CA3d 682, 686, 91 CR 908 (trial awaiting assignment of another judge). In one case, however, a cause was assigned to a trial judge whom defendants disqualified under CCP §170.6, then assigned to another judge whom the plaintiff disqualified. The court held that the period a trial is in abeyance pending the assignment of another judge is to be disregarded when considering a motion to dismiss under former CCP §583(b). Breacher v Breacher (1983) 141 CA3d 89, 91, 190 CR 112.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.52 (2) Counsel's Illness or Death

The 5-year statutory period for bringing the action to trial may be tolled on account of an attorney's illness or death if coupled with an otherwise diligent effort by the plaintiff to bring the case to trial. Him v Superior Court (1986) 184 CA3d 35, 228 CR 839 (applying reasonable diligence standard delineated in Moran v Superior Court (1983) 35 C3d 229, 238, 197 CR 546). However, the delay "attributable to sickness or death of counsel is not necessarily excusable. Each case must be decided on its own particular features and facts." Him, 184 CA3d at 39. The death of defense counsel does not support plaintiffs' claim of impracticability. Sanchez v City of Los Angeles (2003) 109 CA4th 1262, 135 CR2d 869.

§39.53 (3) Related Action Pending; Criteria

The 5-year statute may be tolled when a pending related action is being pursued on which the success of the present action depends. Rose v Knapp (1951) 38 C2d 114, 237 P2d 981; Bosworth v Superior Court (1956) 143 CA2d 775, 300 P2d 155.

The California Supreme Court has enumerated the criteria that a trial court should use to rule on a motion to dismiss under the 5-year statute when another action is pending between some of the same parties as a result of the same incident or transaction (Brunzell Constr. Co. v Wagner (1970) 2 C3d 545, 550, 86 CR 297):

- The relationship between the causes of action;
- The expense and difficulty likely to be created by separate trials;
- Plaintiff's diligence and good faith efforts;
- Prejudice or hardship to the defendant; and
- Any other relevant facts the court deems important for the purpose of determining whether it would have been impracticable and futile to bring the instant action to trial within the statutory period.

The statutory period under former CCP §583 is tolled regarding the pending state claim until the completion of the federal action arising out of the same event. McRoberts v Gorham (1971) 18 CA3d 1040, 96 CR 427.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.54 (4) Multiple Defendants; Severable Actions

Actions involving multiple defendants present unique concerns, particularly when each defendant has a legally severable action, because the complexity and expense to litigate each action individually may render trial within the 5-year period impracticable and futile. In reversing a trial court's order granting dismissal, one court held that the ability to sever an action does not preclude application of the impossibility, practicability or futility exception. Brunzell Constr. Co. v Wagner (1970) 2 C3d 545, 553, 86 CR 297. In that case, the plaintiff brought an action against several defendants in a construction contract. More than 5 years later, some defendants moved to dismiss the action with respect to themselves under former CCP §583(b) on the ground that the cause of action stated against them was severable from those stated against the defendants involved in a related pending matter. Owing to the various pretrial proceedings (e.g., injunction and order to quash service of summons), the plaintiff was unable to proceed to trial within 5 years against the defendants moving for dismissal. In applying its criteria, the court observed (2 C3d at 553):

> In instances in which proceeding to trial against one defendant becomes impossible or impracticable, the fact that a plaintiff could have severed his causes of action and proceeded separately against a codefendant is of course one important—indeed, the threshold—factor to be considered in determining whether it was impossible or impracticable for him to proceed to trial against that codefendant within the statutory period. Pacific Greyhound [Lines v Superior Court (1946) 28 C2d 61, 168 P2d 665] and Westphal [v Westphal (1943) 61 CA2d 544, 143 P2d 405] illustrate, however, that the availability of severance is not solely determinative in every instance.

An automatic stay order issued by the bankruptcy court as a result of a bankruptcy filed by one defendant does not excuse dilatory prosecution against codefendants. Lane v Newport Bldg. Corp. (1986) 176 CA3d 870, 222 CR 443. In that case, plaintiffs failed to take a number of steps that might avoid possible prejudice caused by the defendant's bankruptcy. These steps included a proposal to stay the entire action pending bankruptcy proceedings, stipulations extending the 5-year period, serving the claims against the bankrupt defendant, and seeking relief from the stay in bankruptcy court. Lane v Newport Bldg. Corp., supra.

Distinguishing Lane, the court in Rim Forest Lumber Co. v Woodside Constr. Co. (1987) 190 CA3d 454, 235 CR 443 (discretionary dismissal for failure to bring action to trial when plaintiff was otherwise diligent and defendant not prejudiced), ruled that plaintiff's delay in severing some, but not all, defendants in a bankruptcy proceeding does not justify dismissal under former CCP §583(a). The court speculated that the pending bankruptcy proceedings would have tolled the mandatory 5-year period for lack of jurisdiction under former CCP §583(b) and CCP §§583.310-583.360. See also Tannatt v Joblin (1982) 130 CA3d 1063, 1066, 182 CR 112 (dismissal of multiparty debt collection action reversed; court concluded plaintiff's forbearance from prosecuting secondarily liable defendants was neither "capricious nor unreasonable").

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.55 (5) Settlement Agreement

Most courts that have considered the matter have concluded that settlement of an action before trial tolls the 5-year dismissal period under CCP §583.310. Thus, for example, when a case was taken off calendar because the parties had orally agreed to settle, and the parties had been active, albeit unsuccessful, in trying to reduce the oral agreement to writing, the court of appeal ruled that defendants were not entitled to dismissal under CCP §583.310. Canal Street, Ltd. v Sorich (2000) 77 CA4th 602, 608, 91 CR2d 811 (no compelling reason settlement agreement must be reduced to judgment within 5 years). See also Gorman v Holte (1985) 164 CA3d 984, 988, 211 CR 34 (CCP §583.310 requires merely that trial begin within 5 years, not that judgment be entered within that time).

One court has, however, ruled that dismissal is mandatory in this situation. See Varwig v Leider (1985) 171 CA3d 312, 217 CR 208 (when settlement not reduced to judgment within 5 years of commencement of action, dismissal required; to enforce settlement, plaintiff required to bring second action based on original settlement agreement). The result can probably be avoided if plaintiff's counsel obtains a written stipulation from defendants expressly waiving the 5-year statute as a condition of the settlement.

§39.56 (6) Other Examples

Other circumstances in which the impossibility, impracticability, and futility exception has been applied to toll the 5-year period include:

- Trial court refused to set for trial in mistaken belief that 5-year period was tolled by appointment of special referee (Pat Rose Assocs. v Coombe (1990) 225 CA3d 9, 17, 275 CR 1, disapproved on other grounds in Adams v Murakami (1991) 54 C3d 105, 284 CR 318 (CCP §583.340 exception should be liberally construed));
- Impracticability of completing a substantial amount of discovery in the time left (Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v Superior Court (1983) 143 CA3d 95, 191 CR 549 (court of appeal found that no prejudice resulted from the delay));
- Consolidation of a personal injury action with a later accruing wrongful death action (General Motors Corp. v Superior Court (1966) 65 C2d 88, 52 CR 460);
- Necessary codefendant was armed forces member (Pacific Greyhound Lines v Superior Court (1946) 28 C2d 61, 168 P2d 665);
- Pending appeal from an order changing venue (Christin v Superior Court (1937) 9 C2d 526, 71 P2d 205); note, however, that time period in which change of venue was sought is not excluded (Moore v Powell (1977) 70 CA3d 583, 138 CR 914);
- Removal of case from civil active list to judicial arbitration (Brown v Engstrom (1979) 89 CA3d 513, 152 CR 628); and
- Default was entered against defendant (Maguire v Collier (1975) 49 CA3d 309, 122 CR 510).

§39.57 d. Examples of Nonexcuse

The 5-year period within which an action must be brought to trial is not excused by delay caused by:

- The plaintiff's illness. Singelyn v Superior Court (1976) 62 CA3d 972, 133 CR 486.
- Ordinary pretrial proceedings, e.g., demurrers and amendment of pleadings, time normally spent waiting for a place on the court's calendar, or securing a jury trial. Perez v Grajales (2008) 169 CA4th 580, 593, 86 CR3d 784; Wright v Groom Trucking Co. (1962) 206 CA2d 485, 497, 24 CR 80.
- Service of process on a foreign corporation by delivery of a summons and complaint to the secretary of state. Hughes & Ladd, Inc. v Rogue River Paving Co. (1975) 46 CA3d 311, 119 CR 925.
- Plaintiff's inadvertence in choosing trial date. Cannon v City of Novato (1985) 167 CA3d 216, 222, 213 CR 132 (court has no duty to verify plaintiff's calculation of 5-year date).
- Plaintiff's reliance on a clerk's statement that the case would trail for several months. Hoffman v State (1985) 171 CA3d 1100, 217 CR 867 (such reliance unreasonable; action not excepted from 5-year requirement).
- Trial court's mistake in setting the case for trial 1 day after expiration of the 5-year period. Singelyn v Superior Court (1976) 62 CA3d 972, 133 CR 486. For discussion of plaintiff's duty to inform court of 5-year statutory deadline, see §39.49.
- The time between a tentative court order and a final court order regarding the manner in which members of a class are to be notified of a class action. Standard Oil Co. v Superior Court (1976) 61 CA3d 852, 132 CR 761.
- Plaintiff's failure to request an early setting of a trial date. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v Superior Court (1983) 143 CA3d 95, 191 CR 549.
- Court clerk's setting of case for trial on a date beyond the 5-year period. Central Mut. Ins. Co. v Executive Motor Home Sales, Inc. (1983) 143 CA3d 791, 192 CR 169.

5. Judicial Arbitration

§39.58 a. When Tolling Occurs

Judicial arbitration within the last 6 months of the 5-year period extends the statutory period for the time the matter remains submitted to arbitration. CCP §1141.17(b); Gonzalez v County of Los Angeles (2004) 122 CA4th 1124, 1129, 19 CR3d 381 (5-year deadline in which case must be brought to trial tolled because case was sent to mediation during last 6 months of 5-year period). However, a plaintiff's failure to request judicial arbitration until shortly before the 5-year period would expire provides a basis for dismissal for want of prosecution. See Nanfito v Superior Court (1991) 2 CA4th 315, 2 CR2d 876 (plaintiff waited until 2 months before end of 5 years). Thus, if the case is submitted to or remains in arbitration (having been submitted earlier than the last 6 months of the 5-year period), the period from the date that is 4 years and 6 months after the action was filed to the date on which a request for trial de novo is filed is not included in computing the 5-year period. CCP §1141.17(b).

The trial court has a duty under CCP §1141.20 to restore a case to the same position on the trial calendar as it had before arbitration. Moran v Superior Court (1983) 35 C3d 229, 234, 197 CR 546. However, the plaintiff is responsible for informing the court of the date when the 5-year period will expire and requesting an earlier trial date. Howard v Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 C4th 424, 41 CR2d 362. If the court fails to calendar correctly a trial date after having been properly informed, the action is tolled under CCP §1141.20, from the request for trial de novo until the date of the trial. Howard v Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores, supra.

In another action, the plaintiff's lawsuit was not tolled while in arbitration because arbitration did not occur during the statutory period of excuse. There was more than 6 months between the filing of request for trial de novo and expiration of the 5-year period. Taylor v Hayes (1987) 199 CA3d 1407, 1411, 245 CR 613. See also State v Superior Court (Garner) (1979) 98 CA3d 643, 159 CR 650 (6½ month period after termination of arbitration was sufficient to advance trial to date within 5 years; plaintiff's failure to obtain trial de novo within remaining 6½ months was inexcusable).

The tolling of the 5-year period under CCP §1141.17(a) applies only to judicial arbitration under CCP §1141.10-1141.31. CCP §1141.17(a). It does not apply to contracts for arbitration under CCP §§1280-1288.8. Nanfito v Superior Court (1991) 2 CA4th 315, 2 CR2d 876. However, if the court grants a petition to compel contractual arbitration and stays the action, the time when the action is stayed is excluded under CCP §583.340(b). Brock v Kaiser Found. Hosp. (1992) 10 CA4th 1790, 13 CR2d 678 (criticizing Boutwell v Kaiser Found. Health Plan (1988) 206 CA3d 1371, 254 CR 173, which ignored stay under §583.340(b) and dismissed action for lack of reasonable diligence in arbitration hearing).

NOTE: Judicial arbitration includes arbitrations by stipulation of the parties or at plaintiff's election regardless of the amount in controversy (see CCP §1141.12), not just arbitrations ordered by the court under CCP §1141.11 because the amount in controversy will not exceed $50,000. For discussion of the effect of stipulating to "binding" arbitration on the 5-year statute, see §39.31. On applicability of CCP §1141.17 to intervenor's cause of action, see Johnson v Santos (1983) 148 CA3d 566, 196 CR 145 (claim of workers' compensation carrier also tolled for period plaintiff in arbitration).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.59 b. Plaintiff's Diligence Required

When a trial de novo is requested by either the plaintiff or the defendant after a judicial arbitration award, the plaintiff must act diligently to see that the case actually is set for trial before expiration of the dismissal period. Howard v Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 C4th 424, 41 CR2d 362 (plaintiff failed to inform court of impending 5-year statute and waited 6 months to file motion to specially set after defendant's request for trial de novo). See Serrano v FMC Corp. (1990) 221 CA3d 1027, 271 CR 41 (plaintiff did nothing for 2 years after requesting trial de novo); Wheeler v City of Santa Monica (1990) 219 CA3d 1554, 1562, 269 CR 175 (3-month period between arbitrator's award and date set for trial de novo need not be excluded in calculating 5-year period when plaintiff's own lack of diligence caused 10-month delay); Baccus v Superior Court (1989) 207 CA3d 1526, 1536, 255 CR 781 (plaintiff failed to call court's attention to imminence of 5-year deadline when requesting trial de novo). The plaintiff must also act diligently when a trial de novo is requested after an award under the Mandatory Fee Arbitration Act (MFAA) (Bus & P C §§6200-6206). Perez v Grajales (2008) 169 CA4th 580, 601, 86 CR3d 784 (attorney's failure to prosecute complaint after he rejected MFAA arbitration award repudiated his request for trial de novo).

The court has discretion to deny a plaintiff's request to specially set that is not promptly made after a request for trial de novo. Howard v Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores, supra. The plaintiffs' conduct before arbitration and after a request for trial de novo also may be considered by the court in determining whether discretionary dismissal is appropriate under CCP §§583.410-583.430. Howard v Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores, supra; Baccus v Superior Court, supra.

§39.60 6. Waiver and Estoppel

Under the statute, the principles of waiver and estoppel as developed by case law are preserved. CCP §583.140 ("Nothing in this chapter abrogates or otherwise affects the principles of waiver and estoppel"). A defendant waives the right to seek mandatory dismissal by going to trial without objecting. Butler v Hathcoat (1983) 146 CA3d 834, 194 CR 352. In Butler, the action proceeded to trial more than 8 and one-half years after the complaint was filed. Following trial, and the announcement of the tentative ruling, defendant moved to dismiss under the 5-year statute. The court held that "the defendant may waive, or be estopped to assert, the right to a dismissal and it is waived by proceeding to trial without moving to dismiss." 146 C3d at 837.

A defendant who induces a plaintiff to refrain from diligently pursuing the action also may be estopped from seeking dismissal under CCP §583.360 and may be held to have waived the right to seek dismissal. Conduct that will estop defendant from seeking a dismissal can be anything that lulls plaintiff into a false sense of security. Borglund v Bombardier, Ltd. (1981) 121 CA3d 276, 281, 175 CR 150 ("If … defendant … lulls the plaintiff into a false sense of security resulting in inaction, and there is reasonable reliance, estoppel must be available to prevent defendant from profiting from his deception"). See also Tresway Aero, Inc. v Superior Court (1971) 5 C3d 431, 437, 96 CR 571 (defendant estopped from quashing service of summons after having obtained extension of time to answer complaint that went beyond 3-year period).

The following four elements must be present to invoke the doctrine of equitable estoppel (Driscoll v City of Los Angeles (1967) 67 C2d 297, 305, 61 CR 661):

- The party to be estopped must be apprised of the facts.
- The party to be estopped must intend that his or her conduct would be acted on, or must so act that the party asserting the estoppel had a right to believe it was so intended.
- The other party must be ignorant of the true state of facts.
- The other party must rely on the conduct to his or her injury.

The existence of estoppel raises a question of fact for the trier of fact, whose determination is conclusive and binding on appeal unless the opposite conclusion is the only one to be reasonably drawn from the facts. Albers v County of Los Angeles (1965) 62 C2d 250, 266, 42 CR 89. However, when the evidence is not in conflict and is capable of only one reasonable interpretation, the existence of estoppel is a question of law. California Cigarette Concessions, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (1960) 53 C2d 865, 869, 3 CR 675.

§39.61 a. Conduct Resulting in Estoppel

- Defendant's misrepresentations. A defendant may be estopped from dismissing a case by having made misrepresentations to the plaintiff. Griffis v S.S. Kresge Co. (1984) 150 CA3d 491, 197 CR 771 (defendant estopped from seeking dismissal for failure to prosecute after plaintiff's attorney relied on defense counsel's misrepresentation to the court regarding expiration of the 5-year period).
- Defendant's request for continuance. A defendant may be estopped from dismissing a case by having requested a continuance beyond the 5-year period. Breacher v Breacher (1983) 141 CA3d 89, 190 CR 112 (defendant estopped from seeking dismissal under former CCP §583 after defendant's attorney, to avoid being on beeper call during the Christmas holidays, sought and received a continuance beyond the 5-year period). See also Holder v Sheet Metal Worker's Int'l Ass'n (1981) 121 CA3d 321, 327, 175 CR 313.
- Plaintiff's reliance on defendant's representations. A defendant may be estopped from dismissing a case by plaintiff's reliance on defendant's representations. Borglund v Bombardier, Ltd. (1981) 121 CA3d 276, 175 CR 150 (defendant's oral assertion to plaintiff that he would not seek dismissal should the 5-year statute expire, and plaintiff's reliance on that justified invoking doctrine of estoppel). In Borglund, defense counsel orally represented to plaintiff that former CCP §583 did not apply to an out-of-state plaintiff and, in any event, he would not seek dismissal on running of the 5-year statute. However, more than 7 years after the filing of the complaint, the defendant moved to dismiss. The court, in remanding the case, held that the trial court must consider equitable estoppel in ruling on the defendant's motion to dismiss.

§39.62 b. Conduct Insufficient for Finding of Estoppel

- Plaintiff's failure to track trial date. Plaintiff cannot shift the blame for delay to defendant for plaintiff's own lack of diligence in keeping track of pertinent dates and in failing to make an independent effort to confirm whether a trial continuance had been obtained. Wilcox v Ford (1988) 206 CA3d 1170, 1180, 254 CR 138.
- Defendant's written refusal to stipulate to extension. A defendant's written refusal to stipulate to an extension precludes any misunderstanding by plaintiff that might give rise to an estoppel defense to a motion to dismiss. Boutwell v Kaiser Found. Health Plan (1988) 206 CA3d 1371, 254 CR 173 (defendants agreed not to move for immediate dismissal if plaintiff promptly pursued arbitration, but defendants expressly stated in correspondence that they would not stipulate to extend mandatory dismissal period and advised plaintiff's attorney to take whatever steps necessary to protect his client's rights; after 1 year, the arbitration had still not taken place, and court held that defendants were not equitably estopped from seeking dismissal).

V. FAILURE TO BRING ACTION TO NEW TRIAL WITHIN THREE YEARS: MANDATORY DISMISSAL

§39.63 A. When Applicable; Statutory Measurement

A plaintiff must bring an action to trial within 3 years after a mistrial or jury disagreement, a decision on appeal, or the granting of a new trial. CCP §583.320. For discussion of whether an action has been "brought to trial" under CCP §583.320, see §39.27. When §583.320 applies, it is mandatory.

Section 583.320 does not apply if the initial 5-year period in which to bring the action to trial has not yet expired. CCP §583.320(b). For example, if the 5-year period were tolled because of an appeal pending after judgment on a demurrer, the plaintiff would now have the benefit of the full 5-year period from the filing of the complaint for bringing the action to trial, rather than the shorter 3-year period after remittitur was filed. These were the facts in McDonough Power Equip. Co. v Superior Court (1972) 8 C3d 527, 105 CR 330 (holding applying 3-year dismissal statute decided under former statute nullified by enactment of CCP §583.320(b)).

A petition for writ of mandate is not an appeal but an original proceeding that may result in issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate, but not a remittitur. Therefore, CCP §583.320 is not applicable, and dismissal of an action not brought to trial within 3 years of issuance of the writ is not required. Daum Dev. Corp. v Yuba Plaza, Inc. (1970) 11 CA3d 65, 89 CR 458. For further discussion, see California Civil Writ Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2008).

The statutory period for CCP §583.320 is measured as follows:

- If there is no judgment because of a mistrial or the jury is unable to reach a decision, retrial must commence within 3 years after the order declaring the mistrial or the disagreement of the jury is entered (CCP §583.320(a)(1)).
- If after judgment a new trial is granted and no appeal is taken, retrial must commence within 3 years after entry of the order granting the new trial (CCP §583.320(a)(2)).
- If on appeal the appellate court either affirms the granting of a new trial or reverses the judgment and remands the action for a new trial, retrial must be commenced within 3 years after the remittitur is filed by the clerk of the trial court (CCP §583.320(a)(3)).

An action will be dismissed on a noticed motion of defendant or by the court on its own motion. CCP §583.360. For discussion of procedures used in motions for dismissal, see §§39.71-39.75.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.64 B. Exceptions and Tolling of Statutory Period

Except as provided for by statute, CCP §583.320 is not subject to extension, excuse, or exception. CCP §583.360(b). The provisions governing permissible extensions, excuses, and exceptions and the tolling of CCP §583.320 are identical to the 5-year mandatory dismissal statute for failure to bring an action to trial. See, e.g., Good v State (1969) 273 CA2d 587, 592, 78 CR 316 (appeal reversed judgment on demurrer; plaintiff who failed to bring action to retrial within 3 years with respect to individual city employee defendants was excused regarding city defendant because of legislative moratorium then in effect that made retrial impossible).

These excuses and exceptions include impossibility, impracticability, futility, estoppel and waiver, and extension by written stipulation or oral agreement in court. For applicable discussion, see §§39.46-39.56.

VI. OTHER GROUNDS FOR INVOLUNTARY DISMISSAL

§39.65 A. Inherent Authority of Court

Independent of other statutory grounds, the court may dismiss an action with prejudice or impose other sanctions under court rules granting it inherent authority to do so. CCP §583.150. Lyons v Wickhorst (1986) 42 C3d 911, 231 CR 738. The court has the inherent power to dismiss an action based on a plaintiff's deliberate and egregious misconduct. Stephen Slesinger, Inc. v Walt Disney Co. (2007) 155 CA4th 736, 764, 66 CR3d 268. The court must set a hearing on the dismissal and mail notice to the parties at least 20 days before the hearing date. CCP §583.410(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1340; Sakhai v Zipora (2009) 180 CA4th 593, 598, 102 CR3d 691.

The Lyons court considered two factors to be important when the court exercises the discretionary power to dismiss:

- Whether the plaintiff's pattern of conduct was so severe and deliberate as to constitute extreme circumstances; and
- Whether alternatives less severe than dismissal are available.

"The 'sound exercise of discretion' requires that the judge consider and use lesser sanctions unless the court's authority cannot possibly be otherwise vindicated." Lyons v Wickhorst (1986) 42 C3d 911, 917, 231 CR 738 (discretionary dismissal not proper for plaintiff's failure to take part in mandatory judicial arbitration because lesser sanctions, e.g., costs and fees under CCP §128.5, were available). For currently operative sanctions statutes, see CCP §§128.6-128.7.

The court on occasion exercises its power to dismiss an action under a mandatory dismissal provision, even though the statutory time period for mandatory dismissal has not elapsed. See, e.g., Massey v Bank of America (1976) 56 CA3d 29, 33, 128 CR 144, 146 (class action cause of action dismissed because less than 2 months left in 5-year period was "grossly inadequate" for bringing to trial; court asked to determine only existence of class and form of notice to be given to members of class). See also Rice v Arden Farms Co. (1962) 199 CA2d 349, 18 CR 863.

Plaintiffs should take particular note of CCP §583.420, which limits the court's inherent power to dismiss an action at its discretion for delay in prosecution under CCP §§583.410-583.430. See Roman v Usary Tire & Serv. Ctr. (1994) 29 CA4th 1422, 35 CR2d 329 (trial court abused its discretion by dismissing case that was less than two years old). Thus, CCP §583.150 arguably limits dismissal to the statute's mandatory provisions and to situations other than those concerning a discretionary dismissal for delay in prosecution. An example of such a situation is an action based on a claim that can be shown to be a pretense or otherwise invalid. See Lyons v Wickhorst, supra.

§39.66 B. Failure to Pay Transfer Fees and Costs

An action transferred for improper venue cannot be further prosecuted until transfer costs and fees are paid. CCP §399(a). If transfer costs and fees are not paid within 30 days after service of notice of the transfer order, the court may dismiss the action on the noticed motion of any party. CCP §399(a). The dismissal by the court is without prejudice on condition that the same action may not be brought in another court until payment under the order is made. CCP §399(a).

The plaintiff can avoid dismissal following a payment made after the 30-day period, provided the papers are forwarded to the transferee court before the defendant's motion to dismiss is filed. See Moore v Superior Court (1970) 13 CA3d 869, 92 CR 23.

An order transferring venue is reviewable by petition for writ of mandate in a superior court action (CCP §400) other than a limited civil case (see chap 6), and by appeal in a limited civil case (CCP §904.2). If a writ of mandate under CCP §400 is filed in a trial court or if an appeal is taken under CCP §904.2, payment of transfer fees and costs is due within 30 days after notice of the finality of the order of transfer. CCP §399(a).

If a petition for writ of mandate or appeal is unsuccessful, the time for payment of transfer fees and costs is 60 days following service of the notice of the order. CCP §399(a).

When the order to transfer is based on the parties' stipulation expressly stating that the action was brought in the wrong court, a motion for dismissal for failure to pay transfer fees and costs under CCP §399 is permissible. Bechtel Corp. v Superior Court (1973) 33 CA3d 405, 410, 109 CR 138. See La Mirada Community Hosp. v Superior Court (1967) 249 CA2d 39, 57 CR 42 (motion to dismiss not permissible, because order for transfer based on general stipulation; no finding that action was brought in wrong court).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.67 C. Failure to Appear for Trial

The court may dismiss an action without prejudice on its own motion when no party appears for trial following proper notice. CCP §581(b)(3) (30-day notice of the time and place of trial). The court may also dismiss the action without prejudice when one party fails to appear and the appearing party seeks dismissal. CCP §581(b)(5).

A court has the authority to dismiss without prejudice either the entire complaint or only the part of the complaint relating to the particular defendant who appears and asks for the dismissal. CCP §581(l). But see Link v Carter (1998) 60 CA4th 1315, 71 CR2d 130, in which the sanction of dismissal for plaintiff's failure to appear at trial was reversed. The trial court in Link had set a continuance date without prior notice to plaintiff, who had already made plans to leave the country for medical treatment, and plaintiff had no history of noncompliance and had diligently prosecuted his case.

§39.68 D. Failure to Amend After Demurrer Sustained or Motion to Strike Granted

A court may dismiss a complaint with respect to a defendant after a demurrer has been sustained to the complaint without leave to amend and either party moves for dismissal. CCP §581(f)(1). The court may also dismiss an action after defendant's motion to strike the whole of a complaint is granted without leave to amend and either party moves for dismissal. CCP §581(f)(3).

The court may dismiss an action following the sustaining of a demurrer with leave to amend if plaintiff fails to amend within the time allowed by the court and either party moves for dismissal. CCP §581(f)(2); Harding v Collazo (1986) 177 CA3d 1044, 223 CR 329. Note, however, that dismissal after the sustaining of the demurrer is conditioned on the case's not being subject to CCP §597, which applies when demurrers entail special defenses or issues. CCP §581(f).

Similarly, the court is empowered to dismiss an action when a motion to strike is granted with leave to amend and the plaintiff fails to amend the complaint within the time allowed by the court. CCP §581(f)(4).

PRACTICE TIP: Either party may make an ex parte motion for dismissal under CCP §581(f). Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(h). Note, however, that ex parte motions require informal notice to be given beforehand. See chap 13.

Counsel should also check local court rules, although many are now preempted by Cal Rules of Ct 3.20 and 2.100(a).

§39.69 E. Failure to Comply With Discovery

A court may dismiss an action against any party for misuse of the discovery process. CCP §2023.030(d)(3). See Deyo v Kilbourne (1978) 84 CA3d 771, 796, 149 CR 499 (discussing factors relevant in considering discovery sanctions). See also Williams v Russ (2008) 167 CA4th 1215, 1223, 84 CR3d 813 (spoliation of evidence supported terminating sanction); Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v LcL Adm'rs, Inc. (2008) 163 CA4th 1093, 78 CR3d 200 (evasive responses and history of discovery misconduct supported terminating sanction); Miranda v 21st Century Ins. Co. (2004) 117 CA4th 913, 926, 12 CR3d 159 (court had power to dismiss uninsured motorist arbitration as terminating sanction under Civil Discovery Act); Baraz v U.S. (CD Cal 1998) 181 FRD 449 (in federal court, dismissal of action as sanction for discovery violation is permissible only on showing of willfulness, bad faith, or fault).

On failure to pay monetary sanctions, see, e.g., Williams v Travelers Ins. Co. (1975) 49 CA3d 805, 123 CR 83. The court may not impose terminating sanctions based on a motion to compel brought after the close of discovery, unless it reopens discovery. Pelton-Shepherd Indus. v Delta Packaging Prods., Inc. (2008) 165 CA4th 1568, 1589, 82 CR3d 64.

For further discussion of dismissal as a sanction for failure to comply with discovery, see California Civil Discovery Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

§39.70 F. Failure to Comply With Trial Court Delay Reduction Act

Under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act, rules in certain counties provide for dismissal of an action for refusal to comply with the rules of the act, comply with the judge's orders, or meet the required time deadlines. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.13. The court may not dismiss an action for noncompliance with local court rules implementing the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) if noncompliance is the fault of counsel, not the litigant. Garcia v McCutchen (1997) 16 C4th 469, 66 CR2d 319. See further discussion in §39.5.

VII. PROCEDURES FOR DISMISSAL UNDER MANDATORY STATUTES

§39.71 A. Motion to Dismiss

A motion to dismiss an action for lack of prosecution—based either on a failure to serve and return summons, or a failure to bring the action to trial within the requisite period—is made in the same manner as other pretrial motions, i.e., by filing and serving a notice of motion, a memorandum, and a declaration in support of the motion if appropriate.

If the plaintiff fails to serve summons within 3 years after commencing the action and to return it to the court within 60 days thereafter, a motion to dismiss under the 3-year statute is proper. CCP §583.250(a)(2). Similarly, if the plaintiff fails to bring the action to trial within 5 years, a motion to dismiss is appropriate. CCP §583.360(a).

NOTE: A motion to quash is a procedural device ordinarily used in the trial court to test the validity of service and has been used when plaintiff failed to serve summons within the 3-year time period. Mannesmann DeMag, Ltd. v Superior Court (1985) 172 CA3d 1118, 1124, 218 CR 632; Deas v Knapp (1982) 129 CA3d 443, 181 CR 76. On making and opposing motions to quash, see chap 19. But see Tandy Corp. v Superior Court (1982) 129 CA3d 734, 741 n5, 181 CR 319 (motion to dismiss express remedy for violation of former CCP §581a).

For discussion of ex parte motion to dismiss for failure to amend the complaint within the period granted by court after a demurrer is sustained or a motion to strike is granted, see §39.68.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.72 1. Who May Make Motion

Failure to serve and return summons. A motion to dismiss for failure to serve summons does not necessarily need to be made by a party to the action. Any person interested in the action (e.g., a potential Doe defendant), whether a party or not, may on noticed motion move for a mandatory dismissal for failure to serve a summons in a timely manner. CCP §583.250(a)(2). The action may also be dismissed by the court on its own motion. CCP §583.250(a)(2).

Failure to bring action to trial. Only a defendant or cross-defendant (see CCP §583.110(d)), or the court on its own motion (CCP §583.360(a)), may move for mandatory dismissal for failure to bring an action to trial after notice to the parties. CCP §583.360.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.73 2. Notice; Grounds

The notice of motion together with all supporting papers must be filed and served 16 court days before the hearing. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). When service is by mail, the notice period is increased by 5 calendar days if the party resides within California, 10 calendar days if mailed to another state, and 20 calendar days' notice if mailed outside the country. CCP §1005(b). Personal service requires only the 16 court days' notice. CCP §1005(b). See chap 18 on service by Express Mail and facsimile transmission.

Like all motions, a motion for dismissal for lack of prosecution must state the grounds on which it is based. CCP §1010. A court can consider only the grounds stated in the notice of motion. Maguire v Collier (1975) 49 CA3d 309, 122 CR 510.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.74 3. Supporting Papers

A memorandum in support of the motion must be filed with the motion to dismiss. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113(a). The court may treat absence of supporting memorandum as an admission that the motion is not meritorious and cause for its denial. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(a).

PRACTICE TIP: The declaration accompanying the motion should state facts showing why a dismissal is required and should also demonstrate the nonexistence of any statutory exceptions or periods during which the statute would be tolled. Counsel should list exact dates (e.g., when the complaint was filed commencing the action, and the duration of any period of excuse).

For discussion of procedures for noticed motions generally, see chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.75 4. Opposing Papers; Reply

Opposition to a motion to dismiss must be filed and served 9 court days before the hearing; any reply papers must be filed and served at least 5 court days before the hearing. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). Opposition and reply papers must be served by personal delivery, fax, express mail, or other method reasonably calculated to ensure delivery by the close of the next business day after the papers are filed. CCP §1005(c).

NOTE: If dismissal is sought under the discretionary dismissal statute, opposition papers are due 15 days after service of the moving papers. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(b). See discussion in §39.89.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.76 B. Order of Dismissal; Notice of Entry

All dismissals ordered by the court must be in the form of a written order, signed by the court and filed in the action. See CCP §1003. For form of order of dismissal, see §39.128. The party who successfully requests a dismissal of an action must serve a notice of entry of the dismissal on all parties. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1390. See form in §39.131.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.77 C. Attorney Fees

Counsel should consider requesting an award of fees after obtaining a dismissal if authorized by statute or contract between the parties. A defendant was entitled, for example, to recover attorney fees after obtaining a dismissal in an action on a payment bond (CC §3250) for the plaintiff's failure to timely serve the summons. Winick Corp. v Safeco Ins. Co. (1986) 187 CA3d 1502, 232 CR 479 (court construed dismissal as a favorable termination of the action for purposes of the statute).

For further discussion of attorney fees, see California Attorney Fee Awards (2d ed Cal CEB 1994); Fee Agreement Forms Manual (2d ed Cal CEB 2007).

D. Procedures After Court Ruling

§39.78 1. Defendant's Remedies When Dismissal Denied

When the court denies a motion to dismiss, the defendant may make a motion to reconsider under CCP §1008. See chap 12. Alternatively, defendant can consider seeking appellate review by petition for writ of mandate or prohibition. See Bernstein v Superior Court (1969) 2 CA3d 700, 701, 82 CR 775. Mandate may issue to compel dismissal and prohibition may issue to restrain the trial. See McDonough Power Equip. Co. v Superior Court (1972) 8 C3d 527, 105 CR 330; Coates Capitol Corp. v Superior Court (1967) 251 CA2d 125, 59 CR 231. See generally California Civil Writ Practice §§8.40-8.44, 8.50-8.56 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008).

Defendant cannot directly appeal from an order denying a motion to dismiss, but may proceed with the action and appeal the denial after final judgment is entered. CCP §§904.1-904.2. To do so, however, is neither a speedy nor adequate remedy. See Rio Del Mar Country Club v Superior Court (1948) 84 CA2d 214, 190 P2d 295.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.79 2. Plaintiff's Remedies When Dismissal Granted

Plaintiff may appeal the dismissal. An order of dismissal is equivalent to a final judgment and may be directly appealed. CCP §904.1(a)(1). See Daley v Butte (1964) 227 CA2d 380, 38 CR 693. See generally California Civil Appellate Practice (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

The plaintiff may also move to vacate the order of dismissal under CCP §473, on grounds of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, excusable neglect, or attorney neglect for those dismissals that occur because the plaintiff failed to oppose a dismissal motion. Peltier v McCloud River R.R. (1995) 34 CA4th 1809, 41 CR2d 182. However, filing an attorney's declaration under CCP §473 that a dismissal was due to the attorney's fault for any other reasons will not provide a plaintiff with additional grounds for relief for failure to bring an action to trial under the discretionary and mandatory dismissal statutes. Bernasconi Commercial Real Estate v St. Joseph's Regional Healthcare Sys. (1997) 57 CA4th 1078, 67 CR2d 475 (mandatory dismissal provisions); Peltier v McCloud River R.R., supra (discretionary dismissal provisions). For discussion of CCP §473, see chap 38. The motion to vacate the dismissal may be served on the opposing party's attorney. See Maxwell v Cooltech, Inc. (1997) 57 CA4th 629, 67 CR2d 293 (attorney-client relationship continues for purpose of accepting service of motion to vacate dismissal).

If the motion to vacate is denied, the order refusing to vacate the dismissal is independently appealable, together with the original order of dismissal. Farrar v McCormick (1972) 25 CA3d 701, 102 CR 190. See Daley v Butte (1964) 227 CA2d 380, 388, 38 CR 693.

Another option is for plaintiff to obtain a writ of mandate from a reviewing court directing the trial court to vacate its order of dismissal and reset the action for trial. See Brown v Superior Court (1970) 7 CA3d 366, 86 CR 670; Derry v Superior Court (1968) 266 CA2d 556, 72 CR 313.

For discussion of appellate review of rulings on motions for discretionary dismissal, see §39.94.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.80 E. Appellate Review: Abuse of Discretion Test

Dismissal under CCP §583.210 (service and filing proof of service of the summons) or CCP §583.310 (bringing action to trial) is mandatory and not subject to extension, excuse, or exception, except as expressly provided by statute. CCP §§583.250(b), 583.360(b). No judicially created excuses may be developed. See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §§346-350 (5th ed 2008). However, a trial court has broad discretion in ruling whether the plaintiff has proved one of the statutory excuses (e.g., impossibility), and its ruling will not be reversed except on a showing of clear abuse of discretion. Tresway Aero, Inc. v Superior Court (1971) 5 C3d 431, 436, 96 CR 571.

VIII. DELAY IN PROSECUTION: DISCRETIONARY DISMISSAL

§39.81 A. Who Makes Motion; Court's Authority; Grounds

The court may grant dismissal for a delay in prosecution on the motion of a defendant or cross-defendant or on its own motion. CCP §583.410. Dismissal under CCP §§583.410-583.430 is without prejudice. CCP §581(g). Thus, the plaintiff has the right to renew the action if the statute of limitations has not run.

NOTE: The court does have the inherent authority to dismiss and impose appropriate sanctions under CCP §583.410 (see §39.65) and to make any order necessary to effectuate its authority under CCP §583.430(b). Thus, the court does have the authority to dismiss with prejudice.

The court also has discretion to require, as a condition of granting or denying dismissal for delay in prosecution, that the parties comply with terms or conditions it deems proper to effectuate "substantial justice." CCP §583.430(a). See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(f) (court may defer its ruling pending performance by either party relating to trial or dismissal of case). Under CCP §583.430(b) the court may make any provisional or conditional orders to effectuate its authority, such as (Comment to CCP §583.340):

- Require the defendant to waive the statute of limitations;
- Require the defendant to dismiss a cross-complaint;
- Require completion of discovery;
- Require the filing of a certificate of readiness for trial; or
- Require preparation of a motion to advance the trial date.

To dismiss an action for delay in prosecution under CCP §583.410(a), one of the conditions given in CCP §583.420 must exist:

- Summons has not been served within 2 years after the action was commenced (see §39.82);
- The action was not brought to trial within 2 years after it was commenced (see §39.83); or
- A new trial was granted, and within 2 years the action has not been brought to retrial after (1) a mistrial or jury disagreement, (2) entry of judgment when no appeal was taken, or (3) remittitur was filed by the trial court after appeal (see §39.84).

The court must entertain a motion under CCP §§583.410-583.430 according to procedures and criteria prescribed in rules of court adopted by the Judicial Council. CCP §583.410(b). See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342. For discussion, see §§39.85-39.92.

PRACTICE TIP: Frequently, it is good strategy for the defense to use the discretionary dismissal provisions as a response in opposing a plaintiff's 11th-hour efforts to prosecute an action. Defense counsel usually, however, should consider waiting to make a motion under the mandatory dismissal provisions because the courts, except in extreme circumstances, are reluctant to grant a discretionary dismissal for delay in prosecution. See CCP §583.130 (in construing provisions of statute, policy favoring trial or other disposition on the merits is generally preferred over policy requiring dismissal for failure to proceed with reasonable diligence). A motion made under CCP §§583.410-583.430 often prompts the plaintiff's attorney to diligent, if belated, effort in the action. If expiration of the 5-year period is approaching plaintiff might respond by immediately making a motion to advance the case preferentially for trial under CCP §36(e). See §39.50.

The court, independent of its discretion to dismiss for delay in prosecution (CCP §§583.410-583.430), on the motion of a defendant or its own motion, has the authority to dismiss an action under the "inherent authority of the court." CCP §583.150. For discussion, see §§39.65-39.70 (other grounds for involuntary dismissal).

§39.82 1. Failure to Serve Summons Within 2 Years

The court, in its discretion, may dismiss an action if plaintiff fails to serve summons within 2 years after the action is commenced. CCP §583.420(a)(1); Hawks v Hawks (2006) 141 CA4th 1435, 47 CR3d 145 (discretionary dismissal only after 2-year delay). Absent a showing of "manifest" abuse, the trial court's ruling will not be disturbed. Blank v Kirwan (1985) 39 C3d 311, 216 CR 718.

The provisions for computing any extension of time for service of summons (CCP §§583.220-583.240) are applicable to discretionary dismissal for delay in prosecution. CCP §583.420(b). Consequently, the discretionary dismissal period may be extended by stipulation or by a stay in prosecution of the action that affected service or because defendant was not amenable to service, the validity or service was the subject of litigation, or if for any other reason service was "impossible, impracticable or futile" to effect for reasons beyond the plaintiff's control. For applicable discussion, see §39.18.

The court must exercise its discretion in accord with the procedures and criteria set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(e). For discussion, see §39.90.

§39.83 2. Failure to Bring Action to Trial or Conditionally Settle It Within 2 Years

The trial court has the discretion to dismiss an action if it is not brought to trial or "conditionally settled" within 2 years after commencement. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1340 (adopted by the Judicial Council under the authority of CCP §§583.410(b) and 583.420(a)(2)(B)). For definition of "conditionally settled," see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1340(c).

NOTE: Before Rule 3.1340 was adopted, 3 years was required from commencement of the action before the court could exercise its discretion under CCP §§583.410-583.430. See CCP §583.420(a)(2)(A).

The provisions governing the tolling and computation of the time period for mandatory dismissal based on failure to bring an action to trial within 5 years (CCP §§583.330-583.350) are the same as for discretionary dismissal. CCP §583.420(b). Consequently, the discretionary dismissal period may be extended by stipulation, by suspension of the court's jurisdiction, because the prosecution of the action was stayed or enjoined, or if for any other reason bringing the action to trial was "impossible, impracticable or futile." For applicable discussion, see §§39.46-39.57.

The court must exercise its discretion in accord with the procedures and criteria set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(e). CCP §583.410(b). For discussion, see §39.90. See also Seacall Dev., Ltd. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1999) 73 CA4th 201, 86 CR2d 229 (dismissal of petition for writ of mandate after 2 years for failure to prosecute vacated in light of attorney's abandonment of client and client's immediate action after learning of dismissal).

§39.84 3. Failure to Bring Action to Retrial Within 2 Years of Previous Disposition

The court has the authority to exercise its discretion to dismiss an action when the case has not been brought to retrial within 2 years after the following events:

- A court order declaring a mistrial or the jury's inability to reach a decision (CCP §583.420(a)(3)(A));
- An order granting a new trial, if after judgment no appeal is taken (CCP §583.420(a)(3)(B)); or
- Remittitur is filed by the clerk of the trial court affirming the granting of a new trial or ordering a new trial after reversing judgment (CCP §583.420(a)(3)(C)).

The court must exercise its discretion in accord with the procedures and criteria set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(e). For discussion, see §39.90.

B. Applicable Procedures

§39.85 1. Motion for Discretionary Dismissal

Special procedures prescribed in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342 govern a discretionary motion to dismiss for delay in prosecution under CCP §§583.410-583.430. CCP §583.410(b).

NOTE: The motion is normally made by a defendant, but the court may make its own motion to dismiss under this statute. CCP §583.410(a). If the court intends to dismiss on its own motion, the clerk is to set a hearing and mail notice to all parties at least 20 calendar days before the hearing date. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1340(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.86 a. Serve Notice 45 Days Before Hearing

A notice of motion for dismissal under CCP §§583.410-583.430 must be served and filed at least 45 days before the date set for the hearing of the motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(a). If the moving papers are served by mail, the notice period is extended in accordance with CCP §1013(a).

The long notice period gives the plaintiff time to move the case toward trial before the motion is heard. See Farrar v McCormick (1972) 25 CA3d 701, 705, 102 CR 190.

PRACTICE TIP: If defendant is making a motion for discretionary dismissal in response to plaintiff's motion to advance a case for trial under CCP §36(e) (e.g., because the 5-year mandatory dismissal period has almost run), that plaintiff's motion requires only the usual 16-day notice (plus 5 days for service by mail on party residing in California). See CCP §1005(b). A defendant should consider moving for an order shortening time, so that the motions may be heard together.

California Rules of Court 3.1342 specifically applies to a "party seeking dismissal." The court when making its own motion is required to give only 20 days' notice. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1340(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.87 b. File Supporting Papers

A memorandum in support of the motion must be filed with the motion to dismiss. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113(a). See discussion in chap 12. The moving party also may file a declaration stating facts in support of the motion to dismiss. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(a).

PRACTICE TIP: Although the language of Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(a) is permissive, it is good practice to file a declaration supporting the motion. This is the most convenient way to put before the court the facts showing why the case should be dismissed. These facts should include those that show prejudice to the defendant because of the delay (see §39.92). List exact dates (e.g., dates on which the complaint was filed, the defendant served, etc.), so that the court does not need to search through the record to determine the length of time periods.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.88 c. No Stay in Proceedings

The filing of a notice of motion to dismiss an action at the court's discretion under CCP §§583.420-583.430 does not preclude the plaintiff from further prosecuting the case in order to bring it to trial. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(a). Indeed, the purpose of the longer notice period is to give the plaintiff a chance to move the case closer to trial. See Farrar v McCormick (1972) 25 CA3d 701, 705, 102 CR 190.

PRACTICE TIP: Because the motion often alerts the plaintiff to problems of delay in the case resulting in renewed efforts to prosecute the action, defense counsel should consider waiting for the longer statutory periods to pass before making a motion for mandatory dismissal under CCP §583.210 (failure to serve summons within 3 years and return it to court within 60 days thereafter), CCP §583.310 (failure to bring action to trial within 5 years), or CCP §583.320 (failure to bring to retrial within 3 years).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.89 2. Opposition and Reply Papers; Timing

If an opposing party fails to serve and file written opposition to a motion for discretionary dismissal, the court may construe that failure as an admission that the motion is meritorious and may grant the motion without a hearing on the merits. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(b).

A party serving papers opposing the motion must do so within 15 days after being served with the notice of motion. A supporting memorandum should be included. Counsel should also prepare and attach a supporting affidavit or declaration stating facts showing why the motion should be denied. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113(a).

If the moving party files a response within 15 days after service of the written opposition (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(c)), then the opposing party may, within 5 days after service of the response, serve and file a reply. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(d).

3. Court's Ruling

§39.90 a. Criteria Court Must Consider

Discretionary dismissal for delay in prosecution must be in accord with rules prescribed by the Judicial Council. CCP §583.410(b). The California Judicial Council adopted Cal Rules of Court 3.1342(e), which provides that the court is required to consider all matters relevant to a proper determination of the motion, including the following:

- The entire court file in the case including the affidavits and declarations and supporting data submitted by the parties;
- When applicable, the availability of the moving party and other parties for service of process;
- Plaintiff's diligence in seeking to effect service of process;
- The extent to which the parties engaged in any settlement negotiations or discussions;
- The parties' diligence in conducting discovery and other pretrial proceedings, including any extraordinary relief sought by either party;
- The nature and complexity of the case (see Denham v Superior Court (1970) 2 C3d 557, 86 CR 65);
- The law applicable to the case;
- The pendency of related litigation involving similar facts or determinative of the legal or factual issues in the case;
- The nature of any extensions of time or other delay attributable to either party;
- The condition of the court's calendar;
- The availability of an earlier trial date if the matter were ready for trial;
- Whether the interests of justice are best served by dismissal or trial of the case; and
- Any other facts or circumstances relevant to the fair determination of the issue.

The court must be guided by the policies set forth in CCP §583.130, which favor the right of parties to make stipulations in their own interests and dispose of litigation on its merits over the policy requiring dismissal for failure to prosecute an action with reasonable diligence. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(e).

Failure to consider the factors enumerated in Cal Rules of Ct §3.1342(e) constitutes an abuse of discretion. Dockery v Hyatt (1985) 169 CA3d 830, 215 CR 488. See also Lopez v Larson (1979) 91 CA3d 383, 153 CR 912 (court held press of business and attorney's workload is a factor to consider in reviewing a motion to dismiss). But see Freedman v PG&E (1987) 196 CA3d 696, 242 CR 8 (court held attorney's neglect is chargeable to client), and Carroll v Abbott Labs. Inc. (1982) 32 C3d 892, 187 CR 592 (client's liability for the neglect of attorney).

In a proceeding for dismissal under CCP §583.410, the court may require the parties to comply with any conditions or terms that in its discretion seem proper to effectuate substantial justice. CCP §583.430(a). See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(f) (court may defer its ruling pending performance by either party relating to trial or dismissal of case). For example, the court might condition the denial of a motion to dismiss on the plaintiff's promptly expediting certain discovery procedures and paying the defendant's costs of making the motion for discretionary dismissal.

The court also has the authority to make any order necessary to effectuate its ruling on the motion, including but not limited to provisions and conditional orders. CCP §583.430(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.91 b. Burden of Proof on Defendant

The defendant has the burden of demonstrating that a dismissal is proper and warranted under the circumstances of the case. CCP §583.410(a). Hocharian v Superior Court (1981) 28 C3d 714, 170 CR 790. See Martin v K & K Props. (1987) 188 CA3d 1559, 1566, 234 CR 161 (plaintiff's 3-year delay in filing a cross-complaint and failure to initiate discovery within 4 years justified dismissal). Defendant should show the existence of factors listed in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(e) (see §39.90) as well as prejudice (see §39.92).

The burden then shifts to plaintiff, who must demonstrate excusable delay. Freedman v PG&E (1987) 196 CA3d 696, 704, 242 CR 8. In Cubit v Ridgecrest Community Hosp. (1987) 194 CA3d 1552, 240 CR 346, the court determined that when a delay between filing of the complaint and the motion to dismiss increases from 2 years to 5, "the showing required to excuse a failure to bring a case to trial grows greater and greater." 194 CA3d at 1566. See also Corlett v Gordon (1980) 106 CA3d 1005, 165 CR 524 (the closer the 5-year period is to running, the greater the showing required to excuse a failure to bring an action to trial within the 5-year mandatory period).

PRACTICE TIP: Both plaintiff and defendant should use facts to support their positions. Vague references to the "complexity of the case" do not comprise an adequate showing. See, e.g., Longshore v Pine (1986) 176 CA3d 731, 737, 222 CR 364 (specific information needed to meet plaintiff's burden of excuse).

The fact that the trial court has routinely set a case for trial is immaterial. Lopez v State (1996) 49 CA4th 1292, 57 CR2d 266; Gunner v Van Ness Garage (1957) 150 CA2d 345, 310 P2d 32. The court cannot be expected to consider whether a case meets the criteria for dismissal at a routine trial setting conference. Lopez v State, supra.

Recent decisions have construed CCP §§583.410-583.430 to require a showing of prejudice to the defendant to justify dismissal as a result of the delay. Hurtado v Statewide Home Loan Co. (1985) 167 CA3d 1019, 213 CR 712 (dismissal overruled because no showing of prejudice). See Troupe v Courtney (1985) 169 CA3d 930, 215 CR 703. However, the California Supreme Court held that the defendant was not required to show that he had been prejudiced by the plaintiff's delay. The court reasoned that the "legislative policy underlying section 583 is not grounded solely in prejudice caused by delay to a defendant. Its purpose, too, is to expedite the administration of justice by compelling every person who files an action to prosecute it with promptness and diligence." Blank v Kirwan (1985) 39 C3d 311, 332, 216 CR 718. See also Longshore v Pine (1986) 176 CA3d 731, 222 CR 364.

Nonetheless, even after Blank v Kirwan, supra, appellate courts have reaffirmed the vitality of "prejudice" as a factor that, while not expressly enumerated in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(e), should be considered by the trial court in the exercise of its discretion, especially in a close case. See Rim Forest Lumber Co. v Woodside Constr. Co. (1987) 190 CA3d 454, 235 CR 443; Hilburger v Madsen (1986) 177 CA3d 45, 222 CR 713, disapproved on other grounds in Woods v Young (1991) 53 C3d 315, 279 CR 613.

In attempting to reconcile the conflicting viewpoints, it appears that the absence of prejudice is not necessarily fatal to defendant's motion to dismiss. Blank v Kirwan, supra. But, to the extent that defendant can demonstrate that he or she was prejudiced by plaintiff's delay, the chances for dismissal will increase. See Freedman v PG&E (1987) 196 CA3d 696, 242 CR 8; Adams v Roses (1986) 183 CA3d 498, 228 CR 339.

Appellate courts have also differed about whether there is or should be a "presumption" of prejudice due to delay by the plaintiff. The following decisions question the existence of such a presumption: City of Los Angeles v Gleneagle Dev. Co. (1976) 62 CA3d 543, 563, 133 CR 212; Visco v Abatti (1983) 144 CA3d 904, 192 CR 833. However, one court of appeal held that prejudice to a defendant may be presumed when the plaintiff's delay in the service of a summons is prolonged and defendant is unaware of the existence of the action. Luti v Graco, Inc. (1985) 170 CA3d 228, 238, 215 CR 902. See also Lopez v Larson (1979) 91 CA3d 383, 400, 153 CR 912 (dicta that there is an inherent prejudice to defendant when plaintiff has delayed service of summons and complaint, and the court may presume prejudice resulting from the delay in the service of summons). Another court concluded that in certain circumstances, prejudice may be presumed: A court does not abuse its discretion in presuming prejudice when a delay in service of the summons and complaint is prolonged and unjustified and defendants had no actual knowledge of the existence of the action. Adam, 183 CA3d at 505.

In summary, there appears to be no presumption of prejudice to the defendant from a delay in bringing the action to trial (see Cordova v Vons Grocery Co. (1987) 196 CA3d 1526, 242 CR 605), and no requirement that defendant make a showing of prejudice before an action may be dismissed (Longshore v Pine (1986) 176 CA3d 731, 222 CR 364), but the courts do seem to be able to find a presumption of prejudice from a delay in serving summons, probably because the defendant is unaware of the existence of the action when not served (see Luti v Graco, supra).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.93 C. Effect of Denial: Motion May Be Made Again

The court's discretionary denial of a motion to dismiss is not a determination that plaintiff's delay was justified as a matter of law and does not bar future motions to dismiss, especially by persons who are not then parties to the action. Feingersh v Lutheran Hosp. Soc'y (1977) 66 CA3d 406, 136 CR 155 (decided under former CCP §583(a)). However, when a second motion to dismiss is made on an alleged new set of facts, the parties must comply with the provisions of CCP §1008, requiring disclosure of the previous motion and when and what judge made the order or decision. See discussion in §12.113.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.94 D. Appellate Review

A judgment of dismissal is directly appealable. CCP §904.1. There is no appeal from the denial of the motion to dismiss because it is only an interlocutory order. While the order is interlocutory, defendant may, by writ of mandate or prohibition, seek to have the appellate court review the order. J.C. Penney Co. v Superior Court (1959) 52 C2d 666, 343 P2d 919. For further discussion of procedures after a court ruling, see §§39.78-39.79.

Plaintiff's petition seeking review of the propriety of the trial court's decision to dismiss an action must show a clear or manifest abuse of discretion. Blank v Kirwan (1985) 39 C3d 311, 331, 216 CR 718.

A grant of dismissal undergoes closer scrutiny than does a denial of a motion to dismiss. Hilburger v Madsen (1986) 177 CA3d 45, 51, 222 CR 713, disapproved on other grounds in Woods v Young (1991) 53 C3d 315, 279 CR 613. See Freedman v PG&E (1987) 196 CA3d 696, 242 CR 8 (questioning Hurtado v Statewide Home Loan Co. (1985) 167 CA3d 1019, 213 CR 712, in which the court held that the abuse of discretion standard did not apply). One court outlined the basic factors that should guide courts when reviewing a trial court's decision to grant a dismissal under former CCP §583(a). Competing policies under the statute must be weighed, namely, the policy that promotes diligent prosecution against the policy that seeks disposition of litigation on the merits rather than on procedural grounds. The policy of disposing of litigation on the merits is more powerful than the policy that seeks to promote prompt and diligent prosecution. Cubit v Ridgecrest Community Hosp. (1987) 194 CA3d 1552, 1566, 240 CR 346. See also Wilson v Sunshine Meat & Liquor Co. (1983) 34 C3d 554, 562, 194 CR 773. A corollary of that rule is that a court's denial of a defendant's motion to dismiss is usually presumed to be correct. See Denham v Superior Court (1970) 2 C3d 557, 564, 86 CR 65 (appellate test is whether trial court abused its discretion; if record is silent, appellate court will presume that plaintiff made a sufficient showing of excuse to justify denial of discretionary motion for dismissal).

The court's decision on a motion for discretionary dismissal must be made in accord with the conditions set out in CCP §583.420 and the criteria prescribed in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342. See Seacall Dev., Ltd. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1999) 73 CA4th 201, 86 CR2d 229 (dismissal of petition for writ of mandate after 2 years for failure to prosecute vacated in light of attorney's abandonment of client, client's immediate action after learning of dismissal, and fact that policy against delay under 2-year discretionary dismissal statute is not as strong as under mandatory 5-year rule).

IX. VOLUNTARY DISMISSAL

A. Description and Use

1. Applicability

§39.95 a. When Dismissal Applicable

Code of Civil Procedure §581, subject to certain exceptions, extends to the plaintiff the absolute right to dismiss an action either in whole or in part. This statute also provides for dismissal by consent of the parties or by the court in particular situations. Dismissal under §581 may be with or without prejudice. It is applicable to all civil actions or special proceedings, including the following:

- Intervention proceedings (Egly v Superior Court (1970) 6 CA3d 476, 86 CR 18);
- Actions seeking injunctive relief (Simpson v Superior Court (1945) 68 CA2d 821, 158 P2d 46);
- Eminent domain proceedings (Whittier Union High Sch. Dist. v Beck (1941) 45 CA2d 736, 114 P2d 731); and
- Actions in interpleader (Kaufman v Superior Court (1896) 115 C 152, 46 P 904).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/39 Dismissal/§39.96 b. When Dismissal Inapplicable

§39.96 b. When Dismissal Inapplicable

The plaintiff does not have the right to dismiss voluntarily under CCP §581 the following actions or proceedings:

- Order to show cause. Code of Civil Procedure §581 does not apply to an order to show cause, because it is not an "action" within the meaning of the statute. Marriage of Hurt (1985) 172 CA3d 872, 218 CR 451.
- Probate, child custody, guardianship. A plaintiff has no absolute right to dismiss probate, child custody, or guardianship actions. Malibu Outrigger Bd. of Governors v Superior Court (1980) 103 CA3d 573, 165 CR 1.
- Class action. A plaintiff has no absolute right, without court approval, to dismiss a class action. When a plaintiff sues on behalf of a class, he or she assumes a fiduciary obligation to the members of the class, surrendering any right to compromise the group action in return for an individual gain. Marcarelli v Cabell (1976) 58 CA3d 51, 54, 129 CR 509.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.97 2. Effect of Trial Court Delay Reduction Act Rules

The Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) has had a significant impact on the dismissal statutes. See chap 40. Counsel should consult local rules for the effect of the fast-track rules on the dismissal statutes for each county in which a case is pending. However, plaintiff's right to voluntarily dismiss a case without prejudice under CCP §581, if there has been "no trial of the issues," is not impaired by local fast-track rules regulating the action's progress. Harris v Billings (1993) 16 CA4th 1396, 20 CR2d 718 (court improperly vacated dismissal without prejudice and ordered dismissal with prejudice for failure to comply with local rules).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.98 3. Tactical Considerations

When a case seems weak, voluntary dismissal before trial may prevent the plaintiff from having to pay attorney fees to a prevailing defendant. See Marina Glencoe, L.P. v Neue Sentimental Film AG (2008) 168 CA4th 874, 877, 85 CR3d 800 (voluntary dismissal with prejudice may prevent court from awarding attorneys fees under CC §1717).

The plaintiff may be able to exchange a voluntary dismissal for the defendant's waiver of costs during the settlement negotiations of a low-value case (e.g., after discovery of damaging documentary evidence or admission at deposition that is fatal to a cause of action). See Cal-Vada Aircraft, Inc. v Superior Court (1986) 179 CA3d 435, 224 CR 809 (plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss without prejudice after court's order of summary adjudication when unresolved material issues remain). But see Miller v Marina Mercy Hosp. (1984) 157 CA3d 765, 204 CR 62 (matters deemed admitted under former CCP §2033; party not permitted to dismiss voluntarily without prejudice when admitted matter would effectively dispose of case).

In some instances, dismissal may reduce any potential liability the plaintiff or the plaintiff's counsel could have for malicious prosecution or abuse of process in maintaining the action if discovery does not support the defendant's liability. See §§1.4-1.5.

The defendant may, however, be able to request sanctions under CCP §128.7, which is based on Fed R Civ P 11, in a subsequent lawsuit for the plaintiff's filing of an action for an improper purpose that had just been dismissed elsewhere. See §1.6. The plaintiff may also be barred by collateral estoppel from relitigating issues actually adjudicated in the earlier action. See §38.119.

NOTE: Plaintiff's counsel should be cautious about voluntarily dismissing an action with prejudice. This step could cause disciplinary or malpractice problems if the client reconsiders and tries to file the action again before the statute of limitations has run. The reasons for any dismissal with prejudice should be documented and justified by the circumstances (e.g., dismissal with prejudice bargained for during settlement negotiations).

B. Dismissal Before Trial Commenced

§39.99 1. Dismissal as Matter of Right

An action may be dismissed before trial in the following circumstances:

- By the plaintiff unilaterally, on payment of any costs, with or without prejudice, regarding any defendant or cause of action, or regarding the complaint in its entirety (CCP §§581(b)(1), 581(c)); or
- By any party on written consent of all other parties (CCP §581(b)(2)).

A plaintiff as a matter of right may dismiss an action until there has been a hearing and decision on questions of law. Datner v Mann Theatres Corp. (1983) 145 CA3d 768, 193 CR 676. With certain exceptions (see §39.96), the plaintiff's right to dismiss is virtually absolute. See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §§283-285 (5th ed 2008).

A plaintiff's right to dismiss in an action in which no affirmative relief has been sought may be exercised without the parties' knowledge or court's consent any time before trial has commenced. Wilson v Los Angeles County Civil Serv. Comm'n (1954) 126 CA2d 679, 273 P2d 34. Neither the clerk nor the court can refuse to enter the dismissal. Klinghoffer v Barasch (1970) 4 CA3d 258, 262, 84 CR 350. Nor may the court set aside such a dismissal. Simpson v Superior Court (1945) 68 CA2d 821, 158 P2d 46.

2. Limitations on Right to Dismiss

§39.100 a. Cross-Complaint Seeking Affirmative Relief

A plaintiff loses the right to dismiss an action voluntarily when the defendant has sought affirmative relief by a cross-complaint. CCP §581(h). Counsel for the cross-complainant must consent to the dismissal in writing. CCP §581(b)(2).

Affirmative relief has been defined as (Simpson v Superior Court (1945) 68 CA2d 821, 824, 158 P2d 46):

> the allegations of new matter which in effect amounts to a counter attack. In other words, the relief sought, if granted, operates not as a defense but affirmatively and positively to defeat plaintiff's cause of action.

See also Wilson v Los Angeles County Civil Serv. Comm'n (1954) 126 CA2d 679, 273 P2d 34.

An answer does not seek affirmative relief unless it contains "affirmative allegations or introduces new affirmative matter entitling the pleader to such relief." Estate of Somers (1947) 82 CA2d 757, 759, 187 P2d 433.

The generally designated name of the pleading is not determinative of whether affirmative relief is sought. Rather, the controlling factor is whether affirmative relief is requested. Guardianship of Lyle (1946) 77 CA2d 153, 174 P2d 906.

§39.101 b. Complaint in Intervention

A complaint in intervention that seeks affirmative relief against either the plaintiff or a third party has the same effect as a cross-complaint under CCP §581(h) and may not be dismissed if dismissing the plaintiff's underlying case does not operate to dismiss the complaint in intervention. Bogardus v Santa Ana Walnut Growers Ass'n (1940) 41 CA2d 939, 108 P2d 52.

However, if the complaint contains no allegation of new affirmative matters, the plaintiff retains the absolute right to dismiss against the intervenor and defendant. Klinghoffer v Barasch (1970) 4 CA3d 258, 84 CR 350.

§39.102 c. Motion for Change of Venue Pending

A plaintiff is prevented from dismissing the action while a defendant's motion is pending to transfer the action to another court under CCP §396b. CCP §581(h). Following the grant or denial of the defendant's motion for change of venue, the plaintiff reacquires the ability to dismiss. On dismissal for failure to pay transfer fees and costs after successful motion for change of venue, see §§20.28-20.29.

§39.103 d. Plaintiff Not Sole Party-in-Interest

A plaintiff may not have a right to dismissal in certain representative actions, e.g., custody or guardianship proceedings. Ford v Superior Court (1959) 171 CA2d 228, 230, 340 P2d 296. The rationale is that an action based not on any statutory provision but on the inherent power of the court cannot be dismissed without court approval. Additionally, the welfare of a child is the primary interest of the court, not the parties to the action. Guardianship of Lyle (1946) 77 CA2d 153, 157, 174 P2d 906.

A shareholder's derivative suit may not be dismissed voluntarily. Ensher v Ensher, Alexander & Barsoom, Inc. (1960) 187 CA2d 407, 410, 9 CR 732. A stockholder bringing a derivative suit on behalf of the corporation is not permitted to dismiss the matter without the trial court's consent. Spellacy v Superior Court (1937) 23 CA2d 142, 147, 72 P2d 262.

Dismissals of class actions are governed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.770 and require court approval. Marcarelli v Cabell (1976) 58 CA3d 51, 129 CR 509.

§39.104 3. When "Trial Commenced"

A plaintiff has the right to dismiss without prejudice "at any time before the actual commencement of trial." CCP §581(b)(1). Under CCP §581(a)(6), a trial is deemed to have commenced:

- At the beginning of any party's opening statement or argument; or, if none,
- At the time of administering the oath or affirmation to the first witness or at the introduction of any evidence.

However, other limitations have evolved through the courts' construction of the term "commencement of trial." Harris v Billings (1993) 16 CA4th 1396, 1402, 20 CR2d 718. These limitations generally arise when the action has proceeded to a determinative adjudication, or to a decision that is tantamount to an adjudication. Harris v Billings, supra.

Code of Civil Procedure §581(a) is illustrative rather than exclusive of the circumstances under which a trial has begun. Miller v Marina Mercy Hosp. (1984) 157 CA3d 765, 768, 204 CR 62 (party who has admitted matters that would effectively dispose of case may no longer voluntarily dismiss). The term "commencement of trial" includes other procedures that "effectually dispose of the case." Wells v Marina City Prop. (1981) 29 C3d 781, 785, 176 CR 104. See Lewis C Nelson & Sons, Inc. v Lynx Iron Corp. (2009) 174 CA4th 67, 76, 94 CR3d 468 (voluntary dismissal filed 1 day after defendant filed motion to enforce settlement timely; trial court had issued no tentative ruling, and ruling in defendant's favor was not inevitable); Gogri v Jack In The Box Inc. (2008) 166 CA4th 255, 261, 82 CR3d 629 (voluntary dismissal filed before court issued tentative ruling on motion for summary judgment was timely); Gray v Superior Court (1997) 52 CA4th 165, 60 CR2d 428 (plaintiff's right to voluntarily dismiss cut off by commencement of evidentiary proceedings before referee in partition action); Hartbrodt v Burke (1996) 42 CA4th 168, 49 CR2d 562 (plaintiff requested dismissal without prejudice to avoid terminating sanctions for failure to comply with discovery order); M & R Props. v Thomson (1992) 11 CA4th 899, 14 CR2d 579 (plaintiff's right to voluntarily dismiss cut off after tentative ruling granting motion to dismiss for failure to bring to trial within 5 years effectively disposed of case); Cal-Vada Aircraft, Inc. v Superior Court (1986) 179 CA3d 435, 441, 224 CR 809 (trial is considered commenced when there has been an effective disposition of all issues of law, e.g., by pretrial motion).

NOTE: In Franklin Capital Corp. v Wilson (2007) 148 CA4th 187, 200, 55 CR3d 424, the Fourth District Court of Appeal adopted a "mere formality" test in an attempt to harmonize the many opinions that discuss when a trial has commenced. This test states that a voluntary dismissal is ineffective if it was made in light of a public and formal indication by the trial court of the legal merits of the case, or the dismissing plaintiff's procedural dereliction made dismissal inevitable. 148 CA4th at 200. The court found that a plaintiff's voluntary dismissal of a case, one day before an "order to show cause" hearing for dismissal or other sanctions, was effective. In Gogri, 166 CA4th at 268 n9, the court noted that the Franklin "mere formality" test is not the exclusive means for determining the timeliness of a voluntary dismissal.

§39.105 a. Demurrer Sustained Without Leave to Amend

A plaintiff's right to dismiss voluntarily terminates after a court sustains a general demurrer without leave to amend; the demurrer is a conclusive determination on the merits and is the equivalent of a "trial." Goldtree v Spreckels (1902) 135 C 666, 67 P 1091. If the court grants a demurrer to some but not all causes of action, the plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss the remaining causes of action under CCP §581. Gogri v Jack In The Box Inc. (2008) 166 CA4th 255, 272 n13, 82 CR3d 629.

Simply filing a demurrer does not divest a plaintiff of the ability to dismiss. Until the court's ruling on the demurrer, the plaintiff's right to dismiss remains absolute. Wells v Marina City Prop., 29 C3d at 789. The plaintiff retains the right to voluntarily dismiss the action without prejudice even on learning of the court's tentative ruling on a demurrer before the hearing. Datner v Mann Theatres Corp. (1983) 145 CA3d 768, 193 CR 676.

The plaintiff's right to a voluntary dismissal after a demurrer has been submitted to the court for a decision was affirmed in United Shippers, Inc. v Superior Court (1980) 104 CA3d 359, 162 CR 871 (decided under former CCP §581). United Shippers supports the view that a plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss an action at any time before the court issues a ruling in a matter that disposes of the entire action (e.g., by granting a demurrer or a special motion to strike a SLAPP suit under CCP §425.16).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.106 b. Demurrer Sustained With Leave to Amend

If the court sustains the demurrer with leave to amend, the plaintiff may dismiss the action without prejudice until the time to amend expires. Wells v Marina City Prop. (1981) 29 C3d 781, 789, 176 CR 104; Parsons v Umansky (1994) 28 CA4th 867, 34 CR2d 144. The plaintiff also retains the absolute right to voluntarily dismiss an amended complaint without prejudice following a demurrer to the original complaint with leave to amend. Christensen v Dewor Devs. (1983) 33 C3d 778, 191 CR 8.

One court held that an executed stipulation between the parties that a demurrer will be taken off calendar in exchange for the plaintiff's agreement to file an amended complaint by a specific date was the equivalent of a stipulation that the demurrer was sustained with leave to amend within the time specified and allowed by the stipulation and thus subject to a motion to dismiss under the terms of now former CCP §581(c). Harding v Collazo (1986) 177 CA3d 1044, 1053, 223 CR 329.

However, if a plaintiff has leave to amend and fails to amend within the time authorized by the court or the parties' stipulation, the plaintiff has been held to have no right to a voluntary dismissal under former CCP §581. Wells v Marina City Prop., supra (plaintiff's failure to amend within time set by court constitutes admission of inability to rectify the deficiencies in complaint). Accordingly, the court will not allow the plaintiff to dismiss the action in hopes of receiving a favorable result from a different trial forum. The only recourse available to the plaintiff is an appeal, not a dismissal.

§39.107 c. Summary Judgment

The plaintiff has no right to voluntarily dismiss an action without prejudice after summary judgment has been granted. See Malovec v Hamrell (1999) 70 CA4th 434, 441, 82 CR2d 712 (right to voluntarily dismiss without prejudice is terminated when court rules dispositively on case).

A plaintiff may not voluntarily dismiss without prejudice after an adverse tentative ruling on a summary judgment motion is issued and the hearing is commenced and continued under CCP §437c(h) for the sole purpose of allowing the plaintiff to gather opposition evidence it claimed was previously unavailable. Mary Morgan, Inc. v Melzark (1996) 49 CA4th 765, 57 CR2d 4. A plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss an action before the court issues its tentative ruling on a summary judgment motion. Gogri v Jack In The Box Inc. (2008) 166 CA4th 255, 261, 264, 82 CR3d 629.

A plaintiff who does not file opposition to a summary judgment motion may not avoid summary judgment by voluntarily dismissing the complaint without prejudice after the time for filing opposition to the motion has passed. Cravens v State Bd. of Equalization (1997) 52 CA4th 253, 60 CR2d 436. In Cravens, the plaintiff did not file the dismissal until the day before hearing date. The court ruled that a plaintiff who waits until after the time to file an opposition to dismiss the complaint is subject to the trial court's continuing jurisdiction to rule on the summary judgment motion. Conversely, a trial court erred in granting defendant's summary judgment motion after plaintiff filed voluntary dismissal one day before the summary judgment opposition was due. Zapanta v Universal Care, Inc. (2003) 107 CA4th 1167, 132 CR2d 842.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.108 d. Partial Summary Adjudication

Summary adjudication of some but not all issues in a case is not considered a trial within the meaning of CCP §581. Cal-Vada Aircraft, Inc. v Superior Court (1986) 179 CA3d 435, 224 CR 809. Under CCP §581(c), a plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss the complaint or any of its causes of action in respect to any defendant or defendants. Accordingly, the court is without further jurisdiction on those issues or parties after the plaintiff has dismissed them.

However, the Cal-Vada court suggested that a plaintiff who refiles a complaint after voluntary dismissal and a partial summary adjudication of issues could be collaterally estopped from litigating in the subsequent case the same issues that had been resolved in the summary adjudication of issues. 179 CA3d at 445. Although this issue was not decided, it is arguable that if a question has actually been litigated, then, in an action involving the same parties in later litigation, collateral estoppel is applicable. See Restatement (Second) of Judgments §25 (1980).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.109 e. After Unfavorable Judicial Arbitration Award

A party is not entitled to a voluntary dismissal after an adverse judicial arbitration award. Kelley v Bredelis (1996) 45 CA4th 1819, 53 CR2d 536 (dismissal with prejudice); Herbert Hawkins Realtors, Inc. v Milheiser (1983) 140 CA3d 334, 189 CR 450 (dismissal without prejudice). See Harris v Billings (1993) 16 CA4th 1396, 20 CR2d 718. After an adverse award, a party may either request a trial de novo or allow the award to be entered as a judgment that may be vacated under CCP §1286.2. If a party withdraws the request or voluntarily dismisses its complaint, the parties are restored to their positions before requesting a trial de novo and the award becomes final under CCP §1141.20. See §37.46.

C. Voluntary Dismissal During Trial

§39.110 1. With Prejudice

On commencement of trial, the plaintiff may no longer voluntarily dismiss an action without prejudice. CCP §581(b)(1). Any dismissal after the trial commences must be with prejudice to the right to file the same action again. CCP §581(e). However, a party may obtain a dismissal without prejudice after trial has commenced on the written consent of all affected parties or on court order after a showing of good cause. CCP §581(e).

A dismissal with prejudice terminates the action. Gagnon Co. v Nevada Desert Inn, Inc. (1955) 45 C2d 448, 455, 289 P2d 466. Merely labeling an action as dismissed with prejudice is inconclusive. Instead, the focus is on the "nature of the action and the character of the judgment." Gagnon Co. v Nevada Desert Inn, Inc., supra.

NOTE: Thus, when the dismissal order does not state whether the action is dismissed with or without prejudice, the record must reflect that there was an actual determination on the merits if it is to be considered a dismissal with prejudice.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Without Prejudice

§39.111 a. By Stipulation

Under CCP §581(e), voluntary dismissals may be entered without prejudice to the plaintiff bringing the same action again if the applicable statute of limitation has not run, when all affected parties consent. There is no requirement that the consent be written; it is binding on the parties whether the stipulation of counsel is filed with the court clerk or entered in the minutes. CCP §283; Harding v Collazo (1986) 177 CA3d 1044, 223 CR 329, citing Smith v Whittier (1892) 95 C 279, 30 P 529.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.112 b. By Court Order

The plaintiff may make a motion after trial commences to dismiss without prejudice on a showing of good cause. CCP §581(e). The court may also dismiss the action without prejudice because of the plaintiff's failure to prosecute under CCP §§583.110-583.430. See CCP §581(b)(4), (g). In addition, the court may dismiss without prejudice if the plaintiff abandons the matter.

Additionally, the court may dismiss without prejudice the entire action, or dismiss only with respect to that defendant, when either party fails to appear at the trial and the other party asks for the dismissal (CCP §581(b)(5), (l)) or when the dismissal is made under CCP §418.10 (motion to stay or dismiss action on inconvenient forum grounds) (CCP §581(h)).

D. Procedures

§39.113 1. Request for Dismissal; Attorney's Written Consent

The plaintiff's attorney fills out the form of Request for Dismissal (Judicial Council Form CIV-110) (see §39.130) and files it with the court clerk.

Voluntary dismissal is not permitted except by the written consent of the plaintiff's attorney of record, or, if consent is not obtained, by court order after notice has been given to the plaintiff's attorney of record. CCP §581(i). That is, a represented party may not unilaterally decide to dismiss an action without counsel's knowledge and agreement.

§39.114 2. Court Order of Dismissal

A court-ordered dismissal must be a written order signed by the court and filed in the action. CCP §581d. Once filed, the order constitutes a judgment and is effective for all purposes. CCP §581d.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.115 3. Entry of Dismissal

The written notice of dismissal must be entered into the clerk's register and is immediately effective for all purposes. CCP §581d. Once entered, no further court action is necessary to make the dismissal effective. Hopkins v Superior Court (1902) 136 C 552, 69 P 299.

The clerk's duty to enter dismissal is ministerial. The dismissal is effective when filed, even if the clerk fails to enter it. Associated Convalescent Enters. v Carl Marks & Co. (1973) 33 CA3d 116, 108 CR 782.

The clerk can be compelled to enter the dismissal on motion or by writ of mandate. Silverton v Free (1953) 120 CA2d 389, 261 P2d 17. See also 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §306 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.116 4. Setting Aside Dismissal

A plaintiff may set aside a dismissal if it resulted from mistake, inadvertence, surprise, excusable neglect, or attorney neglect. CCP §473(b); Isaacs v Jones (1933) 135 CA 47, 26 P2d 533. The motion to vacate must be made within a reasonable time not to exceed 6 months after entry of dismissal. CCP §473; Davies v Superior Court (1964) 228 CA2d 535, 39 CR 693. On CCP §473 motions, see chap 38.

The motion to vacate the dismissal may be served on the opposing party's attorney. See Maxwell v Cooltech, Inc. (1997) 57 CA4th 629, 67 CR2d 293 (attorney-client relationship continues for purpose of accepting service of motion to vacate dismissal).

E. Effect of Dismissal

§39.117 1. Without Prejudice

A dismissal without prejudice permits the plaintiff to file another action on the same claim, as long as it is filed within the applicable statute of limitations period. Gagnon Co. v Nevada Desert Inn, Inc. (1955) 45 C2d 448, 289 P2d 466; Kuperman v Great Republic Life Ins. Co. (1987) 195 CA3d 943, 241 CR 187.

Unless otherwise indicated, a dismissal will be considered to be without prejudice. Lewis v Johnson (1939) 12 C2d 558, 563, 86 P2d 99. See Cardiff Equities, Inc. v Superior Court (2008) 166 CA4th 1541, 1550, 83 CR3d 699 (plaintiff voluntarily dismissed first case after motion to compel arbitration had been granted, but before arbitration had begun, and filed second case containing only causes of action that were not subject to arbitration).

See also discussion in §§39.111-39.112 (dismissal of action without prejudice during trial).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.118 a. Action Not Res Judicata

A voluntary dismissal is not a final judgment. International Indus. v Olen (1978) 21 C3d 218, 145 CR 691. A dismissal without prejudice avoids the bar of res judicata in a later action. Crosswhite v American Ins. Co. (1964) 61 C2d 300, 38 CR 412; Kuperman v Great Republic Life Ins. Co. (1987) 195 CA3d 943, 241 CR 187.

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.119 b. Collateral Estoppel May Be Applicable

Collateral estoppel may preclude the same parties from litigating issues actually summarily adjudicated without substantial controversy in the earlier lawsuit. See Cal-Vada Aircraft, Inc. v Superior Court (1986) 179 CA3d 435, 446, 224 CR 809 (issue raised but undecided).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.120 2. With Prejudice

A dismissal with prejudice operates as a retraxit and terminates the lawsuit. Kronkright v Gardner (1973) 31 CA3d 214, 107 CR 270. The dismissal is like a judgment and is res judicata as to the claim dismissed. Fisher v Eckert (1949) 94 CA2d 890, 212 P2d 64; Spreckels v Spreckels (1916) 172 C 818, 158 P 543. That is, the dismissal will bar the action only to the extent that the facts alleged are insufficient to constitute a cause of action. If additional facts are alleged that cure any defects in the original pleadings, the dismissal does not act as a bar to a subsequent action. Wells v Marina City Prop. (1981) 29 C3d 781, 176 CR 104; Keidatz v Albany (1952) 39 C2d 826, 249 P2d 264.

3. Costs and Fees

§39.121 a. Costs Recoverable After Dismissal Without Prejudice

After a plaintiff has voluntarily dismissed the action, the court is without jurisdiction to act with respect to claims or parties except to award costs and statutory attorney fees. Associated Convalescent Enters. v Carl Marks & Co. (1973) 33 CA3d 116, 108 CR 782. See also Parrott v Mooring Townhomes Ass'n, Inc. (2003) 112 CA4th 873, 876, 6 CR3d 116. To prevent frivolous suits, a defendant is entitled to recover court costs incurred when the plaintiff dismisses without prejudice. Catello v I.T.T. Gen. Controls (1984) 152 CA3d 1009, 200 CR 4 (voluntary dismissal of complaint in intervention immediately before trial entitles defendant to costs as a prevailing party).

To recover court costs after the plaintiff voluntarily dismisses an action, the defendant must timely apply for a costs award. See CCP §1032; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700. The defendant need not file a proposed judgment together with its costs memorandum. Fries v Rite Aid Corp. (2009) 173 CA4th 182, 188, 92 CR3d 523.

In a multiplaintiff action, a prevailing defendant is entitled to recover costs incurred from a plaintiff who dismisses, even when the remaining plaintiffs maintain their actions. The voluntary dismissal of an action by one of several plaintiffs creates liability for costs, even though the balance of the action proceeds to trial. Catello v I.T.T. Gen. Controls (1984) 152 CA3d 1009, 1014, 200 CR 4. Thus, the holding in Foreman Roofing permits costs only to the extent that the nonprevailing party would not have incurred such expenses but for the intervention.

However, the court in Burrow v Pike (1987) 190 CA3d 384, 400, 235 CR 408, held that Catello does not support an award of costs when the defendant is not the prevailing party. Although CCP §1032 permits recovery of costs, a defendant is entitled to such costs only on a judgment in its favor. It would be inequitable to allow losing defendants to transfer the cost of litigation to a party who intervened in the action of a plaintiff who later dismissed the complaint. Burrow v Pike, supra.

PRACTICE TIP: The plaintiff's attorney should consider negotiating a waiver of the defendant's costs before requesting a voluntary dismissal without prejudice.

Voluntary dismissal of claims against one defendant triggers that defendant's time period to request attorney fees and costs regardless of the pendency of claims against other defendants. The dismissed defendant must file its memorandum of costs within 15 days after service of the notice of entry of dismissal (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(a)) and, because a voluntary dismissal is a judgment with the meaning of Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a), the dismissed defendant must file its motion for attorney fees within 60 days after notice of entry of dismissal (Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a), 3.1702(b)). Sanabria v Embrey (2001) 92 CA4th 422, 425, 111 CR2d 837 (attorney fees under contract).

© The Regents of the University of California

§39.122 b. Attorney Fees After Voluntary Dismissal

Unless provided for by contract, statute, or other law, attorney fees are not recoverable as costs. CCP §§1021, 1033.5(a)(10); Xuereb v Marcus & Millichap, Inc. (1992) 3 CA4th 1338, 1341, 5 CR2d 154 (parties may agree that prevailing party will be awarded attorney fees incurred in any litigation between themselves, whether such litigation sounds in tort or in contract).

In contract actions, the right to recover fees is governed by CC §1717. Under CC §1717, attorney fees are permitted in any action on a contract that specifically permits such recovery. To qualify for §1717 fees, the party seeking the award must be declared the "prevailing party" in the action. Bank of Idaho v Pine Ave. Assoc. (1982) 137 CA3d 5, 186 CR 695. See Scott Co. v Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1103, 86 CR2d 614 (CC §1717 requires that any contractual provision for attorney fees to prevailing party must be applied mutually, even if contract specifies that only one party may recover fees). See also PLCM Group, Inc. v Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 1088, 95 CR2d 198 (CC §1717 gives trial court broad discretion to award attorney fees to prevailing party, even when that party is represented by in-house counsel).

However, CC §1717(b)(2) provides that when "an action has been voluntarily dismissed or dismissed pursuant to a settlement of the case, there shall be no prevailing party for purposes of this section." Thus, when a defendant is dismissed from an action voluntarily, §1717(b)(2) precludes the award of attorney fees incurred in defending causes of action based on the contract, even if the contract authorizes recovery of those fees. Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 71 CR2d 830.

The recovery of attorney fees authorized by contract that are incurred in defending a tort or other noncontract claim, and that are otherwise recoverable as a matter of contract law, is not barred by CC §1717 or the decision in International Indus. v Olen (1978) 21 C3d 218, 145 CR 691. Santisas v Goodin, supra. In Santisas, the court held that the defendants were not entitled to recover attorney fees under CC §1717 on the breach of contract cause of action because plaintiffs had voluntarily dismissed the action. However, defendants were entitled, under the attorney fee provision of the agreement, to recover attorney fees as prevailing parties on the tort causes of action. See also Castro v Superior Court (2004) 116 CA4th 1010, 1024, 10 CR3d 865 (when lis pendens is withdrawn while motion to expunge is pending, moving party is neither automatically entitled to nor automatically denied attorney fees under CCP §405.38; trial court has discretion to award attorney fees based on determination of which party would have prevailed on motion to expunge and "whether, in light of all the circumstances, the imposition of fees would otherwise be unjust").

PRACTICE TIP: The plaintiff's attorney should consider negotiating a waiver of the defendant's attorney fees for tort or other noncontract claims before requesting a voluntary dismissal without prejudice.

Dismissal entered on the plaintiff's motion or by stipulation of the parties, before or during trial, is voluntary and precludes an award of attorney fees. CC §1717; D & J, Inc. v Ferro Corp. (1986) 176 CA3d 1191, 222 CR 656.

4. Sanctions on Dismissal

§39.123 a. When Imposed

A trial court is permitted to impose sanctions if a separate motion is made by a party. CCP §128.7(c)(1). Based on Fed R Civ P 11, CCP §128.7 gives the court power to award reasonable expenses and attorney fees for pleadings, petitions, or other papers that are (1) "presented primarily for an improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation"; (2) based on claims or legal contentions that are unwarranted by existing law or a nonfrivolous argument for the "extension, modification, or reversal of existing law or the establishment of new law"; or (3) based on factual contentions that are without evidentiary support. CCP §128.7(b)-(c). For further discussion, see §1.6.

The availability of CCP §128.7 sanctions against an offending plaintiff that has voluntarily dismissed its action depends on whether the sanctions motion is filed before or after the dismissal. A defendant cannot obtain CCP §128.7 sanctions by filing a motion for them after a voluntary dismissal. Hart v Avetoom (2002) 95 CA4th 410, 415, 115 CR2d 511. Conversely, the court may award sanctions if the voluntary dismissal comes after the sanctions motion is filed. Eichenbaum v Alon (2003) 106 CA4th 967, 973, 131 CR2d 296.

§39.124 b. Procedures for Recovering Sanctions

Under CCP §128.7, a motion for sanctions must be made separately from other motions or requests. CCP §128.7(c)(1). It may not be included as an additional prayer for relief in another motion. In making its decision on the motion, the court shall consider whether a party seeking sanctions has exercised due diligence in determining what sanctions should be ordered. CCP §128.7(c).

Like Fed R Civ P 11, on which it is based, CCP §128.7 provides a safe harbor for avoiding an award of sanctions. A motion under §128.7 must be filed before completion of the case, and it may not be filed or presented to the court unless the challenged paper, claim, defense, contention, allegation, or denial is not withdrawn or corrected within 21 days after the motion is served (or any other period the court prescribes). CCP §128.7(c)(1). See Li v Majestic Indus. Hills LLC (2009) 177 CA4th 585, 594, 99 CR3d 334 (error to award §128.7 sanctions for frivolous motion to vacate when court denied motion to vacate only 19 days after service of §128.7 motion thus denying plaintiff 21-day safe harbor period); Goodstone v Southwest Airlines Co. (1998) 63 CA4th 406, 73 CR2d 655 (safe harbor provisions of CCP §128.7(c)(1) precluded imposition of sanctions because sanctioned attorneys were not served with the sanctions motions the required number of days before they were filed to allow correction of conduct cited). Therefore, to comply with the safe harbor provision, a party seeking sanctions must proceed in two steps: First, the party must file a notice of motion for sanctions on the offending party at least 21 days before filing the motion with the court. See Galleria Plus, Inc. v Hanmi Bank (2009) 179 CA4th 535, 537, 101 CR3d 803 (reversing order granting sanctions because notice of motion for sanctions failed to state date of motion hearing, rendering notice fatally defective). The notice must describe the offending conduct specifically. CCP §128.7(c)(1); Barnes v Department of Corrections (1999) 74 CA4th 126, 130, 87 CR2d 594. Second, the motion may then be filed with the court if the offending party has not withdrawn the pleading or has not corrected the objectionable conduct. 74 CA4th at 130.

If investigation or discovery has not been completed, counsel should be able to request the court to extend the safe harbor period while the investigation or discovery proceeds.

A trial court may bring a motion for sanctions on its own initiative. CCP §128.7(c)(2). To comply with the safe harbor provisions, however, the court must bring the motion before it has ruled on the issue dispositively, such as in a summary judgment motion. Malovec v Hamrell (1999) 70 CA4th 434, 82 CR2d 712.

Although sanctions for violating CCP §128.7(b) may be imposed on attorneys, law firms, or parties, monetary sanctions are not available against a represented party for violating CCP §128.7(b)(2) (frivolous arguments). CCP §128.7(d)(1). Nor are monetary sanctions available when the court brings a motion for sanctions on its own initiative. Malovec v Hamrell, supra. Self-represented attorneys cannot recover their own attorney fees as sanctions under CCP §128.7. Musaelian v Adams (2009) 45 C4th 512, 87 CR3d 475.

§39.125 F. Review on Appeal

As a general rule, neither a plaintiff nor a defendant has a right to appeal a voluntary dismissal. Rosen v Robert P. Warmington Co. (1988) 201 CA3d 939, 247 CR 635. The rationale is that dismissal of the action is a ministerial act of the clerk, not a judicial act. Gray v Superior Court (1997) 52 CA4th 165, 60 CR2d 428; Associated Convalescent Enters. v Carl Marks & Co. (1973) 33 CA3d 116, 120, 108 CR 782.

A plaintiff may appeal, however, from a judgment entered following a dismissal. King v Superior Court (1936) 12 CA2d 501, 56 P2d 268. A plaintiff's appeal following the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend is directed at the order of dismissal, not at the order sustaining the demurrer. Dollar-A-Day Rent-A-Car Sys. v Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1972) 26 CA3d 454, 102 CR 651.

NOTE: Although a party may not appeal a voluntary dismissal, it may file a motion to vacate a dismissal. The denial of the motion is also nonappealable, but may be reviewed by extraordinary writ. Gray v Superior Court (1997) 52 CA4th 165, 60 CR2d 428.

I. INTRODUCTION

§40.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses judicial case management under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620), which applies to all actions and proceedings in superior court in each county (Govt C §68605.5), except juvenile, probate, and domestic relations cases (Govt C §68608(a)). Cases may also be exempted by local rule. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.2(b).

It discusses differential case management rules (see §§40.5-40.16), procedures for assignment to a case management plan (see §§40.17-40.35), special rules for the management of complex cases (see §§40.36-40.46), the case management conference (see §§40.47-40.58), the case management statement and order (see §§40.59-40.70), settlement conferences (see §§40.71-40.87), final status conference (see §40.88), and sanctions (see §40.89). For forms, see §§40.90-40.93.

B. Governing Law

§40.2 1. Statutes

Case management is governed by the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620), rules of court (see §40.3), and local rules (see §40.4).

- Title of act. Govt C §68600.
- Standards for timely disposition. Govt C §68603.
- Statistics on compliance with standards for timely disposition. Govt C §68604.
- Application of article. Govt C §68605.5.
- Judicial responsibilities. Govt C §68607.
- Effect of challenge under CCP §170.6. Govt C §68607.5.
- Exempt cases; sanctions for noncompliance. Govt C §68608.
- Uninsured motorist cases. Govt C §68609.5.
- Programs for training judges. Govt C §68610.
- Judicial development of procedures, standards, and policies. Govt C §68612.
- Funding of programs. Govt C §68613.
- Judicial council's contracting out for performance of duties. Govt C §68615.
- Procedure and time limitations. Govt C §68616.
- Report to legislature re Centers for Complex Litigation. Govt C §68617.
- Delay reduction for limited civil cases. Govt C §68620.

Other statutes govern trial-setting preference. See, e.g., CCP §§36(a) (aged, ill parties), 36(b) (party under age 14), 527(e) (preliminary injunction granted), 1062.3(a) (declaratory relief actions); see chap 35.

Other procedures govern case management before trial. Consolidation (procedure to combine separately filed lawsuits that involve common question of law or fact) is governed by CCP §1048(a). See chap 43. Severance or bifurcation (procedure that enables the court to divide lawsuit into one or more parts) is governed by CCP §1048(b). See chap 43. Coordination (procedure in which civil actions, pending in different courts, may be tried together) is governed by CCP §403. See chap 44.

§40.3 2. California Rules of Court

The Judicial Council has adopted rules under Govt C §68603(c) establishing a "case differentiation classification system." See Cal Rules of Ct 3.700-3.735.

§40.4 3. Local Rules

Under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620), each court may have its own delay reduction case management rules. Govt C §68612. Many counties have promulgated local rules governing case management. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 3.0-3.8 (civil case management); Los Angeles Ct R 7.0-7.20 (superior court delay reduction); San Diego Ct R 2.1.1-2.1.19 (case management); Orange Ct R 351-392 (case management); Santa Clara Ct R 1A-1E (differential civil case management system).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel will normally find it useful to contact the clerk of the particular court in which an action or proceeding may be, or has been, filed to learn that court's delay-reduction rules. The rules are also available on the court's website. A list of superior court websites appears at www.courtinfo.ca.gov/courts/trial/courtlist.htm.

Plaintiff's attorney must review the rules before filing a complaint. A defendant's attorney must do so as soon as possible after service. An attorney who already has a set of local rules should check with the clerk's office to ensure that the set is current. The burden is clearly on the attorney to know the current rules.

The Judicial Council has preempted local rules "relating to pleadings, demurrers, ex parte applications, motions, discovery, provisional remedies, and form and format of papers" (Cal Rules of Ct 3.20(a)) and specifically excludes from preemption "local court rules adopted under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act." Cal Rules of Ct 3.20(b)(4). There may, however, be some gray areas. For example, it may be unclear whether a requirement that a party meet and confer with the other parties before filing a motion is a rule implementing delay reduction goals or a rule relating to motions. Attorneys should check for amendments to local rules and, when necessary to resolve a matter, ask the court whether a local rule has been reinterpreted in light of Cal Rules of Ct 3.20 and 2.100(a).

NOTE: Local rules that manage complex litigation are not preempted by Cal Rules of Ct 3.20 and 2.100(a). See Volkswagen of Am., Inc. v Superior Court (2001) 94 CA4th 695, 703, 114 CR2d 541.

II. DIFFERENTIAL CASE MANAGEMENT RULES

§40.5 A. Purpose

The Judicial Council has adopted Cal Rules of Ct 3.700-3.715 for use by the courts to establish a case differentiation classification system based on the relative complexity of cases. These rules provide longer periods for the timely disposition of more complex cases. The rules may provide a presumption that all cases, when filed, must be classified in the least complex category. Govt C §68603(c); see Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.1.

The California Rules of Court are to be construed and administered to secure the fair, timely, and efficient disposition of every civil case. The rules are to be applied in a fair, practical, and flexible manner so as to achieve the ends of justice. Cal Rules of Ct 3.700.

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.6 B. Effect of Local Practice

Each court must adopt local rules on differential case management as provided consistent with Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.730 (case management conference, meet-and-confer requirement, case management order) and Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.1. Cal Rules of Ct 3.711. These rules vary, and the attorney must become completely familiar with the local delay reduction rules of any court in which he or she has cases pending. See, e.g., Moyal v Lanphear (1989) 208 CA3d 491, 499, 256 CR 296 (attorney has professional responsibility to be familiar with local court management rules). See §40.4 (local court rules).

C. Court's Role in Case Management

§40.7 1. Monitoring Case Progress

Courts now must take an active role in monitoring case progress and ensuring that attorneys take all steps necessary to prepare a case for trial or an informed settlement, including all discovery, as early as possible. Judges have the responsibility to eliminate delay in the progress and ultimate resolution of litigation, to assume and maintain control over the pace of litigation, to actively manage the processing of litigation from commencement to disposition, and to compel attorneys and litigants to prepare and resolve all litigation without delay, from the filing of the first document invoking court jurisdiction to final disposition of the action. Govt C §68607. See also Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.1.

The judges of the program shall, consistent with the policies of trial court delay reduction:

- Actively monitor, supervise, and control the movement of all cases assigned to the program from the time of filing of the first document invoking court jurisdiction through final disposition. Govt C §68607(a).
- Seek to meet the standards for timely disposition adopted under Govt C §68603. Govt C §68607(b).
- Establish procedures for early identification of cases within the program that may be protracted and for giving those cases special administrative and judicial attention as appropriate, including special assignment. Govt C §68607(c).
- Establish procedures for early identification and timely and appropriate handling of cases within the program that may be amenable to settlement or other disposition techniques. Govt C §68607(d).
- Adopt a trial-setting policy that, to the maximum extent possible, schedules a trial date within the time standards adopted under Govt C §68603 and that schedules a sufficient number of cases to ensure efficient use of judicial time while minimizing resetting caused by overscheduling. Govt C §68607(e).
- Commence trials on the date scheduled. Govt C §68607(f).
- Adopt and utilize a firm, consistent policy against continuances, to the maximum extent possible and reasonable, in all stages of the litigation. Govt C §68607(g). On continuances generally, see chap 42.

§40.8 2. Internal Court Management Procedures

Each trial court must perform the following (Cal Rules of Ct 10.901):

- Maintain a calendar and case flow management system, which will ensure that a sufficient number of cases are set for trial, based on the court's experience, so that all departments will be occupied with judicial business;
- Adopt for judges and court personnel an internal operations manual of policies and procedures necessary for efficient operation and management of the court;
- Maintain and periodically review for accuracy written local court procedures, policies, and operating practices not contained in local rules for quick, accurate, and complete reference; and
- Ensure that calendaring functions are performed as directed by the court and that personnel rendering direct and immediate service to the court are within its administrative control to the maximum extent consistent with the existing organizational structures.

D. Time Standards for Disposing of Cases

§40.9 1. Guidelines for Disposing of Case

The Judicial Council states that the goal of each trial court should be to process general civil cases so that all cases are disposed of within two years after their filing. Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(d). Each trial court should dispose of at least as many civil cases as are filed each year and, if necessary to meet the case-processing standards in Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(d), dispose of more cases than are filed. As the court disposes of inactive cases, it should identify active cases that may require judicial attention. Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(e).

More specifically, the goal is to manage general civil cases, except those exempt under Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(g), so that they meet the following case disposition rules (Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(f); see Cal Rules of Ct 3.713(b)):

- Unlimited civil cases (Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(f)(1)):
- 75 percent are disposed of within 12 months.
- 85 percent are disposed of within 18 months; and
- 100 percent are disposed of within 24 months.
- Limited civil cases (Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(f)(2)):
- 90 percent of the cases to be disposed of within 12 months;
- 98 percent within 18 months; and
- 100 percent within 24 months.

The goals in Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(f)(1)-(2) are guidelines for the court's disposition of all unlimited and limited civil cases filed in that court. In managing individual civil cases, the court must consider each case on its merits. To enable the fair and efficient resolution of civil cases, each case should be set for trial as soon as appropriate for that individual case consistent with Cal Rules of Ct 3.729. Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(f)(3).

These recommended time standards are intended to guide the trial courts in applying the policies and principles of Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.1. They are administrative, justice-oriented guidelines to be used in the management of the courts. They are intended to improve the administration of justice by encouraging prompt disposition of all matters coming before the courts. The standards establish goals for all cases filed and are not meant to create deadlines for individual cases. Through its case management practices, a court may achieve or exceed the goals stated in these standards for the overall disposition of cases. The standards should be applied in a fair, practical, and flexible manner. They are not to be used as the basis for sanctions against any court or judge. Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(b).

The exceptions to these rules are:

- Exceptional civil cases, i.e., a case that meets the criteria set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 3.715 and 3.400. Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(g).
- Small claims cases (90 percent disposed of within 75 days after filing; 100 percent disposed of within 95 days after filing). Govt C §68620(b); Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(h).
- Unlawful detainer (90 percent disposed of within 30 days after filing; 100 percent disposed of within 45 days after filing). Govt C §68620(b); Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(i).

PRACTICE TIP: The target date for disposing of a case varies among courts and, to some extent, by case type and complexity, but courts usually try to ensure that cases will be ready to begin trial within one year after filing. See §40.13. In some courts, judges plan on a trial between 18 and 24 months after filing when they believe that a trial will be required to dispose of the case, with the judgment about whether a trial will be required made approximately four to six months after filing. In any event, counsel with cases subject to a trial court delay reduction program cannot approach their trial preparation in a relaxed manner and assuming that trial is years away.

Each court has a general schedule with one or more points (e.g., return of summons, filing of at-issue memorandum, holding of first status conference), measured after the date of filing of the complaint, by which specified phases of case preparation are to have been completed or events are to have taken place.

Firm trial dates are a key feature of delay-reduction programs. The goal for all trial reduction cases is to start trial on the first assigned trial date. A firm trial date, under which the attorney need prepare for trial only once, may be viewed as a major benefit attorneys receive to compensate them for the court's assumption of control over the pace of litigation.

The point at which a trial date is selected varies considerably among courts and individual cases. A firm policy against continuances is also basic to delay-reduction programs. See Govt C §68607(g), discussed at §40.7.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.10 2. General Civil Cases Defined; Exemptions

§40.10 2. General Civil Cases Defined; Exemptions

The Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) applies to all actions and proceedings in all trial courts; "general civil case" means all civil cases (Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(f)), except the following (Govt C §68605.5):

- Probate. Govt C §68608(a).
- Family law, juvenile proceedings. Govt C §60608(a).
- Small claims. Govt C §68620(b); Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(h).
- Unlawful detainer. Govt C §68620(b); Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(i).
- Civil cases that involve exceptional circumstances or will require continuing review. Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(g).
- Cases assigned to a judge or judges for all purposes. Govt C §68608(a).
- Cases exempted by local rule. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.2(b).

Each court must adopt a case management and calendaring system for general civil cases that will advance the goals of Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.1. Cal Rules of Ct 10.900. Some courts have adopted local variations in establishing time standards for disposition of cases, although these standards are often superseded by statewide case management rules. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.700-3.715. See also Cal Rules of Ct 3.20, 2.100(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.11 3. Cases Removed From Court's Control

If a case is removed from the court's control, the period of time until the case is restored to court control should be excluded from the case disposition time standards. The matters that remove a case from the court's control for the purposes of this section include (Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(n)(1)):

- The filing of a notice of conditional settlement under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1385;
- An automatic stay resulting from the filing of an action in a federal bankruptcy court;
- The removal of the case to federal court;
- An order of a federal court or higher state court staying the case;
- An order staying the case based on proceedings in a court of equal standing in another jurisdiction;
- The pendency of contractual arbitration under CCP §1281.4;
- The pendency of attorney fee arbitration under Bus & Prof C §6201;
- A stay by the reporting court for active military duty or incarceration; and
- For 180 days, the exemption for uninsured motorist cases under Cal Rules of Ct 3.712(b).

E. Differentiation of Cases to Achieve Goals

§40.12 1. Evaluation and Assignment

The court must evaluate each case on its own merits as provided in Cal Rules of Ct 3.715 under procedures adopted by local court rules. After evaluation, the court must (Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(a)):

- Assign the case to the case management program for review under Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.730 for disposition under the case disposition time goals in Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(b) (see §40.13);
- Exempt the case as an exceptional case under Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(c) (see §40.14) from the case disposition time goals specified in Cal Rules of Ct 3.713(b) and monitor it with the goal of disposing of it within 3 years (see §40.9); or
- Assign the case to a local case management plan for disposition within 6 to 9 months after filing (Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(d); see §40.15).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.13 2. Case Management Plans

§40.13 2. Case Management Plans

Civil cases assigned to the case management program for review under Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.730 should be managed so as to achieve the following goals (Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(b)):

- Unlimited civil cases. The goal of each trial court should be to manage unlimited civil cases from filing so that (Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(b)(1)):
- 75 percent are disposed of within 12 months.
- 85 percent are disposed of within 18 months; and
- 100 percent are disposed of within 24 months.
- Limited civil cases. The goal of each trial court should be to manage limited civil cases from filing so that (Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(b)(2)):
- 90 percent are disposed of within 12 months;
- 98 percent are disposed of within 18 months; and
- 100 percent are disposed of within 24 months.

These goals are guidelines for the court's disposition of all unlimited and limited civil cases filed in that court. Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(b)(3). For example, a paint manufacturer brought into construction litigation as cross-defendant for equitable indemnity 14 months after filing of complaint was entitled to its requested 6-month continuance to give it adequate time to do sufficient discovery to prepare and schedule a timely summary judgment motion even though the 2-year limit of the delay reduction rules was thereby exceeded, because the rules must give way to the statutory right to bring summary judgment motion. Polibrid Coatings, Inc. v Superior Court (2003) 112 CA4th 920, 923, 6 CR3d 7.

In managing individual civil cases, the court must consider each case on its merits. To enable the fair and efficient resolution of civil cases, each case should be set for trial as soon as appropriate for that individual case consistent with Cal Rules of Ct 3.729. Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(b)(3).

There is no sanction or penalty for the court or parties if disposition does not occur, either by settlement or trial, within a specified period after filing. The Judicial Council time standards are guidelines to be used in court management and are not intended as a basis for sanctions. Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.14 3. Exemption of Exceptional Cases

The court may in the interest of justice exempt a general civil case from the case disposition time goals of Cal Rules of Ct 3.713(b) if it finds that the case involves exceptional circumstances that will prevent the court and the parties from meeting the goals and deadlines imposed by the program. In making the determination, the court is guided by Cal Rules of Ct 3.715 and 3.400. Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(c)(1).

If the court exempts the case from the case disposition time goals, the court must establish a case progression plan and monitor the case to ensure its timely disposition consistent with the exceptional circumstances, with the goal of disposing of the case within 3 years. Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(c)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.15 4. Local Case Management Plans

§40.15 4. Local Case Management Plans

For expedited case disposition, the court may by local rule adopt a case management plan that establishes a goal for disposing of appropriate cases within 6 to 9 months after filing. The plan must establish a procedure to identify the cases to be assigned to the plan. Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(d)(1). The plan must be used only for uncomplicated cases amenable to early disposition that do not need a case management conference or review or similar event to guide the case to early resolution. Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(d)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.16 F. Case Evaluation Factors

§40.16 F. Case Evaluation Factors

In applying Cal Rules of Ct 3.714, the court must estimate the maximum time that will reasonably be required to dispose of each case in a just and effective manner. The court must consider the following factors and any other information the court deems relevant, understanding that no one factor or set of factors will be controlling and that cases may have unique characteristics not susceptible to precise definition (Cal Rules of Ct 3.715):

- Type and subject matter of the action;
- Number of causes of action or affirmative defenses alleged;
- Number of parties with separate interests;
- Number of cross-complaints and the subject matter;
- Complexity of issues, including issues of first impression;
- Difficulty in identifying, locating, and serving parties;
- Nature and extent of discovery anticipated;
- Number and location of percipient and expert witnesses;
- Estimated length of trial;
- Whether some or all issues can be arbitrated;
- Statutory priority for the issues;
- Likelihood of review by writ or appeal;
- Amount in controversy and the type of remedy sought, including measures of damages;
- Pendency of other actions or proceedings which may affect the case;
- Nature and extent of law and motion proceedings anticipated;
- Nature and extent of the injuries and damages;
- Pendency of underinsured claims; and
- Any other factor that would affect the time for disposition of the case.

III. PROCEDURES FOR ASSIGNMENT TO CASE MANAGEMENT PLAN

§40.17 A. Case Assignment Procedure

Cases are assigned to a case management plan according to local practice. Each court must adopt a calendaring system for general civil cases that will advance the delay reduction rules. Cal Rules of Ct 10.900-10.901. Courts are usually "master calendar" or "direct (or independent) calendar" courts. In master calendar courts, cases are assigned to trial to a court department that is ready and able to hear the case, usually on the day the case is ready for trial. Grant v Superior Court (2001) 90 CA4th 518, 524, 108 CR2d 825. The presiding judge may, however, on the noticed motion of a party or on the court's motion, order the assignment of any case to one judge for all or such limited purposes as will promote the efficient administration of justice. Cal Rules of Ct 3.734.

Most other courts, such as those in the Central District of Los Angeles, are "direct calendar" courts, that is, they follow the federal system in assigning one judge for all purposes including trial. Zilog, Inc. v Superior Court (2001) 86 CA4th 1309, 1320, 104 CR2d 173; see, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.3(i). For example, in the Central District of Los Angeles, a case is randomly assigned to an I/C (individual calendar) judge in a manner that ensures that the parties and attorneys will not be able to anticipate any case assignment. The name of the judge is designated by the clerk on the summons and original complaint; the clerk also assigns a status conference date and attaches a status conference questionnaire and a notice of case assignment. It is the duty of each plaintiff (and cross-complainant) to serve a copy of the notice, the status conference questionnaire, and the date of the status conference along with the complaint (and cross-complaint). Los Angeles Ct R 7.1(b), 7.3(b)-(c). The courts in San Diego County issue a notice of case assignment, which includes the name, physical location, and department of the assigned judge, if any. It is the duty of the plaintiff to serve all defendants with a copy of the notice of case assignment. San Diego Ct R 2.1.3.

The case will also be assigned to a case differential plan; i.e., it will be evaluated and assigned to the case management program for review under Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.730 for disposition under the case disposition time goals in Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(b), it will be exempted as an exceptional case (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(c)), or it will be assigned to a local case management plan (Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(d)). Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(a); see §40.13.

Procedures may vary according to local rule, although some procedures appear to be the same in all counties, such as the use of the mandatory Civil Case Cover Sheet (Judicial Council Form CM-010) (see §40.90), the Case Questionnaire (Judicial Council Form DISC-010) in limited civil cases (see §40.92), and the Case Management Statement (Judicial Council Form CM-110) (see §40.93). These procedures, as well as examples of local court procedures, are discussed below.

1. Documents to Be Filed With Complaint and Summons

§40.18 a. Civil Case Cover Sheet

The first paper filed in a civil action or proceeding, except those filed in small claims or under the Probate, Family, or Welfare and Institutions Codes, must be accompanied by the Civil Case Cover Sheet (Judicial Council Form CM-010). Cal Rules of Ct 3.220(a)-(b). A fileable version of the Judicial Council form is available on the Judicial Council's website at www.courtinfo.ca.gov.

If a party provides a defective or incomplete cover sheet at the time the party's first paper is submitted for filing, the court clerk must file the paper. Failure of a party or a party's counsel to file a cover sheet as required by this rule may subject that party, its counsel, or both, to sanctions under Cal Rules of Ct 2.30. Cal Rules of Ct 3.220(c). For form, see §40.90. On sanctions, see §40.89.

Local court rules may require additional cover sheets. Los Angeles County requires that a local form, titled Civil Case Cover Sheet Addendum and Statement of Location (Los Angeles Form CIV-109), be attached and submitted. See Los Angeles Ct R2.0. The form is available on the court's website at www.lasuperiorcourt.org and is reproduced in §40.91.

§40.19 b. Case Questionnaire

In limited civil cases (cases under $25,000), the plaintiff has the option of completing the Case Questionnaire (Judicial Council Form DISC-010) and serving it with the complaint. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 3.4(B). If the plaintiff carries out this option, the plaintiff must use this form of case questionnaire. See §40.92. A fileable version of the Judicial Council form is available on the Judicial Council's website at www.courtinfo.ca.gov.

§40.20 c. Time for Filing

Delay reduction rules shall not require shorter time periods than service of the complaint within 60 days after filing. Govt C §68616(a); Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(b). See, e.g., San Diego Ct R 2.1.5 (requiring service and filing of proof of service within 60 calendar days after filing). Exceptions, for longer periods of time, (1) may be granted as authorized by local rule, and (2) shall be granted on a showing that service could not reasonably be achieved within the time required and with the exercise of due diligence consistent with the amount in controversy. Govt C §68616(a); Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(b).

§40.21 d. Unnamed Doe Defendants

Unnamed (Doe) defendants shall not be dismissed or severed before the conclusion of the introduction of evidence at trial, except on the parties' stipulation or motion. Govt C §68616(h).

§40.23 f. Improper Refiling of Case

Local rules often provide that it is not permissible to dismiss and refile a case for the purpose of obtaining a different judge. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(d)-(e); Orange Ct R 309.

2. Responsive Pleadings

§40.24 a. Time for Response

Service of responsive pleadings within 30 days after service of the complaint. The parties may stipulate to an additional 15 days. Exceptions, for longer periods of time, may be granted as authorized by local rule. Govt C §68616(b); see Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(d). See also, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 3.3(B).

§40.25 b. Stipulated Single Continuance Policy

Within 30 days after service of the responsive pleadings, the parties may, by stipulation filed with the court, agree to a single continuance not to exceed 30 days. Govt C §68616(d). It was the legislature's intent that these stipulations not detract from the courts' efforts to comply with the standards of timely disposition. To this end, the Judicial Council shall develop statistics that distinguish between cases involving, and not involving, these stipulations. Govt C §68616(d).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.27 C. Assignment of Related Cases

§40.27 C. Assignment of Related Cases

Local rules may govern the assignment of related cases. In Los Angeles County, a case may be ordered related to another case, including a probate or family law case, when it appears that the cases (Los Angeles Ct R 7.3(f), Cal Rules of Ct 3.300):

- Involve the same parties and are based on the same or similar claims;
- Arise from the same or substantially identical transactions, happenings, or events, requiring a determination of the same or substantially identical questions of law and/or fact;
- Involve claims against, title to, possession of, or damages to the same property; or
- Are likely for other good reasons to require substantial duplication of labor if heard by different judges.

For example, in Los Angeles County, counsel must file a notice of related case within 15 days after becoming aware that the cases are related, and there are court procedures for determination and case assignment. See Los Angeles Ct R 7.3(f); Cal Rules of Ct 3.300.

D. Coordination, Consolidation, and Severance

§40.28 1. Coordination

Coordination is a procedure in which civil actions, pending in different courts, that share a common question of law or fact may be consolidated by a motion to transfer in noncomplex cases (CCP §403) or by a petition for coordination in complex cases (CCP §404). Local case management rules often govern the procedures for coordination. See*, e.g.,* Los Angeles Ct R 7.3(h). On coordination, see chap 44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.29 2. Consolidation

Consolidation is a procedure that allows, and in some instances requires, the court to combine separately filed lawsuits that involve a common question of law or fact. See CCP §1048(a). It may be governed by local case management rules. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.3(g). On consolidation, see chap 43.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.30 3. Severance or Bifurcation

§40.30 3. Severance or Bifurcation

Severance or bifurcation is a procedure that enables the court to divide a lawsuit into one or more parts, to resolve the parts separately, and to determine the order in which the parts will be resolved. CCP §1048(b). Bifurcation is a subject for discussion at the case management conference (Cal Rules of Ct 3.727(10)) and may be governed by local rules. On bifurcation, see chap 43.

§40.31 E. Discovery

The Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) provides that CCP §§2016.010-2036.050 shall govern discovery, except in arbitration proceedings. Govt C §68616(f).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.32 F. Peremptory Challenges

Despite CCP §170.6, in direct calendar courts, challenges under that section shall be exercised within 15 days after the party's first appearance. Master calendar courts shall be governed solely by §170.6. Govt C §68616(i); Grant v Superior Court (2001) 90 CA4th 518, 524, 108 CR2d 825.

Local rules also govern the manner of challenge, which may differ according to whether the judge is a master calendar or independent calendar judge. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.5(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.33 G. Case Removed to Federal Court

Local case management rules may govern the removal of cases to federal court. In Los Angeles County, for example, if a case is removed to federal court, the court will order a date, no earlier than 90 days after the date of removal, by which counsel shall file a Notice of Status of Removed Case. If the case has not been remanded to the trial court by that time, it will be recorded as completed without the need to conduct a further status conference. Los Angeles Ct R 7.8. See also Orange Ct R 392.

§40.34 H. Diagnostic Questions

The following questions may be helpful to attorneys approaching a case that is subject to procedures implementing the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620):

Plaintiffs

1. Which court or courts are proper forums?
2. Do you have a copy of current local rules for each such court? If not, or if uncertain, call the clerk's office to obtain one, or consult the county court's website. A list of the superior court websites is available at www.courtinfo.ca.gov/courts/trial/otherwebsites.htm.
3. What is the projected time to trial under the rules? Is there a longer period allowed by rule or practice?
4. Do you have a reasonable likelihood of preparing this case for trial within the time period allowed by the rules?
5. Are the facts or issues sufficiently complex or the discovery problems sufficiently great that you might obtain a longer time period to trial?
6. Does the court require a cover sheet with the complaint? If so, be sure to obtain and complete the form before filing the complaint.
7. When are service of process and return of process required?
8. When is any challenge to a judge required?

Defendants

1. When is the answer due?
2. Do you have the current local rules? If not, or if uncertain, call the clerk's office right away.
3. What is the projected time to trial under the rules? Is there a longer period allowed by rule or practice?
4. Do you have a reasonable likelihood of preparing this case for trial within the time period allowed by the rules?
5. Are the facts or issues sufficiently complex or the discovery problems sufficiently great that you might obtain a longer time period to trial?
6. Does the court require a cover sheet with the answer? If so, be sure to obtain and complete the form before filing the answer.
7. When is any challenge to a judge required?
8. Can the case be settled before filing an answer?

§40.35 I. Suggestions for Handling Delay Reduction Cases

- Ensure that your staff knows which cases are being managed by the court under a trial court delay reduction plan and which ones are exempt.
- Use a different-colored file jacket for exempt cases.
- Starting at the outset of the case, calendar all dates for filings and events as early as possible. Put the dates on the front or the inside cover of the case file also.
- Place a reminder on your desk, in the case file, and on office calendars a specified number of days (e.g., 7, 10, or 14) before any date for a filing or event.
- Based on available information, identify possible deponents as early as possible and establish a tentative schedule (e.g., depose X in third month after filing and Y in fourth month) to ensure that all discovery can be completed within the time period allowed.
- Calendar dates for submitting other discovery, e.g., interrogatories, requests for admission.
- Identify potential experts as early as possible.

IV. SPECIAL RULES FOR MANAGEMENT OF COMPLEX CASES

§40.36 A. Definition

A "complex case" is an action that requires exceptional judicial management to avoid placing unnecessary burdens on the court or the litigants and to expedite the case, keep costs reasonable, and promote effective decision making by the court, the parties, and counsel. Cal Rules of Ct 3.400(a).

NOTE: Local rules that manage complex litigation are not preempted by Cal Rules of Ct 3.20 and 2.100(a). See Volkswagen of Am., Inc. v Superior Court (2001) 94 CA4th 695, 703, 114 CR2d 541.

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.37 1. Factors

In deciding whether an action is a complex case under Cal Rules of Ct 3.400(a), the court shall consider, among other things, whether the action is likely to involve (Cal Rules of Ct 3.400(b)):

- Numerous pretrial motions raising difficult or novel legal issues that will be time-consuming to resolve;
- Management of a large number of witnesses or a substantial amount of documentary evidence;
- Management of a large number of separately represented parties;
- Coordination with related actions pending in one or more courts in other counties, states, or countries, or in a federal court; or
- Substantial postjudgment judicial supervision.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.38 2. Provisional Designation

§40.38 2. Provisional Designation

Except as provided in Cal Rules of Ct 3.400(d) (court's discretion; see §40.39), an action is provisionally a complex case if it involves one or more of the following types of claims (Cal Rules of Ct 3.400(c)):

- Antitrust or trade regulation claims;
- Construction defect claims involving many parties or structures;
- Securities claims or investment losses involving many parties;
- Environmental or toxic tort claims involving many parties;
- Claims involving mass torts;
- Claims involving class actions; or
- Insurance coverage claims arising from any of the claims listed immediately above.

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.39 3. Court's Discretion

Despite Cal Rules of Ct 3.400(c) (provisional designation; see §40.38), an action is not provisionally complex if the court has significant experience in resolving like claims involving similar facts and the management of those claims has become routine. A court may declare by local rule that certain types of cases are or are not provisionally complex under this rule. Cal Rules of Ct 3.400(d).

§40.40 B. Complex Case Designation

A plaintiff may designate an action a complex case by filing and serving with the initial complaint the Civil Case Cover Sheet (Judicial Council Form CM-010) marked to indicate that the action is a complex case. Cal Rules of Ct 3.401. For form, see §40.90.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Complex Case Counterdesignations

§40.41 1. Noncomplex Counterdesignation

If a Civil Case Cover Sheet (Judicial Council Form CM-010) designating an action as a complex case has been filed and served and the court has not previously declared the action to be a complex case, a defendant may file and serve no later than its first appearance a counter Civil Case Cover Sheet designating the action as not a complex case. For form, see §40.90. The court must decide, with or without a hearing, whether the action is a complex case within 30 days after the filing of the counterdesignation. Cal Rules of Ct 3.402(a).

D. Action by Court

§40.44 1. Decision on Complex Designation

Except as provided in Cal Rules of Ct 3.402 (complex case counterdesignations), if a Civil Case Cover Sheet (Judicial Council Form CM-010) (see §40.90) that has been (Cal Rules of Ct 3.403(a)) > filed and served designates an action as a complex case, or checks a case type described as provisionally complex civil litigation, the court must decide as soon as reasonably practicable, with or without a hearing, whether the action is a complex case.

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.45 2. Court's Continuing Power

With or without a hearing, the court may decide on its own motion, or on a noticed motion by any party, that a civil action is a complex case or that an action previously declared to be a complex case is not a complex case. Cal Rules of Ct 3.403(b).

V. CASE MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE

§40.47 A. Background

In the past, most California superior courts routinely held trial-setting, pretrial, arbitration status, and status conferences. The Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) significantly changed these practices. Counties have adopted delay reduction rules consolidating the trial setting, pretrial, arbitration, and status conferences into a single conference. Local rules control its timing, purposes, and procedures. Govt C §68612.

There is no uniformity in the terminology chosen for this one comprehensive conference. Most counties and Cal Rules of Ct 3.722 call it the "case management conference" (San Francisco Ct R 3.4; Los Angeles Ct R 7.9; San Diego Ct R 2.1.9). For purposes of this discussion, it will be referred to as the case management conference.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.48 B. Initial Case Management Review; Exemptions

§40.48 B. Initial Case Management Review; Exemptions

In each case, the court must set an initial case management conference to review the case. Cal Rules of Ct 3.722(a). This rule applies to every general civil case except complex cases and cases exempt under Cal Rules of Ct 3.712(b)-(c) (uninsured motorist cases; cases included in petition for coordination), Cal Rules of Ct 3.714(c)-(d) (exceptional cases; uncomplicated cases), Cal Rules of Ct 3.725 (management of short cause cases), and Cal Rules of Ct 2.573 (False Claim Act cases). Cal Rules of Ct 3.721.

The court may order, on the stipulation of all parties or the court's own motion, that a case is a short cause case exempted from case management review and set the case for trial. Cal Rules of Ct 3.735(b). A short cause case is a civil case in which the time estimated for trial by all parties or the court is 5 hours or less. All other cases are long cause cases. Cal Rules of Ct 3.735(a). If a short cause case is not completely tried within 5 hours, the judge may declare a mistrial or, in the judge's discretion, may complete the trial. In a mistrial, the case will be treated as a long cause case and must be promptly set for either a new trial or for a case management conference. Cal Rules of Ct 3.735(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.49 C. Referral to Arbitration

No case may be referred to arbitration prior to 210 days after the filing of the complaint, exclusive of the stipulated period provided for in Govt C §68616(d). No rule adopted under this article may contravene CCP §§638-639. Govt C §68616(g). If parties agree to use an alternative dispute resolution (ADR) process, they must jointly complete the ADR stipulation form provided for under Cal Rules of Ct 3.221 and file it with the court. Cal Rules of Ct 3.726.

In each general civil case (except exempted cases under Cal Rules of Ct 3.721) the court at the time of the case management conference or review must ascertain whether the case is suitable for judicial arbitration. Cal Rules of Ct 3.721, 3.722(a). Local rules may also govern referral to arbitration. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(c) (court shall refer all appropriate cases to judicial arbitration or mediation).

On judicial arbitration, see chap 37.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.50 D. Subjects Considered at Case Management Conference

§40.50 D. Subjects Considered at Case Management Conference

At the conference, the court must review the case comprehensively and decide whether to assign the case to an alternative dispute resolution process, whether to set the case for trial, and the other matters stated in Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.730. Cal Rules of Ct 3.722(a). The initial case management conference should generally be the first case management event conducted by court order in each case, except for orders to show cause. Cal Rules of Ct 3.722(a).

At a case management conference the parties must address, if applicable, and the court may take appropriate action with respect to, the following (Cal Rules of Ct 3.727; see San Francisco Ct R 3.4; Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(a)):

- Whether there are any related cases (see, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.3(f));
- Whether all parties named in the complaint or cross-complaint have been served, appeared, or been dismissed;
- Whether any additional parties may be added or the pleadings may be amended;
- Whether, if a cause is a limited civil case, the economic litigation procedures under CCP §§90-100 will apply to it or whether the party intends to bring a motion to exempt the case from these procedures;
- Whether any other matters (e.g., the bankruptcy of a party) may affect the court's jurisdiction or processing of the case;
- Whether the parties have stipulated to, or the case should be referred to, judicial arbitration or any other form of Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) and, if so, the date by which the ADR must be completed (see, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(c));
- Whether an early settlement conference should be scheduled and, if so, on what date (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380);
- Whether discovery has been completed and, if not, the date by which it will be completed;
- What discovery issues are anticipated;
- Whether the case should be bifurcated or a hearing should be set for a motion to bifurcate under CCP §598 (see CCP §1048(b); see chap 43);
- Whether there are any cross-complaints that are not ready to be set for trial and, if so, whether they should be severed;
- Whether the case is entitled to any statutory preference and, if so, the statute granting the preference (see, e.g., CCP §§36(a) (aged, ill parties), 36(b) (party under age 14), 527(e) (preliminary injunction granted), 1062.3(a) (declaratory relief actions));
- Whether a jury trial is demanded, and, if so, the identity of each party requesting a jury trial;
- If the trial date has not been previously set, the date by which the case will be ready for trial and the available trial dates;

NOTE: A jury trial must be demanded when the case is first set for trial (if set on notice or stipulation) or within 5 days after notice of setting (if, as is usually the case, the matter is set without notice or stipulation). CCP §631(d)(4); see chap 41.

- The estimated length of trial;
- The nature of the injuries;
- The amount of damages, including any special or punitive damages;
- Any additional relief sought;
- Whether any insurance coverage issues may affect resolution of the case; and
- Any other matters that should be considered by the court or addressed in the case management order.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.51 E. Meet-and-Confer Requirement

§40.51 E. Meet-and-Confer Requirement

Unless the court orders another time period, no later than 30 calendar days before the date set for the case management conference, the parties must meet and confer, in person or by telephone, to consider each issue identified in Cal Rules of Ct 3.727(e) (subjects to be considered at case management conference; see §40.50) and, in addition, to consider the following (Cal Rules of Ct 3.724; see, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(b)(1)):

- Resolving any discovery disputes and setting a discovery schedule;
- Identifying and, if possible, informally resolving any anticipated motions;
- Identifying the facts and issues in the case that are uncontested and may be the subject of stipulation;
- Identifying the facts and issues in the case that are in dispute;
- Determining whether the issues can be narrowed by eliminating any claims or defenses by means of a motion or otherwise;
- Possible settlement;
- Identifying the dates on which all parties and their attorneys are available or not available for trial, including the reasons for unavailability; and
- Other relevant matters.

Local rules may set different time requirements for the meet-and-confer. See, e.g., Orange Ct R 315 (20 days after service of responsive pleading). The rules may also require the filing of a meet-and-confer statement. See, e.g., Orange Ct R 441 (joint meet-and-confer statement required to be filed within 30 days after service of the responsive pleading).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.52 F. Setting the Conference; Notice

Except in complex cases, the court may not require a status conference sooner than 30 days after service of the first responsive pleadings. Govt C §68616(e). In every general civil case except complex cases and those cases exempted (see §40.48), the court must review the case no later than 180 days after the filing of the initial complaint. Cal Rules of Ct 3.721.

Notice of the date of the case management conference must be given no later than 45 days before the conference, unless the court orders otherwise. The court may provide by local rule for the time and manner of giving notice to the parties. Cal Rules of Ct 3.722(b).

The attorney must, however, consult local rules to ascertain when the case management conference will be set. In some counties, the timing of the conference is controlled by the filing of the complaint. For example, in Los Angeles Superior Court, the first case management conference is held no later than 180 days after the complaint is filed. Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(a).

Procedures for notice of the case management conference vary, depending on the manner in which the conference date is set. For example, in San Francisco Superior Court the county clerk designates a status conference date on the face of the complaint when it is filed. The plaintiff is responsible for notifying all defendants of this date. San Francisco Ct R 3.4(A). Notice thus can be served with the complaint.

G. Attending Case Management Conference

§40.53 1. Who Must Attend

At the case management conference, counsel for each party and each self-represented party must appear personally or by telephone under Cal Rules of Ct 3.670; must be familiar with the case; and must be prepared to discuss and commit the party's position on the issues list in Cal Rules of Ct 3.727, 3.724 (subjects to be considered at case management conference and at meet-and-confer). Cal Rules of Ct 3.722(c).

The attorney should consult local rules to learn whether any additional parties must attend the case management conference. See, e.g., San Diego Ct R 2.1.9 (parties familiar with case and possessing authority to enter into stipulations must be present).

Telephone appearances are allowed for the case management conference, unless the court determines on a hearing-by-hearing basis that a personal appearance would materially assist in the determination of proceedings or the effective management or resolution of the case. Cal Rules of Ct 3.670(e)(2).

§40.54 2. Familiarity With Case

The attorney who attends the case management conference must be familiar with the case. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.722(a).

§40.55 3. Order Without Appearance

The case management order may, however, be made without an appearance of the parties or attorneys. If, based on its review of the written submissions of the parties and such other information as is available, the court determines that appearances at the conference are not necessary, the court may issue a case management order and notify the parties that no appearance is required. Cal Rules of Ct 3.722(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.56 4. Excuse From Attendance in Limited Civil Cases

In all general civil cases, except those exempted under Cal Rules of Ct 3.721 (see §40.48), the court must review the case and issue a case management order under Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.730, but by local rule the court may provide that counsel and self-represented parties are not to attend a case management conference in limited civil cases, unless ordered to do so by the court. Cal Rules of Ct 3.722(e). See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(d)(1).

§40.57 H. Additional Case Management Conference

The court on its own motion may order, or a party or parties may request, that an additional case management conference be held at any time. A party should be required to appear at an additional conference only if an appearance is necessary for the effective management of the case. In determining whether to hold an additional conference, the court must consider each case individually on its own merits. Cal Rules of Ct 3.723.

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.58 I. Conducting the Conference

The case management conference is conducted in the manner provided by local rule. Cal Rules of Ct 3.728. Generally, the subjects in Cal Rules of Ct 3.727 are considered. See §40.50. For example, in Orange County plaintiff's counsel shall arrange the case management conference (called the "issue conference") at a mutually agreeable time and location, and the parties shall (Orange Ct R 317):

- Exchange exhibits and inspect photos and diagrams (to be submitted on the day of trial), excluding those contemplated to be used for impeachment or rebuttal.
- Stipulate to all facts amenable to stipulation.
- Prepare a joint statement of the case.
- Prepare a joint witness list, including impeachment or rebuttal witnesses.
- Prepare a joint list of controverted issues. If all the parties fail to agree to an issue as controverted or uncontroverted, then the issue is controverted (required for both jury and nonjury trials).
- Exchange all motions in limine and other pretrial motions.
- Prepare voir dire questions for the court to include in its voir dire (jury trials only).
- Execute the statement of compliance.

VI. CASE MANAGEMENT STATEMENT AND ORDER

§40.59 A. Background: Former At-Issue Memorandum

The at-issue memorandum (governed by former Cal Rules of Ct 209; repealed in 2002), which informed the court that the essential parties were ready to resolve the issues of the case, has been replaced by the case management statement, governed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.730. See §§40.60-40.70.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Case Management Statement

§40.60 1. Service and Filing

No later than 15 calendar days before the date set for the case management conference or review, each party must file a case management statement and serve it on all other parties in the case. Cal Rules of Ct 3.725(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.61 2. Use of Judicial Council Form

The parties must use the mandatory Case Management Statement (Judicial Council Form CM-110). See §40.93. All applicable items on the form must be completed. In lieu of each party's filing a separate case management statement, any two or more persons may file a joint statement. Cal Rules of Ct 3.725(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.62 3. Effect of Local Rules

Local rules may also govern the case management statement. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 3.4(B) ("filing of case management statement 25 days before the conference will facilitate the issuance of a case management order without an appearance"); Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(b)(2) (each party must file Case Management Statement (Judicial Council Form CM-110) and serve it on all parties in the case no later than 15 days before the date set for case management conference); San Diego Ct R 2.1.9.(B) (case management statement must be completed and timely filed). Some counties, for example, require the case management statement to be joint and filed at least 5 days before the case management conference. Orange Ct R 369.

For a form of case management statement, see §40.93.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.63 4. Content of Case Management Statement

§40.63 4. Content of Case Management Statement

The Case Management Statement (Judicial Council Form CM-110) (see §40.93) requests the following information:

- The case title and number.
- Whether the statement is submitted by one party or jointly.
- When the complaint and cross-complaint, if any, were filed.
- Whether all essential parties have been served with process, have appeared, or been dismissed, and which additional parties may be added.
- A description of the case.
- Whether a jury is demanded.
- The estimated date for trial.
- The estimated length of the trial.
- The dates on which parties or attorneys will not be available for trial.
- The names, addresses, and telephone numbers of the attorneys for the parties and of any parties appearing without counsel.
- Whether the case is entitled to preference.
- Whether the parties have agreed to, or the case has gone to, alternative dispute resolution.
- Whether the parties are willing to participate in mediation, nonbinding judicial arbitration, binding judicial arbitration, binding private arbitration, or neutral case evaluation.
- Whether the parties are willing to participate in an early settlement conference.
- Information on any insurance carriers involved in the case.
- Whether any matters, such as pending bankruptcy, might affect the court's jurisdiction in processing the case.
- Whether there are any related cases or the parties intend to file a motion to consolidate or coordinate.
- Whether the parties intend to file a motion to bifurcate specific issues or causes of action.
- Whether the parties expect to file any motions before trial.
- The status of discovery.
- Whether economic litigation procedures for limited civil cases (CCP §§90-98) apply to the case.
- Whether additional matters should be considered or determined at the case management conference.
- Whether the meet-and-confer requirement has been met and whether the parties reached agreement on any matters.

§40.64 5. Effect of Failure to Request Jury Trial

It may be risky for a plaintiff's attorney to fail to demand a jury in the case management statement. Although the California Supreme Court has long held that a party's failure to demand a jury trial in an at-issue memorandum (governed by former Cal Rules of Ct 209; repealed in 2002) does not result in a waiver of the right to a jury trial (see Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v Corum (1934) 220 C 282, 30 P2d 509), later appellate cases have held that a party responding with no in an at-issue memorandum to the question of whether a jury is demanded has consented in writing to waive that right. March v Pettis (1977) 66 CA3d 473, 476, 136 CR 3 (failure to request a jury in at-issue memorandum, however, did not in itself constitute waiver under former CCP §631(2) (now CCP §631(a)(2)). In March, the defendants filed a countermemorandum in which a jury was demanded, but they later waived their right to a jury, and the plaintiff demanded a jury trial and offered to tender jury fees. The court held that relief from a waiver by written consent under former CCP §631(2) was not an absolute right, and that the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying the plaintiff a jury trial. March v Pettis, supra. See also Taylor v Union Pac. R.R. (1976) 16 C3d 893, 130 CR 23.

PRACTICE TIP: An attorney whose client wishes to have a jury trial is well-advised to demand one in the case management statement. Plaintiff's counsel in particular should be cautious about not demanding a jury trial when one is desired, and should not assume that (1) the defendant will probably demand one (and therefore will be responsible for depositing the jury fees), or (2) similar to the facts in March, if the defendant demands a jury trial but later waives it, the court will always entertain the plaintiff's demand for a jury at that time.

§40.65 C. Responsive Statement

Under the current delay reduction rules, each party must file and serve a case management statement on all other parties in the case. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.725(a). Conflicts are resolved by the court at the case management conference. Cal Rules of Ct 3.727. Any two parties may, however, file a joint statement. Cal Rules of Ct 3.725(b); see also Orange Ct R 369 (requiring joint case management statement).

Under the rules that existed before delay reduction, an attorney served with the former at-issue memorandum would immediately scrutinize it and, if he or she disagreed with any part, file and serve a countermemorandum within 10 days after service of the memorandum or within 5 days after service in an unlawful detainer proceeding (former Cal Rules of Ct 209(d) (repealed July 1, 2002)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.66 1. Motion to Strike

It is unclear whether a motion to strike can be used under the civil trial court management rules in cases using a case management statement. Cal Rules of Ct 3.700-3.735.

NOTE: Before implementation of the delay reduction rules, when an attorney disagreed with a statement in the former at-issue memorandum that the case is at issue as to all essential parties or that the case is entitled to setting priority, he or she might file, in addition to a countermemorandum, a motion to strike the at-issue memorandum. Although no statute or court rule expressly authorized this motion, a court could entertain it in the exercise of its inherent power to control its proceedings. Motions to strike were often made when a plaintiff added a new defendant, either by a Doe amendment or by serving a previously named defendant, after the at-issue memorandum was filed. Motions to strike were also made when a defendant filed a cross-complaint naming new cross-defendants after the at-issue memorandum was filed. The motion, if granted, removed the case from the civil active list and had the effect of postponing the trial date. The party seeking to set the case for trial had to then file and serve a new at-issue memorandum and, unless a motion to advance was granted, the case would be placed at the end of the civil active list.

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.67 2. Motion for Advisory Jury

Unless a jury trial is a matter of right (in which event the demand should be made in the at-issue memorandum or countermemorandum), former Cal Rules of Ct 377 (repealed Jan. 1, 2003) required that a party desiring a jury trial, when the right to a jury trial is not guaranteed by law, shall file and serve a noticed motion after the issue is joined and before or at the time of filing the former at-issue memorandum, or within 5 days after service of the memorandum by any other party. The Advisory Committee Comment to former Rule 377 states that the rule was repealed because it was obsolete and contained unduly burdensome procedures. The comment further states that repeal of the rule is not intended to prevent a party from requesting an advisory jury. In an appropriate case, a party may request, and the court in its discretion may approve, having an advisory jury.

§40.68 D. Case Management Order

The court must enter a case management order setting a schedule for subsequent proceedings and otherwise providing for the management of the case. The order should include such provisions as may be appropriate, including (Cal Rules of Ct 3.728):

- Referral of the case to judicial arbitration or some other form of alternative dispute resolution (ADR);
- A date for completion of the arbitration process or other form of ADR process if the case has been referred to such a process;
- If a trial date has not previously been set, a date certain for trial if the case is ready to be set for trial;
- Whether the trial will be a jury trial or a nonjury trial;
- The identity of each party demanding a jury trial;
- The estimated length of the trial;
- Whether all parties necessary to the disposition of the case have been served or have appeared;
- The dismissal or severance of the unserved or nonappearing defendants from the action;
- The names and addresses of the attorneys who will try the case;
- The date, time, and place for a mandatory settlement conference as provided in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380;
- The date, time, and place for the final case management conference before trial if such a conference is required by the court or the judge assigned to the case;
- The date, time, and place of any further case management conferences or review; and
- Any additional orders that may be appropriate, including orders on matters listed in Cal Rules of Ct 3.727 (case management conference; see §40.50) or 3.724 (meet and confer; see §40.51).

The order issued after the case management conference or review controls the subsequent course of action or proceeding unless it is modified by a subsequent order. Cal Rules of Ct 3.730.

A case management order requiring unilateral disclosure of identity, curriculum vitae, and opinion with regard to each medical expert who would support plaintiffs' claims was not proper exercise of trial court's power to manage complex litigation. Hernandez v Superior Court (2003) 112 CA4th 285, 296, 4 CR3d 883.

§40.69 E. Setting Trial Date

In setting a case for trial, the court, at the initial case management conference or any other proceeding at which the case is set for trial, must consider all relevant facts and circumstances. These may include (Cal Rules of Ct 3.729):

- The type and subject matter of the action to be tried.
- Whether the case has statutory priority.
- The number of causes of action, cross-actions, and affirmative defenses that will be tried.
- Whether any significant amendments to the pleadings have been made recently or are likely to be made before trial.
- Whether the plaintiff intends to bring a motion to amend the complaint to seek punitive damages under CCP §425.13.
- The number of parties with separate interests who will be involved in the trial.
- The complexity of the issues to be tried, including issues of first impression.
- Any difficulties in identifying, locating, or serving parties.
- Whether all parties have been served and, if so, the date on which they were served.
- Whether all parties have appeared in the action and, if so, the date on which they appeared.
- How long the attorneys who will try the case have been involved in the action.
- The trial date or dates proposed by the parties and their attorneys.
- The professional and personal schedules of the parties and their attorneys, including any conflicts with previously assigned trial dates or other significant events.
- The amount of discovery, if any, that remains to be conducted n the case.
- The nature and extent of law and motion proceedings anticipated, including whether any motions for summary judgment will be filed.
- Whether any other actions or proceedings that are pending may affect the case.
- The amount in controversy and the type of remedy sought.
- The nature and extent of the injuries or damages, including whether these are ready for determination.
- The court's trial calendar, including the pendency of other trial dates.
- Whether the trial will be a jury or a nonjury trial.
- The anticipated length of trial.
- The number, availability, and locations of witnesses, including those who reside outside the county, state, or country.
- Whether there have been any previous continuances of the trial or delays in setting the case for trial.
- The achievement of a fair, timely, and efficient disposition of the case.
- Any other factor that would significantly affect the determination of the appropriate date of trial.

VII. COURT SETTLEMENT CONFERENCES

A. Mandatory Settlement Conference

§40.71 1. Authority and Purpose

The mandatory settlement conference is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380 and local rules. It has become the most important of all pretrial conferences and plays a major role in keeping superior court trial calendars within manageable limits. A large percentage of cases settle at this point because the parties are able to engage in a free-ranging discussion in the presence of a judge who will not be the trial judge, assuring the parties that honest communications with the judge about the weaknesses of their case will not prejudice them for trial. The judge also plays an invaluable role as a neutral person with experience on the jury value of the asserted claims and defenses, and the probabilities of their success at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.72 2. Procedure to Set

The court may set a mandatory settlement conference on its own motion or at the request of any party. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1380(a); Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(d). Most superior courts have adopted local rules for scheduling mandatory settlement conferences. For example, in San Francisco, the mandatory settlement conference must be set within 3 weeks before the date set for trial. San Francisco Ct R 5.0(C). These rules have the legal effect of procedural statutes, and the court may impose sanctions on anyone who fails to comply with the rules, or fails to participate in good faith in any conference, unless good cause is shown. On sanctions, see §40.89.

The date and time of an early settlement conference may be set at the case management conference. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.727(7). See §40.50.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Settlement Conference Statements

§40.73 a. Requirements

Each party must submit to the court and serve on every other party a mandatory settlement conference statement containing a good faith settlement demand and an itemization of economic and noneconomic damages at least 5 court days before the date set for the settlement conference. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380(c). Each statement must discuss in detail all the facts and law pertinent to liability and damages as to that party and comply with any additional requirements imposed by local rule. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380(c).

Many counties require each party to file a written settlement conference statement and impose additional requirements. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(e). In Los Angeles, for example, the settlement conference statement must contain a concise statement of the material facts of the case and the factual and legal contentions in dispute. Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(e). The statement must also identify all parties and their capacities in the action and cite authorities that support legal propositions important in resolving the case. Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(e).

In San Francisco, superior court settlement conference statements must include, e.g.:

- A written factual statement of the case and all relevant legal issues and contentions;
- The most recent medical reports;
- A summary of injuries and residuals and a statement of economic and noneconomic damages;
- The names, addresses, and specialties of expert witnesses who will be called;
- An evaluation of the percentage of liability attributed to each defendant for purposes of allocation of noneconomic damages; and
- A statement setting forth the latest demands and offers between the parties.

At the conclusion of the conference, the settlement statement and other material furnished to the court must not be made part of the clerk's file. San Francisco Ct R 5.0(G).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel may attach copies of reports, photographs, or other pertinent documents to a settlement conference statement. Consult local court rules for the specific information and documentation to bring to the settlement conference.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.74 b. Example for Personal Injury Case

§40.74 b. Example for Personal Injury Case

EXAMPLE: In a personal injury case, a two-to-three page statement might contain the following information:

- Names and ages of plaintiff(s) and defendant(s);
- Date, time, and location of accident;
- Nature of case, e.g., auto v auto, auto v pedestrian, slip and fall, construction, medical malpractice;
- Weather, traffic, and visibility;
- Type, year, and condition of plaintiff's and defendant's vehicles;
- Nature and estimated amount of property damage;
- Brief statement of facts;
- Diagram of accident scene;
- Plaintiff's liability theories;
- Defendant's theories and affirmative defenses;
- Names of independent witnesses;
- Brief summary of plaintiff's injuries and present residuals;
- Amount of past and future medical expenses, and other special damages;
- Prior or subsequent accidents or medical condition;
- Defense medical report;
- Loss of wages or income, including description of the type of employment or business, specific dates of unemployment, and projected future losses;
- Estimated percentage of comparative fault;
- Verdict range; and
- Amount of demand and offer.

In a personal injury action, the special damages should be up-to-date, and listed, totaled, and categorized separately as medical and related expenses (including hospitalization, ambulance charges, and drugs), and loss of earnings. The attorney should also organize in a separate file and bring to the conference all medical reports and records, depositions (with key passages marked), photographs, books, records, diagrams, maps, bills, contracts, and other documents pertinent to settlement of the case.

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Attendance at Conference

§40.75 a. Attorneys

Trial counsel must attend the settlement conference. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380(b). Counsel's good faith participation is a requisite in a successful settlement conference. The attorneys must be there not merely to learn more about their adversary's case, but with a willingness to consider points made by the settlement judge and opposing counsel. Sanctions may be imposed on attorneys who fail to appear at a settlement conference or participate in good faith. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380, 2.30. On sanctions, see §40.89.

NOTE: Some local rules require that the settlement conference be attended by the trial attorney. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 5.0(E). When an attorney has associated another attorney to try the case, both should attend the conference.

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.76 b. Attorney Familiarity With Case

Various local rules require that the trial attorney who attends the conference be intimately familiar with all available evidence on both liability and damages and be prepared to discuss the case in depth. In Los Angeles, for example, attorneys for all parties appearing in the action shall attend the conference and be "intimately familiar" with the pertinent available evidence involving both liability and damages. The attorney shall be prepared to discuss the case in depth and, except for good cause shown, shall be the attorney who will try the case. See Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(d)(3). These requirements should be met even when not explicitly mandated by local rules.

If the conference is held within three weeks before trial, preparation will be facilitated by the likelihood that the trial attorneys have issued subpoenas, interviewed witnesses, prepared trial briefs, researched jury instructions, and otherwise become familiar with the facts and applicable law. By the time of the conference, all counsel should have discussed their respective evaluations with their clients and principals, and obtained appropriate settlement authority.

PRACTICE TIP: Attorneys preparing to appear before a judge with unfamiliar settlement conference procedures may ask other attorneys regarding the manner in which the particular judge is likely to conduct the conference.

Some local rules require the parties to convey settlement demands and offers before the conference. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 5.0(G).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.77 c. Parties, Representatives of Insurers and Other Entities

The parties and persons with full authority to settle the case must personally attend the conference, unless excused by the court for good cause. If any consent to settle is required for any reason, the party with consensual authority must be personally present at the conference. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380(b). See also San Francisco Ct R 5.0(E); Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(d)(1). In Los Angeles, the following must also be present: (1) the litigants unless consent of a particular litigant is not required for settlement, (2) an authorized representative of any insurance company that has coverage involved in the case, and (3) an authorized representative of a corporation or other business or government entity that is a litigant. These persons shall have the full authority to make decisions or negotiate concerning the settlement of the case. Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(d)(1). Lienholders are required to attend the conference or be available by telephone. Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(d)(4).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/40 Case Management Conferences/§40.78 d. Telephone Appearance

§40.78 d. Telephone Appearance

Telephone appearances are not allowed for the settlement conference unless the court permits telephone appearances at those conferences. Cal Rules of Ct 3.670(e)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.79 e. Excuses From Attendance

Local rules may also govern other attendance matters, such as those excused from attendance. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(d)(2). When courts evaluate requests to be excused from the mandatory settlement conference, they tend to construe the term "good cause" as it is used in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380(b).

PRACTICE TIP: The attorney should check with the clerk of the judge who is assigned to the settlement conference to determine the judge's view of "good cause" before submitting a request to be excused from attendance.

Local rules generally require that such requests be in writing. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(d)(2) (request to be excused must be by written stipulation or ex parte application). The attorney should also check with the clerk of the settlement conference judge before the date of the settlement conference to ascertain whether the request to be excused has been granted. Most local rules provide that parties excused from personal attendance must still be available for telephone communication during the conference. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(d)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.80 5. Continuances

Some local rules provide that a settlement conference may be continued at the discretion of the judge to whom it has been assigned. See, e.g., Santa Clara Ct R 7(D) (party requesting continuance must appear ex parte and show good cause why settlement conference should be continued). But see Govt C §68607(g) (court should adopt firm, consistent policy against continuances). Local rules should be consulted, inasmuch as they differ from county to county.

PRACTICE TIP: In general, a court will not grant a continuance absent an affirmative showing of good cause, and counsel must request any continuance by noticed motion with supporting declarations, even if the parties have agreed or stipulated to the continuance. Courts may ask attorneys to give mandatory settlement conferences reasonable priority over other court engagements.

© The Regents of the University of California

6. Conduct of Conference

§40.81 a. Judge's Role

Settlement conferences are generally conducted by a judge and attorneys in chambers while the parties wait in the courtroom. Ordinarily, the judge will, on counsel's request:

- Confer with counsel collectively about the case. Then, depending on the circumstances of the case, the judge may confer separately with counsel for the respective parties or groups of parties and may, in certain circumstances, confer directly with the litigants.
- Make an independent evaluation of the case and offer an opinion on probabilities regarding trial results to counsel as appropriate in the circumstances.
- Cause the terms of a settlement and the express consent of the litigants, as well as counsel, to the settlement to be placed on the record, and retain jurisdiction under CCP §664.6 to enforce the settlement.

NOTE: Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380(d), the court cannot appoint a person to conduct a mediation, or appoint a person to conduct the settlement conference, who is also serving as a mediator in the action. See also Jeld-Wen, Inc. v Superior Court (2007) 146 CA4th 536, 53 CR3d 115 (case management-ordered mediation was improper).

The judge is not empowered to compel litigants to settle the case, but can direct attorneys and parties to negotiate between themselves under reasonable conditions. Wisniewski v Clary (1975) 46 CA3d 499, 505, 120 CR 176. See also People v Cimarusti (1978) 81 CA3d 314, 146 CR 421 (abuse of discretion to refuse to set case for trial). Furthermore, even if a judge is disqualified in the case or proceeding, he or she is permitted to perform limited judicial functions, including presiding over settlement conferences (CCP §170.4(a)(6)), without any statutory obligation of disclosure. Adams v Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 C4th 866, 903, 42 CR2d 606.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: An experienced, patient, and skillful settlement judge serves as a catalyst for settlement by creating a climate conducive to negotiation. Judges differ in the manner in which they conduct a settlement conference. Many begin by asking each attorney to summarize key facts and contentions. Some assume a more active role, asking probing questions, and pointing out respective strengths and weaknesses, and offering their own viewpoints as to verdict potential and settlement value. Most judges will meet separately with the attorneys for each side, and may require group or separate discussions until either settlement is reached, or the judge concludes that the case must go to trial.

PRACTICE TIP: At times, the attorneys can agree on terms of settlement, but find that one or more of the parties do not agree. The judge can often be asked to assure the dissenting party that the proposed settlement is fair and in that party's best interests. With counsel's consent, the settlement judge can speak with the party directly.

Some judges conclude a successful settlement by having one of the attorneys read the terms of settlement into the court record. If this is done, the record should also show that the parties themselves understand and consent to the settlement's terms.

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.82 b. Presentation by Plaintiff's Attorney

The judge may ask plaintiff's counsel to begin the settlement conference by summarizing the facts, theories of recovery, and basis for the relief sought. The summary should be precise and factually accurate, but it may state facts and contentions in the light most favorable to the client. Plaintiff's counsel may then be asked to state the latest and lowest demand, which need not be the minimum offer acceptable to the client. Some judges will ask plaintiff's attorney privately to state the minimum amount acceptable to the client, or whether the attorney has good "client control." The attorney should respond to these questions without disclosing confidential information or undermining his or her ability to obtain the best possible recovery for the client.

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.83 c. Presentation by Defendant's Attorney

Defendant's attorney should be prepared to summarize facts and contentions as seen by the defense, including a concise discussion of pleaded affirmative defenses. Counsel may point out any misleading factual statements in plaintiff's counsel's summary of the case. Defense counsel should anticipate being asked the limits of the settlement authority given by the defendant or insurer, but any response should protect the client's bargaining position. Often the defense attorney will ask the judge to excuse plaintiff's counsel during discussions of settlement authority.

PRACTICE TIP: When a plaintiff has sued more than one defendant, defense counsel should consider ways to present a united front against the plaintiff, with provision for a separate resolution of differences between defendants. For example, a preliminary agreement that one defendant will pay 60 percent of the settlement, and another will pay 40 percent, permits defendants to concentrate settlement conference discussion on reducing the plaintiff's demand.

© The Regents of the University of California

§40.84 7. Duty to Notify Court of Settlement

If an entire case is settled or otherwise disposed of, the plaintiff must immediately file written notice of the settlement or other disposition with the court and serve the notice on any arbitrator or other court-connected ADR neutral involved in the case. The plaintiff must also immediately give oral notice to all of the above if a hearing, conference, or trial is imminent. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1385(a). Local rules often have procedures for filing written notice with the court and notifying any ADR neutrals. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(f); San Diego Ct R 2.2.4(A).

The plaintiff must also file a request for dismissal within 45 days after settlement, and there are additional requirements for conditional settlement. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1385(b)-(c). In addition, if the party required to file the dismissal does not do so, the court must dismiss the entire case 45 days after it receives notice of settlement unless good cause is shown why the case should not be dismissed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1385(b). Allegations that an enforceable settlement has not been reached constitute good cause. Irvine v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2007) 149 CA4th 994, 1000, 57 CR3d 500.

The same dismissal requirement is imposed for conditional settlements. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1385(c). A settlement with open terms is not a conditional settlement, or a settlement at all, and Cal Rules of Ct 3.1385 does not apply. Levitz v Warlocks (2007) 148 CA4th 531, 534, 55 CR3d 800.

On notifying the court of settlement, see §46.37.

§40.85 8. Sanctions for Failure to Attend or Participate

Various monetary and procedural sanctions are authorized by CCP §575.2 and Cal Rules of Ct 2.30(b). Failure to attend a settlement conference or to participate in good faith constitutes an unlawful interference with court proceedings. CCP §575.2 (failure to comply with local rules sanctionable). In addition, Cal Rules of Ct 2.30(b) permits reasonable sanctions for failure to comply with the rules of court. The court may order the person at fault to pay the opposing party's reasonable expenses and attorney fees incurred in connection with the sanctions motion or order to show cause. Cal Rules of Ct 2.30(d). But see Vidrio v Hernandez (2009) 172 CA4th 1443, 1454, 92 CR3d 178 (reversing award of sanctions against non-party insurer whom trial court believed acted in bad faith at policyholder's settlement conference; conduct of insurer was not sanctionable under any statute or rule of court). On sanctions, see §40.89.

Local rules may have their own provisions on sanctions. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.13 (sanctions for failure or refusal to comply with local rules). If local rules require the attendance of a representative of an insurer of a party, the settlement conference judge may impose sanctions against that carrier, and, if appropriate, against the insured's attorneys for the carrier's failure to attend. City of El Monte v Takei (1984) 158 CA3d 244, 204 CR 559. Striking an answer and entering a default, however, is rarely, if ever, appropriate, even for failure to attend a settlement conference. Evarone v Twentieth Century Hosts, Inc. (1979) 98 CA3d 90, 159 CR 294.

§40.86 B. Voluntary Settlement Conference

The courts generally encourage counsel who desire to settle a case early in the proceeding to schedule a voluntary settlement conference before a judge. Such conferences often prove fruitful from the standpoint of obtaining an independent evaluation of verdict value and settlement potential.

Some courts by local rule permit voluntary or "specially set" settlement conferences. For example, in San Francisco, a party to a civil proceeding may apply ex parte to the presiding judge for a specially set settlement conference by filing an ex parte application that shall include proof of service on all counsel and/or self-represented parties. A response to the application may be filed by opposing counsel and/or a self-represented party within two court days after being served with the application. San Francisco Ct R 5.0(D). In addition, an "early" settlement conference can be set at the case management conference. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.727(7).

§40.87 C. Informal Chambers Conference

The final opportunity for the court and the attorneys to meet before trial to narrow the issues and attempt settlement of the case is at an informal chambers conference immediately before the trial. The informal conference is entirely a creature of local rule and custom and is not to be confused with other pretrial conferences. The primary shortcoming of the informal conference is that, because it does not occur until immediately before trial, pretrial preparation time has already been invested and all attendant expense incurred.

In Los Angeles County, the trial judge may request counsel to explore settlement further but is urged not to engage in settlement discussions unless all counsel and parties agree on the record to discussions with the judge and to waive any right to assert a disqualification based on the judge's participation. Los Angeles Ct R 8.21. If a settlement is reached, its terms and the consent of the parties and counsel should be stated on the record. Los Angeles Ct R 8.21.

§40.88 VIII. FINAL STATUS CONFERENCE

Many jurisdictions require counsel to attend a final status conference (sometimes known as a trial management conference) a few days before trial. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h) (to be held not more than 10 days before trial date). The date for this conference is typically set at the same time the trial date is set. The purpose of the conference is to narrow the issues and organize the case for trial. Local rules must be consulted to ascertain the conference's procedural requirements for a particular court.

Before the final status conference, some courts require counsel to meet and confer about exhibits, jury instructions, and witness lists. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h). Counsel may also be expected to discuss which issues are contested and which are not. In some jurisdictions, counsel must file with the court a joint exhibit list, a joint witness list, jury instructions, a list of disputed and undisputed issues, and a statement of the case before the final status conference. In addition, some courts require counsel to exchange motions in limine before the conference and be prepared to argue them at the conference. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h).

§40.89 IX. SANCTIONS

The Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) encourages judges to impose sanctions—including dismissing actions or striking pleadings if it appears that less severe sanctions would be ineffective—to achieve its purposes. Govt C §68608(b).

The court may impose sanctions for failure to comply with local rules promulgated under CCP §575.1 for the supervision and management of actions. CCP §575.2. In addition, superior courts have the authority under Cal Rules of Ct 2.30 to impose monetary sanctions to an aggrieved party or the court, or both, based on a failure to comply with the applicable rules, unless good cause is shown. But see Trans-Action Commercial Investors, Ltd. v Firmaterr, Inc. (1997) 60 CA4th 352, 70 CR2d 449 (terms of Cal Rules of Ct 2.30(d) exceed rule-making authority of Judicial Council in permitting court to impose attorney fees as sanction "in addition to any other sanction permitted by law").

Most local rules provide for sanctions as well. For example, in Los Angeles, the rules provide that the court may impose appropriate sanctions for failure or refusal to comply with (1) the delay reduction rules, (2) any order made under the rules, or (3) the time standards or deadlines set by the rules. Los Angeles Ct R 7.13. These sanctions may be imposed on the party, the party's counsel, or both. Los Angeles Ct R 7.13.

PRACTICE TIP: Attorneys have the responsibility to comply with the time requirements for filings and events set forth in local rules or to justify in writing a failure to do so. A party that neither complies nor provides justification will be served with an order to show cause why he or she should not be sanctioned, financially or in some other way. The sanction is usually a monetary one, but it may, in extreme instances, take the form of the dismissal of a complaint or the striking of a defense. See CCP §575.2; Govt C §68608(b); Cal Rules of Ct 2.30.

A court may not dismiss an action for noncompliance with local court rules implementing the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) if noncompliance is the fault of counsel, not the litigant. Garcia v McCutchen (1997) 16 C4th 469, 66 CR2d 319. Code of Civil Procedure §575.2(b) also prohibits dismissal as a sanction when noncompliance with local court rules is counsel's fault.

INSTRUCTIONS ON HOW TO COMPLETE THE COVER SHEET

To Plaintiffs and Others Filing First Papers. If you are filing a first paper (for example, a complaint) in a civil case, you must complete and file, along with your first paper, the Civil Case Cover Sheet contained on page 1. This information will be used to compile statistics about the types and numbers of cases filed. You must complete items 1 through 6 on the sheet. In item 1, you must check one box for the case type that best describes the case. If the case fits both a general and a more specific type of case listed in item 1, check the more specific one. If the case has multiple causes of action, check the box that best indicates the primary cause of action. To assist you in completing the sheet, examples of the cases that belong under each case type in item 1 are provided below. A cover sheet must be filed only with your initial paper. Failure to file a cover sheet with the first paper filed in a civil case may subject a party, its counsel, or both to sanctions under rules 2.30 and 3.220 of the California Rules of Court.

To Parties in Rule 3.740 Collections Cases. A "collections case" under rule 3.740 is defined as an action for recovery of money owed in a sum stated to be certain that is not more than $25,000, exclusive of interest and attorney's fees, arising from a transaction in which property, services, or money was acquired on credit. A collections case does not include an action seeking the following: (1) tort damages, (2) punitive damages, (3) recovery of real property, (4) recovery of personal property, or (5) a prejudgment writ of attachment. The identification of a case as a rule 3.740 collections case on this form means that it will be exempt from the general time-for-service requirements and case management rules, unless a defendant files a responsive pleading. A rule 3.740 collections case will be subject to the requirements for service and obtaining a judgment in rule 3.740.

To Parties in Complex Cases. In complex cases only, parties must also use the Civil Case Cover Sheet to designate whether the case is complex. If a plaintiff believes the case is complex under rule 3.400 of the California Rules of Court, this must be indicated by completing the appropriate boxes in items 1 and 2. If a plaintiff designates a case as complex, the cover sheet must be served with the complaint on all parties to the action. A defendant may file and serve no later than the time of its first appearance a joinder in the plaintiff's designation, a counter-designation that the case is not complex, or, if the plaintiff has made no designation, a designation that the case is complex.

CASE QUESTIONNAIRE—FOR LIMITED CIVIL CASES (Under $25,000)

REQUESTING PARTY (Name):

RESPONDING PARTY (Name):

—INSTRUCTIONS—

A. The purpose of the case questionnaire is to help the parties settle their differences without spending a lot of money. This is accomplished by exchanging information about the case early in the lawsuit. The exchange of case questionnaires may be started only by a plaintiff (or cross-complainant) in a limited civil case. The case questionnaire is optional, and if plaintiff (or cross-complainant) exercises the option, only this form may be used.

B. Instructions for plaintiffs (and cross-complainants)

1. Under Code of Civil Procedure section 93, a plaintiff (or cross-complainant) may serve a completed case questionnaire and a blank questionnaire with a complaint (or cross-complaint).
2. This is the only way you can require defendants (or cross-defendants) to serve you with a completed case questionnaire.

C. Instructions for defendants (and cross-defendants)

1. If you have been served with a completed case questionnaire by a plaintiff (or cross-complainant), then you must fill in the blank case questionnaire. Your completed case questionnaire must be served on that same plaintiff (or cross-complainant) with your answer to the complaint (or cross-complaint).
2. THIS IS NOT AN ANSWER OR RESPONSE TO THE COMPLAINT.

D. Instructions for all parties

1. ALL QUESTIONS REFER TO THE INCIDENT OR AGREEMENT IN THIS LAWSUIT ONLY.
2. Answer each question. If a question is not applicable, answer "NA."
3. Your answers are not limited to your personal knowledge, but you are required to furnish information available to you or to anyone acting on your behalf, whether you are a plaintiff, defendant, cross-complainant, or cross -defendant.
4. Type or legibly print your answer below each question. If you cannot completely answer a question in the space provided on the case questionnaire, check the "attachment" box and put the number of the question and the complete answer on an attached sheet of paper or form MC-025. You should not put part of an answer on the case questionnaire and part on the attachment. You may put more than one answer on each attached page.
5. When you have completed the case questionnaire, sign the verification and serve the original.
6. You may compel compliance with these requirements under Code of Civil Procedure section 93.
7. DO NOT FILE THIS CASE QUESTIONNAIRE WITH THE COURT.

I. INTRODUCTION

§41.1 A. Scope of Chapter

To be exercised when available, the right to a jury trial requires a timely demand and the avoidance of waiver. The right to a jury trial is covered in §§41.3-41.8. Other topics discussed include demand procedures (see §§41.9-41.11), waiver (see §§41.12-41.14), and the Judicial Council Official Jury Instructions (CACI) (see §§41.15-41.19). The request for a jury trial apparently should be made on the mandatory form of Case Management Statement (Judicial Council Form CM-110), reprinted in §40.93.

© The Regents of the University of California

§41.2 B. Governing Law

The right to a jury trial is governed by Cal Const art I, §16 and CCP §592. The time for requesting a jury trial is governed by CCP §631(d)(4). Waiver of jury trials is governed by CCP §631(a), (d). Demands for jury trials, which are often made at the case management conference, are governed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.727(13). On the case management conference and statement, see chap 40.

II. RIGHT TO JURY

§41.3 A. When Mandated; Legal Versus Equitable Actions

The right to a jury trial in California civil actions is set forth in Cal Const art I, §16, and CCP §592, which in effect provide that, in certain classes of case, a jury trial on factual issues is a matter of right unless waived. CCP §631(a), (d). See §§41.12-41.14 for discussion of waiver. Actions in which a jury trial is a matter of right under the constitution are those that were triable by a jury at common law, i.e., legal as distinguished from equitable actions. People v One 1941 Chevrolet Coupe (1951) 37 C2d 283, 231 P2d 832. It has been said that whether an action is legal or equitable depends on the "gist of the action," as framed by the pleadings and facts, and on the type of relief sought. Paularena v Superior Court (1965) 231 CA2d 906, 911, 42 CR 366, cited with approval in Southern Pac. Transp. Co. v Superior Court (1976) 58 CA3d 433, 436, 129 CR 912.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/41 Jury Trial Demands/ B. Specific Actions/§41.4 1. Legal Actions

B. Specific Actions

§41.4 1. Legal Actions

Legal actions, which are the actions in which a jury trial is a matter of right, include actions for (CCP §592):

- Recovery of real or personal property, with or without damages;
- Money due under a contract or as damages for breach of contract; and
- Damages for injuries to person or property.

Legal actions also include cases that superficially appear to be equitable but are more similar to common law actions, e.g., an action to compel a fiduciary to account for money owed. See Ripling v Superior Court (1952) 112 CA2d 399, 247 P2d 117.

© The Regents of the University of California

§41.5 2. Equitable Actions

Equitable actions, which do not involve a right to a jury trial (see §41.3), include:

- Actions for specific performance (see Connell v Bowes (1942) 19 C2d 870, 123 P2d 456);
- Actions for rescission (see Bank of America v Greenbach (1950) 98 CA2d 220, 219 P2d 814);
- Quiet title actions (see Peterson v Peterson (1946) 74 CA2d 312, 168 P2d 474);
- Actions for cancellation (see Clyne v Brock (1947) 82 CA2d 958, 188 P2d 263);
- Actions to declare a constructive trust (see Bodley v Ferguson (1866) 30 C 511);
- Shareholders' derivative actions (see Rankin v Frebank Co. (1975) 47 CA3d 75, 121 CR 348); and
- Actions to abate public a nuisance (People v Bhakta (2008) 162 CA4th 973, 76 CR3d 421).

Equitable actions also include those in which a monetary recovery is sought based on a right cognizable only in equity, e.g., an action for a commission based on an estoppel theory. See Ford v Palisades Corp. (1950) 101 CA2d 491, 225 P2d 545.

© The Regents of the University of California

§41.6 3. Hybrid Actions

In hybrid actions (i.e., those raising both legal and equitable issues) a jury trial is a right only on the severable legal issues. Robinson v Puls (1946) 28 C2d 664, 171 P2d 430. For example, the equitable issue of estoppel to raise a statute of limitations defense is triable by the court. Moss v Bluemm (1964) 229 CA2d 70, 40 CR 50. When an action seeks equitable relief to protect a common law right (e.g., an injunction against injury to land) and there is an issue as to the existence or violation of the common law right, that issue must first be litigated (before a jury, if demanded) before the court determines whether to grant the equitable relief. Pacific W. Oil Co. v Bern Oil Co. (1939) 13 C2d 60, 87 P2d 1045. When equitable and legal remedies are sought in the same action, the parties are entitled to have a jury decide the legal issues unless the trial court's initial decision on the equitable issues is also dispositive of the legal issues, leaving nothing to be tried by a jury. American Motorists Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1998) 68 CA4th 864, 871, 80 CR2d 621.

PRACTICE TIP: The parties may sometimes determine the extent to which their cases will be heard by juries and judges. Although, for example, a plaintiff whose complaint seeks both legal and equitable relief is entitled to a jury only on the legal issues, he or she may ensure a full jury trial by dropping the claim for equitable relief and seeking only damages. Raedeke v Gibraltar Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1974) 10 C3d 665, 111 CR 693.

Even when a plaintiff seeks monetary damages, there is no right to a jury trial if the action is based on promissory estoppel. C & K Eng'g Contractors v Amber Steel Co. (1978) 23 C3d 1, 151 CR 323. An action to enforce a mechanics' lien is equitable in nature. If, however, the property owner raises the issue of compliance with the contract or the lien claimant seeks a personal judgment against the property owner, a jury trial on the legal issues is proper. Selby Constructors v McCarthy (1979) 91 CA3d 517, 154 CR 164. Except for a small claims defendant appealing from an unlawful detainer judgment, a party to a small claims action at law is not entitled to a jury trial in the de novo proceeding in superior court on appeal from the small claims court's decision. Crouchman v Superior Court (1988) 45 C3d 1167, 248 CR 626. See Maldonado v Superior Court (1984) 162 CA3d 1259, 209 CR 199.

For further discussion of the right to a trial by jury, see 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §§79-97 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§41.7 C. Use of Advisory Jury

In actions in which a jury trial is not a matter of right, the factual issues must be tried before the court, subject to its power to order any such issue tried by a jury. CCP §592. See also CCP §1090 (court may order jury trial in mandamus or prohibition proceeding). The jury's verdict is only advisory, however, and does not bind the court. Cutter Labs. v R. W. Ogle & Co. (1957) 151 CA2d 410, 311 P2d 627. Because the verdict is simply advisory, no grounds for appeal exist if the jury is instructed erroneously (Richardson v City of Eureka (1895) 110 C 441, 42 P 965) or if an attorney's misconduct prejudicially affects the jury (Cutter Labs. v R. W. Ogle & Co., supra). The court may dismiss the jury at any time. See Constantine v City of Sunnyvale (1949) 91 CA2d 278, 204 P2d 922.

Procedures to obtain a jury trial when it is not a matter of right were governed by former Cal Rules of Ct 377. The Advisory Committee Comment to repealed Rule 377 states that the rule was repealed because it was obsolete and contained unduly burdensome procedures. However, it explained that the repeal of the rule was not intended to prevent a party from requesting an advisory jury. In an appropriate case, a party may request, and the court in its discretion may approve, the use of an advisory jury.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/41 Jury Trial Demands/§41.8 D. Deciding Whether to Demand or Retain Jury; Factors

§41.8 D. Deciding Whether to Demand or Retain Jury; Factors

The decision on whether to demand a jury in a particular case, or to retain a jury already demanded, can be crucial to the outcome of the litigation. Although many attorneys routinely demand a jury early in all cases (e.g., in the case management statement), a decision must be made later (e.g., at the case management conference) on whether a jury is really desired.

In deciding whether to demand or retain a jury, the attorney should consider whether:

- The judge assigned to the case has shown fairness in similar cases or has tended to be "proplaintiff" or "prodefendant," and whether he or she displays judicial competence and temperament.
- The case, as a whole, has "jury appeal," i.e., whether the strength of the case on the law and facts, the credibility of parties and witnesses, the relative impressions the parties will make, and the nature and extent of damages or injuries make having a jury desirable.
- The size of the probable recovery warrants a jury trial. Many lawyers prefer juries when the probable recovery is substantial, so that the decision will not reflect the judgment of one person (who, even though a capable judge, may occasionally err), but the collective judgment of 12 or fewer jurors (CCP §220). The judge, as the "13th juror," provides some insurance to correct jury errors by his or her authority to set aside a grossly erroneous or excessive verdict on a motion for a new trial. CCP §§656-663.2.
- The case is weak on the law. Many attorneys prefer to submit a weak case (or defense) to jurors on the assumption that the weakness will not be as readily detected by them. The hazard in this reasoning is that jurors frequently demonstrate remarkable insight and ability to detect weakness, distortions, and exaggerations.
- The primary defense is technical, e.g., a statute of limitations defense. Many defense lawyers prefer a court trial in this situation, on the assumption that jurors are less likely than judges to respond to this type of defense, even if clearly presented.
- The case is unusually complex or primarily involves issues of law, in which event a court trial may be indicated. Cases involving many technical details (e.g., antitrust litigation or a suit on a construction contract) are often considered ill-suited for jury evaluation.
- The nature of the jury panel and of the economic and sociological characteristics of the region from which the panel is drawn are favorable, e.g., whether the panel is composed mostly of blue-collar workers (often preferred by plaintiffs' attorneys) or of elderly or retired professional persons (often preferred by defense counsel).

III. PROCEDURES

§41.9 A. Necessity and Time for Demand; Effect

A jury trial is obtained by making a demand for it; failure to make a timely demand for a jury results in a waiver. CCP §631(d)(4); Glogau v Hagan (1951) 107 CA2d 313, 237 P2d 329. A jury trial must be demanded when the case is first set for trial (if set on notice or stipulation) or within 5 days after notice of setting (if, as usually occurs, the matter is set without notice or stipulation). CCP §631(d)(4); Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v Corum (1934) 220 C 282, 30 P2d 509. On waiver, see §§41.12-41.14.

The effect of a demand for a jury trial is continuing. Thus, it is not necessary to repeat the demand in subsequent proceedings (e.g., when the case is set for a second trial after a reversal and the granting of a new trial on appeal) to avoid a waiver under CCP §631(d)(4). Hoffman v Southern Pac. Co. (1929) 101 CA 218, 230, 281 P 681.

§41.10 B. Form of Demand

No particular form for a demand for a jury trial is prescribed by statute or court rule. See CCP §631. A written demand is acceptable. However, an oral demand on the record when the case is first set for trial (e.g., at the case management conference) is sufficient. Cal Rules of Ct 3.727(13); Union Oil Co. v Hane (1938) 27 CA2d 106, 80 P2d 516. On the case management conference, see chap 40.

The parties usually indicate in the case management statement whether or not a jury is demanded. Cal Rules of Ct 3.727(13); see Case Management Statement (Judicial Council Form CM-110) at §40.93. A party who disputes a demanding party's right to a jury trial or who wishes to demand a jury after being served with a case management statement that a jury is not demanded may demand a jury in its own case management statement. A party's failure to demand a jury in the formerly used at-issue memorandum (now replaced by the "case management statement") is not a waiver; because a waiver is governed by CCP §631. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v Corum (1934) 220 C 282, 30 P2d 509. But see March v Pettis (1977) 66 CA3d 473, 136 CR 3.

If the case was inadvertently placed on the nonjury calendar, or if a party wishes to demand a jury after having previously waived it, the party should file a noticed motion for a jury trial. On the court's discretion and procedures to excuse a waiver under CCP §631, see §§41.13-41.14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§41.11 C. Deposit of Fees and Expenses; Refunds

In addition to making a demand, a party who desires a jury trial must deposit jury fees with the clerk or judge at least 25 days before the trial date. Except in unlawful detainer actions, the fees shall be deposited at least 5 days before the date set for trial. CCP §631(b). That deposit may not exceed $150. CCP §631(b). Parties suing in forma pauperis are excused from payment. After the first day, jury fees are set at $15 per day per juror. CCP §215. Failure to make the required deposit is a waiver of the party's right to a jury trial. CCP §631(d)(5). See §§41.12-41.14 on waiver.

Promptly after the jury has been impaneled, the demanding party must also deposit the accrued mileage or transportation charges—$0.34 per mile, one way, unless a higher rate is set by statute or ordinance. CCP §215. At the beginning of the second and each succeeding day's session, the demanding party must deposit the jury fees and mileage or transportation charges for that day, including the fees and mileage for the trial jury panel if the trial jury has not yet been selected and sworn. If more than one party has demanded a jury, the respective amount to be paid daily by each party demanding a jury shall be determined by stipulation of the parties or by court order. CCP §631(c). Failure to make any of these deposits may result in a waiver of the party's right to a jury trial. CCP §631(d)(6). On the deposit of jury fees and mileage in eminent domain cases, see CCP §631.5.

When a party demands a jury and then waives it during trial after having deposited fees, the adverse party may "pick up" the jury and continue to pay fees. If the adverse party also waives a jury later in the trial, however, the first party cannot withdraw his or her waiver as a matter of right, but must make a motion to seek relief from the waiver. See Taylor v Union Pac. R.R. (1976) 16 C3d 893, 130 CR 23. On the court's discretion to allow relief from a waiver, see §41.13-41.14.

When jury fees have been deposited but the case is settled or a continuance is granted on the motion of the depositing party, none of the deposit will be refunded if the court finds that the time was insufficient to notify the jurors that the trial will not proceed. CCP §631.3. Moreover, local rules frequently prescribe the time and manner in which the clerk must be given notice to avoid a forfeiture of fees. See, e.g., San Mateo Ct R 2.7.6 (written notice at least 2 court days before trial date).

For further discussion of fee and expense deposits and refunds, see 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §§99-100 (5th ed 2008).

D. Waiver of Jury Trial

§41.12 1. Acts Resulting in Waiver

The right to a trial by jury as declared by Cal Const art I, §16 shall be preserved. CCP §631(a). In civil cases, a jury may only be waived under CCP §631(d). Under §631(d) a party waives a jury trial by:

- Failing to appear at trial (CCP §631(d)(1));
- Written consent filed with the clerk or judge (CCP §631(d)(2)); see March v Pettis (1977) 66 CA3d 473, 136 CR 3;
- Giving oral consent, in open court, entered in the minutes or docket (CCP §631(d)(3));
- Failing to make a timely demand for a jury (CCP §631(d)(4); see discussion in §41.9); or
- Failing to deposit with the clerk or judge the jury fees or mileage charges (CCP §631(d)(5)-(6); see §41.11).

A defendant was held to have waived a jury trial when the plaintiff repeatedly waived a jury trial in the presence of the defense attorney in court and the defendant failed to promptly demand a jury trial after the plaintiff's attorney waived it in the master calendar department. That the defendant never received written notice of the plaintiff's waiver from the court clerk was irrelevant. McIntosh v Bowman (1984) 151 CA3d 357, 362, 198 CR 533.

NOTE: In particular, the court singled out the defense attorney's behavior for criticism, referring to his tardiness in demanding a jury and his later raising the issue on appeal as "game playing." Although the attorney was spared sanctions, the appellate court probably could have levied them under CCP §907.

A party may also waive a jury trial by entering into an agreement which provides that any dispute will be resolved by arbitration, even when the arbitration provision does not expressly waive the right to a jury trial. Madden v Kaiser Found. Hosp. (1976) 17 C3d 699, 713, 131 CR 882. An attorney has no authority, however, solely by virtue of his or her retention, to bind a client to an arbitration agreement, and thereby waive the right to a jury trial, without the client's consent. Blanton v Womancare, Inc. (1985) 38 C3d 396, 212 CR 151. But see Norcal Mut. Ins. Co. v Newton (2000) 84 CA4th 64, 100 CR2d 683 (by not promptly repudiating attorney's unauthorized demand for arbitration made on her behalf, client ratified attorney's conduct).

For further discussion of waiver of jury trial, see 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §§101-105 (5th ed 2008).

2. Relief From Waiver

§41.13 a. When Available

The trial court has discretion to allow a jury trial, on such terms as may be just, even though a party previously waived it. CCP §631(e). Because of the constitutional guaranty of a jury, doubt about whether to relieve a jury trial waiver should be resolved in favor of granting a jury trial. Cowlin v Pringle (1941) 46 CA2d 472, 116 P2d 109. Relief is generally granted unless it would cause serious hardship to the opposing party. Boal v Price Waterhouse & Co. (1985) 165 CA3d 806, 212 CR 42 (denial of relief to party whose attorney mistakenly marked waiver form reversed when relief would cause only minimal hardship to opponent).

Relief will usually be denied, however, when there is no sufficient basis for the exercise of the court's discretionary power, e.g., when the only reason for seeking relief from a waiver appears to be a party's change of mind (Cloud v Market St. Ry. (1946) 74 CA2d 92, 168 P2d 191) or when granting the motion will prejudice other parties (see March v Pettis (1977) 66 CA3d 473, 480, 136 CR 3). See also Gonzales v Nork (1978) 20 C3d 500, 143 CR 240 (no abuse of discretion to deny relief from waiver when attorney apparently sensed that judge would rule against his client and wished to reargue special defenses before a different, and possibly more receptive, trier of fact); Day v Rosenthal (1985) 170 CA3d 1125, 1176, 217 CR 89 (no abuse of discretion to deny relief from waiver when timing of request for relief suggested that it was ploy to obtain continuance).

© The Regents of the University of California

§41.14 b. Procedures for Relief From Jury Waiver

A party who wishes to be relieved of a jury waiver must seek the relief by motion. See CCP §631(e); Taylor v Union Pac. R.R. (1976) 16 C3d 893, 130 CR 23 (waiver cannot be withdrawn as matter of right and counsel objecting to denial of jury trial after waiver must seek relief from it).

PRACTICE TIP: Although no statute or rule requires that the motion be noticed, the motion should be written and noticed if time permits. The motion should state why a jury trial was initially waived (e.g., through mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect) and why a jury trial would serve the interests of justice.

IV. JUDICIAL COUNCIL OFFICIAL JURY INSTRUCTIONS (CACI)

§41.15 A. Purpose

Counsel should note that there are official civil jury instructions approved by the Judicial Council. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050. They are available on the Judicial Council's website, www.courtinfo.ca.gov; the acronym "CACI" is being used to describe them. The goal of these instructions is to improve the quality of jury decisionmaking by providing standardized instructions that accurately state the law in a way that is understandable to the average juror. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§41.16 B. Accuracy

The Judicial Council endorses these instructions for use and makes every effort to ensure that they accurately state existing law. The articulation and interpretation of California law, however, remains within the purview of the legislature and the courts of review. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§41.17 C. Public Access

The Administrative Office of the Courts must provide copies and updates of the approved jury instructions to the public on its website. For online information about approved jury instructions, see the Administrative Office of the Courts' website at www.courtinfo.ca.gov. The Office may also contract with an official publisher to publish the instructions in both paper and electronic formats. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§41.18 D. Updating and Amendments

Judicial Council instructions are regularly updated and maintained through its advisory committees on jury instructions. Amendments to these instructions will be circulated for public comment before publication. Trial judges and attorneys may submit for the advisory committees' consideration suggestions for improving or modifying them or creating new instructions, with an explanation of why the change is proposed. Suggestions should be sent to the Administrative Office of the Courts, Office of the General Counsel, 455 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94102-3688. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§41.19 E. Use of Instructions

Use of the Judicial Council instructions is strongly encouraged. If the latest edition of the civil jury instructions approved by the Judicial Council contains an instruction applicable to a case and the trial judge determines that the jury should be instructed on the subject, it is recommended that the judge use the Judicial Council instruction unless he or she finds that a different instruction would more accurately state the law and be better understood by jurors. Whenever the latest edition of the Judicial Council civil jury instructions does not contain an instruction on a subject on which the trial judge determines that the jury should be instructed, or when a Judicial Council instruction cannot be modified to submit the issue properly, the instruction given on that subject should be accurate, brief, understandable, impartial, and free from argument. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(e).

I. INTRODUCTION

§42.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses motions for preference and for continuance. Motions for preference include motions to advance, specially set, or reset and are discussed in §§42.3-42.15. Motions for continuance are discussed in §§42.16-42.28. Sample forms are provided in §§42.29-42.32.

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.2 B. Governing Law

Motions to advance, specially set, or reset the trial are authorized by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1335. Motions for preference in civil actions are governed by CCP §36. An attorney might move to advance the trial date when a mandatory dismissal under CCP §583.360 (failure to bring case to trial within 5 years) is imminent or to obtain a preferential setting, e.g., when a client is elderly or in poor health. See CCP §36. Many statutes grant preference, such as those on declaratory relief actions (CCP §1062.3(a)) and unlawful detainer actions (CCP §1170.5).

Motions or applications for continuances are governed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332. Continuances may be granted on many statutory grounds, which are noted in §42.22.

II. MOTIONS TO ADVANCE, SPECIALLY SET, OR RESET

A. Grounds for Motion for Trial Preference

§42.3 1. Avoiding 5-Year Dismissal

Motions to advance and specially set are most often used to avoid mandatory dismissal under CCP §583.360. These motions are typically brought under CCP §36(e) (court's discretion on any ground; see §42.8). A motion to specially set to avoid the bar of the 5-year statute raises the same issues as a motion for discretionary dismissal based on delay in prosecution. Biondi, Flemming & Gonzales v Braham (1990) 218 CA3d 842, 847, 267 CR 365. The court should consider the factors listed in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342(e) when deciding a motion to specially set under CCP §36(e). Salinas v Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. (1992) 5 CA4th 1, 10, 6 CR2d 446. Although the approach of the 5-year limit is a "critical consideration," it is "not exclusive"; the court may also consider the plaintiff's lack of diligence, congestion of court calendar, prejudice to the defendant of accelerated trial date, and the likelihood of a mandatory dismissal if an early trial date is denied. Salas v Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1986) 42 C3d 342, 346, 228 CR 504. The plaintiff must make "some showing of excusable delay." 42 CR2d at 349; see Parlen v Golden State Sanwa Bank (1987) 194 CA3d 906, 911, 240 CR 73. See chap 39 on involuntary dismissal.

NOTE: Counsel should adhere to the court's normal scheduling practice whenever possible and seek special treatment only in unusual cases (e.g., an unavoidable scheduling conflict) that will incline the court sympathetically toward the motion.

Regardless of what the motion requests, the court may set the case directly for trial if circumstances warrant (e.g., when expiration of the 5-year period for bringing the case to trial under CCP §583.310 is imminent). However, the trial court has no duty to compute the last day for trial and to set the case for trial before that date. It is the plaintiff's responsibility to use "reasonable diligence" to calculate the §583.310 mandatory dismissal date and to request a trial date that is before the expiration of the 5-year period. Lee v Park (1996) 43 CA4th 305, 309, 50 CR2d 511.

A motion to advance, specially set, or reset does not affect the court's discretion to dismiss the case under CCP §583.410(a) for failure to prosecute if not brought to trial within 2 years after filing (see CCP §583.420(a)(2)(B); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1340). Parlen v Golden State Sanwa Bank, supra. Indeed, a court may dismiss sua sponte under CCP §583.410(a) in response to a motion to advance, specially set, or reset to avoid mandatory dismissal under CCP §583.360. Salas v Sears, Roebuck & Co., supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.4 2. Party Over Age 70

A party to a civil action who is over age 70 may petition the court for a preference, which the court shall grant if the court makes all of the following findings (CCP §36(a)):

- The party has a substantial interest in the action as a whole.
- The health of the party is such that a preference is necessary to prevent prejudicing the party's interest in the litigation.

Before 1991, CCP §36(a) was mandatory, and thus a litigant who qualified under its terms had to be given preferential trial setting irrespective of the circumstances leading to the motion for preference. Rice v Superior Court (1982) 136 CA3d 81, 84, 185 CR 853.

On and after January 1, 1991, §36(a) was amended, eliminating the automatic preference for litigants over age 70 and conditioning the grant of preference on the trial court's finding that the health of the party over age 70 is such that a preference is necessary to prevent prejudicing the party's interest in the litigation. Kline v Superior Court (1991) 227 CA3d 512, 514, 277 CR 851.

It may even be malpractice if an attorney fails to move for a preferential trial date if counsel is aware that the client is over 70 and in poor health, fails to move for a preferential trial date for over 9 months, and the client dies pending trial. See Granquist v Sandberg (1990) 219 CA3d 181, 268 CR 109.

An affidavit submitted in support of a motion for preference under CCP §36(a) (party over age 70) may be signed by the attorney for the party seeking preference based on information and belief as to the medical diagnosis and prognosis of any party. The affidavit is inadmissible for any purpose other than a motion for preference under §36(a). CCP §36.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.5 3. Party Under Age 14 in Wrongful Death or Personal Injury Action

A civil action to recover damages for wrongful death or personal injury shall be entitled to preference on the motion of any party to the action who is under age 14 unless the court finds that the party does not have a substantial interest in the case as a whole. A civil action subject to CCP §36(a) (party over age 70) shall be given preference over a case subject to this subdivision. CCP §36(d).

Code of Civil Procedure §36(b) is mandatory. To construe §36(b) as directory or discretionary would, in light of the all encompassing discretion conferred by §36(e), deprive it of meaning and function. Peters v Superior Court (1989) 212 CA3d 218, 224, 260 CR 426. Section 36(b) does not violate the separation of powers doctrine; no case has held that the legislature is absolutely precluded from enacting statutes regulating court procedure. To the contrary, Cal Const art VI, §6 directly empowers the Judicial Council to formulate rules for court administration, practice, and procedure that are not inconsistent with any statute. 212 CA3d at 225.

Likewise, CCP §36(b) does not violate equal protection. Ensuring timely court access to children under 14 who have suffered personal injury or parental death is a legitimate legislative purpose, and there is a rational relationship between this purpose and §36(b). 212 CA3d at 226.

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.6 4. Illness or Medical Condition

In its discretion, the court may also grant a motion for preference accompanied by clear and convincing medical documentation that concludes that one of the parties suffers from an illness or condition that raises substantial medical doubt of survival of that party beyond 6 months and that satisfies the court that the interests of justice will be served by granting the preference. CCP §36(d); see Heda v Superior Court (1990) 225 CA3d 525, 527, 275 CR 136. A plaintiff may move for trial preference based on a defendant's medical condition. Heda v Superior Court, supra.

Although §36(d) addresses calendar preference for trial setting, the statute's rationale for granting calendar preference to certain litigants may equally apply to appellate proceedings. Thus, one court of appeal found that a litigant, who might not survive the delay of an appellate court backlog, was entitled to appellate preference. The court urged the Judicial Council to adopt appropriate rules to "make explicit that which is currently implicit," i.e., to provide expressly for appellate calendar preference for ailing or elderly litigants. Warren v Schecter (1997) 57 CA4th 1189, 1198, 67 CR2d 573.

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.7 5. Party Seeking Damages Related to Commission of Felony

A civil action shall be entitled to preference if the action is one in which the plaintiff is seeking damages that were alleged to have been caused by the defendant during the commission of a felony for which the defendant has been criminally convicted. CCP §37(a).

The court shall endeavor to try the action within 120 days after the grant of preference. CCP §37(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.8 6. Other Grounds

Despite any other provision of law, the court may in its discretion grant a motion for preference that is supported by a showing that satisfies the court that the interests of justice will be served by granting this preference. CCP §36(e).

Other statutes also grant preference, as do those for declaratory relief actions (CCP §1062.3(a)) and unlawful detainer actions (CCP §1170.5). On declaratory relief, see chap 35.

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.9 B. Motions to Reset

Motions to reset are ordinarily made when a case previously set for trial was ordered off calendar. See, e.g., Levine v Pollack (1995) 37 CA4th 129, 43 CR2d 491.

PRACTICE TIP: The court will usually deny the motion unless the circumstances that resulted in the case's being dropped have changed. If the case was dropped without fault of the party seeking to reset (e.g., because of a reasonable but mistaken belief that a settlement had been reached), the court will usually grant the motion and assign an early date for trial. If the party seeking to reset was at fault, however, the court may (1) deny the motion and require the party to file a new, at-issue memorandum, (2) grant the motion but set the case for trial later than the date requested, or (3) take other remedial action.

C. Procedure

§42.10 1. Noticed Motion or Ex Parte Application

Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1335, a party seeking to advance, specially set, or reset a case for trial must make this request by noticed motion or ex parte application under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1200-3.1207. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1335(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.11 2. Showing Required

The request may be granted only on the moving party's affirmative showing of good cause based on a declaration served and filed with the motion or application. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1335(b).

See §42.4 on affidavits when the party is over age 70. See §42.6 for showing required based on party's illness.

§42.12 3. Service

Unless the court orders otherwise, a party may file and serve a motion for preference, supported by a declaration that all essential parties have appeared or been served with process. CCP §36(c)(1). A party who reaches age 70 may serve a motion for preference at any time. CCP §36(c)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.13 4. Setting Matter for Trial

After granting a motion for preference, the court must set the matter for trial within 120 days and there shall be no continuance beyond 120 days except for physical disability of a party or a party's attorney, or on a showing of good cause stated in the record. The continuance shall be for no more than 15 days, and no more than one continuance for physical disability may be granted to any party. CCP §36(f).

On the granting of a motion for preference under CCP §36(b) (wrongful death or personal injury action with party under age 14), a party in an action based on a health provider's alleged professional negligence, as defined in CCP §364, shall receive a trial date no sooner than 6 months and no later than 9 months after the date the motion is granted. CCP §36(g).

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.14 5. To Whom Motion Is Made

Motions to advance, specially set, or reset a case for trial must be made on notice to all parties and, unless the case was previously assigned for all purposes to a specific judge or department, must be presented to the judge supervising the master calendar or, when there is no master calendar, to the judge in whose department the case is pending. If the case has been assigned for all purposes to a specific judge or department, the motion must be made to that judge or department. Local rules should be consulted.

§42.15 D. Court's Discretion

Motions to advance, specially set, or reset a trial date are subject to the court's discretion. See CCP §36. The court's ruling will not be reversed on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is shown. Parlen v Golden State Sanwa Bank (1987) 194 CA3d 906, 240 CR 73.

III. MOTIONS FOR CONTINUANCE

§42.16 A. Court's Reluctance to Grant Continuances

Even before the advent of the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620), many California courts, especially those in metropolitan counties, had adopted firm no-continuance policies to aid in attacking ever-increasing backlogs of untried civil cases. The Trial Court Delay Reduction Act now expressly directs trial court judges to "[a]dopt and utilize a firm, consistent policy against continuances, to the maximum extent possible and reasonable, in all stages of the litigation." Govt C §68607(g). In addition, Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(a) requires that the date set for trial be "firm" and "certain." A continuance cannot be granted without an affirmative showing of good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c). See County of San Bernardino v Doria Mining & Eng'g Corp. (1977) 72 CA3d 776, 779, 140 CR 383.

§42.17 B. Grounds

There is no comprehensive statutory scheme relating to trial continuances. The circumstances that may indicate good cause for granting continuances are set out in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c) (see §42.19), local rules or policy (see §42.21), and, in a few situations, by statute (see §42.22). In some instances, a court may exercise its inherent powers to continue a case on its own motion. See §42.24.

§42.18 1. Basic Requirement of Good Cause

The basic requirement for allowing a continuance of a civil case is set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c), which provides that no continuance may be granted except on an affirmative showing of good cause. Although continuances of trials are disfavored, each continuance request must be considered on its own merits. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.19 2. Examples of Good Cause

Circumstances that may indicate good cause include:

- The unavailability of an essential lay or expert witness because of death, illness, or other excusable circumstances. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)(1); Arntz Contracting Co. v St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (1996) 47 CA4th 464, 488, 54 CR2d 888 (continuance denied when expert witness suffered stroke shortly before trial, but his deposition testimony was available, another witness testified competently on the subject, and the court forbade plaintiff from commenting on expert's absence).
- The unavailability of a party because of death, illness, or other excusable circumstances. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)(2); Lewis v Neptune Soc'y (1987) 195 CA3d 427, 657, 240 CR 656 (illness no basis for grant of continuance if party can attend trial); Young v Redman (1976) 55 CA3d 827, 831, 128 CR 86 (no ground for continuance when party has notice of trial but fails to adjust personal plans to attend).
- The unavailability of trial counsel because of death, illness, or other excusable circumstances. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)(3); see Hernandez v Superior Court (2004) 115 CA4th 1242, 9 CR3d 821 (serious illness and death of plaintiff's trial counsel was good cause for granting further continuance of trial date and reopening discovery); Oliveros v County of Los Angeles (2004) 120 CA4th 1389, 16 CR3d 638 (trial court erred in denying defendant's prompt request for continuance due to attorney's unexpected engagement in another trial); Mahoney v Southland Mental Health Assocs. Med. Group (1990) 223 CA3d 167, 272 CR 602 (plaintiff's counsel failed to promptly request continuance, even if one counsel departed and another became ill before hearing date); Vann v Shilleh (1975) 54 CA3d 192, 194, 126 CR 401 (insufficient time to find substitute counsel).
- The substitution of trial counsel, but only when an affirmative showing is made that the substitution is required in the interests of justice. Vann v Shilleh (1975) 54 CA3d 192, 126 CR 401 (abuse of discretion to deny party's motion for continuance, even though made on day of trial, when party's attorney withdrew from case too close to trial, and party lacked sufficient advance warning). Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)(4).

NOTE: A court need not be more liberal than usual in granting continuances when a litigant is representing him- or herself. Nelson v Gaunt (1981) 125 CA3d 623, 178 CR 167. In Nelson, the trial court's refusal to grant a continuance was upheld when the defendant stated on the day of trial that he lacked funds for an attorney but made no showing of penury and did not explain why he waited until then to declare his predicament.

- The addition of a new party if (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)(5)):
- The new party has not had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery and prepare for trial; or
- The other parties have not had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery and prepare for trial in regard to the new party's involvement in the case.
- A party's excused inability to obtain essential testimony, documents, or other material evidence despite diligent efforts. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)(6).
- A significant, unanticipated change in the status of the case as a result of which the case is not ready for trial. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)(7).

§42.20 3. Other Factors to Consider

In ruling on a motion or an application for continuance, the court must consider all facts and circumstances that are relevant to the outcome. These may include:

- The proximity of the trial date. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(1).
- Whether there was any previous continuance, extension of time, or delay of trial due to any party. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(2).
- The length of the continuance requested. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(3).
- The availability of alternative means to address the problem that gave rise to the motion or application for a continuance. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(4).
- The prejudice that parties or witnesses will suffer because of the continuance. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(5).
- If the case is entitled to a preferential trial setting, the reasons for that status and whether the need for a continuance outweighs the need to avoid delay. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(6).
- The court's calendar and the impact of granting a continuance on other pending trials. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(7).
- Whether trial counsel is engaged in another trial. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(8). See Oliveros v County of Los Angeles (2004) 120 CA4th 1389, 16 CR3d 638 (trial court erred in denying defendant's prompt request for continuance due to attorney's engagement in another trial).
- Whether all parties have stipulated to a continuance. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(9).
- Whether the interests of justice are best served by a continuance, by the trial of the matter, or by imposing conditions on the continuance. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(10).
- Any other fact or circumstance relevant to the fair determination of the motion or application. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(11).

§42.21 4. Local Variations

In reality, there are local variations in the degree to which the policy on continuances set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332 is followed. Consequently, counsel must determine the specifics of court policy in a particular county. In smaller counties, where court business is less voluminous and is handled more informally, courts may adopt more liberal approaches to continuances.

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.22 5. Statutory Grounds

The more common statutory grounds for granting trial continuances are:

- Amendment of pleadings. A court may, on its own motion, grant a continuance when an amendment to the pleadings, or the allowance of time to make an amendment or to plead, makes the continuance necessary. CCP §§473, 594a.
- Membership in legislature. Any trial must be postponed when any party, attorney, or principal witness is a member of the California legislature and the legislature is in session or in a recess not exceeding 40 days. CCP §595. The language of §595 has been construed as directory and not mandatory, however. See Thurmond v Superior Court (1967) 66 C2d 836, 59 CR 273. In response to Thurmond, the legislature added the second paragraph of §595, specifying certain instances in which the section is not mandatory. It is unclear whether a court might find the section merely directory in instances beyond those specified.
- Party in armed forces. The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act of 2005 (50 USC App §§501-548, 560-591) provides that, in any action or proceeding in which a plaintiff or defendant (not a witness) is in military service, the court may, on its own motion, and must on the motion of the party, grant a continuance, unless the party's ability to prosecute or defend the action is not materially affected by the military service.
- Court conflict. The court may, on its own motion, order a continuance when it is engaged in another trial. CCP §594a.
- Stipulation. The court must postpone a trial for up to 30 days when all attorneys of record for parties who have appeared agree in writing to the postponement. CCP §595.2. However, it has been held that, despite its mandatory language, §595.2 is only directory. Pham v Nguyen (1997) 54 CA4th 11, 62 CR2d 422. Some courts have adopted rules or policies that directly contradict the literal language of §595.2. See, e.g., Santa Clara Ct R 7(D) (affirmative showing of good cause necessary for continuance).
- Absence of evidence. A trial may be postponed on the ground of absence of evidence on a showing by affidavit (or declaration; see CCP §2015.5) that the expected evidence is material and that due diligence has been used to procure it. CCP §595.4. When the motion is due to the absence of a material witness, however, the court may require the moving party to state by affidavit (or declaration) what the expected testimony will be. If the adverse party then agrees that the evidence may be considered as having actually been given at the trial or offered and overruled as improper, the trial may not be postponed. CCP §595.4.
- Summary judgment motion. If it appears from the affidavits submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment that facts essential to justify opposition may exist but cannot, for reasons stated, then be presented, the court shall order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or discovery to be had or may make any other order as may be just. CCP §437c(h); Oldcastle Precast, Inc. v Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co. (2009) 170 CA4th 554, 576, 88 CR3d 363; Bahl v Bank of America (2001) 89 CA4th 389, 395, 107 CR2d 270. On summary judgment, see chap 36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.23 6. Inherent Power of Court to Continue

In addition to the grounds for trial continuances discussed above, a court may exercise its inherent powers to continue a case on its own motion as long as neither party is prejudiced by the continuance. See, e.g., People v Hernon (1951) 106 CA2d 638, 645, 235 P2d 614 (court may order continuance to hear testimony from material witness although neither party so requests). See also Santandrea v Siltec Corp. (1976) 56 CA3d 525, 529, 128 CR 629, disapproved on other grounds in Bauguess v Paine (1978) 22 C3d 626, 150 CR 461 (every court has inherent power to regulate proceedings of matters before it and to effect orderly disposition of issues presented).

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.24 C. Court Discretion; Factors Considered

The court has broad discretion to determine whether good cause exists for granting a motion for a trial continuance; its decision will be reversed on appeal only when there is a clear abuse of discretion resulting in prejudice. Forthmann v Boyer (2002) 97 CA4th 977, 118 CR2d 715; Eastwood v Froehlich (1976) 60 CA3d 523, 529, 131 CR 577. See Hernandez v Superior Court (2004) 115 CA4th 1242, 1247, 9 CR3d 821 (trial court's failure to consider illness and death of trial counsel in setting trial date was abuse of discretion); Oliveros v County of Los Angeles (2004) 120 CA4th 1389, 16 CR3d 638 (trial court's failure to balance all competing interests in ruling on motion to continue trial date due to unavailability of counsel was abuse of discretion).

D. Procedure

§42.25 1. Noticed Motion, Ex Parte Application, and Declaration

A party seeking a continuance of the date set for trial, whether contested or uncontested or stipulated to by the parties, must make the request for a continuance by a noticed motion or an ex parte application under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1200-3.1207, with supporting declarations. The party must make the motion or application as soon as reasonably practical once the need for the continuance is discovered. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(b).

Supporting declarations must be filed with the ex parte application or noticed motion. Cal Rules of Ct §3.1332(b). Showings by declaration, even when not mandatory, have been said to reflect the policy of encouraging prompt trial of lawsuits. Cade v Mid-City Hosp. Corp. (1975) 45 CA3d 589, 600, 119 CR 571.

Moreover, CCP §595.4 requires that a motion for a continuance on the ground of absence of evidence must be supported by an affidavit (or declaration; see CCP §2015.5) showing the materiality of the evidence and that due diligence has been used to procure it. When the motion is based on the absence of a material witness, the court may require a declaration stating that the expected evidence and the motion must be denied when the adverse party stipulates that the evidence be considered as having been offered at trial. CCP §595.4.

For sample forms of notice of motion and declaration, see §§42.31-42.32.

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.26 2. Payment of Expenses as Condition for Granting Motion

When a motion for a trial continuance is made, the court may, as a condition of granting the motion, require the moving party to pay to the adverse party any expenses resulting from the continuance. CCP §1024. Such expenses may include, e.g., jury and witness fees (Williams v Myer (1907) 150 C 714, 89 P 972) and parties' transportation bills (Wilkin v Tadlock (1952) 110 CA2d 156, 241 P2d 1066). A plaintiff's failure both to pay such costs and to proceed with trial may result in a judgment of dismissal. Fraser v Fraser (1919) 39 CA 467, 179 P 427.

The court does not have authority to award attorney fees as a condition of granting a continuance under CCP §1024. Levine v Pollack (1995) 37 CA4th 129, 43 CR2d 491. In construing CCP §1024, the court relied on (1) the amendment of §1024 changing the word "costs" to "expenses," (2) other legislative changes recognizing attorney fees as costs rather than as expenses, and (3) the adoption of CCP §128.5, which permits a continuance to be conditioned only on payment of attorney fees in cases of bad faith or frivolous actions. For current sanctions statutes, see CCP §§128.6-128.7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.27 3. Procedures When Motion Denied; Severance

When a motion for a continuance has been denied and the moving party must either proceed to trial or face a dismissal for failure to prosecute, counsel should consider, as another alternative, moving to sever under CCP §1048(b). When certain issues can be severed from the others and a continuance is not necessary for trial of those issues, then the trial on those issues can proceed.

On severance generally, see chap 43.

© The Regents of the University of California

§42.28 E. Appellate Review

An order granting or denying a motion for a continuance is not directly appealable; it is reviewable on an appeal only from a final judgment or order. Haraszthy v Horton (1873) 46 C 545; Estate of McCarthy (1937) 23 CA2d 395, 73 P2d 913. Although it is virtually impossible to show reversible error in the granting of a continuance, it may be possible for a party to obtain relief, e.g., by writ of prohibition, from an order denying a continuance.

On appeal, the appellate court will not disturb a ruling on a motion for a continuance unless a clear showing is made that the trial court abused its discretion. On court's discretion, see §42.24.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On the many specific details required, see chap 11 and the sample form in §11.35. On when preprinted Judicial Council forms must or may be filed with the court, see Cal Rules of Ct 1.30-1.44 and 2.131-2.134 and the discussion in §11.27.

I. INTRODUCTION

§43.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter covers consolidation, a procedural device that allows (and in some instances, requires) the court to combine separately filed lawsuits that involve a common question of law or fact for simultaneous preparation or disposition. See §§43.3-43.62 (text) and 43.103-43.105 (forms). This chapter also discusses severance. See §§43.63-43.102 (text) and 43.106-43.108 (forms).

§43.2 B. Governing Law

The main statute governing consolidation is CCP §1048(b), although special statutes also govern consolidation (see, e.g., §§43.37-43.44). Severance is generally governed by §1048(b), although particular statutes require severance (see, e.g., §§43.70-43.75), while other statutes permit severance (see, e.g., §§43.77-43.80).

II. CONSOLIDATION; GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

A. Overview of Procedure

§43.3 1. Consolidation Defined

The scope of consolidation is broad:

- It applies to all actions, regardless of subject matter or substantive law;
- It may be sought by any party, regardless of status in a lawsuit, or be ordered on the court's own motion;
- The actions may have been brought by one party (who elected not to join all of its claims in the same complaint or cross-complaint), or by different parties; and
- It may be used regardless of whether the actions to be consolidated were separately filed or were separated by a prior severance order.

Consolidation has limitations, however:

- The actions must share at least one common issue of law or fact;
- It cannot be used to combine actions on file with actions not yet pending;
- It cannot combine actions pending in different counties; and
- It cannot be used to combine state and federal proceedings.

EXAMPLE: Consolidation can be used in similar suits, e.g., by the driver and passengers of one car against the driver of another car, or for wrongful death of passengers killed in an airplane crash. Different types of actions may also be consolidated, e.g., suits by shareholders against a corporation for fraudulent misrepresentation, suits by insurers to cancel insurance policies, and suits by insureds to recover on policies.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/43 Consolidation and Severance/§43.4 2. Purposes of Consolidation

§43.4 2. Purposes of Consolidation

Consolidation has two basic purposes:

- To promote efficiency by avoiding unnecessary duplication of proceedings (see Mueller v J.C. Penney Co. (1985) 173 CA3d 713, 722, 219 CR 272 (purpose of consolidation is merely to promote trial convenience and economy)); and
- To avoid inconsistent resolution of the same legal or factual issue (see Garden Grove Community Church v Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co. (1983) 140 CA3d 251, 262, 191 CR 15 (statute permitting consolidation of contract arbitration proceedings was designed to promote "efficient settling of private disputes, judicial economy, and the avoidance of contrary results")).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/43 Consolidation and Severance/§43.5 3. Tactical Considerations in Seeking or Opposing Consolidation

§43.5 3. Tactical Considerations in Seeking or Opposing Consolidation

In addition to improving the administration of justice, consolidation has tactical implications. Many tactical considerations apply whether the moving party is a plaintiff or a defendant.

EXAMPLE: Assuming that one party is suing or has been sued by several other parties on similar claims, consolidation may:

- Help counsel protect the client (whether plaintiff or defendant) by ensuring that the client's deposition is taken on one occasion by all parties, rather than in piecemeal fashion by different parties in different cases;
- Facilitate preparation of internally consistent discovery responses; and
- Reduce litigation costs by reducing the number of trials in which counsel must participate.

NOTE: Litigation costs include not only court costs and attorney fees but may also include the opportunity cost of a client's time allocated to depositions, trial, and related preparation, instead of to business tasks or leisure activities. Consolidation, when it requires a party involved in only a narrow portion of the case to participate in the entire proceeding, raises the litigation expense to that party.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.6 a. Settlement

Consolidation also may enhance the prospects of a settlement by making it possible to achieve a "global" settlement that is more equitable to both plaintiffs and defendants, especially when a defendant is sued by several plaintiffs. By forcing the plaintiffs who are competing for the defendants' limited resources to allocate those resources among themselves, a global settlement not only allows the defendant to avoid the risk of settling too high in one case and having insufficient funds left to settle others, but also allows plaintiffs to share the defendants' resources equitably among themselves, instead of leaving later or nonsettling plaintiffs with nothing. When both plaintiffs and defendants are sensitive to these dangers, settlement may be encouraged.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/43 Consolidation and Severance/§43.7 b. Effect on Trial Date

§43.7 b. Effect on Trial Date

Consolidation may affect the time at which an action is tried. Because the later-filed suit is consolidated into the earlier-filed suit when consolidation is ordered, the later-filed suit may go to trial sooner than it otherwise would have without consolidation. In contrast, consolidation may increase the complexity of the case to the point that the earlier-filed action will be tried later than it would have been if consolidation had not been ordered.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/43 Consolidation and Severance/§43.8 c. Plaintiff's Considerations

§43.8 c. Plaintiff's Considerations

Some tactical consequences of consolidation divide along party lines. On one hand, a plaintiff might oppose consolidation for reasons such as the following:

- The probability that a single case can be tried to judgment more quickly than can a consolidated action;
- The likelihood that plaintiffs pursuing independent actions will obtain larger judgments than they would if the actions were consolidated;
- The danger of being forced to settle for a prorata share of a limited fund along with plaintiffs in later-filed actions;
- The likelihood that plaintiff's counsel will lose at least some measure of control that he or she otherwise would exercise over the proceedings;
- The danger that consolidation with an action filed by a plaintiff with a weaker claim will reduce the prospects of victory or a large judgment;
- The risk that plaintiff's counsel will receive a lower fee if not selected to serve as lead counsel; and
- The possibility that plaintiff's counsel will be forced to participate in hearings or depositions unrelated to his or her client's claims.

On the other hand, consolidation may further a plaintiff's interests if the action can be combined with those of other plaintiffs, and all can then cooperate in sharing expenses and putting on the strongest possible case against their common adversary. The added strength in numbers may make the relative loss of control less problematic.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/43 Consolidation and Severance/§43.9 d. Defendant's Considerations

§43.9 d. Defendant's Considerations

A defendant might oppose consolidation for reasons such as the following:

- The possibility that the plaintiff's actions considered in the aggregate may be tried more quickly if consolidation is ordered;
- The likelihood that, if consolidation is defeated, at least some plaintiffs may be discouraged from pursuing their claims independently;
- The danger that harmful evidence will be admitted during a consolidated trial that would not have been revealed to the finder of fact in some of the actions if they had been tried separately;
- The possibility that defendant's counsel will be forced to participate in hearings or depositions unrelated to his or her client's defenses; and
- The risk that the sheer number of claims asserted against the defendant may cause the jury to infer that the defendant did something wrong; or
- The risk that the jury might be inflamed by the fact that the defendant caused harm to so many and award a large amount of punitive damages.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/43 Consolidation and Severance/§43.10 B. Related Procedures

§43.10 B. Related Procedures

Related or similar claims may have been made in separate lawsuits for a variety of reasons. In addition to consolidation, several other procedural devices, also designed to promote efficiency and consistency by reducing the repetitive litigation of dispersed claims, allow those claims to be addressed in the same proceeding.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.11 1. Cross-Complaint

Filing a cross-complaint allows a defendant or a cross-defendant to assert in the same lawsuit any claims it has against a plaintiff, a cross-complainant, or a nonparty. See CCP §§422.10, 426.10-426.70. In effect, it "consolidates" the claims of a defendant or cross-complainant with the claims previously filed in the same action. See chap 26 on cross-complaints. However, the cross-complaint device does not allow several plaintiffs to simultaneously resolve their individual but essentially identical claims against a common defendant.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.12 2. Joinder

The court has discretion to join a nonparty as a coplaintiff or as a codefendant. The added party must have a claim to, right in, or interest in the property or controversy that is the subject of the original action, or must assert or have asserted against him- or herself a right to relief arising from the same event. The same or common questions of law or fact with respect to all these persons must arise in the action. See CCP §378.

The court must join as a party anyone whose absence prevents complete relief from being accorded to existing parties, or anyone who claims an interest in the subject matter of the action, which might be impaired or which might subject the existing parties to inconsistent obligations if the person were not joined. CCP §389. See chap 14 on joinder.

NOTE: Before 1927, CCP §1048 provided that actions could be consolidated only if they "might have been joined." That statute was modified in 1927 to broaden the scope of consolidation and to indicate that the availability of consolidation was not to be limited by the criteria for joinder.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.13 3. Interpleader

Interpleader permits a party subject to conflicting claims to force all claimants to litigate their claims among themselves in a single proceeding. CCP §386. In effect, a party that files a complaint in interpleader "consolidates" all possible actions relating to a particular subject that might be brought separately against it. See chap 28. Interpleaded claims need not be based on the same transaction, and no commonality of issues need be shown. Nor is there a requirement that the claims be either identical or mutually exclusive. Even a partial conflict among the claims is sufficient.

NOTE: The purpose of interpleader is to protect the stakeholder from an intolerable dilemma created by inconsistent decisions, rather than efficiency. Other mechanisms that can protect against inconsistent decisions include the "limited fund" class action under Fed R Civ P 23(b)(1)(B) and the federal laws on bankruptcy.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.14 4. Class Action

The class action device extends the concept of joinder to situations in which the number of similarly situated plaintiffs or defendants is so large that joinder is impracticable. See CCP §382. The claims or defenses of the class members must involve common issues of law or fact that predominate over individual issues. If the amount of each individual class member's claim is relatively large, and if the number of class members is not too great, consolidation or joinder may be preferable because they allow a greater degree of participation by claimants in the litigation. See, e.g., Rose v Medtronics, Inc. (1980) 107 CA3d 150, 155, 166 CR 16 (denying class action certification in mass tort case to allow each claimant to participate in litigation of own claim).

The Consumers Legal Remedies Act (CC §§1750-1784) provides a modified form of class action, which is subject to special requirements and is available only to consumers.

NOTE: Because the absent class members are typically too numerous to participate meaningfully, counsel may need to take elaborate steps to protect their interests, such as "best notice practicable" and judicial approval of settlement. Consolidation can often achieve the same economies of joint disposition without the cost of notice or the loss of party control over settlements.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.15 5. Intervention

Intervention allows a person with an interest in a lawsuit to enter the action as a party to protect that interest despite not having been brought in by the existing litigants. CCP §387. See chap 31. Intervention is mandatory if a statute grants a right to intervene, or if the nonparty is a person who should have been joined under CCP §389. Permission to intervene may be granted if a nonparty has a direct interest in the outcome and would not enlarge the issues in the case, and if need to participate outweighs any opposition by the existing parties. California Physicians' Serv. v Superior Court (1980) 102 CA3d 91, 95, 162 CR 266.

NOTE: Intervention is intended to protect the rights of nonparties, rather than efficiency or avoidance of inconsistent adjudications. It may be invoked only by a nonparty, not by existing parties or the court.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.16 6. Coordination

Coordination is the procedural device most like consolidation. Its purposes are essentially identical to those of consolidation, but its scope is greater. Coordination allows actions that share common questions of law or fact, but that are pending in different counties, to be combined for simultaneous disposition. Consolidation is restricted to actions that are pending in the same county. CCP §§403-404.9 On coordination, see chap 44.

NOTE: Because consolidation and coordination are so similar, the detailed statutory criteria for coordination are a source of guidance to a court contemplating consolidation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.17 7. Equitable Bill of Peace

The equitable bill of peace allowed relief from the burdens of a multiplicity of actions in an era when coordination did not exist and consolidation was subject to restrictive conditions. It is an injunction staying numerous pending or anticipated lawsuits while allowing one action to proceed to trial in order to decide issues common to all. See Chafee, Bills of Peace With Multiple Parties, 45 Harv L Rev 1297 (1932). This procedural device has gradually been displaced by consolidation and coordination, except when some actions have been filed while others are merely threatened, or when actions are pending in different jurisdictions. It also retains utility when the separate actions involve one or more common issues that do not predominate over the individual issues. The current trend, however, is to deal with such situations by using consolidation and severance in tandem.

An equitable bill of peace is proper only if consolidation is not available. See Bartholomew v Bartholomew (1942) 56 CA2d 216, 233, 132 P2d 297 ("[t]here is no difference in the end to be reached, namely, the saving of expense, time and inconvenience").

NOTE: The bill of peace device is not available when numerous individual claimants sue a single defendant (or when one claimant sues numerous defendants) on separate causes of action. See Southern Cal. Edison Co. v State Farm Mut. Ins. Co. (1969) 271 CA2d 744, 748, 76 CR 909.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.18 8. Stay or Abatement

Under the doctrine of priority of jurisdiction, a court may abate, dismiss, or transfer an action involving the same subject matter as another action filed earlier in the same or a different California court. See, e.g., §23.31 (demurrer) on ground of another action pending. The doctrine applies only if the parties' roles in the two suits are the same and the claims are so similar that resolution of the first action would bar the second. Lord v Garland (1946) 27 C2d 840, 848, 168 P2d 5.

NOTE: Gregg v Superior Court (1987) 194 CA3d 134, 136, 239 CR 380, illustrates one of the limits of the usefulness of abatement as a device for avoiding parallel disposition of similar or overlapping claims by different courts. In Gregg, which involved an in personam claim, the court held that it was an abuse of discretion to stay the plaintiff's later-filed California action even though 50 other plaintiffs were suing the same defendant on similar claims in 11 federal court actions. 194 CA3d at 138.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.19 9. Res Judicata and Issue Preclusion

The doctrines of res judicata and issue preclusion offer other ways to prevent repetitive litigation of the same or related issues. Res judicata prohibits the relitigation of the same issues already decided between the same parties in an earlier lawsuit. Claim preclusion bars any litigation of matters that both could and should have been advanced in an earlier lawsuit involving the same claim but only one party. Res judicata has effect only as between the parties who were present, or in privity to a party, in the prior action. On res judicata, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chap 23 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Constitutionality

§43.20 1. Trial by Jury

Consolidation under federal law has been ruled constitutional and not violative of the right to trial by jury. Cecil v Missouri Pub. Serv. Corp. (WD Mo 1939) 28 F Supp 649, 650 (consolidation under Fed R Civ P 42(a) of four cases brought by different plaintiffs against one defendant does not violate Seventh Amendment right to trial by jury). Presumably, the result under Cal Const art I, §16 (which contains language similar to that of US Const amend VII) would be the same.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.21 2. Due Process

There are constitutional limits on the court's power to order consolidation. If consolidation would result in a trial that would be too complex for a jury to comprehend, it would violate the litigants' due process rights. See, e.g., In re Japanese Elec. Prods. Antitrust Litig. (3d Cir 1980) 631 F2d 1069, 1084 (noting that "due process guarantees a comprehending factfinder"); Gwathmey v U.S. (5th Cir 1954) 215 F2d 148, 152 (allowing single jury to determine value of 236 separate tracts in eminent domain proceeding constituted denial of due process).

PRACTICE TIP: Sometimes due process problems can be avoided by consolidation followed by separate trials of selected issues or claims. Because of the importance of the constitutional right to a jury trial, a court should deny consolidation or order severance rather than deny a party a jury trial. Japanese Elec. Prods. Antitrust Litig., 631 F2d at 1088 ("district court should not deny a trial by jury if by severance … or other methods the court can enhance a jury's capabilities or can reduce the complexity of a suit sufficiently").

Another constitutional limitation on consolidation arises from the fundamental procedural due process right to be heard at a meaningful time and in a meaningful manner. See Fuentes v Shevin (1972) 407 US 67, 80, 32 L Ed 2d 556, 92 S Ct 1983. Accordingly, in exercising its power under CCP §1048(a) to regulate consolidated actions, courts must be careful to preserve each party's ability to participate directly in the litigation. See, e.g., McCarthy v Mobile Cranes, Inc. (1962) 199 CA2d 500, 507, 18 CR 750 (denial of due process to deny one party opportunity to cross-examine witness during trial of three consolidated actions).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.22 III. MANDATORY CONSOLIDATION

Consolidation, normally discretionary, may be made mandatory by certain statutes. These statutes reflect legislative determinations that separate actions would almost invariably result in inefficiency or create an unacceptable risk of inconsistent adjudications. See, e.g., General Motors Corp. v Superior Court (1966) 65 C2d 88, 92, 52 CR 460 (regarding wrongful death actions, legislature has determined that danger of prejudice is outweighed by advantages of consolidation).

§43.23 A. Actions to Recover for Child's Injury and Death

Under CCP §376, on the motion of any interested party, an action by parents to recover for injuries sustained by their child may be consolidated with an action under CCP §377.60 to recover for the wrongful death of the child. Consolidation was required under former CCP §377 if both actions arose from the same negligent or wrongful act.

§43.25 C. Actions for Injuries to Employee

Labor Code §3853 provides for the consolidation of separate actions that may be brought by an employee to recover personal injury damages from a third party tortfeasor and by the employee's employer against the same tortfeasor to recover reimbursement for workers' compensation benefits furnished to the employee. Both the employer and employee may intervene in an action filed by the other. Buell v CBS, Inc. (1982) 136 CA3d 823, 186 CR 455. "[T]he Legislature intended the actions to be so closely parallel to each other that '[s]ubstantively as well as procedurally, employer and employee actions are interchangeable: regardless of who brings the action, it is essentially the same lawsuit.'" 136 CA3d at 826, quoting County of San Diego v Sanfax Corp. (1977) 19 C3d 862, 874, 140 CR 638. In Buell, the court allowed an injured plaintiff, whose action against the tortfeasor was dismissed for failure to timely serve the tortfeasor, to intervene in the workers' compensation carrier's action.

The court declined to follow Buell in Bishop v Silva (1991) 234 CA3d 1317, 285 CR 910, refusing to permit an employee who had failed to serve summons within 3 years to avoid the penalty for not complying with mandatory service requirements simply by intervening back into the employer's intervention action. The court noted that since the Buell decision, the service statutes had been amended to provide limited exceptions to the time requirements for service and to exclude entirely "plaintiff's diligence from the equation." 234 CA3d at 1325. See also *Fairmont Ins. IV. PERMISSIVE CONSOLIDATION

When actions involving a common question of law or fact are pending before the court, it may order a joint hearing or trial of any or all the matters in issue in the actions; it may order all the actions consolidated and it may make such orders concerning the proceedings as may tend to avoid unnecessary costs or delay. CCP §1048(a). Before its enactment in 1872, California courts refused to consolidate separate lawsuits alleging distinct causes of action. See, e.g., Wallace v Eldredge (1865) 27 C 498, 500.

As originally enacted, CCP §1048 restricted consolidation to situations when "two or more actions [were] pending at one time between the same parties … in the same court, upon causes of action which might have been joined." The criteria for joinder in the 1872 version of §1048 are very different from, and much more restrictive than, the current criteria for consolidation. Compare Wolters v Rossi (1899) 126 C 644, 650, 59 P 143 (order consolidating actions amounts to determination that claims could have been joined), with Marriage of McNeill (1984) 160 CA3d 548, 557, 206 CR 641, disapproved on other grounds in Marriage of Fabian (1986) 41 C3d 440, 224 CR 333 (affirming consolidation of claims that could not have been joined). In 1927, §1048 was liberalized to allow consolidation "in the discretion of the court, whenever it can be done without prejudice to a substantial right." Although the language of the 1927 version of §1048 differs from the language in the current version, it appears that the courts applied criteria similar to those used today.

§43.27 B. Actions Pending in Same Court

Code of Civil Procedure §1048(a) gives a court the power to consolidate related actions "pending before the court." Daly v White (1950) 100 CA2d 22, 26, 222 P2d 950 (affirming consolidation of two related superior court actions filed in same county). This authority permits the court to consolidate related cases even when one of them is pending in a department or division of the court that handles specialized matters. See, e.g., Marriage of McNeill (1984) 160 CA3d 548, 557, 206 CR 641, disapproved on other grounds in Marriage of Fabian (1986) 41 C3d 440, 224 CR 333; Estate of Baker (1982) 131 CA3d 471, 485, 182 CR 550 (probate court properly consolidated action to set aside deed with will contest).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/43 Consolidation and Severance/§43.28 C. Effect of Trial Court Unification

§43.28 C. Effect of Trial Court Unification

Code of Civil Procedure §1048 and Cal Rules of Ct 3.520(a) authorize the consolidation of civil cases pending in superior court. Although there are no special rules on consolidation of limited civil cases with cases within the general jurisdiction of the superior court, it appears that, under CCP §1048(a), the trial courts are able to consolidate limited civil matters with other pending matters that involve "a common question of law or fact."

NOTE: Before trial court unification, when superior and municipal courts were separate courts, CCP §1048(a) by its own terms did not authorize consolidation of municipal and superior court cases. See, e.g., Cochrane v Superior Court (1968) 261 CA2d 201, 203, 67 CR 675 (municipal court could not transfer case to superior court for consolidation with case pending there); Caballero v Richardson (1959) 173 CA2d 459, 462, 343 P2d 302 (superior court could not transfer action pending in municipal court to itself for consolidation with superior court case).

Actions pending in different counties are not eligible for consolidation, but they may be coordinated (for some or all purposes) under CCP §§403-404.9.

PRACTICE TIP: Although limited civil cases are tried under special procedures intended to help keep the costs of litigation within the grasp of litigants whose damages are $25,000 or less (see CCP §§90-100), the California Rules of Court do not differentiate between limited and unlimited jurisdiction for purposes of the consolidation and coordination rules. However, counsel should keep apprised of statutory developments and changes to the California Rules of Court as a result of trial court unification and should check local rules for any amendments adopted by individual trial courts to implement unification. On trial court unification, see chap 6.

D. Factors Favoring Permissive Consolidation

§43.29 1. Judicial Attitude

The judiciary may take an active role in shaping the contours of litigation. See In re Air Crash Disaster at Fla. Everglades (5th Cir 1977) 549 F2d 1006, 1012 ("[m]anagerial power is not merely desirable. It is a critical necessity"). See also Resnik, Managerial Judges, 96 Harv L Rev 376 (1982) (describing, and then criticizing, this trend). One result is that the perceived utility of devices like consolidation has been heightened. Most courts, especially those with busy calendars, favor consolidation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.30 2. Trial Court Discretion

The extent of permissive consolidation rests within the discretion of the trial courts. Todd-Stenberg v Dalkon Shield Claimants Trust (1996) 48 CA4th 976, 56 CR2d 16; Estate of Baker (1982) 131 CA3d 471, 485, 182 CR 550; Fellner v Steinbaum (1955) 132 CA2d 509, 282 P2d 584. Such trial court discretion is appropriate because flexibility should be retained. The attractiveness of consolidation varies widely, depending on the characteristics of the actions involved. Accordingly, there are no fixed rules on when permissive consolidation is desirable.

It is sometimes said that the burden of persuading the court that consolidation is desirable is on the moving party. See, e.g., Prudential Ins. Co. v Marine Nat'l Exch. Bank (ED Wis 1972) 55 FRD 436, 437. Although this may be true as a practical matter, its effect should not be exaggerated. Consolidation was designed in part to allow the court to second-guess the scope and configuration of the litigation selected by the parties. Any tendency to assume that the parties, each acting selfishly in its own perceived tactical best interest, picked the most efficient configuration, should be resisted.

§43.31 3. Basic Factor: Common Question of Law or Fact

The principal statute regulating permissive consolidation, CCP §1048(a), specifies only one factor to be considered: whether the actions proposed to be consolidated involve "a common question of law or fact." Therefore, in determining whether permissive consolidation should be ordered, the first question a court must address is whether that condition is satisfied. Actions that do not share a common question of law or fact may not be consolidated. See CCP §1048(a); Molever v Levenson (4th Cir 1976) 539 F2d 996, 1003. Cases with common questions of law and fact should not be consolidated, however, when doing so would deprive a party of the right to challenge the trial judge under CCP §170.6. Nissan Motor Corp. v Superior Court (1992) 6 CA4th 150, 7 CR2d 801.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.32 4. Other Factors

If the actions share a common issue of law or fact, the court must decide whether the benefits of avoiding dispersed, repetitive proceedings outweigh the costs of implementing consolidation and the hardships that may result for particular litigants. Many efforts have been made to identify the factors that should be considered. See, e.g., Arnold v Eastern Air Lines, Inc. (4th Cir 1982) 681 F2d 186 (listing 6 factors); see CCP §404.1 (listing seven factors applicable to coordination and "vertical" consolidation under CCP §404). Regardless of the formulation adopted, the relevant factors can be divided into three categories. See §§43.33-43.35.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/43 Consolidation and Severance/§43.33 a. Promote Efficiency, Accuracy, and Consistency

§43.33 a. Promote Efficiency, Accuracy, and Consistency

In determining whether consolidation will further efficiency, the court may consider:

- Whether common issues of law or fact predominate over individual issues;
- Whether a party will be burdened by being required to participate in extensive proceedings unrelated to its claims or defenses;
- Whether the trier of fact would be confused by the added complexity resulting from consolidation (especially if a jury trial has been requested);
- Whether the duration and cost of a single, consolidated proceeding will be less than the duration and cost of multiple proceedings; and
- Whether inconsistent results are likely if consolidation is denied.

Two relevant types of commonality are:

- Similarity of the underlying facts or applicable substantive law and
- Similarity of the litigation process. Procedural dissimilarities, however, such as if one action must be tried to a jury but the other may be tried to the court, do not necessarily defeat consolidation. See Blake v Farrell Lines, Inc. (3d Cir 1969) 417 F2d 264, 266.

The presence of a common question of law or fact alone does not always justify consolidation. If one or more common issues are present, but individual issues predominate, consolidation may be unwise. See Hasman v G.D. Searle & Co. (ED Mich 1985) 106 FRD 459, 461.

Common questions of fact ordinarily present a more compelling case for consolidation than do common questions of law. Factual issues typically are more complicated and time consuming to resolve, and the risk of inconsistency is generally higher. When the legal issues involved are novel or complex, however, consolidation may save considerable time and prevent inconsistent results.

WARNING: When determining whether consolidation would enhance efficiency, it should be remembered that the logistics of a large consolidated action can place an enormous burden on the court. The court may be called on to decide numerous collateral issues that arise only in multiparty actions, such as which of several plaintiffs should proceed first or to what extent each of several defendants should be allowed to cross-examine the same witness. Consolidation may also create a risk of excessive litigation of issues collateral to the merits because it is generally true that the larger a case, the more resources will be devoted to the litigation of each substantive and procedural aspect of it. For these and other reasons, consolidation is likely to increase the amount of judicial time and energy required for the court to manage the action effectively.

While it is true that consolidation may result in an action that is too large to be handled efficiently, in most cases serial or parallel disposition of the same legal or factual issues would be even less desirable. See Schneider v Vennard (1986) 183 CA3d 1340, 1350, 228 CR 800 (duplicative litigation of same issue does not serve public interest).

EXAMPLE: Cases in which consolidation has been ordered, as likely to further the goals of efficiency and consistency, include:

- Two eminent domain actions against the same defendants and relating to the same highway project, one initiated by the state and one by the city (People v Chevalier (1959) 52 C2d 299, 307, 340 P2d 598);
- Action to annul a marriage and a guardianship proceeding when the mental deterioration of the alleged incompetent was the crux of both actions (McClure v Donovan (1949) 33 C2d 717, 722, 205 P2d 17);
- Individual and corporate actions against the same defendants for misappropriations occurring over different but contiguous periods of time (Jud Whitehead Heater Co. v Obler (1952) 111 CA2d 861, 866, 245 P2d 608);
- Personal injury and wrongful death actions arising from the same accident and involving the same witnesses and same testimony (Johnson v Western Air Express Corp. (1941) 45 CA2d 614, 621, 114 P2d 688); and

- Actions to enjoin interference with shareholders' voting rights and nullify election (Kauffman v Meyberg (1943) 59 CA2d 730, 742, 140 P2d 210).

Such decisions should be contrasted with those declining to order consolidation when the predominance of individual issues would make joint proceedings inefficient or confusing. See, e.g., Hasman v G.D. Searle & Co. (ED Mich 1985) 106 FRD 459, 460 (declining to consolidate three products liability cases against same defendant by different plaintiffs because each case involved different medical histories, different physicians, different warnings and warranties, and different alleged defects).

§43.34 b. Avoid Prejudice

Consolidation may result in three principal types of prejudice that could make consolidation inappropriate.

First, consolidation may require a party to argue inconsistent positions before the same finder of fact. Consolidation in such situations may force a party to choose between a loss of credibility and the abandonment of a strong argument on the merits, a dilemma that would not have been posed in the absence of consolidation. See, e.g., State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1956) 47 C2d 428, 430, 304 P2d 13 (reversing consolidation of declaratory relief action involving coverage dispute between insurance company and its policyholder and personal injury actions in which insurer was defending its insured, because it forced insurer to argue inconsistent theories to same finder of fact).

Second, consolidation can sometimes result in the admission of evidence in the consolidated proceeding, albeit subject to a cautionary instruction, that would not have been revealed to the trier of fact had the cases been tried separately. For example, consolidation of suits by different plaintiffs against the manufacturer of an allegedly defective machine might prejudice the manufacturer by suggesting that its machine has failed on numerous other occasions. Similarly, consolidation of multiple suits by the same plaintiff against the same defendant might invite skepticism if the plaintiff is viewed as a malcontent. In some cases, the possibility of such prejudice has been held to justify denial of consolidation, while in other cases it has not. Compare Hasman v G.D. Searle & Co. (ED Mich 1985) 106 FRD 459, 461 (denying consolidation), with Hendrix v Raybestos-Manhattan, Inc. (11th Cir 1985) 776 F2d 1492, 1495 (affirming order granting consolidation). The key to reconciling such decisions appears to be that in cases in which consolidation was affirmed on appeal, the trial court had made a serious effort to minimize the prejudice by a cautionary instruction or other means.

Third, consolidation may delay resolution of a case in which the actions to be consolidated are not equally mature. Relatively minor differences in the extent of discovery or pretrial preparation that has been completed may not defeat consolidation, but courts are reluctant to consolidate a well-developed case nearly ready for trial with a case still in the early stages.

NOTE: In U.S. v City of Chicago (ND Ill 1974) 385 F Supp 540, 543, consolidation was allowed when discovery was begun in each of three cases, discovery in one case would duplicate most of the discovery in the least developed case, and the relative lack of discovery in the least developed case would not delay further proceedings. In Monzo v American Airlines, Inc. (SD NY 1982) 94 FRD 672, 673 consolidation was allowed when cases were at different stages of discovery but were filed only 5 months apart and were not scheduled for immediate trial. However, in La Chemise Lacoste v Alligator Co. (D Del 1973) 60 FRD 164, 176, consolidation was denied when one action had been pending for 3 years and was close to trial, and another action had just been filed. In Schacht v Javits (SD NY 1971) 53 FRD 321, 324, consolidation was denied when one case had been pending for 4 years and was virtually ready for trial, and the other case had just been filed and no answers had been served.

Consolidation can be used—instead of relying solely on res judicata (see §43.19)—to prevent litigants from dispersing related claims over time. Even actions at different stages of maturity can be consolidated. But see Cal Rules of Ct 3.521(d) ("[t]he imminence of a trial in any action otherwise appropriate for coordination may be a ground for summary denial of a petition for coordination in whole or in part").

WARNING: Some plaintiffs may delay filing suit or fail to prosecute an action aggressively, hoping to obtain a "free ride" on the efforts of others by using a favorable result in another case through offensive application of the collateral estoppel doctrine. Similarly, a plaintiff may wait and take advantage of evidence obtained in an earlier-filed suit. Although such tactics may be circumscribed by statutes of limitations and the equitable bill of peace (see §43.17), their use gives the court a reason to consolidate actions that are at different stages of maturity. Such tactics can be unfair to the plaintiff in the first filed suit and to the defendant required to bear the burden of repetitive litigation in a setting in which a loss by the first plaintiff is not necessarily binding on the second.

Not every type of prejudice weighs against consolidation, even if consolidation might affect the outcome of the litigation. See, e.g., Jud Whitehead Heater Co. v Obler (1952) 111 CA2d 861, 867, 245 P2d 608, in which the defendants argued that consolidation would be prejudicial because it would make it easier for the plaintiffs to prove that money stolen by the defendants could be traced. The court concluded that the so-called prejudice weighed in favor of, rather than against, consolidation.

Finally, many factors that work against consolidation for trial (e.g., the risk of confusing the factfinder) would not create problems if the actions were consolidated only for pretrial purposes. A court that denies complete consolidation or consolidation for trial could still order consolidation of more limited scope that would enhance efficiency.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/43 Consolidation and Severance/§43.35 c. Respect Legislative Policy

§43.35 c. Respect Legislative Policy

Some statutes specifically require, permit, or forbid consolidation. See, e.g., §§43.22-43.25. Policy considerations reflected in other statutes may weigh for or against consolidation.

EXAMPLE: A legislative policy in favor of simplifying and expediting the resolution of small claims weighs against consolidation. In Sales Dimensions v Superior Court (1979) 90 CA3d 757, 153 CR 690, the court affirmed an order denying consolidation of an employer's civil action against a former employee with the employer's appeal from the Labor Commissioner's award of unpaid wages, under the trial de novo standard of review specified by Lab C §98.2. The court reasoned that the legislative policy of encouraging the expeditious resolution of small wage claims made consolidation of the two types of actions inappropriate. 90 CA3d at 764.

§43.36 5. Coordination Standards

When coordination of actions pending in different courts is sought under CCP §403 or §404, the actions must share "a common question of fact or law" and meet the standards for coordination specified in CCP §404.1. Factors the court must consider under §404.1 are:

> [1] the ends of justice …; [2] the convenience of parties, witnesses, and counsel; [3] the relative development of the actions and the work product of counsel; [4] the efficient utilization of judicial facilities and manpower; [5] the calendar of the courts; [6] the disadvantages of duplicative and inconsistent rulings, orders, or judgments; and, [7] the likelihood of settlement of the actions without further litigation should coordination be denied.

These factors reflect the same basic concern for efficiency and consistency that is at the heart of CCP §1048(a). These factors, as well as cases decided under CCP §404.1, may be persuasive in arguing for or against consolidation under CCP §1048(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/43 Consolidation and Severance/§43.37 E. Special Statutes Permitting Consolidation

§43.37 E. Special Statutes Permitting Consolidation

In addition to the general discretionary authority conferred by CCP §1048(a), several statutes explicitly permit the court, in its discretion, to order consolidation in specified situations. See §§43.39-43.44. In some instances, a term other than "consolidation" is used, but the intended result appears to be the same.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.38 1. Relationship Between CCP §1048(a) and Special Statutes

Given the expansive reach of CCP §1048(a), the special permissive consolidation statutes, apart from CCP §1281.3 (contract arbitration; see §43.39), seem unnecessary.

NOTE: The Legislative Committee Comment to the 1972 Amendment to CCP §1048 does not address, as it does for severance, the relationship between CCP §1048(a) and other statutes permitting consolidation.

Could these special statutes be viewed as creating a freely rebuttable presumption that consolidation should usually be ordered in the specified situations? See generally County of Los Angeles v Frisbie (1942) 19 C2d 634, 641, 122 P2d 526 ("[a] statute should always be construed, if reasonably possible, as to give force and effect to every expression used by the legislature"); Morro Hills Community Serv. Dist. v Board of Supervisors (1978) 78 CA3d 765, 773, 144 CR 778 (referring to "cardinal rule of statutory construction that a construction making some words surplusage is to be avoided"). However, because the permissive statutes were obviously not intended to displace judicial discretion, perhaps the court should consider the same factors under them that it would consider if consolidation were sought under CCP §1048(a).

Inconsistency between §1048(a) and other statutes, such as the same court and same county restriction—which is present in §1048(a), but absent from the specific mandatory and permissive consolidation statutes—is another source of uncertainty.

EXAMPLE: It is quite clear that, under CCP §1048, actions may be consolidated only if they are pending in the same county. Does the same principle apply when actions that by specific statute may or must be consolidated are pending in different counties? It can be argued that CCP §1048(a) establishes the limits on the use of consolidation in the absence of a more specific explicit statutory directive. See Leg Comm Comment to 1971 Amendment to CCP §1048 (noting that other, more specific statutes permitting severance have been retained "because they include useful procedural details which continue to apply"). The creation of the coordination device, after most of the specific consolidation statutes were enacted, suggests that the legislature intended that the historical restriction on the application of consolidation to cases pending in the same county would be preserved. The device of coordination is available to ensure that the purposes of the specific mandatory or permissive consolidation statutes will not be disserved by geographic dispersion of claims.

Special permissive consolidation statutes have not been construed as preempting CCP §1048(a). Thus, when the actions are of a type covered by a specific consolidation statute, but the requirements of that statute are not satisfied, consolidation may nevertheless be possible under §1048(a). City of Los Angeles v Klinker (1933) 219 C 198, 211, 25 P2d 826 (separately filed eminent domain proceedings could properly be consolidated under §1048(a) even though they could not have been consolidated under former CCP §1244(5), the predecessor of CCP §1250.240).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.39 2. Contract Arbitration

A party may petition the court to consolidate separate contract arbitration proceedings if the disputes arose from the same transaction or a series of related transactions, and if they involve common issues of law or fact creating the risk of conflicting arbitration awards. CCP §1281.3. Although §1281.3 does not require consolidation, it manifests a "strong policy favoring consolidating arbitrations involving common issues of law or fact." Garden Grove Community Church v Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co. (1983) 140 CA3d 251, 262, 191 CR 15.

NOTE: The legislature enacted CCP §1281.3 in response to Atlas Plastering, Inc. v Superior Court (1977) 72 CA3d 63, 140 CR 59, which held that California courts lacked the power to consolidate contract arbitrations.

§43.40 3. Lien Foreclosure

Several statutes provide that "the court may consolidate" separate actions filed by persons claiming liens on the same property. Such statutes include CC §3065a (loggers' liens), CC §3149 (mechanics' liens), and Food & A C §55653 (producers' liens).

§43.41 4. Enforcement of Payment of Claims After Stop Notices

Two statutes allow "the court first acquiring jurisdiction" to consolidate separate actions filed by any number of persons who have given stop notices relating to the same construction project. Civil Code §3175 concerns private works of improvement, and CC §3214 concerns public works of improvement.

§43.42 5. Condemnation Proceedings

A plaintiff may "join" in one complaint all property located in the same county that is sought to be acquired for the same project. CCP §1250.240. Although the statute uses the term "join" rather than "consolidate," its predecessor (former CCP §1244(5)) has been cited as providing a basis for permissive consolidation. See, e.g., Los Angeles City High Sch. Dist. v Swensen (1964) 226 CA2d 574, 583, 38 CR 214 (consolidation appropriate if it would reduce time needed for trial, expert witnesses and counsel would be identical in separate trials, and parcels at issue were close to each other).

Separate actions brought to recover assessments for public works undertaken pursuant to the Improvement Act of 1911 may be consolidated "by order of the court." Str & H C §5414.

§43.44 7. Challenging Contractor's Performance

A proceeding to suspend or revoke a contractor's license pursued by the registrar of contractors "may also be embraced in any action otherwise proper in any court involving the licensee's performance of his legal obligation as a contractor." Bus & P C §7106. The somewhat ambiguous phrase, "may also be embraced in," might be construed as authorizing either permissive consolidation or joinder.

§43.45 F. Relationship Between California Statutes and Fed R Civ P 42(a)

Code of Civil Procedure §1048(a) and Fed R Civ P 42(a) are closely related.

NOTE: The portion of the 1927 version of CCP §1048 dealing with consolidation was cited in the Advisory Committee Note to the original version of Fed R Civ P 42(a) as one of the "comparable statutes dealing with consolidation." Thereafter, in response to a proposal by the California Law Revision Commission in 1970, CCP §1048(a) was revised in 1971 "to conform in substance" to Fed R Civ P 42(a). As a result, since July 1, 1972, the language of Fed R Civ P 42(a) and CCP §1048(a) has been identical.

In view of the overlapping history and identical wording of CCP §1048(a) and Fed R Civ P 42(a), federal decisions interpreting Rule 42(a) should be persuasive authority in California. See City of San Jose v Superior Court (1974) 12 C3d 447, 453, 115 CR 797 ("[t]his court has urged trial courts to be procedurally innovative, encouraging them to incorporate procedures from outside sources in determining whether to allow the maintenance of a particular class suit. More specifically, we have directed them to" Fed R Civ P 23 (class actions)); Vasquez v Superior Court (1971) 4 C3d 800, 821, 94 CR 796 ("[i]n the event of a hiatus, [Rule 23] prescribes procedural devices which a trial court may find useful").

V. PROCEDURE FOR CONSOLIDATION

§43.46 A. Timing

The possibility of consolidation should be considered early in the litigation, and the subject might be raised by the court at any time.

PRACTICE TIP: Some attorneys move for consolidation as soon as they can marshal a convincing argument that it would be appropriate. A principal reason for consolidating actions is efficiency. Early consolidation minimizes duplication, and the benefits of consolidation may diminish as the separate lawsuits mature. The timing of the motion is less relevant if consolidation is sought in order to reduce the risk of inconsistent decision, as long as consolidation is achieved before decisions on the merits occur. Delay in moving for consolidation, however, runs the risk that the actions will mature at different rates, thus reducing the likelihood that the motion will be granted in the future.

The mere passage of time, or the dilatory conduct of the moving party (such as delay in seeking consolidation), may not be appropriate reasons for denial of consolidation, unless its purposes would no longer be served by granting the motion.

WARNING: Typically, it is better to seek consolidation too early rather than too late, although an early motion does run the risk of being denied as premature. See Duval v Bathrick (D Minn 1940) 31 F Supp 510, 511 (consolidation was premature when no answer had been filed and the case was not at issue); In re Caesars Palace Sec. Litig. (SD NY 1973) 360 F Supp 366, 375 (consolidation premature until completion of further discovery and clarification of true issues). But see Shultz v Manufacturers & Traders Trust Co. (WD NY 1939) 29 F Supp 37, 38 (fact that no answer had been filed did not defeat consolidation). Of course, a motion to consolidate two actions ordinarily should be made before the trial of either action has begun. See Elbert, Ltd. v Hall (1950) 101 CA2d 208, 211, 225 P2d 590 (denying motion for consolidation after commencement of trial); Shooters Island Shipyard Co. v Standard Shipbldg. Corp. (3d Cir 1925) 4 F2d 101, 102.

§43.47 B. Consolidation on Court's Own Motion

Consolidation may be ordered on the court's own motion. See CCP §1048(a); Str & H C §5414; In re Air Crash Disaster at Fla. Everglades (5th Cir 1977) 549 F2d 1006, 1013. The court may order consolidation despite a previous order of severance, and may even vacate a prior order severing the cases for trial and order consolidation, if, based on the facts after the pleadings have closed, consolidation seems appropriate. See Vegetable Oil Prods. Co. v Superior Court (1963) 213 CA2d 252, 259, 28 CR 555. Consolidation also may be ordered over the opposition of some, or even all, of the parties. See also In re Air Crash Disaster at Fla. Everglades (5th Cir 1977) 549 F2d 1006, 1014 (consolidation "and its policy against waste of judicial resources can take precedence over individual counsel's desires that litigation follow its normal and full-blown course"); Midwest Community Council v Chicago Park Dist. (ND Ill 1983) 98 FRD 491, 499.

PRACTICE TIP: Certain mandatory consolidation statutes state that consolidation shall be ordered "on the motion of any interested party" and do not expressly authorize the court to order consolidation on its own motion. Were these statutes intended to preclude consolidation on the court's motion? Would it not be inconsistent with the legislative purpose of the mandatory consolidation statutes (to ensure that the enumerated actions be consolidated), to permit them always to proceed separately only because no party took the initiative to request consolidation? At least such statutes should not be construed as depriving the court of the power to order consolidation on its own motion.

§43.48 C. Stipulation for Consolidation

Code of Civil Procedure §1048(a) does not describe the procedures for seeking consolidation. Nor, for the most part, do the specific statutes allowing or requiring consolidation.

Consolidation may be ordered on an oral or written agreement of the parties. Didier v American Cas. Co. (1968) 261 CA2d 742, 752, 68 CR 217; Phillips v Beilsten (1958) 164 CA2d 450, 454, 330 P2d 912. See McClure v Donovan (1949) 33 C2d 717, 722, 205 P2d 17 (consolidation at court's "suggestion" with counsels' acquiescence). If all parties agree that certain actions should be consolidated, they may prepare a combined stipulation and proposed order to that effect and present it to the court. See form in §43.105. The proposed order should describe the manner in which the lawsuit will be configured if consolidation is ordered.

WARNING: Care should be taken in drafting the stipulation and proposed order because the provisions will be difficult to set aside. Cohn v Bugas (1974) 42 CA3d 381, 392, 116 CR 810, quoting Bemer v Bemer (1957) 152 CA2d 766, 771, 314 P2d 114 ("[i]t is up to the parties to state a stipulation clearly and properly … and a party will not be heard to complain if later it is determined that by his own carelessness in the choice of words he did not state what he now says he really meant to say").

§43.49 D. Noticed Motion for Consolidation

Attorneys commonly seek consolidation by means of a noticed motion. See CCP §1281.3 (permissive); CCP §376 (mandatory). Most courts do not favor informal oral motions for consolidation. See, e.g., Sacramento Ct R 2.02(B), which requires that motions for consolidation be made in writing except for good cause.

The attorney who moves for consolidation should follow the normal notice of motion procedures outlined in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112-3.1113. See chap 12.

The notice of motion for consolidation must include (Cal Rules of Ct 3.350(a)):

- All named parties in each case;
- The names of the parties that have appeared;
- The names of their attorneys of record; and
- The captions of all the cases to be consolidated, with the lowest numbered case listed first.

The motion must be accompanied by a memorandum in support of the motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113. One copy of the notice of motion must be filed in each case to be consolidated, but the memorandum and other supporting papers need be filed only in the lowest-numbered case. Cal Rules of Ct 3.350(a).

The motion must be served on all attorneys of record and unrepresented parties in all cases sought to be consolidated, and a proof of service must be filed as part of the motion. For purposes of determining the appropriate filing fee, a motion to consolidate is deemed a single motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.350(a).

PRACTICE TIP: The motion should contain a detailed statement of the reasons consolidation will promote efficiency and avoid inconsistency. Submitting declarations that show in appropriate detail the facts that support consolidation may ensure that the court feels sufficiently informed to make a decision at an early stage that has important implications for the future conduct of the litigation. Examples of useful information include facts showing that common legal or factual issues predominate over unique issues, that the moving party will be prejudiced by piecemeal litigation, or that the other parties will not be prejudiced by consolidation. Because the degree of similarity between two actions may be difficult to assess, lists of objective elements, such as the identities of the parties, witnesses, events, or requested relief common to the actions, may be persuasive. For general discussion of factors supporting consolidation, see §§43.29-43.36.

The moving party should give careful thought to drafting a proposed order. In view of the potentially far-reaching consequences of consolidation, the proponent should be prepared to explain to the court how the litigation should be structured after the proposed consolidation. A coordinated discovery plan, special jury instructions, lead counsel, and special verdicts are some of the matters to consider. The moving party should also consider submitting a proposed order that describes these matters in detail, because doing so can assist the court in assessing the desirability of consolidation and ensure that nothing is overlooked.

Counsel should consult local rules specifically pertaining to consolidation. Such rules may specify the department in which the motion should be heard or contain other directives on motions for consolidation. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 2.6 (encouraging consolidation of custody proceedings), 7.3(g) (provisions for consolidation motions that would result in transfer of a case to or from any judge).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.50 E. Opposing Consolidation

A party opposing a motion to consolidate must file a memorandum in opposition to the motion and must serve copies on counsel for all other parties. Consideration also should be given to filing one or more declarations in opposition to the motion, in order to provide a factual basis for arguments that consolidation will result in prejudice, jury confusion, or inefficiency. See Popejoy v Fladung (WD Mo 1953) 14 FRD 450 (unsupported opinion of plaintiff's counsel that jury would be confused was insufficient basis for denying consolidation). Lists or charts emphasizing the differences between the actions may help to persuade the court that common issues do not predominate.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.51 F. Order for Consolidation

The court's order granting or denying the motion for consolidation must be filed in each case sought to be consolidated. If the motion is granted for all purposes, including trial, any subsequent documents are filed only in the lead case (see §43.52). Cal Rules of Ct 3.350(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.52 G. Lead Case

Unless the court orders otherwise, the lowest numbered case in the consolidated action is the lead case. Cal Rules of Ct 3.350(b). All documents filed in the consolidated case must include the caption and case number of the lead case, followed by the case numbers of the other consolidated cases. Cal Rules of Ct 3.350(d).

§43.53 H. Diagnostic Questions

Answers to the following questions may assist counsel in deciding whether to seek consolidation:

1. Is consolidation desirable?

2. What are the tactical advantages and disadvantages of consolidation?

3. Would a related device (e.g., interpleader, intervention) be more advantageous than consolidation?

4. Does the court have power to consolidate?

5. Are the cases pending in the same court in the same county (see CCP §1048(a))?

6. Are the cases pending in different courts in the same county (see CCP §404)?

7. What consolidation statute applies?

- A mandatory statute (CCP §376 or §377(a) or Lab C §3853)
- CCP §1048(a) (the general permissive consolidation statute for cases pending in the same court in the same county)
- CCP §404 (the general permissive consolidation statute for cases pending in different courts in the same county)
- Specific permissive consolidation statutes (Bus & P C §7106; CC §§3065a, 3149, 3175, 3214; CCP §1250.240; Food & A C §55653; Str & H C §5414)

8. If consolidation is not mandatory, would it be appropriate?

9. Do the cases have common questions of law or fact?

10. Do the common questions of law or fact predominate over individual issues?

11. Would a single proceeding be more efficient than multiple proceedings?

12. Is there a risk of inconsistent results unless consolidation occurs?

13. Would the complexity of a consolidated trial confuse the jury?

14. Would consolidation prejudice any party?

15. Is one action ready for trial and are others just beginning?

16. Would consolidation force a party to take inconsistent positions before the same finder of fact?

17. Would consolidation result in admission of evidence not otherwise admissible?

18. Would consolidation be consistent with legislative policy?

19. Would consolidation be premature because the issues are not sufficiently defined, or is it too late to be useful?

20. What would be the most appropriate scope of consolidation?

- Complete consolidation (merging the actions for all purposes)
- Consolidation for joint trial or hearing
- More limited consolidation for discovery or selected pretrial proceedings

21. Should consolidation be sought by?

- Stipulation and proposed order
- Noticed motion

22. What provisions should the court order contain in order to?

- Accomplish the consolidation
- Avoid unnecessary costs or delay

VI. CONSEQUENCES OF CONSOLIDATION

§43.54 A. Distinction Between Complete and Partial Consolidation

Although CCP §1048(a) uses the terms "joint hearing or trial," the extent of consolidation can vary. Cases may be consolidated for all purposes, only for trial, or only for selected pretrial proceedings. Entire actions may be consolidated, or only particular issues or claims. Care should be taken to ensure that the court's order makes clear the extent of the intended consolidation.

NOTE: It is theoretically true that "no increase, diminution, or change in the litigants' rights can occur" as a result of consolidation. Mueller v J.C. Penney Co. (1985) 173 CA3d 713, 722, 219 CR 272. See also Wouldridge v Burns (1968) 265 CA2d 82, 86, 71 CR 394 (consolidation of actions does not affect parties' rights). As a practical matter, however, consolidation inevitably affects discovery and trial in the consolidated actions, even if the consolidation is not complete.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.55 1. Complete Consolidation

Complete consolidation may be ordered when the actions involve the same, or substantially the same, parties and all claims could have been joined at the outset. Kropp v Sterling Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1970) 9 CA3d 1033, 1047, 88 CR 878 (complete consolidation of joinable causes of action involving same parties); Jaffe v Albertson Co. (1966) 243 CA2d 592, 606, 53 CR 25 (complete consolidation when separate plaintiff sought same relief against same defendant and could have originally been joined as party-plaintiff in consolidated action).

EXAMPLE: Complete consolidation may be ordered when the same plaintiffs bring separate actions against the same defendants or two parties sue each other for the same or reciprocal relief. See McFarland v Booker (1967) 250 CA2d 402, 416, 58 CR 417. Similarly, complete consolidation may, and probably should, be ordered when a statute requiring consolidation applies.

Complete consolidation unites the separate actions so that the separate complaints are treated as one pleading (McClure v Donovan (1949) 33 C2d 717, 721, 205 P2d 17), and allegations in one complaint can correct defects or omissions in another (Staub v Muller (1936) 7 C2d 221, 225, 60 P2d 283).

NOTE: Sometimes the court may order the parties to agree on and file consolidated pleadings containing all the claims and defenses asserted in the consolidated actions. See, e.g., Garber v Randell (2d Cir 1973) 477 F2d 711, 717 n4. This practice is common in securities litigation in which separate class actions asserting essentially the same claims and seeking essentially the same relief are filed against the same or overlapping groups of defendants. If the claims or defenses differ materially, however, consolidated pleadings may be unduly prejudicial to some parties. Garber, 477 F2d at 716.

Actions consolidated for all purposes are treated as though they had been united originally, and may be resolved by one judgment, with one statement of reasons for the decision. McClure v Donovan, supra; Didier v American Cas. Co. (1968) 261 CA2d 742, 752, 68 CR 217; Jaffe v Albertson Co., supra. Indeed, if separate statements of reasons for decision or separate judgments are prepared, they will be treated as one. Bechtold v Bishop & Co. (1940) 16 C2d 285, 287, 105 P2d 984; Bank of Cal. v Connolly (1973) 36 CA3d 350, 363, 111 CR 468; Wolfson v Beatty (1953) 118 CA2d 392, 398, 257 P2d 1017; Clinton v Hogan (1947) 80 CA2d 815, 821, 183 P2d 50. Similarly, unless otherwise indicated, orders that nominally pertain to one case will apply to all of the consolidated actions. For example, in Wolfson, an order granting a new trial in one action operated to grant a new trial in the action consolidated with it as well. Wolfson, 118 CA2d at 398. Conversely, even if a complete consolidation has been ordered, the court retains its power to grant a motion for summary judgment or to direct a verdict disposing of less than all of the consolidated actions. See, e.g., Aufdemkamp v Pierce (1935) 4 CA2d 276, 281, 40 P2d 599.

NOTE: A complete merger of separate actions may be improper without the consent of all parties. Sanchez v Superior Court (1988) 203 CA3d 1391, 1396, 250 CR 787.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.56 2. Consolidation of Related Issues for Trial

The court may consolidate actions for the limited purpose of a joint trial or a joint hearing of common issues, even if the parties are not the same and the causes of action could not have been joined. McClure v Donovan (1949) 33 C2d 717, 722, 205 P2d 17; McFarland v Booker (1967) 250 CA2d 402, 416, 58 CR 417. The actions retain their separate character and must be independently resolved. McClure v Donovan, supra; McFarland v Booker, supra; Johnson v Marr (1935) 8 CA2d 312, 313, 47 P2d 489. But see Jaffe v Albertson Co. (1966) 243 CA2d 592, 606, 53 CR 25 (suggesting, on unusual facts, that actions consolidated only "for trial" "became united for all purposes").

The evidence received in one case is deemed admissible in others only to the extent that it is relevant, and separate verdicts, reasons for decision, and judgments are required. McClure v Donovan, supra; McFarland v Booker, supra. There may be instances in which the evidence received is deemed applicable in its entirety to each case, unless it is expressly limited or is immaterial or irrelevant to the issues in a particular case. See McCarthy v Mobile Cranes, Inc. (1962) 199 CA2d 500, 508, 18 CR 750. Again, care should be taken to ensure that the consolidation order clearly describes the scope of the consolidation.

Finally, if consolidation is only partial, each action is subject to separate posttrial proceedings. See, e.g., Harmon v San Francisco & San Rafael R.R. (1890) 86 C 617, 25 P 124 (actions consolidated for trial on consent of parties not consolidated for appeal when each appellant moved separately for new trial, grounds for each motion were peculiar to each case, separate bills of exception were filed, separate appeals were taken, and separate records were prepared for court of appeal). See also McFarland, 250 CA2d at 416 (in two actions consolidated for trial of related issue, judgment in one action affirmed; order granting new trial in other affirmed).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.57 3. Consolidation for Pretrial Proceedings

Consolidation may also be ordered solely or primarily for pretrial purposes. An orderly and expeditious disposition at trial depends largely on the manner in which pretrial proceedings are conducted. If one of the purposes of consolidation for trial is to expedite the proceedings and avoid needless time and expense to the litigants and to the court, such objectives are as desirable and as attainable in the period utilized in preparing for the trial. MacAlister v Guterma (2d Cir 1958) 263 F2d 65, 68.

PRACTICE TIP: Consolidation for pretrial proceedings might be advisable when common issues exist but do not predominate, when actions share a common legal issue, or when other factors would make a joint trial unwieldy or unduly prejudicial for some parties. For example, when consolidation would be unfair because it would force a party to make inconsistent arguments to the same jury, consolidation for pretrial purposes might only promote efficiency without creating undue prejudice. In addition, the extent of the commonality of issues may initially be unclear. After consolidation for pretrial proceedings, the advisability of complete consolidation or consolidation for trial can be resolved as the actions mature. See Meeder v Superior Tube Co. (WD Pa 1976) 72 FRD 633. It is often preferable, however, to resolve the question promptly, rather than to encourage repeated litigation on matters collateral to the merits.

B. Orders Regulating Consequences of Consolidation

§43.58 1. Avoiding Unnecessary Cost, Delay, or Prejudice

Courts may make such orders concerning proceedings after consolidation "as may tend to avoid unnecessary costs or delay." CCP §1048(a). Such matters might include:

- Requiring parties sharing common interests to coordinate their written discovery requests; or
- Insisting that a witness be deposed on only one occasion with his or her testimony to be available for use in any of the actions.

The court also possesses the power to protect some or all parties from prejudice by making rulings ancillary to the order of consolidation. For example, where two parties each sue the other for claims arising out of the same occurrence or transaction, the court may protect the more diligent plaintiff, whose complaint was served first, by conferring on it the benefits of making the first opening statement and the last closing argument. See, e.g., Daly v White (1950) 100 CA2d 22, 26, 222 P2d 950.

If consolidation is desirable but the possibility of prejudice exists, a variety of measures may be used to reduce the risk of confusion or unfairness. For example, in Johnson v Western Air Express Corp. (1941) 45 CA2d 614, 622, 114 P2d 688, consolidation was ordered for trial with special instructions to the jury on the applicability of the evidence to the two actions. See also Hendrix v Raybestos-Manhattan, Inc. (11th Cir 1985) 776 F2d 1492, 1496 (jurors given notebooks tabbed for each party and provided with opportunities to take notes throughout trial); Arnold v Eastern Air Lines, Inc. (4th Cir 1982) 681 F2d 186 (elaborate cautionary instructions). It may be an abuse of discretion for a court not to consider, or even adopt, such measures when a real danger of prejudice exists.

Consolidation may be appropriate for two actions that are closely related even though one must be tried to a jury and the other to the court. Blake v Farrell Lines, Inc. (3d Cir 1969) 417 F2d 264, 266. Although the risk of inconsistent adjudications is apparent in such a consolidation, that risk would exist anyway. Sealing the jury's verdict until the judge has ruled prevents either factfinder from being influenced by the other's decision. Alternatively, the court could order that all of the actions be tried to a jury. Although the court could not order that all of the actions be tried by a judge, there is no constitutional right to a nonjury trial. See Note, The Right to a Non-Jury Trial, 74 Harv L Rev 1176 (1961).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The flexibility of CCP §1048(a) enables the court to respond creatively to unique situations. For example, in some instances it may be desirable to use consolidation and severance together by first consolidating several lawsuits filed against the same defendant, and then severing the issues of liability and damages or reserving cross-claims for a separate trial. See, e.g., Wilson v Johns-Manville Sales Corp. (SD Tex 1985) 107 FRD 250 (consolidating 150 asbestos cases into three groups of 50 cases each for purpose of jointly trying common issues regarding product defectiveness and punitive damages, and severing the individual issues of exposure and compensatory damages for later trial in groups of 5 cases each).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.59 2. Appointment of Lead Counsel

Court appointment of lead counsel for one or more groups of parties may increase efficiency. Such a step could "tend to reduce unnecessary cost or delay." CCP §1048(a). (Note that lead counsel are frequently appointed in federal cases under Fed R Civ P 42(a); see, e.g., In re Air Crash Disaster at Fla. Everglades (5th Cir 1977) 549 F2d 1006, 1014. Further, lead counsel may be appointed in coordinated cases under Cal Rules of Ct 3.506.)

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The value of consolidation may depend in large part on the court's ability to identify effective lead counsel and willingness to confer power on that attorney. Criteria for selecting lead counsel include:

- Experience in cases involving the same substantive law area;
- Experience in complex litigation;
- Resources;
- Ability;
- Respect of colleagues; and
- Ability to avoid bias owing to idiosyncratic position of client.

A wise choice in this regard can reduce the amount of judicial time required to manage coordinated proceedings effectively. It may also help to minimize the aggregate amount of attorney fees and other costs incurred by the parties. Note that, although one goal of consolidation is to reduce litigation costs, if an award of attorney fees is an element of recovery by statute, the right to such an award is neither defeated nor diminished by consolidation. Realty Constr. & Mortgage Co. v Superior Court (1913) 165 C 543, 548, 132 P 1048.

In federal cases, lead counsel have been appointed to coordinate and structure litigation activities so that duplication and confusion are minimized. See, e.g., MacAlister v Guterma (2d Cir 1958) 263 F2d 65, 68; Feldman v Hanley (SD NY 1969) 49 FRD 48, 50. Most of lead counsel's functions are relatively mundane, such as arranging for the scheduling of hearings and depositions at times convenient for all. But sometimes their powers are significant. In, e.g., Farber v Riker-Maxson Corp. (2d Cir 1971) 442 F2d 457, an order providing that only lead counsel could file papers on behalf of any plaintiff was held to justify the trial court's refusal to consider a summary judgment motion filed by other counsel after lead counsel declined to do so. 442 F2d at 459.

WARNING: When lead counsel are in a position to allocate tasks among themselves and other counsel, their substantial control of the quantity and quality of the tasks performed by other counsel may essentially dictate any allocation of the amount of attorney fees.

Lead counsel are not appointed automatically. Courts consider (see Dupont v Southern Pac. Co. (5th Cir 1966) 366 F2d 193, 196; MacAlister v Guterma (2d Cir 1958) 263 F2d 65, 70):

- Whether lead counsel will help to avoid duplication, confusion, or conflict;
- Whether other alternatives are more appropriate (such as the appointment of a special master); and
- Whether the appointment of lead counsel would prejudice the rights of any party (when, e.g., lead counsel would have a conflict of interest regarding its duties to each plaintiff).

Even if lead counsel is appointed, individual counsel can still present their own cases, examine witnesses, and give opening and closing statements. See Mueller v J.C. Penney Co. (1985) 173 CA3d 713, 722, 219 CR 272 (in consolidated action, court cannot completely deny party's right to examine witness); McCarthy v Mobile Cranes, Inc. (1962) 199 CA2d 500, 507, 18 CR 750 (denial of due process not to allow one party to cross-examine witness during trial of three consolidated actions).

VII. APPELLATE REVIEW OF ORDERS REGARDING CONSOLIDATION

§43.60 A. Method of Review

An order granting or denying a motion to consolidate is an interlocutory order that cannot be directly appealed. Such an order can be reviewed on appeal only from a final judgment. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1956) 47 C2d 428, 432, 304 P2d 13; see CCP §§904.1-904.2. Postjudgment challenges to consolidation orders are seldom successful. Courts of appeal are reluctant to overturn a decision on the merits simply because the ruling granting (or, especially, refusing) consolidation was wrong. In contrast to the general rule, an order granting or denying a petition for consolidated arbitration is immediately appealable. Garden Grove Community Church v Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co. (1983) 140 CA3d 251, 256, 191 CR 15; Conejo Valley Unified Sch. Dist. v William Blurock & Partners (1980) 111 CA3d 983, 985, 169 CR 102.

An aggrieved party may seek interlocutory review by a petition for writ of mandate, but a writ of mandate only "lies to control judicial discretion when that discretion has been abused." State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court, supra. Presumably, a writ of prohibition would also lie to prevent a court from consolidating actions in excess of its statutory authority. Even though a writ petition is likely to provide a more effective means of review than will an appeal from a subsequent judgment, neither method of review provides the aggrieved party with much chance of success.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.61 B. Scope of Review

Because of the practical nature of the decision required, the trial court is generally in a better position to assess the situation than is an appellate court. National Elec. Supply Co. v Mount Diablo Unified Sch. Dist. (1960) 187 CA2d 418, 421, 9 CR 864. Not surprisingly, then, consolidation rests within the trial court's discretion, and a reviewing court will disturb the trial court's decision only on a showing of abuse of discretion. Todd-Stenberg v Dalkon Shield Claimants Trust (1996) 48 CA4th 976, 56 CR2d 16; Estate of Baker (1982) 131 CA3d 471, 485, 182 CR 550; Fellner v Steinbaum (1955) 132 CA2d 509, 282 P2d 584; Fisher v Nash Bldg. Co. (1952) 113 CA2d 397, 402, 248 P2d 466 (consolidation is not matter of right). In other words, the trial court's decision will be reversed only if it "exceeds the bounds of reason" in view of all the circumstances. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 47 C2d at 432.

PRACTICE TIP: Reversals are rare, generally occurring only when consolidation was ordered and resulted in severe prejudice. Attacks on orders granting or denying consolidation on the ground that the decision caused inefficiency are seldom successful. If the merits have been tried, efficiency will not be promoted by reversal. Moreover, since denial of consolidation theoretically should not affect the outcome on the merits, an incorrect refusal to consolidate is likely to be viewed as harmless error. Presumably, this lenient standard of review would not apply when mandatory consolidation was denied.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.62 C. Consolidation on Appeal

Consolidation on appeal is governed by the same general principles as consolidation at the trial court level. To begin with, the consolidation of separate appeals is discretionary with the reviewing court, and each situation will turn on its own merits. Sampson v Sapoznik (1953) 117 CA2d 607, 609, 256 P2d 346; Silver v Bank of America (1941) 43 CA2d 835, 838, 111 P2d 666. That two actions have been consolidated to try a related issue does not mean that the parties are entitled to consolidation on appeal. See Harmon v San Francisco & San Rafael R.R. (1890) 86 C 617, 25 P 124. To the contrary, in any given situation, the court may consider "whether the questions presented are so related as to make it advisable to consolidate" and whether consolidation will expedite the appeals (Sampson v Sapoznik, supra), promote efficiency (Pacific Legal Found. v California Coastal Comm'n (1982) 33 C3d 158, 165 n3, 188 CR 104), or prejudice any party (General Elec. Co. v Federal Employees' Distrib. Co. (1954) 122 CA2d 509, 511, 265 P2d 19).

Like consolidation by the trial court, consolidation in a reviewing court may be ordered on stipulation by the parties (Sharick v Galloway (1936) 12 CA2d 733, 738, 55 P2d 1196), on the court's own motion, or on a motion noticed by one of the parties (see General Elec. Co. v Federal Employees' Distrib. Co., supra (motion granted); Sampson v Sapoznik, supra (motion denied); Silver v Bank of America, supra (motion denied)).

Finally, just as in the trial court, the extent of consolidation may vary in the reviewing court. Actions may be consolidated for briefing and argument (see Silver v Bank of America (1941) 43 CA2d 835, 838, 111 P2d 666) or for all purposes, including the preparation of a single record (see General Elec. Co. v Federal Employees' Distrib. Co. (1954) 122 CA2d 509, 510, 265 P2d 19).

VIII. SEVERANCE; GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

A. Definition and Purpose of Severance

1. Definition of Severance

§43.63 a. Severance Separates Claims, Issues, or Parties

Like consolidation (discussed at §§43.3-43.62), severance is a procedural device that enables the court to second-guess the parties' tactical decisions as to the most appropriate scope and configuration of their lawsuit. Although consolidation permits the court to enlarge a lawsuit by adding new claims, issues, or parties, severance allows (and, in some instances, requires) the court to divide a lawsuit into one or more parts, to resolve the parts separately, and to determine the order in which they will be resolved. Severance balances procedural devices allowing the parties to broaden the scope of a lawsuit, e.g., the liberal joinder provisions of CCP §§378-379 and the consolidation statutes, by allowing or requiring the court to reduce the size and scope of a lawsuit as appropriate to facilitate the most accurate and economical resolution of the controversy.

NOTE: The scope of severance is broad. Severance may be sought by any party, regardless of its status in the litigation. It is available without regard to the subject matter or substantive law involved in the action. It may be obtained regardless of whether the claims or issues were originally joined in the same lawsuit or were brought together through a prior order of consolidation or coordination.

§43.64 b. Terms: Severance, Separate Trial, and Bifurcation

Traditionally, a distinction was made between "severance," which creates entirely separate actions and requires the entry of independent judgments, and "separate trial," which does not. Under federal law, this distinction is maintained. Compare Fed R Civ P 42(b) (separate trial) and Fed R Civ P 20(b) (separate trial) with Fed R Civ P 21 (severance). Although the principal California statute on severance, CCP §1048(b), uses the term "separate trial," that term is essentially indistinguishable from the term "severance" under California law. The determination of what is a final judgment for purposes of appeal and motions for new trial notwithstanding the verdict is made on a case-by-case basis. See §§43.98, 43.102. The term "bifurcation" is generally used to refer to a particular type of severance, i.e., the procedure of holding separate trials on the issues of liability and damages. Of course, in highly complex cases, it might be desirable to have more than two separate trials, a prospect not strictly within the contemplation of the term "bifurcation." See, e.g., In re Bendectin Litig. (6th Cir 1988) 857 F2d 290 (affirming trifurcation of issues in consolidated action consisting of 840 products liability cases).

§43.65 2. Purposes of Severance

The purpose of severance is to promote the accuracy, fairness, and efficiency of adjudication. See, e.g., Foreman & Clark Corp. v Fallon (1971) 3 C3d 875, 888 n8, 92 CR 162 (legislature considered bifurcation of liability and damages desirable to avoid wasting court time when plaintiff loses on issue of liability, to promote settlements when plaintiff wins on liability issue, and to afford a more logical presentation of evidence, thus simplifying issues for jury); Bedolla v Logan & Frazer (1975) 52 CA3d 118, 135, 125 CR 59 (objective of bifurcation of issues is avoidance of waste of time and money caused by trial of issues that may be rendered moot).

PRACTICE TIP: Severance may be ordered to accomplish any or all of those objectives. Although severance is advisable in many situations, it is especially useful when the resolution of a particular claim or issue might dispose of the entire case or eliminate a party. Severance is also valuable when evidence admissible on one issue might unfairly prejudice the jury on another issue, or when a case is simply too complex to be digested in one sitting.

§43.66 3. Constitutional Limits on Severance

There is no doubt about the constitutionality of severance or separate trials as a theoretical matter. Indeed, CCP §1048(b) expressly provides, perhaps unnecessarily, that the court's power to sever claims or issues is conditioned on "preserving the right of trial by jury required by the Constitution or a statute of this state or of the United States."

As a practical matter, there seem to be two constitutional limits on the court's power to order severance. First, every litigant has the right to have only one factfinder decide each question of fact. Alabama v Blue Bird Body Co. (5th Cir 1978) 573 F2d 309, 318 (applying US Const amend VII). When separate trials are held before different juries, they may violate this right by making conflicting determinations as to particular facts. The prohibition is not against having two juries review the same evidence, but rather against having two juries decide the same essential issues. Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis, Inc. v Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (D Del 1984) 587 F Supp 1112, 1117.

A second constitutional limit on the power to order severance is that separate trials may amount to a denial of a fair trial if the claim or issue to be tried first overlaps with other claims or issues to such an extent that the failure to try all claims or issues together would confuse the jury. Franchi Constr. Co. v Combined Ins. of Am. (1st Cir 1978) 580 F2d 1, 7. Accordingly, from a constitutional standpoint, courts may only sever claims or issues when the claims or issues to be tried first are so distinct and separable from the others that trying them alone may be had without injustice. Gasoline Prods. Co. v Champlin Ref. Co. (1931) 283 US 494, 500, 75 L Ed 1188, 1191, 51 S Ct 513 (partial new trial before different jury was constitutionally permissible when error infected only part of original verdict).

B. Alternative Procedural Devices

§43.67 1. Demurrer

A demurrer may be used to obtain the dismissal from an action of parties who have been misjoined. CCP §430.10(d). This option is an alternative to requesting that claims or issues involving improperly joined parties be tried separately. Another ground for demurrer is the existence of a prior action pending among the same parties on the same cause of action. CCP §430.10(c). This situation is a basis for dismissal or abatement of the later-filed action that, if it raises factual issues, may be tried separately as a special defense under CCP §597.

In both instances, use of a demurrer appears preferable to severance, and it should generally be attempted first. If the joinder was improper, dismissal should be available, at least when prejudice can be shown. But if the joinder was proper and the demurrer is overruled, a motion for severance under CCP §379.5 may be made to mitigate the deleterious effects of a technically proper but improvident joinder. Anaya v Superior Court (1984) 160 CA3d 228, 234, 206 CR 520 (reversing orders sustaining demurrers for misjoinder of plaintiffs and observing that legitimate practical concerns about feasibility of trial with 200 plaintiffs may be addressed by recourse to CCP §379.5).

NOTE: A trial of an "another action pending" issue is seldom necessary because the court may take judicial notice of the parties and causes of action involved in the prior proceeding under Evid C §452(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.68 2. Regulation of Order of Proof

Except as otherwise provided by law, the court in its discretion shall regulate the order of proof. Evid C §320. See also CCP §607(8), which authorizes the court to determine the relative order in which several defendants will present their evidence and argument. This function of the court, while falling short of severance, allows some of the same goals to be achieved.

EXAMPLE: The court can require that one defendant present its evidence before another defendant's evidence when that sequence will assist the jury in understanding a complex and technical case. Diamond Springs Lime Co. v American River Constructors (1971) 16 CA3d 581, 603, 94 CR 200.

Similarly, in a highly complex case, all evidence—and even opening statements and closing arguments—might be presented on an issue-by-issue basis. Manual for Complex Litigation §22.34 (3d ed Federal Judicial Center 1995). As the court noted in Meyer Koulish Co. v Cannon (1963) 213 CA2d 419, 430, 28 CR 757, a special severance statute such as CCP §597 or §598 "does not add a great deal to this power."

PRACTICE TIP: The attorney should consider alternative methods of achieving at least some of the aims of severance if severance is unavailable: for example, Evid C §320 and CCP §607(8) may apply.

IX. MANDATORY SEVERANCE

§43.69 A. Distinction Between Mandatory and Permissive Severance

Although severance is usually within the trial court's discretion (see, e.g., Carpenson v Najarian (1967) 254 CA2d 856, 862, 62 CR 687), special statutes make severance mandatory in some circumstances. When these statutes apply, the court has no discretion to exercise. County of Kern v Superior Court (1978) 82 CA3d 396, 400, 147 CR 248 (trial judge has no alternative but to grant motion). Moreover, the general permissive severance statute, CCP §1048(b), "does not affect any statute that requires a particular issue be severed for trial." Leg Comm Comment to 1971 Amendment to CCP §1048.

B. Particular Statutes That Require Severance

§43.70 1. Limitations Defense in Medical Malpractice Actions (CCP §597.5)

The court must, on the motion of any party or on the court's own motion, sever and try any limitations defense before any other issue in a medical malpractice action. CCP §597.5. The term "limitations" has been narrowly construed. For example, it has been held that §597.5 does not apply to the arguably similar defense of failure to file a timely claim under Govt C §§910-935.7 (Government Claims Act (formerly known as the Tort Claims Act)). County of Kern v Superior Court (1978) 82 CA3d 396, 401, 147 CR 248.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.71 2. Right to Recover Punitive Damages (CC §§3294-3295)

If a defendant so requests, a plaintiff's right to recover punitive damages must be established (i.e., the jury must find clear and convincing evidence of malice, oppression, or fraud) before the jury can consider evidence of the defendant's finances to determine the amount of punitive damages. CC §§3294, 3295(d). Civil Code §3295 was enacted in 1979 to protect defendants against premature disclosure of their finances to the jury when the plaintiff seeks an award of punitive damages. Cobb v Superior Court (1979) 99 CA3d 543, 550, 160 CR 561.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.72 3. Issues of Law in Certain Cases (CCP §592)

In actions to recover real or personal property or money claimed as due on a contract, or to recover damages for breach of contract or for personal injuries, issues of fact must be tried to a jury. When issues of law are also involved, those issues must be tried before issues of fact are tried. CCP §592.

§43.73 4. Unconscionability of Contract (CC §1670.5)

When it is claimed that all or any part of a contract may be unconscionable, the parties shall be afforded an opportunity to present evidence to assist the court in determining whether the challenged portion of the contract is unconscionable. CC §1670.5(b). In 1979, the legislature enacted UCC §2-302 (which had been omitted when California adopted most of the UCC) as CC §1670.5. The 1979 Leg Comm Comment to CC §1670.5 makes it clear that §1670.5 is addressed to the court, which should make the decision. The evidence referred to in §1670.5(b) is for the court's consideration, not the jury's.

EXAMPLE: If a warranty disclaimer is alleged to be unconscionable, that issue must be tried to the court before a jury trial on the remainder of the case commences.

§43.74 5. Compatibility of Public Uses in Consolidated Eminent Domain Proceedings (CCP §1260.020)

If proceedings to acquire the same property by eminent domain are consolidated, the court must decide the compatibility of the several public uses first, leaving other issues to be resolved later. CCP §1260.020(a). If the court decides that the public uses are compatible, then the action continues with all plaintiffs acting jointly. CCP §1260.020(a). If the court rules that the public uses are incompatible, then it must decide which of the public uses is the more necessary. CCP §1260.020(b). The plaintiff alleging the most necessary public use, and any other plaintiff alleging a compatible possible use, should be allowed to proceed, and all other plaintiffs' claims should be dismissed. CCP §1260.020(b).

§43.75 6. Child Custody and Support Issues (CC §4600.6)

The statutes governing the order in which child custody and support provisions should be resolved require separate trial of some issues and permit separate trial of others. If one of several contested issues is the custody of a minor child, the court must try that issue separately before trying the remaining issues. Fam C §3023(b). A separate, early trial may be ordered, on a showing of good cause, on the support of a minor child if that is one of several contested issues. Fam C §4003.

If separate trials of both custody and support have been ordered, then the court must try those two issues together. Fam C §4003.

X. PERMISSIVE SEVERANCE

§43.76 A. Principal Statute (CCP §1048(b))

The court, in furtherance of convenience and to avoid prejudice, or when separate trials will be conducive to expedition and economy, may order a separate trial of any cause of action, including a cause of action asserted in a cross-complaint, or of any separate issue or of any number of causes of action or issues. CCP §1048(b). When no statute requiring severance applies, the court has the discretionary power to order severance. See, e.g., McArthur v Shaffer (1943) 59 CA2d 724, 727, 139 P2d 959 (whether there shall be severance and separate trials of issues in single action is within trial court's discretion).

NOTE: Before the amendment of CCP §1048 in 1971, the statute provided merely that actions may be severed, thus creating uncertainty as to whether an issue could be tried separately. The 1971 amendment resolved the question by making it clear that issues or portions of a case could be severed even though they did not amount to an "action." Leg Comm Comment to 1971 Amendment to CCP §1048. Because of this and other changes in the language of the statute, some cases denying severance that were decided before 1972 were unduly restrictive and may no longer be good authority.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.77 B. Other Statutes That Permit Severance

The legislature has also enacted statutes expressly permitting the courts to sever certain claims or issues. These statutes were not intended to preempt the court's exercise of discretion; rather, they "duplicate" the authority existing under CCP §1048. Leg Comm Comment to 1971 Amendment to CCP §1048.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.78 1. Any Issue May Be Tried Before Any Other Issue (CCP §598)

Any party may request severance, or the court on its own motion may order severance, of any issue before any other issue except special defenses. CCP §598. Section 598 applies both to court and to jury trials.

As originally enacted in 1963, CCP §598 allowed courts to order that "the trial of the issue of liability shall precede the trial of any other issue in the case, except for special defenses." Until 1971, courts held that they possessed broad "inherent authority" under former CCP §2042 (superseded by Evid C §320 in 1965) to determine the sequence in which issues would be tried. See, e.g., Donovan v Security-First Nat'l Bank (1945) 67 CA2d 845, 852, 155 P2d 856, overruled on other grounds in Rader v Thrasher (1962) 57 C2d 244, 251, 18 CR 736. In Cook v Superior Court (1971) 19 CA3d 832, 834, 97 CR 189, however, it was held that a court should not order that all or any part of the damages issue be tried before any part of the liability issue. The soundness of such a restrictive reading of §598 seemed questionable.

Doubts about the validity of Cook were confirmed in 1977 when CCP §598 was substantially broadened to permit courts to order that "the trial of any issue or any part thereof shall precede the trial of any other issue or any part thereof in the case, except for special defenses." CCP §598. This change suggests a legislative intention to provide courts with greater latitude in ordering severance.

Other aspects of the 1977 amendment, e.g., the extension of the court's power to order severance in jury trials as well as nonjury trials, confirm the view that the amendments were meant to encourage more frequent and creative use of severance.

Before CCP §598 was liberalized in 1979 to permit the court to act on its own motion as well as on the motion of any party, courts lacked the authority to order bifurcation under §598 on their own motion in a case to be tried before a jury. Hilliard v A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 CA3d 374, 196 CR 117. In Hilliard, the trial court had ordered bifurcation on its own motion, with both liability and compensatory damages issues to be tried before punitive damages issues because it was "somewhat skeptical and uncertain that the plaintiff had established a factual basis for punitive damages." 148 CA3d at 393. On appeal, this basis was held to be appropriate for bifurcation on the court's own motion. Since 1987, CC §3295(d) requires such bifurcation. See §43.71.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The liberalization of CCP §598 in 1979 had the salutary effect of making the court less dependent on tactical decisions made by the parties.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.79 2. Special Defenses Not Involving Merits (CCP §597)

The court may try special defenses pleaded in the defendant's answer "not involving the merits" before the trial of the underlying claim. CCP §597. For purposes of §597, the term "answer" includes the term "demurrer." Lord v Garland (1946) 27 C2d 840, 850, 168 P2d 5. The term "answer" also includes answers to cross-complaints. CCP §597.

The goal of §597 is to protect a defendant possessing a potentially dispositive affirmative defense against a needless trial of the merits of the plaintiff's claim. People v Rath Packing Co. (1978) 85 CA3d 308, 337, 149 CR 431. These special defenses include, e.g., personal jurisdiction, limitations, res judicata, another action pending, and release. See, e.g., Leonard v Flynn (1891) 89 C 535, 540, 26 P 1097 (another action pending on same claim); Bedolla v Logan & Frazer (1975) 52 CA3d 118, 135, 125 CR 59 (limitations); Boucher v Kriehn (1947) 80 CA2d 437, 441, 182 P2d 218 (res judicata and limitations); Booth v Bond (1942) 56 CA2d 153, 156, 132 P2d 520 (release). See also Gregory v Hamilton (1978) 77 CA3d 213, 217, 142 CR 563 (release).

If the issue proposed to be tried separately is actually an attack on an element of the plaintiff's claim rather than a special defense, then CCP §597 is inapplicable. See, e.g., Meyer Koulish Co. v Cannon (1963) 213 CA2d 419, 430, 28 CR 757. Of course, severance under other statutes, such as CCP §1048(b) or §598, may nonetheless be attainable.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.80 3. Proper But Improvident Joinder of Parties (CCP §379.5)

When parties have been joined under CCP §378 (permissive joinder of plaintiffs) or CCP §379 (permissive joinder of defendants), CCP §379.5 authorizes the court to make such orders as may appear just to "prevent any party from being embarrassed, delayed, or put to undue expense," including an order providing for separate trials. See Landau v Salam (1971) 4 C3d 901, 908, 95 CR 46; Anaya v Superior Court (1984) 160 CA3d 228, 233, 206 CR 520. See generally Fed R Civ P 20(b).

The purpose of CCP §379.5 is to avoid the confusion and prejudice that may result when a proper joinder would lead to the joint trial of claims involving highly complex issues or issues that are predominantly dissimilar. See Westphal v Westphal (1943) 61 CA2d 544, 548, 143 P2d 405.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.81 C. Relationship Between CCP §§1048(b) and 598

At this time, the relationship between CCP §§1048(b) and 598 is uncertain. Although CCP §598 was retained in 1971, when CCP §1048 was amended, because it included useful procedural details (Leg Comm Comment to 1971 Amendment to CCP §1048), it then merely allowed liability to be tried before certain other issues (principally damages). It is unclear whether, when §598 was broadened in 1977, the desirability of extending certain of its provisions (such as its timing requirements) to virtually all situations covered by §1048(b) was considered. Because there no longer appears to be any meaningful distinction between the "separate trials" mentioned in §1048(b) and the successive trials discussed in §598, the statutes seem to overlap substantially.

PRACTICE TIP: To be safe, until the situation is clarified, a party moving for severance under CCP §1048(b) should comply with the special timing requirements of CCP §598.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.82 D. Relationship Between California Statutes and Federal Rules

The portion of the 1972 version of CCP §1048 dealing with severance was cited in the Advisory Committee Note to the original version of Fed R Civ P 42 as an example of state statutes or rules authorizing severance. The current version of CCP §1048(b) was modeled after Fed R Civ P 42(b) and contains much of the same language. The only difference is that, where Rule 42(b) uses the words "any claim, cross-claim, counter claim, or third party claim," CCP §1048(b) uses the words "any cause of action, including a cause of action asserted in a cross-complaint." There is no reason to believe that this distinction in nomenclature makes a difference. Moreover, one purpose of the 1971 amendment of §1048 was to make it conform more closely to the substance of Rule 42. Leg Comm Comment to 1971 Amendment to CCP §1048. Therefore, federal decisions interpreting Fed R Civ P 42(b) should be highly persuasive authority in the absence of preexisting contrary California case authority. In addition, the large body of published federal trial court decisions is a rich source of experience and analysis that should not be overlooked.

In the federal courts, separate trials ordered under Fed R Civ P 42(b) or 20(b) must be distinguished from the complete severance of actions authorized by Fed R Civ P 21. The former are still considered to be one action and to result in one final judgment, even when they are separated for pretrial proceedings as well as for trial. Claims severed under Rule 21, by contrast, become independent actions that result in separate judgments. See 9 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure §2387 (3d ed 1998).

E. Judicial Attitude Toward Severance

§43.83 1. General Considerations

Courts may be reluctant to order severance unless the movant demonstrates that severance will reduce expense, confusion, or prejudice. See, e.g., Alabama v Blue Bird Body Co. (5th Cir 1978) 573 F2d 309, 318 (separation of issues is not usual course that should be followed). Some courts feel that, as a rule, a single trial of all claims and issues is more efficient. See, e.g., McCrae v Pittsburgh Corning Corp. (ED Pa 1983) 97 FRD 490, 492 (referring to general principle that single trial tends to lessen delay, expense, and inconvenience to all parties). There is a willingness, both in California and elsewhere, to experiment with procedures in the hope of improving the speed and efficiency of adjudication without sacrificing fairness or accuracy. See, e.g., Govt C §§68600-68620 (Trial Court Delay Reduction Act).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.84 2. Other Factors Affecting Severance

Because the proper size, configuration, and sequence of a lawsuit requires the exercise of practical judgment, flexibility should be encouraged, and the formulation of rigid criteria for the exercise of that discretionary power should be resisted. Courts should be allowed to retain the latitude to consider each case based on its individual characteristics. Nevertheless, with the benefit of experience it is possible to identify certain situations in which severance typically will or will not be useful and to identify certain factors that weigh for or against severance.

The principal statutes regulating permissive severance, CCP §§1048(b) and 598, specify the factors that the court should consider. The listed factors are whether severance will

- Further the convenience of parties and witnesses;
- Avoid prejudice;
- Encourage expedition;
- Promote economy; and
- Serve the ends of justice.

See also Martin v Bell Helicopter Co. (D Colo 1980) 85 FRD 654, 658 (listing 10 factors to consider under Fed R Civ P 42(b)). Although the factors listed in §§1048(b) and 598 differ in some respects and overlap in others, as a practical matter the same factors will be considered regardless of whether severance is sought under §1048(b) or §598.

The factors identified in CCP §§1048(b) and 598 are disjunctive and need not all be present to justify severance; any one factor may suffice. See In re Paris Air Crash of Mar. 3, 1974 (CD Cal 1975) 69 FRD 310, 319. For example, severance may be ordered to avoid prejudice even if efficiency is sacrificed. Because of the overlap among the factors listed in §§1048(b) and 598, they may be grouped as shown in §§43.85-43.87.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.85 a. Promote Efficiency

Efficiency probably is the most influential factor. Even when severance is ordered primarily for other reasons, courts typically ask whether the proposed severance will result in more efficient use of both private and judicial resources. Experience shows that severance tends to promote efficiency in the following situations, among others:

- Resolution of one issue (such as a special defense) is likely to dispose of the entire case, at least for one or more parties. See Bedolla v Logan & Frazer (1975) 52 CA3d 118, 135, 125 CR 59.
- Adjudication of a hotly disputed claim or issue is likely to facilitate settlement of the remainder of the controversy.
- One claim or issue may be quickly resolved, while the others will require lengthy discovery and trial. See, e.g., Gionis v Superior Court (1988) 202 CA3d 786, 248 CR 741.
- One of several coplaintiffs or codefendants wishes to pursue a different strategy from that of the other plaintiffs or defendants. See City of Oakland v Darbee (1951) 102 CA2d 493, 496, 227 P2d 909.
- Some parties are deeply involved in certain claims, but not at all involved in others. See Bratton & Moretti v Finerman & Son (1959) 171 CA2d 430, 435, 340 P2d 673.
- Early trial of certain claims or issues is likely to result in dismissal of one or more parties.
- Severance of cross-complaints among defendants for indemnity would eliminate any need for a trial on those issues because the plaintiff is unlikely to prevail.

Severance may also be used to minimize the delay or disruption of a multiparty action by automatic stay of prosecution of claims against a bankrupt or debtor in possession. See 11 USC §362. In this situation, the claims against the insolvent party may be severed and stayed, while all other claims may be allowed to proceed.

Of course, severance is not always the most efficient course. When separate trials would necessarily involve significant duplication of evidence or recalling numerous witnesses, it may be inadvisable. Gains in efficiency that might result from severance must be balanced against the inconvenience and additional expense that would be incurred if the parties were required to present the same evidence twice or recall witnesses twice. See, e.g., Lowe v Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc. (ED Pa 1984) 594 F Supp 123, 125 (denying motion to sever because numerous witnesses, including medical experts, would be called twice).

EXAMPLE: Even though separate trials of liability and damages are fairly routine, it was held to be an abuse of discretion to sever liability from damages when the plaintiff claimed that there was inadequate consideration for a release because she would need to show the extent of her injuries to establish the invalidity of the release. Cohn v Bugas (1974) 42 CA3d 381, 385, 116 CR 810. Similarly, it may be inappropriate to order severance when a cause of action is based on allegations of conspiracy, partnership, or joint venture. See Adams Mfg. & Eng'g Co. v Coast Centerless Grinding Co. (1960) 184 CA2d 649, 655, 7 CR 761.

Sometimes, severance alone is not enough to maximize efficiency, and a more creative solution must be sought. See, e.g., Martin v Bell Helicopter Co. (D Colo 1980) 85 FRD 654 (innovative use of consolidation, severance, and multiple juries to resolve numerous actions to which different states' laws were applicable).

Finally, there are limits on the use of severance to promote efficiency. For example, severance of an issue that has been decided may not be ordered simply to facilitate immediate appellate review. Armstrong Petroleum Corp. v Superior Court (1981) 114 CA3d 732, 170 CR 767. Nor may severance be ordered in the name of efficiency if it would cause prejudice or materially reduce the accuracy of adjudication. Baker v Waterman S.S. Corp. (SD NY 1951) 11 FRD 440, 441 ("[a] paramount consideration at all times in the administration of justice is a fair and impartial trial to all litigants. Considerations of economy of time, money and convenience of witnesses must yield thereto").

§43.86 b. Avoid Prejudice

Prejudice under CCP §1048(b) refers primarily to the type of evidence that might unfairly persuade a jury to decide against a party.

NOTE: The kind of prejudice contemplated by §1048(b) generally does not come into play when the action is tried by the court. See In re Paris Air Crash of Mar. 3, 1974 (CD Cal 1975) 69 FRD 310, 319.

Cognizable prejudice might result when a party tries to use its strength on one issue as a "lever" in order to obtain a favorable verdict on another.

EXAMPLE: In personal injury cases, liability and damages often are bifurcated so that a plaintiff with especially serious injuries cannot persuade a sympathetic jury to overlook a weak case on liability. See 18th Biennial Report, Judicial Council of California, p 57 (1961) (citing this as reason for adopting rule providing for separate trials of liability and damages).

In a trial against multiple defendants, some defendants may ask for severance so that a strong case against an unsympathetic defendant does not taint the other defendants. Tri-R Sys., Ltd. v Friedman & Son, Inc. (D Colo 1982) 94 FRD 726, 728 ("spillover effect" weighed in favor of separate trials).

Prejudice might arise when evidence that is admissible on one issue or against one party, but not another, might unfairly influence the jury's verdict. Severance may be used to address this problem. See, e.g., Larsen v Powell (D Colo 1954) 16 FRD 322, 323 (ordering separate trials on validity of release because evidence relating to defendant's liability insurance, which was relevant to issues relating to release, might improperly influence jury's verdict on liability and damages).

Prejudice might also occur when the difference in the value of two claims could skew the jury's decision. See Stencel Aero Eng'g Corp. v Superior Court (1976) 56 CA3d 978, 988, 128 CR 691 (prejudice that might result when $200 compensatory damage claim is tried with $10,000,000 punitive damage claim could be avoided by severing claims).

Another variety of prejudice that may be obviated by severance, regardless of whether the action will be tried to the court or to a jury, arises when one codefendant has delayed in filing a cross-complaint against another codefendant. In this situation, the interests of justice may dictate that the cross-complaint be severed and tried after the trial of the plaintiff's claim. See American Home Prods. Corp. v Johnson & Johnson (SD NY 1986) 111 FRD 448, 454. Doing so may be especially appropriate when a very late-filed cross-complaint threatens to delay an impending trial. Otherwise, the codefendants might prevent the plaintiff from bringing the action to trial within the 5-year period prescribed by CCP §583.310 because the cross-complaint rendered the action no longer at issue, and require that the at-issue memorandum be stricken and that the trial date be vacated. In Roylance v Doelger (1962) 57 C2d 255, 261, 19 CR 7, the court endorsed the severance of a cross-complaint under these conditions.

Similarly, when discovery relating to one portion of the action, e.g., the plaintiff's claims, has been completed, but discovery relating to other aspects of the case, e.g., cross-complaints, has not been finished, severance may be advisable to avoid delay in trying the plaintiff's claims. See, e.g., Davis & Cox v Summa Corp. (9th Cir 1985) 751 F2d 1507, 1517 (affirming severance when discovery related to complaint, but not cross-complaint, had been completed and noting that "without the severance order, the trial of the complaint issues would needlessly have been delayed for a substantial period").

Opponents of severance, usually plaintiffs, sometimes argue that separate trials will create a sterile or laboratory atmosphere in which the issues being litigated are separated from the reality of the defendants' conduct and resulting harm. That argument was rejected in In re Bendectin Litig. (6th Cir 1988) 857 F2d 290, in which the court observed that prejudicial sterility may result not because the jury hears evidence relating to only one part of a case, but because the jury may view the trial as an academic exercise and fail to recognize that "an important, lively human controversy" is involved. Because the trial court had instructed the jury on the importance of its duties and the human interests involved, the appellate court concluded that trifurcation had not resulted in prejudicial sterility. 857 F2d at 316.

§43.87 c. Simplify Case

If a case is "so complicated that a jury may be unable to assimilate all the required information," the court may attempt to simplify the jury's task by severing issues or causes of action. Organic Chems., Inc. v Carroll Prods., Inc. (DC Mich 1980) 86 FRD 468, 471. Such confusion can, in its extreme form, amount to a denial of due process. See, e.g., Gwathmey v U.S. (5th Cir 1954) 215 F2d 148, 156 (holding it was denial of due process to allow single jury to determine value of 238 separate tracts of land in eminent domain proceeding).

There are no standards as to what level of complexity will confuse a jury. Courts generally treat the likelihood of confusion as intuitively obvious. See, e.g., In re Paris Air Crash of Mar. 3, 1974 (CD Cal 1975) 69 FRD 310, 317 ("[t]he mere statement of the foregoing number of issues, claims, third party complaints, cross claims, counterclaims, special defenses, and the number of witnesses, and the like, cannot help but lead to the conclusion that this, if ever, is a case in which the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for separate trials … should be used to the utmost").

Severance may also enhance the accuracy of adjudication in a bench trial. Particularly in complex multiparty cases, relatively short, separate trials may assist the decision maker, whether judge or jury, to avoid fatigue and to understand more readily the evidence presented.

XI. PROCEDURE FOR SEVERANCE

§43.88 A. Timing

Theoretically, a motion for a separate trial under CCP §1048(b) may be made at any time—even during trial. See McLellan v McLellan (1972) 23 CA3d 343, 354, 100 CR 258. It can be argued that delay in and of itself should not result in the denial of severance if severance would accomplish the purposes of CCP §1048(b) or other statutes, especially when other parties to the litigation were not unfairly prejudiced by the delay. As a practical matter, requesting severance as soon as possible will improve the motion's chances for success. Depending on the reasons severance is attractive, the advantages of severance may diminish with time. In addition, there are sometimes statutory and local rule deadlines that must be met.

Code of Civil Procedure §598 permits the court to order that trial of some issues precede the trial of other issues (bifurcation). The order may be made on noticed motion or on the court's own motion. If made in response to a motion, an order under §598 must be made "no later than the close of the pretrial conference in cases in which such pretrial conference is to be held, or, in other cases no later than 30 days before the trial date."

PRACTICE TIP: To meet the CCP §598 deadline, a party must file its motion at least 16 court days before that date, and earlier if the moving papers are served by mail, Express Mail, or facsimile transmission. See CCP §1005(b). Prudence dictates that the motion be made earlier, however, to allow for the possibility that the motion might be taken under submission, because §598 requires a ruling (not merely a hearing) by the close of the pretrial conference or 30 days before trial.

In Shade Foods, Inc. v Innovative Prods. Sales & Mktg., Inc. (2000) 78 CA4th 847, 911, 93 CR2d 364, the court ruled that defendant insurer's in limine motion to bifurcate the trial of issues relating to its liability was timely under CCP §1048(b) despite the fact that a motion under CCP §598 would have been untimely. Note, however, that the party urging waiver on appeal had not argued in the trial court that the bifurcation motion was untimely. 78 CA4th at 911. See also Grappo v Coventry Fin. Corp. (1991) 235 CA3d 496, 286 CR 714 (trial court did not err under CCP §598 in acceding to party's in limine suggestion that trial be bifurcated, because CCP §1048 permits trial court to bifurcate issues on its on motion at any time).

WARNING: Note that both cases involved trial courts that had acted on a motion to bifurcate made after the CCP §598 deadline. Neither addressed the question of whether CCP §1048(b) requires a trial court to hear a motion to bifurcate made after the deadline. Consequently, to ensure that the motion is heard, it is safest to seek severance within the time specified by §598.

Local rules also may limit the time allowed for bringing a motion for severance. For example, the Los Angeles Superior Court requires the parties to be prepared to discuss bifurcation at the first case management conference. Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(b)(1). See Sacramento Ct R 2.02(B) (motion for severance shall be made promptly).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.89 B. Motion Made by Party or on Court's Own Motion

Severance may be ordered on the motion of a party or on the court's own motion. See, e.g., CCP §§597-598 (permissive severance), 597.5 (mandatory severance).

Severance may be ordered despite an earlier order of consolidation. Seidell v Tuxedo Land Co. (1934) 1 CA2d 406, 409, 36 P2d 1102. In addition, the court may order severance despite the objections of some, or even all, of the parties. When all parties oppose severance, however, the court should proceed with caution.

PRACTICE TIP: If severance is identified by a party as being either highly desirable or highly undesirable, care should be taken to ensure that the reasons for or against severance can be described in detail on every occasion when the subject may be raised, e.g., a trial-setting conference, disposition, or pretrial conference. If counsel is not prepared to make a persuasive showing, an adverse decision might be rendered that could prove difficult to change. When severance is ordered at a trial-setting conference or at the hearing of an unrelated matter on the court's own motion, a party opposing severance should be careful to make an adequate record of its objection in order to preserve the issue for appeal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.90 C. Stipulation to Severance and Proposed Order

If all parties agree that certain claims or issues should be severed, they may prepare a combined stipulation and proposed order to that effect and present it to the court. See Plaza Tulare v Tradewell Stores, Inc. (1989) 207 CA3d 522, 254 CR 792 (parties agreed to separate trials on liability and damages during settlement conference). Because court approval is required, the parties generally file a joint motion or one party files a motion in which the others join.

The stipulation and proposed order should specify the claims or issues to be severed, explain the sequence in which the claims or issues will be tried, state whether there will be a partial stay of discovery, and clarify whether the issues will be tried before the same jury or separate juries.

WARNING: Care should be taken in drafting the stipulation and proposed order because the provisions will be difficult to set aside. Cohn v Bugas (1974) 42 CA3d 381, 392, 116 CR 810 ("[i]t is up to the parties to state a stipulation clearly and properly … and a party will not be heard to complain later if it is determined that by his own carelessness in the choice of words he did not state what he now says he really meant to say"), quoting Bemer v Bemer (1957) 152 CA2d 766, 771, 314 P2d 114.

§43.91 D. Preparing Motion for Severance

Although none of the severance statutes explicitly requires it, severance should usually be sought by a noticed motion. Sometimes severance is ordered on the court's own motion or on the basis of an informal oral motion, but most courts do not favor informal oral motions for severance, so that approach is not recommended.

A party seeking severance by a written motion must file a notice of motion identifying the issues or claims to be severed and stating the reasons severance will promote efficiency, fairness, and accuracy. The notice of motion must state in the opening paragraph the nature of the order being sought and the grounds for issuance of the order. The first page must specify immediately below the case number the date, time, and location, if ascertainable, of the hearing, the name of the hearing judge, if ascertainable, the nature or title of any attached or concurrently filed document, the date of filing of the action, and the trial date, if set. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110(a)-(b).

The notice of motion must be accompanied by a memorandum in support of the motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113(a). See chap 12 on memorandums. It is essential that a party seeking severance define with precision in the memorandum the claims or issues to be tried in each of the separate trials. Opponents of severance invariably argue that the claims or issues are hopelessly intertwined, and that severance will result in unfairness, discovery disputes, or duplication.

In seeking severance, consideration should be given to submitting, along with the notice of motion and supporting memorandum, declarations that establish the relevant facts. For example, in arguing in favor of severance on the ground that a preliminary trial on a claim or issue is likely to obviate the need for a subsequent trial of more complex issues, it is important to demonstrate to the court through declarations that the movant is likely to prevail on the issue to be tried first. Similarly, if the avoidance of prejudice or confusion is the reason for seeking severance, detailed declarations that demonstrate a real danger of prejudice or confusion should be submitted. Tri-R Sys., Ltd. v Friedman & Son, Inc. (D Colo 1982) 94 FRD 726, 728 (denying severance and stating that mere possibility of some prejudice does not justify separate trials when such prejudice is not substantial and there are strong countervailing considerations of economy).

PRACTICE TIP: The attorney should offer an explanation in the memorandum on why other measures, e.g., cautionary instructions, would not suffice.

Finally, in seeking severance, submission of a stipulation or proposed order describing in detail the nature of the severance, the sequence of the separate trials, and the like, is advisable. For one thing, it will assist the court in assessing exactly what the consequences of severance will be. For another, it will give the court confidence that the consequences of severance have been carefully considered and that the matter will proceed smoothly if severance is ordered.

The original of the notice of motion, declaration, memorandum, and proposed order must be filed with the court and copies must be served on counsel for each party. For further discussion, see chap 12 (format of papers), chap 18 (service). Sample forms are in §§43.106-43.108.

The motion may be set for a hearing as described in CCP §§1005 and 1010-1013(a) (which generally require that notice be given at least 16 court before the hearing, with additional time if the notice is served by mail), or it may be heard at the pretrial or trial-setting conference. Local rules should be consulted to learn the procedures for obtaining a hearing date and to identify the department in which the motion will be heard.

NOTE: In deciding whether to move to sever one part of an action (or to oppose severance, if the motion is made by another party), counsel should keep in mind that severance may affect the jurisdictional classification of the case if the amount in controversy of the severed claim is $25,000 or less. See Omni Aviation Managers, Inc. v Municipal Court (1976) 60 CA3d 682, 684, 131 CR 758 (under former law, severance of cross-complaint required transfer of remaining claim to municipal court, because it was below threshold for superior court jurisdiction). For discussion of trial court unification and limited civil cases, see chap 6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.92 E. Opposing Severance

In deciding whether to oppose severance, the practical implications should be thought through carefully. For example, plaintiffs often move to sever the complaint from any cross-complaints to expedite trial of their claims. But if the defendant's cross-claim is more valuable than the plaintiff's claim, severance might also benefit the defendant by enabling it to present its case first during a separate trial on its cross-claim. Similarly, plaintiffs usually oppose motions for the separate trial of special defenses. But it might be advantageous to all parties to resolve a relatively narrow, potentially dispositive issue first.

A party opposing a motion for severance must file a memorandum in opposition to the motion and must serve copies on counsel for all other parties. On opposing motions, see chap 12.

Consideration should be given to filing one or more declarations in opposition to the motion, together with the memorandum in opposition, to supply the factual basis for arguments that severance will result in prejudice or inefficiency.

A party opposing severance should be prepared to show either in the memorandum in opposition, or in declarations, that severance will produce no affirmative benefits, and will in fact actually hinder an orderly resolution of the lawsuit. Facts should be presented to demonstrate that the claims or issues are so interrelated that they cannot be clearly separated, that separate trials will cause undue delay or involve duplicative presentation of evidence, or that the jury will be confused if the "story" behind the lawsuit is presented piecemeal instead of all at once. An opponent of severance might offer alternatives (e.g., cautionary instructions to the jury) designed to obviate any prejudice or confusion that might otherwise result if severance were denied.

§43.93 F. Diagnostic Questions

Answers to the following questions may assist counsel in evaluating whether to seek severance in a particular case:

1. Is severance desirable?

2. What are the tactical advantages and disadvantages of severance?

3. Would a related device (e.g., demurrer, order regulating the order of proof) be more advantageous?

4. Does a mandatory severance statute apply?

- Statute of limitations defense in a medical malpractice action (CCP §597.5)
- Punitive damages claims (CC §3295(d))
- Separable issues of law (CCP §592)
- Unconscionability (CC §1670.5)
- Consolidated eminent domain proceedings (CCP §1260.020)
- Custody of a minor child (Fam C §3023(b))

5. Does the general permissive severance statute (CCP §1048(b)) apply?

6. Does a specific permissive severance statute apply?

- Special defense (CCP §597)
- Liability and damages (CCP §598)
- Improvident joinder (CCP §379.5)

7. If severance is not mandatory, would it be appropriate?

- To promote efficiency
- To avoid prejudice
- To improve the accuracy of adjudication

8. How should the proceeding be structured?

9. Which claims or issues should be tried first?

10. Should there be a partial stay of discovery?

11. Should the separate trials take place before the same jury or different juries?

12. What would be the most appropriate scope of severance?

- Complete severance
- Separate trials

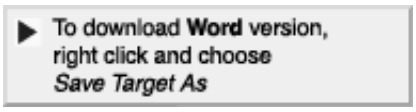
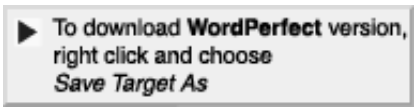
§43.94 G. Checklist: Procedure for Motion for Severance





Moving Party

- Decide whether motion to sever is desirable and preferable to available alternatives (see §§43.63-43.68)
- Determine whether to seek stipulation (see §43.90)
- Prepare motion, if stipulation not obtained (see §43.91)
- Notice of motion
- Supporting memorandum
- Declaration(s)
- Proposed order
- Serve and file motion; set it for hearing

Opposing Party

- Decide whether to oppose severance (see §43.92)
- Prepare opposing papers
- Memorandum in opposition
- Declaration(s)
- Serve and file opposing papers

Posthearing Procedure

Losing Party

- Seek writ before trial (see §43.99)
- After trial:
- Motion for new trial
- Motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict
- Appeal (see §43.100)

XII. CONSEQUENCES OF SEVERANCE

§43.95 A. Priority of Severed Actions, Claims, or Issues

Generally, statutes requiring severance prescribe the order in which claims or issues must be tried. See, e.g., CCP §§592, 597.5. In addition, CCP §598 requires that, if a separate trial is to be held on more than one issue, any separately tried special defenses must be tried first. Similarly, certain mixed questions of law and fact regarding liability must be decided by the court before damages issues may be submitted to the jury. See, e.g., Orpheum Bldg. Co. v San Francisco Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1978) 80 CA3d 863, 869, 146 CR 5 (issue of substantial impairment of access in inverse condemnation action).

A court ordering permissive severance usually has latitude to decide which claims or issues will be tried first. See CCP §598. The sequence of the separate trials is often a key element in deciding whether to have separate trials at all. Sometimes the answer is obvious, e.g., when the reason for severance is that resolution of a narrow issue may eliminate a party or the need for a lengthy trial on other, more complex issues. Similarly, when a case in which a jury has been demanded presents both legal and equitable claims or defenses, the court may try the equitable issues first (either without the jury, or with an advisory jury). If the determination of the equitable claims or defenses is dispositive of the nonequitable issues, then the parties and the court are spared the added burden and expense of a jury trial. Raedeke v Gibraltar Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1974) 10 C3d 665, 671, 111 CR 693.

NOTE: Federal decisions say that the Seventh Amendment right to trial by jury may require legal issues to be tried first, with the jury's factual findings being binding on the court when it later determines equitable claims. See Dairy Queen, Inc. v Wood (1962) 369 US 469, 8 L Ed 2d 44, 82 S Ct 894; Beacon Theatres, Inc. v Westover (1959) 359 US 500, 3 L Ed 2d 988, 79 S Ct 948.

Because California courts have sometimes interpreted Cal Const art I, §7 differently from federal courts' interpretation of US Const amend VII, the precedential value of federal decisions is uncertain. See Rankin v Frebank Co. (1975) 47 CA3d 75, 91, 121 CR 348.

Given a choice, courts generally attempt to try the less complex issue first, especially if there is a chance that the simpler issue will dispose of the remaining claims or that the parties will settle after the simpler issue is resolved. This method has sometimes appropriately has led to a defendant's cross-claim being tried before the plaintiff's claim is tried. Other matters that might be reserved for subsequent disposition include claims or issues that would involve disclosure of confidential or embarrassing information and claims or issues that would require the resolution of constitutional questions.

Sometimes special circumstances make an expeditious resolution of part of the controversy particularly important for one of the parties, which may increase the desirability of severance or suggest that the issues should be tried in one sequence rather than another. There is no reason the court should be precluded from taking such special circumstances into account if they are properly substantiated. Good sense dictates that, when a case involves questions vital to the public interest, those questions should be severed and resolved first when reasonably possible.

"Reverse" bifurcation should also be considered. It is easy to imagine cases in which the damages issue could be tried quickly and would likely dispose of the litigation (e.g., when there is substantial doubt as to whether the plaintiff could prove any damages), but the liability issues would require a lengthy trial. In such instances, an early separate trial on damages makes sense.

Although the court's discretion to determine the sequence in which issues will be resolved is broad, it is not boundless. For example, in Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 1006, 117 CR 485, the court held that it was an abuse of discretion for the trial court to sever and try the issue of liability before certifying a class and notifying the absent class members. Although severance might otherwise have been appropriate, the sequence made it possible for potential class members to decide whether to join the class after liability issues had been determined, thus subjecting the defendant to an adjudication that would bind it if it lost, but that would have no preclusive effect against potential class members if it won. 42 CA3d at 1011.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.96 B. Stay of Discovery

In its discretion, a court may order a stay of discovery on claims or issues to be tried later. In some cases, a stay of discovery will benefit the parties by allowing the first issue or claim to proceed to trial more rapidly and by eliminating the need to respond to potentially burdensome discovery requests relating to issues that will never be tried. See Technitrol, Inc. v Digital Equip. Corp. (ND Ill 1973) 62 FRD 91, 92. But in other cases, an order staying discovery would lead only to inefficient discovery requests, undue delay between the first and second trials, and increased judicial involvement in motions for protective orders and motions to compel discovery. See White Chem. Corp. v Walsh Chem. Corp. (WD NC 1987) 116 FRD 580, 582 (denying bifurcated discovery despite bifurcating trial); Tillery v Lynn (SD NY 1985) 607 F Supp 399, 402 (refusing to stay discovery because it would unduly delay second trial). Moreover, if the resolution of the claims or issues to be tried first would be a lengthy process, a stay of discovery might reduce the quality of justice if documents are lost or memories fade.

An additional consideration is that staying discovery on issues or claims to be tried later renders it impracticable to have the same jury participate in both trials. Although use of the same jury is seldom necessary, it is often viewed as desirable. See, e.g., Naxon Telesign Corp. v GTE Info. Sys. (ND Ill 1980) 89 FRD 333, 341 (refusing to stay discovery because allowing time for discovery between first and second trials would make it impossible for same jury to consider both issues). When, however, the issue to be tried first is narrow, a stay of discovery on other matters can spare the parties enormous effort and expense. Similarly, if one purpose of ordering severance is to achieve prompt disposition of a hotly contested claim or issue to facilitate the settlement of the other claims or issues, it may be desirable to allow a lapse of time between the two trials so that renewed negotiations can be undertaken. This too may render use of the same jury impracticable.

In deciding whether to stay discovery, the court should consider whether a second trial is likely, whether postponing discovery would substantially delay the second trial, and whether there are too many common or overlapping facts to make a stay of discovery manageable. If discovery on deferred issues or claims is to be stayed, the court should make certain that the discovery permitted to proceed is not so truncated as to prevent one or more parties from obtaining information necessary for a full presentation of the issue or claim to be tried first.

§43.97 C. Same Jury or Different Juries

When severance is ordered in a case to be tried to a jury, CCP §598 gives the court discretion to hold the second trial "before the same or another jury." Similarly, CCP §§597 and 597.5 do not require that special defenses, e.g., limitations, be tried by different juries. Gonzales v Nork (1978) 20 C3d 500, 506 n4, 143 CR 240. Although CCP §1048(b) is silent on the question, the Leg Comm Comment to the 1971 Amendment to CCP §1048 says that §598 contains "useful procedural details" that continue to apply. Accordingly, if a special defense is rejected, the same jury may proceed to decide the remaining issues. Consistent with this principle, it has been held that a trial on special defenses is not a "previous trial" under former CCP §602(5) (providing that jurors participating in a previous trial between the same parties on the same cause of action are subject to challenge or cause) because the trial of an action is not complete until all issues in the action have been resolved. Gonzales v Nork, supra.

NOTE: A different rule applies, however, when bifurcated trials are held under CC §3295(d). In 1987, §3295(d) was amended to require that evidence of a defendant's financial condition be presented for a decision on punitive damages to "the same trier of fact that found for the plaintiff and found one or more defendants guilty of malice, oppression or fraud" when issues of liability and punitive damages are bifurcated. Medo v Superior Court (1988) 205 CA3d 64, 251 CR 924 (held that §3295(d) prohibits bifurcation that would result in different juries trying issues of liability and punitive damages when jury improperly discharged prematurely, but also held that defendant had waived right to object so plaintiff not required to retry liability and compensatory damages). Section 3295(d) does not require a retrial on all issues when only the punitive damages portion of a judgment is reversed. Torres v Automobile Club of S. Cal. (1997) 15 C4th 771, 63 CR2d 859.

Holding all trials before the same jury minimizes the duplicative presentation of evidence, saves the time that would be consumed by conducting two voir dires, and eliminates the risk that different juries would make inconsistent factual findings. See 9 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure §2391 (3d ed 1998). Use of the same jury can create problems, though. For example, some jurors may recognize that, if they find for the defendant on a special defense or against the plaintiff on liability, their task will be completed. Moreover, if discovery on issues to be tried later is stayed, it will rarely be possible to keep the jury while the parties prepare for the second trial. The longer the delay between successive trials, the greater the risk that the jurors will either forget what evidence was presented at the first trial or become unavailable.

Use of different juries may also be more efficient. If different juries are used, the court may commence trial in another action while the jury is deliberating. When the jury reaches a verdict, the rest of the case can be set for trial, if necessary, at a time convenient for all parties and the court. Therefore, the court must balance the advantages of trying the case before the same jury, including any possible constitutional problems (discussed in §43.66), against the advantages to be gained by staying discovery.

§43.98 D. When Posttrial Motions May Be Made on Severed Actions and Issues

Generally, a court may not issue a final decision for the purposes of posttrial motions and appeal until all issues and causes of action have been resolved. See Bank of America v Superior Court (1942) 20 C2d 697, 701, 128 P2d 357 ("there can be but one judgment in an action no matter how many counts the complaint contains"). Thus, a party generally may not move for a new trial or a judgment notwithstanding the verdict until the entire controversy is resolved. When separate trials have been held, however, these principles are modified. See CCP §§578-579, which explicitly recognize that either one or more judgments are possible, and see CCP §§597-598. See also Leg Comm Comment to 1971 Amendment to CCP §1048: "Section 1048 does not deal with the authority of a court to enter a separate final judgment on fewer than all the causes of action or issues involved in an action or trial.… This question is determined primarily by case law, and Section 1048 leaves the question to case law development."

If an early trial of a special defense disposes of all claims between one plaintiff and one defendant, a separate judgment should be entered reflecting that decision, even if the plaintiff has claims against other defendants that will proceed to trial. People v Rath Packing Co. (1978) 85 CA3d 308, 337, 149 CR 431. Similarly, CCP §579 permits the court presiding over an action against several defendants to enter judgment against one or more while allowing the action to proceed against the others. See generally Westphal v Westphal (1943) 61 CA2d 544, 549, 143 P2d 405 (construing statute not to authorize entry of separate judgments against fewer than all plaintiffs). This rule is limited to situations in which all claims or issues involving a particular party have been resolved. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1591, which notes that when "a factual issue raised by the pleadings is tried by the court separately … no proposed judgment shall be prepared until the other issues are tried.… Any motion for a new trial following a bifurcated trial shall be made after all of the issues are tried." See also Evans v Horton (1953) 115 CA2d 281, 287, 251 P2d 1013 (judgment may be entered for defendant only when all claims against defendant have been resolved on basis of special defense).

Of course, when a special defense or an essential element of a claim is tried first, and the plaintiff loses, none of the remaining issues should be tried, and judgment should be entered for the defendant. See, e.g., CCP §§597-598; Rath Packing Co., 85 CA3d at 337. In such instances, the initial trial concludes the action, at least pending the outcome of any appeal. Accordingly, the court may entertain the plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict even though, if the defendant had lost, the court could not entertain such a motion by the defendant. Meyser v American Bldg. Maintenance, Inc. (1978) 85 CA3d 933, 936, 149 CR 808. These special rules established by CCP §§597-598 apply only when separate trials are held. Zisk v City of Roseville (1976) 56 CA3d 41, 48, 127 CR 896.

For further discussion of when a judgment is considered to have occurred for purposes of bringing posttrial motions, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§25.7 (judgment notwithstanding the verdict), 25.25 (new trial) (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

XIII. APPELLATE REVIEW OF SEVERANCE ORDERS

A. Review of Orders Granting or Denying Severance

§43.99 1. Prejudgment (Writ)

An order granting or denying a motion to sever is not directly appealable. CCP §§904.1-904.2. An appellate court may, however, issue a writ of mandate compelling the trial court to sever a claim or issue in appropriate circumstances. Gionis v Superior Court (1988) 202 CA3d 786, 248 CR 741. Similarly, a writ of prohibition may issue to restrain a court from severing an issue or claim in excess of its statutory authority. Cook v Superior Court (1971) 19 CA3d 832, 834, 97 CR 189; Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 1006, 1015, 117 CR 485.

For further discussion of writs of mandate and prohibition, see California Civil Writ Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.100 2. Postjudgment (Appeal)

An order granting or denying severance may be appealed along with other issues in a case after a judgment has been entered. To the extent that such an appeal is based on an argument that the ruling resulted in inefficiency, it probably is doomed to failure. Any inefficiency that resulted from the ruling would most likely be overshadowed by the expense and inconvenience of a retrial. Accordingly, postjudgment appeals of rulings regarding severance must typically be based on a persuasive showing of prejudice or factfinder confusion.

For discussion of when a judgment has occurred for purposes of taking an appeal, see §43.102.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.101 3. Scope of Review

Because of the practical, fact-oriented character of severance, the discretionary power to order severance is necessarily broad, and orders granting or denying severance will not be set aside except for an abuse of discretion. See, e.g., National Elec. Supply Co. v Mount Diablo Unified Sch. Dist. (1960) 187 CA2d 418, 421, 9 CR 864. Regardless of the method of review, the scope of review is the same. As a practical matter, however, if the merits have been tried, a strong showing of prejudice probably will be necessary to obtain a reversal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.102 B. Appeal of Judgment on Merits of Less Than All Claims

Obviously, if the claims or issues tried first dispose of the entire action, a final judgment may be entered and an appeal may be taken immediately. A more interesting question is presented when the first trial did not dispose of the entire action, but one or more judgments were entered for particular parties or claims. This situation has been aptly described as involving "the most difficult problems in the field of appellate procedure." National Elec. Supply Co. v Mount Diablo Unified Sch. Dist. (1960) 187 CA2d 418, 421, 9 CR 864. See California Civil Appellate Practice §§3.20-3.21, 3.24 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996). Accordingly, its mysteries can be only briefly addressed here.

A judgment in a case with more than one party that resolves all issues as to one or more parties may be treated as a final judgment even when issues remain to be resolved between the other parties. Johnson v Hayes Cal. Builders, Inc. (1963) 60 C2d 572, 35 CR 618. Similarly, an order that may be amended so that it is converted into a judgment that encompasses all controverted issues may be treated as a valid premature appeal from that judgment. Morehart v County of Santa Barbara (1994) 7 C4th 725, 740, 29 CR2d 804; Shepardson v McLellan (1963) 59 C2d 83, 27 CR 884. However, an appeal may not be taken from a judgment that does not dispose of all causes of action between the parties, even if the causes of action disposed of by the judgment "have been ordered to be tried separately, or may be characterized as 'separate and independent' from those remaining." Morehart, 7 C4th at 743, disapproving Schonfeld v City of Vallejo (1975) 50 CA3d 401, 123 CR 669. See also Nerhan v Stinson Beach County Water Dist. (1994) 27 CA4th 536, 33 CR2d 10 (applying Morehart to dismiss appeal of dismissal of writ of mandate when action for damages between parties still pending).

Satisfactory proof having been made, and good cause appearing,

IT IS ORDERED that:

[Option 1]

1. Action No. _ _ is consolidated with Action No. _ _ for all purposes so that only one set of findings of fact and conclusions of law (if any) will be filed, and only one judgment (if any) will be entered.

[Option 2]

1. Action No. _ _ is consolidated with Action No. _ _ for the purpose of trying the issue(s) of _ _[specify]_ _ so that each action will retain its separate nature and will require the filing of separate findings of fact and conclusions of law (if any) and the entry of separate judgments (if any).

[Option 3]

1. Action No. _ _ is consolidated with Action No. _ _ for the purpose of discovery and pretrial motions only. _ _[The question of whether the action should be consolidated for trial is not decided and will be addressed at a later time (if necessary)]_ _.

Each further pleading or paper filed will bear Action No. _ _[insert master case file number]_ _ and include cross-references to the other case numbers.

[Add if desired to clarify effects of consolidation, e.g.]

3. In lieu of filing an answer to the complaint in Action No. _ _, defendant considers each allegation of that complaint to be denied.

Comment: See §§43.58-43.59 (orders regulating consequences of consolidation), chap 12 (use of proposed orders; formal requirements). Under CCP §1048(a), the court may make orders to avoid unnecessary costs or delay. Hence, the consolidation order should be drafted carefully to implement the consolidation.

I. INTRODUCTION

§44.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter covers the coordination and rules of procedure for separate civil actions that share a common question of law or fact. On motion to transfer in noncomplex cases, see §§44.11-44.13. On petition for coordination in complex cases, see §§44.14-44.40. See checklist in §44.41 and forms in §§44.42-44.55.

NOTE: The coordination statute and rules of court use the title "Chairperson of the Judicial Council," which was a title given to the Chief Justice by Cal Const art VI, §6 as it read when the statute and rules were adopted. However, because §6 was subsequently amended and now refers solely to the "Chief Justice" (see Keenan v Superior Court (1980) 111 CA3d 336, 339 n1, 168 CR 561), that title is used throughout this chapter.

B. Governing Law

§44.2 1. Coordination Statutes

The original coordination statutes (CCP §§404-404.9) became effective January 1, 1974. In adopting the statutes the legislature was inspired at least in part by the federal statute designed to control multidistrict, multiaction litigation. See 28 USC §1407. However, California procedure, unsuited to the disparate design of the federal court system and its unique mix of business, has developed along its own lines.

The coordination statute has been revised, effective September 23, 1996, to add a motion procedure for noncomplex actions permitting a judge to transfer an action or actions from another court to that judge's court for coordination with an action involving a common question of law or fact. CCP §403. The motion procedure greatly simplifies the process for coordinating noncomplex matters (see §44.10) that share a common question of law or fact.

§44.3 2. California Rules of Court

California Rules of Court 3.500-3.550, adopted to implement the coordination statutes, are effective regardless of any other provision of law. CCP §404.7. The coordination rules expressly state that, to the extent that they conflict with laws applicable to civil actions generally, the rules prevail. Cal Rules of Ct 3.504(b).

As necessary, a coordination trial judge may establish any manner of proceeding that appears to conform to the statutes and rules. Cal Rules of Ct 3.504(c).

The rules defining complex cases and their designation are Cal Rules of Ct 3.400-3.403 and 3.751.

§44.4 3. Local Rules

The local rules of court that are designated in the order appointing the trial judge apply unless otherwise provided in the California Rules of Court or by the judge. Cal Rules of Ct 3.504(d).

§44.5 II. OVERVIEW

Civil actions pending in different courts that share a common question of law or fact may be coordinated by (1) a "motion to transfer" in noncomplex cases (CCP §403) or (2) a "petition for coordination" in complex cases (CCP §404).

A motion to transfer an action from another court for coordination must be supported by a declaration showing that the actions meet the standards for coordination of CCP §404.1 (see §44.9) and are not complex as defined by Cal Rules of Ct 3.400-3.403 and 3.751 (see §44.10), and that the moving party has made a good faith effort to get all the parties to each action to agree to the transfer. CCP §403. If the motion is granted, the court to which the action is transferred may order the cases consolidated under CCP §1048 without any other motion or hearing. CCP §403.

Typically, a petition for coordination is submitted by all plaintiffs or all defendants in an action to the Chief Justice, whom the coordination statute refers to as the "Chairperson of the Judicial Council" (see Note in §44.1). Alternatively, the presiding judge, or any party after obtaining permission from the presiding judge, may submit a petition for coordination to the Chief Justice. CCP §404. See §44.15.

The petition must be supported by a declaration showing that the actions are complex as defined by Cal Rules of Ct 3.400-3.403 and 3.751 (see §44.10) and meet the standards for coordination as specified in CCP §404.1 (see §44.9). CCP §404.

The Chief Justice may assign a "coordination motion judge" (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.501(3), (7)) to determine whether the actions are complex and, if so, whether coordination of the "included actions" (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.501(11)) in the petition is appropriate. Alternatively, the Chief Justice may authorize the presiding judge of a court to assign the matter in the same manner as in other civil actions. CCP §404. If the judge assigned under §404 decides that coordination is appropriate, the Chief Justice must assign a "coordination trial judge" (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.501(9)) to hear and rule on the "coordinated actions" (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.501(5)) at the site that the coordination trial judge finds appropriate or authorize the presiding judge of a court to assign the matter in the same manner that assignments are made in other civil cases. CCP §404.3; Cal Rules of Ct 3.541(b)(2). The coordination procedure, when applicable, is intended to govern subsequent activities without interference by any judge other than the coordination motion judge and the coordination trial judge. Keenan v Superior Court (1980) 111 CA3d 336, 342, 168 CR 561.

§44.6 A. Cases That Have Been Coordinated

The annual reports of the Judicial Council set out in a general way the classes of litigation that have been the subject of coordination proceedings, along with related statistics. There have been some very big proceedings, e.g., the "Technical Equities Cases" (Judicial Council No. 1991), involving about 600 actions, 1000 plaintiffs, and 100 attorneys and tried in a specially built courtroom in a convention center. Most proceedings, however, include only two or three actions. 1988 Annual Report, Judicial Council of California, Part II, p 11.

A register of all coordination proceedings and a file for each are maintained for public inspection by the coordination attorney at the San Francisco office of the Judicial Council. Cal Rules of Ct 3.550(b)(2).

B. Standards for Coordination

§44.7 1. Threshold Requirement

The threshold requirement for a petition for coordination or a motion to transfer for coordination is that the actions to be coordinated be pending in different courts and share a common question of fact or law. CCP §§403-404.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Test for Appropriateness

§44.8 a. General Rule

Coordination is appropriate if having one judge preside over all actions for all purposes in a selected site or sites will promote the ends of justice. CCP §404.1.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/44 Coordination/§44.9 b. Factors to Consider

§44.9 b. Factors to Consider

Code of Civil Procedure §404.1 requires that the following factors be considered in deciding whether coordination is appropriate:

- Whether the common question of fact or law is predominating and significant to the litigation;
- The convenience of parties, witnesses, and counsel;
- The relative development of the actions and of the work product of counsel;
- The efficient utilization of judicial facilities and staff resources;
- The calendar of the courts;
- The disadvantages of duplicative and inconsistent rulings, orders, or judgments; and
- The likelihood of settlement without further litigation if coordination is denied.

For discussion of how to apply these factors, see McGhan Med. Corp. v Superior Court (1992) 11 CA4th 804, 14 CR2d 264 (reversal of trial court's denial of defendants' motion to coordinate 300 or more breast implant defect cases).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/44 Coordination/§44.10 C. Declaration of Complexity

§44.10 C. Declaration of Complexity

A motion for transfer and coordination (CCP §403) or a petition for coordination (CCP §404) must be supported by a declaration stating facts that show whether the actions are complex or not as defined by Cal Rules of Ct 3.400-3.403 and 3.751. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1501.

In complex litigation, "judicial management should begin early and be applied continuously." Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.10(a). A complex case may involve (Cal Rules of Ct 3.400):

- Numerous pretrial motions raising difficult or novel legal issues that will be time consuming to resolve;
- Management of a large number of witnesses or a substantial amount of documentary evidence;
- Management of a large number of separately represented parties;
- Coordination with related actions pending in one or more courts in other counties, states, or countries, or in a federal court;
- Substantial postjudgment judicial supervision;
- Antitrust or trade relation claims;
- Construction defect claims involving many parties or structures;
- Securities claims or investment losses involving many parties;
- Environmental or toxic tort claims involving many parties;
- Claims involving mass torts;
- Claims involving class actions; or
- Insurance coverage claims arising out of any of the types of claims listed above.

No criterion is controlling; i.e., the court has discretion to decide whether a case is complex. For example, if a court has significant experience in resolving similar claims, the management of those claims may have become routine. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.400(d).

NOTE: Counsel should check for local rules on complex cases. A court may declare by local rule that certain types of cases are or are not provisionally complex. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.400(d).

III. PROCEDURES IN NONCOMPLEX CASES

A. Motion to Transfer Action for Coordination

§44.11 1. Filing Motion

In noncomplex actions, a party may file a motion to transfer an action from another court for coordination with an action involving a common question of fact or law. CCP §403. Before filing the motion, the moving party must make a good faith effort to get all parties to each action to agree to the proposed transfer and consolidation. Cal Rules of Ct 3.500(b).

The motion must conform to the requirements for motions in civil actions generally and be supported by a declaration stating facts that show that the actions are not complex (see §44.10) and meet the standards specified in CCP §404.1 (see §44.9). The declaration must also state facts showing that the moving party has made good faith efforts to get all parties to the actions to agree to the transfer, and has notified all parties that they must disclose to the court any information they may have about other motions requesting transfer that would be affected by granting of the motion. CCP §403; Cal Rules of Ct 3.500(c). Requirements for motion papers are found in CCP §1005 and Cal Rules of Ct 311-315. On noticed motions generally, see chap 12.

Notice of the motion must be served on all parties to each action and on each court where an action is pending. CCP §403. The moving party must notify all parties of their obligation to disclose to the court any information on other transfer motions that would be affected if the motion before the court is granted. Cal Rules of Ct 3.500(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.12 2. Findings and Order

If the motion is granted, the order must specify the reasons supporting a finding that transfer will promote the ends of justice with reference to the standards in Cal Rules of Ct 3.500(d). With the addition of a finding that the actions are not complex, the Rule 3.500(d) standards are the same as the factors specified in CCP §404.1 for determining whether coordination is appropriate. See §44.9.

The moving party must provide copies of the order to all parties to each case, to the Judicial Council, and to the presiding judge of each court from which a case is to be transferred (Cal Rules of Ct 3.500(e)) and take all appropriate action to assure that the transfer happens forthwith (Cal Rules of Ct 3.500(f)).

If the judge decides that the actions that are subject to the motion to transfer should be consolidated in another court, the judge may order the parties to file the motion in the appropriate court. Cal Rules of Ct 3.500(h).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.13 B. Conflicting Court Orders

The coordination staff in the Administrative Office of the Courts will review all transfer orders and will promptly confer with the presiding judge of any courts that have made conflicting orders under CCP §403. The presiding judges must confer with each other and with the judges who made the conflicting orders in order to resolve the conflict. Cal Rules of Ct 3.500(g).

If the court determines, after a noticed hearing, that any party failed to disclose information on pending motions, the court may find that the party's failure to disclose is an unlawful interference with the processes of the court (Cal Rules of Ct 3.500(g)); the offending party may face criminal contempt sanctions under CCP §1209. See 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §§174-188, 195 (5th ed 2008).

IV. PROCEDURES IN COMPLEX CASES

A. Petition for Coordination

§44.14 1. Practical Considerations

Among practical considerations to be explored before filing a petition for coordination in complex cases are the following:

- To achieve more prompt and economical results, cases likely to settle should normally not be included in coordination proceedings;
- In a complex coordination case, a petitioner may lose some control over the proceeding if a lead counsel is appointed or if the procedure requires a consensus or at least the joint involvement of other parties; and
- Once into coordination, a party may not be able to get out, which may complicate settlement efforts by increasing the number of interests included as parties.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.15 2. Motion in Trial Court

In most instances, all plaintiffs or all defendants in an action that they seek to have coordinated with actions pending in other courts join to petition the Chief Justice directly for appointment of a coordination motion judge. CCP §404. Occasionally, multiple parties on a side in an action cannot agree to join in a petition for coordination. In that event, a preliminary motion must be made to the presiding judge in the trial court for permission to submit a petition. CCP §404; Cal Rules of Ct 3.520(b)(1). The motion must be supported by a declaration stating the facts that show that the actions are complex, as defined by Cal Rules of Ct 3.400-3.403 and 3.751, and meet the standards for coordination of CCP §404.1. CCP §404. See §44.9.

The motion is made in the manner provided by law for motions in civil actions generally. Cal Rules of Ct 3.520(a). Requirements for motion papers are found in CCP §1005 and Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110-3.1115. On noticed motions generally, see chap 12. To provide sufficient time for a party to submit the petition for coordination, the motion may include a request for a stay (for a reasonable time not to exceed 30 court or calendar days) of all related actions pending in that court. Cal Rules of Ct 3.520(b)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.16 3. Contents of Petition

The petition for coordination and supporting documents must list the parties to all included actions and their attorneys, describe the status of each included action, and set out facts sufficient to establish the appropriateness of coordination. Cal Rules of Ct 3.521(a)(2), (6)-(7).

If the plaintiff is the party submitting the petition for coordination, the petition must include a statement of whether counsel has served the summons and complaint on all parties in all included actions in which the attorney has appeared. Cal Rules of Ct 3.521(a)(3).

If any other actions pending in different courts and sharing a common question of fact or law are known to the petitioner but not included in the petition, reasons must be given for not including them. If the petitioner knows of no other such actions, the petition must include a statement that that the petitioner knows of no other actions sharing a common question of fact or law. Cal Rules of Ct 3.521(a)(5).

Facts must be set out to support any request that a particular site be selected for the hearing on the petition. Cal Rules of Ct 3.521(a)(8).

A petition for coordination may include an application for an order staying proceedings in any action being considered for, or affecting an action being considered for, coordination. CCP §404.5; Cal Rules of Ct 3.515(a).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The court will look for the basic information it needs about the included actions and parties. The central issue is whether coordination is appropriate, based on the statutory standards (see §§44.7-44.9). Counsel should not include material that is irrelevant to that issue, e.g., argument on the merits of an included action.

For guidance on how a court might evaluate a petition for coordination, see Pesses v Superior Court (1980) 107 CA3d 117, 165 CR 680. Although that case addresses issues of remand and transfer, the factors evaluated there must also be considered in ruling on a petition for coordination.

For the complete list of items required to be included in the petition and supporting documents, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.521. For form of petition for coordination, see §44.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.17 4. Notice of Submission of Coordination Petition

The notice of submission of a petition for coordination identifies the attorney for the petitioner and the included action to which the petitioner is a party and provides notice of the time for submitting and serving any written opposition to the petition before the hearing date. Cal Rules of Ct 3.522.

NOTE: California Rules of Court 3.522 says a notice of submission must state that any written opposition to the petition must be submitted and served at least 9 court days before the hearing date; previously, the rule was 10 calendar days. The change to 9 court days conforms Cal Rules of Ct 3.522 with Cal Rules of Ct 3.513 and 3.525-3.526, which all provide that any papers in opposition or support of the petition must be filed at least 9 court days before the hearing.

For the complete list of items required to be included in the notice, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.522. For form of notice of submission of petition for coordination, see §44.46.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.18 5. Filing and Service of Documents

A notice of submission of petition for coordination and a copy of the petition for coordination must be filed in each included action. Cal Rules of Ct 3.522.

A copy of the notice of submission of petition for coordination filed in each included action and a copy of the petition for coordination and of the supporting documents must be served on each party appearing in the included action. Cal Rules of Ct 3.523.

The following items must be submitted to the Chief Justice:

- The original and one copy of the petition for coordination, with a copy of each notice of submission of petition for coordination attached to the original and to the copy of the petition. Cal Rules of Ct 3.521(a), 3.522, 3.511.
- Proof of filing of a copy of the petition for coordination and a notice of submission of petition for coordination in each included action within 5 court days after submission. Cal Rules of Ct 3.521(b), 3.522. The requirement may be met by a single inclusive declaration.
- Proof of prior service on each party appearing in each included action of copies of (a) the notice of submission of petition for coordination filed in the action, (b) the petition for coordination, and (c) the supporting documents within 5 court days after submission. Cal Rules of Ct 3.521(b), 3.523.

All papers to be submitted to the Chief Justice must be transmitted to the San Francisco office of the Judicial Council. Cal Rules of Ct 3.511. The address is:

Chief Justice of California
Chairperson, Judicial Council
455 Golden Gate Avenue
San Francisco, CA 94102-3660

Service and proof of service of papers are made in the manner provided for civil actions generally. Cal Rules of Ct 3.510. On service and proof of service of papers generally, see chap 18.

B. Proceedings After Petition Submitted

§44.19 1. Order Assigning Coordination Motion Judge

On receipt of a petition for coordination, the Chief Justice may assign a coordination motion judge or may authorize the presiding judge of a court to assign the matter in the same manner as in other civil actions. CCP §404. It is not the practice of the Chief Justice or the coordination attorney (see Note in §44.5) to evaluate the formal adequacy of the petition.

The order assigning the coordination motion judge includes a special title and number to be used in subsequent papers and specifies a court address for transmission of all papers to be submitted to the coordination motion judge. Cal Rules of Ct 3.524(a), 3.550(c).

The petitioner must serve a copy of the order on each party appearing in an included action and send it to each court in which an included action is pending for filing in the action. Cal Rules of Ct 3.524(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.20 a. Stay of Proceedings

In the absence of a stay order, an order appointing a coordination motion judge automatically stays the trial and entry of judgment in any included action in which the trial has not yet commenced, but does not stay pretrial or discovery proceedings. Cal Rules of Ct 3.515(i). If a broader stay is desired, it may be sought by an application included with the petition for coordination or by a separate application to the coordination motion judge at any time before a determination on the petition. As a practical matter, the automatic stay appears to adequately cover most pretrial situations, and broader stays are rarely sought.

While the stay is in effect, the 5-year period for bringing an action for trial is tolled. Cal Rules of Ct 3.515(j). See CCP §583.310. But the 5-year period is tolled only when the petition for coordination has been granted because that is when the automatic stay becomes effective. The 5-year period is not tolled while the petition for coordination is pending. Gordon's Cabinet Shop v State Compensation Ins. Fund (1999) 74 CA4th 33, 87 CR2d 541.

On stay orders in coordination proceedings generally, see CCP §404.5; Cal Rules of Ct 3.515. For form of petition including application for stay order, see §44.44. For form of separate application for stay order, see §44.47. For form of statement in opposition to petition for coordination, including opposition to stay order, see §44.49. For form of separate statement in opposition to application for stay order, see §44.48.

§44.21 b. Peremptory Challenge of Coordination Motion Judge

A motion challenging an assigned judge under CCP §170.6 must be submitted to the assigned judge in writing within 20 days after service of the order of the specific assignment. Cal Rules of Ct 3.516; Stone v Superior Court (1994) 25 CA4th 1144, 31 CR2d 56. Because the coordination statutes provide for assignment of a coordination motion judge and a coordination trial judge, and the rules contemplate that these assignments may be of two different judges, the term "assigned judge" in Rule 3.516 means the judge assigned for the particular purpose. Stone v Superior Court, supra (motion filed within 20 days after assignment of coordination motion judge as coordinating trial judge timely).

A party that successfully challenges a summary judgment ruling on appeal may then exercise a peremptory challenge of the trial judge, notwithstanding the 20-day limitation of Cal Rules of Ct 3.516. Jane Doe 8015 v Superior Court (2007) 148 CA4th 489, 55 CR3d 708. For purposes of applying CCP §170.6, all plaintiffs or similar parties in the included actions constitute a side and all defendants or similar parties constitute a side. Cal Rules of Ct 3.516. Except for a successful appellant after appeal, each group is limited to one such motion. CCP §170.6(a)(3).

A motion under §170.6 challenging the coordination judge is not made untimely by the fact that the judge had previously ruled on issues in one or more of the cases before they were coordinated. Farmers Ins. Exch. v Superior Court (1992) 10 CA4th 1509, 13 CR2d 449 (three cases in Contra Costa consolidated with one in Los Angeles). Nor is the motion precluded by any precoordination challenges made by a party on a side, because Cal Rules of Ct 3.516 takes effect only on the filing of a petition for coordination. Philip Morris Inc. v Superior Court (1999) 71 CA4th 116, 83 CR2d 671.

§44.22 2. Responding to Petition

Any party to an included action may serve and submit a memorandum and declarations in opposition to or in support of a petition for coordination at least 9 court days before the hearing for coordination. Cal Rules of Ct 3.525; Cal Rules of Ct 3.526; Cal Rules of Ct 3.513.

Because general motion practice applies to coordination proceedings (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.504), it is necessary to establish the factual basis for any ruling sought. Consequently, if other parties have not established that basis, and assuming that the ruling is important to the client, the attorney should respond to the petition for coordination.

For form of statement in opposition to petition, see §44.49. For form of statement in support of petition, see §44.50.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.23 3. Summary Denial of Petition

The imminence of a trial in any action otherwise appropriate for coordination may be a ground for summary denial of a petition for coordination in whole or in part. Cal Rules of Ct 3.521(d).

§44.25 b. Notice of Hearing

After the coordination judge assigns a hearing date for a petition for coordination, the petitioner must serve notice of the hearing on each party appearing in an included action. Cal Rules of Ct 3.527(a). The coordination motion judge also determines whether the petitioner has appropriately served the required documents regarding the proceeding on all parties entitled to them. If any party entitled to such service has not been appropriately served, the judge orders the petitioner to effect prompt service on the party. Cal Rules of Ct 3.527(a).

No oral testimony may be presented at the hearing on the petition unless permitted by the coordination motion judge to resolve factual issues shown by the declarations to be in dispute. §44.29 5. Filing and Service of Order

The petitioner must file a copy of the coordination motion judge's order granting or denying the petition for coordination in each included action, and serve a copy of the order on each party appearing in an included action. Cal Rules of Ct 3.529(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

6. When Petition Granted

§44.30 a. Continuing Authority of Coordination Motion Judge

After a petition for coordination is granted and before a coordination trial judge is assigned, the coordination motion judge may, for good cause, make such orders as the ends of justice may require, e.g., on showing of an urgent need for judicial action to preserve the rights of a party pending assignment of a coordination trial judge. Cal Rules of Ct 3.529(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.31 b. Stay of Further Proceedings

When an order granting coordination is filed in an included action, all further proceedings in that action are automatically stayed, except as directed by the coordination motion judge. Cal Rules of Ct 3.529(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.32 c. Designation of Appellate Court

When granting the petition, the judge assigned under CCP §404 designates the court having appellate jurisdiction if the coordinated actions are within the jurisdiction of more than one reviewing court. CCP §404.2.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.33 7. Denial of Petition in Whole or in Part

The coordination motion judge may deny the petition for coordination in whole or deny it only with respect to particular included actions or severable claims within included actions. The original trial court continues to exercise jurisdiction over any severable claim that has not been ordered coordinated. Cal Rules of Ct 3.529(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.34 8. Review by Writ

Within 20 days after service of a written notice of entry of an order granting or denying coordination, any party may petition, to any reviewing court having jurisdiction under the rules applicable to civil actions generally, for a writ of mandate. CCP §404.6; Cal Rules of Ct 3.505. See generally Lautrup, Inc. v Trans-West Discount Corp. (1976) 64 CA3d 316, 134 CR 348. Before the expiration of the 20-day period, the trial court may, for good cause, extend the time for one additional period not to exceed 10 days. CCP §404.6.

C. Pretrial Proceedings

§44.35 1. Appointment of Coordination Trial Judge

After coordination is ordered, the Chief Justice either assigns a coordination trial judge or authorizes the presiding judge of a court to assign the matter in the same manner as assignments are made in other civil cases. CCP §404.3. The assigned judge may exercise all the powers over each coordinated action of a judge of the court in which the action was pending. The petitioner must file a copy of the assignment order in each coordinated action and send a copy to each party in the action. CCP §404.3; Cal Rules of Ct 3.540.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.36 2. Peremptory Challenge of Coordination Trial Judge

The rules for a motion challenging a coordination trial judge under CCP §170.6 are the same as those for a motion challenging a coordination motion judge. See §44.21.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.37 3. Preliminary Trial Conference

The coordination trial judge must hold a preliminary trial conference within 45 days after his or her assignment. All counsel and unrepresented parties must attend, prepared to discuss all matters specified in the order setting the conference. Counsel may serve and submit a proposed agenda and a proposed order covering such matters of procedure and discovery as may be appropriate. Cal Rules of Ct 3.541(a). The coordination trial judge manages all steps of pretrial, discovery, and trial proceedings to expedite the determination of the coordinated actions. Cal Rules of Ct 3.541(b).

Counsel preparing a proposed agenda or proposed order for the preliminary trial conference should consult both Cal Rules of Ct 3.541(a), which relates specifically to actions the coordination trial judge may take at the conference, and 3.541(b), which indicates other actions the judge might take at any time. As a practical matter, however, proposed agendas and orders are rarely submitted, except in very large proceedings. For form of proposed agenda, see §44.51. For form of proposed order, see §44.52.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.38 4. Remand of Action or Claim

The coordination trial judge may remand any coordinated action or any severable claim or issue in a coordinated action to the court in which the action was pending when coordination was ordered. The remand may be ordered on the stipulation of all parties to the coordination proceeding or on the basis of evidence received at a hearing ordered on the court's own motion or that of any party to any coordinated action. Cal Rules of Ct 3.542.

Remand may be ordered over the objection of any party, however, only if the evidence demonstrates a material change in circumstances relevant to the criteria for coordination set out in CCP §404.1 (see §44.9). Cal Rules of Ct 13.542. An order for remand, unlike an order for transfer (see §44.39), removes the action, claim, or issue from the coordination proceeding. Cal Rules of Ct 3.501(15). On remand and transfer in coordination proceedings generally, see Pesses v Superior Court (1980) 107 CA3d 117, 165 CR 680. For form of motion for remand, see §44.53.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.39 5. Transfer of Action or Claim

The coordination trial judge may transfer any coordinated action or any severable claim in a coordinated action from the court in which it is pending to another court for a specific purpose or for all purposes. The transfer may be ordered on the court's own motion or that of any party to any coordinated action. Transfer may be ordered over the objection of any party, however, only if a hearing is held, on 10 days' written notice served on all parties to the action, at which specified factors are considered by the court. Cal Rules of Ct 3.543(b). An order for transfer, unlike an order for remand (see §44.38), does not remove the action or claim from the coordination proceeding. Cal Rules of Ct 3.501(19). On remand and transfer in coordination proceedings generally, see Pesses v Superior Court (1980) 107 CA3d 117, 165 CR 680. For form of motion for transfer, see §44.54.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.40 6. Add-on Cases

A request to coordinate an "add-on case" (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.501(2)) with the actions previously ordered coordinated is submitted to the coordination trial judge. The procedures are similar to those for the initial petition for coordination. CCP §404.4; Cal Rules of Ct 3.544. If no party files a notice of opposition within 10 days after the services of a request to add-on a case, the judge may enter an order granting or denying the request without a hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.544(b), (d). For form of petition to coordinate add-on case, see §44.55.

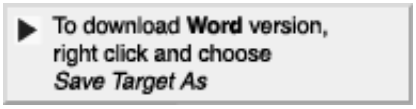
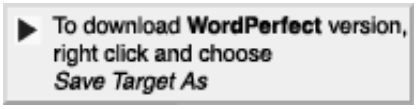
§44.41 V. CHECKLIST: PROCEDURE FOR PETITION FOR COORDINATION IN COMPLEX CASES





Petitioner's Initial Steps

Petitioning Party

NOTE: If all plaintiffs or all defendants in an action do not petition for coordination, a party must make a preliminary motion under CCP §404 to the presiding judge of the court for permission to submit its petition for coordination to the Chairperson of the Judicial Council (i.e., the Chief Justice). Cal Rules of Ct 3.520-4.523. See §44.15.

- Prepare petition for coordination, declaration(s), and supporting memorandum
- For each included action, prepare notice of submission of petition for coordination
- File notice of submission and copy of petition for coordination in each included action
- Serve copy of notice of submission filed in each included action, and copy of petition for coordination and supporting documents, on each party appearing in that action
- Submit required items to the Chief Justice (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.511)
- Original and one copy of petition for coordination, with copy of each notice of submission attached to original and copy of petition
- Proof of filing of copy of petition for coordination and notice of submission in each included action
- Proof of service on each party appearing in each included action of copy of notice of submission filed in the action, and copy of petition for coordination and supporting documents

Proceedings After Submission of Petition for Coordination

Petitioning Party

- Serve notice of hearing date to each party appearing in an included action (Cal Rules of Ct 3.527)

If stay order requested in petition for coordination:

- Attend hearing on stay request if held

If stay order desired but not requested in petition for coordination:

- Prepare, serve, and file application for stay order, declaration(s), and supporting memorandum (Cal Rules of Ct 3.515)
- Attend hearing on stay request if held

If stay order not desired:

- Submit peremptory challenge of coordination motion judge within 20 days of assignment if appropriate (Cal Rules of Ct 3.516, CCP §170.6)
- Attend hearing on petition for coordination if held

If petition for coordination granted or denied:

- Promptly file the order in each included action and serve it on each party appearing in an included action (Cal Rules of Ct 3.529)

If petition for coordination denied in whole or in part and appellate review desired:

- Petition for writ of mandate within 20 days after service of notice of entry of order (CCP §404.6)

When coordination trial judge assigned in complex coordinated action:

- File the assignment order in each coordinated action and serve it on each party appearing in each action (Cal Rules of Ct 3.540)

Responding Party

If stay order requested by petitioner and responding party is opposed:

- Prepare, serve, and file papers in opposition at least nine court days before hearing date (Cal Rules of Ct 3.513, 3.525)
- Attend hearing on stay request if held

If responding party desires stay order not specifically requested by petitioner:

- Prepare, serve, and file application for stay order, declaration(s), and memorandum (Cal Rules of Ct 3.515)
- Attend hearing on stay request if held

If stay order not desired:

- Submit peremptory challenge of coordination motion judge within 20 days, if appropriate (Cal Rules of Ct 3.516; CCP §170.6)
- Prepare, serve, and file statement in opposition to petition for coordination or statement in support of petition for coordination and declaration(s) and memorandum at least 9 court days before hearing date (Cal Rules of Ct 3.513, 3.525)
- Attend hearing on petition for coordination if held

If appellate review of decision on petition for coordination desired:

- Petition for writ of mandate within 20 days after service of notice of entry of order (CCP §404.6)

Pretrial Proceedings After Coordination Ordered

Any Party

- Submit peremptory challenge of coordination trial judge within 20 days, if appropriate (Cal Rules of Ct 3.516; CCP §170.6)
- Serve and submit proposed agenda and proposed form of order for preliminary trial conference
- Seek remand of coordinated action or severable claim or issue, if desired (Cal Rules of Ct 3.542)
- Seek transfer of coordinated action or severable claim, if desired (Cal Rules of Ct 3.543)
- Request the coordination of add-on cases, if any (Cal Rules of Ct 3.544)

Copies: Original (file with court clerk); ___ copies for service (one for each party to each action and for each court in which an action is pending); ___ office copies.

Comment: California Rules of Court 3.522 provides that a notice of submission must state that any written opposition to the petition must be filed and served at least 9 calendar days before the hearing date. California Rules of Court 3.513, 3.522, and 3.525-3.526 all require that any papers in opposition or support of the petition must be filed at least 9 calendar days before the hearing. Thus, the deadline to be used in any notice of submission is now uniform. See §44.17.

The motion must be supported by a declaration stating facts that show that the actions are not complex and meet the standards specified in CCP §404.1. The declaration must also state facts showing that the moving party has made good faith efforts to get all parties to the actions to agree to the transfer, and notified all parties that they must disclose to the court any information they may have about other motions requesting transfer that would be affected by granting of the motion. See §44.11.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On the many specific details required, see chap 11 and the sample form in §11.35. On when preprinted Judicial Council forms must or may be filed with the court, see Cal Rules of Ct 1.30-1.44 and 2.131-2.134 and the discussion in §11.27.

1. Petitioner _ _[name]_ _, requests that the Chief Justice assign a judge to determine whether coordination of this action with the actions listed in the attached declaration(s) is appropriate.

2. This petition is submitted under Code of Civil Procedure §404 on the following grounds set forth in Code of Civil Procedure §404.1 and by California Rules of Court 3.400-3.403, 3.751: _ _[Specify applicable grounds]_ _.

[Add if petitioner is a plaintiff]

[3]. Petitioner's attorneys in this action have served the summons and complaint in this action on all parties in all included actions in which they have appeared.

[Add if not all plaintiffs or all defendants are joining in petition]

3. The order granting the petitioner's motion under Code of Civil Procedure §404 for permission to submit this petition to the Chief Justice, which was signed by Presiding Judge _ _[name]_ _ of this court on _ _[date]_ _, is attached.

[Add if stay order is sought]

vs	)	NOTICE OF SUBMISSION OF PETITION FOR COORDINATION
_ _[Name(s)]_ _, Defendant(s)	)

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that on _ _[date]_ _, a petition for coordination was submitted by _ _[name of party]_ _ through counsel, whose name, address, and telephone number appear above, to the Chief Justice, requesting assignment of a judge to determine whether coordination of _ _[specify court, title, and number of action that is vehicle for coordination]_ _ with this action and specified other actions is appropriate.

Any party who intends to oppose the petition for coordination must serve and submit written opposition to the petition at least 9 calendar days before the hearing date.

A copy of the petition for coordination and supporting documents is attached.

Copies: Original (file with clerk of court in which particular included action is pending); ___ copies for service (one for each other party appearing in included action); ___ copies for filing (two copies for Chief Justice); ___ office copies.

Comment: California Rules of Court 3.522 provides that a notice of submission must state that any written opposition to the petition must be filed and served at least 9 calendar days before the hearing date. California Rules of Court 3.513, 3.522, and 3.525-3.526 all require that any papers in opposition or support of the petition must be filed at least 9 calendar days before the hearing. Thus, the deadline to be used in any notice of submission is now uniform. See §44.17 (notice of submission of petition for coordination). A separate notice of submission of petition for coordination is prepared for each included action and contains the court, title, and number of the included action.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On the many specific details required, see chap 11 and the sample form in §11.35. On when preprinted Judicial Council forms must or may be filed with the court, see Cal Rules of Ct 1.30-1.44 and 2.131-2.134 and the discussion in §11.27.

Copies: Original (file with coordination motion judge); ___ copies for service (one for each other party appearing in each included action and in any other action for which stay is sought); one copy for transmittal to Chief Justice; ___ office copies.

Comment: See §44.20 (stay of proceedings). If the coordination motion judge is known, the court in the caption will be the judge's court. If the judge is not known, the caption may be that of the case in which the petitioner is a party and the original and one copy of the application will be submitted to the Chief Justice. When the stay is sought by the party submitting the petition for coordination, the request may be included in the petition, making a separate application unnecessary. For form of petition including application for stay order, see §44.44.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On the many specific details required, see chap 11 and the sample form in §11.35. Comment: See §44.20 (stay of proceedings). If the coordination motion judge is known, the court in the caption will be the judge's court. If the judge is not known, the caption may be that of the case in which the person requesting the stay is a party and the original and one copy of the statement in opposition will be submitted to the Chief Justice. There is no requirement that the statement opposing a stay request be set forth separately from the response to the petition for coordination. For form of statement opposing petition for coordination, including opposition to stay order, see §44.49. Because the statement opposing a stay request should be submitted as soon as possible, it is generally not advisable to wait until it can be submitted as part of the response to the petition for coordination.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On the many specific details

Copies: Original (file with coordination motion judge); ___ copies for service (one copy for each party appearing in each included action and in any other action for which stay is opposed); one copy for transmittal to Chief Justice; ___ office copies.

Comment: See §44.22 (responding to petition). If the coordination motion judge is known, the court in the caption will be the judge's court. If the judge is not known, the caption may be that of the case in which the person petitioning for coordination is a party and the original and one copy of the statement in opposition will be submitted to the Chief Justice. Other possible grounds for opposition to a petition for coordination are that the included actions do not share a common question of fact or law (see CCP §404), the included actions are not pending in different courts (see CCP §404), and trial in an included action is imminent (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.521(d)). Because the opposition to a stay request should be submitted as soon as possible, it is generally not advisable to wait until it can be submitted as part of a response to the petition for coordination. Consequently, it is preferable in most instances to submit a separate statement opposing an application for a stay order. For form of statement opposing application for stay order, see §44.48.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. I. INTRODUCTION

§45.1 A. Scope of Chapter

Alternative dispute resolution (ADR) is a term that describes a variety of mechanisms that may be used to resolve conflicts other than by litigating the issues in a full trial. These mechanisms may be considered when drafting agreements before a dispute arises (see §§45.4-45.6), or they may be used after a dispute arises by agreement of the parties (see §45.7). A variety of mechanisms may be used in any given case on a step-by-step basis in an attempt to reach a settlement.

NOTE: For discussion of available ADR processes and selecting the appropriate ADR process for particular cases, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California, chap 1 (Cal CEB 2005). The remaining sections of the chapter refer to this publication as Effective Use of ADR.

§45.2 B. Governing Law

Arbitration by contractual agreement is generally governed by CCP §§1280-1294.2. Judicial arbitration is governed by CCP §§1141.10-1141.31 and is discussed in chap 37. Mediation administered through court-connected programs is governed by CCP §§1775-1775.15; see also Cal Rules of Ct 3.850-3.865, 3.890-3.898.

NOTE: For private mediations, many neutrals contractually bind themselves to certain standards of conduct and ethical rules as a prerequisite to obtaining malpractice insurance or membership in an ADR organization. Such rules embody core values universally recognized in the mediation community for assisting parties to resolve disputes. Before selecting a mediator in a case in which the California court rules are not operative, counsel should ask prospective neutrals for information about the set of guidelines they use for their mediations.

A person serving as a neutral arbitrator under an arbitration agreement must comply with the Ethics Standards for Neutral Arbitrators in Contractual Arbitration adopted by the Judicial Council under CCP §1281.85. The standards appear in Cal Rules of Ct, Title 10 and are available on the Judicial Council's website at www.courtinfo.ca.gov. For discussion of ethics in contractual arbitration, see Effective Use of ADR, chap 10. On ethics in mediation, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.850-3.865 and Effective Use of ADR, chap 8.

The ethics standards for arbitrators in the judicial arbitration program are set out in CCP §1141.18(d), Cal Rules of Ct 3.816, and the California Code of Judicial Ethics (see Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 6(D)). See Effective Use of ADR §§11.55-11.58.

§45.3 II. ADVANTAGES AND LIMITATIONS

The demand for alternatives to litigation has increased rapidly to avoid trial delay, substantial expenses in the pretrial battle, and emotional stress. Alternative dispute resolution (ADR) is a broad term describing an entire spectrum of conflict management mechanisms used to attempt to resolve disputes efficiently, effectively, and inexpensively. The mechanisms may be viewed as being on a continuum from informal negotiations between the parties to advisory third party involvement to formal, binding adjudicatory hearings or abbreviated jury trials.

Most cases pass through some form of ADR, whether it is a hearing before a court-appointed discovery referee, a court-encouraged mediation, or a binding arbitration. In fact, when the complaint is filed, each court must make available to the plaintiff an ADR information package, including information on the potential advantages and disadvantages of ADR and descriptions of the principal ADR processes. Cal Rules of Ct 3.221.

NOTE: The courts are required to consider whether to assign the case to an ADR process at the initial case management conference (which must be held within 180 days of filing the complaint (Cal Rules of Ct 3.721)). If all parties agree to use an ADR process, they must jointly complete and file the ADR stipulation form provided under Cal Rules of Ct 3.221. Cal Rules of Ct 3.726.

Advantages. The use of alternative dispute mechanisms has many advantages. For example, alternative dispute mechanisms can:

- Provide forums that are creative and flexible, yet structured and effective;
- Greatly reduce the cost and time of resolving a dispute;
- Provide convenience for the participants, e.g., the parties and counsel can agree on the hearing officer and choose the time, place, and format of the ADR mechanism they select;
- Minimize the emotional toll exacted by the litigation process by giving the parties greater control over the process and resolution of their dispute; and
- Anticipate as well as resolve disputes. Attorneys, as dispute resolution consultants, can assist clients in creating individualized mechanisms to resolve future disputes by including dispute resolution provisions in contracts or establishing internal grievance or complaint procedures. See Madden, What Every Litigator Should Know About ADR, 21 CEB Civ Litigation Rep (Sept. 1999).

Limitations. Although the benefits of ADR mechanisms are substantial, some questions have been raised about whether use of ADR may actually increase the number of disputes in which third-party help is sought. Its very success in reducing the cost of resolving conflicts could encourage an increase in disputes brought into ADR forums.

There is also some concern that separate justice systems will develop for the rich and the poor with the increased use of ADR mechanisms. The hourly rate for negotiators, mediators, or hearing officers may be prohibitive for poorer litigants. See Raven, Alternative Dispute Resolution: Expanding Opportunities, 43 Arb J 44, 47 (June 1988).

Further, although most clients are amenable to some alternative to full-scale litigation, some clients are so entrenched in their dispute that they will not be satisfied with anything less than an all-out litigation battle. In some situations, a party may conclude that delaying resolution of the problem is advantageous or may refuse to relinquish documents or records that are crucial to a fair resolution. In such cases, the court system and court enforced discovery may be the only way for the other party to move the matter forward or obtain pertinent records and documents. See Madden, What Every Litigator Should Know About ADR, 21 CEB Civ Litigation Rep (Sept. 1999).

Finally, as one commentator has observed, ADR procedures, "the much praised 'simple/fast/cheap' option to trial, are rapidly becoming 'complex/slow/expensive'" with developments in ADR law adding "layers of complexity to the ADR systems." See Madden, ADR 2002: From "Simple/Fast/Cheap" to "Complex/Slow/Expensive"?, 24 CEB Civ Litigation Rep (Nov. 2002).

III. WHEN TO CONSIDER ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

§45.4 A. Before a Dispute Arises

Dispute resolution is rarely considered at the most opportune time: before a dispute arises. Yet a minimal amount of advance planning for future disputes can save the client money, time, and unnecessary distress in litigating those disputes if they arise.

§45.5 1. Contracts

The most common opportunity an attorney has to establish ADR mechanisms for a client is in drafting contracts. Attorneys routinely incorporate standard arbitration clauses into their clients' contracts, but ADR is much more than arbitration. For example, written contracts may include provisions requiring the parties to mediate before filing litigation or an arbitration proceeding. The contract may condition recovery of attorney fees by the prevailing party in subsequent litigation or arbitration on participation in pre-suit mediation. Courts will enforce this contractual provision. See Frei v Davey (2004) 124 CA4th 1506, 22 CR3d 429 (provision in standard residential form purchase agreement that barred prevailing party from recovering attorney fees if he or she refused request to mediate was enforceable). On contractually mandated mediation, see Effective Use of ADR §5.18.

A contract providing for a number of mandatory steps before arbitration, such as party-only negotiation and third-party mediation, will increase the chances of an early settlement. See §45.65 for suggested provision mandating prearbitration attempts to settle the dispute. For drafting considerations, see §45.24.

§45.6 2. Internal Grievance Procedures

In the context of the employment relationship, both management and employees can benefit financially and emotionally from carefully conceived internal grievance procedures. Because employee grievances are emotionally charged, some companies find that mediation is the most effective mechanism for resolving such disputes. Other companies prefer a more adjudicatory setting and choose arbitration, while yet others combine the two. On drafting internal grievance procedures, see Advising California Employers and Employees §§10.21-10.22 (Cal CEB 2005).

§45.7 B. After a Dispute Arises

If a dispute arises that is not subject to a contractual agreement containing a dispute resolution clause or an employment grievance procedure, the attorney must decide whether the case is likely to settle through an ADR mechanism. There are very few cases in which litigation through trial is likely to be the only way of resolving the issues. For example, if there is no existing recognized cause of action but the attorney decides that there is an arguable cause of action, a trial may be the only way to test the new theory.

Even in the cases least likely to settle, however, exploration of possible settlement by use of one or more of the ADR mechanisms may help narrow the issues or help the parties and attorneys develop a relationship that will produce a less hostile atmosphere during litigation.

An attorney who decides that the case will eventually settle must then decide when it is in the client's best interest to settle and what mechanisms are most likely to help the parties reach a settlement. On selecting the appropriate ADR mechanism and when to do so, see Effective Use of ADR §§1.14-1.19.

IV. DISCUSSING ADR WITH CLIENT AND OPPOSING COUNSEL

§45.8 A. Client

Counsel should give the client a realistic projection of the time and cost savings, as well as other advantages, of using ADR mechanisms. First, the attorney should map out the probable course of litigation, including the many paths discovery might take. It is important to describe the risks of protracted litigation, including the time and cost of interrogatories, depositions, requests for documents, requests for admissions, pretrial motions, settlement conferences, and the trial.

Next, the attorney should give the client a realistic and clear assessment of the likelihood of settling without trial. The attorney should also inform the client of the potential costs of a case that may take 5 years to litigate and of any projected increase or decrease in the settlement value of the case over time.

Finally, the attorney should discuss with the client the potential frustration and emotional stress involved in the lengthy process of litigation.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/45 Alternative Dispute Resolution/§45.9 B. Opposing Counsel

§45.9 B. Opposing Counsel

Convincing the opposition to agree on ADR may be challenging. Attorneys may resist for many reasons, including their own unfamiliarity with ADR options and procedures, reluctance to concede any weakness in their case, economic pressures, or a misunderstanding of the process. For tips on negotiating successfully with opposing counsel, see Effective Use of ADR, chap 3.

PRACTICE TIP: If opposing counsel seems unfamiliar with the ADR process you are suggesting, present a summary of how the process works and how it can benefit the parties.

The attorney proposing ADR should be familiar with the providers of alternative dispute resolution services in the geographic area where the matter will be pursued. It is important to ascertain whether a psychologist, attorney, retired judge, or a professional from the field in which the dispute arose would be the most appropriate third party to hear the case. It will be much easier to obtain opposing counsel's cooperation if he or she is presented with a list of highly respected mediators, arbitrators, and judges from which to choose. On choosing a mediator, see §45.16; Effective Use of ADR §§5.20-5.22. On selecting an arbitrator, see §45.39; Effective Use of ADR §§9.29, 9.68.

V. METHODS OF ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

§45.10 A. Negotiation

At some point in pretrial litigation, a judge will compel the parties to discuss settlement, at which time they are likely to have a substantial emotional and financial investment in the conflict. In many cases, an attorney can provide the client an invaluable service by proposing and facilitating negotiation at an early stage of the dispute. For more information on negotiation and case settlement, see chap 46.

PRACTICE TIP: Before beginning to negotiate, counsel should think about the client's purpose in settling. Is it to right a wrong? To avoid litigation at whatever expense? To protect the client's reputation or ensure confidentiality? Is it a combination of purposes? There are many valid reasons to settle a case, but they should be pursued only after counsel and client have considered a more fundamental purpose. On meeting with the client and preparing for negotiation, see Effective Use of ADR, chap 2.

1. Initial Process

§45.11 a. The Opening

Whether by an informal letter or a more formal face-to-face meeting, the beginning of a settlement negotiation, or the "opening," can be critical to its success. The opening is an opportunity to set a positive, productive tone for the remainder of the discussion. Beyond that, the opening can be used to clarify assumptions and expectations, build rapport, and lend structure to the discussion. For discussion on opening a negotiation, see Effective Use of ADR §§3.7-3.33.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/45 Alternative Dispute Resolution/§45.12 b. Information Exchange

§45.12 b. Information Exchange

Information exchanged—or not exchanged—in the negotiation process will affect the result obtained for the client. Exchanging information has the benefit of refining counsel's understanding of the parties' dispute and their constraints, interests, and aspirations for settlement.

NOTE: Revealing information is just as important as obtaining it for purposes of identifying value-creating opportunities. Each side has different sets of information from their respective clients, and one side cannot be expected to give the other side much information about what is important to them without reciprocal information offered in return.

For a thorough discussion on exchanging information during the negotiation process, see Effective Use of ADR §§3.34-3.94.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Tactics

§45.13 a. Bargaining

Money is either the predominant component of a settlement or one of many components to a settlement package. Thus, at some point in the negotiation, attorneys must bargain about money or about other quantifiable settlement terms.

NOTE: In cases in which the parties value their ongoing relationship, it may be less important to wring out the most a of settlement for your client. Indeed, the opposite may be true, insofar as a generous offer or temperate demand may set the tone for an amicable resolution and, perhaps, for some needed healing between the disputants.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.14 b. Breaking Through Impasse

If negotiations break down, attorneys should use the leverage available to them to get them back on track. This may have clear advantages for the stronger party, but in most cases it simply raises the level of contentiousness and increases the chances of deadlock. The harder one pushes, the harder the other resists. One way to get out of this vicious cycle is to find a neutral, objective standard that can be used to evaluate each side's proposals. Examples of such benchmarks include reported jury verdicts, information about comparable settlements, or other neutral indicia such as fair market value or industry custom.

If other strategies fail, attorneys should consider soliciting the advice or judgment of a neutral third party. For example, a mediator can help facilitate a difficult settlement negotiation. A mediator or another attorney can give a neutral third-party opinion about the value of a case. On mediation, see §45.15; Effective Use of ADR, chaps 5-6. Finally, if counsel feel they need something stronger than a third-party opinion, they may submit the entire dispute, or perhaps only certain issues, to arbitration. By doing so, however, both sides agree to be bound by the decision of the arbitrator. On contractual arbitration, see §45.22; Effective Use of ADR, chaps 9, 11.

On problem-solving techniques for moving a negotiation process forward when it appears to be stalled, see Effective Use of ADR §§3.155-3.222.

§45.15 B. Mediation

> Mediation is the least intrusive form of third party involvement in a dispute. The mediator, in contrast to the judge or arbitrator, has no power to impose an outcome on disputing parties. Rather, the mediator's function is that of assisting the parties to reach their own agreement.

Goldberg, Sander & Rogers, Dispute Resolution p 91 (1999).

Mediation has become a widely accepted way of resolving disputes because it works. Mediators report that typically 85-95 percent of mediated cases result in a settlement, often with an investment of only one long day. On the advantages of choosing mediation, see Effective Use of ADR §5.2.

Most mediators use several types of communication models to assist in the resolution of a conflict, which include the following: joint sessions with all parties, attorneys, and any third parties (such as financial advisors); separate caucuses with only one side of a conflict; a combination of multiple joint sessions alternating with private caucuses; and telephonic or online sessions. Mediators often invite counsel to suggest at the premediation planning stage what types of mediation sessions they believe would be particularly helpful to their clients. On types of mediation sessions, see Effective Use of ADR §§5.8-5.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

1. Process

§45.16 a. Mediator Selection

Choosing a mediator is similar to retaining an expert witness; counsel should use the same practices of due diligence in recruiting mediators who will serve their clients' best interests. On choosing a mediator, see Effective Use of ADR §§5.20-5.22.

Mediators in California are not licensed by the state and a mediator need not be an attorney, licensed family counselor, doctor, or other regulated professional. In recognition of the important role mediators play in resolving so many cases, the Judicial Council promulgated ethical rules for mediators. Cal Rules of Ct 3.850-3.8698. These rules apply to all mediators who are selected from lists maintained by the court or who are recommended by a judge. For a discussion of ethics in mediation, see Effective Use of ADR, chap 8.

PRACTICE TIP: When selecting a mediator, ask colleagues for the names of mediators they recommend. Information about a particular mediator's style and experience is available through résumés on mediators' websites or by contacting ADR providers who offer lists and background information on mediators.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/45 Alternative Dispute Resolution/§45.17 b. Mediation Session

§45.17 b. Mediation Session

The opening stage of a mediation varies greatly from mediator to mediator and from case to case. After making a few short remarks, some mediators prefer to facilitate an opening dialogue among the participants. Other mediators meet only briefly, or not at all, in joint session, conferring separately at the start of the mediation with the parties and their attorneys, then convening in joint session to accomplish the tasks identified in the separate sessions. Attorneys have the opportunity to make opening remarks at the start of the mediation.

PRACTICE TIP: Many attorneys choose not to make an opening statement, relying instead on their written mediation statement (see Effective Use of ADR §§5.36-5.38). In most cases, however, it is advisable to take the opportunity to make some opening remarks, endeavoring both to affirm that any agreement must be in the client's best interest and to signal that the client is ready to explore settlement possibilities.

After opening presentations, counsel works with the mediator, either privately in separate caucuses or in joint session, to determine what information is important to obtain from, and to provide to, the other side so that all parties and their attorneys can understand the dispute sufficiently to allow resolution of the case. On the exchange of information in mediation, see Effective Use of ADR §§6.11-6.13.

After an initial exchange of information, the mediator usually helps the participants to identify the issues that need to be discussed to reach a settlement and to create an agenda for the mediation session. The participants are then able to identify possible solutions and to begin to engage in negotiations. On preparing for negotiation and the negotiation process, see Effective Use of ADR, chaps 2-3.

In most cases, a memorandum of understanding is written up and signed at the conclusion of the mediation, with the understanding that it will be followed by a more formal settlement agreement drafted by the attorneys and signed by the parties after the mediation. On drafting a memorandum of understanding, see Effective Use of ADR §6.42.

NOTE: All communications, negotiations, or settlement discussions by and between participants in the course of a mediation or mediation consultation must remain confidential. Evid C §1119(c); Foxgate Homeowners' Ass'n v Bramalea Cal., Inc. (2001) 26 C4th 1, 11, 108 CR2d 642 (mediator violated confidentiality rules by reporting to court about participant's misconduct during mediation session); Simmons v Ghaderi (2008) 44 C4th 570, 588, 80 CR3d 83 (no implied waiver of mediation confidentiality); Eisendrath v Superior Court (2003) 109 CA4th 351, 134 CR2d 716 (communications made during confidential mediation are not admissible in later action absent express waivers by parties). On mediation confidentiality, see Effective Use of ADR, chap 7; on the ethical rules for mediators, see Effective Use of ADR, chap 8.

For an in-depth look at the mediation process, see Effective Use of ADR, chap 6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.18 c. Preparation

Experienced litigators approach mediation with the same degree of care and thoroughness that they would give to preparing for a court appearance or for trial. Effective preparation includes client preparation, preparation of the mediation statement or "mediation brief," and attorney preparation (see Effective Use of ADR §§5.30-5.35, 5.36-5.38, and 5.39 respectively).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/45 Alternative Dispute Resolution/§45.19 d. Mediation Styles

§45.19 d. Mediation Styles

The means by which the mediator helps the parties resolve disputes varies according to the nature of the conflict, the personalities of the participants, and the complexity of the issues. The two main styles are facilitative mediation and evaluative mediation.

In facilitative mediation, a neutral with "process expertise" (often extensive formal training in the theory and practice of mediation) assists the parties in articulating their interests and communicating those interests to the other parties. The goal is for the parties to identify common ground and to find a mutually satisfying resolution (a "win-win" solution), which they negotiate for and among themselves.

Evaluative mediation is similar to facilitative mediation in that the mediator seeks to assist the parties in articulating their interests, identifying common ground, and reaching a mutually satisfying agreement. It differs in that the mediator may express opinions on the merits of the dispute or on how a party, the court, or a jury might view a particular fact or issue, or on the manner in which another party might react to a given settlement position.

NOTE: Most mediators, sometimes in the same mediation, use a hybrid form of styles, e.g., starting with a facilitative approach and becoming more evaluative when the parties have been unable to reach agreement and the mediator seeks to avoid or to overcome impasse.

For discussion of the various mediation styles, see Effective Use of ADR §5.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Types of Mediation

§45.20 a. Limited Mediation

Mediation can also be used for more limited functions in traditional litigation. A prime example is discovery. When both sides agree to minimize the expense of exchanging information, a mediator can assist in preparing a reasonable discovery plan. This strategy is particularly helpful in complex litigation involving multiple parties.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.21 b. Hybrid Mediation-Arbitration

In a combination mediation-arbitration, a mediator facilitates discussions to the point when all parties agree that they are at impasse, and then (by prior consent) makes a binding decision on the unresolved issues. It is also not unusual for the parties to agree at the end of a mediation that the mediator will step into the role of binding arbitrator to resolve the impasse. But see Effective Use of ADR §12.45 on dangers of this combination, which turn chiefly on the conflicts presented by the mediator's learning confidential information during private meetings with each side and the arbitrator's ethical obligation to refrain from ex parte communications with any party before rendering his or her decision. Note that the ethical rules for mediators in court-connected cases provide that a mediator must "exercise caution" before combining the mediation with any other ADR process (such as binding arbitration) and should do so only with the informed consent of the parties. Cal Rules of Ct 3.857(g).

PRACTICE TIP: In light of this ethical principle, before the mediator assumes the role of arbitrator, it is good practice for counsel to ask that the parties be provided with a written explanation of the problematic aspects of the neutral playing a double role in the same case and that the client be given an opportunity to agree in writing to a "med-arb" process. On ethics for mediators, see Effective Use of ADR, chap 8.

§45.22 C. Arbitration by Contractual Agreement

Many standardized agreements contain clauses mandating arbitration of disputes arising under the contract. Common examples are uninsured motorist provisions of automobile insurance policies, health insurance policies, collective bargaining agreements, and contracts with architects or other professional providers.

NOTE: Under California law, parties to a contract may agree to arbitrate most contract disputes and tort claims. Lewsadder v Mitchum, Jones & Templeton, Inc. (1973) 36 CA3d 255, 111 CR 405. However, there are some limits on the right to arbitrate that the parties should be aware of before drafting an arbitration provision. For example, arbitration provisions in contracts conveying real property must conform to certain requirements on the form of the provision. See CCP §1298. Further, as is true of other contracts, agreements to arbitrate will not be enforced if they are unconscionable or contrary to public policy. See Armendariz v Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc. (2000) 24 C4th 83, 99, 99 CR2d 745; CCP §1281. On unconscionability, see §45.28 and Effective Use of ADR §§9.48-9.50. For further discussion of grounds on which arbitration provisions may be subject to challenge, see Effective Use of ADR §§9.41-9.53.

Generally, the rules of law governing a contractual arbitration are contained in the arbitration agreement itself. See, e.g., Rifkind & Sterling, Inc. v Rifkind (1994) 28 CA4th 1282, 1292, 33 CR2d 828 (arbitration award is a private agreement governed by rules of the parties' own making or selection). Arbitration agreements are "valid, enforceable and irrevocable, save upon such grounds as exist for the revocation of any contract." CCP §1281. Thus, basic contract law applies to agreements to arbitrate, as it does to other agreements. See, e.g., Armendariz v Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc. (2000) 24 C4th 83, 98, 99 CR2d 745 (under California law, arbitration agreement may be invalidated only on grounds "as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract").

The statutory provisions governing enforcement of arbitration agreements, the conduct of arbitration proceedings, the enforcement of arbitration awards, and other matters are found in the California Arbitration Act (CCP §§1280-1294.2).

PRACTICE TIP: A specific type of arbitration agreement may be governed by special statutes rather than by the general arbitration provisions of CCP §§1280-1294.2. For example, CCP §1295 applies to medical malpractice cases, CCP §1296 applies to disputes involving public construction contracts, CCP §§1297.11-1297.17 apply to international commercial disputes, Ins C §11580.2 applies to uninsured motorist claims, and Bus & P C §7191 applies to residential construction disputes. In each case, either in drafting contracts that will include an arbitration clause or in reviewing such contracts, counsel should ascertain whether specific statutes would apply to the contractual arbitration in the contract. Appropriate alterations should then be made in light of the specific statutory provisions that would otherwise apply.

On ethics standards for arbitrators in contractual arbitration, see §45.51 and Effective Use of ADR, chap 10.

© The Regents of the University of California

1. Contractual Provisions

§45.23 a. General Clause

Most private agreements to arbitrate contain a standard arbitration clause, such as the following:

Any controversy or claim arising out of or relating to this contract, or the breach thereof, shall be resolved by binding arbitration. Any party to this agreement may have the award of the arbitrator entered as a judgment in any court that has jurisdiction.

For a sample agreement, see §45.65.

PRACTICE TIP: Carefully focus on exactly what is being submitted to arbitration. If the provision provides that "disputes arising under the contract" are to be arbitrated, then it may be that related torts will not be arbitrable. If the contract provides that all disputes "arising under or related to the contract" are to be arbitrated, then both tort and contract claims should be arbitrable. Generally, a clause providing for arbitration of disputes "relating to this agreement" is to be interpreted broadly and reaches every dispute between the parties with a significant relationship to the contract or with its origins in the contract. Simula, Inc. v Autoliv, Inc. (9th Cir 1999) 175 F3d 716. If the arbitration clause refers to a statutory scheme, the clause may be limited to causes of action within the scope of the statutes. Thompson v Toll Dublin, LLC (2008) 165 CA4th 1360, 1370, 81 CR3d 736. If certain disputes are expressly excluded from arbitration, then ensure that the exclusions apply to all parties equally; lack of mutuality may result in the agreement being unenforceable. See Effective Use of ADR §9.50.

It is best practice to set out the arbitration provision in large, bold type and to require the other party to initial the provision, especially if the parties are not of equal bargaining power. Compare Izzi v Mesquite Country Club (1986) 186 CA3d 1309, 1318, 231 CR 315 (failure to read purchase agreement arbitration provision does not make it unenforceable), with Spence v Omnibus Indus. (1975) 44 CA3d 970, 119 CR 171 (criticizing arbitration provision buried in small type), and Wheeler v St. Joseph Hosp. (1976) 63 CA3d 345, 133 CR 775 (voiding arbitration provision not explained to hospital patient).

When a statute calls for a particular form for the arbitration provision, failure to use that form may make the provision unenforceable. Malek v Blue Cross (2004) 121 CA4th 44, 16 CR3d 687. For example, arbitration provisions in real estate contracts must include specific language, be in bold type, and be initialed by the parties. CCP §1298. See Effective Use of ADR §9.25.

NOTE: If the contract concerns interstate commerce, the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) (9 USC §§1-16) may preclude the enforcement of any rules requiring that the arbitration provision be in a particular form. Hedges v Carrigan (2004) 117 CA4th 578, 11 CR3d 787. On the FAA, see Effective Use of ADR §§9.34-9.37.

§45.24 b. Drafting Considerations

The statutory scheme for enforcement of arbitration agreements (see CCP §§1281-1281.96) applies only to written agreements. Magness Petroleum Co. v Warren Resources of Cal., Inc. (2002) 103 CA4th 901, 907, 127 CR2d 159. An oral agreement to arbitrate is ordinarily not enforceable.

NOTE: Under limited circumstances, i.e., if there is demonstrated waiver, estoppel, or an agreement reflected in a written court or other record, courts may enforce an oral arbitration agreement. 103 CA4th at 909.

When drafting an arbitration agreement, counsel should specify the issues to be arbitrated and who is to conduct the arbitration.

Specify the Issues to Be Arbitrated. The agreement should specify the issues that the parties do and do not wish to arbitrate. The arbitrator may consider only the disputes covered by the arbitration agreement. Mansdorf v California Physicians' Serv., Inc. (1978) 87 CA3d 412, 151 CR 388. The question of whether the dispute is arbitrable is decided by the court unless the agreement expressly provides that the question of arbitrability will be submitted to arbitration. First Options, Inc. v Kaplan (1995) 514 US 938, 131 L Ed 2d 985, 115 S Ct 1920; Dream Theater, Inc. v Dream Theater (2004) 124 CA4th 547, 21 CR3d 322.

The usual arbitration agreement gives the arbitrator broad remedial powers, including the power to award punitive damages. See Rifkind & Sterling, Inc. v Rifkind (1994) 28 CA4th 1282, 1289, 33 CR2d 828 (arbitrator had power to award punitive damages when agreement read "If any controversy shall arise between the parties hereto, arising from or with respect to this Agreement, the controversy shall be submitted to mandatory, binding arbitration"). Parties that do not want the arbitrator to award punitive damages should explicitly say so in their agreement. A limitation on punitive damages, however, may invalidate the agreement. See Armendariz v Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc. (2000) 24 C4th 83, 103, 99 CR2d 745.

Specify Who Is to Act as Arbitrator. When drafting an arbitration provision, it is important to consider what type of arbitrator is desired and how the arbitrator will be selected. If advance agreement is reached, the name of the arbitrator or organization from which the arbitrator will be selected should be included in the agreement. On considerations in selecting an arbitrator, see Effective Use of ADR §§9.28-9.29, 9.68.

Additional Issues to Address in Agreement. In addition to specifying the issues to be arbitrated and who will conduct the arbitration, the drafter of the arbitration provision may also want to address, e.g., the scope of discovery, the arbitrator's powers, availability of motion practice (e.g., summary judgment, demurrers), time limitations, admissibility of evidence, as well as the arbitrator fees and arbitration costs. In addition, if certain types of expert witnesses are likely to play a key role in future contract disputes, counsel should consider including specific provisions about the number of such witnesses each side may use, or an agreement that one expert will be chosen and how the choice is to be made.

NOTE: When drafting the agreement, it is important to understand that specificity may have unintended consequences. For example, if the agreement specifies a deadline for the arbitrator's decision and the decision is not timely rendered, the effectiveness of the decision may be in doubt; and the losing party may argue that the decision, being untimely, is beyond the arbitrator's jurisdiction and therefore void. See Baar v Tigerman (1983) 140 CA3d 979, 189 CR 834.

For a list of issues to consider when drafting an arbitration agreement, see Effective Use of ADR §9.31. On the differences between federal and state law, see Effective Use of ADR §§9.34-9.39.

§45.25 c. Negotiated Submission Agreement

If a dispute arises under a standardized clause and the parties wish to change its terms (or if there is no arbitration clause and they want to enter into an arbitration for a dispute), they may enter into a negotiated submission agreement, altering the arbitration rules and procedures. See, e.g., Glassman v McNab (2003) 112 CA4th 1593, 1600, 6 CR3d 293 (parties to attorney fees dispute permissibly stipulated to increase arbitrator's statutory jurisdiction under Bus & P C §§6200-6206). When all sides are committed to resolving the dispute without litigation, the parties may be amenable to restructuring the arbitration hearing to expedite a resolution. For a detailed submission agreement, see §45.66.

§45.26 2. Enforceability of Arbitration Agreement

The California Arbitration Act (California's version of the Uniform Arbitration Act) (CCP §§1280-1294.2) makes a private agreement to arbitrate a dispute valid, enforceable, and irrevocable except on grounds that exist to revoke any contract. CCP §1281.

On federal jurisdiction to enforce an arbitration agreement under the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) (9 USC §§1-16), see Vaden v Discovery Bank (2009) ___US___, 173 LEd2d 206, 129 S Ct 1262, discussed in §7.17.

On enforceability of arbitration agreements, see Effective Use of ADR §§9.33, 9.40-9.53.

§45.27 a. Issues Affecting Enforceability

When a petition to compel arbitration is filed, the gateway "question of arbitrability" of the dispute arises, i.e., whether the parties are bound by a valid, enforceable arbitration agreement. CCP §1281.2; Howsam v Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. (2002) 537 US 79, 154 L Ed 2d 491, 123 S Ct 588. See also Adajar v RWR Homes, Inc. (2008) 160 CA4th 563, 570, 73 CR3d 17 (failure to prove existence of arbitration contract); Omar v Ralphs Grocery Co. (2004) 118 CA4th 955, 13 CR3d 562 (trial court erred by failing to consider gateway issues of arbitrability).

Several issues surround the issue of enforceability:

- Who decides the issue of enforceability—the court or the arbitrator? If a party challenges the validity of the entire contract, not just the arbitration provision, the arbitrator, not the court, must decide the contract's validity. Buckeye Check Cashing, Inc. v Cardegna (2006) 546 US 440, 445, 163 L Ed 2d 1038, 1043, 126 S Ct 1204 (addressing federal arbitration law under FAA). See Preston v Ferrer (2008) ___ US ___, 169 L Ed 2d 917, 128 S Ct 978 (under FAA, party not required to exhaust administrative remedy before entering arbitration). If a party challenges only the arbitration provision, the court decides the provision's enforceability. Prima Paint Corp. v Flood & Conklin Mfg. Co. (1967) 388 US 395, 18 L Ed 2d 1270, 87 S Ct 1801 (claim of fraud in inducement of arbitration clause is relevant to making of arbitration agreement); Buckeye Check Cashing, 546 US at 445. The court decides whether the "crux of the complaint" is a challenge to the arbitration clause or the entire contract. Nagrampa v Mailcoups, Inc. (9th Cir 2006) 469 F3d 1257, 1275. The court must decide a claim challenging an arbitration provision, even if state law requires an examination of the making of the entire contract as part of the analysis. 469 F3d at 1271. By specific reference in the arbitration agreement, the parties may delegate the issue of arbitrability to an arbitrator. Dream Theater, Inc. v Dream Theater (2004) 124 CA4th 547, 21 CR3d 322. See also Gilbert Street Developers, LLC v La Quinta Homes, LLC (2009) 174 CA4th 1185, 1193, 94 CR3d 918 (no jurisdictional authority for arbitrator when agreement did not clearly and unmistakably provide for it and merely incorporated by reference American Arbitration Association rules, which, when agreement was executed, did not permit arbitrators to decide jurisdiction); Parada v Superior Court (2009) 176 CA4th 1554, 1564, 98 CR3d 743; Bruni v Didion (2008) 160 CA4th 1272, 1284, 73 CR3d 395 (although agreement provided for arbitrator to decide issue of arbitrability, court was required to resolve unconscionability issue because plaintiffs denied knowledge of arbitration provision).
- Did the parties agree to arbitrate? Generally speaking, a party cannot be compelled to arbitrate a dispute that he or she has not agreed to resolve by arbitration. Benasra v Marciano (2001) 92 CA4th 987, 990, 112 CR2d 358. See also Rodriguez v Superior Court (2009) 176 CA4th 1461, 1470, 98 CR3d 728 (in medical malpractice action in which patient signed arbitration agreement four days prior to surgery and then died during CCP §1295(c)'s 30-day recision period, agreement unenforceable against patient's heir and thus no order compelling arbitration could be issued). Courts have recognized that in some circumstances (e.g., an agency relationship or a third-party beneficiary of the contract), it is equitable that an arbitration agreement binds a nonsignatory party. See, e.g., Rowe v Exline (2007) 153 CA4th 1276, 1284, 63 CR3d 787 (nonsignatory sued as alter ego of corporation); Westra v Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Inv. Brokerage Co. (2005) 129 CA4th 759, 28 CR3d 752 (nonsignatory to purchase agreement can compel arbitration as agent of parties to agreement); NORCAL Mut. Ins. Co. v Newton (2000) 84 CA4th 64, 76, 100 CR2d 683 (insured psychiatrist's spouse who accepted insurance policy benefits by allowing insurer to assume cost of defense was bound by policy's arbitration clause). An arbitration provision also may not be binding on a party if it is not incorporated by reference into a contract between the parties. Kleveland v Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2006) 141 CA4th 761, 46 CR3d 314. See also Goldman v KPMG, LLP (2009) 173 CA4th 209, 234, 92 CR3d 534 (defendant nonsignatory to agreement containing arbitration clause may not compel arbitration under equitable estoppel theory unless claims against nonsignatory rely on or are inextricably bound up with contractual obligations of agreement). Similarly, an arbitration provision may not be enforceable if it is included in a writing that does not appear to be a contract and its terms do not draw the attention of the recipient. Metters v Ralph's Grocery Co. (2008) 161 CA4th 696, 702, 74 CR3d 210.

See also Effective Use of ADR §9.41.

- Was the arbitration provision obtained by fraud or duress? Confusion exists over the effect of fraud on the enforceability of an arbitration agreement. This confusion stems in part from the distinction under California law between fraud in the inducement and fraud in the execution or inception of the contract. The California Supreme Court has held that claims of fraud in the inducement of the contract (as opposed to the arbitration provision) are subject to arbitration; claims of fraud in the execution of the entire agreement are not arbitrable under state or federal law. Rosenthal v Great W. Fin. Sec. Corp. (1996) 14 C4th 394, 416, 58 CR2d 875. See Hotels Nevada v L.A. Pac. Ctr., Inc. (2006) 144 CA4th 754, 50 CR3d 700 (contract void at inception does not contain enforceable arbitration provision). When the validity of the entire contract is challenged, an otherwise valid arbitration provision is enforceable separate and apart from the remainder of the contract. Prima Paint Corp. v Flood & Conklin Mfg. Co. (1967) 388 US 395, 403, 18 L Ed 2d 1270, 1277, 87 S Ct 1801; Buckeye Check Cashing, Inc. v Cardegna (2006) 546 US 440, 444, 163 L Ed 2d 1038, 1043, 126 S Ct 1204; Lucas v Gund, Inc. (CD Cal 2006) 450 F Supp 2d 1125. See Effective Use of ADR §9.42.
- Did the party waive the right to compel arbitration? A party to a contract containing an arbitration clause may be able to avoid arbitration if it can establish that the other party has waived its right to compel arbitration. Whether a party has waived the right to arbitration is a question of fact. Engalla v Permanente Med. Group, Inc. (1997) 15 C4th 951, 64 CR2d 843. On what constitutes waiver, see Effective Use of ADR §§9.43-9.45.
- Is the party estopped to assert the right to compel arbitration? The doctrine of equitable estoppel provides that a party cannot contradict facts if, by the party's conduct or representations, it has misled another party to the latter's prejudice. Platt Pac., Inc. v Andelson (1993) 6 C4th 307, 320, 24 CR2d 597 (court rejected plaintiffs' argument that because defendant had agreed to reschedule settlement conference, defendant was estopped to insist that plaintiff comply with contractual deadline to request arbitration; defendant had not misrepresented any facts).
- Do other principles prevent enforcement of the arbitration provision? Examples include illegal contracts and contracts to arbitrate disputes that the legislature has committed to the courts (see Jaramillo v JH Real Estate Partners, Inc. (2003) 111 CA4th 394, 3 CR3d 525 (arbitration provision in residential lease agreement is unenforceable because statutory provision precludes tenants from agreeing to arbitrate tenancy disputes in residential lease agreements)), and failure to comply with required conditions of performance under the contract (see Brown v Dillard's Inc. (9th Cir 2005) 430 F3d 1004 (employer that breaches arbitration agreement by refusing to participate in arbitration proceedings brought by employee loses right to enforce agreement later)).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/45 Alternative Dispute Resolution/§45.28 b. Unconscionability

§45.28 b. Unconscionability

Like contracts generally, an agreement to arbitrate may not be enforced if it is unconscionable. Armendariz v Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc. (2000) 24 C4th 83, 114, 99 CR2d 745; CC §1670.5.

Two Aspects of Unconscionability. The courts have recognized that unconscionability has two aspects, procedural and substantive, and that both must exist before a contract or arbitration provision will be found unconscionable. 24 C4th at 113; Stirlen v Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 CA4th 1519, 60 CR2d 138. Procedural unconscionability focuses on the manner in which the agreement was negotiated, i.e., because of unequal bargaining power, one party was oppressed or surprised by a contract term, and substantive unconscionability focuses on the terms of the agreement, i.e., their overly harsh or one-sided result. A & M Produce Co. v FMC Corp. (1982) 135 CA3d 473, 186 CR 114. See also Higgins v Superior Court (2006) 140 CA4th 1238, 45 CR3d 293 (arbitration agreement procedurally unconscionable because arbitration provisions were near end of lengthy, single-spaced document, and not in boldface type; substantively unconscionable because it was egregiously one-sided and permitted only defendants to compel arbitration).

Although both procedural and substantive unconscionability must be present for a court to find a provision unconscionable, they need not be present in the same degree. That is, "the more substantively oppressive the contract term, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to come to the conclusion that the term is unenforceable, and vice versa." Armendariz, 24 C4th at 114; see also Laster v AT&T Mobility LLC (9th Cir 2009) 584 F3d 849; Harper v Ultimo (2003) 113 CA4th 1402, 1406, 7 CR3d 418.

An agreement that is permeated by unconscionability will not be enforced. See Nyulassy v Lockheed Martin Corp. (2004) 120 CA4th 1267, 16 CR3d 296 (mandatory employment arbitration agreement unenforceable because it lacks mutuality, imposes prearbitration resolution procedure controlled by employer, and severely limits time within which employee may demand arbitration). If the offensive terms do not "permeate" the agreement, they may be excised by the court and the agreement enforced in other respects.

Procedural Unconscionability. The procedural unconscionability element focuses on "oppression" or "surprise" due to unequal bargaining power. Armendariz, 24 C4th at 114. In general, procedural unconscionability is established by showing a contract of adhesion. Little v Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 C4th 1064, 1071, 130 CR2d 892. An adhesion contract is "a standardized contract, which, imposed and drafted by the party of superior bargaining strength, relegates to the subscribing party only the opportunity to adhere to the contract or reject it." Armendariz v Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc., supra, quoting Neal v State Farm Ins. Co. (1961) 188 CA2d 690, 694, 10 CR 781.

An adhesion contract or provision will not be enforced against the weaker or adhering party if it does not fall within the reasonable expectations of that party. Armendariz, 24 C4th at 113. Even if the contract or arbitration provision is within the reasonable expectation of the parties, it will not be enforced if, as a matter of equity, the court finds that "considered in its context, it is unduly oppressive or 'unconscionable.'" Armendariz v Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc., supra. See also Parada v Superior Court (2009) 176 CA4th 1554, 1578, 98 CR3d 743 (expensive fees associated with requirement that disputes be heard before panel of three arbitrators and prohibition on joinder of claims not within reasonable expectations of investors); Olvera v El Pollo Loco, Inc. (2009) 173 CA4th 447, 454, 93 CR3d 65 (new dispute resolution policy procedurally unconscionable in part because inaccurate policy description necessarily made workers' agreement uninformed); Gentry v Superior Court (2007) 42 C4th 443, 470, 64 CR3d 773 (failure to opt out of arbitration agreement not product of authentic informed choice).

NOTE: Although a finding of an adhesion contract almost always equates with a finding of procedural unconscionability, an adhesion contract or provision is not a prerequisite to a finding of procedural unconscionability. Harper v Ultimo (2003) 113 CA4th 1402, 1410, 7 CR3d 418.

Substantive Unconscionability. The substantive unconscionability element focuses on "overly harsh" or "one-sided results." Armendariz v Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc., 24 C4th at 114. Although a wide variety of factors may contribute to making an arbitration provision substantively unconscionable, the primary factor is lack of mutuality, and the key question is whether the contract terms are so one-sided or harsh as to lack basic fairness. Thompson v Toll Dublin, LLC (2008) 165 CA4th 1360, 1373, 81 CR3d 736 (provision was unfairly one-sided because homeowner claims would be subject to arbitration, but sellers would have no reason to sue homeowner after escrow closed); Gutierrez v Autowest, Inc. (2003) 114 CA4th 77, 7 CR3d 267 (arbitration clause in automobile lease was unconscionable because fee required to initiate arbitration was unaffordable and there was no fee waiver provision for consumer); Nagrampa v Mailcoups, Inc. (9th Cir 2006) 469 F3d 1257, 1284 (franchisee required to submit any controversy to arbitration, but franchiser could seek provisional remedy from any court; arbitration forum near franchiser). But see Roman v Superior Court (2009) 172 CA4th 1462, 1471, 92 CR3d 153 (arbitration agreement not substantively unconscionable for beginning with phrase "I agree"; phrase did not make agreement unilateral under circumstances); Jones v Humanscale Corp. (2005) 130 CA4th 401, 29 CR3d 881 (arbitration clause in employment contract was not unconscionable because it did not expressly require parties to split arbitration fees and expenses).

For more examples of cases discussing the problem of substantive unconscionability, particularly in employment contracts, see Effective Use of ADR §9.50.

Class Action Waivers. Not "all class action waivers are necessarily unconscionable." Discover Bank v Superior Court (2005) 36 C4th 148, 162, 30 CR3d 76. Whether a class action waiver is unconscionable depends on the application of state law. Provencher v Dell, Inc. (CD Cal 2006) 409 F Supp 2d 1196. For example, on remand from the supreme court in Discover Bank v Superior Court, supra, the appellate court held that under Delaware law, the class action waiver in a credit-card holder agreement was enforceable. Discover Bank v Superior Court (2005) 134 CA4th 886, 36 CR3d 456. See also Laster v AT&T Mobility LLC (9th Cir 2009) 584 F3d 849 (Federal Arbitration Act does not preempt California law governing unconscionable class action waivers in consumer adhesion contracts; waiver at issue unconscionable under California law); Aral v Earthlink, Inc. (2005) 134 CA4th 544, 557, 36 CR3d 229 (under California law, class action waiver was unconscionable in action arising from Internet service agreement under Bus & P C §17200); Klussman v Cross Country Bank (2005) 134 CA4th 1283, 36 CR3d 728 (class action waiver was unconscionable in action on claims under Consumers Legal Remedies Act and Unfair Competition Law). See also Olvera v El Pollo Loco, Inc. (2009) 173 CA4th 447, 456, 93 CR3d 65 (class arbitration waiver substantively unconscionable for being unfairly one-sided and because class action likely would be only way for low-wage workers to vindicate rights); Sanchez v Western Pizza Enters. (2009) 172 CA4th 154, 90 CR3d 818.

When the class action waiver is found unconscionable, typically courts have deemed the entire arbitration clause or agreement unenforceable. See, e.g., Klussman v Cross Country Bank, 134 CA4th at 1300 (unconscionable class action waiver could not be severed from arbitration clause, making clause itself unenforceable); Aral v Earthlink, Inc., supra. See also Franco v Athens Disposal Co. (2009) 171 CA4th 1277, 1299, 90 CR3d 539 (because arbitration agreement contained invalid class arbitration waiver and prevented plaintiff from acting as private attorney general, entire agreement unenforceable).

§45.29 c. Nonwaivable Public Rights

Although under California and federal law the parties can usually agree to arbitrate statutory claims, "arbitration agreements that encompass unwaivable statutory rights must be subject to particular scrutiny." Armendariz v Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc. (2000) 24 C4th 83, 100, 99 CR2d 745 (setting out conditions under which employer can require employees to arbitrate claims under Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996)). An unwaivable statutory right is one enacted for public purpose. See Fittante v Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 CA4th 708, 129 CR2d 659 (Lab C §970, which was enacted to prevent unscrupulous treatment of employees who are induced to move on promise of employment, was enacted for public purpose). See also CC §3513 (although anyone may waive law intended solely for his or her benefit, "a law established for a public reason cannot be contravened by a private agreement").

When unwaivable public rights are the subject of arbitration, whether statutory or nonstatutory, the arbitration agreement must meet the minimum requirements articulated by Armendariz v Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc., 24 C4th at 99. See Gentry v Superior Court (2007) 42 C4th 443, 456, 64 CR3d 773 (class arbitration waivers in employment arbitration agreements); Little v Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 C4th 1064, 130 CR2d 892 (arbitration of claim of wrongful termination in violation of public policy must meet Armendariz requirements); D.C. v Harvard-Westlake School (2009) 176 CA4th 836, 864, 98 CR3d 300 (arbitration of hate crime claims must meet Armendariz requirements). But see Giuliano v Inland Empire Personnel, Inc. (2007) 149 CA4th 1276, 1288, 58 CR3d 5 (arbitration clause not governed by Armendariz because claim not based on state law or fundamental public policy).

NOTE: The arbitration agreement in Armendariz was a mandatory employment agreement that the employee had to sign as a condition of employment. Arbitration agreements knowingly and voluntarily entered into by the parties after a dispute has arisen generally would not be subject to these additional Armendariz requirements. See Armendariz v Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc., 24 C4th at 103 n8.

In addition to requiring a neutral arbitrator (an essential requirement of any arbitration agreement), a contract to arbitrate an unwaivable public right under Armendariz must provide, at a minimum, for the following:

- Adequate discovery (see Fitz v NCR Corp. (2004) 118 CA4th 702, 13 CR3d 88 (arbitration agreement provision limiting discovery to only two depositions did not affect both parties equally and did not provide plaintiff with sufficient discovery, because employer already possessed many relevant documents and employed many relevant witnesses));
- A written decision that permits limited judicial review;
- All the types of relief that would otherwise be available in court, e.g., punitive damages and attorney fees; and
- Limitations on arbitration costs, i.e., when the agreement covers Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) claims, the employer must pay all costs unique to the arbitration.

Armendariz v Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc., 24 C4th at 102, endorsing Cole v Burns Int'l Sec. Servs. (DC Cir 1997) 105 F3d 1465. See also D.C. v Harvard-Westlake School, supra, (because hate crime laws award attorney fees only to prevailing plaintiffs, prevailing defendant in arbitration of hate crimes claim not entitled to arbitral expenses or attorney fees).

Because there are different standards for enforcing arbitration of public versus private rights, the critical initial inquiry is identifying the nature of the claim. Abramson v Juniper Networks, Inc. (2004) 115 CA4th 638, 652, 9 CR3d 422. If a claim arises from nonwaivable public rights, the arbitration agreement must satisfy the requirements set out in Armendariz. Abramson v Juniper Networks, Inc., 115 CA4th at 652. If, on the other hand, private rights are at issue, then the agreement is analyzed under standard contract principles for unconscionability. Abramson v Juniper Networks, Inc., 115 CA4th at 651. See also Boghos v Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's (2005) 36 C4th 495, 30 CR3d 787 (insurance-related claims involved private rights).

§45.30 d. Severability

If the court finds as a matter of law that a contract or a clause of a contract was unconscionable when it was made, the court has discretion to (1) refuse to enforce the contract, (2) excise the offending clause from the contract, or (3) limit the application of the unconscionable clause to avoid an unconscionable result. CC §1670.5(a).

In determining whether it is appropriate to restrict or sever illegal terms rather than void the entire agreement, "[t]he overarching inquiry is whether 'the interests of justice… would be furthered' by severance." Armendariz v Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc. (2000) 24 C4th 83, 124, 99 CR2d 745 (citation omitted). See Little v Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 C4th 1064, 130 CR2d 892 (severing one-sided arbitration appeal provision from arbitration agreement). The court may not, however, under the guise of severing or limiting the offending term, reform the contract. See Armendariz, 24 C4th at 125.

Examples of cases addressing severability in the arbitration context include Parada v Superior Court (2009) 176 CA4th 1554, 1578, 98 CR3d 743, 1586 (terms included in arbitration agreement to discourage or prevent customers from vindicating their rights were unconscionable and not severable; arbitration provisions unenforceable in entirety); Klussman v Cross Country Bank (2005) 134 CA4th 1283, 1300, 36 CR3d 728 (unconscionable class action waiver not severable from arbitration clause; entire arbitration clause unenforceable); and Aral v Earthlink, Inc. (2005) 134 CA4th 544, 557, 36 CR3d 229 (injunctive relief claim severable from restitution claim that was subject to arbitration, and unconscionable class action waiver rendered entire arbitration agreement unenforceable).

3. Arbitration Procedures

§45.31 a. Enforcement of Right to Arbitrate

When both parties agree to comply with the terms of the arbitration agreement, the arbitration procedure will commence without court intervention. If one party refuses to arbitrate, the procedures for enforcement of the right to arbitrate depend on whether the arbitration agreement is self-executing or non-self-executing.

Self-Executing Arbitration Clause. If the arbitration provision is self-executing, it is not necessary to go to court to start the arbitration. King v Larsen Realty, Inc. (1981) 121 CA3d 349, 354, 175 CR 226. To be self-executing, the clause must provide the following:

- A method for selecting the arbitrator if the other party refuses to participate;
- A procedure for going forward if the other party does not answer; and
- An agreement that the hearing may proceed without the other party.

When a self-executing clause exists, the party seeking to enforce the right to arbitration must make a demand and appoint an arbitrator under the terms of the arbitration clause. Assuming proper service has been made, if the other party refuses to appear, the arbitrator may proceed to hear evidence and enter an award.

NOTE: Arbitration clauses that select providers are all self-executing clauses.

For sample self-executing arbitration clause, see Effective Use of ADR §9.88.

Nonself-Executing Arbitration Clause. When the arbitration clause is not self-executing, the party who believes that a controversy is arbitrable under an underlying contract should begin by writing a short letter setting out generally the nature of the dispute and demanding arbitration. If the responding party does not reply to this letter or if the responding party challenges the right to arbitrate, the proponent must file a petition to compel arbitration. See §45.32.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/45 Alternative Dispute Resolution/§45.32 b. Petition to Compel Arbitration

§45.32 b. Petition to Compel Arbitration

If the arbitration agreement is not self-executing and the opposing party either does not respond to the demand letter or refuses to participate in arbitration proceedings, a party may file a petition to compel arbitration in the superior court. See Condee v Longwood Mgmt. Corp. (2001) 88 CA4th 215, 218, 105 CR3d 597.

NOTE: If the party initiating the dispute resolution process would prefer not to arbitrate, even though there is an arbitration clause, that party may decide to file a complaint and then wait to see if the other side elects to compel arbitration. If the other side does not timely elect to compel arbitration, both sides will have waived the arbitration provision and the matter will proceed as normal litigation.

A proceeding to compel arbitration is, in essence, a suit in equity to compel specific performance of a contract. When a party to an arbitration agreement refuses to submit to arbitration, the other party or parties may petition the court to compel arbitration and stay any pending proceedings. CCP §§1281.2, 1281.4. Condee v Longwood Mgmt. Corp., supra.

The Petition. The petitioner must allege the existence of an agreement to arbitrate the controversy (CCP §1281.2); facts necessary for a ruling on the agreement's enforceability are proved by affidavits or declarations. See Brodke v Alphatec Spine, Inc. (2008) 160 CA4th 1569, 73 CR3d 554. Further, the arbitration agreement's provisions must be set forth verbatim or a copy must be attached to the petition and incorporated by reference. Adajar v RWR Homes, Inc. (2008) 160 CA4th 563, 569, 73 CR3d 17 (appellant failed to produce video or sample warranty booklet that allegedly contained arbitration clause); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1330. The court must then conduct a summary hearing in the manner provided by law for the hearing of motions. CCP §1290.2; Condee, 88 CA4th at 218.

NOTE: A party may raise arbitration as an affirmative defense in an answer and then move to compel. This may be necessary when a response to a complaint is required and there is insufficient time to file a petition to compel as an initial responsive pleading.

Venue. A petition to compel arbitration must be filed in a court having jurisdiction in the county where (1) the agreement was to be performed or (2) the agreement was made. CCP §1292(a). If the agreement does not specify a place of performance and if it was made out of state, the petition must be filed in the county where any party resides or has a business. CCP §1292(b). In all other cases, the petition may be filed in any California county. CCP §1292(c).

NOTE: If the arbitration agreement provides that all arbitrations will be conducted in a forum convened by, and subject to the rules of, a chosen self-regulatory organization, e.g., the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD), and the chosen organization refuses to arbitrate in California, the court must decide whether the out-of-state location selected by the organization is proper and if the dispute should be arbitrated there. If the out-of-state location is not proper, the dispute should be decided by the California courts. Alan v Superior Court (2003) 111 CA4th 217, 3 CR3d 377 (self-regulatory organization refused to arbitrate in California because it did not want to comply with California's ethical standards for arbitrators). On the Securities Exchange Act and NASD arbitrations, see Effective Use of ADR §9.38.

Notice, Service, and Hearing Date. When the arbitration provision selects an arbitration provider such as the American Arbitration Association, that provider will have a set of rules that will govern how the arbitration is to proceed. When no provider with its own set of rules has been selected in the contract, the Code of Civil Procedure provides that notice of a petition to compel arbitration must be given in accordance with the time provisions applicable to motions, except that at least 10 days' notice of the hearing must be given. CCP §1290.2.

A copy of the petition and written notice of the time and place of the hearing must be served in the manner prescribed in the arbitration agreement. CCP §1290.4(a). If the agreement does not specify how service is to be made, and if the person to be served has neither appeared in the proceeding nor been served previously, service must be made as stated in CCP §1290.4(b). If the person to be served has previously appeared or been served under CCP §1290.4(b), service may be made under CCP §§1010-1020. CCP §1290.4(c). The petition may not be heard until at least 30 days after the date of the service when service is made outside the state. CCP §1290.4(b)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.33 c. Petition to Appoint Arbitrator

Counsel should file a petition to appoint a neutral arbitrator concurrently with the petition to compel arbitration. CCP §1281.6. These petitions may be combined in one document. The parties can agree on an arbitrator without court intervention (Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(a)); however, the parties cannot stipulate that a sitting judge serve as an arbitrator and that his or her decision be binding and subject to confirmation under the California Arbitration Act. Heenan v Sobati (2002) 96 CA4th 995, 1002, 117 CR2d 532. On when to petition court to appoint arbitration, see Effective Use of ADR §9.30.

PRACTICE TIP: If one of the parties is opposing arbitration, it is prudent for that party to request the court to appoint an arbitrator if arbitration is to be compelled. A court with an arbitration program may, by local rule or procedures, establish an arbitrator selection method that gives each side an opportunity to challenge at least one listed arbitrator peremptorily and ensures that an arbitrator is appointed within 30 days of the case's submission to arbitration. Cal Rules of Ct 3.815(a).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/45 Alternative Dispute Resolution/§45.34 d. Response to Petitions

§45.34 d. Response to Petitions

A response to the petition to compel arbitration (and to a petition to appoint an arbitrator) must be served and filed within 10 days after service of the petition or, if served under CCP §1290.4(b)(2), within 30 days after service. The time may be extended by written agreement of the parties or, for good cause, by order of the court. CCP §1290.6.

§45.35 e. Order Compelling or Denying Arbitration

A proceeding to compel arbitration is analogous to a suit in equity to compel specific performance of a contract. Giuliano v Inland Empire Personnel, Inc. (2007) 149 CA4th 1276, 1284, 58 CR3d 5. The powers of the court in acting on a petition are limited to those specified in CCP §1281.2. Harrison v California State Auto. Ass'n, Inter-Ins. Bureau (1976) 56 CA3d 657, 661, 128 CR 514. If the court finds that a valid written agreement to arbitrate exists, that a party has refused to arbitrate, and that no grounds exist for opposing or delaying arbitration, it must issue an order compelling arbitration. CCP §1281.2. See §25.67 for time to answer if petition is denied.

The court may refuse to order arbitration if it finds any of the following (CCP §1281.2(a)-(c)):

- The petitioner has waived the right to compel arbitration;
- Grounds exist for revocation of the agreement; or
- A party to the arbitration agreement is also a party to a pending action with a third party arising out of the same transaction, and there is a possibility of conflicting rulings. See Birl v Heritage Care, LLC (2009) 172 CA4th 1313, 1319, 91 CR3d 777 (no abuse of discretion to deny motion to compel arbitration when all criteria of CCP §1281.2(c) were satisfied).

Under CCP §1281.2(c), a "pending action" includes an action initiated by the party refusing to arbitrate after the petition to compel arbitration has been filed but on or before the date of the hearing on the petition.

If the court determines that a party to the arbitration proceeding is also party to a pending action with a third party, the court may take the following actions (CCP §1281.2(c)) (see Whaley v Sony Computer Entertainment Am., Inc. (2004) 121 CA4th 479, 17 CR3d 88):

- Refuse to enforce the arbitration agreement and order intervention or joinder of all parties in a single action;
- Order intervention or joinder of all or only some issues;
- Order arbitration among the parties who have agreed to arbitration and stay the other action pending the outcome of arbitration; or
- Stay arbitration pending the outcome of the other action.

A signer of an arbitration agreement, or a signer's agent who can enforce the agreement, is not a third party under CCP §1281(c). See RN Solution, Inc. v Catholic Healthcare W. (2008) 165 CA4th 1511, 1520, 81 CR3d 892.

§45.36 f. Appeal from Order Compelling or Denying Arbitration

An order compelling arbitration is not appealable. Muao v Grosvenor Props., Ltd. (2002) 99 CA4th 1085, 1088, 122 CR2d 131; Atlas Plastering, Inc. v Superior Court (1977) 72 CA3d 63, 67, 140 CR 59. See Vivid Video, Inc. v Playboy Entertainment Group, Inc. (2007) 147 CA4th 434, 442, 54 CR3d 232 (order compelling arbitration of question whether court or arbitrator should decide claims not reviewable).

An order compelling arbitration is reviewable only by a writ of mandate in exceptional circumstances, or on appeal after judgment has been entered on the arbitration award. Muao v Grosvenor Props., Ltd., supra; La Pietra v Freed (1978) 87 CA3d 1025, 1030, 151 CR 554. Writ review is proper if the matter arbitrated falls clearly outside the scope of the arbitration agreement, or arbitration would be unduly time-consuming or expensive. Zembsch v Superior Court (2006) 146 CA4th 153, 160, 53 CR3d 69.

An order denying or dismissing a petition to compel arbitration, on the other hand, is appealable. CCP §1294; Los Angeles Police Protective League v City of Los Angeles (1985) 163 CA3d 1141, 209 CR 890, disapproved on other grounds in Laurel Heights Improvement Ass'n v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1988) 47 C3d 376, 427 n28, 253 CR 426. An order denying a petition to compel arbitration in California, but directing arbitration in a sister state, is appealable under CCP §1294(a), which provides that an aggrieved party may appeal from an order denying a petition to compel arbitration. Porter v United Servs. Auto. Ass'n (2001) 90 CA4th 837, 838, 108 CR2d 860.

If requested by a party, the court must make a statement of decision of an appealable order. CCP §1291. Because an order compelling arbitration is not appealable, a statement of decision is not required even if requested. See Wheeler v St. Joseph Hosp. (1976) 63 CA3d 345, 133 CR 775.

A party may appeal an order denying attorney fees issued after the court has denied a petition to compel arbitration. Otay River Constructors v San Diego Expressway (2008) 158 CA4th 796, 801, 70 CR3d 434 (order denying petition was essentially judgment on only issue before court).

§45.37 g. Removal of Arbitrator After Appointment

Code of Civil Procedure §1281.6 provides that if the agreed method of appointment "fails or for any reason cannot be followed, or when an arbitrator appointed fails to act… the court, on petition of a party to the arbitration agreement, shall appoint the arbitrator." This provision has been resorted to by parties to remove an arbitrator during arbitration proceedings. See, e.g., Bosworth v Whitmore (2006) 135 CA4th 536, 37 CR3d 560, in which the court held that a court may remove an arbitrator only under limited circumstances, including "when an arbitrator fails to act." 135 CA4th at 551. The court found that the trial court abused its discretion in removing the arbitrator at the plaintiff's request because his failure to meet a deadline did not justify removal when the entire proceedings were reviewed; the arbitrator had managed the case effectively for 2 years and several delays were not his fault. Because the removal was improper, the trial court was not authorized to appoint a successor (the appointment also violated the parties' contract) and, thus, the successor arbitrator's award was void. 135 CA4th at 551.

NOTE: Bosworth may be an extreme example of delays in arbitration and party differences that led to improper removal of the arbitrator. The court's voiding of the arbitration award was necessary to avoid injustice but unfortunately precipitated further delay in already protracted proceedings. See also American Home Assur. Co. v Benowitz (1991) 234 CA3d 192, 285 CR 626 (award obtained unilaterally by insured (who argued that insurer had unreasonably delayed in responding to arbitration demand) was void because it was obtained without legal authority, causing more delay).

§45.39 a. Arbitrator Selection

If the agreement does not provide a process for selecting an arbitrator, or if the parties do not follow the method for selecting the arbitrator specified in the agreement, a party may petition the court to appoint an arbitrator. See CCP §1281.6 for court nomination procedure. When the parties agree to be bound by the provisions of a company that provides arbitrators, the company sends a list of arbitrators to the parties, and each party numbers consecutively those who are most desired to those who are least desired; the person receiving the lowest number will be designated the arbitrator.

After being selected, the arbitrator is required to disclose all matters that could cause a person aware of the facts of the matter to reasonably doubt the impartiality of the arbitrator. CCP §1281.9(a); Jakks Pac., Inc. v Superior Court (2008) 160 CA4th 596, 72 CR3d 914.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.40 b. Discovery

The parties to arbitration have no automatic right to discovery under California law, unless the right to conduct discovery is specified in the arbitration or submission agreement or the case is subject to CCP §§1282.2(a)(2), 1283.05, or 1283.1.

PRACTICE TIP: Many litigators feel very uncomfortable presenting a case without prehearing discovery; as a result, both sides to arbitration will often voluntarily agree to prehearing depositions of at least key players in the transaction. Further, experienced arbitrators will encourage the parties to reach voluntary agreements concerning prehearing discovery in order to shorten the hearings and run them more efficiently.

On discovery in arbitration, including tips on how to deal with the unavailability of discovery, see Effective Use of ADR §9.69.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.41 c. Witness and Document Lists

The arbitration statutes provide for an abbreviated exchange of information before the hearing if (1) the amount in controversy exceeds $50,000 and the arbitrator is notified in writing of this fact and (2) the action does not involve a tort claim for death or bodily injury, a collective bargaining agreement, or an arbitration agreement that expressly provides otherwise. CCP §1282.2(a)(2). Once these prerequisites are satisfied, either party may, within 15 days after receipt of the notice of hearing, demand a list of witnesses to be called, including designated experts, and a list of documents the other party intends to introduce. CCP §1282.2(a)(2)(A).

NOTE: The parties may modify this procedure in the arbitration agreement.

§45.43 e. Arbitration Hearing

Although arbitration is often less formal than a judicial proceeding, the parties have a right to representation and any contractual waiver of that right can be revoked. CCP §1282.4(a). Each party, as well as the arbitrator, also has the right to serve subpoenas and subpoenas duces tecum to secure the presence of witnesses and the production of evidence at the arbitration hearing. CCP §1282.6. The testimony of witnesses need not be given under oath unless requested by a party (CCP §1282.2(d)); however, witnesses are usually sworn. Although live witnesses are preferred, witnesses may be allowed to provide testimony by telephone or affidavit.

Neither the rules on the admissibility and exclusion of evidence nor the rules of judicial procedure applies to arbitration hearings, unless the parties' agreement provides otherwise. CCP §1282.2(d); Sapp v Barenfeld (1949) 34 C2d 515, 520, 212 P2d 233. See also Effective Use of ADR §9.75.

NOTE: The parties may agree to make the arbitration hearing more formal by, e.g., requiring the application of rules of evidence.

An informal preliminary hearing is often used in arbitrations to discuss, e.g., the availability of witnesses, the determination of the extent to which the evidence rules will be applied, the issuance of subpoenas, and the exchange of briefs.

The arbitrator's discretion in conducting the hearing is exceedingly broad, unless the agreement provides otherwise. On arbitrator's powers, see Effective Use of ADR §9.74.

At the beginning of the hearing, the parties generally will be required to file arbitration briefs setting forth the facts that each intends to prove, together with an analysis of the applicable law. Once the arbitration hearings are concluded, arbitrators will often request postarbitration briefs from each party, setting out the party's arguments, the conclusions he or she wants the arbitrators to reach, and the reasons for those conclusions. Additionally, if the damages are complex, arbitrators may request briefing on how damages are to be computed.

Arbitration exhibits should be comprehensible and persuasive, and should demonstrate as little bias as possible. If the controversy justifies the expense, a court reporter should attend, at the request of one or both parties, to record and transcribe the proceedings.

For practical tips on the preparation of briefs and exhibits, see Effective Use of ADR §9.77.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.44 5. Effect of Arbitration on Other Proceedings

Arbitration may affect pending or other related proceedings, as well as the parties' pursuit of provisional remedies. For example, a party to an arbitration agreement may petition the court to consolidate all or part of separate arbitration proceedings under CCP §1281.3.

If an action is pending that involves the same issues sought to be arbitrated, counsel for the party desiring arbitration may want to file a motion under CCP §1281.4 to stay the pending action or proceeding, in addition to the petition to compel arbitration. Section 1281.4 requires the court to stay a proceeding, or sever and stay any issue, that is subject to arbitration until the completion of the arbitration. Heritage Provider Network v Superior Court (2008) 158 CA4th 1146, 1152, 70 CR3d 645.

PRACTICE TIP: A motion to stay proceedings may be useful because it will bring all the potentially responsible parties into one forum, which may facilitate settlement or trial. A party may decide not to bring such a motion, however, in the belief that it may gain a tactical advantage from a prompt arbitration. On filing a motion to stay, see CCP §1281.4 and Cal Rules of Ct 3.650.

An arbitrator may have the power to grant provisional remedies, e.g., preliminary injunction, appointment of a receiver, or attachment, according to the terms of the agreement to arbitrate. Some difficult issues arise, however, when a party to an arbitration agreement seeks ancillary relief from the court either before arbitration is commenced or while arbitration proceedings are pending. Obtaining injunctive relief may constitute an estoppel to seeking arbitration later. See generally Freshman, Mulvaney, Marantz, Comsky, Kahan & Deutsch v Superior Court (1985) 173 CA3d 223, 236, 218 CR 533, citing Writers Guild of Am., W., Inc. v Screen Gems, Inc. (1969) 274 CA2d 367, 374, 79 CR 208. A court may provide provisional relief as an adjunct to arbitration. See generally Loeb & Loeb v Beverly Glen Music, Inc. (1985) 166 CA3d 1110, 1116, 212 CR 830. Thus, before pursuing ancillary judicial remedies, counsel should carefully consider the potential impact on future or pending arbitration proceedings.

6. Arbitration Awards and Remedies

§45.45 a. Award

The arbitration award must be in writing and "include a determination of all the questions submitted to the arbitrators the decision of which is necessary in order to determine the controversy." CCP §1283.4. However, arbitrators may base their decision on "broad principles of justice and equity, and in doing so may expressly or impliedly reject a claim that a party might successfully have asserted in a judicial action." Sapp v Barenfeld (1949) 34 C2d 515, 523, 212 P2d 233; Case v Alperson (1960) 181 CA2d 757, 761, 5 CR 635. Findings of fact are not required nor is the arbitrator required to disclose the rationale or reasons for the award. Cothron v Interinsurance Exch. (1980) 103 CA3d 853, 860, 163 CR 240; Interinsurance Exch. v Bailes (1963) 219 CA2d 830, 837, 33 CR 533.

For discussion of the arbitration award, including amending awards and the service and timing of an award, see §45.49. See also Effective Use of ADR §§9.78-9.86.

NOTE: An award following a contractual arbitration proceeding is not a "favorable termination," for the purposes of a subsequent malicious prosecution action. Thus, a person may not sue for malicious prosecution of an action that the parties resolved through contractual arbitration. This rule applies whether the underlying action began in court and ended in contractual arbitration or whether it began and ended in arbitration. Brennan v Tremco, Inc. (2001) 25 C4th 310, 314, 105 CR2d 790.

§45.46 b. Remedies

An arbitrator's award may provide for any remedy that is rationally drawn from the contract as interpreted by the arbitrator. Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. v Intel Corp. (1994) 9 C4th 362, 36 CR2d 581; but see Broughton v CIGNA Healthplans (1999) 21 C4th 1066, 90 CR2d 334 (court held that injunctive relief portion of claim brought under Consumers Legal Remedies Act (CLRA) (CC §§1750-1784) could not be arbitrated, although claim for damages under CLRA could be); Cruz v PacifiCare Health Sys., Inc. (2003) 30 C4th 303, 133 CR2d 58 (extended Broughton to include claims to enjoin unfair competition under Bus & P C §§17200-17210 and to enjoin misleading advertising under Bus & P C §§17500-17509).

§45.47 c. Fees and Costs

Unless the arbitration agreement provides otherwise, each party must pay its prorata share of the expenses and fees of the arbitrator and its own attorney and witness fees. CCP §1284.2. Kauffman v Shearson Hayden Stone, Inc. (1982) 128 CA3d 809, 180 CR 566.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel representing a party stipulating to arbitration that is to be governed by CCP §§1280-1294.2 or drafting an arbitration clause in a contract should consider including a clause that provides for an award of costs and fees to the prevailing party. On attorney fee awards in arbitration, see Effective Use of ADR §9.81.

§45.48 d. Award Finality

Generally, the arbitrator's decision is final and binding whether or not it is correct in law or in fact, even if the "error appears on the face of the award and causes substantial injustice to the parties." Moncharsh v Heily & Blase (1992) 3 C4th 1, 6, 10 CR2d 183; Briggs v Resolution Remedies (2008) 168 CA4th 1395, 1400, 86 CR3d 396 (no judicial review of arbitrator's discretionary prehearing stay order). The sufficiency of the evidence is not reviewable. Case v Alperson (1960) 181 CA2d 757, 761, 5 CR 635. The award will be upheld if it is "even arguably based on the contract; it may be vacated only if the reviewing court is compelled to infer the award was based on an extrinsic source." Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. v Intel Corp. (1994) 9 C4th 362, 381, 36 CR2d 581. See also Bosack v Soward (9th Cir 2009) 573 F3d 891, 899 (arbitration panel's good faith misinterpretation of governing law and factual errors insufficient grounds to vacate award under Federal Arbitration Act).

An exception to this rule is when the arbitration agreement provides for judicial review on the merits. Cable Connection, Inc. v DIRECTV, Inc. (2008) 44 C4th 1334, 1361, 1364, 82 CR3d 229; Christensen v Smith (2009) 171 CA4th 931, 935, 90 CR3d 57 (provision stating merely that arbitrator "shall render an award in accordance with substantive California law" does not provide basis for judicial review). In addition, an arbitrator's award may not extend beyond the issues that were arbitrable under the contract between the parties. See California Faculty Ass'n v Superior Court (1998) 63 CA4th 935, 75 CR2d 1.

NOTE: Full judicial review is required for discovery orders of an arbitrator affecting a third party. Bergland v Arthroscopic & Laser Surgery Ctr. (2008) 44 C4th 528, 538, 79 CR3d 370.

The sole grounds for vacation of the award are listed in CCP §1286.2(a) and include fraud or some other fundamental defect in the process itself. However, a limited exception to the finality rule exists for an error that is so egregious that it yields a result entirely beyond the parties' expectations, e.g., when the arbitrator exceeds his or her powers by arbitrarily remaking the contract under which the arbitration occurs (PG&E v Superior Court (1993) 15 CA4th 576, 19 CR2d 295) or when finality of the award would be inconsistent with protection of a party's statutory rights (Board of Educ. v Round Valley Teachers Ass'n (1996) 13 C4th 269, 52 CR2d 115; Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. v Intel Corp., supra). See also Burlage v Superior Court (2009) 178 CA4th 524, 530, 100 CR3d 531 (arbitrator's exclusion of material evidence substantially prejudiced party and undermined "fundamental principle" of CCP 1286.2(a)(5)).

In Moncharsh v Heily & Blase, supra, the supreme court established judicial review and invalidation of an arbitration award that in effect violated public policy. This "public policy" exception was successfully argued in Jordan v DMV (2002) 100 CA4th 431, 123 CR2d 122 (arbitration award violated clear expression of public policy against making gifts of public funds). See also City of Palo Alto v Service Employees Int'l Union, Local 715 (1999) 77 CA4th 327, 91 CR2d 500.

§45.49 e. Confirming, Correcting, or Vacating Award

An arbitration award made under a private agreement is not automatically entered as a judgment in the matter. After the arbitration award has been made, any party to the arbitration may petition the court to confirm, correct, or vacate the award. CCP §1285. When a petition to vacate is not timely opposed, the allegations of the petition are deemed admitted. CCP §1290.6; Taheri Law Group, A.P.C. v Sorokurs (2009) 176 CA4th 956, 960, 98 CR3d 634. However, this does not mean that the court must grant the petition; the court must draw its own conclusions from the allegations and confirm, correct, or vacate the award as appropriate. 176 CA4th at 960.

Parties may agree to waive their rights to challenge a binding arbitration award. See Allstate Ins. Co. v Superior Court (2006) 142 CA4th 356, 48 CR3d 266 (trial court not permitted to vacate award in favor of homeowners and remand for further consideration when parties agreed to waive their rights to challenge award). An award that is not confirmed or vacated acts as a contract between the parties to the arbitration. CCP §1287.6.

If a petition or response seeks to confirm a properly served and filed award, the court must confirm it unless it corrects or vacates the award or dismisses the proceedings. CCP §1286. See Weinberg v Safeco Ins. Co. (2004) 114 CA4th 1075, 1083, 8 CR3d 224; Ajida Technols., Inc. v Roos Instruments, Inc. (2001) 87 CA4th 534, 537, 104 CR2d 686; see also Law Offices of David S. Karton v Segreto (2009) 176 CA4th 1, 8, 97 CR3d 329 (when one party failed to petition trial court to confirm award and other party petitioned court to correct award, error to simply deny petition; court required under CCP §1286 to confirm initial award if it did not correct, vacate, or dismiss it); Landis v Pinkertons, Inc. (2004) 122 CA4th 985, 18 CR3d 890 (trial court properly confirmed award despite petitioners' failure to comply with statutory procedure). If the arbitration agreement contains a severance clause, and a provision in the agreement is invalid or unenforceable, the remainder of the agreement is valid and enforceable. Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum Auth. v CC Partners (2002) 101 CA4th 635, 646, 124 CR2d 363, disapproved on other grounds in Cable Connection, Inc. v DIRECTV, Inc. (2008) 44 C4th 1334, 1361, 82 CR3d 229.

A final award may be amended at any time before judicial confirmation of the award. A.M. Classic Constr., Inc. v Tri-Build Dev. Co. (1999) 70 CA4th 1470, 1478, 83 CR2d 449. In Century City Med. Plaza v Sperling, Isaacs & Eisenberg (2001) 86 CA4th 865, 103 CR2d 605, the court added the additional condition that an amended award must be made during the allowed time for correction of an award. See CCP §§1284, 1286.6. In Delaney v Dahl (2002) 99 CA4th 647, 659, 121 CR2d 663, the court rejected this additional condition, and held only that the amended award must be consistent with other findings on the merits and not cause demonstrable prejudice against any party's legitimate interests. See also Law Offices of David S. Karton, 176 CA4th at 5 (noting that State Bar's Committee on Mandatory Fee Arbitration has issued "Arbitration Advisory" recognizing conflict between Century City Med. Plaza and Delaney, and choosing to follow Delaney).

If confirmed, an award is entered as a judgment and has the same force and effect as a judgment in a civil action of the same jurisdictional classification and may be enforced like any other such judgment. CCP §1287.4; Wade v Schrader (2008) 168 CA4th 1039, 1045, 85 CR3d 865.

Although an arbitrator may issue incremental or successive awards in deciding all issues of a case, an arbitrator may not use this process to correct or modify a confirmed award. Roehl v Ritchie (2007) 147 CA4th 338, 351, 54 CR3d 185 (arbitrator's reservation of jurisdiction to issue second award did not lead to modification of first confirmed award).

The court must vacate the award if it finds any of the grounds listed in CCP §1286.2. Advantage Med. Servs., LLC v Hoffman (2008) 160 CA4th 806, 72 CR3d 935 (arbitrator failed to disclose business relationship with insurer). Section 1286.2 is the exclusive grounds for vacating an award. Mossman v City of Oakdale (2009) 170 CA4th 83, 88, 87 CR3d 764. Inadequate disclosure is not grounds to challenge an arbitration award, if the party knew of the deficiencies and consented to the arbitrator. Dornbirer v Kaiser Found. Hosp. Plan, Inc. (2008) 166 CA4th 831, 842, 83 CR3d 116.

NOTE: On the time limits for filing a petition to confirm, correct, or vacate an award, see CCP §1288 and Effective Use of ADR §9.83.

Parties to an arbitration agreement may agree to contractually expand the scope of judicial review beyond that provided by statute, i.e., to provide for judicial review of the merits of the arbitrator's decision. See CCP §§1286.2, 1286.6; Cable Connection, Inc. v DIRECTV, Inc. (2008) 44 C4th 1334, 1361, 1364, 82 CR3d 229. The parties may also agree to an appellate step to the arbitration in which another arbitrator reviews the award under normal appellate standards of review. See Cummings v Future Nissan (2005) 128 CA4th 321, 27 CR3d 10 (provision in arbitration agreement for second-level review of arbitration award was not unconscionable).

§45.50 f. Appeal

The following arbitration orders are appealable (see CCP §1294):

- Order dismissing a petition to confirm, correct, or vacate (CCP §1287.2);
- Order vacating an award, unless a rehearing in arbitration is ordered;
- Judgment entered in accordance with the arbitration statutes; and
- Special order after final judgment.

NOTE: Although a judgment confirming an arbitration award is generally appealable, it may not be appealed when there are causes of action remaining to be tried in the proceeding. Rubin v Western Mut. Ins. Co. (1999) 71 CA4th 1539, 1547, 84 CR2d 648.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/45 Alternative Dispute Resolution/§45.51 7. Neutral Arbitrator Ethics Rules

§45.51 7. Neutral Arbitrator Ethics Rules

Except for arbitrators of public or private sector collective bargaining agreements, any person selected to serve as a neutral arbitrator in a contractual arbitration hearing conducted in California or under an arbitration agreement subject to the California Arbitration Act must comply with the Ethics Standards for Neutral Arbitrators in Contractual Arbitration (Ethics Standards) as adopted by the Judicial Council. See CCP §1281.85. The Ethics Standards appear in Cal Rules of Ct, Title 10. Arbitrators must also comply with CCP §1281.9(a)(1) (incorporating CCP §170.1 grounds for disqualification of a judge) and §1281.91 (disqualification of a neutral arbitrator).

The standards are intended to establish the minimum standards of conduct for neutral arbitrators and are expressly not intended to affect any civil cause of action or create any new civil cause of action. See Cal Rules of Ct, Ethics Standards for Neutral Arbitrators in Contractual Arbitration 1(d).

For discussion of ethics in contractual arbitration, see Effective Use of ADR, chap 10.

§45.52 D. Judicial Arbitration

Recognizing that litigation of small cases had become complex and costly and that parties were being denied the right to prompt resolution of minor civil disputes, the legislature saw the need for mandatory court-ordered arbitration. CCP §1141.10. The legislature endorsed arbitration as a proven, efficient, and equitable method for resolving small civil cases (CCP §1141.10), and enacted a system of mandatory court-ordered arbitration (CCP §§1141.10-1141.31; Cal Rules of Ct 3.810-3.830). The ethics standards for arbitrators in the judicial arbitration program are set out in CCP §1141.18(d), Cal Rules of Ct 3.816, and the California Code of Judicial Ethics (see Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 6(D)).

For full discussion of judicial arbitration, see chap 37 and Effective Use of ADR, chap 11.

E. Settlement Conference

§45.53 1. Process

A settlement conference is a form of nonbinding mediation before a judge, unless the parties agree that it should be binding. The settlement conference may be sponsored by the court system, or the parties may agree to a settlement conference before a retired judge through one of the private retired judge systems. Settlement conferences may be mandatory or voluntary. For discussion of judicial settlement conferences, see Effective Use of ADR §1.9; on mediation, see §45.15 and Effective Use of ADR, chaps 5-6.

WARNING: Settlement conferences under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380 are not protected by mediation confidentiality. Evid C §1117(b)(2). A footnote in Rojas v Superior Court (2004) 33 C4th 407, 417 n4, 15 CR3d 643, suggests that in any given case the question of whether a court-ordered conference is a "mediation" or a "settlement conference" may be an open question. In Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. v Superior Court (2005) 126 CA4th 1131, 1139 n8, 24 CR3d 751, the court expressly declined to clarify any differences that might exist between a mediation and a voluntary settlement conference. The court cautioned against construing its decision as holding that all voluntary settlement conferences are mediations subject to mediation confidentiality rules.

Witnesses do not testify at a settlement conference. The parties may be asked initially to describe the facts and explain their positions, or the judge may ask each party to address specific issues. The judge may then speak privately to the attorney for each party, going over the strengths and weaknesses of each position and exploring various settlement possibilities. Without disclosing any party's top or bottom settlement figure, the judge may go back and forth between the parties, attempting to have each side compromise enough to reach a reasonable settlement acceptable to all. On negotiating the monetary settlement through the use of a mediator, see Effective Use of ADR §§6.26-6.33.

The success or failure of the settlement conference depends on the parties' willingness to realistically assess the strengths and weaknesses of their cases and negotiate in good faith. It also depends on the skill of the judge as a mediator and on whether the judge has carefully reviewed the statements in advance and is familiar with the facts and issues in the case. Some judges are "born" mediators, while others use the full force of their judicial position to convince a party to settle. An effective settlement judge draws not only on his or her legal knowledge and experience but also on the respect parties tend to accord to the judiciary itself.

A useful variation of the settlement conference is the binding "high-low" conference, generally suggested by either plaintiff's counsel or an insurance company in a personal injury case. Variously referred to as a binding settlement conference, binding mediation, or binding arbitration, the basic format and goal is always the same. Before the conference, the parties have agreed to an unannounced minimum and maximum floor and ceiling. These figures will not be revealed to the judge, to avoid any tendency by the judge to "split the difference," and to get a true value for the case. At the conference, each side makes an abbreviated presentation as they would in an informal settlement conference, and then the judge sets a value on the case. If the judge's assessment of damages is outside the predetermined parameters, the parties' high-low figures set the limits. Because the high-low conference is entered into by stipulation of all parties, it is available at both court and private settlement conferences.

2. Court-Sponsored Conferences

§45.54 a. Mandatory Settlement Conference

On the court's own motion or at the request of any party, the court may set a mandatory settlement conference. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380(a). Most superior courts have adopted local rules for scheduling mandatory settlement conferences. See e.g., San Francisco Ct R 5.0(C) (mandatory settlement conference must be set within 3 weeks of date set for trial). In cases subject to the delay reduction rules (see chap 40), the court must set an initial case management conference within 180 days of the filing of the initial complaint (Cal Rules of Ct 3.721); the date and time of an early settlement conference may be set at the case management conference.

Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380(d), the court cannot appoint a person to conduct a mediation, or appoint a person to conduct the settlement conference who is also serving as a mediator in the action. See also Jeld-Wen, Inc. v Superior Court (2007) 146 CA4th 536, 53 CR3d 115 (case management-ordered mediation was improper).

Trial counsel, parties, and persons with full authority to settle the case must personally attend the conference, unless they are excused by the court for good cause. If any consent to settle is required for any reason, the party with consensual authority must be personally present at the conference. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380(b). Before the conference, the parties must submit a mandatory settlement conference statement containing a good faith settlement demand, summarizing the case, setting out the disputed issues, and attaching relevant documents. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380(c).

NOTE: The format and content of the statement, as well as the format and rules of the conference, may vary according to local rules of court or the rules of the private system. Because the California Rules of Court do not contain format rules for settlement conference statements, counsel should check with the settlement conference judge to determine what is required.

For an in-depth discussion of mandatory settlement conferences, see §§40.71-40.85.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/45 Alternative Dispute Resolution/§45.55 b. Voluntary Settlement Conference

§45.55 b. Voluntary Settlement Conference

Counsel desiring to settle a case early in the proceeding should schedule a voluntary settlement conference before a judge. Such conferences often prove fruitful from the standpoint of obtaining an independent evaluation of verdict value and settlement potential. On the benefits of using objective standards, including the evaluation of a third-party neutral, see Effective Use of ADR §3.212.

Some courts by local rule permit voluntary or "specially set" settlement conferences. See e.g. San Francisco Ct R 5.0(D).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/45 Alternative Dispute Resolution/§45.56 3. Private Settlement Conference

§45.56 3. Private Settlement Conference

In addition to court-sponsored settlement conferences, the parties can submit their case to a retired private judge for a settlement conference. Private settlement conferences can often be scheduled more quickly than through the courts and offer the parties more flexibility in calendaring and more freedom in selecting the judge. The parties, however, must pay the costs of private settlement conferences; there is no charge for settlement conferences scheduled in the courts.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.57 F. Mini-Trial

A mini-trial is a voluntary, confidential, and nonbinding procedure consisting of an informal, summary presentation of each party's best case by the attorneys and experts. Generally, the case is presented to business executives, one from each side of the dispute, who have the authority to negotiate a settlement. A neutral adviser may preside over the mini-trial and offer an advisory opinion to facilitate settlement. The mini-trial is a sophisticated settlement conference that may be particularly helpful in cases involving complex questions of mixed law and fact that typically arise, e.g., in patent, product liability, antitrust, and unfair competition cases.

As with all ADR mechanisms, the mini-trial can be structured to meet the parties' particular needs. Usually, the parties agree to a basic framework and set the ground rules. They exchange information informally before trial unless the dispute is in the advanced stages of litigation, in which case they continue formal discovery procedures. The hearing generally lasts from half a day to 4 days. The attorneys and experts are able to present their cases to their best advantage, to ask questions directly, and to use exhibits and visual aids liberally.

The party representatives, having heard all the evidence, withdraw from the attorneys, the neutral adviser, and the parties emotionally involved in the dispute. These representatives then attempt to negotiate a resolution based on sound business judgment and expertise.

A potential disadvantage of the mini-trial is the opportunity it provides a less than candid party for not disclosing all information until trial. If the case does not settle after the mini-trial, one side may take advantage of the disclosed trial strategies of the other side. In most cases, however, subsequent discovery will minimize this risk.

§45.58 G. Trial by Private Judge

An increasing number of retired judges have been recruited by the public and the State Bar to preside over private trials. The use of private judges has been popularized as "rent-a-judge," a generic phrase referring to referees under an order of reference (see §§45.59-45.60), as well as to temporary judges appointed under Cal Const art VI, §21 (see §§45.61-45.62).

© The Regents of the University of California

1. Trial by Referee

§45.59 a. Procedure

Parties Stipulate to a Reference. The court may, on stipulation of all parties, refer any or all issues in a pending lawsuit for trial by a referee. CCP §638; see Cal Rules of Ct 3.900-3.910. If the entire case is referenced, the resulting decision will stand as the decision of the court, and when the decision is filed, judgment may be entered as if the matter had been tried by the court. CCP §644. If the agreement addresses the payment of the referee's fees, it shall be enforced as written. Carr Bus. Enters. v City of Chowchilla (2008) 165 CA4th 1568, 82 CR3d 64. If the agreement does not address the payment of fees, the court may apportion the fees in any manner determined by the court to be fair and reasonable. CCP §645.1.

NOTE: In practice, it is rare to have the court reference an entire case.

Motion for Reference by One Party. A reference may also be ordered on motion of a party to a written contract or lease that provides that any controversy arising under the contract or lease will be heard by a referee. CCP §638. In the past, it was hard to find a reported court of appeal case that refused to enforce an agreement to resolve a dispute by reference procedures. This encouraged businesses to turn to judicial reference as a way to avoid the risks of a jury trial. However, Pardee Constr. Co. v Superior Court (2002) 100 CA4th 1081, 123 CR2d 288 demonstrated that courts are willing to use the same protective policy approach in consumer judicial reference cases as they have used in consumer arbitration cases. In Pardee, the court refused to enforce a judicial reference provision in a form contract used by a developer, reasoning that the contract was procedurally defective because the judicial reference provision was buried in the contract and it did not define or explain the term "judicial reference." The court also held that the contract was substantively unconscionable because it waived punitive damages and the buyer received no consideration for waiving a jury. But see Greenbriar Homes Communities, Inc. v Superior Court (2004) 117 CA4th 337, 11 CR3d 371 (reference provision in home sales contract not unconscionable and thus could be enforced against original buyers; court could not decline to enforce reference provision to avoid multiplicity of lawsuits); Woodside Homes, Inc. v Superior Court (2003) 107 CA4th 723, 132 CR2d 35 (distinguishing Pardee and enforcing judicial reference provision in residential sales contract).

Court Orders Issue(s) Referenced. The court may also, without the parties' consent, order a particular issue, e.g., discovery, refereed. CCP §639; see Cal Rules of Ct 3.920-3.926. When the court appoints a referee without the parties' consent, it must be by written order, which includes a finding either that (1) no party has established an economic inability to pay a prorata share of the costs of the reference or (2) another party has agreed voluntarily to pay the prorata share of the referee's fee that would otherwise be paid by the party with the economic inability. CCP §639(d)(6). If the court appoints a discovery referee, it must specify in its order whether the referee is being appointed for all discovery purposes and include a statement of the extraordinary circumstances that make the appointment necessary. CCP §639(c), (d)(2). See also Hood v Superior Court (1999) 72 CA4th 446, 449, 85 CR2d 114. These special referees are sometimes called "special masters."

Court Appoints Referee. If the parties agree to have the entire case heard by a referee, the court will appoint from one to three persons designated by the parties. CCP §640. If the parties cannot agree, the court may appoint from one to three referees. Alternatively, the reference may be to a court commissioner in the county where the action is pending. CCP §640. See Estate of Doran (1956) 138 CA2d 541, 292 P2d 655 (substantial compliance with requirement that all parties consent).

Referee Issues "Statement of Decision." If there is a general reference, the referee tries all issues, whether of fact or law, and renders a statement of decision. CCP §638. The statement of decision must be submitted in writing within 20 days after the testimony is closed. CCP §643. The referee's findings become part of the judgment roll. Chiarodit v Chiarodit (1933) 218 C 147, 21 P2d 562. Judgment may be entered after the referee's statement of decision is filed, as if the action had been tried by the court. CCP §644. A party may appeal from the judgment entered in accordance with the referee's decision under the rules of appellate procedure, just as from a regular trial court judgment. CCP §645.

Procedures and Rules of Evidence in Referenced Cases. Because a general reference is almost always made only on agreement of the parties, the procedures and rules of evidence are also generally a matter of stipulation in these cases. The statutory rules of evidence and procedure govern a general reference made on motion of a party or on the court's own motion. It is not always clear whether the parties to a stipulation intend to engage in a reference or contractual arbitration. It is important to distinguish, however, because governing procedures and the applicable scope of judicial review for each are quite different. On contractual arbitration, see §45.22; Effective Use of ADR, chap 9. In Sy First Family LP v Cheung (1999) 70 CA4th 1334, 83 CR2d 340, for example, the parties entered into a stipulation that used the word "reference" in its title and referred to CCP §638, but, on the other hand, provided the matter would be tried by the American Arbitration Association (AAA) under AAA rules. The appellate court found that, given the fact that the parties agreed at the hearing that the panel could issue an "arbitration award," the parties could not later object that they intended a reference. 70 CA4th at 1344.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/45 Alternative Dispute Resolution/§45.60 b. Advantages and Disadvantages

§45.60 b. Advantages and Disadvantages

The advantages of a trial by a referee include the following:

- The parties select their own referee. The referees need not be attorneys. In fact, parties often opt for those with special expertise in the subject matter of the dispute. The parties' mutual selection of the trier of law and fact results in fewer appeals.
- The parties set the trial at a mutually convenient time.
- The parties may agree to simplified rules of evidence and procedures.
- The parties retain their right to appeal. However, unlike judicial arbitration (CCP §§1141.10-1141.31), there is no right to a trial de novo following trial on reference.

Potential disadvantages of a trial by a referee include the following:

- The referee's powers terminate when the statement of decision is filed. All subsequent motions must be presented to the court before a judicial officer unfamiliar with the case.
- The referee cannot punish for contempt. The referee's powers are strictly defined by the order of reference.

2. Trial by Temporary Judge

§45.61 a. Appointment

The California Constitution provides civil litigants the opportunity to resolve their disputes in a private trial presided over by a temporary judge. California Constitution art VI, §21 provides: "On stipulation of the parties litigant the court may order a cause to be tried by a temporary judge who is a member of the State Bar, sworn and empowered to act until final determination of the cause." A stipulation to a particular temporary judge, however, does not allow the court to transfer the matter to another temporary judge over a party's objection if the first judge becomes unavailable. Kim v Superior Court (1998) 64 CA4th 256, 75 CR2d 468.

Under Cal Rules of Ct 2.831, there must be a written stipulation, including the name and office address of the proposed temporary judge, the stipulation must be approved by the presiding or supervising judge of the court, and the temporary judge must consent to the stipulation and take an oath of office (unless a court commissioner is the temporary judge).

PRACTICE TIP: Because the California Constitution refers expressly to "parties litigant," a contractual dispute resolution clause providing for trial by a temporary judge in the event of a future dispute would not be enforceable. However, there is no bar to providing in a contract for the resolution of future disputes by use of an order on reference. On trial by referee, see §§45.59-45.60.

California Rules of Court 2.831(e)-(f), 2.832 provide for such matters as disqualification of a privately compensated temporary judge under CCP §§170.1-170.5, use of court facilities and court personnel, hearings (trials) that are open and accessible to the public and of which notice has been given, withdrawal of the stipulation for appointment of a temporary judge, sealing the records, and intervention by another in the case. Temporary judges serve without compensation unless the parties agree in writing on a compensation rate. Cal Rules of Ct 2.832.

PRACTICE TIP: It is generally advisable to include in the stipulation for appointment of the temporary judge a waiver of the peremptory disqualification of a judge allowed by CCP §170.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.62 b. Authority

Once a temporary judge has taken the oath of office and the oath has been filed, he or she has the same authority as a sitting judge (see generally Estate of Kent (1936) 6 C2d 154, 163, 57 P2d 901), including the contempt power (see generally In re Frye (1983) 150 CA3d 407, 197 CR 755; Rosenstock v Municipal Court (1976) 61 CA3d 1, 132 CR 59), and enjoys full judicial immunity (see generally 66 Ops Cal Atty Gen 69 (1983)). The trial is conducted under California rules of evidence and procedure (see Evid C §300) unless the parties agree otherwise. Private trials are held in an attorney's office, a public courtroom, or facilities provided by the private judging company. A privately retained court reporter records the proceedings.

The temporary judge renders a decision and enters judgments in the same manner as a sitting judge and submits a statement of decision when and as required by CCP §632 and Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590. The temporary judge retains jurisdiction to hear posttrial motions, such as a motion for a new trial (see Anderson v Bledsoe (1934) 139 CA 650, 34 P2d 760). The parties can appeal the judgment as in any civil case decided by an active judge. See Comment, 17 UC Davis L Rev 611 (Winter 1984).

§45.63 c. Differences Between Temporary Judges and Referees

There are a number of differences between a temporary judge and a referee. Some of the most important differences are:

- A temporary judge retains jurisdiction after a decision is rendered until final determination of the case, and a referee does not; a temporary judge enters judgment in the case, and a referee does not.
- A temporary judge must be a member of the State Bar; a referee can be any qualified person mutually acceptable to the parties.
- A temporary judge must take an oath of office, and a referee does not.
- A temporary judge is empowered to punish for contempt, and a referee does not have contempt power.
- The parties must stipulate to appointment of a temporary judge, while a referee may be appointed on motion of a party to a contract providing for reference as a means of resolving disputes arising under the contract.

PRACTICE TIP: In complex litigation, many issues continue to arise after a decision is entered. The temporary judge, already familiar with the case, can resolve posttrial motions quickly and efficiently. This is a distinct advantage over a trial by a referee, who cannot hear posttrial motions.

On trial by referee, see §§45.59-45.60; on trial by temporary judge, see §§45.61-45.62.

§45.64 H. Summary Jury Trial

Another pretrial settlement technique is the summary jury trial. After discovery is complete and all pretrial motions have been resolved, a jury is impaneled to give the parties an advisory verdict based on a summary of admissible evidence presented by the attorneys. Witnesses are not allowed to testify, but the parties must attend to help reach an eventual settlement.

Summary jury trials are conducted by a judge or magistrate before a lengthy trial in those cases in which juror response is difficult to predict. Counsel submit trial briefs on legal issues as well as prospective jury instructions. In most cases, a court reporter is not present and the trial is not open to the public. The parties agree in advance to the form and effect of the verdict. Some agree to a consensus verdict on liability and damages, while others prefer an individual assessment by each juror. In some cases, the parties may agree to a binding verdict.

Because the summary jury trial is conducted on the eve of trial, the expense of discovery and trial preparation has already been incurred. However, by avoiding a lengthy jury trial, the savings from a successful settlement can be significant.

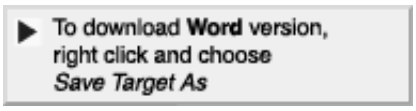
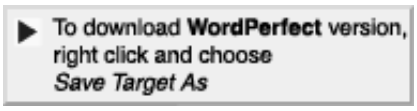
VI. FORMS

§45.65 A. Form: Sample Dispute Resolution Agreement





The following form is a sample contractual agreement for resolving disputes arising under a contract. It provides for a variety of alternative dispute resolution methods to be used on a step-by-step basis. This form may be adapted to the needs of the contracting parties by adding additional steps or provisions or by deleting any of those included in the sample form.

DISPUTE RESOLUTION AGREEMENT

I. PURPOSE

It is our objective to establish procedures to facilitate the informal and inexpensive resolution of any disputes arising under this contract by mutual cooperation and without resort to outside counsel and litigation.

To accomplish this objective, we agree that all disputes arising under this contract will be resolved by submission to binding arbitration. The parties agree that arbitration must be initiated within one year after the claimed breach occurs and that the failure to initiate arbitration within the one-year period constitutes an absolute bar to the institution of any proceedings. The parties further agree that, before the initiation of arbitration proceedings, the parties will conduct a mediation session.

II. MANDATORY PREARBITRATION ATTEMPTS TO SETTLE DISPUTES

Before initiating arbitration, persons with settlement authority shall meet face to face to discuss the dispute in the presence of a mutually selected mediator.

III. ARBITRATION

The aggrieved party may initiate arbitration by sending written notice of an intention to arbitrate by registered or certified mail to all parties and to the arbitrator. The notice must contain a description of the dispute, the amount involved, and the remedy sought.

§45.66 B. Form: Negotiated Submission Agreement

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

The following form may be used by parties after a dispute has arisen either to modify existing contractual provisions for arbitration or as a separate agreement to arbitrate the dispute.

NEGOTIATED SUBMISSION AGREEMENT

1. This agreement is made between _ _[names of parties]_ _ regarding a dispute that has arisen between them.

2. The parties submit their existing dispute for _ _[nonbinding/binding]_ _ arbitration.

3. The dispute involves _ _[briefly describe nature of controversy, amount of money at issue, and remedy sought]_ _.

4. The Arbitrator

[Option 1]

The parties agree to __ _[name]_ __ to serve as arbitrator.

[Option 2]

The parties request __ _[name]_ __, an arbitration service, to provide the names of three potential arbitrators, giving each party the opportunity to strike one name. The remaining arbitrator will be accepted by the parties.

[Option 3]

The parties agree to arbitration by a three-member panel. The parties request __ _[name]_ __, an arbitration service, to provide the names of five potential arbitrators, giving each party the opportunity to strike one name. The three remaining arbitrators will be accepted by the parties as the arbitration panel.

[Continue]

5. Prehearing Conference

A prehearing conference will be scheduled at which the parties will agree on procedural matters, arrange for the exchange of information, obtain stipulations, and attempt to narrow the issues to be arbitrated.

6. Discovery

[Option 1]

The parties will submit a proposed discovery schedule to the arbitrator(s) at the prehearing conference. The scope and duration of discovery will be within the sole discretion of the arbitrator(s).

[Option 2]

It is our objective to expedite the arbitration proceedings by placing the following limitations on discovery:

a. Each party may propound only one interrogatory requesting the names and addresses of the witnesses to be called at the arbitration hearing.

b. On a date to be determined at the prehearing conference, each party may serve one request for the production of documents. The documents are to be exchanged within 15 days after the demand.

c. Each party may depose _ _[insert number]_ _ witnesses. Each deposition must be concluded within four hours and all depositions must be taken within 30 days after the prehearing conference. Any party deposing an opponent's expert must pay the expert's fee for attending the deposition.

[Option 3]

It is our objective to expedite the arbitration proceedings by eliminating discovery as provided by the California Civil Discovery Act (CCP §§2016.010-2036.050). Instead of discovery, the parties agree to the following exchange of information:

a. Either party may make a written demand for lists of the witnesses to be called or the documents to be introduced at the hearing. The demand must be received before the prehearing conference.

b. The lists must be served within 15 days after the demand has been mailed.

c. No depositions may be taken for discovery.

[Continue]

7. The Hearing

a. Hearing Briefs

The parties must file briefs with the arbitrator(s) at least three days before the hearing, specifying the facts each intends to prove and analyzing the applicable law.

b. Powers of Arbitrator

(1) Evidence

Judicial rules of evidence and procedure relating to the conduct of the hearing, examination of witnesses, and presentation of evidence do not apply. The arbitrator(s) will admit any relevant evidence, including hearsay, if it is the sort of evidence on which responsible persons are accustomed to rely in the conduct of serious affairs, regardless of the admissibility of such evidence in a court of law.

(2) Inspection and Investigation

An arbitrator finding it necessary to make an investigation or inspection must notify the parties of the time and place. The arbitrator must provide them with an oral or written report and give them an opportunity to comment.

(3) Adjournments

The arbitrator(s) may, without special notice, recess the hearing and reconvene at reasonable and warranted times and intervals.

(4) Closing the Hearing

The arbitrator(s) will close the hearing after presentation of the evidence or receipt of final briefs, if requested. The time limit within which the award must be filed begins to run from the closing of the hearing.

(5) Reopening the Hearing

The arbitrator(s) may reopen the hearing at the request of either party any time before the award is made.

c. Rights of Parties

(1) Representation by Counsel

The parties have the right to representation by legal counsel throughout the arbitration proceedings.

(2) Presentation of Evidence and Cross-Examination

Within reasonable limits, both sides at the hearing may call and examine witnesses for relevant testimony, introduce relevant exhibits or other documents, cross-examine or impeach witnesses who have testified orally on any matter relevant to the issues, and otherwise rebut evidence, as long as these rights are exercised in an efficient and expeditious manner.

(3) Record of Hearing

Any party desiring a stenographic record may hire a court reporter to attend the proceedings. The requesting party must notify the other parties of the arrangements before the hearing and must pay the costs.

(4) Oaths

On the request of any party, the oral evidence will be given under oath.

8. The Award

a. Scope

The decision will be based on the evidence introduced at the hearing, including all logical and reasonable inferences made from it. The arbitrator(s) may grant any remedy or relief that is just and equitable.

b. Time

The award must be mailed promptly to the parties no later than 30 days from the closing of the hearing.

c. Form

The award, which must be made in writing and signed by either the arbitrator or a majority of the arbitrators, will contain a concise statement of the reasons supporting the decision.

9. Fees and Expenses

a. Witnesses

Each party must pay its own witness fees.

b. Arbitrators

Each party must pay its prorata share of the arbitrator fees.

c. Attorneys

[Option 1]

The arbitrator(s) __ _[has/have]_ __ the authority to award attorney fees to the prevailing party.

[Option 2]

The arbitrator(s) must award attorney fees to the prevailing party.

[Option 3]

Each party must pay its own attorney fees.

[Continue]

10. Finality

The award can be judicially confirmed, corrected, or vacated under Code of Civil Procedure §§1285-1288.8.

The award is final and binding, and there is no direct appeal from the award on the grounds of error in the application of the law.

I. INTRODUCTION

§46.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter tracks the phases of a successful negotiation and the strategies that effective negotiators use in the process of reaching agreement. This chapter is also helpful for attorneys preparing to negotiate a case settlement with the assistance of a mediator. The chapter begins with preparing to negotiate, including evaluating the case and developing a negotiation strategy. See §§46.4-46.11. The next part discusses the negotiation process, from the opening remarks through the exchange of information, offers, and demands. See §§46.12-46.28. It introduces problem-solving approaches to negotiation and provides practical tips for overcoming impasse. See §§46.29-46.40. Practitioners may find it useful to copy the checklist in §46.41 into their client files for consideration when forming and implementing their negotiation strategy. The chapter also covers important considerations in memorializing a settlement after agreement has been reached (§§46.42-46.44) and briefly addresses the means of enforcing your hard-sought settlement agreement (§§46.45-46.47).

Settlement topics covered in other chapters include:

- Settlement conferences (chap 40);
- Demand for judgment under CCP §998 (chap 47);
- Sliding scale recovery agreements (chap 49);
- Determining good faith of a settlement (chap 50); and
- Special statutes and rules that govern the settlement of minor's claims (chap 9).

On settlement of actions by injured workers against third parties when an employer or workers' compensation insurer has intervened or noticed a lien, see California Workers' Damages Practice §§3.38-3.48 (2d ed Cal CEB 2001).

On settlement of personal injury actions when Medicare has noticed a lien, see California Tort Damages §16.16 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

NOTE: Business and Professions Code §6103.5(a) requires an attorney to communicate to his or her client the amount, terms, and conditions of any written settlement offer made by the opposing party.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.2 B. Terminology

Settlement. A settlement is an agreement to terminate or forestall all or part of a lawsuit. See Setzer v Moore (1927) 202 C 333, 338, 260 P 550. The agreement may be oral or written, and may be entered into by parties or by their attorneys. See §46.11 on attorneys' authority; see also §46.43 on who should sign the agreement. General principles of contract law govern the interpretation and enforcement of settlement agreements. On enforcing settlement agreements, see §§46.45-46.47; A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California, chap 13 (Cal CEB 2005).

NOTE: Stipulations made by the parties on the terms of a settlement orally before the court or in writing that may be entered as a judgment are governed by CCP §664.6.

The settlement of a lawsuit is reached when a plaintiff agrees to dismiss or otherwise terminate the action in return for a defendant's agreement to pay a specified sum or to give relief in another form. Settlement negotiations often comprise an exchange of several demands and offers before agreement is reached:

- A "demand" is a plaintiff's statement of the amount of money (or other recompense) the plaintiff would accept to release the defendant from liability.
- An "offer" is a defendant's statement of what the defendant would give to obtain a dismissal from the action and any further liability.

Counterpart. As used in this chapter, "counterpart" refers to the person on the other side of the negotiating table. Unless the other side is representing itself, this will be opposing counsel.

Party or Principal. The terms "party" or "principal" refer specifically to the client(s), not their legal representatives.

Other Side. The term "other side" refers to anyone on the other side of the negotiation, i.e., the counterpart, party, or principal, or all of them.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.3 C. The Purpose of Settlement

Before beginning to negotiate, it is worthwhile to consider the client's purpose in settling. Is it to right a wrong? To avoid litigation at whatever expense? To protect the client's reputation or ensure confidentiality? Is it a combination of purposes? There are many valid reasons to settle a case, but they should be pursued only after counsel and client have considered a more fundamental purpose. On meeting with the client and preparing for negotiation, see §46.9.

Seek a Result That Beats Litigation for Both Sides. At the most basic level, the purpose of settlement should be to place your client in a position that is superior to his or her next-best option—typically litigation—factoring in both the pros and cons of that option. For settlement to make sense, it should not be merely an alternative to litigation, it should be a better alternative. See A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §3.5 (Cal CEB 2005).

Find Ways for Both Sides to Win Relative to Litigation. Instead of approaching settlement from inside the dispute (i.e., who did what to whom, the relative strengths of each side's argument), look outside the dispute (i.e., how does a particular settlement proposal compare with the next-best alternative if no agreement is reached). Try not to think in terms of how your client can "win" in a contest with the other side, but rather how both clients can win relative to their default option of litigation.

§46.4 II. PREPARING FOR SETTLEMENT NEGOTIATION

Experienced negotiators communicate with their clients before developing a negotiation strategy and systematically work toward the goals set during the preparation stage. Essential to preparing for negotiation is counsel's evaluation of whether the client can obtain a better result through settlement compared with litigation. See §46.3.

Like any other legal proceeding, negotiation requires counsel to review the facts of the case, study the applicable legal precedent, and develop a case theory. Negotiation also involves many nonanalytical skills that most attorneys have not had an opportunity to master in law school or in a traditional litigation practice, such as listening and thinking about a solution that leaves each party better off. For practical tips on preparing for negotiation, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§2.34-2.40 (Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

A. Reviewing Facts and Law

§46.5 1. Investigate Facts

An effective negotiator learns all relevant facts about the case, including the circumstances that led to the dispute and the factors that may help the parties to focus on reaching a settlement. A review of the file may reveal that necessary information is missing, and if so, counsel must plan how to obtain it. On exchanging information with the other side, see §§46.18-46.23.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.6 a. Pleadings, Discovery, and Other Documents

Pleadings. A well-drafted complaint (either filed or sent to the other side before filing) may give the defendant significant information about the facts and, more importantly, about the plaintiff's perception of the facts. Similarly, the answer may provide insight into the defendant's fact interpretations and case theories.

Discovery. It is essential to carefully review any deposition testimony and all documents that the parties have produced in response to discovery demands. Counsel should also review any client documents that have not yet been produced to assess the strengths and weaknesses of the case.

Demand Letter. In some types of practices (e.g., personal injury), it is customary for the plaintiff to send a detailed demand letter to the defendant. For the defendant, a demand letter is an excellent source of information about the plaintiff's theory of the case and negotiation position. For the plaintiff, the demand letter is an opportunity to make an opening statement that has a significant bearing on how the parties will negotiate. For samples of form demand letters, see §§46.48-46.49.

§46.7 b. Other Sources of Information

To be fully prepared to negotiate, it may be necessary to engage in a fact-finding investigation and, if so, to assess how best to obtain the information needed for the negotiation. Information may be obtained through communication with your client or the other side. It may also be helpful to seek the assistance of individuals with experience dealing with similar disputes for ideas about typical fact patterns, important issues, or settlement terms. Counsel should investigate the applicable norms and the parties' involvement in any other lawsuits.

§46.8 2. Research Law

Attorneys are frequently called on to assess the likelihood of their clients' prevailing on the merits if their cases go to trial. Depending on the client's degree of risk aversion, counsel's analysis of the legal merits of the case may be a significant factor in determining whether the parties will engage in negotiation and how they will conduct the negotiation. In researching the law, counsel should do the following:

- Investigate Applicable Jury Instructions. Jury instructions are very helpful in summarizing the legal elements that must be proved to prevail on particular claims. See the Judicial Council of California Civil Jury Instructions (CACI), which may be viewed via links on the Administrative Office of the Courts' website at www.courtinfo.ca.gov.
- Analyze Evidence Tending to Prove Causes of Action and Affirmative Defenses. Counsel should perform a meaningful analysis of the information available, or still needed, that supports the parties' respective positions. This information in turn will enable counsel to evaluate the relative strength of the claims and defenses presented. On use of an abstract of pleadings to start this evaluation process, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §2.7 (Cal CEB 2005).
- Consider Effects of Venue. Filing the lawsuit in a county where jury verdicts are frequently large may give the plaintiff considerable leverage during the negotiation. Similarly, if a defendant stands to gain an advantage from a motion for a change of venue, defense counsel may not want to begin negotiations until the motion is filed or granted. On motions to change venue, see chap 20.
- Evaluate Feasibility of Dispositive Motion. Counsel should consider all procedural and substantive legal arguments that may allow the client to prevail on a motion that disposes of the complaint or some other part of the case. For example, if a party has a good chance of obtaining summary judgment, or summary adjudication of a cause of action or of an affirmative defense (see CCP §437c(f)(1)), counsel should consider filing the motion before starting the negotiation process, unless its costs or risks would outweigh the benefits to the client. On summary judgment and summary adjudication of the issues, see chap 36.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/46 Negotiation and Case Settlement/§46.9 B. Counseling the Client: Pre-Negotiation Meetings

§46.9 B. Counseling the Client: Pre-Negotiation Meetings

It is important to discuss the negotiation with your client first to uncover the client's interests and assess the various options for satisfying those interests. See A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§2.13-2.18 (Cal CEB 2005).

The pre-negotiation meeting with the client should include preliminary decisions about the negotiation, including:

- Who will attend? Determine who are the final decision-makers and ensure that they are available to attend. Decide whether the parties' presence at the negotiation would be helpful, and consider whether it would be useful to have experts attend the negotiation session.
- Where and how will negotiations take place? Counsel should consider where to meet, i.e., at the offices of one side's counsel or at some neutral location. Counsel must also decide whether to arrange for face-to-face negotiations or negotiate remotely, e.g., by telephone or e-mail.
- When to negotiate? Counsel must consider when is the "right time" to negotiate. Examples of timing considerations include whether there is adequate time to evaluate the case, the advantages of early settlement, and whether there is any needed discovery. On timing considerations, see Effective Use of ADR §2.12.

As part of the pre-negotiation meeting, counsel should assemble information about the other side. It is important for counsel to partner closely with the client in this phase of preparation; often the client knows the principals better than anyone else and can provide invaluable information.

§46.10 C. Developing Negotiation Strategy

In developing a negotiation strategy, it is important to consider the following:

- The parties' relationship, i.e., learn about their past and present relationship and explore whether a future relationship has value.
- The value of the client's case. On factors for determining case value and the use of decision analysis, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §2.24 (Cal CEB 2005).
- The client's propensity for risk.
- The other side's propensity for risk.
- The Zone of Possible Agreement (ZOPA), i.e., the range between the parties' respective reservation points ("bottom line" or "top dollar"). On the ZOPA, see Effective Use of ADR §3.71; on reservation points, see §46.25.

After gathering information about both sides' interests and alternatives, counsel should list as many options as possible to resolve the problem. Counsel should then develop proposals and packages for the negotiation. See Effective Use of ADR §§2.28, 2.30.

§46.11 D. Finalizing Authority

As a final step in the preparation for negotiation, counsel must finalize the authority to settle. It is crucial for the attorney and client to be clear about the authority the attorney has for reaching an agreement on the client's behalf.

Business and Professions Code §6103.5(a) requires an attorney to communicate to his or her client the amount, terms, and conditions of any written settlement offer made by the opposing party. An attorney cannot bind a client to pay or accept a settlement without the client's specific authorization or consent. Bice v Stevens (1958) 160 CA2d 222, 325 P2d 244; see Navrides v Zurich Ins. Co. (1971) 5 C3d 698, 702 n1, 97 CR 309. The summary enforcement procedure found in CCP §664.6 can only be used against a party who either agreed to the settlement orally before the court or signed a written settlement agreement; for the purposes of §664.6, a party is not bound by a settlement agreement signed by the party's agent, attorney, spouse, or codefendant. See Gauss v GAF Corp. (2002) 103 CA4th 1110, 127 CR2d 370; Williams v Saunders (1997) 55 CA4th 1158, 64 CR2d 571. On who should sign the settlement agreement, see §46.44.

PRACTICE TIP: It is a good idea to confirm your authority throughout the negotiation and verify whether your client wants to confer with you before declining an offer from the other side that is outside your authority.

For more on attorney duties during negotiation, including duties relating to decision making, communication, and confidentiality, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§4.3-4.4 (Cal CEB 2005).

III. ENGAGING IN SETTLEMENT NEGOTIATION

§46.12 A. Opening the Negotiation

Think of the opening as an opportunity to set a positive, productive tone for the remainder of your discussion. Beyond that, the opening can be used to clarify assumptions and expectations, build rapport, and lend structure to the discussion. Use the opening to introduce your client's positions, interests, and aspirations, while you invite your counterpart to participate in setting the agenda and a joint process.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.13 1. Set the Right Tone

How to set the right tone for the negotiation depends in large part on what tone you wish to convey. For example, you may strongly believe that a particular lawsuit instituted against your client was frivolous and brought in bad faith. In that case, your attitude toward settlement may understandably be very different than if you believe that resolution is in the best interests of all parties involved. Consider the following to set the right tone:

Develop Rapport. Establishing a good rapport with your counterpart will go a long way toward fostering conditions that facilitate settlement. Rapport can be established in a number of ways, including chit-chat, paying compliments, humor, and graciousness. Choose a method that comes naturally and works for you; it is less important how you do it than the sincerity with which you do it.

Convey Understanding of, or Empathy Toward, the Other Side. One of the best things to do at the outset of a settlement negotiation is to show your understanding of how the other side may be feeling as a result of the underlying events or why it is taking a certain position or advancing a certain argument. By understanding and acknowledging the other party's point of view first, before you forge ahead with your own, you are sending a signal that you are prepared to be fair and balanced. This can go a long way toward setting a constructive tone for the negotiation.

PRACTICE TIP: The key here is not just to understand but to demonstrate your understanding through your words, your acts, and, most important, your sincerity. Do not simply state that you understand or know how the other party feels; rather, refer to specific things they said, point to particular facts or events, and relate your personal experiences. On active listening techniques, see §46.21.

Assure the Other Side That You Are Participating in Good Faith. Convey your client's sincerity and optimism about settlement by, e.g., explaining why your client is interested in terminating the litigation at this time. Conduct is as important as words in conveying your client's seriousness about settlement, i.e., extend to your counterpart the courtesy of returning his or her telephone calls, e-mails, and other correspondence even if your client is not interested at the present time.

Pay Attention to Body Language. Be attuned to the nonverbal cues you transmit, such as facial expressions, hand gestures, and the way in which you sit. In addition to your own body language, pay attention to that of your counterpart. For further reading on this subject, see Ekman, Emotions Revealed: Recognizing Faces and Feelings to Improve Communication and Emotional Life (2003).

§46.14 2. Introduce Problem-Solving Orientation

An important component of setting a positive tone for the settlement negotiation is to steer away from an adversarial orientation and toward a problem-solving one. The following are some suggestions on what negotiators can do to foster such a problem-solving atmosphere:

- Do Not Argue About Right and Wrong. Arguing about the merits is of little use in the absence of a judge or jury to declare one side the winner. It is far more productive to determine how both sides could be better off by settling rather than taking their chances in court.

NOTE: When trying to figure out whether any particular settlement option is superior to litigation, you will undoubtedly find yourselves looking at the merits of the case. However, at this point, the purpose of analyzing the merits should not be to "win" relative to the other side, but rather for both sides to evaluate whether the settlement option is truly better than the alternative of continuing litigation. On seeking a result that beats litigation for both sides, see §46.3.

- Turn the Dispute Into a Deal. Instead of looking at your counterpart as the enemy, look at your counterpart as a partner who can help both of your clients avoid a potentially much larger problem, i.e., the costs, time, and risk of continued litigation.
- Approach Their Problem as Your Problem. Frame the negotiation as a joint search for solutions to joint problems, not as a separate search for partisan solutions. When making offers or demands, think of your task as developing "yesable" proposals—proposals that will be difficult for the other side to turn down.

For discussion of a problem-solving orientation, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§3.13-3.16, 3.155-3.188 (Cal CEB 2005).

§46.15 3. Convey Your Client's Perspective and Aspirations for Settlement

Another component of the opening phase of a negotiation is articulating your client's intentions, needs, and hopes regarding a settlement. The following are suggestions for asserting your client's point of view in a way that can also foster an atmosphere conducive to settlement:

Be Firm but Flexible. Avoid using terms such as "no" or "never." Instead, try to use other expressions that will keep the other side's expectations in check but still convey optimism and possibility, e.g., "maybe," "possibly," and "unlikely, but."

NOTE: A willingness to be flexible does not compromise your professional duty to act as a zealous advocate of your client. Flexibility is in your client's interest because it gives you room to craft a solution that will be sellable to the other side. It is not inconsistent to be firm about what is important to your client and to remain flexible about the details of how your client's needs are satisfied.

Avoid Making Judgments. When the dispute that gave rise to litigation is highly contentious, it is easy to make judgments about one side's conduct or character, or to make statements that appear accusatory or defensive. Mitigate this tendency by eschewing judgments of the other side in favor of subjective descriptions of your client's experience, and by disentangling the intentions behind words or conduct from the impact of those words or conduct.

Emphasize the Client's Interests, Not Positions. At the outset of the negotiation, it is wise not to start with a particular position such as "My client needs at least $100,000 to settle this case." Instead, emphasize what motivates your client's position. Why does your client need $100, 000? Is it important to your client to have enough financial resources to honor other contractual obligations? Does your client seek some kind of insurance against future breaches by the same party? Is it important that your client feel respected or receive some acknowledgment or apology for the breach? By getting to the root of what is important to your client, you can demonstrate flexibility about outcomes.

PRACTICE TIP: Revealing your client's motives and underlying interests early on in the negotiation may leave your client exposed. Nonetheless, expressing your client's desires and aspirations for settlement in terms of primary concerns—i.e., what is most important to your client—is typically a more fruitful strategy than issuing a narrow or specific demand.

Avoid Extreme Contentions. When it comes to human interactions, sweeping conclusions and absolute judgments are extremely difficult to support. Instead, try to embrace the multifaceted aspect of every human interaction and acknowledge the role, however small, that your client had or may have had in causing or worsening the problem.

§46.16 4. Agree on Agenda, Goals, and Process

Settlement discussions may take shape during informal discussions between the principals, or they may be highly orchestrated, set to begin and end in a conference room, with multiple participants flying in from around the country. It is useful toward the beginning of the process to reach some agreements about how to work together and what to accomplish.

It is very important to conduct settlement discussions with an agenda. The agenda can be limited to an upcoming meeting or it can be more ambitious, setting the framework for a series of meetings.

PRACTICE TIP: An agenda doesn't have to be drawn up in advance: If you find yourself in a meeting that is not getting any traction, call a break and get everyone's input on how you can make the most productive use of your remaining time. For suggested issues to include in an agenda, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §3.25 (Cal CEB 2005).

It is helpful to design a joint process that is tailored to both sides' needs and both of your negotiating styles. On negotiation styles, see §46.17. For example, consider whether it will be necessary to structure some formal exchange of documents as part of the settlement process, or whether a simple back-and-forth of numbers by e-mail will be sufficient. On cultivating a successful process, including getting mini-agreements along the way and negotiating ground rules, see Effective Use of ADR §§3.26-3.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.17 5. Negotiation Styles

It may be helpful to understand your own negotiation style and how it interacts with other styles, including that of your counterpart. There are many ways of classifying negotiation styles and of describing the way they interact; none is perfect and all involve a degree of generalization. The following are examples of negotiation styles and how they interact:

Competitor-Competitor Dynamic. In the competitor-competitor dynamic, both sides are highly assertive and naturally inclined to try and "win" as much as possible for the client. Although competitors are sometimes well-paired against each other, the problem with this pairing is that it often results in impasse. If you notice a competitor-competitor dynamic in your negotiation, it may be helpful to use more active-listening skills to try to see the problem from the other side's perspective (see §46.21), or to steer yourselves away from a "win-lose" mentality and toward figuring out how both of you can "win" by avoiding litigation. See §46.3.

Competitor-Accommodator Dynamic. In the competitor-accommodator dynamic, one side is naturally inclined to press its client's interests while the other side is more comfortable trying not to rock the boat. Problems can arise when the accommodator reveals all his or her cards immediately in the hope of facilitating a speedy and amicable settlement, but the competitor refuses to make reciprocal disclosures and then takes advantage of the imbalance of information. Alternatively, the competitor may exert pressure on the accommodator to make unwise concessions; accommodators need to be aware of this possibility so that they do not concede too much, and competitors need to consider the problems associated with "bulldozing" an accommodating counterpart if they seek a final agreement that will stick.

Competitor-Avoider Dynamic. The competitor-avoider dynamic is very similar to the competitor-accommodator dynamic, except that the competitor's counterpart is more comfortable putting off or avoiding the negotiation than engaging in it. The task for the competitor is to realize that what appears to be a lack of good-faith participation could simply be a well-intentioned but "avoiding" negotiation style. Instead of putting more pressure on your counterpart, a better approach may be to make a safe, inviting proposition and help the avoider to initiate engagement. By contrast, the avoider may be tempted to cut off negotiations prematurely, feeling bullied or cornered by the competitor. The avoider should find a way to be more assertive, perhaps by teaming up with a colleague or associate or by making explicit the terms on which the avoider is willing and able to participate.

Accommodator-Accommodator Dynamic. Negotiations between accommodators can often result in a surprisingly quick agreement, but the seeming ease of the settlement may mask lost opportunities for both sides, i.e., in their zeal for maintaining a cordial relationship, accommodators sometimes overlook superior outcomes.

§46.18 B. Exchanging Information

Information exchanged—or not exchanged—in the negotiation process will affect the result obtained for your client.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.19 1. The Information-Sharing Process

Consider dedicating a part of the negotiation to a process of exchanging information. This is an opportunity for each side to ask questions about the other's perspective, goals, and underlying interests, to present the clients' particular concerns or viewpoints, to share assessments of the strengths and weaknesses of each side's case, or anything else that will increase collective knowledge about the dispute and how best to resolve it.

PRACTICE TIP: Resist the urge to suggest solutions, make proposals, or talk numbers during the information-exchange phase. The purpose of sharing information is to promote a comprehensive understanding of the problem to come up with sensible and mutually agreeable solutions.

On the reasons to share information, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§3.36-3.38 (Cal CEB 2005).

Negotiators differ in their views about the timing of the exchange of information. Some suggest it is best to have such a process early in the negotiation, before discussing numbers. Others maintain that information exchange cannot happen in earnest until both sides have started to formulate solutions and realize that they need to gather more information. Still others think of exchanging information as a dynamic process, one that punctuates the entire negotiation and is not reducible to a discrete period or phase.

In an ideal world, it is more efficient to exchange information before ever talking about solutions. Reality, however, is much messier. Take whatever approach appears to make the most sense to you and your counterpart. It is far worse to impose a rigid order on the negotiation than to find yourselves exchanging information in fits and starts.

It is helpful to create guidelines to facilitate a thorough and meaningful exchange of information. Consider the following:

- Decide who needs to be present for the exchange of information.

PRACTICE TIP: The attorneys alone may be sufficient, but legal representatives are no substitute for the principals if your goal is to understand the underlying concerns and interests of the ultimate decision-makers.

- Decide what supporting evidence is needed to resolve factual issues.
- Create a safe environment for the parties to feel comfortable sharing information.

PRACTICE TIP: If sensitive or private information, or confidential information such as trade secrets, may need to be discussed during the exchange of information, consider formalizing a confidentiality agreement and perhaps a protective order. In addition to giving your client legal protection in the event of disclosure, a confidentiality agreement may help foster an environment in which both sides feel they can discuss issues freely.

- Avoid rehashing legal arguments.

PRACTICE TIP: Do not argue the merits to convince your counterpart that you are right; rather, discuss the merits as a way of figuring out at what cost it makes more sense for both parties to settle than to continue to litigate. You can "agree to disagree" and still have a productive discussion about the merits.

- Consider postponing the discussion of solutions.

§46.20 2. Listening and Questioning Techniques

Skilled negotiators focus more on listening and questioning than on speaking and answering. See Shell, Bargaining for Advantage: Negotiation Strategies for Reasonable People 144-145 (1999). Inexperienced negotiators tend to focus on their arguments and positions, while skilled negotiators focus more on learning as much as they can about the other side. The more adept you are at listening, the more successful you will be at eliciting important information from your counterpart.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.21 a. Active Listening Techniques

You improve the chances of persuading your counterpart if you can both understand and demonstrate your understanding to the other side. Active listening can develop and refine understanding by helping you tune in to subtle or mixed messages, to identify tacit assumptions or expectations, and to lend order to confusing or unorganized communication. In addition, it can improve your ability to show your understanding to the other side.

A common active listening technique is the "loop of understanding," i.e., a three-step process that you can use to understand the speaker, demonstrate your understanding, and confirm that your understanding was correct. The process works as follows:

- Set an intention to understand.
- Pay close attention to the speaker.
- Reflect back to the speaker what you have understood.

Start from a point of genuine curiosity about what the speaker is saying. Then try to understand the speaker, in terms of both the content and the feeling that goes into it. Pay attention to any internal noise you may have as well as the speaker's dynamics, i.e., whether the speaker seems evasive or uncomfortable. Finally, demonstrate to the speaker that you have understood what has been said by paraphrasing the crux of the message in your own words.

While listening, it is important to focus your attention away from the speaker's personality and toward understanding the issues being discussed or the problem you are both trying to solve. By active listening, you make the other side feel that you are genuinely interested in finding out more about their position, making them more willing to divulge information. Remember, seeking to understand the other side does not entail sympathizing or agreeing with them. On "understanding is not agreeing," see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §3.37 (Cal CEB 2005).

PRACTICE TIP: Phrases such as "What you just said is very important" or "I'm glad you mentioned that" are useful because they signal to the other side that you are interested in learning more. Even if you do not believe that what was said was important, merely uttering the phrase can help you focus on eliciting more information.

It is important to avoid the common pitfalls to active listening, which include the following:

- Responding With a Counterargument. Although responding to what you believe is a false or incorrect statement is sometimes necessary, the downside is that it can quickly turn the best of intentions into a shouting match.
- Asking Another Question. Although follow-up questions are useful and sometimes necessary, they are distinct from the process of listening; before you ask follow-up questions, make sure you have first listened well.
- Stating That You Have Understood. Simply saying that you understand does not demonstrate that you in fact do so; it is far better simply to reflect back the crux of what you heard.

For further discussion on active listening techniques and pitfalls, see Effective Use of ADR §§3.51-3.59.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/46 Negotiation and Case Settlement/§46.22 b. Effective Questioning Techniques

§46.22 b. Effective Questioning Techniques

The most efficient way to gather information from someone is to ask open-ended questions, i.e., questions that can be answered in a potentially infinite number of ways, thereby giving the speaker a broad canvas to tell you what is most important to him or her. Examples of open-ended questions are "Could you tell me more about…?" and "Why?"

Unlike open-ended questions, closed-ended questions are narrow in scope and can typically be answered with "yes" or "no." Asking a closed-ended question narrows the playing field through assumptions about what is likely to be important or relevant to the speaker. Asking closed-ended questions is more effective in confirming your grasp of what the other side has said than in gathering new information. Closed-ended questions can also be used to refine your comprehension of a certain point or to fill out details.

PRACTICE TIP: As is often used in deposition practice, negotiators may employ the "funnel" technique, which involves starting off with open-ended, general questions and gradually moving to closed-ended, specific questions as you obtain more information.

For examples of effective questions, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§3.63-3.67 (Cal CEB 2005).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/46 Negotiation and Case Settlement/§46.23 3. Managing the Exchange of Information

§46.23 3. Managing the Exchange of Information

Information is power. Hardball negotiators will use this to their advantage by getting you to reveal all your cards before they reveal any of their own. The more they know about what it is like from your perspective—your constraints, your needs, and your concerns—the better positioned they will be to take advantage of your weaknesses and tailor their responses to your questions. How you manage information can influence the result you obtain for your client.

One way to manage information is to think in terms of what Joseph Harbaugh has termed "getting," "giving," and "guarding" information. The following are some considerations you may wish to take into account:

Getting Information. What information you seek from the other side will obviously vary from case to case. Nonetheless, some regularly important categories should be considered:

- Information About Underlying Interests. If your counterpart has made an offer or demand, or staked out some other requirement or condition for settlement, find out what underlies it.
- Information About the Other Side's Reservation Point, i.e., the point above which the defendant has determined it is better off proceeding with litigation, or the point below which the plaintiff is unwilling to settle. Once you have learned the other side's reservation point, you can determine the zone of possible agreement, or range between the parties' reservation points. See §46.25.
- Information About Alternatives. One way to improve your leverage is to obtain more information about the other side's alternatives to reaching a settlement. If those alternatives are few and not very attractive, gaining that knowledge places you in a stronger bargaining position.
- Information About Assumptions. Don't assume that your counterpart approaches or views the issues the way you do. Test the waters and see if your assumptions are shared or different and, if the latter, find out why.
- Information That May Identify Value-Creating Opportunities. Consider probing for information that may help you and your counterpart to create value, as opposed to dividing it up between yourselves. On expanding the settlement pie, see §46.31.

The most effective way to get information is to use active listening and effective questioning techniques. See §§46.21-46.22. Skilled negotiators try to get as much information as possible from their counterparts before revealing any of their own, but it is difficult to justify asking for more information when you have not given any in return. When it comes to the net amount of information exchanged, equality is a reasonable benchmark.

Giving Information. Consider volunteering information about your client's underlying interests, strengths, and leverage. However, because the information you choose to give depends largely on what the other side requests, it may be more useful to think in terms of what information you will not give, i.e., information you plan to guard (see "Guarding Information" below).

The goal is to achieve a balanced exchange of information, not one-way information-giving. If you feel that the other side is not revealing information in equal proportion to what you are revealing, invoke the reciprocity principle, i.e., the instinctive obligation to return things of value given to us. On the reciprocity principle, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§3.79, 3.135 (Cal CEB 2005).

PRACTICE TIP: Provide information only in a planned way or in response to a specific question. Resist the urge to divulge information to fill silence or compensate for some other gap in the conversation. There should be a good reason for every piece of information you give out.

The timing of disclosures will generally depend on whether you are disclosing "bad news" or "good news." Most negotiators agree that it is best to give bad news, i.e., news that tends to disappoint your counterpart, as soon as possible. By giving information about your comparative strength or leverage early, you avoid inflating the other side's expectations. On using your leverage, see §46.33.

With respect to information your counterpart would consider good news, there is less consensus about timing. For example, if your client is willing to concede a large point or if there is some mutually beneficial solution, early disclosure may set an optimistic tone for the negotiation. On the other hand, if you have been asked about something that might give the other side more leverage over you, consider postponing the disclosure until a time when the information may be less consequential.

Guarding Information. If you have prepared well for a settlement negotiation, you have already determined what information you will not disclose to the other side. Although it varies from case to case, categories of information that you may want to keep confidential include the following:

- Reservation Points. Keeping the other side guessing about your client's reservation point can be considered an essential aspect of any negotiation. On reservation points, see §46.25.
- Reasons Your Client Wants to Settle. Guarding information about your client's needs, constraints, or other reasons for settling may prevent the other side from having more leverage over you, but hiding the ball in this fashion may cause you to miss out on value-creating opportunities that are only possible if both sides cooperate and share information. It may be better to guard information about why your client seeks to settle until after you get the other side to disclose their reasons for settling or you have reason to believe that your counterpart will be equally forthcoming about his or her client's needs and interests.
- Damaging Facts. Obviously, you will want to keep any damaging facts private to preserve your client's leverage. Note, however, that incomplete disclosure, and nondisclosure of facts that would be reasonably necessary to correct a misleading statement, may amount to actionable misrepresentation. See Randi W. v Muroc Joint Unified Sch. Dist. (1997) 14 C4th 1066, 1084, 60 CR2d 263 (allegation of incomplete disclosure amounting to "misleading half-truths" stated claim of misrepresentation); Vega v Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue (2004) 121 CA4th 282, 292, 17 CR3d 26 (disclosure schedule deliberately omitted existence of material "toxic" stock provisions); CACI 1901. On fraud by concealment and silence, see Effective Use of ADR §§4.21-4.30.

There are numerous ways to guard information; the trick is to do it in a way that does not tip off the other side to the fact that you are being evasive.

For a thorough discussion on managing the exchange of information, including getting, giving, and guarding information, see Effective Use of ADR §§3.68-3.92.

§46.24 C. The Numbers Game: Opening Offers and Demands, Concessions, and Hard-Bargaining Tactics

Money is either the predominant component of a settlement or one of many components to a settlement package. Thus, at some point in the negotiation you will need to bargain about money or about other quantifiable settlement terms.

§46.25 1. Knowing Your Reference Points

To negotiate with numbers in a principled fashion, you first need to be clear about three things:

- Your client's "reservation point";
- Your client's "target point"; and
- Your "opening offer or demand."

These three values will serve as signposts to help orient you as you navigate the possibilities for settlement.

Reservation Point. The reservation point, otherwise known as the "bottom line" or "walk-away price," is the point at which you and your client have determined that you are better off litigating (or pursuing some other alternative) than settling. The reservation point may be expressed as a monetary amount or as a package that involves quantifiable and nonquantifiable elements. Either way, the reservation point should remain fixed. Having a clear idea of your client's reservation point will help you assess offers and counteroffers made during the negotiation and ensure that you do not accidentally exceed it.

NOTE: Exceeding your client's reservation point will put you in breach of your ethical and professional duties (see Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110, requiring attorneys to perform legal services with competence) or, worse, could subject you to malpractice liability. See Marriage of Helsel (1988) 198 CA3d 332, 338, 243 CR 657 (client whose lawyer exceeds authority in settlement negotiation "retains a viable remedy against the lawyer—both in terms of a malpractice suit and State Bar disciplinary action"). Thus, you should plan your moves to settle well within the reservation point. Unexpected issues may arise after an agreement in principle has been reached, making it a good idea to leave yourself some room for further give-and-take. On settlement authority, see §46.11.

Target Point. The target point should represent your client's optimistic goal for a settlement outcome. It should be a monetary amount (or a package that involves quantifiable and nonquantifiable elements) that lies somewhere between the reservation point and the opening offer or demand.

Opening Offer or Demand. The opening offer or demand is your client's offer or demand, i.e., the position with which your side will begin the bargaining process. It should be even more optimistic than your target point to allow for concessions. On concessions, see §46.27.

For more on reference points, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§3.94-3.99 (Cal CEB 2005).

§46.26 2. Making Opening Offers and Demands

Skilled negotiators disagree about whether it is more advantageous to make the first offer or demand, or to let the other side go first. Although the correct approach will likely vary from case to case, in the context of settling litigation, it is often advisable to have the other side open for the following reasons:

- You might undervalue your case if you lack complete information.
- The other side may surprise you with an unexpectedly favorable opening because it has undervalued its own case.
- You may underestimate what the other side will pay or accept.

On the other hand, there are some advantages to opening first. By making the first offer or demand, you may be able to take advantage of what is known as the "anchoring effect." Psychological studies have shown that when people are asked to give an estimate of value, their estimates are greatly influenced by the first number they see or hear, even if that number has no necessary connection to the thing being appraised. See Bazerman & Neale, Negotiating Rationally 23-30 (1992). In addition, starting the negotiation with a reasonable or even modest opening can go a long way toward building trust, healing a severed relationship, or projecting optimism about the possibility of settlement.

On special situations that favor going first, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§3.106-3.108 (Cal CEB 2005).

In general, if the overriding goal is to get the most money for your client, consider setting your opening offer or demand at the highest (or lowest) possible point that is reasonably supportable by reference to law, facts, or other arguments. On the other hand, if the parties are likely to have an ongoing business or personal relationship that might be adversely affected by continued litigation or if other considerations weigh against nickel-and-diming your counterpart, consider opening with a more modest amount. The key is to balance maximizing gain for your client with promoting a problem-solving process that keeps the other side interested.

On the advantages and disadvantages of opening optimistically, as well as situations that are not conducive to opening optimistically, see Effective Use of ADR §§3.110-3.120.

§46.27 3. Concessions

Concessions are an inevitable part of any negotiation. The number and extent of the concessions that are made will vary from one situation to another. Nonetheless, it is useful to pay attention to the way that certain types of concessions can impart certain kinds of messages, and to the various strategic considerations involved in making concessions.

The number, type, and pattern of concessions can indicate to a skilled negotiator information such as your reservation point, what issues are important to you, and your level of seriousness about settling the case. For example, large concessions can often communicate to the other side that the issue or issues conceded were not important, while small concessions early on can give the impression that you are unwilling to budge and thus that you are not interested in settlement. Just as it is important to pay attention to verbal messages in a negotiation, so too is it important to consider the messages you send and receive through concessions.

In addition, give some thought to planning a concession strategy in advance of the negotiation. It is generally not a good strategy to "cut to the chase"; you will get better results by engaging in a bargaining process rather than by jumping to a conclusion based on your client's reservation point or even target point. It is also useful to consider concession patterns, such as progressively smaller concessions. It is generally not advisable to bid against yourself, i.e., make more than one concession without a concession in return.

For more on the messages communicated by different types of concessions and concession strategies, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§3.122-3.138 (Cal CEB 2005).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/46 Negotiation and Case Settlement/§46.28 4. Hard-Bargaining Tactics

§46.28 4. Hard-Bargaining Tactics

In the course of a negotiation, negotiators may be tempted to use some classic "hard bargaining" tactics, or may become the victim of such tactics. Although hard-bargaining tactics can be advantageous, in the long run they do not further a problem-solving approach to negotiation. Instead, their use risks escalating the conflict, leaving money on the table, and possibly creating unnecessary deadlock.

The following are examples of some common hard-bargaining techniques to watch out for—both in yourself and from your opponent—as well as suggestions for how to deal with such tactics in a constructive way:

- Bluffing. Bluffing tactics are often used to hide a party's motives for settling, or to make unimportant issues seem important and vice versa. This may lead to agreements that neither side truly wanted because each was so busy bluffing the other. Further, if your counterpart calls your bluff, you will be in a much weaker negotiating position and you may also earn a reputation for dishonesty.

NOTE: Negotiators may be liable for misrepresentation and certain types of nondisclosure during the course of a negotiation. See Vega v Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue (2004) 121 CA4th 282, 291, 17 CR3d 26 (attorneys "may be liable to a nonclient for fraudulent statements made during business negotiations").

- "Take-It-or-Leave-It" Approach. "Take-it-or-leave-it" offers can be advantageous because they can place the offeror in the position of calling the shots. However, there are at least two disadvantages. First, they may be met with skepticism because the offeree does not necessarily know if the offeror is coming from an actual position of strength or merely posturing. Second, the offeree may be so offended by the manner in which the offer is presented that he or she will refuse even to consider its reasonableness. Related to "take-it-or-leave-it" offers are deadlines and walkouts, e.g., "This offer will expire in 48 hours" or "We are prepared to settle for $200,000 today, but after this, all bets are off." These tactics take advantage of the "scarcity principle," i.e., things appear more valuable when their availability is limited. Both tactics play on the fear of no deal. Counter this tactic by developing your litigation options; the clearer your picture of the risks, costs, and potential benefits of litigation, the more secure you will feel refusing a "take-it-or-leave-it" offer that leaves your client worse off. Another countering technique is simply to focus on your strategy and not let the hard bargainer shake you. Treat the "take-it-or-leave-it" offer as a normal offer and counter with your own.
- Aggression, Threats, and Blame. Aggression can manifest itself in many different ways, i.e., from subtle put-downs or inconsiderate behavior to threats or some other type of open hostility. In whatever form, aggression is designed to play on your fears and shake you off course. One way to handle this tactic is to ask for a 5-minute break to collect your thoughts and plan your next move.
- Pressure to Concede Equally. When arguing over money, a common tactic employed by negotiators is to put pressure on the side that has conceded less by claiming that it is only "fair" for both sides to concede in roughly equal amounts. A variant of this strategy is the proposal to "split the difference" after you have negotiated for some time and then reached impasse. For tips on standing your ground when confronted with this tactic, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§3.144-3.145 (Cal CEB 2005).
- No Authority to Settle. In this ploy, the hard bargainer uses the negotiation to collect information about the case as well as about the other side's strengths, weaknesses, and reservation point, and when the negotiation comes to a head, the hard bargainer claims no authority. Alternatively, the hard bargainer states that any agreement reached will be only tentative because it requires approval from the board of directors or from an insurance adjuster. If you recognize or suspect a hard-bargaining tactic such as the claim of "no authority," name what you see; this gives you the opportunity to suggest a different way of negotiating that does not involve the use of hard-bargaining tactics.

PRACTICE TIP: If you fear this tactic will be used against you, determine the extent of your counterpart's authority before you begin discussing numbers. If you are caught by a "no authority" routine after reaching what you thought was a final agreement, make it clear that you too reserve the right to withdraw or to propose further changes until final approval is forthcoming.

- Last-Minute Terms and Costs. Even after the main settlement terms are agreed on in principle, a skilled negotiator may find ways to extract more value by inserting onerous conditions or costs in the agreement. Had you known about the conditions earlier, you might have negotiated a different settlement amount. When you complain, your counterpart asks rhetorically, "Do you really want to undo our agreement over this?" To counter this tactic, always keep a clear view of your alternatives to settlement; the clearer your picture of the risks, costs, and potential benefits of litigation, the more secure you will feel refusing a last-minute condition that leaves your client worse off.

For further discussion of hard-bargaining tactics and countermeasures, including examples and practical tips, see Effective Use of ADR §§3.148-3.154.

§46.29 D. Problem-Solving Approaches to Negotiation

Negotiations rarely proceed as smoothly or swiftly as we first envision. The difficulty stems in part from the fact that settling a case requires finding a result that satisfies both parties, yet litigators are trained to be zealous advocates for their clients and their clients alone. When one or both sides approach the negotiation with an adversarial mind-set, efforts to settle a case can quickly become stymied.

Instead of thinking how much you can get for your client relative to how much your counterpart can get for his or her own, try thinking in terms of how much more you could both get for your clients relative to their second-best alternative of litigating in court. See §46.3. This is the essence of a "win-win" solution, in which both sides do better than their likely and reasonable alternatives. True, one side may walk away with a larger share of the cooperative surplus than the other, but which is more important: getting more for your client in the absolute, or getting more for your client relative to what your counterpart got for his or hers? You will settle far more cases if you focus on the former rather than on the latter.

NOTE: A problem-solving orientation does not require you to compromise your client's position or give up more than you get back. It doesn't even mean you have to be nice! You can seek to maximize your client's fair share while still recognizing that you stand to gain more by working with the other side—not to help them, but to help both of you achieve better results.

The following problem-solving techniques may help you, your client, and your counterpart move the negotiation process forward when it appears to be stuck.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.30 1. Focus on Interests More Than Positions

Positions are highly concrete, particularly expressions of what a party wants. The primary characteristic of a position is that it is nonnegotiable, i.e., it can be satisfied only in one way or in a small number of ways. Interests are more general needs and desires that underlie particular positions, e.g., economic well-being and recognition. If the negotiation remains on the level of each party's positions, the options for a truly satisfactory, comprehensive settlement are limited. The alternative is to probe below the level of positions, to identify the interests that motivate them. The key is to see if it is possible to satisfy each side's basic interests without necessarily satisfying the particular positions they have staked. This provides a way of getting both sides what they truly want, not what they claim they want.

Focus on Things Other Than Money. True, money is almost always involved; however, it is almost always not the entire picture. It is simply a convenient, indiscriminate way of addressing deeper interests such as security, recognition, well-being, or control. If money is an obstacle, try to find out what the parties seek to achieve with money, and use the negotiation to help them achieve those things without money exchanging hands. Look for value-creating opportunities made possible by shared interests or differences in resources and preferences. On value-creating opportunities and expanding the settlement pie, see §46.31.

Frame Interests in the Positive. The same interest can usually be characterized positively or negatively. Always focus on the positive formulation when reflecting back your understanding of the interest as part of your active listening (see §46.21) or when brainstorming solutions that address the interest (see §46.32).

Get the Clients Involved. Try to get the clients involved in settlement efforts. The client is in a superior position to understand its interests and to convey them in the most profound and nuanced way possible.

For more on interests and positions, including examples of positions and corresponding interests, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§3.156-3.170 (Cal CEB 2005).

§46.31 2. Expand the Settlement Pie

Litigation is a "zero-sum" game: One party's gain is directly proportional to the other party's loss. Litigators often approach settlement as if it too were a zero-sum game. This is known as the "fixed-pie bias." The tendency is to assume that settlement negotiations are all about how to divide up a fixed pie (usually money) when in fact there may be numerous ways to make the pie bigger, i.e., value-creating opportunities, before it is divided.

The following are some considerations and techniques that may help you find value-creating opportunities:

- Identify Shared Aversion to Risk. The settlement pie can sometimes be enlarged when both sides are risk averse, i.e., they would each prefer to pay or accept a certain sum that is less than the more optimistic amount they expect to pay or receive by rolling the dice in court. By identifying a mutual desire to avoid risk, you may succeed in creating a bargaining zone that did not seem possible at first glance.
- Identify Shared Interests. Beneath the parties' opposing positions, you may discover interests that are surprisingly aligned. These shared interests can create opportunities that allow both parties to create value.
- Identify Different Resources, Valuations, or Preferences. Differences in the parties' resources, valuations, and preferences can provide opportunities for turning the dispute into a deal. On turning the dispute into a deal, see §46.14. Trades are usually possible only when one side prefers to give up something that the other side prefers to have. For example, trade-offs can be made when each side has different resources that the other wants, or when the parties have different priorities. In addition, the parties' different attitudes about when things need to happen can sometimes be exploited to harness more value for the settlement pie.
- Aggregate Issues. Think of resolving the dispute as one component of a larger deal. By aggregating other components into a settlement package, it is often possible to expand the zone of possible agreement. See §46.10. Related disputes or potential disputes can also be aggregated to create value.
- Disaggregate Issues. If aggregation doesn't help, try disaggregating issues to open up more avenues for settlement. For example, if there are numerous claims in the complaint and there is a sharp disagreement about only one or two of the claims, one possibility is to carve out or "disaggregate" the contested claims from the settlement package and leave them to be litigated or submitted to an expedited decision-making forum; meanwhile, you and your counterpart can work out a settlement for the balance of the case.

NOTE: A variant of disaggregating issues is to disaggregate parties. For example, if you represent the plaintiff in settlement negotiations with several defendants, you may find that settling with some defendants is within your reach but not with others. Settling with only some of the defendants may also give you a strategic advantage with respect to discovery or witness testimony if the case proceeds against the other defendants.

- Reduce Transaction Costs. Early settlement reduces transaction costs, i.e., the costs of continuing to litigate. Such costs include attorney fees and court costs, time, lost-opportunity costs, and subjective costs, such as the psychological burden of continued litigation.
- "Split the Difference" Only After Looking for Value-Creating Opportunities. Negotiation is often equated with compromise or "splitting the difference." Although this is a perfectly reasonable way of negotiating a settlement, it should not be your preferred method of doing so. Look for creative ways to expand the pie before splitting it up so as not to miss crucial opportunities or leave significant amounts of money on the table.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.32 3. Develop Creative Settlement Options

In the vast majority of cases, there are more options for settlement than meet the eye. Having more options on the table increases the likelihood of finding one that is mutually acceptable.

The key to finding more options is to separate the creative process of coming up with options from the rational process of evaluating, rating, or criticizing them. Think of developing options as a two-step process:

- Invent as many potential options as possible without prioritizing or evaluating them (the goal is quantity).
- Evaluate the potential options and sift through them to find the right fit (the goal is quality).

The following are some helpful techniques for inventing and then evaluating a wide range of settlement options:

Brainstorm Options. You can brainstorm options with your counterpart or separately with your client in preparation for the negotiation. On preparing for negotiation, see §§46.5-46.11.

PRACTICE TIP: Brainstorming with your counterpart is an opportunity for both sides to use your combined perspectives to come up with outcomes superior to what you could have generated on your own and may also help to move the negotiation forward by orienting both of you toward a common goal.

The golden rule in the brainstorming phase is that there should be no evaluation of the ideas whatsoever. Encourage and consider all options, even those that are far-fetched; they may eventually trigger an association to another idea that is more realistic or plausible. Explore as many options as possible, including unrelated options, i.e., options involving parties or issues with no necessary connection or relevance to the case. If there are other ongoing or potential disputes between the parties, look at the bigger picture for opportunities to resolve all litigation globally.

Evaluate Options. After exhausting the brainstorming process, turn toward eliminating options that are not viable and testing those that are most viable to determine how well they meet the requirements of both sides. There are several benchmarks against which to evaluate options: How well do the options satisfy your client's underlying interests? How superior are they to your client's next-best alternatives? How well do they stand up to objective criteria? Are they superior to your client's reservation point?

Refine Options. As you evaluate the options, it is useful to select those that are most promising and begin to refine them. Consider options that are similar to, or variations of, those that are most promising. Or create a hybrid option that merges the best aspects of two or more options. For more on the refining process and an example applying refining techniques, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §3.188 (Cal CEB 2005).

4. Tips for Breaking Through Impasse

§46.33 a. Use Your Leverage

Leverage relates to how much power you or your counterpart possesses in the negotiation. The greater your leverage, the more you can dictate terms and influence outcomes.

Determining which side has more leverage is not always easy, for two reasons. First, leverage arises more from perception than from reality. A party who needs to settle litigation as soon as possible will have less leverage than one who can afford to wait; however, the first party can gain leverage if the other side does not know of the urgency or if an impression is conveyed that the party is in no hurry. Second, leverage is a dynamic concept. One party's relative leverage over another can change dramatically over the course of a negotiation as more information is exchanged, or as other events unfold.

There are two types of leverage: situational and personal. Situational leverage arises from having better alternatives to settlement than your counterpart. Personal leverage arises from your personality and negotiation skill relative to that of your counterpart. On the types of leverage, including examples, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§3.190-3.196 (Cal CEB 2005).

The worst thing to do is to use leverage like a blunt instrument by threatening what will happen if the case proceeds to trial, e.g., who will win and who will lose, what tactics you will use, or what your witnesses will say. Instead of threatening, invite your counterpart to consider what would happen if the case did not settle. Plot out, step by step, the likely costs, risks, and outcomes of every pretrial motion you each plan to make, as well as of a full-blown trial. Factor in other concerns such as adverse publicity, the subjective costs of continued litigation, or the time to judgment that may weigh against each side. If you believe your litigation options are strong, couch your leverage in pragmatic terms ("If you cannot come up to our number, as a business matter it makes more sense for us to litigate") rather than in terms of superiority or liability ("Given the injury your client inflicted, we won't settle for less than $500,000"). There is a difference between considering the risks and benefits of continued litigation for purposes of assessing the likely alternatives and trying to convince your counterpart of your legal arguments. The latter will only increase the contentiousness of your negotiation and is of dubious benefit.

If leverage is related to the quality of your alternatives, you can improve your leverage by improving those alternatives. Gain whatever tactical advantages you can in discovery, on evidentiary issues, and through pretrial motions. This is true even if your client wants to avoid litigation and settle as quickly as possible. The stronger the case you build in litigation, the more leverage you will have at the settlement table.

Similarly, litigation and negotiation efforts need not be inversely related to each other. For example, starting or continuing settlement talks does not mean that discovery needs to be stayed or motions need to be postponed. If you can improve your position by continuing to litigate and if cost is not a looming concern, consider pursuing both litigation and settlement with equal energy.

PRACTICE TIP: When representing a client with little or no situational leverage, e.g., one who was clearly guilty of wrongdoing or a plaintiff with a meritorious claim but with few resources with which to go after a large corporate defendant, consider ways of improving your client's position in the negotiation by emphasizing the uncertainty of the future and the advantage of settling now, using personal leverage and cautious bluffing.

§46.34 b. Use Objective Standards

Negotiations often devolve into a contest of wills, in which the stronger and more assertive you are the more you seem to get. This may have clear advantages if you are the stronger party, but in most cases it simply raises the level of contentiousness and increases the chances of deadlock. The harder you push, the harder they resist and vice versa. One way to get out of this vicious cycle is to find a neutral, objective standard that can be used to evaluate each side's proposals. Examples of such benchmarks include reported jury verdicts, information about comparable settlements, or other neutral indicia such as fair market value or industry custom. The idea is to inject some rationality into the negotiation process so that it does not become a tug-of-war.

The objective standard should be acceptable to both you and your counterpart. A standard that is neutral, reliable, and relevant stands the best chance of being accepted by the other side. On negotiating with objective standards, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§3.213-3.216 (Cal CEB 2005).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/46 Negotiation and Case Settlement/§46.35 c. Use Objective Procedures

§46.35 c. Use Objective Procedures

If you and your counterpart cannot agree on an objective standard, consider procedures that might lend objectivity to the negotiation process, such as:

- One Cuts, the Other Chooses. Let one side decide how to divide the pie and let the other side choose which piece of the pie to take. This gives the first party incentive to divide the pie as equally as possible.
- Mediator or Neutral Third Party. If all else fails, solicit the advice or judgment of a neutral third party. If you feel you need something stronger than a third-party opinion, you may wish to submit the entire dispute, or perhaps only certain issues, to arbitration. On mediation, see §45.11; on arbitration, see §§45.12-45.31.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/46 Negotiation and Case Settlement/§46.36 d. Name the Dynamic

§46.36 d. Name the Dynamic

If the settlement discussion is not productive or moving forward, figure out why you feel this way and express your intuition to your counterpart. Express your concern in terms of your subjective experience of the dynamic—one that is open to correction—and not as an objective judgment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.37 e. Exchange More Information

You may need more information to settle the case if, e.g., you skipped the information-exchange process because you believed that settling the case would be straightforward and that delving more deeply into the other side's perspectives, interests, and goals would be a waste of time, or if you sense that you don't know enough about what underlies the dispute between the parties. Ask the questions you need to ask or, alternatively, invite your counterpart to participate in a joint information-gathering session. On exchanging information, see §§46.18-46.23.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.38 f. Take a Break and Reiterate Problem-Solving

If you notice yourself engaged in a battle about who is right and who is wrong, take a break and return to the table with a more constructive orientation. Taking a private break to collect your thoughts or adjourning the negotiation to another time can give you and your counterpart some much-needed space to reevaluate and plan your next move. When you return, invite your counterpart to approach your negotiation not as a dispute but as a deal, a deal that may leave both your clients better off than if they choose to take their chances in court. See §46.14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.39 g. Carve Out Issues That Cannot Be Negotiated

If there are intractable, discrete mini-disputes, consider disaggregating them for adjudication through a summary judgment or adjudication motion, or through arbitration. You might also enlist the aid of a mediator or other neutral third party to help resolve those disagreements. Meanwhile, focus on the other areas of the dispute that are amenable to negotiation. On disaggregating issues, see §46.31.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.40 h. Reexamine Your Position

If you think you have reached impasse and believe it is all your counterpart's fault, think again. It takes two to tango. Perhaps this is a good opportunity to consider how things look from the other side's perspective.

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

The following checklist covers the important considerations in the negotiation process. Each of the topics is discussed in this chapter as noted.

- Keep in mind the overarching goal of a settlement negotiation: to find a result that places both parties in a better position than the one they could achieve through their next-best option—typically litigation—factoring in both the pros and cons of that option. See §46.3.
- Consider your opening to the negotiation. See §§46.12-46.17.
  - Determine the appropriate tone and how that tone can be most effectively conveyed. See §46.13.
  - Develop rapport with your counterpart. See §46.13.
  - Hear and acknowledge the other side. See §46.13.
  - Convey your client's sincerity and optimism about settlement. See §46.13.
  - Introduce a problem-solving orientation. See §46.14.
  - Articulate your client's intentions, needs, and perspective regarding a settlement. See §46.15.
  - Agree on the agenda, goals, and process for the negotiation with your counterpart. See §46.16.
  - Consider negotiation styles—understand your own style, identify your counterpart's style, and determine how to best interact. See §46.17.
- Exchange information with the other side. See §§46.18-46.23.
  - Consider how to structure the process of sharing information and reach agreement on the structure with your counterpart. See §46.19.
  - Consider the timing of information-sharing. See §46.19.
  - Use listening and questioning techniques, e.g., active listening. See §§46.20-46.22.
  - Determine what information you should get, e.g., information about underlying interests and assumptions, information about the other side's "reservation point." See §46.23.
  - Determine what information you should give. See §46.23.
  - Determine what information you should guard. See §46.23.
- Know the numbers and how you will negotiate with them. See §46.24.
  - Know your client's "reservation point," i.e., bottom line. See §46.25.
  - Know your client's "target point," i.e., optimistic goal. See §46.25.
  - Determine your "opening offer or demand." See §46.26.
    - Determine whether to make the first offer or demand. See §46.26.
    - Determine how to open optimistically. See §46.26.
  - Consider your concession strategy. See §46.27.
    - Consider the messages you and your counterpart communicate to each other through your concessions. See §46.27.
  - Be prepared to recognize hard-bargaining tactics and to deal with them. See §46.28.
- Think of problem-solving approaches. See §46.29.

- Focus on interests over positions. See §46.30.
- Expand the settlement pie, i.e., look for value-creating opportunities. See §46.31.
- Develop creative settlement options. See §46.32.
- Brainstorm options first. See §46.32.
- Evaluate options later. See §46.32.
- Reflect on ways to break through impasse.
- Use your leverage, both situational leverage (having better alternatives to settlement than your counterpart) and personal leverage (your personality and negotiation skills relative to your counterpart). See §46.33.
- Point to objective standards to evaluate each side's proposals, e.g., reported jury verdicts and fair market value. See §46.34.
- Name the dynamic that is creating the impasse and work with your counterpart to move the negotiation forward. See §46.36.
- Exchange more information—get the information you need to move forward or invite your counterpart to participate in a joint information-gathering session. See §46.37.
- Focus on finding ways for both parties to be better off than their alternative of litigation, not for one side to "win" relative to the other. See §§46.38, 46.40.
- Consider taking a break from the negotiation. See §46.38.
- Think about carving out intractable, discrete mini-disputes. See §46.39.
- Reexamine your position from the other side's perspective. See §46.40.

NOTE: Many of the concepts and strategies touched on in this checklist are derived from an extensive body of resources and research on negotiation, and in particular from certain highly influential sources included in the bibliography of A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §3.223 (Cal CEB 2005).

§46.42 IV. PREPARING THE SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

Whether a resolution is reached through mediation or as a compromise after counsel's settlement negotiations, the process of preparing the settlement agreement documents—from the first draft to the final formal agreement—takes time, patience, and attention to detail. There is no magic form for final settlement documents; they are simply contracts that are subject to enforcement according to their terms. They must be carefully drafted, just as any contract should be, to reflect the precise terms and understanding of the parties and to avoid ambiguities and uncertainties that invite more disagreement and disputes. Counsel should be aware of the basic purpose and requirements of the agreement and of the terms that should be included for the agreement to be enforceable. For a sample settlement agreement and general release, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §12.48 (Cal CEB 2005).

§46.43 A. Common Terms of a Settlement Agreement

The final settlement documents should contain all terms on which the parties have agreed. A settlement agreement is a contract, and as such its terms are fully negotiable and carry significance for the parties. Further, the settlement agreement must contain sufficient terms to be enforceable under CCP §664.6. See §§46.45-46.47. The following terms appear commonly in settlement agreements:

- Parties. The names of parties to the settlement must be clearly identified in the agreement. The agreement must make it very clear who is releasing whom.
- Claims Being Settled. The settlement agreement must specifically identify the claims that are being resolved and released by the agreement. The agreement could state that consideration paid is in:

Full settlement and compromise of this action and in release and discharge of any and all claims and causes of action made in this action, and in release and discharge of any and all claims and causes of action arising out of the events or incidents referred to in the pleadings in this action.

In contrast, the agreement could specify only certain claims that are being resolved and released by the agreement, such as:

- Statement That Settlement Is Voluntary. The settlement agreement should contain a statement that the parties have entered into the agreement voluntarily and without coercion. The parties must acknowledge in the agreement that they are aware of its contents, that counsel has explained to them its legal effect, and that the settlement document incorporates their entire understanding. For example, such a provision may state the following:

The parties acknowledge that they have entered into this settlement agreement voluntarily, on the basis of their own judgment and without coercion, and not in reliance on any promises, representations, or statements made by the other parties other than those contained in this agreement. This agreement incorporates the entire understanding of the parties and recites the sole consideration of the promises and agreements contained within it. The parties have read this agreement and are fully aware of its contents and legal effect.

- Consideration. The settlement agreement must identify the parties' respective rights and obligations. Generally, the defendant will be obligated to provide consideration to the plaintiff in exchange for the plaintiff's dismissing the action and releasing the defendant from any further actions based on the dispute. Consideration is most often in the form of monetary payment but can also take many other forms, e.g., the performance of an act or refraining from the performance of an act, or a promise of confidentiality. The following is a standard example of a provision for consideration:

1. _ _[Name]_ _ shall pay to plaintiff(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _ the total sum of $_ _[dollar amount]_ _ in full settlement and compromise of this action and in release and discharge of any and all claims and causes of action made in this action, and in release and discharge of any and all claims and causes of action arising out of the events or incidents referred to in the pleadings in this action.

- When Performance Will Occur. If there is no escrow account established (on escrow accounts, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §12.10 (Cal CEB 2005)) and the parties have decided to rely on each other's good faith for performance, plaintiff's counsel should ensure that the period for payment is clearly specified, e.g., simultaneously, 10 business days, 30 calendar days. The simplest situation is one in which there is a unilateral release and dismissal of the lawsuit given by the releasing party in exchange for simultaneous payment of money by the party who is released. See Effective Use of ADR §12.26. When the exchange is not simultaneous, the settlement agreement should outline precisely, step-by-step, how and when the parties are to perform their respective obligations under the settlement. The following is an example of a provision for the timing of performance:

Releasees shall pay Plaintiff the sum of $400,000, which sum shall be made payable to Plaintiff or to any other person or entity as he directs. Releasees shall deliver said sum to Plaintiff within ten (10) days of the execution of this agreement. On payment of the $400,000 by Releasees, Plaintiff shall physically surrender the insurance policy to counsel for Releasees within 10 days of receipt of the $400,000 payment.

NOTE: Once the case is settled, the party seeking affirmative relief must file written notice of the settlement with the court and serve notice on all parties and the arbitrator or court-connected neutral involved in the case. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1385(a). If a condition of the settlement is dismissal upon the completion of specified terms that are not to be performed within 45 days of the settlement, then a notice of conditional settlement must be filed and served, specifying the date by which the dismissal is to be filed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1385(c). For Notice of Settlement form, see §46.50.

- Release. A release is a contract whereby one or more parties agree to abandon, relinquish, or give up rights or claims that otherwise could be pursued or enforced. Releases are commonly incorporated into settlement agreements, or can be prepared as stand-alone documents in connection with the settlement of claims in litigation. They are governed by the same principles of contract formation, interpretation, and enforceability that apply to all contractual agreements.

PRACTICE TIP: Settlement agreements typically apply to all known and unknown claims. However, "[a] general release does not extend to claims which the creditor does not know or suspect to exist in his favor at the time of executing the release, which if known by him must have materially affected his settlement with the debtor." CC §1542. The best practice is to include an express waiver of unknown claims and rights under §1542, quoting the statute verbatim as part of the waiver. The following is an example of such an express waiver:

Each of the parties has considered the possibility that the number or magnitude of all claims against the other parties may not presently be known; nevertheless, each party assumes the risk of fully and finally releasing all such unknown claims and expressly waives the benefits of CCP §1542, which provides "A general release does not extend to claims which the creditor does not know or suspect to exist in his favor at the time of executing the release, which if known by him must have materially affected the settlement with the debtor."

- Covenant Not to Execute. Parties may also want to include a covenant not to execute on any judgment obtained by the plaintiff in the lawsuit against the defendant. The following is an example of a covenant not to execute:

In consideration of this assignment, Party A, for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, agrees and covenants not to levy execution on any judgment, settlement, or recovery of any kind against Party B, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns in the underlying action or any other action or claim arising from the accident.

- Dismissal of Pending Claims or Actions. If the parties intend the settlement agreement to effect complete closure, it should specify which lawsuits or arbitrated matters are to be dismissed with prejudice. The following is an example of a provision for dismissal of the action:

Dismissal of Action. Within 1 calendar day of execution of this Agreement by the Parties, Plaintiff shall deliver to _ _[insert name of counsel for the defendant]_ _ an executed Request for Dismissal with Prejudice of _ _[specify title of action, including case number and court]_ _ in its entirety. Plaintiff acknowledges that _ _[he/she]_ _ authorizes _ _[insert name of counsel for the defendant]_ _ to file the Request for Dismissal with the court.

The Request for Dismissal is a separate document filed with the court. It is often made an exhibit to the settlement agreement, to ensure that the parties are in agreement on the form of the document to be filed. For discussion of voluntary dismissal, including a form Request for Dismissal (Judicial Council Form CIV-110), see §§39.95-39.125, 39.130.

- Choice of Law. It is customary to include a statement in the settlement agreement identifying which state's laws will apply. See Effective Use of ADR §12.14.
- Restricted Disclosure. A settlement agreement should also specify whether it is to be kept confidential by the parties. The following is a sample restricted-disclosure provision:

The terms of this settlement agreement and the amounts paid under it shall remain confidential. The parties shall not disclose these terms to anyone, except that disclosure of the agreement's terms and settlement amount may be made to the parties' attorneys, accountants, and spouses (subject to the same obligation of restricted disclosure); to taxing entities; as necessary for obtaining professional liability insurance; and as otherwise required by law (including by subpoena or court order). The parties shall be allowed to state only that the claims described in the Court Action, more fully described in the recitals in this Agreement, have been settled and that the settlement terms are confidential.

- Nonassignment of Claims. Usually, the closing document will specify that any party releasing or giving up a right or claim still possesses it and has not assigned it away. The following is an example of such a provision:

  Plaintiff and Defendants each represent and warrant that they have made no assignment of any Subject Claim that is being released through this settlement agreement.

- No Admission of Fault. The settlement agreement should include a statement that neither its terms nor the negotiations that led to the agreement constitute an admission for any claim of liability or damages by any party. The following is an example of a provision for no admission of fault:

  _ _[Name of plaintiff]_ _ agrees that _ _[name of defendant]_ _'s entry into this Release is not to be construed as, and is not, an admission that _ _[name of defendant]_ _ (or any Released Party) violated any of its duties or obligations to him or treated him improperly, unlawfully, or unfairly in any manner whatsoever, or that it engaged in any unlawful conduct either in the manner alleged in the Lawsuit or in any manner. Neither this General Release nor the implementation thereof shall be construed to be, or shall be admissible in any proceedings as, evidence of an admission by _ _[name of defendant]_ _ (or any Released Party) of any violation of or failure to comply with any federal, state, or local law, common law, agreement, rule, regulation, or order.

- No Interpretation Against Drafting Party. Generally, because the settlement agreement represents a negotiated resolution with the parties' participation, it should state that there is no presumption or adverse interpretation against the drafting party. See Effective Use of ADR §12.18.
- Remedies for Breach. It is important to address the possibility of breach in the settlement agreement and to provide for specific remedies in the event that one party fails to timely fulfill its obligations under the agreement. Remedies for breach may include security and/or interest for late payments, dispute resolution procedures, and attorney fees. See Effective Use of ADR §§12.19-12.22. The following is an example of an attorney fee provision:

  In the event of any further dispute arising from or concerning the terms and conditions of this settlement agreement, the prevailing party in that dispute shall be entitled to an award of reasonable attorney fees and costs. Otherwise, each party shall be responsible for payment of its own attorney fees and other expenses in connection with the Subject Action and the negotiation of this settlement agreement.

- Indemnification. Often, settlement agreements contain special provisions that allow for indemnification of a party who pays for the release of a claim if that claim is reasserted against it in the future. The following is a sample indemnification provision:

  INDEMNIFICATION: _ _[Plaintiff]_ _ and his counsel hereby release, indemnify, and hold _ _[Defendant]_ _ harmless of and from any liability for the payment of any attorney fees, costs, or expenses of any and all attorneys who have at any time or are now representing _ _[Plaintiff]_ _ relating to the subject matter of this Release.

§46.44 B. Executing a Settlement Agreement

After a resolution has been reached and the parties have prepared the final settlement papers memorializing the agreement, all that remains is for the parties to exchange the final settlement document (i.e., release or settlement agreement or both) and a dismissal of any claims reflected in a lawsuit that is being resolved and dismissed.

Signature Requirement. The settlement agreement should include signature lines for each party, with lines below each signature for the party's name and affiliation to be printed legibly. The agreement should also provide lines for counsel to sign, indicating their approval of the document as to form. To be eligible for the summary enforcement procedures under CCP §664.6, a written settlement agreement must be signed by the parties themselves, not by their attorneys or representatives. Levy v Superior Court (1995) 10 C4th 578, 41 CR2d 878. In addition, all parties to the settlement must sign the agreement, not only those against whom enforcement is sought. Sully-Miller Const. Co. v Gledson/Cashman Const., Inc. (2002) 103 CA4th 30, 126 CR2d 400. For discussion of the requirements for summary enforcement under CCP §664.6, including the signature requirement, see §§46.45-46.46.

Simultaneous Exchange. The simplest procedure for completing the settlement process is to have the final settlement document drafted to contemplate a "closing" by the simultaneous exchange between the releasing party (releasor), who delivers the signed release or settlement agreement with the fully executed dismissal (usually with prejudice), and the party being released (releasee), who delivers a check or other instrument representing payment of the monetary consideration. If simultaneous exchange is not practical, the settlement documentation may be executed at different times and in different locations by the parties. See A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §12.26 (Cal CEB 2005).

Mutual Settlement. Mutual settlement agreements are executory and contemplate that the parties have duties to be performed in the future, most commonly seen in the future obligation to pay.

Court Approval. Settlement agreements entered into in certain types of actions are subject to court approval, e.g., class actions. When court approval is required, it is generally sought after the parties have agreed to the settlement terms and executed the settlement documents. It is also frequently recited in the agreement itself as a contingency that must be satisfied before the agreement can have full force and effect.

On special considerations for agreements reached during mediation, see Effective Use of ADR §§12.29-12.45.

§46.45 V. ENFORCING THE SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

After the parties have negotiated, memorialized, and executed their settlement agreement, the remaining issue is enforcing that agreement. There are two options for enforcing a stipulated settlement agreement:

- Statutory enforcement (under CCP §664.6), which provides the most efficient means of enforcing a settlement agreement, but also has the most rigid requirements (see §46.46); and
- Nonstatutory enforcement procedures, which are not as effective and may be more easily opposed than an agreement enforceable under CCP §664.6 (see §46.47).

It is important to keep in mind future enforcement issues while engaging in the negotiating and memorializing process. For example, for an agreement to be enforceable under CCP §664.6, it must contain all the material terms and must be signed by the parties themselves. Hines v Lukes (2008) 167 CA4th 1174, 1182, 84 CR3d 689. See §§46.44, 46.46.

In addition, CCP §664.6 does not allow a court to enforce a provision in a settlement agreement that is illegal, unjust, or contrary to public policy. See California State Auto. Ass'n Inter-Ins. Bureau v Superior Court (1990) 50 C3d 658, 664, 268 CR 284. When enforcing a settlement by summary judgment motion, the agreement must be sufficiently clear to prohibit the opposition from pointing to factual disputes on the terms of the agreement itself.

The court also retains jurisdiction under CCP §664.6 to enforce a settlement, but it does not have jurisdiction to reallocate settlement amounts to reduce the court-ordered payments of a medical expenses lien. Espericueta v Shewry (2008) 164 CA4th 615, 625, 79 CR3d 517.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.46 A. Statutory Enforcement

Under CCP §664.6, the parties' stipulation on the material terms of a settlement, made in writing or orally before the court, may be entered and enforced as a judgment. This statute was enacted to provide a summary procedure for specifically enforcing a settlement contract without a new lawsuit.

Although CCP §664.6 provides an efficient means of enforcement, the statute has several specific requirements. If a settlement agreement fails to meet the required elements, the agreement will not be enforceable. Under §664.6, the elements required for enforcement of a settlement are (1) pending litigation and (2) a stipulation of the parties, either (a) in writing, if outside the court's presence, or (b) orally before the court.

A motion under CCP §664.6 is appropriate when the terms or binding nature of a settlement agreement are in dispute, because the court is empowered to resolve disputed issues and determine whether the parties have reached a binding accord on the material terms. Marriage of Assemi (1994) 7 C4th 896, 30 CR2d 265. See also Lindsay v Lewandowski (2006) 139 CA4th 1618, 1623, 43 CR3d 846 (stipulated settlement unenforceable because it was unclear what parties meant by "binding mediation"). Although the court may decide disputes concerning the terms of the settlement, the court may not create the material terms of the settlement. Osumi v Sutton (2007) 151 CA4th 1355, 1360, 60 CR3d 693.

Pending Litigation Requirement. There must be pending litigation at the time of agreement and at the time of enforcement. Section 664.6 cannot be used to confer jurisdiction; it can be relied on only when jurisdiction already exists in a pending case. Thus, the CCP §664.6 procedure is not available when an agreement is reached before the filing of litigation. Housing Group v United Nat'l Ins. Co. (2001) 90 CA4th 1106, 109 CR2d 497. Enforcement under §664.6 procedure also is unavailable when the underlying litigation has been dismissed, and is no longer pending. See Hagan Eng'g, Inc. v Mills (2003) 115 CA4th 1004, 9 CR3d 723. See also Walton v Mueller (2009) 180 CA4th 161, 172, 102 CR3d 165 (§664.6 does not apply after a judgment has become final). On the pending litigation requirement, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR §12.5 (Cal CEB 2005).

Parties' Stipulation Requirement. As provided in CCP §664.6, the parties must themselves have stipulated to the agreement (see §46.44 on signature requirement), and written and oral stipulations must contain all of the material terms of the agreement. Gauss v GAF Corp. (2002) 103 CA4th 1110, 1123, 127 CR2d 370. Written stipulations can be entered into outside the court's presence, but oral stipulations must be "before the court." See 1538 Cahuenga Partners, LLC v Turmeko Prop., Inc. (2009) 176 CA4th 139, 143, 97 CR3d 552 (party who discussed and agreed to terms of settlement agreement in court's chambers stipulated to agreement "before the court" even though he was not present when his attorney later consented to agreement on the record).

Each of these requirements is discussed in Effective Use of ADR in California §§13.4-13.10. For a list of grounds for resisting enforcement under CCP §664.6, see Effective Use of ADR §§13.16-13.22.

For forms Notice of Motion for Judgment of Dismissal Under CCP §664.6 and Opposition to Motion for Judgment of Dismissal Under CCP §664.6, see Effective Use of ADR §§13.35-13.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.47 B. Nonstatutory Enforcement

Settlement agreements not enforceable under CCP §664.6 may still be enforced by a summary judgment motion in a pending action, a separate suit in equity, or an amendment to the pleadings followed by proof at trial in a pending action. See Levy v Superior Court (1995) 10 C4th 578, 581, 41 CR2d 878. Which option is selected will depend on whether the dispute was in litigation and the proximity to the trial date.

Examples of cases in which courts grappled with settlement enforceability issues include Pietrobon v Libarle (2006) 137 CA4th 992, 40 CR3d 718 (when both parties had agreed to terms of agreement in open court and reaffirmed at trial, statute of frauds did not render settlement agreement unenforceable under CC §1624(b)(C)(3)), and Elnekave v Via Dolce Homeowners Ass'n (2006) 142 CA4th 1193, 48 CR3d 663 (settlement agreement unenforceable when agreement was not approved by board member or office of defendant homeowners association).

On nonstatutory means of settlement enforcement, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California §§13.27-13.34 (Cal CEB 2005).

Re: _ _[Case name]_ _

Dear _ _[name of, e.g., attorney for defendant]_ _:

This will confirm your recent telephone conversation with my associate in which you stated that the total insurance coverage applicable to this case amounts to only $100,000.

On the basis of this statement, we have conferred with our clients and have obtained their authority to accept the sum of $100,000 in full settlement of their claim against your insureds for the wrongful death of our clients' son, Jeff Smith.

This offer is contingent on (1) your providing this office with proof of the limits of the applicable insurance policy or policies, (2) your confirming the unavailability of any insurance other than your policy or policies, (3) your submitting a statement verified by Mr. Jones showing his net worth, and (4) our receipt of payment in the amount of the policy limits within 60 days from the date of this letter. That is, our offer will remain open until Thursday, August 31, 2008, and your acceptance must be received at our office on or before 5:00 p.m. on that date.

As you know, this is a case in which your insureds are clearly liable. Joe Jones negligently and recklessly drove his vehicle over the center line of Highway 1 in Marin County, causing a head-on collision with the automobile driven by Jeff Smith. Joe Jones was cited by the California Highway Patrol for violation of Vehicle Code §21460(a) and was charged with vehicular manslaughter in the death of Jeff Smith.

We believe that this case is worth well over the stated policy limits of $100,000. At the time of his death, Jeff Smith was a healthy, 25-year-old serviceman stationed at Fort Honor, enjoyed an extremely close and loving relationship with his parents, and remained in frequent contact with them wherever he was stationed in the army.

The tragic nature of this young man's death is compounded by the fact that the Smiths lost another son in an accident shortly before Jeff's death and by the fact that Jeff's father, Jim, suffered a massive heart attack immediately after learning of Jeff's death. Jim is now permanently disabled and totally dependent on his surviving children for support. Given the close bond between Jeff and his father, there is no question that Jeff would have contributed substantially to his father's support for the balance of his life. Both parents have now been deprived of the support as well as the love, care, comfort, affection, society, and protection that Jeff would have provided them were he still alive.

The jury verdict potential in this case is evident from a review of recent California verdicts involving the wrongful death of a child. Our office, for example, recently obtained a jury verdict of $800,000 in the case of Doe v Roe (Fresno County Superior Court) for the wrongful death of a 4-year-old child. Given the circumstances surrounding the loss of the Smiths' 25-year-old son, if this case goes to trial in Marin County, it is reasonable to expect that the jury will reach a verdict in an amount at least similar to the award given in the Doe v Roe case.

As previously mentioned, this offer to settle within the applicable policy limits will remain open for 60 days from the date of this letter. If it has not been accepted by that time, this demand will be withdrawn, and we will proceed to trial.

As Mr. Jones's insurer, you have an obligation to consider his interests and to accept a reasonable settlement demand when there is a significant risk of a judgment exceeding policy limits. Because it is a virtual certainty that the probable verdict range is in excess of eight times your limits, my clients would not consider settling for the policy limit amount were it not for the fact that your insureds have no substantial assets against which we could execute. Should we obtain a favorable result at trial, we intend to pursue all other legal avenues to satisfy the judgment.

If your response to this offer is less than a complete acceptance, please furnish us with the written statement required by Insurance Code §790.03(h)(13), explaining the basis you are relying on in your policy, in relation to the facts and applicable law, for your denial or for any compromise offer you might make.

For your information, we have filed a lawsuit on our clients' behalf. A copy of the Complaint is enclosed. We will not have Mr. Jones served, pending your response to this demand.

I trust that you will agree that this is a case justifying a settlement of your full policy limit of $100,000. We look forward to hearing from you, and, in the meantime, we thank you for attention to this matter.

Very truly yours,

Re: _ _[Case name]_ _

Dear _ _[name of, e.g., attorney for defendant]_ _:

In response to your request for a settlement demand in this case, I am enclosing documentation of Sandra Smith's injuries and damages.

The following is a brief summary of the facts pertaining to this claim:

LIABILITY

The accident occurred at approximately 11:30 a.m. on February 12, 2008, at the Central Shopping Center in Centerville, California. Sandra Smith and her husband, George, had gone to the shopping center to buy groceries. After parking their car, they were walking along the sidewalk when Mrs. Smith fell as a result of a depression in the sidewalk adjacent to the grocery store.

Our investigation has revealed that the depression was poorly marked (nearly all of its original paint had worn off) and was further obscured by an automobile parked in a designated parking space in front of it. We have also learned that other people had fallen at the same location before Mrs. Smith's accident.

Under these circumstances, there should be no question that the sidewalk was in an extremely hazardous and defective condition, resulting in a clear case of liability against your insured.

CLAIMANT'S PRIOR MEDICAL HISTORY

Sandra Smith underwent brain surgery in 1995, for removal of a benign tumor from the right parietal lobe, and subsequently developed a seizure disorder for which she takes anticonvulsive medication. Although her seizures are currently controlled by medication, she has required neurological and psychiatric care as a result of this condition and has been unable to work in her former occupation as a real estate sales representative since undergoing brain surgery.

Mrs. Smith states that she has suffered from intermittent neck pain for several years, apparently unrelated to any trauma or injury, and that she has sought periodic chiropractic treatment for this condition. Mrs. Smith also states that she had no prior problems involving her upper or lower extremities. There is no history of any prior injuries or accidents.

INJURIES AND TREATMENT

As a result of the accident, Sandra Smith sustained the following injuries:

1. Injury to right foot and ankle, including a severe sprain and possible fracture, as well as secondary venous damage;

2. Cervical strain;

3. Lumbosacral sprain/strain;

4. Injuries to both hands and wrists, including carpal tunnel syndrome of the right wrist;

5. Injuries to both knees; and

6. Meralgia paresthetica involving the right thigh.

Mrs. Smith twisted her right foot and ankle at the time of her fall, and fell forward into the sidewalk onto her hands and knees. Because she was unable to bear weight on her right foot, her husband assisted her to their home, where she rested for the remainder of the day.

Due to severe pain and swelling of her right foot and ankle, Mrs. Smith was seen in the emergency room of Centerville Community Hospital on February 13, 2008, where she was examined by the attending emergency room physician. X rays of the right ankle revealed a reported sliver fracture of the lateral malleolus, for which the emergency room physician applied a soft cast to the right leg and also gave Mrs. Smith crutches. He advised her to seek follow-up care at the Centerville Hospital Orthopedic Clinic.

On February 17, 2008, Mrs. Smith was seen in the Orthopedic Clinic by Thomas Anderson, M.D. Dr. Anderson noted swelling and tenderness over the right malleolus and lower fibula, and obtained X rays that demonstrated a possible fracture of the lower fibula. He reported his diagnosis as a sprain of the right ankle, with possible partial fracture of the lower fibula, and applied a short-leg walking cast to the right leg.

Mrs. Smith returned to the Orthopedic Clinic on February 22, 2008, for reinforcement of her cast, and on February 23, 2008, she was seen for further examination by Gloria Evans, M.D., in the Centerville Family Practice Clinic. Mrs. Smith's complaints at that time were of pain in her right ankle and neck as well as numbness and a burning sensation over her right lateral thigh.

In addition to the previously diagnosed problems involving her right ankle, Dr. Evans felt that Mrs. Smith had suffered a strain of her cervical spine. She also reported that Mrs. Smith was suffering from a condition known as meralgia paresthetica, which is a form of paresthesia involving the outer side of the lower part of the thigh in the area of distribution of the external cutaneous branch of the femoral nerve. Dr. Evans prescribed Tylenol for pain relief and advised Mrs. Smith to return for follow-up treatment.

On March 1, 2008, Mrs. Smith was seen by Clark Bradshaw, D.C., at which time she complained of pain in her neck and back as well as pain and numbness involving her right wrist and right leg. Dr. Bradshaw provided physical therapy and chiropractic manipulations on March 1, 3, 5, 15, 26, and 31, 2008. He reported his diagnoses as "acute lumbosacral musculo-ligamentous, sprain/strain with vertebral displacement and accompanying paresthesia and radiculitis into the right hip and leg, and cervical-dorsal vertebral displacement with accompanying radiculitis into the right wrist."

Mrs. Smith also continued to receive follow-up care at the Centerville Hospital Orthopedic Clinic, and on March 24, 2008, the cast was finally removed from her right leg.

On April 1, 2008, Mrs. Smith returned to see Dr. Evans in the Centerville Family Practice Clinic, at which time she complained of persistent pain and numbness involving her right leg and right wrist. Dr. Evans again reported that the right leg problems were due to meralgia paresthetica. She felt that Mrs. Smith's right wrist problems were due to carpal tunnel syndrome, which is caused by compression of the median nerve, and reported that this condition was due to inflammation in the wrist secondary to Mrs. Smith's fall of February 12, 2008. She provided Mrs. Smith with a wrist splint, which she used for approximately one month.

Mrs. Smith's next visit to the Centerville Family Practice Clinic was on April 22, 2008. By this time, her neck and wrist pain had subsided, but she continued to have problems with pain and swelling of her right foot. The examination revealed diffuse edema and tenderness of the right foot and ankle, and Dr. Evans reported that these symptoms were due to venous damage caused by Mrs. Smith's injury. The doctor prescribed Tylenol for the pain and advised her to exercise as tolerated.

Mrs. Smith returned to the Centerville Family Practice Clinic again on May 4 and 10, 2008, with ongoing complaints of pain and swelling of her right foot and ankle as well as bilateral knee pain. No particular treatment was rendered on these occasions, and, because she was becoming increasingly concerned over her apparent lack of improvement, Mrs. Smith made an appointment to be seen by Gregory Shiffman, M.D., an orthopedic surgeon in private practice.

Mrs. Smith was examined by Dr. Shiffman on May 27, 2008. Although he apparently felt that there was some hysterical component to her complaints, he found some evidence of chondromalacia involving both knees, as well as evidence of reflex sympathetic dystrophy to the right foot (indicative of injury to a peripheral nerve). Dr. Shiffman applied an Ace wrap to Mrs. Smith's right foot and referred her to Constance Klein, R.P.T., for a program of physical therapy.

Mrs. Smith received physical therapy on June 2, 7, 9-10, 14, and 16, 2008, after which she noted significant improvement in the condition of her knees. However, she continued to suffer from pain and swelling of her right foot and ankle, for which she consulted John Marcel, D.P.M., on July 12 and 19, 2008. Dr. Marcel prescribed an Unna boot for the right foot, and advised Mrs. Smith to apply ice to her foot and ankle to reduce the swelling.

Please see the attached medical records and reports for further details.

I. INTRODUCTION

§47.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses offers for judgment under CCP §998. It defines a §998 offer and discusses actions in which the offer may be made (see §§47.3-47.4), the consequences of rejecting an offer (see §§47.5-47.8), and the use of the offer as evidence at trial (see §47.9). The chapter also covers the mechanics of making and accepting a §998 offer (see §§47.10-47.25). Finally, the chapter includes a discussion of entry of judgment after an offer is accepted and relief from the judgment (see §§47.26-47.29), as well as forms of an offer, acceptance, and request to enter judgment (see §§47.30-47.31).

Evaluating the settlement possibilities and an attorney's authority to settle on behalf in a client in a case are discussed in chap 46. Preparing for and attending settlement conferences are discussed in chap 41, while good faith determinations under CCP §§877 and 877.6 are discussed in chap 50. Sliding scale settlements and structured settlements are covered in chap 49.

II. NATURE OF OFFER

§47.3 A. What Is a CCP §998 Offer?

Under CCP §998, a party may make a formal written offer to allow judgment or an award to be entered in accordance with terms specified by the party. A party who refuses to accept the offer and then fails to achieve a more favorable award at trial is subject to specified cost-shifting penalties. See §§47.5-47.8.

This statutory procedure for compromise of an action reflects the state's policy of encouraging settlements. Poster v Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1990) 52 C3d 266, 270, 276 CR 321. The purpose of §998 is to:

> encourage settlement by providing a strong financial disincentive to a party—whether it be a plaintiff or a defendant—who fails to achieve a better result than that party could have achieved by accepting his or her opponent's settlement offer.

Bank of San Pedro v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 797, 804, 12 CR2d 696. In interpreting the statute, the courts attempt to apply the statute's provisions in a manner that best promotes its purpose. T.M. Cobb Co. v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 273, 283, 204 CR 143.

§47.4 B. Actions in Which Offer May Be Made

Generally, an offer under CCP §998 can be made in civil actions, including lawsuits in tort, such as personal injury actions, contract actions, business litigation, and other cases in which damages are sought. Section 998 offers can also be made in certain contractual arbitration and medical malpractice arbitration proceedings. CCP §998(b).

The §998 procedure is inapplicable in certain circumstances. For example, §998 does not apply to offers "made by a plaintiff" in eminent domain actions (CCP §998(g)(1)), though it is available to offers made by defendants in such actions. Settlement offers made by a plaintiff in eminent domain proceedings and whether the defendant is entitled to its litigation expenses, i.e., attorney fees and costs, are governed by CCP §1250.410(b). Inverse condemnation actions are not eminent domain actions for purposes of CCP §998(g). See Goebel v City of Santa Barbara (2001) 92 CA4th 549, 560, 111 CR2d 901. Further, offers under §988 do not apply to labor arbitrations filed under a memorandum of understanding under Govt C §3514. CCP §998(i). The §998 procedure is inapplicable to enforcement actions brought in the name of the People of the State of California by the attorney general, a district attorney, or a city attorney, acting as a public prosecutor. CCP §998(g)(2) (legislatively overruling People v Fremont Gen. Corp. (2001) 89 CA4th 1260, 108 CR2d 127, in which the court held that §998 applies to civil law enforcement actions brought by the People).

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.5 C. Consequences of Refusing Offer

The procedure for making an offer to compromise under CCP §998 is designed to encourage an adverse party to accept settlement on the offeror's terms. It does so through means of a cost-shifting mechanism under which, after a verdict or finding, an offeror who has obtained a judgment or award more favorable than the offer may recover the augmented costs permitted by §998. These include costs allowed under CCP §§1031-1032. CCP §998(a).

Costs available under CCP §1032 are listed in CCP §1033.5. Both attorney fees authorized by statute and recoverable under a contract are included. CCP §1033.5(a)(10). See Scott Co. v Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1103, 1112, 86 CR2d 614.

On costs generally, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chap 27 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

WARNING: The earlier the CCP §998 offer is made, the more substantial the postoffer attorney fees will be. A party subject to this statute faces a significant financial risk in rejecting the statutory offer.

§47.6 1. Plaintiff Refuses Defendant's Offer

If a defendant in a civil trial makes a pretrial settlement offer that the plaintiff rejects and then the plaintiff does not obtain a more favorable judgment at trial or in contractual arbitration, the plaintiff may not recover any costs incurred after the offer was made and must pay the defendant's costs from the time of the offer. CCP §998(c)(1); Scott Co. v Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1103, 1112, 86 CR2d 614. On determining what is a "more favorable judgment," see §47.8.

More specifically, a plaintiff who rejects a defendant's (or a cross-defendant's) offer to compromise under CCP §998 and then fails to obtain a more favorable judgment is subject to the following consequences:

- The plaintiff does not recover postoffer costs and must pay the defendant's costs from the time of the offer (CCP §998(c)(1)) (this provision is mandatory).
- The court or arbitrator may require the plaintiff to pay a reasonable amount to cover the costs to the defendant of the services of expert witnesses, who are not employees of any party, actually incurred and reasonably necessary, in either or both preparation for trial or arbitration, or during trial or arbitration (CCP §998(c)(1)) (this provision is discretionary). Police officers are deemed to be expert witnesses for these purposes. CCP §998(f). The costs for services of expert witnesses at trial must not exceed those specified in Govt C §68092.5. CCP §998(h).

In Thompson v Miller (2003) 112 CA4th 327, 4 CR3d 905, the trial court abused its discretion under CCP §998(c) in refusing to award expert witness fees to defendants; defendants' pretrial settlement offer was reasonable, plaintiffs rejected it, and defendants prevailed.

The costs recoverable under CCP §998, from the time of the offer, are deducted from any damages awarded in favor of the plaintiff. If costs awarded to the plaintiff under §998 exceed the amount of the judgment, the net amount is awarded to the defendant and judgment is entered accordingly. CCP §998(e).

PRACTICE TIP: Early service of a CCP §998 offer assures the defendant of recovering a larger portion of costs from the plaintiff who fails to obtain a result more favorable than the offer. Some defense lawyers have served a §998 offer of $1, on the theory that doing so entitles the defendant to augmented costs in the event of a defense verdict at trial. The reasonableness of such an offer may be questioned. See §47.15.

Costs are also allowed under CCP §§1031-1032 to the defendant as the "prevailing party," to the extent these sections apply (CCP §998(a)). See CCP §1033.5 (listing costs allowable). Owing to the interaction among CC §1717 (attorney fees in contract actions), CCP §998, and CCP §1032, it is possible in a contract action that both parties can be the prevailing party for purposes of recovering costs under §1032.

In Scott Co. v Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1103, 1112, 86 CR2d 614, the plaintiff was entitled to preoffer costs under a contractual attorney fee provision because it was the prevailing party in the actual judgment (see CC §1717), but it was not entitled to postoffer costs under CCP §998 because it failed to obtain a judgment more favorable than the defendant's offer. Under CCP §998, the defendant was entitled to postoffer attorney fees, even though the plaintiff actually prevailed at trial by being awarded judgment. 20 C4th at 1113. See also Duale v Mercedes-Benz USA, LLC (2007) 148 CA4th 718, 726, 56 CR3d 19 (cost-shifting provisions of CC §1794 do not trump CCP §998); Biren v Equality Emergency Med. Group, Inc. (2002) 102 CA4th 125, 140, 125 CR2d 325 (defendant entitled to postoffer attorney fees because its settlement offer exceeded plaintiff's recovery). But see Mangano v Verity, Inc. (2008) 167 CA4th 944, 951, 84 CR3d 526 (FEHA does not permit prevailing defendant to recover attorney fees unless action was unreasonable, frivolous, or meritless); Ford Motor Credit Co. v Hunsberger (2008) 163 CA4th 1526, 78 CR3d 661 (CC §1717 precluded award of attorney fees to defendant).

Sureties are not relieved of the duty to pay attorney fees under §998 unless they were parties to the settlement offer and agreed to be bound by it. Scott Co. v United States Fid. & Guar. Ins. Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 197, 213, 132 CR2d 89, disapproved on other grounds in Le Francois v Goel (2005) 35 C4th 1094, 1107 n5, 29 CR3d 249.

§47.7 2. Defendant Refuses Plaintiff's Offer

When a plaintiff (or cross-complainant) makes a written offer to allow judgment under CCP §998, but the defendant does not accept the offer and then fails to obtain a more favorable judgment at trial or arbitration, the plaintiff may recover the following costs:

- In personal injury actions, the plaintiff is entitled to prejudgment interest calculated at 10 percent annually after the date of the offer; interest accrues until the judgment is satisfied. CC §3291. See Wilson v Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (1999) 72 CA4th 382, 85 CR2d 4. But see Hess v Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C4th 516, 531, 117 CR2d 220, 232 (plaintiff who obtained judgment more favorable than CCP §998 offer is not entitled to interest on the prejudgment interest portion of the judgment accrued under CC §3291). If multiple defendants are found liable for the judgment, they are jointly and severally responsible for the prejudgment interest; plaintiffs are not entitled under CC §3291 to collect prejudgment interest on the total judgment from each defendant. Cadlo v Metalclad Insulation Corp. (2009) 172 CA4th 1040, 1046, 91 CR3d 653. When the judgment is for personal injury as well as other claims, the plaintiff is entitled only to prejudgment interest on the personal injury portion. Lakin v Watkins Assoc. Indus. (1993) 6 C4th 644, 661, 25 CR2d 109. Prejudgment interest may not be awarded on punitive damages in personal injury cases. 6 C4th at 662.
- In its discretion, the judge or arbitrator may award a reasonable amount to cover the cost to the plaintiff of the services of expert witnesses, who are not employees of any party, actually incurred and reasonably necessary, in either or both preparation for trial or arbitration, or during trial or arbitration (CCP §998(d)). Police officers are deemed to be expert witnesses for purposes of these provisions. CCP §998(f). The costs for services of expert witnesses at trial must not exceed those specified in Govt C §68092.5. CCP §998(h).
- Costs allowed under CCP §§1031-1032 may be awarded to the plaintiff as the "prevailing party" (see CCP §998(a)).

When there are two successive unaccepted §998 offers made by a successful plaintiff in a personal injury action, and the plaintiff obtains a recovery in excess of both offers, the prejudgment interest awarded under CC §3291 runs from the date of the first offer. Ray v Goodman (2006) 142 CA4th 83, 91, 47 CR3d 659 (applying the language of CC §3291, the date of the first offer controls even if an offer in a personal injury action is considered revoked or superseded under contract law).

On determining what is a "more favorable judgment," see §47.8.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/47 Offers to Allow Judgment (CCP §998)/§47.8 3. Defining 'More Favorable Judgment'

§47.8 3. Defining "More Favorable Judgment"

Code of Civil Procedure §998 offers no definition of "more favorable judgment." It is generally silent on whether any particular item is to be included in or excluded from the verdict in calculating the amount of the award, with one important exception: In determining whether the plaintiff obtains a more favorable judgment at trial or arbitration than the defendant's offer, the court or arbitrator must exclude the plaintiff's postoffer costs. CCP §998(c)(2)(A). "Costs" that may not be included in the verdict under this provision include items allowed to the prevailing party by statute or contract, such as attorney fees. See Heritage Eng'g Constr. Co. v City of Industry (1998) 65 CA4th 1435, 1441, 77 CR2d 459.

Because the statute is largely silent, case law has attempted to fill the gap. The courts have determined that the following items, among others, must be considered in determining whether a judgment is more favorable than a party's CCP §998 offer:

- Preoffer prejudgment interest is included in the verdict; postoffer prejudgment interest is not. Bodell Constr. Co. v Trustees of Cal. State Univ. (1998) 62 CA4th 1508, 1512, 73 CR2d 450.
- Postoffer payments on contract debt are added to the verdict. Mesa Forest Prods. v St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 324, 327, 86 CR2d 398 (trial court correctly added jury award to payment defendant had made to plaintiff on invoices due, after defendant's offer expired; sum of jury award plus payment was greater than offer to compromise).
- If the plaintiff refuses the defendant's offer, the plaintiff's preoffer costs are included in the verdict. CCP §998(c)(2)(A); Heritage Eng'g Constr. Co. v City of Industry (1998) 65 CA4th 1435, 77 CR2d 459. However, if the defendant refuses the plaintiff's offer, both preoffer and postoffer costs incurred by the plaintiff should be added to the verdict to determine the amount of the judgment. Stallman v Bell (1991) 235 CA3d 740, 748, 286 CR 755 (postoffer costs should be added to verdict because defendant has impeded §998's purpose by rejecting offer, thus allowing plaintiff to incur postoffer costs).
- Liens on the plaintiff's claims are not subtracted from the verdict. Manthey v San Luis Rey Downs Enters. (1993) 16 CA4th 782, 789, 20 CR2d 265.

In determining whether the plaintiff has actually obtained a more favorable judgment than defendant's CCP §998 offer, the court should not consider the worth to the plaintiff of winning a jury verdict against the defendant. In American Airlines, Inc. v Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton (2002) 96 CA4th 1017, 1056, 117 CR2d 685, plaintiff claimed that its primary purpose in suing defendants was to obtain a declaration of defendants' wrongdoing, not to obtain a money judgment. The court rejected evaluation of the worth of a finding of wrongdoing, stating that "[w]e cannot see how section 998 could retain any vitality [if] the plaintiff can attempt to argue that any judgment declaring wrongdoing by the defendant is worth more than the monetary amount offered in settlement."

There are two situations that require special treatment to value the award for purposes of determining whether it is more favorable than the offer:

- When the offer is for a structured settlement, such as a lump sum plus a monthly annuity (see chap 49), the offering party must prove the present value of the offer to enable the court to compare the trial award to the offer (Hurlbut v Sonora Community Hosp. (1989) 207 CA3d 388, 409, 254 CR 840).
- When an award in a medical malpractice action is for more than $50,000, requiring the court to order periodic payments under CCP §667.7(f) to value the award for §998 purposes, the jury must determine "the amount in current dollars paid at the time of judgment that will compensate the plaintiff for future pain and suffering" (Salgado v County of Los Angeles (1998) 19 C4th 629, 643, 80 CR2d 46).

In determining whether a judgment is more favorable than the offer, there is a good faith requirement—the offer must have been reasonable. See, e.g., Pineda v Los Angeles Turf Club, Inc. (1980) 112 CA3d 53, 169 CR 66 (plaintiffs sought $10 million, defendants offered $2500, jury found for defendant, but trial court refused to award defendant expert witness fees because defendant's offer was not reasonable in that sole purpose of offer appeared to be to allow defendant to recover large expert witness fees). On the good faith requirement, see §47.15.

§47.9 D. Use of Offer as Evidence at Trial

An unaccepted CCP §998 offer cannot be used as evidence in a trial or arbitration to prove liability for the claim that the offer is an attempt to compromise. See CCP §998(b)(2). The offer may be admissible, however, for other purposes, such as to prove the bad faith of the offeror. See White v Western Title Ins. Co. (1985) 40 C3d 870, 888, 221 CR 509.

III. PROCEDURES FOR MAKING AND ACCEPTING OFFER

§47.10 A. Time for Offer

Either party may serve a CCP §998 offer (see §§47.30-47.31 for forms) on any party to the action at any time from its commencement until 10 days before the start of trial or arbitration. CCP §998(b); Barba v Perez (2008) 166 CA4th 444, 452, 82 CR3d 715 (offer served with complaint was timely). If the CCP §998 offer is served by mail within the State of California, the time required is extended by 5 days under CCP §1013(a) and the offer must be served not less than 15 days before commencement of trial. Lecuyer v Sunset Trails Apartments (2004) 120 CA4th 920, 927, 16 CR3d 169. A trial or arbitration is deemed to start at the beginning of the opening statement or, if no opening statement is made, when the oath is administered to the first witness or evidence is introduced. CCP §998(b)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.11 B. Format of Offer

The offer must be in writing and allow judgment to be taken or an award to be entered in accordance with the stated terms and conditions. See CCP §998(b). An offer placed orally on the record does not satisfy the writing requirement. Saba v Crater (1998) 62 CA4th 150, 72 CR2d 401. The written offer must include a statement of the offer that contains the terms and conditions of the judgment or award, and a provision for the accepting party to sign a statement that the offer is accepted. CCP §998(b).

The offer should include a reference to CCP §998 so as to put the offeree on notice that certain consequences (such as costs and fees) may result from rejecting the offer. In Stell v Jay Hales Dev. Co. (1992) 11 CA4th 1214, 15 CR2d 220, disapproved on other grounds in Citizens for Covenant Compliance v Anderson (1995) 12 C4th 345, 366, 47 CR2d 898, the court held that an offer that made no reference to §998 was insufficient to support a costs award. The offer need not contain any "magic language" as long as the offer is clear. Berg v Darden (2004) 120 CA4th 721, 731, 15 CR3d 829 (offer valid if it is clear offer is made under CCP §998 and that, if accepted, offer will result in entry of judgment or its legal equivalent). On the penalties for rejecting an offer, see §§47.5-47.8.

The offer must be served on the opposing party. CCP §998(b). Because a judgment may be taken only as to parties over whom the court has jurisdiction, the offer may be served only on a party subject to the court's jurisdiction, i.e., the party must have already been served with the summons or complaint or appeared in the action. Service on the party's liability insurer is ineffective. Moffett v Barclay (1995) 32 CA4th 980, 982, 38 CR2d 546.

An offer should not be filed with the court until it is accepted. Cal Rules of Ct 3.250(a)(23). On filing the accepted offer with the court, see §47.26.

C. Terms of Offer

§47.12 1. Defendant's Offer to Plaintiff

The terms and conditions of the defendant's offer must be sufficiently definite that the offer can be valued. See, e.g., Valentino v Elliott Sav-On Gas, Inc. (1988) 201 CA3d 692, 247 CR 483 (offer conditioned on release of certain claims whose value was uncertain made entire offer uncertain).

Instead of providing for entry of judgment based on an accepted offer, the defendant may condition the offer on the plaintiff's dismissing its claims and giving defendant a general release. American Airlines, Inc. v Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton (2002) 96 CA4th 1017, 1055, 117 CR2d 685 (entry of judgment in court is not strictly required; acceptance of offer to settle for $59,200, in return for plaintiff's dismissal with prejudice, is valid); Goodstein v Bank of San Pedro (1994) 27 CA4th 899, 32 CR2d 740. See On-Line Power, Inc. v Mazur (2007) 149 CA4th 1079, 1084, 57 CR3d 698 (prevailing party entitled to attorney fees).

If there is a lien on the plaintiff's claims, the offer should indicate whether it includes the amount of the lien, which will make it possible to determine whether a judgment is "more favorable" than the offer. See §47.8.

The offer should include provisions for fees and costs. If an offer is silent on these items, the plaintiff may move for contractual or statutory fees and costs on entry of the judgment. Chinn v KMR Prop. Mgmt. (2008) 166 CA4th 175, 184, 82 CR3d 586; Ritzenthaler v Fireside Thrift Co. (2001) 93 CA4th 986, 113 CR2d 579. In Ritzenthaler, defendant's CCP §998 offer encompassed "all damages and injunctive claims" asserted by plaintiffs, but failed to mention any claim for attorney fees that plaintiffs might have. The court concluded that attorney fees were not within the scope of the proposed compromise agreement and that plaintiffs did not waive their right to recover their attorney fees under CC §1717 by accepting defendant's §998 offer. 93 CA4th at 991.

NOTE: If the defendant in Ritzenthaler intended that its offer would encompass attorney fees, it could have made that clear by stating in its offer that each side would bear its own attorney fees. Courts cannot rewrite the parties' agreement—they can only interpret what the parties have written themselves.

A CCP §998 offer that includes an agreement to pay "reasonable attorney fees" is not too uncertain to be enforceable. Elite Show Serv. v Staffpro, Inc. (2004) 119 CA4th 263, 269, 14 CR3d 184 (failure to specify dollar amount of reasonable fees would not have precluded court from ascertaining offeror's obligations with reasonable certainty). If the offer presents two interpretations, the court must use the interpretation that would make the offer reasonable, fair, and just, and interpret uncertainty in the offer against the party who caused the uncertainty. Chinn, 166 CA4th at 184.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.13 2. Plaintiff's Offer to Defendant

The amount or terms of the plaintiff's CCP §998 offer should normally be more than the predicted verdict value, but it need not be the minimum the plaintiff would accept. An offer that reflects savings of time and expenses of discovery that would result from prompt settlement may induce the defendant to accept.

NOTE: The plaintiff's offer may be a round figure (e.g., $5000, rather than $4999.99) and, if the ultimate judgment is equal to the amount offered (e.g., $5000), the defendant has failed to obtain a more favorable judgment and is thereby liable to reimburse certain of plaintiff's costs. CCP §998(d). See §47.7.

The plaintiff may not propose a different interest rate from the current statutory interest rate. Parties to a stipulated judgment do not have the discretion to establish an interest rate on the amount of the judgment different from the constitutional interest rate applicable at the time the judgment becomes enforceable. John Sieble Assocs. v Keele (1986) 188 CA3d 560, 233 CR 231. See CCP §685.010 (rate of interest on money judgment).

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.14 3. Nonmonetary Terms of Offer

A settlement offer conditioned on nonmonetary terms may be invalid under CCP §998. The nonmonetary terms must be sufficiently certain and capable of valuation for the court to determine whether the judgment is more favorable than the §998 offer. Fassberg Constr. Co. v Housing Auth. of City of Los Angeles (2007) 151 CA4th 267, 60 CR3d 375, modified at 152 CA4th 720 (offer conditioned on release from liability of extensive list of parties was sufficiently certain).

In Barella v Exchange Bank (2000) 84 CA4th 793, 101 CR2d 167, the plaintiff's §998 offer to compromise his defamation action included a confidentiality provision. After obtaining a more favorable monetary award at trial, the defendant sought its costs. The court of appeal held that it was impossible to determine whether the judgment was less favorable than the settlement offer, because a court could not determine the monetary worth of a person's chance to vindicate publicly his or her good name. See also Valentino v Elliott Sav-On Gas, Inc. (1988) 201 CA3d 692, 247 CR 483 (costs cannot be shifted under §998, because offer requires plaintiff to forgo claims other than those involved in case at trial; "To pinpoint the value of the various potential unfiled claims [plaintiff] might have had … would require the court to engage in wild speculation bordering on psychic prediction"). 201 CA3d at 699.

§47.15 4. Good Faith Requirement

An offer under CCP §998 must be made in "good faith," i.e., it must be realistically reasonable in the circumstances of the particular case, to be effective under the statute. Jones v Dumrichob (1998) 63 CA4th 1258, 74 CR2d 607. See also People ex rel Lockyer v Fremont Gen. Corp. (2001) 89 CA4th 1260, 1271, 108 CR2d 127. To be valid, an offer must represent "a reasonable prediction of the amount of money, if any, defendant would have to pay plaintiff following a trial." Elrod v Oregon Cummins Diesel, Inc. (1987) 195 CA3d 692, 241 CR 108. This assessment is based on information that is known or should have been known to the offering party at the time of the offer. An offer is not in good faith if it is based on significant information that the offeree does not know and that was not reasonably available to the offeree at the time of the offer. 195 CA3d at 699.

Token or nominal offers do not meet the good faith requirement. Wear v Calderon (1981) 121 CA3d 818, 821, 175 CR 566. However, in Jones v Dumrichob, supra, the defendant's offer to have judgment entered against him and to waive costs was deemed to be in good faith despite the absence of a net monetary sum.

Interests of an insurer may not be a factor in determining the reasonableness of a CCP §998 offer; a pretrial settlement offer must be served on "a party to the action, not to that party's insurer." Arno v Helinet Corp. (2005) 130 CA4th 1019, 1025, 30 CR3d 669 (emphasis in original). On the other hand, existence of insurance is a factor that the court may consider in evaluating whether a CCP §998 offer was made in good faith. 130 CA4th at 1026.

The burden is on the party rejecting the offer to show that it was not made in good faith. Elrod, 195 CA3d at 700. See also Santantonio v Westinghouse Broad. Co. (1994) 25 CA4th 102, 117, 30 CR2d 486. It is then within the trial court's discretion to make the good faith determination, which will not be reversed on appeal absent a clear abuse of discretion. Nelson v Anderson (1999) 72 CA4th 111, 136, 84 CR2d 753, 769, modified at 73 CA4th 41c.

Anything that may impact the reasonableness of the offer may be considered by the trial court in the exercise of its discretion for determining good faith. Arno v Helinet Corp., supra (trial court's discretion not restricted by considerations facing party's insurer or other codefendants; several factors justified finding that settlement offer made to party was made in good faith).

§47.16 D. Joint Offers

A joint offer to compromise is an offer made by a single party to multiple parties or by multiple parties to a single party. Generally, courts have ruled that joint CCP §998 offers are invalid when they deprive the offeree of the ability to evaluate whether each party is more likely to receive a more favorable verdict at trial. See, e.g., Gilman v Beverly Cal. Corp. (1991) 231 CA3d 121, 126, 283 CR 17 (joint offers are void because "it is impossible to say that any one [of multiple plaintiffs] received a judgment more favorable than [each] would have received under the offer"). To be effective, a joint offer to multiple parties must be explicitly apportioned among the parties to whom it is made so that each party may accept or reject the offer individually. Weinberg v Safeco Ins. Co. (2004) 114 CA4th 1075, 1086, 8 CR3d 224; Palmer v Schindler Elevator Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 154, 157, 133 CR2d 339.

Some courts, however, have refused to automatically apply the joint offer rule without examining whether the party seeking costs had actually obtained a more favorable judgment. See, e.g., Stallman v Bell (1991) 235 CA3d 740, 286 CR 755 (costs awarded when plaintiffs made joint offer and jury made unitary award of damages to both plaintiffs). In Johnson v Pratt & Whitney Canada, Inc. (1994) 28 CA4th 613, 34 CR2d 26, the court held that when there is a single joint cause of action that must be brought in one action, and "the judgment must be for a single lump sum even though the heirs share the damages in proportion to their loss," there is no reason to invalidate a joint offer. The Johnson court acknowledged that the results in Stallman and Gilman could not be reconciled, but found Stallman to be better reasoned. 28 CA4th at 630.

For detailed discussion of special problems when there is more than one offeror, or more than one offeree, see Reilly, Section 998 Offers Involving Multiple Parties, 13 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 55 (Mar. 1991).

§47.17 1. One Defendant Making Offer to Multiple Plaintiffs

If there are two or more plaintiffs, the defendant should normally make a separate CCP §998 offer to each plaintiff. An offer that does not specify the amount offered to each plaintiff is invalid, even if the recovery by all plaintiffs is lower than the total offer, because a court cannot determine whether one plaintiff received a less favorable judgment. Meissner v Paulson (1989) 212 CA3d 785, 260 CR 826.

This general rule is inapplicable if an unallocated offer is made to a married couple asserting damage to a singular interest in community property. Vick v DaCorsi (2003) 110 CA4th 206, 1 CR3d 626. In Vick, the court held that the concerns addressed in Meissner do not apply when the plaintiffs are husband and wife; their suit arose from the purchase of community property; and their recovery would be community property. In such circumstances, the defendants could not allocate their §998 offer between the plaintiffs, because each had an equal, undivided half-interest in the claims and would have had an equal, undivided half-interest in settlement proceeds.

Courts have later distinguished Vick and held that the CCP §998 offers must be separately prepared and served on the spouses, in order to allow each to accept individually. Menees v Andrews (2004) 122 CA4th 1540, 1546, 19 CR3d 664 (husband and wife plaintiffs in medical malpractice action should have been served individually with individual settlement offers); Weinberg v Safeco Ins. Co. (2004) 114 CA4th 1075, 1087, 8 CR3d 224 (offer to compromise invalid because it was jointly made to husband and wife).

A plaintiff who asserts multiple capacities for multiple claims is considered a single party under CCP §998. Peterson v John Crane, Inc. (2007) 154 CA4th 498, 505, 65 CR3d 185 (widow asserted claims as successor in interest to husband's claims, individual, and legal heir).

An offer to more than one plaintiff must be unconditional and may not be contingent on acceptance by all plaintiffs. Hutchins v Waters (1975) 51 CA3d 69, 123 CR 819. When the plaintiffs are husband and wife asserting damage to community property, it is irrelevant that the offer is conditioned on acceptance by both plaintiffs because either can accept the offer on behalf of the community. Vick, 110 CA4th at 212.

§47.18 2. Multiple Defendants Making Offer to One Plaintiff

Multiple defendants sued on a theory of joint and several liability may make a joint offer to compromise to a single plaintiff, with all defendants to be released on acceptance. Because under this theory each defendant is liable for the entire judgment, a joint offer by codefendants should be considered an offer by each. The plaintiff is entitled to costs and fees if either defendant fails to obtain a more favorable judgment than the offer. Santantonio v Westinghouse Broad. Co. (1994) 25 CA4th 102, 30 CR2d 486. See also Persson v Smart Inventions, Inc. (2005) 125 CA4th 1141, 23 CR3d 335 (joint offer by two defendants, stating that judgment in specific amount may be taken against each of them jointly and severally, is valid under CCP §998 even when defendants are not jointly and severally liable on all of plaintiff's claims).

It is unclear whether an unapportioned offer by several defendants is effective in cases subject to Proposition 51. Taing v Johnson Scaffolding Co. (1992) 9 CA4th 579, 584, 11 CR2d 820. On the provisions and impact of Proposition 51, see §50.7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.19 3. One Plaintiff Making Offer to Multiple Defendants

With two or more defendants, the issue arises whether the plaintiff should serve a joint CCP §998 demand on all, or a separate demand on each. A joint demand should be used only if, at the time the §998 offer is made, the defendants are clearly jointly and severally liable for any judgment, e.g., if the defendants have already stipulated to joint and several liability. Burch v Children's Hosp. of Orange County Thrift Stores, Inc. (2003) 109 CA4th 537, 135 CR2d 404; Steinfeld v Foote-Goldman Proctologic Med. Group, Inc. (1996) 50 CA4th 1542, 58 CR2d 371 (unapportioned settlement offer is valid when defendants are jointly liable for plaintiff's injury and comparative fault is not issue); Bihun v AT&T Info. Sys. (1993) 13 CA4th 976, 16 CR2d 787, disapproved on other grounds in Lakin v Watkins Assoc. Indus. (1993) 6 C4th 644, 664, 25 CR2d 109.

When defendants are not jointly liable for the full amount of plaintiff's damages, an unapportioned settlement offer to multiple defendants is ineffective under CCP §998 because the offer has not informed each defendant of what each defendant must pay to settle the case. An unapportioned settlement demand in this situation would allow each defendant to argue that it had obtained a more favorable judgment even if the combined award against both exceeded the amount of the §998 demand. Taing v Johnson Scaffolding Co. (1992) 9 CA4th 579, 11 CR2d 820. By the same token, a single plaintiff's offer to settle with multiple defendants must be sufficiently specific to permit each defendant from whom the plaintiff later seeks to extract penalties to know the exact amount the plaintiff was seeking from that defendant. 9 CA4th at 586.

The facts in Burch v Children's Hosp. of Orange County Thrift Stores, Inc., supra, illustrate the potentially devastating effects to a plaintiff of an unapportioned demand on multiple defendants who are not jointly liable. In Burch, the plaintiff's CCP §998 demand for $50 million was not accepted by defendants and the jury awarded the plaintiff over $50 million, but the plaintiff was denied expert witness costs and prejudgment interest because the court found that her unapportioned §998 offer, made before defendants had stipulated to joint and several liability, was invalid.

Even an offer that is allocated among defendants is invalid if it is conditioned on acceptance by all defendants, because it is in the public interest that each defendant be given the opportunity to accept the offer made to him or her. Wickware v Tanner (1997) 53 CA4th 570, 577, 61 CR2d 790. There is a split of authority as to whether a joint offer that is not explicitly conditioned on acceptance by all defendants will be interpreted by the court as being so conditioned. In Wickware v Tanner, the court held that the offer, which was a single document addressed to all defendants, offering to take judgment against all defendants, and requiring that defendants in the plural accept the offer, was conditional and thus invalid. In so holding, the Wickware court expressly disagreed with the decision in Santantonio v Westinghouse Broad. Co. (1994) 25 CA4th 102, 112, 30 CR2d 486, which held that a §998 offer to compromise is unconditional unless it specifically provides that all offerees must accept the offer.

NOTE: To be on the safe side, plaintiffs' counsel should always serve separate offers on each defendant. There is no downside to doing so, but not doing so can have dire consequences.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.20 4. Multiple Plaintiffs Making Offer to One Defendant

A joint offer by several plaintiffs that does not permit the court to determine whether each plaintiff obtained a more favorable judgment than his or her offer cannot serve as the basis for applying CCP §998 penalties. Gilman v Beverly Cal. Corp. (1991) 231 CA3d 121, 124, 283 CR 17. A court can easily determine whether each plaintiff obtained a more favorable judgment when the offer designates how the settlement would be divided among the plaintiffs. Without such a designation, the court may nonetheless make a more favorable judgment determination when it is "absolutely clear that [the individual plaintiff] received a greater amount in damages after trial than she would have received had [the defendant] accepted the joint offer even if the entire amount of the offer … is attributed to her." Fortman v Hemco, Inc. (1989) 211 CA3d 241, 263, 259 CR 311. See also Deocampo v Ahn (2002) 101 CA4th 758, 776, 125 CR2d 79 (plaintiffs' unapportioned offer is valid because it is clear that jury award exceeded amount requested in §998 offer).

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.21 E. When to Accept Offer

A CCP §998 offer must be accepted within 30 days after it is made or before trial or arbitration begins, whichever occurs first. The 30-day period for acceptance is extended by 5 calendar days under CCP §1013(a) if the offer is served by mail. Poster v Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1990) 52 C3d 266, 272, 276 CR 321. If by the terms of the offer the offer expires before the statutorily prescribed duration, it does not function as a CCP §998 offer. Marina Glencoe, L.P. v Neue Sentimental Film AG (2008) 168 CA4th 874, 880, 85 CR3d 800.

If the offer is not accepted within 30 days, or before the trial or arbitration begins if that occurs first, the offer is deemed withdrawn. CCP §998(b)(2). On when the trial or arbitration is deemed to begin, see §47.10.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.22 F. How to Accept Offer

Code of Civil Procedure §998 provides requirements for accepting an offer. Whether made on the document containing the offer or a separate document, the acceptance must be in writing, and signed by counsel for the accepting party or, if not represented by counsel, by the accepting party. CCP §998(b).

Code of Civil Procedure §998(b) also requires that the written offer contain a provision where the accepting party may sign a statement that the offer is accepted. For an offer that includes a provision for acceptance, see forms in §§47.30-47.31. The acceptance must be received before the 30-day period expires, after which the offer is deemed withdrawn. See Hofer v Young (1995) 38 CA4th 52, 58, 45 CR2d 27 (offer effective when fax copy received within 30 days, but mailed copy was not). On counsel's obligation to communicate written offers of settlement to the client, see Bus & P C §6103.5.

After the offer is accepted, the attorneys should decide how to make the settlement final, whether by means of release and request for dismissal or by entry of judgment or award. The offer, with proof of acceptance, must be filed with the court; the clerk or judge then "enters judgment accordingly." CCP §998(b). On the procedure for entry of judgment, see §47.26.

§47.23 G. Revocation of Offer

The California Supreme Court has held that, as a rule, offers to compromise under CCP §998 are governed by contract law principles. T.M. Cobb Co. v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 273, 279, 204 CR 143. Consequently, an offer can be revoked as long as the offeree has not yet accepted. See Gray v Stewart (2002) 97 CA4th 1394, 119 CR2d 217 (plaintiff's offer to compromise was accepted, so plaintiff could not revoke offer). A revoked offer will not trigger the cost-shifting provisions of CCP §998. Marcey v Romero (2007) 148 CA4th 1211, 56 CR3d 402.

Under contract law principles, a second settlement offer, even if it is invalid, supersedes and extinguishes the first offer. Palmer v Schindler Elevator Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 154, 133 CR2d 339 (under bright line rule, later §998 offer extinguishes any earlier offers, regardless of later offer's validity); Wilson v Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (1999) 72 CA4th 382, 390, 85 CR2d 4 (plaintiff who obtained award higher than first offer, but lower than second offer, was not entitled to prejudgment interest or expert fees). But see One Star, Inc. v STAAR Surgical Co. (2009) 179 CA4th 1082, 1089, 102 CR3d 195 (defendant's first offer, which lapsed, was relevant figure for §998 cost-shifting analysis when defendant withdrew second offer before statutory period expired and plaintiff was awarded less than first offer at trial).

The courts have referred to general contract principles to interpret CCP §998 because the settlement and compromise process set forth in the statute is contractual and because the statute's language is unclear on what constitutes an acceptance, whether an offer may be revoked by the offeror before the period designated in the statute expires, and what effect a counteroffer has on an outstanding offer. Poster v Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1990) 52 C3d 266, 270, 276 CR 321.

Principles of contract law do not necessarily resolve all the issues involved in interpreting CCP §998. They are invoked only when they "neither conflict with the statute nor defeat its purpose." T.M. Cobb Co., 36 C3d at 280. In T.M. Cobb, the court applied the general contract principle that an offer may be revoked by the offeree any time before acceptance. Therefore, an unaccepted offer made under the statute could be revoked before the statutory period expired. The court reasoned that applying contract law in this instance would encourage parties to make offers to settle and would ensure that the offers were based on a complete understanding of the facts. 36 C3d at 278.

Nevertheless, the extent to which ordinary contract law principles apply is not entirely clear. While the supreme court's opinion in T.M. Cobb concludes that an offer may be revoked by the offeree before acceptance, the opinion does not appear to recognize ordinary contract law principles regarding a counteroffer. See §47.24. The court appeared to give no effect to a counteroffer that, under ordinary contract law, would be considered to be a rejection of the initial offer and, thus, a termination of that offer. See CC §1585.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.24 H. Counteroffer and Rejection

Although CCP §998 offers are normally governed by principles of contract law (see §47.23), counteroffers are not. In Poster v Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1990) 52 C3d 266, 276 CR 321, the court declined to apply ordinary contract principles when interpreting a counteroffer under §998. Rather, it determined that, contrary to ordinary contract principles, it would set forth a "bright line rule" that a §998 offer is not revoked by a counteroffer and may be accepted until expressly withdrawn. 52 C3d at 270. The court reasoned that negotiation during the 30-day statutory period is normal and should not affect the offeree's right to ultimately accept the offer. The application of contract principles while the parties negotiate during the 30-day period would discourage settlements. Moreover, if a counteroffer revoked a statutory offer, it would be unclear whether a communication from an offeree was a counteroffer that revoked the standing offer, an inquiry about the possibility of different terms, or an implied request for a better offer. 52 C3d at 272.

Similarly, in Guzman v Visalia Community Bank (1999) 71 CA4th 1370, 1377, 84 CR2d 581, the court held that general contract principles should not apply in determining whether an offer has been rejected. An unequivocal rejection is required to terminate a §998 offer. See §47.24. Thus, criticism of the offer as "insulting and demeaning" does not constitute a rejection, even if could be interpreted as a rejection under contract principles, because it is not unequivocal. Absent a clear and unequivocal rejection, the offer may be accepted by the offeree during the statutory period unless the offer has been revoked by the offeror. 71 CA4th at 1377.

§47.25 I. Effect of Death of Offeror or Offerees

The death of either the offeror or the offeree automatically terminates a CCP §998 offer. See 1 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Contracts §158 (10th ed 2005) (death of offeror terminates power of acceptance; death of offeree removes only person able to accept offer).

The effect of a plaintiff's death on a defendant's CCP §998 offer was considered in Estate of Watts v Dickerson (1984) 162 CA3d 1160, 208 CR 846. Following the holding in T.M. Cobb Co. v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 273, 204 CR 143 (see §47.23), the court held that an offer under §998 is revocable and does not create an irrevocable option; under contract law principles, the offeree's death terminates a revocable offer. Inasmuch as general damages cannot be recovered in a personal injury action after a plaintiff's death, a defendant's unaccepted offer to compromise in the personal injury action, presumably including an amount for general damages, is terminated on the plaintiff's death unless the offer's terms make the offeree's personal representative an additional offeree. Estate of Watts, 162 CA3d at 1164.

IV. ENTRY OF JUDGMENT AND RELIEF FROM JUDGMENT

§47.26 A. Entry of Judgment Based on Accepted Offer

After the CCP §998 offer is accepted, the attorneys should decide how to make the settlement final, whether by means of release and request for dismissal or by entry of judgment or award. If by entry of judgment, the offer with written proof of acceptance must be filed, and the clerk or the judge must enter judgment accordingly. CCP §998(b)(1); see Gray v Stewart (2002) 97 CA4th 1394, 119 CR2d 217. If the offer has been accepted in an arbitration, the offer with proof of acceptance must be filed with the arbitrator, who must promptly render an award according to the offer. CCP §998(b)(1).

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.27 B. Finality of Judgment

A judgment or an award entered under CCP §998 is deemed a "compromise settlement." CCP §998(f). It bars relitigation of the same causes of action between the parties but is not an admission of liability. However, without an affirmative agreement of the parties, a compromise settlement does not conclude matters incident to the judgment that were not part of the cause of the action (e.g., the right to costs). Folsom v Butte County Ass'n of Gov'ts (1982) 32 C3d 668, 677, 186 CR 589. Because no issues were adjudicated for a compromise settlement, there is no collateral estoppel. See 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Judgment §§413-414 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.28 C. Motion for Relief From Judgment

After entry of the judgment, a party may move for relief from the judgment under CCP §473(b) on the grounds of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. Zamora v Clayborn Contracting Group, Inc. (2002) 28 C4th 249, 252, 121 CR2d 187 (plaintiff, whose CCP §998 settlement offer contained typographical error, may obtain relief under §473(b)); Pazderka v Caballeros Dimas Alang, Inc. (1998) 62 CA4th 658, 73 CR2d 242. In deciding a motion for relief under CCP §473 the inquiry is whether a reasonably prudent person, with no special skills or training, in the same or similar circumstances would have made the same error. Thus, §473 relief is not available when the parties merely fail to include attorney fee provisions in the settlement because that is not the type of error a person with no special training would make. Premium Commercial Servs. Corp. v National Bank of Cal. (1999) 72 CA4th 1493, 1497, 86 CR2d 65; Pazderka, 62 CA4th at 671. This conclusion is consistent with the California Supreme Court's mandate that settlements between the parties not be unraveled merely because of the attorneys' intrinsic mistakes, absent fraud or undue influence.

> [A] valid compromise agreement has many attributes of a judgment, and in the absence of a showing of fraud or undue influence is decisive of the rights of the parties thereto and operates as a bar to the reopening of the original controversy.

Folsom v Butte County Ass'n of Gov'ts (1982) 32 C3d 668, 677, 186 CR 589 (citing Shriver v Kuchel (1952) 113 CA2d 421, 248 P2d 35).

When no judgment has been entered, a motion for relief under CCP §473 is not the proper vehicle to obtain relief from an accepted CCP §998 offer to settle. See Premium Commercial Servs. Corp., 72 CA4th at 1496 n4. Once the offer has been accepted, entry of judgment is merely an administrative act (Saba v Crater (1998) 62 CA4th 150, 153, 72 CR2d 401); thus, the parties must wait until entry of the judgment to challenge the settlement by motion for relief.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.29 D. Appellate Review

A judgment based on a CCP §998 settlement is not appealable; the proper procedure to challenge the judgment is a motion for relief under CCP §473. Pazderka v Caballeros Dimas Alang, Inc. (1998) 62 CA4th 658, 73 CR2d 242. See §47.28. A trial court order's granting a motion for relief under §473 and setting aside a §998 settlement on the grounds of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect may properly be raised on appeal, and a party need not first seek writ review of the order. Premium Commercial Servs. Corp. v National Bank of Cal. (1999) 72 CA4th 1493, 1499, 86 CR2d 65. However, a party may choose to petition for writ review to avoid going through an unnecessary trial.

Of course, parties may appeal a judgment entered after a trial when a CCP §998 offer has been rejected. When the appellate court is construing §998 under those circumstances (e.g., to determine whether a judgment was "more favorable" than the compromise offer), the standard of review is de novo. With respect to the validity or reasonableness of a §998 offer, however, the standard of review is abuse of discretion. Mesa Forest Prods. v St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 324, 327, 86 CR2d 398. An undertaking is required to stay enforcement pending appeal of a judgment consisting of expert witness costs awarded under §998. CCP §917.1(2); Gallardo v Specialty Restaurants Corp. (2000) 84 CA4th 463, 468, 100 CR2d 884. An offer to compromise under §998 is not extinguished by a judgment that is vacated by a subsequent order for a new trial. Saakyan v Modern Auto., Inc. (2002) 103 CA4th 383, 126 CR2d 674.

Copies: The offeror's attorney may wish to prepare an original and at least four copies of this form. The original, accompanied by two copies, should be served on the offeree's attorney or on an unrepresented party. The offeror's attorney should keep one copy to file if the offer is not accepted and at least one office copy. Adverse counsel may accept by dating, signing, and filing the original and may notify the offeror by conforming a copy and returning it to offeror's attorney.

Comment: An offeror's attorney who prefers that adverse counsel prepare an acceptance form and request for entry of judgment should omit the "acceptance" and "request" sections of the form, specify the terms and conditions of the offer at the end of the first paragraph of the form, and reword the second paragraph, e.g.:

Judgment in accordance with this offer will be entered if, within the time allowed by Code of Civil Procedure §998, this paper and a written notice of acceptance are filed with the court clerk.

Use of a combined offer-acceptance form permits the offeree's attorney to obtain entry of the offered judgment by dating and signing the acceptance and filing the combined form with the court clerk. Making the acceptance part of the offer also ensures that the details of judgment entered will conform to the offer.

Customarily, only attorneys sign offers and acceptances. The offeror party, however, may also sign the offer to ensure that the offeree will not later claim that authority to settle was not given. See Blanton v Womancare, Inc. (1985) 38 C3d 396, 212 CR 151. In Norcal Mut. Ins. Co. v Newton (2000) 84 CA4th 64, 78, 100 CR2d 683, the court of appeal held that a client who failed to act promptly to repudiate her attorney's demands for settlement and for arbitration ratified his act, even though it was initially unauthorized.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On the many specific details required, see chap 11 and the sample form in §11.35. On when preprinted Judicial Council forms must or may be filed with the court, see Cal Rules of Ct 1.30-1.44 and 2.131-2.134 and the discussion in §11.27.

I. INTRODUCTION

§48.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses submitted cases and consent judgments. In certain matters, parties may resolve a dispute by submission of an agreed case:

- Before a lawsuit is filed (see CCP §1138; see §§48.3-48.10); or
- After an action has been filed, a procedure recognized by case law (see Towle v Sweeney (1905) 2 CA 29, 31, 83 P 74) (see §§48.11-48.15).

Forms on submission of an agreed case appear in §§48.33-48.35.

A consent judgment, which is a nonstatutory procedure, enables parties to incorporate the terms of a settlement into a judgment that may then be entered and enforced like other judgments. See §§48.16-48.32. Forms on consent judgments appear in §§48.36-48.37.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.2 B. Governing Law

Submission of an agreed case without filing an action is governed by CCP §1138. Submission after filing an action is the nonstatutory procedure by which the parties stipulate to all the facts of the case after the issues have been framed by the pleadings.

NOTE: Statutory and nonstatutory forms of submitted cases are rarely used, perhaps because opposing parties seldom agree on all of the facts in dispute.

Consent judgments are governed by case law and local rules. Some counties have specific rules for judgments under stipulation. See, e.g., Sacramento Ct R 9.17.

© The Regents of the University of California

II. SUBMISSION OF AGREED CASE

A. Submission Without Filing Action

1. Prerequisites

§48.3 a. Controversies That May Be Submitted

For a matter that merits settlement in the public interest (see §48.4), parties without filing a civil action may agree to submit a statement of their case containing the facts on which the controversy depends, and present their submission to any court that would have jurisdiction if an action had been brought. See CCP §1138. If it appears, by affidavit, that the controversy is real and that the proceedings are in good faith, the court must then hear and decide the case, determining the rights of the parties and rendering judgment as if an action were pending. CCP §1138.

The plaintiff and the defendant must be "[p]arties to a question in difference, which might be the subject of a civil action." CCP §1138. This means that an actual case or controversy must exist and that the dispute must not be hypothetical, abstract, or contrived to obtain a determination of a matter in advance of a real controversy. Collier v Lindley (1928) 203 C 641, 266 P 526; County of Colusa v Strain (1963) 215 CA2d 472, 30 CR 415.

Code of Civil Procedure §1138 also assumes that the parties to an agreed case are the real parties in interest. See, e.g., In re De Lucca (1905) 146 C 110, 79 P 853; Bailey v Johnson (1898) 121 C 562, 54 P 80.

PRACTICE TIP: If the case is submitted before suit has been filed, the written submission should assert the court's jurisdiction. See form in §48.33. No pleadings should be filed. The court must base its decision on the facts stated in the submission and may not consider other evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.4 b. Matters Should Merit Settlement in Public Interest

Under the case law, for a controversy to be subject to judicial determination under CCP §1138, "the matter should be one which merits settlement in the public interest." County of Colusa v Strain (1963) 215 CA2d 472, 478, 30 CR 415 (action on agreed facts to determine constitutionality of county land-leveling ordinance affecting substantial segment of predominantly agricultural economy). Although no explanation for this requirement is provided by the cases, presumably the rationale is that a matter that raises questions of public interest is less likely to be a hypothetical or abstract dispute.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.5 c. Declaration of Good Faith

An affidavit is required to prove that "the controversy is real and the proceedings in good faith." Under CCP §2015.5, a declaration in writing made under penalty of perjury may be substituted in place of an affidavit. An affidavit or declaration is insufficient when, instead of showing that the controversy is real, it states that "the statement of the case" is a "real controversy," and instead of stating that the proceedings are in good faith it states that the "contention" is in good faith. White v Clarke (1896) 111 C 425, 44 P 164.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.6 d. Agreed Statement

The parties must "agree upon a case containing the facts upon which the controversy depends, and present a submission of the same" to the court. CCP §1138. A judgment on an agreed statement must be limited to the facts stated and admitted (Crandall v Amador County (1862) 20 C 72), so the parties should draft the statement of agreed facts carefully. At least one California court has expressed the view that a court should refuse to accept submission of a case when the agreed statement is inadequate. See Division of Labor Law Enforcement v Brooks (1964) 226 CA2d 631, 38 CR 284.

The statement presented to the court should also include questions of law submitted to the court for a ruling. The court is not bound by a stipulation limiting the questions of law that the court will determine (San Francisco Lumber Co. v Bibb (1903) 139 C 325, 73 P 864), nor is the court bound by an erroneous agreement on a conclusion of law (People v Singh (1932) 121 CA 107, 8 P2d 898).

To ensure that the papers submitted conform with the parties' actual agreement, the parties themselves, as well as their attorneys, should sign the submission.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.7 e. Jurisdiction

The parties must submit the case to a court that "would have jurisdiction if an action had been brought." CCP §1138. An agreed case is ordinarily submitted to the trial, not the appellate, court. When a case is submitted to the court of appeal, the court may elect to treat the submission as an application for writ of mandate. Northridge Park County Water Dist. v McDonell (1958) 158 CA2d 123, 322 P2d 25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.8 2. Examples of Agreed Case

In one case, a school district and a water district resolved by agreed case a dispute over the water district's right to collect a fee for the school district's use of a sewer system and the school district's right to a refund of fees already paid. Because no facts were at issue, and presumably because the matter merited settlement in the public interest, the case was submitted to the trial court as provided for in CCP §1138. Note that the court's holding, i.e., that one public entity may not impose a charge on another without specific legislative authorization, has been superseded by statute. See Govt C §54999 (revising holding in San Marcos case). San Marcos Water Dist. v San Marcos Unified Sch. Dist. (1986) 42 C3d 154, 228 CR 47. See also Govt C §§54999.1-54999.6.

Other examples of agreed or submitted cases include:

- Heilbron v Sumner (1921) 186 C 648, 200 P 409 (use of funds obtained by sale of bonds to construct a dam).
- Panama-Pacific Int'l Exposition Co. v Panama Pac. Int'l Exposition Comm'n (1918) 178 C 746, 174 P 890 (distribution of surplus of assets of a corporation).
- Kobelin v Board of Retirement (1970) 8 CA3d 1057, 88 CR 131 (calculation of retirement service credits and benefits).
- Turnboo v County of Santa Clara (1956) 144 CA2d 728, 301 P2d 992 (interpretation of reimbursement agreements for welfare assistance).

One case that according to the court should have been submitted as an agreed case and was not is Fratis v Fireman's Fund Am. Ins. Co. (1976) 56 CA3d 339, 128 CR 391. In this action, the only issue raised was whether an employee became an additional insured under his employer's automobile insurance policy. The court noted that because no facts were in dispute "[t]he lawyers in this action wasted public and private time and money in a cumbersome, five-day jury trial to try a question of insurance law which could have been submitted to the trial court as an agreed case. The record on appeal does not indicate which side demanded a jury trial, and we'd rather not know." 56 CA3d at 342 n3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.9 3. Comparison With Declaratory Relief

A case submitted before an action is filed is akin to an action for declaratory relief in that both require the existence of an actual case or controversy. See County of Colusa v Strain (1963) 215 CA2d 472, 30 CR 415. In the context of a submitted case, CCP §1138 uses the phrase "question in difference" to refer to an actual controversy.

NOTE: A submitted case is different from an action for declaratory relief in that in a submitted case the resulting judgment is enforceable by legal process and the nature of the relief is not limited to a declaration of the rights of the parties.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.10 4. Judgment and Appeal

The court is bound to treat a submitted case as if the action were pending and to render a judgment based only on the agreed facts. Findings of fact are unnecessary because the only question before the court is the law applicable to the agreed facts. City of Los Angeles v Gage (1954) 127 CA2d 442, 274 P2d 34. The judgment is then entered without costs for any proceeding prior to the trial. CCP §1139. The judgment may be enforced in the same manner as if it had been rendered in an action of the same jurisdictional classification in the same court. CCP §1140.

A judgment rendered on an agreed case is appealable in the same manner as a judgment rendered in an ordinary action of the same jurisdictional classification. CCP §1140. The judgment roll for purposes of review consists of the case, the submission, and a copy of the judgment. CCP §1139. The appellate court is not bound by the findings of the trial court and must determine the applicability of the statutes to the agreed and uncontradicted facts. People ex rel Dep't of Transp. v Harris (1982) 128 CA3d 264, 180 CR 148.

B. Submission After Filing Action

§48.11 1. Nature and Characteristics

Submission after filing an action is the nonstatutory procedure by which the parties stipulate to all the facts of the case after the issues have been framed by the pleadings. Because no issue of fact exists, this procedure eliminates the need to present evidence on the facts submitted and eliminates the need for a jury trial. See Division of Labor Law Enforcement v Brooks (1964) 226 CA2d 631, 38 CR 284. See also Faust v City of San Diego (1931) 115 CA 277, 1 P2d 543 (finding of fact, unnecessarily made by trial court, may be disregarded on appeal). Like a case submitted before an action is filed, a case submitted after filing an action does not require findings of fact, because the statement of agreed facts suffices as findings of facts. Robinson v El Centro Grain Co. (1933) 133 CA 567, 24 P2d 554; Ackley v Maggi (1927) 86 CA 631, 261 P 311. Unlike a case submitted before an action is filed, however, a court may consider evidence substantiating the facts set forth in the agreed statement since the agreed statement is but a "substitute for evidence." Towle v Sweeney (1905) 2 CA 29, 31, 83 P 74.

PRACTICE TIP: A submission of an agreed case filed after a complaint and answer have been filed need not show jurisdictional facts nor frame issues. The court's findings and conclusions may be based on issues framed in the pleadings and on evidence and other matters of record, unless the submission restricts the matters the court is to consider.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/48 Submitted Case and Consent Judgment/§48.12 2. Comparison With Motion for Judgment on Pleadings

§48.12 2. Comparison With Motion for Judgment on Pleadings

The key difference between a motion for judgment on the pleadings and a case submitted after filing an action is that a judgment on the pleadings is based only on the facts in the pleadings. In a submitted case, the judgment is based on all the facts to which the parties agree, including facts not in the pleadings that could have been asserted in an amended or a supplementary complaint or at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/48 Submitted Case and Consent Judgment/§48.13 3. Stipulation

§48.13 3. Stipulation

The crux of a submission after an action is filed is a stipulation or agreed statement setting forth the facts on which the case will be tried. Because the legal issues have already been framed by the pleadings, this agreed statement, unlike the statement required under CCP §1138, need not include questions of law submitted to the court for determination and need not be supported by an affidavit that the controversy is real and in good faith. The stipulation should include an acknowledgment by both parties that this action will be tried without a jury and that the statement of agreed facts serves as a substitute for evidence of those facts.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.14 4. Procedural Considerations

A stipulation as to agreed facts may be presented to the court at a hearing on a demurrer or as part of a motion for summary judgment. A motion for new trial is inappropriate when a case is submitted after filing an action because it would be idle to grant a new trial to reexamine a question of fact when the facts are expressly agreed on. Quist v Sandman (1908) 154 C 748, 99 P 204.

III. CONSENT JUDGMENTS

A. General Principles

1. When to Use Consent Judgment

§48.16 a. Settlement Calls for Future Performance

Entry of a consent judgment facilitates enforcement of settlements that call for a future performance, e.g., the payment of money in installments. The advantage of a consent judgment over a mere agreement or a promissory note is that it embodies, in a judgment, the defendant's obligation to perform. The party seeking to enforce performance can obtain an abstract of judgment, record the judgment as a lien against specific property to secure payment of the settlement, and enforce the settlement by levy of execution on the judgment. When no judgment is entered, the party seeking to enforce performance is limited to a cause of action for breach of contract.

When the terms of a settlement can be performed immediately (e.g., by payment of money), a consent judgment may not be necessary, and the settlement may be concluded by dismissal and a release.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/48 Submitted Case and Consent Judgment/§48.17 b. Using Conditional or Delayed Entry

§48.17 b. Using Conditional or Delayed Entry

A consent judgment need not be entered immediately after settlement. The parties' settlement agreement or stipulation can specify that the agreed-on judgment will be entered only on certain conditions, such as the defendant's failure to meet the terms of the settlement or if some other event occurs that the parties have agreed would trigger the judgment. See §48.26.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Effects of Consent Judgment

§48.18 a. Res Judicata

A judgment entered by consent of the parties has the same effect as one in an action tried on the merits. A consent judgment, therefore, is res judicata on all claims that were or could have been raised (Avery v Avery (1970) 10 CA3d 525, 529, 89 CR 195) and precludes collateral attack on all the issues contained within the stipulation (Sohn v California Pac. Title Ins. Co. (1954) 124 CA2d 757, 767, 269 P2d 223). On later litigation of issues not covered in the stipulated judgment, see Ellena v State (1977) 69 CA3d 245, 260, 138 CR 110. See also Louie v BFS Retail & Commercial Operations, LLC (2009) 178 CA4th 1544, 1559, 101 CR3d 441 (consent decree providing for class injunctive and declaratory relief and attorney fees for claims under Americans with Disabilities Act did not preclude individual claim for damages under California's Disabled Persons Act).

A stipulated judgment may be given collateral estoppel effect. California State Auto. Ass'n Inter-Ins. Bureau v Superior Court (1990) 50 C3d 658, 664, 268 CR 284 (insurer that signed stipulation, on which judgment was entered, in which insured admitted liability estopped to same extent as insured).

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.19 b. Appealability

Because consent to a judgment constitutes a waiver of errors by the party consenting to it, a consent judgment prevents a consenting party's attack on appeal. Morrow v Learned (1926) 76 CA 538, 540, 245 P 442. A consent judgment is appealable when the judgment entered does not conform exactly to the stipulation (see §48.28) or when consent was given to facilitate appeal after adverse determination of a crucial issue. See Building Indus. Ass'n v City of Camarillo (1986) 41 C3d 810, 817, 226 CR 81. But see Four Point Entertainment, Inc. v New World Entertainment, Ltd. (1997) 60 CA4th 79, 83 n5, 70 CR2d 82, which views Morehart v County of Santa Barbara (1994) 7 C4th 725, 29 CR2d 804, as implicitly overruling Camarillo on this point. In Tudor Ranches, Inc. v State Compensation Ins. Fund (1998) 65 CA4th 1422, 1429, 77 CR2d 574, the court reasoned that Morehart prevents review of a stipulated judgment in which the parties intended that their remaining claims be dismissed without prejudice to later prosecution, although it allows a party to appeal from a stipulated adverse judgment with prejudice on all claims. Based on the reasoning in Tudor, the court in City of S. San Francisco v Mayer (1998) 67 CA4th 1350, 1353 n2, 79 CR2d 704, permitted a party to appeal from an adverse judgment entered under a stipulation with prejudice on all its claims. See also Villano v Waterman Convalescent Hosp., Inc. (2010) 181 CA4th 1189, 1203, __CR3d __ (under Tudor, plaintiff permitted to appeal from consent judgment that she requested after court indicated adverse rulings on motions in limine).

The parties may, of course, stipulate that one of them may appeal from the judgment with the stipulated amount to be paid if the appeal is unsuccessful. See Holmes v Roth (1992) 11 CA4th 931, 934, 14 CR2d 315.

Appellate review of a consent judgment assumes the existence of a properly filed motion for the appellate court to review. Magana Cathcart McCarthy v CB Richard Ellis, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 106, 120, 94 CR3d 109 (to create appellate review of threshold issues, parties stipulated that trial court would grant motion for summary judgment if one were brought; judgment affirming stipulation reversed and remanded).

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.20 c. Bankruptcy Discharge

A consent judgment may be dischargeable in bankruptcy. See Larsen v Beekmann (1969) 276 CA2d 185, 192, 80 CR 654.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.21 3. Attorney's Authority to Consent

As a rule, an attorney cannot enter into a stipulation or consent to a judgment without the client's knowledge and express consent. Blanton v Womancare, Inc. (1985) 38 C3d 396, 212 CR 151; Preston v Hill (1875) 50 C 43, 51. Even when a client has given the attorney authority to settle on specific terms, the attorney's signature alone is insufficient to compel enforcement of the settlement under CCP §664.6, if the client is not available to sign a stipulation for entry of judgment. Levy v Superior Court (1995) 10 C4th 578, 41 CR2d 878. See Burckhard v Del Monte Corp. (1996) 48 CA4th 1912, 56 CR2d 569 (Levy held retroactive). See also Harris v Rudin, Richman & Appel (1999) 74 CA4th 299, 87 CR2d 822 (plaintiffs could not use summary procedure to enforce proposed settlement under §664.6 when not all defendants had signed counsel's letter setting forth terms of settlement, but plaintiffs could use other enforcement procedures, such as action for breach of contract); Davidson v Superior Court (1999) 70 CA4th 514, 82 CR2d 739 (judgment was void when based on settlement signed by judge and attorneys for both sides but not by defendants).

§48.22 B. Drafting Agreement or Stipulation

When parties agree to be bound by a consent judgment, one of them should prepare a written stipulation for judgment (see §48.36). The stipulation can spell out the terms of the settlement, or it can incorporate the written agreement by reference if a formal settlement agreement was prepared. If the parties consented in open court to entry of judgment, no written stipulation is necessary.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/48 Submitted Case and Consent Judgment/§48.23 1. Suggested Terms

§48.23 1. Suggested Terms

The terms of settlement agreements and stipulations for judgment vary according to the nature of the case and the circumstances under which consent judgment will be entered. A comprehensive stipulation, however, should contain the following provisions:

- A description of the action being settled;
- The terms of payment and the method of payment; and
- The terms for entry of judgment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.24 a. Claims and Actions Covered

A plaintiff may want assurance that the defendant will not allow judgment and then sue for malicious prosecution, abuse of process, or on a cause of action relating to the basis of the settled lawsuit. But see, e.g., California Coastal Comm'n v Tahmassebi (1998) 69 CA4th 255, 81 CR2d 321 (defendant who enters into stipulated judgment is judicially estopped from later taking inconsistent position to detriment of other party). A defendant may want assurance that the plaintiff will not dismiss or take judgment on the present action under the settlement and then file a new action on a related cause of action or one arising from the same event or transaction. For sample clauses of claims and actions covered, see §48.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/48 Submitted Case and Consent Judgment/§48.25 b. Terms of Payment

§48.25 b. Terms of Payment

The terms of payment and the method of payment could include the commencement date, interest, amount of each installment, place of payments, and whether the payments should be made to the attorney in trust for the client so the attorney can know immediately of any default. For a sample clause of terms of payment, see §48.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.26 c. Terms of Entry of Judgment

A settlement agreement and stipulation may provide that the consent judgment shall not be filed, or that the court will not be asked to render judgment, or that the execution on the judgment will not be levied, until defendant defaults or some other event occurs. See §48.17.

WARNING: Sometimes parties wish to agree to postpone entry of judgment or execution on a judgment entered, but also wish to specify that at a later time the judgment will be entered for an amount greater than is necessary to pay the debt. Such a provision could be held to be an unenforceable forfeiture (see Chambreau v Coughlan (1968) 263 CA2d 712, 716, 69 CR 783) unless the stipulation recites a factual basis justifying judgment for the larger sum and also states that the disputed debt could be satisfied by paying a smaller amount within the prescribed time.

An agreement or a stipulation that provides for a conditional entry of judgment should specify the means for entry of judgment. The agreement might provide that the plaintiff must proceed by noticed motion to obtain an order for entry of judgment, that judgment may be entered by ex parte application, or that a court commissioner may act as temporary judge to authorize entry of judgment. Rooney v Vermont Inv. Corp. (1973) 10 C3d 351, 360, 110 CR 353.

For sample clauses in an agreement concerning the terms of entry of judgment, see §48.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.27 2. Interpretation as Contract

A stipulation should be unambiguous. If the terms of the stipulation require interpretation before a judgment can be entered, the stipulation will be treated as a contract and construed in accordance with principles of contract law.

A stipulation is not treated like a contract for all purposes, however, and is not subject to the contract rule permitting rescission for breach of a condition on which the consent was based. Stevens v Stevens (1968) 268 CA2d 426, 435, 74 CR 54. A stipulation may be challenged only on the same grounds as a judgment rendered after trial, i.e., by a motion to vacate the judgment. Stevens v Stevens, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Entry of Judgment

1. Procedure

§48.28 a. Required Papers

When a written stipulation contains all the terms of the judgment agreed to by the parties, judgment may be entered on noticed motion or on ex parte application (if the right to a noticed motion is expressly waived in the stipulation). Rooney v Vermont Inv. Corp. (1973) 10 C3d 351, 370, 110 CR 353; Heller v Dyerville Mfg. Co. (1897) 116 C 127, 47 P 1016. But if the stipulation leaves open for later determination any essential element of a complete judgment, judgment cannot be entered until the missing elements are proved or stipulated to. Rooney v Vermont Inv. Corp., supra. The stipulation and proposed judgment should be attached to the motion papers as exhibits.

The filing of a written stipulation that sets forth all terms of the judgment agreed to by the parties is normally a sufficient basis for entry of judgment. Rooney, 10 C3d at 368.

Attaching a judgment form to the stipulation helps to ensure that there will not later be a dispute over whether the judgment conforms to the stipulation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.29 b. Entry by Clerk

After obtaining the judge's signature on the judgment, the attorney must be sure that it is returned to the court clerk and that the clerk enters it in the judgment book, noting the date and place of entry on the judgment. A consent judgment must be entered in the judgment book by the court clerk to be enforceable as a judgment; merely filing the stipulation or settlement agreement is not sufficient. Old Settlers Inv. Co. v White (1910) 158 C 236, 245, 110 P 922.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.30 c. Local Variations

Attorneys preparing consent judgments should consult local rules. Some courts have specific rules for judgment under stipulation. See, e.g., Sacramento Ct R 9.17 (when parties enter into written stipulation for judgment, the form of proposed judgment to be signed and filed must be a separate document; a copy of the judgment may be attached as an exhibit or incorporated in the stipulation). But see Cal Rules of Ct 3.20, 2.100(a) (Judicial Council rules of court preempt local rules on form and format of papers and other specified matters), discussed in §11.2.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.31 2. Function of Judge

A judge asked to render judgment under a stipulation must do so in exact conformity with the stipulation. It is beyond the court's jurisdiction to add to the decree provisions that are not the subject of the agreement. Jones v World Life Research Inst. (1976) 60 CA3d 836, 840, 131 CR 674. When the consent judgment differs from or exceeds the terms of the stipulation, the judgment may be attacked by a motion for a new trial or by appeal. See 60 CA3d at 843 (judgment may be appealed or collaterally attacked).

If the entry of judgment depends on an event, the occurrence of which must be proved, or if the stipulation fails to specify when or on what proof judgment is to be entered, the judge may order entry of judgment only after a noticed hearing or receipt of further stipulation. Rooney v Vermont Inv. Corp. (1973) 10 C3d 351, 369, 110 CR 353. If a condition is mentioned in the stipulation, the court must be fully apprised of the circumstances surrounding the occurrence of the condition and must be satisfied that it has, in fact, occurred. This may require some form of hearing unless the stipulation also contains an express and explicit waiver of the right to a hearing. S.E.P. Assocs. v Peto (1975) 49 CA3d 305, 308, 122 CR 514.

§48.32 3. Vacating Consent Judgment

I. INTRODUCTION

§49.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses sliding scale settlements (see §§49.3-49.25) and structured settlements (see §§49.26-49.59).

§49.2 B. Governing Law

Sliding scale settlement agreements, also known as "Mary Carter" agreements, are impliedly authorized by CCP §877.5, which refers to "sliding scale recovery agreements." Structured settlements are not directly governed by statutory law, although some tax statutes, which provide for economic advantages, may be applicable. See, e.g., IRC §104(a)(2). See discussion in §49.49.

II. SLIDING SCALE SETTLEMENTS

§49.3 A. Defined

A "Mary Carter" or sliding scale settlement agreement is one in which the plaintiff settles with one or more, but not all, of the defendants, and the amount the settling defendant ultimately owes the plaintiff is affected by the amount the plaintiff recovers against nonsettling defendants. CCP §877.5(a)-(b); Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 43 C3d 858, 869 n9, 239 CR 626; Alcala Co. v Superior Court (1996) 49 CA4th 1308, 1312, 57 CR2d 349. A sliding scale settlement includes, but is not limited to, agreements in the form of a loan from the agreeing tortfeasor defendant or defendants to the plaintiff or plaintiffs that is repayable in whole or in part from the recovery against the nonagreeing tortfeasor defendant or defendants. CCP §877.5(b); United Servs. Auto. Ass'n v Superior Court (2001) 93 CA4th 633, 641, 113 CR2d 328.

NOTE: Under such an agreement, a settling defendant guarantees the plaintiff a specified total recovery at the conclusion of the entire litigation. Sliding scale agreements typically provide that if the plaintiff recovers more than the guaranteed amount from the other defendants, the settling defendant will owe nothing. If the plaintiff ultimately recovers less than the guaranteed amount, however, the settling defendant must pay the difference up to the amount guaranteed.

§49.4 B. Effect of Good Faith Sliding Scale Agreement

Sliding scale agreements, like conventional or "straight" settlements, present distinct advantages, disadvantages, and risks for plaintiffs and defendants. The form and terms of sliding scale agreements may be varied to meet the demands of particular situations, but these agreements are subject to the "good faith" requirements of CCP §877.6. See Tech-Bilt, Inc. v Woodward-Clyde & Assocs. (1985) 38 C3d 488, 213 CR 256; Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court, supra (both discussed in §49.5).

PRACTICE TIP: In settlements involving fewer than all joint tortfeasors, the settling defendant is relieved from liability to the nonsettling defendants for indemnity or contribution only if the settlement was entered into in good faith. CCP §§877-877.6. See chap 50. Because the primary incentive for a defendant to enter into a sliding scale settlement agreement is relief from liability for contribution or indemnity, a settling joint tortfeasor should enter into a sliding scale settlement only if it appears possible to obtain a judicial determination of good faith.

§49.5 C. Good Faith Standards: Tech-Bilt and Abbott Ford

In Tech-Bilt, Inc. v Woodward-Clyde & Assocs. (1985) 38 C3d 488, 213 CR 256, involving a conventional settlement, the supreme court held that for a settlement to be in good faith, the amount of the proposed settlement must be within the "reasonable range" of the settling defendant's proportional share of comparative liability for the plaintiff's total injuries. In applying the "reasonable range" test, Tech-Bilt delineated several factors to be considered by the trial court, including (38 C3d at 499):

> [A] rough approximation of plaintiff's total recovery and the settler's proportionate liability, the amount paid in settlement, the allocation of settlement proceeds among plaintiffs, and a recognition that a settler should pay less in settlement than if he were found liable after a trial. Other relevant considerations include the financial conditions and insurance policy limits of settling defendants, as well as the existence of collusion, fraud, or tortious conduct aimed to injure the interests of the nonsettling defendants.

For discussion of these factors and cases construing them, see chap 50.

The good faith standard enunciated in Tech-Bilt applies to sliding scale agreements. Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 43 C3d 858, 239 CR 626. Thus, settling parties should be certain that the sliding scale settlement agreement meets not only the requirements of Tech-Bilt and its progeny, but also the special good faith requirements applicable to sliding scale settlements. If the sliding scale settlement does not meet these standards and the agreement is found not to be in good faith, the settling defendant will not avoid liability to the nonsettling defendants for indemnity or contribution. 43 C3d at 875.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.6 1. Value of Consideration Given

A conventional settlement is in good faith if the amount of the settlement payment is within the settling defendant's proportional share of comparative liability for the plaintiff's injuries. Tech-Bilt, Inc. v Woodward-Clyde & Assocs. (1985) 38 C3d 488, 499, 213 CR 256. For sliding scale settlements, the total amount paid by the settling defendant cannot be determined until the conclusion of the litigation with all defendants. Indeed, in a sliding scale settlement, the amount ultimately paid by the settling defendant may range from zero to the full amount of the guaranty.

Before Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 43 C3d 858, 239 CR 626, courts had struggled with defining the amount of consideration given in a sliding scale settlement. Some decisions suggested that because a settling defendant may ultimately pay nothing under the agreement, there was no consideration paid, or there was no settlement for purposes of CCP §877. See, e.g., Pease v Beech Aircraft Corp. (1974) 38 CA3d 450, 473, 113 CR 416.

The Abbott Ford court recognized that the "value of consideration paid" by the settling defendant lies somewhere between the minimum and the maximum amount that the settling defendant may ultimately pay. Abbott Ford, Inc., 43 C3d at 878. Thus, as with conventional settlements, for a sliding scale agreement to be in good faith, the value of consideration given must, at a minimum, fall within the "ballpark" or "reasonable range" of the settling defendant's proportionate share of comparative liability for the plaintiff's damages. 43 C3d at 879; see United Servs. Auto. Ass'n v Superior Court (2001) 93 CA4th 633, 640, 113 CR2d 328.

NOTE: The value of a sliding scale settlement is neither the guaranteed (or maximum) amount nor the minimum "unconditional" amount to be paid by the settling defendant. The ballpark amount is not a specific figure, but a range, while the value of the agreement is a specific amount that must fall within the ballpark.

The "value" of consideration given in a sliding scale settlement is important to both the settling and nonsettling defendants. The "trade-off" for the nonsettling defendant's loss of indemnity and contribution rights is an offset against an ultimate verdict against the nonsettling defendant. CCP §877(a). The amount of this offset is equal to the amount of the "consideration" or "value" given by the settling defendant. Abbott Ford, Inc., 43 C3d at 877.

The parties to a sliding scale agreement must determine its value, and the agreement must specifically declare the value of consideration. 43 C3d at 878.

NOTE: The court in Abbott Ford stated that trial courts "should not be burdened with the obligation of determining the 'actual' value of such an agreement by the use of actuarial or other valuation methods." 43 C3d at 879. Rather, the parties to the agreement must determine this figure, since they are in the best position to assign a value to the agreement and have the burden of establishing the value.

Many factors affect the value of a sliding scale agreement. For example, as the likelihood that the settling defendant will be required to pay the full amount of the guaranty increases, so too does the value of the agreement. Similarly, if the settling defendant advances portions of the guaranteed amount as periodic, no-interest loans to the plaintiff throughout the course of the litigation, the agreement becomes more valuable, since the plaintiff receives the benefit of the use of the money. See §§49.13-49.19.

The monetary value of a sliding scale settlement determines the amount of the nonsettling defendants' offset—the amount by which the plaintiff's claims against the nonsettling defendants are reduced following an award at trial. 43 C3d at 877. The amount of the settling defendant's obligation after trial is the difference between the guaranteed amount, on one hand, and the award against the nonsettling defendant less the value of the sliding scale settlement, on the other.

EXAMPLE: A sliding scale settlement guarantees the plaintiff a recovery of $100,000, and the parties have assigned to it a value of $60,000. If the verdict against the nonsettling defendant is $130,000, the settling defendant is still obligated to the plaintiff on the guaranty after trial. Subtracted from the $130,000 award is the nonsettling defendant's offset of $60,000, the amount of the value of the agreement. Thus, the nonsettling defendant must pay $70,000 and the settling defendant must pay the balance of the guaranteed amount, $30,000, to the plaintiff. For the settling defendant to escape paying anything on the guaranty, and for the plaintiff to obtain more at trial than the amount he or she was previously guaranteed by the settling defendant, the amount of the verdict would have to exceed $160,000.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.7 2. Conduct of Nonsettling Defendants

An additional factor that a trial court may consider in determining the good faith of a sliding scale settlement is the unreasonable or bad faith conduct of the nonsettling defendant. If a defendant has been especially recalcitrant in refusing to negotiate with the plaintiff, that defendant's conduct may make it impossible for the other defendants to settle the litigation with the plaintiff, who may not wish to release any of the joint tortfeasors individually unless sure to recover the minimum amount believed to be just compensation for the injuries. When a defendant acts unreasonably in settlement negotiations and this conduct threatens to frustrate the settlement efforts of the other defendants, "such a defendant may be on shaky equitable grounds when it thereafter seeks to attack the 'good faith' of a sliding scale agreement that has been occasioned by its own recalcitrance." Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 43 C3d 858, 881, 239 CR 626. In such cases, a court may approve a sliding scale settlement whose value would otherwise be considered too low. Such a sanction, however, "should not be so out of proportion to the holdout defendant's conduct as to be unduly coercive." 43 C3d at 883.

WARNING: A "holdout" defendant should take a codefendant's threats to enter into a sliding scale settlement seriously, evaluate the plaintiff's damages and defendants' liability shares, and promptly communicate this evaluation with a reasonable settlement offer to the plaintiff. If the settling parties negotiate a low guaranteed amount and the trial court approves a low-value offset because of the holdout defendant's recalcitrance, the risk of the nonsettling defendant's paying a greater amount than his or her proportionate fair share following the verdict is substantially enhanced.

§49.8 3. Factors Considered in Determining Good Faith

Factors considered in determining the good faith of a settlement, discussed more fully in chap 50 and applicable to sliding scale agreements, include:

- Rough estimates of the plaintiff's total recovery and the settling defendant's proportionate liability;
- The amount of the settlement;
- The allocation of the settlement proceeds among the plaintiffs;
- A recognition that a settling defendant should pay less in settlement than he or she would if found liable at trial;
- Financial condition, including insurance policy limits, of the settling defendant;
- The existence of fraud, collusion, or tortious conduct aimed to injure the interests of the nonsettling defendants;
- Whether any veto provision is limited only to settlements that would require the earlier settling defendant to bear more than its fair share of liability for plaintiff's damages;
- Whether the nonsettling defendant has engaged in any unreasonable or bad faith conduct that impeded the settlement process and led to the sliding scale agreement;
- The amount the nonsettling defendant sets as the total value of the plaintiff's case for settlement purposes; and
- The amount the nonsettling defendant stands ready to contribute toward an overall settlement.

D. Entering Into Sliding Scale Settlement

§49.9 1. Types of Cases

Generally, sliding scale agreements are appropriate in all types of litigation, and in particular when a conventional settlement with all defendants may be difficult to obtain.

A sliding scale settlement is appropriate when one or more defendants refuse to contribute a reasonable amount toward a total settlement, while another defendant is willing to pay his or her proportional share. In such a case, the plaintiff may be reluctant, for strategic reasons, to settle separately with the willing defendant for fear that the recalcitrant defendants will escape liability.

NOTE: The plaintiff's concerns may be particularly valid when the recalcitrant defendants are peripheral defendants whose exposure may be increased by the mere presence of the target defendant at trial. A sliding scale agreement with the target defendant tends to obviate these concerns, provided that the guaranteed amount would represent a reasonable, minimum recovery even if the recalcitrant defendants defeat liability.

Sliding scale settlements are also appropriate for both plaintiffs and defendants when there is an appreciable risk that the plaintiff will recover substantial damages, particularly when the potential recovery would exceed a defendant's insurance policy limits or personal financial resources. By entering into a sliding scale agreement, the plaintiff is insured a minimum recovery without forfeiting the potentially large recovery against the remaining defendants. Similarly, the settling defendant protects itself by capping its liability at the guaranteed amount, but retains the possibility that it may ultimately pay nothing under the agreement in the event that the plaintiff recovers substantial damages against the nonsettling defendants.

PRACTICE TIP: It has been observed that a sliding scale settlement is more appropriate (and the likelihood of a good faith determination greatest) when the settling defendant's proportionate liability is low and the plaintiff's chance of success against all defendants is high. There is even a chart in which different values are assigned to certain of the Tech-Bilt factors according to the facts of an individual case, thus transforming the determination of whether a sliding scale settlement is appropriate into a mathematical analysis based on the probability of a good faith determination. See CCP §§877-877.6; The Settlement Game in the Ballpark That Tech-Bilt, 13 Pepperdine L Rev 823, 854 n157 (1986). A party considering entering into a sliding scale settlement may wish to make a similar analysis based on the facts of the case and the factors delineated in §49.8.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.10 2. Timing

There are no statutory or judicially imposed limitations on when the parties can enter into a sliding scale agreement. As a basic rule, however, the parties should not enter into a sliding scale agreement until they are able to fully evaluate essential terms of the agreement, such as the amount of the guaranty and the "value of consideration" to be assigned for purposes of establishing the offset to which the nonsettling defendants will be entitled. Additionally, because sliding scale settlements are often appropriate when conventional settlements are unavailable, sliding scale agreements are typically negotiated only after all of the parties' settlement positions have been communicated and explored.

Parties that enter into a sliding scale settlement as a last resort, because of recalcitrant defendants' unreasonable refusal to settle, should first warn the nonsettling defendants that a sliding scale settlement is imminent.

NOTE: The mere threat of a sliding scale settlement may induce the recalcitrant defendants to reevaluate their settlement position and increase their settlement offers. Additionally, advance warning to the nonsettling defendants may enhance the parties' chances of obtaining the court's determination of good faith under CCP §877.6.

Such advance warning may be important evidence to negate a claim by a nonsettling defendant that the settling parties acted collusively and may show that the settlement was entered into as a last resort because of the nonsettling defendant's recalcitrance. See Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 43 C3d 858, 881, 239 CR 626.

If the parties are negotiating a sliding scale settlement close to the time of a scheduled settlement conference, the parties may wish to finalize their agreement before a settlement conference judge, especially when the sliding scale settlement was occasioned by the nonsettling defendant's unreasonable failure to participate in settlement negotiations. In Abbott Ford, the court noted that a trial court may consider whether the sliding scale settlement resulted from the efforts of a settlement judge in evaluating the reasonableness of the nonsettling defendant's negotiating conduct. 43 C3d at 881 n24. Moreover, the fact that a sliding scale agreement was negotiated before a settlement judge might negate the specter of collusion and enhance the parties' chances of obtaining a good faith confirmation.

§49.11 3. Impact of Fair Responsibility Act of 1986 (Proposition 51)

Sliding scale agreements in cases governed by the Fair Responsibility Act of 1986 (CC §§1431-1431.5, also known as Proposition 51) involve additional risks for settling and nonsettling parties, particularly in the context of motions for good faith under CCP §877.6. The Act abolishes joint liability for noneconomic damages, so that, in cases involving multiple tortfeasors, each defendant's liability for noneconomic damages is directly proportional to the defendant's percentage of fault. However, the Act did not abolish or modify joint and several liability for economic damages. For further discussion of the Act and its impact on settlement, see chap 50.

The Act may directly affect some of the essential provisions of a sliding scale agreement.

First. The parties to a sliding scale settlement agreement should allocate separate amounts for economic and noneconomic damages. In moving for a good faith determination under CCP §877.6, the moving party should analyze separately its exposure for economic and noneconomic damages. Because the Act abolishes joint and several liability for noneconomic damages, the settling parties, particularly the plaintiff, have an incentive to allocate payments under the settlement agreement to the plaintiff's noneconomic damages, thereby leaving the remaining, nonsettling defendants exposed to joint and several liability for economic damages.

In applying the "reasonable range" standard in determining the settlement's good faith, the court may focus on whether the amount allocated to plaintiff's economic damages is "unreasonably low" in view of the proportional liability of all defendants.

EXAMPLE: Assume that a plaintiff who has sustained $1 million in economic damages makes a joint settlement demand of $2 million to all of four defendants. Defendants A, B, and C, whose total proportionate liability is 50 percent, refuse to settle. Defendant D, who alone is 50 percent at fault, enters into a sliding scale agreement that guarantees the plaintiff a total recovery of $1 million, with $800,000 allocated to noneconomic damages and $200,000 allocated to economic damages. In cases not governed by the Act, a court probably would uphold the good faith of the hypothetical settlement, inasmuch as the $1 million guaranty, 50 percent of the plaintiff's joint settlement demand, is within the reasonable range of defendant D's proportional liability. Under the Act the settlement is arguably "unreasonably cheap" because the remaining defendants, whose combined liability is only 50 percent, remain jointly and severally liable for 80 percent of the plaintiff's economic damages. Under the Act, then, A, B, and C could oppose a motion for good faith determination on grounds that either or both the total guaranteed recovery, or the allocation between economic and noneconomic damages, are "unreasonably cheap."

Second. Settling parties should allocate settlement amounts under sliding scale agreements between economic and noneconomic damages for purposes of determining the "monetary value" or "amount of consideration" of the settlement. (See §49.6 for discussion of value of consideration.) Because the Act abolishes joint and several liability for noneconomic damages, the remaining, nonsettling defendants should not be entitled to a credit for amounts paid by the settling defendant toward the plaintiff's noneconomic damages. Therefore, the monetary value or "consideration" assigned by the settling parties to the sliding scale agreement should take into account any payments for economic damages but exclude payments for noneconomic damages. Otherwise, the settling defendants would receive a credit for the entire amount of the settlement when they would not otherwise be entitled to an offset for noneconomic damages paid by the settling defendant. See Klein & Day, Prop. 51 and the House That Tech-Bilt, 6 Cal Law 25 (Nov. 1986).

§49.12 E. Terms of Sliding Scale Settlement Agreement

The specific provisions of a sliding scale settlement agreement significantly affect the good or bad faith of the agreement. For example, if the amount of the guaranty is so low that it does not reflect the settling defendant's proportional share of comparative liability for plaintiff's damages, the agreement may not be in good faith, since the value of consideration paid must fall within the ballpark of the settling defendant's share of liability for plaintiff's damages, and the value is always less than the guaranteed amount. Tech-Bilt, Inc. v Woodward-Clyde & Assocs. (1985) 38 C3d 488, 499, 213 CR 256; see §49.6. Similarly, certain "veto provisions" (see §49.16) may unduly prevent settlement with the nonsettling defendants so as to render the settlement agreement in bad faith. The following sections discuss common provisions of sliding scale settlement agreements and examine ways in which these provisions may be drafted to increase the likelihood of a good faith determination.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.13 1. Amount of Guaranty

A sliding scale settlement agreement must contain a term that fixes the amount the settling defendant guarantees the plaintiff will recover. This figure, then, represents the maximum amount the settling defendant may ultimately pay, and the minimum amount the plaintiff will recover in the litigation. In negotiating the amount of the guaranty, the settling parties should consider the settlement value of the entire litigation and the relative liability of the settling defendant. Although the parties may include a variety of terms that make the settlement more or less valuable to the plaintiff and that may require an upward or downward adjustment of the guaranteed amount, in many cases the amount of the guaranty represents a low-end settlement value of the entire case regarding all defendants, since this amount is the minimum the plaintiff will accept as compensation for his or her damages. In cases in which the relative liability of the settling defendant is low, however, the amount of the guaranty may represent only a fraction of the total settlement value of the case. See, e.g., Rogers & Wells v Superior Court (1985) 175 CA3d 545, 548, 220 CR 767, review granted and court of appeal opinion directed to remain published and citable; case later dismissed as moot (settling defendants' guaranties totaled $3.9 million; plaintiffs' claims against all defendants exceeded $90 million). Thus, the amount of the guaranty largely hinges on the settling defendant's share of liability for the plaintiff's damages.

The guaranteed amount, of course, typically represents more than a fair settlement regarding the settling defendant only, or the plaintiff would have no incentive to enter into a sliding scale settlement instead of a straight settlement. In exchange for the benefit that it ultimately may pay nothing on the guaranty, the settling defendant, then, must guarantee a greater amount than its share of the plaintiff's total damages.

§49.14 2. Value of Consideration Given

The concept of the "value of consideration given" is discussed at length in §49.6, in the context of the good faith requirement. This section examines practical problems parties may face in drafting such a term.

A sliding scale settlement agreement must contain a provision declaring the "value" of the consideration given by the settling defendant for the settlement. Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 43 C3d 858, 879, 239 CR 626. This value is the amount of the nonsettling defendant's offset against any subsequent verdict. 43 C3d at 877.

The parties to the sliding scale agreement have the burden of proving its value. 43 C3d at 879. The court in Abbott Ford observed that placing the burden of declaring the agreement's value on the settling parties should produce a reasonable valuation (43 C3d at 879):

> [S]ince the plaintiff and the settling defendant are likely to have somewhat different, and somewhat conflicting, interests in placing a value on the agreement—the plaintiff would prefer the value to be on the low side to reduce the amount that its claims against the other defendants will be reduced; the settling defendant will want the value to be high enough to assure that the agreement is found to be within its Tech-Bilt "ballpark" so as to relieve it of liability for comparative indemnity or contribution.

Generally, joint valuation by the settling parties will produce a fair result; however, it is not always true that the plaintiff and the settling defendant have competing interests. Since the amount the settling defendant owes after trial is the difference between the total damages awarded against the nonsettling defendant, reduced by the agreement's value, and the guaranteed amount, a high value will increase the likelihood that the settling defendant ultimately will pay a greater amount to the plaintiff than if the value were lower. Thus, in some cases, both the plaintiff and the defendant would prefer the value to be on the low side. This may not present a concern in most cases, however, since both the plaintiff and settling defendant want the agreement to be found in good faith, especially if the agreement contains a provision voiding the agreement if the declared value of agreement is not accepted by the court. See §49.18.

PRACTICE TIP: For nonsettling defendant. If the declared value of the agreement appears unreasonably low, point out to the court that the settling parties may not have had competing interests in determining the value. If the judgment at trial seems likely to exceed the guaranteed amount plus the value, it may be that the settling parties have attempted to injure nonsettling defendant's interests by the low value, since both the plaintiff and the settling defendant will benefit from a low valuation.

PRACTICE TIP: For settling parties. Because the value of the agreement can significantly affect the amount the settling defendant pays on the guaranty and the amount of the plaintiff's total recovery, valuation should be a key point of negotiation. Unless the parties consider the likely verdict against the nonsettling defendants and whether the verdict will greatly exceed the guaranteed amount, they will not have adequately explored the full impact of the recited value. Remember that the recited value must fall within the settling defendant's comparative liability ballpark for there to be good faith. Additionally, because valuation is such a critical term, the parties should include a provision voiding the agreement if the declared value is not accepted by the court. See §49.18 on drafting such a term.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.15 3. Minimum Unconditional Payment

The settling parties may include a provision fixing a minimum amount the defendant agrees to pay irrespective of the amount the plaintiff ultimately recovers from the nonsettling defendants. This amount is commonly referred to as the "minimum unconditional payment."

Although sliding scale settlement agreements that provide no minimum unconditional payment are not necessarily in bad faith, parties should seriously consider not fixing the minimum amount at zero. In determining whether the agreement was in good faith and in evaluating the declared monetary value of the agreement, courts focus on the minimum and guaranteed amounts. Fixing the minimum amount at zero may significantly lower the value of the agreement and reduce the likelihood that the settlement will be found in good faith.

PRACTICE TIP: In many cases, the agreement provides for no minimum unconditional payment, although the settling parties realize that in all likelihood the settling defendant ultimately will be required to pay a substantial part of the guaranteed amount. This is especially true in cases in which the settling defendant is primarily liable for plaintiff's injuries, because it is unlikely that the plaintiff will recover the full amount of the guaranty plus the nonsettling defendant's setoff from a defendant whose liability is low. In such cases, there is little reason for the settling parties not to provide a minimum unconditional payment. Such a term only increases the likelihood that the agreement will be found in good faith and is not likely to have any effect on the total amount the settling defendant ultimately pays to the plaintiff.

§49.16 4. Veto and Settlement Sharing Provisions

One risk often present in a sliding scale settlement is that the plaintiff will not vigorously pursue his or her case against the remaining defendants, or will settle with them too cheaply, ultimately resulting in the settling defendant paying most or all of the guaranteed amount at the conclusion of the litigation. This risk increases as the guaranteed amount approaches the settlement value of the entire litigation. Understandably, settling defendants wish to retain some control over the way in which the balance of the case, including settlement with the remaining defendants, is conducted.

Provisions that limit the plaintiff's ability to settle with the remaining defendants are commonly referred to as "veto provisions," since they purport to give the settling defendant the right to veto a subsequent settlement that the plaintiff intends to enter into with the nonsettling defendants. The supreme court has recognized that the settling defendant has a legitimate interest in ensuring that the plaintiff diligently prosecutes his or her claim against the nonsettling defendants, provided that the settling defendant does not attempt to discourage reasonable settlements between the plaintiff and the remaining defendants. Thus, such provisions are valid only if the veto is confined to subsequent settlements that will require the settling defendant to bear more than its fair "ballpark" share of damages. Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 43 C3d 858, 883, 239 CR 626.

Veto provisions, although legitimate and often desirable to settling defendants, are closely scrutinized by courts. The settling defendant's attorney must attempt to remove the plaintiff's incentive to settle for an unreasonably low amount with the remaining defendants, but must be sure that the veto provision is not so overreaching as to defeat the good faith of the settlement. Since veto provisions may take a variety of forms, the parties should use the least restrictive veto provision possible that adequately protects the settling defendant.

EXAMPLE: A veto provision may simply require the plaintiff to use its best efforts to prosecute the remaining claims, or to pursue the litigation with the same diligence and effort as would have been employed in the absence of the settlement. Such a provision generally will be sufficient if the guaranteed amount is much less than the total settlement value of the case (as when the settling defendant is merely tangentially liable) and will probably not present a point of controversy at the good faith determination proceedings. A more stringent veto provision might require the written consent of the settling defendant before the plaintiff enters into a settlement that would require the settling defendant to pay a specified sum (the settling defendant's ballpark share of damages).

Identifying such a dollar amount may be difficult and may decrease the likelihood that the settlement is found to be in good faith. For example, if the agreement proscribes settlements below the recited value of the agreement, the nonsettling defendant may have ground to argue that the agreement discourages subsequent settlement and thus violates public policy, especially if the nonsettling defendant also challenges the recited value of the consideration paid. However, since the ballpark figure is actually a range, a veto provision is likely to survive a challenge if it concerns only those settlements below the low end of the ballpark figure.

An alternative approach that may obviate a challenge that the agreement discourages settlement with the remaining defendants is a provision that shares future settlement proceeds that exceed a certain amount with the settling defendant. In Abbott Ford, the supreme court implicitly authorized sharing of settlement proceeds. 43 C3d at 884. See also Pollack, Sliding Scale Recovery Agreements After Tech-Bilt, 8 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 121, 127 (June 1986).

EXAMPLE: A plaintiff enters into a sliding scale settlement agreement with defendant A, one of two defendants in a case in which the settlement value of the entire action is roughly $100,000. The reasonable range of defendant A's share of the plaintiff's damages is between $40,000 and $60,000, and the agreement guarantees a recovery of $100,000. To avoid discouraging a subsequent settlement with the nonsettling defendant while providing the plaintiff with an incentive to settle for the greatest amount possible, the parties agree to split subsequent settlement proceeds as follows: Settlement amounts below $40,000 are credited entirely to defendant A, since such a settlement would require defendant A to pay more than $60,000, its maximum ballpark share of the plaintiff's damages. If settlement with defendant B is between $40,000 and $60,000, defendant A is credited with 25 percent of the settlement proceeds. Settlements that exceed $60,000 are credited entirely to the plaintiff. Thus, if the plaintiff later settles for $60,000 with the nonsettling defendant, defendant A, instead of owing $40,000 on the guaranty, receives a credit in the amount of $15,000 (one quarter of the subsequent settlement), reducing the total amount paid by defendant A to $25,000. After the settlement proceeds have been divided, the plaintiff's total recovery is $85,000.

The provision for sharing of subsequent settlement should not be designed to provide the first settling defendant with a profit if subsequent settlements are sufficiently high, because a court may view such a term as undermining the fair apportionment goal of CCP §§877-877.6. Additionally, such a provision should not credit to the first settling defendant any portion of the settlement proceeds that exceeds the high end of that defendant's ballpark range, since the provision may discourage settlement at an amount that would not require the first settling defendant to pay more than his or her fair share of the plaintiff's damages.

A provision that shares later settlement proceeds is desirable to a plaintiff because it provides the plaintiff with greater freedom in conducting the balance of the litigation. For example, if a plaintiff decides to settle for a low amount because he or she needs a quick cash payment or no longer wishes to pursue the litigation, the plaintiff's wishes will not be frustrated by the first settling defendant.

An alternative provision that has the same effect as a sharing provision but does not require actual sharing of subsequent settlement proceeds is one that reduces the guaranteed amount as the amount of settlement with the nonsettling defendant decreases.

EXAMPLE: A settling defendant could guarantee $100,000, but if the plaintiff later settles with the nonsettling defendant for less than $50,000 but more than $25,000, the guaranteed amount would be reduced to $75,000, and if for less than $25,000, to $50,000. Depending on the facts of an individual case, such a provision could be more or less cumbersome than a "settlement sharing" provision. Finally, parties using a declining guaranty provision should never allow the guaranteed amount to dip below the declared value, since the agreement could be challenged as impermissibly discouraging subsequent settlements.

§49.17 5. No-Interest Loans

A no-interest loan term provides for either an up-front lump sum, or a series of periodic advances, as loans to the plaintiff that are to be paid back exclusively from any settlement from, or judgment against, the nonsettling defendants. Such provisions are favored, especially when the plaintiff is indigent, because the plaintiff is provided an opportunity to pursue his or her claims against the remaining defendants. See Pollack, Sliding Scale Recovery Agreements After Tech-Bilt, 8 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 121 (June 1986). See also Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 43 C3d 858, 239 CR 626. Additionally, no-interest loans increase the value of the agreement, since the plaintiff receives the benefit of the time value of money.

Parties occasionally base the entire sliding scale settlement on a no-interest loan premise whereby a large loan, in the amount of the settlement value of the entire litigation, is advanced to plaintiff in exchange for plaintiff's release and promise to give the settling defendant all amounts later received by plaintiff from the nonsettling defendant, whether by settlement or after trial. Because such agreements are tantamount to sliding scale settlements, courts will evaluate such no-interest loan agreements according to the same standards applicable to sliding scale settlements. See 43 C3d at 877 n21. Such an agreement should state its value.

§49.18 6. Good Faith Requirement

The parties to a sliding scale agreement may wish to provide for the contingency that following a motion to determine the good faith of the settlement, the trial court refuses to uphold the settlement's good faith. Such a provision is especially important to the settling defendant, because if the settlement is not in good faith, the agreement is not otherwise necessarily void; instead, the settling defendant may simply lose the substantial benefit of relief from liability to the nonsettling defendants for contribution or indemnity.

Although the settling parties may wish to declare the entire agreement void in the event it is not found in good faith, the parties should consider including one of at least two types of provisions that tend to preserve the settlement. First, the parties may provide that while the entire agreement is void in the event that the trial court does not uphold the good faith of the settlement, the parties will engage in good faith negotiations to amend the agreement to correct any deficiencies disclosed during the good faith proceeding. The parties should exercise caution before including a provision that voids only certain provisions (such as the value recitation or the maximum guaranteed amount clause) in an effort to preserve the agreement to enter into a sliding scale settlement, because depending on the evidence presented in opposition to the good faith motion by the nonsettling defendant, the parties may not thereafter wish to settle the case by sliding scale settlement.

Another method of addressing the failure of a determination of good faith is to provide a "straight" settlement alternative.

EXAMPLE: Parties to a sliding scale agreement that guarantees $1 million, with a minimum unconditional payment of $250,000 and a value of $600,000, could provide that in the event the agreement is not found to be in good faith, the parties agree that the settling defendant will pay a straight (i.e., nonsliding scale) settlement of $750,000 in exchange for a full and final release.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.19 7. Other Provisions

A sliding scale settlement agreement should also contain provisions normally included in a conventional settlement, such as a provision binding the agents, assigns, and successors of the settling parties; warranties of authority to enter into settlement; and a confidentiality provision (subject to CCP §877.5).

F. Procedural Requirements

§49.20 1. Notify Opposing Counsel and Court

The settling parties are required to promptly inform the court of the existence of the agreement and its terms and provisions. CCP §877.5(a)(1).

PRACTICE TIP: The settling parties may wish to serve the notice of intent simultaneously with a motion to determine good faith, to avoid giving the nonsettling defendants an extended opportunity to analyze and challenge the good faith of the agreement.

No sliding scale recovery agreement is effective unless a notice of the settling parties' intent to enter into it has been served on all nonsignatory alleged defendant tortfeasors at least 72 hours before the agreement was entered into, although a judge or court may allow a shorter time. Failure to give this notice is not good cause to delay commencement of trial. CCP §877.5(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.21 2. Motion for Good Faith Determination

There is no time limit within which a motion for a determination that a settlement was in good faith must be brought. Greshko v County of Los Angeles (1987) 194 CA3d 822, 829, 239 CR 846. A trial court generally evaluates the good faith issue on only those facts known at the time the settlement was entered into. Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 43 C3d 858, 874, 239 CR 626; Tech-Bilt, Inc. v Woodward-Clyde & Assocs. (1985) 38 C3d 488, 499, 213 CR 256.

However, if the parties delay in bringing a good faith motion and this delay prejudices the nonsettling defendant, the settling parties may face claims of laches, waiver, or estoppel by the nonsettling defendant. See Greshko v County of Los Angeles, supra.

NOTE: If significant facts pointing to the liability of the settling defendant are "discovered" between the time of the settlement and the good faith motion, the court may find that the settling parties should have known of such facts and evaluate the settlement in light of such subsequently discovered facts.

A nonsettling defendant can challenge a sliding scale settlement in two ways. First, the nonsettling defendant can accept the value of the agreement (declared by the settling parties) and attempt to show that because the assigned value is not within the Tech-Bilt ballpark, the settlement is not in good faith. Second, the nonsettling defendant can attempt to show that the assigned value is too low and that a greater offset is actually warranted. Abbott Ford, Inc., 43 C3d at 879.

These two methods of challenging a sliding scale settlement do not readily lend themselves to argument in the alternative. The first challenge is generally used by a nonsettling defendant who believes the settling parties have grossly misevaluated the relative liability of the defendants or underestimated the settlement value of the plaintiff's case. The second challenge is used when the relative liabilities of the defendants are only somewhat misevaluated, or the agreement is actually more valuable than the settling parties claim. In such cases, the nonsettling defendant generally agrees that the guaranteed amount represents roughly the settlement value of the entire case.

WARNING: Nonsettling defendants should be careful not to make the common mistake of challenging the guaranteed amount as too low. Rather, proper focus is on the declared value (the amount of the offset) of the agreement.

A recalcitrant nonsettling defendant may find himself or herself in an extremely difficult position in opposing a good faith determination, in that the first challenge is often unavailable to a recalcitrant defendant.

EXAMPLE: Plaintiff enters into a sliding scale settlement with defendant A, one of two defendants in an action in which the settlement value of the entire case is roughly $1 million. Before the good faith settlement, defendant B, the recalcitrant, nonsettling defendant, has steadfastly refused to contribute more than $10,000 to a total settlement. The relative liability of the defendants is roughly equal. The sliding scale settlement guarantees $1 million and provides for a minimum unconditional payment of $250,000. The parties determine the value of the agreement to be $600,000. In such a case, defendant B cannot reasonably argue that the value is not within the settling defendant's ballpark, because such an argument requires defendant B to claim, on the one hand, that the total value of the plaintiff's case is substantially greater than $1 million, but requires the defendant to explain, on the other hand, why he or she failed to offer more than $10,000 to settle such a valuable case. Such an argument could be made only by a recalcitrant defendant who believes he or she has no liability to the plaintiff.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.22 3. Burden of Proof

The burden of proof of establishing the good faith of a sliding scale settlement rests initially on the moving party, who is required to file a "bare bones" motion setting forth the ground of good faith, accompanied by a declaration setting forth a brief factual background of the case. City of Grand Terrace v Superior Court (1987) 192 CA3d 1251, 1259, 238 CR 119. The parties to the agreement also bear the burden of establishing the monetary value of the agreement. Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 43 C3d 858, 879 n22, 239 CR 626. This may be shown by declarations by counsel for the plaintiff and the settling defendant that describe the way in which they reached the monetary value recitation in the agreement and point out any provisions of the agreement that affect its value, such as a no-interest loan provision or a substantial minimum unconditional payment.

After this initial showing, the burden of proof on the issue of good faith shifts to the nonsettling defendant to demonstrate the lack of good faith. 43 C3d at 879; City of Grand Terrace v Superior Court (1987) 192 CA3d 1251, 1261, 238 CR 119. See CCP §877.6(d). The settling party is then required to file responsive counterdeclarations to negate the nonsettling defendant's claims. 192 CA3d at 1262.

PRACTICE TIP: Since it is often difficult to anticipate whether the nonsettling defendant will attack the good faith of the motion by attempting to show that the assigned value is too low and a greater offset is warranted, or that the value is so low that the settlement is not in good faith, the party seeking a good faith determination should be sure the initial motion is indeed "bare bones" and includes no greater analysis of the agreement than is necessary for a minimum showing of good faith. The parties can then expand their analysis in a reply brief.

In deciding whether the declared value is accurate and appropriate, a court often does nothing more than "make its best estimate, taking into account the size of the guaranty figure and the likelihood that the settling defendant will actually have to pay out either that amount or some lesser sum." Abbott Ford, Inc., 43 C3d at 879 n23 (nature and extent of evidence received at good faith proceeding left to discretion of trial court; nonsettling defendant not, however, entitled to mini-trial on valuation issue).

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.23 4. Discovery

The nonsettling defendant is entitled to conduct discovery on the issue of good faith. See chap 50. Since the financial condition and insurance policy limits of the settling defendant are relevant areas of review in good faith proceedings, the nonsettling defendant may conduct discovery into such areas. City of Grand Terrace v Superior Court (1987) 192 CA3d 1251, 1265, 238 CR 119.

The nonsettling defendant may move for a continuance of the hearing on the good faith motion to enable it to conduct necessary discovery. 192 CA3d at 1265. However, a court may, in its discretion, deny a motion for a continuance to conduct discovery. See County of Los Angeles v Guerrero (1989) 209 CA3d 1149, 1159, 257 CR 787.

NOTE: Generally, the settling and nonsettling parties may not depose their adversaries' attorneys to establish, for example, recalcitrance of the nonsettling defendant. Spectra-Physics, Inc. v Superior Court (1988) 198 CA3d 1487, 1494, 244 CR 258. Rather, depositions of opposing counsel are allowed only if (1) there are no other means available to obtain the information sought and (2) the information sought is not privileged, is relevant, and is "crucial to the preparation of the case."

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.24 5. Review of Good Faith Determination

The nonsettling defendant may petition for a writ of mandate within 20 days of notice of the court's determination. CCP §877.6(e). If the motion for good faith is denied, the plaintiff and the settling defendant may similarly petition for a writ of mandate. See chap 50.

Additionally, if the good faith determination results in a judgment dismissing the nonsettling defendant's cross-complaint for indemnity, as is usually the case, the nonsettling defendant may appeal the good faith determination. County of Los Angeles v Guerrero (1989) 209 CA3d 1149, 1152 n2, 257 CR 787. A good faith determination is left to the discretion of the trial court and must be upheld if supported by substantial evidence. Barajas v USA Petroleum Corp. (1986) 184 CA3d 974, 987, 229 CR 513.

§49.25 G. Trial Considerations

Code of Civil Procedure §877.5(a)(1) requires disclosure of sliding scale agreements to prevent the settling defendant from secretly aligning himself or herself with the plaintiff and, at trial, admitting the liability of all of the defendants.

Similarly, if the action is tried before a jury, CCP §877.5(a)(2) also requires the court, on motion of a party, to disclose to the jury the existence and content of the agreement, unless the court finds that such disclosure will create substantial danger of undue prejudice, of confusing the issues, or of misleading the jury. The jury disclosure required by CCP §877.5(a)(2) need be no more than necessary to inform the jury of the possibility that the agreement may bias the testimony of the witness.

These provisions of CCP §877.5 apply only to actions based on acts or omissions occurring after December 31, 1987. In jury trials based on acts or omissions occurring before January 1, 1988, the jury disclosure required need be no more than is necessary to be sure that the jury understands (1) the essential nature of the agreement, but not including the amount paid, or any contingency, and (2) the possibility that the agreement may bias the testimony of the alleged tortfeasor or tortfeasors who entered into the agreement.

Presumably, an instruction by the court under CCP §877.5 should preclude the attorney for the nonsettling defendant from further cross-examination of the settling defendant on the issue of bias created by the existence of the sliding scale settlement agreement.

Because the court has the discretion to decline to give the jury instruction when disclosure would create substantial danger of undue prejudice, confusing the issues, or misleading the jury, the plaintiff may want to move in limine for an order precluding any reference to the settlement agreement. See Barajas v USA Petroleum Corp. (1986) 184 CA3d 974, 229 CR 513 (court did not abuse its discretion by deciding not to disclose settlements to jury when there was little opportunity for manipulation of evidence because of substantial depositions taken before execution of settlement).

PRACTICE TIP: Additionally, if the plaintiff's attorney calls the settling defendant as a witness at trial, the attorney should carefully consider whether to raise the existence of the settlement on direct examination. Arguably, if the settling defendant testifies to the existence of the settlement agreement on direct examination, the nonsettling defendant's attorney should have the right to cross-examine the witness on the terms of the agreement, subject to the court's control of the proceedings.

The attorney for the nonsettling defendant should carefully consider whether to request an instruction as soon as the settling defendant is called as a witness by the plaintiff or whether to request a jury instruction at the close of evidence.

If the trial court denies the motion in limine of the settling parties, the nonsettling defendant may wish to argue the possibility of bias and collusion during opening statement (to the extent the trial judge would permit) or during final argument. See Tompkins, Explaining "Mary Carter" to a Jury, 31 For the Defense 12 (1989).

III. STRUCTURED SETTLEMENTS

§49.26 A. Defined

Basically, a structured settlement is an agreement under which a plaintiff compromises a personal injury claim in exchange for a promise of periodic payments for a specified period, usually in addition to an immediate cash payment. The future payments are often funded by a single premium annuity purchased by the defendant.

NOTE: Structured settlements are sometimes referred to as "annuity settlements," but this term is not a wholly accurate description of the transaction, and it should not be confused with the "settlement annuity" discussed in §49.28.

A typical structured settlement plan consists of an immediate payment of cash by the defendant—typically between 35 and 65 percent of the defendant's total expenditure on the settlement—with the balance used to fund future payments. Although an annuity is usually purchased to fund future payments, sometimes the funding assets are United States Treasury bonds. Occasionally, there is no prefunding arrangement; the plaintiff simply relies on the long term reliability of the defendant or defendant's liability insurer.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.27 B. When Structured Settlement Used; Parties' Objectives

Structured settlement proposals are more the rule than the exception when the settlement value of the case exceeds $250,000, are generally appropriate when a lump-sum settlement would exceed $100,000, and may be used to good effect in cases of much lower value. Either the plaintiff or the defendant may propose a structured settlement.

A defense attorney offering a structured settlement as a possible alternative to a lump-sum settlement normally emphasizes the benefits of the settlement to the plaintiff. Defense counsel may argue that a particular structure will give the plaintiff important tax advantages, a guard against too-early dissipation of a lump sum, and better overall financial performance than investing a lump sum. A plaintiff may seek, or agree to accept, a structured settlement for such tax "spendthrift" and financial performance advantages.

Among the questions that the plaintiff's attorney should ask when evaluating a structured settlement proposal are the following:

- Is the future payment plan highly reliable?
- Is the annuity that the defense proposes to purchase to fund future payments competitive, i.e., will it generate the highest possible future benefits consistent with acceptable reliability?
- If the plaintiff may have a reduced life expectancy, is the proposal based on a competitive age rating?
- How effectively will the proposed settlement address the specific future financial needs of the plaintiff and those who are financially dependent on the plaintiff?
- How will the proposed settlement affect the plaintiff's estate plan?

The defense attorney's objective—settlement at the lowest outlay possible—may be achievable only if the plaintiff is persuaded of the value of one or more of the economic advantages described in §§49.39-49.44. Among the techniques used in "selling" structured settlement proposals are to:

- Make offers in writing.
- Use specialists in structured settlements to present proposals. (The touted benefits of a structured settlement may be viewed with less suspicion when explained by someone other than adverse counsel.)
- Address specific future financial needs that the plaintiff is likely to face.

NOTE: Including periodic payments in the settlement may make plaintiff's covenants, such as indemnification agreements, more enforceable.

C. Economic Characteristics

§49.28 1. Settlement Annuities

For purposes of this chapter, a settlement annuity is a contract promising future payments issued by a life insurance company. The product, called a "settlement annuity," has features that distinguish it from other types of annuities. For example, it is designed for ownership by an institution, not by the recipient of the payments. Also, the cost of lifetime benefits may be discount-priced if the medical circumstances of the injured party indicate a reduced life expectancy. This form of annuity cannot be purchased after a settlement.

A settlement annuity is not a tax-free investment, as are municipal bonds. Income is realized by the institutional owner of the annuity. See IRC §72.

Each settlement annuity contains four designations or "roles":

- An owner (a defendant or defendant's liability insurer, or—in the event of an assignment of the future payment obligation—the assignee);
- An annuitant (the individual who is the "measuring life," usually the injured party or, in wrongful death cases, one or more of the decedent's heirs);
- A payee (the person who receives the checks from the issuer of the annuity); and
- A beneficiary (the person or entity to receive the payments on the death of the payee; a specific individual or individuals or, if better from an estate planning standpoint, the estate).

Normally, the plaintiff has no right or interest in the annuity. See §49.49. One exception now available through some participants in the structured settlement marketplace is a security interest, granted by an assignee in the funding annuity under a 1988 amendment to IRC §130. See §49.50.

Aside from the foregoing exception, the owner of a settlement annuity (e.g., defendant's insurer) has all rights in the contract, including the right to change the payee or the beneficiary. Rev Rul 79-220, 1979-2 Cum Bull 74. Annuity owners often separately agree not to change a payee designation, but this is not an incident of the annuity itself. Thus the annuity company is generally not directly obligated to the plaintiff. As a result, reliability usually arises from the presence of a strong future payment obligor that owns the annuity and is directly liable to the plaintiff. That is why, for example, in some structured settlements involving annuities issued by Executive Life Insurance Co. (ELIC), the injured parties continued to receive payment; the liability insurers who owned the worthless ELIC annuities were obligated to make the future payments.

§49.29 2. Independent Settlement Annuity Marketplace

About 20 annuity companies have been active in the field at any given time since structured settlements came into common use in the late 1970s and early 1980s. These companies sell through independent, licensed life insurance agents who are usually appointed by several different life insurance companies. On life insurance companies that offer settlement annuities only if an affiliated liability insurer is involved, see §49.32. It is futile to approach most life insurance companies about settlement annuities because they do not offer this product.

Settlement annuities are issued by life insurers that, generally, pursue quite conservative investment practices. A consequence of this is considerable convergence in pricing.

EXAMPLE: For a plan that would provide monthly benefits to the injured party for 30 years certain, perhaps one-fourth of the companies would quote about the same price, with variations of only 1 or 2 percent. Farther back in the competition, another one-fourth to one-half of the companies might be 3 to 8 percent above the best price. Remaining companies would quote so much higher a price as to be effectively out of the market.

Commonly, the largest two or three companies—those with the highest ratings and strongest reputations—do not aim to have the most competitive price. In effect, they expect the customer to pay a bit more for the greater strength they believe they offer.

Rarely does a single annuity company offer the lowest rates across the range of common payment formats. For example, on a given day, Company A may offer the best rates on lifetime benefit plans for males, ages 18-40; Company B may be best on "college plans" for settlements involving young children; and Company C may have the lowest price on various annuities certain.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/49 Sliding Scale and Structured Settlements/§49.30 a. Structured Settlement Brokers

§49.30 a. Structured Settlement Brokers

The annuities issued by the 15 to 20 annuity companies who are active in the independent marketplace are sold (or "placed") by life insurance agents, who may refer to themselves as structured settlement "brokers" or "consultants."

From the inception of the industry, most brokers have followed a policy of making settlement annuity quotes available only to defense representatives. Some brokers have advertised this. At times, the defense-only restriction was imposed on the life agents by the life insurers, who refused to appoint a structured settlement professional unless the latter agreed not to provide offers or pricing information to plaintiffs' counsel.

NOTE: The defense-only approach has become less common in California, for several reasons: The passage of Proposition 103 (the Insurance Initiative) in 1988 cast doubt on whether such practices—even in an industry that is exempt from the antitrust law—would withstand judicial scrutiny. Also, in recent years, lawsuits have made many life insurers and settlement brokers leery of enforcing such practices against plaintiffs' lawyers in California. Nevertheless, a properly configured structured settlement requires the participation of the defendant or its insurer because of the requirement that one of them promise to make fixed and determinable periodic payments. Thus, even if plaintiffs achieve full access to annuity quotes, it will still be impossible for a plaintiff to directly purchase a settlement annuity. This product exists only in the context of a consensual agreement between the opposing parties, except in medical malpractice cases or suits against certain public entities in which the court may enter a judgment for periodic future payments. See discussion in California Tort Damages §§15.16-15.20 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

Structured settlement brokers develop proposals using printed rate sheets or computer disks. Settlement annuity rates fluctuate according to changes in the bond markets. Consequently, no quotation from an annuity issuer should be relied on for more than two weeks. The broker should always specify the expiration date. Counsel must make no settlement offer that will be open longer than the annuity quote is valid.

The more common structured settlement proposals (not including ones involving reduced life expectancy of the plaintiff) can be formulated by a broker in a matter of hours. However, it is prudent for counsel to allow two days for the process in order to reduce the possibility of error.

NOTE: Counsel should not conclude a structured settlement without considering many factors other than cost, e.g., choice of future payment obligor, choice of annuity issuer, and estate planning questions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.31 b. Economists and Valuation Services

In response to obstacles encountered in learning about market annuity rates and available product, many plaintiffs' counsel have turned to independent services to (1) estimate the cost and value of defense-generated settlement proposals and (2) create alternative proposals for periodic payments, which can be offered on the plaintiff's behalf. Ordinarily, such services are performed by persons who are not settlement annuity agents or who have been appointed with just one or two annuity companies; they charge a flat or hourly fee, rather than earning a commission by placing an alternative plan.

NOTE: These services are not always able to use conventional present value calculations to achieve an accurate estimate of the cost to the defendant of a given annuity-funded plan, particularly if age-rating is a factor, because age-rating is done on a case-by-case basis. Thus, a plaintiff's lawyer who wants to know how much a proposed plan would cost the defendant must often make a considerable effort to obtain actual cost figures, but it should be done whenever possible in order to avoid overreaching by the defense and incorrectly calculating the contingent fee.

§49.32 c. Affiliated Life Insurance Company Programs

Several insurance company families have adopted the practice of negotiating structured settlements in which the property and casualty company (i.e., the defendant's insurer) uses an annuity issued by an affiliate life insurer. Generally, these programs have tried to use the influence of the property and casualty company—which controls the money to be spent on the settlement—to direct the annuity business to the affiliate. Depending on the companies, this policy may be pursued with more or less zeal.

From a practical standpoint, the most important consequence arising from the participation of such "in-house" structured settlement operations relates to pricing. It is difficult for any life insurance company to stay highly competitive on each of several different popular payment formats. The result is that when the liability insurer pushes too hard to steer business to its affiliate life insurer, the in-house structured settlement proposal is often uncompetitive. Also, some in-house programs involve companies whose reliability—as judged by the major independent rating services—may be a notch or two below that available in the independent marketplace.

PRACTICE TIP: Plaintiff's counsel should always ask for the identification of the proposed annuity issuer when receiving a settlement offer from the defense. It may be necessary to seek a different annuity issuer to maximize benefits and a different obligor to heighten reliability.

For defense counsel, there is some potential for a conflict of interest with affiliate programs. The liability insurer may wish to keep the annuity premium "in the family," but the insured has no particular interest in which life insurer issues the annuity.

Most programs involving life insurance affiliates face the greatest difficulty in cases in which the plaintiff has a reduced life expectancy. The affiliate may not offer a substantially reduced price regardless of how much the life expectancy of the plaintiff has been compromised. See §49.42 on "rated-age annuities."

3. Common Payment Formats

§49.33 a. Lifetime Benefits

The usual structured settlement format involves monthly payments for the lifetime of the plaintiff with several years of the payments being "guaranteed" or "certain."

EXAMPLE: Plaintiff settles her case for monthly payments for life, 20 years guaranteed. If plaintiff were to die 12 years later, 8 years' worth of payments remain to be paid to her successors. If she were to die 31 years after the settlement, the payments would cease on her death.

It is common for lifetime benefits to be guaranteed for 20 or 30 years. Shorter guaranteed periods are typical with elderly claimants or others who do not have long life expectancies. It is rare for a settlement to provide lifetime benefits only, with no guaranteed payment period, unless the plaintiff's life expectancy is quite short.

WARNING: It is generally best to use some guaranteed period if possible. Otherwise, if plaintiff dies soon after the settlement is concluded, payments cease quite soon after having begun, giving a windfall to the annuity company and leaving little or no estate for the successors. Normally, the additional cost of providing a substantial guaranteed period is relatively small.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.34 b. Annuity Certain

Another payment option is the "annuity certain"—a monthly or annual payment plan for a fixed term. Such a plan can be useful to support a plaintiff until the expected restoration of earning capacity or until other sources of income can be tapped, as when a pension, social security, or a retirement plan begins to pay. Otherwise, the typical plaintiff becomes at least somewhat dependent on the payments for the regular costs of living and finds it difficult to adjust after the payment stream stops.

§49.35 c. Providing for Inflation

Settlement annuities are designed to fund obligations involving fixed and determinable future periodic payments, ruling out variable yield annuities. Good financial planning provides for the effects of inflation. Many monthly benefit arrangements include "escalator" provisions, which increase the regular benefit on the anniversary date of the start of the payments. The most common escalator is 3-percent per annum, but 4-, 5-, and 6-percent escalator provisions are available.

NOTE: Even a 6-percent escalator would not have been sufficient to offset the effect of cost-of-living increases in some years during the last decade. A 3-percent escalator is not likely to keep the benefit stream increasing at a rate equal to increases in the cost of living over a period of a decade or more. For this reason, escalator provisions are only part of the financial planning response to inflation.

Even a low annual escalator affects the overall cost of the projected payments.

EXAMPLE: A male, age 45, of normal life expectancy is to receive monthly benefits for life, 20 years certain. One proposed payment plan provides a 3-percent per annum escalator, while a second plan offers a 6-percent annual increase. Under the 6-percent plan, the initial monthly benefit would be only 68 percent of the initial monthly benefit under the 3-percent escalator plan. Of course, the 6-percent escalator provision would cause the monthly benefit to grow at a faster rate, but it would not produce as large a monthly benefit as the 3-percent plan until 15 years had elapsed.

The phenomenon of very low initial benefits when using higher escalators tends to reduce the appeal of such proposals. Nevertheless, at times large cost-of-living escalators must be used. Occasionally, the need for spendthrift protection is so great that other options are precluded.

In some cases the sum available for the structured settlement is so small that stingier approaches to hedging against inflation must be considered. The "stairstep" or "step" plan uses monthly payments that stay level for a period of time, then take one step up and stay level for a similar period, then take another step, and so forth. (A simple example would be, e.g., $2000 per month in the first 5 years; $2200 in the next 5 years; $2400 in the next 5 years.) A stairstep plan typically offers very modest protection from inflation.

§49.36 d. Future Lump Sums

A sound approach for countering inflation, as well as for achieving other objectives, is the use of future lump sums.

EXAMPLE: In addition to paying a monthly benefit, the defendant or liability insurer might undertake to pay $25,000 after 5 years, $50,000 in the 10th year, $100,000 in the 15th year, and $150,000 in the 20th.

Such future lump sums are nearly always guaranteed, so that they will be paid to a successor if the plaintiff dies before a payment falls due. The sums provide reinvestment opportunities; if over time the plaintiff's buying power is reduced by high inflation, interest rates would usually also have increased, and the plaintiff could use some or all of a future lump sum to invest in high-yielding debt instruments. See §49.40 on conservation of funds. Future lump-sum payments provide a kind of forced savings plan for the plaintiff.

PRACTICE TIP: Many defense counsel and claims professionals prefer to substitute future lump sums in a structured settlement proposal for higher periodic payments or escalators because the total apparent payout is thereby boosted at a modest cost. However, too great reliance should not be placed on lump sums to be paid, e.g., 35, 40, or more years in the future. The farther in the future a payment is to be made, the less buying power it will have, and the plaintiff will lose the ability to invest sums paid sooner.

A popular structure for minor plaintiffs includes lump sums paid during the college years with a final lump sum payable at age 25 or 30.

§49.37 e. Deferred Payments

Occasionally, a plaintiff is well served by a plan that defers the start of monthly benefits.

EXAMPLE: Monthly benefits can be deferred to the retirement date of a plaintiff who has made a good recovery, can still work, and is able to generate adequate income, but who has an inadequate pension.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/49 Sliding Scale and Structured Settlements/§49.38 f. Other Funding Vehicles

§49.38 f. Other Funding Vehicles

United States Treasury obligations are used, instead of an annuity, as funding assets in some structured settlements. The structured settlement obligor (always an assignee under IRC §130; see §49.50) owns the bonds, but the plaintiff receives a security interest in the assets. Periodic payments funded by Treasury bonds usually provide level income. It remains uncertain whether it is workable, from the standpoint of the obligor's tax treatment, to use zero coupon bonds or individual coupons from a regular Treasury bond as funding assets. When the bonds mature, a large lump sum is paid to the plaintiff. Most payment plans of this type run for 20 or 30 years.

NOTE: A few companies offer a product in which the future payment obligation is assigned to a trust. Before accepting such a product, the attorney would want convincing answers to questions about the constructive receipt and economic benefit doctrines (see §49.52) and the income taxation of trusts.

A plaintiff's attorney should not accept general creditor arrangements but should require that the Treasury bonds be set aside as security for the future payments. Such a security arrangement became permissible under 1988 tax legislation. See §49.49 on amendments to IRC §130. With a security interest, the plaintiff can reach the Treasury bonds if the owner becomes insolvent; thus there is a potential for ultimate reliability. See §§49.53-49.55.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/49 Sliding Scale and Structured Settlements/§49.39 4. Economic Advantages of Structured Settlements

§49.39 4. Economic Advantages of Structured Settlements

The economic advantages of a tax-free structured settlement may be considered under three main headings: conservation of funds, tax savings, and rated-age annuities. In practice, the concept of conservation of funds often has a corollary—elasticity of lifetime benefits—which is also discussed separately in §49.44. In addition, a structured settlement may have particular utility in cases involving injuries to minors. Thus it is useful to consider the five different aspects of financial benefit that can be derived from a structured settlement. Many cases present more than one such favorable aspect.

A structured settlement is rarely an all-or-nothing proposition. Usually some periodic payments—even if they will cost only 10 or 20 percent of the amount spent by the defendant on the compromise—will have some advantage to the plaintiff, particularly with respect to that part of the plaintiff's financial future in which a conservative approach is indicated.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.40 a. Conservation of Funds

The concept of conservation of funds includes spendthrift protection—against the rapid and improvident dissipation of a recovery—and extends to issues related to the achievement of long term financial goals by individuals who are not reckless with money but find it easier to spend than to save. Many structured settlements result from advice by the plaintiff's lawyer to the injured party based on the attorney's belief in the benefits of conservation of funds.

A challenge facing any plaintiff who receives an all-cash settlement is not only to invest sensibly and manage the investments, but also to reinvest—time and again—a substantial portion of the interest, dividends, and gains arising from the original investment. Few persons who suffer substantial injuries are experienced in living on the investment of wealth, as opposed to earning a living. A structured settlement can shift part of the burden of accomplishing sound investment, management, and reinvestment of funds.

The following are some arguments that either counsel may wish to employ, according to the circumstances, in trying to bring about a structured settlement:

- Achieving financial security requires both sound initial investments and continuing restraint on consumption.
- Even well-educated individuals may lack the consistent resolve needed for successful investment for long term income production.
- Large sums of money tend to attract friends and relatives, many of whose proposals for how the plaintiff should "invest" will be unduly risky, although difficult to reject, causing offense or bad feelings.
- A disabled plaintiff may experience pressure, stemming from fear and insecurity, to spend lavishly in order to ensure the kindness or attention of other individuals.
- Children may grow up to be less than fully responsible, thrifty adults; and many capable adults will become less competent.

It is important to maintain a balanced perspective about the value of payments due in the future. Although the benefit of conserving funds is substantial, a sum payable in the future must be evaluated differently from the same amount presently due.

EXAMPLE: A badly injured young woman is offered a substantial monthly income, together with guaranteed future lump sums of $200,000 in 5 years; $250,000 in 10 years; $300,000 in 15 years; and $400,000 in 20 years. The total payout is calculated to be $1,150,000. (This amount is more than 2.5 times the $400,000 or so it would cost the liability insurer to fund the payments.) It would not be accurate to say that this plan is "worth" over $1.15 million; it has a present value equal to its cost. The purchasing power of, e.g., $300,000 15 years from now is likely to be much less than today. On the other hand, accepting such a settlement ensures that the plaintiff will have sums to use at important times in the future. She need not, in the meantime, worry about investing sensibly, reinvesting diligently, or resisting the importunities of well-meaning relatives and friends.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/49 Sliding Scale and Structured Settlements/§49.41 b. Tax Savings

§49.41 b. Tax Savings

A structured settlement of a personal injury claim involving physical injury or physical sickness can be configured so that each periodic payment will be received free of income tax by the plaintiff. See IRC §104(a)(2). Note, however, that since enactment of the Small Business Job Protection Act, which included an amendment to IRC §104(a)(2), all punitive damages in tort cases are now taxable, as are emotional distress damages in cases not involving physical injury or sickness (e.g., defamation, insurance bad faith, wrongful termination). A settlement annuity generates taxable income, but that income is recognized and reported by the annuity owner. Both the initial amount expended by the defendant and the income it earns in the funding asset can be made to flow through to the plaintiff in a stream of tax-favored periodic payments.

EXAMPLE: A structured settlement includes periodic payments costing $200,000 to fund through the purchase of a settlement annuity, with a projected payment to the plaintiff of $500,000. The annuity owner recognizes income under IRC §72, using an "exclusion ratio." The single premium amount is the numerator, and the expected payout is the denominator. The exclusion ratio is $200,000 divided by $500,000, or 40 percent. For each dollar paid to the plaintiff, the owner recognizes 60 cents as ordinary income. (For reasons that need not be addressed here, this is not a negative feature of structured settlements for defendants, liability insurers, or assignees.) But each dollar of the $500,000 payout is received by the plaintiff free of income tax. Note that periodic payment settlements may be desired in some cases involving taxable recovery. The reason is that deferred recognition of income, or recognition in lower income years (e.g., during retirement), can result in substantial tax savings.

As a result of this form of "tax subsidy," structured settlements have consistently produced better after-tax yields than are available through other forms of conservative investment for long term income production. Structured settlement yields may rise or fall in parallel to the yields on high-grade and municipal bonds, but because the structured settlement in effect converts income buildup to tax-free periodic payments, the structured settlement consistently offers a higher yield.

Sometimes a plaintiff is so severely injured that the likely expense of medical care in the postsettlement years will mean that much of the plaintiff's income will be sheltered. On the other hand, many serious cases do not involve heavy future medical expenses.

NOTE: Structured settlement yields fluctuate as a function of the yields available in the marketplace on high-grade debt securities. In general, as the yield on long term United States Treasury obligations increases or decreases, the yields on structured settlements follow.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.42 c. Age-Rated Annuities

An important feature of structured settlements is age-rating of lifetime benefits. This is a commonplace practice in very serious injuries. A rated-age annuity offers lifetime benefits at a reduced price (compared to standard rates), based on the annuity company's evaluation that the annuitant has a life expectancy lower than the statistical average for his or her age and sex. Sometimes phrases such as "substandard life expectancy," or "rate up" are used to describe these cases.

An age rating is the process by which the annuity company's medical underwriter, a doctor experienced in evaluating life expectancies, reviews the plaintiff's two or three most significant medical reports and formulates an assumed or hypothetical age, which is higher than the plaintiff's actual age. This assumed age is used to calculate a lower premium for a lifetime payment plan.

Parties tend to overlook the rated-age approach unless the injuries are catastrophic. But there are other cases—often involving medical conditions not related to the accident—that deserve consideration for a structured resolution based on medical underwriting. Examples of such conditions are gross obesity, diabetes, and heart disease.

EXAMPLE: A 2-year-old boy sustained serious brain damage in a near drowning. At the time of settlement, he was 12 years old. Although the normal life expectancy for 12-year-old males is about 60 years, this boy was rated up to age 65 by an annuity company, which means that the company believed his life expectancy to be equivalent to that of the typical 65-year-old male, or about 14 years. For a normal life expectancy, the cost of providing benefits for life, with the first 10 years certain, would be $141,200. With a rate-up, however, the cost would be $102,100, or about 28 percent less. Alternatively, the boy could have been provided with a lifetime payment stream, also guaranteed for 10 years, which would start at $1000 a month, increasing 3 percent per year thereafter. Without the rate-up the cost would be $207,300, and with the rate-up the cost would be $121,400, a differential of 41 percent.

There is particularly keen competition among life insurers in the field of rated-age annuities. It is best to obtain quotes from several different annuity companies; otherwise, the parties to the settlement may miss a bargain.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.43 d. Yields on Minors' Compromises

Settlements of minors' claims often use future payments, even when the amount needed to fund such payments is as low as $15,000. Otherwise, a minor's settlement would normally be placed in a blocked account until the minor reached the age of majority. Most of the money placed in blocked accounts goes into demand accounts or short term certificates of deposit, which earn comparatively low interest. In addition, since 1986 it has been the general rule that a minor is taxed on all income in excess of $1000 per year (adjusted for inflation for tax years starting after December 31, 1995) at the top marginal tax rate of the parent(s). IRC §1(g). For taxable years after December 31, 2005, IRC §1(g) applies to a child who has not attained the age of 18 before the close of the taxable year. IRC §1(g)(2). Thus, blocked-account interest may be subject to substantial taxation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.44 e. Elasticity of Lifetime Benefits

Another financial advantage offered by structured settlements is elasticity of the relief. Benefits continue to be paid even if the plaintiff lives to a very great age. Unlike lump-sum settlements and verdicts, relief expands according to the postsettlement circumstances actually occurring in the plaintiff's life.

NOTE: Some elderly persons experience diminishing ability in managing money. It becomes unduly burdensome for them to seek out good investment advice, remember and apply the advice, and avoid overreaching by untrustworthy counselors.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/49 Sliding Scale and Structured Settlements/§49.45 5. Economic Limitations of Structured Settlements

§49.45 5. Economic Limitations of Structured Settlements

Sensible planning requires the plaintiff and plaintiff's counsel to anticipate two financial problems that may arise:

- A period of inflation substantially greater than the rate prevailing at the time of the settlement (see §49.45); and
- A large, unexpected economic burden, such as a medical emergency (see §49.46).

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.46 a. Inflation

A climate of sharply increasing inflation over a prolonged period could substantially reduce the buying power of anyone who is living on a fixed stream of benefits. As noted in §§49.35-49.36, escalators and future lump sums may help address this problem, but even these arrangements may prove inadequate.

NOTE: A plaintiff who receives all cash may attempt investment strategies to counter the possibility of future inflation. For example, the plaintiff could invest in high-grade bonds that mature at intervals, creating a reinvestment opportunity on each of the maturity dates. If the cost of living had risen, the interest paid on high-grade bonds would also normally be higher, and it would be possible to reinvest sums received on maturity of the bonds at the higher interest rates. Great discipline—reinvestment of all but needed income—would be required. Another plaintiff might invest in common stocks or mutual funds that over the long term—i.e., 10 to 20 years or more—have consistently outperformed conservative debt instruments. However, high-quality bonds are generally regarded as safer than the majority of stock investments, and there is no guaranteed yield with common stocks. If the plaintiff runs into financial difficulties, it may be necessary to sell stock in an adverse market. In sum, it may be the unusual personal injury victim who is able to successfully pursue one of these inflation-fighting strategies.

Although protecting against inflation is an important objective of any financial plan, it is not the only potential pitfall facing plaintiffs, and it may not be the most important one.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.47 b. Financial Emergencies

Most structured settlement obligors refuse to commute a structured settlement into cash. Also, an assignment of the future payment stream to secure a loan is discouraged, partly for tax reasons. See §49.41. Consequently, the receipt of only structured payments, without any cash recovery, may result in unacceptable inflexibility.

Everyone faces some risk that a large, unanticipated financial demand will arise. Illness within the family or extended family, a large uninsured property loss, or other unusual circumstances can create a financial emergency. Persons who have suffered personal injuries may be at an even greater risk of these eventualities than the general population. One solution is to avoid a settlement for the plaintiff that relies only on periodic payments. A proper use of the "up-front" portion of any structured settlement is to give the plaintiff a reserve against unexpected adversity.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.48 6. Other Considerations

Factors that may affect the thinking of parties deciding whether to propose or enter into a structured settlement, in addition to those discussed in §§49.39-49.47, include the following:

- The defendant may prefer a structured settlement when the plaintiff has given a promise, e.g., to indemnify, that is to be performed in the future. A settlement that provides future payments makes such promises more enforceable because the plaintiff will probably not become judgment-proof.
- A structured settlement involves some risk that the periodic payment obligor will become insolvent and not make future payments. A properly configured structured settlement makes this risk negligible but does not eliminate it.
- Governmental entity defendants may favor structured settlements on public policy grounds to reduce the possibility that a seriously injured individual will become a public charge after dissipating an all-cash settlement.

D. Tax Treatment of Structured Settlements

§49.49 1. Basic Authorities

A structured settlement is, in part, a tax-driven transaction. Because misconceptions abound, both the law and certain myths are discussed in this and the following sections. Internal Revenue Code §104(a)(2) generally excludes from taxable income any recovery on account of personal physical injury or physical sickness, other than punitive damages, whether the recovery is by suit or agreement and whether as lump sum or periodic payments. Pub L 104-188, §1605(a), 110 Stat 1755, 1838. The exclusion does not apply to recovery on account of previously deducted medical expenses. IRC §104.

Emotional distress is not treated as a physical injury or physical sickness for purposes of IRC §104(a)(2) except to the extent of payments for medical care described in IRC §213(d)(1)(A)-(B) that are attributable to emotional distress. IRC §104. Therefore, the exclusion does not apply to damages for defamation or wrongful termination that are accompanied by emotional distress. If an action has its origins in a physical injury or sickness, however, all damages (other than punitive damages) that flow from the injury are excludable, even if the recipient is not the injured party. For example, loss of consortium due to physical injury of the recipient's spouse is excludable.

Amendments to IRC §104 in 1996 that eliminated the exclusion for damages received for nonphysical injury or nonphysical sickness and for all punitive damages apply to amounts received after August 20, 1996. IRC §104(d)(1). The amendments do not apply to amounts received under a written binding agreement, court decree, or mediation award in effect on September 13, 1995. IRC §104(d)(2).

Earlier amendments to IRC §104(a) made punitive damages recovered on account of nonphysical injuries (e.g., in tort claims for defamation, wrongful termination) taxable if the claim arose after July 10, 1989 (Pub L 101-239, 103 Stat 2379 (1989)).

In 1979 the Internal Revenue Service issued Rev Rul 79-220, 1979-2 Cum Bull 74, the seminal ruling in the field of structured settlement law. It is a model; it enunciates basic principles for proper configuration of structured settlements and defines what is out of bounds. Its features were later codified in IRC §104(a)(2).

In Rev Rul 79-220, the IRS considered a transaction in which a liability insurer, M, settled a personal injury claim for a sum of "up-front" cash and two promises. First, M promised periodic payments to the plaintiff, A, of $250 per month for life, 20 years guaranteed. The second promise was that M would buy and own an annuity from which payments would flow in the precise amounts promised to A. The annuity would be subject to M's general creditors. A was named the payee, but M retained all rights of ownership in the annuity, including the right to change the payee. The ruling said that A could exclude each of the checks issuing from the annuity from income under IRC §104(a)(2). Also, if A died during the first 20 years, his successors in interest would receive the remaining (i.e., guaranteed) payments free of income tax.

Under IRC §130, and Rev Rul 79-220, there must be a promise by the defendant or liability insurer of fixed and determinable periodic payments. In general, California law does not permit a court to impose a periodic payment obligation on a tortfeasor.

WARNING: A plaintiff cannot achieve the same result by negotiating to obtain a cash settlement with the idea that a structured settlement could then be purchased. At least part of the periodic payments would be taxable as investment income.

For a time after promulgation of Rev Rul 79-220, many defense professionals resisted the idea of committing their clients to undertaking a future payment obligation. This problem was resolved in early 1983 by new legislation. It added IRC §130 to allow the assignment of future payment obligations. Pub L 97-473, 96 Stat 2605 (1982). Now defense counsel frequently negotiate structured settlements in which the long term obligation created by the defendant's promise is transferred. However, it is still generally true that there cannot be an assignment of a structured settlement obligation unless that obligation first comes into existence by virtue of a voluntary promise by the defense.

§49.50 2. Assignments Under IRC §130

Internal Revenue Code §130 permits structured settlements to be used in cases involving small liability insurers or self-insured defendants that otherwise would not be good candidates to serve as obligation holders for obligations that could extend over decades. A requirement for favorable tax treatment imposed by Rev Rul 79-220 is that the annuity be subject to the general creditors of the promisor. If the promisor is not a strong financial institution, there is an unacceptable risk of its insolvency, the annuity payments' being swept into the bankrupt estate, and plaintiff's receiving less than 100 percent. Internal Revenue Code §130 allows an assignee of a structured settlement obligation to receive favorable tax treatment if the assignment complies with certain requirements, making it a "qualified assignment."

Section 130 contemplates that the assignee will receive the amount needed to purchase the funding annuity or other funding asset. It will own the asset and be liable for the periodic payments. In most instances, the settlement agreement provides that the assignor—i.e., the initial promisor, the defendant, or liability insurer—is released from the future payment obligation, although it may also be agreed that the original obligor is to remain liable.

For an assignment to be a qualified assignment, it must be of "a liability to make periodic payments as damages (whether by suit or agreement), or as compensation under any workmen's compensation act on account of personal injury or sickness (in a case involving physical injury or physical illness)." IRC §130(c). The periodic payments cannot be accelerated, deferred, increased, or decreased by the recipient, and the assignee's obligation on account of the personal injuries or sickness cannot be greater than the obligation of the person who assigned the liability. Moreover, the periodic payments must be excludable from the gross income of the recipient under IRC §104(a)(1) or (a)(2). This last requirement limits the use of IRC §130 assignments to claims for damages involving physical injury or physical sickness, other than punitive damages. Thus, such assignments cannot be used in, e.g., tort cases in which there is no physical injury or sickness, e.g., insurance bad faith and most cases of wrongful termination, employment discrimination, or defamation. IRC §104(a)(1).

Since 1988, it is no longer the rule that the plaintiff can have no rights greater than those of a general creditor against the assignee, which authorizes the creation of a security interest in the funding asset(s) when an assignment is made. Pub L 100-647, §6079(b)(1)(A)-(B). Now, a majority of assignees active in the business will grant a security interest in the annuity or in United States Treasury bonds that fund the future payments.

Self-insured defendants use assignments to permit a current tax deduction for the cost of funding the structured settlement. Under IRC §461(h), enacted in 1984, there would usually be an adverse tax result if a self-insured defendant were to remain liable on the periodic payment obligation. Self-insureds may face adverse income recognition rules governing annuities owned by nonnatural persons. See IRC §§72(a) and 72(q)(2)(G). (These tax accounting and income recognition problems do not face liability insurers, whether or not the obligation is transferred to an assignee.)

§49.51 3. Tax Issues in Settling Employment Disputes

Many claims for employment discrimination, wrongful termination, and the like present income tax problems. The plaintiff may be able to recover in tort, but unless the damages flow from a physical personal injury, the narrowed version of IRC §104(a)(2) will make most or all of the recovery taxable. When the tort is nonphysical in character, but symptoms such as insomnia or ulcers result, the recovery will still be taxable. But other cases involving a battery (e.g., groping, fondling, or worse) probably should give rise to a recovery that—except for punitive damages—is all income-tax-free.

Back pay recovered under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 USC §2000e—2000e-17) is taxable compensation. Burke v U.S. (1992) 504 US 229, 119 L Ed 2d 34, 112 S Ct 1867. Back pay and liquidated damages recovered under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (29 USC §216(b)) are also taxable compensation. Commissioner v Schleier (1995) 515 US 323, 132 L Ed 2d 294, 115 S Ct 2159 (back pay and liquidated damages received under ADEA not received on account of personal injury or sickness).

As noted in §49.50, favored tax treatment is given to structured settlement obligations that are assigned only in personal injury cases involving physical injury or sickness. There are a few non-IRC §130 assignment options in the marketplace that can be used in some of the nonphysical injury cases.

§49.52 4. Constructive Receipt and Economic Benefit Doctrines

Tax law standards concerning the constructive receipt of periodic payments may sometimes affect the taxability of structured settlement benefits. Under the "Law and Analysis" section of Rev Rul 79-220, 1979-2 Cum Bull 74, if a lump-sum damage payment is invested for the benefit of a claimant who has actual or constructive receipt or the economic benefit of a lump-sum payment, only the lump-sum payment is received as damages under IRC §104(a)(2) and none of the income from the investment of such payment is excludable under §104.

The income tax doctrine of constructive receipt is set forth in Treas Reg §1.451-2:

> (a) General Rule. Income although not actually reduced to a taxpayer's possession is constructively received by him in the taxable year during which it is credited to his account, set apart for him, or otherwise made available so that he may draw upon it at any time.… However, income is not constructively received if the taxpayer's control of its receipt is subject to substantial limitations or restrictions.

NOTE: It is not true that a plaintiff who has learned the cost of the annuity to the defendant is thereby charged with constructive receipt of that amount. See IRS Letter Ruling 8333035, which says that unqualified availability, not knowledge, is decisive. Availability of a sum—without strings attached—is the touchstone. The defendant is generally not required to disclose its cost to fund future periodic payments, but this is unrelated to the tax law. There is a case in which a superior court overturned a settlement, on the ground that its value was unconscionably low, and in which nondisclosure of the present value of the settlement was a factor in the ruling. See Williams v Southern Cal. Edison (LA Super Ct, Jan. 18, 1990) reported in 33 ATLA L Rep 253 (1990). There is no tax objection to the plaintiff's negotiating for a particular future payment obligor or annuity issuer.

A constructive receipt question may arise if, e.g., during the course of a mandatory settlement conference or trial, the parties arrive at an agreement concerning the amount that the defendant must spend in order to settle the case; the agreement is then put on record, the plaintiff being given an option to receive the amount to be spent by the defendant either in an all-cash settlement or in a structured settlement; and the plaintiff on the record releases the defendant. In this situation, because the plaintiff has already tendered the release, there is no longer any substantial limitation on the plaintiff's at once demanding the sum that the defendant has agreed to spend. A plaintiff who has the option to receive a given sum of money, without any restriction except a personal inclination, has constructively received that amount. (This scenario of a complete settlement on the record must be distinguished from the great majority of settlements in which the parties intend that no final settlement be reached unless and until the plaintiff executes a written release.)

If court approval of a settlement is required, as when the plaintiff is a minor, the parties' agreement concerning the structured settlement is not yet enforceable; therefore the plaintiff cannot have constructive receipt even if all the parties agree on every term. Much the same analysis applies to cases on appeal. Until all opportunity for a further appeal has been exhausted, the plaintiff will generally not have the right to take possession of a sum of money or an asset.

The economic benefit doctrine may arise if a recipient of structured settlement payments attempts to assign or transfer the right to receive those payments as collateral to obtain a loan. Generally, under income tax law, when a person is entitled to receive a stream of payments, and transfers that right to obtain a lump sum (whether the right is sold outright or merely borrowed against), the taxpayer may be treated as having received the economic benefit, i.e., the discounted present value, of the future payment right. A taxpayer cannot "cash out" or have access to the present value of the payment stream and still be accorded deferred recognition as if the economic benefit of the future payment right had not been realized all at once. This idea overlaps with the doctrine of "assignment of income."

E. Reliability of the Guaranty of Future Payment

§49.53 1. Reliance on Initial Promisor

In a structured settlement in which there is no assignment, the plaintiff must consider the reliability of the promisor and the promisor's general credit. (Because IRC §130 applies only when an assignment is used, the secured creditor arrangements authorized by the statute are not available if the transaction is modeled on Rev Rul 79-220.)

A large, well-known, highly rated insurance company that underwrites commercial, auto, and other liability risks is generally sufficiently reliable for long term plans. Many government units are also reliable. Some utilities and quasi-governmental entities are effectively barred from becoming insolvent. Finally, the liability insurer's solvency may be guaranteed by the California Insurance Guarantee Association (CIGA). If the limits of CIGA protection are adequate, the plaintiff's payments should be assured.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.54 2. Reliance on Assignee

The annuity companies that are active in the settlement market typically use an affiliate company to serve as an assignee of the periodic payment liability. The plaintiff's attorney might see such an assignment as acceptably secure if:

- The assignee is large and strong;
- Its obligations are guaranteed by a large and strong entity; or
- The plaintiff receives a security interest in the annuity and the annuity issuer is highly reliable.

Regardless of the particular product arrangement, the goal of plaintiff's counsel is to be able to rely on the promise of the flagship or holding company of the particular insurance company family.

Under IRC §130, as amended in 1988, an assignee may grant a security interest in the funding asset to the plaintiff. Some of the companies active in the market have refused to offer this option, but a substantial minority of the industry now permits it.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.55 3. Independent Ratings of Insurance Companies

Depending on the identity of the future payment obligor, whether there is a guaranty from another company, and whether the plaintiff will have a security interest in the annuity, aid in evaluating reliability can be obtained from ratings in either Best's Insurance Reports, Life/Health Edition or Property/Casualty Edition, published by A.M. Best Company. Counsel should also obtain ratings from at least one of the following rating services: Standard & Poor's Insurance Rating Services, Moody's Investors Service, or Duff & Phelps Credit Rating Company.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Estate and Benefits Planning; Trusts

§49.56 1. Estate and Government Benefits Planning

If the structured settlement provides guaranteed payments and the plaintiff dies before the last such payment is made, successors in interest will receive the remaining payments free of income tax. See §49.49. However, the value at date of death of the right to receive the remaining payment will be a part of the decedent's estate for purposes of federal estate taxation. The IRS routinely grants extensions of time—up to 10 years—for the payment of estate taxes when the main asset is a periodic payment right.

Probate can be avoided by having the settlement agreement and annuity application designate particular persons as beneficiaries, although this may sacrifice postsettlement flexibility. It will usually be better to provide that the plaintiff's estate will be the successor, because the plaintiff will then be able to dispose of the periodic payment right by will or inter vivos gift. But neither designating specific individuals nor designating the estate is the best course in every case.

Sometimes periodic payment plans can be structured to avoid impairment of the injured party's postsettlement eligibility for government benefits. If the plaintiff will be eligible for Medicare because of permanent disability, an allocation may be made among the categories of damages (e.g., future medical, lost wages, general damages) to avoid future reimbursement claims.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.57 2. Trusts

At times, trusts are used in structured settlements to accomplish various purposes. The tax and functional attributes of these different trusts must be carefully distinguished.

In some settlements periodic payments flow into a conventional trust for the plaintiff's benefit. The trust's main purpose is to defray medical expenses that are expected to be substantial, although their likely timing is uncertain. Such a trust serves a money management function. If the trustee has discretion to distribute or accumulate income, the net income is taxable to the trust (i.e., at the entity level). IRC §641. If the trustee must currently distribute income, the income is taxable to the beneficiary.

A funding vehicle in which an assignee owns Treasury bonds, rather than an annuity, as qualified funding assets under IRC §130 is described in §49.38. In the past, the bonds were typically held by a reliable institution in a trust, although the plaintiff had no interest in that trust. Now the plaintiff should become a secured creditor, whether or not a trust is used. The Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 (TAMRA) amendment to IRC §130 allows the recipient to have a secured creditor interest in the bonds. The trust itself should not be the IRC §130 assignee. See Note in §49.38.

In certain situations, reversionary trusts offer a sensible, efficient compromise. They are most often seen when:

- Future medical expenses will be heavy;
- Liability is questionable; and
- The defendant is a government entity or a nonprofit corporation.

In most cases, a special needs trust established under Prob C §§3604-3605 and 42 USC §1396p(d)(4)(A) should be planned so it is funded either wholly or in part by payments from a structured settlement.

G. Attorney Fees

§49.58 1. Primacy of Present Value

Plaintiff's attorney fees should be calculated on the present value (usually cost) of the total settlement. As noted in Schneider v Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1989) 215 CA3d 1311, 1319, 264 CR 227, 231, disapproved on other grounds in Moncharsh v Heily & Blase (1992) 3 C4th 1, 27, 10 CR3d 183:

> [W]e think the cost approach with its simplicity of application and avoidance of risk inherent in evaluating subjective factors is the preferable approach.... The courts in various states which have addressed this issue have also uniformly concluded the value of a periodic payment settlement for the purpose of calculating a contingent attorney's fee is the present value of the periodic payments, which is normally best represented by the cost of the annuity purchased to fund the payments.

A structured settlement proposal should usually contain up-front cash equal to at least a third of the present value of the settlement, plus some cash for the plaintiff after payment of the attorney fee.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.59 2. Periodic Payment of Attorney Fee

Occasionally, a plaintiff's attorney seeks periodic payment of the contingent fee. The attorney may assume that such an arrangement allows the attorney to recognize income as payments are received from the annuity company, but this may not be the result.

Typically, a "structured" attorney fee uses a promise from the periodic payment obligor running directly to the attorney. Thus, the attorney no longer relies on the client for deferred compensation. Arguably, the employer/client has given the attorney property (the promise of a third party) in exchange for services. The IRS has ruled in one instance that such an attorney fee arrangement was "property" within the meaning of IRC §83 because the settlement obligor's promise was funded or secured by an annuity. The property was not subject to a substantial risk of forfeiture, because the taxpayer's right to receive payments was not conditioned on the future performance of services. Consequently, the IRS concluded that the taxpayer was required to include the present fair market value of the property (i.e., the annuity premium) in income for the taxable year in which the annuity was purchased. IRS Letter Ruling 9134006.

The taxpayer successfully challenged the IRS ruling in Childs v Commissioner (1994) 103 TC 634, aff'd (11th Cir 1996) 89 F3d 856. Because the payments could not be assigned, accelerated, deferred, increased, or decreased by the recipients, the court held that the fair market value of the attorneys' rights to receive payments under the settlement agreements were not includable in income under IRC §83 in the year the policies were purchased. The court held that the promise to pay under the structured settlement was neither funded nor secured and thus did not meet the §83 definition of property. In Childs, the taxpayer's position was probably helped by the fact that the fee was funded with an Executive Life annuity.

PRACTICE TIP: One possible solution to this risk is to achieve the reliability objective of the attorney not by making the lawyer the promisee of an institution's promise, but through other mechanisms, such as a collection account or a court order.

I. INTRODUCTION

§50.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter covers the requirements of, and procedures for, determining whether a settlement between a plaintiff and fewer than all defendants was made in good faith with respect to the remaining defendants. See CCP §§877, 877.6. It gives an overview (see §§50.3-50.7), then discusses obtaining a good faith determination (see §§50.8-50.24), opposition to a motion for good faith determination (see §50.25), reply papers (see §50.26), the hearing (see §50.27), and the posthearing (see §50.28), and also provides forms (see §§50.29-50.34).

§50.2 B. Governing Law

The effect of a good faith settlement, and procedures for making and opposing motions to determine good faith, are set forth in CCP §§877, 877.6.

NOTE: These statutes apply when defendants are alleged to be joint tortfeasors or co-obligors on a contract debt. CCP §877.6. They do not apply to co-obligors who have an agreement in writing to apportion liability among themselves (CCP §877(c)), nor to a release, dismissal with or without prejudice, or a covenant not to sue or not to enforce judgment given to a co-obligor on a contract debt if the contract was made before January 1, 1988 (CCP §877(d)). Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. v Superior Court (1994) 29 CA4th 435, 34 CR2d 520 (CCP §877.6(c) limited to "claims … for equitable comparative contribution … based on comparative negligence or comparative fault"; claim for contribution among insurers providing overlapping coverage not barred by §877.6(c), because action by insurer based on equitable apportionment of contractual undertakings, not fault concepts).

As used in the statute, the term "joint-tortfeasors" includes joint, concurrent, and successive tortfeasors. Turcon Constr., Inc. v Norton-Villiers, Ltd. (1983) 139 CA3d 280, 283, 188 CR 580.

These statutes apply only to settlements between joint tortfeasors that occur before verdict or judgment. Jhaveri v Teitelbaum (2009) 176 CA4th 740, 749, 98 CR3d 268 (CCP §§877 and 877.6 inapplicable to postjudgment settlement).

© The Regents of the University of California

II. OVERVIEW

§50.3 A. Impact of Good Faith Determination

Unless the terms of a settlement expressly provide that a settlement with one party discharges other joint tortfeasors or co-obligors, their liability is not discharged. CCP §877(a). Thus, in a multiparty case, a plaintiff may settle with one party and pursue the lawsuit against the remaining parties. A determination by a court that a settlement was made in good faith under CCP §877.6 bars any other joint tortfeasor or co-obligor from asserting further claims against the settling party for equitable comparative contribution or partial or comparative indemnity based on comparative negligence or comparative fault. CCP §877.6(c). See Britz, Inc. v Dow Chem. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 177, 86 CR2d 188 (joint tortfeasor that obtained good faith settlement determination and was dismissed from case could not bring separate indemnity action against its former codefendants after they also settled with plaintiff and received good faith settlement determination).

The nonsettling parties get the benefit of an offset against the plaintiff for the amount of the settlement. CCP §877(a). See Reed v Wilson (1999) 73 CA4th 439, 86 CR2d 510 (offset applies to judgment only, so defendant is generally not entitled to offset costs awarded to prevailing plaintiff after claim of liability is adjudicated).

Note that a good faith settlement by one party does not bar the nonsettling parties from seeking express contractual indemnity (C. L. Peck Contractors v Superior Court (1984) 159 CA3d 828, 205 CR 754), equitable apportionment of contractual undertakings (Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. v Superior Court (1994) 29 CA4th 435, 34 CR2d 520 (overlapping insurance coverage)), or statutory indemnity (Kantor v Housing Auth. (1992) 8 CA4th 424, 10 CR2d 695).

PRACTICE TIP: Because there is always a possibility that a court may find that a settlement is not in good faith, it is good practice to include a clause in the settlement that voids the settlement if it is not found to be in good faith.

A good faith settlement determination by a court bars total equitable indemnity claims of nonsettling tortfeasors. Far W. Fin. Corp. v D&S, Inc. (1988) 46 C3d 796, 817, 251 CR 202 (to rule otherwise would contravene the purpose of CCP §877.6(c) to encourage settlements and fairly apportion costs among all parties).

Insurers, when acting in their role as insurers, are not tortfeasors or joint tortfeasors for purposes of §877.6. See Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co v Superior Court, supra (in suit against multiple insurers providing overlapping coverage, insurer that settles with plaintiff and obtains good faith determination may not use determination to avoid contribution claims from other insurers). However, a joint tortfeasor's liability insurer that has settled with a plaintiff "steps into the shoes" of its insured; thus, an alleged joint tortfeasor's liability insurer, which settled with the plaintiff before suit was filed, is barred from seeking equitable indemnity from settling defendants who obtained a good faith settlement determination under §877.6. Mid-Century Ins. Exch. v Daimler-Chrysler Corp. (2001) 93 CA4th 310, 112 CR2d 880. A defending insurer is not bound by a settlement that was made without its participation and approval, even if the settlement was found to be in good faith under §877.6. Hamilton v Maryland Cas. Co. (2002) 27 C4th 718, 117 CR2d 318 (§877.6 confirmation showed that insured was paying fair share of claimant's damages, but did not determine fairness of settlement to insurer).

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.4 B. Equitable Nature of Proceeding

The hearing authorized by CCP §877.6 is equitable in nature and is not an action at law. Thus, the court is empowered to determine a fact issue normally in the province of the jury. A jury trial is not required by the statute or the constitution. Widson v International Harvester Co. (1984) 153 CA3d 45, 56, 200 CR 136.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.5 C. Parties That May Move for Good Faith Ruling

Any party to an action is entitled to a hearing on the issue of the good faith of a settlement. CCP §877.6(a)(1). This includes nonsettling defendants in the action. Greshko v County of Los Angeles (1987) 194 CA3d 822, 829, 239 CR 846. One court has held that a cross-defendant who settles with the cross-complainant but not the plaintiff is entitled to a good faith determination. KAOM, Inc. v Superior Court (1995) 35 CA4th 549, 41 CR2d 310. But see Arizona Pipeline Co. v Superior Court (1994) 22 CA4th 33, 27 CR2d 118 (under CCP §877.6, "plaintiff or other claimant" refers to injured party claimants, not joint tortfeasors; when only complainants are joint tortfeasors asserting indemnity and contribution claims against one another, statute does not apply).

Good faith settlement procedures under CCP §877.6 apply even if there are no nonsettling defendants; later-named defendants or the last defendant to settle the case can use §877.6 to extinguish indemnity claims by joint tortfeasors or co-obligors who have already settled. Wilshire Ins. Co. v Tuff Boy Holding, Inc. (2001) 86 CA4th 627, 638, 103 CR2d 480.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/50 Good Faith Settlement/§50.6 D. Procedural Overview

§50.6 D. Procedural Overview

The statute provides two alternative procedures for seeking a determination by the court that a settlement is in good faith:

- Notice of motion (CCP §877.6(a)(1)). Under this procedure, the party seeking a good faith settlement determination gives notice of the settlement to all parties, as provided in CCP §1005(b). The court may shorten the time for giving the required notice on a showing of good cause.
- Notice of settlement (CCP §877.6(a)(2)). Alternatively, the settling party may give notice of settlement to all parties and the court, together with an application for determination of good faith settlement and a proposed order. The application should indicate the settling parties and the basis, terms, and amount of the settlement. A nonsettling party has 25 days from the mailing of the notice, or 20 days in the case of personal service, to file a motion contesting the good faith of the settlement. If no motion is filed, the court may approve the settlement without a hearing.

PRACTICE TIP: The choice of procedure is often dictated by timing considerations. If there is no particular hurry in obtaining a good faith determination, the attorney may serve a notice of settlement. If time is of the essence, a party should proceed by way of motion. Before filing the motion, the attorney should contact other parties to learn whether the motion will be opposed. An unopposed moving party can file a "bare-bones" memorandum and a declaration from the attorney outlining the terms of the settlement. Because the burden of proof is on the party opposing the good faith of the settlement, if that party files opposing papers and declarations, the moving party can supply the needed detailed analysis. See City of Grand Terrace v Superior Court (1987) 192 CA3d 1251, 1260, 238 CR 119.

Although CCP §877.6 does not provide a mechanism for a dismissal of cross-complaints barred by the good faith determination, Cal Rules of Ct 3.1382 provides that a notice or an application for determination of good faith may include a request to dismiss a pleading or a portion of a pleading.

PRACTICE TIP: Requesting dismissal of a cross-complaint in the same motion as the motion for determination of good faith settlement allows the court to find that the settlement is in good faith and immediately dismiss the related cross-complaints.

§50.7 E. Impact of Fair Responsibility Act of 1986 on Good Faith Determinations

Under the Fair Responsibility Act of 1986 (CC §§1431-1431.5) (also known as Proposition 51), joint tortfeasors are severally liable for noneconomic damages arising from personal injury, wrongful death, and property damage. CC §1431.2(a). Economic damages are objectively verifiable monetary losses, including medical expenses, lost earnings, burial costs, loss of use of property, and loss of business or employment opportunities. CC §1431.2(b)(1). Noneconomic damages are subjective, nonmonetary losses, including pain, suffering, inconvenience, mental suffering, and emotional distress. CC §1431.2(b)(2).

Courts have apportioned liability even if one tortfeasor acted intentionally and the other acted negligently. See, e.g., Martin v U.S. (9th Cir 1993) 984 F2d 1033; Weidenfeller v Star & Garter (1991) 1 CA4th 1, 2 CR2d 14. Joint tortfeasors remain jointly liable for economic damages. Bostick v Flex Equip. Co. (2007) 147 CA4th 80, 90, 54 CR3d 28.

NOTE: Proposition 51 does not apply to causes of action that accrued before June 4, 1986. Evangelatos v Superior Court (1988) 44 C3d 1188, 246 CR 629. In the context of a latent, progressively developing disease, a cause of action has accrued, and application of Proposition 51 is precluded, if the plaintiff has been diagnosed with the disease or discovered the illness before June 4, 1986. Buttram v Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1997) 16 C4th 520, 66 CR2d 438 (mesothelioma).

The Act itself does not specify how a good faith settlement should be apportioned, if at all, between noneconomic and economic damages if the settlement is later deducted from judgments against nonsettling defendants. The approach used by a judge to determine the effect of the settlement on the defendants' liability can affect the amount the plaintiff recovers and the amount each remaining defendant pays.

In Ehret v Congoleum Corp. (1999) 73 CA4th 1308, 1320, 87 CR2d 363, the court of appeal stated that the court should determine what portion of the settlement is economic damages because only the amount attributable to the joint responsibility for economic damages can be used as an offset. In the absence of a prior allocation of the settlement between economic and noneconomic damages, the settlement should be apportioned in the same percentage as reflected in the jury verdict in order to determine the offset for the settlement from the verdict against the nonsettling joint tortfeasor. Espinoza v Machonga (1992) 9 CA4th 268, 276, 11 CR2d 498. See also Hackett v John Crane, Inc. (2002) 98 CA4th 1233, 120 CR2d 662; Wilson v John Crane, Inc. (2000) 81 CA4th 847, 97 CR2d 240 (applying Espinoza formula).

For discussion of the calculation method used in Espinoza and of a proposed alternative method, see Peyrat, Calculating Judgments Under Proposition 51: Effect of Plaintiff's Fault, Settlements, and Workers' Compensation, 15 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 88 (Mar. 1993). See also Watson & Walsh, How Proposition 51 Works: Its Judicial Development and Impact on Practice, 22 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 6 (Feb. 2000).

In Bostick v Flex Equip. Co. (2007) 147 CA4th 80, 93, 54 CR3d 28, the court held that Proposition 51 does not apply in strict liability cases involving a single product in which all defendants are in the same chain of distribution. The court distinguished Wilson v John Crane, Inc., supra, as a case involving multiple products. Bostick, 147 CA4th at 95 n9. See also Wimberly v Derby Cycle Corp. (1997) 56 CA4th 618, 633, 65 CR2d 532.

A nonsettling defendant can set off an economic damages award even if the settling defendants were found not liable. McComber v Wells (1999) 72 CA4th 512, 85 CR2d 376.

PRACTICE TIP: Before negotiating a settlement, plaintiff's attorney can estimate what portion of the provable damages is economic and what portion is noneconomic, then draft a settlement agreement that specifies reasonable amounts for the two forms of damages. It is not at all clear, however, that the "good faith judge" will, or ought, to approve an apportionment of damages between economic and noneconomic. Nonsettling defendants may oppose a good faith motion if they perceive the apportionment to be unfair. Settling defendants are indifferent to any apportionment between economic and noneconomic damages except to the extent that an unreasonable apportionment may provide a reason for determining the settlement not to have been in good faith.

III. OBTAINING GOOD FAITH DETERMINATION

A. Notice of Motion

§50.8 1. Content

Any party that wants to obtain a hearing, at which the good faith of a settlement may be determined, may file and serve a notice of motion. See form in §50.29. The notice may include a request to dismiss a pleading or a portion of a pleading. The notice must list each party and pleading or portion of pleading affected by the settlement and the date when the affected pleading was filed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1382.

The notice may be in the form of other notices of motion with attached memorandum, declarations, exhibits, and proposed order. The form, format, and general contents of notices of motion are discussed in chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.9 2. Service

The notice of hearing must be served on all affected parties at least 16 court days before the scheduled hearing date; the notice period is increased by 5 calendar days if service is by mail entirely within California; by 10 calendar days if mailing is from or to another state; and by 20 calendar days if from or to another nation. CCP §1005(a)(5), (b). See chap 18 on service generally and by express mail and facsimile transmission.

On a showing of good cause, the court can shorten the notice time to allow good faith to be determined before trial or, if the trial is already started, before a verdict or judgment. CCP §877.6(a)(1).

NOTE: Generally, if a settlement is entered into after a verdict or judgment, cross-complaints against the settling party are not barred. Be v Western Truck Exch. (1997) 55 CA4th 1139, 64 CR2d 527; Southern Cal. White Trucks v Teresinski (1987) 190 CA3d 1393, 236 CR 159. However, in a bifurcated trial against multiple defendants, a good faith determination of a settlement reached after a verdict on the liability phase but prior to litigating the issue of damages will bar indemnity cross-complaints. Price Pfister, Inc. v William Lyon Co. (1993) 14 CA4th 1643, 18 CR2d 437.

The court has discretion to allow a continuance of the hearing for the purpose of giving the party opposing the motion additional time to conclude discovery on the good faith issues raised in the motion. City of Grand Terrace v Superior Court (1987) 192 CA3d 1251, 1265, 238 CR 119.

PRACTICE TIP: If there are some matters on which discovery has not been completed which deal with the issues raised in the motion, counsel should notice the motion with sufficient time to allow the opposing parties to conclude that discovery. Taking this step can avoid an extra trip to law and motion because the court may grant a continuance to allow the additional discovery.

The notice should be delivered to all parties and to likely parties. If there is a potential party who had not been served with summons and complaint by the time the settlement was concluded, that party can be served with both those papers and the notice of motion for good faith settlement.

PRACTICE TIP: The motion should be set far enough in advance to allow the new party sufficient time and opportunity to conduct discovery prior to the hearing. Otherwise, that party could later reopen the issue of good faith. Singer Co. v Superior Court (1986) 179 CA3d 875, 225 CR 159.

Other than the mention in CCP §877 of settlement "before verdict or judgment," there is no time limit within which to make a motion for determination of good faith. A court has held that a motion can be made as late as 5 years after the settlement. Greshko v County of Los Angeles (1987) 194 CA3d 822, 829, 239 CR 846.

B. Factors Affecting Good Faith Determinations

§50.10 1. Burden of Proof

The most significant procedural difference between a motion for good faith settlement and other motions is that in a good faith settlement motion, the burden of proof is on the party opposing the motion. CCP §877.6(d). Despite this burden-shifting, the moving party should thoroughly prepare moving papers that analyze the relevant factors supporting a finding that the settlement is in good faith.

When the settlement provides for contingent payments, or involves consideration that is difficult to value, the settling parties are responsible for establishing the value of the settlement. See Brehm Communities v Superior Court (2001) 88 CA4th 730, 105 CR2d 918 (settling parties must present competent evidence, not mere speculation, of value of nonmonetary consideration to be transferred).

When the settling parties have allocated a portion or portions of the settlement to particular issues or claims, the burden is on them to explain the evidentiary basis of the allocation so as to show that it is reasonable and to demonstrate that the allocation was reached in a sufficiently adversarial manner to justify the presumption that a reasonable valuation was reached. See, e.g., L.C. Rudd & Son v Superior Court (1997) 52 CA4th 742, 60 CR2d 703; Regan Roofing Co. v Superior Court (1994) 21 CA4th 1685, 27 CR2d 62; Erreca's v Superior Court (1993) 19 CA4th 1475, 24 CR2d 156.

§50.11 2. Reasonable Range Test of Tech-Bilt

The leading case in the analysis for determining whether a settlement is in good faith is Tech-Bilt, Inc. v Woodward-Clyde & Assocs. (1985) 38 C3d 488, 213 CR 256.

From a public policy standpoint, the two major goals of the statutory scheme behind CCP §§877 and 877.6 are to equitably share the cost of settlements between the parties at fault and to encourage settlements. 38 C3d at 494. To ensure that these goals are applied independently so that they do not defeat each other, the Tech-Bilt court developed the "reasonable range" test for good faith determination. The test requires the court to weigh various factors and analyze whether the amount of the proposed settlement is within the "reasonable range" of the settling defendant's proportional share of comparative liability for the plaintiff's injuries. 38 C3d at 499. The factors include:

- A rough approximation of the plaintiff's total potential recovery;
- A rough approximation of the settling defendant's proportionate liability;
- The amount paid in settlement;
- The allocation of proceeds among plaintiffs;
- A recognition that the settling defendant should pay less in settlement than if it were found liable at trial;
- The financial condition of the settling defendant;
- The insurance policy limits of the settling defendant; and
- The existence of fraud, collusion, or tortious misconduct on the part of the settling parties aimed to injure the interests of the nonsettling defendants.

Each of these factors is evaluated on the basis of the information that was available to the parties at the time the settlement was entered into. 38 C3d at 499. No one factor is determinative. Each must be weighed individually and an assessment made with respect to how it impacts the others.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.12 3. Rough Approximation of Plaintiff's Total Recovery

The approximation of total recovery to which the plaintiff is entitled is not determined exclusively by the sums prayed for in the complaint. The court is not required to ignore its own experience and may view the prayer as a comparison point in valuing the plaintiff's claim. Kohn v Superior Court (1983) 142 CA3d 323, 191 CR 78. The court must look to whether the settlement figure is out of proportion to the plaintiff's probable recovery. Tech-Bilt, Inc. v Woodward-Clyde & Assocs. (1985) 38 C3d 488, 499, 213 CR 256. When the settlement is disproportionate to the amount prayed for, evidence of a lack of liability of the settling defendant will support a finding of good faith. Wysong Miles Co. v Western Indus. Movers (1983) 143 CA3d 278, 191 CR 671.

NOTE: The Fair Responsibility Act of 1986 (CC §§1431-1431.5), when applicable, requires a separate analysis of economic damage exposure and noneconomic damage exposure. See §50.7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.13 4. Rough Approximation of Settling Defendant's Proportion of Liability

Payment by a settling party of less than its theoretical proportional share does not necessarily render a settlement in bad faith. Exact proportionality is not required. The court will balance all factors and determine if the settlement "is so far out of the ballpark … to be inconsistent with the equitable objectives of the statute." Tech-Bilt, Inc. v Woodward-Clyde & Assocs. (1985) 38 C3d 488, 499, 213 CR 256.

EXAMPLE: A settlement was held not to be in good faith when the settling party settled for approximately 1 percent of the potential settlement value of the case. Gehl Bros. Mfg. Co. v Superior Court (1986) 183 CA3d 178, 228 CR 19. In Gehl, the plaintiff was allegedly injured by equipment manufactured by the defendants. Although the trial court found the estimated settlement value to be between $1.5 and $2.5 million, one manufacturer settled for $10,000. The trial court found that this "cost of defense settlement" was consistent with a finding of remote liability. 183 CA3d at 182. The appellate court reversed, holding that the settlement was consistent with a finding of no liability and it could not be said that the settling defendant was not liable as a matter of law. Liability for design defects or failure to warn or provide safety devices falls with some proportion on all parties participating in designing and marketing the product. The proportional share of liability that the settling defendant should have borne was greater than the 1 percent it paid in settlement. 183 CA3d at 184. See also Long Beach Mem. Med. Ctr. v Superior Court (2009) 172 CA4th 865, 875, 91 CR3d 494 (in case involving several defendants and nearly $8 million in global settlement, abuse of discretion to hold physicians' $200,000 settlement to be in good faith when evidence at time of settlement showed they shared in more than nominal liability and they timed offer to escape liability from other defendants, and offer represented only 10 percent of their insurance policy limit).

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.14 5. Amount Paid in Settlement

In some cases—e.g., when payment is contingent, or there is a "sliding scale recovery" agreement—a settlement may be structured in such a way that it is difficult to calculate the value of the consideration. In such cases, the initial burden is on the settling parties to establish the settlement's value. See §50.10. The court must be given sufficient information to evaluate the good faith of the settlement. See Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 43 C3d 858, 239 CR 626 (addressing specific issue of putting value on "sliding scale," or "Mary Carter," settlement). See also, e.g., Brehm Communities v Superior Court (2001) 88 CA4th 730, 105 CR2d 918 (evaluation of settlement involving transfer of unvalued assets and intangibles); Regan Roofing Co. v Superior Court (1994) 21 CA4th 1685, 27 CR2d 62 (assigned indemnity rights). For further discussion of sliding scale settlements, see chap 49.

PRACTICE TIP: For a settlement to be found in good faith, its value must be within the reasonable range of the potential liability of the settling party. Note that the plaintiff's counsel has an interest in setting a value as low as possible to decrease the offset to which nonsettling parties are entitled. The settling defendant has an interest in ascribing a high value to the settlement to ensure that the settlement is found to be in good faith. A way to balance these competing interests is to put a clause in the settlement that voids it if the settlement is not found to be in good faith or if the value ascribed to it is raised by the trial court.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.15 6. Allocation of Proceeds Among Plaintiffs

A settlement that includes an assignment to the plaintiffs of the settling defendant's rights under an insurance policy when the insurer denied coverage may be held not to be in good faith. See Southern Cal. Gas Co. v Superior Court (1986) 187 CA3d 1030, 232 CR 320. In this case, the court found that the assignment of rights under the policy had no determined value and the plaintiffs were not required to pursue those rights. Thus, the nonsettling defendants were deprived of credit for the full value of the settlement. The assignment also was not allocated among the various plaintiffs to the action. Again, this would prejudice the nonsettling parties right to an offset. 187 CA3d at 1036. The court held that the settlement must be entered into in good faith, not only with respect to the plaintiff but with respect to the nonsettling defendants.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.16 7. Recognition That Settling Defendants Should Pay Less in Settlement Than After Trial

The uncertainty and expense of litigation make a settlement for less than the total potential liability sometimes in the best interest of the plaintiff. When factoring in this consideration, an analysis should be made of what chance there is that a jury will find the settling defendant responsible for the plaintiff's injuries and what comparative negligence, if any, the jury will charge to the plaintiff.

NOTE: In a complex case, expert testimony is almost always used. The cost of developing and presenting expensive evidence should be factored into the analysis.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.17 8. Financial Condition of Settling Defendant

A declaration from the settling party outlining his or her financial condition and available insurance (see §50.18) should be presented. This factor should be highlighted if the settlement is disproportionately low (considering the settling party's liability) because of the settling party's impaired solvency. A relatively insolvent and uninsured or underinsured settling party who is clearly liable can settle in good faith at a disproportionately low amount. Tech-Bilt, Inc. v Woodward-Clyde & Assocs. (1985) 38 C3d 488, 499, 213 CR 256.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.18 9. Insurance Coverage and Policy Limits of Settling Defendant

A defendant's lack of insurance, including low policy limits, is a factor that may justify an apparently low settlement, in the same way as impaired solvency (see §50.17). Thus, the papers seeking a determination of good faith should fully inform the court about policies and policy limits.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.19 10. Fraud, Collusion, or Misconduct of Settling Parties

A settlement must be in good faith with respect to all parties. Southern Cal. Gas Co. v Superior Court (1986) 187 CA3d 1030, 1036, 232 CR 320. This requirement of good faith extends not only to the amount of the settlement, but also to any allocation that the settling parties make that operates to exclude any portion of the setoff to which nonsettling defendants are entitled. Erreca's v Superior Court (1993) 19 CA4th 1475, 24 CR2d 156. Certain settlement tactics or motives by the settling parties constitute bad faith. They include:

- A plaintiff singling out the most unpopular defendant and trying the case against that defendant alone by settling with all other codefendants;
- A plaintiff settling with a defendant capable of providing crucial witnesses, in order to eliminate their testimony from the trial; and
- A codefendant and a plaintiff conspiring to assign a disproportionately large amount of their settlement to the plaintiff's least valuable cause of action, leaving the nonsettling codefendants fully exposed to the plaintiff's most valuable cause of action. Torres v Union Pac. R.R. (1984) 157 CA3d 499, 504, 203 CR 825.

NOTE: The conduct of the nonsettling defendant is also at issue during a good faith determination. Acts by the nonsettling defendant that are unreasonable and attempt to frustrate the settlement can be considered by the court in determining whether there is a good faith settlement. Abbott Ford, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 43 C3d 858, 881, 239 CR 626. Although the court can issue sanctions against the nonsettling party, any sanction it issues must be in proportion to the nonsettling defendant's conduct. 43 C3d at 882.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.20 C. Declarations and Evidence Supporting Tech-Bilt Factors

Declarations under penalty of perjury or affidavits must be presented to the court to assist it in arriving at a good faith determination. City of Grand Terrace v Superior Court (1987) 192 CA3d 1251, 238 CR 119. These documents must be served with the notice of the hearing. Under CCP §877.6(b), the court has discretion to consider other evidence in making its determination of good faith. "Other evidence" can be anything that the court finds helpful in reaching a determination.

All declarations must state evidentiary facts from which the court can determine good or bad faith. Affidavits or declarations setting forth only conclusions, opinions, or ultimate facts are not sufficient. "[E]ven an expert's opinion cannot rise to the dignity of substantial evidence if it is unsubstantiated by facts." Greshko v County of Los Angeles (1987) 194 CA3d 822, 834, 239 CR 846.

When the motion is made by the settling defendant, the supporting declaration may show only that a settlement has been made, the amount of the settlement, a brief background of the case, and, possibly, the basis for the settlement. See City of Grand Terrace v Superior Court, supra. Such a barebones declaration is sufficient because the burden of proof is actually on the party opposing the motion to show lack of good faith. CCP §877.6(d). If the motion is contested and declarations are filed indicating that the settlement was not made in good faith, the moving party must submit counterdeclarations. These declarations should marshal the facts in light of the Tech-Bilt factors (see §§50.11-50.19) and provide a thorough analysis of their impact. Counterdeclarations may be filed to refute points raised by the opposition.

D. Alternative Method: Notice of Settlement

1. Notice of Settlement

§50.21 a. Content

A settling party may give notice of the settlement to all parties and to the court together with an application for determination of good faith settlement and a proposed order, instead of proceeding by noticed motion under CCP §877.6(a)(1). CCP §877.6(a)(2). The application must indicate the settling parties and the basis, terms, and amount of the settlement. CCP §877.6(a)(2). See forms in §§50.31-50.33.

NOTE: A party may not proceed by notice of settlement if the parties have entered into a confidentiality agreement regarding the case or the terms of the settlement. In that case, a motion is necessary. CCP §877.6(a)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.22 b. Service

The notice of settlement, application, and proposed order must be served on all parties and the court by certified mail, return receipt requested. CCP §877.6(a)(2). Within 25 days after the mailing of the notice, application, and proposed order, or within 20 days after personal service, any nonsettling party may file a notice of motion to contest the good faith of the settlement. CCP §877.6(a)(2). See §§50.8-50.9.

If none of the nonsettling parties files a motion within 25 days after mailing of the notice, application, and proposed order, or within 20 days after personal service, the court may approve the settlement. CCP §877.6(a)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Opposing Application for Determination of Good Faith Settlement: Motion to Contest Good Faith

§50.23 a. Content

A nonsettling party may file a notice of motion to contest the good faith of a settlement within 25 days after the mailing of a notice of settlement, application for determination of good faith, and proposed order, or within 20 days if personal service is used. CCP §877.6(a)(2). This notice may be in the form of other notices of motion with attached memorandum, declarations, exhibits, and proposed order. The form, format, and general contents of notices of motion are discussed in chap 12.

The motion must discuss the factors affecting good faith determinations demonstrating a lack of good faith discussed in §§50.11-50.19. The party asserting a lack of good faith has the burden of proof on that issue. CCP §877.6(d). A motion contesting the good faith of a settlement serves the same function as opposition to a motion for good faith determination. See §50.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.24 b. Service

The notice of hearing and moving papers must be served on all affected parties in the manner provided by CCP §1005(b). CCP §877.6(a)(2). See §50.9.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.25 IV. OPPOSITION TO MOTION FOR GOOD FAITH DETERMINATION

The party asserting a lack of good faith has the burden of proof on that issue. CCP §877.6(d). A lack of good faith is demonstrated by a showing that the settlement is so far "out of the ballpark" in relation to the Tech-Bilt factors as to be inconsistent with the statutory objectives of promoting equitable sharing of costs between parties at fault and promoting settlements. Tech-Bilt, Inc. v Woodward-Clyde & Assocs. (1985) 38 C3d 488, 499, 213 CR 256. The opposition must address the Tech-Bilt factors one by one and discuss how the settlement controverts each. Primarily, it must be established that the settlement is not within the "reasonable range" of the settling tortfeasor's proportional share of comparative liability.

PRACTICE TIP: In opposing a good faith determination of a sliding scale agreement (see §50.14), counsel may pursue two avenues of attack: First, argue that the settlement is "out of the ballpark" under the Tech-Bilt analysis; second, even if it is in the ballpark, request the court to raise the value assigned to it by the settling parties.

Opposition papers must be filed and served 9 court days before the date selected for the hearing. CCP §1005(b). Opposition papers must be served by personal delivery, fax, express mail, or other method consistent with CCP §§1010-1013, and reasonably calculated to ensure delivery by the close of the next business day after the papers are filed. CCP §1005(c). Service by fax is permitted only when the parties agree and the agreement is confirmed in writing. CCP §1013(e). See chap 18. The opposition must contain declarations demonstrating that the settlement is not in good faith.

PRACTICE TIP: A nonsettling defendant can request a determination that a settlement lacks good faith. CCP §877.6(a)(1). Doing so may have the practical effect of placing a burden (to show good faith) on the settling parties.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.26 V. REPLY PAPERS

Code of Civil Procedure §877.6 does not explicitly authorize a requesting party to file reply papers. It is advisable to check local rules, if any, on the filing of reply papers. Any reply must be filed and served at least 5 court days before the date selected for the hearing. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). Reply papers must be served by personal delivery, fax, express mail, or other method consistent with CCP §§1010-1013, and reasonably calculated to ensure delivery by the close of the next business day after the papers are filed. CCP §1005(c). Service by fax is permitted only when the parties agree and the agreement is confirmed in writing. CCP §1013(e). On fax filing and service, see chap 25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.27 VI. THE HEARING

In most instances, a motion for a good faith determination or a motion to contest the good faith of a settlement will be heard by the judge assigned to the case for all purposes. A judge who hears a settlement proceeding is not barred from hearing a good faith settlement motion. If nonsettling parties object to having the settlement judge preside over a good faith hearing, they should request assignment to another judge and, if necessary, file a CCP §170.6 disqualification motion. Horton v Superior Court (1987) 194 CA3d 727, 733, 238 CR 467. See also Erreca's v Superior Court (1993) 19 CA4th 1475, 24 CR2d 156 (when trial court presided over settlement discussions that went beyond general matters to include tentative damages allocation, it may have given impression that it approved particular allocations and valuations, issues that it would have to decide in good faith hearing; use of this procedure could create appearance of unfairness).

Most courts treat hearings on requests for good faith determinations like hearings on other motions. See generally chap 12. The extent of the hearing is largely left to the trial court's discretion. See Erreca's v Superior Court, supra (trial court not bound to hear oral argument in absence of new contentions after having "digested" paperwork). Local rules may provide that counsel can learn of the court's tentative decision by telephone a day or more before the hearing date.

Objections to incompetent evidence must be made at the earliest opportunity; otherwise, the court may consider the evidence. If the objection is not asserted, it is waived. Falk v Falk (1941) 48 CA2d 780, 789, 120 P2d 724.

Before a court may make a CCP §877.6 good faith finding, the settling parties must present competent evidence of the value of nonmonetary compensation to be transferred. Brehm Communities v Superior Court (2001) 88 CA4th 730, 735, 105 CR2d 918.

If a settling party gives notice of a settlement to all parties and to the court under CCP §877.6(a)(2), and no motion to contest the good faith of the settlement is filed within 25 days, or within 20 days if personal service is used, the court may approve the settlement without a hearing. As a rule, the court simply holds the proposed order approving the settlement until the time period has run. Some courts may require a supplemental declaration by counsel demonstrating compliance with CCP §877.6(a)(2). See form in §50.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.28 VII. POSTHEARING

Once a decision of good faith or the lack of it is made, any party aggrieved by the determination may petition the proper higher court to review the decision by writ of mandate. CCP §877.6(e). The petition for writ of mandate must be filed within 20 days after service of the written notice of the decision, although a party may ask the court for additional time not to exceed 20 days. CCP §877.6(a)(2).

PRACTICE TIP: At the hearing, if the court rules adversely, counsel may wish to petition immediately for the additional 20 days. Doing so will save a trip to court if any reason arises why the writ of mandate cannot be filed within the required 20 days.

After receipt of all materials filed by the parties, the reviewing court must decide within 30 days whether it will hear the writ and notify the parties of its decision. CCP §877.6(e)(1). If the court decides to hear the writ, the hearing is given a "special precedence" over all other civil matters with less precedence. During the pendency of the review of the determination, any period of time that would subject a party to dismissal under CCP §§583.310-583.430 is tolled.

A challenge to the good faith determination must be made by petition for writ of mandate. An aggrieved party may not seek review of the determination in an appeal from the final judgment of the plaintiff's claims against the nonsettling defendants. O'Hearn v Hillcrest Gym & Fitness Ctr., Inc. (2004) 115 CA4th 491, 498, 9 CR3d 342; Main Fiber Prods. v Morgan & Franz Ins. Agency (1999) 73 CA4th 1130, 87 CR2d 108.

However, writ review is not the exclusive means of review if the party seeking review had earlier filed a timely writ petition, which was summarily denied. In this situation, a trial court's good faith settlement determination is subject to appellate review on appeal from the judgment. Wilshire Ins. Co. v Tuff Boy Holding, Inc. (2001) 86 CA4th 627, 636, 103 CR2d 480 (distinguishing Main Fiber Prods. v Morgan & Franz Ins. Agency, supra).
