The fax-filing rules in Cal Rules of Ct 2.300-2.306, 2.304(b) apply to civil, probate, and family law proceedings in all trial courts. Cal Rules of Ct 2.300. (Fax filing in juvenile court proceedings is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 5.522.) Any pleading, motion, or other document in any of those proceedings may be fax filed, except a will, codicil, bond, or undertaking. Nor may the court issue by fax any document "intended to carry the original seal of the court." Cal Rules of Ct 2.300(b).

§18.13 a. Format of Fax-Filed Documents

The format of documents transmitted by fax must comply with Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. Cal Rules of Ct 2.302. On format of court papers, see chap 11. Each document filed by fax, whether through a fax-filing agency or filed directly, must include the phrase "By fax" immediately below the title. Cal Rules of Ct 2.303(f), 2.304(c). If a document to be filed by a fax-filing agency does not include this phrase, the fax-filing agency must add it before it files the documents with the court. Cal Rules of Ct 2.303(f).

An exhibit that is larger than 8½ by 11 inches must be reduced to that size before it is transmitted by fax. The court may require a party to produce and file the original of an exhibit filed by fax. Cal Rules of Ct 2.302.

§18.14 b. Filing Through Fax-Filing Agency

A party may fax a document to a "fax-filing agency" for filing with any trial court. The filing agency must prepare the document to be filed so that it conforms with rules in Div 2, Ch 1 of Title 2 of the Cal Rules of Ct, transport the document to the court, file it, and pay any filing fee. Cal Rules of Ct 2.303(b)(1)-(3). By filing a document with the court, the agency certifies that it has complied with the applicable rules and that the document it files is the full and unaltered document it received. Cal Rules of Ct 2.303(e).

The party filing the document must have made "appropriate arrangements" for paying the filing fee and any service charges, in advance, with the filing agency. If prior arrangements have not been made, the agency may discard any documents it receives by fax, without notice to the sending party. Cal Rules of Ct 2.303(c).

The filing agency must keep all documents it receives confidential. Cal Rules of Ct 2.303(d). The agency acts as the agent of the filing party and not as an agent of the court (Cal Rules of Ct 2.303(a)), so presumably the responsibility for any errors lies with the filing party.

§18.15 c. Direct Fax Filing

Direct fax filing is permitted in courts that have adopted local rules providing for such filing. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 18.0. The local rules must provide the court's fax number. Cal Rules of Ct 2.304(a). The Judicial Council facsimile filing cover sheet must accompany documents filed by direct fax filing. See §18.24. The cover sheet is not filed or served in the case. Cal Rules of Ct 2.304(b).

The filing party must make a fax transmission record of each filing by fax. Then, if there are errors in transmission or the fax filing is not processed by court personnel when it is received, the party may move the court for an order filing the document nunc pro tunc. Cal Rules of Ct 2.304(d). The motion must be accompanied by the transmission record and a proof of transmission in the language set forth in Rule 2.304(d).

In direct fax filing, the filing fees may be paid by credit card. The Judicial Council fax cover sheet contains credit card information and a cardholder's signature line. Cal Rules of Ct 2.304(e)(1). If the credit card company rejects the charge, the court must proceed in the same manner as for a returned check used to pay the filing fee. On filing fees, see chap 15. Courts may also provide by local rule for attorney accounts to be used to pay for direct fax filings, and may require an advance deposit to open such an account. Cal Rules of Ct 2.304(f).

There is no rule of court indicating when a fax-filed document is considered filed for statute of limitations purposes. The rules governing service by fax, however, provide that service completed after 5 p.m. is considered to have occurred on the next court day. Cal Rules of Ct 2.306(g). See §18.11. See also Rosenberg v Superior Court (1994) 25 CA4th 897, 900, 30 CR2d 803 (complaint faxed to court after it had closed on day before statute of limitations expired deemed filed the following day).

Parties filing by direct fax filing must pay the court one dollar per page, in addition to any other fees. Cal Rules of Ct 2.304.

§18.16 3. Demand for Originals After Fax Service or Filing

At any time after filing or service of a signed fax document, any other party may serve a demand for production of the original. The demand must be served on all parties but is not filed with the court. Cal Rules of Ct 2.305(b). When such a demand has been served, the parties must arrange a meeting to examine the signed original. Cal Rules of Ct 2.305(b)-(c).

§18.17 E. Service by Telegraph

Under CCP §1017, a summons, writ, or order in a civil action, and all other papers requiring service, may be transmitted by telegraph for service. The procedures are set out in the statute.

V. PROOF OF SERVICE

§18.18 A. Service by Mail

When a notice or other paper is served on a party or his or her attorney by mail under CCP §1012 (see §§18.5-18.6), proof of service may be made:

(1) By nonparty adult: The process server (frequently the attorney's secretary) prepares and files with the original papers an affidavit (or declaration under penalty of perjury; CCP §2015.5) stating the exact title of the document served, the server's name and residence or business address located in the county where the mailing occurs, that he or she is at least age 18 and not a party to the action, the date and place of mailing, the name and address of the person served as shown on the envelope, and that the envelope was sealed and deposited in the mail with postage fully prepaid. CCP §1013a(1). For a sample form, see §18.21.

NOTE: Alternatively, the affidavit or declaration may vary these items by replacing the statements regarding the mailing with statements that the server is readily familiar with the business's practice for collection and processing of correspondence for mailing, that the correspondence would be deposited with the postal service that same day in the ordinary course of business, the date and place of business the correspondence was placed for deposit in the mail, and that the envelope was sealed and placed for collection and mailing on that date following ordinary business practices. For a sample form, see §18.22. It is important to note that, on a motion of the party served, such service will be presumed invalid if the postal cancellation date or postage meter date on the envelope is more than one day after the date of deposit for mailing contained in the affidavit or declaration.

(2) By attorney: When a party's attorney has served the papers by mail, the attorney prepares and files with the original papers a certificate showing his or her name and business address and that he or she is an active member of the State Bar and not a party to the action. The certificate must also show the exact title of the document served, the date and place of deposit, the name and address of the person served as shown on the envelope, and that the envelope was sealed and deposited in the mail with postage fully prepaid. CCP §1013a(2). For a sample form, see §18.23.

§18.19 B. Service by Express Mail, Overnight Delivery, or Facsimile Transmission

The methods of proof of service by mail (described in §18.18) can be adapted to accomplish proof of service by the alternative means now listed in CCP §1013.

On filing and serving papers by facsimile transmission, see Cal Rules of Ct 2.300-2.306. See §§18.11-18.16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.20 C. Personal or Substituted Service

When a notice or other paper is served on a party or his or her attorney by personal or substituted service under CCP §1011 (see §§18.8-18.10), proof of service must accompany the filing of the paper in court. See Cal Rules of Ct 1.21(c). The affidavit or declaration of service must be in a manner permitted by law and must show service on the attorney for each adverse party who is represented by separate counsel and on each party appearing in person. Cal Rules of Ct 1.21(a), (c).

Papers that are personally served on an attorney or his or her agent are often accompanied by an acknowledgment of receipt, which should be signed by the attorney or agent and then filed with the original papers. If they are not, the person making service should prepare an affidavit or declaration of service for filing with the original papers. See chap 12 for typical wording of proof of service by personal delivery.

IV. CHECKLIST: PROCEDURE FOR CHALLENGING JURISDICTION §19.30

© The Regents of the University of California

I. INTRODUCTION

§19.1 A. Scope of Chapter

For a court to have authority to render a valid judgment, it must have jurisdiction over the subject matter and over the parties. This chapter covers challenges to jurisdiction over the person, which consists of two elements:

- Personal jurisdiction based on minimum contacts; and
- Proper service.

A defendant wishing to challenge the court's jurisdiction over the person of a defendant may do one of the following:

- File a motion under CCP §418.10 to quash service of summons before filing any other pleading; or
- After a default judgment has been entered, attack the default judgment for lack of personal jurisdiction.

This chapter covers the first alternative in civil actions, including unlawful detainer. A defendant may also challenge jurisdiction over the person after a default judgment has been entered. See §§19.3-19.5. It discusses the motion to quash (see §§19.6-19.29) and contains a checklist on the procedures for challenging jurisdiction (see §19.30). On relief from default, see chap 38.

For discussion of subject matter jurisdiction, see chaps 6-7; for discussion of jurisdiction over the person, see chap 6.

§19.2 B. Governing Law

II. WHEN TO CHALLENGE JURISDICTION OVER THE PERSON

§19.3 A. Motion to Quash Preferable

If a defendant has the opportunity to challenge jurisdictional defects early, it is much better to make a motion to quash than to wait until after a judgment has been entered. A defendant that loses the jurisdictional arguments raised in a direct or collateral attack on the judgment has long since waived the right to litigate the case. In contrast, a defendant that loses a motion to quash may still proceed to defend the case on its merits. See CCP §418.10.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. If Default Judgment Already Entered

§19.4 1. Direct Attack

A default judgment may be entered if a defendant fails to challenge jurisdiction and fails to appear in the action. See chap 38. When a default judgment has been entered, a defendant may make a direct attack on the judgment on the basis of lack of personal jurisdiction by:

- Motion to vacate judgment under CCP §473 (mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect).
- Motion or separate action requesting court to use its inherent equity powers to set aside judgment (see Munoz v Lopez (1969) 275 CA2d 178, 79 CR 563; 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Attack on Judgment in Trial Court §§208-209, 215-242 (5th ed 2008)).
- Motion made under CCP §473.5(a) (no actual notice in time to defend action before default entered).
- Appeal (see Columbia Screw Co. v Warner Lock Co. (1903) 138 C 445, 71 P 498; 9 Witkin, Procedure, Appeal §93).

See also chap 38 (default).

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.5 2. Collateral Attack

A court's jurisdiction is also subject to collateral attack after judgment by, e.g., filing a special appearance and motion to vacate judgment in an opposing party's action to enforce the default judgment. See, e.g., Marriage of Merideth (1982) 129 CA3d 356, 180 CR 909; see chap 38 (default).

NOTE: A presumption that the court acted within its jurisdiction becomes operative when a judicial act is under collateral attack. Evid C §666. Unless the jurisdictional defect appears on the face of the California judgment, the presumption of jurisdiction is conclusive with certain narrow exceptions. See 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Attack on Judgment in Trial Court §§11-13 (5th ed 2008).

A defendant in an action to enforce a foreign default judgment, however, has the right to show the judgment to be in excess of jurisdiction if that issue was not litigated in the foreign state. Indiana Ins. Co. v Pettigrew (1981) 115 CA3d 862, 171 CR 770. The invalidity of the foreign judgment may be proved by extrinsic evidence. See 8 Witkin, Procedure, Attack Judgment §14.

III. MOTION TO QUASH

§19.6 A. When Appropriate

Before judgment, the court's assertion of jurisdiction over a defendant may be challenged by a motion to quash service of summons under CCP §418.10. Under the statute, a party who files a motion to quash is not considered to have made a general appearance, and no default may be entered before expiration of the time to plead. CCP §418.10(d). On what constitutes a general appearance, see chap 6.

A defendant or cross-defendant may move under CCP §418.10 (to quash for lack of personal jurisdiction, to stay or dismiss on ground of inconvenient forum, or to dismiss for delay in prosecution) and simultaneously answer, demur, or move to strike the complaint or cross-complaint. CCP §418.10(e). Despite CCP §1014, no act by a party who files a motion under CCP §418.10, including filing an answer, demurrer, or motion to strike, constitutes an appearance, unless the court denies the motion made under §418.10. If the court does so deny the motion, the defendant or cross-defendant is not deemed to have generally appeared until entry of the order denying the motion. CCP §418.10(e)(1).

If the motion under §418.10 is denied and the defendant or cross-defendant petitions for a writ of mandate under §418.10(c), the defendant or cross-defendant is not deemed to have generally appeared until the proceedings on the writ petition have concluded. CCP §418.10(e)(2).

Failure to file a motion under §418.10 at the time of filing a demurrer or motion to strike constitutes a waiver of the issues of lack of personal jurisdiction, inadequacy of process, inadequacy of service of process, inconvenient forum, and delay in prosecution. CCP §418.10(e)(3).

It was the legislature's intent in enacting §418.10(e) to conform California practice in challenging personal jurisdiction to the practice under Fed R Civ P 12(b). Stats 2002, ch 69, §2. Under existing law, if, instead of filing a motion to quash, a challenging defendant filed an answer in which lack of jurisdiction over the person was asserted as an affirmative defense or in which disclaimers of jurisdiction were stated, the court would consider that the defendant had made a general appearance and had waived objections to jurisdiction. Kriebel v City Council (1980) 112 CA3d 693, 169 CR 342; Neihaus v Superior Court (1977) 69 CA3d 340, 137 CR 905.

Counsel should note, however, that a request for attorney fees made in connection with a motion to dismiss for inconvenient forum that is filed together with a motion to quash does not constitute a general appearance. Berard Constr. Co. v Municipal Court (1975) 49 CA3d 710, 122 CR 825.

When a party challenges a California court's assertion of jurisdiction over the person in a particular case, that court has jurisdiction to determine the issue of jurisdiction. See Abelleira v District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 C2d 280, 109 P2d 942; Jones v Brown (1970) 13 CA3d 513, 520, 89 CR 651. The court's special jurisdiction to determine all jurisdictional issues means that even if the court, e.g., upholds jurisdiction based on a determination that there are minimum contacts (see discussion in chap 6), it may subsequently find a lack of jurisdiction over the person on a motion to quash based on invalid service of process. Ziller Electronics Lab GmbH v Superior Court (1988) 206 CA3d 1222, 254 CR 410. For further discussion of Ziller, see §19.28.

B. Making the Motion

§19.7 1. Grounds

The grounds for a motion to quash under CCP §418.10 may be that the court lacks jurisdiction over defendant for one or more of the following reasons:

- A defendant has insufficient "minimum contacts" with California (see §19.8);
- There is no basis for finding that the court has continuing jurisdiction over a defendant (see §19.8);
- The manner in which a defendant was served with a summons was defective (see §19.9);
- Service of an unlawful detainer action was improper (see §19.10).

On dissolved corporations, see §19.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.8 a. No Minimum Contacts or Continuing Jurisdiction

Most of the reported decisions in the area of minimal contacts for personal jurisdiction arise in one of two possible contexts:

- Whether a defendant has sufficient "minimal contacts" in California for this state to exercise personal jurisdiction in the first place; and
- Whether a court continues to maintain jurisdiction over a party for purposes of modification of a proper prior order.

The former often involves a foreign manufacturer of an item that is the alleged cause of damage to plaintiff in California. The latter often involves a request by a spouse to modify a prior support decree or to partition a pension in a dissolution action against the former spouse now living in another state.

For a full discussion of personal jurisdiction, see chap 6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.9 b. Ineffective Service of Process

Failure to properly effect service of summons is really a failure of the plaintiff to obtain jurisdiction over the defendant (see Societe Civile Succession Richard Guino v Redstar Corp. (2004) 123 CA4th 1145, 20 CR3d 603; Harrington v Superior Court (1924) 194 C 185, 189, 228 P 15; Chaplin v Superior Court (1927) 81 CA 367, 371, 253 P 954), and is, therefore, properly the basis of a CCP §418.10 motion to quash. For discussion of the effect of failure to make proper service, see chap 17. A motion to quash or a motion to dismiss for failure to properly serve the summons within three years after filing the complaint (under CCP §583.210) is also appropriate. Mannesmann DeMag, Ltd. v Superior Court (1985) 172 CA3d 1118, 218 CR 632.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.10 c. Failure to State Cause of Action for Unlawful Detainer

A motion to quash service is the proper procedure for challenging jurisdiction over the person in an unlawful detainer action. Parsons v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th Supp 1, 5, 58 CR3d 48; Smith v Municipal Court (1988) 202 CA3d 685, 688, 245 CR 300; Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court (1983) 146 CA3d 1033, 194 CR 685. It is the only method by which a defendant can test whether a complaint states a cause of action for unlawful detainer and thereby supports a five-day summons. Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court, supra. Although a demurrer is the normal procedure for challenging the sufficiency of a complaint, it constitutes a general appearance and waives the jurisdictional defect in the summons. Smith v Municipal Court, supra; Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court, supra.

It is not entirely clear whether a motion to quash will be granted as to the entire unlawful detainer action if only some of the relief requested is not available under the unlawful detainer proceeding. In Saberi v Bakhtiari (1985) 169 CA3d 509, 516, 215 CR 359, the court held that the improper inclusion of a request for predetermination rent in an unlawful detainer complaint did not render the entire complaint invalid and subject to a motion to quash and that the improper allegations should be challenged by a motion to strike. By extension, the Saberi holding indicates that a motion to quash should be granted only if none of the relief requested in the complaint is available under the unlawful detainer proceeding. But see Castle Park No. 5 v Katherine (1979) 91 CA3d Supp 6, 8 n1, 154 CR 498 (motion to quash granted; holding implies that, when improper relief requested, entire action is subject to motion to quash).

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.11 d. Dissolved Corporation

Formerly, a motion to quash service of summons might have been useful when a plaintiff attempted to sue a dissolved corporation on a cause of action that arose after the corporate dissolution. The amendment of Corp C §2011(a) (operative Jan. 1, 1992), however, permits lawsuits against dissolved corporations to the extent of undistributed assets, such as liability insurance assets, and against shareholders of a dissolved corporation to the extent of assets received. The amendment overturns the result reached in Pacific Scene, Inc. v Penasquitos, Inc. (1988) 46 C3d 407, 250 CR 651, and incorporates suggestions made in Penasquitos, Inc. v Superior Court (1991) 53 C3d 1180, 283 CR 135.

2. Time for Filing

§19.12 a. Actions Other Than Unlawful Detainer

A defendant must serve and file a notice of motion to quash service of summons on the ground of lack of jurisdiction over the person on or before the last day within which to plead or within any further time that the court for good cause may allow. CCP §418.10(a). The notice of motion may be coupled with a notice of motion to stay or dismiss the action on the ground of inconvenient forum under CCP §418.10(a)(2) (see chap 21) or with a motion to set aside a default or default judgment under CCP §§473-473.5 (CCP §418.10(d)). The notice must designate as the time for making the motion a date at least 10 but no more than 30 days after filing. CCP §418.10(b). For time to file motion to quash when a case is remanded from federal court for improper removal, see chap 22.

For sample forms of a notice of motion, supporting memorandum, and declaration that may be adapted for use in the context of a motion to quash, and a full discussion of drafting court papers, see chaps 11-12.

§19.13 b. Unlawful Detainer Actions

In forcible entry and unlawful detainer cases, the time for making the motion must be at least three but no more than seven days after filing the notice. CCP §1167.4(a).

For sample forms of a notice of motion, supporting memorandum, and declaration that may be adapted for use in the context of a motion to quash, and a full discussion of drafting court papers, see chaps 11-12.

§19.14 3. Effect of Filing

As noted above, filing a motion to quash service of summons is a special appearance and a default judgment cannot be entered before the expiration of the time to plead. CCP §418.10(d). A motion to quash may be combined with a motion to stay or dismiss for inconvenient forum (CCP §418.10(d)); with a motion attacking a judgment on CCP §473 grounds (CCP §418.10(a)(2)); with a motion under CCP §473.5 to set aside a default judgment (CCP §418.10(d)); or with an answer, demurrer, or motion to strike the complaint or cross-complaint (CCP §418.10(e)).

Despite CCP §1014, no act by a party who files a motion under CCP §418.10, including filing an answer, demurrer, or motion to strike, constitutes an appearance, unless the court denies the motion made under §418.10. If the court denies the motion under §418.10, the defendant or cross-defendant is not deemed to have generally appeared until entry of the order denying the motion. CCP §418.10(e)(1). A general appearance also does not result from filing a peremptory challenge under CCP §170.6 against the judge hearing the motion to quash. School Dist. v Superior Court (1997) 58 CA4th 1126, 68 CR2d 612; Loftin v Superior Court (1971) 19 CA3d 577, 97 CR 215.

Other effects of filing a motion to quash service of summons are discussed in §§19.15-19.16.

§19.15 a. Court's Jurisdiction to Rule on Other Matters

In some instances, the issue may arise as to whether a court has jurisdiction to rule on any other matter before resolving a motion to quash for lack of jurisdiction over the person. In a family law case, the court in Marriage of Stich (1985) 169 CA3d 64, 214 CR 919, held that a trial court does have the power to award temporary support and attorney fees in a divorce matter, pending resolution of a motion to quash made on the basis of the validity of a foreign divorce decree. In Marriage of Stich, the court expressly found that the party opposing the motion had a fair or reasonable probability of being successful in establishing the invalidity of a Mexican divorce decree.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.16 b. Extends Time to Plead

Service and filing of the notice of motion automatically extends the defendant's time to plead until 15 days after the service of a written notice of entry of an order denying the motion, unless the court for good cause extends the time for an additional period not exceeding 20 days. CCP §418.10(b).

Although there is no express statutory provision or case law on the issue of whether CCP §1013 extends the time to plead when the written notice of entry of the order is served by mail, amendments to §1013 that provide for its application "in the absence of a specific exception provided for by this section, other statute or rule of court" make it clear that the time to plead is extended by CCP §1013 when the written notice of entry of the order is served by mail.

In forcible entry and unlawful detainer cases, the time to plead is extended until five days after service of the written notice of entry of an order denying the motion unless the court for good cause extends the time for an additional period not exceeding 15 days. CCP §1167.4(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.17 4. Date for Hearing; Notice

A hearing on a motion to quash must be held within 30 days after the motion is filed. CCP §418.10(b). Unlawful detainer cases must be heard within three to seven days after the motion is filed. CCP §1167.4.

The provisions of CCP §1005(b) expressly govern §418.10(b) motions to quash. Under §1005(b), when written notice of a motion is required, it must be given at least 16 court days before the hearing date, and, if notice is served by mail, the 16-day period is increased by 5 calendar days if notice is mailed within California to a California address. The time is increased even more if mailed to an address outside California or outside the United States. CCP §1005(b). The court, however, may prescribe a shorter time. CCP §1005(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.18 C. Opposing the Motion

The opposing party must file all opposition papers, which should include a supporting memorandum and declarations, at least 9 court days before the date set for the hearing, unless otherwise ordered. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). The opposition papers must be served by personal delivery, fax, express mail, or other method reasonably calculated to ensure delivery by the close of the next business day after the papers are filed. CCP §1005(c).

Because the opposing party has the burden of proof on a motion to quash for lack of jurisdiction over the person (see §19.20), it is of crucial importance that detailed, carefully drafted declarations be filed in support of the opposition to the motion.

Additionally, when there are uncooperative witnesses or parties who have information crucial to the jurisdictional issues, it may be important to conduct discovery in order to obtain their testimony to include in the papers presented to the court on the motion. See discussion in §19.19. If the opposing party needs more time for discovery in order to obtain evidence that can be presented in opposition to the motion, an order continuing the hearing and an order shortening time for discovery should be sought.

For a general discussion of opposition to a motion, together with sample forms that may be adapted for use in the context of a motion to quash, see chap 12.

§19.19 D. Discovery

A plaintiff is entitled to conduct discovery on the jurisdictional issues when a motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction is filed. 1880 Corp. v Superior Court (1962) 57 C2d 840, 22 CR 209; Mihlon v Superior Court (1985) 169 CA3d 703, 215 CR 442. It appears that the defendant also may conduct discovery in connection with a motion to quash without its being considered a general appearance. Islamic Republic of Iran v Pahlavi (1984) 160 CA3d 620, 628, 206 CR 752.

E. The Hearing

§19.20 1. Burden and Standard of Proof

When a defendant moves to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish the facts of jurisdiction by a preponderance of the evidence. Kroopf v Guffey (1986) 183 CA3d 1351, 228 CR 807; Thomas J. Palmer, Inc. v Turkiye Is Bankasi, A.S. (1980) 105 CA3d 135, 146, 164 CR 181. This is why the evidence in opposition to the motion to quash should be as factually strong as the opponent can make it.

When a defendant challenges jurisdiction over the person on more than one ground, e.g., lack of personal jurisdiction and ineffective service, the plaintiff must establish that a basis for jurisdiction exists on all grounds that have been challenged. See Ziller Electronics Lab GmbH v Superior Court (1988) 206 CA3d 1222, 1229, 254 CR 410.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.21 2. Proving Jurisdiction in Tort Cases

Generally, a motion to quash is not the proper proceeding in which to test the legal or factual merits of a complaint. J.M. Sahlein Music Co. v Nippon Gakki Co. (1987) 197 CA3d 539, 545, 243 CR 4; Regents of Univ. of N.M. v Superior Court (1975) 52 CA3d 964, 970 n7, 125 CR 413. However, when personal jurisdiction depends on the defendant's having caused tortious effects in the forum state and the defendant presents evidence that its conduct did not cause the tortious effects, the plaintiff does have the burden of making a prima facie showing that there is substantive merit to the case. J.M. Sahlein Music Co. v Nippon Gakki Co., supra; Regents of Univ. of N.M. v Superior Court, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.22 3. Evidence

Although CCP §418.10 does not expressly provide that declarations are to be used in a motion to quash, the case law indicates that declarations are normally used as evidence in such a motion, along with the complaint. See Evangelize China Fellowship, Inc. v Evangelize China Fellowship (1983) 146 CA3d 440, 194 CR 240.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.23 a. The Complaint

A verified complaint may be treated as a declaration for the purpose of sustaining the plaintiff's burden of proof in opposing a motion to quash. Evangelize China Fellowship, Inc. v Evangelize China Fellowship (1983) 146 CA3d 440, 194 CR 240; Thomas J. Palmer, Inc. v Turkiye Is Bankasi, A.S. (1980) 105 CA3d 135, 148, 164 CR 181. However, a complaint that states only ultimate facts or conclusions of law is not considered competent evidence. Thomas J. Palmer, Inc. v Turkiye Is Bankasi A.S., supra. Similarly, allegations in a verified complaint made on information and belief will not sustain the plaintiff's burden of proof. Shearer v Superior Court (1977) 70 CA3d 424, 138 CR 824.

Although an unverified complaint has no evidentiary value and is not competent evidence (Mihlon v Superior Court (1985) 169 CA3d 703, 215 CR 442; Inselberg v Inselberg (1976) 56 CA3d 484, 128 CR 578), it may be significant as a material fact defining the cause of action (Mihlon v Superior Court, supra).

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.24 b. Declarations

Declarations, in order to be competent evidence in a motion to quash proceeding, must be verified. Inselberg v Inselberg (1976) 56 CA3d 484, 128 CR 578. Declarations containing only ambiguous, vague, or conclusory statements (Archibald v Cinerama Hotels (1976) 15 C3d 853, 865, 126 CR 811) or hearsay, opinion, or supposition (Thiebaut v Blue Cross of Indiana (1986) 178 CA3d 1157, 224 CR 277; Inselberg v Inselberg, supra) are not competent evidence. But see Kroopf v Guffey (1986) 183 CA3d 1351, 1358, 228 CR 807 (dictum that motion to quash may be made and determined on hearsay affidavits).

When both sides submit verified declarations, a court may find that the evidence on one side is not credible in view of the preponderance of the evidence submitted by the opposition. Kroopf v Guffey, supra. When competent evidence is presented by both sides, the court determines whether the plaintiff has carried the burden of establishing the facts of jurisdiction. See §19.20 for discussion of burden of proof.

§19.25 F. Sanctions for Bringing Motion to Quash

Sanctions may be awarded against any party or attorney under CCP §128.7(b) for bringing motions to quash that are frivolous or are filed "primarily for an improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation." See §1.6 for effective dates. See Luke v Baldwin United Corp. (1985) 167 CA3d 664, 213 CR 654. However, sanctions will not usually be awarded except in the clearest cases. See Luke v Baldwin United Corp., supra, in which the court set aside an order for sanctions against a law firm for bringing a motion to quash, holding that the attorneys' conduct was not egregious, there was no improper motive, the motion was not utterly without merit, and the attorney-client privilege prevented the attorneys from exonerating themselves. Nonetheless, the prudent attorney always needs to examine the propriety of the motion as new facts are discovered.

G. Response to Order After Hearing

§19.26 1. If Motion Denied

Although an order granting a motion to quash is appealable (CCP §904.1(a)(3)), an order denying it is not. See Kneeland v Ethicon Suture Labs. (1952) 113 CA2d 335, 248 P2d 447. If the court denies the motion to quash, the challenging party may:

- Petition for a writ of mandate (CCP §418.10(c));
- Answer or otherwise plead and litigate the case on the merits; or
- Move for reconsideration.

When a court's decision in favor of asserting personal jurisdiction has become final, either by appellate review or by failure to seek review, the decision is res judicata and no longer open to attack in an action subsequently brought on the judgment. American Sur. Co. v Baldwin (1932) 287 US 156, 77 L Ed 231, 53 S Ct 98; Baldwin v Iowa State Traveling Men's Ass'n (1931) 283 US 522, 75 L Ed 1244, 51 S Ct 517. If, however, the second action is not interchangeable or coextensive with the first, even if both actions involve the same primary right, the court may deny a motion to quash based on lack of jurisdiction over the person in the second action even if the court grants the defendant's motion to quash in the first action. Silverman v Superior Court (1988) 203 CA3d 145, 249 CR 724.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.27 a. Petition for Writ of Mandate

If the motion to quash is denied, the losing party may serve on the adverse party and file with the trial court, within 10 days after service of notice of entry of an order that the motion has been denied or within any further time not exceeding 20 days that the court for good cause allows, a notice that a petition for writ of mandate has been filed in an appropriate reviewing court. CCP §418.10(c). The writ filed with the reviewing court is intended to convince the reviewing court to order the trial court to enter an order quashing the service of summons.

The time to file a petition for a writ under §418.10(c) may be extended by the provisions of CCP §1013 regarding mailing (Shearer v Superior Court (1977) 70 CA3d 424, 138 CR 824), on the basis of CCP §473 (McIntire v Superior Court (1975) 52 CA3d 717, 719 n4, 125 CR 379; Quattrone v Superior Court (1975) 44 CA3d 296, 118 CR 548), or based on the circumstances of the case or equitable principles (Demarest v Superior Court (1980) 103 CA3d 791, 796, 165 CR 641; Cornell Univ. Med. College v Superior Court (1974) 38 CA3d 311, 113 CR 291). For further discussion, see California Civil Writ Practice §§16.54-16.57 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008).

Service and filing of the notice of a petition for writ of mandate extends the time to plead until 10 days after a service of notice of final judgment in the mandate proceeding, but the trial court for good cause may extend the time for an additional period not exceeding 20 days. CCP §418.10(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.28 b. Other Responses

A losing party whose motion to quash has been denied and who does not file a petition for writ of mandate may file an answer or otherwise plead within 15 days after service of written notice of entry of the order denying the motion or within such additional time, not exceeding 20 days, that the court for good cause allows. CCP §418.10(b).

The losing party may also, in certain limited circumstances, success fully move the trial court for reconsideration. See Ziller Electronics Lab GmbH v Superior Court (1988) 206 CA3d 1222, 254 CR 410. In Ziller, the court first granted a motion to quash on the basis of defective service while finding that there were minimum contacts. On reservice, the defendant again moved to quash on the basis of lack of jurisdiction, asserting again the lack of minimum contacts. The trial court denied the motion on the basis of the prior order. The appellate court, however, while holding that the prior finding of minimum contacts was binding on the parties as an interim trial court ruling, went on to find that the trial court had abused its discretion by refusing to reconsider the minimum contacts issue. The Ziller court reiterated the rule that an interim ruling of a trial court only becomes final by entry of judgment.

Filing an answer or otherwise pleading after a motion to quash is denied waives the right to seek review of the order of denial. McCorkle v City of Los Angeles (1969) 70 C2d 252, 74 CR 389. But see Marriage of Hattis (1987) 196 CA3d 1162, 1165 n2, 242 CR 410 (appellate court treated appeal filed at conclusion of action as petition for writ of mandate because jurisdictional issue fully briefed and opposing party did not question propriety of appeal).

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.29 2. If Motion Granted

An order granting a motion to quash is an appealable order. CCP §904.1(a)(3). A prior dismissal on the ground of lack of jurisdiction over the person is res judicata in a subsequent action by the same parties if based on the same theory of recovery. MIB, Inc. v Superior Court (1980) 106 CA3d 228, 164 CR 828.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.29A H. Attorney Fees

The court has the inherent power to rule on a motion for attorney fees following a successful motion to quash. Shisler v Sanfer Sports Cars, Inc. (2008) 167 CA4th 1, 6, 83 CR3d 771. See also Profit Concepts Mgmt., Inc. v Griffith (2008) 162 CA4th 950, 955, 76 CR3d 396 (Oklahoma resident was prevailing party in dismissal due to lack of personal jurisdiction).

I. INTRODUCTION

This chapter primarily discusses motions for change of venue under CCP §§396b and 397. It discusses grounds for challenging venue and who may challenge venue (§§20.2-20.7), procedures for the moving party (see §§20.8-20.18), procedures for the responding party (§§20.19-20.21), hearing and determination (see §§20.22-20.25), transfer of action (see §§20.26-20.31), and review of orders (see §§20.32-20.35). It also provides a checklist of procedures for motion for change of venue (see §20.36) and forms (§§20.37-20.42).

For a discussion of venue, see chap 8. See chaps 11 (form and format of pleadings and court papers), and 12 (noticed motions) for general discussion of law and motion procedures applying to motions for change of venue. Coordination of cases is covered in chap 44. For discussion of motions to transfer for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, see chap 6.

§20.2 B. Governing Law

Under CCP §397, the court may, on motion, change the place of trial of a civil action when:

- The court designated in the complaint is not the proper court;
- The convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change;
- There is reason to believe that an impartial trial cannot be had in that court; or
- There is no judge of the county who is qualified to act in the case.

The statute also allows the court to change venue to the residence of the respondent in marital dissolution proceedings "when the ends of justice would be promoted by the change." CCP §397(e).

Other statutes provide additional grounds to change venue in specific situations. For example, the court may change venue to the county of residence of either party in any proceeding for dissolution, annulment, or legal separation under the Family Code when both parties have moved from the county in which judgment was rendered, if the ends of justice and convenience of the parties would be promoted by the change. CCP §397.5. Other grounds are provided by CCP §394, which authorizes change of venue to a neutral county in actions involving a city, county, or local agency (see §§8.72-8.76), and by Govt C §§955, 955.2, and 955.3 and CCP §401, which govern motions to change venue in actions involving the state or a state agency or officer (see §8.71).

II. CHALLENGING VENUE—DESCRIPTION AND USE

A. Grounds

§20.3 1. Wrong Court

If the complaint is filed in the wrong court, the court must transfer the action to any proper court requested in timely motion by the defendant. CCP §396b(a). Transfer is mandatory even if a subsequent motion based on convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would require a retransfer of the matter. To determine whether the action has been filed in the wrong court, see CCP §§392-404.8 and chap 8.

Venue that is properly based on the residence of a bona fide defendant remains proper even though the action is later dismissed as to that defendant. Remington Sewing Mach. Co. v Cole (1882) 62 C 311; Ferguson v Koerber (1924) 69 CA 47, 230 P 476. Thus, the plaintiff may find it possible to control venue by commencing the action in the county where a codefendant resides, and by dismissing that defendant from the action later.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/20 Motions to Change Venue/§20.4 2. Convenience of Witnesses

§20.4 2. Convenience of Witnesses

The court, in its discretion, may transfer an action to promote the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice. Generally, only convenience to nonparty witnesses is considered. Wrin v Ohlandt (1931) 213 C 158, 1 P2d 991. Ordinarily, the court may not base its decision on the convenience of:

- Parties or employees of parties (Wrin v Ohlandt, supra; Dillman v Superior Court (1962) 205 CA2d 769, 23 CR 498) unless the employee is a witness for an opposing party (J.C. Millett Co. v Latchford-Marble Glass Co. (1959) 167 CA2d 218, 334 P2d 72; Harden v Skinner & Hammond (1955) 130 CA2d 750, 279 P2d 978);
- An expert witness with no personal knowledge of the facts (Wrin v Ohlandt, supra; Rothschild v Superior Court (1963) 216 CA2d 778, 31 CR 248; Barnett v United Oil Co. (1935) 5 CA2d 175, 42 P2d 656); or
- Counsel for the parties (Lieppman v Lieber (1986) 180 CA3d 914, 225 CR 845).

However, in limited situations, the court may consider the convenience of a party, e.g., when transfer to another county would endanger the health of a party whose testimony is material. Lieberman v Superior Court (1987) 194 CA3d 396, 239 CR 450; Simonian v Simonian (1950) 97 CA2d 68, 217 P2d 157. The court also may consider the convenience of a former employee who was no longer employed by a party when the action was commenced. Wood v Silvers (1939) 35 CA2d 604, 96 P2d 366.

The transfer must promote not only the convenience of witnesses, but also the ends of justice. Peiser v Mettler (1958) 50 C2d 594, 328 P2d 953. Frequently, this showing can be made inferentially because the facts that establish convenience of the witnesses also relate to savings in expenses and witnesses' time. Pearson v Superior Court (1962) 199 CA2d 69, 18 CR 578.

NOTE: Code of Civil Procedure §397(c) gives the court the power to change the place of trial even if the plaintiff has designated a proper court or the defendant has caused venue to be transferred to a proper court.

The court has the power to change the place of trial if "there is reason to believe that an impartial trial cannot be had" in the court designated in the complaint. CCP §397(b). A party is entitled to a change of venue if local prejudice of such a widespread nature can be shown that the court could conclude that it would be impossible to have a fair trial. Cook v Pendergast (1882) 61 C 72. Frequently, it will be impossible to make an adequate showing until an unsuccessful attempt to select a jury has been made. See J.I. Case Threshing Co. v Copren Bros. (1917) 35 CA 70, 169 P 443.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.6 4. No Judge Qualified

The place of trial may be changed if there is no judge of the court qualified to act. CCP §397(d). As a practical matter this ground rarely is used. When no judge in the county is qualified to sit, the Chair of the Judicial Council may assign an outside judge to hear the matter. CCP §170.8.

§20.7 B. Who May Challenge

Any party to an action may move to change venue. However, the moving defendant must be either a named party to the litigation or served as a fictitiously named defendant; a person who voluntarily appears as a fictitiously named defendant may not move to change venue. Liera v Los Angeles Fin. Co. (1950) 99 CA2d 254, 221 P2d 737. For further discussion, see 3 Witkin, California Procedure, Actions §909 (5th ed 2008).

A defendant may obtain a change of venue on grounds of nonresidence without joining the other defendants in the motion when none of the defendants reside in the county where the action has been filed and venue is not proper on some other basis (Brown v Happy Valley Fruit Growers, Inc. (1929) 206 C 515, 274 P 977), even if the other defendants oppose the motion (Wood, Curtis & Co. v Herman Mining Co. (1903) 139 C 713, 73 P 588). See chap 8. The same rule applies to a motion made on the ground of local prejudice. People v Ocean Shore R.R. (1938) 24 CA2d 420, 75 P2d 560. See §20.5.

The plaintiff may not move to change venue on "wrong court" grounds, even if he or she could have properly designated a county other than the county where the defendant resides at the outset. See Cook v Pendergast (1882) 61 C 72. However, the plaintiff can achieve the same result by dismissing the complaint and filing a new complaint in a proper county if the defendant has not yet filed a motion to change venue under CCP §396b. CCP §581(h); Mansfield v Pickwick Stages, Inc. (1923) 191 C 129, 215 P 389.

Either the plaintiff or the defendant may obtain a change of venue on grounds of convenience of witnesses (Grewell v Walden (1863) 23 C 165; Carruthers v Crown Prods. Co. (1948) 89 CA2d 326, 200 P2d 819), as well as to secure an impartial trial (San Joaquin & Kings River Canal & Irrig. Co. v Stevinson (1919) 179 C 533, 178 P 292).

III. PROCEDURES FOR MOVING PARTY

A. Time to File Motion

§20.8 1. Wrong Court

A motion for change of venue on the ground that the case has been brought in the wrong court must be made at the time the defendant answers, demurs, or moves to strike "or, at his or her option, without answering, demurring, or moving to strike and within the time otherwise allowed to respond." CCP §396b. If the defendant does not file a timely motion in proper form, the right to change venue may be waived. The action will be tried where it was commenced (CCP §396b(a)), unless the defendant can show that he or she acted in good faith without any intent to waive the right to have the action tried in a proper court (Lyons v Brunswick-Balke Collender Co. (1942) 20 C2d 579, 127 P2d 924 (defendant filed motion to change venue along with an amended demurrer promptly after discovering that plaintiff had dismissed codefendant who had filed pending motion); see Van Gaalen v Superior Court (1978) 80 CA3d 371, 145 CR 509). The defendant must also exercise diligence in bringing the matter to hearing. Davison v Gentry (1934) 136 CA 423, 29 P2d 266. See §8.8 for a discussion of unenforceability of contractual agreements concerning venue.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should not answer or set a hearing on a demurrer before obtaining a ruling on the motion to change venue. If an answer is filed, the plaintiff may oppose the motion to transfer on grounds of convenience of the witnesses or "the ends of justice." CCP §396b(d). It is unsettled whether, in order to retain the action the plaintiff must prove that both the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice will be promoted or whether only one or the other suffices. Compare Braunstein v Superior Court (1964) 225 CA2d 691, 37 CR 666 (showing either is sufficient under CCP §396b(d) unlike CCP §397(c)) with Maxwell v Murray (1961) 190 CA2d 440, 11 CR 916 (both must be shown under CCP §396b). Thus, it is possible that the plaintiff might be able to defeat the defendant's right to transfer on wrong court grounds under CCP §396b(d) when a motion to retransfer under CCP §397(c) might not be successful. Setting the demurrer for hearing at the same time as the venue motion may result in waste of the court's time, particularly if that court requires the motions to be set in different departments.

© The Regents of the University of California

A motion for change of venue on convenience of witness grounds must be made within a reasonable time after the defendant has filed an answer. DeLong v DeLong (1954) 127 CA2d 373, 273 P2d 921; Cook v Pendergast (1882) 61 C 72; Pascoe v Baker (1910) 158 C 232, 110 P 815. Until an answer has been filed, the court cannot determine what matters are at issue and whether evidence offered by the proposed witnesses will be material. Buran Equip. Co. v Superior Court (1987) 190 CA3d 1662, 236 CR 171; Johnson v Superior Court (1965) 232 CA2d 212, 42 CR 645.

Whether the time is reasonable depends on the length of the delay and the prejudice caused by the delay. The trial court's exercise of discretion in determining the issue rarely will be disturbed. Compare, e.g., Barclay v Supreme Lodge (1917) 34 CA 426, 167 P 701 (motion granted although made over one year after demurrer overruled), with Willingham v Pecora (1941) 44 CA2d 289, 112 P2d 328 (denial of motion held proper when made four months after case set for trial and granting of motion would have resulted in five months' delay).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.10 3. Impartial Trial

The court may not entertain a motion for change of venue under CCP §397(b) (impartial trial cannot be had) before the issues are defined by the filing of an answer. Cook v Pendergast (1882) 61 C 72. When appropriate, the court may delay ruling on the motion until the trial date (People v Spring Valley Co. (1952) 109 CA2d 656, 241 P2d 1069) or until an effort has been made to select an impartial jury (J.I. Case Threshing Co. v Copren Bros. (1917) 35 CA 70, 169 P 443). Although it is not necessary that efforts to impanel a jury first be exhausted if other bases for determination exist, it is frequently impossible to make an adequate showing until an unsuccessful attempt to select a jury has been made. People v Ocean Shore R.R. (1938) 24 CA2d 420, 75 P2d 560.

§20.11 B. Required Moving Papers

In general, unless the parties stipulate to a transfer, venue may be changed only on the filing of a motion. CCP §397; General Motors Acceptance Corp. v Codiga (1923) 62 CA 117, 216 P 383. The motion must be made by filing a notice of motion, supporting memorandum, declarations containing the appropriate factual showing, and proof of service of a copy of the papers on the adverse party. CCP §§396b(a), 1010-1020; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112-3.1113; Thompson v Superior Court (1972) 26 CA3d 300, 103 CR 94. For a discussion of general motion procedure, see chap 12.

NOTE: When change of venue is sought for any reason other than that the court in which the action was filed lacks venue (see CCP §397(b)-(e)), the moving party is required to pay the costs and fees of transferring the case (including fees for filing papers in the transferee court) at the time the notice of motion is filed. CCP §399(a).

In an unlawful detainer action or an action involving an installment or automotive sales contract or a consumer obligation, the defendant does not need to file a noticed motion for change of venue if the case has been brought in the wrong court. See CCP §396a(b). In these actions, the plaintiff must show in a verified complaint, or an affidavit filed with the complaint, that the action is filed in the proper court. If it appears that the action was filed in the wrong court, transfer is mandatory unless the defendant in writing or in open court consents to retention of the case in the court in which it was filed. CCP §396a(b).

§20.12 1. Notice of Motion

The notice of motion for change of venue must follow the format prescribed for notices of motion generally. CCP §1010. See chap 12. It should contain a statement of when the motion will be made, the statutory grounds on which it will be made, the court to which transfer is sought, and the papers on which it is based. The statement of the grounds should follow the language of the statute. See, e.g., Willingham v Pecora (1941) 44 CA2d 289, 112 P2d 328 (notice that omitted "and the ends of justice" defective). Although the court may refuse to consider grounds not specified in the notice (McDonald v California Timber Co. (1907) 151 C 159, 90 P 548), the defect may be cured if the notice incorporates supporting declarations that indicate sufficiently the ground relied on (Tarman v Sherwin (1961) 189 CA2d 49, 10 CR 787; Modlin v Walter's Fur Shop (1948) 83 CA2d 384, 188 P2d 805). Therefore, the notice should always incorporate supporting papers by reference. The court also may permit the notice to be amended to cure any defects. Joe Lowe Corp. v Rasmusson (1942) 53 CA2d 490, 127 P2d 1002.

If the notice does not designate the court to which transfer is sought, or a stipulation of the parties, the court will designate the transferee court. CCP §398. Counsel should make sure that the court selected is a proper court for transfer under the grounds stated in the notice. Sausen v Anderton (1954) 129 CA2d 324, 276 P2d 814 (court denied motion in rescission action when defendants sought change to place of business instead of residence). For a form of notice, see §20.37.

PRACTICE TIP: If there are defects in the notice of motion or if no notice was given, the opposing party's appearance should be limited to objecting to the hearing on the motion. Lack of notice or defects in the notice of motion are waived if the opposing party appears and argues the merits of the motion. Spangenberg v Spangenberg (1932) 123 CA 387, 11 P2d 408.

§20.13 2. Supporting Declarations

Declarations in support of a motion for change of venue are not required by statute; however, the moving party has the burden of presenting evidence to establish grounds for the transfer and ordinarily does so by submitting supporting declarations and affidavits. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(a). The moving party may also rely on a verified complaint uncontroverted by opposing declarations. Mission Imports, Inc. v Superior Court (1982) 31 C3d 921, 184 CR 296. Although the court has the discretion to permit oral testimony for good cause (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(a)), in practice many courts (including Los Angeles and Alameda County Superior Courts) usually do not permit oral testimony on law and motion matters. See, e.g., People v Tucker (1897) 117 C 229, 49 P 134; Haldane v Haldane (1962) 210 CA2d 587, 26 CR 670. For a discussion of the procedure to obtain permission to present oral testimony, see §12.103.

NOTE: If a party is seeking reasonable expenses and attorney fees because the motion or the selection of venue was not made in good faith, the attorney should prepare a declaration describing the efforts made to obtain a stipulation and a detailed description of the expenses and attorney fees sought. For a sample declaration, see §20.40.

A motion for change of venue on wrong court grounds to the defendant's residence should be accompanied by a declaration showing that, at the time the action was commenced, the defendant was a resident of the county to which transfer is sought. It is not necessary to allege and prove the converse, i.e., that the defendant was not a resident of the county where the action was filed. Stone v Everts (1928) 203 C 197, 263 P 236.

WARNING: Counsel should make sure that the declaration establishes the defendant's county of residence at the time the action was commenced. Failure to do so may result in denial of the motion. See, e.g., Heidel v California Transit Co. (1928) 204 C 21, 266 P 290 (motion denied because declaration failed to state that place was principal place of business at time of commencement of action).

If there is more than one defendant, the moving defendant must show that no defendant resided in the county where the action was commenced. Sequoia Pine Mills, Inc. v Superior Court (1968) 258 CA2d 65, 65 CR 353. Although the moving party may make the declaration on information and belief (Brown v Happy Valley Fruit Growers, Inc. (1929) 206 C 515, 274 P 977), the better practice is for each defendant to file a declaration of residence. At least one court has held that a declaration of the defendant's residence made on information and belief by a third person is a conclusion of law unless accompanied by specific facts that enable the court to make an independent determination. O'Brien v O'Brien (1911) 16 CA 103, 116 P 692. See also Gutierrez v Superior Court (1966) 243 CA2d 710, 52 CR 592 (declaration on information and belief as to facts is hearsay and should be disregarded). But see Fielder v Superior Court (1963) 213 CA2d 60, 28 CR 597.

A moving party seeking to change venue to his or her residence must also show that the county where the action is filed is not a proper place for trial under any applicable theory. Carruth v Superior Court (1978) 80 CA3d 215, 145 CR 344; Karson Indus., Inc. v Superior Court (1969) 273 CA2d 7, 77 CR 714. In a transitory action, for example, the defendant must also show that the county designated by the plaintiff was not the place where the injury occurred. For declaration of residence, see form in §20.39.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.15 b. Declaration Relating to Type of Action

A motion for change of venue on wrong court grounds (see §20.3) may also be brought when the court designated is not the proper place for trial for the type of action filed. For example, venue is improper under CCP §397(a) when an action affecting title to real property is not brought in the county where the property is located. See discussion of CCP §392 in §§8.32-8.40. If the court is "not the proper court" due to the type of action brought, the defendant's moving papers should include a brief declaration to that effect. For example, when the action is based on breach of contract and venue is proper in the county where the contract was made, the declaration should include evidentiary facts establishing where the contract was entered into.

Although a declaration that states only ultimate facts, e.g., that a contract was entered into in a particular county, is sufficient absent a contrary showing (Erwin v Cee-Tee Constr. Co. (1952) 114 CA2d 364, 250 P2d 287), it may be insufficient if challenged (see Hagan v Gilbert (1948) 83 CA2d 570, 189 P2d 548, disapproved on other grounds in Monogram Co. v Kingsley (1951) 38 C2d 28, 237 P2d 265). See §20.39 for a form declaration based on type of action.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.16 c. Declaration Based on Convenience of Witnesses

When a motion for change of venue is made under CCP §397(c) on the grounds that the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change, the supporting declarations must show (Peiser v Mettler (1958) 50 C2d 594, 328 P2d 953):

- Each witness's name;
- The substance of the expected testimony each will give; and
- Facts showing why their attendance at trial will be inconvenient and why the ends of justice would be served by a transfer.

The declaration is insufficient if any of these facts is omitted. See, e.g., Corfee v Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1962) 202 CA2d 473, 20 CR 870 (failure to show convenience of witnesses would be promoted by change); Juneau v Juneau (1941) 45 CA2d 14, 113 P2d 463 (failure to state names and nature of testimony).

It is not necessary for the declaration to state that a particular person actually will be a witness, as long as the proposed witnesses are identified by name. J.C. Millett Co. v Latchford-Marble Glass Co. (1959) 167 CA2d 218, 334 P2d 72; Wood v Silvers (1939) 35 CA2d 604, 96 P2d 366. Similarly, it is not necessary that the declaration show that the witnesses' testimony will be favorable to the moving party's case if the materiality of the evidence and the need for the testimony is shown. J.C. Millett Co. v Latchford-Marble Glass Co., supra; Edwards v Pierson (1957) 156 CA2d 72, 318 P2d 789. The evidence also must be admissible. Harden v Skinner & Hammond (1955) 130 CA2d 750, 279 P2d 978.

It is not necessarily the residence of a witness that determines convenience of travel to the place of trial; the place of occupation also is relevant. Willingham v Pecora (1941) 44 CA2d 289, 112 P2d 328. Therefore, if the place of occupation differs from the place of residence, the declaration should include the place and nature of the witnesses' occupations, the means of transportation available, accessibility of the place of trial, and the consequences to witnesses of time-consuming travel to trial. See Wood v Silvers, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.17 3. Memorandum in Support of Motion

The notice of motion and motion for change of venue must be accompanied by a memorandum in support of the motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a). The court may construe the failure to file a memorandum as an admission that the motion lacks merit and may deny the motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113. See also Weber v Purdy (1948) 84 CA2d 482, 191 P2d 66 (right to change of venue waived by failure to file memorandum with motion). For sample memorandum in support of motion, see §12.141.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.18 C. Effect of Motion

The power of the trial court to act on most other motions or proceedings is suspended by the filing of a motion for change of venue. Brady v Times-Mirror Co. (1895) 106 C 56, 39 P 209; Moore v Powell (1977) 70 CA3d 583, 138 CR 914. The court may not consider, for example, a demurrer to the complaint (Pickwick Stages Sys. v Superior Court (1934) 138 CA 448, 32 P2d 433) nor issue a temporary restraining order (County of Riverside v Superior Court (1968) 69 C2d 828, 73 CR 386; but see below) before the venue motion is decided. However, the following ancillary steps may be taken while the motion is pending:

- The court may sustain a special demurrer to permit the plaintiff to cure defective venue allegations and concurrently may deny a motion to change venue without prejudice to its renewal after the amended complaint is filed. See, e.g., Kostal v Pullen (1950) 36 C2d 528, 225 P2d 217.
- The plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss the action against some or all of the defendants after the motion has been made (Rogers v Transamerica Corp. (1935) 6 CA2d 340, 44 P2d 635), unless the motion is made under CCP §396b (CCP §581).
- The court may issue an order permitting the plaintiff to amend the complaint to allege the true name of a fictitiously named defendant. Gutierrez v Superior Court (1966) 243 CA2d 710, 52 CR 592.
- The court may, on a motion to change venue to a neutral county under CCP §394, concurrently order transfer and severance of the action under CCP §1048. City of Oakland v Darbee (1951) 102 CA2d 493, 227 P2d 909.
- In a marital dissolution proceeding, the court may rule on "motions for allowance of temporary support of the other party and of any children of the marriage, temporary restraining orders, attorneys' fees and costs, and make all necessary and proper orders in connection therewith." CCP §397(e). Under CCP §396b, which covers proceedings for legal separation as well as dissolution proceedings, the court has similar authority when the motion is made on grounds of improper court, except that it may not issue temporary restraining orders.
- In a suit to enforce the duty of support under Fam C §4000, the court may consider child support matters while a change of venue motion is pending. Thompson v Thames (1997) 57 CA4th 1296, 67 CR2d 695.

NOTE: Suspension of the court's power does not affect the parties' ability to conduct self-executing discovery unless it is necessary to seek the court's assistance, e.g., to obtain a medical exam or to compel discovery.

IV. PROCEDURES FOR RESPONDING PARTY

§20.19 A. Counterdeclarations, Countermotions, and Motions to Retransfer

The plaintiff may oppose a motion by filing:

- Counterdeclarations or affidavits that disprove the defendant's showing or, if an answer has been filed, that show that the action should be retained in the court designated in the complaint;
- A countermotion to retain the action in the original court; or
- A motion to retransfer the action to the original court on the grounds of convenience to witnesses and to promote the ends of justice following a change of venue on wrong court grounds before an answer was filed (see §§20.9, 20.16 for discussion of procedures for moving party on convenience of witness grounds).

A motion for change of venue on grounds of (a) convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice, (b) impartial trial, or (c) no judge qualified may be opposed only by filing counterdeclarations or affidavits. The opposing party may not file a countermotion. Cook v Pendergast (1882) 61 C 72. However, when an answering defendant moves for change of venue on the ground that the court in which the action is pending is not the proper court for trial, the plaintiff may respond by filing counterdeclarations or affidavits in opposition or a countermotion to retain the action in the county of filing on grounds of convenience of witnesses and promotion of the ends of justice. Gilman v Nordin (1952) 112 CA2d 788, 247 P2d 394. If no answer has been filed, the plaintiff must wait to make a motion in the transferee court to retransfer, on grounds of convenience of witnesses. Gordon v Perkins (1928) 203 C 183, 263 P 231; Kroesen v Gordon (1943) 61 CA2d 385, 142 P2d 935.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.20 B. Evidentiary Showing

A party who opposes a motion for change of venue usually makes an evidentiary showing by filing counterdeclarations or affidavits in response to the motion. Cook v Pendergast (1882) 61 C 72. Although a verified complaint (Carnation Co. v El Rey Cheese Co. (1948) 88 CA2d 857, 200 P2d 19) and possibly even an unverified complaint (see, e.g., Quick v Corsaro (1960) 180 CA2d 831, 4 CR 674) may be treated as a counterdeclaration to the extent it contradicts the declarations of the moving party, the better practice is to prepare declarations framed in evidentiary facts rather than to rely on a complaint that, if properly drawn, is pleaded in ultimate facts (Mills v Dickson (1933) 129 CA 728, 19 P2d 278).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.21 C. Consistency With Theory of Complaint

The declarations in opposition must be consistent with the theory of the complaint. Because venue is determined by the complaint as originally filed, the plaintiff may not affect venue by changing the theory of the action by declaration or affidavit submitted in opposition to a motion to change (Sloan v Court Hotel (1945) 72 CA2d 308, 164 P2d 516) nor by amending the complaint (Kallen v Serretto (1932) 126 CA 548, 14 P2d 917). See §8.6. But see §16.14 on amending complaint to state true name of fictitiously named defendant. For example, declarations filed in opposition to a motion for change of venue on grounds of wrong court may not be used to change the action's theory from a transitory action to a local action. Sloan v Court Hotel (1945) 72 CA2d 308, 164 P2d 516.

PRACTICE TIP: Countermotions are rarely filed. In most cases the party opposing the motion simply files counterdeclarations based on convenience of witnesses and promotion of the ends of justice. CCP §396b. There may even be an advantage to opposing the motion under §396b instead of filing a countermotion under CCP §397(c) because the language of §396b requires the plaintiff only to show that either the convenience of witnesses or the ends of justice be promoted. See §20.4.

A motion for change of venue based on convenience of witnesses may be successfully opposed by an offer to stipulate to the facts to which each witness designated in the motion would testify. Blossom v Waller (1916) 30 CA 439, 158 P 509.

V. HEARING AND DETERMINATION

§20.22 A. Burden of Proof

The court designated in the original complaint is presumed to be a proper court for trial. Mission Imports, Inc. v Superior Court (1982) 31 C3d 921, 184 CR 296; Black Diamond Asphalt, Inc. v Superior Court (2003) 109 CA4th 166, 170, 134 CR2d 510. Therefore, the moving party has the burden of establishing the facts necessary to justify a change of venue. Massae v Superior Court (1981) 118 CA3d 527, 173 CR 527; J.C. Millett Co. v Latchford-Marble Glass Co. (1956) 144 CA2d 838, 301 P2d 914. The moving party must show that (1) venue as laid is improper on any applicable theory (Black Diamond Asphalt, Inc. v Superior Court, supra) and (2) the transferee county designated in the motion is a proper county for trial. Hearne v DeYoung (1896) 111 C 373, 43 P 1108; Sequoia Pine Mills, Inc. v Superior Court (1968) 258 CA2d 65, 65 CR 353 (moving party must show that no defendant is a county resident); Beutke v American Sec. Co. (1955) 132 CA2d 354, 282 P2d 201.

When the complaint does not allege facts justifying nonresidence venue, the defendant can establish a prima facie case of improper venue simply by showing that at the time the complaint was filed, no named defendant was a resident of the county in which the action was pending. Sequoia Pine Mills, Inc. v Superior Court, supra. The burden of showing that the action falls under one of the statutory exceptions to the general rule that actions are triable at the defendant's residence then shifts to the plaintiff. Goosse v Clifton (1946) 75 CA2d 44, 170 P2d 104. In other words, when the complaint is silent, the individual defendant need not assume the burden initially of negating all possible bases for venue. See Hammond v Ocean Shore Dev. Co. (1913) 22 CA 167, 133 P 978.

When the motion to change venue is based on grounds other than "wrong court," the burden of proof is on the moving party, whether the plaintiff or the defendant. City of Stockton v Ellingwood (1926) 78 CA 117, 248 P 272 (convenience of witnesses); J.I. Case Threshing Co. v Copren Bros. (1917) 35 CA 70, 169 P 443 (impartial trial).

§20.23 B. Effect of Order Granting Motion

When an order changing venue is granted, the court loses further jurisdiction to act in the matter (Marshall v Dunlap (1955) 138 CA2d 59, 291 P2d 538), except to consider and decide a motion to vacate the order of transfer under CCP §473 (Badella v Miller (1955) 44 C2d 81, 279 P2d 729). Prohibition is available to prevent trial in the transferor court. Chase v Superior Court (1908) 154 C 789, 99 P 355. The transferee court acquires jurisdiction of the action and all matters pertaining to it. Retailers' Credit Ass'n v Superior Court (1937) 19 CA2d 457, 65 P2d 937. The transfer order does not immediately vest the transferee court with jurisdiction; the transferee court does not acquire jurisdiction until the transfer fee is paid and the papers are filed in the transferee court. London v Morrison (1950) 99 CA2d 876, 222 P2d 941; Tanzman v Midwest Express Airlines, Inc. (SD Cal 1996) 916 F Supp 1013 (papers may not be transmitted until after time for filing petition for writ of mandate under CCP §399 has passed).

The plaintiff cannot evade the effect of an order obtained by the defendant by voluntarily dismissing the action and then refiling it. Unless there has been a change of circumstances, the prior order is binding on the court in a second action on the same facts. Tarman v Sherwin (1961) 189 CA2d 49, 10 CR 787.

In a marital dissolution proceeding, diligence and proper timing of requests for attorney fees, costs, and spousal and child support become especially crucial. Although the transferor court has the power to consider such applications before an order changing venue is made (CCP §§396b, 397(e); see Stutsman v Stutsman (1947) 79 CA2d 81, 178 P2d 769), only the transferee court can do so after a change of venue has been ordered (Searcy v Superior Court (1920) 47 CA 124, 190 P 202).

For discussion of the award of attorney fees and costs to the prevailing party, see §§20.28-20.31.

§20.24 C. Renewal of Motion

The denial of a motion for change of venue on one ground does not preclude a new motion on a different ground, whether made by the same defendant (Seybert v County of Imperial (1956) 139 CA2d 221, 293 P2d 135) or by another defendant (Marshall v Dunlap (1955) 138 CA2d 59, 291 P2d 538). For example, the defendant may file a motion based on convenience of witnesses once an answer has been filed, even if an earlier motion based on wrong court grounds was denied.

Although nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure precludes renewal of a motion for change of venue, the courts discourage renewal of the motion on the same grounds unless there has been a material change in circumstances. Connell v Bowes (1942) 49 CA2d 542, 122 P2d 71. A renewed motion usually will be denied (Smith v Pelton Water Wheel Co. (1907) 151 C 399, 90 P 932), unless the original denial (1) was expressly "without prejudice" (Lundy v Lettunich (1920) 50 CA 451, 195 P 451; see also Kostal v Pullen (1950) 36 C2d 528, 225 P2d 217), or (2) is set aside under CCP §473 (Yellow Mfg. Acceptance Corp. v Stoddard (1949) 93 CA2d 301, 208 P2d 1040). An order granting a renewed motion for change of venue when there has not been a change of circumstances is an abuse of the court's discretion and may be set aside by writ of mandate. Thompson v Superior Court (1972) 26 CA3d 300, 103 CR 94.

If the plaintiff materially amends the complaint or if circumstances otherwise change after the original denial, a renewed motion will be considered on the merits. South v Wishard (1954) 123 CA2d 642, 267 P2d 827. However, the motion will be denied if it is not made within a reasonable time after the moving party knows or should know of the new circumstances. Thompson v Superior Court, supra.

§20.25 D. Time to Answer After Order

- Venue changed under CCP §396a. Following an order changing venue under CCP §396a (Unruh Act, Automobile Sales Finance Act, or unlawful detainer), a defendant who has been served but who has not appeared has 30 days to plead, beginning with service of written notice of the filing of the action in the new court.
- Venue changed under CCP §396b. When a change of venue motion under CCP §396b is granted, the defendant has 30 days to plead, beginning when the defendant is served with written notice of the filing of the action in the new court. CCP §586(a)(6)(B). When a motion for change of venue under CCP §396b is denied, the defendant has 30 days in which to respond unless the court orders otherwise. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1326.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should check to see if local rules developed in response to the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) provide less time to answer. For the time to answer after review of the order, see §20.35. On delay reduction, see chap 40.

VI. TRANSFER OF ACTION

§20.26 A. Selection of Court

- When motion granted on wrong court grounds. The court must transfer the action to any proper court agreed to by stipulation of the parties, in writing or orally in open court, and entered in the minutes or docket. If the parties do not stipulate, the action must be transferred to any proper court designated by the defendant in the notice of motion or in open court, and entered in the minutes or docket at the time when the order for transfer is made. When no stipulation or designation is made, or when transfer is ordered on the court's own motion, the action will be transferred to any proper court selected by the court in which the action is pending. CCP §398.
- When motion granted on any ground specified in CCP §397(b)-(d). The action must be transferred to any court stipulated to by the parties in writing or orally in open court, which has jurisdiction of the subject matter. If the parties fail to agree, the court must transfer the action to the nearest or most accessible court where the objection giving rise to the transfer does not exist. CCP §398.

NOTE: Local rules developed under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) dramatically alter the pace of litigation. Counsel should consider the effects of these programs in stipulating to a new venue. On delay reduction, see chap 40.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.27 B. Transmission of Papers

When an order for transfer is made, the clerk must transmit the pleadings and papers (or a transcript of the pleadings if they are oral) to the clerk of the transferee court after final denial of a petition for a writ of mandate or expiration of time to file the petition. CCP §399(a). On payment of costs and fees as a prerequisite for transfer and on penalties for failure to pay, see §§20.28-20.29.

At the time of transmittal, the clerk of the transferor court must mail notice to all parties who have appeared, stating the date on which transmittal occurred. On receipt of the papers and pleadings, the clerk of the transferee court must give prompt notice by mail to all such parties, stating the date of filing and the number assigned to the case. CCP §399(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Payment of Costs and Fees

§20.28 1. Wrong Court Motion

When the court has granted a defendant's motion for change of venue made on wrong court grounds, the costs and fees of transfer, including any expenses and attorney fees awarded to the defendant under CCP §396b (see §20.30), must be paid by the plaintiff before the action will be transferred. A defendant who has paid the costs and fees at the time of making the motion is entitled to reimbursement when the order is made. CCP §399(a).

If the plaintiff has not paid the costs and fees within five days after service of notice of the order, any other interested party, whether or not named in the complaint, may pay the costs and fees and recover them as costs if the party prevails at trial or as an offset if the plaintiff prevails. CCP §399(a). If payment is not made within 30 days after service of notice of the order, the transferor court may on motion dismiss the action without prejudice on condition that the same action may not be brought in another court before payment is made. If review of the order changing venue has been sought, the time for payment is extended to within 30 days after final notice of the order of transfer. If proceedings are not stayed pending review, the time for payment is 60 days after service of notice of the order. In any case, the action may not be presented until the costs and fees are paid. CCP §399(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/20 Motions to Change Venue/§20.29 2. Motion on Other Grounds

§20.29 2. Motion on Other Grounds

When an order changing venue has been sought on any ground specified in CCP §397(b)-(e), the costs and fees of transfer and of filing the papers in the transferee court must be paid by the moving party when the notice of motion is filed. CCP §399(a). Despite the mandatory language of CCP §399, and although no local rules so authorize, courts in some counties (e.g., Alameda, San Francisco) follow the practice of neither requiring nor accepting transfer fees and costs until after the motion has been granted or a stipulation for change of venue under CCP §398 has been filed. In Los Angeles County Superior Court, the clerk's office requires prior payment of fees and costs on a motion based on convenience of witnesses and promotion of the ends of justice under CCP §397(c), but not on a motion based on other grounds. To complicate the matter further, some judges will not grant a motion for change of venue made under CCP §397(b)-(e) unless fees and costs have been paid, as required by CCP §399(a).

Given this situation, the attorney for the moving party should tender the costs and fees to the clerk of the county in which the motion is filed. If the tender is rejected by the clerk, the attorney should be prepared to tender the costs and fees in court on the day the motion is heard, with a declaration stating:

- How they were computed; and
- That they were tendered to the clerk's office and refused at the time the motion was filed.

D. Attorney Fees and Expenses

§20.30 1. Wrong Court Motion

When the court has ruled on a motion to change venue on the ground that the court in which the action was filed is not the proper court, it may award to the prevailing party reasonable expenses and attorney fees incurred in making or resisting the motion. CCP §396b. These fees and costs are recoverable whether or not the prevailing party is entitled to recover other litigation costs. In determining whether to make such an order, the court must consider whether:

- An offer to stipulate to change venue was reasonably made and rejected; and
- The motion or selection of venue was made in good faith, given the facts and law that the party making the motion or selecting venue knew or should have known.

CCP §396b; Mission Imports, Inc. v Superior Court (1982) 31 C3d 921, 184 CR 296.

Because the attorney is responsible for knowing the venue rules, any award of attorney fees and expenses is the personal liability of the attorney and is not chargeable to the party. CCP §396b. Sanctions may not be imposed unless notice is "contained in a party's papers, or on the court's own noticed motion, and after opportunity to be heard." CCP §396b. Counsel for the party seeking an award of attorney fees and expenses should file a declaration describing the efforts made to obtain a stipulation to change venue or to have the motion withdrawn. See §20.13 and form in §20.40.

When the defendant has been awarded attorney fees and expenses under CCP §396b, the fees and expenses are included in the costs that the plaintiff must pay before the action may continue. CCP §399(a). For discussion, see §20.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.31 2. Motion on Other Grounds

Although CCP §396b appears to apply only to motions filed on wrong court grounds, the point is unresolved. A party can still seek an award of sanctions for actions undertaken primarily for improper purposes such as harassment, to cause unnecessary delay, or to increase litigation costs. CCP §128.7; Lieppman v Lieber (1986) 180 CA3d 914, 225 CR 845 (sanctions awarded under CCP §128.5 (applies only to cases filed on or before December 31, 1994) for frivolous motion for change of venue under CCP §397(c) (convenience of witnesses)). See also Fegles v Kraft (1985) 168 CA3d 812, 214 CR 380 (award of sanction under CCP §128.5 must be supported by specific findings, stated in the order, justifying the award). See §1.6 for effective dates of sanctions statutes (CCP §§128.5-128.7).

VII. REVIEW OF ORDERS

A. Method of Review

§20.32 1. Superior Court in Other Than Limited Civil Case

A superior court order, in other than a limited civil case, granting or denying a motion for change of venue is reviewable by petition for writ of mandate. CCP §400. See also Hennigan v Boren (1966) 243 CA2d 810, 52 CR 748 (propriety of order may not be raised on appeal because mandamus is available). The party seeking review may petition the court of appeal for a writ of mandate within 20 days after service of a written notice of order. The superior court may extend the time, for good cause, for an additional period not to exceed 10 days if the extension is sought before expiration of the initial 20-day period. CCP §400. A copy of the petition must be filed in the trial court immediately after it is filed in the court of appeal.

The court of appeal in its discretion may stay all proceedings pending final judgment on the petition. The clerk of the court of appeal must file a copy of any order or judgment immediately after it becomes final with the trial court clerk. CCP §400.

§20.33 2. Limited Civil Cases

Venue orders issued in limited civil cases (see chap 6) are reviewable by appeal from the order. CCP §904.2(c). The reviewing court may stay all proceedings pending determination of the appeal. CCP §916.

§20.34 B. Standard of Review

In reviewing a venue order, the reviewing court applies the same standard in determining if the order was proper whether the order is reviewed by writ (see §20.32) or by appeal (see §20.33). When change of venue is a matter of right (e.g., a motion under CCP §397(a) on grounds of wrong court), the lower court's resolution of conflicting testimony in favor of the prevailing party will be upheld unless it is clear that the court acted arbitrarily. Swartz v California Olive Growers' Packing Corp. (1942) 56 CA2d 168, 133 P2d 20. When change of venue is a matter of judicial discretion (e.g., a motion under CCP §397(c) on grounds of convenience of witnesses and promotion of ends of justice), a reviewing court will not disturb the trial court's order unless the court has abused its discretion. Union Trust Life Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1968) 259 CA2d 23, 66 CR 270. However, when the moving party has made a showing that is sufficient to justify a change of venue and there is no showing whatever in opposition, it is an abuse of discretion to deny the change. First-Trust Joint Stock Land Bank v Meredith (1936) 16 CA2d 504, 60 P2d 1023. For further discussion concerning discretionary change of venue on convenience grounds, see 3 Witkin, California Procedure, Actions §§948-954 (5th ed 2008).

NOTE: Granting a motion to change venue for the convenience of witnesses under CCP §397(c) may be an abuse of discretion if the plaintiff is severely injured. Lieberman v Superior Court (1987) 194 CA3d 396, 239 CR 450. In Lieberman, the plaintiff was so seriously injured that changing venue of a personal injury action to the county where the accident occurred and the nonparty witnesses resided would have prevented the plaintiff from testifying and would have deprived the jury of the opportunity to observe the plaintiff's physical condition first-hand.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.35 C. Time to Answer After Review

When the reviewing court's decision on a venue order under CCP §396b on wrong court grounds has become final or the stay of the order has been terminated, the court having jurisdiction over the trial must thereafter, on application or on its own motion, allow the defendant a reasonable time to answer the complaint. CCP §586(a)(6)(C). Notice of the order must be served promptly by the party who obtained it, or by the clerk if made on the court's own motion. CCP §586(a)(6)(C).

- Within 30 days unless the court orders otherwise (CCP §586(a)(6)(A); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1326)

For example, "pleading paper" (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On the many specific details required, see chap 11 and the sample form in §11.35. On when preprinted Judicial Council forms must or may be filed with the court, see Cal Rules of Ct 1.30-1.44 and 2.131-2.134 and the discussion in §11.27.

I. INTRODUCTION

§21.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses the motion to dismiss or stay an action on the basis of inconvenient forum. It sets forth the characteristics of the doctrine of forum non conveniens (see §§21.3-21.6), when it is appropriate (see §§21.7-21.15), the procedure (see §§21.16-21.23), diagnostic questions (see §21.24), a procedure checklist (see §21.25), and forms (see §§21.26-21.29).

§21.2 B. Governing Law

A motion to stay or dismiss on the basis of inconvenient forum is governed by CCP §§410.30 and 418.10.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.3 II. CHARACTERISTICS OF DOCTRINE

A motion to dismiss or stay an action on the basis of inconvenient forum does not challenge jurisdiction but asks the court, in its discretion, to decline to exercise, or to stay its exercise of, jurisdiction. The motion may be made as a special appearance or after a general appearance has been made. The court considers a number of factors in deciding whether it is in the interest of substantial justice that the case be heard in a forum outside California and may include any just conditions in its order. If the action is based on certain kinds of contracts, an action to dismiss or stay for inconvenient forum may be barred. Additionally, if the action is based on a contract containing a forum selection clause, that provision is generally enforceable in California and may be controlling in the court's consideration of a motion to stay or dismiss based on inconvenient forum grounds.

§21.4 A. Distinguished From Change of Venue and Jurisdiction

Unlike a motion for change of venue, which is based on an improper choice of forum in California, a motion under CCP §§410.30 or 418.10 is addressed to the court's discretionary power to refuse to exercise, or to stay its exercise of, jurisdiction. Stangvik v Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 C3d 744, 751, 1 CR2d 556 (granting or denial of motion is within trial court's discretion; substantial deference given to its determination); Hansen v Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 51 CA4th 753, 59 CR2d 229. A motion to dismiss or stay seeks to have the case litigated in a court outside California. The alternative forum may be another state or country. A motion changing venue under CCP §397 seeks a transfer of the case to another California court.

Unlike a challenge to jurisdiction, which is not based on the court's discretionary power, the doctrine of forum non conveniens, which is the basis of a motion to dismiss or stay under CCP §410.30, is an equitable one embracing the court's discretionary power. Stangvik v Shiley, Inc., supra.

Because a motion to dismiss or stay is not based on a challenge to jurisdiction, if the state court denies the motion and the case is heard in a California court, even if it is an inconvenient forum, the action of the California court is valid and will be entitled to full faith and credit in other states. See Comment to CCP §410.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.5 B. Statutory Authority; Limitations

In some situations, California courts may have jurisdiction over an action but may conclude that the forum in which it has been brought is an inconvenient forum and that it would be "in the interest of substantial justice" if it were heard in a forum outside California. CCP §410.30(a).

California law codifies the common-law doctrine of forum non conveniens permitting the court to decline to exercise its jurisdiction in appropriate cases. See Comment to CCP §410.30. Forum non conveniens is an equitable doctrine invoking the discretionary power of a court to decline to exercise the jurisdiction it has over a transitory cause of action when the court believes that the action may be more appropriately and justly tried elsewhere. Stangvik v Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 C3d 744, 751, 1 CR2d 556; Hansen v Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 51 CA4th 753, 59 CR2d 229.

Under CCP §410.30, on motion of a party, or on the court's own motion, the court may dismiss or stay an action, in whole or in part, on grounds of inconvenient forum. The motion is made under CCP §410.30 if a general appearance has already been made or under both CCP §§410.30 and 418.10 if no general appearance has been made. The distinction between the two enabling statutes is that CCP §418.10 provides certain privileges to the defendant moving party who makes the motion prior to making a general appearance. See discussion in §21.17.

A court cannot order an action dismissed or stayed if it arises out of a contract, agreement, or undertaking governed by CCP §410.40. Contracts governed by CCP §410.40 are those

- In which the parties have designated that California law governs;
- That relate to a transaction involving $1,000,000 or more; and
- That contain a provision by the nonresident parties to submit to the jurisdiction of California courts.

§21.6 C. Combining Motion With Challenge to Jurisdiction or With Answer, Demurrer, or Motion to Strike

A defendant moving to quash service for lack of personal jurisdiction may move to dismiss or stay the action on the ground of inconvenient forum in the alternative. CCP §418.10(a).

PRACTICE TIP: A defendant challenging jurisdiction should also make the alternative motion to dismiss or stay. It provides the defendant with two possible ways to win instead of one, and it also provides the court a discretionary basis to grant the defendant relief even if the jurisdictional challenge fails.

A defendant or cross-defendant may make a motion under CCP §418.10 (to quash for lack of personal jurisdiction, to stay or dismiss on ground of inconvenient forum, or to dismiss for delay in prosecution) and simultaneously answer, demur, or move to strike the complaint or cross-complaint. CCP §418.10(e). Notwithstanding CCP §1014, no act by a party who makes a motion under CCP §418.10, including filing an answer, demurrer, or motion to strike, constitutes an appearance, unless the court denies the motion made under §418.10. If the court denies the motion made under §418.10, the defendant or cross-defendant is not deemed to have generally appeared until entry of the order denying the motion. CCP §418.10(e)(1).

If the motion under §418.10 is denied and the defendant or cross-defendant petitions for a writ of mandate under §418.10(c), the defendant or cross-defendant is not deemed to have generally appeared until the proceedings on the writ petition have finally concluded. CCP §418.10(e)(2).

Failure to make a motion under §418.10 at the time of filing a demurrer or motion to strike constitutes a waiver of the issues of lack of personal jurisdiction, inadequacy of process, inadequacy of service of process, inconvenient forum, and delay in prosecution. CCP §418.10(e)(3).

It was the intent of the legislature in enacting §418.10(e) to conform California practice with respect to challenging personal jurisdiction to the practice under Fed R Civ P 12(b). Stats 2002, ch 69, §2.

III. WHEN APPROPRIATE

§21.7 A. Availability of Suitable Alternative Forum

A threshold question is whether the alternative forum proposed by the party seeking to stay or dismiss is a "suitable" place for trial, which is, essentially, a forum that has jurisdiction over the defendant and where the plaintiff's causes of action are not barred by the statute of limitations. Stangvik v Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 C3d 744, 751, 1 CR2d 556 (Norway and Sweden, where plaintiffs lived, were suitable given agreement of defendant, a California resident, to be sued there); Guimei v General Elec. Co. (2009) 172 CA4th 689, 702, 91 CR3d 178 (China suitable forum when air crash occurred there, most plaintiffs were Chinese residents, no defendants were California residents, and all defendants had agreed to be bound by Chinese judgment); American Cemwood Corp. v American Home Assur. Co. (2001) 87 CA4th 431, 435, 104 CR2d 670.

There are three considerations in determining suitability. There is little dispute about the first two: (1) The defendant must be subject to the alternative forum's jurisdiction, and (2) the claim must not be barred by a statute of limitations in the alternative forum. Both considerations may be dealt with by the court's imposition of conditions. See Stangvik v Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 C3d 744, 750 n2, 1 CR2d 556; Hansen v Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 51 CA4th 753, 59 CR2d 229. A defendant seeking to stay or dismiss an action on the basis of forum non conveniens must show that all defendants are subject to jurisdiction in the proposed alternate forum. A rule permitting a stay or dismissal of an action over which no single alternative court could exercise jurisdiction would force the plaintiff to pursue separate actions in multiple states or countries to obtain complete relief. Such a rule, by encouraging piecemeal litigation and blossoming numbers of actions in multiple jurisdictions, would threaten precisely those considerations of convenience, economy, and justice the doctrine was designed to bolster. American Cemwood Corp. v American Home Assur. Co. (2001) 87 CA4th 431, 438, 104 CR2d 670.

A third suitability consideration is whether the proposed alternative forum provides the plaintiff a remedy that is not so clearly inadequate or unsatisfactory that it amounts to no remedy at all. 54 C3d at 753, 1 CR2d at 561. Mere inability of the plaintiff to pursue causes of action in the other forum, which could be pursued in California, does not render the other forum unsuitable. Shiley, Inc. v Superior Court (1992) 4 CA4th 126, 133, 6 CR2d 38. See Guimei v General Elec. Co. (2009) 172 CA4th 689, 696, 702, 91 CR3d 178 (expert declarations and other evidence supported conclusion that Chinese courts were capable of litigating and providing remedy for plaintiffs' complex product liability claims). See also discussion of conditions in §21.14.

Even if the trial court judge were to find that California law is likely to provide the plaintiff with procedural and substantive legal advantages, that fact "cannot be considered as a factor in plaintiff's favor in the forum non conveniens balance." Stangvik v Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 C3d 744, 754, 1 CR2d 556. The fact that the law is less favorable in the alternative forum should not be accorded any weight in deciding a motion for forum non conveniens, provided, however, that some remedy is afforded. Stangvik v Shiley, Inc., supra; Guimei v General Elec. Co. (2009) 172 CA4th 689, 696, 91 CR3d 178; Roulier v Cannondale (2002) 101 CA4th 1180, 1187, 124 CR2d 877.

In rare circumstances, an alternative forum may not be suitable, even though the defendant is subject to the alternative forum's jurisdiction and there is no procedural bar to a hearing on the merits. Shiley, Inc. v Superior Court (1992) 4 CA4th 126, 6 CR2d 38. This may occur when the proposed alternative forum is in a foreign country that does not have an independent judiciary or observe basic due process. Shiley Inc. v Superior Court, supra. See Chong v Superior Court (1997) 58 CA4th 1032, 68 CR2d 427 (proceedings stayed; no evidence that Hong Kong courts will not continue to provide due process after return to Chinese control).

In light of a defendant-retailer's stipulation to the jurisdiction of Swiss courts and in a waiver of any statute of limitations defenses, a trial court did not err in determining that Switzerland was a suitable alternative forum. Roulier v Cannondale (2002) 101 CA4th 1180, 1186, 124 CR2d 877 (Swiss resident injured in Switzerland on bicycle purchased in California and manufactured by company incorporated in Delaware).

§21.8 B. Factors Considered

A motion to dismiss or stay for inconvenient forum is based on notions of "substantial justice." CCP §410.30. The doctrine recognizes that there are cases in which, although jurisdiction exists, California has little relation either to the parties or to the cause of action, and a California suit would greatly increase the burden to the defendant. Judicial Council Comment to CCP §410.30. In the absence of a statutory definition of "substantial justice," courts consider a number of relevant factors that have been developed in case law and other authorities.

A court asked to rule on a motion to stay or dismiss, which has determined that the proposed alternative forum is "suitable" (see §21.7), must next determine whether the balance of private and public factors favors (1) retaining the action for trial in California or (2) granting the motion. Stangvik v Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 C3d 744, 751, 1 CR2d 556. The private interests of the litigants are factors that make the trial and the enforceability of the ensuing judgment expeditious and relatively inexpensive, including the ease of access to sources of proof, the cost of obtaining witnesses' attendance, and the availability of compulsory process to compel the production of evidence and witnesses' attendance. The public interest factors favoring the granting of a motion to stay or dismiss include avoidance of overburdening local courts that have congested calendars, protecting prospective jurors from the needless inconvenience of having to consider and decide cases in which the local community has little concern, and the weight of the competing interests of California and the proposed alternative forum. Note that the Comment to CCP §410.30 contains two different sets of factors: one from the Uniform Interstate and International Procedure Act and one from the Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws, p 311 (Proposed Official Draft, pt I, chap 4, 1967).

The discussion in §§21.9-21.11 focuses on some of the factors most often mentioned and considered.

The defendant—the party moving for a stay or dismissal—has the burden of proof in attempting to override the plaintiff's choice of forum. 54 C3d at 751.

§21.9 1. Plaintiff's Residence, Choice of Forum

California residents are given preference in access to the state's often overcrowded courts, both because of convenience and because it is residents who pay to maintain those courts. Price v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1954) 42 C2d 577, 582, 248 P2d 457 (cited in Stangvik v Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 C3d 744, 751, 1 CR2d 556). If a plaintiff who is a California resident has filed suit in California, that choice of forum "should rarely be disturbed unless the balance [of factors; see §21.8] is strongly in favor of the defendant." 54 C3d at 754 (resident plaintiff's choice presumed to be convenient; state has strong interest in providing adequate forum to its residents). See Thomson v Continental Ins. Co. (1967) 66 C2d 738, 742, 59 CR 101; Brown v Clorox Co. (1976) 56 CA3d 306, 311, 128 CR 385.

The rule of preference for California residents, however, has been the subject of a statutory revision of CCP §410.30(a), which provides that "the domicile or residence in this state of any party to the action shall not preclude the court from staying or dismissing the action." This provision has been interpreted as calling for "less weight" being given to the issue of California residence. Credit Lyonnais Bank Nederland, N.V. v Manatt, Phelps, Rothenberg & Tunney (1988) 202 CA3d 1424, 249 CR 559. As noted by one court, it is yet to be determined whether the change in the statutory language will be interpreted by other courts as changing the long-standing rule of preference to California residents. Klein v Superior Court (1988) 198 CA3d 894, 901, 244 CR 226. Especially in cases in which all of the parties are California residents, for example, it is hard to imagine that a court will not still be reluctant to dismiss an action. See Bechtel Corp. v Industrial Indem. Co. (1978) 86 CA3d 45, 150 CR 29 (no dismissal or stay under prior law if all parties California residents). See discussion of dismissal versus stay in §21.13.

If the plaintiff is not a California resident and is the resident of a suitable (see §21.7) foreign jurisdiction, the plaintiff's choice of California as a forum is not a substantial factor in favor of retaining California jurisdiction. Stangvik v Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 C3d 744, 755, 1 CR2d 556; Guimei v General Elec. Co. (2009) 172 CA4th 689, 702, 91 CR3d 178.

The state in which a defendant corporation was incorporated, and has its principal place of business, is presumed to be a convenient forum, but a resident defendant may overcome this presumption by evidence that a proposed alternative forum is a more convenient place for trial. Stangvik v Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 C3d 744, 754, 1 CR2d 556 (California corporation presented evidence to support trial court's finding that Norway and Sweden were more convenient places to try product liability suits by residents of those countries against the corporation). The totality of the corporate defendant's contacts or connection with the state may be considered, but it is not true that a California court cannot stay or dismiss a burdensome action if the defendant's principal place of business is in the state. 54 C3d at 760.

Court congestion is a factor that the California court may consider, but dismissals or stays for inconvenient forum should not be used as court docket control device. 54 C3d at 758 (court noted that more than 100 foreign plaintiffs had filed product liability suits in California against defendant manufacturer of artificial heart valves and that hundreds of witnesses and millions of pages of documents would be involved in suit).

§21.11 3. Other Factors

A court that has been asked to rule on a motion to stay or dismiss, having determined that an alternative forum is suitable (see §21.7) and having given appropriate weight to the plaintiff's choice of California as a forum in the light of the plaintiff's place of residence (see §21.9) and to the defendant's residence (see §21.10), may next need to balance certain private and public interest factors. See §21.8. For discussion of how such factors as those noted below are weighed in a specific instance, see Stangvik v Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 C3d 744, 757, 1 CR2d 556; Guimei v General Elec. Co. (2009) 172 CA4th 689, 701, 91 CR3d 178. See also Comment to CCP §410.30.

Among those private interests involving the parties are:

- Location of evidence, including scene if view might be necessary or helpful. See Credit Lyonnais Bank Nederland, N.V. v Manatt, Phelps, Rothenberg & Tunney (1988) 202 CA3d 1424, 249 CR 559; Great Northern Ry. v Superior Court (1970) 12 CA3d 105, 113, 90 CR 461.
- Defendant's principal place of business and extent of business in each state. Brown v Clorox Co. (1976) 56 CA3d 306, 128 CR 385; Great Northern Ry. v Superior Court, supra. See §21.10.
- Parties' relationship to California. Great Northern Ry. v Superior Court, supra.
- Location and convenience of parties and witnesses. Roulier v Cannondale (2002) 101 CA4th 1180, 1189, 124 CR2d 877; Hansen v Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 51 CA4th 753, 59 CR2d 229; Schlussel v Schlussel (1983) 141 CA3d 194, 190 CR 95.
- Relative costs of maintaining action in this state compared to alternative forum. Great Northern Ry. v Superior Court, supra.
- Place of occurrence of transaction or event. Great Northern Ry. v Superior Court, supra.
- Plaintiff's motive, if plaintiff unreasonably or unfairly invoked California jurisdiction to vex, harass, or oppress defendant. Gulf Oil Corp. v Gilbert (1947) 330 US 501, 91 L Ed 1055, 67 S Ct 839. See generally Bechtel Corp. v Industrial Indem. Co. (1978) 86 CA3d 45, 49, 150 CR 29; Comment to CCP §410.30.

Among the public interest factors are:

- Burden on California courts. Roulier v Cannondale, supra; Hansen v Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., supra; Brown v Clorox Co., supra.
- Judicial efficiency. Dendy v MGM Grand Hotels, Inc. (1982) 137 CA3d 457, 187 CR 95. See Great Northern Ry. v Superior Court, supra.
- Interest of California in providing forum for parties or in regulating situation or conduct involved. See, e.g., Roulier v Cannondale (2002) 101 CA4th 1180, 1190, 124 CR2d 877 (California's interest in deterring negligent design and in preventing sale and production of defective products in state); Campbell v Parker-Hannifin Corp. (1999) 69 CA4th 1534, 82 CR2d 202 (California had insufficient interest to justify use of state's judicial time and resources to try action by heirs of victims of airplane crash in Australia).
- Reasonableness of imposition of jury duty on community having no relation to case. Guimei v General Elec. Co. (2009) 172 CA4th 689, 703, 91 CR3d 178; Great Northern Ry. v Superior Court, supra.
- Relative ease of enforceability of judgment. Great Northern Ry. v Superior Court, supra.
- Health and safety of California residents involved. Ferreira v Ferreira (1973) 9 C3d 824, 109 CR 80.

§21.12 C. Effect of Federal Law

Under 28 USC §1404, a federal district court has broad discretion to transfer a case from one federal district court to another "for the convenience of parties and witnesses in the interest of justice." 28 USC §1404(a). See Piper Aircraft Co. v Reyno (1981) 454 US 235, 70 L Ed 2d 419, 102 S Ct 252. This enactment largely replaces the common law doctrine of forum non conveniens, allowing a federal court to dismiss an action when the convenience of the parties would make it more suitable to try the case in another court. See Gulf Oil Corp. v Gilbert (1947) 330 US 501, 91 L Ed 1055, 67 S Ct 839. When there are two related federal court actions pending in different states and a party seeks transfer to allow both cases to be heard in the same federal court, courts consider the "first-to-file rule." Big Dog Motorcycles v Big Dog Holdings, Inc. (D Kan 2005), 351 F Supp 2d 1188 (transfer of case from Kansas to California federal court denied when there was no compelling reason for transfer and Kansas action was filed first).

It has been noted that in the federal court system a broader discretion is exercised because the federal courts have the power to transfer an action to a federal court in another state, while a California court does not have that power. Comment to CCP §410.30. California courts have sometimes placed a higher priority on certain issues than do federal courts. Deference to the plaintiff's choice of forum is given greater weight in California than in federal courts, if the plaintiff is a California resident. But see Monegro v Rosa (9th Cir 2000) 211 F3d 509, 512 (calling California and federal forum non conveniens doctrines "virtually identical"). See §21.9.

The doctrine of forum non conveniens is still relevant for foreign plaintiffs. Duha v Agrium, Inc. (6th Cir 2006) 448 F3d 867. In one case, a German attorney's suit against former clients for fees for services rendered in Germany was properly dismissed on the ground of forum non conveniens in favor of an alternative forum in Germany. The court stated that the German court is well equipped to apply the substantive German attorney fee statute in a manner required by its local procedure, and that it made little sense to require the district court to apply German substantive law in a procedure required by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Leetsch v Freeman (9th Cir 2001) 260 F3d 1100, 1105.

A defendant seeking dismissal on forum non conveniens grounds bears the burden of showing that an adequate alternative forum exists. Tuazon v R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. (9th Cir 2006) 433 F3d 1163, 1178. A plaintiff's showing that the remedy provided in the foreign forum is less favorable than that available in the U.S. forum is not determinative. Loya v Starwood Hotels & Resorts Worldwide, Inc. (9th Cir 2009) 583 F3d 656, 666 (even though Mexico severely capped recovery in wrongful death actions, not abuse of discretion for district court to dismiss, on forum non conveniens grounds, suit under the Death on the High Seas Act (46 USC §§30301-30308) brought by personal representative of American who died scuba diving off Mexican coast). A foreign plaintiff is entitled to less deference in its choice of forum than is a U.S. plaintiff. Vivendi SA v T-Moblie USA, Inc. (9th Cir 2009) 209 US App Lexis 23982, *12 (dismissal on forum non conveniens grounds upheld when one plaintiff was French corporation that engaged in forum shopping, plaintiffs' fraud claims related to European transactions, and all but three witnesses resided in Europe). The court may dismiss a suit on forum non conveniens grounds before establishing its jurisdiction. Appellate review of a district court's forum non conveniens determination is highly deferential. Sinochem Int'l Co. v Malaysia Int'l Shipping Corp. (2007) 549 US 422, 167 L Ed 2d 15, 127 S Ct 1184.

§21.13 D. Dismissal or Stay

Because a California court cannot force jurisdiction on another state, it cannot order a transfer to another state but is limited to either staying or dismissing the action. Thomson v Continental Ins. Co. (1967) 66 C2d 738, 744, 59 CR 101. See Comment to CCP §410.30. The purpose of allowing a motion based on inconvenient forum is to provide "substantial justice." If the court dismisses the action, it loses jurisdiction, while if it merely stays the proceeding, it does not. Archibald v Cinerama Hotels (1976) 15 C3d 853, 126 CR 811; see Comment to CCP §410.30. The stay remains in effect until the time period provided by the stay order has elapsed. See Comment to CCP §410.30. At any time before the stay expires, the court on noticed motion can modify the stay order and take any further action that the interests of justice require. See Comment to CCP §410.30.

Even if the plaintiff is a California resident, the court is not precluded from staying or dismissing the action. CCP §410.30. This provision modified former case law, which precluded dismissal if the plaintiff was a California resident, absent extraordinary circumstances. Archibald v Cinerama Hotels, supra; see Comment to CCP §410.30. See discussion in §21.8.

In most circumstances, however, the courts may continue to follow former case law and stay rather than dismiss an action absent exceptional circumstances to ensure that the plaintiff obtains substantial justice. Archibald v Cinerama Hotels, supra; Ferreira v Ferreira (1973) 9 C3d 824, 109 CR 80; Van Keulen v Cathay Pac. Airways, Ltd. (2008) 162 CA4th 122, 75 CR3d 471 (after state case was stayed, resident-plaintiffs waited 4 years to file suit in foreign court).

PRACTICE TIP: The moving party should always request a dismissal or a stay in the alternative. The court may be reluctant to grant a request for dismissal, even in light of the language of CCP §410.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.14 E. Order on Just Conditions

The order dismissing or staying the action on grounds of inconvenient forum may be made "on any conditions that may be just." CCP §410.30. Conditions imposed by courts on granting motions regarding inconvenient forum may include a requirement that defendants not plead the statute of limitations in the alternative forum and that defendants consent to jurisdiction and service in a particular jurisdiction. See Stangvik v Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 C3d 744, 750 n2, 1 CR2d 556, which lists the seven conditions imposed by the trial court in that case as defendant's agreement to:

- Submit to the jurisdiction of two foreign courts;
- Comply with those courts' discovery orders;
- Make past and present employees reasonably available to testify as ordered by those courts at defendant's expense;
- Toll the statute of limitations while the actions were pending in California;
- Make documents available under those courts' laws at defendant's cost;
- Permit depositions in the United States under California law; and
- Pay any final judgments rendered in the foreign actions.

See also Comment to CCP §410.30. Similar language in CCP §473 has also been interpreted to include payment of attorney fees and posting of bonds. Mark Briggs & Assoc. v Kinestar, Inc. (1983) 143 CA3d 483, 192 CR 21; Reeves v Hutson (1956) 144 CA2d 445, 301 P2d 264.

PRACTICE TIP: The plaintiff should, in addition to opposing the motion on the merits, advise the court of all appropriate conditions that the court should impose in the event the defendant prevails and a stay or dismissal is ordered. Such conditions might include that (1) the defendant waive the statute of limitations of the new forum, (2) the defendant consent to jurisdiction and service of process in the new forum, (3) the alternative action proceed to trial in a particular period of time, and (4) completed discovery be transferred to the other forum.

§21.15 F. Effect of Contractual Provision

A California court may exercise jurisdiction over a person who has consented to the exercise of jurisdiction (National Equip. Rental, Ltd. v Szukhent (1964) 375 US 311, 315, 11 L Ed 2d 354, 84 S Ct 411), provided he or she is competent to give consent (Harrington v Superior Court (1924) 194 C 185, 228 P 15), and absent a showing that enforcement of the forum selection provision would be unfair or unreasonable (Smith, Valentino & Smith, Inc. v Superior Court (1976) 17 C3d 491, 131 CR 374; Furda v Superior Court (1984) 161 CA3d 418, 207 CR 646). On jurisdiction, see chap 6.

Similarly, a California court may grant a motion to stay or dismiss on grounds of inconvenient forum on the basis of a contractual forum selection clause, in which case a factor such as plaintiff's choice of forum (see §21.9) has little weight. See Cal-State Bus. Prod. & Serv. v Ricoh (1993) 12 CA4th 1666, 16 CR2d 417 (California dealer bound by clause in agreement with New York distributor). A contractual forum selection clause must provide for a mandatory forum selection rather than be merely permissive to prevent a court staying an action on the grounds of forum non conveniens. See Berg v MTC Electronics Technols. Co. (1998) 61 CA4th 349, 71 CR2d 523; §6.79 (forum selection clauses). A forum selection clause in a stock options exchange agreement between a California resident and a U.S. subsidiary of a German corporation was as a matter of law mandatory rather than permissive, and the trial court had to enforce the clause because plaintiff made no showing that substantial justice could not be achieved in a German court or that a rational basis is lacking for the selection of Hamburg as the forum. Intershop Communications AG v Superior Court (2002) 104 CA4th 191, 196, 127 CR2d 847.

The contractual forum selection provision will ordinarily be given effect in an inconvenient forum decision unless the public interests that are considered in making the decision outweigh the private interest of the parties in enforcing the provision. Appalachian Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1984) 162 CA3d 427, 208 CR 627. If, however, the contract falls within the requirements of CC §1646.5 or CCP §410.40, then the case is not subject to a motion for inconvenient forum. CC §1646.5; CCP §§410.30-410.40.

IV. PROCEDURE

A. Time to Make Motion

§21.16 1. Before or After General Appearance

After a general appearance has been made, a defendant may make a motion to dismiss or stay under CCP §410.30 at any time in the proceeding. Appalachian Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1984) 162 CA3d 427, 208 CR 627; 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Jurisdiction §380 (5th ed 2008). The provisions of CCP §418.10 only apply if a defendant has not made a general appearance. Britton v Dallas Airmotive, Inc. (2007) 153 CA4th 127, 134, 62 CR3d 487. See discussion of the protective provisions of CCP §418.10 in §21.17. A plaintiff may make the motion at any time. CCP §410.30(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.17 2. Effect of Making Motion Before Pleading

The defendant's motion to stay or dismiss made on or before the last day to plead or within an additional time allowed by the court is a special appearance. CCP §418.10(d). It does not waive the defendant's right to challenge jurisdiction. CCP §418.10(a). It also allows the defendant making the motion under CCP §418.10 extensions of time to plead (CCP §418.10(b)-(c)), protection against entry of a default judgment before expiration of the time to plead (CCP §418.10), and the right to review an order of denial by writ of mandate (CCP §418.10(c)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.18 B. Time to Serve and File Papers

Time to serve and file moving and responsive papers for a motion made under CCP §410.30 after the defendant has made a general appearance are governed by standard motion procedures as set forth in CCP §1005. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300. For full discussion, see chap 12.

If the motion is filed as a special appearance under CCP §418.10(a), it must designate a date for hearing not more than 30 days after filing of the notice and it must be served in accord with the provisions of CCP §1005(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.19 C. Content of Moving Papers

There are no special court forms or attachment sheets used in making a motion to dismiss or stay. The moving party must file a notice of motion (CCP §1010) (see §21.26) and a memorandum in support of the motion (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113). (On Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a) requirement of filing of a "motion," see §12.9.) In addition, because a motion to stay or dismiss is based on evidentiary considerations, declarations should also be filed. See §21.27. Finally, the moving party should include a request that the court take judicial notice of the law of the alternative forum in order to demonstrate that the alternative forum is suitable. See §§21.9, 21.28. In appropriate cases, the defendant may submit expert testimony by declaration as to the suitability of the alternative forum. Klein v Superior Court (1988) 198 CA3d 894, 903, 244 CR 226 (declaration of expert regarding Swiss law). The moving party may choose to wait to see if the opposing party raises issues regarding the suitability of the alternative forum and file a request to take judicial notice as part of the reply rather than as part of the moving papers.

PRACTICE TIP: The declarations should set forth extensive competent evidence relevant to the factors the court should consider in making its decision. The declarations should clarify the facts as to all relevant factors. See discussion of factors in §§21.7-21.11. A request to take judicial notice should be filed setting forth the alternative forum's law on relevant jurisdiction, statute of limitations, and substantive law. See discussion in §21.9.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.20 D. Content of Responsive Papers

There is no requirement that responsive papers be filed by the responding party. The responding party who wishes to contest the motion should nevertheless file a memorandum in opposition and accompanying declarations. If appropriate, a request to take judicial notice and objections to evidence may also be filed.

PRACTICE TIP: The memorandum, in addition to arguing the law, should set forth appropriate conditions for the order in the event the defendant prevails. See §21.14. The declarations should set forth extensive competent evidence directed to the factors the court should consider in making its decision. See §§21.7-21.11. A request to take judicial notice should be filed, if appropriate, to advise the court of the alternative forum's laws on jurisdiction, statute of limitations, and applicable substantive law. See discussion in §§21.9. See form in §21.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.21 E. Hearing on the Motion; Order

Unlike many motions, a motion for inconvenient forum may involve oral argument at the hearing.

As discussed in §21.13, the court is more likely to order a stay and impose conditions than it is to order dismissal and thus lose jurisdiction entirely. If a stay is ordered, all parties' counsel should be prepared to discuss possible conditions of the order as well as time limits for fulfilling the conditions, if appropriate. A losing plaintiff's counsel, in particular, should make every effort to have the court set definite time limits on any conditions the court imposes.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.22 F. Effect of Order on Time to File Responsive Pleading or Writ of Mandate

If the motion is brought as a special appearance, and it is denied, the defendant has 15 days to file a responsive pleading from service of a written notice of entry of the order, unless the court for good cause extends the time for an additional period not exceeding 20 days. CCP §418.10(b). Nothing in the statute prevents the parties from stipulating to additional time to file a response, and, in fact, counsel often do agree to such stipulations. However, counsel should consult local rules under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620), for limitations on such stipulations.

If the motion is brought as a special appearance, and it is denied, the defendant may choose to file a writ of mandate to review the order rather than file a responsive pleading. The petition for writ of mandate must be filed within 10 days after service of a written notice of entry of the order denying the motion, or within a further time not exceeding 20 days that the trial court may allow for good cause. Unless, on or before the last day of the defendant's time to file a responsive pleading, the defendant serves on the adverse party and files with the trial court a notice of a petition for a writ of mandate, the defendant must file a responsive pleading in the trial court within the time provided in CCP §418.10(b). CCP §418.10(c). The service and filing of the notice extends the defendant's time to plead until 10 days after service on him or her of a written notice of the final judgment in the mandate proceeding, unless the trial court for good cause extends the time for an additional period not exceeding 20 days. CCP §418.10(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.23 G. Review by Writ or Appeal

A defendant whose motion to dismiss or stay is denied may file a petition for writ of mandate to review the order. CCP §418.10. If the defendant made the motion as a special appearance under CCP 418.10, the time limits set out in that statute apply. See discussion in §21.22. The defendant may also seek review of an order denying a motion to stay or dismiss for inconvenient forum by an appeal after a judgment is entered. A & M Records, Inc. v Heilman (1977) 75 CA3d 554, 142 CR 390. A plaintiff may appeal an order staying or dismissing the action on the ground of inconvenient forum. CCP §§904.1(a)(3), 904.2(d). See generally Youngblood v Board of Supervisors (1978) 22 C3d 644, 651, 150 CR 242.

WARNING: The time to appeal an order granting a motion to dismiss for inconvenient forum may run from the date of the written order of dismissal under CCP §581d following the court's granting of the motion to dismiss on the ground of inconvenient forum. CCP §904.1(a)(3).

§21.24 V. DIAGNOSTIC QUESTIONS

Answers to the following questions may assist counsel in evaluating whether to make a motion to dismiss or stay in a particular case or in evaluating how to respond to a motion to dismiss or stay:

1. Do any of the following factors bar dismissal or stay?

- No other suitable forum
- Binding contractual agreement that the case be heard in California
- Deference to the plaintiff's choice of forum is not outweighed by other factors
- Case is based on a contract governed by CCP §410.40

2. Are any of the following factors relevant and do they weigh in favor of the moving or responding party?

- Location of the evidence, including scene, if view might be necessary or helpful
- Moving party's place of residence or principal place of business and extent of business done in each state
- Parties' relationship to California
- Relative costs of maintaining the action in California compared to the alternative forum
- Place of occurrence of transaction or event that is the subject of the suit
- Plaintiff's motive
- Burden on California courts
- Judicial efficiency
- Interest of California in providing forum for parties or in regulating situation or conduct involved
- Reasonableness of imposition of jury duty on community having no relation to case
- Relative ease of enforceability of judgment

If opposing party loses the motion:

3. Should the moving party include in its moving papers its consent to any of the following conditions of the court's granting its motion and should the responding party request that the court impose any of the following conditions on a grant of the motion?

- The moving party consents to jurisdiction and service of process in the alternative forum
- The parties stipulate to transfer to the alternative forum all discovery already conducted
- Other appropriate conditions

On motions to dismiss or stay for inconvenient forum, see CCP §§410.30-410.40, 418.10. See also 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Jurisdiction §§375-379 (5th ed 2008).

I. INTRODUCTION

§22.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses removal of actions from state to federal court. It discusses the nature of removal jurisdiction (see §§22.3-22.5), and removal of federal question cases (see §§22.6-22.15), diversity cases (see §§22.16-22.29), separate and independent claims (see §§22.30-22.33), and other claims (see §§22.34-22.38). It discusses cross-claims against plaintiffs or third parties (see §§22.39-22.40), pendent claim jurisdiction (§22.41), and actions made nonremovable by statute (see §§22.42-22.46).

It also discusses whether to seek removal (see §§22.47-22.66) and removal timing and procedures (see §§22.67-22.96), and contains a checklist of procedure for evaluating removal of the action (see §§22.97), and forms (see §§22.98-22.99).

Removal is generally governed by 28 USC §1441(a), although other statutes provide for removal (see discussion below).

Removal jurisdiction derives entirely from statute. Libhart v Santa Monica Dairy Co. (9th Cir 1979) 592 F2d 1062, 1064. There is no "federal common law" respecting removal; unless a statute permits removal, the court has no discretion to allow it. The general rule concerning removal is in 28 USC §1441(a), which provides:

> Except as otherwise expressly provided by Act of Congress, any civil action brought in a State court of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction, may be removed by the defendant or the defendants, to the district court of the United States for the district and division embracing the place where such action is pending. For purposes of removal under this chapter, the citizenship of defendants sued under fictitious names shall be disregarded.

Additional grants of removal jurisdiction for federal question and diversity of citizenship cases is specified in 28 USC §1441(b). See §§22.6-22.29. However, §1441(b) also limits general removal jurisdiction in diversity cases to those cases in which no defendant is a citizen of the state in which the action is brought. See §22.16. Subsection (b) provides:

> Any civil action of which the district courts have original jurisdiction founded on a claim or right arising under the Constitution, treatises or laws of the United States shall be removable without regard to the citizenship or residence of the parties. Any other such action shall be removable only if none of the parties in interest properly joined and served as defendants is a citizen of the State in which such action is brought.

A further grant of removal jurisdiction is in 28 USC §1441(c), which applies when removal is not possible under 28 USC §1441(a)-(b). See §§22.30-22.33. Subsection (c) provides:

> Whenever a separate and independent claim or cause of action within the jurisdiction conferred by section 1331 of this title is joined with one or more otherwise non-removable claims or causes of action, the entire case may be removed and the district court may determine all issues therein, or, in its discretion, may remand all matters in which state law predominates.

Other sections provide for removal, e.g.:

- Civil action brought in a state court against a foreign state (28 USC §1441(d); see §22.34);
- Action is commenced against an officer or agency of the United States, or a property holder whose title is derived from any such officer (28 USC §1442(a); see §22.35);
- Action in which the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is a party (as either a plaintiff or a defendant) (12 USC §1819);
- Certain actions against members of the armed forces of the United States (28 USC §1442(a); see §22.36);
- Various civil rights cases (28 USC §1443; see §22.37); and
- Foreclosure actions against the United States (28 USC §1444; see §22.38).

Certain actions are made nonremovable by 28 USC §1445 and by other statutory authority. See §§22.42-22.46. The procedure for removal is specified in 28 USC §§1446-1452. See §§22.67-22.96.

II. OVERVIEW

§22.3 A. Nature of Removal Jurisdiction

Removal jurisdiction allows defendants sued in state court to "remove" the lawsuit to federal court in certain limited, statutorily prescribed circumstances. Generally, those circumstances involve complaints that raise federal claims, or lawsuits filed against defendants who live in different states from the plaintiff who are sued in a court outside their home state for more than $75,000. Removal jurisdiction is "but one aspect of 'the primacy of the federal judiciary in deciding questions of federal law.'" Avco Corp. v Aero Lodge No. 735 (1968) 390 US 557, 560, 20 L Ed 2d 126, 88 S Ct 1235.

The general rule is that the plaintiff has the right to select the forum of plaintiff's own choosing and to prosecute the lawsuit, in his or her own way, to a conclusion. Lewis v Time, Inc. (ED Cal 1979) 83 FRD 455, 458. Removal is an exception to this general rule, forcing the plaintiff to prosecute the lawsuit in a forum other than of his or her own choosing. The rationale for removal jurisdiction is based on twin goals:

- To avoid local prejudice; and
- To guarantee vindication of federal rights.

"Success in achieving these goals is dependent upon the party's ability to obtain 'national justice' from an unbiased federal court." 83 FRD at 461.

Exercising the statutory right of removal is not without consequences to the removing party. For example, by choosing to invoke federal jurisdiction, the removing party waives immunity to which it might otherwise be entitled under the Eleventh Amendment. Lapides v Board of Regents of Univ. Sys. of Ga. (2002) 535 US 613, 152 L Ed 2d 806, 122 S Ct 1640; Embury v King (9th Cir 2004) 361 F3d 562.

For further discussion of grounds for federal jurisdiction, see chap 7.

§22.4 B. Former Derivative Rule

Until June 19, 1986, federal court jurisdiction after removal was derived from the initial jurisdiction of the state court in which the action was filed. The rule was that, for the federal court to acquire derivative jurisdiction by removal, the state court had originally to have had jurisdiction. See Mercy Hosp. Ass'n v Miccio (ED NY 1985) 604 F Supp 1177. Put another way, the jurisdiction of the district court after removal was derivative of the jurisdiction that existed in the state court when the action was originally filed. Schroeder v Trans World Airlines, Inc. (9th Cir 1983) 702 F2d 189, 192, overruled on other grounds in Moore-Thomas v Alaska Airlines, Inc. (9th Cir 2009) 553 F3d 1241, 1246.

This rule resulted in the anomaly recognized by the court in People v Kerr-McGee Chem. Corp. (7th Cir 1982) 677 F2d 571. Because removal jurisdiction was derivative, i.e., only a case properly before a state court could be removed to federal court, if the state court lacked either subject matter jurisdiction or jurisdiction over a party, a federal court could not acquire jurisdiction by removal. This result followed even if the federal court would have had jurisdiction had the action been initially brought in federal court. 677 F2d at 575.

EXAMPLE 1: A, a resident of California, sued B, a resident of New York, in a California state court on the theory of fraud and sought a recovery of $2 million. Because the case was properly filed in the state court, which had jurisdiction, and because, as discussed §§22.16-22.29, diversity jurisdiction existed, removal was proper.

EXAMPLE 2: A sued B in a California state court, seeking a declaratory judgment that B's invention of a medical laser would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art of medical lasers, and, thus, B's patent should be held invalid. B removed the action to the federal court in California. Ironically, because the federal courts have exclusive rather than just concurrent jurisdiction over patent matters, the California court never properly had jurisdiction of the matter, and, therefore, the district court could not obtain derivative or removal jurisdiction. Even though the action could properly have been filed in federal court initially, it was not, and thus was not properly removable to federal court. (Federal courts faced with this issue would usually dismiss the case. See Ethridge v Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir 1988) 861 F2d 1389, 1392 n3.)

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.5 C. Current Nonderivative Rule

The derivative rule discussed in §22.4 made little sense. If a case over which federal courts had exclusive jurisdiction was initially filed in state court and removed, and thereafter dismissed, the case could be refiled in the federal court (assuming no statute of limitations problem), and under a related case local court rule, "low-numbered" (i.e., transferred) by the district judge to whom it was assigned the second time to the district judge who dismissed it.

The doctrine of derivative jurisdiction was abolished by enactment of 28 USC §1441(e) (Ethridge v Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir 1988) 861 F2d 1389, 1392 n3), which provides:

> The court to which such civil action is removed is not precluded from hearing and determining any claim in such civil action because the State court from which such civil action is removed did not have jurisdiction over that claim.

Thus, as a result of the enactment of 28 USC 1441(e) in the second example in §22.5, the district court can now retain jurisdiction over the patent matter.

NOTE: Abolishment of the doctrine of derivative jurisdiction does not affect the general rule that only those state actions that could have been filed originally in federal court are removable. 28 USC §1441(a); Caterpillar Inc. v Williams (1987) 482 US 386, 392, 96 L Ed 2d 318, 107 S Ct 2425; Ethridge v Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir 1988) 861 F2d 1389, 1393.

III. REMOVAL OF FEDERAL QUESTION CASES

§22.6 A. Authority

Federal question jurisdiction generally exists in its present form as a result of the enactment of 28 USC §1331, which provides that "the district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States." Removal of a state civil action when federal district courts would have original jurisdiction is authorized under 28 USC §1441(a), which specifies the general rule for removal. See §22.3. Thus, a case filed in state court may generally be removed to federal court under 28 USC §1441(a) when federal question jurisdiction exists. Furthermore, removal of federal question cases over which district courts would have original jurisdiction is also authorized under 28 USC §1441(b), which essentially repeats the above quoted language of 28 USC §1331. See §22.3.

Because a case may generally be removed to federal court based on federal question jurisdiction (see §22.6), the question thus becomes: when does a case arise under the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States? Justice Holmes provided what is considered to be the first definitive answer in American Well Works Co. v Layne & Bowler Co. (1916) 241 US 257, 260, 60 L Ed 987, 36 S Ct 585: "a suit arises under the law that creates the cause of action." In another threshold decision bearing on the issue, Justice Cardozo cautioned, in Gully v First Nat'l Bank (1936) 299 US 109, 115, 81 L Ed 70, 57 S Ct 96, that "[n]ot every question of federal law emerging in a suit is proof that a federal law is the basis of the suit." Instead, as summarized by the Ninth Circuit in Hunter v United Van Lines (9th Cir 1984) 746 F2d 635, 646:

> Justice Cardozo instructed us to determine whether the federal element in the claim was "basic" as opposed to "collateral," and "necessary" as opposed to "merely possible." (Citation omitted.) Similarly, courts have looked to whether the federal element in the claim was "pivotal," (citation omitted) or "substantial," (citation omitted) as opposed to merely "incidental," (citation omitted) or whether it was "direct and essential" as opposed to "attenuated," (citation omitted) or "paramount" as opposed to "collateral" (citations omitted).

Thus, it is generally accurate to say that a case arises under the laws of the United States if the plaintiff's right to relief requires resolution of a substantial question of federal law (Brinkin v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (ND Cal 1983) 572 F Supp 236, 238), or perhaps more precisely, when the "heart" of the complaint involves federal law (Newberry v Pacific Racing Ass'n (9th Cir 1988) 854 F2d 1142, 1146), or when an "essential element" of plaintiff's claim is federal (First Nat'l Bank v Aberdeen Nat'l Bank (8th Cir 1980) 627 F2d 843, 849). For example, an action filed in state court against a national bank based on common law and state usury law may be removed to federal court because it actually arises under federal law. Beneficial Nat'l Bank v Anderson (2003) 539 US 1, 156 L Ed 2d 1, 123 S Ct 2058. A suit filed in state court under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (FLSA) (29 USC §§201-219) may also be removed to federal court. Breuer v Jim's Concrete, Inc. (2003) 538 US 691, 155 L Ed 2d 923, 123 S Ct 1882.

On federal court jurisdiction, see chap 7.

C. Determining Federal Question Removal Jurisdiction

§22.8 1. Well-Pleaded Complaint Rule

It is often said that the plaintiff is the master of plaintiff's own claim, and, as a result, may elect to plead or forgo some or all of his or her federal claims, and may choose the forum in which to bring the action. See Bright v Bechtel Petroleum, Inc. (9th Cir 1986) 780 F2d 766, 769; Schroeder v Trans World Airlines, Inc. (9th Cir 1983) 702 F2d 189, 190, overruled on other grounds in Moore-Thomas v Alaska Airlines, Inc. (9th Cir 2009) 553 F3d 1241, 1246. This concept is seminal to any removal analysis.

Because the plaintiff is considered master of his or her claims, it follows that, if a choice exists, plaintiff may choose either a federal or a state remedy for a particular wrong. If the plaintiff chooses to rely on state law, in the absence of fraud, defendant cannot be heard to complain. Teamsters Local No. 116 v Fargo-Moorhead Auto. Dealers Assoc. (D ND 1978) 459 F Supp 558, 560. See also People v Kerr-McGee Chem. Corp. (7th Cir 1982) 677 F2d 571, 575. Furthermore, the plaintiff may generally draw the complaint as plaintiff sees fit, because it is not up to the court to evaluate plaintiff's strategy as long as fraudulent concealment is not involved. Ashley v Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. (WD Tex 1976) 410 F Supp 1389, 1393. If plaintiff relies on state law, a defendant cannot remove the case to federal court unless diversity of citizenship exists (see §§22.16-22.29). 410 F Supp at 1392.

This concept, that it is the prerogative of the plaintiff to include and exclude what plaintiff wishes in his or her complaint, and therefore control and potentially defeat removal, has become known as the "well-pleaded complaint rule." Under the well-pleaded complaint rule, the federal question, which is a predicate for removal jurisdiction, "must appear from the complaint and not from any federal defense the defendant might raise to defeat the claim." Bright v Bechtel Petroleum, Inc. (9th Cir 1986) 780 F2d 766, 769. See §22.9. Whether federal jurisdiction exists is determined solely by examination of plaintiff's case, without resort to defendant's pleadings. Self v General Motors Corp. (9th Cir 1978) 588 F2d 655, 657. Thus, the complaint on its face must disclose federal question jurisdiction (Schmidt v National Org. for Women (ND Fla 1983) 562 F Supp 210, 213), and only the plaintiff's own statement of plaintiff's cause of action will be looked to under this rule (People v Glendale Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (CD Cal 1979) 475 F Supp 728, 731). Federal question jurisdiction may not be based on defendant's counterclaims. Holmes Group, Inc. v Vornado Air Circulation Sys., Inc. (2002) 535 US 826, 153 LEd2d 13, 122 S Ct 1889.

On artful pleading doctrine as a limitation to the well-pleaded complaint rule, see §§22.10-22.15.

§22.9 2. Federal Defenses Generally Irrelevant

As a corollary of the rule that removal jurisdiction must be disclosed from the face of the complaint (see §22.8), defenses are generally ignored in determining whether removal jurisdiction exists, even when the defense is based in part, or entirely, on a substantial federal question. But see §22.13 on defense of complete federal preemption.

A federal question is not created by defendant's assertion of an issue of federal law in defendant's pleadings or in the notice of removal (see People v Kerr-McGee Chem. Corp. (7th Cir 1982) 677 F2d 571, 575), nor is a federal question created by a defense based entirely on federal law (Hunter v United Van Lines (9th Cir 1984) 746 F2d 635, 639).

Aside from matters of legislative history and statutory interpretation, the rationale for this rule is that, just as a plaintiff cannot create federal jurisdiction by anticipating a defense in what would otherwise be a state court complaint, so, too, a defendant may not create removal jurisdiction by going outside the scope of the complaint, which is supposed to frame the issues. People v Glendale Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (CD Cal 1979) 475 F Supp 728, 731. When plaintiff has alleged a state-law claim, the defendant cannot transform the action into one arising under federal law merely by injecting a federal question into the action and thereby select the forum where the case will be litigated. Caterpillar Inc. v Williams (1987) 482 US 386, 399, 96 L Ed 2d 318, 107 S Ct 2425. "If a defendant could do so, the plaintiff would be master of nothing." Caterpillar Inc. v Williams, supra.

3. Artful Pleading Doctrine

§22.10 a. Exception to Well-Pleaded Complaint Rule

Generally, plaintiff is the master of plaintiff's complaint as to the law plaintiff will rely on and the forum in which to bring the action unless there is fraudulent concealment of a federal claim. See Bright v Bechtel Petroleum, Inc. (9th Cir 1986) 780 F2d 766, 769; Ashley v Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. (WD Tex 1976) 410 F Supp 1389, 1392. See also §22.8. Plaintiff cannot conceal by artful pleading the true nature of a complaint. Bright v Bechtel Petroleum, Inc., supra (780 F2d at 769). Plaintiff cannot avoid litigating in federal court what is essentially a federal claim "by artfully drafting the complaint in terms of state law." People v Kerr-McGee Chem. Corp. (7th Cir 1982) 677 F2d 571, 575. If plaintiff has essentially a federal claim but artfully drafts the complaint in terms of state law, defendant is entitled to have the case removed to federal court. People v Kerr-McGee Chem. Corp., supra (rule stated; however case remanded because complaint grounded on state law and not artfully pled to defeat removal). See Bright v Bechtel Petroleum, Inc., supra (removal to federal court held proper). This is known as the artful pleading doctrine.

Under the artful pleading doctrine, a federal district court in an appropriate case can recharacterize a plaintiff's state-law claims as federal claims, exercise jurisdiction over those claims, and proceed with the case. Hunter v United Van Lines (9th Cir 1984) 746 F2d 635, 640. The court must examine the complaint "to determine if a federal claim is necessarily presented," notwithstanding that plaintiff's complaint is couched exclusively in state law terms. Schmidt v National Org. for Women (ND Fla 1983) 562 F Supp 210, 213. The court's role in considering the propriety of removal is to pierce the veil of plaintiff's complaint and to look to the real nature of the claim asserted in the complaint regardless of how it is characterized. Ashley v Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. (WD Tex 1976) 410 F Supp 1389, 1392. "Neither artful or inartful pleading, nor inadvertence, mistake, or fraud can keep the federal courts from their appointed task of reaching the real nature of the claim asserted in plaintiff's complaint and uncovering any lurking federal question." Ashley v Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., supra.

The Ninth Circuit, calling the artful pleading doctrine a "minefield," has cautioned that the doctrine may be invoked only in limited circumstances because it "raises difficult issues of state and federal relationships and often yields unsatisfactory results." Lippitt v Raymond James Fin. Serv. (9th Cir 2003) 340 F3d 1033, 1041. Only two categories of cases should apply to the artful pleading doctrine:

- Complete preemption cases; and
- Substantial federal question cases, i.e., claims that are "necessarily federal in character."

340 F3d at 1042. See also McMaster v Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Cal. (ND Cal 2005) 392 F Supp 2d 1107 (plaintiffs' claim challenging defendant's policy of "charging" plaintiffs for certain driving trips in company vans under Lab C §2802 could not be recharacterized as artfully pled federal claim when (1) it was not equivalent to tax refund suits and (2) the potential need to interpret "commuting" under the IRC and IRS regulations did not convert the claim to a federal question).

For an example of a court recharacterizing a claim when complete federal preemption is not involved, see Salveson v Western States Bankcard Ass'n (9th Cir 1984) 731 F2d 1423, 1427 (plaintiffs first filed federal claim suits in federal court, lost, then recharacterized same claims and filed in state court; application of artful pleading doctrine and removal to federal court held proper).

For discussion of the artful pleading doctrine as a defense, see §7.19.

§22.11 b. Courts May Look Beyond Complaint for Artful Pleading

When the artful pleading doctrine is involved, the court may look to more than just the face of the complaint. See Salveson v Western States Bankcard Ass'n (9th Cir 1984) 731 F2d 1423, 1427. It has been noted that in determining the propriety of removal, in practice, courts usually consider the facts as disclosed by the whole record, rather than limiting their inquiry to the face of the complaint. Villarreal v Brown Express, Inc. (5th Cir 1976) 529 F2d 1219, 1221.

Thus, district courts have looked beyond the complaint to the petition for removal (now a notice of removal) to determine the true nature of the plaintiff's complaint, i.e., to determine whether a federal claim was necessarily involved. See, e.g., Schroeder v Trans World Airlines, Inc. (9th Cir 1983) 702 F2d 189, 191, overruled on other grounds in Moore-Thomas v Alaska Airlines, Inc. (9th Cir 2009) 553 F3d 1241, 1246 (determination of applicability of Railway Labor Act (45 USC §§151-188) from complaint and additional facts in petition for removal); Oquendo v Dorado Beach Hotel Corp. (D PR 1974) 382 F Supp 516, 518 (determination of status of party as "affecting commerce" for applicability of Labor Management Relations Act of 1947).

In addition to looking at the petition for removal, a district court on occasion has even looked to other complaints filed by other plaintiffs. See, e.g., Bright v Bechtel Petroleum, Inc. (9th Cir 1986) 780 F2d 766, 769, in which the complaint alleged a cause of action for breach of an employment contract. Plaintiff alleged a "breach of contract and a gross violation of Christian principles" in that the amount of the paychecks issued by the defendant were less than contracted for or agreed to. The court looked to background information in the petition for removal, supporting affidavits, and a complaint filed in state court by another employee using the identical above quoted language which had been removed to federal court and dismissed as frivolous shortly before plaintiff filed his complaint, in determining that plaintiff's cause of action was artfully pleaded and that it in fact challenged federal income tax withholding laws and regulations.

c. Defense of Federal Preemption

§22.12 (1) Defense of Federal Preemption Generally Insufficient as Ground for Removal

Generally, federal preemption (i.e., that federal law preempts state law in a particular field) is raised as a defense to a plaintiff's complaint. Because such a defense does not appear on the face of a well-pleaded complaint (see §22.8) it does not confer removal jurisdiction. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v Taylor (1987) 481 US 58, 63, 95 L Ed 2d 55, 107 S Ct 1542. A federal defense, including preemption, is not a basis for removal, even if plaintiff's complaint anticipates such a defense or the parties agree that the only real issue in the case is the federal defense. Caterpillar Inc. v Williams (1987) 482 US 386, 392, 96 L Ed 2d 318, 107 S Ct 2425. See §22.8. On complete preemption doctrine exception, see §22.13.

Thus, the merits of a federal preemption defense should usually in the first instance be decided by the state court "with ultimate recourse to the Supreme Court." New York v Local 115 Joint Bd. (ED NY 1976) 412 F Supp 720, 724. Under the Supremacy Clause, the state court is bound to follow federal law on the issue raised by the federal preemption defense. 412 F Supp at 724. If the defendant prevails on this issue in state court, the case will be dismissed on the merits based on federal preemption. See Hunter v United Van Lines (9th Cir 1984) 746 F2d 635, 641.

On district court's duty to remand action to state court under 28 USC §1447(c) when it lacks removal jurisdiction, see Ethridge v Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir 1988) 861 F2d 1389.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/22 Removal to Federal Court/§22.13 (2) Exception: The Complete Preemption Doctrine

§22.13 (2) Exception: The Complete Preemption Doctrine

A corollary to the well-pleaded complaint rule, known as the complete preemption doctrine, has evolved. Caterpillar Inc. v Williams (1987) 482 US 386, 393, 96 L Ed 2d 318, 107 S Ct 2425. This doctrine is an exception to the rule precluding removal based on a defense of federal preemption (see §22.12). When Congress by federal legislation completely preempts state law in a particular area, a claim purportedly based on such preempted state law is deemed from its inception to necessarily present a federal claim, and thus to arise under federal law. Caterpillar Inc. v Williams, supra; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v Taylor (1987) 481 US 58, 63, 95 L Ed 2d 55, 107 S Ct 1542. See Teamsters Local No. 116 v Fargo-Moorhead Auto. Dealers Assoc. (D ND 1978) 459 F Supp 558 (if federal legislation preempts area of law in question, plaintiff necessarily states federal cause of action although plaintiff purports to rely on state law). Such a completely preempted claim is removable from state court. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v Taylor, supra. For purposes of the well-pleaded complaint rule, the state claim is converted into a federal claim notwithstanding that in the absence of federal legislation state law would provide a cause of action. Caterpillar Inc. v Williams, supra; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v Taylor, supra. Counterclaims based on completely preempted state law do not qualify a case for federal question jurisdiction. Vaden v Discovery Bank (2009) ___US___, 173 LEd2d 206, 219, 129 S Ct 1262.

For a case in which the court found a federal question despite plaintiff's state claim characterization when no controlling state law existed concerning issue and complaint was patterned after federal cases in area, see Nance v Jackson (MD Ala 1972) 56 FRD 463 (reapportionment).

NOTE: Prior to the United States Supreme Court decision in Caterpillar Inc. v Williams (1987) 482 US 386, 393, 96 L Ed 2d 318, 107 S Ct 2425, for the artful pleading doctrine to be applied based on complete preemption and the case removed to federal court, the Ninth Circuit required both that federal law: (a) displaced state law and (b) conferred a remedy for the claim asserted. See Sullivan v First Affiliated Secs., Inc. (9th Cir 1987) 813 F2d 1368, 1372; Hunter v United Van Lines (9th Cir 1984) 746 F2d 635, 641. If federal law displaced state law but did not provide for a federal cause of action to replace the state cause of action, plaintiff could not be deemed to be avoiding a federal cause of action because none existed. Under those circumstances, federal preemption operated only as a defense and removal was improper. 746 F2d at 643.

In Caterpillar Inc. v Williams, supra, the United States Supreme Court appeared to disapprove the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals requirement for complete preemption that the federal law confer a remedy for the claim asserted, i.e., that the federal cause of action relied on by plaintiff provide plaintiff with a remedy. The Ninth Circuit opinion in that case, Williams v Caterpillar Tractor Co. (9th Cir 1986) 786 F2d 928, 932, held that removal based on the complete preemption doctrine was appropriate only when "federal law provides both a superseding remedy replacing the state law cause of action and preempts that state law cause of action," and that these two inquiries are distinct, and both must be satisfied for removal to be proper. The Supreme court, in affirming the Court of Appeals' judgment on other grounds, noted that the above analysis by the Court of Appeals was squarely contradicted by Avco Corp. v Aero Lodge No. 735 (1968) 390 US 557, 20 L Ed 2d 126, 88 S Ct 1235, in which removal was held proper although the relief sought by the plaintiff at that time could be obtained only in state court. Caterpillar Inc. v Williams (1987) 482 US 386, 391 n4, 96 L Ed 2d 318, 107 S Ct 2425. But see Ethridge v Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir 1988) 861 F2d 1389, 1395, in which the court, quoting from Young v Anthony's Fish Grottos, Inc. (9th Cir 1987) 830 F2d 993, 997 noted, that "[i]n applying the 'complete preemption' doctrine, we have emphasized that it is not enough that federal law preempts state law, federal law must also 'supplant [the state law claim] with a federal claim.'"

In Ethridge, removal based on complete preemption under §§7-8 of the National Labor Relations Act (29 USC §§157-158) was held improper. The court reasoned that §§7-8 confer original jurisdiction in the National Labor Relation Board rather than in the district court to determine plaintiff's retaliatory discharge claim for union organizing efforts. Because the district court lacked original jurisdiction, it also lacked removal jurisdiction, and thus the district court was required to remand the case to state court under 28 USC §1447(c). Ethridge v Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir 1988) 861 F2d 1389, 1396.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.14 (a) How Complete Preemption Is Determined

The court must look to the intent of Congress in enacting the legislation in question to determine if the federal law completely preempts state law in the area. Ethridge v Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir 1988) 861 F2d 1389, 1396. See Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v Taylor (1987) 481 US 58, 66, 95 L Ed 2d 55, 107 S Ct 1542 ("touchstone of the federal district court's removal jurisdiction is not the 'obviousness' of the preemption defense but the intent of Congress"). If the court determines that it was the intent of congress that the federal legislation completely preempt state law in the area, removal is appropriate. See generally Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v Taylor, supra. On the other hand, if the court finds that there was no congressional intent in enacting the legislation for complete preemption, the court must remand the case back to the state court under 28 USC §1447(c). Ethridge v Harbor House Restaurant, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.15 (b) Examples of When Complete Preemption Doctrine Applied

The defense of complete preemption giving rise to removal based on the artful pleading doctrine (see §22.13) often occurs in the area of labor relations. Several cases have upheld removal against remand motions on the basis of the complete preemption doctrine when defendant's petition (now notice) for removal claimed that a state law complaint actually hid a labor-management dispute subject to the Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA) §301 (29 USC §185) and the court found that §301 applied. See, e.g., Avco Corp. v Aero Lodge No. 735 (1968) 390 US 557, 20 L Ed 2d 126, 88 S Ct 1235 (heart of complaint involved clause in collective bargaining agreement). See generally Caterpillar Inc. v Williams (1987) 482 US 386, 393, 96 L Ed 2d 318, 107 S Ct 2425 (complete preemptive effect of §301 discussed, but §301 held inapplicable under facts, thus case not removable to federal court); Ethridge v Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir 1988) 861 F2d 1389 (case discussed in §22.13).

Removal has also been upheld in other areas based on the complete preemption doctrine. For example, in Sweeney v Morgan Driveaway, Inc. (D Colo 1975) 394 F Supp 1216, plaintiff sued in state court for breach of contract for shipment of a mobile home from one state to another, negligence, and outrageous conduct concerning the contract. The case was removed to federal court and plaintiff's motion for remand was denied. The court characterized plaintiff's complaint as stating a federal cause of action under the Carmack Amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC §20(11)). The court held that the Carmack Amendment preempted state and common law damage claims resulting from interstate shipment of goods and that federal law exclusively governs a carrier's liability in this area. On federal courts' original jurisdiction over actions arising under any act of congress regulating commerce, see 28 USC §1337). In Bright v Bechtel Petroleum, Inc. (9th Cir 1986) 780 F2d 766 (discussed in §22.11), the court applied the artful pleading doctrine to a tax case under the guise of a breach of contract claim. See Aetna Health, Inc. v Davila (2004) 542 US 200, 159 L Ed 2d 312, 124 S Ct 2488 (enforcement remedy under §502(a)(1)(b) of Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) (29 USC §1132(a)(1)(B)) is exclusive and completely preempts state law claims); Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v Taylor (1987) 481 US 58, 95 L Ed 2d 55, 107 S Ct 1542 (purported state law claims completely preempted by ERISA §502(a)(1)(b); federal court had removal jurisdiction).

In determining whether removal will be upheld, counsel must distinguish between the complete preemption doctrine, in which removal would be proper (see §22.13), and other defenses, including federal preemption, in which removal would be improper (see §§22.8-22.9, 22.12). The following two examples illustrate this distinction:

EXAMPLE 1: A sues B for intentional infliction of emotional distress and invasion of privacy, claiming that B published a statement in which he claimed that A had served six months in jail in 1967 for conspiracy to commit mail fraud. B removes, claiming that the only issue to be decided involves the First Amendment to the United States Constitution and the cases interpreting it, because A was, at the time of publication, running for the local city council, and was thus a public figure. As such, B claims that removal jurisdiction should exist under 28 USC §1441(a)-(b). Removal in this case would be improper. Invasion of privacy and intentional infliction of emotional distress are proper common law claims which have not been preempted, much less supplanted, with an elusive federal remedy, and the state courts have jurisdiction to determine defenses related to the United States Constitution and cases decided thereunder.

EXAMPLE 2: A sues B, claiming that A slipped, fell, and injured herself due to an unsafe condition on B's property. B removes, showing in her removal notice that the property on which the unsafe condition allegedly existed was an oceangoing vessel owned by B and operating in international navigable waters. B's removal is probably proper, because by the enactment of 28 USC §1333(1), Congress intended to provide for exclusive federal jurisdiction relating to admiralty and maritime cases. Moreover, the court may appropriately look to matters such as B's removal notice to ascertain the facts giving rise to removal (see §22.11).

On court exercising removal jurisdiction based on application of artful pleading doctrine (see §22.10) when state law complaint drafted to avoid stating allegations or claims resolved against plaintiff by earlier federal judgment, see Ethridge v Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir 1988) 861 F2d 1389, 1403 (preclusion effect of federal judgment always question of law).

IV. REMOVAL OF DIVERSITY CASES

§22.16 A. Diversity Removal Jurisdiction Generally; Jurisdictional Amount

In addition to federal question jurisdiction (see §§22.6-22.15), district courts have original jurisdiction based on diversity of citizenship. Original district court jurisdiction based on diversity of citizenship exists under 28 USC §1332(a) in all civil actions when the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000, exclusive of costs and interest, and is between citizens of:

- Different states;
- A state "and citizens or subjects of a foreign state"; or
- Different states "and in which citizens or subjects of a foreign state are additional parties."

Original district court jurisdiction based on diversity of citizenship also exists when the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000, exclusive of costs and interest, and is between a foreign state, defined in 28 USC §1603(a), "as plaintiff and citizens of a [s]tate or of different [s]tates." 28 USC §1332(a). Because under 28 USC §1332(a) the district courts have original jurisdiction in diversity of citizenship cases when the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000, the district courts have removal jurisdiction of such matters under 28 USC §1441(a)-(b).

However, in addition to the requirement for diversity jurisdiction that there be complete diversity between the plaintiffs and defendants (City of Indianapolis v Chase Nat'l Bank (1941) 314 US 63, 69, 86 L Ed 47, 62 S Ct 15; Stonybrook Tenants Ass'n v Alpert (D Conn 1961) 194 F Supp 552, 556), removal is proper under 28 USC §1441 only if none of the defendants properly joined and served is a citizen of the state where the action is brought. 28 USC §1441(b). Thus, if there is complete diversity between plaintiffs and defendants but one of the defendants named and served is a citizen of the state in which plaintiff brings the action, removal is improper. 28 USC §1441(b). See Hunter v Philip Morris USA (9th Cir 2009) 582 F3d 1039, 1043; Pecherski v General Motors Corp. (8th Cir 1981) 636 F2d 1156, 1160. Furthermore, if one of the defendants named in good faith, even if not served, will defeat complete diversity between plaintiffs and defendants, removal is improper. Clarence E. Morris, Inc. v Vitek (9th Cir 1969) 412 F2d 1174. See Pecherski v General Motors Corp., supra.

Moreover, for removal to be proper, diversity must exist at the time of commencement of the suit and at the time the notice of removal is filed. Gibson v Bruce (1883) 108 US 561, 27 L Ed 825, 2 S Ct 873 (decided before current notice procedure; party cannot deprive state court of jurisdiction it properly had over party by changing citizenship after suit commenced); Stonybrook Tenants Ass'n v Alpert, supra. There is an exception to this requirement, however. Diversity need not exist at the time of commencement of the suit for removal to be proper if diversity is created by an event occurring thereafter, e.g., voluntary dismissal of a party whose presence destroyed diversity. See Strasser v KLM Royal Dutch Airlines (CD Cal 1986) 631 F Supp 1254, 1256. See also §22.72; Clarence E. Morris, Inc. v Vitek, supra.

NOTE: On removal of actions brought against foreign states without regard to a jurisdictional amount under 28 USC §1441(d), see §22.34.

On original diversity jurisdiction generally, see chap 7.

B. Plaintiff as Master of Plaintiff's Complaint

§22.17 1. In General

Generally, plaintiff is the master of plaintiff's complaint and can choose the forum in which to bring the action. See §22.8. Thus, e.g., plaintiff may file a suit in state court seeking to recover a specific amount that is less than the required jurisdictional amount for diversity jurisdiction even though plaintiff is entitled to recover a greater amount and thereby prevent removal. See St. Paul Mercury Indem. Co. v Red Cab Co. (1938) 303 US 283, 294, 82 L Ed 845, 58 S Ct 586. When plaintiff seeks certain remedial relief including compensatory damages, however, whether the jurisdictional amount is sufficient for removal is determined by plaintiff's claim as shown by the record at the time the notice of removal is filed. See Harrison v Grandison Co. (ED La 1940) 34 F Supp 356. The question of jurisdiction is determined by the amount or value sought to be recovered by plaintiff, or the amount or value that the defendant will lose if plaintiff is successful with the suit. Harrison v Grandison Co., supra. See Cappa v New Jellico Coal Co. (ED Tenn 1950) 87 F Supp 369 (plaintiff sought to recover a sum not to exceed $3000 under state workers' compensation law without alleging a definite percent of disability; attempted limitation on recovery held a nullity as violative of state compensation law; jurisdictional amount present). On aggregation of amount of claims when more than one claim is alleged or when there is more than one plaintiff, see chap 7.

Plaintiff's motive in joining defendants is immaterial provided there is in good faith a cause of action against the joined defendants. Mecom v Fitzsimmons Drilling Co. (1931) 284 US 183, 189, 76 L Ed 233, 52 S Ct 84. Thus, plaintiff may join defendants to avoid federal jurisdiction. Mecom v Fitzsimmons Drilling Co., supra. Although plaintiff is the master of plaintiff's complaint, plaintiff cannot destroy the requisite diversity of citizenship for removal jurisdiction, however, by the fraudulent joinder of parties. See §§22.19-22.21. Nor can plaintiff defeat removal jurisdiction by joinder of formal or unnecessary parties. Salem Trust Co. v Manufacturers' Fin. Co. (1924) 264 US 182, 189, 68 L Ed 628, 44 S Ct 266. In determining whether there is the requisite diversity for removal jurisdiction, the court will disregard the citizenship of nominal or formal parties and consider only the citizenship of indispensable and necessary parties. Stonybrook Tenants Ass'n v Alpert (D Conn 1961) 194 F Supp 552, 556. The court will also disregard the citizenship of fraudulently joined parties. See §22.19. On court looking beyond complaint to determine issue of diversity, see §22.21.

There is no ground for removal if, before a notice of removal is filed (see §22.76), plaintiff who commenced a state court action seeking damages in excess of the jurisdictional amount required for removal amends its complaint to seek a reduced sum below the jurisdictional amount required for removal. It is immaterial that plaintiff's object in reducing the amount sought to be recovered is to prevent removal. Anderson v Western Union Tel. Co. (ED Ark 1914) 218 F 78. On jurisdictional amount generally, see §22.16. Conversely, if, at the time of commencement of the state action, the damages sought in the complaint are less than the jurisdictional amount required for removal, and plaintiff thereafter amends the complaint to seek damages in the jurisdictional amount, the case becomes removable. Journal Pub. Co. v General Cas. Co. (9th Cir 1954) 210 F2d 202, 204.

NOTE: Historically, if after removal the amount recoverable was reduced below the jurisdictional requirement by stipulation, amendment, or otherwise, the district court was not divested of jurisdiction and proceeded with the case. St. Paul Mercury Indem. Co. v Red Cab Co. (1938) 303 US 283, 292, 82 L Ed 845, 58 S Ct 586. Plaintiff could not thereafter have the case remanded to state court. St. Paul Mercury Indem. Co. v Red Cab Co., supra. St. Paul Mercury, however, was decided before Congress amended 28 USC §1447(c) in 1988, which now provides that a court is divested of jurisdiction after removal if, by amendment, plaintiff reduces its damage request to below the jurisdictional minimum. See Villano v Kohl's Dep't Stores, Inc. (SD NY 2005) 362 F Supp 2d 418 (court granted plaintiff's motion for remand in personal injury action because, after removal, plaintiff's amended complaint no longer met the amount in controversy requirement).

Similarly, absent fraudulent joinder (see §§22.19-22.20), it appears that a plaintiff may, before a notice of removal is filed, amend the complaint to join as a defendant a citizen of the state where the action is pending and thereby defeat removal jurisdiction. See Jones v Cargill Nutrena Feed Div. (SD Ala 1987) 665 F Supp 907 (amended complaint adding nondiverse party defendant filed in state court day before appropriate state court received notice of the removal, which was filed in wrong state court; see §22.88). The plaintiff, before notice of removal is filed, may also amend a complaint to dismiss a nondiverse defendant creating diversity of citizenship even if intended as trial strategy and thereby make the case removable. See Gravitt v Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. (WD Tex 1975) 396 F Supp 948.

After a case is removed to federal court, whether a plaintiff can amend the complaint in such a way as to cause the case to be remanded to state court appears to depend on the circumstances of the case. Under 28 USC §1447(e), if plaintiff seeks to join additional defendants whose joinder would destroy jurisdiction, the court has discretion to deny joinder or to grant joinder and remand the case back to state court. Compare PG&E v Fibreboard Prods. (ND Cal 1953) 116 F Supp 377 (plaintiff could not amend complaint to add two defendants as joint tortfeasors to destroy diversity) with Ingersoll v Pearl Assur. Co. (ND Cal 1957) 153 F Supp 558 (plaintiff who failed to state cause of action against named nondiverse defendant in original state court complaint allowed to amend complaint after removal when allegations in amended complaint showed named defendant was an indispensable party; plaintiff's motion to remand case granted) and Heintz v Ohio Cas. Ins. Co. (SD Cal 1953) 112 F Supp 199 (following removal, plaintiff filed first amended complaint adding two defendants who were not formal or nominal parties, or necessary or indispensable parties; pleadings silent as to citizenship of defendants but suggested that they like plaintiff were California citizens; court held that it would remand case unless within 30 days it could be shown by appropriate pleadings, or dismissal of nondiverse defendants by plaintiff, that diversity existed). However, the addition, after removal, of a necessary party who is a citizen of the forum state but does not otherwise destroy diversity does not require remand. Spencer v United States Dist. Court (9th Cir 2004) 393 F3d 867.

On rule requiring that a case remain in state court unless plaintiff by voluntary act brings about a change rendering case removable, see Self v General Motors Corp. (9th Cir 1978) 588 F2d 655, 657 (final judgment on merits dismissing one defendant not basis for removal; only plaintiff's voluntary act can bring about removal). See also §22.72.

3. Effect of Fraudulent Joinder

§22.19 a. Does Not Defeat Diversity

Although plaintiff as master of the complaint can select the forum in which to bring the action (see §22.17), a plaintiff cannot fraudulently join a resident defendant having no real connection with the controversy to prevent removal. Wilson v Republic Iron & Steel Co. (1921) 257 US 92, 97, 66 L Ed 144, 42 S Ct 35. Fraudulent joinder is a term of art that does not reflect on plaintiff or plaintiff's counsel. Morris v Princess Cruises, Inc. (9th Cir 2001) 236 F3d 1061, 1067; Lewis v Time, Inc. (ED Cal 1979) 83 FRD 455, 460. Rather, fraudulent joinder is the rubric applied when the court determines that plaintiff has not stated a cause of action against a nondiverse defendant, "or in fact no cause of action exists." Morris v Princess Cruises, Inc., supra; Lewis v Time, Inc., supra. If there can be no recovery under state law for the cause of action alleged or under the facts alleged, and the failure is obvious according to the settled rules of the state (Morris v Princess Cruises, Inc., supra), or there is no intention to secure a joint judgment, the joinder is deemed fraudulent (Parks v New York Times Co. (5th Cir 1962) 308 F2d 474, 478; Lewis v Time, Inc., supra). See also Hunter v Philip Morris USA (9th Cir 2009) 582 F3d 1039, 1043. Thus, courts are not required to delve into the plaintiff's state of mind, or that of plaintiff's counsel, in order to determine a fraudulent intent.

If, in a case removed to federal court, the plaintiff's complaint has stated a cause of action against the nondiverse defendant and any failure to do so is not obvious according to the settled law of the state, then remand is appropriate. See Hunter v Philip Morris USA (9th Cir 2009) 582 F3d 1039. In Hunter, the plaintiff's product liability suit against a cigarette manufacturer and a local merchant had been removed to federal court on grounds of federal diversity jurisdiction; defendants argued and the trial court found that because plaintiff's claims against the state defendant were impliedly preempted by the congressional policy favoring the legality of cigarettes, the state defendant had been fraudulently joined. The Ninth Circuit disagreed, stating that the defense of implied preemption could not be used as a basis for finding fraudulent joinder, and, even if it could, the attempt here was unsuccessful because preemption requires inquiry into the merits of plaintiff's claims against all the defendants and an analysis of federal law. Plaintiff had stated a claim against the merchant under Alaska state law, and the Ninth Circuit refused to find preemption in the absence of clear evidence of conflict between state and federal law.

When fraudulent joinder is present, the court may disregard fraudulently joined parties in determining diversity and retain jurisdiction. Morris v Princess Cruises, Inc., supra; Lewis v Time, Inc., supra. On court piercing the pleadings and considering entire record to determine basis for joinder, see §22.21.

On alleging facts rather than deductions and proving fraudulent joinder by clear and convincing evidence, see §§22.19-22.20.

§22.20 b. Standard Court Applies to Determine if Liability Exists Under State Law

Some courts apply the standard that before fraudulent joinder will be found the court must determine that there is no "arguably reasonable basis" under the alleged facts for predicting that state law might impose liability on the joined resident defendant. See Tedder v FMC Corp. (5th Cir 1979) 590 F2d 115. If there is an arguably reasonable basis for joinder, the joinder is proper; if no arguably reasonable basis exists, the joinder is fraudulent and lack of diversity will not prevent removal. See Tedder v FMC Corp., supra. Other courts impose an even more rigorous standard, requiring that there be a "reasonable certainty that no possible liability exists" before making such a finding. Voors v National Women's Health Org. (ND Ind 1985) 611 F Supp 203, 208. If only a possibility that a right to relief exists, no finding of fraudulent joinder will be made (Voors v National Women's Health Org., supra) and the joined defendant's citizenship will be considered and thus prevent removal because of lack of diversity of citizenship.

In Lewis v Time, Inc. (ED Cal 1979) 83 FRD 455, 460, the court noted that some courts have applied an "any doubt standard," i.e., that a case must be remanded "if there is any doubt whatsoever regarding the sufficiency or good faith of the plaintiff's allegations." The Lewis court rejected that standard, noting that no Ninth Circuit court had held it to apply. 83 FRD at 661. Rather in Lewis, a defamation action involving First Amendment considerations, the court applied a "reasonable basis" standard similar to that applied in Tedder v FMC Corp., supra, i.e., whether on the facts involved there was a reasonable basis to predict that state law might impose liability. 83 FRD at 463. The court concluded that under the facts as alleged, a prima facie showing of fraudulent joinder had been made and the joined defendant would be disregarded for joinder purposes. The court denied plaintiff's remand motion, but noted that the court would entertain another remand motion, if plaintiff could demonstrate at any time before trial that a bona fide claim had been stated against the joined defendant or that facts existed that raised a real possibility of liability. 83 FRD at 466. See Goldberg v CPC Int'l, Inc. (ND Cal 1980) 495 F Supp 233, 239 (courts have found fraudulent joinder when there was "no reasonable basis in fact or colorable ground supporting the claim against the joined defendant, or no real intention in good faith to prosecute the action against that defendant or seek a joint judgment").

On alleging facts rather than deductions and proving fraudulent joinder by clear and convincing evidence, see §§22.19-22.20.

§22.21 C. Defendant's Burden to Establish Diversity; When Court May Look Beyond Complaint

When removal is contested, by a motion to remand (see §22.92), on the ground of lack of diversity of citizenship, the defendant that removed the case has the burden of proving that the action is wholly between citizens of different states. Wilson v Republic Iron & Steel Co. (1921) 257 US 92, 97, 66 L Ed 144, 42 S Ct 35; Hunter v Philip Morris USA (9th Cir 2009) 582 F3d 1039, 1042 (defendant has burden of establishing that removal is proper); Goldberg v CPC Int'l, Inc. (ND Cal 1980) 495 F Supp 233, 236. Similarly, the removing defendant has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the amount in controversy exceeds the jurisdictional amount when the complaint does not specify the amount of damages. Wilson v Republic Iron & Steel Co., supra; Sanchez v Monumental Life Ins. Co. (9th Cir 1996) 102 F3d 398 (rejecting "converse legal certainty" test of Hale v Billups of Gonzales, Inc. (MD La 1985) 610 F Supp 162).

In determining the basis for joinder, i.e., whether there was fraudulent joinder designed to defeat diversity (see §22.19), the court may look beyond the complaint and consider the entire record. Lewis v Time, Inc. (ED Cal 1979) 83 FRD 455, 460. On the standard applied by the court to determine if liability exists under state law, see §22.20. On artful pleading exception to the well-pleaded complaint rule concerning federal question jurisdiction, see §22.10.

NOTE: The jurisdictional amount in diversity cases is in excess of $75,000. 28 USC §1332. Consequently, no limited civil case (see chap 6) and not all claims classified as unlimited civil cases meet the threshold for diversity jurisdiction. When the jurisdictional amount is contested, a defendant seeking to remove based on diversity jurisdiction must show by a preponderance of the evidence that this component of diversity jurisdiction exists. Sanchez v Monumental Life Ins. Co. (9th Cir 1996) 102 F3d 398, 404. If the amount in controversy is not specified in the complaint, the court may look to "other papers" to determine the amount in controversy. See, e.g., Birkenbuel v M.C.C. Constr. Co. (D Mont 1997) 962 F Supp 1305, 1306.

Under the former petition for removal procedure, fraudulent joinder had to be alleged with particularity. The petition had to show facts leading to the conclusion of fraudulent joinder apart from the pleader's deductions. Wilson v Republic Iron & Steel Co. (1921) 257 US 92, 97, 66 L Ed 144, 42 S Ct 35; Goldberg v CPC Int'l, Inc. (ND Cal 1980) 495 F Supp 233, 239; Rinehart v Consolidation Coal Co. (ND WVa 1987) 660 F Supp 1140. Presumably, the rule is the same under the current notice procedure. On burden to prove fraudulent joinder by clear and convincing evidence, see Parks v New York Times Co. (5th Cir 1962) 308 F2d 474, 478; Rinehart v Consolidation Coal Co., supra. On preparation of notice of removal generally, see §22.76.

D. Special Rules on Citizenship

Citizenship for the purpose of diversity of citizenship is equated with the individual's domicile (see Kantor v Wellesley Galleries, Ltd. (9th Cir 1983) 704 F2d 1088, 1090) not his or her residence (see Mantin v Broadcast Music, Inc. (9th Cir 1957) 244 F2d 204).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.23 2. Doe Defendants

Congress, in enacting the Judicial Improvements and Access to Justice Act, added a sentence to 28 USC §1441(a) providing that the citizenship of defendants sued under fictitious names must be disregarded for the purpose of removal. Thus, Bryant v Ford Motor Co. (9th Cir 1987) 844 F2d 602, in which the court held that presence of Doe defendants per se destroys diversity jurisdiction, was legislatively overruled (see Ehrlich v Oxford Ins. Co. (ND Cal 1988) 700 F Supp 495) and Bryant was later vacated (see 886 F2d 1526). Doe defendants are now to be disregarded entirely and thus can never prevent removal based on diversity. On problems that may arise under the rule, see Siegel, Commentary on 1988 Revision, 28 USC §1441(a). On retroactive effect of rule concerning one-year limitation period for removal in diversity cases, see cases cited in §22.73.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.24 3. Corporations

A corporation, for the purpose of diversity jurisdiction under 28 USC §§1332 and removal jurisdiction under 28 USC §1441, is deemed to be a citizen of the state in which it is incorporated, and the state where its principal place of business is located. 28 USC §1332(c); R.G. Barry Corp. v Mushroom Makers, Inc. (2d Cir 1979) 612 F2d 651, 654.

Corporate citizenship for purposes of diversity differs from whether a corporation is "doing business" in a state for purposes of that state's "long-arm statute." Citizenship for purposes of diversity also differs from the question of the propriety of venue. Thus, "[a] corporation, by qualifying to do business in a state and by consenting to be sued in the courts of that state, does not become a citizen of that state for diversity purposes, nor does it waive its right to a removal to the federal court." Sugar Corp. v Environeering, Inc. (D PR 1981) 520 F Supp 996, 999.

Determining corporate citizenship by ascertaining the state of incorporation should usually pose no problem. Determining corporate citizenship by ascertaining the state in which the corporation's principal place of business is located may be more difficult. Federal courts generally use either the "place of operations" test or the "nerve center test" to determine a corporation's principal place of business. Tosco Corp. v Communities for a Better Env't (9th Cir 2001) 236 F3d 495, 502.

For further discussion of diversity jurisdiction over corporations, see §§7.57-7.59.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.25 4. Partnerships

Unlike corporations that may, at most, be the citizen of two states (the state of incorporation, and, if different, the state of the company's principal place of business (see §22.24)), a partnership for purposes of diversity "is a citizen of each state of which a general partner is a citizen." Lewis v Odell (2d Cir 1974) 503 F2d 445, 446. The citizenship of the partnership does not change if there is a post-filing change in the citizenship of its partners. Grupo Dataflux v Atlas Global Group, LP (2004) 541 US 567, 158 L Ed 2d 866, 124 S Ct 1920 (post-filing change in citizenship of one party does not cure defect in diversity jurisdiction).

When the partnership also contains limited partners, there is conflict in the circuits as to whether the citizenship of the limited partners is also considered in determining diversity jurisdiction, i.e., whether the partnership is also a citizen of each state of which a limited partner is a citizen. See §7.61. There is no Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals opinion directly on point. However, in Finalco Equip. Invs. X, LP v Welch (ND Cal 1989) 718 F Supp 1446, the court held that the citizenship of limited partners is relevant for diversity purposes and is to be considered along with the citizenship of the general partners in determining diversity jurisdiction. See Boulder Creek Co. v Maruko Inc. (CD Cal 1991) 772 F Supp 1150, 1153 (no diversity between limited partnership member and partnership or other member); Sage Investors v Group W Cable, Inc. (D Ariz 1986) 666 F Supp 186, 188 (citizenship of limited partners considered); Windward City Ctr. v Trans-America Occidental Life Ins. Co. (D Haw 1985) 613 F Supp 1216, 1219 (citizenship of limited partners considered). Thus, it appears that within the Ninth Circuit the presence of a limited partner plaintiff who has the same citizenship as a defendant will defeat diversity jurisdiction despite the fact that the general partners' citizenship differs from that of defendants. See Finalco Equip. Invs. X, LP v Welch, supra.

NOTE: There is no limit to the number of states that a partnership may be a citizen of and, depending on the number of general and limited partners, diversity jurisdiction could become an impossibility. On requirement to allege citizenship of each partner to establish diversity jurisdiction, see Fifty Assocs. v Prudential Ins. Co. (9th Cir 1970) 446 F2d 1187, 1190 (insufficient allegations for diversity jurisdiction). See also §22.27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.26 5. Joint Ventures

It has been held that, for diversity jurisdiction purposes, citizenship of a joint venture is determined by the citizenship of its individual members. Universal Steel & Metal Co. (1975) Ltd. v Railco (D Vt 1978) 465 F Supp 7, 9 (joint venture formed by two corporations).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.27 6. Unincorporated Associations

For diversity jurisdiction purposes, an unincorporated association is deemed a citizen of each state in which it has a member that is a citizen. United Steelworkers of Am. v Bouligny (1965) 382 US 145, 15 L Ed 2d 217, 86 S Ct 272 (unincorporated labor organization). Thus, when an unincorporated association is a party to a suit and the state citizenship of any of its members is the same as the state citizenship of any opposing party, diversity jurisdiction is lacking in the federal district court and removal is improper on that basis. Baer v United Servs. Auto. Ass'n (2d Cir 1974) 503 F2d 393, 395. See generally Finalco Equip. Invs. X, LP v Welch (ND Cal 1989) 718 F Supp 1446, 1448 (all members of unincorporated association must be diverse from opposing party). This rule may make it impossible to obtain diversity jurisdiction over large unincorporated associations, particularly when their operations are interstate.

NOTE: Because unincorporated associations are citizens of all states in which their members are domiciled, the party seeking to obtain diversity jurisdiction must plead the citizenship of its individual members to ensure federal jurisdiction. For example, in Baer v United Servs. Auto. Ass'n (2d Cir 1974) 503 F2d 393, 397, the court ruled that because the citizenship of the members of the association were not alleged, the complaint was defective in that it failed to show diversity of citizenship on its face and thus failed to negate the possibility that diversity did not exist. See also Fifty Assocs. v Prudential Ins. Co. (9th Cir 1970) 446 F2d 1187, 1190 (rule stated that "citizenship of each member of an unincorporated association must be alleged").

Until recently, diversity jurisdiction did not extend to controversies between aliens, i.e., diversity was lacking when both the plaintiff and defendant were aliens. See Trinanes v Schulte (SD NY 1970) 311 F Supp 812. Similarly, the presence of aliens on both sides of a controversy to which a citizen of a state of the United States was also a party destroyed diversity jurisdiction based on 28 USC §1332(a)(2). Corporation Venezolana de Fomento v Vintero Sales Corp. (2d Cir 1980) 629 F2d 786, 790; Trans World Hosp. Supplies Ltd. v Hospital Corp. (MD Tenn 1982) 542 F Supp 869. The Judicial Improvements and Access to Justice Act enacted on November 19, 1988, has modified 28 USC §1332(a). As modified, 28 USC §1332(a) provides that, for the purposes of 28 USC §§1332(a), 1335, and 1441 (removal), an alien admitted to the United States for permanent residence is deemed a citizens of the state in which the alien is domiciled. Thus, diversity may now exist between aliens if either a plaintiff or a defendant is an alien who has been admitted to the United States as a permanent resident because the alien "qualifies as a citizen of the state in which he [or she] is in fact domiciled" (unless such a grant of jurisdiction is held to violate US Const art III, §2). Siegel, Commentary on 1988 Revision, 28 USCA §1332.

For further discussion, see §§7.63-7.64.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.29 8. States

For the purposes of diversity jurisdiction a state is not a citizen. See Moor v County of Alameda (1973) 411 US 693, 717, 36 L Ed 2d 596, 93 S Ct 1785. Therefore, when a state is a real party in interest to a lawsuit there can be no removal based on diversity jurisdiction because a state is not a citizen as required by the removal statute. People v Kerr-McGee Chem. Corp. (7th Cir 1982) 677 F2d 571, 575 n5; Glenmede Trust Co. v Dow Chem. Co. (ED Penn 1974) 384 F Supp 423, 431. This rule precluding removal also applies when a party is named in the action who actually represents a state and the state is the real party in interest in the action. 384 F Supp at 431.

NOTE: A "municipal subdivision of a state, such as a county, city, town or school district, having a separate corporate entity, is a citizen" for the purposes of diversity jurisdiction and removal. Oklahoma v Oklahoma Natural Gas Corp. (10th Cir 1936) 83 F2d 986, 988. See Moor v County of Alameda, supra (political subdivision of state, unless simply arm or alter ego of state, is citizen of state for diversity jurisdiction purposes).

Congress' enactment of the Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 (CAFA) (Pub L 109-2, 119 Stat 4) amended 28 USC §1332(d) to ease the diversity jurisdiction requirements for certain class suits. See discussion in §7.67. For example, CAFA confers diversity jurisdiction over class actions when the aggregate amount in controversy exceeds $5 million and at least one plaintiff is a citizen of a state or foreign state different from that of any defendant. 28 USC §1332(d)(2)(A)-(C). See Berry v American Express Publishing Corp. (CD Cal 2005) 381 F Supp 2d 1118 (remand granted when plaintiff's class action for injunctive relief did not meet $5 million minimum requirement under CAFA).

CAFA also extended federal removal jurisdiction to "mass actions," which are any civil actions in which 100 or more people propose to be treated jointly and the other jurisdictional requirements are met, e.g., the aggregate amount in controversy exceeds $5 million and at least one plaintiff is a citizen of a state or foreign country different from any defendant. 27 USC §1332(d)(11); Tanoh v Dow Chem. Co. (9th Cir 2009) 561 F3d 945. The "mass action" provision is fairly narrow. 561 F3d at 953 (case remanded to state court when none of seven separate actions had more than 100 plaintiffs and thus were not "mass actions" under CAFA).

NOTE: Federal removal jurisdiction in a "mass action" is limited to those plaintiffs whose claims meet the $75,000 amount in controversy requirement for federal diversity jurisdiction. 28 USC §1332(d)(11)(B)(i). The Ninth Circuit has not decided whether this means that 100 or more plaintiffs must individually satisfy the $75,000 amount in controversy requirement. 561 F3d at 953 n4.

V. REMOVAL OF SEPARATE AND INDEPENDENT CLAIMS

§22.30 A. General Rule

Beginning on December 1, 1990, whenever a separate and independent claim or cause of action that is "within the jurisdiction conferred by [28 USC §]1331" (i.e., within the district court's federal question jurisdiction; see §§7.15-7.32) is joined with one or more nonremovable claims or causes of action, the entire case may be removed to the federal court, which then has discretion either to (1) determine all issues in the case or (2) "remand [to the state court] all matters in which state law predominates." 28 USC §1441(c).

NOTE: Before December 1, 1990, a separate and independent claim or cause of action was also removable if it "would [have been] removable if sued on alone," and the district court's discretion to remand was limited to "matters not otherwise within its original jurisdiction."

Prior legislative history. Before 1866, there was no provision for removal concerning separable controversies in a suit between multiple parties. If an entire suit could not be removed because the requisite diversity of jurisdiction was lacking, no part of the suit could be removed. See Barney v Latham (1881) 103 US 205, 26 L Ed 514. This rule changed with enactment of the Separable Controversy Act of 1866 (14 Stat 306), which authorized removal of a separable controversy, assuming the requisite diversity of citizenship was present. See Barney v Latham, supra. Under the Act, defendants whose citizenship was different from that of plaintiffs were authorized to remove to federal court "a separable controversy" in a suit between them while the remainder of the action, between citizens of the same state, remained in the state court. See Barney v Latham, supra. See also 14C Wright, Miller & Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure, Removal From State Courts §3724 (3d ed 1998). This rule was modified in 1875 by the Judiciary Act of 1875 (18 Stat 470), which provided that when a separable controversy was contained in the action, the entire action rather than just the severable controversy was required to be removed to federal court. See Barney v Latham, supra. See also 14A Wright, Miller & Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure, Removal From State Courts §3724.

In 1948, the law was changed again to require for removability that the claim or cause of action that would be removable if sued on alone be not just "separable," but "separate and independent" from the otherwise nonremovable claims. 62 Stat 937. One of the purposes of Congress in enacting 28 USC §1441(c) was to limit removal from state courts. American Fire & Cas. Co. v Finn (1951) 341 US 6, 10, 95 L Ed 702, 71 S Ct 534. See Lewis v Time, Inc. (ED Cal 1979) 83 FRD 455, 458. See also Thornton v Allstate Ins. Co. (ED Mich 1980) 492 F Supp 645, 648 (in light of congressional policy to limit litigation removed to federal court, few cases deemed to fulfill separate and independent claim or cause of action requirement).

Under 28 USC §1441(c), the removable claim or cause of action giving rise to jurisdiction must be separate and independent from the nonremovable claims or causes of action. Separate and independent connotes an entirely distinct controversy that differs from and is not dependent on the other causes of action. See Voors v National Women's Health Org. (ND Ind 1985) 611 F Supp 203, 209. A claim is deemed separate and independent if (1) it involves an actionable wrong that is separate from the other claims and (2) complete relief may be rendered concerning it "without reference to the other claims and without the presence of the parties to the other claims." Ehrlich v Oxford Ins. Co. (ND Cal 1988) 700 F Supp 495, 497.

Conversely, there is no separate and independent claim or cause of action under §1441(c) when a plaintiff seeks relief for a single wrong "arising from an interlocked series of transactions." American Fire & Cas. Co. v Finn (1951) 341 US 6, 14, 95 L Ed 702, 708, 71 S Ct 534. Plaintiffs cannot parlay a single wrong into a separate and independent claim or cause of action by multiplying legal theories seeking relief "or by multiplying defendants against whom a remedy is sought for the same injury." Clarence E. Morris, Inc. v Vitek (9th Cir 1969) 412 F2d 1174, 1176. It is immaterial that some counts sound in contract and others in tort, particularly when only a single recovery against different defendants would be permitted. Sessions v Chrysler Corp. (9th Cir 1975) 517 F2d 759. Whether there is a single wrong is determined by examination of whether or not a single primary right of plaintiff was invaded, not by the number of alleged different causes of action. American Fire & Cas. Co. v Finn (1951) 341 US 6, 13, 95 L Ed 702, 798, 71 S Ct 534; Addison v Gulf Coast Contracting Servs. (5th Cir 1984) 744 F2d 494, 500. The court will look to plaintiff's pleadings to determine if a claim is separate and independent and properly removable under 28 USC §1441(c). American Fire & Cas. Co. v Finn (1951) 341 US 6, 14, 95 L Ed 702, 709, 71 S Ct 534; Boggs v Lewis (9th Cir 1988) 863 F2d 662. For cases in which no separate claim or cause of action was found, see Chappell v SCA Servs. (CD Ill 1982) 540 F Supp 1087, 1093 (single wrong); Teleco, Inc. v Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. (WD Okla 1973) 392 F Supp 690 (single incident); McKinney v Rodney C. Hunt Co. (WD NC 1978) 464 F Supp 59, 64 (series of interwoven transactions).

NOTE: What constitutes a separate and independent claim or cause of action is determined by federal law. In diversity cases, state law applies to determine the nature or character of plaintiff's claim and federal law applies to determine whether the separate and independent standard of 28 USC §1441(c) has been met. Thornton v Allstate Ins. Co. (ED Mich 1980) 492 F Supp 645, 648.

§22.32 C. Effect of Rule When Federal Question Involved

Removal under 28 USC §1441(c) has been limited, since December 1, 1990, to separate and independent claims or causes of action within the district court's federal question jurisdiction. See §22.30. Therefore, previously decided cases that suggested restrictions on federal question removals may now be of little precedential value. See, e.g., Owen Equip. & Erection Co. v Kroger (1978) 437 US 365, 371, 57 L Ed 2d 274, 98 S Ct 2396, in which the court specified that as a constitutional minimum requirement a federal and state claim must arise from a "common nucleus of operative facts" for the federal court to have jurisdiction over the pendent state claim (absent diversity); American Fire & Cas. Co. v Finn (1951) 341 US 6, 14, 95 L Ed 702, 71 S Ct 534, holding that no separate and independent claim or cause of action arises from an interlocked series of transactions (see §22.31); Contemporary Servs. Corp. v Universal City Studios, Inc. (CD Cal 1987) 655 F Supp 885, 890, which notes (in n6) that removal of the entire case under 28 USC §1441(a) creates a constitutional problem because no separate and independent claim arises from a "common nucleus of operative facts," which would mean that instances in which a federal claim is removable under 28 USC §1441(c) are very limited, and holding that when plaintiffs pleaded a federal claim against certain but not all defendants and pendent state claims arising from a common nucleus of operative facts against the defendants, 28 USC §1441(c) did not bar removability of the case to federal court and that removal was proper under 28 USC §1441(a)-(b) rather than under §1441(c). But see Shaw v Lady Pac., Inc. (D Alaska 1983) 577 F Supp 2, in which the court held that 28 USC §1441(c) barred removal of an otherwise removable claim that was not separate and independent from a nonremovable claim. See also Kinsey v Nestor Exploration Ltd. (ED Wash 1985) 604 F Supp 1365 (28 USC §1441(c) bars removal).

§22.33 D. Applicability of Rule When Diversity of Citizenship Involved

When federal court jurisdiction in a case is based on diversity of citizenship, not on the presence of a federal question, it appears that—especially since December 1, 1990 (see §22.30)—removal must be accomplished under 28 USC §1441(a)-(b), without the possibility of assistance from 28 USC §1441(c).

NOTE: It has been suggested that removal under §1441(c) in diversity cases might serve the purpose of permitting removal when a plaintiff has, through inadvertence or improper design, named a nondiverse defendant in addition to the defendants against whom the suit ought to have been limited.

Even before the 1990 change in §1441(c), the instances in which it provided a basis for removal were rare. See, e.g., discussion in Marriage of Pardee (CD Cal 1976) 408 F Supp 666, 668 (circumstances under §1441(c) when removal can be effected "are notoriously rare"); Lewis v Time, Inc. (ED Cal 1979) 83 FRD 455, 459 (joinder practice "generally negates section 1441(c) jurisdiction"). Whether removal under 28 USC §1441(c) is proper depends on the joinder of claims not on the joinder of parties. See McKinney v Rodney C. Hunt Co. (WD NC 1978) 464 F Supp 59, 63, illustrating a claim that was held not to be separate and independent and thus nonremovable under 28 USC §1441(c). But see Boggs v Lewis (9th Cir 1988) 863 F2d 662, in which separate and independent claims were found in the following situation: plaintiff brought a negligence action against one defendant, seeking compensation for medical expenses, loss of wages, and loss of earning capacity arising from injuries allegedly caused during a collision. Plaintiff also joined a bad faith claim against defendant's insurer, seeking emotional distress damages from the insurer for refusal in good faith to settle the claim based on the underlying accident in violation of a state statute. The court found that plaintiff's claims involved substantially different transactions and different relief in that one claim was for negligence whereas the claim against the insurer involved the insurer's conduct and events occurring after the accident. The court concluded that the claims were separate for purposes of 28 USC §1441(c) and therefore removal was proper.

NOTE: After removal under 28 USC §1441(c), there may be instances when it is appropriate for a defendant to move to be dropped as a party under Fed R Civ P 21 based on misjoinder of parties. On joinder of defendants generally in state court actions, see CCP §379. See also chap 14. On failure to raise objection of misjoinder of parties by demurrer or answer waiving objection in state court actions, see CCP §430.80. On when there is a waiver of the right to remove by acts done by defendant in state court generally, see §22.74. As seen in Boggs v Lewis, supra, there appears to be a small area in which claims are sufficiently related as to allow joinder but sufficiently distinct to not be interlocked and thus permit removal.

VI. REMOVAL OF OTHER CLAIMS

§22.34 A. Actions Against Foreign States

Under 28 USC §1441(d), any civil action brought in a state court against a foreign state as defined in 28 USC §1603(a) may be removed by the foreign state to the district court "embracing the place where such action is pending." Under 28 USC §1603(a), except as used in 28 USC §1608, a "foreign state" includes not only foreign governments themselves, but also any political subdivision of such a government, as well as any agency or instrumentality of a foreign government as defined in 28 USC §1603(b). On removal there is no right to a jury trial and the action must be tried by the court. 28 USC §1441(d).

PRACTICE TIP: When considering the scope of institutions that may be agencies or instrumentalities of foreign governments, one should not be limited by the general concepts of private ownership common to the American free enterprise system. In many countries, airlines, rail systems, heavy industries, and other businesses are owned or run by the government and may constitute agencies or instrumentalities of that government so as to warrant removal under 28 USC §1441(d).

NOTE: When removal is based on 28 USC §1441(d), for good cause shown, the time limitations of 28 USC §1446(b) may be enlarged at any time. 28 USC §1441(d).

§22.35 B. Actions Against Federal Officers

Generally, a civil action or criminal prosecution commenced in state court against federal officers is removable by such federal officers to the federal court for the district and division in which the state court is located. See 28 USC §1442. The term "federal officers" is not confined to law enforcement officials, but instead covers a wide range of persons employed by the federal government.

The persons who may remove the case to federal court are specified in 28 USC §1442(a) as follows:

> (1) The United States or any agency thereof or any officer (or any person acting under that officer) of the United States or any agency thereof, sued in an official or individual capacity for any act under color of such office or on account of any right, title or authority claimed under any Act of Congress for the apprehension or punishment of criminals or the collection of the revenue;
> (2) A property holder whose title is derived from any such officer where such action or prosecution affects the validity of any law of the United States;
> (3) Any officer of the courts of the United States, for any Act under color of office or in the performance of his duties;

A person "acting under" a federal officer must assist, or help carry out, the duties or tasks of the federal officer. Watson v Philip Morris Cos. (2007) 551 US 142, 168 L Ed 2d 42, 50, 127 S Ct 2301. A company is not acting under a federal officer if a federal regulatory agency supervises and monitors "in great detail" the company's activities. Watson v Philip Morris Cos., supra.

When an alien has commenced a personal action in state court against a citizen who is not a state resident and who at the time of the action's accrual was a civil officer of the United States, and jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant has been obtained by personal service, the defendant can remove the case to the federal district court for the district and division where the defendant was served. 28 USC §1442(b).

NOTE: Unlike removal under 28 USC §1441, when a state court suit is for an act done under color of federal office, the right to removal under 28 USC §1442(a) is absolute regardless of whether the suit could be originally brought in federal court. The basis for federal jurisdiction is the "federal interest in the matter." Willingham v Morgan (1969) 395 US 402, 406, 23 L Ed 2d 396, 89 S Ct 1813, quoting Poss v Lieberman (2d Cir 1962) 299 F2d 358, 359. Moreover, the defendant need not have the status of a federal officer at the time suit is commenced to remove the case to federal court. Rather, the test is whether, at the time the incident complained of occurred, the defendant was a federal officer within the meaning of 28 USC §1442(a). Camero v Kostos (D NJ 1966) 253 F Supp 331, 335.

Merely filing a cross-complaint against the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC) does not enable the cross-complainant or other defendants to obtain removal; without a motion to remove by the RTC, the case must remain in state court. California v Keating (9th Cir 1993) 986 F2d 346.

For a case in which a removable claim under 28 USC §1442, and nonremovable claims regardless of the relationship between them and the §1442 claim, was removed to federal court, see National Audubon Soc'y v Department of Water & Power (ED Cal 1980) 496 F Supp 499, 508 (word "person" in statute construed to encompass government's agencies).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.36 C. Action Against Military Personnel

A member of the armed forces against whom a state civil action or criminal prosecution is commenced charging that member with liability on account of acts done under color of his or her office or status, or in respect to which he or she claims any right, title, or authority under United States law concerning the armed forces, or under the law of war, may remove the case under 28 USC §1442a to the federal district court for the district where the matter is pending at any time before the trial or final hearing of the matter. Depending on the circumstances, removal may be proper under 28 USC §1442(a). See, e.g., People v Maxwell (D Colo 1954) 125 F Supp 18 (criminal prosecution of air force captain removable under 28 USC §1442(a)(1) rather than under 28 USC §1442a).

NOTE: Unlike removal under 28 USC §1441 (see §22.6), jurisdiction exists in the district court to hear a case removed under 28 USC §1442a even if the action could not have been commenced in federal court initially. Mir v Fosburg (9th Cir 1980) 646 F2d 342, 344.

§22.37 D. Civil Rights Cases

A state civil action or criminal prosecution against a person who is denied or cannot enforce a right in state court arising under any law providing for equal civil rights for United States citizens or for all persons within its jurisdiction may be removed by that person to the federal district court for the district and division where the matter is pending. 28 USC §1443(1). Similarly, a defendant subject to a state civil action or criminal prosecution for "any act under color of authority derived from any law providing for equal rights, or for refusing to do any act on the ground that it would be inconsistent with such law" may remove the matter to federal court. 28 USC §1443(2). Thus, removal under 28 USC §1443 applies both to (a) persons who engage in activities safeguarded by federal civil rights acts and who face civil or criminal prosecution as a result of such acts, and (b) those who refuse to engage in activities based on a claim of civil rights and who find themselves the subject of a civil or criminal lawsuit as a result thereof.

NOTE: Both the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (see generally 42 USC §§2000a—2000h-6) and the Fair Housing Act of 1968 (42 USC §3601-3619) fall within the scope of 28 USC §1443 as laws providing for equal civil rights. See Georgia v Rachel (1966) 384 US 780, 792, 16 L Ed 2d 925, 86 S Ct 1783 (Civil Rights Act); Emigrant Sav. Bank v Elan Mgmt. Corp. (2d Cir 1982) 668 F2d 671, 673 (Fair Housing Act).

§22.38 E. Actions Brought Against United States Concerning Property on Which United States Has or Claims Lien

Any state action brought under 28 USC §2410 against the United States is removable by the United States to the federal district court for the district and division where the action is pending. 28 USC §1444. Under 28 USC §2410, when the United States claims or has a lien on real or personal property, for its protection, the United States may be named a party in a civil action or suit in federal court, or in state court having jurisdiction over the subject matter

- To quiet title to the property;
- To foreclose a mortgage or other lien on the property;
- To partition the property;
- To condemn the property; or
- For interpleader or in the nature of interpleader regarding the property.

Thus, such an action or proceeding brought in state court is removable under 28 USC §1444.

VII. CROSS-CLAIMS AGAINST PLAINTIFF OR THIRD PARTIES

§22.39 A. Generally Removal by Cross-Defendants Prohibited

By its express terms, 28 USC §1441(a) limits removal of civil actions over which district courts have original jurisdiction to "the defendant or the defendants" in such action. A plaintiff who chooses a state forum to litigate a matter and thereafter is named as a defendant in the defendant's cross-complaint is not deemed a defendant within the meaning of the statute and cannot remove the action to federal court, even when the cross-claim states a separate and independent claim. Shamrock Oil & Gas Corp. v Sheets (1941) 313 US 100, 85 L Ed 1214, 61 S Ct 868; Southland Corp. v Estridge (CD Cal 1978) 456 F Supp 1296. A party who has availed himself or herself of the jurisdiction of the state court initially should not be entitled to remove the action to federal court. 456 F Supp at 1300. The court in Southland left open the question of whether a plaintiff who sues a co-citizen on a nonfederal claim may remove the case if the defendant cross-claims against the plaintiff for a separate and independent federal claim, noting that in this instance the plaintiff might argue that plaintiff "never had the opportunity to choose the federal rather than the state forum." 456 F Supp at 1300 n6.

Similarly, third parties named as cross-defendants (i.e., third party defendants) are not included in the term "defendant" as used in 28 USC §1441(a) (White v Baltic Conveyor Co. (D NJ 1962) 209 F Supp 716, 719), and in the absence of a separate and independent claim being asserted (see §22.40) cannot remove the action to federal court. See Burlingham, Underwood, Barron, Wright & White v Luckenbach S.S. Co. (SD NY 1962) 208 F Supp 544, 546 ("mere existence of diversity of citizenship between a defendant and a third-party defendant does not authorize removal under" 28 USC §1441(b)); Jamison v Schneider (Kan 1983) 561 F Supp 1087. See also Hyde v Carder (Ky 1970) 310 F Supp 1340 (when no diversity or other basis for jurisdiction exists between original parties, "removal cannot be supported solely on the diversity of the third party litigants").

§22.40 B. Exception: Removal by Third Party Defendant When Separate and Independent Claim Involved

Unlike 28 USC §1441(a), which limits removal to "the defendant or the defendants" (see §22.39), subsection (c) has no such limitation. Instead, it provides only that when separate and independent removable claims are joined with otherwise nonremovable ones, "the entire case may be removed" (see §§22.30-22.33); no mention is made of by whom. There is a split of authority in the circuits as to whether third party defendants can remove such claims to federal court under 28 USC §1441(c).

It appears that in California when separate and independent claims are involved, removal by a third party defendant under 28 USC §1441(c) is proper. In Motor Vehicle Cas. Co. v Russian River County Sanitation Dist. (ND Cal 1981) 538 F Supp 488, 491, the court recognized that there was authority outside California holding that "the right of removal does not attach to third-party defendants" but indicated that the better view was to permit removal by a third party defendant under 28 USC §1441(c). In holding that no separate and independent claim was involved in the case before it, the court noted that "[t]he correct rule is when a truly separate and independent claim is made against a third party defendant, which would be removable on its own, the fact that the removing party is not the original defendant does not impair the right of removal under federal law." See Coleman v A & D Mach. Co. (ED Cal 1969) 298 F Supp 234 (court held that third party defendants have right to remove under 28 USC §1441(c), but that no separate and independent claim involved in case). See also Southland Corp. v Estridge (CD Cal 1978) 456 F Supp 1296, 1301 (court noted that separate and independent claims are removable by third party defendants like any other defendants who have not voluntarily chosen to use state court). But see Fountain Park Cooperative, Inc. v Bank of America (CD Cal 1968) 289 F Supp 150, 153 (third party defendant could not remove under 28 USC §1441(c); subsection refers only to separable part of original complaint, not to third party complaint). No Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals case has been found directly on point.

There are decisions in other circuits that permit removal by a third party defendant under 28 USC §1441(c) when a separate and independent claim is involved. See, e.g., Carl Heck Eng'rs v LaFourche Parish Police Jury (5th Cir 1980) 622 F2d 133, 135. However, several circuits and many commentators oppose removal of separate and independent claims by third party defendants. See, e.g., Thomas v Shelton (7th Cir 1984) 740 F2d 478, 486 (allowing removal of entire action brings before court main part action not within its original jurisdiction thus enlarging federal jurisdiction at expense of state jurisdiction; in broad run of third party cases removal improper under 28 USC §1441(c); however, may be limited class of parties, e.g., the United States, when special consideration might be given). See also Morris v Marshall County Bd. of Educ. (ND WVa 1983) 560 F Supp 43; Lowe's of Montgomery, Inc. v Smith (ND Ala 1977) 432 F Supp 1008, 1012 (allowing removal brings into court suit between original parties that has no independent basis for federal jurisdiction and is unwarranted extension of the federal judicial power).

§22.41 VIII. PENDENT CLAIM JURISDICTION

Before December 1, 1990, when the concept of "pendent jurisdiction" was replaced by "supplemental jurisdiction" (see §§7.33-7.47), it had been held that whenever a federal claim was the basis for removal (see §§22.6-22.15) the federal district had pendent jurisdiction (i.e., judicial power) over joined state claims that "derive from a common nucleus of operative fact." (United Mine Workers of Am. v Gibbs (1966) 383 US 715, 725, 16 L Ed 2d 218, 86 S Ct 1130). That the state claims arose from a common nucleus of operative facts was the constitutional minimum required for the court to exercise jurisdiction over those claims in the absence of diversity of citizenship. Owen Equip. & Erection Co. v Kroger (1978) 437 US 365, 371, 57 L Ed 2d 274, 98 S Ct 2396; Contemporary Servs. Corp. v Universal City Studios, Inc. (CD Cal 1987) 655 F Supp 885, 890 n6. The exercise of pendent jurisdiction by the court was discretionary rather than a matter of plaintiff's right. United Mine Workers of Am. v Gibbs, supra. Thus, e.g., if the federal claim were dismissed, the court could remand the state claim. Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v Cohill (1988) 484 US 343, 98 L Ed 2d 720, 108 S Ct 614 (remand generally preferable to dismissal). Similarly, when it appeared that state issues substantially predominated in terms of proof, or concerning the issues, the court could remand the state claims. See Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v Cohill, supra; United Mine Workers of Am. v Gibbs (1966) 383 US 715, 726, 16 L Ed 2d 218, 86 S Ct 1130. Conversely, if the state claim were closely tied to federal policy, the argument for the court to exercise its pendent jurisdiction is strong. 383 US at 727. Aside from jurisdictional considerations, a court may separate federal and state claims for trial, e.g., when there is a "likelihood of jury confusion in treating divergent legal theories of relief." United Mine Workers of Am. v Gibbs, supra.

NOTE: The holdings in these cases should be viewed with caution in light of December 1, 1990, changes wrought by the adoption of 28 USC §1367 (see §§7.33-7.36) and the amendment of 28 USC §1441 (see §§22.30-22.33).

IX. ACTIONS SPECIFICALLY MADE NONREMOVABLE BY STATUTE

§22.42 A. Actions Against Railroads

The Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA, 45 USC §§51-60) authorizes an action to recover damages for personal injuries or death of a railroad employee. Although a plaintiff can elect to file a claim in federal court under FELA, if such a claim is filed in state court (see 45 USC §56) against a railroad or its receiver or trustees, removal of the claim to federal court is specifically prohibited by 28 USC §1445(a). See Balzeit v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (ND Cal 1983) 569 F Supp 986, 987.

§22.43 B. Actions Against Carriers

An action commenced in state court against a common carrier or its receivers or trustees to recover damages for delay, loss, or injury of shipments under 49 USC §11706, or a carrier providing transportation or service under 49 USC §14706, cannot be removed to federal court unless the matter in controversy exceeds $10,000, exclusive of interest and costs. 28 USC §1445(b).

§22.44 C. Actions Arising Under State Workers' Compensation Laws

A civil action commenced in state court that arises under that state's workers' compensation laws is not removable to federal court. 28 USC §1445(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.45 D. Other Nonremovable Actions

Many other actions, other than those discussed in §§22.42-22.44, are specifically made nonremovable by other statutes scattered throughout the United States Code. Although a federal court would have jurisdiction if the action were commenced in federal court in the first instance, these statutes prohibit the case from being removed if the action is first commenced in state court. For example, the federal courts and state courts have concurrent jurisdiction over suits brought under the Securities Act of 1933 (15 USC §§77a-77aa). See 15 USC §77v. If such a suit is brought in state court rather than federal court, however, the suit cannot be removed to federal court. 15 USC §77v. See Abing v Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis (D Minn 1982) 538 F Supp 1193, 1195. Similarly, federal courts and state courts have concurrent jurisdiction over actions brought under the Jones Act (46 USC §688). Engel v Davenport (1926) 271 US 33, 37, 70 L Ed 813, 46 S Ct 410; Reynolds v Royal Mail Lines, Ltd. (SD Cal 1956) 147 F Supp 223, 225, aff'd (9th Cir 1958) 254 F2d 55. Although a claim under the Jones Act is a federal claim for purposes of federal question jurisdiction under 28 USC §1331 (Romero v International Terminal Operating Co. (1959) 358 US 354, 359, 3 L Ed 2d 368, 79 S Ct 468), cases arising under the Jones Act that are brought in state court are not removable to federal court. See Gonsalves v Amoco Shipping Co. (2d Cir 1984) 733 F2d 1020 (removal prohibition in 28 USC §1445(a) (see §22.42) applies because 46 USC §688(a) makes remedies of railroad employees applicable to seamen).

NOTE: Before trying to remove an action to district court, it is necessary to consult more than just 28 USC §1445 to ascertain which cases are nonremovable. Counsel must also be conversant with the substantive and procedural sections of the statutes pertaining to any claims asserted in the lawsuit.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.46 E. Effect When Actions Made Nonremovable by Statute Are Joined With Otherwise Removable Actions

Under 28 USC §1441(a), except as otherwise provided by act of Congress, an action is removable if the district court would have original jurisdiction over it. See §§22.6-22.29. When an action that the district court would otherwise have original jurisdiction over is expressly made nonremovable by congressional legislation (see §§22.42-22.45), that action, even when joined with other removable causes of action, cannot be removed under 28 USC §1441(a) because removal under §1441(a) is permissible only if there is no act of Congress prohibiting removal. See Abing v Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis (D Minn 1982) 538 F Supp 1193, 1195.

When an otherwise removable action under 28 USC §1441 is joined with an action made nonremovable by 28 USC §1445, or any other statute, there is uncertainty as to whether the case can be removed under 28 USC §1441(c), which authorizes removal of the entire case when a separate and independent claim or cause of action within 28 USC §1331 federal question jurisdiction is joined with a nonremovable claim or cause of action (see §§22.30-22.33). In such instances, there is a conflict between the statutory policies permitting removal under 28 USC §1441 and prohibiting removal under 28 USC §1445 or other statute involved.

No Ninth Circuit case has been found resolving this issue although in Balzeit v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (ND Cal 1983) 569 F Supp 986, the court in a footnote raised the issue of whether plaintiff's Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) (45 USC §§51-60) claim would be removable under §1441(c) despite the statutory prohibition (under 28 USC §1445(a)) against removing FELA claims. The court noted that there was scant authority on this issue and the cases were in conflict, but concluded that it did not have to decide the issue because the non-FELA claims arose out of state law and thus did not present a federal question that would fall within the court's original and therefore removal jurisdiction. 569 F Supp at 987 n4. See Gonsalves v Amoco Shipping Co. (2d Cir 1984) 733 F2d 1020, in which a Jones Act claim was joined with a maintenance and cure claim. The court held that §1445(a) does not override §1441(c) and that §1441(c) applies to claims made nonremovable by statute. 733 F2d at 1022. The court, however, concluded that the maintenance and cure claim was not sufficiently distinct from the Jones Act claim arising from same set of operative facts and thus was not separate and independent for purposes of §1441(c) (see §22.30) to warrant removal. 733 F2d at 1026. See also Abing v Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis (D Minn 1982) 538 F Supp 1193, 1196 (when complaint alleges cause of action under Securities Act of 1933 that is nonremovable under 15 USC §77v, action not removable under §1441(a), but is removable under §1441(c) if another otherwise removable cause of action alleged that is separate and independent within the meaning of §1441(c)).

X. WHETHER TO SEEK REMOVAL

§22.47 A. Removal Discretionary

When removal is authorized, it is discretionary with the defendant, or other party entitled to file a notice of removal, as long as the removal notice is filed within the required time frame. On procedure generally, see §§22.67-22.99. Whether to seek such removal, however, should be given the most careful consideration, because the differences between proceeding in state and federal court can be considerable. Sections 22.47-22.66 discuss some of the differences that counsel should consider before removing a case to federal court.

NOTE: Removal is not only an issue for defendants. Because the plaintiff is generally the "master of his or her complaint," plaintiff will make the key initial decisions that will determine whether removal is possible. Plaintiff can shape the likelihood of removal by the way the claim is alleged in the complaint. Thus, plaintiff's counsel should consider the possibility for removal long before the complaint is filed. Plaintiff's counsel should also be familiar with the rules pertaining to removal if the defendant improperly removes the case to federal court and the plaintiff is required to make a remand motion (see §22.92).

B. Practical Considerations

1. Where Case Will Be Litigated and Tried

§22.48 a. Centralized Location of Federal Courts

The first issue to consider with respect to removal is where the case will be litigated and tried. The number of federal trial courts in each state differs. For example, the federal trial courts in California are divided into four districts, the Northern District, located in San Francisco, Oakland, and San Jose, the Eastern District, located in Sacramento and Fresno, the Central District, located in Los Angeles and Orange County, and the Southern District, located in San Diego.

With only a limited number of federal courthouses in California, compared with numerous state superior courts, many lawyers will find federal courts to be geographically distant as compared to superior courts. Attorneys may wish to avoid removing a case to a courthouse many miles from their office, particularly when frequent court appearances are anticipated, when there is a desire to reduce costs, or when trial appears to be a realistic possibility and the attorney does not wish to be far removed from the resources of his or her office during trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.49 b. Possible Venue Change

Because the federal courts operate on a nationwide basis, it is possible that a case removed to a district court may later either be transferred to another district court or consolidated with one or more actions in another district court anywhere in the country.

Under 28 USC §1404(a), for the convenience of parties and witnesses, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district "where it might have been brought." Thus, in appropriate circumstances, a case removed to federal court becomes subject to a change of venue to a district court outside the state. Conversely, although state court procedure also provides for change of venue motions, any such new venue for the state action must be in the same state as the pending action.

In addition to a change of venue, when an action is removed to federal court, in appropriate circumstances the action is also subject to being transferred to an out-of-state district court pursuant to the federal multidistrict litigation procedure. Under 28 USC §1407(a), when actions involving common questions of fact are pending in different districts, they may be "transferred to any district for coordinated or consolidated pretrial proceedings." Unlike a change of venue order in which the case is transferred permanently, a case transferred to another district court under a multidistrict litigation order may be returned to the district court from which it was transferred for trial unless the action has previously terminated, the parties stipulate to try the case in the transferee court, or a 28 USC §1404(a) change of venue motion has been granted. On federal multidistrict litigation procedure generally, see 28 USC §1407 and Rules 1-25 of the Rules of Procedure of The Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation.

2. Pretrial Considerations

§22.50 a. Time to Demand Jury Trial

In state court, in cases not subject to the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620), a demand for a jury trial is usually made at the case management conference. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.727(13).

NOTE: For discussion of demanding jury trial in state court actions, see chap 41.

In federal court, Fed R Civ P 38(b) requires that a demand for jury trial be made by serving the demand in writing on the other parties not later than 14 days after the service of the last pleading directed to such issue triable as of right by a jury, and filing the demand with the court. The pleadings directed to this issue can include complaints, counterclaims, cross-claims, third party complaints, and answers to complaints, cross-claims, third party complaints, and replies to counterclaims. A demand for a jury trial will often be endorsed on such a pleading. Local court rules and judges' standing orders must also be consulted to learn whether any special local requirements apply.

NOTE: When a defendant desires a jury trial and removes the case to federal court before having answered, it appears that the defendant must comply with Fed R Civ P 38(b). See South African Airways v Tawil (SD NY 1987) 658 F Supp 889; Pawlak v Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (D Mass 1980) 87 FRD 717, 718 n1. Under these circumstances, presumably Fed R Civ P 38(b) also applies to any other party who desires a jury trial who has not requested one in state court. If the defendant has filed an answer in state court before removal, however, Fed R Civ P 81(c) applies. Under Rule 81(c)(3)(B), if all necessary pleadings have been served, the party filing the notice of removal must demand a jury trial within 14 days after the notice of removal is filed. Any other party must demand a jury trial within 14 days after being served with the notice of removal. A party who has made an express demand for a jury trial before removal in accordance with state law (which is not often the case), however, need not demand a jury trial after removal. Fed R Civ P 81(c)(3)(A). Local court rules and judges' standing orders should also be consulted to determine if there are any local requirements concerning a jury demand after removal. On computing 14-day period under Rule 81(c)(3) when demand for jury trial is served by mail, see Tushner v United States Dist. Court (9th Cir 1987) 829 F2d 853 (applying 10-day period previously provided by Rule 81(c)(3)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.51 b. Attorney Time

In certain districts, it may be more time consuming and demanding for the attorney to litigate the same case in federal court than state court because of detailed and extensive "local rules" adopted by the district court. For example, in the Central District of California a local rule requires a meeting of the parties, the exchange of documents, and the exchange of witness lists 40 days before the final pretrial conference. See CD Cal Local R 16.2. Compliance with this and other local rules requires time and expense that may not be required in a state court action.

There may not be a significant difference in attorney time in litigating the case in federal or state court, however, if the local district court has not adopted such extensive local rules as indicated above. Moreover, to the extent that state courts have adopted local rules (e.g., fast-track rules) similar to local federal court rules, any possible difference in expense in attorney time in litigating the case either in state or federal court is diminished.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.52 c. Single Judge Assignment

Federal courts use a single assignment system, which means that each case is assigned to a specific judge the day it is filed, and this judge remains with the case for all purposes (except perhaps discovery), through and including trial. On the other hand, state courts have traditionally used a master calendar system under which the various phases of the case proceed before different judges, e.g., one judge will hear law and motion matters and another judge will preside over the trial. Certain state courts, however, are moving in the direction of single assignment, either experimentally or for a certain portion of their cases. In theory, cases in which a judge is assigned for all purposes to remain with the case from the date of filing until trial should enable the judge to acquire a more comprehensive grasp of the case and should enable the case to receive more consistent treatment. The assignment of a single judge for all purposes may have the effect of causing certain counsel to moderate their behavior because they know that they will be with that judge throughout the case.

Because of the single assignment system and the greater resources available to federal judges, some attorneys believe the possibility exists that a case filed in federal court may receive closer scrutiny and greater analysis than one filed in state court. Most federal judges have two full-time law clerks, as well as two or three externs, all of whom serve one particular judge only. In state court, a judge may have only a single research attorney available, who may have to be shared among different judges. In addition, depending on the county, the number of matters heard by a state court judge at a given time may be greater than for a federal judge. For example, although it is not uncommon for lawyers in Los Angeles superior court to find several dozen matters on a judge's motion calendar every day, in federal district court for the central district, where there is a "motion day" only once a week, there are usually fewer matters on calendar.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.53 d. Time to Trial; Trial Date

This area is in a state of flux, so the conventional wisdom, which is that federal cases go to trial faster than state cases, may no longer apply in certain locations. With the advent of the delay reduction rules, the stated goals of certain superior courts are now approximately the same as the time-to-trial standards in federal court. On the delay reduction rules, see chap 40.

A good rule of thumb for time to trial in federal court is about 1 year for the majority of cases, and 18 to 24 months for complex cases. A practitioner should check with the local superior court to ascertain current times to trial in his or her community by way of contrast. These range from less than a year to almost 5 years.

Once a trial date has been selected, the practice of trial dates being postponed by the court due to caseload constraints has been much less common in district court than in state courts in the large metropolitan areas.

Counsel considering removal should be aware of the differences in procedure for discovery in federal and state court. For example, Fed R Civ P 26(a) requires every party to disclose certain basic information (e.g., names—and addresses and telephone numbers, if known—of individuals likely to have discoverable information; copies or descriptions of discoverable documents and electronically stored information) without waiting for a discovery request. On federal discovery practice generally, see 8 Wright, Miller & Marcus, Federal Practice and Procedure §§2001-2070 (2d ed 1994). On state court discovery procedure generally, see California Civil Discovery Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

Magistrates often hear discovery disputes in federal court, and many go to great lengths to resolve such disputes informally and speedily. For example, some magistrates allow and even encourage attorneys to call and speak to them during the middle of a deposition in order to rule on objections and instructions not to answer. The witness may be directed to answer immediately by the magistrate. Such a procedure can obviate the need for a discovery motion, speeding the litigation and providing significant savings for the client. As a result, many attorneys believe federal court provides more flexibility in resolving anticipated discovery disputes than state court.

NOTE: Certain state judges in single assignment programs (see §22.52) have begun to adopt similar procedures. On appointment of a referee or commissioner in state court to resolve discovery disputes, see Civil Discovery §1.29.

Discovery disputes involving claims of privilege present choice-of-law questions not present in state court actions. When federal jurisdiction is based on diversity (see §22.16), the court generally applies the law of the state in which it sits. Fed R Evid 501. See Blackledge v Martin K. Eby Constr. Co. (8th Cir 1976) 542 F2d 474, 476 n1 (privileges created by state law apply in diversity action). See also Simon v G.D. Searle & Co. (8th Cir 1987) 816 F2d 397, 402 (state law on attorney-client privilege applied); Samuelson v Susen (3d Cir 1978) 576 F2d 546 (state conflict-of-law rule applied). When jurisdiction is based on a federal question (see §22.6), the court generally applies federal common law, but, if there is no controlling federal statute, the court may turn to state law for guidance. Fed R Evid 501. Lewis v U.S. (9th Cir 1975) 517 F2d 236; Gulliver's Periodicals, Ltd. v Chas. Levy Circulating Co. (ND Ill 1978) 455 F Supp 1197, 1200. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena (WD Mo 1978) 460 F Supp 150 (in nondiversity-jurisdiction civil case, question of privilege governed by federal privilege law).

The attorney work product doctrine, first articulated by the United States Supreme Court in Hickman v Taylor (1947) 329 US 495, 91 L Ed 451, 67 S Ct 385, is an exception to the choice-of-law rules set forth in Fed R Evid 501. The privilege for attorney work product has been "substantially codified" in Fed R Civ P 26(b)(3). Holmgren v State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (9th Cir 1992) 976 F2d 573, 576. The work product privilege is separate and distinct from the attorney-client privilege, and whether diversity or federal question jurisdiction is involved, federal law applies to claims that the work product privilege protects information from disclosure. Handgards, Inc. v Johnson & Johnson (ND Cal 1976) 413 F Supp 926, 929. See also Holmgren v State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (9th Cir 1992) 976 F2d 573 (applying federal work product rules in diversity case).

On differences between state and federal law on attorney-client privilege as applied to corporations, compare D.I. Chadbourne, Inc. v Superior Court (1964) 60 C2d 723, 36 CR 468, with Upjohn Co. v U.S. (1981) 449 US 383, 66 L Ed 2d 584, 101 S Ct 677. On differences in rules governing production of tax returns in federal and state court, see §22.64.

Under the Civil Discovery Act (CCP §§2016.010-2036.050), the court must award monetary sanctions for violation of certain of its provisions unless the court finds that the party subject to the sanction acted with "substantial justification" or that there are other circumstances making imposition of the sanction unjust. See, e.g., CCP §2023.030(a), CCP §§2025.430, 2025.440(a), 2025.450(c)(1)-(2).

When there is no specific statute providing for sanctions in state court, sanctions are usually sought under CCP §128.7. This section applies to complaints or petitions filed after December 31, 1994. See CCP §128.7(i). Note that this section specifically does not apply to discovery matters. CCP §128.7(g). Code of Civil Procedure §128.7 is based on Fed R Civ P 11. Section 128.7(b) is virtually identical to Fed R Civ P 11(b), except for one very significant difference. Under CCP §128.7(b)(1), the presenter certifies that the paper is not being presented "primarily" for an improper purpose; under Fed R Civ P 11(b), the presenter certifies that the paper is not being presented for "any" improper purpose. Under Fed R Civ P 11(b) an attorney (or unrepresented party) who signs a pleading, motion, or other paper certifies that, to the best of his or her knowledge, information, and belief, formed after reasonable inquiry under the circumstances:

> (1) it is not being presented for any improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation;
> (2) the claims, defenses, and other legal contentions are warranted by existing law or by a nonfrivolous argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law or the establishment of new law;
> (3) the allegations and other factual contentions have evidentiary support or, if specifically so identified, are likely to have evidentiary support after a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery; and
> (4) the denials of factual contentions are warranted on the evidence or, if specifically so identified, are reasonably based on a lack of information or belief.

If the pleading, motion, or other paper is signed in violation of Rule 11, the court on its own motion or on motion of a party may impose appropriate sanctions. As of December 1, 1993, sanctions for violations of Rule 11 are no longer mandatory.

Both Fed R Civ P 11 and CCP §128.7 contain "safe harbor" provisions that permit the offending party to withdraw or correct the objectionable pleading or conduct before the motion for sanctions is filed. To comply with the "safe harbor" provision of Fed R Civ P 11(c)(1)(A), a party seeking sanctions must file a notice of motion for sanctions on the opposing party at least 21 days before the conclusion of the case. At the conclusion of the 21-day period, the party seeking sanctions may file the notice of motion with the court. If the offending party withdraws or corrects the sanctionable conduct within 21 days, however, no sanctions may be imposed. See Ridder v City of Springfield (6th Cir 1997) 109 F3d 288, 296.

There are numerous other federal sources for the award of sanctions. For example, federal courts are authorized to award sanctions against an attorney who unreasonably and vexatiously multiplies the proceedings in a case under 28 USC §1927. Federal discovery sanctions are contained in Fed R Civ P 30(g) and Fed R Civ P 37. In addition, local district court rules may contain broad authorization for the granting of sanctions. See, e.g., CD Cal Local R 83.7, which among other things authorizes sanctions for failure to comply with any of those local rules.

Because CCP §128.7 is virtually identical to Fed R Civ P 11, California courts may look to federal decisions interpreting Rule 11 to interpret §128.7, when the language is the same. Scripps Mem. Hosp. v California Employment Comm'n (1944) 24 C2d 669, 151 P2d 109. On sanctions under Fed R Civ P 11 in the context of a federal appeal, see Rockwell Int'l Credit Corp. v United States Aircraft Ins. Group (9th Cir 1987) 823 F2d 302, overruled on other grounds in Partington v Gedan (9th Cir 1991) 923 F2d 686, 688. But see Leigh v Engle (7th Cir 1988) 858 F2d 361, 370 n5 (Rule 11 sanctions not available on appeal). See also Fed R App P 38 on sanctions for frivolous appeals. On sanctions for frivolous appeal in state court, see CCP §907; Cal Rules of Ct 8.276(a); Marriage of Flaherty (1982) 31 C3d 637, 650, 183 CR 508 (appeal simply without merit is not frivolous and sanctions should not be awarded; appeal frivolous only when "prosecuted for an improper motive—to harass the respondent or delay the effect of an adverse judgment—or when it indisputably has no merit—when any reasonable attorney would agree that the appeal is totally and

In state court, the pleadings must allege ultimate facts. See CCP §425.10(a)(1) (complaints and cross-complaints); 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1182 (5th ed 2008) (affirmative defense). On drafting complaints, see chap 15. If the complaint is not verified, a general denial is sufficient to put in issue the material allegations of the complaint. CCP §431.30(d). On verifying complaints, see §§15.14-15.21.

In federal court, a party needs only to file a "notice pleading" (i.e., "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief") to plead ultimate facts. Fed R Civ P 8; 4 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §379. A party must plead allegations of fraud or mistake with particularity. Fed R Civ P 9(b). A party that intends to deny all allegations of a pleading may respond with a general denial. A party that does not intend to deny all allegations must either specifically deny certain allegations or generally deny all except those specifically admitted. Fed R Civ P 8(b)(3).

NOTE: In federal court, written stipulations between counsel affecting the progress of the case must usually be approved by the judge to be effective. See CD Cal Local R 7.1; ED Cal Local R 83-143; SD Cal Local R 7.2.

§22.57 h. Disqualification of Judge

In state court, counsel can file a peremptory challenge in accordance with CCP §170.6, consisting of an affidavit or declaration in substantially the form specified in CCP §170.6(a)(5), and disqualification of the judge is required. Except for a successful appellant after appeal, a party is permitted only one such challenge. CCP §170.6(a)(3). On disqualification of judge in state court generally, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§6.26-6.78 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

No equivalent peremptory challenge procedure requiring automatic disqualification exists in federal court. As a result, the judge assigned on the day the complaint is filed is generally the judge throughout the case unless counsel can establish grounds for disqualification under 28 USC §§144, 455. On judge's personal bias or prejudice within the meaning of 28 USC §144, see In re Cooper (1st Cir 1987) 821 F2d 833. On judge's duty to determine legal sufficiency of affidavit of personal bias or prejudice, see U.S. v Sibla (9th Cir 1980) 624 F2d 864 (discussing relationship between 28 USC §§144 and 455).

When federal jurisdiction exists under 28 USC §1332 due to diversity of citizenship (see §22.16), the district court has jurisdiction over all causes of action and will retain all such causes of actions. This may not be true when removal is based on federal question jurisdiction under 28 USC §1331 (see §22.6). Federal causes of action are often joined in the same complaint with state causes of action. The federal courts have jurisdiction over state claims under concepts of "supplemental" or "pendent" jurisdiction. See §22.41. Whether to exercise such jurisdiction may be discretionary with the court, which may remand state causes of action without prejudice. See Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v Cohill (1988) 484 US 343, 98 L Ed 2d 720, 108 S Ct 614 (remand generally preferable to dismissal). The following examples illustrate the above:

EXAMPLE 1: A, who lives in California, sues B, who lives in Texas, for breach of contract, fraud, and violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act (RICO) (18 USC §§1961-1968), in a California state court. B removes the action to a California district court. In this case, there can be no remand of any of the counts, because the district court has diversity jurisdiction over the entire action, separate and apart from its federal question jurisdiction over the RICO claim.

EXAMPLE 2: A sues B for fraud, conversion, and violation of RICO. Assume that removal based on diversity is not warranted, either because A and B are not diverse, or because the action was filed in the state in which B is domiciled (see §22.16). In this case, removal is still proper because the district court has federal question jurisdiction over the RICO claim, but it is within the court's discretion to remand the fraud and conversion causes of action because they are state claims that are merely pendent to the RICO count. If the court remands the pendent claims, unless A is permitted to dismiss the RICO cause of action without prejudice in the federal court and file it in state court, A could be compelled to proceed against B in district court on the RICO cause of action and in state court against B on the remanded state claims.

§22.59 j. Summary Judgment Standards

Because of the single judge assignment (see §22.52) and the legal standard the district court applies when deciding a summary judgment motion, many attorneys believe that a federal judge is more likely to grant summary judgment than a state court law and motion judge. On federal standards for summary judgment motions, see Fed R Civ P 56. The United States Supreme Court has interpreted Fed R Civ P 56 in a trio of cases commonly referred to as the "Celotex trilogy." See Celotex Corp. v Catrett (1986) 477 US 317, 322, 91 L Ed 2d 265, 106 S Ct 2548 (party seeking summary judgment not required to produce affirmative evidence negating nonmoving party's claim if, after adequate discovery, it appears that nonmoving party does not have sufficient evidence to "establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial"); Anderson v Liberty Lobby, Inc. (1986) 477 US 242, 254, 91 L Ed 2d 202, 106 S Ct 2505 (judge must consider applicable substantive evidentiary standard, i.e., preponderance of evidence or clear and convincing standard); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v Zenith Radio Corp. (1986) 475 US 574, 89 L Ed 2d 538, 106 S Ct 1348 (when moving party has carried burden under Fed R Civ P §56(c), nonmoving party must show specific facts establishing genuine issue for trial). See also Nissan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v Fritz Cos. (9th Cir 2000) 210 F3d 1099, 1105 (even after Celotex, party moving for summary judgment cannot require nonmoving party to produce evidence supporting claim or defense by mere assertion that nonmoving party does not have sufficient evidence to support essential element or claim or defense).

Unlike state courts, where a case may be subject to judicial arbitration (see CCP §§1141.10-1141.31, Cal Rules of Ct 3.810-3.830), federal courts have no requirement that a case be subject to judicial arbitration unless a local court rule so provides. The United States District Court for the Northern District of California is an example of a federal district court that has local court rules providing for arbitration of certain types of cases. See ND Cal Local R 16-8.

3. Trial Considerations

§22.61 a. Jury Composition

Because there are only several federal district courts in the entire state, the jury pool for any particular district court is larger than that for state courts. The composition of a jury in any particular federal court is less likely to represent the particular area in which the court sits than it would in a state court.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.62 b. Juror Voir Dire

In state court, counsel generally conduct the voir dire examination of prospective jurors. On state court practice generally, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§8.30-8.72 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995). In federal district court, this rarely happens. Instead, district court judges often do not allow attorney voir dire at all, but conduct it themselves. Usually district judges will, at most, entertain requested voir dire questions in written form from counsel before the trial, and will, as they deem appropriate, incorporate as few or as many proposed questions into the court's own voir dire as the judge believes to be proper.

c. Evidentiary Considerations

§22.63 (1) Differences Between State and Federal Rules of Evidence

Counsel considering removal should bear in mind that once the case is removed the federal rules of evidence rather than the California Evidence Code apply even in diversity of citizenship cases (see Fed R Evid 101, 1101; Gibbs v State Farm Mut. Ins. Co. (9th Cir 1976) 544 F2d 423, 428 n2). Although there are similarities between the state and federal rules of evidence, differences do exist. The following highlights some of those differences:

- Hearsay exceptions: The California Evidence Code sets forth a number of exceptions to the hearsay rule in Evid C §§1220-1350. Hearsay evidence is inadmissible unless it fits within an enumerated exception in the Evidence Code. This is not the case in federal court. Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, any statement not specifically covered by the specified exceptions to the hearsay rule, but having equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, may be admitted if the requirements of Fed R Evid 807 are met.
- Foundational requirements: Foundational requirements for the admission of certain evidence may differ in state and federal court. Compare, e.g., Evid C §§1270-1272 with Fed R Evid 803(6) (business-record exception to the hearsay rule).
- Attorney-client and work product privileges: See discussion in §22.54 concerning attorney-client and work product privileges and when state rules concerning the attorney-client privilege apply.
- Criminal convictions: Evidence of conviction for a prior crime is admissible to attack a witness's credibility in federal court whenever the crime involves dishonesty or false statements. Fed R Evid 609(a). See U.S. v Lester (9th Cir 1984) 749 F2d 1288, 1300 (misdemeanor conviction). In state court, however, such evidence is not admissible to attack credibility unless the conviction was for a felony. Evid C §788.

Tax returns and information contained in them are deemed absolutely privileged in state court and in the absence of waiver are not generally subject to discovery or use at trial. See Evid C §1040; Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 1, 123 CR 283 (sales tax returns); Aday v Superior Court (1961) 55 C2d 789, 13 CR 415 (state and federal corporate tax returns); Webb v Standard Oil Co. (1957) 49 C2d 509, 319 P2d 621 (state and federal personal income tax returns); California Civil Discovery Practice §§3.119, 3.181, 7.96 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook §§42.6, 42.10 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). See also Crest Catering Co. v Superior Ct (1965) 62 C2d 274, 42 CR 110 (employment tax returns); Brown v Superior Court (1977) 71 CA3d 141, 139 CR 327 (W-2 forms). On waiver, see Wilson v Superior Court (1976) 63 CA3d 825, 134 CR 130 (suit against accountant for negligent advice concerning tax consequences of sale of real property; taxpayer waived privilege by placing content of returns directly in issue); Civil Discovery §3.166; Evidence Benchbook §42.1. See also Sammut v Sammut (1980) 103 CA3d 557, 560, 163 CR 193 (privilege upheld; grounds for waiver discussed).

In federal court in federal question cases, however, there is no absolute privilege against discovery or use at trial of tax returns or the information in them. In appropriate instances when the tax returns are shown to be relevant to the litigation, they may be subject to discovery. See, e.g., Heathmam v United States Dist. Court (9th Cir 1974) 503 F2d 1032 (defendant's accountants required to deliver income tax returns together with accounting materials prepared in doing returns). See also Premium Serv. Corp. v Sperry & Hutchinson Co. (9th Cir 1975) 511 F2d 225, 229 (no absolute privilege from discovery for tax returns; however, public policy against unnecessary disclosure). The following example illustrates the point: A sues B for securities fraud, claiming that as a result of A's misstatements and omissions, he invested $500,000 in an oil and gas scheme that produced no returns. B alleges that, regardless of the merit of A's claims, A should be entitled to a maximum of $350,000 in actual damages because A deducted $150,000 from his taxes over the years as a result of the investment. Assuming that this offset was appropriate (such offsets are limited in the securities fraud area), A's tax returns would probably be ordered produced in federal court. A different result would likely occur in state court.

In diversity cases in federal district courts in California, presumably the state privilege concerning tax returns will be held to apply under Fed R Evid 501. No Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals decision has been found on point, however. See generally §22.54.

§22.65 d. Jury Size; Three-Fourths or Unanimous Verdict

California civil matters within the appellate jurisdiction of the court of appeal are tried before 12 jurors or any lesser number that the parties agree on in open court. Cal Const art I, §16; CCP §220. Under Cal Const art I, §16, the legislature may provide for eight jurors, or a lesser number as agreed to by the parties in open court, for trials that are not within the appellate jurisdiction of the court of appeal (i.e., limited civil cases). Three-fourths of the jurors (e.g., 9 out of 12) must agree on the verdict. Cal Const art I, §16; CCP §618. On alternate jurors, see CCP §234.

In federal district court for civil cases, generally by local rule, a jury may consist of as few as six or as many as 12 jurors, depending on how many the judge determines are needed. Fed R Civ P 48(a). Unlike in state court, the jurors must unanimously agree on the verdict (unless the parties have stipulated otherwise). See Fed R Civ P 48(b); 9A Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure §2492 (3d ed 1998). Although logic suggests that it is easier to obtain 9 out of 12 votes than 6 out of 6, as a practical matter few civil cases result in a mistrial in federal court due to a jury's inability to reach a verdict.

Being able to easily have judgment entered in another state so as to enable enforcement of the judgment may be a consideration in a case in which a defendant from whom recovery is expected does not have sufficient assets within the state to satisfy a judgment, but does have significant asset outside the state that may be transferred. Under 28 USC §1963, a federal district court judgment that has become final by appeal or expiration of the time to appeal may be registered in any other district by filing a certified copy of such judgment in the other district. A district court judgment may also be registered in the same manner in another district even before the judgment becomes final by appeal or expiration of the time to appeal by order of the court that entered the judgment on good cause shown. 28 USC §1963. Once a district court judgment is registered in accordance with §1963, it has the same effect as a district court judgment of the district where registered and may be enforced in the same manner. 28 USC §1963. On complying with any state law requirements to register, record, docket, or index the judgment to create a lien, see 28 USC §1962. See also Debt Collection Practice in California §7.53 (2d ed Cal CEB 1999). On complying with state practice and procedure for executing on a federal judgment unless a federal statute provides otherwise, see Fed R Civ P 69(a). On discovery in aid of executing on judgment under federal rules of civil procedure or under state law, see Fed R Civ P 69(a).

On the other hand, when a California state court judgment has been entered the procedure for obtaining entry of a judgment in another state based on it may be more cumbersome than the registration procedure provided for federal district court judgments. The law of the state in which a judgment is desired to be entered must be followed. For California procedure for obtaining a judgment based on a sister state judgment, see CCP §§1710.10-1710.65. See also Debt Collection §§7.45-7.48.

XI. REMOVAL TIMING AND PROCEDURES

A. Time Limitations

1. When Initial Pleading Contains Removable Claim

§22.67 a. 30-Day Rule

The right to remove exists only briefly and will be lost unless it is exercised in an expeditious fashion. Under 28 USC §1446(b), a notice of removal (see §§22.76-22.90) in a civil action or proceeding must be filed within 30 days after the defendant receives "through service or otherwise," a copy of the initial pleading that sets forth the removable claim, or within 30 days after the defendant is served with a summons if the initial pleading has been filed in court but service of it is not required on the defendant, whichever period is shorter. The United States Supreme Court has interpreted "through service or otherwise" to mean that the defendant's time to remove is triggered by formal service of the complaint. Murphy Bros. v Michetti Pipestringing, Inc. (1999) 526 US 344, 143 L Ed 2d 448, 119 S Ct 1322. Depending on the various states' service and filing requirements, the removal period begins to run as follows (Murphy Bros. v Michetti Pipestringing, Inc., supra):

- If the summons and complaint are served simultaneously, the removal period begins to run at once.
- If the defendant is served with the summons, but the complaint is supplied to the defendant later, the removal period begins to run from the defendant's receipt of the complaint.
- If the defendant is served with the summons and the complaint is filed in court, but service of the complaint is not required, the removal period runs from the date the complaint becomes available through filing.
- If the complaint is filed in court before it is served, the removal period begins to run when the summons is served.

Thus, in California, if a case is removable based on the original complaint, it must be removed within 30 days after defendant is formally served with the summons and complaint, regardless of when the complaint was filed in court. 28 USC §1446(b). See Murphy Bros. v Michetti Pipestringing, Inc., supra.

The 30-day period in which to remove the case to federal court is not extended by a stipulation by counsel extending the time to answer, plead, move, or otherwise respond to the complaint. See Transport Indem. Co. v Financial Trust Co. (CD Cal 1972) 339 F Supp 405.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.68 b. Receipt of Letter No Longer Starts 30-Day Period

The language of 28 USC §1446(b) provides that the defendant must file a notice of removal within 30 days after receipt of the complaint "through service or otherwise." Formerly, "or otherwise" was interpreted to mean that the plaintiff could initiate the 30-day period by mailing the defendant a letter enclosing a copy of the complaint that had been filed in state court. Now, under Murphy Bros. v Michetti Pipestringing, Inc. (1999) 526 US 344, 143 L Ed 2d 448, 119 S Ct 1322, the complaint must be formally served to trigger the start of the 30-day period within which the defendant must file a notice of removal. See §22.67.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.69 c. Cases Involving Multiple Defendants

In cases when multiple defendants are served, unless they are served on the same day, the 30-day removal period (see §22.67) will have run as to the first served defendant before the expiration of the running of this period for subsequently served defendants. The removal statute does not directly address multiple defendant cases. 28 USC §1446(b). Although the Ninth Circuit has not addressed the issue, there is a split among the federal circuits, and among the district courts in the Ninth Circuit, about how to determine the deadline for removal when multiple defendants are served at different times. See Smallwood v Allied Pickfords, LLC (SD Cal, Sep. 29, 2009, No. 08-cv-2196z) 2009 US Dist Lexis 91141 (discussing "first-served" and "last-served" approaches, and concluding that "last-served" approach is preferable); United Steel v Shell Co. (9th Cir 2008) 549 F3d 1204, 1209 n2 (declining to resolve conflict); Griffith v American Home Prods. Corp. (ED Wash 2000) 85 F Supp 2d 995, 998.

The traditional rule, known as the "first-served defendant rule," construes 28 USC §1446(b) as creating a single 30-day window for removal, which begins to run when the first defendant is served; if the first served defendant fails to remove within 30 days, a later-served defendant cannot remove even if the first defendant consents to the removal. See, e.g., Brown v Demco, Inc. (5th Cir 1986) 792 F2d 478, 481; Smith v Mail Boxes, Etc., Inc. (ED Cal 2002) 191 F Supp 2d 1155, 1159; McAnally Enters. v McAnally (CD Cal 2000) 107 F Supp 2d 1223, 1229; Transport Indem. Co. v Financial Trust Co. (CD Cal 1972) 339 F Supp 405, 409.

In Brierly v Alusuisse Flexible Packaging, Inc. (6th Cir 1999) 184 F3d 527, 533, 533 n3, cert denied (2000) 528 US 1076, 145 L Ed 2d 667, 120 S Ct 790, the Sixth Circuit held that a later-served defendant has 30 days from the date of service to obtain the consent of earlier-served defendants and to remove a case to federal court. See Lewis v City of Fresno (ED Cal 2008) 627 F Supp 2d 1179 and Ford v New United Motors Mfg. (ND Cal 1994) 857 F Supp 707, 708 (rejecting first-served defendant rule). Brown and Griffith represent polar opposites in terms of the equities involved, and illustrate a possible reason for the conflict in authority. In Brown, a later-served defendant attempted to remove a case to federal court after it had been litigated in state court for 4 years. The court of appeals refused to permit removal, reasoning that any unfairness to the last served defendant was more than outweighed by the unfairness to the plaintiff that would result from removal. Brown v Demco, Inc. (5th Cir 1986) 792 F2d 478, 482. In Griffith, the defendant seeking removal was served on the last day on which the first-served defendant could have sought removal. To comply with the first-served defendant rule, the defendant had only 1 day to research whether a basis for removal existed, to decide whether to file a petition for removal, and to attempt to gain the consent of the other defendants. Griffith v American Home Prods. Corp., 85 F Supp 2d at 1001.

The Fourth Circuit has chosen a third approach. A defendant served after the first defendant's 30-day removal period has lapsed may not petition to remove the case, but has 30 days from the date of service to join in another defendant's valid removal petition. McKinney v Board of Trustees of Mayland Community College (4th Cir 1992) 955 F2d 924, 926 n3, 928; Princeton Running Co. v Williams (D DC, Sept. 5, 2006, No. 05-1461 (PLF)) 2006 US Dist Lexis 62622 (adopting "intermediate rule" of McKinney; defendant, added by amendment in trade secret misuse litigation that had been pending for 2 years, not permitted to remove case when there was no valid petition for removal to join).

For discussion of requirement that all defendants consent to removal, see §§22.77-22.84.

2. When Amended Pleading, Motion, Order, or Other Paper Establishes Right to Removal

§22.70 a. 30-Day Rule

Under 28 USC §1446(b), when a "case stated by the initial pleading is not removable, a notice of removal may be filed within 30 days after receipt by the defendant, through service or otherwise, of a copy of an amended pleading, motion, order or other paper from which it may first be ascertained that the case is one which is or has become removable, except that a case may not be removed on the basis of" diversity jurisdiction more than 1 year after the action was commenced. On 1-year limitation period beyond which removal is prohibited in diversity cases, see §22.73. On voluntary-involuntary rule limiting removal, see §22.72.

A key word in 28 USC §1446(b) is "first." Although many pleadings, motions, orders, or other papers may allow a party to ascertain that a case has become removable, there is only one "first such paper, and it is this first paper which begins the running of the 30-day period."

While the meaning of a pleading, motion, and order is generally known, the term "other papers" sufficient to start the running of the 30-day period under 28 USC §1446(b) is often viewed expansively by the courts. In Riggs v Continental Baking Co. (ND Cal 1988) 678 F Supp 236, 238, the court noted that "[t]he elements of removability must be specifically indicated in official papers before the statutory period begins to run," and held that a deposition at which defendant first ascertained the facts indicating removability constituted an "other paper" under §1446(b). At the deposition in Riggs, defendant first ascertained that plaintiff was a member of a union who was employed pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement subjecting the case to §301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 USC §185). See §22.15. See also Ezon v Cornwall Equities Ltd. (SD Tex 1982) 540 F Supp 885, 888 (removal within 30 days of deposition timely). It has also been held that discovery documents may be "other papers" within the meaning of the statute. See, e.g., Lee v Altamil Corp. (MD Fla 1978) 457 F Supp 979 (discovery documents subsequent to complaint).

The 30-day removal period of §1446(b) may begin to run on the receipt of actual notice by the defendant that the case has become removable, even when the notice is oral, e.g., by telephone, rather than by a document. See Mike Silverman & Assocs. v Drai (CD Cal 1987) 659 F Supp 741, 746 (telephone notice of voluntary dismissal of a defendant). See also Heniford v American Motors Sales Corp. (D SC 1979) 471 F Supp 328, 334 (case became removable based on diversity of citizenship jurisdiction during closing argument; plaintiff's counsel told jury that plaintiff sought to eliminate particular defendant from any possibility of liability thus causing court to align that defendant with plaintiff for purposes of diversity of citizenship jurisdiction). In Babasa v Lenscrafters, Inc. (9th Cir 2007) 498 F3d 972, the court held that a letter from plaintiff that stated estimated damages in excess of the jurisdictional requirement was sufficient to notify defendant that the case was removable.

It has also been held that the phrase "other paper" within the meaning of 28 USC §1446(b) cannot refer to pleadings filed in a separate and distinct lawsuit not involving the same parties which has not been consolidated. Growth Realty Cos. v Burnac Mortgage Invs., Ltd. (D PR 1979) 474 F Supp 991, 996.

On when a defendant may have to remove before the 30-day period expires, see §22.74. On commencement of 30-day period when multiple defendants are involved generally, see §22.69.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.71 b. Unequivocal Action Creating Removal Jurisdiction Required

In the context of diversity of citizenship jurisdiction, courts have generally held that the 30-day removal period (see §22.67) does not begin to run until the actions taken by plaintiff to make the case removable are unequivocal in nature. Thus, e.g., in Schmidt v Capital Life Ins. Co. (ND Cal 1986) 626 F Supp 1315, 1318, the court, in holding removal timely, indicated that the 30 days does not begin to run until "the plaintiff unequivocally effects an abandonment of any resident defendants and thereby creates diversity." The court noted as follows (626 F Supp at 1318):

> a defendant need not speculate on or anticipate an abandonment from the plaintiff's mere expressions of intent or other equivocal action. Rather, the defendant is entitled to await affirmative and certain action by a plaintiff confirming such abandonment before exercising the right of removal.

See also Smith v Executive Fund Life Ins. Co. (MD La 1986) 651 F Supp 269 (30-day removal period does not begin to run until defendant can reasonably and intelligently conclude from pleadings and other papers that amount in controversy is in excess of jurisdictional amount). On requirement of plaintiff's voluntary act, see §22.72.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.72 c. Plaintiff's Voluntary Act Required for Change Rendering Case Removable

The courts have evolved a rule known as the voluntary-involuntary rule to determine whether a subsequent change in the case will result in removal when the case stated in the initial pleading is not removable. Under this rule for the case to become removable and the 30-day period of 28 USC §1446(b) (see §22.67) to begin to run, the change rendering the case removable must result from plaintiff's voluntary act (e.g., by voluntarily amending the pleadings or dismissing a nondiverse defendant) rather than by a court's order on the merits of an issue (e.g., a directed verdict in favor of a nondiverse defendant). See Self v General Motors Corp. (9th Cir 1978) 588 F2d 655 (final judgment entered against nondiverse defendant leaving only diverse defendant in case; removal by diverse defendant improper because judgment is a court order and a decision on the merits; case remanded). See also Atlanta Shipping Corp. v International Modular Hous., Inc. (SD NY 1982) 547 F Supp 1356, 1360 (removal proper even though diversity did not exist at time of commencement of action when diversity created by plaintiff's stipulation dismissing nondiverse party); White v Hughes (WD Tenn 1975) 409 F Supp 1005, 1008 (defendant's cross claim not a voluntary action by plaintiff and cannot be basis for removal under 28 USC §1446(b)).

An exception to the rule requiring plaintiff's voluntary act to bring about a change rendering the case removable exists when a state court dismisses a nondiverse defendant who has been fraudulently joined. Removal under these circumstances was held proper in Cook v Pep Boys—Mannie, Moe & Jack Inc. (ED Pa 1985) 641 F Supp 43 (granting of motion for judgment on the pleadings by nondiverse defendant). See Abels v State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (WD Pa 1988) 694 F Supp 140, 143 (exception recognized but did not apply under facts of case). See also Vidmar Buick Co. v General Motors Corp. (ED Ill 1985) 624 F Supp 704 (exception recognized). On fraudulent joinder generally, see §§22.19-22.21, 22.80.

On 30-day period for filing a notice of removal under 28 USC §1446(b) beginning to run on receipt of notice by defendant (e.g., at a deposition or during a phone conversation) that the case is or has become removable, see §22.70.

In 1988, 28 USC §1446(b) was amended to provide, for the first time, that a case may not be removed on the basis of jurisdiction conferred under 28 USC §1332 (i.e., diversity jurisdiction) more than 1 year after the action is commenced. As a result, diversity cases must be removed within 30 days after they first become removable (see §§22.67, 22.70), or within 1 year of commencement of the case, whichever first occurs. 28 USC §1446(b). There is no such 1-year limitation period for federal question cases, and they need only be removed within 30 days after they first become removable (see §§22.67, 22.70), whenever that occurs.

In California state court an action is deemed commenced when the complaint is filed (see CCP §350), and the summons and complaint may be served within 3 years after commencement of the action (CCP §583.210). It has been held, however, that a defendant may file an effective removal notice within 30 days after first receiving a copy of the initial complaint even though that complaint was filed more than a year earlier, and that the 1-year limitation in §1446(b) applies only to cases removed on the basis of something other than the initial pleading. Zogbi v Federated Dep't Store (CD Cal 1991) 767 F Supp 1037 (removal proper even though complaint filed more than 3 years before). See also Greer v Skilcraft (ND Ala 1989) 704 F Supp 1570, 1582 (commencement for purposes of the 1-year limitation period defined as the date of filing the complaint in state court accompanied by a bona fide effort to have it served). The Zogbi court was not persuaded to adopt a contrary position by such cases as Rezendes v Dow Corning Corp. (ED Cal 1989) 717 F Supp 1435 (summons and complaint served more than 1 year after complaint filed in state court; removal of diversity case held improper, remand ordered); Coman v International Playtex, Inc. (ND Cal 1989) 713 F Supp 1324, 1328 ("commencement" in removal cases governed by law of state where action originated; removal improper more than 1 year after complaint filed; retroactivity of §1446(b) amendment). See Phillips v Allstate Ins. Co. (CD Cal 1989) 702 F Supp 1466 (retroactivity of 1-year limitation period of 28 USC §1446(b); notice of removal untimely for case commenced 3 years earlier; dictum that when a nondiverse defendant dismissed more than 1 year after action filed, 1-year limitation period of §1446(b) bars other defendants from removing).

One unresolved issue concerns whether the concept of fraudulent joinder (see §§22.19-22.21) may be held to override the 1-year limitation imposed by 28 USC §1446(b), i.e., if defendant first acquires information concerning fraudulent joinder after the 1-year period, may defendant thereafter remove despite §1446(b)? Of course, if defendant ascertains information concerning fraudulent joinder within the 1-year period of §1446(b), defendant should file a timely notice of removal within the appropriate 30-day period specified in §1446(b) (see §§22.67-22.72). See generally Delatte v Zurich Ins. Co. (MD La 1988) 683 F Supp 1062 (removal based on fraudulent joinder untimely when not made within 30 days after settlement with other nondiverse defendants). See also Cook v Pep Boys—Mannie, Moe & Jack Inc. (ED Pa 1985) 641 F Supp 43, 47 n2 (time limits of 28 USC §1446(b) ignored when removal based on fraudulent joinder of nondiverse defendant and removal petition (now notice) "need only be filed within a reasonable time after defendant learns of the fraudulent joinder"; petition filed within 30 days after state court ruling on motion for judgment on the pleadings held timely).

§22.74 4. Waiver of Right to Remove by Acts Done in State Court Within 30-Day Period

A defendant who participates in the merits of the case in state court when grounds for removal exist will waive the right to remove (see Baker v National Blvd. Bank (ND Ill 1975) 399 F Supp 1021) even when the 30-day period of 28 USC §1446(b) (see §§22.67-22.72) has not as yet expired. A defendant cannot first experiment in state court before removing the case. See Gore v Stenson (SD Tex 1984) 616 F Supp 895 (defendant who takes some substantial defensive action in state court action before filing notice of removal may waive right to removal).

Generally for waiver to occur the defendant's intent to waive the right to remove to federal court and submit to the state court's jurisdiction must be clear and unequivocal, and the defendant's actions must be inconsistent with the defendant's right to remove. 616 F Supp at 898. There is an exception, however, to this rule. Inadvertent waiver can occur when a defendant takes certain action in state court that is "'deemed to constitute a submission to its jurisdiction.'" Chicago Title & Trust Co. v Whitney Stores, Inc. (ND Ill 1984) 583 F Supp 575 (defendant acted in manner inconsistent with intent to seek federal jurisdiction; because exception arises out of defendant's action, it is more akin to estoppel than waiver) quoting Bedell v H.R.C. Ltd. (ED Ky 1981) 522 F Supp 732, 737.

Thus, when grounds for removal exist, a defendant who files a permissive counterclaim in state court before filing a notice of removal thereby voluntarily submitting to the court's jurisdiction waives the right to remove. Isaacs v Group Health, Inc. (SD NY 1987) 668 F Supp 306. Similarly, a defendant waives the right to remove by first asserting a cross-claim against another defendant in state court. Isaacs v Group Health, Inc., supra. On uncertainty concerning the effect of filing a compulsory counterclaim, see Paris v Affleck (MD Fla 1977) 431 F Supp 878.

Although the right to removal is waived when a defendant participates in the merits of the action in state court before filing a notice of removal, there is no waiver when the defendant only takes part "in preliminary action, such as pleading or opposing a preliminary injunction." Baker v National Blvd. Bank (ND Ill 1975) 399 F Supp 1021, 1022 (intervention; motion to vacate injunction continued pending decision on motion to remand; action only amounted to protecting intervenor's interest in state court action). Thus, it has been held that the filing of only an answer asserting a general denial is an action which is "preliminary and non-conclusive in character and [does] not actually submit the merits of a claim for a binding decision." Gore v Stenson (SD Tex 1984) 616 F Supp 895, 897. Similarly, motions to vacate temporary restraining orders and injunctions have been held to constitute preliminary actions that do not actually submit the claim to a binding decision and thus do not constitute a waiver of the right to remove. See Bedell v H.R.C. Ltd. (ED Ky 1981) 522 F Supp 732, 738; Beasley v Union Pac. R.R. (D Neb 1980) 497 F Supp 213, 216. See also Cella, Adler & Tilles v Brown (ED Mo 1905) 136 F 439, aff'd on other grounds (8th Cir 1906) 144 F 742 (appearance and hearing on preliminary motions concerning injunctions, attachment, and other provisional remedies do not waive right to removal). On effect of general demurrer, compare Alley v Nott (1884) 111 US 472, 28 L Ed 491, 4 S Ct 495 (waiver of right to removal when removal sought after demurrer filed and hearing held) with Whiteley Malleable Casting Co. v Sterlingworth Ry. Supply Co. (CC Ind 1897) 83 F 853 (mere filing of answer and demurrer without hearing on demurrer before removal sought did not constitute waiver) and Duncan v Associated Press (CC Cal 1897) 81 F 417, 422 (no waiver when demurrer preceded removal). On taking of a deposition being held not to have waived right to remove case, see Duvall v Wabash Ry. (WD Mo 1923) 9 F2d 83.

NOTE: When an action becomes removable right before trial or during trial "the intention to remove [must] be voiced immediately." Chicago Title & Trust Co. v Whitney Stores, Inc. (ND Ill 1984) 583 F Supp 575. Compare Waldron v Skelly Oil Co. (ED Mo 1951) 101 F Supp 425 (plaintiff's attorney during opening statement dismissed nondiverse defendants; remaining diverse defendant held to have waived right to remove because defendant's attorney did not immediately request court to permit defendant's attorney to take steps to remove case but instead waited until plaintiff's attorney finished opening statement to do so) and Walker v American Tel. & Tel. (SD Tex 1988) 684 F Supp 475 (settlement conference held during state court trial in which nondiverse defendant dismissed; at moment nondiverse defendant dismissed, diverse defendant had duty to immediately give notice of intent to remove and waiting between 15 minutes to 1 hour before giving such notice constituted an estoppel of the right to remove) with Heniford v American Motors Sales Corp. (D SC 1979) 471 F Supp 328 (nondiverse defendant dismissed during closing argument; held no waiver of right to remove when diverse defendant, on reconvening of the court before trial advanced further, notified plaintiff and court of intent to remove and moved that state court proceedings be terminated; removal papers filed in federal court before verdict during jury deliberations). See also Chicago Title & Trust Co. v Whitney Stores, Inc., supra (waiver of right to remove by obtaining agreed continuance of trial date without stating intent to remove in interim).

§22.75 5. Effect of Failure to Remove Within Statutory Period; Waiver of Objection

The 30-day period for filing a notice of removal specified in 28 USC §1446(b) (see §§22.67-22.72) is not jurisdictional, but is a formal procedural requirement. Fristoe v Reynolds Metals Co. (9th Cir 1980) 615 F2d 1209, 1212; Abadjian v Gulf Oil Corp. (CD Cal 1984) 602 F Supp 874. See Brown v Demco, Inc. (5th Cir 1986) 792 F2d 478, 481; Transport Indem. Co. v Financial Trust Co. (CD Cal 1972) 339 F Supp 405. But see U.S. ex rel Walker v Gunn (9th Cir 1975) 511 F2d 1024, 1026 (untimely removal in criminal case under 28 USC §1446(c); court without jurisdiction to try merits). Thus, when a notice of removal is untimely filed, a timely objection to it by a motion to remand (see 28 USC §1447(c); §22.92) will defeat removal. See Fristoe v Reynolds Metals Co., supra. Plaintiff, however, may waive the defect or be estopped from raising it by conduct such as failing to timely object to the late removal. Fristoe v Reynolds Metals Co., supra (untimely objection). See Transport Indem. Co. v Financial Trust Co., supra (conduct constituting waiver or estoppel discussed).

B. Procedure

§22.76 1. Preparation of Notice of Removal; Content

A defendant, or defendants, desiring to remove a case to federal court must file a notice of removal in the United States district court for the district in which the action is pending. The notice should contain a short and plain statement of the grounds for removal, together with a copy of all process, pleadings, and orders with which the defendant or defendants have been served. 28 USC §1446(a). The notice of removal must be signed pursuant to Fed R Civ P 11. 28 USC §1446(a).

NOTE: Because the removing party has the burden of establishing removal jurisdiction if a motion to remand is made (see §22.92), the party removing the action should ensure that burden has been met by preparing a proper and factual removal notice, which includes all relevant facts required to show jurisdiction, requesting judicial notice wherever appropriate, and timely filing the notice of removal and all appropriate pleadings and other documents with the court. On federal court's discretion to award just costs and any actual expenses, including attorney fees, incurred as a result of an improper removal, see §22.93.

On alleging with particularity claim of fraudulent joinder of defendants, see §22.80. On filing notice of removal and other documents, see §§22.85-22.88. On requirement that all defendants join in notice and specifying in notice explanation for absence of codefendants, see §§22.77-22.83. On form for notice of removal, see §22.98.

§22.77 a. Requirement That All Defendants Join in Notice of Removal

Unless an exception exists (see §§22.78-22.83), the general rule is that all defendants must join in the notice of removal. See Fristoe v Reynolds Metals Co. (9th Cir 1980) 615 F2d 1209, 1213; Thornton v Allstate Ins. Co. (ED Mich 1980) 492 F Supp 645, 647. See also McKinney v Rodney C. Hunt Co. (WD NC 1978) 464 F Supp 59, 62 ("unanimity among all parties substantively entitled to remove is required").

It is not sufficient to have a single defendant or even a majority of defendants seek removal. All must do so, or removal will be held to be improper. See, e.g., Schmidt v National Org. for Women (ND Fla 1983) 562 F Supp 210, 212; McKinney v Rodney C. Hunt Co., supra; Reiken v Nationwide Leisure Corp. (SD NY 1978) 458 F Supp 179, 182. See also Adams v Aero Servs. Int'l, Inc. (ED Va 1987) 657 F Supp 519 (when removal made under 28 USC §1441(a) or §1441(b) defendants must be treated collectively and all who may properly join in removal petition (notice of removal) must join in or consent to it unless an exception exists).

All the defendants need not sign the notice of removal, however, for them to join in the removal. It is sufficient if the other defendants simply consent to the action being removed and timely file such a consent. Hernandez v Six Flags Magic Mountain, Inc. (CD Cal 1988) 688 F Supp 560, 562.

On removal period in cases involving multiple defendants, see §22.69. On form for joinder of defendants in notice of removal, see §22.99.

b. Exceptions to Requirement of Joinder by All Defendants

§22.78 (1) Nonserved Defendants

Only those defendants who have been served need join in the notice of removal. They can remove by themselves. Salveson v Western States Bankcard Ass'n (9th Cir 1984) 731 F2d 1423, 1429; Adams v Aero Servs. Int'l, Inc. (ED Va 1987) 657 F Supp 519, 521 n2. See Knowles v American Tempering, Inc. (ED Pa 1985) 629 F Supp 832, 835 (removing defendant need not obtain joinder of unserved codefendant).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.79 (2) Formal or Nominal Parties

Only necessary or indispensable parties are required to join in the notice of removal. Folts v City of Richmond (ED Va 1979) 480 F Supp 621, 624. Nominal or formal parties may be disregarded for removal purposes and need not join in the notice of removal. Knowles v American Tempering, Inc. (ED Pa 1985) 629 F Supp 832, 835; Folts v City of Richmond, supra. See Adams v Aero Servs. Int'l, Inc. (ED Va 1987) 657 F Supp 519, 521 n2 (nominal or formal defendants are exception to rule requiring joinder of all defendants). On joinder of formal or nominal parties not defeating diversity of citizenship jurisdiction, see §22.17.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.80 (3) Fraudulently Joined Defendants

Fraudulently joined defendants are disregarded for the purpose of determining diversity of citizenship and need not be joined in a notice of removal. See Polyplastics, Inc. v Transconex, Inc. (1st Cir 1983) 713 F2d 875, 877. Under the former petition for removal procedure, supporting facts apart from personal deductions had to be stated in the petition to show fraudulent joinder. Goldberg v CPC Int'l, Inc. (ND Cal 1980) 495 F Supp 233, 239. See Saylor v General Motors Corp. (ED Ky 1976) 416 F Supp 1173, 1176 (fraudulently joinder must be pleaded with particularity). See also §22.21. Presumably, this rule has not changed under the current notice of removal procedure. For further discussion on what constitutes fraudulent joinder and fraudulent joinder generally, see §§22.19-22.21, 22.72.

§22.81 (4) Separate and Independent Claims

When a separate and independent claim is the basis for removal under 28 USC §1441(c) (see §§22.30-22.33), only the defendant or defendants to that claim must join in the notice of removal. See Reiken v Nationwide Leisure Corp. (SD NY 1978) 458 F Supp 179, 182; International Union of Operating Eng'rs, Local 400 v Sletten Constr. Co. (D Mont 1974) 383 F Supp 855, 856 n1. See also Thomas v Shelton (7th Cir 1984) 740 F2d 478, 483 (unlike for removal under §1441(a) consent of all defendants is not required for removal under §1441(c)); Knowles v American Tempering, Inc. (ED Pa 1985) 629 F Supp 832, 835 (party against whom separate claim asserted need not obtain joinder of other defendants).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.82 (5) Federal Officers

When an action is brought against a federal officer or officers as enumerated in 28 USC §1442 and others, and removal is sought under 28 USC §1442, a federal officer alone may file a notice of removal without joinder of the other defendants. Bradford v Harding (2d Cir 1960) 284 F2d 307; Jones v Elliot (ED Va 1950) 94 F Supp 567. See Perez v Rhiddlehoover (ED La 1965) 247 F Supp 65, 70 (immaterial that all defendants did not join in removal; if rule otherwise plaintiff could always defeat removal by joining a defendant that would not remove). On removal under 28 USC §1442 generally, see §§22.35-22.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.83 c. Specifying Exceptions to Joinder of Defendants Requirement In Notice of Removal

When fewer than all the defendants join in the notice of removal because an exception applies (see §§22.77-22.82), the notice of removal must set forth an explanation for the nonjoinder of all nonjoined defendants. See Knowles v American Tempering, Inc. (ED Pa 1985) 629 F Supp 832, 835 n1. Otherwise, the notice of removal will be insufficient on its face to perfect removal. See Wallis v Southern Silo Co. (ND Miss 1973) 369 F Supp 92.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.84 d. Plaintiff's Waiver of Defect That All Defendants Not Joined in Notice of Removal

A failure of all defendants to join in or consent to removal is a technical or procedural irregularity rather than a jurisdictional defect. Roberts v Vulcan Materials Co. (MD La 1983) 558 F Supp 108; Albonetti v GAF Corp.—Chem. Group (SD Tex 1981) 520 F Supp 825. Thus, plaintiff may waive this defect by failing to timely object, going to trial on the merits, or any other conduct that indicates acquiescence. Roberts v Vulcan Materials Co., supra. On 30-day limitation period under 28 USC §1447(c) to move to remand based on any defect other than lack of subject matter jurisdiction, see §22.92.

2. Filing Notice of Removal and Other Requirements

§22.85 a. Timely Filing in Federal Court; Automatic Removal

The notice of removal should be filed in the federal district court for the district and division within which the action is pending. 28 USC §1446(a). It must be filed within the appropriate time period specified in 28 USC §1446(b). See Murphy Bros. v Michetti Pipestringing, Inc. (1999) 526 US 344, 143 L Ed 2d 448, 119 S Ct 1322. On time limitation to file notice of removal, see §§22.67-22.75. Before filing the notice counsel should ascertain if any federal local rules apply and if there are any local cover sheet and filing fee requirements. On removing claim related to a bankruptcy case, see 28 USC §1452.

No court order from federal or state court is required to effect removal. Instead, the mere act of filing the removal notice in federal court, giving notice to all adverse parties (see §22.87), and filing a copy in state court (see §22.88) effects removal. 28 USC §1446(d). See Libhart v Santa Monica Dairy Co. (9th Cir 1979) 592 F2d 1062, 1064 (removal accomplished merely by defendant filing verified petition (now notice of removal, see §22.76)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.86 b. Other Papers to Be Filed With Notice in Federal Court

The defendant or defendants removing the action to federal court must file with the notice of removal (see §22.85) a copy of all process, pleadings, and orders that have been served on the defendant or defendants in the state court action. 28 USC §1446(a). In appropriate circumstances counsel may also wish to attach discovery documents or responses to the notice of removal. In Visicorp v Software Arts, Inc. (ND Cal 1983) 575 F Supp 1528, discovery and discovery requests were held not to constitute "process, pleadings or orders" within the meaning of 28 USC §1446(a). Counsel who desire to attach discovery documents or responses should ascertain if there are any local court rules that either require it or prohibit this from being done.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.87 c. Prompt Written Notice to Adverse Parties

Promptly after the notice of removal is filed in federal court (see §22.85) the removing defendant or defendants must give each adverse party written notice of the filing of the notice of removal. 28 USC §1446(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.88 d. Promptly File Copy of Notice in State Court

The party removing the action is also required to promptly file a copy of the notice of removal with the clerk of the state court in which the action is pending. 28 USC §1446(d). The state court is thereafter prohibited from taking further action unless the case is remanded to the state court. 28 USC §1446(d). See Jones v Cargill Nutrena Feed Div. (SD Ala 1987) 665 F Supp 907 (until all requirements of 28 USC §1446(d) (former 28 USC §1446(e)) fulfilled state court retains jurisdiction and may proceed with case).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.89 3. Amending Notice of Removal

Before expiration of the 30-day removal period under 28 USC §1446(b) (see §§22.67-22.72), it appears that a notice of removal may be amended at any time by the defendant or defendants. See Mullins v King's Entertainment Co. (ED Mich 1987) 663 F Supp 61, 64; Winters Gov't Secs. Corp. v Cedar Point State Bank (SD Fla 1978) 446 F Supp 1123, 1127. After the 30-day period cases in which the court has granted leave to amend fall into "two loosely defined categories of cases: 'mislabeling' and 'lack of specificity' cases." Smiley v Citibank (South Dakota) (CD Cal 1993) 863 F Supp 1156. In the "lack of specificity" cases, the defendant sets forth the correct statute and legal theory for removal but does not include all the facts necessary for removal. See, e.g., Barrow Dev. Co. v Fulton Ins. Co. (9th Cir 1969) 418 F2d 316 (failure of petition for removal (now notice, see §22.76) to disclose corporation's state of incorporation and principal place of business merely defective allegation rather than a nullity; amendment permitted). In the mislabeling cases, the notice of removal and the entire file of the proceedings contain sufficient facts and legal theories to support removal, but the notice sets forth the improper statutory section for removal. See, e.g., National Audubon Soc'y v Department of Water & Power (ED Cal 1980) 496 F Supp 499, in which the court held that defendants who plead federal question jurisdiction are permitted to amend the applicable code section on which jurisdiction is based. Defendants who plead diversity as the basis for removal, however, may not amend their notice to plead federal question jurisdiction after the 30-day removal period has run. Smiley v Citibank (South Dakota), supra. In determining whether an amendment will cure a defect in form or add new substance under the former petition for removal procedure (see §22.76), the court ruled that it was not limited to the petition and the motion to amend the petition, but should review the entire file to ascertain what the file fairly reflects at the time the court considers the motion. National Audubon Soc'y v Department of Water & Power (ED Cal 1980) 496 F Supp 499, 503. If the file contained the necessary factual allegation omitted in the initial petition for removal, the amendment was held to merely clarify a defective allegation and the amendment would be upheld. See National Audubon Soc'y v Department of Water & Power, supra. Presumably the same rule applies to the notice of removal procedure.

§22.90 4. Removability Determined at Time Notice Filed

Whether a case is removable is determined by the pleadings as of the time the notice of removal is filed. However, if the plaintiff after removal "seeks to join additional defendants whose joinder would destroy subject matter jurisdiction," the court has the discretion to either (a) deny joinder or (b) grant joinder and remand the action to state court. 28 USC §1447(e). Under the former petition procedure (see §22.76), later conduct or amendments could not generally be used to oust the federal court of its jurisdiction if removal jurisdiction existed when the petition was filed. See Blankenberg v Commercial Ins. Co. (ND Cal 1987) 655 F Supp 223, 226 n5. See also Libhart v Santa Monica Dairy Co. (9th Cir 1979) 592 F2d 1062, 1065 (to determine removability based on federal question jurisdiction, look to complaint at time petition (now notice, see §22.76) filed); Littlefield v Continental Cas. Co. (CD Cal 1979) 475 F Supp 887, 889 (must be complete diversity between parties for diversity of citizenship jurisdiction (see §§22.16-22.29); diversity tested at time of filing of removal petition).

NOTE: If federal claims and pendent state claims are joined in the complaint and after removal the plaintiff amends its complaint to dismiss the federal claims, the court may remand the pendent state claims. Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v Cohill (1988) 484 US 343, 98 L Ed 2d 720, 108 S Ct 614. See §22.41.

NOTE: Concerning diversity of citizenship, under 28 USC §1441(a) defendants sued under fictitious names (Doe defendants) are disregarded. See §22.23.

§22.91 5. Proceeding in Federal Court After Removal; Avoiding Waiver of Jury Trial

Pleadings filed in state court have force and effect in federal court after removal and need not be refiled (unless the court requires repleading). Granny Goose Food, Inc. v Brotherhood of Teamsters, Local 70 (1974) 415 US 423, 435, 39 L Ed 2d 435, 94 S Ct 1113. See Fed R Civ P 81(c)(2). Similarly, interlocutory state court orders, e.g., injunctions or attachments, have the same force and effect in federal court after removal that they had in state court. 415 US at 436. See 28 USC §1450. A motion must be brought in federal court to change or modify the order. See Granny Goose Food, Inc. v Brotherhood of Teamsters, Local 70, supra; Aybar v F. & B. Mfg. Co. (D PR 1980) 498 F Supp 1184, 1194.

If the defendant has not answered the complaint, the defendant must answer it or present other defenses or objections available under the federal rules of civil procedure within the longest of "21 days after receiving—through service or otherwise—a copy of the initial pleading setting forth the claim for relief; or 21 days after being served with the summons for an initial pleading on file at the time of service; or 7 days after the notice of removal is filed." Fed R Civ P 81(c). The future course of the proceedings after removal are governed by federal rather than state law. Granny Goose Food, Inc. v Brotherhood of Teamsters, Local 70, supra.

If the plaintiff has not served one or more defendants with process, plaintiff must complete service on such defendants in the same manner as if the case had been originally filed in the district court. 28 USC §1448. A state court summons that has been issued but not served before removal becomes null and void on removal, and new process under Fed R Civ P 4 must be issued by the federal court. Beecher v Wallace (9th Cir 1967) 381 F2d 372. On proceeding in federal court when state service has not been perfected at time of removal or when the process served proves to be defective, see 28 USC §1448; Beecher v Wallace, supra. On issuance and service of process in federal court actions and time limitations, see Fed R Civ P 4.

With regard to the right to a jury trial, if all the necessary pleadings have been served at the time of removal, the defendant must demand a jury trial within 14 days after filing the notice of removal and the plaintiff must demand a jury trial within 14 days after being served with the notice of removal. Fed R Civ P 81(c). A party, however, who has expressly demanded a jury trial in accordance with state law before removal need not demand one after removal. Fed R Civ P 81(c). When a defendant does not file an answer to the complaint until after removal, the period specified in Fed R Civ P 38(b), requiring the demand to be made no later than 14 days after service of the last pleading directed to the issue triable by the jury, applies. See Pawlak v Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (D Mass 1980) 87 FRD 717. Counsel should check local court rules to ascertain if there are any special local requirements and time limitations on demanding a jury trial. For further discussion, see §22.50.

6. Objecting to Removal

§22.92 a. Noticing Motion to Remand; Time Limitation

The method to object to an improper removal of the case to federal court is for the aggrieved party to notice a motion to remand the action back to state court. A motion to remand must be made within 30 days after the filing of the notice of removal under 28 USC §1446(a) (see §§22.85-22.88) when the basis for the motion is any defect other than lack of subject matter jurisdiction. 28 USC §1447(c); Gray v Moore Business Forms, Inc. (ND Cal 1989) 711 F Supp 543. There is no time limit for the motion, however, when the basis for the motion is that the district court lacks subject matter jurisdiction. 28 USC §1447(c). See also International Union of Operating Eng'rs v County of Plumas (9th Cir 2009) 559 F3d 1041 (party that asserted subject matter jurisdiction in its removal petition not precluded from challenging subject matter jurisdiction on appeal). Nor does the 30-day time limit apply to a remand motion based on a forum selection clause specifying state court as the appropriate forum, although the district court has discretion "to deny such a motion if it is not raised on a timely basis." Kamm v Itex Corp. (9th Cir 2009) 568 F3d 752, 757 (forum selection clause is not a "defect" to which 28 USC §1447(c) time limit applies).

For more detailed discussion of motions to remand generally, see 16 Moore & Coquillette, Moore's Federal Practice, Removal §107.41[1][d] (3d ed 1997); 14C Wright, Miller & Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure, Jurisdiction and Related Matters §3739 (3d ed 1998).

The issue of improper removal may also be raised in opposition to a motion to dismiss. See Karambelas v Hughes Aircraft Co. (9th Cir 1993) 992 F2d 971; Jackson v Southern Cal. Gas Co. (9th Cir 1989) 881 F2d 638, 641 n2.

§22.93 b. Burden of Removability Lies With Moving Party; Costs and Attorney Fees

When remand is sought (see §22.92), the burden is on the party that removed the case to federal court to establish that removal jurisdiction exists and that removal is proper. See Green v Mutual of Omaha (ND Cal 1982) 550 F Supp 815, 819; Littlefield v Continental Cas. Co. (CD Cal 1979) 475 F Supp 887, 889. See also Mutual Liab. Ins. Co. v Flintkote Co. (SD NY 1983) 565 F Supp 843, 845 (removing party opposing remand motion for fraudulent joinder has burden to establish, by competent proof, right to federal forum). On drafting notice of removal to show removal jurisdiction, see §22.76.

If the court determines that removal was improper, the "order remanding the case may require payment of just costs and any actual expenses, including attorney fees, incurred as result of the removal." 28 USC §1447(c).

c. Reviewability of Court Order

§22.94 (1) When Remand Granted; Multiple Proceedings

The general rule is that a district court's remand order—based on a timely raised defect in removal procedure or on lack of subject matter jurisdiction (the grounds for remand specified in 28 USC §1447(c))—is not reviewable by appeal under 28 USC §1447(d). Powerex Corp. v Reliant Energy Servs., Inc. (2007) 551 US 224, 168 L Ed 2d 112, 121, 127 S Ct 2411. See also Things Remembered, Inc. v Petrarca (1995) 516 US 124, 133 L Ed 2d 461, 116 S Ct 494; Gravitt v Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. (1977) 430 US 723, 52 L Ed 2d 1, 97 S Ct 1439. A remand order in a civil rights case that was removed to federal district court under 28 USC §1443 (see §22.37) may be reviewed by appeal or otherwise. 28 USC §1447(d).

Although an appellate court may lack jurisdiction to review a remand order under 28 USC §1447(d), the court may review a district court's award of attorney fees under 28 USC §1447(c). Dahl v Rosenfeld (9th Cir 2003) 316 F3d 1074, 1077. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has held that the federal removal statute (28 USC §1447(c)) does not allow a district court to remand a case sua sponte for a nonjurisdictional defect in procedure. Kelton Arms Condominium Owners Ass'n v Homestead Co. (9th Cir 2003) 346 F3d 1190.

When a remand order is not based on 28 USC §1447(c), appellate review of the remand order under 28 USC §1291 may be appropriate. See Quackenbush v Allstate Ins. Co. (1996) 517 US 706, 714, 135 L Ed 2d 1, 116 S Ct 1712. See also California Dep't of Water Resources v Powerex Corp. (2008) 533 F3d 1087, 1092 (appellate review of decision to decline supplemental jurisdiction under 28 USC §1367(c)); Scott v Machinists Auto. Trades Lodge No. 190 (9th Cir 1987) 827 F2d 589 (remand order of pendent state claims for defamation and intentional infliction of emotional distress reviewable); Clorox v United States Dist. Court (9th Cir 1985) 779 F2d 517 (appellate review available when remand order based on resolution of substantive law issue apart from jurisdictional decision); Pelleport Invs. v Budco Quality Theatres (9th Cir 1984) 741 F2d 273 (remand order based on forum selection clause).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should consider filing both a notice of appeal and a petition for mandamus when the appropriate procedure to review a reviewable remand order is unclear. See Clorox, 779 F2d at 519 (remand order which is appealable under 28 USC §1291 is not reviewable by mandamus).

Despite the fact that review of a remand order may be barred by 28 USC §1447(d), that portion of a district court's remand order awarding attorney fees to the plaintiff is reviewable under 28 USC §1291. Schmitt v Insurance Co. of N. Am. (9th Cir 1988) 845 F2d 1546, 1550.

Counsel should bear in mind that a certified copy of the remand order must be mailed by the federal court clerk to the clerk of the state court. 28 USC §1447(c). See Spanair S.A. v McDonnell Douglas Corp. (2009) 172 CA4th 348, 355, 90 CR3d 864 (jurisdiction not returned to state court until district court clerk mailed copy of remand order to superior court, nearly 3 years after district court's order was entered). Before this certification to the state court, the federal district court may grant a rehearing to correct an error. See Bucy v Nevada Constr. Co. (9th Cir 1942) 125 F2d 213, 217. See also Seedman v United States Dist. Court (9th Cir 1988) 837 F2d 413. After certification to the state court, however, the federal court cannot vacate a remand order issued under 28 USC §1447(c) (Seedman v United States Dist. Court, supra) and the state court may proceed with the case (28 USC §1447(c)).

PRACTICE TIP: When the district court grants a remand order and counsel opposing it believes that it is a reviewable order and adequate reason for reconsideration exists, to avoid having to proceed in two forums, i.e., in state court with the case on remand and in federal court with review of the remand order, counsel might give thought to requesting the district court to reconsider its remand order before a certified copy of it is mailed to the clerk of the state court. To be able to accomplish this, however, counsel may have to request the district court judge to stay issuance of the remand order for a stated period of time unless a local court rule provides for such a stay. If the court refuses the request or does not vacate its order, or if such a request is not made, a stay of the state court proceeding pending review of the remand order will be required to avoid having to proceed both in state and federal court. Counsel should first consider obtaining a stay order from the court of appeals under 28 USC §2283 and, if the court refuses, should then consider requesting the state court to stay its proceedings pending review of the remand order in the federal appellate courts.

Documents in the federal court's file are not automatically sent to the state court. Plaintiff must request the papers that plaintiff desires to be sent to the state court. On effect given to pleadings filed in federal court before remand to defeat default in state court proceeding, see Laguna Village, Inc. v Laborers' Int'l Union (1983) 35 C3d 174, 179, 197 CR 99.

§22.95 (2) When Remand Denied

An order denying remand standing alone is not final or appealable. Poirrier v Nicklos Drilling Co. (5th Cir 1981) 648 F2d 1063; Wilkins v American Export-Isbrandtsen Lines, Inc. (2d Cir 1968) 401 F2d 151. Rather, the order may be reviewed on appeal from a final judgment "or by interlocutory appeal if the refusal to remand is certified under" 28 USC §1292(b). Sheeran v General Elec. Co. (9th Cir 1979) 593 F2d 93, 97. To preserve an objection to removal and to be able to have the issue of an improper denial of remand reviewed on appeal from a final judgment, however, the party must seek an interlocutory appeal from the district court's order denying the remand motion. Johnson v Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. (9th Cir 1988) 847 F2d 600 (although objection to removal made, to preserve objection filing of interlocutory appeal required); Sorosky v Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir 1987) 826 F2d 794, 798 (Ninth Circuit cases require interlocutory appeal). If the party seeking review does not do this and a trial is had on the merits, the issue that may be reviewed on appeal is not whether the case was properly removed, but whether the district court has jurisdiction at the time judgment is entered. Caterpillar Inc. v Lewis (1996) 519 US 61, 136 L Ed 2d 437, 117 S Ct 467; American Fire & Cas. Co. v Finn (1951) 341 US 6, 95 L Ed 702, 71 S Ct 534; Lewis v Time, Inc. (9th Cir 1983) 710 F2d 549, 552. Failure to remand a case that was improperly removed to federal court is not fatal to any judgment if the district court has jurisdiction at the time judgment is entered. Caterpillar Inc. v Lewis, supra. See Grubbs v General Elec. Credit Corp. (1972) 405 US 699, 702, 31 L Ed 2d 612, 617, 92 S Ct 1344 (when case tried on merits without objection after removal, issue reviewed is whether district court would have original jurisdiction had case been filed in court).

For a case in which a denial of remand was reviewed before a final judgment without district court certification under 28 USC §1292(b), see O'Halloran v University of Wash. (9th Cir 1988) 856 F2d 1375 (when appeal from order denying remand joined with appeal from order granting or denying injunction, court will review issue of denial of remand without waiting for certification or final judgment).

When a defendant has improperly removed a case to federal court without filing a response in the original court and the case is remanded, CCP §430.90 specifies the time the defendant has to respond.

If the defendant has not generally appeared the defendant has 30 days to make a motion to dismiss (CCP §583.250), or to quash service of summons or to stay or dismiss (CCP §418.10), if the court has not ruled on a similar motion before removal to federal court. CCP §430.90(a)(1).

If the defendant has not filed an answer in the original court, the defendant has 30 days (a) to answer or (b) to demur or file a motion to strike, provided an answer was not filed in federal court and a demurrer or motion to strike that raises the same or similar issues was not ruled on by the original court before removal or the federal court before remand. CCP §430.90(a)(2). If the demurrer or motion to strike is denied, the defendant has 30 days to answer, unless the answer was filed with the demurrer or motion to strike. CCP §430.90(a)(2). The 30 days to respond is calculated from the date the original court receives the order of remand. CCP §430.90(b).

PRACTICE TIP: On remand, the federal court clerk merely mails a certified copy of the remand order to the clerk of the state court. 28 USC §1447(c). Cautious counsel may want to file an additional notice in the now-revived state court action, and attach any appropriate federal court pleadings, such as an answer, because the federal court will not provide any pleadings in its file to the state court. If counsel does not act, the state court will continue to treat the action as removed and stayed on its docket.

Comment: On time limitations for filing notice of removal and content, see §§22.67-22.89. On form for joinder of removal, see §22.99. The following is an example of what might be filled in the form under the grounds for removal:

1. On the fifth day of March, 2000, an action was commenced by plaintiff, Jones Investments, against defendant, Smith Corporation, in the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles, entitled "Jones Investments, a Texas general partnership, plaintiff, v Smith Corporation; Does 1 through 100, inclusive, defendants," bearing Los Angeles Superior Court Case No. _ _ _ _ _ _, by filing a complaint for breach of contract, fraud, and rescission. A copy of the complaint is attached as Exhibit 1 and incorporated by reference.

2. Defendant first received this complaint on March 12, 2000, when John Johnson, attorney of record for plaintiff Jones Investments, enclosed the summons and complaint with a cover letter and a notice of acknowledgment and receipt of service addressed to John A. Apple, Sweet & Apple. The cover letter was dated March 10, 2000; the envelope was postmarked March 10, 2000, and was received by Sweet & Apple on March 12, 2000.

3. The complaint alleges that Jones Investments is a Texas general partnership with its principal place of business located in the County of Dallas, State of Texas, and that Smith Corporation is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in the State of New York.

4. Defendant is informed, believes, and alleges that the general partners of Jones Investments are Al Jones, who is domiciled in the County of Dallas, State of Texas; Bob Jones, who is domiciled in the County of Dallas, State of Texas; and Jeff Brown, who is domiciled in the County of Dallas, State of Texas. Defendant requests that this Court take judicial notice of the motor vehicle registration statements of Al Jones, Bob Jones, and Jeff Brown pursuant to Rule 201(b)(1)-(2) of the Federal Rules of Evidence. Copies of their motor vehicle registration statements are attached in the aggregate as Exhibit 2 and incorporated by reference. Exhibit 2 demonstrates that Jones, Jones, and Brown reside in the County of Dallas, State of Texas. Defendants also request that this Court take judicial notice, pursuant to Rule 201(b)(1)-(2) of the Federal Rules of Evidence, of the general partnership agreement recorded in the County of Dallas, State of Texas, which demonstrates that Al Jones, Bob Jones, and Jeff Brown are the general partners of plaintiff Jones Investments. A copy of the general partnership agreement is attached as Exhibit 3 and incorporated by reference.

5. A copy of the articles of incorporation of Smith Corporation are attached as Exhibit 4 and incorporated by reference. Exhibit 4 demonstrates that Smith Corporation is, as alleged in plaintiff's complaint, a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business located in the State of New York. Defendant requests that this Court take judicial notice of defendant's articles of incorporation pursuant to Rule 201(b)(1)-(2) of the Federal Rules of Evidence.

6. Paragraph 14 of plaintiff's first claim for relief states that, by reason of the facts alleged in that claim for relief, plaintiff has been damaged in a sum not less than $3,500,000, according to proof. In paragraph 20 of the second claim for relief, plaintiff alleges that it has been damaged in a sum not less than $3,500,000, according to proof. In paragraph 24 of the third claim for relief, plaintiff alleges that it has been damaged in a sum not less than $3,500,000, according to proof. These damage allegations are also pleaded in the first paragraph of the prayer to plaintiff's complaint.

7. By reason of the foregoing, the above-described action is a civil action which may be removed to this Court by defendant Smith Corporation pursuant to the provisions of 28 U.S.C. §1441(a) and 28 U.S.C. §1332, because this action is between citizens of different states and the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $75,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

Note: Counsel should check local federal district court rules for form and formatting rules of court papers and other requirements (e.g., cover sheet, filing fee).

I. INTRODUCTION

§23.1 A. Scope of Chapter

Like a motion to strike or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, a demurrer attacks matters appearing on the face of pleadings filed by another party. This chapter covers the procedures for preparing and opposing demurrers filed in civil actions in California state courts. It discusses description and use (see §§23.3-23.14), and demurrers to complaint (see §§23.15-23.38), to cross-complaints (see §§23.39-23.41), and to answers (see §§23.42-23.47). It also discusses responsive procedures (see §§23.48-23.49), reply papers (see §23.50), hearing and court ruling (see §§23.51-23.57), and posthearing procedures (see §§23.58-23.67). For a diagnostic checklist and forms, see (§§23.68-23.75).

For information on other responsive procedures, such as motions to strike and answers—either of which may be filed with a demurrer—see chaps 24 (motions to strike) and 25 (answers).

NOTE: As used in this chapter, the words "plaintiff," "defendant," and "complaint" include "cross-complainant," "cross-defendant," and "cross-complaint."

§23.2 B. Governing Law

The controlling statutory authority is found in CCP §§430.10-430.80. A demurrer is generally treated like a motion. California Rules of Court 3.1103(c) provides that all law and motion rules (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1100-3.1302) apply to demurrers unless the context or subject matter requires otherwise. In addition, Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320 provides several special requirements that apply only to demurrers. The Judicial Council has preempted local rules on demurrers, unless such rules are required or permitted by statute or rule. Cal Rules of Ct 3.20(a). See §11.2.

NOTE: Local rules implementing the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) are among the rules otherwise permitted by rule and statute. Cal Rules of Ct 3.20(b).

II. DESCRIPTION AND USE

§23.3 A. Function

A demurrer can be used at the pleading stage of litigation to challenge the legal sufficiency of allegations in an opponent's pleadings. See CCP §§430.10-430.80, 589, 591. Smeltzley v Nicholson Mfg. Co. (1977) 18 C3d 932, 136 CR 269. "Pleadings" include complaints, cross-complaints, and answers. CCP §422.10 (demurrers themselves are also "pleadings").

The majority of demurrers are filed against complaints (or cross-complaints), but demurrers may also be used to attack answers. See §§23.42-23.47.

A demurrer tests issues of law, not fact; thus, a ground for objecting to an opponent's pleading can be raised by demurrer only if it (CCP §430.30):

- Appears on the face of the pleading; or
- Is based on a matter from which the court is required to or may take judicial notice.

The grounds for demurring to a complaint or cross-complaint are the same as the grounds for objecting in an answer. See CCP §§430.10-430.20. A demurrer is appropriate when the ground for objecting appears on the face of the pleading; an answer is proper when the ground does not appear on the face of the pleading. CCP §430.30(a)-(b). A party may demur and answer at the same time (CCP §430.30(c)), or demur and move to strike at the same time (see CCP §435(c)).

On demurrer, it is not the court's role to decide that the complaint is false in whole or in part; rather, a demurrer admits the truth of all material facts properly pleaded. William v Southern Cal. Gas Co. (2009) 176 CA4th 591, 600, 98 CR3d 258.

PRACTICE TIP: Theoretically, a demurrer can resolve a meritless action, but this is rare. If the demurrer is granted, the courts generally permit the opposing party to amend the defective cause of action or defense. Although a demurrer helps to clarify the causes of action or defenses and to narrow the theories that the opposing party will rely on at trial, it has the disadvantage of alerting the opposing party at an early stage in the case to the weaknesses of the pleadings. For further discussion of tactics to consider before filing a demurrer, see §23.6.

If a defendant has not previously made an appearance, filing a demurrer is a general appearance in an action. CCP §1014.

§23.4 B. General and Special Demurrers Distinguished

In general, the Code of Civil Procedure makes no distinction between "general" and "special" demurrers. See CCP §§430.10-430.90. However, the California Rules of Court distinguish the two (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(f)); special demurrers are not allowed in limited civil cases (CCP §92(c)), and case law is replete with references to "general" and "special" demurrers. See 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§951-953 (5th ed 2008).

- A complaint or cross-complaint on the ground that the pleading fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (CCP §430.10(e)); or
- An answer on the ground that the pleading fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a defense (CCP §430.20(a)).

A demurrer on any of the remaining grounds in CCP §430.20 or §430.10 (e.g., uncertainty, lack of legal capacity to sue) is considered a "special demurrer." For discussion of the specific grounds for demurrer, see §§23.22-23.36.

Failure to demur or answer constitutes a waiver of the grounds for a special demurrer, but the grounds for a general demurrer may be raised at any time during litigation, even though the time to demur or answer has passed. On alternative procedures, see §§23.7-23.14 (motion for judgment on the pleadings or objection to evidence at trial based on same grounds as general demurrer).

§23.5 C. Availability

Demurrers can be used in both limited and unlimited civil actions in California trial courts. See CCP §§421-422.20. However, a special demurrer is not allowed in a limited civil case. CCP §92(c). A demurrer can state objections to:

- A complaint or cross-complaint (CCP §430.10), including a complaint in intervention (CCP §387) and a complaint for unlawful detainer (CCP §1170).
- An amended complaint or a cross-complaint. See CCP §586.
- An answer (CCP §430.20) or an amended answer (CCP §471.5).
- A peremptory writ or an application for a writ of review (CCP §§1069.1, 1089, 1105, 1109; Cal Rules of Ct 8.487(b)(1)). See California Civil Writ Practice §§8.40-8.44 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008).

Demurrers are not used in:

- Small claims proceedings;
- Federal court civil actions; or
- Proceedings under the Family Code (see Cal Rules of Ct 5.108).

NOTE: In federal court, a defendant may challenge the legal sufficiency of pleadings by a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted under Fed R Civ P 12(b)(6) (sometimes called the federal demurrer).

In family law cases, some of the objections raised in other civil actions by demurrer can be raised by a motion to quash under family law rules. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.121, 5.122(a)(2).

A defendant corporation in a shareholder derivative suit may only demur to the standing of a plaintiff. Patrick v Alacer Corp. (2008) 167 CA4th 995, 1008, 84 CR3d 642.

§23.6 D. Tactical Considerations

In deciding whether to demur to a complaint, defense counsel should consider not only whether a demurrable defect appears on the face of the complaint, but also whether demurring is likely to produce a practical benefit for the defendant more effectively than will alternative procedures. See §§23.7-23.14.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: It is not good practice to file a demurrer solely to delay progress of the action, to inconvenience the plaintiff's counsel, or to build a fee. Judges lose patience with attorneys whose demurrers do not seem reasonably calculated to narrow issues or produce useful clarification of the pleadings, and it wastes time to file a demurrer for an amendment that the plaintiff would have made if asked.

A demurrer is a valuable procedure for obtaining an early hearing on legal issues such as the plaintiff's right to proceed with the action and the validity or sufficiency of the stated causes of action, theories, and allegations. A successful demurrer can narrow the bases on which the plaintiff may proceed and have a salutary effect on settlement negotiations. It can also resolve the entire action before the defense needs to frame an answer and incur further expense. After a demurrer is sustained, the plaintiff may be forced to restate and add allegations that may make the amended complaint easier to answer or suggest additional affirmative defenses to the defendant.

Even when a complaint is technically demurrable, however, there are reasons to refrain from demurring. The plaintiff will usually be given an opportunity to amend a defective complaint. See §23.53. The effort and expense of preparing the moving papers and attending the hearing may thus outweigh the benefits gained even if the demurrer is sustained. Often, defense counsel can state objections to the complaint and challenge the validity of the action more expeditiously by an answer or another procedure. See §23.8.

Finally, filing a demurrer may compel the plaintiff's attorney, perhaps for the first time, to research and thoroughly analyze the bases of the action, permitting the plaintiff to cure defects early and focus attention and energy on the tenable aspects of the action.

§23.7 E. Alternative Procedures

There are several procedures that will achieve the same objectives as demurrers. See §§23.8-23.14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.8 1. Answer

An answer, in addition to denials and affirmative defenses, can state grounds for objections to the complaint and can state them whether or not they appear on the face of the complaint, although filing an answer does not itself obtain a ruling on the objections. See chap 25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.9 2 Motion to Strike

A motion to strike (CCP §436), whether or not filed with a demurrer, addresses defects not reachable by demurrer. This motion, made within the time to answer, can (1) eliminate sham, irrelevant, or redundant matters from a pleading; (2) raise objections that do not appear on the face of the pleading if the motion attacks matters not filed in conformity with law, rule, or court order; and (3) attack parts of a cause of action, count, or defense. See chap 24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.10 3. Motion for Judgment on Pleadings

The grounds for a motion for judgment on the pleadings are the same as for a general demurrer. Unlike a demurrer, this motion can be made at any time on the ground that all or part of the pleading fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or defense. Because there is no time requirement, the motion is often made after an answer has been filed. On motions for judgment on the pleadings, see chap 27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.11 4. Motion Under CCP §437c for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication

A summary judgment can terminate a lawsuit, and a summary adjudication can eliminate causes of action or claims. Affidavits and declarations are filed in support of a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication; thus, the motions test evidentiary defects in the plaintiff's case that do not appear on the face of the pleadings and cannot be raised by demurrer. A motion under CCP §437c may not be made until 60 days after the general appearance in the action of the party against whom the motion is directed. CCP §437c(a). These motions are usually not made until after some discovery has been completed. See chap 36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.12 5. Motion to Dismiss

Although no statutory authority exists for a motion to dismiss in state courts, defendants have sometimes been permitted to use a paper called a "motion to dismiss" after the time has passed to demur and to state the objection that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. See Timberlake v Schwank (1967) 248 CA2d 708, 56 CR 799. In these instances, the "motion to dismiss" operates as a motion for judgment on the pleadings or as a motion for summary judgment. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§1004-1006 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.13 6. Discovery

Uncertainty about the factual bases of a party's claims or defenses should be dispelled by interrogatories, depositions, and other discovery methods. See Dahlquist v State (1966) 243 CA2d 208, 212, 52 CR 324. See generally California Civil Discovery Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.14 7. Objection to Evidence

At trial, a party can object to evidence offered by the opponent on the ground that the evidence is irrelevant because the facts stated in the pleadings are not sufficient to constitute a cause of action or defense, and thus there is no issue on which to receive the evidence. The objection to evidence may then be treated as a general demurrer or as a motion for judgment on the pleadings. Trial judges faced with an objection that could have been raised by demurrer or motion for judgment on the pleadings at an early stage of the litigation, however, are liberal in permitting the parties to amend the pleadings to permit the proof. See 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1002 (5th ed 2008).

III. DEMURRER TO COMPLAINT

A. Preparing Demurrer; Examples

§23.15 1. Multiple Party Variations

A joint demurrer filed by two or more defendants may be overruled if the complaint is good as to any one defendant. Myers v County of Orange (1970) 6 CA3d 626, 630, 86 CR 198. But see Majestic Realty Co. v Pacific Lighting Corp. (1974) 37 CA3d 641, 112 CR 423 (rule limited to special demurrers). See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §961 (5th ed 2008).

A demurrer filed on behalf of fewer than all defendants, even if some of them were sued by fictitious names, should clearly indicate the names of the demurring defendant or defendants. The caption of the demurrer must state immediately below the case number the name of the demurring party and the name of the party whose pleading is the subject of the demurrer. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(e).

Counsel who represents more than one defendant should consider whether all should join in a single demurrer or to file a separate demurrer for each. Even counsel who believes that the grounds for demurring are equally valid for all defendants may wish to use an introductory line indicating that the grounds are asserted separately for each. For example:

Defendants _ _[name]_ _, _ _[name]_ _, and _ _[name]_ _ each demur individually, and not jointly with any other party, to each cause of action on the following grounds: _ _[State each ground in separate, numbered paragraphs]_ _.

Alternatively, the effect of separate demurrers can also be achieved by dividing a single paper into parts, using a separate introductory line to introduce the grounds stated for each demurring defendant.

Care should be used when demurring to a complaint filed by two or more plaintiffs, particularly if a ground for demurring may be good against only one plaintiff. Separate introductory lines may be used to distinguish grounds asserted against one plaintiff from grounds asserted against another. For example:

Defendant, _ _[name]_ _, demurs to each cause of action alleged by _ _[name]_ _ in the complaint on the following grounds: _ _[State each ground in separate, numbered paragraphs]_ _.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.16 2. Stating Grounds Separately

Each ground for objecting to a complaint that is to be raised by a demurrer must be specified distinctly; otherwise, the demurrer may be disregarded. CCP §430.60. Each ground must be in a separate paragraph and state whether it applies to the entire complaint, cross-complaint, or answer, or only to specified causes of action or defenses. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320.

If two or more grounds for an objection are stated conjunctively in a demurrer, the demurrer may be overruled unless all the grounds exist. Kraner v Halsey (1889) 82 C 209, 212, 22 P 1137; Butler v Wyman (1933) 128 CA 736, 740, 18 P2d 354. Thus, using the introductory line, "Defendant demurs on each of the following grounds," is preferable to "Defendant demurs on all the following grounds" or "Defendant demurs on the grounds of X and Y."

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.17 3. Demurring to All or Part of Complaint

A demurrer may be taken to the whole complaint or to any of its causes of action. CCP §430.50. However, it is risky to assert a ground for demurrer against the whole complaint if the complaint contains several causes of action because a demurrer that attacks an entire pleading may be overruled if one of the causes of action is not vulnerable to the objection. Lord v Garland (1946) 27 C2d 840, 850, 168 P2d 5; Skipper v Gilbert J. Martin Constr. Co. (1957) 156 CA2d 82, 86, 318 P2d 732. See Warren v Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. (1971) 19 CA3d 24, 29, 96 CR 317.

If the plaintiff has stated each cause of action separately in the complaint, the defendant may use headings in the demurrer to show which objections apply to each cause of action. For example:

OBJECTIONS TO FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION: _ _[State each objection in separate, numbered paragraphs]_ _.

OBJECTIONS TO SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION: _ _[State each objection in separate, numbered paragraphs]_ _.

Alternatively, the form of demurrer may be as follows:

1. The First Cause of Action does not state facts sufficient to state a cause of action. CCP §430.10(e).

2. The First Cause of Action is uncertain in that in Paragraph 1 plaintiff is identified as a corporation and in Paragraph 2 as a partnership. CCP §430.10(f).

3. The Second Cause of Action does not state facts sufficient to state a cause of action. CCP §430.10(e).

For sample form of demurrer to complaint, see §23.72.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.18 4. Invoking Judicial Notice

If any ground of objection stated in the demurrer is based on a matter of which the court may take judicial notice under Evid C §§452-453, counsel should identify the matter in the demurrer or in the accompanying memorandum, request judicial notice, and provide the court and each party with a copy of the material. If the material to be judicially noticed is part of a file in the court in which the action is being heard, the party must specify in writing the part of the file to be judicially noticed and arrange with the court clerk to have the file in the courtroom at the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(c).

A request for judicial notice must be made in a separate document listing the specific items the party wishes to have judicially noticed and must comply with Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(c). Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(l). For further discussion and form, see §§12.59, 12.143. Local rules should be consulted for special requirements for requesting judicial notice.

NOTE: Although a court may take judicial notice of documents pertinent to issues raised by a demurrer, whether, on demurrer, the court accepts the accuracy of the contents of the judicially noticed documents depends on the circumstances. C.R. v Tenet Healthcare Corp. (2009) 169 CA4th 1094, 1103, 87 CR3d 424. There are basically three approaches: (1) the court will not consider the truth of a document's contents unless it is a judgment, statement of decision, or order; (2) the court may accept the truth of statements made by a party, but not by third parties or an opponent; and (3) the court will accept the contents of the document only when there is not and cannot be a factual dispute about that which is sought to be judicially noticed, and, as a general rule, the truthfulness and interpretation of a document's contents are disputable. C.R. v Tenet Healthcare Corp., supra. See also William v Southern Cal. Gas Co. (2009) 176 CA4th 591, 98 CR3d 258 (although on demurrer court could take judicial notice of discovery responses, it erred in concluding from responses that complaint allegations were false).

B. Timing

§23.19 1. When to File

A demurrer to a complaint must be filed within 30 days after service of the complaint. CCP §430.40(a). It may be possible to obtain an extension of time either by stipulation or by means of an ex parte application to a judge of the court in which the action is pending. CCP §1054; Cal Rules of Ct 2.20.

WARNING: Counsel's ability to stipulate with other counsel to an extension of time to demur or answer may be significantly curtailed by local rules implementing the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620). See chap 40.

See §22.96 for discussion of the time to respond after remand from federal court.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.20 2. Avoiding Default

Filing a timely demurrer (i.e., within the time specified in a summons or such further time as allowed) prevents the plaintiff from taking judgment by default. CCP §585. The court can grant a plaintiff's motion to strike a late-filed demurrer (see chap 24) and, if no answer is then on file, grant plaintiff judgment by default. Buck v Morrossis (1952) 114 CA2d 461, 250 P2d 270.

Filing a demurrer may not be sufficient to avoid entry of default if the demurrer is not eventually calendared for hearing. In Barragan v Banco BCH (1986) 188 CA3d 283, 232 CR 758, the defendant demurred on the ground of a pending action involving substantially the same causes of action and issues. Before the court ruled on the demurrer, the parties removed it from the calendar, and the plaintiff agreed to forgo the second lawsuit until completion of the first. More than a year after entry of judgment in the first action, plaintiffs repeatedly requested the defendant to recalendar its demurrer; the defendant refused to do so, and plaintiffs obtained an entry of default. The court of appeal found that the trial court had properly refused to set aside the default, that the defendant had abandoned its demurrer by not recalendaring it, and that the demurrer was moot because there was no longer another action pending.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.21 3. Consider Filing Answer Simultaneously

A demurrer is usually filed and ruled on before the answer is filed. Then, if the demurrer is sustained and the complaint amended, the answer need respond only to the allegations in the amended complaint. A demurrer to a cause of action may be filed without answering other causes of action. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(b).

If the demurrer is overruled, the defendant has 10 days after service of notice of the decision in which to file an answer, unless the judge specifies more or less time or the parties waive notice (CCP §§472a-472b; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g)). Defendants may ask for, and sometimes are granted, additional time to file an amended pleading.

Alternatively, a defendant can file a demurrer and an answer at the same time. CCP §§430.30(c), 472a. Thus, a defendant can demur to one or more causes of action and simultaneously answer others. See 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §949 (5th ed 2008).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/23 Demurrers/§23.22 C. Grounds

§23.22 C. Grounds

Under CCP §430.10, the grounds for demurrer to a complaint or cross-complaint are:

- The court has no jurisdiction of the subject matter of the cause of action alleged in the pleading.
- The pleading does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.
- The person who filed the pleading has no legal capacity to sue.
- Another action is pending between the same parties on the same cause of action.
- There is a defect or misjoinder of parties.
- The pleading is uncertain ("uncertain" includes ambiguous and unintelligible).
- In an action arising from a contract, it cannot be ascertained from the pleading whether the contract is written, oral, or implied by conduct.
- No certificate of merit was filed as required by CCP §411.35 (actions for damages arising from professional negligence of an architect, a professional engineer, or a land surveyor) (see §23.36).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.23 1. Matters on Which Grounds Based

A demurrer searches for defects in the allegations of the pleading. The prayer for relief is not subject to demurrer. Ramsden v Western Union (1977) 71 CA3d 873, 138 CR 426. Generally, facts and evidentiary matters extrinsic to the pleading may not be considered by the court. In rare situations, however, the demurring party has been permitted to allege facts in a demurrer or introduce evidence to support the demurrer in order to show that grounds for a demurrer exist. See, e.g., Middlebrook-Anderson Co. v Southwest Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 18 CA3d 1023, 1038, 96 CR 338. For further discussion, see 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §948 (5th ed 2008).

The face of the defective pleading may be read as if it included matters of which the court may take judicial notice. Bohrer v County of San Diego (1980) 104 CA3d 155, 163 CR 419. Thus, whether or not a party formally requests a matter to be judicially noticed, recitals in exhibits and admissions in previous pleadings in the same case can be examined by the court in ruling on a demurrer. See also Able v Van Der Zee (1967) 256 CA2d 728, 734, 64 CR 481 (court properly considered requests for admissions in sustaining demurrer).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.24 2. Grounds That Are Not Waived

Each ground for objection to a complaint listed in CCP §430.10, except "no jurisdiction" (CCP §430.10(a)), and the ground in CCP §430.10(e) ("pleading does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action"), is waived unless raised by a timely demurrer or answer. CCP §430.80; Collins v Rocha (1972) 7 C3d 232, 239, 102 CR 1. These two grounds may be raised at any time during litigation, even when the time to demur or answer has expired.

Similarly, a failure to demur to an answer constitutes a waiver of the grounds for objection in CCP §§430.20(b) ("answer is uncertain") and 430.20(c) ("whether the contract is written or oral") but not the ground in CCP §430.20(a) ("answer does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense"). (CCP §430.80(b)). On demurrers to answers, see §§23.42-23.47.

PRACTICE TIP: If the time to demur has passed, counsel should consider moving for judgment on the pleadings. See discussion of alternative procedures in §§23.7-23.14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.25 D. Stating Specific Grounds; Examples

If each ground for an objection to a complaint that is to be raised by a demurrer is not specified distinctly, the demurrer may be disregarded. CCP §430.60. See §23.16. The grounds should be stated in the demurrer with argument in support of each ground set out in the supporting memorandum. See Gardner v Samuels (1897) 116 C 84, 88, 47 P 935.

The following sections, each beginning with an example, discuss the permissible grounds for demurring to a complaint. Grounds applicable to a particular complaint may be inserted as numbered paragraphs in the demurrer. See form of demurrer in §23.72.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.26 1. Failure to State Facts Sufficient to Constitute Cause of Action

The _ _[e.g., complaint/first cause of action]_ _ does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against _ _[name of demurring defendant]_ _.

A general demurrer may be stated in the words of CCP §430.10(e): "The pleading does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." See Burke v Maguire (1908) 154 C 456, 462, 98 P 21. This ground can be effective when:

- The plaintiff has attempted to state a novel cause of action;
- The defendant knows that the plaintiff cannot truthfully allege an essential missing fact or defense; or
- The missing fact, if alleged, would itself provide a basis for objecting to the complaint or cause of action.

An additional clause should be added if the demurrer is made on the basis of a statute of limitations (see §23.27) or on some other specific basis (see §23.25). Otherwise, additional statements of the defects of the complaint should be reserved for the supporting memorandum.

The objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is not waived by failure to demur. See §23.24. If it later develops (e.g., during discovery) that essential elements are missing from the plaintiff's case, that objection can be raised at any time during the proceeding by other procedural means or on appeal. See Whelan v Wolford (1958) 164 CA2d 689, 693, 331 P2d 86.

However, the danger in failing to raise the objection by demurrer is that, at later stages of the litigation, a judge may be more liberal in finding that the complaint was adequate or in permitting an amendment to conform to proof. Note that an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff must be based on failure to prove an essential fact and not on failure to plead it. See Ades v Brush (1944) 66 CA2d 436, 444, 152 P2d 519.

PRACTICE TIP: Although a general demurrer can be taken to a complaint that states conclusions of law or evidentiary facts (rather than ultimate facts as required), a defendant who believes that the plaintiff will be able to recast allegations properly may decide not to demur. A general demurrer is rarely granted without leave to amend, and a demurrer to defects that the plaintiff can cure may only alert the plaintiff to those defects early in the case.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.27 a. Barred by Statute of Limitations

The _ _[e.g., complaint/first cause of action]_ _ does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against _ _[name of demurring defendant]_ _ in that the action is barred by _ _[e.g., Code of Civil Procedure §335.1]_ _.

Although any indication in the demurrer that a statute of limitations is being invoked raises the issue, it is the better practice to cite the code section that bars the action. See Williams v ILWU (1959) 172 CA2d 84, 87, 341 P2d 729. The parts of the complaint that show the action to be barred can be specified in the supporting memorandum.

On California's doctrine of equitable tolling doctrine, which may be applied to extend the statutory period, see Elkins v Derby (1974) 12 C3d 410, 115 CR3d 410; Aguilera v Heiman (2009) 174 CA4th 590, 95 CR3d 18; Tarkington v California Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (2009) 172 CA4th 1494, 1503, 92 CR3d 131.

Occasionally, facts will be alleged in the complaint that create a defense to one or more of its causes of action. If the establishment of a defense does not require factual allegations by the defendant (which would have to be made in an answer), the defendant can obtain an early hearing on the validity of the defenses by a general demurrer. Halvorsen v Aramark Unif. Servs. (1998) 65 CA4th 1383, 77 CR2d 383. Defenses that have been raised by a general demurrer include:

- Statute of frauds (Harper v Goldschmidt (1909) 156 C 245, 252, 104 P 451);
- Laches (Neet v Holmes (1944) 25 C2d 447, 460, 154 P2d 854);
- Plaintiff not real party in interest (Klopstock v Superior Court (1941) 17 C2d 13, 18, 108 P2d 906; see McKinny v Board of Trustees (1982) 31 C3d 79, 181 CR 549); and
- Res judicata (Legg v United Benefit Life Ins. Co. (1960) 182 CA2d 573, 580, 6 CR 73; Kronkright v Gardner (1973) 31 CA3d 214, 107 CR 270).

§23.29 2. No Jurisdiction of Subject Matter

The Court has no jurisdiction of the subject of _ _[the/any]_ _ cause of action alleged in the _ _[complaint/first cause of action]_ _.

This objection is not waived by failure to raise it in a demurrer or answer (CCP §430.80), and it may be made at any time during the litigation, or by collateral attack. Raising the objection by demurrer is a way to test jurisdiction at the outset, possibly saving the defendant further effort and expense.

Because the superior court is a court of general jurisdiction, a demurrer on the ground of "no jurisdiction" in that court cannot be based on the plaintiff's failure to allege facts that show jurisdiction; it must be based on allegations in the complaint showing that jurisdiction lies in a different court or in no court. See Cheney v Trauzettel (1937) 9 C2d 158, 69 P2d 832. Thus, a demurrer based on the court's lack of jurisdiction is proper if allegations of the complaint show that jurisdiction lies, e.g., in a federal court (see Olcovich v Grand Trunk Ry. (1912) 20 CA 349, 129 P 290), the court of another state (see Getty v Getty (1933) 130 CA 519, 20 P2d 82), or the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board (see Buttner v American Bell Tel. Co. (1940) 41 CA2d 581, 107 P2d 439).

A demurrer for lack of jurisdiction may be used to gain a hearing on questions such as:

- The constitutionality of the statute or ordinance under which the plaintiff proceeds (see Harden v Superior Court (1955) 44 C2d 630, 634, 284 P2d 9);
- The propriety of a cross-complaint (see Tide Water Assoc. Oil Co. v Superior Court (1955) 43 C2d 815, 820, 279 P2d 35);
- The statutory immunity of a public entity to the plaintiff's alleged cause of action (see County of Santa Barbara v Superior Court (1971) 15 CA3d 751, 754, 93 CR 406); or
- The validity of causes of action when plaintiff has not pled compliance with required administrative procedures prior to filing suit (see Caliber Bodyworks, Inc. v Superior Court (2005) 134 CA4th 365, 36 CR3d 31).

If a demurrer for lack of subject matter jurisdiction is sustained, and if there is another California court that has jurisdiction, the plaintiff or the defendant may move to transfer the action to the proper court. See CCP §§396-399. It is unclear whether the sustaining of the demurrer or the motion to transfer extends the time to answer the complaint as to parties who have appeared in the action by way of the demurrer or otherwise. A defendant in this situation may wish to file an answer with the demurrer or obtain an extension of time to respond to the complaint.

NOTE: The objection that the court does not have jurisdiction of the person of the defendant is raised by a motion to quash service of summons (see chap 19), not by demurrer.

§23.30 3. Lack of Legal Capacity to Sue

Plaintiff, _ _[name]_ _, does not have the legal capacity to sue in that _ _[e.g., he is a minor and no guardian has been appointed to represent him]_ _.

This objection may be used when the plaintiff brings the action in some representative capacity, but the complaint fails to show that the plaintiff actually possesses that capacity to sue. See Klopstock v Superior Court (1941) 17 C2d 13, 17, 108 P2d 906; Kreling v Kreling (1897) 118 C 413, 50 P 546.

Demurring on this ground is also proper against a complaint that shows on its face that the plaintiff is a nonentity such as an estate. See chap 9. Although a partnership or unincorporated association has the capacity to sue by the name it has assumed (CCP §369.5(a)), failure in the complaint to allege compliance with the filing requirement of Bus & P C §17918 can be raised by demurrer on this ground.

NOTE: Lack of capacity to sue should not be confused with lack of standing to sue. See Center for Self-Improvement & Community Dev. v Lennar Corp. (2009) 173 CA4th 1543, 1552, 94 CR3d 74 (corporate incapacity for failure to comply with Rev & Tax C §23305 is a legal disability, not a jurisdictional defect). Lack of capacity to sue is a ground for a special demurrer. Lack of standing to sue, which occurs if plaintiff is not the real party in interest or is not the person in whom the alleged cause of action lies, should be raised by a "general" demurrer for failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. See Parker v Bowron (1953) 40 C2d 344, 351, 254 P2d 6; Friendly Village Community Ass'n v Silva & Hill Constr. Co. (1973) 31 CA3d 220, 224, 107 CR 123.

On the effect on the litigation of the revival of corporate capacity to sue, see Center for Self-Improvement & Community Dev. v Lennar Corp (2009) 173 CA4th 1543, 1554, 94 CR3d 74 (procedural steps taken on corporation's behalf during incapacity for failure to comply with Rev & Tax C §23305 were revived when defect cured).

§23.31 4. Another Action Pending

There is another action pending between the parties to this action on the same cause of action as alleged in the _ _[complaint/first cause of action]_ _. That action is No. _ _ _ _ in the _ _ _ _ _ _ Court of _ _ _ _ _ _ County, and defendant asks that the Court take judicial notice of that action under Evidence Code §452(d). A certified copy of the complaint and answer in that action is attached to this demurrer and marked as Exhibit A.

Demurrers on this ground are not favored, but they may be sustained when the parties in the two cases are identical and the causes of action and issues in the two actions are substantially the same. The parties in both actions must also stand in the same relative position as plaintiff and defendant. Lord v Garland (1946) 27 C2d 840, 848, 168 P2d 5; Childs v Eltinge (1973) 29 CA3d 843, 848, 105 CR 864. The test for sustaining a demurrer on the ground that another action is pending is whether the cases are sufficiently similar that a final judgment in the first action could be pleaded as a bar to the second. Colvig v RKO Gen., Inc. (1965) 232 CA2d 56, 73, 42 CR 473.

EXAMPLE: A pending dissolution action did not preclude a wife from bringing a second, separate action against her husband and his business partners in Beehler v Beehler (1979) 100 CA3d 376, 161 CR 30. The wife claimed that her interest in certain real property had not been declared, that she had been deprived of funds lawfully due her, and that gifts had been made of community property without her consent. Her husband and his partners as defendants successfully demurred, and a judgment of dismissal was entered. The appellate court reversed the judgment on the ground that the parties and issues in the civil suit were not the same as those in the dissolution. Although the wife could have joined the business associates in the dissolution, she was not required to do so.

A demurrer on the ground that another action is pending is appropriate only if the other action is pending in California; if the action is pending in another state, a stay should be sought by a motion under CCP §430.10 (for inconvenient forum; see chap 21) so that factual matter outside the pleadings can be submitted. Lord v Garland, supra; Leadford v Leadford (1992) 6 CA4th 571, 8 CR2d 9.

A defendant may bring the existence of the pending action and the names of the parties and issues in that action to the attention of the court by requesting that judicial notice be taken of the records of that court. See §23.18.

The proper order for the judge to make on sustaining a demurrer on the ground of another action pending is not dismissal, but an order abating further proceedings in the present action until termination of the prior action. Beehler v Beehler, supra; Franchise Tax Bd. v Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1978) 87 CA3d 878, 151 CR 460. See also Childs v Eltinge, supra.

If the parties in the first action remain the same and if a judgment on the merits is rendered in that action, the demurring party should be granted leave to amend to plead the res judicata effect of that judgment as a bar to the present action. Lord v Garland (1946) 27 C2d 840, 851, 168 P2d 5. If the demurring defendant is dismissed from the prior action or if the prior action is not determined on the merits, "the trial court should hear and decide the rights of the parties in accordance with the issues presented by the pleadings in the second action." 27 C2d at 851. See Karp v Dunn (1964) 229 CA2d 192, 195, 40 CR 96.

NOTE: Counsel should check local rules for requirements to report related cases to the court and other parties.

5. Defect or Misjoinder of Parties

§23.32 a. Defect

There is a defect of parties in that _ _[name]_ _ is a necessary party _ _[plaintiff/defendant]_ _ under Code of Civil Procedure §389.

The objection that there is a defect of parties (CCP §430.10(d)) focuses on nonjoinder, and the demurrer must specify who else should have been joined or of what the nonjoinder consists. Kreling v Kreling (1897) 118 C 413, 420, 50 P 546. See Union Carbide Corp. v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 15, 201 CR 580 (demurrer raising nonjoinder of allegedly indispensable parties held properly overruled).

Code of Civil Procedure §389 specifies persons who must be joined in an action (see chap 14), and it appears that under that section a defendant, as an alternative to a demurrer, may move the court for an order that the missing person be made a party. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §972 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.33 b. Misjoinder

There is a misjoinder of parties in that _ _[name]_ _ is not a proper party _ _[plaintiff/defendant]_ _ because _ _[specify]_ _.

A demurrer on this ground must specify the particulars in which a misjoinder is claimed. Adams v National Auto. Ins. Co. (1943) 56 CA2d 905, 909, 133 P2d 657 (general language that there was misjoinder of causes of action, and misjoinder of parties defendant not a good plea of misjoinder). However, it appears that designating the persons who are improperly joined is sufficient, and the reasons joinder was improper need not be stated in the demurrer. Gardner v Samuels (1897) 116 C 84, 47 P 935 (each defendant distinctly specified in demurrer that he was improperly joined with other defendant; this statement sufficiently called plaintiff's attention to objection to complaint). A demurrer on the ground of misjoinder lies only when the defect appears on the fact of the complaint or matters judicially noticed. Royal Surplus Lines Ins. Co. v Ranger Ins. Co. (2002) 100 CA4th 193, 198, 122 CR2d 459.

A defendant who is improperly joined with other defendants in the action can demur on this ground in order to be dismissed from the action; however, it appears that the demurring defendant cannot have other defendants dismissed on the ground that they are improperly joined unless it can be shown that their continued presence is prejudicial. Gardner v Samuels (1897) 116 C 84, 90, 47 P 935; Division of Labor Law Enforcement v Barnes (1962) 205 CA2d 337, 345, 23 CR 55, disapproved on other grounds in White Lighting Co. v Shaft (1968) 68 C2d 336, 66 CR 697. A proper defendant is seldom injured by the joinder of unnecessary or improper parties, plaintiff or defendant, and his or her demurrer ought to be overruled. Royal Surplus Lines Ins. Co. v Ranger Ins. Co., supra. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §973 (5th ed 2008).

Generally, a demurrer on this ground is not the proper procedure for testing the propriety of a class action. See Vasquez v Superior Court (1971) 4 C3d 800, 820, 94 CR 796; Tarkington v California Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (2009) 172 CA4th 1494, 1511, 92 CR3d 131 (class suitability should not be decided by demurrer); Wechsler v Laskey-Weil, Inc. (1974) 42 CA3d 728, 117 CR 237. But see Rose v Medtronics, Inc. (1980) 107 CA3d 150, 166 CR 16 (medical negligence against manufacturer of potentially defective cardiac pacemakers for injuries to plaintiff and other users). In Rose, the court, although recognizing that a demurrer is not the preferred means of testing the propriety of a class action, upheld the trial court's ruling dismissing the class action allegations when the complaint on its face did not contain sufficient facts to establish a class interest. The court found that the action was ill suited as a class action because the factual questions and legal issues raised in the pleadings on behalf of 4000 potential claimants were preponderantly diverse rather than common. On hearing procedure for challenging class action, see CC §1781(c).

§23.34 6. Uncertain, Ambiguous, or Unintelligible

The _ _[complaint/first cause of action]_ _ is uncertain in that _ _[state nature of uncertainty or ambiguity, e.g.,]_ _:

1. The date of the alleged occurrence cannot be ascertained.

2. It cannot be determined from paragraph 4 whether it is claimed that _ _[name]_ _ was the employer of _ _[name]_ _ or was _ _[his/her]_ _ agent.

3. Lines 20 through 24 on page 2 are unintelligible.

The objection that the complaint or part of it is uncertain includes the objections that it is ambiguous or unintelligible. CCP §430.10(f). If there is more than one respect in which a complaint or cause of action is uncertain, each specification of uncertainty should be raised in a separate, numbered paragraph of the demurrer. However, the demurring party should be selective; numerous specifications of uncertainty are rarely welcomed by law and motion judges.

Examples in which the uncertainty objection was used successfully include:

- The complaint fails to allege a material date such as that of an occurrence or of a contract. See Williamson v Joyce (1902) 137 C 151, 69 P 980; Corum v Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (1945) 67 CA2d 891, 894, 155 P2d 710.
- The complaint is so unintelligible that it is unclear whether particular counts are directed toward the demurring defendant or for what loss the plaintiff seeks recovery. See Greenberg v Hollywood Turf Club (1970) 7 CA3d 968, 86 CR 885; Lapique v Ruef (1916) 30 CA 391, 158 P 339.
- The pleading alleges conclusions of law without supporting facts. See Ankeny v Lockheed Missiles & Space Co. (1979) 88 CA3d 531, 151 CR 828. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§974-976 (5th ed 2008).

The special demurrer for uncertainty is not favored and will be overruled if:

- The uncertainty concerns inconsequential matters. See Baird v Disheski (1929) 102 CA 452, 283 P 321. See also Greenberg v Hollywood Turf Club, supra.
- The allegations of the complaint are sufficiently clear to apprise the defendant of the issues that must be met. Gressley v Williams (1961) 193 CA2d 636, 643, 14 CR 496.
- The facts may be presumed to be within the knowledge of the demurring party. Strozier v Williams (1960) 187 CA2d 528, 9 CR 683.

Uncertainty about the legal effect of the facts alleged in the complaint is not a ground for special demurrer. County of Santa Clara v Hayes Co. (1954) 43 C2d 615, 275 P2d 456. Nor does the inclusion of surplus allegations in the complaint render it uncertain. See Brea v McGlashan (1934) 3 CA2d 454, 39 P2d 877.

Common counts (e.g., money paid, lent, or received) are not demurrable for uncertainty. Moya v Northrup (1970) 10 CA3d 276, 279, 88 CR 783.

PRACTICE TIP: Filing a special demurrer for uncertainty can some times force the plaintiff to allege facts that show lack of jurisdiction (e.g., residence of plaintiff or defendant, place of entering into a contract or place of its performance, or location where a tortious act allegedly occurred).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.35 7. Uncertain Whether Contract Written, Oral, or Implied by Conduct

It cannot be ascertained from the complaint whether the contract _ _[e.g., on which this action is founded]_ _ is written, oral, or implied by conduct.

This ground of demurrer may be asserted only against a cause of action founded on a contract. CCP §430.10(g); Fanucchi v Coberly-West Co. (1957) 151 CA2d 72, 83, 311 P2d 33. It does not apply to an action based on recognized common counts. See Moya v Northrup (1970) 10 CA3d 276, 285, 88 CR 783.

PRACTICE TIP: If this ground for objection is sustained and if the plaintiff amends to show that the contract was oral, a general demurrer raising the statute of frauds may then be considered. See, e.g., Hills Transp. Co. v Southwest Forest Indus. (1968) 266 CA2d 702, 72 CR 441.

§23.36 8. No Certificate of Merit in Action for Malpractice of Architect, Professional Engineer, or Land Surveyor

On or before the date of service of the _ _[complaint/cross-complaint]_ _, no certificate was executed by the attorney for _ _[plaintiff/cross-complainant]_ _ and filed as required by Code of Civil Procedure §411.35 declaring that:

[Option 1]

1. The attorney has reviewed the facts of the case and consulted with and received an opinion from at least one nonparty _ _[architect/professional engineer/land surveyor]_ _ as to whether the _ _[defendant/cross-defendant]_ _ was negligent in performing the professional services and, on the basis of that review and consultation, believes there is a reasonable and meritorious cause for filing the action.

[Option 2]

1. The attorney was unable to obtain a consultation with an _ _[architect/professional engineer/land surveyor]_ _ because a statute of limitations would impair the action and the certificate could not be obtained before the impairment of the action.

[Option 3]

1. The attorney was unable to obtain the consultation because, after making three good faith attempts with three separate _ _[architects/professional engineers/land surveyors]_ _, none would agree to a consultation.

Under CCP §411.35(g), failure to file a certificate is grounds for a demurrer or a motion to strike. A violation of this section may also constitute unprofessional conduct and be grounds for discipline against the attorney. See CCP §411.35(f).

§23.37 E. Supporting Memorandum; Examples

A party who files a demurrer must file and serve a memorandum in support of each ground stated in the demurrer. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113(a). The absence of a supporting memorandum may be construed as an admission that a special demurrer is not meritorious and as a waiver of those grounds. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(a). Grounds for a general demurrer are not waived by failure to file a supporting memorandum.

In drafting a memorandum to be filed in support of a demurrer, counsel should consider numbered headings or introductory lines if there is more than one ground for objection to the complaint in order to separate the points and authorities that support each of the grounds, e.g.:

1. Supporting the objection that _ _[plaintiff's first alleged cause of action does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action]_ _:

a. _ _[State first point in support of first ground for demurrer, with its authorities and tie-in statement]_ _.

b. _ _[State next point in support of first ground for demurrer]_ _.

2. Supporting the objection that _ _[state second ground of demurrer followed by its points, listing points and authorities in above format]_ _.

On format of a supporting memorandum generally, see chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.38 F. Notice of Hearing; Service

A party who files a demurrer must also serve and file a notice of hearing in accordance with CCP §1005. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(c). The notice of hearing on a demurrer is generally a separate document. See form in §23.71. However, the hearing date can be noted in the caption to the demurrer and the notice of hearing can be combined with the demurrer itself. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a).

The same time periods required for noticed motions apply to demurrers, e.g., 9 court days' notice of hearing, extension of period if service is by mail. See chap 12. On procedures for orders shortening time, see chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

IV. DEMURRER TO CROSS-COMPLAINT

§23.39 A. Similarity to Demurrer to Complaint

The grounds for objections in a demurrer to a cross-complaint are the same as for a demurrer to a complaint and may be raised only if they appear on the face of the cross-complaint or from a matter of which the court may take judicial notice. CCP §§430.10, 430.30, 432.10. See §§23.22-23.36.

Because the court can take judicial notice of allegations in the complaint in the action, a demurrer to a cross-complaint may be used to challenge whether the cross-complaint is permissible under CCP §428.10. See White Lighting Co. v Wolfson (1968) 68 C2d 336, 353, 66 CR 697; 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1156 (5th ed 2008). See also Babb v Superior Court (1971) 3 C3d 841, 92 CR 179 (mandate to require trial court to sustain demurrer to improper cross-complaint).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.40 B. Timing

The time to file a demurrer to a cross-complaint or an amended cross-complaint is the same as for a demurrer to a complaint, normally within 30 days after service of the cross-complaint. CCP §§430.40, 432.10. See §23.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.41 C. Tactical Considerations

Unless the cross-defendant is also the original plaintiff in the action, the reasons to demur to a cross-complaint or to refrain from demurring are generally the same as for demurrers to complaints. See §23.6.

A plaintiff/cross-defendant may have more reason than most defendants to avoid the delay in the progress of the lawsuit caused by the demurrer procedure. It may be wiser to state objections in an answer filed in response to the cross-complaint or to raise legal issues by other procedures. See §23.8. Although sustaining a demurrer to a cross-complaint may eliminate it or some of its causes of action, the demurrer will not spare a plaintiff/cross-defendant from proceeding with the action on issues framed by the original complaint and answer.

V. DEMURRER TO ANSWER

§23.42 A. Grounds; Waiver; Examples

The grounds for demurrer to an answer, listed in CCP §430.20, are:

- The answer does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense;
- The answer is uncertain ("uncertain" includes ambiguous and unintelligible); and
- When the answer pleads a contract, it cannot be ascertained whether the alleged contract is written or oral.

Unless each ground for an objection to an answer raised by demurrer is distinctly specified, the demurrer may be disregarded. CCP §430.60. Each ground must be in a separate paragraph and state whether it is directed to the entire answer or to specified defenses. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(a). The clauses shown in §§23.26-23.36 can be inserted as numbered paragraphs in the demurrer. See form in §23.74.

Failing to demur to an answer waives all grounds for objecting to the answer except the objection that the answer does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense. CCP §430.80(b). See discussion in §23.24.

Like a demurrer to a complaint or cross-complaint, a demurrer to an answer (1) searches only for defects in the allegations on the face of the answer or (2) raises matters of which the court must or may take judicial notice. A demurrer may be taken to the whole answer or to one or more defenses raised in it. CCP §430.50(b). However, a ground of demurrer stated against the whole answer may be overruled if the answer contains several defenses, one of which is not demurrable. Eich v Greeley (1896) 112 C 171, 173, 44 P 483; South Shore Land Co. v Petersen (1964) 226 CA2d 725, 734, 38 CR 392.

PRACTICE TIP: If the answer contains more than one defense, counsel must specifically indicate the defense to which the ground for demurrer applies, e.g., "the first defense is uncertain." Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.43 1. Failure to State Facts Sufficient to Constitute Defense

The _ _[answer/first defense]_ _ does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense.

This ground for objection to an answer under CCP §430.20(a) is sometimes called a general demurrer and shares many characteristics with a general demurrer to a complaint, i.e., the objection is not waived by failure to raise it by demurrer. A general demurrer may be sustained to a defense that the law does not recognize, that lacks essential allegations of fact, or that is stated in the form of conclusions. See Universal Land Co. v All Persons (1959) 172 CA2d 739, 741, 342 P2d 958; Youdall v Kaufman (1921) 55 CA 363, 368, 203 P 448.

A defense that is barred by a statute of limitations is also demurrable on these grounds. Bradbury v Higginson (1914) 167 C 553, 140 P 254; Universal Land Co. v All Persons (1959) 172 CA2d 739, 742, 342 P2d 958. If a statute of limitations is the basis of the demurrer, the following language may be used to state this ground for objection:

The _ _[answer/first defense]_ _ does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense in that the defense is barred by _ _[e.g., Code of Civil Procedure section 319]_ _.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.44 2. Uncertainty

The _ _[answer/first defense]_ _ is uncertain in that _ _[specify nature of uncertainty, e.g.]_ _:

1. It cannot be ascertained when the alleged release was given or by whom.

2. Allegations that appear to relate to other possible defenses are mingled with allegations relating to a claimed release.

3. Lines 10 through 20 are unintelligible.

A demurrer on this ground must specify in what way the answer is uncertain. See, e.g., Coons v Thompson (1946) 75 CA2d 687, 171 P2d 443.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.45 3. Uncertain Whether Contract Written or Oral

It cannot be ascertained from the answer whether the contract pleaded in the _ _[answer/first defense]_ _ is written or oral.

See CCP §430.20(c). For discussion of demurring to complaint on this ground, see §23.35.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.46 B. Timing

If counsel decides to demur to an answer (or amended answer), the demurrer should be filed within 10 days after service of the answer. CCP §§430.40(b), 471.5(b). On the defendant's motion, the court can strike a late-filed demurrer.

Additional time to file may be obtained by stipulation from defense counsel, or by ex parte application to the court. CCP §§473, 1054; Cal Rules of Ct 2.20. However, counsel should check local rules for any limitations on the ability to stipulate to extension.

A demurrer to an answer is filed and served in the same manner as a demurrer to a complaint, and the time for hearing a demurrer to an answer is set in the same way as for hearing a demurrer to a complaint. See §23.38.

§23.47 C. Tactical Considerations

A plaintiff or cross-complainant may decide to demur in order to eliminate untenable defenses or to obtain a clarifying amendment of the answer so that the nature of one or more of the stated affirmative defenses can be understood. If the goal is to eliminate matters not amounting to a statement of a defense, a motion to strike is the appropriate procedure. CCP §436. See chap 24. When a demurrer is filed, a motion to strike must be made at the same time. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1322.

If there is more than one defendant or one plaintiff, counsel should be careful to specify on whose behalf and against whom the demurrer is filed. A demurrer filed jointly by two plaintiffs must be overruled if the answer states a defense against either. Neumann v Moretti (1905) 146 C 25, 79 P 512.

Reasons not to demur to an answer include the delay involved in the demurrer's being heard and ruled on. It is rare for a court to sustain a demurrer without giving the losing party time to amend the pleading. See §23.53. The gain achieved by demurrer to an answer rarely outweighs the trouble and expense to the demurring plaintiff or cross-complainant, particularly when clarification of the stated defenses can be accomplished more easily through discovery. However, elimination of a defense at the demurrer stage can limit the scope of discovery to be pursued by defendant, which may often be beneficial to a plaintiff or cross-complainant.

Counsel considering a demurrer to an answer should evaluate whether a defense's validity can be appropriately tested at a later stage, e.g., by motion for summary judgment, at a pretrial hearing, or at trial by a motion to exclude evidence. Note that even the striking of all affirmative defenses does not result in termination of the action without trial if the answer also contains denials of material facts. See South Shore Land Co. v Petersen (1964) 226 CA2d 725, 733, 38 CR 392.

VI. RESPONSIVE PROCEDURES

§23.48 A. Amending Pleading Before Hearing

Counsel for the party against whom the demurrer was filed should consider amending the pleading prior to the hearing. Under CCP §472, after the demurrer is filed but before the issue of law is heard, a party may amend the pleading to eliminate defects raised by the demurrer.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.49 B. Filing Opposition Papers

A party may respond to a demurrer by filing and serving a memorandum in opposition to the demurrer at least 9 court days before the hearing. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). Opposition and reply papers must be served by personal delivery, fax, express mail, or other method reasonably calculated to ensure delivery by the close of the next business day after the papers are filed. CCP §1005(c). On opposition papers generally, see chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.50 VII. DEMURRING PARTY'S REPLY PAPERS

Counsel for the demurring party may file a reply to the party opposing the demurrer if a point of law has been raised in the opposition papers that requires legal research and written argument to rebut effectively. A written reply to the opposition may also assist the court in ruling in the demurring party's favor.

NOTE: Reply papers must be served and filed at least 5 court days before the time set for the hearing. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a).

VIII. HEARING AND COURT RULING

§23.51 A. Hearing

A law and motion judge usually reviews the file before the hearing, often after a workup by a law clerk, and, in some courts, prepares a tentative ruling available to counsel before the calendar is called. Counsel may use the tentative ruling to narrow and focus argument. For discussion of court hearing procedures generally, see chap 12.

At the hearing, counsel against whom the demurrer was filed may learn the judge's position on specific claimed defects and, if the demurrer is sustained, how the complaint can be cured. If one party fails to appear at the hearing on a demurrer, the party who appears may request a decision on the merits. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(f). The court has the discretion to continue the hearing for good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(f). Failure to appear in support of a special demurrer, however, may be construed by the court as an admission that the demurrer is not meritorious and as a waiver of all grounds in the demurrer. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(f). See also CCP §591 (failure of moving party to prosecute demurrer may be construed as waiver of demurrer). If neither party appears, the demurrer may be disposed of on its merits, dropped from the calendar, or restored on notice or on terms the court deems proper, or the hearing may be continued. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(f).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel who does not choose to attend the hearing should give the court notice of nonappearance and submit the matter without an appearance, requesting that the judge rule on the demurrer on the basis of the moving and opposing papers on file. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1304(c).

If a genuine dispute exists on whether the complaint alleges facts sufficient to establish the elements necessary to maintain a class action, the parties are entitled to an oral hearing before the court rules on the demurrer. TJX Cos. v Superior Court (2001) 87 CA4th 747, 749, 104 CR2d 810.

A trial court erred in overruling plaintiffs' demurrer by delivering an order to them very cryptically on the Internet the day before they expected to appear in court. The court of appeal ruled that the trial court erred in denying the parties the opportunity to argue the matter in open court. The Internet is a useful tool and serves many purposes, but is no substitute for a judge and lawyer being able to interact in person. Medix Ambulance Serv. v Superior Court (2002) 97 CA4th 109, 113, 118 CR2d 249.

A judge deciding whether to sustain or overrule a demurrer is guided by a number of general principles. Material facts alleged in a pleading are treated as true for the purpose of ruling on the demurrer. Gruenberg v Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 C3d 566, 572, 108 CR 480. The judge also takes as true facts that may be inferred from those expressly alleged. Harvey v City of Holtville (1969) 271 CA2d 816, 76 CR 795. However, allegations that are contradicted by facts that the court may take judicial notice of may be disregarded. Stoney Creek Orchards v State (1970) 12 CA3d 903, 91 CR 139.

In ruling on a demurrer, specific allegations control general pleadings. Gentry v EBay (2002) 99 CA4th 816, 827, 121 CR2d 703. A general allegation that eBay engaged in the sale or offer of sale of collectibles was irreconcilable with a more specific allegation that the individual defendants sold the items to the plaintiffs, using eBay as a venue. The more specific factual allegations control. While inconsistent theories of recovery are permitted, a pleading cannot "blow hot and cold" as to the facts positively stated. Gentry v EBay, supra.

The court will, however, presume that a party's case is stated as favorably as possible in that party's pleadings. Vanoni v Western Airlines (1967) 247 CA2d 793, 56 CR 115. Doubt about the complaint may be resolved against the plaintiff and facts not alleged are presumed not to exist. Melikian v Truck Ins. Exch. (1955) 133 CA2d 113, 283 P2d 269 (complaint failed to allege whether acceptance of settlement offer occurred before or after verdict).

Contentions, deductions, or conclusions of fact or law contained in the pleading may not be considered in judging its sufficiency. Gruenberg v Aetna Ins. Co., supra. For example, a plaintiff's statement that all administrative remedies have been exhausted cannot substitute for allegations demonstrating that these remedies have in fact been exhausted. Pan Pac. Prop. v County of Santa Cruz (1978) 81 CA3d 244, 146 CR 428.

A judge ruling on a demurrer is also required to construe the pleadings liberally with a view toward justice between the parties. CCP §452; Gentry v EBay (2002) 99 CA4th 816, 827, 121 CR2d 703; Cameron v Wernick (1967) 251 CA2d 890, 60 CR 102. Counsel should note that complaints have been upheld even though the facts were not clearly stated or were intermingled with a statement of irrelevant facts or even though the plaintiff had misconceived the remedy or relief sought. See, e.g., Gruenberg v Aetna Ins. Co., supra; Colvig v RKO Gen., Inc. (1965) 232 CA2d 56, 66, 42 CR 473. Likewise, judges have ruled on the substance of an objection even if the ground stated in the demurrer was mislabeled. See, e.g., Youngman v Nevada Irrig. Dist. (1969) 70 C2d 240, 244 n2, 74 CR 398. However, a demurrer may be overruled if the ground for objection is not one of those listed in CCP §430.10 or is not specifically or clearly stated. See CCP §430.60. In essence, the ruling on a demurrer determines a legal issue on the basis of assumed facts, i.e., those properly alleged in the complaint or answer, regardless of whether they ultimately prove true. For further discussion, see 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §950 (5th ed 2008).

When a demurrer is sustained, the court may grant leave to amend the pleading on any terms as may be just. CCP §472a(c). The court is required to fix the time within which the amendment or amended pleading must be filed. CCP §472a(c).

The court will sustain a demurrer with leave to amend if there is a reasonable possibility that a defect in the complaint can be cured by amendment. Minsky v City of Los Angeles (1974) 11 C3d 113, 118, 113 CR 102. Not to do so is an abuse of discretion. La Sala v American Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 5 C3d 864, 876, 97 CR 849 (demurrer sustained without leave to amend when reasonable possibility existed that complaint could have been cured).

Sustaining a general demurrer without leave to amend is not an abuse of discretion if it appears from the complaint that under applicable substantive law there is no reasonable possibility that the defect can be cured by amendment. Vater v County of Glenn (1958) 49 C2d 815, 821, 323 P2d 85; Hoffman v Smithwoods RV Park (2009) 179 CA4th 390, 407, 102 CR3d 72 (no abuse of discretion to deny leave to amend; plaintiff failed to carry burden of demonstrating reasonable possibility that amendments could cure defects); Sackett v Wyatt (1973) 32 CA3d 592, 603, 108 CR 219; Friendly Village Community Ass'n v Silva & Hill Constr. Co. (1973) 31 CA3d 220, 107 CR 123 (complaint showed that plaintiffs had no standing to sue); Spencer v Crocker First Nat'l Bank (1948) 86 CA2d 397, 194 P2d 775 (no subject matter jurisdiction). A demurrer is properly sustained without leave to amend when the facts are not in dispute and the nature of the plaintiff's claim is clear, but, under the substantive law, no liability exists. Traverso v Department of Transp. (2001) 87 CA4th 1142, 1144, 105 CR2d 179.

The courts usually give the plaintiff another chance to amend if a first attempt to cure a defect is unsuccessful, i.e., the amended complaint remains demurrable. After repeated unsuccessful attempts, the court may sustain the demurrer without leave to amend, concluding that it is the absence of facts rather than a lack of skill in stating them that is the cause of the defect. See Loeffler v Wright (1910) 13 CA 224, 232, 109 P 269. See also Banerian v O'Malley (1974) 42 CA3d 604, 616, 116 CR 919. For further discussion, see 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§991-993 (5th ed 2008).

NOTE: When the demurrer itself is the subject of a motion to strike (see chap 24), and the demurrer is stricken, if the demurring party has not yet filed an answer, the court must allow an answer to be filed on terms that are just. CCP §472a(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.54 2. Decision or Order

The judge who hears a demurrer may overrule it, sustain it with leave to amend, or sustain it without leave to amend. See CCP §472a.

The ruling may be made from the bench, and a minute order entered at the time of the hearing, or the judge may take the demurrer under consideration and rule at a later time. In some courts, the judge will issue a tentative ruling the day before the hearing, then modify or make it final at or after any hearing. An order sustaining or overruling a demurrer is deemed excepted to. CCP §647; Dumm v Pacific Valves (1956) 146 CA2d 792, 304 P2d 738.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.55 a. Time to Answer or Amend

A judge who overrules a demurrer to a complaint or cross-complaint when there is no answer on file must allow an answer to be filed or entered on such terms as may be just. CCP §472a(b). If no time is set by the judge, 10 days within which to answer or amend will be deemed to have been granted. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g). In forcible entry, forcible detainer, or unlawful detainer cases, the answer must be filed in five calendar days. CCP §1167.3; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g). When a demurrer is denied after remand from federal court and an answer was not filed with the demurrer, the defendant has 30 days from the date the state court receives the case on remand to answer the complaint. CCP §430.90(a)(2). See §22.96.

If the judge overrules the demurrer at the hearing, counsel for the demurring party may ask the judge to specify the period within which an answer must be filed. A party who seeks more than 10 days to answer or amend can ask the judge to specify a longer time in the decision or order.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.56 b. Statement of Grounds

A judge who sustains a demurrer must include in the decision or order a statement of the specific ground or grounds on which the decision is based. CCP §472d. The statement may be by reference to appropriate pages and paragraphs of the demurrer. CCP §472d. The party against whom the demurrer is sustained may waive these requirements. CCP §472d.

When a demurrer, interposed on both general and special grounds, is sustained in general terms and without specification of reasons, it will be presumed that the trial court ruled only on the general demurrer. E.L. White, Inc. v City of Huntington Beach (1978) 21 C3d 497, 504 n1, 146 CR 614. Counsel's failure to call the absence of specific grounds to the trial court's attention waives the irregularity. Cohen v Superior Court (1966) 244 CA2d 650, 654, 53 CR 378.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.57 3. Notice of Decision

The time within which an answer must be filed after a demurrer has been overruled, or an amended pleading must be filed after a demurrer has been sustained, begins to run when the party who must act is served with notice of the court's decision, unless notice was waived in open court and the waiver entered in the minutes or docket. CCP §472b; Taliaferro v Bekin Realty Co. (1959) 176 CA2d 240, 1 CR 385. If a notice of decision is served by mail, service is complete when deposited in the mail, in accordance with CCP §1013(a).

The court or prevailing counsel often asks the parties to waive notice, which usually is agreed to in open court. If the demurrer is taken under submission, the California Rules of Court require the clerk to notify the parties of the ruling, but this notification does not constitute service of notice of the court's decision or order described in CCP §472b. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1109(a)-(c). Although not required to do so, the prevailing party may attach a copy of the order overruling or sustaining the demurrer as an exhibit to the notice of decision. See form in §23.75.

IX. POSTHEARING PROCEDURES

A. Demurrer to Complaint or Cross-Complaint

1. If Demurrer Overruled

§23.58 a. Motion for Reconsideration

A party affected by an order in a civil action can move for reconsideration of the order within 10 days under CCP §1008. See §§12.113-12.118.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.59 b. Answer

If the demurrer has been overruled, the court must allow an answer to be filed on "such terms as may be just." CCP §472a.

Filing an answer after a demurrer has been overruled deprives the defendant of an opportunity to obtain appellate review of that decision until after judgment is entered in the action, unless the issue is one that can be raised by peremptory writ (see §23.61). Answering the complaint does not waive fundamental defects of substance in the complaint, however, and the overruling of a demurrer that raises such defects can be cited as reversible error on appeal. Page v Page (1962) 199 CA2d 527, 532, 18 CR 897.

NOTE: If the defect raised by demurrer is one of form, even though it consists of a formal failure to state a cause of action, filing an answer and going to trial on the issues waive the formal defects, and any error in overruling the demurrer is not, on appeal, deemed prejudicial and reversible. Baker v Miller (1923) 190 C 263, 267, 212 P 11; Goble v Dotson (1962) 203 CA2d 272, 282, 21 CR 769; Page v Page, supra. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §985 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.60 c. Default and Appeal

An order overruling a demurrer is not appealable and can ordinarily be reviewed only on appeal from a judgment in the action. See County of Santa Barbara v Superior Court (1971) 15 CA3d 751, 754, 93 CR 406. Thus, a defendant who wants immediate appellate review of an order overruling a demurrer must decline to answer, suffer the plaintiff's obtaining a default judgment under CCP §§585-587, and appeal from that judgment, unless the extraordinary writ procedure may be used. See §23.61.

Appeal from a default judgment may be taken on jurisdictional grounds or because of basic defects in the pleadings. Lee v Ski Run Apartments Assocs. (1967) 249 CA2d 293, 294, 57 CR 496. A default judgment admits only facts that were well pleaded. Buck v Morrossis (1952) 114 CA2d 461, 466, 250 P2d 270. Thus a defendant can object on appeal that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Rose v Lawton (1963) 215 CA2d 18, 19, 29 CR 844. But see Molen v Friedman (1998) 64 CA4th 1149, 75 CR2d 651, noting the tension between the Rose approach and supreme court opinions holding that the complaint need not state a cause of action if it apprises the defendant of the nature of the plaintiff's demand. Defects that were challenged only by special demurrer, however, cannot be raised on appeal from a default judgment. See Price v Hibbs (1964) 225 CA2d 209, 37 CR 270; Buck v Morrossis, supra. A defendant's failure to seek relief from default does not waive the right to appeal. See Bristol Convalescent Hosp. v Stone (1968) 258 CA2d 848, 859, 66 CR 404.

WARNING: For defense counsel to permit entry of a default judgment against a client is risky; the appellate court may indulge all inferences in favor of the plaintiff. It is better practice to litigate the case on its merits and raise the question of the validity of the pleading after any adverse judgment.

An order overruling a demurrer made on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject matter of the cause of action alleged in the complaint (CCP §430.10(a)) can be reviewed by prohibition. Tide Water Assoc. Oil Co. v Superior Court (1955) 43 C2d 815, 820, 279 P2d 35; County of Santa Barbara v Superior Court (1971) 15 CA3d 751, 754, 93 CR 406. See also Harden v Superior Court (1955) 44 C2d 630, 634, 284 P2d 9 (testing constitutionality of statute or ordinance); People v Superior Court (Pierpont) (1947) 29 C2d 754, 178 P2d 1.

A writ of prohibition lies under CCP §§1102-1103 to prevent a trial court from exercising jurisdiction after that court has determined that it has jurisdiction when the defendant has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. See Babb v Superior Court (1971) 3 C3d 841, 851, 92 CR 179; Harden v Superior Court, supra; Allen v Superior Court (1959) 171 CA2d 444, 340 P2d 1030. See generally California Civil Writ Practice §§4.2-4.9 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008)

2. If Demurrer Sustained With Leave to Amend

After a demurrer to a complaint or cross-complaint has been sustained with leave to amend, the plaintiff may request reconsideration by the court. The same rules apply to a defendant's request for reconsideration after a demurrer has been overruled. See §23.58.

The judge who sustains a demurrer with leave to amend fixes the time within which an amendment or amended pleading must be filed. CCP §472a. If no time is set by the judge, 10 days to amend will be deemed to have been granted. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g). Note, however, that the mandatory relief provisions of CCP §473(b) do not apply to a discretionary dismissal based on the plaintiff's failure to timely file an amended complaint, when dismissal is entered after a hearing in which the court evaluates the reasons for failure to meet the deadline. Leader v Health Indus. of Am., Inc. (2001) 89 CA4th 603, 615, 107 CR2d 489.

If an amended pleading is not filed, a motion to dismiss the entire action and for entry of judgment may be made by ex parte application. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(h); Sadler v Turner (1986) 186 CA3d 245, 230 CR 561 (ex parte motion to dismiss complaint under former CCP §581(3) granted when complaint not amended within time permitted by court). If, however, an amended pleading has been filed after the time allowed, an order striking the amended pleading must be obtained by noticed motion under CCP §1010. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(i).

Filing an amended complaint waives any error there may have been in sustaining the demurrer. Edgar Rice Burroughs, Inc. v Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Inc. (1962) 205 CA2d 441, 446, 23 CR 14.

Amendments should usually be presented in the form of an amended complaint, i.e., a new complaint complete in itself, even if the demurrer was sustained as to only one cause of action. An amended complaint must be filed if the demurrer was sustained to the entire complaint. See Cohen v Superior Court (1966) 244 CA2d 650, 655, 53 CR 378. In some instances, an amendment to the complaint will suffice. See CCP §§471.5(a), 472a; see chap 16. Whatever form the attorney decides to use, the amendment or amended complaint must be filed and served on all parties to the action. See CCP §465.

After a general demurrer is sustained with leave to amend and the plaintiff does not amend within the time authorized by the court, the plaintiff no longer can voluntarily dismiss the action without prejudice under former CCP §581(1), even if the trial court has yet to enter a judgment of dismissal on the sustained demurrer. Wells v Marina City Prop. (1981) 29 C3d 781, 176 CR 104. The Wells court held, however, that the right of voluntary dismissal is not barred if exercised before (1) a decision sustaining the demurrer has been made or (2) expiration of the plaintiff's time to amend after the demurrer is sustained. See also Parsons v Umansky (1994) 28 CA4th 867, 34 CR2d 144 (plaintiff's right to dismiss without prejudice until expiration of time to amend after demurrer sustained under CCP §581(b)(1) (any time before actual commencement of trial) is consistent with Wells interpretation of former CCP §581(1) which contained same actual commencement of trial language).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.63 b. Demurrer or Answer After Amended Complaint Filed

A defendant has 30 days after being served with an amended complaint or amendments to a complaint in which to demur again or answer (see CCP §§430.40(a), 471.5(a)) unless the court has specified a different time (see CCP §586(a)(1)). The time to demur to an amended complaint may be extended in the same way as time to demur to an original complaint may be extended, and a demurrer to an amended complaint should be filed and served in the same way as a demurrer to the original complaint.

Grounds of objection to the original complaint that were overruled should not be reasserted against the amended complaint unless the new or changed allegations make them newly valid. Other grounds may be reasserted if the amendments do not cure the defect, and new or restated allegations in the amended complaint may suggest additional grounds for a demurrer.

PRACTICE TIP: A defendant may choose to answer rather than demur to a defective amended complaint for the same reasons that defendants sometimes choose to answer rather than demur to original complaints. See §23.6. A defendant may also choose not to answer or demur to an amended complaint, but to permit entry of judgment by default (see CCP §§471.5(a), 585-587) and appeal from that judgment. See discussion, including risks that may be involved in choosing this course, in §23.60.

An order sustaining a demurrer with leave to amend is not appealable. Bartlett v Hawaiian Village, Inc. (1978) 87 CA3d 435, 151 CR 392. A plaintiff can, however, obtain appellate review of the sufficiency of a complaint by declining to amend the complaint, obtaining an order of dismissal, which acts as a final judgment, and appealing from that judgment. Jeffers v Screen Extras Guild, Inc. (1951) 107 CA2d 253, 237 P2d 51. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §990 (5th ed 2008). Thus, a plaintiff advancing a novel theory of liability and seeking an inexpensive and expeditious review of it, rather than go to trial, can state as strong a case as possible in the complaint, await an order sustaining the demurrer and judgment of dismissal, and appeal on the clerk's transcript.

Under the one-final-judgment rule, a trial court cannot order dismissal after sustaining a demurrer unless it has sustained the demurrer as to all causes of action without leave to amend. Therefore, the plaintiff cannot appeal from a purported judgment on one cause of action if any other cause is pending. If a demurrer is sustained as to less than the entire complaint, a dismissal should not be granted. The ruling should be embodied in a minute order, and the action should proceed to final judgment on any remaining causes of action. See U.S. Fin. v Sullivan (1974) 37 CA3d 5, 11, 112 CR 18. However, if the trial court fails to dispose of all causes of action through inadvertence or mistake, rather than through an intention to retain the remaining causes of action for trial, the appellate court can amend the judgment and dismiss the remaining causes of action, thus preserving the appeal. Tenhet v Boswell (1976) 18 C3d 150, 133 CR 10. In Tenhet, the trial court sustained demurrers to all causes of action except the first, which sought declaratory relief. The court left no doubt that it considered the plaintiff's claim unsupportable, but it believed that the declaratory relief action could not be disposed of at the pleading stage. The California Supreme Court amended the judgment by ruling in the defendant's favor on the first cause of action and thereafter considered the appeal on the merits.

When a case involves multiple parties and the trial court sustains demurrers to all causes of action involving one party without leave to amend, leaving no issue to be determined for that party, an appeal is proper. Justus v Atchison (1977) 19 C3d 564, 139 CR 97, disapproved on other grounds in Ochoa v Superior Court (1985) 39 C3d 159, 171, 216 CR 661. If the demurrer is sustained as to the plaintiff's principal cause of action, a judgment of dismissal is also proper and appealable. See generally 9 Witkin, Procedure, Appeal §§118-119, 122-125.

Either the plaintiff or the defendant may move for an order of dismissal and entry of judgment after the time to amend has passed. CCP §581(f)(2). The motion may be made by ex parte application under CCP §581(f)(2). Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(h); Oppenheimer v Deutchman (1955) 132 CA2d Supp 875, 879, 281 P2d 650.

If the plaintiff chooses not to amend and files an appeal after dismissal, the appellate court will assume that the complaint to which the demurrer was sustained stated the plaintiff's case as strongly as possible. Cal Francisco Inv. Corp. v Vrionis (1971) 14 CA3d 318, 321, 92 CR 201. The facts alleged in the complaint will be taken as true, but the complaint will be strictly construed. Bradler v Craig (1969) 274 CA2d 466, 470, 79 CR 401. Moreover, if the plaintiff declines to amend after having been granted leave to do so, dismissal of the action will be affirmed on appeal if the complaint is objectionable on any ground. Hiemstra v Huston (1970) 12 CA3d 1043, 1045, 91 CR 269; Totten v Underwriters at Lloyd's of London (1959) 176 CA2d 440, 442, 1 CR 520.

The plaintiff may request reconsideration of an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend. CCP §1008; Davis v Stroud (1942) 52 CA2d 308, 315, 126 P2d 409. See discussion in §§12.113-12.118.

No appeal lies from an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend. Youngblood v Board of Supervisors (1978) 22 C3d 644, 651, 150 CR 242. If the trial court sustains a demurrer without leave to amend to less than all causes of action in a complaint, the plaintiff may seek from the reviewing court a writ of mandate directing the trial court to overrule the demurrer. Although appellate courts have generally been reluctant to extend extraordinary relief at the pleading stage, mandamus will lie when it appears that the trial court has deprived a party of an opportunity to plead a cause of action or defense and when extraordinary relief may avert a trial and reversal. Coulter v Superior Court (1978) 21 C3d 144, 148, 145 CR 534.

Although an order sustaining the demurrer is not appealable, a judgment of dismissal is an appealable final judgment. Berri v Superior Court (1955) 43 C2d 856, 860, 279 P2d 8; Parenti v Lifeline Blood Bank (1975) 49 CA3d 331, 334, 122 CR 709, disapproved on other grounds in Wells v Marina City Props., Inc. (1981) 29 C3d 781, 789, 176 CR 104. A judgment of dismissal may be entered on the motion of either party after entry of an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, but a formal motion to dismiss the action is not necessary. Entry of a judgment of dismissal follows an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend as a matter of course. Parenti v Lifeline Blood Bank, supra. The trial judge's refusal to enter a judgment of dismissal after sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend may be reviewed by writ of mandate. Berri v Superior Court, supra.

A plaintiff who is unable by mandamus to obtain appellate review of a trial court order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend to less than all causes of action can obtain review by a direct appeal if the viable causes of action are voluntarily dismissed, a judgment of dismissal is obtained on the causes of action to which a demurrer has been sustained without leave to amend, and a notice of appeal is then filed.

The trial court cannot dismiss an action under CCP §581(f)(1) without a party's request, but a formal or noticed motion is not required; the party against whom judgment is entered has already had the opportunity to be heard in the hearing on the demurrer. See Oppenheimer v Deutchman (1955) 132 CA2d Supp 875, 879, 281 P2d 650.

A judgment of dismissal should not be entered after a demurrer is sustained on the ground that another action is pending, but an interlocutory judgment may issue abating the present action until final determination of the pending action. See §23.31.

The question of whether the trial court abused its discretion in sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend can be raised on appeal even if the plaintiff made no request to amend the complaint. CCP §472c. On appeal, the plaintiff-appellant has the burden of showing abuse of discretion. O'Keefe v Atascadero County Sanitation Dist. (1971) 21 CA3d 719, 731, 98 CR 878. But the appellate court, like the trial court, is to construe the pleadings liberally with a view to substantial justice between the parties. CCP §452.

An order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend to fewer than all causes of action in a complaint or a cross-complaint or to an affirmative defense when the demurrer to the entire answer is overruled and an order granting a motion to strike less than the entire pleading is open on appeal from the final judgment in the action when an amended pleading is filed after the court's order. CCP §472c.

If an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend is reversed or remanded by a reviewing court, any amended complaint must be filed within 30 days after the clerk of the reviewing court mails notice of issuance of the remittitur. CCP §472b.

B. Demurrer to Answer

§23.66 1. If Demurrer Overruled

A plaintiff or cross-complainant may request reconsideration of a decision or an order overruling a demurrer to an answer. See discussion in §23.58.

If reconsideration is not requested or not granted, the action must proceed as if the demurrer to the answer had not been filed; facts alleged in the answer will be considered as denied. CCP §472a(b).

A plaintiff cannot obtain appellate review of an order overruling a demurrer to an answer. However, review may be obtained through writ of mandate proceedings if there is a significant legal issue. See Babb v Superior Court (1971) 3 C3d 841, 92 CR 179. See discussion in §23.61.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.67 2. If Demurrer Sustained

When a court sustains a demurrer to an answer, it may grant the defendant leave to amend. CCP §472a(c). Judges are usually liberal in granting leave to amend because appellate courts frequently consider denial of leave to be an abuse of discretion. See PG&E v Minnette (1949) 92 CA2d 401, 405, 206 P2d 1138. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1183 (5th ed 2008); see §23.53. If the defendant amends the answer, the amendment constitutes a waiver of any error that may have occurred in sustaining the demurrer. Hartke v Abbott (1931) 119 CA 439, 6 P2d 578.

An order sustaining a demurrer to an answer is not appealable. If the answer contains denials of issuable facts or nondemurrable defenses, the action must proceed to judgment before the defendant can obtain appellate review of the order. See Warren v Harootunian (1961) 189 CA2d 546, 11 CR 305 (dismissal improper when defendant declined to amend after general demurrer sustained with leave to amend; even if general demurrer good to special defenses, denial of all material allegations of complaint created issues of fact for trial).

If the sustaining of the demurrer leaves no issues to be decided, and if leave to amend the answer is not granted or the defendant chooses not to amend, the plaintiff or cross-complainant may move for entry of judgment by default under CCP §§585-587. CCP §586(a)(5); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(h). On default generally, see chap 38. Thus, it appears that the defendant may obtain appellate review of the sustaining of a demurrer to an answer by not amending, allowing the plaintiff to take judgment by default and then appealing from that judgment. See discussion, including risks that may be involved in choosing this course, in §23.60.

X. DIAGNOSTIC QUESTIONS

§23.68 A. Defendant

Answers to the following questions may assist defense counsel in evaluating whether a demurrer is appropriate in a particular case:

1. Do any of the following grounds to demur appear from an examination of the face of the complaint or cross-complaint or from matters that may be judicially noticed (see CCP §§430.10, 430.30(a))?

- The court has no jurisdiction over the alleged cause of action.
- The person who filed the pleading lacks legal capacity to sue.
- Another action is pending between the same parties on the same cause of action.
- There is a defect (nonjoinder) or misjoinder of parties.
- The pleading does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.
- The action is barred by statute of limitations.
- The action is barred by prejudicial delay or laches.
- The action is barred because the plaintiff is not the real party in interest and therefore lacks standing to sue.
- The action is barred by res judicata.

In actions on a contract:

- The plaintiff's claim is based on an illegal transaction.
- The plaintiff's claim is barred by the Statute of Frauds.
- The allegations fail to show either the elements or the existence of a contract.
- The allegations show an inadequacy of consideration.
- It cannot be ascertained from the pleading whether the contract is written, oral, or implied by conduct.

In tort actions:

- The allegations in a complaint for defamation disclose a privileged occasion but fail to allege malice. The allegations in a complaint for defamation or malicious prosecution disclose the defense of absolute privilege.
- The pleading is uncertain, ambiguous, or unintelligible.
- In an action for damages for malpractice of an architect, professional engineer, or land surveyor, no certificate of merit has been filed as required by CCP §411.35.

2. If the motion is not made, will your case be prejudiced later in the litigation by your failure to demur?

- Defects of substance are not waived.
- Lack of jurisdiction of the court is not waived if not objected to by demurrer or answer.
- Failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or a defense is not waived by failure to demur or to prosecute a demurrer.
- Defects of form appearing on the face of the pleading must be raised by demurrer or they are waived.

3. If the motion is granted, will it materially affect the outcome of the litigation?

4. Will it result in the dismissal of the offending pleading, cause of action, or defense?

5. Will it result in narrowing the issues on which the opposing party may proceed?

6. Will it produce a useful clarification of the pleading, making it easier to respond to it, and perhaps suggesting additional defenses?

7. Will it encourage a favorable settlement by the opposing party?

8. Are there reasons not to demur?

9. If asked, would the opposing party voluntarily amend the pleading to provide the necessary clarification?

10. Will the opposing party be able to correct the defect by amending the defective pleading?

11. Will the effort and expense of the motion outweigh any potential benefits?

12. Can your objections or challenge to the validity of the pleading be done more expeditiously by answer or by another procedure?

13. Will your demurrer merely force the opposing counsel to research and analyze the bases of the action, permitting him to cure defects and focus energy on the tenable aspects of the action?

14. Will another procedure better accomplish the objectives?

- Raise the objection in the answer.
- Move to strike.
- Move for judgment on the pleadings.
- Move for summary judgment.
- Move to dismiss.
- Use discovery to clarify any uncertainty in the pleadings.
- Object to evidence at trial.

On grounds for demurring to complaint, see §23.22. On demurrers in the context of civil libel or slander actions while criminal charges for child abuse are pending, see CC §48.7(c)-(d). On demurrers to a peremptory writ or the application for a writ of review, see Cal Rules of Ct 8.487(b). See also California Civil Writ Practice §§8.40-8.56 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008).

§23.69 B. Plaintiff

Answers to the following questions may assist the plaintiff's counsel in evaluating whether a demurrer is appropriate in a particular case:

1. Do any of the following grounds to demur appear from an examination of the face of the answer, or from matter that may be judicially noticed (see CCP §§430.20, 430.30(a), 430.50)?

- The answer lacks facts sufficient to constitute a defense.
- The answer is uncertain ("uncertain" includes ambiguous and unintelligible).
- If a contract is pleaded in the answer, it cannot be ascertained from the face of the answer whether the contract is oral or written.

2. Are there other reasons to demur?

3. Will the issue be waived if you do not demur? See CCP §430.80.

4. Will the defendant (or cross-defendant) be unable to allege facts sufficient to constitute an affirmative defense in an amended answer, thereby limiting the scope of discovery?

5. If a contract is pleaded in the answer and if defendant amends to show that the contract was oral, should a general demurrer raising the statute of frauds may then be considered?

6. Are there reasons not to demur?

7. Would a demurrer delay the lawsuit?

8. Would any possible benefit be outweighed by the expense of raising a demurrer because the defendant would be able to cure the defect by amending the answer?

9. Are any of the following better alternatives than a demurrer?

- Move to strike.
- Move for judgment on the pleadings.
- Move for summary judgment.
- Use discovery to clarify uncertainty in the answer.
- Object to evidence at trial.

On grounds for demurring to an answer, see §23.42. For discussion of demurrers to a cross-complaint, see §23.39.

Comment: California Rules of Court 3.1320(e) requires that the name of the party filing the demurrer and the name of the party whose pleading is the subject of the demurrer appear immediately below the case number. Some local court rules may require an attorney's certificate of merits. If so, the following may be placed below the statement of grounds and above the date and attorney's signature: "The undersigned certifies that this demurrer is filed in good faith and not for the purpose of delay." Comment: The demurrer must specifically identify in the caption the demurring party and the cross-complaint being opposed. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(e). A notice of hearing and a supporting memorandum must accompany a demurrer. See §23.37. The grounds for objecting to a cross-complaint are the same as for objecting to a complaint. For discussion, see §§23.22-23.24. The forms in those sections may be used in a demurrer to a cross-complaint by substituting "cross-complainant" for "plaintiff," "cross-defendant" for "defendant," "cross-complaint" for "complaint," and "answer to cross-complaint" for "answer."

I. INTRODUCTION

§24.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter covers motions to strike in civil actions under CCP §§435-437. It discusses description and use (see §§24.3-24.6), the moving party's procedures (see §§24.7-24.16), the opposition (see §24.17), hearing and ruling (see §§24.18-24.19), and procedures after ruling (see §§24.20-24.23). It also contains diagnostic questions (see §24.24), a procedural checklist (see §24.25), forms of notice of motion to strike (see §24.26), and an order granting the motion to strike (see §24.27).

A party may file both a motion to strike and a demurrer at the same time. See §24.11. On demurrers generally, see chap 23.

NOTE: Except to the extent that general motion to strike rules apply, this chapter does not cover the special motion to strike under CCP §425.16 that may be addressed to a cause of action brought primarily to chill a person's constitutional right of petition or free speech in connection with a public issue (i.e., a SLAPP, or Strategic Lawsuit Against Public Participation). On SLAPP lawsuits, see Bader & Goldowitz, California's Powerful Anti-SLAPP Statute: Litigating After Briggs v Eden Council for Hope & Opportunity, 21 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 82 (May 1999).

§24.2 B. Governing Law

Motions to strike in civil actions are governed by CCP §§435-437. A motion to strike is a general appearance in a civil action. See CCP §1014.

II. DESCRIPTION AND USE

§24.3 A. Function; Motion to Strike Compared With Demurrer

A motion to strike is used to challenge pleading defects not vulnerable to challenge by demurrer. For example, a motion to strike can be used to reach procedural defects (see §24.4) or to eliminate part of a cause of action or count (e.g., a claim for punitive damages) even though the rest of the cause of action would stand against a general demurrer. Unlike a demurrer, a motion to strike can also be used to sanction a party for misuse of the discovery process (CCP §2023.030(d)(1)) or a party who fails to comply with local court rules, unless the failure to comply is the fault of counsel and not of the party. CCP §575.2 (court on its own motion or motion of party may strike all or any part of pleading).

A motion to strike may be directed against a whole pleading or any part of it. CCP §435(b)(1). Even an objectionable word or phrase may be stricken. A "pleading" is defined in the code as a demurrer, answer, complaint, or cross-complaint. See CCP §435(a)(2).

A motion to strike can eliminate:

- Irrelevant and redundant matter (see American Aeronautics Corp. v Grand Central Aircraft Co. (1957) 155 CA2d 69, 84, 317 P2d 694);
- Statements that are conclusions of law (Simpson v Richmond (1957) 154 CA2d 27, 315 P2d 435) or evidentiary matter (Fisher v Larsen (1982) 138 CA3d 627, 646, 188 CR 216); and
- Such inflammatory terms as "illegally" and "maliciously" (unless supported by punitive damages claim) (see Bartling v Glendale Adventist Med. Ctr. (1986) 184 CA3d 961, 970, 229 CR 360).

Like a demurrer, a motion to strike:

- Attacks matters that appear on the face of the pleading or that can be judicially noticed;
- Constitutes a general appearance in the action (CCP §1014);
- Precludes entry of default (CCP §§435(c), 585-586); and
- Extends the time to answer the complaint or cross-complaint but not the time within which a demurrer must be filed (CCP §435(c)-(d)).

In contrast to a demurrer, a motion to strike is usually the appropriate procedure for eliminating improper punitive damages allegations. Grieves v Superior Court (1984) 157 CA3d 159, 164, 203 CR 556. The objections raised by a motion to strike cannot be raised by demurrer under CCP §§430.10-430.20. Conversely, an objection that is grounds for a demurrer is usually not a proper ground for a motion to strike. Warren v Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. (1971) 19 CA3d 24, 41, 96 CR 317; Allerton v King (1929) 96 CA 230, 233, 274 P 90. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§1008-1043 (5th ed 2008).

B. Grounds

§24.4 1. In Unlimited Civil Cases

Under CCP §437(a), grounds for a motion to strike must be based on:

- Matters appearing on the face of the challenged pleading; or
- Matters of which the court is required to take judicial notice.

Grounds for a motion to strike are that (CCP §436):

- The challenged pleading contains irrelevant, false, or improper matter); or
- All or part of the pleading is not drafted or filed in conformity with state law, a local rule, or a court order.

The court may also entertain a motion to strike a pleading filed in disregard of established procedural requirements or that otherwise would violate orderly judicial administration. Neal v Bank of America (1949) 93 CA2d 678, 682, 209 P2d 825. See examples in §24.6.

The court can deny a motion to strike on the ground that the defect should have been raised by demurrer. See Warren v Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. (1971) 19 CA3d 24, 41, 96 CR 317 (ground asserted in motion merely another way of saying that count did not state facts sufficient to constitute cause of action); Allerton v King (1929) 96 CA 230, 233, 274 P 90 (uncertainty should have been asserted by special demurrer, not motion to strike). But see Neal v Bank of America, supra. For comparison of motions to strike with demurrers, see §24.3.

PRACTICE TIP: When the grounds for objection to a pleading do not appear on its face or from matter that must or may be judicially noticed, the appropriate way to object is by a motion for summary judgment (in which evidentiary matters may be raised) rather than by a motion to strike. Deyo v Kilbourne (1978) 84 CA3d 771, 779 n2, 149 CR 499. On summary judgment, see chap 36.

§24.5 2. In Limited Civil Cases

In actions subject to CCP §§90-100 (economic litigation procedures for limited civil cases) (see chap 6), motions to strike are allowed only on the ground that the damages or relief sought are not supported by the allegations of the complaint. CCP §92(d).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/24 Motions to Strike/§24.6 3. Examples of Grounds for Motion to Strike

§24.6 3. Examples of Grounds for Motion to Strike

Grounds for a motion to strike include the following:

- The pleading is false, i.e., untrue. The word "sham," deleted when former CCP §453 was repealed in 1982, was replaced by the word "false" in the current CCP §436(a). A legislative intent to change the law is presumed when one statute is repealed and another statute with different wording is enacted on the same subject. Garcia v Sterling (1985) 176 CA3d 17, 21, 221 CR 349. Thus, cases decided under former CCP §453, in which "sham" was defined as "untrue," are still good law on this point (see Allen v Stellar (1930) 106 CA 67, 288 P 855), but there is some question about the applicability of cases in which "sham" was defined as "not filed in good faith." Many of the latter cases, however, probably fall within the scope of CCP §436(b), which allows a court to strike any pleading "not drawn or filed in conformity with the laws of this state." See, e.g., Tostevin v Douglas (1958) 160 CA2d 321, 330, 325 P2d 130 (amended complaint contained numerous unexplained inconsistencies, mistaken statements, contradictions, ambiguities, conflicts, and uncertainties when compared with previous pleadings; court has right to strike this kind of pleading from its files to preserve orderly judicial administration); Neal v Bank of America (1949) 93 CA2d 678, 209 P2d 825 (amended complaint no better than original demurrable complaint; court may strike pleading filed in disregard of established procedural requirements or otherwise violative of orderly judicial administration).
- The pleading is filed without the required leave of court. See Stafford v Ballinger (1962) 199 CA2d 289, 297, 18 CR 568 (amended complaint); Gilbert v Sherrod (1925) 75 CA 437, 243 P 30 (cross-complaint).
- The form of pleading is in violation of a court order. See Morales v Camello (1970) 12 CA3d 370, 90 CR 718 (amended complaint incorporated prior allegations by reference from three prior pleadings despite court's request for complete pleading).
- The pleading is filed late. See Buck v Morrossis (1952) 114 CA2d 461, 464, 250 P2d 270 (demurrer filed 11 days late); Lincoln Holding Corp. v Union Indem. Co. (1933) 129 CA 399, 18 P2d 744 (amended complaint filed after time granted by court); Collins v Bicknell (1919) 41 CA 291, 182 P 763 (answer and cross-complaint filed after time granted by court). But see Tuck v Thuesen (1970) 10 CA3d 193, 196, 88 CR 759 (no abuse of discretion in denying motion to strike late demurrer when late filing was mere irregularity and moving party not prejudiced by delay), overruled on other grounds in Neel v Magana, Olney, Levy, Cathcart & Gelfand (1971) 6 C3d 176, 98 CR 837.
- The pleading is barred by the statute of limitations. This ground occurs when an amended complaint or cross-complaint, filed after a limitations statute has run, pleads an entirely different set of facts from those originally pleaded. See Pagett v Indemnity Ins. Co. (1942) 54 CA2d 646, 649, 129 P2d 700; 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§1217, 1234-1235 (5th ed 2008).
- The pleading must be verified. This ground occurs when a pleading is either not verified or improperly verified. See Perlman v Municipal Court (1979) 99 CA3d 568, 574, 160 CR 567 (petition for writ of prohibition); Johnson v Dixon Farms Co. (1915) 29 CA 52, 55, 155 P 134 (answer).
- The pleading or matter is irrelevant. It does not present or raise a material issue. See Green v Palmer (1860) 15 C 411 (narrative portion of complaint stricken). See also Title Guar. & Trust Co. v Fraternal Fin. Co. (1934) 220 C 362, 30 P2d 515 (answer that pleaded extension of time to pay principal no defense to foreclosure based on failure to pay interest). But see Allerton v King (1929) 96 CA 230, 274 P 90 (error to strike allegations as irrelevant if pleading left defective).
- The matter is redundant. The matter to be stricken restates matter alleged elsewhere in the pleading. See Wilson v Shea (1924) 194 C 653, 229 P 945 (amended complaint constituted repetition of preceding amended complaint in all essential elements).
- The pleading is filed by someone who is not a proper party to the action. Dabney v Shippey (1974) 40 CA3d 990, 115 CR 526 (cross-complainants were not indispensable parties who were entitled to appear by cross-complaint). But see CLD Constr. v City of San Ramon (2004) 120 CA4th 1141, 1149, 16 CR3d 555 (even though corporation cannot represent itself in court, filing of complaint by corporation in propria persona is curable defect and dismissal without leave to amend is not mandated).

NOTE: A motion to strike may also be used to attack the sufficiency of similar documents (e.g., a petition for a writ of prohibition) not filed in conformity with the law. See Perlman v Municipal Court, supra.

III. MOVING PARTY'S PROCEDURES

A. Timing

§24.7 1. When to File Against Complaint or Cross-Complaint

A defendant's or cross-defendant's notice of motion to strike must be served and filed within the time allowed to respond to a complaint or cross-complaint. CCP §435(b)(1). That time is normally 30 days after the date of service of the summons and complaint (CCP §412.20(a)(3)), cross-complaint (CCP §432.10), amended complaint (CCP §471.5(a)), or amended cross-complaint (CCP §586). This time requirement does not apply to a motion to strike made as part of a motion under CCP §438(i)(1)(A) after the granting of a motion for judgment on the pleadings. CCP §435(b)(1), (e). For time to respond following remand from federal court, see §22.96.

After an answer has been filed, a motion to strike the answered pleading will not ordinarily be heard. See Adohr Milk Farms, Inc. v Love (1967) 255 CA2d 366, 371, 63 CR 123.

PRACTICE TIP: Filing a motion to strike can gain an early ruling on the relevance of questionable allegations. A successful motion to strike eliminates all or part of the other party's claims or defenses and narrows the issues or theories that must be proved. However, striking irrelevant or redundant matter is not normally a sufficient objective to justify the time and expense of a motion to strike unless the matter will materially affect the outcome of the litigation. Even in these instances, it is often better to ignore surplusage in a pleading. If, however, the opponent requests that the pleading be read to the jury during trial of the action, an objection can be raised at that time. See Evid C §§350, 352. When the motion can strike a significant claim (e.g., punitive damages barred by statute of limitations), reduce discovery or other pretrial costs, or lead to a more favorable settlement, the motion should be made. When a demurrer will be filed, a motion to strike should be made at the same time. CCP §§435-436; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1322.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/24 Motions to Strike/§24.8 2. When to File Against Answer

§24.8 2. When to File Against Answer

Although the Code of Civil Procedure does not set the time within which a motion to strike an answer must be served and filed, it appears that a motion to strike all or part of an answer must be filed within 10 days after service of the answer because:

- A notice of motion to strike must be given within the time allowed to plead (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1322);
- The term "pleading" means a demurrer, answer, complaint, or cross-complaint (CCP §435(a)(2)); and
- The only pleading that is appropriately filed to an answer is a demurrer, and demurrers to answers must normally be filed within 10 days after service of the answer (CCP §430.40(b)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.9 3. Extensions by Stipulation or Court Order

A stipulation or an order extending the time to answer or otherwise respond may be obtained from the opposing party or from the court, and it can specify whether the time to move to strike is extended or not. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.20, 1.10(c); CCP §473.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.10 4. Effect of Trial Court Delay Reduction Act

The ability to stipulate to extend deadlines for filing responsive pleadings to a complaint may be curtailed by local rules adopted under to the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620).

NOTE: Counsel should examine local rules before seeking or agreeing to extensions of time within which the parties can file pleadings. For further discussion, see chap 40.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/24 Motions to Strike/§24.11 5. Motion to Strike Must Be Filed and Heard at Same Time as Demurrer

§24.11 5. Motion to Strike Must Be Filed and Heard at Same Time as Demurrer

A party may both move to strike and demur to a pleading. If both a motion to strike and a demurrer are filed, they must be filed and heard concurrently. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1322. The court, however, rarely rules on both a motion to strike and a demurrer. See B.F.G. Builders v Weisner & Coover Co. (1962) 206 CA2d 752, 757, 23 CR 815.

NOTE: If the demurrer is sustained with leave to amend, the amended pleading may make the motion to strike superfluous; conversely, if the motion to strike is granted and the pleading is stricken, there is no reason to object by demurrer.

For comparison of demurrers and motions to strike, see §24.3. On demurrers generally, see chap 23.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.12 6. Setting Time of Hearing; Service

A notice of motion to strike, like other law and motion matters, must specify a hearing date at least 16 court days after the notice is served and filed, in addition to the time required for service by mail, unless the judge orders a shorter time. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(b). Proof of service of any moving papers must be filed no later than 5 calendar days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(c). For further discussion, see chap 12 (noticed motions).

Counsel should become familiar with local rules and practices for the times and places of hearings on law and motion matters. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 9.0(c). In many counties, counsel may consult the court clerk or a judge for instructions on setting the hearing date.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.13 B. Drafting Motion

In preparing the moving papers, counsel should draft a notice of motion (see §24.14) and if appropriate a request for judicial notice (see §24.15). A memorandum in support of the motion must accompany the notice of motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113. On format of court papers generally, see chap 11. On motions generally, see chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.14 1. Notice of Motion

If the motion is to strike an entire paragraph, cause of action, count, or defense of the pleading, the notice may refer to the part to be stricken by its number. Otherwise, the notice of motion must quote the portions to be stricken in full. Each item to be stricken must be numbered consecutively in the notice. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1322. It is good practice to include the page and line numbers of each portion of the pleading that the motion challenges.

The motion may be denied in its entirety if the matter to be stricken is so broad that it includes matters properly pleaded. See Hill v Wrather (1958) 158 CA2d 818, 823, 323 P2d 567. A motion that is not directed to particular allegations may be considered a motion to strike the entire pleading or an entire count and may be denied if any part of the pleading is sufficient. See Triodyne, Inc. v Superior Court (1966) 240 CA2d 536, 542, 49 CR 717.

Procedural requirements for noticed motions are discussed in chap 12. On format of court papers generally (including supporting memorandum), see chap 11. See form of notice of motion to strike in §24.26.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.15 2. Judicial Notice

The grounds for a motion to strike must appear on the face of the challenged pleading or be based on any matter of which the court (see CCP §437(a)):

- Is required to take judicial notice (see Evid C §451 (mandatory judicial notice)); or
- May take judicial notice (see Evid C §§452-453 (permissive judicial notice)).

When the motion is based on a matter of which the court may, but is not required to, take judicial notice, that matter must be specified in the notice of motion or in the supporting memorandum unless the court permits otherwise. CCP §437(b).

A party requesting judicial notice in the permissive category must provide the court and each party with a copy of the material to be noticed. If the material is part of a court file, the party must specify the part of the file to be judicially noticed and make arrangements with the clerk to have the file in the courtroom at the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(c). For further discussion, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chap 14 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 49 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

NOTE: Although a court can take judicial notice of the existence of documents in a court file (Evid C §452(d)), it may take judicial notice only of the truth of facts asserted in those documents that evidence the court's findings, e.g., orders, statements of decision, judgments. Garcia v Sterling (1985) 176 CA3d 17, 21, 221 CR 349; Day v Sharp (1975) 50 CA3d 904, 914, 123 CR 918.

§24.16 C. Moving Party's Reply to Opposition Papers; Timing

After being served with opposition papers (see §24.17), the moving party may respond by drafting a memorandum. The reply must be served and filed at least 5 court days before the hearing. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). If there is not enough time to allow for service by mail, the reply should be personally served on the other parties in the action.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.17 IV. OPPOSING THE MOTION

A party opposing a motion to strike should file a supporting memorandum in opposition to the motion. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(a). Like a supporting memorandum, this document should contain a statement of facts drafted by the opposing party's counsel; a concise statement of the law and the arguments relied on; and a discussion of the statutes, cases, and textbooks cited to support the position advanced. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(b). For discussion of procedures for opposing motions generally, see chap 12.

All opposition papers must be served and filed at least 9 court days before the hearing date. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). If there is not enough time to allow for service by mail, the opposing papers should be personally served on the other parties in the action. On service generally, see chap 18.

V. HEARING AND COURT RULING

§24.18 A. Hearing; Judge's Ruling on Motion to Strike

Counsel for the parties are entitled to appear at a hearing on any motion. CCP §1005.5. The right to argue orally on the motion is subject to the court's discretion, however, and the judge may decide a matter solely on the basis of the supporting papers. Muller v Muller (1956) 141 CA2d 722, 731, 297 P2d 789 (motion under consideration obviously frivolous; court acted within its power to summarily deny it without oral argument). For discussion of court hearing procedures generally, see chap 12.

A motion to strike raises an issue of law. CCP §589(b). The court should not strike relevant matter essential to a cause of action or defense. If a motion to strike is so broad that it includes relevant and irrelevant matter, the motion should be denied. See Triodyne, Inc. v Superior Court (1966) 240 CA2d 536, 542, 49 CR 717.

The court's granting of a motion to strike will be overturned only if the court abused its discretion and prejudice can be shown. See §24.21 (review on appeal).

Unlike for a demurrer, a court may act on its own motion to strike all or part of a pleading. CCP §436. However, a court that strikes all or part of a pleading on its own motion may do so on grounds that would also be the basis for a demurrer, because the court has authority to strike "all or any part of any pleading not drawn or filed in conformity with the laws of this state." CCP §436(b). See In re Easterbrook (1988) 200 CA3d 1541, 1544, 244 CR 652; Lodi v Lodi (1985) 173 CA3d 628, 630, 219 CR 116.

PRACTICE TIP: When a demurrer and a motion to strike are heard at the same time, counsel should make sure that the court's ruling clearly designates which parts of the pleading are stricken, which of the remaining parts are defective, and whether the pleader is given leave to amend the pleading. See B.F.G. Builders v Weisner & Coover Co. (1962) 206 CA2d 752, 758, 23 CR 815 (court should have sustained demurrer or granted motion to strike, but not both).

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.19 B. Notice of Ruling

The court clerk must notify the parties "forthwith" of the court's ruling on a motion to strike. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1109(a)-(c). If given by mail, the clerk's notification does not constitute service of notice, and the clerk's failure to advise the parties of the court's ruling does not extend a party's time for performing any act after the court's ruling except as provided in rules of court relating to the time for filing a notice of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1109(a)-(c).

Unless notice was waived at the hearing, counsel can effect service of notice by serving a conformed copy of the order. On service generally, see chap 18.

VI. PROCEDURES AFTER RULING

A. Motion Granted

§24.20 1. Time to Amend

If an order to strike all of a complaint is granted without leave to amend, the court may dismiss the complaint as to the moving defendant. CCP §581(f)(3). The court may also dismiss the complaint if the order is granted with leave to amend and the plaintiff fails to amend within the time allowed by the court. CCP §581(f)(4).

If a demurrer is stricken (e.g., the plaintiff moves to strike the defendant's demurrer to the complaint), and there is no answer on file, the court must allow an answer to be filed on terms that are just. CCP §472a(c).

When a motion to strike is granted, the court may order that an amendment or amended pleading be filed on whatever terms it considers proper. If a motion to strike all or part of a complaint or cross-complaint is denied, the court must allow the moving party to file an answer. CCP §472a(d).

If the court's ruling fails to specify the time period within which to amend after the motion to strike is granted, and counsel intends to amend, it is good practice to amend the pleading within 10 days after the ruling. See, by analogy, Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g) (unless otherwise ordered, party has 10 days to answer or amend after ruling on demurrer).

NOTE: If an amendment is not filed within the time specified by the court, counsel may move for leave to amend under CCP §473.

§24.21 2. Appellate Review

An order granting a motion to strike is not appealable unless it removes from the case the only cause of action alleged and leaves no issues to be determined in the action as to the moving party. Wilson v Sharp (1954) 42 C2d 675, 677, 268 P2d 1062 (motion to strike second cause of action in complaint was only cause of action applicable to moving defendant; order granting motion was appealable as to this defendant); Garza v Kantor (1976) 54 CA3d 1025, 127 CR 164 (granting motion to strike removed child's loss of consortium cause of action in complaint; appealable because this terminated child's participation in lawsuit).

An order striking only part of a pleading is considered excepted to (CCP §647) and is made part of the judgment roll (CCP §670), but the order itself is normally considered interlocutory and not appealable except on appeal from a final judgment. See Oeth v Mason (1967) 247 CA2d 805, 808, 56 CR 69.

An order granting a motion to strike that exceeds the court's jurisdiction can be reviewed by writ of mandate or prohibition. See CCP §§1085, 1102. See generally 9 Witkin, California Procedure, Appeal §155 (5th ed 2008).

EXAMPLE: Even though an answer may still raise issues, if a substantial defense is stricken, the defendant may apply to a court of appeal for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to set aside the order and reinstate the defense. See Carter v Superior Court (1956) 142 CA2d 350, 359, 298 P2d 598 (granting of motion to strike affirmative defense of res judicata entitled defendant to writ of mandate compelling trial court to reinstate defense), overruled on other grounds in Unruh v Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 C3d 616, 102 CR 815. See generally 5 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §1016; California Civil Writ Practice §§8.45-8.49 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008).

If the entire answer is stricken, no issues remain to be tried and, if the defendant does not amend and the plaintiff takes judgment by default, that judgment is appealable. On default generally, see chap 38.

The issue on appeal is whether the court abused its discretion in granting the motion to strike. See Tostevin v Douglas (1958) 160 CA2d 321, 331, 325 P2d 130. Further, the appellant must demonstrate prejudice from the improper ruling, i.e., that the outcome of the action would have been different but for the ruling on the motion to strike. See Ross v Sweeters (1932) 119 CA 716, 720, 7 P2d 334 (although plaintiff's motion to strike portion of defendant's answer should have been granted, no prejudice shown). If the ruling on the motion was correct under any theory of law applicable to the action, the appellate court will sustain it. Zak v State Farm Mut. Liab. Ins. Co. (1965) 232 CA2d 500, 506, 42 CR 908.

§24.22 B. Motion Denied

A trial judge who denies a motion to strike all or part of a complaint or cross-complaint should specify the time within which an answer may be filed. See CCP §§472a(d), 586(a)(2). If the ruling fails to specify the allowable time period, it is good practice to answer within 10 days after the service of notice of denial of the motion. See, by analogy, CCP §472b; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g), pertaining to demurrers.

If the defendant or cross-defendant answers within the time specified, default judgment will not be entered and any abuse of discretion in denial of the motion can be raised on appeal only after final judgment. See Oeth v Mason (1967) 247 CA2d 805, 808, 56 CR 69. See generally 9 Witkin, California Procedure, Appeal §155 (5th ed 2008).

If the law clearly establishes the right to an order, a denial can be reviewed by writ of mandate. See Whitney's at the Beach v Superior Court (1970) 3 CA3d 258, 83 CR 237 (summary judgment case; court's ruling denying motion when no triable issue existed was abuse of discretion, making use of extraordinary writ proper).

§24.23 C. Prevailing Party's Response to Amended Pleading

A defendant whose motion to strike has been granted should not waive the right to require that the complaint be amended before filing a responsive pleading. After an amended complaint or cross-complaint is filed, the defendant has 30 days, unless the court directs otherwise, in which to answer, demur to, or move to strike that complaint or cross-complaint. CCP §471.5(a). If a plaintiff's motion to strike an answer is granted, the plaintiff has 10 days in which to demur to the amended answer unless the court sets another time period. CCP §471.5(b).

§24.24 VII. DIAGNOSTIC QUESTIONS

Answers to the following questions may assist counsel in evaluating whether to use a motion to strike in a particular case:

1. Do any of the following grounds for a motion to strike appear on the face of the offending pleading or from matters that must or may be judicially noticed (see CCP §§436-437)?

- The pleading contains irrelevant, false, or improper matter.
- A cause of action is time barred.
- The pleading is not filed in conformity with statutes, court rules, or a court order.

2. If the motion is granted, will it materially affect the outcome of the litigation?

3. Will the motion result in dismissal of the challenged pleading, or all or part of a cause of action or defense?

4. Will the motion result in the exclusion of prejudicial evidence at trial?

5. Will the motion encourage a favorable settlement by the opposing party?

6. Are there any reasons why a motion to strike should not be made?

7. Can the truth of statements in supporting documents be judicially noticed?

8. Will the opposing party be able to correct the defect by amending the pleading?

9. Will the expense of the motion outweigh any potential benefits?

10. Will another procedure accomplish the same objective?

- Objection in answer (defendants)
- Demurrer
- Motion for judgment on the pleadings
- Motion for summary judgment
- Motion for dismissal
- Motion in limine before trial
- Objection at trial

On motions to strike extraneous matter from the petition or response in a family law proceeding authorized by Cal Rules of Ct 5.120(a)(2), see CCP §435; 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §849(f) (5th ed 2008).

On motions to strike to exclude evidence at trial, see Evid C §§353, 766; California Trial Objections, chap 52 (Cal CEB Annual).

On a motion for an order striking all or part of a pleading as a sanction for failure to obey a discovery order, see CCP §2023.030(d)(1); California Civil Discovery Practice §§15.92-15.102, 7.120-7.121 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

On motions under Fed R Civ P 12(f) to strike from a pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter, see 2 Moore & Coquillette, Moore's Federal Practice §12.37[3] (3d ed 1997); 5A Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure §§1380-1383 (3d ed 1998).

I. INTRODUCTION

§25.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses answers, the pleadings filed by defendants and cross-defendants in response to complaints. It explains description and use (see §§25.3-25.9); format rules, including the use of Judicial Council forms, denials and affirmative defenses (see §§25.10-25.22); denials (see §§25.23-25.29); defenses (see §§25.30-25.64); service and filing and service requirements (see §§25.65-25.69); and the procedures for amending and supplementing answers (see §§25.70-25.79). A diagnostic checklist (see §25.80) and sample pleadings appear at the end of the chapter (see §§25.81-25.93).

The strategies of filing alternative papers (e.g., demurrer, motion to strike, cross-complaint, petition to remove action to federal court, motion for change of venue, motion to dismiss for inconvenient forum, motion to change jurisdictional classification to limited or unlimited civil case (see chap 6)) are also treated, as are the steps defense counsel may take to obtain extensions of time to respond to complaints. For related discussion, see generally the chapters on the drafting and filing of the alternative documents listed above (e.g., demurrers are covered in chap 23).

NOTE: Unless otherwise stated, the discussion in this chapter applies both to answers to complaints and to answers to cross-complaints in the California superior courts. Other papers filed in response to applications for peremptory writs and in other special proceedings may also be called "answers." See, e.g., CCP §§1069.1 (certiorari), 1089 (mandate), and 1105 (prohibition). This chapter does not cover responsive pleadings or papers under the Family Code or other special proceedings.

§25.2 B. Governing Law

An answer, i.e., a pleading filed in a civil action by a defendant or cross-defendant to reply to the allegations of a complaint or cross-complaint, is governed by CCP §§420, 430.30, 431.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

II. DESCRIPTION AND USE

§25.3 A. Purpose and Function

An answer may fulfill various purposes:

- To make general appearance in the action (CCP §1014);
- To prevent a plaintiff from taking judgment against the answering defendant by default (CCP §585);
- To state the same formal objections to the complaint and its allegations that may be stated by demurrer (see chap 23) when the reasons for objecting do not appear on the face of the complaint (CCP §§430.10, 430.30);
- To require plaintiff to prove all material allegations of fact denied in the answer (CCP §590); or
- To state new matters, particularly defenses, that may prevent plaintiff from obtaining a judgment (CCP §§420, 431.30(b), 590).

Filing a timely answer raises the issues that are to be tried in the lawsuit. At issue between the plaintiff and the defendant are material allegations of the complaint that are denied or controverted in the answer, and new matter stated in the answer in avoidance or constituting a defense. CCP §§431.20(b), 588, 590. The right to answer a pending complaint is a fundamental element of due process; a court that arbitrarily abridges that right may have unconstitutionally exceeded its jurisdiction. See McClatchy v Superior Court (1897) 119 C 413, 420, 51 P 696.

Two additional issues occasionally arise for corporate defendants:

- Corporations not in good standing (e.g., because of nonpayment of taxes) may not defend suits (Corp C §2203).
- As to corporations torn by a contest for control, a trial judge may select among competing claimants the one who may answer on behalf of the corporation. Kellar v Hendey (1961) 189 CA2d 86, 10 CR 748.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.4 B. Effect of Failure to File

Plaintiff may obtain a default judgment against a defendant who fails to file a timely and sufficient answer to a complaint or a cross-complaint. CCP §§585-587. On default, see chap 38. A defendant who does not answer or otherwise appear is not entitled to be served with subsequently filed papers in the action. CCP §1014.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Effect of Defects

§25.5 1. Failure to Deny Material Allegation

Defendant must deny every material allegation of the complaint, or allege facts that controvert all material allegations. CCP §431.20(a). See Hennefer v Butcher (1986) 182 CA3d 492, 227 CR 318.

A material allegation is essential to a claim, and if stricken, leaves the complaint insufficient as a matter of law. CCP §431.10(a). An immaterial allegation is any other allegation, prayer for judgment, or irrelevant matter as defined by CCP §§436 and 431.10(b)-(c). CCP §431.20. See Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc'y v Dickinson (1914) 167 C 616, 619, 140 P 265; Weinberger v Weidman (1901) 134 C 599, 66 P 869.

A defendant's failure to deny a material allegation operates as a binding admission of its truth and relieves a plaintiff from having to prove the admitted matter at trial. Rembold v City & County of San Francisco (1952) 113 CA2d 795, 249 P2d 58; Silvey v Neary (1881) 59 C 97. Unless the defendant is later able to amend the answer (see §§25.70-25.78), a binding admission precludes the defendant from later challenging the admission by offering contrary evidence. See Fuentes v Tucker (1947) 31 C2d 1, 4, 187 P2d 752. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§1050-1054 (5th ed 2008).

PRACTICE TIP: In practice, it is usually unwise to decide whether a given allegation is "material" or not. The better approach is to treat all allegations as material and to deny every allegation the defendant does not intend to admit.

Subject matter jurisdiction, unlike personal jurisdiction, cannot be conferred on a court by consent of the parties; thus, even if they are not denied, allegations in a complaint of subject matter jurisdiction are not deemed admitted. Taylor v Taylor (1923) 192 C 71, 78, 218 P 756. See discussion in chap 6 (jurisdiction).

§25.6 2. Failure to Assert Defense

Failure to plead specific facts constituting a defense is a waiver by the defendant of that defense. See Jetty v Craco (1954) 123 CA2d 876, 880, 267 P2d 1055. However, the defense may later become an issue if:

- Defendant is subsequently permitted by the court to amend the answer to plead facts on which defense is based;
- Plaintiff, as well as defendant, proceeds as if that defense had been explicitly raised; or
- Plaintiff introduces evidence on which that defense can be based.

See Hollypark Realty Co. v MacLoane (1958) 163 CA2d 549, 552, 329 P2d 532.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.7 3. Defective Denial

It is a state policy that allegations in a pleading must be liberally construed to afford substantial justice among the parties. CCP §452. See generally 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§442-451 (5th ed 2008). However, deliberate evasiveness (see Hutson v Gerson (1933) 132 CA 665, 23 P2d 816) or gross defects in the form of a denial (e.g., on information and belief when not authorized) amount to no denial at all and are treated as an admission. But see Stroud v Tunzi (2008) 160 CA4th 377, 72 CR3d 756 (noting that Hutson was decided under former CCP §437, which was reenacted with substantial modifications as CCP §431.30).

This can have severe consequences, but the rule has long been established and is regularly enforced. Compare California Corrugated Culvert Co. v Stewart (1932) 215 C 120, 123, 8 P2d 1013, with Cockerell v Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1954) 42 C2d 284, 288, 267 P2d 16. For discussion of proper form of denials, see §§25.23-25.29. On amending an answer, see §§25.70-25.79.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.8 4. Affirmative Admission

Occasionally, an inadvertent but express and unequivocal admission of fact is included in an answer. The penalty is undeniably severe: a binding admission. See Fuentes v Tucker (1947) 31 C2d 1, 5, 187 P2d 752; Peyton v Cly (1960) 184 CA2d 193, 195, 7 CR 504. But see Chase v Van Camp Sea Food Co. (1930) 109 CA 38, 44, 292 P 179 (dictum; no unequivocal admission found).

PRACTICE TIP: A defense attorney, particularly if pleadings are drafted by other lawyers in the office, should rigorously review an answer before filing to avoid inadvertent admission of a material allegation of the complaint. This will avoid the embarrassment of later having to inform the client of the necessity of having to amend the pleading to cure a drafting defect.

§25.9 5. Failure to Verify Answer When Required

Generally, a defendant must verify an answer when the complaint is verified. CCP §446. See discussion in §25.17.

Failure to verify an answer when required by CCP §446 permits a plaintiff to seek an order striking the answer or moving for judgment on the pleadings. See 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§467-468 (5th ed 2008).

III. FORMAT

A. Drafting: Formal Aspects

§25.10 1. Caption; Opening Paragraph

Like other pleadings and papers, answers must conform in size and format to the specifications of Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. See chap 11. See form of answer in §25.83.

Defense counsel should be careful to state the name of the defendant (or of each multiple defendant) on whose behalf an answer is being filed.

EXAMPLE: The first page of the answer may list under defense attorneys' address and telephone number that they are "Attorneys for Defendant John Smith, Individually and as President of Smith & Sons, Inc." If separate answers are filed, one pleading might be titled "Answer of Defendant Tom Smith to Complaint of John Doe" and the caption of another pleading might be "Answer of Defendant Smith & Sons, Inc. to Complaint of John Doe."

In multiple party litigation, it is convenient although not required for the first paragraph to contain introductory language identifying the answering defendant, such as the following:

Defendant Tom Smith ("Smith"), for himself alone and severing himself from all other defendants, answers the complaint of John Doe as follows:

Each defendant must answer the allegations of a complaint; in the instance of multiple defendants, several may elect to file a joint answer, even if represented by different attorneys. See Western Lumber Co. v Phillips (1892) 94 C 54, 29 P 328. However, unless the responses will be identical, each defendant should answer separately. In making separate answers, no defendant is bound by the admissions of another defendant's answer. See Miller v Keegan (1949) 92 CA2d 846, 852, 207 P2d 1073. A defendant need not answer allegations that on their face relate solely to another defendant. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc'y v Dickinson (1914) 167 C 616, 619, 140 P 265. Care must be taken to frame a complete answer because a defendant cannot rely on defenses raised in the answer of a codefendant but ignored in one's own answer. Kirk v Santa Barbara Ice Co. (1910) 157 C 591, 594, 108 P 509. However, portions of another party's answer might be incorporated by reference if attached. See §25.16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.11 2. Body of Answer

The answer must contain (a) general or specific denials of the material allegations of the complaint that the defendant wishes to controvert and (b) a statement of any new matter constituting a defense. CCP §431.20(b). On effect of failure to deny a material allegation, see §25.5.

The answer may not demand affirmative relief (CCP §431.30(c)), and a defendant who seeks such relief should file a cross-complaint as well as an answer. See chap 26 (cross-complaints). On using a verified general written denial rather than an answer when the complaint demands less than $1000, see §25.23.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/25 Answers/§25.12 a. Denials

§25.12 a. Denials

Specific denials should be set out in separate, numbered paragraphs. See §§25.23-25.29. A paragraph stating a general denial (see §25.23) should also be numbered if additional paragraphs stating defenses or other matter will follow.

For discussion of when to use general denials and when to use specific denials, see §§25.23-25.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.13 b. Defenses

Any new matter constituting a defense (see §§25.30-25.64) must be stated in the answer. CCP §431.30(b)(2). Each defense must be separately pleaded and numbered. CCP §431.30(g); Cal Rules of Ct 2.112.

Defenses and objections to a complaint as a whole should follow the general denial or specific denials. If defenses apply to a particular cause of action, they should be so headed, e.g., "FIRST AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE TO SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION." See CCP §431.30(g). Otherwise, a defense may be headed, e.g., "FOURTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE TO ENTIRE COMPLAINT: ANOTHER ACTION PENDING."

§25.14 c. Prayer

No statute or rule requires that an answer contain a prayer or demand for relief. However, many attorneys customarily conclude the answer with a prayer. For example:

WHEREFORE, defendant _ _[name]_ _ prays that plaintiff _ _[name]_ _ take nothing by this action and that defendant be awarded costs and all other just relief.

A request for attorney fees, when permitted to a prevailing defendant, may also be made in the prayer to bring the matter to the court's attention; no separate cross-complaint is generally required. See, e.g. CC §1717, providing that, when a contract authorizes attorney fees to one party, any contracting party prevailing in an action on that contract is entitled to recover reasonable attorney fees; Scott Co. v Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1103, 86 CR2d 614 (§1717 requires that any contractual provision for attorney fees to "prevailing party" must be applied mutually, even if contract specifies that only one party may recover fees). See also T.E.D. Bearing Co. v Walter E. Heller & Co. (1974) 38 CA3d 59, 112 CR 910 (attorney's fees permitted by statute are taxed as costs; no separate cross-complaint required). In PLCM Group, Inc. v Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 1088, 95 CR2d 198, the California Supreme Court ruled that §1717 gives the trial court broad discretion to award attorney fees to a prevailing party, even when that party is represented by in-house counsel.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.15 d. Date; Subscription

It is not essential to date the answer, although it is considered a good office practice for the signature on the answer to be dated. If the answer is verified, the verification will carry a date. The court clerk will stamp a date on an answer to show when it was filed, and the attached proof of service form will show the date of service. See §25.65 on time to file.

The answer must be signed by the attorney in the attorney's individual name or by the party, if the party is unrepresented. CCP §128.7(a). By presenting the answer to the court, the attorney is certifying to the best of his or her knowledge, after reasonable inquiry, that the denials of factual contentions are warranted on the evidence or are reasonably based on a lack of information or belief. CCP §128.7(b). See §1.6 for discussion of sanctions.

NOTE: Code of Civil Procedure §128.7 is based on Fed R Civ P 11 and replaces the part of CCP §446 that required each pleading to be subscribed by the party or the party's attorney. Section 128.7 applies to complaints or petitions filed after December 31, 1994. See CCP 128.7(i). For discussion of CCP §128.7, see §1.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.16 3. Incorporation by Reference

Incorporation by reference is useful for (1) minimizing repetitions in the answer when responses to various causes of action are the same and (2) including documents in the body of the answer without the need for extensive quotations. Lawyers customarily answer allegations appearing later in a complaint by incorporating by reference earlier responses, denials, or defenses directed to other causes of action. For example:

Answering paragraph 14 of plaintiff's complaint, defendant incorporates by this reference each answer, admission, and denial contained in paragraphs 1, 3, 5, and 7 of this answer, as if repeated here fully.

When a defense is based on a particular document (e.g., a letter or written contract), the attorney should attach the document to the answer and specifically incorporate it by reference in the same manner as documents are incorporated by reference in a complaint. Incorporating a document by reference also allows the court and the other parties to view the full text of a document in dispute. On complaints, see chap 15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.17 4. Verification

When a complaint is verified, the answer must also be verified. CCP §446. On effect of failure to verify when required, see §25.9.

An individual defendant cannot refuse to verify an answer, even on the grounds of self-incrimination, but the information contained in the verified answer cannot be used in any criminal prosecution later. The rationale is that verification of an answer is mandated by statute; thus a defendant who has verified an answer has not chosen to waive the privilege against self-incrimination and may still claim the privilege in a criminal trial. Alvarez v Sanchez (1984) 158 CA3d 709, 715, 204 CR 864.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.18 a. Corporate Defendant

A corporate defendant has no comparable privilege against self-incrimination and is obliged to appoint an agent to make the required verification of its answer. DeCamp v First Kensington Corp. (1978) 83 CA3d 268, 147 CR 869. The selection of the agent for a corporate verification is important in certain circumstances because the verification of an agent who is not a party may be a waiver of the agent's personal privilege against self-incrimination; thus a person may decline to serve as agent and a corporation may be obliged to appoint another person as agent, one who can, without fear of self-incrimination, make the necessary verification.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.19 b. Public Entity

A special rule applies to public entities, which need not verify their answers to verified complaints; however, the unverified complaint of a public entity or a public officer acting in an official capacity requires a verified answer unless the answering defendant is also a public entity or officer or unless an admission of truth in the complaint might subject the defendant to criminal prosecution. CCP §446. For further discussion, see §25.64.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.20 c. Form

A verification may be either (1) positive or (2) on information and belief. The form of verification depends on the degree of personal knowledge the verifier has of the matters set forth in the answer. The verification may be placed below the signature on the same page, or on a separate page. See form of answer at §25.83.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.21 d. Who Verifies

An answer may be verified by the party or the attorney. CCP §446. However, verification by attorneys is discouraged. See DeCamp v First Kensington Corp. (1978) 83 CA3d 268, 147 CR 869. The person who verifies a pleading in effect becomes a witness to every fact verified, and may later be asked to testify at a deposition or trial. Under certain circumstances verification of an answer by counsel could require the attorney's withdrawal from the case. See chap 4 (changes in representation during suit).

PRACTICE TIP: The attorney should review an answer to be verified by the client to ensure that there is no basis for the plaintiff claiming a waiver of the attorney-client privilege through disclosure of any confidential communications. See Evid C §912. Verifications made "on information and belief" have been held not to waive the defendant's attorney-client privilege. Alpha Beta Co. v Superior Court (1984) 157 CA3d 818, 831, 203 CR 752 (allegations responded to also were vague, conclusional, and lacked "factual depth"). Thus, the attorney should be particularly cautious if the client's verification is positive in form, rather than made on information and belief.

The Judicial Council has developed and approved forms for answers in California trial courts in any action based on personal injury, property damage, wrongful death, unlawful detainer, breach of contract, or fraud. CCP §425.12; Cal Rules of Ct 1.45.

While use of the approved forms is optional, it is often advantageous in a simple case because they contain denials stated in effective language and assert the most common defenses, supplying space for additional defenses and objections. The forms also provide an opportunity for specification of particular denials or defenses by way of supplement. See, e.g., reproduction of Answer—Contract (Judicial Council Form PLD-C-010) in §25.92.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should be cautious about using official forms, particularly in complicated cases. Although the forms have been judicially approved, and are easy and economical to use, the attorney must make sure that a form provides an opportunity for accurate and complete response to every allegation in the complaint. Counsel should also make sure that the form permits all appropriate defenses to be asserted. Otherwise, the client is best served by drafting a tailored answer.

IV. DENIALS

§25.23 A. General Denial

A general denial is a brief statement that denies the truth of all allegations in a complaint, e.g.:

A general denial is sufficient to put in issue all the material allegations of an unverified complaint. CCP §431.30(d). See Advantec Group, Inc. v Edwin's Plumbing Co. (2007) 153 CA4th 621, 626, 63 CR3d 195 (general denial controverted issue of contractor's license).

A Judicial Council general denial form is available for filing in lieu of an answer. A brief statement of any new matter constituting a defense may be included on or attached to the form. CCP §431.40(a), (c). See General Form Denial (Judicial Council Form PLD-050) (§25.90) and California Judicial Council Forms Manual, Form No. 982(a)(13) (Cal CEB 1981).

Not Permitted If Complaint Verified. If the complaint is verified, a defendant's general denial may be disregarded and all material allegations in the complaint taken as true. CCP §431.20(a). Pico v Colimas (1867) 32 C 578, 580. Even if the answer is verified, a general denial does not put in issue the facts alleged in a verified complaint. Dewey v Bowman (1857) 8 C 145, overruled on other grounds by Gagliardo v Hoberlon (1861) 18 C 394.

Matters Not Exceeding $1000. When the amount in dispute under a complaint is less than $1000, exclusive of interest, use of the official general denial form (see §25.90) is mandatory, whether the complaint is verified or not. See Cal Rules of Ct Appendix A, Form 982(a)(13). See CCP §431.40(a), which by its language ("[a]ny provision of law to the contrary notwithstanding") supersedes CCP §431.30(d), which calls for specific denials to verified complaints).

Economic Litigation Programs. Instead of filing a formal answer or demurrer in civil matters subject to CCP §§90-100 (governing economic litigation in limited civil cases (see chap 6)), a general denial is sufficient and an answer need not deny specific allegations of a complaint even if verified. CCP §§92, 431.30(d), 431.40. However, in a collection case subject to economic litigation (i.e., a claim assigned to a third party for collection of funds), a general denial is insufficient if the complaint is verified.

The official general denial form is widely used because defendants frequently desire not to tie themselves to admissions or denials of particular facts alleged in the complaint, particularly before discovery has taken place. However, generally there is some matter within a complaint that is unquestionably true and as to which a defendant may find tactical advantage in admitting. The defendant who wishes to limit a general denial to particular paragraphs may use language, e.g.:

Defendant denies each and every allegation of paragraphs 1, 3, 5, and 7 of the complaint.

Some defense attorneys feel that specific denials carry greater psychological weight if later heard or seen by the plaintiff or the trier of fact.

Courts appreciate the confinement of disputes to those matters that clearly divide parties, removing from the litigation matters that are unquestionably true. For this reason, the general denial has occasionally been condemned. See, e.g., Burke v Superior Court (1969) 71 C2d 276, 282, 78 CR 481; Edger v Foster (1941) 48 CA2d 580, 120 P2d 134.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Specific Denials

§25.24 1. Must Use to Answer Verified Complaint

Any form of denial that is sufficient to contest particular allegations in a verified complaint is termed a specific denial. Although not defined in CCP §431.30, that section provides that denials may refer to specific paragraphs of a complaint or may couple express admission of particular allegations with a general denial of all other allegations. Thus, under CCP §431.30(d) and (f), allegations in a verified complaint may be put in issue by a denial that refers to specific lines or paragraphs, e.g.:

1. Defendant denies each and every allegation of paragraphs 3, 4, 7, 8, and 9 of the complaint.

However, many attorneys using specific denials consider it better form to answer the complaint paragraph-by-paragraph, denying each paragraph they wish to controvert. For example:

1. Defendant denies each and every allegation of paragraph 3 of the complaint.

2. Defendant denies each and every allegation of paragraph 4 of the complaint.

A specific denial should respond to each and every paragraph of the complaint. A defendant who wishes for tactical reasons to ensure that a particular allegation in the complaint will be taken as true while denying other allegations in the same paragraph may specifically admit it and deny the other matter, e.g.:

2. Defendant admits that he is a resident of Los Angeles, California, but denies each and every other allegation of paragraph 2 of the complaint.

PRACTICE TIP: An effective specific denial is one that is clear in its scope and intent. In an admission of a particular portion of an allegation and a denial of the remainder, many defense attorneys avoid repetition of facts and instead plead with reference to paragraph or line numbers, carefully limiting their admissions, and stating for each paragraph whether it, or parts of it, are admitted or denied.

Historically, a specific denial required an exact restatement and denial of every phrase in each sentence of a particular allegation to be adequate. For example, a specific denial of an allegation that a defendant had notice of the plaintiff's prior mortgage, might read:

Defendant denies that at the time he purchased the property, or at any time before the purchase, he had actual or constructive notice, or any notice whatever, of the existence of plaintiff's mortgage on the property.

See, e.g., Racouillat v Rene (1867) 32 C 450, 453. Over time, greater flexibility has been approved in order to avoid the disadvantages of a verbatim restatement of particular allegations. For discussion of historical changes in pleading rules, see 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§1061, 1063 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.25 2. Denial by Affirmative Statement

The denial of an allegation in a complaint need not be negative in form: An affirmative statement that directly contradicts an allegation in the complaint, or is inconsistent with it, is equivalent to a specific denial. Burris v People's Ditch Co. (1894) 104 C 248, 253, 37 P 922, 923; Cahill Bros. v Clementina Co. (1962) 208 CA2d 367, 385, 25 CR 301.

For example, in a complaint in which the plaintiff alleged he owned a property interest, an affirmative allegation by the defendant that he owned the same property interest is sufficient to controvert and deny the plaintiff's allegation. See Elliott v Bertsch (1943) 59 CA2d 543, 139 P2d 332. Similarly, an assertion that the defendant was sober sufficiently contradicts an allegation in a complaint that he or she was intoxicated.

PRACTICE TIP: Although liberal pleading rules no longer hold affirmative statements to be ineffectual, it is more difficult and more time consuming to draft such an answer. Most defense attorneys consider it better practice to specifically deny paragraphs of a complaint, admitting only those allegations that are true, and not relying on affirmative statements that only by implication may show certain allegations to be at issue. On the danger of drafting negatives pregnant or conjunctive denials, see §§25.24-25.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Avoiding Ambiguous Denials

§25.26 a. Negative Pregnant

A precise step-by-step denial of an allegation frequently results in a "negative pregnant," i.e., a denial pregnant with an implied admission and insufficient to raise an issue. For example, if a plaintiff alleges damages of $1000 and the defendant "denies that the plaintiff was damaged in the amount of $1000," the denial contains the possibility that the plaintiff was damaged in some other amount. See, e.g., Armer v Dorton (1942) 50 CA2d 413, 123 P2d 94. See also United Air Servs. v Sampson (1938) 30 CA2d 135, 146, 86 P2d 366.

Negatives pregnant are not limited to dollar amounts. For example, denying that the "plaintiff's vehicle struck defendant at the corner of Main and Elm on October 1" may be an admission that a tort occurred but in some other manner, at some other place, or on some other date. See generally Janeway & Carpender v Long Beach Paper & Paint Co. (1922) 190 C 150, 211 P 6.

PRACTICE TIP: A negative pregnant may be avoided by following a specific denial with a more general denial. For example, a denial may state that "plaintiff was not damaged in the amount of $1000 or in any amount whatsoever." The most effective way to avoid negatives pregnant, however, is to avoid factual denials altogether. Under modern pleading rules, it is sufficient to deny or admit the allegations of the complaint paragraph by paragraph or even by references to line numbers. See Practice Tip in §25.24. A separate denial or other response applicable, e.g., to each paragraph, will also preclude a court from declaring the answer to be a general denial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.27 b. Conjunctive Denial

A conjunctive denial is a form of negative pregnant that occurs when several matters alleged in the complaint are denied in the answer conjunctively (i.e., using the conjunctive "and") instead of separately (i.e., using the disjunctive "or"). The defect usually occurs when a plaintiff has strung together several allegations connected by the word "and" and the defendant has denied these allegations verbatim.

For example, "Defendant denies that plaintiff is now and at all times herein mentioned was the owner of certain real property" may imply that the plaintiff was the owner, but is not presently the owner, or vice versa. See California Trust Co. v Gustafson (1940) 15 C2d 268, 101 P2d 74; Janeway & Carpender v Long Beach Paper & Paint Co. (1922) 190 C 150, 211 P 6.

PRACTICE TIP: It is easy to remedy the defect by using "or" in place of "and"; thus, if a plaintiff alleges that a fact "is and was" true, the defendant might deny that the fact "is or was" true. In the above example, the defect would be corrected if the denial were to read "is now, or at the times mentioned was" the owner. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1071 (5th ed 2008).

When both allegations connected by "and" are synonymous, a conjunctive denial has been held not to create a negative pregnant. Jones v Eddy (1891) 90 C 147, 27 P 190. See also Southside Spiritualist Church v National Fed'n of Spiritual & Psychic Science Church (1931) 119 CA 11, 13, 5 P2d 657. However, rather than to guess whether two propositions are synonymous, a safer practice is to separate denials by "or."

C. Denials on Information and Belief or Lack of Information or Belief

§25.28 1. When to Use

An allegation in a complaint may be denied "upon information and belief, or for lack of sufficient information or belief." CCP §431.30(f). However, such denials are limited to situations in which the defendant is unable to admit or deny an allegation positively. Dobbins v Hardister (1966) 242 CA2d 787, 51 CR 866.

If the defendant has actual knowledge, or can be reasonably presumed to have knowledge, the denial on information and belief may be stricken or disregarded as an evasion and sham. See Boscus v Bohlig (1916) 173 C 687, 162 P 100 (denial that mechanic performed work on defendant's building at defendant's request); Oliver v Swiss Club Tell (1963) 222 CA2d 528, 35 CR 324 (denial on information and belief of allegation that defendant was an unincorporated association). For example, a defendant is presumed to have knowledge of, and must answer positively, an allegation that he or she entered into a contract with the plaintiff, who performed obligations under it; a denial for lack of information or belief would appear evasive. See Zany v Rawhide Gold Mining Co. (1911) 15 CA 373, 114 P 1026. For further illustrations, see 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1066 (5th ed 2008).

Sometimes, however, a defendant may not know something that he or she might ordinarily be presumed to know. A denial can properly be made on information and belief in such circumstances, but the defendant should allege the circumstances that explain why he or she lacks positive knowledge. See, e.g., Warring v Couch (1913) 165 C 383, 132 P 587 (owner denied personal knowledge of depth of oil wells drilled on his property, alleging he heard reports of it from third persons).

Positive denials (rather than on information and belief) are required when the plaintiff alleges facts that are a matter of public record because the defendant has the means to learn the truth of the allegation. See, e.g., Mulcahy v Buckley (1893) 100 C 484, 35 P 144 (allegation that plaintiff recorded mechanic's lien claim in same county suit was brought); Smith v Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1933) 130 CA 45, 57, 19 P2d 1018 (allegation that probate court entered decree settling account of guardian and fixing his liability); Curtin v Salomon (1926) 80 CA 470, 251 P 237 (allegation that plaintiff, doing business under fictitious name, complied with statute governing such businesses).

PRACTICE TIP: It common for a defendant to use a positive denial to allegations of a complaint. Defense counsel should be mindful that the plaintiff has the right during discovery to require a defendant to state facts on which a denial is based, and that a defendant who has no basis for a positive denial may be impeached at trial. The defense attorney should review the answer carefully to ensure that positive denials are based on personal knowledge and, when appropriate, that other denials are made on information and belief or on lack of information or belief.

§25.29 2. Sample Language

Information and belief. When basing a denial on information and belief, the denial must specifically plead the defendant's "information," as well as the defendant's "belief." Omitting one or the other is a technical defect inconsistent with the statute and operates as an admission of the allegation. See, e.g., Aronson & Co. v Pearson (1926) 199 C 295, 249 P 191. A denial on information and belief may be stated:

Defendant, on information and belief, denies each and every allegation of paragraph 6 of the complaint.

Use of the more traditional "according to information and belief" is also acceptable because that language was used in former CCP §437, on which CCP §431.30(f) is based. See, e.g., Roussin v Stewart (1867) 33 C 208. However, despite its common usage by attorneys, the statement "defendant is informed and believes and therefore denies" has been held meaningless and does not raise an issue. See Poe v Francis (1933) 132 CA 330, 22 P2d 801. For technical language requirements, see Note below.

Lack of information or belief. A defendant who has no information or belief about facts alleged in the complaint, but does not wish to admit the allegations, is permitted to deny "for lack of information or belief." A denial for lack of information or belief may be stated:

Defendant lacks information or belief to answer the allegations of paragraph 6 of the complaint, and basing his denial on that ground, denies each and every allegation in it.

See Jensen v Dorr (1911) 159 C 742, 116 P 553. Defendant also may deny some but not all of the allegations within a paragraph for lack of information or belief by specifying, in the above example, "the allegations of paragraph 6, lines 14-21."

The pleader should not stop with the allegation that the defendant does not have information or belief sufficient to enable him or her to answer, but must go further and deny the allegations, i.e., by adding the phrase, "and basing denial on that ground, denies...." See Ziegler v Ohio Farmers Ins. Co. (1937) 23 CA2d 138, 72 P2d 557.

NOTE: A few decisions based on technical grounds have held insufficient a denial limited to saying that "defendant has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief." See, e.g., Davidson Inv. Co. v Dabney (1930) 103 CA 392, 284 P 673. More often, however, such defenses are deemed as waived if not objected to in the trial court. See Cockerell v Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1954) 42 C2d 284, 267 P2d 16.

V. DEFENSES

§25.30 A. Description and Use

A defense introduces new matter not put in issue by simple denial of the allegations of a complaint. Any new matter constituting a defense must be pleaded in the answer. CCP §431.30(b). Defenses, commonly called affirmative defenses, differ from denials in that denials are statements that some essential allegation in the complaint is untrue, whereas affirmative defenses claim that, despite the truth of the allegations, the plaintiff is not entitled to relief. See Goddard v Fulton (1863) 21 C 430; Cahill Bros. v Clementina Co. (1962) 208 CA2d 367, 25 CR 301.

Affirmative defenses have also been said to be matters on which the defendant has the burden of proof at trial, while the plaintiff has the burden of proving matters that the answer simply denies. See Piercy v Sabin (1858) 10 C 22. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1081 (5th ed 2008).

Answer to Cross-Complaint. Generally, statutory rules for answering complaints apply equally to cross-complaints, but one distinction is relevant here. A third party defendant answering a cross-complaint is permitted to raise any defense that the third party plaintiff could have asserted against the original plaintiff, whether or not the third party plaintiff did so. CCP §428.70. See Administrative Mgmt. Servs. v Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1982) 129 CA3d 484, 181 CR 141. See generally 5 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §§1081-1083.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.31 1. Effect of Pleading Defense; No Reply by Plaintiff

Affirmative defenses pleaded in the answer are automatically deemed denied by the plaintiff and are at issue at trial. CCP §431.20(b). The plaintiff is not permitted to file a reply controverting new matter pleaded in an answer. CCP §§422.10-422.20.

Nonetheless, at the time of trial, the plaintiff will be free to introduce evidence opposing the defenses pleaded in the answer, despite lack of any prior pleading. See Martin v Sugarman (1933) 218 C 17, 21 P2d 428; Aerojet Gen. Corp. v Superior Court (1986) 177 CA3d 950, 953, 223 CR 249.

PRACTICE TIP: Because no reply pleading advises a defendant whether the plaintiff will controvert the affirmative defenses, and by what means, the defendant should propound discovery to address this point, for example, through contention interrogatories to the plaintiff. See generally California Civil Discovery Practice, chaps 1-2 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006). Thus, if the answer pleads as a defense a statute of limitations, the defendant should pose interrogatories to solicit the facts on which the plaintiff contends that this defense is inapplicable, identifying the witnesses and documents relevant to the plaintiff's position.

An exception exists in proceedings involving administrative mandamus or prohibition, in which instance plaintiff the may reply to new matters raised in the defendant's answer. In circumstances in which the plaintiff has the privilege of reply, he or she is expected to plead all grounds for avoiding defenses raised by defendants. See 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Extraordinary Writs §198 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.32 2. Effect of Not Pleading Defense: Waiver

Unless raised in an answer when appropriate, defenses are waived (CCP §430.80) and evidence with respect to any defense not pleaded will be inadmissible at trial. California Academy of Sciences v County of Fresno (1987) 192 CA3d 1436, 238 CR 154; Carranza v Noroian (1966) 240 CA2d 481, 49 CR 629. Therefore, counsel should ensure that each objection allowed under CCP §430.10 has been considered and specially pleaded in the answer, so as not to have been waived. On whether to raise defect in demurrer or answer, see §§25.36-25.37.

The failure of one defendant to assert a defense does not prohibit another defendant from claiming that defense; it will, however, bar the first defendant from subsequently raising the defense unless specially authorized by order of court.

B. Pleading Inconsistent Defenses

§25.33 1. Right to Plead

Although no California statute expressly permits a defendant to plead inconsistent defenses in the answer, California courts have long recognized the right to do so (see, e.g., Banta v Siller (1898) 121 C 414, 53 P 935) as long as the defenses are kept separate from one another (see §25.34).

For example, a defendant who is sued for defamation may both deny making the defamatory statement and raise the affirmative defense that the statement is true. See Edger v Foster (1941) 48 CA2d 580, 120 P2d 134 (denial in answer of material allegations in complaint and affirmative defense in which same allegations were alleged to be true permissible in same manner as pleading inconsistent defenses). See also Newark Trust Co. v Kriebel (1920) 49 CA 614, 623, 193 P 962. For further illustrations, see 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1086 (5th ed 2008).

NOTE: Inconsistent defenses cannot be removed by the plaintiff's motion to strike, and no binding admission results from pleading an inconsistency. Indeed, the defendant can present a defense based on one theory of facts in the answer and simultaneously file a separate cross-claim against third persons on an inconsistent separate theory. This circumstance occurred in Shepard & Morgan v Lee & Daniel, Inc. (1982) 31 C3d 256, 182 CR 351, in which the defendant denied the existence of hazardous conditions in its answer and cross-complained for indemnity against third persons, asserting a hazardous condition existed for which the third persons were appropriately responsible.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.34 2. Separate Statements Required

In the answer, defendants may deny allegations of the complaint, plead affirmative defenses, or, as is usually the case, do both. See, e.g., Hoffman v Southern Pac. Co. (1927) 84 CA 337, 258 P 397 (denial of negligence and defense of contributory negligence). See sample form of answer in §25.83.

However, each defense must be separately stated and must refer to the causes of action that it is intended to answer; each defense should be separately numbered. CCP §431.30(g); Cal Rules of Ct 2.112.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.35 3. Truthful Pleading Limitation

The pleading of defenses, and particularly of inconsistent defenses, is restricted by the fundamental judicial policy requiring truthfulness in the pleadings of litigants. See 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §397 (5th ed 2008). A defendant may not deliberately violate this policy by affirmatively asserting in an answer both the truth and untruth of a fact within the defendant's knowledge.

WARNING: Counsel should be particularly cautious in drafting verified answers. Not only may untruthful pleading amount to a criminal charge of perjury when the answer is verified (see 4 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §397), but in the civil context the court may also treat the answer as failing to state a defense, and a general demurrer may thus be sustained. See, e.g., County of Butte v Waters (1942) 56 CA2d 185, 132 P2d 517.

A corollary to this rule, and to the rule that requires defenses to be separately stated (see §25.34), is that a court may treat as evasion or sham an answer that pleads inconsistent matter within a single defense. See Poe v Francis (1933) 132 CA 330, 22 P2d 801.

For the defendant's protection, counsel must separately state defenses, which will help prevent the sustaining of a special demurrer for failure to make a separate statement. In drafting the pleadings, it is permissible to deny the existence of a fact in an answer, putting the plaintiff to the burden of proof, while asserting an inconsistent fact known to the defendant in an affirmative defense. This is not the same as affirmatively pleading both the existence and absence of a particular fact or theory. For example, the defendant can deny that property was converted, while affirmatively claiming property was taken under claim and delivery proceedings. But careful attention must be given to safeguard the integrity of the client and the judicial process when drafting inconsistent pleadings.

C. Defenses That Can Be Raised by Demurrer

§25.36 1. Current Rule Allows Answer to Raise

Code of Civil Procedure §430.30 provides that, when a defect or ground for objection (often called a ground for demurrer) appears on the face of a complaint, cross-complaint, answer, or from any matter that the court must take judicial notice of, the pleading may be objected to by demurrer rather than an answer. When such a defect does not appear on the face of the pleading, it may be raised by answer. CCP §430.30(b).

Some older court opinions seem to suggest that at least technical defenses appearing on the face of a complaint must be raised by demurrer and not by answer. See, e.g., Gillam v Sigman (1866) 29 C 637 (misjoinder of parties). Later decisions take the position that even dilatory defenses may be raised either by answer or demurrer whether or not they appear on the face of the complaint. See, e.g., Danziger v Peebler (1948) 88 CA2d 307, 198 P2d 719 (lack of capacity to sue); Martin v Pacific Southwest Royalties, Inc. (1940) 41 CA2d 161, 106 P2d 443 (another action pending).

NOTE: The modern trend permitting defendants to use answers to raise objections, even to matters appearing on the face of the complaint, tends to promote judicial economy, lowering the necessity for hearings on demurrers in already overcrowded judicial dockets.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.37 2. Effect of Failure to Raise in Answer or Demurrer

Failure to object to a defective complaint by demurrer or answer waives the defect, unless it is an objection (1) to a lack of subject matter jurisdiction in the court, or (2) that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. CCP §430.80.

PRACTICE TIP: With the filing of an answer, a case is "at issue," with each side having presented each of the legal claims and defenses it will raise during the litigation. The statement of issues in the pleadings will control the breadth of discovery and the questions to be tried. It is for these important reasons that the attorney drafting an answer must be complete in specifying defenses, or the waiver doctrine may be applied for failure to set out all of the client's objections to the complaint. To correct or plead additional denials or defenses overlooked in the original answer, see §§25.70-25.78 (amendment of answer).

D. Pleading Requirements

§25.38 1. Fact Pleading Required

The same rules for pleading "ultimate facts" rather than "legal conclusions" that apply to allegations in a complaint (on complaints, see chap 15) apply to pleading defenses in an answer. When particularity in pleading is necessary in a complaint, it is equally necessary to the statement of an affirmative defense on the same issue. Bradbury v Higginson (1914) 167 C 553, 557, 140 P 254; Greiss v State Inv. & Ins. Co. (1893) 98 C 241, 33 P 195.

A defendant who wishes to assert a particular defense must plead the essential facts that a defense in the answer. See CCP §431.30(b). Like common law affirmative defenses, the statutory objections contained in CCP §430.10 (e.g., another action is pending; misjoinder of parties), like common law affirmative defenses, represent "new matter" to be specifically pleaded in an answer. Except for the objection of a lack of subject matter jurisdiction in the court, which is never waived, an answer or objection to a complaint is waived unless specifically pleaded. CCP §430.80. See §25.32.

When framing defenses, it is not sufficient to make a statement in affirmative form for it to constitute a defense. A positive statement that merely contradicts or is inconsistent with an essential allegation of the complaint is only a denial presented in argumentative form. Rancho Santa Margarita v Vail (1938) 11 C2d 501, 543, 81 P2d 533; Frisch v Caler (1862) 21 C 71. New facts are needed to establish each of the elements of a defense. See examples of particular defenses in §§25.42-25.64.

§25.39 a. Pleading Defenses on Official Forms

The Judicial Council has issued various Official Form Answers. See, e.g., Official Form Answer for Unlawful Detainer Actions (setting forth in detail defenses involving landlord's breach of rental agreement, breach of warranty to provide habitable premises, and retaliatory eviction). Particularly in tort and contract actions, the attorney should use care to add the particularized ultimate facts necessary to make the Official Form defenses complete.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/25 Answers/§25.40 b. Format

§25.40 b. Format

Affirmative defenses are stated separately after general or specific denials or admissions of the allegations of the complaint.

PRACTICE TIP: When a critical portion of a defendant's case rests on the absence of an element of the plaintiff's pleading and proof of a cause of action, it is usually good practice both to plead this circumstance as an additional defense as well as to deny allegations in the body of an answer. This ensures that the matter is in issue and avoids a dispute over whether the circumstance was "new matter" to be raised on defense or waived.

§25.41 2. When to Use; Identification of Defenses

Affirmative defenses should be pleaded whenever, in good faith and with the exercise of due care, counsel can identify facts on which to base them. Substantive law determines the issues on which the defendant has the burden of proof and thus the specific defenses available in response to an individual cause of action.

PRACTICE TIP: Two devices are commonly used by experienced counsel as checklists to identify various affirmative defenses. These can then be examined more closely against the facts available to determine the appropriateness of their pleading in a given answer. First, 4-5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading (5th ed 2008) prescribes the elements of various causes of action and defenses to them. Second, Judicial Council of California Civil Jury Instructions (CACI) or BAJI (Book of Approved Jury Instructions) state in each instruction the approved requirements for various causes of action and defenses. These jury instructions also indicate which party will have the burden of proof on issues at trial. Neither of these sources are updated as rapidly as the case law changes, however. For emerging and evolving defenses, the attorney should consult the latest cases in the particular area of substantive law that is the subject of the answer.

The most frequently asserted affirmative defenses in actions for breach of contract and torts cases appear below. Some of these and other common defenses are briefly discussed in §§25.42-25.64; it is beyond the scope of this chapter to address every possible defense. For consideration of additional defenses, see 5 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §§1089-1128.

E. Particular Defenses

1. Statute of Limitations

§25.42 a. Pleading Requirements

A statute of limitations defense must be specifically pleaded; a denial is insufficient to raise the defense and it is waived. See Minton v Cavaney (1961) 56 C2d 576, 15 CR 641; Warden v Bailey (1933) 133 CA 383, 24 P2d 192. It may be raised by general demurrer if the defect appears on the face of the complaint, or by answer whether or not the defect appears on the face of the complaint. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v Sierra Valley Ry. (1910) 158 C 690, 698, 112 P 274.

Proper pleading of the defense includes a reference to the specific section (and subsection, if there is one) in the Code of Civil Procedure that specifies the applicable limitations period. It is not necessary to allege the specific facts establishing time bar. CCP §458. The defense is appropriately pleaded in the following language, e.g.:

Plaintiff's Third Cause of Action, for breach of a construction contract, is barred by statute of limitations set forth in CCP §337(1).

Pleading the wrong code section or failing to specify an applicable subsection are defects that are waived unless the plaintiff files a demurrer to the answer or formally objects at time of trial. See Tofte v Tofte (1936) 12 CA2d 111, 54 P2d 1137. The court has discretion to deny a request to amend an answer in order to plead the statute of limitations for the first time, but may not deny a request to amend to correct a nonprejudicial defect in the form of pleading (e.g., to specify the subsection of a statute that both parties knew was being relied on). Hopkins v Hopkins (1953) 116 CA2d 174, 253 P2d 723.

PRACTICE TIP: Because proof of prejudice by the defendant is a basis for denying leave to amend an answer, the attorney should be careful in checking the exact subsection listed for this affirmative defense. Judges have treated the mistaken designation of an improper code section as prejudicial to the plaintiff and a waiver of the defense. If there is any question or doubt, a defendant should specify each separate statute of limitations that may reasonably apply to bar a cause of action.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.43 b. As Defense to Cross-Complaint

In responding to a cross-complaint, a third party defendant may raise the affirmative defense of statute of limitations to the underlying principal complaint in the suit and is not confined to the statute of limitations applicable to the cross-complaint itself. Thus, in an action by the defendant for indemnity against a third party, the third party may assert that the original defendant has no liability, because the plaintiff's claim is barred by the statute of limitations. Administrative Mgmt. Servs. v Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1982) 129 CA3d 484, 181 CR 141. However, the original defendant has waived the defense by failing to assert it the against plaintiff. See 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§1117-1121 (5th ed 2008).

NOTE: Historically, the statute of limitations is the one exception to fact pleading that has arisen. Code of Civil Procedure §458 permits a defendant to generally state that a cause of action is barred by a particular statute, without providing ultimate facts demonstrating the bar. For further discussion of the statute of limitations defense, see 5 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §§1107-1121.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.44 2. Plaintiff's Contributory Negligence or Comparative Negligence

Since Li v Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C3d 804, 119 CR 858, some negligence, which in part caused a plaintiff's injury, no longer wholly bars the plaintiff's recovery in a tort action. The doctrine of "comparative negligence," assessing the respective contributions of the plaintiff's and defendant's negligence in causing the plaintiff's injury, is now in effect in California. Negligence by a plaintiff will reduce, but no longer bar, recovery; the phrase "contributory negligence" today refers to the current doctrine and not the former bar. See Wittenbach v Ryan (1976) 63 CA3d 712, 134 CR 47.

A defendant must plead the defense of contributory negligence in the answer. The defense may be raised without pleading it in the answer if the plaintiff has pleaded contributory negligence in the complaint. See Gerfers v San Diego Transit Sys. (1954) 126 CA2d 733, 272 P2d 930. It is not required that the plaintiff anticipate the defense and, thus, "comparative negligence" must be specifically pleaded as a new matter in the answer. Kenny v Kennedy (1908) 9 CA 350, 99 P 384.

To plead "comparative negligence," it is not necessary to use the words "contributory negligence" or, by inference, the current phrase "comparative negligence." Hoffman v Southern Pac. Co. (1927) 84 CA 337, 258 P 397. Although it does not appear to have specifically been so held, an answer using the phrase "contributory negligence" is likely to be understood to refer to "comparative negligence."

Proper pleading of this defense requires a specification of the ultimate facts identifying how the plaintiff was negligent and asserting that the plaintiff's particular negligence caused his or her own injury. The plaintiff's act that was negligent should be pleaded, though it is not necessary to detail the precise manner in which that act was negligent. McMillan v Western Pac. R.R. (1960) 54 C2d 841, 9 CR 361. A general allegation that "the plaintiff is negligent" would usually be held insufficient. See Hoffman v Southern Pac. Co., supra. See generally Singer v Superior Court (1960) 54 C2d 318, 5 CR 697; 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1103 (5th ed 2008).

§25.45 3. Assumption of Risk

Historically, it has been appropriate to plead assumption of risk as a separate defense apart from the bar of contributory negligence, regardless of whether they spring from the same ultimate facts in the case. See Inouye v PG&E (1959) 53 C2d 361, 367, 1 CR 848. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1104 (5th ed 2008).

An express assumption of risk may be pleaded as a separate defense, as may the form of assumption of risk that may be implied from a plaintiff's voluntary participation in certain sports and recreational activities. Knight v Jewett (1992) 3 C4th 296, 11 CR2d 2 (individual who voluntarily engages in potentially dangerous activity agrees to assume risks inherent in activity; participant in active sport breaches duty of care to other participants only if he or she intentionally injures another player or engages in conduct so reckless that it is totally outside range of ordinary activity involved in sport); Yancey v Superior Court (1994) 28 CA4th 558, 33 CR2d 777 (limited duty of care owed coparticipant in sports does not apply to discus). For discussion, see California Tort Guide §1.44 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

To plead the defense of assumption of risk, the better practice is to plead the ultimate facts on which the defense will be proved and to specify at least some of the particular risks that the plaintiff purportedly assumed, rather than to allege the defense in general terms, e.g.:

Plaintiff _ _[name]_ _, on or about _ _[date]_ _, knowingly and voluntarily agreed by executing a writing in favor of defendant to relieve defendant from any and all liability for the conduct, events, and injuries alleged by plaintiff in the complaint. A true and correct copy of plaintiff's written agreement is marked Exhibit "A," is attached to this answer, and is incorporated by reference herein. All damages and injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff in the complaint were proximately caused by and are the proximate result of the risks so assumed. In particular, plaintiff's written agreement assumed the risk that he would injure himself as the proximate result of voluntarily ejecting himself from an airplane in mid-flight.

§25.46 4. Mistake, Fraud, Duress, and Undue Influence

The defenses of fraud, mistake, duress, and undue influence are affirmative defenses, occasionally appearing in a breach of contract action. These defenses must be pleaded specifically, in the same fashion as they would be alleged in a complaint to rescind a contract, by showing the specific facts permitting the defense. See generally 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§544-552 (5th ed 2008).

A general allegation in an answer that a contract or obligation was obtained "by fraud" is insufficient to raise the defense, as is a general denial of the plaintiff's allegations. See, e.g., California Trust Co. v Gustafson (1940) 15 C2d 268, 101 P2d 74; Metropolis Trust & Sav. Bank v Monnier (1915) 169 C 592, 147 P 265.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.47 5. Estoppel, Waiver, Laches, and Unclean Hands

In equitable actions, the affirmative defenses of waiver, estoppel, and laches may be raised but must be pleaded specifically as new matter in an answer and will not be held to have been raised by denial of the plaintiff's allegations. See California Academy of Sciences v County of Fresno (1987) 192 CA3d 1436, 238 CR 154.

A statement of specific and ultimate facts is necessary, and a general allegation using the words "estoppel" or "waiver" will not be sufficient. See Victor Oil Co. v Drum (1920) 184 C 226, 193 P 243 (laches); Wienke v Smith (1918) 179 C 220, 176 P 42 (waiver); Benson v Andrews (1958) 166 CA2d 44, 332 P2d 698 (estoppel). It has formerly been held (see Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. v Birkelund (1946) 29 C2d 352, 175 P2d 5) that, if the pertinent facts appear on the face of the complaint, the court on its own motion may deny relief to a plaintiff who is guilty of laches, regardless of the presence of this defense in the defendant's answer. It is extremely risky for a defendant to fail to raise this defense and merely rely on the court's perspicacity on this point.

The doctrine of unclean hands today appears both in legal and equitable actions as a defense; like the other defenses, it must be specifically pleaded and the pertinent ultimate facts demonstrating misconduct by the plaintiff must be shown. See Fibreboard Paper Prods. Corp. v East Bay Union of Machinists (1964) 227 CA2d 675, 39 CR 64. For further information on these defenses, see generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§1122-1126 (5th ed 2008).

Various contracts must be memorialized in writing under the common law statute of frauds embodied in CC §1624. A challenge that an oral agreement that falls within the statute of frauds was not memorialized, and therefore fails to state a cause of action, may be made by general demurrer or by a denial of plaintiff's allegation that a contract was made. See Carrier & Braddock, Inc. v S.W. Straus & Co. (1931) 213 C 508, 513, 2 P2d 811; Aero Bolt & Screw Co. v Iaia (1960) 180 CA2d 728, 742, 5 CR 53; Ira Garson Realty Co. v Brown (1960) 180 CA2d 615, 633, 4 CR 734; Hanley v Murphy (1924) 70 CA 157, 163, 232 P 767.

NOTE: Under CC §1624(b), a "qualified financial contract," as defined, is not invalid for failure to be memorialized in writing when there is sufficient evidence to indicate that a contract has been made or that the parties agreed to be bound.

It is appropriate to plead the statute of frauds as a separate defense, and it is helpful to the court when so pleaded as a basis for a motion at trial to strike evidence of an oral contract. See Jamison v Hyde (1903) 141 C 109, 74 P 695; Hanley v Murphy, supra.

It is important to remember that the statute of frauds is in part a doctrine of evidence. If one denies a contract but fails to object at trial to the plaintiff's evidence of an oral agreement, a defense under the statute of frauds will be held to have been waived. The defense requires not only pleading but also objection to the nonmemorialization of an oral agreement at time of trial. It is too late to raise the statute of frauds for the first time on appeal. Coleman v Satterfield (1950) 100 CA2d 81, 83, 223 P2d 61; Ellis v Klaff (1950) 96 CA2d 471, 474, 216 P2d 15, disapproved on other grounds in Sterling v Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 769, 55 CR3d 116.

§25.49 7. Purported Contract: Illegal or Otherwise Void

Like the statute of frauds, facts that invalidate a contract, e.g., illegality in its object or terms, fraud in the inducement of the contract, or incompetency of a contracting party, may be raised by a denial of the plaintiff's allegation of an agreement. However, as discussed in §§25.50-25.51 it is often advisable to plead by specific affirmative defense the ultimate facts and overall circumstances that the contract cannot be enforced.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.50 a. Contract Conditions Precedent or Subsequent

Because the plaintiff must plead and prove performance of a contract, failure of performance by reason of conditions precedent or subsequent need not be raised by affirmative defense; denial may be sufficient. Eucalyptus Growers Ass'n v Orange County Nursery & Land Co. (1917) 174 C 330, 334, 163 P 45. However, it is increasingly common for the failure of conditions to be pleaded as an affirmative defense, and some courts are coming to rely on the presence of such a pleading to alert them to this defense contention.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.51 b. Illegality of Contract

A contention that a contract is illegal may appropriately be pleaded as an affirmative defense, even though the subject can later be raised by the court on its own motion in the absence of a pleading from either party. See Santoro v Carbone (1972) 22 CA3d 721, 732, 99 CR 488, disapproved on other grounds in Tenzer v Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 C3d 18, 30, 216 CR 130.

For other examples of circumstances invalidating agreements, the facts of which may be pleaded as affirmative defenses, see 1 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Contracts §§45, 345, 365, 406 (10th ed 2005); Lever v Garoogian (1974) 41 CA3d 37, 39, 115 CR 856; Leo F. Piazza Paving Co. v Bebek & Brkich (1956) 141 CA2d 226, 232, 296 P2d 368. See also former UCC 3-307(1) (now see UCC 3-308) ("[u]nless specifically denied in the pleadings, each signature on an instrument is admitted").

§25.52 8. Payment Under Contract

In most jurisdictions, a defendant's payment under a contract is an affirmative defense required to be specifically pleaded in the answer. California cases have required that the plaintiff plead nonpayment under a contract as an element of the cause of action. If the plaintiff pleads nonpayment, the defendant's payment may be raised by the defendant's denial of the pertinent allegations in the answer. Bank of Shasta v Boyd (1893) 99 C 604, 34 P 337; Davanay v Eggenhoff (1872) 43 C 395. However, inconsistency in the cases makes it by far the better practice to plead payment as an affirmative defense. See Pastene v Pardini (1902) 135 C 431, 67 P 681.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.53 9. Mitigation of Damages (Wrongful Termination Actions)

In actions for wrongful employment termination, a frequent defense by the employer is an assertion that the former employee subsequently made earnings through new employment that should be applied in mitigation of damages, or that the former employee failed to seek new employment and mitigate the claim as obligated to do. In the former circumstance, when the plaintiff in fact earned income after termination, the defense of mitigation can be asserted without affirmative pleading, merely through denial of the plaintiff's allegations of damage. Erler v Five Points Motors, Inc. (1967) 249 CA2d 560, 562, 57 CR 516. The Erler court distinguished the situation in which the defendant wishes to claim that the plaintiff could have found other employment. This defense of mitigation must be pleaded specifically, or it is waived, e.g., "Plaintiff failed and refused to seek new employment following termination and thereby has failed to mitigate his (or her) alleged damages."

§25.54 10. Defenses to Common Counts

As an appropriate counterpoint to the uninformative and general nature of "common counts" seeking the recovery of money, courts have several times held that a general denial is sufficient for the raising of virtually any defense. See Heaton-Hobson Assoc. Law Offices v Arper (1904) 145 C 282, 78 P 721; Aetna Carpet Co. v Penzner (1951) 102 CA2d 859, 228 P2d 347; De Santis v Miller Petroleum Co. (1938) 29 CA2d 679, 683, 85 P2d 489.

11. Defense of Setoff

§25.55 a. Pleading Requirements

If one seeks a setoff to a monetary obligation and the setoff arises from a separate transaction, it must be pleaded as new matter. Carranza v Noroian (1966) 240 CA2d 481, 484, 49 CR 629. Any issue as to "setoffs," e.g., overpayments by the defendant in the past, represents new matter that must be pleaded as an affirmative defense. See Title Ins. Co. v State Bd. of Equalization (1992) 4 C4th 715, 731, 14 CR2d 822; Interstate Group Adm'rs, Inc. v Cravens, Dargan & Co. (1985) 174 CA3d 700, 220 CR 250. This is particularly important when the setoff relates to a separate debt or than the one pleaded by the plaintiff. See Carranza v Noroian, supra (plaintiff pleaded breach of labor contract for harvesting peach crop; defendant sought setoff related to labor provided by plaintiff in harvesting later fig crop; held to constitute "new matter" not placed in issue by general denial). When a plaintiff has pleaded a common count, a general denial will permit the defendant to prove setoff relating to the same debt or obligation asserted by the plaintiff. Interstate Group Adm'rs, Inc. v Cravens, Dargan & Co., supra. The better practice, however, would be to plead a specific affirmative defense for each asserted setoff.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.56 b. Setoffs as Allegation of Cross-Complaint

A claim for affirmative relief, not merely for setoff, requires the pleading of a separate cross-complaint and may not be included in an answer. CCP §431.30(c). Some subject matter, e.g., claim of fraud in the inducement of the signature of a contract or note, may require the defendant both to plead fraud as an affirmative defense in the answer and fraud as a cause of action for damages in a separate cross-complaint. This would be appropriate if the defendant asserts damages other than or exceeding setoff amounts.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.57 12. Absence of Elements of a Claim for Negligence

The appropriate challenge to a plaintiff's failure to plead one or more of the elements of a claim (i.e., in a claim for negligence, failure to plead illegal duty of care, a negligent act amounting to a breach of that duty, proximate cause of injury from the act, or injury) is appropriately raised by denial of the plaintiff's allegations. It is not necessary to plead absence of one of these elements as a specific affirmative defense, challenging, for example, the contention that an accident was unavoidable (i.e., that there was no negligence on defendant's part or that defendant's acts did not proximately cause plaintiff's injury). Appellate courts have reminded trial courts of this when lower courts sometimes misapprehend the burden of proof on some affirmative defenses claiming the unavoidability of accidents. See, e.g., Jolley v Clemens (1938) 28 CA2d 55, 82 P2d 51, in which the court noted that it was reversible error to place the burden of proof on claim of "unavoidable accident" on the defendant; the burden to establish negligence correctly tested the plaintiff, and thus a denial adequately responded to the plaintiff's allegation. See also Parker v Womack (1951) 37 C2d 116, 121, 230 P2d 823, overruled on other grounds at 49 C2d at 660.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.58 13. Absence of Elements of Particular Intentional Torts

As with the pleading of negligence (see §25.44), failure to plead one of the elements of an intentional tort need not be raised by affirmative defense, but is appropriately addressed through a denial of the plaintiff's allegations. See Kritzer v Citron (1950) 101 CA2d 33, 39, 224 P2d 808 (consent and participation in acts of assault and battery may be proved under general denial); Churchill v Baumann (1892) 95 C 541, 549, 30 P 770 (consent to injury and claim of intentional diversion of water rights).

In actions for malicious prosecution, malice and the defendant's lack of probable cause in instituting legal proceedings must be alleged. Typically, a defendant will assert a reliance on the advice of counsel to negate those elements; accordingly, it has been permitted for this position to be proved under a denial of the plaintiff's allegations, and not a separate affirmative defense. Walker v Jensen (1949) 95 CA2d 269, 275, 212 P2d 569.

However, defenses of privilege must be set forth as affirmative defenses and be specifically pleaded, including claims of self-defense in an action for battery, privilege in an action for defamation, truthfulness of statements in an action for defamation, or privilege in an action for interference with business advantage.

§25.59 14. Defendant's Title as Defense in Ejectment and Quiet Title Property Actions

A necessary element of a claim for ejectment or quiet title is that the plaintiff owns the real property in question; denying the allegation of ownership or of the right to possession is sufficient to permit the defense to present any evidence of a defect in the plaintiff's chain of title. Only if the defendant wished to go further and demand affirmative equitable relief is additional pleading required (i.e., by cross-complaint, with its basis also set forth as affirmative defense to plaintiff's claim). But merely claiming title, which defeats the plaintiff's claim, does not require setting forth an affirmative defense. See Smart v Peek (1931) 213 C 452, 454, 2 P2d 380; Locke v Moulton (1895) 108 C 49, 52, 41 P 28; Swasey v Adair (1891) 88 C 179, 25 P 1119; Coons v Thompson (1946) 75 CA2d 687, 171 P2d 443; Wade v Howe (1934) 2 CA2d 435, 440, 38 P2d 439.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.60 15. Denying Plaintiff's Possession in Actions for Recovery of Personal Property

The same principle found in ejectment and quiet title actions for real property (see §25.59) also applies in actions to recover personal property. Defendant is permitted to present evidence of the right to possession and ownership of personal property merely by denying the plaintiff's assertion of ownership. See Summerville v Stockton Milling Co. (1904) 142 C 529, 548, 76 P 243.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.61 16. Excuse for Nonperformance

In response to a claim of breach of contract, a defendant may assert some excuse for failing to perform that contract. To do so, the excuse must be pleaded specifically as an affirmative defense, and may include, e.g., an assertion of the plaintiff's breach or anticipatory breach, the failure of consideration to the defendant, or the impossibility of performance or of tender of performance. See Eucalyptus Growers Ass'n v Orange County Nursery & Land Co. (1917) 174 C 330, 335, 163 P 45; Alvernaz v H.P. Garin Co. (1932) 127 CA 681, 688, 16 P2d 683; Riegel v Wollenshlager (1920) 49 CA 300, 193 P 160.

§25.62 17. Discharge of Liability: Release, Novation, and Accord and Satisfaction

As with excuses for nonperformance, a defendant who wishes to present facts to show discharge from liability through the execution of a release, novation of original contract, or accord and satisfaction (e.g., through bankruptcy, arbitration, or the occurrence of a condition subsequent) must plead the ultimate facts specifically as an affirmative defense. It is not sufficient to rely on a mere denial of the plaintiff's allegations. See, e.g., Alexander v Angel (1951) 37 C2d 856, 860, 236 P2d 561 (novation); Landis v Morrissey (1886) 69 C 83, 86, 10 P 258 (release); Owens v Noble (1946) 77 CA2d 209, 215, 175 P2d 241 (accord and satisfaction); Stanton v Santa Ana Sugar Co. (1927) 84 CA 206, 257 P 907 (mutual rescission). See also 2 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Insurance §§118, 119, 121 (10th ed 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.63 18. Exclusive Remedy in Alternative Forum

If a defendant objects that the plaintiff's exclusive remedy lies in another forum, this is an affirmative defense to be specially pleaded. See, e.g., the claim that workers' compensation must be administratively determined. Iverson v Atlas Pac. Eng'g (1983) 143 CA3d 219, 224, 191 CR 696.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.64 19. Public Entity and Employee Defenses

Public agencies and public employees are given particular immunities under the California Tort Claims Act; these must be pleaded as affirmative defenses, including sufficient ultimate facts so that it is apparent the case falls within the statute. See generally California Government Tort Liability Practice §§10.3-10.5 (4th ed Cal CEB 1999).

This affirmative defense may allege such facts as that employees were performing duties within their lawful responsibilities and were therefore immune from suit (Davis v Cordova Recreation & Park Dist. (1972) 24 CA3d 789, 794, 101 CR 358), or that compliance with an administrative claims-presentation procedure, a condition precedent to the action, has not been accomplished by the plaintiff. See Govt C §945.4; Dujardin v Ventura County Gen. Hosp. (1977) 69 CA3d 350, 355, 138 CR 20.

VI. FILING AND SERVICE

§25.65 A. Time for Filing

Normally, a defendant must file an answer to a complaint within 30 days after service of summons, unless the defendant obtains an extension of time to answer or files an alternative responsive pleading or motion. See CCP §412.20, which provides that a summons in a civil action must contain a direction that the defendant file with the court a written pleading in response to the complaint within 30 days. The 30-day period begins on the date that service on the defendant becomes effective; the effective date depends on the method of service used. For example, personal service is effective on receipt by the defendant. For methods of service, see chap 17.

The same basic rules apply to the service of answers to amended complaints (CCP §§471.5, 586) and answers to cross-complaints (CCP §432.10), which also provide for a 30-day period to respond following service. When an amended complaint is served by mail, CCP §1013(a) extends the time within which to answer. Baker v Anderson (1981) 119 CA3d 1000, 174 CR 307. The Baker court also held that if service of an amended complaint precedes its filing, the effective date of service is the date of filing.

WARNING: The general rules may be superseded in particular circumstances by statute or case law. For example, specific statutes provide other times for the filing of answers in special proceedings. See, e.g., CCP §1167 (5-day answering period in unlawful detainer actions).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.66 1. Filing After Ruling on Demurrer

A demurrer and an answer may be filed concurrently (CCP §430.30(c)), or a demurrer may precede the answer. If a demurrer filed first is directed to fewer than every cause of action of the complaint, the defendant is relieved from the obligation to answer to the remaining causes of action, pending ruling on the demurrer. See §25.36.

When overruling a demurrer, the court usually specifies a time within which an answer must be filed. If the court does not so specify a time to answer, 10 days is deemed to have been granted. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g). However, in unlawful or forcible detainer actions and forcible entry actions, only 5 days is deemed to have been granted after a decision on a demurrer. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g). The period for answering after a demurrer has been decided runs from the date of the service of notice of the court's decision or order, unless that notice has been waived by the defendant in open court and the waiver has been entered by the clerk on the court's minutes. CCP §472b. If an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend is reversed or remanded by a reviewing court, any amended complaint must be filed within 30 days after the clerk of the reviewing court mails notice of the remittitur. CCP §472b. On demurrers generally, see chap 23.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.67 2. Filing After Other Motions Challenging Action Heard

Other alternatives to the filing of a demurrer or answer in response to a complaint include the filing of a motion to quash summons (see chap 19), a motion to strike (see chap 24), a petition to remove the action to federal court (see chap 22), a motion to dismiss for failure to serve within three years (CCP §472a(e)) (see chap 39), a motion for change of venue, and a motion to have the case designated a limited (or unlimited) civil case (see chap 6). Some of these motions must be filed prior to the time for filing an answer, or the right to file them is waived. See, e.g., CCP §418.10 (motion to quash service of summons or to dismiss action for inconvenient forum).

When a defendant has improperly removed a case to federal court without filing a response in the original court and the case is remanded, the defendant has 30 days from the date the original court receives the case on remand to respond. CCP §430.90. See §22.96 for discussion of time to respond after remand from federal court.

If a complaint is based on a contract providing for arbitration of disputes, the defendant may elect to file a petition to compel arbitration in lieu of an answer. CCP §1281.7. When the petition is granted, the action will be stayed and the dispute will proceed to arbitration. If the petition is denied, the defendant is automatically granted 15 days after the denial to respond to the complaint. CCP §1281.7. See chap 45 for discussion of alternative dispute resolution.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.68 B. Extending Time by Stipulation or Order

The time to respond to a complaint may be extended by agreement of the parties or formal written stipulation or by court order. See form of stipulation in §25.81. Attorneys should note that many courts have adopted delay reduction rules implementing the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) that limit the amount of time to which parties can stipulate. See, e.g., Govt C §68616(b) (local rules can limit extensions by stipulation to no fewer than 15 days). See also CCP §1054. See generally 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§10-12 (5th ed 2008). For discussion of fast-track rules, see chap 40.

The parties may stipulate without leave of court to one 15-day extension beyond the 30-day time period prescribed for the response after service of the initial complaint. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(d) (not applicable to unlawful detainer, family law proceedings, or proceedings with different service requirements prescribed by law). The court, on its own motion or on the application of a party, may extend or otherwise modify the time provided in Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(b)-(d) (service of complaint, cross-complaint, or stipulation for extension of time for response). An application for a court order extending the time to serve a pleading must be filed before the time for service has elapsed. The application must be accompanied by a declaration showing why service has not been effected, documenting the efforts that have been made to effect service, and specifying the date by which service is proposed to be effected. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(e).

A party may also apply for an extension of time to answer a complaint by means of a written ex parte application. If the opposing party does not consent to the extension, the court may grant an extension of no more than 30 days; with the opposing party's consent the court may grant a longer extension. CCP §1054. Note, however, that many courts have adopted local fast-track rules that limit the length or number of extensions available by any means. See form of ex parte application to extend time within which to respond to complaint in §25.82. On ex parte motions generally, see chap 13.

Failure to file a timely answer or other responsive pleading (e.g., a demurrer) permits a plaintiff to apply for entry of judgment by default. CCP §§585-587. If a responsive pleading is not served within the time limits specified in this rule and no extension has been granted, the plaintiff, within 10 days after the time for service has elapsed, must file a request for entry of default. Failure to timely file the request for the entry of default may result in an Order to Show Cause being issued as to why sanctions should not be imposed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(g). When a default is entered, the party who requested the entry of default must obtain a default judgment against the defaulting party within 45 days after entry of default, unless the court has granted an extension of time. Failure to obtain entry of judgment against a defaulting party or to request an extension to apply for a default judgment may result in an OSC being issued as to why sanctions should not be imposed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(h). When the court issues an OSC under this rule, responsive papers to the OSC must be filed and served no less that 5 calendar days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(i).

A defendant against whom a default judgment is taken may apply to the court for relief from that default judgment if it was taken due to the defendant's mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. CCP §473(b). An application for relief from default judgment must be made within a reasonable time, in no event more than 6 months after the judgment, and must be accompanied by a copy of the proposed answer the defendant will file if relieved from default. On default generally, see chap 38.

The defendant may also apply for a court order to file an answer after expiration of the time for filing a response stated in the summons. CCP §473. The court has power to grant a plaintiff's motion to strike a tardy answer, but usually will not do so without a showing of significant prejudice to the plaintiff due to the defendant's late filing. For further discussion, see 4 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §§10-12.

§25.69 C. Manner of Service

Under CCP §465, an answer is a pleading "subsequent to the complaint," and must be filed with the court in which the complaint was filed.

An answer is usually filed with an attached proof of service form. A copy of the answer must be served on the plaintiff or the plaintiff's attorney. CCP §465. An answer may be served personally or by mail on the plaintiff's attorney, or on a plaintiff who has no attorney. CCP §§1010-1013a. On procedures for service, see chap 18.

VII. AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWERS

§25.70 A. Amendment

An answer that has been filed can be amended to correct formal or substantive defects. For example, the defense attorney may notice that there is an incorrect or missing signature or verification, or that a valid defense was overlooked or defectively pleaded, or that the answer failed to deny allegations that should have been put in issue. Plaintiff's filing of an amended complaint, a demurrer to the answer or a motion for summary judgment may also provide an occasion for the defendant to amend. An answer may also be amended on the basis of facts that occurred before the answer was filed but were not known until afterwards. Barring a showing of prejudice, amendment of answers is liberally allowed so that a defendant may freely assert all available defenses. Ramos v Santa Clara (1973) 35 CA3d 93, 110 CR 485.

The methods of amending an answer include filing and serving an amended answer, or an amendment to the answer, with or without leave of court or notice to the parties. An answer may also be amended, expressly or in effect, by a pretrial order. See CCP §576. An answer is amended in effect when a trial judge grants summary judgment on the defendant's motion on the basis of defenses that were not stated in the answer. See Ramos v Santa Clara, supra. On filing a supplemental answer, see §25.79.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.71 1. Amended Answer

An amended answer is a new pleading, complete in itself. When served and filed, it supersedes the original answer and any preceding amended answer. See Cohen v Superior Court (1966) 244 CA2d 650, 657, 53 CR 378.

The format for an amended answer is the same as for the original answer, except that the document is titled, e.g., "Amended Answer, Second Amended Answer." The body of an amended answer should contain all the denials, objections, and defenses that the defendant wishes to plead. Denials and other matter in previous answers that are not repeated in an amended answer will normally be considered abandoned if not repeated in the amended answer. If the original answer was or should have been verified, the amended answer should carry its own verification. For further discussion applicable to amended pleadings, see chap 16 (amending complaints).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.72 2. Amendment to Answer

An amendment to an answer is an addition to or change in an answer that is pending in the action. See Cohen v Superior Court (1966) 244 CA2d 650, 657, 53 CR 378. A paper titled "Amendment to Answer," listing the additions, deletions, and changes to be made, is not really a separate pleading, but must be read in conjunction with the answer it amends. See form in §25.85. See applicable discussion in chap 16 (amendment to complaint).

The amendment must be signed, and, if the answer was verified, the amendment should also be verified, preferably by the same persons who signed and verified the answer.

PRACTICE TIP: Amendment is particularly useful for correcting an admission made either expressly or inadvertently in the answer. To invalidate an admission, the defendant may file an amendment to the answer either "of course" (see §25.73) or by leave of court after a noticed motion (see §25.77); admissions that have been corrected by amendment are no longer binding. Note that no admission is found from the pleading of inconsistent defenses. See §25.33.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Procedures for Amendment

§25.73 1. Amendment "Of Course"

An answer may be amended once by a party "of course" (i.e., without court permission, notice to other parties, or costs) within the time for demurrer to an answer (i.e., 10 days under CCP §430.40(b)), or after a demurrer has been filed but before the hearing on that demurrer. CCP §472. See Tingley v Times Mirror Co. (1907) 151 C 1, 10, 89 P 1097; 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1193 (5th ed 2008).

Amendment of course is accomplished by filing either an amendment to the answer (see §25.72) or a complete amended answer (see §25.71) and serving a copy of that paper on the plaintiff's attorney or directly on an unrepresented plaintiff. CCP §472. Plaintiff has 10 days after service of an amendment or amended answer, or such other time as the court may direct, in which to demur to the answer as amended. CCP §471.5(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.74 2. Correcting Mistakes

The court may allow a party, in furtherance of justice and on such terms as may be proper, to amend a pleading by correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or a mistake in any other respect. See CCP §§473, 576.

Such an order may be approved without a noticed hearing. For procedures and forms that can be adapted, see chap 16 (amending complaints). On procedures for ex parte motions generally, see chap 13. See also 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§1242-1245 (5th ed 2008).

§25.75 3. After Demurrer Sustained

After a demurrer to an answer has been sustained with leave to amend, the defendant may file an amended answer or amendment to the answer without further motion. See §§25.70-25.78. The time within which the amendment must be filed is usually specified in the order sustaining the demurrer. See CCP §472a. If no time has been given in the order, the defendant will be deemed to have been granted 10 days within which to amend (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g)), beginning on the day notice of the ruling was served or waived (CCP §472b).

The amended answer, once filed, may be challenged by a further demurrer or motion. See People v Clausen (1967) 248 CA2d 770, 785, 57 CR 227.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.76 4. Oral Motion to Amend

When all parties are before the court, even at trial, the court may order an answer amended at the defendant's oral request. See applicable discussion in chap 16 (amendment of complaint on oral motion). Amendment at trial is not "of course" (see §25.73), and leave of court is required. See Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v Goldstein (1938) 25 CA2d 37, 45, 76 P2d 545.

WARNING: This manner of amending an answer is wholly at the court's discretion, and is therefore a somewhat risky procedure for the defendant to rely on unless the mistake is trivial or no party will object to the amendment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.77 5. On Noticed Motion With Leave of Court

When it has become too late to amend "of course" (see §25.73), a defendant can apply to the court on noticed motion for leave to amend the answer on such terms as may be just. See CCP §473. The original signed proposed amendment or amended answer should be attached to the moving papers, serially numbered to differentiate it from previous pleadings or amendments (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324(a)). The required contents of the motion are in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324. Also accompanying the noticed motion should be a memorandum in support of the motion, appropriate declarations (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324(b)), and a proposed order for the judge to sign. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a). The formal requirements are substantially the same for either an amendment to the answer or an amended answer. See forms in §§25.86-25.89. For discussion of similar procedures for amending a complaint on noticed motion, see chap 16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.78 6. By Stipulation of Parties

A written stipulation between the affected parties seeking leave of court for the filing of an amendment to the answer, an amended answer, or a supplemental answer may be filed in lieu of noticed motion. For applicable discussion, see chap 16 (granting leave to file amended complaint on written stipulation).

NOTE: In counties with delay reduction programs speeding up civil litigation at the trial court level, the court may be reluctant to grant leave to amend, even on the parties' written stipulation, and presumably will grant leave only for good cause. Counsel must therefore be quite careful in drafting the original answer. When an amendment to an answer is necessary, it should be sought as quickly as possible. For discussion of the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) generally, see chap 40.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.79 C. Supplemental Answer

A supplemental answer contains denials and defenses based on facts that occurred after the original answer was filed. CCP §464. A supplemental answer does not supersede the original answer but, like an amendment to an answer, adds new matter to be considered in conjunction with the original answer. See 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1254 (5th ed 2008).

The accepted procedure is for the defendant to proceed by noticed motion to obtain the court's permission to file a supplemental answer. See CCP §464. See Note in §25.77 (noticed motion with leave of court. Forms of noticed motion seeking leave of court that can be adapted appear in §§25.86-25.89. On stipulation to file supplemental answer, see discussion in §25.78 (stipulation of parties).

A supplemental answer should be captioned as was the original answer (see form in §25.10), and the nature of the paper should be given as "Supplemental Answer of Defendant _ _[name]_ _ to Plaintiff's Complaint." It is advisable for the supplemental answer to include an opening paragraph such as the following:

Severing herself from all other defendants and for herself alone, defendant _ _[name]_ _ hereby files a supplement to her answer filed _ _[date]_ _ to plaintiff's complaint, based on facts that have occurred subsequent to the filing of the original answer:

If possible, the supplemental answer should be signed by the same person who signed the original answer, and it should be verified or not (see §25.17) as was the original answer, again by the same person if possible. A supplemental answer must be filed and served on all parties or their attorneys of record. CCP §465.

PRACTICE TIP: In preparing a supplemental answer, the attorney should pay particular attention to the impact of new facts on the former answer. A supplemental answer does not replace the original answer. That is the purpose of an amended answer. Under some circumstances, it may be appropriate to seek leave to file both an amendment to an answer, making certain corrections in the original answer, as well as a supplemental answer.

Before drafting an answer, counsel should carefully review the complaint (or cross-complaint) and any other available documents, arrange a meeting with the client or clients, and consider the following questions:

1. How many and which defendants do you represent? If more than one defendant, review possible conflicts of interest.
2. Have appropriate fee arrangement and engagement letters been executed with each defendant?
3. When was the complaint served on each defendant?
4. Was service effective?
5. When is a responsive pleading due for each defendant?
6. Is an extension of time required?
7. Has a stipulation and order for extension of time to respond been executed and filed?
8. Does the complaint give rise to any alternative responses, such as any of the following?
    - Motion to quash service for invalid service or lack of personal jurisdiction
    - Demurrer—for defects on the face of the complaint
    - Motion to strike
    - Cross-complaint for affirmative relief
9. Is the complaint verified?
10. Is it appropriate to use a general denial?
11. Is it appropriate to use specific denials?
12. What denials must be made on information and belief or on lack of information and belief? Plan efforts to obtain constructive knowledge from public records and other documents known to defendants.
13. What affirmative defenses should be pleaded?

On attorney-client representation agreements, including becoming attorney of record, see chap 3. For discussion of types of denials, see §§25.23-25.29. On affirmative defenses, see §§25.30-25.64.

FACTS: In the original answer filed in this action, the name "John" improperly designates the principal agent of plaintiff, _ _[name]_ _, whose legal name has subsequently been discovered to be "Johnson." Facts occurring before defendant, _ _[name]_ _, filed its answer to the complaint, but discovered by defendant only after filing the answer, indicate that an affirmative defense of unclean hands should be asserted in this action.

I. ANY PLEADING MAY BE AMENDED IN FURTHERANCE OF JUSTICE.

Code of Civil Procedure §473 provides: "The court may, in furtherance of justice, and on any terms as may be proper, allow a party to amend any pleading or proceeding by adding ... the name of any party.... The court may likewise, in its discretion, after notice to the adverse party, allow ... an amendment to any pleading."

At this early stage of the proceedings, it is appropriate to permit all claims and defenses to be asserted for the furtherance of justice. No prejudice will be incurred by plaintiff as a result of this addition to the answer.

II. CONCLUSION.

For the foregoing reasons, defendant is entitled to an order granting leave to file an amended answer in this action.

_ _[Typed name]_ _
Attorney for _ _[name]_ _

Copies: Original (file with court clerk); ___ copies for service (one for each party); ___ office copies.

Comment: California Rules of Court 3.1324 requires a declaration to be attached that states the effect of the amendment, why the amendment is proper, when facts giving rise to the amended allegations were discovered; and the reasons the request for amendment was not made earlier. See §§25.77, 25.88. On formal requirements for supporting memorandum, see §§12.30-12.42.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.11-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On the many specific details required, see chap 11 and the sample form in §11.35. On when preprinted Judicial Council forms must or may be filed with the court, see Cal Rules of Ct 1.30-1.44, 2.131-2.134 and the discussion in §11.27.

I. INTRODUCTION

§26.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses the rules and tactical considerations that counsel who contemplate filing a cross-complaint should be familiar with and the procedures for preparing, filing, serving, and responding to a cross-complaint. It sets forth an overview (see §§26.3-26.6) and discusses compulsory and permissive cross-complaints (see §§26.7-26.21), restrictions on the use of cross-complaints (see §§26.22-26.24), tactical considerations (see §§26.25-26.29), and procedures (see §§26.30-26.55). It also contains diagnostic questions (see §26.56), a checklist (see §26.57), and forms (see §§26.58-26.62).

§26.2 B. Governing Law

Cross-complaints are governed by CCP §422.10.

© The Regents of the University of California

II. OVERVIEW

§26.3 A. Nature and Function of Cross-Complaint

The cross-complaint is one of four pleadings permitted in a civil action. CCP §422.10. It is the only pleading other than the complaint that can demand affirmative relief. It is subject to the same format and content rules as the complaint. See CCP §§422.30, 425.10. See also §§26.30-26.43.

The cross-complaint is designed to discourage piecemeal disposition of legal grievances. It permits (and, in some cases, compels) a party named as a defendant or cross-defendant in a civil complaint or cross-complaint to assert, in the same lawsuit, claims for affirmative relief that the party has against a plaintiff or cross-complainant and, if there is subject-matter relationship, against a defendant, cross-defendant, or new party. On compulsory cross-complaints see CCP §§426.10-426.70 and §§26.7-26.15. On permissive cross-complaints, see CCP §427.10 and §§26.16-26.21.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.4 1. Independent Cause of Action

The cause of action stated by the cross-complaint is independent of that pleaded in the complaint. The issues raised by the cross-complaint are "completely severable." Thus, an appellate court cannot review denial of leave to file a cross-complaint on an appeal from a summary judgment on the complaint. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v Adamo (1983) 142 CA3d 492, 496, 191 CR 134. See Shepard & Morgan v Lee & Daniel, Inc. (1982) 31 C3d 256, 259, 182 CR 351, in which the court held that the defendant's and cross-complainant's response to the plaintiff's request for admissions was not binding against the defendant in its cross-claim for indemnity against a third party and could not support a motion for nonsuit by the third party on the cross-complaint.

An action (i.e., a civil action or special proceeding; see CCP §581(a)(1)) cannot be dismissed at a plaintiff's request when a defendant has sought affirmative relief by cross-complaint. CCP §581(h). However, the complaint or any cause of action contained in it may be dismissed by the plaintiff without the defendant's consent. See CCP §581(c). If the complaint is so dismissed, the proceeding continues on the cross-complaint alone. Similarly, when there is an involuntary dismissal of the complaint, a cross-complainant's cause of action on the cross-complaint is unaffected. Tomales Bay Oyster Corp. v Superior Court (1950) 35 C2d 389, 393, 217 P2d 968. See 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1159 (5th ed 2008). Because a cross-complaint creates an action distinct and independent from the initial pleading, a malicious prosecution action may be predicated on the filing of a groundless cross-complaint. Bertero v National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 C3d 43, 50, 118 CR 184.

The cross-complaint must be a separate document. CCP §428.40. This ensures that the cross-action is distinct from affirmative defenses raised by answer (e.g., statute of limitations, statute of frauds) that attack the claim's validity but do not seek affirmative relief. The distinction is important because an adverse party must respond to a cross-complaint whereas an affirmative defense is deemed to be denied and no response is required. CCP §431.20. See generally 5 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §1083.

§26.5 2. Similarity to Complaint

The cross-complaint provisions in the Code of Civil Procedure were designed to establish consistency in treatment of complaints and cross-complaints. See 10 Cal L Rev'n Comm'n Reports 507, 522 (1971). Thus, in a number of statutes, "complaint" includes "cross-complaint," "plaintiff" includes "cross-complainant," and "defendant" includes "cross-defendant." In addition, the rules on format and content of pleadings demanding relief are the same for complaints and cross-complaints. CCP §425.10. See §§26.30-26.43. Uniform rules also apply to objections, denials, and defenses to the complaint or cross-complaint (CCP §§430.10-431.70; see §26.53), time to respond (CCP §432.10), motions to strike (CCP §435), summary judgments (CCP §437c), and joinder of parties (see, e.g., CCP §389 on compulsory joinder and CCP §428.20 on permissive joinder).

§26.6 B. Who May File

A cross-complaint may be filed by anyone against whom a complaint or cross-complaint has been filed. CCP §428.10.

III. COMPULSORY AND PERMISSIVE CROSS-COMPLAINTS DISTINGUISHED

A. Compulsory Cross-Complaint

§26.7 1. Basic Rule: Related Cause of Action

Code of Civil Procedure §§426.10-426.70 govern compulsory cross-complaints. Except as otherwise provided by statute, if a party against whom a complaint or cross-complaint has been filed and served fails to allege in a cross-complaint any related cause of action which that party has against the plaintiff or cross-complainant at the time of service of its answer, the party may not thereafter assert the unpleaded related cause of action in another action against the plaintiff or cross-complainant. CCP §426.30(a). See Russo v Scrambler Motorcycles (1976) 56 CA3d 112, 117, 127 CR 913 (summary judgment, granted to defendants on ground that plaintiff's cause was barred because plaintiff failed to file cross-complaint in earlier action brought by defendants, was reversed; only related causes of action existing at time of service of answer to plaintiff's complaint affected by CCP §426.30). For exceptions to the above rule, see §§26.8-26.15. Leave of court is required to file the cross-complaint if it is not filed before or at the same time as the answer to the complaint or cross-complaint. CCP §§426.50, 428.50. See §26.48.

"Related cause of action" is defined as "a cause of action which arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause of action which the plaintiff alleges in his complaint." CCP §426.10(c). See Comment to CCP §426.10; Align Tech., Inc. v Tran (2009) 179 CA4th 949, 959, 102 CR3d 343 (upholds order sustaining demurrer of employee sued by former employer for breach of contract and patent conversion because employer's claims, which were logically related to cross-complaint brought by employee in previous suit, had not been raised at time of cross-complaint); Currie Med. Specialties v Bowen (1982) 136 CA3d 774, 186 CR 543. See also 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1177 (5th ed 2008).

A tort defendant's cause of action for implied or equitable indemnity is separate and distinct from the plaintiff's tort action. Generally, for statute of limitations purposes, a cause of action for implied or equitable indemnity does not accrue until the tort defendant has suffered actual loss through payment. Valley Circle Estates v VTN Consol. (1983) 33 C3d 604, 611, 189 CR 871 (equitable indemnity); E.L. White, Inc. v City of Huntington Beach (1978) 21 C3d 497, 506, 146 CR 614 (implied indemnity). See Christian v County of Los Angeles (1986) 176 CA3d 466, 471, 222 CR 76 (partial or total equitable indemnity). But see Govt C §901 concerning claims against public entities, discussed in §26.27. See also CCP §337.15, discussed in §26.24. On accrual of cause of action based on express indemnity, see CC §2778. Thus, it has been held that a cause of action for implied indemnity among defendants does not constitute a compulsory cross-complaint in the underlying action because such a cause of action does not accrue until the indemnitee has suffered actual loss through payment. E.L. White, Inc. v City of Huntington Beach, supra.

The defendant's failure to allege such a cause of action by cross-complaint in the underlying action does not bar the defendant from thereafter proceeding with its indemnity claim in a separate and independent action. See E.L. White, Inc. v City of Huntington Beach, supra. See also County of Riverside v Loma Linda Univ. (1981) 118 CA3d 300, 315, 173 CR 371 (failure of defendant to file cross-complaint for comparative equitable indemnity in underlying action against unnamed concurrent tortfeasor held not to preclude defendant from thereafter maintaining indemnity claim in separate and independent action). Although not compulsory, a cross-complaint may nevertheless be filed by a tort defendant in the form of an action for declaratory relief alleging a cause of action for indemnity. See §26.27. On cross-complaints for indemnity, tactical considerations on filing them, and time limits to present written claims when a public entity is involved, see §26.27.

For discussion of indemnity generally (including express indemnity), see 5 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Torts §§112-123 (10th ed 2005). See also 5 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §§925-926.

§26.8 2. Exceptions

Code of Civil Procedure §§426.30(b), 426.40, and 426.60 provide exceptions to the compulsory cross-complaint requirement. When any of those exceptions (see §§26.9-26.15) apply, a cross-complaint need not be pleaded. These exceptions, however, will not prevent independent operation of the doctrines of res judicata or collateral estoppel. See Comment to CCP §426.60. On inapplicability of res judicata to small claims actions, see §6.22A.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.9 a. No Personal Jurisdiction Over Defendant

A cross-complaint need not be pleaded by a party over whom the court in which the action is pending does not have jurisdiction to render a personal judgment. CCP §426.30(b). This situation arises when the court has obtained jurisdiction only over property owned by the defendant. See Comment to CCP §426.30. If the defendant elects to file a cross-complaint, however, the defendant is required to assert all related causes of action in the cross-complaint. Comment to CCP §426.30.

NOTE: A defendant who elects to file a cross-complaint becomes subject to the court's jurisdiction to render a personal judgment in that action. See generally Comment to CCP §410.10.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.10 b. Nonappearing Defendant

A cross-complaint need not be pleaded by a defendant or cross-defendant who does not file an answer to the complaint or cross-complaint against him or her. CCP §426.30(b). (This situation may arise when the defendant or cross-defendant defaults or when the complaint or cross-complaint against him or her is dismissed after the court sustains a demurrer without leave to amend.)

PRACTICE TIP: A defendant or cross-defendant who elects not to file a cross-complaint should consider the effect of possible application of res judicata or collateral estoppel in any subsequent action. On res judicata and collateral estoppel generally, see 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Judgment §§334-482 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.11 c. Actions Not Maintainable

The following exceptions to the compulsory cross-complaint rule (see §26.7) for situations in which the cross-claim cannot be maintained are contained in CCP §426.40(a)-(b):

- Adjudication of the cause of action not pleaded requires the presence of additional parties over whom the court cannot acquire jurisdiction. CCP §426.40(a).
- Both the court in which the action is pending and any other court to which the action is transferable under CCP §396 are prohibited by the federal or state constitution or by a statute from entertaining the cause of action not pleaded (e.g., claims over which the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction). CCP §426.40(b).

In a state court proceeding, if a cause of action created by a federal statute arises out of the same transaction or occurrence and the state and federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction, a compulsory cross-complaint in the state court proceedings is required and the exception under CCP §426.40(b) does not apply. Comment to CCP §426.40. Moreover, if causes of action created by both state and federal statutes arise out of the same transaction or occurrence and the federal court has exclusive jurisdiction over the federal cause of action, the defendant must nevertheless file a compulsory cross-complaint alleging the state cause of action to avoid waiver of that cause of action under CCP §426.30. See Comment to CCP §426.40.

Under CCP §426.40(b), however, the defendant's inability to allege in the cross-complaint the federal cause of action over which the federal court has exclusive jurisdiction does not bar him or her from bringing an independent action on that federal claim in federal court. See Comment to CCP §426.40. For further discussion of rules when federal courts have concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction over potential claim, see Comment to CCP §426.40. On federal jurisdiction generally, see chap 7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.12 d. Another Action Pending

Under CCP §426.40(c), the compulsory cross-complaint rule (see §26.7) does not apply if, at the time of commencement of the action, the cause of action not pleaded was the subject of another pending action. (Any such cause of action pleaded as a cross-complaint would be subject to demurrer under CCP §430.10(c).)

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.13 e. Special Proceedings

The compulsory cross-complaint requirement of CCP §426.30(a) (see §26.7) is expressly inapplicable to special proceedings. Special proceedings are excepted by CCP §426.60(a), and the rules on compulsory cross-complaints in those cases may be found in the particular statute governing the proceeding. See Comment to CCP §426.60. For definition of "special proceeding," see CCP §§22-23.

Notwithstanding CCP §426.60(a), the compulsory cross-complaint requirement of CCP §426.30(a) does apply to eminent domain proceedings. CCP §426.70(a). The related cause of action in an eminent domain proceeding may be asserted by cross-complaint whether or not the party asserting such cause of action has presented a claim in compliance with Govt C §§900-935.7 to the plaintiff in the original eminent domain proceeding. CCP §426.70(b). For further discussion of eminent domain proceedings, see §26.23.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.14 f. Small Claims

Small claims actions are specifically excepted by CCP §426.60(b) from the compulsory cross-complaint requirement of CCP §426.30(a) (see §26.7). A cross-complaint is not required even though the related action is for an amount within the small claims court's jurisdiction. See Comment to CCP §426.60.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.15 g. Declaratory Relief

Cases that involve only an action for declaratory relief under CCP §§1060-1062.5 are excepted by CCP §426.60(c) from the compulsory cross-complaint requirements of CCP §426.30(a) (see §26.7). See Russo v Scrambler Motorcycles (1976) 56 CA3d 112, 117, 127 CR 913. This exception, however, does not extend to cases in which any party to the action seeks a remedy other than or in addition to declaratory relief. In those situations, the compulsory joinder provisions of CCP §426.30(a) apply. See Comment to CCP §426.60(c).

B. Permissive Cross-Complaint

1. Against Complaining Party

§26.16 a. General Rule

A party may assert by cross-complaint any cause of action that he or she has, regardless of its nature, against any party who filed a complaint or cross-complaint against him or her. CCP §428.10(a). See Dabney v Shippey (1974) 40 CA3d 990, 115 CR 526 (cross-complaint not permitted by party when complaint does not state cause of action against him or her).

Unlimited cross-complaints may be filed against an opposing party even if there is no factual relationship between the causes of the two parties. See Comment to CCP §428.10, which notes that this is also the rule under Fed R Civ P 13. This right is independent of, and in addition to, the right to file a cross-complaint on a related cause of action under CCP 428.10(b), discussed in §26.18. However, cross-complaints on unrelated causes of action may not be filed against the plaintiff in an eminent domain proceeding. CCP §428.10(a). See §26.23.

A permissive cross-complaint against the complaining party is not limited to causes of action that exist at the time the responding party serves an answer. However, leave of court, which may be granted in the interest of justice at any time during the course of the action, is required for a party to file a cross-complaint against any of the parties who filed the complaint or a cross-complaint against that party unless the cross-complaint is filed before or at the same time as the answer to the complaint or cross-complaint. CCP §428.50(a), (c). See §§26.44-26.49 on when to file a cross-complaint. On cross-complainant's right to join new parties, see CCP §428.20, discussed in §26.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.17 b. When Complaining Party Is Assignee

Under CCP §368, except for a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange transferred before maturity in good faith for good consideration, assignment of a chose in action is "without prejudice to any set-off, or other defense existing at the time of, or before, notice of assignment." CCP §368. See also Com C §3305 (holder in due course takes instrument free from most defenses). Thus, except for a holder in due course of a negotiable instrument as indicated above, if an assignee has filed a complaint or cross-complaint against a party, the party may assert by cross-complaint against the assignee (in addition to the causes of action specified in §26.16) any cause of action that the party has against the assignor to the extent that it constitutes a setoff. Any judgment on that cause of action in the cross-complaint is limited to the value of the assigned claim. See generally 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1169 (5th ed 2008). On right to offset claim barred by statute of limitations generally, see §26.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.18 2. Against Noncomplaining Party

A defendant or cross-defendant may file a cross-complaint against any person, whether or not he or she is already a party to the action, if the cross-complaint asserts a cause of action that either (a) arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the action brought against him or her, or (b) asserts a claim, right, or interest in the property or controversy that is the subject of the action against him or her. CCP §428.10(b). See Paragon Real Estate Group of San Francisco, Inc. v Hansen (2009) 178 CA4th 177, 186, 100 CR3d 234 (CCP §428.10 explicitly authorized defendant's cross-complaint for equitable indemnity even though cross-defendant was already defendant in case). As long as there is at least one such subject-matter related cause of action against each cross-defendant, the cross-complainant can join any unrelated cause of action he or she has against any of the cross-defendants. See §26.20.

On total or partial indemnity, see American Motorcycle Ass'n v Superior Court (1978) 20 C3d 578, 605, 146 CR 182, in which the supreme court reiterated the right of defendants to file a cross-complaint, founded on a claim of total or partial indemnity, against a previously unnamed party. See also §§26.7, 26.27.

3. Joinder

§26.19 a. Parties

A cross-complaint authorized under CCP §428.10(a) or §428.10(b) may join any person as a cross-complainant or cross-defendant, whether or not he or she is already a party to the action if, viewing the cross-complaint as an independent action, joinder would have been permitted under the statutes governing joinder of parties. CCP §428.20. On permissive joinder of parties generally, see CCP §§378 (plaintiffs), 379 (defendants), discussed in §§14.11-14.12. On compulsory joinder, see CCP §389, discussed in §§14.9-14.10.

Under CCP §379.5, when parties have been joined under CCP §378 or §379 (permissive joinder), the court may make such orders as appear just to prevent a party from being embarrassed, delayed, or put to undue expense, and may order separate trials or make any other order as required by the interests of justice.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.20 b. Causes of Action

A cross-complaint authorized under CCP §428.10(a) or §428.10(b) may allege any additional causes of action against any cross-defendant, whether against the original party or a stranger to the action. CCP §428.30. The sole exception to this rule relates to joinder of causes against the plaintiff in an eminent domain proceeding. See §26.23.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.21 C. When Court May Sever

The court has broad authority to resolve problems caused by permissive or compulsory joinder. Under CCP §1048(b), the court may order separate trials for any causes of action (including those asserted in a cross-complaint) or issues if separate trials would be more convenient, expeditious, and economical, or would avoid prejudice. Similarly, when parties have been joined under CCP §378 or §379 (permissive joinder), the court may make orders as appear just to prevent a party from being embarrassed, delayed, or put to undue expense, and may order separate trials or make any other order as required by the interests of justice. CCP §379.5.

A severance creates two separate actions, one of which the court may even transfer to a different court while retaining jurisdiction over the other. Omni Aviation Managers, Inc. v Municipal Court (1976) 60 CA3d 682, 131 CR 758.

For further discussion of severance, see chap 43.

IV. RESTRICTIONS ON USE OF CROSS-COMPLAINTS

§26.22 A. Summary Proceedings

Cross-complaints expanding the scope of litigation would defeat the purpose of summary proceedings, such as unlawful detainer, designed to afford fast relief in narrowly limited cases. The language of CCP §1170, stating that a defendant in an unlawful detainer action may appear and answer or demur, has been construed to mean that ordinarily a cross-complaint is not permitted. Arnold v Krigbaum (1915) 169 C 143, 145, 146 P 423. Exceptions to this rule are discussed in Union Oil Co. v Chandler (1970) 4 CA3d 716, 722, 84 CR 756. See California Eviction Defense Manual §§14.54-14.57 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

Proceedings for summary restitution under CCP §908 (ordering restitution on a reversal of judgment by the appellate court) are subject to the same rule. See Buckman v Tucker (1937) 9 C2d 403, 71 P2d 69 (construing former CCP §957, on which CCP §908 is based). A cross-complaint is permissible, however, if restitution is sought by an independent action rather than by the summary procedure. See Buckman v Tucker, supra. See also 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1162 (5th ed 2008).

NOTE: The remedy for an improperly filed cross-complaint in a summary proceeding is a motion to strike under CCP §436(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.23 B. Eminent Domain Proceedings

A cross-complaint against a plaintiff in an eminent domain proceeding is compulsory when it involves a related cause of action. CCP §426.70. On definition of "related cause of action," see §26.7.

A cross-complaint in an eminent domain proceeding is permissible against any person, whether or not a party, if it states a related cause of action or asserts a right or interest in the property involved in the complaint. CCP §428.10(b). Thus, a cross-complaint stating such a cause of action may be filed against other codefendants. See CCP §428.10(b). See also People v Buellton Dev. Co. (1943) 58 CA2d 178, 185, 136 P2d 793 (construing former CCP §442). However, the general rule permitting assertion of unrelated causes of action against the complaining party (see §26.16) does not apply to an eminent domain proceeding. CCP §428.10(a). For further discussion of cross-complaints in eminent domain matters, see Condemnation Practice in California §8.58 (3d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.24 C. Statute of Limitations; Setoff in Answer

A cross-complaint cannot assert a cause of action that was barred by the statute of limitations when the original action was filed. See 3 Witkin, California Procedure, Actions §448 (5th ed 2008). A cross-complaint stating a related cause of action against the plaintiff may be filed after the statute of limitations has run if the cross-complainant's right of action was alive when the complaint was filed. However, a cross-complaint against a new party or codefendant must be timely on the date it is filed or the statute of limitations will constitute a valid defense. See Trindade v Superior Court (1973) 29 CA3d 857, 106 CR 48 (under former CCP §442, statute of limitations held tolled with respect to cross-complaint against plaintiff; dictum to contrary when cross-complaint against new party or codefendant).

Note that CCP §337.15 provides for a 10-year statute of limitations on claims for damages against a contractor, subcontractor, and other specified persons. If an action is brought within that period under CCP §337.15(c), a cross-complaint for equitable indemnity under CCP §428.10(b) may be brought against a party responsible for the defects after the 10-year period of CCP §337.15(a) has expired. See Valley Circle Estates v VTN Consol. (1983) 33 C3d 604, 189 CR 871 (CCP §337.15(c) applied; general contractor's cross-complaint for equitable indemnity against subcontractor held proper). The exception to the 10-year statute of limitations under CCP §337.15(c) does not apply, however, if the cross-complaint for indemnity is not transactionally related to the original construction. See Sandy v Superior Court (1988) 201 CA3d 1277, 247 CR 677. On cross-claims for indemnity, see §26.27.

If a cross-complaint is barred by the statute of limitations, the defendant may be able to assert the claim in an answer as a setoff. CCP §431.70; see Construction Protective Servs., Inc. v TIG Specialty Ins. Co. (2002) 29 C4th 189, 126 CR2d 908. Under this provision, when cross-demands for money have existed between two persons at a time when neither demand was barred by the statute of limitations, the demands may be set off against each other. Thus, the defendant may assert in an answer that the two demands are compensated to the extent that they equal each other, even though the claim would otherwise be barred when the answer is filed. CCP §431.70; see 29 C4th at 192. This relief by setoff is available regardless of death or assignment. CCP §431.70. For purposes of §431.70, "a money judgment is a `demand for money' and, as applied to a money judgment, the demand is barred by the statute of limitations when enforcement of the judgment is barred under" provisions in CCP §§683.010-683.320. CCP §431.70.

The remedy afforded by CCP §431.70 differs from that available in a cross-complaint because relief as a setoff cannot exceed the relief granted to the other party. The setoff procedure is not available, however, if the cross-demand should have been asserted as a compulsory cross-complaint in an earlier action under CCP §426.30. CCP §431.70. See Comment to CCP §431.70.

V. TACTICAL CONSIDERATIONS

§26.25 A. Compulsory Cross-Complaint

Failure to file a compulsory cross-complaint bars any subsequent proceeding on that cause of action. See §26.7. If there is any doubt whether a particular cause of action is compulsory, it is prudent to file the cross-complaint to avoid a possible waiver. Furthermore, even though a cross-complaint is not compulsory under CCP §426.30, failure to file the cross-complaint in some situations might risk loss of the cause of action by the independent application of res judicata or collateral estoppel rules. This risk is limited, however, because unrelated claims are not likely to involve similar issues. For relief from failure to file compulsory cross-complaint, see CCP §426.50, discussed in §26.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.26 B. Permissive Cross-Complaint

Several factors must be weighed in deciding whether to file a permissive cross-complaint. The attorney should consider whether evidence in the main action may prejudice the trier of fact in ruling on a cross-complaint. If so, it may be better to proceed by separate action rather than by cross-complaint. Moreover, the multiplicity of new issues or parties introduced by a cross-complaint could prove confusing to the trier of fact and create a barrier to effective presentation of the cross-complainant's case. Although the attorney may move to sever causes of action or separate issues for trial, severance is within the court's discretion and could be denied in a particular case. See CCP §§379.5, 1048, discussed in §26.21.

The decision on parties to be named in the cross-complaint may affect the costs of the litigation. For example, when there is an increase in the number of parties and in the scope of the issues, the time and cost of discovery may be significantly increased. In addition, it may be more difficult to settle the lawsuit if additional parties are involved, each with separate interests.

Furthermore, a cross-complaint must be filed where the original action was filed. A party may be able to select a more desirable venue by bringing a separate action.

On the other hand, bringing a cause of action as a cross-complaint may permit a party to bring the cause to trial less expensively or sooner than if it were brought as a separate action.

If significant discovery will be needed from a third party against whom a cross-complaint may be asserted, it may be desirable to proceed by cross-complaint to allow discovery by interrogatories (CCP §§2030.010-2030.410) and demands to inspect documents, tangible things, land or other property, and electronically stored information (CCP §2031.010) from that party.

Bringing the cause of action as a cross-complaint may avoid the necessity of repeating discovery in a subsequent action. See Evid C §1292 for rules concerning the limited circumstances in which former testimony may be used against a person who was not a party to the former proceeding.

A cross-complaint against an existing party may be served by mail under CCP §§1010-1020. This may eliminate difficulties in effecting service under CCP §§415.10-416.90 (as required to acquire initial jurisdiction over a party), particularly if the party to be served is likely to avoid service of process.

On when cross-complaint should be filed and consequences of failure to file on time, see §§26.44-26.45. See also §26.25 on possible independent application of res judicata or collateral estoppel.

§26.27 C. Cross-Complaint for Indemnity

Actions for indemnity present a common situation in which the defendant's attorney must decide whether to file a cross-complaint or a separate action. The defendant's attorney should consider filing a cross-complaint against a third party when, e.g., the defendant's liability may be shifted to that third party on the basis of breach of warranty or express or implied indemnity. Similarly, the defendant's attorney should consider filing a cross-complaint against a concurrent tortfeasor for total or partial indemnity on a comparative fault basis (often called equitable or comparative equitable indemnity).

A cross-complaint for indemnity properly takes the form "of an action for declaratory relief." Valley Circle Estates v VTN Consol. (1983) 33 C3d 604, 612, 189 CR 871; Christian v County of Los Angeles (1986) 176 CA3d 466, 471, 222 CR 76. See Rimington v General Acc. Group of Ins. Cos. (1962) 205 CA2d 394, 23 CR 40 (cross-complaint for declaratory relief, seeking indemnity if defendant found liable, sufficient under CCP §1060). See also CCP §86(a)(7). The following illustrates a situation in which a cross-complaint in the form of an action for declaratory relief seeking indemnification might be appropriate. An insured person is harmed by a third party; the insured asks for payments from his or her insurer under the policy; the insurer refuses to pay; the insured sues the insurer on the policy but does not sue the third party. In these circumstances, the insurer can answer the action by the insured, claiming that it is not liable under the policy, and at the same time cross-complain against the third party for a declaration that, if the insurer is liable to the insured, the third party is liable to the insurer. See Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v Harris, Kerr, Forster & Co. (1970) 10 CA3d 1100, 1102, 89 CR 437 (insurers agreed to indemnify insured for any loss due to employee dishonesty).

PRACTICE TIP: Although defendants may wish to assert a cross-complaint for indemnity to avoid having to bring a second action later, doing so may be tactically unwise in certain instances because it may prevent the defendants from presenting a united front to the underlying claim. The trier of fact may interpret fighting among defendants and cross-defendants as a sign that the plaintiff's cause of action has merit, thus reducing chances for a defense judgment.

In tort actions, cross-complaints are frequently brought against concurrent tortfeasors for partial indemnity on a comparative fault basis. See American Motorcycle Ass'n v Superior Court (1978) 20 C3d 578, 607, 146 CR 182. Generally, such cross-complaints are brought to avoid the needless expense of litigating the same matter twice: first in the main action and later in a second action for indemnification. Absent a special relationship, a cross-complaint for equitable indemnity is not subject to dismissal solely because apportionment of fault is available through the assertion of an affirmative defense in the main action. Paragon Real Estate Group of San Francisco, Inc. v Hansen (2009) 178 CA4th 177, 187, 100 CR3d 234, citing Platt v Coldwell Banker Residential Real Estate Servs. (1990) 217 CA3d 1439, 1446, 266 CR 601.

An assignment to plaintiffs of a settling defendant's cross-complaint for indemnity against a nonsettling defendant can give the plaintiffs actual authority to proceed to trial on the cross-complaint. For example, in Casey v Overhead Door Co. (1999) 74 CA4th 112, 87 CR2d 603, disapproved on other grounds in Jimenez v Superior Court (2002) 29 C4th 473, 127 CR2d 614, the plaintiffs settled with the original defendant and received an assignment of the defendant's rights against the third party cross-defendant. The court found that, under CCP §368.5, the transfer of interest did not abate the proceeding, and the plaintiffs had authority to proceed on the cross-complaint even though they had not substituted themselves in the cross-complaint in place of the defendant.

Sometimes, defendants agree to defer filing cross-complaints among themselves, enter into agreements to allocate the risk of loss instead of filing cross-complaints, or agree to resort to arbitration as a means of resolving existing cross-claims. Thus, before filing a cross-complaint for indemnity, counsel should consider the benefit of defendants presenting a united front, the expense of subsequent litigation if a cross-complaint is not filed, the benefit of a more expeditious resolution of the controversy if a cross-complaint is filed (see Shepard & Morgan v Lee & Daniel, Inc. (1982) 31 C3d 256, 261, 182 CR 351), the complexity and expense of trying the underlying case if a cross-complaint is filed, the possibility of entering into agreements dispensing with the need to file a cross-complaint, and the possible effect that bringing in new parties as cross-defendants may have in raising or lowering the percentage of fault that the jury may attribute to the plaintiff.

For computing the time limits prescribed in Govt C §§911.2, 911.4, 912, and 945.6, a cause of action for equitable indemnity or partial equitable indemnity against a public entity accrues on the date on which a defendant is served with the complaint that gives rise to the defendant's claim for equitable indemnity or partial equitable indemnity. Govt C §901. The defendant's failure to first present a timely written claim to the public entity has been held to bar a cross-complaint against the public entity for equitable indemnity. State v Superior Court (Shortstop) (1983) 143 CA3d 754, 192 CR 198 (decided before claim limitation period of Govt C §911.2 increased from 100 days to 6 months; cross-complainants required to comply with Government Claims Act (formerly known as Tort Claims Act) claim filing requirements and to allege that they had done so in cross-complaint; otherwise, cross-complaint subject to demurrer). See Greyhound Lines v County of Santa Clara (1986) 187 CA3d 480, 231 CR 702 (claim for equitable indemnity accrued on date when defendant served with complaint; court without jurisdiction to grant relief under Govt C §946.6 when application to file late claim under Govt C §911.4 filed more than 1 year after accrual of cause of action). For further discussion, see California Government Tort Liability Practice §§4.31, 5.11, 6.23 (4th ed Cal CEB 1999).

On the ability of a defendant who is timely sued under CCP §337.15(a) to file a cross-complaint for indemnity against the party responsible for a defect even if the cross-complaint is filed after the limitation period specified in CCP §337.15(a), see §26.24.

On disallowance generally (for public policy reasons) of cross-complaints for equitable indemnity by former attorneys sued for legal malpractice against successor attorneys, see Austin v Superior Court (1999) 72 CA4th 1126, 85 CR2d 644 ("well-established precedent [holds] that a lawyer sued by a former client for legal malpractice may not cross-complain against plaintiff's present lawyer for indemnity or contribution"). See also Kroll & Tract v Paris & Paris (1999) 72 CA4th 1537, 86 CR2d 78 (when both firms worked on case until 10 days before trial, then one firm took over, lost case, and was sued by client, firm could not cross-complain against other firm that had worked on case, although court suggested it could assert comparative negligence). See generally §26.7.

NOTE: A defendant who unsuccessfully seeks indemnification is not barred from later seeking contribution if the statutory requirements of CCP §875 are met. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v Lucky Stores, Inc. (1992) 11 CA4th 1372, 14 CR2d 673.

When an insured receives medical payments from an insurer, and then later recovers from a third party tortfeasor, the insurer cannot assert an equitable lien on the recovery against the insured's attorney who received the payments and passed them on to the insured. Farmers Ins. Exch. v Smith (1999) 71 CA4th 660, 83 CR2d 911.

§26.28 D. Cross-Complaint Changing Jurisdictional Classification of Case

The filing of a cross-complaint that causes the amount in controversy to exceed the maximum amount allowed for a limited civil case changes the jurisdictional classification (see CCP §32.5) of the case. The caption of the cross-complaint must state that the action is "a limited civil case to be reclassified by cross-complaint" (or words to that effect) and must be accompanied by the reclassification fees required by CCP §403.050. CCP §403.030.

Code of Civil Procedure §§403.010-403.090 provide a method for determining whether a case should be classified as a limited or unlimited civil case. See chap 6. The rule set forth in CCP §403.020 is similar to the rule on the effect of cross-complaints under former law. See Eveleth v American Brass & Iron Foundry, Plastics Div. (1962) 203 CA2d 41, 44, 21 CR 95 (cross-complaint asking damages above jurisdictional limit of municipal court required court to suspend proceedings and transfer matter to court of competent jurisdiction). But see Omni Aviation Managers, Inc. v Municipal Court (1976) 60 CA3d 682, 131 CR 758 (cross-complaint alleging damages above municipal court jurisdictional limit did not warrant transfer of original complaint to superior court because cross-complaint was not integral to issues raised by complaint and answer). For additional discussion of rules on classification and reclassification of civil matters, see chap 6.

WARNING: Filing a cross-complaint that is (1) "presented primarily for an improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation," (2) not "warranted by existing law or by a nonfrivolous argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law or the establishment of new law," or (3) without evidentiary support may result in the imposition of sanctions. CCP §128.7.

§26.29 E. Limitation on Voluntary Dismissal of Action

A plaintiff is deprived of the unilateral right to voluntarily dismiss the action when a defendant seeks affirmative relief by cross-complaint. CCP §581(h). See §26.4. In certain instances, this may have tactical significance for the defendant's counsel. For example, if a plaintiff pleads alternative causes of action, including a cause of action for rescission without seeking punitive damages, and neither a notice of rescission has been given nor an offer to restore benefits received under the contract has been made, service of the pleading is deemed such notice or offer or both. CC §1691. The defendant may wish to accept the offer of rescission (without admitting liability for the underlying grounds for rescission such as fraud; see CC §1689) and thereby limit his or her exposure to liability and the plaintiff's potential recovery. By filing a cross-complaint alleging acceptance of the rescission and seeking affirmative relief (e.g., return of the consideration given by the defendant), the plaintiff will be unable to unilaterally dismiss the action and will also be precluded from recovering on those causes of action based on affirmance of the contract. See Paularena v Superior Court (1965) 231 CA2d 906, 914, 42 CR 366 (defendant's acceptance of rescission limited trial to issue of damages under rescission cause of action rather than for damages under other causes of action for violation of statutory duty, negligence, breach of warranty, and fraud).

This same tactical consideration of preventing the plaintiff from being able to unilaterally dismiss the action may be present if the plaintiff alleges, among other causes of action, a cause of action for involuntary corporate dissolution. The defendant may desire to elect a Corp C §2000 buy-out of the plaintiff shareholder to avoid dissolution. Unless the defendant alleges such election by cross-complaint, the defendant's buy-out right may be defeated by the plaintiff's dismissal of the action. See Cubalevic v Superior Court (1966) 240 CA2d 557, 49 CR 698 (decided under former Corp C §§4658-4659; no cross-complaint alleging buy-out election filed; plaintiff's voluntary dismissal defeated defendant's pursuit of buy-out remedy). See also Merlino v Fresno Macaroni Mfg. Co. (1946) 74 CA2d 120, 168 P2d 182 (decided under former rule allowing affirmative relief in answer; defendants gave notice of election to buy stock in answer; plaintiffs unsuccessful in attempt to dismiss action; judgment rendered in favor of defendants).

As a practical matter, when a defendant seeks affirmative relief by a compulsory cross-complaint (see §26.7), the plaintiff will usually not wish to dismiss any related cause of action under CCP §581(c). If the plaintiff were to do so, arguably his or her dismissed cause of action would be considered to be a compulsory cross-complaint to the defendant's cross-complaint and, under CCP §426.30(a), the plaintiff would be barred thereafter in any other action from asserting that cause of action against the defendant. Furthermore, if the court ruled favorably on the defendant's cross-complaint, collateral estoppel or res judicata might act as a bar if such an action were again alleged against the defendant.

NOTE: Affirmative relief may not be sought in an answer. CCP §431.30(c). See Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v Humboldt Loaders (1988) 202 CA3d 921, 249 CR 175. To prevent a defendant from being able to unilaterally dismiss the action under CCP §581(b)(1), affirmative relief must be sought by a defendant's cross-complaint. See CCP §581(h); Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v Humboldt Loaders, supra (plaintiff had absolute right to dismiss because no defendants sought affirmative relief by cross-complaint).

VI. PROCEDURES

A. Drafting Cross-Complaint

§26.30 1. Format

The cross-complaint must be asserted in a physically separate document, not as part of an answer. CCP §428.40. Its format and content are subject to the same rules that govern complaints. For caption and content, see CCP §§422.30 and 425.10. Cross-complaints must conform to the requirements of Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. See chaps 11, 15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.31 a. Caption

The caption of a cross-complaint is essentially the same as the caption of a complaint (see CCP §422.30, discussed in chap 15) except for a double caption and the substitution of "cross-complainant" for "plaintiff" and "cross-defendant" for "defendant" in describing the parties. The title of the main action need list only the first party on each side, designating others by "et al." or "and others" (CCP §422.40), but the title of the cross-complaint itself should name each party to the cross-complaint. Court clerks may decline to issue a summons unless the new cross-defendants are named in the caption. The title of the action should show that there was a prior pleading demanding relief such as the following:

John Smith, Plaintiff vs Henry Jones, Defendant	No. 123 456 CROSS-COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES—BREACH OF CONTRACT
Henry Jones, Cross-Complainant and Defendant, vs John Smith and William Johnson, Cross-Defendants.

California Rules of Court 2.111(6) requires that the caption of a cross-complaint state the nature of the paper and the character of the cross-action, e.g., "CROSS-COMPLAINT FOR INDEMNITY."

NOTE: After the cross-complaint has been filed identifying all the parties to the cross-complaint, the captions of subsequent pleadings or other documents customarily refer only to the first party on each side (short caption), with an appropriate indication of the other parties (e.g., "et al.") in accordance with CCP §422.40. All cross-complaints are collectively referred to at the bottom of the short caption as "and Related Cross-Actions." Cal Rules of Ct 2.111(4).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.32 b. Form: Introductory Clause

It is customary to insert an introductory clause below the caption. See §15.4. More elaborate introductions have been used in the past, but the simple form is now commonly used:

Cross-complainant, _ _[name]_ _, alleges:

To avoid confusion, it is often convenient to define shorthand references for the parties, to be used in the body of the cross-complaint, e.g.:

Cross-complainant, Acme Manufacturing Company of California, Inc. ("Acme"), alleges:

When there are multiple cross-defendants against whom different causes of action will be alleged, an introductory heading before each cause of action should specify the name of the party against whom each cause of action is asserted, e.g.:

First Cause of Action Against Cross-Defendant, General Co., Inc.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.33 c. Allegations

Both a complaint and a cross-complaint must contain a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language. CCP §425.10(a)(1).

The sufficiency of allegations in a cross-complaint is judged in the same manner as if it were an independent action. See §§15.26-15.27 on requirements for allegations in complaints. If the cross-complaint is asserted against a noncomplaining party or stranger under CCP §428.10(b), the cross-complainant must allege sufficient facts to connect the cross-defendant with the subject matter of the original action. See §26.18.

As with a complaint, no claim for punitive damages against a health care provider may be included in a cross-complaint unless the court enters an order allowing an amended pleading that includes a claim for punitive damages to be filed on motion by the party seeking the amended pleading. CCP §425.13. On required showing for motion to be granted and time limitation for bringing motion, see CCP §425.13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.34 d. Demand for Relief (Prayer)

A cross-complaint must contain a demand for judgment for the relief to which the pleader claims he or she is entitled, often called the "prayer." CCP §425.10(a)(2), (b). If money or damages are demanded, the amount must be stated, except in actions (other than limited civil cases) for personal injury or wrongful death; in these cases the amount must not be stated, but the complaint shall comply with CCP §422.30 (caption requirements) and, in a limited civil case, with Govt C §70613(b) (requirements for first paper in limited civil case). CCP §425.10(b). In a personal injury or wrongful death case, the defendant may serve a request for a statement of damages at any time. For discussion of statement of damages, see §15.7. For discussion of limited civil cases, see chap 6.

The amount of exemplary (punitive) damages sought may not be stated in any civil matter. CC §3295(e).

The prayer normally also contains a request for costs of suit and "for such other and further relief as the Court may deem just and proper." In addition, the prayer should request (1) an award of attorneys' fees if there is a contractual, statutory, or other basis for such an award, and (2) any other relief sought, such as injunctive or declaratory relief.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.35 e. Subscription

Every cross-complaint must be signed by at least one attorney of record in the attorney's individual name or by the party, if the party is unrepresented. CCP §128.7(a). For further discussion of subscription, see §15.13. For discussion of CCP §128.7, see §1.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.36 f. Verification

The rules for verification of cross-complaints are the same as for complaints. See §§15.14-15.21. In short, verification is optional unless statutorily required for the type of action involved. If the cross-complaint is verified, the answers to it must also be verified. See CCP §446.

§26.37 2. Optional Judicial Council Forms

The Judicial Council has issued several approved forms which can be used to create all or a part of a cross-complaint. See §§26.37-26.42. Use of the forms is optional. See generally Cal Rules of Ct 1.35.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.38 a. Cross-Complaint: Personal Injury, Property Damage, Wrongful Death

The Judicial Council has approved a form cross-complaint captioned Cross-Complaint—Personal Injury, Property Damage, Wrongful Death (Judicial Council Form PLD-PI-002). See §26.61. The form is essentially a cover sheet which indicates the causes of action asserted and includes allegations pertaining primarily to the capacity of the parties. Either specially prepared (see §26.42) or form (see §§26.40-26.41) causes of action may be attached to this form. The form also contains optional causes of action for indemnification, apportionment of fault, and declaratory relief.

A reproducible copy may be found in California Judicial Council Forms Manual, Form PLD-PI-002 (Cal CEB 1981), or California Civil Litigation Forms Manual §12.3 (Cal CEB 1980).

§26.39 b. Cross-Complaint: Contract

The Judicial Council has approved a form cross-complaint for use in contract actions captions Cross-Complaint—Contract (Judicial Council Form PLD-C-001). See §26.62. The form is essentially a cover sheet, with allegations pertaining primarily to the capacity of the parties, to which either specially prepared (see §26.42) or form (see §§26.40-26.41) causes of action may be attached. Unlike the Judicial Council cross-complaint for personal injury, property damage, and wrongful death (see §26.38), this form may be used for complaints as well as for cross-complaints.

A reproducible copy may be found in California Judicial Council Forms Manual, Form PLD-C-001 (Cal CEB 1981), or California Civil Litigation Forms Manual §7.21 (Cal CEB 1980).

§26.40 c. Causes of Action

The Judicial Council has issued forms for the following causes of action that may be attached to the forms in §§26.61-26.62:

- Cause of Action—Breach of Contract (Judicial Council Form PLD-C-001(1))
- Cause of Action—Common Counts (Judicial Council Form PLD-C-001(2))
- Cause of Action—Fraud (Judicial Council Form PLD-C-001(3))
- Cause of Action—General Negligence (Judicial Council Form PLD-PI-001(2))
- Cause of Action—Intentional Tort (Judicial Council Form PLD-PI-001(3))
- Cause of Action—Motor Vehicle (Judicial Council Form PLD-PI-001(1))
- Cause of Action—Premises Liability (Judicial Council Form PLD-PI-001(4))
- Cause of Action—Products Liability (Judicial Council Form PLD-PI-001(5))

Additional specially prepared causes of action may be attached to form causes of action. See §26.42. §26.42 e. Attachment of Nonform Causes of Action

Causes of action for which Judicial Council forms are not available may be attached to the Judicial Council cover sheet form cross-complaint for personal injury, property damage, wrongful death (see §§26.38, 26.61), or cross-complaint for contract (see §§26.39, 26.62). For consistency, other causes of action to be used with form pleadings should be prepared in a style similar to that of the Judicial Council form, Cause of Action. In particular, the paragraphs of each cause of action should be numbered starting from 1, and each paragraph should bear a mnemonic alphabetic prefix (e.g., the first paragraph in the Judicial Council form, "Cause of Action—Premises Liability," is designated "Prem. L-1").

§26.43 3. Special Rule: Small Claims Courts

A defendant in an action in a small claims division may file a claim not to exceed the jurisdictional limit (currently $5000 except for certain actions against guarantors) in the same proceeding on a form furnished by the court clerk. CCP §§116.220, 116.360.

When a defendant in a small claims action has a claim against the plaintiff that exceeds the jurisdictional limit of the small claims court but that would be the subject of a cross-complaint, the defendant may file a complaint in a court of competent jurisdiction and request the small claims court to transfer the action to the second court. CCP §116.390(a). The defendant makes the request by filing, at or before the time set for hearing the plaintiff's action, a declaration stating the facts of the second action, together with a copy of the new complaint. CCP §116.390(b). The defendant must cause a copy of the declaration and complaint to be personally delivered to the plaintiff at or before the time set for the small claims hearing. CCP §116.390(b).

The small claims court will render a judgment in the small claims action unless the interests of justice require a prejudgment transfer to the court in which the defendant's action is pending, in which case both actions are tried in the second court. CCP §116.390(c). If the action is transferred, the small claims plaintiff need not pay any transmittal, appearance, or filing fee in the second court but must pay the filing fees required of a defendant if he or she appears in the second action, and that court will award costs incurred as a consequence of transfer (including attorney fees and filing fees). CCP §116.390(e).

NOTE: A defendant who files a defendant's claim in a small claims action gives up the right to appeal an adverse judgment on that claim. Anderson v Superior Court (1990) 226 CA3d 698, 276 CR 18.

B. Filing

1. Time Requirements

§26.44 a. Cross-Complaint Against Plaintiff or Cross-Complainant

A cross-complaint must be filed against any party who filed a complaint or a cross-complaint against him or her before or at the same time as the answer to the complaint or cross-complaint. CCP §§426.30, 428.50(a). If such a cross-complaint is not filed within that time, leave of court to file the cross-complaint is required. CCP §§426.50, 428.50(c).

A cross-complaint against a party who has appeared in the action must be accompanied by proof of service of the cross-complaint at the time it is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(c) (not applicable to unlawful detainer, family law proceedings, or proceedings with different service requirements prescribed by law). The court, on its own motion or on the application of a party, may extend or otherwise modify the time provided in Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(c). An application for a court order extending the time to serve a pleading must be filed before the time for service has elapsed. The application must be accompanied by a declaration showing why service has not been made, documenting the efforts that were made to effect service, and specifying the date by which service is proposed to be effected. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(e). Unless the court has granted an order extending the time to serve a complaint or cross-complaint, failure to serve and file pleadings as required under this rule may result in an Order to Show Cause being issued as to why sanctions shall not be imposed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(f). When the court issues an OSC under this rule, responsive papers to the OSC must be filed and served no less that 5 calendar days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(i).

For compulsory cross-complaints (see §§26.7-26.15), leave of court to file the cross-complaint against a plaintiff or a cross-complainant after the answer has been filed should be liberally granted. Code of Civil Procedure §426.50 provides that at any time during the course of the action a party who through oversight, inadvertence, mistake, neglect, or other cause has failed to plead a cause of action subject to the compulsory cross-complaint requirements may apply to the court to amend its pleadings, or to file a cross-complaint, to assert such a cause of action. The court must grant the motion, on such terms as may be just to the parties, if the party who failed to plead the cause of action acted in good faith. CCP §426.50. The court is required to liberally construe §426.50 to avoid forfeiture of causes of action. CCP §426.50.

On motion for leave to file cross-complaint, see §26.48.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.45 b. Cross-Complaint Against Someone Other Than Plaintiff or Cross-Complainant

A cross-complaint against someone who did not file a complaint or a cross-complaint against the party (see §26.18) may be filed as a matter of right at any time before the court has set a date for trial. CCP §428.50(b). The right to file such a cross-complaint has been held to expire after the first trial date is set. Loney v Superior Court (1984) 160 CA3d 719, 723, 206 CR 769. Thus, the later vacating of a trial date does not reopen the right to file a cross-complaint as a matter of right. Loney v Superior Court, supra.

If such a cross-complaint is not filed before the court has set the trial date, the party must obtain leave of court to file the cross-complaint. CCP §428.50(c). Leave of court to file the cross-complaint may be requested at any time during the course of the action. CCP §428.50(c). The court may grant leave to file the cross-complaint in the interests of justice. CCP §428.50(c). In exercising its discretion, the court considers such factors as whether a later filing is fair to the party bringing the action and whether it will create problems of interference with the trial date and court calendar. Thus, the evidence presented in support of the motion should show why granting the motion would be in the interests of justice. The closer the matter is to trial, however, the more reluctant the court may be to allow new cross-complaints, because the chances of trial delay will be increased. The court may attach conditions to its grant of leave to ensure justice to the parties.

Local rules developed under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) may further restrict the time when cross-complaints may be filed as a matter of right.

PRACTICE TIP: As a practical matter, to avoid unnecessary expense, cross-complaints should be filed before or with the answer whenever possible. Otherwise, a newly added party may be able to repeat discovery already taken. Moreover, depositions may not be usable against parties who did not have the opportunity to participate.

If the cross-complaint adds new parties, it must be served on all parties, and proofs of service on the new parties must be filed within 30 days after the cross-complaint is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.110(c) (not applicable to unlawful detainer, family law proceedings, or proceedings with different service requirements prescribed by law).

On cross-complaint against public entity for equitable indemnity or partial equitable indemnity and time limitation for presenting written claim to public entity, see §26.7.

§26.46 2. Where to File

The cross-complaint is filed with the clerk of the court in which the action is pending. For cross-claims exceeding jurisdictional amount in small claims actions, see §26.43.

§26.47 3. Filing Fees

No filing fee is required for the cross-complaint unless it is the first paper filed by the party (see Govt C §70612). When filing necessitates a transfer from one court to another, the court may require that the cross-complainant pay appropriate costs and fees. See CCP §§396(b), 399(a); §26.26.

§26.48 4. Motion for Leave to File Cross-Complaint

Procedures concerning motion practice generally are discussed in chap 12. Counsel should bear in mind that the moving papers should include a copy of the proposed cross-complaint. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324, dealing with the analogous motion to amend pleadings. For form of notice of motion for leave to file cross-complaint, see §26.58. For order granting leave to file cross-complaint, see §26.60.

§26.49 5. Effect of Statute of Limitations

In general, the statute of limitations applies to cross-complaints as it does to complaints. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v Fales (1973) 8 C3d 712, 715 n4, 106 CR 21. There are, however, a couple of special twists.

When cross-demands for money have existed between persons at any time when neither demand was barred by the statute of limitations, and one person begins an action, the other person may assert the defense of payment in the answer; the cross-demands are compensated to the extent they equal each other, even though an independent action would be barred by the statute of limitations at the time the answer is filed. CCP §431.70. If the cross-demand would otherwise be time barred, however, affirmative relief is not available. Relief is limited to a setoff against the relief granted to the other party. CCP §431.70.

No setoff is available if the claim should have been asserted by cross-complaint in a prior action under CCP §426.30 (compulsory cross-complaint), but the holder failed to do so.

Cross-complaints that arise from the same events or transaction as the complaint relate back to the filing of the complaint for statute of limitations purposes. Sidney v Superior Court (1988) 198 CA3d 710, 244 CR 31. The relation-back rule also applies to an amended cross-complaint. Sidney v Superior Court, supra (cross-complaint for property damage sustained in accident alleged in complaint; amended cross-complaint for personal injuries relates back even though it would have been time barred if it had been an amended complaint).

The relation-back rule does not apply if the defendant instead raises the claim in an independent action. Luna Records Corp. v Alvarado (1991) 232 CA3d 1023, 283 CR 865.

C. Service

§26.50 1. Serve Existing Parties by Mail

Service of a cross-complaint must be made on each party to the action. CCP §428.60. If a party on whom the cross-complaint is to be served has already appeared in the action, no summons is required. Service should be made on the party's attorney of record, or on the party if the party has no attorney. CCP §428.60(2). Service is permitted in the manner provided for service of process on new parties (see CCP §§415.10-416.90) or as provided for service of notices of motion under CCP §§1010-1020 (see chap 18). Under the latter methods, the cross-complaint may be mailed, together with an affidavit of service by mail, to the attorney or party at his or her business or residence address. See CCP §§1012-1013a, discussed in chap 18. Service on existing parties is normally made by mail because it is usually the most convenient and least expensive mode of service. Proof of service on existing parties must be served and filed with the cross-complaint. See CCP §465.

PRACTICE TIP: When leave of court to file a cross-complaint will be requested, counsel for the cross-complainant will frequently request that the court's order granting leave to file the cross-complaint provide that the cross-complaint be deemed filed and served as of the date of the court's order. This practice expedites service of the cross-complaint and eliminates the procedural step of serving the cross-complaint a second time. See form of order in §26.60.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.51 2. Serve Summons and Other Pleadings on New Parties

If a party has not previously appeared in the action, a summons on the cross-complaint must issue, and a copy of the summons and cross-complaint must be served as if an original action was being commenced. CCP §428.60(1). See §26.31 for inclusion of names of new cross-defendants in caption of cross-complaint. Proof of service must be made on the form approved by the Judicial Council. CCP §417.10(f). Failure to serve and return the summons within three years after the date of filing will ordinarily result in dismissal of the cross-complaint as to the unserved cross-defendants. CCP §§583.110, 583.210. Code of Civil Procedure §583.210(b) also provides for filing the proof of service of summons within 60 days after the 3-year limit. For methods by which service of process may be effected, see CCP §§415.10-416.90 and chap 17.

A cross-complainant must serve a copy of the complaint, or if it has been amended, the most recently amended complaint and any answers to it on cross-defendants who have not previously appeared. Cal Rules of Ct 3.222.

NOTE: A new party to the action will usually be interested in all the pleadings and discovery taken before the date of service of the cross-complaint on it. On receipt of the cross-complaint, the attorney for the new cross-defendant will generally request a complete copy of the file from the court or another party to the action.

§26.52 3. Delay in Service Will Not Prevent Trial-Setting

To avoid delays in setting trial caused by defendants who file but do not timely serve cross-complaints, judges implementing the Trial Court Salary Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) have the discretion to serve cross-complaints not ready for trial and proceed to trial on the complaints. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.727(11).

D. Defensive Procedures

§26.53 1. Responses to Cross-Complaint

The cross-defendant must appropriately respond to a cross-complaint (see §26.4) and may use any procedural option available to a defendant in an independent action. Thus, e.g., the cross-defendant may answer, demur to, or move to strike the whole cross-complaint or any part of it within 30 days after service. CCP §432.10. See CCP §§430.10-430.80 (demurrer), 431.10-431.70 (answer), 435 (motion to strike). At a later stage of the litigation, the cross-defendant may file a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication. CCP §437c.

§26.54 2. Special Answer by Third Party Defendant

A person against whom a claim has been made by complaint or cross-complaint may himself or herself, as a "third party plaintiff," cross-complain against a "third party defendant" for contribution or indemnity. The third party defendant may answer or respond to that cross-complaint and may also file a separate special answer that asserts defenses that the third party plaintiff could have asserted against the original plaintiff or cross-complainant. CCP §428.70. This special answer protects the third party defendant from a collusive or careless failure by the third party plaintiff to assert defenses that would defeat or diminish the original claim. See Comment to CCP §428.70; Administrative Mgmt. Servs. v Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1982) 129 CA3d 484, 488, 181 CR 141. See §26.27 on cross-complaints for indemnity.

This special answer must be filed as a separate document at the time the third party defendant files his or her answer to the cross-complaint. CCP §428.70(b). The pleading should be titled "SPECIAL ANSWER OF CROSS-DEFENDANT, _ _[name]_ _, TO _ _[COMPLAINT/CROSS-COMPLAINT]_ _ OF _ _[name]_ _." The introductory clause should read:

This special answer must be served on both the third party plaintiff and on the person who asserted the cause of action against the third party plaintiff. CCP §428.70(b). Because both have already appeared in the action, service is effected in the manner discussed in §26.50.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.55 3. Cross-Defendant's Cross-Complaint

The cross-defendant may assert by cross-complaint any cause of action that the cross-defendant has against the cross-complainant. CCP §428.10(a). If the cross-defendant has a "related cause of action," as defined by CCP §426.10(c), it must be asserted by cross-complaint unless it is subject to certain exceptions. CCP §426.30(a). See §§26.7-26.15. The cross-defendant may also cross-complain against a person who is not yet a party to the action (CCP §428.10(b); see §26.18), and may join those parties and causes of action that would have been permitted had the cross-complaint been filed as an independent action. See CCP §§428.20, 428.30, discussed in §§26.19-26.20. The cross-defendant must join in the cross-complaint those parties required under CCP §389. For discussion of compulsory joinder of parties, see chap 14.

§26.56 VII. DIAGNOSTIC QUESTIONS

1. Will the defendant's claim against the plaintiff be later barred if a cross-complaint is not filed? See §26.7.
2. Will the action be overly complicated factually by asserting factually unrelated claims in a permissive cross-complaint against the plaintiff? See §26.16.
3. If third parties are brought into the action by cross-complaint, will their claims or defenses confuse the jury or reduce the defendant's prospect of prevailing? See §26.26.
4. Will cross-complaining against the plaintiff and bringing in all other parties related to the subject matter of the action enhance settlement possibilities or reduce the defendant's potential liability exposure to the plaintiff? See §26.26.
5. Will bringing the defendant's claim through a cross-complaint rather than through a separate action (assuming that the claim is not subject to a compulsory cross-complaint) increase the defendant's chance of getting to trial quickly?
6. Will a separate action (assuming that the claim is not subject to a compulsory cross-complaint) allow a more favorable venue?
7. Is the court likely to sever the cross-complaint from the plaintiff's action? See §26.21.
8. Will evidence presented in the plaintiff's case dispose a judge or jury to find in favor of potential cross-defendants rather than enhance the defendant's chance of recovering against cross-defendants? See §26.26.
9. Will filing a cross-complaint preclude the plaintiff from recovering on or dismissing certain causes of action? See §26.29.
10. Will failure to file a cross-complaint have any possible collateral or res judicata effect if an adverse judgment is obtained in the principal action?

For discussion of tactical considerations generally, see §§26.25-26.29. See also §§26.10, 26.45.

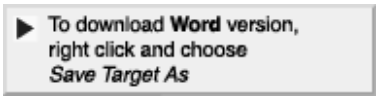
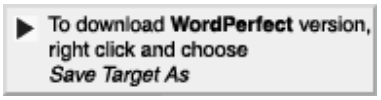
§26.57 VIII. CHECKLIST: PROCEDURE FOR PREPARING CROSS-COMPLAINT





- Allege any related causes of action against plaintiff or cross-complainant who filed complaint or cross-complaint against party (compulsory cross-complaint) (see §§26.7-26.15, 26.25)
- If desired, allege any causes of action regardless of their nature against party who filed complaint or cross-complaint (permissive cross-complaint) (see §§26.16-26.17, 26.26)
- If desired, allege any causes of action against any person, whether or not already party to action, that either (a) arise out of same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as action brought against party, or (b) assert a claim, right, or interest in property or controversy that is subject of action against party (permissive cross-complaint) (see §§26.18, 26.26)
- Determine whether all format requirements of California Rules of Court have been complied with (Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119; see §§26.30-26.35)
- Determine whether verification is required (see §26.36)
- Determine whether to use an optional Judicial Council form, if available, to create all or part of cross-complaint (see §§26.37-26.43)
- Determine effect, if any, of statute of limitations (see §26.24)

Against Plaintiff or Cross-Complainant

- File with clerk of court where action pending before or at time of answer to complaint or cross-complaint (CCP §428.50(a))
- Obtain leave of court to file cross-complaint if filing after answer (CCP §428.50(c))

Against Someone Other Than Plaintiff or Cross-Complainant

- File with clerk of court where action pending at any time before court sets trial date (CCP §428.50(b))
- Obtain leave of court to file cross-complaint if filing after court sets trial date (CCP §428.50(c))
- Serve the attorney of record for each appearing party or, if none, each appearing party (CCP §428.60(2))
- Serve summons and cross-complaint on each party who has not appeared as if original action were commenced (CCP §428.60(1))
- Timely return summons with proof of service to court (see §26.51)

John J. Baker declares:

1. I am an attorney licensed to practice law in the State of California and am one of counsel for defendant Peter P. Smith ("Smith") in this action. Except as otherwise stated, I have personal knowledge of every fact stated in this declaration and, if called as a witness, could and would testify competently thereto.

2. As alleged in the complaint, Smith and plaintiff Elizabeth Jones ("Jones") are partners in a business known under the fictitious name of "Delightful Catering."

3. In the complaint, Jones alleges that Smith misappropriated business opportunities belonging to Delightful Catering, diverting them to a competing business owned by his brother, Gregory Smith. Among other things, the complaint seeks damages for this alleged diversion of business opportunities.

4. The books of Delightful Catering have at all times been maintained by Jones. Since the commencement of disputes between them in September 1988, Jones has denied Smith access to the books and records of Delightful Catering.

5. The answer was filed on January 22, 2000.

6. On February 23, 2000, in response to a notice to produce documents at deposition, Jones produced the books and records of Delightful Catering. The records reveal that Jones without authorization issued herself "bonus checks" in a total sum of $57,000 from the accounts of Delightful Catering during 1997 and 1998. As shown by the attached declaration of Smith, he had no prior knowledge of such bonus payments to Jones.

7. Smith must file the cross-complaint attached as Exhibit A, which sets forth his causes of action against Jones relating to the bonus payments, because he may be barred by Code of Civil Procedure §426.30(a) from later asserting the causes of action in a separate action. Furthermore, even if the causes of action alleged in Exhibit A are not "related" causes of action within the meaning of §426.30(a), it is in the interests of judicial economy to resolve all disputes between the parties relating to Delightful Catering in a single action.

8. The action has been at issue for less than four months. The matter has not yet been set for trial and discovery. Jones and her counsel have at all relevant times had possession of the books and records on which the cross-complaint is based.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct.

Comment: This sample form illustrates a declaration that might accompany a notice of motion for leave to file a cross-complaint. A declaration by Peter P. Smith would also be submitted. The caption of a declaration must state the declarant's name and "specifically identify the motion or other proceeding which it supports or opposes." Cal Rules of Ct 3.1115.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. I. INTRODUCTION

§27.1 A Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses the factors that should be assessed before determining whether to make a motion for judgment on the pleadings or to use an alternative procedure (e.g., a demurrer to the complaint) (see §§27.3-27.9). Also discussed are the procedures for making and opposing the motion (see §§27.10-27.16). This chapter covers the judicial standards for granting the motion and the information needed for evaluating the likelihood of the motion's being granted (see §§27.17-27.21). It also discusses the effect of a judgment on the pleadings if the motion is granted, and the alternatives available to counsel for both sides after the court has made its decision (see §§27.22-27.25). Diagnostic questions (see §27.26), a detailed procedural checklist (see §27.27), and forms (see §§27.28-27.31) are at the end of the chapter.

NOTE: Unless otherwise stated, the words "plaintiff," "defendant," and "complaint" include "cross-complainant," "cross-defendant," and "cross-complaint."

§27.2 B. Governing Law

Code of Civil Procedure §438 was added in 1993 to codify motions for judgment on the pleadings. Stats 1993, ch 456. This motion is a well-established procedure that is made on the same grounds and decided on the same bases as a general demurrer. DeToro v Robinson (1891) 91 C 371, 27 P 671 (motion for defendant); Gay v Winter (1867) 34 C 153 (motion for plaintiff). Case law preceding the enactment of §438 that is not conflicting will generally apply to a motion based on the statute.

II. DETERMINING WHETHER TO MAKE THE MOTION

§27.3 A. Description

The motion for judgment on the pleadings asks the court to rule that:

- A complaint (or cross-complaint or alleged cause of action) does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. CCP §438(c)(1)(B)(ii). See Smiley v Citibank (1995) 11 C4th 138, 145, 44 CR2d 441; Rannard v Lockheed Aircraft Corp. (1945) 26 C2d 149, 151, 157 P2d 1; Saltarelli & Steponovich v Douglas (1995) 40 CA4th 1, 5, 46 CR2d 683; Mathews v State ex rel Dep't of Transp. (1978) 82 CA3d 116, 119, 145 CR 443.
- An answer or alleged defense does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense. CCP §438(c)(1)(A). See MacIsaac v Pozzo (1945) 26 C2d 809, 812, 161 P2d 449; Dobbins v Hardister (1966) 242 CA2d 787, 791, 51 CR 866.

The court does not have subject matter jurisdiction of the cause of action alleged in the complaint. CCP §438(c)(1)(B)(i). The court may also grant a motion for judgment on the pleadings on its own motion on the same bases. CCP §438(c)(3).

Judgment on the pleadings may also be sought under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Fed R Civ P 12(c). In addition to the bases discussed above, a declaratory judgment may be sought when there are no facts in dispute under the complaint and a party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Wolfe v George (9th Cir 2007) 486 F3d 1120 (challenging constitutionality of California's vexatious litigant law (CCP §391)).

B. Other Procedures Compared

1. General Demurrer

§27.4 a. Time Limitations for Motion

A motion for judgment on the pleadings is basically a general demurrer, except that there are fewer time constraints. Like a general demurrer, a motion for judgment on the pleadings can address only the defects that appear either on the face of the pleading or of which judicial notice may be taken. CCP §438(d). Thus, the grounds for a motion for judgment on the pleadings are the same as for a general demurrer, i.e., failure to state a cause of action. See Smiley v Citibank (1995) 11 C4th 138, 145, 44 CR2d 441; Hejmadi v AMFAC, Inc. (1988) 202 CA3d 525, 535, 249 CR 5 (summary judgment motion treated as motion for judgment on pleadings).

The main difference between a motion for a judgment on the pleadings and a general demurrer is that a motion for judgment on the pleadings may be made after the time to demur has expired. CCP §438(f). A motion may not be made under CCP §438 if a pretrial conference order has been entered under CCP §575, or within 30 days after the initial trial date, whichever is later, without court permission. CCP §438(e).

Before the addition of CCP §438, a motion for judgment on the pleadings could be made at any time, even at trial. However, in view of CCP §430.80, which provides that grounds for a general demurrer are never waived, it seems likely that the former nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings may be made after the time for making the statutory motion has expired when the pleadings fail to state a cause of action. See also Smiley v Citibank (1995) 11 C4th 138, 145 n2, 44 CR2d 441 (court noted enactment of §438 in upholding common law motion for judgment on the pleadings); Saltarelli & Steponovich v Douglas (1995) 40 CA4th 1, 5, 46 CR2d 683 (court treated defective summary judgment motion as "nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings"); 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §187 (5th ed 2008).

Code of Civil Procedure §438(g) requires that there be a material change in the applicable case or statutory law if the moving party had previously unsuccessfully demurred on the same grounds. A party who has not demurred may move for judgment on the pleadings whether or not a change has occurred in the applicable law.

PRACTICE TIP: Unless there is a possibility that the complaint will be dismissed in its entirety (i.e., the complaint cannot be amended to state a cause of action), some attorneys believe that a demurrer serves only to educate the plaintiff on the weaknesses of the case. These attorneys will answer and allege affirmative defenses to a defective complaint, and then file a motion for judgment on the pleadings after discovery has solidified the plaintiff's position and when defects in a cause of action may be more difficult to cure.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.5 b. When Demurrer Should Be Filed

The defendant may move for judgment on the pleadings after having filed an answer and the time for the defendant to demur has expired, instead of demurring. CCP §438(f)(2). See Dias v California Employment Stabilization Comm'n (1952) 113 CA2d 374, 248 P2d 427. However, if the defendant decides to challenge the complaint, it is usually better to file a demurrer. See chap 23. Statutes and rules provide safeguards for a demurring party that are not guaranteed to a party moving for judgment on the pleadings. Also, certain defenses, e.g., statute of limitations, may be deemed waived if they are not raised by demurrer or answer. See Petersen v W.T. Grant Co. (1974) 41 CA3d 217, 223, 115 CR 874.

The plaintiff may move for judgment on the pleadings after an answer has been filed and the time to demur has expired or may demur to the answer. CCP §438(f)(1). It is usually preferable to demur if the plaintiff discovers the defect in the answer in the 10 days normally allotted to demur to an answer. CCP §430.40(b). Because the demurrer is a procedure with which the court may be more familiar, the judge may find it easier to sustain a demurrer than to grant a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

§27.6 2. Motion to Strike

A motion for judgment on the pleadings may sometimes be a successful alternative to a motion to strike (see chap 24). For instance, motions for judgment on the pleadings have been granted in the following circumstances:

- The pleading was "evasive, frivolous, or sham" (see Adjustment Corp. v Hollywood Hardware & Paint Co. (1939) 35 CA2d 566, 569, 96 P2d 161);
- Denials raised no issues, because improperly made on information and belief (see Dobbins v Hardister (1966) 242 CA2d 787, 51 CR 866);
- Specific allegations or admissions contradicted the general allegations in the same pleading (see Hardy v Admiral Oil Co. (1961) 56 C2d 836, 841, 16 CR 894); and
- The answer to a verified complaint was not verified (see H. G. Bittleston Law & Collection Agency v Howard (1916) 172 C 357, 362, 156 P 515).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.7 3. Summary Judgment

A motion for judgment on the pleadings tests the sufficiency of the pleadings. The purpose of a motion for summary judgment is to learn whether there are any triable issues of material fact and thus whether the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law (see chap 36). However, a motion for summary judgment necessarily includes a test of the sufficiency of the pleadings, and, as such, its legal effect is similar to a motion for judgment on the pleadings. Durbin v Fletcher (1985) 165 CA3d 334, 341, 211 CR 483.

Because the court may look only to the face of the pleading under attack and to matters that may be judicially noticed in a motion for judgment on the pleadings, a motion for summary judgment is often a preferred procedure because it may be supported by evidence. However, a purported motion for summary judgment not supported by admissible evidence may be treated as a motion for judgment on the pleadings. See Mulkey v Reitman (1966) 64 C2d 529, 531, 50 CR 881; Saltarelli & Steponovich v Douglas (1995) 40 CA4th 1, 5, 46 CR2d 683; Hejmadi v AMFAC, Inc. (1988) 202 CA3d 525, 535, 249 CR 5.

PRACTICE TIP: In deciding whether to file a motion for summary judgment as opposed to a motion for judgment on the pleadings, counsel should carefully analyze whether sufficiency of the pleadings or sufficiency of the evidence will be tested. Note the court's opinion in Hejmadi v AMFAC, Inc. (1988) 202 CA3d 525, 536, 249 CR 5: "In our opinion it was inappropriate and bad motion practice for defendants to submit to the court for summary adjudication, matters which essentially tested the sufficiency of the pleadings. Nor was it appropriate for the trial court to decide pleading sufficiency questions as issues without substantial controversy." When there is substantial uncertainty, the better course is to file both a motion for judgment on the pleadings and a motion for summary judgment in the alternative.

C. Effect of Motion; Timing

§27.8 1. Before Trial

A successful, or even partially successful, motion for judgment on the pleadings before trial can eliminate a cause of action or defense and thus narrow the issues. An order granting a motion with leave to amend may require the opposing party to clarify causes of action or defenses. The amendment may thus spotlight further deficiencies in the asserted cause of action or defense.

A motion for judgment on the pleadings may be made at any time after the pleading under attack has been filed and the time to demur has expired and before final judgment has been entered. Shabrick v Moore (1961) 195 CA2d 56, 59, 15 CR 310. See Stoops v Abbassi (2002) 100 CA4th 644, 650, 122 CR2d 747. See generally 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §193 (5th ed 2008). However, the court's permission must be obtained to file a statutory motion after a pretrial conference order has been entered under CCP §575 or within 30 days after the initial trial date, whichever is later. CCP §438(e). But see §27.3.

PRACTICE TIP: Because the opposing party is normally given an opportunity to amend the pleading (see §27.19), many counsel wait to file the motion until after some discovery (deposition, interrogatories) has committed the opposing party to a certain position. Doing so may foreclose the possibility of the opposing party's tailoring the evidence to support the addition of facts to an amended pleading.

A party may move for judgment on the pleadings even when a demurrer on the same grounds was previously overruled if a material change has occurred in the applicable law. CCP §438(g). See Donohue v State (1986) 178 CA3d 795, 799, 224 CR 57.

Questions remain about whether the former nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings may be made if no material change has been made in the applicable law. Before CCP §438(g) added the requirement of a change in applicable law, when a demurrer was erroneously overruled, the demurring party could raise the same issue regarding sufficiency of the pleadings by a motion for judgment on the pleadings. If that motion was erroneously denied, the moving party could, at the next opportunity, file a second motion on the same grounds for judgment on the pleadings. 178 CA3d at 800. See also 6 Witkin, Procedure, Proc Without Trial §195.

Several cases suggest that a nonstatutory motion may still be made. See, e.g., Smiley v Citibank (1995) 11 C4th 138, 145 n2, 44 CR2d 441 (court noted enactment of CCP §438 in upholding common law motion for judgment on the pleadings); Saltarelli & Steponovich v Douglas (1995) 40 CA4th 1, 5, 46 CR2d 683 (court treated defective summary judgment motion as "nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings").

A judge who has overruled a demurrer is not bound by that ruling and may grant a motion for judgment on the pleadings. See Davis v City of Santa Ana (1952) 108 CA2d 669, 684, 239 P2d 656. The motion may also be granted by a different judge. See Shabrick v Moore (1961) 195 CA2d 56, 58, 15 CR 310.

However, if a demurrer was previously overruled on the same grounds, it is good practice for the party making a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings to inform the court in the notice of motion or supporting papers when the demurrer was made and by whom it was overruled, and state the reasons the present motion should be granted. This is particularly true, in light of CCP §1008 (disclosure requirements when motion reconsidered or renewed), if a previous motion for judgment on the pleadings was denied, even though there is authority to suggest that it is permissible to continue to raise the issue until the court rules properly. See Donohue v State, supra. See §§12.113-12.118 on motions to reconsider.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.9 2. During Trial

A motion for judgment on the pleadings may be made at any time during trial until entry of judgment. See Stoops v Abbassi (2002) 100 CA4th 644, 650, 122 CR2d 747; Shabrick v Moore (1961) 195 CA2d 56, 59, 15 CR 310. However, the court's permission must be obtained to make the motion. CCP §438(e). Because all parties are before the court, prior written notice is unnecessary. The moving party may state the grounds, and cite or furnish a brief of the authorities relied on. See Morel v Morel (1928) 203 C 417, 264 P 760; Macbeth v West Coast Packing Corp. (1947) 83 CA2d 96, 99, 187 P2d 815.

Any evidence introduced at the trial before the motion was made will not be considered; the court looks only to the face of the pleading. See Lortz v Connell (1969) 273 CA2d 286, 292, 78 CR 6; Silver v Beverly Hills Nat'l Bank (1967) 253 CA2d 1000, 1004, 61 CR 751. If evidence has been received, a motion for nonsuit is usually preferable to a motion for judgment on the pleadings. See Sockett v Gottlieb (1960) 187 CA2d 760, 763, 9 CR 831. A motion for nonsuit has the effect of a demurrer to the evidence; it concedes the truth of the facts presented by the plaintiff, but contends that those facts are insufficient as a matter of law to establish a prima facie case. Conte v Girard Orthopedic Surgeons Med. Group, Inc. (2003) 107 CA4th 1260, 1266, 132 CR2d 855.

PRACTICE TIP: Purposefully delaying the motion until trial is rarely the best tactic. The court may refuse to hear the motion or continue the trial to give the opposing party an opportunity to respond to the motion, be more generous in permitting amendment of the pleading, and permit amendment to conform to proof. See Beverage v Canton Placer Mining Co. (1955) 43 C2d 769, 778, 278 P2d 694. This is particularly true if the party had no prior notice of the pleading defect (e.g., the issue was not raised by demurrer or by an objection in the answer).

III. PROCEDURES

A. Drafting the Motion

§27.10 1. Grounds

The grounds for a motion for judgment on the pleadings are the same as the grounds for a general demurrer—failure to state a cause of action or defense, or lack of subject matter jurisdiction. CCP §438(c)(1)(B)(i). The motion performs the same functions as a general demurrer and therefore admits all material and issuable facts pleaded. Barker v Hull (1987) 191 CA3d 221, 224, 236 CR 285.

The grounds of the motion must appear on the face of the challenged pleading or from any matter of which the court may take judicial notice. If the motion is based on matters of which the court may take judicial notice under Evid C §§452-453, the matters must be specified in the notice of motion or in the supporting points and authorities. CCP §438(d).

The statement of grounds in the motion may refer to parts of the pleading under attack rather than to the whole pleading (CCP §438(c)(2)), e.g.:

- The first cause of action in the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action;
- The first defense does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to any cause of action in the complaint; or
- The answer does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to plaintiff's first cause of action.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/27 Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings/§27.11 2. Supporting Papers

§27.11 2. Supporting Papers

When made before trial, a written notice of motion must be served and filed. CCP §438(i)(2). A memorandum in support of the motion must accompany the notice of motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113.

Because a motion for judgment on the pleadings attacks only the face of the pleadings and does not reach evidentiary issues, declarations and affidavits containing evidentiary material in support of the motion are not appropriate. CCP §438(d). However, a declaration disclosing a prior motion for judgment on the pleadings or a declaration for the limited purpose of showing that counsel has met and conferred with the opposing party is proper.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.12 3. Request for Judicial Notice

A request may be made for the court to take judicial notice of matters within the reach of Evid C §452, including the court's records. Under Evid C §453, judicial notice is compulsory on request. The request must be made in a separate document listing the specific items for which notice is requested and must comply with Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(c). Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(l). For form, see §12.143.

The requesting party must furnish the court with enough information to allow judicial notice to be taken. Generally, the party requesting judicial notice should provide the court and each party with a copy of the material to be judicially noticed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(c). If the request pertains to material that is part of a court file, the requesting party should specify in writing which part of the file is to be noticed, and make arrangements with the clerk to have the file in the courtroom for the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.13 4. Filing and Service

The motion and supporting memorandum of points and authorities and request for judicial notice, if included, must be filed and served no later than 16 court days before the hearing. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). If service is by mail, that time must be extended as provided in CCP §1005(b). The court order may shorten these time limits. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(b). On law and motion papers generally, see chaps 11-12.

§27.14 B. Opposing the Motion

A party whose pleading has been attacked by a motion for judgment on the pleadings is entitled to file points and authorities in opposition to the motion. See Moore v California Minerals Prods. Corp. (1953) 115 CA2d 834, 836, 252 P2d 1005. In addition, the party may:

- Move for leave to amend, and offer an amendment to cure the claimed defects before the hearing;
- Permit judgment to be taken eliminating part of the pleading and proceed on remaining causes of action or defenses;
- Permit judgment to be taken and entered, then appeal from the judgment; or
- Oppose the motion, and if it is granted, move for leave to amend to cure matters ruled defective.

See also §§27.18-27.20.

Opposition papers may also be accompanied by a request for the court to take judicial notice. See §27.12. Opposition to the motion must be filed and served at least nine court days before the hearing. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). The opposition papers must be served by personal delivery, fax, express mail, or other method consistent with CCP §§1010-1013, and reasonably calculated to ensure delivery by the close of the next business day after the papers are filed. CCP §1005(c).

§27.15 C. Reply Papers

Any reply papers by the moving party must be filed and served at least 5 court days before the hearing. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). The reply papers must be served by personal delivery, fax, express mail, or other method consistent with CCP §§1010-1013, and reasonably calculated to ensure delivery by the close of the next business day after the papers are filed. CCP §1005(c).

§27.16 D. Attending the Hearing

Unless satisfied with a previously announced tentative ruling, or the court permits telephone appearances, counsel for the parties normally attend the hearing on the motion. On court hearing procedures generally, see chap 12.

The opposing party's failure to attend the hearing does not constitute a waiver of any cause of action or defense, and the court must still rule on the sufficiency of the pleading. See Dobbins v Hardister (1966) 242 CA2d 787, 797, 51 CR 866. If the defective pleading can be corrected, the court must grant leave to amend, even though the party opposing the motion was not in court to request leave. See Pylon, Inc. v Olympic Ins. Co. (1969) 271 CA2d 643, 656, 77 CR 72 (summary judgment based on facts alleged in pleadings; no evidence presented to court).

IV. COURT RULING

A. Guiding Principles

§27.17 1. Generally Only Allegations in Pleading or Matters Judicially Noticed May Be Considered

In ruling on a motion for judgment on the pleadings the court can consider only the allegations in the pleading under attack, and matters of which the court must or may take judicial notice. CCP §438(d); Colberg, Inc. v State ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works (1967) 67 C2d 408, 412, 62 CR 401; Kachig v Boothe (1971) 22 CA3d 626, 630, 99 CR 393; Cristmat, Inc. v County of Los Angeles (1971) 15 CA3d 590, 598, 93 CR 325.

In a motion attacking an otherwise sufficient complaint, the defendant cannot refer to defenses asserted in the answer. The court must "view the complaint in isolation" to determine whether it states a cause of action. Hughes v Western MacArthur Co. (1987) 192 CA3d 951, 955, 237 CR 738; Elmore v Tingley (1926) 78 CA 460, 464, 248 P 706.

In some instances, however, the plaintiff has used allegations in the defendant's answer to cure a defective complaint. Way v Shaver (1906) 2 CA 650, 84 P 283 (answer supplied essential allegation missing from plaintiff's complaint: complaint failed to allege defendant's denial of trust, but answer denied the trust). See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §188 (5th ed 2008).

In at least one case, a document neither incorporated in the pleadings nor included in a request for judicial notice was considered by the court in a motion for judgment on the pleadings. However, the document was referred to in the complaint (which alleged its legal effect) and a certified copy was attached to the opposing party's trial brief. The appellate court decided that the document was thus before the trial court and its provisions properly considered in connection with a motion for judgment on the pleadings. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co. v Vaughn (1988) 199 CA3d 171, 178, 244 CR 567.

A defendant may successfully move for judgment on the pleadings even when the answer is defective, because the relevant inquiry is whether the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Franklin v Municipal Court (1972) 26 CA3d 884, 899, 103 CR 354.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.18 2. Allegations Must Be Taken to Be True

On a motion by a defendant, allegations of the complaint are taken to be true. Fire Ins. Exch. v Superior Court (2004) 116 CA4th 446, 452, 10 CR3d 617; Sullivan v County of Los Angeles (1974) 12 C3d 710, 714 n3, 117 CR 241; Koehrer v Superior Court (1986) 181 CA3d 1155, 1171, 226 CR 820. However, "admissions" of the truth or falsity of allegations in the pleadings "made for the purpose of ruling on the motion vanish as soon as the motion is ruled upon." Silver v Beverly Hills Nat'l Bank (1967) 253 CA2d 1000, 1005, 61 CR 751.

In considering the parties' allegations, the court must construe the pleadings liberally. CCP §452; Mobil Oil Corp. v Exxon Corp. (1986) 177 CA3d 942, 947, 223 CR 392. Thus a defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings as to the entire complaint should be granted only if there is complete absence of an essential allegation in the cause of action. Rannard v Lockheed Aircraft Corp. (1945) 26 C2d 149, 151, 157 P2d 1; Lortz v Connell (1969) 273 CA2d 286, 291, 78 CR 6.

The court should deny the motion attacking the complaint if the complaint, on its face, states a cause of action, unless the cause of action is conclusively rebutted by matter established by judicial notice. Colberg, Inc. v State ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works (1967) 67 C2d 408, 412, 62 CR 401; Middaugh v Board of Trustees (1975) 45 CA3d 776, 780, 119 CR 826; Kachig v Boothe (1971) 22 CA3d 626, 630, 99 CR 393. See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §§185, 187 (5th ed 2008).

A plaintiff who objects to the sufficiency of the answer by moving for a judgment on the pleadings is asking the court to disregard the answer and to grant the relief requested in the complaint. Therefore, the complaint must state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and the answer must neither raise a material issue nor state facts sufficient to constitute a defense. McClain v City of S. Pasadena (1957) 155 CA2d 423, 430, 318 P2d 199. The judge must deem every allegation of the answer to be true and all allegations of the complaint that are controverted by the answer to be untrue. MacIsaac v Pozzo (1945) 26 C2d 809, 813, 161 P2d 449.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.19 3. Leave to Amend Is Routinely Granted: Failure to Grant Considered Abuse of Discretion

Granting leave to amend a pleading the court finds insufficient is at the trial court's discretion. CCP §438(h)(1); Hejmadi v AMFAC, Inc. (1988) 202 CA3d 525, 536, 249 CR 5. The court may even make its own motion for judgment on the pleadings. See Fire Ins. Exch. v Superior Court (2004) 116 CA4th 446, 451 n2, 10 CR3d 617. However, the court will usually allow leave to amend to correct the deficiency; it may be an abuse of discretion to deny a party an opportunity to amend after granting a motion for judgment on the pleadings, particularly if there is any reasonable probability that the plaintiff might be able to state a good cause of action. See MacIsaac v Pozzo (1945) 26 C2d 809, 815, 161 P2d 449 (denial of leave to amend "would in many cases be an absolute denial of justice"). See also Dobbins v Hardister (1966) 242 CA2d 787, 796, 51 CR 866.

There is even more reason to grant leave to amend when the asserted defects in the pleading were not called to the party's attention by demurrer, or otherwise, early in the case. San Diego Boy Scouts of Am. v City of Escondido (1971) 14 CA3d 189, 194, 92 CR 186. See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §194 (5th ed 2008).

If leave to amend is granted, the party against whom the motion was granted has 30 days to file an amended complaint or answer. CCP §438(h)(2). Note, however, that local fast-track rules may allow less than 30 days.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.20 4. Right to Amend Is Not Unlimited

Despite the liberality with which the court allows a party to amend a pleading, the right to amend is not unqualified. If a party has had several chances to amend a defective pleading and fails to do so (Hardy v Admiral Oil Co. (1961) 56 C2d 836, 842, 16 CR 894), or if the defect is not curable by amendment (Shabrick v Moore (1961) 195 CA2d 56, 60, 15 CR 310), the court may grant the motion for judgment on the pleadings. See also Estate of Marler (1957) 148 CA2d 30, 35, 306 P2d 105 (party's unreasonable delay in amending pleading when answer had raised defect).

Although the court may not consider matters outside the pleadings in ruling on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the court may consider evidentiary matters in exercising its discretion in determining a party's motion to amend. Lortz v Connell (1969) 273 CA2d 286, 292, 78 CR 6 (defendant's motion for judgment on pleadings and plaintiff's motion to amend complaint made orally during trial).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.21 B. Order

An order denying a motion for judgment on the pleadings may be a minute order recorded by the court clerk during the hearing. The order is not appealable (on other procedures available after denial, see §§27.22-27.25), and the lawsuit will proceed on the pleadings as originally filed.

An order granting a motion for judgment against an entire pleading may also be a minute order, or the prevailing party may prepare a proposed order (see form in §27.29). The order itself is not appealable. Old Town Dev. Corp. v Urban Renewal Agency (1967) 249 CA2d 313, 317, 57 CR 426. The moving party should prepare a form of judgment, submit it to the judge for signature, and ask the clerk to enter it in the judgment book. The judgment is entered as a matter of course. See CCP §438(h)(3); Le Breton v Stanley Contracting Co. (1911) 15 CA 429, 434, 114 P 1028. The judgment so entered is appealable. Old Town Dev. Corp. v Urban Renewal Agency, supra.

If the motion is granted as to fewer than all causes of action alleged in a complaint or cross-complaint, or as to one or more defenses in an answer that nevertheless raises triable issues, a formal written order is appropriate to show what issues remain. Such an order is not a judgment. See Budrow v Wheatcraft (1953) 115 CA2d 517, 522, 252 P2d 637, disapproved on other grounds in Carney v Simmonds (1957) 49 C2d 84, 315 P2d 305. The lawsuit will proceed on the remaining issues. See Deming v Smith (1937) 19 CA2d 683, 685, 66 P2d 454. When the final judgment on those issues is rendered, it can show the causes or defenses as to which the judgment on the pleadings was given. See Northern Light Mining Co. v Blue Goose Mining Co. (1914) 25 CA 282, 143 P 540.

With multiple parties, a judgment on the pleadings may be entered in favor of one party at the time the motion is granted, and the court may then try the case among the remaining parties. See Macbeth v West Coast Packing Corp. (1947) 83 CA2d 96, 187 P2d 815; O'Moore v Driscoll (1933) 135 CA 770, 28 P2d 438.

NOTE: Whatever the order, CCP §1019.5 provides that when a motion is granted or denied, unless the court otherwise orders, the prevailing party must give notice of the court's decision or order to all other parties or their attorneys, unless notice is waived by all parties in open court and is entered in the minutes.

V. PROCEDURES AFTER COURT RULING

§27.22 A. Denial of Motion for Judgment on Pleadings

An order denying a motion for judgment on the pleadings is not appealable. The losing party may obtain a review in the trial court by motion for reconsideration under CCP §1008 (see §§12.114-12.118), or the filing of a new motion for judgment on the pleadings, and in the appellate court by appeal from the final judgment when it is entered. If the law clearly establishes the moving party's right to the order sought or if the motion raises questions of significant legal impact, a denial may be reviewed by writ of mandate. See, e.g., Safeway Stores, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 190 CA3d 713, 716, 235 CR 636.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/27 Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings/§27.23 B. Motion for Judgment on Pleadings Granted

§27.23 B. Motion for Judgment on Pleadings Granted

A party against whom a motion for judgment on the pleadings has been granted may pursue many of the same steps available after a ruling on a demurrer:

- Move for reconsideration (see De La Beckwith v Superior Court (1905) 146 C 496, 501, 80 P 717 (demurrer case));
- Appeal from the judgment entered (see Budrow v Wheatcraft (1953) 115 CA2d 517, 522, 252 P2d 637, disapproved on other grounds in Carney v Simmonds (1957) 49 C2d 84, 90, 315 P2d 305); or
- Petition for an extraordinary writ.

The party against whom a judgment on the pleadings has been improperly granted may also move for a new trial (even if there has been no prior trial) under CCP §657. See Carney v Simmonds, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.24 C. Issues on Appeal

An appeal from a judgment on the pleadings is reviewed in the same way as a judgment of dismissal following the sustaining of a general demurrer. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co. v Vaughn (1988) 199 CA3d 171, 178, 244 CR 567; Barker v Hull (1987) 191 CA3d 221, 224, 236 CR 285. Because the motion presents only issues of law, the issues before the appellate court are the same as those before the trial court. See Fire Ins. Exch. v Superior Court (2004) 116 CA4th 446, 453, 10 CR3d 617; Clack v State ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works (1969) 275 CA2d 743, 750, 80 CR 274.

In reviewing a judgment on the pleadings granted against plaintiff, the appellate court should disregard imperfections of form that could be cured by amendment, and decide whether the facts pleaded and judicially noticed entitle the plaintiff to any relief, including setting aside a prior judgment. Kachig v Boothe (1971) 22 CA3d 626, 631, 99 CR 393. Although an appellate court usually indulges every reasonable presumption in favor of sustaining the trial court, the reverse is true when a plaintiff appeals from a judgment on the pleadings; statements in the complaint are the framework for review of the judgment. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co. v Vaughn, supra; Crain v Electronic Memories & Magnetics Corp. (1975) 50 CA3d 509, 512, 123 CR 419.

§27.25 D. Effect of Judgment: Res Judicata

A judgment on the pleadings is a judgment on the merits, rather than a dismissal of the plaintiff's suit or a striking of the defendant's answer. Davis v City of Santa Ana (1952) 108 CA2d 669, 686, 239 P2d 656. See generally 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §185 (5th ed 2008).

The judgment is res judicata to the same extent as a judgment entered after a general demurrer is sustained without leave to amend. Pylon, Inc. v Olympic Ins. Co. (1969) 271 CA2d 643, 655, 77 CR 72. The judgment may bar a subsequent action or defense alleging the same facts, but it does not bar a subsequent action or defense raising new issues or alleging new facts in support of the issues raised in the earlier cause or defense. Keidatz v Albany (1952) 39 C2d 826, 828, 249 P2d 264.

NOTE: When a defendant has moved unsuccessfully for judgment on the pleadings and has then sought review by extraordinary writ, the summary denial of the writ, without opinion, is not res judicata as to the underlying motion and will not prevent the defendant from renewing the motion in the trial court. See Donohue v State (1986) 178 CA3d 795, 801, 224 CR 57.

§27.26 VI. DIAGNOSTIC QUESTIONS

Because the legal basis for the motion for judgment on the pleadings is identical to a general demurrer, counsel should review the diagnostic checklists on demurrers (see §§23.68-23.69):

Plaintiff

1. Has the time to demur expired? If so, a motion for judgment on the pleadings could accomplish the same result as a demurrer.
2. Has a previous demurrer or motion for judgment on the pleadings been overruled? In that event, a new motion for judgment on the pleadings could still be appropriate (see §27.8).
3. Are there alternatives for the plaintiff (see §§27.4-27.7) that would better accomplish the same objective as a motion for judgment on the pleadings?
    - Demurrer to answer (see chap 23)
    - Move to strike the answer (see chap 24)
    - Move for summary judgment against defendant (see chap 36)
    - Use discovery to clear up any uncertainty in the answer

Defendant

4. Are there alternatives for the defendant (see §§27.4-27.7) that would better accomplish the same objective as a motion for judgment on the pleadings?
    - Raise the objection to the complaint in the answer (see chap 25; see Practice Tip in §27.4)
    - Move to strike the complaint (see chap 24)
    - Move for summary judgment against plaintiff (see chap 36)
    - Move to dismiss (see chap 39)
    - Use discovery to clear up any uncertainty in the complaint

On the various discovery methods (e.g., oral depositions, interrogatories, demands for production of documents and electronically stored information) authorized by the Civil Discovery Act (CCP §§2016.010-2036.050), see California Civil Discovery Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

Comment: See §§27.10-27.16 (motion for judgment on the pleadings), §§12.7-12.29 (formal requirements for notices of motion). Because the court must base its ruling only on the face of the pleading (or on matters that may be judicially noticed), an evidentiary declaration giving evidence in support of the motion is not proper. See §27.11.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On when preprinted Judicial Council forms must or may be filed with the court, see Cal Rules of Ct 1.30-1.44, 2.131-2.134 and the discussion in §11.27.

I. THE COURT HAS POWER TO MAKE JUDGMENTS ON THE PLEADINGS.

Every Court has inherent power to provide for the orderly conduct of proceedings before it, and to control its processes and orders and to make them conform to law and justice. Code of Civil Procedure §128(a)(3), (a)(8). Judgment on the pleadings is an established practice in California courts. See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §185 (5th ed 2008). Thus, the Court has the power to give judgment on the pleadings when there are grounds.

II. GROUNDS FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS INCLUDE FAILURE TO STATE CAUSE OF ACTION.

A party's failure to state a cause of action constitutes grounds for judgment on the pleadings. Macbeth v West Coast Packing Corp. (1947) 83 CA2d 96, 187 P2d 815. Defendant has a cross-complaint alleging _ _[explain]_ _, which fails to state a cause of action in that _ _[list reasons with authority to support arguments]_ _. Therefore, plaintiff is entitled to judgment on the pleadings and requests the Court to order dismissal of defendant's cross-complaint and order entry of judgment in plaintiff's favor as to all causes of action contained in the cross-complaint.

I. INTRODUCTION

§28.1 A. Scope of Chapter; Terminology

Interpleader is a remedy that invokes the court's equitable power to dispose of a fund or property (the property or "the res") to which there are conflicting claims. The party in possession of the property (the "stakeholder") uses the remedy to bring claimants before the court, which can then adjudicate the merits of the claims and disburse the property. The remedy may be used by (a) a defendant who asserts a claim other than that of the plaintiff in the same action (CCP §386(a)) or (b) anyone faced with multiple claims that may give rise to double or multiple liability (CCP §386(b)).

A stakeholder who asserts no personal claim to the property (a "mere" or "disinterested" stakeholder) may move the court to allow it to deposit the property with the court and be discharged from further involvement, leaving the claimants to litigate their claims. A disinterested stakeholder may apply to the court for an attorney fee for initiating the interpleader proceeding.

An "interested" stakeholder asserts a claim to the property and continues to participate in the litigation.

NOTE: The interpleader remedy has broadened since its early origins and permits a party to invoke the court's assistance in distributing the property instead of doing so unilaterally at the party's own peril. California interpleader is now similar in scope to federal interpleader. See §28.3.

This chapter sets forth an overview of the procedure (see §§28.3-28.23), stakeholders' procedures (see §§28.24-28.38), claimants' procedures (see §§28.39-28.40), joined defendants' procedures (see §28.41), trial (see §§28.42-28.44), and forms (see §§28.45-28.50).

II. OVERVIEW

§28.3 A. Federal Interpleader

Federal interpleader (both "rule" and "statutory") is available and may be an appropriate remedy, depending on tactical considerations such as obtaining jurisdiction over the various claimants, choice of forum, and calendar considerations. See §28.24.

Substantively, state and federal interpleader rules and authority are similar in tactical considerations and requisites, and both are predicated on the same equitable concepts.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/28 Interpleader/§28.4 B. Traditional Requirements Eliminated

§28.4 B. Traditional Requirements Eliminated

The trend of interpleader law has been to broaden its availability and to eliminate the following traditional requirements:

- Identity (that the same thing or obligation must be claimed by all parties against whom relief is demanded);
- Privity (that adverse claims must all be derived from a common source);
- Lack of interest (that the parties seeking relief must not have or claim an interest in the subject matter); and
- Indifference (that the parties seeking relief must have incurred no independent liability to any claimant).

Under CCP §386(a) a defendant in a pending action may substitute a party or file a verified cross-complaint in interpleader and obtain a discharge from liability to the conflicting claimants "although their titles or claims have not a common origin, or are not identical but are adverse to and independent of one another."

The classic method of bringing an interpleader action is set forth in CCP §386(b), which makes it clear that the interpleader remedy is available to any party against whom double or multiple claims are made, specifically authorizes a cross-complaint in interpleader or a separate action, and states that interpleader may be maintained "although the claims have not a common origin, are not identical but are adverse to and independent of one another, or the claims are unliquidated and no liability on the part of the party bringing the action or filing the cross-complaint has arisen." The applicant or interpleading party may deny liability in whole or in part to any or all of the claimants.

The statute explicitly eliminates the requirements of identity, privity, and lack of interest. Liberalized rules for joinder of causes of action and parties have probably eliminated the need for the indifference requirement. The parties must, however, bring an interpleader action without collusion and in good faith. See §28.6.

WARNING: When the interpleading party seeks to join as a defendant another party against whom a claim is being made by another claimant, the claims must arise from the same transaction or occurrence. For example, if an escrow company has multiple claims against it by alleged buyers, it can interplead the instrument and seek to add as a party defendant to the interpleader action the seller of the instrument, if at least one of the claimants has a claim against that seller. Another example is a bus accident in which the insurance carrier for the bus company decides to interplead its policy limits because of the multiplicity of claimants. If one of the claimants has an additional claim from the same accident against another driver, that driver may be joined as a party defendant to the interpleader action.

© The Regents of the University of California

§28.5 C. Two-Stage Procedure

An interpleader action is necessarily "two suits in one." Lincoln Nat'l Life Ins. Co. v Mitchell (1974) 41 CA3d 16, 19, 115 CR 723. The preliminary stage of an interpleader action is simply deciding the stakeholder's right to interplead. If this decision is made in the stakeholder's favor, the second stage is a decision on the merits of the various claims to the stake.

© The Regents of the University of California

§28.6 1. Stakeholder's Right to Interplead

The first stage, generally the one of most interest to the stakeholder, is the determination of the right of the stakeholder to interplead. The stakeholder who disclaims further interest in the money or property may seek dismissal by way of motion, bifurcated or severed trial, motion for summary judgment, stipulation of the parties, or other means.

PRACTICE TIP: A truly disinterested stakeholder should attempt to obtain a dismissal or discharge from the action as quickly as possible to reduce its own fees. The answers to the complaint-in-interpleader may establish the necessary elements for the applicant to seek discharge.

© The Regents of the University of California

§28.7 2. Litigation Between Claimants

A court that has determined that interpleader is the appropriate remedy then determines on the merits the various claimants' right to the property. When there are mutually exclusive claimants, the court may (a) turn the entire property over to one of the claimants or (b) first determine the relative value of the unliquidated claims and whether the respective rights of the claimants call for proportionate shares. There may follow a series of trials in which each claimant's case is litigated separately. The court may also decide to stay the proceedings pending arbitration and then confirm the arbitrator's award. See Dial 800 v Fesbinder (2004) 118 CA4th 32, 45, 12 CR3d 711 (court had subject matter jurisdiction over interpleader action but should stay action pending outcome of arbitration by rabbinical court in Israel under arbitration agreement between the claimants).

EXAMPLE: Such a scenario as the following could arise: An insurer that provides a general liability insurance coverage for a product manufacturer with aggregate limits below the value of the claims against the insured during the policy year interpleads the policy proceeds; each claimant against the insured is compelled to try his or her claim in the interpleader action with each claimant having a separate trial covering issues of liability, comparative fault, and damages; claimants who have successfully proved liability and damages against the insured apply the adjudicated amount of their claim proportionately to the policy proceeds, the insurer presumably retaining an interest in any unextinguished portion. Interpleader would thus protect both the insurer, which should not be compelled to decide the relative validity of competing claims, and the insured, who should not be required to waive the right to disclaim liability to any claimant.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Typical Uses of Interpleader

§28.8 1. Insurance Policy Proceeds

An interpleader action to decide various claimants' right to insurance policy proceeds is a classic use of the interpleader process. If more than one claimant to the proceeds exists, one of the safest approaches for the insurance company is to interplead the proceeds, allowing the court to make the required determinations. This approach avoids problems of potential breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing to an insured or beneficiary of a policy. To enjoy this protection, however, there must be a good faith belief that a conflict exists requiring the court's intervention.

Interpleader can be used when there are conflicting claims to life insurance policy proceeds. See, e.g., Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v Broderick (1925) 196 C 497, 238 P 1034. There are also situations in which the proceeds must be apportioned among various claimants.

Liability insurance companies are also frequently faced with conflicting claims to insurance policy proceeds. One catastrophic occurrence resulting in a multiplicity of claims may jeopardize the policy limits of the insured and give the insurance company the impossible task of choosing among claimants to the proceeds.

EXAMPLE: See State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v Tashire (1967) 386 US 523, 18 L Ed 2d 270, 87 S Ct 1199, against the insurer; a federal interpleader action that arose from a bus accident. The court approved the use of interpleader by the insurer for the driver of the truck that had collided with the bus, even though the injury claims had not been reduced to judgments and there was no right of direct action. The court stated (386 US at 533):

> Were an insurance company required to await reduction of claims to judgment, the first claimant to obtain such judgment or to negotiate a settlement might appropriate all or a disproportionate slice of the fund before his fellow claimants were able to establish their claims. The difficulty such a race to judgment poses for the insurer, and the unfairness which may result to some claimants, were among the principal evils that the interpleader device was intended to remedy.

An insurance company need not disclaim its interests in the balance of the policy proceeds should the aggregate award to the claimants not exceed its policy limits. See CCP §386(b), which allows a party interpleading funds to retain an interest in the fund. Under CCP §386(b) an applicant or interpleading party may also deny liability in whole or in part to any or all of the claimants. It is thus possible for an insurance company facing a multiplicity of claims to interplead the fund, deny insurer liability, deny that the insured is liable to the claimants, deposit the funds in court, and retain an interest in whatever portion of the fund is not ultimately distributed to the claimants. This procedure compels the litigation of all California claims in one forum, without any admission of liability by either the insurer or the insured.

NOTE: An interpleading party retaining an interest in the fund is not entitled to discharge or dismissal and must remain a party to the action. Further, in the case of liability insurance policies, the party probably has an obligation to provide a defense to the insured.

§28.9 2. Resolving Claims to Escrowed Property

An escrow holder confronted with adverse claims to a deposit of money or documents may use the interpleader remedy to, in essence, make the court the escrow holder in its place when the transaction to which the deposit relates has not been consummated. See Security Trust & Sav. Bank v Carlsen (1928) 205 C 309, 271 P 100; Contra Costa Title Co. v Waloff (1960) 184 CA2d 59, 7 CR 358. See also, concerning a trustee rather than an escrow holder, Pacific Loan Mgmt. Corp. v Superior Court (1987) 196 CA3d 1485, 242 CR 547.

NOTE: It can be a misuse of the remedy for a claimant to force a neutral stakeholder to interplead, thereby effectively impounding the funds in question. See Alexander, Claims in Interpleader, Abuse and Remedy, 44 Cal SBJ 210, 212 (1969). Sanctions may result against the misusing claimant; however, the potential for abuse should not preclude the escrow holder from using the remedy. See Fritschiv v Teed (1963) 213 CA2d 718, 29 CR 114 (attorney fee under CCP §386.6 to be paid by claimant); Contra Costa Title Co. v Waloff, supra.

§28.10 3. Determining Right to Bank Deposits

Interpleader can be used to resolve conflicting claims to bank deposits.

EXAMPLE: In White Dragon Prods., Inc. v Performance Guars., Inc. (1987) 196 CA3d 163, 241 CR 745, the plaintiff filed an action of interpleader against certain claimants to compel them to litigate their several claims to a bank account of one of the claimants. In Conner v Bank of Bakersfield (1917) 174 C 400, 163 P 353, interpleader was used to determine conflicting claims to a certified check. See also Continental Nat'l Bank v Stoltz (1920) 46 CA 532, 189 P 712; Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v Mamakos (ND Cal 1972) 57 FRD 198, aff'd (9th Cir 1975) 509 F2d 1217; U.S. v Trans-World Bank (CD Cal 1974) 382 F Supp 1100.

Interpleader was denied in Crocker-Anglo Nat'l Bank v American Trust Co. (1959) 170 CA2d 289, 338 P2d 617, to a bank that failed to make even a partial deposit, but sought an absolute discharge. See also Bank of China v Wells Fargo Bank (9th Cir 1953) 209 F2d 467 (interest and funds withheld); Camp v Oakland Mortgage & Fin. Co. (1931) 212 C 433, 298 P 974 (loan account); Cassidy v Norton (1914) 25 CA 433, 143 P 1057 (substitution of sheriff who levied on account).

§28.11 4. Rents

In Hancock Oil Co. v Hopkins (1944) 24 C2d 497, 510, 150 P2d 463, the court (a) held that a tenant could maintain an interpleader action against its lessor and others despite the rule that a tenant may not question a landlord's title, (b) stated that the remedial interpleader statute should be liberally construed, but (c) cautioned that the tenant may not maintain such a suit on the mere pretext or suspicion of double vexation.

See Signal Oil & Gas Co. v Taliaferro (1962) 207 CA2d 271, 24 CR 593 (lessee discharged as long as it deposited rental payments with court); Spangler v Spangler (1909) 11 CA 321, 104 P 995.

NOTE: It is a misuse of interpleader to use it to exert unfair pressure on the lessor by denial of access to or interest on rents in order to secure a negotiating advantage with respect to an outstanding dispute. See analogous escrow situations in §28.9. Here, however, because it is not a claimant but the interpleading party who is misusing the procedure, the appropriate sanction may be denial of the remedy.

§28.12 5. Properties Subject to Levy

An action in interpleader may be brought by a party served with a writ of attachment, garnishment, or execution.

EXAMPLE: In Leroy v Bella Vista Inv. Co. (1963) 222 CA2d 369, 35 CR 128, the maker of a promissory note was granted interpleader on an action relating to an amount subject to garnishment (less than the amount due on the note). In Bank of Cal. v Mott Iron Works (1896) 113 C 409, 45 P 674, a bank held collected notes for the defendant, and there was a conflict between the defendant's assignee and the alleged garnisher of the notes. See also Durkin v Durkin (1955) 133 CA2d 283, 284 P2d 185 (liens on bank accounts); Williams v Gilmore (1942) 51 CA2d 684, 125 P2d 539 (principal and interest on judgments—conflict between assignee and garnisher).

A party served with judicial process should ascertain whether the statutes enabling the judicial process provide immunity or a means to adjudicate the dispute.

EXAMPLE: In Wechsler v Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1976) 57 CA3d 563, 129 CR 380, the Internal Revenue Service and the taxpayer filed claims to an account held by a savings institution. Rather than interplead the sums, the institution complied with the levy and turned the funds over to the IRS. Under applicable provisions of the Internal Revenue Code, the institution was immune from suit by the taxpayer.

§28.13 6. Miscellaneous Uses

Interpleader has been used to determine claims:

- To money paid by a defendant tortfeasor as a compromise in a prior wrongful death action (Changaris v Marvel (1964) 231 CA2d 308, 41 CR 774);
- To surplus funds of a trustee's sale (Ahmanson Bank & Trust Co. v Tepper (1969) 269 CA2d 333, 74 CR 774);
- To trust funds (Fox v Sutton (1900) 127 C 515, 59 P 939);
- Of attorneys against a trustee in settlement of a will (Sullivan v Lusk (1907) 7 CA 186, 94 P 91, disapproved on other grounds in Monogram Co. of Cal. v Kingsley (1951) 38 C2d 28, 237 P2d 265);
- To dividends on corporate stock (Cross v Eureka Lake & Yuba Canal Co. (1887) 73 C 302, 14 P 885);
- To corporate debts to stockholders (Interlocking Stone Co. v Scribner (1912) 19 CA 344, 126 P 178); and
- To impounded funds of a criminal defendant (People v Vermouth (1974) 42 CA3d 353, 116 CR 675).

E. Other Procedures Compared

§28.14 1. Declaratory Relief

A stakeholder may seek declaratory relief under CCP §1060 (see chap 35) and move for deposit of the property in court under CCP §572 (see chap 34).

WARNING: Code of Civil Procedure §§1060 and 572 do not provide for immediate discharge of the party making the deposit. Moreover, an interpleading party is immunized from damages for further interest and for detention of property once delivered after the date of deposit (see CCP §386(c)). Also, CCP §386.6 allows an award of an attorney fee.

A claimant that takes the initiative by bringing its own action for declaratory relief (see Pasadena Inv. Co. v Peerless Cas. Co. (1955) 134 CA2d Supp 902, 286 P2d 1014), might avoid reduction of the funds by stakeholder and attorney fees, and a declaratory relief action may be entitled to priority. However, the stakeholder, a defendant in the declaratory relief action brought by the claimant, can bring its own cross-complaint in interpleader under CCP §386(a) or (b). See chap 26.

© The Regents of the University of California

§28.15 2. Summary Judgment

A motion for summary judgment may be used to determine that one or more claims to a fund are so insubstantial that they may be disposed of without trial. The defendant stakeholder may force joinder of a claimant or claimants by demurrer under CCP §430.10(d) (see also CCP §389) and move for total or partial summary judgment against the plaintiff, it may file a cross-complaint for declaratory relief and move for summary judgment against the other claimant or claimants, or it may file a verified cross-complaint in interpleader under CCP §386(a)-(b).

If all claimants are parties to the lawsuit and will be bound by the judgment, the stakeholder may acquiesce in a summary judgment against itself. As long as all parties have notice, participate fully, and no collusion is shown, the stakeholder may be bound by the judgment and may safely satisfy the judgment of the prevailing party under a court order. However, as a losing defendant the stakeholder may be liable for costs, and possibly attorney fees, depending on the circumstances.

§28.16 3. Deposit in Court

Code of Civil Procedure §§572-574 provide for deposit in court of "money or other thing capable of delivery, which, being the subject of litigation," is held by a trustee or by any party other than the one to whom it is due. CCP §572. These provisions allow a party (a claimant) to move for an order requiring deposit by a party (a stakeholder) who admits the obligation in its pleading or during deposition or other examination, who has not elected to interplead and deposit. There is no express limit on the types of action in which deposit in court may be used. See generally chap 34.

© The Regents of the University of California

§28.17 4. Consolidation; Severance

To the extent that interpleader is intended to prevent multiplicity of litigation, with its consequent potential for conflicting results, interpleader is itself a form of consolidation, and a replacement remedy may be a motion to consolidate. See chap 43 on consolidation.

Alternatively, a defendant stakeholder may choose to seek a severance of its portion of the trial to allow issues pertaining to this stakeholder to be litigated first and to allow for the potential removal of the stakeholder or party before the more lengthy and complex trial between other claimants. See chap 43.

© The Regents of the University of California

§28.18 5. Bill of Peace

An equitable bill of peace is an injunction staying all separate actions except the one to be tried and may be an appropriate device to prevent multiplicity of lawsuits when separate actions involving common questions of fact and law are pending in different jurisdictions (and are therefore not subject to consolidation). See generally 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §348 (5th ed 2008).

Under CCP §386(f) interpleader provides for enjoining proceedings affecting the rights or obligations of a party to the interpleader.

NOTE: The court's ability to enjoin is limited to proceedings in California that involve a party to the interpleader. The language of CCP §386(f) does not purport to enjoin any court or person other than a direct party to the interpleader itself.

Federal interpleader. In State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v Tashire (1967) 386 US 523, 18 L Ed 2d 270, 87 S Ct 1199, the court refused to sanction the concept of enjoining all suits arising from a mass accident, because it would deprive the injured parties of substantial rights and because the interpleading insurance company had a more limited interest in the outcome of the litigation.

§28.19 6. Contractual Indemnity

A stakeholder faced with competing claims may try to negotiate a settlement with a claimant who has an apparently valid claim, in exchange for an indemnity agreement. The terms of the indemnity agreement would have to be drafted very carefully, guaranteeing that the claimant, if any later dispute arose, would pay all damages, costs, and attorney fees and would indemnify and hold harmless the stakeholder. The advantage of this procedure is that the claimant gets the immediate use of the funds, but it can be risky for the stakeholder if adequate security is not given. See CC §2778 on rules for construing indemnity contracts.

WARNING: Indemnity language has often been a trap for the unwary practitioner. Some indemnification, language that seems all-encompassing creates a "general" indemnification agreement that may be defeated if there is negligence on the part of the parties seeking indemnification. See, e.g., McDonald & Kruse v San Jose Steel Co. (1972) 29 CA3d 413, 105 CR 725. Effective indemnity language must be specific enough to reflect the negotiation of risk between the parties (see C.I. Eng'rs v Johnson & Turner (1983) 140 CA3d 1011, 189 CR 824).

A stakeholder who is sufficiently disinterested to be considering contractual indemnification should consider whether to use such an agreement or whether the stakeholder will be better protected by immediately filing the interpleader action and seeking discharge and reimbursement of attorney fees.

NOTE: Indemnification is appropriate when a particular claimant has a claim that seems overwhelmingly valid, but other parties are making claims as well, and the stakeholder is concerned about whether a good faith dispute in fact exists among the claimants. Even in such a case, interpleader may be a safer remedy.

§28.20 7. Alternative Dispute Resolution; Settlement Conferences

Various means of alternative dispute resolution discussed in chap 45 might well work for funds or property that is the subject of multiple claims.

In a particular court, retired judges may serve, for a fee, as settlement officers, and the stakeholder could call for a voluntary settlement conference using such a judge. This solution requires all known claimants to attend the conference.

If the parties can reach an agreement and execute the appropriate releases, all parties have been saved the expense of the interpleader litigation. If the parties cannot agree, the stakeholder can then interplead the funds and can use the failure of the settlement conference to demonstrate the good faith nature of the dispute.

NOTE: Attempts to settle have proved especially useful for multiple claims to an insurance policy that may not be sufficient to fully satisfy all claims. The insurer's incentive to call for a voluntary settlement conference is to avoid the expense of an interpleader action, which may include the cost of defending its insured as well as the cost of filing the interpleader action. Moreover, the claimants are made aware of the expenses of attempting to prove their claims, and they may be drawn by the prospect of receiving the immediate benefits of the money.

The insurer who seeks to resolve disputes by settlement must make certain that all known claimants to the policy limits agree to attend, and must take all necessary steps to protect the interests of the insured. The insurer must consider the impact of extinguishing its policy limits if it is possible that additional claims may arise under the policy. An interpleader action allows the insurer to rely on the court to determine the identity of all potential claimants and thus protect the insured. If a voluntary settlement conference is used, it would be wise to obtain the insured's authorization to expend the entire policy limits for claimants who are invited to the conference, assuming that releases protecting the insured can be obtained.

F. Statutory Features

§28.21 1. Special Situations

Statutes other than CCP §386 provide for interpleader to determine (a) the rights of claimants to money withheld under stop notices (CC §§3175, 3214), (b) conflicting claims of title or possession of goods by a bailee or warehouseman (Com C §7603), (c) conflicting assessments of real property by two or more counties (Rev & T C §4988), and (d) disputes on priority of liens on withheld taxes (Rev & T C §26133). These statutes merely state that such situations are proper ones for the use of interpleader and do not specify procedures to be followed. The procedures in CCP §386 apply.

© The Regents of the University of California

§28.22 2. Attorney Fees and Costs

An advantage of the interpleader statute is that the interpleading party may request costs and reasonable attorney fees under CCP §386.6. The recovery of costs and fees is discretionary and depends on the discharge of the party under CCP §386.5, and the court may order them paid out of the funds deposited. The court is also empowered to order that costs and fees be borne by one or more of the adverse claimants.

WARNING: Potential liability for costs and fees should discourage frivolous claims. It should also encourage potential claimants to attempt an early resolution because the funds in dispute may be reduced by the stakeholder's expenses.

The party seeking to recover costs and to obtain fees must follow the procedures in CCP §386.6. Phillips v Barton (1962) 207 CA2d 488, 24 CR 527. Attorney fees are awarded only for services related to interpleader and not those related to a contest between the stakeholder and the interpleaded parties, concerning either the correctness of the amount deposited or the interest of the plaintiff in the funds. Sweeney v McClaran (1976) 58 CA3d 824, 830, 130 CR 205. Attorney fees and costs can be awarded only from the amount deposited with the court, not from interest earned on interpleader accounts. Canal Ins. Co. v Tackett (2004) 117 CA4th 239, 11 CR3d 626. Moreover, if the interpleading party retains the funds rather than depositing the funds with the court, the interpleading party may not recover costs and attorney fees from those retained funds; costs and fees may be awarded only from amounts actually deposited with the court. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v Zinnel (2004) 125 CA4th 393, 22 CR3d 750.

NOTE: Attorney fees to the stakeholder are justified because the stakeholder has aided claimants by promoting early litigation over ownership of the funds, thus preventing multiple lawsuits. Additionally, it would be unfair to burden the stakeholder with attorney fees to guard itself against multiple litigation. See Schirmer Stevedoring Co. v Seaboard Stevedoring Corp. (9th Cir 1962) 306 F2d 188.

Fees are awarded on a discretionary basis and thus depend on a good faith belief that there are conflicting claims. If such a belief has no apparent basis, fees should not be awarded. Prudential Ins. Co. v Burress (SD Cal 1960) 181 F Supp 391; Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v Mamakos (ND Cal 1972) 57 FRD 198, aff'd (9th Cir 1975) 509 F2d 1217. The court must balance the unfairness to the stakeholder in bringing an action in interpleader to protect itself against multiple claims against the unfairness to a valid claimant in being forced to incur attorney fees and litigation costs over a claim in which there is no genuine dispute. See Alexander, Claims in Interpleader, Abuse and Remedy, 44 Cal SBJ 210, 213 (1969). See generally Anno, Allowance of Attorneys' Fees to Party Interpleading Claimants to Funds or Property, 48 ALR2d 190, 220 (1956).

§28.23 3. Staying Other Proceedings

After the commencement of an interpleader action by a complaint or cross-complaint, "[t]he court in which it is filed may enter its order restraining all parties to the action from instituting or further prosecuting any other proceeding in any court in the state affecting the rights and obligations as between the parties to the interpleader until further order of the court." CCP §386(f).

EXAMPLE: The court has the power to enjoin prosecution of all injury and death claims of parties in a multiparty personal injury action arising from a single event. The discretion to stay actions is not unlimited. See California State Dep't of Educ. v Superior Court (1979) 97 CA3d 977, 159 CR 265. Therefore, parties who are aggrieved by such an injunction may ask the court to relieve them of the effects of a stay order. A limitation on the discretion to stay other actions was recognized in the federal interpleader case, State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v Tashire (1967) 386 US 523, 535, 18 L Ed 2d 270, 87 S Ct 1199. The district court was held to have had no power in interpleader to affect litigation in a multiparty case between the parties other than the plaintiff in interpleader and persons claiming from the fund.

Code of Civil Procedure §386(f) limits a restraining order to the parties to the action and to other proceedings "affecting the rights and obligations as between the parties to the interpleader." The statute seems not to affect the prosecution by another plaintiff in a separate suit against a defendant in interpleader. The injunction contemplated by CCP §386(f) is limited to other suits brought in California. Parties in interpleader in California who are also confronted with multiple suits in other jurisdictions should consider federal interpleader as a remedy.

NOTE: In California State Dep't of Educ. v Superior Court, supra, the trial court's denial of a request for preliminary injunction under CCP §386(f) was held to be an abuse of discretion once the petitioner in interpleader demonstrated an actual danger of multiple suits; the obligation then shifted to the defendants in interpleader to demonstrate to the court why the interpleader action was inadequate to preserve their rights or how they would be damaged if the court granted the preliminary injunction contemplated by §386(f). The considerations articulated by the United States Supreme Court in State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v Tashire, supra, should guide the exercise of the trial court's discretion.

The ability to restrain further proceedings includes the ability to halt enforcement of judgment proceedings. In Surety Co. of Pac. v Piver (1983) 149 CA3d Supp 29, 197 CR 531, one party of the interpleader action already held a judgment against the surety. When the surety learned of more claimants it filed an interpleader action that was sufficient to restrain enforcement of the original claimant's judgment.

III. STAKEHOLDERS' PROCEDURES

A. Tactical Considerations

§28.24 1. Choosing State or Federal Jurisdiction, Venue

A stakeholder who decides to pursue interpleader must determine whether federal or state jurisdiction should be invoked. One problem facing a California action may be obtaining jurisdiction over the various claimants, which may be more easily achieved with federal jurisdiction. This consideration is especially important because of the CCP §386(f) limitation on enjoining other proceedings. Because §386(f) limits its power to actions brought in California, a stakeholder will not necessarily achieve the peace from multiple litigation that is the object of the interpleader. Another factor is the comparative speed of relief afforded by the federal court. Calendars in many large, urban, California courts, are extremely congested, and a federal court can often resolve matters more expeditiously.

If federal interpleader is to be pursued, venue considerations affect whether to pursue "statutory" interpleader under 28 USC §§1335, 1397, and 2361 or "rule" interpleader under Fed R Civ P 22. Under statutory interpleader, venue is proper in any district where one of the claimants resides. 28 USC §1397. Under rule interpleader, venue is governed by the general venue provisions applicable to civil actions in federal court and may be brought in a district where the party seeking interpleader resides, where all parties to be interpleaded reside, or where the claim arose. Service of process under rule interpleader is governed by Fed R Civ P 4, which requires service to be made within the territorial limits of the state in which the federal court where the action is brought is located. For statutory interpleader, service of process may be made on the parties to be interpleaded anywhere in the United States where they reside or may be found. 28 USC §2361.

PRACTICE TIP: Statutory interpleader often provides benefits in regard to venue and service of process. The stakeholder may select any federal district in which one or more of the claimants reside as the venue of the action and may then serve process on any party in the United States.

"Rule" interpleader actions require complete diversity of citizenship, i.e., diversity of citizenship between the stakeholder and all of the claimants, but "statutory" interpleader requires only minimal diversity, i.e., diversity of citizenship between any two claimants. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v Tashire (1967) 386 US 523, 531, 18 L Ed 2d 270, 275, 87 S Ct 1199. For discussion of requirements for diversity jurisdiction, see §§7.48-7.81. The jurisdictional amount for rule interpleader is in excess of $75,000 (22 USC §1332(b)) and for statutory interpleader is $500. Fed R Civ P 4.

§28.25 2. Effect of Insurer's Deposit of Policy Proceeds on Obligation to Defend

A liability insurer may interplead its policy proceeds in court, when faced with multiple claims against its insured, and then remain an "interested" stakeholder (e.g., if the value of the claims does not exceed the policy limits, the insurer "keeps" the remainder). In such a circumstance, the insurer would clearly have a duty to continue to provide a defense to its insured, assuming the duty to defend arose in the first place. See §28.8.

An insurer may be a "disinterested" stakeholder because the policy limits have been exhausted. Most policies that create a duty to defend provide that the duty is terminated when policy limits are exhausted. However, cases suggest that the insurer would not be relieved of its duty to defend until the interpleader action is completed, although no California court has ruled on this precise issue. "Artificially" exhausting policy limits by tendering policy limits during pending litigation will not relieve the insurer of the duty to defend. See Johnson v Continental Ins. Co. (1988) 202 CA3d 477, 248 CR 412. An insurer's duty to defend may include the duty to pursue an appeal on behalf of its insured when there are reasonable grounds for appeal. An insurer may not simply interplead the policy limits and abandon defense of its insured by refusing to appeal. Jenkins v Insurance Co. of N. Am. (1990) 220 CA3d 1481, 272 CR 7. Thus, such an insurer would be unwise to unilaterally withdraw a defense absent a court order approving withdrawal.

However, this reasoning (and the opinions on which it is based) is applicable only to the "standard" policy language creating a duty to defend. Many newer forms of policies specify that the insurer has "the right but not the obligation" to defend its insured. This policy language may be read to allow the insurer to unilaterally determine whether it will defend, not defend, or initially undertake the defense and then withdraw. Such policy language has not been tested in this context, but its plain meaning seems clear that the insurer may withdraw from the defense after interpleading its policy limits and disclaiming interest in the return of any proceeds. The insurer might seek a court order authorizing the withdrawal of defense, perhaps in association with the motion for discharge.

Before filing an interpleader action, the insurer—having a duty to deal in good faith with the insured, who could become personally liable for an excess judgment—may wish to confer with the insured or the insured's separate counsel to see whether there is a strategy that will protect both. See California Liability Insurance Practice: Claims & Litigation §§15.26, 22.2 (Cal CEB 1991).

WARNING: Courts could hold that the commencement of an interpleader action by an insurer facing multiple claims that may exceed the policy limits is an "artificial exhaustion" of the policy limits that does not relieve the insurer of the obligation to provide a defense. An insurer might try to obtain a discharge from the interpleader action and commence a separate declaratory relief action against the insured, seeking a court declaration as to whether it is still obligated to defend. An insurer who unilaterally withdraws its defense after being discharged from an interpleader action would be risking a "bad faith" action by its insured.

B. Meeting Threshold Requirements

§28.26 1. Showing Double Vexation

The right to interplead depends on "facts showing a reasonable probability of double vexation." Hancock Oil Co. v Hopkins (1944) 24 C2d 497, 510, 150 P2d 463. Code of Civil Procedure §386(a) refers to "conflicting claimants," and CCP §386(b) refers to claims that "may give rise to double or multiple liability." Claims may conflict because:

- They are mutually exclusive;
- They exceed a limited fund (or the stakeholder's liability); or
- One claimant asserts a claim because of attachment or garnishment.

The court in Hancock cautioned, however, that interpleader could not be maintained on a "pretext … of double vexation." The court in Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v Mamakos (ND Cal 1972) 57 FRD 198, 201, aff'd (9th Cir 1975) 509 F2d 1217, refers to the "requirement of good faith doubt before commencing an interpleader action" under California or federal law. After the position of one of the claimants has been sustained, e.g., on motion for summary judgment, it may be contended that the result indicates that the identity of the party entitled to the funds should have been obvious. Unless there is some indication of collusion or inequitable conduct, however (see Young v Colyear (1921) 54 CA 232, 234, 201 P 623; Central Mont. Stockyards v Fraser (Mont 1957) 320 P2d 981), a stakeholder is not required to decide between conflicting claims. The test seems to be whether one invoking interpleader can safely determine which claim is right, and if this cannot be done, interpleader is appropriate. See Fidelity Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Rodgers (1919) 180 C 683, 182 P 426.

Code of Civil Procedure §386(b) permits interpleader when the liability is prospective, stating that any person against whom double or multiple claims are made, or may be made, may bring an interpleader action, as may a defendant, even though the claims are unliquidated and no liability has arisen. One justification for this provision lies in the potential for multiple vexation in several unliquidated tort claims against a single insurance policy.

2. Jurisdiction

§28.27 a. Over Interpleader Suits

The remedy of interpleader may be invoked in both unlimited and limited civil cases. Cal Const art VI, §10; CCP §86(a)(2). For discussion of trial court unification and limited civil cases, see chap 6.

NOTE: The plaintiff in a case in interpleader may make deposits after filing the initial complaint, but should accompany additional deposits with an amended complaint or cross-complaint (see CCP §386(b)) reflecting the increased amount in controversy. See Great-West Life Assur. Co. v Superior Court (1969) 271 CA2d 124, 76 CR 284. Consequently, if a case in interpleader is properly commenced as a limited civil case but subsequent deposits exceed the maximum amount allowable in a limited civil case, it appears the party making the excess deposit is obliged under CCP §403.020 to reclassify the case as an unlimited civil case and to pay the applicable reclassification fees.

§28.28 b. Over Claimants

When the known or potential claimants to property are located in several states, the attorney should consider federal interpleader and the availability of nationwide process. See §28.24. California jurisdiction may be asserted over out-of-state defendants "on any basis not inconsistent with the Constitution of this state or of the United States." CCP §410.10. This provision is subject to the inconvenient forum limitation of CCP §410.30. If jurisdiction exists, several means of accomplishing service of process are provided in CCP §§415.10-415.50 so that difficulties in service are no longer a deterring factor.

§28.29 3. Applicability of Joinder Statutes

Code of Civil Procedure §386, the interpleader statute, is part of Title 3, dealing with parties to civil actions. The statute provides that the "applicant or interpleading party may join as a defendant in such action any other party against whom claims are made by one or more of the claimants." CCP §386(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§28.30 4. Applicability of Cross-Complaint Statute

All parties must be aware of the breadth of CCP §426.30, the compulsory cross-complaint statute. A stakeholder believing that its involvement in litigation will be minimized by filing an interpleader proceeding may find that its participation in the litigation becomes more extensive because of cross-complaints based on "related causes of action" against it or other parties. See chap 26.

A significant example is Pacific Loan Mgmt. Corp. v Superior Court (1987) 196 CA3d 1485, 242 CR 547. In that case, after a complaint in interpleader was filed, one of the defendants cross-complained against the plaintiff on theories of conversion, breach of fiduciary duty, negligence, abuse of process, interference with business relations, and intentional infliction of emotional distress, all of which were based on the plaintiff's refusal to deliver to this claimant the funds at issue. This court held that the plaintiff in interpleader was entitled to a summary judgment against this cross-complaint, but the holding has at least suggested the possibility that, in the proper case, such a cross-complaint, or at least the tort causes of action suggested in the cross-complaint, may be appropriate. The court of appeal stated (196 CA3d at 1491):

> There is no authority for the proposition that [plaintiff in intervention's] attempt to submit this dispute to a judicial tribunal, as expressly authorized by statute, can in itself be a tort. Presumably, the use of the interpleader procedure could be an abuse of process if it were clear beyond [dispute that defendant and cross-complainant in interpleader] had an immediate right to the funds. But instead, [defendant and cross-complainant in interpleader's] right to the funds is anything but plain.

Although it dismissed the particular cross-complaint at issue, the court recognized that, if the dispute over the claim is not legitimate, the interpleading party may be subject to an action for abuse of process.

It should be noted that this opinion contains some unfortunate language, which appears to overly limit the right to interpleader and which is not consistent with CCP §386. The court of appeal stated that "the statute in its present form, [CCP §386(b)], requires only that the stakeholder file a verified pleading disclaiming any interest in the money or property claimed. It is the stakeholder's avowed disinterest in the interpleaded proceeds which gives him the right to interplead." 196 CA3d at 1489.

As discussed above, the right to interplead does not cease if the stakeholder continues to deny liability to the claimants and asserts a right to the fund or a part of it. This unfortunate language probably results from the fact that in this particular case the stakeholder was in fact disinterested and was seeking a discharge. The court's interpretation of CCP §386(b) is accurate in asserting that the key to being discharged as an interpleading party is a lack of interest in the proceeds. The court in this case did not distinguish between a "mere" or "disinterested" stakeholder and an "interested" stakeholder.

§28.31 C. Alternative Procedures When Stakeholder Is Defendant in Pending Action

When the stakeholder is a defendant in a pending action, three alternative procedures are available. The stakeholder may (1) move for substitution and discharge or dismissal under CCP §386(a) or §386.5 (see §28.32), (2) cross-complain under CCP §386(a) or (b) (see §28.35), or (3) file a complaint under CCP §386(b) (see §28.36).

The cross-complaint and complaint procedure are more cumbersome than the motion procedure under CCP §386(a) but they may be useful when the action is not on a contract or for specific personal property or when an answer has previously been filed. In this situation, leave to file the cross-complaint may be readily obtained by court order or stipulation, while leave to file a motion might be denied. Another advantage of the cross-complaint or complaint is that the stakeholder, by naming all potential claimants as parties and serving them with a summons, brings them before the court and under its jurisdiction. This procedure avoids the possibility of a discharge that would not protect against claims made by a nonparty.

The court may order deposit of funds on motion, and on the defendant's "depositing in court the amount claimed on the contract, or delivering the property or its value" the court may order substitution. CCP §386(a). Apparently, this deposit of funds is a prerequisite to an order for substitution by motion under §386(a). However, CCP §386(b) does not require deposit as a prerequisite to the remedy, particularly because the "applicant or interpleading party may deny liability in whole or in part to any or all of the claimants." This statement is consistent with Fed R Civ P 22, under which deposit is not jurisdictional, although it is permitted. See Fed R Civ P Official Forms 18 (interpleader complaint) and 21 (counterclaim), which do not mention a deposit. However, under statutory federal interpleader, the parties seeking interpleader are required to deposit the disputed funds in court or file a bond with the court. Thus, a defendant who denies all liability may not wish to make a deposit as a prerequisite to interpleader if it is filed under Rule 22.

Conversely, there are situations in which a defendant admits liability and wishes to make an immediate deposit to avoid accrual of interest. Under CCP §386(c) funds admitted to be payable may be deposited by a plaintiff or cross-complainant at the time of filing the interpleader action without first obtaining a court order. In this situation, as well as when the defendant wishes to make no deposit, the complaint or cross-complaint avenue may be preferable.

§28.32 1. Motion for Discharge and Substitution or Dismissal

A motion by a defendant stakeholder against whom an action is pending on a contract or for specific personal property for discharge from liability on deposit with the court of an amount in dispute is authorized by CCP §§386(a) and 386.5.

Section 386(a) applies when the defendant alleges a claim made by a person not a party to the action who may be substituted into the action in place of the defendant. It provides for deposit of property as well as money.

Section 386.5 applies "where the only relief sought against one of the defendants is the payment of a stated amount of money alleged to be wrongfully withheld" and the defendant alleges conflicting claims by other parties to the action. A defendant in this situation seeks dismissal rather than substitution.

© The Regents of the University of California

§28.33 a. Timing of Motion

Code of Civil Procedure §386(a) requires an application for substitution to be made before an answer is filed. It is occasionally possible to withdraw an answer and then file a motion (Israel v Bryan (1921) 52 CA 66, 197 P 121), but this may be done only in the discretion of the court, and should not be relied on. On the other hand, the defendant may answer after filing a motion for substitution. Cassidy v Norton (1914) 25 CA 433, 143 P 1057.

Code of Civil Procedure §386.5 does not include a provision that the motion be made before the answer is filed. The declaration set forth in §28.45 which may be used in support of a motion either under CCP §386(a) or §386.5, contains a statement that no answer has been filed. If the motion is made under §386.5 and an answer has been filed, that statement should be deleted.

§28.34 b. Drafting Moving Papers

Although CCP §§386(a) and 386.5 differ slightly in application, under either, a defendant stakeholder applies for an order by noticed motion, supported by a memorandum in support of the motion (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113(a)) and an affidavit (or declaration under CCP §2015.5). An attached declaration or affidavit should expressly state facts in evidentiary terms, complying with each of the requirements of the code section under which the moving party is proceeding. The defendant should repeat in the affidavit each item set forth in the notice as a ground of the motion, expanding on specific items as required by the complexity of the case.

Although not required, it may be useful for a defendant to state what efforts have been made to deliver the money or property to the proper person. These facts may be relevant to the court's exercise of discretion relating to discharge and the amount, if any, to be awarded as attorney fees. Some basis for the claim of a particular amount of attorney fees should be stated, and costs incurred should be itemized. The affiant should offer to make a deposit under the order sought.

The supporting memorandum should specify the pertinent portion of the applicable statutes, explaining each statute's applicability to the facts alleged in the complaint and set forth in the affidavit. Other substantive law should be cited, depending on the facts, the complexity of the case, and any anticipated opposition to the motion.

§28.35 2. Cross-Complaint

Code of Civil Procedure §386(a)-(b) provides that a defendant against whom an action is pending may file a verified cross-complaint in interpleader, admitting no interest in an amount or property claimed, nor in any part of the amount or property, and alleging that all or a part of the amount or property is demanded by parties to the action, and apply to the court on notice to the parties for an order to deliver property, or a portion of it, or its value to whomever the court directs.

Code of Civil Procedure §386(a) limits the cross-complaint procedure to defendants "against whom an action is pending upon a contract, or for specific personal property," while CCP §386(b), enacted in 1975, makes the procedure available to any person, firm, corporation, association or other entity who is a defendant in an action brought on one or more claims that may give rise to double or multiple liability. The cross-complaint should contain allegations similar to those in a complaint in interpleader (see §28.37), and should be filed with the answer. The form of complaint set forth in §28.48 may be adapted for use as a cross-complaint. If that form is used, it should also contain a prayer that the complaint against cross-complainant be dismissed with prejudice. Service is made as in any suit. See chap 17 on service of process.

© The Regents of the University of California

§28.36 3. Complaint

Under CCP §386(b) a person, firm, corporation, association, or any other entity that is a defendant in an action on one or more claims of any nature that may give rise to double or multiple liability may bring a separate action against the claimants to force them to interplead. The stakeholder is then a plaintiff-in-interpleader. See §§28.37-28.38. In this situation, the now plaintiff-in-interpleader stakeholder may wish to consider staying the other proceedings. See §28.23.

D. Procedures When Stakeholder Is Plaintiff in Interpleader

§28.37 1. Complaint in Interpleader

The complaint must be tailored to the circumstances. The facts to be alleged by a plaintiff stakeholder may vary widely, depending on:

- Circumstances surrounding the claims against the plaintiff (see §§28.8-28.13);
- Whether, and with respect to which parties, claims are admitted or contested; and
- Facts relating to the plaintiff's possession of money or other property.

It need not be alleged that the claims made against the plaintiff are valid. It is sufficient to describe them and to state that they are adverse and that the plaintiff cannot safely determine whom to pay. Fidelity Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Rodgers (1919) 180 C 683, 182 P 426. An allegation may be made that reasonable doubt exists whether the plaintiff can safely determine which claims are valid.

Historically, the complaint has included an allegation that there is no collusion between the stakeholder and any claimant, because the purpose of interpleader is to avoid harassment from claimants. Code of Civil Procedure §386(a) specifically requires this allegation to be made in an affidavit supporting a motion for substitution of defendants. However, because CCP §386(b) dispenses with the former requirements of lack of interest and indifferent stakeholder (see §28.4), allegations to this effect in complaints and cross-complaints may not be necessary. The complaint may also contain an allegation that there are claims against another party arising from the same transaction or occurrence.

The complaint may contain an offer to deposit under order of the court any money or property on which liability is admitted. (If plaintiff deposits funds payable without an order, under CCP §386(c) allegations and prayer should be modified accordingly.)

Both CCP §386(a) and (b) require that a cross-complaint in interpleader be verified. In view of the significance of the good faith issue in interpleader, both as to the stakeholder and as to claimants, it is better practice to verify the complaint as well.

At least one case has suggested a requirement for a verified pleading (Pacific Loan Mgmt. Corp. v Superior Court (1987) 196 CA3d 1485, 1489, 242 CR 547), stating "the statute … requires only that the stakeholder file a verified pleading disclaiming any interest in the money or property claimed." However, the references to the requirements of stating a cause of action in interpleader in this portion of this particular opinion are probably accurate only insofar as they relate to a disinterested stakeholder seeking discharge. The requirement of a verified pleading is specified in §386(a) only as it relates to a cross-complaint in interpleader, and that requirement of a verified cross-complaint in interpleader is repeated in §386(b). The statute is silent, however, on whether a complaint must be verified. However, because a verified complaint may itself be used in support of a motion for discharge or motion for summary judgment, or both, it is probably the better practice to verify the complaint as well.

For examples of complaints, see Union Central Life Ins. Co. v Janssen (1968) 260 CA2d 518, 67 CR 253 (life insurance proceeds); Fidelity & Deposit Co. v Santa Monica Fin. Co. (1960) 182 CA2d 211, 6 CR 213 (surety bond); Sullivan v Lusk (1907) 7 CA 186, 94 P 91, disapproved on other grounds in Monogram Co. of Cal. v Kingsley (1951) 38 C2d 28, 237 P2d 265 (attorney fees).

§28.38 2. Service and Filing

The complaint is served in the same manner as other process in a lawsuit. See chap 17.

Among the first issues the practitioner must address are whether the action is a limited or unlimited civil case under California law and whether the matter ought to be filed in federal or state court. For further discussion of considerations involved in choice of forum, see §§28.23-28.24.

IV. CLAIMANTS' PROCEDURES

§28.39 A. Alternative Procedures for Opposing Interpleader

Responding to a complaint or cross-complaint in interpleader is similar to responding to other pleadings. If the plaintiff-in-interpleader merely alleges a position as a disinterested stakeholder and seeks the adjudication of the court on the validity of the claims to the fund and seeks the deposit of the funds in the court, then the essential challenges to the filing of the action in interpleader are to contest the allegation that a conflict truly exists and to deny any allegation that the plaintiff cannot reasonably expect double vexation or multiple suits. Because the traditional requirements of interpleader have been eliminated (see §28.4), the essential defense against a "mere" or disinterested stakeholder is to simply challenge the good faith aspect of the complaint-in-interpleader. This challenge primarily involves disputing the question of multiplicity of other claims to the fund that may be valid. However, if several such claimants are before the court simultaneously, such challenges would not appear to have a reasonable chance of success, and the more practical approach may be to acquiesce to the resolution of the claims but to argue against granting attorney fees and costs to the plaintiff (see Schirmer Stevedoring Co. v Seaboard Stevedoring Corp. (9th Cir 1962) 306 F2d 188).

It has been suggested that an interpleader action brought in bad faith may support an abuse of process claim by the aggrieved claimant who has been deprived of the use of the fund and who has been forced to respond to the action in interpleader. The concept of cross-complaining on those grounds has not been expressly precluded by the courts (see Pacific Loan Mgmt. Corp. v Superior Court (1987) 196 CA3d 1485, 1491, 242 CR 547: "presumably the use of the interpleader procedure could be an abuse of process if it were clear beyond dispute that [defendant claimant] had an immediate right to the funds"). However, a cross-complaint for abuse of process may be premature, and therefore this remedy may have to wait until after the completion of the interpleader action.

If the right to interplead has been asserted in a motion by the defendant, the claimant should file and serve opposing declarations. If the claimant is responding to a complaint or cross-complaint, the full array of defensive pleadings is available.

A demurrer may be appropriate when the complaint or cross-complaint does not sufficiently allege the plaintiff's right to interplead. City of Los Angeles v Amador (1903) 140 C 400, 73 P 1049. For example, a complaint by a surety that does not show that the total claims exceed the amount of the obligation would be defective because the claims would not conflict. A demurrer may also be useful when not all claimants have been made parties or when judicial notice may be taken of a prior judgment establishing one of the claims. CCP §430.70.

The defendant may deny allegations of a complaint in an answer (CCP §386(d)):

> which shall be served upon all other parties to the action and which shall contain allegations of fact as to his ownership of or other interest in the amount of property and any affirmative defenses and the relief requested. The allegations in such answer shall be deemed denied by all other parties to the action, unless otherwise admitted in the pleadings.

Because interpleader is an equitable action, traditional equitable defenses should apply, including laches, estoppel, waiver, and unclean hands. However, if other claimants have valid claims to the fund, some of these defenses may serve only to preclude the discharge of the interpleading party and to preclude the interpleading party from seeking attorney fees, costs, and protection from accrued interest. Given the equitable power of the court to do equity among all parties, equally innocent claimants will probably not be precluded from their share of the fund because one of the claimants is able to establish an equitable defense against the interpleading party. The answering party should also bear in mind that many of the elements of the interpleader action must be affirmatively alleged in the complaint itself, and if alleged by the complaint, do not need to be denied as an affirmative defense, but rather a specific denial (in a verified answer) or a general denial (in an unverified answer) will be appropriate to place those matters at issue and the plaintiff-in-interpleader will bear the burden of proving them.

A claimant who acknowledges the stakeholder's status and right to interplead may indicate that position in his answer or response to the stakeholder's complaint or motion by admitting that the party seeking interpleader is in fact a mere stakeholder (Conner v Bank of Bakersfield (1920) 183 C 199, 202, 190 P 801) and may file a cross-complaint against other claimants, setting out his or her cause of action in accordance with the applicable substantive law. He or she may also have to answer cross-complaints of other claimants. See chap 26.

A claimant who believes that there is no genuine issue of fact with respect to the rightfulness of the claim should consider filing both an answer and a cross-complaint and moving for summary judgment as the most expedient means to establish the claim and recover the subject matter. See §28.15.

The challenge to a plaintiff's right to interplead should include opposition to the plaintiff's request for attorney fees and costs and reasons for denial of the request.

§28.40 B. Effect of Failure to Object to Discharge of Stakeholder

All objections to discharge of the stakeholder must be made at the time the answer to the complaint or cross-complaint is filed, or they are waived. The issue cannot be raised on appeal from the judgment in the trial between claimants. San Francisco Sav. Union v Long (1898) 123 C 107, 55 P 708; Continental Nat'l Bank v Stoltz (1920) 46 CA 532, 189 P 712. It has been suggested in a substitution case that the claimant lost his objection to the substitution because, although he had not expressly consented to the motion, he had not included the discharged defendant in subsequent proceedings, which constituted acquiescence. Hellman Commercial Trust & Sav. Bank v Alden (1929) 206 C 592, 275 P 794. Because this case has not been challenged, it would seem advisable to get all objections on the record and to keep the discharged party's name on all pleadings.

§28.41 V. JOINED DEFENDANTS' PROCEDURES

Code of Civil Procedure §386(b) permits the applicant or interpleading party to "join as a defendant in such action any other party against whom claims are made by one or more of the claimants." This statement seems to permit an insurer to interplead its tortfeasor-insured. If the insurer does not do so, CCP §386(b) seems to authorize such a person to enter the action by filing a cross-complaint.

VI. TRIAL

§28.42 A. First Stage

The first stage in an interpleader action is to determine whether the plaintiff has the right to interplead. If defendants in interpleader fail to challenge the plaintiff's right to interplead, or if there is a dispositive stipulation, there should be no need for a formal motion hearing or trial. If multiple claimants in fact assert claims to the fund in amounts that would exceed the fund, or if each claimant asserts an entitlement to the entirety of the res, then the multiplicity of claims that is the hallmark of the need for interpleader would appear to exist. Because the res may potentially be reduced by court order to the extent of any award of attorney fees and costs made to the discharged plaintiff in interpleader, claimants should not risk a reduction of funds by unnecessarily contesting a clear case of multiplicity of claims. Claimants would be better advised to stipulate to the discharge of the disinterested stakeholder and immediately proceed to the second stage of the trial.

The court will determine whether there are valid objections to the propriety of interpleader during the first stage. If the court determines this issue favorably to the plaintiff stakeholder, it will issue an interlocutory order compelling the payment into court of the sum the plaintiff admits to be due and then discharging a disinterested stakeholder. If the stakeholder is in fact interested and disclaims liability to the various claimants, no order of discharge will be issued, and the stakeholder's claims will be included with all other claimants in the second stage of the litigation. If the first stage cannot be resolved by stipulation, the plaintiff-in-interpleader should move for a discharge or for summary adjudication of issues, or both, to establish that the right to interpleader exists. If the stakeholder is disinterested, the motion for discharge should encompass both the issue of the right to interplead to determine its propriety and the issue of whether the stakeholder can be discharged, as well as an application for attorney fees under CCP §386.6. If that issue cannot be resolved by way of motion, the matter should be set for trial on a severed basis for the first stage to be tried only, and the matter would then come on for trial as a nonjury case and is tried prior to the time the claimants begin their litigation in the same court.

B. Second Stage

§28.43 1. Right to Jury Trial

The right to a jury trial in an interpleader action is governed by CCP §386(e). This subsection was added by amendment in 1951 in an attempt to clarify the question of when a jury trial is appropriate in an interpleader action. Because interpleader is of equitable origin, no right to jury trial exists at common law. Nor does the right exist at the second stage litigation after discharge of the disinterested stakeholder, even if the original action would have been an action at law and regardless of whether the interpleader resulted from an original suit as compared to a cross-complaint or motion for substitution. Hellman Commercial Trust & Sav. Bank v Alden (1929) 206 C 592, 600, 275 P 794 (proceedings on granting a motion for substitution are governed by same rules as interpleader); Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v Broderick (1925) 196 C 497, 238 P 1034 (complaint); Adams v Grant Lodge of AOUW (1894) 105 C 321, 38 P 914 (cross-complaint).

The danger of litigants' being denied a jury trial was the reason for the amendment adding CCP §386. See Progress Report of Senate Interim Judiciary Commission 40 (1951).

This amendment was in part adopted to avoid a stakeholder's admitting a small liability in order to prevent a jury trial.

The first portion of the subsection suggests that a jury trial can be required whenever one would otherwise be available at law. Taken as a whole, however, it has the effect of maintaining the previous rule on the litigation between the claimants while requiring a jury when a deficiency is claimed against the interpleader plaintiff, if one would otherwise be required.

© The Regents of the University of California

§28.44 2. Trial Between Conflicting Claimants; Final Judgment

On the determination of the appropriateness of the litigation for the interpleader remedy (and on discharge of a disinterested stakeholder), a trial on the merits is held between the rival claimants. At the conclusion of the trial, the court renders a judgment that awards the disputed property to the successful party or parties.

The trial court has the discretion under CCP §386(e) in the order of trial so that issues may be settled in order of difficulty and for the convenience of the court and the litigants. Therefore, the court can order trial of certain issues in the order most likely designed to simplify the litigation and to resolve disputes between claimants. See CCP §386(e).

This matter was regularly heard at the above date and time. Appearing as attorneys were: _ _[List names of attorneys and parties represented by each]_ _.

Satisfactory proof having been made, the Court finds:

[Option 1: If sum is not disputed]

1. Cross-complainant, _ _[name]_ _, held the _ _[describe subject matter of interpleader action]_ _ mentioned in the complaint without claiming any right or interest in it. [Option 3: If whole sum is disputed]

1. Cross-complainant, _ _[name]_ _, disputes all liability to cross-defendant(s), _ _[name(s)]_ _.

[Continue]

2. Conflicting claims and demands have been or may be made on cross-complainant by cross-defendants, _ _[names]_ _. 3. Cross-complainant has incurred costs of $_ _ _ _ _ _ and attorney fees of $_ _ _ _ _ _ to prosecute this cross-complaint in interpleader.

It appearing that the cross-complaint was properly brought by cross-complainant,

IT IS ORDERED that:

1. Cross-defendants in interpleader, _ _[names]_ _, appear in this action and litigate their several claims.

[Add if appropriate]

2. _ _[Name]_ _ and _ _[name]_ _ be joined as defendants in this action.

[5.] All parties to this action be restrained from instituting or further prosecuting any other proceeding in any court in this state affecting the rights and obligations between the parties to this interpleader until further order of this Court.

[6.] Cross-complainant be awarded $_ _ _ _ _ _ costs and $_ _ _ _ _ _ attorney fees _ _[e.g., out of the proceeds/deposited with the clerk]_ _, and the clerk _ _[e.g., deposit the remainder of proceeds at interest]_ _ pending the outcome of this litigation, to be _ _[e.g., disbursed]_ _ on further order of the Court.

Comment: See §28.35. This form may be modified for use by a plaintiff in interpleader. The interlocutory order in interpleader may be separate or part of an interlocutory order covering other aspects of the case. The order should contain a finding of the pleader's right to interplead and, if applicable, (1) an order discharging the stakeholder from further liability to claimants and enjoining claimants from bringing further proceedings against the stakeholder and (2) an order awarding attorney fees or providing for their determination in the final judgment. See CCP §386.6. The most significant aspect of the interlocutory order is its direction to claimants to interplead and litigate among themselves. The order is not appealable.

I. INTRODUCTION

§29.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses the various statutes that authorize the court to require a plaintiff to make a deposit or post bond to ensure that a defendant's costs of suit will be paid if the defendant prevails in the action. See chart in §29.11. The plaintiff may oppose the motion or argue that a lesser amount of security should be posted than the defendant has requested. In some instances, the proceedings are stayed until the court rules on the motion.

This chapter talks about description and use (see §§29.3-29.11), security with regard to nonresident or foreign corporation plaintiffs (see §§29.12-29.25), shareholder derivative actions (see §§29.26-29.43), actions against architects and engineers (see §§29.44-29.48), actions against doctors and other medical professionals (see §§29.49-29.54), and vexatious litigants (see §§29.55-29.61). It includes a checklist (see §29.62) and forms (see §§29.63-29.66).

A plaintiff's failure to post bond after the court grants a defendant's motion for security for costs is grounds for mandatory dismissal. The procedures for dismissing an action are discussed in chap 39.

§29.2 B. Governing Law

These governing statutes are CCP §1030 (actions in which the plaintiff is a nonresident or foreign corporation); Corp C §800(c) (shareholder derivative actions); CCP §1029.5 (actions against architects, engineers, and related professionals); CCP §1029.6 (actions against doctors, nurses, and other medical professionals); CCP §§391-391.7 (actions in which the plaintiff can be shown to be "vexatious" as defined by statute).

II. DESCRIPTION AND USE

§29.3 A. Rationale; Definitions

In certain civil actions and special proceedings, a defendant may seek a court order requiring a plaintiff to secure costs and sometimes attorney fees that will be incurred by, and later may be awarded to, the defendant. The chart in §29.11 lists the statutes that authorize the court to order a plaintiff to post a bond with the court as a security (or undertaking) to ensure payment of the defendant's costs. Generally, the defendant must make a showing that there is a reasonable possibility of obtaining judgment in the action or special proceeding. The rationale for requiring this deposit is twofold:

- To ensure that nonresidents using the courts of California to sue California residents are responsible for their costs if the suits are unsuccessful; and
- To discourage frivolous or unmeritorious litigation.

Code of Civil Procedure §1030 cannot be applied to require an out-of-state defendant who brings a cross-complaint against a California resident to file an undertaking in order to continue prosecution of the cross-complaint. Yao v Superior Court (2002) 104 CA4th 327, 329, 127 CR2d 912.

The Bond and Undertaking Law (CCP §§995.010-996.560), enacted in 1982, defines essential terms that govern provisions for security, unless a particular provision otherwise requires. CCP §995.110. Some of these definitions include:

- Undertaking. An undertaking must be made in writing signed by the sureties under oath. CCP §995.320.
- Bond. A bond includes a surety, indemnity, or fiduciary. CCP §995.140. Statutory bonds and statutory undertakings generally are interchangeable. CCP §995.210. A bond must be executed by two or more sufficient personal sureties, by one sufficient admitted surety insurer, or by any combination of sufficient personal sureties and admitted surety insurers. CCP §995.310. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1130(a) (corporation cannot be accepted or approved as surety on bond or undertaking unless certain conditions are met).
- Surety. Under CCP §995.185, "surety" has the same meaning as set out in CC §2787: "A surety … is one who promises to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, or hypothecates property as security therefor." Officers of the court and members of the bar are prohibited from acting as sureties. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1130(b). For further discussion of bonds, undertakings, or deposits, see 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§6-45 (5th ed 2008).

NOTE: Many technical differences existed among these terms at common law, but the modern tendency has been to permit various forms of security to become statutorily interchangeable.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.4 1. Failure to Post Security: Grounds for Mandatory Dismissal

If the motion is granted, the plaintiff's failure to file timely the appropriate bond with the court is grounds for mandatory dismissal of the action or special proceeding against the moving defendant. See chart in §29.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.5 2. Order Requiring Security: No Effect on Merits of Case

Security for costs statutes that provide for a hearing before the court can order the posting of security also provide that a court's determination of whether security will be furnished is not a determination on the merits of any issue in the action. CCP §§391.2, 1029.5(a), 1029.6(a), 1030(f); Corp C §800(d); Ensher v Ensher, Alexander & Barsoom, Inc. (1960) 187 CA2d 407, 9 CR 732 (shareholder derivative action).

Code of Civil Procedure §1030(f) also provides that court rulings under that section may not be given in evidence or referred to at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.6 3. Plaintiff's Indigency: Court's Discretion to Waive Security

Some of the security for costs statutes (see chart in §29.11) specifically provide that security will not be ordered unless the defendant shows that the "plaintiff would not suffer undue economic hardship in filing the undertaking...." CCP §§1029.5(a) (services by architects, engineers, building designers, or land surveyors); 1029.6(a) (professional medical or paramedical services).

The court has common law power to waive security for costs and to protect indigents' access to the courts. Bank of America v Superior Court (1967) 255 CA2d 575, 63 CR 366 (costs denied in suit by indigent nonresident); County of Sutter v Superior Court (1966) 244 CA2d 770, 53 CR 424 (costs denied in suit by indigent against governmental entity). See also Buechold v Ortiz (9th Cir 1968) 401 F2d 371.

The right of the plaintiff to sue in forma pauperis has been held not inconsistent with CCP §§391-391.7 (vexatious litigants), because any showing of merit by the plaintiff would preclude the statutes' application. If any conflict between a plaintiff's right to sue and these statutes were shown, the plaintiff's constitutional right to proceed as an indigent would prevail. Muller v Tanner (1969) 2 CA3d 445, 454, 82 CR 738.

This same reasoning applies to proceedings in which security for costs may be requested under CCP §1030 (nonresident or foreign corporations). See Alshafie v Lallande (2009) 171 CA4th 421, 89 CR3d 788 (no rigid standard for requisite showing of indigency to obtain waiver). It may also apply to Corp C §800(c) (shareholder derivative actions), although the statute does not specifically provide for relief for the indigent plaintiff.

In deciding whether to grant a waiver, the court must review the plaintiff's showing of indigency, identify deficiencies, and give the plaintiff time to supply additional information to establish entitlement to the waiver. Alshafie v Lallande, supra.

§29.7 4. Demand for Judgment (CCP §998) Compared With Security for Costs Statutes

Code of Civil Procedure §998 provides a means by which costs in an action may be withheld or increased. One purpose of security for costs statutes is to discourage unmeritorious litigation. See §29.3. The demand for judgment procedure under CCP §998 does not serve the same purpose. Although it may discourage trial, it does not discourage litigation.

Another purpose of security for costs statutes is to help the secured party recover the costs expended in the litigation. An offer to allow judgment under CCP §998 also provides a powerful tool to that end. See chap 47.

NOTE: In actions in which security for costs is statutorily permitted, the offer under CCP §998 is also permissible and provides another opportunity for a defendant to recover costs if a motion for security for costs has been unsuccessful.

B. Constitutionality

§29.8 1. Due Process Requirements

Security for costs statutes have been held to be subject to these due process requirements: notice, hearing, and the imposition of some standard by which the validity of securing costs can be judged. Gonzales v Fox (1977) 68 CA3d Supp 16, 137 CR 312. Statutes authorizing security for costs have generally been held constitutionally invalid when they have failed to provide these due process safeguards. Gonzales v Fox, supra (former CCP §1030 held unconstitutional on due process grounds).

2. California Security for Costs Statutes Repealed

§29.9 a. Public Entities and Employees

Former Govt C §§947 and 951 required plaintiffs suing public entities and their employees to post security for costs. These two sections were held unconstitutional in Beaudreau v Superior Court (1975) 14 C3d 448, 121 CR 585. Former Ed C §92650, which required security for costs in actions against the Regents of the University of California, was repealed for similar reasons.

In Beaudreau, the California Supreme Court held that due process requires notice and a hearing before dismissal of an action for failure to file an undertaking. The hearing is considered necessary to determine whether the statutory purpose of deterring unmeritorious litigation is promoted by imposition of an undertaking requirement in a particular case. Such a hearing must necessarily inquire into the merits of the plaintiff's action as well as into the reasonableness of the amount of the undertaking in light of the defendant's probable expenses. Beaudreau v Superior Court (1975) 14 C3d 448, 460, 121 CR 585.

§29.10 b. Defamation and Other Actions

Former CCP §830, which required a bond in defamation actions before summons would issue, was repealed in 1980 after being struck down as unconstitutional in Allen v Jordanos' Inc. (1975) 52 CA3d 160, 125 CR 31. This decision was based on Beaudreau v Superior Court (1975) 14 C3d 448, 121 CR 585. See also Skelly v State Personnel Bd. (1975) 15 C3d 194, 124 CR 14 (permanent civil service employees entitled to notice before punitive action; former Govt C §19574 violated due process provisions); Mitchell v W.T. Grant Co. (1974) 416 US 600, 40 L Ed 2d 406, 94 S Ct 1895 (sequestration writ can issue without notice of hearing if state adequately protected debtor's property interest); Arnett v Kennedy (1974) 416 US 134, 40 L Ed 2d 15, 94 S Ct 1633 (trial-type hearing not required before removal of federal employee).

III. NONRESIDENT OR FOREIGN CORPORATION PLAINTIFFS

§29.12 A. Scope of Statute

Security for costs applicable to nonresident or foreign corporation plaintiffs is governed by CCP §1030. A defendant may at any time file a noticed motion seeking an order requiring a nonresident or foreign corporation plaintiff to furnish an undertaking to secure an award of costs and attorney fees. CCP §1030.

Joinder of a resident California plaintiff to a nonresident plaintiff does not render the resident plaintiff subject to liability for security under this statute. Taylor v Powell (1962) 200 CA2d 780, 19 CR 536.

Code of Civil Procedure §1030 applies to actions in all California courts. Classroom Teacher, Inc. v Superior Court (1933) 129 CA 261, 18 P2d 746.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.13 B. Constitutionality

In Gonzales v Fox (1977) 68 CA3d Supp 16, 137 CR 312, the appellate department of the Imperial County Superior Court held that former CCP §1030 was unconstitutional on due process grounds. In 1980, CCP §1030 was amended to conform to the constitutional standards enunciated in Gonzales and Beaudreau v Superior Court (1975) 14 C3d 448, 121 CR 585. The statute, which now provides for notice and a hearing, sets a standard for determining whether security is necessary. For further discussion of constitutional due process requirements, see §§29.8-29.10.

C. Defendant's Procedures

1. Motion for Security

§29.14 a. Grounds; Papers

The grounds for a motion under CCP §1030 are:

- The plaintiff resides out of state or is a foreign corporation.
- There is a reasonable possibility that the moving defendant will obtain judgment.

The motion must be accompanied by an affidavit (or declaration) in support of the grounds for the motion, setting forth the nature and amount of costs and attorney fees that the moving defendant has incurred and expects to incur by the time the action is concluded. CCP §1030(b). See forms of motion and declaration in §§29.65-29.66.

A memorandum in support of the motion must accompany the motion. CCP §1030(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.15 b. Timing: Any Time Before Trial

The motion may be made "at any time" before trial. See CCP §1030(a); Shannon v Sims Serv. Ctr. (1985) 164 CA3d 907, 915, 210 CR 861. On staying proceedings, if motion for security is made no later than 30 days after the defendant was served with summons, see §29.18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.16 c. Amount: Costs and Attorney Fees Not Limited by Statute

The Code of Civil Procedure does not limit the amount of costs and attorney fees that the court may award. See CCP §1030(a).

Attorney fees are defined as "reasonable attorney's fees a party may be authorized to recover by a statute apart from this section or by contract." CCP §1030(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.17 d. Service

A minimum of 16 court days notice before the hearing is required. CCP §1005(b). If notice is made by mail, the 16-day notice period is increased according to the requirements of CCP §1005(b). On procedures for noticed motions generally, see chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.18 2. Motion to Stay Proceedings; Timing

The defendant may notice a motion to stay further proceedings in the action if the motion for security was filed no later than 30 days after the defendant was served with the summons. CCP §1030(e).

The court in its discretion may order the proceedings stayed until (CCP §1030(e)):

- Ten days after the motion for security is denied; or
- If the motion for security is granted, 10 days after the required undertaking has been filed and the defendant has been served with a copy of the undertaking.

The hearing on the motion to stay must be held no later than 60 days after service of the summons. CCP §1030(e).

NOTE: Formerly, CCP §1030 provided for an automatic stay of the proceedings if the defendant made a motion for security no later than 30 days after service of the summons. In 1988, §1030(e) was amended to provide for a discretionary stay on the defendant's noticed motion.

D. Plaintiff's Procedures

§29.19 1. Opposition to Motion; Grounds

A plaintiff may resist the defendant's motion for an order requiring security. Opposition papers should be served and filed at least 9 court days before the hearing. CCP §1005(b). Opposition papers must be served by personal delivery, fax, express mail, or other method reasonably calculated to ensure delivery by the close of the next business day after the papers are filed. CCP §1005(c). On procedures for opposing noticed motions generally, see chap 12.

The motion may be challenged on the following grounds:

- Individual's residency. The plaintiff may contend that, because he or she is a California resident, CCP §1030 does not apply. The Code of Civil Procedure does not indicate how nonresidency must be proved or by what standards. Determination of nonresidency is a question of fact for the trial court. Wall v Hunter (1922) 57 CA 759, 207 P 934. It may be determined by evidence presented either by affidavit (see, e.g., Myers v Carter (1960) 178 CA2d 622, 3 CR 205) or by oral testimony (see, e.g., Larson v Blue & White Cab Co. (1938) 24 CA2d 576, 75 P2d 612). Nonresidency of an individual plaintiff has been held to be best determined for purposes of CCP §1030 by examining the plaintiff's legal domicile, actual residence, and place of employment. See Myers v Carter, supra. A corporation is "foreign" if it is incorporated outside California, regardless of whether it is qualified to do business, or is doing substantial business, in California. Corp C §171.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel who anticipates presenting oral testimony at the hearing should review the restrictions on oral testimony in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306. On law and motion hearings generally, see chap 12.

- Indigency. The plaintiff may contend that he or she is indigent and request that the court waive security for costs. CCP §§995.240, 1030. See Alshafie v Lallande (2009) 171 CA4th 421, 89 CR3d 788; Bank of America v Superior Court (1967) 255 CA2d 575, 63 CR 366. See discussion in §29.6.
- Defendant's failure to make required showing. The defendant must show that there is a reasonable possibility that the moving defendant will obtain judgment in the action or special proceeding. CCP §1030(b). See §29.14.
- Defendant's estimated costs and attorney fees. The plaintiff should study the nature and amount of costs and attorney fees that the defendant in the affidavit or declaration supporting the motion. See §29.16. Attorney fees are "reasonable attorney's fees a party may be authorized to recover by a statute apart from this section or by contract." CCP §1030(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Posting Security

§29.20 a. Amount May Be Modified During Proceedings

Code of Civil Procedure §1030 no longer specifies the amount of the undertaking. The undertaking now secures an award of costs and attorney fees. CCP §1030(a). The amount may be increased or decreased during the course of the proceedings. CCP §§996.010-996.030. On defendant's motion for additional security, see §29.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.21 b. Timing: Undertaking Must Be Filed No Later Than 30 Days After Service of Court's Order

The plaintiff may request additional time for posting the security at the hearing. Unless the court allows additional time, the plaintiff must file an undertaking no later than 30 days after service of the court's order. CCP §1030(d).

The court may also shorten the time for filing an undertaking if there is good cause for doing so. In Shannon v Sims Serv. Ctr. (1985) 164 CA3d 907, 210 CR 861, the court of appeal upheld an order requiring the plaintiff to post a $1000 undertaking within 13 days after service of the court's order when the trial was set to begin on the final date for filing.

Failure to file the undertaking in a timely fashion may result in a mandatory dismissal of the plaintiff's action against the defendant seeking the security. CCP §1030(d); Shannon v Sims Serv. Ctr., supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.22 c. Filing Undertaking; Service

If the court grants the motion, the plaintiff must file a surety bond or undertaking with the court. CCP §995.340. The court clerk must enter the date and amount of the bond and the names of the sureties on the bond in the register of actions. CCP §995.350. A form of bond or undertaking appears in CCP §995.330. See sample form in §29.64.

The plaintiff must serve a copy on the defendant for whose benefit the security is given. CCP §995.370. An affidavit or declaration of service on the defendant must be filed with the undertaking. CCP §995.370. Copies should also be served on other parties in the action. On service in pending actions generally, see chap 18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.23 3. Failure to Post Security; Effect of Dismissal of Action

If the plaintiff fails to file the undertaking within the time allotted (see §29.21), the court must dismiss the action or proceeding as to the defendant in whose favor the order was made. CCP §1030(d).

Although failure to post timely security requires the court to order dismissal, it does not deprive the court of jurisdiction. Carter v Superior Court (1917) 176 C 752, 755, 169 P 667; Estate of Baker (1917) 176 C 430, 434, 168 P 881. If the period of limitations has not yet expired, dismissal for failure to post a bond does not bar a subsequent action on the same cause. Rosenthal v McMann (1892) 93 C 505, 509, 19 P 121.

PRACTICE TIP: In a case with multiple defendants, counsel for one defendant must be careful not to rely on a noticed motion made by another defendant. An action may be dismissed only against defendants who moved for the order requiring the undertaking. CCP §1030(d); Taylor v Powell (1962) 200 CA2d 780, 786, 19 CR 536.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Defendant's Subsequent Procedures

§29.24 1. Motion for Additional Security

Code of Civil Procedure §1030 does not specify whether a defendant may seek an order to increase the bond. Under CCP §996.010, however, the court may determine on a noticed motion supported by affidavit or on the court's own motion that the undertaking is, or has for any reason become, insufficient. The defendant may also challenge the sufficiency of the sureties by noticed motion within 10 days under CCP §§995.910-995.960.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.25 2. Motion to Dismiss for Failure to File Undertaking; Sample Language

Unless the court has allowed a greater time, the plaintiff's failure to file an undertaking within 30 days after service of the court order requiring it is a ground for mandatory dismissal. CCP §1030(d). The ground for a motion to dismiss for failure to file an undertaking should be stated as follows:

This motion is made on the ground that security for costs has not been filed in this action within 30 days after service of the court's order requiring such security.

For discussion of motions to dismiss, see chap 39. On noticed motions generally, see chap 12.

IV. SHAREHOLDER DERIVATIVE ACTIONS

§29.26 A. Scope of Statute

California authorizes security for costs and attorney fees incurred by a defendant that is an unincorporated association, foreign or domestic corporation, or officer or director, in defense of an action brought by a shareholder or association member for the benefit of the corporation or association. See Corp C §800. See also Fin C §6052(c), which makes Corp C §800(c) applicable to derivative actions by shareholders of savings and loans associations.

Although shareholder derivative actions provide a remedy at law against faithless directors and management, these actions have been occasionally brought by minority shareholders, not to redress real wrongs, but to take advantage of their nuisance value. Some legislatures (e.g., New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and California) approved security for costs legislation to discourage such suits, known as "strike suits." See Cohen v Beneficial Indus. Loan Corp. (1949) 337 US 541, 93 L Ed 1528, 69 S Ct 1221. See also Kaiser v Easton (1957) 151 CA2d 307, 313, 311 P2d 108. In California, former Corp C §834 was interpreted to apply not only to "strike suits" but also to derivative actions brought by shareholders with a substantial interest in the corporation. Suburban Water Sys. v Superior Court (1968) 264 CA2d 956, 71 CR 45 (plaintiffs owned more than 5 percent of stock; court held that number and amounts of plaintiffs' shares is immaterial to security posting requirement).

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.27 B. Constitutionality

The constitutionality of former Corp C §834(b) (now Corp C §800(c)-(d)) was upheld by the California Supreme Court in Beyerbach v Juno Oil Co. (1954) 42 C2d 11, 265 P2d 1, against a challenge that the statute deprived the plaintiff of equal protection under the law in violation of the federal and state constitutions. The supreme court relied on Cohen v Beneficial Indus. Loan Corp. (1949) 337 US 541, 93 L Ed 1528, 69 S Ct 1221, in which the United States Supreme Court held a similar but harsher New Jersey statute constitutional and declared that a state has plenary power to provide the terms on which it will permit litigation in its courts. See also Melancon v Superior Court (1954) 42 C2d 698, 268 P2d 1050.

The constitutional requirement of procedural due process is fully satisfied by Corp C §800. In Beaudreau v Superior Court (1975) 14 C3d 448, 462, 121 CR 585, the California Supreme Court expressly approved the notice and hearing procedures of these sections, noting the court of appeal's approval of former Corp C §834. See Nork v Superior Court (1973) 33 CA3d 997, 109 CR 428.

C. Procedures

1. Motion to Require Security

§29.28 a. Who May Move: Corporation, Association, Individually Named Officer or Director

The right to seek security is available to a corporation or unincorporated association (see Corp C §800(a)) and to any named defendant who was an officer or director when the disputed acts occurred or when the suit was filed. Corp C §800(c).

NOTE: Although this right is broader than that provided by any other California statute, it is narrower than under former Corp C §834 as originally enacted, which permitted any third party defendant (whether or not associated with the corporation) to demand security in derivative actions. See, e.g., Toboni v Pennington Millinery Co. (1959) 172 CA2d 47, 341 P2d 845.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.29 b. Against Whom Motion May Be Made: Plaintiffs Pleading Derivative Causes of Action (Corp C §800(b))

Under Corp C §800(c), a motion for security is not authorized in every lawsuit against a corporation, but only in derivative actions in which the plaintiff has pleaded the allegations in Corp C §800(b), e.g., that the plaintiff:

- Was a member, registered shareholder, or holder of a voting trust certificate (or holder by operation of law from a holder) when all or part of the disputed transaction occurred (or a shareholder not meeting those requirements but permitted to bring suit in the court's discretion); and
- (1) Made specified efforts to get action from the board of directors or the reasons for not making such effort and (2) informed the board or the corporation of the ultimate facts of each cause of action.

The defendants may not require the plaintiff to furnish security when the plaintiff-shareholder is vindicating his or her personal rights as a shareholder and not seeking redress for injury to the corporation. If the plaintiff's suit is for personal rights, and seeking relief that would inure to his or her personal benefit, it is immaterial that the facts might also permit an action by the corporation. Hagan v Superior Court (1960) 53 C2d 498, 2 CR 288 (decided under former Corp C §834). The court in Hagan, however, recognized that the complaint might contain separate counts, some seeking individual relief and some seeking derivative relief for the corporation; a motion for security is appropriate on the derivative counts. 53 C2d at 503.

EXAMPLE: Security may be sought not only from the original plaintiff but also from an intervening complainant. For example, when an officer sues a corporation, which he or she controls, for money allegedly owed to him or her, a shareholder may intervene and complain that the corporation is being defrauded by a collusive suit. The intervening complainant, however, may be required to post security. See Shively v Eureka Tellurium Gold Mining Co. (1900) 129 C 293, 61 P 939; Thorman v Dome Producing & Developing Co. (1942) 50 CA2d 201, 122 P2d 927.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.30 c. Effect of Motion: Automatically Stays Proceedings

The proceedings in a derivative action are automatically stayed by the filing of a motion requesting security from the time the motion is filed until 10 days after disposition of the motion. Corp C §800(f). If the motion is granted, the stay is not lifted until the plaintiff complies with the court order and posts the required security. Melancon v Superior Court (1954) 42 C2d 698, 707, 268 P2d 1050; Barber v Lewis & Kaufman, Inc. (1954) 125 CA2d 95, 98, 269 P2d 929.

The stay is a complete bar to the proceedings, and the plaintiff is not entitled to conduct depositions in preparation for trial. Barber v Lewis & Kaufman, Inc., supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.31 d. Motion Preserves Right to Recover Attorney Fees

Defendants in shareholder derivative actions may seek security from plaintiffs under Corp C §800 as a means of preserving their right to recover attorney fees, up to the amount of the posted security, if they ultimately prevail in the action. Compare Russo v Running Springs Country Club, Inc. (1991) 228 CA3d 92, 278 CR 758 (Corp C §800 does not provide exclusive statutory grounds for recovering attorney fee) with Alcott v M.E.V. Corp. (1987) 193 CA3d 797, 238 CR 520 (defendants not entitled to attorney fee because no security for fees was ever sought from or posted by the plaintiffs).

Corp C §800 is a bond or security statute, not an attorney fee liability statute. West Hills Farms, Inc. v RCO Ag Credit, Inc. (2009) 170 CA4th 710, 88 CR3d 458 (under Corp C §800, prevailing defendant entitled to recover only amount of bond posted by plaintiffs as compensation for litigation expenses, not full amount of attorney fees).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/29 Security for Costs/§29.32 e. Grounds

§29.32 e. Grounds

Corporations Code §800(c) lists two alternative grounds for the motion for security:

- "There is no reasonable possibility that the prosecution of the cause of action alleged … against the moving party will benefit the corporation or its shareholders." (Emphasis added.)
- The moving party did not participate in the disputed transaction in any capacity.

The motion may be made on either or both grounds specified in the statute. Corp C §800(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.33 f. Timing: Motion for Security Must Be Made Within 30 Days After Service of Summons

Within 30 days after the service of summons on the corporation or any defendant officer or director, the defendant may notice a motion for an order requiring the plaintiff to furnish security. Corp C §800(c). On a showing of good cause, however, any defendant may apply to the trial court to extend the 30-day period for an additional period not exceeding 60 days. Corp C §800(c).

Without a showing of excuse, a motion for security is generally considered waived if not filed within the prescribed period. Even without a court-ordered extension, however, the court in Consolidated Dock & Storage Co. v Superior Court (1971) 18 CA3d 949, 96 CR 254, held that a trial court could properly entertain a motion for security filed 83 days after service of summons. In Consolidated, a series of stipulations between counsel extended the defendant's time to move, answer, or otherwise plead to the complaint without explicitly mentioning an extension of the time within which to file a motion for security.

2. Hearing

§29.34 a. Burden of Proof on Defendant to Show Grounds

The burden is on the moving defendant to establish a probability in support of one or more of the statutory grounds. Corp C §800(d); Beyerbach v Juno Oil Co. (1954) 42 C2d 11, 24, 265 P2d 1; Burt v Irvine Co. (1965) 237 CA2d 828, 868, 47 CR 392; Wood v Gordon (1952) 112 CA2d 374, 246 P2d 84. On grounds, see §29.32.

The defendant is required to make a sufficient showing on one statutory ground with respect to one cause of action within the complaint. Bailey v Fosca Oil Co. (1960) 180 CA2d 289, 4 CR 474. In determining whether the defendant has met this burden, the trial court must evaluate the possible defenses that the plaintiff would have to overcome to prevail at trial. It is sufficient that the trial court evaluate the defenses and find them formidable; the trial court need not determine the merits of the complaint, because there would be insufficient evidence for it to do so. Marble v Latchford Glass Co. (1962) 205 CA2d 171, 176, 22 CR 789.

Appropriate sources of evidence for the plaintiff or defendant include corporate bylaws, board of director meeting minutes, oral testimony and affidavits of directors, management, and experts the directors consulted to make a particular decision.

§29.35 b. Defendant's "Business Judgment" Argument

The argument most frequently made by defendants seeking security in a shareholder suit is that the corporation (or its board of directors) has used good faith and proper "business judgment." See Marble v Latchford Glass Co. (1962) 205 CA2d 171, 178, 22 CR 789. See also Thomas v Summers Gyroscope Co. (1958) 160 CA2d 234, 245, 324 P2d 893; Olson v Basin Oil Co. (1955) 136 CA2d 543, 559, 288 P2d 952.

Both the Thomas and Olson courts noted Findley v Garrett (1952) 109 CA2d 166, 174, 240 P2d 421, in which the court held that a shareholder may not interfere with the board of directors' discretion by initiating an action on behalf of the corporation when an independent and disinterested majority of the board acted in good faith within the scope of its discretionary powers to manage the corporation and reasonably believed that its refusal to bring litigation, as demanded by the plaintiff, was a proper business judgment in the best interests of the corporation.

In motions made under Corp C §800(c)(1), defendant directors should seek to present evidence that (1) they have acted within the guidelines established in Findley and (2) there is no reasonable possibility that prosecution of the suit would benefit the corporation.

The decision in Findley gives substantial latitude to the judgment of a corporate board of directors. For instance, the court stated (109 CA2d at 178):

> A mistake of judgment on the part of a board of directors does not justify taking the control of corporate affairs from the board of directors and placing it with the stockholders. The board of directors may make incorrect decisions, as well as correct ones so long as it is faithful to the corporation and uses its best business judgment.

See also Burt v Irvine Co. (1965) 237 CA2d 828, 869, 47 CR 392 (sale at less than market value may have been in corporation's best interest; security required).

§29.36 c. Plaintiff's Responses to "Business Judgment" Argument

The plaintiff may respond to the "business judgment" argument by challenging the good faith of members of the board of directors, e.g., by presenting evidence that a majority of the board was not "disinterested" but was actively engaged in fraud or constructive fraud against the corporation.

Alternatively, the plaintiff may show that contrary expert opinions were available to the board, but were not considered, when it made its decision.

d. Presentation of Evidence on Appropriate Amount of Security

§29.37 (1) Expenses to Be Considered; $50,000 Limit

At the hearing, the parties must present evidence by which the court can determine an appropriate amount of security, including court costs and attorney fees for the corporation and moving defendant. Security greater than the statutory ceiling of $50,000 will not be allowed. Corp C §800(d).

The largest element of corporate expense is attorney fees. It has been held appropriate for defense attorneys to offer testimony based on their professional experience of the amount of time and effort necessary to defend the corporation in the pending litigation. Olson v Basin Oil Co. (1955) 136 CA2d 543, 562, 288 P2d 952.

The court may also consider the number of causes of action involved, the number of different defendants represented by different counsel, and the complexity of the issues to be resolved. See Koster v Warren (9th Cir 1961) 297 F2d 418.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.38 (2) Expenses Arising From Indemnification of Corporation's Agents (Corp C §317)

In 1987, Corp C §317 was amended to increase the indemnification permitted for agents sued by or on behalf of the corporation. If an agent of a corporation is successful on the merits in the defense of a derivative action (or in the defense of any claim, issue, or matter in the derivative action), the corporation must reimburse its agent for expenses actually and reasonably incurred in connection with the agent's defense if the agent acted in good faith and in a manner he or she believed to be in the best interests of the corporation and its shareholders. Corp C §317(c)-(d).

Formerly, the corporation could not indemnify amounts paid in settling a threatened or pending action but could pay expenses incurred in settling or otherwise disposing of the claim with court approval. Under the amended law, court approval is not required for indemnification unless there is a pending action. With court approval, both expenses and amounts paid in settling a pending action may be reimbursed. Corp C §317(c). The articles of incorporation may also provide for indemnification of corporate agents in excess of that otherwise permitted by Corp C §317. Corp C §§204(a)(11), 317(g).

3. Court Ruling

§29.39 a. Decision Is Discretionary

After hearing the motion, the court may:

- Fix the nature and amount of security, not to exceed $50,000, setting a reasonable time within which the security ordered must be furnished (Corp C §800(d)); or
- Refuse to order security to be furnished.

The court's decision is within its sound discretion; its balancing of substantial and conflicting evidence will not be reversed except for an abuse of discretion. Oser v Wilcox (9th Cir 1964) 338 F2d 886, 893.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.40 b. Effect of Noncompliance With Order: Mandatory Dismissal

Dismissal is mandatory for failure to comply with an order for security within the time fixed by the court. If bond is not posted, the action must be dismissed against any defendant who moved for security. Corp C §800(d). The plaintiff, however, may request the court on a noticed motion to extend his or her time to post bond. CCP §1054. See Beyerbach v Juno Oil Co. (1954) 42 C2d 11, 28, 265 P2d 1.

There is some authority that if dismissal is ordered for failure to provide security, attorney fees may not be awarded against the plaintiff. See Freeman v Goldberg (1961) 55 C2d 622, 12 CR 668 (legislature intended that defendant's attorney fees be reimbursed only from security); Alcott v M.E.V. Corp. (1987) 193 CA3d 797, 238 CR 520 (because no security posted, defendants not entitled to attorney fees). But see §29.31.

§29.41 c. Alternative to Compliance With Order: Voluntarily Posting $50,000 Bond

The plaintiff may anticipate a motion for security by posting a $50,000 bond on filing the complaint or by posting that security any time before or after a motion or order is made. Such an action is considered to comply with Corp C §800, and no further bond or security can be required. Corp C §800(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.42 d. Modification of Order

After the plaintiff has posted the required security, the court may order the security increased or decreased on a showing that it is inadequate or excessive. CCP §§996.010-996.030. See also Melancon v Superior Court (1954) 42 C2d 698, 708, 268 P2d 1050; Beyerbach v Juno Oil Co. (1954) 42 C2d 11, 29, 265 P2d 1.

The plaintiff may be required to furnish security for the defendant's expenses at trial and on appeal. After a judgment for the defendant, the trial court does not lose its jurisdiction to increase (or decrease) security for costs pending appeal. No distinction is made between expenses incident to trial and those incurred in defending the judgment on appeal. Kaiser v Easton (1957) 151 CA2d 307, 314, 311 P2d 108.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.43 e. Appealability

A court's order requiring the plaintiff to furnish security is not appealable. However, a judgment of dismissal for failure to furnish security is appealable. Woodman v Ackerman (1967) 249 CA2d 644, 57 CR 687.

V. ACTIONS AGAINST ARCHITECTS AND ENGINEERS

§29.44 A. Scope of Statute

Any licensed architect, landscape architect, engineer, building designer, or land surveyor who is a defendant in an action for damages for "error, omission, or professional negligence in the creation and preparation of plans, specifications, designs, reports or surveys which are the basis for work performed or agreed to be performed on real property" may demand security for costs from the plaintiff. CCP §1029.5(a).

This provision does not apply to actions for wrongful death or bodily injury or to actions brought in small claims court. CCP §1029.5(b).

NOTE: There are no recorded decisions interpreting this statute. On constitutionality, see §29.50.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Procedures

§29.45 1. Noticed Motion; Showing Required

Within 30 days after service of summons, a defendant architect or engineer may notice a motion for an order requiring the plaintiff to furnish security not exceeding $500. CCP §1029.5(a).

The motion must be accompanied by an affidavit or declaration with facts showing that the claim against the moving defendant is "frivolous." CCP §1029.5(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.46 2. Hearing

At the hearing, the court must grant the motion if the defendant demonstrates that (CCP §1029.5(a)):

- The plaintiff will not suffer undue hardship in furnishing the undertaking; and
- There is no reasonable possibility that the plaintiff has a cause of action against the moving defendant.

If the court finds that security is appropriate, it will set a reasonable time within which the bond must be filed. CCP §1029.5(a). If more than one defendant moves for security, the undertaking must not exceed $500 for each defendant, up to a maximum of $3000. CCP §1029.5(c). The court's determination on the furnishing of security is not a determination of the merits of the action and therefore does not create a collateral estoppel effect. See CCP §1029.5(a).

Although any court order determining whether security is required and the amount of the security is not appealable (CCP §1029.5(a)), presumably an appeal may be taken from a judgment dismissing the action. See §29.48.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.47 C. Failure to File Undertaking: Mandatory Dismissal

If the court orders posting of security and the plaintiff does not file a bond within the time set by the court, dismissal of the action is mandatory. CCP §1029.5(a). The court will not lose its jurisdiction over the case by the plaintiff's failure to post bond by the court-ordered date; if the statute of limitations has not run, a subsequent action may be filed on the same cause. See §29.23.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.48 D. Effect of Final Judgment or Dismissal; Costs

In actions requiring a written undertaking under CCP §1029.5, if judgment is later awarded to the defendant or the action is dismissed, the trial court must require the plaintiff to pay the defendant's "costs of defense" up to the amount of the undertaking. CCP §1029.5(d). No case law indicates whether attorney fees are part of the "costs of defense" within the meaning of this statute. However, CCP §1030 provides that the undertaking secures costs and attorney fees, and CCP §391(c) provides that "security" includes amounts sufficient to cover the defendant's attorney fees.

NOTE: The provision of CCP §1029.6(d) requiring doctors and other health practitioners to pay the plaintiff's costs in defending a motion to dismiss is not included in CCP §1029.5(d). See §29.54.

© The Regents of the University of California

VI. ACTIONS AGAINST DOCTORS AND OTHER MEDICAL PROFESSIONALS

§29.49 A. Scope of Statute

Security for costs has been available in actions for "error, omission, or negligence in the performance of professional services, or performance of professional services without consent" that may be filed against a licensed "physician and surgeon, dentist, registered nurse, dispensing optician, optometrist, pharmacist, registered physical therapist, podiatrist, … psychologist, osteopath, chiropractor, clinical laboratory bioanalyst, clinical laboratory technologist, or veterinarian," and hospitals employing those persons. CCP §1029.6(a).

The security for costs requirement does not apply in small claims court actions. CCP §1029.6(b). Unlike the security provision for architects and engineers discussed in §§29.44-29.48, the security for costs requirement is available in wrongful death and bodily injury actions.

WARNING: Code of Civil Procedure §1029.6(e)-(f) provides that a defendant who files or joins a motion for security for costs is precluded from later filing a motion for summary judgment and vice versa. The section dealing with security in actions against architects and engineers does not prevent the defendant from making a motion for summary judgment if a motion for security for costs is made. See CCP §1029.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.50 B. Constitutionality

The provisions providing for notice and hearing in CCP §1029.6(a), together with the standard of showing required (see §29.52), appear to satisfy the requirements of due process dictated by Beaudreau v Superior Court (1975) 14 C3d 448, 121 CR 585.

A constitutional challenge might be made, however, that singling out a group as limited as health care practitioners for special statutory treatment violates the equal protection provisions of the federal and state constitutions. The court in Nork v Superior Court (1973) 33 CA3d 997, 1000, 109 CR 428, explicitly avoided determining this issue.

To the extent that this statute may be vulnerable to constitutional challenge for impermissibly discriminating in favor of a selected class, CCP §1029.5 (applicable to architects and engineers; see §§29.44-29.48) may also be vulnerable.

NOTE: A former provision of CCP §1029.6, providing for additional security to be posted if the plaintiff sought exemplary damages and permitting an ex parte application for such, was held unconstitutional for failure to provide appropriate due process safeguards. Nork v Superior Court, supra.

C. Procedures

§29.51 1. Noticed Motion; Timing

Within 6 months after service of summons, a medical professional defendant may move the court for an order requiring the plaintiff to post bond. CCP §1029.6(a). Counsel for other defendants who have appeared have 30 days from notice of the motion to join in that motion, or they will be precluded from bringing any separate security motion. CCP §1029.6(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.52 2. Hearing; Showing Required

The motion must be supported by an affidavit or declaration showing that the claim against the defendant is frivolous. CCP §1029.6(a).

At the hearing, the court must grant the motion if the moving defendant demonstrates that:

- The plaintiff will not suffer undue economic hardship in posting security; and
- There is no reasonable possibility that the plaintiff has a cause of action against the defendant.

Each defendant seeking security must make his or her own showing concerning the cause of action. CCP §1029.6(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.53 3. Maximum Amount; No Effect on Merits

If the court determines that security is appropriate and establishes the amount required, it will also set a reasonable time in which the bond must be filed. CCP §1029.6(a).

The amount of security cannot exceed $500 against a single defendant (CCP §1029.6(a)) and $1000 against multiple defendants (CCP §1029.6(c)). The court's determination on the motion is not a determination on the merits of any issue in the action. CCP §1029.6(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.54 D. Mandatory Dismissal If Security Not Posted; Costs

The action must be dismissed for each moving defendant if security is not posted by the plaintiff within the time set by the court. CCP §1029.6(a).

If the action is dismissed, or if the defendant prevails, the court must require the plaintiff to bear the defendant's "court costs." CCP §1029.6(d). Compare CCP §1029.5(d), which uses the term "costs of defense." See §29.48. No reported opinions have interpreted these terms.

If the plaintiff prevails after filing the required security, the defendant who moved for security must pay the plaintiff's costs incurred in defending the motion authorized by CCP §1029.6(d). This obligation is not included in the section on architects and engineers. See CCP §1029.5(d).

VII. VEXATIOUS LITIGANTS

§29.55 A. Scope of Statute; Rationale

In 1963, the legislature, concerned about repeated actions brought in propria persona by persons whose claims had been fully litigated, determined that a security for costs provision similar to that used in connection with shareholder derivative suits would curb the abuse of vexatious litigation.

Under CCP §391(b)(1)-(4), a "vexatious litigant" is a person who:

- Has brought at least five actions in propria persona in the past seven years (outside small claims court) that have been adversely determined or unjustifiably permitted to remain pending for at least two years without being brought to trial or hearing;
- Repeatedly relitigates or attempts to relitigate against the same defendant in propria persona any cause of action already finally determined against him or her;
- Repeatedly, while acting in propria persona, files unmeritorious motions, pleadings, or other papers, conducts unnecessary discovery, or engages in frivolous or delaying tactics; or
- Has previously been declared by a state or federal court to be a vexatious litigant.

NOTE: Code of Civil Procedure §391(b)(1), (4) may be applied even if security for costs are sought in a later lawsuit in which the litigant is represented by an attorney. Camerado Ins. Agency, Inc. v Superior Court (1993) 12 CA4th 838, 16 CR2d 42.

In any type of action, a defendant may move the court for an order requiring a plaintiff to furnish security to cover the defendant's reasonable expenses, including attorney fees. CCP §§391(c), 391.3. A court may also enter an order prohibiting a vexatious litigant from filing any new litigation. CCP §391.7. See In re R.H. (2009) 170 CA4th 678, 88 CR3d 650 (plaintiff who in propia persona filed thirteen unsuccessful appeals and writ petitions within seven years, challenging dependency court decisions, deemed vexatious litigant subject to prefiling order).

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.56 B. Constitutionality

The vexatious litigant statutes have been upheld against constitutional attacks on due process and equal protection grounds and have been held not arbitrary, unreasonably vague, or discriminatory against indigents, or unreasonably burdensome. Muller v Tanner (1969) 2 CA3d 445, 82 CR 738; Taliaferro v Hoogs (1965) 236 CA2d 521, 46 CR 147.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Procedures

§29.57 1. Noticed Motion; Timing

At any time until final judgment is entered, the defendant may move for an order requiring the plaintiff to post security. CCP §391.1.

A noticed motion and hearing are needed to satisfy constitutional due process. See Beaudreau v Superior Court (1975) 14 C3d 448, 121 CR 585; Nork v Superior Court (1973) 33 CA3d 997, 109 CR 428.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.58 2. Proceedings Automatically Stayed

Filing a motion for security before the trial under CCP §391.1 automatically stays the proceedings and relieves the moving defendants from pleading to the complaint until 10 days after the motion has been denied or, if it is granted, until 10 days after the plaintiff has served the defendant with notice of filing the required security. CCP §391.6.

When the motion is made at any time after trial, the litigation is stayed for any period decided by the court after the motion is denied or the security is furnished. CCP §391.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.59 3. Grounds; Hearing

A motion for security must be based on the following grounds (CCP §391.1), which may be shown by declarations or exhibits:

- The plaintiff meets the statutory definition of a vexatious litigant (see §29.55).
- There is no reasonable probability that the plaintiff will prevail in the litigation against the moving defendant.

At the hearing, the trial court may consider evidence by oral testimony or affidavit. CCP §391.2; Moran v Murtaugh Miller Meyer & Nelson, LLP (2007) 40 C4th 780, 55 CR3d 112. On limitations in presentation of oral testimony at hearing generally, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306.

The burden of establishing the statutory conditions rests on the moving party. Muller v Tanner (1969) 2 CA3d 445, 464, 82 CR 738.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should be sure that the record reflects evidence in support of both grounds for the motion as well as some showing of the costs and attorney fees that would be necessary to defend the lawsuit. See Muller v Tanner (1969) 2 CA3d 445, 464, 82 CR 738, in which the trial court determined plaintiff to be a vexatious litigant, required him to post security, and dismissed the action on his failure to do so. On appeal, the reviewing court overturned the dismissal, finding that no evidence had been presented in the trial court to sustain a finding that there was no reasonable probability that the plaintiff would prevail in the litigation. On amount of security, see §29.60.

The court's determination on the motion is not a determination on the merits. CCP §391.2.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.60 4. Court Ruling; Amount of Security

If the court determines from the evidence that the plaintiff is a vexatious litigant and there is no reasonable probability that he or she will prevail in the litigation, the court must order the plaintiff to furnish security for the benefit of the moving defendant. CCP §391.3. The statute does not limit the amount of the security. The amount and the time within which the security must be furnished is in the court's discretion. CCP §391.3. However, the amount should be supported by evidence of what the costs and attorney fees to defend the action are likely to be. Muller v Tanner (1969) 2 CA3d 445, 465, 82 CR 738 (court's order will not be sustained as reasonable and nonarbitrary when record indicates that amount of security for attorney fees specified by trial court was pulled out of "thin air").

The security may cover the defendant's reasonable expenses, including attorney fees, incurred in connection with the litigation; it is not limited to taxable costs. CCP §391(c). The amount of the bond may be adjusted as insufficient or excessive during the proceedings. See CCP §§996.010-996.030.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.60A 5. Court Lifting of Prefiling Order

Under CCP §391.7, the court has the authority to lift a prefiling order entered against a person determined to be a vexatious litigant. Luckett v Panos (2008) 161 CA4th 77, 73 CR3d 745. The vexatious litigant must show a change in facts indicating a mending of ways or conduct to support a reversal of the original determination. PBA, LLC v KPOD, Ltd. (2003) 112 CA4th 965, 976, 5 CR3d 532. The litigant must give up suing others as a way of life, and show (Luckett, 161 CA4th at 93):

- A propensity for honesty;
- Genuine remorse for the cost of the litigation on previous defendants; and
- Genuine effort at restitution towards the victims of previous litigation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§29.61 D. Failure to Furnish Security: Mandatory Dismissal

If a plaintiff ordered to provide security fails to do so, the court must dismiss the action against the moving defendant. CCP §391.4; Taliaferro v Hoogs (1965) 236 CA2d 521, 46 CR 147.

- Notice motion for security
- Attach declaration specifying nature and amount of costs and attorney fees incurred or expected to be incurred

If motion for security made no later than 30 days after service of summons

- Notice motion to stay proceedings until 10 days after motion for security denied or 10 days after undertaking has been filed and defendant receives a copy

- Refute defendant's "business judgment" argument by evidence of bad faith
- Show defendant has not met burden of proof regarding grounds

If motion for security granted

c. Defendant

If bond not posted as ordered

- Move for mandatory dismissal of action

Note: Motion preserves prevailing defendant's right to recover attorney fees.

- Prove at hearing that:
- There is no reasonable possibility that plaintiff has cause of action against moving defendant
- Plaintiff would not suffer undue economic hardship in filing undertaking

Note: Within 30 days after receipt of notice of motion, any defendant may join with moving defendant; failure to join precludes subsequent motion for security under CCP §1029.6.

- File opposing papers and supporting declarations demonstrating viability of cause of action against each moving defendant

If motion for security granted

- File undertaking in amount and within time ordered by court
- Pay defendant's court costs up to amount of undertaking if defendant prevails

c. Defendant

If plaintiff fails to file undertaking

- Move for mandatory dismissal of action
- Request that plaintiff pay defendant's court costs up to amount of undertaking ordered by court

d. Plaintiff

If plaintiff prevails in action

- Request that defendant pay plaintiff's court costs in defending motion for dismissal authorized by CCP §1029.6(d)

Note: Any defendant moving for security is subsequently precluded from moving for summary judgment; any defendant moving for summary judgment may not later file or join a motion for security under CCP §1029.

5. Vexatious Litigants (CCP §§391-391.7)

a. Defendant

- Notice motion for security under CCP §391.1 at any time until final judgment is entered and show that:

- Furnish security in amount and within time ordered by court

c. Defendant

If plaintiff fails to furnish security

- Move for mandatory dismissal of action

I. INTRODUCTION

§30.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses the method that a defendant or cross-defendant may use to demand an itemization (bill of particulars) of the total amount alleged to be owed in the complaint or cross-complaint. The plaintiff or cross-complainant must provide documents, i.e., an actual "copy of the account" in response to the demand. See CCP §454. If the demand is made early, the bill of particulars provided may be used both to frame a responsive pleading and as a starting point in planning formal discovery.

This chapter sets forth description and uses (see §§30.3-30.13), procedures (see §§30.14-30.19), enforcing demand (see §§30.20-30.28), relief from noncompliance (see §§30.29-30.31). It includes a diagnostic questions (see §30.32) and a checklist (see §30.33). Forms for demanding or responding to a bill of particulars appear at the end of the chapter (see §§30.34-30.43).

NOTE: Unless otherwise specified in this chapter, the words "plaintiff," "defendant," and "complaint" include "cross-defendant," "cross-complainant," and "cross-complaint."

§30.3 II. DESCRIPTION AND USES

A bill of particulars is a device that a defendant or cross-defendant may use to clarify the pleadings. Statutory authority in California for the common law right to demand the items of an account is found in CCP §454 under the general rules of pleading. See 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §499 (5th ed 2008).

A demand for a bill of particulars (see §§30.14-30.15) forces a plaintiff or cross-complainant who sues on an account in an action in contract or quasi-contract to itemize the total sum alleged in the complaint or cross-complaint. In practice, the bill of particulars frequently serves important discovery functions, e.g., clarifying issues or obtaining documents, thereby guarding against surprise at trial. On discovery generally, see California Civil Discovery Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

Once filed, the bill of particulars is considered incorporated into the particular cause of action pleaded in the complaint, thus limiting the plaintiff's (or cross-complainant's) proof at trial to those matters set forth in the bill and complaint (or cross-complaint). See §30.12.

A. Advantages; Limitations

§30.4 1. Right to Itemization of Total Sum Alleged

A party served with a complaint or cross-complaint on an account pleaded in general terms is entitled to a copy of the account within 10 days after serving a written demand. CCP §454.

The bill of particulars permits the party demanding it to prepare a defense by protecting him or her from potential surprise when a cause of action is stated on an account without specifying the particular items of the account. See Long Beach City Sch. Dist. v Dodge (1902) 135 C 401, 407, 67 P 499; McCarthy v Mt. Tecarte Land & Water Co. (1896) 110 C 687, 692, 43 P 391; Dobbins v Hardister (1966) 242 CA2d 787, 794, 51 CR 866.

§30.5 2. Applies to Contract and Quasi-Contract Actions Only

The major disadvantage of a bill of particulars is that it may be demanded only in actions on account and cannot be used in cases seeking general damages (e.g., for negligence or in most personal injury cases). The demand can be made only in contract or quasi-contract actions (e.g., to recover value of services or materials promised by agreement or claimed in quantum meruit). See §30.9.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.6 3. Using Bill for Discovery Purposes

Demanding a bill of particulars can be an inexpensive way for a defendant or cross-defendant to achieve certain discovery objectives. Because a bill of particulars is limited to contract and quasi-contract cases (see §30.5), and because statutory authority for it is located in the general rules of pleading, many California attorneys seem unfamiliar with its advantages, among which are:

- Costs less than discovery methods. A demand for a bill of particulars requires less attorney time than that needed to frame appropriate interrogatories or ask deposition questions to obtain the same information.
- Allows prompt discovery of case facts. A demand for a bill of particulars can be served early in a case (even before answer to complaint is filed). See §30.15.
- Provides efficient method of obtaining documentation. The party suing on an account must furnish an actual "copy of the account" (CCP §454) if available and may be compelled to gather documents and other items to meet this requirement. See §30.18.
- Limits amount of damages. When the bill of particulars shows that the claim is for an amount less than that demanded in the complaint, recovery is limited to the lesser amount itemized in the bill. See §30.12.
- Aids settlement negotiations. An early demand for a bill can lead to effective settlement discussions, particularly if the complaint overstated the amount of damages and the bill documents a lesser sum. See §30.12.
- Constitutes conclusive evidence. Unless the court allows a bill of particulars to be amended, a party is precluded from giving conflicting or additional evidence at trial on the items and amounts claimed. Unlike answers to interrogatories or deposition questions, a party cannot admit additional items or explain why amounts on a bill of particulars are no longer viewed as accurate. See §30.12.

B. Other Procedures Compared

§30.7 1. Demurrer for Uncertainty

The demurrer for uncertainty (see chap 23) and the demand for a bill of particulars can perform the same function, i.e., each requires a party to state a cause of action more specifically. A demurrer, however, ordinarily lies only when the defect appears on the face of the pleading. CCP §430.30.

Because CCP §454 expressly authorizes pleading an action on an account in general language, a demurrer for uncertainty is not available when the only objection is that the account items are not specified. McFarland v Holcomb (1898) 123 C 84, 55 P 761. The proper remedy in this situation is to demand a bill of particulars. Gaddis v Grant (1919) 39 CA 437, 179 P 410.

If the bill of particulars is served before the answer to the complaint is filed, defense counsel may use the bill to frame a responsive pleading. Unlike a demurrer, a demand for a bill of particulars does not automatically extend the time for answering the complaint; counsel must seek a stipulation or court order to file a pleading after the bill of particulars has been delivered. See §30.17.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.8 2. Discovery Methods

The demand for a bill of particulars (when available; see §30.5) is an inexpensive and effective tool for clarifying issues and obtaining documents, without resort to more costly and time-consuming discovery methods, and should be considered whenever a relatively small sum is at stake. On using the bill for discovery purposes, see §30.6.

Discovery methods, such as depositions, interrogatories, and inspection of documents, serve the same purpose as a demand for a bill of particulars in that they protect a party against surprise at trial. These methods, however, are designed largely for use after the pleadings have been filed; a demand for a bill of particulars, when served before filing an answer to the complaint, can be used to prepare a responsive pleading.

A bill of particulars can often be more effectively used in subsequent pretrial motions and the trial itself than many discovery methods. Deposition testimony, for example, is not absolutely binding in subsequent proceedings, and a party may, at the risk of being impeached, contradict his or her earlier testimony. But because a bill of particulars is viewed as incorporated into the pleading itself, many courts take the position that the pleader may not, in later testimony, materially contradict or modify the statements in the bill unless granted leave to amend by court order. See §§30.12, 30.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. When Available

§30.9 1. Actions on Account; Examples

Although a party need not set forth in the complaint "the items of an account therein alleged," the party must deliver to the opposing party, on demand, a "copy of the account," commonly known as a bill of particulars. CCP §454. Although an argument can be made that §454 was not intended to restrict a court's inherent power to order a party to furnish a bill of particulars, the tendency is to use a bill only in actions on account in which items of the account were not specified in the pleading. See 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §499 (5th ed 2008).

However, the language "on account" has been broadly interpreted to include, in addition to actual book accounts (as defined in CCP §337a), almost any type of contract or quasi-contract action consisting of more than one item. See Long Beach City Sch. Dist. v Dodge (1902) 135 C 401, 407, 67 P 499. For a form of bill of particulars when there is no account to copy (i.e., an action on a common count), see §30.36. For further discussion, see §30.18. Thus a demand for a bill of particulars would be appropriate in actions to recover for:

- Work and materials furnished to defendant under contract (Jensen v Dorr (1911) 159 C 742, 116 P 553);
- Services rendered and traveling expenses incurred under contract between plaintiff and defendant (Jewell v Colonial Theater Co. (1910) 12 CA 681, 108 P 527);
- Money lent and advanced by plaintiff to defendant at defendant's request (Pleasant v Samuels (1896) 114 C 34, 45 P 998);
- Money had and received by defendant (Firpo v Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1926) 80 CA 122, 251 P 657);
- Money paid to correct work improperly performed under construction contract (Long Beach City Sch. Dist. v Dodge, supra);
- Reasonable or agreed-on value of legal services (Burns v Cushing (1892) 96 C 669, 31 P 1124; Baroni v Musick (1934) 3 CA2d 419, 39 P2d 435), but not if action is on an account stated (see §30.10); or
- Breach of lease agreement (Sentney v Heidingsfelder (1932) 120 CA 499, 7 P2d 1106).

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.10 2. Actions on Account Stated; Compared

California courts have taken the position that a demand for a bill of particulars is improper in an action on an account stated (the agreed settlement of an account between the parties). Ahlbin v Crescent Commercial Corp. (1950) 100 CA2d 646, 224 P2d 131. But see dictum in Coffee v Williams (1894) 103 C 550, 562, 37 P 504. The reasoning for this view is that an account stated is a new contract that supersedes the original contract (Jones v Wilton (1938) 10 C2d 493, 75 P2d 593), and an action on an account stated is based not on the original items but on the final balance established by the parties' mutual consent (Hallford v Baird (1938) 27 CA2d 384, 80 P2d 1040), making a bill of particulars inappropriate.

EXAMPLE: In Auzerais v Naglee (1887) 74 C 60, 15 P 371, the court held that, because an account stated supersedes the original contract, the party alleging it need not, in response to a demand for a bill of particulars, specify the items furnished under the original contract. This reasoning has been applied to other actions based on agreements in which the original contractual obligations have been superseded. See, e.g., Henning v Clark (1920) 46 CA 551, 189 P 714 (attorney need not specify particulars in action against client based on settlement agreement); Vassere v Joerger (1938) 10 C2d 689, 76 P2d 656 (particulars need not be supplied in action based on "compromise agreement" in which defendant acknowledged preexisting debt).

The anomaly of Auzerais v Naglee, supra (as stated in a dissenting opinion), is that a party defending an action on an account stated may disprove the amount owing on the account by proving fraud, error, or mistake, yet may not demand a bill of particulars that would make it possible to defend against these contentions. Because fraud, error, or mistake are essentially defensive matters, they must be alleged in the answer. CCP §431.30(b)(2). Auzerais requires, however, a party who suspects fraud, error, or mistake to conduct discovery before filing an answer, or else move to file an amended answer after discovery has revealed facts supporting this defense.

D. Effect on Pleading and Proof

§30.11 1. Amplifies Pleading

A bill of particulars is considered an amplification of the pleading and is incorporated into it for purposes of determining a plaintiff's right of recovery as well as the admissibility of any evidence supporting the claim. Millet v Bradbury (1895) 109 C 170, 41 P 865; Kurokawa v Saroyan (1928) 95 CA 772, 273 P 613. However, because the bill is not a pleading and cannot be answered (Chamberlain v Loewenthal (1902) 138 C 47, 70 P 932), statements made in it, if not denied by the defendant, are not considered admitted (Weiner v Davies (1967) 248 CA2d 387, 56 CR 546).

Because the bill amplifies the pleading in which it is incorporated, it may be used to correct defects or omissions in the original pleading. For example, if the complaint alleges services rendered by the plaintiff as an attorney, but the bill shows that they were rendered by the plaintiff as a broker, the services rendered are within the issues framed by the complaint and bill when read together. See Gage v Billing (1910) 12 CA 688, 108 P 664.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.12 2. Limits Evidence and Recovery

A bill of particulars fixes the legal position of the party giving it in several respects:

- When the bill shows that the claim is for an amount less than that demanded in the pleading, recovery is limited to the lesser amount. For example, in Abbott v Limited Mut. Compensation Ins. Co. (1938) 30 CA2d 157, 85 P2d 961, the complaint demanded $5000 for service rendered, but the items in the bill came only to $3055, and recovery was limited to $3055.
- Evidence offered at trial beyond the scope of items covered in the bill may be excluded. For example, a party omitting reference to credits on an account in the party's bill of particulars may be barred from testifying about the credits at trial. Robertson v Bonelli (1944) 65 CA2d 704, 151 P2d 307. See also Banchero v Coffis (1950) 96 CA2d 717, 722, 216 P2d 151 (trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to exclude evidence on value of services rendered when plaintiff had not furnished bill of particulars on defendant's demand).

A party may, however, introduce evidence at trial that varies from the items set forth in the party's bill when the variance is immaterial. See Weaver v Fickett (1927) 82 CA 116, 255 P 257. Then the party may move for an order at the close of evidence to amend the pleading to conform to proof. See, e.g., Shanklin v Scribner (1923) 62 CA 487, 492, 217 P 130 (corporation's rights were not prejudiced by allowing plaintiff to amend complaint to conform to proof by alleging sum was balance due on an open book account). On amending pleading to conform to proof generally, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§18.103-18.123 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995). A party may also move to amend a bill that omitted items or stated them incorrectly. On correcting bill, see §30.29.

When evidence is offered at trial that is beyond the scope of items covered in the bill, the party against whom the evidence is offered must object to its introduction; a party may not do so for the first time on appeal. Campbell v Hanford (1924) 67 CA 155, 164, 227 P 234, 238 (objection on ground item not included in bill of particulars must be made at proper time).

§30.13 3. Bill and Evidence Distinguished

Although a party's evidence is limited to the items specified in the bill of particulars (see §30.12), the bill itself is not competent evidence of the items. Like allegations in a complaint, proof is required of items set forth in the bill. A party's failure to introduce evidence of these items is a failure to meet the burden of proof and will result in an adverse judgment. See Silva v Linneman (1946) 73 CA2d 971, 167 P2d 794 (bill of particulars is not competent evidence of expenditures alleged in it).

III. PROCEDURES

A. Defendant's Demand

§30.14 1. Who May Make Demand

Any party from whom recovery is sought on a cause of action based on an account (except on an account stated; see §30.10) may demand a bill of particulars. CCP §454. Thus, a defendant who files a cross-complaint based on an account may be required by the plaintiff or another cross-defendant to deliver a bill. See, e.g., Elmore v Tingley (1926) 78 CA 460, 467, 248 P 706.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.15 2. Statutory Requirements; Timing

The statutory authority for demanding a bill of particulars requires no particular form. CCP §454; Elmore v Tingley (1926) 78 CA 460, 468, 248 P 706. However, the demand must be in writing. CCP §454. It should be signed by the party making it and should indicate that the demanding party is the party against whom the account is pleaded. Elmore v Tingley, supra. See form in §30.34.

The statute prescribes no time within which the demand for a bill of particulars must be made. CCP §454. The demand may be made after an answer to the complaint has been filed. A party is not required to obtain a court order before demanding a bill of particulars. See CCP §454. When the demanding party needs the bill to assist in preparing a responsive pleading, however, the demand should be made immediately after service of the complaint.

NOTE: Because the demand does not automatically extend the demanding party's time to file a responsive pleading, an extension of time in which to plead may be necessary. See §30.17.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.16 3. Service; Not Filed With Court

The demand for a bill of particulars may not be filed with the court unless the bill pertains to an issue to be determined in a subsequent law and motion proceeding or is ordered filed by the court for good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 3.250(a)(19).

The demanding party should serve a copy on the responding party and each other party, keeping the original demand, with the original proof of service affixed, to be presented to the court if a later controversy arises. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.250(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.17 4. Effect on Time to Respond to Complaint

Serving a demand for a bill of particulars does not extend defendant's time to answer or otherwise plead to the complaint. Svistunoff v Svistunoff (1952) 108 CA2d 638, 239 P2d 650; Butler v Robinson (1926) 76 CA 223, 244 P 162.

WARNING: In Svistunoff, a default judgment was taken after the defendant's attorney failed to file a responsive pleading as a result of his mistaken belief that the time to do so was automatically extended when a plaintiff was served with a demand for a bill of particulars. The court affirmed the trial court's decision to set aside the default, stating that "a mistake of law does not bar a party, under proper circumstances, from being relieved of a default caused by that mistake." Svistunoff, 108 CA2d at 645. But see Steineck v Coleman (1925) 72 CA 244, 236 P 962, which held that the defendant's motion to vacate judgment was properly denied: the trial court was entitled to determine that the defendant's mistake of law (the belief that time to answer complaint was extended until plaintiff delivered bill of particulars) was not excusable delay but was part of the defendant's policy of intentional delay.

To prevent a default from being taken before the bill of particulars has been examined, the defendant should obtain an extension of time to respond to the complaint, either by stipulation with opposing counsel or by court order (see CCP §1054). Some attorneys enter into reciprocal stipulations, agreeing that the plaintiff has longer than the statutory 10-day period to provide the bill, and the defendant's time to plead to the complaint does not begin to run until after the bill has been delivered. For a stipulation that may be adapted for this purpose, see California Civil Litigation Forms Manual §11.5 (Cal CEB 1980).

PRACTICE TIP: A court will usually grant an extension to a defendant who has demanded a bill of particulars. Dobbins v Hardister (1966) 242 CA2d 787, 795, 51 CR 866. If the court denies an extension, however, the defendant should file a timely answer, denying, on information and belief, the allegations in the complaint and, in support of this denial, pleading facts showing that a demand was made and a request for an extension of time in which to answer was denied. The defendant who has demanded a bill of particulars should also indicate actual ignorance of facts, when true, that a defendant would otherwise be expected to know. Dobbins v Hardister, supra.

B. Plaintiff's Response

§30.18 1. Contents of Bill; Detail Required

Code of Civil Procedure §454 requires that the plaintiff deliver to the demanding party "a copy of the account." If the complaint is verified, the bill must be verified. CCP §454. When the underlying cause of action is based on a book or ledger account, the bill of particulars should simply incorporate by reference a copy of the account. See form in §30.35. When there is no account to copy (i.e., an action on a common count), the bill of particulars should list the items or services for which the plaintiff claims payment is due. See form in §30.36. See discussion in §§30.9-30.10.

No court decision has precisely fixed the standard of detail required in the bill; however, because its purpose is to give reasonable notice of the items constituting the claim in order to enable the defendant to prepare for trial (see §30.3), the bill should set forth those items with particularity. The courts appear to measure adequate compliance according to whether the bill is reasonably detailed and has been prepared in good faith. In Banchero v Coffis (1950) 96 CA2d 717, 216 P2d 151, the response to the defendant's demand for a bill of particulars was held deficient because the plaintiff stated only that four types of services had been performed and made no attempt to itemize the amount claimed for each service. The court found the bill to be "a total and unqualified noncompliance with the demand." 96 CA2d at 721.

In Gilmore v Hill (1957) 152 CA2d 881, 313 P2d 898, the sufficiency of the bill was upheld on appeal because the court found it "difficult to see how more detail could be given." See also Butler Bros. v Connolly (1962) 204 CA2d 22, 25, 22 CR 175 (bill of particulars was as explicit as it could reasonably be made).

A party may not willfully avoid providing a bill of particulars merely because the facts are not within the party's personal knowledge. In such situations a court may require the party to conduct the discovery necessary to obtain and deliver a proper itemization to the demanding party. See Burton v Santa Barbara Nat'l Bank (1966) 247 CA2d 427, 55 CR 529 (plaintiff failed to make reasonable efforts to take oral depositions as ordered by trial court to locate records from which bill of particulars could be made).

PRACTICE TIP: In preparing the bill of particulars, counsel should consider its use in encouraging prompt settlement of a claim. Some attorneys voluntarily supply more detailed information in the bill than might be required. For example, in an action based on a book account, the attorney may include a copy of the ledger account as well as each invoice supporting charges to the account. This approach gives the defendant information that may, when verified by the defendant, result in prompt payment of the claim.

§30.19 2. Timing; Service

Although CCP §454 provides only that the bill be delivered to the adverse party, it is good practice for the plaintiff to serve copies on all parties of record, not just the party demanding it. The plaintiff should serve the original (with the original proof of service affixed) on the demanding party, for filing with the court only if a later controversy arises. See §30.16.

The plaintiff must deliver a bill of particulars to the defendant within 10 days after service of the demand. CCP §454; 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §504 (5th ed 2008). When the plaintiff served the demand by mail, the 10-day period for delivering the bill is extended for five calendar days if the place of address and place of mailing is in California, 10 calendar days if either the place of mailing or place of address is outside California but in the United States, or 20 calendar days if either the place of mailing or place of address is outside the United States. CCP §1013(a). See chap 18.

Failure to deliver a timely bill may result in the plaintiff's being precluded from offering evidence of the account pleaded in the complaint. See §30.24.

PRACTICE TIP: A plaintiff who has failed to deliver a bill of particulars on time should deliver the bill as soon as possible and if necessary file a motion for relief under CCP §473. See §30.31. A late bill satisfies the requirements of CCP §454 if the demanding party receives it in time to prepare for trial. See §30.30.

IV. ENFORCING DEMAND AND PRECLUDING EVIDENCE

A. Motion for Further Bill

§30.20 1. Waiver of Defects When Motion Not Made

The court may order a further bill of particulars when the bill delivered is too general or is otherwise defective. CCP §454. The permissive language of CCP §454 has been judicially expanded into a rule that the demanding party's normal remedy is a noticed motion for a further bill. See, e.g., Burton v Santa Barbara Nat'l Bank (1966) 247 CA2d 427, 433, 55 CR 529.

A party who fails to make a timely motion for a further bill is considered to have waived any defects in the bill provided. Union Lumber Co. v Morgan (1912) 162 C 722, 124 P 228; Ames v Bell (1907) 5 CA 1, 89 P 619. See also 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§507-508 (5th ed 2008). This is true even if the bill is wholly defective in form and useless for its intended purpose. Burton v Santa Barbara Nat'l Bank, supra. But see Banchero v Coffis (1950) 96 CA2d 717, 721, 216 P2d 151. On the time in which to move for a further bill, see §30.21.

When the motion has been granted but the plaintiff fails to provide a further bill, defense counsel can then file a motion to preclude the plaintiff from introducing evidence at trial of the account on which the claim is based. CCP §454; Burton v Santa Barbara Nat'l Bank, supra. See §30.24. On combining motion for further bill and motion to preclude evidence, see §30.22.

PRACTICE TIP: Although CCP §454 does not require it, the cases suggest that a defense attorney who receives a defective bill immediately return it to the plaintiff, demanding further particulars. See §30.21. For sample demand in letter form, see §30.37. A demand letter notifies the plaintiff that the defendant intends to obtain a more specific bill and eliminates the need for a motion and a court appearance if the defendant receives a satisfactory bill in response. A demand letter should be sent promptly after receipt of a deficient bill. It is advisable to specify the deficiencies in the bill and advise the opposing party that, unless further particulars are delivered within a stated time, a motion for a further bill will be made. A copy of this letter may be attached as an exhibit to declarations supporting any court motion made later.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.21 2. Timing

Although CCP §454 does not specify the time within which a motion for a further bill of particulars must be made, the courts have repeatedly said that a party who is dissatisfied with a defective bill of particulars should return it immediately or move for a further bill. Dennison v Smith (1851) 1 C 437; Storm & Butts v Lipscomb (1931) 117 CA 6, 21, 3 P2d 567, 573. On waiver of defects, see §30.20.

The grant or denial of a motion for a further bill of particulars is a matter within the trial court's discretion. Meredith v Marks (1963) 212 CA2d 265, 220, 27 CR 737. The court may properly deny an untimely or belated motion. Ames v Bell (1907) 5 CA 1, 89 P 619 (court properly denied defendant's motion for further bill made on day of trial and more than five months after plaintiff's bill was served).

PRACTICE TIP: If counsel decides not to pursue informal procedures (see §30.20), the motion for a further bill should be made promptly on receipt of a bill that the defendant considers insufficient. If a letter demanding a further bill has been sent (see sample in §30.37), the defendant should notice a motion soon after expiration of the time stated in the letter.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.22 3. Procedure

The originals of the demand and the bill of particulars itself should be filed with or attached to the motion for a further bill. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.250 (documents relevant to determination of law and motion issue may be filed separately or attached to other documents).

The declaration accompanying the motion for a further bill should explain why the plaintiff's failure to supply complete information will prejudice the demanding party's ability to prepare a defense. Ordinarily, prejudice cannot be shown when the information is already in the defendant's possession (Storm & Butts v Lipscomb (1931) 117 CA 6, 3 P2d 567), unless the information is unintelligible (Sadik v Wallberg Mining Corp. (1936) 11 CA2d 379, 53 P2d 981).

The declaration should also specify the additional information that the plaintiff should be required to supply, e.g., alleged dates and places of services listed in deficient bill, dates goods were delivered or materials furnished, and cost of goods, materials, or labor. See form in §30.40.

Drafting a proposed order that specifies the further particulars that the plaintiff is required to furnish will, if the motion is granted, provide a sufficient basis for a later ruling precluding evidence for failure to comply. See Connor v Hutchinson (1861) 17 C 279. On notice requirements for motions generally, see chap 12.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel may consider combining a motion for a further bill with a motion to preclude evidence (see §30.24), i.e., a request that, unless the plaintiff furnishes a more complete bill within a stated period of time, an order precluding evidence of the items of account will be granted on the defendant's ex parte motion. Such an order saves time and money by eliminating the need for a noticed motion to preclude evidence and is probably within the court's discretion under CCP §454. See §30.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.23 4. Plaintiff's Failure to Comply With Order for Further Bill

A party who fails to comply with an order for a further bill of particulars within the time set by the court may, in the court's discretion, be barred from introducing evidence at trial in support of the alleged account. CCP §454.

To preserve this remedy, the demanding party must make a motion to preclude evidence. See §30.24. If the defendant delays in making such a motion until the trial, it may be denied. Connor v Hutchinson (1861) 17 C 279; Burton v Santa Barbara Nat'l Bank (1966) 247 CA2d 427, 55 CR 529. See §30.25.

B. Motion to Preclude Evidence

§30.24 1. Statutory Penalty

A party to whom a demand for bill of particulars has been made must deliver the bill to the adverse party within 10 days "or be precluded from giving evidence thereof." CCP §454. Because of the potential harshness of this penalty, reluctance to impose it has resulted in judicial qualification of the statute's mandatory language.

It has been held that, when there has been a failure to deliver a bill because of complete refusal or gross neglect, imposition of the penalty is in the trial court's discretion. McManus v Larson (1932) 122 CA 716, 10 P2d 523 (plaintiff completely ignored demand; trial court granted defendant's motion to preclude evidence). But see Burton v Santa Barbara Nat'l Bank (1966) 247 CA2d 427, 55 CR 529 (mandatory penalty must be imposed on plaintiff's complete refusal to deliver bill as was the case here; only in cases involving mere delay in providing adequate bill can courts exercise discretion not to impose statutory penalty). The court in McManus relied on the reasoning in McCarthy v Mt. Tecarte Land & Water Co. (1896) 110 C 687, 43 P 391, in which an adequate bill was delivered one day late, the defendant was not prejudiced by the delay, and the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion to preclude evidence was affirmed.

In exercising its discretion, a trial court is less likely to be reversed on appeal when evidence has been precluded (see, e.g., Elmore v Tingley (1926) 78 CA 460, 248 P 706) than when it has not (see, e.g., Banchero v Coffis (1950) 96 CA2d 717, 216 P2d 151). Generally, however, the courts have enforced the statutory penalty only when the plaintiff utterly refused to comply (i.e., by failing to deliver a bill or furnishing a wholly inadequate document). See §§30.18, 30.24. If the bill delivered is objectionable, the burden is on the defendant to move for a further bill. When the plaintiff refuses to comply with an order for a further bill, or never furnished a bill in the first place, the defendant must then move to preclude evidence. See §30.25.

PRACTICE TIP: When a bill of particulars has not been provided within the statutory period, it is good practice for the demanding attorney to write to the plaintiff's counsel, advising that the time to respond has elapsed and that a motion to preclude evidence will be made if the bill is not delivered promptly. Such a letter often eliminates the need for a motion by causing a bill to be delivered. It is also helpful in persuading a court that the evidence should be excluded because the refusal to supply a bill was willful. A copy of the demand letter should be attached to the moving papers and marked as an exhibit if a later motion to preclude evidence becomes necessary. For sample letter demanding bill after plaintiff's failure to deliver, see §30.41.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.25 2. Timing

Case law is not uniform on whether, when a party ignores or refuses to comply with a demand for a bill of particulars, the penalty prescribed by CCP §454 requires that a motion to preclude evidence must be made before trial.

In Elmore v Tingley (1926) 78 CA 460, 248 P 706, the plaintiff's demand for a bill of particulars to the defendant's cross-complaint was wholly ignored. No pretrial motion to preclude evidence was made, but at trial the plaintiff objected to the defendant's offered evidence in support of the alleged account. The objection was sustained, and the ruling was affirmed on appeal as a proper exercise of the trial court's discretion. In Burton v Santa Barbara Nat'l Bank (1966) 247 CA2d 427, 433, 55 CR 529, the court implied that complete refusal or gross neglect in failing to supply a bill of particulars requires that the evidence be precluded under CCP §454 even if no pretrial motion was made.

However, in Banchero v Coffis (1950) 96 CA2d 717, 721, 216 P2d 151, 154, in which a pretrial motion to preclude evidence made six months before trial was held to have been erroneously denied, the court suggested that the motion must be timely and that a trial court may properly deny "eleventh-hour motions," i.e., a motion made at the beginning of the trial. See also St. John v Consolidated Constr. Co. (1920) 182 C 25, 189 P 276 (demand for bill of particulars ignored for over a year and a half but no motion made to preclude evidence; court permitted bill to be delivered on day of trial and offered five-day continuance to give demanding party time to examine it and prepare for trial); Storm & Butts v Lipscomb (1931) 117 CA 6, 3 P2d 567 (defendant may not wait until trial, but must move for and obtain an order precluding evidence beforehand).

It is clear that CCP §454 on its face does not require a pretrial motion to preclude evidence when a party has refused or ignored a demand for a bill of particulars. However, the cases seem to reflect judicial concern in applying the penalty of precluding evidence under §454, particularly for bills delivered late. See §30.30. Unless the party against whom the order is to be imposed had ample notice that it would be sought, particularly with defective bills, the demanding party should file both the motion for a further bill and a motion to preclude evidence before trial promptly or risk waiving the right to have the evidence precluded at trial (see §30.20).

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.26 3. Procedures

A motion to preclude evidence for failure to comply with the original demand or with an order for a further bill should show in a supporting declaration how the demanding party has been prejudiced in preparing a defense by the plaintiff's failure. A court may deny the motion unless prejudice has been shown. See Sadik v Wallberg Mining Corp. (1936) 11 CA2d 379, 53 P2d 981; Storm & Butts v Lipscomb (1931) 117 CA 6, 3 P2d 567.

The supporting declaration should also show any facts evidencing the plaintiff's complete refusal to respond to the original demand or to comply adequately with a court order for a further bill. Any informal demand letters requesting the plaintiff's compliance should be attached as exhibits. See forms in §§30.37, 30.41.

If an order for a further bill provides for it, the motion may be made ex parte. See §30.22. Normally, however, a motion to preclude evidence is a noticed motion. See generally chap 12. For forms, see §§30.42-30.43.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.27 4. When Motion Granted; Effect

A court order precluding the introduction of evidence of an account alleged in a complaint often signals the end of the litigation because the plaintiff is precluded from offering evidence on what may be the only cause of action. In such a case, the order is a final determination of the parties' rights and is therefore an appealable order. Burton v Santa Barbara Nat'l Bank (1966) 247 CA2d 427, 55 CR 529.

However, if the party against whom the order is made has alleged another cause of action in the pleadings that is not affected by the order, an appeal cannot be taken until the remaining cause of action has been resolved. Caruso v Snap-Tite, Inc. (1969) 275 CA2d 211, 79 CR 642.

Relief from an order precluding introduction of evidence is sometimes available under CCP §473 when the failure to deliver a bill was due to mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. See §30.31.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.28 5. If Motion Denied

A trial court's denial of a motion to preclude evidence is not an appealable order. See CCP §§904.1-904.2. To preserve the issue for appellate review, the defendant must promptly object to the plaintiff's introduction of evidence at trial. Failure to object results in a waiver of the defendant's right to raise the propriety of the trial court's order on appeal. Glogau v Hagan (1951) 107 CA2d 313, 321, 237 P2d 329.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. RELIEF FROM NONCOMPLIANCE

§30.29 A. Amending Erroneous or Incomplete Bill

A bill of particulars may be prepared from an accounting in which one or more items are missing or erroneous, e.g., when an invoice is misplaced or entered incorrectly. A plaintiff who learns of any errors after the bill has been delivered should immediately notify the defendant by letter and request a stipulation permitting amendment of the bill. If a stipulation cannot be obtained, the plaintiff should file a motion to amend the bill on the grounds of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect under CCP §473. See §30.31.

The plaintiff should attach a copy of the bill to the motion as an exhibit and should state in a supporting declaration that the defendant was notified of the errors or omissions by letter but has refused to stipulate to amending the bill. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.250(a)(19).

PRACTICE TIP: Although a party may be able to introduce evidence at trial that does not vary materially from the items set forth in the bill (see §30.12), there is no assurance that a court will consider the variance immaterial. The better practice is for plaintiff to move promptly to amend the bill. The motion will ordinarily be granted, especially when the defendant cannot show prejudice because there has been ample notice of the error. See §30.31.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.30 B. Bill Delivered Late

Although CCP §454 requires a plaintiff to deliver the bill to the adverse party within 10 days "or be precluded from giving evidence," the courts have been reluctant to impose this extreme penalty when the defendant has not been prejudiced by an otherwise adequate bill delivered late. See §30.24.

In McCarthy v Mt. Tecarte Land & Water Co. (1896) 110 C 687, 43 P 391, the court held that imposition of the §454 penalty when a bill is late is a matter of court discretion. Thus, a court may admit the evidence and refuse to apply the penalty because the purpose of the statute has been fulfilled if the bill, even though technically late, is delivered in time for the demanding party to prepare a defense. McCarthy v Mt. Tecarte Land & Water Co., supra (bill delivered one day late). See also Silva v Bair (1904) 141 C 599, 75 P 162; Cromer v Strieby (1942) 54 CA2d 405, 128 P2d 916.

The cases make it clear that evidence of the account will not be precluded because of a technical violation of CCP §454, when the bill in other respects has met the statutory requirements, unless the defendant has been prejudiced by the delay. Prejudice is frequently difficult for the defendant to show, particularly when the court grants a continuance if, after receipt of a late bill, the defendant needs more time to prepare for trial. See, e.g., St. John v Consolidated Constr. Co. (1920) 182 C 25, 189 P 276.

© The Regents of the University of California

§30.31 C. Motion Under CCP §473

A party who has failed to comply properly with a demand for a bill of particulars or against whom an order precluding introduction of evidence of the account has issued under CCP §454 for failure to deliver a bill may, because of that party's mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, sometimes obtain relief by court order. See CCP §473. Under this section, a court may, "in furtherance of justice and on such terms as may be proper," permit a party to amend a defective or erroneous bill, to deliver a bill when no bill has yet been delivered, or to vacate an order precluding introduction of evidence.

A mistake of law or the fact that the attorney was too busy with other matters to prepare a bill of particulars has been held not to warrant relief under CCP §473. See, e.g., McManus v Larson (1932) 122 CA 716, 10 P2d 523. But see Svistunoff v Svistunoff (1952) 108 CA2d 638, 239 P2d 650, in which the court confirmed the trial court's vacating a default when the defense attorney's mistake of law led him to believe that serving a demand for a bill of particulars extended the time in which to answer the complaint; see further discussion of this case in §30.17. On showing that defendant was not prejudiced by plaintiff's actions, see §30.30.

A motion for relief under CCP §473 must be timely; undue delay may result in its denial. See St. John v Consolidated Constr. Co. (1920) 182 C 25, 189 P 276, explained in Fisher v Brotherton (1927) 82 CA 532, 540, 255 P 854.

An order under CCP §473 is within the trial court's discretion, and its decision will not be disturbed unless an abuse of discretion is shown. The fact that an appellate court might have reached a different result is not indicative of an abuse of discretion. McManus v Larson, supra.

§30.32 VI. DIAGNOSTIC QUESTIONS

Answers to the following questions may assist defense counsel in determining whether to demand a bill of particulars (a bill of particulars cannot be used in cases seeking damages for negligence (i.e., most personal injury cases):

1. Is the demanding party a defendant or cross-defendant?
2. Can a bill of particulars be demanded?
3. Is the case one in which it is appropriate to ask for the "items of an account," i.e., when a total amount only was alleged in the complaint or cross-complaint?
4. Does the action sound in contract or quasi-contract (e.g., services rendered and expenses incurred under agreement of the parties)?
5. Does the account consist of more than one item?
6. If provided, will the bill contain information useful to the demanding party?
7. If the demand is served within 30 days after receipt of the complaint or cross-complaint, and the bill will be used to frame the response, is an extension of time needed to answer or otherwise respond to the complaint?

On circumstances under which a bill of particulars may be demanded, see §§30.4-30.5. On who may make demand, see §30.14.

I. INTRODUCTION

§31.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses intervention, a procedure by which a person who was not named as a plaintiff or defendant in a complaint or cross-complaint may become a party in the lawsuit. It discusses the nature of intervention (see §§31.3-31.36), applying for and opposing intervention (see §§31.37-31.50), and procedures once intervention is granted (see §§31.51-31.57). It also contains a checklist (see §31.59), diagnostic questions (see §31.58), and forms (see §§31.60-31.66).

§31.2 B. Governing Law

In addition to CCP §387, which provides the most frequently invoked authority for intervention, other more specific intervention statutes authorize intervention in specific circumstances (see §31.3-31.5); still other statutes provide procedures similar to intervention for particular situations (see §§31.7-31.13).

II. NATURE OF INTERVENTION

§31.3 A. Description of Intervention; General Statute (CCP §387)

Intervention is a procedure by which a person becomes a party in a pending action or proceeding between other parties. CCP §387.

NOTE: Code of Civil Procedure §387 was amended to more closely resemble Fed R Civ P 24. Code of Civil Procedure §387(b) is a nearly verbatim adoption of Fed R Civ P 24(a), but CCP §387(a) differs substantially from its counterpart, Fed R Civ P 24(b).

Under the precursor to CCP §387, trial court judges had discretion to determine whether to permit a party to intervene. See, e.g., In re Yokohama Specie Bank (1948) 86 CA2d 545, 555, 195 P2d 555. Present CCP §387 states requirements for both mandatory and discretionary intervention. Mandatory intervention is discussed in §31.5, and discretionary intervention in §31.4.

In addition to adding the federal mandatory intervention rule (subdivision (b)), the 1978 amendment of CCP §387 substituted the federal criterion that an application to intervene must be "timely" for the prior requirement that it be made "before trial." See §31.37.

NOTE: Analysis of cases decided under former CCP §387 must take into account the changes in the statute.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/31 Intervention/§31.4 B. Discretionary Intervention

§31.4 B. Discretionary Intervention

A prospective intervenor trying to persuade a judge to permit intervention in a pending action under the discretionary provisions of CCP §387(a) should show by allegations in a timely ex parte application or noticed motion (see §§31.43-31.44), and in statements in the supporting declarations, that he or she has:

- An interest in the matter in litigation;
- An interest in the success of either of the parties; or
- An interest against both parties.

Whether intervention is permissive or mandatory, a petition for leave to intervene is required; without permission from the court, a party lacks any standing to intervene in the action. Lohnes v Astron Computer Prods. (2001) 94 CA4th 1150, 1153, 115 CR2d 34.

Courts require the intervenor's interest to be "direct and immediate" (see Olson v Hopkins (1969) 269 CA2d 638, 641, 75 CR 33), rather than "remote and consequential" (see City of Burlingame v County of San Mateo (1951) 103 CA2d 885, 890, 230 P2d 375) or "purely speculative" (see Royal Indem. Co. v United Enters., Inc. (2008) 162 CA4th 194, 212, 75 CR3d 481). The intervenor's interest also must be properly determinable in the action (Continental Vinyl Prods. Corp. v Mead Corp. (1972) 27 CA3d 543, 103 CR 806). The intervenor should be in a position to gain or lose by the direct operation of the judgment in the action as it exists, without reference to issues not involved in the action. See, e.g., Olson v Hopkins, supra.

If intervention will introduce new issues, the court may refuse to grant leave to intervene in cases in which intervention is discretionary. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v Gerlach (1976) 56 CA3d 299, 303, 128 CR 396.

Once the trial court is satisfied that the proposed intervenor has met the requirements of CCP §387, it will balance the objectives of intervention—such as the avoidance of delay or multiplicity of actions, or prejudice to the intervenor—against the likelihood of delay, inconvenience, or prejudice to the original parties if intervention is permitted. See generally Continental Vinyl Prods. Corp. v Mead Corp., supra, and the cases cited in 27 CA3d at 552.

C. Mandatory Intervention

§31.5 1. Description

A prospective intervenor trying to persuade a judge that leave to intervene must be granted under the mandatory provisions of CCP §387(b) must show by allegations in a timely ex parte application or notice of motion for intervention that (see Lohnes v Astron Computer Prods. (2001) 94 CA4th 1150, 1153, 115 CR2d 34):

- A provision of law confers on the prospective intervenor an unconditional right to intervene (see the list in §31.6); or
- The prospective intervenor claims an interest relating to the property or transaction that is the subject of the action; his or her ability to protect that interest may be impaired or impeded by the disposition of the pending case; and his or her interest is not adequately represented by existing parties.

A judge who decides that one of the elements listed in CCP §387(b) is absent (or has not been shown by the applicant) appears to be free to exercise the discretion to permit intervention traditionally held to reside in CCP §387(a). Guidance in interpreting CCP §387(b) may be sought from cases decided under Fed R Civ P 24(a) and the statutes or rules of states that have previously adopted the federal rule.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.6 2. Statutes That Grant Unconditional Right to Intervene

Some of the specific statutes that authorize intervention in particular situations and appear to grant an unconditional right to intervene under CCP §387(b) include:

- CCP §1250.230: All persons claiming legal or equitable interests in real property subject to condemnation proceedings (see also §31.10).
- Corp C §1800(c): Any shareholder or creditor, at any time before trial, in proceedings for involuntary dissolution of a corporation.
- Corp C §414(b): Any creditor of a corporation in an action against a shareholder based on an unpaid subscription for its shares.
- Corp C §1304(a): Any dissenting shareholder demanding the purchase of his or her shares as a result of a corporate reorganization or any interested corporation in an action to determine whether the shareholder's shares are dissenting shares or to determine the fair market value of dissenting shares (6-month time limit to file may make this statute conditional).
- Lab C §3853: Either an employer or an employee in an action commenced by the other against a third party for damages for an industrial injury (see discussion in California Workers' Damages Practice §§3.30-3.32, 7.32-7.45 (2d ed Cal CEB 2001)).
- CC §1781(e)(3): Any member of a consumer class who learns of the existence of a consumer class action affecting the class may, through counsel, enter an appearance as a party to the action. See Fed R Civ P 23(d)(1), governing intervention in certain class actions.

D. Related Procedures Similar to Intervention

1. Indispensable Party's Application for Joinder (CCP §389)

§31.7 a. Requirements for Joinder Under CCP §389

Code of Civil Procedure §389(a) provides that a person who is subject to service of process, and whose joinder would not deprive the court of jurisdiction over the subject matter of the action, must be joined as a party in the action if:

- The applicant's joinder is necessary to secure complete relief among existing parties; or
- The applicant claims an interest related to the subject of the action, and the disposition of the action in his or her absence either might make it difficult for the applicant to protect that interest or might leave an existing party subject to a substantial risk of incurring inconsistent obligations.

Although persons who wish to be joined may themselves apply to the court for an order joining them as parties under CCP §389, that statute is more frequently invoked by one of the existing parties who wishes to join a nonparty. See Cuneo v Superior Court (1963) 213 CA2d 452, 28 CR 791; Muller v Robinson (1959) 174 CA2d 511, 345 P2d 25. See generally chap 14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.8 b. Comparison of CCP §389 and CCP §387

Normally, any person who must be made a party under CCP §389 also has a sufficient interest in the matter in litigation to justify intervention under CCP §387 and may base an application to become a party on both statutes. Crofton v Young (1941) 48 CA2d 452, 119 P2d 1003.

PRACTICE TIP: Under CCP §389, the court orders the nonparty to be joined as a party within the existing pleadings, whereas CCP §387 offers the omitted person an opportunity to set forth a position in a complaint in intervention in his or her own terms. Thus, seeking intervention may have an advantage over applying for joinder even if the more rigorous requirements of CCP §389 can be satisfied. In Crofton v Young, supra, the omitted person was permitted to be joined as a party under both statutes and to file both an answer and a cross-complaint setting forth his interest.

In limited circumstances, the CCP §389 motion to be joined as a party may be available when the CCP §387 motion to intervene is not. One may not be able to intervene under CCP §387 after trial has commenced (see §31.37), but an indispensable person can seek an order under CCP §389 joining him or her as a party at any time. In Abbot Kinney Co. v City of Los Angeles (1959) 53 C2d 52, 346 P2d 385, the state first asserted its indispensability in a brief filed after the rendering of an opinion by the court of appeal. The supreme court held that the state was indispensable and should be joined as a party for the purposes of a new trial.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/31 Intervention/§31.9 c. Effect on Case If Indispensable Person Cannot Be Made a Party

§31.9 c. Effect on Case If Indispensable Person Cannot Be Made a Party

Under CCP §389(b), if a person described in CCP §389(a) cannot be made a party, the court must determine whether the action should proceed or be dismissed without prejudice, "the absent person being thus regarded as indispensable." The factors to be considered by the court in making this determination include:

- The extent to which the judgment, if the person is not joined, might be prejudicial to him or her or the existing parties;
- The extent to which, by protective provisions in the judgment, by the shaping of relief, or other measures, the prejudice can be lessened or avoided;
- Whether a judgment in his or her absence will be adequate; and
- Whether plaintiff or cross-complainant will have an adequate remedy if the action is dismissed.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.10 2. Application for Joinder by Person Claiming Interest in Real or Personal Property (CCP §389.5)

A person who claims an interest in real or personal property may apply to the court to be made a party to an action for the recovery of or to determine conflicting claims to that property. CCP §389.5. See Allen v Pitchess (1973) 36 CA3d 321, 111 CR 658. The court in its discretion may order the parties to bring such a claimant into the action by proper amendment of the pleadings. Both CCP §389.5 and CCP §387(a) call for an exercise of the court's discretion, and it appears that any person whose interest is such that the court would order him or her made a party under CCP §389.5 would also be permitted to intervene under CCP §387(a).

PRACTICE TIP: As in the case of an indispensable party's application for joinder (see §31.7), a nonparty property claimant is brought in by means of an amendment to the existing pleadings. An intervenor enters the action by filing a complaint in intervention, choosing his or her own issues and causes of action and the way in which they are presented. This difference may explain why CCP §389.5 is infrequently used.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.11 3. Judgment Creditor's Lien on Cause of Action and Judgment

A judgment creditor of a party to an action may, in the court's discretion, be granted a lien on that party's cause of action and on any judgment subsequently obtained. CCP §§708.410-708.480. After such a lien is granted, the judgment debtor may not agree to any compromise or settlement of his or her cause of action, or any satisfaction of judgment, without the judgment creditor's consent. CCP §708.440.

A judgment creditor may also be permitted to intervene in the action. CCP §708.430. However, intervention is not required and, in most instances, the lien provides adequate protection to the creditor. See McClearen v Superior Court (1955) 45 C2d 852, 219 P2d 449. For some purposes, the lienor is treated as a party to the action. See CCP §708.430(b).

A judgment creditor obtains a lien by filing in the pending action or proceeding a notice of lien together with an abstract, or certified copy of the creditor's money judgment (CCP §708.410(b)), serving a copy of the notice and a statement of the date the notice of lien was filed (CCP §708.410(c)).

For discussion of this lien procedure, see Debt Collection Practice in California §§11.12-11.20 (2d ed Cal CEB 1999).

§31.12 4. Third Party Claim Against Levied-on Property

A nonparty who claims an interest in property levied on under a writ of attachment, execution, possession, or sale may file a claim with the levying officer. See CCP §§488.110, 720.010-720.800.

Nonparty claimants may also intervene. See §31.19.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/31 Intervention/§31.13 5. Petitioning for Coordination of Actions Sharing Common Question

§31.13 5. Petitioning for Coordination of Actions Sharing Common Question

Code of Civil Procedure §§403-404.9 and Cal Rules of Ct 3.501-3.550 set up procedures whereby any party to an action that shares a common question of fact or law with any other civil action pending in California may file a motion in noncomplex cases or petition in complex cases to have those actions coordinated. See generally chap 44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.14 6. Applying to Appear as Amicus Curiae

Persons interested in an action solely because of its potential consequences as a legal precedent have not been considered to have an interest sufficient to permit them to intervene (see §31.33), but may frequently accomplish their objectives by applying to the court for permission to file amicus curiae briefs. See Jersey Maid Milk Prods. Co. v Brock (1939) 13 C2d 661, 91 P2d 599; Cal Rules of Ct 8.200. An amicus is not a party, is limited to arguing questions of law, and cannot plead or offer evidence. See 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §236 (5th ed 2008).

E. Examples of Persons Permitted to Intervene

§31.15 1. Real Parties in Interest

One who is or has become the real party in interest in an action may intervene. Robinson v Crescent City Mill & Transp. Co. (1892) 93 C 316, 28 P 950; Cohn v County Bd. of Supervisors (1955) 135 CA2d 180, 286 P2d 836.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.16 2. Successors in Interest

On any party's death or disability or the transfer of the party's interest, there may be a substitution of parties on motion under CCP §§377.20, 377.40-377.43. Under this statute, executors, administrators, heirs, transferees, and other such successors in interest may become substitute parties. In addition, such successors in interest may intervene under CCP §387(a). Marc Bellaire, Inc. v Fleischman (1960) 185 CA2d 591, 8 CR 650; Keyes v Hurlbert (1941) 43 CA2d 497, 111 P2d 447. Availability of intervention may be of particular significance to successors, such as assignees of fractional interests. See Dabney v Philleo (1951) 38 C2d 60, 237 P2d 648.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.17 3. Insurers and Sureties

An insurer or surety may intervene in an action in which the insured or the principal debtor is not defending in good faith or has defaulted. Johnson v Hayes Cal. Builders, Inc. (1963) 60 C2d 572, 35 CR 618; Coburn v Smart (1879) 53 C 742. See also Truck Ins. Exch. v Superior Court (1997) 60 CA4th 342, 70 CR2d 255, which permitted a third insurer to intervene in an action brought by two other insurers against an insured. An exception to this right to intervene exists, however, for an insurer who has denied coverage or has offered to defend only with a reservation of rights. In such cases the courts have denied the insurer permission to intervene, stating that the insurer has no interest under such circumstances to justify intervention in an action against the insured as required by CCP §387. Corridan v Rose (1955) 137 CA2d 524, 529, 290 P2d 939. See also Hinton v Beck (2009) 176 CA4th 1378, 98 CR3d 612 (no abuse of discretion to strike insurer's complaint in intervention, because its denial of coverage and refusal to defend insured left it with no direct and immediate interest in litigation, even though it ultimately might be required to pay judgment); Noya v A.W. Coulter Trucking (2006) 143 CA4th 838, 49 CR3d 584.

The courts have denied the insurer the right to intervene because it would interject insurance issues into an action for damages that could prejudice the insured. See Corridan v Rose, supra. Similarly, an insurer that is a prospective subrogee of a party to an action has been denied permission to intervene. See Hausmann v Farmers Ins. Exch. (1963) 213 CA2d 611, 29 CR 75.

§31.18 4. Judgment Creditors

A judgment creditor may intervene under CCP §387(a) in an action by a judgment debtor's insurer against the judgment debtor to rescind an insurance policy or to declare it canceled. Belt Cas. Co. v Furman (1933) 218 C 359, 23 P2d 293; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v Gerlach (1976) 56 CA3d 299, 128 CR 396.

A judgment creditor who has obtained a lien against a judgment debtor may intervene under CCP §708.430 in an action against the debtor. See §31.11 on judgment creditors' liens and intervention.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.19 5. Owners of Property Levied on

Specific statutes enable persons claiming ownership of personal property levied on, attached, or subjected to claim and delivery proceedings to assert claims to the property. See discussion in §31.12. In addition, such persons may intervene under CCP §387. Berghauser v Golden State Orchards (1929) 208 C 550, 282 P 950; Hi-Valley Dev. Corp. v Walters (1963) 223 CA2d 778, 784, 36 CR 140. Similarly, an attaching creditor may intervene to litigate priority of attachment in an action in which the property has been attached by another creditor. Kimball v Richardson-Kimball Co. (1896) 111 C 386, 43 P 1111.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.20 6. Limited Partners

A limited partner may intervene in an action against the partnership if the general partner fails to provide a defense or permits entry of a default. See Linder v Vogue Invs., Inc. (1966) 239 CA2d 338, 48 CR 633, in which the court analogized to Eggers v National Radio Co. (1929) 208 C 308, 281 P 58 (see §31.31), and other cases in which shareholders were allowed to intervene in actions against corporations, and noted that the limited partner had withdrawn its contribution to the limited partnership and might have been subject to individual liability to the plaintiff.

§31.21 7. Husband or Wife

A wife or husband, like any other person, may intervene in a lawsuit to protect his or her interest in property that is the subject matter of the action or that has been attached. See Bonfiglio v Bonfiglio (1928) 203 C 409, 264 P 747; Carter v Garetson (1922) 56 CA 238, 204 P 1090. See, however, Bechtel v Axelrod (1942) 20 C2d 390, 125 P2d 836, in which defendant's wife sought to intervene on the theory that the plaintiff might attempt to subject community property to payment of the husband's obligation; the wife's interest in the action was termed "remote and contingent," and she was denied leave to intervene because plaintiff had not as yet threatened to seize the community property.

§31.22 8. Claimant to Property in Marital Dissolution

A person claiming an interest in specific property may intervene in marriage dissolution proceedings. Elms v Elms (1935) 4 C2d 681, 52 P2d 223. However, the person will not be heard with respect to the dissolution itself or any matter other than the claimed interest in the specific property. Bernheimer v Bernheimer (1948) 87 CA2d 242, 196 P2d 813.

Intervention in marital dissolution proceedings is governed by Fam C §§2021, 2060-2074 and Cal Rules of Ct 5.150-5.160.

9. Person Claiming Interest in Real Property

§31.23 a. Foreclosure

One claiming an interest in property subject to foreclosure proceedings may intervene. Mabury v Ruiz (1881) 58 C 11 (wife claiming homestead right); Stich v Dickinson (1869) 38 C 608 (claimant to note and mortgage).

§31.24 b. Quiet Title

Claimants to property that is the subject of a quiet title action may intervene. Townsend v Driver (1907) 5 CA 581, 90 P 1071 (claimants to ownership of portions of property). However, in Stockwell v McAlvay (1929) 97 CA 609, 275 P 960, a former owner of property sought to intervene, claiming she was defrauded when she conveyed the property to a third party who, she alleged, was the undisclosed agent of plaintiff's husband. In denying intervention, the court emphasized that the would-be intervenor was not in a position to return the consideration she received in the transaction of which she complained. See also Muller v Robinson (1959) 174 CA2d 511, 345 P2d 25 (intervention denied when title as between intervenor and plaintiff had been previously litigated to conclusion).

§31.25 c. Action for Possession

In actions to recover possession of property, claimants to interests in the property may intervene. Goes v Perry (1941) 18 C2d 373, 115 P2d 441 (person seeking to impose trust on property based on claim that funds with which property was purchased belonged to her); Bogue v Roeth (1929) 98 CA 257, 276 P 1071 (holder of contract to purchase property).

§31.26 d. Condemnation

Persons not named in the complaint may intervene to assert their interests in property that is the subject of condemnation proceedings. CCP §1250.230; San Bernardino Valley Mun. Water Dist. v Gage Canal Co. (1964) 226 CA2d 206, 209, 37 CR 856. See Stratford Irrig. Dist. v Empire Water Co. (1941) 44 CA2d 61, 70, 111 P2d 957.

§31.27 e. Action to Impress a Trust

Claimants to interests in property subject to an action for the impression of a trust may intervene. Dabney v Philleo (1951) 38 C2d 60, 237 P2d 648 (assignees of interests in property); Coffey v Greenfield (1880) 55 C 382 (purchaser at foreclosure sale).

§31.28 10. Will Contests and Heirship Proceedings

Any interested person may intervene in a will contest initiated by another interested person and may do so at any time before trial, so long as the original contest was timely commenced. Estate of Harootenian (1951) 38 C2d 242, 245, 238 P2d 992; Voyce v Superior Court (1942) 20 C2d 479, 485, 127 P2d 536. See Estate of Collins (1968) 268 CA2d 86, 90, 73 CR 599. Similarly, interested persons may intervene in heirship proceedings initiated by an appropriate person. Estate of Quinn (1955) 43 C2d 785, 278 P2d 692.

§31.29 11. Adjoining Property Owners: Zoning and Trespass Actions

Neighboring property owners may intervene in actions involving the enforcement of zoning laws. Weiner v City of Los Angeles (1968) 68 C2d 697, 706, 68 CR 733. See Alphonzo E. Bell Corp. v Bell View Oil Syndicate (1938) 24 CA2d 587, 76 P2d 167, in which adjoining landowners, who claimed that their property also had been trespassed on by the slant-drilling of oil wells, were permitted to intervene in an action for subsurface trespass.

§31.30 12. Voters

The court in Baroldi v Denni (1961) 197 CA2d 472, 17 CR 647, saw a need to resolve election questions promptly and permitted a voter who had signed a petition to recall certain members of a city council to intervene in their action to restrain the council from conducting a recall election, the council having adopted a position of neutrality.

F. Examples of Persons Denied Permission to Intervene

§31.31 1. Shareholders

Shareholders have been denied permission to intervene in actions by or against the corporation on the ground that their interest in the corporation's success was consequential and indirect. See, e.g., Continental Vinyl Prods. Corp. v Mead Corp. (1972) 27 CA3d 543, 103 CR 806. However, a shareholder may intervene if the corporation is not defending or prosecuting in good faith. See Eggers v National Radio Co. (1929) 208 C 308, 281 P 58; Thorman v Dome Producing & Developing Co. (1942) 50 CA2d 201, 122 P2d 927.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.32 2. Attorneys

Attorneys have been denied permission to intervene in order to collect fees or protect fee arrangements. See Meadow v Superior Court (1963) 59 C2d 610, 30 CR 824. See also Fields v Potts (1956) 140 CA2d 697, 295 P2d 965 (attorney with contingent fee arrangement with respect to "amount collected" denied leave to intervene); Kelly v Smith (1928) 204 C 496, 268 P 1057 (attorney who was to receive interest in land that was subject of quiet title action not permitted to intervene because he had no "present" interest).

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.33 3. Taxpayers; Persons Interested in Legal Precedent

Taxpayers, property owners, and other persons interested in the potential precedential effect of a judgment have been denied leave to intervene in actions involving the validity or interpretation of legislation or the validity of bond issues because their only interest is in the precedential value. See Jersey Maid Milk Prods. Co. v Brock (1939) 13 C2d 661, 91 P2d 599; La Mesa Lemon Grove & Spring Valley Irrig. Dist. v Halley (1925) 195 C 739, 235 P 999; Squire v City & County of San Francisco (1970) 12 CA3d 974, 91 CR 347; Kenney v Wolff (1948) 88 CA2d 163, 198 P2d 582.

On the other hand, an environmental organization was allowed to intervene in a lawsuit concerning a county ordinance on the use of herbicides when it demonstrated a specific interest directly affected in a substantial way by the outcome of the litigation. People ex rel Rominger v County of Trinity (1983) 147 CA3d 655, 195 CR 186. What distinguished the intervenors from those who were merely interested in establishing legal precedent was that the intervenors themselves were among those whom the controlling statute was designed to protect and were threatened by a potential harm.

§31.34 4. Adjoining Property Owners: Actions Other Than Zoning

The California courts have refused to permit the owners of adjoining or neighboring property to intervene in:

- Construction defect actions (Siena Court Homeowners Ass'n v Green Valley Corp. (2008) 164 CA4th 1416, 1429, 79 CR3d 915);
- Actions to quiet title (People ex rel State Lands Comm'n v City of Long Beach (1960) 183 CA2d 271, 6 CR 658);
- Proceedings for incorporation of cities (City of Burlingame v County of San Mateo (1951) 103 CA2d 885, 230 P2d 375); and
- Condemnation proceedings (City of Alhambra v Jacob Bean Realty Co. (1934) 138 CA 251, 31 P2d 1052).

Additionally, owners of and claimants to riparian rights other than those in suit have been denied permission to intervene. See San Joaquin & Kings River Canal & Irrig. Co. v Stevinson (1912) 164 C 221, 128 P 924; Lindsay-Strathmore Irrig. Dist. v Wutchumna Water Co. (1931) 111 CA 707, 296 P 942. But see Alphonzo E. Bell Corp. v Bell View Oil Syndicate (1938) 24 CA2d 587, 76 P2d 167 (subsurface trespass; see §31.29).

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.35 5. General Creditors

General creditors of a plaintiff or a defendant have been denied leave to intervene even though the outcome of the action might cause the debtor to become insolvent. See Continental Vinyl Prods. Corp. v Mead Corp. (1972) 27 CA3d 543, 103 CR 806; Olson v Hopkins (1969) 269 CA2d 638, 75 CR 33.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.36 6. Owners of Property Used as Evidence

In Mylan Labs., Inc. v Soon-Shiong (1999) 76 CA4th 71, 79, 90 CR2d 111, the court of appeal ruled that property that constitutes evidence in a civil matter is not "property … which is the subject of the action" within the meaning of CCP §387(b). Thus, an individual claiming ownership of an allegedly privileged document did not have a right to intervene for the purpose of obtaining an order precluding its evidentiary use at trial. 76 CA4th at 79. Note, however, that the court also ruled that the holder of a privilege has standing to assert the privilege in the action without intervening in the litigation. 76 CA4th at 80.

III. APPLYING FOR AND OPPOSING INTERVENTION

A. Applying for Leave to Intervene

§31.37 1. Timing

An application to intervene must be "timely." CCP §387(a)-(b). Thus it appears that some applications may be denied as untimely even though made before trial commences (see §§31.41-31.42), while some applications made after commencement of trial will be granted. See generally cases decided under Fed R Civ P 24, which also calls for timely application, and similar state statutes. Even under the pre-1978 law (which required the application to be made "before trial"), it was argued that intervention might be permitted while a trial was in progress if the resultant delay and inconvenience to the original parties could be kept to a minimum. See 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §223 (5th ed 2008). It is unwise, however, to wait until trial to seek leave to intervene; courts are much less likely to find the application "timely" at that late date. See also §31.42 on unreasonable delay.

NOTE: A person who qualifies as "indispensable" under CCP §389 may apply to be made a party under that statute, which contains no time limitation (see §31.7).

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.38 a. Motions to Set Aside Default and to Set Aside Judgment Under CCP §473

Motions to set aside default. Under CCP §473(b), a party may move to set aside a default within 6 months after its entry, and an appropriate nonparty may intervene to do so. Linder v Vogue Invs., Inc. (1966) 239 CA2d 338, 48 CR 633. See Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v Gerlach (1976) 56 CA3d 299, 128 CR 396. Several cases suggest that one who is merely the successor in interest of a party who defaulted should not be permitted to intervene under such circumstances. See Stern & Goodman Inv. Co. v Danziger (1929) 206 C 456, 274 P 748; Martin v Lawrence (1909) 156 C 191, 103 P 913. But see Linder v Vogue Invs., Inc., supra. Even after the expiration of 6 months, a nonparty may intervene to set aside a default judgment if the judgment is void on its face. Johnson v Hayes Cal. Builders, Inc. (1963) 60 C2d 572, 35 CR 618.

Motions to set aside judgment. Under pre-1978 law, intervention was not generally available under CCP §387 after entry of judgment. See, e.g., Allen v California Water & Tel. Co. (1947) 31 C2d 104, 187 P2d 393; Leonard Corp. v City of San Diego (1962) 210 CA2d 547, 26 CR 730. However, in Gardner v Trevaskis (1958) 158 CA2d 410, 322 P2d 545, nonparties who claimed interests in the fund that was the subject of the action were permitted to move to set aside a judgment decreeing that the fund belonged to plaintiff. The motions were made under CCP §473 within 6 months after entry of judgment, apparently on the theory that, although defendant did not default, he made no effort to defend. In affirming, the court stated that a "motion to set aside the judgment is the recognized method for one not a party to the action to become such in order to assert his rights." 158 CA2d at 413. The opinion also relied on a court's inherent power to vacate a judgment obtained through extrinsic fraud.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.39 b. No Intervention After Action Dismissed

Intervention cannot take place after an action has been dismissed. Pendency of an application for leave to intervene cannot defeat the original parties' rights to dismiss. City of Burlingame v County of San Mateo (1951) 103 CA2d 885, 230 P2d 375. Even after leave to intervene has been granted, the original parties are free to dismiss the action at any time before filing of the complaint in intervention. Klinghoffer v Barasch (1970) 4 CA3d 258, 84 CR 350.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.40 c. Intervention Before New Trial or Retrial

When intervention was permitted at any time "before trial" (i.e., before 1978), if a motion for a new trial had been granted, application by a nonparty to intervene before the commencement of the new trial was considered timely. Eggers v National Radio Co. (1929) 208 C 308, 281 P 58. This appears to still be the case. Similarly, it appears that after a general reversal on appeal and before commencement of the retrial, intervention could properly have been sought under the former statute. Although this was not the case if the appellate court had merely modified the judgment, permitting a further hearing in the trial court limited to specific issues. Allen v California Water & Tel. Co. (1947) 31 C2d 104, 187 P2d 393. Intervention appears to be available before retrial under the present statute as well.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.41 d. Effect of Intervenor's Delay After Learning of Action

Even before CCP §387 was amended in 1978, an application to intervene was denied if the would-be intervenor delayed unreasonably in applying for leave to intervene after learning of the pendency of the action. Allen v California Water & Tel. Co. (1947) 31 C2d 104, 187 P2d 393; In re Yokohama Specie Bank (1948) 86 CA2d 545, 195 P2d 555. Witkin suggests, however, that mere delay or lack of diligence in the absence of some form of prejudice to the original parties should not prevent an otherwise proper intervention. 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §225 (5th ed 2008). If prejudice must be shown, as a practical matter, it is difficult to imagine a situation in which the original parties could not demonstrate that an unreasonably delayed intervention was prejudicial if any new issues were presented.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.42 e. Statute of Limitations

A complaint in intervention, like any other complaint, is subject to an affirmative defense based on an applicable statute of limitations and, if it asserts a new cause of action, the application for leave to intervene must be filed within the pertinent limitations period. Alphonzo E. Bell Corp. v Bell View Oil Syndicate (1938) 24 CA2d 587, 76 P2d 167.

If the complaint in intervention raises no new issues, it is timely whenever filed if the original action was commenced in a timely manner. State Compensation Ins. Fund v Matulich (1942) 55 CA2d 528, 131 P2d 21; State Compensation Ins. Fund v Allen (1930) 104 CA 400, 285 P 1053. Similarly, an "interested" person (see §31.4) may intervene in a will contest if the contest was originally commenced within the statutory period. Voyce v Superior Court (1942) 20 C2d 479, 127 P2d 536; Estate of Harootenian (1951) 38 C2d 242, 238 P2d 992.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Application: Ex Parte or Noticed Motion

§31.43 a. Ex Parte Application

A nonparty may proceed ex parte to obtain the court's permission to intervene. See Allen v California Water & Tel. Co. (1947) 31 C2d 104, 187 P2d 393; Marc Bellaire, Inc. v Fleischman (1960) 185 CA2d 591, 8 CR 650. To do so, the better practice is to submit a written application for leave to intervene, setting forth the facts showing the applicant's interest in a properly verified proposed complaint in intervention or in an affidavit or declaration made under penalty of perjury.

If the intervenor is concerned that the existing parties might dismiss the action during the pendency of a noticed motion for leave to intervene, an ex parte application is clearly preferable. Specific facts supporting that concern should be set forth in an affidavit, declaration, or verified pleading. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1200-3.1207. If the court is in doubt whether to grant an ex parte application to intervene and believes that a fuller exposition of the issues would be helpful, it can order a hearing. See In re Yokohama Specie Bank (1948) 86 CA2d 545, 195 P2d 555. If such a hearing is ordered, the intervenor should ask the court to stay all proceedings in the action, including any attempts to dismiss, pending the hearing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.44 b. Noticed Motion

If the intervenor is not concerned that the action may be dismissed by the original parties before a noticed motion may be heard, he or she may give each of the existing parties written notice of a motion for leave to intervene. See Muller v Robinson (1959) 174 CA2d 511, 345 P2d 25. On noticed motion procedures generally, see chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.45 3. Meeting Intervenor's Burden of Proof

The intervenor has the burden of demonstrating that he or she satisfies the requirements of either CCP §387(a) or §387(b) and that leave to intervene should be granted. If an insufficient showing is made, the court may deny the application to intervene even in the absence of objections by existing parties. Fields v Potts (1956) 140 CA2d 697, 295 P2d 965. Thus, to obtain leave to intervene under the discretionary provisions of CCP §387(a), the intervenor's papers should set forth the intervenor's:

- Interest in the matter in litigation;
- Interest in the success of either of the parties; or
- Interest against both parties.

Further, the intervenor must take a position with respect to the pleadings as contemplated by the statute, i.e., must state explicitly that he or she joins plaintiff in claiming what is sought by the complaint, unites with defendant in resisting plaintiff's claims, or demands something adverse to both plaintiff and defendant. On the showing required under CCP §387(b), see §31.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Opposing Leave to Intervene

§31.46 1. Procedure for Presenting Opposition

If the intervenor has used a noticed motion for leave to intervene or an ex parte motion, any party to the action may submit an affidavit or declaration and a memorandum in opposition to the proposed intervention.

If the intervenor has obtained leave to intervene by an ex parte application (see §31.43), the existing parties' first opportunity to object to the intervention will occur after the filing and service of the complaint in intervention. At that time, any party may:

- Move to strike the complaint in intervention on the ground that intervention is improper under the circumstances (Jersey Maid Milk Prods. Co. v Brock (1939) 13 C2d 661, 91 P2d 599);
- Demur to the complaint in intervention on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a ground for intervention (see People v Brophy (1942) 49 CA2d 15, 34, 120 P2d 946);
- Move to strike and demur; or
- Otherwise plead to the complaint in intervention in the same manner as to an original complaint (CCP §387(a)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.47 2. Grounds for Opposition

The most common ground for objection to an application for intervention made under CCP §387(a) is that the intervenor lacks the requisite interest in the action, i.e., that the intervenor's interest is "remote" or "consequential." See §31.4. A party may submit an affidavit or declaration to show that the inconvenience or prejudice to the existing parties, or either of them, that would result if intervention were permitted far outweighs the intervenor's interest in the action.

An existing party may also argue that the application to intervene was untimely, and show, e.g., that the intervenor delayed unreasonably in seeking intervention after learning of the existence of the action, thereby prejudicing the objecting party. See §§31.37, 31.41.

The words of CCP §387(b) suggest several grounds for opposing an application made under subdivision (b).

EXAMPLE: An opposing party could argue or show that (1) the applicant's claimed interest does not in fact relate to the property or transaction that is the subject of the action; (2) the applicant has adequate means other than intervention to protect his or her claimed interest; (3) the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties; or (4) the application was not timely made (see §31.37). See generally §31.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.48 3. Waiver of Objections

A party who fails to object to the intervention at the first opportunity (using one of the appropriate methods discussed in §31.46) has effectively waived any objections he or she might have had and may not raise such objections on appeal. Watson v Collins (1962) 204 CA2d 27, 21 CR 832; Bloom v Waxman (1941) 48 CA2d 646, 120 P2d 509. Thus, if a party answers the complaint in intervention, or demurs to it on the ground that it fails to state a cause of action (as distinguished from a failure to state grounds for intervention; see §31.46), all objections to the intervention are waived. Traweek v Draper (1956) 143 CA2d 119, 299 P2d 391.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Appellate Review

§31.49 1. When Leave to Intervene Denied

An unsuccessful intervenor may immediately appeal denial of the application for leave to intervene because denial operates as a final determination of the action with respect to that person. County of Alameda v Carleson (1971) 5 C3d 730, 736, 97 CR 385; Jun v Myers (2001) 88 CA4th 117, 122, 105 CR2d 537. Similarly, if the intervenor obtains leave ex parte to file a complaint in intervention, and the complaint in intervention is later stricken, the intervenor may appeal immediately. Jersey Maid Milk Prods. Co. v Brock (1939) 13 C2d 661, 91 P2d 599. Appeal at this time is the only relief available to the unsuccessful intervenor, who has no right to appeal from the judgment ultimately rendered in the action in which he or she sought to intervene. Braun v Brown (1939) 13 C2d 130, 87 P2d 1009. If intervention is erroneously denied on the ground that the intervenor has no interest in the subject matter of the action, the intervenor must appeal from this determination, or a subsequent independent action based on the same theory will be barred by the doctrine of res judicata. Berman v Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. (1974) 40 CA3d 908, 115 CR 566.

The pendency of an appeal from the denial of leave to intervene has no effect on the progress of the action, which may continue to trial and judgment. Olson v Hopkins (1969) 269 CA2d 638, 75 CR 33; Lindsay-Strathmore Irrig. Dist. v Superior Court (1932) 121 CA 606, 9 P2d 579.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.50 2. When Leave to Intervene Granted

An order permitting intervention is not itself appealable. Taylor v Western States Land & Mortgage Co. (1944) 63 CA2d 401, 147 P2d 36. After intervention, any party, including the intervenor, may appeal after judgment from any order, including the order permitting intervention, that aggrieves such party. Corridan v Rose (1955) 137 CA2d 524, 290 P2d 939.

IV. PROCEDURES ONCE INTERVENTION GRANTED

A. Complaint in Intervention

§31.51 1. Requirements

A complaint in intervention is filed whether the intervenor supports the plaintiff's position or the defendant's position or opposes both. See Timberidge Enters., Inc. v City of Santa Rosa (1978) 86 CA3d 873, 880, 150 CR 606. See also Sutter Health Uninsured Pricing Cases (2009) 171 CA4th 495, 513, 89 CR3d 615 (party seeking intervention must file a complaint in intervention; motion to intervene denied).

A complaint in intervention must set forth facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or, if the intervenor resists plaintiff's claims, facts sufficient to constitute a defense. People v Brophy (1942) 49 CA2d 15, 34, 120 P2d 946. In addition, however, the complaint in intervention must set forth the intervenor's interest in the matter in litigation or relating to the property or transaction that is the subject of the action, his or her interest in the success of either of the parties, or his or her interest against both parties. At least in an intervention sought under CCP §387(a), the complaint must expressly state that the intervenor joins plaintiff in claiming what is sought by the complaint, that the intervenor unites with defendant in resisting plaintiff's claims, or that the intervenor demands something adverse to both plaintiff and defendant. Bowles v Superior Court (1955) 44 C2d 574, 589, 283 P2d 704.

NOTE: While the nature of the action and the circumstances of the intervention should be alleged, the complaint in intervention should be a fully independent pleading and should not incorporate any other pleadings by reference.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.52 2. Service; Payment of Fees

After leave to intervene is granted by the court, whether ex parte or after a noticed motion, the complaint in intervention may be filed on payment of the required appearance fee.

A copy of the complaint in intervention must be served on each party (or on the attorney of a represented party who has already appeared in the action). CCP §387(a). Copies of the court's order permitting intervention and all papers supporting the application to intervene are also served, and the complaint copy is stamped to show the filing date. A summons—issued when the complaint in intervention was filed—should be served with the complaint on each party who has not yet appeared, as if the intervenor were commencing an original action. CCP §387(a). See chaps 17-18 on service.

PRACTICE TIP: Some intervenors' attorneys routinely serve summonses on all parties, even those who have already appeared in the action, although CCP §387(a) does not expressly require it. These attorneys argue that serving summons may be a prerequisite to later obtaining entry of default (see chap 38).

§31.53 3. Intervenor's Rights and Remedies

Generally, an intervenor has all the rights and remedies afforded an original party to an action. People ex rel Fogg v Perris Irrig. Dist. (1901) 132 C 289, 64 P 399. An intervenor may seek any form of affirmative relief, legal or equitable (Belt Cas. Co. v Furman (1933) 218 C 359, 23 P2d 293; Marc Bellaire, Inc. v Fleischman (1960) 185 CA2d 591, 8 CR 650); object to the court's jurisdiction (Maguire v Cunningham (1923) 64 CA 536, 541, 222 P 838); move for a change of venue (see City of San Diego v Andrews (1924) 195 C 111, 231 P 726); and assert that the original complaint fails to state a cause of action (Maguire v Cunningham, supra) or, presumably, assert that the original answer fails to state a defense. It has been suggested that an intervenor may demand a jury trial in an appropriate action even if the original parties have waived a jury trial. See McNeil v Morgan (1910) 157 C 373, 377, 108 P 69. An intervenor may move to disqualify a judge. City of San Diego v Andrews, supra.

It is frequently stated that an intervenor takes the action as he or she finds it and is bound by the record at the time intervention is sought. Allen v California Water & Tel. Co. (1947) 31 C2d 104, 187 P2d 393. This statement generally is not entirely accurate; it has many exceptions (see Hausmann v Farmers Ins. Exch. (1963) 213 CA2d 611, 617, 29 CR 75; 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §227 (5th ed 2008)) and means merely that an intervenor cannot rely on irregularities that were waived by the original parties. See Maguire v Cunningham, supra. It has been suggested that an intervenor may be "bound by" depositions taken before intervention. See McNeil v Morgan, supra.

An intervening plaintiff's position is subordinate to that of the original plaintiff (and the latter's attorney), who has an absolute right to control the action, unless the original plaintiff consents or the court orders otherwise. In Mann v Superior Court (1942) 53 CA2d 272, 280, 127 P2d 970, a shareholder's derivative suit, the court pointed out that the general rule that the original plaintiff has the absolute right to control the action does not apply when it is shown that the action is not being prosecuted in the best interests of the shareholders on whose behalf it was instituted.

An intervenor may not bring a new party into the action in a complaint in intervention. CCP §387. See Cobe v Crane (1916) 173 C 116, 155 P 645. However, the compulsory joinder provisions of CCP §389 may be applicable to a complaint in intervention, in which case the court would have to order that a nonparty be made a party when the statutory requirements are met. Anticipating the possibility of having yet another nonparty to add to a lawsuit, however, might convince the court not to permit intervention in the first place.

§31.54 B. Responses to Complaint in Intervention; Timing

The original parties may respond within 30 days of service of the complaint in intervention by answer, demurrer, or motion just as a party may respond to an original complaint. CCP §387. If the intervenor has intervened solely as a defendant, joining the original defendant in resisting plaintiff's claims, the complaint in intervention is, in effect, considered an answer, and its allegations are considered controverted; the original parties need not file any pleading in response. Drinkhouse v Van Ness (1927) 202 C 359, 371, 260 P 869; People ex rel Fogg v Perris Irrig. Dist. (1901) 132 C 289, 64 P 399. If a responsive pleading is required, it must be filed and served within 30 days after service of the complaint in intervention. CCP §387.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.55 C. Cross-Complaint Against Intervenor

If the intervenor asserts any claim adverse to an existing party, that party may file a cross-complaint against the intervenor. See CCP §§428.10-428.80. See Wall v Mines (1900) 130 C 27, 44, 62 P 386. (Accordingly, it appears that any cross-complaint against the intervenor that is "compulsory" under CCP §§426.10-426.70 must be asserted or it will be deemed waived.)

No cross-claim may be asserted against an intervenor who has intervened solely as a defendant, joining the original defendant in resisting the plaintiff's claims. Drinkhouse v Van Ness (1927) 202 C 359, 372, 260 P 869.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Dismissal of Action After Intervention

§31.56 1. By Original Plaintiff

If neither the defendant nor the intervenor seeks any form of affirmative relief, the original plaintiff is free to dismiss the action at any time. Henry v Vineland Irrig. Dist. (1903) 140 C 376, 73 P 1061. However, plaintiff may not dismiss solely as to the intervenor and purport to proceed against the other parties. Townsend v Driver (1907) 5 CA 581, 90 P 1071. An intervenor who asserts a claim for relief is entitled to proceed on it regardless of the dismissal of any other claims in the action. Voyce v Superior Court (1942) 20 C2d 479, 127 P2d 536; Poehlmann v Kennedy (1874) 48 C 201.

© The Regents of the University of California

§31.57 2. By Intervenor

If no relief is sought against the intervenor, he or she may dismiss his or her intervention at any time. Sheldon v Gunn (1880) 56 C 582. However, if the intervenor has intervened as a defendant, joining the original defendant in resisting plaintiff's claims, the intervenor has presumably brought about a situation in which adverse claims have been asserted against him or her and he or she may not withdraw.

§31.58 V. DIAGNOSTIC QUESTIONS

Answers to the following questions may assist counsel in evaluating whether to intervene in a particular case:

1. Is intervention required to protect an interest?
2. Are the prospective intervenor's interests adequately protected by one of the existing parties?
3. Are there ways of taking part in the lawsuit or of obtaining relief other than intervention?
4. Is joinder preferable under CCP §389 (joinder of indispensable party)?
5. Is joinder preferable under CCP §389.5 (joinder by person claiming interest in real or personal property)?
6. If the prospective intervenor is a judgment creditor, is a lien on the cause of action and judgment preferable under CCP §708.440?
7. If the prospective intervenor has an interest in property levied on under a writ of attachment, execution, possession, or sale, is it preferable to file a claim with the levying officer under CCP §§488.110, 720.010-720.800?
8. Is a petition for coordination of actions preferable under CCP §§403-404.9?
9. Is it preferable to appear as amicus curiae?
10. If intervention is desired, is an ex parte motion preferable?
11. Is it possible that one of the parties will dismiss the action once notified of the request for intervention?
12. Can intervention be brought under the mandatory CCP §387(b) rather than under the discretionary CCP §387(a)?
13. Will the request be made in a timely fashion?
14. Is there no existing party to the pending case who can adequately represent the prospective intervenor's interests?
15. Is there a provision of law that confers an unconditional right to intervene on the prospective intervenor in this situation, or will the disposition of the pending lawsuit impair or impede the prospective intervenor's ability to protect his or her interest?

Intervenors

Decide whether:

- Intervention would be useful
- Alternative to intervention would be preferable
- "Mandatory" provision applies (see §§31.5-31.6)
- Request should be ex parte or on noticed motion

If proceeding by ex parte motion (see §31.43):

- Submit written application (with an affidavit, a declaration made under penalty of perjury, or a properly verified proposed complaint in intervention)
- State in the application why ex parte motion is required
- Comply with Cal Rules of Ct 3.1200-3.1207 notice requirements

If proceeding by noticed motion (see §31.44):

- Follow the standard rules for noticed motions
- If leave to intervene is denied, decide whether to appeal (see §31.49)

If leave to intervene is granted:

- File a complaint in intervention (see §§31.51-31.53)
- Serve the attorneys of record for existing parties with copies of the summons, complaint in intervention, court's order permitting intervention, and all papers filed by the intervenor in application for leave to intervene (this must be done in the same manner as a summons or responsive pleading)
- If desired, intervenor can dismiss his or her own intervention at any time

Existing Parties

- Decide whether to oppose leave to intervene (see §§31.46-31.48)
- If leave to intervene was sought through noticed motion, file an affidavit or declaration and memorandum in opposition

If leave to intervene was granted through an ex parte application or after complaint in intervention was filed following ruling on noticed motion:

- Move to strike the complaint
- Demur to the complaint on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a ground for intervention
- Move to strike and demur
- File cross-complaint against intervenor
- Answer
- Response must be made within 30 days of service of the complaint in intervention (CCP §387)
- If intervenor intervenes solely as a defendant, complaint in intervention is considered an answer and the original parties are not required to file any pleading in response

- Original plaintiff can dismiss action if neither defendant nor intervenor seeks any form of affirmative relief.

Comment: See §31.43 (application for leave to intervene). Such a declaration may not be necessary; a properly verified complaint in intervention, setting forth the requisite facts, may be sufficient. Use of a declaration, however, enables the intervenor to make a more detailed and therefore more persuasive evidentiary showing.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On when preprinted Judicial Council forms must or may be filed with the court, see Cal Rules of Ct 1.30-1.44, 2.131-2.134 and the discussion in §11.27.

Comment: See Comment to form in §31.60. The intervenor may appear ex parte and seek an order directed to the existing parties, requiring them to show cause why the intervenor should not be granted leave to file the complaint in intervention. On order to show cause procedure generally, see chap 13; Thorman v Dome Producing & Developing Co. (1942) 50 CA2d 201, 122 P2d 927. If the order to show cause provides that all proceedings in the action are stayed and that the action may not be dismissed until determination of the application for leave to intervene, the intervenor will be protected and the court will have the benefit of a thorough briefing of all questions.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. I. INTRODUCTION

§32.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses injunctions and provisional remedies. It discusses the nature of individual remedies (see §§32.3-32.10), injunctions generally (see §§32.11-32.35), application for order to show cause and temporary restraining order (see §§32.36-32.59), motion for preliminary injunction (see §§32.60-32.91), undertakings (see §§32.92-32.108).

It also discusses permanent injunction after trial on the merits (see §32.109), defenses to injunctive relief (see §§32.110-32.117), enforcement by contempt (see §§32.118-32.122), review of orders (see §§32.123-32.130), and injunctions against harassment under CCP §527.6 (see §§32.131-32.150).

It also contains forms for moving for and responding to a request for injunctive relief (see §§32.152-32.159), and forms for moving for and responding to an injunction against harassment under CCP §527.6 (see §§32.160-32.168).

§32.2 B. Governing Law

Code of Civil Procedure §§481.010-574 provide for five provisional remedies:

- Attachment (CCP §§481.010-493.060; see §32.5);
- Claim and delivery (CCP §§511.010-516.050; see §32.6);
- Injunction (CCP §§525-534; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150-3.1152; see §32.4);

NOTE: Although CC §3421 declares that provisional injunctions are regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure, they are also regulated by the Civil Code. See, e.g., Lincoln v Superior Court (1942) 51 CA2d 61, 124 P2d 179 (CC §3423, governing proceedings that may not be enjoined, applies to both provisional and permanent injunctions).

- Injunctions against civil harassment (CCP §527.6);
- Appointment of a receiver (CCP §§564-570; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1175-3.1184; see §32.7); and
- Deposit in court (CCP §§572-574; see §32.8).

The Judicial Council has adopted Cal Rules of Ct 3.20, 2.100(a) preempting local rule-making authority in several areas, including provisional remedies, "unless otherwise permitted or required" by statute or the California Rules of Court. Cal Rules of Ct 3.20(a). Nevertheless, local rules may continue to govern provisional remedies, and although they are preempted, it is recommended that they be followed. See §11.2.

II. NATURE OF INDIVIDUAL REMEDIES

§32.3 A. Characteristics of Provisional Remedies

Provisional remedies are procedures a plaintiff can use to protect and preserve money, property, or the status quo until the court can determine parties' rights. They are used to prevent another party or person from dissipating assets or doing something that would diminish the value of a judgment ultimately obtained by the party using the remedy. See, e.g., White v Davis (2003) 30 C4th 528, 554, 133 CR2d 648 (preliminary injunction).

These remedies are "provisional" in the sense that they are temporary and have effect only until the parties' rights in connection with the subject of the lawsuit are established. Provisional remedies can be obtained only in connection with an existing or newly instituted civil action; they are not themselves civil actions or special proceedings. See White v Davis, supra.

NOTE: Some injunctions and similar court orders are not necessarily provisional and not necessarily ancillary to the main proceeding. See CC §§3420-3421 (distinguishing between final injunctions and provisional injunctions). For discussion of final (permanent) injunctions, see §32.109. For statutes authorizing petitions for independent injunctive relief in specific situations, see §32.28.

Provisional remedies are usually obtained by presenting a declaration under penalty of perjury to a judge who issues the writ or order that restrains the defendant. See, e.g., CCP §527(a). See also §§32.40-32.44. The party seeking the remedy must often furnish a bond or undertaking to secure the defendant against harm caused by the provisional remedy should it be determined that the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief sought in the lawsuit. See, e.g., Allen v Pitchess (1973) 36 CA3d 321, 329, 111 CR 658; §§32.92-32.108.

For further discussion of general characteristics of provisional remedies, see 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies (5th ed 2008).

§32.4 B. Injunction

The procedures for obtaining a provisional injunction, set forth in CCP §§525-534, are used to require a defendant or other person to take, or to refrain from taking, a specified action when necessary to protect a legal right being pursued by the plaintiff. See CCP §526. The basic provisional injunctions are temporary restraining orders and preliminary injunctions. See CCP §527(a)-(b). The party seeking this kind of provisional injunctive relief must show that the relief sought in the lawsuit depends, in whole or in part, on restraining the commission or continuance of an act that would cause waste or irreparable injury. See CCP §526(a)(3). Temporary restraining orders and injunctions against harassment are also governed by CCP §527.6.

Procedures and forms for obtaining injunctions are discussed in §§32.36-32.59 (application for order to show cause and temporary restraining order), §§32.60-32.91 (preliminary injunction), and §§32.152-32.159 (forms).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.5 C. Attachment

§32.5 C. Attachment

The attachment procedure, provided in CCP §§481.010-493.060, may be used by anyone to whom money is owed (the creditor) to secure collectibility of the creditor's expected judgment against the debtor. See CCP §483.010.

Basically, when filing a complaint against the debtor, the creditor also files an application for a writ of attachment with supporting declarations, showing the location of attachable assets, the plaintiff's right to recover on the claim, and the need for the attachment in order to ensure collectibility. See CCP §484.320. The court issues the writ, which requires the sheriff to levy on specified property. See CCP §488.020.

Procedures and forms for attachment are discussed in detail in Debt Collection Practice in California §§6.1-6.110 (2d ed Cal CEB 1999).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.6 D. Claim and Delivery

The claim and delivery procedure, provided in CCP §§511.010-516.050, may be used by a person who claims an immediate right to possession of specific personal property. Basically, when filing a complaint against the person in possession, the person seeking possession also files an application for a writ of possession, with supporting declarations, showing the person's right to possession and that the possessor has wrongfully detained it. See CCP §511.010. The writ requires the sheriff to seize the property and deliver it to the creditor or, if the property is perishable or depreciating, to sell it and deposit the proceeds with the court. See CCP §§512.070, 514.030.

Procedures and forms for writ of possession are discussed in Debt Collection Practice in California §§6.111-6.166 (2d ed Cal CEB 1999).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.7 E. Receivership

The receivership procedure, provided in CCP §§564-570 and Cal Rules of Ct 3.1175-3.1184, is used to obtain court appointment of a person (the receiver) to take charge of and manage the property that is the subject of a lawsuit. The receiver is not a party to the suit and has no personal claim on the property but is appointed for the benefit of all parties who claim an interest in the property. See CCP §568. Procedures and forms for receiverships are discussed in chap 3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.8 F. Deposit in Court

The deposit in court procedure, provided in CCP §§572-574, is used to preserve a fund of money or items of property during litigation when the holder of the fund or item, who has been made a party in the suit, has admitted, in the pleadings or on examination, that he or she is not legally entitled to ultimate ownership. Procedures for deposit in court are discussed in chap 34.

© The Regents of the University of California

G. Related Procedures

§32.9 1. Interpleader

A holder of money or property who asserts no claim to it and against whom multiple claims have been or may be made may use interpleader to avoid further involvement. See CCP §§386-386.6. The interpleading party deposits the asset with the court, leaving the interpleaded parties to assert and prove their claims to it. See CCP §386. Procedures and interpleader are discussed in chap 28.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.10 2. Declaratory Relief

§32.10 2. Declaratory Relief

The filing of a declaratory relief action under CCP §§1060-1062.5 permits a person interested under a written instrument, excluding a will or trust, or under a contract, or a person who wants a declaration of rights or duties with respect to another as well as in other specified situations, to obtain a judgment declaring the respective rights and duties of all parties. See CCP §1060. The judgment operates prospectively to resolve controversies before they lead to the repudiation of obligations, invasions of rights, or commission of wrongs. See CCP §1060. Declaratory relief procedures and forms are discussed in chap 35.

III. INJUNCTIONS GENERALLY

§32.11 A. Purpose of Injunction

An injunction is an equitable remedy that protects a legal right. Meridian Ltd. v City & County of San Francisco (1939) 13 C2d 424, 447, 90 P2d 537; Benasra v Mitchell Silberberg Knupp, LLP (2002) 96 CA4th 96, 110, 116 CR2d 644. It requires the enjoined party to take or refrain from taking some specified action. Comfort v Comfort (1941) 17 C2d 736, 112 P2d 259; People ex rel Renne v Servantes (2001) 86 CA4th 1081, 1083, 103 CR2d 870. An injunction is not a cause of action, but a cause of action must exist on which injunctive relief may be granted. Camp v Board of Supervisors (1981) 123 CA3d 334, 356, 176 CR 620.

Provisional (temporary or preliminary) injunctive relief is available in both equitable actions and legal actions for damages. Permanent (or final) injunctive relief is available only in equitable actions. If a cause of action for damages or other legal relief is joined with an equitable cause of action, the legal action may be tried first with a jury, but the equitable action must be tried by the court. Lenard v Edmonds (1957) 151 CA2d 764, 312 P2d 308. See generally 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§274-418 (5th ed 2008).

§32.12 B. Types of Injunctions

Although CCP §525 defines an injunction as "a writ or order requiring a person to refrain from a particular act," injunctive relief may be mandatory as well as prohibitory. An injunction is prohibitory if it merely has the effect of preserving the subject of litigation in status quo; it is mandatory if it compels a party affirmatively to surrender a position or to perform a substantive act. See Davenport v Blue Cross (1997) 52 CA4th 435, 446, 60 CR2d 641; Johnston v Superior Court (1957) 148 CA2d 966, 307 P2d 946.

This distinction is important because a mandatory injunction is automatically stayed on appeal, while a prohibitory injunction, as a self-executing order, is stayed only by discretionary order of the trial or appellate court. See Reed v Superior Court (2001) 92 CA4th 448, 454 n3, 111 CR2d 842; ALRB v Superior Court (1983) 149 CA3d 709, 196 CR 920. But see ALRB v Tex-Cal Land Mgmt. (1987) 43 C3d 696, 238 CR 780 (mandatory injunction issued under Lab C §1160.8 was not an "action" but a "special proceeding" and thus not stayed by appeal). If the injunction is both mandatory and prohibitory, an appeal will stay operation of the mandatory, but not the prohibitory, features. Kettenhofen v Superior Court (1961) 55 C2d 189, 10 CR 356.

© The Regents of the University of California

1. Mandatory Injunction

§32.13 a. Changes Relative Position of Parties

A "specific" or mandatory injunction compels a party to do "that which ought to be done." CC §3367(2). It changes the relative position of the parties at the time of suit by requiring affirmative action. Kettenhofen v Superior Court (1961) 55 C2d 189, 10 CR 356 (order to remove fence). See Allen v Stowell (1905) 145 C 666, 79 P 371 (order to remove dam); Davenport v Blue Cross (1997) 52 CA4th 435, 446, 60 CR2d 641 (ordering insurer to perform affirmative acts).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.14 b. Rarely Issued

Because mandatory preliminary injunctions require the enjoined party to take affirmative action before trial on the merits, they are rarely granted and are subject to stricter review on appeal. Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n v Furlotti (1999) 70 CA4th 1487, 1493, 83 CR2d 455. California courts have limited their issuance to urgent cases with a clear showing of irreparable injury. See Hagen v Beth (1897) 118 C 330, 50 P 425 (mandatory preliminary injunction denied); Slatkin v White (2002) 102 CA4th 963, 972, 126 CR2d 54. When equity requires it, however, a mandatory preliminary injunction will issue. See Fretz v Burke (1967) 247 CA2d 741, 55 CR 879 (preliminary injunction requiring disbursement of partnership profits merely continued status quo); In re Donovan (1949) 94 CA2d 399, 210 P2d 860 (order to remodel house).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.15 c. Look For Effect, Not Form, of Order

An injunction is classified as either prohibitory or mandatory by its effect—not its form or language. United R.R. v Superior Court (1916) 172 C 80, 155 P 463; Davenport v Blue Cross (1997) 52 CA4th 435, 446, 60 CR2d 641. Thus, an injunction may be mandatory in effect even though its language is prohibitory. See, e.g., Byington v Superior Court (1939) 14 C2d 68, 92 P2d 896 (order restraining city's water storage in excess of specified amount); Paramount Pictures Corp. v Davis (1964) 228 CA2d 827, 39 CR 791 (order prohibiting actress from rendering services under new contract until performance completed under previous one is mandatory to extent it required performance of services); Pomin v Superior Court (1941) 44 CA2d 206, 112 P2d 17 (order to refrain from obstructing road). For discussion, see 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§281-283 (5th ed 2008).

2. Prohibitory Injunction

§32.16 a. Prohibits Party From Engaging in Certain Acts

A preventive or prohibitory injunction prohibits a party from doing "that which ought not to be done." CC §3368. It requires a party "to refrain from a particular act." CCP §525.

§32.17 b. Preserves Status Quo

A prohibitory injunction maintains the status quo by preventing a contemplated act or requiring cessation of an act in progress. See Aguilar v Avis Rent A Car Sys. (1999) 21 C4th 121, 87 CR2d 132; People ex rel Brown v iMergent, Inc. (2009) 170 CA4th 333, 343, 87 CR3d 844 (injunction required defendants to maintain status quo established when they stipulated to permanent injunction in prior action); Franklin & Franklin v 7-Eleven Owners for Fair Franchising (2000) 85 CA4th 1168, 1172, 102 CR2d 770. See also Kettenhofen v Superior Court (1961) 55 C2d 189, 10 CR 356 (order to refrain from obstructing easement).

Status quo has been defined as the "last actual peaceable, uncontested status which preceded the pending controversy" (see United R.R. v Superior Court (1916) 172 C 80, 155 P 463) and the "relative position or rights of the parties at the time the injunction is granted or the decree entered" (Pomin v Superior Court (1941) 44 CA2d 206, 112 P2d 17).

§32.18 c. Minor Mandatory Characteristics Not Important

Incidental or minor affirmative features of an essentially prohibitory injunction will not transform it into a mandatory injunction. United R.R. v Superior Court (1916) 172 C 80, 155 P 463. See Youngblood v Wilcox (1989) 207 CA3d 1368, 255 CR 527 (injunction requiring country club to grant access to expelled members is prohibitory because it forbids interference with membership rights); People v Mobile Magic Sales, Inc. (1979) 96 CA3d 1, 157 CR 749 (injunction prohibiting certain mobilehome displays that violated law not mandatory even though defendants required to remove displays as incident to restraining objective). See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§278-283 (5th ed 2008).

C. Prerequisites to Injunctive Relief

1. Jurisdiction

§32.19 a. Subject Matter Jurisdiction

The trial courts have initial jurisdiction to issue injunctive relief; appellate courts do not have original jurisdiction over actions seeking injunctive relief. See Cal Const art VI, §10; Walsh v Railroad Comm'n (1940) 16 C2d 691, 107 P2d 611. In limited civil cases, which are generally cases in which the amount in controversy does not exceed $25,000 (see CCP §85), courts may issue provisional injunctions (CCP §86(a)(8)), but not permanent injunctions.

Unelected court commissioners probably lack jurisdiction to issue injunctive relief, although it may be appropriate for them to make recommendations to the judges concerning applications for restraining orders. See Cal Const art VI, §22; CCP §259. See also 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Courts §§344-345 (5th ed 2008). On subject matter jurisdiction generally, see 2 Witkin, Procedure, Juris §§11-105.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.20 b. Personal Jurisdiction

An injunctive order operates in personam. Berger v Superior Court (1917) 175 C 719, 167 P 143. Thus it is enforceable only after the court acquires personal jurisdiction over the defendant. Chrysler Credit Corp. v Waegele (1972) 29 CA3d 681, 105 CR 914 (personal jurisdiction acquired through personal service of order to show cause); Rothschild v Erda (1968) 258 CA2d 750, 66 CR 209 (personal jurisdiction not acquired through defendant's special appearance to challenge jurisdiction).

The respondent's appearance at a hearing on an ex parte application for a restraining order is not a general appearance for personal jurisdiction purposes. CCP §418.11. See CCP §1917. On personal jurisdiction generally, see 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Jurisdiction §§106-242 (5th ed 2008).

2. Standing

§32.21 a. General Rules on Standing

Unless provided otherwise by statute, standing for injunctive relief is governed by the generally applicable rules on standing. As long as a plaintiff has standing to seek relief at trial on the merits, the plaintiff has standing to seek the same relief on a provisional basis. Common Cause v Board of Supervisors (1989) 49 C3d 432, 261 CR 574. See 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§67-172 (5th ed 2008).

§32.22 b. Class Actions

A temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction may be granted in a class action, whether or not the class (either plaintiff or defendant) has been certified. CCP §527(b). Taxpayers generally have no standing to enjoin illegal expenditures of public funds. Cohen v Board of Supervisors (1986) 178 CA3d 447, 225 CR 114.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.23 c. Specific Statute

Special standing provisions may apply when injunctive relief is sought under a specific statute. See §32.28. See, e.g., Diamond View Ltd. v Herz (1986) 180 CA3d 612, 225 CR 651 (limited partnership not a "person" for purposes of injunction under CCP §527.6); Pines v Tomson (1984) 160 CA3d 370, 206 CR 866 (under Bus & P C §17203, plaintiffs may sue for injury to general public without threat of personal injury to them).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.24 3. Venue

The proper forum for injunction proceedings is governed by the statutory provisions determining the proper place for trial of civil actions generally. See CCP §§392-395.5. See generally chap 8.

Thus, because an action for injunctive relief is ordinarily personal or transitory, it is usually triable in the defendant's county of residence unless otherwise provided by law. CCP §395(a). See Golden Cross Mining & Milling Co. v Spiers (1896) 115 C 247, 47 P 108; Sloan v Court Hotel (1945) 72 CA2d 308, 164 P2d 516. For the exception relating to actions against public officers, see CCP §393(1)(b). On venue in actions relating to real property, see CCP §392(a).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.25 4. Statutory Requirements

§32.25 4. Statutory Requirements

Statutes on injunctive relief either state equitable conditions for granting relief or authorize relief in particular kinds of actions. See CCP §526 (provisional injunctions) and CC §3422 (permanent injunctions). See §§32.26-32.35. Some special statutes simply authorize the court to grant injunctive relief in a particular case. See §32.28.

Not all situations in which injunctive relief may be appropriate are covered by statute. See, e.g., City of Pasadena v Superior Court (1910) 157 C 781, 109 P 620 (injunction pending appeal). Although most cases usually fall within a situation covered in the statutes, injunctive relief may be available even without statutory authority if equitable considerations are met (City of Pasadena v Superior Court, supra) and if the remedy is not prohibited by constitution or statute (see §32.28).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.26 a. Provisional Injunctions

§32.26 a. Provisional Injunctions

Provisional injunctive relief (i.e., temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction) may issue against acts that:

- Threaten waste, or great or irreparable injury (CCP §526(a)(2));
- Violate another party's rights in the subject of the action and tend to render final judgment ineffectual (CCP §526(a)(3));
- When pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief (CCP §526(a)(4));
- Produce injury for which money damages are inadequate or extremely difficult to ascertain (CCP §526(a)(5));
- Threaten to cause a multiplicity of judicial proceedings (CCP §526(a)(6)); or
- Violate a trust obligation (CCP §526(a)(7)).

Injunctive relief may also restrain commission or continuance of an act whenever the complaint discloses "that plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded." CCP §526(a)(1). This determination is based on equitable factors. See §§32.29-32.35.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.27 b. Permanent Injunctions

§32.27 b. Permanent Injunctions

Permanent (or final) injunctive relief may issue (CC §3422):

- When money damages are inadequate or difficult to ascertain;
- To prevent a multiplicity of judicial proceedings; or
- When the obligation arises from a trust.

In addition, the court may issue injunctive relief when necessary to prevent a party "from doing that which ought not to be done." CC §3368; see City of Pasadena v Superior Court (1910) 157 C 781, 109 P 620 (§3368 conforms with general grant of equity jurisdiction in California constitution).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.28 c. Specific Statutes Authorizing Injunctive Relief

§32.28 c. Specific Statutes Authorizing Injunctive Relief

The California legislature has enacted many statutes that specifically authorize provisional (preliminary) and/or final (permanent) injunctive relief. These statutes include:

- Injunction restraining violation of Unfair Trade Practices Act (Bus & P C §§17000-17101) (Bus & P C §17078);
- Injunction restraining violation of Unfair Competition Law (UCL) (Bus & P C §§17200-17210) (Bus & P C §17203);
- Injunction against violation of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act (Bus & P C §§23000-25762) (Bus & P C §23053.1);
- Violation of Uniform Trade Secrets Act (Bus & P C §§3426-3426.11) by actual or threatened misappropriation of trade secrets (CC §3426.2);
- Injunction to prevent harassment (CCP §527.6; see §§32.131-32.150);
- Injunction to prevent gang violence (CCP §527.7);
- Injunction by employer to prevent workplace threats or violence (CCP §527.8);
- Protective order under Domestic Violence Prevention Act (Fam C §§6200-6388; see Practice Under the California Family Code: Dissolution, Legal Separation, Nullity (Cal CEB Annual));
- Injunction restraining violation of clean water statutes (Health & S C §117030);
- Injunction restraining violation of Jurisdictional Strike Act (Lab C §§1115-1122) (Lab C §1116);
- Injunction against grazing livestock on federal lands (Pub Res C §8506); and
- Injunction restraining unauthorized release of involuntary mental or narcotics patient's records (Welf & I C §§5330).

When a case comes within a special statute authorizing injunctive relief, the terms of the statute determine whether traditional equitable conditions for relief must also be shown. See, e.g., Lab C §1116 (injunction may be granted in a "proper case"); Pub Res C §8506 (injunction may be granted under principles of equity); Bus & P C §17082 (unnecessary for Unfair Trade Practices Act plaintiff to show actual or threatened damages or injury). See also Sommer v Metal Trades Council (1953) 40 C2d 392, 254 P2d 559 (in granting injunction under Jurisdictional Strike Act, trial court could weigh equitable factors or probable injury to each party).

NOTE: When injunctive relief is sought under a particular statute, special provisions may apply with respect to the length of a restraining order, notice (e.g., CCP §527.6(c) (temporary restraining order or injunction may issue without notice in domestic violence case)), exhaustion of administrative remedies (see, e.g., Board of Police Comm'rs v Superior Court (1985) 168 CA3d 420, 214 CR 493), and other matters. Counsel should carefully examine the specific statute under which an injunction is sought to ascertain whether it differs from CCP §527.

5. Equitable Considerations

§32.29 a. Equitable Requirements

Unless a special statute authorizes injunctive relief without regard to traditional equitable considerations (see §32.28), an injunction will issue only when the applicant satisfies the court that equity requires use of this extraordinary remedy. See, e.g., City of Tiburon v Northwestern Pac. R.R. (1970) 4 CA3d 160, 84 CR 469. The court makes its determination by balancing the equitable factors favoring an injunction with those mitigating against it (see §§32.29-32.35). White v Davis (2003) 30 C4th 528, 554, 133 CR2d 648; Tahoe Keys Prop. Owners Ass'n v State Water Resources Control Bd. (1994) 23 CA4th 1459, 1470, 28 CR2d 734.

Trial courts should evaluate two related factors when deciding whether to issue a preliminary injunction:

- The likelihood that the plaintiff will prevail on the merits at trial; and
- The interim harm that the plaintiff is likely to sustain if the injunction is denied as compared with the harm that the defendant is likely to suffer if the preliminary injunction is issued.

By balancing the respective equities of the parties, the trial court concludes that, pending a trial on the merits, the defendant should or should not be restrained from exercising the right claimed by him or her. White v Davis (2003) 30 C4th 528, 554, 133 CR2d 648.

The likelihood of success on the merits and the balance-of-harms analysis are ordinarily interrelated factors in deciding whether to issue a preliminary injunction. The presence or absence of each factor is usually a matter of degree, and if the party seeking the injunction can make a sufficiently strong showing of likelihood of success on the merits, the trial court has discretion to issue an injunction despite that party's inability to show that the balance of harms tips in his or her favor. White v Davis, supra. A trial court erred when it granted a preliminary injunction without considering the relative harms that would be imposed by its grant or denial. White v Davis, supra.

In the federal arena, the Ninth Circuit applies a sliding-scale test to injunctive relief. See *Southwest Voter Registration Educ. Project v Shelle*y (9th Cir 2003) 344 F3d 914, 918 (preliminary injunction is appropriate when plaintiffs "demonstrate either: (1) a likelihood of success on the merits and the possibility of prevailing on the merits, or (2) that serious questions going to the merits were raised and the balance of hardships tips sharply" in their favor). This traditional injunctive test is not used in when an antisuit injunction in at issue, however, because those injunctions involve "a detailed analysis of international comity." E. & J. Gallo Winery v Andina Licores, SA (9th Cir 2006) 446 F3d 984. To halt foreign proceedings, a plaintiff need not establish the likelihood of prevailing in the underlying claim but rather must "demonstrate that the factors specific to an antisuit injunction weigh in favor of granting the injunction." Gallo, 446 F3d at 991.

PRACTICE TIP: The two-pronged test imposed in California is more restrictive than the sliding-scale test in federal courts. Thus, as a tactical matter, when a plaintiff has the choice of seeking injunctive relief under a federal statute in either state or federal court (e.g., under 29 USC §185), the likelihood of success is probably greater in federal court.

Although a trial court has broad discretionary powers to grant or deny a request for a preliminary injunction, it has no discretion to act capriciously. See Robbins v Superior Court (1985) 38 C3d 199, 211 CR 398. See generally CCP §526; CC §3422; Restatement (Second) of Torts §936 (1979). For discussion generally, see 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§289-298 (5th ed 2008).

Equitable conditions relating to injury may also be given less weight in a preliminary injunction setting when, based on a statutory right, the moving party is entitled to relief. See, e.g., McCain v Phoenix Resources, Inc. (1986) 185 CA3d 575, 230 CR 25 (limited partners entitled to inspect partnership records as matter of law).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.30 b. Inadequacy of Legal Remedy

Because of the extraordinary nature of equitable relief, an injunction will usually issue only if the legal remedy (e.g., damages) does not afford adequate relief or is difficult to ascertain. Dodge, Warren & Peters Ins. Servs. v Riley (2003) 105 CA4th 1414, 130 CR2d 385 (injunction requiring preservation of electronic records); Tahoe Keys Prop. Owners Ass'n v State Water Resources Control Bd. (1994) 23 CA4th 1459, 1471, 28 CR2d 734. See also CCP §526(a)(4)-(5) (injunction available when pecuniary compensation would not provide adequate relief or when it would be extremely difficult to ascertain the amount of compensation that would provide adequate relief); CC §3422(1)-(2). In deciding this issue, the court may consider factors outside the pleadings, such as insolvency of the responding party. See West Coast Constr. Co. v Oceano Sanitary Dist. (1971) 17 CA3d 693, 95 CR 169.

Availability of other remedies besides damages may furnish the basis for denial of injunctive relief. For example, injunctive relief may be denied if mandamus is available. See Moore v Superior Court (1936) 6 C2d 421, 57 P2d 1314. For discussion, see 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§337-340 (5th ed 2008).

Difficulty in determining money damages is not in itself sufficient reason to award injunctive relief, nor, as a general rule, should injunctive relief issue to change the possession of real property, the title for which is in dispute, or to recover possession of personal property. Jessen v Keystone Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1983) 142 CA3d 454, 191 CR 104 (real property); Voorhies v Greene (1983) 139 CA3d 989, 189 CR 132 (personal property). But see McCain v Phoenix Resources, Inc. (1986) 185 CA3d 575, 230 CR 25 (injunction requiring change in possession of personal property).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.31 c. Threat of Irreparable Injury

Issuance or denial of injunctive relief generally depends on the balance of the interim harm that the plaintiff is likely to sustain, if the injunction is not issued, against the interim harm the defendant is likely to suffer, if it is issued. Cohen v Board of Supervisors (1985) 40 C3d 277, 219 CR 467. An application for injunctive relief is more likely to be granted if the moving party can show that a threat of "irreparable injury" exists. See CCP §526(a)(2). See also Intel Corp. v Hamidi (2003) 30 C4th 1342, 1352, 1 CR3d 32. Taxpayers who have standing to seek permanent injunctive relief may not be subject to actual irreparable harm themselves such as to qualify them for provisional injunctive relief. See, e.g., Loder v City of Glendale (1989) 216 CA3d 777, 265 CR 66 (taxpayer denied preliminary injunction to stop drug testing); Cohen v Board of Supervisors (1986) 178 CA3d 447, 225 CR 114. See also White v Davis (2003) 30 C4th 528, 554, 133 CR2d 648.

The term "irreparable injury" is not easily defined. It is that species of damages, whether great or small, that ought not to be submitted to on the one hand or inflicted on the other. Anderson v Souza (1952) 38 C2d 825, 834, 243 P2d 497. This definition, however, invites the argument that every injury is irreparable. See, e.g., Fretz v Burke (1967) 247 CA2d 741, 55 CR 879. Irreparable injury may include injury resulting from wrongs of a "repeated and continuing character" (Wind v Herbert (1960) 186 CA2d 276, 285, 8 CR 817), wrongs consisting of "an overbearing assumption by one person of superiority and domination over the rights and property of others" (Fretz v Burke, supra), and wrongs that cannot be compensated for in damages (see Intel Corp. v Hamidi (2003) 30 C4th 1342, 1352, 1 CR3d 32). See §32.30.

EXAMPLE: Irreparable injury includes the threatened arrest by authorities or discontinuance of the method of conducting a business because of such fear of arrest (Ebel v City of Garden Grove (1981) 120 CA3d 399, 176 CR 312). The threatened occupancy of one's new home by another has also been found to be irreparable injury. Grey v Webb (1979) 97 CA3d 232, 158 CR 595.

Although a provisional injunction is generally not available to redress a completed act, a continuing course of conduct may warrant such relief. Sahlolbei v Providence Healthcare, Inc. (2003) 112 CA4th 1137, 1156, 6 CR3d 293 (physician's exclusion from staff without prior hearing constituted harm that continued as long as his staff privileges remained terminated); Volpicelli v Jared Sydney Torrance Mem. Hosp. (1980) 109 CA3d 242, 167 CR 610 (ordering hospital to temporarily return physician to its staff after terminating his staff privileges and continuing to interfere with his attempted return). But see DVD Copy Control Ass'n, Inc. v Bunner (2004) 116 CA4th 241, 255, 10 CR3d 185 (injunctive relief not available when hundreds of websites had already posted protected technology, making trade secret already available to anyone interested).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.32 d. Multiplicity of Judicial Actions

An injunction may issue when necessary "to prevent a multiplicity of judicial proceedings." CCP §526(a)(6); CC §3422(3); see Advanced Bionics Corp. v Medtronic, Inc. (2002) 29 C4th 697, 706, 128 CR2d 172.

For example, this consideration would apply to the following cases:

- Repeated trespass (see Fairrington v Dyke Water Co. (1958) 50 C2d 198, 323 P2d 1001; Mendelson v McCabe (1904) 144 C 230, 77 P 915);
- Repeated vexatious suits relating to the same controversy (see Rynsburger v Dairymen's Fertilizer Coop. (1968) 266 CA2d 269, 279, 72 CR 102; Verdier v Verdier (1962) 203 CA2d 724, 735, 22 CR 93); and
- Other legal proceedings concerning funds that were already the subject of an interpleader action (see Department of Educ. v Superior Court (1979) 97 CA3d 977, 159 CR 265).

§32.33 e. Public Interest and Balance of Conveniences in Favor of Moving Party

In determining whether to issue an injunction, the court may properly consider public interest. City of San Diego v Southern Cal. Tel. Corp. (1954) 42 C2d 110, 266 P2d 14 (injunction stayed in telephone franchise case); Tahoe Keys Prop. Owners Ass'n v State Water Resources Control Bd. (1994) 23 CA4th 1459, 1473, 28 CR2d 734 (public interest considered when plaintiff sought to enjoin public officers and agencies in performance of their duties). Public interest may demand that an injunction issue, even though the party seeking relief would not be entitled to it personally. See Kofsky v Smart & Final Iris Co. (1955) 131 CA2d 530, 281 P2d 5 (injunction restraining sale of cigarettes at less than cost issued on public policy grounds, despite plaintiff's "unclean hands"). Public interest may also demand that an injunction not issue, for example, if harm may result when enjoining public officers or agencies from performing their duties. Tahoe Keys Prop. Owners Ass'n v State Water Resources Control Bd., supra.

The court may also balance the conveniences between the parties. See Hirshfield v Schwartz (2001) 91 CA4th 749, 760, 110 CR2d 861 (injunction denied in encroachment case); Diaz v Kay-Dix Ranch (1970) 9 CA3d 588, 88 CR 443 (injunction denied in farm labor case).

§32.34 f. Injunctive Relief Sought by Government Entity Under Statute

Traditional equitable conditions for relief need not be shown in a case in which injunctive relief is sought by a government entity under statute. IT Corp. v County of Imperial (1983) 35 C3d 63, 196 CR 715. If the statute under which the injunction is sought expressly provides for injunctive relief, the government entity need only show that it is reasonably probable that it will prevail on the merits; a rebuttable presumption of irreparable harm arises as a matter of law. 35 C3d at 72.

PRACTICE TIP: IT Corp. represents a significant departure from the traditional two-prong injunction test. This departure is based on the idea that, because a statute proscribes a certain activity, the legislature has already decided that the activity is contrary to public interest, and no additional showing of harm is required.

Some federal courts apply this principle regardless of whether the moving party is a government entity. See, e.g., Trailer Train Co. v State Bd. of Equalization (9th Cir 1983) 697 F2d 860, 869 ("standard requirements for equitable relief need not be satisfied when an injunction is sought to prevent the violation of a federal statute which specifically provides for injunctive relief"). Given this well-established rule in the federal courts, it seems appropriate for California litigants to seek to extend the rule of IT Corp. to nongovernmental parties.

§32.35 g. Moving Party Must Show Likelihood of Success on Merits

In determining whether to grant or deny a preliminary injunction, the court does not adjudicate the ultimate rights in controversy, but it must consider the likelihood of the plaintiff's ultimately prevailing in the case. Pleasant Hill Bayshore Disposal, Inc. v Chip-It Recycling, Inc. (2001) 91 CA4th 678, 696, 110 CR2d 708. A preliminary injunction will ordinarily not issue unless the moving party shows that there is a "likelihood of success on the merits." Cohen v Board of Supervisors (1985) 40 C3d 277, 219 CR 467 (preliminary injunction denied). See also Thayer Plymouth Ctr. v Chrysler Motors Corp. (1967) 255 CA2d 300, 63 CR 148 (preliminary injunction denied in contract case because plaintiff's remedy was likely to be damages, not permanent injunction). Therefore, an injunction should not issue when there is no possibility of success even if issuing the injunction might prevent irreparable harm, such as correcting further "self-help" action by a party. Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n v Furlotti (1999) 70 CA4th 1487, 83 CR2d 455 (trial court incorrectly granted mandatory preliminary injunction requiring party to remove fence it had built on "self-help" basis because opposing party had no probability of success on merits). See also Nelson v Avondale Homeowners Ass'n (2009) 172 CA4th 857, 861, 91 CR3d 726 (because plaintiff could not establish probability of success on merits, no need for court to consider whether irreparable injury would result).

The trial court's interlocutory decision on the likelihood that the plaintiff will prevail at trial reflects nothing more than the court's evaluation of the controversy based on the record before it at the time of its ruling. *Howard S. IV. APPLICATION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE AND TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

§32.36 A. When Appropriate

A temporary restraining order (TRO) is an interim order issued to preserve the status quo, pending a hearing on the application for a preliminary injunction. See CCP §527; Biasca v Superior Court (1924) 194 C 366, 228 P 861; Scripps Health v Marin (1999) 72 CA4th 324, 334, 85 CR2d 86. A TRO is technically not an injunction, although it has the same force and effect, because it may issue ex parte (see CCP §527; §32.38) without requiring a bond or undertaking (but see §32.56). Generally, a TRO:

- Expires automatically at the end of 15 days or, if good cause is shown, 22 days after its issuance (see CCP §527(d)(1); Sharpe v Brotzman (1956) 145 CA2d 354, 302 P2d 668 (relating to former 10-day provision));
- Terminates if a preliminary injunction is denied; or
- Is superseded by issuance of a preliminary injunction (Houser v Superior Court (1932) 121 CA 31, 8 P2d 483).

In some situations TROs issued under specific statutory authority may exceed 15 days. For example, Fam C §242(b) provides that certain temporary orders, including orders pertaining to domestic violence, shall expire after 20 days, or after 25 days if good cause is shown.

Whether an order is a TRO or a preliminary injunction is determined by its effect, not its title. Yellen v Fidelity & Cas. Co. (1931) 115 CA 434, 1 P2d 1019. If the order states that it is effective "until further order of the court" or "until final judgment on the merits," it is a preliminary injunction and requires a bond regardless of what it is called. See San Diego Water Co. v Pacific Coast S.S. Co. (1894) 101 C 216, 35 P 651; McManus v KPAL Broad. Corp. (1960) 182 CA2d 558, 6 CR 441.

B. Moving Party's Procedures

§32.37 1. By Complaint or by Verified Affidavit

Preliminary injunctive relief will issue only on a showing of sufficient grounds, either by verified complaint or by affidavit. CCP §527(a). See Smith v Stearns Rancho Co. (1900) 129 C 58, 61 P 662 (showing on amended verified complaint sufficient); Ancora-Citronelle Corp. v Green (1974) 41 CA3d 146, 115 CR 879 (error to issue injunction on unverified complaint and insufficient declaration). Thus, the drafting attorney must decide whether the factual showing will be made entirely in the complaint or together with supporting affidavits (or declarations; see CCP §2015.5). Use of the complaint alone presents two problems:

- The complaint's sufficiency is then governed by the rules on oral testimony, with the result that conclusions that otherwise may be acceptable as a matter of pleading will not suffice. Willis v Lauridson (1911) 161 C 106, 118 P 530; Bank of America v Williams (1948) 89 CA2d 21, 200 P2d 151.
- A verified answer that denies all material allegations can result in denial of injunctive relief unless the complaint sets forth a particularly strong case for such relief. See Kendall v Foulks (1919) 180 C 171, 179 P 886; Jessen v Keystone Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1983) 142 CA3d 454, 191 CR 104.

For these reasons, most practitioners, rather than drafting the complaint in evidentiary form, use supporting affidavits or declarations to make the required factual showing. See §§32.40-32.44.

§32.38 2. Special Requirements for Ex Parte Relief

Applications for ex parte temporary restraining orders are governed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1200-3.1207. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(g). If relief is sought ex parte, the application must state the name, address, and telephone number of any attorney known to the applicant to be an attorney for any party or, if no such attorney is known, the name, address, and telephone number of such party if known to the applicant. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1202(a).

If an ex parte application for an order has been made to the court and has been refused in whole or in part, any subsequent application of the same character or for the same relief, even though made on an alleged different state of facts, must include a full disclosure of any previous applications and the court's actions. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1202(b).

An ex parte application must be in writing and include all the following (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1201):

- An application containing the case caption and stating the relief requested;
- A declaration in support of the application making the factual showing required under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1202(c);
- A competent declaration based on personal knowledge of the notice given under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1204(a);
- A supporting memorandum; and
- A proposed order.

Ex parte motions and orders to show cause are discussed in chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.39 3. Verification

If any part of the pleader's factual showing is made in the complaint, the complaint must be verified. CCP §527(a). An injunction that issues without a verified showing is void and unenforceable. Ancora-Citronelle Corp. v Green (1974) 41 CA3d 146, 115 CR 879; Harlan v Superior Court (1949) 94 CA2d 902, 211 P2d 942, disapproved on other grounds in Signal Oil & Gas Co. v Ashland Oil & Ref. Co. (1958) 49 C2d 764, 775 n5, 322 P2d 149.

Because a verified complaint requires a verified answer (CCP §446), many attorneys prefer to verify the complaint even when the factual showing is made entirely by separate affidavit or declaration. Whenever possible, the client should verify the complaint. See CCP §446.

When a corporate or public agency officer verifies on information and belief, or when the attorney does so because the party is for some reason unable to verify, the complaint cannot be used as an affidavit or declaration establishing the facts alleged. CCP §446. See Ancora-Citronelle Corp. v Green, supra. The contrary is true when the facts are within the attorney's or officer's knowledge. Continental Baking Co. v Katz (1968) 68 C2d 512, 67 CR 761 (attorney's verification). For further discussion of verification, see chap 15.

4. Affidavits or Declarations

§32.40 a. Which to Use

Provisional injunctive relief may be obtained only "upon a verified complaint, or upon affidavits." CCP §527(a). Instead of affidavits, many attorneys prefer to use witness declarations (or certifications) under penalty of perjury as authorized by CCP §2015.5. See form of declaration in §32.153 and see CCP §2015.5(a). Even if witnesses are out of state, declarations in a slightly different form may be used. See form in CCP §2015.5(b).

b. Contents

§32.41 (1) Showing Required

Declarations in support of an application for a temporary restraining order (TRO) must show that denial will result in irreparable injury to the moving party before the matter can be heard on notice (CCP §527(c)), i.e., within the next 16 court days or other applicable notice period. See CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). This requirement is jurisdictional. See Ancora-Citronelle Corp. v Green (1974) 41 CA3d 146, 115 CR 879. Accordingly, the facts stated should clearly show the need for quick action.

The declarations should be directed at convincing the court that irreparable injury will result if injunctive relief is not granted. The declarations must set forth the facts showing immediate and irreparable injury; conclusory allegations of irreparable injury are inadequate. The court will often not address the question of the likelihood of the moving party's prevailing on the merits until it is satisfied that that party will incur the requisite level of injury. See Cohen v Board of Supervisors (1986) 178 CA3d 447, 225 CR 114.

NOTE: The TRO is not a favored remedy. It is generally sought on extremely short notice and requires opposing counsel to make a hurried response under pressure. For this reason, it should be requested only in the most urgent circumstances. Declarations should be directed toward persuading the judge that the moving party will be irreparably injured if required to wait for the regular motion calendar before obtaining the relief sought.

The declarations should state specific facts within the declarant's knowledge, recited in words he or she would use if called to testify. Hearsay and conclusory statements, inadmissible if the declarant were to testify personally in court, are generally insufficient to support a provisional injunction, although they may be considered if no objection is made. Haskell v Carli (1987) 195 CA3d 124, 240 CR 439. The declaration must be in such form that criminal sanctions for perjury would apply when facts declared to be true are in fact untrue or are not known to be true. Ancora-Citronelle Corp. v Green, supra (affidavit based on information or belief insufficient to support preliminary injunction).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should also bear in mind that the declarations can be used to impeach a witness who later testifies to the contrary.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.42 (2) Ex Parte Relief

§32.42 (2) Ex Parte Relief

If the relief is sought ex parte, the applicant must make an affirmative factual showing in a declaration containing competent testimony based on personal knowledge of irreparable harm, immediate danger, or any other statutory basis for granting relief ex parte. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1202(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.43 (3) Attachments

When they are relevant, any written documents (e.g., contracts) should be attached to the declarations. If location or physical circumstances are necessary to determining the nature and extent of injunctive relief, any available diagrams and photographs should be attached to the declarations. This type of evidence might be used, e.g., in cases involving trespasses to land, water diversion, or acts causing environmental pollution. Plans, drawings, photographs, or other documents must be submitted when the injunction concerns picketing, encroachments, or easements. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1151.

PRACTICE TIP: All accompanying declarations should include a statement that any attached diagrams or photographs accurately depict the events or conditions at a particular time.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.44 (4) Statement of Prior Application

If an earlier application for a restraining order has been made and denied, the attorney must file a declaration disclosing that fact and stating any new facts that have developed to justify the new application. CCP §1008. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(e) (application for TRO or OSC must state whether previous application for similar relief has been made and, if so, result of application). Failure to do so may be grounds for revocation of the TRO on an ex parte motion. CCP §1008(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.45 5. Supporting Memorandum

§32.45 5. Supporting Memorandum

Although apparently not required (see CCP §527), it is good practice, and most judges will expect, that a supporting memorandum accompany applications for temporary restraining orders (TROs). The format requirements for a memorandum are set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113

By filing a supporting memorandum before a TRO issues, the attorney provides the court with the legal basis for the application at the earliest possible date. If necessary, a supplementary memorandum may be filed before the show cause hearing. See CCP §527.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: In TRO proceedings, the judge often reviews the moving papers only moments before the matter is heard. Brevity and precision are therefore even more crucial than at other times. The memorandum should try to persuade the judge that the moving party will face severe consequences if forced to wait for the regular motion calendar before obtaining the relief sought. Without a showing of immediate injury, the judge may conclude that the moving party is merely trying to "cut in line" by circumventing regular notice procedures.

§32.46 6. Form of Temporary Restraining Order and Order to Show Cause

Counsel must prepare a proposed temporary restraining order (TRO) and an order to show cause (OSC). They may be in separate documents to make it easier on the judge if he or she denies the TRO and issues only the OSC. The prevailing practice, however, is to set forth the proposed TRO and OSC separately, but in a single document. The OSC must be stated first. The restraining language must be separately stated in the OSC and TRO and may not be incorporated by reference. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(c). The TRO portion of the document should precisely delineate the relief the applicant is seeking. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(c).

PRACTICE TIP: It is also advisable to prepare brief prefatory statements setting forth the legal basis of the judge's determination (e.g., "the court finds that applicant is likely to succeed on the merits"). These precautions should help to avoid a finding on review (by appeal or writ) that the trial court failed to make the requisite findings for a TRO.

The TRO must describe the activities to be enjoined prior to the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(c). The proposed OSC must contain blank spaces for the time and manner of service on the responding parties; must describe the injunction sought; and must set forth the date of the hearing on the preliminary injunction with blank spaces for the time and manner of service, the date when the proof of service must be delivered to the court along with a briefing schedule, and, if applicable, the expiration date for the TRO. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(c).

A TRO or OSC application must state whether any previous application for similar relief has been made, and the results of that application. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(e). For further discussion, see §32.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.47 7. Filing and Service

If the action is initiated on the same day a TRO or an OSC is sought, the complaint must be filed first. The moving party must provide a file-stamped copy of the complaint to the judge who will hear the application. If an application for a TRO or OSC is made in an existing case, the moving party must request that the court file be made available to the judge hearing the application. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(b).

PRACTICE TIP: It is a good idea for counsel to provide a copy of the complaint with the papers in the event the file is unavailable for any reason.

The application may be made in chambers or, in emergencies, at the judge's home if the court is not in session. See CCP §166; People v Valenzuela (1968) 259 CA2d 826, 66 CR 825. It may be signed by the judge and served on any day, including Sundays and holidays. CCP §134(b).

Code of Civil Procedure §527 does not require that the responding party be served with the complaint or moving papers before they are presented to the judge. However, Rule 3.1203 requires the moving party seeking an ex parte order to notify all parties of the application and the relief sought by at least 10 a.m. of the court day before the day of ex parte appearance, absent exceptional circumstances that justify a shorter time for notice. The moving party must also file a declaration either showing that this advance notice was given and was attempted unsuccessfully in good faith, or supplying reasons why notice should not be given. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1204(b). Advance notice is not required when "exceptional circumstances" can be shown. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1203(a). Parties appearing at the ex parte hearing must serve the ex parte application or any written opposition on all other appearing parties at the first reasonable opportunity. Absent exceptional circumstances, no hearing may be conducted unless such service has been made. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1206. For further discussion of ex parte relief, see chap 13.

8. Notice

§32.48 a. Affidavit or Declaration Regarding Notice

Although an application for a temporary restraining order (TRO) is made ex parte, without formal notice, the applicant or his or her attorney must certify in an affidavit or declaration that, (1) within the applicable time period of Cal Rules of Ct 3.1203(a), he or she gave informal notice; (2) a good faith but unsuccessful attempt was made to give informal notice, specifying the efforts made to inform the opposing party; or (3) for the reasons specified (e.g., notice would result in irreparable harm or would defeat the purpose of the proposed order), the applicant should not be required to give informal notice. CCP §527(c)(2); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1204(b).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.49 b. Time of Notice

§32.49 b. Time of Notice

The moving party must notify all other parties of the time and place of the hearing and of the relief sought by at least 10 a.m. on the court day before the day of the hearing unless there is a showing of exceptional circumstances that justify a shorter time. A party seeking an ex parte order in an unlawful detainer proceeding may provide shorter notice as long as the notice given is reasonable. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1203(b).

§32.50 c. Filing and Presentation by Clerk

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.51 d. Contents of Notice

§32.51 d. Contents of Notice

When notice of an ex parte application is given, the person giving notice must state with specificity the nature of the relief to be requested and the date, time, and place for the presentation of the application, and must attempt to learn whether the opposing party will appear to oppose the application. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1204(a).

Every ex parte application must be accompanied by a declaration regarding notice that states (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1204(b)):

- The notice given, including the date, time, manner, and name of the party informed, the relief sought, any response, and whether opposition is expected; or
- Why notice should not be required.

If notice was provided later than 10 a.m. the court day before the ex parte appearance, the declaration regarding notice must explain (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1204(c)):

- The exceptional circumstances that justify the shorter notice; or
- In unlawful detainer proceedings, why the notice given is reasonable.

PRACTICE TIP: Telephonic notice should be immediately confirmed by letter and "faxed" to the opposing party, if possible.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.52 e. Failure to Notify Adverse Party in First Amendment Cases

Failure to notify the adverse party of an application for a TRO may not only violate a court rule, but may also result in an error of constitutional dimension if they restrain First Amendment rights. See, e.g., Carroll v President & Comm'rs of Princess Anne (1968) 393 US 175, 21 L Ed 2d 325, 89 S Ct 347 (ex parte order restraining rallies or meetings of "white supremacist" group held to violate First Amendment when no showing made of attempt to notify); United Farm Workers v Superior Court (1975) 14 C3d 902, 122 CR 877 (ex parte order restricting union's access to employees and limiting picketing violated First Amendment and Cal Const art I, §2); Skinner v Superior Court (1977) 69 CA3d 183, 137 CR 851 (ex parte TRO permitting police to take possession of defendant's premises and remove personal property was denial of due process). Orders that restrain exercise of First Amendment rights require either that prior notice be given or that it be shown that a reasonable effort was made to do so. Notice in such cases may be formal or informal and may be given either to defendant or to defendant's attorney. United Farm Workers v Superior Court, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

9. Hearing

§32.53 a. Setting for Show Cause Hearing

When an order to show cause and temporary restraining order (TRO) issue, the show cause hearing (or "return date") must be set for the earliest day convenient to the court, but no later than 15 days (or, for good cause, 22 days) after the date of the order. CCP §527(d)(1). This requirement is jurisdictional; without a waiver, failure to comply renders the show cause order void, and the TRO unenforceable. McDonald v Superior Court (1937) 18 CA2d 652, 64 P2d 738.

NOTE: Although the original order is void and must be dissolved on the responding party's motion, the court may, on the plaintiff's reapplication, reissue any previously issued temporary restraining order. The reissued order shall be made returnable on the earliest date convenient to the court within the time limits of CCP §527(d)(1). CCP §527(d)(5).

The return date required by §527(d)(1) may be waived by the responding party. See International Molders Local 164 v Superior Court (1977) 70 CA3d 395, 138 CR 794 (waiver by requesting continuance beyond 15-day limit); West Coast Constr. Co. v Oceano Sanitary Dist. (1971) 17 CA3d 693, 95 CR 169 (waiver by failure to object to numerous continuances and by participating without objection in delayed hearing).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.54 b. Informal Conference or Hearing

§32.54 b. Informal Conference or Hearing

After opposing counsel has been notified, the court ordinarily conducts an informal conference or a hearing, during which both sides argue the merits of the application. Personal attendance of the moving party or counsel for the moving party is required for the issuance of a TRO. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(d). If the court decides that the TRO will issue, counsel for the responding party may assist the court in setting the amount of the undertaking if one is required.

NOTE: The defendant's appearance to resist an ex parte application for a TRO is not a general appearance and does not preclude a subsequent motion to dismiss for inadequate service. CCP §418.11.

On ex parte motions and orders to show cause generally, see chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.55 c. Grant or Denial of TRO; Service of Orders

After it is signed by the judge, the TRO, order to show cause (OSC), and all supporting documents must be personally served on the respondent within the time ordered by the court. If the court does not specify a time, the OSC and supporting papers must be served within 5 days after issuance of the TRO or two days before the hearing, whichever is earlier. CCP §527(d)(2). A restraining order cannot be enforced unless the responding party or related person has been served. See Phillips v Superior Court (1943) 22 C2d 256, 137 P2d 838 (no showing that divorce defendant was served or otherwise had knowledge of custody order); Chrysler Credit Corp. v Waegele (1972) 29 CA3d 681, 105 CR 914 (service on corporate officer adequately notified corporate defendant). The usual practice is to serve the responding party as soon as possible after the TRO issues.

If a TRO is issued but the hearing is not set within 15 days (CCP §527(d)(1)) or if the papers are not served within the time required by CCP §527(d)(2), the court may still hear the OSC if the moving and supporting papers are served as required by CCP §1005 (16 court days before the hearing date). CCP §527(f).

Even if the court denies the application for a TRO, an OSC why a preliminary injunction should not issue, returnable within the time limits stated above, may still issue. If the OSC is issued without a TRO, the court may hear an application for a preliminary injunction if the moving and supporting papers are served within the time required by CCP §1005 (16 court days before the hearing date). CCP §527(f).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.56 10. Bond or Undertaking

Whether to require a bond or an undertaking when issuing a temporary restraining order (TRO) is usually discretionary with the court but it is considered better practice to do so. Biasca v Superior Court (1924) 194 C 366, 228 P 861. See also Allen v Pitchess (1973) 36 CA3d 321, 329, 111 CR 658. The court must require an undertaking before issuing a TRO in an action for a claim and delivery of personal property. The undertaking must be in an amount not less than twice the defendant's interest in the property. CCP §515.010.

When a bond or undertaking is required, the TRO does not become effective until it is given. Heyman & Co. v Landers (1859) 12 C 107. See also Armstrong v Superior Court (1916) 173 C 341, 159 P 1176. Thus, it is advisable to make prior arrangements for an undertaking. The bond or undertaking provides security for the responding party for recovery of damages if the court later decides that the TRO was unwarranted.

Generally, sureties on the undertaking for a TRO may be either personal (CCP §995.510) or by admitted surety insurers (CCP §995.610). The responding party may challenge the sureties' sufficiency under the procedures established by CCP §529. This challenge must be made within 5 days after service of the TRO (CCP §529) by noticed motion under the procedures set forth under CCP §§995.910-995.960. See §§32.99-32.103.

PRACTICE TIP: Because there is no statute governing undertakings on a TRO (see CCP §529; injunction only), and because the sufficiency of individual sureties is often challenged, the court may refuse to accept individual sureties on the TRO and direct that the sureties be admitted surety insurers.

C. Responding Party's Procedures

§32.57 1. Before Order Issues; Procedures

Counsel usually receives less than 24 hours' notice before an application for a temporary restraining order (TRO) is made. See discussion in §32.49. When receiving notice, counsel for the responding party should demand immediate delivery of the applicant's moving and supporting papers. If the applicant refuses, this noncooperation can be used in arguments seeking to defeat the TRO.

- Gather facts. It is essential for the attorney to develop a careful and complete compilation of the facts from the client.
- Discuss legal fees and costs. The attorney should be sure at the outset that the client understands the costs of litigation, particularly injunctive proceedings, because the information may affect the client's decision on how to respond to the suit. On written representation agreements with client, see chap 3.
- Consider settlement. After eliciting the facts from the client, the attorney should consider whether a settlement is feasible. Counsel might consider advising the client to discontinue the disputed activity voluntarily, thus removing the need for a TRO. See Lee v Gates (1983) 141 CA3d 989, 190 CR 682 (no injunction will issue when activity has been voluntarily discontinued and there is evidence that it will not be repeated).
- Prepare argument for posting bond. The attorney for the responding party should be prepared to argue the need for a bond and its amount, i.e., how much damage the client is likely to suffer from a wrongfully issued TRO. If bond is set sufficiently high, the plaintiff may be unable to post bond, thus preventing issuance of the TRO.
- Decide whether to remove case to federal court. After telephonic notice of the TRO (see §32.51), counsel for the responding party may believe that the case is removable to federal court on federal question or diversity grounds. See chap 22. If so, it is nevertheless logistically difficult to arrange for filing a notice of removal before the hearing on the application for a TRO. If the federal court is geographically close to the state court (as in Orange and Los Angeles counties), counsel who has anticipated the TRO and prepared a notice of removal may be able to file it shortly after being served with the moving papers, or an attempted filing of the notice of removal may be accomplished by associate counsel, an assistant, or a paralegal while the state court judge is reviewing the moving papers.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel who is aware that an application for a TRO against a client will be made can prepare early for the hearing by drafting opposing declarations to controvert the moving party's anticipated showing. These papers should not be filed, however, until the moving party's declarations have been reviewed and any appropriate adjustments added.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.58 2. After Temporary Restraining Order Issues; Alternatives

Once a temporary restraining order (TRO) has issued, counsel for the responding party should consider:

- Motion to dismiss under CCP §418.10. Counsel's appearance at the hearing to resist the TRO does not constitute a general appearance precluding a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. CCP §418.11. See chap 19.
- Motion for reconsideration under CCP §1008. This motion is not generally useful, because the show cause hearing often takes place before the motion can be adequately noticed and heard, absent an order shortening time.
- Motion to dissolve or modify TRO under CCP §§532(a), 533. Like the motion for reconsideration, this procedure is not terribly valuable, because the show cause hearing will probably be scheduled sooner than the motion can be heard, absent an order shortening time. See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§402, 408 (5th ed 2008).
- Filing appeal, with or without application for stay pending appeal. An appeal automatically stays a mandatory injunction. Paramount Pictures Corp. v Davis (1964) 228 CA2d 827, 835, 39 CR 791. See §§32.127-32.129.
- Motion for change of venue under CCP §396b. The court has no jurisdiction to proceed with the show cause hearing until the venue motion has been heard and decided. County of Riverside v Superior Court (1968) 69 C2d 828, 73 CR 386. See chap 20.
- Removing action to federal court. If diversity lies, or if a federal claim is made under the state court's concurrent jurisdiction, the responding party may wish to remove the matter to federal court. For example, many pension and health benefit claims filed in state court are removed to federal court because they are governed by federal law (see 29 USC §1132). See, e.g., Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v Taylor (1987) 481 US 58, 95 L Ed 2d 55, 107 S Ct 1542.
- Motion for order shortening time for discovery. It may be advisable to depose the plaintiff or third party witnesses before the preliminary injunction hearing. On orders shortening time generally, see CCP §2025.270. See also California Civil Discovery Practice §§5.52-5.54, 15.9 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).
- Motion for continuance. The opposing party is entitled as a matter of right to a continuance. See CCP §527(d)(4).
- Moving to disqualify judge under CCP §170.6 (peremptory challenge).

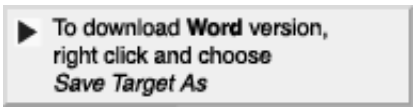
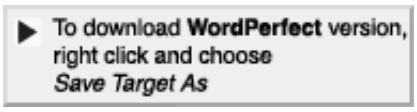
§32.59 D. Checklist: Temporary Restraining Order (TRO)





To obtain temporary restraining order (TRO) and hearing on order to show cause (OSC) regarding preliminary injunction:

- Prepare and file:
- Complaint or cross-complaint (have summons issued). See §32.37; see form in §32.152.
- Affidavits or declarations in support of OSC and TRO (and preliminary injunction). See §§32.40-32.44, 32.48; see form in §32.153.
- Supporting memorandum. See §32.45.
- Proposed TRO and OSC, which are usually combined in a single document filed with proof of service after signature by judge. See §32.154.
- Record:
- Lis pendens, if real property is involved. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 13 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).
- Notify:
- Attorney for responding party or, if unknown, responding party of hearing on TRO. See §§32.48-32.52.
- Serve on responding party after ex parte hearing on TRO:
- Copies of complaint or cross-complaint, summons, affidavits or declarations, memorandums, and TRO, within time ordered by court or within the earlier of five days after issuance of TRO or two days before show cause hearing if court does not specify. CCP §527(d)(2). See §32.55.
- Order to show cause, as directed by court. See §§32.55, 32.154.

NOTE: There is no requirement that the party seeking a TRO prepare and file an "Application for Temporary Restraining Order," but attorneys often do so. Such a document is similar to a notice of motion and directs the court's attention to the nature of the action and the remedy sought. CCP §527(d)(2).

V. MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

§32.60 A. When Appropriate

A preliminary injunction is usually prohibitory in effect and issues to preserve the status quo pending final determination of an action on its merits. See Continental Baking Co. v Katz (1968) 68 C2d 512, 528, 67 CR 761; Dodge, Warren & Peters Ins. Servs. v Riley (2003) 105 CA4th 1414, 1418, 130 CR2d 385. Except as otherwise provided, a bond or an undertaking is required to protect the enjoined party. CCP §529. See §32.92. After a trial on the merits, a preliminary injunction is either merged into a permanent injunction or extinguished if a permanent injunction is denied. See Shahen v Superior Court (1941) 46 CA2d 187, 115 P2d 516.

A decision to issue or deny a preliminary injunction is not an adjudication of ultimate issues in the action. Cohen v Board of Supervisors (1985) 40 C3d 277, 286, 219 CR 467. However, it may indicate what the final judgment will be. See Continental Baking Co. v Katz, supra. See also State Bd. of Barber Exam'rs v Star (1970) 8 CA3d 736, 87 CR 450 (constitutional issues will not be decided at preliminary injunction hearing unless parties so stipulate). The court considers such factors as whether there is a reasonable probability that the moving party will ultimately prevail (see §32.35), whether the moving party will suffer irreparable injury before trial on the merits if the injunction does not issue (see §32.31), and what the impact on the respondent and third parties will be if the injunction issues (see §32.33). The court's decision is discretionary. Lagunitas Water Co. v Marin County Water Co. (1912) 163 C 332, 125 P 351. It will be reversed on appeal only if abuse of discretion is shown. IT Corp. v County of Imperial (1983) 35 C3d 63, 196 CR 715; Gosney v State (1970) 10 CA3d 921, 89 CR 390.

The procedures of CCP §527(a) have withstood attack on the ground that they permit an unconstitutional prior restraint when used to prevent the exhibition of allegedly obscene films (People ex rel Gow v Mitchell Bros. Santa Ana Theater (1981) 118 CA3d 863, 173 CR 476) and as an unconstitutional prejudgment attachment (Chrysler Credit Corp. v Waegele (1972) 29 CA3d 681, 105 CR 914).

B. Moving Party's Procedures

§32.61 1. Notice of Motion or Order to Show Cause

A preliminary injunction can be granted only on notice and hearing. CCP §527(a). An injunction issued without prior notice to the responding party is void, even if issued on the court's own motion. Thompson & Holmes Ltd. v Superior Court (1960) 184 CA2d 306, 7 CR 386. Although the responding party may waive the notice requirement by general appearance (Lacey v Bertone (1949) 33 C2d 649, 203 P2d 755) or by participation at the hearing without objection (Walberg v Underwood (1919) 39 CA 748, 180 P 55), an oral motion for injunctive relief at a hearing at which the defendant is present does not constitute adequate notice, nor does the defendant's presence constitute a waiver (Oksner v Superior Court (1964) 229 CA2d 672, 40 CR 621). A voluntary waiver should be supported by a written stipulation or by a formal minute entry of an oral waiver made in court. See Smith v Superior Court (1923) 64 CA 722, 222 P 857.

If a temporary restraining order (TRO) is in effect, notice of hearing must be given by order to show cause (OSC). CCP §527. See §32.46; form in §32.154. The opposing party has a statutory right to one continuance; if the opposing party obtains a continuance, the TRO remains in effect until the continued hearing date. CCP §527(d)(4).

If a TRO has not issued, notice may be given by either notice of motion or OSC. See CCP §§527(a) (requiring notice generally), 528 (requiring notice or order to show cause after party has answered).

PRACTICE TIP: Because personal service of an order to show cause subjects a party who has not appeared in the action to the court's jurisdiction (Chrysler Credit Corp. v Waegele (1972) 29 CA3d 681, 105 CR 914), the order to show cause is generally used when the responding party has not appeared in the action. Otherwise, a noticed motion may be preferred because it gives the attorney a choice of hearing dates.

For form of notice of motion, see §32.155. See generally 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §§60-62 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.62 2. Complaint, Declarations, Supporting Memorandum, Order, Undertaking

In addition to notice of motion (see §32.155), moving papers for a preliminary injunction, like a temporary restraining order (TRO), include the complaint (see §32.152), declarations (see §32.153), and the supporting memorandum (see §32.72) that will be relied on by the moving party at the hearing. CCP §527(a).

PRACTICE TIP: Declarations and supporting memorandum prepared for a TRO may be used in support of the preliminary injunction, as appropriate.

Unlike an application for a TRO, an application for a preliminary injunction must be accompanied by a supporting memorandum. See CCP §527(a); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(a). The absence of a memorandum may be grounds to deny injunctive relief. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(a).

Counsel should also prepare a written order for preliminary injunction (see §32.156) and a written undertaking which the court must require when issuing a preliminary injunction (see §32.92).

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Filing and Service

§32.63 a. Order to Show Cause

When an order to show cause (OSC) issues with a temporary restraining order (TRO), they are usually served together personally on the responding party as soon as possible after issuance. See discussion in §32.58. The OSC, together with a copy of the complaint, all declarations used, and the moving party's memorandum must in any event be served on the responding party within the time ordered by the court or, if the court does not specify a time, within 5 days after issuance of the TRO or 2 days before the hearing, whichever is earlier. CCP §527(d)(2). See also McDonald v Superior Court (1937) 18 CA2d 652, 64 P2d 738 (CCP §527 satisfied by service more than 2 days before date of continued hearing). Otherwise, unless the responding party waives objection by participating at the hearing (see Remillard Brick Co. v Dandini (1941) 47 CA2d 63, 117 P2d 432), the court on its own motion must dissolve the TRO and summarily deny the preliminary injunction. CCP §527; Green v Superior Court (1924) 65 CA 237, 223 P 582.

An applicant who is unable to serve the opposing party within the time required by §527(d)(2) may file an affidavit to that effect and ask the court to reissue any previously issued TRO. CCP §527(d)(5). The reissued order to show cause must be made returnable as provided in CCP §527(d)(1). A new fee may not be charged for reissuing the order.

If an OSC issues without a TRO, and the responding party has not previously appeared or been personally served, the OSC should be served personally. See chap 17 (service of process). See also Chrysler Credit Corp. v Waegele (1972) 29 CA3d 681, 105 CR 914 (service of OSC equivalent to service of summons for purpose of subjecting respondent to court's jurisdiction). If the responding party has previously been served or appeared, the OSC serves as a notice of motion and may be served on the attorney. See chap 18 (service of papers in pending actions). See also 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §§60-62 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.64 b. Notice of Motion

When, instead of an order to show cause, notice of motion for preliminary injunction is used (see §32.155), filing and service of notice are governed by the same rules that apply to other motions. See CCP §527(f). See chap 12. See also 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§368-369 (5th ed 2008). Code of Civil Procedure §1005 and Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300, which govern motions generally, require that supporting papers be served at least 16 court days before the hearing if papers are served personally, increased by 5 calendar days if served by mail to a California address, and longer periods if mailed outside California. CCP §1005(b).

On ex parte applications for order shortening time, see chap 10. On required notice when motion is served by mail, see chap 12.

Counsel should also make sure that the return of service is complete and properly specifies the papers served. For noticed motions, proof of service must be filed at least five calendar days before the date set for hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.65 4. Preparing for Hearing

Preliminary injunctions will be issued or denied according to the factual showing made by verified complaint or affidavit (or declaration; see §32.62). CCP §527(a).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel for the moving party should prepare for the hearing by reviewing these papers to ensure that they contain competent evidence. If any material evidence is objectionable, the defect should be cured by new declarations or other available testimony. Counsel must also determine whether reply declarations, depositions, or other testimony are necessary to meet the responding party's anticipated evidence.

Oral testimony is not permitted at law and motion hearings except as the court allows on a showing of good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(a). See also Continental Baking Co. v Katz (1968) 68 C2d 512, 67 CR 761. An application to present oral testimony must be submitted in writing at least 3 court days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(b). The application must set forth the nature and extent of the evidence and make a time estimate for the hearing. If the application is filed less than 5 court days before the hearing, the moving party must make sure that the other parties are served at least 2 days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(b).

If oral testimony is allowed and will be used, counsel should arrange for issuance and service of subpoenas. If a deposition will be needed, counsel should move the court for an order shortening time for discovery. See CCP §2025.270. See generally California Civil Discovery Practice §§5.16, 5.63-5.69, 15.9 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006). Counsel should also arrange for a prompt transcript of the reporter's notes in order to ensure a timely filing.

Counsel should prepare the proposed order for preliminary injunction (see §32.156) and any declaration bearing on the amount of the undertaking (see §32.153) to be ordered if the injunction issues.

C. Responding Party's Procedures

§32.66 1. Papers to Prepare

To prepare for a hearing on an order to show cause or motion for preliminary injunction, the attorney for the responding party should consider the possible alternatives and prepare and file as appropriate:

- Motion to disqualify judge (peremptory challenge). CCP §170.6. See §32.67.
- Motion to shorten time for discovery. See §32.57.
- Verified answer to complaint or cross-complaint. See §32.69-32.70.
- Demurrer to complaint or cross-complaint, with memorandum. See §32.68.
- Affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury in opposition to application for preliminary injunction. See §32.71.
- Memorandum in opposition to preliminary injunction. See §32.72.
- Motion to strike or objection to evidence. See §32.74.

Copies of the documents prepared should be served on counsel for the moving party. See §§32.63-32.64.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.67 a. Motion to Disqualify Judge

The defendant may consider a peremptory challenge under CCP §170.6. See generally 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Courts §§133-136 (5th ed 2008). The peremptory challenge is available before a preliminary injunction hearing even if counsel appeared at an earlier ex parte hearing at which an application for a temporary restraining order was granted. International Union of Operating Eng'rs v Superior Court (1989) 207 CA3d 340, 254 CR 782; Landmark Holding Group, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 193 CA3d 525, 238 CR 475.

For the timing of peremptory challenge under the trial delay reduction rules that are inconsistent with CCP §170.6, see International Union of Operating Eng'rs v Superior Court, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.68 b. Demurrer

Failure of the complaint to state a cause of action is grounds for denial of injunctive relief. See Bank of America v Williams (1948) 89 CA2d 21, 200 P2d 151. Counsel for defendant should consider filing a demurrer, accompanied by a memorandum in support of the demurrer (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113), whenever grounds exist. On demurrers generally, see chap 23.

A demurrer will not bar an injunction if (1) the defect in the complaint can be cured by amendment (Handyspot Co. v Buegeleisen (1954) 128 CA2d 191, 274 P2d 938) or (2) the demurrer is overruled and the respondent is given leave to answer (People ex rel Savage v Los Angeles Trust Deed & Mortgage Exch. (1961) 190 CA2d 66, 12 CR 144).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Courts usually prefer hearing a demurrer at the same time the order to show cause is heard. A demurring party should try to arrange this and should seek a continuance of the hearing date if appropriate. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 9.6 (demurrer filed before hearing on order to show cause or motion for preliminary injunction heard by judge who will hear preliminary injunction).

© The Regents of the University of California

c. Answer

§32.69 (1) When to File

The defendant has 30 days in which to answer after service of the complaint. CCP §412.20. On answers generally, see chap 25. The usual practice is not to file an answer before the preliminary injunction hearing. Rather, any objections that appear on the face of the complaint can be raised by demurrer. See §32.68. Any factual showing in opposition to the moving party's application can be made by affidavit or declaration. See §32.71.

If counsel still elects to use the answer as a declaration in opposition to the application for a preliminary injunction (see §§32.69-32.70), the answer must be served on the applicant at least 2 days before the hearing to prevent the applicant from seeking a continuance on account of late service. CCP §527(e). See §§32.75-32.78. The answer and a demurrer, if any, may be filed together. CCP §430.30(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.70 (2) Verification

The answer, when filed, must be verified if (1) the complaint is verified (CCP §446) or (2) the answer is to serve as a declaration at the hearing (CCP §§527, 2015.5).

PRACTICE TIP: If the complaint is not verified, the better practice is to prepare declarations in opposition to the moving party's application. On verified answers generally, see chap 25.

If an application for injunctive relief is based solely on a verified complaint, a verified answer denying the essential allegations will usually result in denial of a preliminary injunction. See City & County of San Francisco v Market St. Ry. (1950) 95 CA2d 648, 213 P2d 780. This is not the case, however, if the complaint establishes an unusually strong case for injunctive relief. See Lutz v Western Iron & Metal Co. (1923) 190 C 554, 213 P 962 (injunction granted in trade name case despite verified denials). See also Garner v Journeyman Barbers, Local 573 (1963) 223 CA2d 101, 35 CR 693 (dictum). For further discussion, see 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§379-380 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.71 d. Affidavits or Declarations

In rare instances, the responding party may resist an application for preliminary injunction by answer and demurrer alone (see §32.68), but it is usually advisable to use supplementary affidavits or declarations. On which to use, see §32.40. For form of declaration, see §32.153.

PRACTICE TIP: To assist the court in fixing the amount of the undertaking if the injunction issues, the attorney for the responding party should prepare declarations bearing on the amount of damages the client will sustain between issuance of the preliminary injunction and final judgment.

Because the show cause hearing is essentially evidentiary, declarations containing probative facts within the declarant's knowledge are always more effective than an answer that simply denies ultimate facts pleaded in the complaint. See Schwartz v Arata (1920) 45 CA 596, 188 P 313.

PRACTICE TIP: If an answer has been filed, supporting declarations should supplement, by a factual showing, general denials and affirmative, equitable, or other defenses raised by the answer. The declarations should focus particularly on the equities. If the plaintiff has presented exhibits or documentary evidence that is slanted or that can be controverted, counsel should present contradictory documentary evidence with a declaration supporting its accuracy.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.72 e. Memorandum

When a demurrer or motion to strike (see §§32.68, 32.74) is filed, it must be accompanied by a memorandum in support of each ground stated in the demurrer or motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113(a).

In addition, a separate memorandum, although apparently not required when responding to an order to show cause (see CCP §527), should be used to oppose the injunction on its merits whether the injunction is sought by show cause order or by motion. The facts of applicable cases should be summarized in the memorandum, and important cases should be copied and attached. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113. For discussion of formal requirements of a memorandum, see §§12.30-12.42.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.73 2. Filing and Service

If a demurrer is to be heard at the preliminary hearing, the attorney should serve and file the demurrer and accompanying memorandum at least 16 court days prior to the hearing or obtain an order shortening the time. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(b). See chap 13.

Opposing declarations (and the answer, if it will be used as a declaration) must be served on the moving party at least 2 days before the show cause hearing (CCP §527(e)) and at least 9 court days before a hearing on a motion for an injunction (CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a)). Opposition to a motion for an injunction must be served by personal delivery, fax, express mail, or other method reasonably calculated to ensure delivery by the close of the next business day after the papers are filed. CCP §1005(c).

On the respondent's procedures for continuance when the moving party waits until two days before the hearing to serve the complaint and supporting declarations, see §32.76.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Despite the rules that permit such late filing, it is better practice to have all papers filed as early as practicable to give the judge enough time to evaluate the responding party's papers.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.74 3. Evidentiary Objections; Motions to Strike

In preparing for the show cause hearing, the respondent's attorney should review the plaintiff's pleading and declarations for inadmissible evidence and prepare evidentiary objections or a motion to strike. Some courts allow counsel to orally object to incompetent evidence instead of entering a motion to strike. The attorney should ascertain local procedure prior to the hearing. On motions to strike generally, see chap 24.

The attorney who wants to take depositions for use at the hearing should immediately move the court for an order shortening time for discovery. See CCP §2025.270. On the deposition notice and order shortening time, see generally California Civil Discovery Practice §§5.52-5.54, 15.9 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006). If, in addition to opposing declarations and depositions, oral testimony will be permitted at the hearing (see chap 12), counsel should obtain subpoenas as necessary.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Hearing on Preliminary Injunction

1. Request for Continuance

§32.75 a. By Applicant

If a temporary restraining order (TRO) is in effect, the moving party must be ready to proceed at the show cause hearing; otherwise, the matter will be dropped from the calendar and the TRO will be dissolved. CCP §527(d)(3). The hearing usually takes precedence over other calendar matters. CCP §527(e). Not even illness of the moving party's attorney is a ground for a continuance. Kelsey v Superior Court (1919) 40 CA 229, 180 P 662. Although the responding party can waive time, for tactical reasons there is usually an unwillingness to do so.

If the moving party has been served with the respondent's affidavits less than two days before the hearing, the court may grant a continuance and, in doing so, may also extend the TRO beyond the 15- or 20-day period prescribed by CCP §527. See CCP §527(e). See, e.g., City of Los Angeles v Superior Court (1925) 196 C 445, 238 P 670. However, a moving party is not entitled to a continuance to rebut affidavits filed two days or more before the hearing. CCP §527(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.76 b. By Respondent

Except in Family Code matters (CCP §527(g); see Cal Rules of Ct 5.118), a party who is under a TRO has a right to a continuance "for a reasonable period" of at least 15 days or any shorter time requested by the opposing party, to respond to the moving party's showing. CCP §527(d)(4). To protect the moving party, the TRO remains in effect during the period of the continuance. CCP §527(d)(4). See International Molders Local 164 v Superior Court (1977) 70 CA3d 395, 138 CR 794 (defendant's request for continuance beyond 15-day restraining order limitation estops defendant from arguing that order has expired). Although the responding party has no right to a continuance when a TRO has not issued (see Wutchumna Water Co. v Superior Court (1932) 215 C 734, 12 P2d 1033), the court may grant one for a reasonable period (see generally Cohen v Herbert (1960) 186 CA2d 488, 8 CR 922).

If the moving party waits until two days before a show cause hearing to serve papers, as permitted by CCP §527(d)(2), the respondent will usually be unable to comply with CCP §527(a), requiring that opposing declarations be served two days before the hearing, i.e., the same day. In this situation, the responding party can appear at the hearing and demand a continuance to prepare and serve opposing papers. If the responding party chooses instead to serve papers at the hearing, the moving party is entitled to a continuance and may serve rebuttal papers on the hearing date as reset, but the respondent is not entitled to further continuances. See City of Los Angeles v Superior Court (1925) 196 C 445, 238 P 670.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.77 c. By Stipulation

§32.77 c. By Stipulation

If a TRO is in effect and the parties stipulate to continuance of the show cause hearing and the TRO, they should notify the court and obtain a court order; otherwise, the order will expire on its own terms.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Even when a TRO is in effect, early notice to the court is recommended to relieve the judge from incurring preparation time prematurely. The attorney should check local rules with respect to continuances.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.78 d. On Court's Own Motion

The hearing on the order to show cause takes precedence over all other matters calendared for the same day except for older injunction matters and matters given still greater preference by law. CCP §527(e).

In rare instances, when these matters result in calendar congestion, the court may, on its own motion, continue the hearing over a party's objection. See River Farms Co. v Superior Court (1933) 131 CA 365, 21 P2d 643.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Procedures at Hearing

§32.79 a. Ruling on Demurrer

If a demurrer has been filed, the first step at the hearing is for the court to hear and rule on the demurrer. If the demurrer is overruled or is sustained with leave to amend, the court will require the moving party to proceed on the motion for preliminary injunction.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.80 b. Initial Receipt of Evidence

Because the moving papers, although already on file, are not evidence until the court agrees to receive them, the plaintiff's attorney should move to have the court receive into evidence the complaint, declarations, and other papers relied on in support of the motion. Opposing counsel should make objections or move to strike, as appropriate. Thereafter, counsel for the moving party may read depositions into evidence and take oral testimony, if permitted.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.81 c. Plaintiff's Oral Argument

The moving party's attorney then usually presents oral argument to the court. Unless the court indicates otherwise, the attorney should make a complete presentation of the facts and the law. The argument should focus on the controverted issues, emphasizing particularly the equitable considerations that warrant injunctive relief.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.82 d. Defendant's Procedures

On completion of the moving party's presentation, the respondent's attorney should move the court to receive opposing declarations and other supporting papers into evidence. In argument, the respondent's attorney should distinguish the opponent's cases and emphasize injury to the client and third persons if the injunction issues, as well as other equitable considerations that weigh against injunctive relief.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.83 e. Argument on Undertaking

Some courts invite argument from counsel on the amount of the undertaking, and the attorney for the responding party should consider initiating argument on this issue. Both sides should be prepared to submit declarations on the extent of probable damage the responding party will suffer if the injunction issues.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.84 f. Restrictions on Oral Testimony

There are restrictions on the use of oral testimony in an injunction hearing. A court does not abuse its discretion in denying a request for a plenary hearing at the show cause hearing if there is no direct conflict in testimony and the matter can be decided on declarations and documentary evidence. Eddy v Temkin (1985) 167 CA3d 1115, 213 CR 597. A party who wishes to introduce oral testimony must obtain a court order on a showing of good cause before the hearing begins. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306. If oral testimony is allowed, a court does not abuse its discretion by prohibiting cross-examination at a hearing for injunctive relief, nor need it permit a complete adversary hearing. City & County of San Francisco v Evankovich (1977) 69 CA3d 41, 137 CR 883.

PRACTICE TIP: Oral testimony at show cause hearings is rarely permitted. A party who wishes to introduce oral testimony should argue that important conflicts in testimony will require the court to evaluate the demeanor of witnesses in making a factual determination.

§32.85 3. Court's Ruling

At the conclusion of the show cause hearing, the court often rules from the bench, but it may take the matter under submission for a reasonable period to study the record. The court usually orders any outstanding temporary restraining order to remain in effect during this time.

When ruling on a demurrer, the court takes the complaint's allegations to be true. Wirin v Horrall (1948) 85 CA2d 497, 193 P2d 470. When ruling on the evidence presented at the hearing, the court, as the trier of fact, determines credibility and resolves conflicting evidence. Voeltz v Bakery & Confectionery Workers Int'l Union (1953) 40 C2d 382, 254 P2d 553, disapproved on other grounds in Smyrniotis v Local Joint Executive Bd. of Hotel & Restaurant Employees & Bartenders Int'l Union of Long Beach & Orange County (1966) 64 C2d 30, 48 CR 725. The court may draw inferences from written evidence and the witnesses' testimony. Ensworth v Mullvain (1990) 224 CA3d 1105, 274 CR 447 (inference of emotional distress absent direct evidence on subject). The court has considerable discretion, based on the equitable factors discussed in §§32.29-32.35, to determine whether the preliminary injunction should issue.

The court has the discretion to limit or modify the proposed preliminary injunction and to grant the applicant's request for relief either partially or in its entirety. See, e.g., Metro Traffic Control, Inc. v Shadow Traffic Network (1994) 22 CA4th 853, 27 CR2d 573. At least one reviewing court, however, has clearly expressed its opinion that the better practice is to require a statement of opinion, particularly when oral testimony is received. See People v Landlords Prof. Servs. (1986) 178 CA3d 68, 223 CR 483.

The court may impose conditions to protect the interests of those who may be affected by the injunction. County of Inyo v City of Los Angeles (1976) 61 CA3d 91, 132 CR 167. The conditions must relate directly to the interest to be protected. Hummell v Republic Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1982) 133 CA3d 49, 183 CR 708 (court improperly set interest rate of bond higher than that of property at issue).

If the court decides that a preliminary injunction should issue, it must require, except when excused by CCP §529, that the moving party file a written undertaking. CCP §529; see §32.92.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: When fixing the amount of bond, the court considers the extent of damage the enjoined party will probably sustain because of the injunction. It may consider attorney fees incurred in resisting it. The amount is made part of the court's minute order and is incorporated in the formal order. See form of order in §32.156.

4. Court's Order of Injunction

§32.86 a. Prepared by Moving Party's Attorney

A written order of injunction, together with a written undertaking, must be presented to the judge within one court day after an application for preliminary injunction has been granted, or within the time ordered. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(f). Once issued, the order remains in effect until final judgment on the merits. See §32.109. For discussion of undertakings, see §§32.92-32.108.

During this time, any temporary restraining order (TRO) previously granted remains in effect, but if the written order and undertaking are not presented as required, the TRO may be vacated without notice. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(f). Given this rule of court, the plaintiff's attorney should always prepare a written order when a preliminary injunction issues, despite case law permitting an injunction to issue by minute order if the order on its face, or by reference, details the prohibited acts, and if it is clear that the order was intended to be final. See, e.g., Wutchumna Water Co. v Superior Court (1932) 215 C 734, 12 P2d 1033. See also People v Gordon (1951) 105 CA2d 711, 234 P2d 287.

PRACTICE TIP: A statement of decision is not required in addition to the injunctive order itself. The moving party should consider requesting such a statement, however, if it would aid in subsequent proceedings, as in an anticipated appeal.

The specific acts enjoined should be set out in language as close as possible to that used by the court in the minute order or at the hearing. General language should be avoided, and terms should be clearly defined. The order should contain sufficient detail to apprise the responding party of the acts enjoined, or it will not be enforceable through contempt proceedings. See Watsonville Canning & Frozen Food Co. v Superior Court (1986) 178 CA3d 1242, 224 CR 303. See also In re Berry (1968) 68 C2d 137, 65 CR 273 (description of activities forbidden overly broad, and that of persons enjoined indefinite). Ambiguity in an injunction order is generally construed against the party seeking the injunction.

Care should be taken not to draft the injunction in any broader manner than that required to prevent the injury at issue. People v Mason (1981) 124 CA3d 348, 177 CR 284. The injunction should be limited to preserve the defendant's interests that are not an element of the requisite injunctive relief. See Franchise Tax Bd. v Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1983) 139 CA3d 843, 189 CR 99 (injunction that carefully limited Board from releasing any information obtained under injunction did not threaten release of trade secrets).

Some leeway is permitted, however, if the applicant is entitled to broad categories of documents that the court cannot define with specificity. McCain v Phoenix Resources, Inc. (1986) 185 CA3d 575, 230 CR 25 (affirming order allowing plaintiffs access to "true and full information of all things affecting the partnership").

NOTE: Local courts may have specific rules on the form and content of injunction orders, which counsel should review. But see Cal Rules of Ct 3.20(a) (some local rules preempted by Judicial Council).

§32.87 b. Filing and Service

When the court decides that a preliminary injunction will issue, any outstanding temporary restraining order (TRO) remains in effect to allow plaintiff's counsel a reasonable time in which to prepare the injunction order and have the judge sign it. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(f).

PRACTICE TIP: Although Rule 3.1150(f) does not appear to require service of the proposed order on the adverse party, service of this document is the better practice because (1) it enables the adverse party to alert the court to possible inconsistencies with the court's actual order, and (2) it may estop the restrained party from later attacking the terms of the order.

After the judge signs it, the order should be filed with the court clerk. Notice of the order should be given to each party (and any other related person bound) by personally serving each with a copy in the same manner as service of summons. See generally chap 17 (service of process). See Sorrell v Superior Court (1946) 73 CA2d 194, 166 P2d 80. See also Chrysler Credit Corp. v Waegele (1972) 29 CA3d 681, 105 CR 914 (personal service on corporate officer gave notice to corporate defendant).

NOTE: Notice may be given to counsel without personal service on the enjoined party. See Freeman v Superior Court (1955) 44 C2d 533, 282 P2d 857 (rebuttable presumption that notice to attorney is actual notice to client); Mossman v Superior Court (1972) 22 CA3d 706, 99 CR 638. It is nonetheless better practice to arrange for personal service of the injunction order on the enjoined party.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.88 c. Persons Bound

A temporary restraining order or an injunction is enforceable against parties, officers, employees, agents, and other classes of persons aiding and abetting or acting in concert with parties and their officers, employees, and agents, if they had actual notice or knowledge of it and if the order is directed against them specifically or as a class. See Ross v Superior Court (1977) 19 C3d 899, 141 CR 133 (county board of supervisors who were not party to civil action were bound to injunction against Secretary of Health and Welfare Agency as its agent). Compare Signal Oil & Gas Co. v Ashland Oil & Ref. Co. (1958) 49 C2d 764, 322 P2d 149 (injunction against corporation and anyone acting in its behalf binds directors), with In re Berry (1968) 68 C2d 137, 65 CR 273 (injunction purporting to bind "all persons … in concert among themselves" held unconstitutionally vague). Note, however, that an injunction restricting demonstration activities at a Planned Parenthood clinic did not apply to individuals who were not named in that injunction and who were not acting in concert with named parties. An "actual notice provision" purporting to enjoin all demonstrators in addition to the enjoined parties was overbroad on its face. Planned Parenthood Golden Gate v Garibaldi (2003) 107 CA4th 345, 132 CR2d 46.

§32.89 E. Responding Party's Alternatives When Preliminary Injunction Issues

Once an order for preliminary injunction issues, the respondent may consider the following alternatives with respect to the order:

- Compliance (if desired, couple with motion for early trial);
- Motion to dissolve or modify (see §§32.123-32.125);
- Appeal (see §§32.127-32.129), coupled with compliance or with motion to stay pending appeal (see §32.126) (unless the injunction is mandatory and thus stayed automatically);
- Deliberate violation when the injunction is void on its face (e.g., because too broad or vague). If a contempt proceeding ensues, the defendant may defend by challenging the validity of the injunction in the contempt proceeding. See People v Gonzalez (1996) 12 C4th 804, 822, 50 CR2d 74 (void order cannot be basis of valid contempt judgment). See §32.118. See generally 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§399-413 (5th ed 2008).

§32.90 F. Diagnostic Questions

The attorney for the responding party should obtain a copy of the complaint and other supporting documents as soon as possible to review them before the hearing on the application for preliminary injunction. When reviewing the papers, the attorney should consider these questions:

1. Does the complaint state a cause of action? Unless the defect can be cured by amendment, a restraining order will seldom issue on a complaint susceptible of a general demurrer.
2. Are the supporting declarations sufficient or do they rely on hearsay, conclusions, or information susceptible of a general demurrer?
3. Do the complaint and supporting declarations show the need for immediate action, e.g., that irreparable injury will result to the plaintiff if action is not taken before the matter can be heard at a preliminary injunction hearing? Has there been any delay in the plaintiff's request?
4. Is the application based only on a verified complaint? If so, a verified answer denying all material allegations will usually defeat the application.

For discussion of the moving party's procedures, see §§32.61-32.65.

VI. UNDERTAKING

§32.92 A. Purpose and Requirements

An undertaking provides security for damages suffered if the court subsequently decides that the injunction was improperly granted. Bonds and undertakings are governed by the Bond and Undertaking Law (CCP §§995.010-996.560).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.93 1. Exceptions

§32.93 1. Exceptions

When a preliminary injunction issues, the court must require that the moving party give a written undertaking with sufficient sureties, unless:

- The applicant is either spouse in a proceeding for legal separation or dissolution of marriage (CCP §529(b)(1));
- The applicant is a plaintiff in an injunctive proceeding under the Fam C §§6200-6409 (prevention of domestic violence) (CCP §529(b)(2));
- The applicant is a public entity or officer described in CCP §995.220 (public entities exempt from bond requirements) (CCP §529(b)(3));
- The enjoined party waives the undertaking requirement (CCP §995.230 (beneficiary's written waiver of bond); see City of Los Angeles v Superior Court (1940) 15 C2d 16, 98 P2d 207); or
- The court, in its discretion, waives the requirement for an indigent person (CCP §995.240).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.94 2. Jurisdictional Nature

The undertaking requirement, when applicable, is jurisdictional. If the court does not require a mandatory undertaking, or if the undertaking is not given, the injunction is inoperative. Federal Auto. Servs. v Lane Buick Co. (1962) 204 CA2d 689, 22 CR 603. If the undertaking is insufficient or not timely filed, the order granting the injunction must be dissolved. CCP §529(a). See also Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(f) (TRO may be vacated without notice).

A protective order to preserve evidence is tantamount to a prohibitory injunction and is therefore void without an undertaking. Northpoint Homeowners Ass'n v Superior Court (1979) 95 CA3d 241, 157 CR 42.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.95 3. Summary of Bond and Undertaking Law

The Bond and Undertaking Law (CCP §§995.010-996.560) applies to bonds and undertakings given as security under any statute, except to the extent the statute "prescribes a different rule or is inconsistent." CCP §995.020(a). Thus, the requirement in CCP §529(a) that any objection to the sufficiency of a surety be made within five days after issuance of the injunction controls over CCP §995.930(b), which allows 10 days in which to file objections. A statutory requirement for a bond may be satisfied by an undertaking, and vice versa. See CCP §995.210.

The undertaking may be given by an individual, who is referred to as a personal surety. CCP §995.510(a); River Trails Ranch Co. v Superior Court (1980) 111 CA3d 562, 168 CR 747 (single personal surety may be sufficient for preliminary injunction). Personal sureties are required to execute a declaration under penalty of perjury in establishing their qualifications to accompany the undertaking. CCP §995.520. If the amount of the bond exceeds $10,000, special provisions apply if more than two sureties are used. CCP §995.510(b). For form, see §32.158.

The undertaking may also be given by a corporate surety, referred to in the statute as an "admitted surety insurer." CCP §§995.610-995.660. Admitted surety insurers will furnish the plaintiff with a form that complies with the statutes. See CCP §995.630.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.96 4. Amount of Undertaking

The court bases the amount of the undertaking on the probable damage that the enjoined party will sustain because of the injunction. CCP §529(a). When the court, in its discretion, requires an undertaking on a TRO, damages to third persons may also be considered in fixing the amount. Allen v Pitchess (1973) 36 CA3d 321, 111 CR 658.

If, after the undertaking is given, the enjoined party shows that damages sustained may exceed the undertaking, the court can require an additional undertaking as a condition of continued injunctive relief. CCP §996.010. See also Dickey v Rosso (1972) 23 CA3d 493, 498, 100 CR 358. The court may also order that an excessive bond be reduced. CCP §996.030.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.97 5. When Bond Becomes Effective

A bond becomes effective without court approval. CCP §995.410(a). An undertaking given on a TRO expires with the order, and a new one must be given on a preliminary injunction. Casitas Inv. Co. v Charles L. Harney, Inc. (1962) 203 CA2d 811, 21 CR 821; Maier v Luce (1923) 61 CA 552, 215 P 399.

If an undertaking posted to secure a particular preliminary injunction is not, by its terms, limited to the previously issued injunction, it may be interpreted to apply to preliminary injunctions pending, but not as yet issued, when the undertaking is posted. Greenly v Cooper (1978) 77 CA3d 382, 143 CR 514.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.98 B. Filing and Service

Unless otherwise ordered, the preliminary injunction and the undertaking must both be presented to the judge within 1 court day after the decision. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1150(f). Thereafter, a copy of the undertaking should be personally served together with the injunction on each party or related person bound. Service must be made in the same manner as service of process in civil actions generally. CCP §995.030. See chaps 17-18. The original undertaking and proof of service is then filed with the court clerk.

On filing, the clerk enters the date, names of sureties, and amount of undertaking in the registry of actions. The entries are prima facie evidence of due execution if the original undertaking is ever lost. CCP §995.350. A certified copy of the record of a bond recorded under statute, with appropriate attachments, may be admitted as evidence in an action in lieu of the original. CCP §995.260.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Challenging Sufficiency of Sureties

§32.99 1. Notice of Motion

Within 5 days after service of the injunction, the enjoined party may object to the sufficiency of sureties in the undertaking. CCP §§529(a), 995.930(b). The objection must be in writing by noticed motion. CCP §995.930. See also CCP §995.650 (objection to sufficiency of admitted surety insurer).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.100 2. Grounds

§32.100 2. Grounds

Objections may be made on any of the following grounds set forth in CCP §995.920:

- The sureties are insufficient.
- The amount of the bond is insufficient.
- The bond, from any other cause, is insufficient.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.101 3. Waiver

Failure to object within the statutory time period constitutes a waiver of all objections, except on a showing of changed circumstances. CCP §995.930(c). There is no waiver, however, when the sufficiency of the undertaking is challenged ex parte rather than by noticed motion. ABBA Rubber Co. v Seaquist (1991) 235 CA3d 1, 11, 286 CR 518.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.102 4. Hearing

Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the hearing on the objection must take place between 2 and 5 days after service of the notice of motion. CCP §995.950(a). The hearing on the objection may be a full evidentiary hearing, and individual sureties may be called to testify. If the value of property is at issue, the court may order an independent appraisal. CCP §995.950(c). Admitted surety insurers can demonstrate the sufficiency of the undertaking by complying with CCP §995.630, which the court must accept.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.103 5. Effect of Court's Ruling

If the court determines that the bond is insufficient, it must order that a sufficient bond with sufficient sureties be given within the time required by the court; all rights obtained by giving the bond cease immediately. CCP §995.960(b)(1). If the court determines that the bond is sufficient, no further objection may be made except on a showing of changed circumstances. CCP §995.960(c).

D. Recovery on Undertaking

§32.104 1. When Right of Recovery Arises

An undertaking is ordered on the condition that the party in whose favor the restraint is granted will pay to the responding party damages sustained, if the court ultimately decides that the moving party was not entitled to the injunction. CCP §§529(a), 996.430-996.440. A defendant who has been damaged by voluntary compliance with a temporary restraining order (TRO) with which he or she was never served is entitled to prove damages in a proceeding to enforce the liability of the surety after the complaint for injunction has been dismissed without prejudice on the plaintiff's motion. Special Editions v Kellison (1982) 129 CA3d 803, 181 CR 351. The procedures under CCP §996.440 are not available if the court exercised its discretion not to require an undertaking on issuance of a TRO. Wallace v Miller (1983) 140 CA3d 636, 189 CR 637. In this situation, the defendant must pursue common law remedies by way of an action for abuse of process or malicious prosecution.

The right of recovery on the undertaking does not arise until final judgment is entered. See CCP §996.440(b). A suit brought any earlier is premature even if a TRO or preliminary injunction has been dissolved. Clark v Clayton (1882) 61 C 634; Satinover v Dean (1988) 202 CA3d 1298, 249 CR 277. Nor can the court decide that the restraint was proper, and thus exonerate the bond, until final judgment. Special Editions v Kellison, supra; Nuclear Elec. Labs. v William C. Cornell Co. (1965) 239 CA2d 8, 48 CR 416. If recovery is sought by motion (see §§32.104-32.108), the motion may not be made until the time to appeal has expired or, if an appeal is taken, until the appeal is finally determined. CCP §996.440(b).

In addition to final judgment, the action is "finally decided" when it is dismissed involuntarily for want of prosecution (Dowling v Polack (1861) 18 C 625) or voluntarily by the moving party without prejudice (Special Editions v Kellison, supra). Dismissal by stipulation of the parties does not, however, constitute a final decision and may even constitute a waiver of the responding party's right to recover on the undertaking. See Wilshire Mortgage Corp. v O. A. Graybeal Co. (1940) 41 CA2d 1, 105 P2d 996.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Procedures

§32.105 a. Use of Independent Action or Summary Procedure

There are two methods for recovering against the surety or sureties posting a bond under CCP §§995.310-995.380:

- An independent civil action may be filed, to which both the surety and the principal must be joined. CCP §996.430.
- A motion to enforce liability may be filed. CCP §996.440. This procedure is less costly and less time consuming. See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§38-39 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.106 b. Motion After Judgment

Whenever a bond, undertaking, or deposit under CCP §§995.310-995.380 is given as security for issuance of a temporary restraining order (TRO) or preliminary injunction, each surety or individual depositor submits to the court's jurisdiction in all matters affecting liability or security. CCP §996.420. After trial and final decision that the injunction was not proper, liability of the party-depositor or surety may be enforced on motion in the trial court without filing an independent action. CCP §996.440.

The procedures in §996.440 must be strictly followed:

- The motion to enforce liability on a bond must not be made more than 1 year (1) after entry of final judgment and the time to appeal has expired or (2), if an appeal is taken, after the appeal is finally determined, whichever date is later. CCP §996.440(b). Notice of motion must be served on the surety or the depositor at least 30 days before the time set for hearing. It must state the amount of the claim, must be supported by affidavits (or declarations), and must set forth facts on which the claim is based. Service must be in accordance with CCP §§1010-1020. CCP §996.440(c).
- Summary judgment may be had against anyone served with the notice, unless they file and serve opposing affidavits (or declarations) that present triable issues of fact. CCP §996.440(d).
- Trial is necessary if the court determines that factual issues are presented by the opposing declarations. The court must specify the issues and set the matter for trial at the earliest convenient date, allowing sufficient time for discovery proceedings. The statute does not provide for a jury trial. CCP §996.440(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.107 c. Pleading and Proof

Recovery from a surety is based on the terms of the undertaking. The proof is the same whether a right of recovery for wrongful injunction is asserted by motion or by independent action. See CCP §§996.430 (independent action), 996.440 (motion). The party seeking recovery need show only that the restraint was issued, that he or she suffered resulting damage, and that the court finally decided that the moving party was not entitled to the injunction. No element of wrongful motive need be shown. See Russell v United Pac. Ins. Co. (1963) 214 CA2d 78, 29 CR 346.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.108 d. Measure of Damages

The party seeking damages sustained by wrongful issuance of an injunction may recover damages necessarily and proximately flowing from the restraint, including damages sustained after the restraint has been terminated. Russell v United Pac. Ins. Co. (1963) 214 CA2d 78, 29 CR 346; Moore v Maryland Cas. Co. (1929) 100 CA 658, 280 P 1008. A judgment of liability on a bond operates against both surety and principal, and obligates each of them jointly and severally (CCP §996.460), although the surety's liability is limited to the amount of the bond and the principal's is not (CCP §996.470).

Attorney fees are includable as an item of damages if they were incurred in attempting to dissolve a temporary restraining order (TRO) or preliminary injunction (see Allen v Pitchess (1973) 36 CA3d 321, 111 CR 658; Mason v United States Fid. & Guar. Co. (1943) 60 CA2d 587, 141 P2d 475), but not if they were incurred after the preliminary injunction is denied and the TRO dissolved (Allen v Pitchess, supra).

Recoverable damages sustained by issuance of an injunction may not exceed the amount of the undertaking required by CCP §529 unless the facts support an action in tort against the moving party for abuse of process or malicious prosecution. Dickey v Rosso (1972) 23 CA3d 493, 100 CR 358.

A court may in its discretion add an award of interest at the legal rate to the judgment in an action on an undertaking. CC §3287(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.109 VII. PERMANENT INJUNCTION AFTER TRIAL ON MERITS

An injunction case is entitled to trial-setting priority and takes precedence over other cases except for older injunction cases and cases given even greater priority by law. See CCP §527(e). The case must be tried by a court sitting "in equity" without a jury, although a jury may be demanded on the issue of damages. Pacific W. Oil Co. v Bern Oil Co. (1939) 13 C2d 60, 87 P2d 1045. See also CCP §592.

A permanent (or final) injunction issues after a trial on the merits. See Jameson v Five Feet Restaurant, Inc. (2003) 107 CA4th 138, 131 CR2d 771. Because it is not a provisional remedy, it need not have the same scope and effect as a preliminary injunction previously issued by the court. See San Diego Water Co. v Pacific Coast S.S. Co. (1894) 101 C 216, 35 P 651. A permanent injunction supersedes any preliminary injunction that may have been in effect and does not require an undertaking. Shahen v Superior Court (1941) 46 CA2d 187, 115 P2d 516. A permanent injunction may be modified or vacated after judgment on a motion disclosing changed circumstances or a change in the law that render continued enforcement unjust. CC §3424.

A permanent injunction may be ordered in a hearing on a motion for preliminary injunction, without a "trial," when the court is called on to resolve a question of law without resort to extrinsic evidence or when there is a "stipulation or other satisfactory showing which warrants submitting the cause on the merits." Camp v Board of Supervisors (1981) 123 CA3d 334, 358, 176 CR 620.

The court issues a statement of decision explaining the factual and legal basis for the court's decision if a party requests one in a timely fashion. CCP §632. On trial without jury generally, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chap 24 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

VIII. DEFENSES TO INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

§32.110 A. Jurisdictional Limitations

A defense to an application for an injunction is that the court, because of constitutional or statutory limitations, lacks jurisdiction to issue it. See People v Superior Court (Witzerman) (1967) 248 CA2d 276, 56 CR 393.

An injunction issued in violation of constitutional or statutory limitations may be attacked by appeal or writ. See §32.52. See generally 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Jurisdiction §320 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.111 1. Constitutional Limitations

The "supremacy clause" of the federal constitution (US Const art VI, §2) in effect bars state court injunctive relief in matters exclusively within federal jurisdiction. See, e.g., San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v Garmon (1959) 359 US 236, 3 L Ed 2d 775, 79 S Ct 773 (state courts cannot enjoin picketing of interstate businesses, except to maintain order under state police power). State courts lack authority to enjoin the commencement or prosecution of in personam actions in federal court. General Atomic Co. v Felter (1977) 434 US 12, 54 L Ed 2d 199, 98 S Ct 76; Biosense Webster, Inc. v Superior Court (2006) 135 CA4th 827, 37 CR3d 759. Further, courts may not issue an injunctive order to carry out its declaration that a foreign sovereign's official act is invalid. See Philippine Nat'l Bank v U.S. Dist. Court (9th Cir 2005) 397 F3d 768 (district court lacked authority to issue injunctive order restraining Philippine bank from transferring funds under "act of state doctrine" and constitutional separation of powers).

Jurisdiction of California courts to issue injunctions may be limited directly or indirectly by state and federal constitutions. For example, Cal Const art XIII, §32 specifically prohibits injunctive relief to prevent collection of certain state taxes, while the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution substantially limit state court authority to enjoin picketing in labor disputes. See Thornhill v Alabama (1940) 310 US 88, 84 L Ed 1093, 60 S Ct 736 (criminal case); Schwartz-Torrance Inv. Corp. v Bakery & Confectionery Workers' Union (1964) 61 C2d 766, 40 CR 233 (injunction denied). Because the Thirteenth Amendment prohibits involuntary servitude, a court may not enjoin an employer from entering into a personal service contract with a former employee who has breached a contract with a previous employer. Beverly Glen Music, Inc. v Warner Communications, Inc. (1986) 178 CA3d 1142, 224 CR 260. Both the state and federal constitutions prohibit restraint of speech and other First Amendment rights except in extraordinary circumstances. Cases have held the following:

- Remedial injunction against continued use of derogatory racial epithets in workplace was constitutional once judicial determination was made that epithets constituted employment discrimination. Aguilar v Avis Rent A Car Sys. (1999) 21 C4th 121, 87 CR2d 132.
- Unconstitutional to enjoin sidewalk sales of merchandise. Welton v City of Los Angeles (1976) 18 C3d 497, 134 CR 668.
- Error to enjoin political candidate's newsletter. Wilson v Superior Court (1975) 13 C3d 652, 119 CR 468.
- Injunction against communicating facts of labor disputes was too broad. United Farm Workers v Superior Court (1971) 4 C3d 556, 94 CR 263.
- No injunction against protected right to petition government. Smith v Silvey (1983) 149 CA3d 400, 197 CR 15. But see Golden Gateway Ctr. v Golden Gateway Tenants Ass'n (2001) 26 C4th 1013, 111 CR2d 336 (apartment complex is not functionally equivalent to traditional public forum; thus management's decision to prohibit leafleting was not state action that impinged on tenant association's free speech rights).
- Injunction against protesters demonstrating in driveway and parking lot of private medical center upheld. Planned Parenthood v Wilson (1991) 234 CA3d 1662, 286 CR 427; Allred v Shawley (1991) 232 CA3d 1489, 284 CR 140 (same; parking lot).
- Injunction against picketing in support of illegal strike upheld. City & County of San Francisco v Evankovich (1977) 69 CA3d 41, 137 CR 883.

§32.112 2. Statutory Limitations

The court's authority to issue injunctive relief may be limited or abolished by legislative action. See Modern Barber Colleges, Inc. v California Employment Stabilization Comm'n (1948) 31 C2d 720, 192 P2d 916. Thus, neither provisional (CCP §526) nor final (CC §3423) injunctions can issue to do the following:

- Stay judicial proceedings, unless necessary to prevent a multiplicity of actions (CCP §526(b)(1); CC §3423(a));
- Stay proceedings in federal courts (CCP §526(b)(2); CC §3423(b));
- Prevent lawful execution of a valid statute (CCP §526(b)(4); CC §3423(d));
- Prevent breach of a contract not specifically enforceable other than certain written personal services contracts (CCP §526(b)(5); CC §3423(e));
- Prevent lawful exercise of public or private office by an incumbent (CCP §526(b)(6); CC §3423(f));
- Prevent legislative acts by a municipal corporation (CCP §526(b)(7); CC §3423(g));
- Restrain the sale, the offering for sale, or the issuance of any municipal bonds for public improvements or public utilities (CCP §526a; Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Ass'n v City of La Habra (2001) 25 C4th 809, 814 n1, 107 CR2d 369 (§526a inapplicable when plaintiffs are not seeking to enjoin illegal expenditure of taxpayer funds; rather, they are seeking to stop the collection of taxes));
- Enjoin the reasonable and necessary operation in any industrial zones or airports, except for actions brought by the state to abate public nuisance (CCP §731a);
- Enjoin secondary recovery operations for oil and gas, subject to undertaking requirement (CCP §731c);
- Enforce a penalty, forfeiture, or penal law, except in a nuisance case or as otherwise provided by law (CC §3369);
- Enjoin the collection of certain taxes, even if the taxing statute is unconstitutional, unless there is no adequate legal remedy (Rev & T C §§6931, 8146, 19381, 32411; see Hunter-Reay v Franchise Tax Bd. (1983) 140 CA3d 875, 189 CR 810; Helms Bakeries v State Bd. of Equalization (1942) 53 CA2d 417, 128 P2d 167); or
- Enjoin certain activities in conjunction with labor disputes. Moscone Act (CCP §527.3), such as publishing and communicating information about a labor dispute, peaceful picketing and patrolling, and peaceful assembly. See Sears, Roebuck & Co. v San Diego County Dist. Council of Carpenters (1979) 25 C3d 317, 158 CR 370 (Act prohibits injunction against conduct occurring on private property open to public, such as shopping centers). But see M Restaurants, Inc. v San Francisco Local Joint Exec. Bd. (1981) 124 CA3d 666, 177 CR 690 (Act does not prohibit injunctions reasonably limiting number of persons who may engage in picketing and patrolling or injunctions prohibiting violence or unlawful obstruction of access to or egress from private premises); City & County of San Francisco v Evankovich (1977) 69 CA3d 41, 137 CR 883 (Act does not apply to public employees).

NOTE: The court's authority to grant injunctive relief is also limited by statutes that establish mandatory procedural prerequisites. Some of these requirements have been held to be "jurisdictional" in scope. For examples, see §§32.37, 32.39 (verification), 32.52 (notice), and 32.92 (undertaking).

§32.112A 3. Judicial Restraint Limitation

Under principles of judicial restraint and comity, courts may not restrain proceedings in a sister state absent "exceptional circumstances." Advanced Bionics Corp. v Medtronic, Inc. (2002) 29 C4th 697, 128 CR2d 172 (TRO that enjoined party to California action from taking any action in Minnesota proceedings was improper based on principles of comity and judicial restraint); Biosense Webster, Inc. v Superior Court (2006) 135 CA4th 827, 37 CR3d 759 (California's public policy against noncompetition agreements was not exceptional circumstance justifying restraint of any actions in states other than California).

B. Equitable Defenses

§32.113 1. Laches

The laches doctrine is a bar to injunctive relief. To sustain a laches defense, the evidence must show unreasonable delay by the petitioner and either the petitioner's acquiescence in the decision or prejudice to adverse parties resulting from the delay. Miller v Eisenhower Med. Ctr. (1980) 27 C3d 614, 624, 166 CR 826; Motion Picture Studio Teachers & Welfare Workers Local No. 884 v Millan (1996) 51 CA4th 1190, 1197, 59 CR2d 608. For discussion of laches generally, see 13 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Equity §§16-19 (10th ed 2005).

As a rule, laches must be pleaded as an affirmative defense. In extraordinary cases, however, courts have denied relief on their own motion when laches is disclosed by the complaint or appears from the evidence even if the defense has not been pleaded. San Bernardino Valley Audubon Soc'y v City of Moreno Valley (1996) 44 CA4th 593, 608, 51 CR2d 897. No particular rule governs the time necessary to invoke laches. Although the statute of limitations for a similar action provides a guide (see Holmberg v Armbrecht (1946) 327 US 392, 90 L Ed 743, 66 S Ct 582), there can be laches within the limit of the statute of limitations. Considerable discretion, based on the circumstances of each case, rests with the trial court. See Volpicelli v Jared Sydney Torrance Mem. Hosp. (1980) 109 CA3d 242, 167 CR 610 (action not barred by laches even though plaintiff had waived administrative remedies and waited two years before initiating suit); Lusk v Krejci (1960) 187 CA2d 553, 9 CR 703 (4-year delay in bringing suit for mandatory injunction not unreasonable).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.114 2. Unclean Hands

A plaintiff's "unclean hands" bar injunctive relief when the plaintiff's misconduct arose from the transaction pleaded in the complaint. California Satellite Sys. v Nichols (1985) 170 CA3d 56, 216 CR 180. The unclean hands doctrine demands that a plaintiff act fairly in the matter for which he or she seeks a remedy. The plaintiff must come into court with clean hands, and keep them clean, or he or she will be denied relief, regardless of the merits of the claim. Kendall-Jackson Winery Ltd. v Superior Court (1999) 76 CA4th 970, 978, 90 CR2d 743. Whether the doctrine applies is a question of fact. CrossTalk Prods., Inc. v Jacobson (1998) 65 CA4th 631, 639, 76 CR2d 615.

Not every wrongful act constitutes unclean hands, and the misconduct does not need to be a crime or an actionable tort. Any conduct that violates conscience, or good faith, or other equitable standards of conduct is sufficient cause to invoke the doctrine. De Rosa v Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1989) 213 CA3d 1390, 1395, 262 CR 370.

The unclean hands doctrine will not bar injunctive relief when the plaintiff's hands, although "unclean," are less so than those of the defendant. See Belling v Croter (1943) 57 CA2d 296, 134 P2d 532. See also Hernandez v Stabach (1983) 145 CA3d 309, 193 CR 350 (landlord who rented knowing that overcrowding would occur cannot raise overcrowding as defense to injunctive order restraining landlord from evicting tenants). The same is true when the public interest requires that relief be granted. See §32.33. See generally 13 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Equity §§9-15 (10th ed 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.115 3. Repetition Unlikely

An injunction will not issue when, because of a change in circumstances, a repetition of the act complained of appears unlikely. Engle v City of Oroville (1965) 238 CA2d 266, 47 CR 630.

Thus, unless the evidence shows that the wrongful conduct will probably recur (Fretz v Burke (1967) 247 CA2d 741, 55 CR 879), injunctive relief will be denied if the defendant has voluntarily discontinued the activity. Lee v Gates (1983) 141 CA3d 989, 190 CR 682; Mallon v City of Long Beach (1958) 164 CA2d 178, 330 P2d 423.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.116 4. Contrary to Public Interest or Statute

Injunctive relief may be denied if the act complained of is found to be in the public interest. See Loma Portal Civic Club v American Airlines, Inc. (1964) 61 C2d 582, 39 CR 708. As a rule, unless a statute is unconstitutional, injunctive relief will not issue to prevent the execution of a public statute or enforcement of a public statute by law enforcement officers. See ALRB v Superior Court (1976) 16 C3d 392, 128 CR 183; Theresa Enters. v Davis (1978) 81 CA3d 940, 146 CR 802, disapproved on other grounds in Morris v Municipal Court (1982) 32 C3d 553, 565 n13, 186 CR 494.

An injunction will be denied if it is contrary to statute. See, e.g., Matull & Assocs. v Cloutier (1987) 194 CA3d 1049, 240 CR 211 (court of appeal reversed injunctive order to extent it conflicted with Bus & P C §16600 concerning covenants not to compete).

§32.117 5. Balance of Conveniences in Favor of Responding Party

The doctrine of balancing the conveniences, sometimes called "relative hardship" or "balancing the equities," is an important factor when determining whether to issue an injunction. Despite a proper showing in other respects of a right to injunctive aid, if a plaintiff is merely seeking to protect a technical and unsubstantial right, and the issuance of the injunction will bring no actual advantage, it may be properly refused when to do otherwise would result in unusual hardship to the defendant or the public. Wright v Best (1942) 19 C2d 368, 386, 121 P2d 702.

A necessary element of this doctrine is that, if the injunction issues, the defendant will suffer irreparable injury, not merely deprivation of a substantial benefit. Fairrington v Dyke Water Co. (1958) 50 C2d 198, 323 P2d 1001 (judgment denying mandatory injunction reversed). In encroachment cases, the court usually balances the conveniences or weighs the relative hardships to the parties only if the defendant's conduct was innocent. See Keith v Superior Court (1972) 26 CA3d 521, 103 CR 314 (error to deny preliminary injunction to prevent defendant's willful destruction of easement). If both parties' conduct was negligent, the court may balance the conveniences, taking the relative negligence and hardship into account. See Christensen v Tucker (1952) 114 CA2d 554, 562, 250 P2d 660. See also Linthicum v Butterfield (2009) 175 CA4th 259, 266, 95 CR3d 538 (court may balance conveniences if defendant is merely negligent and not wrongdoer); Hirshfield v Schwartz (2001) 91 CA4th 749, 754, 759, 110 CR2d 861.

With respect to provisional injunctions, the Restatement (Second) of Torts (1979) takes the position that, because the court is being asked to restrain the defendant from acting before his or her conduct has been proved wrongful, the plaintiff must show that the loss, if no provisional injunction is issued, will be substantially greater than the defendant's loss if one issues. Restatement (Second) of Torts §936, Comment e at 569 (1979).

Once a prima facie showing has been made that the defendant's conduct is wrongful, the defendant has the burden of showing that the hardship, if an injunction issues, would be "greatly disproportionate" to the hardship caused to the plaintiff by the continued wrong. Christensen v Tucker, supra; Hirshfield v Schwartz, supra; Volpicelli v Jared Sydney Torrance Mem. Hosp. (1980) 109 CA3d 242, 167 CR 610.

In balancing the conveniences, the court must consider the relative hardship not only to the parties and the general public, but also to third persons. See Loma Portal Civic Club v American Airlines, Inc. (1964) 61 C2d 582, 39 CR 708 (public interest in continued operation of jet planes precluded injunction); Keith v Superior Court, supra (court could consider effect of potential flood on nonparty homeowners in deciding whether to enjoin destruction of easements). For further discussion, see 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§345-348 (5th ed 2008).

NOTE: Courts are reluctant to issue injunctions that will require ongoing court supervision. See Ellison v Ventura Port Dist. (1978) 80 CA3d 574, 145 CR 665 (request for specific performance).

IX. ENFORCEMENT BY CONTEMPT

§32.118 A. What Constitutes Contempt

A contempt of court is committed when an enjoined party, having knowledge of the order and the ability to comply, willfully refuses to obey a lawful injunctive order. See CCP §1209(a)(5); In re Liu (1969) 273 CA2d 135, 78 CR 85. In addition to civil contempt, violation of a lawfully issued injunctive order can result in a criminal contempt misdemeanor prosecution. Pen C §166; People v Gonzalez (1996) 12 C4th 804, 50 CR2d 74.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.119 B. Initiating Proceedings

Because contempts of injunctive orders are usually indirect or constructive (i.e., occurring outside of court), proceedings to enforce the injunction order must be initiated by affidavit (or declaration; see CCP §2015.5) presented to the court or judge. CCP §1211(a).

The moving party's affidavits or declarations constitute the complaint and frame the issues. Reliable Enters. v Superior Court (1984) 158 CA3d 604, 204 CR 786, disapproved on other grounds in Mitchell v Superior Court (1989) 49 C3d 1230, 1248, 265 CR 144. They must recite the facts showing contempt (CCP §1211), including facts establishing (1) issuance of injunction and (2) the enjoined party's knowledge, ability to comply, and willful disobedience. See In re Liu (1969) 273 CA2d 135, 78 CR 85.

Any defects in a declaration:

- Are waived if no objection is made (CCP §1211.5(a));
- Can be cured by amendment at any stage of the proceedings unless substantial prejudice will result (CCP §1211.5(b)); and
- Do not affect a judgment of contempt unless a miscarriage of justice has resulted (CCP §1211.5(c)).

When declarations showing contempt are filed, an order to show cause for contempt usually issues ex parte. See CCP §1212. The declarations and show cause order must be personally served. See chap 17 on service of process. Personal service is jurisdictional, and noncompliance voids a resulting contempt finding. See In re Wren (1957) 48 C2d 159, 308 P2d 329. However, an enjoined party may waive the right to personal service explicitly or by conduct. See, e.g., Leonis v Superior Court (1952) 38 C2d 527, 241 P2d 253 (violator appeared and participated voluntarily and without objection).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.120 C. Enjoined Party's Response; Defenses

The enjoined party may respond to the moving party's declarations (or complaint) with declarations or an answer. See Hotaling v Superior Court (1923) 191 C 501, 217 P 73 (defendant's affidavits in contempt proceeding constitute answer and serve as pleadings). Violation of an invalid order may not be punished as contempt. People v Gonzalez (1996) 12 C4th 804, 50 CR2d 74; In re Berry (1968) 68 C2d 137, 65 CR 273. It is a defense to a contempt citation that:

- The issuing court lacked jurisdiction to issue the injunctive order (Hotaling v Superior Court, supra (record failed to show existence of all necessary facts on which jurisdiction depended));
- The order is too broad or vague (Welton v City of Los Angeles (1976) 18 C3d 497, 134 CR 668 (injunction unconstitutionally overbroad and violative of First Amendment rights; party persisted in selling maps to movie stars' homes); In re Berry, supra (violation of antipicketing order that was too broad and constitutionally void on its face not punishable as contempt));
- The enjoined party did not have notice of the order (Phillips v Superior Court (1943) 22 C2d 256, 137 P2d 838 (no contempt unless violator had notice or knowledge of order)); or
- The issuing court lacked authority to issue the injunctive order (Philippine Nat'l Bank v U.S. Dist. Court (9th Cir 2005) 397 F3d 768 (contempt proceedings against Philippine bank were improper because district court lacked authority to issue injunctive order, which was basis of contempt, under "act of state doctrine")).

Although a defendant may not directly attack an injunction in contempt proceedings by seeking to dissolve it, the defendant may collaterally challenge the injunction on constitutional grounds in defending against the contempt charges. People v Gonzalez, supra (criminal contempt proceedings under Pen C §166).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.121 D. Hearing

A hearing, at which competent evidence must be produced, must be held on the issues raised by the opposing declarations (or pleadings). See CCP §1217; Hotaling v Superior Court (1923) 191 C 501, 217 P 73. Witnesses may testify; in fact, the court must hear "any answer" the accused makes. CCP §1217. See also CCP §1218. See Ruppe v Superior Court (1932) 127 CA 118, 15 P2d 197. Because the hearing is quasi-criminal, however, the accused need not testify. See Hotaling v Superior Court, supra; In re Witherspoon (1984) 162 CA3d 1000, 209 CR 67.

The accused must be proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Mitchell v Superior Court (1989) 49 C3d 1230, 265 CR 144. However, there is no right to a jury trial. In re Morelli (1970) 11 CA3d 819, 91 CR 72, disapproved on other grounds in Cedars-Sinai Imaging Med. Group v Superior Court (2000) 83 CA4th 1281, 1287 n6, 100 CR2d 320.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.122 E. Punishment

A finding of contempt may result in a fine of up to $1000, imprisonment of up to five days in jail, or both. CCP §1218(a). Because separate acts constitute separate contempts, multiple fines and consecutive jail sentences may be imposed. Donovan v Superior Court (1952) 39 C2d 848, 250 P2d 246 (multiple fines); In re Stafford (1958) 160 CA2d 110, 324 P2d 967 (multiple fines and consecutive sentences). But see Conn v Superior Court (1987) 196 CA3d 774, 242 CR 148 (multiple punishment for single contempt of a continuing nature violates Pen C §654 prohibition against multiple punishments for single crime). Additionally, a person who is found guilty of contempt for violating a court order may be required to pay reasonable attorney fees and costs to the party initiating the contempt proceedings. CCP §1218(a).

If the order of commitment expressly finds that the contempt consists of failure to perform, CCP §1219 provides for imprisonment until the act is performed. For further discussion, see 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Enforcement of Judgment §§355-360 (5th ed 2008).

X. REVIEW OF ORDERS

A. In Trial Court

1. Motion to Modify, Vacate, or Dissolve Injunctive Order

§32.123 a. Who May Move

Ordinarily, a motion to dissolve or modify an injunctive order is made by the enjoined party. New Tech Devs. v Bank of Nova Scotia (1987) 191 CA3d 1065, 236 CR 746 (preliminary injunction may be dissolved if improvidently granted, without showing of new facts or changed circumstances). See CCP §§532-533. However, when grounds exist, the moving party may seek modification. See Green Trees Enters. v Palm Springs Alpine Estates, Inc. (1967) 66 C2d 782, 59 CR 141 (duration of permanent injunction extended). In addition, a plaintiff may move again for a previously denied injunction. Brunzell Constr. Co. v Harrah's Club (1967) 253 CA2d 764, 62 CR 505.

The court on its own motion may dissolve or modify an ex parte order that states it is effective "until further order of this court" whenever it becomes satisfied that the order was erroneous or improvident. Wolf v Board of Supervisors (1907) 150 C 285, 89 P 85 (dictum).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.124 b. When Available

An enjoined person may move to dissolve or modify a preliminary or permanent injunction that was issued without notice to the person enjoined. CCP §532(a). The court may dissolve or modify an injunction or a temporary restraining order in any action in which a material change has occurred in the facts or law under which the injunction was granted, or in the interests of justice. CCP §533. See Loeffler v Medina (2009) 174 CA4th 1495, 1505, 95 CR3d 343 (no abuse of discretion to deny motion to terminate domestic violence restraining order; no material changes had occurred in law or facts and movant did not establish that termination would serve interests of justice). The court may dissolve or modify a final injunction on noticed motion on a similar showing under CC §3424.

Cases predating the 1995 amendment of §533 acknowledged the court's inherent power—whenever a change occurred in either the law or the controlling facts on which an injunction was based, or whenever injustice and fairness required it—to do the following:

- Modify or dissolve a preliminary or permanent prohibitory injunction. Union Interchange, Inc. v Savage (1959) 52 C2d 601, 342 P2d 249 (preliminary); New Tech Devs. v Bank of Nova Scotia (1987) 191 CA3d 1065, 236 CR 746 (preliminary); Sontag Chain Stores Co. v Superior Court (1941) 18 C2d 92, 113 P2d 689 (permanent).
- Vacate an order denying an injunction and issue the injunction previously denied. Brunzell Constr. Co. v Harrah's Club (1967) 253 CA2d 764, 62 CR 505.

The trial court has broad discretion in exercising this inherent power, and its decision will not be reversed unless abuse of discretion is shown. Union Interchange, Inc. v Savage, supra. See also Palo Alto-Menlo Park Yellow Cab Co. v Santa Clara Transit Dist. (1976) 65 CA3d 121, 135 CR 192 (trial court was held to have inherent power to modify its own judgment and set aside permanent injunction when defendant voluntarily discontinued conduct and damages were adequate).

A court need not specifically reserve jurisdiction to exercise an inherent power, although some cases suggest the advisability of a specific reservation of authority to modify an original injunctive order. See, e.g., Components for Research, Inc. v Isolation Prods., Inc. (1966) 241 CA2d 726, 50 CR 829. This element is satisfied if the order simply states that it is effective "until the court shall otherwise order." See State Compensation Ins. Fund v Maloney (1953) 121 CA2d 33, 262 Pd 662.

§32.125 c. Procedures

The court may not dissolve or modify an injunctive order unless notice of motion is given to the opposing party. CCP §533; Cherry Hill Gold Mining Co. v Baker (1905) 147 C 724, 82 P 370 (modification); Page v Vaughn (1901) 133 C 335, 65 P 740 (dissolution).

NOTE: However, a provisional order is dissolved without notice if the applicant fails to post an undertaking. See §32.92.

The notice of motion should state the grounds and should be accompanied by a memorandum in support of the motion. See CCP §1010; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113. A party seeking modification or dissolution under CCP §532 may prepare declarations in support of the notice of motion, in which case opposing declarations or other evidence may be produced in rebuttal. See CCP §532.

Although no appeal may be taken from a judgment of civil contempt (CCP §§904.1(a)(1)(B), 904.2(a)(2), 1222), a party held in contempt for disobeying a void order may collaterally attack the validity of the contempt judgment. The customary method is by writ of habeas corpus directed to the trial court. See, e.g., In re Berry (1968) 68 C2d 137, 65 CR 273; Board of Med. Exam'rs v Terminal-Hudson Elec. (1977) 73 CA3d 376, 140 CR 757. One court has held that a writ of prohibition will also lie. See, e.g., Harlan v Superior Court (1949) 94 CA2d 902, 211 P2d 942, disapproved on other grounds in Signal Oil & Gas Co. v Ashland Oil & Ref. Co. (1958) 49 C2d 764, 775 n5, 322 P2d 149. Certiorari (or writ of review (CCP §1067)) is also available to review the contempt order. Fortenbury v Superior Court (1940) 16 C2d 405, 106 P2d 411. See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §409 (5th ed 2008).

In a prosecution for criminal contempt under Pen C §166, such a collateral attack may be raised on appeal to the appellate department of the superior court. People v Gonzalez (1996) 12 C4th 804, 50 CR2d 74.

§32.126 2. Staying or Issuing Injunction Pending Appeal

A mandatory injunction is automatically stayed during appeal. See Reed v Superior Court (2001) 92 CA4th 448, 453 n3, 111 CR2d 842. But see ALRB v Tex-Cal Land Mgmt. (1987) 43 C3d 696, 238 CR 780 (mandatory injunction issued under Lab C §1160.8 was not an "action" but a "special proceeding" and therefore was not stayed by appeal).

Because a prohibitory injunction is not automatically stayed by appeal (Reed v Superior Court, supra), the party subject to a prohibitory injunction should move the issuing court for an order staying its execution, if an appeal is contemplated. The court may stay an injunction under conditions that protect both parties. See City of San Diego v Southern Cal. Tel. Corp. (1954) 42 C2d 110, 266 P2d 14.

When an injunction has been denied, the court, to preserve the status quo pending appeal, has authority to issue a temporary restraining order or continue a preliminary injunction previously issued. City of Pasadena v Superior Court (1910) 157 C 781, 109 P 620. The court has this power even after a notice of appeal has been filed. General Elec. Co. v Federal Employees' Distrib. Co. (1955) 132 CA2d 649, 282 P2d 941. The court will usually require an undertaking to protect the enjoined party. See §32.92.

B. In Appellate Courts

§32.127 1. By Appeal

Direct appeal may be taken from an order issuing, dissolving, or refusing to issue or dissolve a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction. CCP §§904.1(a)(6) (other than a limited civil case), 904.2(g) (limited civil case); County of San Diego v State of Cal. (1997) 15 C4th 68, 110, 61 CR2d 134 (preliminary injunction); see McLellan v McLellan (1972) 23 CA3d 343, 100 CR 258 (restraining order). On trial court unification, see chap 6. Direct appeals of interim orders are not particularly effective, however, because the matter may proceed to trial and judgment before the appeal can be heard. For discussion, see 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Provisional Remedies §§402-405 (5th ed 2008). A more effective means of challenging an interim injunctive order is by extraordinary writ. See §32.130.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.128 a. Stay Pending Appeal

When, pending appeal, the trial court denies a stay, the appellant may petition the reviewing court for a stay or a writ of supersedeas to preserve the status quo. CCP §923; Cal Rules of Ct 8.112. See, e.g., McCain v Phoenix Resources, Inc. (1986) 185 CA3d 575, 230 CR 25 (writ granted). See also form in §5.58 (Notice of Stay of Proceedings (Judicial Council Form CM-180)).

A writ of supersedeas cannot issue until the respondent has had an opportunity to file opposition papers (Cal Rules of Ct 8.112), which may be filed within 15 days after filing the petition, unless otherwise ordered, and a temporary stay pending a decision on the petition may be granted (Cal Rules of Ct 8.112). See generally California Civil Appellate Practice, chap 6 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.129 b. Standard of Review

An appellate court, when examining the trial court's exercise of discretion in granting a preliminary injunction, must view the facts most favorable to the trial court's disposition, and all reasonable inferences in support of the trial court's order must be indulged. Common Cause v Board of Supervisors (1989) 49 C3d 432, 261 CR 574; Cohen v Board of Supervisors (1985) 40 C3d 277, 219 CR 467. An abuse of discretion will be found only when the trial court's decision exceeds the bounds of reason or contravenes uncontradicted evidence. IT Corp. v County of Imperial (1983) 35 C3d 63, 196 CR 715. See also Millennium Rock Mort., Inc. v T.D. Serv. Co. (2009) 179 CA4th 804, 812, 102 CR3d 544 (reversing trial court's order granting preliminary injunction because movant had no reasonable likelihood of prevailing on merits at trial).

In contrast, a preliminary mandatory injunction is subject to stricter review on appeal because such an injunction is rarely granted pending trial except in an extreme case when the right to it is clearly established. Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n v Furlotti (1999) 70 CA4th 1487, 83 CR2d 455.

Denial of a preliminary injunction will be upheld on appeal if the trial court did not abuse its discretion with respect to either the question of success on the merits or the question of irreparable harm. Whether or not the trial court granted or denied a preliminary injunction, the appellate court does not resolve conflicts in the evidence, reweigh the evidence, or assess the credibility of witnesses. Whyte v Schlage Lock Co. (2002) 101 CA4th 1443, 1450, 125 CR2d 277.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.130 2. By Writ

Use of extraordinary writs to attack an injunctive order directly is generally limited to extraordinary situations in which public interest is at stake or an appeal would be futile. See Robbins v Superior Court (1985) 38 C3d 199, 211 CR 398 (peremptory writ of mandate issued when trial court abused its discretion in refusing to issue preliminary injunction); Northcutt v Superior Court (1924) 66 CA 350, 356, 226 P 25 (prohibition available only when appeal would be inadequate).

Thus, extraordinary writs are commonly used to collaterally attack an injunctive order. If the enjoined party deliberately violates the injunctive order, the order may be collaterally attacked by review of the resulting contempt order. See, e.g., In re Berry (1968) 68 C2d 137, 65 CR 273 (habeas corpus); Conn v Superior Court (1987) 196 CA3d 774, 242 CR 148 (certiorari); Harlan v Superior Court (1949) 94 CA2d 902, 211 P2d 942 (prohibition), disapproved on other grounds in Signal Oil & Gas Co. v Ashland Oil & Ref. Co. (1958) 49 C2d 764, 775 n5, 322 P2d 149.

In appropriate circumstances, this approach often provides the fastest and most effective means of review. For discussion, see 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Extraordinary Writs §33 (5th ed 2008). For discussion on drafting the petition for writ, with forms, see California Civil Writ Practice, chaps 17-28 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008).

XI. INJUNCTIONS AGAINST HARASSMENT UNDER CCP §527.6

§32.131 A. When Available

A person who has suffered harassment may seek a temporary restraining order and an injunction prohibiting harassment. CCP §527.6(a). "Harassment" is unlawful violence, a credible threat of violence, or a knowing and willful course of conduct directed at a specific person that seriously alarms, annoys, or harasses the person, and that serves no legitimate purpose. CCP §527.6(b); Byers v Cathcart (1997) 57 CA4th 805, 807, 67 CR2d 398. The course of conduct must be such as would cause a reasonable person to suffer substantial emotional distress and must cause substantial emotional distress to the plaintiff. CCP §527.6(b). The relief is available when the victim has been "stalked, threatened, or harassed." Grant v Clampitt (1997) 56 CA4th 586, 591, 65 CR2d 727. The relief generally applies when the action is brought by someone not covered by a family relationship, which would be governed by restraining orders under the Family Code. Oriola v Thaler (2000) 84 CA4th 397, 403, 100 CR2d 822 (woman obtained civil harassment restraining order against man with whom she did not have a "dating relationship").

The conduct must be ongoing, and a single incident of harassment is not a "course of conduct" entitling the applicant to injunctive relief. Leydon v Alexander (1989) 212 CA3d 1, 4, 260 CR 253. Similarly, a trial court misinterpreted CCP §527.6 in holding that an injunction must issue based on a single incident of battery without finding a threat of future harm. Russell v Douvan (2003) 112 CA4th 399, 401, 5 CR3d 137 (attorney followed opposing counsel into elevator and forcefully grabbed his arm).

For Instructions for Lawsuits to Prohibit Harassment (Judicial Council Form CH-150), see §32.168.

§32.132 1. Situations in Which Injunction Granted

Harassment injunctions were granted in the following cases:

- Victim was followed by private detective hired by defendant, victim's children were threatened, victim was threatened with legal action and physical harm, and was falsely accused of having AIDS and of causing defendant's marriage to fail. See Kobey v Morton (1991) 228 CA3d 1055, 278 CR 530.
- Psychiatrist/victim's former patient followed victim in her car and tried to stop victim's car in middle of street, repeatedly drove around her house and kept it under surveillance, made numerous phone calls, sent threatening letters, and threatened to commit suicide in victim's presence. Ensworth v Mullvain (1990) 224 CA3d 1105, 274 CR 447; see Madhani v Cooper (2003) 106 CA4th 412, 416 n7, 130 CR2d 778.
- Upstairs neighbors (victims) alleged that the downstairs neighbors played their stereo at extremely high volume, made false reports to animal regulation officers about victims, parked in victims' parking spaces, broke into victims' storage shed, and repeatedly rang victims' doorbell. Elster v Friedman (1989) 211 CA3d 1439, 260 CR 148.

The injunction was not proper in the following situations:

- Against the observer of a public proceeding when there was no evidence of harassing conduct. Nebel v Sulak (1999) 73 CA4th 1363, 1370, 87 CR2d 385.
- By one neighbor against the other for parking alongside a driveway when there was no evidence that parking was done to harass. Byers v Cathcart (1997) 57 CA4th 805, 808, 67 CR2d 398.
- By tenants against a property owners' association to maintain the peace and quiet and to refrain "from making any provocative statements" when there was no clear and convincing evidence that unlawful harassment already existed in fact. Schraer v Berkeley Prop. Owners' Ass'n (1989) 207 CA3d 719, 255 CR 453.

A civil harassment injunction under CCP §527.6 is not subject to the automatic stay provisions of federal bankruptcy law (11 USC §362(a)). Grant v Clampitt (1997) 56 CA4th 586, 591, 65 CR2d 727.

§32.133 2. Statute Enacted as Expedited Procedure for Preventing Harassment

Code of Civil Procedure §527.6 was enacted to provide an expedited procedure for preventing "harassment" as defined. See, e.g., Schild v Rubin (1991) 232 CA3d 755, 761, 283 CR 533; Diamond View Ltd. v Herz (1986) 180 CA3d 612, 616, 225 CR 651. The motivation for the statute was the experience of a young woman who was hounded by a male admirer who followed her, and incessantly telephoned her. Schild, 232 CA3d at 761 (citing Byers v Cathcart (1997) 57 CA4th 805, 811, 67 CR2d 398). The statute was designed to provide a quick and simple procedure by which this type of wholly unjustifiable conduct, having no proper purpose, could be enjoined. Byers v Cathcart, supra; Smith v Silvey (1983) 149 CA3d 400, 405, 197 CR 15. The statute is limited to protecting only those who have suffered "substantial emotional distress" caused by conduct that "serves no legitimate purpose." CCP §527.6(b) (defining "harassment"). Nothing in the statute indicates that it was intended to supplant normal injunctive procedures applicable to cases concerning issues other than "harassment" as statutorily defined. Byers v Cathcart, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.134 3. Normal Injunctive Procedures Contrasted

Normal injunctive procedures allow time for research and investigation, pleading and other motions if necessary, discovery and preparation, etc., followed by opportunity for a full trial. See, e.g., CCP §527; Byers v Cathcart (1997) 57 CA4th 805, 811, 67 CR2d 398. A temporary restraining order is initially available to stabilize a situation; a preliminary injunction can follow. Byers v Cathcart, supra. Thereafter the matter can proceed to a full trial. If this matter had been handled according to normal injunctive procedures, the plaintiff would have had ample time to develop evidence and prepare his or her case, and would not have had to defend her use of the easement on 24 hours' notice. Byers v Cathcart, supra.

In contrast, CCP §527.6 provides a quick and truncated procedure. Offsetting its truncated nature is the limited scope of the antiharassment orders that can legitimately follow. Section 527.6 provides for temporary restraining orders or injunctions to handle immediate problems, followed quickly by a court hearing on a limited-scope antiharassment injunction—normally within 15 days, but in no case more than 22 days even if time is extended for good cause. CCP §527.6(c)-(d); Byers v Cathcart, supra.

This expedited and summary proceeding is subject to several limitations designed to confine it to its proper scope. One such limitation is that any injunction that results cannot exceed 3 years. Hence §527.6 does not allow for final resolution of disputed rights. Byers v Cathcart, supra.

Other limitations are that "harassment" must be found by clear and convincing evidence before future conduct may be enjoined (CCP §527.6(d)), and that a §527.6 injunction may enjoin only "harassment" as defined. CCP §527.6(b). Conduct that serves a legitimate purpose is outside the definition of "harassment" and cannot be enjoined under the summary procedures of §527.6, even if such conduct might ultimately be enjoinable according to normal injunctive procedures after full development of the facts and law. Byers v Cathcart, supra.

B. Definitions

§32.135 1. Unlawful Violence

"Unlawful violence" is any assault or battery, or stalking as prohibited in Pen C §646.9, but it must not include lawful acts of self-defense or defense of others. CCP §527.6(b)(1); see Grant v Clampitt (1997) 56 CA4th 586, 591, 65 CR2d 727.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/32 Injunctions and Other Provisional Remedies/§32.136 2. Credible Threat of Violence

§32.136 2. Credible Threat of Violence

A "credible threat of violence" is a knowing and willful statement or course of conduct that would place a reasonable person in fear for his or her safety, or the safety of his or her immediate family, and that serves no legitimate purpose. CCP §527.6(b)(2).

3. Course of Conduct

§32.137 1. Temporary Restraining Order

On filing a petition for an injunction under CCP §527.6, the plaintiff may obtain a temporary restraining order in accordance with CCP §527, except to the extent that §527.6 provides a rule that is inconsistent. See Byers v Cathcart (1997) 57 CA4th 805, 811, 67 CR2d 398. A temporary restraining order may be issued with or without notice on an affidavit that, to the court's satisfaction, shows reasonable proof of harassment of the plaintiff by the defendant, and that great or irreparable harm would result to the plaintiff. In the court's discretion, and on a showing of good cause, the temporary restraining order or injunction may include other named family or household members who reside with the plaintiff. A temporary restraining order issued under §527.6 must remain in effect, at the court's discretion, for a period not to exceed 15 days, or, if the court extends the time for hearing under CCP §527.6(d), not to exceed 22 days, unless otherwise modified or terminated by the court. CCP §527.6(c). See Byers v Cathcart, supra.

A supporting memorandum is apparently not required. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1114(a)(7).

For forms of petition, and order to show cause and temporary restraining order, see §§32.160-32.162.

© The Regents of the University of California

§32.138 2. Hearing on Injunction

Within 15 days or, if good cause appears to the court, 22 days after the date the temporary restraining order is issued, a hearing shall be held on the petition for the injunction. CCP §527.6(d); see Oriola v Thaler (2000) 84 CA4th 397, 403, 100 CR2d 822. The defendant may file a response that explains, excuses, justifies, or denies the alleged harassment or may file a cross-complaint. For a form of response, see §32.163.

At the hearing, the judge must receive any testimony that is relevant, and may make an independent inquiry. If the judge finds by clear and convincing evidence that unlawful harassment exists, an injunction must issue prohibiting the harassment. An injunction issued under CCP §527.6 must have a duration of no more than three years. At any time within three months before the expiration of the injunction, the plaintiff may apply for a renewal of the injunction by filing a new petition for an injunction under §527.6. CCP §527.6(d).

§32.140 4. Use of Support Person

In a proceeding under CCP §527.6, if there are allegations or threats of domestic violence, "a support person may accompany a party in court and, if the party is not represented by an attorney, may sit with the party at the table that is generally reserved for the party and the party's attorney." The role of the support person is to:

- Provide moral and emotional support for a person who alleges that he or she is a victim of domestic violence.
- Assist the person who alleges that he or she is a victim of domestic violence in feeling assured that he or she will not be injured or threatened by the other party during the proceedings if the alleged victim and the other party must be in close proximity.

The support person is not present as a legal adviser and may not provide legal advice.

The court has discretion to remove the support person from the courtroom if the court believes that the support person is prompting, swaying, or influencing the alleged victim. CCP §527.6(f).

5. Service and Delivery to Law Enforcement Agencies

§32.141 a. Petition

On filing of a petition for an injunction under CCP §527.6, the defendant must be personally served with a copy of the petition, temporary restraining order, if any, and notice of hearing of the petition. Service shall be made at least five days before the hearing. The court may for good cause, on the plaintiff's motion or on its own motion, shorten the time for service on the defendant. CCP §527.6(g).

§32.142 b. Delivery to Law Enforcement Agencies

The court must order the plaintiff or the attorney for the plaintiff to deliver a copy of each temporary restraining order or injunction, or any modification or termination, granted under CCP §527.6, by the close of the business day on which the order was granted, to the law enforcement agencies within the court's discretion as are requested by the plaintiff. Each appropriate law enforcement agency must make available information on the existence and current status of these orders to law enforcement officers responding to the scene of reported harassment. Information on any temporary restraining order or injunction relating to harassment or domestic violence issued by a court under CCP §527.6 or CCP §527.8 must be transmitted to the Department of Justice in accordance with Fam C §6380(b). CCP §527.6(o).

§32.144 6. Order

An order issued under CCP §527.6 must, on the plaintiff's request, be served on the defendant, whether or not the defendant has been taken into custody, by any law enforcement officer who is present at the scene of reported harassment involving the parties to the proceeding. The plaintiff must provide the officer with an endorsed copy of the order and a proof of service that the officer must complete and send to the issuing court. CCP §527.6(h).

A person subject to a protective order issued under §527.6 must not own, possess, purchase, receive, or attempt to purchase or receive a firearm while the protective order is in effect. CCP §527.6(k)(1).

The court must order a person subject to a protective order issued under §527.6 to relinquish any firearms he or she owns or possesses under CCP §527.9 (procedure for relinquishment of firearms). CCP §527.6(k)(2).

Every person who owns, possesses, purchases, or receives, or attempts to purchase or receive a firearm while the protective order is in effect is punishable under Pen C §12021(g). CCP §527.6(k)(3).

For a form of order after hearing, see §32.166.

§32.145 D. Protected Person's Production of Certified Copy of Order

On receiving information at the scene of an incident of harassment that a protective order has been issued under CCP §527.6, or that a person who has been taken into custody is the subject of an order, if the protected person cannot produce a certified copy of the order, a law enforcement officer must immediately attempt to verify the existence of the order. If the law enforcement officer determines that a protective order has been issued, but not served, the officer must immediately notify the defendant of the terms of the order and must at that time also enforce the order. Verbal notice of the terms of the order must constitute service of the order and is sufficient notice for the purposes of §527.6 and for purposes of Pen C §§273.6 and 12021(g). CCP §527.6(h).

E. Fees and Costs

§32.146 1. Costs and Attorney Fees

The prevailing party in any action brought under CCP §527.6 may be awarded court costs and attorney fees, if any. CCP §527.6(i). The action need not have been filed frivolously or in bad faith for a defendant to recover costs and fees. Krug v Maschmeier (2009) 172 CA4th 796, 803, 91 CR3d 452.

Regardless of any other provision of law, a petitioner who so requests is not required to pay a fee for serving process in connection with a protective order, restraining order, or injunction to be issued, if any of the following conditions apply (CCP §527.6(q)(1)):

- The protective order, restraining order, or injunction issued under CCP §527.6 is based on stalking, as prohibited by Pen C §646.9.
- The protective order, restraining order, or injunction issued under §527.6 is based on a credible threat of violence resulting from a threat of sexual assault. As used in this subparagraph, "sexual assault" means the offenses enumerated in Evid C §1036.2.
- The protective order, restraining order, or injunction is issued under Fam C §6222.

Under CCP §527.6(q)(2) the Judicial Council is given responsibility for preparing and developing application forms for applicants who wish to avail themselves of the services described in this subdivision. CCP §527.6(q)(1).

§32.149 F. Disobedience of Order

Any willful disobedience of any temporary restraining order or injunction granted under CCP §527.6 is punishable under Pen C §273.6. CCP §527.6(j).

Code of Civil Procedure §527.6 does not apply to any action or proceeding governed by CC §§1788-1788.33 (fair debt collection practices) or by Fam C §§6200-6409 (prevention of domestic violence), nor does it preclude a plaintiff's right to use other existing civil remedies. CCP §527.6(l).

§32.150 G. Judicial Council Forms

The Judicial Council is charged with promulgating forms and instructions, including rules for service of process, scheduling of hearings, and any other matters required by CCP §527.6. The petition and response forms are to be simple and concise, and their use in §527.6 actions is mandatory. CCP §527.6(m).

A temporary restraining order or injunction relating to harassment or domestic violence issued by a court under §527.6 must be issued on forms adopted by the Judicial Council of California and that have been approved by the Department of Justice under Fam C §6380(i). However, an order issued by a court under §527.6 that was not issued on forms adopted by the Judicial Council and approved by the Department of Justice is not unenforceable for that reason. Superior Court, County of _ _ _ _ _ _

vs	ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE AND TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER
_ _[Name(s)]_ _, Defendant(s)	Hearing: _ _[date; time]_ _ Dep't: _ _[number]_ _ Hearing judge: _ _[if known]_ _ Action filed: _ _[date]_ _ Trial date: _ _[if set]_ _

After considering the moving papers filed in this action, the Court finds (1) that this is a proper case for issuance of an order to show cause, and (2) that, unless the Court issues a temporary restraining order, plaintiff, _ _[name]_ _, will suffer irreparable injury before the matter can be heard on formal notice.

IT IS ORDERED that:

1. Defendant, _ _[name]_ _, appear before this Court at the above date and time to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not be issued enjoining _ _[him/her/it]_ _ from engaging in or performing _ _[specify acts sought to be enjoined]_ _.

2. Pending the hearing on the order to show cause, defendant, _ _[his/her/its]_ _ agents, officers, employees, and representatives, and all persons acting in concert or participating with them, be enjoined from engaging in or performing the following: _ _[Track acts listed above in language clear enough to be enforceable via contempt proceedings]_ _.

3. A copy of the complaint, declaration(s), and memorandum, together with a copy of this order to show cause and temporary restraining order, be served by _ _[manner of service specified by court]_ _ on defendant no later than _ _[date set by court; at least two days before hearing]_ _. Any opposition must be filed and served by _ _[manner of service specified by court]_ _ by _ _[date set by court]_ _. _ _[No reply may be filed./Any reply must be filed and served by _ _[manner of service specified by court]_ _ by _ _[date set by court]_ _.]_ _

[Add if appropriate; see §32.56 (bond or undertaking)]

4. Bond on this temporary restraining order be fixed at $_ _[amount to be inserted by court]_ _.

Comment: The two orders in this form (an order to show cause and a temporary restraining order) can be prepared as two separate documents, if desired. Stating the proposed orders separately in one document, as shown in this form, permits the court to modify or delete terms of the restraining order by striking or interlineating certain language without altering the order to show cause. The restraining order should be narrowly drawn so that it will not be declared void by a reviewing court as interfering with constitutionally protected rights or being otherwise overbroad. See, e.g., In re Berry (1968) 68 C2d 137, 65 CR 273 (overbroad order restraining picketing); New Method Laundry Co. v MacCann (1916) 174 C 26, 161 P 990 (trade secret order properly drawn). For discussion of bond or undertaking that may be required at the court's discretion when issuing a temporary restraining order, see §32.56.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. On the many specific details required, see chap 11 and the sample form in §11.35. Comment: If no temporary restraining order (TRO) has issued, notice may be given by notice of motion or order to show cause. See §32.61 on motion for preliminary injunction. In courts with more than one department, the proper department in which to move for a preliminary injunction is set by local court rules. The notice of motion must be accompanied by a memorandum in support of the motion and supporting declarations. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a). On formal requirements for noticed motions, see chap 12.

Comment: Many courts prefer that the written order be titled "Preliminary Injunction" rather than "Order Granting Preliminary Injunction." Some courts also instruct counsel to include in the order language such as "The court reserves jurisdiction to modify this injunction as the ends of justice may require." On persons bound by the order, see §32.88. The court must require an undertaking when issuing a preliminary injunction. See §32.92.

Comment: If a temporary restraining order (TRO) had previously issued, inclusion of a provision stating that the TRO is dissolved is unnecessary, because a TRO is dissolved automatically when a preliminary injunction is denied. See San Diego Water Co. v Pacific Coast S.S. Co. (1894) 101 C 216, 35 P 651; Marsh Bros. & Gardenier, Inc. v United States Fid. & Guar. Co. (1929) 97 CA 474, 275 P 886. Nevertheless, some courts insist on including such a provision. On appellate review of court order, see §32.127-32.129.

§32.168 9. Form: Can a Civil Harassment Restraining Order Help Me? (Civil Harassment) (Judicial Council Form CH-150)

CH-150 Can a Civil Harassment Restraining Order Help Me?

What is a Civil Harassment Restraining Order?

It is a court order that helps protect people from harassment.

Can I get a Civil Harassment Restraining Order?

You can ask for one if you are worried about your safety because someone:

- Stalked
- Harassed
- Sexually assaulted or
- Threatened you with violence.

How will the order help me?

The court can order a person to:

- Not harass or threaten you
- Not contact or go near you and
- Not have a gun

You can also ask for protection for other family or household members.

What forms do I need to get the order?

Fill out Forms CH-100 and CH-120. Then file them with the court clerk.

Where can I get these forms?

You can get the forms at any courthouse or county law library at: www.courtinfo.ca.gov/forms

How soon can I get the order?

If you ask for a temporary restraining order (Form CH-120), the court will decide within 24 hours whether or not to make the order. Sometimes the court decides sooner.

How long does the order last?

If the court makes a temporary order, it will last until your hearing date. At that time, the court will decide to continue or cancel the order. The order could last for up to 3 years.

How will the person to be restrained know about the order?

Someone over 18 years of age—not you or anyone else protected by the order— must "serve" (give) the person to be restrained a copy of the order. For help with service, ask the court clerk for Form CH-135.

What if the restrained person does not obey the order?

Call the police. The restrained person can be arrested and charged with a crime.

How much does it cost?

That depends on the type of harassment. If the restrained person has used or threatened to use violence against you or has stalked you, you do not have to pay a filing fee.

If you cannot afford to pay the filing fee, ask the clerk how to apply for a fee waiver. Form FW-001 is available for this purpose.

You are entitled to free service of the court's order by a sheriff or marshal if the order is based on a credible threat of violence or stalking. Also, if you are eligible for a fee waiver, you can ask the sheriff or marshal to serve the order for free. If you are not eligible for free service, you may pay the sheriff or marshal to serve the order.

The court can make the person who loses the case pay all the court fees and the lawyer's fees for the other party.

Requests for Accommodations

Assistive listening systems, computer-assisted real-time captioning, or sign language interpreter services are available if you ask at least 5 days before the hearing. Contact the clerk's office or go to www.courtinfo.ca.gov/forms for Request for Accommodations by Persons With Disabilities and Order (Form MC-410). (Civil Code, § 54.8.)

CH-150 Can a Civil Harassment Restraining Order Help Me?

Do I have to go to court?

Yes. Go to court on the date the clerk gives you.

Do I need a lawyer?

No. But it is a good idea. Ask the court clerk about free and low-cost legal services and self-help centers in your county.

Do I need to bring a witness to the court hearing?

No. But it helps to have proof of the harassment. You can bring:

- A written statement from witnesses made under oath
- Witnesses
- Photos
- Medical or police reports
- Damaged property
- Threatening letters, e-mails, or telephone messages

The court may or may not let witnesses speak at the hearing. So, if possible, you should bring witnesses' written statements under oath to the hearing. (You can use Form MC-030 for this.)

16

Will I see the restrained person at the court hearing?

If the person comes to the hearing, yes. But that person does not have the right to speak to you. If you are afraid, tell the court officer.

Can I bring someone with me to court?

Yes. You can bring someone to sit with you during the hearing. But that person cannot speak for you in court. Only you or your lawyer (if you have one) can speak for you.

What if I don't speak English?

When you file your papers, ask the clerk if a court interpreter is available. You may have to pay a fee for the interpreter. If the interpreter is not available for your court date, bring someone to interpret for you. You cannot ask a child under 18 to interpret for you.

What if I am deaf?

If you are deaf, contact the clerk at least 5 days before the hearing. Ask for an interpreter or other accommodation. (See information on Requests for Accommodations at the bottom of page 1.)

What if I move?

Your restraining order works anywhere in the United States. If you move out of California, contact your new local police so that they will know about your orders.

I. INTRODUCTION

§33.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter describes the strategies and cost factors involved in deciding to seek a receivership (see §§33.3-33.7), jurisdiction to appoint a receiver (see §§33.8-33.9), actions in which a pretrial receivership is authorized (see §§33.10-33.33), and the procedures for applying for (see §§33.34-33.55), opposing or challenging (see §§33.56-33.60), administering, (see §§33.61-33.70), and terminating a receivership (see §§33.71-33.73). Also included is a checklist (see §33.74) and forms (see §§33.75-33.82).

This chapter deals solely with the pretrial use of receivers. It does not discuss receivers appointed in aid of execution after judgment. See CCP §564(b)(3)-(4); Olsan v Comora (1977) 73 CA3d 642, 140 CR 835.

This chapter does not cover other provisional remedies, e.g., attachment, that should be considered before applying for a receivership. Attachment is discussed in Debt Collection Practice in California §§6.1-6.110 (2d ed Cal CEB 1999). For a list of alternatives to consider before seeking a receivership, see §33.5.

Further, this chapter does not cover the use of receivership under CCP §564(c)-(e) to enforce rights of secured lenders under CC §2929.5 to enter and inspect for hazardous waste release. See California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 10 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009); California Real Property Sales Transactions §7.94 (4th ed Cal CEB 2007).

II. DECIDING TO SEEK RECEIVERSHIP

A. Understanding Nature of Receivership

§33.3 1. The Remedy

A receivership is a provisional remedy. It is usually very expensive and the courts consider it a "drastic" remedy. See Morand v Superior Court (1974) 38 CA3d 347, 351, 113 CR 281. For discussion of cost factors, see §33.6. On availability of alternatives, see §33.5.

The remedy is ancillary to or in aid of the action brought, and the court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver when the complaint fails to state a cause of action for other relief. There is no such thing as an action brought solely for appointment of a receiver. See Frick v Calmin Mortgage Corp. (1934) 220 C 746, 32 P2d 619; La Societe Francaise d'Epargnes v District Court (1879) 53 C 495; In re Stein (1936) 14 CA2d 303, 58 P2d 175; Highland Sec. Co. v Superior Court (1931) 119 CA 107, 112, 6 P2d 116.

§33.4 2. The Job Description

A receiver is an officer or representative of the court, appointed to take charge of and manage property that is the subject of litigation, for the purpose of preserving the property pending its ultimate disposition according to the final judgment rendered in the action. Kreling v Kreling (1897) 118 C 421, 50 P 549. The receiver takes actual possession of the property, which distinguishes this remedy from court supervision, prohibition directed to a party, and other pretrial remedies.

The receiver is an individual, not a party to the action, appointed by the court for the benefit of all parties who may establish rights in the case. Maggiora v Palo Alto Inn, Inc. (1967) 249 CA2d 706, 57 CR 787; Highland Sec. Co., 119 CA at 112. Accordingly, the receiver must not permit domination by any party or attorney and, if in doubt of the propriety of his or her acts, the receiver is required to seek instructions from the court. See CCP §568; Steinberg v Goldstein (1956) 145 CA2d 692, 303 P2d 80.

§33.5 B. Availability of Alternatives

A receivership is a drastic remedy. It is, above all else, expensive (see §33.6). Counsel should always consider whether possession and control by an outsider are essential, if for no other reason than to avoid embarrassment when the trial judge asks why counsel did not seek some other, apparently available and applicable remedy. On court's selection of a less drastic remedy when it will suffice, see §33.7 (effect of court applying equitable principles).

The alternatives to consider before a decision is made to seek appointment of a receiver include the following:

- A temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction;
- Attachment;
- Claim and delivery (writ of possession);
- Appointment of a provisional director or partner or joint venturer;
- Appointment of a retired judge or other person as a "referee" to supervise the parties or the property, or both, without taking on the full responsibility of management and control;
- Limited purpose receivership, e.g., where the receiver's duties are strictly limited to carefully defined duties such as management of books and collection of accounts;
- A stipulation acceptable to all parties;
- The recording of a lis pendens; or
- Federal equity receivership under Fed R Civ P 66 (when diversity of citizenship is present and either proper amount in controversy or some special basis for federal jurisdiction exists). See 13 Moore & Coquillette, Moore's Federal Practice §66.02 (3d ed 1997).

§33.6 C. Cost Factors

Receivers are almost always paid on an hourly basis for their time and the time that the receiver's staff spends in managing the property, running the business, collecting the rents, or doing whatever may be required in the particular case. These fees and costs are paid out of the receivership estate, and it therefore follows that a receivership is uneconomical unless the amount of money involved is substantial enough to justify the expense, or the potential harm to the property is greater than the costs of the receivership.

Accountants and other experts may have to be retained to assist the receiver. Employing counsel, if that becomes necessary, is an added expense. As the need for additional expertise arises, the costs escalate exponentially. The court will always consider cost factors in deciding whether to appoint a receiver. Hoover v Galbraith (1972) 7 C3d 519, 102 CR 733. As noted in Elson v Nyhan (1941) 45 CA2d 1, 5, 113 P2d 474, "[r]eceivers are often legal luxuries, frequently representing an extravagant cost to a losing litigant. When it appears that no reasonably certain benefit will result to one litigant, and a distinct disadvantage will result to another, courts should weigh carefully the propriety of appointing a receiver."

PRACTICE TIP: The most practical way to find out what a receivership may cost in a particular situation is to discuss the case with an experienced receiver who may be willing to offer information about hourly rates and the time spent on similar cases. Most courts maintain lists of approved receivers and the clerk in the department that handles receiverships will usually be able to provide information as to which persons on the list are frequently nominated and appointed. Some receivers will charge for their time spent in evaluating a case; others will not.

On weighing the benefits and costs in mortgage foreclosure actions involving receivers, see California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 6 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

§33.7 D. Effect of Court Applying Equity Principles

Even though governed by statute (see CCP §§564-570), a receivership is an equitable remedy. Accordingly, the rules and maxims of equity apply to receiverships and should be considered when deciding whether to seek this remedy. For example, a receiver will not be appointed when attachment, claim and delivery, a preliminary injunction, or some other less drastic remedy would suffice. Tyler v Park Ridge Country Club (1930) 103 CA 117, 284 P 247.

Similarly, a receiver will not be appointed punitively or for its coercive effect or when the applicant comes into court with unclean hands. See Bennallack v Richards (1899) 125 C 427, 433, 58 P 65.

The trial court has broad discretion to decide whether to appoint a receiver, and will not be reversed absent a showing that the order was an arbitrary exercise of power or a clear abuse of discretion. Moore v Oberg (1943) 61 CA2d 216, 221, 142 P2d 443. See §33.58 (standard of review). Indeed, the court has power to appoint a receiver on its own motion when it is necessary to accomplish a judicial objective. See, e.g., McCarthy v Poulsen (1985) 173 CA3d 1212, 1219, 219 CR 375 (receiver can be appointed to administer trust assets that trustee failed to manage). See §33.38 (appointment on court's own motion).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: It is safe to assume that, if there is any doubt about the need for a receiver, the appointment will not be made. On the other hand, if the applicant is able to persuade the court that a preliminary injunction is insufficient because it is essential for a neutral party to take possession of the property immediately to avoid loss or destruction of books and records or other items, or that an injunction would be difficult or impossible to enforce, a receiver will usually be appointed. In this situation, equitable concepts of unclean hands and laches may be given less weight, particularly if both parties' conduct is questionable, an unfortunately common situation.

III. JURISDICTION TO APPOINT RECEIVER

§33.8 A. In General

In California, the principal statutory authority granting jurisdiction to a court to appoint a receiver is CCP §564, which provides that the court in which an action is pending may appoint a receiver in any case in which it is authorized by law to do so. CCP §564(a). Subdivision (b) provides that authority in a number of specified situations. See CCP §564(b). Other statutes also provide authority to appoint receivers. See, e.g., CCP §1422 (escheat proceedings); CC §3439.07(a)(3)(B) (creditor's attack on fraudulent conveyance).

It is a well-established principle that a court has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver only as authorized by a statute in force at the time of the appointment. A.G. Col Co. v Superior Court (1925) 196 C 604, 620, 238 P 926. However, because the statutory scheme itself authorizes an appointment in all other cases not therein specified when necessary to preserve the property or rights of any party (CCP §564(b)(9)), case law also provides authority for appointing a receiver in situations not explicitly covered by CCP §564(b)(1)-(12).

Even though the parties' consent to a receiver's appointment cannot confer jurisdiction on a court (McCutcheon v Superior Court (1933) 134 CA 5, 24 P2d 911), it would be rare that the parties could not find an analogous reported case to support a stipulation. See CCP §564(b)(9). Even rarer would be the judge who would refuse to appoint a receiver when all parties agree that the appointment should be made. See Baron v Fire Ins. Exch. (2007) 154 CA4th 1184, 1190, 65 CR3d 502 (arbitrator's appointment of receiver later ratified by court).

IV. ACTIONS IN WHICH PRETRIAL RECEIVERSHIPS AUTHORIZED

A. Actions to Prevent Loss of Specific Property or Funds

§33.10 1. Statutory Authority

The court may appoint a receiver under CCP §564(b)(1) in an action by (a) a vendor to vacate a fraudulent purchase of property, (b) a creditor to subject any property or fund to the creditor's claim, or (c) partners or others jointly owning or interested in any property or fund.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.11 2. Showing Required

Generally, application for appointment of a receiver may be made by the plaintiff or any party whose right to or interest in the property or fund, or the proceeds thereof, is "probable." CCP §564(b)(1). The application must also show that the property or fund is in danger of being removed or materially injured. For case law exceptions to these requirements in the case of a vendor seeking to vacate a fraudulent purchase, see §33.12.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Illustrative Cases

§33.12 a. Vendor

When the party seeking appointment of a receiver is a vendor of property and is seeking to vacate a fraudulent purchase, a right or an interest in the property or fund need not be established if fraud can be proved. A vendor who cannot establish fraud, and who has no right or interest in the property or fund, stands in the position of a general creditor and is not entitled to the appointment of a receiver. California Delta Farms, Inc. v Chinese Am. Farms, Inc. (1928) 204 C 524, 269 P 443.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.13 b. Creditor

Under the terms of CCP §564(b)(1), when the party seeking appointment of a receiver is a creditor, both a probable property interest and a danger to that property interest must be shown. It is not enough to show just a probability of prevailing on the merits for other unrelated reasons. A failure to show both of these elements renders the court powerless to appoint a receiver and voids any such appointment. Rondos v Superior Court (1957) 151 CA2d 190, 195, 311 P2d 113; In re Stein (1936) 14 CA2d 303, 58 P2d 175.

Under CCP §564(b)(1), a typical general creditor is not entitled to appointment of a receiver, because normally there is neither an interest in specific property or a specific fund held by the responding party. In addition, an unsecured creditor may have an adequate remedy at law by attachment or by writ of possession.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.14 c. Partner

Actions involving partners usually arise as suits for dissolution and accounting. The most common situation involves a loss of confidence by one or more partners in the controlling partner or partners and some facts tending to demonstrate an existing or imminent breach of fiduciary duty by the latter.

Although appointment of a receiver is not a matter of right in these cases (McCaslin v Kenney (1950) 100 CA2d 87, 95, 223 P2d 94), receivers are regularly appointed when the interest of the partner seeking appointment of a receiver is clear and the danger of removal or loss at the hands of the partner in possession is established. See, e.g., Neider v Dardi (1955) 130 CA2d 646, 649, 279 P2d 598; Silbert v Shaver (1952) 113 CA2d 19, 247 P2d 609; Galich v Brkich (1951) 103 CA2d 187, 190, 229 P2d 89; Moore v Oberg (1943) 61 CA2d 216, 220, 142 P2d 443; Breedlove v Breedlove Excavating Co. (1942) 56 CA2d 141, 132 P2d 239.

B. Actions to Foreclose Mortgages

§33.15 1. Statutory Authority

A receiver may be appointed under CCP §564(b)(2) in an action by a secured lender for the foreclosure of a deed of trust or mortgage and sale of property on which there is a lien under a deed of trust or mortgage, when it appears that the property is in danger of being lost, removed, or materially injured, or that the condition of the deed of trust or mortgage has not been performed, and that the property is probably insufficient to discharge the deed of trust or mortgage debt.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.16 2. Showing Required

To obtain appointment of a receiver under CCP §564(b)(2), it must be shown both that there is a default under the trust deed or mortgage and that there is also a risk of loss by insufficiency of the security, waste, or other danger. Mortgages and deeds of trust frequently contain provisions reciting the insufficiency of the security and the parties' agreement to the appointment of a receiver to collect rents and profits on default. Mere reference to such contractual language is not usually enough. Although the court may give such provisions substantial weight, the applicant should affirmatively establish the default, that the value of the property is less than the secured debt, and that there is a risk of loss or injury to the property. Bank of Woodland v Stephens (1904) 144 C 659, 79 P2d 379.

For cases upholding appointments based on contractual provisions, see Turner v Superior Court (1977) 72 CA3d 804, 811, 140 CR 475; Barclays Bank v Superior Court (1977) 69 CA3d 593, 600, 137 CR 743.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Illustrative Cases

§33.17 a. Commercial Property

If the sole purpose of the receivership is to enforce an assignment of rents clause, the requisite showing must include proof of the assignment, of a default, and a refusal by the defendant voluntarily to permit the plaintiff to collect the rents and profits. Mines v Superior Court (1932) 216 C 776, 16 P2d 732; Lovett v Point Loma Dev. Corp. (1968) 266 CA2d 70, 71 CR 709. In these cases, the courts rely alternatively on CCP §564(b)(11) or §564(b)(12).

As a practical matter, a creditor will not seek the appointment of a receiver if the value of the property well exceeds the secured debt and there are likely buyers; when those facts exist, the creditor simply forecloses. It is only when these facts are absent or difficult to determine that the cost of a receiver is justified, i.e., to have someone collect the rents to ensure at least partial satisfaction of the debt. In such a case, the most compelling showing the moving party can make is that the debtor is in a position to collect substantial rents and divert them to uses other than the reduction of the obligation, e.g., to bleed the property and then abandon it to foreclosure.

When dealing with large commercial properties, the income during the foreclosure period may be substantial. In the residential context, these facts do not usually arise and the existence of a "rents and profits" clause in the deed of trust is irrelevant; if a receiver is appointed in a residential foreclosure, it will be for other reasons, and facts supporting those reasons must be provided. See §33.18.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/33 Receivership/§33.18 b. Residential Property

§33.18 b. Residential Property

Applications for appointment of a receiver in real property foreclosure proceedings in a single family residence are frequently made but not usually granted. In the typical residential foreclosure, the defaulting borrower is in possession of the property and there are no rents to collect.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Despite the statutory requirements and case law, most judges will approach cases involving a single family residence from a different perspective than those involving commercial transactions or personal property. Unless there is a strong showing that the borrower may cause damage to the property, there usually is no need for a receiver; the borrower will be allowed to remain in possession pending the foreclosure sale and the lender will be left to the less drastic remedies of sale and, if necessary, unlawful detainer.

C. Actions Involving Corporations

§33.19 1. Statutory Authority

The statute authorizes the appointment of a receiver in cases in which a corporation

- Is dissolved;
- Is insolvent;
- Is in imminent danger of insolvency; or
- Has forfeited its corporate rights.

CCP §564(b)(5)-(6).

If a corporation has been dissolved, CCP §565 provides that the superior court of a county in which the corporation transacts its business or has its principal place of business may appoint one or more persons to be receivers or trustees of the corporation. Any creditor or stockholder of the corporation may seek the appointment of a receiver. CCP §565. The receiver's duties under CCP §565 are to:

- Take charge of the estate and effects of the corporation;
- Collect the debts and property due and belonging to the corporation;
- Pay the corporation's outstanding debts; and
- Divide the money and other property that is left over among the stockholders.

2. Illustrative Cases

§33.20 a. Insolvency Proceedings

In spite of the specific grant of authority to appoint a receiver on application of creditors of a corporation, a limitation has been judicially created that the legal remedies of judgment and unsuccessful attempt at execution first must be exhausted. Stock & Bond Guar. Co. v Superior Court (1930) 108 CA 360, 291 P 589; Delaney Prod. & Ref. Co. v Crystal Petroleum Prods. Co. (1928) 88 CA 784, 790, 264 P 521.

Even the consent of the corporation will not justify the appointment of a receiver on application of a simple contract creditor. A.G. Col Co. v Superior Court (1925) 196 C 604, 621, 238 P 926. However, when the creditor can establish, e.g., that the corporation was fraudulently formed to prevent the collection of debts, the corporate existence may in essence be ignored and a receiver may be appointed to take charge of its assets. Sunset Farms, Inc. v Superior Court (1935) 9 CA2d 389, 401, 50 P2d 106. See also Misita v Distillers Corp. (1942) 54 CA2d 244, 128 P2d 888.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.21 b. Fraud or Mismanagement

In general, courts are reluctant to appoint a receiver to operate an ongoing business, particularly when to do so would oust existing management. Golden State Glass Corp. v Superior Court (1939) 13 C2d 384, 395, 490 P2d 75; Koshaba v Koshaba (1942) 56 CA2d 302, 132 P2d 854; Misita v Distillers Corp. (1942) 54 CA2d 244, 251, 128 P2d 888.

On application of a minority shareholder, however, courts may appoint a receiver on a showing that the corporation is being injured by fraud or mismanagement. Typically, the courts rely on the "[i]n all other cases where necessary to preserve the property or rights of any party" provision of CCP §564(b)(9) in these situations. See, e.g., Boyle v Superior Court (1917) 176 C 671, 673, 170 P 1140; Misita v Distillers Corp., supra. See also §33.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.22 c. Attorney General's Action Against Nonprofit Corporation

The Attorney General is authorized to institute such proceedings as are "necessary" to correct a defalcation by a nonprofit public benefit corporation. See Corp C §5250.

In People v Riverside Univ. (1973) 35 CA3d 572, 580, 111 CR 68, the court upheld the appointment of a receiver under the predecessor statute (former Corp C §9505), holding that a receiver appointed to supervise a charitable trust is vested with broad authority to do anything the corporation might have done to make the most of the assets in the receiver's hands.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/33 Receivership/§33.23 d. Corporate Dissolution Proceedings

§33.23 d. Corporate Dissolution Proceedings

If a court is persuaded that a receiver is necessary as part of an involuntary dissolution proceeding, the court is authorized by Corp C §1803 to make the appointment.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: As in most situations, there is judicial reluctance to appoint a receiver in this context, which is reinforced by the availability of other remedies. For example, a provisional director may be appointed under Corp C §308, or the dissolution may be one that simply can proceed under court supervision without the need for a receiver's assistance. The court must consider the usual question that arises when deciding whether to appoint a receiver, i.e., whether actual custody and possession of the corporation and its assets are indicated, or whether court supervision will suffice. This determination usually turns on the identity, integrity, and loyalty of the persons responsible for the operation of the corporation. Factors for the court to consider include:

- Whether those in control are parties to the action;
- Whether they are owners of a minority or majority of the shares of the corporation; and
- Whether management has loyalties so strong to one side that ways might be sought and found to avoid, thwart, or disregard court-imposed directions or restraints.

While these factors will vary from case to case, they usually are among the determinative considerations for the court.

D. Unlawful Detainer Actions

§33.24 1. Statutory Authority

The court has authority to appoint a receiver in an action for unlawful detainer. CCP §564(b)(7).

2. Illustrative Cases

§33.25 a. Landlord

A landlord, on a clear factual showing, can obtain a receiver to collect rents and dispossess a holdover tenant or other party occupying the premises. Stich v Gordon (1932) 126 CA 434, 14 P2d 835.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: As a practical matter, most courts are reluctant to dispossess a tenant in possession when an unlawful detainer action is pending, on the ground that the entire matter will be litigated promptly on the merits and ought not to be decided by the summary procedure used for appointment of a receiver. If the landlord, however, can establish the probability of harm that may occur pending trial in the unlawful detainer action (e.g., occupant alienating other tenants in a commercial building, or tenant causing waste to the property), a receiver is both necessary and appropriate, and will usually be appointed unless the cost outweighs the benefit.

§33.26 b. Purchaser

A purchaser at a foreclosure sale under a mortgage or deed of trust may obtain a receiver if the debtor or party in possession refuses to surrender possession of the premises. Pacific States Sav. & Loan Co. v Hoffman (1933) 134 CA 601, 25 P2d 1006. However, the same judicial reluctance noted in §33.25 applies here. For a general discussion of the problems encountered in an unlawful detainer action brought by the purchaser at a foreclosure sale, see Regalia, Receivers in California Litigation Involving Real Property, 15 UCLA L Rev 896, 910 (1968).

§33.27 E. Actions Involving Public Utilities Commission

Code of Civil Procedure §564(b)(8) authorizes the appointment of a receiver at the request of the Public Utilities Commission under Pub Util C §855 or §5259.5. Section 855 provides for the appointment of a receiver to operate any water or sewer system corporation that (1) is unable or unwilling to adequately serve its rate payers, (2) has been actually or effectively abandoned by its owners, or (3) is unresponsive to the Commission's rules and orders. Section 5259.5 provides for the appointment of a receiver when the Commission determines that a household goods carrier has abandoned stored goods or property of any shipper under contract with the carrier. A receiver may be appointed to identify the stored items and to arrange for their return to their owners.

F. When Necessary to Preserve Property or Rights and Miscellaneous Other Actions

§33.28 1. Statutory Authority; Judicial Limitation

Although the broadest grant of statutory authority is found in CCP §564(b)(9), which authorizes the appointment of a receiver "[i]n all other cases where necessary to preserve the property or rights of any party," the language of the statute has been restricted by case law. If the case is within one of the specific classes listed in the other subdivisions, the plaintiff must make a showing under the specific subsection. Dabney Oil Co. v Providence Oil Co. (1913) 22 CA 233, 133 P 1155.

A receiver may also be appointed in filiation proceedings to preserve the defendant's property for the protection of the plaintiff's unborn child. Guay v Superior Court (1957) 147 CA2d 764, 767, 305 P2d 990.

A receiver may be appointed in an action for child support even before a support order is made. Quaglino v Quaglino (1979) 88 CA3d 542, 546, 152 CR 47. §33.31 c. Escheat Proceedings

§33.33 H. Action for Assignment of Rents

A receiver may be appointed in an action by a secured lender for specific performance of an assignment of rents provision in a deed of trust, mortgage, or separate assignment document. CCP §564(b)(11). The receiver's appointment may be continued after judgment for specific performance is entered if it is necessary to protect, operate, or maintain real property that is encumbered by the deed of trust or mortgage, or to collect any rents from the property while a nonjudicial foreclosure is being completed. CCP §564(b)(11).

A receiver also may be appointed in an action by an assignee under an assignment of leases, rents, issues, or profits under CC §2938(g). CCP §564(b)(12).

V. PROCEDURES FOR APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER

§33.34 A. Significance of California Rules of Court

There is no statutory scheme prescribing a particular procedure for appointing a receiver. See CCP §564. Before seeking appointment of a receiver in an action, counsel should become thoroughly familiar with Cal Rules of Ct 3.1175-3.1184, regulating appointments of receivers, confirmation proceedings, and miscellaneous matters relating to a receiver's powers and duties. These rules contain important procedures that must be followed. In addition, counsel should check for local practices on the appointment of receivers and the administration of receiverships.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.35 B. Evidentiary Showing Required in All Cases

Specific facts, not speculation, possibilities, or conclusions of harm, must be developed and demonstrated by admissible evidence. Because a showing of genuine necessity is required in every instance (Morand v Superior Court (1974) 38 CA3d 347, 113 CR 281), the trial court will look closely at the evidence, and, if the bulk of it is subject to evidentiary objections, an application for a receiver will be denied.

PRACTICE TIP: When submitting evidence to persuade the court that the moving party is likely to prevail on the merits of the underlying case, declarations or affidavits are preferable to verified pleadings. See §33.46.

C. Noticed Motion for Appointment of Receiver

§33.36 1. Preferred Procedure

Unless there is a genuine need for immediate relief (see §§33.41-33.45 on ex parte applications), the preferred procedure for appointment of a receiver is by noticed motion. The motion is subject to the rules of court applicable to motions generally. See chap 12 (noticed motions).

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.37 2. Who May Apply

The applicant need not be the plaintiff. A defendant or cross-complainant may obtain appointment of a receiver in a proper case. McCaslin v Kenney (1950) 100 CA2d 87, 94, 223 P2d 94; Armbrust v Armbrust (1946) 75 CA2d 272, 274, 171 P2d 75.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.38 3. Court's Own Motion

The court may appoint a receiver on its own motion. Venza v Venza (1949) 94 CA2d 878, 211 P2d 913. Absent the consent of the parties, however, the court will give notice of its intent to appoint a receiver and provide the parties an opportunity to respond.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.39 4. Hearing on Noticed Motion

Like other motions, the hearing on a motion to appoint a receiver is almost always a presentation of argument based on the evidence and memorandum previously submitted. The court in its discretion may hear oral testimony. For discussion on court hearings generally, see chap 12.

As with all hearings, a party seeking to present oral evidence, except in rebuttal to oral evidence presented by the other side, must submit a written request at least three court days before the hearing, setting forth the nature and extent of the evidence proposed to be presented, and a reasonable estimate of the time involved. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(b). If the application to present oral evidence is filed less than five court days before the hearing, the applicant must ensure that the application is delivered to the other parties at least two days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(b).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Rarely will oral testimony be justified at a hearing on the appointment of a receiver. Counsel would have to have some extraordinary reason for explaining why the evidence could not be presented by declaration.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.40 D. Order to Show Cause

If grounds for appointment of a receiver exist, but the defendant has not appeared and personal service is required, the plaintiff may apply for a receivership by an order to show cause. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1177-3.1179. Under this method, the plaintiff makes an ex parte application for an order to show cause; the court sets the hearing date and directs the defendant to show cause on that date why a receiver should not be appointed. In a rents, issues, and profits receivership under CCP §564(b)(12), the optional forms of Order to Show Cause and Temporary Restraining Order (Judicial Council Form RC-300) and Order Appointing Receiver (Judicial Council Form RC-310) may be used. The application must be presented with the same papers required for a noticed motion (i.e., OSC, supporting memorandum, declarations, and proposed order), although the plaintiff should use the OSC instead of a notice of motion.

For further discussion, see California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation §§6.38, 6.105-6.106 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

§33.41 E. Ex Parte Application

As a practical matter, many of the circumstances giving rise to the need for appointment of a receiver justify an ex parte appointment. However, the standard for appointment of a receiver on ex parte application is stringent, requiring a showing that a "great emergency" exists so serious that a receiver must be appointed before the matter can be brought on notice. Turner v Superior Court (1977) 72 CA3d 804, 809 n2, 140 CR 475; McCall v McCall Bros. Co. (1933) 135 CA 558, 27 P2d 648.

PRACTICE TIP: An ex parte request for appointment of a receiver should almost always be accompanied by an alternative application for issuance of a temporary restraining order and order to show cause re preliminary injunction. However, counsel applying for the appointment should state facts showing that the emergency is so great that it cannot be obviated by a temporary restraining order or some other less harsh remedy.

For a rents, issues, and profits receivership, plaintiff may use the optional Judicial Council forms of Ex Parte Order Appointing Receiver and Order to Show Cause (RC-200) and Order Confirming Appointment of Receiver and Preliminary Injunction (RC-210). See California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Forclosure Litigation §§6.38, 6.103-6.104 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

For notice requirements of ex parte application, see §33.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.42 1. Application Outside Business Hours

If the need for a preliminary injunction arises on a weekend or holiday, most courts have a "duty judge" to cover genuine emergencies. Conceivably, the need for a receiver could arise suddenly during noncourt hours, although such a situation would be extremely unusual.

EXAMPLE: In Los Angeles, if an emergency arises during court hours, the supervising judge of the Law Departments should be given notice so that arrangements can be made for a judge and staff. If there is no advance warning, a judge can be reached through the county operator. There may be a substantial delay in obtaining a judge, clerk, and reporter, and a second or even a third judge may be necessary if one or more parties utilize a CCP §170.6 affidavit. Any misuse or abuse of this emergency procedure may (and probably will) result in a substantial award of sanctions against the responsible attorney.

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106 (b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/33 Receivership/§33.43 2. Showing Required

§33.43 2. Showing Required

The applicant for an ex parte appointment of receiver must show, by verified complaint or declarations, all the following (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1175):

- The nature of the emergency and the reasons why "irreparable injury" would be suffered by the applicant during the time necessary for a hearing on notice;
- The names, addresses, and telephone numbers of the persons in actual possession of the property for which a receiver is requested, or of the president, manager, or principal agent of any corporation in possession of the property;
- The use being made of the property by the persons in possession;
- The nature and approximate size or extent of the business (if the property is a part of the plant, equipment or stock in trade of any business), and facts sufficient to show whether the taking of the property by a receiver would stop or seriously interfere with the operation of the business; and
- For any of the above matters that are unknown and cannot be ascertained by the exercise of due diligence, a factual showing of the efforts made to acquire the information.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.44 3. Notice of Ex Parte Application

An application for an ex parte appointment of a receiver must be accompanied by a declaration showing that the applicant (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1200-3.1207):

- Informed the opposing party or the opposing party's attorney, by at least 10 a.m. on the court day before the ex parte appearance, when and where the application would be made;
- Made a good faith but unsuccessful attempt to give notice (specifying the efforts made to inform opposing party and opposing party's attorney); or
- Should not be required to give notice for specified reasons (e.g., giving notice is likely to result in removal or transfer of assets to avoid the moving party's claim).

For further discussion of ex parte applications, see chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.45 4. Hearing to Confirm Appointment; Timing

If a receiver is appointed ex parte, a hearing to confirm the appointment must be held within 15 days, or if good cause appears to the court, 22 days after the date the order is issued. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1176(a). The opposing party is entitled as a matter of right to one continuance to prepare opposition to the confirmation of the ex parte appointment. If a continuance is granted, the order to show cause remains in effect until the date of the continued hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1176(d).

Counsel should check for any applicable local rules to ensure that there are no additional requirements regarding the hearing to confirm an ex parte appointment of a receiver. See §33.39 for discussion on other matters concerning the hearing on the appointment of a receiver.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.46 F. Supporting Papers

An applicant seeking appointment of a receiver either by noticed motion (see §§33.36-33.39) or by ex parte application (see §§33.41-33.45) must present competent evidence on which the court may make its determination. Typically, this is done by declarations or affidavits, or by allegations in a verified pleading. Republic of China v Chang (1955) 134 CA2d 124, 285 P2d 351; Armbrust v Armbrust (1946) 75 CA2d 272, 171 P2d 75.

PRACTICE TIP: As a practical matter, it is not a good idea to rely on a verified pleading; a complaint is supposed to allege ultimate facts, whereas specific evidentiary facts (and not conclusions) are needed to support the appointment of a receiver. See McCaslin v Kenney (1950) 100 CA2d 87, 223 P2d 94. See also CCP §446 on verified pleadings filed by corporations and public agencies, and limitations on use of pleadings verified by a party's attorney.

§33.47 G. Order Appointing Receiver

It is good practice for counsel to draft a comprehensive proposed order giving the receiver precise instructions, defining the receiver's powers and duties and, if the application for appointment is made ex parte, to include:

- An order to show cause why the appointment should not be confirmed, blanks for the hearing date and undertakings; and
- An order restraining the parties' interference with the receiver.

For sample forms of such orders, see §§33.76, 33.79.

The order should set out in detail all of the powers the receiver is to have. In most cases, the court tries to leave the receiver with fairly broad discretion to handle the receivership property, subject to court confirmation when the need arises. The court usually permits the receiver to accumulate funds sufficient to pay the costs and expenses of the receivership before making payments on encumbrances. In some instances, the income from the property is inadequate to pay the receivership expenses plus maintenance and operation costs. In these instances, the receiver is under no obligation to advance funds, and the moving party must do so or risk termination of the receivership. In some cases, the receiver may apply to the court for permission to borrow money (e.g., to pay salaries of employees of a business). Permission to borrow will be granted only when it is demonstrated that a fund will exist to repay the loan (e.g., from the sale of the business). If a receiver cannot secure the necessary funds to operate the receivership property, the receiver has no alternative but to request an order of the court terminating the receivership. For discussion of receiver's powers and duties, see §§33.61-33.70. On termination of the receivership, see §§33.71-33.73.

PRACTICE TIP: The specific provisions of the order should be responsive to the situation giving rise to the need for the receiver. For example, the order can authorize the receiver to pay taxes, make and pay for necessary repairs to the property, and make payments on encumbrances and liens clearly specifying the priority of payments. The order appointing receiver should also include a provision regarding the frequency of accountings. Counsel who becomes well-informed about the problems of the particular property can address as many contingencies as possible when drafting the order and eliminate the need to return to court for frequent amendments.

H. Required Undertakings

§33.48 1. By Applicant

Before issuing an ex parte order appointing a receiver, the court must require from the applicant under CCP §566(b):

> an undertaking in an amount to be fixed by the court, to the effect that the applicant will pay to the defendant all damages the defendant may sustain by reason of the appointment of the receiver and the entry by the receiver upon the duties, in case the applicant shall have procured the appointment wrongfully, maliciously, or without sufficient cause.

Failure to require the applicant to post a bond renders the ex parte order void. Sweins v Superior Court (1936) 16 CA2d 336, 60 P2d 313. In setting the applicant's bond, the court will attempt to ascertain the amount sufficient to cover anticipated damages to the opposing party, including attorney's fees and costs necessary to oppose or secure vacation of the order of appointment.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should come to the ex parte hearing prepared to justify the amount of the applicant's bond. Note that if a receiver is appointed after noticed motion, the only bond required is the bond of the receiver. See CCP §§566(b), 567(b). See also local rules.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.49 2. By Receiver

Before embarking on any duties, the receiver must give an undertaking to the State of California in an amount the court directs, "to the effect that the receiver will faithfully discharge the duties of receiver in the action and obey the orders of the court therein." CCP §567(b). Counsel should check local rules.

The receiver must be allowed the cost of the undertaking. CCP §567(b). That is, the premium paid by the receiver for the undertaking is a cost of administration, payable to the receiver out of the receivership estate when the receiver is discharged.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.50 I. Receiver's Oath

Before discharging any duties, the receiver must be sworn to perform the duties faithfully (CCP §567(a)). For form of receiver's oath notarized and filed after appointment, see §33.80.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/33 Receivership/§33.51 J. Selecting the Receiver

§33.51 J. Selecting the Receiver

Any party may nominate one or more persons for appointment as receiver. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1177. Names may be suggested at the time of the ex parte application or in papers noticing or opposing the motion. Many courts have lists of approved receivers (see §33.53). If the receiver is appointed at an ex parte hearing, a substitute receiver may be recommended at the confirmation hearing. Unless there is a valid reason for a change, such a request will not receive serious consideration.

PRACTICE TIP: It is wise for counsel to check with the nominee in advance to ensure availability, and to be prepared with the name of an alternative nominee in the event of a conflict of interest.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.52 1. Persons Not Eligible

No party or attorney for a party, or person interested in the action or related to any judge of the court by consanguinity or affinity within the third degree can be appointed receiver unless the parties file written consent with the clerk. CCP §566(a); Davis v Custom Component Switches, Inc. (1970) 13 CA3d 21, 91 CR 181.

However, it has been held that appointment of an unqualified person may be waived by failure to object at the hearing appointing the receiver or to appeal from the order of appointment. Weygandt v Larson (1933) 130 CA 304, 309, 19 P2d 852.

A corporation may not act as a receiver unless it is qualified to engage in the trust business. See Fin C §§106, 1500.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.53 2. Court-Approved Lists of Receivers

In some counties, the court maintains a list of approved receivers and usually will not appoint someone who is not on the list without the consent of all parties. However, counsel can prepare declarations showing a nominee's qualifications and understanding of the role and duties of a receiver, even if that person's name does not appear on the court-approved list. If the court is asked to recommend a receiver, most judges simply provide counsel with a copy of the approved list. In other counties, a rotation system is followed.

The qualifications of persons who serve as receivers vary; a court-approved list generally includes attorneys, accountants, realtors, property managers, and combinations thereof. Charges, which vary according to the receiver's qualifications as well as to the work to be done, must be approved by the court.

EXAMPLE: Counsel should become familiar with the manner in which a particular court's list of "approved" receivers is compiled. In Los Angeles virtually anyone who wants to be included on the list will be added when the list is next revised; revisions are made quarterly. Applicants are asked to fill out a form indicating their areas of expertise and to provide the Court with a current resume. The burden is on counsel to determine whether a particular person's education and experience make that person an appropriate nominee in any given case. A person may be removed from the list if complaints about his or her performance are brought to the court's attention, but, as a general rule, removal occurs only when the person is no longer interested in serving as a receiver.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.54 3. Undertaking, Oath, and Order

If the receiver has been appointed ex parte and the appointment is confirmed, the receiver's oath and undertaking, and the applicant's undertaking given at that time, may stand. See §§33.48-33.49. However, on a showing that the amount initially set was too high or too low, the court may increase or decrease either the applicant's or the receiver's undertaking at the confirmation hearing or thereafter. If the appointment is made for the first time at the hearing, the receiver's oath and undertakings must be given before the order becomes effective. See CCP §§566-567.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.55 K. Review If Appointment Denied

An applicant must seek appellate relief by a petition for writ of mandate when a motion for appointment of a receiver is denied because the order denying appointment is not an appealable order. See CCP §904.2(h).

© The Regents of the University of California

VI. PROCEDURES OPPOSING OR CHALLENGING APPOINTMENT

§33.56 A. Opposition to Appointment of Receiver

To attack the appointment of a receiver at the hearing, either on a noticed motion or to confirm an appointment made ex parte, counsel must demonstrate that there is no genuine necessity for the receivership. See Morand v Superior Court (1974) 38 CA3d 347, 113 CR 281. Counsel should review the evidence presented by the applicant and raise as many legitimate objections as possible.

Specific facts in favor of the opposing party's position must be shown by admissible evidence, which is best presented in the form of declarations or affidavits. See §33.46. Facts establishing that the property is being responsibly managed, that the alleged harm is more imagined than real, and that the opposing parties are not likely to commit wrongful acts are the best defense. Where the facts are not helpful, counsel may want to advocate a less drastic alternative (see §33.3) or offer to stipulate to restraining orders to show good faith.

The opposition may also nominate a particular receiver in case the court grants the motion. This does not prejudice the opposing party's right to object to the appointment itself. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1177. On eligibility and procedures for selecting receiver, see §§33.52-33.54.

PRACTICE TIP: In a close case, particularly where it appears during argument that the judge is seriously considering the appointment of a receiver but has some serious doubts (either about the applicant's motive or the expense to the parties), opposing counsel might consider suggesting to the court that the expenses of the receivership be advanced by the party seeking the appointment, to be recovered if and when the party prevails on the merits. The applicant's reaction to the suggestion may be of interest in learning how strongly that party feels about the need for a receiver.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Review After Appointment Ordered

§33.57 1. Appealable Order

The opposing party may appeal an order appointing a receiver. CCP §§904.1(a)(7), 904.2(h); Brown v Memorial Nat'l Home Found. (1958) 158 CA2d 448, 456, 322 P2d 600; Pacific Broad. Co. v Superior Court (1929) 100 CA 649, 280 P 991.

However, the propriety of an order appointing a receiver is not subject to review after discharge and settlement of the final account. Kato v Busick (1916) 174 C 118, 162 P 108.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.58 2. Standard of Review

The power to appoint a receiver is within the trial court's discretion. If a sufficient showing is made for that appointment, the trial court's determination will not be overturned on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is established. Maggiora v Palo Alto Inn, Inc. (1967) 249 CA2d 706, 57 CR 787; Snidow v Hill (1948) 84 CA2d 702, 191 P2d 513.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.59 C. Motion to Vacate Appointment

Instead of appealing, the opposing party may move in the trial court to vacate the order of appointment as void or unwarranted. Haines v Commercial Mortgage Co. (1928) 206 C 10, 273 P 10; Lewis v Shaw (1926) 77 CA 99, 246 P 86.

PRACTICE TIP: New facts must be shown to persuade the court to change its order, and as a practical matter, the longer the delay between the time of the appointment and the motion to vacate, the less likely that vacation will be granted.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.60 D. Collateral Attack on Appointment of Receiver

If the appointment of the receiver is in some way in excess of the court's jurisdiction, the order is void and subject to collateral attack.

EXAMPLE: A person incarcerated for contempt for interfering with a receiver has been allowed, on habeas corpus, to show the invalidity of the order of appointment because disobedience of a void order cannot constitute contempt. In re Carroll (1933) 135 CA 672, 677, 28 P2d 84.

© The Regents of the University of California

VII. ADMINISTRATION OF RECEIVERSHIP

§33.61 A. Receiver's Powers and Duties

A receiver has only the powers given by statute under CCP §§568-570, by the order appointing him or her, and by any additional orders subsequently made by the court. A receiver is the agent of the court, not of the parties. Turner v Superior Court (1977) 72 CA3d 804, 813, 140 CR 475; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1179. A receiver's prohibited contracts, agreements, arrangements, and understandings are set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1179(b).

A receiver is an officer of the court, subject to its continuing control and instructions. Highland Sec. Co. v Superior Court (1931) 119 CA 107, 112, 6 P2d 116. Because the statutes are general, the court has substantial discretion to fashion orders suitable to the particular case, and the variety of authorizations is great.

PRACTICE TIP: The proposed order appointing a receiver (see §33.47) should be drafted carefully with the particular needs of the situation in mind. For example, should the receiver, if appointed, have the task of selling certain real property, operating an ongoing business, or overseeing the dissolution of a corporation? The receiver's duties should be set forth in detail so that the receiver has the authority to perform the tasks needed.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.62 1. General Powers Under Court Supervision

Under CCP §568, a receiver has power to act respecting the receivership property as the court may authorize, including:

- Bringing and defending actions in his or her own name;
- Taking and keeping possession of the property of the receivership estate;
- Receiving rents;
- Collecting and compromising claims; and
- Transferring property.

On power to bring and defend actions, see Ostrowski v Miller (1964) 226 CA2d 79, 37 CR 790. For discussion on employing counsel, see §33.66. See Turner v Superior Court (1977) 72 CA3d 804, 140 CR 475 ("rents and profits" receiver has no right to possession of property itself).

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.63 2. Deposit of Securities

Any securities in the receiver's possession may, by order of the court, be deposited in a securities depository as defined in Fin C §30004. CCP §568.1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.64 3. Sale of Property

A receiver may, by order of the court, sell real or personal property in the receiver's possession. CCP §568.5. The sale is subject to court approval, and is not final until confirmed. CCP §568.5. Cal-American Income Prop. Fund VII v Brown Dev. Corp. (1982) 138 CA3d 268, 274, 187 CR 703; People v Riverside Univ. (1973) 35 CA3d 572, 583, 111 CR 68.

The statute requires that a receiver selling real or personal property follow the notice and other procedural requirements set out in CCP §§701.510-701.680. CCP §568.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.65 4. Investment of Funds

Under CCP §569, a receiver authorized to manage funds may invest them in interest-bearing accounts. Miller v Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1935) 3 CA2d 580, 583, 40 P2d 951. The statute allows such accounts to be established in multiple financial institutions, requires that they be held in the name and for the benefit of the receivership estate, and further requires that:

- The deposits be fully guaranteed or insured under federal law;
- The financial institutions in which the funds are deposited not be a party to the action in which the receiver was appointed; and
- The receiver not own one percent or more in value of the outstanding stock of any financial institution in which the funds are deposited, not be an officer, director, or employee of such a financial institution, and not be a sibling, half-sibling, spouse, aunt, uncle, nephew, niece, ancestor, or lineal descendant of an owner, officer, employee, or director of such a financial institution.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.66 5. Employment of Counsel and Other Experts

A receiver must apply to the court for permission to retain an attorney. The application must be in writing and state (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1180):

- The necessity for the employment;
- The name of the attorney the receiver proposes to retain; and
- That the proposed attorney is not associated with or employed by an attorney for any party to the proceeding.

Attorney fees are subject to court approval. Macmorris Sales Corp. v Kozak (1967) 249 CA2d 998, 1005, 58 CR 92.

In complicated cases involving substantial assets, it is not unusual for the receiver to employ general counsel for advice, and, in addition, special counsel to prosecute and defend litigation involving the receivership estate.

Accountants and other experts may also be appointed. In every instance, prior court approval must be sought and obtained. For forms of application and order authorizing employment of counsel, see §§33.81-33.82.

§33.67 6. Abandonment of Worthless Property

A receiver may, with court approval, abandon worthless property. Helvey v United States Bldg. & Loan Ass'n (1947) 81 CA2d 647, 650, 184 P2d 919.

B. Other Duties

§33.68 1. Notices

The receiver must notify the State Franchise Tax Board (Rev & T C §§18650, 25672b) and the Internal Revenue Service of his or her appointment (IRC §6036). If the receivership involves a commercial operation, the receiver should probably also notify the State Board of Equalization in connection with sales tax obligations.

The receiver who is appointed to operate a licensed business must notify the licensing agency and confirm that the receivership is not in violation of licensing requirements in operating the business. If necessary, temporary licenses must be secured.

In cases involving receiverships of rental property, CC §1950.5(h) requires the landlord or the landlord's agent to give notice of the transfer of tenants' trust funds. If the business is a franchise, the franchisor should be notified.

A receiver who has funds belonging to a person whose whereabouts are unknown must publish notice in the manner prescribed by statute, and, if the funds remain unclaimed, must pay them into the state treasury on order of the court. See CCP §570.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.69 2. Inventory; Accounts; Real Property Taxes

The receiver, in addition to carrying out the orders of the court (see CCP §567), has the following duties:

- To file an inventory within 10 days after appointment, listing all property in the receiver's possession (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1181), and thereafter to supplement the inventory as necessary (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1181(b)).
- To present accounts for settlement to the court on noticed motion or stipulation. If any allowance of compensation for the receiver or for an attorney is claimed in the account, it must state in detail what services have been performed by the receiver or the attorney, and whether previous allowances were made to the receiver or attorney and the amounts. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1184(a). Additional notice is required if service is by mail. See CCP §1013(a); §33.47 (frequency of accounts may be specified in order).
- To pay real property taxes that fall due during the period of the receivership. Schreiber v Ditch Rd. Investors (1980) 105 CA3d 675, 680, 164 CR 633.
- To provide monthly reports to the parties and if requested, to nonparty client lien holders. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1182 (also specifying contents of reports).

§33.70 C. Other Receivership Matters

- Receiver does not take title. The receiver takes possession only; title to the property remains in those who had it at the time of the receiver's appointment. North v Cecil B. DeMille Prods. (1934) 2 C2d 55, 57, 39 P2d 199.
- Court's permission necessary to sue receiver. A receiver may be sued, in his or her official capacity, only by permission of the court. Ostrowski v Miller (1964) 226 CA2d 79, 37 CR 790. However, the receiver is not personally liable for torts committed in the performance of the receivership duties; liability is in the receiver's official capacity only, to be satisfied from receivership funds. Chiesur v Superior Court (1946) 76 CA2d 198, 202, 172 P2d 763.
- Receiver as employer for workers' compensation purposes. A receiver may be an employer for purposes of workers' compensation liability. Pacific Indem. Co. v CAB (1968) 258 CA2d 35, 40, 65 CR 429.
- Interference with receiver as contempt. Interference with the receivership is punishable as contempt. Strain v Superior Court (1914) 168 C 216, 220, 142 P 62; In re Morello (1932) 121 CA 480, 485, 9 P2d 565.

VIII. TERMINATION OF RECEIVERSHIP

§33.71 A. Receiver's Accounts

When the receiver's duties are completed, either by a pretrial order of court or by entry of judgment, the receiver must present a report and account to the court on noticed motion or stipulation to all parties appearing in the action. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1185(a). Additional notice is required if service is by mail. See CCP §1013(a).

The court will require an itemized accounting, together with a report outlining the proceedings taken by the receiver throughout the receivership or at least since the last accounting. Seccombe v Dionne (1935) 3 CA2d 731, 734, 40 P2d 299.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.72 B. Receiver's and Attorney's Compensation

The receiver's final report and accounting should include an itemization of compensation proposed to be paid to the receiver and to any attorneys or others employed under court order. The report must state in detail the services that have been performed by the receiver and the attorney, and whether previous payments have been made. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1184(d).

The receiver's compensation is payable out of the estate unless the appointment of the receiver is void. Baldwin v Baldwin (1947) 82 CA2d 851, 856, 187 P2d 429. On procedures for employing counsel, see §33.66.

© The Regents of the University of California

§33.73 C. Discharge of Receiver

When the receiver's final report and account are settled and approved and all funds disbursed, the receiver is ordered discharged and the bonds exonerated. Generally, after discharge a receiver has no official duties and is not a proper party to any action. Brockway Land & Water Co. v County of Placer (1954) 124 CA2d 371, 375, 268 P2d 524. The order discharging the receiver is res judicata and bars all claims against the receiver, both personally and on the bond, for failure to faithfully discharge his or her duties. Aviation Brake Sys., Ltd. v Voorhis (1982) 133 CA3d 230, 183 CR 766.

However, a discharge order is not a bar when the receiver fails (1) to inform the court of all claims affecting the receivership before obtaining the order, or (2) to give notice to plaintiffs in a pending lawsuit of the discharge proceedings. Vitug v Griffin (1989) 214 CA3d 488, 262 CR 588. The court noted that the receiver may incur personal liability for disbursing all receivership assets without giving notice to plaintiffs.

A court order discharging a receiver and exonerating the bond does not release the receiver or the receiver's surety from liability for acts or omissions during the receivership when a judgment is obtained against the receiver prior to the time of the receiver's discharge. Administrative Mgmt. Servs. v Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1979) 89 CA3d 532, 152 CR 620.

After considering the verified complaint, declarations, and other evidence submitted, the Court finds that _ _[name of receiver]_ _ is qualified to act as receiver, and irreparable injury would be suffered by _ _[e.g., plaintiff]_ _, _ _[name]_ _, during the time necessary for hearing on notice for the appointment of a receiver.

Comment: On undertakings required by both applicant and receiver before ex parte order may be issued, see §§33.48-33.49. The alternative provisions for a temporary restraining order and order to show cause should almost always be included in a proposed ex parte order. The court will strike the parts of the proposed order that do not reflect its rulings. On procedures for injunctions generally, see chap 32.

In a rents, issues, and profits receivership, the optional forms of Order to Show Cause and Temporary Restraining Order (Judicial Council Form RC-300) and Order Appointing Receiver (Judicial Council Form RC-310) may be used. I. INTRODUCTION

§34.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses deposit in court, which is a provisional remedy used to preserve a fund of money or items of property during litigation. It first sets forth an overview (see §§34.3-34.10), then discusses the statutory requirements and constitutionality (see §34.10), and then discusses procedure (see §§34.11-34.23).

§34.2 B. Governing Law

Deposit in court is governed by CCP §572.

© The Regents of the University of California

II. OVERVIEW

§34.3 A. Deposit in Court as Provisional Remedy

Deposit in court is a provisional remedy used to preserve a fund of money or items of property during litigation. A party seeking to obtain possession of the fund or item uses this remedy when the holder of the fund or item, who has been made a party in the suit, has admitted, in the pleadings or on examination, that he or she is not legally entitled to ultimate ownership. See §34.10 on requirements.

EXAMPLE: (1) A person who receives rents from tenants may be required to deposit them until the true owner of the property is determined, and (2) a trustee, designated or constructive, may be ordered to deposit the trust res until the identity and shares of beneficiaries are determined.

In addition to preventing loss of assets during a lawsuit, the remedy may also be used to obtain an early court ruling on entitlement to money or property (see §34.11).

NOTE: Formerly under CCP §995.710, a party who had been required to give a surety bond or undertaking in a civil action could instead deposit money or specified kinds of securities. Although any such deposit made before January 1, 1999, may continue to be used, former CCP §995.710 is not available after that date. CCP §995.710(a), (e).

B. Other Procedures Compared

§34.4 1. Interpleader

A holder of money or property who asserts no claim to it and against whom multiple claims have been, or may be, made, may use interpleader to avoid further involvement. The interpleading party deposits the asset with the court and leaves it to the interpleaded parties to assert and prove their claims to it. See chap 28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§34.5 2. Attachment

A creditor seeking the payment of money may use the attachment procedure to secure collectibility of the expected judgment by preventing the defendant from disposing of specified assets until the judgment can be obtained. The affected assets are not deposited with the court. For procedures, see Debt Collection Practice in California §§6.1-6.110 (2d ed Cal CEB 1999).

© The Regents of the University of California

§34.6 3. Claim and Delivery

A creditor seeking possession of tangible personal property may use the writ of possession procedure to require the sheriff to seize the property and deliver it to the creditor or, if it is perishable or depreciating, sell it and deposit the proceeds with the court. For procedures, see Debt Collection Practice in California §§6.111-6.166 (2d ed Cal CEB 1999).

© The Regents of the University of California

§34.7 4. Defendant's Deposit of Previously Tendered Amount

A defendant who is sued for the recovery of money only and who had, before the suit was filed, tendered the full amount then owed, may, under CCP §1025:

- Prevent the plaintiff from obtaining a judgment for a larger amount than was tendered;
- Prevent the plaintiff from recovering costs; and
- Require the plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs.

The defendant's answer must allege the tender of the full amount to which the plaintiff was entitled on a date that preceded the date the plaintiff's suit was filed, and may allege that the deposit of that amount in court has been, or is being, made. This procedure is useful to a defendant who has the money and willingness to make the deposit.

A defendant who is unable or unwilling to deposit the amount tendered may still allege and prove the amount, date, and place of a prior tender as a basis for defending the suit. See CC §1485; 1 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Contracts §§769-775 (10th ed 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§34.8 5. Offer of Judgment Under CCP §998

A defendant in any action may serve on the plaintiff an offer in writing to allow judgment to be taken in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the offer. CCP §998. A plaintiff who does not accept a properly made offer, and who fails to obtain a more favorable judgment, may not recover costs and must pay the defendant's costs from the time of the offer. See chap 47 for procedure and discussion.

§34.9 III. STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS; CONSTITUTIONALITY

Code of Civil Procedure §572, which governs the procedure for deposit in court, lists the following requirements:

> If it is admitted by the pleadings or shown on the examination of a party to the action, that the party has possession or control of any money or other thing capable of delivery, which is the subject of the litigation and is held by the party as trustee for another party, belongs to another party, is due to another party, or should, under the circumstances of the case, be held by the court, pending final disposition of the action, then the court may, on motion, order the money or property to be deposited in court or delivered to the other party, on just conditions, subject to further direction of the court.

Cases have interpreted §572 to require that the moving party establish that he or she has an immediate right to the money or property and that the party who has or controls it asserts no right to retain it and admits, free of any condition, that the moving party is entitled to it or at least has an absolute interest in it. Green v Duvergey (1905) 146 C 379, 385, 80 P 234; F`rey v Superior Court (1913) 22 CA 421, 425, 134 P 733. If the holding party has not admitted the moving party's right, or claims title to any part of it, the question of title must be resolved by a judicial determination after an evidentiary hearing, not by a summary procedure. Ex parte Casey (1886) 71 C 269, 12 P 118; In re Elias (1962) 209 CA2d 262, 273, 25 CR 739.

NOTE: Without an admission or appropriate proof the court has no jurisdiction to order the defendant to deposit funds or money, and subsequent contempt proceedings for failure to do so are void. In re Elias, supra.

Constitutional restrictions against the taking of property without a hearing, discussed in Sniadach v Family Fin. Corp. (1969) 395 US 337, 23 L Ed 2d 349, 89 S Ct 1820, appear to be obviated if the moving party meets the CCP §572 requirement that there has been a showing in the pleadings or by examination of the holding party that the property is held in trust or belongs to, or is owed to, another party.

IV. PROCEDURE

§34.10 A. Timing

The deposit in court remedy is invoked by filing a notice of motion after the defendant (1) has answered the complaint, if the answer admits the required facts (see §34.10), or (2) has been examined and the examination shows the required facts.

Two advantages in moving for deposit in court early in the case are:

- The earlier the order is obtained, the more likely the money or property will be preserved.
- The evidentiary showing made to obtain the order for deposit may sufficiently show the moving party's entitlement to the money or property to obviate the need for investigation, discovery, or trial.

At least 16 court days' notice is required, which is increased if the notice of motion is served by mail. CCP §1005(b). The amount of the increase depends on the location from which and to which the notice is mailed. If the notice is mailed from a California address to another California address, the notice period is increased by at least 5 calendar days before the date set for the hearing. If the notice is mailed to or from an address outside California but in the United States, the period is increased by 10 calendar days. If the notice is mailed to or from an address outside the United States, the time is increased by 20 calendar days. These time requirements may be shortened by court order. CCP §1005(b). See generally chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§34.11 B. Need for Noticed Motion

Constitutional strictures on the use of provisional remedies (see §34.10) strongly suggest that there must be a noticed motion to obtain an order under CCP §572. A noticed motion is required even when the moving party intends to rely not on testimony but on an express admission in verified pleadings.

© The Regents of the University of California

§34.12 C. Moving Party's Papers

The party who seeks to require another party to deposit money or property in court must file with the court, and serve on all other parties in the lawsuit, the following papers:

- Notice of motion and motion for the order (see §34.14 and form in §34.25);
- Supporting memorandum (see §34.17);
- Declaration supporting the motion (see §34.15 and form in §34.26);
- Exhibits (see §34.16);
- The proposed order (see §34.20 and form in §34.27); and
- Proof of service (see chap 17).

For discussion of filing and service of motion papers, see chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§34.13 1. Notice of Motion

As in all notices of motion, the "nature of the order being sought" and the "grounds for issuance of the order" must be stated in the first paragraph of the notice of motion. See generally chap 12. Examples of "the nature" and "the grounds" are shown in the form in §34.25.

The papers on which the motion is based, which should be described briefly in the second paragraph of the notice of motion, may include:

- A certified copy of the reporter's transcript of a previous examination or hearing; and
- A copy of the transcript of deposition testimony.

A moving party who intends to examine a witness at the hearing on the motion should so state in the second paragraph of the notice of motion.

NOTE: Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(a), oral testimony is permitted only at the court's discretion, for good cause (which may be shown in a supporting declaration, and after timely submission of a summary of the expected testimony). See §34.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§34.14 2. Declaration Supporting Motion

The notice of motion for deposit in court is normally accompanied by the declaration of the moving party that states, under penalty of perjury, facts showing that:

- The defendant has possession or control of a described sum of money or of described depositable property;
- The defendant holds or controls the money or property as a trustee for a named person, if such is the case;
- The money or property is the subject of the lawsuit;
- The moving party is entitled to possession of the money or property; and
- Under the prevailing described circumstances, the money or property should be held by the court or delivered to the moving party until final disposition of the lawsuit.

The declaration should refer to the parts of the pleadings, or of the defendant's testimony in an examination, that constitute an admission of the above facts by the defendant. Copies of relevant pages of the pleadings or transcript should be attached as exhibits. See form in §34.26.

© The Regents of the University of California

§34.15 3. Exhibits

Exhibits supporting the motion may be attached to the packet of motion papers or to a particular paper, such as a declaration or a memorandum. See generally chap 12.

If testimony recorded at a prior hearing is relied on, it can be furnished in the form of a reporter's transcript, certified by the reporter as a true and correct report of the witness's testimony.

Pages from a deposition transcript can be referred to in a declaration or memorandum to which copies of the pages are attached. If the original deposition has been filed with the court, the court may be requested to take judicial notice of the deposition. If the original deposition has not been filed with the court, arrangements can be made for it to be present at the hearing. The court at the hearing will decide both the authenticity of previous testimony and whether it constitutes the required proof.

© The Regents of the University of California

§34.16 4. Supporting Memorandum

The memorandum in support of the motion that must accompany the notice of motion (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), 3.1113(a)) should cite CCP §572, singling out the particular grounds for invoking the remedy. For example:

THE COURT MAY ORDER PROPERTY THAT IS CAPABLE OF DELIVERY TO BE DEPOSITED IN COURT, PENDING FINAL DETERMINATION OF THE ACTION WHEN THE PROPERTY IS THE SUBJECT OF THE LITIGATION, AND THAT IS HELD BY THE DEFENDANT AS A TRUSTEE FOR ANOTHER PARTY.

Code of Civil Procedure §572.

The memorandum should continue with any other applicable points and authorities.

© The Regents of the University of California

§34.17 D. Opposition to Motion

A respondent who wishes to oppose the motion for deposit in court should file an opposing declaration, stating the reasons deposit should not be made and facts supporting those reasons. For example, a defendant can use a declaration to show that money or property in his or her possession, or under his or her control, is not the subject of the litigation, does not belong to and is not owed to another party, or is not held by him or her as trustee for another party.

If the moving party contends that there is an admission in a pleading, or in previous testimony, on which the moving party relies, the declaration in opposition may controvert this contention. However, if the moving party's contention rests on an interpretation of the statement constituting the alleged admission, there may be no need to controvert in an opposing declaration.

When the moving party prevails, the court may order the deposit to be made on such conditions as may be just, subject to further direction of the court. CCP §572. Therefore, it may be desirable for an opposing declaration to state any facts that may support a request that the court make its order conditional or subject to future review.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/34 Deposit in Court/§34.18 E. Evidentiary Showing Required

§34.18 E. Evidentiary Showing Required

For the moving party to prevail, counsel must show that the property is:

- In the possession or under the control of a party to the action;
- Money or another thing capable of delivery;
- The subject of litigation; and
- Held as trustee for another party or belongs or is due to another party.

Frey v Superior Court (1913) 22 CA 421, 425, 134 P 733; Burke v Superior Court (1907) 7 CA 178, 93 P 1058.

These facts must be shown by examination or admission in the pleadings by the party holding the property. CCP §572; In re Elias (1962) 209 CA2d 262, 25 CR 739; Burke v Superior Court, supra.

WARNING: The facts may not be shown by testimony of the moving party or third party witnesses. Green v Duvergey (1905) 146 C 379, 80 P 234; In re Elias, supra.

§34.19 F. Effect of Order; Court's Duties

An order under CCP §572 puts the property in custody of law; without an order even funds deposited with the court clerk are not technically in custody of law. Union Bank & Trust Co. v County of Los Angeles (1934) 2 CA2d 600, 38 P2d 442, disapproved on other grounds in Minsky v City of Los Angeles (1974) 11 C3d 113, 123, 113 CR 102.

If the property is held in custody of law, the court has the duty to administer the funds. This duty includes requiring payment of money in conformance with its direction (Michal v Adair (1944) 66 CA2d 382, 152 P2d 490) and distributing funds to those shown to be entitled after final judgment (Vallelunga v Gomes (1951) 102 CA2d 374, 227 P2d 550). The court's custody and jurisdiction over the deposit may continue past entry of judgment or dismissal of the action. Vallelunga v Gomes, supra. The court's control, however, does not give it the right to make use of the funds; it can only hold them for safekeeping. Metropolitan Water Dist. v Adams (1948) 32 C2d 620, 197 P2d 543.

Money paid into or deposited in the court under CCP §572 must be deposited with the court's treasurer according to the procedures set forth in Govt C §68084. CCP §573.

§34.21 H. Application for Enforcement Order Under CCP §574 After Party's Refusal to Deposit or Deliver

When a court has ordered the deposit or delivery of money or other property and the order is disobeyed, the court, besides punishing the disobedience, may render an order requiring the sheriff, constable, or marshal to take the money or property in deposit or deliver it as the court directs. CCP §574.

To obtain such an enforcement order, an application for the order under §574 must be filed and presented to the court together with a proposed order directing the sheriff, constable, or marshal to enforce the CCP §572 order. See CCP §1003. The application may be in the form of the declaration for the order. In some counties, the sheriff's office wishes to have the fee for the service stated on the order.

The court may take judicial notice of the existence of its earlier order. Evid C §452(d). It is important that this order include:

- A specific description of the levying officer, including the officer's county;
- A specific description of the property, e.g., the make, model, and name of the registered and legal owner of an automobile;
- A specific direction concerning disposal of the property; and
- The exact caption and case number.

The order given to the levying officer must be the original or a certified copy. See §34.27 for form of order.

© The Regents of the University of California

§34.22 I. Notice and Order for Obtaining Disbursement of Funds

The court that made a deposit in custody of law (see §34.20) has the power, after notice to all interested parties and after a proper hearing, to distribute the deposit to one who can show entitlement to it. Lord v Superior Court (1946) 27 C2d 855, 168 P2d 14. The motion for an order for distribution is usually made in the original action, although it may be made after the final judgment has been entered. Vallelunga v Gomes (1951) 102 CA2d 374, 227 P2d 550. Certain courts have local rules on obtaining disbursement of deposits. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 3.1(a)-(b).

Distribution must be made from the funds deposited in the original case. No order can be made to disburse funds deposited in a suit that does not include the same parties. See City of Los Angeles v Knapp (1937) 22 CA2d 211, 70 P2d 643. If the money has been deposited with the county treasurer (see §34.21), the order must direct the auditor to draw a warrant and the treasurer to pay it. Govt C §68084.

The order may provide for a disbursement not only of the principal amount but also of interest on the deposit earned while the treasurer had the funds deposited in a bank. See Govt C §§53630-53681; Ostly v Saper (1957) 147 CA2d 671, 675, 305 P2d 946. Costs of protecting money while it is on deposit are deducted from the deposit. Adair v Bank of America (1938) 303 US 350, 82 L Ed 889, 58 S Ct 594.

I. INTRODUCTION

§35.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses the rules and procedures applicable to declaratory relief actions in state court, including factors to consider before seeking declaratory relief (see §§35.16-35.22) and procedures (see §§35.30-35.49). It also contains a checklist (see §35.50) and forms (see §§35.51-35.53).

Federal declaratory relief practice is not discussed. For federal statutory authority concerning declaratory relief, see 28 USC §2201. See also Fed R Civ P 57.

§35.2 B. Governing Law: The Declaratory Judgment Act

The California Declaratory Judgment Act is set forth in CCP §§1060-1062.5. Section 1060 provides as follows:

> Any person interested under a written instrument, excluding a will or a trust, or under a contract, or who desires a declaration of his rights or duties with respect to another, or in respect to, in, over or upon property, or with respect to the location of the natural channel of a watercourse, may, in cases of actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties, bring an original action or cross-complaint in the superior court for a declaration of his or her rights and duties in the premises, including a determination of any question of construction or validity arising under the instrument or contract. He or she may ask for a declaration of rights or duties, either alone or with other relief; and the court may make a binding declaration of these rights or duties, whether or not further relief is or could be claimed at the time. The declaration may be either affirmative or negative in form and effect, and the declaration shall have the force of a final judgment. The declaration may be had before there has been any breach of the obligation in respect to which said declaration is sought.

NOTE: The court may grant declaratory relief in a limited civil case only when (CCP §86(a)(7)):

- A litigant brings a cross-complaint as to a right of indemnity with respect to the relief sought in the action; and
- A party to nonbinding attorney fee arbitration seeks a trial under Bus & P C §6204, and the total amount in controversy is $25,000 or less.

Two specific types of declaratory relief actions are authorized in CCP §§1060.5 and 1062.5. Section 1060.5 permits an individual claiming to be a nonresident of California for the purposes of the Personal Income Tax Law to commence a declaratory relief action to determine his or her residence within California under the conditions and circumstances specified in Rev & T C §19381. Section 1062.5 authorizes declaratory relief action concerning rights, duties, and obligations under policies of professional liability insurance issued to health care providers for professional negligence.

For discussion of CCP §1061, see §§35.21-35.22. For discussion of CCP §1062, see §35.16. For discussion of CCP §1062.3, see §35.43.

II. OVERVIEW

§35.3 A. Purpose of Declaratory Judgment Procedure

The declaratory relief procedure is designed to provide a vehicle for preventive justice. It operates prospectively rather than to redress merely past wrongs. Its purpose is to "set controversies at rest before they lead to repudiation of obligations, invasions of rights or commissions of wrongs." Travers v Louden (1967) 254 CA2d 926, 931, 62 CR 654. The procedure enables the parties to adjudicate their respective rights and obligations to relieve them from uncertainty or insecurity respecting "rights, status and other legal relations." Lortz v Connell (1969) 273 CA2d 286, 301, 78 CR 6. See Babb v Superior Court (1971) 3 C3d 841, 848, 92 CR 179 (purpose of judicial declaration of rights in advance of tortious incident is to enable parties to shape conduct to avoid breach); Fagerstedt v Continental Ins. Co. (1968) 266 CA2d 370, 72 CR 126 (purpose to liquidate uncertainties and controversies that might result in future litigation).

Although the form of declaratory relief varies depending on the case, the essence of declaratory relief is that when an actual controversy exists (see §§35.11-35.15) a party may bring an action seeking an authoritative determination and declaration of "the jural relationships between parties to a controversy" before the occurrence of actual breach or harm. Comment, Developments in the Law, Declaratory Judgments—1941-1949, 62 Harv L Rev 787 (1949). Under the procedure the court declares rights rather than executing them. Travers v Louden, supra.

NOTE: Because of the prospective nature of declaratory relief, CCP §§426.10-426.70, requiring a defendant to assert in a cross-complaint any related cause of action against plaintiff, are not applicable to actions for declaratory judgment. CCP §426.60(c).

§35.4 B. Applicability of Equitable Principles

Declaratory relief actions have at times been characterized as in the nature of equitable proceedings. See Westerholm v Twentieth Century Ins. Co. (1976) 58 CA3d 628, 632 n1, 130 CR 164; Merigan v Bauer (1962) 206 CA2d 616, 23 CR 872. See also Adams v Cook (1940) 15 C2d 352, 362, 101 P2d 484 (action under CCP §1060 for declaratory relief is an equitable proceeding). Declaratory relief has also been characterized as not being strictly legal or equitable, but as being sui generis in nature. Moss v Moss (1942) 20 C2d 640, 643, 128 P2d 526.

In any event, in all declaratory relief actions courts exercise the same wide latitude in the formulation of judgments that is exercised in equitable actions (City of Los Angeles v City of Glendale (1943) 23 C2d 68, 81, 142 P2d 289; Munson v Linnick (1967) 255 CA2d 589, 595, 63 CR 340, disapproved on other grounds in Babb v Superior Court (1971) 3 C3d 841, 92 CR 179), and consider and apply equitable principles and doctrines (Hollenbeck Lodge v Wilshire Blvd. Temple (1959) 175 CA2d 469, 346 P2d 422; Beeler v Plastic Stamping, Inc. (1956) 144 CA2d 306, 300 P2d 852; Merigan v Bauer, supra).

On the other hand, a declaratory relief action is not subject to requirements of equity actions such as irreparable injury or inadequacy of a legal remedy, even though equitable defenses, e.g., in pari delicto, unclean hands, or laches, may induce a court to exercise its discretion not to issue a declaration. See Moss v Moss, supra.

Moreover, a party is entitled to a trial by jury as to those issues of fact normally triable to a jury. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1956) 47 C2d 428, 431, 304 P2d 13. See §35.44.

§35.5 C. Advantages of the Declaratory Judgment Procedure

When a dispute is capable of resolution by an action for declaratory relief, such an action under the Declaratory Judgment Act (see §35.2) can provide certain advantages to the party desiring to bring it. Some of them are listed below:

- Code of Civil Procedure §1062.3 provides for trial-setting preference over all other civil actions with certain exceptions (see §35.43);
- The parties can resolve disputes before actual damage occurs or irreversible damage is caused by the repudiation of an agreement;
- Such actions allow a party to seek the resolution of a contract dispute before being forced to act on an interpretation that would create a breach of that contract;
- Competing interests of several parties over property can be resolved in one action;
- The application or validity of a statute, ordinance or regulation may be clarified or resolved;
- Certain disputes that would normally be determined in successive actions may be determined in one action, e.g., questions of indemnification; and
- Under CCP §1062, a declaratory judgment under the California Declaratory Judgment Act does not preclude a party from obtaining other appropriate relief. See §35.16.

§35.6 D. Other Statutory Authority Providing for Some Type of Declaratory Relief

In addition to the California Declaratory Judgment Act (see §35.2), there are some statutes that in certain instances either authorize a specific type of declaratory relief action or authorize an action seeking what amounts to a type of declaratory relief. Some of those statutes are noted in §§35.7-35.8.

§35.7 1. Government Code

Some Government Code sections authorizing declaratory relief actions or what amounts to declaratory relief in certain instances are noted below:

- Govt C §§11350-11350.3 (to challenge the validity of any administrative regulation, or to declare valid regulations disapproved by the Office of Administrative Law).
- Govt C §§11130-11130.3 (to prevent or challenge actions by a state governmental body in violation of the open meeting laws).
- Govt C §§6258, 9076 (to enforce the right to inspect or receive public records or to inspect legislative records).

§35.8 2. Other Statutes

Statutes other than those referred to in §35.7 may provide for declaratory relief or what amounts to declaratory relief in specific instances. Some examples of such statutes are:

- CC §1203 (to correct or prove an instrument).
- CCP §§751.02, 760.020, 801.2 (to declare and determine various property interests).
- CCP §803 (quo warranto actions).
- CCP §860 (validation proceedings by or against public agencies).
- CCP §§1240.690-1240.700 (to determine which is best and most necessary public use of property sought to be acquired for state, county, and city highways, roads, and streets).
- Corp C §709 (to determine the validity of corporate elections).
- Corp C §1904 (to determine matters concerning the winding up of a corporation).
- Elec C §2142 (to determine the right of a person to be registered to vote).
- Elec C §§16000-16940 (to challenge election results or to settle contested elections).
- Elec C §21504 (to challenge census data used for legislative redistricting).
- Fam C §309 (to determine and declare the validity of a marriage).
- Fam C §§7630-7634 (to determine the existence of the father-child relationship).
- Fam C §7650 (to determine the existence of the mother-child relationship).
- Prob C §200 (to establish fact of death).
- Pub Res C §21167 (to challenge acts or decisions of public agencies regarding environmental impact reports).
- Pub Res C §30803 (declaratory and equitable relief to restrain violations of the California Coastal Conservation Act).
- Rev & T C §4808 (taxpayer challenge to property tax assessment).

III. REQUIREMENTS

A. Who May Obtain Relief

§35.9 1. Standing Generally; Class Actions

The concept of standing to bring a declaratory relief action must be considered in conjunction with the requirement that an actual controversy between the parties be present. Absent an actual controversy over a matter subject to a declaratory relief action, there is no justiciability and therefore no standing. See California Water & Tel. Co. v County of Los Angeles (1967) 253 CA2d 16, 61 CR 618. "The concept of justiciability involves the intertwined criteria of ripeness and standing." 253 CA2d at 22. On the "actual controversy" requirement, see §§35.11-35.15.

Under CCP §1060, any person may seek declaratory relief who is interested under a contract or under a written instrument, excluding a trust or will, or who desires a declaration of his or her rights concerning (a) another, (b) property, or (c) the location of the natural channel of a watercourse. The word "person" includes corporations and other entities (CCP §17(a); Oil Workers Int'l Union v Superior Court (1951) 103 CA2d 512, 570, 230 P2d 71), and the word "property" includes both real and personal property (CCP §17(b)(1)).

Thus, a party must be "interested" in order to bring a declaratory relief action. See Residents of Beverly Glen, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (1973) 34 CA3d 117, 125, 109 CR 724. Presumably, the term "interested person" as used in CCP §1160 is construed to be identical with that used in Govt C §§11350-11350.3 (see §35.10). See Residents of Beverly Glen, Inc. v City of Los Angeles, supra (construing former Govt C §11440). See also Pacific Legal Found. v Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1977) 74 CA3d 150, 154, 141 CR 474 (construing terms "interested person" or "interested organization" in Un Ins C §409.2 as similar to term "interested person" in CCP §1160 and former Govt C §11440). A party does not have standing to bring a declaratory relief action if the party, or those whom the party represents, "does not have a real interest in the ultimate adjudication because the actor has neither suffered nor is about to suffer any injury of sufficient magnitude reasonably to assure that all of the relevant facts and issues will be adequately presented." California Water & Tel. Co., 253 CA2d at 23. For further discussion of concept of "interested person," see §35.10.

It is not necessary that there be a written legal instrument between the parties to support standing. In Siciliano v Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1976) 62 CA3d 745, 753, 133 CR 376, the court stated that "section 1060 does not require the existence of a legal instrument between parties as a predicate for declaratory relief." In that case, an attorney who was discharged by the client filed a declaratory relief action against an insurance company that had settled directly with the attorney's client, knowing that the attorney had a contingent fee contract with the client that provided for a lien. See Gardiner v Gaither (1958) 162 CA2d 607, 621, 329 P2d 22 (person having "rights flowing from a contract has an 'interest' in that contract" and should be able to obtain declaration of the character and extent of such rights; creditors of one party to contract could seek declaration construing contract as creating partnership).

On an intended third-party beneficiary under an insurance policy between other parties having a sufficient interest to have standing to seek declaratory relief when the insurer denied coverage, see Omaha Indem. Co. v Superior Court (1989) 209 CA3d 1266, 258 CR 66 (general liability policy).

NOTE: A declaratory relief action may be brought on behalf of a class. See, e.g., Serrano v Priest (1971) 5 C3d 584, 96 CR 601. To bring such a suit, however, "[o]rdinarily, the plaintiff must be a member of the class [the plaintiff] claims to represent." 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §298 (5th ed 2008). See CCP §382; Residents of Beverly Glen, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (1973) 34 CA3d 117, 126, 109 CR 724. The plaintiff must be able to fairly protect the rights of the group that plaintiff purports to represent. Residents of Beverly Glen, Inc. v City of Los Angeles, supra; 4 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §264. Whether plaintiff can do this is a question of fact for the court which depends on the facts and circumstances of each case. See Residents of Beverly Glen, Inc. v City of Los Angeles, supra; 4 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §298. Moreover, there must be a common or general interest between the class members concerning the questions of law or fact involved. See CCP §382; Residents of Beverly Glen, Inc., 34 CA3d at 126 n10; 4 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §281. On class actions generally, see 4 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §§267-331.

§35.10 2. Challenges Concerning Governmental Action: Statutes, Ordinances, Charters, Regulations

The validity or interpretation of statutes, ordinances, charters, and regulations in an appropriate case may be the subject of a declaratory relief action. See Cardellini v Casey (1986) 181 CA3d 389, 397, 226 CR 659; California Water & Tel. Co. v County of Los Angeles (1967) 253 CA2d 16, 24, 61 CR 618. The constitutionality of a statute may also be challenged by seeking declaratory relief. See Wolfe v George (9th Cir 2007) 486 F3d 1120 (declaratory relief challenged constitutionality of California's vexatious litigant law (CCP §391)). A party is not required to violate the provisions of such a statute, ordinance, charter, or regulation and subject itself to a criminal prosecution, disciplinary proceedings, or other liability. See Chas. L. Harney, Inc. v Contractors' State License Bd. (1952) 39 C2d 561, 247 P2d 913 (administrative regulation); California Water & Tel. Co. v County of Los Angeles, supra (penal statutes, ordinances). See also K. & W. Pharmacy, Inc. v State Dep't of Soc. Welfare (1969) 275 CA2d 139, 79 CR 598 (administrative regulations). Similarly, in certain instances, the validity of an administrative appeals board precedent-making decision may be subject to a declaratory relief action. See, e.g., Pacific Legal Found. v Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1977) 74 CA3d 150, 141 CR 474 (Unemployment Appeals Board precedent decision finding eligibility for benefits; Board's precedent decision equated with administrative regulation).

Government Code §11350 provides that "[a]ny interested person may obtain a judicial declaration as to the validity of any regulation or order of repeal by bringing an action for declaratory relief in the superior court in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure." See Govt C §11350.3 containing similar language concerning regulations or orders of repeal disapproved under Govt C §11349.3 or §11349.6, or regulations ordered repealed under §11349.7. Presumably, the term "interested person" as used in the above Government Code sections is identical with that term as used in CCP §1060. See Residents of Beverly Glen, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (1973) 34 CA3d 117, 125, 109 CR 724 (term "interested person" in former Govt C §11440 (now Govt C §11350) construed as same as in CCP §1060; includes either the plaintiff organization or its members who might be impacted by challenged action); Pacific Legal Found., 74 CA3d at 154 (terms "interested person" and "interested organization" in Un Ins C §409.2 interchangeable and subject to prior judicial interpretation under CCP §1060 and former Govt C §11440). By its express terms, a declaratory relief action under Govt C §11350 proceeds under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure dealing with declaratory relief. See K. & W. Pharmacy, Inc. v State Dep't of Soc. Welfare, supra.

Thus, a party may be an "interested person" under Govt C §11350 if it or its members may be affected by or subject to the challenged regulation. Environmental Protection Info. Ctr. v Department of Forestry & Fire Protection (1996) 43 CA4th 1011, 50 CR2d 892 (plaintiff organization with members in three timber producing counties had standing to contest regulation exempting certain timber operations from preparing timber harvest plan); Pacific Legal Found., 74 CA3d at 154 (plaintiff, a nonprofit corporation, deemed interested organization under Un Ins C §409.2 to bring declaratory relief action to determine validity of Unemployment Insurance Appeal Board's decision granting benefits, although the decision was not directly addressed to plaintiff, because its effect may be applicable in the future in the event of termination of employment of an employee of plaintiff). Similarly, a person or entity challenging the validity or interpretation of a statute, ordinance, or charter must have a real interest in the ultimate adjudication of the matter (see California Water & Tel. Co. v County of Los Angeles, supra) and the general rules applicable to standing apply. See §35.9. The party must have sustained or be in immediate danger of sustaining some direct injury as a result of enforcement of the statute, as opposed to merely suffering "in some indefinite way in common with people generally" for the party to have standing. Zetterberg v State Dep't of Pub. Health (1974) 43 CA3d 657, 663, 118 CR 100.

NOTE: Declaratory relief is inappropriate to review an adjudicatory administrative decision. State v Superior Court (Veta Co.) (1974) 12 C3d 237, 249, 115 CR 497. Administrative mandamus under CCP §1094.5 is the appropriate procedure to accomplish this. See Selby Realty Co. v City of San Buenaventura (1973) 10 C3d 110, 123, 109 CR 799. On administrative mandamus generally, see California Administrative Mandamus (3d ed Cal CEB 2003). On traditional mandate under CCP §1085 being the appropriate remedy to compel administrative agencies to issue regulations and standing requirements, see Newland v Kizer (1989) 209 CA3d 647, 652, 257 CR 450. On traditional mandate generally, see California Civil Writ Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2008).

The exclusive procedure for litigating the issue of a public agency's obligation to disclose records to a member of the public is found within the Public Records Act (Govt C §§6250-6268). These provisions contemplate a declaratory relief action being brought by the person seeking disclosure of the public records; they do not authorize a public agency to initiate a proceeding under the Act to determine its duty to a member of the public. Thus, a trial court abused its discretion by bypassing the procedures set forth in the Act and granting declaratory relief in an action brought by a public agency. Filarsky v Superior Court (2002) 28 C4th 419, 121 CR2d 844. See also County of Santa Clara v Superior Court (2009) 171 CA4th 119, 89 CR3d 520 (neither Public Records Act nor Filarsky precluded petitioners from seeking declaratory and injunctive relief under CCP §526a).

On when the constitutionality of an ordinance must first be attacked in an agency, see §35.18.

§35.11 B. Actual Controversy Requirement

Under CCP §1060, declaratory relief is available only "in cases of actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties." The controversy must be real, involving justiciable questions that relate to the parties' rights and obligations. Wilson v Transit Auth. (1962) 199 CA2d 716, 722, 19 CR 59. A plaintiff may bring an action for declaratory relief before an actual invasion of rights has occurred. However, the action must be based on an actual controversy with known parameters. If the parameters are as yet unknown, the controversy is not ripe for declaratory relief. Sanctity of Human Life Network v California Highway Patrol (2003) 105 CA4th 858, 872, 129 CR2d 708 (plaintiffs' claim that they had First Amendment right to display signs on freeway overpasses presented no actual controversy and was not ripe for declaratory relief).

A difference of opinion does not constitute an actual controversy. A difference of opinion must ripen into an actual concrete controversy to give rise to a justiciable case for which declaratory relief is appropriate. Wilson v Transit Auth., supra.

Moreover, declaratory relief is not available to determine hypothetical or abstract questions. "The 'actual controversy' requirement referred to in [CCP §1060] is one which admits of definitive and conclusive relief by judgment within the field of judicial administration, as distinguished from an advisory opinion based upon a particular or hypothetical state of facts." Selby Realty Co. v City of San Buenaventura (1973) 10 C3d 110, 117, 109 CR 799. The controversy must be such as to be capable of resolution by a judgment that decrees, rather than suggests, what the parties can or cannot do. Selby Realty Co. v City of San Buenaventura, supra.

On actual controversy requirement in relation to past or future conduct, see §§35.12-35.13.

NOTE: When a client seeks to challenge certain governmental action, counsel must distinguish between cases involving an actual controversy in which declaratory relief may be appropriate, e.g., when the validity of a statute, regulation, or ordinance is involved, with those in which a citizen is merely dissatisfied with the performance of either the legislative or executive branches or disagrees with their policies. In the latter instance a justiciable controversy does not arise and declaratory relief is not appropriate. Zetterberg v State Dep't of Pub. Health (1974) 43 CA3d 657, 662, 118 CR 100. In Zetterberg, the court further noted that a difference of opinion concerning the interpretation of statute "between a citizen and a governmental agency does not give rise to a justiciable controversy." See Newland v Kizer (1989) 209 CA3d 647, 257 CR 450. But see Redwood Coast Watersheds Alliance v State Bd. of Forestry & Fire Protection (1999) 70 CA4th 962, 83 CR2d 24 (declaratory relief proper to determine whether State Board of Forestry and Fire Protection had mandatory or discretionary duty to issue regulations concerning sustainable timber harvesting, despite fact that Board had already issued regulations).

Declaratory relief is inappropriate to review an adjudicatory administrative decision. State v Superior Court (Veta Co.) (1974) 12 C3d 237, 249, 115 CR 497. Administrative mandamus under CCP §1094.5 is the appropriate procedure to accomplish this. See Selby Realty Co., 10 C3d at 123. On administrative mandamus generally, see California Administrative Mandamus (3d ed Cal CEB 2003). On traditional mandate under CCP §1085 being the appropriate remedy to compel administrative agencies to issue regulations and standing requirements, see Newland v Kizer, 209 CA3d at 652. On traditional mandate generally, see California Civil Writ Practice §§2.3, 15.2-15.13 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008).

§35.12 1. No Redress for Only Past Wrongs

Code of Civil Procedure §1060 concludes by stating that declaratory relief "may be had before there has been any breach of the obligation in respect to which said declaration is sought."

Declaratory relief "operates prospectively, and not merely for the redress of past wrongs." Travers v Louden (1967) 254 CA2d 926, 931, 62 CR 654. When the complaining party's rights have crystallized into a cause of action for past wrongs and there is no further relationship between the parties and no conduct of the parties subject to court regulation, the declaratory relief procedure has been held inappropriate. Travers v Louden, supra. See California Union Ins. Co. v Trinity River Land (1980) 105 CA3d 104, 110, 163 CR 802 (no basis for declaratory relief when only past wrongs involved); K. & W. Pharmacy, Inc. v State Dep't of Soc. Welfare (1969) 275 CA2d 139, 141, 79 CR 598 (accrued cause of action for actual breach is ground for denial of declaratory relief). See also 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §869 (5th ed 2008). But see §35.17 on effect of accrued cause of action.

On the other hand, "redress for past wrongs may be had in a proper action for declaratory relief." Travers v Louden, supra. See 5 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §§861-864 (if controversy calls for declaration of rights, no objection that past wrongs also to be redressed). Under CCP §1060, a party "may ask for a declaration of rights or duties, either alone or with other relief." Thus, e.g., if a contract has some time to run and there is a need to define respective rights under it to govern the parties' future conduct, a declaratory relief action which also redresses past breaches is appropriate. See Travers, 254 CA2d at 932; §35.13. See also Alhambra Mun. Court Dist. v Bloodgood (1982) 137 CA3d 29, 44, 186 CR 807 (money due and owing may be granted in connection with declaratory relief action). If there is no occasion to define respective rights that will govern the parties' future conduct, however, redress for past wrongs may not be had by declaratory relief. Travers v Louden, supra. See Cardellini v Casey (1986) 181 CA3d 389, 396, 226 CR 659 (no continuing relationship to justify declaration of future rights).

NOTE: With regard to insurance policies, an insurer's declaratory relief action to determine its liability for coverage under an insurance policy has been held proper although it requires a determination of past wrongs. California Union Ins. Co., 105 CA3d at 110 (declaration of nonliability or limited liability under insurance policy sought because of insured's alleged responsibility for fire). In California Union Ins. Co., the court concluded that a present controversy as to plaintiff's liability, if any, under the insurance contracts in question existed and thus the fundamental basis for declaratory relief was present.

On effect on trial calendar when relief in addition to a declaration of rights and duties is sought, see §35.43.

§35.13 2. Effect When Probability of Future Controversy Exists

Although an "actual present controversy" is usually required as a basis for a declaratory relief action (5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§861-864 (5th ed 2008); see §35.11), a declaratory relief action is also appropriate if a probable future controversy exists between the parties relating to their legal rights and duties (Reiner v Danial (1989) 211 CA3d 682, 688, 259 CR 570). See generally Sherwyn v Department of Soc. Servs. (1985) 173 CA3d 52, 58, 218 CR 778 (essence of declaratory relief is existence of actual present, or future, controversy relating to parties' legal rights and duties, coupled with request that court adjudge those rights and duties). Thus, e.g., it has been held appropriate for a prospective purchaser of land who had entered into a land sales contract to test the enforceability of covenants or servitudes asserted against the property by a declaratory relief action without first having to violate the restrictions before initiating the action. Reiner v Danial, supra. See Chas. L. Harney, Inc. v Contractors' State License Bd. (1952) 39 C2d 561, 247 P2d 913 (licensed contractor entitled to declaratory relief under former Govt C §11440 (now Govt C §§11350, 11350.3) in accordance with CCP §1060 with respect to a regulation requiring specialty license even though it did not allege it had bid or intended to bid on particular job; plaintiff need not first violate regulation and face possible criminal prosecution or disciplinary action).

When a breach of contract has occurred and the parties have a continuing relationship, a breach of contract action may not be speedy or adequate and declaratory relief may be appropriate to (a) guide the parties in their future conduct or (b) avoid a multiplicity of suits that would ensue if another remedy were pursued. Alhambra Mun. Court Dist. v Bloodgood (1982) 137 CA3d 29, 44, 186 CR 807. On effect of accrued cause of action generally, see §35.17.

For a probable future controversy to constitute an actual controversy subject to the declaratory judgment procedure, however, the controversy must be ripe for adjudication (Newland v Kizer (1989) 209 CA3d 647, 657, 257 CR 450) and not involve a hypothetical situation (Reiner v Danial (1989) 211 CA3d 682, 688, 259 CR 570). See Environmental Defense Project of Sierra County v County of Sierra (2008) 158 CA4th 877, 884, 70 CR3d 474 (actual controversy whether streamlined zoning violates Planning and Zoning Law because of different interpretations of Government Code). On prohibition against advisory opinions, see §35.11.

A controversy is ripe for adjudication when it "has reached, but has not passed, the point that the facts have sufficiently congealed to permit an intelligent and useful decision to be made." California Water & Tel. Co. v County of Los Angeles (1967) 253 CA2d 16, 22, 61 CR 618 (private water utility could seek declaration of validity of application of county water ordinance, even though it had complied with such ordinances, because to plan for future it needed to know if it must comply with specifications of ordinance). The controversy must be such as to be capable of definite and conclusive relief. Reiner v Danial, supra; Sherwyn v Department of Soc. Servs. (1985) 173 CA3d 52, 58, 218 CR 778. See California Water & Tel. Co. v County of Los Angeles, supra.

§35.14 3. Examples of Actual Controversy

Courts have found actual controversies in the following cases:

- Redwood Coast Watersheds Alliance v State Bd. of Forestry & Fire Protection (1999) 70 CA4th 962, 83 CR2d 24 (whether State Board of Forestry and Fire Protection had mandatory or discretionary duty to issue regulations concerning sustainable timber harvesting, despite fact that Board had already issued regulations);
- Southern Counties Gas Co. v Ventura Pipeline Constr. Co. (1971) 19 CA3d 372, 381, 96 CR 825 (declaration of rights under indemnification sections of series of contracts when there was "prospect, if not likelihood," that future disputes would arise as result of gas leaks due to corrosion in improperly wrapped pipes);
- Schafer v Wholesale Frozen Foods, Inc. (1959) 171 CA2d 232, 340 P2d 308 (dispute over whether landlord, tenant, or subtenant responsible for damage to property);
- Western Motors Corp. v Land Dev. & Inv. Co. (1957) 152 CA2d 509, 313 P2d 927 (dispute over lessor's duty to replace certain worn-out elevator parts under provisions of written lease); and
- Talcott v Talcott (1942) 54 CA2d 743, 129 P2d 946 (dispute over testator's widow's right to sell certain property without deceased son's widow's consent despite agreement and decree of distribution conditioning such sale on deceased son's consent).

§35.15 4. Examples of No Actual Controversy

The following are examples of cases holding that no actual controversy existed:

- Meyer v Sprint Spectrum L.P. (2009) 45 C4th 634, 646, 88 CR3d 859 (no actual controversy existed when declaratory judgment concerning contractual remedies had no current practical consequences, given that no dispute had yet arisen between parties and continuation of parties' contractual relationship did not depend on resolution of questions presented).
- Otay Land Co. v Royal Indem. Co. (2008) 169 CA4th 556, 86 CR3d 408 (no certainty that conflict would arise between property owner and insurer until pending litigation between plaintiff and the former insured was resolved).
- Pacific Legal Found. v California Coastal Comm'n (1982) 33 C3d 158, 188 CR 104 (facial challenge on statutory and constitutional grounds to public access guidelines adopted by Coastal Commission by itself, without specific application of guidelines being involved, did not create actual controversy subject to declaratory relief because controversy was not ripe in that issues raised were not sufficiently concrete to allow judicial resolution in absence of precise factual context; court invited in essence to speculate as to type of developments for which access conditions might be imposed and then to express opinion on such hypothetical exactions).
- State v Superior Court (Veta Co.) (1974) 12 C3d 237, 115 CR 497 (contention of real parties in interest that they had right to develop land without permit from Coastal Zone Conservation Commission did not create actual controversy because they had made no effort to obtain vested right determination from Commission).
- Selby Realty Co. v City of San Buenaventura (1973) 10 C3d 110, 109 CR 799 (declaration with respect to validity of general plan adopted by county; such relief could be obtained only if and when plan was implemented so as to affect plaintiff's free use of its property).
- Fracasse v Brent (1972) 6 C3d 784, 100 CR 385 (no present controversy with respect to discharged attorney's claim for compensation for services rendered under contingent fee contract when contingency of recovery had not yet occurred).
- Burke v City & County of San Francisco (1968) 258 CA2d 32, 65 CR 539 (no present actual controversy with respect to future tax assessments because it was only conjecture that such assessments would be improperly made).
- Wilson v Transit Auth. (1962) 199 CA2d 716, 19 CR 59 (union officers' claim that public agency could legally include compulsory arbitration clause in collective bargaining agreement does not create actual controversy because there was no allegation of any dispute under existing agreement and no claim that defendant transit authority had to include such clause in ensuing contract).

IV. FACTORS TO CONSIDER BEFORE SEEKING DECLARATORY RELIEF

A. Effect of Other Available Remedies

§35.16 1. Remedies Cumulative

Code of Civil Procedure §1060 provides that a plaintiff "may ask for a declaration of rights or duties, either alone or with other relief." Thus, a plaintiff in a declaratory relief action may also seek in an appropriate case coercive relief, e.g., an injunction, executory relief, money damages. See Alhambra Mun. Court Dist. v Bloodgood (1982) 137 CA3d 29, 44, 186 CR 807 (money damages); Staley v Board of Med. Exam'rs (1952) 109 CA2d 1, 240 P2d 61 (coercive or executory relief).

Moreover, CCP §1062 provides that the remedies set forth in the declaratory relief sections are "cumulative, and shall not be construed as restricting any remedy, provisional or otherwise, provided by law for the benefit of any party to such action," and that no declaratory judgment "shall preclude any party from obtaining relief based upon the same facts." Thus, the remedy of declaratory relief is in addition to other remedies provided by law. Walker v Munro (1960) 178 CA2d 67, 72, 2 CR 737. For example, if a party obtains declaratory relief the party is not thereafter precluded from obtaining coercive relief. See Dills v Delira Corp. (1956) 145 CA2d 124, 130, 302 P2d 397. If in the declaratory relief action, however, it is determined that plaintiff has no rights, plaintiff is thereafter barred from relitigating the claim by pursuing different relief. Dills v Delira Corp., supra.

On when availability of another remedy may preclude declaratory relief, see §35.17.

NOTE: The remedy of declaratory relief is not exclusive. Employers Mut. Liab. Ins. Co. v Pacific Indem. Co. (1959) 167 CA2d 369, 382, 334 P2d 658. Simply because a party may have a right to declaratory relief does not mean that such an action must be filed when ripe. The party may await the accrual of another appropriate cause of action and then seek appropriate relief in that action. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v Co-Op of Am. Physicians (1984) 163 CA3d 199, 205, 209 CR 251 (insurer's failure to initiate declaratory relief action before settlement did not preclude later action for equitable subrogation against another insurer of insured).

© The Regents of the University of California

§35.17 2. Availability of Another Remedy May Preclude Relief

By virtue of CCP §1062 (see §35.16), the existence of an accrued cause of action does not necessarily preclude declaratory relief. In Ermolieff v R.K.O. Radio Pictures, Inc. (1942) 19 C2d 543, 547, 122 P2d 3, the court noted that a court may make a binding declaration of rights whether other relief is or could be claimed or obtained and that the remedy is cumulative. In Jones v Robertson (1947) 79 CA2d 813, 819, 180 P2d 929, quoting from Borchard, Declaratory Judgments 302 (2d ed 1941), it was stated:

> [I]t is wrong for courts to decline a declaration on the mere ground that another remedy was available, for declaratory relief was not intended to be exclusive or extraordinary, but alternative and optional. It is only where the court believes that more effective relief can and should be obtained by another procedure and that for that reason a declaration will not serve a useful purpose, that it is justified in refusing a declaration because of the availability of another remedy.

Thus, the fact that a cause of action has accrued and that other adequate relief may be available to plaintiff are factors to be considered by the court in granting or denying declaratory relief. Columbia Pictures Corp. v DeToth (1945) 26 C2d 753, 161 P2d 217. Before the court may properly exercise its discretion to deny declaratory relief based on the availability of other remedies, however, "it must clearly appear that the asserted alternative remedies are available to the plaintiff and that they are speedy and adequate or as well suited to the plaintiff's needs as declaratory relief." Maguire v Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc'y (1944) 23 C2d 719, 732, 146 P2d 673; Warren v Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc. (1975) 47 CA3d 678, 683, 121 CR 19.

More cases have granted the right to declaratory relief despite the existence of another remedy than have denied it. 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §871 (5th ed 2008). When declaratory relief is sought to redress merely past wrongs, however, because the rights of the party seeking declaratory relief have crystallized into a cause of action for such past wrongs (i.e., an accrued cause of action), there is no further relationship between the parties and no conduct of the parties subject to further court regulation, and declaratory relief has been denied. See Travers v Louden (1967) 254 CA2d 926, 62 CR 654. See also §35.12. On availability of declaratory relief when the probability of future controversy between the parties exists, see §35.13. Similarly, when special statutory authority has been provided for the particular type of case, declaratory relief has been denied. See, e.g., Communist Party v Peek (1942) 20 C2d 536, 127 P2d 889 (not an abuse of discretion for trial court to deny declaratory relief with respect to constitutionality of Election Code provisions because sections of that code provided speedy and adequate remedy). The following are examples of cases in which declaratory relief has been denied:

- Holden v Arnebergh (1968) 265 CA2d 87, 71 CR 401 (affirmed sustaining of demurrer because other remedies were available in criminal proceedings);
- Barber v Irving (1964) 226 CA2d 560, 38 CR 142 (declaratory relief action not proper to decree nonexistence of corporation, which can be done only in quo warranto action);
- Rapaport v Forer (1937) 20 CA2d 271, 66 P2d 1242 (trial court properly exercised discretion in sustaining demurrer to declaratory relief action because plaintiff had right under former CCP §689 (now CCP §§720.110-720.170) to speedy hearing to determine ownership of subject matter of purported levy);
- Fritz v Superior Court (1936) 18 CA2d 232, 63 P2d 872 (declaratory relief not necessary to determine claims of plaintiffs that they are directors because another statutory remedy available under Corp C §709 (former CC §315)); and
- Stenzel v Kronick (1929) 102 CA 507, 283 P 93 (plaintiff, judgment creditor, not entitled to declaratory relief with respect to rights in certain property because remedy of levying in execution available which would result in proceeding testing lien's validity if question arose).

For further discussion concerning other available remedies, see 5 Witkin, Procedure, Pleading §§868-871.

§35.18 3. Exclusivity of Certain Other Remedies or Forums

Declaratory relief may be an inappropriate remedy to redress the particular alleged wrong. For example, declaratory relief is inappropriate to review an adjudicatory administrative decision. State v Superior Court (Veta Co.) (1974) 12 C3d 237, 249, 115 CR 497. Administrative mandamus under CCP §1094.5 is the appropriate procedure to accomplish this. See Selby Realty Co. v City of San Buenaventura (1973) 10 C3d 110, 123, 109 CR 799. Note Subriar v City of Bakersfield (1976) 59 CA3d 175, 194, 130 CR 853, in which the court recognized that declaratory relief is appropriate to challenge the constitutionality of an ordinance, but held that when a plaintiff submits to the jurisdiction of an agency by applying for a permit or license under an act which the plaintiff does not attack in its entirety (i.e., "does not attack the validity of the existence of the granting agency itself under the ordinance"), the proper method to attack the constitutionality of the specific portion of the act claimed to be invalid is by judicial review under CCP §1094.5 (i.e., by administrative mandamus). See also Taylor v Swanson (1982) 137 CA3d 416, 187 CR 111 (declaratory relief appropriate remedy to attack overall constitutionality of zoning ordinance that impedes desired use of property as party cannot attack very existence of agency from which party seeks favor; however, if landowner concedes legal existence of administrative agency and seeks to obtain ruling that regulation as applied to party's property is unconstitutional, that issue properly raised before agency and its adverse decision reviewable by administrative mandamus).

An expedited form of administrative mandamus is also available through CCP §1094.8 to obtain judicial review of a decision by a local public agency regarding the issuance, revocation, suspension, or denial of a permit involving expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment; in light of this expedited procedure, it is possible that declaratory relief may not be appropriate to review such decisions. On administrative mandamus generally, see California Administrative Mandamus (3d ed Cal CEB 2003).

Similarly, declaratory relief cannot be used to circumvent statutory provisions prohibiting injunctive or mandamus relief to prevent collection of a tax. Rickley v County of Los Angeles (2004) 114 CA4th 1002, 1014, 8 CR3d 406 (declaratory relief not available to challenge amount of property tax assessed; under Rev & T C §5141, plaintiff must pay disputed amount, exhaust administrative remedies, and then sue for refund); Valley Fair Fashions, Inc. v Valley Fair (1966) 245 CA2d 614, 54 CR 306. In addition, declaratory relief cannot be used to circumvent other prohibitions against the maintenance of actions. See, e.g., Cooper v Leslie Salt Co. (1969) 70 C2d 627, 634, 75 CR 766 (declaratory relief not appropriate to challenge existence of municipal entity when quo warranto not available); Faix, Ltd. v County of Los Angeles (1976) 54 CA3d 992, 127 CR 182 (landowner not entitled to sue for declaratory relief respecting validity of tax assessment when statutory condition precedent of payment in full not satisfied). Moreover, declaratory relief may be inappropriate because another court has exclusive jurisdiction over the matter. See, e.g., Independent Laundry v Railroad Comm'n (1945) 70 CA2d 816, 161 P2d 827 (decided under former Pub Util C §67 (now Pub Util C §1759); orders and regulations of Public Utilities Commission reviewable only in Supreme Court). Furthermore, declaratory relief may not be available because matters within the exclusive province of another governmental branch or agency are involved. See, e.g., Monahan v Department of Water & Power (1941) 48 CA2d 746, 120 P2d 730 (declaratory relief not available with respect to matter within exclusive province of executive branch).

NOTE: Code of Civil Procedure §1060 no longer provides for a declaration of rights by any person interested under a will. Rights under a will are adjudicated in the course of the proceedings of the probate court. See Howard v Bennett (1942) 53 CA2d 546, 127 P2d 1012, and Colden v Costello (1942) 50 CA2d 363, 122 P2d 959, in which it was held that declaratory relief did not lie, because the probate court could give complete relief and therefore had exclusive jurisdiction. See also §35.27.

§35.19 B. What Limitation Period Applies

There is no statute of limitations specifically applicable to declaratory relief actions. The periods of limitations applicable to ordinary actions at law and suits in equity are applicable to actions for declaratory relief. Maguire v Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc'y (1944) 23 C2d 719, 734, 146 P2d 673; Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v Colonial Ins. Co. (1970) 8 CA3d 427, 87 CR 348. The courts determine whether a statute of limitations bars a declaratory relief action by ascertaining whether the underlying controversy involves a breach of an obligation.

Thus, if a party seeks declaratory relief on an obligation that has been breached and the right to commence an action for coercive relief on the cause of action is barred, the right to declaratory relief is also barred. Maguire v Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc'y, supra. On the other hand, if the statute of limitations on the coercive accrued right of action has not yet expired, a declaratory relief action is not time barred. The right to bring a declaratory relief action continues concurrently with the right to proceed with the coercive right of action. See United Pacific-Reliance Ins. Co. v DiDomenico (1985) 173 CA3d 673, 676, 219 CR 119.

If, however, a party seeks declaratory relief before there has been a breach of the obligation, the right to relief is not barred by any period of limitations. Maguire v Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc'y, supra; United Pacific-Reliance Ins. Co. v DiDomenico, supra. The limitation period does not begin to run at the time the "right" to institute a declaratory relief action accrues, but when the breach occurs. United Pacific-Reliance Ins. Co. v DiDomenico, supra.

If the underlying claim is equitable in nature, the doctrine of laches can be applied under appropriate circumstances. See Empire W. Side Irrig. Dist. v Stratford Irrig. Dist. (1937) 10 C2d 376, 74 P2d 248 (held laches applicable, although unclear if there was any underlying equitable claim); Rivieccio v Bothan (1946) 27 C2d 621, 165 P2d 677 (upholding trial court's decision that facts in particular case did not support application of laches).

§35.20 C. Applicability of Doctrine of Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

Under the doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies, unless an exception applies a party must exhaust whatever administrative remedies are available before that party may resort to the court for judicial review or relief in any manner. This requirement is a condition precedent for obtaining judicial relief, and a court violating the rule acts in excess of its jurisdiction. See Economic Empowerment Found. v Quackenbush (1997) 57 CA4th 677, 67 CR2d 323 (general rule and discussion of cases falling within futility exception); Mountain View Chamber of Commerce v City of Mountain View (1978) 77 CA3d 82, 143 CR 441 (general rule and some exceptions specified). For a discussion of the doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies and exceptions, see California Administrative Mandamus §§3.10-3.46 (3d ed Cal CEB 2003); California Administrative Hearing Practice §§4.13-4.16 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

A party cannot circumvent the requirement for exhaustion of administrative remedies by bringing a declaratory relief action. See Bleeck v State Bd. of Optometry (1971) 18 CA3d 415, 432, 95 CR 860 (doctrine cannot be circumvented by bringing action such as for declaratory relief or for injunction); Walker v Munro (1960) 178 CA2d 67, 2 CR 737 (declaratory relief denied). See Louis Eckert Brewing Co. v Unemployment Reserves Comm'n (1941) 47 CA2d 844, 119 P2d 227 (declaratory relief denied).

D. Judicial Discretion to Deny Relief

§35.21 1. When Not Necessary or Proper

Under CCP §1061 "[t]he court may refuse to exercise the power granted by [the declaratory relief provisions] in any case where its declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances." Thus, a court has broad discretion to deny declaratory relief. A judgment denying declaratory relief is not reviewable on appeal except for an abuse of discretion. Orloff v Metropolitan Trust Co. (1941) 17 C2d 484, 489, 110 P2d 396.

The court's broad discretion under CCP §1061 to deny declaratory relief, however, is not unlimited. The court's discretion to deny declaratory relief "may be exercised only when there is a basis in fact for the conclusion that the declaration is not necessary or proper." Warren v Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc. (1975) 47 CA3d 678, 683, 121 CR 19. In Columbia Pictures Corp. v DeToth (1945) 26 C2d 753, 762, 161 P2d 217, the court stated that "[d]eclaratory relief must be granted when the facts justifying that course are sufficiently alleged." See International Ass'n of Fire Fighters v City of Palo Alto (1963) 60 C2d 295, 301, 32 CR 842 (power under CCP §1061 is discretionary power which should not be exercised when declaration of rights clearly called for). Any doubt that the court may have should be resolved in favor of granting declaratory relief. Warren v Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc., supra.

Courts have invoked CCP §1061 in denying declaratory relief when the issues have already been or can be disposed of in other proceedings which are pending (see, e.g., Allstate Ins. Co. v Fisher (1973) 31 CA3d 391, 107 CR 251; Fagerstedt v Continental Ins. Co. (1968) 266 CA2d 370, 72 CR 126) and when another speedy and adequate remedy is available (see, e.g., City of Alturas v Gloster (1940) 16 C2d 46, 104 P2d 810; General Ins. Co. of Am. v Lilly (1968) 258 CA2d 465, 65 CR 750; see also §§35.16-35.18).

In some instances the courts have considered equitable defenses in determining whether to refuse to entertain a declaratory relief action. See Moss v Moss (1942) 20 C2d 640, 128 P2d 526, in which the court held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying declaratory relief when the parties were in pari delicto. See also Fay Sec. Co. v Mortgage Guar. Co. (1940) 37 CA2d 637, 100 P2d 344, indicating that laches might support refusal to grant declaratory relief.

In California Water & Tel. Co. v County of Los Angeles (1967) 253 CA2d 16, 61 CR 618, dealing with the validity of an ordinance, the court set forth the following factors as affecting the exercise of judicial discretion:

- The penal nature of the ordinance or statute attacked;
- The present need for a declaration;
- The character of the parties' and the public's interest in the subject matter; and
- The existence of alternative remedies to test the ordinance's validity statute.

The court added that declaratory relief "is properly denied, for example, if the factual matrix is insufficiently set to permit a useful and intelligent adjudication to be made." 253 CA2d at 24.

NOTE: Although the exercise of the court's discretion under CCP §1061 to deny declaratory relief depends on the facts and circum stances of each case, it appears that when plaintiff adequately pleads a cause of action for declaratory relief and states facts showing that other remedies would not be as speedy or as adequate as declaratory relief, a refusal to entertain an action under CCP §1061 will be considered an abuse of discretion.

§35.22 2. Whether Court Must Declare Rights If Facts Alleged Do Not Entitle Plaintiff to Favorable Declaration

Although some uncertainty exists, if a complaint sets forth facts showing the existence of an actual controversy relating to the parties' legal rights and duties (see §§35.11-35.15), it appears that the trial court must declare their rights "whether or not the facts alleged establish that plaintiff is entitled to a favorable declaration." Bennett v Hibernia Bank (1956) 47 C2d 540, 550, 305 P2d 20. A plaintiff is entitled to a declaration of plaintiff's rights whether the declaration is in favor of or adverse to plaintiff's position. Los Angeles County Democratic Cent. Comm. v County of Los Angeles (1976) 61 CA3d 335, 338, 132 CR 43. See Loupias v Rosen (1951) 102 CA2d 781, 784, 228 P2d 611, in which the court noted that a party may seek a declaratory judgment as distinguished from declaratory relief even though the party's pleading shows affirmatively that he or she is not entitled to any relief. Thus, a trial's court's sustaining of a general demurrer (see §§35.35-35.36) has been held error under the above circumstances. Los Angeles County Democratic Cent. Comm. v County of Los Angeles, supra; Loupias v Rosen, supra.

On the other hand some cases have held that when a complaint "makes no case on the merits and a declaratory relief action would merely produce a useless trial," a trial court's order sustaining a general demurrer without leave to amend is not an abuse of discretion and dismissal is proper. Silver v City of Los Angeles (1963) 217 CA2d 134, 141, 31 CR 545. See Konecko v Konecko (1958) 164 CA2d 249, 253, 330 P2d 393 (when facts alleged entitle plaintiff to no relief, court not required to permit useless trial and plaintiff cannot be prejudiced by dismissal of action). See also People v Ray (1960) 181 CA2d 64, 67, 5 CR 113 (no abuse of discretion by dismissal of declaratory relief action; complaint made no case on the merits).

In Los Angeles County Democratic Cent. Comm. v County of Los Angeles (1976) 61 CA3d 335, 338, 132 CR 43, the court noted that when a plaintiff is entitled only to an adverse declaration and the appellate opinion expressly so holds, demurrers have been sustained by the appellate court on the theory that the appellate opinion gave plaintiff the declaration that plaintiff sought. See Western Homes, Inc. v Herbert Ketell, Inc. (1965) 236 CA2d 142, 146, 45 CR 856 (judgment of dismissal on order sustaining general demurrer sustained when allegations of complaint showed no cause of action; appellate court declaration accomplishes declaratory relief). See also §35.49.

V. TYPICAL USES

A. Oral or Written Contracts

§35.23 1. In General

Code of Civil Procedure §1060 authorizes the resolution of disputes under both written and oral contracts. Questions such as the construction, validity, interpretation or effect of contracts may be resolved by declaratory relief. See, e.g., Columbia Pictures Corp. v DeToth (1945) 26 C2d 753, 161 P2d 217 (oral employment agreement and renewal options); Ermolieff v R.K.O. Radio Pictures, Inc. (1942) 19 C2d 543, 122 P2d 3 (territory covered by written motion picture distribution agreement); Karbelnig v Brothwell (1966) 244 CA2d 333, 53 CR 335 (lease agreement); Retail Clerks Union, Local 428, AFL-CIO v L. Bloom Sons Co. (1959) 173 CA2d 701, 344 P2d 51 (labor agreement); Curl v Pacific Home (1952) 108 CA2d 655, 239 P2d 481 (lifetime nursing home care).

Similarly, questions relating to a contract's formation, excuses for nonperformance and termination, are also proper subjects for declaratory relief. Foster v Masters Pontiac Co. (1958) 158 CA2d 481, 486, 322 P2d 592. Thus, the court may determine whether or not a contract exists. Howard v Howard (1955) 131 CA2d 308, 280 P2d 802.

§35.24 2. Insurance Contracts

Declaratory relief is available to the parties to an insurance contract under CCP §§1060-1062.5 for a determination of the rights and duties of the parties. Declaratory relief is frequently sought when there is a question of coverage for a claim made under the policy and the insurer wants to avoid exposure to bad faith. See generally General Ins. Co. of Am. v Whitmore (1965) 235 CA2d 670, 45 CR 556 (coverage under insurance policy).

© The Regents of the University of California

§35.25 a. Liability Insurance (Third Party)

Standard liability insurance contracts generally provide for a defense and indemnification of the insured by the insurer up to the policy's limits of liability if an action is brought against the insured by a third party. The underlying action must allege the insured's liability for damages potentially covered under the policy, or the complaint must be amendable so that it alleges a liability that would be covered under the policy before the insurer owes a defense or indemnification to its insured. Montrose Chem. Corp. v Superior Court (1993) 6 C4th 287, 24 CR2d 467; Gray v Zurich Ins. Co. (1966) 65 C2d 263, 54 CR 104.

When there is a question about either the insurer's duty to defend, or the insurer's liability to indemnify its insured, or both, the parties can seek declaratory relief from the court for a determination of coverage. See, e.g., Royal Globe Ins. Co. v Whitaker (1986) 181 CA3d 532, 226 CR 435 (duty to defend and indemnify); California Union Ins. Co. v Club Aquarius (1980) 113 CA3d 243, 247, 169 CR 685 (duty to defend). See also Great Am. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (2009) 178 CA4th 221, 100 CR3d 258 (discussing insured's motion to stay insurer's declaratory relief action).

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid the risk of being found in bad faith (i.e., breaching the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing) for refusing to defend an insured in a lawsuit on the grounds of noncoverage, an insurer in an appropriate case can assume the insured's defense in the underlying action on a "reservation of rights" basis without waiving its rights to assert coverage defenses against the insured and then file a declaratory relief action for a judicial determination of coverage. See, e.g., Atlas Assur. Co. v McCombs Corp. (1983) 146 CA3d 135, 194 CR 66. Absent other facts, the mere filing of a declaratory relief action by the insurer to have the court declare its rights and duties under the policy cannot form the basis of breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing by the insurer. 146 CA3d at 135. The court noted in Atlas Assur. Co. v McCombs Corp., supra, that a declaratory relief action does not frustrate the insured's enjoyment of its contract rights in any way, assuming that the insurer has not otherwise abandoned, compromised, or rejected the insured's claim, and that any breach of the insurer's duty of good faith and fair dealing must arise from alleged vacillations in conducting the defense. 146 CA3d at 135. The insurer must clearly reserve its rights and give notice of reservation of rights to the insured before assuming defense of the underlying action. Miller v Elite Ins. Co. (1980) 100 CA3d 739, 754, 161 CR 322. Counsel should note that an insurer who proceeds in the above manner can be subject to liability for malicious prosecution if the declaratory relief action terminates in the insured's favor and it is determined that the action was brought without probable cause and with malice. See Camarena v Sequoia Ins. Co. (1987) 190 CA3d 1089, 235 CR 820. Alternatively, in an appropriate case, the insurer may defend the underlying action under a reservation of rights and if the insured prevails in that action and thereafter makes a claim against the insurer, the insurer can then raise the noncoverage defense that was previously reserved. See Gray, 65 C2d at 279.

On the insurer's duty to defend being broader than its duty to indemnify, see Montrose Chem. Corp. v Superior Court, supra; Nichols v Great Am. Ins. Cos. (1985) 169 CA3d 766, 772, 215 CR 416. See also California Union Ins. Co. v Club Aquarius (1980) 113 CA3d 243, 247, 169 CR 685 (duty to defend action exists if potential liability to pay exists even if potential liability to pay is remote).

On the insurer's duty to settle when it assumes the defense of an action against a policy holder, reserves its rights to litigate the coverage issue, and brings a declaratory relief action on the coverage issue, see Johansen v California State Auto. Ass'n Inter-Ins. Bureau (1975) 15 C3d 9, 123 CR 288.

© The Regents of the University of California

§35.26 b. First-Party Coverage

When there is a question of coverage for a loss under the first-party portion of an insurance policy, the insurer can file a declaratory relief action under CCP §1060 and seek a judicial determination of coverage before making a decision on the claim. On the mere filing of a declaratory relief action, absent other facts, not constituting a breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing, see Atlas Assur. Co. v McCombs Corp. (1983) 146 CA3d 135, 150, 194 CR 66 (discussed in §35.25).

When an insurer has filed a declaratory relief action, an insured might file a cross-complaint, e.g., for breach of contract and bad faith (i.e., breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing). See, e.g., California State Auto. Ass'n v Superior Court (1986) 184 CA3d 1428, 1433, 229 CR 409 (no prohibition to filing cross-complaint in declaratory relief action). In this event, the declaratory relief action may be bifurcated and tried before the causes of action brought by way of the cross-complaint. See Equitable Life Assur. Soc'y v Berry (1989) 212 CA3d 832, 836, 260 CR 819; California State Auto. Ass'n v Superior Court, supra. A judicial determination of no coverage for claims brought on the policy may obviate the need to adjudicate the remaining breach of contract and bad faith causes of action against the insurer. For further discussion of bifurcation, see §35.42.

NOTE: Even when an insured initially files a bad faith action, the insurer may cross-complain for declaratory relief. See, e.g., Equitable Life Assur. Soc'y v Berry, supra.

On when an insurer may be liable for malicious prosecution by filing a declaratory relief action, see Camarena v Sequoia Ins. Co. (1987) 190 CA3d 1089, 235 CR 820 (discussed in §35.25).

§35.27 B. Other Instruments

Code of Civil Procedure §1060 specifically provides for a declaration of rights by any person "interested under a written instrument, excluding a will or a trust." Reported cases cover declaration of rights in connection with a number of different types of instruments.

- Holt v College of Osteopathic Physicians & Surgeons (1964) 61 C2d 750, 40 CR 244 (charitable purposes of trust and whether certain conduct by trustees would be breach of trust);
- Lomanto v Bank of America (1972) 22 CA3d 663, 99 CR 442 (rights under trust deed);
- Ross v Harootunian (1967) 257 CA2d 292, 64 CR 537 (enforceability of covenants or servitudes asserted against property);
- Thompson v Boyd (1963) 217 CA2d 365, 32 CR 513 (whether spouses had entered into agreement not to revoke joint and mutual will);
- Marden v Bailard (1954) 124 CA2d 458, 268 P2d 809 (deed and building restrictions);
- Sullivan v San Francisco Art Ass'n (1950) 101 CA2d 449, 225 P2d 993 (rights under decree of distribution);
- Talcott v Talcott (1942) 54 CA2d 743, 129 P2d 946 (rights under decree of distribution); and
- Chaplin v Chaplin (1935) 9 CA2d 182, 49 P2d 296 (interpretation of property settlement agreement incorporated into final divorce decree).

NOTE: Code of Civil Procedure §1060 no longer provides for a declaration of rights by any person interested under a will. Rights under a will are adjudicated in the course of the proceedings of the probate court. See Howard v Bennett (1942) 53 CA2d 546, 127 P2d 1012 (holding that superior court sitting in probate, which can give full relief, has exclusive jurisdiction to construe terms of will in estate it is administering so as to preclude declaratory relief action for that purpose); Colden v Costello (1942) 50 CA2d 363, 122 P2d 959 (holding that because probate court has jurisdiction to determine, as between decedent's widow and other claimants, what part of estate is community property and what part is separate property, it is improper to grant her the right to bring separate declaratory relief action).

§35.28 C. Other Uses Under CCP §1060 and Govt C §§11350, 11350.3

Code of Civil Procedure §1060 provides for a declaration of rights or duties "with respect to another, or in respect to, in, over or upon property, or with respect to the natural channel of a watercourse." Government Code §§11350 and 11350.3 authorize any interested person to bring a declaratory relief action in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure to obtain a judicial declaration as to the validity of any regulation or the repeal of a regulation.

Under the above broad language of CCP §1060 and Govt C §§11350 and 11350.3, declaratory relief is available in a variety of situations, some of which are indicated below. Note that some of the cited cases were decided under former Govt C §11440 (now Govt C §11350).

- To determine constitutionality and validity of statutes and ordinances. City of Carmel-By-The-Sea v Young (1970) 2 C3d 259, 85 CR 1; Walker v County of Los Angeles (1961) 55 C2d 626, 12 CR 671; Abbott v City of Los Angeles (1960) 53 C2d 674, 678 n2, 3 CR 158.
- To construe statutes, ordinances, and charters. LePage v City of Oakland (1970) 13 CA3d 689, 91 CR 806; Squire v City & County of San Francisco (1970) 12 CA3d 974, 91 CR 347; City of San Joaquin v State Bd. of Equalization (1970) 9 CA3d 365, 88 CR 12.
- To determine validity of administrative regulations. Chas. L. Harney, Inc. v Contractors' State License Bd. (1952) 39 C2d 561, 247 P2d 913. Note, however, that declaratory relief is inappropriate to review an adjudicatory administrative decision. See §35.11.
- To determine power of regulatory agencies to resolve rights among various water users (Orange County Water Dist. v City of Riverside (1959) 173 CA2d 137, 343 P2d 450), and to determine the rights of various parties to water (Tehachapi-Cummings County Water Dist. v Armstrong (1975) 49 CA3d 992, 122 CR 918).
- To determine certain tax questions. Maxwell v City of Santa Rosa (1959) 53 C2d 274, 1 CR 334 (fraudulent local property tax assessment); Pacific Motor Transp. Co. v State Bd. of Equalization (1972) 28 CA3d 230, 236, 104 CR 558 (validity of administrative tax regulations even though statute barred injunctive relief or mandamus to prevent collection of a tax); Valley Fair Fashions, Inc. v Valley Fair (1966) 245 CA2d 614, 54 CR 306 (ultimate liability as between lessor and lessee for tax increase for improvements to property); Whittell v Franchise Tax Bd. (1964) 231 CA2d 278, 41 CR 673 (under CCP §1060.5, an individual claiming to be a nonresident of California may bring an action against the Franchise Tax Board to determine the fact of residency for income tax purposes). But see Faix, Ltd. v County of Los Angeles (1976) 54 CA3d 992, 1002, 127 CR 182 (plaintiff which had not paid tax in full could not challenge validity of assessment); Honeywell, Inc. v State Bd. of Equalization (1975) 48 CA3d 907, 912, 122 CR 243 (declaratory relief will not lie to ascertain whether a transaction is taxable after transaction has been completed or when a statute such as Rev & T C §6931 bars an injunction or mandamus to prevent collection of a tax).
- To test validity of labor union constitution. Weber v Marine Cooks' & Stewards' Ass'n (1949) 93 CA2d 327, 208 P2d 1009.
- To determine rights of labor union members. Miller v International Union of Operating Eng'rs (1953) 118 CA2d 66, 257 P2d 85; Taylor v Marine Cooks' & Stewards' Ass'n (1953) 117 CA2d 556, 256 P2d 595.
- To determine rights of shareholders in a corporation. Maguire v Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc'y (1944) 23 C2d 719, 146 P2d 673.
- To determine ownership of stock. East Coalinga Oil Fields Corp. v Robinson (1948) 86 CA2d 153, 194 P2d 554.
- To determine validity of divorce decree and rights and duties under it. Klinker v Klinker (1955) 132 CA2d 687, 283 P2d 83.
- To determine parental relationship. Tomasello v Tomasello (1952) 113 CA2d 23, 247 P2d 612; Smith v Bank of Cal. (1937) 19 CA2d 579, 65 P2d 1361 (relationships and rights under a trust).
- To determine in cross-complaint that cross-defendant is liable or must indemnify cross-complainant if latter held liable in action brought by third party. Postley v Harvey (1984) 153 CA3d 280, 285, 200 CR 354 (equitable indemnity); Brokate v Hehr Mfg. Co. (1966) 243 CA2d 133, 52 CR 672 (slander action). See J.C. Penney Co. v

Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1963) 217 CA2d 834, 32 CR 172 (personal injury action; cross-complaint for indemnity against party who installed escalator); Indenco, Inc. v Evans (1962) 201 CA2d 369, 20 CR 90 (contractor-subcontractor).

- To determine a person's right to vote. Ferreira v Keller (1970) 4 CA3d 292, 84 CR 253.

§35.29 D. Penal Statutes

The declaratory relief procedure has been held appropriate "to challenge the constitutionality of penal statutes and ordinances." Hooper v Deukmejian (1981) 122 CA3d 987, 1016, 176 CR 569 (declaratory relief also appropriate to test non-penal statutes). See Abbott v City of Los Angeles (1960) 53 C2d 674, 678 n2, 3 CR 158. Similarly, in an appropriate case, the applicability of a penal statute may be the subject of a declaratory relief action if constitutional rights are involved. For example, in the context of obscenity laws, declaratory relief to determine the alleged obscenity of a book (or other material, e.g., a film) under an applicable penal statute has been held appropriate because the vendor faces possible prosecution which may have the effect of de facto censorship and the would-be reader, in the absence of a declaration, would be deprived of a constitutional right. Zeitlin v Arnebergh (1963) 59 C2d 901, 906, 31 CR 800. But see Holden v Arnebergh (1968) 265 CA2d 87, 91, 71 CR 401 (arrest and seizure of obscene material; declaratory relief denied because another adequate remedy available).

On the other hand, declaratory relief has been held inappropriate when no constitutional rights have been involved and the only effect of such a declaration would be to decide a matter that could be better decided in criminal court. See Manchel v County of Los Angeles (1966) 245 CA2d 501, 507, 54 CR 53 (injunctive and declaratory relief denied; court refused declaration that specified card game is not game of chance and thus that gambling ordinance could not be enforced against those who play game for money).

VI. PROCEDURE

A. Commencing Action

1. Determining Proper Court

§35.30 a. Jurisdiction

Actions for declaratory relief do not enlarge the court's jurisdiction over parties or subject matter. Rather, they "involve matters of practice and procedure only." Hoyt v Board of Civil Serv. Comm'rs (1942) 21 C2d 399, 403, 132 P2d 804. Thus, a declaratory relief action does not confer jurisdiction over a matter in which the court would not otherwise have jurisdiction. Harmon v Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1960) 183 CA2d 1, 6 CR 542 (court has no right to interfere with disputes within power of PUC). See San Ysidro Irrig. Dist. v Superior Court (1961) 56 C2d 708, 715, 16 CR 609 (statute authorizing declaratory relief intended to provide additional procedure using court's existing jurisdiction).

Except in the circumstances defined by CCP §86(a)(7) (see §35.2), the court may not grant declaratory relief in a limited civil case. Thus, ordinarily a complaint or cross-complaint for declaratory relief is not eligible to be tried under the less costly procedures applicable to these cases (see CCP §§90-100) even when the amount in controversy is $25,000 or less. See Southern Counties Gas Co. v Ventura Pipeline Constr. Co. (1971) 19 CA3d 372, 377, 96 CR 825 (under former law, genuine complaint for declaratory judgment properly brought in superior court regardless of amount in controversy).

Conversely, the courts have been careful to prevent the availability of declaratory relief from becoming a vehicle for forum shopping; jurisdictional amount-in-controversy limitations can not be circumvented by labeling a fully matured cause of action an action for declaratory relief. See Watson v Sansone (1971) 19 CA3d 1, 4, 96 CR 387 (superior court lacked jurisdiction over mature claim for money within jurisdictional amount of municipal court; only payment of money remained to be done; and no future declaration of rights or obligations was sought or was necessary or proper).

NOTE: With the advent of the unified trial court, amount-in-controversy no longer determines subject-matter jurisdiction. The term "limited civil case" is, however, a jurisdictional classification (CCP §32.5), and many procedural distinctions between these cases and cases coming within the general trial jurisdiction of the superior court have been retained. Code of Civil Procedure §§403.010-403.090 set forth the rules for reclassification of civil actions and proceedings. Presumably, under current law a defendant or cross-defendant will still be able to move for reclassification of an action seeking declaratory relief on the ground that the action is fully matured. For discussion of trial court unification and limited civil cases, see chap 6.

§35.31 b. Venue

Venue in a declaratory relief action "is determined by reference to the nature of the subject matter of the action." Mission Imports, Inc. v Superior Court (1982) 31 C3d 921, 930, 184 CR 296. The venue provisions contained in CCP §§392-402 apply (unless another specific venue statute is appropriate concerning the subject matter of the particular action). Thus, e.g., if the dispute involves the interpretation of a contract, venue for the declaratory relief action is determined by the contract venue provisions (see CCP §395). Mission Imports, Inc. v Superior Court, supra.

When a plaintiff, in the declaratory relief action, seeks to be exonerated from an alleged liability shown to be asserted by the defendant, however, the complaint for venue purposes is viewed as if the defendant is a plaintiff seeking to enforce the obligation. Shores v Chip Steak Co. (1955) 130 CA2d 620, 624, 279 P2d 591. Venue is determined by "reference to the subject matter of the defendant's accrued cause of action." Mission Imports, Inc., 31 C3d at 930.

NOTE: When each party to a dispute files an action in different counties in which the superior court has concurrent jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties, the court in which process is first served has priority of jurisdiction, i.e., exclusive and continuing jurisdiction over the matter. California Union Ins. Co. v Trinity River Land (1980) 105 CA3d 104, 163 CR 802 (court in which plaintiff's declaratory relief action had been filed and served first had exclusive jurisdiction over court in which defendant had later filed another action concerning same subject matter).

§35.32 2. Determining Appropriate Parties

A party must be sufficiently interested in the matter to be able to bring a declaratory relief action. Parties who can bring such an action are discussed in §§35.9-35.10. Moreover, the party proceeding with the declaratory relief action must determine whom to proceed against.

A declaratory relief action does not enlarge the court's jurisdiction over the parties. Hoyt v Board of Civil Serv. Comm'rs (1942) 21 C2d 399, 403, 132 P2d 804. The same rules regarding necessary, indispensable and proper parties that apply in civil actions generally apply in declaratory relief actions. Thus, CCP §389, controlling mandatory joinder of parties, applies to actions for declaratory relief.

A person is an indispensable party if the party's absence will prevent the court from granting a complete determination of the matter, or will seriously prejudice any party before the court, or if a judgment rendered will inequitably affect or jeopardize the party's interest. Hebbard v Colgrove (1972) 28 CA3d 1017, 1026, 105 CR 172. Although failure to name an indispensable party is not a jurisdictional defect in the fundamental sense, in that the court still has power to render a decision, the court should not proceed with the case when an indispensable party is absent and cannot be joined. Sierra Club, Inc. v California Coastal Comm'n (1979) 95 CA3d 495, 500, 157 CR 190.

Thus, failure to name a party whose presence is required for a complete and definitive declaration of all the parties' rights subjects an action for declaratory relief to a demurrer under CCP §430.10(d). See, e.g., Beresford Neighborhood Ass'n v City of San Mateo (1989) 207 CA3d 1180, 255 CR 434, in which an association sued the City of San Mateo seeking declaratory relief, an injunction, and a writ of mandate, in a dispute over a land purchase and the potential zoning and uses of the property. The court sustained the city's demurrer without leave to amend because of the association's failure to join the proposed developer of the property, who was held under the facts to be an indispensable party. On failure to name an indispensable party invalidating a declaratory judgment, see Carpenters 46 N. Cal. Counties Conf. Bd. v Zweigle (1982) 130 CA3d 337, 347, 181 CR 805 (declaratory judgment invalid as to corporation even though its owner and president was joined as individual party to action). On factors relevant to determining whether an unjoined party is indispensable, see Planning & Conserv. League v Department of Water Resources (2000) 83 CA4th 892, 100 CR2d 173.

Declaratory relief may be sought against any "person" who can otherwise be sued. Thus, in Hoyt, 21 C2d at 403, the court stated that the right to bring an action for declaratory relief against a governmental agency exists "if an acceptance of liability and subjection to suit on the part of a sovereign body is found elsewhere in the statutes of the state and the declaratory judgment procedure is not barred by the provisions of the waiver of immunity." See Lord v Garland (1946) 27 C2d 840, 852, 168 P2d 5 (declaratory relief available remedy against state). See also Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v California State Bd. of Pharmacy (1966) 241 CA2d 229, 236, 50 CR 489, in which the court held under the facts of the case that the California State Board of Pharmacy, not its executive secretary or individual members, was the appropriate defendant when the gravamen of the complaint was official rather than personal action, and that the individuals' demurrers should have been sustained.

On actual and potential claimants under an insurance policy being proper parties to a declaratory action, see General Ins. Co. of Am. v Whitmore (1965) 235 CA2d 670, 45 CR 556.

On joinder of defendants generally, see chap 14.

3. Drafting Complaint

§35.33 a. Allegations

Generally, the ordinary rules of pleading apply to declaratory relief actions. Mackay v Whitaker (1953) 116 CA2d 504, 510, 253 P2d 1021. The plaintiff, to state a cause of action for declaratory relief under CCP §1060, must allege facts that show that there is either an actual present, or probable future, controversy that relates to the legal rights and duties of the parties, and request that the court adjudge those rights and duties. Maguire v Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc'y (1944) 23 C2d 719, 728, 146 P2d 673; Sherwyn v Department of Soc. Servs. (1985) 173 CA3d 52, 58, 218 CR 778. See City of Tiburon v Northwestern Pac. R.R. (1970) 4 CA3d 160, 170, 84 CR 469. On standing and actual controversy requirements, see §§35.9-35.15.

Facts, rather than conclusions of law, "must be pleaded which show a controversy of concrete actuality as opposed to one which is merely academic or hypothetical." Wilson v Transit Auth. (1962) 199 CA2d 716, 722, 19 CR 59. Merely alleging a conclusion that there is a controversy, rather than the facts that show the controversy, is insufficient. See City of Alturas v Gloster (1940) 16 C2d 46, 104 P2d 810 (bare conclusion that controversy existed insufficient); Loupias v Rosen (1951) 102 CA2d 781, 784, 228 P2d 611 (plaintiff should plead facts showing that "the controversy is real and not merely illusory"); Hagan v Fairfield (1965) 238 CA2d 197, 202, 47 CR 600 ("must plead facts rather than conclusions of law"). See also American Mission Army v City of Lynwood (1956) 138 CA2d 817, 292 P2d 533 (failure of plaintiff to allege with particularity details of ordinance which it contended were invalid or act of city official which it contended was unlawful precluded declaratory relief); E. M. Cotton Appliance, Inc. v Felton Aluminum Co. (1954) 124 CA2d 546, 548, 269 P2d 64 (plaintiff's failure to set forth defendant's claim with particularity precluded declaratory relief). "General statements about a controversy are useless; the facts of the respective claims concerning the subject must be given." 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §862 (5th ed 2008).

In asking for declaratory relief, the pleader need not specify the relief sought. The court will make the appropriate declaration. California Canning Peach Growers v Corcoran (1936) 14 CA2d 264, 267, 57 P2d 1360. It is better practice, however, to set forth the desired declaration.

On sample forms of complaint for declaratory relief, see §§35.51-35.52.

© The Regents of the University of California

§35.34 b. Joinder of Causes of Action

Declaratory relief actions may be brought either alone or in combination with causes of action for other types of relief. CCP §1062. Thus, plaintiff may seek coercive relief (e.g., damages, an accounting) and declaratory relief in the same complaint. See §35.48. Plaintiff is not required to set forth claims for coercive and declaratory relief in separate counts when both claims arise out of the same transaction, because a single cause of action may call for more than one remedy. Marden v Bailard (1954) 124 CA2d 458, 268 P2d 809. Nevertheless, for clarity, it is usually advisable to set forth the claims for coercive relief and declaratory relief in different counts.

PRACTICE TIP: Often, a declaratory relief cause of action is joined with a cause of action seeking other relief. Joinder of a claim for declaratory relief with a claim for other relief has certain advantages for plaintiff. For example, if plaintiff cannot establish an immediate right to coercive relief, a declaration may establish future rights so that a subsequent action will not be necessary. An action for coercive relief alone may not resolve the entire controversy between the parties. If a declaratory relief cause of action is joined with other causes of action, however, and the declaratory relief cause of action relies on all the same facts as the other causes of action, should the other causes of action be found insufficient, the court may also deny declaratory relief under CCP §1061 as not being necessary or proper under the circumstances, and dismiss the entire action. See Girard v Miller (1963) 214 CA2d 266, 29 CR 359.

The failure to include a claim for coercive relief does not preclude a party from seeking such relief in a new action. Lortz v Connell (1969) 273 CA2d 286, 300, 78 CR 6 (consequential or incidental relief may be obtained in the declaratory relief action or in a separate suit thereafter predicated on the declaration of rights set forth in the declaratory judgment). On effect on trial calendar when relief in addition to a declaration of rights and duties is sought, see §35.43.

B. Filing Response

1. Responsive Pleadings

§35.35 a. Demurrer

At the pleading stage, a complaint is broadly construed to allow declaratory relief before the breach of a legal obligation, and "any set of facts setting forth the existence of an actual controversy needing resolution will render a complaint sufficient." Newby v Alto Riviera Apts. (1976) 60 CA3d 288, 303, 131 CR 547, disapproved on other grounds in Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 180 CR 496. Nevertheless, in appropriate cases, a court may sustain a demurrer and dismiss the declaratory relief action. See §§35.36-35.37. On demurrers generally, see chap 23.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/35 Declaratory Relief/§35.36 (1) In General

§35.36 (1) In General

A general demurrer to a complaint may be sustained when the necessary requisites to state a cause of action for declaratory relief are not alleged. See, e.g., Fracasse v Brent (1972) 6 C3d 784, 100 CR 385 (no actual controversy); Rowland Sch. Dist. v State Bd. of Educ. (1968) 264 CA2d 589, 593, 70 CR 504 (failure to allege fact showing that plaintiff had standing). On requisites to state cause of action, see §§35.9-35.15, 35.30-35.34.

A court may also sustain a general demurrer when facts appear on the face of the complaint that justify the court in concluding that its determination is not necessary or proper. Moss v Moss (1942) 20 C2d 640, 642, 128 P2d 526. Thus, a general demurrer may be sustained when the complaint shows on its face that all relief is barred by the statute of limitations or that the entire controversy has been settled by an earlier judgment. Bennett v Hibernia Bank (1956) 47 C2d 540, 550, 305 P2d 20. Similarly, a demurrer may be sustained when declaratory relief is an inappropriate remedy, or when complete relief would be more properly given in another forum. See, e.g., State v Superior Court (Veta Co.) (1974) 12 C3d 237, 249, 115 CR 497 (declaratory relief inappropriate to review adjudicatory administrative decision; appropriate procedure is administrative mandamus under CCP §1094.5); West Coast Poultry Co. v Glasner (1965) 231 CA2d 747, 752, 42 CR 297 (declaratory relief inappropriate; State Civil Service and Personnel Board appropriate forum to determine qualification for public employment and discipline); Monahan v Department of Water & Power (1941) 48 CA2d 746, 120 P2d 730 (declaratory relief inappropriate; matter within exclusive province of executive branch). For further discussion concerning exclusivity of other remedies or forums, and prohibition against using declaratory relief to circumvent other prohibitions against maintenance of actions, see §35.18.

Moreover, a demurrer may be sustained when there is another speedy and adequate remedy available to plaintiff that is as well suited to plaintiff's needs as declaratory relief. See, e.g., Holden v Arnebergh (1968) 265 CA2d 87, 71 CR 401 (affirmed sustaining of demurrer because other remedies were available in criminal proceedings). For further discussion, see §35.17.

Additionally, a court may sustain a demurrer when the court lacks jurisdiction over the subject matter of the controversy. See, e.g., Harmon v Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1960) 183 CA2d 1, 6 CR 542. See also Watson v Sansone (1971) 19 CA3d 1, 96 CR 387; §35.18. On jurisdiction concerning declaratory relief actions, see §35.30.

In some instances, when the courts have found that nondeclaratory relief causes of action failed to set forth sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action, they have also sustained a general demurrer to the declaratory relief cause of action based on the same facts. See Monolith Portland Cement Co. v Tendler (1962) 206 CA2d 800, 808, 24 CR 38. See also Bos v United States Rubber Co. (1950) 100 CA2d 565, 224 P2d 386. Sustaining a demurrer to a declaratory relief cause of action because other causes of action are defective may be based, under CCP §1061, on the court's exercise of discretion. See §35.21; Girard v Miller (1963) 214 CA2d 266, 29 CR 359.

Counsel should note, however, that if the complaint alleges the existence of an actual controversy, "the court should not sustain a general demurrer on the theory that any declaration would necessarily be adverse to the plaintiff." Teachers Mgmt. & Inv. Corp. v City of Santa Cruz (1976) 64 CA3d 438, 449, 134 CR 523. Nevertheless, if the court sustains a general demurrer and it is clear that the order sustaining the demurrer amounts to a correct decision on the merits, the appellate court may simply modify the judgment of dismissal "to declare that plaintiff was entitled to no relief." Teachers Mgmt. & Inv. Corp. v City of Santa Cruz, supra. See Wilson v Civil Serv. Comm'n (1964) 224 CA2d 340, 344, 36 CR 559, in which the court noted that when a good declaratory relief cause of action is stated in the complaint, instead of entering an order of dismissal, the court should make a declaration even if not in accord with the declaration sought by the plaintiff. The court also noted that such a decision is more normally done in connection with a motion for judgment on the pleadings (see §35.40), although there appears no reason why it could not also be done in connection with a demurrer. See also Dohrmann Co. v Security Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1970) 8 CA3d 655, 661, 87 CR 792 (proper and desirable in declaratory relief action to enter judgment on the pleadings rather than sustain demurrers without leave to amend and enter judgment of dismissal). For further discussion of the court's duty to declare rights when the complaint alleges facts showing an actual controversy relating to the parties' legal rights and duties, whether or not the facts alleged entitle plaintiff to a favorable declaration, see §35.22.

For further discussion of the court's discretion to deny declaratory relief, see §§35.21-35.22.

§35.37 (2) Another Action Pending

To demur to a complaint seeking declaratory relief on the grounds that there is another action pending under CCP §430.10(c), "the defendant must show that the parties, cause of action, and issues are identical, and the same evidence would support the judgment in each case." California Union Ins. Co. v Trinity River Land (1980) 105 CA3d 104, 108, 163 CR 802 (demurrer overruled; parties not same in both actions). The pendency of another action growing out of the same transaction is grounds to abate the second action, but never the first action. California Union Ins. Co. v Trinity River Land, supra.

Under the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction, when two superior courts have concurrent jurisdiction over the parties and the subject matter, the first superior court to assume jurisdiction has exclusive and continuing jurisdiction over the parties and subject matter until the resolution of all necessarily related matters. The court where process was first served has priority of jurisdiction. 105 CA3d at 109.

§35.38 b. Answer

The general rules of pleading in civil actions apply to the answer in declaratory relief actions. See Mackay v Whitaker (1953) 116 CA2d 504, 510, 253 P2d 1021. The defendant can, by denial in the answer, put in issue, e.g., whether there is a justiciable controversy or a controversy at all. On answers generally, see chap 25.

If the complaint seeking declaratory relief is well pleaded and defendant does not contest the appropriateness of the remedy and desires a favorable declaration, the defendant's answer should not deny the allegation that there is justiciable controversy and should not pray that the complaint be dismissed or that plaintiff take nothing. Instead, the answer should contain specific denials rather than a general denial (which will have the effect of denying that there is an actual controversy between the parties assuming the complaint is unverified; see CCP §431.30(d)) with a prayer for specific relief. It is improper for the trial court simply to adjudge that plaintiff take nothing by the complaint for declaratory relief alleging an actual controversy when plaintiff has prayed for a declaration of rights. See Kroff v Kroff (1954) 127 CA2d 404, 274 P2d 45. But see Boyar v Krech (1937) 10 C2d 207, 73 P2d 1218, holding that a judgment that plaintiff take nothing was not reversible error when the findings and conclusions (now statement of decision) amounted to a declaration.

If plaintiff incorrectly sets forth or omits some or all of defendant's contentions, defendant can deny plaintiffs' allegations in connection with those contentions. It is also good practice for defendant to set forth accurately defendant's actual contentions, at least in general terms, although there appears no requirement to do so. See California Canning Peach Growers v Corcoran (1936) 14 CA2d 264, 267, 57 P2d 1360, in which the court said that the court's declaration > will be in response to the allegations contained in the complaint, some in response to the new matter contained in the answers and some, perhaps, in response to the new matter, if any, introduced by the plaintiff in avoidance of new matter set forth in the answer, that is, matter introduced in the nature of a replication to the defendants' plea.

The defendant should also set forth in the answer any applicable affirmative defenses that the defendant has with respect to the controversy.

§35.39 c. Cross-Complaint

A defendant may file a cross-complaint seeking, e.g., indemnification from a cross-defendant or new third party, if the defendant is found liable to the plaintiff in the underlying action. See, e.g., Lewis Ave. Parent Teachers' Ass'n v Hussey (1967) 250 CA2d 232, 58 CR 499 (cross-complaint against codefendants for declaration for indemnification in personal injury action proper); Brokate v Hehr Mfg. Co. (1966) 243 CA2d 133, 52 CR 672 (cross-complaint for declaration of corporation's duty to indemnify defendant director under former Corp C §830 (now Corp C §317) in slander action proper); J.C. Penney Co. v Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1963) 217 CA2d 834, 32 CR 172 (store being sued by person injured on escalator entitled to declaratory relief on cross-complaint that it is entitled to indemnification, if found liable to injured party, from party that installed escalator and warranted it). On a concurrent tortfeasor being able to obtain partial indemnity on a comparative fault basis, see American Motorcycle Ass'n v Superior Court (1978) 20 C3d 578, 146 CR 182; Paragon Real Estate Group of San Francisco, Inc. v Hansen (2009) 178 CA4th 177, 100 CR3d 234.

Defendants often file cross-complaints seeking indemnity. Such a cross-complaint properly takes the form of an action for declaratory relief. Valley Circle Estates v VTN Consol. (1983) 33 C3d 604, 612, 189 CR 871; Lewis Ave. Parent Teachers' Ass'n v Hussey, supra.

The same rules of pleading that apply to complaints also apply to a cross-complaint for declaratory relief. See Mackay v Whitaker (1953) 116 CA2d 504, 510, 253 P2d 1021. Moreover, a court may exercise its discretion to deny declaratory relief (see §§35.21-35.22) sought in a cross-complaint if "the issues and evidence produced in the main case are substantially the same as would be produced under the cross-complaint [citations]." International Ass'n of Fire Fighters v City of Palo Alto (1963) 60 C2d 295, 301, 32 CR 842 (declaration on validity of statute sought in cross-complaint denied because issue would be resolved in main action).

NOTE: If the only relief sought in the main action is declaratory relief under CCP §§1060-1062.5, the compulsory cross-complaint provisions of CCP §§426.10-426.70 do not apply. CCP §426.60(c); Russo v Scrambler Motorcycles (1976) 56 CA3d 112, 117, 127 CR 913. Similarly, the compulsory cross-complaint provisions of CCP §§426.10-426.70 do not apply to any cross-complaint filed by a defendant seeking only declaratory relief. CCP §426.60(c).

A defendant who files an unsuccessful cross-complaint for indemnification is not prohibited from later seeking contribution if the statutory requirements of CCP §875 are met. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v Lucky Stores, Inc. (1992) 11 CA4th 1372, 14 CR2d 673.

2. Motions

§35.40 a. Judgment on the Pleadings

A motion for judgment on the pleadings is appropriate in a declaratory relief action to obtain a declaration of the rights of the parties, provided those rights can be determined as a matter of law from the face of the pleadings and from matters of which the court may take judicial notice. Silver v Beverly Hills Nat'l Bank (1967) 253 CA2d 1000, 1005, 61 CR 751. See also Wolfe v George (9th Cir 2007) 486 F3d 1120 (declaratory judgment action raised constitutionality of California's vexatious litigant law (CCP §391)). Such a motion is in the nature of a general demurrer (Silver v Beverly Hills Nat'l Bank, supra) in that it attacks the complaint on the ground that it fails to state a cause of action. See Wilson v Board of Retirement (1957) 156 CA2d 195, 200, 319 P2d 426. The motion is generally subject to and evaluated by the same rules that apply to a general demurrer. See Colberg, Inc. v State ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works (1967) 67 C2d 408, 411, 62 CR 401; Allstate Ins. Co. v Kim W. (1984) 160 CA3d 326, 330, 206 CR 609. See also Silver v Beverly Hills Nat'l Bank, supra (in ruling on motion averments of pleadings against which motion is directed are deemed true and moving party, insofar as its allegations have been controverted, admits their untruthfulness). Unlike a general demurrer, however, there is no time limitation and the motion may be made, e.g., at any time before trial, at the start of trial, or before final judgment is rendered. See Shabrick v Moore (1961) 195 CA2d 56, 59, 15 CR 310; 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §193 (5th ed 2008).

The motion is not limited to use by defendants. Plaintiffs can also make the motion, which "is analogous to a plaintiff's [general] demurrer to an answer and is evaluated by the same standards." Allstate Ins. Co. v Kim W., supra (insurer brought action seeking declaration that policy did not cover insured's intentional acts; answer admitting that insured sexually assaulted minor fatal to coverage issue entitling insurer to judgment on pleadings).

The motion can be made although the party has not previously filed a general demurrer, or the party's demurrer has been overruled. 6 Witkin, Procedure, Proc Without Trial §§187, 194-195. On a party's being entitled to leave to amend pleading if motion granted at time of trial without a general demurrer having earlier been filed, see 6 Witkin, Procedure, Proc Without Trial §194.

It has been held error for a court to merely enter judgment on the pleadings for the defendants when a "complaint is legally sufficient and sets forth facts and circumstances showing that a declaratory adjudication is appropriate." Chas. L. Harney, Inc. v Contractors' State License Bd. (1952) 39 C2d 561, 565, 247 P2d 913.

On demurrers, see §§35.35-35.37.

© The Regents of the University of California

§35.41 b. Summary Judgment

A summary judgment motion is an appropriate procedure to obtain a judgment declaring the rights of the parties if there is no triable issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. CCP §437c(c); Arroyo v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1975) 48 CA3d 793, 796, 121 CR 918, 920; National Exhibition Co. v City & County of San Francisco (1972) 24 CA3d 1, 10, 100 CR 757. For discussion of summary judgment motions, see chap 36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§35.42 c. Other Motions; Bifurcation

All other motions that are available in other types of actions, e.g., motions to strike, motions to amend the pleadings or to file supplementary pleadings, and discovery motions, are available in declaratory relief actions. See generally Mackay v Whitaker (1953) 116 CA2d 504, 510, 253 P2d 1021.

Counsel should note that in an appropriate case, e.g., when a defendant has filed a cross-complaint for declaratory relief that would be dispositive of the entire action, counsel should consider moving under CCP §§598 and 1048(b) to have the issues raised in the declaratory relief action tried before other issues raised in other causes of action. See Equitable Life Assur. Soc'y v Berry (1989) 212 CA3d 832, 260 CR 819 (order of bifurcation severing insurer's declaratory relief cross-complaint to try coverage issue first before bad faith claim alleged against insurer upheld). See also California State Auto. Ass'n v Superior Court (1986) 184 CA3d 1428, 1433, 229 CR 409 (trial court has power to determine order in which issues are tried and may order declaratory relief complaint tried before cross-complaint). This is often called severance or bifurcation. Counsel should consult local court rules to determine if there are any special requirements under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620) or any other local rule on severance or bifurcation. On motion to try special defenses first, see CCP §§597, 597.5.

For further discussion of severance and bifurcation, see chap 43. See also California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§6.99-6.104 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

C. Particular Trial Aspects

§35.43 1. Precedence on Calendar

Under CCP §1062.3(a), except as provided in CCP §1062.3(b), declaratory relief actions brought under CCP §§1060-1062.5 must be set for trial "at the earliest possible date." Such actions take precedence on the calendar over all cases except older matters of the same character and those matters given special precedence by law (see, e.g., CCP §36). CCP §1062.3(b).

Under CCP §1062.3(b), the preference provided by CCP §1062.3(a) is limited to actions in which no relief in addition to a declaration of rights and duties is sought. If any additional relief is sought, the action will not have precedence on the calendar. CCP §1062.3(b). For an action seeking relief in addition to a declaration of rights and duties to precedence on the calendar, a noticed motion must be filed that shows that the action requires a speedy trial. CCP §1062.3(b).

It has been stated that "courts should not temporize with the improper use of the declaratory procedure to gain a preferred position on the trial calendar." Travers v Louden (1967) 254 CA2d 926, 932, 62 CR 654. If plaintiff improperly mistitles the action as one for declaratory relief solely to obtain preference on the calendar, the court may prevent accomplishment of that purpose, not by dismissal of the action, but by an appropriate order or procedure. Kessloff v Pearson (1951) 37 C2d 609, 613, 233 P2d 899 (error to dismiss action). On sanctions generally, see CCP §§128.6-128.7.

Code of Civil Procedure §1062.3 does not prevent the court from exercising its discretion to refuse to grant declaratory relief. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1956) 47 C2d 428, 432, 304 P2d 13. See §§35.21-35.22 on court's discretion to deny declaratory relief.

In actions controlled by CCP §1062.3(b), in an appropriate case counsel should consider making a motion for a trial preference under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1335 (motion to advance). Counsel should consult local court rules to determine if there are any special requirements under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Govt C §§68600-68620), or any other local rule. See chap 6. For further discussion of motion to advance, see chap 42. On moving to try issues raised in a declaratory relief action first under CCP §598, see §35.42.

§35.44 2. Right to Jury Trial

The right to a jury trial in declaratory actions is controlled, as with all cases filed in California state courts, by Cal Const art I, §16. A litigant has a right to a jury trial as to all issues for which a right to a jury existed at common law in 1850. Veale v Piercy (1962) 206 CA2d 557, 560, 24 CR 91 (decided under former Cal Const art I, §7). A party may not be denied a jury trial because the action is for declaratory relief. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1956) 47 C2d 428, 304 P2d 13; Veale v Piercy, supra. See 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §85 (5th ed 2008) (court will not permit declaratory relief label "to be used as a device to circumvent the right to a jury trial"). See also Comment, Jury Trials in Declaratory Relief Actions: The Right Exists, But Under What Circumstances? 6 UCLA L Rev 678, 687 (1959).

Thus, the right to a jury trial is controlled not by the form of the action, but by the nature of the issues to be adjudicated. When the factual issues raised by the declaratory relief action are legal in nature, there is generally a right to a jury trial as to those issues. See Veale v Piercy, supra (right to jury trial on legal issue of possession). See also 7 Witkin, Procedure, Trial §§85-86. When, however, the issues raised are equitable in nature, there is no right to a jury trial as to those issues. See Carpenson v Najarian (1967) 254 CA2d 856, 62 CR 687 (no jury trial in declaratory relief action seeking determination of priority of deed of trust over construction liens); Veale v Piercy, supra (declaratory relief action to quiet title in nature of equitable proceeding triable to court).

Although the order of proof rests in the discretion of the court (Jaffe v Albertson Co. (1966) 243 CA2d 592, 609, 53 CR 25), if the action contains both legal and equitable issues, the equitable issues are generally tried first (Raedeke v Gibraltar Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1974) 10 C3d 665, 111 CR 693; Veale v Piercy, supra). See 7 Witkin, Procedure, Trial §149. It has been stated that the better practice is for the trial court to first determine the equitable issues before submitting the legal ones to the jury. See, e.g., Bate v Marsteller (1965) 232 CA2d 605, 43 CR 149.

Counsel should note that even when the right to a jury trial is not guaranteed by law as to some or all of the issues (i.e., equitable issues are involved), a party may file a motion requesting an advisory jury. See Estate of Cazaurang (1946) 75 CA2d 217, 225, 170 P2d 694 (decided before enactment of former Cal Rules of Ct 377). Former Cal Rules of Ct 377 set forth the procedures and was repealed on January 1, 2003. However, the Advisory Committee comment states that, in an appropriate case, a party may request, and the court in its discretion may approve, the use of an advisory jury.

§35.45 3. Burden of Proof

Plaintiff has the burden of establishing facts to justify the court's granting declaratory relief. Boosman v United Bldg. Co. (1952) 109 CA2d 486, 488, 241 P2d 58. However, the plaintiff in a declaratory relief action does not automatically carry the burden of proof with respect to the underlying issues. The burden of proof rests on the party "who 'without evidence would be compelled to submit to an adverse judgment before the introduction of any evidence,' or who asserts the affirmative of any issue." American Home Assur. Co. v Essy (1960) 179 CA2d 19, 23, 3 CR 586, quoting from Borchard, Declaratory Judgments 404-409 (2d ed 1941). See Roadside Rest, Inc. v Lankershim Estate (1946) 76 CA2d 525, 173 P2d 554, in which the court, relying on former CCP §1981 (now Evid C §§500, 550), noted that the party holding the affirmative of the issue has to produce the evidence to prove it and therefore the burden of proof on any issue rests with the party who would be defeated if no evidence were given on either side.

Thus, for example, although an insurer may institute a declaratory relief action against an insured to determine coverage under a liability policy, the burden of proof rests with the insured defendant to prove coverage. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Spann (1973) 31 CA3d 97, 100, 106 CR 923. By the same token, when an insurer brings a declaratory relief action to determine coverage, it has the burden of proving a lack of coverage based on an exclusion or other exculpatory clause contained within the policy. See Executive Aviation, Inc. v National Ins. Underwriters (1971) 16 CA3d 799, 806, 94 CR 347 (burden of proof on insurer to prove it was within exculpatory clause contained in liability policy in action filed by insured). American Home Assur. Co. v Essy, supra (insurer had burden of proof on issue of arson by the insured).

© The Regents of the University of California

§35.46 4. Statement of Decision

When a declaratory relief action is tried before the court without a jury, any party appearing at the trial has a right to a statement of decision on request. CCP §632. When a statement of decision fails to resolve a disputed factual or legal issue, the appellate court may not infer that the trial court decided that question in favor of the prevailing party. CCP §634. See Anderson v Southern Pac. Co. (1968) 264 CA2d 230, 70 CR 389 (under former CCP §§632 and 634, when trial court fails to provide statement of decision on request, appellate court will not presume court found in favor of prevailing party). On timing and procedure to request a statement of decision and other requirements, see CCP §632; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590.

For further discussion of statement of decision, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§24.34-24.50 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

5. Declaratory Judgment

§35.47 a. Trial Court's Duty to Render Full and Complete Declaration

In an action for declaratory relief, the court should make a full and complete declaration, "disposing of all questions of rights, status or other legal relations encountered in construing the instrument before it" (American Enter. v Van Winkle (1952) 39 C2d 210, 219, 246 P2d 935, 939), including all legal and equitable issues (Anderson v Southern Pac. Co. (1968) 264 CA2d 230, 70 CR 389). It is the duty of a court hearing a declaratory relief action to make a complete determination and disposition of the controversy. Amerson v Christman (1968) 261 CA2d 811, 68 CR 378. In Amerson, the court added that the parties' rights should be determined on the facts found and not be limited by the issues joined or by counsels' claims. 261 CA2d at 824, 68 CR at 387. The requirements in declaratory relief actions with respect to a statement of decision are identical to the requirements in other types of actions. See People v Superior Court (1937) 24 CA2d 8, 74 P2d 326. See also Anderson, 264 CA2d at 234 (discussed in §35.46).

© The Regents of the University of California

§35.48 b. Judgment; Effect

The declaratory judgment is intended to constitute a judicial resolution of disputes between the parties. Although the court should dispose of the entire controversy between the parties, it has "discretion as to the extent of the relief to be afforded in a proceeding for declaratory relief [citation omitted], but where a case is made for such relief the court should not deny it." Record Mach. & Tool Co. v Pageman Holding Corp. (1954) 42 C2d 227, 234, 266 P2d 1. The declaration may be either affirmative or negative, declaring that a party is or is not under a duty. CCP §1060. See Record Mach. & Tool Co. v Pageman Holding Corp., supra.

As with any judgment, a declaratory judgment "should not rest upon probabilities, conjecture or vague inferences" (Roadside Rest, Inc. v Lankershim Estate (1946) 76 CA2d 525, 535, 173 P2d 554), but should be in conformity with the evidence and on the merits (Phelps v Loop (1942) 53 CA2d 541, 128 P2d 63). The declaratory judgment "must decree, not suggest, what the parties may or may not do." Selby Realty Co. v City of San Buenaventura (1973) 10 C3d 110, 117, 109 CR 799; Monahan v Department of Water & Power (1941) 48 CA2d 746, 751, 120 P2d 730.

While the primary purpose for declaratory relief is to guide the parties in their conduct to avoid a breach, a declaratory judgment may also include coercive relief. Olson v Cory (1983) 35 C3d 390, 400, 197 CR 843. Thus, e.g., the court in its judgment may also award money damages (see Lortz v Connell (1969) 273 CA2d 286, 299, 78 CR 6; Bertero v National Gen. Corp. (1967) 254 CA2d 126, 147, 62 CR 714), order specific performance (Beeler v Plastic Stamping, Inc. (1956) 144 CA2d 306, 300 P2d 852), or order an accounting (Steeve v Yaeger (1956) 145 CA2d 455, 302 P2d 704). The court in an appropriate case may also issue an injunction ancillary to the relief sought to preserve the parties' rights. Knox v Wolfe (1946) 73 CA2d 494, 504, 167 P2d 3 (granting of injunctive relief necessary to a complete determination of the controversy held proper even though not prayed for). However, in California Water & Tel. Co. v County of Los Angeles (1967) 253 CA2d 16, 32, 61 CR 618, the court stated, "[a]n ancillary injunction should not issue as a concomitant to a declaratory judgment unless the pleading and proof demonstrate that the traditional requisites of injunctive relief have been met."

In appropriate cases, the court may retain jurisdiction to make such orders in the future that may be necessary (Bertero v National Gen. Corp., supra) because "[i]n giving declaratory relief a court has the powers of a court of equity." City of Los Angeles v City of Glendale (1943) 23 C2d 68, 81, 142 P2d 289.

The failure to seek coercive relief in a declaratory relief action does not preclude another action to enforce the rights obtained by the declaratory judgment. CCP §§1060, 1062; Lortz, v Connell (1969) 273 CA2d 286, 299, 78 CR 6. If a plaintiff who has not sought coercive relief obtains a favorable declaration in the declaratory relief action, the plaintiff in a later action against the defendant may rely on and allege in the pleadings the declaratory judgment to establish an issue resolved by that judgment. See Lortz, 273 CA2d at 301 (plaintiff entitled to rely on findings, conclusions, and judgment in earlier declaratory relief action to establish performance of contract obligations in later action for damages). But see City of Los Angeles v City of San Fernando (1975) 14 C3d 199, 230, 123 CR 1, disapproved on other grounds in City of Barstow v Mojave Water Agency (2000) 23 C4th 1224, 1247, 99 CR2d 294, in which the court explained that the res judicata or collateral estoppel effect of a legal ruling may differ from the effect of factual determination. The determination of a question of law should not be given res judicata effect in a subsequent action between the parties if injustice would result; moreover, when the public interest is involved, the collateral estoppel effect of earlier litigation will not prevent redetermination of a previously decided question of law. 14 C3d at 230. In any event, if it is determined in the declaratory relief action that the litigant has no rights, the litigant is precluded from relitigating his or her claim by seeking different relief. Dills v Delira Corp. (1956) 145 CA2d 124, 130, 302 P2d 397.

§35.49 D. Appellate Review

Under CCP §1061, the court may refuse to exercise its power to grant declaratory relief "where its declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances." See §35.21. A trial court's decision to grant or deny declaratory relief will not be disturbed on appeal unless an abuse of discretion can be shown. Allstate Ins. Co. v Fisher (1973) 31 CA3d 391, 395, 107 CR 251 (dismissal of declaratory relief action affirmed); Fagerstedt v Continental Ins. Co. (1968) 266 CA2d 370, 72 CR 126 (judgment of dismissal following sustaining of demurrers affirmed). See Orloff v Metropolitan Trust Co. (1941) 17 C2d 484, 489, 110 P2d 396 (judgment refusing to entertain declaratory relief complaint not reviewable on appeal except for abuse of discretion).

Although CCP §1061 vests a high degree of discretion in the trial court on whether to grant or deny declaratory relief (see Farmers Ins. Exch. v Adams (1985) 170 CA3d 712, 723, 216 CR 287, disapproved on other grounds in Garvey v State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (1989) 48 C3d 395, 257 CR 292), that discretion is not unlimited. Columbia Pictures Corp. v DeToth (1945) 26 C2d 753, 762, 161 P2d 217. For example, when a complaint for declaratory relief is legally sufficient and states facts and circumstances that show that such relief is entirely appropriate, it has been held to be an abuse of discretion and reversible error for the trial court to refuse to assume jurisdiction by sustaining a general demurrer and dismissing the complaint. The appellate court will direct the trial court to entertain the action under those circumstances. Columbia Pictures Corp. v DeToth, supra ("[d]eclaratory relief must be granted when the facts justifying that course are sufficiently alleged").

When only legal issues are raised in the record on appeal, however, it has been stated that it would be an idle act to reverse a judgment of dismissal following an order sustaining a general demurrer without leave to amend for a trial on the merits. Rather, the appellate court will consider the merits of the legal controversy and its opinion will constitute the declaration of the parties' legal rights and duties in the matter. Taschner v City Council (1973) 31 CA3d 48, 57, 107 CR 214, disapproved on other grounds in Associated Home Builders of the Greater Eastbay, Inc. v City of Livermore (1976) 18 C3d 582, 135 CR 41 (ordinance declared invalid; judgment reversed with directions for trial court to overrule demurrer and take further proceedings consistent with view expressed in opinion). See Western Homes, Inc. v Herbert Ketell, Inc. (1965) 236 CA2d 142, 146, 45 CR 856, in which it was noted that a judgment of dismissal on an order sustaining a general demurrer is not to be reversed when plaintiff's allegations in the complaint show that plaintiff has no cause of action. "The declaration by the appellate court accomplishes declaratory relief." Western Homes, Inc. v Herbert Ketell, Inc., supra. See also Cinmark Inv. Co. v Richard (1966) 246 CA2d 498, 501, 54 CR 810 (judgment modified after trial court failed to make any declaration of rights on cross-complaint for declaratory relief; as modified, judgment affirmed).

On trial court's discretion to deny declaratory relief, see §§35.21-35.22.

A complaint for declaratory relief may also claim damages or other forms of relief. See §§35.34, 35.48. Any additional relief claimed should be specified in the title of the complaint (e.g., by adding "AND DAMAGES" or other designation), supported by factual allegations (preferably stated in a separate cause of action; see §35.34), and demanded in the prayer. If damages are sought in addition to declaratory relief, the amount of damages sought should be stated. On preparation of complaints generally, see chap 15.

Note: The format of attorney-drafted court papers is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For example, pleading paper (with consecutive line numbers at the left margin of each page) must be used. Comment: On when the constitutionality of a statute or ordinance must be attacked first in the agency, see §§35.18, 35.20. II. AVAILABILITY OF SUMMARY JUDGMENT OR SUMMARY ADJUDICATION

§36.2 A. Law Governing Motions for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication

The procedures governing summary judgment and summary adjudication are entirely statutory, as specified in CCP §437c. Summary judgment is granted when "all the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." CCP §437c(c). Summary adjudication is governed by §437c(f), which provides that the court should grant the motion "only if it completely disposes of a cause of action, an affirmative defense, a claim for damages, or an issue of duty."

PRACTICE TIP: For the best summary of the law and procedure in making or opposing summary judgment or adjudication under §437c, see Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 107 CR2d 841.

Specific rules of court pertaining to summary judgment and summary adjudication motions are found in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350-3.1354. The rules state which documents must be filed and specify their format and length. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350. The rules also discuss the handling of objections to proffered evidence. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1352-3.1354. There is a special rule for summary judgment or summary adjudication proceedings involving possession of real property (e.g., unlawful detainer actions). See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1351.

CAUTION: Counsel should always check local court rules for any rules governing motions for summary judgment or summary adjudication.

B. When Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication Are Available

§36.3 1. When There Is No Triable Issue of Material Fact

A motion for summary judgment must be granted if all the papers submitted show that there is "no triable issue as to any material fact." CCP §437c(c); Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 850, 107 CR2d 841. The decision is not discretionary; if no triable issue of material fact exists, the court must grant the motion. See Habitat Trust for Wildlife, Inc. v City of Rancho Cucamonga (2009) 175 CA4th 1306, 1342, 96 CR3d 813 (summary judgment not improper when review of evidence indicates no unresolved factual issues, only legal effect of undisputed facts).

Summary judgment "provide[s] courts with a mechanism to cut through the parties' pleadings in order to determine whether, despite their allegations, trial is in fact necessary to resolve their dispute." Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 843, 107 CR2d 841. Summary adjudication is available to completely dispose of any one or more causes of action, affirmative defenses, punitive damage claims, or issues of legal duty. CCP §437c(f). Summary judgment and summary adjudication are generally available in any action or proceeding. CCP §437c(a).

There is a triable issue of material fact if, and only if, the admissible evidence allows a reasonable trier of fact to find the underlying fact in favor of the party opposing the motion in accordance with the applicable standard of proof. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co., supra. To determine whether the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact, the court must consider (CCP §437c(c)):

- All evidence presented except that to which objections have been made and sustained; and
- All inferences reasonably drawn from the evidence.

If the inferences drawn from the evidence are contradicted by other inferences, or by evidence that presents a triable issue as to any material fact, the motion for summary judgment must be denied. CCP §437c(c). When the evidence presented reveals no factual conflict, the court will decide the issues of law. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co., supra; Continental Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1985) 165 CA3d 1069, 1071, 212 CR 140.

On preparing evidence for motion, see §§36.100-36.144. On objecting to evidence, see §§36.145-36.159. On evidentiary presumptions and burdens on motion for summary judgment or adjudication, see §§36.14-36.25.

§36.4 2. Available in Any Form of Action

Summary judgment motions are generally available in any form of action by virtue of the language in CCP §437c(a) expressly stating its applicability in "any action or proceeding." In re Mark K. (1984) 159 CA3d 94, 102, 205 CR 393.

NOTE: Summary judgment is expressly available in unlawful detainer and forcible entry actions (CCP §1170.7), but the time frames in CCP §437c(a)-(b) are inapplicable. CCP §437c(q)-(r). In a forcible entry or unlawful detainer action (see CCP §§1159-1179a), notice of a motion for summary judgment must be given in compliance with CCP §§1013 and 1170.7. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1351. There is also a special rule of court for summary judgment or summary adjudication proceedings involving possession of real property, including unlawful detainer actions. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1351.

On summary judgment in unlawful detainer proceedings, see California Landlord-Tenant Practice §§11.31-11.39 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

On cases in which summary judgment in unavailable, see §36.5.

§36.5 C. When Summary Judgment and Summary Adjudication Are Not Available

Notwithstanding that CCP §437c(a) states that summary judgment applies in "any action or proceeding," it is unavailable in certain cases by virtue of either statute or case law. Bagration v Superior Court (2003) 110 CA4th 1677, 1688, 3 CR3d 292. See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §206 (5th ed 2008). Neither summary judgment nor summary adjudication can be ordered in the following actions:

- Consumer class actions under the Consumers Legal Remedies Act (CC §§1750-1784). CC §1781(c)(3) (see California Summary Judgment §2.6 (Cal CEB 2010));
- Actions to terminate parental rights (see In re Mark K. (1984) 159 CA3d 94, 104, 205 CR 393) (see Summary Judgment §2.7);
- Election contests (Anderson v County of Santa Barbara (1976) 56 CA3d 780, 786, 128 CR 707) (see Summary Judgment §2.8);
- Medical malpractice actions in which an undertaking is required. CCP §1029.6(e) (see Summary Judgment §2.9); and
- Proceedings under the Sexually Violent Predators Act (Welf & I C §6600-6609.3); Bagration v Superior Court (2003) 110 CA4th 1677, 1688, 3 CR3d 292 (see Summary Judgment §2.10).

§36.6 D. Summary Judgment vs Summary Adjudication

A summary adjudication motion is handled procedurally in the same manner as a summary judgment motion. CCP §437c(f)(2); Jones v P.S. Dev. Co. (2008) 166 CA4th 707, 711 n3, 82 CR3d 882; Toigo v Town of Ross (1998) 70 CA4th 309, 324, 82 CR2d 649. A party may move for one or the other, or move for both in the alternative.

The primary difference between the two motions is their effect on the action. Summary judgment resolves the entire action and results in the entry of an immediately appealable judgment (see California Summary Judgment §§2.14-2.15 (Cal CEB 2010)); a grant of summary adjudication on a claim or defense does not preclude trial on the remaining issues, but merely removes the need to prove or disprove at trial the claim or defense that was summarily adjudicated (see Summary Judgment §§2.16-2.24).

§36.7 E. Comparison Of California and Federal Law on Motions for Summary Judgment

In California, 1992 and 1993 legislative amendments to CCP §437c changed summary judgment law dramatically in order to move it closer to its federal counterpart as clarified in Celotex Corp. v Catrett (1986) 477 US 317, 91 L Ed 2d 265, 106 S Ct 2548; Anderson v Liberty Lobby, Inc. (1986) 477 US 242, 91 L Ed 2d 202, 106 S Ct 2505; Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v Zenith Radio Corp. (1986) 475 US 574, 89 L Ed 2d 538, 106 S Ct 1348. California law provides that, once the moving defendant meets its burden of showing that the cause of action cannot be established or there is a complete defense to that cause of action, the burden shifts to the plaintiff to show that there is a triable issue of material fact as to the cause of action or defense to it. CCP §437c(p)(2).

The California Supreme Court has stated that summary judgment law in this state now conforms largely to its federal counterpart. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 848, 107 CR2d 841.

California summary judgment law diverges from federal law by continuing to require a moving defendant to meet its burden by presenting specific facts showing that no triable issue of material fact exists. CCP §437c(p)(2); Aguilar, 25 C4th at 854 (moving defendant "must present evidence, and not simply point out through argument, that the plaintiff does not possess, and cannot reasonably obtain, needed evidence"). Under the federal standard, a moving defendant may shift the burden of producing evidence to the nonmoving plaintiff merely by pointing out through argument the absence of evidence to support the plaintiff's claim. Fairbank v Wunderman Cato Johnson (9th Cir 2000) 212 F3d 528, 532. But see Nissan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v Fritz Cos. (9th Cir 2000) 210 F3d 1099, 1105 (moving party without ultimate burden of persuasion at trial must "produce affirmative evidence negating an essential element of the nonmoving party's claim or defense").

F. Alternate Methods for Narrowing Issues

§36.8 1. Alternatives to Motions for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication

As with other motions, attorneys should consider avoiding or reducing the expense and risk associated with a prospective summary judgment or summary adjudication motion and narrow the issue by other means. Possible alternate means to explore for narrowing issues include:

- Requests for admission (CCP §§2033.010-2033.420);
- Severance of the issues in the case into separate phases;
- Mini-trial or arbitration of key issues;
- Mediation, which can also include the mediator's review of draft summary judgment papers and an advisory opinion on the likely outcome; and
- Stipulations.

NOTE: A stipulation may not be used as substitute for the procedures mandated by CCP §437c. Magana Cathcart McCarthy v CB Richard Ellis, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 106, 121, 94 CR3d 109.

On advantages and risks of making a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, see §§36.11-36.12.

§36.9 2. Chart: Comparison of Summary Judgment and Adjudication Motion to Alternative Dispositive Motions

The following chart compares motions for summary judgment and summary adjudication to other motion procedures:

Procedure	Description and Comparison
Summary Judgment (CCP §437c; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350-3.1354)	Requests judgment on the ground that there is no material fact issue to be tried. Must be supported by admissible evidence. See §36.3; California Summary Judgment chap 2 (Cal CEB 2010).
Summary Adjudication (CCP §437c(f); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350-3.1354)	Requests a binding adjudication of a cause of action, defense, issue of duty or punitive damages claim on the ground that as to such issue there is no material fact issue to be tried. Must be supported by admissible evidence. See §36.3; Summary Judgment chap 2.
Anti-SLAPP Motion (CCP §425.16)	A preemptive motion to dismiss the case on the ground that it is a bad faith attempt to chill exercise of rights to speech or petition government on an issue of public concern. Evidence is allowed. See Summary Judgment §1.22.
Demurrer (CCP §§430.10-432.10)	Seeks elimination of a pleading or cause of action in the pleading on the ground that the allegations of the pleading do not state a claim as a matter of law. May be based only on the allegations in the pleading and matters of which judicial notice may be taken; no evidence allowed. See chap 24; Summary Judgment §1.23.
Motion for Judgment on Pleadings (CCP §438)	Same as demurrer; only significant difference is timing: Demurrer is proper before the adversary's answer; motion for judgment on the pleadings is proper after answer. See chap 27; Summary Judgment §1.24.
Motion to Strike (CCP §435)	Requests that allegations in a pleading not in conformity with California law be stricken. May be based only on allegations in the pleading and matters of which judicial notice can be taken. No evidence is allowed. See chap 24; Summary Judgment §1.25.
Motion for Bifurcated Trial (CCP §597)	If granted, motion separates trial of certain defenses (e.g., statute of limitations) from trial on merits; necessary when issues of fact exist as to those defenses. Motion for summary judgment should be made when no factual dispute exists as to defense. See California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chap 6 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).
Objection to Introduction of All Evidence (see Clemens v American Warranty Corp. (1987) 193 CA3d 444, 451, 238 CR 339)	Similar to motion for Judgment on Pleadings; objecting party seeks to end trial and obtain favorable judgment on pleadings without evidence on ground that, even if proved, allegations would not state cause of action or defense. See Summary Judgment §1.26.
Motion In Limine (see Amtower v Photon Dynamics, Inc. (2008) 158 CA4th 1582, 1593,	Pretrial motion requesting an order precluding the admission of evidence. May be based on pleadings or limited evidentiary matters, such as discovery responses. See Summary Judgment §1.27.

Cottle Motion (see Cottle v Superior Court (1992) 3 CA4th 1367, 5 CR2d 882)	Motion requiring plaintiff to make prima facie showing of causation in personal injury cases. Directed to trial court's discretion, which may deny motion without having to consider it or specify reasons for denial. See Summary Judgment §1.28.
Motion for Nonsuit (CCP §581c)	After opening statement or presentation of plaintiff's evidence, motion concedes truth of facts presented but contends those facts are insufficient to establish prima facie case as a matter of law. See Summary Judgment §1.29; Civ Proc During Trial, chap 18.
Motion for Directed Verdict (CCP §630)	Usually made after all evidence is presented; court may direct verdict only when there is no substantial conflict in the evidence. See Summary Judgment §1.30.
Motion for JNOV (CCP §629)	Made after the jury has returned its verdict; court may render JNOV whenever a motion for directed verdict should have been granted had such motion been made. See Summary Judgment §1.30; Civ Proc During Trial, chap 25.
Motion for Judgment (CCP §631.8)	Made after party has completed presentation of evidence in a court (nonjury) trial; court weighs evidence as trier-of-fact and renders judgment. In motion for summary judgment, court does not weigh evidence or make factual determinations. See Summary Judgment §1.31; Civ Proc During Trial, chap 24.

III. STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS

§36.10 A. Weigh Advantages and Disadvantages of Making a Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication

Given the liberal tendency of most courts to grant summary judgment and termination motions, attorneys should begin a case by preparing an outline of his or her client's separate statement, either in favor of or in opposition to the anticipated summary judgment motion. Doing so helps the attorney rigorously analyze whether to file a summary judgment or summary adjudication motion, creates a roadmap for the discovery and legal research needed to make or oppose the motion, and aids in evaluation of the chances of failure and success of the motion, thus informing the approach to settlement.

The determination of whether to file a summary judgment or adjudication motion involves multiple strategic issues, including benefits and risks associated with such a motion.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.11 1. Advantages of Making a Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication

Advantages of making a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication include:

- Saving the expense of a trial (see California Summary Judgment §1.6 (Cal CEB 2010));
- Aiding in early case resolution (see Summary Judgment §1.7);
- Providing an additional opportunity to prevail (see Summary Judgment §1.8);
- Narrowing the issues for trial (see Summary Judgment §1.9);
- Compelling disclosure of the opponent's evidence (see Summary Judgment §1.10);
- Facilitating trial preparation (see Summary Judgment §1.12); and
- Increasing the chances of settlement or voluntary dismissal of the case (see Summary Judgment §1.12).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.12 2. Disadvantages of Making a Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication

Disadvantages of making a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication include:

- The motion may add significant expense to the litigation (see California Summary Judgment §1.13 (Cal CEB 2010));
- There is a high risk of defeat (see Summary Judgment §1.14);
- Losing the motion may weaken the moving party's settlement position (see Summary Judgment §1.15);
- The motion will educate the opposition about the moving party's evidence and strategy (see Summary Judgment §1.16);
- Supporting declarations generate evidence the opposing party may use for cross-examination at trial (see Summary Judgment §1.17);
- De novo review on appeal may be more favorable to opposing party than standard of review following a trial (see Summary Judgment §1.18);
- The result may be subject to reconsideration by the court on its own motion (see Summary Judgment §1.19).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.13 B. Diagnostic Questions: Determining Whether to Make Motion

Answers to the following questions may assist the attorney in deciding whether to move for summary judgment or summary adjudication:

1. (Defendant) With respect to each asserted cause of action, can any necessary element be shown to be missing or can an affirmative defense be established, or is a punitive damages claim without merit? See §§36.2-36.3.
2. (Plaintiff) With respect to each cause of action, has any affirmative defense been asserted, and can denials be overcome by showing that there are no triable issues of fact on each element of the cause of action? See §§36.2-36.3.
3. (Defendant) Can you meet the burden of persuasion/production to negate essential elements of the plaintiff's prima facie case? See §§36.14-36.25.
4. Have you weighed the likelihood of success against the risk of "tipping your hand" before trial?
5. Would other pretrial motions be more appropriate than a motion for summary judgment? See §§36.8-36.9.
6. Have you confirmed that summary judgment is available in your case? See §§36.3-36.5.
7. Can you file your motion within applicable time constraints? See §§36.26-36.35.

IV. EVIDENTIARY BURDENS AND PRESUMPTIONS

§36.14 A. Principal Authority: CCP 437c and Aguilar

The most cited case in California on the evidentiary burdens applicable to motions for summary judgment is Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 107 CR2d 841. Because that case was decided almost a decade ago, many court of appeal opinions published since then have clarified the evidentiary burden questions and provide examples of how courts have applied the supreme court's interpretations given to CCP §437c in Aguilar.

For detailed discussion of evidentiary burdens and presumptions, see California Summary Judgment chap 4 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Summary of Required Burdens

§36.15 1. Moving Party

The California summary judgment statute (CCP §437c) as interpreted by Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 845, 107 CR2d 841 permits the moving party to either:

- Prove its own case without having to negate the opposing party's case (CCP §437c(p)(1)(2); 25 C4th at 855; see California Summary Judgment §§4.24-4.29, 4.31 (Cal CEB 2010)); or
- Demonstrate that the opposing party lacks evidence sufficient to prevail at trial (CCP §437c(p)(1),(2); 25 C4th at 850; see Summary Judgment §§4.30-4.32).

NOTE: On the second point, California and federal law differ. See Summary Judgment §4.15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.16 2. Opposing Party

For the party opposing a summary judgment motion, California statutory law (CCP §437c) currently:

- Permits it to show that a triable issue of fact exists, after the moving party has met its initial burden of producing evidence (CCP §437c(p)(1),(2); see California Summary Judgment §§4.34-4.35, 4.37 (Cal CEB 2010));
- Prohibits reliance on mere allegations or denials in pleadings to show that a triable issue of material fact exists (CCP §437c(p)(1), (2); see Summary Judgment §4.43);
- Requires specific facts to show that a triable issue of material fact exists for a cause of action, an affirmative defense, a claim for damages, or an issue of duty (see CCP §437c(b)(3); see Summary Judgment §4.41);
- Does not require that the opposing party persuade the judge that its facts are conclusively established to defeat the motion; the opposing party need only raise a triable issue of material fact (see Summary Judgment §§4.5, 4.8-4.9, 4.13); and
- Permits it to prevail without presenting evidence, if the moving party has not satisfied its initial burden of production (CCP §437c(p)(2); see Summary Judgment §4.36).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.17 C. Applicable Burdens in Summary Judgment Motions

In addressing motions for summary judgment, three burdens come into play. These are the burdens of: (1) production (Evid C §110); (2) persuasion (Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 850, 107 CR2d 841); and (3) proof (Evid C §115; see California Summary Judgment §4.11(Cal CEB 2010)).

Simply put, the moving party must produce sufficient evidence (burden of production; see Summary Judgment §§4.6-4.8) to persuade the judge (burden of persuasion; see Summary Judgment §4.9) that there is no triable issue as to any material fact on each element of the cause of action or defense that is the subject of the motion (see Summary Judgment §§4.7, 4.9).

WARNING: The burden of proof applicable to trial (defined in Evid C §115) has a limited role in summary judgment motions. Specifically, the trial standard for the burden of proof only influences the burden of producing evidence (see CCP §437c(p)) in summary judgment motions. See Summary Judgment §§4.6, 4.10-4.13.

On application of burdens or production and persuasion depending on which party has the burden of proof at trial, see Summary Judgment chap 4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.18 1. Burden of Production

The summary judgment procedure provides a system of shifting burdens of production (or producing evidence). The moving party bears an initial production burden, i.e., to produce evidence sufficient to make a prima facie showing (see §36.19) of the nonexistence of any triable issue of material fact as to the elements of the claim or defense. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 850, 107 CR2d 841. See CCP §437c(o)-(p). This is a lesser burden than persuasion because the burden of production entails only a presentation of evidence. 25 C4th at 850.

If the moving party carries this burden, the burden shifts, and the opposing party must produce sufficient evidence to make a prima facie showing of a triable issue of material fact. 25 C4th at 850. See California Summary Judgment §4.8 (Cal CEB 2010). This is similar to the function of the burden of production at trial (see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook §§47.1-47.2, 47.15, 47.28-47.29 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009)), except that in a summary judgment motion, the judge does not ultimately weigh the facts or act as a fact finder, as a trier of fact does at trial in applying the required burden of proof (25 C4th at 856). When a triable issue is raised by the party opposing a summary judgment motion, the judge must deny the motion. See Summary Judgment §4.14.

NOTE: Summary judgment may also be appropriate if all parties agree that there are no disputed facts and the sole question before the court is one of law. In that event, the importance of evidentiary burdens diminishes, and the trial court must hear and decide the disputed legal issues. See, e.g., Blanco v Baxter Healthcare Corp. (2008) 158 CA4th 1039, 70 CR3d 566 (federal law preemption defense decided on summary judgment motion); Varni Bros. Corp. v Wine World, Inc. (1995) 35 CA4th 880, 887, 41 CR2d 740.

§36.19 a. Initial Burden; Prima Facie Showing

The moving party bears an initial burden of production to make a prima facie showing that there are no triable issues of material fact. See CCP §437c(p). The prima facie case on a summary judgment motion is formulated differently depending on which side the moving party is on and who has the burden of proof at trial. See California Summary Judgment §4.10 (Cal CEB 2010).

A prima facie showing in a summary judgment motion need not conclusively establish the position of the propounding party, but it must be sufficient to support its position. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 850, 107 CR2d 841. The supreme court in Aguilar compared this showing to that required to establish a rebuttable presumption under Evid C §602. See 25 C4th at 851.

EXAMPLE: Under a state law claim for employment discrimination, the plaintiff moving for summary judgment establishes a prima facie case of retaliation by showing that (1) the plaintiff engaged in protected activities, (2) the employer subsequently took adverse action against the plaintiff, and (3) there was a causal connection between the protected activity and the adverse action. Nazir v United Airlines, Inc. (2009) 178 CA4th 243, 286, 100 CR3d 296. See CCP §437c(p)(1). This is essentially identical to the burden of production required of a plaintiff at trial. See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook §§47.1-47.2, 47.28-47.29 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). See also Summary Judgment §§4.25-4.28.

When the defendant is the moving party, however, a prima facie showing on a summary judgment motion need not establish an ultimate fact in the action. Rather, CCP §437c(p)(2) allows the defendant to meet its burden of showing that a cause of action is without merit by demonstrating through admissible evidence that the plaintiff cannot establish one or more elements of the subject cause of action. See Summary Judgment §4.30.

NOTE: When the burden shifts (see Summary Judgment §4.8), the opposing party also has to make a prima facie case that there is a triable issue of fact.

Technically, until the moving party meets its initial burden, the opposing party is not obligated to come forward with conflicting evidence or any evidence, although it may. CCP §437c(p); 25 C4th at 850. As a tactical matter, the opposing party will usually choose to do so. See Summary Judgment §§4.34-4.36.

On application of burdens or production and persuasion depending on which party has the burden of proof at trial, see Summary Judgment chap 4.

§36.20 b. Shifting Burden; Triable Issue of Fact

If the moving party demonstrates that there are no triable issues of material fact, the burden of producing evidence shifts, and the opposing party must introduce sufficient evidence to make a prima facie showing of a triable issue of material fact. CCP §437c(p). A triable issue is created if the evidence would allow a reasonable trier of fact to find the underlying fact in favor of the party opposing the motion. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 850, 107 CR2d 841. One way of creating a triable issue is for the opposing party to present evidence that directly controverts the moving party's evidence, but the court does not weigh the evidence as it does in a trial. See California Summary Judgment §§4.13-4.14 (Cal CEB 2010). On permissible and impermissible ways to create a triable issue, see Summary Judgment §§4.37-4.46. On application of burdens or production and persuasion depending on which party has the burden of proof at trial, see Summary Judgment chap 4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.21 2. Burden of Persuasion

The moving party always bears the burden of persuading the court to grant the motion, i.e., of demonstrating that no triable issue of material fact exists and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. This burden is properly characterized as one of persuasion, not proof, because the moving party's task is to persuade the trial court that there is no disputed material fact for a reasonable trier of fact to consider, not to offer proof as though the court were sitting as the trier of fact. See Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 850 n11, 107 CR2d 841; Kahn v East Side Union High School Dist. (2003) 31 C4th 990, 1003, 4 CR3d 103. On the trial court's review of the evidence, see §§36.171-36.183.

NOTE: The burden of persuasion never shifts to the opposing party (see Padilla v Rodas (2008) 160 CA4th 742, 747, 73 CR3d 114; Rosenblum v Safeco Ins. Co. (2005) 126 CA4th 847, 857, 24 CR3d 427), because the opposing party is required only to demonstrate a triable issue. See California Summary Judgment §§4.37-4.40(Cal CEB 2010).

On application of burdens of production and persuasion depending on which party has the burden of proof at trial, see Summary Judgment chap 4.

§36.22 3. Burden of Proof

The burden of proof applicable to trial (defined in Evid C §115) has a limited role in summary judgment motions. Specifically, the trial standard for the burden of proof influences only the burden of producing evidence (see CCP §437c(p)) in summary judgment motions. See California Summary Judgment §4.6 (Cal CEB 2010). How a party moving for or opposing summary judgment carries its burden of persuasion or production on a particular issue depends on which party would bear the burden of proof at trial. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 851, 107 CR2d 841. See Summary Judgment §§4.11-4.13.

NOTE: The required quantum of evidence may also be affected by whether the evidence is direct or circumstantial (see Summary Judgment §§4.17-4.19).

On application of burdens of production and persuasion depending on which party has the burden of proof at trial, see Summary Judgment chap 4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.23 a. How Trial Burden of Proof Standard Affects Motion

When making a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, the moving party carries the initial production burden (see California Summary Judgment §4.6 (Cal CEB 2010)), also called "burden to produce evidence." The standard for that burden is the same as the burden of proof that would be applied at trial. See CCP §437c(p); Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 850, 107 CR2d 841. The difference is that the court does not weigh conflicting evidence on a summary judgment motion as is done by the trier of fact at trial. See Summary Judgment §4.13.

Thus, if the burden of proof at trial on an issue to be decided in a summary judgment motion is preponderance of the evidence, the moving party would need to produce sufficient evidence by which a trier of fact could find for the moving party on that standard. See Summary Judgment §4.12. Similarly, if the burden of proof at trial were to be clear and convincing proof, the moving party would have to produce sufficient evidence by which a trier of fact could find for the moving party at that standard.

The burden of proof standards in civil cases vary greatly; they are not all governed by the preponderance standard. For an extensive list, see Jefferson's Evidence Benchbook (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009) §§47.21-47.27.

For further discussion of the application of burdens of production and persuasion depending on which party has the burden of proof at trial, see Summary Judgment chap 4.

§36.24 b. Effect of Trial Standard of Proof on Prima Facie Case

If a plaintiff moves for summary judgment in a case governed by the preponderance of the evidence standard of proof, it must make a prima facie case that would require a reasonable trier of fact to find each underlying material fact more likely than not. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 851, 107 CR2d 841. See, e.g., In re Peterson (2007) 156 CA4th 676, 687, 67 CR3d 584 (in probate action contesting distribution of life insurance proceeds, plaintiff administrator of estate satisfied preponderance standard by submitting authenticated copy of criminal conviction for first degree murder of which trial court took judicial notice).

If a defendant moves for summary judgment in the same type of case, it must either (Kahn v East Side Union High School Dist. (2003) 31 C4th 990, 1003, 4 CR3d 103):

- Make a prima facie case that would preclude a reasonable trier of fact from finding that it was more likely than not that a material fact of the claim were true, or
- Show that an element of the claim cannot be established, by presenting evidence that the plaintiff does not have and cannot reasonably obtain the necessary evidence to prove it.

EXAMPLE: In Paduano v American Honda Motor Co. (2009) 169 CA4th 1453, 1467, 88 CR3d 90, the defendant demonstrated in its motion for summary adjudication that plaintiff's breach of warranty claim on a vehicle purchase was not supported by the evidence in that the written warranty did not expressly include or exclude "mileage related defects" and the "EPA mileage estimate" did not by itself constitute a warranty. In response, the plaintiff failed to present any evidence suggesting that the low gas mileage was the result of a mechanical defect. The court concluded that the plaintiff did not establish a triable issue of material fact on the warranty with regard to gas mileage.

A defendant moving for summary judgment on an affirmative defense would make a prima facie case in the same manner as the moving party plaintiff described above. See, e.g., Jessen v Mentor Corp. (2008) 158 CA4th 1480, 1484, 71 CR3d 714. Similarly, a plaintiff moving for summary judgment on an affirmative defense would make a prima facie case in the same manner as the moving party defendant described above. See, e.g., Continental Ins. Co. v Columbus Line, Inc. (2003) 107 CA4th 1190, 133 CR2d 199.

For further discussion of the application of burdens or production and persuasion depending on which party has the burden of proof at trial, see California Summary Judgment chap 4 (Cal CEB 2010).

§36.25 c. How Trial Court Reviews Evidence

Summary judgment is not affected by the burden of proof at trial in the sense of a party's obligation to establish the requisite degree of belief in the fact finder (see Evid C §115), for the judge has no power to weigh one inference against another or other evidence (CCP §437c(c); Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 856, 107 CR2d 841; Kids Universe v In2Labs (2002) 95 CA4th 870, 879, 116 CR2d 158). See California Summary Judgment §§2.3, 4.46 (Cal CEB 2010). Rather, the court must determine what any evidence "could show or imply" to the reasonable trier of fact. In doing so, it does not decide any finding of its own but simply decides what finding such a trier of fact could make for itself. 95 CA4th at 879. When the moving and opposing papers in a summary judgment motion show one or more triable issues of material fact, the court must deny the motion. Aguilar, 25 C4th at 856. See CCP §437c(c), (g). See §36.3. See also Summary Judgment §4.37.

On the evidentiary issues specifically related to the meeting and shifting burdens, see Summary Judgment chap 4.

V. TIMING REQUIREMENTS

A. Moving Papers

1. Earliest Date to Move for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication

§36.26 a. 60-Days After General Appearance

Any party may move for summary judgment at any time after 60 days have elapsed from the general appearance of the party against whom the motion is directed, or at an earlier time after that party's general appearance, if the court so orders for good cause shown, with or without notice. CCP §437c(a).

The purpose of the 60-day waiting period at the beginning of the case is to give the opposing party reasonable time to gather evidence and to obtain discovery before having to appear at a motion that could terminate the action.

PRACTICE TIP: As long as the hearing has been set for a date more than 60 days after the defendant has appeared, the notice of motion may be served and filed within the 60-day period. Sadleir v Superior Court (1986) 184 CA3d 1050, 229 CR 374.

For a detailed discussion of general appearance requirement, see California Summary Judgment chap 3 (Cal CEB 2010).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/36 Summary Judgment/§36.27 b. Exception: Unlawful Detainer

§36.27 b. Exception: Unlawful Detainer

There is an exception to this rule for unlawful detainer and forcible entry or detainer cases, in which a motion for summary judgment may be made at any time after the answer is filed on 5 days' notice. CCP §1170.7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.28 c. Judicial Attitude Regarding Early Motions

When a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication is filed before 60 days after the opposing party's general appearance (see §36.26), the trial court will normally continue the hearing, when requested, to allow a reasonable time for discovery before deciding the motion.

However, if the pleadings are a sham and declarations can dispose of the case promptly, a motion for summary judgment should be made shortly after an answer is filed. See, e.g., Charpentier v Von Geldern (1987) 191 CA3d 101, 106, 236 CR 233. Resolving the case early saves the time and expense of prolonged litigation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.29 2. Latest Date to Make Motion Is 30 Days Before Trial Date

Motions for summary judgment cannot be heard later than 30 days before the trial date, unless the court orders otherwise for good cause. CCP §437c(a); Robinson v Woods (2008) 168 CA4th 1258, 1268, 86 CR3d 241.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should check local rules and, if required, contact the clerk of the court to ascertain local procedure for setting hearing date. Many courts assign a law and motion hearing date, and some require counsel to contact the court to reserve a date before the motion is filed and served. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 8.2(A)(2)(a). Some courts also limit the days of the week on which they will hear summary judgment motions, which might affect the scheduling of the hearing.

For a detailed discussion of the motion deadlines, see California Summary Judgment chap 3 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.30 3. Notice Required: 75 Days

The notice of the motion and supporting papers shall be served on all other parties to the action at least 75 days before the time appointed for hearing. CCP 437c(a).

CAUTION: Without the parties' consent, the trial court has no authority to shorten the minimum notice period for the hearing of a summary judgment motion (75 days under CCP §437c(a)). Robinson v Woods (2008) 168 CA4th 1258, 1262, 86 CR3d 241; McMahon v Superior Court (2003) 106 CA4th 112, 115, 130 CR2d 407, 106 CA4th at 115.

For a detailed discussion of notice and service requirements, see Summary Judgment chap 3 and §§6.71-6.72 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.31 a. Manner of Service Extends Required Notice

This notice period is extended if service is made by mail. See CCP §437c(a) (time increased by 5 days if address is in California; by 10 days if address is outside California but in United States; and by 20 days if address is outside United States). The notice period is extended by 2 court days if service is by express mail or facsimile transmission. CCP §437c(a). See generally chap 18.

Service by mail. To accommodate the 75-day notice period under CCP §437c, plus additional time for service by mail, the motion cannot be noticed later than 110 days before the trial date if mailed in California (days before the trial date (30 days), plus the statutory requirement for notice (75 days), plus the shortest additional time for service by mail (5 days)). See CCP §437c(a).

Personal service. If notice is personally served, the motion must be noticed no later than 105 days before the trial date (days before the trial date (30 days), plus the statutory requirement for notice (75 days)). See CCP §437c(a).

For a detailed discussion of notice and service requirements, see Summary Judgment chap 3 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.32 b. Notice Must Be Accompanied by All Supporting Papers

It is insufficient to serve a notice of motion within the statutory parameters without serving the supporting papers simultaneously. "Notice of the motion and supporting papers shall be served" within the time periods set out in the statute. See CCP §437c(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.33 c. Good Cause Required for Late Motion

Although the summary judgment statute does not specify what constitutes "good cause," some courts may permit a late motion for a reason such as newly discovered evidence if the attorney submits declarations showing why the evidence could not have been obtained earlier by the exercise of reasonable diligence. Even with trial imminent, given the proper showing, a court might be amenable to a late motion to eliminate the need for trial. However, summary judgment motions are time-consuming for the court, and there must be enough time for all papers to be considered.

NOTE: At least two appellate courts have held that if the trial date has been continued, a summary judgment motion can be set 30 days before the new trial date. Green v Bristol Myers Co. (1988) 206 CA3d 604, 609, 253 CR 745 (Second District); Sentry Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1989) 207 CA3d 526, 529, 255 CR 13 (Fourth District).

4. Time for Filing Motion For Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication in Court

§36.34 a. When to File

As with motions generally, a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication must be filed at least 16 court days before the hearing date. CCP §1005(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). Although CCP §437c(a) contains specific requirements for serving moving papers on other parties (see §§36.30-36.32), it does not specifically address the time for filing moving papers with the court.

A proof of service must be filed no later than 5 court days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.35 b. What to File

Unless local rules otherwise require, the moving party must file one set of original documents with the clerk of court in which the action is pending. CCP §1004; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1302(a).

Proof of service should be filed when the motion is filed. Statutes permitting service by mail are strictly construed, so counsel should be careful to review the proof of service before the motion is filed. See, e.g., Valley Vista Land Co. v Nipomo Water & Sewer Co. (1967) 255 CA2d 172, 63 CR 78.

On filing, the moving party must pay the applicable filing fee. Govt C §70617(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Opposition Papers

§36.36 1. File and Serve Opposition Papers 14 Days Before Hearing

Any opposition to a motion for summary judgment must be served and filed at least 14 days before the date of hearing unless for good cause the court orders otherwise. CCP §437c(b)(2). No extension of time is made for service by mail. CCP §437c(b)(2); see CCP §§1005, 1013(a). See §36.37.

Despite any other provision of CCP §1005, all papers opposing a motion shall be served by personal delivery, facsimile transmission, express mail, or other means consistent with CCP §§1010, 1011, 1012, and 1013, and reasonably calculated to ensure delivery to the other party or parties no later than the close of the next business day after the time the opposing papers are filed. CCP §1005(c) (applying to service of opposition papers regarding motions for summary judgment or adjudication).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.37 2. No Extension if Service by Mail

California Code of Civil Procedure §1013, providing that any period for doing an act must be extended if service is by mail, does not apply to oppositions filed in response to motions for summary judgment, which are specifically governed by CCP §437c(b)(6).

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Reply Papers

§36.38 1. File and Serve Reply Papers 5 Days Before Hearing

Any papers in reply to an opposition to a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of issues must be served and filed at least 5 days preceding the noticed or continued date of hearing, unless the court for good cause orders otherwise. CCP §437c(b)(4).

Despite any other provision of CCP §1005, all reply papers shall be served by personal delivery, facsimile transmission, express mail, or other means consistent with CCP §§1010, 1011, 1012, and 1013, and reasonably calculated to ensure delivery to the other party or parties no later than the close of the next business day after the time the reply papers are filed. CCP §1005(c).

On time periods applicable to service of the moving papers, see CCP §437c(a); §§36.30-36.32.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.39 2. No Extension if Service by Mail

California Code of Civil Procedure §1013(a), providing that any period for doing an act must be extended if service is by mail, does not apply to reply papers filed in support of motions for summary judgment, which are specifically governed by CCP §437c(b)(6).

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Filing Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication

§36.40 1. When Appropriate to File Cross-Motions

A party served with a motion for summary judgment or adjudication may file a cross-motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication against the moving party. See, e.g., Cadence Design Sys. v Avant! Corp. (2002) 29 C4th 215, 220, 127 CR2d 169; United Servs. Auto. Ass'n v Pegos (2003) 107 CA4th 392, 396, 131 CR2d 866. A cross-motion may be appropriate when, e.g., the facts are undisputed and liability turns on the application of statutory or contract language. For factors to consider before deciding to make such a motion, see the diagnostic questions in §36.13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.41 2. Timing of Cross-Motions

It is efficient for both the court and counsel to argue any cross-motion at the same hearing as the original motion. The other party must be given 75 days' notice before the cross-motion is heard. CCP 437c(a). When service is by mail, the time must be extended in accordance with CCP §437c(a). If there are fewer than 75 days before the hearing on the original summary judgment motion, the opposing party should move to continue the original date to accommodate the notice period required for the cross-motion or apply ex parte for an order shortening time before the cross-motion is heard. On procedures for ex parte motions generally, see chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.42 3. Checklist: Cross-Motions

To make cross-motion for summary judgment, summary adjudication, or both:

- Follow procedures outlined in §§36.52-36.99 for making motion.
- Move to continue hearing date if necessary to meet 75-day notice requirement or apply for order shortening time (CCP §437c(a)).
- File and serve papers for cross-motion (together with opposition papers to moving party's motion, if desired) at least 75 days before hearing date (CCP §437c(a)) and extend time for service of motion if service is by mail (see §§36.30-36.32).
- File and serve reply to moving party's response to cross-motion at least 5 days before hearing date (CCP §437c(b)(4)) (see §§36.38-36.39).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.43 E. Requesting a Continuance

The court has inherent discretionary power to allow a party to amend the pleadings, to engage in further discovery, or to file supplemental declarations, and to grant continuances for those purposes. See CCP §437c(h); see Bahl v Bank of America (2001) 89 CA4th 389, 395, 107 CR2d 270. See also Lerma v County of Orange (2004) 120 CA4th 709, 717, 15 CR3d 609 (serious illness of attorney is good cause for granting continuance of summary judgment motion).

© The Regents of the University of California

1. Continuance to Amend Pleadings

§36.44 a. Timing of Motion to Amend Pleadings

When an amendment is needed to cure a defect in the pleadings, or to accommodate argument opposing a motion for summary judgment, the opposing party should serve, file, and set a formal motion for hearing to amend the pleadings before the date scheduled for the summary judgment motion. The motion to amend should not be heard on the same day as the summary judgment motion, because the amendment may make the motion for summary judgment moot. On procedures for noticed motions generally, see chap 12. On procedures for amending pleadings generally, see chap 16 (amended and supplemental complaints).

If there is not enough time before the summary judgment hearing to give proper notice on the motion to amend, the party seeking amendment may request a continuance of the hearing on the motion for summary judgment (see §36.45) or an order shortening time before the motion to amend is heard. On ex parte motions, including motions to shorten time, see chap 13.

When the defect in pleading is not discovered until the hearing on the summary judgment motion, an oral motion may be made during the hearing (see §§36.45-36.46).

On continuances by the opposing party to conduct further discovery, see §§36.48-36.51.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.45 b. Oral Motion to Continue Hearing

If defects in the pleadings or papers first come to light at the hearing itself, counsel may move orally for a continuance. See Stalnaker v Boeing Co. (1986) 186 CA3d 1291, 1302, 231 CR 323 (court has discretion to delay ruling on summary judgment motion until amendment process is complete).

PRACTICTE TIP: It is wise to later file a declaration in support of the motion for continuance, to preserve the record in the event that a petition for a writ of mandate is filed after the motion is denied. See American Continental Ins. Co. v C & Z Timber Co. (1987) 195 CA3d 1271, 1280, 241 CR 466 (generalized statements in opposition papers of need to develop facts, in absence of declaration or affidavit, did not preserve issue of continuance needed for further discovery on appeal). On moving for continuance before the hearing, see §36.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.46 c. Oral Motion to Amend Pleadings

Alternatively, counsel for the party seeking an amendment may make an oral motion to amend the pleadings at the hearing. If the amendment is not extensive, counsel may ask the court's permission to amend by alteration on the face of the pleading and request the court or clerk to initial all alterations. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324(d). Or, as in trial, counsel may move orally to amend the pleadings to conform to proof. If possible, counsel should either have the amended pleadings on hand to present to the court or prepare and file them soon after the hearing. For further discussion, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§18.103-18.123 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.47 d. Diligence Required

Diligence in seeking to amend is an important factor in obtaining leave of court. See, e.g., Fisher v Larsen (1982) 138 CA3d 627, 649, 188 CR 216 (trial court's denial of leave to amend justified because plaintiff had knowledge of defendants' motions for summary judgment for 5 months but delayed amending complaint). If no effort to amend is made, or if a motion is not diligently pursued, it is not an abuse of discretion for the court to deny permission to amend the pleadings.

On formal motion to amend pleadings before the hearing, see §36.44. On procedures for amending complaints, see generally chap 16.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Continuance to Conduct Further Discovery

§36.48 a. Grounds for Continuance

The court may grant a continuance to permit the party opposing the motion for summary judgment to obtain affidavits or make discovery. CCP §437c(h). When the opposing party submits an affidavit showing that essential facts may exist but that it cannot present them in a timely manner, the court must either deny summary judgment or grant a continuance. Dee v Vintage Petroleum, Inc. (2003) 106 CA4th 30, 34, 129 CR2d 923.

The nonmoving party seeking a continuance when facts are not yet available must show (Frazee v Seely (2002) 95 CA4th 627, 633, 115 CR2d 780):

- The facts to be obtained are essential to opposing the motion;
- There is reason to believe such facts may exist; and
- The reasons additional time is needed to obtain these facts.

The application to continue the motion to obtain necessary discovery may also be made by ex parte motion at any time on or before the date the opposition response to the motion for summary judgment is due. CCP §437c(h).

NOTE: Some local court rules may affect continuances under §437c(h). Even when not required by local rule, it is good practice to provide the court with an estimate of the time required and steps necessary to obtain the outstanding evidence in the opposing declaration in order to add credibility to the request.

Even if the motion for summary judgment is not premature, the court still may grant requests for additional discovery. See, e.g., Hunter v Pacific Mechanical Corp. (1995) 37 CA4th 1282, 44 CR2d 335 (court continued motion to permit additional discovery after discovery had closed; plaintiff still unable to meet burden of establishing genuine factual dispute) disapproved on other grounds in Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 854 n 23, 107 CR2d 841. See also Nazar v Rodeffer (1986) 184 CA3d 546, 556, 229 CR 209.

For discussion of continuances generally, see chap 42.

§36.49 b. Declaration Supporting Continuance for Further Discovery

An opposing party who has not developed the facts needed to oppose the motion can move for a continuance on a showing by affidavit or declaration that controverting evidence may exist but for the reasons stated cannot yet be presented. CCP §437c(h). When the party requesting a continuance has made a showing that facts essential to justify opposition to the motion for summary judgment exist, the court must continue the summary judgment hearing, or deny the motion, or make any other just order. CCP §437c(h). See Nazar v Rodeffer (1986) 184 CA3d 546, 556, 229 CR 209; Fisher v Larsen (1982) 138 CA3d 627, 648, 188 CR 216.

Assertions in the opposition papers about the need for additional discovery are not a substitute for affidavits or declarations. A showing by affidavit is specifically required. CCP §437c(h); American Continental Ins. Co. v C & Z Timber Co. (1987) 195 CA3d 1271, 1280, 241 CR 466 (generalized statements in memorandum in opposition to summary judgment regarding need to develop facts did not, absent detailed affidavit, establish need for continuance).

The opposing affidavit or declaration need not contain evidentiary facts going to the merits of the case. It must, however, state facts demonstrating a likelihood that controverting evidence exists and detailing why that evidence cannot be obtained in time to respond to the motion. Courts are seldom receptive to vague and general affidavits or declarations that fail to track the statutory requirements. A continuance may be denied when the facts to be presented later were not relevant to the litigation and therefore were not "essential to justify opposition" under CCP §437c(h). Coast-United Advertising, Inc. v City of Long Beach (1975) 51 CA3d 766, 773, 124 CR 487.

On motions for continuance, generally, see chap 42.

c. Diligence Required

§36.50 (1) Party Seeking Continuance Must Establish It Could Not Have Found Evidence Earlier

When a lack of diligence results in a party's having insufficient information to know whether facts essential to justify opposition may exist, and the party is therefore unable to provide the requisite affidavit under CCP §437c(h), the trial judge may deny the request for continuance of the motion. Desaigoudar v Meyercord (2003) 108 CA4th 173, 190, 133 CR2d 408. See also Cooksey v Alexakis (2004) 123 CA4th 246, 19 CR3d 810 (in determining whether to grant party responding to summary judgment motion continuance for discovery under CCP §437c(h), trial court may consider whether that party has been diligent in completing discovery).

In deciding whether a continuance is appropriate, courts will consider whether it is reasonable for the opposing party not to have procured outstanding evidence earlier. The progress of the litigation is an important factor in that determination. A continuance may be denied if there has been ample time to obtain the desired information previously but the opposition has been dilatory.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.51 (2) Court Has Limited Discretion to Grant Continuance in Absence of Diligence

When a party submits an affidavit demonstrating that facts essential to justify opposition may exist, but have not been presented to the court, because the party has not been diligent in searching for the facts through discovery, the court's discretion to deny a continuance is strictly limited. The policy favoring disposition on the merits outweighs the competing policy favoring judicial efficiency. Bahl v Bank of America (2001) 89 CA4th 389, 396, 107 CR2d 270. Even when a continuance is not mandatory because a party has failed to make the showing required by CCP §437(h), there may still be good cause to grant a continuance. See Lerma v County of Orange (2004) 120 CA4th 709, 15 CR3d 609 (serious illness of attorney is good cause for granting continuance of summary judgment motion).

PRACTICE TIP: Although CCP §437c(h) does not require the party seeking a continuance of a summary judgment motion to provide the court with an estimate of the time required and procedures necessary to obtain the outstanding evidence, including this information in a declaration in support of the motion is good practice because it adds credibility to the request. For discussion of affidavits and declarations in support of motion for summary judgment, see §§36.106-36.114.

If, after granting a continuance to allow specified additional discovery, the court finds that the party seeking summary judgment has unreasonably failed to allow the discovery to be conducted, the court shall grant a continuance to permit the discovery to go forward or deny the motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication. This section does not affect or limit the ability of any party to compel discovery under the Civil Discovery Act (CCP §§2016.010-2036.050). CCP §437c(i).

VI. REQUIRED DOCUMENTS

§36.52 A. Moving Papers

A motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication (or both) must contain and be supported by the following documents (CCP §437c; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(c)):

- Notice of motion (see §§36.53-36.56);
- Supporting memorandum (see §§36.57-36.61);
- Separate statement of undisputed material facts (see §§36.62-36.66);
- Request for judicial notice, if appropriate (see §36.67); and
- Evidentiary and supporting papers proving underlying facts of motion (see §§36.68-36.70).

Certain documents are not required to be filed in support of a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication but can be useful and sometimes necessary to a successful motion. These documents include:

- Proposed order granting summary judgment or summary adjudication;
- Joinder in motion; and
- Ex parte request for relief from page limits (and proposed order).

© The Regents of the University of California

1. Notice of Motion

§36.53 a. Contents of Notice

A notice of motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication must be a document distinct from the separate statement of undisputed facts and supporting memorandum. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(c)(1)-(3). The notice of motion must identify the time, date, and place of the hearing (CCP §1010), as well as:

- The nature of the relief sought, i.e., summary judgment, summary adjudication, or both (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110(a));
- The specific grounds on which motion is made (CCP §1010; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110(a));
- The identity of each party against whom the motion is directed;
- All documents on which the moving party is relying (CCP §1010); and
- The nature of any attached document, except an exhibit.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.54 (1) When Seeking Summary Adjudication

If the motion is for summary adjudication, the notice must also specify the "specific cause of action, affirmative defense, claims for damages, or issues of duty" sought to be summarily adjudicated. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(b). Although not required, the moving party should include a citation to the numbered undisputed facts that support each cause of action, affirmative defense, claim for damages, or issue of duty as to which summary adjudication is sought, creating an outline of the motion for the court.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.55 (2) When Requesting Judicial Notice

The moving party should state in the notice of motion that it is requesting judicial notice, e.g., "Notice is also given that judicial notice is requested of the matters set forth in the accompanying Request for Judicial Notice." Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110(a).

On request for judicial notice, see §36.67.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.56 b. Format of Notice

The moving party should attach the notice of motion to the supporting memorandum (see §§36.57-36.61). Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(j). The notice of motion should follow the rules governing the format of court papers generally. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110(b); chap 11.

In both the title and the body of the notice, the moving party should specifically name the party against whom the motion is directed, rather than designating "All Parties And Their Attorneys Of Record." Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(d). This is particularly important in complicated cases with numerous parties. The caption should include, beneath the number of the case, the following information:

- Title of the document;
- Hearing judge (if ascertainable);
- Date the action was filed;
- Trial date (if set); and
- Date, time, and location of the hearing.

EXAMPLE: In a summary judgment motion against a defendant, the title of the notice of motion might read: "NOTICE OF MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT AGAINST DEFENDANT ABC CO., INC."

On preparing a notice of motion generally, see §§12.8-12.29.

For sample notice of motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, see §36.216.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.57 2. Supporting Memorandum

A summary judgment motion must be supported by a memorandum. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(c)(3). The supporting memorandum provides the court with a summary of facts, statutes, case law, and legal argument in support of the motion. The memorandum should demonstrate what the facts actually prove and how legal authorities relate to those facts. See Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 843, 107 CR2d 841.

WARNING: The court may construe a failure to file a supporting memorandum as an admission that the motion is not meritorious, and deny it. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(a).

PRACTICE TIP: Reference to cases restating general principles of summary judgment law is seldom necessary; rather the memorandum should clearly connect the issues and the authorities supporting the moving party's position on those issues. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(b). Most, if not all, memorandums cite to Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 107 CR2d 841 and CCP §437c.

For a sample form of memorandum, see §36.217.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.58 a. Contents of Supporting Memorandum

The supporting memorandum should include (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(b)):

- Statement of facts;
- "Concise" statement of the law that applies to all elements of:
- Causes of action or defenses (or claims for damages or issues of duty) that the moving party must establish; or
- Separate causes of action or defenses, issues of punitive damages, or issues of duty that the moving party claims are undisputed;
- Evidence and arguments; and
- Discussion of the statutes, cases, and treatises cited in support of the motion. That is counsel should relate evidence to the legal authorities provided.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.59 b. Optional Summary of Issues and Evidence

Although not required by statute, it may be to the moving party's advantage to include a brief (1- to 2-page) summary of the issues and evidence in the supporting memorandum so that the court will not have to glean the information from the entire file. The judge who rules on a summary judgment motion rarely has background knowledge of the facts and issues in the case. A summary, which immediately orients the court to the salient facts and where the disputes lie, can make the motion more persuasive. This is especially important in complicated cases with multiple parties and cross-actions.

Another effective and often-used method of presenting fact issues is by a detailed statement of facts, with references to the record, which can be made at the beginning of the supporting memorandum.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.60 c. Other Requirements

The memorandum must include a table of contents, table of authorities, and an opening summary of argument. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(e). The memorandum does not need to be organized by causes of action. Hope Int'l Univ. v Superior Court (2004) 119 CA4th 719, 731, 14 CR3d 643. On the opening summary of issues and evidence, see §36.59.

For a sample form of memorandum, see §36.217.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.61 d. Memorandum Limited to 20 Pages

In a summary judgment or adjudication motion, no opening memorandum may exceed 20 pages. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(d). This page limit does not include exhibits, declarations, attachments, a table of contents, a table of authorities, or the proof of service. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(d). On pagination of the memorandum, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(h). The motion must be printed on recycled paper. Cal Rules of Ct 2.101.

3. Separate Statement of Undisputed Facts

§36.62 a. Purpose of Separate Statement

Papers filed in support of a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication must include "a separate statement setting forth plainly and concisely all material facts which the moving party contends are undisputed." CCP §437c(b)(1); Magana Cathcart McCarthy v CB Richard Ellis, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 106, 117, 94 CR3d 109 (summary judgment procedure requires moving party "to support its motion with evidence in the relatively elaborate form of separate statements"); Fleet v CBS, Inc. (1996) 50 CA4th 1911, 1916 n3, 58 CR2d 645. On opposing party's response, see §36.72.

The purpose of a separate statement of undisputed facts is to:

- Provide the court with a document that plainly and concisely specifies all material facts claimed to be undisputed (CCP §437c(b)(1));
- Provide the court with clear reference to evidence supporting each material fact (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350); and
- Afford due process to opposing parties (State ex rel Harris v PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (2005) 125 CA4th 1219, 1262 n28, 23 CR3d 529, rev'd on other grounds (2006) 39 C4th 1220, 48 CR3d 144; United Community Church v Garcin (1991) 231 CA3d 327, 335, 282 CR 368).

The statutory mandate for a separate statement requires a party to specify within that document any facts he or she deems to be disputed facts material to the issue presented. Mills v Forestex Co. (2003) 108 CA4th 625, 640, 134 CR2d 273. The statement serves two functions: (1) to give the opponent notice of the facts and (2) to permit the trial court to focus on the facts germane to the issues. See also Magana Cathcart McCarthy 174 CA4th at 117, citing United Community Church, supra ("Separate statements are required not to satisfy a sadistic urge to torment lawyers, but rather to afford due process to opposing parties and to permit trial courts to […] determine quickly and efficiently whether material facts are disputed").

NOTE: The separate statement of facts is not a "pleading." CCP §422.10. Because judicial admissions may be made only in a pleading, by stipulation, or in response to a request for admission, facts accepted as true for the purpose of summary judgment and included in the separate statement of facts cannot be characterized as judicial admissions. Myers v Trendwest Resorts, Inc. (2009) 178 CA4th 735, 746, 100 CR3d 658 (affirming denial of plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict after jury found defendant had not sexually harassed plaintiff, even though defendant had previously admitted in its separate statement of facts that plaintiff had been harassed).

On requirement of separate statement, see California Summary Judgment §§6.21-6.22 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.63 b. Effect of Failure to File Separate Statement

All facts necessary to grant the motion should be contained in the separate statement. The moving party's failure to comply with the separate statement requirements is a sufficient ground for denying the motion. CCP §437c(b)(1); Teselle v McLoughlin (2009) 173 CA4th 156, 168, 92 CR3d 696.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The summary judgment motion should be based on the statement of undisputed facts. Unless all the material facts supporting the motion are provided in the statement, many judges will deny the motion, even if the facts are included in a declaration or in some other evidence filed in support of the motion. See e.g., Mills v Forestex Co. (2003) 108 CA4th 625, 640, 134 CR2d 273, (if it is not stated in the statement of facts, it does not exist).

PRACTICE TIP: A trial court may not grant a party's motion to join in another party's summary judgment motion if it does not contain its own separate statement. Frazee v Seely (2002) 95 CA4th 627, 636, 115 CR2d 780.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.64 c. Separate Statement Content Requirements

The separate statement must separately identify (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(d)):

- Each cause of action, claim for damages, issue of duty, or affirmative defense;
- Each supporting material fact claimed to be undisputed with respect to each cause of action, claim for damages, issue of duty, or affirmative defense; and
- Supporting evidence that establishes those undisputed facts, with citations to the evidence for each fact, including references to exhibits, titles, and page and line numbers.

The moving party cannot rely on the allegations or denials of its pleadings to show the existence of a triable issue of material fact; the moving party must identify all material undisputed facts that support each necessary element of a cause of action, defense, claim for damages, or issue of duty. See CCP §437c(c).

All undisputed facts listed in the separate statement must be material, i.e., those that tend to prove or disprove an element of the cause of action or defense. A factual issue is nonmaterial when it has no significance in determining the outcome of the case.

Explanatory facts, e.g., facts about the background of the case, may be immaterial. To make the court aware of explanatory facts, albeit immaterial, counsel should include them in the supporting memorandum (with citations to supporting evidence), not in the separate statement.

For each material, necessary, and accurate fact, the moving party must identify supporting evidence. See, e.g., Union Bank v Superior Court (1995) 31 CA4th 573, 37 CR2d 653 (moving defendant could rely on plaintiffs' Judicial Council form interrogatory answers as evidentiary basis for its separate statement). As with all evidence, this evidence must have a sufficient foundation and be admissible. On supporting evidence, see §§36.100-36.144.

NOTE: A summary adjudication motion made in the alternative may refer to and depend on the same evidence submitted in support of the summary judgment motion. If summary adjudication is sought, however, the separate statement must link each undisputed material fact to the specific cause of action, affirmative defense, claim for damages, or issue of duty, which must be stated specifically in the notice of motion and be repeated, verbatim, in the separate statement. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(b).

On contents of separate statement, see California Summary Judgment §§6.24-6.31 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

d. Separate Statement Format Requirements

§36.65 (1) Two-Column Requirement

The required contents of the separate statement must be presented in a two-column format:

- The first column lists the undisputed facts in numerical sequence, followed by the supporting evidence that establishes the undisputed facts, with references to exhibits, titles, and page and line numbers (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(d));
- The second column should be left blank by the moving party (to await opposing party's evidence) (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(h)).

For a sample form of separate statement, see §36.219.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.66 (2) Electronic Version Requirement

Within 3 days of a request, the moving party must provide to any other party or the court an electronic version of its separate statement. The electronic version may be provided in any form on which the parties agree. If the parties cannot agree on the form, the moving party must provide the electronic version of the separate statement that it used to prepare the document filed with the court. The moving party is not required, however, to create an electronic version or any new version of any document to transmit to the requesting party. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(i).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.67 4. Request for Judicial Notice

A request for judicial notice listing the specific matters for which notice is requested must be made in a separate document. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(l), 3.1350(c)(5) (moving party), 3.1350(e)(4) (opposing party). For sample request, see §§12.143.

The request should identify facts and issues that are supported by the matters to be judicially noticed, e.g., that complaint on file in another case shows that plaintiff discovered his or her alleged injury long ago, and the statute of limitations has run on the present claim. These facts and issues should also be identified in the separate statement of undisputed material facts. On moving party's separate statement, see §§36.62-36.66; on opposing party's separate statement, see §§36.75-36.80.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.68 5. Evidence in Support of Motion

A summary judgment motion must be supported by evidence establishing the moving party's right to the relief sought. CCP §437c(b)(1). If the moving party contends that an issue of fact lacks support in the record, "it must set forth all the material evidence on the point and not merely the evidence favorable to it." Rio Linda Unified Sch. Dist. v Superior Court (1997) 52 CA4th 732, 740, 60 CR2d 710.

Counsel should incorporate and properly attach the supporting evidence to the moving papers. All documents should be clearly labeled, and tabbed if necessary or useful, so that the court can easily locate relevant materials while reviewing the papers.

On types and admissibility of evidence, see §§36.100-36.144. On discovery evidence, see §§36.122-36.129. On format of supporting evidence, see §§36.68-36.70. On objecting to evidence presented in opposition to the motion, see §§36.81-36.86.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.69 a. Format of Evidence in Support of Motion

If the evidence in support of the motion exceeds 25 pages, it must (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(g)):

- Be bound in a separate volume, and
- Include a table of contents.

The pages of each exhibit should be bound together at the top to permit easy page turning. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110(e). In addition, each exhibit must be separated by a hard 8½ by 11 sheet with hard paper or plastic tabs extending below the bottom of the page, bearing the exhibit designation. There also must be an index to exhibits. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110(f).

NOTE: Pages from a single deposition and associated exhibits must be designated as a single exhibit. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110(f).

Exhibits written in a foreign language must be accompanied by an English translation, certified under oath by a qualified interpreter. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110(g).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.70 b. Prepare Deposition as Exhibit

The are several technical requirements for use of a deposition as an exhibit, among them:

- Stating the deponent's name and the date of the deposition on the first page of the deposition (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1116(a));
- Including only relevant pages of transcript (other than the title page) and clearly showing the original deposition page number at the bottom of each page (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1116(b)); and
- Marking all relevant portions of the deposition testimony to call attention to it, e.g., by highlighting with a marker or underlining (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1116(c)).

PRACTICE TIP: It is preferable to underline rather than highlight the relevant deposition testimony, because it reproduces more clearly and will be easier to read on appeal.

Unless local rules provide otherwise, lodge the original deposition transcript with the court clerk, who will return the material after the court rules on the motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1302. Counsel must include a self-addressed stamped envelope with the lodged material. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1302(b).

B. Opposition Papers

§36.72 1. Documents in Opposition to the Motion

The opposition to a motion for summary judgment, summary adjudication, or both must consist of the following documents, separately stapled and titled as shown (CCP §437c(b)(3); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(e)):

- The opposing party's memorandum (see §§36.73-36.74);
- The opposing party's separate statement of undisputed material facts (see §§36.75-36.80);
- The opposing party's evidence (see §§36.87-36.89); and
- The opposing party's request for judicial notice (see §36.67).

The following documents are optional, but often useful, in opposing a summary judgment or summary adjudication motion:

- Opposing party's objections to the moving party's evidence (see §§36.81-36.86);
- Ex parte application to continue the hearing (see §§36.29-36.51); and
- Proposed order denying the motion (see §36.90).

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Opposing Memorandum

§36.73 a. Contents of Opposing Memorandum

The opposition to a summary judgment motion must be supported by a memorandum. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(e)(1). The opposing party's memorandum should:

- Specify the material fact(s) that are clearly in dispute, with references to evidence showing the controversy;
- Meet each argument raised in moving party's memorandum;

PRACTICE TIP: Whenever possible, the opposing memorandum should mirror the moving party's memorandum so that the judge will not overlook specific opposing points and will more easily grasp why the motion should be denied.

- Include citations holding that the moving party has the burden of showing there is no triable issue of fact (see §§36.14-36.25); and
- Distinguish or otherwise negate cases supporting the moving party's position.

PRACTICE TIP: The opposing party's memorandum will be more credible if it does not ignore cases that support the moving party's position. Instead, distinguish such cases and provide the court with a clear reason why they do not apply.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.74 b. Format for Opposing Memorandum

The format requirements for the opposing memorandum are the same as for the supporting memorandum: It must not exceed 20 pages, apart from exhibits, declarations, attachments, a table of contents, a table of authorities, and the proof of service. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(d). On format for memorandum, see §§36.58-36.61.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.75 3. Opposing Party's Separate Statement

The party opposing a summary judgment motion must submit a separate statement of disputed and undisputed facts corresponding to the moving party's separate statement. Lewis v County of Sacramento (2001) 93 CA4th 107, 113 CR2d 90 (in opposition to motion, plaintiff must submit separate statement with specific facts that show triable issue of material fact exists).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.76 a. Failure of Opposing Party to Submit Separate Statement

The opposing party's failure to file an adequate responsive statement is a sufficient ground, in the court's discretion, to grant the summary judgment motion. CCP §437c(b)(3); Kojababian v Genuine Home Loans, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 408, 94 CR3d 288 (no error to grant summary judgment when defendants made prima facie showing of entitlement to judgment and plaintiffs failed to file separate statement); Oldcastle Precast, Inc. v Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co. (2009) 170 CA4th 554, 576, 88 CR3d 363 (deficiencies in separate statement were substantive and not curable procedural defects).

An immediate grant of summary judgment is usually too harsh a consequence for failure to file an adequate opposing separate statement. "[T]he proper response in most instances, if the trial court is not prepared to address the merits of the motion in light of the deficient separate statement, is to give the opposing party an opportunity to file a proper separate statement.… " Parkview Villas Ass'n v State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (2005) 133 CA4th 1197, 1211, 35 CR3d 411. See also Teselle v McLoughlin (2009) 173 CA4th 156, 160, 92 CR3d 696 (abuse of discretion to impose terminating sanction for violation of procedural rule; although opposing party filed separate statement one day late, moving party timely replied and court had time to consider papers before hearing). In rare cases, the court may decide to consider the merits of the opposition, despite the lack of a separate statement. See Gilbertson v Osman (1986) 185 CA3d 308, 315, 229 CR 627 (court considered merits despite lack of separate statement because case involved "single, simple issue" with little evidentiary support), disapproved on other grounds in Woods v Young (1991) 53 C3d 315, 328 n4, 279 CR 613.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Civil Procedure Before Trial/36 Summary Judgment/§36.77 b. Contents of Separate Statement

§36.77 b. Contents of Separate Statement

The opposition separate statement must (CCP §437c(b)(3)):

- Respond to each of the material facts claimed to be undisputed;
- Plainly and concisely list any other material fact the opposing party contends are disputed; and
- Reference each material disputed fact to supporting evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.78 c. Format of Separate Statement

The separate statement filed in opposition must follow the format set out in the sample in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(h). For sample separate statement in opposition to motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, see §36.222.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.79 (1) Two-Column Format

The opposing party's separate statement must use a two-column format (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(f):

- The first column repeats each material fact claimed by the moving party to be undisputed, followed by the evidence advanced by the moving party to establish that fact, and
- The second column, directly opposite the recitation of each of the moving party's undisputed facts, states whether the fact is "disputed" or "undisputed."

As to those facts that are disputed, the opposing party must (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1250(f)):

- State the nature of the dispute, and
- Describe the evidence supporting the position that the fact is controverted, with citation to exhibit, title, page, and line numbers in the evidence submitted.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.80 (2) Request Electronic Copy of Moving Party's Separate Statement

The opposing party should request an electronic copy of the moving party's separate statement immediately to avoid having to retype the information into the first column. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(i) (on request, moving party must within 3 days provide electronic version of its separate statement if one exists). On the moving party's responsibility to provide an electronic version of the separate statement on request, see §36.66.

§36.81 4. Objections to Moving Party's Evidence

Evidentiary objections are an important part of any opposition. To determine whether the moving papers show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact, the court must necessarily first decide what admissible evidence it has before it. Hollywood Screentest, Inc. v NBC Universal, Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 631, 642, 60 CR3d 279. See CCP §437c(c) (court must consider all evidence in papers, "except that to which objections have been made and sustained by the court").

The procedure for making objections and ensuring the existence of a proper record is provided in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1352 and 3.1354. See City of Long Beach v Farmers & Merchants Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 780, 782, 97 CR2d 140. Objections may be submitted in writing before the hearing (see §§36.82-36.85) or made orally at hearing (see §36.86).

PRACTICE TIP: Written objections allow the court sufficient time to review the evidence offered and objections made. This is especially important in large cases with complicated facts or complex claims. Because the court's decision is based on evidence (or lack thereof), the best practice is to submit written objections so the court can consider the objections before rendering a tentative decision.

On evidentiary objections, see §§36.145-36.159.

© The Regents of the University of California

a. Written Objections to Evidence

§36.82 (1) Timing for Written Objections

Written objections must be served and filed at the same time the objecting party serves and files its opposition or reply papers. On a showing of good cause, the court may allow the party to file its objections at a different time. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1354(a).

On when a party must file its opposition or reply papers, see §§36.36, 36.38.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.83 (2) Format for Written Objections

The objecting party must serve and file written objections separately from the other papers in support of or in opposition to the motion. Although the objecting party may reference objections in the right column of the separate statement, the party may not restate or reargue the objections in the separate statement. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1354(b).

In formatting the written objections, an objecting party must number each objection consecutively and (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1354(b)(1)-(4)):

- Identify the name of the document in which the specific objectionable material is located;
- State the exhibit, title, page, and line number of the objectionable material;
- Quote or set forth the objectionable statement or material; and
- State the grounds for each objection to that statement or material.

The Rules of Court specify two alternate formats for written objections; counsel must follow one for its written objections. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1354(b).

EXAMPLE 1: The first permissible format specified by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1354(b) appears as follows:

Objections to Jackson Declaration

Objection Number 1

"Johnson told me that no widgets were ever received." (Jackson declaration, page 3, lines 7-8.)

Grounds for Objection 1: Hearsay (Evid. Code, §1200); lack of personal knowledge (Evid. Code, §702(a)).

EXAMPLE 2: The second permissible format specified by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1354(b) appears as follows:

Objections to Jackson Declaration

Material Objected to:	Grounds for Objection:
Jackson declaration, page 3, lines 7-8: "Johnson told me that no widgets were ever received."	Hearsay (Evid. Code, §1200); lack of personal knowledge (Evid. Code, §702(a)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.84 b. Waiver if No Ruling Obtained

Evidentiary objections not made at the hearing are waived (CCP §437c(b)(5)), as are objections to declarations (and affidavits) or a declarant's personal knowledge or competence to testify (CCP §437c(d)). See §§36.146. If a trial court fails to rule on evidentiary objections, then the objections are ordinarily deemed waived on appeal. Nazir v United Airlines, Inc. (2009) 178 CA4th 243, 254, 100 CR3d 296 (defendant's objections to plaintiff's evidence deemed waived because court did not expressly rule on individual objections). See §§36.147-36.148, 36.164, 36.168, 36.200-36.204.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.85 c. Proposed Order

When a party submits written objections, it must also submit a proposed order. The proposed order must include a place for the court to indicate its ruling on each objection (sustained or overruled) and a place for the judge's signature. The Rules of Court specify two alternate formats for a proposed order on the written objections; counsel must submit a proposed order following one of the two formats. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1354(c).

EXAMPLE 1: The first permissible format specified by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1354(c) appears as follows:

Objections to Jackson Declaration

Objection Number 1

"Johnson told me that no widgets were ever received." (Jackson declaration, page 3, lines 7-8.)

Grounds for Objection 1: Hearsay (Evid. Code, §1200); lack of personal knowledge (Evid. Code, §702(a)).

Court's Ruling on Objection 1:	Sustained: _____ Overruled: _____

EXAMPLE 2: The second permissible format specified by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1354(c) appears as follows:

Objections to Jackson Declaration

Material Objected to:	Grounds for Objection:	Ruling on the Objection
1. Jackson declaration, page 3, lines 7-8: "Johnson told me that no widgets were ever received."	Hearsay (Evid. Code, §1200); lack of personal knowledge (Evid. Code, §702(a)).	Sustained: _____ Overruled:_____
Date: _____		_____ Judge

§36.86 d. Oral Objections

As an alternative to filing written objections, a party may raise its objections orally at the summary judgment hearing. See CCP §437c(b)(5). The objecting party must arrange for a court reporter to attend the hearing to record the objections for the record. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1352.

PRACTICE TIP: Presenting written objections before the hearing is almost always preferable to making oral objections. Because the court usually will reach a tentative ruling before the hearing, written objections are the best method to ensure that the objections will be given full consideration. Although the statute does not distinguish between written and oral objections, oral objections may be given less weight because the court may not have sufficient time or means to study the basis for the objection. If oral objections must be made, however, prepare them before the hearing and read them into the record.

§36.87 5. Evidence in Opposition to Motion

To defeat a summary judgment motion, the opposing party must produce evidence showing at least one triable issue of material fact. See CCP §437c(b)(3). See also Shepherd v Jones (1982) 136 CA3d 1049, 1062, 186 CR 708 (opposing papers cannot merely assert that jury trial is opponent's right without any evidence on issues raised in motion). To defeat a summary adjudication motion, the opposing party must show that there is a triable issue of material fact as to the challenged causes of action, punitive damages claims, or defenses. See Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 850, 107 CR2d 841. If the opposing party fails to counter the moving party's affidavits or declarations, the moving party's evidence will be accepted as true. Melorich Builders, Inc. v Superior Court (1984) 160 CA3d 931, 935, 207 CR 47.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.88 a. Format for Opposition Evidence

The format for evidence in opposition to a summary judgment motion is subject to the same rules as for supporting evidence, e.g., if evidence in opposition exceeds 25 pages, it must be in a separately bound volume and must include a table of contents. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(g). On evidence format rules, see §§36.68-36.70.

Although evidence can be presented to the court through other methods (e.g., judicial notice, discovery), the testimony in affidavits and declarations submitted by the opposing party is usually the primary means of establishing that material facts are in dispute. For discussion of evidentiary rules for affidavits and declarations, see §§36.106-36.121.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.89 b. Opposition by Claiming Privilege Against Self-Incrimination

A party who opposes a summary judgment motion by claiming the privilege of self-incrimination must submit evidence from which it could be inferred that the party faces a "dilemma" caused by proper assertion of the privilege. The opposing party must show by affidavit that facts essential to his or her opposition might exist but cannot be presented because of the possibility of self-incrimination; the party should make a factual showing that he or she faces potential parallel criminal prosecution, or that, if such prosecution could be assumed, facts necessary to oppose the motion exist but cannot be presented because of the assertion of the privilege. Fisher v Gibson (2001) 90 CA4th 275, 286, 109 CR2d 145.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.90 6. Proposed Order

Counsel should include a proposed order specifying the issues still in dispute with appropriate references to the evidence. If a motion is denied, the court must specify in its order the material triable issue or issues still in controversy and specifically refer to the evidence establishing a triable issue of fact concerning each of those issues. CCP §437c(g). On court hearing and ruling, see §§36.171-36.191.

For a form of proposed order, see §36.223.

C. Reply Papers

1. Reply Memorandum

§36.92 a. Purpose of Reply Memorandum

The reply should be limited to rebuttal arguments to the opposing party's papers. These arguments may include procedural, evidentiary, or substantive issues. See California Summary Judgment §§8.6-8.13 (Cal CEB 2010). Generally, the reply should not include new evidence. See §36.97.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.93 b. Format of Reply Memorandum

No reply memorandum in support of the motion shall exceed 10 pages. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(d). Memorandums in support of the motion are generally governed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.94 2. No Supplemental Separate Statement

There is no provision in CCP §437c for a supplemental separate statement in the reply. Nazir v United Airlines, Inc. (2009) 178 CA4th 243, 252, 100 CR3d 296; San Diego Watercrafts, Inc. v Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2002) 102 CA4th 308, 313, 125 CR2d 499. Generally, the moving party may not rely on new evidence submitted with its reply; see §36.97. The court has discretion to consider new evidence submitted in the reply papers as long as the opposing party has notice and an opportunity to respond to prevent violation of the opposing party's due process rights. San Diego Watercrafts, Inc., 102 CA4th at 316.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.95 3. Objections to Opposing Party's Evidence

The format of objections to evidence submitted in a reply are the same as those in the opposing papers. On the required format for objections, see §36.83. On objections to evidence generally, see §§36.145-36.159. On opposing party's objections to evidence, see §§36.46-36.86.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.96 4. Reponses to Opposing Party's Objections to Evidence

If the opposing party has objected to evidence, the moving party should prepare a memorandum supporting its position. On objections to evidence, see §§36.145-36.159. On methods of objecting, see §§36.81-36.86.

If objections are lengthy, consider whether to file a document entitled Objections and Motion To Strike Evidence Introduced in Opposition to Motion, including:

- The page and line number of the document to which the objection is made; and
- The specific grounds for the objection. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1354.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.97 5. No Affirmative Evidence Submitted with Reply Papers

The reply generally should not include any new evidence. Code of Civil Procedure §§437c does not explicitly provide for submitting additional evidence or a supplemental separate statement with the reply papers. San Diego Watercrafts, Inc. v Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2002) 102 CA4th 308, 313, 125 CR2d 499. Nevertheless, the court has discretion to consider evidence not mentioned in a party's separate statement and to permit amendments to the party's submissions, provided the opponent is afforded its due process right to an adequate opportunity to address the evidence or amendments. San Diego Watercrafts, Inc. v Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., supra. Thus, the trial court may properly consider new evidence submitted with a reply brief as long as the opposing party has notice and an opportunity to respond. Plenger v Alza Corp. (1992) 11 CA4th 349, 362 n8, 13 CR2d 811.

If it is necessary to submit evidence in support of the motion with the reply brief, expect the court to deny or to continue the hearing of the motion. See Weiss v Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. (1988) 204 CA3d 1094, 1099, 251 CR 727.

The moving party should be cautious in filing reply affidavits and declarations. If filed, these documents should not create disputes about immaterial facts cited by the opposition that might demonstrate to the court that there is indeed need for trial. Reply evidence should be presented when it is apparent that it is uncontroversial and would be difficult to refute, tending to prove that there is no dispute on a triable issue of material fact or when it is directed to procedural defects in the opposition papers (e.g., sufficiency of separate statement).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.98 6. Proposed Order

It is advisable to file a proposed order with the reply papers. This can get the order signed faster, because otherwise the proposed order has to be served on the opposing party and that party has 5 days to object as to form. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1312(a).

For sample proposed orders, see §§36.220-36.221.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.99 7. Checklist for Preparing Reply Papers

After opposition papers received:

- Prepare reply to opposition papers (see §§36.92-36.97)
- Prepare objections to opposing party's evidence (see §§36.81-36.86; see also §§36.145-36.159):
- Serve written objections or
- Plan to make objections orally at hearing
- Serve reply:
- Not less than 5 calendar days before noticed or continued hearing date (CCP §437c(b)(4)) (see §36.38) or
- As the court orders otherwise

VII. PREPARING EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT OR OPPOSE MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT OR SUMMARY ADJUDICATION

§36.100 A. Evidence Is Required

Before moving for summary judgment, the moving party should review all discovery and other evidence to determine what is needed to support the motion. The moving party should then gather all evidence needed to support motion just as it would for trial. Similarly, to defeat a summary judgment motion, the opposing party should gather all evidence showing at least one triable issue of material fact. See CCP §437c(b)(3).

NOTE: The moving party's evidentiary submissions are strictly construed, while evidence submitted in opposition to a summary judgment motion are given a liberal construction. Saelzler v Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 C4th 763, 768, 107 CR2d 617; Truong v Glasser (2009) 181 CA4th 102, 109, 103 CR3d 811. Despite this liberality, the same evidentiary standards apply to both to the moving and opposing parties. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 851, 107 CR2d 841. See §7.30.

Some federal cases permit a defendant, who is the moving party, to point out through argument that the plaintiff has no evidence to support its case. See §36.7. California law, however, requires a defendant moving for summary judgment to present evidence (e.g., plaintiff's discovery responses)—not simply to assert—that the plaintiff does not possess, and cannot reasonably obtain, the evidence needed to meet its trial burden. See Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 855, 107 CR2d 841. See also Rio Linda Unified Sch. Dist. v Superior Court (1997) 52 CA4th 732, 739, 60 CR2d 710 (demonstrating a negative is akin to the burden of appellant in proving that there is no substantial evidence to support a judgment).

PRACTICE TIP: The best way to show with admissible evidence that the opposing party does not have evidence to support its case is with broad requests for admission going to the other party's claims or defenses ("admit defendant was not negligent with respect to the subject incident"), followed up with an interrogatory asking for all facts, witnesses, and evidence in support of any answer other than an unqualified admission. Such broad discovery almost necessarily embodies "contention" questions calling for legal conclusions; it is thus not a good idea to base your motion for summary judgment on such broad questions asked at a deposition, because such "basis of contention" questions are not allowed. However, a deposition may establish crucial factual matters, such as that the plaintiff saw no foreign substance on the ground in a slip and fall case.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.101 1. Evidence Must Be Admissible

Admissible evidence is required to support and oppose a motion for summary judgment. CCP §437c(b). Using inadmissible evidence can be fatal to the motion. See Martin v Johnson (1979) 88 CA3d 595, 151 CR 816 (trial court granted defendant's summary judgment motion after striking all plaintiff's exhibits and inadmissible portions of plaintiff's declaration in opposition to motion).

PRACTICE TIP: To meet the standards of admissibility, the evidence's proponent must either obtain originals of necessary documents or secure foundational proof for the admission of secondary evidence. See Evid C §1521 (secondary evidence admissible as proof of content in most cases). On the secondary evidence rule, see §36.138.

See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 1 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

On preparing admissible evidence, see §§36.100-36.144. See also Summary Judgment chap 5 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.102 a. No Ultimate Facts

To be admissible, evidence must state evidentiary facts, as opposed to conclusory or "ultimate" facts. Brown v Ransweiler (2009) 171 CA4th 516, 529, 89 CR3d 801; Tuchscher Dev. Enters., Inc. v San Diego Unified Port Dist. (2003) 106 CA4th 1219, 1240, 132 CR2d 57.

PRACTICE TIP: Although there is sometimes a fine distinction between admissible facts and inadmissible conclusions, counsel can avoid problems by stating underlying facts with specificity whenever possible.

In general, pleadings contain "ultimate facts," whereas "evidentiary facts" are found in answers to interrogatories, responses to requests for admission, depositions, other discovery, and affidavits and declarations made on personal knowledge. See CCP §437c(b)(1). However, admissions made in another party's pleadings (either by affirmative allegation or by failure to deny an allegation) are admissible evidence that can be used to support the motion. The admission "is not merely evidence of a fact; it is a conclusive concession of the truth of a matter which has the effect of removing it from the issues." Walker v Dorn (1966) 240 CA2d 118, 49 CR 362. See Pinewood Invs. v City of Oxnard (1982) 133 CA3d 1030, 1035, 184 CR 417. On judicial admissions in pleadings, see §§36.130-36.133.

For examples illustrating to improper use of legal conclusions or ultimate facts, see 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §227 (5th ed 2008).

b. Sources of Evidence

§36.103 (1) Permissible Source of Evidence

The moving and opposing parties may use the following methods to present evidence in support of or in opposition to a summary judgment motion:

- Affidavits or declarations (see §§36.106-36.121);
- Evidence derived from discovery procedures, e.g., depositions, answers to interrogatories, requests for admissions, documents produced in response to a demand for inspection, or reports of physical or mental examinations (see §§36.122-36.129);
- Admissions (by other party) or stipulations in the pleadings or other papers (see §§36.130-36.134); and
- Matters subject to judicial notice (see §36.135).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.104 (2) Impermissible Sources of Evidence

A party may not rely on the following methods to prove any fact needed to support or oppose a summary judgment motion:

- Party's own interrogatory responses (CCP §2030.410; Great American Ins. Cos. v Gordon Trucking, Inc. (2008) 165 CA4th 445, 450, 81 CR3d 65);
- Party's own pleadings (CCP §437c(p); Slobojan v Western Travelers Life Ins. Co. (1969) 70 C2d 432, 437, 74 CR 895);
- Inconsistent theories or facts pleaded by an opposing party (see Conn v National Can Corp. (1981) 124 CA3d 630, 639, 177 CR 445;
- Admissions made by a party other than the party opposing or moving for summary judgment (see Evid C §1220);
- Oral testimony at the hearing (Spencer v Hibernia Bank (1960) 186 CA2d 702, 717, 9 CR 867);
- Unauthenticated documents (see Evid C §1401);
- Opposing party's clearly mistaken discovery response (Mason v Marriage & Family Ctr. (1991) 228 CA3d 537, 545, 279 CR 51); and
- Discovery responses from parties other than the party against whom the motion is directed. CCP §§2030(n) (interrogatories), 2033(n) (admissions).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.105 2. Evidence Must Be Directed to Issues Raised by Pleadings

Motions for summary judgment are limited to issues raised by the pleadings. Laabs v City of Victorville (2008) 163 CA4th 1242, 1253, 78 CR3d 372; Ferrari v Grand Canyon Dories (1995) 32 CA4th 248, 252, 38 CR2d 65. Thus, "to create a triable issue of material fact, the opposition's evidence must be directed to issues raised by the pleadings." Distefano v Forester (2001) 85 CA4th 1249, 1264, 102 CR2d 813.

PRACTICE TIP: If the opposing party's evidence would show some factual assertion, legal theory, defense, or claim not yet pleaded, the moving party should seek leave to amend the pleadings before the hearing on the summary judgment motion. Laabs v City of Victorville (2008) 163 CA4th 1242, 1253, 78 CR3d 372, citing Distefano v Forester, supra. Similarly, if the opposition is based on a defense or claim not previously pleaded, the opposing party must generally amend the pleadings. Oakland Raiders v National Football League (2005) 131 CA4th 621, 648, 32 CR3d 266; Keniston v American Nat'l Ins. Co. (1973) 31 CA3d 803, 812, 107 CR 583. On continuance to amend pleadings, see §§36.44-36.47. On amending pleadings generally, see chap 16.

NOTE: The moving party may move for summary judgment even if there are defects on the face of the moving party's pleadings that make it vulnerable to a demurrer or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, if the supporting affidavits or declarations are factually within the general scope of the causes of actions or defenses set out in the pleadings. See Varco-Pruden, Inc. v Hampshire Constr. Co. (1975) 50 CA3d 654, 656, 123 CR 606 (pleading situation in case was unusual in that "parties entirely ignored the theories expressed in the pleadings and the summary judgment was considered and granted on a theory not pleaded"); Ramos v City of Santa Clara (1973) 35 CA3d 93, 96, 110 CR 485 (court permitted defendant to move for summary judgment despite that defenses were not raised first in its answer).

§36.106 B. Declarations and Affidavits

Most summary judgment motions are largely based on witness testimony in affidavits or declarations made under penalty of perjury. Likewise, the primary means by which the opposing party establishes that material facts are in dispute is by testimony in affidavits and declarations. The declarations of the moving party are strictly construed, whereas those of the opposing party are liberally construed. Sanchez v Hillerich & Bradsby Co. (2002) 104 CA4th 703, 711, 128 CR2d 529.

For sample declarations in support of and in opposition to a motion for summary judgment, see §§36.218.

§36.107 1. Differences Between Declarations and Affidavits

Declarations are made and signed under penalty of perjury (CCP §2015.5), whereas affidavits are written declarations made under oath and attested to, ordinarily by a notary public (CCP §2003).

PRACTICE TIP: Declarations are used much more often than affidavits to support summary judgment motions in California because they need not be made under oath before an authorized officer.

Whichever form is used, it is important that it conform strictly to content and execution requirements. See §§36.111-36.121.

On declarations and affidavits, generally, see chap 12.

§36.108 2. When to Use Declaration or Affidavit

Declarations and affidavits, i.e., written statements made under penalty of perjury or under oath (CCP §§2015.5, 2003), are used to present facts to the judge from:

- A witness (including a party) to an event;
- An expert witness;
- A custodian of records; and
- Any witness who can prove or disprove a fact needed to support the motion.

3. When Not to Use Declaration or Affidavit

§36.109 a. When State of Mind Is at Issue

The moving party should avoid presenting a declaration or affidavit on an individual's state of mind (or lack thereof) when that fact is sought to be established only by the individual's affirmation of it. See CCP §437c(e). A court is not required to accept an undisputed declaration by an individual as to his or her state of mind; rather, such matter is committed to the court's discretion. Kojababian v Genuine Home Loans, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 408, 417, 94 CR3d 288; Violette v Shoup (1993) 16 CA4th 611, 620, 20 CR2d 358. See California Summary Judgment §11.16 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.110 b. When Declarant Is Sole Witness

The moving party should avoid presenting a declaration or affidavit of a declarant who is the sole witness to a material fact, because the court may deny summary judgment when this is the only proof of an uncontroverted material fact. See CCP §437c(e). It is in the court's discretion whether to accept an undisputed declaration by an individual who is the sole witness to a material fact. Kojababian v Genuine Home Loans, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 408, 417, 94 CR3d 288. See California Summary Judgment §11.15 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.111 4. Substantive Requirements for Declarations and Affidavits

Because the pleadings define the scope of the issues on a summary judgment motion (see §36.105), counsel must direct declaration and affidavits to the issues raised by the pleadings. Keniston v American Nat'l Ins. Co. (1973) 31 CA3d 803, 812, 107 CR 583.

A declaration or affidavit must assert the truth of the matters it sets out. CCP §2015.5; Baron v Mare (1975) 47 CA3d 304, 307, 120 CR 675. In addition, it must:

- Be presented in good faith (see CCP §437c(j); §36.112);
- Be based on personal knowledge of the declarant (CCP §437c(d)) (see §36.113);
- Show affirmatively the declarant's competence to testify as to matters stated (CCP §437c(d)) (see §36.114); and
- Set out admissible evidence (CCP §437c(d)) (see §§36.101-36.104).

PRACTICE TIP: Do not include argument in declarations or affidavits; simply present the facts that will establish a fact or authenticate a document without characterizing them or arguing their importance.

On general requirements for declarations and affidavits, see 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §224 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.112 a. Must Be Presented in Good Faith

All declarations must be presented in good faith, or they will be subject to sanctions on notice and an opportunity to be heard. CCP §437c(j) (court must impose sanctions in amount of reasonable expenses incurred by other party if affidavits are presented in bad faith or solely for purposes of delay).

On sanctions for bad faith affidavits, see §36.169.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.113 b. Must Be Based on Personal Knowledge

The affidavit or declaration must be made by any person on personal knowledge. CCP §437c(d). Thus, unless the declarant is an expert (see §§36.116-36.120), they generally may not offer opinion evidence. On lay opinion evidence, see §36.115.

PRACTICE TIP: Although when drafting declarations many attorneys routinely include a statement such as "I have personal knowledge of the facts stated herein," the court is unlikely to consider such a conclusory statement as sufficient to show personal knowledge. See Snider v Snider (1962) 200 CA2d 741, 754, 19 CR 709 (when facts stated in affidavit do not demonstrate personal knowledge, assertion of personal knowledge and competency to testify "should be ignored"). The declaration must include specific information showing that the declarant has personal knowledge of the facts supporting the motion. See CCP §437c(d); Bowden v Robinson (1977) 67 CA3d 705, 719, 136 CR 871).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.114 c. Must Establish Competence to Testify

A declaration in support of a motion for summary judgment must affirmatively show that the declarant is competent to testify as a witness about the matters stated. CCP §437c(d). See, e.g., Rincon v Burbank Unified Sch. Dist. (1986) 178 CA3d 949, 955, 224 CR 88. A competent declarant is a person qualified to be a witness who:

- Has personal knowledge of the subject of the declaration (Evid C §702); or
- Is qualified by training or experience to express an expert opinion on the subject of the declaration (Evid C §§720, 801).

Note that every person is qualified to be a witness unless a statute provides otherwise. Evid C §700. See, e.g., Evid C §§701, 703.5.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should ensure that a declaration includes facts showing that the declarant is competent to testify about the matters stated. That is, unless the declarant is an expert, the declaration must include specific information demonstrating that the declarant has personal knowledge of the facts supporting the motion.

See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook chap 27 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

5. Opinion Evidence

§36.115 a. Lay Opinion Evidence

A nonexpert witness, i.e., a lay witness, may properly state an opinion if the declaration includes foundational facts showing that the opinion is both rationally based on the witness's perception and helpful in understanding other facts in the document. Evid C §800.

To provide evidentiary support, a lay opinion must clearly state:

- Sufficient reasons and explanations for the opinion;
- The factors considered; and
- The reasoning employed.

For examples of subjects considered appropriate for opinion testimony by lay witnesses, see California Expert Witness Guide §2.7 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991). On opinion testimony from lay witnesses generally, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook §§30.1-30.15 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.116 b. Expert Opinion Evidence

Expert witnesses may give opinions that are (Evid C §801):

- Related to a subject sufficiently beyond common experience that an expert opinion would assist the trier of fact; and
- Based on matter (including special knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education) that may be relied on by an expert in forming an opinion on the subject.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.117 (1) Include Statement of Expert Qualifications

An expert declaration offered in support of or opposition to a summary judgment motion must make the same showing on qualifications and expertise that would be required if the expert were testifying in person at trial. See Towns v Davidson (2007) 147 CA4th 461, 472, 54 CR3d 568. The declaration should state with particularity the facts that make the expert competent to render the opinion contained in the declaration. The expert should first state what type of expert he or she is and give enough information about his or her background to qualify as an expert in that field. Courts are generally fairly lenient in allowing experts to testify somewhat far afield in this context. See, e.g., Mann v Cracchiolo (1985) 38 C3d 18, 38, 210 CR 762 (medical expert may be qualified to testify on standard of care for medical field outside his or her own specialty).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.118 (2) Include Factual Basis for Opinion

The expert should set out the facts of the case on which his or her opinion is based, state his or her opinions, and enumerate any additional bases for those opinions. See, e.g., Johnson v Superior Court (2006) 143 CA4th 297, 307, 49 CR3d 52 (defendant failed to establish doctor's care was within standard of care because his expert did not provide basis for determining safe amount of radiation); Kelley v Trunk (1998) 66 CA4th 519, 523, 78 CR2d 122 (expert declaration that failed to make any foundational showing that expert's opinion rested on matters of type on which experts reasonably rely was inadmissible). But see Hanson v Grode (1999) 76 CA4th 601, 608 n6, 90 CR2d 396 (criticizing Kelly v Trunk for suggesting that "an expert's declaration must set forth in excruciating detail the factual basis for the opinions stated therein").

PRACTICE TIP: The court in Powell v Kleinman (2007) 151 CA4th 112, 125, 59 CR3d 618, reconciled Hanson and Kelley by reasoning that an expert declaration made in support of a defendant's summary judgment motion must be detailed and with foundation to carry the burden of production in showing the nonexistence of any genuine issue of fact, but an expert declaration made in opposition to a motion need not be detailed, because it is entitled to all favorable inferences. 151 CA4th at 125. Counsel should consider this distinction between moving and opposing declarations in preparing expert declarations.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.119 (3) Must Not Be Based on Speculation or Conjecture

The court may dismiss an expert declaration if the expert's stated opinion is speculative or lacks sufficient certainty. Sanchez v Hillerich & Bradsby Co. (2002) 104 CA4th 703, 718, 128 CR2d 529. See McGonnell v Kaiser Gypsum Co. (2002) 98 CA4th 1098, 1106, 120 CR2d 23 ("court is not bound by expert opinion that is speculative or conjectural"); Kelley v Trunk (1998) 66 CA4th 519, 524, 78 CR2d 122 (expert opinion is "worth no more than the reasons upon which it rests"; expert opinion unsupported by reasons or explanations does not establish absence of material fact for purposes of summary judgment).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.120 (4) Must Not Be Merely Conclusory

As with all evidence in support of or in opposition to a summary judgment motion, expert opinion must not be merely a conclusory assertion. See, e.g., Parker v Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1970) 3 C3d 176, 184, 89 CR 737 (expert stated only "conclusory assertions" that employment offered is "not different from or inferior to" that under different employment contract).

§36.121 6. Common Defects in Affidavits and Declarations

A summary judgment motion can be lost because of defects in the affidavits and declarations. The most common problems that prevent consideration of the merits are:

- Failure to comply with requirements of CCP §2015.5 for declarations under penalty of perjury, including such defects as:
- Omission of signatures;
- Omission of date or place of execution; or
- Failure to assert the truth of the matter stated;
- Failure to comply with the requirement of CCP §2003 that an affidavit recite the fact that it was made under oath or that the witness was sworn;
- Failure to have the affidavit or declaration (CCP §437c(d)):
- Be made by someone with personal knowledge,
- Set out admissible evidence, and
- Show that the affiant is competent to testify to the matter.

On declarations generally, see chap 12.

§36.122 C. Evidence Obtained Through Discovery

Evidence obtained from an opponent to be used in support of or opposition to a summary judgment motion is usually in responses to discovery requests. Such evidence may also be found in admissions made in pleadings or stipulations. See §§36.130-36.134. The parties may use all methods of discovery to support or oppose a summary judgment motion, as long as the discovered matter is not hearsay or otherwise objectionable under the rules of evidence. On hearsay, see §§36.139-36.143.

Discovery methods that are easily adaptable to obtaining evidence from the opposing party to support the motion or the opposition to the motion include: depositions (see §§36.123-36.126), answers to interrogatories and requests for admissions (see §36.127), documents produced in response to demands for inspection (see §36.128), and reports of physical or mental examinations (see CCP §§2032.010-2032.650) (see §36.129).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.123 1. Deposition Testimony

Depositions can be used to support a motion for summary judgment subject to the same rules of admissibility as a witness's affidavit or declaration. CCP §437c(b)(1). Saporta v Barbagelatta (1963) 220 CA2d 463, 469, 33 CR 661.

PRACTICE TIP: Because the scope of examination at depositions is broader than the admissible evidence standard, it is essential for counsel to review all deposition testimony used to support the motion with the rules of evidence in mind. See CCP §2017.010 (matter is discoverable if it either is itself admissible in evidence or appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence). Otherwise, the opposing party may be able to object successfully that the testimony is inadmissible. Despite the ability to file reply papers, counsel may not have the time to show by alternative means the truth of supporting facts, thus seriously weakening the moving party's position before the court rules on the motion.

§36.124 a. Accompany Transcript with Authenticating Declaration

To satisfy the personal knowledge and secondary evidence requirements (see §§36.136, 36.138), an attorney who was present at the deposition should provide an authenticating declaration stating, under penalty of perjury, that:

- He or she was present at the deposition; and
- The transcript accurately reflects the questions asked and the answers given.

PRACTICE TIP: In the authenticating declaration, identify questions and responses by page and line, and set them out verbatim if they are short and pivotal to the motion. Attach copies of the relevant pages, with the cited material highlighted, to the declarations as exhibits. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1116.

On authenticating evidence, see §§36.136-36.138.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.125 b. Obtain Signed Deposition Transcript

After the deposition, the deponent is notified when the transcript is available and requested to sign it. Even if the deponent refuses to sign or fails to respond, the deposition has the same force and effect as a signed deposition. CCP §2025.520(f). For example, in Gray v Reeves (1977) 76 CA3d 567, 142 CR 716, defendants moved to file plaintiff's unsigned deposition in support of their summary judgment motion. The appellate court affirmed the granting of summary judgment in defendants' favor and upheld the trial court's right to find facts from the deposition transcript even though the plaintiff had filed a counter declaration that the testimony in the "uncorrected" transcript was incorrect. It is, however, preferable to have the deponent's signature on the transcript or the writing accompanying the recording, because a deponent who has signed the transcript cannot explain away inconsistencies as easily and any later motion to suppress a signed deposition may not as readily succeed.

PRACTICE TIP: If the deposition has not been signed, use a declaration of an attorney or the court reporter in attendance to identify the transcript as a correct rendition of the testimony given, unless a standard stipulation was in effect that an unsigned deposition can be used with the same force and effect as a signed one.

On preparing depositions transcript as exhibits, see §36.70. On authenticating evidence, see §§36.136-36.138.

§36.126 c. Use of Party's Own Deposition Testimony

Because a party generally may not use its own deposition at trial or at a hearing under CCP §2025.620, there is a question about whether a party may use its own deposition to support a summary judgment motion. However, CCP §437c(b)(1) authorizes the use of depositions to support summary judgment motions without qualification and without reference to §2025.620.

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid a problem on this issue, file the client's declaration stating what transpired at the deposition. If it is necessary to submit the client's deposition in support of the motion, argue that, because the deposition itself allowed the opponent the opportunity for cross-examination, the deposition should be admissible under CCP §437c(b)(1).

In any event, a party's deposition testimony may not be contradicted by its own self-serving declarations. See Archdale v American Int'l Specialty Lines Ins. Co. (2007) 154 CA4th 449, 473, 64 CR3d 632, citing D'Amico v Board of Med. Exam'rs (1974) 11 C3d 1, 22, 112 CR 786.

On preparing a deposition as an exhibit, see §36.70. On authenticating evidence, see §§36.136-36.138.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.127 2. Interrogatories and Requests for Admission

A party's answers to interrogatories, and admissions in response to requests for admission, may be used against that party. See D'Amico v Board of Med. Exam'rs (1974) 11 C3d 1, 21, 112 CR 786 (parties are bound by admissions made during discovery and, "on motion for summary judgment, no further evidence of the matters so deemed admitted is required"); Hejmadi v AMFAC, Inc. (1988) 202 CA3d 525, 553, 249 CR 5. A mistaken admission, however, cannot be the basis for summary judgment. See Mason v Marriage & Family Ctr. (1991) 228 CA3d 537, 545, 279 CR 51.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should include the relevant answers and admissions relied on in the moving papers, because they may not otherwise be filed with the court. See CCP §2030.280(a), CCP §2033.270(a). Attach copies and incorporate them by reference into the moving papers as appropriate.

On preparing documents as evidence, see §§36.136-36.144.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.128 3. Documents Produced in Response to Demands for Inspection

Documents produced in response to demands for inspection may be used to support or oppose a summary judgment motion. See CCP §437c(b)(1). The fact that documents are produced in response to a demand, however, will not overcome any admissibility problems. To use these documents as evidence, they must be:

- Identified and authenticated (see §36.137),
- Admissible under the secondary evidence rule (see §36.138), and
- Nonhearsay or admissible under a hearsay exception (see §§36.139-36.143).

Documentary evidence must be accompanied by a supporting declaration that authenticates the document(s) relied on. See §36.137.

On authentication, and compliance with the rules of evidence, see §§36.136-36.143. On preparation of documents as exhibits to motion for summary judgment, see §§36.68-36.70.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.129 4. Results of Physical and Mental Examinations

The results of an order for examination by a physician under CCP §§2032.010-2032.650 also may be used to support or to oppose the motion. Normally, the procedures for presenting these results is through a declaration by the examining physician.

§36.130 D. Judicial Admissions and Stipulations

Admissions of fact can be shown from an adverse party's pleadings, written concessions by counsel, or stipulations of fact. Brown v Surety Co. of Pac. (1981) 122 CA3d 614, 618, 176 CR 143 (statements found to be admissible as "adoptive admissions" under Evid C §1221, because adverse party acknowledged truth of statements). Such a showing is not merely evidence of fact, but it can be treated as a conclusive concession sufficient to remove the issue as a triable issue. Smith v Walter E. Heller & Co. (1978) 82 CA3d 259, 268, 147 CR 1 (admission in complaint); Brown v City of Fremont (1977) 75 CA3d 141, 146, 142 CR 46 (admission of fact in complaint). See also Residents of Beverly Glen, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (1973) 34 CA3d 117, 127, 109 CR 724 (admissions in pleadings).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.131 1. Admissions in Pleadings

The admission of fact in a pleading is a "judicial admission" that either party may rely on as part of the case. Valerio v Andrew Youngquist Constr. (2002) 103 CA4th 1264, 1271, 127 CR2d 436. See Walker v Dorn (1966) 240 CA2d 118, 49 CR 362 (judicial admissions by affirmative allegation will support motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication).

On summary judgment, a judicial admission is proper and overcomes evidence even when the opposing party seeks to contradict the prior admission. Kurinij v Hanna & Morton (1997) 55 CA4th 853, 871, 64 CR2d 324.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel for the moving party should check for judicial admissions in the pleadings and documents filed by the opposing party that may be used to show that facts are not in dispute. Do not refer to judicial admissions in a declaration; rather, include them in a request for judicial notice and the supporting memorandum. Rooney v Vermont Inv. Corp. (1973) 10 C3d 351, 370 n15, 110 CR 353.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.132 a. Judicial Admissions Cannot Be Controverted

Unequivocal admissions in pleadings, i.e., "judicial admissions," cannot be controverted by the pleader. Myers v Trendwest Resorts, Inc. (2009) 178 CA4th 735, 746, 100 CR3d 658. An admission in a pleading is not merely evidence of fact; it can be treated as a conclusive concession sufficient to remove the issue as a triable issue. Smith v Walter E. Heller & Co. (1978) 82 CA3d 259, 268, 147 CR 1 (admission in complaint); Brown v City of Fremont (1977) 75 CA3d 141, 146, 142 CR 46 (admission of fact in complaint).

PRACTICE TIP: Unlike admissions made during discovery, a judicial admission in a pleading usually may be eliminated by amending the pleadings.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.133 b. Judicial Admissions May Be Implied

In addition to express admissions, implied pleading admissions can be used to support or oppose a summary judgment motion, including:

- Implied admissions resulting from a failure to deny (Reich v Yow (1967) 249 CA2d 12, 14, 57 CR 117); and
- Implied admissions resulting from a defective denial (see Oliver v Swiss Club Tell (1963) 222 CA2d 528, 537, 35 CR 324 (denial on information and belief, or for want of information or belief, of alleged fact that may be ascertained from public record constitutes admission of allegation in complaint)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.134 2. Stipulations of Fact

Stipulations are used when the parties have agreed in writing or orally in court that material facts are not in dispute. Parker v Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1970) 3 C3d 176, 181, 89 CR 737 See CCP §283(1) (authority of attorney to bind client). If the moving party possesses the original, signed stipulation, he or she should file it as a document in support of the summary judgment motion. If, however, the moving party has only a copy of the stipulation, he or she may attach the copy, e.g., a letter signed by both parties concerning uncontested facts, to an affidavit or declaration identifying and authenticating the stipulation, and subpoena or request the original stipulation, if necessary.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.135 E. Judicial Notice

A summary judgment motion may be based on matters of which the court must, or may, take judicial notice. CCP §437c(b)(1). See Evid C §§451-452 (setting out matters that must or may be judicially noticed). In fact, summary judgment may be granted based solely on matters that have been judicially noticed if the matters noticed are sufficient to dispose of the issues. Comora v Comprehensive Care Corp. (1983) 140 CA3d 369, 189 CR 538. See Magnolia Square Homeowners Ass'n v Safeco Ins. Co. (1990) 221 CA3d 1049, 1056, 271 CR 1 (trial court took judicial notice of allegation in complaint filed by plaintiff in separate action, which showed knowledge that precluded recovery in present action).

On judicial notice generally, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 49 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). On procedures for requesting judicial notice, see chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.136 F. Laying the Foundation for Evidence

All evidence used in connection with a summary judgment motion must have a proper foundation. Evidence must be:

- Authenticated (see §36.137);
- Compliant with the secondary evidence rule (see §36.138);
- Nonhearsay or within an exception to the hearsay rule (see §§36.139-36.143); and
- Incorporated and properly attached to the moving or opposing papers (see §36.144).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.137 1. Authentication of Documents

Before a document or its contents may be introduced and considered by the trier of fact, the proponent must show sufficient facts to sustain a finding that the document is the writing the proponent claims that it is. Evid C §§1400-1402. See Jazayeri v Mao (2009) 174 CA4th 301, 320, 94 CR3d 198 (testimony that USDA poultry condemnation certificates submitted as exhibits and offered for truth of matters stated were received from USDA Freedom of Information Act office in response to her request was sufficient to authenticate them).

On summary judgment, the proponent typically authenticates a document by preparing a declaration that establishes the foundational matters, i.e., the witness's personal knowledge as to the identity of the proffered evidence and that it is what the proponent says it is. See U.S. v Dibble (9th Cir 1970) 429 F2d 598, 602 ("a writing is not authenticated simply by attaching it to an affidavit"; foundation is laid by testimony of witness with personal knowledge of facts who attests to identity, execution, and delivery of document).

The Evidence Code sets forth several methods for authenticating documents, including:

- Testimony of anyone who saw the writing made or executed (Evid C §1413);
- Evidence that the opposing party has admitted its authenticity or acted on it as if it were genuine (Evid C §1414);
- Testimony confirming the authenticity of the signature or handwriting by a witness personally familiar with the handwriting, by a handwriting expert, or by the trier of fact (Evid C §§1415-1418);
- Evidence that the writing was received in response to a communication sent to the claimed author (Evid C §1420); or
- Evidence that it states matters unlikely to be known by anyone other than the purported author (Evid C §1421).

Authentication may also be accomplished by appropriate use of discovery devices, e.g., requests for admission, interrogatories, depositions. Special rules apply to the introduction of official records. See Evid C §§1530-1532.

PRACTICE TIP: An alternative means of authenticating a signature is to request that the court compare the similarity of a signature on a contract to the signature on a verification to the answer or complaint in the court file. Evid C §1417 (trier of fact may compare handwriting that was treated as genuine by party against whom evidence offered).

For further discussion of authentication of documents, see California Summary Judgment chap 5 (Cal CEB 2010).

§36.138 2. The Secondary Evidence Rule

Under the "secondary evidence rule," the content of a writing may be proved by otherwise admissible secondary evidence unless (Evid C §1521(a)):

- A genuine dispute exists regarding material terms of the writing and justice requires exclusion, or
- Admission would be unfair.

In the context of a summary judgment motion, secondary evidence issues arise whenever a party seeks to rely on deposition testimony, responses to interrogatories and request for admissions, or copies of documents.

When the original document is not available and an objection to secondary evidence on one of the two grounds provided in §1521 is anticipated, an explanatory statement should be added to the appropriate declarations to show that the secondary evidence is admissible under that code section. For example, if presenting a copy of a check at trial, the declaration should state: "On January 4, 2010, the defendant met me at work. He stated that he had the check, which is the document in question, and did not dispute that it was a check from me to him in the amount of $5000."

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid problems with the secondary evidence rule, serve requests for admissions as to the genuiness of documentary evidence before filing or opposing a summary judgment motion. This will avoid any objections to your use of copies and will be the only authentication needed.

On printed representations of computer information or computer programs, see Evid C §1552. On printed representations of images stored on a video or digital medium, see Evid C §1553. For detailed discussion of the secondary evidence, see California Summary Judgment chap 5 (Cal CEB 2010).

§36.139 3. Hearsay Rule

Unless it falls under a hearsay exception (see §§36.140-36.143), evidence is inadmissible hearsay (Evid C §1200) if it:

- Consists of an out-of-court statement made by someone other than the testifying witness; and
- Is offered for the truth of the matter stated.

If the mere existence of a document, and not the truth of its contents, is essential to the fact to be shown in a summary judgment motion, no hearsay problem arises. See Evid C §1200. However, when a document is used in a summary judgment motion to prove the truth of the matters stated in it, the hearsay problem must be overcome.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.140 a. Exceptions to Hearsay Rule

When a document is used in a summary judgment motion to prove the truth of the matters stated in it, the hearsay problem must be overcome, usually by the use of one of the exceptions to the hearsay rule. See Evid C §§1201-1380.

On exceptions to the hearsay rule, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 2 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

§36.141 b. Exceptions Commonly Arising in Summary Judgment Context

Two of the most commonly used hearsay exceptions in the summary judgment context are those for business records (see §36.142) and official records (see §36.143).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.142 (1) Business Records Exception

For a document to fall within the business records exception to the hearsay rule, it must be shown that (Evid C §1271):

- The writing was made in the regular course of business at or near the time of the act, condition, or event;
- The custodian or other qualified witness attests to the record's identity and the mode of its preparation; and
- The sources of information and method and time of preparation were such as to indicate the record's trustworthiness.

For purposes of this exception, "business" is defined broadly to include every kind of business, profession, occupation, or calling; government activities; and various operations of for-profit and nonprofit institutions. Evid C §1270. See, e.g., Garibay v Hemmat (2008) 161 CA4th 735, 741, 74 CR3d 715 (although hospital and medical records are hearsay, they can be admitted under business records exception to hearsay rule).

The purpose of these writings is to prepare a record of an act or event pertaining to the business, not to provide evidence; the fact that they may become relevant evidence does not change the purpose for which they were prepared. People v Taulton (2005) 129 CA4th 1218, 29 CR3d 203 (prison records are business records). See California Trial Objections §19.26 (Cal CEB Annual).

PRACTICE TIP: To make the requisite showing under the business records exception, use the declaration of the custodian or other qualified witness.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.143 (2) Official Records Exception

For a document to fall within the official records exception to the hearsay rule, it must be shown that it is a writing made (Evid C §1280):

- As a record of an act, condition, or event,
- By and within the scope of duty of a public employee,
- At or near the time of the act, condition, or event recorded, and
- With use of information sources and a method and time of preparation that indicate its trustworthiness.

People v Martinez (2000) 22 C4th 106, 119, 91 CR2d 687 (uncertified computer printouts as evidence that defendant was habitual offender admissible under official records exception). See People v Delgado (2008) 43 C4th 1059, 77 CR3d 259 (abstract of judgment was sufficient to prove prior felony conviction); Hildebrand v DMV (2007) 152 CA4th 1562, 1570, 62 CR3d 234 (police officer's sworn statement and unsworn arrest report were admissible in DMV administrative hearing as public employee records, even to extent each reported fire captain's observations that defendant was driving).

PRACTICE TIP: Unlike the business-records exception (see §36.142), the exception for official records under Evid C §1280 does not require that the custodian or other qualified witness testify about the identity and mode of preparation of the writing itself. See Comment to Evid C §1280.

On the official records exception generally, see California Trial Objections §19.27 (Cal CEB Annual); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 5 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

§36.144 4. Incorporation of Documents by Reference in Declaration

Portions of a pleading or document filed in the case, or any other paper in the court file, may be incorporated by reference into a declaration. Raczynski v Judge (1986) 186 CA3d 504, 509 n3, 230 CR 741.

Because facts in a declaration must conform to requirements for oral testimony, the declarant must have personal knowledge of any facts that are in documents before they may be adopted into the declaration. Rincon v Burbank Unified Sch. Dist. (1986) 178 CA3d 949, 955, 224 CR 88.

If pleadings or documents are incorporated by reference, copies of the incorporated material should be attached directly to the declaration, and the specific pertinent portions should be referenced in the declaration, memorandum, and separate statements of undisputed facts. Failure to attach exhibits to a declaration referred to in that declaration may preclude entry of summary judgment. See Dugar v Happy Tiger Records, Inc. (1974) 41 CA3d 811, 815, 116 CR 412.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should routinely review the moving papers before filing to ensure that all documents are properly attached. If a declaration was mistakenly filed without exhibits that were incorporated by reference, a new declaration by the same declarant should be filed.

§36.145 VIII. OBJECTING TO EVIDENCE

When deciding a motion for summary judgment, a court determines whether a triable issue of material fact exists from the evidence set out in the parties' papers, "except that to which objections have been made and sustained by the court." CCP §437c(c). "Evidentiary objections are an integral part of the summary judgment process." City of Long Beach v Farmers & Merchants Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 780, 782, 97 CR2d 140. The summary judgment statute presupposes that objections will be made to evidence submitted in support of or in opposition to the motion. If objections are not made at the hearing, they are waived. CCP §437c(b)(5).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.146 A. Raise Objections or Waive Them

Objections on every available ground must be made or waived, just as at trial. Very few judges will initiate objections, just as at trial. Evidentiary objections that are not made at the hearing are waived (CCP §437c(b)(5)), as are objections to declarations (and affidavits) or a declarant's personal knowledge or competence to testify (CCP §437c(d)).

WARNING: Failure to object will be taken as agreement that the evidence is relevant and admissible, meaning that counsel admits, on behalf of his or her client(s), that the opposing party has made a truthful and evidentiary showing as to the fact(s) in question.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.147 1. Obtain Trial Court's Ruling on Objections

A trial court has a duty to consider all evidentiary objections and to rule on their merits. Vineyard Springs Estates, LLC v Superior Court (Wyatt) (2004) 120 CA4th 633, 642, 15 CR3d 587; Sambrano v City of San Diego (2001) 94 CA4th 225, 234, 114 CR2d 151. See CCP §437c(c), (q). If a trial court fails to rule on evidentiary objections, then the objections are ordinarily deemed waived on appeal, and the appellate court will consider all evidence submitted, including that to which objections have been made. See Sharon P. v Arman Ltd. (1999) 21 C4th 1181, 1186 n1, 91 CR2d 35, disapproved on another ground in Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 854 n19, 107 CR2d 841. See also Ann M. v Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 C4th 666, 670 n1, 25 CR2d 137; City of Long Beach v Farmers & Merchants Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 780, 783, 97 CR2d 140. See §§36.163-36.167.

Counsel should obtain rulings on at least the key objections central to the client's case. If a trial court does not rule on evidentiary objections before ruling on the motion, then counsel should emphasize to the court its duty to rule on the objections. If the court grants the motion without having ruled on the objections, then counsel should send a letter to the court, reminding the judge that all evidence will come in on appeal and potentially undermine the court's ruling on the motion. If the court still fails to rule on the objections, then counsel should consider taking a writ to compel the judge to rule.

NOTE: The Third Appellate District has ruled that a writ of mandate may be issued to compel a trial court to rule on evidentiary objections and to reconsider its ruling on the motion after making the evidentiary rulings. See Vineyard Springs Estates, LLC v Superior Court (Wyatt) (2004) 120 CA4th 633, 642, 15 CR3d 587.

PRACTICE TIP: The court may rule orally on objections from the bench during the hearing. As long as the rulings are on the record, they can be reviewed on appeal. Ask the court to rule on each objection so that the record is clear that counsel is not waiving an objection should the court fail to rule on it.

On format for proposed order and court's ruling on evidentiary objections, see §§36.224, 36.226.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.148 2. Obtain Express Ruling on Each Objection

One case, Biljac Assocs. v First Interstate Bank (1990) 218 CA3d 1410, 1419, 267 CR 819, has held that a trial court may refuse to rule expressly on each and every objection, and instead could simply state that it would disregard inadmissible or incompetent evidence in ruling on the motion. Biljac was disapproved by the same court that decided it (see Demps v San Francisco Hous. Auth. (2007) 149 CA4th 564, 566, 57 CR3d 204 (First District, Division Two)), and other appellate districts have also rejected it (see Sambrano v City of San Diego (2001) 94 CA4th 225, 234, 114 CR2d 151 (Fourth District, Division One); Swat-Fame, Inc. v Goldstein (2002) 101 CA4th 613, 623, 124 CR2d 556, overruled on other grounds in Zamos v Stroud (2004) 32 C4th 958, 973, 12 CR3d 54 (Second District, Division Seven)).

WARNING: Review is currently pending in Reid v Google, Inc. (review granted Jan. 30, 2008, S158965; superseded opinion at 155 CA4th 1342, 66 CR3d 744), which followed Biljac in holding that the trial court was not required to rule expressly on each and every objection when considering the admissibility of statistical evidence of age discrimination. 155 CA4th at 1356.

On format for proposed order and court's ruling on evidentiary objections, see §36.85.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.149 3. Methods of Objecting

The procedure for making objections and ensuring the existence of a proper record is provided in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1352 and 3.1354. See City of Long Beach v Farmers & Merchants Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 780, 782, 97 CR2d 140. Objections may be submitted in writing before the hearing (see §§36.82-36.85) or made orally at hearing (see §36.86).

PRACTICE TIP: Written objections allow the court sufficient time to review the evidence offered and objections made. This is especially important in large cases with complicated facts or complex claims. Because the court's decision is based on evidence (or lack thereof), the best practice is to submit written objections so the court can consider the objections before rendering a tentative decision.

On format of written objections, see §§36.83.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.150 B. Common Objections to Evidence

Counsel should be alert to the fact that different sources of evidence may give rise to differing objections. For example, a declaration may be objectionable based on form (e.g., failure to declare that the declaration is submitted under California law) and substance (e.g., declaration relied on inadmissible double hearsay).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should review all the evidence submitted in opposition to the client's case and evaluate whether a valid ground exists for excluding it, then decide whether and how to object to it. When several objections can be made to the same evidence, evaluate them and organize the response so that the objections that are most specific and important to the complete exclusion of the objectionable material are stated first and supported by appropriate authority and argument, followed by additional grounds for objection, including those that may not completely exclude the evidence but may limit its use in the proceeding.

For further discussion of objections to evidence, see California Summary Judgment chap 9 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.151 1. Attacking Form and Sufficiency of Evidence

The opposing party should object if the form or sufficiency of evidence supporting the motion is inadequate. CCP §437c(c). Some objections to consider include relevance, incompetence, hearsay, and insufficient foundation. See California Summary Judgment §9.17 (Cal CEB 2010).

On objections based on form and sufficiency of the evidence, see California Trial Objections (Cal CEB Annual). On the law and issues associated with form and sufficiency of the evidence, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chaps 24-25 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.152 2. Attacking Expert Qualifications

To meet their burdens of production and persuasion (see §§36.14-36.25), parties regularly submit expert declarations in summary judgment proceedings. One way to attack an expert witness declaration is to object to the person's qualifications as an expert. To challenge the qualifications of an expert, a party must lodge an objection to the declaration and then the trial court must determine the witness's competency as a matter of fact.

PRACTICE TIP: In most cases, an expert can be easily qualified. Counsel's time may be better spent attacking the expert's opinion rather than the expert's qualifications. See California Summary Judgment §9.19 (Cal CEB 2010).

On qualifications to testify as an expert, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook §§30.16-30.25 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). On objections to expert and other witness opinions, see California Trial Objections §§20.6-20.22 (Cal CEB Annual). On use of expert witnesses in summary judgment proceedings, see California Expert Witness Guide, chap 16 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.153 3. Attacking Expert Opinion

An expert's opinion may be attacked on several grounds. Under Evid C §801(a), an expert opinion is admissible if the subject matter is sufficiently beyond common experience that the expert's opinion would assist the trier of fact. Depending on the subject matter involved, it may be possible to argue that the trier of fact is able to draw its own conclusions from the facts, and thus expert testimony is not necessary. See Kotla v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2004) 115 CA4th 283, 291, 8 CR3d 898.

Objecting to an expert's opinion on the ground that the opinion is on an ultimate issue in the case is not a valid objection. Evid C §805. The opinion may, however, be objectionable on other grounds, such as an expert opinion on a question of law. Towns v Davidson (2007) 147 CA4th 461, 472, 54 CR3d 568 (expert offered only legal conclusions).

On opinion testimony by expert witnesses, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 30 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). On objecting to improper opinion testimony, see California Trial Objections, chap 20 (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.154 4. Attacking Lay Opinion

A lay witness is permitted to offer opinion testimony when the opinion is rationally based on the witness's perception, helpful to a clear understanding of the witness' testimony, or otherwise permitted by law. Evid C §§702, 800. Lay opinion is permitted on certain subjects, such as speed, distance, and value of the witness's own property. A lay witness's opinion may be excluded if it is not based on the witness's perception of the facts. Evid C §702.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.155 5. Attacking Speculative Evidence

If a witness does not have personal knowledge of the facts or is not qualified to give an opinion, then the witness's testimony is considered speculative. See Evid C 702, 800(a). A court is not bound by an expert opinion that is speculative, conjectural, or based on an incorrect legal theory. Saelzler v Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 C4th 763, 775, 107 CR2d 617.

On objections based on speculation, see California Trial Objections, chap 16 (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.156 6. Attacking Business and Official Records

The business and official records exceptions to the hearsay rule permit a party to introduce into evidence written records of business or official proceedings as long as the records were made in the regular course of business, at or near the time of the act, condition, or event, and the sources of information, as well as the method and time of preparation, indicate trustworthiness. Evid C §§1272 (business records), 1280 (official records). Although the records themselves may qualify under an exception to the hearsay rule, the contents of the records may be subject to other objections, such as irrelevancy, privilege, lack of personal knowledge, and secondary evidence.

On hearsay objections generally, see California Trial Objections chap 19 (Cal CEB Annual). On business records and official records, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook chaps 4-5 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.157 7. Attacking Secondary Evidence

The secondary evidence rule allows proof of the content of a writing by otherwise admissible secondary evidence. Evid C §1521(a), (d). The rule applies to evidence offered to prove the content of a writing, not to prove some other fact. Secondary evidence may be excluded in two situations: (1) when a genuine dispute exists as to the content of the writing and justice requires exclusion; or (2) when admission of secondary evidence would be unfair. Evid C §1521(a)(1)-(2). On use of secondary evidence generally, see Dart Indus., Inc. v Commercial Union Ins. Co. (2002) 28 C4th 1059, 1068, 124 CR2d 142.

By the terms of the §1521, secondary evidence must comply with other rules of evidence, including authentication and the hearsay rule. Even if the secondary evidence cannot be excluded under Evid C §1521, counsel should review the evidence carefully to ascertain whether it can be excluded under any other evidentiary rule.

On secondary evidence generally, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook chap 32 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). On objecting to secondary evidence see California Trial Objections chap 24 (Cal CEB Annual).

§36.158 8. Attacking Moving Party's Credibility

The opposing party cannot simply attack the moving party's credibility. The moving party's motion for summary judgment "may not be denied on grounds of credibility or for want of cross-examination of witnesses furnishing affidavits or declarations in support of the summary judgment." CCP §437c(e). If the opposing papers merely assert the opponent's right to a jury trial and do not contain any evidence on the issues raised in the motion for summary judgment, that opposition is insufficient to defeat the motion. See Shepherd v Jones (1982) 136 CA3d 1049, 1062, 186 CR 708 (opposition to moving party's declarations alleging reliance on advice of counsel did not challenge facts asserted or allege additional facts; rather, opposition simply asserted that issue could not be decided in summary judgment proceeding).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.159 9. Evidence of State of Mind

In some instances, the opposing party cannot reasonably be expected to produce controverting evidence. For example, if the issue is the moving party's state of mind, controverting evidence is difficult or impossible to gather. Under such circumstances, the court has the discretion to deny summary judgment so that the trier of fact can judge the moving party's credibility. CCP §437c(e); See Viner v Sweet (2004) 117 CA4th 1218, 1230, 12 CR3d 533 (CCP §437c(e)) (authorizes trial court discretion to deny summary judgment motion when moving party's burden is to prove witness's state of mind and only evidence submitted is testimony from that witness).

IX. THE HEARING AND ORAL ARGUMENT

§36.160 A. Hearing Requirement

A "hearing" means an oral hearing at which counsel has "the opportunity to persuade the court and respond to its inquiries." Mediterranean Constr. Co. v State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (1998) 66 CA4th 257, 260, 77 CR2d 781. A hearing on summary judgment involves the contemporaneous presence (in person or electronically) of the parties and a judge. 66 CA4th at 260.

NOTE: Courts have broad discretion to determine that a party waived the right to oral argument by failing to invoke the procedure in a timely and proper manner. Brannon v Superior Court, supra. Similarly, in the Ninth Circuit, district courts may promulgate local rules requiring a party to request oral argument on a summary judgment motion or have it considered waived (except if the refusal to hear oral argument would unfairly prejudice a party). Mahon v Credit Bureau, Inc. (9th Cir 1999) 171 F3d 1197.

If the trial court refuses to allow for oral argument on summary judgment, the aggrieved party may seek review of that decision by petition for a peremptory writ. Mediterranean Constr. Co., 66 CA4th 267 n12.

On challenging a trial court's decision by writ review, see California Civil Writ Practice chap 11 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008); Handling Civil Writs in the Courts of Appeal (Cal CEB Action Guide February 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.161 B. Tentative Ruling

Most courts offer a tentative ruling procedure that allows the court, before the hearing, to inform the parties of a tentative decision based on its review of the submitted papers. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1308. See, e.g., Riverside Ct R 2.0016; San Francisco Ct R 8.3.

A court that follows a tentative ruling procedure must state that in its local rules and must specify (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1308(c)):

- The telephone number or website for obtaining the tentative rulings; and
- The time by which the rulings will be available.

When the tentative ruling is against a party, that party may contest the tentative ruling by requesting a hearing. The local or departmental rules may specify procedures by which counsel must contest the ruling, e.g., through the court's website or by leaving a voicemail message with the department in which the hearing will take place after notice to all parties.

Generally, a party should contest the tentative ruling if:

- Oral argument may change the court's decision;
- The record needs to be clarified; or
- The grounds for the court's decision are unclear from its tentative ruling.

Failure to contest a tentative ruling will cause it to become the court's order. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 8.3(E) (if no party appears, "the tentative ruling will be adopted").

On tentative rulings and preparation for hearing, see California Summary Judgment §§10.5-10.23 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.162 C. Oral Argument

Oral argument is required for summary judgment motions. Brannon v Superior Court (2004) 114 CA4th 1203, 8 CR3d 491 (trial court may not properly determine summary judgment motion without permitting opportunity for oral argument); Gwartz v Superior Court (1999) 71 CA4th 480, 83 CR2d 865 (trial court's order denying summary judgment motion without hearing was vacated and remanded); see Mediterranean Constr. Co. v State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (1998) 66 CA4th 257, 262, 77 CR2d 781 (noting repeated references in CCP §437c to "hearing").

At the hearing, counsel should listen carefully to and address the court's concerns, comments, or questions and discuss any matter not already covered in the legal memorandums.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.163 1. Evidentiary Objections at Hearing

Counsel may make evidentiary objections orally at the hearing. See CCP §437c(b)(5), (d)). If counsel intends to do so, however, he or she must arrange to have a court reporter present at the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1352(2). See §36.86.

Evidentiary objections not made at the hearing are deemed waived. CCP §437c(b)(5). Similarly, objections to declarations based on failure to comply with CCP §437c(d) must be made at the hearing or will be deemed waived. CCP §437c(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Preserving Issues for Appeal

§36.164 a. Ask for Express Ruling on Evidentiary Objections

Counsel should ask the court for an express ruling on evidentiary objections. If a party makes evidentiary objections (see §§36.82-36.85) but the trial court does not expressly rule on them, the objections are ordinarily deemed waived and are not preserved on appeal. When a ruling on an objection is important to the case, counsel should ask for, and actively pursue, an express and/or written ruling at the hearing. On court's failure to rule on evidentiary objections, see §36.167.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.165 (1) Procedure for Making Oral Objections to Evidence

As an alternative to filing written objections (see §§36.82-36.85), the opposing party may raise evidentiary objections at the summary judgment hearing. See CCP §437c(b)(5). Presenting written objections before the hearing is almost always preferable to making oral objections. If oral objections must be made, however, the attorney should prepare them before the hearing and read them into the record.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.166 (2) Court Reporter Required if Making Oral Objections

The objecting party must arrange for a court reporter to attend the hearing to record the objections for the record. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1352.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.167 (3) Court's Failure to Rule on Objections

When a trial judge fails to rule on summary judgment or adjudication motion evidentiary objections, the objections are deemed waived on appeal. See, e.g., Sharon P. v Arman Ltd. (1999) 21 C4th 1181, 1186 n1, 91 CR2d 35, disapproved on other grounds in Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 107 CR2d 841; Ann M. v Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 C4th 666, 670 n1, 25 CR2d 137.

One clear exception to this rule is when it would have been a fruitless or idle act to continually interpose repeated requests for rulings; when this occurs, written evidentiary objections may be deemed preserved for appellate review. City of Long Beach v Farmers & Merchants Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 780, 785, 97 CR2d 140 (defense counsel twice orally raised issue in court of securing ruling on previously filed written evidentiary objections; third oral request for rulings would have been fruitless). On options in appellate court if trial court does not rule on evidentiary objections, see §§36.202-36.204.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.168 b. Ask Court to Specify Findings for Order

When denying a motion for summary judgment based on the existence of a triable issue as to one or more material facts, the court must, by written or oral order, specify the material fact(s) raised by the motion. CCP §437c(g). The court must specifically refer to the evidence proffered in support of and in opposition to the motion that indicates that a triable controversy exists.

When granting a motion for summary judgment on the ground that there is no triable issue of material fact, the court must, by written or oral order, specify the reasons for its determination. CCP §437c(g). The order must specifically refer to the evidence proffered in support of and in opposition to the motion indicating that no triable issue exists. The court must record its determination by court reporter or written order. On decision and order after hearing, see §§36.184-36.189.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.169 D. Requesting Sanctions

If it appears that any party's affidavits or declarations were made in bad faith or solely for the purpose of delay, it may be appropriate to request an order for sanctions. Under CCP §437c(j), if the court determines that affidavits were presented in bad faith or solely for purposes of delay, it must order the party presenting the affidavits to pay the other party its "reasonable expenses" caused by the affidavits. Reasonable expenses do not include attorney fees. Collins v Department of Transp. (2003) 114 CA4th 859, 864, 8 CR3d 132 (decided under former CCP §437c(i), now CCP §437c(j)). But see Winick Corp. v County Sanitation Dist. No. 2 (1986) 185 CA3d 1170, 1176, 230 CR 289 (sanctions, including attorney fees, awarded against party who submitted affidavits opposing summary judgment in bad faith based on CCP §128.5).

Before such sanctions can be imposed, the party requesting them, or the court on its own motion, must give notice and an opportunity to be heard. CCP §437c(j).

§36.170 E. Diagnostic Questions: Preparing for Hearing

Certain actions may be taken immediately before or during the hearing. Counsel should review the moving and opposing papers and be sure points such as the following have been accounted for:

1. Has the admissibility of evidence in the supporting and opposing declarations been carefully analyzed?
2. If evidence is inadmissible, can its defects be cured? If so, consider moving orally for continuance of hearing to allow this.
3. Are there evidentiary objections to opposing declarations that were not made to the court in writing? If so, be sure to raise them orally at the hearing, and arrange for a court reporter to be present to record them.
4. Have the pleadings been carefully reviewed?
5. Are there any defects that can be cured by amendment? If so, move orally for a continuance to allow an amendment.
6. Has the supporting evidence been carefully examined?
7. Are there gaps in proof that supplemental declarations can cure? If so, consider moving orally for a continuance of the hearing to allow for further discovery and presentation of supplemental declarations.

X. COURT DECISION

§36.171 A. Statutory Test

A motion for summary judgment must be granted if all the moving and opposing papers submitted "show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." CCP §437c(c); Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 850, 107 CR2d 841. Thus, if the evidence would permit a trier of fact to find for a nonmoving plaintiff under the standard of proof applicable at trial, then summary judgment must be denied, even if the trial court believes that the nonmovant would probably lose at trial. The court's role is not to predict the outcome at trial nor to weigh the evidence as if sitting as the trier of fact. The court's role is simply to decide whether the admissible evidence would permit the trier of fact to find in favor of the nonmoving party.

A similar test would appear to apply to each ruling sought by a motion for summary adjudication to eliminate any cause of action, claim for punitive damages, or affirmative defense that has no merit; to establish a cause of action to which there is no defense; or to establish that one or more defendants does or does not owe a duty to specified plaintiffs. See CCP §437c(f).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.172 1. Court Applies Three-Step Analysis

The trial court (and the appellate court reviewing a trial court ruling) applies a three-step analysis to:

- Identify issues framed by the pleadings (because, e.g., a defendant's summary judgment motion must respond to these allegations by establishing a complete defense or the absence of any factual basis for any of the plaintiff's theories);
- Decide whether facts shown in the summary judgment papers warrant judgment for the moving party and negate the opposing party's claims; and
- Decide whether the opposing party has established that any triable material fact exists.

WRI Opportunity Loans II, LLC v Cooper (2007) 154 CA4th 525, 531, 65 CR3d 205, citing Bostrom v County of San Bernadino (1995) 35 CA4th 1654, 1662, 42 CR3d 669.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.173 2. When Facts Essential to Motion Exist But Cannot Be Presented

If the affidavits submitted in opposition to a summary judgment or summary adjudication motion show that facts essential to justify the opposition may exist but cannot then be presented to the court, the court must deny the motion or order a continuance to permit the party time to obtain affidavits or take discovery. CCP §437c(h). On continuances for further discovery, see §§36.48-36.51.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.174 3. Supplemental Declarations and Late Papers

Before ruling on a summary judgment or summary adjudication motion, a court has the discretion to consider papers filed late and to afford relief for a party's "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." CCP §473(b). But see Ambrose v Michelin N. Am., Inc. (2005) 134 CA4th 1350, 1354, 37 CR3d 1 (late request for continuance due to other deadlines and concurrent obligations is not excusable neglect under §473).

CAUTION: A court is well within its discretion to refuse to consider any late filed and served papers. Do not rely on §473(b) relief in lieu of filing and serving papers on time.

If the court believes that an untimely paper prejudices the other party, it may continue a hearing on the motion and make any other appropriate orders, including an order that the responsible party pay expenses arising from the postponement. CCP §§594a, 1024; Kapitanski v Von's Grocery Co. (1983) 146 CA3d 29, 32, 193 CR 839.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.175 B. Consideration of Proffered Evidence

When ruling on a summary judgment or summary adjudication motion, a court must consider all of the evidence in the papers, except that to which objections have been made and sustained by the court. CCP §437c(c). Evidentiary objections may be made either in writing or orally at the hearing on the motion (see §§36.82-36.86), and objections not made are deemed waived. See CCP §437c(b)(5), (d). In reviewing evidentiary objections, the trial court must be guided and controlled by legal principles. Fasuyi v Permatex, Inc. (2008) 167 CA4th 681, 695, 84 CR3d 351. On appeal, the trial court is granted deference on its evidentiary rulings; the standard for review is abuse of discretion. A conclusory ruling on evidentiary objections without consideration of the individual objections lodged is an abuse of discretion. Nazir v United Airlines, Inc. (2009) 178 CA4th 243, 255, 100 CR3d 296.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.176 1. Court Must Construe Evidence in Favor of Party Opposing Motion

To safeguard the opposing party's right to trial on the merits, all doubts on the propriety of granting a summary judgment or summary adjudication motion must be resolved against the moving party. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 843, 107 CR2d 841. See Stoltenberg v Newman (2009) 179 CA4th 287, 290 n2, 101 CR3d 606, citing Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co., supra (all evidence and all inferences reasonably drawn therefrom must be viewed in light most favorable to opposing party). When the court examines the sufficiency of the evidence, the declarations or affidavits of the moving party are strictly construed and those of the opposition are liberally construed. D'Amico v Board of Med. Exam'rs (1974) 11 C3d 1, 21, 112 CR 786; Grant-Burton v Covenant Care, Inc. (2002) 99 CA4th 1361, 1369, 122 CR2d 204, citing Jackson v County of Los Angeles (1997) 60 CA4th 171, 178, 70 CR2d 96.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.177 a. Exception: When Opposing Party Repudiates Earlier Admission

The rule requiring liberal construction of the opposition's evidence does not apply if the opposing party attempts to create a conflict in the evidence by repudiating earlier admissions. Shapero v Fliegel (1987) 191 CA3d 842, 849, 236 CR 696. When the moving party uses an admission to establish a material fact, the court may disregard conflicting allegations in the opposing declarations. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Eastman (1984) 158 CA3d 562, 573, 204 CR 827 (credibility of admissions is valued so highly that controverting affidavits may be disregarded as irrelevant, inadmissible, or evasive).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.178 b. When Opposing Party Adequately Explains Conflict

Apparent contradictions between an affidavit filed in support of summary adjudication and earlier testimony, however, does not preclude consideration of the affidavit if the contradiction is satisfactorily explained in the affidavit and the explanation is corroborated by the evidence. See Niederer v Ferreira (1987) 189 CA3d 1485, 1503, 234 CR 779 (affiant's unfamiliarity with concept of assignment caused her, at her deposition, to erroneously deny that assignment had been made).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.179 2. Inferences Drawn From Evidence Presented

In ruling on a summary judgment motion, the court's consideration of evidence is not limited to the face of the documents proffered by the parties. Evidence in support of summary judgment also includes inferences deducible from the papers submitted. CCP §437c(c). All evidence must be viewed in a light most favorable to the nonmovant, and all reasonable inferences must be drawn in favor of the nonmovant. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 843, 856, 107 CR2d 841.

Inferences must be reasonably deducible. They may not be derived solely from speculation or conjecture. O'Neil v Dake (1985) 169 CA3d 1038, 215 CR 732. Inferences precluding summary judgment sometimes arise from the moving party's own declarations. See, e.g., Maxwell v Colburn (1980) 105 CA3d 180, 185, 163 CR 912 (rational inference of negligence from moving party's declaration that he was unable to stop in time to avoid hitting plaintiff).

When inferences are contradicted by other inferences, a triable issue of fact may be revealed precluding summary judgment. See Burke v Superior Court (1982) 128 CA3d 661, 180 CR 537. The court has no power in summary proceedings to weigh one inference against another or against other evidence. CCP §437c(c); Saylin v California Ins. Guar. Ass'n (1986) 179 CA3d 256, 224 CR 493.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.180 3. Uncontroverted Evidence

If the opposing party does not present controverting evidence, the court must accept the facts stated in the moving party's declarations as true for purposes of ruling on the summary judgment motion, as long as the declarant could competently testify about those facts based on personal knowledge. Leo F. Piazza Paving Co. v Foundation Constructors, Inc. (1981) 128 CA3d 583, 177 CR 268. Additionally, the court may not deny the motion on the grounds that the declarant has not been cross-examined. CCP §437c(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.181 a. Exception: When Only Proof of Fact Is Declaration of Sole Witness

When the moving party's evidence is uncontroverted, the court has discretion to refuse to grant summary judgment when the only proof of a material fact supporting the motion is the declaration of the only witness to that fact. CCP §437c(e); Overland Plumbing, Inc. v Transamerica Ins. Co. (1981) 119 CA3d 476, 483, 174 CR 1.

EXAMPLE: Sole witness to material fact. In a malpractice action against a dentist for the death of a patient under anesthesia, the dentist, in his declaration in support of summary judgment, says that he administered the proper amount of anesthesia and that the patient had been fully advised of the risks of anesthesia and consented to being anesthetized.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.182 b. Exception: When Fact Is Individual's State of Mind Established by Affirmation Only

When the moving party's evidence is uncontroverted, the court has discretion to refuse to grant summary judgment the material fact is an individual's state of mind and the only evidence offered concerning it is that individual's affirmation. CCP §437c(e).

EXAMPLE: Individual's state of mind established by affirmation only. In a lawsuit alleging fraud, the plaintiff alleges that the defendant entered into a contract with no intention to perform and the only evidence of intent offered by the defendant is his affidavit stating that he meant to perform on the contract when he entered into it.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.183 4. Court Discretion to Consider Evidence Not Presented in Moving Party's Separate Statement

The trial court has discretion to consider evidence not referenced in the separate statement in ruling on a summary judgment or summary adjudication motion, but in exercising this discretion, the court should consider due process implications. San Diego Watercrafts, Inc. v Wells Fargo Bank (2002) 102 CA4th 308, 315, 125 CR2d 499. See Fenn v Sherriff (2003) 109 CA4th 1466, 1480, 1 CR3d 185 (applying factors set out in San Diego Watercrafts, Inc. and declining to exercise discretion to look beyond separate statement in reviewing summary judgment).

The court may consider:

- Evidence filed with the separate statement but not specifically referenced (Kulesa v Castleberry (1996) 47 CA4th 103, 112, 54 CR2d 669; but see Fleet v CBS, Inc. (1996) 50 CA4th 1911, 1916 n3, 58 CR2d 645; North Coast Bus. Park v Nielsen Const Co. (1993) 17 CA4th 22, 31, 21 CR2d 104); or
- Evidence filed for the first time with the reply brief as long as the opposing party has notice and an opportunity to respond to the new material (Wall Street Network, Ltd. v New York Times Co (2008) 164 CA4th 1171, 1183, 80 CR3d 6; San Diego Watercrafts, Inc. v Wells Fargo Bank (2002) 102 CA4th 308, 315, 125 CR2d 499).

On circumstances under which court may consider evidence not in the separate statement, see California Summary Judgment §§11.16-11.18 (Cal CEB 2010).

XI. COURT ORDER

A. Preparation and Approval of Court Order

§36.184 1. Prevailing Party Usually Prepares Order

The court will usually direct the prevailing party to submit a formal order for court approval. Although a court may shift the burden of preparing the formal order onto the prevailing counsel (see Tera Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v Superior Court (1985) 170 CA3d 530, 532, 215 CR 923), the court may not abdicate its responsibility to specify the findings necessary to support its order. Carnes v Superior Court (2005) 126 CA4th 688, 692, 23 CR3d 915 (disapproving court's grant of motion without specifying the findings and reason for its decision).

It is an abuse of discretion for the trial court to direct the losing party to prepare the formal order, because it is the prevailing party who has an interest in preparing an adequate order to protect the favorable trial court ruling. Beatrice Co. v Superior Court (1986) 182 CA3d 525, 527, 227 CR 316. If the prevailing party fails to prepare or submit a formal order, however, any other party may do so. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1312(c).

For forms of order, see §§36.224-36.226.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.185 2. Timing

If a proposed order was not prepared and submitted before the hearing, and the opposing party has not waived notice or the court ordered otherwise, the prevailing party must prepare and serve the order on the opposing party within 5 days after the ruling. The opposing party has 5 days to object to the order as to form. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1312(a).

NOTE: These timing rules do not apply when the motion was unopposed and the prevailing party submitted a proposed order with its moving papers, unless otherwise ordered by the court. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1312(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Contents of Court Order

§36.186 1. When Summary Judgment Motion Is Granted

When summary judgment is granted, the court must specify the reasons for its determination by "written or oral order." CCP §437c(g). See Barton v Elexsys Int'l, Inc. (1998) 62 CA4th 1182, 1194, 73 CR2d 212 (finding that trial court's oral statement at hearing is sufficient).

PRACTICE TIP: If the order is made orally at the hearing, it must be recorded by a court reporter. CCP §437c(g).

The order must also specifically refer to the evidence in support of and, if applicable, in opposition to the motion showing no triable issue exists. CCP §437c(g). See Vineyard Springs Estates v Superior Court (2004) 120 CA4th 633, 642, 15 CR3d 587 (trial court cannot faithfully carry out mandate of §437c(g) without considering all objections to proffered evidence and ruling on their merits);

The court's failure to provide a sufficient statement of reasons is not automatic grounds for reversal, because it is the ruling's validity that is reviewable, not the grounds for it. Ace Am. Ins. Co. v Walker (2004) 121 CA4th 1017, 1027, 18 CR3d 1. See W. F. Hayward Co. v Transamerica Ins. Co. (1993) 16 CA4th 1101, 1110, 20 CR2d 468 (statement of reasons must allow for meaningful appellate review). In some cases, however, the lack of a statement of reasons may be a ground for reversal, particularly if the issues litigated through summary judgment were complex, the facts supported both the moving and opposing parties, and the court decided credibility issues. Santa Barbara Pistachio Ranch v Chowchilla Water Dist. (2001) 88 CA4th 439, 448, 105 CR2d 856.

NOTE: When summary judgment is granted, no findings are made, because no trial on the facts has taken place. Business Title Corp. v Division of Labor Law Enforcement (1976) 17 C3d 878, 882 n3, 132 CR 454; Perry v Farley Bros. Moving & Storage (1970) 6 CA3d 884, 86 CR 397.

If the court orders summary judgment on the ground that the opposing party failed to submit the required separate statement of disputed and undisputed facts under CCP §437c(b)(3), the court should state the basis of its order in the record, normally in the minute order. The appellate court will not presume that summary judgment was decided on the basis of procedural defects, rather than on the merits. Gilbertson v Osman (1986) 185 CA3d 308, 315, 229 CR 627, disapproved on other grounds in Woods v Young (1991) 53 C3d 315, 279 CR 613.

The order should include a direction that judgment be entered for the prevailing party specifying any affirmative relief.

PRACTICE TIP: Prepare and submit a proposed judgment to the court with the proposed order. Be sure to comply with any local court rules.

On requirements for an order when the court grants summary judgment motion, see California Summary Judgment §§11.21-11.25 (Cal CEB 2010). For form of order, see §36.224.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.187 2. When Summary Judgment Motion Is Denied

When a court denies summary judgment on the ground that there is a triable issue as to one or more material facts, it must, by written or oral order (CCP §437c(g)):

- Specify the material fact(s), and
- Specifically refer to the evidence proffered in support of and in opposition to the determination that a triable controversy exists.

The specificity requirement compels the trial court to focus its attention on the legal and factual issues before concluding that disputed factual issues exist, thus precluding summary judgment. Greater Irvine Credit Union v Superior Court (1986) 186 CA3d 1189, 1191, 231 CR 296 (court's order fell "far short" of required specificity). A general statement that the liability of the moving party is at issue does not assist the appellate court in reviewing the denial order. Beatrice Cos. v Superior Court (1986) 182 CA3d 525, 527, 227 CR 316.

The specificity requirement does not apply, however, if summary judgment is denied on the ground that the moving party failed to meet the burden of proof or for procedural reasons (e.g., failure to comply with applicable local rules).

NOTE: Issues not specified in the order are not foreclosed at trial. That is, disputed issues specified in the order denying summary judgment are not necessarily the only issues in the case left to be decided at trial. The court is not required by the statute to list all disputed factual issues in the order, only "one or more" such issues. CCP §437c(g).

A reviewing court must vacate orders denying summary judgment that fail to comply with CCP §437c(g). See Young v Superior Court (1986) 179 CA3d 28, 33, 224 CR 405 (court vacated order denying summary judgment because order failed to refer specifically to evidence proffered in support of and in opposition to motion indicating that triable controversy existed).

For form of order, see §36.226. On requirements for an order when the court denies summary judgment motion, see California Summary Judgment §§11.26-11.29 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.188 3. When Summary Adjudication Motion Is Granted

In an order granting summary adjudication, a court must specify its reasons and refer to the evidence, just as it would in an order granting or denying summary judgment. CCP §437c(g). See §36.173.

On requirements for an order when the court grants summary adjudication motion, see California Summary Judgment §§11.30-11.32 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.189 4. When Summary Adjudication Motion Is Denied

When a court denies summary adjudication, the court should specify the material facts as to which there is a triable issue, including references to supporting and opposing evidence. See CCP §437c(g) ("[t]he court shall also state its reasons for any other determination").

On orders granting summary judgment and summary adjudication, see also §§36.173, 36.175. For sample orders, see §§36.224-36.226. On requirements for an order when the court denies summary adjudication motion, see California Summary Judgment §§11.34-11.35 (Cal CEB 2010).

5. Obtaining Attorney Fees and Sanctions

§36.190 a. Contractual Attorney Fees

If a contract provides for attorney fees to enforce the contract, the prevailing party is entitled to attorney fees whether or not he or she is the party specified in the contract. See Scott Co. v Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1103, 86 CR2d 614 (CC §1717 requires that any contractual provision for attorney fees to "prevailing party" must be applied mutually, even if contract specifies that only one party may recover fees); FDIC v Dintino (2008) 167 CA4th 333, 358, 84 CR3d 38 (defendant was prevailing party because he prevailed on only contract-based cause of action). On contractual attorney fee awards, see California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 4 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010).

Special rules apply to the definition of "prevailing party" on a summary judgment motion and its appeal. One court held, despite CC §1717, that attorney fees (Presley v Whelan (1983) 146 CA3d 959, 196 CR 1):

- Cannot be awarded to a party who wins appellate reversal of a summary judgment while the litigation is continuing;
- Can be awarded to a plaintiff who succeeds in reversing summary judgment on appeal and then proceeds to win final judgment (as long as there is a contract under CC §1717 entitling the plaintiff to attorney fees on appeal); and
- Can be awarded to a defendant who ultimately prevails, as provided by the contract, but a plaintiff who succeeded earlier in reversing summary judgment is not entitled to any right of offset.

NOTE: The Presley court reasoned that to allow an offset would discourage the efficient resolution of litigation by use of motions for summary judgment and would require the court to review all interim procedural rulings in the case. 146 CA3d at 963. An offset would be allowed, however, for the expense of frivolous motions made by the prevailing party before conclusion of the suit under CCP §128.7.

On the prevailing party concept, see California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 2 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010). For further discussion of procedure for obtaining attorney fees, see California Summary Judgment §§11.37-11.39 (Cal CEB 2010); California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chap 26 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995); California Civil Appellate Practice chap 20 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.191 b. Sanctions for Bad Faith Affidavits

Under CCP §437c(j), if the court determines that affidavits were presented in bad faith or solely for purposes of delay, it must order the party presenting the affidavits to pay the other party its "reasonable expenses" caused by the filing of the affidavits. See Collins v Department of Transp. (2003) 114 CA4th 859, 864, 8 CR3d 132 (reasonable expenses allowed as sanctions under the summary judgment statute do not include attorney fees). But see Winick Corp. v County Sanitation Dist. No. 2 (1986) 185 CA3d 1170, 1176, 230 CR 289 (sanctions, including attorney fees, awarded against party who submitted affidavits opposing summary judgment in bad faith based on CCP §128.5).

NOTE: Because CCP §437c(j) is based on Fed R Civ P 56(g), applicable federal cases are persuasive authority for California courts; however, federal courts have been reluctant to find bad faith. See, e.g., Sonobond Corp. v Uthe Technol., Inc. (ND Cal 1970) 314 F Supp 878.

Before sanctions can be imposed, the party requesting them, or the court on its own motion, must give notice and an opportunity to be heard. CCP §437c(j).

PRACTICE TIP: It is rare for courts to award sanctions under §437c(j), because bad faith or intentional delay is difficult to prove. The determination of whether declarations are presented in bad faith frequently cannot be made until after the summary judgment motion has been denied and a trial is conducted in which the evidence reveals the bad faith of the party presenting them. Given the difficulty of winning sanctions motions and the already overcrowded motion calendars, counsel may choose not to pursue sanctions except in extreme cases.

§36.192 XII. CHALLENGING THE COURT'S ORDER

After losing the trial court's ruling on a motion for summary judgment or adjudication, a party must decide whether to challenge the decision. The losing party may challenge the decision by means of various trial court procedures, or by appellate review via writ or appeal.

For detailed discussion of each of the losing party's options to challenge the court's ruling, see California Summary Judgment chap 12 (Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

A. When Motion for Summary Judgment Is Granted

§36.193 1. Trial Court Options

When a summary judgment motion is granted, the opposing party may challenge the grant directly in the trial court by the following motions:

- Motion for reconsideration (see California Summary Judgment §§12.3-12.6 (Cal CEB 2010));
- Motion for a new trial (see Summary Judgment §§12.8-12.10);
- Motion for relief under CCP §473 (see Summary Judgment §§12.11-12.14); or
- Motion or separate action to set aside the judgment due to extrinsic fraud or mistake (see Summary Judgment §§12.15-12.17).

In addition to the parties' motions for reconsideration under §1008(a), courts have inherent authority, on their own motion, to reevaluate their own interim rulings at any time before entry of judgment, and can reconsider a previously denied motion for summary judgment or adjudication sua sponte despite the absence of new facts or law. Le Francois v Goel (2005) 35 C4th 1094, 1107, 29 CR3d 249. But see Schachter v Citigroup, Inc. (2005) 126 CA4th 726, 23 CR3d 920 (court's inherent power to correct its own rulings does not excuse party from complying with requirements of CCP §437c(f)(2)).

See chart summarizing post-ruling options and timing in §§36.211-36.212.

2. Appellate Court Review

§36.194 a. Judgment on Motion for Summary Judgment Is Appealable

An order granting a motion for summary judgment is a nonappealable interim order (see CCP §904.1(a)(1); 9 Witkin, California Procedure, Appeal §95 (5th ed 2008)), but an appeal does lie from the judgment entered on that order. CCP §437c(m); Fraser-Yamor Agency, Inc. v County of Del Norte (1977) 68 CA3d 201, 207, 137 CR 118.

By statutory definition (see CCP §577), a judgment is the "final determination of the rights of the parties." Griset v Fair Political Practices Comm'n (2001) 25 C4th 688, 697, 107 CR2d 149. Thus, a summary judgment in favor of a plaintiff/cross-defendant on the cross-complaint is not final until the claims raised by the complaint against the defendant/cross-complainant are resolved.

NOTE: Despite the plain rule that an order granting summary judgment is not appealable (see §12.18), there are instances in which courts have construed such an order as a "final judgment," or treated an appeal from a nonappealable order as an appeal from a subsequent judgment, so that an appeal can go forward. See Nystrom v First Nat'l Bank (1978) 81 CA3d 759, 762, 146 CR 711 (court of appeal treated order granting summary judgment as appealable final judgment).

In other instances, courts have chosen to treat a notice of appeal from an order granting summary judgment as a writ petition. See, e.g., Jacobs-Zorne v Superior Court (1996) 46 CA4th 1064, 1072, 54 CR2d 385.

§36.195 b. Time to File Notice of Appeal

An attorney who wants to appeal from the grant of a summary judgment must file a notice of appeal on or before the earliest of (Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a)(1)-(3)):

- 60 days after the superior court clerk serves the party filing the notice of appeal a document titled "Notice of Entry" of judgment or a file-stamped copy of the judgment, showing the date that either was served;
- 60 days after the party filing the notice of appeal serves or is served by a party with a document titled "Notice of Entry" of judgment or a file-stamped copy of the judgment, accompanied by proof of service; or
- 180 days after entry of judgment.

PRACTICE TIP: Service of a notice of appeal may be made by any permitted method, including electronic service. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a)(4).

For purposes of Cal Rules of Ct 8.104, the date of entry of an appealable order is the date it is entered in the permanent minutes unless the minute order directs that a written order be prepared, in which case the entry date is the date the signed order is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(d)(2). For appealable orders not entered into the permanent minutes, the entry date is the date the signed order is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(d)(3).

NOTE: A written order prepared under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1312 or similar local rule is not considered an order prepared by direction of a minute order. Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(d)(2).

WARNING: The time period for filing a notice of appeal is jurisdictional. The appellate court must dismiss an appeal that is filed after the expiration of the notice period.

On the time for filing the notice of appeal, see California Civil Appellate Practice §§7.25-7.43 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

§36.196 c. Scope of Review

The general rules relating to the scope of appellate review usually apply to summary judgment. For example, an argument or theory will generally not be considered if it is raised for the first time on appeal, unless it is a question of law to be applied to undisputed facts. See, e.g., DiCola v White Bros. Performance Prods., Inc. (2008) 158 CA4th 666, 676, 69 CR3d 888; American Continental Ins. Co. v C & Z Timber Co. (1987) 195 CA3d 1271, 1281, 241 CR 466.

In addition, theories not fully developed or factually presented to the trial court cannot create a "triable issue" on appeal (see, e.g., National Indem. Co. v Manley (1975) 53 CA3d 126, 133, 125 CR 513), and issues raised and then abandoned in the trial court cannot be considered on appeal. See Chesney v Gresham (1976) 64 CA3d 120, 131, 134 CR 238 (some allegations in plaintiff's complaint might be construed as effort to plead actual fraud, but there was no suggestion of actual fraud in other papers submitted in opposition to defendant's summary judgment motion; thus, court of appeal found that plaintiff waived issue).

NOTE: There is an important exception to ordinary appellate rules in that an appellate court may not reverse summary judgment with directions to the trial court to enter judgment for the other party unless a cross-motion for summary judgment was made from which that party has taken an appeal. See Dvorin v Appellate Dep't of Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 648, 650, 125 CR 771. To permit such a judgment would deny the original moving party the right to allege or produce additional facts justifying a trial of factual issues. 15 C3d at 651.

§36.197 d. Standard of Review

On appeal from an order granting summary judgment, the appellate court determines de novo whether a triable issue of material fact exists and whether the moving party is entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. See CCP §437c(c); Merrill v Navegar, Inc. (2001) 26 C4th 465, 476, 110 CR2d 370; Nazir v United Airlines, Inc. (2009) 178 CA4th 243, 254, 100 CR3d 296. The appellate court reviews the trial court's ruling, not its rationale. Silva v Lucky Stores, Inc. (1998) 65 CA4th 256, 261, 76 CR2d 382.

NOTE: It does not follow from the fact that summary judgments are reviewed de novo that the parties may stipulate that a summary judgment would have been granted, when none has been made, and when case law, statutes, and court rules provide otherwise, and seek review of the so stipulated "judgment." Magana Cathcart McCarthy v CB Richard Ellis, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 106, 122, 94 CR3d 109.

The court of appeal considers all evidence the parties have offered in connection with the motion "except that to which objections have been made and sustained." Guz v Bechtel Nat'l, Inc. (2000) 24 C4th 317, 334, 100 CR2d 352, citing Artiglio v Corning Inc. (1998) 18 C4th 604, 612, 76 CR2d 479.

NOTE: In Mamou v Trendwest Resorts, Inc. (2008) 165 CA4th 686, 711, 81 CR3d 406, the court of appeal noted that Guz has been erroneously interpreted as requiring the appellate court to give conclusive effect to the trial court's treatment of the evidence. If a court admits patently inadmissible evidence over a proper objection, the appellate court must disregard the evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.198 e. Review of Evidence

Although as a general rule an appellate court reviews a trial court's decision to grant summary judgment de novo (see §36.196), the court of appeal reviews the trial court's rulings on evidentiary objections for abuse of discretion. Walker v Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2002) 98 CA4th 1158, 1168, 121 CR2d 79. But see City of S. Pasadena v Department of Transp. (1994) 29 CA4th 1280, 1288, 35 CR2d 113 (incorrect to use abuse of discretion standard outside of review of discretionary decision to deny summary judgment under CCP §437c(e)).

In reviewing the evidence presented in bringing and opposing the summary judgment motion, the appellate court (Herberg v California Inst. of the Arts (2002) 101 CA4th 142, 148, 124 CR2d 1):

- Strictly construes the moving party's evidence;
- Liberally construes the opposing party's evidence; and
- Accepts as undisputed only the portions of the moving party's evidence that are uncontradicted.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.199 (1) Limited to Separate Statement

On review of a motion for summary judgment, the relevant facts are limited to those in the parties' statements of undisputed facts that are supported by affidavits and declarations, to the extent those facts have evidentiary support. See CCP §437c(b); West v Sundown Little League, Inc. (2002) 96 CA4th 351, 362, 116 CR2d 849. Facts not contained in the separate statements do not exist. Lewis v County of Sacramento (2001) 93 CA4th 107, 112, 113 CR2d 90.

On the moving party's separate statement, see §§36.62-36.66; on the opposing party's separate statement, see §§36.75-36.80.

(2) Waiver of Evidentiary Objections

§36.200 (a) Failure to Appeal Trial Court's Ruling Sustaining Objections

When reviewing a motion for summary judgment, an appellate court may not consider evidence to which objections have been made and properly sustained. Guz v Bechtel Nat'l, Inc. (2000) 24 C4th 317, 334, 100 CR2d 352. If an opposing party does not challenge a trial court's ruling that sustains a moving party's objections to evidence offered in opposition to the summary judgment motion, "any issues concerning the correctness of the trial court's evidentiary rulings have been waived." Lopez v Baca (2002) 98 CA4th 1008, 1014, 120 CR2d 281.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.201 (b) Failure to Object to Admission in Trial Court

If a party does not make an objection in the trial court, the evidence is admitted in evidence and becomes part of the record on appeal. Alexander v Codemasters Group Ltd. (2002) 104 CA4th 129, 140, 127 CR2d 145, citing Haskell v Carli (1987) 195 CA3d 124, 129, 240 CR 439. Failure to object, even to otherwise inadmissible evidence, waives the defect. CCP §437c(b)(5) (evidentiary objections not made at summary judgment hearing are deemed waived); Evid C §353(a) (to preserve right to challenge erroneously received evidence, litigant must make timely objection).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.202 (c) Failure to Obtain Express Ruling by Trial Court

If a party files evidentiary objections, but the trial court does not expressly rule on them, the objections are waived and are not preserved on appeal. Ann M. v Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 C4th 666, 670 n1, 25 CR2d 137 (objected-to evidence is considered admitted and becomes part of record on appeal). See CCP §437c(b)(5), (c). If, however, it would have been a fruitless or idle act to continually interpose repeated requests for rulings, written evidentiary objections may be deemed preserved for appellate review. City of Long Beach v Farmers & Merchants Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 780, 784, 97 CR2d 140.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.203 (d) Objections May Be Preserved Even if Not Expressly Ruled On

In Biljac Assocs. v First Interstate Bank (1990) 218 CA3d 1410, 267 CR 819, the First District Court of Appeal held that, under CCP §437c, a trial court is not required to make formal rulings on evidentiary objections, and, if the court does not expressly rule on evidentiary objections, the objections are preserved on appeal. This holding, however, has been criticized by other districts (see Sambrano v City of San Diego (2001) 94 CA4th 225, 114 CR2d 151) as well as by a later First District opinion (Demps v San Francisco Hous. Auth. (2007) 149 CA4th 564, 57 CR3d 204). See also Swat-Fame, Inc. v Goldstein (2002) 101 CA4th 613, 623, 124 CR2d 556, disapproved on other grounds in Zamos v Stroud (2004) 32 C4th 958, 973, 12 CR3d 54.

CAUTION: With a wealth of authority supporting the position adopted by the supreme court in Ann M. v Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 C4th 666, 670 n1, 25 CR2d 137 that objections not expressly ruled on by the trial court are waived and are not preserved on appeal (see California Summary Judgment §12.28 (Cal CEB 2010)), there has been concern about continued validity of the Biljac opinion. The California Supreme Court granted review in Reid v Google, Inc. (review granted Jan. 30, 2008, S158965; superseded opinion at 155 CA4th 1342, 66 CR3d 744). In Reid, the Sixth District Court of Appeal followed Biljac when considering the admissibility of statistical evidence of age discrimination; the supreme court granted review on this issue. Counsel should check on Reid's status and, until the supreme court decides Reid, be cautious whenever a court indicates reliance on that portion of Biljac. See Summary Judgment §§9.4-9.6.

On waiver of objections after a party requests rulings, see California Civil Appellate Practice §2A.15 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.204 (e) Implied Overruling of Objections Not Specifically Sustained

If the trial court states that it considered only admissible evidence in ruling on the summary judgment motion, the appellate court considers that statement to be an implied overruling of any objection not specifically sustained. Laird v Capital Cities/ABC, Inc. (1998) 68 CA4th 727, 736, 80 CR2d 454. See Alexander v Codemasters Group Ltd. (2002) 104 CA4th 129, 140, 127 CR2d 145 (applying Laird, court of appeal found that trial court's oral and written statements that it would consider only admissible evidence impliedly overruled defendant's evidentiary objections except to extent that objections were specifically sustained by trial court).

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.205 f. Supplemental Briefing

Under CCP §437c(m)(2), before the reviewing court may affirm an order granting summary judgment on a ground not relied on by the trial court, it must give the parties an opportunity to present their views on the issue by submitting supplemental briefs. The supplemental briefing may include the argument that additional evidence on the new ground exists but the party has not had an adequate opportunity to present the evidence or to conduct discovery on the issue. The court may reverse or remand based on the supplemental briefing to allow the parties to present additional evidence or to conduct discovery on the issue.

NOTE: If the court does not allow supplemental briefing, a rehearing must be ordered on any party's timely petition. CCP §437c(m)(2).

§36.206 B. When Summary Adjudication Is Granted

After a motion for summary adjudication has been granted, the cause or causes of action within the action, affirmative defenses, claim for damages, or issues of duty adjudicated are "deemed to be established," and the action proceeds only for the issues "remaining." CCP §437c(n)(1). The granting of a motion for summary adjudication may be challenged by certain trial court procedures, and by writ of mandate in the appellate court. See §§36.194-36.195.

See chart summarizing post-ruling options and timing in §§36.211-36.212.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.207 1. Trial Court Options

When a summary adjudication motion is granted, the opposing party may challenge the grant directly in the trial court by the following motions:

- Motion for reconsideration (see California Summary Judgment §12.34 (Cal CEB 2010)); or
- Motion for relief under CCP §473 (see Summary Judgment §12.35).

See chart summarizing post-ruling options and timing in §§36.211-36.212.

© The Regents of the University of California

§36.208 2. Appellate Court Review

An order granting summary adjudication is immediately reviewable only by petition for a peremptory writ of mandate. CCP §437c(m). See Fisherman's Wharf Bay Cruise Corp. v Superior Court (2003) 114 CA4th 309, 7 CR3d 628.

NOTE: An order granting a motion for summary adjudication is a preliminary nonappealable order; appeal must be taken from the final judgment ultimately entered in the case. Etienne v DKM Enters. (1982) 136 CA3d 487, 489, 186 CR 321. If, however, the order granting summary adjudication disposes of all causes of action for one party, the disposition is final for that party who, after judgment is entered, may seek review on appeal. Etienne v DKM Enters., supra. But see Don Jose's Restaurant, Inc. v Truck Ins. Exch. (1997) 53 CA4th 115, 61 CR2d 370.

On writ review of order under CCP §437c, see California Civil Writ Practice §§16.66-16.77 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008). C. When Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication Is Denied

§36.209 1. Trial Court Options

When a summary judgment or summary adjudication motion is denied, the opposing party may challenge the denial in the trial court by the following motions:

- Motion for reconsideration (see California Summary Judgment §12.34 (Cal CEB 2010));
- Renewal of motion on new or different facts, circumstances, or law under CCP §1008(b) (see Summary Judgment §§12.39-12.41); or
- If motion was for summary adjudication, make a subsequent motion for summary judgment on same evidence (see Summary Judgment §12.46).

In addition to the parties' motions for reconsideration under §1008(a), courts have inherent authority, on their own motion, to reevaluate their own interim rulings at any time before entry of judgment, and can reconsider a previously denied motion for summary judgment or adjudication sua sponte despite the absence of new facts or law. Le Francois v Goel (2005) 35 C4th 1094, 1107, 29 CR3d 249; Abassi v Welke (2004) 118 CA4th 1353, 1359, 14 CR3d 336. But see Schachter v Citigroup, Inc. (2005) 126 CA4th 726, 23 CR3d 920 (court's inherent power to correct its own rulings does not excuse party from complying with requirements of CCP §437c(f)(2)).

§36.210 2. Appellate Court Review

An order denying a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication may be reviewed by way of a petition for writ of mandate. CCP §437c(m); Hill Bros. Chem. Co. v Superior Court (2004) 123 CA4th 1001, 20 CR3d 530. See Mallett v Superior Court (1992) 6 CA4th 1853, 1863, 8 CR2d 829 (pretrial writ review is only speedy remedy available to review denial of summary judgment motion). In practice, however, writ review on the merits is not easy to obtain when summary judgment has been denied. See, e.g., Lompoc Unified Sch. Dist. v Superior Court (1993) 20 CA4th 1688, 1692, 26 CR2d 122 (courts "reluctant" to review denials of summary judgment by writ). But see State Dep't of Health Servs. v Superior Court (2003) 31 C4th 1026, 1036, 6 CR3d 441 (reversing appellate court's denial of writ of mandate to overturn order denying summary judgment, allowing defendant to raise defense to action under Fair Employment and Housing Act).

On writ from order denying motion for summary adjudication, see California Summary Judgment §12.47 (Cal CEB 2010). On writ review of order under CCP §437c, see California Civil Writ Practice §§16.66-16.77 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008). See also Handling Civil Writs in the Courts of Appeal (Cal CEB Action Guide February 2009). On the appealability of orders and judgments, see California Civil Appellate Practice, chap 3 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).
