After rehearing is denied, or when no rehearing is possible, either side may seek relief from the court of appeal's judgment by filing a petition for review in the California Supreme Court. Such a petition must comply with the rules governing petitions for review in criminal cases. On petitions for review in criminal cases, see Appeals & Writs §§5.41-5.46, 5.54.

As an alternative to a petition for review, the habeas petitioner may file a new habeas corpus petition in the supreme court. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.486; Appeals & Writs §10.30.

After supreme court disposition of habeas petition or petition for review. An order by the California Supreme Court denying a petition for review is final upon filing. Cal Rules of Ct 8.532(b)(2)(A). In a habeas proceeding, if the court denies the habeas petition without issuing an order to show cause, that decision also is final immediately. Cal Rules of Ct 8.532(b)(2)(C). No petition for rehearing is permitted in either case. Cal Rules of Ct 8.268(a)(1), 8.536(a).

If the supreme court issues an order to show cause in a habeas proceeding, its ultimate judgment becomes final 30 days after filing, and a petition for rehearing may be filed in the meantime. Cal Rules of Ct 8.268(a)(1), 8.532(b), 8.536(a).

On deadlines for filing a petition for rehearing and an answer to a petition for rehearing, see chart in §42.2.

§42.34 K. When Habeas Is Filed in Conjunction With Appeal

Habeas corpus is sometimes used together with a pending appeal when the allegations require evidence outside the regular appellate record. See People v Pope (1979) 23 C3d 412, 426, 152 CR 732 (habeas used to litigate ineffective assistance of counsel claim when evidence not in record; inquiry needed into reasons for counsel's actions). In most appellate districts, the habeas petition may be filed in the same court as the related direct appeal. See §42.26. The court may consolidate the two cases. See, e.g., People v Frierson (1979) 25 C3d 142, 158 CR 281; People v Corona (1978) 80 CA3d 684, 706 n10, 145 CR 894.

Appointed counsel in a noncapital appeal has no duty to investigate possible bases for collateral attack or to file a habeas petition. In re Clark (1993) 5 C4th 750, 783 n20, 21 CR2d 509. Many appointed appellate attorneys do, however, seek habeas relief for their clients, especially when the record suggests the existence of a substantial claim (e.g., when it appears that trial counsel forfeited a potentially meritorious appellate issue by failing to object). The courts of appeal have different policies on whether an appellate appointment includes filing a habeas petition. In some districts, counsel must seek and obtain an expanded appointment in order to be compensated for work on a habeas proceeding related to the appeal.

If the losing party in the court of appeal wishes to file a petition for review in the California Supreme Court, that petition must be filed within 10 days after the decision is final as to the court of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(e)(1). Although most court of appeal decisions are final 30 days after the court of appeal files the decision, the denial of a writ petition "without issuance of an order to show cause" is final immediately on filing. Cal Rules of Ct 8.387(b)(2)(A). An exception exists, however, when the order denying a habeas petition is filed on the same day as the decision in a related appeal. In that event, denial of the writ petition has the same date of finality as the decision of the court of appeal in the related appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.387(b)(2)(B). If the appeal and the petition for habeas corpus were not consolidated and the habeas petition is denied without issuance of an order to show cause, a defendant seeking review of the denial of the habeas petition and the decision on appeal must file a separate petition for review in each proceeding. Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(d).

For further discussion of using habeas in conjunction with appeal, see §44.27.

Capital cases. The California Supreme Court has established special rules, including time limits, for habeas petitions related to automatic appeals in capital cases. These rules are set forth in Policy 3 of the Supreme Court Policies Regarding Cases Arising From Judgments of Death, available in the Death Penalty section of the California Supreme Court's website (http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/courts/supreme). For further discussion, see Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases §§6.7, 6.21-6.22, 6.34-6.36 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

§43.1 I. OVERVIEW

This chapter is concerned solely with appeals brought by the prosecution or the defense from judgments made in misdemeanor criminal matters. It provides a complete overview of the various requirements and rules applicable to misdemeanor cases, with particular emphasis on areas in which the rules vary significantly from the rules applicable to felony cases. For discussion of extraordinary writs in misdemeanor cases, see chap 42 and Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases, chaps 7-10 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

The rules for misdemeanor appeals changed significantly as of January 1, 2009. The goal of the new rules is to make it easier for pro per appellants to understand and accomplish their appeals and, where possible, to conform the misdemeanor rules to the felony rules. The forms created to implement these rules are as important as the rules themselves especially for pro per defendants. The forms can be found at http://courtinfo.ca.gov/forms/.

All appeals from appealable orders in infraction and misdemeanor cases are heard in the appellate divisions of the superior courts. Cal Const art VI, §11; Pen C §1466. A misdemeanor or infraction case is one in which only misdemeanors or infractions are charged. See Pen C §691(g). If the defendant is held to answer for a felony, the case is a felony case, even if the defendant ultimately is convicted only of a misdemeanor or misdemeanors. See Pen C §691(f); People v Nickerson (2005) 128 CA4th 33, 36, 26 CR3d 563.

Procedure in the appellate divisions is governed exclusively by statute, local rule, and the California Rules of Court.

The Rules of Court provide generally for various time limits on filing notices, briefs, and other documents. In many respects, these rules are more detailed and demanding than the equivalent provisions on felony appeals. For example, on appeal from a felony conviction, a full record, including transcripts, is automatically prepared by the superior court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.616. In a misdemeanor case, the appellant must notify the court whether the appeal will proceed with a record of the oral proceedings and which form of the record of the oral proceedings he or she elects to use. Cal Rules of Ct 8.864. In addition, the appellant must file the notice of appeal in a misdemeanor case, in the trial court, within 30 calendar days after the rendition of judgment or the making of the order being appealed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.852-8.853(a).

Once the record on appeal is received in the reviewing court, briefing requirements are similar to those in felony cases, except for different time limits. Time limits for misdemeanor appeals are generally shorter than those for felony appeals. Even so, the misdemeanor appellate process usually takes at least 3 months, and often takes much longer. Some of the variables include whether it is necessary to prepare a statement on appeal (Cal Rules of Ct 8.869), the length of time counsel has to wait for a date for oral argument (Cal Rules of Ct 8.885), and the time it takes the appellate division to issue an opinion (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.886-8.888).

III. APPEALABLE JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS

§43.3 A. In General

In a misdemeanor case, both the prosecution and the defense have the right to appeal from various judgments and orders of the trial court, as prescribed by Pen C §§1466 and 1538.5. Those judgments and orders are discussed in §§43.4 (prosecution appeals), 43.5-43.7 (defense appeals). The parties may not confer appellate jurisdiction on a court by agreement or stipulation. People v A-1 Roofing Serv. (1978) 87 CA3d Supp 1, 9, 151 CR 522.

For discussion of the standards of review on appeal, see §44.36.

§43.4 B. Appeals by Prosecution

Order recusing district attorney. The prosecution can appeal in misdemeanor cases from an order recusing the district attorney or city attorney under Pen C §1424. Pen C §1466(1)(A).)

Order or judgment terminating an action. The prosecution may appeal from an order or judgment dismissing, striking, or otherwise terminating one or more of several charges or a special allegation such as a prior conviction, before the defendant has been placed in jeopardy, when the defendant has waived jeopardy or after a verdict or finding of guilty. Pen C §1466(1)(B); People v Smith (1983) 33 C3d 596, 189 CR 862 (dismissal of case in furtherance of justice on defense motion following declaration of mistrial because jurors could not agree on verdict reversed on appeal); People v Kirk (1992) 7 CA4th 855, 9 CR2d 270 (prosecution may appeal pretrial ruling striking drunk driving conviction); People v Gonzales (1965) 235 CA2d Supp 887, 891, 46 CR 301 (prosecutor has right to notice and appeal of court order of dismissal).

The prosecution may not appeal from a dismissal order that the prosecution has itself requested. People v Gallagher (2009) 171 CA4th Supp 1, 6, 90 CR3d 695; People v Caserta (1971) 14 CA3d 484, 92 CR 382. Note, however, the supreme court held that Pen C §1238(a)(8), a felony provision equivalent to Pen C §1466(1)(b), allowed the prosecution to appeal an order of dismissal entered at the prosecutor's request when the prosecution requested dismissal because it was unable to proceed after an adverse evidentiary ruling. People v Chacon (2007) 40 C4th 558, 564, 53 CR3d 876.

Judgment after defense demurrer sustained. The prosecution may appeal directly from an order sustaining a demurrer to all or any part of a complaint. Pen C §1466(1)(C).

Order granting new trial. The prosecution may appeal from an order granting a new trial. Pen C §1466(1)(D); People v Rothrock (1936) 8 C2d 21, 63 P2d 807.

Order arresting judgment. The prosecution may appeal from an order arresting judgment. Pen C §1466(1)(E); People v Andrews (1959) 170 CA2d Supp 840, 339 P2d 648.

Order made after judgment affecting prosecution's substantial rights. The prosecution may appeal from any order made after judgment affecting the "substantial rights of the people." Pen C §1466(1)(F). To affect the prosecution's "substantial rights," an order must in some way affect the judgment or its enforcement or hamper the further prosecution of the particular proceeding in which it is made. People v McGuire (1993) 14 CA4th 687, 701, 18 CR2d 12; People v Garcia (1931) 120 CA Supp 767, 770, 7 P2d 401. See also People v Benavides (2002) 99 CA4th 100, 104, 120 CR2d 755.

This provision permits the prosecution to appeal an order unlawfully suspending a sentence already imposed and granting probation. People v Belton (1978) 84 CA3d Supp 23, 149 CR 231. Note, however, that an order simply granting probation is not appealable by the prosecution. A petition for writ of mandate may be brought instead within 60 days after an order granting probation. Pen C §1466(1)(H).

Imposition of unlawful sentence. The prosecution may appeal from the imposition of an unlawful sentence. An "unlawful sentence" is a sentence not authorized by law or one based on an unlawful order of the court that strikes or modifies the effect of an enhancement or prior conviction. The defendant has the same right to counsel that he or she would have under Pen C §1238(a). Pen C §1466(1)(G).

Order granting Pen C §1538.5 motion. The prosecution may appeal from any decision of a court made in a misdemeanor case before trial relating to a motion to suppress evidence brought under §1538.5. This may be accomplished in one of two ways. The prosecution may (1) directly appeal the order while the misdemeanor charge remains pending (Pen C §1538.5(j)) or (2) indicate that the prosecution is unable to proceed in light of the ruling, thus provoking a dismissal under Pen C §1385, and challenge the order suppressing evidence in an appeal from that dismissal. Pen C §§1466(1)(B), 1538.5(j). But see People v Gallagher (2009) 171 CA4th Supp 1, 6, 90 CR3d 695 (court's dismissal per Pen C §1385 at prosecutor's request following order granting suppression motion was nonappealable invited error).

If the prosecution chooses to litigate the issue while charges are pending, the defendant, if in custody, must be released under Pen C §1318 until proceedings are resumed in the trial court (Pen C §1538.5(k)), and the trial must be stayed pending appeal (Pen C §1538.5(l)).

C. Appeals by Defense

§43.5 1. Appeal From Judgment; Certificate of Probable Cause Not Required

The defendant may appeal from a final judgment of conviction. Pen C §1466(2)(A). "Judgment" is broadly defined to include sentences, orders granting probation, and presentence commitments for insanity or narcotics addiction. The defense can raise denials of pretrial motions when appealing from a judgment following trial. See People v Woods (1978) 84 CA3d 149, 148 CR 312.

Ø Note: An appeal following denial of a motion for a new trial is from the judgment and not from the court's order denying the motion. See Pen C §1466(2)(A).

Unlike felony appeals, defendants who appeal misdemeanor cases are not required to obtain a certificate of probable cause to appeal issues following a plea of guilty. People v Woods, supra. It is probable, however, that the defendant's plea of guilty or nolo contendere bars appellate review of certain rulings after such a plea, as it does in felony cases. People v Egbert (1997) 59 CA4th 503, 68 CR2d 913. See People v Lockheed Shipbldg. & Constr. Co. (1977) 69 CA3d Supp 1, 6, 138 CR 445; People v Singer (1976) 56 CA3d Supp 1, 5, 128 CR 920. For rulings that cannot be reviewed in felony cases, see chart in §44.13. For discussion, see Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases §1.11 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007). Avila v Municipal Court (1983) 148 CA3d 807, 196 CR 286, held that the defendant in a misdemeanor case could appeal the denial of a speedy trial motion after a guilty or nolo plea. However, Avila has been criticized in People v Hernandez (1992) 6 CA4th 1355, 8 CR2d 324, People v Egbert, supra, and People v Aguilar (1998) 61 CA4th 615, 71 CR2d 411. Pointing out that there is no distinction between misdemeanor and felony prosecutions that has any bearing on the defendant's right to appeal a speedy trial violation in a misdemeanor case, the court in Egbert formulated a bright-line rule precluding misdemeanor appellants from appealing speedy trial violations. 59 CA4th 503.

§43.6 2. Appeal From Order After Judgment Affecting Defendant's Substantial Rights

The defendant may appeal from an order after judgment affecting his or her substantial rights. Pen C §1466(2)(B). Such orders usually concern probation, such as the enforcement of conditions, revocation, and modification, but they may also include refusals to grant dismissals, e.g., under Pen C §1203.4. See, e.g., People v Johnson (1955) 134 CA2d 140, 285 P2d 74.

Ø Note: A motion to modify probation that is heard and decided more than 30 calendar days after judgment and is denied is not an appealable order made after judgment affecting the defendant's substantial rights within the meaning of §1466(2)(B) when the modification sought is actually a request to modify the original sentence. People v Djekich (1991) 229 CA3d 1213, 280 CR 824. Nor can the trial court extend the time to appeal by "re-entering the judgment." (However, the probation condition may be reviewed by writ of habeas corpus. In re Bushman (1970) 1 C3d 767, 83 CR 375, overruled on other grounds in People v Lent (1975) 15 C3d 481, 486 n1, 124 CR 905.) Djekich distinguished cases in which probation really was modified, which are generally appealable under §1466(2)(B).

§43.7 3. Order Denying Pen C §1538.5 Motion

A defendant may file a pretrial appeal from an order denying his or her motion to suppress evidence. Pen C §1538.5(j). This is unlike felony pretrial review, which is only by a petition for extraordinary writ. Pen C §1538.5(j). While the appellate court has discretion to refuse to hear a writ, it must rule on an appeal. However, there are problems with appealing a Pen C §1538.5 ruling before judgment. Unlike Pen C §1538.5(l), which allows the prosecutor an automatic stay when appealing a §1538.5 ruling, no statute, rule, or court decision requires the trial court to stay proceedings while a defendant appeals a misdemeanor §1538.5 ruling, and many courts will not do so. The disadvantage of an appeal following conviction is that the defendant must then show prejudice; no such showing is required on a pretrial §1538.5 appeal. See People v Miller (1983) 33 C3d 545, 550, 189 CR 519.

Ø Note: When a defendant successfully appeals a search and seizure ruling following a plea of guilty or nolo contendere under Pen C §1538.5(m), the appellate court must reverse the case to allow the defendant to decide whether to withdraw his or her plea. People v Miller, supra.

IV. INITIATING THE APPEAL

§43.8 A. Filing Notice of Appeal

Time for filing. The notice of appeal must be filed in the trial court within 30 calendar days of the rendition of the judgment or the making of the order being appealed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.853(a).

Ø Note: In determining the 30-day period, the first day is not counted. For example, a notice of appeal from an order made on October 1 would have to be filed on or before October 31. If the 30th day falls on a holiday, then the notice must be filed on or before the next following court day. See CCP §12. Court furlough days are considered holidays. See Govt C §68106(b)(1).

The notice of appeal must be signed by the appellant, or his or her attorney, and must specify the judgment or order, or part of it, from which the appeal is taken. Cal Rules of Ct 8.852(a). For a sample notice of appeal, see Notice of Appeal (Misdemeanor) (Judicial Council Form CR-132).

Late filing of notice of appeal extinguishes right to appeal. The filing of a timely notice of appeal is a prerequisite to the right to appeal, and the deadline for filing the notice of appeal is strictly enforced. While the clerk may file a premature notice of appeal as if it had been filed immediately after a final judgment or appealable order (Cal Rules of Ct 8.853(c)), the time for filing a notice of appeal cannot be extended. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.853(d). The reviewing court cannot grant a litigant relief from default for failure to file a timely notice of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.812; In re Chavez (2003) 30 C4th 643, 134 CR2d 54.

The doctrine of constructive filing may apply in some circumstances. See, e.g., In re Jordan (1992) 4 C4th 116, 13 CR2d 878 (notice of appeal deemed constructively filed when inmate delivered it to prison officials) (see also Cal Rules of Ct 8.853(e)); In re Benoit (1973) 10 C3d 72, 109 CR 785 (incarcerated defendant reasonably relied on trial counsel's promise to file notice of appeal).

A petition for a writ of habeas corpus is the appropriate method of raising the issue of constructive filing. The defendant may be able to claim on habeas corpus that trial counsel's failure to file a notice of appeal is ineffective assistance of counsel. See Roe v Flores-Ortega (2000) 528 US 470, 145 L Ed 2d 985, 120 S Ct 1029.

§43.9 B. Appointment of Counsel on Appeal for Indigent Defendants

Indigent defendants are entitled to counsel on appeal in all criminal and juvenile felony cases and in all misdemeanor cases resulting in jail or a fine of $500 or more, or that may result in "significant adverse collateral consequences" for the defendant if convicted. Cal Rules of Ct 8.851 (criminal cases); Cal Rules of Ct 5.585 (amended effective July 1, 2010) and 8.403 (effective July 1, 2010) (juvenile cases). See People v Wong (1979) 93 CA3d 151, 153, 155 CR 453. Appointment of counsel on appeal for misdemeanants whose cases are appealed to the appellate division of the superior court is required if they are "subject to" incarceration or a fine of more than $500 (including penalty and other assessments) or are likely to suffer significant adverse collateral consequences as a result of the conviction and either were represented by appointed counsel in the trial court or establish indigency. Cal Rules of Ct 8.851(a)(1). See also Cal Rules of Ct 4.306. An appellant is subject to incarceration or a fine if the sanction is included as part of a sentence, is a condition of probation, or could be imposed for a violation of probation. Cal Rules of Ct 8.851(a)(3). The appellate division may appoint counsel for other indigent appellants who apply. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.851(a)(2).

A request for appointment of counsel on appeal is filed in the trial court. Defense trial counsel who has reason to believe that an indigent client will appeal must prepare and file the request. Cal Rules of Ct 8.851(b)(1). The request must include defense counsel's declaration that the defendant was represented by appointed counsel in the trial court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.851(b)(2). Judicial Council Form CR-133 (Request for Court-Appointed Lawyer in Misdemeanor Appeal) may be used for the request. See California Criminal Law Forms Manual §41.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). A defendant seeking appointment of counsel on appeal in a misdemeanor case who was not represented by appointed counsel in the trial court must include a declaration of indigency on Judicial Council Form MC-210 (Defendant's Financial Statement on Eligibility for Appointment of Counsel and Reimbursement and Record on Appeal at Public Expense). Cal Rules of Ct 8.851(b)(2); Advisory Committee Comment to Cal Rules of Ct 8.851. See Crim Law Forms Man §3.4.

The trial court clerk must promptly send the application for counsel to the appellate division along with the clerk's transcript of proceedings in the trial court or, if local rules provide, the original court file. Cal Rules of Ct 8.851(b)(3), 8.860(a).

> Ø Note: A defendant may apply directly to the appellate division for the appointment of counsel at any time after filing the notice of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.851(b)(3).

The public defender cannot be required to accept appointment as counsel for an indigent misdemeanor appellant. Mowrer v Appellate Dep't (1990) 226 CA3d 264, 276 CR 38.

§43.10 V. BAIL OR RELEASE PENDING APPEAL

Those convicted of misdemeanors are entitled to bail or release on their own recognizance (O.R.) pending appeal. Pen C §§1272, 1291, 1318. See also Pen C §1270, concerning O.R. release in the trial court before conviction (O.R. release in misdemeanor cases must be granted unless the court makes a finding on the record that an O.R. release would compromise public safety or would not reasonably assure defendant's appearance in court).

When the prosecution files a pretrial notice of appeal from an order granting a motion to suppress evidence (Pen C §1538.5(j)), the defendant must be granted an O.R. release. Pen C §1538.5(k). When the defense appeals an adverse Pen C §1538.5 ruling, however, the defendant is only entitled to bail, although he or she may be granted O.R. release at the court's discretion. Pen C §1538.5(l).

For additional discussion of release on appeal, see §§41.6-41.7, 44.18.

§43.11 VI. GENERAL RULES FOR TIME LIMITS AND EXTENSIONS OF TIME

The time limits for filing most documents and completing most tasks in misdemeanor appeals are set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 8.800-8.817, 8.880-8.891. See generally People v Jenkins (1976) 55 CA3d Supp 55, 60, 127 CR 870. These provisions have the force of law. Albermont Petroleum, Ltd. v Cunningham (1960) 186 CA2d 84, 89, 9 CR 405.

Extensions of time limits are available from the trial court or from the appellate division for every step of the appellate process except filing the notice of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.812. See §43.8. Requests for extensions must comply with Cal Rules of Ct 8.806-8.812. For good cause shown, the trial court may extend record preparation deadlines, so long as time has not expired. Cal Rules of Ct 8.810(b)(1). The initial extension request may be an ex parte motion. Cal Rules of Ct 8.810(b)(3). The appellate division can grant further relief for good cause, shown by affidavit or declaration. Cal Rules of Ct 8.810(c). Good cause factors and policies governing extensions are outlined in Cal Rules of Ct 8.811. Unless specified otherwise in the rules, the Code of Civil Procedure governs all time extensions and calculations, and generally extensions may be granted for no more than 30 calendar days under CCP §1054. Cal Rules of Ct 8.810(a).

See deadline chart in §43.2.

VII. RECORD ON APPEAL

§43.12 A. Normal Record

When a notice of appeal is filed in a misdemeanor case, the following documents will be assembled and included in the clerk's transcript (Cal Rules of Ct 8.860, 8.861):

- The complaint;
- The plea, demurrer, or other pleas;
- Jury instructions submitted in writing, cover page (Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b)(2)), and any written instructions given by the trial court;
- The verdict;
- Certain written motions with supporting or opposing memoranda;
- The court's minutes;
- The judgment or order appealed from;
- The notice of appeal;
- Any written opinion or findings of the trial court;
- Any written documents sent between the trial court and jury or a juror;
- Any transcript of a sound or sound-and-video recording furnished to the jury or tendered to the court under Cal Rules of Ct 2.1040; and,
- If defendant is the appellant:
- Defense motions denied in whole or in part;
- Relevant search warrants and return;
- Prior-conviction documents, including juvenile adjudications and records of prison terms served, if admitted into evidence (however, if closed to the public at trial, documents must remain private on appeal); and
- Probation officer's report.

If permitted by local rule, instead of the clerk's transcript, the appellant may elect to use the original court file (Cal Rules of Ct 8.863). Cal Rules of Ct 8.860(a)(1)(B). All exhibits (admitted, refused, or lodged) are considered part of the record, but appellant must designate which exhibits should be transferred to the appellate division. Cal Rules of Ct 8.870.

The written records contained in the clerk's transcript or the original court file are considered the "normal record" on appeal. Cal Rules of Ct. 8.860. The normal record may be limited under certain circumstances when the prosecution appeals (Cal Rules of Ct 8.867) or when the parties so stipulate (Cal Rules of Ct 8.860(b)). For discussion of the record of oral proceedings, see §43.13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.13 B. Record of Oral Proceedings

In a felony prosecution, a stenographic reporter is routinely present at all oral proceedings in the case. The filing of a notice of appeal in a felony case triggers preparation of the normal record on appeal, which includes a verbatim transcript of the oral proceedings at trial and sentencing. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.320. This is not true in misdemeanor and infraction cases. Making sure that there is an adequate record of the oral proceedings in a misdemeanor case to permit appellate review is the responsibility of the appellant. The appellant must file with the trial court a notice of election to proceed with a record of the oral proceedings and specify which of the following he or she elects to use (Cal Rules of Ct 8.864):

- A reporter's transcript under Cal Rules of Ct 8.865-8.867;
- An official electronic recording of the trial court proceedings made according to Govt C §69957 under Cal Rules of Ct 8.868(c) (which must be permitted in the appellate division by local rule and either stipulated to by the parties or ordered by the trial court);
- A transcript of an official electronic recording made according to Govt C §69957 under Cal Rules of Ct 8.868(b); or
- A corrected and court-certified statement on appeal under Cal Rules of Ct 8.869; see §43.14.

The notice of election to proceed with a record of oral proceedings is due (Cal Rules of Ct 8.864(b)):

- 20 calendar days after the notice of appeal is filed, or,
- If an application for appointment of counsel is filed within those 20 days, then the later of:
- 10 calendar days after the court either appoints or denies the appointment of counsel; or
- 20 calendar days after the notice of appeal is filed.

Counsel may use Judicial Council Form CR-134 (Notice Regarding Record of Oral Proceedings (Misdemeanor)) to file the notice of election to proceed with a record of the oral proceedings. If the appellant elects to use an official electronic recording of the trial proceedings, he or she must attach the stipulation of the parties to the election notice (Cal Rules of Ct 8.864(a)(2)), unless the court orders its use under Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(d)(6). Cal Rules of Ct 8.868(c).

When the appropriate records are certified as complete, the clerk must promptly send them to the appellate division. Cal Rules of Ct 8.872(b).

Neither the prosecution nor an appellant formerly represented by appointed counsel is charged for the preparation of a reporter's transcript, a copy of the official electronic recording made according to Govt C §69957, or a transcript from an official electronic recording. See Cal Rules of Court 8.866(a) (reporter's transcript), 8.868 (official electronic recording or transcript of same). An indigent defendant who was not formerly represented by appointed counsel has the option of filing a declaration of indigency to avoid payment for these transcripts. An unrepresented appellant must use Defendant's Financial Statement on Eligibility for Appointment of Counsel and Reimbursement and Record on Appeal at Public Expense (Judicial Council Form MC-210) to show indigency. Advisory Committee Comment to Cal Rules of Ct 8.851.

Ø Note: For financial reasons, a non-indigent defendant may have to choose not to use a verbatim record of oral proceedings, even though verbatim records are usually more accurate than the narrative statement based on the memory of counsel reflected in a certified statement on appeal (Cal Rules of Ct 8.869). If the appellant elects to use a statement on appeal, the court may decide to save court time and resources by ordering a copy of an official electronic recording or a transcript at its own cost. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(d)(6). For discussion of the statement on appeal, see §43.14.

§43.14 C. Proposed Statement on Appeal

An indigent defendant in a criminal case has a federal due process right to a free transcript or an adequate substitute on appeal. Williams v Oklahoma City (1969) 395 US 458, 459, 23 L Ed 2d 440, 442, 89 S Ct 1818 (misdemeanor appeals). In a misdemeanor or infraction case, an appellant who wants the reviewing court to consider the oral proceedings, or any other part of the trial record not listed in Cal Rules of Ct 8.861, has the option under Cal Rules of Ct 8.864(a)(3) to file a proposed statement on appeal in the trial court. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.869. An appellant may choose this option when he or she cannot afford a verbatim record of the oral proceedings. For discussion of available alternative records of the oral proceedings in a trial court, see §43.13.

Filing deadlines. Appellant's counsel must file the proposed statement on appeal in the trial court 20 calendar days after filing the notice to elect to proceed with a statement on appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(b)(1). This time limit can be extended for good cause for 15 calendar days by the trial court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(g). Any further extensions must be sought in the appellate division. Cal Rules of Ct 8.810(c). An appellant who is not represented by counsel must file the proposed statement on appeal on Judicial Council Form CR-135 (Proposed Statement on Appeal (Misdemeanor)), although, for good cause shown, the court may allow a statement to be filed that is not on this form. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(b)(2). If the proposed statement is not timely filed, the trial court clerk will warn the appellant that the appeal will be dismissed if the proposed statement is not filed within 15 calendar days of the mailing of that notice and warning. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(b)(3).

Required contents. The required contents of a proposed statement on appeal are found in Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(c). The following are the most important parts of the statement:

- A "condensed narrative" of the oral proceedings that the appellant believes necessary for the appeal, a summary of the trial court's holding, and the sentence imposed on the defendant; and
- A statement of the points the appellant is raising on appeal.

Narrative. When drafting the proposed statement on appeal, counsel should keep in mind the basic rule that it is the appellant's duty to present a record showing trial court error. The statement of evidence may be simply in narrative form drafted by counsel. This narrative should set forth the testimony of all relevant witnesses, describe all relevant exhibits, and describe all court rulings that may come into issue in the appeal. Drafting this statement may be extremely difficult if the trial was long or the issues complex. With court approval, the appellant may present some or all of this evidence in a question-and-answer format. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(c)(1).

> Ø Note: Often, when a criminal defendant appeals from an adverse judgment, he or she is represented by a different attorney on appeal than at trial. This is especially true when the defendant has been represented by appointed counsel. Although not specifically set forth either by statute or court rule, it would appear better for the proposed statement on appeal to be prepared and filed by the trial attorney. That attorney will have a better command of the facts. He or she may also be better able to identify the probable grounds for appeal and the specific portions of the proceedings that might not otherwise be included in the normal record on appeal, e.g., pretrial motions.

Grounds for appeal. The statement of the points the appellant is raising on appeal should include the grounds for appeal and as much of the evidence that is necessary to support those grounds. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(c)(2)(A)-(B). Any evidence or portion of a proceeding that is not included in support of the grounds raised on appeal will be presumed to support the judgment or order being appealed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(c)(2)(B). Counsel is cautioned to carefully prepare this statement because the appeal will be limited to the points raised unless the court decides that the record was developed to allow full consideration of another point. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(c)(2). If one of the grounds for appeal is insufficiency of the evidence, the proposed statement must set forth in what specific areas the evidence is insufficient. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(c)(2)(C). If there is an issue concerning the admission, exclusion, or modification of a jury instruction, the statement must include any instructions that were submitted orally, identify the party who requested the instruction, and explain any modifications made. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(c)(2)(D).

Exhibits. If the appellant intends to rely on exhibits (admitted, refused, or lodged), he or she must serve and file a notice in the trial court designating those exhibits within 10 calendar days after the last respondent's brief is filed or the time to do so has expired. Any other party must serve and file a notice designating requested exhibits within 10 calendar days after the appellant serves his or her notice. Any notice designating exhibits also must be served on the appellate division. Cal Rules of Ct 8.870(b).

Ø Note: If it appears necessary, the proposed statement on appeal may include other matters, such as a procedural history of the case. However, the statement need not include copies of any documents relied on in the trial court. They need only be identified in the statement; the clerk will include them in the normal record on appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.860-8.861, 8.863.

§43.18 D. Respondent's Amendments (Corrections and Additions)

Within 10 calendar days after the appellant files the proposed statement, the respondent may file proposed amendments to the statement. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(d)(1). If either party wants a hearing on the contents of the statement, the hearing must be requested within 10 calendar days after the respondent files his or her proposed amendments or the time to do so expires. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(d)(2). In its discretion, the court may order a hearing to resolve material issues in dispute. The hearing will be promptly set, giving the parties at least 5 calendar days' written notice. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(d)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.19 E. Corrected and Certified Statement on Appeal

If the trial court makes any corrections or modifications to the proposed statement, the parties are allowed, within 10 calendar days after the statement is sent to them, to review those changes and file proposed modifications or objections. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(e). The trial court must certify the final statement on appeal (Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(f)):

- "[P]romptly" if the judge does not make any corrections or modifications to the proposed statement; or
- Within 5 calendar days of reviewing and correcting any proposed modifications or objections filed by the parties or of the time for filing such modifications or objections has expired. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(f)(2).

In the authors' experience, courts may not act quickly on an appeal once the fixed time limits have been satisfied. Accordingly, the parties should keep track of the appeal to see that the statement is certified and sent to the reviewing court. This is particularly true for the prosecution, because a prolonged delay may deny the defendant due process of law, thus aborting the criminal prosecution. People v Ruhl (1976) 63 CA3d Supp 6, 134 CR 62. But see People v Hernandez (1985) 166 CA3d Supp 1, 5, 212 CR 563.

It is the duty of the judge to settle the statement. People v Jenkins (1976) 55 CA3d Supp 55, 64, 127 CR 870. The judge is the final arbiter of any factual disputes as long as he or she does not act arbitrarily. In re Apperson (1961) 188 CA2d 830, 10 CR 738. This can be a major problem when counsel and the judge disagree over crucial facts or evidence, and is a good reason to request a verbatim record whenever possible. See §43.13 on right to a verbatim record.

Although the judge is the final arbiter of what the statement on appeal will contain and may recall witnesses to repeat their testimony if necessary, the judge may not engage in ex parte communications with witnesses in order to settle the statement on appeal. People v Marcroft (1992) 6 CA4th Supp 1, 8 CR2d 544 (trial judge held improper ex parte off-the-record conversation with police officer who was only witness in traffic infraction case in order to settle statement on appeal).

The judge may direct any additional matter to be included in the statement on appeal and once the record is complete, the clerk must "promptly" send it to the appellate court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.872(a)(2)(D), (b). However, neither the court nor the respondent may in any way alter, delete, or add to the specification of grounds for appeal submitted by the appellant. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(d)(5); People v Jenkins (1976) 55 CA3d Supp 55, 65, 127 CR 870.

Once the statement is in final form, the judge must certify its correctness. This action may be taken by the trial court judge even after he or she ceases to be a judge. If the trial judge dies, is removed from office, is disqualified, or is absent from the state at the time for certifying a statement or transcript, it may be certified by any other qualified judge of the court. People v Jenkins, supra.

The court clerk must mail copies of the certified statement on appeal to the parties when it is sent to the appellate division. Cal Rules of Ct 8.872(b)(2)-(3).

Finally, if the court determines that correcting and certifying the statement on appeal will waste too much of the court's time and resources, it may instead order a copy of an official electronic recording or a transcript at its own cost. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(d)(6).

§43.20 F. Transmittal of Record on Appeal to Appellate Division

As soon as the trial court clerk's transcript or original court file is prepared and, if elected, any record of oral proceedings are ready, the clerk or judge of the court transmits them to the clerk of the appellate division of the superior court to which the appeal is taken. Cal Rules of Ct 8.872(a)-(b). Once the appellate division receives the record, it must file it and notify the parties of the filing date. Cal Rules of Ct 8.872(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

VIII. TRIAL COURT JURISDICTION DURING APPEAL

§43.21 A. Trial Court Loses Jurisdiction to Change Judgment

The filing of a timely notice of appeal divests the trial court of jurisdiction to take any action affecting the judgment until the case is remanded by the appellate court (People v Haynes (1969) 270 CA2d 318, 75 CR 800), except in the two situations discussed in §§35.31 (correcting clerical errors) and 35.34 (setting aside void judgment). However, the trial court does retain certain other powers and duties that do not affect the judgment. They are discussed in §43.22.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.22 B. Powers Retained by Trial Court

The trial court retains the right to do the following things after the notice of appeal is filed:

- Set bail or release on his or her own recognizance a misdemeanor defendant who has filed a notice of appeal. Pen C §1272, §1291, or §1318.
- Correct and certify the statement on appeal, if one is necessary, and forward its record to the reviewing court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(d), (f), 8.872(b). The trial court has additional limited authority to grant extensions of time in connection with the preparation of that record. Cal Rules of Ct 8.869(g).
- Augment the record to reflect any recalled or amended judgments or other orders of the trial court made after certification. Cal Rules of Ct 8.873(a).
- Augment the record to include any previously omitted documents or transcripts that any rule requires. Cal Rules of Ct 8.873(b).
- Correct clerical errors in its records. In re Roberts (1962) 200 CA2d 95, 19 CR 147. See §35.31 on correcting clerical errors.

Ø Note: The court cannot correct judicial errors. In re Candelario (1970) 3 C3d 702, 91 CR 497.

- Set aside a judgment that is void on its face, e.g., for lack of jurisdiction. People v Karaman (1992) 4 C4th 335, 345, 14 CR2d 801; People v Blume (1960) 183 CA2d 474, 7 CR 16.
- Stay execution of a judgment. Pen C §1467. Ordinarily, such an order is entered to stay the service of jail time imposed as a condition of probation until after the appeal is heard. In the context of a misdemeanor, bail on appeal is mandatory and thus an order staying the service of jail time is common. See §43.10. However, a stay of execution of judgment does not relieve the defendant of the obligation to comply with the other terms of probation; the trial court retains jurisdiction to modify or revoke probation if the defendant misbehaves during the pendency of an appeal. In re Bakke (1986) 42 C3d 84, 88, 227 CR 663. Registration requirements imposed on sex offenders under Pen C §290 cannot be stayed. Pen C §1467.

The appellate division may order the record augmented or corrected at any time on its own motion or on the motion of any party. Cal Rules of Ct 8.873(c), 8.841.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.23 IX. ABANDONING APPEAL

An appellant may at any time abandon his or her appeal by filing a written statement to that effect or Judicial Council Form CR-137 (Abandonment of Appeal (Misdemeanor)) in the appellate division. Cal Rules of Ct 8.855. The appellant should personally sign the abandonment. Cal Rules of Ct 8.855(a). See Conservatorship of Oliver (1961) 192 CA2d 832, 13 CR 695 (client later denied giving authorization to abandon appeal). If the record has not yet been filed in the appellate division of the superior court, the filing effects a dismissal and the trial court may resume jurisdiction of the case. If the record has been filed in the appellate division of the superior court, that court then dismisses the appeal and issues a remittitur. Cal Rules of Ct 8.855(b).

If the appellate court will not consent to an abandonment and appellant's counsel can find no viable issues on which to base an appeal, he or she should file a Wende brief (see People v Wende (1979) 25 C3d 436, 158 CR 839). Wende applies to misdemeanor appeals. In re Olsen (1986) 176 CA3d 386, 221 CR 772. An appellate court must conduct a review of the entire record in a misdemeanor appeal whenever appointed counsel submits a brief that raises no specific issues or describes the appeal as frivolous. This obligation does not depend on the subsequent receipt of a brief from the defendant personally. In re Olsen, supra. See §§44.37-44.38; Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases §§2.26-2.27, 2.38 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

X. APPELLATE BRIEFS

§43.24 1. Filing Dates

The appellant's opening brief must be served and filed within 30 calendar days after the record on appeal is filed in the appellate division. Cal Rules of Ct 8.882(a)(1). The respondent's brief must be served and filed within 30 calendar days after the opening brief is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.882(a)(2). If the appellant prepares a reply brief, it must be filed within 20 calendar days after the respondent's brief is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.882(a)(3). Unless permitted by the presiding judge, no other briefs may be filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.882(a)(4).

It is the duty of the clerk of the appellate division to advise all parties of the date the record on appeal is filed and the date briefs are due. Cal Rules of Ct 8.881.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.25 2. Contents, Form, Filing, and Service of Briefs

Contents. A brief filed in the appellate division of the superior court must state each point under a separate heading, or subheading, which summarizes the point and supports each point by argument and, if possible, by citation to authority. Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(a)(1). A reference to any matter in the record should be supported by citation to the volume and page number of the record where it appears. Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(a)(1)(B).

An appellate division brief, produced on a computer, may not exceed 6800 words, including footnotes. The brief must include a certificate by the appellant stating the number of words in the brief. Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(b)(1). A brief produced on a typewriter must not exceed 20 pages. Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(b)(2). The presiding judge may permit a longer brief for good cause. If a longer brief is permitted, the court may order that the brief contain a table of contents and a table of authorities. Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(b)(4).

Form. California Rules of Court 8.883(b), which governs the format of briefs filed in the appellate division of the superior court, generally adopts the formatting requirements set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(b) for briefs filed in the court of appeal. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(c). Briefs filed in the appellate division should be bound on the left side, unless a local rule requires that they be bound at the top. Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(c)(8). Both sides of the paper may be used if the brief is not bound at the top. Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(c)(1).

> Ø Note: Counsel should check local practice to learn whether the clerk's office wants briefs to be two-hole punched at the top. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.115. But see Cal Rules of Ct 2.3(2) (word "paper" does not refer to briefs filed in appellate division).

A brief filed in the appellate division should be on 8½ × 11 inch paper and of at least 20-pound weight. The typeface may be proportionally spaced or monospaced but the type size, including footnotes, must be no smaller than 13-point. Lines of type should be at least 1½ spaces apart. Quotations may be block-indented and single-spaced. Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(c). Typewritten briefs are subject to exceptions outlined in Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(c)(10).

Noncomplying briefs. The court clerk has the option of filing a brief that does not comply with formatting rules or returning it with a warning "received but not filed." If the brief is filed, the court has these options, with or without notice (Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(d)):

- Return the brief, requesting it be corrected and refiled within a specified time;
- Strike the brief entirely and advise the party that they can file a new brief within a specified time; or
- Disregard the noncompliance.

An appellate division brief should have covers in the color prescribed by Cal Rules of Ct 8.40(b). Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(b)(10). The front cover should state the title of the case; the trial court number; the appellate division number (if different); whether the brief is the appellant's opening or reply brief or the respondent's brief; the name, address, telephone number, and State Bar number of each attorney filing or joining in the brief; and the name of the party that the attorney represents. Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(b)(10).

Unlike a brief filed in the court of appeal or supreme court (Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(a)(1)), an appellate division brief does not need to have a table of contents or a table of authorities. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(b)(4). Some attorneys include them because they can provide a very persuasive outline.

Filing and service. Unless otherwise provided by local rule, a single original copy of any brief is filed in the appellate division, together with proof of service of one copy on the trial court and one copy on each opposing party or their counsel. Cal Rules of Ct 8.882(e), 8.25.

Sample briefs (appellant's, respondent's, and appellant's reply) are in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§43.1-43.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§43.26 3. Untimely Briefs; Failure to File

Untimely briefs may invite sanctions. If the appellant fails to file a timely opening brief, the clerk will mail a notice that the brief must be filed within 30 calendar days of the mailing of the notice or the court may (Cal Rules of Ct 8.882(c)(2)):

- Relieve appointed counsel and appoint new counsel (if appellant is defendant and represented by appointed counsel); or
- Dismiss the appeal (in all other circumstances).

If a defendant respondent fails to timely file a brief, the clerk will mail a notice warning that it must be filed within 30 calendar days of the mailing of the notice or the court will decide the appeal on the record, the appellant's opening brief, and any oral argument by appellant. Cal Rules of Ct 8.882(c)(3).

§43.27 4. Service

Before filing, every brief must be served on each adverse party who has appeared separately, and a copy showing proof of service must be provided to the trial court clerk for delivery to the trial judge. Cal Rules of Ct 8.882(e), 8.25. Service may be by any method permitted by the Code of Civil Procedure. Cal Rules of Ct 8.882(e), 8.25.

§43.28 B. Appellant's Opening Brief

Procedural and factual summary. Following the standard headings and titles illustrated in the opening brief in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §43.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005), the first part of an opening brief should consist of a description of the procedural and factual posture of the case. This first part may be divided into a statement of the case and a statement of facts, or these statements may be combined if that appears more efficient. The statement must include citations to the parts of the record supporting each assertion of fact (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(a)(1)), which may be the volume and page number where the matter appears. No assertions of fact may be made that are outside the record on appeal. People v Thurmond (1985) 175 CA3d 865, 875, 221 CR 292.

Statement of issues. Although not required, it is good practice to follow the factual statement with a list of the issues to be raised in the appeal, especially if the issues are numerous or complex. Such a listing may be headed "Issues on Appeal." A table of contents can provide the same information to the court.

When there is no issue to be raised on appeal, a Wende (People v Wende (1979) 25 C3d 436, 158 CR 839) brief may be filed. See discussion in §§44.37-44.38. Wende briefs, however, are not usually filed in misdemeanor appeal cases.

Argument. The next portion of the brief is the argument. Discussion of each point to be made must be presented separately under an appropriate heading. Subheadings may be used. Cal Rules of Ct 8.883(a)(1). Counsel should tell what the standard of review is, citing authority. The many considerations that may go into drafting a good opening brief are discussed in Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases, chap 4 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007). It cannot be emphasized too strongly that it is the appellant's responsibility to show error. The respondent has no duty to demonstrate that a judgment or an order is proper in the absence of a proper attack. The appellant must not merely suggest the presence of error, but must clearly show it by proper presentation of facts and assertion of legal argument. People v Justice (1959) 167 CA2d 616, 334 P2d 1031. For discussion of stare decisis, see §18.3.

Conclusion. The final part of the brief should be a conclusion that briefly reiterates the legal errors committed by the trial court and the appellant's entitlement to relief from those errors. The relief sought, e.g., a new trial or modified sentence, should be clearly stated.

The brief should then be signed by appellate counsel.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.29 C. Respondent's Brief

The respondent's brief should be in the same form as the appellant's opening brief. The respondent may accept the appellant's factual statement unconditionally, accept it with changes, or provide a completely new factual statement.

The respondent's only duty is to respond to the arguments presented by the appellant. Thus, if the appellant claims that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment, the respondent should refer the reviewing court to the evidence and explain how it is sufficient. If the appellant asserts legal error, the respondent should provide the court with authority demonstrating the legal validity of the trial court's ruling.

On a prosecution appeal, the appellate court may review any issue of law involved without an objection having been made in the trial court. Pen C §1469. Therefore, the respondent to a prosecution appeal may ask the court to consider any issue of law that the appellate court can review under §1469.

On a defense appeal, the appellate court may review only questions of law concerning things that were said or done after an objection was made and "considered" by the trial court, and that affected the defendant's substantial rights. The one exception is that instructions that affect the defendant's substantial rights may be considered even though no objection was made to them.

See the sample respondent's brief in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §43.2 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.30 D. Appellant's Reply Brief

The appellant may file a reply brief if he or she wishes, but is not required to file one. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.882(a)(3). Its purpose is to answer any new matter raised by the respondent, or to respond to any arguments presented by the respondent that were not adequately addressed in the opening brief. However, the appellant may not raise any new arguments not previously presented in the opening brief, except when such arguments are in response to matter in the respondent's brief. Nelson v Gaunt (1981) 125 CA3d 623, 641, 178 CR 167.

The form of the reply brief may be quite simple, and, unless there is some dispute over the facts, they need not be reiterated. See the sample reply brief in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §43.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

Ø Note: Some appellate judges assume that the appellant is conceding the issues raised in the respondent's brief if no reply brief is filed.

§43.31 XI. ORAL ARGUMENT

All appeals in which the last reply brief has been filed, or the date for filing it has expired 45 days or more before, must be placed on the calendar of the next regularly scheduled appellate division session, unless otherwise ordered. Cal Rules of Ct 8.885(a). The clerk must send a notice of the time and place of argument at least 20 calendar days before the date set. Time may be shortened for good cause; if time is shortened, the clerk must immediately notify the parties of the date set by telephone or other expeditious method. Cal Rules of Ct 8.885(c). Oral argument may be conducted by video conference on application of a party filed within 10 days after the court sends notice of the oral argument date, or on the court's own motion. Cal Rules of Ct 8.885(b). The clerk must notify the parties of the location of the appellate division judges either in the initial notice or in a supplemental notice sent no less than 5 days before the video-conferenced oral argument. Each appellate division judge assigned to the case must participate in the entire oral argument in person or through video conference from a court, and all parties must appear in person in the superior court that issued the judgment or order being appealed, unless local rules, the presiding judge, or his or her designee allows otherwise. Cal Rules of Ct 8.885(b)(2)(B). Each litigant is entitled to appear and give oral argument as a matter of right. See Pen C §1468.

Although Pen C §1253 provides that a reversal may not be ordered without argument in felony cases, no such provision concerns misdemeanor appeals in the superior court appellate division.

The appellate division will restrict argument to one attorney for each represented party. Cal Rules of Ct 8.885(e)(3). Represented defendants need not personally appear at argument. Parties will be given 10 minutes for argument, and the appellant may reserve time for a reply argument. The court may apportion or expand time if there are multiple parties, each separately represented by counsel, or if amicus curiae (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.882(e)) has been granted the right to argue. Cal Rules of Ct 8.885(e)(2).

Many practical and tactical considerations regarding oral argument are discussed in Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases §§5.1-5.7, 5.49 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007). Perhaps the most important point to remember is that the reviewing court is familiar with the facts and with the arguments in the briefs and does not want to hear them repeated. Oral argument, however, does present counsel with an opportunity to go to the heart of the matter and state in as few words as possible the strongest position in support of his or her side. If the issues have been sufficiently addressed in the briefs, then an offer to submit the matter on the briefs, unless the court has questions, is appropriate. If both sides agree to submit the case on the briefs, they should let the court clerk know so that the court does not need to schedule formal argument. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.885(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.32 XII. DETERMINATION OF APPEAL

Each appeal must be determined or submitted for decision at the session at which it is set for hearing unless the hearing is continued for good cause or the appeal is submitted on the briefs without argument. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.886(a). If the matter is submitted, the court must rule on it within 90 days; otherwise, the judge forfeits his or her salary. Cal Const art VI, §19. The decision need not be accompanied by a written opinion, but it may be if the judges of the appellate division deem it advisable or in the public interest. Cal Rules of Ct 8.887(a).

New rules for the conduct of criminal prosecutions will be applied retroactively to all state and federal cases pending on direct review or not yet final, with no exception for cases that establish a "clear break" with the past. Griffith v Kentucky (1987) 479 US 314, 93 L Ed 2d 649, 107 S Ct 708 (case involved issue of peremptory challenges of black jurors; court abandoned its "clear break" standard). The rule of retroactivity pronounced in Griffith "applies only to rules based on the federal Constitution, or upon the federal judicial supervisory power." It does not apply "to rules of criminal procedure derived solely from state law," e.g., a rule requiring a jury instruction on unreasonable self-defense. People v Murtishaw (1989) 48 C3d 1001, 1013, 258 CR 821.

A reviewing court that intends to rule on an issue that was not proposed or briefed by any party to the appeal must allow the parties the opportunity to provide supplemental briefing on that issue. Govt C §68081. The court's failure to follow §68081 requires it to grant a timely petition for rehearing made on that ground.

§43.33 XIII. FINALITY OF JUDGMENT

A judgment of the appellate division becomes final 30 calendar days after the decision is filed, with certain exceptions. Those exceptions and finality dates are (Cal Rules of Ct 8.888):

- 30 calendar days from the filing date of an order for publication, if the order was filed after the decision and before finality;
- 30 calendar days from the filing of a modification order that changes the appellate judgment;
- 30 calendar days from a party's consent to an increase or decrease in the judgment; and
- Immediately on filing of a decision denying a petition for writ of supersedeas, denying an application for bail or to reduce bail pending appeal, or dismissing an appeal on request or stipulation.

The appellate division may modify a decision at any time before it becomes final. If the clerk's office is closed on the date of finality, the court may modify the decision on the next day that the clerk's office is open. Cal Rules of Ct 8.888(b). If the modification changes the judgment, the finality period runs from the date the modification is filed. If the modification does not change the judgment, the date the judgment becomes final is not extended. Cal Rules of Ct 8.888(b)(2).

If any of these time limits expires on a Saturday, Sunday, or holiday, the time limit is extended to the next court day. CCP §12a; Govt C §6806; Cal Rules of Ct 8.888(b)(1). Court furlough days are considered holidays. See Govt C §68106. See §1.16 on holidays, court days, and computation of time.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.34 XIV. PETITION FOR REHEARING

The appellate division may order rehearing on its own motion or on petition by a party at any time before its judgment becomes final. Cal Rules of Ct 8.889(a)(1). Any party may serve and file a petition within 15 calendar days after (Cal Rules of Ct 8.889(b)):

- The decision is filed;
- The filing of a modification order that changes the appellate judgment;
- A publication order restarting the finality period; or
- The filing of a consent to an increase or decrease in the amount of the judgment.

A rehearing may not be sought on grounds not presented in the original briefs or at argument unless it is based on subsequent developments that could not have been brought to the court's attention. People v Payne (1977) 75 CA3d 601, 605, 142 CR 320. See the sample petition for rehearing in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §43.4 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

If the court requests an answer to a petition for rehearing, it must be served and filed within 8 calendar days after the order is filed, unless the court orders otherwise. No answer may be filed without a court request. Cal Rules of Ct 8.889(b)(2). The answer must be accompanied by proof of service on the petitioning party. Cal Rules of Ct 8.889(b)(3). For good cause shown, the court may grant an extension to file a petition or answer. Cal Rules of Ct 8.889(b)(4). But, the court may not extend the time in which to grant or deny the petition. If the court does not rule on the petition before the decision is final, it is presumed that the court denied the petition. Cal Rules of Ct 8.889(c). The grant of a petition for rehearing vacates the decision and any opinion filed in the case. If the appellate division orders a rehearing, it may conduct further argument or may order the matter submitted for decision. Cal Rules of Ct 8.889(d).

§43.35 XV. CERTIFICATION AND TRANSFER FOR HEARING

The appellate division of the superior court may certify a case for transfer to the court of appeal on its own motion or on application of one of the parties when it appears necessary to secure uniformity of decision or to settle important questions of law. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1005. A majority of the appellate division judges who have been assigned to the case or who have decided the appeal, or any two of the appellate division judges if the case has not yet been assigned, may certify a case for transfer. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1005(a)(2).

Ø Note: The Rules of Court appear to contemplate that the appellate division may certify a case to the court of appeal without determining the appeal itself. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.1005(a)(2), (d). The authors, however, have never known of an instance in which this has happened.

A party may serve and file an application to certify a case for transfer any time after the record on appeal is filed in the appellate division and within 15 days of pronouncement of judgment or the filing of a modification order changing the appellate judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1005(b). The application must explain why transfer to the court of appeal is necessary. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1005(b)(2). See the sample form in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §43.4 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). Within 5 days of the filing of an application, any other party may serve and file an opposition. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1005(b)(3). No hearing will be held on an application. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1005(b)(4). A case may be certified for transfer any time after the record on appeal is filed in the appellate division and before the appellate division judgment is final. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1005(c)-(d). With some exceptions, an appellate division decision is final 30 days after the decision is filed. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.888, 8.1005(c).

If the appellate division orders certification, the clerk must promptly send a copy of the order to the court of appeal clerk, the parties, and the Attorney General. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1005(f). If the appellate division fails to certify a case for transfer to the court of appeal, it is considered a denial of the application. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1005(b)(4).

Ø Note: When a party wishes to apply for certification and also wants to request a rehearing, he or she should file a request for certification concurrently with the petition for rehearing. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.1005(b)(1). Any party served with a petition for rehearing who desires certification should file a request as soon as possible.

The court of appeal may order a case in the appellate division of the superior court transferred to itself following certification by the appellate division, or on its own motion, or on a party's petition, if it determines that transfer is necessary to secure uniformity of decision or to settle important questions of law. Pen C §1471; Cal Rules of Ct 8.1002, 8.1008(a). When the appellate division of the superior court denies a party's application to certify a case for transfer to the court of appeal and does not certify its decision for publication, the party may petition the court of appeal explaining why transfer is necessary. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1008(b). The petition to the court of appeal must be served and filed within 15 days after the appellate division judgment is final. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1008(b)(2). A party must not file an answer to a petition for transfer unless the court requests one. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1008(b)(4). The court of appeal may order the transfer within 20 days after the record on transfer, or petition for transfer, is filed in the court of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1008(c)(1). If the court of appeal does not timely order transfer, the transfer is considered denied. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1008(c)(3).

Ø Note: If a party applies to the appellate division of the superior court for certification of a case for transfer to the court of appeal and the appellate division denies the application or if it certifies the case but the court of appeal refuses the transfer, the party may petition for a writ of habeas corpus. In re Wallace (1970) 3 C3d 289, 292, 90 CR 176.

If the court of appeal grants a discretionary transfer of a case, it will place the matter on calendar for oral argument in that court (Cal Rules of Ct 8.1008(e)(2)) and decide the matter in due course. The court of appeal is required to decide all issues necessary to a resolution of the appeal when it grants a discretionary transfer. Snukal v Flightways Mfg. (2000) 23 C4th 754, 765, 98 CR2d 1. However, the court may specify the issues that are dispositive and the parties must limit their briefs to those issues and issues fairly included within them. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1008(e)(1). On reasonable notice, the court may order argument on other or fewer issues. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1008(e)(2). The court of appeal's decision is subject to review in the California Supreme Court in the same manner as any other court of appeal decision (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.500-8.552), except for the denial of transfer of a case from the appellate division of the superior court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(a)(1).

§43.36 XVI. PUBLICATION OF OPINIONS

The appellate divisions have authority to publish their opinions. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.887(c), 8.1105(c). However, such published opinions are automatically reviewed by the court of appeal in the same manner as if the appellate division had certified the case to the court of appeal. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.1002. Thus, if the opinion is published, no request for certification is necessary. For further discussion of certification, see §43.35.

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.37 XVII. FURTHER REVIEW OF JUDGMENT

As far as most misdemeanor cases are concerned, the appellate division is the end of the line unless the case is transferred to the court of appeal. See §43.35. Indeed, an unpublished and noncertified opinion will probably never be seen by any higher court. However, if the appellate division erred so greatly in its judgment that it exceeded its jurisdiction, the judgment then may be challenged by a petition for writ of mandate filed in the court of appeal. If the writ is denied, a petition for review may be filed in the supreme court. See Dvorin v Appellate Dep't (1975) 15 C3d 648, 125 CR 771; Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v Superior Court (1962) 57 C2d 450, 20 CR 321.

If a substantial federal issue is involved and state remedies are exhausted by filing a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the California Supreme Court (Larche v Simons (9th Cir 1995) 53 F3d 1068, 1072), a petition for writ of habeas corpus may be filed in federal district court or a writ of certiorari may be sought in the U.S. Supreme Court directly from the judgment. See Talley v California (1960) 362 US 60, 4 L Ed 2d 559, 80 S Ct 536. Important federal constitutional issues are often ignored in preparing misdemeanor appeals in favor of state court precedent. If a substantial federal question exists, it should be raised in addition to any applicable California issues.

XVIII. REMITTITUR

§43.38 A. When Remittitur Issues

The appellate division must issue a remittitur after a decision in an appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.890(a). The appellate division clerk issues the remittitur immediately after the court of appeal denies transfer or the period for granting transfer expires—or, if the case is transferred, on receiving the court of appeal remittitur. Cal Rules of Ct 8.890(b).

After a decision, the appellate division may direct the immediate issuance of a remittitur only on the stipulation of the parties. Cal Rules of Ct 8.890(c)(1). On its own motion or by motion or on stipulation of the parties, and for good cause, the court may stay the issuance of a remittitur for a reasonable period (Cal Rules of Ct 8.890(c)(2)), or recall the remittitur (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.890(c)(3)). Late issuance of a remittitur can be challenged but is not likely to result in a favorable decision unless prejudice can be shown. See Gallenkamp v Superior Court (1990) 221 CA3d 1, 270 CR 346 (no relief despite 17-month delay because defendants did nothing to assert their rights, no actual prejudice was shown, and no statutory or constitutional rights were violated). See also §19.36 on appellate review of speedy trial issues in misdemeanor cases.

The court may issue a bench warrant for the defendant if it is necessary to obtain personal jurisdiction of him or her in order to carry the judgment into effect, and if other means of contacting the defendant have been unsuccessful. Pen C §1265(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.39 B. Effect of Affirming Judgment

If a judgment of conviction is affirmed, the original judgment must be enforced. See Pen C §1263. The court has the authority, however, to reconsider a denial of probation or to modify the conditions of a probationary order to reflect a defendant's conduct while the case was being appealed. In re Medina (1983) 143 CA3d 562, 191 CR 783. Of course, if a judgment is only affirmed in part, then only the parts of the judgment affirmed are effective. If a judgment in the defendant's favor is affirmed, the original order remains in full force and effect.

Following a ruling on appeal that affirms a judgment, the trial court has the power to impose a jail sentence that was stayed at the defendant's request pending appeal. This is true even when the appeal process lasts longer than the probationary period. In re Bakke (1986) 42 C3d 84, 89, 227 CR 663 (court stayed execution of 60-day jail sentence pending appeal at defendant's request; therefore, defendant had consented to an extension of court's jurisdiction).

If the People prosecute an appeal of an order suppressing evidence to decision, the decision is binding on them. Pen C §1538.5(j).

© The Regents of the University of California

§43.40 C. Effect of Reversing Judgment; New Trial

If a judgment of conviction is reversed, the decision is considered an order for a new trial unless the appellate court states otherwise. If the appellate court, however, directs a final disposition of an action in the defendant's favor, the defendant must be released from custody or have bail exonerated, and any fines paid must be returned to the defendant. Pen C §1262. Reversal of a judgment or order leaves a proceeding in the same situation in which it stood before the entry of the order or judgment appealed, unless the reviewing court has directed otherwise (e.g., reversed with directions to enter a different order). Odlum v Duffy (1950) 35 C2d 562, 219 P2d 785.

If an appellate decision results in a new trial, then all other trial proceedings become a nullity, and the matter is conducted as if the first trial had not occurred. A defendant, however, may not be penalized for exercising the right to appeal. Thus, the prosecution may not add more serious charges than those of which the defendant was convicted (In re Bower (1985) 38 C3d 865, 876, 215 CR 267; In re David B. (1977) 68 CA3d 931, 137 CR 577), and the defendant may not receive a more severe punishment on a conviction following retrial (People v Henderson (1963) 60 C2d 482, 35 CR 77; People v Superior Court (Harris) (1990) 217 CA3d 1332, 266 CR 563).

Ø Note: The Double Jeopardy Clause of the U.S. Constitution does not necessarily preclude a more severe punishment after a reversal on appeal. North Carolina v Pearce (1969) 395 US 711, 23 L Ed 2d 656, 89 S Ct 2072. However, Henderson continues to be followed in California on state constitutional law grounds. People v Hanson (2000) 23 C4th 355, 365, 97 CR2d 58. For discussion, see Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases §5.25 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

An unauthorized sentence, however, may be set aside judicially and a proper sentence may be imposed by the trial court even if the second sentence is more severe than the original one. People v Serrato (1973) 9 C3d 753, 763, 109 CR 65, overruled on other grounds in People v Fosselman (1983) 33 C3d 572, 583 n1, 189 CR 855; People v Hill (1986) 185 CA3d 831, 836, 230 CR 109. But see People v Brown (1987) 193 CA3d 957, 238 CR 697 (criticizing Serrato).

This chapter is intended as a brief guide for practitioners handling noncapital felony appeals in state court. A more detailed treatment of this subject and other areas of appellate practice (including misdemeanor appeals, state and federal writs, and U.S. Supreme Court procedure) is found in Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases (3d ed Cal CEB 2007), cited hereafter as Appeals & Writs. See also chap 42 on state writs, chap 43 on misdemeanor appeals, and chap 45 on federal writs.

The materials in this chapter generally apply to juvenile delinquency appeals as well as adult felony appeals. With some exceptions, the California Rules of Court governing criminal appeals from the superior court apply as well to appeals from the juvenile court. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.4, 8.400-8.416. Effective July 1, 2010, Cal Rules of Ct 8.400-8.416, governing juvenile appeals, are renumbered and amended, and new Rules 8.401, 8.403, 8.404, 8.405, 8.406, 8.410, 8.411 are added.

For tactical or substantive discussions, defense counsel may wish to consult with the attorney of the day in the offices of the State Public Defender. The contract appellate offices, created under Cal Rules of Ct 8.300 (see list in §1.2), also offer varying degrees of support and assistance over the telephone, and some maintain websites offering valuable resources to defense attorneys involved in the appellate process. These include the California Appellate Project, Los Angeles (http://www.lacap.com); the Central California Appellate Program, or CCAP (http://www.capcentral.org); and the Sixth District Appellate Program (http://www.sdap.org). Prosecutors with questions about an appeal should contact the California Attorney General's office. Sample felony appeal forms are in California Criminal Law Forms Manual, chap 44 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

III. DEFENDANTS' APPEALS

§44.3 A. Right to Counsel; No Right to Self-Representation

There is no established federal constitutional right to appeal a criminal conviction. However, when that right is provided by state law—as it is in California—the federal Constitution guarantees an indigent defendant the right to counsel on appeal at public expense. See Douglas v California (1963) 372 US 353, 9 L Ed 2d 811, 83 S Ct 814 (felony cases); Halbert v Michigan (2005) 545 US 605, 162 L Ed 2d 552, 125 S Ct 2582 (appeal after guilty plea); Argersinger v Hamlin (1972) 407 US 25, 32 L Ed 2d 530, 92 S Ct 2006 (misdemeanor cases resulting in jail time); In re Barnett (2003) 31 C4th 466, 473, 3 CR3d 108; In re Kevin S. (2003) 113 CA4th 97, 6 CR3d 178. There is no Sixth Amendment right to self-representation on direct appeal. Martinez v Court of Appeal (2000) 528 US 152, 145 L Ed 2d 597, 120 S Ct 684.

Ø Note: Some courts take the view that a criminal defendant's trial counsel should not represent the defendant on appeal because the need to assess possible ineffective assistance of counsel issues creates "an inherent conflict" of interest. People v Bailey (1992) 9 CA4th 1252, 1253, 12 CR2d 339. But see People v Kipp (2001) 26 C4th 1100, 1139, 113 CR2d 27 (although it is not technically conflict of interest for same attorney to represent defendant on direct capital appeal and habeas, court policy is to appoint separate counsel).

§44.4 B. Alternatives to Appeal; Steps to Take in Conjunction With Appeal

In some circumstances, there are procedures that should be used instead of, or in addition to, an appeal.

Ø Warning: Counsel should be sure not to miss the deadline for filing a notice of appeal while researching or pursuing these alternatives.

Among the more important alternatives and additional procedures are:

- Under Pen C §1170(d), a trial court may, within 120 calendar days after the date of commitment, recall a prison commitment and resentence the defendant on its own motion. The new sentence cannot be greater than the original sentence. The trial court may recall a sentence under §1170(d) even when an appeal is pending. Portillo v Superior Court (1992) 10 CA4th 1829, 1834, 13 CR2d 709. While an appeal is pending, the trial court's power to recall extends only to resentencing, and not to modifying the judgment of conviction. People v Nelms (2008) 165 CA4th 1465, 1472, 82 CR3d 32 (court exceeded jurisdiction dismissing count, even with agreement of all parties). Although a defendant has no standing to bring a motion to recall his or her sentence (People v Chlad (1992) 6 CA4th 1719, 1724, 8 CR2d 610), he or she may informally request the trial court to initiate §1170(d) proceedings (see Dix v Superior Court (1991) 53 C3d 442, 465 n17, 279 CR 834; see also People v Laue (1982) 130 CA3d 1055, 1060, 182 CR 99). If the trial court refuses, however, its decision is not reviewable. Portillo v Superior Court, supra; People v Delson (1984) 161 CA3d 56, 62, 207 CR 244; People v Gainer (1982) 133 CA3d 636, 641, 184 CR 120. For further discussion, see §35.5.
- When a sentence is unauthorized by law, the trial court can correct it even if it has been entered in the minutes and the defendant has begun serving it. People v Culpepper (1994) 24 CA4th 1134, 29 CR2d 719; People v Chagolla (1983) 144 CA3d 422, 434, 193 CR 711. See §44.53.
- Clerical errors can be corrected by the trial court at any time—even while the case is on appeal—on the motion of a party or on the court's own motion. People v Mitchell (2001) 26 C4th 181, 185, 109 CR2d 303; In re Candelario (1970) 3 C3d 702, 705, 91 CR 497.
- A petition for writ of error coram nobis informs the trial court of the defendant's discovery of a new fact, unrelated to the merits, that would have affected the judgment. People v Dubon (2001) 90 CA4th 944, 950, 108 CR2d 914. It is essentially a form of nonstatutory "motion to vacate the judgment." 90 CA4th at 950. Such a petition is typically used to withdraw a guilty plea either induced by official promises that were not kept or entered without knowledge of essential facts. See, e.g., People v Welch (1964) 61 C2d 786, 40 CR 238 (guilty plea in capital case vacated on discovery of defendant's massive brain damage); In re Azurin (2001) 87 CA4th 20, 104 CR2d 284 (coram nobis was appropriate vehicle of relief when defendant was not advised of immigration consequences of plea); People v Cortez (1970) 13 CA3d 317, 332, 91 CR 660 (prosecutor inaccurately informed defendant that, by pleading guilty, he would receive treatment for mental condition). Although the grounds on which coram nobis are available are very limited, it is an important alternative because, unlike habeas corpus, coram nobis has no requirement that the petitioner still be in custody when the petition is filed. See People v Kim (2009) 45 C4th 1078, 1104, 90 CR3d 355.
- A petition for writ of error coram vobis is the same as coram nobis, except that it is addressed to an appellate court. In re Derek W. (1999) 73 CA4th 828, 831 n3, 86 CR2d 742. See also People v Welch (1964) 61 C2d 786, 790, 40 CR 238. The trial court lacks jurisdiction to grant coram nobis relief while an appeal is pending. People v Haynes (1969) 270 CA2d 318, 75 CR 800. In this situation the defendant should file a coram vobis petition, addressed to the appellate court. See generally Appeals & Writs, chap 11.
- A motion to vacate the conviction based on the trial court's violation of Pen C §1016.5(a) may be made when the trial court failed to ensure that a noncitizen defendant was advised before plea about each of three possible adverse immigration consequences: removal, exclusion from admission to the United States, and denial of naturalized citizenship. See, e.g., People v Superior Court (Zamudio) (2000) 23 C4th 183, 96 CR2d 463.
- A petition for writ of habeas corpus may be used in some situations, either in conjunction with an appeal or as an alternative to an appeal. See §44.27.

- It may sometimes be in the client's best interest not to appeal or otherwise challenge the judgment. For example, when the trial court has made sentencing errors that benefit the client, an appeal may give the appellate court an opportunity to correct those errors. See §44.53. Although trial counsel must advise an indigent defendant of grounds for reversal or modification of the judgment (Pen C §1240.1(a)), appellate counsel should never assume that a client has comprehended the potential adverse consequences of prevailing on appeal. Appellate counsel should use simple, everyday language to ensure that the client understands both the risks and the potential benefits of an appeal. Counsel should inform the client in writing of all potential adverse consequences.

If a notice of appeal already has been filed and the defendant decides not to pursue the appeal, counsel must file a written notice of abandonment. See §44.55.

C. Procedural Prerequisites to Appeal

1. Notice of Appeal

§44.5 a. Generally

A felony appeal is taken from a final judgment or appealable order of the superior court by filing a written notice of appeal with the clerk of that court within 60 calendar days after the judgment or order. Cal Rules of Ct 8.308(a). A similar procedure applies to juvenile appeals. Cal Rules of Ct 8.400(d) (before July 1, 2010); Cal Rules of Ct 8.400, 8.405, 8.406(a), effective July 1, 2010.

Ø Note: An optional form for the notice of appeal, Judicial Council Form CR-120 (Notice of Appeal—Felony (Defendant) (Criminal)), is available on the Judicial Council's website (http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/forms).

The notice of appeal is usually filed by trial counsel. See §41.5 for discussion of counsel's duties concerning the notice of appeal.

Ø Note: Though discouraged as an inefficient practice, unless a local rule has been promulgated to the contrary, a pro se defendant may file a notice of appeal in a criminal case with the courtroom clerk of the judge who imposed sentence. In re Gray (2009) 179 CA4th 1189, 1200, 102 CR3d 551.

As a general rule, once an appeal is filed and sentence commenced, the trial court loses jurisdiction over the case. See People v Alanis (2008) 158 CA4th 1467, 1476, 71 CR3d 139 (with appeal pending, trial court had no jurisdiction to recall sentence, permit withdrawal of plea, hold court trial, and enter new judgment despite consent of all parties). The effect of appeal on the trial court's jurisdiction is discussed in §41.3. See also §44.4 on the trial court's jurisdiction to modify sentence within 120 calendar days of the date of commitment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.6 b. After Guilty or Nolo Contendere Plea

Generally, by pleading guilty or nolo contendere, or by admitting a probation violation, the defendant implicitly waives issues that could otherwise be raised on appeal. See, e.g., People v Ramirez (2008) 159 CA4th 1412, 1427, 72 CR3d 340. Although complex rules govern what issues may be raised on appeal following such a plea or admission (see §§44.8-44.13), there are two categories of exceptions to the general rule of waiver, both of which require the filing of a notice of appeal. One category requires the defendant to obtain a "certificate of probable cause" from the trial court as well; the other does not.

Certificate of probable cause. Unless the ground for appeal is one of the specifically enumerated issues known as "non-certificate" grounds, an appeal after a guilty plea requires the defendant to obtain a "certificate of probable cause" from the trial court. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.304(b)(1). The defendant must file both a notice of appeal and a statement in support of a certificate of probable cause, i.e., a written statement, executed under oath or penalty of perjury, stating appropriate grounds for the appeal. Pen C §1237.5; Cal Rules of Ct 8.304(b). See §44.10. The application for a certificate of probable cause is not the equivalent of the notice of appeal. The statement must be filed with the notice of appeal within 60 days of the judgment. Cal Rules of Court 8.304(b), 8.308(a).

> Ø Note: At least one appellate court has observed the contrast between Rule 8.304(b)(1), which indicates what materials must be filed but does not indicate when, and Rule 8.308(a), which imposes a 60-day filing requirement for both the notice of appeal and the statement in support of a certificate of probable cause but does not require that they be filed together. See Drake v Superior Court (2009) 175 CA4th 1462, 1465, 97 CR3d 323 (because rules unclear, due process demands that writ of mandate issue directing trial court to vacate untimeliness order and to consider defendant's application for certificate of probable cause).

Many issues are simply not cognizable on appeal following a plea of guilty or nolo contendere even if a certificate of probable cause is obtained. People v DeVaughn (1977) 18 C3d 889, 895, 135 CR 786. For a chart showing what issues are and are not appealable with a certificate of probable cause, see §44.13. Certificates of probable cause are discussed in more detail in §§44.8-44.13.

Noncertificate grounds. The second exception to the rule of waiver exists when the appeal is limited to noncertificate grounds. A defendant need not seek a certificate of probable cause if the appeal is based on:

- Grounds that arose after the entry of the plea and that do not challenge its validity (e.g., sentencing errors); and
- The denial of a motion to suppress evidence under Pen C §1538.5. Cal Rules of Ct 8.304(b)(4).

The notice of appeal must state that it is based on noncertificate grounds; otherwise the appeal may simply be dismissed. People v Jones (1995) 10 C4th 1102, 43 CR2d 464, overruled on other grounds in In re Chavez (2003) 30 C4th 643, 656, 134 CR2d 54; People v Way (2003) 113 CA4th 733, 736, 6 CR3d 644.

As long as some noncertificate ground is specified in the notice of appeal, the defendant may raise additional noncertificate grounds on appeal that were not specified. People v Jones, supra (although notice of appeal specified only denial of motion to suppress as ground for appeal, defendant's challenge to probation condition was also cognizable). The defendant may not, however, raise grounds requiring a certificate of probable cause without also obtaining the certificate.

When the superior court receives a late notice of appeal (see §44.5), the clerk must mark it "Received [date] but not filed" and notify the party who submitted it that it was not filed, because it was late. Cal Rules of Ct 8.308(c). If the clerk mistakenly files the late notice of appeal, the appellate court must dismiss the appeal, either on a party's motion or on its own. People v Mendez (1999) 19 C4th 1084, 1094, 81 CR2d 301. Although Cal Rules of Ct 8.60(d) generally allows a reviewing court, for good cause, to relieve a party who fails to comply with an appellate rule from the consequences of that default, relief is not available for failure to timely file a notice of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.60(d). See People v Ramirez (2008) 159 CA4th 1412, 1427, 72 CR3d 340. There are, however, two recognized situations in which a notice of appeal filed more than 60 calendar days after the judgment is considered timely under the doctrine of "constructive filing":

- When an incarcerated defendant delivers a notice of appeal to prison authorities within the 60-day period, but the superior court clerk does not receive it until after the period has expired. In re Jordan (1992) 4 C4th 116, 130, 13 CR2d 878; Cal Rules of Ct 8.308(e).

  Ø Note: The incarcerated defendant bears the burden of demonstrating that he or she timely delivered the notice of appeal to prison authorities. In re Jordan, supra.

- When an incarcerated defendant reasonably relies on counsel's promise or representation that counsel will timely file a notice of appeal on the defendant's behalf, but counsel fails to do so. In re Benoit (1973) 10 C3d 72, 109 CR 785; People v Zarazua (2009) 179 CA4th 1054, 1061, 101 CR3d 902. But see People v Aguilar (2003) 112 CA4th 111, 4 CR3d 802 (constructive filing did not apply when defendants were not incarcerated).

The appellate court rules on the applicability of the constructive filing doctrine to a particular case. Zarazua, 179 CA4th at 1062. Such relief may be requested by way of a petition for a writ of habeas corpus (In re Benoit (1973) 10 C3d 72, 78, 109 CR 785) or by filing a motion (Zarazua, supra). If the appellate court will not consider the notice of appeal to have been constructively filed, the defendant's only other remedy is a petition for writ of habeas corpus alleging that trial counsel's failure to timely file the appeal deprived the defendant of the constitutional right to the effective assistance of counsel. See Roe v Flores-Ortega (2000) 528 US 470, 145 L Ed 2d 985, 120 S Ct 1029. See also People v Byron (2009) 170 CA4th 657, 664, 88 CR3d 386 (given possible ineffective-assistance claim, untimely notice of appeal construed as petition for writ of habeas corpus). (On the preparation and filing of a habeas corpus petition, see chap 42.)

Ø Warning: "California imposes on trial counsel a per se duty to consult with defendants about the possibility of an appeal." Roe v Flores-Ortega (2000) 528 US 470, 479, 145 L Ed 2d 985, 996, 120 S Ct 1029. Trial counsel's failure to file a timely notice when the defendant requested it can result in State Bar discipline. See In re Benoit (1973) 10 C3d 72, 88, 109 CR 785. Counsel should be particularly careful about calendaring these deadlines and, if he or she will not be filing the notice, should notify the defendant in writing of that fact.

Ø Note: The best practice is for trial counsel to bring the notice of appeal—and for indigent clients, a request for appointment of counsel—to court when the defendant is sentenced and to file it before leaving the courthouse. Many attorneys always file a notice of appeal from any conviction. When an appeal is not filed, defense counsel should record in the file the reason it was not, e.g., the defendant asked that an appeal not be filed.

In certain circumstances, an appeal by the prosecution can reinstate the defendant's lapsed opportunity to seek appellate review. See Pen C §1238.5.

On the consequences of untimely filing of a statement of reasonable grounds for appeal under Pen C §1237.5, see §44.11.

2. Certificate of Probable Cause

§44.8 a. When Required; Exceptions

A defendant must generally obtain a certificate of probable cause when appealing from a judgment of conviction following a plea of guilty or nolo contendere or from a revocation of probation based on an admission of violation. Pen C §1237.5(b); Cal Rules of Ct 8.304(b); People v Puente (2008) 165 CA4th 1143, 1149, 81 CR3d 380; People v Navarro (2008) 161 CA4th 1100, 1105, 74 CR3d 828. The certificate requirement does not apply if the appeal is based solely on grounds (1) occurring after entry of the plea that do not challenge its validity or (2) involving a search or seizure, the validity of which was contested under Pen C §1538.5. Pen C §1237.5(b); Cal Rules of Ct 8.304(b); People v Young (2000) 77 CA4th 827, 91 CR2d 916. See the chart in §44.13 for case law on whether particular issues may be raised on appeal without a certificate of probable cause, are cognizable on appeal only if a certificate has been obtained, or simply are not cognizable at all.

When the requirement of a certificate of probable cause applies, it cannot be waived by the court. People v Mendez (1999) 19 C4th 1084, 1098, 81 CR2d 301; People v Thurman (2007) 157 CA4th 36, 41, 68 CR3d 425.

§44.9 b. Effect on Appealable Issues

Although a defendant must obtain a certificate of probable cause to proceed on appeal (unless the appeal raises only noncertificate grounds), the defendant is not limited to issues specified by the trial court in the certificate, or even to the issues specified in the defendant's statement of reasonable grounds for issuance of the certificate. Once the trial court has timely issued a certificate of probable cause, the defendant may argue any cognizable issue whether or not it was identified in the statement or the certificate. People v Hoffard (1995) 10 C4th 1170, 43 CR2d 827.

By the same token, an issue that is not cognizable on appeal after a guilty plea does not become cognizable just because the trial court erroneously grants a certificate of probable cause for that issue. In re Chavez (2003) 30 C4th 643, 649, 134 CR2d 54; People v Panizzon (1996) 13 C4th 68, 51 CR2d 851; People v Kaanehe (1977) 19 C3d 1, 9, 136 CR 409; People v DeVaughn (1977) 18 C3d 889, 896, 135 CR 786. The chart in §44.13 lists common issues that are not appealable following a guilty plea.

If the defendant pleads guilty in reliance on an erroneous representation that a given issue could be raised in a subsequent appeal, the appellate courts will usually reverse the judgment and remand it to the trial court to permit the defendant to withdraw his or her guilty plea. People v Geitner (1982) 139 CA3d 252, 255, 188 CR 486 (admissibility of extrajudicial statement); People v Haven (1980) 107 CA3d 983, 167 CR 376 (denial of defendant's motion to sever).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.9A c. Effect on Waiver of Right to Appeal

When a defendant has expressly waived the right to appeal issues that would normally be appealable even after a guilty plea, a certificate of probable cause will not salvage those issues for appeal. See People v Charles (1985) 171 CA3d 552, 217 CR 402 (defendant waived right to appeal Pen C §1538.5 ruling as part of negotiated plea).

The terms of a plea bargain sometimes include a general waiver of the right to appeal. Such waivers are valid if voluntarily and intelligently made. See, e.g., People v Vargas (1993) 13 CA4th 1653, 17 CR2d 445. The scope of a general waiver will ordinarily include errors occurring before, but not after, the waiver. 13 CA4th at 1661. If, however, the defendant agrees to a plea bargain that includes a specific sentence, and if that is the sentence actually imposed, the defendant's waiver will foreclose appellate review of the sentence; any challenge to the sentence will be deemed a challenge to an integral component of the bargain. See People v Panizzon (1996) 13 C4th 68, 51 CR2d 851; In re Uriah R. (1999) 70 CA4th 1152, 83 CR2d 314; People v Nguyen (1993) 13 CA4th 114, 16 CR2d 490. Such a waiver will not preclude claims that the trial court imposed a sentence in excess of its fundamental jurisdiction, or violated the terms of the bargain. However, the waiver will bar review of alleged error in the computation or imposition of the sentence. In re Uriah R., supra; People v Nguyen, supra.

Certificates of probable cause are obtained from the trial court. To obtain one, the defendant must timely file a written statement, executed under oath or penalty of perjury, showing reasonable constitutional, jurisdictional, or other grounds going to the legality of the proceedings. Pen C §1237.5(a); Cal Rules of Ct 8.304(b); People v Mendez (1999) 19 C4th 1084, 81 CR2d 301. On what constitutes "timely" filing of the statement, see §§44.6, 44.11.

A defendant who has obtained a certificate of probable cause may raise any cognizable issue on appeal, even if that issue was neither listed in his or her statement of reasonable grounds nor specified in the certificate. See §44.9. Nonetheless, because the trial court will decide whether to issue a certificate of probable cause on the basis of the statement of grounds for appeal, counsel should include in the statement all issues that may be raised on appeal in the statement of probable cause. A sample application for a certificate of probable cause appears in Appeals & Writs §§2.33-2.35.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.11 e. When to File

The request for a certificate of probable cause must be filed with the notice of appeal within 60 days of the judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 8.304(b), 8.308(a). For additional discussion, see §44.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.12 f. Review

Defense counsel can challenge a trial court's refusal to issue a certificate of probable cause by filing a petition for writ of mandate in the court of appeal. In re Brown (1973) 9 C3d 679, 683, 108 CR 801, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendez (1999) 19 C4th 1084, 1097, 81 CR2d 301. See also Drake v Superior Court (2009) 175 CA4th 1462, 1465, 97 CR3d 323 (writ issued directing trial court to consider application for probable cause on merits or on procedural grounds other than timeliness) (see §44.6); Lara v Superior Court (1982) 133 CA3d 436, 183 CR 796 (writ of mandate issued to compel trial court to issue a certificate of probable cause); People v Nigro (1974) 39 CA3d 506, 114 CR 213 (appeal from order denying certificate of probable cause treated as petition for writ of mandate). On preparing and filing a mandate petition, see chap 42.

Inadequate advisement of rights when admitting prior conviction (Yurko error).	People v Breckenridge (1992) 5 CA4th 1096, 8 CR2d 1, overruled on other grounds in In re Chavez (2003) 30 C4th 643, 657 n6, 134 CR2d 54.
Conviction for both stealing and receiving same property.	People v Jones (1995) 33 CA4th 1087, 39 CR2d 530.
Challenge to sentence negotiated as part of plea bargain.	People v Cuevas (2008) 44 C4th 374, 79 CR3d 303 (Pen C §654 challenge to term within specified maximum sentence); People v Shelton (2006) 37 C4th 759, 763, 37 CR3d 354 (Pen C §654 challenge to imposition of specified maximum sentencing "lid"); People v Panizzon (1996) 13 C4th 68, 78, 51 CR2d 851 (claim of cruel and unusual punishment); People v Hodges (2009) 174 CA4th 1096, 1104, 94 CR3d 862 (challenge to sentence enhancement imposed after plea); People v Rushing (2008) 168 CA4th 354, 85 CR3d 437 (claim of cruel and unusual punishment for imposition of agreed-on maximum); People v Puente (2008) 165 CA4th 1143, 81 CR3d 380 (challenge to imposition of Vargas and Cruz waivers); People v McNight (1985) 171 CA3d 620, 624, 217 CR 393 (claim that trial court should have considered mitigating circumstances).

Inapplicability of enhancement imposed as part of plea bargain. (Conflict among courts of appeal on this point suggests that counsel should be safe and seek certificate.)	Compare People v Loera (1984) 159 CA3d 992, 998, 206 CR 60 (certificate not required to challenge "unlawful" sentence), with People v Arwood (1985) 165 CA3d 167, 172, 211 CR 307 (certificate required because challenge is to validity of plea). See also People v Jones (1995) 33 CA4th 1087, 39 CR2d 530 (discussing both cases and following Arwood).
Claim of procedural irregularity in obtaining admission to enhancement.	People v Fulton (2009) 179 CA4th 1230, 1235, 102 CR3d 229.

(2) Issues appealable without certificate of probable cause:

Denial of motion to withdraw guilty plea, when motion did not challenge validity of plea.	People v Delles (1968) 69 C2d 906, 73 CR 389 (challenge to imposition of sentence contrary to plea bargain without giving defendant opportunity to withdraw plea).
Search and seizure.	Pen C §1538.5(m); People v West (1970) 3 C3d 595, 601, 91 CR 385 (search issue raised only at preliminary hearing cannot be reviewed on appeal unless defense renewed motion in superior court); People v Lilienthal (1978) 22 C3d 891, 150 CR 910 (trial court unification has not abrogated renewal requirement); People v Garrido (2005) 127 CA4th 359, 25 CR3d 494 (admission or confession attacked in trial court as product of unlawful arrest or search may be pursued on appeal after guilty plea); People v DeVaughn (1977) 18 C3d 889, 896 n6, 135 CR 786; People v Brown (1981) 119 CA3d 116, 173 CR 877; People v Massey (1976) 59 CA3d 777, 780, 130 CR 581.

(3) Issues not appealable even with certificate of probable cause:

Constitutional invalidity of prior conviction that was element of current offense.	People v La Jocies (1981) 119 CA3d 947, 956, 174 CR 100 (guilty plea to possession of firearm by ex-felon).

D. Communicating With Client

§44.14 1. First Contact

Appellate counsel often enter felony cases before meeting their clients, frequently after the clients have been sent to state prison. In such cases, one of counsel's first steps should be to write a letter to the client. The letter should introduce counsel to the client; briefly explain the appellate process (including that it takes an average of 18 months for a criminal appeal to be resolved); ask the client to describe any issues he or she thinks should be raised; and invite the client to contact counsel by letter or collect telephone call with any questions about the appellate process, counsel's background and qualifications, and about the case itself. The letter should be written in the plainest possible language, avoiding legal jargon.

Ø Note: For help in finding a current address for a client in the state prison system, call the Inmate Locator in Sacramento at (916) 445-6713. You will need the number assigned to the client by the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) ("CDC number") or the client's date of birth. The Department will provide you with the prisoner's location and mailing address, but not his or her release date. This number operates 24 hours a day.

Counsel should consider having a policy of accepting all collect calls from imprisoned clients, except the most obstreperous. Counsel may also contact the client's prison "counselor" or "case manager" to arrange phone calls to the client.

Clients often hope or even expect that counsel will visit the prison to meet with them. While prison visits can be reassuring to the client, they are not generally necessary to appellate litigation. Particularly given the remote locations of certain state prisons, such as Susanville and Pelican Bay, prison visits can consume a disproportionate amount of counsel's time and the financial resources available for the appeal. In noncapital court-appointed cases, counsel will not be paid for time or reimbursed for expenses incurred in visiting a client in prison unless a case-specific reason for the visit exists and the supervising appellate project authorizes the visit in advance. When appellate counsel is privately retained, the client and the client's family will likely agree that a prison visit is not the best use of limited resources.

However, in some situations, a prison visit with the client is advisable and can be essential. Examples include investigation of an issue to be raised on habeas corpus in which the client's personal knowledge and recollection is important; discussion of a complex and sensitive decision about whether to dismiss the appeal; and, most important, communication with a client who is actually or functionally illiterate. When a prison visit is called for, appointed counsel should immediately seek authorization from the supervising appellate project.

All counsel must contact the prison to arrange for a "legal visit" and to learn the applicable rules. The schedules and rules governing legal visits vary greatly from prison to prison and can include such details as clothing colors a visitor is not allowed to wear, the number of keys a visitor is allowed to carry, and how much money a visitor can bring in.

Contact information for all California state prisons is available on the CDCR's website at http://www.cdcr.ca.gov/Visitors/index.html.

When going to see a client in prison, counsel should make sure to bring any necessary documents. For example, if a habeas petition is a possibility, counsel should bring any necessary release forms. If counsel will be advising the client to dismiss the appeal, the reasons for that advice should be brought in writing to be given to the client and a dismissal form should be brought for the client's signature.

Ø Note: It is considered courteous for visiting counsel to offer to buy the incarcerated client a soda or other snack from the vending machines often located in the visiting area.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.15 2. While Appeal Is Pending

Counsel must keep the client reasonably informed about significant developments in the case and promptly comply with reasonable requests for information. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-500. Counsel should provide the client with a copy of every brief and other substantive document filed on the client's behalf, and, if the client desires, copies of the Attorney General's briefs as well.

The more often counsel corresponds with clients, the more confidence clients generally have in the quality of counsel's representation. When the client is asked to send or return a document, counsel should enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Including such envelopes in every letter can also help foster a positive relationship and reduce time lags in correspondence.

> Ø Note: In child molestation and other sensitive cases, counsel probably should not discuss the charges or facts of the case in letters with the client. The client also may wish to have copies of the briefs sent to a friend or relative, rather than directly to the client. Inmates convicted of child molestation have been beaten and killed in prison.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.16 3. At Conclusion of Case

Promptly notify client of decision. Defense counsel must promptly notify the client of the court's decision. It is common for counsel to mail the defendant a copy of the opinion. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-500, 3-700(A)(2); but see Note in §44.15 on exception for child molestation cases.

When appeal is successful. If the appeal is successful, counsel should consider making extra efforts to contact the client right away by, for example, contacting the client's counselor or case manager to arrange for a telephone conversation, either by direct or collect call. This is not simply because the client is entitled to get the good news as soon as possible. Unfortunately, good fortune can arouse jealousy and ill-will in other prisoners for which the client should be prepared. In addition, a client can become so excited by good news that he or she stops managing his or her own behavior in the careful manner demanded by life inside. Thus, when conveying news of a positive outcome, counsel should advise the client to remain calm and circumspect and remind the client that it could be several weeks or even months before the client can actually enjoy the effects of victory.

Appellate counsel should be sure to follow up the favorable judgment in whatever way is necessary to ensure an expeditious conclusion.

> Ø Note: Penal Code §1382(a)(2) requires that the criminal action against a previously convicted defendant be dismissed if he or she is not brought to trial within 60 days after the trial court and prosecutor are given notice of an appellate order which "in effect" grants the defendant a new trial. This time limit is extended to 90 days if the reversal is from a conviction on a guilty plea entered into before a preliminary hearing and the prosecutor elects to resubmit the case for preliminary hearing. Appellate counsel should consider promptly filing and serving the requisite notice to expedite the final resolution of a successful appeal.

When appeal is unsuccessful. If the appellate court did not grant the relief the appellant sought, counsel should send the client a letter explaining the client's right to pursue the matter further (e.g., by seeking direct review in a higher court or by filing a state or federal habeas corpus petition). If counsel will not be seeking further review on the client's behalf, counsel should usually send the entire record (clerk's and reporter's transcripts) to the appellant. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(D)(1).

> Ø Note: In some cases, the client may not want the transcripts sent to him or her. The client may wish to prevent others in the prison from learning the nature of the case, especially if it involves a sex offense against a child.

When counsel's appointment or retainer does not include proceeding to the next stage (i.e., the state supreme court or federal court), but the client's case may have some chance of success there, many attorneys view it as their duty to the client, or at least a necessary kindness, to prepare a simple pleading, such as a petition for review or federal habeas petition, for the client to file in propria persona.

§44.17 E. Communicating With Trial Counsel

Early on, appellate counsel should contact the lawyer(s) who represented the client at trial in order to get their view of the proceedings below and their ideas about potential issues on appeal. Trial counsel can be an invaluable source of ideas about the case, and may have set up issues for appeal—ideas and issues that appellate counsel might otherwise miss from just reviewing the transcripts.

It is worthwhile to attempt to develop a cordial and cooperative relationship with trial counsel early in the process. Although both trial and appellate counsel represent the same client, albeit at different stages of the proceedings, they do not always view themselves as a team. The ever-present possibility that appellate counsel will assert (either on direct appeal, or in a related habeas proceeding) that trial counsel provided ineffective assistance leads some trial counsel to become defensive and to refuse to assist appellate counsel and their common client. In negotiating this sometimes tricky relationship with trial counsel, tact and kindness are useful tools for the appellate advocate.

Appellate counsel should ask to review or copy trial counsel's file. A recalcitrant trial attorney should be gently reminded that the file is the property of the client, not the attorney, and that "a trial attorney is obligated to turn over the litigation file to the client or new counsel once that attorney's representation has terminated." In re Steele (2004) 32 C4th 682, 693, 10 CR3d 536; see California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1992-127. If the trial lawyer still refuses to cooperate, however, appellate counsel should send a formal demand letter and consider seeking a motion to compel. See the sample form in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §44.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). Often, just telling trial counsel that a motion to compel will be filed if the file is not turned over will be enough to achieve the desired result.

§44.18 F. Bail on Appeal

In theory, a convicted defendant must be released on bail pending appeal as long as the defendant establishes by "clear and convincing evidence" that (Pen C §1272.1):

- He or she is not likely to flee;
- He or he does not pose a danger to any person or to the community; and
- The appeal is not for the purpose of delay and raises a substantial legal question which (if the defendant prevails) is likely to result in reversal.

In practice, however, courts rarely exercise their discretion to grant bail on appeal, and challenges to a trial court's refusal to grant bail are seldom successful.

After a review of the merits of the case, if it appears that bail pending appeal is a possibility, the matter should be discussed with the client. A motion for bail on appeal is made to the trial court in the first instance. Cal Rules of Ct 8.312(b). See chap 5, §41.6 for discussion of bail.

If bail on appeal was denied or set too high in the trial court, counsel may file an application for bail or to reduce bail on appeal in the appellate court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.312(a). The application is served on both the district attorney and the Attorney General. Cal Rules of Ct 8.312(c). A sample application for bail pending appeal is in Appeals & Writs §4.46.

§44.18A G. Motions on Appeal

A substantive motion filed in a reviewing court must be accompanied by a memorandum of law and proof of service on all other parties. Cal Rules of Ct 8.25(a)(2), 8.54(a)(2). Any opposition to a motion must be served and filed within 15 days after the motion is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.54(a)(3). An adverse party who fails to file a written opposition may be deemed to consent to the court's granting the motion. Cal Rules of Ct 8.54(c).

The first page of either a motion or an opposition should contain the name, address, phone number, and State Bar number of the attorney filing the motion. Cal Rules of Ct 8.40(c), 8.204(b)(10)(D). The original and all copies must be printed on recycled paper. Cal Rules of Ct 8.40(a), 8.204(b)(1). The number of copies required by Cal Rules of Ct 8.44(a)-(b) (three copies in the court of appeal; eight copies in the supreme court) should accompany the original.

The reviewing court may rule on the motion at any time after an opposition or other response is filed or the deadline for opposition passes. Cal Rules of Ct 8.54(b).

Ø Note: On its own or a party's motion, the court may place a motion on the calendar for oral argument. Cal Rules of Ct 8.54(b)(2). This rarely happens.

For discussion of motions for extension of time, see §44.31.

H. Record on Appeal

§44.19 1. Appeal Is Based on Record

Appeal is based on record. Matters not part of the record cannot be considered on appeal, even if counsel gives the court affidavits to support the new information. People v Szeto (1981) 29 C3d 20, 35, 171 CR 652. See also Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(a) ("appellant's opening brief must … [p]rovide a summary of the significant facts limited to matters in the record"); People v Collie (1981) 30 C3d 43, 57 n10, 177 CR 458 (declarations concerning facts not in record will be stricken); People v Green (1979) 95 CA3d 991, 1001, 157 CR 520 (appellant's burden to provide adequate appellate record). The items that must be included in the record on appeal are covered in §44.20.

Right to transcript on appeal. The federal Constitution guarantees indigent defendants convicted of felonies the right to a free transcript on appeal or an adequate substitute. Roberts v La Vallee (1967) 389 US 40, 19 L Ed 2d 41, 88 S Ct 194. California law goes further and guarantees both indigent and nonindigent defendants in felony cases the right to a record of sufficient completeness for proper review, furnished at state expense. In re Armstrong (1981) 126 CA3d 565, 570, 178 CR 902.

Appellant must ensure that record is adequate. The appellant bears the burden of ensuring that an adequate appellate record is provided. People v Barton (1978) 21 C3d 513, 518, 146 CR 727; People v Green (1979) 95 CA3d 991, 1001, 157 CR 520. When appellate counsel fails to ensure that the record is sufficient for full consideration and resolution of the appeal, he or she has provided constitutionally ineffective assistance. People v Barton, supra.

What constitutes an "adequate record" is determined by the issues to be decided on appeal in a given case. At a minimum, however, certain items must be included in any appellate record. The items are referred to as the "normal record," discussed in §44.20. In contrast, material that was not before the trial court cannot be part of the appellate record and generally cannot be considered by the court deciding the appeal, even if counsel provides the appellate court with affidavits or other means or proving up new material. People v Szeto (1981) 29 C3d 20, 35, 171 CR 652. See also Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(a)(2)(B); People v Collie (1981) 30 C3d 43, 57 n10, 177 CR 458 (declarations concerning facts not in the record will be stricken). But see §44.26A on judicial notice on appeal.

This does not mean, however, that appellate counsel is simply limited to what appears in the transcripts that are initially processed by the clerk. Various methods of expanding the appellate record to include matters not in the original transcripts are discussed in §§44.22-44.23A (augmentation of record), §44.24 (correction of record), and §44.25 (settled statements). Also, material not tendered in the trial court can be presented to the appellate courts through other procedural vehicles, such as a habeas corpus petition. For discussion of habeas corpus in the state courts, see chap 42 and Appeals & Writs, chaps 9-10.

§44.20 2. What Record Should Include

The California Rules of Court use the term "normal record" to refer to items that must be included in the record in every criminal appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.320(a), (d). The normal appellate record consists principally of the clerk's transcript and the reporter's transcript on appeal.

Ø Note: The "normal record" does not include transcripts of jury voir dire proceedings or counsels' opening statements. These omissions can be unfortunate for appellate counsel who did not also represent the client at trial because matters of potential significance on appeal often take place during those early parts of the trial. Such material can include motions, such as Batson-Wheeler motions alleging invidious discrimination in jury selection; objections, such as one asserting prosecutorial misconduct in the opening statement; and other errors. See, e.g., People v Johnson (2004) 119 CA4th 976, 14 CR3d 780 (judge committed reversible error by amplifying on reasonable doubt instruction during voir dire). Appellate counsel should be particularly careful to check the clerk's minutes in the clerk's transcript, and to consult recollections of trial counsel and the client, to ascertain whether the reporter's transcript is complete and whether augmentation is needed.

Ø Practice tip: The Ninth Circuit has held that when a defendant presents a "plausible" Batson-Wheeler claim, the U.S. Constitution requires that the record on appeal include a complete transcript of the jury voir dire. Boyd v Newland (9th Cir 2006) 467 F3d 1139, 1150. In these instances, the record should (but rarely does) include juror questionnaires, since the "questionnaire is a part of the voir dire itself." Lesher Communications, Inc. v Superior Court (1990) 224 CA3d 774, 778, 274 CR 154; Bellas v Superior Court (2000) 85 CA4th 636, 640 n2, 102 CR2d 380.

The local rules of some courts of appeal automatically augment the normal record to include additional material. See, e.g., 1st App Dist Local R 6 (Marsden hearings, specified pretrial motions); 2d App Dist Local R 1 (jury selection when Batson-Wheeler motion made; counsel's opening statements; waivers of constitutional rights; proceedings involving guilty or nolo contendere pleas and sentencing; and certain pretrial proceedings). On completing or augmenting the reporter's transcript, see §§44.21-44.23A.

Ø Note: Juvenile appeals have a different normal record. Cal Rules of Ct 8.404 (amended and renumbered as Cal Rules of Ct 8.407, effective July 1, 2010).

Clerk's transcript. The clerk's transcript is a compendium of various documents filed in the trial court, such as orders of the court, motions and briefs, the clerk's daily minutes, copies of jury instructions, the verdict, confidential probation reports, and confidential court-ordered diagnostic and psychological reports. The specific content required by law depends on the nature of the appeal. The items that the clerk's transcript must contain in a defendant's appeal from a judgment of conviction or a People's appeal from an order granting a new trial are listed in Cal Rules of Ct 8.320(b). The items required in a People's appeal from a judgment on a demurrer to the accusatory pleading, or a People's or defendant's appeal from an appealable order other than an order on a motion for a new trial, are listed in Cal Rules of Ct 8.320(d).

Reporter's transcript. The reporter's transcript is the verbatim record of official trial proceedings. The items that must be included in this transcript in a defendant's appeal from a judgment of conviction or a People's appeal from an order granting a new trial are listed in Cal Rules of Ct 8.320(c). In other appeals, the normal record includes a reporter's transcript of any proceedings incident to the judgment or order being appealed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.320(d).

Exhibits. The record officially includes exhibits admitted in evidence, refused or lodged, but these are not copied and transmitted to the parties. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.320(e). An exception is made for transcripts of taped or videotaped recordings furnished to the trial judge or jury; these transcripts, commonly designated as trial exhibits, along with the tapes themselves must be included in the clerk's transcript. Cal Rules of Ct 8.320(b)(11). On viewing exhibits and having them transmitted to the reviewing court, see §44.26.

When there has been a trial on the merits, the superior court clerk must ordinarily begin preparing the clerk's transcript, and the reporter must start preparing the reporter's transcript, immediately after a finding or verdict of guilt is announced; when the appeal is from a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, or from the admission of a probation violation, preparation must begin immediately after a notice of appeal or certificate of probable cause is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.336(a)-(d). Deadlines for completing these transcripts are set forth in §42.2. See also Cal Rules of Ct 8.336(b)-(d). Extensions of time are governed by Cal Rules of Ct 8.336(e). Once the transcripts are certified as correct, the clerk must send the originals to the reviewing court and copies to the Attorney General or the district attorney (whichever is counsel for the People on appeal) and to the defendant's appellate counsel (or to the district appellate project if the defendant is not represented by appellate counsel when the transcripts are certified). Cal Rules of Ct 8.336(f). Transcripts must comply with Cal Rules of Ct 8.144, 8.328, 8.336.

Ø Note: The confidential transcript of any Marsden hearing, held on a defendant's request to replace one court-appointed attorney with another (see People v Marsden (1970) 2 C3d 118, 84 CR 156), must be sent as part of the record to the reviewing court and to the defendant's appellate counsel. The Attorney General does not receive the transcript of a Marsden hearing unless the defendant raises a Marsden issue in the opening brief. Even then, the defendant may seek to shield confidential material in the transcript from the Attorney General. Cal Rules of Ct 8.328(b).

§44.21 4. Determining Whether Record Is Complete; Informal Notice of Incomplete Record

Appellate counsel should check the record closely to make sure that all items designated as part of the "normal record" by Cal Rules of Ct 8.320 and any pertinent local rules are, in fact, included in the copy received by counsel and that they are legible. If an item listed as part of the normal record was omitted, counsel can informally ask the clerk to prepare the missing item, certify it, and transmit it as an augmentation to the record without the need for a court order. Cal Rules of Ct 8.155(b), 8.340(b). See generally Appeals & Writs §3.7.

This type of notice is usually in the form of a letter addressed to the criminal appeals section of the superior court. Copies should be served on opposing counsel and on the reviewing court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.155(b).

As an alternative to the informal notice, or if the clerk or reporter fails to comply within 10 days, counsel may file a motion for augmentation. Cal Rules of Ct 8.155(a)-(b), 8.320(d). On motions for augmentation, see §44.23.

> Ø Note: Local rules of courts of appeal may require counsel to utilize the informal notice procedure set out in Rule 8.155(b) before filing an augmentation motion to obtain omitted material (see 5th App Dist Local R 1(a)) or require counsel to notify the superior court clerk to forward the omitted item in lieu of a motion (see 2d App Dist Local R 2(a)).

Counsel who has any doubt whether the record is complete should go to the superior court clerk's office and compare the contents of the record with the contents of the clerk's file. Larger counties have branch offices of the superior court, so it may be wise to call ahead to make certain where the files are kept.

Going through the clerk's file, counsel may find references to reporters' transcripts, exhibits, or other items that were not made part of the record on appeal. Procedures vary, but many clerks' offices keep a separate file for exhibits, so counsel should ask to review all files relating to the superior court action number of the case.

> Ø Note: Appointed counsel whose offices are far from the court housing the file should find out from the supervising appellate project whether counsel can be reimbursed for travel to review the file. Some appellate projects will, on request, send a staff member to review the file on counsel's behalf.

5. Augmentation of Record

§44.22 a. What May Be Added Through Augmentation

The reviewing court's authority to augment the record extends primarily to material on file in, or lodged with, the superior court, including certified transcripts of oral proceedings. Cal Rules of Ct 8.155(a). See also People v Preslie (1977) 70 CA3d 486, 490, 138 CR 828. If a reporter's transcript is unavailable, the court may expand the record to include an agreed or settled statement. Cal Rules of Ct 8.130(g), 8.134, 8.137, 8.155(a), 8.346. See §44.25. Augmentation is otherwise unavailable for adding material that is not part of the trial court record. People v Brooks (1980) 26 C3d 471, 484, 162 CR 177.

Motions made in the trial court are often the subject of augmentation requests. Although the normal record includes both written papers and oral proceedings on certain types of motions (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.320(b)-(c)), many other types are not included. Whether such motions exist in a particular case and whether they may be relevant to the appeal are determined principally from the trial court minute orders, which are part of the normal clerk's transcript, and by discussions with trial counsel and the defendant.

Other materials that may be added through augmentation are reporter's transcripts of jury voir dire and opening statements, which are not part of the normal record. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.320(c)(3). See, e.g., People v Johnson (2004) 119 CA4th 976, 14 CR3d 780 (judge committed reversible error by amplifying on reasonable doubt instruction during voir dire).

Ø Note: In some appellate districts, local rules automatically augment the record with materials not included in the Cal Rules of Ct 8.320 normal record. See, e.g., 2d App Dist Local R 1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.23 b. Procedure for Augmenting Record

The appellate court may augment the record on appeal in response to a party's motion or on its own motion. Cal Rules of Ct 8.155(a)(1), 8.340(d). If a copy of the document or transcript the party wants to include in the record is available, it must be attached to the motion to augment. Cal Rules of Ct 8.155(a)(2). The motion (and any opposition) should adhere to the general rules governing motions in a reviewing court (see §44.18A). A sample motion is in Appeals & Writs §3.47.

Ø Note: The statewide rules do not set a deadline for filing an augmentation motion, but a reviewing court may be disposed to deny a motion filed after the party has received one or more extensions to file its brief. See 2d App Dist Local R 2(b) (deadlines for filing augmentation motions, after which motion will not be granted absent showing of good cause for delay).

To obtain an order augmenting the record beyond what is normally provided under Cal Rules of Ct 8.320, counsel must show good cause by describing with particularity how and in what manner the material sought may be useful to the appellant on appeal. People v Silva (1978) 20 C3d 489, 143 CR 212; People v Gaston (1978) 20 C3d 476, 143 CR 205. See also 2d App Dist Local R 2(d). A motion to augment is likely to be denied if it does not explain why the additional record is needed. People v Ballard (1969) 1 CA3d 602, 604, 81 CR 742. Every motion to augment should include the following (People v Gaston, supra):

- A description of the document or proceeding sought;
- A synopsis of the point that may be argued on appeal in connection with the document;
- If necessary, a declaration that establishes the contents and relevance of the document being sought, referring to information from trial counsel, if appropriate; and
- For an additional reporter's transcript, an indication of the nature of the proceedings in question, the date of the proceedings, the number or letter of the department in which the proceedings were held, and the name of the court reporter as indicated in the superior court minute order.

Counsel can take various steps to expedite an augmentation:

- Make sure that the motion to augment is complete and includes all items needed to pursue potential issues;
- Submit a proposed order with the motion (which local rules may require; see, e.g., 2d App Dist Local R 2(g)); and
- When a transcript is requested, establish contact with the court reporter to learn how soon the transcript can be prepared.

Ø Note: Court reporters can be located through the trial court clerk's office.

§44.23A c. Application to Superior Court for Additional Record

Under Cal Rules of Ct 8.324 the parties may apply to the superior court to include in the record certain items, specified by the rule, in addition to the normal record. The application must be filed with the notice of appeal or as soon after that as possible, and it must explain how the material will be useful on appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.324(c). The trial judge must rule on the application within 5 days; otherwise, the materials automatically become part of the record. Cal Rules of Ct 8.324(d). A parallel provision for juvenile cases is in Cal Rules of Ct 8.404(c) (amended and renumbered as 8.407(c), effective July 1, 2010).

Ø Note: If trial counsel is aware of a potential appellate issue, e.g., denial of a Batson-Wheeler motion, that will not be sent to the appellate court as part of the "normal record" (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.320), he or she might want to request an additional record when filing the notice of appeal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.24 6. Correction of Record

If any part of the record is inaccurate, the appellate court can order it corrected on the motion of a party, on its own motion, or by stipulation. Cal Rules of Ct 8.155(c)(1), 8.340(c). The clerk must send a copy of any document or transcript added to the record to all the parties listed in Rule 8.340(a)(1). Cal Rules of Ct 8.340(c). For juvenile appeals, see Cal Rules of Ct 8.410, effective July 1, 2010. The appellate court can order the superior court to settle disputes about the record's accuracy. Cal Rules of Ct 8.155(c)(2). The reporter's transcript is presumed accurate, and the party challenging its accuracy must introduce evidence to rebut that presumption. People v Kronemyer (1987) 189 CA3d 314, 234 CR 442.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.25 7. Missing Record and Settled Statements

Particular proceeding not reported. Occasionally, an unreported proceeding (such as a bench or chambers conference) may be material to an issue to be raised in the opening brief. In such cases, it may be possible to fill the gap in the record by obtaining a settled statement. See People v Hardy (1992) 2 C4th 86, 183 n30, 5 CR2d 796. An application to prepare a settled statement should be filed in the trial court and explain why there is no transcript and how the material requested may be useful on appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.130(g), 8.137, 8.346; People v Castro (1982) 138 CA3d 30, 187 CR 658. If the application is made in the appellate court, the court may remand the matter to the trial court to decide whether a settled statement can be obtained. People v Gzikowski (1982) 32 C3d 580, 584 n2, 186 CR 339. An evidentiary hearing is often necessary in the trial court. See People v Hardy, supra; People v Gzikowski, supra.

If there is any doubt about whether a proceeding was reported, counsel should make a motion in the appellate court to augment the record. See §44.23.

Loss of all or part of record. Sometimes a portion of the record is missing because of the loss or destruction of the court reporter's notes or the death of the court reporter. Appellate counsel faced with an incomplete record should attempt to obtain a settled statement of the missing portion. See People v Moore (1988) 201 CA3d 51, 56, 248 CR 31.

The loss or destruction of a material portion of the record, or the absence of a record, through no fault of the defendant, may constitute a denial of meaningful appellate review, requiring reversal. See Pen C §1181(9); People v Moore, supra. There is no presumption of prejudice from the absence of materials in the appellate record; the defendant bears the burden of showing that the record is inadequate to permit meaningful appellate review. People v Harris (2008) 43 C4th 1269, 1280, 78 CR3d 295. To prevail on such a claim, the defendant must show that the missing record is critical to an issue the defense intended to raise on appeal and that an adequate substitute for the record cannot be obtained. See People v Galland (2008) 45 C4th 354, 370, 86 CR3d 841. The result is highly dependent, therefore, on the facts. See, e.g., People v Wilson, supra (incomplete record in capital case did not require reversal; reviewing court gave defendant benefit of doubt on unavailable facts); In re Steven B. (1979) 25 C3d 1, 157 CR 510 (destruction of portion of juvenile jurisdictional proceedings entitled defendant to new hearing); People v Everett (1990) 224 CA3d 932, 274 CR 429 (destruction of record, as allowed by statute, 5 years after defendant failed to appear for sentencing, did not deny defendant right to appeal when defendant was arrested several years later); People v Moore, supra (court reporter's failure to provide transcript of closing argument because of theft of tapes from her car was harmless); People v Jones (1981) 125 CA3d 298, 178 CR 44 (new trial required when all trial notes destroyed; impossible to reconstruct record); People v Gloria (1975) 47 CA3d 1, 120 CR 534 (defendant prejudiced by reporter's failure to provide written record of jury instructions). But see People v DeFrance (2008) 167 CA4th 486, 84 CR3d 204 (no prejudicial error when counsel stipulated to not reporting jury instructions, did not object to instructions as read, and settled statement indicated error was harmless).

§44.26 8. Viewing and Transmitting Exhibits

Although trial court exhibits are considered part of the record on appeal, they are not transmitted to the reviewing court and the parties as part of the normal record. Instead, Cal Rules of Ct 8.320(e) states that exhibits admitted in evidence, refused, or lodged may be transmitted to the reviewing court under the procedure in Cal Rules of Ct 8.224 (described below).

> Ø Note: An exception exists when audio- or videotape recordings are put into evidence at trial. In such cases, a transcription of the tape must be offered by the proponent of the evidence, marked for identification, and then included in the clerk's transcript on appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1040, 8.320(b)(11). However, if the trial court has failed to enforce this rule, appellate counsel will be confronted with a record containing only a reference in the reporter's transcript to a tape's having been played for the jury, but no transcription of the tape in either the reporter's transcript or the clerk's transcript on appeal. In that circumstance, appellate counsel should take necessary measures to complete, augment, or correct the record. See §§44.21-44.25.

Appellate counsel should review trial exhibits, including audio- and videotapes, whenever they are potentially relevant to an issue on appeal. Storage of exhibits varies from county to county, so counsel should contact the appropriate court clerk for the local procedure for viewing exhibits. It is often possible to arrange with the appellate court clerk to have the exhibits transmitted to the court of appeal for counsel to view there. Although this method may be more convenient for counsel than a trip to the clerk's office, it runs the risk of bringing unfavorable material to the attention of both opposing counsel and the court.

Counsel must serve and file a notice in the superior court, designating exhibits to be transmitted to the reviewing court, within 10 days after the last respondent's brief is filed or could be filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.224(a)(1). After that notice is served, if any other party wants the reviewing court to consider additional exhibits, that party must file and serve its own notice within 10 days. Cal Rules of Ct 8.224(a)(2). All notices designating exhibits must be served on the reviewing court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.224(a)(3). A sample notice to the superior court clerk is in Appeals & Writs §5.52.

> Ø Note: Another way to bring an important exhibit to the court's attention is to attach it to a brief. A party may attach up to 10 pages of exhibits (or other parts of the record) to any brief, and on request, a presiding judge may permit a party to attach additional pages for good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(d).

If the Rule 8.224 deadline is missed, a party can ask the reviewing court for permission to send an exhibit. Cal Rules of Ct 8.224(c). An appellate court may, at any time, direct the superior court to send it an exhibit. Cal Rules of Ct 8.224(d).

§44.26A 9. Request for Judicial Notice; Motion to Take Additional Evidence

Evidence Code §459 specifies the matters of which an appellate court must or may take judicial notice. To request that an appellate court take judicial notice, a party must serve and file a separate motion with a proposed order. Cal Rules of Ct 8.252(a)(1), 8.366(a). The motion must explain why the matter to be noticed is relevant to the appeal, whether the matter was presented and taken notice of in the trial court, and whether the matter relates to proceedings occurring after the order or judgment that is the subject of the appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.252(a)(2), 8.366(a). A sample motion for judicial notice appears in Appeals & Writs §4.48.

Ø Note: Although an appellate court can take judicial notice of records in another proceeding, it may not take notice of the truth of the (hearsay) contents of those records. People v Woodell (1998) 17 C4th 448, 455, 71 CR2d 241. See People v Esayian (2003) 112 CA4th 1031, 1037, 5 CR3d 542.

California Rules of Court 8.252 also prescribes how to ask a reviewing court to take evidence on appeal or to make factual findings under CCP §909. Cal Rules of Ct 8.252(b)-(c), 8.366(a). Parties rarely try to use those procedures, and when they do, it seems that the appellate courts usually rebuff them. See, e.g., In re L.B. (2003) 110 CA4th 1420, 1423 n1, 3 CR3d 16.

§44.27 10. Use of Writ of Habeas Corpus When Record on Appeal Is Inadequate

Occasionally, appellate counsel will learn of issues arising at trial, such as ineffective assistance of trial counsel or juror misconduct, that cannot be resolved by the record on appeal and for which correction or augmentation is inappropriate. See, e.g., People v Cunningham (2001) 25 C4th 926, 108 CR2d 291 (when trial counsel's reasons for various acts and omissions are not discernable on the record, ineffective assistance claim cannot be sustained on direct appeal but should be brought on habeas); People v Hayes (1999) 21 C4th 1211, 1260, 91 CR2d 211 (claim based on trial court's refusal to hold hearing on juror misconduct was not supported by record but could be raised on habeas). In such situations, habeas corpus is an appropriate vehicle to present necessary declarations or other extra-record evidence to the appellate court. A habeas petition may be pursued simultaneously with the direct appeal. See People v Frierson (1979) 25 C3d 142, 158, 158 CR 281; People v Pope (1979) 23 C3d 412, 426, 152 CR 732.

For further discussion of state court habeas, see chap 42 and Appeals & Writs, chaps 9-10.

I. Mechanics of Briefing

1. Reading and Digesting Transcripts

§44.28 a. Procedure

After receiving the record, counsel should begin by reviewing the clerk's transcript to learn the procedural history of the case and to try to ascertain whether the record is complete. In addition, the jury instructions are generally more easily reviewed in their written form in the clerk's transcript where they are separated from each other, usually contain CALCRIM or CALJIC numbers or other references to their source, and often show, by hand-written interlineation, whether and how the pattern instruction has been altered.

In reviewing the reporter's transcript, some attorneys find it helpful to read the closing arguments first to get an overview of the case and then read the rest of the transcript from the beginning. While reviewing the reporter's transcript, counsel should have two purposes in mind: (1) developing a coherent narrative for the statement of facts and (2) spotting potential issues for the appeal.

Taking careful notes (with page citations) during the first review of both the clerk's and reporter's transcripts can save an enormous amount of time when drafting the briefs, particularly in writing the statements of the case and facts. Especially helpful are detailed notes prepared with a word-processing program that permits the attorney to run a search for given phrases, facts, witnesses, etc.

§44.29 b. Issue Spotting

Counsel should list all potential appellate issues while reviewing the record, without undue concern about their relative importance or whether they will actually result in reversal. Although issues may arise anywhere in the record, particularly fruitful sources of appellate issues are jury voir dire, all substantive motions, hearings on the admissibility of evidence, objections to evidence, jury instructions, and sentencing. Counsel should consider the conduct of both the prosecutor and trial counsel: prosecutorial misconduct and ineffective assistance of counsel may be discovered through a pattern of repeated errors or omissions.

Sidebar (bench) conferences are often noted in the transcript but unreported. Trial counsel should be questioned about the issues discussed at sidebar. If an objection or ruling related to an issue to be raised on appeal was made in an unreported bench conference, counsel should obtain a settled statement about what occurred. See §44.25. See also People v Tuggles (2009) 179 CA4th 339, 355, 100 CR3d 820 (when court later memorializes timeliness of objection made at unreported sidebar conference, issue is preserved for review).

Once counsel has a list of possible issues, he or she must then determine which ones are arguable issues. In deciding which issues are arguable, counsel should bear in mind that the law is constantly evolving and changing; thus, even if current law is unfavorable, counsel should consider advocating a change in, or an exception to, current law when appropriate and reasonable.

Whenever possible, an appellate issue should be "federalized"; i.e., presented as an error of federal constitutional law as well as state law. Even an issue that seems certain to fail under California case law should be considered if there is reason to think that federal courts will be more sympathetic. A defendant whose appeal is unsuccessful may have an opportunity to seek habeas corpus relief in federal court, but only as to federal issues that have been "exhausted" by presenting them to the California courts, necessarily including the supreme court. See generally §45.23.

Choosing which issues to brief is a crucial component of appellate strategy and it is up to appellate counsel to make that call. See Jones v Barnes (1983) 463 US 745, 754 n7, 77 L Ed 2d 987, 995 n7, 103 S Ct 3308 (criminal defendant has no constitutional right to have appellate counsel raise every issue that defendant wishes argued). The appellate courts regularly inveigh against what they see as unnecessary litigation of frivolous issues (see, e.g., People v Craig (1991) 234 CA3d 1066, 1068, 286 CR 16), and larding a brief with hopeless claims can lead a reviewing court to give short shrift to other, meritorious claims.

Nonetheless, appellate counsel has the fundamental duty to raise every issue that has any likelihood of success (either in the court of appeal or in a higher court) and that would benefit the client if successful. The courts have engaged in a prolonged, talmudic effort to define the precise limit of this duty as a matter of a defendant's constitutional rights. See Jones v Barnes, supra; In re Spears (1984) 157 CA3d 1203, 1210, 204 CR 333 (defendant has constitutional right to have appellate counsel raise all "crucial assignments of error, which arguably might [result] in a reversal," as long as appellate counsel "believes" the issues to be "meritorious"); People v Valenzuela (1985) 175 CA3d 381, 390, 222 CR 405, disapproved on other grounds in People v Flood (1998) 18 C4th 470, 76 CR2d 180 (appellate counsel's duty includes raising unmeritorious issues that are nonetheless "arguable"). Regardless of how the constitutional minimum is defined, the diligent appellate practitioner will not let the client lose any opportunity to obtain a reversal or a favorable modification of the judgment.

§44.30 c. Determining Whether Issue Has Been Preserved for Appeal

Some errors may be raised on appeal even without a timely trial court objection. See, e.g., Pen C §1259 (appellate court may review any instruction given, refused, or modified, even when no objection was made in the lower court, if the instruction affected any substantial rights of the defendant); People v Scott (1994) 9 C4th 331, 354, 36 CR2d 627 ("unauthorized sentence" correctable by reviewing court in first instance); People v Anderson (2006) 141 CA4th 430, 439, 45 CR3d 910 (appellate court could review purely legal issue on matter of public importance despite failure to object); People v Ary (2004) 118 CA4th 1016, 13 CR3d 482 (issue of competence to stand trial may not be waived). See also People v Partida (2005) 37 C4th 428, 35 CR3d 644 (defendant forfeited claim that due process required exclusion of gang evidence; however, he could argue on appeal that admission of challenged evidence had legal consequence of violating due process).

In People v Boyer (2006) 38 C4th 412, 441 n17, 42 CR3d 677, the supreme court explained that when the appellant properly objects to error in the trial court, federal constitutional grounds may be asserted and considered for the first time on appeal so long as > the new arguments do not invoke facts or legal standards different from those the trial court itself was asked to apply, but merely assert that the trial court's act or omission, insofar as wrong for the reasons actually presented to that court, had the additional legal consequence of violating the Constitution.

For the most part, however, an appellate court will not consider procedural defects or erroneous rulings when an objection could have been, but was not, presented to the lower court by some appropriate method. People v Jenkins (2000) 22 C4th 900, 1000, 95 CR2d 377. Trial counsel has a duty to preserve issues for appeal by placing any objections on the record. See People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 841, 277 CR 122. Obviously, the more complete the record the better, but appellate counsel's role is often to comb the record looking for some language that could be construed as a valid objection, i.e., an objection that is sufficiently specific and timely. If no valid objection appears in the record, appellate counsel should ask trial counsel whether any unreported discussions occurred during which objections were made.

Even if it appears that an otherwise viable claim has been forfeited by a failure to object in the trial court, appellate counsel should still strongly consider raising it on appeal. For one thing, the fact that the right to raise an issue on appeal may have been forfeited by failure to raise it below does not preclude the appellate court from considering the issue and granting relief. See People v Smith (2003) 31 C4th 1207, 1215, 7 CR3d 559; People v Johnson (2004) 119 CA4th 976, 984, 14 CR3d 780.

Moreover, if trial counsel has forfeited an important claim of error by failing to object, appellate counsel can then raise the issue through a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, asserted either on direct appeal, in a habeas corpus petition, or both. See generally Appeals & Writs §4.44. If the underlying issue is raised on direct appeal, and the respondent's brief depends entirely or primarily on the asserted waiver (as opposed to arguing the merits of the issue), that can help frame a subsequent ineffective assistance claim on habeas corpus.

> Ø Note: Although the loss of the right to appeal because of a failure to object below is commonly referred to as a "waiver," it is actually a "forfeiture." A waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right; a forfeiture is what results from unintentional failure to preserve a claim. See In re S.B. (2004) 32 C4th 1287, 1293, 13 CR3d 786; People v Simon (2001) 25 C4th 1082, 1097 n9, 108 CR2d 385.

For a detailed discussion of procedural obstacles to appellate review of particular issues, see Appeals & Writs §§4.26-4.29.

2. Appellant's Opening Brief

§44.31 a. Time Deadlines; Application for Extension of Time

The appellant's opening brief is due 40 calendar days after the record has been filed in the reviewing court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(c)(1). The court of appeal can dismiss an appeal for failure to file an opening brief. Cal Rules of Ct 8.220(a)(1). See §44.56. However, the court clerk must first notify the appellant by mail that sanctions, including dismissal of the appeal, will result if the brief is not filed within 30 days after the notice is mailed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.220(a), 8.360(c)(5). When appellant's defense counsel is court-appointed, the court clerk gives notice that if the brief is not filed, counsel will be relieved and new counsel will be appointed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(c)(5)(A)(ii). When appellant's defense counsel is not court-appointed, or when the prosecution is the appellant, the court clerk gives notice that failure to comply will result in dismissal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(c)(5)(A)(i), (iii). For juvenile appeals, see Cal Rules of Ct 8.412, amended effective July 1, 2010.

Ø Note: Rules 8.220 and 8.360 effectively give counsel an automatic, one-time 30-day extension to file the opening brief. Counsel need not file an extension request if he or she can file the brief within the time allowed by Rules 8.220 and 8.360. Cal Rules of Ct 8.212(b)(4).

Unfortunately, the courts of appeal are not altogether consistent in their application of these rules. Some courts encourage counsel to make use of the 30-day period. See 1st App Dist Local R 11 (request for extension not necessary if counsel anticipates brief will be filed within 30 days of due date). Other courts are clearly displeased when counsel fails to file the brief within the time formally granted, i.e., before the Cal Rules of Ct 8.220 and 8.360 period begins and the 30-day letter issues. Indeed, some attorneys have received letters stating that the court will replace counsel or dismiss the appeal if the brief is not filed in some shorter period, e.g., 15 days. This may result from the unfortunate fact that Cal Rules of Ct 8.220 specifies a 15-day period and does not mention that Cal Rules of Ct 8.360 fixes the period at 30 days for appellants in criminal cases. Counsel is well advised to consult the indigent appellate project for the appellate district in which the appeal is pending about local practice regarding extensions of time.

In criminal cases, the parties may not stipulate to extend the time. Pen C §1252; Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(c)(4). Applications to extend time for filing briefs are addressed to the presiding justice of the court of appeal and must be served on all parties to the appellate proceeding. Cal Rules of Ct 8.50, 8.60(c). The party applying for an extension must provide the court with postage-paid envelopes addressed to all parties; the court uses these to mail its order granting or denying the extension. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.50.

Ø Note: Although a request for an extension of time is considered a "routine" application under Rule 8.50 rather than a "motion" under Rule 8.54, it is advisable to provide the court with the original and three copies, as required for motions under Cal Rules of Ct 8.44(b)(4), rather than the single copy required for an "other document or paper" under Cal Rules of Ct 8.44(b)(6).

The application must be in the form of a declaration of counsel, setting forth specific facts justifying the extension, not just conclusory statements that more time is needed because of the press of business (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.63(b)(9)), and it must include (Cal Rules of Ct 8.60(c)(2)):

- The date the brief is currently due;
- The length of the extension requested;
- Whether any prior extensions have been granted, and, if so, for how long; and
- Reasons sufficient to constitute "an exceptional showing of good cause" for granting the extension.

Additional requirements may be imposed by local rule. See, e.g., 1st App Dist Local R 11. Some districts require or suggest a particular form for extension applications. These forms and local rules are available in the Courts section of the Judicial Council's website (http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov).

Factors that the court may consider in deciding whether there is an exceptional showing of good cause for an extension are in Cal Rules of Ct 8.63(b).

Ø Note: Although the rules do not specify how long an extension may be sought, appellate lawyers commonly seek extensions of 30 days at a time. The courts of appeal usually grant a first request for a 30-day extension, but counsel should not count on receiving further extensions. If an extension is granted, the court will sometimes indicate that no further extensions will be entertained. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.63 (general policy statement on enforcement of deadlines).

b. Format of Opening Brief

§44.32 (1) Components

Counsel must adhere to the format set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 8.204. For juvenile cases, see Cal Rules of Ct 8.412(a), amended effective July 1, 2010. See generally Appeals & Writs §§3.26-3.41.

Appellant, like any other party, may join in or adopt by reference all or part of a brief in the same or a related appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.200(a)(5).

The components of the opening brief consist of (Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(a)):

- Table of contents;
- Table of authorities separately listing cases, constitutions, statutes, court rules, and other authorities;
- Statement of the nature of the case, relief sought at the trial court, and judgment or order appealed from;
- Statement of appealability of the case;
- Statement of facts, limited to matters in the record;
- Statement of each point with summary headings, supported by argument and, if possible, citation to authority; and
- Conclusion that concisely describes the relief sought on appeal (not required by Rule 8.204(a) but routinely included).

The tables of contents and authorities must appear at the beginning of the brief. Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(a)(1)(A)-(B). The brief must support any reference to a matter in the record by a citation to the volume and page number where the matter appears. Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(a)(1)(C). References to portions of the record submitted electronically must be equally specific. Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(a)(1)(C).

A sample opening brief is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §44.4 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.33 (2) Statement of Case

The statement of the case should concisely describe the procedural history of the case, including the charges and any amendments; the pleas, motions, and court rulings relevant to the issues raised on appeal; a brief summary of the course of the trial; the verdict; the sentence; and the timely filing of the notice of the appeal. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(a)(2)(A).

The statement of the case is basically a chronological outline and should be written with page references to the clerk's transcript, including volume number if there is more than one volume. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(a)(1)(C).

Because the content and function of the statement of the case is so well defined, many appellate lawyers pay scant attention to its drafting. It can, however, provide an early opportunity for the advocate to direct the reviewing court's attention to important aspects of the case. For instance, when a claim may turn on the vigor with which the issue was raised below, appellate counsel should clearly note each motion tendered and each hearing held regarding that claim. Likewise, when jury deliberations continued for several days, that fact should be chronicled, because lengthy jury deliberations are a classic indicia of a "close case," and support an argument that a given error was prejudicial to the appellant. See, e.g., People v Rucker (1980) 26 C3d 368, 391, 162 CR 13; People v Fuentes (1986) 183 CA3d 444, 456, 237 CR 465.

While including all items of procedural history that could be significant to the court's decision, counsel should take care not to burden the statement of the case with extensive references to procedural matters that could not have any bearing on the issues before the appellate court, such as evidentiary proceedings that did not give rise to a colorable claim. Above all, it is crucial that the statement of the case be complete, accurate, and neutral in tone.

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/44 FELONY APPEALS/§44.34 (3) Statement of Facts

§44.34 (3) Statement of Facts

The statement of facts often presents a difficult and subtle challenge for appellate counsel. On one hand, it must be a thoroughly accurate summary of the trial evidence, neutral in tone and fairly stated. An overly partisan or (worse) factually inaccurate statement may lead the reviewing court to view everything that counsel asserts with skepticism, if not unbridled irritation. On the other hand, a well-written statement of facts will engage the readers—the reviewing judges and their staffs—and prepare them to consider (favorably, one hopes) the substantive arguments that follow. It is, in short, counsel's opportunity to tell the story of "what happened," and at its conclusion, the reviewing court at least should be open to the possibility that the result below was unjust and should be remedied.

The statement of facts should refer only to matters that are in the record on appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(a)(2)(C). All factual assertions should be supported by appropriate citations to the reporter's transcript. Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(a)(1)(C). Technically, an issue cannot be considered if the opening brief fails to point out the page of the record where the alleged error supposedly occurred. People v Gidney (1937) 10 C2d 138, 142, 73 P2d 1186, overruled on other grounds in People v Hutchinson (1969) 71 C2d 342, 347, 78 CR 196. See also People v Dougherty (1982) 138 CA3d 278, 188 CR 123.

Perhaps the most important factor in presenting a fair and credible version of the facts is to choose the correct lens through which the trial evidence is to be viewed. Except when there is a challenge to the legal sufficiency of the evidence, it is a mistake to attempt to convince the court of appeal that the jury got it wrong; the reviewing court cannot reweigh credibility or the general question of guilt or innocence. See People v Culver (1973) 10 C3d 542, 548, 111 CR 183.

> Ø Note: For a discussion of how to properly set forth a challenge to the legal sufficiency of the evidence, including instructions to appellate attorneys on the content of the opening brief, see People v Sanghera (2006) 139 CA4th 1567, 43 CR3d 741.

The basic rule is that all factual presumptions are in favor of the judgment or order. See, e.g., People v Ochoa (1993) 6 C4th 1199, 1206, 26 CR2d 23; People v Leyba (1981) 29 C3d 591, 596, 174 CR 867 (search and seizure); People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 576, 162 CR 431 (jury verdict); In re Eric J. (1979) 25 C3d 522, 527, 159 CR 317 (Miranda finding); People v Jimenez (1978) 21 C3d 595, 609, 147 CR 172, overruled on other grounds in People v Cahill (1993) 5 C4th 478, 510 n17, 20 CR2d 582 (voluntariness of confession); In re James G. (1985) 165 CA3d 462, 469, 211 CR 611 (juvenile adjudication). Thus, to the extent that a given fact was disputed at trial, the version that is consistent with the defendant's guilt is generally the version that the appellate court will accept, and the statement of facts should reflect that.

There are, however, important exceptions and qualifications to this rule. First, the version of the facts that supports the judgment is not always synonymous with the prosecution's version of the facts—even when the defendant is convicted. When the jury returns a verdict of guilt on a lesser offense, it has necessarily rejected the prosecution's evidence on the greater offense. Thus, some of the most prejudicial evidence, which the appellate court might reflexively accept as true, may be relegated to a footnote in which counsel explains why it should be disregarded.

Second, some issues require the reviewing court to examine the evidence in the light most favorable to the defendant. An example is a claim of prejudicial instructional error. See, e.g., People v Ramkeesoon (1985) 39 C3d 346, 351, 216 CR 455. In these situations, counsel might use the statement of facts to summarize the disputed evidence on both sides, impartially, again providing some explanation for why this approach was taken.

Third, defense evidence that will be relied on in the argument section of the brief when addressing the prejudicial impact of an error in a "close case" should be included in the statement of facts.

Finally, the fact that evidence supports the judgment below does not necessarily make it pertinent to the issues before the court on appeal. Indeed, some appeals turn entirely on issues, such as the denial of certain pretrial motions, or Batson-Wheeler claims (asserting invidious discrimination in jury selection), that do not require any evaluation of the trial evidence. In these cases, counsel should pare the discussion of the facts of the offense itself, particularly the parts likely to cast the defendant in an unsympathetic light, to a minimum. Even when some of the facts of the offense are pertinent, counsel should take care not to include details that are neither relevant to the legal issues nor helpful to the defendant.

§44.35 c. Effective Organization

A well-organized, precise brief is the first step toward obtaining a favorable result for the client. The following steps will aid counsel in achieving this result:

- What is the theory that will persuade the court and win the appeal? Counsel should envision the final opinion that he or she would like the court to sign and form the issues and arguments around that opinion, taking into account that there may be issues or cases that are contrary to that position.
- Counsel should make sure each legal argument has a separate heading, and may include subheadings stating each point. The headings should be concise and summarize the point, and should be supported by argument and, if possible, by citation to authority. Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(a)(1)(B). The argument headings set the tone for the entire brief. Each should be a clear sentence that will advise the reader of the issue and begin the process of persuasion.
- Counsel should typically start the argument with a brief summary of the factual basis for the argument; i.e., what happened in the trial court that gives rise to the claim of error. Most issues must have been raised in the trial court before they can be raised on appeal (see §44.30), so the brief should specify when and how each issue was raised in the trial court. This should be followed by a statement of the general applicable law (e.g., the relevant text of a statute that the appellant contends the trial court violated) and the standard of appellate review applicable to the type of error alleged (see §44.36). Next, counsel should emphasize the facts in conjunction with fact-specific case law that supports each issue and distinguish contrary authority. Counsel should then demonstrate that the trial court's error was prejudicial (see §44.37) and therefore requires the judgment to be reversed (or modified). Thoroughly researched, well-organized, succinct arguments will be noticed. A long argument may be more academically complete, but it may not be as persuasive.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.36 d. Standards of Review

Except for certain issues (such as pure questions of law) that are subject to independent (or "de novo") appellate review, assertions of trial court error are judged according to standards of review that give varying amounts of deference to the determinations below.

For example, a reviewing court cannot reverse a conviction simply because the appellate justices are not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty. Instead, the appellate courts apply a "substantial evidence" standard that affords a great deal of deference to the jury's verdict. The court views the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, and if any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime proven beyond a reasonable doubt, the verdict stands. See People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 576, 162 CR 431.

Other standards of appellate review, such as the "abuse of discretion" standard, apply to other kinds of alleged error. Counsel should consult case law to ascertain the standard of review applicable to the particular error alleged, and the standard should be set forth as part of the argument in the opening brief. See §44.35.

For a more detailed discussion of standards of appellate review, see Appeals & Writs §§4.22-4.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.37 e. Demonstrating Prejudice

To obtain reversal of a conviction, appellate counsel must do more than prove that error occurred in the proceedings below; he or she must also show that the error was prejudicial. In most cases, once the appellate court determines that there was error below, it uses one of three standards to measure prejudice:

- The "reasonable probability" or Watson test: This test, first set forth in People v Watson (1956) 46 C2d 818, 299 P2d 243, applies to errors of state law that do not implicate any federal constitutional guarantees. Such errors will be found prejudicial if the defendant shows that it is reasonably probable that he or she would have obtained a more favorable result in the absence of the error. Erroneous admission of evidence is a type of error that is generally evaluated under this standard. See, e.g., People v Price (1991) 1 C4th 324, 3 CR2d 106.
- The "harmless beyond a reasonable doubt" or Chapman test: This test, first announced in Chapman v California (1967) 386 US 18, 17 L Ed 2d 705, 87 S Ct 824, applies to federal constitutional errors. Such errors will be found prejudicial unless the prosecution can show beyond a reasonable doubt that the error did not contribute to the verdict. See Neder v U.S. (1999) 527 US 1, 144 L Ed 2d 35, 119 S Ct 1827 (erroneous jury instructions that omitted element of crime harmless beyond a reasonable doubt); People v Ducu (1991) 226 CA3d 1412, 277 CR 464 (limiting cross-examination of witness harmless beyond a reasonable doubt).
- The "prejudicial per se" test: A federal constitutional error that amounts to a "structural defect affecting the framework within which the trial proceeds" (e.g., total deprivation of right to counsel at trial, or judge who was not impartial) is considered prejudicial per se and thus always requires reversal. Arizona v Fulminante (1991) 499 US 279, 309, 113 L Ed 2d 302, 331, 111 S Ct 1246. See People v Tena (2007) 156 CA4th 598, 612, 67 CR3d 412.

The opening brief should set forth the appropriate standard of prejudice applicable to each alleged error and include a particularized showing that the prejudice resulting from each error requires reversal under the applicable standard. Even when it seems likely that the error is prejudicial per se, and thus not subject to harmless error analysis, it is generally both prudent and helpful to argue, in the alternative, the prejudicial effects of the error.

For further discussion of the standards for evaluating prejudice, see Appeals & Writs §§4.30-4.32.

f. Type of Brief Filed When No Arguable Issue (Wende Brief)

§44.38 (1) Description of Wende Brief

Wende* and its constitutionality. When appointed appellate counsel concludes, after reviewing the record, that there are no issues that are even arguable on appeal, counsel may file a brief that simply summarizes the procedural and factual history of the case and asks the appellate court to review the record independently to determine if, in the court's judgment, there are any arguable issues that counsel overlooked. People v Wende (1979) 25 C3d 436, 158 CR 839. This procedure was challenged in the federal courts as being inconsistent with Anders v California (1967) 386 US 738, 18 L Ed 2d 493, 87 S Ct 1396, which required counsel to file a brief that identified any grounds that could potentially support an appeal. However, in Smith v Robbins (2000) 528 US 259, 145 L Ed 2d 756, 120 S Ct 746, the Supreme Court upheld the Wende procedure.

Procedures under Wende. A Wende brief should summarize the proceedings and facts with citations to the record. The brief should note that no specific issues are being raised. However, counsel may not argue against the client. Counsel should request that the appellate court thoroughly review the entire record to decide for itself whether there are any arguable issues. Wende, 25 C3d at 441.

Appellant's counsel should append a declaration stating that a copy of the brief is being sent to the defendant and that counsel has advised the defendant of the nature of the brief, the fact that the defendant may ask the court to relieve counsel (25 C3d at 442), and the fact that the defendant is entitled to file a brief in pro per raising any points he or she chooses (see 25 C3d at 439).

> Ø Note: The defendant's right to file his or her own brief in pro per applies only to Wende appeals. Courts of appeal sometimes allow a defendant to file a supplemental brief after counsel has filed a brief raising one or more issues, but this is discretionary with the court, because criminal defendants have no general right to self-representation on appeal (see §44.3).

Counsel should consult with the client and trial counsel before deciding whether there are any arguable issues. The appellate lawyer is one step removed from the trial court proceedings; the client or trial counsel may therefore offer useful information from his or her perspective of unfairness in the trial court. If appellate counsel decides that no arguable issue exists, the client should be informed of the basis of counsel's decision to file a Wende brief and the client's right to bring any issues to the court's attention despite that brief.

Once a Wende brief has been filed, the appellate court will thoroughly examine the record and decide for itself whether any arguable issues exist. If an issue is found, the court will inform counsel for both sides of the issue and provide an opportunity for counsel to brief and argue the issue. 25 C3d at 442 n3; see People v Coleman (1991) 53 C3d 949, 281 CR 146. Even if no issue is found, the appellate court is required to file a written opinion that contains "a brief description of the facts and procedural history of the case, the crimes of which the defendant was convicted, and the punishment imposed," and that should also include "any other information from the record that [the court] anticipate[s] will be relevant in further challenges to the judgment." (Emphasis added.) People v Kelly (2006) 40 C4th 106, 110, 51 CR3d 98.

If, after filing a Wende brief, counsel subsequently files a supplemental opening brief that identifies and argues a specific issue, the appeal is no longer subject to the dictates of Wende. People v Skenandore (1982) 137 CA3d 922, 924, 187 CR 368. Similarly, equal protection principles do not require an independent Wende review when counsel has raised a specific issue. People v Woodard (1986) 184 CA3d 944, 229 CR 350 (sentencing issue raised and resulted in favorable change in defendant's sentence; no Wende review required); In re Edward S. (1982) 133 CA3d 154, 157, 183 CR 733 (appellant made two sufficiency-of-the-evidence arguments; although weak, they were enough to preclude Wende review); People v Johnson (1981) 123 CA3d 106, 176 CR 390.

Several appellate districts have developed rules for the format of Wende briefs. Counsel should check local practice in the district in which a Wende brief is to be filed.

§44.39 (2) Wende Does Not Apply to Appeals Handled by Retained Counsel

The Wende procedure (see §44.37) does not apply to retained counsel. People v Placencia (1992) 9 CA4th 422, 11 CR2d 727. If, after reviewing the record, retained counsel believes that no arguable issue can be presented, counsel must discuss that conclusion with the client and either obtain permission to dismiss the appeal or move to withdraw from the case. Counsel must also advise the client to consider obtaining other counsel. People v Placencia, supra.

Ø Note: The Wende procedure, likewise, does not apply to appeals from commitments under the Mentally Disordered Offenders Act (MDOA); Wende review is only for appointed counsel's representation of indigent criminal defendants and MDOA proceedings are defined as civil. People v Taylor (2008) 160 CA4th 304, 312, 72 CR3d 740.

§44.40 g. Failure to File Brief

Retained counsel's failure to file the appellant's opening brief on time can result in dismissal of the appeal. If counsel is court appointed, failure to file the opening brief may result in the relief and replacement of counsel. See §44.31. Counsel may approach the court for relief from default arising from failure to file the opening brief. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.60(d). A sample motion for relief from default is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §44.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§44.41 3. Respondent's Brief

The answering brief—called the "respondent's brief on appeal"—is filed by the state Attorney General's office. The structure of a respondent's brief substantially parallels that of an appellant's opening brief. See §§44.32-44.34. The respondent may join in a brief or may adopt by reference any brief in the same or a companion case. Cal Rules of Ct 8.200(a)(5). The respondent may adopt in whole or in part the statement of the case or the facts in the appellant's brief. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.200(a)(5).

The Attorney General may ask the appellate court to "consider and pass upon all rulings of the trial court adverse to the State." Pen C §1252. The Attorney General may not, however, obtain review in a defendant's appeal of matters that could have been raised in a prosecution appeal. See §44.77. The only rulings adverse to the prosecution that will be reviewed are those essential to affirmance of the judgment and those likely to arise on retrial after a reversal. See People v Braeseke (1979) 25 C3d 691, 698, 159 CR 684, vacated on other grounds sub nom California v Braeseke (1980) 446 US 932, 64 L Ed 2d 784, 100 S Ct 2147.

> Ø Note: Because an "unauthorized sentence" (see §44.53) can be corrected at any time, the Attorney General also may challenge such a sentence for the first time in the respondent's brief on a defendant's appeal. People v Rowland (1988) 206 CA3d 119, 126, 253 CR 190.

The respondent's brief must be served and filed within 30 calendar days after the appellant's opening brief is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(c)(2). The rules on extensions of time for filing the appellant's opening brief also apply to the respondent's brief. See §44.31. If the respondent fails to file a timely brief, the clerk of the reviewing court must notify the parties that if the brief is not filed within 30 days after the notice is mailed, the court will decide the case on the record, the appellant's opening brief, and any oral argument by the appellant. Cal Rules of Ct 8.220(a), 8.360(c)(5).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.42 4. Appellant's Reply Brief

The purpose of the reply brief is to counter arguments made in the respondent's brief. New issues should not be raised for the first time in the reply brief; if they are, the appellate court need not consider them. People v Jackson (1981) 121 CA3d 862, 873, 176 CR 166. Although counsel is not required to file a reply brief, it is usually in the client's best interest to do so. The reply brief need not respond to every argument made in the respondent's brief, but it should respond to any argument not already addressed in the opening brief. Frequently, every issue in the respondent's brief does require a response.

The appellant's reply brief must be served and filed within 20 calendar days after the respondent's brief is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(c)(3).

Ø Note: Counsel may wish to make certain of the date on which the respondent's brief was filed, because the reply brief deadline runs from that date, not the date on which it was served or received by appellant's counsel. The courts of appeal (and the supreme court) have docket information available online (http://appellatecases.courtinfo.ca.gov) for all adult criminal cases. Users can sign up to be notified by e-mail whenever a brief is filed (and when other events occur) in a particular case.

Supplemental briefs. Any further briefing requires the permission of the presiding justice. Cal Rules of Ct 8.200(a)(4). It is not uncommon for an appellant's appointed counsel to file a supplemental brief raising an issue that was omitted from the opening brief. A motion for leave to file the supplemental brief should either accompany the proposed brief or be submitted in advance. The motion should explain why the new issue was not raised in the opening brief.

Before the case is submitted, most districts will accept a letter, with proof of service on the other party, citing new cases that were decided after briefing.

Amicus curiae briefs. Requirements for amicus curiae ("friend of the court") briefs in the court of appeal are set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 8.200(c). For juvenile appeals, see Cal Rules of Ct 8.412, amended effective July 1, 2010.

§44.44 6. Length, Filing, and Service of Briefs; Cover Colors

Length. A brief in a noncapital criminal appeal may not exceed 25,500 words if produced on a computer, or 75 pages if typewritten. The presiding justice can allow a longer brief on request, for good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(b)(5).

Each computer-produced brief must include a certificate by counsel stating the number of words in the brief. Counsel may rely on the software used to prepare the brief to supply the word count. Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(b)(1).

Ø Note: The word count certificate, tables of contents and authorities, and any attachment under Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(d) (see §44.26) are not counted against the length limits. Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(b)(3).

Filing. Under Cal Rules of Ct 8.40(b), the cover of appellant's opening brief must be green; the cover of respondent's brief must be yellow; the cover of appellant's reply brief must be tan. The colors for the covers of other briefs are also prescribed in Cal Rules of Ct 8.40(b). The cover must contain the title of the brief; the title, trial court number, and court of appeal number of the case; the names of the trial court and each participating trial judge; the name, address, telephone number, and California State Bar number of each attorney filing or joining in the brief (except that Bar numbers of supervisors are not required); and the name of the party represented by each attorney. Cal Rules of Ct 8.40(c), 8.204(b)(10)(D). Counsel should file the original and the number of copies required by Cal Rules of Ct 8.44(a)-(b). Proof of service should accompany the brief. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.25(a)(2).

Ø Note: A brief is generally "filed" on the day the clerk receives it. However, if a brief is mailed on the due date by priority or express mail or delivered to a carrier promising overnight delivery, it is considered timely. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.25(b). This rule also applies to petitions for rehearing and review and to the answers to petitions for rehearing and review.

Service. A defendant's appellate brief must be served on both the district attorney and the Attorney General. Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(d)(1). A copy must also be served on the superior court clerk for delivery to the trial judge. Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(d)(4).

Every defense brief must be served on the defendant, unless he or she has requested otherwise in writing. Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(d)(1)-(2). Counsel must either include in the proof of service an indication that a copy of the brief was sent to the defendant or file with the court a signed statement that the defendant requested in writing that no copy be sent. Cal Rules of Ct 8.360(d)(2).

When appellate counsel is court-appointed, the appellate project must receive a copy of each defense brief. Appellate counsel should also consider sending a copy of each defense brief to the defendant's trial attorney.

If a brief does not comply with the form and content requirements of Cal Rules of Ct 8.204, the clerk may decline to file it, instead marking it "received but not filed" and returning it to the party. Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(e)(1). If the clerk files the brief despite the noncompliance, the court may do the following (Cal Rules of Ct 8.204(e)(2)):

- On its own motion or on a party's motion, with or without notice, order the brief to be returned to counsel for correction and to be refiled with the clerk within a time specified in the order;
- Order the brief stricken from the files, with leave to file a new brief within a specified time; or
- Disregard defects and consider the brief as if it had been properly prepared.

In addition, a brief that has little or no citation to authority and does not fully state the pertinent evidence with transcript references may be returned, the contentions deemed waived, or counsel reprimanded. See, e.g., People v Dougherty (1982) 138 CA3d 278, 188 CR 123; People v Taylor (1974) 39 CA3d 495, 114 CR 169.

Ø Warning: California Rules of Court 8.18 says that the clerk of the reviewing court "must" not file any record or document that fails to comply with the Rules of Court. As a practical matter, however, papers that violate the rules often are filed, as Rule 8.204(e)(2) implicitly recognizes.

§44.46 J. Oral Argument

The court of appeal may not summarily affirm a conviction without affording the opportunity for oral argument. People v Brigham (1979) 25 C3d 283, 285, 157 CR 905. See also Pen C §1253, which provides that "[t]he judgment may be affirmed if the appellant fail[s] to appear, but can be reversed only after argument, though the respondent fail[s] to appear." In practice, however, some appellate courts routinely send notices to appellate counsel indicating that the court is prepared to rule without argument, and a judgment may be reversed even though argument has been waived.

The mechanics of calendaring oral argument in the courts of appeal vary greatly from district to district, and sometimes within divisions of the same district. The court will generally send a calendar notice after the reply brief has been filed or the time for filing the reply brief has expired, asking whether either party wishes to request oral argument, and in some instances, indicating whether the court believes oral argument would be useful. In districts where telephonic oral argument is available, the notice will also ask whether the parties intend to appear in person or by telephone.

Although some appellate judges have suggested that oral argument is a useless formality, many experienced appellate practitioners believe that the appellant should never waive oral argument in an appeal. Nevertheless, oral argument is waived in many appellate cases. In deciding whether to waive oral argument, counsel should consider first whether oral argument will help or hurt the case. Another consideration is the view of the particular panel of judges toward the usefulness of argument. But see People v Pena (2004) 32 C4th 389, 398, 9 CR3d 107 (oral argument waiver notice used by Division Two of Fourth District created risk of interfering with right to oral argument). On oral argument generally, see Appeals & Writs §§5.1-5.7.

Once counsel has requested oral argument, he or she should honor the commitment to argue. The argument itself should not be a restatement of the entire contents of the briefs; instead, counsel should select one or two strong points and address them in an interesting and concise manner. It is a good idea to come prepared with a few opening sentences that set out whatever counsel believes to be the most important thing for the court to hear about the case. Most courts will allow counsel to get at least that far in presenting the argument, but the rest of the allotted time could well be taken up with answering the court's questions. Counsel should pay close attention to any questions from the court and should adjust the presentation to focus on the issues that seem particularly interesting to the justices. If an issue unexpectedly arises that counsel is not prepared to discuss, counsel should offer to submit supplemental briefing on that issue if the court desires. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.256 on time limits, order of argument, and other requirements. Cal Rules of Ct 8.366(a).

K. Result

§44.47 1. What to Expect

A cause pending in the court of appeal is deemed submitted when the court has heard oral argument or has approved the waiver of oral argument and the time has passed for the filing of all briefs and papers. Cal Rules of Ct 8.256(d), 8.366(a). Although, strictly speaking, there is no requirement that a case before the court of appeal be decided within a certain time after submission, a judge's salary may not be paid whenever any matter has been pending for 90 calendar days or more after the case has been submitted for decision. Cal Const art VI, §19. In the great majority of cases, opinions are filed within 90 days after oral argument. It is possible, however, for an appellate court to resubmit a pending appeal and start the 90-day period running anew when an opinion cannot be filed within the original 90 days.

The court can resolve an appeal by means of an opinion on the merits (see §§44.48-44.54) or by dismissing the appeal without reaching the merits (see §§44.55-44.60).

Ø Note: The appellate court sends its opinion (or order dismissing the appeal) to counsel by postal mail. Counsel can be informed of the disposition more quickly by signing up for e-mail notification (see §44.42).

2. Opinion on Merits

§44.48 a. Published and Unpublished Opinions

All supreme court opinions are published in the official reports. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1105(a).

An opinion of the court of appeal is published only if it meets the requirements in Cal Rules of Ct 8.1105(b)-(c). The court may also choose "partial publication," publishing only part of the opinion. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1110. Unpublished or depublished opinions generally may not be cited as precedent or authority. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1115.

Ø Note: The supreme court may order the publication or depublication of a court of appeal opinion. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1120-8.1125. For discussion of requests that opinions be published or depublished, see §44.61.

The reviewing court's decision is filed with the clerk, who then transmits a copy of the opinion to the lower court and to the parties. Cal Rules of Ct 8.264(a), 8.366(a). See Cal Const art VI, §14 (decisions of supreme court and courts of appeal that determine causes must be in writing with reasons stated).

Both published and unpublished opinions are posted, soon after filing, in the Opinions section of the Judicial Council's website (http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/opinions).

Most direct appeals by defendants are affirmed in full with no modification or reversal. See Judicial Council of California, 2009 Court Statistics Report, p 28 (of defendants' criminal appeals in which written opinions were filed in fiscal year 2007-2008, 72 percent were affirmed in full, 21 percent were affirmed with modification, 5 percent were reversed, and 1 percent were dismissed). The report is available on the Judicial Council's website at http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/reference/documents/csr2009.pdf.

If a judgment against a defendant is affirmed, the original judgment of the trial court must be enforced. Pen C §1263. If the defendant is out of custody, the court must try to secure the defendant's presence without issuing a warrant. Pen C §1265.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.50 c. Reversal or Modification of Judgment

If a judgment against a defendant is reversed, the reversal is deemed an order for a new trial unless the appellate court directs otherwise. Pen C §1262. The parties return to their status before the trial, and the matter is returned to the court of the county from which the appeal was taken. Pen C §1261.

If a conviction on a greater offense is reversed, a previously dismissed lesser included offense conviction may be reinstated. People v Medina (2007) 41 C4th 685, 702, 61 CR3d 677; People v Davidson (2008) 159 CA4th 205, 210, 70 CR3d 913 (attempted murder conviction reinstated as matter of law after subsequent murder conviction reversed). See People v Kelly (1992) 1 C4th 495, 528, 3 CR2d 677 (prosecutor has option to retry greater offense or accept reduction to a lesser included, so long as the lesser offense does not have the same legal defect).

If the appellate court reverses with instructions to dismiss the information or indictment, the defendant will be released from custody or bail exonerated, and any fine paid will be refunded. Pen C §1262.

> Ø Note: If the defendant will be released from custody once the remittitur issues, defense counsel should seek its immediate issuance. See §44.67.

A judgment may be affirmed and modified on an appellate court's correction of the sentence. See, e.g., In re Eric J. (1979) 25 C3d 522, 538, 159 CR 317. A judgment may also be either affirmed or reversed with directions. The appellate court may, for example, order the lower court to determine issues (see In re Ricky H. (1981) 30 C3d 176, 191, 178 CR 324), to resentence the defendant properly (see People v Bolton (1979) 23 C3d 208, 218, 152 CR 141), to pronounce judgment after the appellate court reduces the degree of the offense (see People v Anderson (1968) 70 C2d 15, 36, 73 CR 550), or to grant the appellant the option to withdraw his or her plea of guilty (see People v Miller (1983) 33 C3d 545, 556, 189 CR 519).

3. Effect of Decision on Merits

§44.51 a. Retrial; Double Jeopardy

When a defendant pursues an appeal that results in reversal, the courts generally infer that the defendant has consented to a retrial and thereby waived the constitutional protection against double jeopardy by virtue of pursuing an appeal that results in reversal. See People v Tong (1909) 155 C 579, 585, 102 P 263.

In limited circumstances, a defendant is protected from retrial following appeal by the Double Jeopardy Clause:

- Insufficiency of the evidence bars retrial (Burks v U.S. (1978) 437 US 1, 57 L Ed 2d 1, 98 S Ct 2141);
- A jury verdict of guilty on a lesser degree of the offense charged bars retrial on the greater offense (see People v Lohbauer (1981) 29 C3d 364, 372, 173 CR 453; Gomez v Superior Court (1958) 50 C2d 640, 652, 328 P2d 976; see also People v Mercer (1962) 210 CA2d 153, 161, 26 CR 502).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.52 b. Greater Punishment

The California double jeopardy provision (Cal Const art I, §15) protects defendants from receiving greater sentences following retrial after a successful appeal. People v Henderson (1963) 60 C2d 482, 495, 35 CR 77. See People v Monge (1997) 16 C4th 826, 66 CR2d 853 (imposition of greater sentence would unreasonably impair defendant's right to appeal erroneous judgment); People v Torres (2005) 127 CA4th 1391, 26 CR3d 518. This rule also precludes the court from imposing a longer aggregate term after a remand for resentencing. People v Craig (1998) 66 CA4th 1444, 78 CR2d 659. There is no protection against greater punishment on resentencing if the original sentence was unauthorized by law. For discussion, see §44.53.

Federal law is less protective of the defendant. See, e.g., Alabama v Smith (1989) 490 US 794, 104 L Ed 2d 865, 109 S Ct 2201 (presumption of vindictiveness does not apply when first case ended in guilty plea and second case went to trial); Colten v Kentucky (1972) 407 US 104, 32 L Ed 2d 584, 92 S Ct 1953 (two-tiered trial de novo system). However, federal law is not controlling on this issue. See Raven v Deukmejian (1990) 52 C3d 336, 355, 276 CR 326 (invalidating portion of Proposition 115 that would have required construction of numerous California constitutional provisions, including prohibition on double jeopardy, to afford no greater rights than federal Constitution).

When a sentence is deemed to have been pronounced in excess of the court's jurisdiction or in violation of law, it is considered unauthorized. An unauthorized sentence may be set aside with no limit on the imposition of a greater sentence. People v Serrato (1973) 9 C3d 753, 763, 109 CR 65, overruled on other grounds in People v Fosselman (1983) 33 C3d 572, 583 n1, 189 CR 855.

Ø Note: The California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) does not have the authority to correct unauthorized sentences. In re Sandel (1966) 64 C2d 412, 50 CR 462.

An error of law in sentencing may be corrected at any time if it does not involve the court's exercise of discretion and thus can be characterized as involving a ministerial duty. People v Jack (1989) 213 CA3d 913, 917, 261 CR 860; People v Chagolla (1983) 144 CA3d 422, 434, 193 CR 711 (trial court resentenced defendant 5 days after notice of appeal filed).

Ø Warning: Beware of the difference between resentencing because of an error at trial not involving sentencing, and an error directly related to the illegality of the original sentence. See discussion in §44.55 of when voluntary abandonment is in the client's best interest.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.54 d. Further Proceedings on Remand

An appellate court has the power to remand a case to the trial court for such further proceedings as may be just under the circumstances. Pen C §1260. This is most commonly done when a conviction's validity depends on an unresolved or improperly resolved factual issue that does not have to be decided by a jury. The issue can then be decided at a hearing in the trial court, and, if resolved in the prosecution's favor, the conviction may stand. People v Minor (1980) 104 CA3d 194, 163 CR 501 (Marsden motion); People v Ingram (1978) 87 CA3d 832, 842, 151 CR 239 (motion to disclose informant); People v Vanbuskirk (1976) 61 CA3d 395, 405, 132 CR 30 (fairness of pretrial identification). See discussion in Appeals & Writs §5.31.

4. Disposition Not on Merits

§44.55 a. Voluntary Dismissal

When a client decides for either personal or tactical reasons not to pursue an appeal, the appeal may be abandoned. This is accomplished by filing a written abandonment signed by the appellant or counsel of record, which results in dismissal of the appeal. If dismissal is sought before the record is filed in the reviewing court, the abandonment is filed with the superior court clerk. If dismissal is sought after the record is filed in the reviewing court, the abandonment is filed in the reviewing court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.316. If dismissal of an appeal is sought before the record is filed in the reviewing court, the notice of abandonment effects the dismissal without requiring any action by the trial court. If the record has already been filed, the reviewing court has discretion to determine whether to dismiss the appeal. People v Nelms (2008) 165 CA4th 1465, 1470, 82 CR3d 32 (trial court exceeded jurisdiction by dismissing charge while appeal pending).

Although Cal Rules of Ct 8.316(a) provides that the abandonment may be signed by either the appellant or the attorney of record, some districts prefer that both sign the notice. Counsel should check with the clerk of the district court of appeal where the matter is pending. For the abandonment of a juvenile appeal, see Cal Rules of Ct 8.411, effective July 1, 2010. For a Notice of Abandonment form, see Appeals & Writs §2.40.

Ø Note: It is recommended that appellate counsel always have the appellant sign the notice of abandonment to avoid any question about whether the appellant actually wanted to abandon the appeal.

§44.56 b. Dismissal of Appeal for Irregularity

The court of appeal may dismiss an appeal for failure to file an opening brief (Cal Rules of Ct 8.220(a), 8.360(c)(5); see §§44.31, 44.40) or because the appeal "is irregular in any substantial particular" (Pen C §1248). For examples of "irregularity" that can lead to dismissal, see Appeals & Writs §5.16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.57 c. Mooted Appeal

A moot appeal is subject to dismissal. However, California has a liberal policy that often permits the appellate court to address an issue that would otherwise be considered "moot." For example, "if a pending case poses an issue of broad public interest that is likely to recur, the court may exercise an inherent discretion to resolve that issue even though an event occurring during its pendency would normally render the matter moot." In re William M. (1970) 3 C3d 16, 23, 89 CR 33.

When a defendant has fully served a sentence, including the parole period, an appeal on the underlying conviction is not moot per se; however, the defendant's sentencing issue may be deemed moot. In re Katherine R. (1970) 6 CA3d 354, 356, 86 CR 281. Nonetheless, the court may address an otherwise moot sentencing issue if the sentence that was imposed inflicts a stigma on the appellant. See, e.g., People v Feagley (1975) 14 C3d 338, 345, 121 CR 509.

If an appellant escapes and remains at large while an appeal is pending, the appeal may be dismissed. People v Mutch (1971) 4 C3d 389, 399, 93 CR 721. See Appeals & Writs §5.17. See also People v Brych (1988) 203 CA3d 1068, 250 CR 402 (appellant's conduct in leaving country and refusing to communicate with his attorneys evidenced abandonment of appeal, justifying dismissal). However, if a fugitive is returned to custody before the notice of appeal is filed, the "fugitive dismissal rule" does not apply. People v Byron (2009) 170 CA4th 657, 666, 88 CR3d 386.

§44.59 e. No Dismissal Because Defendant Incompetent on Appeal

The court is not allowed to dismiss an appeal because the appellant is incompetent. People v Kelly (1992) 1 C4th 495, 544, 3 CR2d 677.

§44.60 f. Abatement of Appeal After Appellant's Death

A criminal defendant's death while his or her appeal is pending abates appellate proceedings and automatically vacates the judgment of conviction. On confirming that a client is deceased, counsel should file a motion to abate, requesting that the appeal be dismissed, the judgment of conviction vacated, and the case remanded to the trial court with directions that the information or indictment be dismissed. A certified copy of the death certificate should be attached. See In re Jackson (1985) 39 C3d 464, 480, 216 CR 760. See also Appeals & Writs §5.18.

The court may choose to rule on an issue even if the appellant dies during the pendency of the appeal. See, e.g., In re Sheena K. (2007) 40 C4th 875, 879, 55 CR3d 716 (court ruled on constitutional challenge to probation condition); In re Jackson (1985) 39 C3d 464, 480, 216 CR 760 (court ruled on parole suitability hearings).

Requests for publication (Cal Rules of Ct 8.1120). Anyone may request publication of an unpublished court of appeal opinion. The request must be made by letter to the court that issued the opinion, with service on all parties, and should concisely state why the opinion meets one or more of the standards for publication listed in Cal Rules of Ct 8.1105(b). The request must be made within 20 days after the opinion is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1120(a)(3). If the court of appeal does not grant the request, or cannot do so because the opinion has become final (see §44.66), it will transmit the request to the supreme court with its recommendation on whether the request should be granted. The supreme court will then grant or deny the request. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1120(b).

For further discussion of requests for publication, including strategic considerations, see Appeals & Writs §5.15.

Requests for depublication (Cal Rules of Ct 8.1125). Anyone may request depublication of a published opinion of the court of appeal. The request must be made by separate letter (i.e., not as part of a petition for review) to the supreme court, with service on all parties, and should concisely state (in 10 pages or less) why the opinion should not remain published. The request must be made within 30 calendar days after the decision becomes final as to the court of appeal. The court of appeal or any person may file a response within 10 calendar days, either joining in the request or opposing it. The supreme court will then grant or deny the request.

M. Petition for Rehearing

§44.62 1. Grounds for Rehearing

Court rules do not specify the grounds for petitions for rehearing. As a practical matter, however, there is at least one circumstance in which filing a petition for rehearing is required: when the court of appeal has left out or misstated either essential facts or a legal issue tendered. The supreme court will not consider any claim of "omission or misstatement of an issue or fact" in the court of appeal opinion unless the alleged omission or misstatement was first called to the court of appeal's attention in a petition for rehearing. Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(c)(2). Another reason for filing a petition for rehearing is to advise the court of appeal of a new appellate decision published after the filing of its opinion that might alter the result.

The court will not ordinarily consider an issue raised for the first time by a petition for rehearing. See Brown v Superior Court (1982) 137 CA3d 778, 782, 187 CR 324.

Ø Note: Unfortunately, some attorneys, having lost on appeal, use the petition for rehearing procedure as a means of venting their displeasure with what they consider to be unfair or poorly reasoned appellate court decisions. As tempting as it might seem to give the court a piece of one's mind, it is rarely a good idea to do so. It is, of course, no help to the client, and may well redound to the detriment of future clients represented by that attorney in the same court. It can also result in public reproval and the imposition of severe sanctions. See, e.g., In re Koven (2005) 134 CA4th 262, 35 CR3d 917.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.63 2. Time Limits, Form and Content, and Service and Filing of Petition and Answer

A petition for rehearing must be served and filed within 15 days after the court of appeal files its decision, a postdecision publication order restarting the finality period, or a modification order changing the appellate judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 8.268(b)(1), 8.366(a).

A party is not allowed to file an answer to a petition for rehearing unless the court of appeal requests it. Once requested, an answer to a petition for rehearing must be served and filed within 8 days after the order requesting an answer is filed. The rule states that rehearing normally will not be granted unless the court has requested an answer. Cal Rules of Ct 8.268(b)(2), 8.366(a).

> Ø Note: A separate rule, Cal Rules of Ct 8.536, governs petitions for rehearing in the supreme court. That rule allows a party to file an answer without any court order. Cal Rules of Ct 8.536(b).

On the format of the petition or answer, the rules provide that "the relevant provisions of rule 8.204" apply. Cal Rules of Ct 8.268(b)(3), 8.366(a). On what Cal Rules of Ct 8.204 requires, see §44.32. A sample petition for rehearing is in Appeals & Writs §5.53. Filing and service is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 8.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.64 3. Grant of Rehearing

If a rehearing is granted, there is no fixed rule on whether additional briefing will be ordered or whether the case will be set for a second oral argument. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.268(d), 8.366(a), 8.536(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.65 4. Denial of Rehearing; Modification of Opinion

If the court of appeal does not rule on a petition for rehearing before the date the opinion is final (see §44.66), the petition is deemed denied. Cal Rules of Ct 8.268(c), 8.366(a). The same is true of a rehearing petition in the supreme court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.536(c).

When it denies a petition for rehearing, or at any other time before its decision is final, the court may modify its opinion in the case, including changing the language, citations, or even the result. Cal Rules of Ct 8.264(c), 8.366(a), 8.532(c). On the effect of a modification on finality, see §44.66.

N. Finality of Decisions

§44.66 1. When Decision Becomes Final

It is important to keep track of the date on which the appellate decision becomes "final" because other deadlines are determined by that date. Notably, the 10-day period in which a petition for review may be filed in the California Supreme Court starts to run when the court of appeal decision becomes final. See §44.71.

A court of appeal decision generally becomes final 30 calendar days after it is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.366(b)(1). Certain decisions (such as denial of an application for bail or to reduce bail pending appeal, or voluntary dismissal of an appeal) are final on filing. Cal Rules of Ct 8.366(b)(2).

Ø Note: The denial of a petition for writ of habeas corpus filed in the appellate court ordinarily becomes final when it is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.387(b)(2)(A). There is, however, an exception for habeas corpus petitions submitted in the appellate court in conjunction with a pending direct appeal. If the court of appeal denies a habeas corpus petition on the same day that it affirms a related direct appeal, the decisions denying the habeas petition and affirming the judgment on appeal become final at the same time, i.e., 30 calendar days after the decisions are filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.387(b)(2)(B). On filing a state court habeas petition in the court of appeal in conjunction with a pending appeal, see chap 42; Appeals & Writs §§9.35, 10.28.

If the court of appeal orders publication (full or partial) of a decision after it is filed and before it is final, the finality period runs from the date of the publication order. Cal Rules of Ct 8.366(b)(3). If the court orders the opinion modified in a way that changes the appellate judgment, the finality period runs from the date of the modification order. Cal Rules of Ct 8.366(b)(4). The finality of an opinion is determined by the California Rules of Court and is not affected by the possibility that the U.S. Supreme Court might grant certiorari. In re Edgerly (1982) 131 CA3d 88, 91 n1, 182 CR 235.

On when a California Supreme Court decision becomes final, see the chart in §44.2. See also Appeals & Writs §5.33.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.67 2. Issuance of Remittitur

The filing of a valid notice of appeal transfers jurisdiction of a case to the appellate court until a remittitur is issued. People v Saunoa (2006) 139 CA4th 870, 872, 43 CR3d 287. Remittitur is the final step in the appellate process and consists of remitting the certificate of judgment to the court below. See Pen C §1265(a). Practitioners usually refer to the certificate of judgment as a remittitur, as do the California Rules of Court; accordingly, this chapter uses that term.

If the California Supreme Court does not grant review of a court of appeal decision, the court of appeal issues its remittitur immediately after the supreme court denies or dismisses review or the period for granting review expires. Cal Rules of Ct 8.272(b)(1), 8.366(a).

The court of appeal may direct that the remittitur be issued immediately after decision only on the parties' stipulation or on a requested or stipulated dismissal of an appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.272(c)(1), 8.366(a). The court may stay issuance of the remittitur for a reasonable period on its own motion, the motion of a party, or the stipulation of the parties, for good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 8.272(c)(2), 8.366(a).

After supreme court review of a court of appeal decision, the supreme court issues a remittitur. Cal Rules of Ct 8.540(a)(1). The clerk normally must send the remittitur to the court of appeal when the supreme court's decision becomes final. Cal Rules of Ct 8.540(b)(1)-(2). The supreme court may, however, order that the clerk issue the remittitur immediately after decision or that the remittitur's issuance be stayed for a reasonable time. Cal Rules of Ct 8.540(c)(1)-(2). The court of appeal issues its remittitur immediately on receiving the supreme court's remittitur, if there will be no further proceedings in the court of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.272(b)(2)(A), 8.366(a).

The issuance of the remittitur transfers jurisdiction from the appellate court to the court whose decision was reviewed. People v Saunoa (2006) 139 CA4th 870, 872, 43 CR3d 287; Gallenkamp v Superior Court (1990) 221 CA3d 1, 12, 270 CR 346. This action deprives the appellate court of jurisdiction to take any further action in the matter (Pen C §1265(a)), except to recall the remittitur (see §44.68). All orders necessary to carry out the judgment of the appellate court must be made by the court to which the remittitur is sent. Pen C §1265(a). If the appellate court remands the case with directions, the trial court is authorized only to implement the judgment; it cannot modify or add to those directions. People v Oppenheimer (1965) 236 CA2d 863, 865, 46 CR 476.

For further discussion, see Appeals & Writs §§5.34-5.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.68 3. Recall of Remittitur

The court of appeal may recall the remittitur on its own motion, the motion of a party, or the stipulation of the parties, for good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 8.272(c)(2), 8.366(a). The remittitur may be recalled for correction of clerical errors, or on the ground of fraud, mistake, or inadvertence, but not to correct judicial error. Pacific Legal Found. v California Coastal Comm'n (1982) 33 C3d 158, 165, 188 CR 104. An exception is made, however, when the error is of such dimensions as to entitle the defendant to a writ of habeas corpus. People v Mutch (1971) 4 C3d 389, 396, 93 CR 721. See also People v Kang (2003) 107 CA4th 43, 131 CR2d 447 (remittitur recalled and appeal—previously dismissed because appellant was fugitive—reinstated because court could not say with confidence that dismissal would not "work a palpable injustice" on defendant).

Ø Note: Recall of the remittitur rarely occurs.

Counsel is likely to seek recall of the remittitur in three circumstances:

- A claim that prior appellate counsel provided ineffective assistance may be raised by means of a motion to recall the remittitur. People v Rhoden (1972) 6 C3d 519, 529, 99 CR 751; People v Valenzuela (1985) 175 CA3d 381, 388, 222 CR 405, disapproved on other grounds in People v Flood (1998) 18 C4th 470, 76 CR2d 180. See also In re Serrano (1995) 10 C4th 447, 458, 41 CR2d 695 (ineffective assistance on appeal raised by way of habeas corpus following denial of motion to recall remittitur; remedy was recall of remittitur); In re Grunau (2008) 169 CA4th 997, 1002, 86 CR3d 908 (same). Claims of ineffective assistance on appeal may be grounded on appellate counsel's failure to argue a potentially meritorious issue (People v Rhoden, supra; People v Valenzuela, supra) or on counsel's failure to provide the appellate court with a record adequate to permit it to review every arguable issue. People v Barton (1978) 21 C3d 513, 519, 146 CR 727.
- If counsel did not receive notice of the court of appeal's decision and missed the deadline for filing a petition for rehearing or review, recall of the remittitur may be requested to effectively give the opinion a new filing date and thus allow for timely filing of a petition for rehearing or review. See People v Hickok (1949) 92 CA2d 539, 207 P2d 620 (good cause to recall remittitur when defendant had substituted appellate counsel, and criminal appeal had been dismissed after notice of default had been sent to former appellate counsel).
- If counsel seeks to file a federal habeas corpus petition raising a new federal issue that was not previously asserted, it may be desirable to attempt to satisfy the exhaustion of state remedies requirement by way of an application to recall the remittitur and an accompanying writ petition. See Hayward v Stone (9th Cir 1974) 496 F2d 844. On exhaustion generally, see Appeals & Writs, chap 14.

O. Review in California Supreme Court

§44.69 1. Review Is Discretionary

Except for death penalty cases (which the California Supreme Court always reviews), a criminal defendant's right to appellate review is limited to review by the court of appeal; review by the supreme court is discretionary. Although the court is empowered to conduct review on its own motion (Cal Rules of Ct 8.512(c)), it is normally the obligation of the aggrieved party to seek such review.

If the supreme court grants review, it need not decide every issue on which review is sought but can pick and choose among the issues raised by the petition. Cal Rules of Ct 8.516. The supreme court may also dismiss review or transfer or retransfer a cause to the court of appeal without decision. Cal Rules of Ct 8.528. See generally Cal Const art VI, §12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.70 2. Grounds for Review

The supreme court may grant review of a case if (Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(b)):

- A decision by the supreme court appears necessary to secure uniformity of decision or settle important questions of law;
- The court of appeal lacked jurisdiction of the cause;
- The court of appeal decision lacks the concurrence of the required majority of qualified judges; or
- The matter is to be transferred to the court of appeal for such proceedings as the supreme court may order.

The supreme court will not normally consider any issue that could have been but was not timely raised in the court of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(c). However, the supreme court may decide any issues that are raised or fairly included in the petition or answer and may decide an issue that is neither raised nor fairly included in the petition or answer if the case presents the issue and the court has given the parties reasonable notice and an opportunity to brief and argue it. Cal Rules of Ct 8.516(b); People v Braxton (2004) 34 C4th 798, 809, 22 CR3d 46.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.71 3. Time Limits, Form, and Content of Petition

The petition for review must be filed within 10 calendar days after the court of appeal decision becomes final as to that court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(e). Ordinarily, this means that the petition for review is due in the supreme court between 30 and 40 days after the court of appeal decision is filed. The petition must conform to "the relevant provisions of" Cal Rules of Ct 8.204, which sets out the form for briefs. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(a). On what Rule 8.204 requires, see §44.32.

The petition must have white covers. Cal Rules of Ct 8.40(b).

The petition for review must begin with a concise and nonargumentative statement of the issues presented for review, framed in terms of the facts of the case but without unnecessary detail. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(b)(1). The petition must explain why the case merits review on one of the grounds listed in Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(b). Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(b)(2). If a petition for rehearing could have been filed in the court of appeal, the petition for review must state whether it was filed and, if so, how the court ruled. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(b)(3). On petitions for rehearing, see §§44.62-44.65.

If the court of appeal issued an opinion, a copy of that opinion and of any order modifying it or directing its publication must be bound at the back of the original petition and each copy filed in the supreme court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(b)(4). If the court of appeal issued an order, a copy of the order showing the date it was entered must be bound at the back of the original petition and each copy filed in the supreme court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(b)(5). The title of the case and designation of the parties on the cover of the petition must be identical to those in the court of appeal opinion or order that is the subject of the petition. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(b)(6).

Length. If computer-generated, the petition for review must not exceed 8400 words, including footnotes, and must include a certificate by appellate counsel or an unrepresented party stating the number of words in the petition. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(d)(1). If typewritten, a petition must not exceed 30 pages. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(d)(2). These limits do not include the tables, the court of appeal opinion, the certificate of word count, or any permitted attachments. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(d)(3).

> Ø Note: The chief justice may permit a longer petition for review (or answer, reply, or attachment) on application, for good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(d)(4).

Attachments. In addition to the opinion or order from which the party seeks relief, the party may attach any exhibits or orders of a trial court or court of appeal that the party considers unusually significant; copies of relevant local, state, or federal regulations and other citable materials that are not readily accessible; and any opinion required to be attached under Rule 8.1115(c). These materials, with the exception of any opinion required to be attached under Rule 8.1115(c), must not exceed a combined total of 10 pages, and no other attachments to a petition for review are allowed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(e). No incorporation by reference is permitted, except a reference to a petition, answer, or reply filed by another party in the same case or filed in a case that raises the same or similar issues and in which a petition for review is pending or has been granted. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(e)(3).

> Ø Note: The court of appeal transmits the full record filed before it to the supreme court (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.512(a)), so attaching exhibits is usually unnecessary.

For detailed discussion of petitions for review, see Appeals & Writs §5.43. A sample petition for review is in Appeals & Writs §5.54.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.71A 4. Abbreviated Petition to Exhaust State Remedies

An abbreviated petition for review may be filed; the sole purpose of an abbreviated petition is to "exhaust" federal issues in state court before presenting them in a federal habeas corpus petition. Cal Rules of Ct 8.508(a). Instead of the statement of issues presented and explanation of grounds for review usually required by Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(b)(2), the abbreviated petition must contain "a statement that the case presents no grounds for review under [Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(b)] and the petition is filed solely to exhaust state remedies for federal habeas corpus purposes." The petition must also contain a brief statement of the underlying proceedings and of the factual and legal bases of the federal claims. Cal Rules of Ct 8.508(b)(3).

Ø Warning: Some appellate practitioners have expressed concern that an abbreviated petition filed under the new rule may subsequently be deemed insufficient to exhaust state remedies. An "Advisory Committee Comment" accompanying Cal Rules of Ct 8.508 notes that "federal courts will decide whether a petition filed in compliance with this rule satisfies federal exhaustion requirements." Other practitioners have suggested that complying with the requirement to state "that the case presents no grounds for review under rule 8.500(b)" would violate an ethical prohibition on arguing against one's own client. See People v Feggans (1967) 67 C2d 444, 447, 62 CR 419.

On exhaustion generally, see Appeals & Writs, chap 14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.72 5. Time Limits, Form, and Content of Answer and Reply

The party prevailing in the court of appeal may wish to file an answer in order to present issues not raised in the petition for review. An answer may also be desirable to counter assertions in the petition. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(a)(2). An answer may, however, enhance the perceived importance of the petitioner's issues and thus increase the prospect of the petition's being granted.

An answer to a petition for review must be filed within 20 days after the petition is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(e)(4). An answer that raises additional issues for review must contain a concise and nonargumentative statement of those issues, framed in terms of the facts of the case but without unnecessary detail. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(c). The rules on page limitations, attachments, and incorporation by reference applicable to a petition for review (see §44.71) also apply to an answer. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(d)-(e).

The answer should have blue covers. Cal Rules of Ct 8.40(b).

A reply to an answer, if any, must be filed within 10 days after the answer is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(e)(5). If computer-generated, the reply must not exceed 4200 words, including footnotes, and must include a certificate by appellate counsel or an unrepresented party stating the number of words in the petition. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(d)(1). If typewritten, a reply must not exceed 15 pages. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(d)(2). The rules on attachments and incorporation by reference applicable to a petition for review (see §44.71) also apply to a reply. Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(e). Like the petition, any reply should have white covers. Cal Rules of Ct 8.40(b).

Both an answer and a reply "must comply with the relevant provisions of rule 8.204." Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(a). On what Cal Rules of Ct 8.204 requires, see §44.32.

§44.72A 6. Filing and Service of Petition, Answer, and Reply

Petitions for review and answers to petitions for review are subject to the filing and service requirements of Cal Rules of Ct 8.25. In addition, a petition for review must be served on the court of appeal clerk. Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(f)(1).

Counsel should file an original and 13 copies of a petition for review or an answer to a petition for review. Cal Rules of Ct 8.44(a)(1).

Ø Note: If the petition is an abbreviated petition for review to exhaust state remedies (see §44.71A), an original and eight copies must be filed in the supreme court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.44(a)(4). An exhaustion petition must be served on the court of appeal clerk, but it need not be served on the superior court clerk. Cal Rules of Ct 8.508(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.73 7. Time for Granting or Denying Review

The supreme court may order review within 60 days after the last petition for review was filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.512(b)(1). Before the initial 60-day period (or any extension of it) expires, the court may order one or more extensions to a date no later than 90 days after the last petition was filed. Cal Rules of Ct 8.512(b)(1). If the court does not rule within the time limit, the petition is deemed denied. Cal Rules of Ct 8.512(b)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.74 8. Issues to Be Reviewed

After granting review of a decision of a court of appeal, the supreme court may specify the issues to be argued and can review and decide any or all issues. Cal Rules of Ct 8.516. Unless the court orders otherwise, briefs on the merits and oral argument must be confined to the specified issues and to the issues fairly included in them. Cal Rules of Ct 8.516(a)(1). The court need not decide every issue the parties raise or the court specifies. Cal Rules of Ct 8.516(b)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§44.75 9. Briefs on Merits

Within 30 days after the supreme court files an order granting review, the petitioner must serve and file in that court either an opening brief on the merits or the brief it filed in the court of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.520(a)(1). Within 30 days after the petitioner files its brief or the time to do so expires, the opposing party must serve and file either an answer brief on the merits or the brief it filed in the court of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.520(a)(2). The petitioner may file a reply brief on the merits, or the reply brief it filed in the court of appeal, within 20 days after the opposing party files its brief. Cal Rules of Ct 8.520(a)(3).

Form and content requirements and length limitations for merits briefs are set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 8.520(b)-(c). Requirements for supplemental briefs are in Cal Rules of Ct 8.520(d). Further requirements for attachments are in Cal Rules of Ct 8.520(h). The supreme court may request additional briefs on any or all issues, whether or not the parties have filed briefs on the merits. Cal Rules of Ct 8.520(e). For further discussion of briefs on the merits in the supreme court, see Appeals & Writs §5.48.

Amicus curiae briefs. Requirements for amicus curiae briefs in the supreme court are in Cal Rules of Ct 8.520(f).

§44.76 10. Proceedings After Briefing

Procedures for oral argument in the supreme court are prescribed in Cal Rules of Ct 8.524. See also Appeals & Writs §5.49. The court's practices in the preparation and filing of opinions are discussed in detail in a court publication titled Internal Operating Practices and Procedures of the Supreme Court, which is available in the Courts section of the Judicial Council's website (http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/courts).

On rehearing in the supreme court, see §§44.63-44.65 and Cal Rules of Ct 8.536. On finality of supreme court decisions, see §44.2 and Cal Rules of Ct 8.532. On issuance of a remittitur by the supreme court, see §44.67 and Cal Rules of Ct 8.540.

§44.77 IV. PROSECUTION APPEALS

When prosecution has right to appeal. The prosecution may appeal from the following (Pen C §1238):

- An order setting aside or sustaining a demurrer to all or any portion of an accusatory pleading (Pen C §1238(a)(1)-(2));
- An order granting a new trial (Pen C §1238(a)(3));
- An order arresting judgment (Pen C §1238(a)(4));
- An order made after judgment affecting the prosecution's substantial rights (Pen C §1238(a)(5));
- An order modifying the verdict or finding in specified ways (Pen C §1238(a)(6));
- An order dismissing the case before trial because of a defendant's successful motion to suppress evidence (Pen C §1238(a)(7));
- An order or judgment dismissing or otherwise terminating all or any portion of the action (Pen C §1238(a)(8));
- An order denying a motion to reinstate the complaint under Pen C §871.5 (Pen C §1238(a)(9));
- Imposition of an unlawful sentence (Pen C §1238(a)(10)); or
- An order under Pen C §1424 recusing the district attorney (Pen C §1238(a)(11).

Ø Note: The prosecution may also appeal from an order granting habeas corpus relief to a defendant. See §42.33.

The prosecution may not appeal from an order granting probation. It must instead seek review by a petition for writ of mandate within 60 calendar days after the order granting probation. Pen C §1238(d). The prosecution may, however, appeal from an order made after a judgment granting probation if the appeal does not challenge the grant of probation. People v Douglas (1999) 20 C4th 85, 82 CR2d 816.

The prosecution may appeal from an evidentiary ruling made before jeopardy attached, if the ruling brings the case within one of the grounds listed in Pen C §1238. Thus, in People v Yarbrough (1991) 227 CA3d 1650, 278 CR 703, the prosecution was permitted to appeal from dismissal following a common law motion to suppress the result of an allegedly suggestive lineup. In People v Jackson (1991) 1 CA4th 697, 700, 2 CR2d 308, and People v Goodner (1990) 226 CA3d 609, 276 CR 542, the prosecution was permitted to appeal pretrial rulings striking prior conviction allegations.

Because the summary denial of a petition for writ of mandate is not a decision on the merits, the prosecution may appeal from the dismissal of an information following a successful motion to suppress, even after its petition for writ of mandate seeking review of the trial court's ruling on the motion to suppress has been summarily denied. People v Allison (1988) 202 CA3d 1084, 249 CR 218. But see People v Carrington (1974) 40 CA3d 647, 115 CR 294 (denial of petition by minute order is a decision on the merits and prosecution may not appeal).

A city and its police department do not have standing to appeal a trial court's order under Pen C §851.8 to seal and destroy an arrest record after finding the defendant factually innocent. People v Punzalan (2003) 112 CA4th 1307, 6 CR3d 30. The court in Punzalan did not explicitly state whether the prosecution would have had standing to appeal.

Ø Note: The law concerning when the prosecution has the right to appeal is complex and should therefore be carefully considered by counsel responding to a prosecution appeal. See, e.g., People v Drake (1977) 19 C3d 749, 139 CR 720.

Procedure in prosecution appeals. Most of the rules that apply to defendants' appeals also apply to prosecution appeals, but some are different. For example, what constitutes the "normal record" (see §44.20) is different in a prosecution appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.320.

Ø Note: When both the defendant and the prosecution appeal, special briefing rules apply. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.216(b), 8.360(b)(4), (e).

Application of Wende to prosecution appeals. No court has addressed whether Wende principles (see §44.37) apply to appointed counsel defending against a prosecution appeal. The issue is unlikely to come up, because in nearly every prosecution appeal, a defense argument has been made in the trial court and found persuasive by the trial judge. At the least, appellate defense counsel should be able to restate that argument.

For a detailed discussion of prosecution appeals in felony cases, see Appeals & Writs §§1.19-1.30. A sample respondent's brief in a prosecution appeal is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §44.6 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§45.1 I. OVERVIEW

This chapter focuses on federal habeas corpus proceedings challenging the constitutionality of a state-court-imposed criminal conviction and the sentence that results from that judgment. The role of federal habeas corpus is codified in 28 USC §§2241, 2254, and 2261-2266 (state custody; remedies in federal court). The statute is enforced through a companion set of rules: Rules Governing §2254 Cases in the U.S. District Courts (hereafter cited as Habeas Rules). This chapter does not address federal capital habeas corpus litigation, a complex area requiring specific training and expertise. A practitioner who wants to obtain federal habeas relief for a convicted person should be thoroughly familiar with the statute and rules. There is an appendix of model forms in the back of the Habeas Rules. This chapter is a summary treatment of federal habeas corpus. For more detailed discussions of substantive and procedural aspects of federal habeas review, see Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases, chaps 13-18 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007) (hereafter cited as Appeals & Writs); Hertz & Liebman, Federal Habeas Corpus Practice and Procedure (5th ed 2005).

The Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA) (Pub L 104-132, 110 Stat 1214) made significant amendments to the statutes governing habeas petitions in federal courts. This chapter discusses the changes in federal habeas procedure brought about by AEDPA. Also, because AEDPA partially codifies preexisting law, and because AEDPA's substantive provisions apply only to habeas petitions filed after its enactment (Lindh v Murphy (1997) 521 US 320, 138 L Ed 2d 481, 117 S Ct 2059; see also Jeffries v Wood (9th Cir 1997) 114 F3d 1484, 1493), the chapter also discusses pre-AEDPA habeas practice. AEDPA has brought about far-reaching changes in federal habeas practice, and the courts are still grappling with its implications. Therefore, counsel should carefully check all references in this chapter for any modifications by the U.S. Supreme Court, lower federal courts, or legislative enactment.

Review in the U.S. Supreme Court is discussed only briefly in this chapter. For further discussion, see Appeals & Writs, chap 12, and Stern, Gressman, Shapiro & Geller, Supreme Court Practice (9th ed 2007). United States Supreme Court Rules are abbreviated in this chapter as US Sup Ct R. Original writs of habeas corpus filed in the Court are rarely granted. US Sup Ct R 20.4(a).

Although 28 USC §2241 (power to grant writ of habeas corpus) authorizes the federal courts to hear constitutional challenges to other state court actions (e.g., pretrial detention without bail, extradition proceedings, and detention that continues beyond the time authorized by the judgment of conviction), such challenges to custody are beyond the scope of this chapter.

An attorney handling a federal habeas matter must be admitted to practice before the district court in which the petition is filed or apply to appear pro hac vice. Counsel should have a copy of the local rules for that particular court. References to the four local district court rules are abbreviated in this chapter as "CD" (Central District), "ED" (Eastern District), "ND" (Northern District), and "SD" (Southern District), followed by "Cal Local R." Local court rules vary among these four federal district courts and are periodically updated. The local rules can be quite detailed. See, e.g., ED Cal Local R 130-131.

In addition to district rules, the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure also control the progress of the federal habeas proceeding. The Federal Rules are abbreviated in this chapter as Fed R App P, and the rules of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit are abbreviated as "9th Cir R."

There are three pleadings in a federal habeas corpus proceeding: the petition, which states the claim or claims and the factual grounds for the claim or claims; the answer; and the reply (traditionally called a traverse). After reviewing a properly submitted and verified petition, the district court judge or magistrate judge (see Habeas Rules 8(b), 10) will order the state to file a response within a fixed time unless it plainly appears from the face of the petition and any exhibits submitted along with it that the petitioner is not entitled to federal habeas relief. Habeas Rules 4. This response may be a motion, an answer, or other response. Habeas Rules 4.

The state's answer must respond to the allegations in the petition, and must state whether any claim in the petition is barred by failure to exhaust state remedies, a procedural bar, nonretroactivity, or a statute of limitations. Habeas Rules 5(b). It must be accompanied by those portions of the state court reporter's transcripts the state considers relevant; the state court appellate briefs of both prosecution and defendant; and the opinions and dispositive orders of the state appellate court. Habeas Rules 5(c). If the court orders the respondent to answer, it will also set a date by which the petitioner may file a reply to the answer. See Habeas Rules 5(e).

Once the petition is before a judge, he or she may grant or deny relief on the pleadings and the record, authorize discovery or expansion of the record, or hold an evidentiary hearing before granting or denying habeas relief. Habeas Rules 6-8. Discovery is not available until after the habeas petition is filed. Calderon v U.S. Dist. Court (9th Cir 1996) 98 F3d 1102. A magistrate judge may authorize discovery or expansion of the record or order an evidentiary hearing. See Habeas Rules 8(b), 10. He or she does not, however, have independent authority to grant or deny habeas relief, unless both parties consent to granting the magistrate judge this authority. Assuming the parties have not consented to allowing the magistrate judge to issue a final order, the magistrate judge must submit written findings of fact and recommendations for disposition to a district court judge. Habeas Rules 8(b). The parties may file written objections to the findings and recommendations within 14 days after their filing. For any proposed finding or recommendation to which an objection is made, the district judge must conduct de novo review. Habeas Rules 8(b). Failure to object to proposed findings and recommendations can severely limit the right to further appellate review. Martinez v Ylst (9th Cir 1991) 951 F2d 1153. After reviewing the objections, the district court judge will issue an order accepting, modifying, or rejecting the magistrate judge's findings and recommendations. Habeas Rules 8(b). At this point, the petition will be either granted or denied.

The state may appeal the grant of habeas relief without prior certification. Fed R App P 22(b). In most cases, the petitioner must obtain a certificate of appealability from the district court or the court of appeals in order to appeal the denial of relief. 28 USC §2253(c); Fed R App P 22(b).

The major deadlines applicable to federal habeas litigation are given in §45.2.

Deadlines for particular pleadings are set by the Habeas Rules, local rules of court, and standards established by court decisions. The Ninth Circuit requirements are summarized in the appellate processing schedule for noncriminal cases for the Ninth Circuit, reproduced in Appeals & Writs, chap 18. (Habeas corpus proceedings are considered civil actions.)

III. ADMISSION AND APPOINTMENT OF COUNSEL

§45.3 A. Federal District Courts

The requirements for admission to practice before the four federal district courts in California vary. In general, any member of the State Bar of California is eligible for admission into a federal district court. See CD Cal Local R 83-2.2; ED Cal Local R 180; ND Cal Local R 11-1; SD Cal Local R 83.3.

An indigent state prisoner has no constitutional right to court-appointed counsel in habeas corpus proceedings. See Miranda v Castro (9th Cir 2002) 292 F3d 1063, 1068. The Criminal Justice Act of 1964, as amended (18 USC §3006A(a)(2)(B)), authorizes the district court to appoint counsel at the beginning of a noncapital habeas proceeding when "the interests of justice so require" and the person is "financially eligible." The Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA) specifically authorizes the appointment of counsel under Criminal Justice Act of 1964 standards. 28 USC §2254(h). In determining whether counsel should be appointed in a noncapital habeas case, the district court must evaluate the likelihood of success on the merits and the petitioner's ability to articulate his or her claims pro se. Wilborn v Escalderon (9th Cir 1986) 789 F2d 1328; Weygandt v Look (9th Cir 1983) 718 F2d 952. See also Chaney v Lewis (9th Cir 1986) 801 F2d 1191. In some cases, it may be appropriate to appoint counsel for a limited purpose, for example, to represent the petitioner at a competency hearing when there is a substantial question about the petitioner's mental competency. See Allen v Calderon (9th Cir 2005) 408 F3d 1150.

Even when the court has denied an application for appointment of counsel accompanying the petition, it may grant a later application if the petition survives the pleading stage and appears to have some merit. The court must appoint counsel for a financially eligible petitioner:

- If discovery is ordered and counsel is necessary for the effective use of discovery procedures (Habeas Rules 6(a)); or
- If an evidentiary hearing is required (Habeas Rules 8(c)).

§45.4 B. Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals

The procedure for applying for admission to practice before the Ninth Circuit is set out in Fed R App P 46(a). Application forms can be obtained from the clerk of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. The completed form should be returned by mail with a check for the admission fee made out to the clerk. Under Fed R App P 46(a) and 9th Cir R 46-1.2, an attorney who is not already a member of the Ninth Circuit Bar must apply for admission immediately on docketing an appeal with the court. In practice, this is done when the notice of appeal is filed. For further discussion, see Appeals & Writs, chap 18.

Ø Note: The California courts of appeal use the singular "appeal" in their name, whereas the federal circuit courts of appeals use "appeals."

If counsel was appointed in the district court, the appointment automatically continues in the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals if a notice of appeal is filed. 9th Cir R 4-1(a). The converse, however, is not generally true. If the Ninth Circuit appoints counsel and the case is remanded to the district court for further proceedings, the petitioner will have to apply to the district court for the appointment of counsel.

Ø Note: Habeas corpus proceedings are treated as civil matters. Ninth Circuit Rule 42-1 mandates automatic dismissal of a civil appeal and possible disciplinary and monetary sanctions for failure to diligently prosecute an appeal.

An appellant who was not represented by counsel in the district court proceedings may request court-appointed counsel on appeal. The petitioner should file a financial affidavit (CJA (Criminal Justice Act) Form 23, available from the court clerk) and a motion for appointment of counsel in the district court along with the notice of appeal. 9th Cir R 4-1(b). In addition, counsel who was not originally appointed in the district court may move the circuit court for appointment. 9th Cir R 4-1(b).

§45.5 C. United States Supreme Court

Each party represented by counsel in a U.S. Supreme Court case must be represented by at least one attorney in good standing with the U.S. Supreme Court Bar. See US Sup Ct R 5. The requirements for Supreme Court admission appear in Appeals & Writs, chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

IV. BAIL AND STAYS

§45.6 A. Pending Decision

Federal district courts have the inherent power to admit a habeas corpus petitioner to bail pending a decision, but the standards for such relief are extremely high. Generally, the movant must demonstrate a strong likelihood of success on the merits and "exigent circumstances" that make immediate release appropriate. Woodcock v Donnelly (1st Cir 1972) 470 F2d 93. See also Marino v Vasquez (9th Cir 1987) 812 F2d 499.

The court in which a habeas proceeding is pending may stay state court proceedings, including imposition of the death penalty. 28 USC §2251. It is exceedingly rare, however, for a federal district court to stay imposition of any state court sentence other than the death penalty. See Appeals & Writs, chap 18.

For further discussion of bail and stays during federal habeas proceedings, see Appeals & Writs, chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.7 B. After Relief Is Denied

The district court has inherent authority to release the petitioner on appeal after the denial of habeas corpus relief in the district court. Fed R App P 23(b). However, such release (with or without bail) is almost never granted. See U.S. v Dansker (3d Cir 1977) 561 F2d 485 (explaining appropriateness of restrictive standards for granting bail in collateral attacks). An initial order on custody or release generally remains in effect pending review unless the petitioner can persuade the reviewing court (or a judge or justice of the court) that "special reasons" exist for modifying the initial order or making a new order. Fed R App P 23(d).

For discussion of stays in the U.S. Supreme Court, see Appeals & Writs, chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.8 C. After Relief Is Granted

When the district court grants habeas corpus relief, the order is typically made in the form of a conditional writ, directing the prisoner's release unless retrial is commenced within a specified time. Conditional writs essentially accommodate the state in that they give the state time to take remedial action. The consequence if the state fails to take action is release of the prisoner. Wilkinson v Dotson (2005) 544 US 74, 87, 161 L Ed 2d 253, 125 S Ct 1242 (Scalia, J., concurring). A district court does, however, have authority to modify a conditional writ to give the state more time, even after the original deadline has passed. Harvest v Castro (9th Cir 2008) 531 F3d 737, 744. Any such modification is governed by the habeas rules and the federal rules of civil procedure, including Fed R Civ P 60. 531 F3d at 745. If the state fails to comply with the writ's conditions and cannot demonstrate it deserves relief under the habeas rules or Fed R Civ P 60, the prisoner must be released. 531 F3d at 750. If the state appeals a conditional writ, the petitioner must be released "unless the court or judge rendering the decision, or the court of appeals, or the Supreme Court, or a judge or justice of either court orders otherwise." Fed R App P 23(c). Respondent may request the judge who issued the order to issue a stay pending appeal. Fed R App P 8. The motion should address such issues as the possibility of flight, the state's interest in continued custody and rehabilitation, the state's likelihood of success on appeal, and the dangerousness of the petitioner. See Hilton v Braunskill (1987) 481 US 770, 95 L Ed 2d 724, 107 S Ct 2113.

If the district court denies the stay, the state may ask it to grant a temporary stay to allow the Ninth Circuit to consider its stay request. A temporary stay of at least 21 calendar days should be requested. If the district court denies the temporary stay, the state may seek an emergency stay from the Ninth Circuit. See 9th Cir R 27-3.

V. PROCEDURE FOR HABEAS CORPUS REVIEW OF STATE COURT CONVICTIONS IN FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT

§45.8A A. Preliminary Investigation

Because of the 1-year statute of limitations for federal habeas corpus petitions, it is important that counsel begin investigating all potential claims as early as possible. This applies whether counsel begins representation before a federal petition has been filed or after being appointed by the court to represent an individual who has already filed a petition pro se. Most pro se petitions need to be amended following the appointment of counsel, and a petition cannot be amended with new claims after the statute of limitations has run unless the new claims and the original claims have a "common core" of operative facts. Mayle v Felix (2005) 545 US 644, 162 L Ed 2d 582, 590, 125 S Ct 2562; Hebner v McGrath (9th Cir 2008) 543 F3d 1133, 1137.

Before preparing a petition or amending a pro se petition, counsel should review the state court appellate briefs and state habeas petitions, as well as other items in the state court record, including orders and trial transcripts. Although the state court clerk's transcript, reporter's transcript, appellate briefs, and habeas petitions may be lodged by the respondent in the district court, it is usually quicker for petitioner's counsel to obtain them from the petitioner. Occasionally, it is necessary to obtain a court order requiring respondent's counsel to lodge these items with the district court. Transcripts can be obtained by court order at government expense. 28 USC §2250.

Petitioner's counsel should also confer with the petitioner's trial, appellate, and state habeas counsel, if any, to review possible habeas claims and review their files, and conduct preliminary investigation necessary to verify claims to be set forth in the petition. It is helpful to have the petitioner sign a release form allowing counsel to interview former counsel and obtain copies of confidential legal, medical, financial, academic, military, and other information, and then to make requests to former attorneys, doctors, and other institutions for records relating to the client. If former counsel resists producing a file, habeas counsel can remind him or her that under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(D) and California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1992-127, the attorney must release client files to the client on the client's request after the representation has terminated. See also Bernstein v State Bar (1990) 50 C3d 221, 266 CR 625; Rosenthal v State Bar (1987) 43 C3d 612, 238 CR 377; LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 475 (1994) (file related to client's case belongs to client, not attorney). The attorney is not at liberty to remove client papers or property compiled during the course of the representation before giving the file to the client. LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 509 (2002). "'Client papers and property' includes correspondence, pleadings, deposition transcripts, exhibits, physical evidence, expert's reports, and other items reasonably necessary to the client's representation." Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(D). If former counsel wants to keep a copy of the file, copying expenses fall on former counsel absent a contrary agreement with client. §45.9 B. Obtaining and Preparing Habeas Petition

The Habeas Rules include a model form for a petition for writ of habeas corpus, and require that a petition filed in the federal district court be in substantially that form, unless a local rule requires use of a different form. Habeas Rules 2(d). Each California district court has its own rule about the use of forms; the forms can be obtained from the court clerk. CD Cal Local R 83-16.1; ED Cal Local R 190; ND Cal Local R 2254-3(e); SD Cal Local R HC.2(b). The local rules may have other requirements pertaining to habeas cases.

Clerk, Northern District U.S. District Courthouse 450 Golden Gate Avenue, 16th Floor San Francisco, CA 94102 (415) 522-2000	Clerk, Southern District U.S. Courthouse 880 Front Street, Suite 4290 San Diego, CA 92101-8900 (619) 557-5600

The habeas corpus petition should be filed in the federal judicial district that has venue over the county in which the sentencing court is located. Although both this district and the federal judicial district in which the defendant is in custody have jurisdiction over a federal habeas petition (28 USC §2241(d)), as a matter of practice in California, a habeas petition filed in the district in which the petitioner is in custody will be transferred to the district in which the sentencing court is located. See Appeals & Writs, chap 16.

Habeas Rule 3(b) provides that the clerk must file a federal habeas corpus petition and enter it on the docket. The Advisory Committee Notes accompanying the 2004 revision of Rule 3(b) specifies that the clerk may not refuse to accept a filing solely because it fails to comply with the Habeas Rules or a particular court's local rules.

§45.9A C. Specificity of Pleading

To obtain relief or an evidentiary hearing in a federal habeas corpus proceeding, the petitioner must allege facts with sufficient specificity to support the claim for relief. Bald assertions and conclusory allegations are insufficient. Blackledge v Allison (1977) 431 US 63, 52 L Ed 2d 136, 97 S Ct 1621; Wacht v Cardwell (9th Cir 1979) 604 F2d 1245. Under the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA), if it plainly appears from the face of the habeas petition and any exhibits annexed to it that the petitioner is not entitled to relief in the district court, the court may summarily deny the petition on the merits; if the petition is unexhausted, the court is not required to give the petitioner an opportunity to exhaust state remedies. 28 USC §2254(b)(2); Habeas Rules 4. However, if the petition contains both exhausted and unexhausted claims, the court may dismiss only the unexhausted claims, and hold the exhausted claims in abeyance until the petitioner has had an opportunity to exhaust the unexhausted claims. See Rhines v Weber (2005) 544 US 269, 161 L Ed 2d 440, 125 S Ct 1528. For discussion, see §45.23.

If the petition alleges only a violation of state law, it is subject to dismissal for failure to present a valid federal claim. Stewart v Nix (8th Cir 1992) 972 F2d 967, 970; Cox v Lockhart (8th Cir 1992) 970 F2d 448, 453.

§45.9B D. Electronic Filing Rules

All of the U.S. District Courts in California now require attorneys to file and serve pleadings and documents using the federal courts' "Case Management/Electronic Case Files" (CM/ECF) system unless a special exemption is obtained. In the Eastern District of California, both petitions and all subsequent filings are to be done electronically. ED Cal Local R 133(a). In other districts, pleadings that initiate a case (e.g., the petition) must be filed in paper and, perhaps, electronically as well. CD Cal Local R 3-2 (originally paper, then by e-mail within 24 hours); ND Cal General Order 45(V)(A) (originally paper, then e-mail filed within 10 days); SD Cal Electronic Case Filing Administrative Policies and Procedures Manual §2(c) (paper only). Parties appearing without attorneys, or "pro se," are exempted from the electronic filing requirement unless they obtain the court's approval to file electronically. See, e.g., ED Cal Local R 183(c). Thus, habeas corpus petitioners without counsel will generally use traditional filing and service methods, but when counsel is appointed, counsel will be required to file and serve electronically unless exempted by the court. The CM/ECF system is integrated with PACER (Public Access to Court Electronic Records) and allows users to obtain case and docket information about all cases pending in the court.

§45.10 E. In Forma Pauperis Status and Appointment of Counsel

An in-custody petitioner who wishes to proceed in forma pauperis, i.e., without paying court fees, must file an affidavit listing all the petitioner's assets. The affidavit must state the nature of the action and must attest both to the affiant's belief that the petitioner is entitled to relief and to the petitioner's inability to pay costs or give security. 28 USC §1915(a)(1); Habeas Rules 3(a)(2). The affidavit must be accompanied by a certificate of the warden or other appropriate officer of the institution of confinement stating the amount of money or securities on deposit to the petitioner's credit. Habeas Rules 3(a)(2). For further discussion, see Appeals & Writs, chap 16.

Ø Note: The district court clerk normally sends a blank affidavit or declaration form to request in forma pauperis status with each blank habeas corpus petition. This form includes the warden's certificate.

Petitioner or counsel may file a request for appointment of counsel or a motion to stay execution of the state court judgment or to set bail at the same time the habeas petition is filed. For discussion and sample forms, see Appeals & Writs, chap 13.

F. Jurisdictional Requirements

§45.11 1. Custody

To be eligible for federal habeas corpus relief under 28 USC §2254, the petitioner must be in custody pursuant to the judgment of a state court at the time the petition is filed. 28 USC §2241(c). "In custody" can mean either physical or constructive confinement. The custody requirement is met if the petitioner is on probation or parole, if execution of sentence is suspended pending further legal action, if the petitioner is on furlough, or if the petitioner was released on his or her own recognizance. 28 USC §§2241, 2254(a); Sperl v Deukmejian (9th Cir 1981) 642 F2d 1154; Chaker v Crogan (2005) 428 F3d 1215, 1219. See also Wilson v Belleque (9th Cir 2009) 554 F3d 816, 821 (petitioner "in custody" for purposes of habeas review though he brought claim of double jeopardy against new charges filed and did not challenge convictions for which he was incarcerated).

An individual whose confinement period has expired is not in custody unless he or she can show "some concrete and continuing injury other than the now-ended incarceration." Spencer v Kemna (1998) 523 US 1, 7, 140 L Ed 2d 43, 50, 118 S Ct 978; Jackson v Department of Mental Health (9th Cir 2005) 399 F3d 1069, as amended (2005) 417 F3d 1029. A petitioner in custody on an immigration hold is not in custody within the meaning of 28 USC §2241(c), even though the hold is the direct consequence of the conviction the petition challenges. Resendiz v Kovensky (9th Cir 2005) 416 F3d 952.

The "in-custody" requirement is met if the petitioner is currently in custody on a sentence enhanced by an allegedly unlawful conviction, even if the petitioner is no longer in custody on the allegedly unlawful conviction. Maleng v Cook (1989) 490 US 488, 492, 104 L Ed 2d 540, 546, 109 S Ct 1923. However, federal habeas is rarely available to challenge the validity of a prior conviction. As a matter of policy, a prisoner may not use the federal courts to mount a collateral attack on a current sentence on the ground that it was enhanced by an unlawful prior conviction, if the prior conviction "is no longer open to direct or collateral attack in its own right because the defendant failed to pursue those remedies while they were available (or because the defendant did so unsuccessfully)." Daniels v U.S. (2001) 532 US 374, 386, 149 L Ed 2d 590, 600, 121 S Ct 1578 (28 USC §2255); Lackawanna County Dist. Attorney v Coss (2001) 532 US 394, 402, 149 L Ed 2d 608, 617, 121 S Ct 1567 (28 USC §2254). In Coss, the Supreme Court recognized an exception to this rule for habeas petitions that challenge an enhanced sentence on the ground that "the prior conviction used to enhance the sentence was obtained where there was a failure to appoint counsel in violation of the Sixth Amendment, as set forth in Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799, 83 S. Ct. 792, 23 Ohio Op. 2d 258 (1963)." 532 US at 404. For further discussion, see Appeals & Writs, chap 14.

§45.12 2. Time Requirements for Filing

Federal habeas corpus petitions have a 1-year filing deadline. 28 USC §2244(d). Time begins to run from (28 USC §2244(d)(1)):

- The conclusion of direct review or expiration of the time for seeking review (the most common situation);

  Ø Note: When a state court grants a criminal defendant the right to file an out-of-time direct appeal during state collateral review, but before the defendant has first sought federal habeas relief, the judgment is "final" for purposes of 28 USC §2244(d)(1)(A) at the conclusion of the out-of-time direct appeal or the expiration of the time for seeking review of that appeal. Jimenez v Quarterman (2009) ___ US ___, 172 L Ed 2d 475, 129 S Ct 681.

- The removal of any unconstitutional state impediment to filing a habeas petition;
- The recognition by the Supreme Court of a new constitutional right that has been made retroactively applicable to cases on collateral review; or
- The date on which the factual predicate of the claim or claims presented could have been discovered through the exercise of due diligence.

In Bowen v Roe (9th Cir 1999) 188 F3d 1157, 1158, the Ninth Circuit held that direct review does not conclude under 28 USC §2244(d)(1) until the expiration of the period during which the defendant could apply for a writ of certiorari in the U.S. Supreme Court, i.e., 90 days after the state supreme court denies review. See also U.S. v Schwartz (9th Cir 2001) 274 F3d 1220 (same, federal conviction). Thus, the limitations period does not begin to run in California until 90 days after the date on which the California Supreme Court denies review of the decision of the court of appeal on direct appeal. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.532(b)(2) (denial of petition for review final when filed). However, if the defendant does not ask the California Supreme Court to review the court of appeal's decision, the conviction is final for federal habeas corpus purposes 40 days after the court of appeal issues its decision on direct review. Cal Rules of Ct 8.264(b)(1), 8.500(e)(1). If a petitioner does not pursue direct review of his or her conviction at all, the conviction is final for federal habeas purposes 60 days after the date the sentence is imposed, the last day on which a notice of appeal could have been filed in the case, except in cases of cross-appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.308(a).

In Hasan v Galaza (9th Cir 2001) 254 F3d 1150, 1154, the Ninth Circuit held that the date on which the petitioner discovered the factual predicate of a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel was not the date on which he became aware of facts that suggested that his trial attorney's performance might have been somewhat deficient, but the date on which he became aware of facts that allowed him to assert in objective good faith that he was prejudiced by counsel's deficient performance. The court therefore remanded the case to the district court to determine when the petitioner, exercising due diligence, could have discovered the facts that allowed him to claim prejudice. In Whalem/Hunt v Early (9th Cir 2000) 233 F3d 1146, 1148 (en banc), the Ninth Circuit held that the prison law library's failure to make available to the petitioner a copy of the AEDPA's (Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996) statute of limitations could be a state-created "impediment" to filing that would delay commencement of the 1-year limitations period, and remanded the case to district court for further factual development.

In computing the 1-year limitations period pursuant to Fed R Civ P 6(a), the date of the event that triggers commencement of the period is excluded, whereas the last day of the period, i.e., the date the federal petition is due, is included unless the court is closed that day. In addition, for a state prisoner petitioning pro se, the "mailbox" rule applies: A petition is considered filed when it is delivered to the prison's legal mail system for mailing to the court. Habeas Rule 3(d).

Under Ninth Circuit precedent, the Constitution requires an exception to the statute of limitations (and other procedural defaults) for a petitioner who can establish, in light of reliable new evidence, that "it is more likely than not that no reasonable juror would have found petitioner guilty beyond a reasonable doubt." See Schlup v Delo (1995) 513 US 298, 327, 130 L Ed 2d 808, 836, 115 S Ct 851; Griffin v Johnson (9th Cir 2003) 350 F3d 956, 960 ("actual innocence gateway" requires presentation of newly presented, not newly discovered, evidence). The petitioner's case must be extraordinary to warrant review on the merits of an otherwise barred claim. See House v Bell (2006) 547 US 518, 537, 165 L Ed 2d 1, 126 S Ct 2064. To qualify for the "miscarriage of justice exception," a petitioner must show that a constitutional violation has "probably resulted" in a conviction when he or she was actually innocent. Cook v Schriro (9th Cir 2008) 538 F3d 1000, 1028. Therefore, the exception does not apply to an untimely petition when the petitioner asserts only procedural violations without claiming actual innocence. Johnson v Knowles (9th Cir 2008) 541 F3d 933, 937.

In Day v McDonough (2006) 547 US 198, 164 L Ed 2d 376, 387, 126 S Ct 1675, the Supreme Court held that district courts are "permitted, but not obliged" to consider the timeliness of a state prisoner's habeas petition sua sponte. If the court does raise the timeliness issue sua sponte, it must (164 L Ed 2d at 388) > accord the parties fair notice and an opportunity to present their positions. … [It] must assure itself that the petitioner is not significantly prejudiced by the delayed focus on the limitation issue, and "determine whether the interests of justice would be better served" by addressing the merits or by dismissing the petition as time barred.

Note that at least one circuit has held that notwithstanding Day, if neither the respondent nor the district court raises the issue of timeliness in the district court, it cannot be raised as a defense on appeal. Grigsby v Cotton (7th Cir 2006) 456 F3d 727, 731.

Amending a timely petition after the AEDPA filing deadline. Under Fed R Civ P 15(c)(1)(B), it is possible to amend a pleading with a new claim or defense when "the amendment asserts a claim or defense that arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set out—or attempted to be set out—in the original pleading." Such an amendment is said to relate back to the original pleading. In the habeas context, the Supreme Court has construed this rule narrowly to preclude the petitioner from adding new claims after the AEDPA filing deadline has expired unless the original claims and the new claims are based on a "common core" of operative facts. Mayle v Felix (2005) 545 US 644, 162 L Ed 2d 582, 590, 125 S Ct 2562; Hebner v McGrath (9th Cir 2008) 543 F3d 1133, 1137.

> Ø Note: As the dissent points out, this ruling disadvantages pro se habeas petitioners who may not be aware of all their federal claims at the time they file their petitions. Mayle v Felix (2005) 545 US 644, 162 L Ed 2d 582, 605, 125 S Ct 2562 (Souter, J., dissenting). Even if counsel is appointed for a pro se petitioner, the appointment is likely to be made after the AEDPA limitations period has expired. An attorney representing an indigent appellant in state court can provide substantial assistance to a client with viable federal constitutional claims by drafting a federal habeas petition for the client that includes all potential claims, whether they have been exhausted or not, even if the attorney does not plan to represent the client in the federal habeas proceedings. The client can then file this petition in federal court as a "protective petition." See §45.13. Note that while some Ninth Circuit case law suggests that a "Pace" protective petition must contain at least one exhausted claim, the rationale of Pace itself indicates that a protective petition could consist entirely of unexhausted claims. See Heleva v Brook s (3d Cir 2009) 581 F 3d 187, 192.

The 1-year statute of limitations is tolled during the time a "properly filed" state court petition for postconviction or other collateral review is pending. 28 USC §2244(d)(2). A state postconviction petition is "properly filed" and thus tolls the AEDPA (Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996) statute of limitations if it complies with the applicable laws and rules governing filing, even if some or all of the claims are procedurally barred. Artuz v Bennett (2000) 531 US 4, 148 L Ed 2d 213, 121 S Ct 361; Smith v Duncan (9th Cir 2002) 297 F3d 809; Pace v DiGuglielmo (2005) 544 US 408, 413, 161 L Ed 2d 669, 676, 125 S Ct 1807. See Allen v Siebert (2007) 552 US 3, 169 L Ed 2d 329, 128 S Ct 2. In Bonner v Carey (9th Cir 2005) 425 F3d 1145, amended at (9th Cir 2006) 439 F3d 993, the Ninth Circuit held that when a California state court denied a petition because the petitioner did not explain his delay in asserting certain claims, it was denying the petition as untimely and thus, under Pace, the petition was not "properly filed."

> Ø Practice tip: If there is any doubt about the timeliness of a state petition for collateral relief, the petitioner should file a protective petition in federal district court and ask the court to "stay and abey the federal habeas proceedings until state remedies are exhausted." Pace, 544 US at 416, 161 L Ed 2d at 678. On stay and abeyance, see §45.23.

For petitioners exhausting state remedies by seeking collateral relief in California state courts, tolling extends for one complete round of the state's established review process, i.e., from the initial filing of a habeas corpus petition in superior court to the supreme court's denial of relief. Carey v Saffold (2002) 536 US 214, 222, 153 L Ed 2d 260, 269, 122 S Ct 2134. For pro se prisoners, the state petition is deemed filed the moment the prisoner delivers it to prison authorities for forwarding to the court. Ramirez v Yates (9th Cir 2009) 571 F3d 993, 996 n1. The tolling period includes the intervals or gaps between the petition's denial in the lower court and its refiling in a higher court, if the petitioner complies with the state's timeliness rules. 536 US at 216, 153 L Ed 2d at 266. In Evans v Chavis (2006) 546 US 189, 163 L Ed 2d 684, 126 S Ct 846, the Supreme Court held that even when a California court denies a petition for collateral relief on the merits, if the California court does not explicitly state that the petition was timely, the federal court must decide whether the petitioner's request for appellate review of a lower court's denial of the petition "was made within what California would consider a 'reasonable time.'" 546 US at 198, 163 L Ed 2d at 694. The federal court cannot permit tolling under 28 USC §2244(d)(2) if, in its judgment, the California courts would conclude that the petitioner unreasonably delayed filing a petition for collateral relief at any level of the California judicial system.

In Chavis, the Supreme Court held that an unexplained 6-month gap between the filing of habeas petitions in California courts was unreasonable and therefore untimely. 546 US at 201, 163 L Ed 2d at 696. In carrying out the task of determining whether California courts would have considered particular periods of time before and between the filing of state habeas petitions to be unreasonable, the Ninth Circuit and lower federal courts have reached a variety of conclusions. See Winston v Sisto (ED Cal 2008) 2008 WL 2119918 *28 n5 (collecting cases). A critical variable in these cases is whether or not a particular delay is explained. For example, in Winston the district court held that because a petitioner explained and justified each segment of the 212-day period between denial of one state petition and the filing of the next, he was entitled to gap tolling for the 212-day period between petitions. Winston, 2008 WL 2119918 *25. On the other hand, in Chaffer v Prosper (9th Cir 2010) 592 F3d 1046, 1048, the petitioner was not entitled to "gap tolling" for unjustified delays of just over 100 days between denial of one state petition and the filing of the next. For situations in which courts have excused lengthy delays that were adequately explained, see Chandler v Moore (ED Cal, Aug. 6, 2009, No. CIV S-07-1762) 2009 US Dist Lexis 72365 [citation n2].

The limitations period is not tolled during these periods:

- While state clemency proceedings are in progress (Malcom v Payne (9th Cir 2002) 281 F3d 951); or
- While a habeas petition is pending in federal court (Duncan v Walker (2001) 533 US 167, 172, 150 L Ed 2d 251, 258, 121 S Ct 2120.

The limitations period is not tolled during the time available to seek a writ of certiorari in the U.S. Supreme Court after denial of the state habeas petition. Lawrence v Florida (2007) 549 US 327, 166 L Ed 2d 924, 127 S Ct 1079. A habeas petition that is fully exhausted when filed does not become "unexhausted" upon a decision to seek certiorari, and a district court has no cause to dismiss such a petition as premature. Roper v Weaver (2007) 550 US 598, 167 L Ed 2d 966, 127 S Ct 2022.

§45.14 b. Equitable Tolling

The doctrine of equitable tolling may also be available in extraordinary circumstances. In Herbst v Cook (9th Cir 2001) 260 F3d 1039, 1043, the Ninth Circuit ruled that the district court erred in dismissing a habeas corpus petition as untimely without giving the petitioner an adequate opportunity to develop the facts underlying his claims of equitable tolling and state-created impediment to filing. See also Ford v Pliler (9th Cir 2009) 590 F3d 782, 786 (because he could not show he had been affirmatively misled by district court about statute of limitations before it dismissed his mixed petitions, petitioner not entitled to equitable tolling); Ramirez v Yates (9th Cir 2009) 571 F3d 993, 997 (district court instructed to make necessary findings of fact to resolve petitioner's equitable tolling claim); Townsend v Knowles (9th Cir 2009) 562 F3d 1200, 1206 (petitioner entitled to equitable tolling when delay in filing federal petition was due to reliance on Ninth Circuit precedent subsequently overruled by U.S. Supreme Court); Harris v Carter (9th Cir 2008) 515 F3d 1051, 1057 (same); Roy v Lampert (9th Cir 2006) 465 F3d 964, 969 (pro se petitioners entitled to evidentiary hearing on equitable tolling when they alleged prison had "woefully deficient law library"); Mendoza v Carey (9th Cir 2006) 449 F3d 1065, 1069 (petitioner, a Spanish-speaker, entitled to evidentiary hearing on equitable tolling when he alleged that prison law library failed to provide Spanish-language books or Spanish-speaking clerks or librarians to assist Spanish-speaking inmates); Espinoza-Matthews v California (9th Cir 2005) 432 F3d 1021 (prison's refusal to allow petitioner access to his legal papers for 11 months despite his diligent attempts to obtain them was extraordinary circumstance that entitled him to equitable tolling); Laws v Lamarque (9th Cir 2003) 351 F3d 919, 923 (district court abused discretion by denying petition without ordering development of record on petitioner's eligibility for equitable tolling owing to his mental incompetence during limitations period); Corjasso v Ayers (9th Cir 2002) 278 F3d 874 (district court's erroneous dismissal of pro se petitioner's writ petition because of technical deficiencies on cover sheet, and court's subsequent loss of petition, were extraordinary circumstances that justified equitable tolling); Calderon v U.S. Dist. Court (Kelly V) (9th Cir 1998) 163 F3d 530, 542, overruled on other grounds in Woodford v Garceau (2003) 538 US 202, 155 L Ed 2d 363, 369, 123 S Ct 1398 (existence of genuine question about petitioner's mental capacity justified district court's application of doctrine of equitable tolling to toll statute of limitations until reasonable period after determination that petitioner was competent).

Equitable tolling was not available to a petitioner whose failure to file the federal habeas petition on time arose from his attorney's negligence in computing the time. Although the attorney's miscalculation was beyond the petitioner's control, it was not extraordinary. Frye v Hickman (9th Cir 2001) 273 F3d 1144. See also Malcom v Payne (9th Cir 2002) 281 F3d 951 (neither statutory nor equitable tolling available to petitioner who decided to pursue state clemency proceedings rather than filing a second habeas petition). Equitable tolling may be available if an attorney's conduct is sufficiently egregious. Spitsyn v Moore (9th Cir 2003) 345 F3d 796, 800 (equitable tolling may be appropriate when counsel retained to file habeas petition failed to do so and disregarded requests to return petitioner's files until well after deadline had passed). Pro se status, on its own, is not enough to warrant equitable tolling. Johnson v U.S. (2005) 544 US 295, 161 L Ed 2d 542, 125 S Ct 1571.

In Fail v Hubbard (9th Cir 2002) 315 F3d 1059, the Ninth Circuit held that neither statutory nor equitable tolling was available to a petitioner whose totally unexhausted federal habeas petition was dismissed after the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA) deadline had passed. Note, however, that if at least one claim is exhausted, it may be possible to preserve the unexhausted claims. See Jefferson v Budge (9th Cir 2005) 419 F3d 1013 (when trial court erroneously dismissed mixed petition without offering petitioner opportunity to amend petition to omit unexhausted claims, petitioner was entitled to equitable tolling while state exhaustion proceedings pending). For discussion, see §45.23.

§45.15 3. Scope of Federal Habeas Corpus

Federal habeas corpus is available only on behalf of a person in custody in violation of the Constitution or laws or treaties of the United States. 28 USC §§2241(c)(3), 2254(a); Estelle v McGuire (1991) 502 US 62, 116 L Ed 2d 385, 112 S Ct 475. See Benitez v Garcia (9th Cir 2007) 495 F3d 640 (claim founded on extradition treaty between United States and Venezuela). For discussion of the custody requirement, see §45.11. For discussion of Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA) limitations on the scope of federal habeas corpus, see §45.16.

The following are examples of issues that may be raised by way of a habeas petition:

- Fifth Amendment claims, including involuntary confessions (Miranda v Arizona (1966) 384 US 436, 16 L Ed 2d 694, 86 S Ct 1602; Withrow v Williams (1993) 507 US 680, 123 L Ed 2d 407, 113 S Ct 1745 (Fifth Amendment Miranda claims may be raised in federal habeas proceeding after full and fair opportunity to litigate claim in state court); Milton v Wainwright (1972) 407 US 371, 33 L Ed 2d 1, 92 S Ct 2174); prosecutor's comments on defendant's silence (Wainwright v Greenfield (1986) 474 US 284, 88 L Ed 2d 623, 106 S Ct 634); double jeopardy (Schiro v Farley (1994) 510 US 222, 127 L Ed 2d 47, 114 S Ct 783; Robinson v Neil (1973) 409 US 505, 35 L Ed 2d 29, 93 S Ct 876); and privilege against self-incrimination (Carter v Kentucky (1981) 450 US 288, 67 L Ed 2d 241, 101 S Ct 1112 (when requested, trial court must give instruction that jury cannot draw inference from defendant's claim of right of silence)).
- Sixth Amendment claims, including the right to confrontation (Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 124 S Ct 1354; Mancusi v Stubbs (1972) 408 US 204, 33 L Ed 2d 293, 92 S Ct 2308; Holley v Yarborough (9th Cir 2009) 568 F3d 1091, 1098 (limits on cross-examination of alleged victim unreasonable); Christian v Rhode (9th Cir 1994) 41 F3d 461 (right of confrontation extends to pretrial depositions by prosecution for trial use)); the right to counsel (Montejo v Louisiana (2009) ___ US ___, 173 L Ed 2d 955, 969, 129 S Ct 2079 (doctrines ensuring voluntariness of Fifth Amendment waiver of right to counsel simultaneously ensure voluntariness of Sixth Amendment waiver of right to counsel); Cordova v Baca (9th Cir 2003) 346 F3d 924 (defective Faretta waiver)); the right to self-representation (Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 95 S Ct 2525; Adams v Carroll (9th Cir 1989) 875 F2d 1441 (request to represent self must be knowing, intelligent, timely, unequivocal, and not for purpose of delay)); claims of ineffective assistance of counsel (Williams v Taylor (2000) 529 US 362, 390, 146 L Ed 2d 389, 416, 120 S Ct 1495; Smith v Robbins (2000) 528 US 259, 285, 145 L Ed 2d 756, 780, 120 S Ct 746; Lockhart v Fretwell (1993) 506 US 364, 122 L Ed 2d 180, 113 S Ct 838 (for remedy to be available, prejudice from ineffective assistance must have made proceeding unfair or unreliable); Richter v Hickman (9th Cir 2009) 578 F3d 944 (ineffective assistance of counsel to fail to make reasonable investigation before settling on trial strategy); Chacon v Wood (9th Cir 1994) 36 F3d 1459 (interpreter's errors can render assistance of counsel ineffective despite counsel's own competence)); the right to speedy trial (Doggett v U.S. (1992) 505 US 647, 120 L Ed 2d 520, 112 S Ct 2686); the right to present a defense (Crane v Kentucky (1986) 476 US 683, 90 L Ed 2d 636, 106 S Ct 2142 (exclusion of testimony regarding circumstances of confession violated defendant's right to present defense)); the right to a jury trial (Sullivan v Louisiana (1993) 508 US 275, 124 L Ed 2d 182, 113 S Ct 2078 (right to jury trial and due process violated by instruction permitting jury to find guilt by standard less than "beyond a reasonable doubt"); Smith v Curry (9th Cir 2009) 580 F3d 1071, 1079 (jury instruction deprived defendant of right to jury trial by coercing verdict)); and defendant's right to testify (Rock v Arkansas (1987) 483 US 44, 97 L Ed 2d 37, 107 S Ct 2704).

Ø Note: Ineffective assistance of counsel in state or federal habeas proceedings is not a ground for relief in federal habeas corpus proceedings. 28 USC §§2254(i), 2261(e).

- Eighth Amendment claims, such as unreasonable bail (Murphy v Hunt (1982) 455 US 478, 71 L Ed 2d 353, 102 S Ct 1181) and disproportionate penalty (Gonzalez v Duncan (9th Cir 2008) 551 F3d 875).
- Fourteenth Amendment due process claims, such as prosecutorial misconduct (Donnelly v DeChristoforo (1974) 416 US 637, 40 L Ed 2d 431, 94 S Ct 1868); failure to collect or preserve potentially exculpatory evidence (Arizona v Youngblood (1988) 488 US 51, 102 L Ed 2d 281, 109 S Ct 333; Lord v Wood (9th Cir 1999) 184 F3d 1083); involuntary confession (Miller v Fenton (1985) 474 US 104, 88 L Ed 2d 405, 106 S Ct 445); insufficient evidence (Briceno v Scribner (9th Cir 2009) 555 F3d 1069, 1078); involuntary guilty plea (Hayes v Kincheloe (9th Cir 1986) 784 F2d 1434 (failure to inform defendant of elements of crime rendered plea involuntary)); the right to be present at trial proceedings (Kentucky v Stincer (1987) 482 US 730, 96 L Ed 2d 631, 107 S Ct 2658); competency to stand trial, plead guilty, or waive right to counsel (Godinez v Moran (1993) 509 US 389, 125 L Ed 2d 321, 113 S Ct 2680); jury instructions that render trial fundamentally unfair (Hendricks v Vasquez (9th Cir 1992) 974 F2d 1099); the right to psychiatric assistance (Ake v Oklahoma (1985) 470 US 68, 84 L Ed 2d 53, 105 S Ct 1087; Harris v Vasquez (9th Cir 1990) 949 F2d 1497); evidentiary rulings by the trial court (Estelle v McGuire (1991) 502 US 62, 116 L Ed 2d 385, 112 S Ct 475); impermissibly suggestive pretrial identification (Manson v Brathwaite (1977) 432 US 98, 53 L Ed 2d 140, 97 S Ct 2243; U.S. v Givens (9th Cir 1985) 767 F2d 574 (in-court identification)); and cumulative effect of multiple errors that so infected the trial with unfairness as to make the resulting conviction a denial of due process (Parle v Runnels (9th Cir 2007) 505 F3d 922).

- Fourteenth Amendment equal protection claims, such as the right to the race-neutral use of peremptory challenges (Batson v Kentucky (1986) 476 US 79, 90 L Ed 2d 69, 106 S Ct 1712; Miller-El v Dretke (2005) 545 US 231, 162 L Ed 2d 196, 125 S Ct 2317; Ali v Hickman (9th Cir 2009) 584 F3d 1174, 1176; Paulino v Harrison (9th Cir 2008) 542 F3d 692; Gonzalez v Brown (9th Cir 2009) 585 F3d 1202; Kesser v Cambra (9th Cir 2006) 465 F3d 351; Williams v Runnels (9th Cir 2006) 432 F3d 1102).

Ø Note: Fourth Amendment issues cannot be raised on federal habeas unless the petitioner was deprived of the opportunity for a full and fair hearing on the issue in state court. Stone v Powell (1976) 428 US 465, 494, 49 L Ed 2d 1067, 1088, 96 S Ct 3037. However, a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel may be asserted against both trial and appellate counsel for failing to raise meritorious Fourth Amendment suppression issues. Kimmelman v Morrison (1986) 477 US 365, 91 L Ed 2d 305, 106 S Ct 2574.

More-detailed lists of possible federal habeas issues can be found in Appeals & Writs, chap 13 and in Hertz & Liebman, Federal Habeas Corpus Practice and Procedure §9.1 (5th ed 2005).

a. Standard of Review for State Court Legal Rulings

§45.16 (1) State Court's Interpretation of State Law

When reviewing a state court conviction on federal habeas corpus, the federal court is bound by the state's interpretation of its own law. Bradshaw v Richey (2005) 546 US 74, 163 L Ed 2d 407, 126 S Ct 602. "[I]t is not the province of a federal habeas court to reexamine state-court determinations on state-law questions." Estelle v McGuire (1991) 502 US 62, 67, 116 L Ed 2d 385, 112 S Ct 475. This rule includes an interpretation "announced on direct appeal of the challenged conviction." Richey, 163 L Ed 2d at 411.

§45.17 (2) State Court's Interpretation of Federal Law

Before the enactment of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA), in exercising their habeas corpus jurisdiction, the federal courts reviewed all questions of law and mixed questions of fact and law de novo. See Thompson v Keohane (1995) 516 US 99, 133 L Ed 2d 383, 116 S Ct 457; Wright v West (1992) 505 US 277, 299, 120 L Ed 2d 225, 242, 112 S Ct 2482 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Under AEDPA, the federal court's review of state court rulings is highly deferential. If the petitioner's claim was adjudicated on the merits in state court, the federal court may grant federal habeas relief only if the decision (1) was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, or (2) was based on an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the state court proceeding. 28 USC §2254(d)(1)-(2). For further discussion of state court findings of fact, see §45.20.

"Adjudication on the merits" does not require an evidentiary hearing; it requires only that the petition was denied on substantive, as opposed to procedural, grounds. Lambert v Blodgett (9th Cir 2004) 393 F3d 943, 965.

AEDPA's heightened deference requirements do not apply to claims for which no adjudication on the merits in state court was possible because, for example, the evidence upon which the adjudication must be based was adduced for the first time at a federal evidentiary hearing. Killian v Poole (9th Cir 2002) 282 F3d 1204, 1207. In addition, if the state court fails to provide procedural protections required by federal law when it denies a claim, then the deference normally required by AEDPA does not apply. Panetti v Quarterman (2007) 551 US 930, 168 L Ed 2d 662, 127 S Ct 2842.

Ø Note: If the petitioner has filed multiple petitions in state courts, the federal habeas court is to review only the most recent reasoned state court decision denying a claim. Barker v Fleming (9th Cir 2005) 423 F3d 1085, 1091.

In Williams v Taylor (2000) 529 US 362, 379, 146 L Ed 2d 389, 409, 120 S Ct 1495, the Supreme Court held the following:

- The phrase "clearly established federal law" partially codifies the retroactivity doctrine of Teague v Lane (1989) 489 US 288, 103 L Ed 2d 334, 109 S Ct 1060 (529 US at 379) (see §45.21);
- The phrase "as determined by the Supreme Court" limits the source of law to the holdings of the high Court (529 US at 412);
- A decision is contrary to clearly established Supreme Court law if it either (1) "applies a rule that contradicts the governing law set forth in our cases" or (2) arrives at a different result on facts that are materially indistinguishable from the facts in a U.S. Supreme Court case (529 US at 406); and
- An unreasonable application of clearly established Supreme Court precedent is one that "identifies the correct governing legal rule from this Court's cases but unreasonably applies it to the facts of the particular state prisoner's case [or] either unreasonably extends a legal principle from our precedent to a new context where it should not apply or unreasonably refuses to extend that principle to a new context where it should apply" (529 US at 407).

In Fisher v Roe (9th Cir 2001) 263 F3d 906, 914, overruled on other grounds in Payton v Woodford (9th Cir 2003) 346 F3d 1204, 1218, the Ninth Circuit considered the term "clearly established" in the context of a claim that is not factually on all fours with claims the U.S. Supreme Court has addressed, holding that a rule is clearly established if the high Court has "set forth a working constitutional standard by which to evaluate" the claim. Although the Supreme Court has not completely delineated the term "unreasonable application," a standard that equates the term with "clear error" does not give enough deference to state courts. Lockyer v Andrade (2003) 538 US 63, 75, 155 L Ed 2d 144, 158, 123 S Ct 1166. If "fair-minded jurists could disagree," the state court adjudication is clearly reasonable. Yarborough v Alvarado (2004) 541 US 652, 664, 158 L Ed 2d 938, 951, 124 S Ct 2140.

Ø Warning: When litigating standard of review issues, counsel should not rely on Ninth Circuit cases decided under the clear error standard of Tuan Van Tran v Lindsey (9th Cir 2000) 212 F3d 1143, 1152, which was rejected in Lockyer v Andrade, supra.

In determining whether a claim is arguable on federal habeas corpus after AEDPA, and in preparing the petition and supporting argument, counsel should keep in mind that "[a]nalysis of an AEDPA habeas corpus appeal begins with identification of what Supreme Court decisions plaintiff claims the state court decision was contrary to or misapplied." Garvin v Farmon (9th Cir 2001) 258 F3d 951, 955; see, e.g., Brodit v Cambra (9th Cir 2003) 350 F3d 985, 989 (habeas challenge failed owing to absence of clearly established U.S. Supreme Court precedent contrary to California appellate decision).

While only Supreme Court precedent constitutes "clearly established federal law" for this purpose, federal circuit court precedent is instructive in determining what law is "clearly established" and what constitutes "reasonable application" of the governing law. Duhaime v Ducharme (9th Cir 2000) 200 F3d 597, 600. "However, when the Supreme Court has expressly reserved consideration of an issue, … the petitioner cannot rely on circuit authority to demonstrate that the right he or she seeks to vindicate is clearly established." Alberni v McDaniel (9th Cir 2006) 458 F3d 860, 864. But see 458 F3d at 874 (McKeown, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

§45.18 (3) Procedural and Postcard Denials

In many cases, the California courts will not have provided a reasoned decision for denying a state habeas petition. If the last reasoned state court decision denied a state habeas petition on purely procedural grounds, then the deference to the state court's decision called for by 28 USC §2254(d) does not apply. Lewis v Mayle (9th Cir 2004) 391 F3d 989, 996 (de novo review, rather than AEDPA's deferential standard, is applicable to claim that state court did not reach on merits).

In addition, frequently, the California Supreme Court issues a "postcard denial" of a habeas corpus petition, that is, a one-line denial of the petition that does not reject the petition on procedural grounds or provide the legal reasoning behind the court's denial of the petition on the merits. In these cases, the federal court will first determine whether a lower state court rejected the claim in a reasoned legal opinion. See Robinson v Ignacio (9th Cir 2004) 360 F3d 1044, 1055 (federal court reviews "last reasoned decision" by state court).

When there is no reasoned state court decision regarding a claim, the court must perform an independent review of the record to determine whether the state court decision was objectively unreasonable. Dung The Pham v Terhune (9th Cir 2005) 400 F3d 740, 742.

§45.19 (4) Cases Applying AEDPA Standard of Review for Legal Rulings

A state court decision is "contrary to" clearly established federal law if it applies a rule that contradicts the governing law set forth in Supreme Court cases, for example, by using the wrong legal rule or framework. Frantz v Hazey (9th Cir 2008) 533 F3d 724, 734. A state court decision amounts to an "unreasonable application" of federal law if it identifies the correct legal rule but applies it in an unreasonable manner. Williams v Taylor (2000) 529 US 362, 413, 146 L Ed 2d 389, 429, 120 S Ct 1495 (O'Connor concurring).

In Williams, the high Court applied the "unreasonable application" analysis to a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, holding that the state court's conclusion that trial counsel's failure to present available evidence in mitigation at the penalty phase of a capital trial did not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel was an unreasonable application of Strickland v Washington (1984) 466 US 668, 80 L Ed 2d 674, 104 S Ct 2052. Williams, 529 US at 390, 146 L Ed 2d at 416. See also Wiggins v Smith (2003) 539 US 510, 156 L Ed 2d 471, 123 S Ct 2527. But see Bobby v Van Hook (2009) ___ US ___, 175 L Ed 2d 255, 130 S Ct 13 (scope of counsel's investigation reasonable; ABA guidelines describe prevailing professional norms, but Strickland describes standard for claims of ineffective assistance of counsel). The following are some Ninth Circuit cases analyzing errors under the rules set forth in Williams v Taylor:

- Pinholster v Ayers (9th Cir 2009) 590 F3d 651 (counsel's failure to investigate defendant's background for mitigating evidence objectively unreasonable and prejudicial; California Supreme Court's denial of habeas petition was contrary to and unreasonable application of Supreme Court precedent under Strickland);
- Bradway v Cate (9th Cir 2009) 588 F3d 990 (defendant failed to show how distinction drawn by California courts between first degree lying-in-wait murder statute and lying-in-wait special circumstance was contrary to or unreasonable application of federal law);
- Smith v Curry (9th Cir 2009) 580 F3d 1071 (instruction to deadlocked jury that was directed to concerns of holdout juror was unreasonable);
- Bible v Ryan (9th Cir 2009) 571 F3d 860 (Arizona court's determination that defendant suffered no prejudice from counsel's failure to introduce speculative mitigating evidence was not unreasonable);
- Holley v Yarborough (9th Cir 2009) 568 F3d 1091, 1101 (given absence of clear Supreme Court precedent, Ninth Circuit could not conclude that state court's ruling regarding admission of irrelevant and prejudicial sexually explicit evidence was unreasonable);
- Delgadillo v Woodford (9th Cir 2008) 527 F3d 919, 922 (in light of holding in Danforth v Minnesota (2008) 552 US 264, 169 L Ed 2d 859, 128 S Ct 1029, that federal rule of nonretroactivity for federal habeas proceedings is not binding on state courts, state court decision to retroactively apply Crawford was reasonable);
- Gautt v Lewis (2007) 489 F3d 993 (state court's inadequate analysis of discrepancy between crime charged and crime of conviction, and its conclusion that defendant's constitutional right to notice of charges against him was not violated, was objectively unreasonable);
- Carey v Musladin (2006) 549 US 70, 166 L Ed 2d 482, 127 S Ct 649 (given absence of Supreme Court precedent on conduct by spectators, state court's ruling that buttons depicting victim worn by spectators during defendant's trial did not deprive defendant of due process was not unreasonable application of clearly established federal law);
- Arnold v Runnels (9th Cir 2005) 421 F3d 859 (because defendant's statement that he did not want to talk on tape was clear and unequivocal invocation of right to remain silent that was never revoked, permitting recording to be used at trial was unreasonable application of clearly established federal law);
- Inthavong v LaMarque (9th Cir 2005) 420 F3d 1055 (state court's conclusion that coerced confession was harmless error was not unreasonable application of clearly established federal law);
- Hirschfield v Payne (9th Cir 2005) 420 F3d 922 (denial of Faretta motion on ground that defendant did not have sufficient legal knowledge to represent himself was contrary to clearly established federal law);
- Campbell v Rice (9th Cir 2005) 408 F3d 1166 (state court's conclusion that harmless error analysis could be used to determine whether reversal was required because of defendant's absence during proceedings to decide whether trial counsel had disqualifying conflict of interest was not objectively unreasonable);

- Martinez v Garcia (9th Cir 2004) 371 F3d 600, 601 (when instructions combined two theories of guilt, one of which was untenable, and conviction could have rested on untenable theory, state court's conclusion that structural error did not occur was objectively unreasonable);
- Su Chia v Cambra (9th Cir 2004) 360 F3d 997, 1003 (California court's decision to exclude hearsay statements that inculpated declarant and exonerated defendant was objectively unreasonable application of clearly established federal law);
- Clark v Murphy (9th Cir 2003) 331 F3d 1062 (California court's finding that defendant's statement, "I think I would like to talk to a lawyer," was ambiguous invocation of right to counsel was neither contrary to nor unreasonable application of federal constitutional law);
- Powell v Galaza (9th Cir 2003) 328 F3d 558 (trial court's instruction that defendant's testimony established element of charged offense contrary to reasoning and result of controlling U.S. Supreme Court authority);
- Benn v Lambert (9th Cir 2002) 283 F3d 1040 (prosecution's failure to disclose impeachment material about its star witness violated Brady v Maryland (1963) 373 US 83, 10 L Ed 2d 215, 83 S Ct 1194; decided under "clear error" standard);
- Bailey v Newland (9th Cir 2001) 263 F3d 1022 (difference of opinion among federal courts indicated that state court's ruling was not unreasonable application of clearly established law);
- Gunn v Ignacio (9th Cir 2001) 263 F3d 965, 968 (prosecutor's breach of plea agreement violated due process under Santobello v New York (1971) 404 US 257, 30 L Ed 2d 427, 92 S Ct 495; relief granted under clear error standard);
- Fisher v Roe (9th Cir 2001) 263 F3d 906, overruled on other grounds in Payton v Woodford (9th Cir 2003) 346 F3d 1204, 1218 (several Supreme Court cases read together establish defendants' right to be present at readback if their absence could have undermined fairness of proceedings; relief granted under clear error standard);
- Wildman v Johnson (9th Cir 2001) 261 F3d 832 (trial counsel's choice of experts was not ineffective under Supreme Court precedents);
- Garvin v Farmon (9th Cir 2001) 258 F3d 951, 955 (state court's ruling that violation of petitioner's constitutional rights on Friday did not taint confession on Monday was not unreasonable application of Wong Sun v U.S. (1963) 371 US 471, 9 L Ed 2d 441, 83 S Ct 407, and other fruit of the poisonous tree cases);
- La Crosse v Kernan (9th Cir 2001) 244 F3d 702, 707 (state court's ruling that defendant did not have right to be present at readback was not unreasonable application of clearly determined federal law because of lack of clear guidance from Supreme Court);
- Lockhart v Terhune (9th Cir 2001) 250 F3d 1223, 1228 (state court's rulings that trial counsel did not have actual conflict of interest and that petitioner failed to establish prejudice were contrary to Supreme Court precedent, and state court's determination that petitioner had waived the conflict was unreasonable application of Supreme Court precedent);
- Depetris v Kuykendall (9th Cir 2001) 239 F3d 1057, 1061 (erroneous exclusion of crucial evidence corroborating defendant's testimony was contrary to Chambers v Mississippi (1973) 410 US 284, 35 L Ed 2d 297, 93 S Ct 1038, and Washington v Texas (1967) 388 US 14, 19, 18 L Ed 2d 1019, 1023, 87 S Ct 1920); and
- Loi Van Nguyen v Lindsey (9th Cir 2000) 232 F3d 1236 (Supreme Court cases indicating that prosecutor denies due process by knowingly using false evidence or otherwise acting in bad faith did not require conclusion that prosecutor's use of inconsistent arguments at different trials denied due process, when each argument was consistent with evidence introduced at that trial).

§45.20 b. Standard of Review for Findings of Fact

The Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA), like pre-AEDPA law, requires the federal courts to review state court findings of fact with particular deference. When the state court has adjudicated a claim on the merits, federal court review of the state court's findings of fact is limited to the question of whether the state court made an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the state court proceeding. 28 USC §2254(d)(2). "[A] federal court may not second-guess a state court's fact-finding process unless, after review of the state-court record, it determines that the state court was not merely wrong, but actually unreasonable." Taylor v Maddox (9th Cir 2004) 366 F3d 992, 999. The presumption that the state court's factual findings are correct may be rebutted only by clear and convincing evidence. 28 USC §2254(e)(1); Torres v Prunty (9th Cir 2000) 223 F3d 1103.

Ninth Circuit cases holding that the state court made an unreasonable determination of facts include the following:

- Ali v Hickman (9th Cir 2009) 584 F3d 1174, 1181 (state court's conclusion that jury selection process was not discriminatory was unreasonable in light of comparative juror analysis and other facts);
- Davis v Woodford (9th Cir 2006) 446 F3d 957 (when plea agreement explicitly stated that defendant's conviction of eight robberies would be treated as one conviction for all purposes, state court's treatment of conviction as eight strikes was unreasonable determination of facts and unreasonable application of clearly established Supreme Court precedent (Santobello v New York (1971) 404 US 257, 30 L Ed 2d 427, 92 S Ct 495));
- Davis v Grigas (9th Cir 2006) 443 F3d 1155 (state court's reliance on erroneous factual statement by defense counsel to deny relief was objectively unreasonable);
- Juan H. v Allen (9th Cir 2005) 408 F3d 1262 (no reasonable fact-finder could have found that petitioner aided and abetted first degree murder);
- Taylor v Maddox, supra (state court conclusion that 16-year-old's confession was voluntary was objectively unreasonable);
- Hall v Director of Corrections (9th Cir 2003) 343 F3d 976 (reviewing court's rejection of facts necessarily found by trial judge who granted state habeas petition was unreasonable);
- Avila v Galaza (9th Cir 2002) 297 F3d 911 (referee's findings of fact supporting its conclusion that trial counsel was not ineffective were unreasonable in light of evidence at hearing on petitioner's state habeas petition); and
- McClain v Prunty (9th Cir 2000) 217 F3d 1209, 1220 (trial court's factual finding that defendant had not made out prima facie case of intentional racial discrimination in jury selection unreasonable in light of serious disproportion in number of black prospective jurors the prosecutor excluded.

§45.21 c. The Rule of Teague v Lane

In Teague v Lane (1989) 489 US 288, 103 L Ed 2d 334, 109 S Ct 1060, the Supreme Court held that federal habeas corpus is unavailable if the claim rests on a "new rule" of constitutional law that was announced after petitioner's state appeal. For discussion of what constitutes a new rule, see Beard v Banks (2004) 542 US 406, 159 L Ed 2d 494, 501, 124 S Ct 2504; O'Dell v Netherland (1997) 521 US 151, 138 L Ed 2d 351, 117 S Ct 1969; Stringer v Black (1992) 503 US 222, 117 L Ed 2d 367, 112 S Ct 1130; Saffle v Parks (1990) 494 US 484, 108 L Ed 2d 415, 110 S Ct 1257; Butler v McKellar (1990) 494 US 407, 108 L Ed 2d 347, 110 S Ct 1212; Butler v Curry (9th Cir 2008) 528 F3d 624, 633 (case does not announce new rule if result was dictated by precedent).

The Teague rule is subject to two exceptions. A new rule may be applied to provide federal habeas relief if it (1) places certain kinds of private conduct beyond the reach of the criminal law, or (2) is implicit in the concept of ordered liberty. Butler v McKellar (1990) 494 US 407, 108 L Ed 2d 347, 110 S Ct 1212. See also Lambrix v Singletary (1997) 520 US 518, 137 L Ed 2d 771, 117 S Ct 1517; Jackson v Ylst (9th Cir 1990) 921 F2d 882. The second category is "reserved for watershed rules of criminal procedure … without which the likelihood of an accurate conviction is seriously diminished." Schriro v Summerlin (2004) 542 US 348, 352, 159 L Ed 2d 442, 449, 124 S Ct 2519 (internal quotation marks omitted). It is important to note that the rule set out in Teague is subject to waiver, and that the respondent's failure to raise an objection to the petition, on the basis of the Teague rule, may permanently bar the respondent from asserting that objection. U.S. v Barron (9th Cir 1999) 172 F3d 1153; Boardman v Estelle (9th Cir 1992) 957 F2d 1523, 1534; Falconer v Lane (7th Cir 1990) 905 F2d 1129, 1137.

As the high Court stated in Williams v Taylor (2000) 529 US 362, 380 n11, 146 L Ed 2d 389, 410 n11, 120 S Ct 1495, 28 USC §2254(d)(1) partially codifies Teague v Lane.

> Ø Note: In Danforth v Minnesota (2008) 552 US 264, 169 L Ed 2d 859, 128 S Ct 1029, the high court clarified that the Teague rule is not intended to limit a state court's authority to grant relief for a violation of a new rule of constitutional law when reviewing a conviction. 169 L Ed 2d at 871. Therefore, a state court is not precluded from applying a broader retroactivity standard than that set out in Teague. 169 L Ed 2d at 863. See Delgadillo v Woodford (9th Cir 2008) 527 F3d 919, 922 (in light of Danforth, state court's retroactive application of Crawford reasonable).

Violation of federal right required. Federal habeas corpus relief will not be granted for erroneous interpretations or applications of state law. Estelle v McGuire (1991) 502 US 62, 116 L Ed 2d 385, 112 S Ct 475; Engle v Isaac (1982) 456 US 107, 119, 71 L Ed 2d 783, 795, 102 S Ct 1558; Hinman v McCarthy (9th Cir 1982) 676 F2d 343, 349 n2. But if state law, whether statutory or decisional, creates a liberty interest protected by the federal Due Process Clause, or if the error in interpretation or application of state law is so egregious as to offend federal due process standards, federal habeas relief may be available. Carter v Kentucky (1981) 450 US 288, 67 L Ed 2d 241, 101 S Ct 1112; Hicks v Oklahoma (1980) 447 US 343, 65 L Ed 2d 175, 100 S Ct 2227; Ellard v Alabama Bd. of Pardons & Paroles (11th Cir 1987) 824 F2d 937, 944 n7.

Federal issue must be presented to state court. Many state law errors have federal constitutional dimensions. For example, restrictions on defense counsel's cross-examination of a prosecution witness may violate state evidentiary rules on the admissibility of impeachment evidence and unconstitutionally interfere with the defendant's Sixth Amendment right of cross-examination. However, raising the claim in state court solely as a violation of state evidence law will not ordinarily preserve the federal issue for federal habeas review because the exhaustion rule, discussed in §45.23, precludes the federal courts from granting habeas relief unless the petitioner has fairly presented the federal constitutional claim to the state court of last resort. It is therefore crucial for trial and appellate counsel to raise any claims that arguably implicate the federal Constitution as both state law and constitutional errors. The trial objection, the direct appeal, the petition for review, and any petition for collateral review should be based on both guaranties. For an excellent resource showing the relationship between common state law errors and federal constitutional errors, see Weinheimer, Federalization Table, http://www.fdap.org/downloads/articles_and_outlines/WeinheimerFederalizationTable.htm (rev. Sept. 30, 2006). For further discussion of exhaustion, see §45.23; Appeals & Writs, chap 14.

Newly discovered evidence ordinarily not ground for relief. The mere existence of newly discovered evidence relevant to guilt is generally not a ground for federal habeas relief. Newly discovered evidence may be the basis for habeas relief when it is shown that that evidence would probably have resulted in acquittal. Evidence that simply suggests that another might have committed the crime is not a sufficient basis to grant federal habeas relief. Jeffries v Blodgett (9th Cir 1993) 5 F3d 1180.

Even if the state court's decision was contrary to, or was an unreasonable application of, clearly established federal law, if the error was other than "structural" within the meaning of Arizona v Fulminante (1991) 499 US 279, 311, 113 L Ed 2d 302, 332, 111 S Ct 1246, habeas corpus relief will be denied unless the petitioner was prejudiced. Medina v Hornung (9th Cir 2004) 386 F3d 872, 877. In Brecht v Abrahamson (1993) 507 US 619, 123 L Ed 2d 353, 113 S Ct 1710, the Supreme Court adopted a test for harmless error in federal habeas cases that is less stringent than the standard of Chapman v California (1967) 386 US 18, 17 L Ed 2d 705, 87 S Ct 824, which governs direct review of constitutional claims. Under the Brecht standard, the burden remains on the state to show that the error was harmless. However, the state need not show that the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, only that the error did not have a "substantial and injurious effect" on the jury's decision. Brecht v Abrahamson, supra. See also Fry v Pliler (2007) 551 US 112, 168 L Ed 2d 16, 127 S Ct 2321; Calderon v Coleman (1998) 525 US 141, 142 L Ed 2d 521, 119 S Ct 500; O'Neal v McAninch (1995) 513 US 432, 130 L Ed 2d 947, 115 S Ct 992.

As on direct appeal from the judgment, an error that constitutes a "structural defect in the constitution of the trial mechanism" (Arizona v Fulminante, supra) is not subject to harmless error analysis. Brecht v Abrahamson (1993) 507 US 619, 629, 123 L Ed 2d 353, 367, 113 S Ct 1710. See Sullivan v Louisiana (1993) 508 US 275, 281, 124 L Ed 2d 182, 113 S Ct 2078 (structural error includes trial errors that allow conviction on the basis of less than proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt regarding all elements of offense). See also Byrd v Lewis (9th Cir 2009) 566 F3d 855, 861 (error in scope-of-consent instruction did not vitiate all of jury's findings and therefore harmless error review applicable).

For discussion of the harmless error standard in the habeas context, see Hertz & Liebman, Federal Habeas Corpus Practice and Procedure, chap 31 (5th ed 2005).

4. Procedural Considerations

§45.23 a. Exhaustion of State Remedies

The exhaustion requirement. As a matter of federalism and comity, to be eligible for habeas corpus relief in federal court, a petitioner must exhaust state remedies by presenting all of his or her claims to the court of last resort in the state of conviction. 28 USC §2254(b)-(c); Rose v Lundy (1982) 455 US 509, 71 L Ed 2d 379, 102 S Ct 1198. If a state provides for review in the state supreme court, exhaustion requires the petitioner to seek review in the supreme court before filing a federal habeas petition, even if supreme court review is discretionary, as it is in California. O'Sullivan v Boerckel (1999) 526 US 838, 144 L Ed 2d 1, 119 S Ct 1728.

Fair presentation. The federal claim must be fairly presented, i.e., the state court must have a full and fair opportunity to decide the substance of the claim. Picard v Connor (1971) 404 US 270, 276, 30 L Ed 2d 438, 444, 92 S Ct 509. To be fairly presented, the claim must refer to the specific constitutional guaranty it relies on and must state facts that, if proved, would entitle the petitioner to relief. Gray v Netherland (1996) 518 US 152, 162, 135 L Ed 2d 457, 470, 116 S Ct 2074. See Robinson v Kramer (9th Cir 2009) 588 F3d 1212 (petitioner failed to raise unconstitutional denial of right to self-representation in state appeals, state habeas petitions, and district court habeas petition). Presenting all the facts necessary to support the federal habeas claim without referring to the relevant principle of federal constitutional law will not meet the exhaustion requirement, nor will making a state law claim that is similar to a federal constitutional claim. Duncan v Henry (1995) 513 US 364, 130 L Ed 2d 865, 115 S Ct 887.

The federal nature of the claims must have been made apparent to the state court of last resort. See Baldwin v Reese (2004) 541 US 27, 158 L Ed 2d 64, 124 S Ct 1347 (defendant who rested petition for discretionary review on state law grounds did not fairly present claim, even though decision of intermediate appellate court rested on federal grounds).

The fair-presentation requirement applies to pro se petitions as well as to petitions drafted by counsel, although pro se petitions are to be read generously. See Davis v Silva (9th Cir 2008) 511 F3d 1005 (pro se petitioner exhausted claim in state petition by citing case regarding federal constitutional right and including operative facts); Castillo v McFadden (9th Cir 2005) 399 F3d 993, 999 (general appeal to fair-trial right did not preserve federal due process claim); Rose v Palmateer (9th Cir 2005) 395 F3d 1108 (argument that counsel was ineffective with respect to handling of allegedly unlawful confession that did not independently raise Fifth Amendment claim did not exhaust Fifth Amendment issue); Peterson v Lampert (9th Cir 2003) 319 F3d 1153, 1159 (argument citing state cases and using state law terminology did not preserve federal claim, even though state and federal standards were similar).

> Ø Note: When a petitioner's procedural and substantive claims are sufficiently related or intertwined, a federal court may find that presentation of one fairly presents the other. See, e.g., Lounsbury v Thompson (9th Cir 2004) 374 F3d 785 (procedural challenge to burden of proof in competency hearing fairly presented substantive challenge to petitioner's competency to stand trial).

Limits on exhaustion doctrine. Exhaustion is not a jurisdictional requirement. See Strickland v Washington (1984) 466 US 668, 679, 80 L Ed 2d 674, 688, 104 S Ct 2052. Failure to exhaust may be raised by the respondent as a defense to a specific unexhausted claim, but it may also be waived. This waiver must be express in cases governed by the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA). 28 USC §2254(b).

The exhaustion requirement does not apply when state remedies are unavailable or inadequate. 28 USC §2254(b)(1)(B); Engle v Isaac (1982) 456 US 107, 71 L Ed 2d 783, 102 S Ct 1558. For example, if the claims in the petition cannot be presented to the state court because they are procedurally barred under state law, they are considered exhausted. Coleman v Thompson (1991) 501 US 722, 115 L Ed 2d 640, 111 S Ct 2546; Harmon v Ryan (9th Cir 1992) 959 F2d 1457. Federal habeas review may still be barred, however, if the state procedural bar is "independent and adequate." See Deere v Calderon (CD Cal 1995) 890 F Supp 893. See also §45.24.

Mixed petitions. A "mixed" petition, one containing both exhausted and unexhausted claims, cannot be adjudicated. Rose v Lundy (1982) 455 US 509, 521, 71 L Ed 2d 379, 389, 102 S Ct 1198; Rhines v Weber (2005) 544 US 269, 161

L Ed 2d 440, 125 S Ct 1528. Before enactment of the AEDPA limitations period (see 28 USC §2244(d)), it was standard practice for the district court to dismiss a mixed petition without prejudice. See Pliler v Ford (2004) 542 US 225, 236 n2, 159 L Ed 2d 338, 351 n2, 124 S Ct 2441 (Ginsburg, J., dissenting). After dismissal, the petitioner would return to state court to exhaust the unexhausted claims, and then file a new federal petition containing both the previously exhausted and newly exhausted claims. The AEDPA's 1-year filing deadline makes it impossible in some circumstances to accomplish this. See, e.g., Jefferson v Budge (9th Cir 2005) 419 F3d 1013, 1015 n2 (AEDPA limitations period expired before mixed petition dismissed).

Another option, dismissing only the unexhausted claims and proceeding on the exhausted claims, risks forfeiture of the unexhausted claims. If the original petition is no longer pending when the petitioner files a new petition containing the previously unexhausted claims, the later petition will be treated as a second or successive petition under 28 USC §2244(b)(2), which bars review of such petitions except in extremely limited circumstances. See Slack v McDaniel (2000) 529 US 473, 146 L Ed 2d 542, 120 S Ct 1595; §45.26.

Stay and abeyance; Rhines procedure. To avoid these potential dilemmas, several circuits, including the Ninth Circuit, have adopted a procedure known as "stay and abeyance" or "withdrawal and abeyance" to deal with mixed petitions. This procedure, as described and approved by the Supreme Court in Rhines v Weber (2005) 544 US 269, 276, 161 L Ed 2d 440, 450, 125 S Ct 1528, allows the district court to "stay" a mixed petition rather than dismiss it, and to hold it in abeyance while the petitioner exhausts the unexhausted claims in state court. Once the petitioner has exhausted the claims in state court, the federal court can lift the stay and proceed with litigation on all the claims. The Rhines Court approved the use of this procedure for cases in which the unexhausted claims are not plainly meritless, the petitioner has not engaged in abusive litigation tactics or intentional delay, and there is good cause for the petitioner's failure to exhaust state remedies. 544 US at 277, 161 L Ed 3d at 451. In Jackson v Roe (9th Cir 2005) 425 F3d 654, 661, the Ninth Circuit clarified that the petitioner need show only "good cause," and not "extraordinary circumstances," to be entitled to a stay and abeyance of the federal case so that the petitioner can exhaust state remedies. In Riner v Crawford (D Nev 2006) 415 F Supp 2d 1207, 1211, the court suggested that the petitioner can establish good cause by showing that "he was prevented from raising the claim, either by his own ignorance or confusion about the law or the status of his case, or by circumstances over which he had little or no control, such as the actions of counsel either in contravention of the petitioner's clearly expressed desire to raise the claim or when petitioner had no knowledge of the claim's existence." However, courts should interpret good cause in light of the Rhines instruction that petitions should only be stayed in limited circumstances. Wooten v Kirkland (9th Cir 2008) 540 F3d 1019 (petitioner's "impression" that appellate attorney had exhausted all claims not good cause).

Kelly* procedure. A petitioner may take advantage of another and "distinct" procedure for exhausting claims. See King v Ryan (9th Cir 2009) 564 F3d 1133, 1140. Under the Kelly procedure, a district court may (1) allow the petitioner to amend a mixed petition to delete unexhausted claims; (2) stay and hold in abeyance the fully exhausted petition; and (3) then permit the petitioner to amend the stayed petition to include the newly exhausted claims. 564 F3d at 1138; Kelly v Small (9th Cir 2002) 315 F3d 1063, 1070, overruled on other grounds in Robbins v Carey (9th Cir 2007) 481 F3d 1143, 1149; Calderon v U.S. Dist. Court (Taylor) (9th Cir 1998) 134 F3d 981, 988. The Kelly procedure remains viable after Rhine, and unlike the Rhine procedure its availability is not premised on a showing of good cause for failure to exhaust state court remedies. King v Ryan, 564 F3d at 1140. However, under Mayle v Felix (2005) 545 US 644, 162 L Ed 2d 582, 590, 125 S Ct 2562, any newly exhausted claims must relate back to the claims that were exhausted at the time of the original filing. King v Ryan, 564 F3d at 1141.

It is error for the trial court simply to dismiss a mixed petition without offering the petitioner the opportunity to amend the petition to delete the exhausted claims. Jefferson v Budge (9th Cir 2005) 419 F3d 1013. If the trial court does erroneously dismiss the petition, the petitioner may be entitled to equitable tolling while state court exhaustion proceedings are pending. 419 F3d at 1016. However, a district court is not required to consider, sua sponte, the stay and abeyance procedure. Robbins v Carey (9th Cir 2007) 481 F3d 1143, 1147 (overruling Kelly to extent it held otherwise).

Ø Warning: It is important to include all federal claims in an initial petition, whether they are exhausted or not. Claims in an amended petition that were not included in the original petition do not relate back to the initial petition if they are based on "facts that differ in both time and type from those the original pleading set forth." Mayle v Felix (2005) 545 US 644, 162 L Ed 2d 582, 590, 125 S Ct 2562; Hebner v McGrath (9th Cir 2008) 543

For further discussion of stay and abeyance, see Appeals & Writs, chap 14; Hertz & Liebman, Federal Habeas Corpus Practice and Procedure §23.5 (5th ed 2005).

On exhaustion generally, see Appeals & Writs, chap 14; Hertz & Liebman, Habeas Corpus Practice, chap 23.

If a state court denies relief for failure to comply with state procedural (or substantive) rules, and the state bar rests on an "independent and adequate state ground," federal habeas corpus is also barred except in very limited situations.

Procedural default is an affirmative defense (Vang v Nevada (9th Cir 2003) 329 F3d 1069, 1073) that must be raised in the first responsive pleading, i.e., the answer to the petition, to avoid waiver. Morrison v Mahoney (9th Cir 2005) 399 F3d 1042, 1046. See Habeas Rules 5(b); Fed R Civ P 8(c). See also Franklin v Johnson (9th Cir 2002) 290 F3d 1223 (state cannot raise procedural default for first time on appeal). The defense is not waived by failure to include it in a motion to dismiss, filed before the first responsive pleading. Morrison, 399 F3d at 1045.

> Ø Practice tip: Unlike a dismissal for failure to exhaust state remedies, a dismissal grounded in a procedural default is a decision on the merits, and bars consideration of the same claim in a subsequent petition. See Henderson v Lampert (2005) 396 F3d 1049 and discussion of second or successive petitions in §45.26.

To be "independent," the denial of relief must rest on state law alone; it cannot be interwoven with federal law. Harris v Reed (1989) 489 US 255, 264, 103 L Ed 2d 308, 318, 109 S Ct 1038; Michigan v Long (1983) 463 US 1032, 1039, 77 L Ed 2d 1201, 1213, 103 S Ct 3469; Park v California (9th Cir 2000) 202 F3d 1146, 1152. "[U]nless the state court makes clear that it is resting its decision denying relief on an independent and adequate state ground, it is presumed that the state denial was based at least in part upon federal grounds, and the petitioner may seek relief in federal court." Siripongs v Calderon (9th Cir 1994) 35 F3d 1308, 1317. The question of whether a state procedural rule is "adequate," that is, firmly established and regularly followed, is a question of federal law. Cone v Bell (2009) ___ US ___, 173 L Ed 2d 701, 715, 129 S Ct 1769.

A state procedural rule will ordinarily be considered adequate when it is "strictly or regularly followed" and "consistently applied." See, e.g., Scott v Schriro (9th Cir 2009) 567 F3d 573, 580; Morales v Calderon (9th Cir 1996) 85 F3d 1387, 1393. A state procedural rule is not automatically "inadequate" because it is discretionary; if it is "firmly established" and "regularly followed," it can serve as an adequate ground to bar federal habeas review. Beard v Kindler (2009) ___ US ___, 175 L Ed 2d 417, 130 S Ct 612. In Bennett v Mueller (9th Cir 2003) 322 F3d 573, 586, the Ninth Circuit adopted a burden-shifting analysis to determine adequacy. Under this analysis, the state may plead petitioner's failure to satisfy a state procedural rule as an affirmative defense. 322 F3d at 586. The burden then shifts to the petitioner to challenge the adequacy of the state procedural bar by asserting specific factual allegations that demonstrate its inadequacy at the time of the alleged default. 322 F3d at 586. However, if the Ninth Circuit has previously determined that a state procedural bar is inadequate, the petitioner can fulfill this burden by simply challenging the adequacy of the procedure without necessarily putting forth factual allegations in support of the challenge. King v LaMarque (9th Cir 2006) 464 F3d 963, 967.

> Ø Warning: From the petitioner's standpoint, it is critical that the petitioner do something to put the adequacy of the state procedural bar in issue. If the petitioner fails to do this, then the court will rule that the petitioner has not shifted the burden back to the state to prove the adequacy of the state procedural default rule at issue and then conclude that the state has fulfilled its burden and therefore the claim cannot be considered by the federal court. See, e.g., Flores v Hickman (CD Cal 2008) 533 F Supp 2d 1068, 1085 (when state contends petitioner has procedurally defaulted claim by failing to contemporaneously object in trial court and petitioner fails to put adequacy of contemporaneous objection rule in issue, claim procedurally defaulted).

Assuming the petitioner does fulfill the burden of putting the adequacy of the state procedural ground in issue, the state has the ultimate burden of proving adequacy at the time of the purported default. Bennett, 322 F3d at 586.

Federal courts may consider both published and unpublished state court decisions and minute orders in analyzing the adequacy of a procedural bar. Powell v Lambert (9th Cir 2004) 357 F3d 871, 879; Dennis v Brown (ND Cal 2005) 361 F Supp 2d 1124, 1131. It is the "actual practice of the state courts, not merely the precedents contained in their published opinions, that determine the adequacy of procedural bars preventing the assertion of federal rights." Powell, 357 F3d at 879. The California Supreme Court frequently denies habeas petitions with a citation to a California case in which a procedural bar to relief was established. See, e.g., In re Robbins (1998) 18 C4th 770, 77 CR2d 153 (relief barred when claim untimely); In re Waltreus (1965) 62 C2d 218, 225, 42 CR 9 (relief barred when claim was denied on merits on appeal); In re Dixon (1953) 41 C2d 756, 759, 264 P2d 513 (relief barred for claim that could have been but was not raised on direct appeal); In re Lindley (1947) 29 C2d 709, 723, 177 P2d 918 (sufficiency of evidence claim must be raised on direct appeal and cannot be considered on habeas corpus).

In Carter v Giurbino (9th Cir 2004) 385 F3d 1194, 1196, the Ninth Circuit held that the Lindley rule, limiting consideration of sufficiency of the evidence claims to direct review, is an independent and adequate procedural bar; therefore, a citation to Lindley bars federal habeas review. Note that in Carter the petitioner did not try to shift the burden to the respondent by identifying cases where the rule had not been applied, so that challenge, therefore, remains to be taken up.

In Bennett v Mueller (9th Cir 2003) 322 F3d 573 (Bennett), the Ninth Circuit held that California's timeliness bar, as defined in In re Clark (1993) 5 C4th 750, 21 CR2d 509, and In re Robbins, supra, is an independent state procedural bar to habeas review, i.e., not interwoven with federal law. However, the Ninth Circuit has also held that the timeliness bar is not adequate or consistently applied to noncapital habeas corpus petitions and therefore cannot serve as a procedural bar. Townsend v Knowles (9th Cir 2009) 562 F3d 1200, 1207.

In Dennis v Brown (ND Cal 2005) 361 F Supp 2d 1124, the district court ruled that Bennett's analysis of the untimeliness bar compelled the conclusion that two procedural default rules not considered in Bennett are also independent of federal law after the California Supreme Court's decision in In re Robbins (1998) 18 C4th 770, 77 CR2d 153. These rules are California's rule barring consideration of claims that could have been but were not presented in a previous petition (successive petitions) and the rule of In re Dixon (1953) 41 C2d 756, 759, 264 P2d 513, which bars consideration of claims that could have been but were not presented on direct appeal (pretermitted claims). See Dennis, 361 F Supp 2d at 1127.

The district court concluded, however, that none of the three procedural bars that were potentially applicable in the case—the untimeliness bar, the successive-petitions bar, or the Dixon bar—had been consistently applied during the relevant time frames. 361 F Supp 2d at 1132. See also Carpenter v Ayers (ND Cal 2008) 548 F Supp 2d 736, 756 (California's untimeliness bar and Dixon bar were not consistently applied during relevant time frame).

A citation to In re Waltreus, supra, does not bar federal review. Calderon v U.S. Dist. Court (Bean) (9th Cir 1996) 96 F3d 1126, 1131; Cone v Bell (2009) ___ US ___, 173 L Ed 2d 701, 716, 129 S Ct 1769 (fact that claim has been presented more than once to state court is not a procedural bar to federal habeas review). For further discussion of California procedural bars, see Appeals & Writs, chap 15.

> Ø Note: The equitable doctrine of judicial estoppel prohibits a state from taking one legal position in state court and another in federal court in order to create a procedural default that would bar a federal habeas petition. Whaley v Belleque (9th Cir 2008) 520 F3d 997, 1002 (remanded to district court to hear merits when state represented that petitioner's complaints were moot for purposes of direct appeal but not moot for purposes of raising procedural default defense).

In extraordinary circumstances, an independent and consistently applied procedural bar may not be adequate. Thus, in Lee v Kemna (2002) 534 US 362, 151 L Ed 2d 820, 122 S Ct 877, the Supreme Court held that a state's independent and regularly applied requirement that a request for continuance be in writing was not adequate to bar federal review of the federal question of whether the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion for continuance deprived him of due process, when defense counsel's oral motion presented the issue clearly enough to permit the trial court to rule on the question. 534 US at 381, 151 L Ed 2d at 839. This ruling was based on "the general principle that an objection which is ample and timely to bring the alleged federal error to the attention of the trial court and enable it to take appropriate corrective action is sufficient to serve legitimate state interests, and therefore sufficient to preserve the claim for review here." 534 US at 378, 151 L Ed 2d at 837. See also Osborne v Ohio (1990) 495 US 103, 122, 109 L Ed 2d 98, 117, 110 S Ct 1691.

Even a petitioner who has procedurally defaulted may escape the consequence of the default by showing "cause and prejudice." The petitioner has the burden of establishing both. Murray v Carrier (1986) 477 US 478, 91 L Ed 2d 397, 106 S Ct 2639; Harmon v Ryan (9th Cir 1992) 959 F2d 1457. See also Keeney v Tamayo-Reyes (1992) 504 US 1, 118 L Ed 2d 318, 112 S Ct 1715 (extensive discussion of federal rules pertaining to procedural default).

To show "cause," the petitioner must show that some objective factor external to the defense impeded counsel's efforts to raise the claim in state court. Objective factors include interference by officials that made compliance with the state's procedural rule impracticable, or facts showing that the factual or legal basis for the claim was not reasonably available. Murray v Carrier, supra. Ineffective assistance of counsel (IAC) that itself constitutes an independent constitutional claim satisfies the "cause" requirement, if the petitioner exhausts the claim of IAC. Edwards v Carpenter (2000) 529 US 446, 450, 146 L Ed 2d 518, 523, 120 S Ct 1587. A newly announced rule will not constitute cause unless the rule is cognizable on federal habeas corpus. See 28 USC §2254(d)(1); Williams v Taylor (2000) 529 US 362, 390, 146 L Ed 2d 389, 416, 120 S Ct 1495; Teague v Lane (1989) 489 US 288, 103 L Ed 2d 334, 109 S Ct 1060. See also Tyler v Cain (2001) 533 US 656, 662, 150 L Ed 2d 632, 642, 121 S Ct 2478.

To show prejudice, the petitioner must show that the error or errors complained of worked to the petitioner's actual and substantial disadvantage so as to infect the entire trial. U.S. v Frady (1982) 456 US 152, 71 L Ed 2d 816, 102 S Ct 1584; White v Lewis (9th Cir 1989) 874 F2d 599. The petitioner's burden is substantial and greater than that required to establish plain error on direct appeal. Perry v Montana (9th Cir 1992) 972 F2d 1113. See, e.g., Strickler v Greene (1999) 527 US 263, 144 L Ed 2d 286, 119 S Ct 1936 (relief from default unavailable; petitioner demonstrated cause —Brady violation—but failed to show prejudice).

"Cause and prejudice" is a federal question. Keeney v Tamayo-Reyes, supra; Campbell v Blodgett (9th Cir 1993) 997 F2d 512; Tacho v Martinez (9th Cir 1988) 862 F2d 1376.

An exception to the cause and prejudice requirement arises if a petitioner can establish that "it is more likely than not that no reasonable juror would have found petitioner guilty beyond a reasonable doubt." Schlup v Delo (1995) 513 US 298, 327, 130 L Ed 2d 808, 115 S Ct 851. See Jaramillo v Stewart (9th Cir 2003) 340 F3d 877. For further discussion of the miscarriage of justice exception, see §45.12.

§45.26 d. Second or Successive Petition

Among the most significant restrictions on the right to federal habeas corpus brought about by the enactment of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA) are the stringent limitations it imposes on second and successive petitions. Under 28 USC §2244(b)(1), the federal district court may not consider any claim in a second or subsequent application for federal habeas relief that has already been decided on the merits. A dismissal grounded in a state procedural default is a decision on the merits and bars a second or successive petition raising the same claim. Henderson v Lampert (2005) 396 F3d 1049.

Furthermore, generally, even if the claim is new (i.e., it has not been presented in a previous federal habeas petition), it may be considered only if it relies on either (28 USC §2244(b)(2)):

- A "new rule of constitutional law, made retroactive to cases on collateral review by the Supreme Court"; or
- Facts that (1) could not have been discovered earlier through the exercise of due diligence, and (2) if proved, would establish by clear and convincing evidence that but for the error, no reasonable fact-finder would have found the petitioner guilty.

In Tyler v Cain (2001) 533 US 656, 662, 150 L Ed 2d 632, 642, 121 S Ct 2478, the Supreme Court construed 28 USC §2244(b)(2) to hold that the word "made" in the phrase "made retroactive to cases on collateral review by the Supreme Court" means "held."

> Ø Note: A habeas petitioner, like other civil litigants, may seek relief from an adverse result by filing a motion under Fed R Civ P 60(b). Some Rule 60(b) motions are subject to the limitations on second or successive petitions; others are not. See Gonzalez v Crosby (2005) 545 US 524, 162 L Ed 2d 480, 125 S Ct 2641. If the motion is in essence a claim, that is, if it seeks to add a new ground for relief or attacks the federal court's judgment on the merits, it will be treated as a second or successive petition; if it is not a claim, that is, if it attacks the judgment on procedural grounds or attacks a defect in the integrity of the proceedings, it is not subject to the limitations on second or successive petitions. 162 L Ed 2d at 493. Thus, for example, when a district court dismissed a petition for failure to pay a filing fee and failure to prosecute, a petitioner's Rule 60(b) motion asking for relief from the decision on the ground that procedural errors were the fault of counsel and not the petitioner would not be considered a second or successive petition. Butz v Mendoza-Powers (9th Cir 2007) 474 F3d 1193. A motion for relief under Rule 60(b) based on an intervening change in the law requires a showing of "extraordinary circumstances." The court will consider on a case-by-case basis the following factors, among others: (1) whether the change in the law overruled a settled legal principle; (2) petitioner's diligence in seeking review; (3) the parties' reliance interest in the finality of the case; (4) the delay between the finality of judgment and the Rule 60(b) motion; (5) the relationship between the decisions embodying the original judgment and the change in law; and (6) the need for comity between state and federal courts. Phelps v Almeida (9th Cir 2009) 569 F3d 1120, 1134.

An application to present a second or successive habeas petition must be made before a panel of three appellate judges, and it may be granted only if the applicant makes a prima facie showing that the petition comes within one of the exceptions to the bar against successive petitions. 28 USC §2244(b)(3). The appellate panel must grant or deny authorization to file a subsequent petition within 30 days after the petitioner applies. 28 USC §2244(b)(3).

The Ninth Circuit has held that the AEDPA limitations on successive petitions do not violate the Constitution by suspending the writ of habeas corpus. See Greenawalt v Stewart (9th Cir 1997) 105 F3d 1268.

Because of the bar against second or successive petitions, it is critical that all claims related to a single judgment, that is, the conviction and sentence, be brought in a single petition, even if the conviction and sentence are challenged separately in state court. Burton v Stewart (2007) 549 US 147, 166 L Ed 2d 628, 127 S Ct 793. However, certain claims that would necessarily be unripe at the time the petition is filed, such as a claim that a prisoner cannot be executed because he became insane after the federal petition was filed but before the time of execution, are exempt from this rule. Panetti v Quarterman (2007) 551 US 930, 168 L Ed 2d 662, 127 S Ct 2842.

A pro se petitioner's subsequent petition filed before adjudication of the first petition is complete should be construed as a motion to amend the first petition rather than a second or successive application. Woods v Carey (9th Cir 2008) 525 F3d 886, 890.

G. Proceedings in District Court

§45.27 1. Pleadings

Petition. A habeas corpus proceeding is initiated by a petition. The petition must specify all grounds for relief, state the facts supporting each ground, and state the relief requested. Habeas Rules 2(c). The petition should correspond closely to the model form appended to the rules. See Habeas Rules 2(d).

Each federal district court in California has its own version of the model form that it will make available without charge on request. The address and telephone number of the clerk's office for each California district are listed in §45.9.

Ø Practice tip: Although counsel representing a habeas petitioner is not required to use the model form, it is a useful reference because it includes all the necessary jurisdictional allegations.

The petitioner is not required to attach documentary evidence supporting the facts alleged to justify relief. However, an attorney who is representing or assisting a petitioner may want to attach parts of the record that support the claim.

On receipt, the clerk must "promptly" forward the petition to a judge who must "promptly examine it." Habeas Rules 4. The judge may refer it to a magistrate judge under 28 USC §636 and Habeas Rules 10. The magistrate judge may then perform all the duties of the district judge, except for granting or denying the petition, unless all parties consent to the magistrate judge's jurisdiction. See 28 USC §636(b); Habeas Rules 8(b), 10.

Ø Note: Referral to a magistrate judge may be automatic by local rule or general order.

The petition may be dismissed at this stage if it does not state a claim for relief or if it is apparent on the face of the petition that it is procedurally barred.

Response. If the petition states facts that would warrant relief if proved, and if there is no apparent procedural bar to relief, the court will order the state to respond and will set a due date for the response. Habeas Rules 4. The response may be an answer, a motion, or "other response." Habeas Rules 4.

Ø Note: If the petition contains arguably unexhausted claims, or other procedural defects that would preclude consideration on the merits, the likely response will be a motion to dismiss, accompanied by a request for an extension of time to file the answer.

The answer must address the allegations in the petition and allege any procedural bars to relief. Habeas Rules 5(b). The respondent must attach to the answer the parts of the record the respondent deems relevant to the proceeding, and must indicate in the answer what transcripts are available, when they can be furnished, and what portions of the proceedings have been recorded but not transcribed. Habeas Rules 5(c).

If the record the parties submit is inadequate for review, the district court has a duty to obtain the state court transcript. Vicks v Bunnell (9th Cir 1989) 875 F2d 258.

Reply (traverse). The petitioner may file a reply (traditionally called a "traverse") to the respondent's answer "within a time fixed by the judge." Habeas Rules 5(e). Although a reply is not technically required, if the petitioner does not file a reply, the factual allegations in the answer will be deemed true, "except to the extent that the judge finds from the evidence that they are not true." 28 USC §2248.

§45.27A 2. Applicability of Rules of Civil Procedure

After a habeas corpus action has been filed, the case generally proceeds as a civil action under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to the extent those rules are not inconsistent with the Habeas Rules (Habeas Rules 12), with the exception of discovery, which can be undertaken only with leave of court (Habeas Rules 6(a)). See Bracy v Gramley (1997) 520 US 899, 138 L Ed 2d 97, 117 S Ct 1793.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.28 3. Fact-Finding in District Court

After receiving the respondent's answer and the record of state court proceedings designated by the parties (and any traverse), the district court will grant or deny the requested relief unless it determines that the record requires further factual development. The court may order discovery or expansion of the record under Habeas Rules 6-7, or an evidentiary hearing under Habeas Rules 8. The district court must appoint counsel for a pro se petitioner if counsel is necessary for effective discovery (Habeas Rules 6(a)) or if it orders an evidentiary hearing (Habeas Rules 8(c)).

For further discussion of proceedings in the district court, see Appeals & Writs, chap 17.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.29 a. Evidentiary Hearing

When the petitioner alleges "specific facts which, if true, would entitle him to relief" (Ortiz v Stewart (9th Cir 1998) 149 F3d 923, 934), and the truth of those facts cannot be determined from the record, an evidentiary hearing may be appropriate. Baja v Ducharme (9th Cir 1999) 187 F3d 1075, 1078. Under AEDPA's deferential standard of review of state court proceedings, the district court must first determine whether the petitioner "has failed to develop the factual basis of a claim in state court proceedings." 28 USC §2254(e)(2); Alberni v McDaniel (9th Cir 2006) 458 F3d 860, 873. If the petitioner has failed to develop the factual basis for the claim, the inquiry ordinarily stops: With two very narrow exceptions involving claims of actual innocence (see Appeals & Writs, chap 17), the petitioner is not entitled to an evidentiary hearing in federal court. 28 USC §2254(e)(2).

The phrase "failed to develop" implies lack of diligence or some other fault on the part of the petitioner or the petitioner's attorney. Williams v Taylor (2000) 529 US 420, 431, 146 L Ed 2d 435, 448, 120 S Ct 1479. Therefore, if the district court concludes that the failure to develop the facts in the state court is not the fault of the petitioner or the petitioner's attorney, it next considers whether an evidentiary hearing is appropriate or required under Townsend v Sain (1963) 372 US 293, 9 L Ed 2d 770, 83 S Ct 745, overruled on other grounds in Keeney v Tamayo-Reyes (1992) 504 US 1, 118 L Ed 2d 318, 112 S Ct 1715. Under Townsend, an evidentiary hearing is necessary if the defendant can show that

> (1) the merits of the factual dispute were not resolved in the state hearing; (2) the state factual determination is not fairly supported by the record as a whole; (3) the fact-finding procedure employed by the state court was not adequate to afford a full and fair hearing; (4) there is a substantial allegation of newly discovered evidence; (5) the material facts were not adequately developed at the state-court hearing; or (6) for any reason it appears that the state trier of fact did not afford the habeas applicant a full and fair hearing.

372 US at 313. In short, when a petitioner has done everything in his or her power to develop the claim, but further factual development is necessary, the district court must hold an evidentiary hearing. Baja v Ducharme (9th Cir 1999) 187 F3d 1075, 1078. See also Insyxiengmay v Morgan (9th Cir 2005) 403 F3d 657, 669; Williams v Woodford (9th Cir 2004) 384 F3d 567, 586.

> Ø Note: An evidentiary hearing in federal district court is not required if the state court has reliably found the relevant facts, or if there are no disputed facts and the claim presents a purely legal question. See Hendricks v Vasquez (9th Cir 1992) 974 F2d 1099; 28 USC §2254(e)(1) (presumption of correctness of state findings of fact).

> Ø Practice tip: California has made the identification of factual disputes and ordering of evidentiary hearings a sua sponte duty of the state habeas court when appropriate. Pen C §1484; Cal Rules of Ct 4.551(f); People v Romero (1994) 8 C4th 728, 739, 35 CR2d 270. It can therefore be argued that the petitioner's failure to move for an evidentiary hearing in state court does not show a lack of "diligence" under federal habeas law.

After the evidentiary hearing, the judge will generally allow the parties to submit post-evidentiary-hearing briefs. The judge will then normally issue a written decision addressing the issues presented by the petition. If either party has objections to the decision, it is recommended that a motion for reconsideration be promptly filed to preserve issues for appeal.

For further discussion of evidentiary hearings, see Appeals & Writs, chap 17.

There is no codified informal discovery in federal habeas proceedings, but opposing counsel will often agree to provide each other with relevant materials in the parties' possession. A party seeking discovery must file a request with the court, along with a statement detailing the information sought. Habeas Rules 6(a)-(b). The entire range of discovery tools authorized by Fed R Civ P 26-37 (e.g., depositions, interrogatories, and subpoenas for the production of documents and other materials) is available to the parties in habeas corpus proceedings if authorized by the court. Habeas Rules 6(a).

The district court has discretion to grant a request for discovery on showing of good cause. Habeas Rules 6(a). The court has a duty to grant a discovery request when the petitioner makes specific allegations that provide the court reason to believe that if the facts were fully developed, the petitioner would be able to demonstrate that he or she is entitled to relief. Bracy v Gramley (1997) 520 US 899, 908, 138 L Ed 2d 97, 106, 117 S Ct 1793; Pham v Terhune (9th Cir 2005) 400 F3d 740, 743.

Although discovery usually follows the grant of an evidentiary hearing, "there may be instances in which discovery would be appropriate beforehand." See Note to Habeas Rules 6; Wagner v U.S. (9th Cir 1969) 418 F2d 618, 621 (remanding to district court for further factual development, and suggesting that discovery might help the court determine whether an evidentiary hearing was required).

If respondent moves for permission to conduct discovery, the district judge must honor the petitioner's attorney-client privilege with the attorneys who represented him or her in the state trial and appellate courts. Fed R Evid 1101(c); Fed R Civ P 26(b)(1), (b)(3), (b)(5). See In re Lott (6th Cir 2005) 424 F3d 446, 452. In that case, the Sixth Circuit held that a habeas petitioner who asserted a claim of "actual innocence" did not thereby waive his attorney-client privilege with respect to his trial lawyer. 424 Fed at 454. Therefore, the district court erred in granting the respondent's request to depose and seek production of documents from the petitioner's trial counsel. 424 F3d at 456.

For further discussion of discovery, see Appeals & Writs, chap 17.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.30A c. Subpoenas

Subpoenas are not technically considered discovery under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, but as a practical matter, the district court will ordinarily grant a habeas petitioner's motion for authority to issue subpoenas on a showing of "good cause." See, e.g., Carrera v Stokes (ED Cal, Aug. 18, 2005, No. CIV. F-90-478-AWI-P) 2005 US Dist Lexis 23744 (unpublished order). Procedures for obtaining and serving subpoenas directing nonparties to testify or produce documents are set forth in Fed R Civ P 45. Rule 45 subpoenas can be used, for example, to obtain materials in the district attorney's file. If a party is proceeding "in forma pauperis," his or her request for authority to issue a subpoena should also include a request for certification from the appropriate office, directing the U.S. Marshal's office to pay witness fees pursuant to 28 USC §1825(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.30B d. Expansion of the Record

Rule 7 of the Habeas Rules allows the district court to expand the record of a habeas corpus case to include additional materials relevant to disposition of the petition. The Advisory Committee Notes to Habeas Rules 7 clarify that the record can be expanded in lieu of, or as a complement to, an evidentiary hearing. If a petitioner exercised "diligence" in his or her efforts to develop the factual basis for the claims in state court proceedings, generally the petition need only show that the materials he or she seeks to add to the record are relevant. Cooper-Smith v Palmateer (9th Cir 2005) 397 F3d 1236, 1241. If the petitioner cannot establish diligence in trying to develop the record in state court, the petitioner must show that the request to expand the record is allowed under 28 USC §2254(e)(2). Cooper-Smith, 397 F3d at 1241. Under 28 USC §2254(e)(2), the petitioner must show that the claim is based either on

- A new retroactive rule of constitutional law; or
- A factual predicate that
- Could not have been previously discovered through the exercise of due diligence and
- Demonstrates that, but for the claimed error, no reasonable fact-finder would have found the petitioner guilty.

§45.31 4. Referral to Magistrate Judge

The district court judge to whom a habeas corpus petition is assigned may, without the consent of the parties, refer the matter to a U.S. Magistrate Judge for all purposes except decision. 28 USC §636(b); Fed R Civ P 72(b); Habeas Rules 8, 10. The magistrate judge then reviews the pleadings and the record and decides whether the record needs to be expanded, and whether to hold an evidentiary hearing. Habeas Rules 8(b). Unless the parties have consented to the magistrate judge's jurisdiction, the magistrate judge may not dispose of the petition but must instead submit to the trial judge proposed findings of fact and recommendations for disposition. 28 USC §636(b); Habeas Rules 8(b). Any objection to the magistrate judge's report must be filed within 14 days. 28 USC §636(b)(1)(C). Failure to object may limit the right to contest the magistrate judge's findings of fact on appeal. See, e.g., Britt v Simi Valley Unified Sch. Dist. (9th Cir 1983) 708 F2d 452.

The judge may accept, reject, or modify all or part of the magistrate judge's recommendation. The district court must make a de novo determination of all findings of fact to which objection was made. Habeas Rules 8(b). The court, however, must review the magistrate's legal conclusions de novo even if no objections are filed. Barilla v Ervin (9th Cir 1989) 886 F2d 1514, 1518.

For further discussion, see Appeals & Writs, chap 17.

§45.31A 5. Consent to Magistrate Judge's Exercise of Jurisdiction

The parties to a federal habeas corpus action may consent to have a magistrate judge exercise jurisdiction over the case under 28 USC §636(c)(1). If both parties voluntarily consent to the magistrate judge's exercise of jurisdiction under this subsection, the district judge plays no role in the district court litigation. Instead, all proceedings are conducted by the magistrate judge, and the magistrate judge has the power to enter a final order and judgment. The losing party may appeal the magistrate judge's final order and judgment directly to the Ninth Circuit. 28 USC §636(c)(3). The magistrate judge has the authority to issue a certificate of appealability in these cases. Hanson v Mahoney (9th Cir 2006) 433 F3d 1107, 1111.

§45.32 H. Mandamus to Compel District Court to Act

The habeas corpus statutes and rules generally contemplate the prompt processing of habeas petitions in the district court. See, e.g., Habeas Rules 4. However, the district court has no deadlines and, because of caseload pressures in many districts, delays of several months or more are common. If a petition has been pending for a long time without action by the court or magistrate judge, counsel may file a motion with the district court requesting expedited treatment.

If no response is received, or if no action is taken within a reasonable time after the motion is filed, the petitioner may file a petition for a writ of mandamus with the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco, asking the court of appeals to order the district court to decide the case. See 28 USC §1651; Fed R App P 21. Such petitions are granted only in extraordinary circumstances. See Helstoski v Meanor (1979) 442 US 500, 61 L Ed 2d 30, 99 S Ct 2445. Just what those circumstances may be is difficult to determine. In In re Blodgett (1992) 502 US 236, 116 L Ed 2d 669, 112 S Ct 674, the Supreme Court refused to issue a writ of mandamus to the Ninth Circuit in a capital habeas case that had been under submission for over 2 years. On the other hand, in the context of an appeal from a stay order in a habeas corpus action involving detention by immigration authorities, the Ninth Circuit observed that "[t]he writ of habeas corpus, challenging illegality of detention, is reduced to a sham if … trial courts do not act within a reasonable time." Yong v INS (9th Cir 2000) 208 F3d 1116, 1120 (quoting Jones v Shell (8th Cir 1978) 572 F2d 1278, 1280 (footnote omitted)).

§45.33 I. Disposition

If the district court finds a habeas corpus petition to be meritorious, it may order the prisoner released outright, although this action is rare. When such relief is granted, the state usually moves for a stay pending its appeal to the Ninth Circuit. Usually, the court grants the writ subject to the state's right to retry the prisoner within a specified length of time. McHenry v California (9th Cir 1971) 447 F2d 470. See Appeals & Writs, chap 17. If the state decides to appeal the district court's decision granting the petition, rather than retrying the petitioner, it should request a stay pending the appeal. See §45.8.

Ø Note: If the petitioner proves that the government violated the terms of a plea agreement, and the government has already received the benefit it bargained for under the plea agreement, the federal habeas court can order specific enforcement of the plea agreement. Buckley v Terhune (9th Cir 2006) 441 F3d 688, 699.

If relief is denied, the petitioner may seek permission to appeal to the Ninth Circuit. Fed R App P 22(a). See §45.39 for discussion.

§45.34 J. Death Penalty Cases

Each district court has adopted special procedures for processing habeas corpus petitions by state prisoners sentenced to death. CD Cal Local R 83-17; ED Cal Local R 191; ND Cal Local R 2254-20—2254-31; SD Cal Local R HC.3. This chapter does not address federal capital habeas corpus litigation, a complex area requiring specific training and expertise.

§45.35 K. Motion for Reconsideration or Rehearing in District Court

If counsel believes that the district court's judgment was based on an erroneous legal premise or a misunderstanding of the facts that could be readily corrected, counsel may wish to move the district court for reconsideration or rehearing under Fed R Civ P 59-60. The Supreme Court has clarified that a motion for relief under Fed R Civ P 60(b) is not considered a "successive petition" if it attacks "not the substance of the federal court's resolution of a claim on the merits, but some defect in the integrity of the federal habeas proceedings." Gonzalez v Crosby (2005) 545 US 524, 162 L Ed 2d 480, 493, 125 S Ct 2641. If counsel decides to take this tack, special care must be taken to serve the Fed R Civ P 59 motion within 28 calendar days after judgment is entered and, if the motion is denied, to file a timely appeal under Fed R App P 4(a)(4). Unless it is filed within 10 days of entry of the judgment, a motion under Fed R Civ P 60(b) does not toll the time for filing a notice of appeal, and special procedures must be followed carefully for both types of motions. Carriger v Lewis (9th Cir 1992) 971 F2d 329. For a detailed discussion of the complexities raised by motions for hearing and reconsideration, see 9 Moore's Federal Practice §204.12 (3d ed 1997).

VI. APPEAL OF DISTRICT COURT RULING ON HABEAS CORPUS PETITION

§45.36 A. Ninth Circuit Chart of Time Limits

When an appeal is filed, the clerk of the Ninth Circuit transmits to the appellant and appellee a chart of due dates, chronologically summarizing the procedural events that are to occur in completing the appeal. The chart shows what action is to be taken and by whom, when each event is to occur, and includes informative comments on each event.

§45.37 B. Miscellaneous Information About Ninth Circuit Cases

In 2008, the Ninth Circuit put in place a "Case Management/Electronic Case Files" (CM/ECF) system for filing most documents with the court. Use of the CM/ECF system is mandatory for all attorneys who have not been granted an exemption and is voluntary for all parties proceeding without counsel. Information about the system can be found on the Ninth Circuit's website at http://www.ca9.uscourts.gov. Ninth Circuit Rule 25-5 contains the Ninth Circuit's rules regarding electronic filing. In general, attorneys are required to file and serve briefs and motions electronically (with paper copies of briefs submitted later, as well), while case opening materials and Excerpts of Record are still filed and served in paper. The CM/ECF system is integrated with PACER (Public Access to Court Electronic Records) and allows users to obtain case and docket information about all cases pending in the court.

For answers to specific procedural questions, counsel should consult the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, the Ninth Circuit Rules, the Ninth Circuit General Orders (i.e., internal operating procedures of the Ninth Circuit), Appeals & Writs, chap 18, or another attorney before contacting the court. If necessary, counsel may call a docketing unit with specific procedural questions. If the clerks are unable to assist, counsel may ask to speak with a criminal motions attorney.

§45.38 C. Notice of Appeal

A party desiring to appeal the district court decision must file a notice of appeal within 30 calendar days after the entry of judgment. Fed R App P 4(a)(1). On a motion made no later than 60 calendar days after the entry of judgment, the district court may grant leave to file an untimely notice of appeal. This requires a showing of "excusable neglect" or "good cause." Fed R App P 4(a)(5). See Pettibone v Cupp (9th Cir 1981) 666 F2d 333. The 60-day time limit is jurisdictional. No appeal may be taken after its expiration. The court of appeals does not have the power to extend the time for filing a notice of appeal. Fed R App P 26(b). Nor does it have the authority to create equitable exceptions (e.g., "unusual circumstances") to that jurisdictional requirement. Bowles v Russell (2007) 551 US 205, 168 L Ed 2d 96, 127 S Ct 2360. A notice of appeal filed by a pro se prisoner is deemed filed on the date it is delivered to prison authorities for forwarding to the court. Houston v Lack (1988) 487 US 266, 269, 101 L Ed 2d 245, 251, 108 S Ct 2379; Davis v Woodford (9th Cir 2006) 446 F3d 957, 959; Miller v Sumner (9th Cir 1989) 872 F2d 287; Fed R App P 4(c)(1).

The appellant should file the notice of appeal with the clerk of the federal district court that ruled on the habeas corpus petition. Fed R App P 3(a). The appellant must furnish the clerk with sufficient additional copies of the notice to allow the clerk to serve a copy on each party other than the appellant. See 9th Cir R 3-1; Fed R App P 3(d).

The state has an appeal of right from the granting of a petition for writ of habeas corpus. The petitioner must obtain a certificate of appealability (COA) for each issue he or she wants to raise in the appeal. Fed R App P 22(b). See also U.S. v Asrar (9th Cir 1997) 116 F3d 1268.

The certificate of appealability is discussed in §45.39. For further discussion, including a sample notice of appeal, see Appeals & Writs, chap 18.

§45.39 D. Certificate of Appealability

When the detention being challenged on federal habeas corpus "arises out of process issued by a state court," a petitioner seeking review of the district court's ruling must obtain a certificate of appealability (COA) for any issue he or she wants the appellate court to review. 28 USC §2253(c)(1)(A); Fed R App P 22(b). A COA pertains to each issue individually and may be issued only if the applicant makes a substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right. 28 USC §2253(c)(2). Note, however, that when the petitioner "challenges an administrative decision regarding the execution of his sentence," a COA is not required. White v Lambert (9th Cir 2004) 370 F3d 1002, 1011 (transfer to privately run prison in another state); Rosas v Nielsen (9th Cir 2005) 428 F3d 1229, 1231 (denial of parole).

Either the district court or the court of appeals may issue a COA. Rule 11 of the Habeas Rules requires the district court to grant or deny a COA at the same time that it issues a final order adverse to the petitioner. If the district court grants a COA, the petitioner must still file a timely notice of appeal to pursue an appeal. If the district court denies a COA, the petitioner can still seek a COA from the court of appeals. Habeas Rules 11; Fed R App P 22(b)(1). If the district court has denied a COA and the petitioner wishes to pursue an appeal, the petitioner must file a timely notice of appeal with the district court. This will require the district court clerk to send the court of appeals the notice of appeal and any part of the district court record that is not available electronically. Fed R App P 22(b)(1); 9th Cir R 22-1(b). The petitioner then has the option of filing a request for a COA with the Ninth Circuit within 35 days of the date the district court denied the COA. 9th Cir R 22-1(d). If the petitioner does not file a request for a COA with the Ninth Circuit, the notice of appeal itself will be deemed a request to the court of appeals for a COA. Fed R App P 22(b)(2).

A request for a COA should identify each issue to be raised on appeal and state briefly why each presents a "substantial question." To obtain a certificate of appealability, the petitioner must make a substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right, a showing that is very similar to the showing required for granting a certificate of probable cause. 28 USC §2253(c)(2); Slack v McDaniel (2000) 529 US 473, 483, 146 L Ed 2d 542, 554, 120 S Ct 1595 (COA requirement largely codifies standard set forth in Barefoot v Estelle (1983) 463 US 880, 893, 77 L Ed 2d 1090, 1104, 103 S Ct 3383). A COA must issue if the petitioner is able to show that reasonable jurists would find the district court's assessment of the constitutional claims debatable or wrong. Tennard v Dretke (2004) 542 US 274, 282, 159 L Ed 2d 384, 394, 124 S Ct 2562.

If a COA is granted only in part, counsel may brief uncertified issues in a section of the brief entitled "Uncertified Issues." The Ninth Circuit panel considering the certified issues will treat the "Uncertified Issues" section of the brief as a motion to expand the COA. 9th Cir R 22-1(e).

When a certificate of appealability is issued to the petitioner, the clerk of the Ninth Circuit establishes a briefing schedule for the appeal that includes filing dates for the appellant's opening brief, appellee's brief, and appellant's optional reply brief. See 9th Cir R 22-1(c).

The most important distinction between a certificate of appealability and the pre-AEDPA certificate of probable cause is that a COA applies only to the issue on which it is granted (28 USC §2253(c)); whereas, under former practice, the appeal was not limited to the issues designated in the certificate of probable cause (Chacon v Wood (9th Cir 1994) 36 F3d 1459, 1466). The court of appeal lacks jurisdiction to resolve the merits of any claim for which a COA was not granted. Rios v Garcia (9th Cir 2004) 390 F3d 1082, 1086.

For further discussion and sample forms, see Appeals & Writs, chap 18.

E. Other Steps in Perfecting Appeal

§45.40 1. Docketing Fees; In Forma Pauperis Status

At the time a notice of appeal is filed with the district court, the petitioner must pay a filing and docketing fee for the appeal unless he or she is proceeding in forma pauperis. If the petitioner was granted in forma pauperis status in the district court, that status continues automatically on appeal unless revoked by order of the district court. Fed R App P 24(a).

If in forma pauperis status was denied or revoked by the district court, the petitioner may request in forma pauperis status from the Ninth Circuit. See Appeals & Writs, chap 18.

When the state is the petitioner, no filing and docketing fee is required.

Unless the appellant intends to order the entire transcript or the parties have agreed on what portions of the transcript should be ordered, the appellant must serve the appellee with notice of what portions of the transcript the appellant intends to order, as well as a statement of issues appellant intends to raise on appeal, within the time limits set by 9th Cir R 10-3.1(a), in most instances within 10 calendar days after the notice of appeal was filed. 9th Cir R 10-3(a). If no transcript is needed, the appellant must serve on the appellee a statement indicating that the appellant does not intend to order a reporter's transcript. 9th Cir R 10-3.1(a). The appellee then has 10 days to notify the appellant of any additional transcripts the appellee deems necessary to the appeal. 9th Cir R 10-3.1(b). If the parties agree that no transcripts are necessary, the appellant must file a notice so stating in the district court and provide copies of the notice to the court reporter and the Ninth Circuit. 9th Cir R 10-3.1(c).

The parties must designate and order the court reporter's transcript within 30 days of filing the notice of appeal, using the district court's transcript designation form. 9th Cir R 10-3.1(d). These forms vary from district court to district court. They are available in the clerk's office of each court, and on each district court's website. When the appellant files this form with the district court, he or she must simultaneously provide a copy of the form to the court reporter. 9th Cir R 10-3.1(d).

Appeals arising from writs of habeas corpus proceedings are considered civil, not criminal, cases. The schedule order setting forth due dates for records and briefings is issued by the Ninth Circuit at the time the case is docketed in the court of appeals.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.42 3. Clerk's Records

In the Ninth Circuit, the clerk's record, which is the set of original documents filed in the district court action, is not automatically sent from the district court to the Ninth Circuit for every appeal. However, the Ninth Circuit can request all or part of the clerk's record from the district court at any time. 9th Cir R 11-4.4. Documents from the district court clerk's record are tabbed and identified by the docket control number given them when they were initially entered on the trial court docket. This task is performed by the district court clerk. 9th Cir R 11-6.1.

In referencing documents in their briefs, all parties should use the same docket control number. For example, if the trial court's findings are numbered "28" on the trial court docket, a reference to that document in a brief should read "CR 28." The abbreviation "CR" is understood to mean the trial court clerk's record.

When numerous pages are in a single document and the passage referred to is on a particular page, the reference in the brief should read "CR 28," followed by the page number in the document.

Counsels' briefs should refer to passages in the reporter's transcript as "RT," along with the exact page number.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.43 F. Preparing and Filing Briefs and Excerpts of Record

Once the court sets a briefing schedule, briefing should proceed as described in Appeals & Writs, chap 18. Appellant's counsel should carefully observe the requirements of 9th Cir R 30-1 on the excerpts of record, a set of documents to be filed along with, but separate from, the opening briefs in lieu of the appendix described in Fed R App P 30. The excerpts of record should include, among other documents, the notice of appeal, the district court docket sheet, the judgment or interlocutory order appealed from, and any other rulings sought to be reviewed. 9th Cir R 30-1.4. In addition, the Ninth Circuit Local Rules provide that the excerpts of record must include the final petition and response filed in district court. 9th Cir R 30-1.4(c)(i). If the excerpts of record will exceed 75 pages, they must be divided into at least two volumes, and Ninth Circuit rules specify how documents should be organized for appeals arising out of habeas petitions brought under 28 USC §2254. 9th Cir R 30-1.6. For further discussion, see Appeals & Writs, chap 18.

If the appellee believes that the appellant's excerpt of record omits relevant documents, the appellee should file a Supplemental Excerpt of Record that includes the missing documents. 9th Cir R 30-1.7.

Under Fed R App P 32.1, circuit courts must allow parties to cite to unpublished opinions, orders, judgments, and other dispositions issued after January 1, 2007. The Ninth Circuit has implemented this directive with 9th Cir R 36-3, which continues to provide that unpublished dispositions and orders of the court are not precedent (9th Cir R 36-3(a)) but allows attorneys to cite unpublished dispositions and orders issued on or after January 1, 2007 (9th Cir R 36-3(b)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.44 G. Standards of Review

The Ninth Circuit reviews de novo a district court's decision to grant or deny a habeas petition. Moses v Payne (9th Cir 2008) 543 F3d 1090, 1097. The Ninth Circuit reviews de novo questions of law and mixed questions of law and fact. Jackson v Brown (9th Cir 2008) 513 F3d 1057, 1069. Factual findings relevant to a district court's decision are reviewed for clear error. Moore v Czerniak (9th Cir 2008) 534 F3d 1128, 1136.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.45 H. Oral Argument

The Ninth Circuit schedules oral argument on the appeal unless the panel members assigned to hear the case unanimously agree that oral argument would not significantly aid the decisional process. Generally, the Ninth Circuit hears oral argument on a much more frequent basis than does the California Court of Appeal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.46 I. Requests for Rehearing

The losing party may move the panel for rehearing within 14 calendar days after entry of the judgment. The petition for rehearing must state the points of law or fact that in the petitioner's opinion the court has overlooked or misapprehended and must contain all arguments in support of the petition. Fed R App P 40(a). See Appeals & Writs, chap 18.

If the case involves a question of exceptional importance, or if the decision conflicts with other authority, the petitioner may suggest that the rehearing be conducted en banc. En banc hearings or rehearings are not favored, however. Fed R App P 35. Although review by all judges of the Court of Appeals is theoretically possible under 9th Cir R 35-3, virtually all en banc proceedings are heard by a limited en banc court, which consists of the chief judge of the circuit and a specified number of additional active judges of the circuit who are drawn by lot. 9th Cir R 35-3. See Appeals & Writs, chap 18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§45.47 VII. REVIEW IN UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

A party seeking further review of a Ninth Circuit decision may seek review by the U.S. Supreme Court only by writ of certiorari. See 28 USC §§1254, 1257. See also Appeals & Writs, chap 12. Under 9th Cir R 4-1(e), an attorney appointed to represent a habeas corpus petitioner in the Ninth Circuit is required to petition for certiorari if the petitioner requests counsel to file a petition. There is, however, no constitutional right to have appointed counsel assist in seeking Supreme Court review. Ross v Moffitt (1974) 417 US 600, 610, 41 L Ed 2d 341, 351, 94 S Ct 2437.

Although appointed counsel is generally required to file a petition for a writ of certiorari at the petitioner's request, if in counsel's considered judgment there are no legitimate grounds for seeking certiorari under US Sup Ct R 10, counsel must so notify the client and inform the client that if he or she insists on moving for a writ of certiorari, counsel will move to withdraw. The motion to withdraw as counsel must be filed within 21 days of the Ninth Circuit's judgment or denial of rehearing (9th Cir R 4-1(e)).

Ø Practice tip: Because the deadline for the motion to withdraw is so short, counsel must promptly determine if a petition for a writ of certiorari is warranted and, if it is not, must notify the client right away so that the client can decide whether he or she wants the attorney to withdraw and thereby allow the client to file a petition for a writ of certiorari pro se.

If counsel decides a petition for a writ of certiorari is not warranted and so informs the client, it is a good practice to send the client a copy of the Supreme Court's Guide to Filing In Forma Pauperis Cases, along with a copy of the Supreme Court Rules referenced in the guide. Both the guide and the rules are available as PDF files on the Supreme Court's website at http://www.supremecourtus.gov (see the "Case Handling Guides" and "Court Rules" links respectively).

A person not represented by appointed counsel in the Ninth Circuit may move the Ninth Circuit to appoint counsel for the purpose of petitioning for certiorari. The request must state the grounds for seeking certiorari and the reasons the ends of justice require the appointment of counsel. 9th Cir R 4-1(e).

The petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court is due within 90 calendar days after entry of judgment unless permission is granted by a Justice of the Court allowing a 60-day extension. An application to extend time is not favored. 28 USC §2101(c); US Sup Ct R 13.5. An extension requested in an application filed less than 10 calendar days before the final filing date is granted only "in the most extraordinary circumstances." US Sup Ct R 30.2.

Ø Note: The time for seeking certiorari runs from entry of the circuit court's judgment, not from issuance of the court's mandate. Fed R App P 41(b); US Sup Ct R 13.3. If a timely petition for rehearing was filed in the Ninth Circuit, the time limits run from the date of disposition of the petition. US Sup Ct R 13.3.

The procedures for requesting Supreme Court review are discussed in detail in Appeals & Writs, chap 12, and in Stern, Gressman, Shapiro & Geller, Supreme Court Practice (9th ed 2007).

§46.1 I. OVERVIEW

Revocation of probation is a sanction against probationers who fail to comply with the terms and conditions of their probation grant, including the condition to refrain from committing a new crime. Pen C §1203.2. In recent years, probation revocations have been a major prosecutorial instrument against probationers who are arrested for new offenses. District attorneys and probation officers routinely move to revoke probation concurrently with charges on the new offense. A probation revocation is sometimes filed instead of a new prosecution, sometimes referred to as a filing "in lieu of" a new prosecution. Either way, the prosecutor has a considerable advantage because motions to revoke are decided without some of the procedural protections of standard criminal cases. The due process rights of California defendants at probation revocation hearings were originally set forth in People v Vickers (1972) 8 C3d 451, 461, 105 CR 305, and People v Coleman (1975) 13 C3d 867, 120 CR 384, and are derived from the due process requirements set forth by the Supreme Court in Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 92 S Ct 2593, for parole revocation hearings. These rights are described in this chapter as Morrissey-Vickers rights. For further discussion, see §§46.15-46.20.

When a motion to revoke probation is filed concurrently with a new prosecution, the district attorney has added leverage to force a plea bargain on the district attorney's terms. When a motion to revoke probation is filed instead of a new prosecution, the district attorney can dispense with taking the case through the various steps that a new case would require. Moreover, probation revocation hearings need not be prepared in the exacting manner required for criminal jury trials.

Probation revocations usually involve two steps: a preliminary revocation and a full revocation hearing. The court may preliminarily revoke probation after making a judicial determination that there is probable cause to believe the probationer has violated a condition of probation. When the probationer is at large, the determination of probable cause is usually based on the judge's review of a probation report or on the police report in a new case. See People v Coleman (1975) 13 C3d 867, 894, 120 CR 384. Once the probationer is before the court, the second step is the formal probation revocation hearing. Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 92 S Ct 2593; People v Vickers (1972) 8 C3d 451, 461, 105 CR 305; People v Coleman (1975) 13 C3d 867, 120 CR 384. Bail or own recognizance (O.R.) release for felony defendants charged with a probation violation is at the court's discretion. Pen C §1272(3). Bail or O.R. release for misdemeanor defendants charged with a probation violation may be mandatory.

A unitary hearing that combines the prerevocation and revocation hearings is usually sufficient, as long as sufficient notice is given to the defendant. People v Coleman, supra. At the formal probation revocation hearing, the probationer is entitled only to a court trial. Morrissey v Brewer, supra. The rules of evidence are comparable to the rules of evidence at a criminal trial, with a few exceptions (People v Arreola (1994) 7 C4th 1144, 31 CR2d 631), but the standard for revocation is by a preponderance of the evidence, not by proof beyond a reasonable doubt (People v Rodriguez (1990) 51 C3d 437, 272 CR 613). A preliminary hearing in a felony or a misdemeanor case can serve as the formal probation revocation hearing if the probationer receives fair notice of the effect and dual purpose of the proceeding. People v Mosley (1988) 198 CA3d 1167, 1174, 244 CR 264. For discussion of the defendant's due process rights at a probation revocation hearing, see §§46.15-46.20.

Many issues arise at probation revocation proceedings. Is the defendant actually still on probation? If the defendant failed to make restitution or pay a fine, can the defendant be found in violation absent a showing that he or she had the ability to make such payments? What is the impact of Proposition 36 on probation revocations? These topics are among the subjects that this chapter will address.

§46.2 II. DEADLINES

There are no statutory time limits within which a probation revocation hearing must be held. Revocation hearings must be held as "promptly as convenient after arrest while information is fresh and sources are available." Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 485, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 496, 92 S Ct 2593.

§46.3 III. TWO-STEP PROCEDURE FOR PROBATION REVOCATION

Probation revocations involve a two-step process: a preliminary revocation based on a judge's finding of probable cause (see §46.12), and a formal revocation hearing (see §§46.14-46.34). People v Coleman (1975) 13 C3d 867, 894, 120 CR 384.

IV. INITIATING PROBATION REVOCATION PROCEEDINGS

§46.4 A. Moving Party; Probationer's Procedures as Moving Party

Motions to revoke probation can be initiated by the probation department, the district attorney, the probationer, or the court on its own motion. Pen C §1203.2(b). If a motion to revoke is made, the court must refer the motion to the probation department for a report. Pen C §1203.2(b). A sample motion to revoke probation is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §46.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

Probationers can ask the court to have a sentence on a previous probation case run concurrently with the prison term in a new case. Pen C §1203.2a. A probationer who wishes to do that should be aware that Pen C §1203.2a operates with three different jurisdictional time limits:

(1) The probation department must notify the court within 30 calendar days after being notified in writing by the probationer, probationer's counsel, or the prison of the probationer's confinement, or jurisdiction over the defendant is lost (i.e., probation is terminated).

(2) If imposition of the probationer's sentence was suspended, the court, on being notified of the probationer's valid request under Pen C §1203.2a for absentee sentencing, must impose sentence and issue its commitment within 30 calendar days; otherwise, it loses jurisdiction.

(3) If the probationer's sentence was imposed but execution had been suspended, the court must order execution of sentence within 60 calendar days "after being notified of the confinement." Otherwise, jurisdiction is again lost. See In re Hoddinott (1996) 12 C4th 992, 999, 50 CR2d 706.

Under Pen C §1203.2a, it is not required that the probationer make a formal demand of the court, only that the court be notified. The notification can occur if the court is advised by the probation department of the probationer's confinement for a minor offense. People v Hall (1997) 59 CA4th 972, 983, 69 CR2d 826. The confinement can be for a parole or probation violation as well as for a new offense. The court must be clearly advised that it is a confinement for another offense (as opposed, e.g., to a transfer to a diagnostic facility). 59 CA4th at 982.

However, Pen C §1203.2a requires that certain formalities be followed:

- The request must be signed by an authorized representative of the warden attesting to the confinement, or a certificate from the warden must be provided to the court; and
- The probationer must indicate that he or she wishes to be absent at the revocation and wishes to proceed without being represented by counsel (the request, however, can be made to the probation department by counsel). In re Hoddinott (1996) 12 C4th 992, 1001, 50 CR2d 706.

If a probationer sends a request lacking one or more of these formal requirements, and the court has been notified of the confinement, the court cannot act until the deficiency is corrected (e.g., if the request fails to state that the probationer wishes to proceed in absentia and without counsel, that must be clarified). 12 C4th at 1001. Requiring the probationer to proceed in absentia without a waiver is unconstitutional. See People v Wagner (2009) 45 C4th 1039, 1054, 90 CR3d 26. See also In re Flores (1983) 140 CA3d 1019, 1023, 190 CR 388 (summary revocation procedure of Pen C §1203.2a ignores constitutional rights of probationers with execution of sentence suspended).

Whether or not the formalities are observed, the probation department has the duty to inform the court within 30 calendar days after notification that the defendant is serving a prison sentence in another case; otherwise, the court will lose jurisdiction. In re Hoddinott, 12 C4th at 1005. However, despite the plain language of Pen C §1203.2a, the court's loss of "all jurisdiction" does not entitle a probationer to dismissal of his or her case. The court of appeal held that when a sentence is imposed and execution is suspended, the order directing execution of that sentence is void, but the original probationary sentence is effectively reinstated. People v Murray (2007) 155 CA4th 149, 158, 65 CR3d 731.

Ø Note: Penal Code §1203.2a does not provide the exclusive revocation and sentencing procedure available to probationers with imposition of sentence suspended who are subsequently imprisoned on another charge. Those individuals may opt to seek sentencing under Pen C §1381. Wagner, 45 C4th at 1052. The court's failure to meet the 90-day time limit in Pen C §1381 results in dismissal of the probation revocation proceedings. 45 C4th at 1052. The refiling of an action to revoke probation is subject to the limitations of Pen C §1387. 45 C4th at 1059. The Wagner court "expressed no view" whether Pen C §1381 applies to probationers with execution of sentence suspended. 45 C4th at 1051 n5.

For discussion of Pen C §§1381 and 1381.5, see §§19.31-19.32.

§46.5 B. Grounds for Revocation

A motion to revoke probation must be based on one or more of the grounds set out in Pen C §1203.2(a) and the cases interpreting it. They are:

- A violation of the conditions of probation, e.g., failure to pay a fine, obey a stay-away order, or attend court-ordered counseling;
- The probationer's abandonment to improper associates or a vicious life, e.g., associating with known criminals (this ground is very rarely used);
- Subsequent commission of other criminal offenses;

Ø Note: California courts may enforce only California laws, not federal laws. Thus, for example, when California law bars sanctions for legitimate marijuana use, California courts cannot find a violation of the probation condition that a defendant "obey all laws" when a defendant violates the federal marijuana laws. See People v Tilehkooh (2003) 113 CA4th 1433, 1445, 7 CR3d 226.

- Conduct indicating that the probationer is no longer fit to remain at large, e.g., overall determination that the probationer is incapable of leading a law-abiding life (see People v Delles (1968) 69 C2d 906, 911 n2, 73 CR 389) or it is not safe that he or she remain in society (People v Monette (1994) 25 CA4th 1572, 1575, 31 CR2d 203); and
- Willful failure to pay a fine or restitution, despite the ability to pay, or refusal to work after having been given the opportunity to work as an alternative to paying restitution.

Ø Note: Failure to pay that results solely from an inability to pay cannot be the basis of a revocation and punishment. See §46.32.

§46.6 C. Bringing Probationer Before Court

When the probationer is out of custody and the probation department decides to revoke probation, it is common for the department to send a letter to the probationer, indicating the time and place of the court date set for a prerevocation hearing. Instead of sending a letter to an out-of-custody probationer, the court or the probation officer can arrange for the probationer to appear in court. Moreover, either a peace officer or a probation officer can make a warrantless arrest of anyone on probation when probable cause exists to believe that he or she is violating a term or condition of probation. Pen C §1203.2(a).

At the time set for hearing, the court decides whether there is probable cause to support revocation, usually on the basis of the probation report or an arrest report. If the probationer is present, and the court finds probable cause to support revocation, the court revokes probation preliminarily and sets a date for a revocation hearing. Pen C §1272(3); People v Coleman (1975) 13 C3d 867, 894, 120 CR 384. If the defendant is not present, the court is still required to make the probable cause determination in order to revoke probation preliminarily. People v Coleman, supra.

§46.7 D. Release Pending Hearing

With one exception, felony probationers are not entitled to release pending the outcome of the probation revocation hearing. Pen C §1272(3); People v Kading (1988) 204 CA3d 1500, 251 CR 916. The court has discretion to set bail or release the probationer on his or her own recognizance but is not required to do so. Pen C §1272. The exception involves Proposition 36: Unless a showing of danger or flight is made, a defendant on Proposition 36 drug program probation has a right to release pending a hearing on a violation of that probation, when the result of any revocation will be reinstatement on Proposition 36 probation. In re Mehdizadeh (2003) 105 CA4th 995, 130 CR2d 98.

In misdemeanor probation cases, it can be argued, based on Pen C §1272(1)-(2), that the defendant is entitled as a matter of right to bail pending the outcome of the revocation issue. See In re O'Driscoll (1987) 191 CA3d 1356, 236 CR 882.

When a defendant appeared on a warrant issued for an alleged probation violation, it was improper for the court to remand the defendant to custody pending a hearing on the claimed violation; the remand violated due process because the defendant was not given notice he would be remanded and was not given counsel. In re Wagner (2005) 127 CA4th 138, 25 CR3d 201.

§46.8 E. Notice Requirements for Formal Revocation Hearing

The probationer must be given notice of the formal probation revocation hearing. Pen C §1203.2. The defendant is entitled to written notice of the alleged violation of probation, disclosure of the evidence against him or her, and an opportunity to respond to the charges. People v Self (1991) 233 CA3d 414, 419, 284 CR 458.

When the prosecutor initiates a revocation, he or she must also notify the probation officer. Pen C §1203.2(b). The reverse is also true: If a probationer seeks to modify, terminate, or revoke the probation grant, he or she must serve notice on the probation officer and the prosecutor. Pen C §1203.2(b).

If the alleged violation is based on a criminal case, the notice should refer to the specific violation. In re Moss (1985) 175 CA3d 913, 929, 221 CR 645. The revocation notice can refer to facts recited in a police report. People v Santellanes (1989) 216 CA3d 998, 1003 n4, 265 CR 281. If the probation department moves to revoke probation based on a violation other than a new criminal charge, the nature of the violation should be included in the probation report. Pen C §1203.2(a)-(b).

The notice must indicate the time and place of the probation revocation proceedings. The probationer should have at least enough time to investigate and prepare against a specific allegation. People v Mosley (1988) 198 CA3d 1167, 1174, 244 CR 264. It is not proper for the court to base a revocation on facts other than those cited in the notice. People v Mosley, supra.

If the court will hold a revocation hearing simultaneously with the preliminary hearing or trial, notice of that intent is required so that the probationer will have the opportunity to defend. People v Mosley, supra. Notice will be deemed waived if the probationer or his or her attorney, without objection, proceeds with the hearing. People v Baker (1974) 38 CA3d 625, 629, 113 CR 244.

§46.9 F. Expiration of Probation

Probation must be revoked before the end of the term of probation. See Pen C §1203.3(a). A preliminary revocation order tolls the running of the term of probation, allowing the court to retain jurisdiction to hold a formal hearing and to sentence for a violation after the original probation expiration date has passed. People v Mosley (1988) 198 CA3d 1167, 1174, 244 CR 264. However, the court must actually revoke probation; an order merely issuing a bench warrant is insufficient to qualify as an order revoking probation and thus does not toll the time. People v Broadway (1981) 123 CA3d Supp 19, 177 CR 106. Moreover, for tolling to take effect, the court must ultimately find that the probationer committed a violation within the original period of probation. If the court does not find that a violation of probation occurred during the original period of probation, even if a preliminary revocation order was made that tolled the running of the term of probation, the tolling will not be effective so as to permit a finding of a violation of probation before probation expired. People v Burton (2009) 177 CA4th 194, 200, 99 CR3d 169; People v Tapia (2001) 91 CA4th 738, 741, 110 CR2d 747, disapproved on other grounds in People v Wagner (2009) 45 C4th 1039, 1061 n10, 90 CR3d 26.

In the absence of an order revoking probation, probation expires on the last day of the probationary period, after which the court has no jurisdiction over the probationer. People v White (1982) 133 CA3d 677, 682, 184 CR 134. The period of time from the date probation is revoked until it is reinstated is not counted in calculating the expiration of the probationary period. People v DePaul (1982) 137 CA3d 409, 187 CR 82. An agreement by defense counsel to a probationary period longer than the maximum statutory period estops any claim that probation expired. People v Jackson (2005) 134 CA4th 929, 933, 36 CR3d 477.

§46.10 G. Timeliness of Motion to Revoke

A motion to revoke probation must be initiated within a reasonable time after the alleged violation. People v Young (1991) 228 CA3d 171, 181, 278 CR 784. The courts have not enunciated strict standards. In one case, People v Buford (1974) 42 CA3d 975, 117 CR 333, a 2½-month delay was found to be unreasonable. In cases involving a long delay, defense counsel could argue that circumstances such as the fading memory of witnesses or of the probationer, or the destruction of evidence, have made it harder for the probationer to defend against the alleged violation. See U.S. v Hamilton (9th Cir 1983) 708 F2d 1412 ("[r]evocation of probation after unreasonable delay or under circumstances misleading to the probationer is an abuse of discretion"; quoted approvingly in People v Villines (1987) 192 CA3d 1298, 1304, 237 CR 868); People v Young, supra (probation revocation reversed because trial court failed to determine whether lack of notice to probationer serving prison sentence about revocation of probation precluded his rights to speedy trial, whether delay was justifiable, and whether probationer suffered any prejudice.) On the other side, the prosecutor could presumably argue that, unless the delay created some prejudice to the probationer's ability to defend against the allegations, lack of timeliness is not a reason to prevent a hearing on the issue if other facts can explain the delay. Defense counsel could attempt to show such prejudice from the loss of the opportunity to obtain concurrent sentencing.

§46.10A H. What Judge Must Preside at Probation Revocation Proceeding

When a judge issues an order in a probation revocation proceeding, he or she assumes exclusive jurisdiction over the case; no other judge can interfere with the exercise of that jurisdiction without the defendant's consent. People v Ellison (2003) 111 CA4th 1360, 4 CR3d 713. See also Williams v Superior Court (1939) 14 C2d 656, 662, 96 P2d 334. Note, however, that a probationer has no right to have the judge who originally granted probation preside at a probation revocation hearing. People v Martinez (2005) 127 CA4th 1156, 26 CR3d 234.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.11 I. Tolling Time

A summary revocation of probation during the probation period tolls the running of probation until the probationer's status is resolved. People v Mosley (1988) 198 CA3d 1167, 244 CR 264. See Pen C §1203.2(a). See discussion in §46.9. It has been held that, during the time that probation is tolled, the probationer is still subject to the terms and conditions of the probation grant. People v Barkins (1978) 81 CA3d 30, 33, 145 CR 926. Thus, a probationer's failure to report a new arrest, as the probation order requires, can be the basis of a revocation even if it occurs during a tolled period. People v Lewis (1992) 7 CA4th 1949, 1954, 10 CR2d 376. See also People v Burton (2009) 177 CA4th 194, 195, 99 CR3d 169, and People v Tapia (2001) 91 CA4th 738, 110 CR2d 747, disapproved on other grounds in People v Wagner (2009) 45 C4th 1039, 1061 n10, 90 CR3d 26, holding that if a court finds that the defendant committed any violation of probation within the probationary period—not just the alleged violation for which probation was originally summarily revoked—time was tolled and the court can revoke probation. Given this, practitioners are well advised to counsel probationers that a summary revocation does not necessarily relieve them of the duty to comply with probationary orders.

Penal Code §1203.2(e) provides for certain results if the court revokes and reinstates probation after the expiration of the probationary period. This section is a vestige of a time before tolling was provided for in the law. If probation is revoked before expiration of probation, §1203.2(e) will never apply. People v Ottovich (1974) 41 CA3d 532, 116 CR 120. Section 1203.2(e) can apply only when probation is in fact revoked and reinstated and the court actually finds a valid violation of probation. People v Medeiros (1994) 25 CA4th 1260, 31 CR2d 83. Now that the statutory scheme provides for tolling of time, it would appear that §1203.2(e) can never be invoked. See discussion in §46.9.

§46.12 V. PREREVOCATION HEARING

To issue a warrant for a probationer's arrest, or to detain a probationer, the court must be satisfied that there is probable cause to support a probation violation. People v Coleman (1975) 13 C3d 867, 120 CR 384. The hearing at which this determination is made is called a prerevocation hearing. If the court finds insufficient probable cause to revoke probation preliminarily, the motion is denied. However, this rarely happens. When the court finds probable cause to support a probation violation and revokes probation, the action is called "summary revocation," to distinguish it from a formal revocation order that occurs after a formal revocation hearing.

The prerevocation determination guarantees that a probationer will not be arrested or held in custody for a formal revocation hearing without cause. See People v Coleman, supra. Often, a unitary hearing that combines the prerevocation and revocation hearings will be sufficient. People v Coleman, supra. However, there are situations (such as when probation revocation is based on new criminal charges) when a prerevocation hearing is required. People v Coleman, supra.

Summary revocation allows the court to retain jurisdiction of the probationer when the probationer is at large because it tolls the running of the probationary period. Pen C §1203.2(a); People v Ham (1975) 44 CA3d 288, 293, 118 CR 591. See discussion in §46.11.

Summary revocation of probation is only a temporary suspension (People v Pipitone (1984) 152 CA3d 1112, 201 CR 18); it does not terminate the conditions of probation (People v Barkins (1978) 81 CA3d 30, 145 CR 926). But does it suspend those conditions? There is no clear answer to this question. See §46.11.

At the prerevocation hearing, the court must consider the information in the probation officer's request to revoke probation. Pen C §1203.2(b). The court can summarily revoke on the basis of that request or on some other basis, i.e., on information of equal gravity, if it has reason to believe that the probationer has violated probation. See Pen C §1203.2(b); People v Santellanes (1989) 216 CA3d 998, 1002, 265 CR 281. If the basis for revoking probation is a violation of the terms or conditions of probation, there must be facts in the report from which the court can find that the probationer violated those terms or conditions. People v Smith (1970) 12 CA3d 621, 90 CR 811.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.13 VI. STIPULATING TO PROBATION VIOLATION

A probationer may want to waive his or her Morrissey-Vickers rights (discussed in §§46.15-46.20) and stipulate to a violation rather than insisting on a hearing. People v Martin (1992) 3 CA4th 482, 486, 4 CR2d 548; In re Moss (1985) 175 CA3d 913, 930, 221 CR 645. A probationer has a personal and fundamental right to admit a probation violation, even against the advice of counsel. People v Robles (2007) 147 CA4th 1286, 1290, 54 CR3d 916. Due process requires that any waiver of the probationer's rights be knowing and intelligent. Johnson v Zerbst (1938) 304 US 458, 465, 82 L Ed 1461, 1467, 58 S Ct 1019. At a minimum, the probationer must have been advised by counsel or by the court of the Morrissey-Vickers rights. See, e.g., In re La Croix (1974) 12 C3d 146, 153 n4, 115 CR 344 (parole case). However, the courts have not been as exacting in the requirements for waivers in revocation cases as they have been for guilty pleas in criminal cases. See, e.g., People v Martin, supra (waiver because probationer filed letter in mitigation and because he did not object to procedure or grounds for revocation); People v Garcia (1977) 67 CA3d 134, 136, 136 CR 398 (Boykin-Tahl admonishments and waiver not required for probation revocation); People v Dale (1973) 36 CA3d 191, 194, 112 CR 93 (probationer deemed to have waived his right to hearing by his silence when his attorney submitted the violation on supplemental probation report).

When probationers attempt to represent themselves in motions to revoke probation, the record must affirmatively reflect that the defendant was warned of the disadvantages of self-representation and that a knowing and intelligent waiver of the right to counsel was made. People v Hall (1990) 218 CA3d 1102, 1106, 267 CR 494.

As a practical matter, both the court and the attorneys should make sure that the record reflects that a probationer who is stipulating to a violation understands the rights being given up, and the consequences of admitting to the violation. Consequences include the possible sentence and, when appropriate, secondary consequences, e.g., the effect of a prison term on enhancement or immigration status.

VII. FORMAL REVOCATION HEARING

§46.14 A. Advantages of Negotiating Probation Violation

Motions to revoke probation place probationers in a position of great disadvantage. Because Morrissey-Vickers rights (discussed in §46.15) give the probationer limited protection against revocation, the defense attorney must carefully weigh the advisability of going forward with a hearing against attempting to bargain for leniency for the client. With congested courtrooms and crowded calendars, judges and prosecutors may be willing to settle for something less than the maximum possible sentence. By stipulating to a violation of probation with an agreed sentence, probationers are often reinstated to probation (albeit with additional jail time) or sent to prison for minimum or concurrent terms.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.15 B. Probationer's Rights at Hearing

A probation revocation hearing differs from a criminal trial in major respects. It is heard before a judge, not a jury. Pen C §1203.2(b). The standard for revocation is proof by a preponderance of the evidence, not proof beyond a reasonable doubt. People v Rodriguez (1990) 51 C3d 437, 272 CR 613. Nevertheless, the probation hearing is a proceeding of great moment because the result for the probationer can be jail or prison. Therefore, defense counsel is held to high standards of professional competence. See People v Shaw (1984) 35 C3d 535, 541, 198 CR 788. Defense counsel has a duty to investigate the facts of the allegations, research the law, and consult with the client in the same way as in a criminal trial. People v Shaw, supra. See People v Gayton (2006) 137 CA4th 96, 40 CR3d 40 (defense counsel incompetent for failing to check probation department records to determine accuracy of defendant's claim (which was true) that he had been reporting to the probation officer).

The probationer has the following rights in probation revocation proceedings (Black v Romano (1985) 471 US 606, 612, 85 L Ed 2d 636, 643, 105 S Ct 2254; Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 489, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 499, 92 S Ct 2593; People v Malabag (1997) 51 CA4th 1419, 1422, 59 CR2d 847):

- Written notice of the claimed violation of probation;
- Disclosure to the probationer of the evidence against him or her;
- The opportunity to be heard in person and to present witnesses and documentary evidence;
- The right to confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses;

  Ø Note: Because a probation revocation hearing is not a criminal trial, the right to confront witnesses in such proceedings stems from the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, rather than the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment. People v Johnson (2004) 121 CA4th 1409, 18 CR3d 230. Consequently, according to the court, the restrictions on the admissibility of "testimonial" hearsay imposed by the Supreme Court in Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 124 S Ct 1354, do not govern probation revocation proceedings. See discussion in §46.19.

- A neutral and detached hearing body;
- A written statement by the factfinder about the evidence relied on and the reasons for the revocation, if the court has not stated its reasons on the record (People v Ruiz (1975) 53 CA3d 715, 125 CR 886); and
- A right to an attorney (this is not on constitutional grounds, but on the California Supreme Court's supervisory authority. People v Vickers (1972) 8 C3d 451, 461, 105 CR 305).

Morrissey v Brewer, supra, was a parole revocation case. Its guidelines were adopted by the California Supreme Court for probation revocation cases in People v Vickers (1972) 8 C3d 451, 457, 105 CR 305, and People v Coleman (1975) 13 C3d 867, 120 CR 384.

§46.16 C. When and Where Revocation Hearing Should Be Held

When revocation hearing should be held. There are no statutory time limits on when a probation revocation hearing must be held. In Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 485, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 496, 92 S Ct 2593, the court spoke of a hearing held as "promptly as convenient after arrest while information is fresh and sources are available" and found that a 2-month delay was not unreasonable. See also People v Buford (1974) 42 CA3d 975, 117 CR 333 (hearing held in felony case 21 days after filing of revocation petition not unreasonable); In re Williams (1974) 36 CA3d 649, 111 CR 870 (2-month and 25-day delay following filing of parole revocation petition not unreasonable).

The rule that the hearing must be held within a reasonable time requires balancing all relevant circumstances, including whether there is a new offense and whether the probationer is in custody on that offense. See In re La Croix (1974) 12 C3d 146, 156, 115 CR 344 (parole revocation case).

A probationer incarcerated in state prison on another case is entitled on request to be sentenced on a pending probation revocation before the intervening sentence has been served in order to receive concurrent time. Pen C §1203.2a.

When a new criminal case is the basis for a probation violation, it is "most desirable" for the hearing on the probation violation to follow the criminal case, not precede it. People v Coleman (1975) 13 C3d 867, 896, 120 CR 384. See also People v Jasper (1983) 33 C3d 931, 191 CR 648; People v Samuels (1983) 147 CA3d 1108, 195 CR 598. Some courts have held that the exclusionary rule does not apply in probation revocation proceedings (see, e.g., People v Harrison (1988) 199 CA3d 803, 245 CR 204; but see People v Washington (1987) 192 CA3d 1120, 236 CR 840); however, when a motion to suppress evidence is granted under Pen C §1538.5, the suppressed evidence may not be used to revoke probation (People v Willis (1983) 149 CA3d Supp 56, 60, 197 CR 281; People v Zimmerman (1979) 100 CA3d 673, 161 CR 188). Thus, when a motion to suppress evidence is made, the hearing on that motion should occur before the hearing on the revocation of probation. People v Fuller (1983) 148 CA3d 257, 210 CR 1, 195 CR 853. See also People v Howard (1984) 162 CA3d 8, 208 CR 353. For further discussion of procedures when a new case is pending, see §§46.22-46.25.

Where probation revocation should be held. Probation revocations must usually be held in the court and county where probation was granted. People v Klockman (1997) 59 CA4th 621, 69 CR2d 271. Unless a transfer of supervision has been made under Pen C §1203.9, a court of equal jurisdiction in another county does not have jurisdiction to hear the motion to revoke probation. It does not appear that a probationer can waive this jurisdictional requirement. 59 CA4th at 625.

§46.17 D. Reciprocal Discovery

A probationer has the right to obtain the evidence against him or her in a probation revocation proceeding. See People v Moore (1983) 34 C3d 215, 218, 193 CR 404. The probationer may also be entitled to inspect nonconfidential portions of the probation officer's file on a showing of good cause. See County of Placer v Superior Court (Stoner) (2005) 130 CA4th 807, 30 CR3d 617 (trial court has authority under Pen C §1203.10 to permit the probationer to inspect nonconfidential portions of the probation file).

Ø Practice tip: Because the probation department is a third party to the revocation proceedings (see 130 C4th at 814), a subpoena duces tecum served on the county's chief probation officer is the appropriate way to request inspection of probation files. On subpoenas duces tecum, see §§4.44, 11.25.

In Jones v Superior Court (2004) 115 CA4th 48, 8 CR3d 687, the court of appeal concluded that the reciprocal discovery provisions of Proposition 115 (Pen C §§1054-1054.7) do not apply to probation revocations. Therefore, the prosecution is not entitled to discovery under Pen C §1054.3 of materials in the possession of the defense. The court held that a probation revocation proceeding is not a "criminal trial" within the meaning of §1054.3. 115 CA4th at 57.

§46.18 E. Standard of Proof

The standard of proof that the prosecuting party must sustain at a probation revocation hearing is far less than that at a criminal trial. The court need only be satisfied that there is a preponderance of the evidence that probation has been violated. People v Rodriguez (1990) 51 C3d 437, 272 CR 613.

A violation of probation may only be found if the violation was willful. People v Galvan (2007) 155 CA4th 978, 66 CR3d 426. In Galvan, the defendant was convicted, given probation, ordered to serve a year in the county jail, and ordered to report to probation within 24 hours of his release from jail, or, if he was deported, within 24 hours of his reentry into the United States. The defendant was deported, reentered, and never reported. The court of appeal noted that since the record contained no evidence of when the defendant reentered, there was no evidence that the defendant failed to report to probation 24 hours after his reentry. Although the defendant did fail to report 24 hours after his release, the government made reporting impossible by deporting him. Because a violation of probation may only be found if the violation was willful, the defendant could not be found in violation of probation. 155 CA4th at 983.

§46.19 F. Hearsay Evidence Generally Not Admissible

Hearsay ordinarily not admissible absent good cause. Hearsay evidence is generally not admissible at probation revocation hearings. People v Arreola (1994) 7 C4th 1144, 31 CR2d 631. Transcripts of trial proceedings or of preliminary hearings involving the probationer as a defendant cannot be introduced against the probationer at a probation revocation hearing unless the prosecution can demonstrate good cause for its admission in lieu of live testimony. Good cause, which is determined on a case-by-case basis, exists when the declarant is unavailable; when the declarant can be brought to the hearing only through great difficulty or expense; or when the declarant's presence would pose a risk of harm to the declarant. People v Arreola, supra; People v Shepherd (2007) 151 CA4th 1193, 1202, 60 CR3d 616. It is important that the trier of fact be able to observe the demeanor of witnesses and that the accused have the opportunity to cross-examine them. People v Arreola, supra. For example, a trial court erred in permitting a probation officer to testify regarding alleged out-of-court statements made by a third person that the probationer had violated his probation by consuming alcohol. The court of appeal noted that no showing of good cause was made for relying on the probation officer's hearsay (or double hearsay) testimony in lieu of live testimony. People v Shepherd (2007) 151 CA4th 1193, 1202, 60 CR3d 616. Note, however, that at least one appellate court has held that a spontaneous statement admissible under Evid C §1240 is a special breed of hearsay that automatically satisfies a probationer's due process confrontation rights without requiring the trial court to find good cause for the witness's absence under Arreola or perform the federal due process balancing test set out in U.S. v Comito (9th Cir 1999) 177 F3d 1166. People v Stanphill (2009) 170 CA4th 61, 81, 87 CR3d 643.

Documentary evidence is admissible if reliable. Reliable documentary evidence that does not have live testimony as its source is admissible, even if it does not meet all the requirements of an exception to the hearsay rule. See People v Maki (1985) 39 C3d 707, 716, 217 CR 676. Court of appeal cases have reached inconsistent results on the admissibility of documentary hearsay. In People v Brown (1989) 215 CA3d 452, 454, 263 CR 391, the court ruled that corroborated drug test reports were admissible at a probation revocation hearing. In People v O'Connell (2003) 107 CA4th 1062, 132 CR2d 665, the court ruled that a program manager's report about a probationer's absences was admissible at a probation revocation hearing. However, in People v Shepherd (2007) 151 CA4th 1193, 1202, 60 CR3d 616, the court ruled that a probation officer's testimony about an administrator's hearsay statement recounting the defendant's failed alcohol test was inadmissible under the good-cause standard. The Shepherd court specifically rejected the Brown case, noting that it preceded the supreme court's decision in People v Arreola, supra. People v Shepherd (2007) 151 CA4th 1193, 1202, 60 CR3d 616. Relying on Maki and O'Connell, the Second District in People v Abrams (2007) 158 CA4th 396, 398, 69 CR3d 742, held that evidence of routine matters in probation reports, such as whether a defendant made and kept appointments and made restitution payments, is nontestimonial and, therefore, admissible hearsay at revocation hearings. However, the Abrams court made it clear that everything in a probation report is not necessarily admissible at a violation hearing: "Evidence that is properly viewed as a substitute for live testimony, such as statements to a probation officer by victims or witnesses, likely" is inadmissible. 158 CA4th at 405.

Ø Note: The Sixth Amendment right of confrontation is violated by the introduction in a criminal trial of "testimonial" hearsay unless both (1) the declarant is unavailable as a witness, and (2) the defendant has had an opportunity to cross-examine the declarant. Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 53, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 203, 124 S Ct 1354. Because the right to confront witnesses at probation revocation hearings stems from the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, not the Sixth Amendment Confrontation Clause, "Crawford's interpretation of the Sixth Amendment does not govern probation revocation hearings." People v Johnson (2004) 121 CA4th 1409, 1411, 18 CR3d 230. However, Sixth Amendment cases like Crawford may shed light on the scope of the Fourteenth Amendment right of confrontation available at probation revocation hearings. 121 CA4th at 1412. It does not appear that Johnson will be the last word on the subject. The challenged hearsay in that case was a lab report that the court reasoned was not a substitute for live testimony but rather routine documentary evidence that did not fit within the definition of "testimonial" and the admission of which was consistent with the rationale of Arreola. 121 CA4th at 1412. That reasoning has been undermined by the Supreme Court's ruling in Melendez-Diaz v Massachusetts (2009) ___ US ___, 174 L Ed 2d 314, 321, 129 S Ct 2527, that, whether routinely generated or not, statements prepared to be used as evidence against the defendant at trial, namely, sworn statements contained in lab reports indicating the results of forensic analysis, are testimonial for the purposes of confrontation under the Sixth Amendment. Notably, the Court referred to the report, Strengthening Forensic Science in the United States: A Path Forward, issued by the National Research Council of the National Academies, and questioned the assumption of reliability underlying forensic science and testing. 174 L Ed 2d at 326. An argument can be made that after Crawford and Melendez-Diaz, in the absence of other compelling reasons to limit cross-examination, "good cause" for the introduction of testimonial hearsay at a probation revocation hearing requires a showing that the declarant is unavailable and that the probationer has had a prior opportunity to cross-examine.

Although some courts have stated that the exclusionary rule does not apply in probation revocation proceedings (see, e.g., People v Harrison (1988) 199 CA3d 803, 245 CR 204), when the police conduct shocks the conscience of the court, evidence obtained by that conduct must be suppressed. Compare People v Washington (1987) 192 CA3d 1120, 236 CR 840 (police conduct affronted sense of justice), with People v Harrison (1988) 199 CA3d 803, 245 CR 204 (conduct not egregious). Clearly, the defense is entitled to a hearing on a claim that improperly seized evidence will be offered at a probation revocation proceeding.

In addition, several cases say that evidence that has been previously suppressed cannot be used at a probation revocation hearing. See Pen C §1538.5(d); People v Zimmerman (1979) 100 CA3d 673, 161 CR 188; People v Willis (1983) 149 CA3d Supp 56, 60, 197 CR 281 (accord). See Schlick v Superior Court (1992) 4 C4th 310, 314, 14 CR2d 406 (it appears that Zimmerman has survived amendment to Cal Const art I, §28(a)); People v Superior Court (Brotherton) (1983) 147 CA3d 281, 287, 195 CR 96. See also §46.16.

§46.21 H. No Requirement of Accomplice Corroboration

In probation revocation hearings, the moving party does not have to corroborate the testimony of accomplices as it would in a criminal trial under Pen C §1111. People v McGavock (1999) 69 CA4th 332, 81 CR2d 600.

I. Effect of Other Proceedings

§46.22 1. Acquittal or Dismissal; Appeal

Acquittal or dismissal. An acquittal or a dismissal of a criminal charge that is the underlying basis for a motion to revoke probation does not bar a probation revocation on those same facts. See In re Coughlin (1976) 16 C3d 52, 56, 127 CR 337 (probation revocation allowed on same facts as criminal trial acquittal); People v Ortiviz (1977) 74 CA3d 537, 541, 141 CR 483 (revocation allowed based on same facts as preliminary hearing discharge). The court can consider the factual issues de novo to determine whether a violation of probation occurred. People v Oritiviz, supra. Conversely, a finding that there was no violation of probation, when it had been alleged that the probationer had committed a crime, does not operate as collateral estoppel and thereby prevent a criminal case from proceeding. Lucido v Superior Court (1990) 51 C3d 335, 341, 272 CR 767.

Appeal. When a probationer appeals the judgment in the underlying case on which the probation revocation is based, and probation expires before the appeal is decided, the probationary period ends when probation expires unless some exception to that rule exists. In re Bakke (1986) 42 C3d 84, 89, 227 CR 663. After the appeal is decided, the probationer can be required to fulfill the conditions of probation that were stayed at his or her request, e.g., jail time. In re Bakke, supra. If, and to what extent, this rule applies to nonpenal conditions is unclear.

§46.23 2. Convictions

A conviction in a criminal case can provide the basis for probation revocation. The court can accept the conviction without having to relitigate the facts underlying the conviction. People v Sturgeon (1975) 53 CA3d 711, 713, 125 CR 903. The probationer, however, must be given the opportunity to show facts in mitigation. People v Sturgeon, supra.

Reversal of a criminal conviction that was the basis of a revocation does not necessarily warrant setting aside the revocation if a sufficient factual basis exists to find a violation of probation. In re Coughlin (1976) 16 C3d 52, 57, 127 CR 337.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.24 3. Preliminary Hearings and Trials in Felony Cases

A motion to revoke can be heard on the evidence presented at a preliminary hearing or trial as long as the notice of motion to revoke indicates that this is to occur. People v Mosley (1988) 198 CA3d 1167, 1174, 244 CR 264. However, if the preliminary hearing is conducted by the use of hearsay under Proposition 115, this would mean that only hearsay evidence would be presented. As discussed in §46.19, hearsay evidence is usually inadmissible at a probation revocation hearing. Even when a verdict of guilty has been rendered, the probationer has a right to be heard to explain himself or herself or to attempt to mitigate the effect of adverse evidence. People v Coleman (1975) 13 C3d 867, 895 n22, 120 CR 384. See also People v Avery (1986) 179 CA3d 1198, 1204, 225 CR 319.

Transcripts of trial proceedings or of preliminary hearings involving the probationer as a defendant cannot be introduced against the probationer at a probation revocation hearing unless the prosecution can demonstrate the declarant's unavailability or some other good cause for their admission. People v Arreola (1994) 7 C4th 1144, 31 CR2d 631. Good cause can include great cost, difficulty in bringing the declarant to court, or some risk of harm to the declarant's physical, emotional, or mental state. It is important that the trier of fact be able to observe the demeanor of witnesses and that the accused have the opportunity to cross-examine them. People v Arreola, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.25 4. Previous Revocation Hearing

A motion to revoke can be refiled on the same allegation, despite a previous dismissal, if no evidence was presented at the first hearing. People v Villines (1987) 192 CA3d 1298, 1305, 237 CR 868. If evidence was presented at the first hearing, a ruling in the defendant's favor should be res judicata or collateral estoppel at a second hearing on the same evidence. The outcome is unclear if the prosecution has new evidence to present at a subsequent hearing.

Motions to revoke can be made in different courts or different counties based on the same alleged violation. People v Bracey (1994) 21 CA4th 1532, 26 CR2d 730. Relitigation of the same facts under these circumstances does not violate double jeopardy protections or collateral estoppel principles. People v Bracey, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.26 J. Limited Immunity for Probationer's Testimony at Revocation Hearing

Frequently, a motion to revoke and a criminal charge are filed for the same underlying criminal act. If the motion to revoke is heard first, and the probationer testifies, the prosecution is prohibited from using that testimony in its case-in-chief at the later criminal trial. People v Coleman (1975) 13 C3d 867, 889, 120 CR 384. In other words, the probationer is granted limited immunity for testimony at the revocation hearing. This limited immunity survived the addition of the truth-in-evidence provision to the California Constitution (Cal Const art I, §28(f)(2)). People v Weaver (1985) 39 C3d 654, 660, 217 CR 245. The testimony can be used, however, to impeach the probationer at trial, e.g., in cross-examination about contradictions between testimony at the revocation hearing and at trial, or in rebuttal. 39 C3d at 658; People v Bracey (1994) 21 CA4th 1532, 26 CR2d 730.

The prosecution is not required to prove the identity of the accused as the probationer unless the accused raises that issue. The proper time to raise the identity issue is at the arraignment on the probation revocation. If the accused raises the issue of identity for the first time during the probation revocation hearing, the prosecution is entitled to a recess or a continuance. People v Perez (1994) 30 CA4th 900, 36 CR2d 391.

§46.27 K. Reliance on Probation Report

On a motion to revoke, the court must refer the matter to the probation department for a report. Pen C §1203.2(b). The court can base its ultimate sentencing decision on that report or on a showing comparable to or of equal gravity with the probation officer's report. Pen C §1203.2. See People v Santellanes (1989) 216 CA3d 998, 1002, 265 CR 281 (preliminary hearing transcript used). However, the probation report must be obtained, read, and considered before the probationer can be sentenced on the revocation. 216 CA3d at 1005.

L. Sentencing

§46.28 1. Importance of Type of Sentence in Underlying Case

If the court decides that probation should be revoked, the nature of the revocation sentence depends on the manner in which sentence was pronounced in the underlying case. When a person is originally placed on probation, the court sentences a defendant in one of two ways:

(1) The court does not impose any particular sentence (called "imposition of sentence suspended"; discussed in §46.29) but sets out the terms and conditions of probation, e.g.:

> Imposition of sentence is suspended, and the defendant is placed on probation for two years with the following terms and conditions: serve five months in the county jail, obey all laws, and do not use drugs or alcohol.

(2) Alternatively, the court imposes sentence but suspends its execution (called "execution of sentence suspended"; discussed in §46.30), e.g.:

> The defendant is sentenced to three years in state prison, but execution of sentence is suspended, with the defendant ordered to be on probation for three years with the following terms and conditions: obey all laws and do not use drugs or alcohol.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.29 2. Imposition of Sentence Suspended

When the imposition of sentence was suspended at the time a probationer was placed on probation, a court revoking probation must decide the sentence to be imposed. Pen C §1203.2(c).

In felony cases involving imposition of sentence suspended and a determinate sentence, the revocation judge must choose one of three possible prison terms: mitigated, middle, or aggravated. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.435. The court must base its choice on the circumstances that existed at the time probation was granted. Cal Rules of Ct 4.435(b)(1). The court is not allowed to consider subsequent events, including events surrounding the probation violation, in choosing the term or in ordering additional punishment for enhancements found to be true. Cal Rules of Ct 4.435(b)(1); People v Griffith (1984) 153 CA3d 796, 799, 200 CR 647. When imposition of sentence was suspended, the court must state reasons for a particular term. Cal Rules of Ct 4.433(c), 4.435(b)(1). But see People v Slaughter (1987) 194 CA3d 95, 98, 239 CR 337 (held opposite, but appears contrary to Rule 4.435(b)(1)).

A court that previously reinstated probation, and later revokes it, can consider events between the initial grant of probation and the reinstatement. People v Harris (1990) 226 CA3d 141, 145, 276 CR 41. See also People v Black (2009) 176 CA4th 145, 150, 97 CR3d 338 (Harris set forth exception to Cal Rules of Ct 4.435(b)(1) for revocation after reinstatement on probation). Further, a court in revoking probation and imposing sentence can consider the circumstances of the probation violation in deciding whether to run the term consecutively with another term. People v Leroy (1984) 155 CA3d 602, 605, 202 CR 88.

Sometimes a plea agreement will specify a maximum sentence, sometimes called a "lid" or a "backup sentence," that can be imposed if probation is not granted. If probation is granted and no sentence is imposed, it has been argued that Cal Rules of Ct 4.435(b)(1) limits the court that revokes probation to imposition of a sentence of no more than 2 years. However, the weight of authority is that the judge who sentences the defendant on revocation of probation is not bound by a lid stated by the original sentencing judge if imposition of sentence was suspended. See People v Hopson (1993) 13 CA4th 1, 16 CR2d 399; People v Martin (1992) 3 CA4th 482, 487, 4 CR2d 548.

When the trial court that initially places the defendant on probation imposes a specific sentence but suspends its execution, that exact sentence must be imposed if probation is revoked and the defendant is sentenced to prison. People v Howard (1997) 16 C4th 1081, 68 CR2d 870. However, under Pen C §1170(d), the trial court retains the power to recall any prison sentence within 120 days after imposing it and to sentence the defendant to a lesser term. 16 C4th at 1087.

While the court that imposes but suspends execution of a sentence retains the authority to modify the sentence at any time before a defendant is rearrested on a probation violation (Pen C §1203.2(a); People v Howard (1997) 16 C4th 1081, 1092, 68 CR2d 870; see also People v Karaman (1992) 4 C4th 335, 14 CR2d 801), if a rearrest occurs and the court had previously imposed prison, the court lacks such authority and must allow the full force of the sentence to take effect. People v Howard, supra. The court has no authority to modify that sentence at the time probation is revoked if prison is imposed. People v Colado (1995) 32 CA4th 260, 38 CR2d 57. However, if the sentence was unauthorized, the trial court can order execution of the correct sentence, even if it results in a longer or shorter sentence than previously imposed. In re Renfrow (2008) 164 CA4th 1251, 1253, 79 CR3d 898 (execution of enhancement proper even though court had neglected to impose or strike it when sentence suspended). Because the court has no choice of sentence, it does not have to state reasons for the choice of term in felony cases. People v Latham (1988) 206 CA3d 27, 253 CR 379; People v Cushway (1987) 193 CA3d 776, 238 CR 527; People v Chagolla (1984) 151 CA3d 1045, 1050, 199 CR 181.

Under Pen C §1170(d), the trial court retains the power to recall any prison sentence within 120 days after imposing it and to sentence the defendant to a lesser term. People v Howard (1997) 16 C4th 1081, 1087, 68 CR2d 870. The imposition of the previously imposed but suspended prison term is required only if the court actually imposes prison after the revocation of probation. The trial court retains the power to reinstate probation after revoking it. People v Medina (2001) 89 CA4th 318, 106 CR2d 895. If the court does reinstate probation, the court may modify the terms of probation. People v Medina, supra. In People v Ramirez (2008) 159 CA4th 1412, 1417, 72 CR3d 340, the court reinstated probation but increased the previously imposed but suspended prison sentence. The appellate court held that though the lower court had exceeded its jurisdiction by modifying the suspended sentence, the defendant could not complain when it was later executed because he had agreed to the increased penalty as part of a plea bargain and he had never appealed the imposition of the increased sentence. Also, in In re Renfrow, supra, the court ruled that on a finding of a violation of probation, the trial court did have to power to impose a greater sentence than the one imposed initially, when the initially imposed sentence was actually unauthorized by law. 164 CA4th at 1256.

§46.31 4. Possible Outcomes of Motions to Revoke

After hearing a motion to revoke, a court has several options. It can:

- Revoke probation and sentence the probationer; sentence may be limited by the original sentencing order in the underlying case (see §§46.28-46.30). Pen C §1203.2(a)-(c).
- Reinstate probation on the same terms and conditions. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.435(a) (court may make any disposition of case authorized by statute).
- Reinstate probation and impose new conditions the court feels are appropriate, e.g., additional fines, community service, additional term of probation, or jail. Pen C §1203.2(b).

The maximum length of probation is discussed in §§38.26-38.28. The time probation was tolled is not counted for this purpose. Pen C §1203a. Tolling is discussed in §46.11.

In a felony case, if the probationer has already served the maximum amount of time in county jail (i.e., 1 year), the court, on the probationer's stipulation, can order additional time in county jail instead of sentencing the defendant to state prison, as would otherwise be required. People v Johnson (2002) 28 C4th 1050, 123 CR2d 700; People v Johnson (1978) 82 CA3d 183, 188, 147 CR 55. The probationer must stipulate to a waiver of the credit-for-time-served provisions of Pen C §2900.5. People v Johnson (2002) 28 C4th 1050, 123 CR2d 700; People v Johnson (1978) 82 CA3d 183, 188, 147 CR 55.

§46.32 5. Inability to Pay

The defendant's failure to pay a fine or restitution, when the failure results solely from an inability to pay, cannot be the basis for a probation revocation. Pen C §§1203.2(a), 1214.2; People v Cookson (1991) 54 C3d 1091, 1096, 2 CR2d 176; In re Antazo (1970) 3 C3d 100, 89 CR 255; People v Medeiros (1994) 25 CA4th 1260, 31 CR2d 83; People v Self (1991) 233 CA3d 414, 284 CR 458; Bearden v Georgia (1983) 461 US 660, 76 L Ed 2d 221, 103 S Ct 2064.

Probation can be extended for nonwillful failure to pay restitution in order to allow a longer period in which to complete payment, even though no violation of probation has occurred, when the probationer's inability to pay results from a change of circumstances. People v Cookson (1991) 54 C3d 1091, 1098, 2 CR2d 176. The change of circumstances must be some fact not known at the time probation was granted. People v Cookson, supra. Of course, no modification of probation can extend the probationary period beyond the maximum period allowable for the underlying offense. 54 C3d at 1094 n2.

> Ø Note: If a probationer wishes to admit the facts underlying a motion to revoke probation, the court does not have to give a Boykin-Tahl admonition setting forth the specific rights that the probationer would be giving up. People v Clark (1996) 51 CA4th 575, 581, 59 CR2d 234. See Boykin v Alabama (1969) 395 US 238, 23 L Ed 2d 274, 89 S Ct 1709; In re Tahl (1969) 1 C3d 122, 81 CR 577. For discussion of Boykin-Tahl rights, see §§26.10-26.11.

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/46 PROBATION REVOCATIONS/§46.33 6. Credit for Time Served

§46.33 6. Credit for Time Served

When probation is revoked, the court must credit any time served as a condition of probation and any time served awaiting the hearing on the motion to revoke toward the term the probationer is ordered to serve. See Pen C §2900.5(a), (c). The probationer is also entitled to custody credits for time spent in a residential rehabilitation program as a condition of his or her Proposition 36 probation. People v Davenport (2007) 148 CA4th 240, 55 CR3d 473. Difficulties arise when a probationer has been held on both a probation hold and a criminal charge and seeks credit against each term. Penal Code §2900.5(b) states (in pertinent part):

> [C]redit shall be given only where the custody to be credited is attributable to proceedings related to the same conduct for which the defendant has been convicted. Credit shall be given only once for a single period of custody attributable to multiple offenses for which a consecutive sentence is imposed.

When the probationer seeks credit against both a sentence on a new crime and on a probation violation, the court must apply the supreme court's interpretation of §2900.5(b) (In re Joyner (1989) 48 C3d 487, 489, 256 CR 785):

> [A] period of time previously credited against a sentence for unrelated offenses cannot be deemed "attributable to proceedings" resulting in a later-imposed sentence unless it is demonstrated that the claimant would have been at liberty during the period were it not for a restraint relating to the proceedings resulting in the later sentence. In other words, duplicative credits against separately imposed concurrent sentences for unrelated offenses will be granted only on a showing of strict causation.

- Note: Joyner does not prohibit concurrent time when it is part of a plea bargain.

The following are some of the cases that have applied Joyner to parole and probation revocation cases:

- In re Bustos (1992) 4 CA4th 851, 855, 5 CR2d 767: The defendant in his new criminal conviction sought credit for time served for time spent in custody on a parole hold initially based on his failure to report. The trial court denied presentence credit because the parole hold was lodged independently of the charge on which he was convicted. The court of appeal agreed: "The arrest warrant issued by the Board of Prison Terms was done by reason of the defendant's failure to report to his parole office. Even though the defendant's parole revocation proceedings may have been premised in part upon the new charge, when the strict causation test of Joyner is applied, defendant failed to sustain his burden of proving he is entitled to duplicative credits."
- In re Nickles (1991) 231 CA3d 415, 417, 282 CR 411: The defendant was arrested on new criminal charges. His parole was revoked based on those charges and also on administrative violations unrelated to the new criminal case. When the defendant was sentenced on the new case, no credit was given for the parole revocation term. The court stated: "We will hold that, where a defendant's presentence custody arises from conduct which is only partially attributable to the conduct for which he was convicted and sentenced, he has the burden of proving entitlement to credit therefor. That burden was not discharged in this case."
- People v Huff (1990) 223 CA3d 1100, 1106, 273 CR 44: A probationer was arrested on warrants and later on a new criminal charge. He was held in custody, unable to make bail. After prosecution on the new charge was begun, a motion to revoke was filed against him based on the facts of the new charge. He was remanded without bail on the motion to revoke. The new criminal case was later dismissed, but probation was still revoked. The court held that the probationer was entitled to credit from the time he was remanded to custody on the motion to revoke even though he was already in custody on the new case. The court stated: "During that period, appellant was held without bail and could not have secured his release even if he had made bail on the new case. [A]ppellant satisfies the strict causation test of Joyner." See also People v Pruitt (2008) 161 CA4th 637, 649, 74 CR3d 368 (Huff still good law; defendant not entitled to credit against probation revocation sentence for time spent in jail between arrest on new charges and summary revocation of probation, despite fact that new charges, which also formed basis for probation violation, were ultimately dismissed). But see In re Marquez (2003) 30 C4th 14, 27, 131 CR2d 911 (Moreno, J., concurring; Huff is incorrect in light of People v Bruner (1995) 9 C4th 1178, 40 CR2d 534).

- People v Gibbs (1991) 228 CA3d 420, 421, 278 CR 338: A probationer was given duplicative credits in a probation revocation and new criminal case for time spent undergoing diagnostic evaluation under Pen C §1203.3 in the new case. The court reasoned that the probation revocation and sentence were based on the diagnostic evaluation recommendation and that "there is no counterpart to Section 2900.5 subdivision (b) in Section 1203.03."

When a defendant waives time-served credits on a probation violation to permit a county jail sentence instead of prison, and the defendant then violates probation again, he or she does not get credit for credits previously waived if that waiver was knowing and intelligent. People v Arnold (2004) 33 C4th 294, 308, 14 CR3d 840; see People v Burks (1998) 66 CA4th 232, 77 CR2d 698; People v Salazar (1994) 29 CA4th 1550, 35 CR2d 221. The same is true when the defendant made a knowing and intelligent waiver of future credits to be earned in a residential drug treatment program. People v Jeffrey (2004) 33 C4th 312, 14 CR3d 852.

The sentencing court should expressly admonish a defendant waiving custody credits that the waiver will apply to any future prison term if probation is subsequently revoked and a prison sentence imposed. People v Arnold (2004) 33 C4th 294, 309, 14 CR3d 840.

Ø Note: It may be that a defendant can limit the waiver of credits at the time of the waiver, indicating that the waiver applies only to the time imposed on the new grant of probation, not against any ultimate prison sentence. 33 C4th at 311 (Kennard, J., concurring). However, when a defendant waived his credits and failed to limit the waiver, the credits were waived with respect to an eventual state prison sentence. People v Hilger (2005) 131 CA4th 1528, 33 CR3d 135.

§46.34 7. Written Findings

Although the court should state the reasons for its determination and indicate the evidence relied on, formal findings of fact and conclusions of law are not required. Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 92 S Ct 2593; People v Vickers (1972) 8 C3d 451, 456, 105 CR 305. For example, a written statement of reasons for revocation was not required when the court had stated its reasons on the record, and they were in the transcript. People v Ruiz (1975) 53 CA3d 715, 125 CR 886.

§46.35 M. Setting Aside Revocation Order

If probation has been revoked but judgment has not been pronounced, the court on motion can set aside the order revoking probation for good cause. Pen C §1203.2(e). After judgment has been pronounced, the court may set aside the order for good cause within 30 calendar days after the court has notice that execution of sentence has begun. Pen C §1203.2(e).

If an order revoking probation is set aside after the expiration of the probationary term, the trial court "may again place the person on probation for that period and with those terms and conditions as it could have done immediately following conviction." Pen C §1203.2(e). In People v Jackson (2005) 134 CA4th 929, 36 CR3d 477, however, the appellate court ruled that probation could not expire while probation was revoked. Therefore, in most circumstances, on a reinstitution of probation, the court cannot extend probation under Pen C §1203.2(e). 134 CA4th at 937. The opinion implies but does not state that the defendant can waive this limitation, which might be in the defendant's best interest if the alternative is a prison sentence. However, with respect to the defendant in Jackson, the court stated that the probationary period had expired while the case was on appeal, and therefore the trial court would have jurisdiction to impose a new period of probation upon a finding that the defendant had violated probation.

VIII. PROPOSITION 36

§46.36 A. General Provisions: Drug Treatment for Nonviolent Drug Offenders

Proposition 36, enacted by voters at the November 7, 2000, general election and effective July 1, 2001, mandates drug treatment rather than prison for the vast majority of nonviolent drug offenders. Among the many provisions added by its enactment is Pen C §1210.1, which (1) drastically curtails the court's discretion to impose a jail term or a prison sentence for an individual convicted of a nonviolent drug possession offense, and (2) dramatically changes probation revocation proceedings for individuals placed on probation for such offenses.

Ø Note: In 2006, the legislature purportedly amended Proposition 36 in various ways, including permitting judges to incarcerate offenders for brief periods of time, called "flash incarceration." These amendments have been struck down as inconsistent with the initiative that enacted Proposition 36. See Gardner v Schwarzenegger (2009) 178 CA4th 1366, 101 CR3d 229. The references in this chapter to Pen C §1210.1 are to the pre-amendment version.

With certain exceptions set forth in Pen C §1210.1(b), under Pen C §1210.1(a), when an individual is convicted of a nonviolent drug possession offense (NOVIDPO), the court must suspend the imposition of sentence, grant probation, and require the defendant to participate in and complete an appropriate drug treatment program as a condition of probation.

The probation revocation procedures of Proposition 36 apply not only to defendants convicted of drug-related offenses after July 1, 2001, but also to defendants already on probation on July 1, 2001, who violate probation after the effective date of the provision. See §46.38.

Unless a showing of danger or flight is made, a defendant on Proposition 36 drug program probation has a right to release pending a hearing on a violation of that probation, when the result of any revocation will be reinstatement on Proposition 36 probation. In re Mehdizadeh (2003) 105 CA4th 995, 130 CR2d 98. See also §46.7.

The probation revocation procedures of Proposition 36 apply only when the probationer commits a drug-related probation violation or offense. If a defendant, even one already on probation for a NOVIDPO, commits a violation of probation that does not involve a drug-related condition of probation or the commission of a new NOVIDPO, the usual rules for probation revocations apply. Pen C §1210.1(e)(2), (e)(3)(D)-(F); In re Taylor (2003) 105 CA4th 1394, 130 CR2d 554.

Note that the trial court may not bargain with the defendant by agreeing to inappropriate treatment in exchange for a predetermined sentence on a probation violation. People v Campbell (2004) 119 CA4th 1279, 15 CR3d 188. Here, after the defendant's second drug-related violation of probation, the trial court, despite its better judgment, agreed to defendant's request to participate in outpatient drug treatment instead of inpatient drug treatment, in exchange for the defendant's agreement that any probation violation would result in imposition of the upper term. This was an illegal bargain. 119 CA4th at 1289. Compare Campbell with People v Sizemore (2009) 175 CA4th 864, 96 CR3d 638 (given defendant's record and desire to "opt out," trial court properly removed him from Proposition 36 program and, following violation of "regular" felony probation, properly sentenced him to prison term).

A detailed discussion of the provisions of Proposition 36 may be found at Menaster, Prop. 36 Manual (2001). On a defendant's initial eligibility for Proposition 36 probation, see §38.3A.

Ø Note: As a result of California's budget crisis, funding for Proposition 36 has been greatly curtailed. Therefore, many programs will be unable to provide treatment for defendants on Proposition 36 probation. This raises the issue of whether a defendant may be found in violation of Proposition 36 probation for conduct that occurred because the defendant was not in treatment as required by the initiative. Defense counsel should argue that the failure of the system to provide proper resources precludes a finding that the defendant has failed on Proposition 36 probation, and that any claimed violation of probation was not willful in light of the lack of treatment.

§46.37 B. Proposition 36 Probation

Proposition 36 sets up a three-tier system for probation violations, with different rules and standards, depending on whether the violation is the first, second, or third violation of probation under Proposition 36. The scheme bars a court from revoking probation on the first or second probation violation for a defendant on Proposition 36 probation, absent the showings of dangerousness or unamenability found in Pen C §1210.1(e)(3). A court does not have discretion to incarcerate a defendant on Proposition 36 probation for the first violation solely on the basis that the defendant is unamenable. People v Davis (2003) 104 CA4th 1443, 129 CR2d 48; People v Murillo (2002) 102 CA4th 1414, 126 CR2d 358.

The rules governing Proposition 36 probation violations apply only if the defendant was initially convicted solely on a nonviolent drug possession offense (NOVIDPO). People v Goldberg (2003) 105 CA4th 1202, 130 CR2d 192.

First violation. The first time a person on Proposition 36 probation violates probation, either by commission of a new NOVIDPO or by violation of a drug-related condition of probation, the court must keep the probationer on probation unless the violation is proved, and the state proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is a danger to the safety of others. Pen C §1210.1(e)(3)(A).

The court may modify the conditions of probation and may intensify or alter the Proposition 36 treatment program. If dangerousness is proved, the court must revoke probation and sentence the defendant outside of Proposition 36. Pen C §1210.1(e)(3)(A).

Second violation. For the second violation, either by commission of a new NOVIDPO or by violation of a drug-related condition of probation, the court must keep the probationer on Proposition 36 probation unless the violation is proved, and the state proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is a danger to the safety of others or that the defendant is not amenable to drug treatment. Pen C §1210.1(e)(3)(B).

The court may intensify or alter the Proposition 36 treatment program. Pen C §1210.1(e)(3)(B). If such dangerousness or unamenability is proved, the court must revoke probation and sentence the defendant outside of Proposition 36. Pen C §1210.1(e)(3)(B).

Third violation. For the third violation of Proposition 36 probation, either by commission of a new NOVIDPO or by violation of a drug-related condition of probation, the court must revoke probation and sentence the defendant outside of Proposition 36 on proof of the violation. Pen C §1210.1(e)(3)(C). Even after the court terminates Proposition 36 probation, the court retains the power to grant probation and order a drug program.

The statutory scheme contemplates that each established violation will result in a revocation of probation, with the defendant having three chances to reform before losing eligibility for Proposition 36 probation. People v Tanner (2005) 129 CA4th 223, 235, 28 CR3d 201. In Tanner, the Fourth District held that the court may not simply add up the number of violations pending before it to make a probation revocation a second or third revocation. There must be a separate noticed hearing for each claimed revocation; the statutory scheme requires three noticed motions to revoke Proposition 36 probation before the court may revoke probation solely on the basis of drug-related violations. 129 CA4th at 234.

However, the Third District, not citing Tanner, has ruled that separate hearings are not required; the court may hold a consolidated single hearing on a defendant charged with multiple probation violations of Proposition 36, find several violations, and terminate Proposition 36 probation. People v Budwiser (2006) 140 CA4th 105, 109, 44 CR3d 296.

These cases are in conflict. However, it appears that the Budwiser decision fails to focus on language in Pen C §1210.1(e)(3)(A)-(C) requiring a separate noticed motion for each probation revocation. See Pen C §§1210.1(e)(3)(B) (if "the state moves for a second time to revoke probation"), 1210.1(e)(3)(C) (if "the state moves for a third time to revoke probation"); Tanner, 129 CA4th at 234. On the basis of this language, the Tanner court concluded that the statutory scheme is designed to ensure that a defendant found to have violated probation by committing a NOVIDPO or violating a drug-related probation condition is given three separate chances to reform. 129 CA4th at 235. A consolidated hearing in which several violations are found at one time eliminates these extra chances, and is therefore contrary to the statutory scheme. A consolidated hearing would be permissible so long as the outcome was only a single probation revocation.

However, a subsequent Third District opinion holds that when no notice of one petition is given before the conduct underlying the next petition occurs, although a consolidated hearing on the two petitions may be proper, it would be improper to treat the circumstances as if the prosecution had made separate noticed motions. People v Hazle (2007) 157 CA4th 567, 577, 69 CR3d 16. When the facts relied on for the third violation happened before the second probation revocation petition was filed, this qualified only as a second violation, not both a second and third. Likewise, separately filed petitions must be treated as a single motion to revoke probation (thus permitting the defendant additional chances at probation and drug treatment) when the defendant is not on notice of a previously filed petition at the time of the conduct giving rise to a subsequently filed petition. People v Enriquez (2008) 160 CA4th 230, 233, 72 CR3d 718.

§46.38 C. Defendants on Probation July 1, 2001

Proposition 36 also sets up a three-tier system for dealing with probation violations for individuals on probation on July 1, 2001, after conviction of a nonviolent drug possession offense (NOVIDPO) before that date. Pen C §1210.1(e)(3)(D)-(F). Probation revocation procedures under Pen C §1210.1(e)(3)(D)-(F) are substantially similar to procedures under Pen C §1210.1(e)(3)(A)-(C). See §46.37. A defendant on probation for a NOVIDPO that occurred before July 1, 2001, who violates a drug-related condition of probation or commits a new NOVIDPO on or after that date, comes under Proposition 36. People v Williams (2003) 106 CA4th 694, 131 CR2d 546. However, the court must count pre-Proposition 36 probation violations in the three-tier system described in §46.37. People v Williams, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§46.39 D. Probation Violation Proceedings Initiated by Probation Department

Proposition 36 also permits the probation department to seek to modify or revoke probation. Under Pen C §1210.1(c)(1), the treatment provider may, at any point during the course of drug treatment, notify the probation department that the defendant is unamenable to the treatment being provided but may be amenable to other treatment; the probation department may then move the court to modify probation. Under Pen C §1210.1(c)(2), the treatment provider may, at any point during the course of drug treatment, notify the probation department that the defendant is unamenable to any treatment; the probation department may then move the court to revoke probation.

§46.40 E. What Qualifies as Drug-Related Condition of Probation?

When a defendant who is on Proposition 36 probation (or who is eligible for Proposition 36 probation because he or she is already on probation for a nonviolent drug possession offense (NOVIDPO) committed before July 1, 2001 (see §46.38)) commits a new NOVIDPO or violates a "drug-related condition of probation," the court's options for dealing with the violation are governed by the three-tiered probation violation scheme described in §46.37. Pen C §1210.1(e)(3).

Examples of drug-related probation violations include failure to appear for drug testing (In re Taylor (2003) 105 CA4th 1394, 130 CR2d 554), failure to participate in drug-treatment counseling (People v Atwood (2003) 110 CA4th 805, 2 CR3d 67), and failure to report to a mental health "gatekeeper" for an initial evaluation (People v Dagostino (2004) 117 CA4th 974, 995, 12 CR3d 223).

In Atwood, the Third District Court of Appeal held that failure to follow the probation officer's orders may or may not be drug related, depending on the circumstances. 110 CA4th at 810. The court further held that the burden of establishing that a probation violation is not drug related rests with the prosecution. 110 CA4th at 811. The First District Court of Appeal in People v Goldberg (2003) 105 CA4th 1202, 1209, 130 CR2d 192, stated in dictum that a general condition of probation requiring a defendant to report to a probation officer is a not a drug-related condition. In light of Atwood, which relied on firmly established evidentiary principles (see Evid C §§500, 550), there should not be a rigid rule; the reason the defendant was ordered to personally report to a probation officer should establish whether that condition is drug related. See, e.g., People v Johnson (2003) 114 CA4th 284, 298, 7 CR3d 492 (under facts, failure to report was violation of non-drug-related condition). A probation condition requiring the defendant to report by mail has been held to be not drug related, because it could not involve testing and nothing about reporting by mail was related to the defendant's drug problems or treatment. People v Dixon (2003) 113 CA4th 146, 152, 5 CR3d 917.

§46.41 F. Defendants on Probation for Non-NOVIDPOs

Although an individual who commits a nonviolent drug possession offense (NOVIDPO) while on parole for a nonserious, nonviolent felony is eligible for the benefits of Proposition 36 (see Pen C §3063.1), the act is silent on whether its three-tiered probation violation scheme applies to a defendant who commits a NOVIDPO while on probation for a nonserious, nonviolent offense that is not a NOVIDPO. The California Supreme Court has ruled that Proposition 36 does not apply to the prior probation grant. Therefore, a trial court may use the NOVIDPO as a ground for violating the defendant's probation on the non-drug-related offense and order execution of the previously suspended prison term for that offense. People v Guzman (2005) 35 C4th 577, 25 CR3d 761 (rejecting argument that equal protection requires probationers to be treated in the same way as parolees, who are eligible for Proposition 36 drug treatment under similar circumstances).

Ø Note: A defendant on parole when charged with a NOVIDPO is not automatically disqualified from Proposition 36, because a defendant on parole will not necessarily return to prison. See, e.g., Pen C §3000.03. If a defendant on parole is placed in Proposition 36 treatment and subsequently parole is revoked and the defendant is sent back to prison, he or she is then unavailable for drug treatment. People v Muldrow (2006) 144 CA4th 1038, 1048, 50 CR3d 848. The court would then vacate the Proposition 36 order.

§47.1 A. Parole Defined

Being on parole is the transitional legal status of all prisoners on release from a California prison after serving their sentence. Pen C §3000. Prisoners on parole include both determinately sentenced prisoners and indeterminately sentenced prisoners serving a sentence of life with the possibility of parole. Pen C §3000.

The purpose of parole is to provide a period of transition after incarceration to allow the former inmate to become reintegrated into the community. The object of parole is to mitigate the rigor of the prison system by replacing continued incarceration with a conditional freedom controlled by a series of parole conditions and supervision by a parole agent. See Pen C §3056; People v Denne (1956) 141 CA2d 499, 507, 297 P2d 451. Parole should entail not only effective supervision and surveillance, including the judicious use of revocation actions, but also should include educational, vocational, family, and personal counseling necessary to assist parolees in this process. Pen C §3000(a)(1). The three most important goals of the parole process are public safety, reintegration of the parolee back into society, and making parole decisions that are fiscally responsible on behalf of the people of California. See, e.g., Pen C §3000(a).

All prison sentences must include a period of parole unless waived by the parole authority, the Board of Parole Hearings, for good cause. Pen C §3000(a)(1), (b). Parole is an additional penal consequence of conviction, and if a prisoner is not advised of the parole requirement before his or her guilty plea, he or she may withdraw the plea on a showing of prejudice, i.e., but for the error the defendant would not have entered the plea (In re Moser (1993) 6 C4th 342, 24 CR2d 723), or be relieved of the parole requirement when the sentence already served exceeds the bargained-for sentence (Carter v McCarthy (9th Cir 1986) 806 F2d 1373, 1377).

§47.1A B. Distinction Between Parole Revocation and Life Parole Consideration Hearings

The focus of this chapter is on the procedures used and counsel's role in two types of hearings: parole revocation and life parole consideration. These two types of hearings are very different.

Parole revocation determinations. Parole revocation and parole revocation extension proceedings (15 Cal Code Regs §§2600-2744) are evidentiary hearings. The Division of Adult Parole Operations (DAPO) begins the proceedings by writing a revocation report charging a parolee with specific violations of parole. The violation report is packaged with other information concerning the parolee and presented to a deputy commissioner (DC) for evaluation. The DC has the authority to dismiss, amend, or add charges on the basis of the information provided. If the DC sustains the charges, the revocation process proceeds through three stages: the return to custody assessment (RTCA) offer, the probable cause hearing (PCH), and finally the revocation or extension hearing.

At revocation and revocation extension hearings, the DAPO is required to prove the charges by a preponderance of the evidence using relevant evidence, including witness testimony. People v Rodriguez (1990) 51 C3d 437, 441, 272 CR 613. Hearsay evidence may be used. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2665. The use of hearsay testimony is limited by the parolee's right to confrontation as set forth under U.S. v Comito (9th Cir 1999) 177 F3d 1166. U.S. v Hall (9th Cir 2005) 419 F3d 980, 986; People v Stanphill (2009) 170 CA4th 61, 78, 87 CR3d 643; Valdivia Injunction §24 (discussed in §47.1B). The parolee, through counsel, has the right to present a defense, including subpoenaing witnesses and documents, to the same extent and under the same terms as the state. Valdivia Injunction §21.

If good cause is not found, the charges are dismissed and the parolee continues on parole. If good cause is found on any charge, the hearing reconvenes for the disposition phase on the issue of what sanction, if any, the Board of Parole Hearings (BPH) should impose on the parolee. In determining the appropriate sanction, the BPH should remain mindful of the goals of parole, as well as take into consideration the parolee's criminal history, the parolee's adjustment on parole, and the gravity and circumstances of the instant violation.

Life parole suitability determinations. Life parole consideration (suitability) hearings (15 Cal Code Regs §§2268-2329, 2400-2439.1) are very different from those outlined above. The issue is whether the prisoner, who has been sentenced to life in prison with the possibility of parole, should be released from custody. The standard is whether or not there is some evidence that the inmate is a current danger if released to society. The BPH examines the commitment offense, prior criminal and social history, the prison disciplinary record, the prisoner's programming while incarcerated, psychological reports, confidential information, and input from the public. The prisoner attempts to persuade the panel that he or she is suitable by testifying and presenting documents. The prisoner is in turn questioned by the hearing panel, the district attorney, and his or her own attorney. Finally, the district attorney, the prisoner's attorney, and the prisoner make closing statements. Thereafter, a victim or next of kin of a victim may make an oral statement, or submit an audio- or videotaped statement, about the crime and its impact. In addition, any member of the public may submit a letter to the BPH on the issue of whether the prisoner should be paroled, and it must be considered by the hearing panel. The decision of the hearing panel is subject to very limited judicial review. A life inmate may file a writ asking the appellate court to review any denial; however, the board's decision will be upheld if it is based on pertinent criteria and is supported by some evidence. The Governor has the right to review all decisions (Pen C §3041.1), but as a practical matter, the Governor reviews only grants of parole. In murder cases, the Governor has the discretion to reverse the decision and, in other cases, can ask that the BPH reconsider the matter "en banc." On the limits of judicial review of BPH decisions in life parole suitability hearings, see In re Dannenberg (2005) 34 C4th 1061, 23 CR3d 417; In re Lawrence (2008) 44 C4th 1181, 82 CR3d 169; In re Shaputis (2008) 44 C4th 1241, 82 CR3d 213. If the prisoner is found suitable, a term of confinement based on the commitment offense(s) and other factors is determined in accord with BPH regulations.

§47.1B C. Parole Revocation Reform

In Valdivia v Davis (ED Cal 2002) 206 F Supp 2d 1068, a federal district court judge found that California's unitary parole revocation procedure violates due process. On March 17, 2004, Judge Lawrence K. Karlton signed a stipulated order for permanent injunctive relief in the case (now titled Valdivia v Schwarzenegger (ED Cal Civ S-94-0671)), which calls for substantial reforms in California's parole revocation procedures. These reforms are outlined below. The order itself is unpublished, but a copy is available on the Prison Law Office's website at http://www.prisonlaw.com/pdfs/Val.pdf. This chapter contains numerous citations to this order (hereafter Valdivia Injunction). For further discussion of Valdivia, see §§47.10-47.11.

Determining the state of the law, including the Board of Parole Hearing's current policy, is sometimes difficult because agreements made between the parties under the Valdivia Injunction have not been incorporated into regulations. Existing regulations have yet to be amended to reflect the changes brought about by Valdivia. The BPH negotiates all policies and procedures related to the revocation process with Valdivia plaintiffs' counsel before implementation. Valdivia Injunction §§10-11. The agreements made pursuant to the Valdivia Injunction have the force of law in that the entire revocation process is under the jurisdiction of the federal court. The BPH implements these agreed-on policies and procedures, some of which conflict directly with the BPH's regulations, by issuing memoranda to its Deputy Commissioners and support staff. Disagreements between the state and plaintiffs' counsel undergo litigation, and the BPH implements the resultant court orders also by memoranda. In addition to memoranda, the BPH has issued a Deputy Commissioner Manual that includes resource documents stating the BPH's policy regarding the revocation process. While the BPH must adhere to these agreements for compliance with the Valdivia Injunction, the memoranda and the DC Manual, themselves, amount to underground regulations according to Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v Bradshaw (1996) 14 C4th 557, 570, 59 CR2d 186. The BPH has no legal authority to issue, utilize, enforce, or attempt to enforce any guideline, criterion, bulletin, manual, instruction, order, standard of general application, or other rule that is a regulation as defined in Govt C §11342.600 unless it has been adopted as a regulation and filed with the Secretary of State pursuant to Govt C §11340.5. Govt C §11340.5. See also Tidewater, 14 C4th at 570. As a practical matter, however, the BPH does enforce the policies issued through memoranda, and the practitioner needs to be familiar with them in order to effectively represent parolees.

Any citation in this chapter to Title 15 of the California Code of Regulations, the regulations that govern the BPH, should be carefully compared with the Valdivia Injunction and any memoranda issued by the BPH to confirm the state of the law. Also, in addition to implementing the Valdivia Injunction, the BPH is contemplating some major changes to its parole revocation regulations. Counsel should be diligent in substantiating the legal bases for any procedural rule enunciated by a Deputy Commissioner in a revocation hearing.

§47.1C D. Parole Violation Decision-Making Instrument (PVDMI)

As part of the parole reform effort and in relation to the Stipulation and Order Regarding Remedial Sanctions (April 2007) in the Valdivia litigation, CDCR enlisted the Center for Evidence-Based Public Policy to design a predictive tool, called the "Parole Violation Decision Making Instrument" (PVDMI). The PVDMI is a guide for determining appropriate dispositions for parole violations. Effective January 26, 2010, the CDCR is required to use a parole violation decision-making instrument for the parole revocation process as part of the Parole Reentry Accountability Program. Pen C §3015(b). The purpose of the PVDMI is to provide uniformity and predictability to the revocation process.

For all violations of parole, DAPO's parole agents enter the alleged violations into the PVDMI, which assesses the parolee's risk level on the basis of a severity index using the California Static Risk Assessment (CSRA) in combination with the alleged violations. The PVDMI, acting as an actuarial, determines the "appropriate" response level. The PVDMI contains five levels of response ranging from increased supervision to incarceration (found in section "F" of the multipage PVDMI documentation submitted with every parole violation packet to the BPH).

Penal Code §3015(b)(1) requires the PVDMI to consider the relevant case factors, including the risk of reoffense based on a validated risk assessment tool and prior parole violations. The PVDMI currently used by CDCR does not evaluate the violation history of the parolee during the current term, arguably the most relevant data related to current risk to public safety. Neither the CSRA nor the PVDMI has been validated in the California parole population, although the PVDMI is currently being studied. The PVDMI relies on the original violations alleged by DAPO and does not make adjustments for the actual violations determined after adjudication by the BPH. Deputy Commissioners consider the PVDMI recommendations and other recommendations made by DAPO, and follow the guidelines found in 15 Cal Code Regs §2646.1 in issuing dispositional decisions. Counsel should argue the strengths or limitations of the PVDMI, depending on the benefit to his or her client.

§47.1D E. Restructuring of State Correctional System

The entire system of state corrections underwent a radical reorganization in 2005. See Stats 2005, ch 10. The reorganization brought all of the entities that affect prisoners and parolees under the auspices of one state agency, called California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR). As of July 1, 2005, the Board of Prison Terms, previously an independent agency that conducted parole suitability and parole revocation hearings, was renamed the Board of Parole Hearings (BPH) and made a part of the new Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation. The Division of Adult Parole Operations (DAPO), which brings parole violation charges, and the Division of Adult Institutions (DAI), which incarcerates parolees, are also part of the CDCR. See Stats 2005, ch 10.

Under the new structure, a single agency, the CDCR, alleges violations of parole, and also makes determinations about the legitimacy of those alleged violations. Parolees have a right to "neutral and detached" hearing officers. Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 488, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 498, 92 S Ct 2593. Entrusting both the charging function and the adjudicatory function to the same agency arguably creates the potential for competing interests and an appearance of impropriety.

Ø Note: On November 4, 2008, the voters passed Proposition 9 (Marsy's Law) which, among other things, added Pen C §3044. Section 3044 provides for the protection of victims' rights during the parole process and sets out the procedural rights of a parolee after revocation of parole. On March 26, 2009, the District Court for the Eastern District of California granted a motion to enforce the Valdivia Injunction and declared that to the extent that the Valdivia Injunction conflicted with Pen C §3044, the Injunction superseded Pen C §3044. Valdivia v Schwarzenegger (2009) 603 F Supp 2d 1275. The BPH appealed the order, and on January 11, 2010, oral argument was presented before the Ninth Circuit Court. Penal Code §3044(b) calls for the Board's autonomy from the CDCR but has yet to be implemented by the CDCR.

§47.1E F. Law Governing Parole Hearings

Parole hearings are unique. While most practitioners consider parole hearings administrative, the procedural rules that normally govern how an administrative hearing is to be conducted do not apply to parole hearings. Pen C §3066. Nonetheless, Title 15 of the California Code of Regulations, the regulations governing the BPH, must go through the usual approval processes. Pen C §5076.2(a); American Friends Serv. Comm. v Procunier (1973) 33 CA3d 252, 269, 109 CR 22, disapproved on other grounds in Engelmann v State Bd. of Educ. (1991) 2 CA4th 47, 59, 3 CR2d 264. See Pen C §5076.2. But see §47.1B. Although the Penal Code applies to the extent that it specifically addresses parole matters and provides the basis for the elements of a crime when a parolee violates parole by committing a crime, the proceedings are not considered criminal. Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 489, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 499, 92 S Ct 2593; In re Carroll (1978) 80 CA3d 22, 30, 145 CR 334. Attorneys practicing in this area should be aware that the body of law that addresses parole matters is not well developed and consists of case law, of which there is little, a few specific references in the Penal Code (Part 1, Title 15; Part 3, Titles 1 and 2), the Valdivia Injunction, policy memoranda issued by the BPH, and Chapter 8 of the Department Operations Manual (DOM).

Ø Note: The administrative rules in the operations manual (i.e., DOM) of the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) are public records, and parolees, prisoners, and the public have the right to inspect them. Pen C §5058; Govt C §6253; American Friends Serv. Comm. v Procunier, supra. On obtaining or inspecting public records, see chap 12. The DOM provisions have not been adopted in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act (Govt C §§11340-11529) and therefore do not have the force of law. See Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v Bradshaw (1996) 14 C4th 557, 570, 59 CR2d 186. They do, however, reflect the CDCR's internally approved procedures. Specifically, the DOM represents the procedures parole agents are expected to adhere to and may be a useful tool for interpreting the applicable statutes and regulations. See In re Carr (1995) 38 CA4th 209, 213, 45 CR2d 34 (discharge review under Pen C §3001). The DOM is available on the CDCR's website at http://www.cdcr.ca.gov/Regulations/Adult_Operations/DOM_TOC.html.

Ø Note: By agreement of the parties under the Valdivia Injunction, the prisoner is to be given notice of the alleged misconduct and of his or her rights within 3 business days of the "discovery date," which is the date that staff discovered that the prisoner engaged in misconduct. A probable cause hearing is then to be held within 13 business days of the discovery date and the revocation extension hearing is to be scheduled within 35 days of the discovery date. The BPH only processes "A, B, or C" disciplinary violations as determined by 15 Cal Code Regs §3323. The BPH is not bound by 15 Cal Code Regs §3323 for purposes of disposition.

III. BASIC RULES PERTAINING TO PAROLE

§47.3 A. The Parole Period

Unless parole is waived by the Board of Parole Hearings for good cause, all prisoners not placed on nonrevocable, or "summary," parole must serve a period of supervised parole. Pen C §3000(a). Nearly all determinately sentenced prisoners are subject to 3 years of parole. That period can be extended to 4 years for misconduct that results in parole revocation. Pen C §§3000(b)(5), 3057(a). Determinately sentenced prisoners convicted of rape, spousal rape, sodomy, oral copulation, or sexual penetration by force or fear; lewd acts on a child under age 14; continuous sexual abuse of a child under age 14; or rape, spousal rape, or sexual penetration in concert are subject to a 5-year parole period. Pen C §3000(b)(1).

Most life prisoners who are released on parole serve 5 years of parole that can be extended to 7 years for misconduct that results in revocation. Pen C §3000(b)(2), (b)(5)(B). Prisoners convicted of first or second degree murder serve life parole. Pen C §3000.1(a). Prisoners who have received a life sentence under one of the alternative sentencing schemes for sex offenders set out in Pen C §667.61 or §667.71 are subject to a 10-year parole period. Pen C §3000(b)(3). Prisoners subject to a 10-year parole period may have their parole extended to 15 years. Pen C §3000(b)(5)(C).

Ø Note: Parole is a penal consequence of conviction. Therefore, it appears likely that the Ex Post Facto Clause of the U.S. Constitution bars retroactive application of any amendment that would extend the parole period to prisoners convicted of crimes committed before the effective date of the amendment. See Collins v Youngblood (1990) 497 US 37, 42, 111 L Ed 2d 30, 110 S Ct 2715; People v McVickers (1992) 4 C4th 81, 84, 13 CR2d 850.

Parolees on parole for life who have their parole revoked may be returned to the status of life prisoners with the possibility of parole. See Pen C §3000.1(d).

Parolees who abscond from supervision can have an indefinite period of parole. Absconding triggers suspension of parole, which means that the parolee does not receive any credit toward the parole period for that time. Pen C §§3000(b)(5), 3064. See People v Pearl (2009) 172 CA4th 1280, 1290, 92 CR3d 85.

For discussion of the commitment of parolees and former prisoners under the mentally disordered offender statutes, see §§48.63-48.68.

Summary/Nonrevocable Parole. On October 11, 2009, Pen C §3000.03 was enacted, effective January 25, 2010. Under Pen C §3003.03, qualified parolees cannot have a Pen C §3056 hold placed on them, be reported to the BPH, or be returned to prison for any misconduct whatsoever that does not result in a new felony conviction.

Practitioners should be knowledgeable about the eligibility requirements for nonrevocable parole in order to verify that his or her client is properly on supervised parole and to ensure that the Board has jurisdiction before subjecting the parolee to the revocation process.

The eligibility requirements for nonrevocable parole are (Pen C §3000.03):

- No high risk-assessment score (either drug, property, or violence) on the California Static Risk Assessment (CSRA);
- No prior or current violent felony convictions pursuant to Pen C §667.5C. Note that there is no washout;
- No prior or current serious felony convictions pursuant to Pen C §§1192.7, 1192.8. Note that there is no washout;
- No Pen C §290 registration or prior or current conviction pursuant to Welf & I C §6600(b). Note that there is no washout;
- No validation as an active prison gang member or associate as defined by CDCR regulation;
- No serious (A, B, or C) 115's during the current term. The possession and/or manufacture of inmate alcohol is excluded; and
- No refusal by parolee to sign any written notification of parole requirements or conditions, including but not limited to the written notification requirements pursuant to Pen C §3067 (Notification of Non-Revocable Parole CDCR Requirements, CDCR Form 1515A). See 15 Cal Code Regs §§3000, 3075.2(b)(4).

§47.3A B. Parole Location

Ordinarily, a prisoner is paroled to the county that was his or her last legal residence before incarceration. See Pen C §3003(a). Subject to agreements with the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) on the maximum number of transferred parolees a county is required to accept, a parolee may be paroled to another county in California if that result would be in the public's best interest. Pen C §3003(b), (i). In determining whether to parole a prisoner to another county, the Division of Adult Parole Operations (DAPO) should consider these factors: the need to protect the victim, the parolee, a witness, or any other person; any public concern that would reduce the parolee's chances for success in that community; a verified work offer or educational or vocational training opportunity for the parolee; strong family support in another county that would increase the parolee's chances for success; and the lack of necessary outpatient treatment programs, giving the greatest weight to protecting the victim and the safety of the community. Pen C §3003(b).

Ø Note: Many counties have an agreement with the CDCR that transferred parolees cannot exceed 5 percent of the county's parole caseload. As a result, counties are frequently closed to transfers.

Restrictions on location. When the prisoner's commitment offense involves a violent felony, specific enhancements involving great bodily injury, or stalking, there are restrictions on the place to which the prisoner may be paroled. If the victim or a witness requests protection from the parolee, and DAPO determines that there is a need to protect the victim or a witness, the parolee may not be returned to a location within 35 miles of the protected person's residence. Pen C §3003(f), (h).

No individual convicted of a sex offense for which registration is required under the Sex Offender Registration Act (Pen C §§290-290.023) may reside in a single-family dwelling with another person subject to sex offender registration, unless they are related. Pen C §3003.5(a). In addition, individuals subject to sex offender registration may not live within 2000 feet of a school (K-12) or a park. Pen C §3003.5(b); In re E.J. (2010) 47 C4th 1258, 104 CR3d 165.

Ø Note: A federal district court has held that Pen C §3003.5 does not apply retroactively to offenders who were convicted and who were paroled or otherwise released from incarceration before its effective date of November 7, 2006. Doe v Schwarzenegger (ED Cal 2007) 476 F Supp 2d 1178, 1179. See also In re E.J., 47 C4th at 1273 (presumption against nonretroactivity not implicated when inmates were released and secured noncompliant housing after effectiveness date of statute).

Ø Note: Often, DAPO will cite compliance with Pen C §3003(f)-(h) as the justification for a parole condition that prohibits the parolee from entering entire counties. Not allowing the parolee to enter an entire county for any reason may be constitutionally overbroad and also invalid under the test set out in People v Lent (1975) 15 C3d 481, 124 CR 905, discussed in §47.4. The parolee may obtain review of any parole condition or geographical restriction by filing an administrative appeal of that issue. See Pen C §§3000(b)(4), (b)(7), 3003(b). See §47.51 for discussion of administrative appeals.

Under the Interstate Compact for Adult Offender Supervision (ICAOS) (Pen C §11180), California can request transfer of a paroling offender to another compact state 120 days or less before the planned prison release date. ICAOS Rule 3.105(a) (rules available online at http://www.interstatecompact.org). See also Pen C §3003(j). An interstate parolee may be returned to the sending state if the parolee commits three or more significant violations arising from separate incidents. ICAOS Rule 5.103. See ICAOS Rule 5.108 (due process procedural requirements).

§47.4 C. Parole Conditions

A parolee's liberty is subject to parole conditions. Pen C §§3052-3053.5. Before release on parole, a prisoner will be notified of the conditions that apply to his or her release and into what county he or she will be released. A prisoner will not be released on parole until he or she signs the conditions of parole. If a prisoner refuses to sign, he or she will have parole revoked for 6 months in a proceeding held under Valdivia. Pen C §3060.5. Ordinarily, the parolee is afforded the opportunity to sign the conditions of parole at the revocation proceeding to avoid incarceration. If the parolee earns work-time credits, the 6-month period will be reduced to 3 months, at which time the parolee will be afforded another opportunity to sign the parole conditions. A parolee who continues to refuse to sign may complete the entire parole period in revoked status, 6 months at a time. Pen C §3060.5.

General conditions of parole. Certain conditions of parole, called general conditions, are imposed on all parolees. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2512. The general conditions of parole require the parolee to report to the agent of record (AOR) within 24 hours of release, or the next business day, to report an address, to provide notice of changing residence before moving, and to provide notice of changes in employment within 72 hours. 15 Cal Code Regs §2512(a)(2). The general conditions of parole also require the parolee to obtain prior approval before traveling more than 50 miles from the parolee's residence or leaving his or her county of residence for more than 48 hours; not to engage in criminal contact; to immediately report any felony or misdemeanor arrest under federal, state, or county law to the AOR; and not to own, use, have access to, or have under control specified weapons. 15 Cal Code Regs §2512.

Special conditions of parole. Other conditions, called special conditions, may also be imposed, such as submitting to narcotics or tuberculosis testing, not using alcohol, not having contact with gang members or other specified individuals, having an approved address (for those required to register their addresses pursuant to another statute), or participating in psychiatric treatment. See Pen C §3053(b); 15 Cal Code Regs §2513. A special condition of parole will not be deemed invalid unless it (1) has no relationship to the crime for which the parolee was convicted; (2) relates to conduct that is not criminal; and (3) requires or forbids conduct that is not reasonably related to future criminality. People v Lent (1975) 15 C3d 481, 124 CR 905; People v Knox (1979) 95 CA3d 420, 427, 157 CR 238. See also In re Juan G. (2003) 112 CA4th 1, 7, 5 CR3d 34 (probation conditions).

If the special condition impinges on a constitutional right such as freedom of speech, association, or travel, the condition must be reasonably related to the commitment offense and it must be reasonable and narrowly drawn. People v Keller (1978) 76 CA3d 827, 838, 143 CR 184. See also In re White (1979) 97 CA3d 141, 146, 158 CR 562. The Penal Code specifies conditions of parole for certain offenders:

- Offenders whose crimes involved minor victims are required to participate in psychological counseling. Pen C §3002.
- Sex offenders required to register pursuant to the Sex Offender Registration Act (Pen C §§290-290.023) may not reside with unrelated registered sex offenders or within 2000 feet of a school (K-12) or a park. Pen C §3003.5.
- Sex offenders determined to be at high risk for committing violent sex crimes may be required to undergo relapse prevention treatment as a condition of parole. Pen C §3008.
- Sex offenders determined by the BPH to be intoxicated at the time of the offense, or addicted to the excessive use of alcohol at the time of or immediately preceding the crime, must completely abstain from the use of alcohol. Pen C §3053.3.
- Prisoners who the BPH reasonably suspects have, have had, or have been exposed to an infectious stage of tuberculosis must undergo testing for tuberculosis. Pen C §3053.5.
- Offenders convicted of a domestic violence offense (see Fam C §6211) involving threatening, stalking, sexually abusing, harassing, or violent acts may be subject to no-contact orders, and may be required to attend and complete a batterer's treatment program. Pen C §3053.2.
- Offenders convicted of hate crimes may be subject to no-contact orders and may be required to attend a class on civil rights sensitivity specific to the classification of the person victimized. Pen C §3053.4.

- All parolees may be required to participate in electronic monitoring as a condition of release. Pen C §3004(a). All inmates required to register under the Sex Offender Registration Act (Pen C §§290-290.023) who are committed to prison and subsequently released on parole are subject to mandatory monitoring with a global positioning device for life. Pen C §3004(b). A federal district court has held that Pen C §3004 does not apply retroactively to offenders who were convicted and who were paroled or otherwise released from incarceration before its effective date of November 7, 2006. Doe v Schwarzenegger (ED Cal 2007) 476 F Supp 2d 1178, 1179.

Ø Note: When the alleged parole violation involves a special condition of parole, the hearing officer must find as a preliminary matter that the condition is valid, using the test provided in People v Lent, supra. This requirement is often overlooked. The parolee's attorney should require a finding on the validity of the condition before a determination is made about whether the parolee violated the condition. It is not uncommon for conditions of parole to exist that have no nexus to the parolee's criminality. Even when the purpose of the condition is to prevent future criminality, it must relate to the parolee's criminal conduct. See Lent, 15 C3d at 486. Also, while the condition can be reasonably related to past criminality, the behavior cannot be so remote in time as to make the condition unreasonable. See People v Burgener (1986) 41 C3d 505, 530, 224 CR 112, overruled on other grounds in People v Reyes (1998) 19 C4th 743, 753, 80 CR2d 734.

Limitations on parole conditions. Because a parolee has a right to liberty that "includes many of the core values of unqualified liberty" (Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 482, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 495, 92 S Ct 2593), a parole condition restricting the exercise of certain fundamental rights is allowed by the courts only to the extent actually required by the legitimate demands of the parole process (People v Burgener (1986) 41 C3d 505, 530, 224 CR 112, overruled on other grounds in People v Reyes (1998) 19 C4th 743, 753, 80 CR2d 734).

Parole conditions restricting constitutional rights must be reasonably related to a compelling state interest and restrictively drafted. People v Keller (1978) 76 CA3d 827, 143 CR 184, disapproved on other grounds in People v Welch (1993) 5 C4th 228, 232, 19 CR2d 520. Because the compelling state interest in parole conditions is to foster rehabilitation of criminal behaviors, a parole condition must have a nexus with the parolee's past criminality. People v Lent (1975) 15 C3d 481, 124 CR 905; In re Hudson (2006) 143 CA4th 1, 9, 49 CR3d 74.

A parole condition must be reasonable. People v Burgener, 41 C3d at 532. See, e.g., In re Stevens (2004) 119 CA4th 1228, 15 CR3d 168 (parole condition prohibiting use of computers and Internet was unreasonable when paroled child molester's crime did not involve computer). But see In re Hudson, 143 C4th at 9 (computer limitations permissible as conditions of parole when defendant used computer in second offense and deliberately withheld and encrypted computer when previously on probation). In addition, a parole condition may not be vague or overbroad. See also People v Burden (1988) 205 CA3d 1277, 253 CR 130 (condition that parolee, convicted of writing checks with insufficient funds, not work in "outside or commission sales" invalid as overbroad and not required by compelling state interest).

Last, a parole condition must not contravene public policy. Thus, for example, although a parole condition can place reasonable restrictions on the right to travel and on the parolee's place of residence, such conditions may be invalid if they are unreasonable. See People v Blakeman (1959) 170 CA2d 596, 339 P2d 202 (condition requiring probationer to absent himself from county in which crime occurred ("banishment") barred by fundamental public policies); People v Beach (1983) 147 CA3d 612, 195 CR 381; People v Bauer (1989) 211 CA3d 937, 940, 260 CR 62.

Ø Note: Although People v Blakeman, supra, continues to be cited for the principle that a probation (or parole) condition must not contravene public policy (see, e.g., People v Welch (1993) 5 C4th 228, 240, 19 CR2d 520 (Arabian, J., concurring)), conditions similar to the one imposed in that case, although not as broad—for example, conditions that the probationer or parolee stay away from certain individuals or neighborhoods—are frequently imposed, especially in cases involving drugs or gang activity. In U.S. v Watson (2009) 582 F3d 974, 983, the court upheld a condition prohibiting the probationer from entering the entire city and county of San Francisco without the prior permission of his probation officer.

§47.5 D. Special Conditions Relating to Sex Offenders

California has implemented a program to assess the risk of reoffense posed by individuals convicted of crimes for which they are required to register under the Sex Offender Registration Act (Pen C §§290-290.023). Under this program, all individuals required to register as sex offenders are to be assessed using a risk assessment tool known as the State-Authorized Risk Assessment Tool for Sex Offenders (SARATSO). See generally Pen C §§290.04-290.06. Under Pen C §3005(a), all sex offenders who are deemed to pose a high risk of reoffense as determined by their score on the SARATSO must be placed on intensive and specialized parole supervision and required to report frequently to designated parole officers. Other sex offenders may be placed on such intensive parole supervision. Pen C §3005(a).

In addition, the following mandatory parole conditions apply:

- Sex offenders required to register pursuant to the Sex Offender Registration Act (Pen C §§290-290.023) may not reside with other registered sex offenders. Pen C §3003.5.
- Sex offenders determined to be at high risk for committing violent sex crimes may be required to undergo relapse prevention treatment as a condition of parole. Pen C §3005.
- Sex offenders determined by the BPH to be intoxicated at the time of the offense or addicted to the excessive use of alcohol at the time of or immediately preceding the crime must completely abstain from the use of alcohol. Pen C §3053.5.
- All individuals convicted of a felony violation of a "registerable sex offense," or attempt, committed to prison, and released on parole under Pen C §3000 or §3000.1 are subject to global positioning system monitoring for life. Pen C §3004(b).

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/47 PAROLE HEARINGS/§47.6 E. Termination of Parole Period; Discharge Review

§47.6 E. Termination of Parole Period; Discharge Review

A parolee's parole period terminates (1) after the parolee has served the entire term of parole (see §47.3), (2) when the parole authority discharges the parolee from parole for good cause (see Pen C §3000(b)(1)-(2)), or (3) by operation of law (Pen C §3001).

Under Pen C §3001, depending on the commitment offense, a parolee must be discharged within 30 days after the end of the first, second or third continuous year on parole if the BPH does not order retention. See In re Carr (1995) 38 CA4th 209, 212, 45 CR2d 34, citing California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation Operations Manual (DOM) §81080.1.1, available on the CDCR's website at http://www.cdcr.ca.gov/Regulations/Adult_Operations/DOM_TOC.html. A period of "continuous parole" begins when the parolee is initially released on parole. It is interrupted when parole is properly suspended because the parolee has absconded from supervision (see §47.14) or when parole is revoked. 15 Cal Code Regs §2535(b)(4); DOM §81080.1.1. A "Continued on Parole" (COP) disposition does not interrupt a period of continuous parole unless the parolee signs a waiver as part of the disposition of an absconding or other time-loss charge. A parolee who has violated parole and has been returned to custody in certain custodial drug treatment programs cannot have his or her parole period interrupted.

The presumptive discharge date for a parolee who was imprisoned for a felony not listed as a violent felony in Pen C §667.5(c) is no later than 30 days after the completion of 1 year of continuous parole. Pen C §3001(a). The presumptive discharge date for a parolee who was imprisoned for a violent felony under Pen C §667.5(c) and subject to 3 years of parole is no later than 30 days after the completion of 2 years of continuous parole. Pen C §3001(a). Parolees convicted of violent offenses listed in Pen C §667.5(c) and subject to 5 years of parole are presumptively discharged from parole after 3 years of continuous parole. Pen C §3001(a). The presumptive discharge date for an individual sentenced to a life term for a sex offense under Pen C §§667.61, 667.71 is 6 years. Pen C §3001(c). The presumptive discharge date for a parolee sentenced to an indeterminate term under Pen C §1168 for a crime other than first or second degree murder is no later than 30 days after the completion of 3 years of continuous parole. Pen C §3001(b). The presumptive parole discharge date is no later than 30 days after completion of 5 years of continuous parole for an individual paroled after a conviction of second degree murder, and 7 years of continuous parole for an individual paroled after a conviction of first degree murder. Pen C §3000.1(b). See also 15 Cal Code Regs §2535; In re Chaudhary (2009) 172 CA4th 32, 37, 90 CR3d 678 (time in prison between grant of parole and release from custody cannot be applied to satisfy any part of 5-year parole discharge eligibility requirement of Pen C §3000.1).

Retention on parole after the presumptive discharge date is initiated by a request from the Division of Adult Parole Operations (DAPO) and requires a finding of good cause by the BPH. Pen C §3001; 15 Cal Code Regs §2535. Factors listed in 15 Cal Code Regs §2535(d)(1)-(5) are used to determine whether there is good cause to retain on parole. Generally, the BPH will note applicable reasons under Title 15, without further comment, on the back of the form ordering retention. Retention is usually based on DAPO's recommendation and the commitment offense or offenses, with great consideration given to public safety. The BPH's decision regarding retention must be made within the 30-day period; otherwise, parole terminates by operation of law and the BPH loses jurisdiction over the parolee. In re Carr (1995) 38 CA4th 209, 213, 45 CR2d 34.

A parolee has no right to a hearing or to be present during the BPH's review of DAPO's request for retention. However, within 10 days after the BPH action, the agent of record (AOR) must provide the parolee with a copy of CDCR Form 1632 (Discharge Review Report) and BPH Form 1130 (BPH Decision). If the BPH decides to retain the parolee, the notification must include the reasons for that decision and CDCR Form 602 (Inmate/Parolee Appeal). A single deputy commissioner may retain a parolee. See Terhune v Superior Court (1998) 65 CA4th 864, 875, 76 CR2d 841. However, the signatures of two deputy commissioners are required to discharge a parolee. DOM §81080.1.2. The CDCR must also notify the parolee that he or she has been retained. See In re Ruzicka (1991) 230 CA3d 595, 281 CR 435. The remedy for CDCR failure to notify the parolee of review was an administrative appeal of the decision; however, those appeal regulations (former 15 Cal Code Regs §2535(c)) have been repealed.

Ø Note: Despite the language of Pen C §3000(b)(5) mandating the release of a parolee following either the successful completion of parole or the end of the maximum statutory period of parole specified for that parolee, the Third District has determined that Welf & I C §6601.3 authorizes the BPH to hold an inmate for 45 days past his parole discharge date to allow the Department of Mental Health to complete a sexually violent predator evaluation. See In re Hovanski (2009) 174 CA4th 1517, 1524, 95 CR3d 370 (petition for habeas corpus denied).

IV. REVOCATION OF PAROLE

§47.7 A. Consequences of Parole Revocation

Revocation can result in the parolee's receiving up to 1 year of imprisonment for each return to custody. Pen C §3057(a). Acts of misconduct in prison while serving a revocation term may result in up to a total of 12 additional months of custody (called a revocation extension), with maximums of 180 days of custody assessed for each act punishable as a felony, 90 days for each act punishable as a misdemeanor, and 30 days for each act amounting to a serious rule violation. Pen C §3057(c). Currently the BPH initiates revocation extension proceedings only for violations constituting Division A, B, or C violations under 15 Cal Code Regs §3323.

Time spent in custody on a parole violation does not count against the maximum period of parole. Instead it extends the parole period. However, if the prescribed period for a prisoner is 3 years, he or she may not be retained on parole supervision or in custody on a parole violation for more than 4 years. Pen C §3000(b)(5); People v Pearl (2009) 172 CA4th 1280, 1288, 92 CR3d 85. If the prisoner was subject to a maximum 5 years of parole, he or she may not be retained for more than 7 years. Pen C §3000(b)(5). If the prisoner was subject to a maximum of 10 years of parole, he or she may not be retained for more than 15 years. Pen C §3000(b)(5)(C). A parolee facing a revocation hearing may have his or her parole period extended in order to encompass the hearing date. 15 Cal Code Regs §2637(b)(12).

Parolees may earn credit under Pen C §2933 for each day in prison during a parole revocation period if they qualify under Pen C §3057(d), unless they are denied credit because of the circumstances or gravity of the parole violation or because of prior criminal history. See Pen C §3057(d)(2)(E).

Parolees on parole for life (those convicted of first or second degree murder) who have their parole revoked may be returned to the status of life prisoners with annual parole consideration hearings. See Pen C §3000.1(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Grounds for Parole Revocation

§47.8 1. In General

The following are examples of good cause to revoke parole:

- Violating any general or special condition of parole (see §47.4) (15 Cal Code Regs §§2512(a), 2513; In re Monzo (1973) 33 CA3d 144, 146, 108 CR 795);
- Absconding from parole (15 Cal Code Regs §2616(a)(5); see also 15 Cal Code Regs §§2000(b)(75), 2637(b)(1), 2731(a), 2732(a));
- Failing to sign a parole agreement containing lawfully imposed conditions of parole or a statement regarding registration under the Sex Offender Registration Act (Pen C §§290-290.023), when required (Pen C §3060.5);
- Failing to provide blood or saliva samples, if required (Pen C §3060.5);
- Failing to be tested or examined for tuberculosis when that medical procedure has been required (Pen C §3053(b)); and
- Failing to pay court-ordered restitution imposed as a condition of parole (Pen C §3000(b)(6)).

Parole may be revoked for the commission of any misdemeanor or felony charge, whether arising under federal, state, or county law. 15 Cal Code Regs §2512(a)(4). Parole may not be revoked for the commission of an infraction. Pen C §19.8. A Vehicle Code violation not listed as a felony or misdemeanor in the code (see Veh C §§40000.3-40000.28) is an infraction. Veh C §40000.1. In addition, parole may be revoked for any technical violation. A technical violation is a violation of parole that does not constitute the commission of a misdemeanor or felony. Technical violations include violations of general conditions, special conditions, or any other instructions or order imposed by DAPO or the BPH.

For limitations on revocation of parole for parolees who have committed nonviolent drug possession offenses, or drug-related parole violations, see §47.30.

§47.9 2. For Psychiatric Treatment

As a result of the Valdivia Injunction and under pressure from the Coleman litigation related to mental health treatment at the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation, in 2007 both the CDCR and the Board of Parole Hearings issued policy memoranda ending so-called "psych returns." The BPH now has no authority to revoke parole on the sole basis of a finding that the parolee has a mental condition, needs psychiatric treatment, and cannot receive necessary treatment in the community alone. Therefore, the BPH no longer will revoke a parolee for psychiatric treatment. Parole is only revoked for parolees who commit misdemeanors, felonies, or technical violations of the conditions of their parole. Terhune v Superior Court (1998) 65 CA4th 864, 878, 76 CR2d 841; In re Naito (1986) 186 CA3d 1656, 1662, 231 CR 506. Regulations appearing to authorize parole revocations solely for mental health treatment are outdated. See, e.g., 15 Cal Code Regs §§2620(c), 2641(c), 2646(d), 2646.1(u).

If a parolee has, as a result of a deteriorating mental condition, violated parole, the BPH will seek to revoke parole for the conduct. If the mental condition of the parolee deteriorates to such a degree that the parolee cannot effectively participate in the proceedings, the Board will postpone the proceedings 2 weeks at a time until such time as the parolee is mentally competent to participate in the proceedings. It is the attorney's responsibility to monitor the parolee's condition and inform the Board's staff if the parolee's mental condition is deemed improved enough to participate in the proceedings. With limited exceptions relating to misconduct, a parolee cannot be held for more than 12 months. Pen C §3057(a). If the parolee never becomes competent to participate, the Board will release the parolee at or before the expiration of time assessed at the initial revocation screening (see §47.15A). 2009 BPH policy memorandum.

C. Procedural Rights of Parolee

§47.10 1. Constitutional Basis for Procedural Rights

The U.S. Supreme Court has long recognized that the freedom parolees enjoy, although conditional, is protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Thus, parolees have certain constitutionally guaranteed procedural protections in a parole revocation proceeding. Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 92 S Ct 2593. See also Gagnon v Scarpelli (1973) 411 US 778, 781, 36 L Ed 2d 656, 93 S Ct 1756. They do not, however, have the full range of constitutional protections available to defendants in criminal prosecutions. U.S. v Hall (9th Cir 2005) 419 F3d 980, 985. Under Morrissey v Brewer, supra, when a parolee is taken into custody for a suspected parole violation, he or she has a right to a prompt hearing to determine whether probable cause exists to believe that he or she committed the alleged violation. 408 US at 485. The parolee also has a due process right to an adversarial hearing at which evidence is presented to establish the violation. 408 US at 487. Despite Morrissey, California traditionally had a unitary parole revocation procedure, which did not routinely afford the parolee a separate probable cause determination after arrest on an alleged violation.

In Valdivia v Davis (ED Cal 2002) 206 F Supp 2d 1068, the Federal District Court for the Eastern District of California ruled that California's parole revocation procedures denied parolees due process primarily because of the length of time parolees were being held in custody without a hearing to determine whether there was probable cause to believe that the parolee violated parole. An order for permanent injunctive relief in the case (now titled Valdivia v Schwarzenegger) was filed March 9, 2004, which calls for a number of far-reaching reform measures, including bifurcation of the revocation process to include a separate probable cause determination soon after the arrest. See "Stipulated Order for Permanent Injunctive Relief" (the Valdivia Injunction), Valdivia v Schwarzenegger (ED Cal Civ S-94-0671), available on the Prison Law Office's website at http://www.prisonlaw.com/pdfs/Val.pdf. See also §47.11.

§47.11 2. Rights of Parolees Under Valdivia v Schwarzenegger

Implementation of the Valdivia Injunction began July 1, 2004, with most implementation required by July 1, 2005. When this chapter went to press, the BPH had not yet proposed implementing regulations. Therefore, citations in this section are to the injunction.

Ø Note: The Valdivia requirements do not apply to out-of-state parolees being supervised in California. Valdivia Injunction §9.

Under the Valdivia Injunction, as of July 1, 2005:

(1) No later than 48 hours after a parole hold is placed (no later than the next business day if the hold is placed on a weekend or holiday), the parole agent and unit supervisor must confer to determine whether there is probable cause to continue the hold and document their determination. Valdivia Injunction §11(b)(ii).

(2) No later than 3 business days after the placement of the parole hold by DAPO, the parolee must be served with actual notice of the alleged parole violation, including a short factual summary of the charged conduct and written notice of the parolee's rights during the revocation process, including time frames. Valdivia Injunction §11(b)(iii).

(3) All parolees retained in custody on a parole hold, who do not waive time or request a continuance, must have a probable cause hearing within 13 business days after the hold is placed. Valdivia Injunction §11(d), and as agreed by all parties to the Valdivia settlement agreement.

Ø Note: This can be up to 14 days after the hold is placed. The day of the hold is not counted.

(4) A parolee is entitled to an expedited probable cause hearing when there is a sufficient offer of proof by appointed counsel that there is a complete defense to all charges. Valdivia Injunction §11(b)(i).

(5) All parolees have the right to appointed counsel, beginning at the stage in the proceedings at which the return to custody assessment (RTCA) (discussed in §47.15) is made. Valdivia Injunction §11(b)(i). The appointment must allow counsel adequate time to represent the parolee properly at each stage of the revocation process. Valdivia Injunction §13.

(6) At the time of the appointment, counsel must be provided with legible copies of all nonconfidential reports and any other documents the state intends to rely on at the probable cause or final revocation hearing. After appointment, if the state learns of additional evidence or documents, and intends to rely on such additional evidence or documents, it must provide a legible copy to counsel as soon as practicable before the hearing. Nonconfidential portions of the parolee's field file must be available to parolee's counsel unless good cause exists for failure to provide access to the file. Valdivia Injunction §§14, 16.

Note that the Valdivia Injunction required CDCR and the BPH to develop policies for designating information as confidential. See Valdivia Injunction §15. By agreement between the parties in Valdivia, attorneys now receive complete reports and redact any confidential information before providing copies to their clients, the parolees.

(7) At the probable cause hearing, the parolee must be allowed to testify or present documentary evidence in defense or mitigation of the charges and disposition. Both documents and testimony may include hearsay. Valdivia Injunction §22.

(8) If a parolee who has been retained in custody on a parole hold does not waive time or request a continuance, the final parole revocation hearing must take place within 35 calendar days of the hold. Valdivia Injunction §11(b)(iv).

Ø Note: The first day occurs after the parolee has been in custody for 24 hours. If the 35th calendar day falls on a federal or state holiday or weekend, the hearing must be held by the next business day as agreed by all parties to the Valdivia settlement agreement.

Ø Practice tip: The BPH has maintained a policy of permitting revocation hearings to go forward on holds that have extended beyond the maximum 35 calendar days. The BPH permits these hearings on a case-by-case basis when it has designated a revocation a "priority" case either because the current charges reflect a serious risk to public safety, or because the parolee's historical factors, regardless of the current violation charged, make the parolee a heightened risk to public safety. In a "priority" case, counsel should argue that the Valdivia Injunction does not provide for a "public safety" exception to the time frames. See also §47.20.

The Valdivia Injunction also provides that at the revocation hearing, the parolee's counsel will be able to subpoena and present witnesses and evidence "to the same extent and under the same terms as the state." Valdivia Injunction §21. Parolee's counsel submits a request for witnesses and documentary evidence at the probable cause hearing, subject to DC approval. The DC generally inquires about the purpose of each witness to ensure that the testimony is relevant to the charges. All relevant evidentiary witnesses are generally approved. Character witnesses may be limited if the testimony sought is overly duplicative. The parolee's counsel then issues the subpoenas for the parolee's witnesses. The regulations governing the presentation of evidence by the parolee at a parole revocation hearing are in 15 Cal Code Regs §§2665-2668. The regulations governing the issuance of subpoenas are in 15 Cal Code Regs §§2675-2682.

Ø Practice tip: Counsel for the parolee should make sure to request subpoenas for all witnesses he or she believes to be reasonably necessary. If any requests are denied, or if witnesses are not available at the revocation hearing, counsel should make sure that the record reflects the request and the BPH response to the request. For further discussion, see §47.18.

The Valdivia Injunction provides for service of notice of charges within 3 business days of the hold, a probable cause hearing within 13 business days of the hold, and a revocation hearing within 35 calendar days of the hold. The Injunction does not specify what relief, if any, is available if any of these three time frames is violated. When the parolee can show actual prejudice, the BPH will either dismiss the charges or order the parolee to have the revocation hearing in the community. If the violation is egregious or if definable injury has resulted from the delay, DCs will consider this case by case for purposes of mitigation or other remedies. If the proceedings are not completed by the end of the 35th day, all pending charges must be dismissed and the hold must be removed. DAPO will refile charges dismissed solely as a result of violating the Valdivia time frame. Failure to comply with the Valdivia time frame is also grounds for habeas relief if prejudice is demonstrated. See In re Marquez (2007) 153 CA4th 1, 62 CR3d 429.

Under current Board policy, any request for review of any Board ruling must be received by the BPH Headquarters (at the Special Processing Unit) within 10 days of the disputed action. Requests for review will be decided in writing in a miscellaneous decision (CDCR Form 1135). See 15 Cal Code Regs §§2041(b), 2042.

§47.12 D. Effective Representation of Parolees

Parolee has right to impartial arbiter. Due process entitles a parolee to a parole revocation hearing before a neutral and detached arbiter. Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 488, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 498, 92 S Ct 2593. See also Withrow v Larkin (1975) 421 US 35, 47, 43 L Ed 2d 712, 723, 95 S Ct 1456 (requirement of neutral arbiter applies in administrative hearings); In re Murchison (1955) 349 US 133, 136, 99 L Ed 942, 946, 75 S Ct 623 (a "fair trial in a fair tribunal is a basic requirement of due process").

Counsel for the parolee should move to disqualify a DC (or the DC should disqualify himself or herself) if a close personal relationship exists between the DC and the parolee or between their immediate families; the DC was involved in a past incident with the parolee that might cause him or her to be prejudiced against the parolee (e.g., the DC was responsible for the arrest of the parolee or the parolee has assaulted the DC or a member of the DC's family); or the DC is actually biased against or in favor of the parolee to the extent that he or she cannot make an objective decision. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2250.

Counsel must ensure compliance with regulations. Under 15 Cal Code Regs §2245, it is the prisoner's responsibility to bring "to the attention of the hearing panel any issues pertaining to his rights under this article or any failure to comply with these rules." Therefore, counsel should be familiar with the rights of parolees under the regulations and as stated in court decisions, and should object with specificity to any errors that implicate the parolee's rights under the federal Constitution, the laws of California, or the regulations affecting the BPH.

Counsel must ensure that documents and witnesses are available for the hearing. One of the most important duties of counsel for the parolee at a revocation hearing is to make sure that documents and witnesses requested on the parolee's behalf are actually available at the hearing. Witnesses entering jails or correctional facilities must be appropriately dressed (no jeans) and must carry appropriate photo identification or they will be refused admittance. Minors are not allowed in correctional facilities or jails and are usually not called as witnesses by the BPH and DAPO even if they are victims or witnesses of the violation. If counsel needs to call a minor or a person who does not have adequate identification as a witness, he or she may need to exercise creativity. One approach might be to move to have a witness who cannot enter the facility examined in the reception area. When a minor is needed as a witness, counsel can argue that minority should be treated like any other disability and accommodated unless the witness is too young to competently testify. See Evid C §§700-702.

When a witness or document in the custody of the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) is subpoenaed, CDCR may decline to produce the witness or document, citing institutional security. If the witness or information is important, counsel should make a record of the nature of the evidence and its relevance to the hearing and argue that a bald assertion of institutional security should not be deemed to constitute "good cause" to deny the parolee his or her right to present witnesses and documentary evidence. See Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 488, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 499, 92 S Ct 2593. Counsel for the parolee should request the regulatory basis for the exclusion of or failure to call any witness and should make appropriate objections. If a continuance for an absent witness or document in the CDCR's custody would make it impossible to hold the revocation hearing within the Valdivia time limits (see Valdivia Injunction §23), counsel may want to argue that the parolee should be released for a not-in-custody hearing.

E. Parole Revocation Procedures

§47.13 1. Initiation of Revocation Proceedings

Whenever a parole agent receives information suggesting that a parolee on his or her caseload has committed a parole violation, the agent is required to investigate and prepare a report. 15 Cal Code Regs §§2617-2618. The agent (commonly referred to as the agent of record or AOR) may also begin parole revocation proceedings and may place the parolee on a Pen C §3056 hold. See 15 Cal Code Regs §§2600-2606. The parolee will then be immediately arrested and placed in custody. See Pen C §3060. The §3056 hold is a no-bail hold. In re Law (1973) 10 C3d 21, 28, 109 CR 573. The parolee may be released from custody only on order of the AOR removing the hold, or on the order of a deputy commissioner of the Board of Parole Hearings (BPH). Once a hold is placed, the AOR does not have the authority in all circumstances to remove the hold on the parolee. See 15 Cal Code Regs §§2615, 2616.1, discussed below.

In many cases of suspected parole violation, the AOR has the authority to permit the parolee to remain in the community. If the AOR does not initiate a parole hold, the parolee is said to have been continued on parole or "COP'd."

The primary consideration of the DAPO in determining whether to initiate parole revocation proceedings is whether the parolee, because of his or her actions and background, poses a serious risk to public safety.

Revocation actions should be used judiciously. Pen C §3000(a)(1); 15 Cal Code Regs §2620. Proposition 36 places stringent limitations on the circumstances under which parole may be revoked when the alleged violation is the commission of a nonviolent drug possession offense, or any other drug-related parole violation. For discussion, see §47.30.

Parole holds are generally placed when the AOR has information that the parolee may have committed a crime or committed a technical violation, or is avoiding parole supervision. Despite the broad language of 15 Cal Code Regs §2601, parole holds are not placed because a parolee may be a danger to himself or herself, in anticipation of a possible future abscond, or as a result of a deteriorating mental state, unless there is a manifestation in criminal conduct or technical misconduct. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2602.

If the agent believes that the parolee should be retained in custody on the parole hold, the agent and the unit supervisor must confer to determine whether probable cause exists to continue the hold. This determination must be made within 48 hours after the arrest, or no later than the next business day if the hold is placed on a weekend or holiday, and it must be documented. Valdivia Injunction §11(b)(ii).

No later than 3 business days after the hold has been placed, the parolee must be given actual notice of the alleged violation (including a short factual summary of the charged conduct), his or her rights during the revocation process, and the time frames for the various stages of the process. Valdivia Injunction §11(b)(iii).

§47.14 2. Suspension of Parole

The Board of Parole Hearings is the parole authority. Pen C §3000(b)(7). As such, the BPH has plenary authority to revoke or suspend parole. Pen C §3060. An order of the BPH is sufficient warrant for any peace officer or prison officer to return any parolee to actual custody. Pen C §3060. However, the BPH cannot suspend or revoke parole without cause. The order to revoke or suspend must state the cause in the order. Pen C §3063. The most common causes for suspending parole are absconding, failing to report, failing to follow instructions, changing address without informing the parole officer in advance, traveling more than 50 miles from the residence of record without informing the parole officer, or leaving the county of residence for more than 48 hours.

Ø Note: The cause for the suspension must be stated in the suspension action. Pen C §3063. Counsel for the parolee should ascertain whether this was done. But see In re Etie (1946) 27 C2d 753, 756 167 P2d 203 (order suspending parole that stated suspension made pending investigation of charge of parole violation sufficiently stated cause).

If the BPH suspends parole, the time during which parole is suspended does not count towards the parole term. From the time that parole is suspended or revoked until the parolee is returned to custody he or she is regarded as an escapee and a fugitive from justice and the clock is stopped on his parole period. Pen C §3064; People v Pearl (2009) 172 CA4th 1280, 1290, 92 CR3d 85. When parole is suspended, the parole period can be extended beyond the maximum applicable parole period to account for the time that the parolee was in suspended status. Once in custody, the clock begins again and the parole clock, while running, cannot exceed the maximum parole period for the crime of conviction.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.14A 3. Grounds for Suspension

The BPH may revoke and suspend the parole of any parolee who has absconded from parole, or has otherwise made himself or herself unavailable for supervision. 15 Cal Code Regs §2601(a)(3). Under 15 Cal Code Regs §2731(a) or §2732(a) (multijurisdictional prisoner), a parolee absconds when he or she (1) leaves California without permission, (2) leaves California with permission but does not return within the authorized time, or (3) has not been available for contact for 30 days.

The BPH may revoke and suspend the parole of any parolee who fails to report in a timely manner on release from custody. All parolees must report to the agent of record (AOR) within 24 hours of release, or on the next working day if released on the day before a holiday or weekend. If the parolee fails to report, the AOR may file a violation report with the BPH requesting that parole be suspended and a warrant issued. 15 Cal Code Regs §2512.

More-stringent rules apply to parolees designated as "high control" parolees under Pen C §3060.7. If a high-control parolee fails to report within 48 hours of release from custody (or within 24 hours if ordered by the AOR), the AOR must file a report with the BPH within 24 hours requesting that parole be suspended and a warrant issued. Pen C §3060.7.

> Ø Practice tip: Despite the seemingly stringent rules pertaining to "high control" parolees, the standard parole conditions reflected in CDCR Form 1515 (Notice and Conditions of Parole), signed by all inmates paroled in California, require all parolees to report within 24 hours of release and the fact that a high-control parolee is a mandatory referral to the BPH has no practical consequences for counsel. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2512(c).

The BPH may also revoke and suspend parole of any parolee who changes address without informing DAPO in advance; fails to inform DAPO of any change in employment location, employer, or termination of employment within 72 hours after the act occurring; travels more than 50 miles from the residence of record; is absent from the county of residence for more than 48 hours; or fails to inform DAPO of any misdemeanor or felony arrest. 15 Cal Code Regs §2512.

§47.14B 4. Suspension and Reinstatement

The agent initiates the suspension process by contacting BPH, stating a factual basis for the request for suspension and the issuance of a warrant. The agent generally files a request for a warrant because he does not know the parolee's whereabouts and has reason to believe that the parolee has either committed a technical violation or engaged in activities placing the public at risk. Armed with this information, the BPH suspends parole and issues a warrant. In many cases, the parolee is promptly arrested only to be released without time loss when it is discovered that the information provided to the AOR was a false alarm.

If a parolee absconds and remains within California, the reinstatement date on parole is the date that the parolee is arrested or located, whichever is earlier. If, for example, a parolee is arrested on June 1, 2006, but DAPO does not discover this until June 3, 2006, and places a hold effective June 3, 2006, the reinstatement date would be June 1. 15 Cal Code Regs §2731(c)(2)(A).

If a parolee absconds out of state and is arrested out of state, the reinstatement date becomes more complicated. If the parolee is arrested out of state on the parole hold only, the reinstatement date is the date the parolee became available to California. The date the parolee becomes available to California occurs on one of three alternative dates: the date the parolee signs a waiver of extradition, the date the holding state accepts the pre-signed CDCR Form 1515 (Notice and Conditions of Parole) and agrees to extradite the parolee back to California, or the date a Governor's warrant is issued. The date a parolee is available to California arises under only one of the three different scenarios set forth above. Counsel should ask to see CDCR Form 1737, which is a worksheet that identifies the earliest day that the parolee was available to California. If the parolee is arrested on a local hold as a result of local charges, the parolee is entitled to exercise a Shapiro waiver of personal appearance at a revocation hearing. See In re Shapiro (1975) 14 C3d 711, 721, 122 CR 768. When a parolee is in abscond status out of state and subject to a local hold, the Shapiro waiver authorizes the Board to conduct a parole revocation proceeding without the parolee being present. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2731(c)(2)(B). For further discussion of Shapiro waivers, see §47.22.

Parolees subject to INS holds are often deported upon release from custody. A parolee that reenters the county illegally may be subject to revocation for failing to report, absconding, or illegal reentry into the United States. Counsel should note any charges for illegal reentry that are not accompanied by INS documentation to sustain the charge.

§47.15 5. Deputy Commissioner's Alternatives on Receipt of Violation Report

When the agent of record (AOR) files a violation report, it is submitted to a parole administrator (PARAD), who reviews the report for corrections, needed documents, and amendments, including additions or deletions to the charges. Once the violation report is cleared, it is forwarded to a deputy commissioner (DC) for evaluation. The DC first reviews the reports to determine if there is probable cause for the alleged violations. The DC can dismiss charges that lack probable cause, accept the charges as submitted, or amend the charges. The DC then determines the appropriate action. The DC may make a return to custody assessment (RTCA), propose alternative sanctions, known as remedial sanctions (e.g., drug treatment under the Parolee Substance Abuse Program or Proposition 36), or remove the hold and order the parolee's immediate release. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2620.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/47 PAROLE HEARINGS/§47.15A 6. Return to Custody Assessment

§47.15A 6. Return to Custody Assessment

If the deputy commissioner (DC) concludes that the violation warrants returning the parolee to prison, he or she may offer the parolee a certain amount of prison time to begin on the date that DAPO placed the hold. A DC may return a parolee to prison for up to 12 months for a violation. 15 Cal Code Regs §2740.

> Ø Practice tip: Counsel should review 15 Cal Code Regs §2646.1, which provides a guideline for return to custody times for all violations that a parolee may face at a revocation hearing. The guidelines only apply to parolees who have not previously been returned to custody for any violation. The parolee's prior parole history is made available to counsel in CDCR Form 1244. Counsel should review the 1244 parole adjustment form, and if there are no prior violations which resulted in a return to custody, examine the return to custody assessment (RTCA) to ensure that it falls within the §2646.1 guidelines. Counsel should argue at the probable cause hearing (PCH) that the offer should fall within the guidelines. Occasionally, a DC will make an offer at the RTCA stage invoking Pen C §3057(d)(2)(E), which converts an offer eligible for work-time credits ("eligible offer") to an offer ineligible for work-time credits ("ineligible offer"). When counsel is faced with such a "d2E" offer at the PCH stage from the RTCA, counsel should argue that Pen C §3057 does not authorize any "d2E" disposition or offer, except at a revocation hearing. The RTCA stage is not a revocation hearing and therefore a "d2E" offer is arguably improper.

If the offer is to return the parolee to prison, the offer will state whether the parolee, under the offer, is eligible to earn work-time credits under Pen C §2933. Work-time credits under §2933 can reduce the actual time the parolee spends in prison by as much as one-half. Effective January 25, 2010, Pen C §2933(e) provides for work-time credits for parolees housed in county jails.

Eligibility for parole work-time credits is governed by Pen C §3057. Under Pen C §3057(d)(2), a parolee is ineligible for credits if

- He or she is on parole after conviction of an offense listed in Pen C §3057(d)(2)(C);
- He or she violated parole by committing an offense listed in Pen C §3057(d)(2)(C);
- He or she violated a condition of parole prohibiting association with a specified person or entering a particular place, or requiring attendance at a parole outpatient clinic or psychiatric attention; or
- The DC at a revocation hearing determines that the parolee should not receive work-time credits, because of the gravity and circumstances of the violation or prior criminal history. Pen C §3057(d)(2)(E).

This offer and a copy of the revocation packet is then made available to the California Parole Advocacy Program (CalPAP) administered by an administrative branch of the University of the Pacific's McGeorge School of Law. CalPAP assigns an attorney to represent the parolee, and the attorney schedules an interview with the parolee in custody normally within 1 business day after receipt of the violation packet. Valdivia Injunction §11(b)(i). This packet contains the parole violation report, any law enforcement report, and all other relevant and material evidence, including a copy of the RTCA "offer." See Valdivia Injunction §14. If counsel believes that there is a complete defense to all the charges that form the basis of the hold, counsel should make an offer of proof concerning the defense at the PCH. Valdivia Injunction §11(b)(i). As a practical matter, the probable cause hearing is ordinarily scheduled within 1 or 2 days after the attorney interviews the parolee.

An offer at the RTCA stage may be accepted by the parolee before the commencement of the PCH. The parolee is not required to admit the charge or charges and any acceptance of an offer is not res judicata as to any other proceeding. Few offers are accepted at the RTCA stage because there is usually nothing to gain by accepting an offer prior to the actual PCH. No offer made at RTCA can be raised at a PCH. If an offer is accepted by the parolee at the initial attorney interview before commencement of the PCH, counsel will have the parolee sign a Summary of Revocation Decision (CDCR Form 1104B) indicating acceptance of the RTCA offer, and this form will be presented to the DC at the PCH. The parolee may still choose to appear at the PCH, even though he or she has already accepted the offer, or may waive appearance and be represented by counsel. The DC will complete the paperwork by entering the settlement in a BPH 1103-PCH form. The paperwork will either be handed to the parolee or forwarded to him or her later that day.

7. Probable Cause Determination

§47.16 a. Parolee's Right to Probable Cause Determination

When a parolee is taken into and retained in custody for a suspected parole violation, the parolee has a right to a prompt hearing to decide whether there is probable cause to believe that he or she has committed the alleged violation. Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 488, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 496, 92 S Ct 2593; Gagnon v Scarpelli (1973) 411 US 778, 36 L Ed 2d 656, 93 S Ct 1756. See Valdivia v Davis (ED Cal 2002) 206 F Supp 2d 1068 (California's unitary parole revocation procedure denied parolees due process).

All parolees incarcerated on a parole hold who do not waive time or ask for a continuance are entitled to a probable cause hearing within 13 business days after the placement of the hold. Valdivia Injunction §11(b)(iii), (d). A parolee is entitled to an expedited probable cause hearing when there is a sufficient offer of proof by appointed counsel that there is a complete defense to all charges. Valdivia Injunction §11(b)(i). See §47.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/47 PAROLE HEARINGS/§47.17 b. Probable Cause Hearing

§47.17 b. Probable Cause Hearing

At the probable cause hearing (PCH), the parolee and counsel ordinarily meet face to face with a deputy commissioner (DC). The BPH attempts to hold the hearings in person; however, there are some instances when hearings are held by telephone.

The probable cause hearing is very informal and is sometimes compared to a combination of a preliminary hearing and a pretrial settlement conference. The DC writes a computerized report of the proceedings on a BPH 1103-PCH form. The DC makes a finding regarding probable cause for each of the alleged violations. The probable cause standard is whether a reasonable person would have a strong suspicion that the parolee violated parole. Assuming probable cause exists on at least one of the allegations, the DC must then decide whether to hold the parolee in custody. The DC sometimes places notes and comments in the 1103-PCH form on the charges, the parolee's behavior or history, and other matters. The probable cause determination typically rests entirely on reports and other documents. Counsel should take the time to review the 1103-PCH form to make sure that it accurately reflects the decisions made by the DC and any negotiated settlement of the case.

The Valdivia Injunction provides that the parolee may present evidence in defense or mitigation at the probable cause hearing, including the parolee's testimony. Valdivia Injunction §22.

Counsel will note any objections to the charges in order to persuade the DC to dismiss the charges for lack of probable cause. Given the short time frames required under Valdivia to hold the probable cause hearing, the DC and counsel are not provided with a field file, nor are any witnesses present other than the parolee.

The DC will commonly dismiss charges at the PCH if there is inadequate evidence to sustain the charge. For example, if the parolee is charged with violating a special condition, the AOR must have submitted the signed special condition in order to avoid dismissal of the violation. If the AOR alleges battery on an unnamed victim, the charge will likely be dismissed if the victim is not identified and cannot be subpoenaed to testify. The AOR retains the right to refile the charge, or charges, if new facts are discovered and presented.

If probable cause is found on a charge, the parolee may either admit, deny, or enter a no contest plea. If the parolee admits a charge, it is deemed admitted whether the matter is settled at the PCH stage or goes to a full revocation hearing.

Although counsel can have the parolee testify on one or more of the charges or the disposition and can present documentary evidence regarding the charges or disposition, the PCH is not a full revocation hearing. If the evidence proffered by the parolee is subject to dispute by adverse witnesses, e.g., the AOR or the victim, the parolee needs to schedule a revocation hearing. The DC will generally advise the parolee to this effect.

> Ø Practice tip: Counsel must be provided at the time of appointment with all nonconfidential reports and all documents that the state intends to rely on at the probable cause or final revocation hearing. Valdivia Injunction §14. If critical documents are missing at the PCH, counsel should argue that the missing documents constitute a due process violation under Morrissey and Valdivia mandating a dismissal of the charges. Counsel may also argue that there is insufficient information to find probable cause without the documents, necessitating dismissal.

If the DC finds probable cause, he or she will attempt to negotiate a settlement of DAPO's charges by offering a proposed disposition. This proposed disposition can be no more severe than the initial RTCA offer. The parolee and the parolee's counsel can often negotiate about what charges the parolee will plead to, if any, and the sanction to be imposed, including whether the parolee will be returned to prison.

If the matter is settled, the parolee and his or her counsel will fill out a CDCR Form 1104B, waiving the right to a parole revocation hearing and marking "accept" to the agreed-on sanction.

In addition to Form 1104B, the DC will print out BPH 1103-PCH. The 1103-PCH form in conjunction with Form 1104B represent the record of the PCH. The parolee is not required to admit any charge(s) upon which probable cause has been found. Generally the DC enters denials or no pleas on any sustained charge in the 1103-PCH form, regardless of the outcome. Forms 1104B and 1103-PCH will also state whether the parolee is eligible for Pen C §2933 credits. In addition, 1103-PCH will include any special conditions imposed as part of the settlement proposal, such as a no-contact order, a geographical limitation, or a no-alcohol condition.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.18 8. Requesting Witnesses and Documents

If the probable cause hearing does not produce a settlement, a full revocation will be scheduled. Counsel for the parolee will be required to specify what witnesses, documents, and other evidence he or she, through investigating, has determined will be necessary to present the parolee's case at a revocation hearing. If an evidentiary witness sought by counsel is a parolee, it is the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation's (CDCR's) policy not to transport witness-parolees to revocation hearings. Counsel should advise the client that although counsel can issue the subpoena, it will generally not be honored by the CDCR.

Therefore, to provide the parolee with effective assistance of counsel, it appears to be necessary for counsel to request every evidentiary and disposition witness reasonably necessary to present the parolee's side of the case. The attorney can be prepared to do this only by thoroughly reviewing the parole agent's report, any law enforcement report, any drug or alcohol test, any parole condition that may be at issue, any parole agent's notes, and the parolee's field file, and by investigating the allegations and proposed disposition and talking with potential witnesses. The AOR will normally arrive at a revocation hearing with the field file. However, when requesting witnesses and documentary evidence at the PCH, counsel may consider a subpoena duces tecum for the AOR's "field file," or "record of supervision." On rare occasions, counsel may need to review the "C" file in advance of the hearing and should arrange scheduling promptly for the C-file review with CDCR's Records Department.

Counsel for the parolee should also prepare for the possibility that not all requested witnesses will be approved or subpoenaed. Counsel should (1) make and retain a copy of any request for witnesses, documents, videotapes, or requests for subpoenas or subpoenas duces tecum so that there is a record of the request if it becomes an issue; (2) be ready to make an offer of proof regarding the relevance of and the necessity for the testimony of any requested witness; (3) make sure that the BPH provides a reason on the decision for any denial of a request for a witness or other evidence; and (4) be prepared to challenge the adequacy of the reason for the denial. Some attorneys have developed the habit of having the deputy commissioner initial all forms requesting witnesses, and all completed Summary of Revocation Decision forms (CDCR 1104B).

It may be important to request that the parole agent who wrote the parole violation report and summary of parole adjustment be present for cross-examination. If so, he or she should be requested as a witness. Although it has been held that the parolee is entitled to call witnesses, if requested and relevant (see In re Carroll (1978) 80 CA3d 22, 32, 145 CR 334), the Ninth Circuit holds that a probationer normally does not have a right to confront an agent when hearsay entries made by that agent are used in a proceeding by another agent. U.S. v Walker (9th Cir 1997) 117 F3d 417, 420. The CDCR has a policy under which it does not call parole agents to testify if the agent has an office out of the area (more than 50 miles away). Also, the CDCR usually refuses to produce prisoners in its custody at revocation or revocation extension hearings. Although these policies may change in the aftermath of Valdivia, counsel should be prepared to make a record of the relevancy of the testimony of a requested witness in the event that the witness is not made available for the hearing.

9. Parole Revocation Hearing

§47.19 a. Time for Hearing

Under the Valdivia Injunction, unless the parolee waives time or requests a continuance, when the parolee is retained in custody on a parole hold, the final revocation hearing must take place within 35 calendar days after the placement of the hold or, if the 35th day falls on a weekend or holiday, on the next business day. Valdivia Injunction §§11(b)(iv), 23. Counting begins on the day after the parolee is placed in custody. However, an exception to the time frame may be made in a "priority case." See §47.20.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.20 b. BPH Guidelines on Postponement

The guidelines the BPH has adopted (see discussion in §47.1B) provide that, unless the parolee waives time or there is "a good cause finding to a misdemeanor, felony, or violation of a condition of parole, no parolee shall be held in custody for more than 35 calendar days from the date of the hold unless there is a determination of good cause for delay or postponement." 2004 BPH policy memorandum. However, "priority" cases, those in which the parolee's commitment offense or revocation offense is a violent felony as defined by Pen C §667.5(c) or a serious felony as defined by Pen C §1192.7(c), may not be dismissed without the concurrence of a supervisor. Hearing Directive 05/07 (Nov. 30, 2005).

The determination of good cause for postponement is to be made by the deputy commissioner (DC) conducting the hearing, and requires a finding that "the reason for delay includes unforeseen circumstances beyond the control of the state." Hearing Directive 04/10 (Dec. 23, 2004). Examples of "unforeseen circumstances" are listed; they include "a family emergency by a witness, a vehicle collision, hospitalization of a witness, a court conflict, parolee illness or counsel illness." Hearing Directive 04/10 (Dec. 23, 2004). Other circumstances may qualify, as determined by the DC. All determinations of good cause to delay or postpone a hearing must be documented on the day of the decision. In the absence of good cause or a waiver, the DC is required to remove the hold "if failure to do so will result in the parolee being held in custody for more than 35 calendar days from the date of the hold. If all the charges are not dismissed at that time, a not-in-custody hearing shall be ordered." Hearing Directive 04/10 (Dec. 23, 2004).

§47.21 c. Postponement of Hearing by Parolee

Postponement request. The parolee may request a postponement or waive time for the revocation hearing or any of the hearing time constraints with or without good cause. Valdivia Injunction, §11(b)(iv), Exhibit A, ¶5, p5. By agreement of the parties to Valdivia, however, parolee postponements require a showing of good cause. If a postponement is necessary because the BPH failed to subpoena a defense witness or document, or the state is otherwise responsible for the nonavailability of evidence the parolee needs for his or her defense, and postponement of the revocation hearing will place the time for the hearing beyond the 35th day after the placement of the hold, counsel for the parolee should request that the charges be dismissed for failure to comply with the Valdivia Injunction. Counsel also should argue that a finding be made on the unavailability and the basis for the unavailability of each witness.

Optional waivers. If the parolee is being prosecuted in a state or federal court located in California on one or more of the charges that are the subject of a revocation, the parolee may want to postpone the revocation hearing until after the conclusion of the criminal proceeding. This is done by signing a conditional waiver (called an "optional waiver"). 15 Cal Code Regs §2641(b). Although the regulations do not specify that the criminal charges must involve the same behaviors involved in the parole revocation proceeding, the BPH has interpreted §2641 to require that the criminal charges must involve the same behavior that the parole violation charges are based on, and they must be actually pending at the time the parolee signs the waiver. This is typically, but not always, done at the probable cause hearing (PCH). By signing an optional waiver, the parolee accepts a return to custody and is in revoked status. The parolee may later rescind the revoked status and request a hearing on the matter.

After the parolee signs the waiver, the BPH will review the parolee's file and revoke parole, usually for the same period as the screening offer. Once the state or federal charges have been disposed of, the parolee has 15 days to request an activation of the waiver, which will result in the scheduling of an optional-waiver review on the calendar for PCHs. Even though the regulations require 60 days remaining before the parolee's revocation release date (RRD), because of the Valdivia Injunction, the BPH will allow a parolee to activate his or her waiver so long as there are at least 35 days remaining before the RRD. At the optional-waiver review, the DC has the authority to modify the original offer or leave it unchanged and negotiate a disposition with the parolee. If the parolee rejects the offer, the term imposed on the basis of the waiver is no longer effective and the parolee is free to enter a denial on the charges and schedule a full revocation hearing. A parolee who has signed and thereafter activated an optional waiver is in revoked status; nonetheless, by agreement of the parties to Valdivia, the Board complies with Valdivia time frames. If, at the revocation hearing, good cause to revoke parole is found, the parolee may receive more or less time than would have been imposed on the basis of the waiver. 15 Cal Code Regs §2641(b). Also, when there is a criminal conviction, the Board will find good cause on the charges on the basis of the conviction for the same conduct, and the revocation hearing will be for dispositional purposes only.

There are tactical advantages in having a criminal prosecution proceed first: A defendant's rights in a criminal case are far more extensive than are a parolee's rights in a revocation proceeding. Public defenders and other defense attorneys thus have resources that are not readily available to revocation counsel. In preparing for trial, defense counsel in the criminal case can bring discovery and other pretrial motions, obtain public funding for investigators and experts, adduce damaging testimony at preliminary hearings and trial, and develop legal theories. If the waiver is withdrawn after trial, revocation counsel can present the same witnesses and information and can, if desirable, call trial counsel to testify about the evidence at the trial, including trial counsel's opinion on the credibility of witnesses and the sufficiency of evidence under the preponderance burden.

Occasionally, however, it will be advisable to have the revocation hearing first, as in cases with minor charges in which the state court judge is waiting to see what the revocation disposition will be. When serious charges are involved, and the parolee is likely to remain in custody for a year litigating the state court case, the parolee loses nothing by having the revocation hearing first even if the parolee does not testify at the revocation hearing. Previously undisclosed information about witnesses and evidence may be discovered. Strategically, defense counsel in the criminal matter may want a revocation hearing in order to obtain discovery. Coordination with the parolee's state court counsel is important here as well.

A parolee under criminal investigation but not yet charged with a criminal offense faces a difficult quandary. The parolee is not entitled to exercise an optional waiver, since criminal charges are not pending, yet proceeding to a revocation hearing and offering testimony in defense of the parole violation charge or charges may provide prosecutors with information needed to file felony criminal charges. All testimony given by a parolee in a parole revocation hearing is public record and obtainable by prosecuting authorities. See §47.28. Prudent counsel will not permit the parolee to testify in a hearing if he or she perceives a risk that charges will be filed. On the other hand, obtaining testimony from prosecution witnesses could be advantageous to the parolee.

Ø Note: Postponements are sometimes more practical than optional waivers because delays can occur with an optional waiver. A postponement puts the case on calendar at a specific time. If the attorney can anticipate when the county case will conclude, a postponement may make more sense, especially when there are issues regarding sentencing credits or when the parolee's eligibility for programs depends on the local adjudication.

§47.22 d. Parolees Arrested Out of State

Parolees arrested out of state are reinstated on parole when they become available to the jurisdiction of California. Time frames applicable to the revocation process under the Valdivia Injunction do not commence until the parolee arrives in California. Credit for time spent in custody elsewhere depends on the parolee's availability to the jurisdiction of California. Parolees who contest extradition to California do not receive credit for time served in the foreign jurisdiction. California considers parolees who sign a waiver of extradition and who do not face charges in the other state available to California on the date the parolee signs the waiver of extradition.

A parolee who is incarcerated by an intervening sentence in a foreign jurisdiction has the right to compel BPH to conduct an in absentia revocation proceeding for any parole violations being brought against the parolee in California. Forcing the BPH to conduct a revocation hearing while the parolee remains incarcerated in the other state ensures that the parole revocation time runs concurrent to the time the parolee is serving in the other jurisdiction. The parolee compels the Board to immediately conduct an in absentia revocation hearing by submitting a written waiver of his right to appear at the hearing. This waiver is called a Shapiro waiver. In re Shapiro (1975) 14 C3d 711, 723, 122 CR 768.

The BPH interprets Shapiro broadly, which works to the parolee's benefit. The BPH permits a parolee to compel a revocation hearing in order to receive concurrent time while the parolee is incarcerated on a local hold in another jurisdiction, even if not yet convicted and even if never convicted.

The BPH processes a Shapiro waiver by conducting a probable cause hearing and assessing a disposition when appropriate. In order to preserve the parolee's rights, the BPH considers the Shapiro waiver a request for an optional waiver on the revocation charges (see §47.21 for a discussion of optional waivers). By treating the parolee's Shapiro waiver as both a demand for an in absentia hearing and a request by the parolee to optionally waive the hearing, the parolee retains the right to contest both cause on the revocation charges and the dispositional assessment on return to California.

The California Code of Regulations specifies that any return to custody time assessed in the in absentia hearing will commence on the date the BPH conducted the hearing. When the BPH waits an unreasonable amount of time to conduct the hearing after receipt of the Shapiro waiver, counsel should argue that the parolee should not be harmed by the BPH's inability to conduct a timely hearing and should receive credits back to the date the parolee signed the Shapiro waiver. If the parolee does not submit a Shapiro waiver, the revocation hearing will not occur until he or she returns to California. 15 Cal Code Regs §2731(c)(2)(B)(4)(b); In re Shapiro (1975) 14 C3d 711, 723, 122 CR 768. The burden of proof is on the state to show the parolee was timely provided a Shapiro waiver by DAPO, which in practice is considered by BPH to be within 10 days; there is no regulation on point.

> Ø Note: A parolee arrested out of state has the right to a telephone hearing with the BPH or a hearing in the state in which he or she was arrested (15 Cal Code Regs §§2245, 2367); however, in practice, the BPH does not recognize these regulations. Given the broad interpretation of Shapiro, counsel will have a difficult time showing harm to the parolee in this instance.

§47.23 e. The Revocation Hearing

A hearing panel, usually composed of just one Deputy Commissioner, hears the case. Pen C §3063.6. Parole revocation hearings are divided into two distinct parts, the evidentiary phase and the dispositional phase. In the evidentiary phase, the Deputy Commissioner considers the evidence to determine the validity of the alleged violations of parole. All witnesses are examined under oath. 15 Cal Code Regs §2645(b).

The parole agent's report acts as the charging document and outlines the violations. It is not evidence; it serves (or should serve) only as the jurisdictional basis for the hearing. Parole violations are proven by sworn testimony and documents with definite evidentiary value, such as authenticated law enforcement reports, test results, and signed parole conditions.

Parole agents are required to keep notes of contacts with parolees and other matters related to each case. Occasionally the parole agent's notes, called the "Record of Supervision" and located in the agent's field file, are relevant to the charges. The parolee's field file and the agent's notes are available for review by counsel, unless good cause is found for not providing it. Valdivia Injunction §16.

Ø Note: During the hearing, evidence on the parolee's criminality and behavior on parole is generally not offered until the disposition phase of the hearing, so as not to bias the deputy commissioner (DC), but if the parole agent asserts that the parolee has committed other crimes using the same "modus operandi," the agent may seek to present evidence about previous crimes to prove the parole violation.

Ø Note: The parolee should refrain from opening the door to evidence of prior criminality by denying conduct for which he or she has been convicted, which makes evidence of prior crimes admissible for impeachment.

At the end of the first phase of the hearing, the DC adjourns the hearing and considers the evidence for and against the charges. 15 Cal Code Regs §§2645, 2646. The possible findings on each charge are "violation found," "no violation found," and "charge dismissed." 15 Cal Code Regs §2646. In many hearings, the DC will waive adjournment and proceed directly into the dispositional phase of the hearing. When a parolee has been convicted of or has pleaded guilty to a crime, the panel must find good cause on at least the crime of which the parolee has been convicted. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2645(a). If good cause is found on any charge (or on an amended charge), the hearing panel convenes the second part of the hearing, known as the disposition phase.

In the disposition portion of the hearing, evidence is again taken. However, only relevant evidence goes to the issue of what penalty the hearing panel should impose on the parolee, if any. This may be evidence of residence, employment, social stability, family support, and the attendance or willingness to attend a program. At this point, the DC often relies on the summary of parole adjustment, which is part of the parole agent's report.

The dispositional choices are to return the parolee to custody for some period of time, including credit for time served, to impose a remedial sanction, to impose conditions of parole, or to continue the parolee on parole. See 15 Cal Code Regs §§2511(b)(3), 2646. See also §47.7. After the evidence is presented and all parties have spoken, the hearing panel again adjourns to consider the disposition. The panel returns to announce its decision. Again, many DCs do not adjourn the hearing before announcing their decision.

The hearing is discussed in greater depth in §§47.24-47.28.

§47.24 (1) Establishing Jurisdiction

The first action of the BPH deputy commissioner at the parole revocation hearing should be to establish jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over the parolee is presumed, but the presumption is rebuttable, and jurisdiction may be challenged at the hearing. For example, the parolee may contend that his or her parole period has expired because a current or previous suspension of parole was invalid. For discussion of suspension of parole, see §47.14. Subject matter jurisdiction is based on the parole agent's report, which should be admitted at the beginning of the hearing for the limited purpose of establishing jurisdiction, establishing what the charges are, and establishing what conduct of the parolee the charges are based on.

BPH deputy commissioners sometimes skip over this phase of the proceedings. Counsel for the parolee should, however, insist on a formal statement of the basis for jurisdiction. A formal statement clarifies the proceeding and gives counsel an opportunity to make an informal statement of the case. It also gives counsel an opportunity to make a due process notice objection to ambiguous charges. The parole agent's report should charge specific violations based on specific facts. Counsel should object to ambiguous charges (one count of spousal abuse, for example, with a report stating that abuse occurred on more than one date).

Once the charges are in place, the parolee is asked to enter a plea of "admit," "deny," or "no plea" to each charge. There is no regulatory or statutory basis for this "plea" procedure, but it serves to save time on uncontested charges.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.25 (2) Record of Hearing

The revocation hearing is tape recorded and the record of the proceedings consists of this tape, the parole agent's report, and the written hearing decision. Documentary evidence considered by the hearing officer is not retained as part of the record. The tape must include or incorporate by reference the evidence considered, the evidence relied on, and the findings of the hearing panel with supporting reasons (15 Cal Code Regs §2254), and in the decision itself, the hearing officer must indicate the evidentiary basis for his or her findings (15 Cal Code Regs §2255). Although the written decision and the parole agent's report stay in the parolee's file, the tape of the hearing is destroyed after 6 months.

Ø Note: By department policy, the parolee is informed that he or she is entitled to receive a tape of the hearing on request within 120 days of the hearing. Although the issue has never been addressed, there is no written rule which prohibits counsel from bringing a tape recorder and recording the hearing.

Establishing a record of what evidence was offered and received is an important responsibility for the parolee's attorney. BPH regulations provide that the record must include or incorporate by reference the evidence the deputy commissioner (DC) has considered, the evidence the DC has relied on, and the DC's findings, together with supporting reasons. 15 Cal Code Regs §2254. Counsel for the parolee should make sure that the hearing officer complies with this regulation. Under the traditional practice, documents or exhibits are not marked in evidence and are not retained. It is therefore incumbent on counsel for the parolee to take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that any reviewing body is able to determine what the evidence was and what evidence the DC relied on in making a decision. Counsel should seriously consider requesting the DC to describe with particularity the documents and exhibits being considered as the hearing proceeds (it might be best to give a detailed description of the document or exhibit in the request). It may also be important to describe the return of service on the subpoena for a witness who does not appear at the hearing, since subpoenas will not be saved as part of the record. Counsel should also object to the admission of adverse hearsay evidence that does not pass the balancing test required in U.S. v Comito (9th Cir 1999) 177 F3d 1166. See §47.26. This objection is referred to as a Comito objection.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.26 (3) Use of Hearsay

In general. At revocation hearings, all relevant evidence, including most hearsay, is admissible. 15 Cal Code Regs §2665. To be admissible, hearsay (1) must be relevant, i.e., it must tend to prove or disprove an issue or fact in dispute (15 Cal Code Regs §2000(b)(91)), and (2) must not violate the parolee's due process right to confront and cross-examine witnesses. People v Arreola (1994) 7 C4th 1144, 1158, 31 CR2d 631 (although cited for informational purposes, California is bound by federal law under the Valdivia Injunction); U.S. v Comito (9th Cir 1999) 177 F3d 1166, 1170. See U.S. v Hall (9th Cir 2005) 419 F3d 980, 985 (parolee's right of confrontation grounded in Due Process Clause, not Sixth Amendment).

Admissibility. Under Valdivia Injunction §24, the use of hearsay is limited by the parolee's confrontation right under the U.S. Constitution. The current state of the law requires the BPH to use the balancing test described in U.S. v Comito (9th Cir 1999) 177 F3d 1166, to determine whether to admit hearsay evidence from a witness adverse to the parolee in parole revocation proceedings. In re Miller (2006) 145 CA4th 1228, 1236, 52 CR3d 256. This test requires the deputy commissioner to "weigh the [parolee's] interest in his constitutionally guaranteed right to confrontation against the Government's good cause for denying it." Comito, 177 F3d at 1170. See Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 488, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 498, 92 S Ct 2593; U.S. v Hall (9th Cir 2005) 419 F3d 980. As Hall explains, even reliable evidence is subject to this balancing test. 419 F3d at 987. A parolee's "otherwise strong interest in confrontation" is not extinguished by the reliability of proffered hearsay evidence. 419 F3d at 988. See U.S. v Martin (9th Cir 1993) 984 F2d 308, 313 (even laboratory report not sufficiently reliable to support blanket rule of admissibility). See also U.S. v Perez (9th Cir 2008) 526 F3d 543.

Factors to consider in determining the weight to be given to the parolee's right of confrontation include (1) the importance of the evidence to the ultimate question and (2) the nature of the facts to be proved by the evidence, i.e., whether the hearsay in question is reliable proof of those facts. U.S. v Comito (9th Cir 1999) 177 F3d 1166, 1171. When the facts to be proved by hearsay are crucial to the decision, and the hearsay itself is an unsworn oral statement (the least reliable form of hearsay), the parolee's interest in the opportunity to cross-examine "is at its apogee." U.S. v Comito, supra. In such circumstances, only a very strong reason for failing to produce a witness will defeat the parolee's right to confrontation and permit the use of hearsay evidence.

As the court in Comito explained, "[w]hether a particular reason is sufficient cause to outweigh the right to confrontation will depend on the strength of the reason in relation to the significance of the [parolee's] right." 177 F3d at 1172. See also U.S. v Hall (9th Cir 2005) 419 F3d 980. In short, the more important the evidence from the absent adverse witness is to the state's case, and the less reliable the hearsay, the greater the parolee's interest in confronting and cross-examining the adverse witness to test his or her veracity. The greater the parolee's interest in confrontation, the heavier the burden on the government to produce the witness before the hearsay can be admitted.

These principles mean that a showing of good cause that would support admitting an item of hearsay evidence that is well corroborated or is being used to prove a minor issue might not be sufficient to support admitting the same item of evidence on an issue central to the violation allegation. See U.S. v Hall, supra.

Ø Practice tip: Counsel for the parolee should always make a Comito objection when DAPO attempts to introduce hearsay evidence of absent adverse witnesses without a showing of good cause. If the DC accepts DAPO's showing of good cause, counsel should request him or her to state the reasons for the finding on the record. If the good cause showing appears to be insufficient to outweigh the parolee's right to confrontation, counsel should object to the admission of the evidence on confrontation grounds. This will protect the parolee's right to writ review of the confrontation issue.

Weight. In addition to admissibility issues, counsel should consider the reliability of hearsay evidence that the DC proposes to consider. Hearsay that has been admitted because it has met the U.S. v Comito balancing test must be weighed like any other evidence in determining whether to find good cause on a given parole violation. The fact that a statement of an adverse witness has been admitted does not necessarily prove any fact. Its weight, if any, is a separate issue from its admissibility. See In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 C4th 1227, 1244, 96 CR2d 56; People v Maki (1985) 39 C3d 707, 715, 217 CR 676.

Ø Note: When the only evidence offered to support the charges is hearsay, counsel should make a motion to dismiss the charges at the close of the state's case, before putting on a defense, on the ground that hearsay evidence alone is not reliable enough to provide the deputy commissioner with the assurance needed to find that it is more likely than not that the parolee committed the alleged violation.

Admissibility of law enforcement reports. DAPO frequently relies on police or parole officers' reports to prove violations. Such reports should not be deemed automatically admissible. See Downie v Klincar (ND Ill 1991) 759 F Supp 425; U.S. v Bell (8th Cir 1986) 785 F2d 640, 643. Counsel for the parolee should argue that a police or parole officer's report is admissible only if it meets the balancing test of U.S. v Comito (9th Cir 1999) 177 F3d 1166. See Downie, 759 F Supp at 428 (police reports based on first-hand observations subject to case-by-case examination for indicia of reliability); Bell, 785 F2d at 643 ("[w]hile police reports may be demonstrably reliable evidence of the fact that an arrest was made [citation], they are significantly less reliable evidence of whether the allegations of criminal conduct they contain are true"). When a police or parole officer's report contains the hearsay statements of victims or witnesses, its admissibility should be scrutinized even more carefully, since "third-party reports, which are essentially double hearsay, are generally less reliable than eyewitness reports." Downie, 759 F Supp at 429. See also Bell, 785 F2d at 644; In re Miller (2006) 145 CA4th 1228, 1238, 52 CR3d 256; People v Hernandez (1997) 55 CA4th 225, 240, 63 CR2d 769 (police reports not admissible under business records exception, because they might be based on observations of victims and witnesses who have no duty to report); People v Ayers (2005) 125 CA4th 988, 23 CR3d 242 (hearsay in official report not admissible under exception that makes report itself admissible).

Ø Practice tip: When DAPO attempts to introduce a police or a parole officer's report to prove a violation, counsel for the parolee should insist that it first establish good cause for failing to bring in the witness or witnesses for live testimony, object on confrontation grounds (see Comito, supra), and make the Deputy Commissioner aware that even if he or she believes the report is admissible under Bell and Comito, third party statements are double hearsay and thus even less reliable than if admitted through a police officer who can at least testify to his or her perception of the witness's credibility.

§47.27 (4) Burden of Proof

The Division of Adult Parole Operations (DAPO) bears the burden of proving the charged parole violation, but unlike criminal charges, which must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, a parole violation needs to be proved only by a preponderance of the evidence. 15 Cal Code Regs §2000(b)(50). See People v Rodriguez (1990) 51 C3d 437, 272 CR 613 (due process permits use of preponderance of evidence as burden of proof in probation revocation proceeding). A party's obligation to sustain the burden of proof requires the production of evidence for that purpose. Charges or written statements of witnesses are not evidence but are merely the materials on which the charges and disposition, if any, are based, and they must be proved in order to sustain a good cause finding. Parker v City of Fountain Valley (1981) 127 CA3d 99, 179 CR 351.

Preponderance of the evidence means that one body of evidence has more convincing force than the evidence opposed to it. Glage v Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 CA3d 314, 276 CR 430; 1 Witkin, California Evidence*, Burden of Proof* §35 (4th ed 2000). There can be no "preponderance of elements" (i.e., more elements of the crime or violation proved than not). Under a preponderance burden, every element of a cause of action must be proved by that standard (7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §305 (4th ed 1996)).

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/47 PAROLE HEARINGS/§47.28 (5) Privilege Against Self-Incrimination

§47.28 (5) Privilege Against Self-Incrimination

The Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination protects any disclosure that a witness may reasonably believe could be used in a criminal prosecution or that could lead to other evidence that might be so used. "The availability of the privilege does not turn on the type of proceeding in which it is invoked but on the nature of the statement or admission and the exposure which it invites." In re Gault (1967) 387 US 1, 49, 18 L Ed 2d 527, 558, 87 S Ct 1428. It can be claimed in any judicial proceeding, criminal or civil (see Murphy v Waterfront Comm'n (1964) 378 US 52, 94, 12 L Ed 2d 678, 704, 84 S Ct 1594), and applies in administrative proceedings, such as parole revocation hearings, as well. Borror v Department of Inv. (1971) 15 CA3d 531, 542, 92 CR 525.

The privilege against self-incrimination, applicable in parole revocation proceedings, includes both a parolee's right not to be called as a witness against himself or herself and the right not to answer incriminating questions. However, the familiar remedy of excluding evidence obtained in violation of the right to remain silent is generally not available in revocation proceedings. Although a coerced or involuntary statement may be subject to exclusion, there is no bar in BPH proceedings to considering a statement obtained in violation of Miranda v Arizona (1966) 384 US 436, 16 L Ed 2d 694, 86 S Ct 1602. In re Martinez (1970) 1 C3d 641, 650, 83 CR 382. See also People v Fuller (1983) 148 CA3d 257, 262, 210 CR 1, 195 CR 853 (evidence obtained as result of illegal search inadmissible at revocation hearing only if police conduct so egregious as to offend traditions and collective conscience of society or shock the conscience).

Consequently, if a parolee makes an incriminating statement to the agent of record (AOR), it is likely to be admitted into evidence at the hearing and used as the basis for revoking parole, even if it was illegally obtained. Furthermore, the DOM advises agents that when criminal proceedings are probable, Miranda warnings must be given but should not be given when only parole violations are alleged, because giving the warnings "may lead to a perceived right to silence which could be detrimental in securing all information." DOM §81030.4. Because it is common for the AOR to interview the parolee before counsel is appointed, by the time revocation counsel is appointed and has an opportunity to speak to the parolee about the importance of not discussing the alleged parole violation with the AOR, the parolee may well have made a statement to the AOR.

> Ø Practice tip: Although failure to give Miranda warnings does not by itself provide a basis for excluding the parolee's statement, given the AOR's supervisory relationship with the parolee, which affects practically every aspect of the parolee's life (In re Carabes (1983) 144 CA3d 927, 931, 193 CR 65) and requires that the parolee report any arrest to the agent (15 Cal Code Regs §2512(a)(4)), counsel might be able to argue that such a statement is involuntary within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment, because the parolee may reasonably have felt coerced into making self-incriminating statements. See Gagnon v Scarpelli (1973) 411 US 778, 36 L Ed 2d 656, 93 S Ct 1756 (parole officer's recommendation to revoke parole "surely" compromises his or her role as counselor to parolee); Ramona R. v Superior Court (1985) 37 C3d 802, 210 CR 204 (statements by minor in fitness hearing and interview with probation officer cannot be used against her in subsequent criminal proceeding); People v Gordon (1978) 84 CA3d 913, 925, 149 CR 91 (parole agent placing hold on defendant to make him submit to lie detector test is coercive, and evidence from test and from interview after test is inadmissible in state court).

It may not be in the parolee's best interest to testify about some matters when a related criminal case has been or may be filed. Although a parolee's testimony at a revocation hearing is inadmissible in a related criminal trial in the prosecution's case-in-chief, it may be admissible for impeachment or rebuttal in a subsequent trial if the parolee's testimony in the criminal proceeding is "so clearly inconsistent" with the testimony at the revocation hearing that the trial court is warranted in revealing to the jury the probability that the probationer has committed perjury at one of the hearings. People v Coleman (1975) 13 C3d 867, 889, 120 CR 384; People v Allen (1989) 216 CA3d 208, 211, 264 CR 621 (probation revocation cases).

> Ø Practice tip: If the parolee does not testify about a matter, it may be difficult or impossible to contest the charges unless another witness is available. Even when counsel believes there is a sound argument that the evidence introduced by DAPO is insufficient to prove the charges, it is advisable, if possible, to present some evidence supporting that position.

§47.29 10. Parole Revocation Extension

A parolee who engages in misconduct while being held in custody, whether in a local lockup, a county jail, or a state prison, can be charged with a parole violation for such misconduct. If the conduct occurred while in custody, but before parole was revoked, the misconduct is processed as a new revocation of parole violation. If the parolee has already had parole revoked, the misconduct is processed as a parole extension violation. The difference may be of great consequence. A number of potential parole revocation offenses may result in the parolee's serving up to an additional 1 year in custody, whereas the maximum that can be imposed in extending a parolee who has already been revoked is 180 days. A misbehaving parolee whose parole has already been revoked will be subject to the parole revocation extension process. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2742.

The hearing rights and procedures are similar to those at a parole revocation hearing except that the probable cause hearings, called "REACs" (Revocation Extension Assessment Conferences), are conducted telephonically rather than in person. 15 Cal Code Regs §2742(i). The parolee is assigned counsel and the parolee is given an RTCA or "extension offer." A telephonic PCH (REAC) is scheduled with the parolee represented by counsel. In the telephonic PCH, the deputy commissioner will discuss the case with the parolee and counsel. If the case does not settle at the PCH, an in-person revocation extension hearing is scheduled.

If the violation occurs within 35 days of the parolee's release date, an emergency 35-day hold is placed on the parolee. The emergency order will authorize a hold for up to 35 days, commencing on the date of discovery of the incident charged as a violation. This can result in the parolee's being held beyond the normal release date, even if the charges are dismissed. Policies and procedures agreed upon pursuant to Valdivia supersede 15 Cal Code Regs §2742(d).

The charging document that details the alleged prohibited behavior in this situation is generally a "rule violation report" (a term of art in the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR); see 15 Cal Code Regs §3315), or "CDC-115." The evidence usually consists of testimony by one or more correctional officers, or another inmate, or a confidential source. If the charge involves a prison riot, maps showing where the prisoners were are frequently created and should be in the central file. Ordinarily, everyone accused of fighting or being in a riot is examined by medical staff, and a drawing of each alleged participant with listed injuries is done. If the charge is possession of drugs or alcohol ("pruno"), the deputy commissioner must make sure that the drugs or alcohol are what they are claimed to be, because this behavior is a felony (Pen C §4573.5) and can lead to up to 180 more days in prison as a revocation offense. See Pen C §§4573, 4573.5-4573.6. See also Pen C §3057(c). See Board of Prison Terms Hearing Directive 02/05 (Apr. 10, 2002), requiring lab tests to confirm that a controlled substance is present.

Ø Practice tip: Counsel should be alert to violations that occur in a dormitory setting. It is not uncommon for 200 to 400 inmates to be housed in a single facility in which the assigned lockers, bunks, and floor space are accessible to all. Charging the parolee with possession of contraband under these circumstances can be suspect.

Ø Practice tip: If the parolee is charged with possession of contraband or any prohibited item found within a secure cell area, counsel should examine how long the parolee has resided in that cell. Questions to consider include the following: Was the cell thoroughly searched by staff before parolee's entrance into the cell? There should be a cell search clearance document, sometimes called a "B" document—Is the item properly chargeable to a "cellie"? If the pruno is fully fermented, was the parolee in the cell long enough to have concocted the mix? Pruno violations are a common occurrence. Counsel should be aware that to be charged with manufacturing or possessing pruno, there must be evidence of a drinkable liquid. It is not uncommon for a charging document (CDC 115) charging possession of pruno to mistake "kicker" for drinkable pruno. "Kicker" is a yeast product generally made by combining fruit with a yeast product, such as bread or potato, tightly wrapped and fermented to create a powerful "quick" yeast, which is then added to the sugar water component. "Kicker" is not drinkable and is only chargeable as contraband, a maximum 30-day extension violation.

The period by which the revocation period may be extended depends on the prisoner's conduct. For each act of misconduct punishable as a felony, the revocation period may be extended for up to 180 days. Pen C §3057(c). For each act of misconduct punishable as a misdemeanor, the revocation period may be extended for up to 90 days. Pen C §3057(c). For each act of misconduct punishable only as a serious disciplinary infraction (see 15 Cal Code Regs §§3313, 3315), the revocation period may be extended for up to 30 days. Pen C §3057(c). A parolee is subject to up to 12 months of extension during any single period of revocation. Pen C §3057(a). Because some Deputy Commissioners will attempt to incarcerate parolees for longer than 30 or 90 days for nonfelonious behavior, counsel should be prepared to argue that parolees cannot be incarcerated longer than the mandates of Pen C §3057(c).

Ø Note: The BPH currently only accepts 115 violations that constitute Division A, B, or C violations. See 15 Cal Code Regs §3323.

The extended period of return to custody may be reduced by credits if the parolee is eligible to earn them. See Pen C §3057(d). But note that if the parolee is found guilty in a 115 hearing, the institution may take his work-time credits. The BPH may then extend the parolee's parole revocation period. This "double jeopardy" is commonly complained of and is perfectly legal. The substantive law pertaining to extension violations is complicated. Counsel should be familiar with Pen C §4502 and related statutes, and be cognizant that CDCR institutions sometimes charge non-crimes as crimes, or charge misdemeanor crimes with punishments appropriate only to felony crimes.

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/47 PAROLE HEARINGS/§47.30 V. PROPOSITION 36 DRUG TREATMENT

§47.30 V. PROPOSITION 36 DRUG TREATMENT

Under Pen C §3063.1 (Proposition 36), parole may not be suspended or revoked for a nonviolent drug possession offense or drug-related violation of parole, unless the parolee:

- Has at some time in the past been convicted of a serious or violent felony listed in Pen C §667.5(c) or §1192.7(c);

  Ø Note: A delinquency adjudication does not count as a conviction for this purpose. People v Westbrook (2002) 100 CA4th 378, 122 CR2d 514.

- Has committed a non-drug-related misdemeanor or any felony concurrently with their drug offense; or
- Refuses drug treatment as a condition of parole.

  Ø Note: Any disqualifying conviction, no matter how remote, makes the parolee ineligible for Proposition 36's parole provisions. There is no "washout" period.

Technical violations of parole disqualify the parolee from Proposition 36 treatment unless the hearing officer makes a specific finding that the conduct was drug related.

Any parolee who is eligible and agrees to participate must be given an individualized drug treatment plan and drug treatment, rather than having parole revoked. If the initial treatment provider notifies the parole authority that the parolee is unamenable to the treatment offered, an alternative program or treatment must be provided unless the treatment provider states that the parolee is unamenable to all drug treatment. Pen C §3063.1(c)(1)-(2).

Although initial treatment services may not exceed 12 months, additional aftercare of up to 6 months may be made a condition of parole. Pen C §3063.1(c)(3).

If a parolee who has been placed in drug treatment under Proposition 36 commits a subsequent offense or violates a parole condition, the BPH may but is not required to revoke parole. Pen C §§3063.1(d)(2)-(3)(A). If the BPH decides to revoke parole, and the new violation is a nonviolent drug possession offense or a drug-related parole violation, the parolee may be continued on Proposition 36 parole (usually with additional, more stringent conditions) unless a preponderance of the evidence establishes the violation and indicates that the parolee is a danger to others. Pen C §3063.1(d)(3)(A). A finding of danger to others requires parole revocation. Pen C §3063.1(d)(3)(A).

Ø Note: The judgment enjoining the enforcement of SB 1137 has been affirmed. See Gardner v Schwarzenegger (2009) 178 CA4th 1366, 1377, 101 CR3d 229. Senate Bill 1137 was signed into law in 2006 and amended the provisions of Proposition 36 to permit, among other things, the incarceration of offenders who relapse during treatment. Counsel and the court should be careful to refer to the pre-amendment versions of Pen C §§1210.1 and 3063.1 because the amended versions still appear "on the books."

If the BPH initiates parole revocation proceedings after a second nonviolent drug possession offense or drug-related parole violation, and if the violation is proved, the parolee is no longer eligible for Proposition 36 parole. Pen C §3063.1(d)(3)(A).

Ø Practice tip: Counsel should be aware that the BPH may condition a screening offer or other proposed disposition on the parolee's agreement to sign an unconditional waiver (see §47.21) of his or her rights related to the revocation process and the right to a hearing before being subject to residential drug treatment. Failure to sign a waiver may disqualify the parolee from further Proposition 36 treatment. Also, many counties no longer have Proposition 36 funding and thus cannot provide drug treatment to parolees under Proposition 36. Penal Code §3063.1 remains in effect, however, and does not allow the revocation of parole for certain drug-related offenses. Counsel should urge the BPH, which is generally amenable, to order the parolee to participate in Proposition 36 treatment or a similar program in the community. Counsel for the parolee should make sure that the parolee does not sign a waiver unless it fully and explicitly discloses the consequences of signing.

VI. RULES GOVERNING RELEASE OF LIFE PRISONERS

§47.31 A. Parole Consideration Hearing

Prisoners serving indeterminate sentences that include the possibility of parole (also called life prisoners or "lifers") are not entitled to release on parole, but they are entitled to be considered for parole. In re Dannenberg (2005) 34 C4th 1061, 1078, 23 CR3d 417. The Board of Parole Hearings (BPH) is responsible for making this determination at a parole consideration hearing.

A two-person panel, consisting of two commissioners or a commissioner and a deputy commissioner, hears the matter. Pen C §5076.1. Commissioners are appointed by the Governor. Pen C §5075(b).

For a life prisoner, the first life parole consideration hearing takes place 1 year before the minimum eligible parole date. Pen C §§669, 3041(a), 3046, 3049. This date is calculated as follows:

- One year before the minimum term that must be served for the offense; plus
- Whatever amount of time has been lost by the prisoner against the minimum term for the life offense for misconduct in custody; plus
- Any term for determinately sentenced crimes that has been imposed consecutively to the life term less credits earned against this term.

Pen C §3041(a); 15 Cal Code Regs §§2000(b)(66), 2282(b)-(c), 2403(b)-(c), 2423(b).

§47.32 1. Rights of Prisoner

Life prisoners have the following rights in parole consideration proceedings:

- To receive notice of the week of the hearing at least 1 month before the week during which the hearing will be held. 15 Cal Code Regs §2246.
- At least 10 days before the hearing, the right to review the file which the BPH will examine and have the opportunity to submit a written response to any materials contained therein. Pen C §3041.5(a)(1).
- To be personally present, speak, and ask and answer questions (Pen C §3041.5(a)(2); 15 Cal Code Regs §2247; In re J.G. (2008) 159 CA4th 1056, 1067, 72 CR3d 42), provided that prisoners and their attorneys may not ask questions of persons considered victims. Pen C §3041.5(a)(2).

Ø Note: Out-of-state prisoner hearings are generally held by telephone. 15 Cal Code Regs §2367(d). However, 15 Cal Code Regs §2367(d) has been held void to the extent it limits an out-of-state prisoner's statutory right to personally appear at a parole consideration hearing pursuant to Pen C §3041.5. In re J.G. (2008) 159 CA4th 1056, 1066, 72 CR3d 42.

- To present relevant documents. 15 Cal Code Regs §2249.
- To appear before an impartial hearing panel. 15 Cal Code Regs §2250.
- To have language or communications assistance, if needed. 15 Cal Code Regs §2251; see Govt C §11435.15.
- To be represented by an attorney. Pen C §3041.7; 15 Cal Code Regs §2256(c).
- To have reasonable accommodation for a disability, as defined in 42 USC §12102 (Americans with Disabilities Act). See 15 Cal Code Regs §2251.5.

Ø Note: If a reasonable accommodation is denied, the prisoner is entitled to file a grievance to be heard by the board. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2251.6; 15 Cal Code Regs §2251.7.

- To receive a copy of the decision specifying the decision, the information considered, and the reasons for the decision. 15 Cal Code Regs §2255.
- To receive, on request, a copy of the transcript of the hearing. Pen C §3041.5(a)(4). But see In re Lugo (2008) 164 CA4th 1522, 1540, 80 CR3d 521 (no statutory deadline within which transcript must be provided).
- If confidential information has affected a decision, to be notified of reports containing confidential information on which the panel relied. 15 Cal Code Regs §2235.
- To respond in writing to any material in his or her file. 15 Cal Code Regs §2247.
- When previously denied parole, to have a commissioner who was on the panel that previously considered parole, if feasible, be a member of the panel at the following parole consideration hearing. Pen C §3041. However, this requirement is rarely adhered to due to the logistical limitations associated with scheduling parole suitability hearings.

Additionally, life prisoners may request a waiver before the hearing for any reason. Waivers delay the hearing for 1, 2, 3, 4, or 5 years. The prisoner gives up his or her rights under Pen C §§3041 and 3041.5 during the time period of the waiver. 15 Cal Code Regs §2253(b). If the request is made at least 45 days before the scheduled hearing date, it is presumed valid. 15 Cal Code Regs §2253(b)(2). Requests made within 45 days of the hearing are presumed invalid. To overcome the presumption of invalidity, the prisoner must show good cause and that the reasons for the waiver could not have been known to the prisoner 45 days before the hearing. 15 Cal Code Regs §2253(b)(3).

The prisoner may also stipulate to unsuitability for 3, 5, 7, 10, or 15 years in accordance with the denial periods mandated by Pen C §3041.5(b). The BPH may either accept or reject the request to stipulate based on the reasonableness of the request. 15 Cal Code Regs §2253(c).

Postponements are only valid under limited circumstances. 15 Cal Code Regs §2253(d). Postponements occur when the BPH does not have a panel available; when necessary reports, documents, or accommodations are either not completed or untimely; and when exigent circumstances arise such as emergencies, prison lockdowns, or illness of hearing participants.

Other than reasons attributable to the state, the BPH will grant a prisoner's request to postpone a hearing when the inmate shows good cause, which is defined as the excused inability to obtain essential documents or information despite a diligent effort, and only if the prisoner did not and could not have known of the need before making the request. 15 Cal Code Regs §2253(d).

A continuance of an ongoing hearing requires good cause that was unknown before the commencement of the hearing. 15 Cal Code Regs §2253(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.33 2. Rights of Victim

Right to be notified of hearing. The victim of any crime committed by the prisoner may request the BPH to notify him or her of any parole suitability hearing. If the victim is deceased, the victim's next of kin may request notification of the hearing. Pen C §3043(a). The notice must be sent at least 90 days before the hearing. Pen C §3043(a). Additionally, the Board must confirm the date, time, and place at least 14 days before the scheduled hearing. Pen C §3043.

Right to appear at hearing. The victim, next of kin, members of the victim's family, and two designated representatives of the victim or the victim's next of kin may appear personally or by counsel and adequately and reasonably express their views about the crimes, the person responsible for the crimes, and the prisoner's suitability for parole. Pen C §3043(b). A representative must be designated in writing before the particular hearing, may speak even when the victim or next of kin speak, and may comment in the same manner as victims and next of kin. Pen C §3043(b)-(d). The BPH must consider the entire and uninterrupted statements of victims, next of kin, family members, and representatives in deciding whether to release the prisoner on parole. Pen C §3043(d).

Evidence designated confidential (see 15 Cal Code Regs §2235) does not have to be produced. 15 Cal Code Regs §2666.

Right to submit recorded statement in lieu of appearance. In lieu of a personal appearance, the victim, next of kin, family members, designated representatives, or household member of the victim or next of kin may submit a written, audiotaped, or videotaped statement. Pen C §3043.2(a)(1)-(2). The board must consider any statement filed before it makes its decision. Pen C §3043.2(a)(3).

The victim, the victim's representative or next of kin, or the prosecutor, when representing the views of the victim, the victim's family, or the next of kin, has the right to speak last. Pen C §3043.6. However, this right is subject to the power of the person presiding at the hearing to take whatever steps he or she considers appropriate to make sure that only accurate and relevant statements are considered in determining parole. Pen C §3043.6. See also 15 Cal Code Regs 2030(d)(1). Such steps can include permitting the prisoner or his or her attorney to rebut inaccurate statements. Pen C §3043.6.

3. Attorney Preparation

a. Prisoner's Counsel

§47.34 (1) Advance Preparation

The prisoner's counsel should be familiar with the statutes and regulations governing parole suitability hearings for life prisoners. See Pen C §§3041-3046, 5075-5076.3; 15 Cal Code Regs §§2268-2329, 2400-2439.1.

Counsel should also be familiar with the concepts in the following cases:

- Greenholtz v Inmates of Neb. Penal & Correctional Complex (1979) 442 US 1, 7, 60 L Ed 2d 668, 675, 99 S Ct 2100, and Board of Pardons v Allen (1987) 482 US 369, 376, 96 L Ed 2d 303, 311, 107 S Ct 2415. These two cases dealt with statutes that, like Pen C §3041, governed parole decisions for inmates eligible for, but not entitled to, parole. The Court held that language very similar to the language of Pen C §3041(a) imposed a mandatory duty on the state parole authority to release prisoners on parole except in certain specified circumstances, and that consequently the prisoners had a cognizable liberty interest in release on parole protected by due process.
- McQuillion v Duncan (9th Cir 2002) 306 F3d 895. The Ninth Circuit held that because California's parole scheme closely resembles those interpreted in Greenholtz and Allen, a California state prisoner serving a life sentence has a cognizable liberty interest in release on parole protected by due process.
- In re Rosenkrantz (2002) 29 C4th 616, 128 CR2d 104. The California Supreme Court noted that statutes and regulations governing indeterminate life prisoners, which require the Board "normally" to set a parole date in a manner that provides for uniform terms for crimes of similar gravity, create an expectation in parole giving rise to a protected liberty interest. Consequently, the factual basis of a Board decision granting or denying parole is subject to limited judicial review under the some-evidence standard to ensure the Board's decision comports with the requirements of due process. Further, because the Governor's statutory authority to review Board decisions is limited to an evaluation of the same factors the Board considered, the Governor's decision is likewise subject to limited judicial review to determine whether it is supported by some evidence relevant to those factors. Applying the extremely deferential "some evidence" standard to the Governor's decision to reverse the Board's grant of parole to Rosenkrantz, the court opined that the nature of the prisoner's offense alone could constitute a sufficient basis for denying parole. The court cautioned, however, that in some circumstances, a denial of parole on the basis of the committing offense alone might rise to the level of a due process violation when no circumstances of the offense could reasonably be considered more aggravated than the minimum necessary to sustain a conviction for that offense. Denial of parole under those circumstances would be inconsistent with the statutory requirement that a parole date normally be set in a manner that will provide for uniform terms for offenses of similar gravity and magnitude.
- In re Dannenberg (2005) 34 C4th 1061, 23 CR3d 417. The supreme court held that the public safety provision of Pen C §3041(b) (which states the BPH shall set a parole date unless the gravity of the offense is such that a concern for public safety warrants a longer period of incarceration) trumps any expectancy an indeterminate life inmate may have in a term of comparative equality with those served by other similar offenders. Furthermore, there is nothing about the statutory scheme that prevents the BPH from first determining suitability and denying parole when the offender's criminality presents a continuing public danger. Having determined that a particular inmate is unsuitable for parole, the BPH is not required to engage in comparative analysis. Reviewing the Board's decision in Dannenberg, the court concluded that there was some evidence to support the determination that the circumstances of Dannenberg's crime were especially egregious so that the crime could be used to find him unsuitable to receive a parole date.
- Sass v California Board of Prison Terms (2006) 461 F3d 1123. The Ninth Circuit held that a life prisoner has a constitutionally protected liberty interest in parole. Although the court found no infringement of a protected liberty interest in this case, the court reaffirmed its holding in Biggs v Terhune (9th Cir 2003) 334 F3d 910 that continued reliance on unchanging factors such as the commitment offense and preincarceration conduct runs contrary to the rehabilitative goals of the prison system and could result in a due process violation.

- In re Lawrence (2008) 44 C4th 1181, 82 CR3d 169. The court recognized that its decisions in Rosenkrantz and Dannenberg had resulted in a split among courts in the application of the deferential some-evidence standard of review. Some courts were reviewing parole decisions to determine whether some evidence supported the factual determination that the commitment offense was particularly egregious, while other courts were evaluating whether some evidence supported the decision that the inmate continued to pose a threat to public safety. The court held that because the core statutory determination of the Board and the Governor is whether the inmate poses a current threat to public safety, the standard of review is "properly characterized as" whether some evidence supports the decision the inmate is unsuitable for parole because he or she is currently dangerous and not merely whether some evidence confirms the existence of certain factual findings. Further, to the extent Rosenkrantz and Dannenberg have been read to imply that a particularly egregious commitment offense always will provide the requisite modicum of evidence to support the denial of parole, the assumption is inconsistent with the mandate that the Board and the Governor consider all relevant statutory factors when evaluating an inmate's suitability for parole and with the inmate's due process liberty interest in parole. The court noted that the immutable circumstances of the commitment offense will not provide some evidence inevitably supporting a decision that an inmate remains a threat to public safety when evidence of the inmate's rehabilitation and suitability for parole is overwhelming and the offense is both temporally remote and mitigated by circumstances indicating the conduct is not likely to recur.
- In re Shaputis (2008) 44 C4th 1241, 82 CR3d 213. In this companion case to Lawrence, the court clarified how courts should apply the some-evidence standard of review to evaluate the evidentiary value of the gravity of the commitment offense. The court stated that the determination whether an inmate poses a current threat to public safety does not depend on whether the commitment offense is more or less egregious than another or whether the circumstances of the offense exhibit viciousness above the minimum elements necessary for conviction of the offense. The relevant inquiry is whether the circumstances of the commitment offense, when considered in light of other facts in the record, are such that they continue to be predictive of current dangerousness many years after the commission of the offense. The inquiry is an individualized one, taking into account the passage of time and changes in the inmate's psychological and mental attitude.

Ø Note: For cases applying Lawrence and Shaputis, see, e.g., In re Reed (2009) 171 CA4th 1071, 1083, 90 CR3d 303 (failure to remain discipline-free, given Board's specific order that he do so, was some evidence that inmate was unsuitable for parole); In re Palermo (2009) 171 CA4th 1096, 1112, 90 CR3d 101 (given nature of crime, passage of time, inmate's rehabilitative efforts, positive psychological reports, and job prospects, no evidence supported Board's finding that he posed threat to public safety).

§47.35 (2) Duties of Counsel

The prisoner's counsel should meet with the prisoner as soon as possible after counsel is appointed. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2256. Counsel should be aware of the 45-day deadline to request a waiver with the presumption of validity (that shifts to a presumption of invalidity after the 45-day deadline) when scheduling the appointment. 15 Cal Code Regs §2253(b)(2)-(3).

Before the interview, counsel should review the Prisoner's central file ("C-file") and "board packet," obtained from the institution's "Lifer Desk," which contains most of the pertinent documentation including the probation officer's report, disciplinary violations, psychological reports, and "Board reports" (a report prepared by the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) for each life parole consideration hearing). At the first interview, counsel should obtain any pertinent information concerning the prisoner, such as recent "chronos" (informational notes about prisoners) that have not yet been placed in the prisoner's C-file, letters of support for parole, or contact information to obtain letters of support, and the transcript from the last parole suitability hearing. Counsel should review pertinent documents in the prisoner's C-file to ensure that there are no discrepancies, and review additional relevant documents excluded from the Prisoner board packet, such as the details of a particular disciplinary action (known as a "115") against the prisoner.

Ø Note: If this is not the first parole consideration hearing, counsel should review transcripts of prior hearings to learn what the prisoner has previously said about the facts of the life crime. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2247.

In determining the prisoner's suitability for parole, the panel may consider all "relevant, reliable information." 15 Cal Code Regs §2402(b). In addition, 15 Cal Code Regs §2402(c)-(d) lists specific factors the panel may consider in deciding whether a prisoner is suitable for parole. It should be noted, however, that these factors are intended only as general guidelines and that the significance of the presence or absence of any circumstance in a particular case is "left to the judgment of the panel." 15 Cal Code Regs §2402(c)-(d). Counsel should be aware of information that the panel will generally view as contraindications of parole suitability, such as the following:

- Prison gang membership or affiliation;
- An "R" suffix, indicating conviction for one or more serious sex offenses;
- One or more recent disciplinaries (CDC-115s, 15 Cal Code Regs §§3314-3315) or one or more administrative disciplinaries (CDC-128As, 15 Cal Code Regs §3312(a)(2)) for serious misconduct;
- Any CDC-115s, regardless of timing, that discipline the prisoner for violence or for drug or alcohol use;
- Comments in the current or most recent psychiatric or psychological evaluation predicting or indicating uncertainty about possible negative future behavior by the prisoner;

Ø Note: For the prisoner to have a meaningful opportunity for parole, the current psychological report, and probably the last several reports, should indicate, without condition, that the prisoner poses a low degree of threat for future violence. The panel will pay particular attention to the clinician's opinion about the prisoner's level of insight into the causative factors of his or her criminality. A current psychological diagnosis on Axis I or Axis II of the DMS IV, unless "in remission," or past psychiatric evaluations with negative comments or diagnoses that are not resolved, will seriously jeopardize the prisoner's possibility of receiving a parole date.

- If drugs or alcohol had any role in the commitment offense or in the prisoner's preprison lifestyle, failure to demonstrate ongoing participation in a program addressing addiction over a period of many years and current knowledge of the tenets of that program;

Ø Note: The prisoner's stated belief that he or she no longer desires drugs and that drugs are no longer an issue indicates to the BPH that the prisoner does not have a realistic prevention plan for drug or alcohol relapse. A prisoner without such a plan would pose a greater risk to the public and therefore probably would not be found suitable for parole.

- Failure to develop viable and recent parole plans, including a job offer and an offer of residence in the county to which he or she will be paroled or the country to which he or she will be deported. See In re Lawrence (2008) 44 C4th 1181, 1188, 82 CR3d 169. If deportation is a near certainty, the BPH cannot require the prisoner to have parole plans in California. See In re Andrade (2006) 141 CA4th 807, 46 CR3d 317. On deportation as the result of a criminal conviction, see chap 52.

The lack of realistic parole plans may be the biggest stumbling block in the way of parole for an otherwise suitable life prisoner. It is therefore very important for the prisoner's attorney to document the efforts the prisoner has made to formulate realistic parole plans and develop marketable job skills and to present evidence of these efforts to the hearing panel. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2402(d)(8). The best evidence of a realistic plan for release is undoubtedly an offer of a residence when released and a documentable job offer, but these are not always obtainable even when the prisoner appears otherwise to be a good candidate for release.

If it appears that the lack of a job offer will be an important factor in the denial of a parole date, counsel should make sure the record contains evidence showing that the prisoner "has developed marketable skills that can be put to use upon release" and should argue that the development of such skills demonstrates that the prisoner has an adequate parole plan within the meaning of 15 Cal Code Regs §2402(d)(8). In an appropriate case, counsel may also want to argue that the lack of a job offer does not constitute "some evidence" of unsuitability within the meaning of In re Lawrence (2008) 44 C4th 1181, 82 CR3d 169. In addition, denying parole to prisoners who lack a job offer may result disproportionately in the denial of parole to prisoners who have no families or whose families are poor. Prisoners whose families have greater social standing or wealth can usually find someone to provide employment opportunities.

The existence of any of the factors listed in this section could result in a finding that the prisoner is unsuitable for parole. Counsel will not be able to exclude negative information in the prisoner's central file from being considered by the hearing panel, so it is very important for counsel to find out from the prisoner whether controverting documentary evidence or responsive material is available. It is crucial to submit such evidence, or have the prisoner place it in the file. It is better practice to make sure that the panel is aware of negative factors, especially when the prisoner can discuss the negativity in a reasonable manner. This gives the panel the opportunity to make a finding of suitability in spite of negative factors by reasoning that the positive factors tending to show suitability outweigh the negative circumstances, making the person a reasonable candidate for parole. Failing to take negative factors into account is a ground for rescission of a parole date as improvidently given. See §§47.49-47.50. These documents may be submitted at the hearing (see 15 Cal Code Regs §§2247, 2249), but it is more courteous, and better practice, to provide them before the hearing.

In determining suitability, the hearing panel may consider other crimes that resulted in convictions, but these must be reliably documented. 15 Cal Code Regs §§2281(b), 2402(b), 2422(b), 2432(b).

Ø Practice tip: Counsel should argue that arrest reports do not constitute reliable documentation of the prisoner's involvement in "other criminal misconduct" under 15 Cal Code Regs §2402(b). On the reliability issues involved in arrest reports, see U.S. v Bell (8th Cir 1986) 785 F2d 640, 644.

Conduct that did not result in a conviction or a dismissal with a Harvey waiver is irrelevant unless the prisoner has admitted the illegal conduct or other evidence shows that the prisoner engaged in the conduct. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2000(b)(63) (material defined), (91) (relevancy defined). Despite this, BPH reports routinely include every arrest and charge on the prisoner's rap sheet, regardless of whether prosecuted or dismissed, and it is a common practice of hearing panels to ask the prisoner about dismissed or uncharged conduct. Counsel for the prisoner should object to these questions. If the panel persists in asking such questions, counsel should instruct the prisoner not to answer.

Counsel should find out about the prisoner's in-prison accomplishments (completion of programs and courses; obtaining a general education, high school, or college degree; vocational training; and attendance at self-help groups or programs addressing addiction). Counsel should make sure that documentation on these accomplishments is in the file or available at the hearing. If the prisoner's commitment offense or preprison lifestyle involved drugs or alcohol, the panel will want to know the extent of the prisoner's in-prison attendance at, and knowledge of the tenets of, drug or alcohol rehabilitation programs. It is advisable for the prisoner to have support on the street such as an AA or an NA sponsor. Counsel should present that information to the panel.

Ø Note: If the prisoner participates in Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) or Narcotics Anonymous (NA), expect the hearing panel to ask about the prisoner's knowledge of the 12 steps.

The Division of Adult Parole Operations (DAPO) has assistance programs for parolees. See Pen C §5060. However, parole will not commit any resources before release and the prisoner must have viable and realistic plans at the hearing. Requesting help of DAPO is not a realistic option and will only cause frustration for both the prisoner and the panel.

In most cases, the negative indications for suitability discussed in this section foreclose any realistic possibility that the panel will find the prisoner suitable for parole. In that situation, counsel may decide to advise the prisoner to waive the hearing or stipulate to unsuitability for some period of time. It is advisable to waive the hearing, when possible, rather than stipulating to unsuitability, because a waiver does not require the prisoner to state that he or she is unsuitable for parole. When stipulating is unavoidable, stress to the prisoner that if he or she accomplishes the goals that he or she has set out in the request to stipulate to unsuitability, it will increase his or her future credibility with the BPH and may even be looked at as a turning point in the prisoner's rehabilitation.

§47.36 b. District Attorney Representative

A representative of the district attorney's office from the county of conviction must be invited to attend and participate in the hearing to represent the People's interests. That person should be, but does not have to be, an attorney. Pen C §3041.7. See also Pen C §3042; 15 Cal Code Regs §2030(b) (notice of hearing must be sent to district attorney's office at least 30 days before hearing). Before the hearing, the CDCR will send an information packet, commonly referred to as the "board packet," to the prisoner's counsel, the district attorney, and the BPH. This packet should contain excerpts from the prisoner's central file (C-file), including Board reports, psychological reports, letters of support, responses to Pen C §§3042 and 3043 notices, records of any prior hearings, and hearing notification documentation.

Even if the attorney assigned to represent the prosecutor's office does not intend to make a personal appearance at the parole hearing, he or she should send a letter to the BPH stating the position of the prosecution and the reasons for it, especially if the office opposes parole. A great variety of materials may be submitted to the BPH at the hearing, including important sections of the trial transcript, police reports, photographs, and autopsy protocols.

In addition, reports and other documentation on previous crimes committed by the prisoner may be submitted. This material must be submitted 10 days before the Monday preceding the hearing. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2030(c).

It is not uncommon and is accepted practice for a representative from the district attorney's office to appear at the hearing via video teleconferencing.

> Ø Warning: Counsel should be particularly careful to observe the 10-day rule on submission of supplementary materials. Expect an objection to the panel considering any materials submitted after the 10 days in violation of Pen C §3041.5(a), and expect that objection to be sustained. Occasionally, material presented within the 10 days will be admitted if the same office had submitted similar materials opposing parole in the past.

As soon as is feasible, the CDCR will forward copies of new documents submitted by the district attorney's representative to the prisoner and/or the prisoner's counsel. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2030(c). The hearing panel must review all materials submitted if relevant and reliable. Pen C §3043.5; 15 Cal Code Regs §2042(b). The prisoner's attorney must be notified if the prosecutor will attend. 15 Cal Code Regs §2030(b).

> Ø Note: The attorney representing the district attorney's office may want to contact the victim or the next of kin of a deceased victim and inform (or remind) him or her of the right to attend the hearing. Pen C §3043. BPH hearing panels are occasionally intimidated by the appearance of victims or victims' representatives and are sometimes disinclined to grant parole because of their statements. On victim's rights at a parole consideration hearing, see also Pen C §§3043.2, 3043.25, 3043.5(b).

§47.37 4. Additional Individuals Who May Attend or Submit Information

Media representatives may attend a parole consideration hearing with the BPH's permission, but they may not participate in the hearing. 15 Cal Code Regs §§2031-2032.

Observers for educational or informational purposes are allowed with prior approval, but may not participate in the hearing. 15 Cal Code Regs §2029.1.

In addition, anyone interested in the grant or denial of parole may submit, as part of the record, a statement of that person's views supporting or opposing parole. All such statements must be considered by the hearing panel. Pen C §3043.5.

§47.38 5. Hearing Procedures

A panel of the BPH determining a life prisoner's suitability for parole is an administrative body. It follows procedures set out in Title 15 of the California Code of Regulations. Criteria for determining suitability for parole are set out in 15 Cal Code Reg §§2281 and 2402, but the BPH is vested with very broad discretion in considering these factors and determining what weight to give them. In re Lawrence (2008) 44 C4th 1181, 1204, 82 CR3d 169; In re Dannenberg (2005) 34 C4th 1061, 23 CR3d 417; In re Fain (1976) 65 CA3d 376, 389, 135 CR 543. See In re Cerny (2009) 178 CA4th 1303, 1315, 101 CR3d 200. "The exercise of this discretion involves the deliberate assessment of a wide array of individualized factors on a case-by-case basis, and the striking of a balance between the interests of the inmate and of the public." In re Fain, supra. Procedural rules, including the rules of evidence, are somewhat relaxed. The BPH is "not required to proceed with the formality required of the courts." In re Powell (1988) 45 C3d 894, 904, 248 CR 431, quoting from In re Stanton (1915) 169 C 607, 609, 147 P 264.

Hearings are held in a designated hearing room. The prisoner is brought into the room and sits with counsel across from the hearing panel. The prisoner is placed under oath.

The hearing usually follows a chronological format, and proceeds from past, to present, to future. The "past" addresses the commitment offense, prior criminal history, and prior social, family, educational, and job history. See §47.40. The "present" addresses institutional adjustment, including psychological status. See §47.41. The "future" addresses parole plans and plans for the future if a date is given. See §47.42.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.39 a. Preliminary Matters

The presiding commissioner first puts the case factors on the record. The case factors are the commitment offense and other noncontrolling offenses, the case numbers, the county of commitment, and the prisoner's name and CDCR number. All parties then identify themselves for the record, spelling their last names. The commissioner then goes over the prisoner's rights under Armstrong v Davis (9th Cir 2001) 275 F3d 849 (required accommodations for disabled prisoners under Americans with Disabilities Act). Finally, the commissioner reviews the prisoner's rights, and rules on any objections made by the prisoner through counsel. At the beginning of the hearing, counsel may challenge the impartiality of the panel or a panel member to the hearing panel itself; the prisoner has the burden of proving that the panel or any member is not impartial. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2250; O'Bremski v Maass (9th Cir 1990) 915 F2d 418, 422.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.40 b. Precommitment Matters

Commitment offense. After preliminary matters are taken care of, the presiding commissioner puts on the record the facts of the commitment offense, using the facts found in an appellate court opinion or, if no appellate decision is available, the facts stated in the probation officer's report. The panel takes as true the appellate court's factual findings or, if there are none, the statement of facts in the probation officer's report. The prisoner may refuse to admit guilt or to discuss the facts of the crime; any refusal may not be held against the prisoner. Pen C §5011(b); 15 Cal Code Regs §2236.

Ø Warning: Experienced practitioners disagree on whether it is advisable for the inmate to exercise his or her right not to admit guilt of a crime of which he or she was convicted. Some practitioners believe that prisoners who fail to discuss their culpability in the commitment offense have virtually no chance of being found suitable for parole. Other practitioners believe that the prisoner has no obligation to discuss the crime, and doing so can only create further questioning by the panel which will ultimately be used to deny parole. However, because the BPH has almost limitless discretion in determining a life prisoner's suitability for parole (see In re Dannenberg (2005) 34 C4th 1061, 23 CR3d 417), it would be all but impossible to establish that a finding of unsuitability was improperly based on the prisoner's decision to exercise his or her rights under Pen C §5011(b).

A prisoner who does agree to discuss the facts of the crime should be prepared to be cross-examined about the life crime by the hearing panel and the district attorney's representative, if one is present. Whether or not the prisoner chooses to discuss the facts of the crime, the panel must attempt to determine the extent of the prisoner's personal culpability. 15 Cal Code Regs §2236.

Some attorneys advise the client not to discuss the commitment offense if other deficiencies indicate that the granting of a date is unlikely. There are two reasons. First, prisoner testimony about the offense or related matters will be used by subsequent panels to impeach the prisoner and may cause irreparable harm. Prisoner testimony is particularly dangerous at an initial hearing, because the prisoner is unfamiliar with the procedure, may be particularly stressed, and is very unlikely to receive a date in any event. Testimony in such circumstances cannot benefit the prisoner in future hearings, and it may do a great deal of harm. Second, as a rule, hearing panels and district attorney representatives view any sanitizing of the facts or refusal to accept complete guilt as failing to come to grips with the commitment offense and as lacking remorse and insight, making the prisoner an unsuitable candidate for parole.

If other factors suggest that there is a realistic chance of getting a parole date, counsel should consider advising the prisoner to discuss the commitment offense. It is unrealistic for a life prisoner to expect to obtain parole unless he or she can discuss that offense in detail, although parole has been granted in circumstances where the prisoner discussed the offense at previous hearings, but not at the hearing where the BPH granted parole. This is the appropriate time for the prisoner to express remorse for his or her actions and demonstrate understanding of the factors that led to the commission of the offense and its ramifications. Counsel should advise the prisoner that it is essential to be unflinchingly self-critical in any discussions of his or her criminal past and the circumstances involving the commitment offense. The prisoner should be counseled to use direct and honest language and avoid words or phrases that suggest a sanitizing of the past or shifting the blame to a codefendant or the victim. Any failure to admit established elements of the crime will be seen by the district attorney's representative, and sometimes the panel, as a failure to come to grips with the commitment offense and as negating any expression of remorse.

Prior convictions and social history. The panel then considers prior convictions and reliably documented criminal behavior that did not result in a conviction. 15 Cal Code Regs §§2281, 2402(b). Counsel should argue that arrest reports are not reliable enough to support a finding of unsuitability. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2404(b). On the reliability issues involved in arrest reports, see U.S. v Bell (8th Cir 1986) 785 F2d 640, 644.

Finally, the panel considers the prisoner's social history, including, but not limited to, family background, relationship with family members, education, military service, drug or alcohol abuse, and psychological issues.

§47.41 c. Institutional Behavior

The second substantive stage of the hearing focuses on institutional behavior or adjustment. See 15 Cal Code Regs §§2281(c)(6), 2281(d)(9) (life prisoners), 2402(c)(6), 2402(d)(9) (prisoners convicted of murder). Ordinarily, the second commissioner, usually a deputy commissioner, conducts this part of the hearing with the prisoner's C-file as a reference.

The panel presumes that the prisoner's conduct in prison reflects rehabilitation (or its lack) and maturation. Thus, in-prison misconduct presents a serious problem. Specifically, the panel looks at the prisoner's disciplinary history, participation in self-help and therapy groups (e.g., programs addressing addiction, victim awareness groups, prisoner-youth prevention groups, anger management, stress reduction), educational and vocational upgrading, performance in work assignments, current psychological and board reports, laudatory "chronos" (informational notes about prisoners), and any other relevant information about the prisoner's incarceration. Remorse and insight may also be issues.

The institutional adjustment portion of the hearing ordinarily addresses five areas ("compliance areas") in which the prisoner must demonstrate progress in order to obtain a parole date: education, vocational training, self-help, psychological reports, and disciplinary history.

Ø Note: A sixth mandatory compliance area, "parole plans," is addressed in the third phase of the suitability hearing.

Education. A prisoner must obtain at least a high school equivalency (either a GED or a high school diploma is sufficient) if he or she is capable of doing so. Additional higher education is viewed positively, but is not a threshold requirement.

Vocational training. The prisoner must generally complete a vocational training program within an institution. See 15 Cal Code Regs §§2281(d)(8) (life crimes other than murder), 2402(d)(8) (murder). In other words, during his or her time in the custody of the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) the prisoner must complete training in a recognized trade, e.g., mill and cabinet making, refrigeration, auto body, office services, computer technology. If the prisoner was an experienced professional or tradesperson before the commitment offense, the requirement may be waived. In addition, some prisoners of advanced age who are not likely to obtain employment on release and who can indicate prospective income from Social Security benefits may have the requirement waived. In addition, one or more job offers from relatives with offers to train the prisoner may suffice in individual cases. Multiple vocations are regarded positively. Information on vocational and self-help achievements is found under the "Miscellaneous" section of the prisoner package.

Self-help. Prisoners are expected to avail themselves of all available self-help programs. See 15 Cal Code Regs §§2281(d)(9) (life crimes other than murder), 2402(d)(9) (murder). Given the general unavailability of individual or group psychotherapy, it is a common expectation for prisoners to attend rehabilitative group programs. The most common groups are Alcoholics or Narcotics Anonymous (AA or NA), but there are also groups that deal with anger and stress management, violence prevention, and youth diversion, to name a few. The availability of such programs varies from institution to institution.

During the parole suitability hearing, the prisoner should expect to be questioned about his or her understanding of the basic tenets of the programs and how he or she has incorporated these principles into daily life. If the prisoner's life offense involved drugs or alcohol, BPH expects the prisoner to participate in substance abuse prevention counseling and to have concrete plans for substance abuse counseling in the community if paroled. Strong parole candidates have information about programs in their local communities, and many already have AA or NA sponsors, or other support systems, available to them outside the prison system.

Ø Note: If institutional programs are limited, or if there are specific issues such as domestic violence in the life prisoner's past and no groups in the prison to address the issue, the lifer should seek counseling materials from the community and prepare documentation to provide to the BPH in the form of a report that outlines the materials studied, including the basic principles presented in the materials and their effect on the prisoner.

Psychological reports. Hearing panels want to know what, if any, psychological issues were involved in causing the commitment offense; what, if anything, is currently psychologically wrong with, troubling about, or unknown about the prisoner (such as the likelihood and effect of returning to drugs or alcohol if either played a role in the prisoner's commitment offense or precommitment lifestyle); and how dangerous he or she is—meaning what is the likelihood that the prisoner will resort to future criminality? See 15 Cal Code Regs §§2281(c)(5) (life crimes other than murder), 2402(c)(5) (murder). The latter is expressed as the clinician's opinion of the prisoner's risks for future violence. A prisoner who is not found to have a low risk of future dangerousness is unlikely to be paroled.

Historically, psychological reports varied greatly in quality and depth and frequent complaints were heard by hearing panels regarding the quality of reports made by prison psychologists, which frequently fail to recognize or resolve problems or issues identified in previous reports or in earlier psychological testing. In 2007, the Forensic Assessment Division (FAD) of the BPH took responsibility for the psychological reports. The BPH issued a guideline on January 1, 2009, for psychological reports that limits the scope of psychological reports to the clinician's opinion of future violence potential, that requires the clinician to use specific assessment tools to evaluate the prisoner, and that does not allow panels to order clinicians to address issues specific to the prisoner such as likelihood of relapse to drugs or level of remorse.

Prisoners who disagree with the clinician's report will have the opportunity during the hearing to present evidence that contradicts the psychological report as well as an opinion as to their own psychological state. Inmates can present independent evaluations, however a report made by an outside psychiatrist or psychologist is likely to be regarded with suspicion.

Disciplinary history. The prisoner must attempt to remain discipline-free for his or her entire period of incarceration. See 15 Cal Code Regs §§2281(d)(9) (life crimes other than murder), 2402(d)(9) (murder). At the very minimum, the prisoner should be discipline-free for at least the previous 5 years before the suitability hearing, and possibly longer, depending on the nature, frequency, and seriousness of previous disciplinaries received.

Although classification scores themselves are not considered at the hearing, the prisoner should have a classification score of less than 51 points (level-three prison custody or less).

> Ø Note: Depending on several CDCR institutional factors, a prisoner can reduce his or her classification score by only 4, 6, or 8 points each year. A single serious 115 can add 15 or more points to the classification score. A prisoner with a poor disciplinary history can accumulate a classification score of as many as 300 points after 20 years in prison. Although it is acknowledged that the point system is a CDCR function and not specifically a BPH parole consideration, it is nevertheless common knowledge that a level-four classification does not bode well for a finding of suitability.

§47.42 d. Parole Plans

After institutional adjustment is considered, the panel considers the prisoner's plan for residence and support after release. See 15 Cal Code Regs §§2281(d)(8) (life crimes other than murder), 2402(d)(8) (murder). Ordinarily, prisoners are paroled to the county in which they resided at the time of the commitment offense, but the prisoner may be paroled to another county if it is in the prisoner's or the public's best interest. Pen C §3003(a)-(b).

Also, under the Interstate Compact for Adult Offender Supervision (ICAOS) (Pen C §11180), California can request transfer of a paroling offender to another compact state up to 120 days before the planned prison release date (ICAOS Rule 3.105(a)). See http://www.interstatecompact.org. Generally, out-of-state transfers occur after the inmate has been granted parole. Thus, if the only support is outside California, then the inmate should find a transitional living arrangement such as a half-way house.

The prisoner should always submit a plan for parole within California. Also, if the prisoner has out-of-state parole support, the prisoner should submit multiple parole plans. The prisoner should also obtain and submit information about the viability of an out-of-state transfer through the interstate compact agreement. It is presumed that the prisoner will be paroled to the county of last legal residence (Pen C §3000(a)), which is usually the committing county. However, the BPH can parole the prisoner to the county where he or she is most likely to succeed on parole. Pen C §3000(b). The prisoner should submit both residence and employment plans for any jurisdictions to which the prisoner seeks to be paroled.

Prisoners with immigration holds should first determine whether or not they are certain to be deported. If deportation is certain, the prisoner should submit parole plans for the country of deportation. In re Andrade (2006) 141 CA4th 807, 46 CR3d 317. If there is a question whether the prisoner will be deported, he or she should develop parole plans both in California and in the country of deportation.

The parole plan should include an offer of residential placement and a job offer. These offers should be in the same geographic area, and if possible, within commuting distance of one another. Although the regulations require "marketable skills," the strongest candidates will have job offers. 15 Cal Code Regs §§2281(d)(8), 2402(d)(8).

The commissioner usually goes over the prisoner's support letters, making them part of the record, and sometimes discusses the letters with the prisoner. During this section of the hearing, the prisoner should also be prepared to discuss his or her intentions about continuing in self-help or therapy groups (e.g., AA/NA, counseling, church) on release, and should demonstrate knowledge of specific programs available in the community to which the prisoner expects to be released.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.43 e. Concluding Matters

Penal Code §3042 letters. After presenting evidence on the offense and other precommitment factors, the prisoner's prison record, and future plans, the presiding commissioner goes over letters from interested parties submitted under Pen C §§3042 and 3043.5. Section 3042 requires the BPH to send notification of a parole suitability hearing to the trial judge, the defendant's attorney, the prosecuting attorney, the investigating law enforcement agency, and in the case of a murder of a peace officer, the employer of the victim, at least 30 days before the hearing, and gives those entitled to notice a right to submit a statement of views in support of or opposition to parole. Section 3043.5 extends the right to submit views on the prisoner's release to "any person interested in the grant or denial of parole." These letters usually oppose a finding of suitability.

Clarifying questions for prisoner. Prior to summations, the commissioners, the district attorney, and the prisoner's attorney can ask clarifying questions. 15 Cal Code Regs §§2030(d)(2) (prosecutor), 2247 (prisoner). By listening to what the panel says at the hearing, counsel should be able to correct errors in their understanding of the facts of the crime, prior criminal background, in-prison behavior, and in-prison accomplishments. The attorney can also give the life prisoner an opportunity to address the subject of remorse for the offense that led to commitment and for his or her involvement in other crimes or activities that produced victims. It is essential that the prisoner discuss both remorse and insight into the causes of his or her criminality in real terms, avoiding empty generalizations.

The prisoner also has a right to ask questions (15 Cal Code Regs §2247), but this right is rarely exercised.

Summation. At the end of the hearing, the prosecutor from the county of commitment, or his or her representative, if present, gives a summation of the people's position and, if the people oppose parole, the length of the denial that should be given. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2030(d)(2).

This is followed by the prisoner's counsel's summation. If the prosecutor makes claims that counsel cannot verify as accurate, the prisoner's attorney should query the prisoner about the accuracy of the prosecutor's statements. Rebuttal to such claims should be incorporated into counsel's closing arguments. The prisoner's counsel should be able to tell the panel why the prisoner should be paroled or for how many years the denial of parole should last. See Pen C §3041.5(b).

Statements by victim and victim's family. After closing statements from both sides but before deliberation, the victim, next of kin, or family members may make a statement of their views on any felonies or crimes with personal injuries, the life crime, the person responsible for these crimes, and the prisoner's suitability for parole. See Pen C §§3043, 3043.6.

Decision. Finally, the panel adjourns to consider the matter, and then returns to announce its decision on suitability. If the panel finds the prisoner suitable for parole, it must then set a term.

6. Determination

§47.44 a. Broad Discretion

Penal Code §3041 provides that the BPH must set a release date for indeterminate life prisoners unless it determines that the gravity of the current offense, or the timing and gravity of current or past offenses, is such that public safety requires a more lengthy incarceration period. This statutory language and the BPH regulations governing parole decisions create an expectation in parole, giving rise to a protected liberty interest. In re Rosenkrantz (2002) 29 C4th 616, 654, 661, 128 CR2d 104. Accordingly, the factual basis for a BPH decision granting or denying parole is subject to limited judicial review to ensure the decision comports with the requirements of due process. The standard of review is extremely deferential. The Board's discretion in parole matters is "great" and resolution of any conflicts in the evidence and the weight to be given the evidence are within the authority of the Board. 29 C4th at 656. A BPH decision will be upheld when premised on some evidence relevant to the factors it is required to consider. 29 C4th 664. See also In re Cerny (2009) 178 CA4th 1303, 101 CR3d 200; In re Powell (1988) 45 C3d 894, 904, 248 CR 431 (applying standard to rescission of parole date).

Ø Note: Because the Governor's authority to review decisions of the BPH is limited to an evaluation of the same factors that the Board considered, which give rise to a protected liberty interest, the Governor's parole decisions are also subject to limited judicial review under the "some evidence" standard. Rosenkrantz, 29 C4th at 664.

In In re Dannenberg (2005) 34 C4th 1061, 23 CR3d 417, the California Supreme Court emphasized the extensive scope of the parole board's discretion and the limited nature of judicial review of its decisions, holding that "the overriding statutory concern for public safety in the individual case trumps any expectancy the indeterminate life inmate may have in a term of comparative equality with those served by other similar offenders" (34 C4th at 1084) and concluding that "[t]he BPT acts properly in determining unsuitability, and the inmate receives all constitutional process due, if the Board provides the requisite procedural rights, applies relevant standards, and renders a decision supported by 'some evidence.'" 34 C4th at 1071. In this context, "some evidence" simply means that, in support of its decision, the Board must be able to point to "factors beyond the minimum elements of the crime for which the inmate was committed." 34 C4th at 1071. Such factors could involve the crime itself, prior crimes, or another unsuitability factor, such as the prisoner's institutional adjustment.

In In re Lawrence (2008) 44 C4th 1181, 82 CR3d 169, and the companion case In re Shaputis (2008) 44 C4th 1241, 82 CR3d 213, the California Supreme Court granted review to resolve a growing conflict among appellate courts concerning the proper scope of the deferential "some evidence" standard of review. The court held that because the core statutory determination of both the Board and the Governor is whether the inmate poses a current threat to public safety, when a court reviews a decision of the Board or the Governor, the relevant inquiry is whether some evidence supports the decision that the inmate constitutes a current threat to public safety and not merely whether some evidence confirms the existence of certain factual findings. In re Lawrence, 44 C4th at 1191; In re Shaputis, 44 C4th at 1254. With regard to immutable factors such as the circumstances of the commitment offense or an inmate's criminal history, some evidence will support a denial of parole decision only if those facts support the ultimate conclusion that an inmate continues to pose an unreasonable risk to public safety. The relevant inquiry for a reviewing court is whether the identified facts are probative to the central issue of current dangerousness. In re Shaputis, 44 C4th at 1254. For cases applying Lawrence and Shaputis, see, e.g., In re Reed (2009) 171 CA4th 1071, 1083, 90 CR3d 303 (failure to remain discipline-free, given Board's specific order that he do so, was some evidence that inmate was unsuitable for parole); In re Palermo (2009) 171 CA4th 1096, 1106, 90 CR3d 101 (given nature of crime, time elapsed since crime, affirmative evidence of preconviction and postconviction conduct and current mental state, and future prospects if granted parole, no evidence supported Board's finding that inmate posed threat to public safety).

While the BPH may not adopt an across-the-board policy denying parole on the basis of the type of offense committed (In re Minnis (1972) 7 C3d 639, 647, 102 CR 749; In re Rosenkrantz, supra), it can be difficult to prove that this is what the Board in fact has done, given the deferential view of what constitutes "some evidence." It is important for the prisoner's attorney to argue to the hearing panel that Biggs v Terhune (9th Cir 2003) 334 F3d 910; In re Lawrence, supra; In re Shaputis, supra; and In re Dannenberg, supra, do not allow the BPH to use unchanging factors such as the commitment offense and prior criminality, without more, to deny parole. There must be a nexus between the immutable circumstances of the commitment offense or the inmate's criminality and his or her current threat to public safety.

§47.45 b. Prisoner Found Unsuitable for Parole

On November 4, 2008, the voters of California passed Proposition 9 (Marsy's Law), the Victims' Bill of Rights of 2008. In addition to increasing the scope of victims and victim participation in parole suitability hearings, Marsy's Law significantly changed the denial scheme. Before Marsy's Law, if the BPH did not find the prisoner suitable for parole, subsequent hearings occurred annually thereafter unless the BPH further found that a longer period of time was required before the next hearing because the prisoner would not likely be found suitable in the interim. Former Pen C §3041.5(b)(2)(A). This finding permitted the BPH to defer the next hearing for up to 5 years if the commitment offense was murder, or for up to 2 years if it was any other life crime.

Marsy's Law substantially changed Pen C §3041.5(b) by eliminating the distinction between murderers and nonmurderers, and by creating denial lengths of 3, 5, 7, 10, and 15 years. The new denial scheme requires the panel to consider the views and interests of the victims in setting the next hearing. To give less than 15 years, the panel must find by clear and convincing evidence that, considering the victim and public safety, the inmate does not require a more lengthy incarceration than 10 years. Likewise, to set the next hearing date in less than 10 years, the panel must find by clear and convincing evidence that, considering the victim and public safety, the prisoner does not require a more lengthy period of incarceration than 7 years. There is no evidentiary standard proscribed for distinguishing between 7-, 5-, or 3-year denials. Pen C §3041.5(b)(3).

Inmates are now afforded the opportunity to petition the BPH to advance the next hearing date where there is a change in circumstances or new information makes it reasonably likely that, considering the victim and public safety, the prisoner does not require an additional period of incarceration. Pen C §§3041.5(b)(4), (d)(1)-(3).

Multiyear denials of up to 5 years have been held not to violate the Ex Post Facto Clause. California Dep't of Corrections v Morales (1995) 514 US 499, 507, 131 L Ed 2d 588, 595, 115 S Ct 1597. The new denial scheme will undoubtedly face judicial scrutiny related to the Ex Post Facto Clause.

Offense committed on or before July 1, 1977. The Ex Post Facto Clause applies to the granting or denial of parole. In re Stanworth (1982) 33 C3d 176, 183, 187 CR 783. Under Stanworth, a life prisoner who committed an offense before July 1, 1977, when the determinate sentencing law was enacted, is entitled to a second term setting, called a PBR (Parole Board Rules) or Stanworth hearing, under the formula in effect at the time of the offense. The more favorable of the term calculations controls. Attorneys are not permitted in Stanworth hearings. In re DeMond (1985) 165 CA3d 932, 935, 211 CR 680.

§47.46 c. Prisoner Found Suitable

When a prisoner is found suitable for parole, the BPH must fix a term, which will be used in projecting the prisoner's release date. The term must be set in a way that will provide uniform terms of imprisonment for similar offenses, measured in terms of the gravity of the offense and the threat it poses to the public. See Pen C §3041(a). Fixing the term is referred to as a "term set."

The BPH has established term set matrices for the major life crimes:

- Pre-November 8, 1978, first degree murder. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2282(b).
- Kidnapping. 15 Cal Code Regs §2282(c).
- First degree murder (attempted first degree murder is one-half of this matrix). 15 Cal Code Regs §2403(a)-(b), (d). See Pen C §664.
- Second degree murder. 15 Cal Code Regs §2403(c).
- Habitual offenders sentenced to life terms under Pen C §667.7. 15 Cal Code Regs §2423(b).
- Sex offenders sentenced to life terms under Pen C §667.61. 15 Cal Code Regs §2433.

Life crimes for which no matrix has been provided by regulation receive terms based on those provided for offenses of similar gravity and magnitude. 15 Cal Code Regs §2282(d).

Ø Note: In some cases, counsel may consider suggesting an appropriate base term (see 15 Cal Code Regs §2282(a), §2403, or §2423) because the categories often overlap, and the difference between matrix columns and rows may mean several additional years in prison. Counsel may also argue factors in aggravation and mitigation.

The remaining elements of a "term set" (e.g., aggravating and mitigating factors, weapons enhancements, prior prison terms, and other offenses) are set forth in the regulations following the term matrixes indicated above.

From the term set, the hearing panel will deduct any credits it awards to the prisoner for time served in prison on the life crime. See 15 Cal Code Regs §§2290, 2410-2411, 2429, 2439.

When a life prisoner is found suitable and given a projected future release date that is less than 10 months after the hearing, no "progress hearing" will be scheduled to consider further time credits for performance, participation, or behavior. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2269(b)(1). When the parole date is more than 10 months after the hearing, progress hearings will be scheduled at intervals specified in the regulations to consider granting credit. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2269.

It is very common that when a lifer is found suitable, he or she has already served time under the appropriate matrix. A lifer who has served time in excess of the base term is entitled to immediate release but not to credit towards time on parole. In re Bush (2008) 161 CA4th 133, 138, 74 CR3d 256.

7. Review of Panel's Decision

§47.47 a. En Banc Review

At the close of any parole hearing for a life prisoner, any member of the hearing panel can request en banc review of the panel's decision. When en banc review is requested, a prisoner can be granted parole only if a majority of the full Board votes in favor of parole. Pen C §3041(a). The need for en banc review arises when one panel member believes that the prisoner is suitable for parole and the other believes that he or she is not suitable, or when the panel members do not agree on the period of the denial.

All proposed decisions relating to parole for life prisoners may be reviewed by the Board's Chief Counsel or a designee after the hearing, and all grants of parole and a random sample of denials are reviewed. 15 Cal Code Regs §2041(h). Proposed decisions become final 120 days after the hearing. Pen C §3041(b); 15 Cal Code Regs §2041(h).

Ø Note: The legal staff of the BPH are employees of CDCR, assigned to work there by CDCR's General Counsel, although the Chief Counsel now reports directly to the Executive Officer of the Board.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.47A b. Executive Case Summaries

After a hearing panel grants parole, the decision, together with the prisoner's central file and all case information, goes to the Chief Counsel of the BPH, who supervises the preparation of an executive case summary for the Governor. An analyst goes through every page of the prisoner's central file and the transcript of the decision, producing a report covering each factor of suitability and unsuitability. Likewise, the prisoner's entire confidential folder is reviewed and, when relevant, is incorporated into the case summary report. After approval by the Chief Counsel, the report goes to the Governor with the decision for review.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.47B c. Review by General Counsel; Review by Governor

As part of the decision review process, and armed with the executive case summary, the Chief Counsel or designee may affirm the panel's decision, order a new hearing, or modify the decision. If he or she affirms the decision or modifies it in a way that does not adversely affect the prisoner, the proposed decision becomes final no later than 120 days after the hearing. Pen C §3041(b); 15 Cal Code Regs §2041(h).

If the Chief Counsel or designee reviews new information that is adverse to the prisoner, the new information will be sent to the prisoner and counsel, who may respond to it in writing "within a reasonable amount of time." 15 Cal Code Regs §2041(h). If the proposed modification is adverse to the prisoner, the matter must be referred to the Board for en banc review. A new hearing will be held on majority vote of the en banc Board. 15 Cal Code Regs §2041(h). The prisoner may waive the right to the new hearing and accept the proposed modification. 15 Cal Code Regs §2041(j). A prisoner who was represented by counsel at the first hearing has 10 days to consult with counsel before waiving the new hearing. 15 Cal Code Regs §2041(j).

> Ø Practice tip: Counsel representing the prisoner at a new hearing should review the prior decision and find out why it was disapproved and by whom, who testified at that hearing and who did not, and what evidence was available at that hearing. The rehearing should be conducted in a manner that allows the new panel to avoid mistakes made during the first hearing. Counsel should focus the new panel on the issues that caused the case to be sent back to the BPH during the decision review process, and make suggestions to resolve the issues.

Finally, when the commitment offense is murder, under Cal Const art V, §8(b), the Governor may reverse or modify any parole decision within 30 days after the date the decision becomes final as to the BPH. Pen C §3041.2; In re Arafiles (1992) 6 CA4th 1467, 1474, 8 CR2d 492.

> Ø Note: In nonmurder cases, the Governor cannot reverse the decision but can request that the BPH reconsider the case en banc.

If the Governor reverses or modifies any decision, he or she must send a written statement to the inmate, stating the reasons for the reversal or modification. Pen C §3041.2(b). This gubernatorial power does not violate constitutional ex post facto clauses. In re Rosenkrantz (2002) 29 C4th 616, 638, 128 CR2d 104; Johnson v Gomez (9th Cir 1996) 92 F3d 964. Like the BPH when it determines suitability for parole, the Governor has exceptionally broad discretion in reversing a grant of parole. In re Rosenkrantz, 29 C4th at 652. However, the decision cannot be arbitrary and capricious, and it must be supported by some evidence that the inmate poses a current threat to public safety. In re Lawrence (2008) 44 C4th 1181, 1227, 82 CR3d 169 (immutable circumstances of commitment offense did not constitute some evidence in support of Governor's reversal of Board's grant of parole); In re Shaputis (2008) 44 C4th 1241, 1259, 82 CR3d 213 (committing offense and failure to gain insight into previous violent behavior constituted some evidence supporting Governor's decision that petitioner was currently a threat to public safety); In re Scott (2005) 133 CA4th 573, 34 CR3d 905 (Governor's reversal of Board's grant of parole not supported by "some evidence"). When there is no evidence to support the Governor's reversal of the Board's decision to grant parole, the court has the authority to reinstate the Board's decision without remanding the matter to the Governor. In re Masoner (2009) 179 CA4th 1531, 1534, 102 CR3d 463.

Even after the time for review by the BPH or intervention by the Governor has expired, a parole decision favorable to the prisoner can be rescinded for any of the reasons stated in 15 Cal Code Regs §2450. For discussion, see §§47.49-47.50.

§47.48 8. Release

A life prisoner may be released on parole if each of the following conditions is met:

- The prisoner is found suitable at a life parole consideration hearing.
- A Pen C §3041.2 Governor's review has not resulted in reversing the grant of parole.
- At least 60 days have passed since the hearing at which parole was granted. Pen C §3042(b).
- Neither the Governor nor the Board has instituted en banc proceedings. See Pen C §3041.1; 15 Cal Code Regs §2044.
- The term fixed by the BPH, less applicable credits, has been served in its entirety.

B. Rescission of Parole Date

§47.49 1. Life Parole Rescission Hearing

Even after a life prisoner has been granted a parole date and the time for review of the decision has passed, the date can be rescinded under various circumstances. See 15 Cal Code Regs §2451 (decision to initiate rescission proceedings is wholly within the BPH's discretion).

Prisoner has right to hearing. Procedural due process requires a hearing for the rescission of a previously set parole date. In re Powell (1988) 45 C3d 894, 901, 248 CR 431. Ordinarily, a rescission hearing must occur before release on parole. In re Fain (1983) 145 CA3d 540, 552, 193 CR 483. However, rescission may occur after release, if the parole grant is found unlawful. In re Johnson (1995) 35 CA4th 160, 173, 41 CR2d 449. A rescission hearing occurs in one of the following circumstances: (1) misconduct after the grant, (2) new information unknown to the granting panel, or (3) fundamental error in the grant of parole.

Misconduct or new information. A parole date can be rescinded when events that occur, or information that is received, after the grant of parole, suggest that the prisoner should not be released. 15 Cal Code Regs §2451. Prisoner misconduct is perhaps the most common subsequently occurring ground for rescission. Examples of misconduct that can result in rescission include escape attempts, assaults, weapon possession, or possession of controlled substances. 15 Cal Code Regs §2451(a). Rescission can also be based on psychiatric deterioration. 15 Cal Code Regs §2451(b). When the decision involves after-occurring conduct or information not available to the panel that found the prisoner suitable for parole (the "granting panel"), the rescission panel will determine whether the granting panel would maintain its decision, given the new information.

Ø Note: Under 15 Cal Code Regs §2451, CDCR staff members must report conduct that might result in rescission of a parole date to the BPH.

Fundamental errors. A parole date can also be rescinded if "fundamental errors occurred resulting in the improvident granting of a parole date." 15 Cal Code Regs §2451(c); In re Powell (1988) 45 C3d 894, 902, 248 CR 431; In re Johnson (1995) 35 CA4th 160, 168, 41 CR2d 449. Rescission proceedings can be initiated on this ground either by the BPH itself (see 15 Cal Code Regs §2451) or by the Governor. Under Pen C §3041.1, the Governor may, up to 90 days before a scheduled release date, request review of any parole decision. The Governor must state the reasons for the request and state whether the request is based on a public safety concern, on a concern that the gravity of current or past offenses may have been given inadequate consideration, or on other factors. The Board must review the parole decision en banc and a decision to grant parole can be upheld only if a majority of the Board approve the release. The Board may, on the basis of its inherent powers, reconsider the decision even if the Governor's request is untimely. In re Johnson (1992) 8 CA4th 618, 623, 10 CR2d 460.

When the ground for rescission is that fundamental errors occurred in the original decision granting parole, the panel at the rescission hearing looks separately at each issue considered by the granting panel to decide whether the panel properly considered the evidence before it in finding the prisoner suitable for parole. If the rescission panel finds some evidence that the granting panel reached its decision improperly with respect to at least one issue, it has three choices: it can maintain the parole date, withdraw the parole grant, or extend the parole grant to a future date.

Ø Note: The best preparation for a rescission hearing is to be the attorney of record at the hearing where the prisoner is found suitable. It is important when representing prisoners with strong cases for parole that the attorney make the granting panel aware of any and all negative aspects of the prisoner's history to ensure that the granting panel completely considers the person's suitability factors. To prepare for a rescission hearing, obtain copies of the transcript of the hearing at which the BPH granted parole and all pertinent documents from the prisoner's C-file. Take each issue in controversy and go through the transcript to identify where the granting panel discussed the issue and to what extent. Compare the transcript with the prisoner's record to decide whether the granting panel adequately considered the evidence before it in granting parole.

Basis for rescission. Like the decision to deny parole in the first instance (see §47.44), a decision to rescind a grant of parole must be supported by some evidence. In re Powell (1988) 45 C3d 894, 903, 248 CR 431; In re Johnson, supra. However, when a parole date is rescinded not on the basis of new evidence but on the ground that it was improvidently granted, something more than simple disagreement with the original panel's ultimate determination is required. In re Caswell (2001) 92 CA4th 1017, 1034, 112 CR2d 462. When the BPH rescinds a grant of parole on this ground, there must be "some evidence" that the panel that originally granted the prisoner a parole date failed to adequately consider the evidence before it, i.e., there must be some evidence that the panel reached findings and conclusions that cannot be reconciled with the evidence before it, misstated facts, or explicitly declined to consider information germane to the issue before it. In re Caswell, supra. See also Caswell v Calderon (9th Cir 2004) 363 F3d 832; McQuillion v Duncan (9th Cir 2002) 306 F3d 895, 905.

§47.50 2. Rights of Prisoners at Rescission Hearings

Life prisoners have the following rights at rescission hearings (see Pen C §3041.5; 15 Cal Code Reg §2465):

- To receive notice of the charges and receive the supporting evidence unless it is designated confidential (15 Cal Code Regs §2465(a));
- To receive notice of the date of the hearing at least 30 days before the hearing (15 Cal Code Regs §2465(d));
- To review nonconfidential documents in the prisoner's central file (15 Cal Code Regs §2247);
- To be present, speak, and ask and answer questions (15 Cal Code Regs §2247);
- To be represented by an attorney (Pen C §3041.7); if the prisoner is indigent, an attorney will be provided at state expense (15 Cal Code Regs §2256(c));
- To receive notice if the district attorney from the county of commitment or his or her representative will attend (15 Cal Code Regs §2466(a));
- To present documents (15 Cal Code Regs §2249);
- To receive a copy of documents submitted by the district attorney from the county of commitment before the hearing (15 Cal Code Regs §2466(a));
- To have an impartial hearing panel (15 Cal Code Regs §2250);
- To have language or communication assistance, if necessary (15 Cal Code Regs §2251);
- To have reasonable accommodation for a disability, as defined in 42 USC §12102 (Americans with Disabilities Act). See 15 Cal Code Regs §2251.5.

Ø Note: If a reasonable accommodation is denied, the prisoner is entitled to file a grievance to be heard by the Board (15 Cal Code Regs §§2251.6-2251.7);

- To receive, on request, a stenographic transcript of the hearing (Pen C §3041.5(a)(4); 15 Cal Code Regs §2465(e)); and
- To receive a written statement of the decision (15 Cal Code Regs §2255).

Additionally, the BPH on request may do the following:

- Grant the prisoner a continuance (15 Cal Code Regs §2253(c));
- Permit the presence of both friendly and adverse witnesses (15 Cal Code Regs §2465(c)); see In re Johnson (1995) 35 CA4th 160, 171, 41 CR2d 449 (requested witnesses must be called unless BPH has specific reasons to deny request and advises prisoner of those reasons in writing); and
- Issue subpoenas and subpoenas duces tecum to secure the attendance of witnesses or production of documents (15 Cal Code Regs §2465(c)).

For discussion of standards applicable to considerations of requests for witnesses and subpoenas, see §47.18.

VII. REVIEW OF BOARD OF PAROLE HEARINGS DECISIONS

§47.51 A. No Administrative Appeal

The Board of Parole Hearings does not have an administrative appeals process. To appeal a decision of the BPH, the parolee needs to file a writ of habeas corpus in the superior court. See §47.52. Before August 30, 2004, any person under the jurisdiction of the former Board of Prison Terms (BPT) could take an administrative appeal from any decision that affected that person, other than the decision to schedule a hearing or to deny an appeal. See former 15 Cal Code Regs §§2050-2052. Because there is no administrative review, there is no need to exhaust administrative remedies before seeking judicial review.

© The Regents of the University of California

§47.52 B. Judicial Review

Habeas corpus. There is no direct review of an adverse parole decision. However, judicial review may be obtained by filing a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. See Pen C §§1473-1508; Cal Rules of Ct 4.551; In re Powell (1988) 45 C3d 894, 903, 248 CR 431. Under Pen C §1473(a), "[e]very person unlawfully imprisoned or restrained of his liberty, under any pretense whatever, may prosecute a writ of habeas corpus, to inquire into the cause of such imprisonment or restraint."

If counsel for the parolee has preserved any federal constitutional issues by making a record of both the federal claim and the facts supporting it before the deputy commissioner or panel, such claims can also be addressed in the state habeas petition. Federal constitutional issues may be cognizable in a federal habeas corpus proceeding if the parolee preserves these issues by raising them in the state habeas petition and exhausting state remedies.

On habeas corpus in state court, see chap 42. See also Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases, chaps 9-10 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007). On exhaustion of state remedies, see §45.23. On federal habeas corpus generally, see chap 45 and Appeals & Writs, chaps 13-18.

Revocation decisions. If only the sufficiency of the evidence is challenged on judicial review, a good cause finding will be upheld if there is "any evidence" to support it. Superintendent v Hill (1985) 472 US 445, 86 L Ed 2d 356, 105 S Ct 2768 (revocation of prisoner's good-time credits); Douglas v Buder (1973) 412 US 430, 37 L Ed 2d 52, 93 S Ct 2199 (probation revocation).

Appropriate constitutional challenges are subject to the rule of Chapman v California (1967) 386 US 18, 17 L Ed 2d 705, 87 S Ct 824: errors that violate federal constitutional rights require reversal unless the beneficiary of the error can prove beyond a reasonable doubt that it did not affect the result. In In re La Croix (1974) 12 C3d 146, 115 CR 344, the California Supreme Court held, in determining whether a parolee is prejudiced by the denial of a prerevocation hearing, that the measure of prejudice necessary to the granting of relief from a restraint of liberty resulting from improper proceedings before an administrative agency is the Chapman standard. 12 C3d at 154. See, e.g., In re Marquez (2007) 153 CA4th 1, 62 CR3d 429 (habeas granted when Valdivia time lines not followed and counsel was not appointed in time).

Life parole suitability hearings. Habeas corpus review of the panel's conclusion that a life prisoner is not suitable for parole is quite limited. The BPH's decision will be upheld on judicial review if there is "some evidence" to support it. In re Powell (1988) 45 C3d 894, 904, 248 CR 431 (reviewing and upholding BPT decision to rescind parole date); In re Johnson (1995) 35 CA4th 160, 169, 41 CR2d 449 (same). Compare In re Van Houten (2004) 116 CA4th 339, 10 CR3d 406 (BPT unsuitability decision supported by some evidence), with In re Scott (2004) 119 CA4th 871, 15 CR3d 32 (BPT decision denying parole not supported by some evidence), and In re Barker (2007) 151 CA4th 346, 366, 59 CR3d 746 (same). See also In re Roderick (2007) 154 CA4th 242, 65 CR3d 16 (case remanded; of five factors relied on by Board in denying parole, only one, criminal history, constituted some evidence supporting denial); In re DeLuna (2005) 126 CA4th 585, 24 CR3d 643 (case remanded to BPT; some findings supporting BPT's unsuitability finding supported by "some evidence"; others not supported by any evidence).

The "some evidence" standard also applies to the Governor's decision to override a BPH finding of suitability. In re Rosenkrantz (2002) 29 C4th 616, 652, 128 CR2d 104; see, e.g., In re Smith (2003) 114 CA4th 343, 7 CR3d 655 (Governor's decision rescinding parole not supported by some evidence); In re McClendon (2003) 113 CA4th 315, 6 CR3d 278 (Governor's parole decision need not itemize all parole suitability factors).

I. INTRODUCTION

§48.1 A. Overview

This chapter discusses the primary ways in which mental illness and other mental conditions are relevant in criminal cases: competence to stand trial, mental defenses, extended commitments for mentally disordered offenders, including commitments under the Sexually Violent Predator Act (Welf & I C §§6600-6609.3) (SVP commitments), and civil commitment proceedings.

Incompetence to stand trial. Criminal proceedings may be adjourned if a defendant is unable to understand the nature of the proceedings or aid in his or her defense. Pen C §§1367-1375.5. Adjournment is more common in felony cases than in misdemeanor cases. In misdemeanor cases courts usually use Pen C §4011.6 or §4011.8 to evaluate a defendant believed to be too mentally ill to proceed with the criminal case. See §§48.6-48.25.

Mental defenses. When a specified intent or mental state is an element of a crime, a defendant who did not form the requisite intent or mental state cannot be convicted of that crime. A temporary or permanent mental condition, cognitive disabilities, and voluntary or involuntary intoxication can form the basis of a mental defense that negates the intent element of the offense. See checklist of defenses in §32.12. Guilt phase mental defenses are discussed in §§48.27-48.41.

The insanity defense is tried in a separate phase following the guilt phase. In presenting evidence concerning mental defenses, counsel should be sure to lay the foundation necessary to introduce expert testimony, hospital records, and other essential items. See People v Babbitt (1988) 45 C3d 660, 248 CR 69. See §§48.42-48.59.

Extended commitments. Civil commitments are available to extend the custody of mentally ill individuals who are dangerous. See §§48.77-48.82. These include conservatorships for individuals who have been found incompetent to stand trial, extended commitments for mentally disordered offenders (MDOs) and persons found not guilty by reason of insanity, and proceedings to commit sexually violent predators (SVPs). These commitments have been found to be constitutionally valid. On sexually violent predator (SVP) commitments, see §§48.62-48.69; on mentally disordered offender (MDO) commitments, see §§48.71-48.76.

§48.2 B. Resources

It is important to get an expert evaluation of the defendant's mental functioning when the facts of a case suggest a possible mental state defense or insanity plea, when the defendant may not be competent to stand trial, or when the defendant's mental status is otherwise at issue (such as in SVP, MDO, and Lanterman-Petris-Short (LPS) proceedings).

Counsel should be familiar with standard works relating to diagnoses, diagnostic criteria, acceptable protocols for certain types of assessments, bases for opinions on mental states, and the effects of psychotropic medications. Useful texts on mental health and the law include Parry, Criminal Mental Health and Disability Law, Evidence and Testimony (2009), and Melton, et al., Psychological Evaluations for the Courts (3d ed 2007). The American Psychiatric Association's Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (4th ed, rev 2000) (DSM-IV-TR) is also an essential text. The DSM provides a framework of classifications of mental disorders. Counsel should become very familiar with the introduction to the DSM before using it in connection with a case, particularly the section of the introduction titled "Use of DSM-IV in Forensic Settings," which describes "risks and limitations" of the DSM in courtroom settings.

Authoritative sources on developmental disabilities include DSM-IV-TR; Intellectual Disability: Definition, Classification, and Systems of Support (11th ed 2010), and other materials available at http://www.aaidd.org; and Kaplan & Sadock's Comprehensive Textbook of Psychiatry (8th ed 2004).

Good sources for help understanding aspects of psychological testing are Mental Measurements Yearbook and Tests in Print, both updated regularly by the Buros Institute of Mental Measurements and available at http://www.unl.edu/buros.

The website of the American Psychiatric Association, http://www.psych.org, provides information about current publications and professional standards, as does the website of the American Psychological Association, http://www.apa.org. See also Slovenko, Psychiatry in Law/Law in Psychiatry (2009); Simon & Gold, eds., Textbook of Forensic Psychiatry (2004), concerning the standards and assessment methodologies that should be applied by psychiatrists in forensic settings; and Scientific Evidence in California Criminal Cases, chap 16 (Cal CEB 2008).

> Ø Practice tip: Counsel preparing to examine mental health experts might consider reviewing Ziskin & Faust, Coping with Psychiatric and Psychological Testimony (5th ed 1995).

§48.3 C. Ethical Standards of Mental Health Professionals

Counsel should be aware of the various ethics rules governing mental health expertise in the courts. The American Psychology-Law Society has developed a set of ethical standards for forensic psychologists. The society's website is at http://www.ap-ls.org.

The American Psychological Association also has an ethics code (see http://www.apa.org/ethics/homepage.html), and the American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law publishes Ethical Guidelines for the Practice of Forensic Psychiatry (see http://www.aapl.org/ethics.htm).

The American Psychiatric Association has several task forces that review the role of psychiatrists in the criminal court process. See, e.g., Liebert & Foster, The Mental Health Evaluation in Capital Cases: Standards and Practice, 151 Am J Forensic Psychiatry 4:43 (1994). In addition, the American Medical Association publishes Principles of Medical Ethics of the AMA, and the American Psychiatric Association publishes Principles of Medical Ethics with Annotations Especially Applicable to Psychiatry.

§48.4 D. Evidentiary Considerations

Gathering evidence relevant to mental competence or status usually begins with a mental health evaluation of the defendant. What constitutes a sufficient mental health evaluation depends on context and is subject to case-by-case determination. For a detailed discussion of the factors one court used in assessing the sufficiency of a psychological assessment of a defendant's competence to stand trial, see U.S. v Duhon (WD La 2000) 104 F Supp 2d 663.

Kelly-Frye* test not applicable. When the defendant's mental condition is at issue, expert psychiatric or psychological testimony is admissible if it meets the criteria set out in Evid C §801. The Kelly-Frye test does not apply to psychological or psychiatric evidence or to retrospective assessments of a mental state. See People v Stoll (1989) 49 C3d 1136, 1151, 265 CR 111 (extensive discussion of psychological tests attorneys are likely to encounter); People v McDonald (1984) 37 C3d 351, 372, 208 CR 236, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendoza (2000) 23 C4th 896, 98 CR2d 431. The scope of the expert's testimony is limited by Pen C §28, which bars the admission of evidence of mental disease, defect, or disorder to show or negate the capacity to form a mental state required for conviction, and by Pen C §29, which bars an expert from testifying to "whether the defendant had or did not have the required mental states." On Pen C §29, see §48.29.

III. COMPETENCY TO STAND TRIAL

§48.6 A. Purpose and Constitutional Basis; Summary of Procedures Available

Competency proceedings deal with a defendant's mental status during the pendency of a criminal case. The conviction of an incompetent defendant, who is essentially not "mentally present" (In re Dennis (1959) 51 C2d 666, 672, 335 P2d 657) during proceedings, violates the Due Process Clause. Pate v Robinson (1966) 383 US 375, 15 L Ed 2d 815, 86 S Ct 836; People v Hale (1988) 44 C3d 531, 244 CR 114. The trial court lacks jurisdiction to pass judgment on or sentence a defendant while he or she remains incompetent. Pen C §1367(a); People v Laudermilk (1967) 67 C2d 272, 282, 61 CR 644. Although the issue of incompetence is typically raised early in the proceedings, it can be raised after trial (Pen C §§1191, 1449), during the penalty phase of a capital case (People v Stanley (1995) 10 C4th 764, 42 CR2d 543), or during probation violation hearings (People v Humphrey (1975) 45 CA3d 32, 119 CR 74).

Ø Note: Incompetency is not a defense. The focus of competency proceedings is the defendant's current mental status and its impact on his or her current functional capacity, whereas defenses focus on the defendant's mental status at the time of the crime.

Competency proceedings may occur under several different statutes:

- Pen C §1368 (available for defendants accused of felonies, misdemeanors, or both; see discussion in §§48.10-48.22).
- Pen C §1367.1 (available for defendants accused of misdemeanors; see chart in §48.13).
- Pen C §1370.1 (available for incompetent or developmentally disabled defendants; see discussion in §48.24).

Ø Note: Because the conviction of an incompetent defendant violates due process, the protective reach of Pen C §1368 extends to Welf & I C §602 proceedings in juvenile court. See §48.25. Under Cal Rules of Ct 5.645, when the court believes that a minor in a juvenile delinquency proceeding is mentally disabled or may be mentally ill, the court may stay the proceedings and order the minor taken to a mental health facility for 72-hour treatment and evaluation. On §602 proceedings generally, see chap 56.

B. Role of Defense Counsel

§48.7 1. Defense Counsel's Obligations

Mental disability. When evidence of incompetence exists, defense counsel has an affirmative duty to carefully investigate the client's mental competency. People v Corona (1978) 80 CA3d 684, 145 CR 894. See also In re Saunders (1970) 2 C3d 1033, 88 CR 633. Defense counsel may not "waive" or unilaterally discard this issue. Pate v Robinson (1966) 383 US 375, 384, 15 L Ed 2d 815, 821, 86 S Ct 836; People v Hale (1988) 44 C3d 531, 541, 244 CR 114.

Counsel should consult appropriate mental health experts on the defendant's mental status. People v Corona, supra. See U.S. v Duhon (WD La 2000) 104 F Supp 2d 663 (detailed description of competence assessment protocol used when defendant had been diagnosed as mildly mentally retarded). See also People v Leonard (2007) 40 C4th 1370, 1388, 58 CR3d 368 (procedure when mental retardation is suspected, or has been found, and competence issue is brought to court's attention). On a proper showing of need, an indigent defendant has a right to have the court appoint and compensate an expert to assess his or her mental competency. People v Mayes (1988) 202 CA3d 908, 916, 248 CR 899; People v Campbell (1987) 193 CA3d 1653, 1664, 239 CR 214; People v Worthy (1980) 109 CA3d 514, 518, 167 CR 402. When there is "substantial evidence" of incompetence, proceedings must be suspended to permit inquiry into the issue. People v Lewis (2008) 43 C4th 415, 525, 75 CR3d 588 (trial court's observations, combined with lack of expert input on competency, overcame defense counsel's stated view that competency hearing was necessary); People v Pennington (1967) 66 C2d 508, 518, 58 CR 374. If a psychiatrist or qualified psychologist "has had sufficient opportunity to examine the accused," the expert's testimony that the accused is incompetent is substantial evidence. 66 C2d at 518. A trial court's failure to recognize substantial evidence of incompetence can result in a remand for a postconviction competence determination even if defense counsel fails to raise the issue. People v Ary (2004) 118 CA4th 1016, 1022, 13 CR3d 482.

> Ø Warning: Because competency proceedings are completely separate from the trial, an attorney who opposes a competency hearing on the ground that it will have an adverse impact at trial is virtually confessing failure to provide constitutionally adequate representation. See People v Corona (1978) 80 CA3d 684, 712, 145 CR 894.

Defense counsel may pursue a finding of incompetency even when the client opposes such a finding. People v Harris (1993) 14 CA4th 984, 994, 18 CR2d 92; Shephard v Superior Court (1986) 180 CA3d 23, 225 CR 328. In that event, defense counsel should allow the client to testify on his or her own behalf. People v Harris, supra.

In addition, the appointment of separate counsel to present evidence of the defendant's competency, notwithstanding the defense attorney's pursuit of a finding of incompetency, does not violate the defendant's due process rights. People v Stanley (1995) 10 C4th 764, 805, 42 CR2d 543. See People v Jernigan (2003) 110 CA4th 131, 136, 1 CR3d 511 (Stanley does not require that second defense counsel be appointed whenever prima facie incompetent defendant contends that he or she is in fact competent); People v Panah (2005) 35 C4th 395, 25 CR3d 672 (opinion of one of two lawyers representing defendant in capital case that a competency concern existed did not trigger need for an inquiry, on basis of particular circumstances and other available evidence).

The attorney-client privilege is not violated when the attorney states his or her opinion on the defendant's incompetency. People v Bolden (1979) 99 CA3d 375, 160 CR 268. With respect to competency proceedings, defense counsel may "waive" a variety of procedural rights that could not be waived in the criminal phase without the defendant's participation. People v Masterson (1994) 8 C4th 965, 972, 35 CR2d 679; People v Harris, 14 C4th at 992; People v Mickle (1991) 54 C3d 140, 284 CR 511. These rights include the right to present witnesses, to confront and cross-examine witnesses, and to have the case decided by a 12-person jury. People v Masterson, supra; People v Harris, supra.

Competency proceedings under Pen C §§1367.1(a) and 1368(a) each require that, on initiating competency proceedings, the judge ask defense counsel about the client's competency. If the defendant is unrepresented, the court is required to appoint counsel. Pen C §1368(a). Such an appointment is required even when the court previously permitted the defendant to represent himself or herself. People v Robinson (2007) 151 CA4th 606, 615, 60 CR3d 102; People v Powell (1986) 180 CA3d 469, 225 CR 703. In practice, the court's inquiry of defense counsel rarely occurs, because it is often the defense attorney who initially raises the issue, and despite the code provisions, the defense attorney is not obliged to answer the judge's question. Tarantino v Superior Court (1975) 48 CA3d 465, 122 CR 61. Nevertheless, counsel should not simply ignore the incompetency issue if the court raises the issue, particularly if the court expresses doubt about the defendant's competency. See e.g., Pate v Robinson (1966) 383 US 375, 385, 15 L Ed 2d 815, 822, 86 S Ct 836; see §48.11.

Developmental disabilities. Commitment as an incompetent developmentally disabled person under Pen C §1370.1 may help defendants who need long-term care, because those defendants may remain in outpatient status after commitment. Penal Code §§1001.20-1001.34 allow diversion in misdemeanor cases for defendants with cognitive developmental disabilities, whether or not the defendant is competent.

The state contracts with private agencies that act as Regional Centers for the Care and Treatment of Developmentally Disabled Individuals (Regional Centers), helping match developmentally disabled individuals with the services they need. See Welf & I C §§4620-4669. Defense counsel should call the local Regional Center for assistance whenever a defendant may be developmentally disabled. These agencies can also help victims and witnesses. See Welf & I C §§4620-4669. A list of Regional Centers is available at the California Department of Developmental Services' website at http://www.dds.ca.gov/RC/Home.cfm. See also People v Leonard (2007) 40 C4th 1370, 1388, 58 CR3d 368.

In Atkins v Virginia (2002) 536 US 304, 349, 153 L Ed 2d 335, 371, 122 S Ct 2242, the Supreme Court held that the Eighth Amendment prohibits the execution of a mentally retarded offender. California has implemented the Atkins rule by establishing a procedure in capital cases for determining whether a defendant is mentally retarded. See Pen C §1376. For discussion, see §54.18A.

> Ø Practice tip: Counsel defending capital cases may wish to review A Practitioner's Guide to Defending Capital Clients Who Have Mental Retardation (Oct. 2006) (see http://www.internationaljusticeproject.org/retardationResources.cfm) and Weithorn, Conceptual Hurdles to the Application of Atkins v Virginia, 59 Hastings LJ 1203 (May 2008). Another helpful resource is Division 33 of the American Psychological Association, which publishes a newsletter entitled Psychology in Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities.

Specific competency issues can arise when a defendant may be mentally retarded. See, e.g., People v Ary, supra (postconviction competency hearing ordered despite defense failure to declare doubt regarding defendant's competence); People v Castro (2000) 78 CA4th 1402, 93 CR2d 770, disapproved on other grounds in People v Leonard (2007) 40 C4th 1370, 1391 n3, 58 CR3d 368 (conviction after guilty plea vacated). Several cases have reviewed the protocol for competency determinations. See, e.g., U.S. v Duhon (WD La 2000) 104 F Supp 2d 663, which describes in detail a protocol to determine whether a person deemed mildly mentally retarded had been restored to competence.

§48.8 2. Self-Representation and Substitution of Attorney After Criminal Proceedings Have Been Suspended

Self-representation. Except as provided in Pen C §1368.1 (see §48.14), the trial court's order for a hearing to determine a defendant's competency to stand trial suspends all further proceedings until the defendant's competency has been decided. Pen C §1368(c); People v Marks (1988) 45 C3d 1335, 1340, 248 CR 874. Thus, the trial court lacks jurisdiction to rule on a defendant's motion for self-representation at trial until the question concerning the defendant's competency has been resolved. People v Horton (1995) 11 C4th 1068, 1108, 47 CR2d 516. If a defendant is not represented by counsel, the court must appoint counsel to represent the defendant during competency proceedings. Pen C §1368(a). The trial court must appoint counsel whenever it expresses a doubt about a defendant's competency even if the defendant has been representing himself or herself. People v Robinson (2007) 151 CA4th 606, 616, 60 CR3d 102 (court's doubt of self-represented defendant's competency should extend to defendant's competency to waive counsel and represent self); People v Jenan (2007) 148 CA4th 1144, 56 CR3d 360. A trial court may take a "realistic account" of a defendant's mental capacities in deciding whether to allow self-representation, even if the evidence supports the view that the accused is competent to stand trial. Indiana v Edwards (2008) ___ US ___, 171 L Ed 2d 345, 357, 128 S Ct 2379. California does not require "greater competency" for a person seeking self-representation than the competency-to-stand-trial standard. People v Taylor (2009) 47 C4th 850, 102 CR3d 852.

A defendant who has been found competent to stand trial may waive the assistance of counsel under Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 95 S Ct 2525. See Godinez v Moran (1993) 509 US 389, 400, 125 L Ed 2d 321, 333, 113 S Ct 2680 (waiver of right to counsel and waiver of Fifth Amendment rights do not require higher standard of competency). See also Jenan, 148 CA4th at 1165 (standard of competence to stand trial is same as standard of competence to waive counsel). In addition to determining that a defendant who seeks to plead guilty or waive counsel is competent, a trial court must satisfy itself that the defendant's waiver of his or her constitutional rights is knowing and voluntary. Godinez v Moran, supra. See also People v Welch (1999) 20 C4th 701, 733, 85 CR2d 203 (focus of competency hearing is whether defendant has ability to understand proceedings; focus of Faretta hearing is whether defendant actually understands significance and consequences of decision to forgo counsel).

However, despite both the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendment rights to self-representation, it is constitutionally permissible for a court to insist on representation by counsel for those defendants competent enough to stand trial but who suffer from severe mental illness to the point that they are not competent to conduct trial proceedings by themselves. Indiana v Edwards (2008) ___ US ___, 171 L Ed 2d 345, 357, 128 S Ct 2379.

> Ø Note: In a decision predating Indiana v Edwards, supra, the California Supreme Court found a trial court's denial of a competent defendant's motion for self-representation, on the ground that he lacked the mental capacity to prepare and conduct a trial in a rational manner, invalid. See People v Halvorsen (2007) 42 C4th 379, 433, 64 CR3d 721.

Substitution of attorney. The trial court retains jurisdiction to hear motions to substitute counsel after criminal proceedings have been suspended under Pen C §1368. People v Stankewitz (1990) 51 C3d 72, 270 CR 817 (defendant's incompetency related specifically to attorney; substitution would avoid need for full competency hearing).

§48.9 C. Access to Lanterman-Petris-Short (LPS) System Through Pen C §4011.6

A formal bridge between the criminal justice system and the mental health system exists in Pen C §4011.6. Under this statute, a person in charge of a jail or juvenile detention facility or a judge who determines that a person in custody meets the admission criteria of the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (LPS Act) may cause that person to be taken to a facility for 72-hour treatment and evaluation under Welf & I C §5150. If the evaluation results in detention, the LPS Act may play out through all of its detention stages, up to and including long-term involuntary treatment by conservatorship. Section 4011.6 specifically provides that the accused may be concurrently subject to criminal proceedings and to the LPS Act. Unless the treating facility certifies that arraignment or trial would be detrimental to the prisoner's well-being, however, the speedy trial provisions of Pen C §1382 apply. Penal Code §4011.8 allows a prisoner to apply for, and the custody facility to permit, voluntary mental health treatment. For further discussion of LPS commitments, see §§48.79-48.82.

D. Procedures for Determining Competency

§48.10 1. Criteria for Determining Competency

Under Pen C §1367(a), a defendant is mentally incompetent "if, as a result of mental disorder or developmental disability, the defendant is unable to understand the nature of the criminal proceedings or to assist counsel in the conduct of a defense in a rational manner." This statute has been judicially interpreted to require determinations that a competent defendant is able to (People v Conrad (1982) 132 CA3d 361, 182 CR 912; see CALCRIM 3451):

- Have a rational and factual understanding of the charges and of the nature and purpose of the proceedings;
- Comprehend his or her own status and condition in reference to such proceedings; and
- Assist his or her attorney in conducting the defense.

Because the U.S. Supreme Court continues to elaborate the attributes of competence, the elements of competence contained in Pen C §1367 are similar to those announced by the Supreme Court, but not exactly the same.

For example, in Godinez v Moran (1993) 509 US 389, 399, 125 L Ed 2d 321, 332, 113 S Ct 2680, the Court included among the attributes of competence, not only awareness of procedural rights, but also the abilities to decide whether to exercise procedural rights such as the privilege against self-incrimination, to put on a defense, and to raise one or more affirmative defenses. See also Cooper v Oklahoma (1996) 517 US 348, 364, 134 L Ed 2d 498, 512, 116 S Ct 1373. Reference works recognizing the importance of case law in defining competence include Parry, Criminal Mental Health and Disability Law, Evidence and Testimony (2009); Drogin & Parry, Criminal Law Handbook on Psychiatric and Psychological Evidence and Testimony (2000); Grisso, Evaluating Competencies: Forensic Assessments and Instruments (2d ed 2003); and Philipsborn, Searching for Uniformity in Adjudications of the Accused's Competence to Assist and Consult in Capital Cases, 10 Psychology, Pub Policy & L 417 (2004).

> Ø Note: Neither statutes nor case law concisely defines a "mental disorder." In most cases, questions of competency center on the functional effect of the mental disorder on the defendant's lack of comprehension or incapacity. Moreover, the U.S. Supreme Court has not required incompetence to stand trial to be rooted in a "mental disorder or developmental disability," as Pen C §1367 does. For that reason, any medically or psychologically identified mental disorder or disability or state of mind might be accepted as the basis for a claim of incompetence. In addition, CALCRIM 3451 incorporates some but not all of the U.S. Supreme Court's "elements" of incompetence.

The fact that a defendant is recalcitrant or uncooperative does not necessarily mean that he or she is incompetent. People v Lewis (2008) 43 C4th 415, 523, 75 CR3d 588. The test of a Pen C §1368 proceeding is capacity to cooperate, not cooperation in fact. People v Superior Court (Campbell) (1975) 51 CA3d 459, 124 CR 158. See also People v Welch (1999) 20 C4th 701, 733, 85 CR2d 203; People v Bradford (1997) 15 C4th 1229, 1373, 65 CR2d 145; People v Davis (1995) 10 C4th 463, 527, 41 CR2d 826; People v Rodrigues (1994) 8 C4th 1060, 1112, 36 CR2d 235.

> Ø Note: As a practical matter, experienced counsel often provide examining mental health experts the pertinent legal definitions and some of the seminal cases discussed above, to ensure that a 'relevant' examination is conducted.

§48.11 2. Initiating Pen C §1368 Proceedings

Competency proceedings are available for defendants accused of felonies, misdemeanors, or both. See Pen C §§1367.1, 1368, 1368.1. They may be undertaken at any time before judgment, including during probation violation hearings. People v Humphrey (1975) 45 CA3d 32, 119 CR 74. Incompetency is not, however, an issue in a proceeding to extend an insanity commitment under Pen C §1026.5. People v Angeletakis (1992) 5 CA4th 963, 7 CR2d 377.

Section 1368 proceedings must be initiated when (Pen C §1368(a)-(b)):

- The trial judge expresses doubt about the defendant's competence to stand trial. In this situation, an incompetency trial must be held regardless of the defense or prosecution position on this issue; it cannot be waived by either or both parties when the trial court has expressed such a doubt. People v Marks (1988) 45 C3d 1335, 248 CR 874; People v Hale (1988) 44 C3d 531, 244 CR 114.

  Ø Note: A trial court's mere expression of concern, or preliminary inquiry into the defendant's competence, does not trigger a full competency proceeding in the absence of a reasonable doubt of the defendant's competence. People v Danielson (1992) 3 C4th 691, 723, 13 CR2d 1, overruled on other grounds in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069 n5, 108 CR2d 409. See also People v Garcia (2008) 159 CA4th 163, 169, 70 CR3d 837.

- Counsel informs the court that he or she believes the defendant is or may be mentally incompetent. Pen C §1368(b). A declaration of doubt by counsel, alone, is not sufficient to trigger a statutory right to a competency hearing. People v Garcia, supra.

Due process requires the court to initiate Pen C §1368 proceedings on its own motion when substantial evidence exists that the defendant is incompetent, even when the trial judge harbors no doubt and there is contrary evidence of the defendant's competency. People v Pennington (1967) 66 C2d 508, 518, 58 CR 374; People v Ary (2004) 118 CA4th 1016, 1024, 13 CR3d 482; People v Campbell (1987) 193 CA3d 1653, 1661, 239 CR 214; People v Tomas (1977) 74 CA3d 75, 90, 141 CR 453.

Substantial evidence of incompetency is "that [which] raises a reasonable doubt on the issue." People v Howard, supra; People v Jones (1991) 53 C3d 1115, 282 CR 465. Substantial evidence is something more than defense counsel's verbal opinion. People v Rodrigues (1994) 8 C4th 1060, 1111, 36 CR2d 235; People v Howard (1992) 1 C4th 1132, 1164, 5 CR2d 268; People v Garcia, supra. Evidence supporting a trial court's finding that the accused was not competent to waive the right to the assistance of counsel did not as a matter of law constitute "substantial evidence" of incompetence to stand trial. People v Welch (1999) 20 C4th 701, 736, 85 CR2d 203.

Evidence of incompetence may come from several sources, including the defendant's demeanor, irrational behavior, and prior mental examinations; however, to be entitled to a competency hearing, a defendant must exhibit more than "a preexisting psychiatric condition that has little bearing on the question… whether the defendant can assist his defense counsel," particularly when trial counsel did not raise competence questions during the trial. People v Rogers (2006) 39 C4th 826, 847, 48 CR3d 1 (quoting People v Ramos (2004) 34 C4th 494, 21 CR3d 575). The bizarre actions or statements of the accused may alone be insufficient. People v Marshall (1997) 15 C4th 1, 33, 61 CR2d 84; People v Medina (1995) 11 C4th 694, 735, 47 CR2d 165; People v Laudermilk (1967) 67 C2d 272, 285, 61 CR 644. See also People v Hayes (1999) 21 C4th 1211, 91 CR2d 211. One certain instance of substantial evidence of incompetency is the statement of a qualified doctor who, after examining the defendant, states that in his or her opinion the defendant is incompetent. People v Tomas, supra; People v Bute (1969) 275 CA2d 143, 79 CR 721.

Ø Note: It must appear that the doctor had a sufficient opportunity to examine the accused in order to arrive at such a conclusion. People v Rodrigues, supra.

When substantial evidence of incompetence exists, the trial court cannot proceed with the case against the defendant without first holding a competency hearing. Lack of objection does not waive the error. People v Pennington (1967) 66 C2d 508, 521, 58 CR 374; People v Ary (2004) 118 CA4th 1016, 1025, 13 CR3d 482. Failure to conduct proceedings at the time during which substantial evidence of incompetency appears cannot be subsequently cured by a nunc pro tunc finding of competency. Pate v Robinson (1966) 383 US 375, 15 L Ed 2d 815, 86 S Ct 836; People v Hale, supra; People v Pennington (1967) 66 C2d 508, 58 CR 374; People v Tomas, supra. In rare circumstances, a retrospective competency hearing may be held. See People v Ary, supra. When a trial court suspends criminal proceedings on the basis of doubt that a criminal defendant is competent to stand trial, but then fails to hold a competency hearing, the court deprives defendant of a fair trial and any subsequent criminal conviction must be set aside. People v Leonard (2007) 40 C4th 1370, 1390, 58 CR3d 368. Once a competency hearing has been held and the defendant has been found competent to stand trial, the trial court is obliged to initiate a second incompetency hearing only when it is presented with a substantial change of circumstances or with new evidence casting serious doubt on the finding that the defendant was competent. People v Weaver (2001) 26 C4th 876, 111 CR2d 2; People v Jones (1991) 53 C3d 1115, 1153, 282 CR 465. See also People v Medina (1995) 11 C4th 694, 734, 47 CR2d 165. Apparent drowsiness resulting from the voluntary ingestion of antipsychotic medication used to restore competency is not, alone, a substantial change of circumstances justifying a subsequent competency hearing. People v Jones (1997) 15 C4th 119, 150, 61 CR2d 386, overruled on other grounds in People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 823 n1, 72 CR2d 656.

Competency proceedings are "special proceedings" ancillary to the criminal case. They are neither criminal nor civil. People v Fields (1965) 62 C2d 538, 42 CR 833.

Ø Note: In Sell v U.S. (2003) 539 US 166, 178, 156 L Ed 2d 197, 211, 123 S Ct 2174, the Supreme Court held it constitutional to administer antipsychotic drugs involuntarily to a mentally ill criminal defendant in order to render him competent to stand trial for serious but nonviolent crimes "only if the treatment is medically appropriate, is substantially unlikely to have side effects that may undermine the fairness of the trial, and, taking account of less intrusive alternatives, is necessary significantly to further important governmental trial-related interests." The Court noted that cases that fit these criteria "may be rare." Sell v U.S., supra. Subsequent decisions have confirmed this view. See Carter v Superior Court (2006) 141 CA4th 992, 46 CR3d 507. See Pen C §§1369(a), 1370.

§48.12 3. LPS Referral Under Pen C §1367.1 in Misdemeanor Cases

If a misdemeanor defendant's behavior or other evidence leads a judge to conclude that the defendant may be mentally disordered and thus may be incompetent to stand trial, the judge may refer the defendant for evaluation and treatment under Pen C §4011.6 (see §48.9). Pen C §1367.1(a)-(b). Such a referral initiates an involuntary mental health evaluation and treatment under the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (Welf & I C §§5000-5550), discussed in §§48.79-48.82. This requirement for mental health evaluation and treatment before the competency determination does not apply to felony defendants under Pen C §1368. In Pederson v Superior Court (2003) 105 CA4th 931, 130 CR2d 289, the Second District ruled that the requirement of Pen C §1367.1 for evaluation and treatment before the competency determination denies misdemeanor defendants equal protection and ordered the courts in its district to use the competency procedures applicable to felony defendants in misdemeanor cases.

Penal Code §1367.1(d) provides that after the period of evaluation and treatment, the court must resume criminal proceedings. That section further provides that the court may initiate full competency proceedings "if the judge has reason to believe that the defendant may be incompetent to stand trial despite the treatment ordered pursuant to this section."

§48.13 4. Chart: Comparing Procedures Under Pen C §§1367.1 and 1368

Competency proceedings are available under Pen C §1367.1 when the defendant is charged with a misdemeanor. See §48.12. Competency for defendants in both misdemeanor and felony cases may be determined under Pen C §1368. Those procedures are described in §§48.10-48.22. The chart below compares some of the more important aspects of determining competency under §§1367.1 and 1368.

Issue	Procedure Under Pen C §1368	Procedure Under Pen C §1367.1
Court entertains doubt about defendant's competence to stand trial (People v Marks (1988) 45 C3d 1335, 1340, 248 CR 874); There is substantial evidence of defendant's incompetence (People v Ary (2004) 118 CA4th 1016, 1022, 13 CR3d 482); or Qualified mental health professional states belief that defendant is incompetent (People v Pennington (1967) 66 C2d 508, 518, 58 CR 374).	Court is required to hold hearing to decide whether defendant is competent. Pen C §1368(b).	Court is required to refer defendant for evaluation and treatment under Pen C §4011.6. Pen C §1367.1(b). But see Pederson v Superior Court (2003) 105 CA4th 931, 130 CR2d 289 (mandatory LPS evaluation for misdemeanants denies equal protection).

Defendant is unable to understand nature of criminal proceedings or to assist counsel in conduct of defense in rational manner. Pen C §1367.	There is reason to believe that defendant is mentally disordered. Pen C §1367.1(a).
Must counsel be appointed to represent defendant?	Yes, as soon as court is aware of any doubt concerning defendant's competence. Pen C §1368(a).	Yes, when court has reason to believe that defendant is mentally disordered. Pen C §1367.1(a).

§48.14 5. Proceedings That May Take Place After Competency Hearing Ordered

Under Pen C §1368(c) the court's order for a competency hearing suspends all trial proceedings except the defense-initiated actions specified in §1368.1. But see People v Cadogan (2009) 173 CA4th 1502, 1512, 93 CR3d 881 (under extraordinary circumstances, trial court properly allowed conditional examination of terminally ill witness to proceed before ordered competency hearing).

In felony cases, if the defendant's competence is questioned before the information is filed, defense counsel may request a preliminary hearing. Pen C §1368.1(a). At the preliminary hearing, defense counsel may demur, move to dismiss for lack of probable cause, or move to suppress evidence under Pen C §1538.5.

Defense counsel for a misdemeanor defendant may also demur, move to dismiss for lack of probable cause, or move to suppress evidence under Pen C §1538.5 before the proceedings on the defendant's competency take place. Pen C §1368.1(b). On competency proceedings in misdemeanor cases, see §48.12. On pretrial procedures in misdemeanor cases, see chap 6.

The purpose of §1368.1(a) is to ensure that an incompetent felony defendant will not be committed to a mental institution without due process (see Pen C §1370(a)(1)(B)(ii)) unless there is probable cause to believe that he or she is guilty of the charged offense. See Hale v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 221, 228, 124 CR 57. But if the magistrate finds probable cause and the court subsequently finds the defendant incompetent, the preliminary hearing or grand jury proceeding held while the defendant was incompetent cannot form the basis for a valid holding order. In this situation, a new preliminary hearing or grand jury proceeding should be held when the defendant has been restored to competency. Hale v Superior Court, supra.

Ø Note: In such cases, the prosecution usually concedes a Pen C §995 motion challenging the holding order.

In Miller v Superior Court (1978) 81 CA3d 132, 146 CR 253, the defendant had been found incompetent 2 weeks after the preliminary hearing, and the court of appeal held that the defendant was entitled to a new preliminary hearing. A later case, Booth v Superior Court (1997) 57 CA4th 91, 98, 66 CR2d 758, criticized Miller and held that in the absence of evidence that a defendant found incompetent 3 months after the preliminary hearing was incompetent at the time of the challenged preliminary hearing, the trial court properly denied the defendant's §995 motion. See also People v Smith (2003) 110 CA4th 492, 1 CR3d 779 (defendant's jury trial waiver, taken a few days before finding of incompetency, was valid because there was no evidence that defendant was incompetent at time of waiver). For further discussion, see §48.20.

§48.15 6. Appointment of Experts; Statements by Defendant

Appointment of experts. Once the court declares a doubt about a defendant's competence to stand trial, or whenever there is substantial evidence of incompetence, the trial court must appoint a psychiatrist or licensed psychologist to examine the defendant. If defense counsel opposes a finding of incompetence, the court must appoint two experts: one chosen by the defense, one by the prosecution. People v Harris (1993) 14 CA4th 984, 18 CR2d 92. See also Pen C §1369(a). An examining psychiatrist or psychologist must evaluate the defendant's alleged mental disorder and the defendant's ability to understand the proceedings and assist counsel, as well as address whether antipsychotic medication is medically appropriate. Pen C §1369(a).

The court may appoint other kinds of experts, as appropriate, to assist with a determination of competency. See Pen C §1369(a). For instance, courts commonly appoint attorneys with expertise in the area of incompetency to testify as experts after examining the defendant, especially when the defendant's ability to cooperate with counsel is at issue or when there are especially complex legal issues that the defendant needs to understand.

Before any examination, the parties may wish to provide expert witnesses with pertinent information about the issue of the defendant's competency. In practice, experts appointed under §1369(a) must usually produce written reports to the court of their examinations and findings and make those reports available to both parties.

Statements by defendant. No statement made by the defendant during a Pen C §1369 psychiatric examination, nor any "fruit" of such a statement, may be introduced against the defendant at a later stage of the case. People v Weaver (2001) 26 C4th 876, 111 CR2d 2; People v Arcega (1982) 32 C3d 504, 186 CR 94; Tarantino v Superior Court (1975) 48 CA3d 465, 122 CR 61. See also Powell v Texas (1989) 492 US 680, 106 L Ed 2d 551, 109 S Ct 3146. The statements a defendant makes during a competency examination may not be used for impeachment purposes at any proceeding other than the competency trial. People v Pokovich (2006) 39 C4th 1240, 1244, 48 CR3d 158.

On the evolution of the judicially declared rule conferring immunity for statements made in the course of competency proceedings, see Baqleh v Superior Court (2002) 100 CA4th 478, 496, 122 CR2d 673. On the difference in scope between the immunity granted in competency hearings and the limited immunity granted in sanity proceedings, see Centeno v Superior Court (2004) 117 CA4th 30, 44, 11 CR3d 533.

> Ø Warning: Defense counsel should consider possible later uses of materials such as psychiatric reports at mentally disordered offender proceedings. See discussion of those proceedings in §§48.71-48.76.

Although the presence of defense counsel at the expert's examination of the defendant is not constitutionally required (Tarantino v Superior Court (1975) 48 CA3d 465, 122 CR 61), defense counsel may be present and participate in the examination. The prosecution has no right to be present during any examinations. Tarantino v Superior Court, supra.

> Ø Note: Counsel may wish to have the doctor's interview videotaped. Videotaping is a method that can be employed to ensure an efficient examination, which protects the right to counsel by permitting defense counsel to state objections to the scope of, or methodology employed during, a competence assessment. See, e.g., U.S. v Johnson (ND Iowa 2005) 362 F Supp 2d 1043, 1074.

Appropriateness of antipsychotic medication. Examining psychiatrists must evaluate whether treatment with antipsychotic medication is medically appropriate for the defendant and is likely to restore the defendant to competency. If it is the examining psychologist's opinion that such medication may be medically appropriate, the psychologist must inform the court and recommend that a psychiatrist examine the defendant. Both psychiatrists and psychologists must also address whether the defendant has the capacity to make a decision concerning antipsychotic medication and whether the defendant is a danger to self or others. Even if a psychiatrist believes that antipsychotic medication may be medically appropriate, the psychiatrist must report to the court any possible alternative treatments and the medication's likely or possible side effects and efficacy. Pen C §1369(a).

> Ø Note: Texts relevant to assessing the appropriateness of antipsychotic medication include Kaplan & Sadock's

Comprehensive Textbook of Psychiatry (8th ed 2004), the Physician's Desk Reference, and other works on the effects of psychotropic medications published by the American Psychiatric Association.

§48.16 7. Competency Trial Procedures

Competency trials under Pen C §1368 are held in the superior court. Pen C §1368(b). Both parties have the right to a jury on demand to decide competency. Pen C §1369; People v Superior Court (McPeters) (1985) 169 CA3d 796, 215 CR 482. The verdict must be unanimous. Pen C §1369(f).

Before evidence is introduced, the defendant is presumed to be competent. Pen C §1369(f); Booth v Superior Court (1997) 57 CA4th 91, 99, 66 CR2d 758. The defense has the burden of offering evidence of incompetency. Pen C §1369(b). The prosecution, however, may present such evidence if the defense does not. See Pen C §1369(b)(2). The burden of proof falls to the party trying to prove incompetence. People v Medina (1990) 51 C3d 870, 274 CR 849, aff'd on other grounds sub nom Medina v California (1992) 505 US 437, 120 L Ed 2d 353, 112 S Ct 2572. Incompetency is established by a preponderance of the evidence. Pen C §1369(f). See Medina v California (1992) 505 US 437, 120 L Ed 2d 353, 112 S Ct 2572; People v Medina, supra. See also Cooper v Oklahoma (1996) 517 US 348, 134 L Ed 2d 498, 116 S Ct 1373 (requirement that defendant prove incompetence by clear and convincing evidence violates Due Process Clause of U.S. Constitution).

In the rare situation when neither party proceeds with evidence of the defendant's incompetence, the trial court may assume the burden of doing so. People v Skeirik (1991) 229 CA3d 444, 280 CR 175. In such cases, however, the court should instruct the jury only on the legal standard of incompetency; no instruction should be given on burden of proof. See 229 CA3d at 460.

The parties may present any relevant evidence, including:

- Testimony by experts appointed under Pen C §1369(a). (Their testimony, however, is not required by statute.)

  Ø Note: The trial court may not condition a defendant's right to present expert testimony at a competency hearing on the requirement that the defendant cooperate with the court-appointed expert. People v Mayes (1988) 202 CA3d 908, 248 CR 899.

- Testimony by experts other than those appointed by the court to examine the defendant, such as trial lawyers. People v Mayes, supra. See also People v Marshall (1997) 15 C4th 1, 32, 61 CR2d 84.
- Testimony by lay witnesses about behavior that is relevant to the determination of incompetency. People v Medina, supra.
- The defendant's nontestimonial behavior at the counsel table. People v Prince (1988) 203 CA3d 848, 250 CR 154.

Incompetency trials are covered by CALCRIM 3451. The jury's verdict must be based on "substantial evidence." People v Marshall, supra; People v Samuel (1981) 29 C3d 489, 174 CR 684. See also People v Marks (2003) 31 C4th 197, 2 CR3d 252.

Ø Note: A trial judge can reverse a jury determination of competency and render judgment notwithstanding the verdict if the judge determines that no substantial evidence supports the verdict. People v Conrad (1982) 132 CA3d 361, 182 CR 912.

If defense counsel requests §1368 proceedings, and the judge also expresses doubt about the defendant's competence under §1368, the issue must be resolved. The court cannot cancel the proceedings on defense request. People v Hale (1988) 44 C3d 531, 244 CR 114.

A formal trial is not required when jury trial has been waived. People v Harris (1993) 14 CA4th 984, 18 CR2d 92. The parties may stipulate to a trial that is based on the experts' written reports (People v McPeters (1992) 2 C4th 1148, 9 CR2d 834); if the experts reach different conclusions, the trial court may undertake to resolve the competence question without holding an evidentiary hearing. People v Taylor (2009) 47 C4th 850, 102 CR3d 852. The trial court must make a clear record of its findings and the basis for its rulings. People v Marks (1988) 45 C3d 1335, 248 CR 874. On the unusual responsibilities of defense counsel in competency proceedings, see §48.7.

§48.17 8. Consequences of Finding of Incompetence

When a defendant is judged incompetent to stand trial, the trial proceedings (or judgment) remain suspended until the defendant is restored to competency. Pen C §1370(a)(1)(B). However, a defendant's incompetence does not prevent the court from making discovery orders. See Echavarria v Superior Court (1979) 94 CA3d 467, 156 CR 527. See also People v Superior Court (Hulbert) (1977) 74 CA3d 407, 141 CR 497 (court of appeal had jurisdiction to rule on prosecutor's pretrial writ petition challenging trial court's suppression of evidence at Pen C §1538.5 hearing while trial proceedings were suspended under Pen C §1370).

After a finding of incompetency, the trial court must also make orders for the purpose of restoring the defendant to competency. Three options are available to the court: state hospital, public or private treatment facility, or outpatient treatment. Pen C §§1370(a)(1)(B)(i), 1370.01(a)(1). See Pen C §§1370.01(a)(1)-(2), 1370.1(a)(1)-(2), 1600-1620.

Before choosing among these options, the court must obtain a written evaluation of the defendant's treatment needs from the Community Program Director. Pen C §§1370(a)(2)(A), 1370.01(a)(2)(A). See People v Stanley (1980) 103 CA3d 599, 163 CR 270. The court must also hear whether the defendant, with the advice of counsel, consents to the administration of antipsychotic medication. If the defendant consents, the court order will state that the defendant consents to being given that medication as prescribed by a treating psychiatrist. The defendant may subsequently withdraw consent. Pen C §§1370(a)(2)(B)(i), (C), 1370.01(a)(2)(B)(i), (C). If the defendant does not consent, the court must decide whether to order the involuntarily medication of the defendant as prescribed by a treating psychiatrist. Involuntarily medication may be ordered only if the court finds, among other things, that the defendant is a danger to self or others, or that a defendant charged with a serious crime is likely to be rendered competent by the medication. See Pen C §§1370(a)(2)(B)(ii)-(iii), 1370.01(a)(2)(B)(ii)-(iii). See, e.g., People v McDuffie (2006) 144 CA4th 880, 50 CR3d 794. The initial commitment must be inpatient confinement for at least 180 days if the defendant is charged with any of the serious offenses specifically listed in Pen C §1601(a). See People v Superior Court (Lopez) (2005) 125 CA4th 1558, 1567, 24 CR3d 66; People v Amonson (2003) 114 CA4th 463, 7 CR3d 831. A defendant who is charged with a crime specified in Pen C §290 must be committed to a state hospital or other secure treatment facility unless the court specifically finds that an alternative placement would provide more appropriate treatment. Pen C §§1370(a)(1)(B)(ii), 1370.1(a)(1)(B)(ii).

The purpose of commitment under Pen C §1368 is to treat the defendant and restore him or her to competency. In fact, the defendant has a "right" to such treatment; in its absence, the defendant may turn to the court for relief. See Pen C §§1370(b)(3), 1370.1(b)(3); In re Ingram (1978) 76 CA3d 495, 142 CR 825.

To monitor the defendant and assure his or her progress toward restoration of competency, the treatment facility or agency must make periodic written reports to the court on the defendant's progress toward recovery. Pen C §§1370(b)(1), 1370.01(b), 1370.1(b)(1). The court must provide copies of these reports to the prosecution and defense attorneys.

If during the commitment it appears that there is no substantial likelihood that the defendant's competency will be restored, he or she must be returned to court for proceedings to determine whether the defendant is eligible for "alternate commitment" proceedings. See In re Davis (1973) 8 C3d 798, 106 CR 178. See §§48.79-48.82 for a discussion of alternate commitments.

In felony cases, defendants must be returned to court for mandatory competency hearings at 18-month intervals without regard to their progress. Pen C §§1370(b)(2), 1370.1(b)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.18 9. Length of Commitment; Credit for Time Served

Length of commitment. The defendant has a constitutional right not to be confined as incompetent for an unreasonably long period. Jackson v Indiana (1972) 406 US 715, 32 L Ed 2d 435, 92 S Ct 1845; In re Davis (1973) 8 C3d 798, 106 CR 178; In re Newmann (1976) 65 CA3d 57, 134 CR 886.

In felony cases, this period has been legislatively interpreted to mean either the maximum term of confinement, if convicted, or 3 years, whichever is shorter. Pen C §§1370(c)(1), 1370.1(c)(1). The 3-year limitation applies to the aggregate of all periods of commitment relating to the same offense. In re Polk (1999) 71 CA4th 1230, 84 CR2d 389.

In misdemeanor cases, the maximum confinement period has been legislatively interpreted to be either the maximum term of confinement for the most serious charge in the complaint or 1 year, whichever is shorter. Pen C §1370.01(c).

Credit for time served. Time spent in outpatient treatment as an incompetent must be credited on any term of imprisonment subsequently imposed in the same criminal case. Pen C §1375.5. No credit is given, however, for good conduct. People v Waterman (1986) 42 C3d 565, 229 CR 796.

10. Resumption of Criminal Proceedings

§48.19 a. Return to Court; When Defendant Must Be Placed in Secure Treatment Facility After Return

When an incompetent defendant regains mental competence, the director or supervisor of the treatment facility or program to which the defendant was committed, or the conservator, must certify that the defendant has regained mental competency by filing a certificate of restoration with the court by certified mail, return receipt requested. Pen C §§1372(a)(1), 1372(b), 1374. The defendant must be returned to the committing court within 10 calendar days after the certificate of restoration has been filed. Pen C §1372(a)(3)(C). For purposes of this section, the date of filing is the date on the return receipt. Pen C §1372(a)(1).

The court then holds a hearing on the issue of the defendant's restoration. The burden of proof at this "restoration hearing" is preponderance of the evidence. People v Rells (2000) 22 C4th 860, 94 CR2d 875. The defendant is not entitled to a jury trial. People v Murrell (1987) 196 CA3d 822, 242 CR 175. A defendant who opposes the certification of restoration has the burden of proving that incompetency remains. People v Mixon (1990) 225 CA3d 1471, 275 CR 817.

Criminal proceedings are resumed at the stage at which they were suspended. People v Rothrock (1936) 8 C2d 21, 63 P2d 807; People v Powell (1986) 180 CA3d 469, 225 CR 703.

The court may house an in-custody defendant in a secure treatment facility if, in the opinion of the director of the mental health facility at which the defendant was formerly treated, placement in a jail environment would create a substantial risk that the defendant would again become incompetent. Pen C §1372(e). The costs of housing a defendant who is now competent to stand trial are the responsibility of the original county of commitment. Pen C §1372(f).

Ø Note: The question of how to assess whether an individual has been restored to competency can be difficult to answer. It is not uncommon for a defendant to be returned to court as "restored" when defense counsel and consulting experts observe no significant improvements in either the underlying condition or in the defendant's abilities, capacities, and situational awareness. Counsel are often left to inquire into what was actually done with the defendant as part of the restoration process.

§48.20 b. Pen C §995 Motion in Felony Cases

If the defendant was mentally incompetent at the preliminary hearing, the commitment order is illegal (People v Duncan (2000) 78 CA4th 765, 93 CR2d 173; Chambers v Municipal Court (1974) 43 CA3d 809, 118 CR 120), and defense counsel may want to file a Pen C §995 motion to obtain a new preliminary hearing following the defendant's return to competence.

If a finding of incompetence was made before the preliminary hearing, the prosecutor will usually concede the issue and set the case for a new preliminary hearing. If the competency issue was not raised until after the preliminary hearing, defense counsel should notice an evidentiary hearing to be held at the same time as the hearing on the §995 motion, because the court will have to decide whether the defendant was mentally competent during the preliminary hearing. See Bayramoglu v Superior Court (1981) 124 CA3d 718, 729, 176 CR 487. This is one of the rare occasions when counsel can go outside the record of the preliminary hearing to establish denial of a substantial right in conducting the hearing. Bayramoglu v Superior Court, supra. Reports of psychiatrists or psychologists and treatment records have been held to support a finding of incompetency at the preliminary hearing. People v Duncan, supra.

If defense counsel knows at the time of the preliminary hearing that the defendant's competency is in doubt but prefers not to raise the competency issue at the preliminary hearing, a psychotherapist may nonetheless conduct the examinations necessary to support a later Bayramoglu §995 hearing. Defense counsel may also go on record about the defendant's incompetence at the preliminary hearing but continue with the hearing anyway.

A §995 motion granted because of the defendant's incompetency does not count toward the two-dismissal bar of Pen C §1387. Pen C §1387(c)(2)(A).

A defendant who was first found incompetent under §1368 at sentencing is not entitled to a new trial of the underlying charges on the ground that he or she was incompetent at trial if no question of incompetency was raised during the trial and if no motion for new trial on that ground was made in the trial court. People v Day (1988) 201 CA3d 112, 247 CR 68.

§48.21 c. Medications

A defendant's competency is often "restored" by psychopharmaceutical medications. Such medications often produce a remission of the defendant's symptoms; ceasing their use sometimes leads to a relapse. It is unclear whether a defendant who has been restored to competency can be forced to take medications in order to maintain his or her competency. Riggins v Nevada (1992) 504 US 127, 118 L Ed 2d 479, 112 S Ct 1810, did not resolve this issue but held that the state must establish the need for administering psychotropic medication to the defendant during trial after a request has been made to discontinue. In Sell v U.S. (2003) 539 US 166, 178, 156 L Ed 2d 197, 211, 123 S Ct 2174, the Supreme Court held that forced medication is constitutionally permissible "only if the treatment is medically appropriate, is substantially unlikely to have side effects that may undermine the fairness of the trial, and, taking account of less intrusive alternatives, is necessary significantly to further important governmental trial-related interests." Moreover, courts have expressed concern that forced-medication orders based on a slightly better than 50 percent chance of restoration to competence may not be justifiable. See, e.g., U.S. v Rivera-Morales (2005) 365 F Supp 2d 1139, aff'd without opinion, 160 Fed Appx 648 (9th Cir 2005). See also Carter v Superior Court (2006) 141 CA4th 992, 46 CR3d 507 (forced-medication order related to competence vacated when Sell analysis was erroneously conducted by trial court and insufficient attention paid to medication's side effects). See also Siegel, Involuntary Psychotropic Medication to Competence: No Longer an Easy Sell, 12 Mich St UJ Med & L 1 (2008).

A competent criminal defendant's voluntary ingestion of medication that has been provided by the state does not deprive him or her of due process of law because it causes drowsiness during the proceedings. People v Jones (1997) 15 C4th 119, 150, 61 CR2d 386, overruled on other grounds in People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 823 n1, 72 CR2d 656. See also People v Medina (1995) 11 C4th 694, 733, 47 CR2d 165.

Ø Note: Specialized literature is available on the effects of the many psychotropic medications. See Physician's Desk Reference; Schatzberg & Nemeroff, eds., American Psychiatric Publishing Textbook of Psychopharmacology (3d ed 2004); and Marangell & Martinez, Concise Guide to Psychopharmacology (2d ed 2006). Scientists who specialize in pharmacology also can be very helpful in describing the known effects of the combination of various medications.

§48.22 11. Appeal Rights

A finding that a defendant is competent is a nonappealable interlocutory ruling, which may be reviewed only on appeal from a final judgment in the underlying criminal proceeding. People v Mickle (1991) 54 C3d 140, 180, 284 CR 511. A determination that a defendant is incompetent and should be committed to a state hospital is appealable as a final judgment in a special proceeding. People v Fields (1965) 62 C2d 538, 42 CR 833.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.23 E. Extended Commitment

After the maximum term of commitment has expired, a defendant who has not been restored to competency may be involuntarily confined further only under "alternate commitment proceedings." See Jackson v Indiana (1972) 406 US 715, 32 L Ed 2d 435, 92 S Ct 1845; In re Davis (1973) 8 C3d 798, 106 CR 178. The available alternates are:

- A mental health conservatorship under the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act. See Welf & I C §§5008(h)(1)(A), 5350. See also §§48.79-48.82; California Conservatorship Practice, chap 23 (Cal CEB 2005); California Guardianship Practice §§11.19-11.20 (Cal CEB Annual).
- A special Lanterman-Petris-Short Act conservatorship for defendants who have been charged with one of specified violent felonies, who remain "incompetent" as defined in Pen C §1367, and who have been proven beyond a reasonable doubt to be dangerous. Welf & I C §5008(h)(1)(B). These special conservatorships are known as Hofferber conservatorships after the case that upheld their provisions, Conservatorship of Hofferber (1980) 28 C3d 161, 167 CR 854. Conservatorships are renewable yearly, and the defendant retains due process and procedural protections. Conservatorship of Hofferber, supra. See Welf & I C §§5008(h)(1)(B), 5350.
- Extended commitment as a sexually violent predator. See §§48.79-48.82.

§48.24 F. Procedures Concerning Incompetent Developmentally Disabled Defendants

A defendant who is "developmentally disabled" as defined in Pen C §1370.1 and who may be incompetent to stand trial undergoes the same Pen C §§1368-1375.5 competency hearings as a non-developmentally disabled defendant (see §§48.10-48.22), with a few exceptions:

- If a defendant is developmentally disabled, the evaluation is provided by the director of the state-contracted Regional Center for the Care and Treatment of Developmentally Disabled Individuals (Regional Center). Pen C §1370.1(a)(1). See People v Leonard (2007) 40 C4th 1370, 1388, 58 CR3d 368. This evaluation may not be waived. People v Stanley (1980) 103 CA3d 599, 163 CR 270.
- Treatment of developmentally disabled individuals is handled by the Regional Centers. Pen C §1370.1. A list of California's Regional Centers can be found at http://www.dds.ca.gov.

Developmental disability is defined by Pen C §1370.1(a)(1)(H) as a disability that begins before age 18, continues or can be expected to continue indefinitely, and is a substantial handicap. It includes mental retardation (and similar conditions), cerebral palsy, epilepsy, and autism but does not include solely physical handicaps. See also Welf & I C §4512.

Other procedures involving developmentally disabled defendants include proceedings analogous to LPS conservatorships (see In re Hop (1981) 29 C3d 82, 171 CR 721) and commitment to the State Department of Developmental Services for people with mental retardation who may be a danger to self or others (see Welf & I C §§6500-6513).

A useful source material on mental retardation and developmental disability is Mental Retardation: Definition, Classification, and Systems of Supports (10th ed 2002), published by the American Association on Intellectual and Developmental Disability (AAIDD) and available to order at http://bookstore.aaidd.org.

> Ø Note: In Atkins v Virginia (2002) 536 US 304, 153 L Ed 2d 335, 122 S Ct 2242, the Supreme Court held that the Eighth Amendment prohibits the execution of mentally retarded offenders. California has implemented the Atkins rule by establishing a procedure in capital cases for determining whether a defendant is mentally retarded. See Pen C §1376. For discussion, see §54.18A.

§48.25 G. Competency Proceedings in Juvenile Court

Although juvenile law does not specifically provide for competency proceedings, the juvenile court has inherent power to determine whether a minor is incompetent. James H. v Superior Court (1978) 77 CA3d 169, 143 CR 398. The standard for determining competency is whether the minor has the present ability to factually understand the proceedings and consult with his or her attorney, not whether he or she can become competent in the future with assistance. In re Ricky S. (2008) 166 CA4th 232, 236, 82 CR3d 432. Minors who are incompetent are not committed for treatment in the same way as adults but instead are referred for evaluation and treatment under the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act. In re Hadley B. (2007) 148 CA4th 1041, 56 CR3d 234; In re Patrick H. (1997) 54 CA4th 1346, 63 CR2d 455; In re Mary T. (1985) 176 CA3d 38, 221 CR 364.

§48.26 H. Incompetence on Appeal and During Postconviction Proceedings

In Rohan ex rel Gates v Woodford (9th Cir 2003) 334 F3d 803, 808, a capital case, an attorney appointed as "next friend" to the petitioner in federal habeas corpus proceedings requested a stay on the ground that the petitioner was unable to communicate rationally on matters of importance to the litigation. The Ninth Circuit granted the stay, holding that the statutory right to counsel in federal habeas corpus proceedings (see 21 USC §848(q)(4)(B)), entails a requirement that the petitioner be competent to assist counsel. See also Calderon v U.S. Dist. Court (Kelly V) (9th Cir 1998) 163 F3d 530, 541 (en banc), overruled on other grounds in Woodford v Garceau (2003) 538 US 202, 206, 155 L Ed 2d 363, 369, 123 S Ct 1398 (habeas petitioner's incompetence tolls AEDPA statute of limitations). The statutory right to competence recognized in Rohan applies to an appeal from denial of habeas relief. Nash v Ryan (9th Cir 2009) 581 F3d 1048, 1050.

IV. ABSENCE OF CRIMINAL MENTAL STATE

A. Failure to Form Intent Required for Commission of Crime

1. Admissibility of Exculpatory Mental State Evidence

§48.27 a. Mental State Evidence Available to Negate Specific Intent and Other Specified Mental States

Evidence of mental disease, defect, or disorder is admissible in the prosecution of a specific intent crime on the issue of whether the accused formed a required specific intent, premeditated, deliberated, or harbored malice aforethought. Pen C §28(a). Similarly, evidence of the defendant's voluntary intoxication is admissible on whether the defendant formed a required specific intent or, when charged with murder, whether or not the defendant premeditated, deliberated, or harbored express malice aforethought. Pen C §22(b). This evidence is sometimes referred to as evidence of "diminished actuality."

Note the statutory distinction between evidence of mental disease, defect, or disorder and evidence of voluntary intoxication. Compare Pen C §28(a) with Pen C §22(b). Evidence of mental disease, defect, or disorder is admissible in a murder prosecution whether the prosecution relies on a theory of express or implied malice. Evidence of voluntary intoxication may also negate express malice, i.e., specific intent to kill (see People v Saille (1991) 54 C3d 1103, 1114, 2 CR2d 364); it will not, however, negate implied malice. Similarly, voluntary intoxication will not negate criminal negligence. See also Montana v Egelhoff (1996) 518 US 37, 135 L Ed 2d 361, 116 S Ct 2013 (due process does not require that defendant be allowed to introduce evidence of voluntary intoxication as defense to intent element of crime).

Evidence of mental disease, defect, or disorder or voluntary intoxication is not available to negate what has traditionally been known as general criminal intent or mens rea. See, e.g., People v Rocha (1971) 3 C3d 893, 896, 92 CR 172.

Ø Note: The Judicial Council of California Criminal Jury Instructions (CALCRIM) pertinent to mental state defenses (see CALCRIM 3425-3455) and impairment defenses specific to homicide cases (see CALCRIM 625-627) reiterate many of the concepts previously found in the CALJIC instructions. It has been observed that the CALCRIM instructions, while in accessible and uncomplicated language, do not cover all of the mental state defenses available and may not, in certain specific instances, comport with all current, pertinent case law. For this reason, defense counsel should not rely solely on CALCRIM and should conduct independent research before drafting and submitting instructions.

§48.28 b. Distinguishing Between Specific and General Intent

Most criminal acts are general intent crimes. To determine whether a crime is a specific intent offense, the first question is whether the statutory definition makes any express or implied reference to a mental state. See People v Atkins (2001) 25 C4th 76, 82, 104 CR2d 738 (holding that arson requires only general criminal intent); People v Hering (1999) 20 C4th 440, 445, 84 CR2d 839. Examples of specific intent crimes include robbery (see Pen C §211); burglary (see Pen C §459); assault with intent to commit rape (see Pen C §220); felony murder (see, e.g., People v Gutierrez (2002) 28 C4th 1083, 1140, 124 CR2d 373 (intent element of felony murder is specific intent to commit underlying felony)); conspiracy (see People v Russo (2001) 25 C4th 1124, 108 CR2d 436).

In addition, in the following situations, evidence of voluntary intoxication (or mental disease, defect, or disorder) is admissible on the question of whether the defendant formed the required mental state:

- When the prosecution's theory of liability is that the defendant aided and abetted another individual who was the actual perpetrator of the crime (see People v Mendoza (1998) 18 C4th 1114, 1126, 77 CR2d 428 (proof of liability of aider and abettor requires proof of specific intent));
- When the defendant is charged with an attempt to commit another crime (see Pen C §21(a) ("attempt to commit a crime consists of two elements: a specific intent to commit the crime, and a direct but ineffectual act done toward its commission")); or
- When knowledge is an element of an offense (People v Reyes (1997) 52 CA4th 975, 983, 61 CR2d 39 (evidence of voluntary intoxication admissible to show that defendant did not know that property was stolen)).

On the distinction between general and specific intent, see generally People v Mendoza (1998) 18 C4th 1114, 77 CR2d 428; People v Hood (1969) 1 C3d 444, 456, 82 CR 618. On the use of exculpatory mental state evidence in homicide prosecutions, see §48.30.

§48.29 c. Statutory Limitations on Use of Exculpatory Mental State Evidence

Under Pen C §§22 (voluntary intoxication) and 28 (mental disorder or defect), exculpatory mental state evidence is admissible in the guilt phase of a criminal prosecution only on the question of whether the defendant actually formed the required specific intent. It is not admissible on the question of whether the defendant had the capacity to form the required intent. Pen C §§22(a), 28(b).

Ø Note: Evidence of both capacity to form and actual existence of a mental state are admissible at the sentencing phase. Pen C §25(c).

In addition, Pen C §29 prohibits an expert who is testifying about a defendant's mental illness, disorder, or defect from testifying "as to whether the defendant had or did not have the required mental states for the crimes charged." See People v Bordelon (2008) 162 CA4th 1311, 1321, 77 CR3d 14 (§29 prohibits hypothetical questions that may be interpreted to call for ultimate opinion on mental state); People v Czahara (1988) 203 CA3d 1468, 250 CR 836 (§29 prohibits psychiatrist from presenting opinion that defendant was acting in heat of passion at time of killing, because this is legal equivalent of saying defendant lacked malice). In People v Coddington (2000) 23 C4th 529, 583, 97 CR2d 528, overruled on other grounds in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069 n5, 108 CR2d 409, the California Supreme Court explained that §§28 and 29 permit the defendant to offer (1) evidence that he or she suffered from a mental disease or defect and (2) evidence about that mental disease or defect from which the jury could infer that he or she did not form the mental states required for deliberation. The court held that the exclusion of expert testimony on the ultimate question of fact, i.e., whether he did form the required mental states, did not deprive the defendant of due process of law. People v Coddington, supra. See People v Bordelon (2008) 162 CA4th 1311, 1327, 77 CR3d 14 (trial court properly prohibited expert from answering hypothetical regarding defendant's specific intent). Expert testimony on how the defendant's experiences and background might have affected the defendant's perceptions and conduct at the time of the crime is permitted. See Pen C §29; People v Adan (2000) 77 CA4th 390, 91 CR2d 584 (prosecution experts' testimony that defendant was malingering held admissible); People v Nunn (1996) 50 CA4th 1357, 58 CR2d 294 (defense expert permitted to testify that defendant tended to overreact to stress and apprehension, which could result in his acting impulsively in certain situations, but not permitted to testify that defendant had acted impulsively in committing charged acts); People v Young (1987) 189 CA3d 891, 906, 234 CR 819 (psychiatrist allowed to testify to diagnosis of mental disease at time of homicide but not to ultimate legal issue of whether defendant acted with malice aforethought); People v McCowan (1986) 182 CA3d 1, 14, 227 CR 23 (court limited opinion testimony to defendant's mental state at time of crime and barred psychiatric testimony on ultimate conclusion of law).

Ø Note: The trial court has no sua sponte duty to instruct the jury on evidence admitted to show that the defendant did not actually form a required specific intent (or other mental state). These instructions are pinpoint instructions, and the defense must request them. People v Saille (1991) 54 C3d 1103, 1120, 2 CR2d 364.

For discussion of the effect of a finding of lack of intent based on voluntary intoxication or mental disease or disorder, see §48.37.

§48.30 d. Mental Defenses in Homicide Cases

Malice aforethought. An unlawful homicide committed with malice aforethought is murder. Pen C §188. Malice is express when the defendant intended to kill. See People v Saille (1991) 54 C3d 1103, 1114, 2 CR2d 364. Malice is implied when the defendant is subjectively aware that his or her conduct endangers the life of another and acts in conscious disregard of the risk. People v Watson (1981) 30 C3d 290, 296, 179 CR 43. The defendant can introduce evidence of mental disease, defect, or disorder, or of voluntary intoxication to raise a reasonable doubt about whether he or she acted with express or implied malice aforethought. Pen C §§22(b), 28(a). Voluntary intoxication cannot be used to negate the inference that the defendant acted with implied malice, although it may be used to show that the defendant did not intend to kill. Pen C §22(b). An unlawful homicide committed without malice aforethought may be voluntary or involuntary manslaughter, depending on the circumstances. See People v Lasko (2000) 23 C4th 101, 96 CR2d 441.

Premeditation and deliberation. An intentional killing done with premeditation and deliberation is first degree murder. Pen C §189. Evidence of mental disease, defect, or disorder, or of voluntary intoxication will reduce first degree murder to second degree murder if it raises a reasonable doubt about whether a defendant who killed intentionally acted with premeditation and deliberation. Pen C §§22(b), 28(a). In this context, "premeditated" means the decision to kill was made before the act of killing is done. See CALCRIM 521. "Deliberate" means the careful weighing of considerations for and against the choice to kill before making the decision to do so. See CALCRIM 521. See also Pen C §189.

Unreasonable self-defense. A defendant who kills intentionally but in the unreasonable belief in the need for self-defense is guilty not of murder but of voluntary manslaughter. People v Flannel (1979) 25 C3d 668, 160 CR 84. The Flannel doctrine survived the abolition of the diminished capacity defense. In re Christian S. (1994) 7 C4th 768, 774, 30 CR2d 33. Thus, evidence of mental disease, defect, or disorder or of voluntary intoxication can be used to establish that a defendant subjectively believed in the need for self-defense, even if the evidence shows that such a belief was unreasonable. However, imperfect self-defense may not be based on mental "delusion" alone. People v Mejia-Lenares (2006) 135 CA4th 1437, 1446, 38 CR3d 404.

Felony murder. In cases involving the felony murder rule, a specific intent to commit the underlying felony is necessary even if the felony was a general intent crime. People v Nichols (1970) 3 C3d 150, 163, 89 CR 721; People v Martinez (1980) 105 CA3d 938, 942, 165 CR 11; People v Jentry (1977) 69 CA3d 615, 628, 138 CR 250. Thus, evidence showing that, because of mental disease, defect, or disorder or because of voluntary intoxication, the defendant did not have the specific intent to commit the underlying felony is relevant and admissible in a felony murder prosecution. See Pen C §§22(b), 28(a).

Uses of mental state evidence. Although absence of a required mental state is usually referred to as a "defense," when a mental state other than general criminal intent is an element of the crime, the prosecution bears the burden of proving that the defendant acted with the mental state required for conviction. See In re Winship (1970) 397 US 358, 364, 25 L Ed 2d 368, 90 S Ct 1068. Therefore, when the defendant's mental state at the time of the commission of the crime is at issue, the prosecution will want to establish the existence of the requisite mental state.

Mental state evidence may serve several functions for the defense. Counsel may use evidence that the defendant was mentally impaired or intoxicated at the time of the crime to support a substantive mental state defense, to lay the foundation for an insanity defense, or as mitigation evidence in a capital case. Both parties may need to combine witness observations, anecdotal information, and circumstantial evidence to establish the defendant's mental state.

Finding expert witnesses. The presentation of mental state evidence usually includes expert witnesses. Because contemporaneous observations are usually more persuasive than retrospective analysis, counsel should learn whether any experts saw the defendant at or near the time of the crime and assess whether they have the qualifications to provide expert mental state testimony.

If no "time of crime" experts are available, or if counsel concludes that additional expert testimony will be helpful, retrospective assessment of the defendant's mental state will be necessary. The law recognizes that, although this is an esoteric subject matter, it is not so intricate as to require imposition of an elevated threshold for the admission of expert testimony. See People v Stoll (1989) 49 C3d 1136, 1151, 265 CR 111; People v McDonald (1984) 37 C3d 351, 372, 208 CR 236, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendoza (2000) 23 C4th 896, 914, 98 CR2d 431. See also Simon & Shuman, Retrospective Assessment of Mental States in Litigation (2002); Rogers & Shuman, Conducting Insanity Evaluations (2d ed 2000). Counsel can review current literature to ensure that the experts contacted appear to display knowledge of the standards of practice, and of the pertinent assessment or evaluation protocols, involved in the specific issues of the case. For a general discussion of standards applicable to mental health experts, see Simon & Shuman, Clinical Manual of Psychiatry and Law (2006); Rogers & Shuman, Fundamentals of Forensic Practice: Mental Health and Criminal Law (2005).

Preparing the expert. The value of an expert's opinion depends entirely on the foundation on which the opinion rests. When mental state is an important issue, counsel should expect the opposing party to attack the foundation of the expert's opinion if possible and should guard against that attack by working with the expert to develop an appropriate protocol for the expert to follow. Counsel may need to review both the standards of practice for psychiatrists and psychologists, and the case law discussing the reliability, validity, and usefulness of expert psychological and psychiatric testimony to develop such a protocol. Counsel should bear in mind that special standards may apply to those who hold themselves out as "forensic experts."

Providing effective assistance of counsel may require investigating defendant's mental condition. When the facts suggest the possibility that mental state evidence could be used as a defense to the charge or in mitigation of punishment, defense counsel may need to investigate the defendant's background and mental functioning to provide effective assistance of counsel. See, e.g., Wiggins v Smith (2003) 539 US 510, 519, 156 L Ed 2d 471, 483, 123 S Ct 2527. Especially in capital cases, cursory consultation with experts may be inadequate. The failure to research, investigate, prepare, and present a mental state defense based on available evidence may constitute ineffective assistance of counsel. See, e.g., Williams v Taylor (2000) 529 US 362, 146 L Ed 2d 389, 120 S Ct 1495; Daniels v Woodford (9th Cir 2005) 428 F3d 1181.

2. Presenting Evidence of Absence of Criminal Mental State

§48.32 a. Introducing Evidence; Instructions

The defendant has the burden of producing evidence on the absence of the required mental state unless the prosecution's case-in-chief contains substantial evidence of lack of intent. See People v Henderson (1963) 60 C2d 482, 489, 35 CR 77. Although such evidence can be presented through expert testimony and testimony of people who are well acquainted with the defendant, it is often advisable for the defendant to testify, because the jury will want to hear the defendant's version of what happened. Counsel must carefully consider how a defendant, especially one with a serious mental disorder, will hold up to cross-examination. It may be advisable to make an opening statement to focus the jury's attention on evidence supporting the conclusion that the defendant did not have the required mental state. If counsel anticipates that the prosecutor's case-in-chief will raise questions about the defendant's mental condition at the time of the offense, it may be a good idea to make an opening statement at the outset of the case.

A defendant can choose not to be medicated at trial so that the jury may observe him or her in an unmedicated state, unless the government has a compelling interest in having the defendant medicated. See Riggins v Nevada (1992) 504 US 127, 118 L Ed 2d 479, 112 S Ct 1810. See also Sell v U.S. (2003) 539 US 166, 178, 156 L Ed 2d 197, 211, 123 S Ct 2174 (involuntary administration of antipsychotic medication constitutionally permissible "only if the treatment is medically appropriate, is substantially unlikely to have side effects that may undermine the fairness of the trial, and, taking account of less intrusive alternatives, is necessary significantly to further important governmental trial-related interests").

The trial court has no sua sponte obligation to give instructions on the absence of a required mental state. People v Saille (1991) 54 C3d 1103, 2 CR2d 364 (on voluntary intoxication). Consequently, defense counsel must request the court to give any relevant instructions. The trial court is required to give such "pinpoint" instructions on request when the evidence supports the theory. People v Saille, supra. See also People v Ervin (2000) 22 C4th 48, 90, 91 CR2d 623. Note, however, that the evidence of mental disease or defect must be specific enough to support an inference that the defendant did not actually have the required mental state. See, e.g., People v Moore (2002) 96 CA4th 1105, 117 CR2d 715.

Instructions that may be relevant include CALCRIM 3428 (jury may consider evidence of mental disease for limited purpose of determining whether defendant formed required intent or mental state), CALCRIM 3426-3427 (same, intoxication), CALCRIM 3425 (same, unconsciousness). Counsel may need to draft instructions supported by case law when the specific defense is not contained in a CALCRIM instruction.

§48.33 b. Hiring Mental Health Expert

The defense may hire its own expert witnesses to testify to the defendant's state of mind at the time he or she committed a crime and its effect on the defendant's legal culpability or responsibility. See Evid C §733. An indigent defendant may request the appointment of such experts at public expense because the Sixth Amendment right to effective assistance of counsel incorporates court-appointed experts necessary for preparation of a defense. Corenevsky v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 307, 318, 204 CR 165. This includes mental health experts to assist in evaluation, preparation, and presentation of the defense. Ake v Oklahoma (1985) 470 US 68, 84 L Ed 2d 53, 105 S Ct 1087.

Defense counsel should ensure that the mental health expert hired spends enough time with the defendant to be competent to testify. See People v James (1989) 208 CA3d 1155, 256 CR 661 (testimony of defense psychotherapist in sanity phase properly disallowed because he had spent only half an hour with defendant). Counsel must also consider what information and documents will be given to the mental health expert. Counsel should give the expert enough information to have a sound basis for his or her opinion but should also think of the consequences of discovery of information given to the expert. See §48.34 for discussion of the psychotherapist-patient privilege, and chap 11 for discussion of discovery concerning information given to experts. Counsel must also be aware that the State has the ability to seek a court-ordered examination of a defendant who puts his or her mental state at issue. Pen C §1054.3(b)(1).

Ø Note: The resources listed in §48.31 discuss ways to interact with mental health experts.

There is generally no psychotherapist-patient privilege if the therapist is appointed by the court. Evid C §1017. However, §1017 provides an exception that in practice is more generally invoked than the principle itself. The exception occurs when the court appoints a psychotherapist to advise defense counsel on whether to enter or withdraw an insanity plea or to present a defense based on the defendant's mental or emotional condition. Appointment under this exception invokes the attorney-client privilege of Evid C §954. People v Lines (1975) 13 C3d 500, 511, 119 CR 225.

Ø Note: There is no client-litigant exception to the attorney-client privilege analogous to this patient-litigant exception. Therefore, communications between the defendant and his or her lawyer are protected even after the client has put his or her mental or emotional condition in issue. People v Lines, supra (relying on City & County of San Francisco v Superior Court (1951) 37 C2d 227, 231 P2d 26).

The subject matter of both the psychotherapist-patient and attorney-client privileges is not limited to verbal communications but includes observations made while examining or interviewing the patient or client. See Evid C §§952, 1012; People v Meredith (1981) 29 C3d 682, 693, 175 CR 612.

There is an exception to the psychotherapist-patient privilege for child abuse reporting, which is mandatory in certain circumstances. See Pen C §§11164-11174.3 (Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act). Experienced mental health experts will often admonish the person being examined on this provision of law, and may request a signed acknowledgment of the admonishment. This exception applies only to information reported to the authorities under the Act; other communications retain their confidentiality. People v Stritzinger (1983) 34 C3d 505, 511, 194 CR 431; People v John B. (1987) 192 CA3d 1073, 237 CR 659. In addition, Pen C §1054.3(b) allows the court to order an examination of a defendant who has placed his or her mental condition at issue; no admonishment on child abuse reporting is required.

Another exception to the psychotherapist-patient privilege occurs when the therapist has reasonable cause to believe that the patient's mental or emotional condition renders him or her a danger to him- or herself or to the person or property of another and that disclosure of the communication is necessary to prevent the threatened danger. Evid C §1024; Menendez v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 435, 11 CR2d 92 (only tapes with threats allowed to be played for jury); People v Wharton (1991) 53 C3d 522, 563, 280 CR 631.

For further discussion of the psychotherapist-patient and lawyer-client privileges, see California Trial Objections, chaps 34, 37 (Cal CEB Annual); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chaps 40, 42 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

§48.35 d. Limited Use Immunity for Previous Pen C §1368 Testimony

Sometimes a defendant raising a mental defense at trial has had earlier proceedings under Pen C §1368 to determine whether he or she is competent to stand trial. See §§48.6-48.22. Even though the defense expert may have expressed an opinion at the earlier §1368 trial that is contrary to the defendant's asserted guilt phase defense of lack of mental capacity to commit the offense, the defendant is protected by a limited use immunity that prevents the prosecutor from calling the defense's §1368 expert to rebut the lack of mental capacity defense at trial. Centeno v Superior Court (2004) 117 CA4th 30, 44, 11 CR3d 533; Baqleh v Superior Court (2002) 100 CA4th 478, 502, 122 CR2d 673. If the defense "opens the door," however, an evaluation may be offered by the prosecution to rebut a claim of extreme mental disturbance. Buchanan v Kentucky (1987) 483 US 402, 97 L Ed 2d 336, 107 S Ct 2906. Furthermore, if the defendant testifies at trial, statements made to a psychiatrist during a competency evaluation and given to the prosecution during plea negotiations may be used to impeach that testimony. People v Crow (1994) 28 CA4th 440, 452, 33 CR2d 624. But see People v Pokovich (2006) 39 C4th 1240, 48 CR3d 158.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.36 e. Direct and Cross-Examination of Mental Health Expert

Defense mental health experts. A defense mental health expert may testify that the defendant suffered from a particular condition at the time of the offense, and may give evidence about the condition and the defendant's background and experience from which the jury may infer that the defendant did not formulate the required mental state. People v Coddington (2000) 23 C4th 529, 583, 97 CR2d 528, overruled on other grounds in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069 n5, 108 CR2d 409. The expert may not, however, testify that the defendant did or did not formulate the required mental state. See Pen C §29. See, e.g., People v Nunn (1996) 50 CA4th 1357, 58 CR2d 294.

Prosecution cross-examination of defense mental health experts. The prosecutor should make sure that he or she has received all discovery concerning the defense expert. There are frequently quite damaging pieces of information in the expert's reports and in the information given to the defense expert to review in conjunction with the case. This information usually provides the main basis for prosecution cross-examination.

> Ø Note: Not everything is fair game, however, for cross-examination. For example, in a joint murder trial, the prosecution, on cross-examination of defense psychiatric experts, cannot bring out extrajudicial statements of the nontestifying codefendant that tend to incriminate the defendant. People v Anderson (1987) 43 C3d 1104, 1123, 1124, 240 CR 585.

Prosecution mental health experts. In response to Verdin v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 1096, 77 CR3d 287, the legislature enacted Pen C §1054.3(b), which permits the court to order, on timely request by the prosecution, the examination of a defendant who "places in issue his or her mental state at any phase" of a criminal proceeding. This is a significant change in California law that can apply in a wide variety of situations in addition to a mental state defense during the adjudication of guilt, such as the penalty phase of a capital case and bail and sentencing hearings.

The prosecution must submit a list of proposed tests to be administered by the expert. On the defendant's request, a hearing must be held to consider any objections to the tests. Before ordering the defendant to submit to the examination, the trial court must determine that the proposed tests bear some reasonable relation to the mental state placed in issue by the defendant. Pen C §1054.3(b)(1)(B). The prosecution is responsible for the fees of any such expert for examination and testimony at trial. Pen C §1054.3(b)(1)(A).

> Ø Note: The Sixth Amendment right to counsel precludes using a state-ordered or arranged psychiatric evaluation against the defendant, either directly or in rebuttal, unless defense counsel was given notice of the examination and of the issues to be covered in the examination. Powell v Texas (1989) 492 US 680, 106 L Ed 2d 551, 109 S Ct 3146.

The prosecution may present fact witnesses who will testify to events and conversations from which the jury can conclude that the defendant was not suffering from a mental condition that affected his or her ability to form the required mental state at the time of the crime. In addition, once a defendant raises his or her mental condition as an issue at the guilt or penalty phase of a trial, and the law allows the prosecution examination of the defendant, a prosecution psychiatrist may testify to the defendant's refusal to cooperate when he or she was ordered by counsel not to cooperate with prosecution experts. Buchanan v Kentucky (1987) 483 US 402, 97 L Ed 2d 336, 107 S Ct 2906.

§48.37 3. Effect of Successful Lack of Intent Defense

When the trier of fact accepts the defense of lack of the required intent, the result will be a not guilty verdict for any crime charged for which the negated intent is an element. People v Wetmore (1978) 22 C3d 318, 327, 149 CR 265. If there is a lesser offense that does not contain the negated intent, a verdict of guilty of the lesser offense is still possible.

When this defense results in a total acquittal, the prosecution's only resource is to attempt to institute proceedings for civil commitment under the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act. See §§48.79-48.82.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.38 4. Mental Defenses in Juvenile Court

It appears that the legal principles discussed in §§48.27-48.37 apply to juvenile proceedings. Penal Code §§21(b), 25(a)-(b), and 28(b) specifically apply to juvenile court. Although Pen C §§22 and 29 do not mention juvenile proceedings, the basic substance of Pen C §22 is found in Pen C §25.

A minor in a juvenile proceeding under Welf & I C §602 who places in issue his or her mental state through the proposed testimony of any mental health expert may be ordered, on timely request by the prosecution, to submit to examination by a prosecution-retained mental health expert. Pen C §1054.3(b)(1).

B. Unconsciousness

§48.39 1. Definition

Persons who commit a criminal act without being conscious of committing it are legally incapable of having committed the crime. Pen C §26(4). The unconsciousness defense can exist despite a defendant's ability to walk, speak, and perform other physical actions. There is no need to show a coma in the medical sense. People v Chaffey (1994) 25 CA4th 852, 855, 30 CR2d 757; People v Newton (1970) 8 CA3d 359, 376, 87 CR 394. All that is necessary to establish the defense is to prove that the defendant was not conscious of his or her actions. People v Kelly (1973) 10 C3d 565, 572, 111 CR 171; People v Newton, supra; CALCRIM 3425.

Ø Warning: Although unconsciousness is ordinarily a complete defense to criminal homicide, it is not a complete defense if it resulted from the voluntary consumption of alcohol or another intoxicating substance. The defendant may be convicted of involuntary manslaughter even if he or she was unconscious at the time of the homicide; the act of becoming intoxicated to such a degree is deemed criminally negligent. See People v Ochoa (1998) 19 C4th 353, 423, 79 CR2d 408.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.40 2. Procedure and Effect

Evidence of unconsciousness is admitted at the guilt phase of the trial in the same manner as evidence of lack of criminal intent. See, e.g., People v Wilson (1967) 66 C2d 749, 760, 59 CR 156. See §§48.32-48.36 for discussion of those procedures.

When the unconscious state is caused by voluntary intoxication from drugs or alcohol, the condition can have the effect only of negating a specific state of mind. People v Ray (1975) 14 C3d 20, 30, 120 CR 377, disapproved on other grounds in People v Blakely (2000) 23 C4th 82, 89, 96 CR2d 451; People v Kelly (1973) 10 C3d 565, 573, 111 CR 171; People v Conley (1966) 64 C2d 310, 322, 49 CR 815; People v Walker (1993) 14 CA4th 1615, 18 CR2d 431; CALCRIM 3426. When the unconscious state is caused by anything else, including involuntary intoxication, it is a complete defense to any criminal charge (both general and specific intent crimes). People v Ray (1975) 14 C3d 20, 25, 120 CR 377, disapproved on other grounds in People v Blakely (2000) 23 C4th 82, 89, 96 CR2d 451; People v Kelly, supra; People v Wilson, supra; CALCRIM 3425, 3427. For discussion of specific intent crimes, see §48.27.

Ø Note: The prosecution will probably request CALCRIM 3425, which tells jurors that if the evidence proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant acted as if he or she were conscious at the time of the crime, jurors should conclude the defendant was conscious. See People v Babbitt (1988) 45 C3d 660, 693, 248 CR 69 (instruction does not unconstitutionally shift burden of proof to defendant).

§48.41 C. Involuntary Intoxication

A person becomes involuntarily intoxicated when he or she unknowingly ingests an intoxicating liquor, drug, or other substance as a result of force, fraud, duress, or trickery by another person. CALCRIM 3427. For example, if a person thinks she is drinking a soft drink, but someone has put vodka in it, any resulting intoxication is involuntary. But if a person smoking marijuana unknowingly becomes intoxicated on PCP, it is not involuntary, because he or she chose to smoke marijuana, which is an intoxicant. See People v Velez (1985) 175 CA3d 785, 221 CR 631. A person who becomes unconscious by taking a drug to commit suicide is not involuntarily intoxicated for crimes committed while driving in an unconscious state if the person realized that some impairment of consciousness could result. People v Chaffey (1994) 25 CA4th 852, 855, 30 CR2d 757.

Involuntary intoxication may result in unconsciousness, or it may deprive the defendant of the ability to intend the prohibited act. If involuntary intoxication results in unconsciousness, it is a complete defense to both general and specific intent criminal charges. People v Cruz (1978) 83 CA3d 308, 330, 147 CR 740; People v Heffington (1973) 32 CA3d 1, 8, 107 CR 859. If involuntary intoxication results in depriving the defendant of the ability to intend the prohibited act, it is also a complete defense to both a specific and a general intent crime. See CALCRIM 3425, 3427.

The concept that an alcoholic is involuntarily intoxicated because he or she cannot refrain from drinking has been rejected. People v Wyatt (1972) 22 CA3d 671, 677, 99 CR 674.

Involuntary intoxication is raised at the guilt phase of trial in the same manner as voluntary intoxication or lack of intent. See §§48.32-48.36.

Ø Note: Counsel should carefully consider the expertise necessary to present state-of-mind evidence, including evidence of unconsciousness or intoxication (and its effects in very specific circumstances). The neurosciences are constantly evolving, as are the diagnostic and assessment methods available to qualified experts. See, for example, Yudovsky & Hales, American Psychiatric Publishing Textbook of Neuropsychiatry and Behavioral Neurosciences (5th ed. 2008); Hurley & Taber, Windows to the Brain: Insights From Neuroimaging (2008).

V. INSANITY

A. Modified M'Naghten Insanity Rule

§48.42 1. Statement of Rule

California presently uses a modified version of the M'Naghten rule of insanity. The test is set out in Pen C §25(b):

> In any criminal proceeding, including any juvenile court proceeding, in which a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity is entered, this defense shall be found by the trier of fact only when the accused person proves by a preponderance of the evidence that he or she was incapable of knowing or understanding the nature and quality of his or her act and of distinguishing right from wrong at the time of the commission of the offense.

See also CALCRIM 3450.

The insanity defense cannot be based solely on a personality or adjustment disorder, a seizure disorder, or an addiction to or abuse of intoxicating substances. Pen C §25.5.

The codification of the M'Naghten rule in §25(b) is constitutional and is not impermissibly vague. People v Kelly (1992) 1 C4th 495, 532, 3 CR2d 677.

Although §25(b) states the two means of demonstrating insanity in the conjunctive (incapable of knowing or understanding and of distinguishing right from wrong), in People v Skinner (1985) 39 C3d 765, 217 CR 685, the supreme court ruled that they remain alternatives and are not both required.

Once the existence of a delusional system has been proved, the trier of fact must look to the nature of the delusion and its relationship to the crime to determine whether insanity has been proved. In other words, the delusion and its effect on sanity must be judged as if its contents were real. If under that assumption the delusionary material would constitute justification for the crime, the defendant is insane. People v Skinner (1985) 39 C3d 765, 781, 217 CR 685; People v Nash (1959) 52 C2d 36, 45, 338 P2d 416; People v Hubert (1897) 119 C 216.

Ø Example: In a homicide case, if the defendant's delusion is that someone is trying to kill him or her, and the defendant believes that he or she is acting in self-defense, the trier of fact should find the defendant insane. If, however, in response to that delusion, the defendant kills for revenge, a finding of insanity is not justified. See People v Skinner (1986) 185 CA3d 1050, 1060, 228 CR 652.

Ø Note: In 2006, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled on Arizona's insanity test procedure which, like California's, permits an insanity trial to occur after a guilt phase. Clark v Arizona (2006) 548 US 735, 165 L Ed 2d 842, 126 S Ct 2709. Counsel preparing for an insanity case should review Clark, because the court reviewed the use of the M'Naghten rule.

§48.43 2. Defendant Must Know or Understand Nature and Quality of Act

The insanity defense as stated in M'Naghten's Case (1843) 10 Clark & Fin 200, 8 Eng Rep 718, did not contain the word "understand." It is assumed that by including this word in Pen C §25, adopted in 1982, its authors intended to adopt the liberalized California reformulation of the M'Naghten rule. In People v Wolff (1964) 61 C2d 795, 800, 40 CR 271, the California Supreme Court held that a defendant's mere articulation that he or she knew the wrongfulness of the act charged is insufficient to sustain an opinion of sanity. This knowledge must be accompanied by understanding.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.44 3. Definition of Wrongfulness

The term "wrong" in the M'Naghten rule refers to moral, not legal, wrongfulness. People v Skinner (1985) 39 C3d 765, 217 CR 685. See also *People v Torr*es (2005) 127 CA4th 1391, 1401, 26 CR3d 518 (test is whether defendant can distinguish not legal rightness or wrongness of his or her act but its moral rightness or wrongness). This formulation has been held to describe an objective or public morality rather than a subjective or personal morality constructed by the defendant. See People v Stress (1988) 205 CA3d 1259, 1274, 252 CR 913 (whether defendant understood that his conduct was morally wrong determined by asking whether he understood that it violated "society's generally accepted standards of moral obligation" rather than "those standards peculiar to the accused"). Therefore, cases such as People v Nash (1959) 52 C2d 36, 338 P2d 416, and People v Kerrigan (1887) 73 C 222, 14 P 849, in which the courts held that moral insanity arising from a perverted moral sense is not legal insanity, are still the law.

Ø Note: The Stress court noted that in most cases knowledge that an act is forbidden by law will permit the inference of knowledge that it also violates accepted moral standards. However, the two are not always equivalent, and a defendant is free to urge that, although he or she may have been able to distinguish legal right from wrong, he or she could not distinguish between moral right and wrong in the sense that they are generally accepted by society.

§48.45 4. Volitional and Settled Insanity; Alcoholics and Drug Addicts

A defendant's capacity to control his or her conduct is immaterial under the M'Naghten rule as well as Pen C §25(b). California courts have consistently rejected irresistible impulse as a part of the insanity defense (People v Noah (1971) 5 C3d 469, 477, 96 CR 441; People v Hoin (1882) 62 C 120), except during the period that the ALI insanity rule was followed in California (see People v Drew (1978) 22 C3d 333, 346, 149 CR 275).

Voluntary intoxication cannot constitute the sole basis of an insanity defense. Pen C §§22, 25.5; People v Kelly (1973) 10 C3d 565, 575, 111 CR 171; People v Griggs (1941) 17 C2d 621, 625, 110 P2d 1031. While Kelly also held that when the intoxication, through prolonged use of alcohol or drugs, results in a condition that remains after the effect of the alcohol or drug has worn off, the resulting condition could constitute the foundation of an insanity defense (see CALCRIM 3450), courts of appeal have held that §25.5 creates an absolute bar to the use of voluntary ingestion of intoxicants as the sole basis of an insanity defense "regardless whether the substances cause organic damage or a settled mental defect or disorder which persists after the immediate effects of the intoxicant have worn off." People v Robinson (1999) 72 CA4th 421, 427, 84 CR2d 832. See also People v Cabonce (2009) 169 CA4th 1421, 1433, 87 CR3d 719.

The effect of §25.5 on settled insanity is unclear. Certainly, if a mental condition can be said to have solely arisen from the prolonged use of alcohol or drugs, the condition could not give rise to legal insanity under the statute. The author, however, has never heard of a psychiatrist or clinical psychologist who has testified to a mental illness, disorder, or defect caused by a single factor.

> Ø Note: Whether a defendant's chronic addiction resulted in insanity is for the jury to decide. That power cannot be usurped by experts. People v Skinner (1986) 185 CA3d 1050, 1060, 228 CR 652 (defendant properly found sane despite unanimous opinion of four expert witnesses that defendant was insane at time he killed his wife because of toxic cocaine psychosis).

A paranoid schizophrenic in a blackout state from an overdose of medication intended to alleviate schizophrenic symptoms is not in a state of settled insanity. People v Randolph (1993) 20 CA4th 1836, 1844, 25 CR2d 723.

B. Procedure for Presenting Insanity Defense

§48.46 1. Entering and Withdrawing Plea

The procedure for an adjudication of insanity at the time of the offense requires the entry of a specific and timely insanity plea. The procedure is regulated by statute. See Pen C §1016 defining the types of pleas, and permitting the entry of multiple pleas. See also Pen C §1026(a). Counsel should be familiar with both the statutory framework for insanity determinations and the extensive case law that discusses both substantive and procedural aspects of insanity pleas.

Ø Note: When an insanity plea appears likely, it is common for both prosecution and defense to retain and consult with one or more qualified experts before entry of the plea and initiation of the statutory procedure requiring a court-ordered examination. Often, as a practical matter, the court may take suggestions from counsel as to whom the appropriate experts might be, although, on occasion, counsel for both parties stand firm on the requirement that the court, not counsel, should choose the examining experts. See Pen C §1027.

As in other areas related to the intersection between mental health issues and the law, this is an area in which there is specific, and useful literature. See, e.g., Rogers & Shuman, Conducting Insanity Evaluations (2d ed 2000).

A plea of not guilty by reason of insanity (NGI) must be made in open court and may be oral or in writing. Pen C §1017. The defendant must personally enter it. Pen C §1018; People v Gauze (1975) 15 C3d 709, 717, 125 CR 773; People v Vanley (1974) 41 CA3d 846, 854, 116 CR 446. If the defendant does not voice his or her concurrence in an NGI plea, the court must refuse to enter the plea. People v Hofferber (1977) 70 CA3d 265, 137 CR 115. However, the defendant's verbal assent in open court is sufficient. People v Weaver (2001) 26 C4th 876, 111 CR2d 2. A defendant may enter an NGI plea despite his or her attorney's opposition to the plea. People v Henning (2009) 178 CA4th 388, 100 CR3d 419; People v Clemons (2008) 160 CA4th 1243, 1252, 74 CR3d 248. However, a trial court's failure to allow a defendant to plead NGI over his or her attorney's objection is harmless when the record affirmatively shows that the insanity defense lacks evidentiary support. People v Henning, supra.

Ø Note: Although an NGI plea refers to the defendant's sanity at the time of the offense rather than to his or her competence to stand trial (People v Hofferber, supra), the "somewhat suspect" procedure of allowing a possibly insane defendant to decide whether to enter an NGI plea is mandated by statute (People v Lomboy (1981) 116 CA3d 67, 71, 171 CR 812).

When a defendant refuses to enter an NGI plea, defense counsel can invoke Pen C §§1368-1369 if the client appears incompetent to make that decision. People v Bolden (1979) 99 CA3d 375, 160 CR 268. Under Pen C §§1368-1369, the court must hold a hearing to decide whether the defendant is competent to stand trial. Defense counsel's failure to present an NGI defense or to make a record on that issue can be considered ineffective assistance of counsel. In re Kubler (1975) 53 CA3d 799, 805, 126 CR 25. If the defendant appears competent, refuses to consent to an NGI plea, and defense counsel thinks an NGI defense should be entered, there are several options. Counsel might inform the court on the record that counsel advised the defendant to enter an NGI plea but the client declined, and then proceed to try the case. Alternatively, counsel might ask to be relieved as the defendant's attorney. See People v Gauze (1975) 15 C3d 709, 717, 125 CR 773.

An insanity plea should be entered at arraignment but may be entered after trial begins when good cause is shown. People v Lutman (1980) 104 CA3d 64, 163 CR 399.

An NGI plea must be substantially in the following form (Pen C §§1017(5), 1016(6)):

The defendant pleads that _ _[he/she]_ _ is not guilty of the offense charged, because _ _[he/she]_ _ was insane at the time that _ _[he/she]_ _ is alleged to have committed the unlawful act.

Ø Note: The defendant should also plead not guilty if a trial on the issue of guilt is desired.

When a defendant enters an NGI plea only, he or she is presumed to have admitted guilt to the underlying offense. Pen C §1016; People v Rizer (1971) 5 C3d 35, 36, 95 CR 23; People v Wolff (1964) 61 C2d 795, 799, 40 CR 271. As a result, such a defendant must be advised of and waive the same rights as a person pleading guilty (Boykin-Tahl rights). People v Rizer, supra. See §§26.11-26.22. In a court trial, however, a stipulation that sanity phase evidence be heard before determination of guilt is not tantamount to a plea of guilty; therefore, self-incrimination rights need not be waived. People v Stone (1994) 27 CA4th 276, 284, 32 CR2d 494. See discussion of those rights in chap 26. In addition, when a court accepts an NGI plea, it must advise the defendant that a successful defense might result in commitment to a state mental hospital (People v Wetmore (1978) 22 C3d 318, 322 n2, 149 CR 265; People v Vanley (1974) 41 CA3d 846, 855, 116 CR 446), that possible periodic extensions might result in lifetime confinement (In re Robinson (1990) 216 CA3d 1510, 265 CR 574; People v McIntyre (1989) 209 CA3d 548, 257 CR 271; see also People v Superior Court (Wagner) (1989) 210 CA3d 1146, 258 CR 740), and that the commitment might extend beyond the maximum imprisonment for the underlying offense (People v Minor (1991) 227 CA3d 37, 277 CR 615; People v Lomboy (1981) 116 CA3d 67, 71, 171 CR 812). When a defendant pleads NGI in addition to a not guilty plea, the trial court is not required to advise the defendant of his or her Boykin-Tahl rights. People v Weaver, supra.

A defendant may withdraw the insanity plea at any time before verdict on that plea. People v Redmond (1971) 16 CA3d 931, 938, 94 CR 543. See Knowles v Mirzayance (2009) ___ US ___, 173 L Ed 2d 251, 129 S Ct 1411 (defendant was not deprived of effective assistance of counsel when his attorney recommended withdrawing insanity defense even if defendant had "nothing to lose" by going forward with insanity plea). However, if the court believes that the defendant is incompetent, the court's remedy is either to have the defendant examined under Pen C §1368 or §4011.6 to assess whether he or she is competent to withdraw the plea, or to initiate civil commitment proceedings. People v Redmond, supra. The requirements of Redmond do not apply, however, when a defendant is obviously sane. The trial court is then required only to make clear the consequences of withdrawing the NGI plea and to explain the constitutional rights being waived. People v Bloom (1989) 48 C3d 1194, 1214, 259 CR 669 (no error to fail to advise defendant of constitutional rights on withdrawal of NGI plea before trial when evidence was insufficient to raise doubt about sanity); People v Guerra (1985) 40 C3d 377, 220 CR 374.

If a defendant who entered pleas of not guilty and NGI is acquitted at the guilt phase, the NGI plea is considered withdrawn. See Pen C §1026.

§48.47 2. Court Appointment of Experts

Before the defendant enters a plea, defense counsel may ask the court to appoint a psychiatrist to advise the attorney on whether to enter a plea of insanity. Evid C §§730, 1017. An appointment for this purpose invokes the protection of the attorney-client privilege, which is not abrogated by raising a defense based on the defendant's mental or emotional state; it can only be waived by the defendant. Evid C §§954, 1017; People v Lines (1975) 13 C3d 500, 513, 119 CR 225; People v Superior Court (Campbell) (1975) 51 CA3d 459, 463, 124 CR 158. Defense counsel may also request such an appointment to advise him or her on having the defendant withdraw an NGI plea. Evid C §1017.

After a defendant pleads not guilty by reason of insanity, the court must appoint two and may appoint three psychiatrists, or licensed psychologists with a doctorate in psychology and at least 5 years' postgraduate experience in the diagnosis and treatment of emotional and mental disorders, to examine the defendant. Pen C §1027(a). The trial court has the discretion to refuse to appoint a third expert, even when requested by the defense. See, e.g., People v Panah (2005) 35 C4th 395, 435, 25 CR3d 672. Either party may call and examine these experts as witnesses. Pen C §1027(e). The psychotherapist-client privilege does not apply to psychotherapists appointed by the court under Pen C §1027(a). Evid C §1017. Statements made to the psychotherapist during this interview, however, are inadmissible in the guilt trial unless the defendant puts his or her mental condition in issue. In re Spencer (1965) 63 C2d 400, 411, 46 CR 753. See People v Williams (1988) 197 CA3d 1320, 1324, 243 CR 480. See also People v Jantz (2006) 137 CA4th 1283, 1295, 40 CR3d 875.

Some courts allow defense counsel and the prosecutor to each recommend a psychotherapist for appointment. However, the court is not required to select a psychotherapist suggested by counsel. See People v Young (1987) 189 CA3d 891, 234 CR 819.

> Ø Practice tip: Mental health experts, even those familiar with the criminal court system, may not be familiar with the procedures or the substantive law involved in adjudicating insanity. Experienced trial lawyers consider it good practice to provide the expert with an information packet that includes current, approved jury instructions and all information that counsel believes is (1) ethically appropriate to present to a mental health professional under the circumstances, and (2) worthy of consideration according to the relevant mental health literature, including protocols suggested by professional organizations such as the American Psychiatric Association and American Psychological Association.

3. Trial Procedure

§48.48 a. Bifurcated Trial

When a defendant pleads not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity (NGI), or joins some other plea with that of insanity, he or she is tried last on the insanity plea. Trial on the issue of guilt is commonly called the guilt stage, and trial of the NGI issue is frequently called the sanity stage. During the initial or guilt stage, the defendant is conclusively presumed sane (Pen C §1026(a)); however, evidence of mental disease or defect may be presented on the issues of unconsciousness, absence of intent, and idiocy. People v Eckstrom (1977) 71 CA3d 259, 262, 139 CR 341. See also People v Cruz (1980) 26 C3d 233, 252, 162 CR 1; People v Wetmore (1978) 22 C3d 318, 327, 149 CR 265. See §§48.27-48.38 on absence of required mental state, and §§48.39-48.41 on unconsciousness.

A defendant who is found not guilty at the guilt phase is released with the same effect as if the insanity plea had not been entered. If found guilty, the defendant is immediately tried on the issue of sanity.

The two stages may be tried by the same jury or by separate juries at the court's discretion. Pen C §1026(a); People v Weaver (2001) 26 C4th 876, 111 CR2d 2; People v Williams (1988) 44 C3d 883, 952, 245 CR 336.

The parties may waive their right to a bifurcated trial. People v Kelly (1973) 10 C3d 565, 568, 111 CR 171; People v Dessauer (1952) 38 C2d 547, 554, 241 P2d 238; People v McCoy (1953) 115 CA2d 565, 567, 252 P2d 371.

§48.49 b. Evidence During Guilt and Sanity Phases

The defense usually presents expert witnesses to testify that the defendant was insane at the time the crime was committed, while the prosecution either presents experts who reached a contrary conclusion, or experts who do not believe that psychotherapists are capable of making such judgments. The trier of fact, however, can reject such expert testimony and come to a contrary conclusion based on the facts of the case. People v Skinner (1986) 185 CA3d 1050, 1061, 228 CR 652 (trial court's ruling that defendant was not insane even though four psychiatrists testified that he was insane was upheld).

A lay witness may testify to a defendant's sanity or insanity only if the witness is a close friend of the defendant or if the witness qualifies under Evid C §800. Evid C §870(a).

Despite Griffin v California (1965) 380 US 609, 14 L Ed 2d 106, 85 S Ct 1229 (discussed in §23.33), the prosecution may introduce evidence during the sanity phase of a trial to rebut the defendant's silence to psychiatric personnel, for the purpose of establishing that he or she consciously chose silence, and was not mentally incapable of communicating. People v Jones (1997) 15 C4th 119, 174, 61 CR2d 386, overruled on other grounds in People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 823 n1, 72 CR2d 656.

The Penal Code is not explicit on whether the jury during the sanity phase can consider the testimony presented to them at the guilt phase without a stipulation to that effect. No cases hold that a stipulation is necessary, and evidence at the guilt phase is so interrelated with evidence at the sanity phase that the author does not believe a stipulation is necessary.

The defense may request an instruction that explains the disposition of a defendant found not guilty by reason of insanity. People v Moore (1985) 166 CA3d 540, 211 CR 856 (proper instruction set out in opinion). However, it is unclear what, if any, particular factual situation would prompt the court to approve a similar instruction today. See People v Dunkle (2005) 36 C4th 861, 897, 32 CR3d 23, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209 (declining to extend Moore outside its "original context" and stating that instruction patterned after Moore and CALJIC 4.01 is necessarily "speculative"); see also People v Marks (2003) 31 C4th 197, 222, 2 CR3d 252. However, CALCRIM 3450 does discuss the disposition of a defendant found legally insane in an optional subpart, and the Bench Notes to CALCRIM 3450 state that this subpart of the instruction must be given on request.

If the trial court discharges a jury before it has reached a decision on the sanity issue, it cannot be reconvened. See People v Hendricks (1987) 43 C3d 584, 238 CR 66, discussed in §33.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.50 c. Burden of Proof

In the sanity phase of a trial, the burden of proving insanity is on the defendant. Evid C §522. The defendant must prove insanity by a preponderance of the evidence. People v Drew (1978) 22 C3d 333, 348, 149 CR 275; In re Franklin (1972) 7 C3d 126, 141, 101 CR 553.

Although the prosecution is not entitled to move under Pen C §1118.1 for dismissal of an NGI plea, the trial court has inherent authority to dismiss the plea if the defendant fails to present sufficient supporting evidence. People v Ceja (2003) 106 CA4th 1071, 131 CR2d 601.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.51 d. Order of Proof

There are no requirements concerning the order of proof at the sanity phase of a trial, or the order in which argument is made. The defendant often presents his or her proof first, probably because the defendant has the burden of proof. Courts differ, however, with respect to argument to the jury. The order of argument is left to the discretion of the court. People v Letourneau (1949) 34 C2d 478, 495, 211 P2d 865; People v Kimball (1936) 5 C2d 608, 611, 55 P2d 483.

§48.52 e. Unanimous Verdict

The verdict of sanity or its lack must be made by a unanimous jury. People v Bales (1974) 38 CA3d 354, 356, 113 CR 141. See also People v Troche (1928) 206 C 35, 44, 273 P 767. If the verdict is not unanimous, the sanity phase must be retried. See People v Bales, supra.

Ø Note: At least one California court has ruled that the trial court may grant a directed verdict for the prosecution when there is no substantial evidence of insanity. People v Ceja (2003) 106 CA4th 1071, 131 CR2d 601.

§48.53 C. Commitment Procedure

If the verdict is that the defendant was sane, he or she is sentenced in the same manner as other convicted defendants. Pen C §1026(a). If the verdict is that the defendant was insane, the court must decide whether the defendant has fully recovered his or her sanity. Pen C §1026(a)). If "there is any evidence that the defendant is still suffering from a mental illness," the defendant is remanded to the custody of the sheriff until evaluation of the defendant's sanity is made under Welf & I C §§5000-5579. People v De Anda (1980) 114 CA3d 480, 489, 170 CR 830. See Pen C §1026(b). For discussion of Welf & I C §§5000-5579 (the civil commitment statutes), see §§48.79-48.82.

If the defendant is found not to have fully recovered his or her sanity, the court must decide whether to confine the defendant in a state hospital or other treatment facility, or to place him or her on outpatient status. Pen C §1026(a). Before making this choice, the court must refer the defendant to the county mental health director for a recommendation on which order to make. After receiving this report, the court orders either confinement or outpatient status. Pen C §1026(b).

If the verdict is that the defendant was sane as to some counts and insane as to others, and the defendant's sanity has not been fully restored at the time of sentencing, the defendant must first be committed to a state hospital rather than a state prison. People v Chavez (2008) 160 CA4th 882, 896, 73 CR3d 189.

Defendants who have been found not guilty by reason of insanity are not entitled to a jury trial to determine whether they should be placed in a local mental health program under Pen C §1026.2(e); Barnes v Superior Court (1986) 186 CA3d 969, 231 CR 158.

Once the defendant has been committed as insane, it is presumed that he or she lacks capacity to consent to care, and medication may be administered involuntarily. In re Locks (2000) 79 CA4th 890, 94 CR2d 495.

D. Outpatient Status

§48.54 1. Granting Outpatient Status

Outpatient status may be granted instead of actual confinement in a state hospital or other treatment facility if the defendant's crime was not a dangerous act (see Pen C §1601(b); People v De Anda (1980) 114 CA3d 480, 170 CR 830) and if the community program director reports that the defendant will not be a danger to the health and safety of others and will benefit from such status. Pen C §1602. The director must identify an appropriate program of supervision and treatment for the defendant. Pen C §1602(b).

If the defendant was found not guilty by reason of insanity of a felony involving death, great bodily injury, or an act that poses a threat of serious bodily harm to another person, or of one of the felonies expressly enumerated in Pen C §1601, the defendant cannot be released on outpatient status until he or she has been confined in a state hospital or other treatment facility for at least 180 calendar days. Pen C §1601(a).

After 180 days of confinement are over, the defendant can be released on outpatient status only if it is recommended by the director of the state hospital or other treatment facility and the court approves, following a hearing; notice of the hearing must be given to both counsel. Pen C §1602. The director's recommendation must be based on the finding that the defendant is no longer likely to be a danger to the health and safety of others while on outpatient status, and that he or she will benefit from outpatient status. Pen C §1602(a). The community program director must also identify an appropriate program of supervision and treatment. Pen C §1602(b). At the hearing (see Pen C §1604), the burden is on the defendant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that he or she is no longer dangerous. People v Cross (2005) 127 CA4th 63, 72, 25 CR3d 186; People v Sword (1994) 29 CA4th 614, 624, 34 CR2d 810.

Time spent on outpatient status, except when placed in a locked facility, is not counted as actual custody and is not credited toward the person's maximum term of commitment. Any time spent in a locked facility must be credited as actual custody. Pen C 1600.5. See also In re Moye (1978) 22 C3d 457, 149 CR 491.

Whether a defendant is entitled to credit against the maximum term of commitment for time served while placed in a halfway house depends on whether the placement is sufficiently restrictive so that the defendant was "in custody" while there. This is a factual question that turns on consideration of how many restrictions are placed on the defendant's freedom of movement, regulations governing visitation, rules on physical appearance, and the rigidity of the program's daily schedule. People v Mord (1988) 197 CA3d 1090, 243 CR 403; People v Minahen (1986) 179 CA3d 180, 224 CR 460.

Ø Note: In calculating accumulated time credits, counsel should not rely exclusively on state hospital calculations, particularly for defendants who have been on outpatient status. Typically, those calculations will not include short-term stays in county mental wards and local locked facilities.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.55 2. Annual Review

A defendant on outpatient status is supervised by the community program director or his or her designee. The supervisor must submit reports to the court, prosecutor, and defense counsel on the defendant's progress and status at 90-day intervals. Pen C §1605. Outpatient status can last no longer than 1 year. Pen C §1606. At the end of that period, the court conducts a hearing after notice to the parties and the mental health director. At the hearing, the court may discharge the defendant, renew outpatient status, or order confinement to a treatment facility. Pen C §1606.

There is no guidance in Pen C §§1605-1606 or case law concerning who has the burden of proof or what the standard is. Common law principles as embodied in Evid C §500 place the burden of proof on the party seeking relief. It may be argued that, outpatient status having been granted, the burden would be on the party seeking to change that status. Under Evid C §115, because no standard is set forth in the statute, the burden would be by a preponderance of the evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.56 3. Revocation of Outpatient Status

If the outpatient supervisor believes that the defendant "requires extended inpatient treatment or refuses to accept further outpatient treatment and supervision" (Pen C §1608), or if the prosecutor believes that the defendant "is a danger to the health and safety of others while on outpatient status" (Pen C §1609), they may petition the court to hold a hearing to decide whether to revoke the defendant's outpatient status (Pen C §§1608-1609). In that hearing, the burden is on the People to show by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is a danger while an outpatient. People v DeGuzman (1995) 33 CA4th 414, 39 CR2d 137. If the court grants the petition, it must order confinement in a state hospital or treatment facility approved by the county mental health director. Pen C §§1608-1609.

A defendant may be hospitalized pending a decision on a request for revocation when such a request has been filed and it is the county mental health director's opinion that the defendant is a danger to self or another and that to deny hospitalization until the revocation hearing would pose an imminent risk to the defendant or another. Pen C §1610. On the request of the community program director, a peace officer must take the defendant into custody and transport him or her to a treatment facility. Pen C §1610. A person so hospitalized has a right to judicial review and an explanation of rights under Welf & I C §§5254.1, 5275-5278, and 5325. Pen C §1610.

§48.57 4. Authority for Outpatient Treatment

Community-based treatment programs are supervised by a community program director (see Pen C §1605) designated by the State Department of Mental Health and are available through the procedures set out in Pen C §§1600-1620. Names and addresses of the designated community program directors for specific counties can be obtained from the office of the director of the State Department of Mental Health, 1600 9th Street, Sacramento, CA 95814. A directory of county mental health departments is available at http://www.dmh.ca.gov/docs/CMHDA.pdf.

§48.58 E. Restoration of Sanity and Release

A defendant may apply to the superior court of the county from which his or her commitment was made for release from a state hospital or other treatment facility on the ground that his or her sanity has been restored. Pen C §1026.2(a). The medical director of the state hospital or other treatment facility or the community program director may also apply for the defendant's release. Pen C §1026.2(a). A copy of the application must be given to the community program director or his or her designee. The court then gives notice of the hearing to the prosecutor, community program director, and medical director or person in charge of the treatment facility. Pen C §1026.2(a). No hearing may be had on an application until the defendant has been confined or is on outpatient status or parole for 180 calendar days. Pen C §1026.2(d).

Penal Code §1026.2(e) establishes a two-step procedure for processing an application for restoration of sanity. First, the trial court holds a hearing (known as an "outpatient placement hearing") to determine whether the applicant "would be a danger to the health and safety of others due to mental defect, disease or disorder, if under supervision and treatment in the community." A court may not summarily deny an application without a hearing. A defendant is entitled to full due process rights at this hearing, other than jury trial rights, including the right to call and cross-examine witnesses and the right to counsel and to a neutral and detached judicial officer. People v Soiu (2003) 106 CA4th 1191, 131 CR2d 421. A trial court's determination at this stage is reviewed for abuse of discretion. People v Dobson (2008) 161 CA4th 1422, 1433, 75 CR3d 238. When the petition is denied, a new application may be filed after 1 year and the court must, again, hold a hearing. Pen C §1026.2(j); 161 CA4th at 1434.

If the court finds that the applicant would not be a danger to others, and the applicant is no longer subject to the custody of the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR), it must release the applicant to a forensic conditional release program (CONREP) in the community for 1 year. At the end of the year, the court must conduct a trial (known as a "restoration-of-sanity trial") to determine if the applicant's sanity has been restored. The applicant has the burden at trial of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence that he or she is "no longer a danger to the health and safety of others, due to a mental defect, disease or disorder." Pen C §1026.2(e). See In re Moye (1978) 22 C3d 457, 462, 149 CR 491; In re Franklin (1972) 7 C3d 126, 145, 101 CR 553; People v Mapp (1983) 150 CA3d 346, 198 CR 177.

> Ø Note: Counsel should be aware that the area of risk-and-dangerousness assessments by mental health experts remains controversial. Counsel for both parties should review the literature discussing the merits of various risk-and-dangerousness assessment protocols and testing procedures. The MacArthur Research Network on Mental Health and the Law (http://www.macarthur.virginia.edu/mentalhome.html) has sponsored some pioneering work on dangerousness assessment. See, e.g., Slobogin, Proving the Unprovable: The Role of Law, Science, and Speculation in Adjudicating Culpability and Dangerousness (2007); Monahan & Steadman, Violence and Mental Disorder: Developments in Risk Assessment (1996). Hearings or trials that involve assessments of future dangerousness often involve extensive litigation about the accuracy of the protocol or instrument used as the foundation for the expert's opinion. Adequate preparation, therefore, requires counsel to be familiar with a variety of testing and assessment instruments and their reliability. Although several commentators have opined that risk assessment has generally improved in the last decade, questions about the reliability of various risk-assessment methodologies are ongoing. See Rogers & Shuman, Fundamentals of Forensic Practice: Mental Health and Criminal Law, chap 11 (2005).

Restoration-of-sanity trials are by jury, unless waived by both the applicant and the prosecution. People v Coleman (1978) 86 CA3d 746, 150 CR 415. The court may not set the trial before the person has completed 1 year of outpatient treatment, unless the CONREP program director recommends an earlier release. People v Superior Court (Woods) (1990) 219 CA3d 614, 268 CR 379.

The community release provisions of Pen C §1026.2(e) do not apply if the applicant has additional time to serve on a prison sentence, or if restoration of sanity ends a stay of a previously imposed sentence. Pen C §1026.2(m). Such individuals are not eligible for outpatient treatment and on a finding of restoration of sanity must be transferred to the CDCR or the original sentencing court. Pen C §1026.2(m).

Defendants seeking restoration of sanity are entitled to be represented by appointed counsel when indigent. A defendant confined in a state hospital or other treatment facility as NGI is not able to waive counsel absent receiving psychiatric evidence that the defendant is competent to make that decision. People v Burnett (1987) 188 CA3d 1314, 234 CR 67.

The requirement that the restoration-of-sanity applicant remain for a year in a CONREP program is intended to expose him or her to intensive and prolonged evaluation in a noninstitutional setting before unconditional release so as to "prevent premature release." People v Tilbury (1991) 54 C3d 56, 62, 284 CR 288. This requirement does not violate constitutional due process or equal protection principles, because the evaluation requirement is of limited duration and serves the legitimate governmental interest of not releasing individuals who may be mentally ill and dangerous before a "trial run" in the community. People v Beck (1996) 47 CA4th 1676, 1684, 55 CR2d 340. Indefinite detention of insanity acquittees who are not mentally ill but who cannot prove that they would not be dangerous to others, however, is constitutionally impermissible. Foucha v Louisiana (1992) 504 US 71, 118 L Ed 2d 437, 112 S Ct 1780. When the restoration-of-sanity applicant is still subject to the custody of the CDCR because of an uncompleted prison term or a stayed sentence of imprisonment, the court may find that he or she has been restored to sanity without requiring a year's stay in a community release program. Pen C §1026.2(m).

The law is unclear on how a defendant's behavior with and without medication affects the outcome of restoration of sanity proceedings. The court in People v Williams (1988) 198 CA3d 1476, 244 CR 429, held that, when a defendant requires medication in order to be considered restored to sanity, the jury must make two findings based on a preponderance of the evidence:

- The defendant is not a danger to others in a medicated state; and
- The defendant will continue to take the medication.

The Williams court interpreted its holding to be consistent with Cramer v Tyars (1979) 23 C3d 131, 151 CR 653, even though the Cramer court disallowed an instruction similar to that in Williams because it focused on future speculation rather than current condition. The court in People v De Anda (1980) 114 CA3d 480, 170 CR 830, however, held that restoration through psychopharmaceuticals should not be considered a full recovery.

The trial court should not tell jurors in a restoration-of-sanity trial that a finding of restored sanity will mean that the defendant will no longer receive mandatory treatment. People v Kipp (1986) 187 CA3d 748, 232 CR 87.

Because a trial on restoration of sanity is essentially a civil proceeding, the court may direct a verdict if the defendant does not produce substantial evidence to the effect that he or she has recovered his or her sanity. People v Mapp (1983) 150 CA3d 346, 350, 198 CR 177.

§48.59 F. Extension of Commitment; Credit for Time Served

General rule; credit for time served. With one exception (discussed below), the maximum term of commitment for a defendant found not guilty by reason of insanity is the longest term of imprisonment that could have been imposed for the offenses of which he or she was convicted, including the upper term of the base offense and any additional terms for enhancements or consecutive sentences that could have been imposed. Pen C §1026.5(a)(1). See In re Moye (1978) 22 C3d 457, 467, 149 CR 491. Credit for time served under Pen C §2900.5 may be deducted, but the term may not be reduced for good behavior or time worked while in custody ("good time" and "worktime") under Pen C §§2930-2935. Pen C §1026.5(a)(1); People v Sage (1980) 26 C3d 498, 165 CR 280 (conduct credit allowed only for presentence jail time); People v Saffell (1979) 25 C3d 223, 233, 157 CR 897 (good behavior); People v Smith (1981) 120 CA3d 817, 175 CR 54 (no conduct credits).

Exception when defendant presents substantial danger of physical harm to another. A defendant may be committed beyond the maximum term when (Pen C §1026.5(b)(1); People v Wilder (1995) 33 CA4th 90, 39 CR2d 247; People v Bennett (1982) 131 CA3d 488, 182 CR 473; In re Fuller (1981) 124 CA3d 251, 177 CR 233; see In re Moye, supra):

- The defendant's original commitment arose from an underlying felony conviction; and
- The defendant presents a substantial danger of physical harm to others because of a mental disease, defect, or disorder.

An extended commitment of a defendant presenting a substantial danger requires proof that the defendant has serious difficulty in controlling his or her dangerous behavior. People v Sudar (2007) 158 CA4th 655, 662, 70 CR3d 190; People v Zapisek (2007) 147 CA4th 1151, 54 CR3d 873; People v Bowers (2006) 145 CA4th 870, 52 CR3d 74.

Setting term and requesting extensions. The committing court states the length of the term in its order of commitment. Pen C §1026.5(a)(1).

The medical director of the state hospital or treatment facility in which the defendant is confined must submit to the prosecuting attorney, within 180 calendar days before expiration of the maximum term of commitment, his or her opinion on whether the defendant fits the statutory criteria for extension. The prosecutor may then file a petition for extension setting out the reasons for requesting it. The request must be made no later than 90 calendar days before the defendant's original commitment expires unless good cause is shown. Pen C §1026.5(b)(2). It is unclear whether the time limits in §1026.5(b)(2) are jurisdictional. Compare People v Pacini (1981) 120 CA3d 877, 888, 174 CR 820 (yes), with People v Mitchell (2005) 127 CA4th 936, 26 CR3d 163 (no as long as defendant has time to prepare for trial), In re Johns (1981) 119 CA3d 577, 580, 175 CR 443 (no), and People v Dougherty (1983) 143 CA3d 245, 247, 191 CR 668 (no). See also People v Minahen (1986) 179 CA3d 180, 224 CR 460 (deadlines are jurisdictional only if DA cannot show good cause for missing them), People v Mord (1988) 197 CA3d 1090, 243 CR 403 (followed Minahen), and People v Superior Court (Wagner) (1989) 210 CA3d 1146, 258 CR 740 (defendant waived error by unexcused delay in challenging it).

Trial on extension of commitment. A defendant is entitled to be represented by counsel, to a jury trial (Pen C §1026.5(b)(3)), and to all other rights guaranteed under the federal and California constitutions in criminal cases (Pen C §1026.5(b)(7)). For example, the privilege against self-incrimination bars the prosecution from questioning the defendant about his or her mental state. People v Haynie (2004) 116 CA4th 1224, 11 CR3d 163. The rules of criminal discovery apply. Pen C §1026.5(b)(3). On discovery, see chap 11. A jury trial may be waived by counsel over the client's objection. People v Powell (2004) 114 CA4th 1153, 1157, 8 CR3d 441. Counsel must be appointed if the defendant is indigent. Pen C §1026.5(b)(7).

If a defendant requests a trial, it must begin within 30 calendar days after expiration of the maximum term. Pen C §1026.5(b)(4). At trial, the prosecution has the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is mentally ill and presents a physical danger. Whether an individual has a mental disease, disorder, or defect is a question of fact to be decided by the trier of fact with the assistance of expert testimony. People v Superior Court

(Blakely) (1997) 60 CA4th 202, 213, 70 CR2d 388; People v Buttes (1982) 134 CA3d 116, 125, 184 CR 497. There is no requirement that a defendant be found amenable to treatment in order to continue the stay in a state hospital. People v Superior Court (Blakely) (1997) 60 CA4th 202, 214, 70 CR2d 388; People v Bennett (1982) 131 CA3d 488, 494, 182 CR 473; People v Goff (1981) 127 CA3d 1039, 1046, 179 CR 190. The mental disorder that underlies the extended commitment may be different from that on which the defendant was found insane. People v McCune (1995) 37 CA4th 686, 692, 43 CR2d 804. The prosecutor does not have to show that the defendant committed a recent overt act indicating dangerousness. People v Buttes (1982) 134 CA3d 116, 127, 184 CR 497; People v Martin (1980) 107 CA3d 714, 725, 165 CR 773. However, the extended-detention scheme requires proof that a defendant has serious difficulty controlling his or her dangerous behavior. People v Zapisek (2007) 147 CA4th 1151, 54 CR3d 873; People v Galindo (2006) 142 CA4th 531, 536, 48 CR3d 241. See also In re Howard N. (2005) 35 C4th 117, 132, 24 CR3d 866. If the trier of fact finds that a defendant's commitment to a state mental facility should be extended, the court may return the defendant for an additional 2 years. Time spent on outpatient status, except in a locked facility at the direction of the outpatient supervisor, shall not count as actual custody and shall not be credited toward the person's maximum term of commitment or toward the person's term of extended commitment. Pen C §1026.5(b)(8). Section 1026.5(b)(8) does not violate due process or equal protection even though it excludes time spent on outpatient status from the maximum term of commitment. People v Crosswhite (2002) 101 CA4th 494, 124 CR2d 301.

A person whose commitment has been extended is eligible for outpatient status as described in §§48.54-48.57.

Counsel should check the law as it existed at the time of the original commitment whenever dealing with an extension petition. For example, until 1985, §1026.5(b) allowed extensions only for persons who had committed violent felonies. Other felons could not be extended. Persons committed before that date for nonviolent felonies may have a right to withdraw their NGI plea.

The criminal law concept of ex post facto does not apply to law changes concerning restoration-of-sanity proceedings, because these proceedings are considered civil. People v Juarez (1986) 184 CA3d 570, 229 CR 145 (law change applied retroactively because ex post facto concept did not apply, and statute was expressly retroactive). However, a retroactive change in civil law may be a denial of due process if it deprives a person of vested rights. See, e.g., 1 Witkin & Epstein, California Criminal Law, Introduction to Crimes §12 (3d ed 2000). If the Juarez court had considered the law change in terms of the vested interest/due process approach, the court might have reached a different result.

Authority is split on whether an accused in California has any Fifth Amendment privileges against compelled testimony in civil proceedings, including NGI extension proceedings. In People v Lopez (2006) 137 CA4th 1099, 40 CR3d 789, the Fourth District extended the Fifth Amendment privilege against compelled testimony to all forms of civil commitments related to criminal adjudications. In People v Haynie (2004) 116 CA4th 1224, 11 CR3d 163, the Fifth District took the view that the privilege does apply in NGI-related proceedings.

Extended commitments for sexually violent predators are discussed in §48.62.

VI. COGNITIVE DEVELOPMENTAL DISORDERS

§48.60 A. "Idiocy"

Under Pen C §26, "idiots" are incapable of committing crimes. As construed by the California courts, an idiot is an individual who, owing to mental retardation, is incapable of understanding the nature or his or her act or cannot distinguish right from wrong. People v Phillips (2000) 83 CA4th 170, 99 CR2d 448. See also In re Ramon M. (1978) 22 C3d 419, 425, 149 CR 387 (noting that California courts have traditionally used same test for insanity and idiocy). Idiocy is a complete defense. In re Ramon M., supra.

Trials are seldom necessary, however, because a defendant with a cognitive developmental disability who meets the definition of idiocy will probably be deemed incompetent. Pen C §1368. Diversion is another alternative for defendants who suffer from severe cognitive impairments. See Pen C §§1001.20-1001.34. Organic brain deterioration, fetal alcohol syndrome, and head trauma are conditions that could cause impairments serious enough to give rise to the idiocy defense.

The idiocy defense can be used by defense counsel at preliminary hearings to weed out groundless charges and avoid unnecessary confinement under Pen C §§1368-1370.

§48.61 B. Mental Retardation as Defense to Death Penalty

In Atkins v Virginia (2002) 536 US 304, 153 L Ed 2d 335, 122 S Ct 2242, the Supreme Court held that the execution of mentally retarded individuals is cruel and unusual punishment prohibited by the Eighth Amendment. California has implemented the Atkins rule by enacting Pen C §1376, which defines "mentally retarded" and establishes a procedure in capital cases for determining whether a defendant is mentally retarded. See People v Superior Court (Vidal) (2007) 40 C4th 999, 56 CR3d 851. See also Campbell v Superior Court (2008) 159 CA4th 635, 71 CR3d 594. For further discussion, see §54.18A.

Ø Note: A postconviction claim of mental retardation by a defendant who has been sentenced to death is raised by a habeas corpus petition and adjudicated substantially in accordance with the procedure established in Pen C §1376. See In re Hawthorne (2005) 35 C4th 40, 24 CR3d 189.

VII. SEXUALLY VIOLENT PREDATOR COMMITMENTS

§48.62 A. The Sexually Violent Predator (SVP) Act

Welfare and Institutions Code §§6600-6609.3 provide for the civil commitment of individuals known as Sexually Violent Predators (SVPs).

The Sexually Violent Predator Act establishes an extended commitment scheme that is somewhat analogous to extended commitments for persons found not guilty by reason of insanity (NGI), Hofferber conservatorships (see Conservatorship of Hofferber (1980) 28 C3d 161, 167 CR 854), and persons committed as Mentally Disordered Offenders (MDOs) under Pen C §2962. For discussion of MDOs, see §§48.71-48.76.

The legislative intent section of the SVP Act reflects the legislature's finding (Stats 1995, ch 762, §1) that a > small but extremely dangerous group of sexually violent predators that have diagnosable mental disorders can be identified while they are incarcerated. These persons are not safe to be at large and if released represent a danger to the health and safety of others.... It is the intent of the legislature that these individuals be committed and treated for their disorders only as long as the disorders persist and not for any punitive purposes.

Constitutionality. In Hubbart v Superior Court (1999) 19 C4th 1138, 81 CR2d 492, the supreme court held that the SVP Act does not violate constitutional principles of due process, equal protection, and the prohibition of ex post facto punishment. Courts of appeal continued to hold the SVP Act constitutional following amendments to it which, among other things, created indeterminate commitments. Again, in People v McKee (2010) 47 C4th 1172, 104 CR3d 427, the supreme court rejected due process and ex post facto challenges to the SVP Act. However, with respect to equal protection challenges, the court concluded that the state had not carried its burden of demonstrating why SVPs, but not other ex-felons subject to civil commitment, such as MDOs, were subject to indefinite commitment. The court remanded the case to the trial court to allow the prosecution the opportunity to justify the differential treatment in accord with established equal protection principles. 104 CR3d at 451. The U.S. Supreme Court upheld a substantively similar law in Kansas v Hendricks (1997) 521 US 346, 138 L Ed 2d 501, 117 S Ct 2072.

Definition of sexually violent predator. A sexually violent predator (SVP) is defined as a person who has been convicted of a sexually violent offense against one or more victims; and suffers from a diagnosable mental disorder that makes him or her a danger to the health and safety of others in that it is likely that he or she will engage in sexually violent criminal behavior. Welf & I C §6600(a).

> Ø Note: Recent overt criminal acts while in custody are not required to establish the individual's danger to the health and safety of others. Welf & I C §6600(d), (f).

A mental disorder is defined in the statute as "a congenital or acquired condition affecting the emotional or volitional capacity that predisposes the person to the commission of criminal sexual acts in a degree constituting the person a menace to the health and safety of others." Welf & I C §6600(c).

A "sexually violent offense" is an offense committed by force, violence, duress, menace, fear of immediate and unlawful bodily injury, or threatening to retaliate in the future against the victim or any other person, and which is either a felony violation of an act described in Pen C §261, §262, §264.1, §269, §286, §288, §288a, §288.5, or §289 or any felony violation of Pen C §207, §209, or §220 committed with the intent to commit a violation of Pen C §261, §262, §264.1, §286, §288, §288a, or §289. Welf & I C §6600(b).

If the victim of an offense specified in Welf & I C §6600(b) is under the age of 14, the offense will automatically constitute a sexually violent offense for the purposes of Welf & I C §6600. Welf & I C 6600.1.

Welfare and Institutions Code §6600(a)(2) specifies that the conviction of a sexually violent offense includes any conviction of an offense specified in §6000(b), whether it resulted in a determinate prison term, an indeterminate prison term, a grant of probation, or commitment to the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR), Division of Juvenile Facilities, under Welf & I C §1731.5; a conviction in another jurisdiction of a crime that contains all the elements of a crime listed in §6000(b); a conviction under a predecessor statute of a crime that contains all the elements of a crime listed in §6000(b); an NGI finding of a crime listed in §6000(b); and a conviction that resulted in a finding that the defendant was a mentally disordered sex offender. Welf & I C §6600(a)(2)(A)-(I); People v Franklin (2003) 105 CA4th 532, 129 CR2d 518.

Under Welf & I C §6600(g), a juvenile adjudication may also qualify as a predicate offense under the SVP Act if:

- The minor was at least age 16 at the time he or she committed the offense;
- The offense is a sexually violent offense listed in §6600(b);
- The minor was made a ward of the juvenile court under Welf & I C §602 because of the offense; and
- The minor was committed to the CDCR, Division of Juvenile Facilities.

A previous finding that the defendant was not a mentally disordered sex offender does not bar relitigation of the issue of mental health in sexually violent predator proceedings. Collateral estoppel applies only to the facts in issue as they existed at the time. Thus, a determination that the defendant was not an MDSO made years before in a proceeding with different statutory purposes and different procedural settings was not binding in an SVP proceeding at which the defendant's current mental condition was at issue. People v Carmony (2002) 99 CA4th 317, 120 CR2d 896.

Ø Note: Prior convictions from no contest pleas taken before the 1982 statutory amendment to Pen C §1016 qualify under the SVP Act. People v Yartz (2005) 37 C4th 529, 36 CR3d 328.

§48.63 B. Filing of SVP Petition

SVP commitments may be sought only for prisoners who are in custody under a determinate sentence with the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) or whose parole has been revoked. Welf & I C §6601(a).

> Ø Note: A petition for SVP commitment should not be dismissed if it is later learned that the prisoner is in unlawful custody, so long as the custody was the result of a good faith mistake of fact or law. Welf & I C §6601(a)(2); People v Superior Court (Small) (2008) 159 CA4th 301, 309, 71 CR3d 462 (bad faith; remedy is dismissal). However, if the conviction that forms the basis for the prisoner's custodial status and initiation of SVP proceedings is reversed, and the prisoner is not retried and reconvicted, then the petition for SVP commitment must be dismissed. In re Smith (2008) 42 C4th 1251, 1269, 73 CR3d 469.

At least 6 months before the release of a person in custody under its jurisdiction, the CDCR must refer him or her for screening by the CDCR and the Board of Parole Hearings (BPH). Welf & I C §6601(a)-(b). If it is found by the CDCR and the BPH that the prisoner is likely to be an SVP, he or she is referred for a "full evaluation" by the Department of Mental Health (DMH). Welf & I C §6601(c). The BPH may order the prisoner to remain in custody for no more than 45 days beyond his or her scheduled release date for the full evaluation. Welf & I C §6601.3. See In re Hovanski (2009) 174 CA4th 1517, 95 CR3d 370. A standardized assessment protocol is used, administered by two practicing psychiatrists or psychologists, either one or both of whom may be independent professionals. If the two mental health professionals agree that the prisoner is an SVP, the DMH must forward a request for the filing of a petition for commitment to the district attorney or county counsel (as designated by the board of supervisors) of the county in which the prisoner was originally convicted. Welf & I C §6601(d), (f), (h)-(i).

> Ø Note: If a prisoner's convictions are from more than one court, each court has concurrent jurisdiction under the SVP Act. Discretion to decide where to file the petition belongs to prosecutors in each county. People v Krah (2003) 114 CA4th 534, 541, 7 CR3d 853; Cheek v Superior Court (2002) 103 CA4th 520, 126 CR2d 820.

Absent such concurrence, the DMH must "arrange" for examination by two independent mental health professionals. Welf & I C §6601(d)-(e). If those professionals concur that the prisoner meets the SVP criteria, the DMH must forward a request for the filing of a petition for commitment, as described above. All proceedings are heard in the superior court. Welf & I C §§6601(i), 6602.

§48.64 C. Probable Cause Hearing

After a petition for SVP commitment is filed, a superior court judge conducts a probable cause hearing at which the prisoner is represented by an attorney. Welf & I C §6602(a).

Ø Note: An offender in an SVP proceeding does not have the right to self-representation under Faretta or the Due Process Clause, because SVP proceedings are "civil in nature"; other procedural safeguards inherent in the SVP proceedings protect the defendant's dignitary interest. People v Fraser (2006) 138 CA4th 1430, 42 CR3d 424.

The probable cause hearing requires witness testimony and may include written evidence and expert testimony subject to cross-examination. A paper review procedure violates due process. In re Parker (1998) 60 CA4th 1453, 71 CR2d 167. Victim hearsay statements in a probation report are admissible at the probable cause hearing to establish the details of an underlying prior conviction. People v Superior Court (Howard) (1999) 70 CA4th 136, 82 CR2d 481. The defendant remains in custody pending the completion of the hearing. Welf & I C §6602.

In Cooley v Superior Court (Marentez) (2002) 29 C4th 228, 246, 127 CR2d 177, the supreme court explained that, at the probable cause hearing, the superior court must decide whether a reasonable person could entertain a strong suspicion that:

(1) The offender has been convicted of a qualifying sexually violent offense against at least two victims (now see Welf & I C §6600(a)(1) providing for "one or more" victims);

(2) The offender has a diagnosable mental disorder;

(3) the disorder makes it likely that he or she will engage in sexually violent criminal conduct if released; and

(4) This sexually violent criminal conduct will be predatory in nature.

The phrase "likely to engage in sexually violent predatory criminal behavior upon … release" requires the superior court to rule on whether the potential SVP presents a serious and well-founded risk of committing sexually violent criminal acts that will be of a predatory nature. 29 C4th at 254. The superior court must consider the offender's amenability to voluntary treatment when making this determination. People v Superior Court (Ghilotti) (2002) 27 C4th 888, 921, 119 CR2d 1. Evidence of proposed involuntary treatment (e.g., LPS conservatorship) is not relevant. See People v Calderon (2004) 124 CA4th 80, 88, 21 CR3d 92.

If probable cause is found, the judge orders a trial to rule on whether the person is an SVP. The judge must order that the alleged SVP remain in custody in a secure facility pending the outcome of the trial. Welf & I C §6602(a). Welfare and Institutions Code §6602.5 and Pen C §4002(b) permit the trial court to order precommitment treatment for alleged SVPs who have had a probable cause finding or who have already begun a course of psychiatric treatment. People v Ciancio (2003) 109 CA4th 175, 134 CR2d 531. If probable cause is not found, the petition must be dismissed. Despite the dismissal of the petition, anyone who is subject to parole must report to the parole authorities. Welf & I C §6602(a).

§48.65 D. Trial

Procedural requirements. Trial should occur within a reasonable time after the probable cause hearing. See People v Litmon (2008) 162 CA4th 383, 406, 76 CR3d 122 (court should have granted motion to dismiss for untimeliness). The alleged SVP has rights at the trial stage to trial by jury, the assistance of counsel, the right to retain experts, and access to all relevant medical and psychological records and reports. Welf & I C §6603(a). The alleged SVP also has the right to testify at trial over counsel's objection. People v Allen (2008) 44 C4th 843, 869, 80 CR3d 183. The Civil Discovery Act (CCP §§2016.010-2036.050) applies to SVP proceedings, which are "special proceeding[s] of a civil nature." People v Yartz (2005) 37 C4th 529, 537 n4, 36 CR3d 328.

Ø Note: Because SVP proceedings are "special proceedings of a civil nature," the rules in Part 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure (CCP §§307-1062.20), pertaining to civil actions, are generally not applicable. People v Evans (2005) 132 CA4th 950, 955, 34 CR3d 35 (CCP §583.310, which requires dismissal if civil trial has not begun within 5 years of filing or 3 years of reversal or mistrial, does not apply to SVP proceedings; court may, however, exercise its discretion under CCP §187 to dismiss petition for unreasonable prosecutorial delay); Bagration v Superior Court (2003) 110 CA4th 1677, 3 CR3d 292 (motions for summary judgment (CCP §437c) not available in sexually violent predator proceedings).

If the alleged SVP does not demand a jury trial, the petitioner (the district attorney) may demand one, but if neither party demands a jury, the trial is heard by the court sitting alone. Welf & I C §6603(b)-(c). The burden of proof is on the petitioner to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the person is an SVP. Welf & I C §6604. Each side is entitled to six peremptory challenges. CCP §231(c); People v Calhoun (2004) 118 CA4th 519, 523, 13 CR3d 166. Jury verdicts must be unanimous. Welf & I C §6603(f).

Noncompliance with the procedural prerequisites of the SVP Act does not ordinarily deprive the trial court of jurisdiction. See, e.g., People v Ward (2002) 97 CA4th 631, 118 CR2d 599 (failure to obtain two written psychological assessments did not require dismissal); People v Badura (2002) 95 CA4th 1218, 116 CR2d 336 (failure to hold probable cause hearing until after termination of original commitment did not divest court of jurisdiction to proceed on recommitment petition).

Evidence. The details of prior convictions may be shown by documentary evidence, including transcripts, probation and sentencing reports, and DMH evaluations. Welf & I C §6600(a)(3). See People v Otto (2001) 26 C4th 200, 211, 109 CR2d 327 (victim's hearsay statements had sufficient indicia of reliability to satisfy due process); People v Dean (2009) 174 CA4th 186, 94 CR3d 478. Documents used as proof of prior convictions must be certified in accordance with Evid C §§1530-1531. In re Kirk (1999) 74 CA4th 1066, 88 CR2d 648.

Ø Note: In People v Angulo (2005) 129 CA4th 1349, 30 CR3d 189, the defendant claimed that admission of police reports of prior convictions following guilty pleas violated Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 124 S Ct 1354. The court of appeal rejected the argument, concluding both that Crawford did not apply to civil recommitment proceedings and that the defendant had an opportunity to cross-examine the victims and police officers involved in the prior offenses through deposition.

Welfare and Institutions Code §6601(a)(2) provides that an SVP petition may not be attacked on the basis of a later determination that the individual's custody was unlawful, as long as the custody was the result of a good faith mistake of fact or law. See also People v Ibanez (1999) 76 CA4th 537, 544, 90 CR2d 536; People v Moore (1998) 69 CA4th 626, 81 CR2d 658 (defendant may not attack validity of conviction as basis for commitment, because proceedings under SVP law are not "immediate" consequence of plea of guilty to underlying sexual offense). However, if the conviction that forms the basis for the prisoner's custodial status and initiation of SVP proceedings is reversed, and the prisoner is not retried and reconvicted, then the petition for SVP commitment must be dismissed. In re Smith (2008) 42 C4th 1251, 1269, 73 CR3d 469. In a case in which the qualifying prior conviction under the SVP Act was a court-martial conviction in Germany for indecent acts with a child, the court held that the use of the term "conviction in another state" is limited to convictions in one of the United States and does not encompass a conviction by a military court-martial in Germany. People v Hunt (1999) 74 CA4th 939, 88 CR2d 524.

Even though there must be two concurring expert opinions before a request for filing a commitment petition may be forwarded by the Director of Mental Health to the county, that rule does not mean that two psychiatrists or psychologists must testify at trial. One witness, if credible, is enough. See Evid C §411 (testimony of one witness sufficient unless statute requires more). People v Scott (2002) 100 CA4th 1060, 123 CR2d 253. Psychological or psychiatric testimony in SVP proceedings is not scientific evidence of a nature subject to the Kelly-Frye rule. People v Ward (1999) 71 CA4th 368, 373, 83 CR2d 828.

Ø Note: Although it has been held that the Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 124 S Ct 1354, interpretation of the Sixth Amendment does not apply to an SVP proceeding that requires only adherence to due process rights (see People v Angulo (2005) 129 CA4th 1349, 30 CR3d 189), it is debatable whether this interpretation will survive federal review.

Due process. A defendant in an SVP proceeding is entitled to due process protections because civil commitment involves a significant deprivation of liberty. People v Otto (2001) 26 C4th 200, 209, 109 CR2d 327. However, due process under the SVP Act is not measured by the terms applicable to a defendant in criminal proceedings but by the standard applicable to civil proceedings. People v Superior Court (Howard) (1999) 70 CA4th 136, 154, 82 CR2d 481. See also People v Lopez (2006) 146 CA4th 1263, 1273, 53 CR3d 549. An alleged SVP does have a right to trial within a "meaningful time" as a matter of due process. People v Litmon (2008) 162 CA4th 383, 399, 76 CR3d 122 (proceedings dismissed for lack of timeliness). An alleged SVP also has a constitutional right under both the federal and state Due Process Clauses to testify at trial over the objection of counsel. People v Allen (2008) 44 C4th 843, 869, 80 CR3d 183.

Required findings. The determination of whether the defendant is "likely" to engage in sexually violent criminal behavior is the same at trial as in the probable cause hearing; i.e., the trier of fact must find that there is a serious and well-founded risk that the defendant will commit sexually violent criminal acts on release that will be of a predatory nature. People v Roberge (2003) 29 C4th 979, 129 CR2d 861. The fact finder must determine not only whether the defendant is likely to "engage in sexually violent criminal behavior" (§6600(a)) but whether that behavior is likely to be predatory. Welf & I C §6600(e) ("predatory" means directed toward a stranger, casual acquaintance, or relationship created for victimization); People v Hurtado (2002) 28 C4th 1179, 124 CR2d 186.

Amenability to treatment is not required for a finding that the person is an SVP, nor is it required that the person recognize his or her need for, or be willing to participate in, treatment. Welf & I C §6606(b).

Jury instructions. CALJIC 4.19 (now see CALCRIM 3454) (definition of sexually violent predator) was ruled constitutionally adequate in People v Williams (2003) 31 C4th 757, 3 CR3d 684. CALCRIM 224 (sufficiency of circumstantial evidence) must be given sua sponte when the issue primarily depends on circumstantial evidence. Bench Notes to CALCRIM 224.

If evidence of the defendant's "amenability to voluntary treatment" is presented, the trial court has a sua sponte duty to instruct the jury that it must determine whether custody in a secure facility is necessary to ensure that the defendant is not a danger to the health and safety of others. People v Grassini (2003) 113 CA4th 765, 777, 6 CR3d 662 (failure to instruct was harmless error).

Ø Practice tip: SVP cases often involve intricate litigation over the qualifications of experts, the foundation for their opinions, and the accuracy of their assessment procedures. The State of California provides certification for experts who deal with sex offenders, and the evaluation of such offenders in specific contexts. With the emergence of the SVP laws, some district attorney and public defender offices have developed groups of lawyers who specialize in litigating these cases. These lawyers are valuable resources because they are familiar with both the legal issues and the current state of the pertinent sciences. Counsel unfamiliar with SVP litigation should understand that specialized literature for the mental health professions addresses the assessment of the characteristics of sexual offenders, and that specific sections of standard works such as the DSM-IV-TR deal specifically with the diagnostic criteria attached to certain conditions associated with sexual offenders. In addition, a number of scholars have developed testing procedures to assess the characteristics and dangerousness of sex offenders. Examples include RRASOR (Rapid Risk Assessment of Sexual Offense); SVR-20 (Sexual Violence Recidivism-20); VRAG (Violence Risk Appraisal Guide); and SORAG (Sexual Offense Risk Appraisal Guide). Counsel will need to become thoroughly familiar with the relevant literature, because some of the specific tests and assessment procedures have been identified as problematic, for several reasons. See Rogers & Jackson, Sexually Violent Predators: The Risky Enterprise of Risk Assessment, 33 J Am Acad Psychiatry L 523 (2005). Therefore, counsel will want to be conversant with the data that will assist in resolving objections to the reliability and relevance of the expert opinions expressed.

§48.66 E. Commitment as SVP

If found to meet the criteria of Welf & I C §6600, the SVP is committed by the court to the custody of the DMH for an indeterminate term. The commitment is for appropriate treatment and confinement, but it must be at a secure facility on the grounds of an institution under CDCR jurisdiction. Welf & I C §6604. The DMH has an affirmative obligation to provide treatment. Welf & I C §6606(a), (c).

In a nonemergency, an SVP has the right to refuse the involuntary administration of antipsychotic medication unless found by a court to be incompetent to refuse treatment or to be a danger to others. In re Calhoun (2004) 121 CA4th 1315, 1354, 18 CR3d 315. See In re Qawi (2004) 32 C4th 1, 20, 7 CR3d 780.

§48.67 F. Annual Review of Commitment and Release

A person committed as an SVP has the right to an annual review of his or her mental condition, including an examination by a retained or appointed qualified expert or professional. Welf & I C §6605(a). If the report concludes that the person committed as an SVP no longer meets the SVP criteria or that conditional release is appropriate, the DMH must authorize the person to petition the committing court for release. Welf & I C §6605(b). On receipt of the petition, the court must order a show cause hearing. If the court determines there is probable cause to believe the petition has merit, it must set a hearing on the issue. At that hearing, the committed person is entitled to all of the constitutional protections provided at the initial commitment hearing. Welf & I C §6605(c)-(d). Either the defense or the prosecution may demand a trial by jury and may retain experts to examine the committed individual. Welf & I C §6605(d). The burden of proof is on the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the committed individual remains an SVP. Welf & I C §6605(d).

Ø Note: A committed person petitioning the court for release without the recommendation or concurrence of the DMH bears the burden of proving he or she is not an SVP. Welf & I C §6608(i). See §48.68.

The DMH is obligated to seek judicial review any time it believes a committed person is no longer an SVP, not just at the annual review. Welf & I C §§6605(f), 7250. If the court finds that the person is no longer an SVP, he or she is unconditionally released and discharged. Welf & I C §6605(f).

§48.68 G. Conditional Release Program

After a confinement of at least 1 year, a person found to be an SVP may be placed in a conditional release program. Welf & I C §6608(c)-(d). A hearing on this issue may be generated by a report to the court by the DMH (Welf & I C §6607(a)) or by a petition by the person committed, without the consent of the DMH. Welf & I C §6608(a). The DMH is obligated to provide written notice annually to the person committed of the right to petition the court for conditional release, and the notice must contain a waiver of rights. Welf & I C §6605(b).

The issue at the conditional release hearing is whether the person would be a danger to the health and safety of others in that it is likely that he or she will engage in sexually violent criminal behavior owing to his or her diagnosed mental disorder if under supervision and treatment in the community. Welf & I C §6608(d). The person committed has the burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence at the hearing. Welf & I C §§6608(i), 6607(b). If the court finds that the person is not a danger to others owing to his or her diagnosed mental disorder, if under supervision and treatment in the community, the court must order him or her placed in a forensic conditional release program operated by the state for 1 year. The program must include outpatient care. Welf & I C §6608(d). The period of this placement is 1 year, during which the court retains jurisdiction of the person. Welf & I C §6608(d).

Before a person is actually placed on conditional release, the local community program director designated under Pen C §1605(a) must recommend a particular program to the court. The court may reject this recommendation and specify the reasons for its order on the record. Welf & I C §6608(e). Actual placement must occur within 21 days after notification of the court's order, unless good cause is shown. Welf & I C §6608(f).

When a person files a petition for conditional release without the recommendation or concurrence of the DMH, certain special provisions apply. If the person committed previously filed a petition without DMH concurrence that was found to be "frivolous," or the committed person's condition was found not to have changed so that it no longer met the SVP criteria, the court may deny the current petition without a hearing. However, the court may set a hearing if the petition contains facts on which a court could find that the committed person's condition had so changed that a hearing is warranted. Welf & I C §6608(a). A court cannot deny a petition for conditional release as frivolous if the petition is supported by substantial evidence not totally and completely without merit; the court must hold a hearing on the petition. People v Collins (2003) 110 CA4th 340, 1 CR3d 641.

If the court rules against the committed person at a hearing for conditional release, it may nonetheless place him or her on outpatient status in accordance with Pen C §§1600-1620. Welf & I C §6608(g). If release is denied, the person committed may not file a new application until 1 year has passed after the date of denial.

Time spent in a conditional release program does not count toward the term of commitment as an SVP unless the person is confined in a locked facility. Welf & I C §6608(k). The Penal Code's outpatient revocation procedures apply to the conditional release. Welf & I C §6608(e).

There must be an annual written notification to the person committed as an SVP of his or her right to petition for conditional release. If the person neither files a petition nor affirmatively waives his or her right to do so, the court must set a show cause hearing to assess whether facts exist to warrant a full hearing on the issue of whether he or she is a danger to the health and safety of others and is likely to engage in sexually violent criminal behavior if discharged. Welf & I C §6605(b). The person has a right to be present and to have an attorney at the show cause hearing. Welf & I C §6605(b). If at the hearing the court rules in favor of the person committed, then a hearing must be set on the issue. Welf & I C §6605(d). That "hearing" is substantially identical to the commitment trial. If at the hearing the person is found to be an SVP, a new indeterminate term of commitment commences. If the court or jury "rules for the committed person," he or she is then unconditionally released and discharged. Welf & I C §6605(e).

§48.69 H. Notice of SVP's Release; Placement

Notice of an SVP's release into the community must be given to specified law enforcement authorities and individuals. Welf & I C §§6609-6609.3.

An SVP who is conditionally released must be placed in the county that was his or her domicile before incarceration, unless the court finds that extraordinary circumstances require placement outside the county of domicile. Welf & I C §6608.5(a). In recommending a specific placement for community outpatient treatment, specified factors must be taken into account, including the concerns and proximity of the victim or the victim's next of kin, as well as the age and profile of the victim or victims in the sexually violent offenses committed by the SVP. Welf & I C §6608.5(e). The SVP must not be placed within a quarter-mile of any K-12 school if the court finds that the SVP has "a history of improper sexual conduct with children" or if the SVP has been previously convicted of certain enumerated sex crimes. Welf & I C §6608.5(f).

Ø Practice tip: Counsel in SVP cases should review current literature on developments in the science involved in SVP proceedings. For a review of current literature, see Shajnfeld & Krueger, Reforming (Purportedly) Non-Punitive Responses to Sexual Offending, 25 Dev Mental Health L 81 (2006).

§48.70 VIII. MENTALLY DISORDERED SEX OFFENDER (MDSO) PROCEDURES STILL APPLY TO PERSONS COMMITTED UNDER REPEALED PROVISIONS

A special postconviction disposition of some persons, called mentally disordered sex offenders (MDSOs), was possible under former Welf & I C §§6300-6330 until January 1, 1982, when the MDSO statutes' repeal became effective (Stats 1981, ch 928, §2). The repeal legislation contained a specific "prospective only" provision, which has been interpreted as follows:

- Persons committed as MDSOs before the effective date of the repeal (Jan. 1, 1982) could remain under such commitments subject to continuing jurisdiction under the now-repealed statutes (Baker v Superior Court (1984) 35 C3d 663, 200 CR 293; People v Superior Court (Martin) (1982) 132 CA3d 658, 183 CR 563); and
- Regardless of the date of the crime, persons not committed as MDSOs before the effective date of the repeal (Jan. 1, 1982) could not be so committed (Stickel v Superior Court (1982) 136 CA3d 850, 186 CR 560).

Consequently, extension of commitment under former Welf & I C §§6300-6330 is still possible for an individual originally committed under these provisions.

IX. MENTALLY DISORDERED OFFENDER (MDO) PROCEEDINGS

§48.71 A. Nature of MDO Proceedings

Mentally disordered parolees and former prisoners may be involuntarily committed to a state hospital or outpatient program and treated by the Department of Mental Health in 1-year increments as long as they meet certain statutory criteria. Pen C §2962. Known as "Mentally Disordered Offender" or "MDO" commitments, these proceedings are most common in counties in which major state mental hospitals are located.

Attorneys who specialize in mental health and similar commitments usually represent parolees and prisoners in these proceedings. Because these commitments are based in part on elements of the original conviction, however, criminal practitioners must be prepared to deal with the future consequences of a conviction of their mentally disordered clients.

Although described in the legislation as a "civil hearing" (see Pen C §§2966(b), 2972(a)), the courts of appeal have split on the question of whether or not MDO commitments are subject to constitutional analysis as criminal laws. In People v Collins (1992) 10 CA4th 690, 12 CR2d 768, and People v Gibson (1988) 204 CA3d 1425, 252 CR 56, the courts held that such commitments are essentially penal in nature and therefore subject to the ex post facto and equal protection limitations of the U.S. and California constitutions. In People v Superior Court (Myers) (1996) 50 CA4th 826, 835, 58 CR2d 32, the court found that the statute did not expose the MDO to any punitive ramifications and was not, therefore, penal in nature and subject to those limitations. See People v Fisher (2009) 172 CA4th 1006, 91 CR3d 609 (due process requires personal waiver of presence at MDO commitment hearing); People v Cosgrove (2002) 100 CA4th 1266, 1270, 123 CR2d 535; People v Francis (2002) 98 CA4th 873, 877, 120 CR2d 90 (double jeopardy protection inapplicable). See also discussion in §48.62. The MDO laws can be applied to any prisoner who committed a qualifying crime on or after their effective date of January 1, 1986, despite the fact that the legislation became operative on July 1, 1986. People v Jenkins (1995) 35 CA4th 669, 41 CR2d 502.

Ø Note: If double jeopardy protection is unavailable, res judicata and collateral estoppel may apply to bar the relitigation of issues resolved against the People in a prior action involving the same defendant. See People v Parham (2003) 111 CA4th 1178, 4 CR3d 609.

§48.72 B. Criteria for Mandatory Commitment as Condition of Parole

A prisoner who meets the following criteria may be subject as a condition of parole to commitment and treatment as a mentally disordered offender (MDO) (Pen C §2962):

- The prisoner has a severe mental disorder (SMD), which is statutorily defined as "an illness or disease or condition which substantially impairs the person's thought, perception of reality, emotional process, or judgment; or which grossly impairs behavior; or which demonstrates evidence of an acute brain syndrome for which prompt remission in the absence of treatment is unlikely." Personality disorders and developmental disabilities (as defined by Pen C §1370.1(a)(1)(H)) are excluded. See Pen C §2962(a).
- The SMD is not in remission or cannot be kept in remission without treatment. Remission is defined as "a finding that the overt signs and symptoms of the severe mental disorder are controlled either by psychotropic medication or psychosocial support." A person is not in remission if he or she has been physically violent, damaged property, made a threat that caused the "target" individual reasonable fear, or refused to follow a treatment plan. See Pen C §2962(a).
- The SMD was one of the causes or was an aggravating factor in the commission of the original crime. Pen C §2962(b).
- The prisoner has been in treatment for the SMD for 90 days or more within the year before the prisoner's parole or release. Pen C §2962(c).
- The original crime is one of those listed in Pen C §2962(e)(2)(A)-(Q), and the prisoner received a determinate sentence on it. Penal Code §2962(e)(2)(Q) includes as a "crime" any "crime not enumerated in subparagraph (A) to (O), inclusive, in which the prisoner used force or violence, or caused serious bodily injury as defined in [Pen C §243(f)(4)]." For the definition of "used force or violence, or caused serious bodily injury," see People v Collins (1992) 10 CA4th 690, 12 CR2d 768. In concluding that an offense meets the "force or violence" criteria, a qualified mental health professional may refer to and consider the probation report for the original offense. People v Miller (1994) 25 CA4th 913, 31 CR2d 423. A finding that an individual is a mentally disordered offender may be supported by an underlying crime of cruelty to an animal involving force or violence. The violence does not have to be aimed at a human being. People v Dyer (2002) 95 CA4th 448, 115 CR2d 527. Conviction under Pen C §452 for recklessly setting a fire cannot as a matter of law support a commitment under the MDO law. People v Hayes (2003) 105 CA4th 1287, 129 CR2d 885.

Ø Note: A plea bargain may not be conditioned on a judicial finding that the offense falls outside the MDO law so as to preclude a later commitment based on that offense. People v Renfro (2004) 125 CA4th 223, 228, 22 CR3d 680.

- Before release on parole, the person in charge of treating the prisoner and a practicing psychiatrist or psychologist from the Department of Mental Health have evaluated the prisoner and a chief psychiatrist of the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) has certified to the Board of Parole Hearings that the prisoner meets the above criteria and that by reason of the prisoner's SMD, the prisoner represents a substantial danger of physical harm to others. Pen C §2962(d)(1). Other than as limited by Evid C §352, the People may introduce evidence of prior violent crimes to support an allegation of substantial danger of physical harm to others. People v Pace (1994) 27 CA4th 795, 799, 33 CR2d 352. The duties of evaluation and treatment may be delegated by the person in charge of treating the prisoner. People v White (1995) 32 CA4th 638, 642, 38 CR2d 267.

A defendant does not qualify as an MDO if he or she has not received 90 days or more of treatment within the year before his or her parole release date. In People v Del Valle (2002) 100 CA4th 88, 121 CR2d 889, the defendant received 85 days of treatment, but the 5 days of outpatient treatment in a community clinic did not count towards the 90 days, because the treatment had to have been supervised by CDCR and not provided by a private facility. But see People v Martin (2005) 127 CA4th 970, 974, 26 CR3d 174 (inpatient treatment in county jail outside auspices of CDCR counted towards 90-day credit; Del Valle did not apply, because it concerned outpatient care and legislature contemplated that some inpatient jail treatment would be included in 90-day treatment time). In People v Sheek (2004) 122 CA4th 1606, 1611, 19 CR3d 737, the court held that the treatment the defendant received for his depressive disorder, which was in remission, did not meet the requirement of 90 days of treatment for his qualifying diagnosis of pedophilia.

If circumstances change while the prisoner is released on parole, and he or she is reincarcerated, the People are not foreclosed from seeking an MDO commitment when release is again imminent. People v Coronado (1994) 28 CA4th 1402, 1406, 33 CR2d 835.

Continued mandatory treatment. A parolee is subject annually to extended or continued mandatory treatment for another year as a condition of parole if the following criteria are met (Pen C §2966(c); People v Bell (1994) 30 CA4th 1705, 1710, 36 CR2d 746):

- The parolee has an SMD;
- The SMD is not in remission or cannot be kept in remission without treatment; and
- By reason of the SMD, the parolee represents a substantial danger of physical harm to others.

These criteria relate to the current mental status of the parolee, the only issue at the hearing for recommitment. People v Merfield (2007) 147 CA4th 1071, 1075, 54 CR3d 834. A parolee who disputes an order for continuing mandatory treatment as an MDO may file a petition challenging the ruling. See §48.74.

© The Regents of the University of California

§48.73 C. Treatment as MDO

If a parolee is ordered to receive mandatory treatment and disputes that order, he or she may request a hearing before the Board of Parole Hearings. At such a hearing, the burden is on the Department of Mental Health (DMH) to establish that the parolee meets the criteria for treatment as an MDO. Pen C §2966(a).

Mandatory treatment during the parole period must be inpatient unless the DMH certifies that reasonable cause exists to believe that the parolee can be safely and effectively treated as an outpatient. Pen C §2964(a).

If a parolee remains an inpatient longer than 60 calendar days, the parolee may request a hearing to decide whether he or she should be treated as an outpatient. Pen C §2964(b). At the hearing, the burden of proof is on the person or agency who certified the prisoner as having met the criteria for mandatory treatment. Pen C §2964(b).

Mandatory treatment is terminated if the severe mental disorder (SMD) is put, and can be kept, in remission. Pen C §2968.

§48.74 D. Court Review of MDO Commitment Order

If the Board of Parole Hearings (BPH) agrees that a parolee qualifies for mandatory treatment as an MDO, the parolee may file a petition in the superior court challenging that ruling. A petition challenging the BPH's ruling filed after the commitment period has expired is moot. People v Merfield (2007) 147 CA4th 1071, 1074, 54 CR3d 834.

A hearing must be held within 60 days after the petition is filed. See Pen C §2966(b). The parolee has the right to a jury trial and, if indigent, the right to appointed counsel. The waiver of a jury trial by the attorney on behalf of his or her MDO client does not violate constitutional rights to a jury trial. People v Montoya (2001) 86 CA4th 825, 103 CR2d 579. The burden of proof is beyond a reasonable doubt, and the jury must be unanimous. The parolee must have qualified for treatment as an MDO as of the date of the initial commitment hearing or the most recent recommitment hearing before the Board. People v Tate (1994) 29 CA4th 1678, 1682, 35 CR2d 250; People v Bell (1994) 30 CA4th 1705, 1710, 36 CR2d 746. Both civil and criminal discovery are available. Pen C §2966(b). Although the court has the inherent authority to grant a defendant's pretrial motion to terminate MDO proceedings on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence (People v Sheek (2004) 122 CA4th 1606, 1611, 19 CR3d 737), it may not grant a district attorney's motion for directed verdict under CCP §630, because to do so violates a defendant's statutory right to a jury trial. However, because the right to a jury trial in MDO proceedings is statutory, improper denial of the right is subject to harmless error analysis. 122 CA4th at 1613; People v Cosgrove (2002) 100 CA4th 1266, 1273, 123 CR2d 535.

Continued mandatory treatment. The doctrines of collateral estoppel and res judicata apply to petitions challenging the extension or continuation of treatment for another year and limit the ability of the parolee to contest the criteria that were initially found to establish his or her MDO status. People v Merfield (2007) 147 CA4th 1071, 1075, 54 CR3d 834. The issue to be determined when an MDO extension is at issue is whether the Board of Parole Hearings' assessment of the parolee's current mental condition is correct. People v Bell (1994) 30 CA4th 1705, 1710, 36 CR2d 746.

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/48 MENTAL COMPETENCE, MENTAL DEFENSES, AND RELATED ISSUES/§48.75 E. Postprison or Postparole Involuntary Commitments

§48.75 E. Postprison or Postparole Involuntary Commitments

Involuntary mental health treatment for unlimited, renewable 1-year periods can be imposed on a person about to be released from parole or prison, if the person refused to agree to treatment as a condition of parole under Pen C §2962. These proceedings are referred to as involuntary commitments and recommitments. A person may be subject to these proceedings under the following circumstances (Pen C §2970; People v Kirkland (1994) 24 CA4th 891, 29 CR2d 863):

- The person's severe mental disorder (SMD) is not in remission or cannot be kept in remission without treatment.
- The district attorney reviews a Department of Mental Health (DMH) or California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) written evaluation on the issue of "remission," submitted not later than 180 calendar days in advance of the person's release on parole or from prison, and files a petition for continued involuntary commitment.
- The district attorney's petition is accompanied by affidavits to the effect that the person while on parole received continuous treatment by the DMH in a state hospital or outpatient program; has an SMD that is not in remission or cannot be in remission without treatment; and that by reason of the SMD, the person represents a substantial danger of physical harm to others.

Ø Note: The district attorney has no independent power to initiate involuntary civil commitments under §2970 and is permitted to file a petition only on receipt of the written evaluation from the DMH or CDCR (People v Garcia (2005) 127 CA4th 558, 562, 25 CR3d 660), which must be unfavorable on the issue of remission. People v Marchman (2006) 145 CA4th 79, 89, 51 CR3d 369. Failure of the DMH or CDCR to meet the 180-day deadline for submission of the written evaluation does not require dismissal of the petition if good cause exists and no prejudice is shown. People v Fernandez (1999) 70 CA4th 117, 130, 82 CR2d 469 (180-day rule for filing evaluation "directory" not "mandatory"; delay not prejudicial); People v Kirkland (1994) 24 CA4th 891, 29 CR2d 863 (good cause found).

After filing the petition, the district attorney has the burden of going forward with the involuntary commitment proceeding. The trial must begin no later than 30 calendar days before the date the person would otherwise have been released from parole or prison, unless good cause is shown. Pen C §2972(a). However, the 30-day rule, like the 180-day rule, is directory not mandatory. People v Williams (1999) 77 CA4th 436, 450, 92 CR2d 1. A violation of the 30-day rule is evaluated according to due process principles and does not automatically divest the court of jurisdiction and render the proceedings invalid. People v Kirkland (1994) 24 CA4th 891, 913, 29 CR2d 863. See also People v Tatum (2008) 161 CA4th 41, 56, 73 CR3d 718. There is a split in authority whether due process requires the trial to both begin and end before the time the person would otherwise have been released. See, e.g., Zachary v Superior Court (1997) 57 CA4th 1026, 1031, 67 CR2d 532 (required); People v Williams (1999) 77 CA4th 436, 452, 92 CR2d 1 (not required). The California Supreme Court may resolve this question. See People v Cobb (review granted Mar. 12, 2008, S159410; superseded opinion at 157 CA4th 393, 68 CR3d 625).

Ø Note: While there is no express statutory deadline by which the district attorney must file the petition seeking involuntary commitment of an MDO otherwise due to be released from parole or prison, there is an implicit requirement that the district attorney do so "sufficiently in advance" of the person's release date to allow trial to "reasonably commence" 30 days beforehand. Complaints regarding untimely petitions will be evaluated according to the principles of due process, weighing the reason for the delay against the prejudice to the person facing release. People v Tatum, supra (unexcused, 6-month delay filing petition at expiration of parole period violated due process).

The burden of proof for the commitment proceeding is beyond a reasonable doubt. Either party is entitled to a jury trial, and the jury must reach a unanimous verdict. If the former prisoner is indigent, the "county public defender" must be appointed. Because an MDO proceeding is civil, there is no federal constitutional right to self-representation. But because the MDO commitment statutes give defendants the right to counsel, petitioner could refuse appointed counsel and represent himself. See People v Williams (2003) 110 CA4th 1577, 2 CR3d 890. Because the right is statutory only, the decision in Williams to not allow defendant's self-representation is governed by due process principles and lies within the trial court's sound discretion. 110 CA4th at 1592.

Both civil and criminal discovery provisions apply. Pen C §2972(a)-(b). The county in which the latest conviction occurred is the "county of commitment" in determining venue in an MDO proceeding filed under §2970. People v Superior Court (Jump) (1995) 40 CA4th 9, 46 CR2d 829.

Ø Note: Neither continuous nor involuntary treatment of the offender is a jurisdictional requirement for such proceedings. People v Kirkland, supra.

The privilege against self-incrimination does not bar the prosecution from calling the alleged MDO as a witness in its case-in-chief or questioning him or her. People v Merfeld (1997) 57 CA4th 1440, 67 CR2d 759. See also People v Lopez (2006) 137 CA4th 1099, 40 CR3d 789.

Appellate rules dealing with instructions in criminal cases apply to MDO extensions. People v Collins (1992) 10 CA4th 690, 12 CR2d 768. Specifically, it is error for the trial court to instruct the jury on the consequences of a verdict in an MDO proceeding. 10 CA4th at 695. Also, a trial court cannot allocate to the defendant, by way of instructions, the burden to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that a mental disorder is in remission as a result of medication and that he or she is not dangerous to others. People v Noble (2002) 100 CA4th 184, 121 CR2d 918 ("medication defense" is not affirmative defense, but a claim that criteria for extending commitment is not met).

A court is not required to instruct the jury to presume that the defendant was not an MDO, even though in criminal trials due process requires that the jury be informed on the presumption of innocence. "[A] defendant in an MDO proceeding, despite the statutorily required proof beyond a reasonable doubt standard, does not have a constitutional right to the additional procedural safeguards generally reserved for criminal defendants, including a presumption of innocence instruction." People v Beeson (2002) 99 CA4th 1393, 1404, 122 CR2d 384.

Involuntary recommitment. Before the termination of an involuntary commitment under Pen C §2970, the district attorney has authority to file a petition to extend an MDO's commitment for another year. Pen C §2972(e); People v Garcia, supra. See also People v Allen (2007) 42 C4th 91, 94, 64 CR3d 124. This petition for recommitment must be filed before the MDO's prior commitment ends. Pen C §2972(e). While a prosecutor's failure to file a petition for recommitment divests the court of jurisdiction over the prisoner under the MDO laws, the defendant may still be subject to involuntary commitment under the LPS Act. 42 C4th at 103.

§48.76 F. Right to Treatment; Outpatient Status

Once committed for mandatory mental health treatment under Pen C §2970, a mentally disordered offender has a statutory right to treatment. Pen C §2972(f). In addition, an MDO is entitled to the statutory rights granted involuntary mental patients under the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (LPS). Pen C §2972(g). Like an involuntary LPS patient, a mentally disordered offender has the right to refuse the involuntary administration of antipsychotic medication unless determined by a court to be incompetent to refuse treatment or a danger to others within the meaning of Welf & I C §5300. In re Qawi (2004) 32 C4th 1, 7 CR3d 780. See also Thor v Superior Court (1993) 5 C4th 725, 21 CR2d 357.

Outpatient treatment under Pen C §§1600-1620 is available to a parolee. The procedural provisions of those sections, however, do not apply to postprison MDOs. Pen C §2964(a).

The court may order outpatient treatment for anyone committed as an MDO if it finds reasonable cause to believe that the committed person can be safely and effectively treated on an outpatient basis. Pen C §2972(d). However, there is no sua sponte duty on the part of the court to determine whether the MDO can be safely and effectively treated on an outpatient basis; the MDO must present the issue at the recommitment hearing. People v Rish (2008) 163 CA4th 1370, 1382, 78 CR3d 455. In this situation, it appears that the procedural provisions of Pen C §§1600-1620 apply, except that the standard for revocation of outpatient treatment is that the person cannot be safely and effectively treated on an outpatient basis. Pen C §2972(d).

X. COMMITMENT ALTERNATIVES

§48.77 A. Treatment for Developmentally Disabled Individuals Under Lanterman Developmental Disabilities Services Act (LDDSA)

Developmental disability is defined as "a disability which originates before an individual attains age 18, continues, or can be expected to continue, indefinitely and constitutes a substantial handicap for such individual." Pen C §1370.1(a)(1)(H). The term includes mental retardation (and similar conditions), cerebral palsy, epilepsy, and autism but does not include handicaps that are solely physical. Pen C §1370.1(a)(1)(H). See also Welf & I C §4512(a).

The Lanterman Developmental Disabilities Services Act (LDDSA) (Welf & I C §§4500-4867) defines both the state's duty to provide services for the developmentally disabled and the right of developmentally disabled individuals to receive care and treatment. In compliance with the LDDSA, the state contracts with private agencies that act as Regional Centers for the Care and Treatment of Developmentally Disabled Individuals (Regional Centers), helping match developmentally disabled individuals with the services they need. See Welf & I C §§4620-4669. A list of Regional Centers is available at the California Department of Developmental Services' website at http://www.dds.ca.gov/RC/Home.cfm.

A developmentally disabled defendant should receive "suitable treatment," defined as the least restrictive residential placement necessary, at a state hospital, licensed community care facility, or health facility. Welf & I C §6509. A Regional Center may use a Hop commitment to admit a developmentally disabled person to long-term hospital care. Once admitted under Hop, the patient cannot initially leave the hospital or refuse treatment but does retain the right to resist or later challenge the commitment. See In re Hop (1981) 29 C3d 82, 171 CR 721. Although technically voluntary, such hospitalizations are analogous to involuntary commitments of mentally disordered individuals under the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act. See Pen C §2972(g).

Mentally retarded individuals who are a danger to self or others may be committed to a state hospital upon request by the Regional Center or other designated entities under Welf & I C §§6500-6513. The mentally retarded individual has the right to oppose the involuntary hospitalization and is entitled to counsel and a jury trial on the matter. See Welf & I C §§6500, 6504, 6507; People v Sweeney (2009) 175 CA4th 210, 95 CR3d 557; People v Alvas (1990) 221 CA3d 1459, 271 CR 131.

Practitioners who need to learn the subtleties of clinical issues involving mental retardation should consult Intellectual Disability: Definition, Classification, and Systems of Support (11th ed 2010), published by the American Association on Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities (AAIDD). Considered the definitive resource for treatment professionals, this book can be ordered on the AAIDD's website at http://bookstore.aaidd.org.

§48.78 B. Diversion for Misdemeanants With Cognitive Developmental Disabilities Under Pen C §§1001.20-1001.34

Formal diversion is available for misdemeanants with cognitive developmental disabilities. Pen C §§1001.20-1001.34. For purposes of this type of diversion, "cognitive developmental disability" is defined as any of the following (Pen C §1001.20(a)):

- "Mental retardation," meaning a condition of significantly subaverage general intellectual functioning existing concurrently with deficits in adaptive behavior and manifested during the developmental period.
- "Autism," meaning a diagnosed condition of markedly abnormal or impaired development in social interaction, in communication, or in both, with a markedly restricted repertoire of activity and interests.
- Disabling condition closely related to mental retardation or autism, or that requires similar treatment, and that would qualify an individual for services under the Lanterman Developmental Disabilities Services Act (LDDSA) (Welf & I C §§4500-4867).

Unless they are mentally retarded, misdemeanor defendants are eligible for diversion only if they are clients of a Regional Center at the time of the offense. Pen C §1001.21(c). After consulting with the defendant, defense counsel, the prosecution, any probation officers involved, and the Regional Center, the court can choose to divert the defendant to a program of single- or dual-agency supervision. Pen C §§1001.22, 1001.23(a)-(b). Diversion may be for up to 2 years, with progress reports to be filed with the court and the prosecutor every 6 months. Pen C §1001.28. On successful completion of diversion, the arrest on which the diversion was based is deemed to have never occurred. Pen C §1001.33. Criminal proceedings against the defendant resume if the defendant withdraws consent or fails to meet the terms and conditions of diversion. Pen C §§1001.29-1001.30.

§48.79 C. Treatment of Mentally Disordered Individuals Under Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (LPS Act)

The Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (LPS Act) (Welf & I C §§5000-5550) provides for the involuntary treatment of people with mental disorders. For an in-depth review of this civil mental health law, see California Conservatorship Practice, chap 23 (Cal CEB 2005).

Ø Note: While diversion is available under Pen C §§1001.20-1001.34 for misdemeanants with cognitive developmental disabilities, courts often use the LPS Act informally as a basis for granting diversion. Some courts have noted, however, that using the LPS Act as an alternative to criminal commitment proceedings may not "provide adequate protection against premature release of dangerous persons to society." People v Poggi (1980) 107 CA3d 581, 588 n6, 165 CR 758; People v Balderas (1980) 104 CA3d 942, 948, 164 CR 275.

§48.80 1. Persons Subject to LPS Act

The following persons are subject to the LPS Act:

- Persons who, as a result of a mental disorder, are a danger to others, a danger to self, gravely disabled, or any combination of the above (Welf & I C §5150); and
- Persons who, as a result of inebriation, are a danger to others, a danger to self, gravely disabled, or any combination of the above (Welf & I C §5170).

§48.81 2. Definitions

Mental disorder. For purposes of the LPS Act, a "mental disorder" is any of the mental disorders set out in the current edition of the American Psychiatric Association's Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM). Conservatorship of Chambers (1977) 71 CA3d 277, 282 n5, 139 CR 357.

Danger to self; danger to others. There is no straightforward definition of "danger to self" or "danger to others" in case law. By statute, a person can be certified for up to 14 days of involuntary treatment if he or she is "a danger to others, or to himself or herself, or gravely disabled." Welf & I C §5250. A person can be confined for an additional 14 days if he or she has threatened or attempted to take his or her own life during the period of detention. Welf & I C §5260. People who present a "demonstrated danger of inflicting substantial physical harm upon others" may be detained for an additional 180 days beyond the initial period of confinement. Welf & I C §5300.

Gravely disabled. "Gravely disabled" is defined in Welf & I C §5008(h)(1)(A) as a "condition in which a person, as a result of a mental disorder, is unable to provide for his basic personal needs for food, clothing, or shelter." Defendants who are incompetent to stand trial and have already been hospitalized for as long as allowed by Pen C §1370(c)(1) or §1370.1(c)(1) must meet the additional requirements outlined in Welf & I C §5008(h)(1)(B) to be considered gravely disabled.

A minor is gravely disabled when, as a result of a mental disorder, the minor cannot "use the elements of life which are essential to health, safety, and development, including food, clothing, and shelter, even though provided to the minor by others." Welf & I C §5008(l). A person is not gravely disabled under §5008(h)(1) if he or she is capable of surviving safely in freedom with the help of willing and responsible family members, friends, or third parties. Conservatorship of Early (1983) 35 C3d 244, 197 CR 539.

The term "gravely disabled" is not unconstitutionally vague and overbroad. Conservatorship of Chambers (1977) 71 CA3d 277, 284, 139 CR 357; Doe v Gallinot (CD Cal 1979) 486 F Supp 983, 991, aff'd (9th Cir 1981) 657 F2d 1017.

§48.82 3. Types of Commitment Under LPS Act

The most common mechanism for long-term involuntary mental health treatment is the LPS conservatorship. LPS conservatorships expire automatically after 1 year but are renewable for as long as the conservatee is gravely disabled. Welf & I C §5361. Welf & I C §5352.5 defines how LPS conservatorships apply to criminal defendants.

The LPS Act protects against inappropriate commitment by limiting the ways in which a person can be admitted for services. Only a peace officer, a member of the attending staff of designated mental health facilities, and members of a mobile crisis team can refer a mentally disordered person to commitment under LPS, and even then only if there is probable cause that the person they seek to admit is gravely disabled or a danger to self or others. Welf & I C §5150. Family, personal doctors, attorneys, and judges cannot involuntarily commit a mentally disordered person under §5150.

Involuntary commitment to treatment of mentally ill individuals may be made under the LPS Act in increasing lengths of 3 days (Welf & I C §5150), 14 days (Welf & I C §§5250, 5260), and 30 days (Welf & I C §§5270.20, 5352.1). After these periods, involuntary treatment by way of judicial commitment under Welf & I C §5300 is available in successive periods of 180 days for individuals who are dangerous to others. One-year conservatorships, in which the patient may be hospitalized, are available for gravely disabled individuals. At each stage of involuntary treatment, the patient is entitled to a substantial breadth of rights and hearings to resist the involuntary commitment.

A conservatorship is a legal device whereby one person, known as the conservatee, is deprived of certain civil powers and civil rights, and concomitant powers over the conservatee are awarded to another person, known as the conservator. See Prob C §1801; Welf & I C §5350. LPS conservatorships may be initiated only by public officers, called conservatorship investigators, on application of the professional person in charge of certain designated agencies and facilities. Welf & I C §5352. The proposed conservatee has a variety of rights to resist the imposition of the conservatorship, including the right to a jury trial. Welf & I C §§5350(d), 5358.3, 5359, 5364. The specific disabilities suffered by an LPS conservatee and the powers that may be awarded to the LPS conservator are described in Welf & I C §§5356-5357. The powers that may be granted to the conservator include the option to have the conservatee involuntarily housed in a mental hospital or other treatment facility. Welf & I C §5358(a). The conservator may also require the conservatee to undergo mental health treatment, even against the conservatee's will. Welf & I C §5358(b). This treatment usually includes the administration of antipsychotic medication. These kinds of powers are not available under Probate Code conservatorships. See Prob C §§1801, 2356(a). Conservatorships are not the functional equivalent of judicial commitment or permanent hospitalization.

Conservatorships for individuals who have been committed as incompetent and who have reached the maximum detention period under Pen C §1370(c)(2) are discussed in §48.23.

§49.1 I. OVERVIEW

The privilege against self-incrimination entitles a witness to refuse to give testimony or evidence that may tend to incriminate him or her. Various forms of statutory and nonstatutory immunity have been used by the prosecution to compel testimony despite the privilege.

There are two major forms of immunity: transactional and use immunity. Use immunity only prevents authorities from using the actual testimony or evidence that was obtained under the immunity grant. Transactional immunity provides immunity from later prosecution related to any matter about which the witness testified. People v DeFreitas (1983) 140 CA3d 835, 837, 189 CR 814.

In California, the following are the primary immunity statutes:

- Pen C §1324 (by the prosecution, in felony cases; statutory "use").
- Pen C §1324.1 (essentially by the prosecution, with the witness's agreement in misdemeanor cases; transactional).
- Pen C §1099 (by the prosecution, to codefendant during trial; implied transactional).
- Pen C §1100 (at the defense's request or on judge's own motion, to codefendant during trial; transactional).
- Pen C §4001.1 (special rules for in-custody informants).
- Health & S C §11367 (immunity for peace officers and those working for them in drug cases).

Various statutes grant immunity—use or transactional—to witnesses in noncourt proceedings or in juvenile court. See list in §49.20.

Judicial use immunity may be granted. See §49.14. Defense-initiated immunity is nonexistent except when the prosecution's intimidation of a witness has caused the witness to take the Fifth, and has deprived the defendant of the constitutional compulsory process right.

Statutory "use" immunity may be granted on the prosecutor's request. Judicial immunity—use or transactional—may be granted by a court on the prosecutor's request in felony cases. If immunity is granted, a witness who still refuses to testify, can be held in contempt. Pen C §§1324-1324.1. See §49.9.

Despite an immunity grant, a witness may be prosecuted for committing perjury, false swearing, or contempt in failing to comply with the court's order during his or her testimony. Pen C §§1324-1324.1.

For discussion of representation of witnesses, see chap 51.

Other good sources of information on immunity and on the privilege against self-incrimination include California Trial Objections, chap 46 (Cal CEB Annual); 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Witnesses §§355-502 (4th ed 2000).

§49.3 III. TYPES OF IMMUNITY: TRANSACTIONAL AND USE IMMUNITY

Transactional and use immunity described. The two major types of immunity are transactional and use immunity. Use immunity is more limited. It prevents law enforcement authorities from using only the actual testimony that was obtained under a grant of immunity, or its fruit, in a subsequent prosecution of that witness. Transactional immunity provides immunity from prosecution for any criminal conduct related to any matter about which the individual testified; it is not limited to use of the testimony itself or its fruits. People v DeFreitas (1983) 140 CA3d 835, 837, 189 CR 814. See also 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Witnesses §§470-494 (4th ed 2000). Transactional immunity thus gives much broader protection to the witness than use immunity provides. People v Campbell (1982) 137 CA3d 867, 873, 187 CR 340. California provides transactional immunity in misdemeanor cases. Pen C §1324.1. In felony cases, the prosecutor may choose between transactional and use immunity. Pen C §1324.

Limitations on transactional immunity. There are three important limitations on the scope of transactional immunity. First, transactional immunity does not prevent prosecution for perjury based on the immunized testimony. See U.S. v Apfelbaum (1980) 445 US 115, 63 L Ed 2d 250, 100 S Ct 948. See also People v Hathcock (1971) 17 CA3d 646, 95 CR 221.

Second, transactional immunity does not extend to an event described in an answer totally unresponsive to the question asked. Thus, a witness cannot gain immunity from prosecution for all previous acts by simply including a reference to them in his or her testimony, when that reference is not responsive to a question. See Zicarelli v New Jersey State Comm'n of Investigation (1972) 406 US 472, 32 L Ed 2d 234, 92 S Ct 1670 (state statute granting use and derivative use immunity only for "responsive" answers upheld).

Third, if the prosecution offers immunity for fewer than all crimes committed by the witness, and the witness agrees to that immunity grant, the witness is not protected with regard to any crimes not covered by the grant. People v St. Joseph (1990) 226 CA3d 289, 298, 276 CR 498.

Ø Note: The witness is still required to invoke the privilege against self-incrimination regarding any unprotected areas of inquiry. People v St. Joseph, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.4 IV. FIFTH AMENDMENT PRIVILEGE MUST APPLY BEFORE IMMUNITY APPLIES; DETERMINATION BY COURT

Neither transactional nor use immunity can be granted unless the witness is privileged under the Fifth Amendment to withhold the answer requested. See Cohen v Superior Court (1959) 173 CA2d 61, 70, 343 P2d 286. The commonly used phrase "privilege against self-incrimination" is not an entirely accurate description of a person's constitutional protection against being "compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself." U.S. v Hubbell (2000) 530 US 27, 34, 147 L Ed 2d 24, 34, 120 S Ct 2037. The Fifth Amendment privilege is limited to compelled communications that are "testimonial" in character. U.S. v Hubbell, supra. Thus, for example, a person can be compelled to provide a blood sample (Schmerber v California (1966) 384 US 757, 765, 16 L Ed 2d 908, 86 S Ct 1826) or an example of his or her handwriting (Gilbert v California (1967) 388 US 263, 266, 18 L Ed 2d 1178, 87 S Ct 1951) without violating the privilege against self-incrimination, even though, by so doing, he or she may be providing incriminating information.

Similarly, an individual cannot avoid a summons or subpoena for production of documents on the ground that the documents may contain incriminating assertions of fact or belief, when the creation of those documents was not "compelled." Fisher v U.S. (1976) 425 US 391, 48 L Ed 2d 39, 96 S Ct 1569 (individual could not avoid production of voluntarily created papers used to prepare tax returns on ground that documents contained incriminating information). However, the act of production itself might "constitute protected testimonial communication because it might entail implicit statements of fact: by producing documents in compliance with a subpoena, the witness would admit that the papers existed, were in his possession or control, and were authentic." Doe v U.S. (1988) 487 US 201, 209, 101 L Ed 2d 184, 196, 108 S Ct 2341; U.S. v Hubbell (2000) 530 US 27, 37 n19, 147 L Ed 2d 24, 37 n19, 120 S Ct 2037. If the act of production provides a link in the chain of evidence needed for prosecution, and the witness is properly asserting his or her Fifth Amendment right, the prosecution would need to offer immunity to compel production of the subpoenaed documents. 530 US at 38, 147 L Ed 2d at 37.

The Fifth Amendment applies if the testimony to be given would furnish a link in the chain of evidence needed to prosecute the witness for a crime. Hoffman v U.S. (1951) 341 US 479, 486, 95 L Ed 1118, 1124, 71 S Ct 814. The word "crime" covers state, local, and federal offenses. U.S. v (Under Seal) (4th Cir 1986) 794 F2d 920, 926; 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Witnesses §469 (4th ed 2000).

A witness may not invoke the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination based solely on the possibility of prosecution by a foreign country. See U.S. v Balsys (1998) 524 US 666, 141 L Ed 2d 575, 118 S Ct 2218, discussed in §49.27.

A witness may not be granted immunity for a crime to which he or she pleaded guilty; the guilty plea (or plea of no contest) waives the privilege against self-incrimination. People v Stewart (1969) 1 CA3d 339, 343, 81 CR 562.

Whether the Fifth Amendment privilege applies is determined by the judge as a preliminary fact under Evid C §§402, 404, and 940. In felony cases, this determination is made following a witness immunity hearing. See §49.19. In misdemeanor cases, there is no formal procedure for making this determination. See Pen C §1324.1. It is common for the judge to question the witness out of the jury's presence once the privilege has been asserted if the prosecutor wants immunity granted under Pen C §1324.1.

Although the court should make a particularized inquiry about whether a claim of privilege is well founded, the threshold for its invocation is a low one. It need only be evident from the implications of the question, in the setting in which it is asked, that a responsive answer, or an explanation of why it cannot be answered, might be dangerous because injurious disclosure might result. People v Lucas (1995) 12 C4th 415, 454, 48 CR2d 525.

V. IMMUNITY PROCEDURES IN CALIFORNIA STATE COURTS

§49.5 A. Immunity Available in Felony Cases

Immunity may be requested by prosecutors in felony cases under Pen C §1324. Procedures are discussed in §§49.7-49.9.

Immunity for a codefendant in either a felony or a misdemeanor case may be requested by the prosecution under Pen C §1099. The defense can initiate a request for immunity for a codefendant in both felony and misdemeanor cases, and the court can grant such immunity on its own motion, under Pen C §1100. Procedures are discussed in §§49.11 (Pen C §1099) and 49.12 (Pen C §1100).

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.6 B. Immunity Available in Misdemeanor Cases

Witnesses in misdemeanor cases may volunteer testimony in return for immunity. Pen C §1324.1. See discussion in §49.10.

When codefendants are involved, the prosecution may seek immunity for a codefendant under Pen C §1099. Either the defense may request, or the court on its own motion may grant, immunity to codefendants under Pen C §1100. Procedures are discussed in §§49.11 (Pen C §1099) and 49.12 (Pen C §1100). Judges may grant use immunity on their own motion, but this is rarely done. See discussion in §49.14.

C. Immunity Grants in Felony Cases Under Pen C §1324

§49.7 1. Prosecution Request Required

The decision to initiate a request for immunity under Pen C §1324 is vested exclusively in the prosecutor. Daly v Superior Court (1977) 19 C3d 132, 146, 137 CR 14. Prosecutors have no general obligation to provide immunity to a witness to assist the defense. People v Samuels (2005) 36 C4th 96, 127, 30 CR3d 105.

Ø Note: The argument that the prosecution has failed to exercise due diligence in making a witness "available" if the prosecution's refusal to request immunity for that witness results in the witness claiming the privilege against self-incrimination has been rejected. People v Williams (2008) 43 C4th 584, 622, 75 CR3d 691.

The prosecution's exclusive right to grant immunity under §1324 is not, however, without limits. See People v Hunter (1989) 49 C3d 957, 974, 264 CR 367 (citing rule but finding no violation); People v Cooke (1993) 16 CA4th 1361, 1367, 20 CR2d 506 (declining to grant use immunity to defense witness because of dictum in Hunter). The prosecutor may seek a grant of immunity in any felony investigation or proceeding, including proceedings before a grand jury. See Pen C §1324. The prosecutor must then ask a superior court judge to formally grant the witness immunity. Pen C §1324. The prosecutor's request to grant immunity and dismiss charges should be made promptly. People v Walther (1938) 27 CA2d 583, 590, 81 P2d 452. Appellate courts, however, examine each case individually. People v Manson (1976) 61 CA3d 102, 134, 132 CR 265.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.8 2. Prosecutor Can Request Use or Transactional Immunity

The prosecution may request either transactional or use immunity. Pen C §1324. Section 1324 was amended in 1996; the amendment is modeled on the federal Immunity Act (18 USC §§6001-6005). Committee Analysis, AB 988 (1996). Therefore, reference by California courts to the federal legislative history and to federal court interpretations of the federal act is appropriate. See American Civil Liberties Union Found. v Deukmejian (1982) 32 C3d 440, 447, 186 CR 235.

Ø Note: Counsel should be aware that there are sometimes different interpretations of the same issue by different federal courts. For example, the Ninth Circuit's interpretation of the definition of "use" in U.S. v Koon (9th Cir 1994) 34 F3d 1416, aff'd in part and rev'd in part in Koon v U.S. (1996) 518 US 81, 135 L Ed 2d 392, 116 S Ct 2035, is narrower than that of the court in U.S. v North (DC Cir 1990) 910 F2d 843, modified at 920 F2d 940.

The prosecutor may limit a grant of transactional immunity to a specified time period or to specified offenses. People v St. Joseph (1990) 226 CA3d 289, 298, 276 CR 498.

If transactional immunity is granted, the order should read as follows:

> That person shall not be prosecuted or subjected to penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any fact or act concerning which, in accordance with the order, he/she was required to answer or produce evidence.

The phrase "in accordance with the order" prevents the unintended grant of immunity for a nonresponsive answer. See §49.3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.9 3. Procedures for Granting Immunity

Witness refuses to answer. The procedure to obtain a grant of immunity under Pen C §1324 is initiated by a witness's refusal to answer a question or produce evidence on the ground of self-incrimination. The prosecutor then requests that the court order the witness to answer. The court responds by issuing an order to show cause and sets a time for a witness immunity hearing. See People v Brunner (1973) 32 CA3d 908, 912, 108 CR 501. It is preferable for the determination of this issue to occur outside the jury's presence. People v Hill (1992) 3 C4th 959, 991, 13 CR2d 475, overruled on other grounds in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069, 108 CR2d 409. See §51.2. For further discussion of when and where this determination should be made, see California Trial Objections §§33.13, 46.9 (Cal CEB Annual).

Immunity hearing. At the immunity hearing, the claimant of the privilege has the burden of showing that a question may be incriminating (Evid C §404), as a preliminary fact (Evid C §§402, 404, 940). People v Campbell (1982) 137 CA3d 867, 877, 187 CR 340. If the claimant presents such evidence, the judge must sustain the claim of privilege unless it clearly appears that the proffered evidence cannot possibly have a tendency to incriminate the claimant. Cohen v Superior Court (1959) 173 CA2d 61, 70, 343 P2d 286. If the assertion of privilege is sustained, counsel may wish to raise the question of whether the witness is subject "to a criminal prosecution in another jurisdiction" (Pen C §1324). The Fifth Amendment's privilege against self-incrimination does not extend to foreign criminal prosecutions outside of the United States. U.S. v Balsys (1998) 524 US 666, 141 L Ed 2d 575, 118 S Ct 2218. See §49.4. It does, however, protect a witness from the use of testimony or its fruits by the prosecution in other states or by the federal government. Murphy v Waterfront Comm'n (1964) 378 US 52, 79, 12 L Ed 2d 678, 84 S Ct 1594 (witnesses granted immunity under state law refused to answer questions that might incriminate them under federal law; federal government was prohibited from using testimony and its fruits in criminal prosecution against witnesses). See also §49.27.

The prosecutor may request in writing that immunity be granted under §1324. If statutory immunity is sought, the terms are in the statute. If judicial immunity is requested, the request should specify the following:

- The terms of the agreement;
- The subject matter of the testimony that the prosecutor expects to elicit (the prosecutor usually has a written statement from the witness explaining or summarizing his or her proposed testimony);
- The proceedings at which the testimony will be given;
- Representations of the witness or his or her counsel on the specific content of the witness's testimony; and
- The witness's promise to testify fully and truthfully in return for the promised grant of immunity.

Court's order when immunity granted. Once the prosecutor requests immunity for a witness, the court must grant immunity and "order the question answered or the evidence produced unless it finds that to do so would be clearly contrary to the public interest, or could subject the witness to a criminal prosecution in another jurisdiction." Pen C §1324. Thus, if there are no compelling reasons against it, the court must accede to the prosecutor's request and compel the testimony. People v Superior Court (Taylor) (1975) 53 CA3d 996, 1001, 126 CR 297.

Effects on witness of immunity grant. Once a judge has granted a witness immunity and ordered the witness to testify, the witness can be punished by contempt if he or she refuses to testify. Pen C §1324; People v Clemmons (1962) 208 CA2d 696, 700, 25 CR 467. A witness who refuses to testify following the immunity grant waives the immunity. See Pen C §1324.

Despite a grant of immunity, a witness may be prosecuted for perjury committed while testifying under the grant of immunity. Pen C §1324.

The prosecutor should follow the procedures set forth in §1324. People v Superior Court (Perry) (1989) 213 CA3d 536, 539, 261 CR 665. In the absence of such compliance, the prosecutor's unilateral offer of immunity is not enforceable by the court unless it has been accepted or relied on by the witness. People v St. Joseph (1990) 226 CA3d 289, 298, 276 CR 498; People v Superior Court (Crook) (1978) 83 CA3d 335, 339, 147 CR 856 (rule stated and followed regarding crimes for which immunity offered; no immunity for crimes not specifically included in immunity offer).

Additional rules apply to immunity granted to in-custody informants held within a correctional institution with the defendant. See §§17.14, 49.16.

§49.10 D. Immunity Grants in Misdemeanor Cases Under Pen C §1324.1

Penal Code §1324.1 allows a witness in a misdemeanor case to volunteer testimony in return for immunity. After claiming the privilege, a witness may agree in writing with the prosecutor "to testify voluntarily." Pen C §1324.1. Court approval of the written agreement by a judge with jurisdiction of the case is mandatory unless the judge finds "that to do so would be clearly contrary to the public interest." Pen C §1324.1. The immunity granted is transactional immunity (Pen C §1324.1): If, but for the grant of immunity, the witness would have been privileged to withhold the answer given or the evidence produced, "that person shall not be prosecuted or subjected to penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any fact or act concerning which, in accordance with such agreement he answered or produced evidence." The phrase "in accordance with such agreement" prevents an unintended grant of immunity for a nonresponsive answer. See §49.3.

Because there is no order compelling the witness to testify under §1324.1, a witness who refuses to testify after agreeing to do so merely loses immunity and may be prosecuted "in the same manner and to the same extent as he would be prosecuted… but for this section." Pen C §1324.1.

Despite a grant of immunity, a witness may be prosecuted for perjury while testifying under the grant of immunity. Pen C §1324.1.

E. Granting Immunity to Codefendant During Trial

§49.11 1. Prosecution Request (Pen C §1099)

The prosecution may request immunity during trial for a codefendant to testify for the People in that trial. Pen C §1099. The immunity operates as an acquittal and a bar to further prosecution for that offense. Pen C §1101.

The prosecution should move for discharge of the codefendant's case before the defense begins to present its case. Pen C §1099; People v Robinson (1960) 184 CA2d 69, 78, 7 CR 202 (rule stated, but court found that prosecution had not yet rested when case dismissed). The discharge can only be for testimony at trial; a magistrate should not discharge a codefendant under §1099 to testify at a preliminary hearing. Compare People v Spencer (1956) 140 CA2d 97, 100, 294 P2d 997 (§1099 does not empower magistrate to order discharge), with Bates v Superior Court (1951) 107 CA2d 656, 658, 237 P2d 544 (magistrate's dismissal at prosecutor's request during preliminary hearing upheld by appellate court even though in error).

It is preferable for the prosecutor's request for an immunity grant to be made out of the jury's presence. People v Brown (1971) 14 CA3d 334, 340, 92 CR 370. See discussion in California Trial Objections §46.9 (Cal CEB Annual).

The prosecutor moves to discharge a codefendant's case under Pen C §1099 after providing notice to attorneys for all codefendants. The prosecution must disclose to the remaining defendants all offers made to codefendants, whether accepted or not. People v Westmoreland (1976) 58 CA3d 32, 46, 129 CR 554. Although all parties may argue the motion, there is no statute authorizing either side to introduce evidence. People v Dillon (1924) 68 CA 457, 474, 229 P 974. The granting of the motion is discretionary with the court. Pen C §1099. Discharge may be ordered even if there is a prima facie case against the discharged defendant. People v Frahm (1930) 107 CA 253, 263, 290 P 678.

A defendant does not have standing under Pen C §1099 to suggest to the trial court that it sever the trial of codefendants and grant immunity under §1099. People v Freeny (1974) 37 CA3d 20, 30, 112 CR 33. (The defendant can request immunity under Pen C §1100, discussed in §49.12.) A defendant who is not discharged does not have standing to object to a court's discharge of a codefendant. People v Chapman (1949) 91 CA2d 854, 857, 206 P2d 4.

See discussion of the effects of a dismissal under §1099 in §49.13.

§49.12 2. Defense Request or Judge's Own Motion (Pen C §1100)

A defendant may move that the trial judge discharge the case against a codefendant so that the codefendant can be a witness for the defendant. Pen C §1100. See People v DeFreitas (1983) 140 CA3d 835, 189 CR 814. It appears that a codefendant may also request discharge of his or her own case under §1100 on the condition that he or she be a witness for the defendant. In addition, the trial judge can discharge a codefendant on the judge's motion. Pen C §1100.

Immunity under §1100 does not automatically apply to a codefendant who voluntarily agrees to testify for or against a defendant. People v Snyder (1925) 74 CA 138, 142, 239 P 705, disapproved on other grounds in People v McFarland (1962) 58 C2d 748, 762, 26 CR 473. Court approval is required. Pen C §1100.

When a defendant moves to discharge a codefendant to secure his or her testimony, the defendant should make an offer of proof as to what the codefendant's testimony will be. People v Williams (1942) 20 C2d 273, 283, 125 P2d 9. See also People v Stewart (1931) 115 CA 681, 688, 2 P2d 195.

A judge deciding a discharge issue must order that the codefendant be discharged and be a witness in the defendant's case, if the judge believes that the evidence against the codefendant is insufficient to force him or her to stand trial. Pen C §1100. Although §1100 provides that, if its terms are met, the court "must" discharge the codefendant, a denial of the motion for discharge does not necessarily constitute prejudicial error. People v Williams (1942) 20 C2d 273, 283, 125 P2d 9 (defendant on appeal showed no prejudice from court's denial of §1100 motion; judgment affirmed).

The effect of dismissal under Pen C §1100 is discussed in §49.13.

§49.13 3. Effect of Dismissal Under Pen C §§1099, 1100

A court's action under Pen C §§1099 and 1100 is "an acquittal of the defendant discharged, and is a bar to another prosecution for the same offense." Pen C §1101; People v Woodberry (1968) 265 CA2d 351, 357, 71 CR 165. The "acquittal" achieved under these provisions is not an acquittal on the merits, however, and does not mean that the person acquitted has been found not guilty of the offense. People v Hadden (1947) 79 CA2d 635, 638, 180 P2d 371.

§49.14 F. Judicial Use Immunity

No statutory authority exists in California that allows judges to confer immunity on potential witnesses absent the consent of the prosecutor. The California Supreme Court, however, indicated in dicta in People v Hunter (1989) 49 C3d 957, 974, 264 CR 367, that trial courts do have the authority to grant use immunity without the prosecution's consent if the requirements set out in Government of V.I. v Smith (3d Cir 1980) 615 F2d 964 are met. The requirements of that case are these (615 F2d at 972):

> [T]he opportunities for judicial use of this immunity power must be clearly limited:… the proffered testimony must be clearly exculpatory; the testimony must be essential; and there must be no strong governmental interests which countervail against a grant of immunity….
> [T]he defendant must make a convincing showing sufficient to satisfy the court that the testimony which will be forthcoming is both clearly exculpatory and essential to the defendant's case. Immunity will be denied if the proffered testimony is found to be ambiguous, not clearly exculpatory, cumulative or it is found to relate only to the credibility of the government's witnesses.

Basing its decision on the facts of the case, the Ninth Circuit reversed a conviction because of a trial court's refusal to grant a defense witness immunity. U.S. v Westerdahl (9th Cir 1991) 945 F2d 1083. See People v Samuels (2005) 36 C4th 96, 127, 30 CR3d 105 (court assumed without deciding that trial court had authority to order use immunity for defense witness); People v Stewart (2004) 33 C4th 425, 468, 15 CR3d 656 (court assumed without deciding that trial court had authority to order transactional or use immunity for defense witness). Conversely, in People v Lucas (1995) 12 C4th 415, 460, 48 CR2d 525, the court stated in dicta that it is a doubtful proposition that trial courts have the inherent authority to grant a witness immunity absent a request by the prosecution. Although the Government of V.I. case, establishing judicially granted immunity, has not been rejected in California, it has been hotly contested throughout the country and has been rejected by other courts. See, e.g., Curtis v Duval (1st Cir 1997) 124 F3d 1, 9. Its opponents argue that judicial immunity is an infringement on the executive prosecutorial power, absent an express statutory grant that does not exist in California. Thus, the present status of judicially granted immunity as a reliable defense instrument is by no means settled, especially since the court in People v Cooke (1993) 16 CA4th 1361, 1371, 20 CR2d 506, made it clear that, absent a ruling by the California Supreme Court, defendants will be unsuccessful in appeals based on failure to grant judicial immunity. The Cooke court does, however, seem to leave room for defendants to request, and courts to grant, judicial immunity at the trial level, saying that "California courts have exercised their inherent powers to grant use immunity in limited circumstances." 16 CA4th at 1368. Thus, this procedure should not yet be abandoned by practitioners.

See discussion of judicial use immunity in the context of defense-requested immunity in Thorman, Defense-Requested Immunity, 18 CACJ Forum 32 (Mar./Apr. 1991).

§49.15 G. Defense-Initiated Immunity Is Usually Unavailable

The defense does not have the right to obtain immunity from the trial court for a defense witness under Pen C §§1324, 1324.1, or 1099 over the prosecutor's objection. See People v Hunter (1989) 49 C3d 957, 973, 264 CR 367; People v Cooke (1993) 16 CA4th 1361, 1366, 20 CR2d 506; People v Estrada (1986) 176 CA3d 410, 418, 221 CR 922; People v DeFreitas (1983) 140 CA3d 835, 841, 189 CR 814.

The denial of defense witness immunity has been held not to violate the defendant's rights to due process (People v Lucas (1995) 12 C4th 415, 48 CR2d 525), equal protection (People v Traylor (1972) 23 CA3d 323, 332, 100 CR 116), fair trial (In re Marshall K. (1970) 14 CA3d 94, 99, 92 CR 39), or compulsory process, i.e., the right to present and cross-examine witnesses (People v DeFreitas, supra; People v Sutter (1982) 134 CA3d 806, 816, 184 CR 829). Neither §1324 nor the right to present exculpatory testimony extend a correlative right to the defendant to obtain immunity for a defense witness. People v Traylor (1972) 23 CA3d 323, 100 CR 116 (refusal to grant immunity to defense witness does not deny defendant equal protection of the laws); People v Williams (1970) 11 CA3d 1156, 1164, 90 CR 409 (defendant's constitutional rights not violated by trial court's failure to apply §1324).

Thus, when a defense attorney is approached by a victim, codefendant, or other witness, who possesses evidence that may exculpate the defendant or is crucial to his or her cause but will not testify unless granted immunity, defense counsel's only options are judicially granted use immunity (discussed in §49.14) and immunity for a codefendant under Pen C §1100 (discussed in §49.12).

Despite the California rule against defense-initiated immunity, the California Supreme Court and the federal courts have recognized that prosecutorial misconduct and intimidation that cause a witness to invoke the Fifth Amendment may deprive the defendant of the constitutional right to compulsory process. See In re Martin (1987) 44 C3d 1, 30, 241 CR 263, and cases cited therein (habeas granted; district attorney investigator arrested defense witness as he left courtroom, in front of other defense witnesses). The Ninth Circuit has recognized exceptions to the rule when prosecutorial misconduct fundamentally distorts the fact-finding process and results in an unfair trial (see U.S. v Lord (9th Cir 1983) 711 F2d 887, 891; see also Williams v Woodford (9th Cir 2004) 384 F3d 567, 600) or when the prosecution grants immunity to a government witness while denying immunity to a defense witness whose testimony contradicts the government witness (see U.S. v Straub (9th Cir 2008) 538 F3d 1147, 1162 (court should have compelled use-immunity when prosecutor's selective grants of immunity effectively distorted fact-finding); U.S. v Duran (9th Cir 1999) 189 F3d 1071, 1087; U.S. v Westerdahl (9th Cir 1991) 945 F2d 1083, 1086; U.S. v Condo (9th Cir 1984) 741 F2d 238, 239 (trial court properly denied defendant's requested immunity for certain defense witnesses when witnesses were themselves the target of prosecutorial investigation)).

If defense counsel intends to request immunity for a defense witness, he or she must make the motion in the trial court to ensure appellate review. People v Lucas (1995) 12 C4th 415, 460, 48 CR2d 525; People v Sutter (1982) 134 CA3d 806, 813, 184 CR 829. The motion should be in writing and should include an offer of proof stating the type of immunity requested and showing that

- The proffered testimony is clearly exculpatory;
- The testimony is essential; and
- No strong governmental interest countervails against a grant of immunity.

See People v Hunter (1989) 49 C3d 957, 974, 264 CR 367; People v DeFreitas (1983) 140 CA3d 835, 837, 189 CR 814; Government of V.I. v Smith (3d Cir 1980) 615 F2d 964, 972. See also U.S. v Castro (1st Cir 1997) 129 F3d 226, 232 (declining to recognize "effective defense theory" as an exception to rule prohibiting courts from granting immunity to witnesses).

Actions by a law enforcement agent (including an informant) that deliberately seek to obtain incriminating information from a defendant in a criminal case after the right to counsel has attached violate the Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution. See Massiah v U.S. (1964) 377 US 201, 12 L Ed 2d 246, 84 S Ct 1199; U.S. v Henry (1980) 447 US 264, 65 L Ed 2d 115, 100 S Ct 2183. Under Pen C §4001.1(b), in-custody informants working as agents for law enforcement are prohibited from taking any action (other than listening) deliberately designed to elicit incriminating remarks from a defendant. The language of §4001.1(b) is derived from Kuhlmann v Wilson (1986) 477 US 436, 459, 91 L Ed 2d 364, 384, 106 S Ct 2616.

To help ensure that in-custody informants do not fabricate stories, informants who are held within the same correctional institution as defendants may not be paid more than $50 in exchange for their testimony. Pen C §4001.1(a). They may, however, be reimbursed for specified expenses incurred for relocation and for traveling to testify. Pen C §4001.1(a). Notice must be given to the victims of the crime for which the informant is in custody. Pen C §1191.25. There are also special rules concerning discovery and instructions. They are discussed in §17.14.

Despite Pen C §4001.1(b), the existence of a prior working relationship between an informant and the police does not, by itself, establish a violation of the defendant's right to counsel. Nor does a general police policy that encourages inmates to provide useful information to the police violate a defendant's right to counsel. In re Williams (1994) 7 C4th 572, 597, 29 CR2d 64.

§49.17 I. Immunity Under Health & S C §11367 for Informants in Drug Buys

Duly authorized peace officers performing their official duties in investigating violations of Health & S C §§11000-11651 and those working under their immediate direction, supervision, or instruction are immune from prosecution. Health & S C §11367. Police officers, however, are not absolved from all unlawful activities engaged in during such investigations. People v Backus (1979) 23 C3d 360, 382, 152 CR 710 (order setting aside indictment of police officers reversed; Pen C §995 ruling had been based on overly broad reading of §11367).

There is no requirement in the statute that judicial approval of this immunity be obtained.

Ø Note: The immunity applies only to crimes being investigated. See People v Sipress (1975) 51 CA3d 98, 123 CR 884.

§49.18 J. Appellate Review of Immunity Bargain

The trial court's decision to enforce a grant of immunity is subject to appellate review. People v Brunner (1973) 32 CA3d 908, 108 CR 501. The avenue of review depends on when and how the issue was raised in the trial court. If the issue was raised at the preliminary hearing, counsel can seek review under Pen C §995. See People v Bittaker (1989) 48 C3d 1046, 1095, 259 CR 630. Section 995 motions are discussed in chap 13. When the alleged error occurs before or during trial, defense counsel may seek a writ. See, e.g., Nelson v Municipal Court (1972) 28 CA3d 889, 105 CR 46 (writ of prohibition sought before trial). See chap 42 on writs. When there is a trial, the defendant must raise the issue at trial. People v Wisely (1990) 224 CA3d 939, 943, 274 CR 291. After trial, the defense may raise immunity issues through an appeal (see Pen C §§1237, 1466(2)(A)) or, when available, through a writ of habeas corpus (see §§42.22-42.34).

Writ review of immunity rulings is usually not available to prosecutors. People v Superior Court (Howard) (1968) 69 C2d 491, 72 CR 330. In People v Superior Court (Perry) (1989) 213 CA3d 536, 261 CR 665, however, the prosecution's writ petition concerning immunity issues was ruled on by the court of appeal. An appeal may be available under one of the grounds listed in Pen C §§1238, 1466(1). For further discussion of appellate review by prosecutors, see §§43.4, 44.77.

VI. DEFENSE RESPONSE TO GRANT OF IMMUNITY

§49.19 A. Possible Defense Arguments Against Grant of Immunity to Witness to Testify for Prosecution

Improper coercion. When the defense challenges a grant of immunity, it must demonstrate either that the bargain amounts to improper coercion of the immunized witness's testimony or that the bargain has adversely affected the witness's veracity. People v Wisely (1990) 224 CA3d 939, 944, 274 CR 291. A defendant is denied a fair trial if the prosecutor's case depends substantially on accomplice testimony and the accomplice witness is placed, either by the prosecution or the court, under a strong compulsion to testify in a particular fashion, e.g., when the accomplice is granted immunity subject to the condition that his or her testimony substantially conform to an earlier statement given to police, or that the testimony result in the defendant's conviction. See People v Maury (2003) 30 C4th 342, 417, 133 CR2d 561. An agreement requiring only that the witness testify fully and truthfully, however, is valid. People v Badgett (1995) 10 C4th 330, 358, 41 CR2d 635; People v Reyes (2008) 165 CA4th 426, 433, 80 CR3d 619.

Improper conditions on immunity grant. A grant of immunity that requires the witness to testify in a particular way or that is subject to a condition that the witness's testimony result in the defendant's conviction is invalid. People v Sully (1991) 53 C3d 1195, 1216, 283 CR 144. This rule, stated in People v Medina (1974) 41 CA3d 438, 116 CR 133 (condition in plea agreement that witnesses' testimony would be consistent with prior statements made to police was unduly coercive), was endorsed by the California Supreme Court in People v Fields (1983) 35 C3d 329, 361, 197 CR 803. See also People v Knox (1979) 95 CA3d 420, 430, 157 CR 238 (agreement that in return for witness's testimony he would not be prosecuted for murder "provided that he was not the triggerman" held not to put witness under a "strong compulsion to testify in a particular fashion").

California courts have been reluctant to extend this principle to other arguably coercive conditions. See, e.g., People v Gurule (2002) 28 C4th 557, 616, 123 CR2d 345 (immunity agreement conditioned on absence of new evidence showing that accomplice was actual killer was not unduly coercive); People v Sully, supra (requirement that witness pass polygraph not unduly coercive); People v Bittaker (1989) 48 C3d 1046, 1093, 259 CR 630 (plea agreement giving district attorney right to determine whether witness testified truthfully, followed by trial court review of his decision, not unduly coercive); People v Meza (1981) 116 CA3d 988, 172 CR 531 (agreement giving defendant's cellmate 50-50 chance of lenient sentence if testimony was beneficial to prosecution not unduly coercive); People v Sepeda (1977) 66 CA3d 700, 136 CR 119 (agreement with paid informer, which provided that he would be paid only if his testimony at all trials was consistent with statements given to the police and grand jury, was disapproved by court but remedied by strong corroborating evidence).

Choosing one codefendant or another. Another factual basis for challenging immunity bargains is that the prosecutor unfairly chose one codefendant for the immunity grant. Although the prosecutor's ability to select the person who is granted immunity is not unconstitutional (People v Boehm (1969) 270 CA2d 13, 20, 75 CR 590), criteria do exist to guide the prosecutor's discretion in the selection process. See California District Attorneys Association, Uniform Crime Charging Standards 44 (1996). Counsel should compare the attributes of the codefendants with these criteria to show unfair or unequal law enforcement.

Certain drug cases. In drug cases, the prosecution may seek immunity for informants participating in a drug buy under Health & S C §11367. Defense counsel may challenge the immunity if it goes beyond the statute's guidelines. See People v Sipress (1975) 51 CA3d 98, 123 CR 884 (informant properly refused to answer questions about defense theory because informant's answers might have incriminated him and would not have been covered by immunity conferred by §11367).

In-custody informants. Special rules apply to immunity grants involving in-custody informants held in the same correctional institution as the defendant. For discussion, see §§17.14, 49.16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§49.20 B. Defense Right to Discovery

Once defense counsel learns of a prosecutor's request for witness immunity, he or she should request judicial permission to appear at all hearings at which the terms of the immunity bargain will be subjected to judicial review. The request will probably be refused because the defense has no clear right to receive notice of or be present at immunity hearings. Compare People v Randolph (1970) 4 CA3d 655, 660, 84 CR 559 (witness immunity hearing was not a "critical stage" of proceeding and did not concern defendant), with People v Boehm (1969) 270 CA2d 13, 20, 75 CR 590 (court recognized that circumstances might be presented in which defendant might be prejudiced by absence from conference at which immunity is granted to codefendant; no such prejudice found here).

Ø Note: The defense should use discovery to try to unearth all the uses to be made of the immunized testimony.

Once trial begins, the prosecutor must disclose to the defense and jury any inducements made to prosecution witnesses in exchange for trial testimony. People v Westmoreland (1976) 58 CA3d 32, 46, 129 CR 554.

Similarly, when two or more persons are accused of complicity in the same offense, and when the prosecutor plans to call one of them as a prosecution witness (see Pen C §1099), the prosecutor must disclose to the remaining defendants all offers made to the prospective witness such as guilty pleas to lesser offenses or any other lenient treatment. The prosecution must also disclose all discussions with the potential witness on the possibility of leniency in exchange for testimony, even if no offer was actually made or accepted. People v Westmoreland (1976) 58 CA3d 32, 47, 129 CR 554. Moreover, the prosecuting attorney must correct any false or misleading impression that he or she knows a prosecution witness has created concerning discussions or offers of leniency, or other inducements for testifying, regardless of whether the prosecutor had any affirmative part in creating the false or misleading impression. People v Westmoreland, supra; Giglio v U.S. (1972) 405 US 150, 154, 31 L Ed 2d 104, 108, 92 S Ct 763. Failure to do so denies the defense access to material evidence, which can result in the denial of a fair trial. See People v Ruthford (1975) 14 C3d 399, 406, 121 CR 261, overruled on other grounds in In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 545, 37 CR2d 446. See also Pen C §§1127a, 1191.25, 4001.1 (jailhouse informant legislation); People v Badgett (1995) 10 C4th 330, 41 CR2d 635 (rule stated but no denial found on facts). Whether there have been other grants of immunity should be checked (e.g., Govt C §§9410, 18676-18677; Ins C §12924(b); Wat C §1106; Welf & I C §§300, 355.1(d); Corp C §25531(e); Cal Rules of Ct 5.548).

Ø Note: Defense counsel should request discovery of this information before trial. If the immunity grant was put in writing, that writing should probably be given to the defense as part of pretrial discovery. See Pen C §1054.1(d)-(f).

In cases involving in-custody informants who give immunized testimony based on statements made by the defendant while both the defendant and the informant were within the same correctional institution, the prosecution is required to give the defense, before trial, a statement that sets out all consideration promised to or received by the in-custody informant. Pen C §1127a(c). "Consideration" is defined by Pen C §1127a(d) to mean "any plea bargain, bail consideration, reduction or modification of sentence, or any other leniency, benefit, immunity, financial assistance, reward, or amelioration of current or future conditions of incarceration in return for, or in connection with, the informant's testimony." This statement must also be given to the trial court by the prosecution when the immunized witness is called to the stand. Pen C §1127a(c).

Defense counsel who objects to an immunity grant should consider a pretrial writ petition. See §49.18.

§49.21 1. Suggested Areas for Defense Discovery Requests, and for Defense Questioning at Immunity Bargain Hearing, Trial, or Both

The following are suggested areas for defense discovery requests, and for defense questioning at an immunity bargain hearing, trial, or both:

- Prior convictions and present criminal cases that were or will be dismissed or reduced in exchange for testimony or other services. See Evid C §780(e)-(f).
- Information on the arrest of the witness that resulted in these charges and the witness's culpability in the case. See Evid C §780(e)-(f); People v Lyons (1958) 50 C2d 245, 265, 324 P2d 556 (dictum: this type of information is material on issue of credibility, and as such was used to challenge witness's testimony).
- Information on all police contacts the witness has had since the date of the arrest in the case. See Hoover v Maryland (4th Cir 1983) 714 F2d 301 (relevant to extent of witness's illegal activities, which might be forgiven for testifying for prosecution).
- Names and arrest information on persons the witness has testified against in other proceedings, and names and arrest information on persons who have been set up for arrest by this witness. See Evid C §§780, 785-786, 1100-1101, 1103.
- Any grounds on which the witness's competency might be attacked. See Evid C §§701-702; People v St. Andrew (1980) 101 CA3d 450, 161 CR 634. See also People v Castro (1979) 99 CA3d 191, 203, 160 CR 156 (defense elicited from informer on cross-examination that informer was paid by police, was a heroin addict, and had prior felony convictions).
- Questioning about possibility of existence of other crimes, either state or federal, not covered by the immunity grant, that may be admissible to impeach the witness.

Ø Note: An immunized witness may not be compelled to testify to possible criminal involvement that is not covered by the immunity. People v Label (1974) 43 CA3d 766, 774, 119 CR 522.

§49.22 2. Cross-Examination During Trial

Defense counsel is entitled to a copy of the transcript of the immunity hearing and to cross-examine at trial a witness who has been granted immunity to testify. See People v Boehm (1969) 270 CA2d 13, 20, 75 CR 590. Permitted questions include the nature of the charges pending against the witness, the amount of imprisonment that could result from those charges, the witness's subjective understanding of his or her bargain with the prosecutor, and any assistance to the witness by the prosecution in a criminal case subsequent to the immunity grant. People v Rodriguez (1986) 42 C3d 730, 749, 230 CR 667; Hoover v Maryland (4th Cir 1983) 714 F2d 301. See also People v Boehm, supra (can be inferred from opinion that these questions were asked). For sample questions, see §49.21.

Ø Note: Defense counsel may be able to impeach the witness with the witness's written summary of testimony, which is usually given to the prosecutor as part of the immunity bargain.

When an in-custody informant, as defined by Pen C §1127a(a), is called to testify, defense counsel can use the statement that sets out the consideration received by the informant for purposes of cross-examination. See Pen C §1127a(c), discussed in §§17.14, 49.16.

§49.23 3. Instructions

If an immunized witness is an in-custody informant, as defined by Pen C §1127a(a), the defense, on request, is entitled to a cautionary instruction telling the jury to view the witness's testimony "with caution and close scrutiny." See Pen C §1127a(b); CALCRIM 336. The trial court is not required to give cautionary instructions on the testimony of other witnesses testifying under plea bargains or grants of immunity, even on request. People v Hunter (1989) 49 C3d 957, 977, 264 CR 367. Consequently, there are no pattern instructions on witnesses who have been granted immunity; counsel must prepare his or her own. In People v Castro (1979) 99 CA3d 191, 196, 160 CR 156, the defense requested the following instruction from the trial court:

> The testimony of an informer who provides evidence against the defendant for pay or for immunity from punishment, or for personal advantage or vindication, must be examined and weighed by the jury with greater care than the testimony of an ordinary witness. The jury must determine whether the informer's testimony has been affected by interest or by prejudice against defendant.

Although the trial court refused to give this instruction, and the appellate court found any error to be harmless, this does not mean that individual trial judges will uniformly refuse similar instructions. See §§32.24-32.27 on tailored instructions generally. CALCRIM 336 can also be used as a model. For other examples of defense instructions on immunity, see People v Harvey (1984) 163 CA3d 90, 112, 208 CR 910; Rucker & Overland, California Criminal Practice, Motions, Jury Instructions and Sentencing §44.30 (3d ed 2004) (need to treat testimony of immunized informant with mistrust; motive to falsify when giving immunized testimony; standard of credibility of immunized witness's testimony).

The general posttrial instruction on witness credibility is CALCRIM 226. See also CALCRIM 105; People v Hampton (1999) 73 CA4th 710, 721, 86 CR2d 665. CALCRIM 226 allows the jury to consider whether a witness was promised immunity or leniency in exchange for his or her testimony when evaluating a witness's testimony. The court has a sua sponte duty to instruct on factors, including promised immunity or leniency, relevant to a witness's credibility. People v Rincon-Pineda (1975) 14 C3d 864, 883, 123 CR 119; Evid C §780(e), (i), (k). If the witness who was granted immunity was an accomplice, the court must give the instruction that an accomplice's testimony must be corroborated. See CALCRIM 334, 335. If there is only one witness, defense counsel can request the instruction that the testimony of one witness is sufficient for proof but should be carefully reviewed. See CALCRIM 301.

In a case in which the jury knows that an unjoined accomplice has received immunity to testify, defense counsel should oppose a request for the instruction that a jury cannot speculate on the prosecutor's reason for not prosecuting others. See CALCRIM 373. The California Supreme Court stated on several occasions that when the prosecution is relying on the immunized testimony of unjoined accomplices (see, e.g., People v Lawley (2002) 27 C4th 102, 162, 115 CR2d 614), CALJIC 2.11.5 (now see CALCRIM 373) should be omitted or clarified. Many defense lawyers opined that giving CALJIC 2.11.5 in this situation could be very prejudicial to the defendant. The high court, however, declined to characterize giving CALJIC 2.11.5 in these circumstances as error and has consistently held that no prejudice occurs as long as a reasonable juror understands that he or she should consider criminal activity of a witness who is not being prosecuted in the current trial. People v Lawley, supra; People v Fonseca (2003) 105 CA4th 543, 129 CR2d 513.

§49.24 VII. WAIVER OF PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION OR OF IMMUNITY BY IMMUNIZED WITNESS

Waiver of privilege. A witness may waive the privilege against self-incrimination. Mitchell v U.S. (1999) 526 US 314, 321, 143 L Ed 2d 424, 433, 119 S Ct 1307; People v Williams (2008) 43 C4th 584, 615, 75 CR3d 691. In that event, the witness is not entitled to immunity. People v St. Joseph (1990) 226 CA3d 289, 298 n3, 276 CR 498.

Waiver of immunity. When an immunized witness asserts the Fifth Amendment and refuses to testify after having been granted immunity, and this refusal amounts to a repudiation of the immunity agreement, the witness may be held to have waived the claim to immunity. See People v Brunner (1973) 32 CA3d 908, 917, 108 CR 501. When the witness testifies favorably to the prosecution but in a later proceeding invokes his or her privilege against self-incrimination, the court must decide whether the People received the benefit of the bargain. 32 CA3d at 916. A sample prosecution petition to compel a witness to testify under Pen C §1324 is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §49.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

VIII. PROSECUTION OF WITNESSES WHO HAVE RECEIVED IMMUNITY

§49.25 A. When Prosecution Is Possible

Witness waived privilege or immunity grant. Prosecution of a witness who has been given immunity is possible when the witness waived the privilege against self-incrimination or the immunity grant. See §49.24.

Immunized witness. Whether prosecution of an immunized witness is possible depends on several factors. Assuming that the witness satisfactorily complied with the immunity grant, the requirements differ depending on whether use or transactional immunity was granted. If use immunity was granted, the witness is protected only from use of his or her compelled testimony, and evidence derived directly or indirectly from it. U.S. v Montoya (9th Cir 1995) 45 F3d 1286; People v DeFreitas (1983) 140 CA3d 835, 837, 189 CR 814. If transactional immunity was granted, the prosecution is precluded from charging the witness with any crime related to any matter about which the witness testified. People v DeFreitas, supra. The scope of immunity varies, depending on the statute involved. See §49.20.

A witness who testified previously under a grant of immunity who is subsequently prosecuted need only show that he or she testified under a grant of immunity in order to shift to the government a heavy burden of proving that all of the evidence it proposes to use was derived from legitimate independent sources. U.S. v Mendoza (9th Cir 1996) 78 F3d 460, 464. The witness's/defendant's burden in proving the breach of an immunity contract is only by a preponderance of the evidence. 78 F3d at 465.

Two procedures protect against the improper use of immunized testimony. First, privileged material is redacted from the witness's statements by prosecutors who are not involved in the new investigation before they are given to prosecutors in the new case, or presented to the grand jury. In re Grand Jury Subpoena (9th Cir 1996) 75 F3d 446, 448. Second, a Kastigar hearing must be held (Kastigar v U.S. (1972) 406 US 441, 32 L Ed 2d 212, 92 S Ct 1653). At that hearing, the government bears a heavy burden of proving a legitimate independent source. In re Grand Jury Subpoena (9th Cir 1996) 75 F3d 446. See U.S. v McDaniel (8th Cir 1973) 482 F2d 305 (showing of independent source of evidence was insufficient because prosecutor had requested and read immunized testimony); U.S. v Henderson (D Del 1975) 406 F Supp 417 (indictment not dismissed although prosecutor was familiar with immunized testimony because that same evidence, obtained from independent sources, would have been presented to grand jury in any event); Griego v Superior Court (2000) 80 CA4th 568, 95 CR2d 351 (defendant's criminal complaint dismissed because prosecution inadvertently bestowed transactional immunity on defendant for subsequent known but uncharged criminal activity by asking him questions pertaining to that particular act during deposition in which defendant had transactional immunity); People v Lawrence (1972) 25 CA3d 498, 102 CR 16 (conviction for conspiracy to murder upheld even though defendant had federal immunity for related facts because subsequent murder charge was completely separate transaction not known by authorities at time of testimony).

No per se rule exists, however, prohibiting prosecuting attorneys from seeing or screening privileged evidence. In re Grand Jury Subpoena, supra. When a person is compelled to testify against himself or herself under a grant of immunity and is later prosecuted, the government may protect against a claim of indirect use by assigning the case to prosecutors not exposed to earlier testimony, and by barring communication between them and prosecutors who obtained the compelled testimony. A detailed declaration filed by the government establishing that the indictment rested entirely on sources independent of the defendant's immunized testimony may suffice. U.S. v Montoya (9th Cir 1995) 45 F3d 1286, 1294.

Major unanswered questions exist concerning whether nonevidentiary uses of immunized testimony are allowed. Nonevidentiary uses include assistance in focusing the investigation, refusing to plea bargain, developing opening and closing arguments, and otherwise planning trial strategy.

If the new prosecution is challenged, the prosecutor should be able to produce a summary of the anticipated testimony to be used against the defendant, and its sources and date of receipt.

It is common for prosecutors and police investigators who will work on a case against a previously immunized witness to refuse to see the witness's prior testimony. The prosecutor and investigator may wish to file affidavits or declarations to that effect with the court. See People v Lawrence (1972) 25 CA3d 498, 510, 102 CR 16.

§49.26 B. Raising Immunity as Defense to Prosecution

Once-in-jeopardy plea. If immunity was granted under Pen C §1099 or §1100, the defendant is considered to have been acquitted (see §49.13), and should enter a plea of once in jeopardy (see §§26.23-26.28).

When to raise as motion. If a witness with any other type of immunity is later prosecuted and wishes to raise the defense of immunity, the claim can be asserted at the preliminary hearing (see chap 8) and, if denied, can be challenged by a Pen C §995 motion (see chap 13). People v Backus (1979) 23 C3d 360, 368, 152 CR 710; People v King (1967) 66 C2d 633, 645, 58 CR 571. This defense can also be raised as a common law motion to dismiss. People v Brunner (1973) 32 CA3d 908, 108 CR 501.

Ø Note: The prosecutor can ignore an unfavorable legal ruling at the preliminary hearing and add the count in the superior court information (Jones v Superior Court (1971) 4 C3d 660, 666, 94 CR 289) or can challenge the ruling in superior court under Pen C §871.5. For further discussion of these prosecutorial options, see §§13.32-13.38.

Procedures on common law motion to dismiss. At the hearing on the motion, the defendant has the burden of establishing that he or she testified under a grant of immunity. Once the defendant proves the immunity grant, the burden shifts to the government to prove that the crime against the witness is outside the immunity grant. Kastigar v U.S. (1972) 406 US 441, 460, 32 L Ed 2d 212, 226, 92 S Ct 1653). See also the discussion in §9.12.

§49.27 IX. WITNESS'S LIABILITY TO PROSECUTION IN OTHER JURISDICTIONS

When the state grants immunity to a witness, any compelled testimony given by that witness in the state prosecution, and its fruits, cannot be used by the federal government in investigating and prosecuting a crime against that witness (i.e., use immunity). See Murphy v Waterfront Comm'n (1964) 378 US 52, 79, 12 L Ed 2d 678, 84 S Ct 1594 (witnesses granted immunity under state law refused to answer questions that might incriminate them under federal law; court held that federal government was prohibited from using testimony and its fruits in criminal prosecution against witnesses); Nelson v Municipal Court (1972) 28 CA3d 889, 892, 105 CR 46 (witness in state court took Fifth despite transactional immunity grant under Pen C §1324, arguing that he was subject to prosecution in federal courts; court said witness required to testify even though his federal protection would be limited to use immunity).

Informal nonjudicial immunity agreements with California law enforcement or prosecutors will not suffice to create immunity under Murphy, which will leave the state-immunized person vulnerable to a federal prosecution that uses the state-immunized statements or information against the person. Similarly, state prosecutors are not bound by federal informal immunity. The scope of federal informal immunity is determined by the agreement between the prosecutor and witness and is governed by principles of contract law. U.S. v Plummer (9th Cir 1991) 941 F2d 799, 802. The separate sovereigns need not respect an agreement made by the other with a third party. Therefore, a witness who supplies testimony in exchange for federal informal immunity is vulnerable to state prosecution. See 18 US NITA 6003 (2009 Commentary, National Institute for Trial Advocacy).

When the possibility of "foreign jurisdiction" (e.g., federal) prosecution exists, careful attention to the state immunity procedure is required. U.S. v Camp (9th Cir 1995) 72 F3d 759 (state letter immunity "pursuant to" Montana immunity statute insufficient to prevent use of state-immunized material by federal court when defendant did not first invoke his right against self-incrimination). A question arises in Camp's wake: Will California courts take the same view in the reverse situation in which federal informal immunity has been first granted?

A witness may not invoke the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination solely on the basis of the possibility of prosecution by a foreign country. In U.S. v Balsys (1998) 524 US 666, 141 L Ed 2d 575, 118 S Ct 2218, the defendant witness (a suspected Nazi collaborator) claimed Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination because of his fear that testimony elicited from him in his deportation hearing could be used in criminal prosecution by other countries of his wartime activities. The U.S. Supreme Court held that the defendant's asserted fear of foreign criminal prosecution based on his testimony was beyond the scope of the Fifth Amendment.

§50.1 I. OVERVIEW

Extradition between states is guaranteed by US Const art IV, §2(2), which has been implemented by 18 USC §3182 (referred to in this chapter as the "Federal Act"). However, the Federal Act is somewhat limited in scope. For example, it does not provide for extradition of someone who, while in one state, commits an act resulting in a crime in another state, or establish procedures for the arrest and detention of a fugitive before the issuance of a Governor's warrant (a formal demand for return of the fugitive by the governor of the state seeking extradition), waiver of extradition, or judicial review of extradition procedures. Because the Federal Act has been held to be nonexclusive, the states are free to enact statutes expanding the scope of interstate extradition. New York v O'Neill (1959) 359 US 1, 3 L Ed 2d 585, 79 S Ct 564; South Dakota v Brown (1978) 20 C3d 765, 771, 144 CR 758. Accordingly, almost all the states and territories, as well as the District of Columbia, have enacted the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act (UCEA), or variations of it, using it as a model. See 11 Uniform Laws Annotated.

The scope of the UCEA goes beyond that of the Federal Act. See Pen C §§1547-1558. Under the UCEA, California must honor a request for extradition even if the demanding state has not enacted similar provisions; reciprocity is not required. In re Morgan (1948) 86 CA2d 217, 194 P2d 800. The UCEA was intended to facilitate extradition, not to make it more difficult than under federal law. See People ex rel Schank v Gerace (App Div 1997) 661 NYS2d 403; State v Luster (Fla 1992) 596 So2d 454.

Generally, a suspected fugitive is arrested on the basis of a demanding state's warrant charging the suspect with a crime. The prosecutor in the "asylum" state may then file a "fugitive complaint" against the suspect. When that occurs, the suspect is arraigned and held in custody or admitted to bail pending issuance of the Governor's warrant. The fugitive may deny the allegations in the complaint or waive formal extradition at this time.

Meanwhile, the prosecutor in the demanding state assembles the appropriate extradition papers, which are submitted to the governor of the demanding state. If the papers are approved as to form by the Attorney General, the governor of the demanding state submits a requisition, or formal demand, accompanied by the supporting documents, to the governor of the asylum state. The governor of the asylum state after review by his or her office and the office of the state Attorney General then issues a warrant of extradition that commands the arrest and rendition of the fugitive. The fugitive is then arraigned on the Governor's warrant and, on request, given the opportunity to challenge its validity by habeas corpus.

Although there is a judicial procedure for the arrest and detention of a fugitive pending issuance of a Governor's warrant, as well as a procedure for limited judicial review, extradition is intended to be a summary executive function. Michigan v Doran (1978) 439 US 282, 288, 58 L Ed 2d 521, 99 S Ct 530; In re Golden (1977) 65 CA3d 789, 135 CR 512. Extradition may be challenged before the Governor's warrant is issued at an identity hearing in the trial court or, in rare nonfugitive cases (see §50.4), at a Governor's hearing. After the warrant is issued, extradition may be challenged by habeas corpus. If the challenge is unsuccessful, the appropriate agency in the demanding state is notified and sends its agents to return the fugitive to the demanding state.

In addition to formal extradition, there are several other types of interstate rendition. The Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (Fam C §§4900-5005) provides a means by which a person may be compelled to abide by his or her support obligation, including involuntary removal to a state where he or she may be charged with criminal nonsupport. The Interstate Compact for Adult Offender Supervision (Pen C §§11180-11181), provides an administrative procedure for the return of probationers or parolees who are under another state's supervision. See §50.48.

The Agreement on Detainers (Pen C §§1389-1389.8, sometimes called the Interstate Agreement on Detainers) is a compact that provides for the administrative transfer of prisoners from one jurisdiction to another jurisdiction that has criminal charges pending against the prisoner. Its basic purpose is to protect the speedy trial rights of both the prisoner and the prosecutor and to dispose of detainers so as to minimize disruption of the prisoner's rehabilitation program. See §50.49.

The Uniform Act to Secure the Attendance of Witnesses From Without the State in Criminal Cases (Pen C §§1334-1334.6) sets forth a means by which both prosecution and defense witnesses who are located outside the state may be compelled to appear in criminal trials within the state. See §50.50.

The Interstate Compact for Juveniles (Welf & I C §§1400-1403) provides an alternative to extradition of juveniles who are accused of a crime. It also establishes a means for compelling the return of runaways or other wards who have not been accused or found guilty of criminal conduct. Finally, it provides for interstate parole or probation supervision of juveniles. See §50.51.

III. UNIFORM CRIMINAL EXTRADITION ACT (UCEA)

A. Persons Subject to Extradition

§50.3 1. Fugitives

Anyone who, while present in the demanding state, commits a crime there and is subsequently found in any other state is a "fugitive from justice" and is subject to extradition, regardless of the reason for the person's departure from the state of the crime. Appleyard v Massachusetts (1906) 203 US 222, 227, 51 L Ed 161, 163, 27 S Ct 122. The motive for the person's departure is irrelevant (In re Murdock (1936) 5 C2d 644, 55 P2d 843), as is the fact that he or she may have left involuntarily (Pen C §1549; In re Patterson (1966) 64 C2d 357, 364, 49 CR 801). See New Mexico ex rel Ortiz v Reed (1998) 524 US 151, 141 L Ed 2d 131, 118 S Ct 1860; White v Armontrout (8th Cir 1994) 29 F3d 357, 359 (person need not have knowledge of charges); Marini v Gibson (Ga 1996) 478 SE2d 767.

§50.4 2. Nonfugitives: Crime in Demanding State Occurred in California or in Another State

The Uniform Criminal Extradition Act (UCEA) (Pen C §§1547-1558) provides that someone who commits an act in California or in a state other than the demanding state that intentionally results in a crime in the demanding state may be extradited. Pen C §1549.1.

§50.5 3. Juveniles

Juveniles who are alleged to have committed a crime are treated like adults for purposes of extradition, except that they must be detained in an appropriate juvenile facility if one is available, with some specified exceptions. Welf & I C §216. See §50.51.

§50.6 B. Only Persons Charged With Crime Are Subject to Extradition

Only persons charged with crimes are subject to extradition. For purposes of the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act (UCEA) (Pen C §§1547-1558), a person can be "charged" with a crime without the institution of formal adversary judicial proceedings. See Pen C §1548.2 (the extradition demand may be accompanied by indictment, information, or affidavit before a magistrate in the demanding state).

Persons "charged" with crimes include individuals (1) convicted and alleged to have escaped from confinement, (2) charged with a crime who violated the terms of bail, (3) on probation or parole who violated the terms of their probation or parole, and (4) who have not satisfied the criminal judgment against them. See In re Fedder (1956) 143 CA2d 103, 299 P2d 881. A crime need not be a felony to be an "extraditable" offense (Pen C §1548.1) nor is it necessary that the offense be a crime under the law of the asylum state. Appleyard v Massachusetts (1906) 203 US 222, 51 L Ed 161, 27 S Ct 122. The charge must simply state an offense under the laws of the demanding state. It is sufficient if the crime is stated in the language of the statute. In re Brown (1929) 102 CA 97, 282 P 538, citing Ex parte Reggel (1885) 114 US 642, 29 L Ed 250, 5 S Ct 1148.

C. Proceedings Before Governor's Warrant Issues

§50.7 1. Arrest of Suspected Fugitive

A suspected fugitive may be arrested in California with or without an arrest warrant before any formal demand is made by the governor of another state. Pen C §§1551, 1551.1; see Ex parte Rosenblat (1876) 51 C 285. An arrest made without a warrant must be on reasonable information that the person is charged in another state with an offense punishable by death or imprisonment for more than 1 year, or that the person has been convicted of such an offense and thereafter escaped or violated the terms of bail, probation, or parole. When arrested without a warrant, the accused must be brought before a magistrate "with all practicable speed" (see §50.8), and a complaint must be filed charging him or her in accordance with Pen C §1551. Pen C §1551.1.

A person may also be arrested on a "fugitive warrant." These are issued by a California magistrate on seeing either a verified complaint or an unverified complaint based on the affidavit of a credible person from another state. Pen C §1551. In the latter instance, the complaint must charge that the accused is a fugitive from justice in that the person has been charged with a crime or convicted of a crime in another state and has escaped from confinement or violated the conditions of his or her bail, probation, or parole. In the former case, the verified complaint need only charge that the person committed a crime in another state, or was convicted. Pen C §1551.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.8 2. Arraignment

The accused must be taken before a magistrate with "all practicable speed." Pen C §1551.1. The magistrate should perform the following functions at the defendant's first appearance:

- Inform the accused of the reason for the arrest (Pen C §1551.2);
- Inform the accused of his or her right to demand and procure counsel (Pen C §1551.2);
- Inform the accused that he or she has the right to waive extradition (see §50.45);
- Ask the accused if he or she wishes to waive extradition;
- Ask the accused if he or she wants to admit the facts and that he or she is the person named in the warrant;
- Schedule a hearing within 10 calendar days if the accused denies being the same person named in the fugitive complaint or denies being charged with or convicted of a crime in the demanding state; and
- Fix bail, if appropriate, under Pen C §§1552-1552.1 (see §50.9).

Ø Warning: Defense counsel appearing at arraignment should not give the defendant's name to the court during that appearance. Counsel should state only that he or she is appearing "on behalf of the alleged fugitive." The reason for not using the defendant's name is that naming the client may itself be an admission of identity, which is one of the few issues that can be challenged. See §50.10.

Although the accused has a statutory right to counsel in extradition proceedings, the commencement of extradition proceedings does not trigger the attachment of the constitutional right to counsel. People v Wheelock (2004) 117 CA4th 561, 11 CR3d 796. The court in Wheelock pointed out that, under Massiah v U.S. (1964) 377 US 201, 12 L Ed 2d 246, 84 S Ct 1199, the Sixth Amendment right to counsel with respect to the underlying charge attaches only when formal adversarial judicial proceedings begin on that charge. The court therefore rejected the defendant's claim that questioning by police in the absence of his attorney for the extradition proceedings was a Massiah violation. People v Wheelock (2004) 117 CA4th 561, 565, 11 CR3d 796.

§50.9 3. Bail Before Governor's Warrant Served

A person arrested as a suspected fugitive may be admitted to bail before the service of the Governor's warrant unless the charged offense is punishable by death or life imprisonment or unless the accused is alleged to have escaped or violated the terms of his or her parole following conviction of a crime punishable by imprisonment for more than 1 year in the demanding state. Pen C §1552.1. See In re Walton (2002) 99 CA4th 934, 122 CR2d 87 (escaped fugitive may not be granted bail but must be held in custody pending service of Governor's rendition warrant under Pen C §1552.1). See also §50.13 on bail when the Governor's warrant is not issued within 30 calendar days after the commitment order.

4. Identity Hearing (Also Called Probable Cause or Pen C §1551.2 Hearing)

§50.10 a. When Required; Time Limits

A magistrate must hold a hearing, called an identity, probable cause, or Pen C §1551.2 hearing, if the alleged fugitive denies being the person charged with or convicted of a crime in the demanding state. Pen C §1551.2. The hearing must be held within 10 calendar days after arraignment. Pen C §§1550.1, 1551.2.

Ø Note: If the hearing is not held within 10 calendar days, defense counsel might want to ask for a dismissal, although there is no authority for this remedy in Pen C §§1550.1 and 1551.2.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.11 b. Procedures at Identity Hearing

To establish the charge or conviction, the magistrate must accept as conclusive proof of its contents a certified copy of an indictment, information, verified complaint, judgment, sentence, or other judicial proceeding against the accused. These documents are not the only evidence that may be accepted to prove the essential facts. The magistrate, however, may not require witnesses from the demanding state to be present. Pen C §1551.2.

It is unclear whether the Evidence Code applies to extradition proceedings. This question is most relevant to the key issue: whether there is probable cause to believe that the person arrested is in fact the fugitive. Defense counsel will usually want to argue that the Evidence Code applies, on the basis of Evid C §300. The prosecutor will usually maintain that California should follow the majority rule in the United States. Other jurisdictions have overwhelmingly held that the formal rules of evidence do not apply in extradition proceedings. See, e.g., Munsey v Clough (1905) 196 US 364, 49 L Ed 515, 25 S Ct 282; In re Mahan (Neb 1982) 319 NW2d 760; Commonwealth v Rowe (Pa 1979) 398 A2d 1060; Shields v State (Md 1970) 263 A2d 565; State v Rosati (RI 1991) 594 A2d 885; Smith v Idaho (9th Cir 1967) 373 F2d 149, 154.

If the rules of evidence do not apply and the magistrate looks to what other jurisdictions do, the prosecutor can make a prima facie showing of identity by submitting an affidavit from the demanding state incorporating a photograph, fingerprint card, or both, or merely by showing that the name of the accused is the same as the person named on the fugitive complaint and extradition documents. See, e.g., Munsey v Clough (1905) 196 US 364, 372, 49 L Ed 515, 25 S Ct 282; Dovel v Adams (Neb 1981) 301 NW2d 102, 103; Reeves v Cox (NH 1978) 385 A2d 847, 850; Shields v State (Md 1970) 263 A2d 565, 568.

If the rules of evidence do apply, the prosecutor can usually have records that establish identity admitted most easily as official records under the state or public entity exception in Evid C §1530. They must be properly authenticated. See Evid C §§1401, 1452-1454. For further discussion, see Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 36 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000).

Defense counsel should focus on whether the records the prosecutor seeks to introduce are admissible. If the rules of evidence apply, this usually means combating admission of documents under either the official records or business records exception to the hearsay rule. The demanding state often fails to provide the affidavit of the custodian of records, which is required under both Evidence Code sections. There may be other reasons as well that the records sent do not qualify for admission into evidence under the California Evidence Code. For discussion of the business record and official record exceptions to the hearsay rule, including requirements, objections, and sample questions, see Effective Intro of Evidence, chaps 11, 13, 36.

Either attorney can subpoena witnesses to testify. For example, defense counsel may wish to have an expert compare the defendant's fingerprints with those sent by the demanding state and testify at the identity hearing if they do not match the defendant's prints. Witnesses are not usually presented, however, because Pen C §1551.2 states that witnesses from other states are not to be required to attend the hearing.

In some cases, the person being sought was never booked or fingerprinted in the demanding state. Proof of identity in these cases often consists of a photograph and an affidavit. Defense counsel may argue that these are not adequately connected to the defendant.

Ø Note: Defendant's silence or statements made at the extradition hearing may be admissible in the demanding state. See People v Jaspal (1991) 234 CA3d 1446, 286 CR 337.

Once a prima facie showing has been made, the accused bears the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence that he or she is not the person named. Miller v Debekker (Colo 1983) 668 P2d 927; State v Perrera (Fla 1983) 443 So2d 1016. Arguments against extradition are discussed in §50.19.

Ø Note: Whether the accused is guilty or innocent of the crime charged in the demanding state may not be inquired into at this or any other stage of the extradition proceedings in the asylum state. Pen C §1553.2; In re Golden (1977) 65 CA3d 789, 135 CR 512. See also California v Superior Court (Smolin) (1987) 482 US 400, 96 L

Ed 2d 332, 107 S Ct 2433; Michigan v Doran (1978) 439 US 282, 58 L Ed 2d 521, 99 S Ct 530.

§50.12 c. Effect of Dismissal

It is unclear whether an accused fugitive who has been discharged because of a violation of the 10-day time limit for holding an identity hearing (see §50.10) may be rearrested on the same fugitive warrant. Although it seems that the two/three dismissal rule of Pen C §§1387-1387.1 should apply because of the similarity between the conditions that give rise to the dismissal in each case, no case has so held. But see §50.13.

Defense counsel should ask the court to release a fugitive on O.R. if the fugitive has been rearrested after a dismissal under the 10-day rule.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.13 5. Commitment Order; Arrest on Governor's Warrant

If the court finds probable cause to believe that the accused is the same person named in the fugitive complaint and that the person is charged with or has been convicted of a crime in the demanding state, the court must issue an order committing the person to custody for up to 30 calendar days to allow time for the issuance of a Governor's warrant. Pen C §1552.

If the person is otherwise eligible for bail (see §50.9), the court may continue bail or set new bail. Pen C §1552.1.

Ø Note: If the defendant is committed to custody to wait for the Governor's warrant, defense counsel should be sure to request an order from the court that the alleged fugitive not be extradited without further order of the court. This request should be renewed at each court appearance.

At the end of 30 calendar days, if the defendant has not been arrested on the Governor's warrant, the court may either release the defendant or continue the matter for up to an additional 60 calendar days to allow more time for the warrant to issue. Pen C §1552.2. If the case is continued beyond the 30-day period, a judge of the superior court or a justice of the court of appeal or the California Supreme Court may again set bail. Pen C §1552.2. If the Governor's warrant has not been issued by the end of the 90-day period, the fugitive complaint may be dismissed. However, there is no prohibition against a new fugitive complaint being filed, or the direct arrest of the defendant on the Governor's warrant if a new complaint is not filed (see Pen C §§1549.3, 1552.1; In re Bembry (Okla 1995) 907 P2d 1076).

The 30- and 60-day deadlines do not apply if the defendant is also charged with a crime committed in California. Pen C §1553.1(b).

D. Procedures to Secure Governor's Warrant

§50.14 1. Documents Needed to Support Extradition Warrant; Required Contents of Requisition

Before the governor of the asylum state may issue an extradition warrant, he or she must receive these items:

- A formal written demand for extradition (called a requisition) from the executive authority of the demanding state (Pen C §1548.2);
- A certified copy of an indictment, information, or affidavit made before a magistrate, or a certified copy of a judgment or sentence if the person has been convicted (Pen C §1548.2); and
- A copy of any warrant issued (Pen C §1548.2); a warrant is not required, however, unless one has actually been issued (In re Cooper (1960) 53 C2d 772, 3 CR 140).

The prosecutor in the demanding state uses an application for requisition to ask the demanding state's governor to demand extradition of the accused from the asylum state's governor. The requisition must be signed by the governor of the demanding state or a person performing the function of the governor (Pen C §1548(b)) and should state the name of the person sought and the crime charged or the reason that person is to be returned. The executive authority must certify as authentic the accompanying charging document, judgment, or sentence. Pen C §1548.2.

A California prosecutor applying for a requisition on another state's governor should make sure that the copy of the charging document is properly certified by the document's custodian and that the custodian is in turn certified by a superior court officer whose signature can be verified by the Secretary of State.

The requisition must contain the following allegations; otherwise, it is defective and extradition may be successfully resisted (In re Brewer (1943) 61 CA2d 388, 143 P2d 33):

- The case falls within one of the statutory bases for extradition. Pen C §1548.2.
- The person sought was present in the demanding state at the time the crime was committed and thereafter fled from the demanding state. Pen C §1548.2. In the alternative, the allegation should state that the person sought committed an act in another state intentionally resulting in a crime in the demanding state (nonfugitive). Pen C §1549.1.

An additional allegation that should be added if appropriate is that the person sought has escaped from confinement or has violated the terms of his or her bail, probation, or parole. Pen C §1548.2. A requisition is not insufficient under §1548.2 if this allegation is missing as long as the requisition shows that the individual stands convicted and that the judgment remains unsatisfied. See In re Fedder (1956) 143 CA2d 103, 299 P2d 881; Gottfried v Cronin (Colo 1976) 555 P2d 969.

These allegations may appear in the requisition, in the accompanying indictment or information, or in an "affidavit made before a magistrate." Pen C §1548.2; In re Cooper, supra. An affidavit made before a magistrate is usually a complaint, sworn before and signed by a magistrate. See People v Mack (1977) 66 CA3d 839, 136 CR 283; People v Evans (Ill Ct App 1984) 467 NE2d 631; Petition of Upton (Mass 1982) 439 NE2d 1216; Langley v Hayward (Utah 1982) 656 P2d 1020.

The definition of "magistrate" is not entirely uniform from state to state and may be troublesome. Although a magistrate is usually a judicial officer (see Pen C §808), in some circumstances, others, a court clerk or notary public, for example, may be considered magistrates (Compton v Alabama (1909) 214 US 1, 53 L Ed 885, 29 S Ct 605).

The affidavit should not be made "on information and belief." In re Spears (1891) 88 C 640, 26 P 608. It will not, however, be considered defective if the sources of the information and belief are explained or included through supplementary documents such as affidavits or police reports. In re Cooper, supra. These documents must be properly incorporated in the complaint. 53 C2d at 778.

When an information is relied on by the prosecutor as the charging document, it should be accompanied by a supporting affidavit setting forth the facts of the crime charged. Although in California an information is filed only after a magistrate has found probable cause that the crime was committed, some states do not require such a finding before an information may be filed. In those states an information simply signed by a prosecutor is insufficient as a basis for extradition. Battles v State (Ala 1980) 389 So2d 957.

Generally, any record of a conviction is acceptable as a "judgment" to support extradition. Blackwell v Johnson (Colo 1982) 647 P2d 237; Wynsma v Leach (Colo 1975) 536 P2d 817. These records may include a judgment; an order of commitment, sentence, or probation; a minute order; a court docket; an abstract of judgment; or a guilty plea or verdict. Blackwell v Johnson, supra; State v Luster (Fla 1992) 596 So2d 454. There should also be a showing that the judgment is unsatisfied. In re Fedder (1956) 143 CA2d 103, 110, 299 P2d 881.

The information, indictment, or affidavit must "substantially" charge a crime. Pen C §1548.2.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.15 2. Review by Attorney General of Incoming and Outgoing Extradition Cases

The Governor may refer any requisition he or she receives to the Attorney General or any prosecutor in California to investigate the demand and to report the situation and circumstances of the person demanded and whether he or she should be surrendered. Pen C §1548.3. The Attorney General also examines the papers for legal sufficiency.

Any deficiencies in the papers are explained to the appropriate officials, who may correct them accordingly. Once found legally sufficient, the papers are returned to the Governor's office.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.16 3. Review by Extradition Secretary; Reasons Extradition Usually Approved

After the Attorney General examines and approves the documents, he or she returns them to the Governor's extradition secretary. In virtually all cases, the extradition secretary will then prepare the Governor's warrant to be sent to the local sheriff where the fugitive was arrested. There are very few cases that require review to determine the inherent justice of the case, because the Governor has no discretion to deny extradition in the vast majority of cases. See Puerto Rico v Branstad (1987) 483 US 219, 97 L Ed 2d 187, 107 S Ct 2802.

Governors do have discretion to grant or deny extradition when the accused is not a fugitive from the demanding state. Pen C §1549.1. Therefore, in rare cases in which the requisition requests the extradition of a nonfugitive, the issuance of the Governor's warrant may be withheld if the extradition secretary seriously questions the inherent justice of the extradition. In an extremely rare situation, the extradition secretary may grant a hearing before deciding whether a Governor's warrant should be issued. Historically, a very small number of discretionary extradition requests are denied.

Even in fugitive cases in which serious questions about the extradition arise, the extradition secretary may merely delay issuance of the warrant, contact the demanding state to make sure officials there are aware of all the circumstances, and ask demanding state officials if they want to consider withdrawing the extradition request.

E. Tactical Considerations for Resisting Extradition Before Governor's Warrant Issues

§50.17 1. Deciding Whether to Resist Extradition

Defense counsel should request a court date for an identity hearing (see §50.10) at the defendant's first appearance to give counsel time to evaluate the case and decide what to do. When the defendant denies being the person charged, the court must set an identity hearing. Pen C §1551.2.

When the fugitive faces very serious charges in the demanding state, particularly capital charges, defense counsel should contact the attorney or agency who will represent the defendant and factor in their needs for more time to prepare for trial in making a decision on whether and how to resist extradition.

Resisting extradition is not always the best course of action. Few attorneys, and even fewer fugitives, give adequate consideration to what is accomplished when the Governor refuses to honor an extradition request. Denial of extradition in no way marks a final disposition of the case. It may not even amount to a final disposition of the extradition request. The requisition can be reinstituted at a future date by the demanding state, and there is no assurance that it will not be honored by a new governor, or even by the governor who originally denied it if he or she feels that a change in circumstances has occurred. Moreover, the fugitive can never leave California with any real sense of security because, if the demanding state learns of the fugitive's presence in a third state, it may cause his or her arrest in that state and a request for extradition from the governor of that state. In addition, a person may be subject to rearrest in California despite a denial of extradition. Presently, a denial of extradition does not appear on the computerized records of police agencies, nor does it remove the other state's arrest warrant from those records. Finally, the demanding state may not give credit against an eventual prison term for time spent in the asylum state resisting extradition. See §50.44.

If the fugitive decides not to fight extradition, defense counsel should attempt to work out some form of plea bargain with the extraditing authorities. See §50.32.

The various ways of resisting extradition are listed in §50.18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.18 2. Procedures for Resisting Extradition

To resist extradition, defense counsel can:

- Request an identity hearing (if client denies identity) (see §50.10);
- Seek withdrawal of the extradition request by the prosecutor in the demanding state (see §50.31);
- Seek a negotiated settlement from the prosecutor of the demanding state (see §50.32);
- Request a Governor's hearing (see §§50.26-50.30); and
- File a petition for writ of habeas corpus after the Governor's warrant has issued (see §§50.39-50.42).

See §50.46 on procedures when the prosecutor alleges that the defendant waived extradition in the demanding state as a condition of release.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Arguments Against Extradition

§50.19 a. Arguments That May Be Raised and When They May Be Raised

At an identity hearing, identity is the only issue. Defense counsel should request an identity hearing only if the defendant denies being the person named in the charging document. Pen C §1551.2. Other arguments against extradition are available at subsequent hearings.

The following arguments may be made before the magistrate at the extradition hearing:

- The defendant denies being charged with or convicted of a crime in the demanding state.
- The extradition request is legally insufficient, e.g., a required allegation is missing from the demanding state's extradition request. See §50.14.
- The defendant denies being a fugitive. People v Superior Court (Lopez) (1982) 130 CA3d 776, 783, 182 CR 132.
- The statute in the demanding state that the defendant is charged with violating has been declared void in the demanding state. In re Cooper (1960) 53 C2d 772, 3 CR 140. Any question of statutory interpretation, however, must be left to the courts of the demanding state. In re Cooper, supra. See California v Superior Court (Smolin) (1987) 482 US 400, 411, 96 L Ed 2d 332, 342, 107 S Ct 2433.

The following arguments may be raised with officials from the demanding state, or at a Governor's hearing, and should be made before the Governor's warrant issues, if possible (see §50.29):

- The defendant is innocent (to be raised with demanding state; may not be inquired into by Governor). See Pen C §1553.2.
- The defendant is suffering extreme hardship.
- The crime is insubstantial.
- The crime charged is not illegal in California.
- The defendant has been rehabilitated.

The following arguments may be made after arrest on the Governor's warrant by writ of habeas corpus (see §50.39):

- The defendant is not the same person named in the Governor's warrant.
- The defendant was not in the demanding state at the time of the offense.
- The defendant is not charged with or was not convicted of a crime in the demanding state.
- The extradition documents are not in order on their face.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.20 b. Innocence

A defendant's alleged innocence is not a proper basis for contesting an extradition request in the asylum state. Pen C §1553.2. The demanding state usually has stated only that it believes the fugitive committed the crime and that it wishes to bring him or her to trial. However, proof of innocence can help influence a magistrate to release the fugitive on O.R. or to set a low bail, and to discharge the case if any of the time requirements are violated, e.g., the 30-day or 60-day limits of Pen C §§1552 and 1552.2. It could also persuade the prosecutor in the demanding state to withdraw the extradition request altogether. Guilt or innocence may occasionally become a collateral issue if the fugitive claims mistaken identity, admits the acts but denies their criminal implication, or denies being a fugitive in the legal sense of the word.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.21 c. Legal Insufficiency

Arguments that relate to the legal sufficiency of the extradition request include the following:

- The defendant denies being the person named in the fugitive document. See Pen C §1551.2; People v Superior Court (Lopez) (1982) 130 CA3d 776, 783, 182 CR 132.
- The defendant denies being charged with or convicted of a crime in the demanding state. See California v Superior Court (Smolin) (1987) 482 US 400, 96 L Ed 2d 332, 107 S Ct 2433.
- A required allegation is missing from the demanding state's extradition request. See §50.14.
- The defendant denies being a fugitive (People v Superior Court (Lopez), supra) or being otherwise extraditable.
- The statute in the demanding state that the defendant is charged with violating has been declared void in the demanding state. In re Cooper (1960) 53 C2d 772, 3 CR 140. Any question of statutory interpretation, however, must be left to the courts of the demanding state. In re Cooper, supra.
- The extradition documents are not in order on their face. See §50.14.

§50.22 d. Inherent Justice

Occasionally a situation of such extreme hardship exists that extradition is simply not in the best interests of justice. Each case must be judged on its own merits. Certainly the seriousness of the crime charged is a factor to consider. Another factor given weight is the extreme youth or old age of the fugitive. The health of the fugitive may be significant, as may be the extreme hardship on the fugitive's family caused by his or her extradition. Whatever the facts, counsel must make a showing of extreme circumstances to avoid extradition.

Ø Note: These arguments are usually most successful when made to authorities from the demanding state.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.23 e. Lack of Seriousness of Crime

The most common cases in which defense attorneys have successfully resisted a client's extradition include nonviolent offenses involving very small amounts of money (e.g., $100 or less), child custody cases, and nonsupport cases in which the fugitive is making or promises to begin making regular payments. In a nonsupport case, the extradition secretary may merely withhold rendition until it appears likely that the fugitive will continue making regular support payments. Nonsupport cases are also governed by the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (Fam C §§4900-5005), discussed in §50.47.

In most cases, the demanding state is the proper entity to determine what is or is not a "serious" crime. There is a strong presumption in favor of extradition, and if there is any substantial basis for requesting extradition on even a minor charge, counsel for the fugitive faces a formidable obstacle. As a practical matter, many states will not seek extradition for minor cases.

The costs of extradition are a factor in less serious cases. Some foreign jurisdictions are much more likely to consider alternatives to extradition in less serious cases because of the cost, particularly if the foreign state is far away.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.24 f. Offense Charged Not Crime in California

The argument that an offense, though criminal in the demanding state, is not criminal in California, is rarely effective. The states tend to have fairly standard definitions of what types of conduct constitute criminal violations. Minor variations exist and penalties vary from state to state, but what is considered illegal in one state is probably similarly considered illegal in another state. If, however, counsel becomes involved in a case in which conduct not criminal in California is criminal in the demanding state, that fact should certainly be called to the attention of the extradition secretary.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.25 g. Rehabilitation

All attorneys are familiar with the classic situation in which a person who commits a crime in another state flees to California, lives here for many years, and becomes a law-abiding and respected member of the community. Suddenly he or she is faced with the possibility of extradition to the other state to stand trial for the old offense. Depending on the seriousness of the original offense, the length of time that has elapsed, and the degree of the fugitive's rehabilitation, that person may resist extradition successfully.

Occasionally, if the fugitive can show that he or she has entered a drug rehabilitation or other program (especially one with a good reputation in the demanding state), the demanding prosecutor or parole board may be convinced to forgo extradition conditioned on successful completion of the program.

4. Governor's Hearing

§50.26 a. Hearing Is Not a Right; Limited Primarily to Nonfugitives

The holding of an extradition hearing by the Governor is a matter of grace; it is not a matter of legal right. Utt v State (Md 1982) 443 A2d 582; Cadle v Cauthron (Ark 1979) 584 SW2d 6. The Penal Code does not mention such a procedure, but the Governor may grant an extradition hearing to a nonfugitive accused (defined in §50.4) if the request is made before the Governor's warrant of rendition is issued and if the request is accompanied by a sufficient showing that valid cause exists. Because governors lack "discretion" to deny extradition requests for fugitives (see §50.16), Governor's hearings are rarely granted in those cases. See §§50.23, 50.27 for unusual situations in which fugitives may wish to file a request for a Governor's hearing.

A request for a hearing is rarely granted after the warrant of rendition has issued, and then it may be granted only if the nonfugitive is prepared to demonstrate to the Governor that his or her extradition was legally improper from its inception. The hearing must be requested at the earliest possible opportunity. See §50.27 on how to request the hearing.

Because Governor's hearings are so rarely granted, they should be considered only as a last resort. Counsel should first exhaust all efforts to present his or her arguments to the prosecuting attorney in the demanding state.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.27 b. Request for Governor's Hearing

Before requesting a Governor's hearing, defense counsel should determine whether grounds exist for a legitimate appeal to the Governor to deny extradition. See §§50.17-50.25. If such grounds appear, and the prosecutor in the demanding state has declined to reconsider his or her extradition request, defense counsel should as soon as possible request, by letter or telegram, a Governor's hearing. The request for a Governor's hearing need not be in the form of a formal motion or pleading. See Pen C §1554.

It is important to send an immediate request because the Governor's warrant may arrive at any time, even during the initial 30-day period discussed in §50.13. Further proceedings on the fugitive warrant become moot when the Governor's warrant is served because the fugitive warrant was instituted for the sole purpose of detaining the fugitive under some form of judicial restraint (custody or bail) so that the formal extradition request could be processed. Pen C §1552.2; see In re Fedder (1956) 143 CA2d 103, 299 P2d 881. Therefore, no obligation exists to hold the warrant until the date of the fugitive's next court hearing. That hearing may then be dismissed. A request for a Governor's hearing may delay issuance of the Governor's warrant.

Within 10 days after the initial request, defense counsel should send the extradition secretary a written detailed explanation of the reasons extradition should be denied, accompanied by any supporting documents. Even if a hearing is not granted, this information may persuade the extradition secretary to contact the demanding state about reconsideration of the request.

In the rare case in which service of the Governor's warrant is the first notice of the extradition proceedings that the client receives, counsel should feel free to present the matter to the extradition secretary. If the client can show that he or she did not know of the possibility of extradition, the Governor's warrant may be recalled and a hearing granted. See Pen C §1554.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.28 c. Decision to Grant or Deny Hearing

The extradition secretary normally asks the Attorney General to review and investigate the arguments offered in support of the hearing request. The views of the demanding state's prosecutor are almost always sought. A hearing may be granted only if, after investigation, the circumstances militate strongly against extradition.

Notice of the decision to grant or deny a hearing will be provided to counsel. The Governor's warrant usually issues shortly after a denial. If a hearing is granted, counsel will be notified well in advance of its time and place. If a hearing is granted, or even if an investigation takes place, the extradition secretary will ask counsel to waive the time limits under Pen C §§1552 and 1552.2. There is some authority that these periods are tolled when the delay is for the fugitive's benefit. People ex rel Gilbert v Babb (Ill 1953) 114 NE2d 358, 361.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.29 d. Conduct of Hearing; Argument

Hearings are normally conducted by the extradition secretary on the Governor's behalf. A Deputy Attorney General from California represents the demanding state in defending the legal sufficiency of the papers and generally serves as an adviser to the extradition secretary with respect to legal or factual matters arising at the hearing.

As a rule, defense counsel should advise the extradition secretary of the number of witnesses or visitors who will be present at the hearing in order to allow the secretary to arrange for appropriate hearing facilities.

Hearings are informal, and the usual rules of evidence do not apply. Defense counsel should be present. It is desirable that the client be present as well, but this is not required. The hearing consists largely of the arguments of counsel. Formal presentation of testimony by witnesses is not usually necessary or desirable. Any documentary proof to substantiate an argument should be submitted. After any questions of the legal sufficiency of the demand and the identity of the accused are disposed of, the arguments of counsel as to why extradition should be denied are considered. Counsel should be prepared to demonstrate that every reasonable effort has been made to resolve the matter with officials of the demanding state. See §50.32.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.30 e. Proceedings After Governor's Hearing

After a Governor's hearing, the extradition secretary may call to the attention of the demanding state the substance of the arguments presented by counsel for the fugitive if he or she feels they merit a response.

If the Governor decides to honor the request for extradition, counsel usually will be advised by telephone. If extradition is denied, a letter setting out in detail the reasons for the Governor's decision is sent to the governor of the demanding state. A copy is sometimes sent to counsel.

The Governor will sometimes conditionally deny an extradition request (e.g., for nonsupport), subject to the fugitive's continued good conduct in California and his or her obedience to its laws or to special conditions imposed by the Governor. However, the requisition may be reinstated at any time in the future, and no particular legal cause need be shown for reinstatement. See §50.17.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.31 5. Seeking Withdrawal of Extradition Request

The best place to stop an extradition is at its source—the prosecutor in the demanding state. The attorney for the fugitive should consider communicating immediately with the prosecuting attorney in the demanding state to attempt to work out a disposition of the case by means other than extradition. It may be possible to convince the prosecuting attorney in the demanding state to withdraw the requisition. Sometimes, for example, the prosecutor may be unaware of facts showing extreme hardship or other extenuating circumstances that might lead him or her to reconsider the request.

When the accused is wanted for a probation violation, defense counsel should contact the probation officer in the demanding state.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.32 6. Seeking Case Settlement on Extradition Request

If defense counsel is unable to convince the prosecutor from the demanding state to withdraw the request, or feels that such effort would be futile, he or she can attempt to reach a negotiated disposition. Sometimes a demanding state prosecutor will be satisfied with a certain amount of custody time spent during the extradition proceedings, or with a plea bargain in a case in the asylum state that informally includes a sanction for the extradition case. The agreement might call for the defendant to return to the demanding state or to enter a plea by mail. See chap 26 on plea bargaining.

The demanding state prosecutor's major concerns will be these:

- The nature of the crime with which the defendant is charged;
- The defendant's past record;
- The reasonableness of defense counsel's offer;
- The expense of returning the defendant;
- Crowded court calendars in the demanding state;
- Crowded prison systems in the demanding state (especially if the fugitive is charged with a parole violation); and
- Availability of officers to return the defendant to the demanding state.

Defense counsel should keep the Governor's office advised of the progress of negotiations. On a timely request, the Governor or his or her agent may withhold issuance of a warrant pending completion of those negotiations. The Governor usually requires a time waiver on the fugitive complaint proceedings as a condition of withholding the warrant. In addition, the Governor's staff or, when requested, the Attorney General, may independently evaluate the likely outcome of the negotiations.

§50.33 7. Guidelines of National Association of Extradition Officials

The National Association of Extradition Officials (NAEO) has issued suggested but nonbinding guidelines on what offenses justify extradition. For example, they suggest that jurisdictions not extradite for bad checks under $500. NAEO Resolution No. 39. Counsel may cite these guidelines when urging the demanding state's prosecutor to withdraw the fugitive warrant or agree to a case settlement ("deal the case"). These guidelines, however, are in no way binding on prosecutors, who may elect to seek extradition for even very minor offenses. These guidelines also may be argued to the California trial court in support of setting a lower bail or release the defendant on his or her own recognizance, or in support of releasing the defendant after any time limits have passed (see, e.g., Pen C §§1551.2, 1552.2, 1555.2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.34 F. Issuance of Governor's Warrant

If the Governor honors the requisition presented by the demanding state, the Governor or an authorized agent signs a rendition warrant and forwards it to the local law enforcement agency holding the fugitive under the fugitive warrant. Pen C §1549.2. It is the duty of the Governor to "arrest and deliver up" fugitives on request of the states from which they have fled. Pen C §1548.1; Puerto Rico v Branstad (1987) 483 US 219, 97 L Ed 2d 187, 107 S Ct 2802.

If a local criminal prosecution is pending against the fugitive, the Governor may either surrender the fugitive to the demanding state or hold the Governor's warrant until local proceedings are concluded and any sentence served. The time limits under Pen C §§1552 and 1552.2 are tolled while the local prosecution is pending. Pen C §1553.1.

G. Procedures After Governor's Warrant Issues

§50.35 1. Arrest

Once the Governor's warrant is issued and served, the fugitive must be taken into custody. A Governor's warrant is an original arrest warrant and authorizes the immediate arrest of the person named in the warrant. It does not matter that the person has not previously been arrested or in custody, that he or she was released on bail, or that local charges are pending against him or her. Pen C §§1549.3, 1550.1. The Governor's warrant supersedes any existing fugitive warrant, complaint, and commitment order. Its issuance and service renders moot any defects or deficiencies in the proceedings under Pen C §§1551-1552.2. In re Bembry (Okla 1995) 907 P2d 1076; State v Luster (Fla 1992) 596 So2d 454; Parks v Bourbeau (Conn 1984) 477 A2d 636; Schumm v Nelson (Colo 1983) 659 P2d 1389.

Occasionally, the person having the authority to arrest the defendant will agree to hold the warrant for a short time at defense counsel's request and with the Governor's approval. Possible reasons may be that a personal emergency prevents extradition, e.g., the fugitive is having a baby. In these cases, defense counsel should contact the sheriff who is to serve the warrant. The sheriff will call the Governor's office to see if the arrest can be delayed.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.36 2. Arraignment on Governor's Warrant

A person arrested on a Governor's warrant must be taken immediately before a magistrate and arraigned before he or she may be turned over to an agent of the demanding state. Pen C §1550.1. Failure to do so is a misdemeanor. Pen C §1550.2.

The magistrate must advise the fugitive of the reason for his or her arrest, of the right to demand and procure counsel, and of the right to challenge the validity of the warrant within a reasonable time by seeking a writ of habeas corpus. Pen C §1550.1. See also §§50.39-50.42.

A fugitive's competence to assist counsel with the defenses available by way of writ of habeas corpus may be raised at arraignment on the Governor's warrant. Pen C §1550.1; State v Patton (Kan 2008) 176 P3d 151.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.37 3. No Bail After Governor's Warrant Served

Bail, or any other conditional release from custody, is expressly precluded after service of the Governor's warrant, even if a stay of the extradition is granted pending litigation on a habeas corpus petition. Pen C §1550.1; People v Superior Court (Ruiz) (1986) 187 CA3d 686, 234 CR 214.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.38 4. Stay of Extradition

If the fugitive wishes to challenge extradition by way of habeas corpus, the court must allow a "reasonable time" within which to file the petition, and the actual surrender of the fugitive to the demanding state's agents must be stayed during that period. Typically, California courts allow about 10 days within which to file the petition. The fugitive must remain in custody during the period the habeas corpus attack on the Governor's warrant is pending. Pen C §1550.1.

© The Regents of the University of California

H. Habeas Corpus

§50.39 1. Issues That May Be Raised

Only four issues may be raised on habeas corpus to challenge a fugitive's extradition: (1) whether the person in custody is the same person named in the Governor's warrant; (2) whether the person is a fugitive from justice, i.e., whether the accused was in the demanding state at the time of the offense, or is otherwise extraditable (Pen C §1549.1); (3) whether the person is charged with or convicted of a crime in the demanding state; and (4) whether the extradition documents on their face are in order. Pen C §1550.1; California v Superior Court (Smolin) (1987) 482 US 400, 96 L Ed 2d 332, 107 S Ct 2433; Pacileo v Walker (1980) 449 US 86, 66 L Ed 2d 304, 101 S Ct 308; Michigan v Doran (1978) 439 US 282, 289, 58 L Ed 2d 521, 527, 99 S Ct 530.

The question of guilt or innocence may not be raised. Pen C §1553.2. Asylum states may not go behind an extradition request to try to determine who is right or wrong. California v Superior Court (Smolin), supra; In re Walton (2002) 99 CA4th 934, 122 CR2d 87. Nor may other defenses be raised. Pacileo v Walker, supra; Biddinger v Commissioner of Police (1917) 245 US 128, 62 L Ed 193, 38 S Ct 41 (statute of limitations); In re Murdock (1936) 5 C2d 644, 648, 55 P2d 843. Furthermore, challenges based on alleged constitutional violations must be litigated in the demanding state, not in the state or federal courts of the asylum state. See, e.g., New Mexico ex rel Ortiz v Reed (1998) 524 US 151, 141 L Ed 2d 131, 118 S Ct 1860; Pacileo v Walker, supra (constitutionality of prison conditions in demanding state); In re Cooper (1960) 53 C2d 772, 3 CR 140 (constitutionality of statute under which fugitive was charged). But see Commonwealth ex rel Mattox v Superintendent of County Prison (Pa 1943) 31 A2d 576. See also The Case of the Fugitive From a Chain Gang, 2 Stan L Rev 174 (1949).

§50.40 2. Where Habeas Corpus Petition Is Filed; Burden of Proof

Filing. A petition for habeas corpus is filed in the superior court of the county in which extradition proceedings are pending. Pen C §1550.1. If the writ is denied, a petition may be filed in the court of appeal. Pen C §1506. See Pen C §1550.1.

Burden of proof. The petitioner bears an extremely heavy burden of proof. The petitioner must show "beyond reasonable doubt" that he or she is not the person named in the extradition warrant or is not a fugitive from justice. South Carolina v Bailey (1933) 289 US 412, 422, 77 L Ed 1292, 1297, 53 S Ct 667. The burden has also been described as "clear and convincing, conclusive," and "practically conclusive." Essentially, these terms mean that habeas corpus relief will be denied as long as the court remains in doubt. In re Rock (1958) 161 CA2d 723, 326 P2d 865; In re Fedder (1956) 143 CA2d 103, 112, 299 P2d 881. For discussion of applicable rules of evidence in extradition proceedings, see §50.11.

On habeas corpus, see chap 42; Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases, chaps 9-10 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

3. Court Procedures After Decision

§50.41 a. Habeas Corpus Denied

If the habeas petition is denied, the petitioner may seek relief in a higher court. However, unless the order denying the writ specifically grants additional time in which to seek such relief, or unless the court by separate order stays extradition, the extradition may proceed. The court in which the petitioner was arraigned on the Governor's warrant has no jurisdiction to grant a stay of extradition following denial of habeas relief by a higher court. See Pen C §1550.1. The fugitive is to remain in custody while seeking relief from higher courts. Pen C §1550.1.

Once habeas relief has been denied, agents from the demanding state may come to receive custody of the fugitive and return him or her to the demanding state. The Uniform Criminal Extradition Act (UCEA) does not prescribe a time in which the agents must take custody. However, the Federal Act provides that, if no agent appears in the asylum state within 30 calendar days after the date of the fugitive's arrest on the Governor's warrant, the prisoner may be discharged. 18 USC §3182. This 30-day provision has been held to be permissive, not mandatory. People v Superior Court (Lopez) (1982) 130 CA3d 776, 182 CR 132.

The 30-day period commences on service of the Governor's warrant and is tolled during the time the defendant is challenging extradition. People v Superior Court (Lopez), supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.42 b. Habeas Corpus Granted

If a petition for writ of habeas corpus is granted, the petitioner must be released from custody. See Pen C §1550.1. Note that bail is expressly precluded after a Governor's warrant is served on a defendant unless defendant's habeas petition is granted. Pen C §1550.1.

If a petition for writ of habeas corpus is granted, the People may appeal (Pen C §1506) or seek speedier review by extraordinary writ (People v Superior Court (Lopez) (1982) 130 CA3d 776, 182 CR 132). Alternatively, the demanding state may initiate new extradition proceedings to correct whatever defect existed in the prior attempt. In re Russell (1974) 12 C3d 229, 115 CR 511. See §50.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.43 I. Effect of Prior Failure or Unsuccessful Attempt to Extradite

Failure of a state to extradite a fugitive whose whereabouts are known to the demanding state is not a defense to a later extradition attempt. In re Walton (2002) 99 CA4th 934, 122 CR2d 87; People v Superior Court (Lopez) (1982) 130 CA3d 776, 784, 182 CR 132. Similarly, a previous unsuccessful attempt to extradite does not bar a subsequent extradition. In re Russell (1974) 12 C3d 229, 233, 115 CR 511 (res judicata and double jeopardy do not apply).

If the demanding state fails to extradite within a reasonable time after the fugitive's request for a speedy trial, the delay may constitute denial of the right to a speedy trial. See Smith v Hooey (1969) 393 US 374, 21 L Ed 2d 607, 89 S Ct 575; Zimmerman v Superior Court (1967) 248 CA2d 56, 56 CR 226. However, a challenge based on denial of speedy trial rights, like challenges on other constitutional grounds, must be raised in the demanding state. Price v Pitchess (9th Cir 1977) 556 F2d 926. See also Pacileo v Walker (1980) 449 US 86, 66 L Ed 2d 304, 101 S Ct 308; Michigan v Doran (1978) 439 US 282, 58 L Ed 2d 521, 99 S Ct 530. For discussion of speedy trial rights of sentenced prisoners, see chap 19. See also §50.49.

§50.44 J. Credit for Time in Custody Awaiting Extradition

A defendant who has been in custody in another jurisdiction because of an untried charge in California, when finally tried and sentenced in California, is entitled to credit for presentence time served even though he or she resisted extradition, if the presentence time served in the other jurisdiction was for the same offense for which the defendant was convicted in California. In re Watson (1977) 19 C3d 646, 139 CR 609 (defendant granted credit for 285 days under Pen C §2900.5 for presentence time spent in Texas jail fighting extradition to California). If the defendant was in custody in the other jurisdiction for related and unrelated offenses, California must grant credit only for time served if the defendant was arrested first on the California warrant. In re Joyner (1989) 48 C3d 487, 256 CR 785 (no credit for time served because California hold put on defendant after he was arrested in Florida for crime allegedly committed there).

Defense counsel should be cautioned, however, that Watson is not binding on other states and probably represents a minority view. This should be considered in deciding whether to resist extradition, because the fugitive may be doing "dead time" in California while he or she is fighting extradition to another state. When the fugitive faces very serious charges in the demanding state, defense counsel in California should contact the attorney or agency who will represent the defendant in the demanding state and find out what the law is in that state on credit for time served, and factor that into the decision of whether and how to resist extradition.

A defendant who escaped from custody in the demanding state may not be entitled to any credit against the original sentence. See In re O'Neil (1977) 74 CA3d 120, 141 CR 338.

K. Waiver of Extradition

§50.45 1. Waiver Before California Magistrate

A fugitive may waive the issuance and service of a Governor's warrant by executing a written waiver before a magistrate in California. Pen C §1555.1. Once the fugitive signs a waiver of extradition, bail is not permitted unless the prosecutor, with the concurrence of the appropriate officials from the demanding state, stipulates that bail may be set. Pen C §1551.1. However, the court may permit the fugitive to return to the demanding state voluntarily if officials of the demanding state have expressed their consent. Pen C §1555.1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§50.46 2. Waiver Signed in Demanding State

Often, as a condition of release on bail, probation, or parole, a person is required to waive extradition should he or she be found outside that state. Penal Code §1555.2 provides a procedure whereby such waivers must be honored in California as long as certain prerequisites are met. The prerequisites are:

- The person was required to waive extradition in advance as a condition of bail, parole, or probation;
- The offense for which the person was in custody must be punishable by imprisonment for more than 1 year; and
- The alleged violation of the person's conditional release must have occurred within the past 5 years.

The prosecutor may apply to the court for a judicial determination that a person may be returned under Pen C §1555.2 (previous waiver of extradition) at any time after the fugitive's arrest. This application should be made to the magistrate who arraigned the fugitive under §1551.2.

A hearing must be held at which the prosecuting attorney presents a certified copy of the demanding state's order conditionally releasing the fugitive, along with the condition that the person was required to waive extradition, and a certified copy of the order directing the fugitive's return for violating the conditions of his or her release. The magistrate must accept the certified copies as conclusive proof of their contents and presume the validity of the extradition waiver condition. If the magistrate finds probable cause to believe that the arrested person is the same person named in the conditional release order and order commanding his or her return, the magistrate remands the person to custody and directs that he or she be delivered to agents of the demanding state. Pen C §1555.2(b)-(c).

If the magistrate remands the person to custody for delivery to the demanding state's agents, bail may not be granted unless the prosecutor stipulates, with the demanding state's concurrence, that bail may be set. Pen C §1555.2(d).

If defense counsel wishes to challenge the order by seeking a writ of habeas corpus, he or she should ask the trial court to stay the order. The court must allow a "reasonable time" within which to file a habeas petition. Unless the prosecutor and the demanding state consent, the fugitive must remain in custody without bail during the pendency of the habeas petition. Pen C §1555.2(e).

If the fugitive and defense counsel decide to waive extradition, defense counsel should set a "status" appearance to make sure that the client was picked up by the demanding state. If the fugitive is not picked up within a reasonable time, counsel can argue for dismissal or release on own recognizance. See §50.42 on what is a "reasonable time" under 18 USC §3182; see §50.9 on bail.

IV. ALTERNATIVES TO EXTRADITION

§50.47 A. Interstate Family Support Act

The Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (Fam C §§4900-5005) provides a procedure to compel a person to abide by his or her support obligation, and, if necessary, to remove the person to the state in which his or her dependents reside when charged there with the crime of failing to support them.

The Governor may require that a civil action for support under the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act be brought before making a demand on the governor of another state, or before honoring the demand of the governor of another state, for the surrender of a person charged with criminal nonsupport. Fam C §4971. While this is discretionary, it has been the usual practice in California that before the Governor will seek or grant extradition, he or she must be convinced that such a civil action has been unsuccessfully attempted or that such an attempt would be futile.

§50.48 B. Interstate Compact for Adult Offender Supervision

The Interstate Compact for Adult Offender Supervision (Pen C §§11180-11181) provides for supervision of qualifying probationers and parolees in another state. See §38.41. The compact includes an administrative procedure for the return to the "sending" state of probationers or parolees who have been allowed to serve probation or parole in another, "receiving" state. All the states, along with the territories of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, and the District of Columbia, are parties to the compact. By its terms, the compact has the force of federal statutory law and is binding on the member states. See Pen C §11180, arts V, XIV. The compact itself, the rules for its operation, and other information can be found at the website of the Interstate Commission for Adult Offender Supervision, http://www.interstatecompact.org.

Under the compact, subject to certain due process requirements and disposition of any charges in the receiving state, the agent of the sending state is entitled to enter the receiving state to retake a probationer or parolee, and for this purpose the offender and the state waive the requirements of formal extradition. Interstate Comm'n for Adult Offender Supervision (ICAOS) Rules 3.109, 5.101, 5.107. Before this compact applies, the probation or parole authorities must establish that the person in custody was originally released on probation or parole either to this state or to a third state for interstate supervision. See Seward v Heinze (9th Cir 1958) 262 F2d 42. Officials of the sending state should notify the compact administrator or local authorities of the receiving state to place the probationer or parolee in custody pending arrival of the sending state's agent. See ICAOS Rule 5.111. The arrest may be made without a revocation warrant. See 38 Ops Cal Atty Gen 205 (1961).

Before a person may be actually surrendered to the authorized agent of the sending state, a probable cause hearing must be held, unless it is waived by the probationer or parolee. ICAOS Rule 5.108. At the hearing, the person arrested may have the right to counsel; however, it is unsettled whether the same protections are required in a purely "retaking" proceeding under the compact as are required in a revocation proceeding. Compare Gagnon v Scarpelli (1973) 411 US 778, 36 L Ed 2d 656, 93 S Ct 1756, with Morrissey v Brewer (1972) 408 US 471, 33 L Ed 2d 484, 92 S Ct 2593. The hearing officer or magistrate must decide whether there is probable cause to believe that the parolee or probationer committed one or more significant violations of the terms and conditions of his or her supervision. ICAOS Rules 5.102-5.103, 5.108. The compact also provides that the parolee or probationer may request to be returned to the sending state and must be allowed to do so unless he or she is charged with or is being investigated for a crime in the receiving state. ICAOS Rule 4.111.

§50.49 C. Agreement on Detainers

The Agreement on Detainers (sometimes called the Interstate Agreement on Detainers, or IAD) is a compact entered into by virtually all states (Louisiana and Mississippi are exceptions), the United States, and the District of Columbia, and provides for the administrative transfer of prisoners who are wanted by other states for trial on criminal charges. Pen C §§1389-1389.8. For the IAD to apply, a detainer must have been lodged, based on an untried indictment, information, or complaint, against someone in actual custody in a penal or correctional institution of a party state. People v Brooks (1987) 189 CA3d 866, 234 CR 573; People v Reyes (1979) 98 CA3d 524, 159 CR 572. It is a reciprocal act and applies only if the other jurisdiction has adopted the IAD. Pen C §1389. It does not apply to persons in pretrial custody in local jails. Pen C §1389, art III(a); People v Zetsche (1987) 188 CA3d 917, 233 CR 720.

The IAD provides a procedure not only for a prosecutor to secure the presence of the defendant for trial, but also for a defendant prisoner to submit a formal demand for a speedy trial. If the defendant prisoner demands trial under article III of the IAD (Pen C §1389, art III), trial must begin within 180 calendar days after the actual delivery of the demand to the prosecutor and court in the other jurisdiction. Fex v Michigan (1993) 507 US 43, 122 L Ed 2d 406, 113 S Ct 1085. The demand must be submitted through the warden or superintendent of the institution in which the defendant is incarcerated. Unless good cause is shown, failure to bring the defendant to trial within the specified time requires dismissal of the charge under Pen C §1389. See People v Wilson (1977) 69 CA3d 631, 138 CR 259. Also, dismissal is required if the defendant is returned to the sending state without having been brought to trial on the charges underlying the detainer. Alabama v Bozeman (2001) 533 US 146, 150 L Ed 2d 188, 121 S Ct 2079; Marshall v Superior Court (1986) 183 CA3d 662, 228 CR 364. This remedy must be obtained in the state in which the charges are pending, however, because the state of incarceration has no jurisdiction over the pending charges. In re Fabricant (1981) 118 CA3d 115, 173 CR 245.

If the prosecutor in the demanding state requests temporary custody of a prisoner under article IV of the IAD (Pen C §1389, art IV), trial must begin within 120 calendar days after the defendant's arrival in the state where the charges are pending. Because an article IV request is an involuntary removal, the U.S. Supreme Court has held that the prisoner is entitled to the same due process protections provided to persons being extradited under the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act (UCEA), except that the prisoner may not insist on the issuance of a Governor's rendition warrant. Cuyler v Adams (1981) 449 US 433, 66 L Ed 2d 641, 101 S Ct 703. Essentially, it entitles the prisoner to a pretransfer arraignment similar to that provided under Pen C §1551.2 for fugitives. See §50.8.

A defendant may waive his or her protections under the IAD by requesting treatment in violation of its provisions, e.g., trial beyond the 180- or 120-day period. People v Nitz (1990) 219 CA3d 164, 268 CR 54; Drescher v Superior Court (1990) 218 CA3d 1140, 267 CR 661; People v Sampson (1987) 191 CA3d 1409, 237 CR 100. Also, the periods are tolled during any time the defendant is unable to stand trial, e.g., if the defendant is under disciplinary segregation or on trial in a third state. Netzley v Superior Court (2008) 160 CA4th 348, 356, 72 CR3d 773; People v Garner (1990) 224 CA3d 1363, 274 CR 298.

§50.50 D. Uniform Act to Secure Attendance of Witnesses From Without the State in Criminal Cases

California has passed the Uniform Act to Secure the Attendance of Witnesses From Without the State in Criminal Cases (Pen C §§1334-1334.6), as has almost every other state. In addition to other foreign jurisdictions, the Act applies to the Navajo Nation. People v Superior Court (Jans) (1990) 224 CA3d 1405, 274 CR 586. The Act provides that a person may be compelled to attend and give testimony at a criminal proceeding in another state if the other state has a similar statute. The judge of a court of record may issue a certificate stating that a person's presence is required in a pending criminal proceeding. However, the judge, in his or her discretion, may decline to order even a material witness from outside the state to appear in court. People v Cavanaugh (1968) 69 C2d 262, 70 CR 438.

The certificate is presented to a judge of a court of record in the county in which the witness is found, who then holds a hearing at which the requested person is directed to appear to determine whether he or she is a material and necessary witness, will not be caused undue hardship if compelled to attend and testify, and will be protected from arrest and service of process by the laws of the requesting state. If the judge finds in the affirmative, he or she issues a subpoena directing the witness to attend and testify. On recommendation in the certificate, the judge may order that the witness be taken into custody and delivered to an officer of the requesting state to ensure his or her attendance. Pen C §1334.2.

When the witness in a criminal proceeding is a prisoner, some states (not including California) either require that the certificate and subpoena be supported by an executive agreement promising to return the prisoner after his or her testimony is taken, or hold that special legislation pertaining to the production of prisoners as witnesses must be enacted in the demanding state. See the Uniform Rendition of Prisoners as Witnesses in Criminal Proceedings Act §4 (Model Act, 11 Uniform Laws Anno 547), not adopted in California. See also People v Laursen (1972) 8 C3d 192, 104 CR 425 (lack of statutory authority to compel prisoner's attendance).

§50.51 E. Interstate Compact for Juveniles

Juveniles accused of committing crimes are subject to extradition. Welf & I C §216. In cases involving delinquent juveniles who are runaways or absconders and who are likely to endanger their own health, morals, and welfare or the health, morals, and welfare of others, and juveniles charged with being delinquent because of the violation of any criminal law, the rendition procedures to be followed are in Welf & I C §§1400-1403.

The compact also provides that delinquent juveniles on parole or probation may be allowed to reside and be supervised in another party state.

§50.52 F. Death Penalty Extradition Cases

Sometimes the demanding state seeks to extradite a fugitive with a pending judgment of death. In some cases, the fugitive will also have a pending judgment of death in the asylum state. These cases are usually on appeal. Extradition counsel in this situation should contact the attorneys for his or her client on both capital cases. Defense counsel must develop a unified strategy in consolidation with the client's attorneys in both states. It is often in the client's best interest to remain in one state, while the government wants the client transferred to another, in which the execution date is sooner. These cases are the most serious of extradition situations for defense counsel and demand fast action and creativity.

If the death verdict in the demanding state was based on aggravating facts in the case in the asylum state, and the asylum state case is still on appeal, counsel may argue that the asylum state appeal must be completed before the capital extradition to the demanding state is carried out. See Johnson v Mississippi (1988) 486 US 578, 100 L Ed 2d 575, 108 S Ct 1981 (death judgment based partially on evidence of prior conviction that was later set aside must be reexamined).

There are no "general rules" for these extradition situations. Each capital extradition case requires a case-specific analysis, usually by an attorney who is familiar with the various stages of capital litigation. Ultimately, however, there may be little the attorney can do when multiple states have cases against a defendant, since it is up to the states, not the defendant, where he or she should be in custody. See Poland v Stewart (9th Cir 1998) 169 F3d 573; Pitsonbarger v Gramley (7th Cir 1998) 141 F3d 728; State v Robbins (NJ 1991) 590 A2d 1133.

§51.1 I. OVERVIEW

From time to time, defense counsel is asked to represent and advise a witness in a criminal case. The most common situations are the following:

- During the course of a trial, preliminary hearing, or other examination, a witness appears to risk self-incrimination and counsel is appointed by the trial court to advise the witness.
- A criminal defendant-client of counsel is contacted about prospective testimony by the prosecutor or the defense in another case.
- A witness subpoenaed by a grand jury seeks advice (for discussion of role of counsel when a witness has been summoned before a grand jury, see chap 9).
- A witness is subpoenaed by the prosecution and because of noncooperation with the prosecutor or the threat of nonattendance is incarcerated pending testimony. Pen C §1332. See In re D.W. (2004) 123 CA4th 491, 498, 20 CR3d 274.
- A witness appears in court but refuses to testify, thereby facing contempt charges, incarceration, or both. Pen C §881. See chap 58 on contempt.

Other closely related topics are immunity for testimony, discussed in chap 49, and jailhouse informants, discussed in §§49.16-49.17, 51.13.

Counsel must be prepared to give competent advice and assistance in these situations or to decline representation when ethical or other considerations prevent this. Inexperienced counsel should not undertake such representation. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110. Representation should be immediately declined when a conflict of interest is discovered. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310.

All prosecutors should familiarize themselves with the practical and ethical complications that may arise when they interview or call witnesses who have pending criminal cases. A sample prosecution petition to compel a witness to testify under Pen C §1324 is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §49.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

II. OBLIGATIONS OF SUBPOENAED WITNESS AND WITNESS'S COUNSEL

§51.2 A. Obligations of Witness

Any witness properly served with a valid subpoena must comply on pain of contempt. Pen C §§1331, 1331.5. See also CCP §1991.

Ø Note: A witness is not properly served with a subpoena that is mailed to the witness, unless the witness acknowledges receipt of the subpoena by telephone, mail, or in person. Pen C §1328d.

On pain of contempt, a witness called to testify at a criminal trial must answer all questions (Pen C §1331) unless a question is objected to and the objection is sustained, or a valid claim of privilege is asserted by the witness and upheld. See CCP §2064; Crittenden v Superior Court (1964) 225 CA2d 101, 36 CR 903; In re Moore (1928) 93 CA 488, 269 P 664.

§51.2A B. Duties of Counsel

An attorney may be asked to advise someone who has been subpoenaed to testify in a criminal trial in several different situations.

Motion to quash. If the subpoena is invalid or was improperly issued, counsel should consider filing a motion to quash the subpoena. CCP §1987.1; People v Superior Court (Long) (1976) 56 CA3d 374, 378, 126 CR 465; People v Rhone (1968) 267 CA2d 652, 657, 73 CR 463. See §§4.43-4.45 on quashing subpoenas. A sample form is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §4.2 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

> Ø Note: If counsel believes a served subpoena has not been properly issued or is invalid, counsel should file a motion to quash the subpoena. In that situation, doing nothing and advising the witness not to appear is not appropriate and will likely result in a warrant being issued for the arrest of the witness.

A motion to quash may also be the appropriate remedy when the witness fears that complying with a subpoena will be incriminating within the meaning of the privilege against self-incrimination. In this situation, counsel may be able to persuade the party that issued the subpoena to withdraw it by pointing out that, under CCP §1987.2, a party who issues a subpoena deemed "oppressive" or who, in bad faith or without substantial justification, makes or opposes a motion to quash, may be ordered to pay the opposing party's reasonable expenses, including attorney fees.

Advice about privileges. A major duty of counsel advising a witness about his or her prospective testimony is to inform the witness about all legal and extralegal consequences of giving or withholding testimony to assist the witness to assert the claim of privilege when it is warranted by the facts and the law of the case. When the witness has a valid claim of privilege to some but not all questions that may be asked, counsel should consider whether to remain at the witness's side (when the proceeding is not before a grand jury) throughout the testimony because some questions may be objectionable.

The privileges most often asserted by witnesses and sustained by the courts in criminal cases are the attorney-client privilege (usually when the witness called is the attorney) and the privilege against self-incrimination. US Const amend V; Cal Const art I, §15. See Evid C §§952, 954. Other privileges to be aware of are the privilege for confidential marital communications (Evid C §980), physician-patient privilege (Evid C §994), psychotherapist-patient privilege (Evid C §1014), privilege of penitent and clergy (Evid C §§1033-1034), sexual assault counselor-victim privilege (Evid C §1035.8), and domestic violence counselor-victim privilege (Evid C §1037.5). Other privileges are recognized by statute in California. Evid C §§900-1070. Because different privileges may apply, the witness should assert the privilege against self-incrimination or other applicable privilege for each question that calls for an answer that is subject to a privilege. People v Ford (1988) 45 C3d 431, 441, 247 CR 121. This questioning should occur outside the jury's presence. People v Holloway (2004) 33 C4th 96, 130, 14 CR3d 212; People v Mincey (1992) 2 C4th 408, 441, 6 CR2d 822; People v Frierson (1991) 53 C3d 730, 743, 280 CR 440. See also People v Lopez (1999) 71 CA4th 1550, 84 CR2d 655 (if witness has waived privilege against self-incrimination, court can require witness to be put on stand and claim privilege). If the witness has answered substantive questions before asserting the privilege against self-incrimination, the court may, on motion of opposing counsel who has been deprived of the opportunity to fully cross-examine, strike all of the witness's testimony.

> Ø Note: A witness who asserts the privilege against self-incrimination is "unavailable as a witness" (see Evid C §240(a)(1)) for purposes of introducing hearsay statements admissible only when the witness is unavailable. See, e.g., Evid C §§1202 (hearsay to attack or support credibility), 1230 (declarations against interest), 1251 (statement of declarant's previously existing mental or physical condition), 1291 (former testimony). See also People v Williams (2008) 43 C4th 584, 617, 75 CR3d 691; People v Seijas (2005) 36 C4th 291, 303, 30 CR3d 493.

Incarceration of material witness. Counsel may also be asked to represent a witness in proceedings under Pen C §1332. This provision permits the court to order an uncooperative material witness to give a written undertaking to appear and testify or forfeit a sum of money the court considers proper. Pen C §1332(a). If the witness is unwilling (or unable) to give the required undertaking, the witness can be incarcerated. Pen C §1332(b).

Because §1332 authorizes the court to detain an innocent person, the courts have adopted procedural safeguards to protect the witness. See In re D.W. (2004) 123 CA4th 491, 20 CR3d 274; In re Francisco M. (2001) 86 CA4th 1061, 1076, 103 CR2d 794. See also Cal Const art I, §10 (witness may not be unreasonably detained). To ensure that the witness receives the process he or she is due, at any hearing under §1332 the witness is entitled to be represented by retained or appointed counsel. In re D.W. (2004) 123 CA4th 491, 498, 20 CR3d 274.

To initiate the process, the prosecutor (although §1332 applies equally to prosecution and defense witnesses, the party utilizing its procedures is usually the prosecution) must provide "proof on oath" that establishes good cause to believe that the witness (1) is material and (2) will not appear and testify without security. Pen C §1332(a); In re Francisco M., supra. At this initial hearing, the witness is entitled (86 CA4th at 1076):

- To have notice of the grounds for which detention is sought;
- To controvert the allegations; and
- To be heard and present evidence on all relevant issues.

Among the relevant issues at this hearing are whether the witness "will agree to return if released and whether other alternatives to incarceration in lieu of security are feasible and adequate." In re Francisco M., supra.

Factors the court should consider in deciding whether to require the witness to give the undertaking authorized by Pen C §1332(a) include (86 CA4th at 1076):

- The seriousness of the charges;
- The importance of the witness's testimony to the case;
- The length of the proposed detention;
- Evidence relevant to whether the witness will appear and testify (e.g., employment, community ties);
- The age and maturity of the witness;
- The harm to the witness and his or her family flowing from incarceration;
- The witness's financial resources;
- The circumstances of any continuance of the prosecution that will prolong the witness's incarceration; and
- Whether steps short of incarceration will assure the witness's presence at the trial.

A witness who is incarcerated under §1332(b) is entitled to a review hearing within 2 days after the order of commitment and every 10 days thereafter as long as he or she remains in custody. Pen C §1332(c)-(d); In re Francisco M. (2001) 86 CA4th 1061, 1079, 103 CR2d 794. The initial review may not be before the judge or magistrate who issued the order of commitment. Pen C §1332(c). At each review of the commitment order, the court should consider "any relevant change in circumstances…, including whether the witness credibly has changed his attitude toward appearing at trial, or toward accepting a lesser, feasible alternative to custody." In re Francisco M., supra.

§51.3 III. DEFENDANT'S PRIVILEGE NOT TO BE CALLED AS WITNESS DISTINGUISHED

The Fifth Amendment privilege against being called as a witness is available only to a charged defendant in the case against that defendant. Evid C §930. For other witnesses, there is no privilege not to be called to the stand (Evid C §911) absent a showing that the subpoena is improperly issued (Pen C §1331). See People v Sisneros (2009) 174 CA4th 142, 151, 94 CR3d 98. Otherwise, the witness must appear in response to the subpoena and must assert the Fifth Amendment privilege on the witness stand in response to particular questions. On motions to quash, see §§4.43-4.45.

Ø Note: The court may require that a witness's assertion of the Fifth Amendment privilege be withheld from the jury. See People v Frierson (1991) 53 C3d 730, 743, 280 CR 440; People v Ford (1988) 45 C3d 431, 247 CR 121. As a practical matter, this may affect whether the witness is called to the stand.

© The Regents of the University of California

§51.4 IV. WHETHER TO ADVISE WITNESS TO REFUSE TO TESTIFY

Counsel must determine from the totality of the circumstances and the substance of the witness's proposed testimony whether the privilege against self-incrimination may be claimed. The test is whether the answer to a given question would subject the witness to a possible criminal prosecution or, assuming that such a prosecution were instituted, would arguably be admissible against the witness in that prosecution. Once a prosecution is initiated, the scope of the self-incrimination privilege is broad. See Prudhomme v Superior Court (1970) 2 C3d 320, 326, 85 CR 129. See also People v Mincey (1992) 2 C4th 408, 441, 6 CR2d 822.

The privilege against self-incrimination applies if the witness would be subject to prosecution in any domestic jurisdiction on either state or federal level. Murphy v Waterfront Comm'n (1964) 378 US 52, 12 L Ed 2d 678, 84 S Ct 1594. A witness may not, however, claim the privilege if the fear of criminal prosecution is from a foreign government. U.S. v Balsys (1998) 524 US 666, 141 L Ed 2d 575, 118 S Ct 2218. See generally 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Witnesses §§446-484 (4th ed 2000) on the applicability of the privilege.

The privilege against self-incrimination survives a judgment of conviction as long as the witness is pursuing an appeal from the conviction or retains the right to file a notice of appeal. People v Fonseca (1995) 36 CA4th 631, 42 CR2d 525. When the time to appeal the conviction has run without an appeal being filed, the privilege no longer exists. People v Sisneros (2009) 174 CA4th 142, 151, 94 CR3d 98; People v Lopez (1999) 71 CA4th 1550, 1554, 84 CR2d 655.

Ø Example 1: A witness is called by the defense to testify to an alibi for the charged defendant. This prospective testimony would reveal that the witness was engaged in an act that was illegal, although uncharged and unconnected with the pending prosecution. The privilege applies even if a witness is not presently charged with nor under investigation for criminal conduct whenever the testimony would be admissible against the witness in a subsequent prosecution, or could give rise to criminal proceedings once discovered.

Ø Example 2: A witness is called to testify for the prosecution in a murder case while the witness is a suspect and under investigation as a possible coparticipant. If the witness's proposed testimony discloses that he or she was present at the scene of the crime, that information might well further the prosecution's investigation. If the witness's proposed testimony offers an alibi, that would amount to a compelled disclosure of a defense, which could lighten the prosecution's burden of proof in a subsequent prosecution.

In either case, compelling the witness-suspect's testimony would violate the witness's privilege against self-incrimination. In the first example, answering the question calls for an admission against penal interest. In the second example, the witness's answers would create a potential link in a chain of evidence. See People v Lucas (1995) 12 C4th 415, 48 CR2d 525. The innocent, as well as the guilty, are protected by the privilege against self-incrimination. Grunewald v U.S. (1957) 353 US 391, 421, 1 L Ed 2d 931, 953, 77 S Ct 963.

It is prudent practice for counsel to memorialize any discussion with witnesses who are being advised. Claims by witnesses or other attorneys that the witness was deceived, misled, coerced, or threatened by the counseling attorney can occur. Any conduct that resembles bribing or threatening a witness may trigger a criminal prosecution. See Pen C §§133, 136.1, 137. However, an attorney advising a client may not be prosecuted under Pen C §137(c), which makes it a misdemeanor to advise another to give false testimony or material information or withhold true testimony or material information from a law enforcement official. Pen C §137(f).

For the scope of the Fifth Amendment privilege as it relates to liability to prosecution in other jurisdictions, see §49.27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§51.5 V. BURDEN OF PROOF; COURT'S POWER TO INQUIRE INTO FACTS

Burden of proof. A person who claims the privilege against self-incrimination has the burden of showing that the privilege applies. See Evid C §404. According to §404, the person claiming the privilege "has the burden of showing that the proffered evidence might tend to incriminate" and bars use of the evidence "unless it clearly appears to the court that the proffered evidence cannot possibly have a tendency to incriminate the person claiming the privilege." See also Blau v U.S. (1950) 340 US 159, 95 L Ed 170, 71 S Ct 223; People v Lucas (1995) 12 C4th 415, 454, 48 CR2d 525; 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Witnesses §§85-87 (4th ed 2000).

Ø Note: The court may not consider the likelihood of an actual prosecution in deciding whether to permit the privilege, and cannot force a witness to make incriminating statements because it believes actual prosecution is unlikely. The standard is whether a statement could be used against a witness, not whether or not it would be used. People v Seijas (2005) 36 C4th 291, 305, 30 CR3d 493.

Court's power to inquire. A court may make a particularized inquiry about a claim of privilege but may not require disclosure of the assertedly privileged information to rule on the claim. Evid C §915(a). With most privileges, including the privilege against self-incrimination, the court must sustain the claim if it is evident that a response, or an explanation of why the question cannot be answered, might result in an injurious disclosure. People v Lucas, supra. Note that with certain claims of privilege, e.g., informant confidentiality (see Evid C §1041) or attorney work product privilege (see CCP §2018.030), the court may require disclosure at an ex parte hearing in chambers (Evid C §915(b)). See also U.S. v Zolin (1989) 491 US 554, 105 L Ed 2d 469, 109 S Ct 2619 (approving in camera review of material allegedly subject to attorney-client privilege).

Standard of review of trial court's ruling on witness's assertion of privilege. When the trial court's ruling permitting a witness to assert the privilege affects the defendant's right to confront the witness, and the relevant facts are undisputed, the appellate court will independently review the trial court's ruling. People v Seijas (2005) 36 C4th 291, 304, 30 CR3d 493.

§51.6 VI. OPTIONS OF PARTY CALLING WITNESS WHEN PRIVILEGE IS ALLOWED

Prosecution calls witness. When a claim of privilege based on self-incrimination is allowed and the prosecutor is the party calling the witness, he or she may elect to grant explicit immunity to the witness under Pen C §1324 (in felony proceedings) or Pen C §1324.1 (in misdemeanor proceedings), as discussed in chap 49. See People v Williams (2008) 43 C4th 584, 621, 75 CR3d 691 (prosecutor not obligated to offer immunity to prosecution witness to assist defendant). Once immunity has been granted in a felony case, the claim of privilege must be disallowed and the witness must testify on pain of contempt. See Pen C §1324; People v Clemmons (1962) 208 CA2d 696, 25 CR 467. When immunity is granted in misdemeanor cases, a written agreement is required and contempt is not available if the witness refuses to testify (see §49.10). A criminal defendant has no standing to challenge an immunity agreement. People v Wisely (1990) 224 CA3d 939, 943, 274 CR 291.

A special situation arises when a witness is involved in a pending criminal case other than the one in which he or she is being called. In that event, a grant of immunity and subsequent threat of contempt (in a felony case) may not be sufficient to persuade the witness to testify on the prosecution's behalf, particularly when the witness is in physical custody as a result of the other pending matter. See §51.10.

If there is other testimony of the witness, e.g., a preliminary hearing transcript, the transcript may be admissible in place of testimony (see Evid C §1291), because a witness who refuses to testify on grounds of the privilege against self-incrimination is unavailable under Evid C §240(a)(1). See People v Williams (2008) 43 C4th 584, 614, 75 CR3d 691. However, under the Confrontation Clause, prior testimony is admissible on behalf of the prosecution only if the defendant has had a full and complete opportunity to cross-examine the witness. Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 124 S Ct 1354. The court's determination as to whether a defendant had that "full and complete opportunity" at a prior hearing is tied to the facts of the specific case. It is important to make a clear record of confrontation issues and objections ruled on by the trial court or else the confrontation issue will be forfeited on appeal. See Williams, 43 C4th at 619.

> Ø Note: A witness may waive the privilege against self-incrimination if he or she voluntarily testifies about a subject generally. The witness cannot then invoke the privilege when questioned about the details of the testimony in the same hearing. People v Williams, 43 C4th at 615, citing Mitchell v U.S. (1999) 526 US 314, 321, 143 L Ed 2d 424, 119 S Ct 1307.

Defense calls witness. When a defense witness successfully asserts the self-incrimination privilege, immunity is rarely an option because the prosecution's cooperation is required. See discussion in §49.15. As with a prosecution witness, earlier relevant testimony can be introduced. See People v Williams (2008) 43 C4th 584, 614, 75 CR3d 691; People v Seijas (2005) 36 C4th 291, 303, 30 CR3d 493. See also §51.2.

Jury not to draw inferences. The jury is not supposed to draw any inferences from a witness's exercise of the privilege against self-incrimination, whether about the witness's credibility or any other issue at trial. Evid C §913. The court is required, therefore, at the request of an adversely affected party, to instruct the jury that it may not draw any inferences from the exercise of the privilege. Evid C §913(b); People v Mincey (1992) 2 C4th 408, 441, 6 CR2d 822. See CALCRIM 320. The California Supreme Court has held that Evid C §913 does not infringe on a defendant's constitutional rights to due process and to present a defense. People v Mincey, supra. See also People v Frierson (1991) 53 C3d 730, 743, 280 CR 440.

§51.7 VII. REPRESENTING WITNESS WITH CRIMINAL CASES PENDING WHO IS NOT CODEFENDANT

A witness who is a defendant in a pending criminal case may be subpoenaed (or asked) to testify on behalf of a defendant in another case. There is a risk in this situation that the prosecutor may retaliate by pursuing the criminal case pending against the defendant-witness more zealously, particularly when the same prosecutor, or prosecutor's office, is involved in the witness's case and that of the defendant on whose behalf the witness proposes to testify. If this risk is thought to be present, counsel for the witness should carefully discuss it with the witness-client. Assessment of the risk of prosecutorial retaliation may influence a decision to invoke the Fifth Amendment privilege in a borderline case (see §51.14).

VIII. REPRESENTING WITNESS WHO IS OFFERED IMMUNITY

§51.8 A. Attorney Needs Special Expertise

Representing a witness who is being asked to testify for the prosecution in exchange for leniency requires much more than a knowledge of the legal principles involved. It is common for the prosecution to ask for the testimony before making a firm agreement to reduce or drop the charges in the witness's case. Counsel for the potential witness needs to be familiar with the practices (and players) in a particular jurisdiction to know whether a prosecutor's offer to assist the witness after he or she testified can be trusted.

© The Regents of the University of California

§51.9 B. Plea Bargain Options; Security

Counsel for a witness offered immunity should advise the client of the risks attendant to becoming a snitch. See §§51.10-51.11. Often, a witness-defendant will elect to suffer contempt sanctions rather than risk the extralegal consequences of being branded an informant. A witness who testifies against a prison gang member may not be safe from harm, out of custody or in state prison. Counsel should negotiate necessary measures to protect the client from retaliation. The main options are discussed in §51.10.

If an informant-defendant is to testify, counsel should attempt to strike a bargain with the prosecutor for immunity, a reduced sentence, dismissed charge, or other benefit, including special security arrangements, in exchange for the client's testimony against the target defendant.

© The Regents of the University of California

§51.10 C. Options to Protect Informant

If a witness is or will be incarcerated following testimony against a criminal defendant (as when counsel for the witness has negotiated a reduction in sentence instead of outright release), these measures are possible ways to protect the witness:

- A guaranty of protective custody (PC). Protective custody usually keeps the witness alive. PC status, however, is often considered undesirable because the witness-prisoner is then formally marked by the authorities as an informant (one who has a "snitch jacket"). The witness-prisoner may also be deprived of benefits enjoyed by other prisoners, such as free time (protected prisoners are often locked down in their cells 23 of 24 hours of the day), access to phones, access to other inmates, access to jail or prison programs, and may be denied the work-time sentence reduction provisions of Pen C §4019.
- Transfer to county custody in another California jurisdiction. Counties are authorized to maintain facilities to provide security for witnesses who are intimidated or threatened. Govt C §25360.
- Transfer to another state's penal authority. This step requires the full cooperation of the authorities in both states and is rarely achieved without aggressive prosecutorial intervention.
- Assignment to a remote state prison facility in California. This step requires the cooperation of the Director of the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR).
- "Keep separate" orders from certain inmates or gangs.
- Placement in a special federal witness protection program (see §51.17).

For cases involving actual or potential witness intimidation, the trial court should be asked to issue a protective order under Pen C §136.2. This order can be issued to a defendant, another subpoenaed witness, or anyone else entering the courtroom. Pen C §136.2(a).

§51.11 D. Plea Bargains That Are Not Explicit

A district attorney has inherent powers to grant general or limited immunity without complying with the formalities of Pen C §1342. People v Superior Court (Crook) (1978) 83 CA3d 335, 339, 147 CR 856. Many experienced prosecutors are understandably reluctant to make an explicit plea bargain guaranty to obtain an informant's testimony, because such an arrangement becomes the subject of discovery and proper cross-examination by the accused's counsel. See, e.g., People v Ruthford (1975) 14 C3d 399, 405, 121 CR 261, overruled on other grounds in In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 545, 37 CR2d 446.

Ø Note: It is improper to withhold information about an executed explicit plea bargain guaranty between the prosecutor and the witness's counsel until after the witness has testified. People v Phillips (1985) 41 C3d 29, 48, 222 CR 127. Penal Code §1127a requires a prosecutor to record any benefits promised or delivered to an "in-custody informant" and to disclose that record to the court and criminal defense counsel. See also Pen C §§1191.25, 4001.1.

This impeachment is thought to impair the credibility of an informant-witness who has been given an inducement to testify. Thus, defense counsel representing a witness may be asked to participate in an arrangement in which the benefit to the witness is not explicit ("Trust me—I'll do the right thing"). Whether and to what extent such an arrangement can or should be entered into by defense counsel is a matter for the informed judgment of counsel experienced in the local jurisdiction.

There is a clear ethical duty to disclose to the defense any agreements with witnesses. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-220; People v Phillips (1985) 41 C3d 29, 47, 222 CR 127. See also People v Pensinger (1991) 52 C3d 1210, 1272, 278 CR 640 (prosecutor should have corrected false impression left by informant's testimony about benefits; harmless error); People v Morris (1988) 46 C3d 1, 30 n14, 249 CR 119, disapproved on other grounds in In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 545, 37 CR2d 446. Ethical problems presented to the prosecution in this situation are beyond the scope of this chapter. See Professionalism: A Sourcebook of Ethics and Civil Liability Principles for Prosecutors, chap 7 (2001) from the California District Attorneys Association.

§51.12 E. Disclosures Made Outside Court Not Covered by Immunity Grant

If part of the inducement for a witness to testify is an explicit grant of immunity, defense counsel should keep in mind that disclosures made outside court, e.g., in discussions with prosecutors or law enforcement agents or in testimony, are typically not covered by judicial immunity orders. It is good practice for defense counsel to obtain a written agreement setting out the scope of the contemplated immunity and of the questioning, especially if there is any concern about law enforcement's later use of the conversations or proffers of testimony (or leads developed therefrom).

© The Regents of the University of California

§51.13 IX. IN-CUSTODY INFORMANTS

If the prosecution calls an "in-custody" informant as a witness, the prosecutor must file with the trial court, and provide to defense counsel before trial, "a written statement setting out any and all consideration promised to, or received by, the in-custody informant." Pen C §1127a(c). See also Pen C §1191.25. A prosecutor who offers a benefit to an informant-witness in exchange for testimony is under an affirmative duty to disclose the arrangement to the defendant against whom the informant-witness will testify. See Giglio v U.S. (1972) 405 US 150, 31 L Ed 2d 104, 92 S Ct 763; People v Ruthford (1975) 14 C3d 399, 406, 121 CR 261, overruled on other grounds in In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 545, 37 CR2d 446.

A jailhouse informant who expects to have the charges against him or her reduced or dropped altogether has a compelling motive to testify falsely. Given the potential for abuse, many prosecuting agencies have developed specific policies to deal with the use of jailhouse informant testimony. The specifics of these policies vary among agencies and jurisdictions. See also Pen C §1127a (on request, court must instruct that testimony of in-custody informant should be viewed with caution and given close scrutiny).

For further discussion of in-custody informants, see §§49.16-49.17.

§51.14 X. REPRESENTING WITNESS IN BORDERLINE FIFTH AMENDMENT CASE

A borderline case of invocation of the Fifth Amendment privilege occurs when the privilege may technically be stretched to cover the situation, but there is little or no realistic chance that the witness's testimony would actually result in a criminal prosecution.

Ø Example: A witness who is not charged with possession of narcotics reveals during testimony that she has committed that offense. If the narcotics are no longer in existence, there may be no other proof of the corpus delicti of the crime. If so, the witness's admissions could not be used, over proper objection, in a criminal prosecution for possession. See People v Campbell (1982) 137 CA3d 867, 187 CR 340.

Great caution should be used in analyzing these situations and advising the witness because (1) counsel may not have access to all relevant information in the hands of the authorities that would govern prosecutorial decision, and (2) a witness may be asked to testify about a transaction that is not subject to direct criminal prosecution for some reason (such as a grant of immunity, the absence of a corpus, or the expiration of the statute of limitations), but may nevertheless be admissible in a separate criminal prosecution, such as a probation or parole violation hearing, or because the transaction evinces a pattern of conduct that would be admissible to show modus operandi, criminal intent, identity, or another factor relevant to guilt. See §§24.52-24.55. See also Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 35 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). All doubts should be resolved in favor of exercising the privilege.

§51.15 XI. WHEN COUNSEL MAY NOT ADVISE WITNESS ON SELF-INCRIMINATION ISSUES

Advice by the prosecution. A member of the California State Bar has an obligation to refrain from representing conflicting interests. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310. Accordingly, a prosecutor should not advise a witness on the scope or application of the Fifth Amendment privilege. See In re Martin (1987) 44 C3d 1, 41 n8, 241 CR 263. This bar does not prevent a prosecutor from perceiving that the subject matter of future testimony would incriminate a witness and that a grant of immunity should thus be considered. If a grant of immunity is not appropriate, the prosecutor should advise the trial court that the witness may need counsel's assistance.

If the prosecutor grants immunity to a witness, the prosecution is free to warn the witness about the contempt sanction.

A prosecutor must not use threats or intimidation to cause a defense witness to invoke the privilege against self-incrimination and refuse to testify on the defendant's behalf. Doing so is misconduct and may constitute reversible error. People v Warren (1984) 161 CA3d 961, 207 CR 912; People v Bryant (1984) 157 CA3d 582, 203 CR 733.

Ø Note: Likewise, a court's admonition to a witness regarding self-incrimination cannot be so intimidating as to "effectively drive a witness off the stand" in violation of a defendant's Sixth Amendment rights. Webb v Texas (1972) 409 US 95, 98, 34 L Ed 2d 330, 333, 93 S Ct 351 (per curiam).

Advice by the defense. When defense counsel knows or learns that the testimony of a potential defense witness may incriminate that witness, the attorney should not advise the witness on the scope or application of the Fifth Amendment privilege. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310. The attorney's duty to the client poses a clear conflict of interest in this situation.

Ø Note: Defense counsel should be extremely careful about suggesting to the trial court the need for a witness to have counsel appointed regarding a potential Fifth Amendment privilege, especially when there is former testimony that could be offered against the defendant if a Fifth Amendment privilege claim by a witness is upheld. A defense counsel's request and supporting argument that counsel be appointed for a witness because of a potential Fifth Amendment privilege claim was held by the California Supreme Court to be a waiver of the appropriateness of that claim on appeal. People v Seijas (2005) 36 C4th 291, 301, 30 CR3d 493. In Seijas, after the prosecutor refused a grant of immunity, the trial court found the witness to be unavailable because of the privilege claim and then allowed in the former testimony of the witness from a preliminary hearing. In the trial court, the defense attorney in Seijas fought for the finding that the witness had a Fifth Amendment privilege. In finding that the defense waived the right to challenge on appeal whether the privilege even applied, the supreme court pointed out that the defense attorney had never raised the issue at the trial court level.

When the defense seeks to call as an exculpatory witness someone who faces criminal charges in the same or another criminal jurisdiction, several ethical problems surface, especially when the witness is represented by counsel. A member of the State Bar may not interview another attorney's client on the subject matter of that representation. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-100. Specifically, the rule requires that neither direct nor indirect communication "about the subject of the representation" occur without the other lawyer's consent. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-100(A). This applies both to defense counsel and to the prosecutor. Practice varies on interpreting the scope of this restriction; defense counsel who seeks to interview a witness represented by an attorney may seek to construe the subject matter narrowly. Caution should be used when the nature of the pending criminal charge against the witness is such that the subject matter of the interview with the witness might arguably be admissible in the witness's criminal case.

When the same attorney or law firm represents both the witness and the defendant on whose behalf the interview is sought, a conflict of interest may arise if it appears necessary to advise the witness on the scope of any Fifth Amendment privilege. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310. When no possible incrimination question is present and the witness to be interviewed is not adverse to the defendant, there may not be an actual conflict of interest. Counsel should warn a prospective witness-client if there is any appreciable risk of retaliation by the prosecutor that could result from one client's testifying on behalf of another.

© The Regents of the University of California

§51.16 XII. USING SUBPOENA TO SECURE WITNESS'S ATTENDANCE

Occasionally, defense counsel has information suggesting that a witness might be able to give helpful testimony, but the witness will not agree to an interview, or it would be unethical for the attorney to interview the witness. Counsel for a defendant who wishes to obtain another criminal defendant's testimony is free to subpoena the witness or secure a removal order for the witness to appear at a trial or hearing. See Evid C §700; Pen C §1328(a). See also Pen C §§1334-1334.6. This is true even if ethical rules or other considerations would bar an out-of-court conversation between counsel or counsel's investigator and the witness in question. See Cal Const art I, §15. See also Pen C §686(3).

Ø Note: At the hearing or trial, counsel should advise the trial court that this witness is represented by another attorney.

§51.17 XIII. STATE AND FEDERAL WITNESS PROTECTION: PITFALLS AND TRAPS

California's Witness Relocation and Assistance Program (Pen C §§14020-14033) is administered by the Attorney General, who issues guidelines for reimbursing state and local agencies for the costs of providing witness protection services. Pen C §§14022, 14027. Local law enforcement agencies, however, usually make the actual arrangements and should be contacted first. Protection under the program may be given when credible evidence exists of a substantial danger that a witness may suffer intimidation or retaliatory violence in criminal proceedings. Pen C §14022. A "witness" includes persons summoned or expected to be summoned to testify for the prosecution in a criminal matter, including grand jury proceedings. Accomplices may also be eligible for protection. The witness's family, friends, and associates who are considered to be endangered may also be provided with protection. Pen C §14021.

Any state witness protection agreement must be in writing and must state the conditions set forth in Pen C §14025. The State of California, including its counties and cities and their agents, is not liable for any condition in the agreement that cannot reasonably be met because of a witness's commission of a crime during participation in the program. Pen C §14025.5. The state, counties, and cities and their officers and employees are immune from civil liability for any decision declining or revoking protection to a witness. Pen C §14028.

Prisoners in state institutions are now eligible to participate in the Federal Witness Protection Program. 18 USC §§3521(a)(1), 3526(b). The federal Witness Security Reform Act of 1984 (18 USC §§3521-3528) authorizes the U.S. Attorney General to provide protection to state and local witnesses if the state agrees to reimburse the federal government. Detailed provisions implementing protection and relocation are set out in the Act, and regulations exist to implement the process. The witness protection program is discretionary. Piechowicz v U.S. (4th Cir 1989) 885 F2d 1207 (Federal Witness Protection Program is "discretionary function" insulating federal agents and attorneys from liability).

Before undertaking any discussion with the government about federal witness protection, counsel should read all of the United States Attorney's Manual: Criminal Resource Manual, 9-21.100, Witness Security. The manual is available on the Department of Justice's website at http://www.usdoj.gov.

Dealing with the Federal Witness Protection Program presents many pitfalls for the uninformed practitioner. It is essential that any state defense attorney or prosecutor who will use it have experience with its regulations and knowledge of case law and practical operations in the area. For instance, when requesting information about benefits received by a government witness, it is important to be aware that the federal government has many different types of witness protection programs. If only the "Federal Witness Protection Program" is requested, no results may be forthcoming, because the witness may be in an Informant Program or other named program. Each federal agency may also have grants or monies for informants or witnesses that are completely separate from the "Federal Witness Protection Program."

Counsel should never rely exclusively on any representation by a law enforcement agent or prosecutor, either state or federal, as to how the Federal Witness Protection Program will handle a particular client. Only the U.S. Marshals Service is authorized to make promises concerning individual witnesses. A witness must be sponsored by either the U.S. Marshals Service or the U.S. Attorney's office. Sponsorship can be negotiated as part of a plea bargain agreement. See United States Attorney's Manual, 9-21.100.

§52.1 I. OVERVIEW

Immigration consequences of criminal conviction. Strategic decisions made by an immigrant's criminal defense attorney are crucial; strategic plea bargaining or amelioration of criminal convictions may soon be the only avenues that remain for many noncitizen defendants to avoid removal or permanent bars to immigration, which can be far worse than the criminal penalties.

Ø Note: The term "removal" now includes both deportability under 8 USC §1227 and inadmissibility under 8 USC §1182. The process of excluding someone from the United States now also occurs during a "removal" hearing. The term for "excludable" is "inadmissible." See Pub L 104-208, 110 Stat 3009.

Immigration consequences of a criminal conviction can include removal, permanent ineligibility for lawful immigration status, extended or even indefinite periods of immigration detention, and permanent separation from family members who are U.S. citizens. No matter how long one has lived in the United States, and regardless of whether that residence has been in accordance with the law, convicted noncitizens can be ordered deported and will sometimes be permanently ineligible to return. With proper planning, however, defense counsel representing a noncitizen in a pending criminal case may be able to obtain a disposition that avoids serious immigration consequences.

Ø Note: Practitioners should not rely exclusively on this chapter but should seek guidance from immigration attorneys experienced in crime-related issues or from the Immigrant Legal Resource Center, discussed in "Resources," below.

Reentering the United States. All noncitizens, even those legally admitted to the United States on a permanent basis, are subject to the grounds of inadmissibility when entering the United States. Any trip outside the United States has the potential of bringing the existence of one or more of these grounds to the attention of the Department of Homeland Security's Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services. This means that a lawful permanent resident who goes outside of the United States can be forever excluded and never allowed to return to home, job, and family if he or she is inadmissible. In addition, corollary (but not identical) grounds of deportability exist and can make any noncitizen removable, regardless of the legality of his or her latest admission to the United States. As a rule, there are no statute of limitations or laches defenses applicable in immigration law.

Defense counsel's duty to noncitizen client. Because of the structure of immigration law, a defense attorney's goal is always to seek a result that avoids creating a ground of inadmissibility or deportability, or an outcome that could result in a bar to potential future immigration relief. Defense counsel must also avoid immigration consequences while pursuing the traditional goals of shorter sentences and less serious dispositions, since a noncitizen with a removable disposition will very likely have an immigration hold that will sabotage many standard criminal dispositions, such as drug treatment, domestic violence classes, work furlough, release to probation or parole, and the like. The first step in analyzing a case is to find out the defendant's current or potential immigration status. This information is necessary to identify the specific immigration effects of a disposition. Counsel must investigate the client's immigration status, research the immigration law, and inform the client very specifically about the actual, not merely the possible, consequences. In addition, counsel must actively attempt to avoid unfavorable consequences if possible. Anything less constitutes ineffective assistance of counsel. People v Bautista (2004) 115 CA4th 229, 241, 8 CR3d 862.

Because even relatively minor offenses (e.g., possession of a small amount of a controlled substance) can carry drastic immigration consequences, an especially vigorous defense may be required for a noncitizen. Defense counsel may need to arrange an unusual plea or sentencing agreement or take the case to trial. Some defendants are willing to risk or sacrifice all other considerations to avoid adverse immigration consequences. The defense may have to be conducted completely differently from the typical criminal defense of a U.S. citizen.

The court must advise a defendant pleading guilty or no contest that, if he or she is a noncitizen, the plea could result in deportation, denial of naturalization, or exclusion from reentry. Pen C §1016.5. Defense counsel must go beyond this general warning, however, and advise the client of the actual, specific immigration consequences the plea will trigger in the defendant's case, and attempt to defend against them. See, e.g., People v Barocio (1989) 216 CA3d 99, 264 CR 573; People v Soriano (1987) 194 CA3d 1470, 240 CR 328. (Note that the Judicial Recommendations Against Deportation (JRADs) discussed in Barocio and Soriano are no longer available; see discussion in §52.11.) In fact, defense counsel's incorrect advice to the client on the immigration consequences of a criminal case can constitute ineffective assistance of counsel, requiring reversal if prejudice is shown. In re Resendiz (2001) 25 C4th 230, 105 CR2d 431. This issue is currently pending before the Supreme Court in Padilla v Kentucky (cert granted 2009) 173 L Ed 2d 582, 129 S Ct 1317.

Prosecutors may request that a defendant stipulate to deportation as part of a plea bargain. A stipulation to deportation made by a defendant in state or federal criminal proceedings will be considered a deportation for purposes of enhancing his or her sentence following a subsequent conviction of the federal offense of illegal reentry after conviction of an aggravated felony and deportation. 8 USC §1326(b). See discussion in §52.8.

Resources. This chapter is an overview rather than an exhaustive discussion. Counsel should obtain expert advice on individual cases. The Immigrant Legal Resource Center (http://www.ilrc.org) in San Francisco will provide consultation to attorneys and agencies on the immigration consequences of criminal cases, for a fee. For information, call (415) 255-9499. The address is 1663 Mission Street, Suite 602, San Francisco, CA 94103. For referrals to immigration attorneys, contact the American Immigration Lawyers Association, 918 F Street NW, Washington, DC 20004, (202) 216-2400 (http://www.aila.org); the local bar association; or the National Immigration Project of the National Lawyers Guild, 14 Beacon Street, Suite 602, Boston, MA 02108, (617) 227-9727 (http://www.nationalimmigrationproject.org). Although community agencies generally cannot advise criminal defense counsel on questions involving the adverse immigration consequences of convictions, they may be able to accept an indigent defendant's immigration case after the criminal issues have been resolved.

A chart detailing the immigration consequences of common California offenses, together with notes describing plea strategies in criminal court for immigrants, is available without charge from the Immigrant Legal Resource Center at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php. This chart is frequently updated. A federal chart is available at the website of the National Immigration Project of the National Lawyers Guild (http://www.nationalimmigrationproject.org).

Defense counsel should also consult an in-depth research guide, such as Brady et al., Defending Immigrants in the Ninth Circuit: Impact of Crimes Under California and Other State Laws (10th ed 2008) (Defending Immigrants), which contains advice for criminal counsel tailored to California law and is available from the Immigrant Legal Resource Center in San Francisco at the above address; Kesselbrenner & Rosenberg, Immigration Law and Crimes (2009), available from West Group, COP, 610 Opperman Drive, Eagan, MN 55123, (800) 344-5009 (http://west.thomson.com/store); or Tooby & Rollin, Criminal Defense of Immigrants (2007), Tooby, California Post-Conviction Relief for Immigrants (2009), available from Law Offices of Norton Tooby, 6333 Telegraph Avenue, Suite 200, Oakland, CA 94609, (510) 601-1300, and Tooby's Guide to Criminal Immigration Law (2008), available without charge as a pdf file at http://www.NortonTooby.com.

II. UNIQUE ASPECTS OF NONCITIZEN DEFENDANT CASES

§52.2 A. Checklist: Basic Procedure for Criminal Defense of Immigrants

- Ascertain client's nationality and immigration status.

The starting point for criminal defense of immigrants is always to ascertain and verify the client's nationality. This can be done by obtaining a reliable answer to the question, "Are you a citizen of the United States?" This must be done in every single criminal case, because the nationality of the defendant is often not obvious. He or she may be Canadian or may have immigrated to the United States as a child and grown up here and thus be superficially indistinguishable from a native-born "American." About 20 percent of the time, a California criminal defendant will not be a citizen of the United States and will need the special defense outlined in this chapter.

It is crucial to obtain reliable evidence of nationality. Many clients may give an incorrect answer to the citizenship question because they misunderstand it. For example, a client may believe the concept of "citizen" includes a lawful permanent resident with papers legalizing his or her immigration status in the United States (see People v Castro-Vasquez (2007) 148 CA4th 1240, 1246 n6, 56 CR3d 406) or a client may truly be unaware that he or she is not a U.S. citizen due to having been brought here as an infant and never being told of their citizen status. It is crucial to verify that the defendant's stated immigration status is accurate. Counsel should explain the importance of obtaining a correct answer and ask where the client was born and (if born abroad) how he or she obtained U.S. citizenship. If the defendant has any immigration documents, counsel should photocopy them and check with immigration counsel if necessary to verify immigration status.

It is also important to learn whether one or both of the defendant's parents (or the sole custodial parent) were naturalized while the defendant was an unmarried lawful permanent resident under 18. If so, the defendant may have automatically become a U.S. citizen when the parent(s) naturalized, even without filing any application or any official government action. A child may also under certain circumstances acquire U.S. citizenship from his or her U.S. citizen parents, even if born abroad. See Brady et al., Defending Immigrants §11.20 (10th ed 2008).

- Obtain from the client the information necessary to formulate a strategy to avoid unnecessary immigration consequences.

The client can provide initial information on his or her immigration status that counsel will need to assess what immigration effect various possible convictions and sentences will have. For a suggested "Basic Immigration Status Questionnaire," see §52.3. Counsel will also need the client's rap sheet and charge of conviction, plea, and sentence for significant prior convictions, as well as information on the current charges, likely plea bargains, and likely sentences.

- Call an immigration expert or research the exact immigration consequences of any proposed plea or option.

Calling an expert is the easiest way to obtain up-to-date information on the immigration consequences of the various possible alternative dispositions and sentences. Unless counsel has personally researched the specific immigration questions facing the individual client, using up-to-date resource material, expert immigration advice is absolutely necessary. It is very dangerous simply to send the client to an immigration lawyer, because the best strategy for the defense of the criminal case must be determined by criminal and immigration counsel conferring together. As a layperson, the client may be unable to understand and convey the complexities of immigration law from the immigration lawyer to the criminal lawyer, and certainly cannot relay information in the back-and-forth discussion necessary to formulate a joint strategy. It is therefore necessary for criminal and immigration counsel to speak directly to one another after first assembling the necessary information.

Potential adverse immigration consequences may be eliminated or ameliorated through a variety of techniques, often without sacrificing traditional criminal defense goals. Criminal defense counsel should establish an ongoing relationship with an office such as the Immigrant Legal Resource Center (see §52.1) or a specific immigration attorney with experience of criminal problems of immigrants to receive consistent advice in this area as needed.

- Explain the specific immigration consequences to the client.

Counsel must discover the actual, specific immigration consequences—e.g., disqualification from political asylum or naturalization, loss of lawful permanent resident status, deportation, permanent ineligibility for lawful status, disqualification from waivers—and explain them clearly to the client. A general or uninformed presentation is insufficient. See, e.g., People v Barocio (1989) 216 CA3d 99, 264 CR 573; People v Soriano (1987) 194 CA3d 1470, 240 CR 328 (client given general Pen C §1016.5 advice; conviction nonetheless vacated on grounds of ineffective counsel for failure to warn about actual consequences).

- Ask the client how high a priority he or she places on the immigration consequences.

Once the client understands what the actual immigration consequences will be, he or she may or may not make them a defense priority. Some clients are not willing to risk more time in jail in an effort to safeguard their immigration status. Others place the right to remain with their families in the United States as their highest priority and will sacrifice almost any other consideration. Such clients may be willing to plead to additional counts or serve extra time in custody, for example, to alter the conviction to one that will not trigger deportation. These difficult choices must be made by the client, once he or she is fully informed.

- Attempt to avoid the adverse immigration consequences.

It is not enough simply to tell the client the problem: it is necessary to attempt to achieve a solution. See People v Bautista (2004) 115 CA4th 229, 241, 8 CR3d 862. Placing a high priority on immigration consequences may cause a drastic change in defense strategy. First, counsel must determine precisely what disposition will minimize or eliminate immigration consequences. Doing so requires a good knowledge of the immigration law or expert advice. Some ideas for safe dispositions are discussed in this chapter. They can include diversion without a guilty plea (see §52.29), dismissal, acquittal, delay of a conviction, a carefully framed sentencing disposition, or a plea to another "safe" offense, even one only tenuously connected, or not connected at all, to the offense charged. For a comprehensive discussion of how to avoid all grounds of deportation, see Tooby & Rollin, Safe Havens: How to Identify and Construct Non-Deportable Convictions (2005).

> Ø Note: Deferred entry of judgment under Pen C §1000 or drug program probation under Proposition 36 constitutes a conviction under immigration law, even after dismissal, if a guilty plea has been entered at any time. See Murillo-Espinoza v INS (9th Cir 2001) 261 F3d 771; 8 USC §1101(a)(48)(A). Once dismissal occurs, the conviction has been eliminated for immigration purposes only if it is a conviction of first-offense simple possession or certain other minor first drug offenses, and only if the client has never violated that probation. See §§52.14, 52.29. Preplea diversion for drug offenses is available in some counties under Pen C §1000.5. On diversion and deferred entry of judgment, see chap 27.

Vigorous criminal defense work—including strategies not normally used in defense of a minor charge—may be required. For example, clients may choose to take minor cases to trial, even if there is only a slim possibility of acquittal, if the alternative is certain deportation, or to delay the finality of the conviction by appeal so the client can spend more time with his or her family before removal.

- Advise client not to talk about noncitizen status.

Counsel should advise the defendant, and his or her family, not to volunteer or admit to noncitizen status when speaking with anyone, particularly court personnel. See In re Adolfo M. (1990) 225 CA3d 1225, 1230, 275 CR 619 (juvenile court found that minor was noncitizen based on his mother's statements to probation officer; minor transferred to Mexican juvenile authorities).

§52.3 B. Interviewing Noncitizen Criminal Defendants and Basic Immigration Status Questionnaire

Defense counsel should inform a noncitizen criminal defendant of the following rights:

- The right to refuse to speak with immigration officials or to answer any questions about country of birth, nationality, immigration status, or manner of entry into the United States. This right is based on the privilege against self-incrimination, because certain immigration violations also carry criminal penalties. See, e.g., Bong Youn Choy v Barber (9th Cir 1960) 279 F2d 642; Estes v Potter (5th Cir 1950) 183 F2d 865. Persons who have reentered the United States after deportation for criminal convictions should especially decline to speak with the DHS, which may interview them in jail if they are incarcerated for another offense. The DHS conducts interviews to identify detainees for federal criminal prosecution for unlawful reentry under 8 USC §1326(b)(2), which can carry a potential 20-year federal prison sentence (see §§52.8, 52.63), as well as to identify persons for removal.
- The right not to reveal the defendant's immigration status to a judge. Pen C §1016.5(d).

§52.4 C. Main Defense Goals in Representing Juveniles

Dispositions in juvenile proceedings do not constitute convictions for immigration purposes. Matter of Ramirez-Rivero (BIA 1981) 18 I&N Dec 135; Matter of C.M. (BIA 1953) 5 I&N Dec 327. Thus, a finding of delinquency in juvenile court will not be considered a conviction to make a juvenile deportable or inadmissible, or for purposes of the three-misdemeanor/one-felony bar to amnesty and similar bars in other programs. A conviction in adult court, however, of a person who was under 18 at the time of the offense will constitute a conviction for immigration purposes. Vargas-Hernandez v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 497 F3d 919.

Family Unity benefits. In a significant departure from the rule against using juvenile delinquency dispositions in immigration proceedings, however, the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (IIRIRA) (Pub L 104-208, 110 Stat 3009) denies Family Unity benefits to persons who commit an act of juvenile delinquency that if committed by an adult would be a violent felony involving the use or attempted use of physical force against another or a felony involving a substantial risk that physical force against another will be used in its commission. IIRIRA §383.

The 1996 statute applies the new Family Unity rule to benefits "granted or extended" after September 30, 1996. See IIRIRA §383. Arguably, the new rule applies only to acts of juvenile delinquency committed after September 30, 1996, because there is a general presumption against retroactive application of laws. See INS v St. Cyr (2001) 533 US 289, 150 L Ed 2d 347, 121 S Ct 2271.

In the future, Congress may well single out drug trafficking as a juvenile offense that triggers special immigration penalties and apply that provision retroactively. Consequently, whenever possible, juvenile defenders should, as with crimes involving violence, avoid dispositions finding trafficking.

Juvenile dispositions might be held to bring a noncitizen within a conduct-based ground of inadmissibility or deportability, i.e., one that does not depend on a conviction. See §52.50 for discussion of these grounds. For example, one ground for deportation and inadmissibility applies to persons who are or have been drug addicts or drug abusers. 8 USC §§1182(a)(1)(A)(iv), 1227(a)(2)(B)(ii). The definition of "drug abuser" has not been firmly established, but some U.S. consulates currently define it as anything more than a one-time experimentation with an illegal drug. In juvenile proceedings, the best course is not to admit any drug offense. If an admission is inevitable, it is better to admit possession than sale or possession for sale. Admissions of drug addiction might be held to be a basis for inadmissibility or deportation.

A finding in juvenile court of a moral turpitude offense might bar the immigrant from later receiving the benefit of the petty offense exception to inadmissibility, based on a later adult moral turpitude conviction, because the petty offense exception is available only to those who have committed only one crime involving moral turpitude (i.e., the current adult conviction). 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(ii)(II). See §§52.38-52.40.

Juveniles bound over to adult court after a hearing under Welf & I C §707 and tried or convicted by plea there will suffer convictions under immigration law. See Brady et al., Defending Immigrants, chap 2A (10th ed 2008).

Ø Note: Review the defendant's entire criminal history before making a disposition.

It may be possible to avoid these immigration consequences by having the juvenile court record sealed, because the DHS is thereby precluded from seeing the record. See Welf & I C §826. The DHS may, however, have other sources of information, in which event sealing the record may be ineffective. Juveniles who are tried as adults may also be eligible for sealing of records under Pen C §1203.45 or Welf & I C §§1772 and 1179. An expungement, under Welf & I C §§1179, 1772, of a first-offense simple possession conviction will eliminate it for all immigration purposes. See Lujan-Armendariz v INS (9th Cir 2000) 222 F3d 728. Sealing the records may eliminate evidence that the defendant has suffered a conviction of a drug offense as well as a crime involving moral turpitude. Matter of Lima (BIA 1976) 15 I&N Dec 661; Matter of Andrade (BIA 1974) 14 I&N Dec 651. See §52.14.

Ø Note: Juveniles in dependency proceedings and, possibly, delinquency proceedings may be eligible for permanent residency as "special immigrant juveniles." 8 USC §1101(a)(27)(J). Juveniles who have been abused by a parent who is either a permanent resident or a U.S. citizen may be eligible for permanent residency under the Violence Against Women Act (see 8 USC §§1154(a)(1)(A)(iv), (B)(iii), 1229b(b)(2)), even if they are not in dependency proceedings. See §52.61.

D. Noncitizen Status

§52.5 1. Noncitizen Status as Affecting Bail

A defendant's lack of citizenship may be a factor justifying high postconviction bail. Bail on appeal of $200,000 was upheld in People v Marghzar (1987) 192 CA3d 1129, 239 CR 130, because, among other things, the defendant was not a U.S. citizen.

Ø Note: The DHS has the authority to place immigration holds on certain noncitizens. See 8 CFR §§236.1, 287.7. See also §5.42.

© The Regents of the University of California

§52.6 2. Noncitizen Status as Affecting Other Issues

Denial of probation. Trial courts may properly consider a defendant's status as an undocumented noncitizen when deciding whether to grant probation. People v Sanchez (1987) 190 CA3d 224, 235 CR 264 (probation denied).

Probation conditions. A probation condition requiring the defendant to leave the state is unconstitutional banishment. Alhusainy v Superior Court (2006) 143 CA4th 385, 48 CR3d 914. The failure to appear in court for a review hearing is not a probation violation if it is impossible for the undocumented noncitizen probationer to appear because he or she is in immigration custody. People v Cervantes (2009) 175 CA4th 291, 95 CR3d 858.

California Rehabilitation Center (CRC). The CRC may properly exclude an undocumented noncitizen because he or she would probably not be available to complete the outpatient component of the program. People v Arciga (1986) 182 CA3d 991, 227 CR 611. For immigration purposes, such a commitment is adverse in any event because it defines the individual, in effect, as a "drug addict" and thus deportable and inadmissible. See §52.50.

Proposition 36. In People v Espinoza (2003) 107 CA4th 1069, 132 CR2d 670, the court of appeal held that Proposition 36 probation was not mandatory for a defendant who was an undocumented noncitizen with a substantial criminal history, because it was impossible to condition probation on completion of a drug treatment program in view of the substantial likelihood that the defendant would be deported.

Illegal detention. Border stops are deemed reasonable. U.S. v Ramsey (1977) 431 US 606, 619, 52 L Ed 2d 617, 628, 97 S Ct 1972. Stops by border agents at reasonably located, fixed checkpoints are deemed reasonable. U.S. v Martinez-Fuerte (1976) 428 US 543, 562, 49 L Ed 2d 1116, 1131, 96 S Ct 3074. Other immigration detentions, however, e.g., stops by roving patrols of border patrol agents, must be supported by specific, articulable facts giving rise to a reasonable suspicion. U.S. v Brignoni-Ponce (1975) 422 US 873, 884, 45 L Ed 2d 607, 618, 95 S Ct 2574; U.S. v Garcia-Camacho (9th Cir 1995) 53 F3d 244; People v Valenzuela (1994) 28 CA4th 817, 33 CR2d 802 (stop at agricultural station must be supported by probable cause; single factor of Mexican appearance insufficient to support belief that person is illegal alien).

§52.7 E. Interpreters

Criminal defendants who do not understand English are entitled to have an interpreter throughout the criminal proceedings. Cal Const art I, §14. The interpreter must be available exclusively for the defendant; the defendant cannot be required to share an interpreter with others, e.g., witnesses. People v Aguilar (1984) 35 C3d 785, 200 CR 908 (conviction reversed; trial court "borrowed" interpreter to translate state witnesses' testimony); People v Baez (1987) 195 CA3d 1431, 241 CR 435 (conviction reversed because error not harmless beyond reasonable doubt). The court in People v Rodriguez (1986) 42 C3d 1005, 1013, 232 CR 132, held that it is best that each defendant have an interpreter assigned to him or her who remains with the defendant throughout the proceedings.

A mere request for an interpreter does not necessarily mean that the defendant is entitled to one. The defendant must show a lack of sufficient English. In re Raymundo B. (1988) 203 CA3d 1447, 250 CR 812.

There is no right to a certified interpreter, only to a competent one. People v Estrada (1986) 176 CA3d 410, 221 CR 922. See Evid C §§750-755.5 for special rules on interpreters and translators. See also Govt C §§68560.5, 68561-68562, 68565-68566 (requirements for court interpreters).

English-speaking defendants do not have the right to have their own interpreter, separate from the court interpreter, for witnesses who testify in another language. People v Aranda (1986) 186 CA3d 230, 230 CR 498. Counsel who believes that an interpreter has erred or is not interpreting correctly should request an evidentiary hearing and request appropriate relief, e.g., a motion for mistrial or replacement of the interpreter with a new interpreter, contemporaneous with the violation if possible, but at least with counsel's discovery of the violation. See People v Cabrera (1991) 230 CA3d 300, 281 CR 238. The trial court also has the option of appointing a "check interpreter" to verify the first interpreter's translation. See People v Aranda, supra.

§52.8 F. Requirements Concerning Immigration Status When Pleading Guilty or No Contest

Court advisement to defendant of immigration consequences of guilty plea. Before a defendant pleads guilty or no contest to a misdemeanor or felony offense, the court taking the plea must ensure that the defendant is warned that conviction may result in deportation, exclusion from admission to the United States, or denial of naturalization. Pen C §1016.5(a). Failure to make a record that the required warning was given creates a presumption that it was not given. Pen C §1016.5(b). Failure to warn of any of the three required potential consequences requires the reviewing court to vacate the judgment if prejudice is shown and there exists, at the time of the motion to vacate, more than a remote possibility that the conviction will have one or more of those adverse immigration consequences. People v Superior Court (Zamudio) (2000) 23 C4th 183, 199, 96 CR2d 463; People v Castro-Vasquez (2007) 148 CA4th 1240, 56 CR3d 406. The exact language of the statute need not be used; substantial compliance is all that is required. People v Gutierrez (2003) 106 CA4th 169, 130 CR2d 429. See also People v Ramirez (1999) 71 CA4th 519, 83 CR2d 882 (warning need not be verbal; signing of waiver form held sufficient). However, the advisement must occur during the actual taking of the plea; an advisement given on an earlier date is inadequate. People v Akhile (2008) 167 CA4th 558, 564, 84 CR3d 236.

The proper way to raise a violation of this statute is by a statutory motion to vacate, rather than a petition for a writ of coram nobis. People v Carty (2003) 110 CA4th 1518, 2 CR3d 851. A direct appeal can be taken from the denial of such a motion. People v Totari (2002) 28 C4th 876, 123 CR2d 76. A defendant making the motion has the burden of establishing reasonable diligence in bringing it. People v Kim (2009) 45 C4th 1078, 90 CR3d 355; People v Totari (2003) 111 CA4th 1202, 4 CR3d 613. The trial court's denial of the motion is reviewed for abuse of discretion. People v Superior Court (Zamudio) (2000) 23 C4th 183, 200, 96 CR2d 463.

Counsel's advice to defendant concerning immigration consequences of guilty plea. A general warning of the possible consequences similar to what the court is required to give (see Pen C §1016.5), however, is not sufficient advice by defense counsel, who must also advise a client of the specific immigration consequences that will be triggered in the defendant's particular case. See, e.g., People v Barocio (1989) 216 CA3d 99, 264 CR 573; People v Soriano (1987) 194 CA3d 1470, 240 CR 328 (note that the "judicial recommendation against deportation" (JRAD), discussed in Barocio and Soriano, is no longer available; see §52.11). Defense counsel who fails to investigate and advise the defendant of the specific immigration consequences of a guilty plea, and who fails to try to avoid those consequences by obtaining an alternative disposition, may be found to have provided ineffective assistance of counsel. People v Bautista (2004) 115 CA4th 229, 237, 8 CR3d 862; People v Soriano, supra. The Ninth Circuit held that counsel who gives affirmative erroneous advice concerning the immigration consequences of a disposition renders ineffective assistance, requiring reversal if the error deprives the defendant of the opportunity to have a decision-maker, such as the prosecutor or the court, make a discretionary decision in his or her favor. U.S. v Kwan (9th Cir 2005) 407 F3d 1005. This is the same prejudice standard employed by the court of appeal in People v Barocio, supra, in which counsel failed to make a motion for a nondeportable sentence.

Counsel renders ineffective assistance by affirmatively misadvising the defendant of the immigration effects of a plea. In re Resendiz (2001) 25 C4th 230, 105 CR2d 431. To obtain a reversal of the conviction, prejudice must be shown, i.e., a reasonable probability that the client would not have entered this plea if the client had been told the truth about its immigration consequences. In re Resendiz, supra; People v Castro-Vasquez, supra. Counsel also renders ineffective assistance by not trying for an alternative disposition that will avoid adverse immigration consequences. People v Bautista (2004) 115 CA4th 229, 241, 8 CR3d 862. Any violation of counsel's duties in these respects should be raised in a motion for a new trial or in a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. See People v Kim (2009) 45 C4th 1078, 1104, 90 CR3d 355.

Ø Note: Prosecutors too should become familiar with the immigration consequences of a plea or conviction to better deal with the prosecution of noncitizens. On one hand, the prosecution may be convinced that the defendant should be deported and may wish to become aware of the nature of the conviction and sentence necessary to achieve this result. On the other hand, prosecutorial discretion is very broad. Because immigration laws now trigger drastic and mandatory immigration consequences for an increasing number of minor convictions and sentences, the interests of the community and innocent family members in avoiding deportation of certain immigrants should be reflected in the discretion exercised by prosecutors. For example, a misdemeanor conviction for corporal injury of a spouse with a 1-year suspended sentence is considered an "aggravated felony" and would trigger mandatory deportation, even for an immigrant who has lived lawfully in this country for 30 years, is married to a U.S. citizen, and has many children and numerous other family members who are all U.S. citizens. Prosecutorial discretion is legally broad enough to allow a nondeportable result through a plea bargain or postconviction relief under these circumstances. See §7.12. The Los Angeles County District Attorney's office has a policy allowing prosecutors to take collateral immigration consequences into account in unusual circumstances when they have such a powerful impact that the punishment may not be proportionate to the crime. See http://da.co.la.ca.us/sd03-04.htm.

There is as yet no requirement that judges advise defendants of the possible immigration consequences of a "slow plea" (see §26.19; People v Limones (1991) 233 CA3d 338, 343, 284 CR 418), but counsel must of course do so.

Stipulation to removal. Attorneys in state as well as federal criminal proceedings may face having to advise clients whether to stipulate to removal before the criminal court judge. The definition of "removal" for criminal penalties for illegal reentry of certain previously deported or removed aliens includes "any agreement in which an alien stipulates to removal during (or not during) a criminal trial under either Federal or State law." 8 USC §1326(b). United States Attorneys sometimes request stipulations to removal, and state prosecutors may begin doing so as well. Criminal defense counsel will be in the position of advising clients whether to accept such a condition. This situation requires an accurate understanding of the defendant's immigration position. If the defendant truly has nothing to lose by conceding removability, he or she may gain valuable concessions in the criminal sentence. But if the defendant has family or an established life in the United States and some possible defense to removal, the defendant may be gravely harmed by giving up the right to contest removal and apply for or maintain lawful status.

Judicial removal. Federal district court judges are permitted in certain circumstances to decide at sentencing whether a defendant is removable and to order removal. 8 USC §1228(c). The person must be removable under 8 USC §1227(a)(2) for crimes involving moral turpitude, aggravated felonies, controlled substance offenses, or offenses involving firearms and destructive devices. See 8 USC §1228(a). The judge may exercise jurisdiction over the removal only if the U.S. Attorney requests it with the concurrence of the DHS. 8 USC §1228(c)(1). The Commissioner of the INS wrote a memorandum, including sample forms, to District Directors on the subject of judicial removals on February 22, 1995, reprinted in 72 Interpreter Releases 462 (Mar. 31, 1995).

Illegal reentry. If the defendant pleads guilty or no contest to an "aggravated felony," the plea will trigger negative and possibly surprising consequences if the client is deported and thereafter reenters the country illegally. Illegal reentry after conviction and removal occurring after an aggravated felony conviction can trigger federal criminal prosecution carrying a sentence of up to 20 years in federal prison. 8 USC §1326(b)(2). See also 8 USC §1325(a).

Ø Note: It is likely that a criminal noncitizen will be detected and apprehended by the DHS after conviction and a sentence involving any incarceration, because the DHS now has extensive systems that support its efforts to identify the immigration status of every single person admitted to county jail or state prison.

California state courts are required to cooperate with immigration authorities in identifying and placing a deportation hold on defendants convicted of felonies who are held to be deportable. Govt C §68109. The California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) and the Division of Juvenile Justice (DJJ) are also required to identify undocumented noncitizens subject to deportation. Within 48 hours after such a person's release from criminal custody, these departments must transfer the inmate to the custody of the U.S. Attorney General. Pen C §5025(c). They must also make their case files available to the DHS for investigation purposes. Pen C §5025(a). If the DHS does not pick up the person within the time allotted (see 8 CFR §287.7(d)), continued detention under the DHS hold becomes illegal, and state habeas as well as false imprisonment remedies become available.

§52.9 G. Availability of Noncitizen Witnesses

If "state action has made a material witness unavailable (by deportation), dismissal is mandated." People v Mejia (1976) 57 CA3d 574, 579, 129 CR 192. Today's courts generally hold that the Mejia standards for determining whether a witness was "material" have been superseded by the federal standards. People v Valencia (1990) 218 CA3d 808, 819, 267 CR 257; People v Lopez (1988) 198 CA3d 135, 243 CR 590; People v Jenkins (1987) 190 CA3d 200, 235 CR 268. See People v Fauber (1992) 2 C4th 792, 829, 9 CR2d 24 (assuming but not deciding that federal standard applies to destruction of evidence cases).

Conflicting authority exists on which federal standard to apply. People v Lopez, supra, held that the standard to apply is that of California v Trombetta (1984) 467 US 479, 81 L Ed 2d 413, 104 S Ct 2528. Under this standard, the lost evidence is material for purposes of sanctions if its exculpatory value was apparent before it was destroyed. But Jenkins (in what may be considered dictum) and Valencia said that the standard to apply is that of U.S. v Valenzuela-Bernal (1982) 458 US 858, 73 L Ed 2d 1193, 102 S Ct 3440. Under that standard, which specifically concerned deported witnesses, testimony is material for purposes of sanctions if a "plausible" showing is made that it was material, was favorable to the defendant, and was not cumulative. The U.S. Supreme Court, however, now applies the Trombetta standard to the loss of both physical evidence and witnesses. See Kyles v Whitley (1995) 514 US 419, 433, 131 L Ed 2d 490, 505, 115 S Ct 1555.

The Lopez court declined to follow Valenzuela-Bernal because that case is older than Trombetta and, according to the Lopez court, because Valenzuela-Bernal did not intend to announce a separate standard for loss of testimonial evidence as distinguished from loss of other evidence. The Jenkins court did not discuss Trombetta at all. At this writing, the Supreme Court has cited Valenzuela-Bernal with approval (see People v Coffman (2004) 34 C4th 1, 52, 17 CR3d 710), followed by a majority of the later cases on this question.

A person arrested along with undocumented persons may be given a form advising of the right to have the noncitizen witnesses detained. The form also advises that, if deported, it may be impossible to obtain the witness's presence at trial and that the person arrested has the right to consult with counsel before deciding whether detention of the noncitizen is desired. This form is based on U.S. v Lujan-Castro (9th Cir 1979) 602 F2d 877.

Mejia error is waived by a guilty plea. People v McNabb (1991) 228 CA3d 462, 279 CR 11.

Sanctions other than dismissal may be available. For example, a federal court may exclude the former testimony of a witness deported with insufficient notice to the defense or with insufficient effort to make the witness available at retrial. U.S. v Yida (9th Cir 2007) 498 F3d 945.

§52.10 H. Consequences of Sentence in Criminal Cases

The sentence received in a criminal case can have significant immigration consequences, and counsel can sometimes exert a great influence over the immigration process by controlling the length and nature of the sentence imposed. Obtaining a certain sentence may be sufficient to avoid adverse immigration results for the client. Counsel must determine whether the sentence is important, and, if so, exactly what the sentence requirements are in the client's particular situation. Sentences can be especially significant for aggravated felonies and crimes involving moral turpitude.

General definition of "sentence" for immigration purposes. For immigration purposes, "sentence" includes "the period of incarceration or confinement ordered by a court of law regardless of any suspension of the imposition or execution … in whole or in part." 8 USC §1101(a)(48)(B).

Thus, "sentence" includes a state prison sentence that has been imposed even though execution of all or part of the sentence has been suspended. Matter of Castro (BIA 1988) 19 I&N Dec 692.

It also includes court-ordered confinement as a condition of probation.

It does not include potential state prison or county jail sentences when imposition of sentence has been suspended, because the court has not ordered any specific term of incarceration or confinement to be served. See Matter of F. (BIA 1942) 1 I&N Dec 343.

It does not include any noncustody period of probation, because that does not qualify as "incarceration or confinement." 8 USC §1101(a)(48)(B). See discussion of suspending imposition and execution of sentence in §§36.5, 46.29-46.30.

> Ø Note: For immigration purposes, all sentences refer to the nominal sentences ordered by the court, rather than the actual time spent incarcerated, except for (1) the 180-day bar to establishing good moral character referred to below, and (2) eligibility for former INA §212(c) waiver of deportability, which is lost if the person actually serves 5 years or more as a result of aggravated felony convictions. See Matter of Ramirez-Somera (BIA 1992) 20 I&N Dec 564. See §52.53 for discussion. Only these two latter bars refer to days actually spent in custody.

Presentence time in custody in a criminal case, which is credited as time served in a sentence imposed after conviction, is considered confinement as a result of a conviction for immigration purposes. Arreguin-Moreno v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 511 F3d 1229.

> Ø Examples: If the client receives imposition of sentence suspended and no custody as a condition of probation, it counts as zero sentence for immigration purposes. If the client receives imposition of sentence suspended and 6 months' custody as a condition of probation, it counts as 6 months. If the client receives a 5-year sentence, execution of which is suspended, and is placed on probation with no custody time as a condition of probation, it counts as a 5-year sentence.

Concurrent sentences and indeterminate sentences (e.g., 5 years to life) are evaluated as the length of the longest sentence. Matter of Fernandez (BIA 1972) 14 I&N Dec 24.

Recidivist sentence enhancements. A sentence includes any recidivist sentence enhancement that may be imposed on the defendant. U.S. v Rodriguez (2008) 553 US 377, 170 L Ed 2d 719, 128 S Ct 1783 (determining maximum sentence under Armed Career Criminal Act).

Deportability for sentence imposed of 1 year or more. A client who is here legally will not want to become deportable. Many common offenses become aggravated felonies and trigger removal only if a court orders 1 year or more of custody, either as part of the judgment and sentence or as a condition of probation:

- A "crime of violence" as defined in 18 USC §16 (see §52.47);
- A theft offense (including receipt of stolen property) (see §52.46);
- Burglary;
- Offenses relating to commercial bribery, counterfeiting, forgery, or trafficking in vehicles that have had their identification numbers altered;

- Offenses relating to obstruction of justice (including accessory after the fact under Pen C §32), perjury or subornation of perjury, or bribery of a witness; and
- Using fraudulent documents to obtain an immigration benefit (except for a first offense solely to help a listed immediate family member).

8 USC §1101(a)(43)(F)-(G), (P), (R)-(S). All other aggravated felony convictions trigger deportation regardless of the sentence imposed.

Strategy. For offenses depending on sentence, a sentence of 364 days or less (either as part of a judgment or condition of probation) will prevent the conviction from becoming an aggravated felony, so long as imposition of sentence has been imposed. Conviction of three counts of theft, with a 364-day sentence for each to run consecutively, for example, would not be considered an aggravated felony conviction, because each count is assessed separately to see whether it carries a 1-year sentence. It is necessary to avoid a state prison sentence, even if execution of sentence is suspended, because a suspended sentence would still be considered a sentence imposed for immigration purposes. Counsel may be able to negotiate an official sentence of 364 days (and thus avoid an aggravated felony) by waiving past and future credits. Such a waiver could result in the defendant's spending an amount of time in custody that is equivalent to the amount of time he or she would serve on a 2-year sentence if custody credits were awarded; more, if before the 364-day sentence is imposed, extra time is served and credits for that time are also waived. Similarly, on a probation violation, it is sometimes possible for the defendant to waive past credits, vacate the former sentence, and receive a new sentence that falls short of a total of 1 year or more, thus avoiding an aggravated felony sentence. If the original sentence is not vacated before the probation violation sentence is imposed, the original sentence will be added to the probation violation sentence. A total sentence of 1 year or more (e.g., an original sentence of 9 months and a probation violation sentence of 3 months) will be considered a sentence of 12 months and trigger deportation as an aggravated felony.

Inadmissibility. A client who is not here legally will wish to avoid becoming inadmissible, i.e., becoming ineligible to immigrate lawfully through a U.S. citizen-spouse or otherwise. Two grounds of inadmissibility depend on the sentence:

- A noncitizen is inadmissible under 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(B) if he or she is convicted of two or more offenses of any kind for which the aggregate sentences imposed equal 5 or more years, regardless of the number of days actually served; and
- A noncitizen who would otherwise be inadmissible because of one conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude is not inadmissible if the offense qualifies under the "petty offense exception." To qualify, the sentence imposed must be 6 months or less and the maximum possible sentence for the offense must be no more than a year. 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(ii)(II).

Ø Note: The petty offense exception to exclusion on grounds of moral turpitude is available only to noncitizens who have committed only one crime involving moral turpitude. A defendant who has committed a second moral turpitude offense is disqualified from receiving the petty offense exception, even if no second conviction occurred, because, for example, the charges were dismissed or no charges were filed. A previous conviction, even if expunged, will destroy eligibility for the benefit of this exception. Matter of S.R. (BIA 1957) 7 I&N Dec 495. A defendant charged with a felony may be found eligible for the petty offense exception if the felony is reduced to a misdemeanor under Pen C §17. See §52.39.

Bar to establishing good moral character. A noncitizen must establish "good moral character" to obtain many immigration benefits, including naturalized citizenship, voluntary departure, cancellation of removal for nonpermanent residents, suspension of deportation, and registry. The immigration law bars certain persons from establishing good moral character, and this concept sometimes depends on sentence:

- Physically serving 180 or more actual days in jail, as a total from all convictions, during the period for which good moral character must be shown precludes the defendant from establishing good moral character under 8 USC §1101(f)(7). Matter of Valdovinos (BIA 1982) 18 I&N Dec 343.
- If the person is held in custody for a few days and the charges are dismissed or the person is acquitted, the time in jail does not count as part of the 180 days, because it was not served "as a result of conviction." 8 USC

§1101(f)(7). In fact, anyone trying to avoid the 180-day bar who has served significant pretrial time might waive credit for that time as time served in an attempt to lower the total below 180 days actual custody "as a result of conviction." See Arreguin-Moreno v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 511 F3d 1229. A pardon should erase the effect of time served for that conviction. Matter of H. (BIA 1956) 7 I&N Dec 249. Pardons are discussed in §§41.19-41.20. Expungements are discussed in §§41.13, 41.18. Their immigration effects are discussed in §§52.14, 52.29.

Bar to restriction of removal. Restriction of removal, like political asylum, is available to some noncitizens who face death threats and similar perils if deported to their home countries. However, an applicant who has been convicted of a particularly serious crime or who the DHS has reason to believe committed a serious nonpolitical crime outside the United States is ineligible. 8 USC §1231(b)(3)(B). An alien who has been convicted of an aggravated felony for which a sentence of at least 5 years of imprisonment was imposed has committed a particularly serious crime that bars this relief. 8 USC §1231(b)(3)(B); 8 CFR §208.16. Even if the sentence for an aggravated felony is less than 5 years, care must be taken to determine whether the crime is nonetheless particularly serious, by reviewing the nature of the conviction, the sentence imposed, and the individual facts and circumstances surrounding the actual offense. 8 CFR §208.16.

Fees and restitution. Even when no confinement has been imposed, a conviction exists under 8 USC §1101(a)(48)(A) when court fees or restitution has been ordered. Matter of Cabrera (BIA 2008) 24 I&N Dec 459 (costs and surcharges imposed in Florida deferred adjudication proceeding constituted form of "punishment" or "penalty" for purposes of establishing that noncitizen had suffered "conviction" for immigration purposes; court sought to establish national standard rather than relying on Florida state law in including amounts paid in restitution as a cost constituting "punishment"). If the fee or fine has been suspended, however, this is not the case. Retuta v Holder (9th Cir 2010) 591 F3d 1181.

§52.11 I. Former Judicial Recommendation Against Deportation (JRAD)

Until 1990, the judicial recommendation against deportation (JRAD) offered protection to persons convicted of a crime of moral turpitude or an aggravated felony that would ordinarily result in deportation. See Nguyen v Chertoff (2d Cir 2007) 501 F3d 107. The JRAD was a discretionary order, signed by the sentencing judge, requiring the INS to withhold immigration penalties based on conviction of a covered crime. The JRAD was eliminated by the Immigration Act of 1990 (IA 90) (Pub L 101-649, 104 Stat 4978). Although the repeal was intended to be retroactive (see U.S. v Murphey (9th Cir 1991) 931 F2d 606), the INS agreed to honor JRADs that were actually signed by a judge before November 29, 1990. Memorandum by INS Commissioner Gene McNary, Feb. 4, 1991, reprinted in Interpreter Releases, p 220 (Feb. 25, 1991). Now that JRADs have been abolished, it is an open question what the proper remedy would be for a defendant whose counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to request a JRAD at sentencing. One possibility is for the court to grant a JRAD nunc pro tunc dated before November 29, 1990. Another possibility would be to vacate the conviction or sentence entirely. See People v Barocio (1989) 216 CA3d 99, 264 CR 573. The constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel requires that the defendant should be placed in the same position he or she would have occupied if the error had not been committed. See Castillo-Perez v INS (9th Cir 2000) 212 F3d 518.

§52.12 J. Effect of Postconviction Relief on Immigration Status

California has several statutes providing postconviction relief in the form of pardons, certificates of rehabilitation, destruction or sealing of records, vacation of judgment, dismissal of accusation, and reduction of charge:

- Pen C §§4800-4854 (reprieves, pardons, commutations of sentence, certificates of rehabilitation);
- Pen C §1203.45 (sealing misdemeanor records for persons under age 18 when crime committed);
- Health & S C §11361.5 (automatic destruction of certain marijuana conviction records);
- Pen C §1203.4 (vacation of judgment and dismissal of accusation for felony or misdemeanor probationer who successfully completed probation, often called "expungement"; see §52.14);
- Pen C §1203.4a (vacation of judgment and dismissal of accusation for misdemeanant not granted probation, often called "expungement"; see §52.14);
- Welf & I C §§1179, 1772 (dismissal of accusation for person honorably discharged from juvenile parole);
- Pen C §17 (reduction of felony to misdemeanor under various circumstances, including application of defendant at any time after probation granted); and
- Welf & I C §828 (destruction of juvenile records or their release to the person).

The effect of each type of postconviction relief on immigration status varies. (State relief is discussed in chap 41.)

An executive pardon will eliminate a conviction of one or more crimes involving moral turpitude, an aggravated felony conviction, or a conviction of high-speed flight from an immigration checkpoint as grounds of deportation, but probably not a controlled substances conviction, domestic violence conviction, firearms conviction, or any other conviction not listed in 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(A)(vi). Matter of Suh (BIA 2003) 23 I&N Dec 626 (pardon does not eliminate deportability of domestic violence conviction). Further, a pardon does not eliminate a listed conviction as a ground of inadmissibility. Aguilera-Montero v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 548 F3d 1248.

© The Regents of the University of California

§52.13 1. Vacating Conviction

Vacating the conviction on a ground of legal invalidity will eliminate all immigration effects that flow from the conviction itself. See, e.g., Nath v Gonzales (9th Cir 2006) 467 F3d 1185; Wiedersperg v INS (9th Cir 1990) 896 F2d 1179 (postconviction writ vacating criminal conviction entitled alien to reopen deportation proceeding even after he had been deported). Direct appeal, habeas corpus, coram nobis, and motions to withdraw the plea or vacate the conviction will have this effect. Matter of Kaneda (BIA 1979) 16 I&N Dec 677; Matter of Sirhan (BIA 1970) 13 I&N Dec 592. See also People v Vasilyan (2009) 174 CA4th 443, 94 CR3d 260 (motion to vacate filed in 2007 for 1994 convictions that resulted in deportation in 2004).

Vacating the judgment will also eliminate the effect of any sentence or imprisonment resulting from the conviction. Matter of Cota-Vargas (BIA 2005) 23 I&N Dec 849. Moreover, a petition for extraordinary writ may be brought simply for purposes of vacating the original sentencing and obtaining a fresh sentencing hearing. A new sentence imposed by the judge will be the one considered by the immigration authorities, even if the defendant has already completed serving the original sentence. Matter of Cota-Vargas, supra; Matter of Martin (BIA 1982) 18 I&N Dec 226 (correction of illegal sentence); Matter of H. (BIA 1961) 9 I&N Dec 380 (new trial and sentence); Matter of J. (BIA 1956) 6 I&N Dec 562 (commutation).

To be effective the court must vacate the conviction on some ground of legal invalidity—constitutional or statutory. If the court vacates the conviction purely on humanitarian or discretionary grounds, immigration officials will not regard the conviction as eliminated for immigration purposes. See Matter of Pickering (BIA 2003) 23 I&N Dec 621, rev'd on other grounds, Pickering v Gonzales (6th Cir 2006) 465 F3d 263; Beltran-Leon v INS (9th Cir 1998) 134 F3d 1379. If it is not clear whether the conviction was vacated on a ground of legal invalidity or for rehabilitative reasons, the noncitizen cannot be deported, since the government bears the burden of proving deportability by clear and convincing evidence. Nath v Gonzales (9th Cir 2006) 467 F3d 1185. The BIA has held, however, that a noncitizen seeking to reopen proceedings to establish that a conviction has been vacated bears the burden of proving that the conviction was not vacated solely for immigration purposes. Matter of Chavez-Martinez (BIA 2007) 24 I&N Dec 272. A sentence vacated on any ground at all, even on discretionary or immigration grounds, is eliminated for immigration purposes. Matter of Song (BIA 2001) 23 I&N Dec 173; Matter of Cota-Vargas (BIA 2005) 23 I&N Dec 849.

§52.14 2. Expungement (Pen C §1203.4) and Other Forms of State Rehabilitative Relief

Deferred entry of judgment under Pen C §§1000-1000.8 requires entry of a guilty plea, and thus constitutes a conviction under current immigration law. 8 USC §1101(a)(48)(A); Matter of Punu (BIA 1998) 22 I&N Dec 224. An exception to the necessity for a guilty plea exists for counties that implement a preplea "drug court" program under Pen C §1000.5. Counsel should always investigate the possibility of preplea diversion in such a county. See §52.29.

Expungements under state rehabilitative statutes such as Pen C §1203.4 no longer eliminate the immigration consequences of most criminal convictions. Murillo-Espinoza v INS (9th Cir 2001) 261 F3d 771.

A state drug conviction of the type that would be amenable to expungement under the Federal First Offender Act (FFOA) (18 USC §3607) if the case had been brought in federal court can be effectively expunged under a general state expungement statute, despite the fact that the state statute is not an exact counterpart of the FFOA. Garberding v INS (9th Cir 1994) 30 F3d 1187. A possession conviction, however, is not considered a first conviction if it was preceded by a diversion dismissal of a prior case, even if no plea was ever entered in that case. De Jesus Melendez v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 503 F3d 1019.

Ø Note: The FFOA does not permit an expungement if the defendant has suffered, before the commission of the current offense, a controlled-substances conviction under "federal or state" law; this provision does not include foreign convictions as a disqualification from relief.

If relief from removal would not be available under the FFOA, it also will not be available when a conviction was expunged under state law. See, e.g., Estrada v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 560 F3d 1039 (relief from removal not available when person whose conviction was expunged under state law violated a condition of probation).

A conviction of a first offense of simple possession of any controlled substance is not a "conviction" for immigration purposes if it has been subject to rehabilitative treatment, such as dismissal of charges under Pen C §1203.4 or Proposition 36 (Pen C §1210.1). Lujan-Armendariz v INS (9th Cir 2000) 222 F3d 728 (state offense that could have been treated under FFOA if the case had been brought in federal court does not trigger adverse immigration consequences if same kind of state relief was granted). This rule also applies to certain convictions of a first offense less serious than simple possession of a drug. Ramirez-Altamirano v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 563 F3d 800 (conviction of possession of paraphernalia eliminated by expungement); Cardenas-Uriarte v INS (9th Cir 2000) 227 F3d 1132 (same).

The court's reasoning in Cardenas-Uriarte v INS, supra, could be applied to any first drug conviction that is (a) more minor than simple possession and (b) not forbidden under federal law. This would include using or being under the influence of a controlled substance (Health & S C §11550), driving under the influence of drugs (Veh C §23152(a)), being under the influence of drugs in public (Pen C §647(f)), visiting a place where drugs are being used (Health & S C §11365), possession of a hypodermic needle (Bus & P C §4140), and various prescription violations as long as they do not involve trafficking.

Ø Note: Since various forms of state rehabilitative relief are basically similar to FFOA treatment under 18 USC §3607, any of the following types of postconviction relief will have the same beneficial effects as an expungement under Pen C §1203.4(a) to eliminate convictions of this limited list of minor first-offense controlled substances offenses: deferred entry of judgment under Pen C §1000; Proposition 36 dismissal under Pen C §1210.1(d); and expungements of youthful offenders' convictions for honorable DJJ completion under Welf & I C §§1179, 1772. The same is true of foreign expungements of qualifying offenses. Dillingham v INS (9th Cir 2001) 267 F3d 996.

§52.15 3. Other Postconviction Relief

If all records of a marijuana conviction have been destroyed under Health & S C §11361.5, the conviction probably cannot be proved by the government. See, e.g., Matter of Rodriguez-Perez (Simonet, IJ, Dec. 12, 1989) No. 18-364-484, digested in Interpreter Releases p 67 (Jan. 12, 1990) (INS could not prove conviction, because records sealed under similar Florida statute). However, if the DHS obtains records of conviction before they are destroyed or obtains a transcript of court proceedings or an appellate opinion not subject to destruction (Health & S C §11361.5(d)), it may still be able to prove the conviction exists. See Matter of Moeller (BIA 1976) 16 I&N Dec 65. But see Health & S C §11361.7 (records subject to destruction under §11361.5 are not considered accurate after they should have been destroyed).

A successful motion to withdraw a plea of guilty for "good cause" before entry of judgment will eliminate any conviction. When entry of judgment is suspended and probation is granted, this motion must be made within 6 months after probation was granted. Pen C §1018. The defendant's lack of knowledge of immigration consequences can constitute good cause to withdraw a guilty plea. People v Superior Court (Giron) (1974) 11 C3d 793, 114 CR 596. Withdrawal of a guilty plea is discussed in §26.10.

When a sentence is corrected (see chap 34, §§35.5, 35.30-35.34) or commuted by a judge (see §35.10), the reduced sentence is the one considered by immigration authorities. Matter of Cota-Vargas (BIA 2005) 23 I&N Dec 849; Matter of Song (BIA 2001) 23 I&N Dec 173; Matter of Martin (BIA 1982) 18 I&N Dec 226 (correction); Matter of J. (BIA 1956) 6 I&N Dec 562 (commutation). A motion to modify the custody condition of probation from 365 to 364 days is effective to eliminate the immigration consequences of the original sentence, but it must be made before the sentence has been served. People v Mendoza (2009) 171 CA4th 1142, 90 CR3d 315. Moreover, such a reduction must not violate the plea agreement or the court cannot order it. People v Segura (2008) 44 C4th 921, 80 CR3d 715.

Reduction of a felony to a misdemeanor under Pen C §17 (see §8.40) may aid a noncitizen who would be disqualified from relief by having a felony conviction, e.g., an applicant for Temporary Protected Status. See §52.58. Also, a noncitizen is eligible for the petty offense exception to the moral turpitude ground of inadmissibility only if the conviction has a maximum possible sentence of 1 year or less, which means it must be a misdemeanor. See §52.39. This relief can also protect a defendant against a conviction for an aggravated felony crime of violence under 18 USC §16(b), which requires the conviction to be a felony before it can be an aggravated felony.

When judgment is vacated, e.g., on a writ of error coram nobis (see §24.38) or habeas corpus (see §24.38), even a drug conviction has been held erased. See People v Wiedersperg (1975) 44 CA3d 550, 118 CR 755 (writ can be granted when counsel did not know of defendant's noncitizen status when plea was entered); Matter of Sirhan (BIA 1970) 13 I&N Dec 592; Pen C §1016.5 (judgment vacated on defense motion when record does not reflect that judge advised defendant that guilty plea could result in deportation, exclusion, or denial of naturalization); People v Superior Court (Zamudio) (2000) 23 C4th 183, 96 CR2d 463 (failure to advise defendant of potential exclusion consequence requires vacation of plea when prejudice is shown; nonstatutory motion to vacate based on court's inherent power to correct constitutional error, such as ineffective assistance of counsel); Matter of Adamiak (BIA 2006) 23 I&N Dec 878 (Ohio drug conviction vacated because trial court failed to advise defendant of immigration consequences of guilty plea). For extensive discussion of obtaining California postconviction relief for immigrants, see Tooby, California Post-Conviction Relief for Immigrants (2009); Brady et al., Defending Immigrants, chap 8 (10th ed 2008).

§52.16 4. Responsibilities of Original Counsel When Client Seeks Postconviction Relief

Original counsel is free to assist the client in obtaining postconviction relief absent an active conflict of interest. For example, counsel may assist the client to obtain an expungement, writ of coram nobis, order vacating the conviction, pardon, and similar relief as long as the grounds for relief do not include an allegation that the original counsel rendered ineffective assistance of counsel.

If a potential ineffective assistance claim is present, however, counsel should declare a conflict of interest and refer the client to independent counsel, i.e., counsel who is not employed by the same law office as the original counsel. Cuyler v Sullivan (1980) 446 US 335, 64 L Ed 2d 333, 100 S Ct 1708; U.S. v Miskinis (9th Cir 1992) 966 F2d 1263; People v Bailey (1992) 9 CA4th 1252, 12 CR2d 339.

New and old counsel share a common professional obligation to act in their mutual client's best interests. Original counsel has a legal duty to cooperate with successor counsel and promptly return the client's papers (i.e., the entire case file) on termination of the representation. The original client file, including every piece of paper, investigative report, and item of work product, physically belongs to the client and must be turned over to the client on request. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(A)(2), (D); Finch v State Bar (1981) 28 C3d 659, 665, 170 CR 629 (duty to forward file to client or successor counsel); Kallen v Delug (1984) 157 CA3d 940, 950, 203 CR 879; California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1992-127 (original counsel must turn over entire file (which belongs to client), including attorney's notes, and must answer all oral questions if failure to do so would prejudice client). Absent contrary instructions from the client, counsel must retain the file indefinitely. LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 420 (1983).

Although it is certainly difficult to balance the desire to protect oneself from a finding of ineffective assistance of counsel against the obligation to ensure that the client does not suffer from counsel's mistakes, the better view is that professional integrity and enlightened self-interest combine to motivate counsel to aid the client as much as the truth will allow. Nothing counsel says to aid the client can be used against counsel in a malpractice action. Smith v Lewis (1975) 13 C3d 349, 118 CR 621, disapproved on other grounds in Marriage of Brown (1976) 15 C3d 838, 851 n14, 126 CR 633. It is also wise for counsel to attempt to mitigate any damage suffered by the client. It is impossible for a criminal defendant to win a malpractice action unless he or she is actually innocent. Lynch v Warwick (2002) 95 CA4th 267, 270, 115 CR2d 391. Finally, the State Bar has never taken, and presumably never will take, disciplinary action against counsel solely on the basis of a mistake. It is simply not an ethical violation. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110(A) (incompetence must be intentional, reckless, or repeated to warrant discipline). In fact, a single isolated negligent mistake is not grounds for discipline. See Call v State Bar (1955) 45 C2d 104, 109, 287 P2d 761. A candid admission of a mistake, if one has been made, is professionally less damaging, and personally less distasteful, than being cross-examined and having one's credibility assailed by new counsel for a former client.

III. APPLICABLE IMMIGRATION LAW

§52.17 A. Effect of Criminal Record on Immigration

Ø Note: See the chart in §52.24 for grounds for deportation, inadmissibility, and preclusion from establishing good moral character.

American immigration law is based on the premise that certain individuals are "undesirables" and should therefore not be admitted to or should be expelled from the United States. Under the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA) (8 USC §§1101-1537), certain criminal convictions or criminal behavior result in immigration penalties by constituting a ground of inadmissibility, a ground of deportability, or a bar to establishing good moral character or other relief.

Aggravated felony. Conviction of an aggravated felony brings the harshest immigration penalties. See §§52.21, 52.41-52.47 for discussion of penalties. In almost all cases, the noncitizen will be removable from the United States and barred from eligibility for any discretionary waiver of removal regardless of the equities involved. 8 USC §1228(b)(5). See §52.44. The person is barred from ever returning legally to the United States, although a waiver is theoretically available. Illegal reentry into the United States following conviction of an aggravated felony and removal is a serious and commonly prosecuted federal felony under 8 USC §1326(b)(2) with a potential 20-year prison sentence. See §52.63. Aggravated felony offenses are listed in 8 USC §1101(a)(43) and are discussed in §§52.41-52.47.

§52.18 1. Grounds for Inadmissibility

Admission of a noncitizen means the lawful entry of the alien into the United States after inspection and authorization by an immigration officer. 8 USC §1101(a)(13). If a noncitizen is inadmissible, that person cannot enter the United States unless he or she is granted a waiver of the inadmissibility ground. See 8 USC §1182 for grounds of inadmissibility. The grounds for inadmissibility (called grounds of exclusion under pre-1996 law) create a bar to both initial and later admissions to the United States. Even a lawful permanent resident ("green card" holder) attempting to reenter after a trip abroad may be considered inadmissible in some circumstances, e.g., commission of a listed criminal offense. 8 USC §1101(a)(13)(C)(v) (crime of moral turpitude or controlled substance offense). A noncitizen who manages to enter the United States despite being inadmissible may be charged in removal proceedings as being deportable for having been inadmissible at his or her last admission. 8 USC §1227(a)(1).

Moreover, a noncitizen who is inadmissible is not eligible for most means of immigration, i.e., acquiring lawful permanent resident status. For example, a noncitizen who marries a U.S. citizen is normally able to become a permanent resident on the basis of the marriage. If the noncitizen is inadmissible, however, he or she is barred from permanent residency despite the marriage, unless a waiver of the ground of inadmissibility is legally available and is granted in the DHS's discretion. A noncitizen who is inadmissible because of a criminal problem is usually also ineligible to establish good moral character, which is a requirement for naturalized U.S. citizenship, cancellation of removal for nonpermanent residents, registry, or some forms of voluntary departure in lieu of deportation. See 8 USC §1101(f) and discussion in §§52.52-52.62.

In sum, one can view the grounds for inadmissibility as the standard for a person attempting to obtain some benefit from immigration authorities. An undocumented person who applies for permanent residency, a person with lawful immigration status who leaves the United States and needs to reenter, and a permanent resident who wishes to become a U.S. citizen can all be barred by being inadmissible on the crimes-related grounds. However, a noncitizen who has been lawfully admitted to the United States at some point cannot be deported merely for being inadmissible (unless he or she was inadmissible at the time of the last admission); to be deported, the person must come within a ground of deportability.

© The Regents of the University of California

§52.19 2. Grounds for Deportability

The grounds for deportability are the legal basis to remove individuals after they have been admitted into the United States, i.e., the noncitizen was inspected by immigration authorities at a border or border equivalent before entering the country. 8 USC §1101(a)(13) (admission defined). The grounds for deportation (8 USC §1227) are similar but not identical to those for admissibility (8 USC §1182). For example, a noncitizen with one conviction for a crime involving moral turpitude is inadmissible if the sentence was more than 6 months or carried a potential sentence of more than a year, and is deportable if the maximum sentence was 1 year or more and the offense occurred within 5 years after the date of admission. See §52.39. Furthermore, if the noncitizen was not admissible at the time of entry or adjustment of status, on the grounds of inadmissibility applicable at the time of entry, that noncitizen is deportable. 8 USC §1227(a)(1)(A).

Once noncitizens have been lawfully admitted, they can be removed only if they come within one or more grounds of deportability. In contrast, a noncitizen who avoided checkpoints and surreptitiously crossed the border will be removed on the grounds of inadmissibility. "Admission" for this purpose includes entry based on fraudulent documents if the noncitizen was officially inspected and admitted, as well as the "adjustment of status to permanent residency" (obtaining a green card through processing at a DHS office in the United States). Thus noncitizens entering the United States on a valid document, someone else's border crossing card, or a tourist visa obtained through fraud, and noncitizens who became permanent residents through adjustment of status, have all been admitted.

3. Procedures for Determining Admissibility or Deportability

§52.20 a. Removal Proceedings

Removal is the procedure for determining whether an alien who has been admitted to the United States may be removed, or for contesting a denial of admission at the border. 8 USC §1229a. A noncitizen with a criminal record may be brought to a removal proceeding from jail via an immigration hold or detainer; others come under removal proceedings after being caught up in DHS raids or denied an affirmative application for lawful status. Once before an immigration judge, a noncitizen may accept removal, contest the charge of removability, or concede removability but apply for some form of relief from removal.

With two exceptions, only an immigration judge can order removal. The exceptions are as follows:

(1) A federal district court judge can order removal of a noncitizen convicted of certain crimes (8 USC §1228(c)(1); see discussion in §52.8); and

(2) The DHS can order removal of a nonpermanent resident who is convicted of an aggravated felony; most forms of relief from removal are not available in this procedure (8 USC §1228(b)).

Otherwise, a noncitizen who the DHS has cause to believe is removable may be brought before an immigration judge for removal proceedings. The DHS can, however, pressure the noncitizen to accept "voluntary departure" instead of removal from the United States before the institution of removal proceedings, or the judge may grant voluntary departure after proceedings begin. See 8 USC §1229c.

Ø Note: Even a stipulation to deportation or removal as part of a plea bargain in federal or state court is a deportation or removal for purposes of federal prosecution for illegal reentry after conviction of an aggravated felony and deportation or removal. 8 USC §1326(b)(2). See discussion in §52.8.

© The Regents of the University of California

§52.21 b. Expedited Proceedings for Aggravated Felonies

If convicted of an aggravated felony, a noncitizen who is not a lawful permanent resident is subject to administrative removal proceedings (8 USC §1228), is conclusively presumed to be deportable (8 USC §1228), and is presumed not to have a good moral character (8 USC §1101(f)(8)). The procedures to remove a nonpermanent resident convicted of an aggravated felony are meant to be completed, including any administrative appeals, before the nonpermanent resident's release from incarceration for the underlying aggravated felony. 8 USC §1228(a)(3)(A).

© The Regents of the University of California

§52.22 c. Waiver of Deportability and Inadmissibility

Some grounds of inadmissibility and deportability may be waived in certain circumstances at the discretion of an immigration judge or DHS officer. For example, a noncitizen immigrating through a relative's visa petition may be able to apply, under 8 USC §1182(h), for a discretionary waiver of the moral turpitude ground of inadmissibility. A noncitizen who has been a permanent resident for 5 years and who has continuously resided in the United States for at least 7 years following lawful admission may apply for the discretionary waiver "cancellation of removal" under 8 USC §1229b(a). This waiver can potentially cure any of the grounds of inadmissibility and deportability, but it is not available to a permanent resident convicted of an aggravated felony. See §52.53.

© The Regents of the University of California

§52.23 4. Bar to Establishing Good Moral Character

A noncitizen's criminal record can result in statutory ineligibility to establish good moral character. See 8 USC §1101(f). A noncitizen who cannot establish good moral character is ineligible to apply for U.S. citizenship and is ineligible for some means of immigration or relief from removal, including cancellation of removal for certain nonpermanent residents, registry, and voluntary departure. See §§52.52-52.62. Good moral character need only be established for a specific amount of time for each benefit, e.g., the 5 years preceding an application for naturalization to U.S. citizenship, 10 years preceding an application for cancellation of removal on a ground of inadmissibility, and a reasonable period of time for registry. Conviction of an aggravated felony on or after November 29, 1990, or of murder at any time, is a permanent bar to establishing good moral character. Immigration Act of 1990 (Pub L 101-649, §509, 104 Stat 4978).

The bar to establishing good moral character overlaps several grounds for inadmissibility. A noncitizen may not establish good moral character if he or she is inadmissible on grounds relating to crimes involving moral turpitude, controlled substances, prostitution, a 5-year sentence for two or more convictions, or smuggling of aliens. 8 USC §1101(f). A crime of moral turpitude conviction that falls within the petty offense exception to inadmissibility (8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(ii)(II)) does not create a bar to good moral character. Matter of Gonzalez-Zoquiapan (BIA 2008) 24 I&N Dec 549.

Other grounds are unique to the good moral character bar and are not grounds of inadmissibility. To be able to establish good moral character, a noncitizen must not have been actually confined as a result of a conviction for 180 days or more during the period for which good moral character must be shown. The 180-day period is strictly calculated and depends on actual time in jail, not on suspended imposition or execution of sentence, or nominal sentence that includes good time or work time or other conduct credits that were not actually served. 8 USC §1101(f)(7). (Contrast this with measurement of "sentence imposed" for moral turpitude or some aggravated felony convictions, which depends on the nominal custody ordered by the court and not on time actually spent in jail. See §§52.10, 52.38-52.40, 52.42.)

Finally, a noncitizen who is a habitual drunkard, has been convicted of two or more gambling offenses, or has given false testimony under oath to receive immigration benefits is barred from showing good moral character. 8 USC §1101(f).

§52.24 B. Chart: Comparing Grounds for Inadmissibility, Deportability, and Bar to Establishing Good Moral Character

The following chart, prepared by the Immigrant Legal Resource Center and reproduced with permission, has been updated by the authors.

For explanation of inadmissibility, see §52.18; for deportability, see §52.19; for the bar to establishing good moral character, see §52.23. See also provisions relating to visa fraud, diplomatic immunity, child abduction in violation of a custody decree, AIDS, mental or physical defects, Communist and subversive beliefs, and gambling, discussed in §52.50.

Court finds violation of domestic violence order.	Civil or criminal court finding that enjoined noncitizen who violated domestic violence protection order. 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(E)(ii). Limited waiver possible. 8 USC §1227(a)(7)(A).	None (unless offense is crime involving moral turpitude).	Same as inadmissibility ground.
Aggravated felony.	Conviction. 8 USC §1101(a)(43) (definition of aggravated felony), §1227(a)(2)(A)(iii) (deportation ground). See §§52.10, 52.12-52.16, 52.41-52.47.	Aggravated felons who have been deported are inadmissible for 20 years; waiver available. 8 USC §1182(a)(9)(A)(ii).	Aggravated felony conviction after November 29, 1990, is permanent bar. 8 USC §1101(f)(8).

[1] Some moral turpitude offenses, such as murder and certain common offenses (e.g., crimes of violence, burglary, theft with a 1-year sentence imposed), are also aggravated felonies. See 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(F)-(G), (P), (R)-(S).

[2] Conviction of trafficking in firearms and certain federal firearms offenses (e.g., ex-felon in possession) are aggravated felonies. 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(C), (E).

C. Convictions and Sentences With Adverse Immigration Consequences

1. Definition of "Conviction" for Immigration Purposes; Record of Conviction

§52.25 a. Definition of Conviction

In many cases, a person must be convicted of an offense to suffer immigration penalties. Under the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA), a conviction occurs when there is a formal judgment of guilt or when an alien has been found or has pleaded guilty or no contest and some form of punishment or restraint has been imposed, even though adjudication has been withheld. 8 USC §1101(a)(48)(A). See Brady et al., Defending Immigrants §2.1 (10th ed 2008). Imposition of court fees or costs, or restitution, is a sufficient penalty to constitute a conviction. Matter of Cabrera (BIA 2008) 24 I&N Dec 459. This is not true if the fine has been suspended. See §52.10. Some dispositions do not constitute convictions for immigration purposes and thereby avoid adverse immigration consequences that flow from convictions. Juvenile dispositions, convictions on direct appeal, and dispositions with a not guilty or no contest plea do not constitute convictions for immigration purposes. See §§52.27-52.29. A conviction of an offense, such as an infraction (see Pen C §19.6), so minor that no custody may be imposed and there is no right to a jury trial, is not considered a conviction for immigration purposes. See Matter of Eslamizar (BIA 2004) 23 I&N Dec 684 (en banc).

Ø Note: Some activities have adverse immigration consequences whether or not a conviction occurs, particularly prostitution, alien smuggling, using false documents (under state or federal law), and drug addiction, abuse, or trafficking. See §52.50. Avoiding or eliminating a conviction may not avert those immigration consequences that do not require a conviction.

§52.26 b. Divisible Statute and Record of Conviction

A "divisible statute" is a code section whose terms encompass both offenses that have immigration consequences and offenses that do not. For example, Health & S C §11360(a) prohibits both sale and offering to sell controlled substances. Sale of a controlled substance is an aggravated felony, while offering to sell is not. See U.S. v Rivera-Sanchez (9th Cir 2001) 247 F3d 905. See discussion of controlled substances in §§52.30-52.34. Similarly, Pen C §12020(a) includes both possession of a dirk, dagger, or billy, which is not a basis for deportation on the firearms ground, and possession of a sawed-off shotgun, which is. See discussion of the firearms ground in §§52.35-52.36.

When a conviction under a divisible statute is ambiguous about whether the noncitizen was convicted of the offense with immigration consequences, immigration and other reviewing authorities will generally resolve the question using only information from the record of conviction. If that record does not indicate that the offense was one carrying immigration penalties, the authority must decide in the defendant's favor. For discussion of this principle, see Taylor v U.S. (1990) 495 US 575, 109 L Ed 2d 607, 110 S Ct 2143 (burglary under federal definition may exclude certain state burglary convictions for federal sentence enhancement purposes; courts look only to record of conviction to determine elements of offense); Malta-Espinoza v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 478 F3d 1080. The record of conviction consists of:

- The charging papers (indictment, complaint, information), specifically limited to the count(s) of conviction;
- The plea or judgment, including a stipulated factual basis; and
- Sentencing.

See, e.g., Wadman v INS (9th Cir 1964) 329 F2d 812, 814 n3; Matter of Madrigal-Calvo (BIA 1996) 21 I&N Dec 323 (transcript of defendant's plea and sentence hearing, including defendant's admission, is part of record of conviction); Matter of Mena (BIA 1979) 17 I&N Dec 38.

The record of conviction does not include:

- Dismissed counts (Ruiz-Vidal v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 473 F3d 1072);
- The trial record;
- The presentence report (Penuliar v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 528 F3d 603, 611);
- The prosecutor's sentencing remarks; or
- The trial judge's opinion about immigration consequences.

See, e.g., Matter of Teixeira (BIA 1996) 21 I&N Dec 316 (police report not included); Matter of Pichardo-Sufren (BIA 1996) 21 I&N Dec 330; Matter of Short (BIA 1989) 20 I&N Dec 136; Matter of Mena, supra; Matter of Goodalle (BIA 1967) 12 I&N Dec 106; Matter of Cassisi (BIA 1963) 10 I&N Dec 136. Nor does the record of conviction include subsequent testimony by the noncitizen; e.g., deportability on the firearms ground was not shown even when the noncitizen testified in immigration proceedings that the unnamed weapon he was convicted of possessing was a gun. Matter of Pichardo-Sufren, supra. See Morales v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 478 F3d 972; Garcia-Lopez v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2003) 334 F3d 840, 844 n4.

In determining what part of a divisible offense a defendant was convicted of, the U.S. Supreme Court has held that the record of conviction which may be considered only includes "the terms of the charging document, the terms of a plea agreement or transcript of colloquy between judge and defendant in which the factual basis for the plea was confirmed by the defendant, or.... some comparable judicial record of this information." Shepard v U.S. (2005) 544 US 13, 20, 161 L Ed 2d 205, 125 S Ct 1254. A "comparable judicial record" includes a minute order. U.S. v Snellenberger (9th Cir 2008) 548 F3d 699.

The Ninth Circuit has held that abstracts of judgment may only be used to establish the fact of a conviction, as opposed to the nature of a conviction. See U.S. v Navidad-Marcos (9th Cir 2004) 367 F3d 903, 908. When a minute order of the entry of plea and the information are considered together, the critical phrase "as charged in the Information" must be used in the minute order to establish that the defendant necessarily pleaded guilty or no contest to the exact language of the complaint or information. U.S. v Vidal (9th Cir 2007) 504 F3d 1072, 1087.

However, the Ninth Circuit held that a noncitizen's decision to incorporate the police report into his guilty plea made the report an explicit statement "in which the factual basis for the plea was confirmed by the defendant" and, in that circumstance, relying on the police report to establish the elements of the crime did not undermine the purposes of the court's limited modified categorical inquiry. Suazo Perez v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 512 F3d 1222, 1226. Defense counsel should therefore use a carefully worded factual admission by the defendant, which does not admit a fact bringing the conviction within a ground of deportation, instead of a stipulation to the police report, when the report contains facts that might bring a conviction within a ground of removal.

Ø Note: In some cases, defense attorneys will negotiate a plea to an amended charge that does not reveal which subsection of the statute was violated. For example, if a complaint charges the entire criminal section, and neither the judgment nor the sentencing record indicates which subsection was violated, a conviction of violating a divisible statute will have no immigration consequence when at least one part of the divisible statute does not fall within the grounds of deportability.

Ø Some immigration authorities have asserted that they can go beyond the record of conviction to determine deportability under the domestic violence ground in 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(E)(i). They assert that, because of the unusual wording of the domestic violence deportation ground, the required relationship to the victim, e.g., current or ex-spouse or cohabitant, can be proved by information outside the record. See §§52.48-52.49. The Ninth Circuit has held that the court may look only at the record of conviction to determine whether a crime is one of "domestic violence." See Tokatly v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2004) 371 F3d 613, 624 (testimonial evidence in immigration proceedings was outside record of conviction; therefore, inadmissible to show that convictions for burglary and kidnapping were convictions of crimes of domestic violence). The Supreme Court, however, held in a criminal context that the domestic violence nature of a conviction could be determined by evidence outside the elements of conviction. U.S. v Hayes (2009) ___ US ___, 172 L Ed 2d 816, 129 S Ct 1079. This reasoning may be extended to the immigration context. In Nijhawan v Holder (2009) ___ US ___, 174 L Ed 2d 22, 129 S Ct 2294, the Court held that the categorical approach does not apply to the loss amount in a fraud/deceit aggravated felony case.

With respect to other grounds of deportation, the BIA has attempted to allow resorting to evidence outside the record of conviction. See Matter of Gertsenshteyn (BIA 2007) 24 I&N Dec 111, reversed and remanded by (2d Cir 2008) 544 F3d 137 (evidence outside the record can be used to establish "commercial advantage" for 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(K) aggravated felony).

Ø Note: Although the BIA decision in Gertsenshteyn was reversed by the Second Circuit, the BIA decision remains operative within the Ninth Circuit unless overruled, and the Ninth Circuit has not done so.

The U.S. Supreme Court has suggested that immigration counsel must do more than apply "legal imagination" to a state statute's language and must show > a realistic probability, not a theoretical possibility, that the State would apply its statute to conduct that falls outside the generic definition [of the deportation ground]. To show that realistic probability, an offender… must at least point to his own case or other cases in which the state courts in fact did apply the statute in the special (nongeneric) manner for which he argues.

Gonzales v Duenas-Alvarez (2007) 549 US 183, 166 L Ed 2d 683, 693, 127 S Ct 815. The Ninth Circuit, however, has limited this doctrine, stating that when > a state statute explicitly defines a crime more broadly than the generic definition, no 'legal imagination' is required to hold that a realistic probability exists that the state will apply its statute to conduct that falls outside the generic definition of the crime. The state statute's greater breadth is evident from its text.

U.S. v Grisel (9th Cir 2007) 488 F3d 844, 850 (en banc) (citation omitted).

Ø Note: In Matter of Silva-Trevino (AG 2008) 24 I&N Dec 687, the Attorney General held that in determining whether a conviction constitutes a crime of moral turpitude, the immigration court may consider any facts, even those outside the elements of the statute of conviction and outside the record of conviction. The Attorney General explicitly claimed that he had discretion to interpret the immigration statutes in this fashion, regardless of prior inconsistent case law from the federal circuits. While this decision is limited to the moral turpitude removal grounds, and is being challenged, defense counsel should attempt to choose dispositions as to which there is no evidence that would bring it within the moral turpitude category. The circuits have not approved this analysis. See, e.g., Jean-Louis v Attorney General (3d Cir 2009) 582 F3d 462 (rejecting Silva-Trevino). While the Ninth Circuit has so far ignored Silva-Trevino, the immigration courts are following it.

A preponderance is insufficient to establish a fact by the "clear and convincing" evidence required for deportability. Matter of Velazquez-Herrera (BIA 2008) 24 I&N Dec 503.

2. Dispositions That May Not Constitute Convictions

§52.27 a. Juvenile Court Dispositions

A disposition in juvenile proceedings does not constitute a conviction. Matter of C.M. (BIA 1953) 5 I&N Dec 327. On representing juveniles, see §52.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§52.28 b. Appeal of Conviction Not Exhausted

A conviction is not final for immigration purposes unless direct appeals have been waived or exhausted or the appeal period has lapsed. Pino v Landon (1955) 349 US 901, 99 L Ed 1239, 75 S Ct 576; Morales-Alvarado v INS (9th Cir 1981) 655 F2d 172. In some cases, the need to avoid adverse immigration consequences permanently or for some period of time is an important factor in deciding whether to take a case to trial or to appeal a conviction. A late-filed appeal, however, will not delay the finality of a conviction. Matter of Cardenas-Abreu (BIA 2009) 24 I&N Dec 795.

© The Regents of the University of California

§52.29 c. Disposition Without Guilty Plea

Before a conviction exists for immigration purposes, a plea or finding of guilt must be made and some punishment or restraint imposed. 8 USC §1101(a)(48)(A). Diversions granted in 1996 and earlier did not involve a plea of guilty or no contest, and thus do not constitute "convictions" for immigration purposes. See Matter of Grullon (BIA 1989) 20 I&N Dec 12. After January 1, 1997, drug diversion via deferred entry of judgment under Pen C §1000 requires a guilty or no contest plea and therefore does constitute a conviction for immigration purposes even after dismissal. 8 USC §1101(a)(48)(A); Matter of Punu (BIA 1998) 22 I&N Dec 224. In most cases, expungement, e.g., under Pen C §1203.4, will not eliminate the conviction for immigration purposes. Murillo-Espinoza v INS (9th Cir 2001) 261 F3d 771. However, there is a Ninth Circuit exception for a first conviction of simple possession and other minor drug offenses that are not forbidden under federal law; diversion dismissal or expungement will eliminate these convictions for immigration purposes so long as the defendant did not violate probation. See §52.14.

Even after 1996, however, courts continued to grant diversions with no plea in four circumstances:

(1) When courts were slow to learn of or implement the new procedure;

(2) When the offense occurred in 1996 or earlier, the Ex Post Facto Clause requires granting old-style diversion with no guilty plea (see Collins v Youngblood (1990) 497 US 37, 111 L Ed 2d 30, 110 S Ct 2715);

(3) When counties exercise their authority under the new diversion law to establish drug courts authorized to grant old-style diversions with no plea (Pen C §1000.5); and

(4) When diversion programs that pertain to other types of cases, e.g., defendants with cognitive developmental disabilities under Pen C §1001.20, do not require a plea.

> Ø Note: For diversions granted in 1997 and later, counsel should check the record. If there was a plea, the diversion is a conviction for immigration purposes, at least until dismissal (depending on the offense of conviction). But if there was no plea, it is not. Dispositions under diversion, deferred adjudication, or first-offender programs in other states must be carefully analyzed to ascertain whether a conviction has occurred. For further discussion of diversion and deferred entry of judgment, see chap 27.

If the defendant would have been eligible for Federal First Offender Act (FFOA) treatment if prosecuted in federal court, diversion or expungement with a guilty plea does not constitute a conviction for immigration purposes. Lujan-Armendariz v INS (9th Cir 2000) 222 F3d 728 (first conviction of simple possession of any drug). See §52.14 for further discussion of this exception.

A plea of guilty or no contest with imposition of sentence suspended constitutes a conviction even though technically no judgment of conviction is entered. Gutierrez v INS (9th Cir 1963) 323 F2d 593.

§52.30 3. Offenses Involving Controlled Substances

Sections 52.30-52.34 discuss conviction of controlled substance offenses. Drug addicts and abusers are deportable and inadmissible, even without a conviction. Likewise, those who the government has reason to believe are or were drug traffickers or their assistants are inadmissible, even without a conviction. See §52.50.

Ø Note: For advice in pleading drug cases, see Note titled "Drug Offenses" accompanying the California Chart on Immigration Consequences at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php.

Ø Note: Arresting agencies must notify the appropriate U.S. agency whenever they arrest a suspected noncitizen of violating Health & S C §§11350-11351, 11351.5, 11352, 11353, 11355, 11357, 11359, 11360, 11361, 11363, 11366, 11368, or 11550. Health & S C §11369. See Fonseca v Fong (2008) 167 CA4th 922, 936, 84 CR3d 567 (Section 11369 is not preempted by federal law and "does not require any state or local law enforcement agency to independently determine whether an arrestee is a citizen of the United States, let alone whether he or she is present in the United States lawfully or unlawfully").

§52.31 a. Controlled Substances Grounds of Deportability and Inadmissibility, and Bar to Good Moral Character

With few exceptions, drug convictions permanently destroy current lawful immigration status and prevent the person from obtaining that status in the future. A noncitizen who is convicted of an offense "relating to" controlled substances, or of attempt or conspiracy to commit such an offense, is inadmissible under 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(i)(II), deportable under 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(B), and barred from establishing good moral character under 8 USC §1101(f). Even conviction of the most minor drug offense, such as presence in a place where drugs are used, will make a person deportable and inadmissible. Matter of Hernandez-Ponce (BIA 1988) 19 I&N Dec 613. Convictions under state or federal law as well as laws of other countries incur these penalties.

Many drug offenses are classed as aggravated felonies under 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(B), although there are important exceptions. See §52.32. Conviction of an aggravated felony brings additional severe penalties beyond making the person deportable and inadmissible, including subjecting an aggravated felon who reenters the United States after deportation to severe federal criminal sanctions. See §52.33.

© The Regents of the University of California

§52.32 b. Exceptions: Offenses That Are Not Classed as Controlled Substance Offenses for Immigration Purposes

Some dispositions either are not classed as controlled substance convictions at all for immigration purposes, or at least are not classed as aggravated felonies.

Specific controlled substance not identified. Controlled substances are defined in 21 USC §802 to include most illegal drugs as well as precursor and "essential" chemicals. The federal and state lists are not the same. California's list prohibits certain drugs that are not on the federal list. Unless the record of conviction specifies a drug that is prohibited by federal law, the conviction will not trigger any consequences as a conviction relating to a controlled substance. For example, if the record of conviction (consisting of the charging papers, plea or judgment, sentence, and legally defined elements of the offense) refers only to "a controlled substance" without specifying which substance, the conviction does not come within the grounds of deportability or inadmissibility relating to controlled substance convictions, and is not a controlled substance aggravated felony. Matter of Paulus (BIA 1965) 11 I&N Dec 274; Ruiz-Vidal v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 473 F3d 1072 (when record of conviction under Health & S C §11377(a) does not identify substance, there is no controlled substance conviction for immigration purposes); S-Yong v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 578 F3d 1169 (when record of conviction inconclusive regarding whether conviction under Health & S C §11378 involved controlled substance under federal list, no controlled-substance conviction in removal proceeding). The Health & Safety Code provisions governing possession of controlled substances also include some substances not found in the federal list, e.g., apomorphine. On the record of conviction, see §§52.10, 52.26. Counsel frequently bargain to amend the charging papers to eliminate the identification of the controlled substance or to have the client plead to the exact language of the statute when the statute specifies drugs not on the federal list.

Driving under the influence of drugs, or alcohol and drugs, should not be ruled an offense "relating to a controlled substance" unless a specific controlled substance (that is on the federal list) is identified in the record of conviction, because the charge of driving while impaired may also arise as the result of legal or prescribed drugs as well as alcohol. Veh C §23152; People v Keith (1960) 184 CA2d Supp 884, 7 CR 613 (insulin). See Veh C §312 (definition of drug).

> Ø Note: The Ninth Circuit has held that possession of paraphernalia under an Arizona statute was an offense relating to a controlled substance, despite the lack of proof of the specific substance. Luu-Le v INS (9th Cir 2000) 224 F3d 911. In Ruiz-Vidal v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 473 F3d 1072, the court distinguished Luu-Le by saying that, at least when the offense charged is possession, the substance must be identified. In Ramirez-Altamirano v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 563 F3d 800, the court held that paraphernalia possession under Health & S C §11364(a) is an offense relating to a controlled substance even though the particular controlled substance is not identified. The BIA has also held that maintaining a place where drugs are used, or sale of a noncontrolled substance as a "look-alike" controlled substance "relates to" a controlled substance on the federal list even if no specific substance is identified in the record of conviction. Matter of Martinez-Espinoza (BIA 2009) 25 I&N Dec 118.

Accessory after the fact. Being an "accessory after the fact" (see 18 USC §3) to a controlled substances offense does not itself constitute a controlled substances offense. Matter of Batista-Hernandez (BIA 1997) 21 I&N Dec 955. The federal offense consists of aiding a criminal to escape arrest, trial, or punishment, and is so similar to the California offense defined in Pen C §32 that the same result should follow for the California offense. In some cases, vigorous negotiation can result in a plea bargain to being an accessory even when the original charge did not involve this act.

A plea to accessory after the fact can have other adverse consequences, however. It must result in a sentence of no more than 364 days of custody to avoid being considered an aggravated felony under the obstruction of justice provision. 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(S); Matter of Batista-Hernandez, supra (18 USC §3). The Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) held that the federal crime of misprision of felony is not obstruction of justice and is not an aggravated felony even with a 1-year sentence. Matter of Espinoza-Gonzalez (BIA 1999) 22 I&N Dec 889. The government will likely assert that accessory after the fact is a crime of moral turpitude. Although the Ninth Circuit held that accessory after the fact is categorically not a crime of moral turpitude (Navarro-Lopez v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 503 F3d 1063 (en banc), the BIA held that the similar misprision of felony is a crime of moral turpitude (Matter of Robles-Urrea (BIA 2006) 24 I&N Dec 22). After Navarro-Lopez, the Ninth Circuit held that it will defer to a published BIA decision holding that an offense involves moral turpitude, if the holding is reasonable. Marmolejo-Campos v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 558 F3d 903 (en banc).

First offense simple possession (or less serious offense) that has received any rehabilitative treatment. Conviction of a first offense of simple possession of any controlled substance is not a "conviction" for immigration purposes if the offense has received any kind of rehabilitative treatment such as deferred adjudication under Pen C §1000 or dismissal of charges under Pen C §1203.4. Lujan-Armendariz v INS (9th Cir 2000) 222 F3d 728. A first offense that is less serious than simple possession and that is not analogous to a federal felony also comes within this rule. Cardenas-Uriarte v INS (9th Cir 2000) 227 F3d 1132 (expungement of conviction of possession of paraphernalia). Under federal statute, giving away a small amount of marijuana ought to receive the same treatment. See 21 USC §841(b)(4). However, if there was a preplea diversion under Pen C §1000 before its amendment as of January 1, 1997, then rehabilitative treatment under postplea diversion or Proposition 36, or dismissal under Pen C §1203.4, will constitute a "conviction" for immigration purposes. De Jesus Melendez v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 503 F3d 1019. See §52.34. Rehabilitative relief will not eliminate the conviction for immigration purposes if the defendant violated probation before obtaining the rehabilitative relief. Estrada v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 560 F3d 1039.

Soliciting or offering to commit any drug offense. In U.S. v Rivera-Sanchez (9th Cir 2001) 247 F3d 905, 909, the Ninth Circuit held that offering to sell, transport, or deliver a drug is not an aggravated felony. Thus, a plea to offering to transport, or a plea to the statute that takes advantage of the disjunctive "or," is not a plea to an aggravated felony. However, if a noncitizen with a solicitation of drug offense is arrested or returns from a trip abroad outside the Ninth Circuit, the noncitizen can be removed, since no circuit other than the Ninth Circuit recognizes this defense. Matter of Zorilla-Vidal (BIA 2009) 24 I&N Dec 768. See additional advice at §52.33. Even in the Ninth Circuit, offering to commit a drug offense under Health & S C §11352(a), §11360(a), or §11379(a) is a deportable offense "relating to" controlled substances because these statutes are specifically aimed at controlled substances. Mielewczyk v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 575 F3d 992. But the court stated that the generic solicitation statute in Pen C §653f(d) is not a deportable controlled-substance offense. 575 F3d at 998 (dicta). This plea will also make the person inadmissible, however, so that it is a bad option for an undocumented person or anyone who is applying for permanent residency, for example, through a family visa petition. Offering to sell drugs is also a crime of moral turpitude. For further discussion of pleas in drug cases, see Note "Drug Offenses" accompanying the Chart on Immigration Consequences for Selected California Offenses at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php.

> Ø Warning: It is very possible that legislation will erase the use of "offering" as a defense, and there is a small possibility that any such legislation would be retroactive. Therefore, the best practice is for defense practitioners, when possible, to use another alternative.

Exception for one conviction of simple possession of 30 grams or less of marijuana or hashish. Conviction of this offense is not a basis for deportability or a bar to establishing good moral character and is subject to discretionary waiver of inadmissibility under 8 USC §1182(h) if the person otherwise qualifies for the waiver. The plea or sentence transcript should contain a stipulation or finding that the quantity was 30 grams or less. Conviction of being under the influence of marijuana has the same benefit. See Flores-Arellano v INS (9th Cir 1993) 5 F3d 360. See also Medina v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2005) 393 F3d 1063 (Nevada conviction for attempting to be under influence of THC comes within this exception). If a paraphernalia offense, such as possession of a marijuana pipe, relates to an offense of simple possession of 30 grams or less of marijuana, the noncitizen will have the same benefit. Matter of Martinez-Espinoza (BIA 2009) 25 I&N Dec 118. For this reason, if a paraphernalia conviction is unavoidable and relates to a marijuana pipe, it is best to put that in the record of conviction. The BIA has ruled that the exception to deportability for simple possession of 30 grams or less of marijuana does not apply to a conviction under a state statute containing an element requiring that the offense occurred in a prison or other protected location, or when an enhancement increased the maximum punishment for possession, such as an enhancement for possession within a "drug-free zone." Matter of Moncada-Servellon (BIA 2007) 24 I&N Dec 62 (possession in prison); Matter of Martinez-Zapata (BIA 2007) 24 I&N Dec 424 (enhancement for "drug-free zone").

The INS (now DHS) General Counsel ruled that conviction of simple possession of 30 grams or less of hashish or other cannabis products comes within the marijuana exception to the deportation ground and can be waived under INA §212(h) (8 USC §1182(h)). In the context of the §212(h) waiver, the General Counsel recommended that the INS deny a waiver to one who possessed an amount of hashish equivalent to more than 30 grams of marijuana leaves. See INS General Counsel Legal Opinion 96-3 (Apr. 23, 1996), withdrawing previous INS General Counsel Legal Opinion 92-47 (Aug. 9, 1992). See also 21 USC §802(16), defining "marihuana" to include all parts of the cannabis plant, including hashish.

In delinquency proceedings. As always, a delinquency disposition is not a "conviction" for immigration purposes. A plea to possession, under the influence, etc., is not a basis for deportation or inadmissibility, nor is it a plea to an aggravated felony. However, defense counsel should conservatively assume that a delinquency plea to sale, possession for sale, or other trafficking offenses will make the person inadmissible, because it will provide DHS with "reason to believe" that the minor has been or assisted a trafficker. See §52.33. This may not be such a serious result for a permanent resident, but if the minor is undocumented, this plea is likely to permanently bar him or her from ever getting lawful immigration status.

§52.33 c. Which Drug Offenses Are Aggravated Felonies

Ø Note: The strategies outlined in §§52.32 and 52.34 to prevent classification as a controlled substance offense also prevent classification as a controlled substance aggravated felony.

An aggravated felony subjects the person convicted of it to the penalties and restricted rights discussed in §52.44. The definition of aggravated felonies includes "illicit trafficking in a controlled substance… including a drug trafficking crime [defined under federal statute]." 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(B). A state or federal drug offense, or an attempt or conspiracy to commit such an offense (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(U)), will be considered an aggravated felony in immigration proceedings in the Ninth Circuit if:

- It is generally considered to be a trafficking offense (e.g., sale or possession for sale); or
- It is listed in 18 USC §924(c)(2) or, if a state crime, is analogous to one of the federal crimes listed in that section that carries a potential sentence of 1 year or more.

Offer to commit an offense: the Rivera-Sanchez rule. In a highly significant and unanimous en banc decision, the Ninth Circuit ruled that offering to commit a trafficking offense is not an aggravated felony, and that therefore parts of Health & S C §11360(a) and similar offenses do not constitute a controlled-substance aggravated felony under 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(B). U.S. v Rivera-Sanchez (9th Cir 2001) 247 F3d 905, 909. The court held that offering to commit an offense was not included in the statutory definition of aggravated felony, which cites only the principal offense, conspiracy, and attempt. 8 USC §1101(a)(48)(B). A noncitizen who is convicted of offering to sell, transport, or distribute a drug under Health & S C §11360(a), or who has a "record of conviction" (charging papers, plea or judgment, sentence, legally defined elements of the offense) that does not indicate whether the plea was to the principal act or to offering, has not been convicted of an aggravated felony. For further discussion of the record of conviction, see §§52.10, 52.26. The Rivera-Sanchez court's reasoning applies equally to Health & S C §11352(a); the court noted that the two statutes were nearly identical and overruled prior cases finding that conviction under §11352(a) necessarily constitutes an aggravated felony. See also Health & S C §11379(a).

Ø Important practice tip: The best plea in drug trafficking cases is transportation (not for gain) and, when possible, to an unidentified controlled substance. Although it was previously good practice to plead to "offer to transport" or "offer to sell or transport" because "offer to sell" was arguably not a deportable offense as a controlled-substance violation, "offering" to commit a drug offense has been held to be a deportable controlled-substance offense even though it is not an aggravated felony. Mielewczyk v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 575 F3d 992.

Note that offenses such as possession for sale under Health & S C §11351 do not include offering and therefore do not come within the beneficial Rivera-Sanchez rule. For this reason, it has been held ineffective assistance of counsel not to advise a noncitizen defendant of the immigration benefit of declining a plea to possession for sale and instead pleading up to offering to sell. People v Bautista (2004) 115 CA4th 229, 239, 8 CR3d 862.

Ø Note: Offering to commit a solicitation offense in violation of a controlled-substance statute such as Health & S C §11360, §11352, or §11379 and transportation of controlled substances under these sections are deportable controlled-substance offenses. See §52.32. A conviction of offering to commit a drug transaction also will establish inadmissibility on the ground that the noncitizen is a person who authorities have reason to believe is or has assisted a drug trafficker. In contrast, offering to transport may not have this disadvantage. See 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(C) and discussion in §52.50.

Simple possession as an aggravated felony. A state drug conviction is an aggravated felony if the offense is exactly analogous to a federal felony offense that appears in any of the federal drug statutes. See 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(B).

First conviction for simple possession. The Supreme Court held that a first conviction for simple possession of a controlled substance is not an aggravated felony, even if the state classifies the offense as a felony. Lopez v Gonzales (2006) 549 US 47, 166 L Ed 2d 462, 127 S Ct 625. This affirmed the rule already in existence in the Ninth Circuit under Ferreira v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2004) 382 F3d 1045. The exception is that a first conviction for simple possession of more than five grams of cocaine base or any amount of flunitrazepam is an aggravated felony. See 21 USC §841(a).

Two or more possession convictions. In contrast to a first conviction for simple possession, defense counsel should view a second possession conviction as a very dangerous offense and should assume that it will be held to be an aggravated felony if the individual's status as a recidivist drug offender was charged in the second prosecution and admitted or found to be true. Matter of Carachuri-Rosendo (BIA 2007) 24 I&N Dec 382. The Supreme Court has granted certiorari in a case concerning this issue. Carachuri-Rosendo v Holder (2009) 175 L Ed 2d 617, 130 S Ct 1012. A second possession conviction also is dangerous because under Lujan-Armendariz v INS (9th Cir 2000) 222 F3d 728, it cannot be eliminated for immigration purposes by deferred entry of judgment or other rehabilitative relief. Moreover, if the second offense occurred during the probation period for the first offense, the first conviction also cannot be eliminated by expungement under Lujan-Armendariz. See §52.14.

Ø Practice tip: To avoid an aggravated felony for two or more possession convictions, either plead to an offense other than a possession offense, or make sure that the prior possession offense(s) is not charged and admitted or found to be true in the second possession prosecution.

Ø Note: A noncitizen defendant's first conviction of simple possession, even of more than five grams of cocaine base or any amount of flunitrazepam, will not have an immigration consequence if it is successfully eliminated by "rehabilitative relief," such as withdrawal of plea under deferred entry of judgment, Proposition 36, or Pen C §1203.4. See Lujan-Armendariz v INS (9th Cir 2000) 222 F3d 728, 735. However, a drug conviction is not eliminated for immigration purposes under Pen C §1203.4(a) until the expungement is actually granted; mere prospective eligibility for a later expungement does not remove the conviction. Chavez-Perez v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2004) 386 F3d 1284. It has not yet been determined if the same rule applies to deferred entry of judgment or Proposition 36. One limitation on rehabilitative relief is that a preplea diversion under the diversion law before its amendment on January 1, 1997, will disqualify a defendant from the benefits of a Lujan expungement just as though it had been a first drug conviction. De Jesus Melendez v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 503 F3d 1019. Another limitation is that if there is a probation violation but the noncitizen ultimately receives rehabilitative relief, the conviction will not be eliminated for immigration purposes. Estrada v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 560 F3d 1039. See also §52.13. The second conviction of simple possession cannot be eliminated in this way for immigration purposes.

Minor drug offenses without federal analogues; transportation. Many minor drug offenses, e.g., Health & S C §11550 (under the influence) and Pen C §647(f) (under the influence), do not involve trafficking and also have no federal analogue, and thus should not be held to be aggravated felonies. Further, conviction of a first offense less serious than simple possession, which is not a federal offense, can be eliminated by any state rehabilitative relief. Cardenas-Uriarte v INS (9th Cir 2000) 227 F3d 1132. Transportation for personal use (e.g., Health & S C §§11352(a), 11360(a), 11379(a)) has no exact federal analogue and for that reason has been held not to be an aggravated felony. U.S. v Almazan-Becerra (9th Cir 2007) 482 F3d 1085, 1089. Convictions for under the influence and transportation also will not be counted when calculating whether a noncitizen has a "first" possession conviction. However, transportation and the other minor drug offenses discussed here do subject the defendant to deportability and inadmissibility because they are offenses "relating to" drugs under 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(B). See §52.31. Offering to transport is not an aggravated felony under U.S. v Rivera-Sanchez, supra.

Cultivation of marijuana. Cultivation of marijuana (Health & S C §11358) is categorically an aggravated felony as a drug trafficking offense as an analogue to 21 USC §841(b)(1)(D). U.S. v Reveles-Espinoza (9th Cir 2008) 522 F3d 1044.

Prescription offenses; maintaining a place where drugs are sold. A conviction of obtaining a controlled substance by means of a fraudulent or forged prescription under Bus & P C §4324 or Health & S C §11173 or §11368 might be held to be an aggravated felony, because the offense might be held analogous to 21 USC §843(a)(3). A safer plea would be to a forgery offense that does not contain the drug element. Note, however, that a conviction of any kind of forgery is an aggravated felony if a 1-year sentence is imposed. See §52.41. Maintaining a place where drugs are sold might be held an aggravated felony as analogous to a federal felony, while being in a place where drugs are used would not be.

§52.34 d. Strategy

Defense counsel should try to prevent the client from being convicted of any offense—even a minor one—related to controlled substances. If that option is not possible, the following strategies provide some protection under current law, but this area of law changes rapidly and often against the interests of the noncitizen. For more detailed instructions about dealing with controlled substance charges, see Note "Drug Offenses" accompanying the Quick Reference Chart for Determining Immigration Consequences of Selected California Offenses (http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php), and extensive discussion in Brady et al., Defending Immigrants, chap 3 (10th ed 2008). Note that some of the following strategies avoid aggravated felon status but still leave the person deportable and inadmissible for having a drug conviction.

"Rehabilitative relief," such as withdrawal of a plea under deferred entry of judgment under Pen C §1000, §1203.4 or Proposition 36, will eliminate the immigration effect of a first conviction for certain minor drug offenses. These include a first offense, whether felony or misdemeanor, of simple possession of any controlled substance (Lujan-Armendariz v INS (9th Cir 2000) 222 F3d 728, 735), or a first offense that is less serious than simple possession and that is not analogous to a federal felony, such as being under the influence or possession of paraphernalia (Cardenas-Uriarte v INS (9th Cir 2000) 227 F3d 1132, 1137 (expungement of conviction for possession of paraphernalia)). A first conviction of giving away a small amount of marijuana ought to receive the same treatment. See 21 USC §841(b)(4). However, rehabilitative relief will not eliminate the effect of a conviction for transportation for personal use, or for a second drug conviction of any kind, and will also not eliminate the effect of a conviction if there was a prior preplea diversion. De Jesus Melendez v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 503 F3d 1019. Nor will it eliminate the conviction if there was violation of probation. Estrada v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 560 F3d 1039. Counsel must make sure that the instant conviction is actually the defendant's first conviction in any jurisdiction and that there was no prior preplea diversion.

The conviction retains its immigration effect until it is actually eliminated under state law, e.g., until probation or other requirements are completed and the plea is withdrawn. Chavez-Perez v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2004) 386 F3d 1284, 1290. Counsel can protect a noncitizen defendant by structuring a disposition that does not leave the defendant exposed. This could be accomplished, for example, through an informal arrangement for a deferred prosecution in which the case is continued without a plea while the defendant fulfills certain conditions, with the understanding that the prosecution will consider dropping the charges based on good performance. Alternatively, if possible, a very short probation period or an arrangement for probation to end on release from criminal incarceration would permit the conviction to be expunged quickly under §1203.4. Once a conviction is so treated, the original guilty plea should no longer constitute a formal "admission" of a drug offense that causes inadmissibility under 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(i). See, e.g., Matter of E.V. (BIA 1953) 5 I&N Dec 194.

A first conviction for simple possession is a deportable offense, but not an aggravated felony unless it is for possession of flunitrazepam or more than five grams of cocaine base. A first conviction can be eliminated for immigration purposes by rehabilitative relief under Lujan-Armendariz v INS, supra. A second conviction for possession will probably be deemed an aggravated felony if it is pleaded as a specific-drug recidivist enhancement and proved or admitted; the second conviction then cannot be eliminated for immigration purposes except by vacation for cause. However, if the first conviction was or could be eliminated by rehabilitative relief, arguably the second conviction becomes the "first" for purposes of defining an aggravated felony. See §52.33.

A very good alternative is to negotiate a conviction of accessory after the fact for a controlled substance offense with less than a 1-year sentence imposed (Matter of Batista-Hernandez (BIA 1997) 21 I&N Dec 955). This is not a drug conviction involving deportability or inadmissibility, or an aggravated felony. There is, however, the danger that DHS will allege that accessory after the fact, when the record shows that the principal offense involved drug trafficking, makes the defendant inadmissible by providing "reason to believe" he or she assisted in trafficking; therefore this is not an optional plea for an undocumented person. See §52.50. But this offense may be a crime of moral turpitude, since the BIA held that a similar offense of misprision of felony is a crime of moral turpitude. Matter of Robles-Urrea (BIA 2006) 24 I&N Dec 22. Although the Ninth Circuit held that accessory after the fact is not a crime of moral turpitude (Navarro- Lopez v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 503 F3d 1063 (en banc)), a subsequent decision held that the court would defer to BIA published decisions regarding whether a crime is deemed a crime of moral turpitude as long as the decision is reasonable. Marmolejo-Campos v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 558 F3d 903 (en banc).

Another very good alternative is to ensure that the record of conviction (charging papers, plea or judgment, sentence, definition of the offense) does not indicate the specific controlled substance involved. The reason is that California statutes concerning "controlled substances," such as Health & S C §§11350-11351, 11352(a), 11377-11378, 11379(a), cover substances that are not defined as controlled substances under the federal Controlled Substances Act and therefore are not included in the immigration definition. Thus, in evaluating a conviction under a broadly defined statute such as Health & S C §11377, DHS cannot prove that the offense involved a federally controlled substance unless the substance is identified on the record. See Ruiz-Vidal v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 473 F3d 1072; Matter of Paulus (BIA 1965) 11 I&N Dec 274. A plea to an original or amended charge phrased in the language of the statute or to "a controlled substance on the state list of controlled substances" will avoid identification of the substance and avoid deportability and inadmissibility for a drug offense.

Ø Practice tip: To avoid deportation or inadmissibility for any overinclusive or divisible statute, consider entering a no contest plea under People v West (1970) 3 C3d 595, 91 CR 385, without any admission that the defendant is pleading guilty "as charged" in the complaint and without admitting any facts. The Ninth Circuit held that "unless the record of the plea proceeding reflects that the defendant admitted to facts, a West plea, without more, does not establish the requisite factual predicate." U.S. v Vidal (9th Cir 2007) 504 F3d 1072, 1090 (en banc). In Vidal, the defendant's waiver-of-rights form specified "People v. West" in the section requesting a description of "facts as to each charge" to which he pleaded no contest.

Conviction under Health & S C §11352(a), §11360(a), or §11379(a) is not an aggravated felony if the conviction is for offering to commit the act or for transportation. A very good plea would rely on the language of the statute in the disjunctive, leaving open the possibility that the offense involved either transportation or offering to commit some offense (including, if possible, transportation). But "offer to sell" and "transportation" are still deportable offenses if the controlled substance is identified and it is on the federal list. For this reason, it is good to have a client plead to "offer to sell or transport" or "transportation" (not for gain) of a controlled substance that is an unidentified controlled substance or a "controlled substance on the state list of controlled substances." Such a plea would be a nondeportable drug offense as long as there was no admission in the "record of conviction" regarding what the drug was.

Ø Practice tip: Possession for sale will be held to be an aggravated felony. When it will not be possible to plead to a lesser offense, counsel should advise the noncitizen defendant of the option of pleading up to transportation or offering to sell, offenses that have more serious criminal consequences but are not aggravated felonies. See People v Bautista (2004) 115 CA4th 229, 237, 8 CR3d 862 (failure to try to negotiate agreement in which client pleaded guilty to offering to sell deemed ineffective assistance of counsel). Even better, when possible, counsel should make every attempt to plead to a drug offense without identification of the controlled substance, which is not a deportable offense at all.

Ø Warning: A fact contained in a sentence enhancement that serves to increase the maximum penalty for a crime and that is required to be found by a jury beyond a reasonable doubt, if not admitted by the defendant, will be treated as an element of the underlying offense. Matter of Martinez-Zapata (BIA 2007) 24 I&N Dec 424. For example, to avoid an aggravated felony drug trafficking offense, do not have a client admit an enhancement based on sale, manufacturing, or possession for sale, among other things.

Some dispositions do not constitute a conviction for immigration purposes. See §§52.27-52.29. A conviction that is up on direct appeal is not a conviction for immigration purposes. Removal proceedings based on the conviction cannot be brought until direct appeal is waived or exhausted. A disposition in juvenile proceedings is not a conviction for immigration purposes.

Ø Practice tip: When a plausible basis exists for a motion to suppress evidence, counsel should consider filing the motion if conviction would render a client deportable. If the suppression motion fails in the trial court, the defendant can plead to the offense and still pursue an appeal under Pen C §1538.5(m). If the appeal is still pending when the noncitizen's sentence is up, any removal proceeding would be subject to a motion to terminate by immigration counsel because the conviction is not "final." If this is the noncitizen's only deportable offense, DHS will be unable to further detain the noncitizen and proceed with removal proceedings while the appeal is pending.

In juvenile court, counsel should seek to obtain a finding of possession only, not of sale or possession for sale, because sale or possession for sale might give rise to a "reason to believe" that the juvenile is or was a drug trafficker even though no conviction exists for immigration purpose, thereby making the juvenile inadmissible. Preplea diversion (under the law in effect before Jan. 1, 1997, or in a county that has established a drug court program under Pen C §1000.5) is not a conviction, but a deferred adjudication when a guilty plea was taken is a conviction for immigration purposes (unless it is a first conviction for one of the minor offenses that can be eliminated for immigration purposes by state rehabilitative relief under Lujan-Armendariz v INS (9th Cir 2000) 222 F3d 728).

If a first offense involving simple possession of a small amount of marijuana or hashish is involved, counsel should obtain a stipulation on the record that it was less than 30 grams, to avoid removability and preserve eligibility for a waiver of inadmissibility. See 8 USC §§1227(a)(2)(B), 1182(h). See also §52.32.

4. Offenses Involving Firearms or Destructive Devices

§52.35 a. Firearms Ground of Deportability; Definition of Firearm and Destructive Device

Conviction of almost any offense containing an element relating to firearms is a basis for deportability. A noncitizen is deportable if convicted in the United States "under any law of purchasing, selling, offering for sale, exchanging, using, owning, possessing, or carrying… any weapon, part, or accessory which is a firearm or destructive device" or for conspiracy or attempt to commit such an act. 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(C). There is no corresponding ground of inadmissibility.

Defined in 18 USC §921(a)(3)-(4), "firearm" includes all guns and other firearms, frames and receivers, mufflers and silencers; "destructive device" includes bombs, grenades, rockets, missiles, mines or similar items, and parts used to convert them. An exception is made for antique firearms and devices not intended to be used as weapons. Conviction of conspiracy or attempt to commit a firearms offense triggers deportability under 8 USC §1227(a)(2), regardless of the date of the conviction. Matter of Saint John (BIA 1996) 21 I&N Dec 593.

Thus, conviction of even minor firearms offenses that do not involve violent behavior, such as possessing an unregistered firearm, are a basis for deportability. Firearms offenses that do involve violence may have immigration consequences beyond the firearms ground of deportability. For example, an assault with intent to commit great bodily harm is a crime involving moral turpitude. See discussion in §§52.38-52.40. A "crime of violence" with a 1-year sentence imposed is an aggravated felony. See discussion in §52.47.

Finally, some firearms offenses, notably "trafficking in firearms" and "ex-felon in possession of a firearm," are aggravated felonies. See discussion in §52.36. Alternative pleas that avoid immigration consequences are discussed in §52.37.

§52.36 b. Firearms Offenses That Are Aggravated Felonies

Any state or federal offense involving trafficking in firearms or destructive devices is an aggravated felony under 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(C). Under 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(E), a host of specific federal offenses involving firearms and destructive devices are aggravated felonies:

- 18 USC §842(h) (receiving stolen explosives);
- 18 USC §842(i) (shipping or receiving explosives in interstate or foreign commerce by indictee, felon, fugitive, addict, mental defective, or committee);
- 18 USC §844(d) (transporting or receiving explosives in interstate or foreign commerce with intent to injure, intimidate, or damage property);
- 18 USC §844(e) (communication of threat or false information about attempt to injure, intimidate, or damage property by fire or explosive);
- 18 USC §844(f) (malicious damage by fire or explosive of property of United States or organization receiving federal funds);
- 18 USC §844(g) (illegal possession of explosive in airport);
- 18 USC §844(h) (use or carrying of explosive in committing federal felony);
- 18 USC §844(i) (malicious destruction by fire or explosive of property used in or affecting commerce);
- 18 USC §922(g)(1)-(5) (possession of firearms or ammunition by felon, fugitive, addict, mental defective, committee, alien unlawfully in United States, dishonorable dischargee, or person who renounced U.S. citizenship);
- 18 USC §922(j) (receiving stolen arms or ammunition);
- 18 USC §922(n) (shipping or receiving arms or ammunition by felony indictee);
- 18 USC §922(o) (possession of machine gun);
- 18 USC §922(p) (possession of undetectable firearm);
- 18 USC §922(r) (assembly of illegal rifle or shotgun from imported parts);
- 18 USC §924(b) (shipping or receipt of firearm or ammunition with intent to use in commission of felony); and
- 18 USC §924(h) (transfer of firearm with knowledge it will be used to commit crime of violence or drug trafficking offense).

See also IRC §5861 (e.g., failure to pay firearms tax, possession of unregistered firearm or one with altered serial number).

For a state offense to be held analogous to one of the listed federal offenses and therefore to be held to be an aggravated felony, the offense must have exactly the same substantive elements as the federal offense (or, if the state offense is broader, the official record of conviction must demonstrate that the conviction at issue was for an offense described in the federal law). U.S. v Sandoval-Barajas (9th Cir 2000) 206 F3d 853 (Washington state offense, possession of a firearm by a noncitizen, is not an aggravated felony, because it is broader than cited federal offense, possession of a firearm by noncitizen in unlawful status). See discussion of record of conviction in §§52.10-52.26. The state offense, however, need not include federal jurisdictional elements in the analogous federal offense, e.g., crossing state lines. U.S. v Castillo-Rivera (9th Cir 2001) 244 F3d 1020 (despite lack of interstate commerce element, felon in possession of firearm under Pen C §12021 is sufficiently similar to 18 USC §922(g)(1) to be aggravated felony under federal sentencing guidelines); Matter of Vasquez-Muniz (BIA 2002) 23 I&N Dec 207 (following Castillo-Rivera). However, Pen C §12021(a) is a divisible offense because 18 USC §922(g)(1) requires a prior felony conviction and §12021(a) includes the possession of a firearm by an individual convicted of certain misdemeanors and by "anyone who is addicted to the use of any narcotic drug." To the extent that a defendant pleads to a complaint worded in the exact language of the statute in the disjunctive or to those discrete offenses, a §12021(a) conviction will not be deemed an aggravated felony, but it will still be a deportable offense as a firearms offense.

Other than a §12021(a) conviction with the record showing that the defendant had a prior felony, most common

California firearms offenses do not appear to have an exact federal substantative analogue. Some less common California offenses, such as possession of a machine gun, may have a federal analogue. Counsel should review the listed federal offenses to identify whether the state offense charged may be an aggravated felony. Again, any offense relating to trafficking in firearms or destructive devices may be held to be an aggravated felony, even if it is not exactly analogous to a federal offense.

§52.37 c. Strategy

Conviction of any offense relating to firearms will make a noncitizen deportable, but not inadmissible. Undocumented persons may not have as a high priority avoiding the grounds of deportability, because they are already deportable for lack of lawful status. In contrast, a lawful permanent resident will lose lawful status and face removal if convicted of even the most minor firearms offense such as possession of an unregistered weapon.

A well-constructed plea to Pen C §12020(a) may avoid this ground. This is a divisible statute that includes offenses that do not relate to firearms, e.g., possession of a blackjack in Pen C §12020(a)(1) or carrying a concealed dirk or dagger under Pen C §12020(a)(4). If the record of conviction does not establish that a firearm was involved in the offense, the conviction does not trigger deportability on the firearms ground. Thus a defendant could plead guilty to possessing a specific weapon that was not a firearm, or to possession of an "illegal weapon" listed in §12020(a) or (a)(1), as long as the record of conviction (charging papers, judgment or plea colloquy and sentence) does not state that the weapon was a gun or an explosive. This particular plea would have no other immigration consequences.

Penal Code §245(a) also is a divisible statute for purposes of the firearms ground. Penal Code §245(a)(1) penalizes assault with weapons other than a firearm, and Pen C §245(a)(2) penalizes assault with a firearm. If the defendant pleads to §245(a)(1), or if the record of conviction does not reveal whether the offense involved was (a)(1) or (a)(2), the conviction does not make the defendant deportable on the firearms ground. This offense, however, is likely to be deemed an aggravated felony as a crime of violence if the sentence imposed is 1 year or more and the offense is a crime involving moral turpitude.

A conviction under a statute that does not explicitly involve a weapon does not incur deportability under the firearms ground even if the record reveals that a firearm was used. Matter of Perez-Contreras (BIA 1992) 20 I&N Dec 615 (conviction under Washington statute of "criminal negligence causing… substantial… pain" not firearms offense, although record showed that defendant shot victim). Conviction under a statute that has as an element use of a weapon, but not necessarily a firearm, is not a basis for deportation on the firearms ground—especially if the record of conviction (charge, plea, verdict, sentence) is cleared of any reference to firearm use. Matter of Madrigal-Calvo (BIA 1996) 21 I&N Dec 323; Matter of Teixeira (BIA 1996) 21 I&N Dec 316; Matter of Pichardo-Sufren (BIA 1996) 21 I&N Dec 330.

Ø Practice tip: If the record of conviction (complaint, judgment, plea colloquy, sentencing hearing and documents) does not establish whether the firearm is an antique weapon or not, there is a chance that the defendant can avoid deportability since the "antique firearm exception" has gained traction in unpublished Board of Immigration Appeal decisions in 2008. However, the use of other strategies mentioned above are the first line of defense for a noncitizen defendant faced with a firearms offense. See §52.35 for the antique firearm exception.

Ø Warning: A fact contained in a sentencing enhancement that serves to increase the maximum penalty and that is required to be found by a jury beyond a reasonable doubt, if not admitted by the defendant, is treated as an element of the underlying offense. Matter of Martinez-Zapata (BIA 2007) 24 I&N Dec 424. To avoid deportability for a firearms offense, avoid any sentence enhancement dealing with firearms or explosive devices.

Expungement under Pen C §1203.4 does not eliminate a firearms conviction for immigration purposes. Murillo-Espinoza v INS (9th Cir 2001) 261 F3d 771. Vacation of judgment for cause does.

Conviction of accessory after the fact is not a firearms offense. However, if a sentence of 1 year or more is imposed, the conviction is an aggravated felony. See §52.34. Accessory after the fact may be considered a crime of moral turpitude, although this issue is still being litigated. See §52.32.

Some relief from removal is available to qualified persons despite being deportable under the firearms ground. A person who could immigrate through a relative's or employer's visa petition is still eligible to apply for an adjustment of status or, possibly, immigration through consular processing. Matter of Gabryelsky (BIA 1993) 20 I&N Dec 750; Matter of Rainford (BIA 1992) 20 I&N Dec 598.

For removal proceedings filed on or after April 1, 1997, the immigration court has discretionary power to grant cancellation of removal to permanent residents under 8 USC §1229b if the conditions are met. See §52.55. Cancellation is barred if there is an aggravated felony conviction. Deportability on the firearms ground does not "stop the clock" for purposes of establishing residency for cancellation. For more information on firearms convictions and strategies, see Brady et al., Defending Immigrant §§6.1, 9.18, 11.10 (10th ed 2008).

5. Crime Involving Moral Turpitude

§52.38 a. Definition

Many offenses, both minor and serious, are held to be crimes involving moral turpitude and carry serious immigration consequences concerning inadmissibility (8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)), deportability (8 USC §1227(a)(2)(A)(i)), and establishing good moral character (8 USC §1101(f)(3)). See §52.39. The term "crime of moral turpitude" (sometimes called a "turpitudinous" crime) is defined by federal immigration law, and is different from the same term as used in California criminal law to determine whether a witness may be impeached with a prior conviction.

Ø Note: This section discusses how to determine whether an offense involves moral turpitude. Whether a moral turpitude conviction will cause deportability or inadmissibility depends on the number of moral turpitude convictions, the actual and potential sentence, and the date of commission or conviction of the offense relative to the person's admission to the United States. See §52.39.

The term "crime involving moral turpitude" has been defined by the Attorney General as "a reprehensible act with some form of scienter." Matter of Silva-Trevino (AG 2008) 24 I&N Dec 687, 706. Most regulatory offenses and crimes with a mens rea of negligence usually will not be considered crimes of moral turpitude. The definition does not depend on whether the offense is classified as a misdemeanor or felony or on the severity of the punishment. (However, whether a particular moral turpitude conviction will bring immigration consequences may depend on such factors; see §52.39.) On one hand, murder, rape, most sexual offenses including sex with a minor, drug trafficking offenses, voluntary manslaughter, robbery, burglary with intent to commit theft, burglary when there is unlawful entry, theft (grand or petty, when there is an intent to permanently deprive), arson, aggravated forms of assault, crimes that have a specific intent to defraud, and forgery have consistently been held to involve moral turpitude. On the other hand, involuntary manslaughter, simple assault or battery, and driving under the influence (when no injury occurs) have not. A crime of moral turpitude includes a conviction that requires proof that the defendant willfully or knowingly committed an act that causes "significant societal harm" or reprehensible conduct that is committed intentionally or with willfulness or recklessness. Matter of Silva-Trevino (AG 2008) 24 I&N Dec 687, 706 n5. For discussion of Silva-Trevino, see Tooby & Kesselbrenner, Living Under Silva-Trevino at http://www.ilw.com/articles/2009,0409-tooby.shtm. For further discussion of specific crimes, see chart at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php, and Notes Accompanying Quick Reference Chart; Brady et al., Defending Immigrants, App 4-A, Table: Crimes Involving Moral Turpitude Under the California Penal Code (10th ed 2008) (annotated chart of 70 common violations of the California Penal Code); Tooby, Crimes of Moral Turpitude (2008) (federal and out-of-state convictions); Tooby, Criminal Defense of Immigrants, App C (2003) (comprehensive list including federal and out-of-state convictions); Kesselbrenner & Rosenberg, Immigration Law and Crimes, App E (2008). See also Anno, 23 ALR Fed 480 (what constitutes "crime involving moral turpitude").

Evidence outside "record of conviction" can be introduced by government. Before Matter of Silva-Trevino, supra, facts outside the formal "record of conviction" (complaint, judgment, plea transcript, sentencing document) could not be considered when determining whether a conviction constituted a crime of moral turpitude. Reversing nearly a century of precedent, the Attorney General held in Silva-Trevino that in making that determination, the immigration court may consider any facts, even those outside the elements of the statute of conviction and outside the record of conviction to determine if an offense is a crime of moral turpitude. It is unclear if the Ninth Circuit will find this decision controlling. The Attorney General outlined the new crime of moral turpitude analysis as follows:

> In short, to determine whether an alien's prior conviction triggers application of the Act's moral turpitude provisions, adjudicators should: (1) look first to the statute of conviction under the categorical inquiry set forth in this opinion and recently applied by the Supreme Court in Duenas-Alvarez; (2) if the categorical inquiry does not resolve the question, look to the alien's record of conviction, including documents such as the indictment, the judgment of conviction, jury instructions, a signed guilty plea, and the plea transcript; and (3) if the record of conviction does not resolve the inquiry, consider any additional evidence the adjudicator determines is necessary or appropriate to resolve accurately the moral turpitude question.

Matter of Silva-Trevino (AG 2008) 24 I&N Dec 687, 704.

In Marmolejo-Campos v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 558 F3d 903, 907 n6 (en banc), the Ninth Circuit specifically stated that it was not ruling on Silva-Trevino, because the issue did not arise. Until there is more clarity, criminal defense counsel should attempt to choose dispositions for which there is no evidence that would bring the offense within the moral turpitude category. See §52.40 for strategy.

Ninth Circuit will defer to published BIA decisions on whether particular offense is crime of moral turpitude so long as decision is reasonable. A crime is decided to be one of moral turpitude by case law of the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) and the U.S. Courts of Appeals. The Ninth Circuit will defer to the BIA when it issues a published decision that an offense is a crime of moral turpitude, unless the decision is unreasonable. Marmolejo-Campos v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 558 F3d 903 (en banc). This means that many prior Ninth Circuit decisions holding that an offense is not a crime of moral turpitude may no longer apply. Ninth Circuit cases that may be affected by Marmolejo-Campos and that may no longer be good law are too numerous to list but include the following:

- Quintero-Salazar v Keisler (9th Cir 2007) 506 F3d 688 (consensual unlawful sexual intercourse between minor under 16 and adult at least 4 years older (Pen C §261.5(d)) is not categorically a crime of moral turpitude). Compare with Matter of Silva-Trevino (AG 2008) 24 I&N Dec 687 (any crime involving intentional sexual contact with minor is crime of moral turpitude).
- Plasencia-Ayala v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 516 F3d 738, 747, overruled on other grounds in Marmalejo-Campos v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 558 F3d 903, 911 (failure to register as a sex offender under Nevada statute is not crime of moral turpitude). Compare with Matter of Tobar-Lobo (BIA 2007) 24 I&N Dec 143.
- Nicanor-Romero v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 523 F3d 992, overruled on other grounds in Marmolejo-Campos v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 558 F3d 903, 911 (annoying or molesting a child under Pen C §647.6(a) not categorically crime of moral turpitude). Compare with Silva-Trevino, supra, under which this offense might be considered "sex with a minor."
- Cuevas-Gaspar v Gonzales (9th Cir 2005) 430 F3d 1013 (burglary with intent to commit any felony not categorically a crime of moral turpitude). Compare with Matter of Louissaint (BIA 2009) 24 I&N Dec 754 (unlawful entering into or remaining in dwelling with intent to commit any crime is crime of moral turpitude).
- Navarro-Lopez v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 503 F3d 1063 (en banc) (Pen C §32 (accessory after the fact) is categorically not crime of moral turpitude). Compare with Matter of Robles-Urrea (BIA 2006) 24 I&N Dec 22 (misprision of felony is crime of moral turpitude).

Ø Warning: Counsel should not rely on a chart stating whether a crime is a crime of moral turpitude, because the chart may rely on Ninth Circuit law that may conflict with or be overruled by BIA decisions under Marmelejo-Campos, supra, and, under Silva-Trevino, an immigration judge can now go outside the record of conviction to determine if the offense involves moral turpitude.

§52.39 b. Consequences of Conviction or Admission of Crime Involving Moral Turpitude; Remedies

Deportability. A noncitizen is deportable under 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(A) if, after admission to the United States, he or she is convicted of:

- Two crimes involving moral turpitude (CMT) not arising from a single scheme of misconduct (8 USC §1227(a)(2)(A)(ii)) (see, e.g., Gonzalez-Sandoval v INS (9th Cir 1990) 910 F2d 614; see also 19 ALR Fed 598); or
- One crime involving moral turpitude when the person committed the offense within 5 years after admission if the possible sentence was 1 year or more (8 USC §1227(a)(2)(A)(i)).

Example of two crimes of moral turpitude as ground for deportation. Jane obtained her "green card" in 1967. She then had two petty theft convictions, one in 1968 and one in 2008. Jane is deportable for two crimes of moral turpitude committed at any time after admission. If Jane's attorney had negotiated a petty theft infraction under Pen C §490.1(a) or a trespass, Jane would not be deportable under this ground.

Example of one crime of moral turpitude within 5 years of admission with potential 1-year sentence as ground for deportation. John obtained his "green card" on January 20, 2003. He was charged with violation of Pen C §484e(a) (theft of access card), a misdemeanor, committed on January 20, 2008, and he was convicted the next day on January 21, 2008. Because his crime was one of moral turpitude committed within 5 years of admission with a potential sentence of 1 year or more, conviction of this offense makes John deportable even if he receives no actual jail time and even though his conviction occurred more than 5 years after admission. If John's attorney had negotiated a disposition to an offense with a maximum potential sentence of less than 1 year, such as attempted misdemeanor theft under Pen C §484g, the conviction would not make John deportable under this ground.

Reduction to a misdemeanor and deportability. Many offenses become aggravated felonies if a 1-year sentence is imposed. See §52.42. In contrast, convictions trigger consequences under the moral turpitude deportability and inadmissibility grounds partly on the basis of potential sentence. A first conviction for a moral turpitude offense that was committed within 5 years of admission will make a permanent resident deportable if it has a potential sentence of 1 year or more. Therefore, reducing a "wobbler" to a misdemeanor under Pen C §17(b) will not help the client avoid deportability, because a misdemeanor still has a potential sentence of 1 year. However, conviction for attempt to commit a wobbler offense, which then is reduced to a misdemeanor, will have a potential sentence of only 6 months and will avoid deportability on the grounds of moral turpitude. However, reduction to a misdemeanor has a different effect on inadmissibility on the grounds of moral turpitude.

> Ø Practice tip: Conviction of petty theft within 5 years of admission will not be a deportable offense because the maximum punishment for petty theft is 6 months under Pen C §490. But a petty theft with a prior conviction under Pen C §666 would have a possible 1-year sentence if the Ninth Circuit follows U.S. v Rodriquez (2008) 553 US 377, 170 L Ed 2d 719, 128 S Ct 1783, in which the Supreme Court held that, in a criminal law context, the "maximum term of imprisonment prescribed by law" includes a recidivist sentence enhancement that may be imposed on the defendant.

Reduction to a misdemeanor and inadmissibility. Because the one CMT must have been committed after admission to trigger deportability, a person who committed the CMT before admission (and was admitted because the offense was waived or was not a basis for inadmissibility at the time) is not deportable. Whether an admission has occurred, or whether a new admission has possibly occurred for purposes of restarting the 5-year clock, can be a complex question; in case of doubt, consult with an immigration expert. "Admission" is defined as lawful entry into the United States with inspection. 8 USC §1101(a)(13)(A). A person who entered surreptitiously without inspection at a border point has not been admitted, but a person who entered with inspection by means of a tourist visa, permanent resident card, or other document has been admitted, even if fraud was committed. In some cases lawful permanent residents who return from a trip abroad do not make a new "admission" (8 USC §1101(a)(13)(C)), and in some cases a person who "adjusts status" to permanent residency at a government office within the United States is deemed to be making an admission (see Shivaraman v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2004) 360 F3d 1142; see also §52.19). Immigration counsel should be consulted when there is a question about when or whether a client has been "admitted" to the country.

Inadmissibility; exceptions. A noncitizen is inadmissible if convicted either before or after admission to the United States of one crime involving moral turpitude (8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(i)), unless the event comes within the petty-offense or youthful-offender exception. 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(ii).

Under the important petty-offense exception, a noncitizen is not inadmissible if he or she committed only one crime involving moral turpitude, the sentence actually imposed was 6 months or less, and the maximum possible sentence for the offense was no more than 1 year. 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(ii)(II). A previous moral turpitude conviction, even if vacated, may destroy eligibility for the exception, if the conviction is vacated on technical grounds. Matter of S.R. (BIA 1957) 7 I&N Dec 495. Because the offense cannot have a maximum penalty of more than 1 year, a person convicted of a felony, with imposition of sentence suspended, is not eligible for the petty-offense exception and will be found inadmissible. That person will be eligible for the exception if the felony is reduced to a misdemeanor under Pen C §17, because the offense then has a maximum sentence of only 1 year. La Farga v INS (9th Cir 1999) 170 F3d 1213. To qualify for the petty-offense exception, the sentence imposed must be no greater than 6 months' incarceration, either as part of a judgment (even if execution is suspended) or as a condition of probation. This refers to the nominal sentence ordered by the court, rather than the actual time incarcerated. See §52.10.

The youthful-offender exception to the CMT ground of inadmissibility benefits youths who were tried as adults. (Because a juvenile delinquency disposition is not a conviction of a crime, youths in delinquency proceedings do not need this exception.) It provides that a person who committed one moral turpitude offense while under the age of 18 is not inadmissible if the act and release from resulting imprisonment took place more than 5 years before the current application. 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(ii)(I).

Formal admission of a crime involving moral turpitude. A formal admission of a crime involving moral turpitude, even without a conviction, is a separate basis for inadmissibility. 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(i)(I). It might appear that a plea of guilty, as an admission, would make a defendant inadmissible even if the conviction were eliminated. However, if a court has disposed of charges in a way that does not amount to a conviction (e.g., dismissing the charges, vacating the conviction, delinquency disposition), the DHS must accept this order as binding on both the admission (plea) and the conviction. See Matter of E.V. (BIA 1953) 5 I&N Dec 194. Moreover, the DHS faces many technical difficulties in attempting to remove someone on the basis of an admission as opposed to a conviction. See Kesselbrenner & Rosenberg, Immigration Law and Crimes §3.2 (2008).

Postconviction relief. An expungement under Pen C §1203.4 will not eliminate the immigration effects of a conviction of a moral turpitude offense. Murillo-Espinoza v INS (9th Cir 2001) 261 F3d 771. Vacation of judgment for cause will. Neither a delinquency disposition nor infractions will constitute a basis for deportability.

§52.40 c. Strategy

Counsel should seek a plea to an offense with a scienter element less than "specific intent, deliberateness, willfulness, or recklessness." See Matter of Silva-Trevino (AG 2008) 24 I&N Dec 687. Examples are mens rea of mere negligence or strict liability, as well as forms of "recklessness" that amount to no more than gross negligence, and nearly all "regulatory offenses" punishing conduct not itself reprehensible other than being unauthorized. 24 I&N Dec at 689 n1.

When a statute is divisible, i.e., one part defining a crime of moral turpitude and another part defining an offense that is not a crime of moral turpitude, the defendant should plead to the specific part of the statute that is not a crime of moral turpitude. A vague record of conviction will allow an immigration court to take testimony that often would be detrimental to the defendant. For example, Veh C §10851 (vehicle theft) can be violated with intent either to permanently or temporarily deprive the owner of the vehicle. While intent to permanently deprive would constitute moral turpitude, joyriding with intent only to temporarily deprive does not constitute moral turpitude. If the plea specifies that the conviction is for intent only to temporarily deprive, that should be conclusive because it specifies that the conviction occurred under the non-moral turpitude part of the statute, and the defendant is not removable. Other divisible crimes include possession of stolen property that may encompass possession with intent to temporarily deprive an owner, which is not a crime of moral turpitude (Castillo-Cruz v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 581 F3d 1154); spousal or cohabitant battery under Pen C §243(e), which may be violated with mere offensive touching, which is not a crime of moral turpitude; and burglary under Pen C §459 with a plea to "entering a structure or vehicle with intent to commit trespass," which should not be a crime of moral turpitude.

Counsel must gather and review a defendant's entire criminal history in the United States and other countries before setting a disposition goal. A prior conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude (CMT) from another jurisdiction will be joined with the instant conviction by immigration authorities in calculating whether the person is deportable or inadmissible. Counsel should gather and review information on the number of moral turpitude convictions, the actual and potential sentences, and the dates of commission or conviction of the offense.

Counsel should remember that a formal admission of a crime involving moral turpitude, even without a conviction, is a separate basis for inadmissibility. 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(i)(I).

When considering a plea to a moral turpitude offense, counsel should carefully review 8 USC §1101(a)(43) and the discussion in §§52.41-52.47 to assess whether the offense might also be an aggravated felony. For example, conviction of theft, burglary, a crime of violence, perjury, bribery, or forgery is an aggravated felony if a 1-year sentence is imposed. See §52.46. Conviction of rape, murder, or sexual abuse of a minor is an aggravated felony regardless of the sentence.

6. Aggravated Felonies

§52.41 a. Definition of Aggravated Felony: Overview

The list of offenses that qualify as "aggravated felonies" includes some that are neither "aggravated" nor "felonies." The current definition consists of 21 paragraphs, some containing many offenses, in 8 USC §1101(a)(43). The statutory definition of aggravated felony includes these offenses:

- "Murder" (in the authors' opinion, this includes first and second degree murder, but not manslaughter) (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(A));
- Rape (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(A));
- Sexual abuse of a minor (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(A); see discussion in §52.45);
- Trafficking in drugs (any offense) plus certain federal drug felonies and violations of state statutes that punish exactly the same act (state "analogues") (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(B); see discussion in §§52.30-52.34);
- Trafficking in firearms, plus several federal crimes relating to firearms or destructive devices (e.g., bombs, grenades), including felon in possession of a firearm (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(C), (E); see §§52.35-52.37);
- Money laundering (as defined in 18 USC §1956 or a state analogue) or monetary transactions in property derived from unlawful activity (as defined in 18 USC §1957 or a state analogue), if the amount of the funds exceeded $10,000 (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(D));
- Fraud or deceit, or certain tax offenses, when the loss to the victim or government exceeded $10,000 (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(M));
- A "crime of violence" resulting in a sentence imposed of 1 year or more (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(F); see §52.47);
- Theft, receipt of stolen property, or burglary if the sentence imposed is 1 year or more (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(G); see §52.46);
- Alien smuggling, transporting, or harboring, except for immediate family (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(N));
- Certain false-document offenses if the sentence imposed is at least 1 year (note that Proposition 187 (Pen C §113) made document fraud a state criminal offense with a mandatory sentence of 5 years) (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(P));
- Vehicle trafficking with altered identification numbers if the sentence imposed is 1 year or more (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(R));
- Perjury, bribery, forgery, or obstruction of justice if the sentence imposed is 1 year or more (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(S));
- Failure to appear to serve a sentence if the underlying offense is punishable by a term of 5 years or more, or to face charges if the underlying sentence is punishable by a term of 2 years or more (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(Q), (T)); see Renteria-Morales v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 551 F3d 1076, 1079 (conviction for violation of 18 USC §3146 for bail jumping is not categorically an aggravated felony under 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(T), but it is categorically an aggravated felony for obstruction of justice if 1-year sentence is imposed);
- Various offenses, such as demand for ransom, child pornography, and RICO offenses punishable with a 1-year sentence; running a prostitution business; slavery; and offenses relating to national defense, sabotage, or treason; (see 8 USC §1101(a)(43)); and
- Attempt or conspiracy to commit any listed offense (see 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(U)).

These types of offenses are included in the list of aggravated felonies whether they are in violation of federal or state law (Matter of Barrett (BIA 1990) 20 I&N Dec 171), or are in violation of foreign law if release from the resulting imprisonment occurred within the previous 15 years. See 8 USC §1101(a)(43) (paragraph following (U)).

Ø Practice tip: Solicitation to commit an aggravated felony has been held not to constitute an aggravated felony. However, it is possible that legislation will erase this defense, so the best practice is for defense practitioners to not rely upon it when there is an alternative. See §52.33.

Ø Note: Defining aggravated felonies is a complex and quickly changing area of the law with harsh consequences. For a more detailed discussion, see chart at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php, and Notes Accompanying Quick Reference Chart; Brady et al., Defending Immigrants, chap 9 (10th ed 2008); Tooby, Criminal Defense of Immigrants (2008); Tooby, Aggravated Felonies (2008); Kesselbrenner & Rosenberg, Immigration Law and Crimes (2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§52.42 b. Sentence Requirements for Some Aggravated Felonies

Many generic aggravated felony offenses require that a sentence of 1 year or more must be imposed before the offense will be considered an aggravated felony: a crime of violence (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(F)); theft, receiving stolen property, or burglary (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(G)); passport or document forgery (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(P)); commercial bribery, counterfeiting, forgery, or trafficking in vehicles the identification numbers of which have been altered (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(R)); and obstruction of justice, perjury, subornation of perjury, or bribery of a witness (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(S)). For this purpose, the offense is an aggravated felony if (a) a sentence of 1 year or more is imposed, even if execution is suspended, or (b) the court ordered 365 days or more of custody as a condition of probation (8 USC §1101(a)(48)(B)). Note that other aggravated felonies, such as sexual abuse of a minor (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(A)) or drug trafficking (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(B)), have no sentence requirement.

Strategy. To avoid an aggravated felony in this context, counsel should obtain "imposition of sentence suspended" and a maximum custody, as a condition of probation, of no more than 364 days. Even if several consecutive 364-day terms of custody as a condition of probation are imposed, no single offense is punished by 1 year or more, and therefore none of the offenses constitutes an aggravated felony. While the Ninth Circuit had held that a sentence enhancement imposed for recidivism does not constitute a "sentence" for this purpose (U.S. v Corona-Sanchez (9th Cir 2002) 291 F3d 1201 (en banc)), the Supreme Court later held, in a criminal law context, that a recidivist sentence enhancement constituted part of the "maximum term of imprisonment prescribed by law." U.S. v Rodriquez (2008) 553 US 377, 170 L Ed 2d 719, 128 S Ct 1783. See further discussion of sentencing and strategy in §52.10.

§52.43 c. Analysis of State Offenses as Aggravated Felonies

The aggravated felony definition provides in the unnumbered paragraph immediately following 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(U) that "[t]he term applies to an offense described in this paragraph whether in violation of Federal or State law." Courts employ federal definitions of aggravated felony offenses, and a state offense that does not sufficiently match the federal definition of the offense will not be held to be an aggravated felony.

> Ø Note: Criminal counsel should stay as far away as possible from any offense that might be an aggravated felony. Failing that, counsel should consider that some state offenses might not constitute aggravated felonies under the federal definition. The aggravated felony analysis is best done in conjunction with expert immigration counsel.

The aggravated felony statute contains two classes of definition:
(1) Plain-language definitions (e.g., 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(A) ("murder, rape, or sexual abuse of a minor")), and
(2) Definitions framed in terms of specific federal statutes (e.g., 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(D) ("an offense described in section 1956 of title 18, United States Code" (money-laundering)).

Plain-language definitions. Courts will construct a "generic" or plain language federal definition of the offense, gleaned from sources such as common law, the Model Penal Code, the laws of several states, and federal statutes. If the state offense does not meet the generic federal definition (or if the state offense is broader than the federal, and the official record of conviction does not identify that the offense actually involved was one included in the federal definition), the state offense is not an aggravated felony. See, e.g., Ye v INS (9th Cir 2000) 214 F3d 1128 (burglary of automobile under California law is not "burglary" for aggravated felony purposes, because federal generic definition includes only burglary of building); U.S. v Anderson (9th Cir 1993) 989 F2d 310 (defining extortion under Armed Career Criminal Act sentence enhancement provision, 18 USC §924(e)). See discussion in Brady et al., Defending Immigrants §9.5, pt A (10th ed 2008).

Specific statute definitions. Regarding offenses defined in relation to specific federal statutes, the substantive elements of the state offense must match exactly in order for the state offense to be an aggravated felony. U.S. v Sandoval-Barajas (9th Cir 2000) 206 F3d 853. The offense, however, need not include the federal jurisdictional element in the listed federal offense, e.g., a requirement that the offense was carried out across state lines. U.S. v Castillo-Rivera (9th Cir 2001) 244 F3d 1020 (despite lack of interstate commerce element, Pen C §12021 is sufficiently similar to 18 USC §922(g)(1) to be aggravated felony under U.S. sentencing guidelines); Matter of Vasquez-Muniz (BIA 2002) 23 I&N Dec 207 (following Castillo-Rivera). See further discussion relating to firearms aggravated felonies in §52.36 and in Brady et al., Defending Immigrants §9.5, pt C.

§52.44 d. Consequences of Conviction of Aggravated Felony

Conviction of an aggravated felony under 8 USC §1101(a)(43) after the noncitizen is admitted to the United States is a basis for deportability. 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(A)(iii). Other penalties from this type of conviction, whether it occurs before or after admission to the United States, include:

- Ineligibility for political asylum. 8 USC §1158(b).
- Ineligibility for cancellation of removal. 8 USC §1229b.
- Permanent ineligibility to establish good moral character (8 USC §1101(f)), a requirement for cancellation of removal for certain nonpermanent residents, suspension of deportation, voluntary departure, and U.S. citizenship, if the conviction occurred after November 29, 1990. See §52.1.
- Permanent ineligibility for immigration after deportation. 8 USC §1182(a)(9)(A)(ii); discretionary waiver is available.
- Barring of permanent residents from applying for a waiver of inadmissibility for crimes involving moral turpitude and other offenses. 8 USC §1182(h).
- No eligibility for release on bond from immigration detention (8 USC §1226(c)), at least for noncitizens passing from criminal custody on or after October 9, 1998. A person who cannot secure an immigration bond will remain in immigration jails during the pendency of the hearing and any appeals, with little access to counsel and almost no means of obtaining pro bono immigration counsel. The U.S. Supreme Court held that this requirement of mandatory detention for certain criminal aliens was constitutional as applied to a permanent resident alien. Demore v Hyung Joon Kim (2003) 538 US 510, 515, 155 L Ed 2d 724, 732, 123 S Ct 1708. Once the noncitizen has a final removal order, he or she will be detained at least for the period reasonably necessary to bring about removal. If removal appears impossible (e.g., if it is to a country to which the United States is not currently deporting people), the individual has some right to release. See Clark v Martinez (2005) 543 US 371, 160 L Ed 2d 734, 125 S Ct 716; Zadvydas v Davis (2001) 533 US 678, 150 L Ed 2d 653, 121 S Ct 2491; Ma v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2001) 257 F3d 1095.
- Being subject to a speeded-up schedule for removal hearings and appeals. 8 USC §1228(a)(3).

Ø Note: Aggravated felons who reenter the United States illegally after removal face up to 20 years in prison if convicted under 8 USC §1326(b)(2). Counsel should advise defendants accordingly. This sentence can be enhanced if the defendant has prior felony convictions. See §52.63.

A nonpermanent resident can be removed by a DHS officer in an administrative procedure without a hearing before an immigration judge if, in the officer's opinion, the nonpermanent resident has been convicted of an aggravated felony and is not eligible for immigration relief. 8 USC §1228(b).

§52.44A e. Specific Aggravated Felonies and Exceptions

An offense may be an "aggravated felony" for immigration purposes even if it is a misdemeanor under California law. Ascertaining whether a particular California offense is an aggravated felony is not always easy, and there is not always a definitive answer. To determine whether a particular crime is likely to be considered an aggravated felony, counsel may want to consult the Quick Reference Chart at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php.

§52.45 (1) Rape, Sexual Abuse of a Minor

The terms "rape" and "sexual abuse of a minor" are included in the aggravated felony definition under 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(A). In a major reversal of Ninth Circuit precedent, the court held en banc that the following offenses are categorically not aggravated felonies as "sexual abuse of a minor" since they are overbroad in comparison with the federal crime under 18 USC §2243: Pen C §261.5(c) (unlawful sexual intercourse with a minor more than 3 years younger), Pen C §286(b)(1) (consensual sodomy with minor), Pen C §288a(b)(1) (consensual oral copulation with minor), and Pen C §289(h) (consensual sexual penetration by foreign object of person between ages 14 and 18). Estrada-Espinoza v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 546 F3d 1147. The Ninth Circuit found that the generic offense of "sexual abuse of a minor" under 18 USC §2243 requires (1) a mens rea level of knowing; (2) a sexual act; (3) with a minor between the ages of 12 and 16; and (4) an age difference of at least 4 years between the defendant and the minor. 546 F3d at 1152. The Ninth Circuit held that Pen C §261.5(d) (unlawful sexual intercourse with minor under age 16 with defendant over age 21) is not categorically an aggravated felony for "sexual abuse of a minor," but it left open the possibility that if the record of conviction shows that the victim was especially young (under age 14, and possibly under age 15), the offense might be an aggravated felony; this ruling also should apply to offenses under Pen C §§286(b)(2), 288a(b), and 289(i). Pelayo-Garcia v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 589 F3d 1010. In U.S. v Medina-Villa (9th Cir 2009) 567 F3d 507, 514, the court held that Estrada-Espinoza (characterized as applying only to consensual sex with older teenagers) did not overrule precedent holding that a broadly defined "lewd act" with a child under the age of 14 is categorically an aggravated felony under Pen C §288(a) (see, e.g., U.S. v Baron-Medina (9th Cir 1999) 187 F3d 1144), nor did it overturn U.S. v Pallares-Galan (9th Cir 2004) 359 F3d 1088, which held that a statute punishing less serious behavior, such as Pen C §647.6 (annoying or molesting child), is a divisible statute encompassing both conduct that may be "sexual abuse of a minor" and conduct that is not abusive.

> Ø Warning: Under Matter of Silva-Trevino (AG 2008) 24 I&N Dec 687, these offenses will be deemed crimes of moral turpitude if the defendant knew or should have known that the victim was a minor. In addition, these offenses will be charged by Immigration and Customs Enforcement as deportable crimes of child abuse. See California Chart and "Note: Safer Alternatives, Alternate Pleas with Less Severe Immigration Consequences" (for violent or sexual offenses) at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php.

The Ninth Circuit has also held that "rape" includes rape by means of intoxication under Pen C §261 (Castro-Baez v Reno (9th Cir 2000) 217 F3d 1057).

Alternative pleas could include battery, sexual battery, false imprisonment under Pen C §§236-237, nonviolent attempt to dissuade a victim from filing a police report under Pen C §136.1(b), or less onerous pleas supported by the facts. Misdemeanor molest/annoy under Pen C §647.6(a) is not an aggravated felony if the record of conviction does not indicate that the act amounted to "abuse." U.S. v Pallares-Galan, supra. However, Pen C §647.6(a) may have other immigration consequences. Under Silva-Trevino, the immigration court can take evidence outside the record of conviction to determine if the facts indicate that the offense actually was a crime of moral turpitude, and this crime is a deportable crime of child abuse if the record of conviction shows that the offense was harmful.

One recourse for a defendant in a case involving sex with a minor is that there remain some possibilities for immigration relief and waivers, despite the fact that these offenses are aggravated felonies. Depending on the individual situation, this might include withholding of removal (an asylum-like relief), adjustment of status for a person already granted asylum, or a family visa petition, with or without a waiver of inadmissibility. In some cases it is very helpful to obtain a misdemeanor conviction, including a felony reduced to a misdemeanor under Pen C §17, rather than a straight felony. See Brady et al., Defending Immigrants §9.1 (10th ed 2008).

§52.46 (2) Burglary, Theft, Receipt of Stolen Property, Forgery, Crime of Fraud or Deceit With Loss Exceeding $10,000

Burglary, theft, or receipt of stolen property. Burglary, theft, or receipt of stolen property is an aggravated felony if a 1-year sentence is imposed. 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(G). Aggravated felon status can be prevented in all cases by obtaining a sentence of 364 days or less. See §§52.10, 52.42 for discussion of sentence.

Burglary with a 1-year sentence imposed has the potential to be an aggravated felony in three ways: as burglary, as a crime of violence (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(F), see §52.47 for discussion), or possibly as attempted theft. For this purpose, the Ninth Circuit adopted the Supreme Court's generic definition of burglary as unlawful entry into a building to commit a crime. It therefore held that burglary of an automobile under Pen C §459 was not an aggravated felony as a burglary. It further found that felony burglary of a car is not an aggravated felony as a crime of violence. Ye v INS (9th Cir 2000) 214 F3d 1128, citing Taylor v U.S. (1990) 495 US 575, 109 L Ed 2d 607, 110 S Ct 2143 (burglary under federal definition may exclude certain state burglary convictions for federal sentence enhancement purposes; generic definition is unlawful entry into a building with intent to commit a crime). In addition, because Pen C §459 does not require that an entry be "unlawful or unprivileged," the statute lacks an element of the generic definition of burglary of a dwelling and this missing element may not be added to by a complaint or admission in the record of conviction. U.S. v Aguila-Montes (9th Cir 2009) 553 F3d 1229. However, burglary of an automobile under §459 is an aggravated felony as an attempted theft if a sentence of 1 year or more is imposed and the record of conviction shows that the defendant pleaded guilty to entering a locked motor vehicle with the intent to commit theft, rather than any felony. Ngaeth v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 545 F3d 796. California's Pen C §459(b) is a divisible statute, including the offenses of burgling a building, car, and other structures. If the record of conviction (the charging documents, plea or verdict, and sentence) is vague as to whether the §460(b) conviction is for entry into a building, the offense will not constitute "burglary" or a "crime of violence" for this purpose. If the record of conviction is vague as to whether the conviction is for intent to commit theft or any felony, it will not be an aggravated felony as an attempted theft. For further discussion of record of conviction, see §52.26. In contrast, Pen C §460(a), burglary of a dwelling, will be held to be burglary under the generic definition. For further discussion of burglary, see chart located at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php, and Notes Accompanying Quick Reference Chart; Brady et al., Defending Immigrants §9.10 (10th ed 2008).

A "theft offense (including receipt of stolen property)" is an aggravated felony if a 1-year sentence is imposed. 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(G). The Ninth Circuit held that an offense meets the aggravated felony definition of theft even if there is intent only to temporarily deprive the owner of property rights. U.S. v Corona-Sanchez (9th Cir 2002) 291 F3d 1201, 1205 (en banc). Thus, possession of stolen property, which could include possession with intent to temporarily deprive an owner of possession, has been held categorically an aggravated felony if a 1-year sentence is imposed. Verdugo-Gonzalez v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 581 F3d 1059. But see Castillo-Cruz v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 581 F3d 1154 (possession of stolen property is divisible as crime of moral turpitude because it could encompass possession with intent to temporarily deprive an owner, which is not crime of moral turpitude).

An offense under Veh C §10851 is divisible as a "theft offense." It is categorically a theft offense if a 1-year sentence is imposed and if the record of conviction shows that the defendant personally took the vehicle regardless of whether the taking was temporary or permanent. Gonzales v Duenas-Alvarez (2007) 549 US 183, 166 L Ed 2d 683, 127 S Ct 815. But a plea to Veh C §10851 (taking a vehicle), even with a sentence of 1 year or more imposed, will not be deemed an aggravated felony as a "theft offense" if the record of conviction does not establish that the defendant acted as the principal rather than as an accessory after the fact. U.S. v Vidal (9th Cir 2007) 504 F3d 1072 (en banc). Counsel should still act conservatively and try to obtain a sentence imposed of 364 days or less. See also Carrillo-Jaime v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 572 F3d 747 (owning and operating chop shop under Veh C §250 not aggravated felony as theft offense).

However, the theft must be of property. Penal Code §484 is a divisible statute for this purpose because it includes theft of labor. U.S. v Corona-Sanchez (9th Cir 2002) 291 F3d 1201, 1205 (en banc).

Ø Practice tip: To avoid an aggravated felony for theft when a sentence of a year or more is unavoidable, plead to the exact language of Pen C §484, which includes "theft of labor," which is not an aggravated felony as a theft offense. U.S. v Corona-Sanchez (9th Cir 2002) 291 F3d 1201 (en banc).

Ø Note: Although a taking of property with the intent to temporarily deprive the owner can be an aggravated felony, it is not a crime involving moral turpitude. Matter of D. (1941) 1 I&N Dec. 143. For this reason, a plea to Veh C §10851(a) will not be deemed a crime of moral turpitude if the plea is specifically to a taking with intent to temporarily deprive the owner of the vehicle. On moral turpitude generally, see §52.38.

Ø Warning: A sentence enhancement imposed for recidivist behavior will be counted as part of the "sentence." Thus, a conviction of petty theft with a prior under Pen C §§484 and 666 is an aggravated felony if the sentence, including enhancement, is 1 year or more. U.S. v Rodriquez (2008) 553 US 377, 170 L Ed 2d 719, 128 S Ct 1783.

The BIA has held that attempted possession of stolen property is sufficiently like attempted receipt of stolen property to be an aggravated felony. Matter of Bahta (BIA 2000) 22 I&N Dec 1381.

Forgery. An offense relating to forgery is an aggravated felony if a sentence is imposed of 1 year or more. 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(R). Penal Code §476 was found categorically to correspond to the generic definition of forgery for purposes of 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(R) in that it requires "intent to defraud and includes a mental state requirement of knowledge of the fictitious nature of the instrument." Morales-Alegria v Gonzales (9th Cir 2006) 449 F3d 1051, 1056. On the other hand, a conviction for violation of Pen C §475(c) was found not to be an offense relating to forgery because the generic definition of forgery requires the "falsification" of a document or instrument and §475(c) prohibits the use of certain documents which are "real" as well as "fictitious." Vizcarra-Ayala v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 514 F3d 870, 875.

Ø Practice tip: To avoid an aggravated felony for a Pen C §475(c) offense, keep the record of conviction in the words of the statute in the disjunctive, plead only to uttering a "real" document, or obtain a sentence of 364 days or less.

Fraud or deceit with loss exceeding $10,000. A crime involving fraud or deceit with loss to a victim or victims exceeding $10,000 is an aggravated felony under 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(M)(i). To avoid an aggravated felony for this offense, the defendant may plead to an offense in which there is no element or implied element of fraud or deceit. For example, a crime of theft for taking or carrying away property without consent will not be deemed a crime of fraud or deceit. Matter of Garcia-Madruga (BIA 2008) 24 I&N Dec 436 (distinction between crime involving fraud or deceit and theft is that "taking" of property must be "without consent" but certain offenses such as theft by deception might fit into both categories). However, if the defendant pleads to a theft offense, the sentence imposed cannot be more than 364 days or the offense is an aggravated felony theft offense.

If the conviction is to a crime with an element or implied element of fraud or deceit, an immigration court can take evidence outside the record of conviction to determine if the loss to a victim or victims exceeded $10,000. Nijhawan v Holder (2009) ___ US ___, 174 L Ed 2d 22, 129 S Ct 2294. If the loss to the victim or victims exceeds $10,000, defense counsel should attempt to have a defendant plead to a theft offense, provided that the sentence is 364 days or less. If pleading to a crime involving fraud is unavoidable, defense counsel should try to establish in the record that the total loss to the victim(s) for the count(s) of conviction was $10,000 or less. The loss must "be tied to the specific counts covered by the conviction." Nijhawan v Holder, supra. If that cannot be done, then counsel should attempt to arrange for the defendant to pay down the amount before plea (before sentence is not sufficient), so that the restitution amount is less than $10,000. See chart at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php, and Notes Accompanying Quick Reference Chart; Brady et al., Defending Immigrants §9.10 (10th ed 2008).

§52.47 (3) Crimes of Violence

A person convicted of a crime of violence and sentenced to imprisonment of 1 year or more is an aggravated felon (8 USC §1101(a)(43)(F)), subject to the penalties and restricted rights discussed in §52.44. To avoid an aggravated felony conviction for his or her client, counsel must either avoid a sentence of 1 year or more or plead to an offense that is not a "crime of violence."

A crime of violence is broadly defined in 18 USC §16(a) as an offense that "has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against" another person or person's property, or under 18 USC §16(b) as any felony that by its nature involves substantial risk of such force.

The Supreme Court held that felony driving under the influence, as an offense involving negligent causation of harm, is not a "crime of violence." See Leocal v Ashcroft (2004) 543 US 1, 160 L Ed 2d 271, 125 S Ct 377. Misdemeanor or felony reckless infliction of injury also is not a crime of violence; thus, involuntary manslaughter under Pen C §192(b) is not a crime of violence. See Fernandez-Ruiz v Gonzales (9th Cir 2006) 466 F3d 1121. Gross vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated is not a crime of violence. See Lara-Cazares v Gonzales (9th Cir 2005) 408 F3d 1217. In addition, offenses such as battery or spousal battery under Pen C §243(a), (e), are not crimes of violence, because they can be committed by mere offensive touching. A Veh C §2800.2 conviction is not a crime of violence if the "wanton, reckless" intent was supplied by having prior traffic violations. Penuliar v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 528 F3d 603, 609.

Other crimes of violence include:

- Making a terroristic threat under Pen C §422, even as a misdemeanor (see Rosales-Rosales v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2003) 347 F3d 714, 717);
- Exhibiting a deadly weapon with intent to resist arrest under Pen C §417.8 (see Reyes-Alcaraz v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2004) 363 F3d 937, 938);
- Mayhem under Pen C §203 (see Ruiz-Morales v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2004) 361 F3d 1219, 1222);
- Felony burglary of a dwelling, but not an automobile (see Ye v INS (9th Cir 2000) 214 F3d 1128);
- Aiding and abetting assault with a deadly weapon under Pen C §245(a)(1) (see Ortiz-Magana v Mukasey (9th Cir 2008) 542 F3d 653, 659); and
- Assault with a firearm under Pen C §245(a)(2) (see U.S. v Heron-Salinas (9th Cir 2009) 566 F3d 898, 899).

The following offenses have been held not to be crimes of violence, and therefore would not be aggravated felonies even if a sentence of 1 year or more were imposed:

- Simple battery under Pen C §243(a), (e) (see Ortega-Mendez v Gonzales (9th Cir 2006) 450 F3d 1010; see also Matter of Sanudo (BIA 2006) 23 I&N Dec 968);
- Misdemeanor sexual battery under Pen C §243.4 (see U.S. v. Lopez-Montanez (9th Cir 2005) 421 F3d 926);
- A simple battery that can be committed by mere offensive touching, when the record of conviction does not establish that actual violence occurred (see, e.g., Singh v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2004) 386 F3d 1228, discussed in §52.49);
- Driving under the influence, when the offense does not have a mens rea component or requires only a showing of negligence (Leocal v Ashcroft (2004) 543 US 1, 160 L Ed 2d 271, 125 S Ct 377; see Montiel-Barraza v INS (9th Cir 2002) 275 F3d 1178; U.S. v Trinidad-Aquino (9th Cir 2001) 259 F3d 1140; Lara-Cazares v Gonzales (9th Cir 2005) 408 F3d 1217;
- Possession of a dangerous weapon (dirk or dagger) under Pen C §12020(a) (see U.S. v Medina-Anicacio (5th Cir 2003) 325 F3d 638);
- Stalking under Pen C §649.9, because "harassing" conduct does not necessarily create a risk that force may be used. Malta-Espinoza v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 478 F3d 1080. However, "stalking" is a deportable offense under 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(E), and Malta-Espinoza did not reach the question of whether violation of Pen C §649.9 was a deportable offense on that ground; and
- Maliciously and willfully discharging a firearm at inhabited building or vehicle under Pen C §246 is not categorically a crime of violence under U.S. sentencing guidelines, since the offense can be committed by reckless or grossly negligent conduct, rather than intentional use of force. U.S. v Narvaez-Gomez (9th Cir 2007) 489 F3d 970. It is an open question whether this would be an aggravated felony crime of violence because the standard in the sentencing guideline is similar to 18 USC §16(a) and Narvaez-Gomez does not address the result for an 18 USC §16(b) case. However, a Pen C §246 offense would be a deportable crime as a firearms offense under 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(C).

Ø Note: Setting fire to a structure or forest land under Pen C §452(c) is not categorically an aggravated felony crime of violence because the defendant could have set fire to his own property (Jordison v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 501 F3d 1134) and 18 USC §16(a) defines a crime of violence as the use of force against another person or another's property.

Ø Note: There is a strong argument, although no guaranty, that felony conviction under Pen C §236 or §237 is not a crime of violence if it is effected by deceit or fraud. A misdemeanor conviction under Pen C §§236 and 237 ought not to be held a moral turpitude offense. Likewise, conviction under Pen C §136.1(b) (nonviolently persuading someone not to file a police report) ought not to be a crime of violence, although there is no published precedent.

See further discussion in "Note: Safer Alternatives" at the California Quick Reference Chart and Notes at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php, and Brady et al., Defending Immigrants §9.13 (10th ed 2008).

Ø Practice tip: When the client is charged with an offense that might be classified as a crime of violence, defense counsel should attempt to obtain a sentence of less than 1 year—meaning imposition of sentence suspended or a sentence of 364 days or less (either directly imposed or ordered as a condition of probation) to avoid aggravated felon status for the client.

7. Domestic Violence and Crimes Against Children

§52.48 a. Definition

Persons convicted of offenses related to domestic violence can suffer immigration consequences in two ways:

- If the crime is classified as a "crime of violence" and a 1-year sentence is imposed, the offense will be an aggravated felony under 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(F). See discussion in §52.47.
- There is a broadly defined ground of deportability specifically based on domestic violence offenses. 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(E).

Ground for deportation. Conviction of a state or federal crime of domestic violence, stalking, or child abuse, neglect, or abandonment is a basis for deportation if the conviction occurred after the person was admitted and on or after September 30, 1996. 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(E)(i). A court finding of violation of certain portions of a domestic violence protection order, even absent a conviction, is a basis for deportability if the behavior that constituted the violation occurred on or after September 30, 1996. 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(E)(ii). There is no analogous basis for inadmissibility. However, these types of offenses may constitute crimes involving moral turpitude and must be analyzed independently regarding inadmissibility on that ground.

Conviction of crime against child. A crime of child abuse, child neglect, or child abandonment is a deportable offense if committed after admission. The BIA has defined "child abuse" very broadly as "any offense involving an intentional, knowing, reckless, or criminally negligent act or omission that constitutes maltreatment of a person under 18 years old or that impairs such a person's physical or mental well-being, including sexual abuse or exploitation." The injury may be slight, and emotional mistreatment or conduct injurious to morals is encompassed within this definition. Matter of Velazquez-Herrera (BIA 2008) 24 I&N Dec 503, 512. The BIA did not define "child neglect" or "child abandonment." The immigration court will look both at the elements of the statute and the admissible record of conviction to determine if the noncitizen's conviction included the necessary elements of this offense. 24 I&N Dec at 518.

> Ø Practice tip: To avoid deportability for a "crime of child abuse, child neglect, or child abandonment," plead to a generic offense that does not have as an element the minority age of the victim and keep the record of conviction free of any reference to the victim's age.

For purposes of this deportation ground, counsel should assume that any conviction under Pen C §273a(a) (endangering child or causing or permitting child to suffer physical pain, mental suffering, or injury) will result in deportability. While the Ninth Circuit held that a conviction of Pen C §273a(b) (misdemeanor) is not categorically a crime of child abuse, because it includes placing a child in a situation that merely carries the risk of nonserious harm, the court implied that conviction of §273a(a) (felony) is a categorical crime of child abuse. Fregozo v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 576 F3d 1030, 1037. However, Pen C §273a(b) is not a safe offense, because it could involve child neglect or abandonment (a deportable offense), which was not charged and not an issue in Fregozo.

Stalking. The Ninth Circuit has held that stalking under Pen C §646.9 is not categorically an aggravated felony. Malta-Espinoza v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 478 F3d 1080, 1083. However, the court did not reach the question of whether the defendant was removable under 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(E), which specifically makes a conviction for stalking a ground for removal. 478 F3d at 1081 n1.

Conviction of "Crime of Domestic Violence." The term "crime of domestic violence" is specifically defined in 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(E)(i) to include > any crime of violence (as defined in section 16 of title 18 [United States Code]) against a person committed by a current or former spouse of the person, by an individual with whom the person shares a child in common, by an individual who is cohabitating with or has cohabited with the person as a spouse, by an individual similarly situated to a spouse of the person under the domestic or family violence laws of the jurisdiction where the offense occurs, or by any other individual against a person who is protected from the individual's acts under the domestic or family violence laws of the United States or any State, Indian tribal government, or unit of local government.

Thus, to be a domestic violence offense, the offense must (1) be a crime of violence defined under 18 USC §16 and (2) be committed against a victim with a specified domestic relationship to the accused. If counsel can prevent either of these factors from being present, the conviction will not be a deportable "crime of domestic violence." Those two factors are the only considerations for the deportation ground: Neither felony/misdemeanor classification nor sentence is determinative. Because the definition incorporates state domestic violence law, the dating relationships that are included under California domestic violence law are also included in this definition. See §52.49 for alternative plea suggestions.

Although the Ninth Circuit held in Tokatly v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2004) 371 F3d 613, 624, that evidence outside the record of conviction was inadmissible to prove that the victim and perpetrator had a "domestic" relationship, defense counsel must assume that this is no longer good law, because the Supreme Court held that evidence outside the record of conviction can be used to prove the domestic relationship in a similarly worded sentencing guideline case. See U.S. v Hayes (2009) ___ US ___, 172 L Ed 2d 816, 129 S Ct 1079. See §52.49.

Court finding of violation of certain portions of a protection order. A separate basis for deportability under this ground is a civil or criminal court finding, on or after September 30, 1996, that the individual has violated portions of a protection order relating to violence or stalking. Under 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(E)(ii):

> Any alien who at any time after entry is enjoined under a protection order issued by a court and whom the court determines has engaged in conduct that violates the portion of a protection order that involves protection against credible threats of violence, repeated, harassment, or bodily injury to the person or persons for whom the protection order was issued is deportable. For purposes of this clause, the term "protection order" means any injunction issued for the purposes of preventing violent or threatening acts of domestic violence, including temporary or final orders issued by civil or criminal courts (other than support or child custody orders or provisions) whether obtained by filing an independent action or as a pendente lite order in another proceeding.

§52.49 b. Strategy

When a charge of domestic violence is lodged against a noncitizen, the defense and the prosecution may have important interests in common. Depending on the specific situation, the victim may have urgent, objective reasons to avoid the defendant's deportation. For example, the defendant may provide needed child support; it may be against the children's interests to permanently lose a parent; or the victim may wish to attempt reconciliation after counseling. It is often possible to structure an alternative plea in which the same requirements, e.g., jail time, protective orders, and counseling, are imposed, but the defendant does not become deportable. Domestic violence advocates may play an important role in deliberations between defense and prosecution.

Defense counsel can avoid a conviction of a crime of domestic violence by his or her client by pleading to an offense that is not a crime of violence, or by avoiding proof in the record that the victim shared the specified domestic relationship with the defendant.

Avoid conviction of a crime of violence. Some offenses have no potential element of violence: for example, theft. Other offenses are not categorically or necessarily crimes of violence, although a particular conviction may be held to be of a crime of violence if the record establishes that the offense involved intended or actual use of violent force. A plea to these offenses will avoid a conviction of a domestic violence offense as long as counsel keeps evidence of actual violence out of the record of conviction. See §52.47. For example, battery and spousal battery under Pen C §243(a), (e), are not necessarily crimes of violence, because the statute can be violated by mere offensive touching, and a misdemeanor under Pen C §236 is not necessarily a crime of violence, because it requires no violence. Likewise, dissuading (with no threats of violence) an individual from filing a complaint under Pen C §136.1(b) is a potentially very useful plea because it appears not to have immigration consequences, and it can fulfill many requirements of the prosecution in that it is a potential strike (see Pen C §1192.7(c)(37)) and may be punished as a felony or as a misdemeanor. In contrast, infliction of injury on a spouse or other family member, as defined by Pen C §273.5, is a crime of violence and hence is a crime of domestic violence. Reckless infliction of harm is not a crime of violence, so that offenses such as involuntary manslaughter and felony involuntary manslaughter (Pen C §§191.5, 192(b)) are not crimes of violence. See Fernandez-Ruiz v Gonzales (9th Cir 2006) 466 F3d 1121 (en banc); Lara-Cazares v Gonzales (9th Cir 2005) 408 F3d 1217.

Ø Practice tip: To avoid a deportable offense for a crime of "domestic violence," arrange a plea to Pen C §243(e)(1), which is not necessarily a "crime of domestic violence" provided the defendant does not admit any use of violent physical force. A plea to Pen C §273.5, which is categorically a crime of violence and an aggravated felony if a sentence of 1 year or more is imposed, is to be avoided. See Ortega-Mendez v Gonzales (9th Cir 2006) 450 F3d 1010 (misdemeanor battery under Pen C §242 is not crime of violence or domestic violence offense); Matter of Sanudo (BIA 2006) 23 I&N Dec 968 (battery and spousal battery under Pen C §§242, 243(e) are not crimes of violence, domestic violence offenses, or crimes involving moral turpitude).

Ø Warning: Penal Code §243(e) (spousal or cohabitant battery) can be violated with mere offensive touching (not a crime of moral turpitude) or by actual violent physical force (a crime of moral turpitude). To avoid the possibility that the immigration court will take evidence, which it can do for a crime of moral turpitude under Matter of Silva-Trevino (AG 2008) 24 I&N Dec 687*,* it is important to try to craft a plea that amends the complaint to allege that the defendant committed "offensive touching" or "used force but not violent force" and state this as the factual basis for the plea as well. This should conclusively determine that the crime is not a crime of moral turpitude. See §52.40.

If the plea is not to a crime of violence, it will not be considered a deportable domestic violence conviction even if domestic violence counseling or anger management is imposed as a condition of probation, or other evidence shows that the event was in fact a domestic violence incident.

Domestic relationship can probably be proved by evidence outside record of conviction. It is no longer good practice to try to avoid a crime of domestic violence by avoiding evidence of the domestic relationship in the record of conviction. It is very likely that the immigration court will permit evidence outside the record of conviction to establish this element in view of U.S. v Hayes (2009) ___ US ___, 172 L Ed 2d 816, 129 S Ct 1079. This relationship includes current or ex-spouse, coparent of child, cohabitant living as spouse, or other relationship protected under the domestic violence laws of the state of conviction, such as California.

Ø Practice tip: Pleading to a crime of violence against a victim not described in the statute (e.g., the ex-wife's new boyfriend, not the ex-wife) will avoid a deportable domestic violence offense. In addition, immigration counsel have a good argument, although no published precedent, that a crime of violence against property is not included in the definition of domestic violence. The definition of crime of violence, and suggestions for alternate pleas, is discussed in more detail in §52.47. See also Notes "Domestic Violence" and "Safer Alternatives" at the California Quick Reference Chart and Notes at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php; Brady et al., Defending Immigrants §6.15 (10th ed 2008).

Judicial finding that protection order against domestic violence was violated. Deportability also can be caused by a civil or criminal court finding a violation of a protection order against domestic violence. Rather than plead to violating a protection order against domestic violence, the defendant should plead to an alternate offense that is not a crime of violence or stalking. A plea to Pen C §273.6(a) for violation of a protective order that was issued pursuant to Fam C §§6320 and 6389 is a deportable offense (Alanis-Alvarado v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 558 F3d 833), as is a plea to violating a stay-away order or any order not to commit an offense that is described in §6320 or §6389 (Szalai v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 572 F3d 975). Because this includes almost all conduct covered by protection orders, a plea to another offense is the best strategy. For further discussion, see California Quick Reference Chart and Notes at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php; Brady et al., Defending Immigrants §6.15 (10th ed 2008).

Because this ground includes a civil court finding of violation, a finding that a juvenile has violated a domestic violence protection order might be a basis for the juvenile's deportation. On conduct-based immigration consequences, see §52.50.

Ø Practice tip: A plea to violation of Pen C §166(a)(4) for willful disobedience of any process or court order with a vague record of conviction is a better plea than Pen C §273.6 if the record of conviction does not indicate that the defendant disobeyed a domestic protection order. Alternatively, a plea to a new offense, such as trespass, rather than violation of a stay-away order, might avoid this ground of deportability. The best plea would be to plead to conduct that is not itself a violation of the court order in case the categorical approach is abandoned for this crime of deportability.

§52.50 D. Conduct-Based Immigration Consequences

Noncitizens may be held deportable, inadmissible, or barred from establishing good moral character for reasons other than convictions and sentences in criminal cases. See the chart in §52.24 for grounds for these actions. The most common forms of conduct that can trigger adverse immigration consequences without a conviction are prostitution, alien smuggling, document fraud, and drug trafficking, abuse, and addiction. This section discusses grounds not requiring a conviction or sentence.

> Ø Note: When a ground for inadmissibility, deportation, or preclusion from establishing good moral character does not require a conviction, the conduct triggering it may be established by a juvenile court finding (see §52.9) or by police reports or other evidence. See Matter of Rico (BIA 1979) 16 I&N Dec 181 (criminal charges dismissed, but other evidence demonstrated trafficking and triggered inadmissibility).

Drug traffickers. A noncitizen is inadmissible and barred from establishing good moral character if the DHS has "reason to believe" that he or she is or has ever been or has assisted a drug trafficker. The noncitizen's spouse and children are also inadmissible if they have benefited from the trafficking in the previous 5 years. 8 USC §§1101(f), 1182(a)(2)(C). No conviction is necessary, and one incident is sufficient. There is no analogous deportation ground. Trafficking includes not only sale or possession for sale, but also giving drugs away and maintaining a place where drugs are distributed. Matter of Martinez-Gomez (BIA 1972) 14 I&N Dec 104. Importation or possession for one's own use is not trafficking. See Matter of McDonald & Brewster (BIA 1975) 15 I&N Dec 203. Similarly, transportation for personal use should not be considered trafficking. See discussion in §52.33.

Even after a conviction is vacated, the DHS can use a guilty plea or any evidence or information from the event to attempt to establish its "reason to believe" drug trafficking occurred. However, individuals who have plausibly asserted that they did not intend to traffic have overcome this.

Drug addicts and abusers. A noncitizen is inadmissible if he or she is currently a drug addict or abuser, and deportable if he or she has been a drug addict or abuser at any time since admission to the United States. 8 USC §§1182(a)(1)(A)(iv), 1227(a)(2)(B)(ii). Drug "addiction" and "abuse" are medical determinations. See Matter of F.S.C. (BIA 1958) 8 I&N Dec 108. The definition of "drug abuser" is a matter of controversy. Some government-licensed doctors use the definition that more than one-time experimentation within the past 3 years qualifies as "current" drug abuse. Certainly admission of addiction/abuse required for CRC placement or in some instances to participate in "drug court" will be used to designate the persons as an addict or abuser. The definition of drug abuser is particularly strictly applied by U.S. consulates abroad. Persons with consular appointments abroad should be warned of the interviews and, if necessary, should delay the application until 3 years after using any drugs.

> Ø Note: This controversy illustrates the dire consequences of almost any drug offense and shows the consequences of admitting to any involvement with drugs. Counsel should advise the defendant not to discuss any history of illegal drug use with police or the probation department in order to avoid triggering deportation or inadmissibility under these grounds.

Prostitutes. A noncitizen is inadmissible and barred from establishing good moral character if he or she has engaged in the business of prostitution within the previous 10 years. 8 USC §§1101(f), 1182(a)(2)(D). This definition includes prostitutes, procurers, and persons who receive proceeds, but not customers. No conviction is required. See Matter of R.M. (BIA 1957) 7 I&N Dec 392. In addition, persons who engage in prostitution and, conceivably, customers can be found to have committed a crime involving moral turpitude. See, e.g., Matter of Lambert (BIA 1965) 11 I&N Dec 340. Prostitution is defined for this purpose as providing sexual intercourse, as opposed to other sexual acts, for hire. Kepilino v Gonzales (9th Cir 2006) 454 F3d 1057. A conviction for violation of Pen C §647(b) is broader than the ground of inadmissibility because §647(b) can encompass a single, isolated sexual act other than sexual intercourse. Matter of Gonzalez-Zoquiapan (BIA 2008) 24 I&N Dec 549. For the same reason, a conviction of Pen C §647(b) does not bar a noncitizen from establishing good moral character under 8 USC §1101(f). The BIA has not determined whether attempting to hire a prostitute is a crime involving moral turpitude. Matter of Gonzalez-Zoquiapan, supra.

Ø Practice tip: If a conviction for prostitution cannot be avoided, do not stipulate to the police report as the factual basis for the plea because the conduct described in the police report might establish more than an isolated act and might establish acts of sexual intercourse.

Persons arrested or convicted of drunk driving. Alcoholics can be found inadmissible under a ground relating to physical and mental disorders and associated behavior that poses a threat to property or persons. 8 USC §1182(a)(1)(A)(iii). At least one U.S. consulate has excluded persons on this ground, based on a conviction of driving under the influence within the previous 2 years. Immigrant visa applicants applying outside the United States will be referred to a panel physician to determine possible inadmissibility for alcoholism if an applicant has either:

- A single drunk driving arrest or conviction within the last 3 calendar years; or
- Two or more drunk driving arrests or convictions in any time period.

U.S. Department of State Foreign Affairs Manual, vol. 9, §40.11 n8.3. It is recommended that immigration counsel provide proof that the person is not drinking and proof of rehabilitation such as evaluation from a substance abuse center or therapist and proof of attendance at AA meetings. Driving under the influence is not, as was previously held, an aggravated felony as a crime of violence. Leocal v Ashcroft (2004) 543 US 1, 160 L Ed 2d 271, 125 S Ct 377; Montiel-Barraza v INS (9th Cir 2002) 275 F3d 1178; U.S. v Trinidad-Aquino (9th Cir 2001) 259 F3d 1140. See §52.47 for discussion.

Homosexuals. Homosexuality has not been a basis for inadmissibility since 1990.

Persons who test HIV-positive. Persons who test HIV-positive are no longer inadmissible, but HIV/AIDS remains on the list of communicable diseases that must be waived to enter the United States.

Gamblers. Persons who have been convicted of two or more gambling offenses or whose income is derived from illegal gambling are barred from establishing good moral character under 8 USC §1101(f)(5).

Communists, terrorists, Nazis, "other unlawful activity," and crimes relating to transfer of technology. Members of several groups are inadmissible under 8 USC §1182(a)(3) and deportable under 8 USC §1227(a)(4). The section relating to Communists and terrorists is extensive and includes a section on "any other unlawful activity." With new antiterrorism provisions in effect, persons—especially those of Middle Eastern descent—arrested for participating in political demonstrations or suspected of having links with terrorists may need special immigration counseling. Others may simply have been arrested at airports, or come afoul of the special registration requirements for persons from several Moslem countries. For advice on such cases, see "Post-9/11 Resources" at http://www.nationalimmigrationproject.org, or contact the National Immigration Project for assistance.

Persons who intend to engage or who have engaged in illegal export of technology or sensitive information are inadmissible and deportable. 8 USC §§1182(a)(3)(A)(i), 1227(a)(4)(A)(i). Although a literal reading of the statute would include all such offenses, legislative history shows that it should apply only to acts that might compromise national security. See HR Conf Rep No. 101-955, 101st Cong, 2d Sess 131, 132 (1990), reprinted in 1990 US Code Cong & Ad News 6784, 6796.

Noncitizens smuggling, trafficking, or harboring other noncitizens. A noncitizen who at any time has encouraged or helped any other noncitizen to enter the United States illegally—even if the person helped was a family member and paid nothing for the help—is inadmissible. 8 USC §1182(a)(6)(E). A person who committed such an act within 5 years after his or her last entry into the United States is deportable. 8 USC §1227(a)(1)(E). Note that only smuggling, and not harboring or transporting, is punished under these grounds, and that no conviction is required to prove smuggling. Some waivers are available if the person smuggled was a parent, spouse, son, or daughter. 8 USC §§1182(d)(11), 1227(a)(1)(E)(iii). The waiver "cancellation of removal" under 8 USC §1229b (see §52.55) is available even if persons outside that group were smuggled, unless the offense constitutes an aggravated felony.

Conviction under 8 USC §1324(a)(1)(A) and (a)(2) for alien smuggling, trafficking, or harboring will be held to be an aggravated felony under 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(N), unless it is a first offense and the noncitizen shows that the conduct was for the purpose of assisting, abetting, or aiding only the alien's spouse, child, or parent. A potentially safe alternative plea would be to plea to aiding and abetting another person's illegal entry under 8 USC §1325, because the aggravated felony definition specifically refers to §1324.

Document fraud. A noncitizen who is the subject of a civil administrative court finding that he or she has possessed, used, or sold false documents for immigration benefits is deportable and inadmissible. 8 USC §§1182(a)(6)(F), 1227(a)(3)(C). Although a conviction is not required for these immigration penalties, conviction under Pen C §113 or 18 USC §1546(a) can be a basis for the civil finding. Conviction also may be an aggravated felony. 8 USC §1101(a)(43)(P).

Civil court finding of violation of domestic violence temporary restraining order. Another ground of deportation, but not inadmissibility, is a civil court finding that the alien has violated a domestic violence temporary restraining order (on or after Sept. 30, 1996). See 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(E); §§52.48-52.49. This does not require a criminal conviction to trigger deportability. Cancellation of removal under 8 USC §1229b (INA §240A) may be available for long-term lawful permanent residents.

Serious nonpolitical crime. A noncitizen who the DHS has serious reason to believe committed a serious nonpolitical crime outside the United States is ineligible for restriction of removal under 8 USC §1231(b)(3)(B)(iii). McMullen v INS (9th Cir 1986) 788 F2d 591, overruled on other grounds in Barapind v Enomoto (9th Cir 2005) 400 F3d 744, 751. To be classified as a political offense, the common-law character must be outweighed by the political element. Matter of McMullen (BIA 1994) 19 I&N Dec 90.

§52.51 E. Checklist: Defendant's Eligibility for Immigration Relief

To establish specific goals in defending a noncitizen criminal defendant, defense counsel first must ascertain the defendant's current immigration status and potential for a change of status through future application. The goals of an immigration-minded defense are to avoid the loss of the defendant's current status and to avoid forfeiting his or her eligibility for possible future immigration relief.

The following checklist may assist in analyzing counsel's case. It is intended as a brief overview of the most commonly encountered statuses and factual situations. This overview is far from exhaustive and should be used only as a guide and starting point for counsel's case analysis. Often, the defendant does not know his or her exact status. For example, many people mistakenly think that marriage to a U.S. citizen brings automatic citizenship or permanent residency status, without the need to file an application. Similarly, people who have received employment authorization based on filing an application of some kind with the DHS may mistakenly believe that their application has been granted and that they have permanent resident status or asylum. Counsel should photocopy all immigration documents and check with immigration counsel if necessary to verify status. Counsel should complete the immigration intake form provided in §52.3. For extensive information describing immigration applications and how to avoid convictions that would bar them, see Brady et al., Defending Immigrants, chap 11 (10th ed 2008).

- Is the defendant a U.S. citizen without knowing it?

A U.S. citizen cannot be deported, excluded, or removed for any reason. Anyone born in the United States is a U.S. citizen, as are persons born in Puerto Rico, Guam, the U.S. Virgin Islands and, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands. 8 USC §1101(a)(38). A national of the United States is not a U.S. citizen, but cannot be deported. Persons born in an outlying possession of the United States, such as American Samoa and the Swains Islands, are nationals.

Other persons may have automatically acquired U.S. citizenship without realizing it. The two threshold questions to ask a defendant are:

- At the time of his or her birth, was a parent or grandparent of the defendant a U.S. citizen?
- Before the defendant's 18th birthday, did he or she become a permanent resident and did at least one parent become a naturalized U.S. citizen?

If the answer to either question might be yes, the defendant should be referred for immigration counseling to learn whether citizenship was passed on. See §52.54 for further discussion.

- Is the defendant a permanent resident or does he or she have current lawful immigration status of some kind?

Such persons include lawful permanent residents ("green card" holders) and persons holding lawful nonimmigrant visas, e.g., students, tourists, temporary workers, or business visitors. For such clients, it is important to keep in mind the distinction between removal owing to deportability (expulsion from the United States as well as loss of any present lawful immigration status) and inadmissibility (which bars future admissions to the United States and acquisition of lawful immigration status). Noncitizens with lawful immigration status can lose that status and be removed from the United States if they become deportable. 8 USC §1227. Inadmissible noncitizens who leave the United States may be denied permission to reenter, even if they are lawful residents. Inadmissible noncitizens may also be ineligible to establish good moral character. See §52.1. See also California Quick Reference Chart and Notes at http://www.ilrc.org/immigration_law/criminal_and_immigration_law.php.

Some persons who immigrate through a spouse are conditional permanent residents who must report to the DHS within 2 years after receiving residency. 8 USC §1186a(d)(2). Although there is at present no formal FBI check of criminal record at the time of the 2-year interview, the person might be asked questions under oath about grounds for deportation.

Ø Note: A lawful permanent resident who might be deportable should try to avoid contact with immigration authorities before obtaining expert immigration counseling. Applying for a 10-year "renewal" of a green card, applying for naturalization to U.S. citizenship, or traveling abroad and then reentering the United States all place the person at risk.

- Has the defendant been a lawful permanent resident for 5 years, with a total of 7 years' continuous residence after any lawful admission?

Lawful permanent residents who have held that status for at least 5 years and who have resided continuously in the United States for 7 years after having been admitted in any status are eligible to apply for a special waiver of most grounds of deportability and inadmissibility under 8 USC §1229a. This form of immigration relief is called "cancellation of removal." It will excuse any conviction except an aggravated felony. 8 USC §1229b. Cancellation cuts off the accrual of 7 years at the time of issuance of a Notice to Appear or commission of certain acts rendering a person deportable or inadmissible, but the accrual of 5 years as a permanent resident is not similarly cut off. Convictions from before April 1, 1997, ought not to "stop the clock" on accrual of the 7 years, although this may be further litigated. Cancellation of removal for lawful permanent residents is discussed in §52.53.

- Has the defendant, not a permanent resident, lived in the United States for at least 10 years?

A defendant without lawful immigration status may be eligible to apply for cancellation of removal for nonpermanent residents if he or she has 10 years' residence, good moral character (see §52.1), and can establish that removal would cause the defendant's U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident spouse, parent, or child exceptional and extremely unusual hardship. See §52.55 on cancellation of removal for nonpermanent residents. In a controversial decision, the BIA held that a noncitizen who has been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude was ineligible for this form of relief regardless of whether he was an arriving alien or was eligible for the petty-offense exception under 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(ii)(II). Matter of Almanza-Arenas (BIA 2009) 24 I&N Dec 771. Thus, avoid any crime of moral turpitude, even if it is a misdemeanor and the sentence is 6 months or less, if the noncitizen defendant needs to qualify for this form of relief. See Brady et al., Defending Immigrants, chap 11 (10th ed 2008).

- Has the defendant lived in the United States since January 1, 1972?

The defendant may be eligible to apply for registry as a permanent resident (see §52.60). He or she must not be inadmissible and must establish good moral character (see §52.1).

- Is the defendant a currently undocumented person?

Undocumented persons include those who entered the United States surreptitiously or fraudulently, or who hold an expired visa; all are removable for lack of lawful immigration status. 8 USC §1227(a)(1). As long as they do not become inadmissible or barred from establishing good moral character because of a criminal record, they may be able to apply for relief from removal or permanent residency if they qualify for a particular benefit such as family immigration or cancellation for nonpermanent residents. Alternatively, they may qualify for voluntary departure.

Ø Note: For an undocumented person with no immediate prospect of achieving lawful immigration status, the highest defense priority may be to minimize jail time to diminish the likelihood of encountering immigration officials.

- Does the defendant have a U.S. citizen parent or spouse (of any age), a sibling or child (over age 21), or a permanent resident spouse or (if defendant is unmarried) parent?

The defendant may be eligible to immigrate through a visa petition at some point (see §52.56). The defendant must not be inadmissible.

- Does the defendant come from a country of civil war or human rights abuses or recent natural disaster?

A defendant fearing persecution or torture may apply for political asylum, withholding of removal, or relief under the United Nations Convention Against Torture (CAT) (see §52.57). Conviction of an aggravated felony is a bar to asylum and a severe disadvantage to gaining withholding or relief under the CAT.

The United States designates some countries for Temporary Protected Status (TPS) due to recent civil strife or natural disaster. To qualify, the defendant must be a national of a TPS country and must meet other requirements, must be admissible, and must not have been convicted of two misdemeanors or one felony. See §52.58. Countries designated for TPS are set forth on the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services website at http://www.USCIS.gov. Special relief under Nicaraguan Adjustment and Central American Relief Act (NACARA) legislation was extended to Salvadorans, Guatemalans, and nationals of the former Soviet bloc countries. See §52.55.

Alternatively, the defendant may wish to apply for voluntary departure. See §52.59.

- Is the defendant under juvenile court jurisdiction or an abused spouse or child, whether or not under court jurisdiction?

A child who is a dependent of a juvenile court, or who is in delinquency but cannot be returned to the parent due to abuse, neglect, or abandonment, may be eligible for permanent residency as a special immigrant juvenile under 8 USC §1101(a)(27)(J). See §52.61.

A noncitizen who has been abused by a U.S. citizen or permanent resident spouse or parent can apply for permanent residency under the Violence Against Women Act. The abused spouse or child can submit a family visa petition on his or her own behalf, without the cooperation of the abusing citizen or permanent resident. 8 USC §1154(a)(1)(A)(iv), (B). Alternatively, the abused spouse or child may be eligible for special cancellation of removal for nonpermanent residents, which requires only 3 years of good moral character and physical presence in the United States. 8 USC §1229b(b)(2). See §52.61.

- Can the defendant provide valuable information to law enforcement authorities about criminal or terrorist activity, or is the defendant a victim of crime or alien trafficking?

Congress has created temporary visas, which can lead to permanent residency, for persons who are victims of, or have information about, certain crimes. An applicant's own criminal record is potentially waivable: Only persons inadmissible under the terrorist grounds cannot apply for these visas. These include visas under 8 USC §1101(a)(15)(S) for persons who have "critical reliable information" about terrorism or criminal activity (125 visas/year); under 8 USC §1101(a)(15)(T) for victims of severe forms of alien trafficking (10,000 visas/year); and under 8 USC §1101(a)(15)(U) for victims of serious crimes who assist in investigation or prosecution efforts (10,000 visas/year). See §52.62.

§52.52 F. Forms of Immigration Relief Available From Department of Homeland Security (DHS) and Federal Courts

Even a noncitizen who is undocumented or inadmissible or deportable (or all three) may nevertheless qualify for certain waivers or immigration benefits that will allow him or her to gain or retain legal status. To safeguard a defendant's opportunity to apply for such benefits, certain outcomes must be avoided. Criminal counsel's strategy will depend on the client's documented or undocumented status and the potential eligibility for affirmative immigration benefits. To assist counsel in prioritizing and setting goals, §§52.53-52.62 provide a general overview of the most commonly encountered forms of relief in removal proceedings and explain the most widely available immigration benefits. For a more detailed discussion, see Brady et al., Defending Immigrants, chap 11 (10th ed 2008). Some information is available from the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) at http://www.uscis.gov. Ideally, criminal defense counsel advising defendants to make concessions in criminal court in order to obtain a disposition that may preserve eligibility for relief in immigration proceedings should consult with immigration counsel to confirm both statutory eligibility and whether, considering the individual facts and the pattern of discretionary decision making at local immigration courts, there is likelihood of success.

§52.53 1. Lawful Permanent Residents: Cancellation of Removal

- Is the defendant a permanent resident of 5 years, with 7 years of continuous residence?

Cancellation of removal under 8 USC §1229b(a) permits certain permanent residents to apply for a discretionary waiver of any ground of deportability or inadmissibility. Conviction of an aggravated felony is a bar to this application (8 USC §1229b(a)(3)), and the applicant must not have been granted cancellation or similar relief in the past (8 USC §1229b(c)(6)).

The cancellation applicant must have been a permanent resident for 5 years (8 USC §1229b(a)(1)) and must have resided in the United States continuously for 7 years after having been admitted in any status (e.g., as a permanent resident, tourist, or student) (8 USC §1229b(a)(2)). A parent's permanent resident status is imputed to the unemancipated minor children residing with that parent for purposes of eligibility for the 5 years' residency status. Mercado-Zazueta v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 580 F3d 1102. The 5 years will continue to accrue throughout the resident's removal proceedings and, if the resident contests deportability, into federal review of a removal order. The 7-year continuous residence requirement is deemed to have ended on the occurrence of either of the following events: (a) the issuance of the Notice to Appear, the charging paper beginning removal proceedings under 8 USC §1229 or (b) the applicant's commission of certain offenses listed in 8 USC §1182(a)(2) that render him or her inadmissible or deportable. 8 USC §1229b(d)(1). These offenses that "stop the clock" on the 7 years are crimes involving moral turpitude, prostitution, drug offenses, and conviction of two or more offenses with an aggregate 5-year sentence, if the person becomes deportable or inadmissible because of the offense. However, a conviction by plea from before April 1, 1997, may not stop this clock, and the person might remain eligible to apply for cancellation. See Sinotes-Cruz v Gonzales (9th Cir 2006) 468 F3d 1190.

Ø Note: An immigration attorney's assistance may be needed to assess whether charges would come within the "clock-stopping" category. A defendant who needs more time to accrue the 7 years should, if possible, plead to an offense that occurred later rather than earlier in time.

- Did the permanent resident defendant plead guilty to an offense (even an aggravated felony) with immigration consequences before April 24, 1996?

In INS v St. Cyr (2001) 533 US 289, 150 L Ed 2d 347, 121 S Ct 2271, the Supreme Court held that the abolition of 8 USC §1182(c) on April 24, 1996, was not retroactive. Thus, a qualifying permanent resident may be able to avoid deportation by applying, under former 8 USC §1182(c), to waive a conviction received before that date. This relief (formerly known as "section 212(c) relief") could waive even conviction of an aggravated felony, although it was not sufficient in INS v St. Cyr, supra, to waive a firearms conviction. This relief will assist noncitizens with drug or drug trafficking convictions, but not those who have been convicted of sex offenses or many other kinds of crimes in which there is no comparable ground of inadmissibility. Abebe v Mukasey (9th Cir 2009) 554 F3d 1203.

Counsel with any questions about former 8 USC §1182(c) should contact an immigration attorney. More information is available at the websites of the National Immigration Project of the National Lawyers Guild (http://www.nationalimmigrationproject.org), the American Immigration Law Foundation (http://www.ailf.org), and the Immigrant Legal Resource Center (http://www.ilrc.org).

§52.54 2. United States Citizenship

- Is the defendant a permanent resident of 5 years (or sometimes less) who wishes to apply for U.S. citizenship?

Lawful permanent residents may apply for citizenship after residing in the United States and demonstrating good moral character (see §52.1) for 5 years. 8 USC §1427. Special procedures apply to spouses and minor children of U.S. citizens (who need show only 3 years of permanent residency), military personnel (who may need 1 year or less, and in some cases do not need to be permanent residents, and who may accrue residency time even when residing with their spouse abroad during military duty), and religious workers. 8 USC §1430.

- Did the defendant have a parent or grandparent who was a U.S. citizen at the time of defendant's birth?
- Did the defendant become a permanent resident before age 18 and did one of the defendant's parents become a naturalized citizen before the defendant turned 18?

Some defendants may be unaware that they are U.S. citizens. If the answer to the first question is yes, or if the answer to both parts of the second question is yes, the defendant should be referred for immigration counseling.

Ø Note: When representing a permanent resident who is currently under the age of 18, counsel can advise the family that the minor will become a citizen—and therefore be immune to deportation—if one parent with lawful custody naturalizes to U.S. citizenship before the minor's 18th birthday. Special benefits exist for adopted children of U.S. citizens. See Benchbook and Fact Sheets at http://www.ilrc.org/sijs.php.

§52.55 3. Certain Nonpermanent Residents: Suspension of Deportation or Cancellation of Removal; Special Rules for Nonpermanent Residents From Certain Countries

- Has the defendant lived in the United States for at least 10 continuous years?
- Does the defendant meet the requirements for any of the special rules on adjustment of status found in the notes following 8 USC §1255?

The attorney general may "cancel the removal" of certain aliens who have resided in the United States for at least 10 years. 8 USC §1229b(b)(1)(A). The grant of this relief bestows lawful permanent resident status. To be eligible, an applicant must have been physically present in the United States for a "continuous" period (which is not broken by statutorily specified brief absences) of at least 10 years immediately preceding the date of application; have been of good moral character during that period; not have been convicted of any crimes that would render him or her inadmissible or deportable; and not be deportable for failure to register as an alien, falsification of documents, or a false claim to U.S. citizenship. Finally, an extremely restrictive requirement is that the applicant must demonstrate that deportation would cause a U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident spouse, parent, or child exceptional and extremely unusual hardship.

Certain countries of origin. At various times, Congress has provided relief to nationals of several countries concerning the rules for adjustment of status and cancellation of removal. These special provisions are found as a note following 8 USC §1255 and cover nationals from El Salvador, Guatemala, the Soviet Union, Russia, any republic of the former Soviet Union, Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania, Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Romania, Haiti, Hungary, Bulgaria, Albania, East Germany, Yugoslavia, or any state of the former Yugoslavia and their spouses and children. Other countries have also received special treatment. These special rules contain authority for adjustment to lawful permanent resident status for nationals who, among other requirements, have been physically present in the United States on a certain date or for a certain amount of time. See, e.g., 8 CFR §245.13 (Nicaraguan, Cuban); 8 CFR §245.15 (Haitian); 8 CFR §245.20 (Syrian). In most cases, the rules do not relax the good moral character requirement nor provide any amelioration of the criminal bars to eligibility for suspension of deportation or cancellation for nonlawful residents. For updated information, consult an immigration practitioner or the Citizenship and Immigration Services' website at http://www.uscis.gov, which contains a section with answers to frequently asked questions.

> Ø Note: Review the latest enactments concerning special treatment for certain nationals and obtain expert immigration advice concerning these issues. These special rules contain deadlines for application for adjustment of status, cancellation of removal, and motions to reopen.

Older convictions may be a benefit. The criminal record requirements are very strict for cancellation for nonpermanent residents: The person cannot be deportable or inadmissible and must have good moral character. However, if the person was convicted by plea before April 1, 1997, of a disqualifying offense, the person still may be permitted to apply.

Noncitizens who have been battered or subjected to extreme cruelty in the United States by a spouse or parent who is a U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident may apply for cancellation of removal under 8 USC §1229b(b)(2). See §52.61.

§52.56 4. Immigration Through Visa Petition Based on Relationship With Citizen or Permanent Resident Relative; Waiver of Certain Crimes-Based Grounds of Inadmissibility

- Does the defendant have a close relative who is a permanent resident or U.S. citizen?

A noncitizen who is not inadmissible (see §52.1) may obtain permanent resident status through a visa petition based on a relationship with a qualifying U.S. citizen or permanent resident. 8 USC §1154.

Persons classified under 8 USC §1151(b) as immediate relatives of U.S. citizens (spouse, parent of a child over age 21, or unmarried child under age 21) may immigrate rapidly. Others, including adult or married children, siblings of citizens, and spouses and unmarried children of permanent residents, must immigrate through the preference system. 8 USC §1153(a). Depending on the relationship and country of origin, this system may involve a wait ranging from a few months to several years.

Adults who have spent time without lawful status in the United States and then leave the country, either through voluntary departure (see §52.59) or removal, face a 3-year or 10-year bar before they can reenter the United States on a family visa. A waiver of this inadmissibility ground based on hardship is available. 8 USC §1182(a)(9)(B).

Ø Note: Certain valued employees can immigrate through an employer's labor certification. See 8 USC §1153(b). Although this device is primarily available to professional workers, nonprofessionals such as health attendants, specialty chefs, and workers who must speak a foreign language may also qualify. The person must not be inadmissible but can apply for a waiver of certain crime-related grounds of inadmissibility under 8 USC §1182(h). Discussion of waiver under 8 USC §1182(h) follows.

- Is the defendant inadmissible under certain crimes-based provisions?

A defendant may become admissible by a discretionary waiver of inadmissibility under 8 USC §1182(h) for the following convictions:

- One or more convictions of crimes involving moral turpitude. 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(i)(I).
- One conviction of simple possession of 30 grams or less of marijuana (or a smaller amount of hashish). 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(A)(i)(II). Note that this is the only drug offense that can be waived under this provision.
- Two or more convictions with an aggregate 5-year sentence. 8 USC §1182(a)(2)(B).
- Engaging in prostitution (8 USC §1182(a)(2)(D)).

This waiver is available only under the following conditions:

- Conviction occurred more than 15 years before applying for the immigration benefit, and the person has been rehabilitated and is not a threat to national security. 8 USC §1182(h)(1)(A).
- Conviction was for prostitution, and the person has been rehabilitated and is not a threat to national security. 8 USC §1182(h)(1)(A).
- The defendant has a U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident spouse, parent, or son or daughter, and denial of benefit would result in extreme hardship. 8 USC §1182(h)(1)(B).
- The defendant is an abused spouse or child of a U.S. citizen or permanent resident who qualifies for classification under the Violence Against Women Act (8 USC §1154(a)(1)(A)(iii) or (iv) or 8 USC §1154(a)(1)(B)(ii) or (iii)). 8 USC §1182(h)(1)(C). See discussion in §52.61.

Permanent residents are barred from applying for this waiver if, after obtaining permanent resident status, they (a) were convicted of an aggravated felony or (b) have not accrued 7 years before the issuance of the Notice to Appear (the charging document beginning removal proceedings). 8 USC §1182(h)(2).

§52.57 5. Political Asylum, Restricting/Withholding of Removal, and U.N. Convention Against Torture

- Does the defendant fear returning to his or her home country, or come from a country of human rights abuses or civil war?

Under current law, there are three immigration benefits that may provide relief to a noncitizen who asserts that he or she might be subjected to persecution or torture if returned to his or her home country:

(1) Asylum (8 USC §1158 (INA §208)) provides temporary and potentially permanent resident status to a noncitizen who establishes a possibility that he or she will be persecuted on account of, e.g., race, religion, or political opinion, if removed to the home country. Unless there are special circumstances, the person must apply within 1 year after coming to the United States.

(2) Withholding of removal (also known as "restriction on removal" under 8 USC §1231(b)(3) (INA §241(b)(3)) provides protection from removal, but not permanent status, to a noncitizen who establishes a clear probability that he or she will be persecuted on account of the above grounds if removed.

(3) Relief under the United Nations Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman, or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CAT) provides protection from removal but no permanent status to noncitizens who can establish a probability that they will be subjected to torture by the government of their home country if removed there. It is not necessary to establish that the torture will be on account of the grounds described above. See 8 CFR §§208.16-208.17.

Bars to asylum and withholding of removal. Under 8 USC §1158(b)(2)(A) and §1231(b)(3)(B), the Attorney General may deny asylum or withholding to an applicant if the Attorney General decides any of the following:

- The applicant ordered, incited, assisted, or otherwise participated in the persecution of an individual because of the individual's race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion;
- The applicant, having been convicted by a final judgment of a particularly serious crime, is a danger to the community of the United States;
- There are serious reasons to believe that the alien committed a serious nonpolitical crime outside the United States before the alien arrived in the United States;
- There are reasonable grounds to believe that the alien is a danger to the security of the United States; or
- The applicant is inadmissible or removable for terrorist activities (8 USC §§1182(a)(3)(B)(i), 1227(a)(4)(B)).

Ø Note: The Attorney General has held that asylum is not normally granted to a person convicted of a "violent or dangerous" crime. Matter of Jean (AG 2002) 23 I&N Dec 373.

The Board has determined that once an alien's crime is determined to be "particularly serious," it necessarily follows that the alien "constitutes a danger to the community." Matter of S-S- (BIA 1999) 22 I&N Dec 458.

Conviction of a "particularly serious crime" for purposes of asylum includes conviction of an aggravated felony (8 USC §1158(b)(2)(B)); but even an offense which is not an aggravated felony may be a "particularly serious crime" and the BIA can decide this on a case-by-case basis, rather than by regulation. Delgado v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 563 F3d 863, 867.

For purposes of withholding of removal, "a particularly serious crime" includes one or more aggravated felonies for which the alien has been sentenced to an aggregate term of imprisonment of at least 5 years (8 USC §1231(b)(3)). See also 8 CFR §§208.13, 208.16. However, the Attorney General has discretionary authority to determine whether any offense, even a non-aggravated felony conviction resulting in a sentence of less than 5 years, is a particularly serious crime for purposes of withholding. Delgado, 563 F3d at 871 (three prior felony DUI convictions not "particularly serious crime").

The Attorney General has also determined that, except in very rare instances, any conviction of drug trafficking will be a bar to withholding as a particularly serious crime. Matter of Y-L- (BIA 2002) 23 I&N Dec 270, overruled on other grounds in Zheng v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2003) 332 F3d 1186. But the Ninth Circuit held that this presumption is not retroactive to guilty pleas entered before March 5, 2002, for drug trafficking offenses. Miguel-Miguel v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 500 F3d 941. Absent unusual circumstances, a single conviction of a misdemeanor offense is not a "particularly serious crime." Matter of Juarez (BIA 1988) 19 I&N Dec 664.

Ø Note: For purposes of determining what is a "particularly serious offense," evidence outside the record of conviction, including police reports and the alien's testimony at an immigration hearing, may be considered. Anaya-Ortiz v Holder (9th Cir 2010) 594 F3d 673.

The argument remains that not all serious offenses or aggravated felonies should be found to be particularly serious crimes. See, e.g., Matter of L-S- (BIA 1999) 22 I&N Dec 645 (conviction of smuggling in violation of 8 USC §1324(a)(2)(B)(iii) with 3½-month sentence was not particularly serious crime). Because of the high probability that an aggravated felony conviction will eliminate even the most compelling asylum applicant's claim for protection, criminal defense counsel should immediately involve immigration counsel and present the most vigorous case possible to avoid an aggravated felony conviction. Even a first-time sale of a small amount of drugs is an aggravated felony, which could result in ineligibility for asylum.

§52.58 6. Temporary Protected Status (TPS)

- Does the defendant come from a country designated for special status because of ongoing catastrophe?

The Attorney General may grant temporary protected status (TPS) for any national of a foreign country designated under 8 USC §1254a, countries encountering catastrophic events, e.g., ongoing armed conflict, earthquake, flood, or other disasters, or other extraordinary and temporary conditions. Countries that are currently designated for TPS include Burundi, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Somalia, and Sudan. To check for the most accurate list of what countries are still listed and the requirements, go to the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services' website at http://www.uscis.gov, click "Services & Benefits," then click "Humanitarian Benefits," and then click "Temporary Protected Status." Persons from certain other countries are granted Deferred Enforced Departure (DED), which provides temporary protection from removal. Liberians are currently given this protection.

Persons are ineligible for TPS if they are inadmissible (see §52.1) or have been convicted of two misdemeanors (as opposed to the three-misdemeanor rule in the amnesty programs) or one felony. 8 USC §1254a(c)(2)(B)(i). In addition, the person must not come within the bars to asylum under 8 USC §1158(b)(2)(A), discussed in §52.57. 8 USC §1254a(c)(2)(B)(ii).

Ø Practice tip: To preserve TPS eligibility, it is important to avoid two misdemeanors or one felony. Counsel should consider whether a misdemeanor charge can be pleaded to an infraction or reduced to an infraction. See Pen C §§19.8 (offenses that can be charged either as misdemeanors or infractions), 490.1 (petty theft of property valued at $50 or less). Under Pen C §17(d), the infractions/misdemeanors listed in Pen C §19.8 constitute infractions if the prosecutor files the charge as an infraction (unless defendant objects) or if the court decides that the offense is an infraction. A postjudgment motion to reduce can be made at any time, since the code section does not specify any time limit. In addition, a felony may be reduced to a misdemeanor. See Pen C §17(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§52.59 7. Voluntary Departure

A noncitizen may apply to leave the United States voluntarily at his or her own expense in lieu of being subject to removal proceedings under 8 USC §1229a or before removal proceedings are completed if the alien is not deportable under 8 USC §1227(a)(2)(A)(iii) (aggravated felony) or 8 USC §1227(a)(4)(B) (terrorist activities). 8 USC §1229c(a). A person who has not been admitted because he or she entered without inspection should not be held "deportable" under the aggravated felony provision, and therefore should be eligible for voluntary departure before removal proceedings are completed. The noncitizen may be allowed to voluntarily depart after removal proceedings if he or she can demonstrate good moral character and is not being removed because of an aggravated felony conviction. 8 USC §1229c(b).

This relief is valuable because the period of voluntary departure allows the noncitizen to wrap up his or her personal affairs and leave the United States without the stigma of deportation. In contrast, persons who have been deported may not lawfully reenter the United States for 10 years unless a special waiver is obtained (8 USC §1182(a)(2)), and can be criminally charged for illegal reentry. Further, illegal reentry after being deported exposes the noncitizen to greater sentence enhancement than does reentry after voluntary departure.

§52.60 8. Registry

- Has the defendant lived in the United States continuously since January 1, 1972?

A noncitizen who has resided continuously in the United States since January 1, 1972, can obtain permanent residence through registry. 8 USC §1259. Other requirements under 8 USC §1259 are the following:

- Good moral character (see §52.1) for a reasonable period;
- Not inadmissible (although this requirement is called into question by Matter of Sanchez-Linn (BIA 1991) 20 I&N Dec 362); and
- Not ineligible for U.S. citizenship (through convictions for draft evasion or desertion; see 8 USC §1425).

§52.61 9. Relief for Abused Spouses and Children

- Is defendant a victim of spousal abuse or child abuse, neglect, or abandonment?

Special immigrant juvenile status. A child who is in dependency or delinquency court proceedings and cannot be returned to either parent owing to abuse, neglect, or abandonment may be eligible for permanent residency as a special immigrant juvenile under 8 USC §1101(a)(27)(J). The juvenile court judge must make a written finding that the noncitizen is under court jurisdiction and is "deemed eligible for long-term foster care" (meaning that the court has found that family reunification is not a viable option and that the child is in or will proceed to foster care, guardianship, or adoption) and that it would not be in the child's best interest to return to the home country. See 8 CFR §204.11. The parent's immigration status is irrelevant. Although this special status has been applied most often to children and young people in dependency proceedings, it also applies to youth in delinquency proceedings who meet the above criteria. For more information, see Brady & Kinoshita, Immigration Benchbook for Juvenile and Family Courts (2003); Kinoshita & Brady, Special Immigrant Juvenile Status (2005); and Fact Sheets: Immigration Options for Undocumented Children. All can be downloaded free of charge at the Immigrant Legal Resource Center website (http://www.ilrc.org/sijs.php).

Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) immigration provisions. A noncitizen who has been abused by a U.S. citizen or permanent resident spouse or parent can apply for permanent residency under the Violence Against Women Act. The abused spouse or child can submit a family visa petition on his or her own behalf, without needing the cooperation of the abusing citizen or permanent resident. 8 USC §1154(a)(1)(A)(iv), (B). Alternatively, the abused spouse or child may be eligible for special cancellation of removal for nonpermanent residents, which requires only 3 years of good moral character and physical presence in the United States. 8 USC §1229b. Although most grounds of inadmissibility apply, special waivers for VAWA applicants are provided even without qualifying relatives if the act or conviction would have been waivable under 8 USC §1182(a) or §1227(a) and if the act or conviction was connected to the alien's having been battered or subjected to extreme cruelty. 8 USC §1154(a)(1)(B). §52.62 10. Status for Victims, Witnesses, and Informants Regarding Crime

- Is the defendant a victim of or does the defendant have information about a crime?

Congress has created temporary visas, which can lead to permanent residency, for persons who are victims of, or have information about, crime. An applicant's own criminal record is potentially waivable; only persons inadmissible under the terrorist grounds cannot apply for these visas. Even persons whom the government suspects of assisting in drug trafficking are potentially eligible for these visas.

Noncitizens who are victims of serious crime and are, have been, or may be helpful to authorities investigating or prosecuting the crime can apply for temporary, or perhaps permanent, status under a "U" visa. 8 USC §1101(a)(15)(U). A victim is a person who has suffered direct harm or who is directly or proximately harmed as a result of the crime. The DHS has discretion to grant "U" visas for victim bystanders who suffer unusually direct injury as a result of a qualifying crime. Certain family members of murder and manslaughter victims and victims who are incompetent or incapacitated also are eligible. Examples of serious crimes are listed in the statute. The spouse, child, or in the case of a child, parent of the victim also can apply. A representative from the district attorney, police, or similar office must state that the person is helpful in prosecuting or investigating the crime. A total of 10,000 such visas can be awarded each year. Victims eligible for "U" visas may be able to terminate pending removal proceedings, and if the "U" visa is approved, either an order of removal, deportation, or exclusion will be canceled or, if the order was issued by an immigration judge, the case may be reopened and terminated. In addition, noncitizens who were victims of a "severe form of trafficking in persons" can apply for temporary and perhaps permanent lawful status under a "T" visa. 8 USC §1101(a)(15)(T). Severe trafficking includes sex trafficking of persons under age 18 and any persons subjected to involuntary servitude. A total of 5000 temporary "T" visas and 5000 adjustments to permanent residency can be granted each year. Further information on the "U" visa can be found at the following websites: National Immigration Project of the National Lawyers Guild, http://www.nationalimmigrationproject.org (click on "Immigrant Rights Resources"); Immigrant Legal Resource Center, http://www.ilrc.org/uvisa.php; and Citizenship and Immigration Services, http://www.uscis.gov. For assistance with "U" visas, see http://www.asistahelp.org; for "T" visas or in trafficking cases, see http://www.lafla.org/clientservices/specialprojects/traffic.asp. See also regulations effective January 12, 2009, at http://edocket.access.gpo.gov/2008/E8-29277.htm.

The 1995 Crime Bill created the "S" nonimmigrant classification for certain witnesses who supply "critical reliable information" to law enforcement authorities relating to terrorism or criminal activity. 8 USC §1101(a)(15)(S). There is no requirement that the person be a crime victim. The person and his or her family may become eligible for permanent residency. Only 125 such visas are distributed nationally each year.

> Ø Note: The Ninth Circuit held that the United States was not estopped from removing a noncitizen on the basis of the government's alleged agreement not to deport him in exchange for his cooperation in a federal drug prosecution when there was no claim that an official having the authority to do so made a specific promise of such relief. Morgan v Gonzales (9th Cir 2007) 495 F3d 1084.

§52.63 G. Deported Clients Convicted of Certain Offenses Face Severe Federal Penalties for Illegal Reentry

Many noncitizen defendants tried and convicted for criminal offenses in state court are removed immediately after serving their sentence and then attempt to reenter the United States illegally. Illegal reentry is a commonly prosecuted federal crime, with steep sentence enhancements if the person was removed after being convicted of certain offenses. See 8 USC §1326(b); U.S. v Pimentel-Flores (9th Cir 2003) 339 F3d 959. A surprisingly high number of federal criminal cases involve this offense. Criminal defense counsel should advise deportable noncitizen defendants when a proposed plea can serve as a prior in an illegal re-entry case, and, when possible, should fashion a plea to avoid this consequence. Just as counsel would try to avoid conviction of an offense that can be used as a "strike" in a future prosecution, counsel representing a noncitizen defendant should try to avoid a conviction that can be used to enhance a sentence for illegal reentry if the client attempts to return illegally to the United States.

Two types of crimes cause the most serious sentence enhancements. Prior conviction of an aggravated felony triggers an 8-level increase under the federal sentencing guidelines. See 8 USC §1326(b)(2); 18 USC App USSG §2L1.2(b)(1)(C). Prior conviction of certain other felony offenses triggers a 16-level increase under the guidelines. See 8 USC §1326(b)(1); 18 USC App USSG §2L1.2(b)(1)(A).

> Ø Note: In U.S. v Booker (2005) 543 US 220, 160 L Ed 2d 621, 125 S Ct 738, the Supreme Court made sentencing under the guidelines voluntary in order to avoid constitutional problems entailed in judicial fact-finding with respect to "conduct" enhancements that increase a defendant's sentence beyond the statutory maximum. See Blakely v Washington (2004) 542 US 296, 159 L Ed 2d 403, 124 S Ct 2531; Apprendi v New Jersey (2000) 530 US 466, 490, 147 L Ed 2d 435, 455, 120 S Ct 2348. It is expected, however, that many federal judges will continue to adhere to the guidelines, especially as they relate to enhancements for prior convictions, which were explicitly excluded from Apprendi's Sixth Amendment jury trial requirement. 530 US at 476, 147 L Ed 2d at 447. Thus, when possible, counsel will want to avoid conviction of an offense that is considered an aggravated felony. See §§52.41-52.47.

Further, counsel will want to avoid the "other felony" category that gives rise to a more serious sentence enhancement than an aggravated felony. This section discusses the "other felony" category. In general, obtaining a misdemeanor rather than felony conviction will avoid the most serious problems. When that is not possible, federal public defenders are often willing to advise on the effect under the guidelines of proposed state court pleas. For further discussion, see Brady et al., Defending Immigrants §9.50 (10th ed 2008).

"Felony offense" creating a 16-level enhancement under the federal sentencing guidelines. A 16-level increase will be imposed for felony conviction of many offenses, regardless of whether any sentence was imposed and based only upon the fact that the offense is a state felony. These offenses fall into two categories:

- Many nondrug offenses (including assault, burglary, statutory rape, and possession of a firearm) trigger a 16-level increase in sentence solely by being classed as a state felony, regardless of the sentence imposed; and
- Felony drug trafficking offenses, such as sale or possession for sale, trigger a 16-level increase if the sentence imposed was more than 13 months, and a 12-level increase if the sentence was 13 months or less.

Nondrug felony offenses that trigger the 16-level increase. Under the federal sentencing guidelines, any of the following prior convictions will result in a 16-level increase, regardless of what sentence was imposed (18 USC App USSG §2L1.2(b)(1)(A)):

- A "crime of violence";
- A firearms offense;
- A child pornography offense;
- A national security or terrorism offense;

- A human trafficking offense; or
- An alien smuggling offense.

A crime of violence includes the following felony offenses: murder, manslaughter, kidnapping, aggravated assault, forcible sex offenses, statutory rape, sexual abuse of a minor, robbery, arson, extortion, extortionate extension of credit, burglary of a dwelling, and any offense under federal, state, or local law that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against another person. 18 USC App USSG §2L1.2, Application Note 1(B)(iii).

Definition of felony; effect of reduction of felony to misdemeanor. The sentencing guidelines define a felony as "any federal, state, or local offense punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year." 18 USC App USSG §2L1.2, Application Note 2. This definition of felony is the same in California law. Reduction of a felony to a misdemeanor under Pen C §17(b) or §19 is effective for immigration purposes (Garcia-Lopez v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2003) 334 F3d 840) and should be effective here, as under the guidelines. The Ninth Circuit will follow state law in determining the maximum penalty available for an offense. See, e.g., U.S. v Robles-Rodriguez (9th Cir 2002) 281 F3d 900. If possible, state defenders should plead to a misdemeanor or arrange to reduce a felony to a misdemeanor for these offenses, and advise the client of the penalties that a felony conviction would bring if the client was ever deported and attempted to return illegally.

"Drug trafficking" offenses that trigger 16-level increase. A prior conviction of an offense charged as an aggravated felony under the drug trafficking category results in an 8-level increase under the guidelines. However, an offense charged as a "felony drug trafficking offense" can be punished more severely than this. Under the guidelines, a drug trafficking offense is "an offense under federal, state or local law that prohibits the manufacture, import, export, distribution or dispensing of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) or the possession of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) with intent to manufacture, import, export, distribute, or dispense." 18 USC App USSG §2L1.2, Application Note 1(B)(iv). Conviction of a felony drug trafficking offense for which the sentence imposed exceeded 13 months results in a sentence increase of 16 levels. Conviction of a felony drug trafficking offense for which the sentence imposed was 13 months or less results in a 12-level increase. 18 USC App USSG §2L1.2(b)(1)(A)-(B). A simple possession offense is not a "drug trafficking offense" under the guideline definition and so does not get the 16-level increase. However, felony simple possession is an aggravated felony that will cause an 8-level increase. See, e.g., U.S. v Robles-Rodriguez (9th Cir 2002) 281 F3d 900.

Offenses that trigger less serious guideline enhancements in prosecution for illegal reentry. A prior "conviction for any other felony" results in a 4-level increase, as do "three or more convictions for misdemeanors that are crimes of violence or drug trafficking offenses." 18 USC App USSG §2L1.2(b)(1)(D)-(E).

§53.1 I. OVERVIEW

This chapter examines the profound effect of a criminal conviction on business and professional licensing. California has approximately 50 different agencies licensing businesses and professions, from accountants to vocational nurses. Licensing extends beyond health care, law, education, insurance, and real estate to less obvious businesses such as car sales, plumbing, cosmetology, pest control, and truck driving, among many others. Entrepreneurs face licensing requirements in fields as diverse as construction, child care, moving and storage, selling estate jewelry, and security alarm services. Even restaurants must have licenses to serve alcoholic beverages.

The objectives of this chapter are to give practitioners the tools necessary to inform clients of the potential licensing consequences of a plea bargain or conviction after trial, to help practitioners structure plea bargains with an eye toward licensing consequences, and to raise awareness about conviction reporting requirements.

While preventing incarceration will often take precedence over a business license, sometimes licensing considerations may tip the balance toward trial and against an otherwise reasonable plea bargain. In any case, it is always desirable for a client to make an informed decision.

Business and professional licensing laws generally provide that the conviction of certain crimes is grounds for disciplinary action or license denial. Not all crimes, however, justify administrative action. Due process requires a nexus between the crime and the business or profession for a conviction to result in discipline or denial; therefore, most licensing laws require that the crime be substantially related to the qualifications, functions, or duties of the business or profession. Some licensing laws impose the further limitation that the crime be a felony or a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude.

Licensees generally have the right to an administrative hearing to explain the facts and circumstances of a conviction, and to present evidence in mitigation and of rehabilitation. Licensing agencies have the right to inquire into the circumstances surrounding the commission of the crime to fix the degree of discipline or to determine if the conviction is substantially related. Bus & P C §493.

Most administrative license proceedings are governed by the Administrative Procedure Act. See Govt C §§11400-11470.50, 11500-11529. For a complete treatment of professional licensing law and administrative procedure, see Professional Licensing: Disciplinary Practice in California (Cal CEB 2008). See also California Administrative Hearing Practice (2d ed Cal CEB 1997) and California Administrative Mandamus (3d ed Cal CEB 2003).

§53.2 II. LICENSING STATUTES

Most business and professional licenses are governed by the Business and Professions Code, which defines a "license" to include a license, certification, or registration requirement. Bus & P C §477(b). Nearly all of these licenses are subject to suspension, revocation, or denial based on criminal convictions that are "substantially related." Bus & P C §§480, 490. A few professional licenses are exempt from Bus & P C §§480 and 490. These include licenses of attorneys (Bus & P C §6000) and gaming licenses (Bus & P C §19850). Bus & P C §476. These professional licenses are regulated through the courts or through agencies.

The professional licenses covered by Bus & P C §§480 and 490 are many and varied and include chiropractors (Bus & P C §1005); dentists (Bus & P C §1625); doctors (Bus & P C §2050); dietitians (Bus & P C §2585); social workers (Bus & P C §4996); guide dog trainers (Bus & P C §7200.5); funeral directors and embalmers (Bus & P C §7680); real estate brokers and sales agents (Bus & P C §§10150-10151); boxing, wrestling, and martial arts promoters (Bus & P C §18640); and cigarette and tobacco retailers, wholesalers, and manufacturers (Bus & P C §§22972, 22975, 22979).

Licensing acts outside the Business and Professions Code also provide grounds for denial or revocation of a license. These include licenses of teachers (see Ed C §44424), insurance agents (see Ins C §§1668(m), 1748.5(e)(1)), day care facilities (see Health & S C §§1596.70-1597.21), and nursing home administrators (see Health & S C §1416.76).

III. PROTECTION OF RIGHT TO PRACTICE PROFESSION

§53.3 A. Right to Practice One's Profession

The right to practice one's profession is surrounded with a "panoply of legal protection." Yakov v Board of Med. Exam'rs (1968) 68 C2d 67, 75, 64 CR 785. This protection stems from the Due Process and Equal Protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. Schware v Board of Bar Exam'rs (1957) 353 US 232, 238, 1 L Ed 2d 796, 77 S Ct 752. For example, qualifications for bar membership "must have a rational connection with the applicant's fitness or capacity to practice law." Schware v Board of Bar Exam'rs, supra. The California Supreme Court has followed a similar path, holding that "a statute constitutionally can prohibit an individual from practicing a lawful profession only for reasons related to his or her fitness or competence to practice that profession." Hughes v Board of Architectural Exam'rs (1998) 17 C4th 763, 788, 72 CR2d 624. See also Morrison v State Bd. of Educ. (1969) 1 C3d 214, 82 CR 175.

§53.4 B. "Substantial Relationship" Test

The denial, suspension, or revocation of a license cannot be based "on the grounds of a lack of good moral character or any similar ground relating to an applicant's character, reputation, personality, or habits." Bus & P C §475. Business and Professions Code §§480 and 490 codify the substantial relationship test. See Petropoulos v Department of Real Estate (2006) 142 CA4th 554, 47 CR3d 812. The test is whether the conduct in question is "substantially related" to the qualifications, functions, or duties of the business or profession. Bus & P C §§480 (license denials), 490 (license suspension or revocation).

In some cases, the legislature has expressly provided that particular convictions are substantially related to the practice of particular professions. For example, Bus & P C §2239 (relating to the practice of medicine) provides that two or more misdemeanor convictions or any felony conviction for offenses related to the consumption of alcohol constitute unprofessional conduct. See Griffiths v Superior Court (2002) 96 CA4th 757, 117 CR2d 445 (under §2239, record of convictions constitutes conclusive proof of unfitness to practice medicine). Likewise, the Education Code specifically enumerates which Penal Code violations trigger suspension or revocation proceedings against credentialed teachers. Ed C §§44424-44425.

Each licensing agency is required to establish a definition of "substantial relationship." Bus & P C §481. Most agency definitions are too subjective and conclusory to be of much assistance in determining whether specific conduct is substantially related to the practice of the business or profession in question. Typical language is found in the regulations applicable to physicians, which state that a crime or act is substantially related to the practice of medicine (16 Cal Code Regs §1360) > if to a substantial degree it evidences present or potential unfitness of a person holding a license, certificate or permit to perform the functions authorized by the license, certificate or permit in a manner consistent with the public health, safety or welfare. Such crimes or acts shall include but not be limited to the following: Violating or attempting to violate, directly or indirectly, or assisting in or abetting the violation of, or conspiring to violate any provision of the Medical Practice Act.

The question of whether a crime is substantially related to the qualifications, functions, or duties of a profession is determined on a case-by-case basis. In general, courts tend to broadly construe "substantial relationship" so as to include, rather than exclude, particular unlawful conduct within the ambit of discipline. Griffiths v Superior Court, supra, illustrates this approach. Griffiths, a physician, was convicted of three misdemeanors: one for driving under the influence of alcohol and two more for reckless driving involving alcohol. If a physician sustains two or more misdemeanor convictions involving the consumption of alcoholic beverages, those convictions constitute unprofessional conduct. See Bus & P C §2239(a). At an administrative hearing, Griffiths proved that he had never treated patients while under the influence of alcohol. The administrative law judge (ALJ) dismissed the accusation of unprofessional conduct, concluding that the convictions and proven facts did not provide a basis for imposing discipline; the ALJ found no inherent nexus between driving under the influence and the practice of medicine. The court of appeal reversed, finding that §2239 satisfied the constitutional requirement that a nexus exist between the disciplined conduct and the physician's fitness and competence to practice medicine without any additional showing that the convictions or the alcohol consumption impaired the physician's practice of medicine. 96 CA4th at 774. The court reasoned that the repeated convictions involving alcohol use reflected poorly on the physician's common sense and professional judgment and tended to undermine public confidence in and respect for the medical profession. 96 CA4th at 771. While no evidence showed that the criminal convictions resulted in any harm to patients, license discipline has a preventive function, i.e., protection of the public, and that "it is far more desirable to discipline before a licensee harms any patient than after harm has occurred." 96 CA4th at 772.

The following are additional examples of courts' finding that a conviction was substantially related to the qualifications, functions, or duties of a licensed profession:

- A real estate licensee's conviction for willful infliction of corporal injury on his cohabitant/mother of his child. Donley v Davi (2009) 180 CA4th 447, 103 CR3d 1.

- A real estate broker's conviction for violation of fire protection and prevention provisions of the building code. Robbins v Davi (2009) 175 CA4th 118, 95 CR3d 792.
- A real estate broker's conviction for possession of marijuana for sale involving transportation of a substantial amount of marijuana from Mexico to California by private plane. Golde v Fox (1979) 98 CA3d 167, 159 CR 864.
- A physician's conviction for federal income tax evasion. Windham v Board of Med. Quality Assur. (1980) 104 CA3d 461, 163 CR 566.
- An attorney's repeated acts of alcohol-induced violence and possession of a concealed gun. In re Hickey (1990) 50 C3d 571, 268 CR 170.
- Child molestation by a lawyer. In re Lesansky (2001) 25 C4th 11, 104 CR2d 409.
- Child molestation by a real estate licensee. Jennings v Karpe (1974) 36 CA3d 709, 111 CR 776.

The following are examples of cases in which courts found no substantial relationship justifying discipline, suspension, or revocation or denial of a license:

- A real estate broker's misdemeanor conviction for making a false statement to obtain unemployment benefits. Pieri v Fox (1979) 96 CA3d 802, 158 CR 256.
- A real estate broker's felony conviction for introducing parties to a drug deal. Brandt v Fox (1979) 90 CA3d 737, 153 CR 683.
- A car dealer's misdemeanor conviction for annoying or molesting a child. Brewer v DMV (1979) 93 CA3d 358, 155 CR 643.
- A chiropractor's misdemeanor conviction for willfully residing in a house of ill repute. Cartwright v Board of Chiropractic Exam'rs (1976) 16 C3d 762, 129 CR 462.
- A lawyer's conviction for acts of civil disobedience, coupled with his active participation in nine different fistfights over the years. Hallinan v Committee of Bar Exam'rs (1966) 65 C2d 447, 55 CR 228.
- A real estate salesperson's conviction for misdemeanor unlawful intercourse with a minor. Donaldson v Department of Real Estate (2005) 134 CA4th 948, 36 CR3d 577.

§53.5 C. Board May Look Beyond Plea or Verdict to Circumstances of Case

Professional boards are not foreclosed from going behind a plea or verdict. Bus & P C §493. In practice, boards usually make this type of analysis whenever the crime does not on its face establish the necessary relationship, but the underlying facts do. For example, if a defendant pleads guilty to a lesser included offense that is not substantially related to his or her profession, but the facts and original charge are substantially related to his or her profession, boards may inquire into the circumstances surrounding the commission of the crime. Bus & P C §493.

At any administrative hearing involving such a case, the licensee may introduce evidence on the issue of the lack of a substantial relationship of the conduct to the licensee's professional duties but may not relitigate the question of guilt raised by the fact of the conviction. In re Prantil (1989) 48 C3d 227, 255 CR 890 (disbarment); Arneson v Fox (1980) 28 C3d 440, 448, 170 CR 778 (revocation of real estate license); Robbins v Davi (2009) 175 CA4th 118, 126, 95 CR3d 792 (same). See also Leslie v Board of Med. Quality Assur. (1991) 234 CA3d 117, 285 CR 501 (probation and suspension of physician). For further discussion of hearing procedure, see §53.21.

© The Regents of the University of California

§53.6 D. Rehabilitation

No person may be denied a license solely on the basis of a conviction if the person has obtained a certificate of rehabilitation (see Pen C §4852.01) or has met other rehabilitation requirements. Bus & P C §480. However, as a practical matter, agencies tend to grant restricted or probationary licenses even on a showing of rehabilitation. Even when a conviction is substantially related to professional qualifications, a licensee has a due process right to present evidence of rehabilitation and mitigation at an administrative hearing. Arneson v Fox (1980) 28 C3d 440, 449, 170 CR 778.

Each licensing agency governed by the Business and Professions Code is required to develop rehabilitation criteria. Bus & P C §482. These criteria are typically promulgated as regulations. Rehabilitation regulations typically focus on a number of factors: the passage of time since conviction; successful completion of parole or probation; remorse; change in attitude; expungement of the conviction; alcohol or drug rehabilitation; completion of formal education; stability of family life; correction of business practices; and community involvement. See, e.g., 10 Cal Code Regs §2911. A person may be found to be partially rehabilitated. See, e.g., Donley v Davi (2009) 180 CA4th 447, 103 CR3d 1.

IV. "CONVICTION" FOR PURPOSES OF AFFECTING PROFESSIONAL LICENSE

§53.7 A. Conviction Defined

"Conviction" within the meaning of the Business and Professions Code is "a plea or verdict of guilty or a conviction following a plea of nolo contendere." Bus & P C §§480(a)(1), 490. When no accusatory pleading is filed (see, e.g., Pen C §§849, 849.5), or when a case is dismissed without a verdict, no conviction has occurred. See discussion of the special rules on diversion in §53.12, the effect of expungement in §53.13, and pleas of no contest in §53.8.

Ø Note: When no accusatory pleading is filed, the person may petition for destruction of the arrest records. See Pen C §851.8. This is recommended because the licensing agency will see the record of arrest on a "rap sheet."

The Business and Professions Code provides that a board may act on a conviction "when the time for appeal has elapsed, or the judgment of conviction has been affirmed on appeal, or when an order granting probation is made … , irrespective of a subsequent order under Section 1203.4 of the Penal Code." Bus & P C §§480(a)(1), 490.

In certain cases, the licensing authority has the ability to suspend a license pending an appeal. See, e.g., Bus & P C §6102(a), which provides that attorneys can be suspended until the time for appeal has lapsed, or until the judgment of conviction has been affirmed on appeal. Similarly, teaching credentials are immediately suspended after conviction of a sex crime pending appeal. See Ed C §44425.

When no statute controls, case law provides that, as a rule, for purposes of civil consequences, conviction generally requires both a finding of guilt and a resulting judgment or order implementing the finding. Boyll v State Personnel Bd. (1983) 146 CA3d 1070, 1076, 194 CR 717 (commitment to California Rehabilitation Center, with no judgment, not a bar to becoming peace officer). But see Tuffli v Governing Bd. (1994) 30 CA4th 1398, 36 CR2d 433 (can suspend teacher while conviction is being appealed).

© The Regents of the University of California

§53.8 B. Plea of Nolo Contendere Usually Equivalent to Guilty Plea

Business and Professions Code §§480(a)(1) and 490 provide that "[a] conviction within the meaning of this section means a plea or verdict of guilty or a conviction following a plea of nolo contendere." Both sections apply to almost every business or profession regulated by the Business and Professions Code. See Arneson v Fox (1980) 28 C3d 440, 170 CR 778. Most of the individual licensing acts contain similar language. See In re Gross (1983) 33 C3d 561, 189 CR 848.

Absent a statute authorizing such use, a nolo contendere plea may not be used as a ground for suspension or revocation of a license. Kennick v Commission on Judicial Performance (1990) 50 C3d 297, 321, 267 CR 293; Cartwright v Board of Chiropractic Exam'rs (1976) 16 C3d 762, 768, 129 CR 462; County of Los Angeles v Civil Serv. Comm'n (1995) 39 CA4th 620, 46 CR2d 256; Grannis v Board of Med. Exam'rs (1971) 19 CA3d 551, 557, 96 CR 863; Kirby v Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Bd. (1969) 3 CA3d 209, 219, 83 CR 89.

© The Regents of the University of California

§53.9 C. Infractions

Except for specifically enumerated Vehicle Code violations, an infraction is not a ground for the suspension, revocation, or denial of any license. Pen C §19.8.

Ø Note: When an infraction disposition results from a misdemeanor arrest, the conviction will show up on the client's rap sheet. A client may order his or her own rap sheet from the California Department of Justice and seek correction if the record does not clearly identify the disposition as an infraction. Information on making this request is available at http://www.ag.ca.gov/fingerprints/security.php.

© The Regents of the University of California

§53.10 D. Misdemeanor Versus Felony Conviction

Licensing laws generally focus on the question of whether a crime is "substantially related" rather than whether it is a felony or misdemeanor. However, there are exceptions. For example, Bus & P C §2236.1 provides that a physician's certificate is automatically suspended if he or she is incarcerated for a felony that is substantially related to the qualifications, functions, or duties of a physician, and Bus & P C §6102(a) provides for immediate suspension of an attorney convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude.

A few statutes refer only to a "felony," a "misdemeanor," or both. See, e.g., Ins C §1668(m). In these instances, case law has read into the statute a requirement that there be a "nexus" or relationship between the crime and the duties of the profession. Hughes v Board of Architectural Exam'rs (1998) 17 C4th 763, 788, 72 CR2d 624. See Morrison v State Bd. of Educ. (1969) 1 C3d 214, 82 CR 175; Griffiths v Superior Court (2002) 96 CA4th 757, 117 CR2d 445; Cartwright v Board of Chiropractic Exam'rs (1976) 16 C3d 762, 129 CR 462; Windham v Board of Med. Quality Assur. (1980) 104 CA3d 461, 163 CR 566.

© The Regents of the University of California

§53.11 E. Crimes of Moral Turpitude

Historically, conviction for a crime of moral turpitude was considered "a disqualifying defect in moral character," which justified permanent exclusion from all licensed professions (see Hirsch v City & County of San Francisco (1956) 143 CA2d 313, 325, 300 P2d 177), and some licensing laws limited disciplinary action to convictions for felonies or misdemeanors of moral turpitude. See Petropoulos v Department of Real Estate (2006) 142 CA4th 554, 47 CR3d 812. The legislature amended Bus & P C §490 to specifically overrule Petropoulos. As a result, no moral-turpitude requirement remains for any license discipline controlled by Bus & P C §§480 and 490. Robbins v Davi (2009) 175 CA4th 118, 123 n5, 95 CR3d 792. Attorneys are an exception (see Bus & P C §6101), and other exceptions remain outside of the Business and Professions Code. See, e.g., Health & S C §107070(h) (for discipline against radiological technologist, conviction must be felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude committed during performance of radiologic technology duties).

© The Regents of the University of California

§53.12 F. Effect of Deferred Entry of Judgment on Denial and Revocation of Licenses

A person who successfully completes a deferred entry of judgment program (formerly called diversion) may consider that he or she was never arrested or granted deferred entry of judgment for that offense when responding to questions from licensing boards, except for peace officer positions. Pen C §1000.4. A peace officer applicant must disclose the arrest in response to "any direct question contained in any questionnaire or application." Pen C §1000.4(b).

Any record pertaining to an arrest that ended in successful deferred entry of judgment "shall not, without the defendant's consent, be used in any way that could result in the denial of any employment, benefit, license, or certificate." Pen C §1000.4(a). "The language of [Pen C §1000.4] is extraordinary and compelling. It demonstrates the breadth of the Legislature's underlying remedial purpose." Unzueta v Ocean View Sch. Dist. (1992) 6 CA4th 1689, 1696, 8 CR2d 614 (teacher entitled to back pay after successful diversion for cocaine arrest). See also Martin v Santa Clara Unified Sch. Dist. (2002) 102 CA4th 241, 125 CR2d 337 (teacher improperly suspended was entitled to back pay but required to attempt to mitigate damages).

Despite Pen C §1000.4, agencies within the Healing Arts Division (Bus & P C §§500-4999.7) may take disciplinary action "notwithstanding that evidence of that misconduct may be recorded in a record pertaining to an arrest." Bus & P C §492. This language was inserted in response to B.W. v Board of Med. Quality Assur. (1985) 169 CA3d 219, 234, 215 CR 130, in which the court held that the board's discipline was void because it was based solely on a professional's arrest record in a case that ended in successful diversion. Therefore, in a disciplinary hearing, a health care agency may present evidence of unprofessional conduct based on the same conduct that led to diversion.

§53.13 G. Effect on Professional Licenses of Expungement, Sealing, or Other Relief From Conviction

Absent a specific statutory exception, the courts have "consistently upheld denial of a license or the right to pursue a particular profession on the basis of an expunged conviction." Adams v County of Sacramento (1991) 235 CA3d 872, 880, 1 CR2d 138. Adams cited California cases involving (1) disbarment of an attorney; (2) suspension of a physician's license; (3) revocation of a license to sell alcoholic beverages; and (4) revocation of an insurance agent's license. The Adams holding, which considered a Kansas conviction and expungement, was that expungement does not restore the right to be a peace officer, because Govt C §1029 bars ex-felons from peace officer status.

Penal Code §1203.4(a) explicitly provides that any order of expungement under that section > shall state, and the probationer shall be informed, that the order does not relieve him or her of the obligation to disclose the conviction in response to any direct question contained in any questionnaire or application for public office, for licensure by any state or local agency.

Ø Note: Penal Code §1203.4(a) does not explicitly affect out-of-state expungements. Therefore, the disclosure of out-of-state convictions, which have been expunged, may be controlled by the law in the state of conviction. Caution is warranted, however, because any California licensing agency that sees the expunged conviction on a rap sheet may allege failure to disclose.

Virtually all statutes that define a conviction for purposes of discipline explicitly state that discipline may be imposed irrespective of expungement under Pen C §1203.4. See, e.g., Bus & P C §§490, 6102 (attorneys; stating also that a felony remains a felony for disciplinary purposes even though there was postconviction reduction to a misdemeanor under Pen C §17(b)(1) or (b)(3); Bus & P C §2236.1(d) (physicians); Ed C §§44008-44009 (elementary and secondary school teachers). Exceptions include Bus & P C §24200(d), which provides that a license issued by the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control may be suspended or revoked for conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude or certain federal laws regarding alcohol but does not mention the effect of expungement, and Lab C §26, which provides that no license under the Labor Code may be denied solely because of a conviction for which the information or accusation was dismissed under Pen C §1203.4.

Counsel should nonetheless consider seeking expungement, because it has a direct bearing on the degree of penalty to be imposed. Expungement by a court of competent jurisdiction can be powerful mitigating evidence.

Reduction of a wobbler to a misdemeanor under Pen C §17(b) will usually avoid the consequences of a felony conviction. When an offense has been designated a misdemeanor under this section, "it is a misdemeanor for all purposes." Pen C §17(b). Thus, unless a statute creates a specific exception to this rule, the conviction will be treated as a misdemeanor for licensing purposes. Gebremicael v California Comm'n on Teacher Credentialing (2004) 118 CA4th 1477, 13 CR3d 777 (applicant for teaching credential could not be denied on ground that he had been convicted of a felony when offense had been reduced to misdemeanor under Pen C §17(b)).

An individual convicted of a crime that is classified as a felony at the time of the jury verdict or plea of guilty or nolo contendere is disqualified from serving as a peace officer even if the conviction is later reduced to a misdemeanor under Pen C §17(b) or by operation of law. Govt C §1029. In addition, reduction of a felony conviction to a misdemeanor rarely, if ever, has a bearing on the question of whether the conviction constitutes grounds for disciplinary action. See, e.g., Bus & P C §6102(b) (attorney discipline). See also §53.10.

§53.14 H. Reporting Requirements

Clients holding business or professional licenses may be required to promptly report convictions and, in some cases, felony charges. Failure to report can lead to disciplinary action even if the conviction itself is not grounds for discipline. Research should be conducted with the applicable licensing agency. Most licensing agencies require disclosure of convictions through questions on license renewal forms. Some agencies require self-reporting of convictions (or even the filing of felony charges) within 30 days. See, e.g., Bus & P C §§802.1 (physicians, osteopaths, and podiatrists must report indictment or information charging a felony, as well as all misdemeanor and felony convictions, within 30 days), 6068(o)(4)-(5) (attorneys must report indictment or information charging a felony, as well as a conviction for a felony or certain misdemeanors, within 30 days); Ins C §1729.2 (insurance agents must report the filing of felony charges as well as all misdemeanor and felony convictions within 30 days); 14 CFR §61.15 (pilots must report alcohol and drug-related driving convictions to FAA within 60 days). For a prosecuting agency's reporting requirements, see §53.20.

§53.15 I. Collateral Consequences

A criminal conviction may have additional collateral consequences on rights incidental to a professional's right to practice. For example, a criminal conviction is grounds for automatic suspension of a health care practitioner from participation in the Medi-Cal health care provider program, without a hearing, if the conviction involves fraud or abuse of the Medi-Cal program, or involves a suspension from the federal Medicare program. Welf & I C §14123. This circumstance is important to any defendant who is a health care professional enrolled as a provider in that program. Similarly, a felony drug conviction is grounds for revocation of a doctor's registration with the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) to prescribe controlled substances. 21 USC §824(a)(2).

V. SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN CRIMINAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE CASES

§53.16 A. Effect of Acquittal in Criminal Case on Administrative Case

An acquittal in a criminal case will not bar subsequent administrative proceedings through principles of res judicata or collateral estoppel. This is because the higher standard of proof in a criminal case means the issue decided is actually different from the seemingly identical administrative issue. Holt v Department of Food & Agric. (1985) 171 CA3d 427, 433, 218 CR 1.

However, when a defendant is acquitted, counsel should consider moving the court for a finding of factual innocence under Pen C §851.8 or §851.85, or both. Such an order should be res judicata in an administrative proceeding, because it is based on a finding that, according to a preponderance of the evidence at trial, the defendant was actually not guilty. This is more conducive to innocence than the standard applied by a disciplinary board that dismisses a charge. See §53.26.

A convicted person, in extraordinary circumstances, may also apply to the Governor for a pardon that, if granted, restores all rights and privileges that the person enjoyed before conviction, with one exception: Professional boards may still withhold from a pardoned person the right to practice his or her "art or profession on the person of another." Pen C §4853. In addition, courts have held, on the grounds of Pen C 4852.15, that the Governor's pardon does not automatically restore the right to practice law to a disbarred attorney. Feinstein v State Bar (1952) 39 C2d 541, 553, 248 P2d 3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§53.17 B. Effect of Decision in Administrative Case on Related Criminal Prosecution

The doctrine of collateral estoppel bars a party from relitigating in a new proceeding issues decided in a previous proceeding. See e.g., Lucido v Superior Court (1990) 51 C3d 335, 341, 272 CR 767. As summarized in Lucido, the threshold requirements for application of the doctrine are (1) the issue in the new proceeding must be identical to the issue decided in the previous proceeding; (2) the issue must actually have been litigated in the earlier proceeding; (3) the issue must necessarily have been decided in the earlier proceeding; (4) the decision in the earlier proceeding must be final and on the merits; and (5) the party against whom collateral estoppel is sought must be the party that litigated the issue in the earlier proceeding or must be in privity with that party. Lucido v Superior Court, supra. In Lucido, the California Supreme Court held on public policy grounds that collateral estoppel did not block the defendant's prosecution on criminal charges stemming from facts that the trial court, at a probation revocation hearing, had concluded were not proved. 51 C3d at 342.

The requirements for collateral estoppel also may not be met when a state licensing agency concludes that a licensee has not committed a crime that would require revocation of the license or other discipline. In People v Demery (1980) 104 CA3d 548, 163 CR 814, the court held that a decision of the Board of Medical Quality Assurance (now the Medical Board of California) that appellant had not violated Health & S C §11154 was not binding in a subsequent criminal prosecution for the same offense because of the different purposes entailed in the two proceedings. See also Gikas v Zolin (1993) 6 C4th 841, 851, 25 CR2d 500 (refusing to apply collateral estoppel in DMV hearing). But see People v Sims (1982) 32 C3d 468, 186 CR 77 (administrative decision exonerating welfare recipient of welfare fraud collaterally estopped subsequent criminal prosecution).

§53.18 C. Effect of Search and Seizure Ruling in Criminal Case on Administrative Case

When determining whether to apply the federal exclusionary rule (which requires suppression of evidence seized in violation of the Fourth Amendment) to administrative cases, courts balance the deterrent effect of the rule with its social cost. See Conservatorship of Susan T. (1994) 8 C4th 1005, 36 CR2d 40. Most courts have declined to apply the exclusionary rule to administrative cases even when the criminal courts have applied the exclusionary rule. See, e.g., Department of Transp. v State Personnel Bd. (2009) 178 CA4th 568, 100 CR3d 516 (State Personnel Board); In re Christopher B. (1978) 82 CA3d 608, 147 CR 390 (teacher-dismissal proceeding); Pierce v Board of Nursing Educ. & Nurse Registration (1967) 255 CA2d 463, 63 CR 107 (medical board proceeding); Pating v Board of Med. Quality Assur. (1982) 130 CA3d 608, 182 CR 20 (same). However, in Dyson v California State Personnel Bd. (1989) 213 CA3d 711, 262 CR 112, the decision in a criminal proceeding that evidence had been wrongfully seized and should therefore be suppressed had collateral estoppel effect in a subsequent disciplinary proceeding against an employee of the Department of the Youth Authority. In Dyson, the school's security director was employed by the Youth Authority and had overseen the investigation and search of the employee's home that led to the criminal charges. The court found the relationship between the criminal case and the administrative case sufficiently close to apply the collateral estoppel doctrine and suppress the evidence in the administrative case.

§53.19 D. Peace Officer's Statements During Internal Investigation

A peace officer has no absolute constitutional or statutory right to remain silent during an administrative investigation of criminal activity. Lybarger v City of Los Angeles (1985) 40 C3d 822, 827, 221 CR 529. The officer may be compelled to answer questions during such an investigation under threat of disciplinary action, although no statement made under such compulsion may be used against the officer in a criminal proceeding. Lybarger v City of Los Angeles, supra. The officer does, however, have certain procedural rights under the Public Safety Officers Procedural Bill of Rights Act (Govt C §§3300-3313). Thus, if the officer is a criminal suspect, the investigators must advise the officer of his or her Miranda rights (see Miranda v Arizona (1966) 384 US 436, 16 L Ed 2d 694, 86 S Ct 1602) and must also inform him or her that silence could be considered insubordination and lead to administrative discipline and that any statements made under threat of such discipline may not be used against the officer in a later criminal proceeding. Lybarger v City of Los Angeles (1985) 40 C3d 822, 829, 221 CR 529. A suspect officer has the right to counsel during any interrogation. California Correctional Peace Officers Ass'n v State (2000) 82 CA4th 294, 314, 98 CR2d 302 (finding right to counsel under Govt C §3303(h), not Fifth Amendment).

VI. SPECIAL ISSUES FOR ATTORNEYS IN CRIMINAL CASES

§53.20 A. Issues for the Prosecutor: Charging, Plea Bargains, Reporting to State Agencies

The fact that a defendant holds a professional license should have little effect on a prosecutor's charging or prosecution of a case. In charging a case, a prosecutor has a duty to institute criminal charges that he or she believes are supported by probable cause. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-110. A prosecutor should not use the charging process to obtain leverage to induce a guilty plea to a lesser charge before trial (see Uniform Crime Charging Standards II-1-II-2). Thus, it would be improper for a prosecutor to charge a case as a felony merely in an attempt to affect a defendant's professional license.

It is also improper for a prosecutor to threaten to present criminal, administrative, or disciplinary charges to obtain an advantage in a civil dispute. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-100(A). A "civil dispute" includes "an administrative proceeding of a quasi-civil nature pending before a federal, state, or local governmental entity," including administrative hearings for professional licenses. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-100(C). The best practice for a prosecutor handling a case in which the defendant holds a professional license is to charge and prosecute the case on the merits of the case without taking into account the defendant's professional license status.

Once a case is charged, the prosecutor has reporting requirements. A prosecutor should notify the state agency regulating the defendant's professional license at an early stage of the proceedings, so that the state agency can take any action it deems necessary to promote the interests of justice and public safety. Also, a state agency has a right to furnish information, make recommendations regarding specific conditions of probation, or provide any other assistance necessary to promote the interests of justice and protect the interests of the public when the criminal proceeding is substantially related to the qualifications, functions, or duties of a licensee. Pen C §23. If the defendant is an attorney, the prosecutor must notify the State Bar and the court clerk immediately. Bus & P C §6101(b).

When any felony is charged against a person licensed in the Healing Arts (listed in Division 2 of the Business and Professions Code), the prosecuting agency must notify the licensee's board. Bus & P C §803.5(a). The court clerk must transmit any felony preliminary examination transcripts under 800 pages to the applicable allied health board, and a probation officer must transmit a copy of any probation reports generated for the court pursuant to Pen C §1203. Bus & P C §803.6. On conviction, a certified copy of the conviction must be transmitted to the appropriate board by the court clerk within 48 hours. Bus & P C §803.5(b).

B. Issues for the Defense Attorney

§53.21 1. Explore Early and Creative Settlement to Avoid Conviction

Criminal defense counsel often avoid an aggressive settlement posture during the early stages of a criminal investigation because to do so might necessitate disclosing information to the government, including statements by the defendant. In cases involving licensed professionals, that reluctance should be carefully balanced against the prospects for a noncriminal disposition. For example, aggressive pursuit of settlement during a known Medi-Cal fraud investigation has resulted in civil settlements with restitution. This type of result has significant impact on the later decision of whether to initiate a professional disciplinary proceeding.

Diversion programs are often a licensed professional's safest option. These exist for drug offenses (Pen C §§1000-1000.10), child abuse or neglect (Pen C §§1000.12, 1000.17), misdemeanors (Pen C §§1001-1001.9, 1001.50-1001.55), and bad-check offenses (Pen C §§1001.60-1001.67).

If the case proceeds to trial, and the defendant is acquitted, defense counsel should ask the judge to find the defendant factually innocent under Pen C §851.85.

Some licenses do not require reporting of convictions until the next license renewal application, which could be 2 years away. In that situation, planning for a reduction of a felony to a misdemeanor before reporting can save a license.

Attorneys may enter the Attorney Diversion and Assistance Program either voluntarily or by State Bar referral, as long as the investigation is "based primarily on the self-administration of drugs or alcohol or the illegal possession, prescription, or nonviolent procurement of drugs for self-administration, or on mental illness, and does not involve actual harm to the public or his or her clients." Bus & P C §6232(b)(3).

Ø Note: A physician under investigation used to have the opportunity to avoid administrative action by voluntarily entering the Medical Board of California's diversion program. That program was terminated in 2008. See former Bus & P C §2350.

© The Regents of the University of California

§53.22 2. Client's Statements or Testimony

In some cases, an early conviction by plea agreement may avoid "bad facts" that would prevent settlement of a disciplinary proceeding. Counsel who decides to take the criminal case to trial should consider whether the defendant should take the stand and deny criminal conduct that the evidence otherwise clearly establishes. Such testimony is not well received by licensing agencies and frequently affects the decision in the disciplinary proceeding. Criminal defense counsel's ability to work within this context and advise clients accordingly will have a significant effect on the ability to defend a disciplinary proceeding and on the client's future right to practice his or her profession.

© The Regents of the University of California

§53.23 3. Counseling Client to Begin Rehabilitation

Criminal counsel should advise the client in a timely fashion about actions that will minimize an adverse decision in the administrative proceeding. At some point, a client is going to want to be able to show the licensing agency that there have been positive changes since the activity leading to the conviction. For example, professionals involved in drug use should be directed toward a treatment program at the earliest moment, regardless of whether that action constitutes a tacit admission of guilt. When restitution is called for, it should be paid as soon as possible. When warranted, psychological counseling should be commenced as soon as possible and continued as long as necessary to be productive. Business practices that led to a conviction should be changed as soon as possible, and educational course work may be warranted. Allowing a client to deny a problem and delay such action could result in the outright denial or revocation of a license that might otherwise be saved.

© The Regents of the University of California

§53.24 C. Sentencing Issues

Judges pronouncing sentence in criminal cases do not usually impose restrictions on a defendant's right to practice his or her profession. However, they have the right to do so if the criminal conduct was substantially related to the practice of the profession. People v Frank (1949) 94 CA2d 740, 211 P2d 350 (court could properly prohibit defendant from practicing medicine during probation); People v King (1968) 267 CA2d 814, 825, 73 CR 440 (citing Frank with approval). But see People v Burden (1988) 205 CA3d 1277, 253 CR 130 (court may not restrict practice of profession if profession not substantially related to criminality). See §§38.34-38.38 limits on court's power to impose probation conditions.

The state agency that issued a professional license may appear in court and "make recommendations regarding specific conditions of probation, or provide any other assistance necessary to promote the interests of justice and protect the interests of the public." Pen C §23. When a prosecutor thinks the interests of justice would be served by suspension or revocation of the defendant's professional license or registration, the prosecutor should enlist the aid of the state agency in charge of licensing in crafting specific terms of probation that will assist the agency with the suspension or revocation of the defendant's license.

Defense counsel should be aware that the sentencing phase of a criminal case is important to the administrative proceeding. For example, significant restitution, substantial fines, participation in treatment programs, or the imposition of community service, or a combination of these, within the scope of defendant's profession may mitigate suspension or revocation of a license. The imposition of those conditions as part of a criminal sentence makes it more difficult to suspend or revoke since, as a practical matter, the defendant must have the ability to practice his or her profession to make restitution, pay a fine, or complete the community service requirement. Also, conditions of criminal probation that are rehabilitative in nature enhance a licensee's overall posture before the licensing agency, in that rehabilitation, by definition, decreases the risk of recidivism, which should be the agency's primary concern.

Paradoxically, although jail time is certainly the most severe form of punishment, in administrative practice it greatly aggravates the case. The argument that the defendant has truly paid his or her debt to society in the most severe way is not persuasive. The imposition of a jail sentence tends to be viewed only as an indicator of the severity of the crime, and the need for severe license discipline. In this regard, licensing agencies are concerned not only with rehabilitation but also with the public's view of their professions and the effect that formerly incarcerated practitioners may have on this perception.

Ø Note: Completion of probation is an important element in showing rehabilitation; therefore, counsel should seek the shortest possible probation period or plan to seek early termination of probation when possible.

VII. ADMINISTRATIVE HEARING PROCEDURE

§53.25 A. Prehearing Suspensions

Interim orders of suspension and restrictions may issue when a practitioner has been convicted of a crime substantially related to the licensed activity. Bus & P C §494(a). The interim order of suspension and restrictions may be based on a petition with supporting affidavits and requires proof by a preponderance of the evidence. The licensee must be given notice of the hearing with limited exceptions, is entitled to representation by counsel and a record of the proceedings, and may present affidavits and other documentary evidence as well as oral argument. See Bus & P C §494.

© The Regents of the University of California

§53.26 B. General Description of Administrative Hearing Procedure

Most administrative licensing proceedings are governed by the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) applicable to administrative adjudication. Govt C §§11400-11470.50, 11500-11529. For a complete treatment of this subject, see California Administrative Hearing Practice (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). See also Govt C §§11371-11373.3, 11529 for special procedures that apply to disciplinary proceedings and procedures for issuance of interim orders involving the Medical Board of California and California Board of Podiatric Medicine.

Proceedings are initiated by the filing of a "statement of issues" in cases involving denial of a license, or an "accusation" in cases involving discipline or revocation. Govt C §§11503-11504. The applicant must file a "notice of defense" within 15 calendar days after service of the accusatory pleading. The notice may be filed either by delivery or by mail to the initiating agency. Govt C §11506. Section 11506 also provides for a "Special Notice of Defense" on identified bases. Discovery is limited to the production of statements, writings, and other documents. Govt C §§11507.5-11507.7, 11511. Government Code §11511.5 permits prehearing conferences before an administrative law judge (ALJ) to encourage stipulations, identify and limit the number of witnesses, explore settlement possibilities, and deal with other issues. Regulations of the Office of Administrative Hearings provide for a limited motion practice. 1 Cal Code Regs §1022.

The hearing may be held before an ALJ or other hearing officer sitting alone, or before the agency itself, as determined by the agency. Govt C §11512. Very few cases are heard before the agency itself.

The conduct of the hearing is not governed by technical rules relating to evidence and witnesses; any relevant evidence is admissible "if it is the sort of evidence on which responsible persons are accustomed to rely in the conduct of serious affairs." Govt C §11513(c). Hearsay evidence is admissible for limited purposes (Govt C §11513(c); see §53.23). These purposes include supplementing or explaining other evidence. But hearsay evidence alone is insufficient to support a finding. Courts have split on whether an objection is required to make such hearsay insufficient to support a finding. Compare Borror v Department of Inv. (1971) 15 CA3d 531, 92 CR 525, with Carl S. v Commission for Teacher Preparation & Licensing (1981) 126 CA3d 365, 178 CR 753. Evidence by affidavit is given the same effect as if the affiant testified orally, if timely notice of the proposed testimony is given and the opposing party fails to request the right to cross-examine the affiant. Govt C §11514.

To introduce competent proof of a criminal plea, the agency must introduce a certified copy of the judgment in the criminal case. Once the attorney for the agency introduces competent proof of conviction, he or she can then supplement that evidence with portions of the trial or other transcript. If there is no trial, evidence of an aggravating nature might be overlooked by a licensing agency with a small enforcement budget. The existence of a trial transcript increases the likelihood that such evidence will be available.

The standard of proof in an administrative proceeding to revoke a physician's license to practice medicine has been held to be by "clear and convincing proof to a reasonable certainty" and not by the "preponderance of the evidence" standard. Ettinger v Board of Med. Quality Assur. (1982) 135 CA3d 853, 856, 185 CR 601. That same standard is applied in proceedings to revoke a license in other professions, but child day care is an exception. See Health & S C §1596.887.

In proceedings to deny a license to an applicant, the burden is on the applicant to prove rehabilitation by a preponderance of the evidence. See Martin v Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Bd. (1959) 52 C2d 259, 341 P2d 291.

The initial finding, if rendered by the ALJ or other hearing officer, is a proposed decision to be adopted or "non-adopted" by the agency. Govt C §11517(b). In cases involving physicians, whether the agency "non-adopts" or not, it "shall give great weight to the findings of fact of the administrative law judge, except to the extent those findings are controverted by new evidence." Bus & P C §2335(c)(1). The agency may "non-adopt" a decision and impose a more severe penalty only if the agency reads the transcript of the hearing, or if the parties stipulate to a decision on the record without a transcript. Govt C §11517(c). If no action is taken on a proposed decision within 100 days, the decision is deemed adopted. Govt C §11517(d). Under Bus & P C §2335(c), the Medical Board of California and the California Board of Podiatric Medicine have 100 days within which to act.

The agency may order reconsideration of all or part of its decision on its own motion, or on the petition of a party, if certain time limitations are met. Govt C §11521. The agency's failure to issue a timely order of reconsideration results in loss of jurisdiction to do so. Gamm v Board of Med. Quality Assur. (1982) 129 CA3d 34, 181 CR 23.

Judicial review of an adverse administrative decision is accomplished by filing a petition for writ of mandate in superior court. Govt C §11523; CCP §1094.5.

Licensing agencies, especially those with small enforcement budgets, normally await the outcome of a criminal prosecution, then proceed with the administrative case if there is a conviction. They do not usually proceed on the facts while the criminal case is pending. There are times, however, when the two cases proceed contemporaneously or when the administrative case is scheduled for hearing before the criminal trial.

§53.27 C. Whether Administrative Proceeding Can Precede Criminal Trial

In Savoy Club v Board of Supervisors (1970) 12 CA3d 1034, 1039, 91 CR 198, the court ruled that there was no Fifth Amendment basis for postponing an administrative proceeding until there was an outcome in a criminal case based on the same facts. The court reasoned that the Fifth Amendment did not apply in advance of actual questions propounded, and was no insulation from an administrative process designed to protect the public, rather than to punish the licensee. Similarly, the court dismissed without merit the argument that such disclosure of the defense to the prosecution violated due process. This reasoning is analogous to the supreme court's ruling in People v Jasper (1983) 33 C3d 931, 935, 191 CR 648, which held that defendants whose probation has been revoked have no absolute right to continue their revocation hearing until after their trial.

In contrast to Savoy Club, the court of appeal in Alvarez v Sanchez (1984) 158 CA3d 709, 204 CR 864, held that criminal defendants, who were also sued civilly on the basis of the same facts, should have been allowed to postpone their civil trial until after the preliminary examination in the criminal case. Defense counsel may be able to argue by analogy that a continuance of an administrative hearing, at least until after a preliminary examination, is necessary.

As a practical matter, for reasons pertaining to economy of resources, the administrative agency usually waits to act until after the criminal matter has ended.

§53.28 D. Ramifications of Licensee's Testifying at Administrative Hearing

When an administrative hearing precedes the parallel criminal trial, counsel must make a tactical decision on whether to have the defendant testify at the hearing. There are several rules to consider:

- In administrative proceedings, if the respondent does not testify in his or her own behalf, the respondent may be called and examined as if under cross-examination, but only after the respondent has had an opportunity to testify in his or her own behalf. See Govt C §11513(b); O'Mara v State Bd. of Pharmacy (1966) 246 CA2d 8, 11, 54 CR 862.
- The licensee can be compelled to take the stand (Govt C §11513(b)), but may invoke the Fifth Amendment at the administrative hearing and is not required to appear in person. Counsel can appear on the respondent's behalf if the agency has not subpoenaed the respondent or served a notice to appear. Govt C §11450.50. There is no absolute right to be present at administrative proceedings. Arnett v Office of Admin. Hearings (1996) 49 CA4th 332, 339, 56 CR2d 774. If the licensee does testify, that testimony is inadmissible during the prosecution's case in chief at a later criminal proceeding. Civil Serv. Ass'n Local 400 v Civil Serv. Comm'n (1983) 139 CA3d 449, 460, 188 CR 806, disapproved on other grounds in Long Beach City Employees Ass'n v City of Long Beach (1986) 41 C3d 937, 951 n18, 227 CR 90; Szmaciarz v State Personnel Bd. (1978) 79 CA3d 904, 145 CR 396; Hankla v Governing Bd. (1975) 46 CA3d 644, 653, 120 CR 827.

  Ø Note: By analogy to People v May (1988) 44 C3d 309, 243 CR 369 (see §23.28), the prosecution can probably use this testimony to impeach the defendant in the later criminal proceeding, but only if the defendant testifies in the later proceeding.

- It is possible that a favorable outcome in an administrative proceeding may bar a subsequent criminal prosecution. People v Sims (1982) 32 C3d 468, 186 CR 77. For further discussion, see §53.17.

As a practical matter, effective defense of a professional license disciplinary case requires that the licensee testify, because the administrative law judge, hearing officer, or agency is allowed to draw a negative inference from the licensee's failure to testify, or from his or her assertion of the privilege against self-incrimination. Szmaciarz v State Personnel Bd. (1978) 79 CA3d 904, 918, 145 CR 396. See Baxter v Palmigiano (1976) 425 US 308, 47 L Ed 2d 810, 96 S Ct 1551.

§54.1 I. OVERVIEW

Few areas of legal practice are as stressful and time-consuming as capital litigation. The unique features of preparing for a penalty phase, along with the concerns that naturally flow from the magnitude of the possible sentence, tend to make capital litigation a specialized field among practitioners on both sides. Although many features of a capital trial are identical to other felony trials, the differences are vital and must be understood by the practitioner engaged in capital litigation. This chapter is meant as an overview of this complex area. See "other resources" below for more in-depth coverage of death penalty cases.

Multiphased trial. The trial of a death penalty case (Pen C §§190-190.9) is divided into two phases: a guilt phase and a penalty phase. The penalty phase serves the function of the probation and sentencing hearing in noncapital cases, but is vastly different. The penalty phase involves the introduction of evidence relevant to factors in aggravation and mitigation of the sentence. The jury is instructed to weigh those factors and determine whether the sentence should be death, or life without the possibility of parole. A special group of jury instructions and rules for admissibility of evidence governs this phase. If sanity is at issue, it is litigated in a "sanity phase" that comes between the guilt phase and the penalty phase.

Each phase has the same basic structure as an entire jury trial. Each begins with opening statements, continues with the introduction of evidence, and concludes with final arguments and instructions.

The jury will usually be the same for all phases. Only on a showing of good cause can the trial judge order that a different jury be selected for subsequent stages.

Other resources. A continuing source of excellent information for defense counsel is the California Death Penalty Defense Manual. The manual and a yearly supplement are available from either the California Public Defenders Association (CPDA) in Sacramento, (916) 362-1686 (x304), http://www.cpda.org, or California Attorneys for Criminal Justice (CACJ) in Sacramento, (916) 448-8868, http://www.cacj.org. In addition, the California Appellate Project (CAP) publishes a monthly newsletter (RECAP) covering interim decisions of state and federal courts, and other topics of interest. The California Appellate Project is located at 101 Second Street, Suite 600, San Francisco, CA 94105, (415) 495-0500. Another resource is the Habeas Corpus Resource Center, 50 Fremont Street, Floor 18, San Francisco, CA 94105, (415) 348-3800, http://www.hcrc.ca.gov. They often have educational conferences available to defense attorneys.

For several years, CACJ and CPDA have put on a 4-day death penalty seminar every February to train defense attorneys and other professionals in the field. In addition, there is an annual Bryan R. Schechmeister Death Penalty College, a week-long intensive program in August sponsored by Santa Clara University Law School, CACJ, and CPDA. Contact Professor Ellen Kreitzberg for information.

The California Appellate Project primarily assists defense counsel with postconviction work in death penalty cases in state and federal courts. However, members of the project are willing to consult informally with defense trial counsel before and during trial on specific issues. The office also has a case load of its own. The State Public Defender, with offices in San Francisco and Sacramento, is an additional source of information.

For those interested in training from the prosecution perspective, the California District Attorneys Association offers an annual symposium in homicides and a special circumstance training in alternate years. CDAA can be reached at (916) 443-2017. The California Attorney General's Office, which handles all death penalty appeals, publishes and makes available to district attorneys annually a Capital Case Compendium. Advice can also be obtained by telephone from one of the four Attorney General's Death Penalty Coordinators in San Francisco and Los Angeles. District attorneys may obtain advice, briefs, and other valuable assistance from the Association of Government Attorneys in Capital Litigation, a national organization composed of death penalty prosecutors. See http://www.agacl.org for information.

Action	Deadline	Authority
Plead special circumstance.	Usually charged before preliminary hearing. Defense has right to request findings by preliminary hearing magistrate on sufficiency of proof as to charged and uncharged special circumstances. May be charged for first time in information if defendant had due notice at time of preliminary hearing.	People v Brice (1982) 130 CA3d 201, 208, 181 CR 518; Talamantez v Superior Court (1981) 122 CA3d 629, 634, 176 CR 800.
Prosecution to give notice of specific evidence that state intends to introduce at penalty phase.	Except for rebuttal or new evidence, at latest before start of trial. It is unclear whether "trial" refers to guilt phase or penalty phase. Failure to give formal notice until after guilt phase has been held to be mere technical error if actual notice was given before guilt phase.	Pen C §190.3. §54.2A III. QUALIFICATIONS OF APPOINTED COUNSEL

The minimum qualifications for appointed trial counsel in capital cases are set out in Cal Rules of Ct 4.117. The rule does not appear to apply to retained counsel. Although the rule states that it does not set a legal standard for effective assistance of counsel (Cal Rules of Ct 4.117(a)), it is demanding to ensure well-trained and experienced counsel. Some counties require counsel to complete a form verifying their qualifications. Rule 4.117 provides:

> (a) [Purpose] This rule defines minimum qualifications for attorneys appointed to represent persons charged with capital offenses in the superior courts. These minimum qualifications are designed to promote adequate representation in death penalty cases and to avoid unnecessary delay and expense by assisting the trial court in appointing qualified counsel. Nothing in this rule is intended to be used as a standard by which to measure whether the defendant received effective assistance of counsel.
> (b) [General qualifications] In cases in which the death penalty is sought, the court must assign qualified trial counsel to represent the defendant. The attorney may be appointed only if the court, after reviewing the attorney's background, experience, and training, determines that the attorney has demonstrated the skill, knowledge, and proficiency to diligently and competently represent the defendant. An attorney is not entitled to appointment simply because he or she meets the minimum qualifications.
> (c) [Designation of counsel]
> (1) If the court appoints more than one attorney, one must be designated lead counsel and meet the qualifications stated in (d) or (f), and at least one other must be designated associate counsel and meet the qualifications stated in (e) or (f).
> (2) If the court appoints only one attorney, that attorney must meet the qualifications stated in (d) or (f).
> (d) [Qualifications of lead counsel] To be eligible to serve as lead counsel, an attorney must:
> (1) Be an active member of the State Bar of California;
> (2) Be an active trial practitioner with at least 10 years' litigation experience in the field of criminal law;
> (3) Have prior experience as lead counsel in either
> (A) At least 10 serious or violent felony jury trials, including at least 2 murder cases, tried to argument, verdict, or final judgment; or
> (B) At least 5 serious or violent felony jury trials, including at least 3 murder cases, tried to argument, verdict, or final judgment;
> (4) Be familiar with the practices and procedures of the California criminal courts;
> (5) Be familiar with and experienced in the use of expert witnesses and evidence, including psychiatric and forensic evidence;
> (6) Have completed within two years before appointment at least 15 hours of capital case defense training approved for Minimum Continuing Legal Education credit by the State Bar of California; and
> (7) Have demonstrated the necessary proficiency, diligence, and quality of representation appropriate to capital cases.
> (e) [Qualifications of associate counsel] To be eligible to serve as associate counsel, an attorney must:
> (1) Be an active member of the State Bar of California;
> (2) Be an active trial practitioner with at least three years' litigation experience in the field of criminal law;
> (3) Have prior experience as
> (A) Lead counsel in at least 10 felony jury trials tried to verdict, including 3 serious or violent felony jury trials tried to argument, verdict, or final judgment; or
> (B) Lead or associate counsel in at least 5 serious or violent felony jury trials, including at least 1 murder case, tried to argument, verdict, or final judgment;
> (4) Be familiar with the practices and procedures of the California criminal courts;
> (5) Be familiar with and experienced in the use of expert witnesses and evidence, including psychiatric and forensic evidence;
> (6) Have completed within two years before appointment at least 15 hours of capital case defense training approved for Minimum Continuing Legal Education credit by the State Bar of California; and
> (7) Have demonstrated the necessary proficiency, diligence, and quality of representation appropriate to capital cases.
> (f) [Alternative qualifications] The court may appoint an attorney even if he or she does not meet all of the qualifications stated in (d) or (e) if the attorney demonstrates the ability to provide competent representation to the defendant. If the court appoints counsel under this subdivision, it must state on the record the basis for finding counsel qualified. In making this determination, the court must consider whether the attorney meets the following qualifications:

(1) The attorney is an active member of the State Bar of California or admitted to practice pro hac vice under rule 9.40;

(2) The attorney has demonstrated the necessary proficiency, diligence, and quality of representation appropriate to capital cases;

(3) The attorney has had extensive criminal or civil trial experience;

(4) Although not meeting the qualifications stated in (d) or (e), the attorney has had experience in death penalty trials other than as lead or associate counsel;

(5) The attorney is familiar with the practices and procedures of the California criminal courts;

(6) The attorney is familiar with and experienced in the use of expert witnesses and evidence, including psychiatric and forensic evidence;

(7) The attorney has had specialized training in the defense of persons accused of capital crimes, such as experience in a death penalty resource center;

(8) The attorney has ongoing consultation support from experienced death penalty counsel;

(9) The attorney has completed within the past two years before appointment at least 15 hours of capital case defense training approved for Minimum Continuing Legal Education credit by the State Bar of California; and

(10) The attorney has been certified by the State Bar of California's Board of Legal Specialization as a criminal law specialist.

(g) [Public defender appointments] When the court appoints the Public Defender under Penal Code section 987.2, the Public Defender should assign an attorney from that office or agency as lead counsel who meets the qualifications described in (d) or assign an attorney that he or she determines would qualify under (f). If associate counsel is designated, the Public Defender should assign an attorney from that office or agency who meets the qualifications described in (e) or assign an attorney he or she determines would qualify under (f).

(h) [Standby or advisory counsel] When the court appoints standby or advisory counsel to assist a self-represented defendant, the attorney must qualify under (d) or (f).

(i) [Order appointing counsel] When the court appoints counsel to a capital case, the court must complete Order Appointing Counsel in Capital Case (form CR-190), and counsel must complete Declaration of Counsel for Appointment in Capital Case (form CR-191).

In addition, rigorous guidelines have been approved by the American Bar Association House of Delegates. A proposed draft of those guidelines can be found at the Bar Association's website at http://www.abanet.org/legalservices/downloads/sclaid/deathpenaltyguidelinesdraft.pdf. See Wiggins v Smith (2003) 539 US 510, 156 L Ed 2d 471, 123 S Ct 2527 (citing to the ABA standards, and strongly suggesting that counsel needs to prepare comprehensive social history of defendant in every capital case). But see Bobby v Van Hook (2009) ___ US ___, 175 L Ed 2d 255, 130 S Ct 13 (ABA standards are only guides to what reasonableness means).

IV. COMPLAINT, INFORMATION, AND INDICTMENT

A. Pleading Special Circumstances (Death Penalty)

§54.3 1. Manner of Pleading Special Circumstances

Pleading special circumstance in complaint. It is not necessary to set forth in the complaint the special circumstances that the prosecution expects to charge in superior court. The defense, however, has the right to request findings by the preliminary hearing magistrate on the sufficiency of the proof for charged and uncharged offenses and special circumstances. People v Brice (1982) 130 CA3d 201, 208, 181 CR 518. The defense should be given adequate notice at or before the preliminary hearing of the special circumstances involved. See Talamantez v Superior Court (1981) 122 CA3d 629, 634, 176 CR 800.

Special circumstances usually pleaded separately. Each special circumstance should be pleaded separately, setting forth each "element" required by the statute. See Pen C §§952 (pleading may be in words of statute that describe offense), 958 (words other than those of statute describing offense may also be used), 190.2 (special circumstances statute). The following is an example:

SPECIAL CIRCUMSTANCE (Penal Code §190.2(a)(17)(A))

It is alleged that the murder of _ _[name of victim]_ _ was committed by _ _[name of defendant]_ _ while _ _[name of defendant]_ _ was engaged in the commission of a robbery in violation of Penal Code §211, within the meaning of Penal Code §190.2(a)(17)(A).

For special circumstances other than multiple murder (Pen C §190.2(a)(3)), each special circumstance should be set forth separately for each victim and each crime. If there are two or more robbery murder victims, a special circumstance should be alleged separately naming each victim. If multiple crimes such as robbery, rape, or burglary are alleged as special circumstances, each one should be alleged separately. See Pen C §190.2.

When the multiple murder special circumstance (§190.2(a)(3)) is pleaded, only one multiple murder special circumstance may be found, regardless of the number of victims. People v Sanders (1995) 11 C4th 475, 46 CR2d 751; People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 876, 277 CR 122. See Daniels v Woodford (9th Cir 2005) 428 F3d 1181, 1212 (jury must be instructed that the multiple murder special circumstance can only be counted once). The same rule applies to the prior murder special circumstance of Pen C §190.2(a)(2). People v Allen (1986) 42 C3d 1222, 1274, 232 CR 849.

A number of statutes calling for the death penalty are not found in Pen C §190.2, including perjury that leads to the execution of an innocent person (Pen C §128); assault by a life prisoner that results in the victim's death within 1 year (Pen C §4500); train-wrecking that results in death (Pen C §189); and sabotage resulting in death (Mil & V C §§1670-1672).

© The Regents of the University of California

§54.4 2. Charging Substantive Crimes

There is no requirement to separately charge the substantive crime, e.g., robbery, rape, or burglary, when a special circumstance based on that crime is alleged. People v Mickey (1991) 54 C3d 612, 677 n12, 286 CR 801. The felony underlying the special circumstance of felony murder (Pen C §190.2(a)(17)) must be pleaded and proved only to the same extent as felony murder (Pen C §190.4(a)). See also People v McDonald (1984) 37 C3d 351, 378, 208 CR 236, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendoza (2000) 23 C4th 896, 914, 98 CR2d 431 (defendant acquitted of underlying robbery; prosecution precluded from retrying defendant on special circumstance based on that crime).

B. Procedural Differences Relating to Special Circumstance Allegations

§54.5 1. Evidence of Uncharged Special Circumstances Must Be Presented at Preliminary Hearing or Grand Jury Proceeding; Adequate Notice Must Be Given to Counsel

In a typical, non-special-circumstance context, the defendant is considered to have received notice of the charge being brought not merely from the complaint (or indictment) but also from any evidence presented at the preliminary hearing (or to the grand jury). See, e.g., People v Superior Court (Mendella) (1983) 33 C3d 754, 764, 191 CR 1; People v Donnell (1976) 65 CA3d 227, 231, 135 CR 217. Because the special elements that must be proved as part of the prosecution's burden in a special circumstance case are fairly esoteric (see, e.g., Pen C §190.2(d), which requires that an aider and abettor have been a major participant who acted with reckless disregard for life), such special circumstances may not be readily apparent from evidence that supports, for example, an ordinary felony murder complaint.

The normal rule is that the prosecutor may add to the superior court information any crime shown by the evidence at the preliminary hearing (Pen C §§739, 1009; People v Crosby (1962) 58 C2d 713, 723, 25 CR 847), even when it was not charged in the commitment order, as long as it is transactionally related to a charge in the commitment order. People v Superior Court (Mendella), supra. Defense counsel may wish to argue that the normal charging rule should not be applied to all cases involving special circumstance allegations. The defendant may persuade the trial court in a Pen C §995 motion that he or she faces a potential death penalty based on uncharged special circumstances that defense counsel did not defend against at the preliminary hearing because counsel had no adequate notice that a special circumstance allegation would or could be filed in the information from the evidence that was presented. Such a claim is even stronger when the defense attorney was prevented from cross-examining witnesses at the preliminary hearing on facts that were relevant to uncharged special circumstance allegations, or was not allowed to establish facts that would negate them. To avoid any such argument, the prosecution should be ready to show that the defense had actual, adequate notice of the potential special circumstances involved. See Talamantez v Superior Court (1981) 122 CA3d 629, 633, 176 CR 800.

Ø Note: In some jurisdictions, it is the prosecution's practice to add special circumstances in the information after the defendant is held to answer. On one hand, this practice delays available funding to the defense for second counsel and ancillary services that would address penalty phase issues until the special circumstances are added. On the other hand, the defendant, as a tactical matter, then has the opportunity to plead guilty to the complaint before special circumstances are charged, to try to avoid a death sentence or life without parole.

§54.6 2. Bail

One important consequence of alleging special circumstances is that the defendant's right to bail is affected. Penal Code §1270.5 provides that, when a defendant is charged with an offense punishable with death when the proof "is evident or the presumption thereof great," he or she cannot be released on bail. This language is similar to that of Cal Const art I, §12(a): Bail is unavailable in capital cases "when the facts are evident or the presumption great." It has been argued that, once it has been settled that the defendant will not receive the death penalty, he or she may be admitted to bail, even in a special circumstances case. Courts of appeal have ruled that every special circumstance murder case is automatically covered by the statute, even if the prosecutor has announced that he or she will not seek the death penalty. Maniscalco v Superior Court (1993) 19 CA4th 60, 23 CR2d 322; In re Bright (1993) 13 CA4th 1664, 1671, 17 CR2d 105; In re Freeman (1980) 102 CA3d 838, 162 CR 423. This issue has not been addressed by the California Supreme Court.

The "proof is evident … presumption great" standard in Pen C §1270.5 is considered met when there is "any substantial evidence … to sustain a [capital] verdict." See In re Curtis (1891) 92 C 188, 190, 28 P 223. However, other formulas of the standard appear elsewhere. See, e.g., In re Weinberg (1918) 177 C 781, 171 P 937; In re Mooney (1918) 35 CA 797, 171 P 109.

The defendant is entitled to a hearing to decide whether the proof is "evident" or the presumption "great." Clark v Superior Court (1992) 11 CA4th 455, 457, 14 CR2d 49. The decision to grant or deny bail is subject to review by petition for writ of habeas corpus. Pen C §1490; In re Nordin (1983) 143 CA3d 538, 544, 192 CR 38. On habeas corpus generally, see chap 42.

© The Regents of the University of California

§54.7 3. Demurrers to Special Circumstance Allegations

The rules for demurring to special circumstance allegations are the same as for demurring to substantive offenses. Tactical considerations may argue against demurring to such an allegation at a time when the prosecution has the power to amend the complaint or information, or to dismiss the entire action and refile, because a procedural advantage may inure to the defendant if the defect is raised at a time when a severance of the special circumstance(s) from the substantive crimes would result.

Ø Warning: Failing to demur may have the consequence of waiving both the right to demur later and the objection to the allegation that could have been raised by demurrer before arraignment. Pen C §§1003-1004, 1012. Extreme caution is advised.

One usual ground for demurring to a felony, that it is barred by the statute of limitations, does not apply to a demurrer to a special circumstance based on that felony. People v Morris (1988) 46 C3d 1, 14, 249 CR 119, disapproved on other grounds in In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 543 n5, 545 n6, 37 CR2d 446. The language of Pen C §190.4, that the underlying felony must be "charged and proved pursuant to the general law," requires only proof of the underlying felony, not a valid conviction.

For further discussion of demurrers, see chap 7.

§54.8 4. Other Procedural Safeguards

The California Supreme Court has indicated that it intends to treat "special circumstance" allegations procedurally the same as it treats substantive offenses. People v Garcia (1984) 36 C3d 539, 551, 205 CR 265 (while special circumstances are not crimes, enhancements, or sentencing factors, their importance requires that courts extend same protection to them as to elements of criminal charge); Ramos v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 26, 34, 184 CR 622 (language in Pen C §§871 and 1387 referring to "offense" and "action" applies equally to special circumstance allegations); People v Superior Court (Engert) (1982) 31 C3d 797, 802, 183 CR 800 (standards of specificity that apply to statutes defining criminal offenses apply equally to special circumstance clauses). See also Ghent v Superior Court (1979) 90 CA3d 944, 952, 153 CR 720 (special circumstance allegation is subject to dismissal and review in superior court under Pen C §995). For discussion of §995 motions, see chap 13.

Although the California Supreme Court has held that, generally, the same trial and appellate rules apply to both capital and noncapital cases, the court does make exceptions because there is a "particular concern to preserve the reliability of death penalty verdicts." People v Cox (1991) 53 C3d 618, 695, 280 CR 692, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209 (juror use of alcohol is of even greater concern in capital case).

All "proceedings" in a capital case, including those in chambers, must be held on the record with a court reporter present. Pen C §190.9. A daily transcript must be prepared of all such proceedings. Pen C §190.9. This is true in a capital case regardless of whether the district attorney has formally announced his or her intention to seek the death penalty. Abernathy v Superior Court (2007) 157 CA4th 642, 68 CR3d 726. There is no definition of the word "proceedings," and the discussion of matters "off the record" and not reported may be nonprejudicial. People v Deere (1991) 53 C3d 705, 720, 280 CR 424. The court has specifically disapproved unreported conferences on matters of "substantial controversy." People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 210 n11, 279 CR 720, disapproved on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394. The statute also requires that the court assign the reporting to a court reporter who uses computer-aided transcription equipment, although failure to do so is not specified as a ground for reversal (assuming the legislature can so dictate to the courts). Pen C §190.9.

The reporting of the preliminary hearing itself must be transcribed on a daily basis. See Abernathy v Superior Court, supra. Pre-preliminary hearing appearances, however, must be reported but need not be transcribed. The transcribing of pre-preliminary appearances, which should include chamber discussions, the formal certification of pre-preliminary hearing matters, and the preliminary hearing itself occur only after the prosecution has notified the superior court that death is being sought. The lower court must prepare a certified record and forward it to the superior court within 120 days after the notification. Pen C §190.

Note that reviewing the ongoing record has been a special burden on counsel. Counsel may consider tape recording the proceeding to supplement their personal notes to promote a more accurate record. California Rules of Court 1.150(d) permits sound recordings on inconspicuous personal recording devices to be used as personal notes of the proceedings; the court must be informed in advance. See, e.g., People v Ashley (1990) 220 CA3d 919, 269 CR 769.

The test regarding the need for the defendant's presence at bench and chambers discussions in a capital case is the same as in a noncapital case, i.e., absence is prejudicial only if the defendant's presence bears a "reasonably substantial relation" to his or her opportunity to defend against the charge. People v Deere, supra. The burden is on the defendant to show that his or her absence prevented a fair trial. People v Beardslee (1991) 53 C3d 68, 103, 279 CR 276. A defendant may validly waive the right to be present in a capital case. People v Sully (1991) 53 C3d 1195, 1238, 283 CR 144.

The burden of proof of mitigation and provocation is the same in both capital and noncapital cases. People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 868, 277 CR 122 (concerning former Pen C §1105, now see Pen C §189.5(a)).

That a motion for change of venue is being brought in a capital case "weighs strongly in favor of a change of venue." People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 360, 279 CR 780.

V. PRETRIAL MOTIONS FREQUENTLY MADE IN CAPITAL CASES

§54.9 A. Additional Counsel Is Usually Appointed

Two defense counsel are usually appointed in death cases. A reason that is often given for the need for a second attorney is that the guilt phase attorney loses his or her credibility with the jury if the defense is unsuccessful in the guilt phase. Thus, in theory, the second attorney is necessary to argue the penalty phase if the guilt phase is lost.

It is within the trial court's discretion to decide whether second counsel is needed. People v Burgener (1986) 41 C3d 505, 522, 224 CR 112, overruled on other grounds in People v Reyes (1998) 19 C4th 743, 80 CR2d 734. In several cases, the reviewing court has upheld the trial court's decision to deny second counsel. See People v Kirkpatrick (1994) 7 C4th 988, 30 CR2d 818, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209; People v Moore (1988) 47 C3d 63, 76, 252 CR 494; People v Lucky (1988) 45 C3d 259, 247 CR 1; People v Burgener, supra; People v Jackson (1980) 28 C3d 264, 287, 168 CR 603, overruled on other grounds in People v Cromer (2001) 24 C4th 889, 901, 103 CR2d 23. Failure to appoint second counsel will constitute error only if a showing was made of genuine need, demonstrated by factual assertions. People v Burgener, supra. Guidelines for making this showing are in Keenan v Superior Court (1982) 31 C3d 424, 180 CR 489.

§54.10 B. Defendant's Right to Self-Representation, to Have Advisory Counsel Appointed, or to Have Co-Counsel Status

Self-representation. A defendant is entitled to represent himself or herself in a capital case just as in a noncapital case. Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 95 S Ct 2525. This right to self-representation extends to the penalty phase. People v Blair (2005) 36 C4th 686, 736, 31 CR3d 485. It is not a denial of due process to allow self-representation even when the defendant's stated intent is to seek the death penalty. People v Clark (1990) 50 C3d 583, 617, 268 CR 399. Generally, a motion for self-representation is untimely if made after the guilt phase. See People v Halvorsen (2007) 42 C4th 379, 433, 64 CR3d 721 (however, motion timely when made after penalty phase that ended in mistrial).

Advisory counsel. Despite the prevalent practice of appointing two defense attorneys when a defendant is represented by counsel, if a defendant elects self-representation in a capital case there is no absolute right to appointed advisory counsel. A request for advisory counsel is within the trial court's discretion. See People v Stansbury (1993) 4 C4th 1017, 17 CR2d 174 (advisory counsel permitted); People v Crandell (1988) 46 C3d 833, 861, 251 CR 227 (advisory counsel denied).

> Ø Note: People v Stansbury, supra, was later appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court and remanded on the issue of whether the defendant's confession was made when the defendant was in custody. Stansbury v California (1994) 511 US 318, 128 L Ed 2d 293, 114 S Ct 1526. In People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 38 CR2d 394, the California Supreme Court held that the defendant was not in custody and affirmed the judgment.

Factors for the court to consider include the defendant's demonstrated legal abilities and the reasons given by the defendant for seeking advisory counsel. People v Crandell, supra. Even a request by a pro per defendant for a law clerk may properly be denied. People v Clark (1992) 3 C4th 41, 112, 10 CR2d 554 (no showing that services are "reasonably necessary").

Defendant as co-counsel. In both capital and noncapital cases, the defendant has no right to appear as co-counsel. People v Frierson (1991) 53 C3d 730, 741, 280 CR 440. Co-counsel status is not constitutionally guaranteed. As long as there is a reasonable or even a fairly debatable justification under the law for the decision to deny advisory counsel, that ruling will be upheld. People v Frierson, supra.

C. Funds for Ancillary Defense Services

§54.11 1. In Capital Special Circumstance Cases

Special state funds are supposedly available to defense counsel in capital cases for investigators and other nonattorney expert assistants. Pen C §987.9. The state, however, has not funded §987.9 reimbursement for many years and is unlikely to fund it in the future. The §987.9 procedure continues in most counties even though the intended result of this procedure, state reimbursement, is no longer available. Such funds are being paid exclusively by the individual counties.

The §987.9 application must be confidential. It is not to be served on or disclosed to the prosecutor, and it is not to be presented to the judge who is assigned to try the case. Pen C §987.9. The judge to whom it is presented must keep it confidential and seal the application and his or her ruling, including any order denying or granting it and authorizing funds to be paid for defense services. It must be supported by a declaration under oath. See the sample form in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §54.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

A trial judge's failure to act on a §987.9 application for defense services may be reviewed by a petition for writ of mandate. See Burnett v Superior Court (1974) 12 C3d 865, 869, 117 CR 556. Defense counsel who files a petition for writ of mandate should be careful to keep the application and supporting declaration confidential by alerting the appellate court to the dangers inherent in the ordinary rules relating to service of petitions if enforced in proceedings ancillary to §987.9 proceedings. Although no reported decisions have considered the range of possible remedies for a violation of the confidentiality required by §987.9, remedies could include suppression of vital evidence or even dismissal when the disclosure is intentional and the evidence would not otherwise have had to be disclosed. See Barber v Municipal Court (1979) 24 C3d 742, 157 CR 658 (decided before reciprocal discovery required). Moreover, considering the greater scrutiny given review of capital cases and the more rigorous application of the rules designed to protect the defendant in such cases (see Spaziano v Florida (1984) 468 US 447, 467, 82 L Ed 2d 340, 358, 104 S Ct 3154), the California Supreme Court may consider a breach of §987.9 confidentiality to preclude imposition of the death penalty if the confidential information revealed would not otherwise have had to be revealed and may have aided the state's ability to obtain the sentence. See Corenevsky v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 307, 204 CR 165 (decided before reciprocal discovery required). In Tran v Superior Court (2001) 92 CA4th 1149, 112 CR2d 506, the appellate court found that the trial court abused its discretion in denying retained counsel funding under §987.9 when the retainer did not cover ancillary services and the defendant was otherwise indigent.

Ø Note: When drafting a §987.9 application, counsel should bear in mind that under §987.9(d), the confidentiality provided by §987.9 does not preclude any court from providing the Attorney General with access to documents otherwise protected by §987.9 when the defendant raises an issue on appeal or collateral review and the recorded portion of the record, created pursuant to §987.9, relates to the issue raised.

§54.12 2. In Noncapital Special Circumstance Cases

If the trial court eliminates death as a potential sentence (see Corenevsky v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 307, 314, 204 CR 165; Ghent v Superior Court (1979) 90 CA3d 944, 954, 153 CR 720), or if the prosecutor announces his or her unequivocal intention to seek a noncapital maximum sentence (Sand v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 567, 569, 194 CR 480), the defendant's right to Pen C §987.9 funds for specific defense services ceases.

Juveniles between ages 16 and 18 who commit murder can be charged with special circumstances, but they cannot be executed. The burden of proof of age is on the defendant. After a finding of guilt, the court can decide whether the punishment is to be life without parole or life with parole available after 25 years. Pen C §190.5. See also Roper v Simmons (2005) 543 US 551, 161 L Ed 2d 1, 125 S Ct 1183.

There is also a noncapital special circumstance for the first degree murder of a person working in various public transit activities. Pen C §190.25(a). In addition, a first degree murder that is also a hate crime carries a punishment of life without parole. Pen C §190.3.

There are also several events that can raise the punishment for second degree murder to life without parole. See, e.g., Pen C §§190.05 (defendant previously imprisoned for another murder), 190.5 (certain killings involving peace officers).

D. Discovery Motion

§54.13 1. Discovery Concerning Guilt and Penalty Phases

A pre-guilt-phase discovery request or discovery motion should relate both to guilt and to sentencing. See People v Superior Court (Mitchell) (1993) 5 C4th 1229, 23 CR2d 403. The scope of the defense penalty discovery request should refer to all statutory factors relating to penalty (Pen C §190.3) and any evidence, whether specified or not, that might be viewed as extenuating the gravity of the crime (Pen C §190.3(k)) or otherwise mitigating, although unrelated to the crime. See Eddings v Oklahoma (1982) 455 US 104, 110, 71 L Ed 2d 1, 8, 102 S Ct 869; Lockett v Ohio (1978) 438 US 586, 608, 57 L Ed 2d 973, 992, 98 S Ct 2954. Counsel should particularly request the names of experts the prosecutor will use, either as consultants or as witnesses. See People v Johnson (1974) 38 CA3d 228, 113 CR 303.

The defense may wish to obtain information on the district attorney's capital charging policies to support a Murgia motion (Murgia v Municipal Court (1975) 15 C3d 286, 124 CR 204; see discussion in §§18.16-18.20). The request must describe the desired information with specificity and show plausible justification. See Griffin v Municipal Court (1977) 20 C3d 300, 306, 142 CR 286 (motion granted); People v McPeters (1992) 2 C4th 1148, 1169, 9 CR2d 834 (motion denied; defense analysis of effect of victim's race on capital case sentences was incomplete).

The provisions of Pen C §1054.3 apply to capital cases. This means that the defense is required to disclose the identity and statements of defense witnesses with regard to both the guilt and penalty phases. People v Superior Court (Mitchell), supra; People v Superior Court (Sturm) (1992) 9 CA4th 172, 186, 11 CR2d 652. The disclosure of guilt and penalty phase evidence must be made by the defense before the guilt phase begins in the absence of a showing of good cause to delay discovery. People v Superior Court (Mitchell), supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§54.14 2. Discovery Concerning Evidence to Support Motion for Noncapital Penalty

The district attorney may not exercise his or her charging discretion with respect to special circumstance allegations "with intentional and invidious discrimination" against a defendant. People v Keenan (1988) 46 C3d 478, 506, 250 CR 550.

If the defendant believes that grounds exist for a motion to declare a maximum, noncapital penalty based on intentional and invidious discrimination, a special discovery motion to obtain the evidence that will support it should be made, either as part of a general discovery motion or separately. Several California cases have held, however, that the defense is not entitled to such discovery without case-specific data showing plausible justification for the materials sought. See, e.g., People v McPeters (1992) 2 C4th 1148, 1169, 9 CR2d 834 (motion made as Murgia motion; see discussion in §54.13).

© The Regents of the University of California

§54.15 E. Motion for Conditional Examination of Witnesses

A conditional examination is similar to a deposition, but it is used only for material witnesses who will be unavailable to testify at trial for specified reasons. See Pen C §1336. In capital cases, the prosecution may be granted a conditional examination of one of its witnesses under Pen C §1335(b) on a showing that the witness's life is in jeopardy. People v Jurado (2006) 38 C4th 72, 114, 41 CR3d 319. The defense can examine witnesses conditionally if the witness is about to leave the state, or is so sick or infirm as to afford reasonable grounds for apprehension that he or she will be unable to attend the trial, or is a person 65 years of age or older, or a dependent adult, or if there is evidence that the witness's life is in jeopardy. Pen C §1336(a)-(b).

The defendant must serve and file an application to conditionally examine witnesses, supported by affidavit. See Pen C §§1336-1338. The essential items of the affidavit are outlined in Pen C §1337; it must include a statement that (Pen C §1337(d)) > the witness is about to leave the state, or is so sick or infirm as to afford reasonable grounds for apprehending that he or she will not be able to attend the trial, or is a person 65 years of age or older, or a dependent adult, or that the life of the witness is in jeopardy, or that the witness is a victim or material witness in a domestic violence case who has been or is being intimidated or threatened as described in subdivision (d) of Section 1335 from cooperating with the prosecutor or testifying at trial.

The prosecution may satisfy the requirements of §§1335-1337 by submitting a declaration that the witness's life is jeopardized by the defendant or his or her codefendants or associates. People v Jurado (2006) 38 C4th 72, 114, 41 CR3d 319. The conditional examination must be held at a specified time and place before a magistrate. Pen C §1339.

Counsel holding the conditional examination should be sure that a court reporter will be present. At the examination, the witness is examined on direct and cross-examination as if at trial.

If a witness who has been conditionally examined is unavailable as a witness at trial within the meaning of Evid C §240, the deposition may be read at the trial. Pen C §1345. See discussion in §§11.25A, 31.20. See also sample motion for conditional examination in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §11.17 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§54.16 F. Motion to Dismiss Special Circumstance Under Pen C §§871.5, 995

A special circumstance allegation may be dismissed under Pen C §871.5 or §995 on the same grounds as a substantive offense. Ramos v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 26, 184 CR 622 (§§871.5, 995); Ghent v Superior Court (1979) 90 CA3d 944, 153 CR 720 (§995). See People v Superior Court (Mendella) (1983) 33 C3d 754, 758, 191 CR 1. The prosecution may appeal the granting of a §995 motion striking a special circumstance allegation, and, if successful, the Double Jeopardy Clause does not bar reinstatement of the dismissed special circumstance allegation, even if the defendant had immediately pleaded guilty as charged. People v Superior Court (Jurado) (1992) 4 CA4th 1217, 6 CR2d 242.

For discussion of Pen C §§871.5 and 995 motions, see chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§54.17 G. Motion to Dismiss Special Circumstance Under Pen C §1385

Before trial or plea. Trial courts have the same power to strike a special circumstance before trial as they have to strike any other charge or allegation, i.e., through Pen C §§871, 995, 1385, or demurrer. Such a dismissal, however, must meet statutory and case law requirements. See, e.g., People v Superior Court (Bridgette) (1987) 189 CA3d 1649, 1652, 235 CR 113 (writ of mandate issued vacating trial court's §1385 order striking death penalty).

After trial or plea. For murders that took place on or after June 6, 1990, trial courts are specifically prohibited from striking or dismissing special circumstance allegations once they have been admitted by plea or found true by a court or jury. Pen C §1385.1. See Tapia v Superior Court (1991) 53 C3d 282, 298, 279 CR 592. This appears to be true whether the case involves a death sentence or a sentence of life without parole, because Pen C §§190.1-190.5 and 1385.1 make no distinction. For murders that took place before June 6, 1990, the trial judge has discretion to strike a special circumstance after it has been admitted or found true. In addition, the trial judge may presumably modify a death verdict under Pen C §190.4(e), discussed in §54.53, even after the effective date of §1385.1, because a court has the obligation under Pen C §190.4(e) to decide whether the verdict is supported by the evidence.

§54.18 H. Motion to Strike Prior Murder Special Circumstance

A defendant, by pretrial motion, may move to strike a Pen C §190.2(a)(2) prior murder special circumstance on the ground of constitutional error. The defendant is entitled to an evidentiary hearing at which he or she has the burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence. Curl v Superior Court (1990) 51 C3d 1292, 1296, 276 CR 49. The validity of the prior conviction is not a question of fact that needs to be determined by the jury beyond a reasonable doubt. People v Curl (2009) 46 C4th 339, 351, 93 CR3d 537.

Although the courts have sometimes restricted a defendant's right to collaterally attack a prior conviction, a defendant in a capital case still has the right to collaterally attack a prior conviction for murder that is alleged as a special circumstance. Garcia v Superior Court (1997) 14 C4th 953, 962, 59 CR2d 858; People v Horton (1995) 11 C4th 1068, 1134, 47 CR2d 516.

§54.18A I. Application for Mental Retardation Hearing

In Atkins v Virginia (2002) 536 US 304, 153 L Ed 2d 335, 122 S Ct 2242, the Supreme Court held that the execution of mentally retarded individuals is cruel and unusual punishment prohibited by the Eighth Amendment. The court left the task of implementing the ban on executing the mentally retarded to the states. 536 US at 317, 153 L Ed 2d at 348.

California implemented Atkins by enacting Pen C §1376, which defines "mentally retarded" and establishes a procedure in capital cases for determining whether a defendant is mentally retarded. Under Pen C §1376(a), the term refers to "the condition of significantly subaverage general intellectual functioning existing concurrently with deficits in adaptive behavior and manifested before the age of 18." Mental retardation "is not measured according to a fixed intelligence test score or a specific adaptive behavior deficiency, but rather constitutes an assessment of the individual's overall capacity based on a consideration of all the relevant evidence." In re Hawthorne (2005) 35 C4th 40, 49, 24 CR3d 189; People v Superior Court (Vidal) (2007) 40 C4th 999, 1011, 56 CR3d 851 (trial court not required to give primary consideration to defendant's Full Scale IQ scores). But see Hawthorne, 35 C4th at 52 (Chin, J., concurring) (IQ remains important).

The defense initiates an inquiry into the defendant's mental retardation by filing a pretrial motion for a hearing on the issue. There is no provision for the prosecution to request such a hearing. The motion should be accompanied by a declaration of a "qualified expert" stating his or her opinion that the defendant is mentally retarded. Pen C §1376(b)(1).

On receipt of such a declaration, the court must order a hearing. Pen C §1376(b)(1). The court may appoint qualified experts to examine the defendant, but no statement made by the defendant during any court-ordered examination is admissible at the guilt phase of the trial. Pen C §1376(b)(2). The court-ordered examination may be limited in its scope to the issue of mental retardation. See Centeno v Superior Court (2004) 117 CA4th 30, 45, 11 CR3d 533. The defendant may opt for a court hearing before trial or a jury hearing between the guilt phase and the penalty phase. Pen C §1376(b)(1). Both prosecution and defense are entitled to present evidence at the hearing; the burden is on the defendant to prove mental retardation by a preponderance of the evidence. Pen C §1376(b)(3).

If the defendant elects to have the issue decided before trial by the court, and the court finds the defendant to be mentally retarded, the case will then proceed in the same manner as any other noncapital prosecution. The prosecution may appeal the court's determination that the defendant is mentally retarded. See People v Superior Court (Vidal) (2007) 40 C4th 999, 1010, 56 CR3d 851 (order appealable under Pen C §1238(a)(8)). If the defendant is subsequently found guilty of first degree murder and at least one special circumstance is found true, the court will sentence the defendant to life without the possibility of parole. Pen C §1376(c)(1).

If the defendant elects to have a jury trial, the hearing will occur only if the defendant is found guilty of first degree murder with at least one special circumstance, and the determination will be made by the same jury that determined the guilt. Pen C §1376(b)(1), (c)(2). If the defendant has pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity, the mental retardation hearing will take place at the conclusion of the sanity hearing, if the jury finds that the defendant was sane at the time of the crime. Pen C §1376(e). If the jury cannot reach a unanimous decision, the court must dismiss that jury and order the impanelment of a new jury to decide the issue of mental retardation. Pen C §1376(b)(3). A finding of mental retardation precludes the death penalty and requires the court to sentence the defendant to life without the possibility of parole. Pen C §1376(d)(1).

> Ø Note: Penal Code §1376 by its terms provides preconviction relief. However, procedures for postconviction relief should track the statute. In re Hawthorne (2005) 35 C4th 40, 47, 24 CR3d 189. See §54.55A on postconviction proceedings.

§54.19 J. Jury Waiver

Under California law, both the prosecution and the defendant have the right to a jury trial in both the guilt and penalty phases. Separate waivers are required when either phase is tried to a court without a jury. Pen C §190.4(a)-(b); People v Diaz (1992) 3 C4th 495, 564, 11 CR2d 353.

§54.20 VI. NOTICE BY PROSECUTOR OF AGGRAVATING PENALTY PHASE EVIDENCE

Notice of prosecutor's penalty phase evidence is required. The prosecutor in a death penalty case is required to give notice to the defense of all evidence to be introduced at the penalty phase, except evidence that will be or was used in the guilt phase to prove the offense or the special circumstances that subject the defendant to the death penalty. Pen C §190.3.

When notice must be given. Notice must be given within a reasonable time before trial. Pen C §190.3. Trial begins, for purposes of the prosecutor's obligation to give notice of aggravating penalty phase evidence, when the guilt phase begins. People v Mickey (1991) 54 C3d 612, 684 n15, 286 CR 801; People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 879, 277 CR 122. The prosecution must give notice of aggravating evidence it intends to introduce at the penalty phase sufficiently before trial to permit defense counsel to adequately prepare a defense. People v Howard (1988) 44 C3d 375, 419, 243 CR 842.

When the jury cannot agree on the penalty, and a retrial of the penalty phase only is to be held, the prosecution may amend its earlier notice of aggravating penalty phase evidence. People v Raley (1992) 2 C4th 870, 905, 8 CR2d 678.

Failure to give formal notice under §190.3 of penalty phase evidence until after the guilt phase is mere technical error if actual notice was given before trial. People v Taylor (1990) 52 C3d 719, 736, 276 CR 391. Late notice will not preclude admission of evidence in the absence of bad faith. People v Cummings (1993) 4 C4th 1233, 1325, 18 CR2d 796 (evidence known to prosecutor before jury selection inadvertently not disclosed until 1 day after voir dire began).

When the prosecution does not become aware of penalty phase evidence until after compliance with the initial discovery request, the defendant is entitled to prompt notice of the newly discovered evidence and, if necessary, to a reasonable continuance to enable him or her to prepare to meet that evidence. People v Jennings (1988) 46 C3d 963, 987, 251 CR 278.

Defense request. Although not required by Pen C §190.3, defense counsel should request from the prosecutor written notice of the specific evidence the prosecutor intends to offer at the penalty phase and the aggravating factor or factors to which it is relevant, to comply with Pen C §§1054-1054.7 (discussed in chap 11). This request may be in letter form, or prepared on pleading paper and titled a "demand." A copy should be filed with the trial court and directed to the attention of the assigned trial judge or department. If the prosecutor does not comply with the demand, defense counsel may file a formal motion with the court. See Keenan v Superior Court (1981) 126 CA3d 576, 586, 177 CR 841.

Defense motion when no response to request. Penal Code §190.3 specifically requires notice of evidence to be introduced in aggravation. When no prosecution notice has been filed, a motion to exclude all prosecution evidence required to be noticed, based on the exclusionary provision of the statute itself, or a continuance motion, should be made before the penalty phase begins. See discussion of remedies below.

Form and contents of prosecution notice. Notice in writing is not required but is recommended. People v Miranda (1987) 44 C3d 57, 96, 241 CR 594. What constitutes sufficient notice depends on the circumstances of the case. The prosecution is not required to produce a summation of expected testimony, but only to give notice of who will testify. People v Roberts (1992) 2 C4th 271, 330, 6 CR2d 276 (DA offered to make witnesses available if they wished to speak to defense). The prosecution may also give notice of the nature of evidence and intent to produce witnesses not yet identified. People v Wright (1990) 52 C3d 367, 423, 276 CR 731.

Notice must be more than "boilerplate." It must be sufficient to afford a reasonable opportunity to prepare. People v Grant (1988) 45 C3d 829, 853, 248 CR 444; People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 391, 279 CR 780 (prosecutor violated mandatory language of §190.3 by giving only "boilerplate" notice); People v Roldan (2005) 35 C4th 646, 733, 27 CR3d 360, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209 (generic, nonspecific notice that prosecution intends to rely "on the circumstances of the offense" does not give adequate notice of prosecution intent to present victim impact evidence). There is a separate obligation under Pen C §1054.1 to provide the defense with discovery.

Ø Note: Because the remedy may be drastic, a prudent prosecutor will give notice adequate to comply with the statute, and take steps to make a reviewable record of the fact and date of the notice.

The prosecution should not try to overwhelm the defense by giving them information on numerous potential witnesses for the penalty phase when the prosecution actually intends to use very few of them. People v Keenan (1988) 46 C3d 478, 523, 250 CR 550. But the prosecution need not make a binding election at the time notice is given as to which evidence will be presented. People v Cummings, supra.

Argument is not evidence; the prosecution need not give pretrial notice of what arguments it intends to rely on. People v Breaux (1991) 1 C4th 281, 312, 3 CR2d 81.

Notice of a specific crime constitutes substantial notice of the intent to prove the entire course of conduct concerning that crime. People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 279 CR 780. Notice of evidence about a specific prior crime has been held sufficient to constitute notice to counsel that evidence of all crimes committed as part of same course of conduct may be offered. People v Pride (1992) 3 C4th 195, 258, 10 CR2d 636; People v Visciotti (1992) 2 C4th 1, 70, 5 CR2d 495.

Trial court remedies if no notice or inadequate notice. Evidence that was not noticed may still be admissible if the defendant is not prejudiced by the absence of timely or detailed notice. If prejudice is shown, the court may exclude evidence that should have been noticed. People v Howard (1988) 44 C3d 375, 423, 243 CR 842. The usual remedy, however, is a continuance unless the delay affected the way the defense handled prior proceedings. People v Cooper (1991) 53 C3d 771, 842, 281 CR 90. When no claim is made that late notice either impaired preparation for the guilt trial or will impair preparation for the penalty trial, and no request for continuance is made, no prejudice will normally be found to have flowed from late notice. People v Pinholster (1992) 1 C4th 865, 957, 4 CR2d 765.

Defense writ. Defense counsel who deems the proffered §190.3 notice inadequate may seek a writ. Matthews v Superior Court (1989) 209 CA3d 155, 257 CR 43 (court of appeal ordered district attorney to comply with §190.3).

When defense should request continuance. The defense should carefully consider whether to seek a continuance when given what is deemed to be late or inadequate notice. Without evidence that untimely notice affected earlier proceedings, the failure to request a continuance normally shows that any defect in the notice was not prejudicial. People v Pinholster, supra.

Rebuttal. Defense counsel must remember that there is no pretrial §190.3 notice requirement for rebuttal evidence. People v Mitcham (1992) 1 C4th 1027, 1070, 5 CR2d 230; People v Poggi (1988) 45 C3d 306, 330, 246 CR 886. However, "this does not mean that the prosecutor never has to provide discovery of… intended penalty phase rebuttal evidence." People v Gonzalez (2006) 38 C4th 932, 955, 44 CR3d 237. In Gonzalez, the court explained that the notice requirement in §190.3 does not exempt rebuttal evidence from the other rules that apply to criminal discovery (see Pen C §§1054-1054.9). Reciprocal discovery provisions apply at the penalty phase, and the prosecution's obligation under Pen C §1054.1 includes rebuttal witnesses. People v Gonzalez, supra; People v Superior Court (Mitchell) (1993) 5 C4th 1229, 23 CR2d 403.

VII. TRIAL MOTIONS FREQUENTLY MADE IN CAPITAL CASES

§54.21 A. Motion to Exclude Guilt or Penalty Phase Evidence

For the same reason that it is advisable to litigate other foundational issues before the guilt phase begins, either attorney may move for the court to rule on potentially prejudicial evidence before the penalty phase begins. If evidence is impermissibly prejudicial with regard to penalty, it may result in exclusion or some other remedy, e.g., impaneling additional juries. See People v Robertson (1982) 33 C3d 21, 188 CR 77 (same jury heard both phases of trial; supreme court found that nonprejudicial guilt phase error (evidence of other crimes) required reversal of penalty phase). Because the same jury ordinarily hears both the guilt and penalty phases (Pen C §190.4(c)), as well as the sanity phase if one is ordered, the question of prejudice is unique in capital cases. See §54.23 on motions for two juries.

This motion is made under Evid C §§402-405, which provide for pretrial hearings or hearings out of the jury's presence on foundational or preliminary facts. A full evidentiary hearing, however, is not required. People v Clair (1992) 2 C4th 629, 676, 7 CR2d 564. If any type of prehearing is deemed advisable by the court, an offer of proof constitutes a sufficient basis on which to decide the admissibility of penalty phase evidence. People v Clair, supra; People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 389, 279 CR 780; People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 880, 277 CR 122; People v Phillips (1985) 41 C3d 29, 222 CR 127.

When the defense is aware of potential penalty phase evidence before the guilt phase begins, defense counsel should consider moving under §§402-405 to rule on its admissibility before the guilt phase. The knowledge that certain evidence will or will not be admissible in the penalty phase can have a dramatic impact on guilt phase tactics. There is no requirement, however, that the trial court hear such a motion before the guilt phase.

Ø Note: Certain defense strategies at the guilt phase will "open the door" to prosecution evidence; for example, pleading diminished capacity may open the door to evidence of the defendant's bizarre psychological propensities or history. In addition, all guilt phase evidence is admissible in the penalty phase if the trier of fact is the same. Pen C §190.4(d).

§54.22 B. Motion to Require District Attorney to Declare Intent to Seek Death Penalty if Jury Renders Special Circumstance Verdict

Extraordinary resources and special procedures are used to select a jury that will be eligible to decide the penalty in a capital case. See §§54.25-54.29. Moreover, some believe a "death-qualified" jury may be more likely to convict than an ordinary criminal guilt jury. See People v Fields (1983) 35 C3d 329, 197 CR 803; Hovey v Superior Court (1980) 28 C3d 1, 168 CR 128. Trial courts may be persuaded that requiring the prosecution to declare its intentions regarding the penalty before voir dire in the guilt phase is both efficient and fair.

§54.23 C. Motion for Two Juries

Separate juries for guilt and penalty phases. Although there is no general agreement that either side benefits from separate juries for the guilt and penalty phases, Pen C §190.4(c) gives the trial judge discretion to order a second penalty jury for good cause. Case law is unclear on what constitutes good cause. See People v Hart (1999) 20 C4th 546, 639, 85 CR2d 132; People v Bonillas (1989) 48 C3d 757, 784, 257 CR 895; People v Malone (1988) 47 C3d 1, 27, 252 CR 525; People v Ainsworth (1988) 45 C3d 984, 1028, 248 CR 568. In practical terms, defense counsel would argue that, when events prejudicial to the jury's penalty deliberations occurred during the guilt phase, a new jury should be impaneled for the penalty phase. For example, when the guilt phase jury is entitled to hear evidence of other (uncharged) crimes, but the trial judge is convinced that such evidence is insufficient to sustain a finding that they are true beyond a reasonable doubt (see People v Robertson (1982) 33 C3d 21, 188 CR 77), the judge may avoid claims of prejudice in the penalty phase by admitting the evidence in the guilt phase but ordering a second jury to determine punishment.

A trial court has discretion to entertain a motion for a second jury before the guilt phase begins. People v Rowland (1992) 4 C4th 238, 268, 14 CR2d 377. For good cause shown, the parties can stipulate to a second jury. People v Beardslee (1991) 53 C3d 68, 100, 279 CR 276.

Separate juries are not required. Lockhart v McCree (1986) 476 US 162, 90 L Ed 2d 137, 106 S Ct 1758 ("death qualification" of jurors before guilt phase does not deprive defendant of right to jury drawn from representative cross-section of community). See also People v Adcox (1988) 47 C3d 207, 251, 253 CR 55; People v Heishman (1988) 45 C3d 147, 198, 246 CR 673.

When the right to jury trial is waived for the penalty phase, and the penalty phase is to be tried to the court, Boykin-Tahl advice and waivers may be required. See People v Robertson (1989) 48 C3d 18, 38, 255 CR 631.

Separate juries for codefendants. The trial court may impanel two concurrent juries to hear evidence involving codefendants being tried jointly. People v Harris (1989) 47 C3d 1047, 1075, 255 CR 352. In People v Cleveland (2004) 32 C4th 704, 11 CR3d 236, the trial court severed only the penalty phase for the two codefendants.

§54.24 VIII. PLEA BARGAINING IN SPECIAL CIRCUMSTANCE CASES

No coercion necessarily implied. A plea of guilty to a noncapital offense is not constitutionally "coerced" when it is entered solely to avoid the threatened death penalty. North Carolina v Alford (1970) 400 US 25, 31, 27 L Ed 2d 162, 167, 91 S Ct 160. Nevertheless, district attorney's offices in some counties do not "bargain" with the death penalty because they do not want to risk coercing a guilty plea from a defendant. In these counties, defense counsel must decide whether to initiate discussions with the prosecution to present reasons why the death penalty should not be pursued.

Factual basis. In death penalty cases, the court may accept a noncapital plea bargain even if the defendant steadfastly denies guilt. The Pen C §1192.5 requirement that there be a factual basis for felony pleas may be supported by the facts of the case set out in prosecution documents. See People v West (1970) 3 C3d 595, 91 CR 385, and discussion in §26.13.

A defendant may not plead guilty to a capital charge when unrepresented or when defense counsel does not consent. Pen C §1018. This statutory requirement is intended to safeguard against erroneous imposition of the death sentence. People v Alfaro (2007) 41 C4th 1277, 1300, 63 CR3d 433. This rule, however, does not prevent a defendant from insisting on testifying, asking for the death penalty, and refusing to present mitigating evidence. People v Harris (1987) 191 CA3d 819, 236 CR 680. The trial judge must still on his or her own motion independently review all the facts and law on which the sentence is based and enter a life sentence if a death sentence is not legally supported. Pen C §190.4(e). In reviewing the case, the trial judge is limited to the evidence that was before the jury. People v Lewis (2004) 33 C4th 214, 225, 14 CR3d 566.

IX. GUILT PHASE

A. Jury Selection

§54.25 1. Individual Voir Dire; Presence of Press

In a death penalty case, jurors are voir dired on both guilt and penalty phase issues because the same jury usually hears both phases. Jurors are asked the standard voir dire questions relating to the guilt phase issues in the case. They are also asked what is commonly called "death qualification" questions, to learn whether jurors can fairly apply the statutory rules applicable to the choice between the two penalties of life without the possibility of parole and the death penalty. See §54.28 on the standard for challenges for cause in the death qualification phase of jury selection.

In capital cases, as in noncapital cases, the court conducts the initial examination of prospective jurors. CCP §223. Counsel may then question the jurors, but the court may limit direct questioning by counsel. CCP §223. Voir dire is to be conducted "only in aid of the exercise of challenges for cause." CCP §223. See People v San Nicolas (2004) 34 C4th 614, 633, 21 CR3d 612 (trial court did not abuse discretion under former CCP §223 by conducting voir dire itself (court allowed counsel to propose follow-up questions)); People v Wright (1990) 52 C3d 367, 419, 276 CR 731 (limit of three death-qualification questions per attorney to each juror was approved). But see People v Cash (2002) 28 C4th 703, 122 CR2d 545 (death judgment reversed because trial court prevented counsel from using answers to questions about factors that might cause jurors to automatically vote for death as basis for challenges for cause). Individual or sequestered voir dire is no longer required during the death qualification phase of jury selection. People v Alfaro (2007) 41 C4th 1277, 1314, 63 CR3d 433 (noting that CCP §223 intended to overrule the contrary conclusion in Hovey v Superior Court (1980) 28 C3d 1, 80, 168 CR 128). However, sequestered voir dire may still be available under CCP §223 at the trial court's discretion. See People v Gurule (2002) 28 C4th 557, 597 n6, 123 CR2d 345; Covarrubias v Superior Court (1998) 60 CA4th 1168, 71 CR2d 91. See also discussion of private versus public voir dire in §§14.8-14.10, 29.18.

Whether conducted by counsel or the court, death qualification voir dire of each juror must take place. A juror who has formed an opinion about the death penalty that will impair his or her ability to be impartial should be dismissed for cause. See, e.g., People v Carasi (2008) 44 C4th 1263, 1284 n12, 82 CR3d 265. If one such juror is empaneled and the death penalty is imposed, the death penalty cannot be carried out. Without adequate voir dire, the judge's responsibility to remove jurors who will not be able to impartially follow the court's instructions and evaluate evidence cannot be fulfilled. Morgan v Illinois (1992) 504 US 719, 729, 119 L Ed 2d 492, 503, 112 S Ct 2222. The case of Witherspoon v Illinois (1968) 391 US 510, 20 L Ed 2d 776, 88 S Ct 1770, demands inquiry into whether prospective jurors' views on the death penalty would disqualify them from sitting. Morgan v Illinois, supra; Wainwright v Witt (1985) 469 US 412, 83 L Ed 2d 841, 105 S Ct 844. Both sides may exclude jurors whose views would prevent or substantially impair performance of their duties. The state must be given the opportunity to identify such jurors by questioning them about their view of the death penalty. Morgan v Illinois (1992) 504 US 719, 733, 119 L Ed 2d 492, 505, 112 S Ct 2222. "Will you follow the law" questions are not sufficient. A juror could swear to do so not knowing that maintaining dogmatic beliefs about the death penalty would prevent him or her from doing so. 504 US at 738, 119 L Ed 2d at 508.

If an issue arises on the trial court's voir dire procedure, the defense needs to show that a juror who actually served had a bias or that the procedure prejudiced the case. People v Cunningham (2001) 25 C4th 926, 973, 108 CR2d 291. An appellate court need not make particular reference to the excusal of each juror. Uttecht v Brown (2007) 551 US 1, 167 L Ed 2d 1014, 1026, 127 S Ct 2218.

Under CCP §223 and Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (1984) 464 US 501, 78 L Ed 2d 629, 104 S Ct 819, jury voir dire in capital cases is to be held in public view except when it is shown that a public trial will threaten the defendant's right to a fair trial or the right to privacy of prospective jurors. Under Press-Enterprise and §223, the court must usually permit the press to be present (see §14.10) but may continue to exclude all jurors except the one being questioned (see Ukiah Daily Journal v Superior Court (1985) 165 CA3d 788, 791, 211 CR 673). Before Press-Enterprise, many California trial courts conducted sequestered individual voir dire to decide the issue of death qualification. See Hovey v Superior Court (1980) 28 C3d 1, 80, 168 CR 128. For further discussion of jury voir dire, see chap 29. See also §14.29 (voir dire concerning pretrial publicity).

§54.26 2. Jury Questionnaires

Jury selection questionnaires are commonly used in death cases. In light of the elimination of sequestered, individual voir dire, the use of such questionnaires, answered by jurors before judge or attorney questioning, has become extremely important. This device at least partially preserves the former benefits of individual questioning without the concomitant expenditure of court time. However, a questionnaire is no substitute for voir dire. In People v Stewart (2004) 33 C4th 425, 15 CR3d 656, discussed in §29.17, the supreme court reversed a death penalty verdict when the trial court excluded jurors for cause on the basis of their answers to questionnaires without any follow-up on oral voir dire.

Ø Note: It is not uncommon for counsel to stipulate that challenges for cause may be based on the prospective jurors' answers to the qualifying questions. See, e.g., People v Benavides (2005) 35 C4th 69, 88, 24 CR3d 507. There was no such stipulation in Stewart.

Jurors must be informed, preferably in the introduction to the questionnaire and in bold print, that the information that they provide is public information and will be available to the press. Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (1984) 464 US 501, 511, 78 L Ed 2d 629, 639, 104 S Ct 819; Copley Press, Inc. v Superior Court (1991) 228 CA3d 77, 87, 278 CR 443. See also §29.17 on jury questionnaires.

§54.27 3. Jury Selection Expert

Defense counsel may wish to retain a qualified jury selection expert to assist in the jury selection process. See Pen C §987.9; Corenevsky v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 307, 321, 204 CR 165. In most jurisdictions, a special showing of particular need is required before funds will be provided for such an expert. For further discussion, see §29.38.

4. Juror Challenges

§54.28 a. Grounds

Death qualification of guilt phase juries is constitutional and does not deprive defendants of their right to a jury drawn from a representative cross-section of the community. Lockhart v McCree (1986) 476 US 162, 90 L Ed 2d 137, 106 S Ct 1758. A juror cannot be excused for cause unless the juror's views would "prevent or substantially impair the performance of his duties as a juror in accordance with his instructions and his oath." Wainwright v Witt (1985) 469 US 412, 424, 83 L Ed 2d 841, 851, 105 S Ct 844; People v Ghent (1987) 43 C3d 739, 767, 239 CR 82. This is true whether the juror is predisposed to vote for or against the death penalty. Morgan v Illinois (1992) 504 US 719, 726, 119 L Ed 2d 492, 504, 112 S Ct 2222; People v Crittenden (1994) 9 C4th 83, 121, 36 CR2d 474. See also People v Mickey (1991) 54 C3d 612, 681 n14, 286 CR 801 (test is whether juror's predilection would "actually preclude, or appreciably impede, him from engaging in the weighing process"); People v Ashmus (1991) 54 C3d 932, 963, 2 CR2d 112 (juror may be excused if he or she could not consider imposing death as reasonable possibility). See also People v Ruiz (1988) 44 C3d 589, 617, 244 CR 200. The same test applies when the defense seeks to exclude a juror.

In voir diring jurors on their predisposition for or against the death penalty, it is not proper for defense counsel to summarize the prosecution's case and ask jurors if they would automatically vote for death based on that summary. People v Sanders (1995) 11 C4th 475, 539, 46 CR2d 751. The defense is entitled, however, to voir dire jurors on aggravating circumstances likely to be present to establish a challenge for cause, even though the aggravating circumstances are not charged in the pleadings. People v Kirkpatrick (1994) 7 C4th 988, 1004, 30 CR2d 818, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209.

When the court allows a prodeath juror to remain despite a valid challenge for cause, the defense ordinarily must use a peremptory challenge on that juror. People v Bittaker (1989) 48 C3d 1046, 1086, 259 CR 630; People v Coleman (1988) 46 C3d 749, 770, 251 CR 83. In this situation, after exhausting all peremptory challenges, counsel may want to tell the court why he or she is dissatisfied with the jury, and ask the court for another peremptory challenge to replace the challenge used on the juror who should have been excused for cause. See Ross v Oklahoma (1988) 487 US 81, 101 L Ed 2d 80, 108 S Ct 2273; People v Crittenden, supra.

The court may properly excuse a juror who would not vote for the death penalty in the instant case even if the juror would consider it in other cases. People v Livaditis (1992) 2 C4th 759, 771, 9 CR2d 72. A juror must be able to consider giving the death penalty as a reasonable possibility. People v Ashmus, supra. The view that a juror can be removed only if he or she would not consider the death penalty at all was rejected in People v Breaux (1991) 1 C4th 281, 306, 3 CR2d 81. It is enough that the judge is left with the definite impression that a prospective juror would be unable to faithfully and impartially follow the law. People v Breaux, supra. When a juror gives conflicting or equivocal responses to death penalty questions, the judge's determination of the juror's true state of mind is binding on appeal. People v Cummings (1993) 4 C4th 1233, 1280, 18 CR2d 796.

For general discussion of jury challenges, see chap 29.

§54.29 b. Number of Peremptory Challenges

The number of peremptory challenges for each side in cases punishable by death or by life imprisonment is 20 each. CCP §231. Although a trial judge has the discretion to grant additional peremptory challenges as long as each side is allowed the same number (see People v Diaz (1951) 105 CA2d 690, 234 P2d 300), courts are not required to grant requests for additional peremptories in the absence of a likelihood of an unfair trial or partial jury (People v Pride (1992) 3 C4th 195, 231, 10 CR2d 636). In addition, the defense is not entitled to additional peremptory challenges to "keep pace" with a prosecutor who is excusing all jurors who express death penalty scruples. People v Cox (1991) 53 C3d 618, 648, 280 CR 692, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209.

When two or more defendants are tried jointly, they must exercise their challenges jointly, except for five additional challenges that may be exercised separately. Requiring that such challenges be exercised jointly does not offend the Constitution. CCP §231; People v Pinholster (1992) 1 C4th 865, 911, 4 CR2d 765. The prosecution is entitled to the total number of challenges granted to all defendants. CCP §231.

Ø Note: The number of challenges available in a competency hearing arising from a capital prosecution is the same as in any competency hearing: six. People v Stanley (1995) 10 C4th 764, 808, 42 CR2d 543.

Ø Note: Counsel should be sure to exhaust all available jury challenges to preserve the issue on appeal. See People v Seaton (2001) 26 C4th 598, 637, 110 CR2d 441 (when counsel believes trial court wrongfully denied challenge, must use all peremptory challenges and communicate to court dissatisfaction with jury selection to preserve issue on appeal); People v Sanders (1995) 11 C4th 475, 507, 46 CR2d 751 (in considering change of venue motion, court said that failure to exhaust jury challenges tacitly acknowledged fair and impartial jury).

B. Conduct of Guilt Phase

§54.30 1. Order of Proof

A death penalty case is tried in separate phases. First the trier of fact determines the defendant's guilt or innocence, and whether the murder is first degree. The guilt phase of a special circumstance case is conducted in the same manner as an ordinary felony trial.

The special circumstance allegation should be read to the jury when the other charges are read during the guilt phase, and evidence of it is received as part of the prosecution's case-in-chief. See Pen C §190.1(a). If one of the special circumstances alleged is that the defendant was convicted of first or second degree murder in a prior proceeding, further proceedings must be held on the question of the truth of this special circumstance. Pen C §190.1(b). Every attempt must be made to avoid prejudicing the jury with information of any prior murder until the guilt and degree of the new murder and any other special circumstances have been determined. See People v Balderas (1985) 41 C3d 144, 222 CR 184.

If sanity is at issue, a sanity phase is held between the guilt and penalty phases. Pen C §190.1(c). See In re Fields (1990) 51 C3d 1063, 1072, 275 CR 384. See §§48.40-48.58 on the defense of not guilty by reason of insanity (NGI).

Finally, if guilt, first degree murder, and one or more special circumstances are found (and if the defendant was found sane if an NGI plea was entered), a penalty phase is held. Pen C §190.1(c).

§54.31 2. Burden of Proof; Other Proof Requirements

Proof of a special circumstance allegation at the guilt phase is identical to the proof of a substantive charge (Pen C §190.4): It must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. An acquittal of the special circumstance bars further prosecution on that allegation; an acquittal on the felony underlying the special circumstance bars further prosecution on both the felony and the special circumstance allegation. People v McDonald (1984) 37 C3d 351, 378, 208 CR 236, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendoza (2000) 23 C4th 896, 914, 98 CR2d 431. As long as first degree murder and one special circumstance is found true, the case will proceed to the penalty phase. If the jury is hung on all special circumstance allegations, a new jury will be impaneled to decide the truth of the special circumstance(s). Pen C §190.4(b).

The corpus delicti rule, which precludes a conviction based on the defendant's extrajudicial statement without some independent proof that the charged crime did take place (see generally §23.41), does not apply to proof of felony-based special circumstances. Pen C §190.41. See People v Jablonski (2006) 37 C4th 774, 826, 38 CR3d 98. When a special circumstance is not felony-based, i.e., when it involves financial gain or lying in wait, there is also no requirement that the corpus delicti of the special circumstance be proved independently of the defendant's extrajudicial statements. People v Edelbacher (1989) 47 C3d 983, 1023, 254 CR 586.

> Ø Note: The corpus delicti rule does apply to proof of felony-based special circumstances that occurred before June 6, 1990, the date §190.4 was passed by the voters. Tapia v Superior Court (1991) 53 C3d 282, 298, 279 CR 592.

Corroboration of accomplice testimony is required to prove an underlying separate crime on which a special circumstance is based; accomplice corroboration is not required to prove other special circumstances such as Pen C §190.2(a)(1) (murder for financial gain), which requires only proof of a motive for a murder for which the defendant has been convicted by other evidence. People v Hamilton (1989) 48 C3d 1142, 1177, 259 CR 701.

When the special circumstance does not specifically require intent to kill, the prosecution need not prove that the actual killer intended to kill. Pen C §190.2(b); People v Earp (1999) 20 C4th 826, 905, 85 CR2d 857.

If the special circumstance is based on felony murder and the defendant is not the actual killer, the prosecution must show either that the defendant intended to kill or that he or she was a major participant in the underlying felony and acted with reckless indifference to life. Pen C §190.2(d). Proof of all other special circumstances against an aider and abettor (not an actual killer) requires proof of intent to kill. Pen C §190.2(c).

It is not ineffective assistance of counsel for defense counsel to concede guilt in the opening statement and argue against the special circumstance, as long as there is no indication that the defendant disagrees. People v Cain (1995) 10 C4th 1, 30, 40 CR2d 481. Likewise, counsel's strategic admission of defendant's guilt at the guilt phase is not automatically prejudicial ineffective assistance of counsel even when the defendant does not expressly consent to the admission if counsel has adequately disclosed the strategy to, and discussed it with, the defendant. Florida v Nixon (2004) 543 US 175, 160 L Ed 2d 565, 125 S Ct 551. In such a case, counsel's performance is evaluated under the test of Strickland v Washington (1984) 466 US 668, 80 L Ed 2d 674, 104 S Ct 2052, i.e., Was counsel's performance deficient, and, if so, did it prejudice the defendant? Florida v Nixon (2004) 543 US 175, 160 L Ed 2d 565, 125 S Ct 551.

§54.32 C. Elements of Certain Special Circumstances

Penal Code §190.2(a)(1) (intentional murder for financial gain). The murder must be the consideration for, or an essential prerequisite to, the financial gain sought. People v Adcox (1988) 47 C3d 207, 246, 253 CR 55. This includes a murder to avoid a debt owed. People v Edelbacher (1989) 47 C3d 983, 1025, 254 CR 586. The test is whether the murder was done in the expectation that the defendant would obtain any financial gain. Robbery or burglary felony murder do not qualify. People v Mickey (1991) 54 C3d 612, 678, 286 CR 801. However, agreement is not required. The focus is on the mind of the person who commits the murder at the time the murder is committed. The question is whether that person committed the murder with the expectation that he or she would achieve a financial gain. People v Howard (1988) 44 C3d 375, 409, 243 CR 842. See People v Noguera (1992) 4 C4th 599, 634, 15 CR2d 400.

Ø Note: The payment may be monetary or in other kind, such as narcotics. People v Padilla (1995) 11 C4th 891, 933, 47 CR2d 426, overruled on other grounds in People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 823, 72 CR2d 656.

Penal Code §190.2(a)(2) (prior murder). The "prior" murder need not have occurred before the current murder as long as the conviction occurred before the present prosecution. People v Grant (1988) 45 C3d 829, 848, 248 CR 444; People v Hendricks (1987) 43 C3d 584, 595, 238 CR 66; People v Hinton (2006) 37 C4th 839, 879, 38 CR3d 149.

A murder committed in another state by a juvenile treated as an adult constitutes a prior murder special circumstance even though the procedure in that state for trying a minor as an adult differs from the procedure in California. People v Andrews (1989) 49 C3d 200, 223, 260 CR 583. See also People v Trevino (2001) 26 C4th 237, 109 CR2d 567. In Trevino, the defendant would not have been old enough to have been tried as an adult in California for the first murder. The court held that it is the offense in terms of the factual elements, not the age of the offender, that governs, and that the first murder was therefore within the prior murder special circumstance of Pen C §190.2(a)(2).

There is no right to a jury determination of the constitutional validity of a prior murder conviction. This is a question of law, and the defendant has the burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence. There is a strong presumption of constitutional validity. Only the fact that the defendant suffered a prior murder conviction is a jury issue. Curl v Superior Court (1990) 51 C3d 1292, 1300, 276 CR 49.

Penal Code §190.2(a)(3) (multiple murder). The California Supreme Court has not yet explicitly resolved the issue of whether there need be a specific intent to commit more than one murder, or the intent to commit a murder with knowledge of a prior murder. See People v Johnson (1993) 6 C4th 1, 23 CR2d 593; People v Malone (1988) 47 C3d 1, 26, 252 CR 525; People v Bunyard (1988) 45 C3d 1189, 1241, 249 CR 71.

There is no requirement of intent to kill under this special circumstance if the defendant is the actual killer. Pen C §190.2(b).

At least one first degree murder conviction is needed for a multiple murder special circumstance. People v Cooper (1991) 53 C3d 771, 828, 281 CR 90.

Killing a woman with a viable fetus constitutes two murders for a multiple murder special, even if a single act kills both. People v Bunyard (1988) 45 C3d 1189, 1237, 249 CR 71. See People v Pool (2008) 166 CA4th 904, 906, 83 CR3d 186 (knowledge of fetus's existence is not prerequisite to conviction for fetal murder).

Penal Code §190.2(a)(5) (killing to avoid lawful arrest or to perfect escape). For the special circumstance of killing to avoid lawful arrest, an arrest must be imminent. People v Coleman (1989) 48 C3d 112, 146, 255 CR 813. The killing must have been motivated by the desire to escape, and must have taken place before temporary safety was reached. People v Bigelow (1984) 37 C3d 731, 754, 209 CR 328. Nonetheless, imminent arrest is not an element of the special circumstance. A specific instruction on imminence is only necessary if the possibility of arrest is remote. People v Cummings (1993) 4 C4th 1233, 1300, 18 CR2d 796.

Penal Code §190.2(a)(7) (killing peace officer). The texts of Propositions 114 and 115 differ in the definition of a peace officer; the broader definition in Proposition 114 controls. Yoshisato v Superior Court (1992) 2 C4th 978, 982, 9 CR2d 102.

Penal Code §190.2(a)(10) (killing witness). The elements are (1) the victim witnessed a separate crime before being killed; (2) the killing was intentional; and (3) the murderer's purpose was to prevent the victim from testifying about the prior crime. People v Benson (1990) 52 C3d 754, 784, 276 CR 827; People v Garrison (1989) 47 C3d 746, 792, 254 CR 257. See also People v Silva (1988) 45 C3d 604, 631, 247 CR 573.

The witness-killing special circumstance applies even if the defendant had an additional motive to kill the witness, such as robbery. People v Sanders (1990) 51 C3d 471, 519, 273 CR 537.

Penal Code §190.2(a)(14) (especially heinous and atrocious). This special circumstance is void because of vagueness. Maynard v Cartwright (1988) 486 US 356, 100 L Ed 2d 372, 108 S Ct 1853; People v Sanders (1990) 51 C3d 471, 520, 273 CR 537 (predecessor to present statute; same wording).

Penal Code §190.2(a)(15) (lying in wait). This special circumstance does not violate the Eighth Amendment. People v Morales (1989) 48 C3d 527, 556, 257 CR 64; People v Edelbacher (1989) 47 C3d 983, 1023, 254 CR 586. Actual physical concealment is not required; it is sufficient to create "a situation where the victim is taken unawares even though he sees his murderer." People v Morales (1989) 48 C3d 527, 553, 257 CR 64. The special circumstance of lying in wait may be applied to an aider and abettor who did not personally lie in wait. People v Bonilla (2007) 41 C4th 313, 332, 60 CR3d 209. Lying in wait to rape a victim before killing him or her qualifies under §190.2(a)(15), as long as the defendant intended to kill the victim during the period of lying in wait. People v Carpenter (1997) 15 C4th 312, 388, 63 CR2d 1. The requirement that the lying in wait be for a substantial period can be met by a wait of only a few minutes. People v Superior Court (Lujan) (1999) 73 CA4th 1123, 87 CR2d 320. The evidence does not have to show that the victim was unaware of the murderer's presence if the victim was taken by surprise. For example, in People v Hillhouse (2002) 27 C4th 469, 500, 117 CR2d 45, there was substantial evidence of lying in wait when the defendant announced to another that he was going to kill the victim and, after riding in a truck with the victim for a period of time, struck the victim while he was out of the truck and urinating. Likewise, in People v Jurado (2006) 38 C4th 72, 119, 41 CR3d 319, the evidence supported the lying-in-wait special circumstance when the defendant lured the victim into a car, sat behind her while an accomplice drove, and then launched an attack that killed her. A defendant's repeated threats to kill the victim will not negate the surprise element of the special circumstance of lying in wait. People v Arellano (2004) 125 CA4th 1088, 23 CR3d 172.

Effective March 7, 2000, Pen C §190.2(a)(15) was amended to define this special circumstance as an intentional killing committed "by means of lying in wait" rather than "while lying in wait." This addresses cases in which the actual killing event occurred sometime after the lying in wait.

Penal Code §190.2(a)(16) (intentional killing because of victim's race, color, religion, nationality, or country of origin). When multiple concurrent motives exist, the prohibited bias must be a substantial factor in bringing about the crime. If the evidence supports the hate-murder special circumstance, that special circumstance is not invalidated because of the presence of an additional motive. People v Lindberg (2008) 45 C4th 1, 38, 82 CR3d 323.

Penal Code §190.2(a)(17) (murder committed during commission of certain enumerated felonies). Intent to kill is not a necessary element of the felony murder special circumstance for a defendant who is the actual killer. People v Anderson (1987) 43 C3d 1104, 240 CR 585.

If the defendant was an aider and abettor, the prosecution must prove either that the defendant intended to kill (Pen C §190.2(c)) or that he or she acted with reckless indifference to life and was a major participant in the underlying felony (Pen C §190.2(d)). The trial court is not required to instruct sua sponte on the meaning of "reckless indifference to human life." People v Estrada (1995) 11 C4th 568, 578, 46 CR2d 586. On request, however, the court should define the term in the language of the Supreme Court in Tison v Arizona (1987) 481 US 137, 157, 95 L Ed 2d 127, 144, 107 S Ct 1676, i.e., "knowingly engaging in criminal activities known to carry a grave risk of death." See CALCRIM 703. The aider and abettor must have been involved in the felony before the killing occurred. People v Pulido (1997) 15 C4th 713, 722, 63 CR2d 625.

> Ø Note: In People v Beardslee (1991) 53 C3d 68, 279 CR 276, and People v Champion (1995) 9 C4th 879, 39 CR2d 547, the court found that, when there is a single course of conduct and two theories that the defendant is the actual killer or that he or she is an aider and abettor, jury unanimity is not required.

The issue of whether auto burglary is "burglary" within the felony murder special circumstance was raised but not decided in People v Hamilton (1988) 45 C3d 351, 364 n7, 247 CR 31.

For both capital and noncapital cases, felony murder occurs only if the killing and the enumerated felony are part of one continuous transaction. The murder special circumstance is just as broad. People v Hayes (1990) 52 C3d 577, 631, 276 CR 874.

When a felony is only incidental to murder, a felony special circumstance will not lie. People v Green (1980) 27 C3d 1, 61, 164 CR 1, disapproved on other grounds in People v Hall (1986) 41 C3d 826, 834 n3, 226 CR 112 (robbery felony murder conviction improper when intent to commit robbery arises after murder). If the felony is not incidental to the murder, however, a felony murder special circumstance may be charged. However, regarding kidnapping and arson, Pen C §190.2(a)(17)(M), effective March 7, 2000, permits the finding of a special circumstance even if the defendant had an intent to kill and the kidnapping or arson was committed to facilitate murder. In People v Mendoza (2000) 24 C4th 130, 182, 99 CR2d 485, the court held that concurrent intent would support felony murder.

Ø Example: If a rapist decides to kill the rape victim to eliminate him or her as a witness, this satisfies the felony murder special circumstance requirements because the murder is committed to advance the crime of rape. People v Wright (1990) 52 C3d 367, 417, 276 CR 731.

Concurrent intent to kill and to commit an independent felony will support a felony murder special circumstance. People v Raley (1992) 2 C4th 870, 903, 8 CR2d 678. The Ireland (People v Ireland (1969) 70 C2d 522, 75 CR 188) merger rule, i.e., that a felony that is an integral part of the homicide cannot support a felony murder instruction, also applies to a felony murder special circumstance. People v Sanders (1990) 51 C3d 471, 517, 273 CR 537.

Expiration of the statute of limitations on the underlying felony does not bar prosecution of a special circumstance based on that felony. People v Morris (1988) 46 C3d 1, 18, 249 CR 119, disapproved on other grounds in In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 543 n5, 545 n6, 37 CR2d 446.

Penal Code §190.2(a)(18) (torture). This special circumstance requires proof of first degree murder, intent to kill, torture of a living victim, and infliction of an extremely painful act. People v Morales (1989) 48 C3d 527, 559, 257 CR 64. The distinction between murder by torture (Pen C §189) and the torture special circumstance is that the torture special circumstance requires intent to kill while torture does not. The definition of torture, however, is the same. People v Mincey (1992) 2 C4th 408, 454, 6 CR2d 822. The prosecution does not have to prove that the acts of torture inflicted on the victim were the cause of death. People v Crittenden (1994) 9 C4th 83, 142, 36 CR2d 474. The defendant must intend to "cause cruel or extreme pain and suffering for the purpose of revenge, extortion, persuasion, or for any other sadistic purpose." People v Elliot (2005) 37 C4th 453, 479, 35 CR3d 759. The defendant's intent to inflict the pain, not the victim's subjective experience of the pain, is the relevant consideration. People v Mungia (2008) 44 C4th 1101, 1136, 81 CR3d 614.

Penal Code §190.2(a)(22) (gang-related killings). A murder carried out by an active participant in a criminal street gang (as defined in Pen C §186.22(f)) to further gang activities is a capital offense. There is no requirement that the person actually killed be the person that the defendant intended to kill. People v Shabazz (2006) 38 C4th 55, 62, 40 CR3d 750.

§54.33 X. CHECKLIST: PRE-PENALTY-PHASE MOTIONS

Various pre-penalty-phase motions discussed elsewhere are listed here. They may be appropriately made between the trial phases, although they may also be made at other times. They are divided into motions relating to evidence and motions relating to procedure.

Motions relating to evidence

- Motion for preliminary fact hearing. Evid C §§402-405; see §54.21.
- Motion to exclude evidence. Evid C §352; see §§54.21, 54.35.
- Renewed or de novo Pen C §1538.5 motion to suppress. Based on evidence at trial, new grounds to suppress may become apparent. See Pen C §1538.5(h)-(i). See chap 16 on search and seizure motions generally.
- Motion to exclude confession or admission. See chap 23.
- Motion to exclude evidence that does not fall within statutory factors in aggravation. See §54.36.
- Motion for sanctions due to failure of police or prosecution to preserve or test potentially favorable evidence. See §§11.27-11.28.
- Motion to exclude scientific evidence because its reliability has not been adequately investigated. See discussion in §§31.12-31.14.
- Motion for prosecutor to correct false impressions of the veracity of his or her own evidence. Giglio v U.S. (1972) 405 US 150, 154, 31 L Ed 2d 104, 109, 92 S Ct 763; Napue v Illinois (1959) 360 US 264, 269, 3 L Ed 2d 1217, 1220, 79 S Ct 1173; People v Westmoreland (1976) 58 CA3d 32, 129 CR 554; see People v Medina (1974) 41 CA3d 438, 455, 116 CR 133; People v Green (1951) 102 CA2d 831, 228 P2d 867.

Motions relating to procedure

- Motion for second jury. Pen C §190.4; see §54.23. In addition to the other reasons for this motion, the guilt phase jury may have been irrevocably prejudiced on the issue of penalty by hearing inadmissible evidence in the guilt phase. People v Alcala (1984) 36 C3d 604, 205 CR 775. The risks involved in trusting an admonishment may be greater in the penalty phase. See People v Hines (1964) 61 C2d 164, 169, 37 CR 622, disapproved on other grounds in People v Murtishaw (1981) 29 C3d 733, 774 n40, 175 CR 738.
- Motion for new trial. Although the guilt and penalty phases may be viewed as segments of one continuous trial, a motion for new trial between the guilt and penalty phases may forestall or render unnecessary the penalty phase. The court and prosecutor may prefer to litigate a motion for new trial before resources have been spent on a penalty phase. If reversible error has already been committed, a penalty phase would be futile.
- Motion to strike special circumstance. See §54.17.
- Motion to strike prior murder special circumstance. See §54.18.

XI. PENALTY PHASE

§54.34 A. Burden of Proof

There is no specified burden of proof on the overall issue of penalty, nor is there any requirement that any or all jurors find any particular fact in aggravation to be true beyond a reasonable doubt. The jury may be instructed that the prosecution does not bear the burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt on the issue of whether the defendant should die. People v Welch (1999) 20 C4th 701, 766, 85 CR2d 203 (U.S. Constitution does not require burden of proof in penalty findings; neither party has burden of proof); People v Hawthorne (1992) 4 C4th 43, 14 CR2d 133; People v Williams (1988) 44 C3d 883, 960, 245 CR 336. The California Supreme Court rejected the argument that, read together, Apprendi v New Jersey (2000) 530 US 466, 147 L Ed 2d 435, 120 S Ct 2348 (defendant has right to have jury decide beyond reasonable doubt every fact that increases punishment beyond statutory maximum), and Ring v Arizona (2002) 536 US 584, 153 L Ed 2d 556, 122 S Ct 2428 (Apprendi applies to death penalty determination), require the prosecution to prove aggravating circumstances beyond a reasonable doubt. See, e.g., People v Prieto (2003) 30 C4th 226, 262, 133 CR2d 18. The court held that because the defendant has been convicted of first degree murder, and at least one special circumstance has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt at the guilt phase, "death is no more than the prescribed statutory maximum for the offense." 30 C4th at 263, quoting from People v Anderson (2001) 25 C4th 543, 589 n14, 106 CR2d 575.

Ø Note: The California Supreme Court noted that for this reason, the decision in Cunningham v California (2007) 549 US 270, 166 L Ed 2d 856, 127 S Ct 856, has "no apparent application to the state's capital sentencing scheme." People v Prince (2007) 40 C4th 1179, 1297, 57 CR3d 543. However, the court indicated that it might be open to further briefing by stating that the defendant's "failure to supply any discussion or analysis of the Cunningham decision leaves us with no basis to conclude that it should cause us to alter our views." 40 C4th at 1298.

If the trier of fact finds that the aggravating circumstances outweigh any mitigating factors, it may but is not required to impose a sentence of death. Although Pen C §190.2 says that the death penalty "shall" be imposed when the trier of fact finds that the aggravating circumstances outweigh mitigating factors, case law provides that the jury always retains discretion to impose the punishment it finds appropriate. People v Davenport (1985) 41 C3d 247, 221 CR 794. See also CALCRIM 766. If the trier of fact determines that the mitigating factors merit a life sentence, or that aggravating evidence does not merit death, even without mitigating evidence, it must impose a sentence of life in prison without the possibility of parole. Pen C §190.3; People v Duncan (1991) 53 C3d 955, 979, 281 CR 273. These rules are different from federal law, which requires only a simple weighing of the factors alone and against each other. Gregg v Georgia (1976) 428 US 153, 192, 49 L Ed 2d 859, 885, 96 S Ct 2909. See also Boyde v California (1990) 494 US 370, 108 L Ed 2d 316, 110 S Ct 1190. Note that in People v Welch (1999) 20 C4th 701, 772, 85 CR2d 203, the defense offered studies tending to show that jurors are often confused by penalty phase instructions. The California Supreme Court rejected that argument because of a lack of testimony on these studies in the trial court to rebut the judicial presumption that jurors comprehend and follow the court's instructions.

The only jury unanimity requirement in penalty phase decisions is on the final verdict. People v Caro (1988) 46 C3d 1035, 1057, 251 CR 757. The decision that each juror makes to reach that verdict is, however, an individual one. Jurors need not unanimously agree on which aggravating evidence they find to be true, or on what weight to give any particular aggravating evidence. People v Breaux (1991) 1 C4th 281, 3 CR2d 81.

The reasonable doubt standard does apply in one aspect of the penalty phase. Before any juror can use other violent criminal conduct as aggravating evidence under Pen C §190.3(b), that juror must determine, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant actually committed the other violent crime. People v Thompson (1988) 45 C3d 86, 126, 246 CR 245.

§54.35 B. Permissible Evidence

All guilt phase evidence may be considered by the trier of fact in the penalty phase if the trier of fact is the same. Pen C §190.4(d). Particular types of evidence admissible in aggravation or in mitigation of the death penalty are discussed in §§54.36-54.49.

The court retains discretion under Evid C §352 concerning how evidence offered in aggravation should be introduced but may not exclude it altogether. People v Visciotti (1992) 2 C4th 1, 68, 5 CR2d 495 (court has authority to control manner in which evidence of past criminal conduct is offered, but no discretion to exclude all evidence related to statutory sentencing factor).

C. Evidence in Aggravation

§54.36 1. Summary of Evidence Admissible in Aggravation

The scope of evidence admissible in aggravation is limited. The prosecution cannot introduce evidence of the defendant's background or character in its case-in-chief unless it is probative of a specific aggravating factor in Pen C §190.3. People v Lucky (1988) 45 C3d 259, 302, 247 CR 1. For example, it was error to introduce testimony of the defendant's parole officer that the defendant was very difficult to supervise, was manipulative, and was addicted to narcotics. Although this was character evidence, it was not probative of a statutory aggravating factor. 45 C3d at 302.

Ø Note: No California decision has interpreted the general preamble language of §190.3 ("evidence may be presented by both the People and the defendant as to any matter relevant to aggravation, mitigation and sentence") to permit prosecution evidence that does not fit any specific statutory aggravating factor.

Technically, none of the factors listed in §190.3 is either aggravating or mitigating; it is the way in which the jury perceives the facts that fall within the statutory factors that determines whether the factors are to be considered by the jury as aggravating or mitigating. See People v Gallego (1990) 52 C3d 115, 208, 276 CR 679 (concurring opinion of J. Mosk). Historically, only the first three statutory factors (Pen C §190.3(a)-(c)) have been conceded to be potential aggravating factors. Factors (a), (b), and (c) can, of course, be considered mitigating, i.e., to the extent that there are any mitigating aspects to the circumstances of the primary crime or the fact that the defendant has no prior violent conduct or felony convictions. Penal Code §190.3(i) is somewhat of a hybrid in that either side may argue that the defendant's age is either aggravating or mitigating. People v Lucky, supra. The remaining factors of §190.3 are generally considered to be mitigating only. See People v Gallego (1990) 52 C3d 115, 207, 276 CR 679 (J. Mosk concurring) and cases cited therein.

Ø Note: The court is not required to define the terms "aggravating" and "mitigating." People v Hawkins (1995) 10 C4th 920, 965, 42 CR2d 636, overruled on other grounds in People v Blakeley (2000) 23 C4th 82, 89, 96 CR2d 451.

Generally, then, the prosecution is limited in its case-in-chief to introducing evidence relevant to statutory factors relating to Pen C §190.3(a), (b), or (c). The parameters of these three statutory factors (four if §190.3(i) is considered a possible aggravating factor) have occupied a substantial portion of the court's attention in this area. These factors are discussed in detail in §§54.37-54.47.

The defense is not limited to specific factors. The defense may generally introduce any evidence relevant to a defendant's background and character. People v Robertson (1982) 33 C3d 21, 188 CR 77.

Both sides may introduce any evidence on the circumstances of the primary offense. People v Robertson, supra. All guilt phase evidence is admissible in the penalty phase if the trier of fact is the same. Pen C §190.4(d). Evidence of a defendant's mental illness, such as sadistic pedophilia, may be admissible in aggravation if it relates to the "circumstance of the crime" under §190.3(a). People v Smith (2005) 35 C4th 334, 350, 25 CR3d 554. The supreme court has also stated that evidence of a defendant's lack of remorse is a universally relevant factor that is admissible in aggravation as a "circumstance of the crime" under §190.3(a). People v Caro (1988) 46 C3d 1035, 251 CR 757; People v Sully (1991) 53 C3d 1195, 1249, 283 CR 144. It is improper to argue that lack of remorse is an independent aggravating factor. People v Fierro (1991) 1 C4th 173, 3 CR2d 426. However, a prosecutor may properly comment on lack of remorse relevant to mitigation, as long as the prosecutor does not suggest that lack of remorse is an aggravating factor. People v Bonilla (2007) 41 C4th 313, 355, 60 CR3d 209. In People v Staten (2000) 24 C4th 434, 465, 101 CR2d 213, the court permitted use of the defendant's lack of remorse during trial to respond to mitigation evidence. Lack of remorse can be an aggravating factor only when it is manifest during or immediately after the capital crime. People v Schmeck (2005) 37 C4th 240, 300, 33 CR3d 397. The prosecution cannot argue that lack of remorse can be found in the defendant's claim of innocence. People v Harris (2005) 37 C4th 310, 361, 33 CR3d 509.

Ø Note: Objections to material not relevant to a statutory factor in aggravation should be made before the jury has the opportunity to hear the evidence. See People v Clair (1992) 2 C4th 629, 676, 7 CR2d 564.

Ø Warning: Evidence that is inadmissible in the prosecution's case-in-chief may become admissible as rebuttal. In re Ross (1995) 10 C4th 184, 207, 40 CR2d 544 (rebuttal evidence may be introduced that relates directly to particular incident or character trait offered on defendant's behalf). The defense should consider an in limine motion on the scope of rebuttal before offering such character evidence.

2. Statutory Factors in Aggravation

a. Circumstances of Crime and Special Circumstance (Pen C §190.3(a))

§54.37 (1) Victim Impact

Victim impact evidence may be presented to jurors in the penalty phase. Pen C §190.3(a)-(b); People v Pinholster (1992) 1 C4th 865, 958, 4 CR2d 765; People v Edwards (1991) 54 C3d 787, 833, 1 CR2d 696. See People v Kelly (2007) 42 C4th 763, 68 CR3d 531 (admission of videotape on victim's life); People v Prince (2007) 40 C4th 1179, 57 CR3d 543 (admission of videotape of interview with victim).

For example, a surviving victim's extensive hospitalization for psychiatric problems, two nervous breakdowns, suicide attempts, hysteria, phobia of entering small places, and continuing inability to work are all admissible as circumstances of the crime under Pen C §190.3(a). People v Mitcham (1992) 1 C4th 1027, 1062, 5 CR2d 230; People v Mickle (1991) 54 C3d 140, 187, 284 CR 511. A victim's mental or emotional problems that preexisted the attack are also admissible because the jury may view vulnerability of a victim as an aggravating circumstance. People v Clair (1992) 2 C4th 629, 671, 7 CR2d 564 (victim's mild cerebral palsy was admissible to show vulnerability and unnecessary brutality).

Impact on the victim's family is also allowed. People v Pollock (2004) 32 C4th 1153, 1180, 13 CR3d 34 (evidence admissible on impact is limited); People v Edwards, supra (same).

There are limits on the extent and content of victim impact evidence: Irrelevant or inflammatory rhetoric that diverts the jury's attention from their proper focus, inviting irrational, purely subjective responses, should be curtailed. People v Edwards, supra. See also People v Robinson (2005) 37 C4th 592, 644, 36 CR3d 760 (discussing limits on victim impact evidence).

Ø Note: Generic notice that the prosecution intends to rely "on the circumstances of the offense" does not give the defense adequate notice under Pen C §190.3 of the prosecution's intent to present victim impact evidence. People v Roldan (2005) 35 C4th 646, 733, 27 CR3d 360, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209; People v Wilson (2005) 36 C4th 309, 356, 30 CR3d 513.

§54.38 (2) Other Aspects of Crime

Other aspects of the charged crime that may not have been admissible in the guilt phase may be relevant to punishment and admissible in the penalty phase (Pen C §190.3(a)), as long as they do not involve "inflammatory rhetoric." People v Frank (1990) 51 C3d 718, 734, 274 CR 372. The following are examples of evidence of other aspects of the crime that may be admissible in the penalty phase:

- Testimony of friends and relatives who discovered victim's body. People v Mason (1991) 52 C3d 909, 963, 277 CR 166.
- Photographs of victims. People v Medina (1990) 51 C3d 870, 904, 274 CR 849. Life photos of victims that were held irrelevant and inadmissible in the guilt phase are generally admissible in the penalty phase because the same considerations do not apply. See People v Lucero (2000) 23 C4th 692, 714, 97 CR2d 871.
- Lack of remorse at scene of crime. People v Gonzalez (1990) 51 C3d 1179, 1231, 275 CR 729.
- Expert testimony about defendant's mental illness when related to the "circumstances of the crime." People v Smith (2005) 35 C4th 334, 352, 25 CR3d 554 (testimony about defendant's sadistic pedophilia relevant in aggravation to explain motivation for crime, history of illness that produces such a motivation, and significance of method of commission of crime).
- Mirandized statements by the defendant to the district attorney's psychiatrist are admissible at the penalty phase. People v Robertson (1989) 48 C3d 18, 48, 255 CR 631.
- Evidence of defendant's statements regarding his or her victims is highly probative. People v Payton (1992) 3 C4th 1050, 1063, 13 CR2d 526.
- Coroner's protocol to show violence used in homicide. People v Hovey (1988) 44 C3d 543, 576, 244 CR 121.
- Ability to elude major police search to show advance planning and lack of remorse. People v Edwards (1991) 54 C3d 787, 832, 1 CR2d 696.

b. Presence or Absence of "Other Crimes" Criminal Activity Involving Violence (Pen C §190.3(b))

§54.39 (1) Prior Crime Victim Impact

Evidence of the emotional effect of the defendant's crimes on victims other than the victim in the current case are admissible. People v Price (1991) 1 C4th 324, 479, 3 CR2d 106. Photographs of "other crime" victims are admissible on the same basis as photographs of victims in the primary case. People v Frank (1990) 51 C3d 718, 734, 274 CR 372. The foreseeable ongoing effects on victims of prior crimes and the vulnerability of prior crime victims are admissible. People v Mickle (1991) 54 C3d 140, 187, 284 CR 511.

© The Regents of the University of California

§54.40 (2) Mutually Exclusive

The factors in Pen C §190.3(a) and (b) are mutually exclusive. Criminal activity involving force or violence as used in §190.3(b) is limited to conduct other than the immediate circumstance for which the death penalty is being contemplated. People v Webster (1991) 54 C3d 411, 453, 285 CR 31. However, if the defendant has a prior violent felony conviction, the prosecution may introduce the fact of the conviction as a factor in aggravation under Pen C §190.3(c), and the facts underlying the conviction as prior violent criminal conduct under §190.3(b). Even an offer by the defendant to stipulate to the prior conviction will not bar introduction of the underlying circumstances under §190.3(b). People v Karis (1988) 46 C3d 612, 638, 250 CR 659; People v Brown (1988) 46 C3d 432, 250 CR 604; People v Melton (1988) 44 C3d 713, 754, 244 CR 867; People v Gates (1987) 43 C3d 1168, 240 CR 666.

§54.41 (3) Conduct Must Constitute Crime "Involving" Violence or Threatened Violence

Evidence of crimes other than the one for which the defendant is standing trial, admitted under Pen C §190.3(b), is limited to conduct that is violent or involves the threat of violence, and constitutes a crime against a person. See People v Kirkpatrick (1994) 7 C4th 988, 1016, 30 CR2d 818, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209 (injury to dogs and threats to property are not acts of violence contemplated by statute and should have been excluded). It is sufficient that the defendant merely threatened to commit a violent crime if there was no conduct. See People v Clair (1992) 2 C4th 629, 677, 7 CR2d 564 (possession of knife during burglary admissible; showed implied threat of violence); People v Brown (1988) 46 C3d 432, 472, 250 CR 604 (concurring and dissenting opinion of Broussard, J.). See, e.g., People v Walker (1988) 47 C3d 605, 639, 253 CR 863 (conduct did not constitute crime, but harmless error); People v McLain (1988) 46 C3d 97, 110, 249 CR 630 (some conduct was not crime, other conduct was not violent); People v Silva (1988) 45 C3d 604, 636, 247 CR 573 (conduct did not constitute crime).

The violent conduct need not constitute the crime; it need only be part of a crime. People v Grant (1988) 45 C3d 829, 850, 248 CR 444 (defendant displayed "shank" and threatened deputy's life; threat was not necessarily crime, but possession of shank in jail was; threat of violence was admissible).

All crimes committed during a continuous course of criminal activity that involves force and violence are admissible, even if some portions are nonviolent. People v Raley (1992) 2 C4th 870, 907, 8 CR2d 678; People v Fierro (1991) 1 C4th 173, 231, 3 CR2d 426. Underlying crimes are admissible to give context to a defendant's subsequent violent episodes of resistance. People v Livaditis (1992) 2 C4th 759, 777, 9 CR2d 72. If the defendant aided and abetted another who committed the violent act, then the defendant's act "involved" violence. People v Hayes (1990) 52 C3d 577, 633, 276 CR 874.

The facts of a defendant's prior violent crime are admissible even if the defendant only pleaded guilty to a nonviolent crime as part of a plea bargain. People v Kaurish (1990) 52 C3d 648, 703, 276 CR 788.

Evidence of a coparticipant's conduct concerning the other crime is admissible to put the defendant's conduct into context. People v Bacigalupo (1991) 1 C4th 103, 136, 2 CR2d 335, vacated on other grounds sub nom Bacigalupo v California (1992) 506 US 802, 121 L Ed 2d 5, 113 S Ct 32.

"Other crimes" evidence must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. People v Robertson (1982) 33 C3d 21, 188 CR 77. See also People v Welch (1999) 20 C4th 701, 766, 85 CR2d 203; People v Phillips (1985) 41 C3d 29, 222 CR 127.

Evidence of other unadjudicated violent criminal activity is admissible even if prosecution for that crime is barred by the statute of limitations. People v Huggins (2006) 38 C4th 175, 245, 41 CR3d 593.

Ø Note: Violation of Pen C §190.3(b) is sometimes called Boyd error, after People v Boyd (1985) 38 C3d 762, 215 CR 1. So far, the California Supreme Court has not reversed a penalty verdict for Boyd error alone. People v Pinholster (1992) 1 C4th 865, 962, 4 CR2d 765.

§54.42 (4) Not Limited to Particular Time Frame

Although limited to violent conduct constituting a crime, evidence under Pen C §190.3(b) is not barred by the statute of limitations, remoteness in time, or having occurred after the instant crime. People v DeSantis (1992) 2 C4th 1198, 1252, 9 CR2d 628 (statute of limitations no bar); People v Burton (1989) 48 C3d 843, 862, 258 CR 184, and People v Champion (1995) 9 C4th 879, 936, 39 CR2d 547 (juvenile conduct); People v Robertson (1989) 48 C3d 18, 43, 255 CR 631 (offense barred by statute of limitations still aggravating); People v Grant (1988) 45 C3d 829, 859, 248 CR 444, and People v Hovey (1988) 44 C3d 543, 577, 244 CR 121 (in both cases, "other crime" occurred after "current" homicide); People v Heishman (1988) 45 C3d 147, 192, 246 CR 673 (conduct may be at any time).

On retrial, offenses may be used that were not used in the first trial. People v Robertson (1989) 48 C3d 18, 46, 255 CR 631.

The trial court lacks discretion under Pen C §190.3 to exclude remote prior crimes. Remoteness goes only to the weight of the evidence. People v Frank (1990) 51 C3d 718, 729, 274 CR 372.

© The Regents of the University of California

§54.43 (5) Barred by "Acquittal"

Evidence of a prior offense for which the defendant was prosecuted and acquitted is not admissible. Pen C §190.3; People v Heishman (1988) 45 C3d 147, 246 CR 673. The following, however, are admissible:

- Crimes previously dismissed under a negotiated plea. People v Caro (1988) 46 C3d 1035, 1058, 251 CR 757; People v Heishman, supra.
- Offenses reduced to nonviolent felony or misdemeanor convictions. People v Melton (1988) 44 C3d 713, 754, 244 CR 867.
- Cases dismissed under Welf & I C §1772. People v Pride (1992) 3 C4th 195, 257, 10 CR2d 636.
- Twice-dismissed prior violent crimes. People v Medina (1990) 51 C3d 870, 907, 274 CR 849.
- "Other crimes" on which there has been a mistrial. People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 390, 279 CR 780.
- Evidence of a criminal act, despite some alternative innocent explanation. People v Mason (1991) 52 C3d 909, 956, 277 CR 166.

Whether a defendant was acquitted of a crime committed in another state is determined under California law. People v Bacigalupo (1991) 1 C4th 103, 133, 2 CR2d 335, vacated on other grounds sub nom Bacigalupo v California (1992) 506 US 802, 121 L Ed 2d 5, 113 S Ct 32. Violation of another state's statute is sufficient to meet Pen C §190.3(b)'s "criminal activity" requirement even if the conduct is not criminal in California. People v Pensinger (1991) 52 C3d 1210, 1260, 278 CR 640.

§54.44 (6) Fifth Amendment

A defendant with another murder prosecution pending that is being used in the instant case under Pen C §190.3(b) may not have a First Amendment right not to be cross-examined if the matter is relevant. People v Bonin (1988) 46 C3d 659, 250 CR 687, overruled on other grounds in People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 823, 72 CR2d 656.

Ø Note: There is a split in authority about whether a defendant who testifies only at the penalty phase has a Fifth Amendment right not to be questioned about his or her guilt; the California Supreme Court has acknowledged this issue but has yet to resolve it. See People v Monterroso (2004) 34 C4th 743, 768, 22 CR3d 1 (split in authority noted; prosecutor withdrew questions about guilt and no prejudice to defendant).

§54.45 (7) Discretion to Exclude Evidence

The court does not have the discretion under Evid C §352 to completely exclude other crimes evidence that is admissible under Pen C §190.3(b). People v Visciotti (1992) 2 C4th 1, 68, 5 CR2d 495. The court has discretion only concerning the manner in which this prior crime evidence is offered. People v Bacigalupo (1991) 1 C4th 103, 140, 2 CR2d 335, vacated on other grounds sub nom Bacigalupo v California (1992) 506 US 802, 121 L Ed 2d 5, 113 S Ct 32.

Ø Note: Failure to object to other crimes evidence may result in a finding of harmless error. See, e.g., People v Sheldon (1989) 48 C3d 935, 951, 258 CR 242.

§54.46 c. Prior Felony Convictions (Pen C §190.3(c))

Prior felony convictions are admissible in the penalty phase. Pen C §190.3(c). The prior felony conviction, and not merely the act, must have preceded the instant capital offense. People v Webster (1991) 54 C3d 411, 453, 285 CR 31. A prior conviction incurred by a no contest plea is admissible. People v Adcox (1988) 47 C3d 207, 254, 253 CR 55.

Proof of felony priors involving violent conduct under §190.3(c) often overlaps with Pen C §190(b). People v Benson (1990) 52 C3d 754, 787, 276 CR 827; People v Robertson (1989) 48 C3d 18, 45, 255 CR 631. An offer to stipulate to a felony conviction may preclude its admission. See discussion in §24.25. If the prior involves violence, however, a stipulation will not preclude admission of the circumstances of relevant criminal activity involving violence for purposes of Pen C §190.3(b). People v Brown (1988) 46 C3d 432, 445, 250 CR 604. The circumstances surrounding a prior conviction for a nonviolent felony are inadmissible at the penalty phase. People v Livaditis (1992) 2 C4th 759, 776, 9 CR2d 72.

Juvenile felony adjudications are inadmissible; however, the underlying facts may be admitted under §190.3(b). People v Burton (1989) 48 C3d 843, 258 CR 184.

A foreign felony conviction is admissible even if not a felony in California. People v Bacigalupo (1991) 1 C4th 103, 139, 2 CR2d 335, vacated on other grounds sub nom Bacigalupo v California (1992) 506 US 802, 121 L Ed 2d 5, 113 S Ct 32. A prior conviction from another state that was set aside is not admissible. See Johnson v Mississippi (1988) 486 US 578, 100 L Ed 2d 575, 108 S Ct 1981 (death judgment had to be reexamined because prior conviction from other state that was introduced as aggravating factor was set aside by other state's courts following death verdict).

§54.47 d. Age of Defendant (Pen C §190.3(i))

The age of a defendant at the time of the crime (Pen C §190.3(i)) is neither aggravating nor mitigating "but is used in the statute as a metonym for any age-related matter suggested by the evidence or by common experience." People v Mendoza (2000) 24 C4th 130, 190, 99 CR2d 485.

§54.48 3. Rebuttal; Cross-Examination

Rebuttal. Once a defendant places his or her character in issue, the prosecutor may, through either cross-examination or rebuttal, present a more balanced picture of the defendant's personality. Such cross-examination or rebuttal need not meet statutory categories for aggravating evidence. People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 883, 277 CR 122. For example, if the defendant introduces evidence of his or her work record, the prosecution can rebut it with evidence of unemployment. People v Anderson (1990) 52 C3d 453, 475, 276 CR 356. Evidence of gang membership is admissible to rebut participation in Little League. People v Fierro (1991) 1 C4th 173, 238, 3 CR2d 426. See also People v Raley (1992) 2 C4th 870, 912, 8 CR2d 678; People v Mitcham (1992) 1 C4th 1027, 1079, 5 CR2d 230. Evidence of the defendant's future dangerousness, or of prison conditions, is admissible to rebut defense evidence of the defendant's anticipated future prison performance. People v Malone (1988) 47 C3d 1, 31, 252 CR 525. See also People v Welch (1999) 20 C4th 701, 85 CR2d 203 (argument proper if based on evidence of past crimes admitted under one or more statutory factors in aggravation); People v Millwee (1998) 18 C4th 96, 74 CR2d 418.

The limitations of Evid C §1102 do not apply to penalty phase rebuttal evidence. People v Visciotti (1992) 2 C4th 1, 69 n37, 5 CR2d 495.

Rebuttal must be specific and relate directly to the character trait that the defendant offers on his or her own behalf. People v Bacigalupo (1991) 1 C4th 103, 141, 2 CR2d 335, vacated on other grounds sub nom Bacigalupo v California (1992) 506 US 802, 121 L Ed 2d 5, 113 S Ct 32. For example, if a defense expert has testified on cross-examination that a defendant is not a sociopath, the prosecutor may offer evidence that the defendant is a sociopath and that sociopaths do not change. People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 881, 277 CR 122. When the defense presented evidence of a substandard upbringing, that evidence was properly rebutted by evidence that as a juvenile the defendant was cruel and callous, which suggested that intrinsic evil and not external circumstances governed his behavior. People v Thornton (2007) 41 C4th 391, 458, 61 CR3d 461.

Evidence that could be presented in the prosecution's case-in-chief should not be held instead for rebuttal. People v Raley (1992) 2 C4th 870, 914, 8 CR2d 678 (rule stated, but no evidence of "sandbagging" and little evidence that rebuttal evidence would have been admissible in case-in-chief).

The prosecutor may counter a defendant's evidence of the security of prison with rebuttal on the possibility of escape (People v Kaurish (1990) 52 C3d 648, 710, 276 CR 788), and on future violence in prison (People v Rowland (1992) 4 C4th 238, 275, 14 CR2d 377).

> Ø Note: It would be misconduct in this situation to also argue that the risk of escape is an additional reason for death. People v Kaurish, supra.

Cross-examination. It is proper to ask a witness who has testified to a defendant's good behavior whether the defendant is dangerous. People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 210 n11, 279 CR 720, disapproved on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394. See also People v Rowland (1992) 4 C4th 238, 273, 14 CR2d 377.

The prosecution may elicit evidence of a defendant's lack of remorse. The statutory basis for this is not clear, but the court has said that the presence or absence of remorse is relevant. People v Wright (1990) 52 C3d 367, 433, 276 CR 731; People v Gallego (1990) 52 C3d 115, 197, 276 CR 679. Whether a prosecutor may inquire into a defendant's guilt when the defendant has testified only at the penalty phase remains an open question. See People v Monterroso (2004) 34 C4th 743, 768, 22 CR3d 1 (split in authority noted; prosecutor withdrew questions about guilt and no prejudice to defendant). See also §54.44 on Fifth Amendment issues at the penalty phase.

§54.49 D. Evidence in Mitigation

The jury must be allowed to consider in the penalty phase any aspect of a defendant's character or record and any of the circumstances of the offense that the defendant proffers as a basis for a sentence less than death. Mills v Maryland (1988) 486 US 367, 373, 100 L Ed 2d 384, 393, 108 S Ct 1860; Eddings v Oklahoma (1982) 455 US 104, 121, 71 L Ed 2d 1, 15, 102 S Ct 869. Any barrier, whether instructional, evidentiary, or statutory, that precludes a juror from considering relevant mitigating factors is constitutional error. See Skipper v South Carolina (1986) 476 US 1, 4, 90 L Ed 2d 1, 6, 106 S Ct 1669. See also Smith v Texas (2004) 543 US 37, 160 L Ed 2d 303, 125 S Ct 400; Penry v Johnson (2001) 532 US 782, 150 L Ed 2d 9, 121 S Ct 1910.

Mitigating evidence about a defendant's character or record need not be tied to the offense. See People v Mickle (1991) 54 C3d 140, 193, 284 CR 511 (evidence of what could and should have been done to treat defendant's pedophilia and safeguard public was properly admissible as mitigating defendant's moral culpability; harmless error, however, to fail to admit evidence of state's improper diagnosis and treatment); People v Whitt (1990) 51 C3d 620, 647, 274 CR 252 (question by defense counsel to defendant, "Do you want to live?" is proper); People v Lucero (1988) 44 C3d 1006, 245 CR 185 (failure to admit evidence of posttraumatic stress disorder; reversed).

Testimony that predicts a defendant's positive future behavior is admissible. People v Fudge (1994) 7 C4th 1075, 1117, 31 CR2d 321 (harmless error to exclude testimony of retired warden concerning defendant's probability of success as life prisoner); People v McLain (1988) 46 C3d 97, 108, 249 CR 630 (harmless error for trial court to bar testimony showing that defendant's future prison behavior would be good); People v Lucero, supra (error to exclude doctor's testimony that defendant would not be threat in prison and would make good adjustment). See also People v Ruiz (1988) 44 C3d 589, 621, 244 CR 200 (testimony by minister that defendant would lead moral and religious life in prison properly excluded because minister lacked academic credentials to give that assessment). Evidence of the opinions of family and friends of the defendant on the appropriateness of the death penalty are admissible as bearing on the defendant's overall character and humanity. People v Mickle (1991) 54 C3d 140, 194, 284 CR 511; People v Heishman (1988) 45 C3d 147, 194, 246 CR 673. The defense may elicit testimony from a defendant's family member or close friend stating the witness's opinion that the defendant deserves to live. People v Williams (2008) 43 C4th 584, 644, 75 CR3d 691.

The trial court may exclude evidence of the effect on the defendant's family of the death penalty. People v Sanders (1995) 11 C4th 475, 545, 46 CR2d 751 (members of defendant's family were offered as witnesses; court held such evidence irrelevant); People v Beeler (1995) 9 C4th 953, 39 CR2d 607 (psychologist was offered on issue). The court in People v Ochoa (1998) 19 C4th 353, 454, 79 CR2d 408, held that testimony regarding sympathy for the defendant's family is not admissible, although family members may offer testimony of the impact of an execution on them if by so doing they illuminate some positive quality of the defendant's background or character. A defendant may offer evidence that the defendant is loved by family members and that they want the defendant to live.

Evidence offered in mitigation that may be properly excluded includes*:*

- Hearsay doctor's report on defendant's alleged brain damage. People v Wright (1990) 52 C3d 367, 430, 276 CR 731.
- "Day-in-the-life" video of handicapped life-without-parole inmate. People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 876, 277 CR 122.
- Evidence of statistical information on number of death penalty verdicts. People v Wright, supra.
- Evidence of wrongful executions. People v Alcala (1992) 4 C4th 742, 807, 15 CR2d 432; People v Pride (1992) 3 C4th 195, 261, 10 CR2d 636.
- Sentences of coparticipants. Beardslee v Woodford (9th Cir 2004) 358 F3d 560, 579; People v Dyer (1988) 45 C3d 26, 69, 246 CR 209.
- Whether codefendant's sentence was received through negotiated plea. People v Malone (1988) 47 C3d 1, 53, 252 CR 525.
- Evidence of how death penalty is carried out and of prison conditions. People v Brown (2003) 31 C4th 518, 575,

3 CR3d 145 (evidence of security condition of persons serving life without parole); People v Sanders (1995) 11 C4th 475, 555, 46 CR2d 751 (court prohibited argument on life sentence for Charles Manson, and vivid account of manner of execution of others); People v Fudge (1994) 7 C4th 1075, 1123, 31 CR2d 321 (evidence of conditions during life in prison without possibility of parole, and of performance of execution properly excluded). But see People v Thompson (1988) 45 C3d 86, 138, 246 CR 245 (although such evidence is inadmissible, these are proper subjects for argument); People v Grant (1988) 45 C3d 829, 860, 248 CR 444 (argument proper, but improper for defense counsel to read newspaper account of execution to jury).

- Evidence of deterrent effect that death penalty does or does not have. People v Thompson (1988) 45 C3d 86, 131, 246 CR 245.
- Cost of life without possibility of parole versus cost of death penalty. People v Thompson, supra (but defendant is entitled, on request, to instruction that relative cost should not be considered).
- Evidence of claimed misconduct by prosecutor or plea bargain offer made by prosecutor. People v Zapien (1993) 4 C4th 929, 988, 17 CR2d 122; People v Cook (2007) 40 C4th 1334, 1362, 58 CR3d 340.
- Testimony from penalty phase investigator not qualified as an expert on psychological impact of defendant's upbringing on his current behavior or how defendant would actually adjust to life in prison. People v Watson (2008) 43 C4th 652, 690, 76 CR3d 208.
- Hearsay testimony by defendant that was not subject to cross-examination. People v Whitt (1990) 51 C3d 620, 644, 274 CR 252 (defendant was not allowed to present his own Death Row interview, because it was hearsay testimony without cross-examination). Such testimony may properly be excluded despite the Supreme Court's ruling in Green v Georgia (1979) 442 US 95, 97, 60 L Ed 2d 738, 741, 99 S Ct 2150, that relevant hearsay evidence offered by a defendant at the penalty phase should be allowed into evidence. People v Edwards (1991) 54 C3d 787, 837, 1 CR2d 696 (allowing another to testify for defendant to avoid cross-examination is not permissible; hearsay statements made by defendant before crime about his attitudes toward children, however, may have been admissible if not cumulative).

There is no right of allocution at the penalty phase in California. People v Keenan (1988) 46 C3d 478, 511, 250 CR 550 (acknowledging contrary authority from another state). See also People v Brown (1988) 45 C3d 1247, 1260, 248 CR 817 (error to allow defendant to testify at penalty phase about his life and deny crime, and be subject to cross-examination only about his life, not crime); People v Carter (2005) 36 C4th 1114, 1272, 32 CR3d 759 (no error in denying defendant's request to plead for mercy during penalty phase without being cross-examined). But see Boardman v Estelle (9th Cir 1992) 957 F2d 1523 (state defendant has constitutional right of allocution at sentencing; not death penalty case). See also Hitchcock v Dugger (1987) 481 US 393, 95 L Ed 2d 347, 107 S Ct 1821.

The trial court has no sua sponte duty to instruct the jury that unanimity is not required for consideration of mitigating factors. The only requirement for unanimity is for the verdict. People v Phillips (2000) 22 C4th 226, 238, 92 CR2d 58; People v Breaux (1991) 1 C4th 281, 314, 3 CR2d 81.

§54.50 E. Defense Counsel's Obligations at Penalty Phase

Defense counsel may properly accede to a defendant's wishes and not present mitigating evidence. Defense counsel, however, is still obligated to investigate mitigating evidence and to advise the defendant of its existence. People v Deere (1991) 53 C3d 705, 716, 280 CR 424 (overruled prior cases holding otherwise); People v Sanders (1990) 51 C3d 471, 526, 273 CR 537; People v Bloom (1989) 48 C3d 1194, 1223, 259 CR 669. See also In re Andrews (2002) 28 C4th 1234, 124 CR2d 473 (limits on counsel's penalty phase investigation reasonable in light of defendant's desire not to have family involved and inconclusive nature of mitigating evidence); People v Lang (1989) 49 C3d 991, 1029, 264 CR 386 (no error for defense attorney, at defendant's request, not to call particular witness during penalty phase). Failure to adequately investigate and to present mitigation are often major topics for postconviction appellate counsel. See, e.g., Wiggins v Smith (2003) 539 US 510, 156 L Ed 2d 471, 123 S Ct 2527 (failure to investigate and present mitigating evidence deprived defendant of Sixth Amendment right to counsel); Correll v Ryan (9th Cir 2008) 539 F3d 938, 942 (failure to investigate defendant's background was deficient performance; failure to present mitigating evidence at penalty phase was ineffective assistance not justified as "strategic choice"); Allen v Woodford (9th Cir 2005) 395 F3d 979, 985 (although representation at penalty phase fell below objective standard of reasonableness, there was no reasonable possibility verdict would have been otherwise because of horrendous nature of crimes); Stankewitz v Woodford (9th Cir 2004) 365 F3d 706, 722 (failure to investigate and present evidence of childhood abuse and deprivation fell below constitutionally acceptable standard); Turner v Calderon (9th Cir 2002) 281 F3d 851 (petitioner entitled to evidentiary hearing in federal district court on trial counsel's failure to investigate mitigating evidence); Silva v Woodford (9th Cir 2002) 279 F3d 825 (defense counsel has duty to investigate potential mitigation evidence, including family background, mental health, and medical history even if client clearly states he or she does not want family members called to testify in mitigation at trial).

In In re Lucas (2004) 33 C4th 682, 16 CR3d 331, the supreme court, citing Wiggins v Smith, supra, granted a writ of habeas corpus and vacated a death sentence on finding that defense counsel had not adequately investigated available evidence in mitigation for possible use in the penalty phase. Counsel's obligation to search for mitigating evidence remains even if the client has not been truthful about the facts. Likewise, even when the defendant and family members represented that no affirmative evidence in mitigation was available, defense counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to review the court file relating to the defendant's prior conviction for rape and assault when defense counsel knew that the prosecution would probably rely on priors as evidence in aggravation; review of that case file would have disclosed potentially mitigating factors. Rompilla v Beard (2005) 545 US 374, 162 L Ed 2d 360, 125 S Ct 2456.

Ø Note: A pro per defendant may properly choose to stand mute, unless it is in an effort to manipulate or coerce the court or to force error. People v Clark (1992) 3 C4th 41, 114, 10 CR2d 554 (proper for court to revoke right of self-representation).

§54.51 F. Penalty Phase Argument

In capital cases, two counsel on each side have the right to argue. Pen C §1095. Both defense counsel may argue even if the prosecutor waives rebuttal argument. People v Bonin (1988) 46 C3d 659, 691, 250 CR 687, overruled on other grounds in People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 823, 72 CR2d 656. Presumably, a second prosecutor could also argue, although a single prosecutor is not necessarily entitled to argue twice. See People v Payton (1992) 3 C4th 1050, 1072, 13 CR2d 526 (prohibited prosecutor from arguing in rebuttal).

The arguments of the attorneys involved, particularly on the prosecution side, are repeatedly used by the California Supreme Court in determining whether errors are prejudicial. See, e.g., People v Sanders (1990) 51 C3d 471, 521, 273 CR 537 (jury's consideration of invalid special circumstances not prejudicial, because prosecutor did not emphasize them). However, courts have also held that the prosecutor's argument should not be given undue weight in deciding whether the jury was misled. See, e.g., People v Gonzalez (1990) 51 C3d 1179, 1224 n21, 275 CR 729. See also Boyde v California (1990) 494 US 370, 384, 108 L Ed 2d 316, 331, 110 S Ct 1190 (prosecutor's erroneous arguments should not be assumed to affect jurors as much as instructions); Brown v Payton (2005) 544 US 133, 161 L Ed 2d 334, 125 S Ct 1432, 1441 (trial judge should not have permitted prosecutor to argue meaning of mitigation instructions, but California Supreme Court's conclusion that jury properly considered and rejected postcrime character evidence as mitigating was still reasonable).

Some commonly argued issues include the following:

Absence of statutory mitigating factors. The prosecution may argue only that mitigating factors do not provide a basis for a life sentence, because they are not shown by the evidence. It is improper to suggest that absence of these factors constitutes aggravation. People v Walker (1988) 47 C3d 605, 643, 253 CR 863; People v Davenport (1985) 41 C3d 247, 288, 221 CR 794.

Absence of nonstatutory mitigating factors. The prosecution may argue that the jury should not find mitigation based on remorse, but it is improper to suggest that absence of remorse is an aggravating circumstance. People v Fierro (1991) 1 C4th 173, 3 CR2d 426; People v Dyer (1988) 45 C3d 26, 81, 246 CR 209; People v Ruiz (1988) 44 C3d 589, 622, 244 CR 200. See People v Ochoa (2001) 26 C4th 398, 448, 110 CR2d 324 (supreme court approved prosecutor's argument that defendant expressed no remorse for behavior and was proud of killings). The court found this argument proper under Pen C §190.3, factor (a), to which the prosecutor expressly referred. Section 190.3, factor (a) authorizes the jury to consider the circumstances of the crime when "the defendant's refusal to show any remorse in the context of the murder is an aggravating factor."

Age of defendant (Pen C §190.3(i)). The prosecutor may argue that age is aggravating, and the defense may argue that it is mitigating. People v Livaditis (1992) 2 C4th 759, 785, 9 CR2d 72; People v Edwards (1991) 54 C3d 787, 844, 1 CR2d 696.

Future dangerousness. Argument on future dangerousness is proper. The holding of People v Murtishaw (1981) 29 C3d 733, 175 CR 738, on the perils of dealing with future dangerousness has largely been limited to the presentation of expert evidence. The California Supreme Court does not believe that argument on future dangerousness carries the same potential for prejudice that the presentation of expert testimony entails. People v Dyer (1988) 45 C3d 26, 81, 246 CR 209. For other examples of permissible prosecution argument, see People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 882, 277 CR 122; People v Taylor (1990) 52 C3d 719, 749, 276 CR 391.

The defense may argue that the defendant does not present a danger in prison and that society would be protected because the defendant has not committed any violent acts while in custody. See People v Harris (2005) 37 C4th 310, 357, 33 CR3d 509.

Defendant's demeanor in court. If the defendant has put his or her character in evidence at the penalty phase, the prosecutor may argue demeanor in court even if the defendant did not testify. People v Heishman (1988) 45 C3d 147, 197, 246 CR 673. However, if the defendant testifies to his or her innocence in the penalty phase, the prosecution cannot argue that such testimony constitutes an aggravating factor. People v Kennedy (2005) 36 C4th 595, 635, 31 CR3d 160.

Diminishing juror's personal responsibility. Arguments seeking to diminish each juror's sense of personal responsibility for the death penalty decision are improper. Caldwell v Mississippi (1985) 472 US 320, 86 L Ed 2d 231, 105 S Ct 2633; People v Farmer (1989) 47 C3d 888, 928, 254 CR 508, overruled on other grounds in People v Waidla (2000) 22 C4th 690, 724 n6, 94 CR2d 396 (penalty reversed; prosecutor had argued, "You do not decide life or death. The law does that"); People v Milner (1988) 45 C3d 227, 257, 246 CR 713 (penalty reversed; prosecutor told jurors not to "shoulder the burden of personal responsibility" and encouraged them to "hide" behind the law); People v Schmeck (2005) 37 C4th 240, 263, 33 CR3d 397 (prosecutor's statement in voir dire that a juror's vote was a "recommendation to the court that the defendant should be executed at some time in the future" was error, but cured by court's dismissal of juror for cause). See also People v Poggi (1988) 45 C3d 306, 339, 246 CR 886 (prosecutor argued that defendant's really important trial would come after his death, when he would have to face his victims and explain his conduct to God; error, but not prejudicial, and defense did not object). See also People v Fierro (1991) 1 C4th 173, 247, 3 CR2d 426; People v Anderson (1990) 52 C3d 453, 479, 276 CR 356; People v Benson (1990) 52 C3d 754, 794, 276 CR 827.

Possibility of defendant's eventual release. It is improper to draw the jury's attention to the possibility that the defendant might some day be paroled if not sentenced to death. People v Lucky (1988) 45 C3d 259, 292, 247 CR 1; People v Hovey (1988) 44 C3d 543, 581, 244 CR 121. The jury should not be invited to speculate on future unpredictable events like release, escape, pardon, parole, or commutation. People v Mitcham (1992) 1 C4th 1027, 1077, 5 CR2d 230.

Double argument of statutory sentencing factors. Because the jury may not consider the facts of the crime under both Pen C §190.3(a) and (b), it is improper to argue the facts under both subsections. People v Hernandez (1988) 47 C3d 315, 358, 253 CR 199.

Victim impact. Victim impact argument is proper as long as it is relevant and is not inflammatory. People v Raley (1992) 2 C4th 870, 914, 8 CR2d 678. See also People v Beardslee (1991) 53 C3d 68, 113, 279 CR 276. In People v Taylor (2001) 26 C4th 1155, 1172, 113 CR2d 827, victim impact for other crimes was limited to such injuries as related directly to the circumstances of the capital crime.

Arguing that death is mandatory. The prosecution cannot argue that death is "mandatory" if aggravating circumstances substantially outweigh mitigating circumstances. People v Edelbacher (1989) 47 C3d 983, 254 CR 586 (death penalty reversed). It is proper, however, to make that statement in argument if the prosecutor makes it clear that a death verdict cannot be returned until after the jury has subjectively assigned the weight it deems appropriate to the aggravating and mitigating factors. People v Clark (1992) 3 C4th 41, 164, 10 CR2d 554. See also Boyde v California (1990) 494 US 370, 108 L Ed 2d 316, 110 S Ct 1190.

Deterrence. Although it is not proper to argue the general deterrent effect of capital punishment (see People v Love (1961) 56 C2d 720, 731, 16 CR 777, overruled on other grounds in People v Morse (1964) 60 C2d 631, 637, 36 CR 201), it is acceptable to argue that the death penalty would stop this defendant from more violence (People v Bell (1989) 49 C3d 502, 549, 262 CR 1).

Religious references. "An appeal to the religious authority in support of the death penalty is improper because in tends to diminish the jury's personal responsibility and encourages them to believe a higher law may apply over the jury instructions." People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 836, 72 CR2d 656. See *People v Welch (*1999) 20 C4th 701, 761, 85 CR2d 203, in which the court found that the prosecutor's use of biblical passages "in part to assuage the jury's sense of personal responsibility," followed by arguments for the jury to imagine the defendant meeting the victims in an afterlife, was misconduct, though harmless under the facts of that case. See also People v Slaughter (2002) 27 C4th 1187, 1209, 120 CR2d 477; People v Roybal (1998) 19 C4th 481, 519, 79 CR2d 487.

Lingering doubt. Counsel may urge to the jury that the defendant is possibly innocent as a factor in mitigation, but there is no constitutional right to a jury instruction that the jury must consider as a factor in mitigation any lingering doubt they may have about the defendant's intent or overall guilt. People v Earp (1999) 20 C4th 826, 903, 85 CR2d 857. See People v Gay (2008) 42 C4th 1195, 1217, 73 CR3d 442 (defense can introduce evidence to urge possible innocence of defendant as mitigating factor).

§54.52 G. Penalty Phase Instructions

Instructions have been a major subject of many California Supreme Court death penalty decisions. In many of these cases, death judgments were upheld over defense argument that the instructions were misleading or incomplete. However, the supreme court has often upheld the judgment only after considering all the circumstances of the trial, including the arguments of counsel, and concluding that the jury had actually understood their function despite allegedly deficient instructions. See, e.g., People v Bonin (1988) 46 C3d 659, 707, 250 CR 687, overruled on other grounds in People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 823, 72 CR2d 656. Hence, counsel must be careful when considering the precedential value of these opinions. Often they do not stand for the proposition that a particular instruction should or should not be given but that, under the circumstances of the case and given the arguments of counsel, that particular jury was not misled.

It is error under California law to mislead jurors on the scope of their sentencing discretion. It is not error of federal constitutional dimensions. People v Mickey (1991) 54 C3d 612, 699, 286 CR 801. In deciding whether jurors in any given case were in fact misled, the court examines the whole record and in particular counsels' arguments. People v Mickey, supra. The court relies primarily on the catchall "modified" factor (k) instruction (Pen C §190.3(k)), required to be given prospectively to all juries by People v Easley (1983) 34 C3d 858, 878, 196 CR 309, to find that there was either no error in refusing to give a particular instruction or that the refusal was harmless. See, e.g., People v Kaurish (1990) 52 C3d 648, 705, 276 CR 788 (instructing jury that it might consider any other aspect of defendant's character or record that defendant proffered complies with requirement that jury may not be precluded from considering any mitigating factor).

It is proper for the jury to be instructed on all statutory mitigating and aggravating factors. The court need not limit the list in Pen C §190.3 to evidence presented during the penalty phase. People v Caro (1988) 46 C3d 1035, 1061, 251 CR 757. When future dangerousness is at issue, and the only sentencing alternatives are death or life without parole, due process requires the trial court to instruct the jury that the defendant who receives a life sentence will not be eligible for parole. Kelly v South Carolina (2002) 534 US 246, 151 L Ed 2d 670, 122 S Ct 726. In People v Benavides (2005) 35 C4th 69, 24 CR3d 507, the jury submitted a note asking the trial court: "Life without the possibility of parole —how permanent is it? Can it be overturned by legal changes? (other than appeal.) Is there a chance for him to walk out of prison? EVER!! EXPLANATION?" The California Supreme Court approved the trial court's rereading of the instruction it had previously given: "A sentence of life without the possibility of parole means that Mr. Benavides will remain in state prison for the rest of his life and will not be paroled at any time. A sentence of death means that Mr. Benavides will be executed in state prison."

Factors on which prosecutors may rely are often intuitively seen as relevant by the jury. The same is not always true of factors on which the defense relies. Many jurors may not realize that factors in a defendant's background, such as kindness to relatives or a mild emotional disturbance that is unassociated with the present offense, are also factors that may be relied on to support a life verdict. These factors, and many others, are not specifically listed in §190.3. Defense counsel must be prepared with special instructions to ensure that the jury understands the legitimacy and importance of these factors.

Defense counsel should be sure to properly word instructions so that the court does not refuse them, e.g., as argumentative. The California Supreme Court has been slow to find error based on the trial court's refusal of defense-requested instructions, or that any error in such refusal was prejudicial. The court has relied on traditional maxims: a defendant is not entitled to a particular instruction if other instructions correctly state the law (see, e.g., People v Cox (1991) 53 C3d 618, 673, 280 CR 692, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209); requested instructions must be correct in the law and applicable on the record (see, e.g., People v Benson (1990) 52 C3d 754, 807, 276 CR 827); and a criminal defendant does not have a right to an instruction that invites the jury to draw favorable inferences from the evidence (People v Mickey (1991) 54 C3d 612, 697, 286 CR 801).

In People v Seaton (2001) 26 C4th 598, 688, 110 CR2d 441, the supreme court reviewed the instructional duties as follows:

> A trial court need not instruct the jury that the prosecutor must prove all aggravating factors beyond a reasonable doubt [Citations]; the court need not instruct that if aggravating and mitigating factors are evenly balanced, the jury must return a judgment of life imprisonment without possibility of parole [Citations]; the court need not instruct that the jury may decline to impose the death penalty even when there are no mitigating circumstances or the factors in aggravation outweigh those in mitigation [Citations]; the court need not explain to the jury which factors are mitigating and which are aggravating or delete irrelevant mitigating factors [Citations]; the factors listed in section 190.3 are not unconstitutionally vague or arbitrary, and do not result in unreliable sentences [Citations]; the jury is not required to return unanimous, written findings [Citations]; and the standard instruction on the factors in aggravation and mitigation (given in this case) is not unconstitutionally vague and misleading.

The trial court has no obligation to instruct the jury that certain factors can only be considered as mitigating factors. People v Hillhouse (2002) 27 C4th 469, 509, 117 CR2d 45. It is error, however, for the court to instruct the jury that it can consider each of the 11 statutory factors (see Pen C §190.3(a)-(k)) as either aggravating or mitigating. People v Hillhouse, supra.

For general discussion of instructions, see chap 32.

XII. POSTVERDICT MOTIONS IN CAPITAL CASES

§54.53 A. Trial Judge Must Review Death Penalty Verdict

The trial judge must review the evidence and, on his or her own motion, evaluate the propriety of a death verdict. Pen C §190.4(e). If the judge decides that the verdict is not supported by the law or the evidence, he or she must set aside the verdict and enter a sentence of life without parole. Pen C §190.4. The judge's reasons for the ruling must be recorded and may be reviewed by the prosecution on appeal. Pen C §§190.4(e), 1238(a)(6). The prosecution's appeal is heard by the court of appeal; an appeal direct to the supreme court occurs only when a death sentence is pronounced. Pen C §1239. However, if the prosecution wins reinstatement of the death penalty, the defendant's entire appeal is then transferred to the California Supreme Court under the mandatory provisions discussed in §54.59.

The trial judge does not make an independent de novo penalty determination but independently reweighs the evidence, then determines whether the weight of the evidence supports the jury verdict. People v Mickey (1991) 54 C3d 612, 704, 286 CR 801. The judge is not required to "justify" a death verdict. People v Anderson (1990) 52 C3d 453, 484, 276 CR 356.

No comparison between sentences given codefendants is required. People v Mincey (1992) 2 C4th 408, 480, 6 CR2d 822.

When reviewing a jury's decision under §190.4, the court may rely only on evidence that was properly before the jury.

> Ø Note: Because the trial court is limited to the evidence that was before the jury, counsel cannot present new evidence and therefore cannot be faulted for not doing so. See People v Dunkle (2005) 36 C4th 861, 931, 32 CR3d 23, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209.

The court should thus not consider additional evidence offered in the presentence probation report or communications from the victim's family that discuss the impact of the crime on them. People v Williams (1988) 45 C3d 1268, 1327, 248 CR 834. A number of cases have found that a trial court's review of a probation report before ruling on this motion was error, but harmless. See, e.g., People v Beeler (1995) 9 C4th 953, 1000, 39 CR2d 607; People v Fudge (1994) 7 C4th 1075, 1127, 31 CR2d 321. See also People v Lewis (2004) 33 C4th 214, 224, 14 CR3d 566 (defendant not entitled to present live testimony).

The court's failure to state the reasons for denying a defendant's automatic application for modification is error. People v Heishman (1988) 45 C3d 147, 199, 246 CR 673 (found harmless). The general remedy is to remand for an adequate hearing. People v Sheldon (1989) 48 C3d 935, 963, 258 CR 242; People v Bonillas (1989) 48 C3d 757, 801, 257 CR 895.

The defendant may be absent from this hearing and from sentencing if a proper waiver is filed. People v Robertson (1989) 48 C3d 18, 59, 255 CR 631.

Trial courts do not have the power to strike special circumstances under Pen C §1385 once a verdict of death is returned. Pen C §1385.1.

B. Constitutional Issues in Selected Cases

§54.54 1. Due Process and Equal Protection

Although due process generally does not limit the sentence the prosecution may seek, a death penalty may violate constitutional principles of due process or equal protection in the following circumstances:

- When it is sought for retaliation against a defendant for exercising constitutional rights (Twiggs v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 360, 194 CR 152);
- When it results from invidious discrimination against the defendant (the discrimination must be based on the facts of the case, not on statistical evidence of discrimination based on race or gender (McCleskey v Kemp (1987) 481 US 279, 95 L Ed 2d 262, 107 S Ct 1756)); or
- When it is not proportionate (US Const amend VIII; People v Dillon (1983) 34 C3d 441, 194 CR 390). See discussion in §54.55.

It is advisable to raise these issues in the trial court, especially when specific facts in a particular case support the claim that the prosecutor has sought or obtained the death penalty in bad faith or for impermissible motives. If these arguments are not raised in the trial court for tactical reasons, appellate defense counsel may be forced to counter the argument that the issue was waived by alleging ineffective assistance of counsel. See, e.g., People v Pope (1979) 23 C3d 412, 152 CR 732.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Cruel and Unusual Punishment

§54.55 a. Proportionality

The death penalty scheme is not unconstitutional because of its failure to provide for intercase proportionality review. People v Allen (1986) 42 C3d 1222, 1285, 232 CR 849. The Eighth Amendment's Cruel and Unusual Punishment Clause does not require state law to provide a mandatory sentence review on proportionality grounds. Pulley v Harris (1984) 465 US 37, 79 L Ed 2d 29, 104 S Ct 871. Neither intercase nor intracase (among codefendants) proportionality review of sentence is required. People v Sanders (1995) 11 C4th 475, 564, 46 CR2d 751.

There is some authority, however, for defense counsel to attack a death sentence that is disproportionate. The California cruel or unusual punishment provision prohibits disproportionate sentences. In People v Dillon (1983) 34 C3d 441, 194 CR 390, the court held that any sentence may be attacked on proportionality grounds. The California Supreme Court does review death cases to decide whether the death penalty is disproportionate to the defendant's personal culpability. People v Mincey (1992) 2 C4th 408, 476, 6 CR2d 822.

© The Regents of the University of California

§54.55A b. Mental Retardation

In Atkins v Virginia (2002) 536 US 304, 153 L Ed 2d 335, 122 S Ct 2242, the Supreme Court held that the execution of the mentally retarded is cruel and unusual punishment prohibited by the Eighth Amendment. California has implemented Atkins by enacting Pen C §1376, which provides a preconviction procedure for determining whether a defendant is mentally retarded. In In re Hawthorne (2005) 35 C4th 40, 24 CR3d 189, the California Supreme Court considered a postconviction petition for habeas corpus relief from the death penalty on the ground that the defendant was mentally retarded and concluded that postconviction procedures should track §1376.

A habeas corpus petition alleging that executing the defendant would constitute cruel and unusual punishment because the defendant is mentally retarded may be addressed to the supreme court. It should be accompanied by an expert's declaration stating the opinion that the defendant is mentally retarded and the basis for that assessment in light of the statutory standard. In re Hawthorne (2005) 35 C4th 40, 49, 24 CR3d 189. For discussion, see §54.18A.

On submission of an appropriate declaration, the supreme court will "as a general rule" issue an order to show cause returnable in the superior court, directing that court to hold an evidentiary hearing on the issue of the defendant's mental retardation. In re Hawthorne (2005) 35 C4th 40, 49, 24 CR3d 189. Although the statute gives the defendant the right to a jury determination on the question, there is no entitlement to a jury trial in postconviction proceedings. People v Jackson (2009) 45 C4th 662, 680, 88 CR3d 558; In re Hawthorne, supra.

> Ø Note: In Schriro v Smith (2005) 546 US 6, 163 L Ed 2d 6, 126 S Ct 7, the U.S. Supreme Court held that the Ninth Circuit erred in commanding the Arizona courts to conduct a jury trial to resolve the mental retardation claim of a habeas petitioner under sentence of death. The Court noted that Arizona had not even had a chance to apply its own procedures, adopted in response to Atkins, when the Ninth Circuit preemptively imposed its jury trial condition.

§54.56 C. Motion for New Trial; Motion for Reduction of Verdict or Penalty

Whether or not a prior motion for new trial has been heard, counsel should consider moving for a new trial after the penalty phase, attacking both the penalty verdict and the guilt verdict. See Pen C §1181. Even though review under the Pen C §1181(7) standard is mandatory in every death penalty case by virtue of Pen C §190.4(e), a defendant is free to move for a new trial under any of the grounds in the other subdivisions of Pen C §1181. Issues not listed in §1181 and changes in the law after the time of the guilt phase rulings may also be raised in a motion for new trial.

The prosecutor should consider agreeing to a new penalty phase if error occurred that will require reversal on appeal because an appellate reversal may result in a new guilt trial as well. See People v Ramos (1984) 37 C3d 136, 207 CR 800, applying Carlos v Superior Court (1983) 35 C3d 131, 197 CR 79, overruled on other grounds in People v Anderson (1987) 43 C3d 1104, 1115, 240 CR 585, and People v Garcia (1984) 36 C3d 539, 205 CR 265.

XIII. PRONOUNCEMENT OF JUDGMENT

§54.57 A. Judgment of Death

The same requirements for pronouncement of judgment in any felony case apply when a sentence of death is imposed. See chap 35 on pronouncing judgment. The pronouncement of judgment follows the entry of the verdict of death, the ruling on the Pen C §190.4(e) motion, and the ruling on the motion for new trial. It takes place at the time of sentencing. See §54.60 on setting an execution date.

© The Regents of the University of California

§54.58 B. Sentences on Noncapital Verdicts in Capital Cases

Some cases involving capital and noncapital verdicts may be reversed on grounds related solely to the capital counts. If there were noncapital verdicts in the same case, they would remain intact. In light of that possibility, it is advisable to sentence on every count and enhancement. Of course, trial judges are free to give concurrent sentences or to stay sentences on these noncapital counts by following the usual sentencing rules. But no "merging" of determinate sentences with life or death sentences occurs, and the issue of the sentence on noncapital counts should not be overlooked simply because a judgment of death has been imposed.

A defendant is not entitled to a stay of execution until his or her determinate sentence for other crimes is served. People v Taylor (1990) 52 C3d 719, 751, 276 CR 391.

© The Regents of the University of California

§54.59 XIV. DUTIES OF TRIAL COUNSEL ON APPEAL

Appeal of a judgment of death is automatic and is to the California Supreme Court. Pen C §1239(b); Cal Rules of Ct 8.600(a). A verdict of death relieves trial counsel of the need to file a notice of appeal. Pen C §1239(b). A more onerous duty, however, replaces the requirement of a notice of appeal. In view of the magnitude of the penalty, a complete record is required. Trial counsel is required to review this record and ensure its accuracy and completeness. Pen C §§1239-1240.1. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.610-8.625 (contents, preparation, and certification of record).

For trials that began after January 1, 1997, trial counsel, both prosecution and defense, must review the clerk's and court reporter's record for completeness and accuracy. This responsibility includes correcting errors during the trial. The record is certified in two stages. See Pen C §190.8; Cal Rules of Ct 8.619-8.622.

Section 190.8 contemplates that the completeness of the record will be certified within 90 days after entry of imposition of the death sentence, except when good cause is shown or when the transcript exceeds 10,000 pages, in which case Judicial Council rules will provide time guidelines. One or more hearings are required with trial counsel to correct errors before the end of the 90-day period. A certification is apparently required from trial counsel. In addition, the trial court must certify the record for accuracy within 120 days after the record has been delivered to appellate counsel. For discussion of the direct appeal and state habeas corpus proceedings in capital cases, see Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases, chap 6 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

Although appellate remedies are not covered in this chapter, counsel should be aware of the new federal habeas corpus limitations under the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (Pub L 104-132, 110 Stat 1214). California is not in compliance with the Act; as a result, the limitations of the Act do not yet apply to California. If California does comply with the Act, it may severely limit the time available for developing legal challenges to a death sentence. See Ashmus v Woodford (9th Cir 2000) 202 F3d 1160 ("California has failed to provide mandatory and binding standards of competency for collateral counsel"). Note, however, that other provisions of the Act do apply.

© The Regents of the University of California

§54.60 XV. SETTING OF EXECUTION DATE FOLLOWING AFFIRMANCE

On receipt of an affirmance by the California Supreme Court, the trial court must "forthwith" set an execution date at least 60 and no more than 90 calendar days after the date of the order; the trial court may not continue the setting of a date to await possible action by the U.S. Supreme Court. Pen C §1193; People v Superior Court (Gordon) (1990) 226 CA3d 901, 277 CR 321. See also Pen C §§1227, 1227.5, 3600-3607, 3700.5-3706, 4800-4802, 4852.16; Cal Const art V, §8; Cal Rules of Ct 4.315.

Applications for stay of execution should be filed as early as possible because a reviewing court may consider the last-minute nature of an application for stay in deciding whether to grant or deny equitable relief. Gomez v U.S. Dist. Court (1992) 503 US 653, 118 L Ed 2d 293, 296, 112 S Ct 1652.

The death penalty may be inflicted by either lethal gas or lethal intravenous injection. Pen C §3604. See Baze v Rees (2008) ___ US ___, 170 L Ed 2d 420, 128 S Ct 1520 (rejecting challenge to Kentucky's lethal injection method).

§55.1 I. OVERVIEW

The complexity of a case involving driving under the influence of alcohol, drugs, or a combination of the two can deter even the most senior practitioner. Such cases are for the most part referred to as DUI cases, drunk driving cases, or "deuces" (a name derived from the last digit of the former governing Vehicle Code section).

In most cases, persons arrested for DUI are arrested, booked, and released within 4 to 12 hours after arrest, with the actual time reflecting the arresting agency's view of the appropriate sobering up period. Other factors such as prior convictions for similar offenses, aggravated fact situations, or the arrestee's attitude may delay release. If the arrestee will not be released on O.R., counsel must look to the applicable bail schedule for the bail amount. In addition, counsel should be sensitive to the effect of the case on such issues as immigration, professional licensing including commercial driving, and malpractice insurance.

Generally, as long as no injuries are involved, DUI cases proceed as misdemeanors and are prosecuted and defended, for the most part, by relatively less experienced prosecutors and defense attorneys. Yet such cases are, by their nature, complex. In addition to general practice requirements, counsel must be thoroughly familiar with scientific and medical evidence applicable to such cases, rules of evidence governing direct and cross-examination of expert witnesses, introduction of documentation, hearsay rules and their exceptions, applicable California Vehicle Code sections, current case law, numerous manuals and related materials from police agencies and manufacturers of chemical-testing apparatus, and the applicability of the California Code of Regulations, commonly known as "Title 17."

Books on defending DUI cases include Berman, California DUI Trial Notebook (1997); Erwin, Greenberg, Goldstein & Bergh, Defense of Drunk Driving Cases: Criminal-Civil (3d ed 1971); Gorelick, Summary of California Driving Under the Influence of Alcohol Cases (6th ed 1997); Burglin, Simons, & Kuwatch, California Drunk Driving Law (2d ed 2003); Nichols & Whited, Drinking/Driving Litigation: Criminal and Civil (2d ed 1998). §55.2 II. ARREST AND RELEASE

Most arrests for misdemeanor violations of Veh C §23152 are made without a warrant when a police officer observes an individual driving erratically, or observes signs of intoxication in a driver stopped for another Vehicle Code violation. For discussion of the circumstances in which an officer is permitted to make a warrantless arrest for a misdemeanor DUI, see §55.27.

When an individual is arrested for a DUI, the arrestee should be admonished under Veh C §23612, the "implied consent" statute, that he or she will be given a chemical test and has a choice of (1) a blood test; (2) a breath test; or, if arrested for driving under the influence of any drug or the combined influence of an alcoholic beverage and any drug, (3) a urine test. Under specified circumstances (e.g., the chosen test is unavailable or drug impairment is suspected), the statute has different requirements. If the arrestee is uncooperative, the police agency may compel him or her to submit to a blood test conducted in a reasonable manner. See Schmerber v California (1966) 384 US 757, 16 L Ed 2d 908, 86 S Ct 1826 (nonconsensual blood draw by physician in hospital environment held constitutional).

Generally the arrestee is held until he or she has sobered up. A 4- to 12-hour hold is the norm. The arrestee is then released with a citation and promise to appear (i.e., on O.R.). A citation is given to the arrestee informing him or her of the date, time, and place to attend court. If the arrestee is not released in this manner, bail will be set according to the applicable bail schedule in the county of arrest.

An allegedly unlawful arrest that led to the seizure of evidence will generally be challenged by a motion to suppress under Pen C §1538.5. See §§55.25-55.30, chap 16.

§55.3 III. POTENTIAL CRIMINAL CHARGES FOR DUI

Unless a special circumstance exists, anyone arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol, drugs, or both is charged with violating Veh C §23152(a), commonly referred to as the "DUI count," and is prosecuted for a misdemeanor. Veh C §§23536-23552. An attempt to drive while under the influence is included in that crime. See Mercer v DMV (1991) 53 C3d 753, 762, 280 CR 745. It is no defense that the driving occurred on private property. See People v Malvitz (1992) 11 CA4th Supp 9, 14 CR2d 698.

If the arrestee submitted to a blood-alcohol test and the results show a blood-alcohol content (BAC) of 0.08 percent or more, the arrestee will also be charged with violating Veh C §23152(b), commonly called the "0.08 per se count." Some jurisdictions will at times charge such a violation despite a result less than 0.08 on the basis that, at the time of driving, the BAC was equal to or greater than 0.08.

Depending on the circumstances, other potential charges include:

- Driving a commercial vehicle by a person with a BAC of 0.04 percent or more. Veh C §23152(d). See Veh C §23153(d).

  Ø Note: A first DUI (including an adverse administrative hearing decision) will result in a 1-year suspension of a commercial license, and a second DUI (including an adverse administrative hearing decision and with no 10-year limitation between offenses) will result in a lifetime suspension of the commercial license regardless of whether the DUI offense occurred while working. See Veh C §§15300, 15302.

- Driving while addicted to any drug other than methadone. Veh C §23152(c). See Health & S C §11550 (being under influence of narcotic).
- Illegally or negligently causing bodily injury to others while DUI. Veh C §23153(a)-(b). This section is a "wobbler," i.e., chargeable, at the prosecuting agency's discretion, as either a misdemeanor or a felony.
- Child endangerment if a child was in the vehicle. See Pen C §273a.
- Driving with.01 or greater BAC if on probation for a DUI-related offense; the arrest will trigger an administrative hearing and possible suspension of license. Veh C §23154.

  Ø Note: Prior convictions may come into play. Under Veh C §23550, the prosecution may charge a felony when three drunk driving priors and the current drunk driving charge have been accumulated within 10 years (determined by dates of offense, not conviction dates). See People v Munoz (2002) 102 CA4th 12, 125 CR2d 182 (to be charged as felony, DUI offense had to be committed within 7 years under former Veh C §23550 of three or more separate DUI violations and all four offenses had to be committed within 7 years [now 10 years]). See also §§55.31-55.35.

A DUI that results in a homicide may lead to prosecution under:

- Pen C §192(c)(1)-(3) (vehicular manslaughter), a wobbler, when death resulted from gross or ordinary negligence;
- Pen C §191.5(a) (vehicular manslaughter with gross negligence), a felony, when death resulted from criminal negligence; or
- Pen C §§187-189 (second degree murder), a felony with an indeterminate life sentence, when the defendant acted with implied malice.

Second degree murder is normally not charged in DUI cases because it is difficult to establish implied malice, i.e., that the defendant acted with conscious disregard for life. See People v Watson (1981) 30 C3d 290, 179 CR 43. When, however, the defendant has prior DUI convictions, they can be used to show that the defendant knew the dangers of drunk driving. See People v Marlin (2004) 124 CA4th 559, 21 CR3d 470; People v Autry (1995) 37 CA4th 351, 43 CR2d 135.

Effective January 1, 2005, whenever a defendant is convicted of DUI (Veh C §23152 or §23153) or "wet reckless"

(reckless driving after originally being charged with driving under the influence (Veh C §§23103, 23103.5)), the court must give the following advisement (Veh C §23593(a)):

> You are hereby advised that being under the influence of alcohol or drugs, or both, impairs your ability to safely operate a motor vehicle. Therefore, it is extremely dangerous to human life to drive while under the influence of alcohol or drugs, or both. If you continue to drive while under the influence of alcohol or drugs, or both, and, as a result of that driving, someone is killed, you can be charged with murder.

Ø Warning: This advisement, sometimes called a "Watson warning," may be used as evidence that the defendant acted with implied malice in a subsequent prosecution for second degree murder. The advisement may be given orally by the court or prosecutor and is generally contained in any waiver form to be executed by the defendant on plea.

Juveniles who drive while under the influence are subject to prosecution, as are adults who lend their cars to such juveniles. See Veh C §23140; Pen C §193.8. Note that the minimum required BAC for a person under age 21 to be DUI is only 0.05. Veh C §23140.

§55.4 IV. ENHANCEMENTS; IMPOUNDMENT ORDER

Various enhancements apply specifically to DUI prosecutions:

- Prosecution as a felony when the defendant has three or more prior DUI convictions. Veh C §23550. For purposes of Veh C §23550, prior DUI convictions include convictions under Veh C §23152, §23153, or §23103, as specified in Veh C §23103.5 ("wet reckless"). Veh C §23550(a). The prior violations (not the convictions) must have occurred within 10 years of the date of the violation currently being prosecuted. Veh C §23550(a). The prior convictions must be pleaded and proved. On prior convictions generally, see chap 24.
- Prosecution as a felony when the DUI offense is within 10 years of a prior violation of Veh C §23152 or §23153 or Pen C §192(c)(1) (vehicular manslaughter) that was punished as a felony. Veh C §23550.5(a).
- Prosecution as a felony when the defendant was previously convicted of a violation of vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated under Pen C §191.5(a), §191.5(b), or §192.5. A conviction for vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated can enhance the penalty for a DUI even if the conduct underlying that offense occurred after the commission of the DUI. People v Baez (2008) 167 CA4th 197, 204, 83 CR3d 895.
- Refusal to submit to or complete a chemical test. Veh C §23577. The minimum penalty is 48 hours in the county jail. Veh C §23577(a). Subsequent similar convictions will result in greater penalties. Veh C §23577(a). The refusal must be pleaded and proved. Veh C §23577(b).
- Reckless driving at 30 or more miles per hour over the posted speed limit on a freeway or 20 or more miles per hour over the posted speed limit on any other street or highway. Veh C §23582. Note that the court may not strike this enhancement except in unusual circumstances when the interests of justice would be served. Veh C §23582(c). The punishment is an additional 60 days in the county jail. Veh C §23582(a). The reckless driving must be pleaded and proved. Veh C §23582(d).
- A passenger in the vehicle was under age 14. Veh C §23572. The minimum punishment is 48 continuous hours in the county jail, whether or not probation is granted, no part of which may be stayed. Veh C §23572(a). Subsequent similar convictions will result in greater penalties. Veh C §23572(a). The presence of the passenger under 14 years of age must be pleaded and proved. Veh C §23572(b). Note that no enhancement may be imposed under Veh C §23572 if the defendant is also convicted of a violation of Pen C §273a arising from the same facts and incident. Veh C §23572(c).
- Multiple victims when the defendant is convicted of a felony violation of Veh C §23153, Pen C §191.5(a), or Pen C §192(c)(1)-(3). An enhancement of 1 year in state prison is imposed for each additional injured victim, to a maximum of three such enhancements. Veh C §23558.
- BAC exceeding 0.15 percent or refusal to take chemical test. Veh C §23578. The refusal enhancement carries a minimum of 48 hours in county jail. Veh C §23577(a).

On the defendant's conviction, the court may order that his or her vehicle be impounded for a period of 1 to 30 days, with tougher provisions in the event of similar prior convictions. Veh C §23594.

§55.5 V. ELEMENTS OF DUI (VEH C §23152(a))

To obtain a conviction for driving under the influence under Veh C §23152(a), "generic" DUI, the prosecution must prove that the defendant drove a vehicle while under the influence of any alcoholic beverage or drug or the combined influence of any alcoholic beverage and drug. For discussion of these elements, see §§55.6-55.10.

If the evidence shows beyond a reasonable doubt that a chemical analysis of the defendant's blood, breath, or urine established that there was 0.08 percent or more by weight of alcohol in the defendant's blood at the time the test was performed, "per se" DUI, the trier of fact may, but need not, conclude that the defendant was under the influence of an alcoholic beverage at the time of the alleged offense. See CALCRIM 2110-2111. See §55.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.6 A. Driving

Driving requires "volitional movement of a vehicle." Mercer v DMV (1991) 53 C3d 753, 768, 280 CR 745. Driving may be established by circumstantial evidence. 53 C3d at 769. See also People v Martinez (2007) 156 CA4th 851, 855, 67 CR3d 670 (sufficient corpus delicti of driving). California is not subject to a "care and control" statute and thus mere control of the vehicle is not sufficient to establish driving. 53 C3d at 768.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.7 B. Vehicle

Vehicle Code §670 defines a vehicle as "a device by which any person or property may be propelled, moved, or drawn upon a highway, excepting a device moved exclusively by human power or used exclusively upon stationary rails or tracks." Automobiles, trucks (Veh C §410), motorcycles (Veh C §400), mopeds (Veh C §406), and snowmobiles (Veh C §557) fall within the classification. Likewise, bicycles (Veh C §21200.5) (maximum punishment of $250 fine); boats, aquaplanes, and water skis (Harb & N C §655); aircraft (Pub Util C §21407.1); and horses and other beasts of burden (Veh C §21050) may all constitute vehicles for purposes of a DUI. However, wheelchairs and motorized tricycles and quadricycles, operated by persons who, because of physical disability, are otherwise unable to move about as pedestrians, may not. Veh C §§415, 467.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.8 C. Under the Influence

A person is under the influence of an alcoholic beverage or drug or the combined influence of an alcoholic beverage and drug when as a result of drinking the beverage, using the drug, or both, his or her physical or mental abilities are so impaired that he or she no longer has the ability to drive a vehicle with the caution characteristic of a sober person of ordinary prudence under the same or similar circumstances. People v Canty (2004) 32 C4th 1266, 1278, 14 CR3d 1; People v Torres (2009) 173 CA4th 977, 983, 93 CR3d 303. Evidence that the person was under the influence of a drug is insufficient to sustain a conviction for driving under the influence absent evidence of impaired driving ability. People v Torres, supra (methamphetamine); People v Davis (1969) 270 CA2d 197, 75 CR 627 (opiate). It is no defense that another cause also tended to impair his or her ability to drive with the required caution. CALCRIM 2110-2111.

As is not the case with a per se DUI (see §55.11), competent evidence about partition ratio variability is admissible to defend against a generic DUI charge because that charge requires proof that the defendant's ability to drive safely was impaired. People v McNeal (2009) 46 C4th 1183, 1188, 96 CR3d 261.

If the evidence establishes beyond a reasonable doubt that at the time of the chemical analysis of the defendant's blood, breath, or urine, there was 0.08 percent or more by weight of alcohol in the defendant's blood, the trier of fact may, but need not, conclude that the defendant was under the influence of an alcoholic beverage at the time of the alleged offense. See §55.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.9 D. Alcoholic Beverage

An "alcoholic beverage" is a liquid or solid intended to be consumed that contains ethanol. Ethanol is also known as ethyl alcohol, drinking alcohol, or alcohol. See Veh C §109; CALCRIM 2100, 2110-2111. Alcoholic beverages include intoxicating liquor, malt beverage, beer, wine, spirits, liqueur, whiskey, rum, vodka, cordials, gin, and brandy, and any mixture containing one or more alcoholic beverages, as well as a beverage that includes a mixture of one or more alcoholic beverages whether found or ingested separately or as a mixture. Veh C §109. See Bus & P C §23004 ("alcoholic beverage" contains one-half of one percent or more of alcohol by volume).

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.10 E. Drug

"Drug" means any substance or combination of substances, other than alcohol, that could so affect the nervous system, brain, or muscles of a person as to impair, to an appreciable degree, his or her ability to drive a vehicle in the manner that an ordinarily prudent and cautious person, in full possession of his or her faculties, using reasonable care, would drive a similar vehicle under like conditions. Veh C §312.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.11 VI. ELEMENTS OF DRIVING WITH BAC OF AT LEAST 0.08 (VEH C §23152(b))

To obtain a conviction for driving while having a BAC of at least 0.08 under Veh C §23152(b), the prosecution must prove that the defendant drove (see §55.6) a vehicle (see §55.7) while having the requisite BAC. For purposes of Veh C §23152(b), blood alcohol is measured by the "grams of alcohol per 100 milliliters of blood or grams of alcohol per 210 liters of breath." Veh C §23152(b). The ratio of breath-alcohol concentration to blood-alcohol concentration is sometimes referred to as an individual's "partition ratio." That the defendant's partition ratio may be different from the standard partition ratio that breath-testing machines use to convert breath-alcohol readings into blood-alcohol equivalents is irrelevant and inadmissible. People v Bransford (1994) 8 C4th 885, 35 CR2d 613.

Ø Note: Competent evidence about partition ratio variability is admissible to defend against a generic DUI charge because, unlike a per se DUI charge, the generic DUI charge requires proof that the defendant's ability to drive safely was impaired. People v McNeal (2009) 46 C4th 1183, 1188, 96 CR3d 261.

If the evidence establishes beyond a reasonable doubt that (1) a sample of the defendant's blood, breath, or urine was obtained within 3 hours after he or she operated a vehicle, and (2) a chemical analysis of the sample established that there was 0.08 percent or more, by weight, of alcohol in the defendant's blood at the time of the performance of the chemical test, the trier of fact may, but is not required to, conclude that the defendant drove a vehicle with 0.08 percent or more, by weight, of alcohol in his or her blood at the time of the alleged offense. CALCRIM 2101, 2111.

VII. PROCEDURAL CONSIDERATIONS

§55.12 A. Arraignment

Arraignments are discussed in chap 6, and a DUI arraignment is like any other misdemeanor arraignment. A probable cause hearing must be held promptly after arrest if the arrestee is in custody. See Pen C §991.

Ø Note: Unless charged with a felony DUI or ordered by the court to attend, the defendant need not attend and counsel may make the appearance. See Veh C §40507. There is no need for a formal Pen C §977 waiver of defendant's appearance. Pen C §977(a).

Customarily, at arraignment the defense enters a plea to the charges, including admissions or denials of any prior convictions, enhancements, and other such allegations. A plea need not be entered at the first appearance and may be entered at a later time, subject to the court's discretion. See Veh C §40306. When the client pleads not guilty, counsel should become familiar with the applicable court procedures, e.g., whether the matter proceeds directly to trial with a trial date being set. Alternatively, a pretrial or readiness conference date may be set. Counsel should ascertain whether the court requires a special date to be set for the hearing of pretrial motions. Most jurisdictions will hear all motions, including Pen C §1538.5 suppression motions, on the day of trial. Some jurisdictions require that any §1538.5 suppression motion be heard before the commencement of trial and on a special date. The judge hearing the §1538.5 suppression motion need not be the judge that will preside over the trial. Motions should be filed at the earliest opportunity and, in any event, in a timely fashion. Motions for discovery or to address the prosecution's failure to comply with discovery will, in most cases, by necessity be filed and heard before commencement of trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.13 B. Speedy Trial

Essentially DUI trials are governed by the same statutory and constitutional speedy trial rights as any other misdemeanor. See chap 19. Note, however, that the requirement of Pen C §853.6 that a misdemeanor complaint be filed no later than 25 days after arrest does not apply to DUI prosecutions. See People v Domagalski (1989) 214 CA3d 1380, 263 CR 249.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.14 C. Demurrers

In most DUI cases, a demurrer will not be a fruitful area of pursuit. The complaint need not specify the particular type of intoxicant. See Byrd v Municipal Court (1981) 125 CA3d 1054, 178 CR 480 (complaint charging driving under influence of intoxicating liquor and under combined influence of intoxicating liquor and drugs gave constitutionally adequate notice of allegations). At the commencement of trial, counsel should move to amend a count alleging drug intoxication by requesting deletion of all drug language if the basis of the allegation is one only of alcohol intoxication. This is generally an uncontested motion.

Note that a complaint alleging violation of Veh C §23153 must specify the "forbidden act" or "neglected duty." See People v Gary (1987) 189 CA3d 1212, 235 CR 30.

On demurrers generally, see §§7.20-7.26A.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.15 D. Venue

For Vehicle Code violations, an arrestee may demand that the trial be held at the county seat of the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed, as long as the arrestee resides, or his or her principal place of employment is located, closer to the county seat than to the court nearest or most accessible to the place where the arrest was made. Veh C §40502(b). This demand must be made before the issuance of the appearance notice, i.e., while the arrestee is in custody and before issuance of the release documentation. For all practical purposes, unless the arrestee is assisted by counsel at the time of initial incarceration, the demand will not be made. If however, such a request is made but not honored, counsel may renew the request at arraignment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.16 VIII. MOTIONS

As in any other criminal case, motions in limine under Evid C §402 ("402 motions") and Pen C §1538.5 hearings on motions to suppress evidence are available in DUI cases. Motions in limine may be made at any time before or during trial and need not be in writing. For tactical reasons, however, counsel should submit written 402 motions well before the trial date if the appropriate issues can be identified. Motions to suppress evidence must be in writing and if possible be heard before the commencement of trial. See Pen C §1538.5(g)-(h).

Ø Note: If testimony during trial gives rise to a §1538.5 suppression motion, and that evidence was unknown to or unforeseen by the defense, an oral suppression motion under §1538.5 may be advanced during trial. Pen C §1538.5(h).

© The Regents of the University of California

A. Discovery

§55.17 1. Requirements

As a rule, discovery is made available at the first court attendance and, depending on the court procedure, is obtained either from the prosecutor, the court, or in certain circumstances on a written request filed with the prosecutor's office. Specified materials and information must be provided by the prosecutor in a timely fashion. See Pen C §§1054-1054.7. See also chap 11. Prosecution and defense counsel should review these sections, which extensively and exhaustively set out the manner in which the discovery process should be conducted, the parameters of discoverable information, and the prosecution and defense obligations regarding discoverable documentation and information. Note that, unless a party has made an informal discovery request in writing, that party may not move to compel compliance or for other remedies. Although there are no specific requirements for an informal request, counsel should itemize in detail all items requested. Failure to do so may preclude a subsequent successful motion to compel or obtain other appropriate remedies.

Required disclosures must be made at least 30 days before trial unless good cause is shown why a disclosure should be denied, restricted, or deferred. Pen C §1054.7. Note that the disclosure requirements are ongoing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.18 2. Remedies for Noncompliance

A motion to compel the opposing party to provide discovery may be made at any time before or during trial. The motion should particularize any information being sought and any sanctions or remedies being requested for noncompliance. Generally, if consistent with the purposes of Pen C §1054, the opposing party will be ordered to provide the discoverable materials. Failure to comply may be the basis of a further motion for sanctions or remedies, including dismissal of the action (the ultimate remedy, and generally not the remedy granted), or other court orders, e.g., suppression of evidence, jury instruction. See chap 11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.19 B. Failure to Preserve Evidence

Failure by the prosecuting agency, whether police or prosecutor's office, to preserve evidence may result in a dismissal of the action or, at the least, sanctions, including jury instructions. Counsel may raise the complaint by a motion or an objection. Note that, if counsel fails to make such an objection before admission of the prosecution evidence that might have been contradicted by the lost evidence, the issue is waived. See People v Gallego (1990) 52 C3d 115, 179, 276 CR 679. See discussion of the Trombetta-Youngblood rule on failure to preserve evidence in §§11.27-11.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.20 C. Admonishments and Failure by Arresting Agency to Properly Admonish

Under the "deemed consent" provision of Veh C §23612, anyone who drives a motor vehicle is deemed to have given his or her consent to chemical testing of his or her blood, breath, or urine. Veh C §23612(a)(1)(A). A person arrested for driving under the influence of an alcoholic beverage, however, is given only a choice between tests of blood and breath, even though a urine test may be used if the other tests are unavailable. Veh C §23612(a)(2)(A). Compare the admonishment the officer must give under Veh C §23614 if the arrestee initially chooses a breath test. In that event, the person must also be advised that no breath sample is retained and that, consequently, he or she may provide a blood or urine sample that will be retained and available for subsequent analysis. Veh C §23614(a)-(b). See People v Superior Court (Scott) (1980) 112 CA3d 602, 169 CR 412 (when defendant requested blood test, and facilities for test were available, refusal of authorities to administer test that would allow preservation of evidence deprived defendant of due process and required suppression of breath test results). The testing must be incidental to a lawful arrest and the arrestee must be informed that failure to submit to or complete the required chemical testing will result in various penalties. See Veh C §§23612(a)(1)(C)-(D), 23614(a).

Failure by the arresting police agency to properly admonish will not result in the suppression of any chemical test result obtained (In re Garinger (1987) 188 CA3d 1149, 1153, 233 CR 853) or in a dismissal of the charges (People v Superior Court (Maria) (1992) 11 CA4th 134, 143, 13 CR2d 741). Even though failure to properly admonish will not result in a suppression of evidence, the defendant is entitled to an instruction informing the jury of the noncompliance and that the noncompliance is a factor they may take into account when assessing the credibility of the nonadmonishing officers and the accuracy of the chemical test subsequently obtained. People v Alvarado (1986) 181 CA3d Supp 1, 5, 226 CR 329. Counsel should note that if a deliberate, systematic pattern of nonadvisement can be shown, noncompliance with required admonishments may give rise to dismissal or suppression of the chemical test results and related evidence. See In re Garinger (1987) 188 CA3d 1149, 1154, 233 CR 853.

§55.21 D. Retesting of Blood or Urine Sample

A defendant has the right to have a sample, either blood or urine, retested by an independent laboratory. 17 Cal Code Regs §§1219.1(g)(2), 1219.2(c)(1). In most jurisdictions, counsel need only file an order for such testing, which is routinely signed. Other jurisdictions require an accompanying motion and supporting documentation. The prosecution's failure to comply with such an order or the state's failure to preserve the sample for future analysis may be the subject of a motion to suppress the chemical test result and related evidence. Bad faith by the prosecutor or police must be shown. See discussion of the Trombetta-Youngblood rule on failure to preserve evidence in §§11.27-11.28.

§55.22 E. Motions to Suppress Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus (HGN) Observations

Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus (HGN) is an involuntary jerking of the eyes that may indicate the presence of alcohol or drugs. Generally, it is the first of the many so-called field sobriety tests administered by the arresting officer. The test should be administered by the officer while both the officer and the arrestee are in a standing position. An object is held by the officer approximately 12 to 15 inches in front of the suspect's face, just above eye level, and the suspect is asked to follow the moving object with his or her eyes only (i.e., the head is not to be moved) while the officer moves it at various speeds across the eye plane. Depending on the officer's observations and angle of onset, it may be argued by the prosecution that the failure to follow the object or a bouncing of the eyes indicates the presence of alcohol, drugs, or both.

Ø Note: HGN is a naturally occurring condition in approximately 4 percent of the population and may result from fatigue, trauma, or other natural causes. See People v Williams (1992) 3 CA4th 1326, 1331, 5 CR2d 130. Most courts will not allow any witness testifying concerning HGN observations to correlate the observations to a specific or even general BAC. 3 CA4th at 1329.

Prosecutors may attempt to introduce the officer's observations not only to establish the presence of alcohol, but also as evidence of the BAC. The officer's observations will be admitted as evidence of the presence of alcohol, as will the officer's resulting opinion, based on this test in combination with others, that the suspect was "under the influence." In People v Leahy (1994) 8 C4th 587, 34 CR2d 663, the California Supreme Court held that HGN evidence is subject to the admissibility requirements of People v Kelly (1976) 17 C3d 24, 130 CR 144, which require a showing that the technique is generally accepted as reliable in the relevant scientific community. Subsequently, a court of appeal held that HGN evidence, when viewed with other relevant indications, meets the Kelly requirements for purposes of deciding whether a subject is under the influence of alcohol, and that expert testimony is not required. People v Joehnk (1995) 35 CA4th 1488, 42 CR2d 6. If, however, the prosecution wishes to introduce HGN observations to establish the BAC, the defense should request a Kelly hearing. See People v Loomis (1984) 156 CA3d Supp 1, 203 CR 767 (HGN evidence fails Kelly test of admissibility as means of determining BAC and is, therefore, inadmissible on that issue).

§55.23 F. Motions to Suppress Defendant's Statements

Motions to suppress confessions and admissions are usually based on Miranda violations. See Miranda v Arizona (1966) 384 US 436, 16 L Ed 2d 694, 86 S Ct 1602. These motions are properly brought as in limine motions under Evid C §402. See chap 23.

Miranda governs only communications and testimony; a Miranda violation cannot result in exclusion of real or physical evidence. See Pennsylvania v Muniz (1990) 496 US 582, 110 L Ed 2d 528, 110 S Ct 2638. The manner in which a statement is made, e.g., exhibiting slurring or disorientation, is not subject to suppression. 496 US at 591, 110 L Ed 2d at 545.

Typically, the central issue on a Miranda motion will be whether the defendant was subject to a custodial interrogation when the statement was made. See Miranda v Arizona, supra; Green v Superior Court (1985) 40 C3d 126, 219 CR 186. Generally, the defendant's prearrest statements are not subject to Miranda. Prearrest questions are usually only investigative in nature, as distinguished from questions asked of a defendant under custodial interrogation, and, therefore, the prearrest answers given by the defendant to such interrogatories as "Where have you been?" "What have you had to drink?" "How much have you had to drink?" and "When did you drink?" are admissible. See Berkemer v McCarty (1984) 468 US 420, 82 L Ed 2d 317, 104 S Ct 3138. As a practical matter, police officers have been trained to ask and obtain information before arrest and, therefore, inculpatory admissions will typically have been made before arrest and be admissible. Any statement made by the arrestee after arrest may be the subject of an Evid C §402 motion. Counsel should carefully review the fact situation to ascertain whether statements made before arrest may nonetheless have been made under custodial interrogation, i.e., a formal arrest could have been made or a restraint on freedom of movement of the degree associated with a formal arrest existed. If so, Miranda applies. People v Boyer (1989) 48 C3d 247, 256 CR 96, disapproved on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394.

§55.24 G. Preliminary Alcohol Screening (PAS) Devices

A preliminary alcohol screening (PAS) device is in essence a portable, handheld breath-testing machine. "The preliminary alcohol screening test is not determinative of blood alcohol content, but is a field sobriety test which may be used as a further investigative tool in order to establish reasonable cause to believe a person was driving a vehicle while under the influence of alcohol." Kodani v Snyder (1999) 75 CA4th 471, 473 n2, 89 CR2d 362. See also Veh C §23612(h).

A PAS is frequently administered by an officer as one of the field sobriety tests during the investigative stage in a DUI case to assist the officer in formulating an opinion of whether the suspect is "under the influence." See Veh C §23612(h). The most commonly used device in California is the Alco-Sensor IV, which is capable of being downloaded, making the computer printout of all information processed through the unit available. Certain models are also capable of having a printed breath ticket processed at the time the test is administered. As with any other breath machine, no breath sample is retained. The PAS unit does not have a slope (mouth-alcohol) detector.

An officer who decides to use a PAS must advise the person that the officer is requesting that the person take the test to assist the officer in determining if the person is "under the influence" and that doing so does not negate the person's obligation to submit to a blood or breath test under the "implied consent" obligation. The officer must also advise that the person has the right to refuse to take the PAS. See Veh C §23612(i). See also People v Wilson (2003) 114 CA4th 953, 8 CR3d 167. Despite the fact that the PAS retains no sample, there is no need for the officer to advise of that fact, as is required when a suspect chooses to submit to a breath test (see Veh C §23614).

Any challenge to admissibility may be made in an Evid C §402 in limine motion. To justify the admission in evidence of the results of a PAS test, the prosecution must either (People v Williams (2002) 28 C4th 408, 121 CR2d 854):

- Show that the law enforcement agency has complied with regulations set out in Title 17 (of the California Code of Regulations) for the maintenance of PAS equipment and the training of personnel administering the test, or
- Provide independent proof that the test met the three foundational requirements set out in People v Adams (1976) 59 CA3d 559, 131 CR 190.

The prosecution can meet the Adams foundational prerequisites by showing that (59 CA3d at 561):

- The particular apparatus used was in proper working order;
- The test used was properly administered; and
- The operator was competent and qualified.

See also People v Bury (1996) 41 CA4th 1194, 1202, 49 CR2d 107.

Generally, the PAS units are maintained and calibrated by the police agencies who use them, and the witnesses called by the prosecution to satisfy these requirements are police officers. See, e.g., People v Hallquist (2005) 133 CA4th 291, 34 CR3d 621 (highway patrol officer testifying as expert on accuracy of PAS devices could rely on contents of test container label). Often, however, police officers do not have sufficient expertise or training to be qualified to state that the PAS was in proper working order.

Even when the court rules that the Adams foundational requirements were met, the prosecution must further prove that the appropriate admonitions, in particular the defendant's right to refuse to take the PAS, were given before the test was administered. Failure to give the admonitions should be fatal to the introduction of test evidence.

The following are specific admissibility issues of concern with respect to the PAS and its results:

- Whether any evidence regarding administration of the test is admissible;
- If yes, whether the readings themselves are admissible; and
- If yes, the purpose for which the readings are admissible.

Ø Note: Several jurisdictions use the PAS units as both screening devices and evidentiary breath-testing (chemical test) devices. When this is the case, the local crime laboratory will normally maintain and service the PAS unit. Although the officer will testify that the PAS unit is set to the "evidential testing mode" when used as an evidentiary device, this simply means the officer flicks a switch to allow the input of the suspect's information. The unit functions in exactly the same manner when used as an evidentiary device and when used as a screening device.

H. Pen C §1538.5 Motions

§55.25 1. In General

A motion under Pen C §1538.5 to suppress evidence is, unless a court rule or procedure prescribes otherwise, the only motion required to be in writing. The motion may be made when tangible or intangible evidence was seized from the defendant in violation of the Fourth Amendment. In a DUI case, a §1538.5 motion will generally address probable cause for the stop, the chemical test, or both. The evidence to be suppressed may include symptoms or indicia of intoxication as observed by the arresting police agency, and of course the chemical test administration, its results, and all observations surrounding the test. See Pen C §1538.5(a); Kirby v Superior Court (1970) 8 CA3d 591, 87 CR 577. Counsel should obtain the local court rules governing the requisite documentation and timing of the motion. In many jurisdictions, the motion is heard by the assigned trial judge immediately before commencement of trial. In other jurisdictions, however, the motion is heard on a separate day, and not necessarily by the judge assigned to the trial. On search and seizure motions generally, see chap 16.

§55.26 2. Probable Cause

Probable cause for a stop and detention will be established by any Vehicle Code violation. Colorado v Bannister (1980) 449 US 1, 66 L Ed 2d 1, 101 S Ct 42. See, e.g., People v Binkowski (2007) 157 CA4th Supp 1, 68 CR3d 741 (car's stop over limit line in violation of Veh C §22450 justified stop leading to DUI arrest.) Subject to certain exceptions (see §55.2), the violation must actually occur in the officer's presence. Thus, e.g., it is unlawful to stop a car to see whether the driver can produce a valid license and registration (Delaware v Prouse (1979) 440 US 648, 59 L Ed 2d 660, 99 S Ct 1391) or because further investigation might reveal an equipment violation (People v Butler (1988) 202 CA3d 602, 248 CR 887).

> Ø Note: If the Vehicle Code violation occurred on private property and did not recur on a public highway, it may be argued that the stop and detention are illegal because most traffic regulations apply only to vehicles on public highways. See Veh C §§21001, 21107.8, 24001, 360; People v Lopez (1987) 197 CA3d 93, 242 CR 668.

It is not necessary that the traffic stop be based on a Vehicle Code violation. Traffic stops for erratic or unusual driving, although not Vehicle Code violations, have been routinely upheld. See People v Perez (1985) 175 CA3d Supp 8, 221 CR 776. Traffic stops at sobriety checkpoints are governed by the rules set out in Ingersoll v Palmer (1987) 43 C3d 1321, 241 CR 42, with one exception: The police are not required to publicize sobriety checkpoints (People v Banks (1993) 6 C4th 926, 25 CR2d 524). Although checkpoints may not be set up for general crime control (see Indianapolis v Edmond (2000) 531 US 32, 44, 148 L Ed 2d 333, 121 S Ct 447), police can use a checkpoint to gather information about a specific recent crime. See, e.g., Illinois v Lidster (2004) 540 US 419, 423, 157 L Ed 2d 843, 850, 124 S Ct 885.

Probable cause for arrest exists when the facts known to the arresting officer would lead a person of ordinary care and prudence to believe and consciously entertain an honest and strong suspicion that the person is guilty of a crime. See People v Harris (1975) 15 C3d 384, 389, 124 CR 536. As long as the objective facts afford probable cause, the arresting officer's subjective intent or motive will not be considered. See People v Wolterman (1992) 11 CA4th Supp 15, 20, 15 CR2d 107.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.27 3. Arrest

Ordinarily, a police officer is permitted to make a warrantless arrest for a misdemeanor only when the offense is committed in the officer's presence. See Pen C §836(a)(1). "Presence" means that the officer must be able to testify, on the basis of his or her senses, to acts that constitute every material element of the offense. People v Welsch (1984) 151 CA3d 1038, 1042, 199 CR 87. If the defendant was arrested on the basis of the police officer's personal observations, the only potential issue for a Pen C §1538.5 motion is whether the officer's observations were sufficient to establish probable cause. See §55.26.

When the misdemeanor in question, however, is driving under the influence, there are several exceptions to the rule. Under Veh C §40300.5, a police officer may make a warrantless arrest for a DUI not committed in the officer's presence when the officer has reasonable cause to believe that the suspect has been driving under the influence of an intoxicant, and the suspect (Veh C §40300.5):

- Is involved in a traffic accident;
- Is observed in or about a vehicle that is obstructing a road;
- Will not be apprehended unless immediately arrested;
- May cause injury or property damage unless immediately arrested; or
- May destroy or conceal evidence unless immediately arrested.

Vehicle Code §40300.5 is not the sole authority for warrantless arrests for DUIs committed outside an officer's presence. An officer may assist with a DUI arrest based on the personal observations of another officer. Dyer v DMV (2008) 163 CA4th 161, 173, 77 CR3d 138 (citing to Pen C §839). A warrantless arrest may also be made when a police officer has been informed by a reliable third party of the third party's observations of the driving and the defendant admits that he or she was driving. See Packer v Sillas (1976) 57 CA3d 206, 213, 128 CR 907. In People v Thompson (2006) 38 C4th 811, 43 CR3d 750, the supreme court held that a warrantless entry into a suspect's home was permitted by exigent circumstances (the destruction of evidence by way of the alcohol dissipating in his blood) after the suspect had been seen driving erratically by a third party and was visibly drunk when police came to the door.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.28 4. Prolonged Detention

An officer is precluded from detaining a defendant for any longer than necessary to complete the officer's duty with respect to the alleged violation. See People v Gomez (2004) 117 CA4th 531, 537, 12 CR3d 398; Williams v Superior Court (1985) 168 CA3d 349, 213 CR 919 (officer may not impose general crime investigation on detained traffic offender that is not reasonably necessary to completion of officer's traffic citation duties unless officer has independent reasonable suspicion that driver has committed unrelated offenses). The Fourth Amendment prohibits unjustifiably prolonged detention; each case, however, must be evaluated on its facts. In DUI cases, it is generally held that administering field sobriety tests, questioning about, e.g., recent drinking, and administering the PAS do not give rise to an unreasonably prolonged detention. See People v Bennett (1983) 139 CA3d 767, 189 CR 77.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.29 5. Defendant's Efforts to Obtain Test Frustrated

Due process violations may occur when the police deliberately frustrate a defendant's effort to obtain the chemical test of his or her choice as permitted under the law. See People v Superior Court (Scott) (1980) 112 CA3d 602, 169 CR 412. When this occurs, the chemical test results will be suppressed. See Brown v Municipal Court (1978) 86 CA3d 357, 361, 150 CR 216.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.30 6. Speed Traps

Before proof of a vehicle's speed as clocked by radar may be used against a defendant, the posted speed limit must have been justified by an engineering and traffic survey conducted within 5 years before the date of the alleged violation. See Veh C §40802(a)(2). This rule was not abrogated by Proposition 8. See Veh C §40808; People v Goulet (1992) 13 CA4th Supp 1, 14, 17 CR2d 801.

Ø Note: When certain requirements are met, the applicable period may be 7 or 10 years. See Veh C §40802(c).

When the defendant's speed was clocked by radar, the defense may be able to argue that the detention or stop was unlawful, and is a violation of the statutory exclusionary rule in the "speed trap" legislation. However, the Sixth District has held that the speed trap exclusionary rules of Veh C §§40803 and 40804 apply only when the defendant is charged with speeding, and do not apply when the defendant is charged with DUI, even if the defendant's rate of speed in a speed trap led to the initial traffic stop. People v Hardacre (2004) 116 CA4th 1292, 1299, 11 CR3d 214. Likewise, the Third District has held that the remedy for a Veh C §40800 violation when the detaining officer used an unmarked vehicle is exclusion of the officer's testimony with respect to a speed-related offense, not a DUI offense. Dyer v DMV (2008) 163 CA4th 161, 171, 77 CR3d 138.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.30A 7. DUI Checkpoints

With certain limitations, "a sobriety check point may be operated in a manner consistent with the federal and state Constitutions." Ingersoll v Palmer (1987) 43 C3d 1321, 1325, 241 CR 42. See Michigan Dep't of State Police v Sitz (1990) 496 US 444, 455, 110 L Ed 2d 412, 110 S Ct 2481 (use of sobriety checkpoints approved when conducted in lawful, constitutional manner). The factors to be considered in determining whether a checkpoint is legal are decision making at the supervisory level; limits on the discretion of field officers; maintenance of safety conditions; a reasonable location; time and duration; indicia of the official nature of the roadblock; and the length and nature of detention. Ingersoll, 43 C3d at 1341. While advance publicity is not essential for a checkpoint to be legal, it is a factor to be considered. People v Banks (1993) 6 C4th 926, 934, 25 CR2d 524.

A challenge to a DUI checkpoint should be made by a motion under Pen C §1538.5 to suppress evidence. 6 C4th at 932.

IX. PRIOR CONVICTIONS

§55.31 A. In General

A "prior" DUI conviction may be used to increase the minimum mandatory penalties in a subsequent DUI prosecution. See Veh C §§23530-23598. Although the conviction itself must take place before the conviction for the current offense, there is no requirement that either the offense or the conviction be before the date of the offense for which the defendant is being tried. The legislature has declared that the timing of court proceedings should not affect the court's ability to impose enhanced penalties for multiple offenses. Veh C §23217. See also People v Albitre (1986) 184 CA3d 895, 229 CR 289 (defendant properly sentenced as third-time drunk driver even though he had not been convicted of second DUI when current offense occurred); People v Munoz (2002) 102 CA4th 12, 125 CR2d 182 (current offense occurred before some of offenses charged as prior convictions). See also Veh C §§23540, 23550. All offenses within a 10-year period may be used to enhance a sentence. See People v Treadway (2008) 163 CA4th 689, 698, 77 CR3d 786 (use of priors within current extended 10-year period instead of prior 7-year period does not violate ex post facto principles); People v Forrester (2007) 156 CA4th 1021, 1024, 67 CR3d 740 (same). See also §§55.32-55.35.

Crimes that qualify as "priors" include violations of Veh C §§23152, 23153, and 23103.5 ("wet reckless"), out-of-state and federal DUI convictions (Veh C §§23626, 13352(d)), convictions for operating a boat while "under the influence" (Harb & N C §655), and convictions that have been dismissed under Pen C §1203.4 (Pen C §1203.4(a)). Constitutionally invalid convictions cannot be used for enhancement purposes (Veh C §41403), nor can juvenile adjudications (see Welf & I C §203; People v Bernard (1988) 204 CA3d Supp 16, 251 CR 631).

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.32 B. What May Be Challenged

Only unconstitutional priors may be challenged if the prior arises from a California conviction. Out-of-state priors may be challenged as unconstitutional and on the basis that the conviction was not for a priorable and equivalent California crime. See People v Crane (2006) 142 CA4th 425, 430, 48 CR3d 334. A court may not strike a prior DUI conviction to avoid imposing a minimum mandatory sentence or fine, or to avoid revocation, suspension, or restriction of driving privileges. Veh C §23622(a). Only one constitutional challenge is allowed on a prior conviction and the court's ruling is binding on the prosecution, the defendant, and the DMV in all future judicial and administrative proceedings. Veh C §23624.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.33 C. Obtaining Information About Prior

Before deciding whether a challenge should be made, defense counsel must obtain information about the prior conviction. Doing so is usually achieved by written request from the convicting court; documentation should include minute orders, the defendant's written waiver of constitutional rights, and, when available, the transcript of the prior plea proceedings. This information should be obtained in a timely fashion because:

- Counsel needs to timely evaluate the merits of bringing the motion; and
- Failure to obtain the record in a timely fashion may result in denial of the motion or its postponement until the time of sentencing (Veh C §41403(c)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.34 D. Evaluating Options

Defense counsel may be well advised to discuss with the client the possibility of requesting a bifurcation, with the prior tried separately from and after the DUI charges. Because prior convictions are enhancements and not elements of the DUI offense, the court must grant bifurcation on the defendant's request. See People v Weathington (1991) 231 CA3d 69, 282 CR 170. Defense counsel should also discuss with the client the possibility of admitting the prior or, in any event, the decision on whether the prior will be tried by a judge alone as opposed to a jury. Obviously, nothing will be gained if the prior is provable and constitutional, it is not admitted, and counsel fails to timely move for bifurcation, because the trier of fact (usually a jury) will have knowledge of the prior, which, regardless of proof, usually puts the defense at a tactical and practical disadvantage.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.35 E. Requirements for Motion to Strike Prior; Hearing

The motion to strike a prior conviction and the hearing on the motion are governed by Veh C §41403. The motion must be in writing and must state with specificity the alleged deprivation of the defendant's constitutional rights. Veh C §41403(a). When the prior conviction was based on the defendant's admission of guilt, the moving papers must affirmatively allege that, at the time of the plea, the defendant did not know of, or did not intelligently waive, his or her constitutional rights. People v Sumstine (1984) 36 C3d 909, 206 CR 707. To prevail, the defendant must establish that the plea was not voluntary and intelligent under the totality of the circumstances. People v Howard (1992) 1 C4th 1132, 5 CR2d 268. Once the prosecution produces sufficient proof to justify a finding that the defendant suffered the prior conviction, it is the defendant's burden to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his or her constitutional rights were infringed in the proceeding that gave rise to that conviction. Veh C §41403(b)(2). To support the striking of a prior, the record must establish a factual and legal basis for that ruling. See Veh C §41403(b)(4).

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.36 X. CORPUS DELICTI

The truth-in-evidence provision of the California Constitution (Cal Const art I, §28(f)(2)), abrogated the corpus delicti rule to the extent that the rule prohibited the admission of defendant's extrajudicial statements in the absence of independent proof of the corpus delicti. People v Alvarez (2002) 27 C4th 1161, 1172, 119 CR2d 903. However, it did not alter the rule that a conviction requires independent proof of the corpus delicti. 27 C4th at 1169. The evidentiary burden of proving the corpus delicti is on the statement's proponent and is minimal. See, e.g., People v Ray (1996) 13 C4th 313, 342, 52 CR2d 296. For further discussion, see §23.22.

Ø Example: The most common scenario for a corpus delicti issue in DUI cases is one in which the defendant is no longer in the car but states that he or she was in fact the driver. The prosecution need not prove that no other party could have driven the vehicle, but simply must raise a reasonable inference that the defendant could have been the driver, e.g., through the presence of keys in the defendant's hand or on the defendant's person, registration in the defendant's name, the defendant's proximity to the vehicle, or the absence of others near the vehicle. If the prosecution cannot raise the inference that the defendant was driving, then in all likelihood it will fail to prove driving as a required element of its case against the defendant.

§55.37 XI. LABORATORY REQUIREMENTS

Title 17 of the California Code of Regulations sets forth a comprehensive set of standards applicable to laboratories performing forensic alcohol analysis. See 17 Cal Code Regs §1215-1222.2 (stating minimum requirements for collecting, handling, sampling, analyzing, maintaining, and recording alcohol testing equipment, instruments, and samples). They include a list of instruments for testing blood alcohol level approved by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. 17 Cal Code Regs §§1221.2-1221.3.

Under Health & S C §100700, laboratories performing breath, blood, urine, or tissue tests for law enforcement agencies to establish a suspect's blood alcohol level must comply with these standards, except for the licensing requirement in 17 Cal Code Regs §1216(a). These laboratories must also meet proficiency testing standards in Health & S C §100702.

However, failure to comply with Title 17 does not make the results of blood alcohol level tests inadmissible. People v Williams (2002) 28 C4th 408, 121 CR2d 854. Noncompliance goes only to the weight of the evidence. 28 C4th at 414; People v Adams (1976) 59 CA3d 559, 567, 131 CR 190. Test results are admissible if they are reliable, and reliability can be shown by meeting the foundational requirements of People v Adams (1976) 59 CA3d 559, 131 CR 190. For discussion, see §55.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§55.38 XII. EXPERT TESTIMONY

Prosecution scientific experts are generally called to testify to the fact that the alcohol testing equipment was properly maintained, calibrated, and functioning at the time the test was given. The prosecution may also use experts to testify, with respect to charges under Veh C §23152(a), to the general nature of alcohol or drugs and their effects on individuals, and to be given various scenarios consistent with the fact situation of the case and to render an opinion on whether the defendant was "under the influence" or, at least, whether the facts are consistent with that conclusion. Absorption rates, elimination rates, and the physical and mental effects of alcohol are routinely the subjects of such testimony. See, e.g., People v Warlick (2008) 162 CA4th Supp 1, 77 CR3d 564 (prosecutor may try to prove violation of Veh C §23152(b) with expert testimony regarding retrograde extrapolation). The defense may call an expert to contradict the prosecution's expert's testimony.

Counsel can and should require the testimony of the analyst who actually performed the analysis of the blood, urine, or breath as opposed to the testimony of another expert opining on the basis of analysis test records. See Melendez-Diaz v Massachusetts (2009) ___ US ___, 174 L Ed 2d 314, 129 S Ct 2527. The California Supreme Court has granted review in People v Lopez (review granted Dec. 12, 2009, S177046; superseded opinion at 177 CA4th 202, 98 CR3d 825), which concerns the effect of Melendez-Diaz and whether a defendant was denied her right of confrontation under the Sixth Amendment when the trial court admitted into evidence the results of blood-alcohol level tests and a report prepared by a criminalist who did not testify at trial.

Ø Note: Virtually all experts hold the opinion that a person with a blood-alcohol level of 0.08 or greater is "under the influence" and cannot drive a vehicle safely.

§55.39 XIII. JURY INSTRUCTIONS

Judicial Council of California Criminal Jury Instructions 2100-2131 contain the basic instructions for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs cases. Counsel should not, however, feel tied to CALCRIM. Both defense counsel and prosecutors should fashion their own instructions when the trial presents issues not covered by standard instructions.

§55.40 XIV. ROLE OF DEPARTMENT OF MOTOR VEHICLES

On arrest for violation of Veh C §23152(a)-(b), or related Vehicle Code sections, the arrestee's license is seized by the arresting agency, which in return provides the arrestee with a temporary license allowing him or her to drive for 30 days after the date of issue. See Veh C §13382. The Department of Motor Vehicles must review the order of suspension before its effective date. Veh C §13557(c). The arrestee may also request a hearing; the request must be made within 10 days after the notice of the order. Veh C §13558. Neither administrative review nor an administrative hearing stay the suspension or revocation; but if the DMV cannot make a determination before the 30-day temporary license expires, the DMV must stay the effective date of the order of suspension or revocation pending its determination. Veh C §§13557(d), 13558(e).

Ø Note: Documents handed to the arrestee at the time of the arrest set out his or her rights, but tend to be confusing.

The issues to be determined at a DMV administrative per se hearing are the following:

- Reasonable cause. Did the police agency have reasonable cause to believe that the licensee was driving in violation of Veh C §23152 or related sections?
- Lawful arrest. Was the licensee placed under arrest lawfully?
- 0.08 percent or more BAC. Was the licensee driving a motor vehicle at a time when he or she had 0.08 percent or more blood-alcohol content?

If there was a refusal to be tested, the issues to be determined are these:

- Reasonable cause.

Ø Note: The loss-of-license sanction for a refusal under Pen C §§13353 and 23612 is conditioned on the DMV's finding of a lawful arrest predicated on probable cause. Therefore, the relevant inquiry for purposes of suspension is not whether the licensee was actually driving, but whether the police officer had reasonable cause to believe that the licensee was driving while under the influence. Troppman v Valverde (2007) 40 C4th 1121, 1128, 57 CR3d 306.

- Lawful arrest.
- Advisement of consequences. Did the officer advise of the consequences of refusing, in accordance with statutory requirements?
- Refusal to be tested. Did the arrestee refuse to submit to or fail to complete a chemical test?

In essence, the criminal action and the DMV administrative per se hearing are separate proceedings and each will generally not affect the result of the other unless the defendant has been found not guilty (not a dismissal or a successful Pen C §1385 application) of an alleged Veh C §23152(b) violation. In that event, the DMV takes the position that it no longer has jurisdiction over the hearing and as such a favorable decision will be granted to the applicant on proof (normally by way of certification of the minute order) of the not guilty finding. If a DMV administrative hearing has been held before the not guilty finding, counsel may move to set aside an adverse administrative decision based on that finding. Even when the defendant has performed all required acts under an adverse DMV decision, counsel should seek a set-aside of the DMV order to assist the client if a future, similar violation occurs, i.e., the DMV record will be eradicated and therefore cannot be used against the licensee in a future hearing.

Ø Note: Although DMV proceedings and court proceedings are distinct and separate, the court on conviction automatically notifies the DMV of the conviction, as, e.g., a first, second, or third DUI offense; the DMV then takes separate action under the Vehicle Code by notifying the defendant of a license suspension regardless of the DMV administrative per se outcome. Such notifications almost always result in suspension or restriction, or both, of the license regardless of the court order or the DMV administrative per se outcome. The chart below does not address these ramifications, because they are complex and cannot be adequately set out to include all permutations. Counsel is advised to be thoroughly familiar with the controlling and applicable sections of the Vehicle Code as well as any licensing and Business and Professions Code requirements that may apply to a client.

The following chart provides a summary of DMV penalties for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs, or both (Veh C §§13352, 23152).

Ø Note: Restricted licenses may be available contingent on the nature of the offense and requirements such as attendance at an alcohol program, filing of insurance documentation (SR-22), interlock device installation, etc. See Veh C §13352(a).

DMV Penalties for Driving Under the Influence of Alcohol or Drugs (Veh C §§13352, 23152, 23612)

First offense	0.08 or greater	6-month suspension. Veh C §13352(a)(1)
	Refusal to submit to testing	1-year suspension. Veh C §23612(a)(1)(D)
Second offense within 10 years	0.08 or greater	2-year suspension. Veh C §13352(a)(3), (6) (effective July 1, 2010)
	Refusal to submit to testing	2-year revocation. Veh C §23612(a)(1)(D)
Third offense within 10 years	0.08 or greater	3-year revocation. Veh C §13352(a)(5), (7) (effective July 1, 2010)
	Refusal to submit to testing	3-year revocation. Veh C §23612(a)(1)(D)
Fourth offense within 10 years or second offense following prior DUI felony	0.08 or greater	4-year revocation. Veh C §13352(a)(9)
	Refusal to submit to testing	4-year revocation. Veh C §23612(a)(1)(D)

§55.41 XV. PROBATION TERMINATION AND REVOCATION; EXPUNGEMENT

On motion of the probation officer, the District Attorney, or the probationer, the court may modify, reevaluate, or terminate probation. Pen C §1203.2. In a successful termination of probation, the defendant is entitled to have the conviction expunged and the misdemeanor record vacated. See Pen C §1203.4. Although the misdemeanor record is vacated, the fact of violation will remain as a prior offense during the 10-year period for purposes of enhancement if a subsequent violation of Veh C §23152 or §23153 occurs. See Pen C §1203.4.

In People v Canty (2004) 32 C4th 1266, 1285, 14 CR3d 1, the California Supreme Court held that driving under the influence is not a nonviolent drug possession offense within the meaning of Proposition 36. Consequently, a defendant who is convicted of DUI and a drug offense, is not eligible for probation and drug treatment under Proposition 36, the Substance Abuse and Crime Prevention Act of 2000. Also, a conviction under Veh C §23152(b) within 5 years before conviction of a nonviolent drug offense will make the defendant ineligible for Proposition 36 probation for the drug offense. In People v Eribarne (2004) 124 CA4th 1463, 22 CR3d 417, the court held that driving under the influence is a "misdemeanor conviction involving physical injury or the threat of physical injury to another person," within the meaning of Pen C §1210.1(b)(1). Consequently, a defendant who has a DUI conviction for an incident that occurred within 5 years of a nonviolent drug possession offense is not eligible for Proposition 36 probation if he or she has a prior serious felony conviction (see Pen C §§667.5(c), 1192.7(c)). Eligibility for probation under Proposition 36 is discussed in §38.4.

§56.1 I. OVERVIEW

This chapter covers proceedings brought against minors for violating criminal laws. These proceedings, instituted under Welf & I C §602, are frequently called "602" proceedings. The chapter also discusses procedures for filing cases against minors in adult court. This chapter does not discuss dependency proceedings under Welf & I C §300; on dependency proceedings, see California Juvenile Dependency Practice (Cal CEB Annual). This chapter also does not discuss infraction and status offender proceedings. See Welf & I C §601.

Juvenile delinquency proceedings are governed primarily by the Welfare & Institutions Code, the Penal Code (which defines the offenses), and the applicable Rules of Court, Cal Rules of Ct 5.500-5.830, issued pursuant to Welf & I C §265. The superior court has original jurisdiction of cases involving violations of criminal laws by minors. Welf & I C §603. The Welfare and Institutions Code provisions regarding delinquency generally, but not always, use the term "minor" to refer to a person who was under 18 at the time an offense is alleged to have occurred. See In re Jeffrey M. (2006) 141 CA4th 1017, 1023, 46 CR3d 533; In re Charles G. (2004) 115 CA4th 608, 614, 9 CR3d 503. "Juvenile court" is the division of the superior court in which juvenile delinquency proceedings take place. See Welf & I C §246. The juvenile court is considered a civil rather than a criminal forum even though it adjudicates violations of criminal laws by minors. However, in juvenile court, a minor receives many of the same constitutional protections that an adult would receive. See In re Gault (1967) 387 US 1, 18 L Ed 2d 527, 87 S Ct 1428; In re Winship (1970) 397 US 358, 25 L Ed 2d 368, 90 S Ct 1068. See §56.5. The juvenile court incorporates elements of both criminal court and dependency court. In juvenile court, there is no "conviction" within the meaning of the adult criminal law. Welf & I C §203; People v Weidert (1985) 39 C3d 836, 846, 218 CR 57. The terminology used in juvenile court is that the minor is "found to come within the provisions of Welf & I C §602." Minors "admit" or "deny" an offense, rather than plead "guilty" or "not guilty." Juvenile petitions are "sustained," or found "true." Minors are "committed" to juvenile hall, a ranch, or the Division of Juvenile Justice (DJJ) (formerly known as the California Youth Authority (CYA)), rather than being sentenced to jail or prison.

A minor is usually arraigned at his or her first hearing. If the minor is in custody, the arraignment hearing is called a "detention hearing." If the matter is not resolved at the first or a subsequent hearing by a plea, and neither the court nor the prosecutor dismisses the case, a "jurisdiction hearing" (trial) is held. If the court determines that a minor has committed an offense, it "sustains" the petition and either sentences the minor immediately or sets a "disposition" (sentencing) hearing. The dispositions available in juvenile court can be less severe than those available in adult court. See, e.g., Welf & I C §1769 (person committed to DJJ for felony generally must be released by age 21 or 25, depending on offense). In addition, minors adjudicated delinquent in juvenile court proceedings have the opportunity to petition the court to have their records sealed unless they were found to have committed certain serious offenses. See Welf & I C §§781, 1772; for discussion, see §41.13. However, under the Three Strikes law (Pen C §§667(b)-(i), 1170.12), certain serious and violent offenses committed by minors and adjudicated in juvenile court may be charged as strikes in a later criminal prosecution. See §56.28. In addition, an adult court may consider a defendant's juvenile history as a factor in denying probation or imposing an aggravated term in sentencing after a later criminal conviction. Cal Rules of Ct 4.414(b)(1), 4.421(b). Offenses that result in a commitment to the DJJ may also lead to civil commitments under the Sexually Violent Predator Act (SVPA) (Welf & I C §§6600-6609.3) or extensions of the DJJ commitment on grounds of dangerousness (Welf & I C §§1800-1803). See §56.66 on extended commitment and chap 48 on commitment under the SVPA. Juvenile offenses sometimes trigger sex offender registration requirements and firearms restrictions. See §56.6.

Welf & I C §602 petition filing deadline.	Minor must be released from custody unless petition is filed within 48 hours (excluding noncourt days) after minor is taken into custody. If minor misrepresents his or her age as 18 or older, causing unavoidable delay, deadlines do not begin to run until minor's true age is discovered.	Welf & I C §§631(a), 631.1; Cal Rules of Ct 5.752.
Detention hearing: required after minor is taken into custody.	When minor is taken into custody without warrant on a belief that the minor has committed misdemeanors not involving violence or threat of violence or possession or use of weapon, minor must be released unless within 24 hours a supervising probation officer approves further detention in writing. This rule does not apply when the detention hearing occurs within 24 hours or when the minor is currently on probation or parole. Deadline for holding detention hearing is as soon as possible, but no more than 48 hours after minor is taken into custody, excluding noncourt days.	Welf & I C §§631(b), 632(b).
	In all other cases, detention hearing is required as soon as possible, but no later than end of next judicial day following filing of petition.	Welf & I C §632(a)-(b); Cal Rules of Ct 5.752.
	When parents or guardians received no actual hearing notice and were not present at hearing, they may file affidavit requesting new hearing. New hearing must be held within 24 hours after filing of affidavit, excluding noncourt days.	Welf & I C §637; Cal Rules of Ct 5.762(a).
Continuance of detention hearing or rehearing.	One court day, on motion of minor, parent, or guardian.	Welf & I C §638.
Detention rehearing ("Dennis H." or "contested detention hearing").	Must be held within 3 court days after request to consider prima facie case and grounds for detention. Continuance may be granted not to exceed 5 court days if witnesses are unavailable.	Welf & I C §637; Cal Rules of Ct 5.764.
Fitness hearing.	Notice of fitness hearing must be given at least 5 court days before fitness hearing.	Cal Rules of Ct 5.766(b).
	Fitness hearing must be held and court must rule on fitness before jurisdiction hearing is held.	Cal Rules of Ct 5.766(c).
Writ timeline for fitness hearing.	Minor must file writ petition challenging fitness determination within 20 days after arraignment in adult court; jeopardy attaches at start of jurisdiction hearing. After written or oral notice to the court that writ review will be sought, prosecutor has right to continue jurisdiction hearing at least 2 court days.	Cal Rules of Ct 5.770(g), (i), 5.772(g)-(h), (j); People v Superior Court (Rodrigo O.) (1994) 22 CA4th 1297, 1302, 27 CR2d 796.
Jurisdiction hearing.	(a) When minor is detained, hearing must be held within 15 court days after date of order	Welf & I C §657(a)(1); Cal Rules of Ct directing detention.	5.774(b).

	(b) When minor is not detained, hearing must be held within 30 calendar days after date §602 petition is filed, unless minor is unavailable.	Welf & I C §657(a); Cal Rules of Ct 5.774(a), (c).
Dispositional hearing.	Immediately after jurisdiction hearing, unless continuance is needed for social study or on motion of court, parent, or guardian to receive other evidence. Continuance may be for no more than 10 court days if minor is detained and no more than 30 calendar days after date petition is filed if minor is not detained, unless time is waived. Hearing may be continued for additional 15 days for good cause shown if minor is not detained.	Welf & I C §702.
Request by minor, parent, or guardian for judge to review referee's order.	Request must be made within 10 calendar days after service of written copy of referee's order.	Welf & I C §252; Cal Rules of Ct 5.542(a).
When review by judge required concerning referee's order.	When hearing before referee was reported, hearing de novo by judge is discretionary after reviewing record. Decision must be made, or extension requested, within 20 calendar days after receipt of request, or rehearing is deemed granted. Judge may extend 20 days to 45 days for good cause.	Welf & I C §252; Cal Rules of Ct 5.542(c).
	When hearing before referee was not reported, hearing de novo before judge must be granted.	Welf & I C §252; Cal Rules of Ct 5.542(b), (e).
Judge on own motion can grant rehearing following hearing by referee.	Within 20 court days after hearing by referee.	Cal Rules of Ct 5.542(d).
Deadline for filing appeal— before July 1, 2010.	Within 60 days of disposition, or within 60 days of when order becomes final, whichever comes later.	Cal Rules of Ct 8.400(d).
Deadline for filing appeal— beginning July 1, 2010.	Within 60 days after rendition of judgment or making of order being appealed.	Cal Rules of Ct 8.406(a)(1); see Cal Rules of Ct 8.406(a)(2)-(3) (referee not acting as temporary judge).

III. JURISDICTION AND VENUE

§56.3 A. Jurisdiction

The juvenile court exercises delinquency jurisdiction over a minor who has violated a law of the United States or California, or any city or county ordinance, while under age 18. Welf & I C §§602, 603. See In re Jose C. (2009) 45 C4th 534, 548, 87 CR3d 674 (juvenile court had jurisdiction over federal immigration law violation). However, under Welf & I C §602(b), the juvenile court does not have jurisdiction when a minor 14 years of age or older is charged with any of the following:

- First degree, special circumstance murder, with an allegation that the minor personally killed the victim; or
- An enumerated sex offense alleged to be subject to the One Strike provisions of Pen C §667.61, when it is alleged that the minor personally committed the offense.

The juvenile court also does not have jurisdiction over a minor who violated the law of another state, then fled to California; such a minor may be extradited in the same manner as an adult. Welf & I C §216.

The juvenile court has original jurisdiction over an offense committed while a person was under age 18 even though the person is 18 or older when charged. Welf & I C §603. A juvenile does not become an adult until the day of his or her 18th birthday. Johnson v Superior Court (1989) 208 CA3d 1093, 256 CR 651 (not an adult on day before birthday). However, someone who was a minor when the crime was committed but who has since turned 18 can sometimes waive the jurisdiction of the juvenile court for an offense committed as a juvenile. See §56.37. When a minor begins an offense while under 18 and that offense continues after the minor turns 18, prosecution may be initiated in the adult court. See People v Quiroz (2007) 155 CA4th 1420, 1430, 66 CR3d 767 (continuing conspiracy). A minor's emancipation does not interfere with the juvenile court's jurisdiction under Welf & I C §602. See Fam C §7050 (emancipated minors not subject to Welf & I C §§300, 601 proceedings, but no mention of §602).

When an examination into a defendant's age leads a judge in a criminal court to believe that a defendant was a minor on the date of the offense alleged, the judge must refer the matter to juvenile court. Welf & I C §604(a). A minor who represents himself or herself to be an adult but who is later determined to be a minor must be certified to the juvenile court. See Welf & I C §604(a); In re Harris (1993) 5 C4th 813, 21 CR2d 373 (after jury trial); In re Jermaine B. (1999) 69 CA4th 634, 81 CR2d 734 (after plea bargain). However, a minor who does not alert an adult court that he or she is a minor, and is then convicted in adult court, may not challenge the conviction after the trial court's jurisdiction has expired. People v Level (2002) 97 CA4th 1208, 1209, 119 CR2d 551. When the prosecution initiates the case in adult court, the minor bears the burden of proof concerning age. People v Nguyen (1990) 222 CA3d 1612, 272 CR 523.

In most cases, the juvenile court may maintain jurisdiction only until the minor turns age 21. Jurisdiction automatically terminates on the minor's 21st birthday. Welf & I C §607(a). When a minor is committed to the DJJ or a mental facility (see Welf & I C §702.3), and the commitment to either facility was based on an offense listed in Welf & I C §707(b), (d)(2), or (e), the court may maintain jurisdiction until the minor turns age 25. Welf & I C §607(b), (d). See In re Sim J. (1995) 38 CA4th 94, 45 CR2d 30; In re Tino V. (2002) 101 CA4th 510, 512, 124 CR2d 312. The court may also maintain jurisdiction for 2 years past the date of the commitment to the DJJ, even if that causes jurisdiction to extend past the ages described above. Welf & I C §§607(c), 1769-1770. In addition, the court's jurisdiction may continue past the ages described above if the minor has been committed as a dangerous person. See Welf & I C §§1800-1803, discussed in §56.66.

A court may vacate a DJJ commitment for a ward adjudicated for a §707(b) offense on the ground that the minor is not benefiting from the commitment (Welf & I C §779) and still retain jurisdiction over the ward until age 25. In re Antoine D. (2006) 137 CA4th 1314, 40 CR3d 885.

Infractions typically are not heard by the juvenile court. They may be handled by a juvenile hearing officer. See Welf & I C §256. In counties that have adopted the provisions of Welf & I C §603.5, adult courts handle charges against minors for traffic infractions and violations of local ordinances involving traffic or parking. However, this does not divest the juvenile court of jurisdiction.

Ø Note: In practice, juvenile courts usually terminate the probation of wards not committed to the DJJ long before the ward reaches 21 years of age. Juvenile courts are rarely interested in continuing to supervise wards who have reached adulthood and who are performing well on probation in the community. If a poorly performing ward over 18 is convicted of an adult offense, the juvenile court will usually terminate jurisdiction in light of the ward's grant of adult probation or commitment to prison.

The juvenile court must terminate jurisdiction whenever it concludes that the minor no longer requires the protection of wardship. In re Francecisco (1971) 16 CA3d 310, 94 CR 186.

§56.4 B. Venue

The venue for juvenile court is where the minor resides, is found, or commits the acts bringing him or her within Welf & I C §602. Welf & I C §651; Cal Rules of Ct 5.510. In practice, charges are filed and the jurisdictional hearing usually takes place in the county where the offense was committed. Between the jurisdictional and dispositional hearings, the court may transfer the matter to another county within California where the minor's parents or legal guardians reside. Welf & I C §750. The minor's best interests determine whether the matter should be transferred. Cal Rules of Ct 5.610(e). The receiving court must accept jurisdiction of the case. Cal Rules of Ct 5.612(a)(1); In re Carlos B. (1999) 76 CA4th 50, 55, 90 CR2d 72. The receiving county may appeal the transfer. Welf & I C §754. If the receiving county believes that a change of circumstances or additional facts indicate that the child does not reside in the receiving county, the receiving court may transfer the matter back to the original county. Cal Rules of Ct 5.612(f). But see In re J.C. (2002) 104 CA4th 984, 992, 128 CR2d 671 (criticizing practice of multiple transfers). See also In re R.D. (2008) 163 CA4th 679, 77 CR3d 793. If a minor or a person entitled to custody of a minor lives out-of-state or in a foreign country, and the minor is on probation, the court may order the minor sent to the other state or country. Welf & I C §738. See also Interstate Compact for Juveniles (Welf & I C §§1400-1403). However, the court cannot order a nonresident minor to stay out of California. See In re Adolfo M. (1990) 225 CA3d 1225, 1233, 275 CR 619.

IV. COMPARING ADULT AND JUVENILE COURTS

§56.5 A. Purpose of Juvenile Court Law

Juvenile delinquency proceedings are considered civil in nature. However, changes in the law during the last several decades have made the consequences of a delinquency adjudication more like those of a conviction for a crime, and have made more juvenile offenders eligible to be tried as adults. See In re Gregory K. (1980) 106 CA3d 164, 168 n2, 165 CR 35 (Welf & I C §602 proceedings are in reality criminal proceedings; view that §602 proceedings are for protection of minor is "pure fiction"). A minor receives many of the same constitutional protections as an adult. See In re Gault (1967) 387 US 1, 18 L Ed 2d 527, 87 S Ct 1428 (rights to counsel, to confront and cross-examine witnesses, against self-incrimination, to adequate notice of charges, and to exclude unconstitutionally obtained evidence); In re Winship (1970) 397 US 358, 25 L Ed 2d 368, 90 S Ct 1068 (proof beyond reasonable doubt). However, important philosophical and practical differences between adult and juvenile courts remain. See In re Nan P. (1991) 230 CA3d 751, 281 CR 468; In re Teofilio A. (1989) 210 CA3d 571, 258 CR 540.

By statute, unless there is a contested issue of fact or law, juvenile proceedings are conducted in an informal, nonadversarial atmosphere. Welf & I C §680. The juvenile court places emphasis on the rehabilitation of minors. Welf & I C §202. See In re Carlos E. (2005) 127 CA4th 1529, 26 CR3d 551; In re Samuel V. (1990) 225 CA3d 511, 517, 277 CR 14. While the court is obligated to protect public safety, it must also act in the best interests of the minor. See Welf & I C §202(a). Any punishment imposed by the juvenile court must be consistent with the minor's best interest and the goal of rehabilitation. See Welf & I C §202(b); In re Myresheia W. (1998) 61 CA4th 734, 740, 72 CR2d 65; In re Samuel V. (1990) 225 CA3d 511, 517, 277 CR 14; In re Michael D. (1987) 188 CA3d 1392, 234 CR 103. In contrast to the criminal justice system for adults, which contains a purely punitive component separate from its rehabilitative goals, the juvenile court permits punishment as a rehabilitative tool, but not for retribution. See Welf & I C §202; In re Samuel V. (1990) 225 CA3d 511, 517, 277 CR 14. The court cannot place a minor into foster care as a means of punishment. Welf & I C §202(e). When the minor is no longer a ward of the court, "the guidance he or she received should enable him or her to be a law-abiding and productive member of his or her family and the community." Welf & I C §202(b).

This rehabilitative aspect of punishment also applies to DJJ commitments. A minor cannot be committed to the DJJ unless the court finds it probable that the minor "will be benefited by the reformatory educational discipline or other treatment" offered there. Welf & I C §734. If the court finds that a minor will not benefit from DJJ treatment, and no suitable alternatives exist, the court should dismiss the case. In re Aline D. (1975) 14 C3d 557, 565, 121 CR 816.

§56.6 B. Comparing Adult and Juvenile Courts

Because of the longer possible sentences and the possibility of a state prison sentence in adult court, minors are often better off remaining in the juvenile system. However, a minor who is the subject of delinquency proceedings in juvenile court does not have the benefit of the following rights, which are available to adults accused of a criminal offense (and to minors found unfit for juvenile court treatment and tried as adults):

- Bail or O.R. release (In re William M. (1970) 3 C3d 16, 26 n17, 89 CR 33; Aubry v Gadbois (1975) 50 CA3d 470, 123 CR 365);
- Jury trial (People v Superior Court (Carl W.) (1975) 15 C3d 271, 274, 124 CR 47);
- Deferred entry of judgment for drug offenses (see Pen C §§1000-1000.8), available to adults only according to the wording of the statutes;
- Drug treatment instead of incarceration for nonviolent drug possession pursuant to Proposition 36 (In re Jose Z. (2004) 116 CA4th 953, 10 CR3d 842);
- A preliminary hearing (see Pen C §859b); and
- A probable cause determination made within 48 hours (except noncourt days) of a warrantless arrest (Alfredo A. v Superior Court (1994) 6 C4th 1212, 26 CR2d 623 (72 hours, excluding noncourt days, adequate)); see §56.20.

Despite the absence of these rights, juvenile court provides many advantages over adult court. Juvenile court provides a broader range of dispositional options, options which generally have a far greater emphasis on rehabilitation, education, and training. A ward of the juvenile court cannot be sentenced to state prison in a juvenile case. Although a juvenile court sentence generally can extend only until the minor is 25 years old (Welf & I C §1769), the adult court has jurisdiction to sentence a minor to life in prison. People v Spears (1983) 33 C3d 279, 188 CR 454. In juvenile court, minors 14 and older who are charged with many nonviolent felonies may participate in the juvenile deferred entry of judgment program, which provides for a complete dismissal of the charges after a maximum of 3 years of probation. Minors charged with less serious offenses and minors under 14 may be able to participate in informal probation without admitting any charges, and ultimately have their cases dismissed. See §§56.15-56.17 for discussion of these programs.

Most, but not all, legal rules applicable to criminal cases apply in juvenile court. Minors have the right to notice of the charges, the right to counsel, the right to confront and cross-examine witnesses, and the privilege against self-incrimination. In re Gault (1967) 387 US 1, 18 L Ed 2d 527, 87 S Ct 1428. Charges must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt before a true finding can be made. Welf & I C §701. A minor may not be shackled at a juvenile court hearing absent some showing of need based on the minor's conduct in the courtroom or at juvenile hall. See Tiffany A. v Superior Court (2007) 150 CA4th 1344, 59 CR3d 363. However, minors do not have the right to a trial by jury. McKeiver v Pennsylvania (1971) 403 US 528, 29 L Ed 2d 647, 91 S Ct 1976. The juvenile court does have the right to impanel an advisory jury. People v Superior Court (Carl W.) (1975) 15 C3d 271, 274, 124 CR 47. But see In re Javier A. (1984) 159 CA3d 913, 206 CR 386 (lack of right to jury trial should be reconsidered in light of transformation of juvenile court into more punitive system).

Ø Practice tip: The disparity between sentences in adult court and juvenile court can surprise a criminal law attorney unaccustomed to juvenile court. It is not uncommon for a minor to be removed from his or her home and sent to foster care, a ranch, or a group home for committing a minor misdemeanor offense that would not have resulted in custody time for an adult. See Welf & I C §726 (required findings for removal from home). On the other hand, a minor who commits a crime such as robbery, residential burglary, or sexual molestation of a child that would ordinarily result in a stiff jail sentence or prison commitment for an adult may receive less or even no custody time, particularly if the offense qualifies for deferred entry of judgment. See Welf & I C §§790-795.

§56.6A C. Selected Collateral Consequences of Juvenile Adjudications

A juvenile adjudication may have many collateral consequences for a minor in areas such as military service, driver's license, employment, public benefits, and housing. Some of the most significant consequences are discussed below.

Use of priors for enhancement of sentence. Generally, juvenile delinquency adjudications, unlike criminal convictions, cannot be used in later criminal proceedings as statutory enhancements to the defendant's sentence. See Welf & I C §203 (juvenile adjudications are not deemed a conviction of a crime for any purpose). Thus, for example, a juvenile prior for petty theft cannot be used to elevate a misdemeanor petty theft to a felony under Pen C §666 (petty theft with prior). In re Anthony R. (1984) 154 CA3d 772, 201 CR 299. Also, an adult sentence may not be enhanced under Pen C §667(a) by previous offenses adjudicated in juvenile court. See People v West (1984) 154 CA3d 100, 107, 201 CR 63.

A significant exception to this general rule is the Three Strikes law. Minors 16 or older who commit a serious felony under Pen C §1192.7(c) or a violent felony under Pen C §667.5(c) may suffer a strike if the court finds the offense true. See §56.28 for further discussion of strike implications for minors. Additionally, a criminal court may consider a defendant's juvenile history as a factor in denying probation or imposing an aggravated term in sentencing after a later criminal conviction. Cal Rules of Ct 4.414(b)(1), 4.421(b).

Use of priors for impeachment. The fact of a juvenile adjudication cannot be used to impeach a witness. However, the underlying conduct that resulted in an adjudication of delinquency can be used in a later court proceeding for impeachment, subject to Evid C §352 limitations. People v Lee (1994) 28 CA4th 1724, 1738, 34 CR2d 723.

Immigration consequences. Adjudications in juvenile court do not count as convictions for immigration purposes, although they may trigger conduct-based grounds to deport or exclude from admission. See §52.4.

Sex offender registration. In some cases, a juvenile adjudication will require registration as a sex offender; the registration requirement lasts for life. See People v Allen (1999) 76 CA4th 999, 90 CR2d 662. To be subject to the registration requirement, the minor must have been committed to the CYA, DJJ, or like institution in another state for commission of a sex offense described by Pen C §290.008(c). Pen C §290.008(a)-(b); In re Derrick B. (2006) 39 C4th 535, 47 CR3d 13 (discussing former Pen C §290(d)(3); now see §290.008); In re Crockett (2008) 159 CA4th 751, 761, 71 CR3d 632 (no registration when Texas juvenile not sent to equivalent of DJJ). A trial court has discretion to save a minor from the registration requirement by committing the minor to the DJJ solely on the current, nonsex offense and by electing not to aggregate a previously adjudicated sex offense listed in Pen C §290.008(c). In re Alex N. (2005) 132 CA4th 18, 33 CR3d 172 (discussing former Pen C §290). But see *In re G.C. (*2007) 157 CA4th 405, 68 CR3d 523 (court must "consider" most recent sustained petition when committing a person to the DJJ, even if most recent petition is for a sex offense that will require registration). Not all offenses that would require an adult to register are listed in Pen C §290.008(c). See, e.g., Pen C §§243.4, 266, 269, 311.3, 314. While adults convicted of any criminal offense may be required to register pursuant to Pen C §290.006, if the court makes specified findings and states its reason for the order, that subdivision does not apply to minors. In re Derrick B., supra (discussing former Pen C §290).

An order sealing juvenile records relieves a minor of the obligation to register as a sex offender. Welf & I C §781(a). See §56.68. Like adults, minors who do not have a duty to register as a sex offender under current law may be required to do so in the future. See Smith v Doe (2003) 538 US 84, 155 L Ed 2d 164, 123 S Ct 1140 (sex offender registration not subject to ex post facto requirements); People v Allen, supra (same holding applied to minors).

Narcotics offender registration. The juvenile court has no authority to require a minor who committed a drug offense to register as a narcotics offender. In re Luisa Z. (2000) 78 CA4th 978, 991, 93 CR2d 231.

Firearms restrictions. Wardship findings based on many offenses will prevent a minor from being legally able to possess a firearm until the minor becomes 30 years of age. Pen C §12021(c), (e). See, e.g., In re David S. (2005) 133 CA4th 1160, 35 CR3d 309.

§56.7 D. Confidentiality: Who May Be Present at Juvenile Court Hearings

Juvenile proceedings are ordinarily confidential and are closed to the public unless the minor and the minor's parent or guardian request that a hearing be open to the public. See Welf & I C §§675-676(a). The minor and his or her parents or guardians are entitled to be present, as are other individuals with a sufficient interest in the proceeding to be entitled to notice under Welf & I C §§290.1-290.2. Welf & I C §§676, 679; Cal Rules of Ct 5.530. In certain cases, the prosecuting witness is entitled to have two support persons present. Welf & I C §676(a). See Pen C §868.5. The court may also permit attendance by anyone else, including family members of the minor, with a "direct and legitimate interest in the particular case or the work of the court." Welf & I C §676(a). See Cal Rules of Ct 5.534(f)(1).

The public may be present when a petition alleges one of the serious offenses enumerated in Welf & I C §676, unless the minor establishes a reasonable likelihood of substantial prejudice. Cheyenne K. v Superior Court (1989) 208 CA3d 331, 256 CR 68; In re Jesse McM. (1980) 105 CA3d 187, 164 CR 199. Juvenile hearings involving certain sex offenses must be closed if the prosecution makes such a motion on the basis of the complaining witness's request. Welf & I C §676(b)(1).

If a minor 14 years of age or older is arrested for the commission of a serious felony (see Pen C §1192.7(c)), a law enforcement agency may disclose the minor's name and the offenses the minor allegedly committed to interested persons on request. Welf & I C §827.5.

§56.8 E. Release of Information

Generally, only the persons or agencies listed in Welf & I C §827 are entitled to inspect juvenile case files without a court order. Persons entitled to inspect juvenile case files without a court order include the prosecutor, probation officers, Child Protective Services workers, minors, the minor's parents or guardian, the attorney representing the petitioning agency in a dependency action, and the attorneys for the parties (including attorneys for the minor's parents or guardian). See Welf & I C §827(a)(1). These parties may also copy the case file without a court order. Welf & I C §827(a)(5); Cal Rules of Ct 5.552(b)(1). Attorneys for the parties may inspect the records even if not acting as attorney of record for the party in the juvenile case. Juvenile case files cannot be obtained by subpoena. Lorenza P. v Superior Court (1988) 197 CA3d 607, 242 CR 877.

"Juvenile case files" include all documents filed in a juvenile court case; documents made available to probation officers in preparation of reports to the court; documents relating to a child concerning whom a petition has been filed in juvenile court that are maintained in the office files of probation officers and social workers; transcripts, records, or reports relating to matters prepared or released by the court or probation department; and exhibits admitted into evidence at juvenile court hearings. Cal Rules of Ct 5.552(a). Juvenile case files include police, probation, and social worker records concerning the case, even if no petition was ultimately filed. See In re Elijah S. (2005) 125 CA4th 1532, 24 CR3d 16.

The court has broad discretion to release records of a juvenile case. Welf & I C §827(a)(1)(P); In re Elijah S. (2005) 125 CA4th 1532, 1541, 24 CR3d 16 (dependency case). To obtain records, Judicial Council Form JV-570 (Petition for Disclosure of Juvenile Court Records) should be used. On records that may be sought and the required notice procedure, see Cal Rules of Ct 5.552. Several statutes provide for the release of information regarding specified felonies. See, e.g., Welf & I C §§676, 827.5, 827.6. In Los Angeles County, law enforcement agencies are required, on request, to release juvenile records to other law enforcement agencies (including prosecutors), any peace officer, child protective agencies, the DMV, and an attorney representing the minor in a juvenile or criminal case. Welf & I C §827.9(b), (p).

The court's broad authority to order the release of juvenile records does not apply to records sealed under Welf & I C §781. In re James H. (2007) 154 CA4th 1078, 1083, 65 CR3d 410.

§56.9 F. Parental Costs

Parents or guardians may be required to pay specified costs if they have the ability to pay. Liability for restitution is discussed in §56.61. They may be required to reimburse the county for the following costs (Welf & I C §§903-903.25, 914):

- Supervised home detention;
- Electronic surveillance;
- Reasonable costs of support, such as food, clothing, shelter, and medical care, for the minor while placed outside the home or committed to a facility such as juvenile hall or boot camp; and
- The minor's legal services.

The county board of supervisors may designate a county financial evaluation officer, who recommends an amount to be paid by the parents or guardians. Welf & I C §903.45. The court may order a parent or guardian to appear before a financial evaluation officer designated by the county for determination of the amount to be paid by the parent or guardian. Welf & I C §§639, 903.45. The court must find that the parents or guardians have the ability to pay before ordering payment. Welf & I C §§903-903.25; Pen C §987.4. The court might be limited to ordering the amount that the parents or guardians could reasonably pay in the next 6 months. See People v Viray (2005) 134 CA4th 1186, 36 CR3d 693 (adult case).

Ø Note: When it appears that a minor may have waived his or her right to counsel to save a parent or guardian the cost of legal services, the court must inquire and determine on the basis of the totality of the circumstances whether the waiver is voluntary and intelligent. Otherwise, the waiver is ineffective. In re Ricky H. (1970) 2 C3d 513, 86 CR 76.

Parents or guardians are not liable for the cost of incarcerating a minor for his or her own protection, nor are they liable for the costs of incarceration if the minor is incarcerated to protect society. See Welf & I C §903; In re Jerald C. (1984) 36 C3d 1, 6, 201 CR 342 (reimbursement to parent ordered for attorney fees and medical treatment).

Ø Note: Although Welf & I C §903.2 was amended in 1996 to specifically provide that parents or guardians may be liable for the cost of home supervision, this directly contradicts the holding of In re Nathaniel Z. (1986) 187 CA3d 1132, 232 CR 378. Because the court in In re Nathaniel Z. based its decision partly on constitutional concerns, it is unclear whether a parent or guardian can be held liable for those costs under §903.2 as amended. No published opinion has addressed this issue.

V. INITIATING PROCEEDINGS IN JUVENILE COURT

§56.10 A. Arrest; Police Officer Options

A police officer may arrest a minor without a warrant for a misdemeanor or a felony if the officer has probable cause to believe that the minor committed the offense. There is no requirement that the crime occur in the officer's presence. Welf & I C §625(a); In re Samuel V. (1990) 225 CA3d 511, 513, 277 CR 14. A police officer may also detain a minor on the basis of a reasonable belief that the minor is a truant. In re James D. (1987) 43 C3d 903, 239 CR 663.

Ø Note: By contrast, except in specified circumstances, a police officer may not arrest an adult they suspect of committing a misdemeanor unless the misdemeanor was committed in the officer's presence, or the officer has an arrest warrant. Pen C §836.

A peace officer may also arrest a minor with a warrant. The court may issue a warrant after the filing of a petition alleging the minor comes within Welf & I C §§601 or 602 if the court concludes (Welf & I C §663):

- The conduct, behavior, or home environment of the minor may endanger the minor;
- Personal service has been unsuccessful or the minor's whereabouts are unknown; or
- The minor has willfully evaded service of the notice regarding the future court hearing.

Once arrested, an officer must advise a minor of his or her constitutional rights to remain silent and to counsel. Welf & I C §625.

An officer has four options after arresting a minor without a warrant (Welf & I C §§626, 626.5):

(1) Release the minor, perhaps after a warning, and take no further action;

(2) Release the minor and refer him or her to a community agency, e.g., one that offers counseling services;

(3) Release the minor and issue a citation ordering him or her to appear at the juvenile probation department; or

(4) Deliver the minor to juvenile authorities for detention.

The officer should choose the alternative that least restricts the minor's freedom of movement, provided that alternative is compatible with the best interests of the minor and the community. Welf & I C §626.5(b).

A minor age 14 or older who is taken into custody for a felony offense may not be released by the police officer until the minor has signed a written promise to appear before a probation officer or the juvenile court. See Promise to Appear—Juvenile Delinquency (Juvenile 14 Years or Older) (Judicial Council Form JV-635). The police officer may also require a parent, guardian, or relative to sign a promise to appear with the minor. Welf & I C §629. If the minor is age 14 or older and is detained by the police officer for any offense listed in Welf & I C §707(b) or for the personal use of a firearm in the commission or attempted commission of a felony, the minor must be held in custody until a detention hearing. Welf & I C §625.3.

If a police officer decides that juvenile court proceedings are required and that the best interests of the minor and the community require his or her detention, the officer must take the minor to a probation officer as soon as possible, but no later than 24 hours after the minor was first detained if the minor was detained without a warrant for a misdemeanor. Welf & I C §§626(d), 626.5(b). A person under the age of 18 may be detained only in a juvenile facility; he or she cannot legally be confined in an adult jail. See Welf & I C §§207.1, 208, 208.5; Cal Rules of Ct 5.758(b).

When an officer detains a minor, the officer must immediately notify the minor's parents that the minor is being detained (Welf & I C §627(a)), and must allow the minor to make two completed phone calls within 1 hour after being taken into custody (Welf & I C §627(b)). One completed call is allowed to be made to the minor's parent or guardian, a responsible relative, or employer. The second completed call is allowed to be made to an attorney. The officer must also give the probation officer to whom the minor is delivered a written statement of probable cause for the detention. Welf & I C §§626, 626.5.

§56.11 B. Probation Officer's Options and Duties at Intake

When a minor is booked into juvenile hall or another juvenile custodial facility, the probation officer must investigate the minor and the circumstances of the offense (Welf & I C §652; Cal Rules of Ct 5.514-5.516) and decide which of the following choices to make:

- Counsel the minor, release the minor with no further action, and close the case (Welf & I C §628.1; Cal Rules of Ct 5.514(c)(1)(B));
- Refer the minor to a nonjudicial agency or community program and close the case 21 days later if no further action appears necessary (Welf & I C §§653.7, 654; Cal Rules of Ct 5.514(c)(1)(C));
- Place the minor on a program of informal probation or supervision (Welf & I C §§653.7, 654; Cal Rules of Ct 5.514(c)(2)); or
- Refer the case to the prosecutor for filing (Welf & I C §§650, 653.1, 653.5; Cal Rules of Ct 5.514(d)); and do one of the following:
- Release the minor to a parent, guardian, or responsible relative (the criteria for detention are enumerated in Welf & I C §628);
- Place the minor on home supervision (Welf & I C §628.1, discussed in §56.13); or
- Detain the minor in custody (Welf & I C §628).

The probation officer is required to refer certain types of cases to the prosecutor within 48 hours. Welf & I C §653.5; Cal Rules of Ct 5.514. Section 653.5 also requires the probation officer to refer the family of a minor to such services as are appropriate to prevent or eliminate the need for the removal of the minor from his or her home.

The probation officer must inform the minor and parent or guardian of the minor's constitutional rights to remain silent and to have counsel. If the minor or parent requests counsel, the probation officer must notify the juvenile court judge, who appoints an attorney. Welf & I C §627.5. For further discussion of juvenile statements, see §56.51; see also chap 23 (confessions and admissions).

Whenever a minor appears to come within the description of both Welf & I C §§300 and 602, the probation department and the county welfare department confer to determine which status will serve both the best interests of the minor and the protection of society. The juvenile court considers this recommendation but is not bound by it. Welf & I C §241.1(a). See §56.25.

The probation department, child welfare department, and court have a continuing, affirmative duty to inquire whether a child for whom a petition is to be, or has been, filed under Welf & I C §602 is an Indian child, if the child is at risk of entering foster care or is in foster care. Welf & I C §224.3(a); In re Alejandro A. (2008) 160 CA4th 1343, 74 CR3d 44.

For further discussion of the minor's arrest and intake, see Welf & I C §§625.3, 626.6, 629.1. See also §9.9 on indictment of a minor.

C. Probation Officer's Options Concerning Detention

§56.12 1. When Release Required

The probation officer must release a minor already in custody except in the following situations (Welf & I C §628(a)):

- The minor is in need of proper and effective parental care or control and has no parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative; or has no parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative willing to exercise or capable of exercising that care or control; or has no parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative actually exercising that care or control.
- The minor is destitute or is not provided with the necessities of life or is not provided with a home or suitable place of abode.
- The minor is provided with a home that is an unfit place for him or her by reason of neglect, cruelty, depravity, or physical abuse by either of his or her parents, or by his or her legal guardian or other person in whose custody or care he or she is entrusted.
- Continued detention of the minor is a matter of immediate and urgent necessity for the protection of the minor or reasonable necessity for the protection of the person or property of another.
- The minor is likely to flee the jurisdiction of the court.
- The minor has violated an order of the juvenile court.
- The minor is physically dangerous to the public because of a mental or physical deficiency, disorder, or abnormality.

In determining the appropriateness of detention, the probation officer will conduct a nonaccusatory interview of the minor. Statements the minor makes at that time are admissible at the detention hearing. However, the statements made during the interview "are not admissible as substantive evidence, or for impeachment, in any subsequent proceeding to determine criminal guilt, whether juvenile or adult." In re Wayne H. (1979) 24 C3d 595, 602, 156 CR 344.

§56.13 2. Home Supervision

If the probation officer has determined that the detention is appropriate under Welf & I C §628, the minor must nonetheless be released on home supervision unless the probation officer determines the minor meets one of the criteria contained in paragraphs (1), (2), or (3) of Welf & I C §628(a) (Welf & I C §628.1):

- The minor is in need of proper and effective parental care or control and has no parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative; or has no parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative willing to exercise or capable of exercising that care or control; or has no parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative actually exercising that care or control.
- The minor is destitute or is not provided with the necessities of life or is not provided with a home or suitable place of abode.
- The minor is provided with a home which is an unfit place for him or her by reason of neglect, cruelty, depravity or physical abuse by either of his or her parents, or by his or her legal guardian or other person in whose custody or care he or she is entrusted.

Home supervision may include curfew, school attendance, and court attendance requirements. Welf & I C §628.1.

To be placed on home supervision, the minor must sign a written promise to abide by specific conditions, e.g., curfew and regular school attendance. Welf & I C §628.1.

While on home supervision, a minor is still considered detained for purposes of computing the time within which he or she must be given a jurisdiction hearing. Welf & I C §628.1. However, a minor is not entitled to receive any time credits for time spent on home supervision or electronic surveillance, or while in any nonsecured setting such as a group or foster home. See In re Randy J. (1994) 22 CA4th 1497, 1503, 28 CR2d 152.

§56.14 3. No Right to Bail

There is no constitutional right to bail in juvenile court. Schall v Martin (1984) 467 US 253, 81 L Ed 2d 207, 104 S Ct 2403; Aubry v Gadbois (1975) 50 CA3d 470, 123 CR 365. See In re William M. (1970) 3 C3d 16, 26 n17, 89 CR 33. Nor is there a statutory right to bail. See In re Colar (1970) 9 CA3d 613, 616, 88 CR 651; In re Castro (1966) 243 CA2d 402, 412, 52 CR 469.

Ø Note: Minors found unfit for juvenile court are entitled to bail and O.R. on the same basis as adults. Welf & I C §207.1(c).

§56.15 D. Informal Probation

Probation officers can informally supervise a minor without asking for a petition to be filed. See Welf & I C §§652-654. This is called informal probation or informal supervision. The program of supervision may last as long as 6 months. See Welf & I C §654; Cal Rules of Ct 5.514(c)(2). The probation officer must make a diligent effort to place minors on informal probation as long as it does not jeopardize the interests of the minor and the community. Welf & I C §654. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.516(b) (factors to consider). Frequently, the program will require counseling, education, or substance abuse treatment. Pursuant to Welf & I C §654, a petition may be filed against the minor at any time within that 6-month period and for 90 days after the termination of the informal probation period. There is no requirement in the statute that the probation officer or prosecutor not file a petition if the minor is performing satisfactorily. However, in practice, a petition is unlikely to be filed if the minor is satisfactorily participating. After the filing of the petition, the court may also offer informal probation. Welf & I C §654.

The court may not impose a waiver of Fourth Amendment rights as a condition of informal probation. Derick B. v Superior Court (2009) 180 CA4th 295, 300, 102 CR3d 634.

Informal probation may include a restitution order under Welf & I C §654(a). However, informal probation may not be denied because the minor is unable to make restitution. See Charles S. v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 741, 750, 187 CR 144.

Neither the court nor the probation officer can establish a policy excluding all cases involving certain offenses from informal probation. Mark F. v Superior Court (1987) 189 CA3d 206, 211, 234 CR 388. Nor may a grant of informal probation be conditioned on the minor's admitting responsibility to the probation officer. Kody P. v Superior Court (2006) 137 CA4th 1030, 1037, 40 CR3d 763.

The probation officer can also refer the case to the prosecutor for filing with the recommendation that the court grant informal probation. Welf & I C §654.2(b). After a Welf & I C §602 petition has been filed, the court, with the consent of the minor and the minor's parent or guardian, may order informal probation under Welf & I C §654.2(a). The consent of the prosecutor or probation officer is not required. Charles S. v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 741, 746, 187 CR 144. The court must consider all relevant evidence bearing on the present condition and future welfare of the minor in determining whether to grant informal probation. In re Armondo A. (1992) 3 CA4th 1185, 5 CR2d 101. The court must exercise its discretion independent of the probation officer's recommendation. In re Armondo A., supra.

Informal probation is available only before adjudication or formal admission. In re Adam R. (1997) 57 CA4th 348, 352, 67 CR2d 76. The court cannot accept an admission to an offense and then grant informal probation, even if the parties so stipulate. Ricki J. v Superior Court (2005) 128 CA4th 783, 27 CR3d 494.

If the court grants informal probation, the court continues the matter for 6 months. Welf & I C §654.2. The minor must waive time in order to participate in informal probation (see Welf & I C §654.2), and the parents or guardians of the minor must be ordered to participate with the minor in counseling or education programs. Welf & I C §654. If the offense alleged involves a controlled substance or driving under the influence, the minor must successfully complete an alcohol or drug education program. Welf & I C §654.4.

Informal probation does not protect a minor from the DMV consequences of driving under the influence in violation of Veh Code §§23140 or 23152. See Veh C §13105; Welf & I C §§257-258, 654.1.

Fifteen days before the conclusion of informal probation, the probation officer must submit a report to the court regarding the minor's participation in the program. The minor and the minor's parents must appear in court at the end of the 6-month period to consider the minor's compliance with the informal probation agreement. Welf & I C §654.2(a). If the minor has successfully completed the program, the petition is dismissed. Welf & I C §654.2(a). At the probation officer's recommendation, the court may extend the period of probation. If the minor does not successfully complete informal probation, proceedings on the petition resume. Welf & I C §654.2(a). The court has up to 1 year after the date on which the petition was filed to resume delinquency proceedings. Welf & I C §654.2(a); In re Anthony B. (2002) 104 CA4th 677, 128 CR2d 349. But see In re C.W. (2007) 153 CA4th 468, 474, 62 CR3d 851 (delay past 1 year does not deprive court of fundamental jurisdiction).

Under Welf & I C §654.3(h), a minor alleged to have committed a felony when he or she was 14 or older may not be placed on informal probation except in unusual cases, when the court determines that informal probation would best serve the interests of justice. The court must specify the reasons for its decision on the record. Welf & I C §654.3. Minors charged with Welf & I C §707(b) offenses, offenses involving the sale or possession for sale of specified controlled substances or possession of those substances at a school, or violating Pen C §186.22 are also ineligible for informal probation barring an unusual-circumstance finding. If restitution exceeds $1000 or the minor has previously been a ward of the court or has previously been granted informal probation, an unusual-circumstances finding is required to grant informal probation. Welf & I C §654.3.

A grant of informal probation is not a final judgment; a party challenging an order made at the hearing on the matter must file a petition for an extraordinary writ to obtain review of the trial court's decision. See Ricki J. v Superior Court (2005) 128 CA4th 783, 788, 27 CR3d 494.

Deferred entry of judgment is an alternative to informal probation for minors age 14 and older who are alleged to have committed felonies. See Welf & I C §790. For discussion, see §56.17.

Ø Practice tip: An attorney for a minor age 14 or older who is alleged to have committed a felony should seek findings of "unusual circumstances" if the minor is otherwise eligible for informal probation. Informal probation is a much better option for a minor than deferred entry of judgment because the minor is not required to admit the offense, the probationary period is shorter, the conditions of informal probation tend to be more lenient, and the minor may still contest the matter if he or she does not perform satisfactorily.

§56.16 E. Petition; Charging by Prosecutor

The prosecutor may file a petition only if the probation officer submits the probable cause statement to the prosecutor within 21 court days of the probation officer's having received the statement, or if a person who submitted a probable cause statement to the probation officer requests that the prosecutor review the probation officer's decision against filing a petition. Marvin F. v Superior Court (1977) 75 CA3d 281, 285, 142 CR 78. See Welf & I C §§653.7, 655. See also §56.11. The prosecutor independently evaluates the minor and the circumstances of the case and may file the case or refer the matter back to the probation officer for further action. Welf & I C §650(c). See also Cal Rules of Ct 5.520(b)(3). If the prosecutor decides to file a petition, the prosecutor determines the charges to be filed. Welf & I C §650(c). See also Cal Rules of Ct 5.520(b)(3).

A prosecutor must file a verified petition similar to a complaint, using Judicial Council Form JV-600 (Juvenile Wardship Petition). See Welf & I C §656; Cal Rules of Ct 5.524(b) (required contents of petition).

If applicable, the prosecutor states an intent to aggregate ("tack") periods of confinement under Welf & I C §726. See §56.58. Failure to do so may result in a lower maximum period of confinement. See In re Michael B. (1980) 28 C3d 548, 553, 169 CR 723.

§56.17 F. Deferred Entry of Judgment

Welfare & Institutions Code §§790-795 establish a procedure for deferring the entry of judgment in a Welf & I C §602 felony petition as an alternative to informal probation. See also Cal Rules of Ct 5.800. Deferred entry of judgment (DEJ) is available for certain minors who are charged with the commission of a felony offense. As a condition of DEJ, the court is authorized to impose conditions of probation designed to rehabilitate the minor and prevent criminal activity. The court may also order restitution. Welf & I C §794. The DEJ option reflects a strong preference for rehabilitation of first-time nonviolent juvenile felony offenders. Martha C. v Superior Court (2003) 108 CA4th 556, 561, 133 CR2d 544.

The unavailability of DEJ in misdemeanor cases does not violate equal protection given the severe consequences otherwise applicable to felonies, the availability of other supervision programs for misdemeanants, and the existence of record-sealing options in misdemeanor cases. In re Spencer S. (2009) 176 CA4th 1315, 1328, 98 CR3d 477.

Suitability and eligibility for DEJ. To be eligible for DEJ, the minor must meet all six of the following requirements (Welf & I C §790(a)):

(1) The minor must not previously have been made a ward of the juvenile court because of the commission of a felony;

(2) The charged offense must not be a Welf & I C §707(b) offense;

(3) The minor must never have been committed to the CYA or DJJ;

(4) The minor must never have had probation revoked, without its later being completed (see In re T.P. (2009) 178 CA4th 1, 4, 99 CR3d 893 (violation of probation absent revocation does not render minor ineligible for DEJ));

(5) The minor must be at least age 14 at the time of the hearing; and

(6) The minor must be eligible for probation under Pen C §1203.06.

> Ø Note: The ready availability of informal probation for minors under age 14 may explain the unavailability of DEJ for those juveniles. See §56.15.

The prosecutor must determine whether the minor satisfies these six requirements and then must complete Judicial Council Form JV-750 (Determination of Eligibility—Deferred Entry of Judgment—Juvenile), stating that the minor is or is not eligible for DEJ. Cal Rules of Ct 5.800(b), (e). See In re Luis B. (2006) 142 CA4th 1117, 48 CR3d 581 (dispositional order reversed when prosecutor did not file Form JV-750). See also Citation and Written Notification for Deferred Entry of Judgment—Juvenile (Judicial Council Form JV-751).

The juvenile court determines the minor's suitability for DEJ. Welf & I C §791(b). To grant DEJ, the court must find that the minor is suitable for deferred entry of judgment and would benefit from education, treatment, and rehabilitation efforts (Cal Rules of Ct 5.800(b)); the findings must be made on the record. See Welf & I C §790(b). The suitability determination will not be reversed absent an abuse of discretion. In re Sergio R. (2003) 106 CA4th 597, 131 CR2d 160. However, a court abuses that discretion when it refuses to offer DEJ because of the seriousness of the offense; denial of DEJ must be based on facts indicating that the minor would not benefit from the education, rehabilitation, and treatment offered under DEJ. Martha C., 108 CA4th at 560.

The DEJ procedure requires the minor to admit all the allegations of the petition and waive time for the pronouncement of judgment. Welf & I C §791. DEJ is not available to minors who proceed to a jurisdiction hearing to contest the charges. In re Usef S. (2008) 160 CA4th 276, 286, 72 CR3d 612; In re Kenneth J. (2008) 158 CA4th 973, 980, 70 CR3d 352. DEJ remains available to those who merely proceed on a motion to suppress evidence seized in violation of the Fourth Amendment. In re A.I. (2009) 176 CA4th 1426, 1434, 98 CR3d 501.

> Ø Practice tip: The prosecution may dismiss allegations before the minor enters an admission, and counsel for the parties often negotiate charges in the same manner as they would if DEJ were not being contemplated. If the prosecution will not dismiss charges if the minor accepts DEJ, defense counsel must carefully evaluate the DEJ "plead-as-charged" option compared to accepting a non-DEJ offer in which the prosecution agrees to dismiss or reduce charges. Advising the minor requires consideration of the minor's likely success in the DEJ program.

Probation conditions when DEJ is granted. When a minor is granted DEJ, the court must, on the request of a probation officer or peace officer, impose a condition that the minor be subject to warrantless searches of his or her person, residence, or property under his or her control. The court also imposes random drug or alcohol testing when appropriate. The judge must require, when appropriate, that the minor periodically establish compliance with curfew and school attendance requirements. The minor may also be required to pay restitution to the victim or victims. Welf & I C §794.

The court may impose any other term of probation authorized by the Welfare and Institutions Code that the court believes would assist in the education, treatment, and rehabilitation of the minor and the prevention of criminal activity. Welf & I C §794. Although no appellate court has squarely addressed the issue, the juvenile court is probably not permitted to order confinement or remove the minor from the home as a DEJ probation condition. See Welf & I C §§791(a)(4), 793(a); In re Trevor W. (2001) 88 CA4th 833, 836, 106 CR2d 169 (probation conditions for nonwards cannot include removal from home); Martha C., 108 CA4th at 561 (DEJ statute enacted to provide first-time nonviolent juvenile felony offenders with noncustodial opportunity to demonstrate through good conduct that their record should be expunged).

Completion of DEJ program; violations. On the successful completion of a probationary period of 12 to 36 months, the positive recommendation of the probation department, and the motion of the prosecuting attorney, the court must dismiss the charges, and the arrest upon which judgment was deferred is deemed never to have occurred. Welf & I C §§791(a)(3), 793(c). If the charges are dismissed, records of the arrest and the court proceedings must be sealed except for the limited purpose of determining whether the minor is eligible for DEJ under Welf & I C §790. Welf & I C §793(c).

The court must lift the deferral and schedule a dispositional hearing on the original petition if during the deferral period the minor (Welf & I C §793(a)):

- Does not perform satisfactorily on probation;
- Is found to have committed a felony; or
- Is found to have committed two misdemeanors on separate occasions.

If the minor is found to have committed a single misdemeanor or more than one misdemeanor on a single occasion, the court may, but is not required to, lift the deferral and schedule a dispositional hearing. Welf & I C §793(a). See Deferred Entry of Judgment Notice of Noncompliance (Judicial Council Form JV-615).

Appellate review. The granting of DEJ is not an appealable order. Thus, a minor granted DEJ who is participating in the DEJ program may not appeal the denial of a suppression motion unless the minor fails DEJ and the court holds a dispositional hearing. In re Mario C. (2004) 124 CA4th 1303, 1308, 21 CR3d 891. Denial of DEJ may be challenged by petition for writ of mandate. See Martha C., 108 CA4th at 560.

§56.18 VI. MINOR'S COUNSEL

Appointment. When a minor appears in court without counsel, the court is required to appoint counsel for the minor "whether he or she is unable to afford counsel or not" unless the minor knowingly and intelligently waives the right to counsel, or the matter is continued for the parents or guardians to retain counsel. Welf & I C §700; Cal Rules of Ct 5.534(h). The parents or guardians of the minor may be required to pay for the minor's attorney if the court finds that they are able to afford counsel at their own expense. Welf & I C §700. See also Welf & I C §903.1. See §56.9 for further discussion of parental liability for attorney fees.

Ethical duties. An attorney's ethical duties toward a minor are substantially the same as an attorney's ethical duties toward an adult. See In re Julius B. (1977) 68 CA3d 395, 401, 137 CR 341; Pen C §1240.1; Welf & I C §634; Cal Rules of Ct 5.663. See also Cal Rules of Ct 5.534(h)(2)(C). Like an adult, a minor is entitled to the competent assistance of an attorney who adequately investigates all relevant evidence and who has adequate time and resources to prepare and defend the case. In re Edward S. (2009) 173 CA4th 387, 412, 92 CR3d 725. The obligation to provide competent representation to a minor may require a deputy public defender to ask to be relieved as counsel of record, even over the objection of the attorney's supervisor. In re Edward S., supra.

One notable difference between juvenile court and adult court is that the juvenile court cannot accept an admission of allegations without the consent of the minor's attorney. Cal Rules of Ct 5.778(d).

Ø Note: A minor's attorney may consent to an admission without agreeing that the admission is in the best interests of the client. When the minor wishes to admit an offense against the recommendation of counsel, counsel should exercise caution in refusing to give consent. "An attorney is an agent of his client." Yanchor v Kagan (1971) 22 CA3d 544, 549, 99 CR 367. See also People v McKenzie (1983) 34 C3d 616, 630, 194 CR 462 (lawyer must seek objectives of client if lawyer can do so ethically). The minor's attorney should fully discuss the matter with the minor and should make notes in the file of his or her advice to the minor.

One potentially difficult ethical area involves private counsel retained by the minor's parents. See Welf & I C §634; Cal Rules of Ct 5.534(h)(2)(C), 5.663, 5.778(d). Parents are accustomed to making the important decisions for their children. Counsel should make clear to the parents and the minor from the beginning that counsel represents only the minor.

Initial interview of client. The parents should not be present when counsel interviews the minor about the details of the case. However, the parents are a valuable source of information about the minor. The attitude of the parents will often play a crucial role in determining whether a detained minor will be released to the parents.

In addition to the information in the interview form in §10.1, counsel should obtain the following information from the minor:

- Contact information for minor and parents or guardian;
- Name and location of school attended, or last school attended;
- Performance in school and special needs, e.g., learning disability or other special education;
- Psychological or substance abuse history;
- Prior contacts with the juvenile justice system;
- The minor's home environment;
- How the minor behaves at home;
- Information on the minor's participation in sports, religious activities, and other extracurricular programs; and
- Names and contact information for potential character references.

Ø Note: In an appropriate case, counsel should contact the probation officer before the detention hearing to request an in-custody minor's release. If the request is unsuccessful, at the detention hearing counsel should present information on the minor's positive performance at home, in school, in extracurricular activities, and while on probation if the minor is currently a probationer. If available, supporting documentation such as school reports and written character references should be provided.

If the minor is not detained or is released by the court, counsel should advise the minor how to act while the jurisdictional or dispositional hearings are pending. It is often beneficial to show that the minor is regularly attending school, participating in sports activities, obeying the minor's parents, working at a part-time job, or participating in mental health or substance abuse treatment.

Depending on the type of case, the minor's counsel may instruct the minor not to discuss the case with anyone but counsel.

Knowledge of related practice areas. Minor's counsel should be knowledgeable about issues regarding mental health, immigration, special education, and dependency. While delinquency counsel need not provide collateral representation (see Cal Rules of Ct 5.663(d)(3)), awareness of the broad needs of the minor is necessary so that counsel can raise these issues with the court when requesting, for example, that services be provided. See, e.g., Welf & I C §741 (juvenile court has authority to appoint clinical experts to assist in determining appropriate treatment for minor and to implement that treatment). Counsel should explore diverting the juvenile client into other systems that may be better equipped to handle the specialized needs of the minor, such as the education, mental health, or dependency systems. Moreover, when those systems fail in their duties, counsel should consider a joinder motion in delinquency court to hold the other system accountable to serve the needs and best interests of the minor. See Welf & I C §727(a).

Continued representation after disposition. Counsel appearing on behalf of a minor continues to represent that minor unless relieved by the court after substitution of counsel or other good cause. Welf & I C §634.6. In delinquency proceedings, a child is entitled to have his or her interests represented by counsel at every stage of the proceedings, including postdispositional hearings. Counsel must continue to represent the child unless relieved by the court on the substitution of other counsel or for cause. Cal Rules of Ct 5.663(c). However, a child's counsel is not required to assume the responsibilities of a probation officer, social worker, parent, or guardian; to provide nonlegal services to the child; or to represent the child in any proceedings outside of the delinquency proceedings. Cal Rules of Ct 5.663(d).

> Ø Note: Cal Rules of Ct 5.663 (formerly Rule 1479) became effective in 2004. While many have viewed Rule 5.663 as expanding the obligations of defense counsel in delinquency proceedings, California law has long required that counsel continue to represent a minor client unless relieved by the court on the substitution of other counsel or for cause. Welf & I C §634.6. Nonetheless, the Judicial Council recognized that many counsel would terminate representation after disposition was pronounced. The explicit reference in Rule 5.663(c) to postdispositional hearings marks an effort to inform counsel that they are to continue representation of clients on juvenile probation regardless of the sentence pronounced at disposition. Unless relieved by the court, counsel must maintain representation of clients on all forms of probation, including clients in placement, clients committed to county ranches, and clients committed to the DJJ. While Rule 5.663 has provided some clarity, it has also left many questions unanswered, such as how counsel are to be compensated for postdisposition work, which can be substantial and time-consuming; how trial and appellate counsel should resolve their sometimes overlapping obligations to their mutual client; and whether Rule 5.663 requires trial counsel to appear for DJJ wards at parole hearings and parole revocation proceedings.

Specific postdisposition representation may include motions to reduce felony "wobbler" offenses to misdemeanors (see Pen C §17(b)), to modify probation on the basis of changed circumstances (Welf & I C §778), or to recall a DJJ commitment (see Welf & I C §779). See §56.67 on motions to recall a DJJ commitment.

VII. ARRAIGNMENT AND DETENTION HEARING

§56.19 A. Arraignment and Setting Petition for Hearing; Entry of Plea

At the first hearing, a minor usually is arraigned. If the minor is detained, this hearing is called a detention hearing. If the minor is not detained, the hearing is simply called an arraignment hearing. If a minor is detained, some courts only address the minor's custodial status at the first appearance, leaving arraignment for the next court hearing. At the beginning of the hearing, the minor must be informed of the charges and the right to counsel, including appointed counsel. Welf & I C §700; Cal Rules of Ct 5.778-5.780. The minor must also be advised of the right against self-incrimination; the right to confront and cross-examine witnesses; the right to subpoena witnesses; and the right to present evidence. Cal Rules of Ct 5.534(j)(1). The minor then either demurs or enters a plea. Unless the minor intelligently waives the right to counsel, counsel must be appointed. The parents' or minor's unwillingness to pay for counsel does not relieve the court of that obligation. The parents will be liable for the cost of counsel if they have the ability to pay. Welf & I C §§633-634; Cal Rules of Ct 5.534(h)(2)(A). See §56.9.

The following pleas are available to minors (Welf & I C §702.3; Cal Rules of Ct 5.778):

- Admit the allegation.
- Deny the allegation.
- Do not contest the allegation.
- Deny the allegation by reason of insanity (see Welf & I C §702.3).
- Deny the allegation and deny the allegation by reason of insanity.

Before accepting an admission or a no contest plea, the court must advise the minor of the maximum custody time and the minor's legal rights. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.778(c); In re Regina N. (1981) 117 CA3d 577, 585, 172 CR 810 (signed advisement of rights form inadequate). If a minor is on probation, the court must advise the minor that the admission may be used to revoke the minor's probation and impose a longer sentence at the disposition hearing. In re Gary O. (1978) 84 CA3d 38, 41, 148 CR 276. The court may accept an admission only if the minor personally makes the admission and the minor's attorney consents. Cal Rules of Ct 5.778(d). If a minor is under age 14 when an offense is committed, the court must determine whether the minor understood that the conduct was wrong. See Pen C §26; In re Gladys R. (1970) 1 C3d 855, 867, 83 CR 671 (contrary finding precludes wardship under Welf & I C §602).

If a minor denies the allegations in the petition, the matter is set for a settlement conference, jurisdiction hearing, or both. The jurisdiction hearing is the equivalent of a trial in criminal court. The jurisdiction hearing must be held within 30 calendar days after the filing of the petition if the minor is out of custody, or within 15 court days after the order of detention if the minor is detained, unless time is waived. Welf & I C §657; Cal Rules of Ct 5.774. A minor is considered detained for the purpose of setting the jurisdiction hearing if the minor has been placed on home supervision. Welf & I C §628.1. Any period of delay caused by a child's unavailability or failure to appear tolls these time requirements. Cal Rules of Ct 5.774(c).

§56.20 B. When Detention Hearing Is Required; Trier of Fact; Time When Held

A detention hearing is required anytime a minor is taken into custody and not released. Welf & I C §632; Cal Rules of Ct 5.502(11). This is true even if the minor is on probation. Welf & I C §777(d). A detention hearing is required for minors placed on home supervision. If arrested for violating a home supervision agreement, a minor is entitled to another detention hearing. Welf & I C §628.1. If a minor was arrested without a warrant for allegedly committing a misdemeanor not involving violence, a threat of violence, or possession or use of weapons, and if the minor is not on probation or parole, a detention hearing must be held as soon as possible, but no later than 48 hours (excluding noncourt days) after the minor was taken into custody. Welf & I C §632(b). In all other cases, Welf & I C §632 requires that a detention hearing be conducted no later than the next court day following the filing of a petition. Welf & I C §632(a). If a detention hearing is not held within the time prescribed by §632, the minor must be released from custody. Welf & I C §632(c).

If a minor represents himself or herself to be age 18 or older, release is not mandated until the authorities know the minor's true age. Welf & I C §631.1. Once the minor's true age is known, if a petition is not filed within 48 hours, excluding noncourt days, the minor must be released immediately. Welf & I C §631.1.

Also, if a probable cause determination is not made within 72 hours, the minor must be released. Alfredo A. v Superior Court (1994) 6 C4th 1212, 26 CR2d 623.

§56.21 C. Notice of Detention Hearing

The probation officer or the prosecutor must notify each parent and guardian of the time and place of the detention hearing as soon as a Welf & I C §602 petition is filed; otherwise, a rehearing may be required. Welf & I C §§630(a), 637. See Notice of Hearing—Juvenile Delinquency Proceeding (Judicial Council Form JV-625). See also Cal Rules of Ct 5.481(b) (when American Indian child's tribe must be notified; Notice of Child Custody Proceeding for Indian Child (Judicial Council Form ICWA-030).

§56.22 D. Conduct of Detention Hearing

At the detention hearing, the minor may be arraigned. See §56.19. The minor must be informed of the reasons for the minor's initial detention and the purpose of the detention hearing and, if the minor appears without counsel, the right to be represented by counsel.

At the detention hearing, defense counsel must be permitted to inspect all police reports, probation reports, and other documents made available to the probation officer. Welf & I C §827; Cal Rules of Ct 5.756(a). If the minor is at risk for foster care placement, the probation officer must submit a comprehensive written report to the court. Welf & I C §635. If the minor is detained, the court must order reunification services. Welf & I C §636(d)(3)(A). All reports on which the court relies must be verified under CCP §2015.5. See In re Dennis H. (1971) 19 CA3d 350, 353, 96 CR 791.

After defense counsel has inspected the reports, the court may ask counsel to stipulate to a prima facie showing that the child is a person as described in Welf & I C §601 or §602. In the absence of a stipulation, the prosecutor submits the matter to the court on the basis of the police report and the probation officer's oral or written recommendation. See In re Larry W. (1971) 16 CA3d 290, 94 CR 31; Cal Rules of Ct 5.756(c). The minor's attorney has the right to cross-examine the preparers of any reports presented to the court if they are present. See Welf & I C §§630(b), 635; In re Luis M. (1986) 180 CA3d 1090, 226 CR 39. The burden of proof for the "prima facie" case is equivalent to "reasonable cause" or "probable cause" as used in preliminary hearings. See Marcus W. v Superior Court (2002) 98 CA4th 36, 46, 118 CR2d 919. If the prosecution fails to establish the prima facie case at the hearing, the minor must be released. Cal Rules of Ct 5.680(d). See §56.33 for discussion of the prima facie case.

If the preparers of the reports presented to the court are not present at the detention hearing, the minor has the right to a rehearing (frequently called a "Dennis H." or "contested detention" hearing). See Welf & I C §637; Cal Rules of Ct 5.762(c). At the rehearing, if the minor chooses to exercise his or her right to cross-examine the preparers of the reports, it is the duty of the court to ensure that those preparers are present. In re Dennis H. (1971) 19 CA3d 350, 355, 96 CR 791. See also Edsel P. v Superior Court (1985) 165 CA3d 763, 779, 211 CR 869. The rehearing must occur within 3 court days or, if the court determines the witnesses will not be available, within 5 court days. The minor must be released if the authors of the reports are unavailable or the prosecution for some other reason does not establish grounds for detention at the rehearing. The percipient witnesses themselves do not need to be present. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.762(c); People v Superior Court (Ronald H.) (1990) 219 CA3d 1475, 1477, 269 CR 4.

Defense counsel may present written statements or oral testimony from witnesses concerning the detention issue.

§56.23 E. Court's Ruling

The court may detain a minor only if it finds that a prima facie showing has been made that the minor is a person as described by Welf & I C §602, and that one or more of the following conditions exist (Welf & I C §635; Cal Rules of Ct 5.758, 5.760):

- The minor has violated a juvenile court order;
- The minor has escaped from a juvenile court commitment;
- The minor is likely to flee the jurisdiction of the court;
- It is a matter of immediate and urgent necessity for the protection of the minor that the minor be detained; or
- It is reasonably necessary for the protection of the person or property of another that the minor be detained.

Ø Note: Special rules apply to Indian children, as defined in the Indian Child Welfare Act (25 USC §1901), who are facing removal from the home. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.480-5.487.

The court must assess the minor's mental status and order continued detention pending a mental health evaluation if the court concludes that the minor is a danger to his or her own safety or that of others. See Welf & I C §§6550-6552.

The court may not detain a minor when a charge is refiled against the minor after it was previously dismissed. Cal Rules of Ct 5.774(d); In re Robin M. (1978) 21 C3d 337, 347, 146 CR 352.

The court may place a minor on home supervision even when it determines that the minor should be detained. For further discussion of home supervision, see §56.13.

Ø Note: Detention of an out-of-custody minor at a later pretrial hearing is prohibited unless the minor receives notice that the court is considering detaining the minor, the minor is advised of his or her right to counsel, and there are changed circumstances that justify detention. In re Ryan B. (1989) 216 CA3d 1519, 1527, 265 CR 629.

§56.24 F. Review of Detention Order

If a detention hearing was held but the minor's parent or guardian did not receive notice of the hearing and was not present at the hearing, the parent or guardian may file an affidavit (or declaration) with the juvenile court clerk describing these facts; a rehearing must then be held within 24 hours, excluding noncourt days. Welf & I C §637; Cal Rules of Ct 5.762. See also CCP §2015.5 (declaration under penalty of perjury may substitute for affidavit; see statute for other requirements). The rehearing is conducted in the same way as the original detention hearing. Welf & I C §637.

When a referee not sitting as a judge pro tem makes a detention order, a minor is entitled to a rehearing by a judge if defense counsel requests it within 10 days after being served with the referee's order. Welf & I C §252; Cal Rules of Ct 5.542.

Detention orders are ordinarily not reviewable by appeal (In re William M. (1970) 3 C3d 16, 25, 89 CR 33); a minor may seek a writ of habeas corpus to review the order (In re Robin M. (1978) 21 C3d 337, 146 CR 352).

Defense counsel may ask either a judge or a referee to modify an earlier detention order. Welf & I C §775; Cal Rules of Ct 5.560(a).

VIII. OTHER PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS

§56.25 A. Joint Assessment Hearing When Child Appears to Fit Dependency and Wardship Criteria

Whenever a child who appears to come within both the dependency and the delinquency jurisdiction of the juvenile court comes to the attention of either the juvenile probation department or the county welfare department, the departments are required to conduct a joint assessment to determine which jurisdictional status will better serve the interests of the child and protect society. Cal Rules of Ct 5.512(a). See Welf & I C §241.1; In re Marcus G. (1999) 73 CA4th 1008, 87 CR2d 84; In re Donald S. (1988) 206 CA3d 134, 253 CR 274.

The joint assessment must be completed as soon as possible, preferably before any petition concerning the child is filed. Cal Rules of Ct 5.512(a). It should include a complete social history, and the departments' joint recommendation if they agree on the best status for the minor, or separate recommendations if they do not agree. Cal Rules of Ct 5.512(d). The juvenile court considers, but is not bound by, the recommendations. Welf & I C §241.1(a).

The court must promptly determine the appropriate status for the minor. Welf & I C §241.1. The court may but is not required to conduct an evidentiary hearing when there is a dispute over the most appropriate status for the minor. In re Henry S. (2006) 140 CA4th 248, 257, 44 CR3d 418. The determination must take place before the jurisdiction hearing. If the minor is detained, the hearing must be held during, or as soon as possible after, the detention hearing, and no later than 15 court days after the detention hearing. If the minor is not detained, it must be held within 30 days after the date of the petition. Cal Rules of Ct 5.512(e).

Ø Note: Children generally are precluded from being both wards and dependents of the juvenile court. Welf & I C §241.1(d). However, a county's probation department and child welfare services department, in consultation with the presiding judge of the juvenile court, may jointly develop a written protocol to allow the two departments to designate the child a "dual status" child. This designation allows a child to be simultaneously a dependent child and a ward of the court. See Welf & I C §241.1(e). Dependency jurisdiction is suspended for a dual status child while the child is a ward of the court and may be resumed upon termination of §602 proceedings. See Welf & I C §366.5. In counties that have not adopted a protocol for suspending dependency jurisdiction, minors charged with §602 petitions can be placed only on informal probation or nonwardship probation under Welf & I C §725.

§56.26 B. Mental Health Issues

Involuntary commitment. Whenever the court believes that a minor subject to a Welf & I C §602 petition is mentally ill, the court may stay proceedings and order the child into a facility authorized to hold people for up to 72 hours under Welf & I C §5150. The facility must submit a written evaluation regarding the minor to the court. Welf & I C §6551; Cal Rules of Ct 5.645(a). Any further involuntary commitment to a mental facility other than as authorized by Welf & I C §5696 must follow the procedures applicable to adults. Consequently, a minor may involuntarily be admitted to a state mental facility only under the same procedures as an adult. See In re L.L. (1974) 39 CA3d 205, 216, 114 CR 11. On involuntary commitments under the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (LPS Act), see chap 48.

Alternatively, the court may involuntarily commit a seriously emotionally disturbed ward of the court to a regional facility if he or she is under the supervision of a probation officer, meets the facility's eligibility standards, and demonstrates specified behavior and symptoms. Welf & I C §5696.

Competence. If the juvenile court has a doubt about the minor's competence to understand the proceedings or cooperate with counsel, the court must hold a hearing to determine the minor's competence. Timothy J. v Superior Court (2007) 150 CA4th 847, 58 CR3d 746; Cal Rules of Ct 5.645(d). A mental disorder or developmental disability is not a prerequisite for a finding of incompetence; a minor may be found to be incompetent because of developmental immaturity alone. Timothy J., supra. The standard for determining competency is whether the minor has the present ability to factually understand the proceedings and consult with his or her attorney, not whether he or she can become competent in the future with assistance. In re Ricky S. (2008) 166 CA4th 232, 236, 82 CR3d 432. If the minor's counsel expresses a doubt as to the minor's competency, the court must appoint an expert to examine the minor. Counsel may raise the issue of competency at any point during the proceedings. Tyrone B. v Superior Court (2008) 164 CA4th 227, 231, 78 CR3d 569 (abuse of discretion and violation of right to effective assistance of counsel to refuse to appoint expert before jurisdictional hearing).

If the court determines the minor is not competent, the court may proceed under Pen C §4011.6 or Welf & I C §6550. Welf & I C §705. See also Cal Rules of Ct 5.645(d). If the minor is not competent, the court cannot order continued confinement; the court's only commitment options are commitment under the LPS Act or commitment under Welf & I C §§6550-6551. See In re Michael E. (1975) 15 C3d 183, 123 CR 103; In re Patrick H. (1997) 54 CA4th 1346, 63 CR2d 455; In re Mary T. (1985) 176 CA3d 38, 221 CR 364. The definition of "grave disability" for an LPS Act commitment of a minor differs from the definition for adults. See Welf & I C §5585.25.

> Ø Note: While California has comprehensive statutory guidelines to address issues of competence for adult criminal defendants (see Pen C §§1367-1376), there is no corresponding juvenile statute. As a result, navigating this complex area presents difficulties for counsel practicing in juvenile court. For a thorough discussion of California statutory and decisional law on juvenile competence, see Burrell, Kendrick & Blalock, Incompetent Youth in California Juvenile Justice, 19 Stan L & Pol'y Rev 198 (2008).

Fitness hearing. Evidence of a psychological disorder, mental retardation, or other mental disability may be used to rebut the presumption of unfitness that arises when a minor age 16 or over is charged with an offense listed in Welf & I C §707(b). The failure to properly consider such evidence to rebut the presumption and lessen the severity of the crime is an abuse of discretion. Rene C. v Superior Court (2006) 138 CA4th 1, 41 CR3d 71 (trial court ordered to find mentally retarded minor fit for juvenile court). See Welf & I C §707(c).

Mental health assessment. In counties which have established a mental health program in accordance with Welf & I C §710, the court may refer a minor who appears to the court or counsel to have a serious mental health disorder, to be seriously emotionally disturbed, or to be developmentally disabled for a mental health assessment pursuant to Welf & I C §712. The minor, with the approval of counsel, may decline the referral. Welf & I C §711. If the minor is found to have a qualifying mental health disorder and has been adjudicated a ward of the court, the court must refer the matter to a multidisciplinary team for a review and recommendation before the preparation of the disposition report. The multidisciplinary team prepares a written report and treatment plan for the court, which the court should follow to the extent feasible when making its dispositional order. Welf & I C §713.

Postadjudication mental health treatment. After the court has sustained a petition, the court may order the county health department to provide mental health services for a minor who is not residing in the home. See Welf & I C §§635.1, 5694.7.

Insanity. The procedure for insanity pleas is governed by Welf & I C §702.3.

Civil commitments. For discussion of mental health commitments of minors who are a danger to others because of a mental disorder, see §56.66.

IX. NEGOTIATION OF CHARGES AND THREE STRIKES

§56.27 A. Negotiation of Charges

Negotiation of charges in juvenile court may be conducted between defense counsel and the prosecutor or may include the judge, referee, commissioner, or judge pro tem, depending on local practice.

A negotiated settlement between the parties is limited to charges. When the judge accepts an admission, he or she retains complete discretion concerning the disposition, although pretrial conferences may result in a disposition agreement with the court's approval.

Minors are entitled to have the same judge who took the admission determine the disposition. In re Thomas S. (1981) 124 CA3d 934, 177 CR 742. See People v Arbuckle (1978) 22 C3d 749, 756, 150 CR 778.

Ø Practice tip: Minor's counsel should not have a minor enter a plea admitting the allegations in a petition unless counsel has reviewed the case for possible defenses and motions, assessed the need for investigation, discussed the probation officer's possible disposition recommendation with the client, and can concur in the factual basis for the admission.

© The Regents of the University of California

§56.28 B. Three Strikes: Use of Juvenile Adjudications in Adult Court

Practitioners must be thoroughly knowledgeable and current on the Three Strikes implications of juvenile adjudications. See chap 37. It is imperative that minor's counsel carefully advise the client of possible strike consequences of a finding on the petition. A conviction of a strike offense in adult court will result in the defendant's receiving a strike, regardless of the age of the defendant. People v Blankenship (1985) 167 CA3d 840, 852, 213 CR 666 (Pen C §667(a) enhancement); People v Level (2002) 97 CA4th 1208, 1209, 119 CR2d 551 (minor concealed age from adult court). A juvenile court adjudication for an offense committed by a minor age 16 or older counts or will count as a strike if the minor was made a ward of the court and either of the following factors applies (People v Garcia (1999) 21 C4th 1, 87 CR2d 114; People v Leng (1999) 71 CA4th 1, 83 CR2d 433):

- The offense is listed in Welf & I C §707(b) and is either serious (see Pen C §1192.7(c)) or violent (see Pen C §667.5(c)); or
- The offense is not listed in Welf & I C §707(b) but is listed as a violent felony in Pen C §667.5(c) or as a serious felony in Pen C §1192.7(c) and the court sustained a Welf & I C §707(b) offense in the same petition.

For a juvenile adjudication to be treated as a strike, there need not have been an express finding that the minor was fit to be dealt with under the juvenile court law. People v Davis (1997) 15 C4th 1096, 64 CR2d 879.

Equal protection principles prohibit a juvenile from incurring a strike for an offense that would not be a strike if committed as an adult, i.e., an offense not listed in Pen C §667(c) or §1192.7(c). People v Leng (1999) 71 CA4th 1, 83 CR2d 433.

After the Fifth District's opinion in Leng the California Supreme Court noted the equal protection issue without deciding it. See People v Garcia (1999) 21 C4th 1, 11, 87 CR2d 114.

A true finding merely regarding an offense listed in Pen C §667.5(c) or §1192.7, but not Welf & I C §707(b), residential burglary, for example, does not count as a strike. However, if the court sustained a residential burglary count in a petition in which it also sustained a count alleging a §707(b) offense, then the residential burglary would count as a strike. If the §707(b) offense was also listed in §667.5(c) or §1192.7(c), then the minor would have two strikes.

> Ø Practice tip: Competent representation requires that counsel be very familiar with the Three Strikes law and always check to see whether an offense is listed in Welf & I C §707(b) or §1192.7(c). Although statutes and cases often refer to offenses described by either Pen C §667.5(c) (violent felonies) or §1192.7(c) (serious felonies), there are no offenses in Pen C §667.5(c) that do not also appear in §1192.7(c).

Despite the absence of a right to jury trial in juvenile court, the Sixth Amendment does not bar the use of juvenile adjudications as strikes. People v Nguyen (2009) 46 C4th 1007, 1014, 95 CR3d 615. Prior juvenile adjudications also may be used as a circumstance in aggravation to impose an upper-term sentence in adult court. People v Quiles (2009) 177 CA4th 612, 619, 99 CR3d 378.

X. TRANSFER TO ADULT COURT

§56.29 A. Direct Filing

Mandatory direct filing. A minor charged with special circumstance murder (see Pen C §190.2) who is alleged to have personally killed the victim must be prosecuted in adult court if he or she was 14 or older at the time of the offense. Welf & I C §602(b)(1). The minor is not eligible for the death penalty. Pen C §190.5(a); Roper v Simmons (2005) 543 US 551, 161 L Ed 2d 1, 125 S Ct 1183 (death penalty unconstitutional as applied to individuals who committed offense before age 18). The presumptive penalty is life without parole but the court has discretion to sentence the minor to 25 years to life. Pen C §190.5(b). See People v Ybarra (2008) 166 CA4th 1069, 1088, 83 CR3d 340 (citing People v Guinn (1994) 28 CA4th 1130, 1145, 33 CR2d 791). A minor charged with certain sex offenses must also be prosecuted in adult court if the minor was 14 or older at the time of the alleged offense and the district attorney alleges one of the circumstances set forth in Pen C §667.61(d) or (e) (One Strike law). Welf & I C §602(b)(2).

Discretionary direct filing. In many cases, the district attorney has discretion to decide whether to file charges in adult court or juvenile court. See Welf & I C §707(d)(1). Once the district attorney files charges in juvenile court, proceedings will remain in juvenile court unless the juvenile court holds a fitness hearing and orders the matter transferred to adult court. Welf & I C §606.

The district attorney has discretion to file criminal charges in adult court in a case involving a minor who was 16 or older at the time of the alleged offense if the offense is listed in Welf & I C §707(b). Welf & I C §707(d)(1).

Under Welf & I C §707(d)(2), the district attorney also has discretion to file criminal charges in adult court in a case involving a minor who was 14 or older at the time of the alleged offense in the following circumstances:

- The alleged offense is one for which an adult could receive a sentence of death or life imprisonment;
- The minor is accused of personally using a firearm within the meaning of Pen C §12022.5 or §12022.53 during the commission of a felony; or
- The offense is listed in Welf & I C §707(b), and one or more of the following are true:
- The minor has previously been found to have committed a §707(b) offense;
- The offense was committed for the benefit of, at the direction of, or in association with, a criminal street gang (see Pen C §186.22);
- The offense was a "hate crime," as described in Pen C §§422.6-422.93; or
- The victim of the offense was age 65 or older or was disabled.

After a preliminary hearing following a direct filing under §707(d), if the minor is not held to answer for any crime for which direct filing under §707(d) is permitted, the prosecutor may seek review of the magistrate's findings in the criminal court by filing an information before the case is transferred to the juvenile court. Solano v Superior Court (2009) 169 CA4th 1361, 1368, 87 CR3d 448.

Under Welf & I C §707.01(a)(5), if a minor who was found unfit in a Welf & I C §707 proceeding was convicted of the offense that was the subject of the proceeding, and the minor is charged subsequently with a new criminal offense, the prosecutor may file charges directly in adult court if the minor:

- Is at least 16 at the time of the alleged offense; or
- Is alleged to have committed an offense for which the minor may be presumed, or may be found, unfit for juvenile court treatment. See §56.36 for discussion.

Sentencing for direct-filed minors. In a discretionary direct filing case, if the minor is then convicted in adult court without there having been a prior fitness hearing, the court may in certain circumstances sentence the minor either as an adult or as a juvenile. Pen C §1170.19; People v Thomas (2005) 35 C4th 635, 641, 27 CR3d 2 (despite contrary language of Pen C §1170.19, consent of prosecution is not required). However, to be sentenced as a juvenile, the minor must also meet the eligibility requirements of Welf & I C §1732.6. People v Thomas, supra. Welfare & Institutions Code §1732.6 restricts an adult court from sentencing minors convicted of certain offenses from being committed to the DJJ. For example, the criminal court cannot sentence a minor who was age 16 or older when the offense was committed to the DJJ if the conviction is for an offense listed in Welf & I C §707(b). Welf & I C §1732.6(b)(3). In addition, regardless of the minor's age at the time of the offense, Welf & I C §1732.6 precludes a minor convicted in adult court of serious (Pen C §1192.7(c)) or violent (Pen C §667.5(c)) offenses from being sentenced to the DJJ if the sentence, when added to the minor's age, exceeds 25 years. Welf & I C §1732.6(a).

A minor ineligible for the DJJ under Welf & I C §1732.6 who was convicted in adult court must be sentenced as an adult. People v Thomas (2005) 35 C4th 635, 642, 27 CR3d 2. This is true even when the minor would have been treated as a juvenile had the prosecutor initially filed the case in juvenile court. The fact that the same minor would have been sentenced as a juvenile had the prosecution initiated charges in juvenile court does not violate the separation of powers doctrine. Manduley v Superior Court (2002) 27 C4th 537, 117 CR2d 168. However, requiring prosecutorial consent after the charges have been filed for a particular type of disposition does violate separation of powers. People v Thomas (2005) 35 C4th 635, 642, 27 CR3d 2.

When a minor who has not had a fitness hearing is convicted of a lesser offense than that charged, he or she is eligible for what is in essence a postconviction fitness hearing. If the minor would be presumptively unfit for juvenile court if charged with the offense resulting in conviction, he or she must overcome a presumption that he or she should be sentenced as an adult. Pen C §1170.17(b). If the minor would be presumptively fit for juvenile court but subject to a fitness hearing, the prosecution must overcome a presumption that the minor should be treated as a juvenile for the minor to be sentenced as an adult. Pen C §1170.17(c). If the minor would not be subject to a fitness hearing if charged with the offense of which he or she was convicted, he or she must be transferred back to juvenile court. Pen C §1170.17(d). See also Pen C §1170.19. These "reverse remand" provisions are subject to the limitations on commitments to the DJJ in Welf & I C §1732.6.

A person is not eligible for the death penalty if he or she was under 18 years of age when the offense was committed. Pen C §190.5(a); Roper v Simmons (2005) 543 US 551, 161 L Ed 2d 1, 125 S Ct 1183. Minors convicted in adult court of first degree murder with special circumstances who were 16 years of age or older when the offense was committed may be sentenced to life without parole or, in the discretion of the court, to a term of 25 years to life in prison. Pen C §190.5(b). Courts have declined to extend the Roper rationale to find lengthy sentences imposed on minors in adult court unconstitutional on grounds of cruel or unusual punishment. See, e.g., People v Demirdjian (2006) 144 CA4th 10, 50 CR3d 184 (sentence of 50 years to life for minor convicted of committing two special circumstances murders at 15 years of age was constitutional).

§56.30 B. Fitness Petition Asks to Transfer Minor to Adult Court

The district attorney may request a fitness hearing seeking to transfer a minor's case to adult court in any of the following circumstances:

- A minor who was 16 or older at the time of the alleged offense is accused of any offense. See Welf & I C §707(a)(1). The minor is presumed to be fit for juvenile court and cannot be tried as an adult unless the prosecution proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the minor is unfit under at least one of the five criteria in Welf & I C §707. See also Cal Rules of Ct 5.770. The court retains discretion to find the minor fit for juvenile court even if the minor is found unfit under one or more of the five criteria. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.770(d).
- A minor age 16 or over is accused of any felony and has been previously adjudicated a ward of the court for two or more felonies committed when 14 or over. The minor is presumed to be unfit. See Welf & I C §707(a)(2).
- A minor age 14 or over is accused of a Welf & I C §707(b) offense. The minor is presumed to be unfit. See Welf & I C §707(c).

In cases in which a minor is presumed unfit, the juvenile court must transfer the case to criminal court unless the minor rebuts the presumption of unfitness by a preponderance of the evidence. Cal Rules of Ct 5.772(a). To do so, the minor must establish that he or she would be amenable to treatment as a juvenile under all five criteria listed in Welf & I C §707(a), (c). Cal Rules of Ct 5.772(f)(3). The five criteria listed in Welf & I C §707(a), (c) are:

(1) The degree of criminal sophistication exhibited by the minor;

(2) Whether the minor can be rehabilitated before juvenile court jurisdiction expires;

(3) The minor's previous delinquent history;

(4) The success of previous attempts by the juvenile court to rehabilitate the minor; and

(5) The circumstances and gravity of the offenses alleged to have been committed by the minor.

Under any of the grounds for seeking a fitness hearing, a finding of unamenability under any one of the criteria is sufficient to find the minor unfit. See Welf & I C §707(a)(1), (c). See also Cal Rules of Ct 5.770-5.772.

At a fitness hearing, the burden of proof is preponderance of the evidence. The defense bears the burden of proof except when the only ground for the fitness determination is Welf & I C §707(a)(1). Cal Rules of Ct 5.770-5.772.

The following chart summarizes when a minor is presumed either fit or unfit for juvenile proceedings.

Age at time of offense	Current offense	Prima facie required	Prior sustained petitions	Presumption	Authority
16 or over	Any offense	No	Not required	Presumed fit for juvenile proceedings	Welf & I C §707(a)(1)
16 or over	Any felony	Yes	2 felonies after minor turned 14	Presumed unfit	Welf & I C §707(a)(2)
14 or over	Offense listed in Welf & I C §707(b)	Yes	None	Presumed unfit	Welf & I C §707(c)

§56.31 C. Five Court Days' Notice Required; When Hearing Held

The prosecution must give the minor written notice of the fitness hearing at least 5 court days before the date of the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 5.766(b). See also Cal Rules of Ct 5.502(20). The fitness hearing must be held, and a court ruling made, before the jurisdiction hearing begins. Cal Rules of Ct 5.766(c). Unless a continuance is granted, the jurisdiction hearing must begin within the time limits of Cal Rules of Ct 5.774. Cal Rules of Ct 5.766(c). The time limits for jurisdiction hearings are listed in §56.2.

The remedy for failure to meet the deadlines for holding the fitness hearing is release of the minor if he or she is being detained; dismissal of the petition is not required. David B. v Superior Court (1983) 142 CA3d 623, 191 CR 157.

Ø Practice tip: If time has not been waived, the jurisdiction hearing must proceed on time. This would preclude the court from holding a fitness hearing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§56.32 D. Probation Officer's Investigation and Report; Later Use of Minor's Statements

After a petition to declare a minor unfit is filed under either Welf & I C §707(a) or (c), the probation officer must investigate and submit a report on the behavioral patterns and social history of the minor, recommending whether the minor is amenable to treatment as a juvenile. Welf & I C §707(a), (c), (e); Cal Rules of Ct 5.768. Without a probation report, the court does not have jurisdiction to hold a fitness hearing. Raul P. v Superior Court (1984) 153 CA3d 294, 298, 200 CR 360 (vacating finding of fitness; minor's refusal to waive time did not dispense with jurisdictional requirement).

If the minor talks with the probation officer during the officer's investigation, any statements made to the officer cannot be introduced as substantive evidence of guilt during trial in adult or juvenile court. Those statements are admissible, however, to impeach the minor. People v Macias (1997) 16 C4th 739, 66 CR2d 659; Ramona R. v Superior Court (1985) 37 C3d 802, 210 CR 204. See also People v Pokovich (2006) 39 C4th 1240, 1247, 48 CR3d 158.

Since the court relies heavily on the probation officer's report, attorneys should provide information to the probation officer to influence the probation officer and ensure documents supporting each attorney's position are included in the probation report.

> Ø Practice tip: Defense counsel must decide whether the minor should be advised to talk with the probation officer. If it is highly likely that the minor will be found unfit and remanded to the adult court, counsel should usually advise the minor against talking to the probation officer despite the limited privilege that applies to the minor's statements. If there will be a probation interview, the minor's attorney should request on the record to be present.

§56.33 E. Minor's Right to Prima Facie Ruling at Fitness Hearing When Charged Under Welf & I C §707(a)(2) or (c)

A minor who is charged with offenses that carry a presumption of unfitness has the right to have the judge rule on whether a prima facie showing was made that the offense charged is a felony or an offense listed in Welf & I C §707(b). Cal Rules of Ct 5.772(b); Edsel P. v Superior Court (1985) 165 CA3d 763, 211 CR 869. However, if the prosecution begins the fitness hearing without having established a prima facie case, and the minor's attorney does not request evidence of the prima facie case, then the issue is waived. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.772(b); Edsel P. v Superior Court (1985) 165 CA3d 763, 784, 211 CR 869. There is no parallel right to a prima facie hearing under Welf & I C §707(a)(1), which does not carry a presumption of unfitness. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.770. The prima facie hearing may be held at the beginning of the fitness hearing, or may occur earlier at a separate hearing. The burden of proof for the "prima facie" case is equivalent to "reasonable cause" or "probable cause" as used in preliminary hearings, defined as "such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence to believe and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion of the guilt of the accused." Marcus W. v Superior Court (2002) 98 CA4th 36, 41, 118 CR2d 919 (quotations and citations omitted).

At the hearing on the prima facie case, defense counsel has the opportunity to cross-examine all witnesses who prepared reports submitted to the court, but the defense does not have the right to cross-examine percipient witnesses. People v Superior Court (Ronald H.) (1990) 219 CA3d 1475, 269 CR 4; In re Luis M. (1986) 180 CA3d 1090, 1093, 226 CR 39. See also Cal Rules of Ct 5.772(b).

> Ø Note: If a witness knows very little about the case, defense counsel should object to the witness's testimony. See Marcus W. v Superior Court (2002) 98 CA4th 36, 45, 118 CR2d 919 ("prima facie case, and the determination of fitness, must be based upon competent and relevant evidence").

A confession used to establish a prima facie case must be voluntary. Thus, if the minor moves to exclude incriminating statements on the ground that they were obtained in violation of the privilege against self-incrimination, the trial court must hold a hearing to rule on voluntariness. Marcus W. v Superior Court, supra.

If the court finds a prima facie case, the court then determines the minor's fitness. If the court does not find that a prima facie case has been established, the prosecution must decide whether to proceed under Welf & I C §707(a)(1), which requires the prosecutor to bear the burden of proof, or whether to withdraw the fitness motion. If the court concludes there is a prima facie case, the court may not consider the likelihood that the minor may be innocent in determining whether the minor is fit for juvenile court. See People v Superior Court (Rodrigo O.) (1994) 22 CA4th 1297, 1303, 27 CR2d 796.

§56.34 F. Conduct of Fitness Hearing

Conduct of hearing when prosecutor bears burden of proof. When the minor is presumed fit, the prosecutor is the first to present evidence. To try the minor as an adult, the prosecutor must prove unfitness by a preponderance of the evidence under at least one of the criteria contained in Welf & I C §707(a). Cal Rules of Ct 5.770. See §56.30 for the five criteria. The main evidence submitted in the prosecution case is the probation officer's report. When witnesses testify or have submitted a report, the defense may cross-examine them. At the close of the prosecution's case, the defense may present relevant evidence to the court, such as psychological evaluations, school reports, and other mitigating information. Welf & I C §707. Strict rules of evidence do not apply. People v Superior Court (Steven S.) (1981) 119 CA3d 162, 173, 173 CR 788. The prosecution has a parallel right to cross-examine all defense witnesses.

Conduct of hearing when minor bears burden of proof. When the minor is presumed unfit, the minor has the burden of proving amenability regarding each of the five criteria listed in §707(a)(2) and (c) by a preponderance of the evidence. Cal Rules of Ct 5.772(a); People v Superior Court (Steven S.) (1981) 119 CA3d 162, 173 CR 788. See §56.30 for the five criteria. The defense is the first to present evidence when the minor bears the burden of proof. The defense may present any relevant evidence pertaining to the criteria of amenability. Welf & I C §707(a)(2), (c). Strict rules of evidence do not apply. People v Superior Court (Steven S.) (1981) 119 CA3d 162, 173, 173 CR 788.

§56.35 G. Court's Required Findings Under Welf & I C §707

If the minor is found unfit under Welf & I C §707(a), the court must state that finding on the record and must specify which of the factors under Welf & I C §707(a)(1) supports its conclusion that the minor is not amenable to juvenile court treatment. Welf & I C §707(a)(1); Cal Rules of Ct 5.770(c). See §56.30 for list of criteria.

If the minor is found fit under Welf & I C §707(a)(2) or (c), the court must make a specific finding of amenability for each of the five criteria of §707(a)(2) or (c). Cal Rules of Ct 5.772; People v Superior Court (Zaharias M.) (1993) 21 CA4th 302, 25 CR2d 838; People v Superior Court (Robert L.) (1989) 213 CA3d 54, 261 CR 303. See Judicial Council Form JV-710 (Juvenile Fitness Hearing Order). The court must state specific reasons for its finding of amenability regarding each of the five criteria and must clearly articulate its evaluative process in applying the relevant criteria to the particular facts of the minor's case. People v Superior Court (Robert L.) (1989) 213 CA3d 54, 63, 261 CR 303.

Ø Practice tip: It can be difficult for minor's counsel to prove amenability for juvenile court treatment when the charged crime is serious. Even if the minor is unsophisticated, has a minimal prior record, and demonstrates a strong likelihood he or she can be rehabilitated within the juvenile court system (criteria (1)-(4)), it is often difficult to establish fitness with respect to the fifth criterion, the circumstances and gravity of the offense. However, the court may consider any evidence of the minor's mental state, including expert testimony, that tends to lessen the severity of the crime even if that evidence does not constitute a legal justification or excuse. Rene C. v Superior Court (2006) 138 CA4th 1, 11, 41 CR3d 71. When indicated, counsel should explore presenting expert testimony of the minor's psychological state and developmental status to establish fitness regarding criterion (5).

If the minor objects, the judicial officer who heard the fitness hearing may not hear the jurisdiction hearing. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.770(h), 5.772(i).

§56.36 H. Effect of Prior Finding of Unfitness

If the minor is found unfit for juvenile court, and there are other pending juvenile petitions for which jeopardy has not attached, all the petitions will be transferred to adult court if the other offenses are eligible for fitness hearings. Welf & I C §707.01(a)(3).

New charges for which the prosecutor could seek a fitness hearing may be directly filed in adult court against a minor because of a prior finding of unfitness if the minor was convicted in adult court of the offense that resulted in the finding of unfitness. Welf & I C §707.01(a)(5).

Even if the minor was not convicted in the adult court of committing the offense that resulted in the finding of unfitness, new charges for which the prosecutor could seek a fitness hearing may be filed directly in adult court if the prior finding of unfitness was based solely on the minor's delinquent history or the failure of previous rehabilitation efforts. See Welf & I C §707.01(a)(6).

If tried as an adult, a minor has a right to a jury trial. See Rucker v Superior Court (1977) 75 CA3d 197, 141 CR 900. Once a minor has been found unfit for juvenile court, the minor has a right to bail or "own recognizance" release on the same basis as an adult. Welf & I C §§207.1(c), 707.1(b)(4). The minor may be housed at a jail rather than a juvenile hall if permitted under Welf & I C §207.1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§56.37 I. Right of Minor or Adult to Demand Finding of Unfitness

A court has discretion to permit a person who is 18 or older when he or she comes before the court to be tried as an adult. A request by a person 18 or older to be tried as an adult should almost always be granted. Rucker v Superior Court (1977) 75 CA3d 197, 141 CR 900. See Joey W. v Superior Court (1992) 7 CA4th 1167, 9 CR2d 486 (existing relationship between minor and juvenile court militated against waiver of right to be tried in juvenile court). However, a person under 18 has no right to give up the protection of the juvenile court and be tried as an adult. In re Anna S. (1979) 99 CA3d 869, 872, 160 CR 495.

J. Review of Fitness Order

§56.38 1. Review Requested by Minor's Counsel

There is no right to appeal a determination of whether a minor is fit for juvenile court. The only means of obtaining appellate review of a judge's order that a minor is or is not fit for juvenile court treatment is by extraordinary writ. If the minor is found to be unfit for juvenile court, the minor's writ must be filed no later than 20 days after the minor is asked to enter a plea to the complaint or indictment. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.770(i), 5.772(j). See also Rene C. v Superior Court (2006) 138 CA4th 1, 9, 41 CR3d 71. On review of referee orders, see §56.69.

© The Regents of the University of California

§56.39 2. Review Requested by Prosecution

The rules for seeking review are generally the same for the prosecution and defense, with the following exception: There is no set deadline for the prosecutor to file a writ petition. However, the attachment of jeopardy at the jurisdiction hearing would preclude later retrial. See People v Superior Court (Rodrigo O.) (1994) 22 CA4th 1297, 1302, 27 CR2d 796. On review of referee orders, see §56.69.

After suffering an adverse fitness ruling, the prosecution is entitled to a 2-day continuance of the jurisdiction hearing in order to file a writ petition. Cal Rules of Ct 5.772(h). However, when a continuance to file the writ petition would conflict with the minor's statutory right to a speedy jurisdiction hearing, the statutory right to a speedy jurisdiction hearing presumably takes precedence over the conflicting rule of court.

XI. PREJURISDICTION HEARING (PRETRIAL) MOTIONS

§56.40 A. Motions by Minor

Most of the motions that are available to adult criminal defendants are also available to minors in juvenile delinquency cases. See In re Scott K. (1979) 24 C3d 395, 155 CR 671 (minor's attorney may fashion motions for minor that are equivalent of adult criminal motions). See the checklist of the most common pretrial motions in criminal cases in §18.4. The following are examples of pretrial motions specifically sanctioned for juvenile court:

- Motion to amend pleading (Welf & I C §678; CCP §§469-475, on variance and amendment of pleading in civil actions, apply to Welf & I C §602 petitions);
- Challenge to judge or referee. CCP §§170.1, 170.6; In re Jose S. (1978) 78 CA3d 619, 144 CR 309.
- Motion to continue. Welf & I C §682. See In re Edward S. (2009) 173 CA4th 387, 411, 92 CR3d 725 (attorney's failure to seek continuance to permit him to fully investigate and competently defend juvenile constituted IAC).
- Demurrer. Pen C §1004(4)-(5); Welf & I C §656(f).
- Discovery motion.
- Once-in-jeopardy motion. Breed v Jones (1975) 421 US 519, 44 L Ed 2d 346, 95 S Ct 1779; Jesse W. v Superior Court (1979) 26 C3d 41, 160 CR 700.
- Faretta motion for self-representation. Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 95 S Ct 2525; In re Gordon J. (1980) 108 CA3d 907, 166 CR 809.
- Motion to suppress a statement on Fifth Amendment grounds.

  Ø Note: In determining the voluntariness of a minor's waiver of Fifth Amendment rights, the trial court must evaluate "the juvenile's age, experience, education, background, and intelligence, and [inquire] into whether he has the capacity to understand the warnings given him, the nature of his Fifth Amendment rights, and the consequences of waiving those rights." Fare v Michael C. (1979) 442 US 707, 725, 61 L Ed 2d 197, 99 S Ct 2560. See People v Hector (2000) 83 CA4th 228, 237, 99 CR2d 469 (minor's request to speak to parents is invocation of minor's Fifth Amendment rights absent contrary evidence).

- Motion for joinder, consolidation, or severance. Welf & I C §675.
- Motion for informal probation. Welf & I C §654.
- Motion to dismiss based on statute of limitations. In re Gustavo M. (1989) 214 CA3d 1485, 1493, 263 CR 328.
- Motion to suppress evidence obtained in violation of the Fourth Amendment. Welf & I C §700.1.
- Motion to release detained child from custody based on petitioner's failure to establish prima facie case. Cal Rules of Ct 5.680(d).
- Pitchess motion to discover evidence of prior complaints against the police. Hinojosa v Superior Court (1976) 55 CA3d 692, 127 CR 664.
- Motion to dismiss because of retaliatory prosecution. In re David B. (1977) 68 CA3d 931, 137 CR 577.
- Motion to exclude improper pretrial identification. In re Carl T. (1969) 1 CA3d 344, 81 CR 655.

Motions that are unavailable in juvenile court even though used in adult criminal court are:

- Deferred entry of judgment pursuant to Pen C §§1000-1001.90.
- Bail or O.R. release. See §56.14. See also Aubry v Gadbois (1975) 50 CA3d 470, 123 CR 365 (bail unavailable for juvenile, except after finding of unfitness).
- Aranda-Bruton motion. In re Jose M. (1994) 21 CA4th 1470, 27 CR2d 55 (Aranda-Bruton rule not applicable in court trial). But see People v Walkkein (1993) 14 CA4th 1401, 1408, 18 CR2d 383 (while exclusion of coparticipant's statement in joint court trial is not required, court cannot consider the statement against defendant unless the coparticipant testifies). See §§7.40-7.41.

  Ø Practice tip: Defense counsel should determine as soon as possible which pretrial motions are necessary to effectively prepare the minor's case for trial, because the time is quite short between arraignment and the jurisdiction hearing. When a minor is detained, minor's counsel has only 15 court days from arraignment to the jurisdiction hearing in which to prepare the case. Welf & I C §§636, 657.

© The Regents of the University of California

§56.41 B. Prosecution Motions

The most commonly made prosecution motions are for discovery and for certification to adult court under Welf & I C §707.

© The Regents of the University of California

§56.42 C. Format, Service, and Filing of Motions

Pretrial motions should follow the format required for pretrial motions in the superior court. See Cal Rules of Ct 1.1-1.150, 2.1-2.1100, and discussion in §§18.5-18.7. They must be served on counsel for all parties and on the minor unless a waiver is obtained. Cal Rules of Ct 5.544.

Motions to suppress evidence obtained in violation of the Fourth Amendment must be served and filed at least 5 court days before the date set for the jurisdiction hearing. Welf & I C §700.1; Cal Rules of Ct 5.544(1). If the minor is detained, all other pretrial motions must be served and filed at least 5 court days before the date set for the jurisdiction hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 5.544(1). If the minor is not detained, all pretrial motions other than search and seizure motions must be filed at least 10 court days before the date set for the jurisdiction hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 5.544(2). Local court rules sometimes provide different time periods for notice of pretrial motions. Local practice in some courts is for judges to allow or encourage defense counsel to set motions for the day of the jurisdiction hearing, to be heard before jeopardy attaches. See Jesse W. v Superior Court (1979) 26 C3d 41, 160 CR 700 (jeopardy attaches at jurisdiction hearing when first witness is called). Generally, a motion to suppress evidence may not be made after the attachment of jeopardy. See Welf & I C §700.1.

If counsel cannot meet these filing deadlines, an order shortening time should be obtained. See the sample form in California Criminal Law Forms Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

The Rules of Court provide that continuances will be granted only on a showing of good cause and only for the time shown to be necessary. Cal Rules of Ct 5.776(a). Stipulations between counsel or parties and convenience of parties are not in and of themselves good cause. Grounds for continuance are enumerated in Cal Rules of Ct 5.776(b)-(d). The court may find good cause even if the reason for granting the continuance is not one of the reasons enumerated in Rule 5.776. In re Maurice E. (2005) 132 CA4th 474, 33 CR3d 683. Good cause for a continuance regarding one minor does not establish good cause regarding a co-participant. A.A. v Superior Court (2003) 115 CA4th 1, 9 CR3d 1 (Pen C §1050.1 does not apply to juvenile cases).

Written notice and supporting documents must be filed and served at least 2 court days before the hearing, although the court may find good cause for failure to comply with this requirement. Cal Rules of Ct 5.776(a)(1).

For further discussion of pretrial motions and sample forms, see chap 18.

§56.43 D. Searches and Seizures

Special search and seizure rules apply to minors. See, e.g., Welf & I C §625 (peace officer may arrest minor without warrant for misdemeanor offense not committed in officer's presence); New Jersey v TLO (1985) 469 US 325, 339, 83 L Ed 2d 720, 733, 105 S Ct 733 (reasonable suspicion sufficient for school officials to conduct search at school); In re Randy G. (2001) 26 C4th 556, 567, 110 CR2d 516 ("detentions of minor students on school grounds do not offend the Constitution, so long as they are not arbitrary, capricious, or for the purposes of harassment"); In re William V. (2003) 111 CA4th 1464, 4 CR3d 695 (police officer assigned to school counts as school official for Fourth Amendment purposes). However, for juveniles, as for adults, a probation search is justified only if the law enforcement officer was aware of the search condition at the time of the search. In re Jaime P. (2006) 40 C4th 128, 51 CR3d 430. In addition, mere disruptive behavior does not authorize rummaging through a student's belongings. In re Lisa G. (2004) 125 CA4th 801, 807, 23 CR3d 163. See generally Sakurai & Van Dyke, Checklists for Searches and Seizures in Public Schools (2007-2008 ed).

§56.44 E. Discovery

Discovery is governed by Cal Rules of Ct 5.546 rather than Pen C §§1054-1054.10. See also Welf & I C §827; Cal Rules of Ct 5.756(a). While Rule 5.546 does not impose any discovery obligations on the minor, the juvenile court has discretion to order reciprocal discovery. See Robert S. v Superior Court (1992) 9 CA4th 1417, 1422, 12 CR2d 489. Absent such an order, the defense has no obligation to provide discovery. See In re Thomas F. (2003) 113 CA4th 1249, 7 CR3d 19. The party seeking discovery beyond that provided for by the Rules of Court has the burden of showing that obtaining discovery is reasonably necessary. See Clinton K. v Superior Court (1995) 37 CA4th 1244, 1249, 44 CR2d 140. Regardless of any court order, the prosecutor remains subject to the requirements of Brady v Maryland (1963) 373 US 83, 10 L Ed 2d 215, 83 S Ct 1194. See In re Gary G. (1981) 115 CA3d 629, 171 CR 531. See §11.26 on Brady disclosure.

XII. JURISDICTION HEARING

§56.45 A. Jurisdiction Hearing Is Like Criminal Court Trial

A jurisdiction hearing, or adjudication hearing, is the equivalent of a trial in the adult criminal court, except that there is no right to a jury. McKeiver v Pennsylvania (1971) 403 US 528, 545, 29 L Ed 2d 647, 661, 91 S Ct 1976; In re Daedler (1924) 194 C 320, 228 P 467. There is no right to jury trial even when the minor is tried after he or she reaches age 18. In re Rodney F. (1988) 203 CA3d 177, 249 CR 424. Time limits for jurisdiction hearings are discussed in §56.2.

A jurisdiction hearing is conducted in the same manner as a court trial in the adult criminal court. Cal Rules of Ct 5.780. See chap 28. Generally, the same rules of evidence apply. See §56.49. After the prosecution completes its case, the defense may move to dismiss the petition for insufficiency of the evidence. See Welf & I C §701.1. In ruling on the motion, the court weighs evidence. The court must dismiss counts not proven true beyond a reasonable doubt. See In re Anthony J. (2004) 117 CA4th 718, 727, 11 CR3d 865; In re Andre G. (1989) 210 CA3d 62, 66, 258 CR 127. This differs from a motion for judgment of acquittal in criminal court under Pen C §1118.1, which is granted only when the prosecution has failed to present substantial evidence of the existence of each element of the crime charged. People v Coffman (2004) 34 C4th 1, 90, 17 CR3d 710.

If the motion to dismiss is denied, the defense presents its case. After the defense rests, rebuttal and surrebuttal may take place.

Ø Practice tip: The denial of a Welf & I C §701.1 motion signals the court's belief that the prosecution has presented evidence proving the charge(s) beyond a reasonable doubt. For this reason, the defense should strongly consider presenting evidence to challenge the prosecution's case following an unsuccessful §701.1 motion. If counsel knows it will not be presenting evidence on behalf of the minor, a §701.1 motion need not be made; counsel can argue the case in closing.

The denial of a motion to dismiss made at the close of the prosecution's case is reviewable on appeal even if the minor subsequently testifies and thus fills in a deficiency in the prosecution's case. The question for the reviewing court is whether the evidence was sufficient at the time of the motion. In re Anthony J. (2004) 117 CA4th 718, 730, 11 CR3d 865.

§56.46 B. Statutory Time Limits

When a minor is detained, the jurisdiction hearing must be held within 15 court days of the date of the order directing detention. Welf & I C §657(a)(1); Cal Rules of Ct 5.774(b). When the minor is not detained, the hearing must be held within 30 calendar days after the date the 602 petition is filed, unless the minor is unavailable. Welf & I C §657(a); Cal Rules of Ct 5.774(a), (c). In those cases, the hearing is set within 30 calendar days of the minor's first appearance in court on the petition, if not detained, and within 15 court days of the minor's first appearance if detained. Welf & I C §657(a)(2). When the trial begins, the court and prosecution must be prepared to try the case to its conclusion. In re Chuong D. (2006) 135 CA4th 1303, 1310, 38 CR3d 351.

© The Regents of the University of California

§56.47 C. Continuance; Dismissal; Refiling

If the prosecution does not try the case within the statutory time period, the case must be dismissed unless it is continued for good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 5.774. If the case is continued for good cause to a time outside the statutory limit, a detained minor must be released. In re Kerry K. (2006) 139 CA4th 1, 5, 42 CR3d 467. If a detained minor consents to a continuance outside the statutory time period, he or she must be released if the case is not commenced within 7 days of the date set for the hearing. In re Kerry K., supra; Welf & I C §682(e).

To continue the hearing beyond the statutory time limit, a written notice must be filed and served on all parties to the proceeding at least 2 court days before the hearing sought to be continued, together with affidavits or declarations detailing specific facts showing good cause for the continuance. Welf & I C §682(a); Cal Rules of Ct 5.776(a). A party may make a motion to continue without complying with this requirement if good cause is shown for the failure to comply. Welf & I C §682(c); Cal Rules of Ct 5.776(a).

A continuance may be granted only on a showing of good cause and only for that period of time shown to be necessary by the moving party at the hearing on the motion. The determination of whether good cause exists is left to the discretion of the trial court and is not limited to the reasons in Cal Rules of Ct 5.776. In re Maurice E. (2005) 132 CA4th 474, 33 CR3d 683. Neither stipulation of the parties nor convenience of the parties is sufficient to establish good cause. Welf & I C §682(b). If good cause is shown, the hearing must begin on the date to which it was continued or within 7 days thereafter. Welf & I C §682(e).

Generally, the prosecution may refile a previously dismissed petition. People v Superior Court (Jorge C.) (1990) 224 CA3d 1114, 274 CR 439 (minor did not show prejudice; prosecution permitted to refile); In re Nan P. (1991) 230 CA3d 751, 281 CR 468 (same rule for misdemeanors). If the prosecution refiles the petition, the minor cannot be detained. Cal Rules of Ct 5.774(d).

§56.48 D. Midtrial Amendment of Petition

The rules for amending charges midtrial are more strict than in criminal cases. During the trial, the petition may be amended to include lesser included offenses. However, the petition cannot be amended midtrial to add lesser related offenses or other new charges, unless the minor consents. The minor need not show prejudice to prevent the amendment. In re Robert G. (1982) 31 C3d 437, 440, 182 CR 644 (amendment after close of evidence); In re Johnny R. (1995) 33 CA4th 1579, 40 CR2d 43 (amendment during prosecution's case-in-chief). Lesser included offenses are discussed in §32.8. The courts sometimes permit amendment of factual allegations. See, e.g., In re Man J. (1983) 149 CA3d 475, 197 CR 20 (vandalized property belonged to "S. Wagner and others," rather than "S. Wagner"); In re Michael D. (2002) 100 CA4th 115, 127, 128, 121 CR2d 909 (different victim).

Ø Practice tip: The minor's attorney should object to any midtrial amendments, to protect the record. Compare In re Stanley B. (1971) 17 CA3d 530, 95 CR 116, disapproved on other grounds in In re Robert G. (1982) 31 C3d 437, 445, 182 CR 644 (issue waived), with In re Carlo S. (1979) 94 CA3d 377, 380, 156 CR 442 (issue not waived by lack of objection).

§56.49 E. Rules of Evidence

The California Evidence Code must be followed in a jurisdiction hearing. Welf & I C §701; Cal Rules of Ct 5.780(b). A petition cannot be sustained unless the allegations are proved beyond a reasonable doubt by legally admissible evidence. Welf & I C §701; In re Andre G. (1989) 210 CA3d 62, 66, 258 CR 127. Otherwise, the petition must be dismissed (Welf & I C §§701.1, 702) and double jeopardy bars retrial. See Jesse W. v Superior Court (1979) 26 C3d 41, 160 CR 700; Richard M. v Superior Court (1971) 4 C3d 370, 93 CR 752.

The judge is prohibited from reading or considering any portion of the probation officer's report related to a contested petition before making a finding on the petition. Cal Rules of Ct 5.780(c). See also In re Gladys R. (1970) 1 C3d 855, 861, 83 CR 671.

Although the rules of evidence are generally identical to those in adult criminal trials, there is a major exception: The California Supreme Court has ruled that the Pen C §1111 requirement that a conviction cannot be supported solely by an accomplice's testimony unless it is corroborated does not apply to Welf & I C §602 cases. In re Mitchell P. (1978) 22 C3d 946, 151 CR 330. But see In re E.L.B. (1985) 172 CA3d 780, 218 CR 429 (criticizing Mitchell P.); In re Christopher B. (2007) 156 CA4th 1557, 68 CR3d 253 (California Supreme Court should reevaluate Mitchell P.). The Sixth Amendment right to confront and cross-examine witnesses applies. However, the rule that a nontestifying codefendant's statement generally cannot be admitted at a joint trial (see People v Aranda (1965) 63 C2d 518, 47 CR 353; Bruton v U.S. (1968) 391 US 123, 20 L Ed 2d 476, 88 S Ct 1620) does not apply to court trials, including juvenile delinquency proceedings. However, the court may only consider the statement against the declarant, not any other defendants in a joint court trial. People v Walkkein (1993) 14 CA4th 1401, 18 CR2d 383.

§56.50 F. Rebuttable Presumption When Minor Under 14

A minor under age 14 is presumed incapable of knowing the wrongfulness of his or her actions and incapable of committing a crime, unless the prosecution rebuts that presumption by clear and convincing evidence. Pen C §26(1); In re Manuel L. (1994) 7 C4th 229, 27 CR2d 2. A court looks at the age, experience, knowledge, and conduct of the child to determine whether a minor under age 14 is capable of committing a crime. A person who is incapable of committing a crime may nonetheless be made a ward under Welf & I C §601. In re Gladys R. (1970) 1 C3d 855, 83 CR 671.

In some cases, evidence pertaining to the circumstances of the offense charged against the minor will be sufficient to rebut the presumption without other evidence. See In re Marven C. (1995) 33 CA4th 482, 486, 39 CR2d 354. The juvenile court may base a finding that a minor understands the wrongfulness of his or her act on an earlier Pen C §26(1) finding concerning similar conduct. In re Nirran W. (1989) 207 CA3d 1157, 255 CR 327; In re Martin L. (1986) 187 CA3d 534, 539, 232 CR 43.

§56.51 G. Confessions and Admissions

Motions to exclude confessions and admissions may be made orally at the jurisdiction hearing. See In re Juma P. (1988) 204 CA3d 1228, 1235, 251 CR 739. When a minor denies having made a confession, the court may continue the hearing for no more than 7 days for the prosecutor to subpoena witnesses "to prove the allegations of the petition." Welf & I C §701.

If the defense moves to exclude the minor's statement on the ground it is involuntary, the prosecution has the burden to prove the voluntariness of a confession by a preponderance of the evidence; the minor's age, intelligence, education, and ability to comprehend the meaning and effect of the confession are some of the factors the court may consider in analyzing the voluntariness of the statement under the totality of the circumstances. While the legal standards on the voluntariness of a statement are the same for adults and minors, the age of the minor may color all or most aspects of a court's analysis of voluntariness given that threats, promises, and similar misconduct are likely to have a more coercive effect on a child than on an adult. In re Aven S. (1991) 1 CA4th 69, 75, 1 CR2d 655. See also People v Hector (2000) 83 CA4th 228, 237, 99 CR2d 469 (minor's request to speak to his parents is invocation of minor's Fifth Amendment rights absent contrary evidence).

For further discussion of confessions and admissions, see chap 23.

§56.52 H. Court's Finding

If the court finds that the allegations in a petition are true, it declares that the minor comes within the provisions of Welf & I C §602.

The juvenile court is required to find the degree (i.e., first or second) of the crime on the record. Pen C §1192; Cal Rules of Ct 5.778(f)(9), 5.795(a). If the crime is a "wobbler" (chargeable as either a felony or a misdemeanor), the court is required to consider which description applies; the court must also expressly state on the record that it has made such a consideration and state whether it is sustaining the offense as a misdemeanor or a felony. Welf & I C §702; Cal Rules of Ct 5.778(f)(9), 5.795(a); In re Manzy W. (1997) 14 C4th 1199, 60 CR2d 889. The determination of degree or the determination of the felony or status of a wobbler can be made at either the jurisdiction or disposition hearing. Welf & I C §702; Cal Rules of Ct 5.778(f)(9), 5.780(e)(5). Failure to determine the degree of the offense will result in the judgment's being modified to the less serious crime. In re Andrew I. (1991) 230 CA3d 572, 281 CR 570; In re Jacob M. (1987) 195 CA3d 58, 240 CR 418. In contrast, failure to determine whether an offense is a misdemeanor or a felony will result in a remand for the trial court to make that finding. In re Manzy W., supra.

A minor in the custody of his or her parent or guardian after a petition was sustained pursuant to an admission may not thereafter be ordered detained pending disposition without notice and a hearing, when the minor has an opportunity to contest the reason for detention. In re Talbott (1988) 206 CA3d 1290, 1295, 254 CR 421; In re Macidon (1966) 240 CA2d 600, 49 CR 861. However, after a contested jurisdictional hearing, the court may have learned new facts that would justify the detention of an out-of-custody minor. In re Kevin B. (1981) 122 CA3d 808, 810, 176 CR 237. The factors in Cal Rules of Ct 5.760 should be considered in ruling on the detention issue.

XIII. DISPOSITION HEARING

§56.53 A. Nature of Disposition Hearing

A disposition hearing is similar to sentencing in the adult court with one major distinction: The juvenile court tries to treat and rehabilitate the minor in addition to protecting the public. See Welf & I C §202. Punishment may be imposed on a minor when it is consistent with the rehabilitative objectives of juvenile court law. See In re Myresheia W. (1998) 61 CA4th 734, 740, 72 CR2d 65; In re Samuel V. (1990) 225 CA3d 511, 517, 277 CR 14; In re Michael D. (1987) 188 CA3d 1392, 234 CR 103. Whenever the court sustains a petition, the court in determining a disposition must consider, among other relevant factors, the age of the minor, the circumstances and gravity of the offense committed by the minor, and the minor's previous delinquent history. Welf & I C §725.5; In re Jonathan T. (2008) 166 CA4th 474, 484, 82 CR3d 753. The court may not punish a minor for failing to confess or plead guilty. A court may, however, consider whether the minor committed perjury in determining the appropriate disposition. See In re Edy D. (2004) 120 CA4th 1199, 16 CR3d 293; In re Lawanda L. (1986) 178 CA3d 423, 223 CR 685.

A minor is entitled to have the same judge who took his or her admission determine the disposition. In re Thomas S. (1981) 124 CA3d 934, 177 CR 742. See People v Arbuckle (1978) 22 C3d 749, 150 CR 778.

§56.54 B. Timing of Hearing; Conduct of Hearing

Time when hearing held. After the jurisdiction hearing, if there is no current probation officer's social study report on the minor, the court must continue the case for disposition until it has received and read a current report. See Welf & I C §§280, 702, 706; In re Devin J. (1984) 155 CA3d 1096, 202 CR 543. The parties must receive the report at least 48 hours before the hearing. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.785(a)(2). It is reversible error for the court to conduct a disposition hearing on the basis of a prior report or an oral probation report; a new written probation report must be prepared each time a minor is declared a Welf & I C §602 ward. In re L.S. (1990) 220 CA3d 1100, 269 CR 700.

If there is a current social study report, a court may proceed to the disposition hearing immediately after making a finding that a minor is a person described by Welf & I C §602. The court may also set a further disposition hearing either to receive and consider a probation officer's report or to receive evidence at the request of the minor's parent or guardian. Welf & I C §702; Cal Rules of Ct 5.778. If the minor is detained, the court may continue the case for up to 10 court days for disposition; if the minor is not detained, the court may continue the case up to 30 days after the date the petition was filed. A court may continue the hearing for an additional 15 days when the minor is not detained, if good cause is shown. Welf & I C §702; Cal Rules of Ct 5.782(a).

Conduct of hearing. At the disposition hearing, the court and counsel are provided with a dispositional report prepared by the probation officer. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.785. The dispositional report is not subject to the hearsay rule. In re Vincent G. (2008) 162 CA4th 238, 244, 75 CR3d 526. The report will contain the probation officer's recommended disposition for the minor. Cal Rules of Ct 5.785. The report will also include any victim impact statements that have been submitted to the probation officer. Welf & I C §656.2(a). The minor's statements to the probation officer may be considered for the purpose of sentencing, but not for prosecuting any new offenses. See Ramona R. v Superior Court (1985) 37 C3d 802, 210 CR 204. The statements are, however, admissible in subsequent proceedings for impeachment. See People v Macias (1997) 16 C4th 739, 66 CR2d 659. If the probation officer has recommended a commitment to the DJJ for an offense requiring registration as a sex offender, the court must consider the results of a standardized risk assessment tool. Welf & I C §706.

The prosecution or defense counsel may present documents, character witnesses, and expert witnesses that support counsel's request for a particular disposition. Counsel for the minor may also present a dispositional alternative to the court. The evidence may consist of documents, testimony, or argument. See Welf & I C §706; Cal Rules of Ct 5.785-5.790; In re Vincent G., supra. The minor has a right to testify. In re Shannon B. (1994) 22 CA4th 1235, 27 CR2d 800, disapproved on other grounds in People v Evans (2008) 44 C4th 590, 597 n5, 80 CR3d 174. The victim of the crime has a right to attend the dispositional hearing, present a written victim impact statement, and speak at the hearing. Welf & I C §656.2.

At disposition, the court may consider evidence that was suppressed under Welf & I C §700.1, even though that evidence could not be considered at the jurisdiction hearing. In re Michael V. (1986) 178 CA3d 159, 170, 223 CR 503. The court may also consider all the facts underlying the charges, even though the minor admitted a lesser included offense. In re Robert H. (2002) 96 CA4th 1317, 117 CR2d 899. See In re Gary B. (1998) 61 CA4th 844, 71 CR2d 824.

The court may wish to order a psychological evaluation of the minor pursuant to Welf & I C §741, particularly if the court is contemplating committing the minor to the DJJ. If the court believes that a minor is in need of medical or psychological care, or has other unmet clinical needs, it can order the probation officer to hire a psychiatrist, psychologist, or other clinical expert to determine and implement appropriate treatment for the minor. Welf & I C §741. If any government agency has a legal duty to provide services to a minor, but has failed to fulfill that duty, the court may join that agency as a party to the juvenile court proceedings. Welf & I C §727(a). In that way, the court may issue orders to the agency. If there is reason to believe the minor has special educational needs, the court may, and in some cases must, order an individualized educational program assessment. See In re Angela M. (2003) 111 CA4th 1392, 4 CR3d 809. In addition, the court may be able to refer the minor for a mental health assessment if the county has approved such a program. See Welf & I C §§710-714, discussed in §56.26.

Required determinations. At the disposition hearing, the court determines whether any misdemeanor-felony ("wobbler") offenses charged as felonies will be misdemeanors or felonies unless the court has already done so. See Welf & I C §702; Cal Rules of Ct 5.790(a). If the minor is allowed to remain in his or her parent's custody, the court should not specify a maximum term of confinement. In re Matthew A. (2008) 165 CA4th 537, 81 CR3d 119 (striking specification of term of imprisonment to stop courts from engaging in this practice); In re Ali A. (2006) 139 CA4th 569, 573, 42 CR3d 846 (since specification of term of imprisonment is of no legal effect, no basis for reversal or remand). If a minor is removed from the physical custody of a parent or guardian, the court must specify the maximum period of confinement. See Welf & I C §§726, 731; Cal Rules of Ct 5.795(b). In determining the maximum period of confinement, the court must decide whether to impose consecutive sentences. Welf & I C §726(c); In re Alex N. (2005) 132 CA4th 18, 26, 33 CR3d 172.

C. Dispositional Choices

§56.55 1. Overview of Alternatives at Disposition

The court has three major choices at disposition:

(1) Dismiss the case (Welf & I C §782; Cal Rules of Ct 5.790(a)(2));

(2) Place the minor on probation under a probation officer's supervision for up to 6 months without declaring the minor a ward of the court (Welf & I C §725(a); Cal Rules of Ct 5.790(a)); or

(3) Declare the minor a ward of the court and order any of the dispositions authorized under Welf & I C §§726-727, 730-731. Welf & I C §725(b); Cal Rules of Ct 5.790.

Ø Note: If the probation and child welfare departments have entered into a joint protocol for "dual status" children, the juvenile court has a fourth option. When it appears that a minor could be dealt with as either a dependent under Welf & I C §300 or a delinquent under Welf & I C §601 or §602, the court can simultaneously make the child a dependent child and a ward of the court. See Welf & I C §241.1(e). See also §56.25. If a protocol does not exist, the court may maintain dependency services by imposing nonwardship probation under Welf & I C §725(a). See Welf & I C §300.

© The Regents of the University of California

§56.56 2. Dismissal

A court may dismiss a petition at any time before the minor reaches age 21 if the court finds that a dismissal is required to serve the interests of justice and the minor's welfare, or if it finds that the minor is not in need of treatment or rehabilitation. See Welf & I C §782. See also Cal Rules of Ct 5.790(a)(2); Welf & I C §241.1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§56.57 3. Probation Without Wardship

Without adjudging the minor a ward of the court, the court may place the minor on probation, under the supervision of the probation officer, for a period not to exceed 6 months. See Welf & I C §725(a). The court may not order confinement as a condition of nonwardship probation. In re Trevor W. (2001) 88 CA4th 833, 835, 106 CR2d 169.

Ø Note: Granting nonwardship probation under Welf & I C §725(a) permits the county social services department to remain the "lead" agency providing services to a minor who is also a dependent of the court, even when the county has not adopted a "dual status" protocol. See Welf & I C §241.1(d)-(e). See also §56.25. For further discussion of probation, see §56.60.

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Wardship

§56.58 a. Dispositional Options When Court Declares Wardship

The dispositional options available to the court when it declares wardship range from placing the minor on probation and allowing the minor to remain in the home to committing the minor to the DJJ. The court may order that wardship continue until further order of the court (In re Antoine D. (2006) 137 CA4th 1314, 1322, 40 CR3d 885) or may set a specific period of probation. The court may make any reasonable order for the care, supervision, custody, conduct, maintenance, support, and medical treatment of a child declared a ward. See Welf & I C §727(a); Cal Rules of Ct 5.790(f). However, confinement is mandatory for minors held responsible for the commission of a violent felony with the personal use of a firearm, provided that when the minor has a serious mental disorder, the court may instead place the minor in an alternative treatment program. Welf & I C §602.3.

A county jail sentence is not an authorized disposition in juvenile court, even if the minor is age 18 or older at the time of disposition. In re Ramon M. (2009) 178 CA4th 665, 674, 101 CR3d 158.

Ø Note: Proposition 36 does not apply to minors; the court retains the discretion to incarcerate a minor for an offense that would qualify for drug treatment and probation under Proposition 36 if committed by an adult. See In re Jose Z. (2004) 116 CA4th 953, 10 CR3d 842.

§56.59 b. Placement of Minor Removed From Physical Custody of Parent or Guardian

Under Welf & I C §726 and Cal Rules of Ct 5.790(d), before ordering the minor removed from his or her parent's or guardian's physical custody, the court must find the following:

- The minor's parent or guardian has failed to provide, or is incapable of providing, proper maintenance, training, and education;
- The minor has been on probation in the physical custody of his or her parent or guardian and has failed to reform; or
- The minor's welfare requires removing the minor from the physical custody of the parent or guardian.

When a minor has been adjudged a ward of the court, the court has the discretion to order the minor to be on probation without supervision of the probation officer; in so ordering, the court may impose any reasonable and appropriate probation conditions. See Welf & I C §727(a). Unsupervised probation is not permitted when the minor has committed an offense described in Welf & I C §707(b) or (d)(2), Pen C §459, or Health & S C §11350(a). Welf & I C §727(a). A minor who has committed certain drug offenses is eligible for probation without supervision of the probation officer only when the court determines that the interests of justice would best be served and states reasons on the record for that determination. Welf & I C §727(a). In all other cases, probation is under the supervision of a probation officer. See Welf & I C §727. Conditions of probation are discussed in §56.60.

The minor may be "physically confined" by placement in a juvenile hall, ranch, camp, forestry camp, secure juvenile home, or DJJ institution. See Welf & I C §§726(c), 730(a), 731. While former minors who have since turned 18 may not be committed to a county jail (In re Ramon M. (2009) 178 CA4th 665, 674, 101 CR3d 158), former minors age 19 or older may be committed to juvenile hall and then transferred to county jail. Welf & I C §208.5. See In re Charles G. (2004) 115 CA4th 608, 618, 9 CR3d 503. But see In re Kenny A. (2000) 79 CA4th 1, 93 CR2d 678 (questioning this practice). Former minors who are 21 or over cannot be housed at the juvenile hall. See Welf & I C §§208.5, 737(a). The court may order the care, custody, and control of the minor to be under the supervision of the probation officer, who may place the minor in the approved home of a relative or nonrelative, in a licensed community care facility, or in a foster home. See Welf & I C §727. The court cannot place a minor into foster care as a means of punishment. Welf & I C §202(e).

When a minor is placed in a group or foster home, delinquency proceedings become similar to dependency proceedings. See In re James R. (2007) 153 CA4th 413, 431, 62 CR3d 824. With rare exceptions, while a minor is placed outside the home under Welf & I C §727, the probation department must offer reunification services to the family. Welf & I C §727.2. Minors placed outside the home for foster care must be placed in a safe setting that is the least restrictive, is most familial, and best meets the needs of the minor. Placement with relatives is preferred. See Welf & I C §727.1. A juvenile placed out of home has a fundamental constitutional right to visitation with family members. A court cannot delegate all of its authority over visitation to a program; such a delegation would violate the separation of powers doctrine. In re James R., 153 CA4th at 417.

> Ø Note: No case directly addresses whether the juvenile court has authority in delinquency cases to direct the probation department to place the child with a particular group home or foster care placement. The court is required to order that the care, custody, and control of the minor be under the supervision of the probation officer who may place the minor. Welf & I C §727(a). In dependency cases, the court of appeal has interpreted nearly identical language as permitting the trial court to direct a particular placement. See In re Robert A. (1992) 4 CA4th 174, 189, 5 CR2d 438.

Indian Child Welfare Act. The Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) (25 USC §§1901-1963) applies to juvenile delinquency proceedings when an Indian child is placed in foster care or there is a serious risk an Indian child will be placed in foster care. R.R. v Superior Court (2009) 180 CA4th 185, 103 CR3d 110; In re Alejandro A. (2008) 160 CA4th 1343, 1348, 74 CR3d 44. See Welf & I C §224.3(a); Cal Rules of Ct 5.480-5.487. Otherwise, the ICWA does not apply to juvenile delinquency proceedings. In re Alejandro A., supra. Even when the ICWA does not apply, an Indian child's tribe is entitled to be present at court hearings. Cal Rules of Ct 5.530(b)(7). When the ICWA applies, the tribe is entitled to assume jurisdiction over the case unless there is good cause for the juvenile court to maintain jurisdiction. An Indian child may not be removed from the home and placed in foster care unless "the continued custody of the child by the parent or Indian custodian is likely to result in serious emotional or physical damage to the child." 25 USC §1911(b). The court must place the minor with relatives or the tribe as specified in 25 USC §1915. Information on the ICWA is available on the website of the Native American Rights Fund at http://www.narf.org/icwa.

§56.60 c. Probation Conditions

Probation is generally under the supervision of the probation officer. See Welf & I C §727(a). However, the court has the discretion to order a ward to be on probation without supervision of the probation officer; in so ordering, the court may impose any reasonable and appropriate probation conditions. See Welf & I C §727(a).

Unsupervised probation is not permitted when the minor has committed an offense described in Welf & I C §707(b) or (d)(2), Pen C §459, or Health & S C §11350(a). Welf & I C §727(a). Unsupervised probation is also not permitted when the minor has committed certain drug offenses, unless the court states reasons on the record why unsupervised probation is in the interests of justice. Welf & I C §727(a).

When the minor is placed on probation and not removed from the home, the court must make each of the following orders unless the court states reasons for not making an order (Welf & I C §§725(a), 729.2):

- Order the minor to attend school without absence.
- Order the minor and the minor's parent or guardian to participate in a counseling education program. See Welf & I C §245.5 (court has jurisdiction to issue orders to minor's parent or guardian).
- Order the minor to obey a curfew.

Probation conditions may be imposed on a minor that would be unconstitutional or impermissible if imposed on an adult. In re Sheena K. (2007) 40 C4th 875, 889, 55 CR3d 716 (probation condition that minor not associate with anyone known to be disapproved by her probation officer); In re Walter P. (2009) 170 CA4th 95, 87 CR3d 668 (upholding home supervision and work programs imposed on minor for offense punishable only by fine). But see Alex O. v Superior Court (2009) 174 CA4th 1176, 95 CR3d 438 (condition prohibiting minor U.S. citizen from reentering U.S. except for specified purposes was unreasonable and unconstitutional); In re James C. (2008) 165 CA4th 1198, 1205, 81 CR3d 846 (condition prohibiting minor U.S. citizen from reentering U.S. was unreasonable and overbroad, and therefore unconstitutional). A minor, unlike an adult, has no right to refuse the terms of probation. In re Tyrell J. (1994) 8 C4th 68, 83, 32 CR2d 33, overruled on other grounds in In re Jaime P. (2006) 40 C4th 128, 51 CR3d 430. However, conditions of probation must be reasonable and must serve justice and the rehabilitation and reformation of the ward. See In re Antonio C. (2000) 83 CA4th 1029, 1033, 100 CR2d 218. See also In re Juan G. (2003) 112 CA4th 1, 6, 5 CR3d 34 (fundamentally unfair to impose probation condition that minor maintain "B" average when record showed such compliance to be beyond minor's capacity); In re Daniel R. (2006) 144 CA4th 1, 6, 50 CR3d 179 (prohibition on traveling to Mexico unreasonably interfered with minor's ability to travel with family); In re Luis F. (2009) 177 CA4th 176, 99 CR3d 174 (order that minor take prescribed medication did not violate due process). A probation condition must be sufficiently specific to enable a minor to know what conduct is required. In re H.C. (2009) 175 CA4th 1067, 96 CR3d 793.

A minor who does not object to probationary terms risks losing the ability to seek relief from the court of appeal. See In re Sheena K. (2007) 40 C4th 875, 889, 55 CR3d 716. A minor's inability to refuse probationary terms does not relieve the minor of the obligation to object. In re Abdirahman S. (1997) 58 CA4th 963, 970, 68 CR2d 402. However, failure to object to a probation condition on the ground that it is unconstitutionally vague and overbroad does not waive the issue on appeal. In re Sheena K., supra; In re H.C. (2009) 175 CA4th 1067, 1070, 96 CR3d 793.

Only the court may impose probation conditions. The probation officer may recommend new conditions of probation to the court but may not unilaterally impose them. See In re Pedro Q. (1989) 209 CA3d 1368, 257 CR 821.

If the offense involved certain drug or alcohol violations, probation must include a condition that the minor participate in and successfully complete a drug or alcohol, or both, education program. See Welf & I C §§725(a), 729.10.

If a minor commits an act of vandalism or graffiti and is placed on probation and not removed from the custody of his or her parents, he or she is subject to mandatory special conditions of probation to wash, paint, repair, or replace the damaged property, pay restitution, or both. Welf & I C §742.16. The conditions in the statute are in addition to any other that the court could properly impose. In re G.V. (2008) 167 CA4th 1244, 84 CR3d 809.

In every case, the court must order restitution as appropriate. Welf & I C §730.6(l). Restitution may be ordered for dismissed counts even absent the minor's waiver; this is not the case for adults. In re T.C. (2009) 173 CA4th 837, 844, 93 CR3d 447.

§56.61 d. Restitution to the Victim

The court must order the minor to pay a restitution fine and full restitution to a victim for economic loss, including any attorney fees and costs incurred to collect restitution, unless it finds compelling and extraordinary reasons not to do so. If the amount of loss cannot be ascertained at the time of disposition, the court may direct the probation officer to set the amount of loss. If the minor disputes the amount, counsel should request a hearing. See Welf & I C §730.6(h); In re Imran Q. (2008) 158 CA4th 1316, 1320, 71 CR3d 121 (rule on attorney fees applies to juveniles); In re M.W. (2008) 169 CA4th 1, 86 CR3d 545 (minor must pay cost of victim's mental health services). See also In re Karen A. (2004) 115 CA4th 504, 9 CR3d 369. See Order for Restitution and Abstract of Judgment (Judicial Council Form CR-110/JV-790). Civil settlements do not release a minor from liability if the court concludes a higher amount is needed to provide full restitution. In re Tommy A. (2005) 131 CA4th 1580, 33 CR3d 103.

A parent or guardian with physical custody of the minor will usually be jointly and severally liable with the minor for restitution, subject to statutory limits. See Welf & I C §730.7; CC §§1714.1, 1714.3; In re Jeffrey M. (2006) 141 CA4th 1017, 46 CR3d 533. However, a parent or guardian who establishes that he or she does not have the ability to pay or establishes a lack of notice of the potential civil liability before the petition is sustained does not have to pay. Welf & I C §730.7(a). Also, a valid release of liability will prevent the court from ordering restitution from the parent or guardian exceeding the amount specified in the release. In re Michael S. (2007) 147 CA4th 1443, 1454, 54 CR3d 920. A parent or guardian may appeal an order that the parent or guardian pay restitution. In re Jeffrey M. (2006) 141 CA4th 1017, 1021, 46 CR3d 533.

While Welf & I C §730.6 specifies when restitution must be imposed, the court also has discretion to impose restitution as a condition of probation under other circumstances. In re T.C. (2009) 173 CA4th 837, 844, 93 CR3d 447.

§56.62 e. Fines

Like adults, minors are subject to numerous fines and penalties. Pursuant to Welf & I C §731, a minor made a ward may be fined up to $250 if the minor has the ability to pay. Additionally, the court may impose upon a ward having the ability to pay a fine in the amount that could be imposed on an adult convicted of the same offense. Welf & I C §730.5. Under Welf & I C §730.6, when a petition is sustained, the court is required to order the minor to pay a restitution fine unless "there are compelling and extraordinary reasons" for not imposing the fine. The restitution fine is in addition to restitution ordered paid to the victim. See §56.61. In cases in which the minor has been found to have committed a felony or felonies, the court sets the fine at no less than $100 and no more than $1000. Welf & I C §730.6(b). The fine cannot exceed $100 unless the minor has the ability to pay more. In re Steven F. (1994) 21 CA4th 1070, 1079, 26 CR2d 604. However, the minimum fine under Welf & I C §730.6(b) may be imposed on a minor who does not have the ability to pay the fine. In re Enrique Z. (1994) 30 CA4th 464, 36 CR2d 132. In cases in which the minor has been found to have committed a misdemeanor or misdemeanors, the restitution fine cannot exceed $100. Welf & I C §730.6(b)(2).

§56.63 f. Determining the Maximum Period of Confinement

When a minor is not removed from the home at disposition, the court is not permitted to state a maximum period of confinement. In re Matthew A. (2008) 165 CA4th 537, 541, 81 CR3d 119. When a minor is removed from the home, the court must set a maximum period of confinement. Welf & I C §726(c); Cal Rules of Ct 5.795(b); In re Julian R. (2009) 47 C4th 487, 491, 97 CR3d 790 (commitment to DJJ). For minors not committed to the DJJ, the maximum period of confinement is simply the statutory maximum penalty for the offense after the court has determined whether to impose consecutive or concurrent sentences. The court does not have discretion to set the maximum period of confinement for minors not committed to DJJ at less than the maximum possible sentence for an adult, other than by dismissing charges in the petition or sentencing a defendant concurrently on multiple counts. See In re Geneva C. (2006) 141 CA4th 754, 46 CR3d 264; In re Ali A. (2006) 139 CA4th 569, 42 CR3d 846. In contrast, for minors committed to the DJJ, the court is required to choose whether to impose the upper, middle, or lower term of imprisonment for felony offenses.

"[T]here is no statutory minimum time of physical confinement before a juvenile offender can be released." In re Christian G. (2007) 153 CA4th 708, 712, 63 CR3d 215. However, minors committed to the DJJ are subject to specific guidelines regarding their minimum parole eligibility date.

The calculation of maximum terms generally is similar to the calculation for adult felony sentencing. See Welf & I C §726(c). The juvenile court includes applicable enhancements and alternative sentencing schemes even if they explicitly require a "conviction" of the current offense. In re Jovan B. (1993) 6 C4th 801, 811, 25 CR2d 428 (Pen C §12022.1); In re Damien V. (2008) 163 CA4th 16, 77 CR3d 107 (Pen C §186.22(d)). However, a juvenile court does not count prior juvenile dispositions as prior convictions. People v Blankenship (1985) 167 CA3d 840, 852, 213 CR 666; People v West (1984) 154 CA3d 100, 201 CR 63. See People v Weidert (1985) 39 C3d 836, 848 n10, 218 CR 57. When imposing a misdemeanor sentence consecutive to another sentence (felony or misdemeanor), the juvenile court adds one-third of the maximum sentence for the misdemeanor to the base term. See In re David H. (2003) 106 CA4th 1131, 1133, 131 CR2d 330. See also In re Deborah C. (1981) 30 C3d 125, 177 CR 852 (two sustained petitions for offenses carrying a maximum of 6 months each resulted in an 8-month maximum period of confinement). The prohibitions on multiple punishments contained in Pen C §654 and Kellett v Superior Court (1966) 63 C2d 822, 48 CR 366, apply to juvenile delinquency cases. In re R.L. (2009) 170 CA4th 1339, 88 CR3d 854.

The court may aggregate prior offenses in calculating the maximum period of confinement if notice of the intent to do so has been given. In re Michael B. (1980) 28 C3d 548, 553, 169 CR 723. A boilerplate statement in the petition regarding the intent to aggregate terms is sufficient. In re Edwardo L. (1989) 216 CA3d 470, 479, 265 CR 188. Merely mentioning the period of time authorized by the prior commitment is insufficient. In re Steven O. (1991) 229 CA3d 46, 57, 279 CR 868. Failure to provide notice of the intent to aggregate terms may result in a lower maximum period of confinement. In re Michael B., supra. But see In re Steven O., supra (error harmless). As with adults, consecutive sentences will, in some cases, result in the minor's facing less remaining time because the minor has more time credits.

The Second District, Division 8, held in 2003 that the court may not recompute the maximum confinement time set for a previously sustained petition, at least when that would invalidate the prior court's exercise of discretion. See In re David H. (2003) 106 CA4th 1131, 1134, 131 CR2d 330. However, in In re Geneva C. (2006) 141 CA4th 754, 46 CR3d 264, the Second District, Division 4, noted that in 2004 (after Michael B.) the legislature amended former Welf & I C §731(b) (now §731(c)) to give the juvenile court discretion to consider the facts of the case before specifying the maximum term of confinement. The court concluded that the statute "by logical implication permits the juvenile court to recalculate the maximum term of confinement for detention at CYA if the juvenile had been previously committed to another reformatory institution." 141 CA4th at 757.

For the computation of the maximum period of confinement for wards committed to the DJJ, see §56.65B.

© The Regents of the University of California

§56.64 g. Time Credits

A minor is entitled to receive credit toward the maximum period of confinement for time spent in custody before disposition. In re J.M. (2009) 170 CA4th 1253, 1256, 89 CR3d 31; In re Emilio C. (2004) 116 CA4th 1058, 1067, 11 CR3d 85; In re Antwon R. (2001) 87 CA4th 348, 104 CR2d 473. The minor receives custody credits for time spent in a juvenile hall, ranch, camp, forestry camp, or secure juvenile home pursuant to §730, or in any institution operated by the DJJ. Welf & I C §726(c). A minor is not entitled to receive credit for time spent on home supervision or electronic surveillance, or while in any nonsecured setting such as a group or foster home. In re Lorenzo L. (2008) 163 CA4th 1076, 1080, 78 CR3d 150; In re Randy J. (1994) 22 CA4th 1497, 28 CR2d 152. The minor is not entitled to receive sentence reduction credits for work and good behavior, although the minor does receive credit for the actual number of days spent in custody. See Welf & I C §726. A minor who is also an LPS conservatee confined in a mental health facility receives time credits while his or her delinquency case is proceeding, unless the court's jurisdiction is suspended. In re Robert B. (1995) 39 CA4th 1816, 46 CR2d 691.

Ø Practice tip: Most ranches and group homes have programs with specific durations that will not be shortened by a minor's predisposition time credits. For example, a minor with a 3-year maximum period of confinement who is committed to a county ranch for a full year generally will serve that year in its entirety, even if he or she already has a year of predisposition time credits. Thus, minors effectively receive predisposition time credits only toward the maximum period of confinement.

XIV. DIVISION OF JUVENILE JUSTICE

§56.65 A. General Principles of DJJ Commitments

The Division of Juvenile Justice (DJJ) of the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) comprises various locked institutions intended for California's most serious juvenile offenders. Confinement in a DJJ facility is the closest juvenile disposition to adult prison. See Welf & I C §731; In re Ismael A. (1989) 207 CA3d 911, 915, 255 CR 126.

Ø Note: The statutes governing DJJ commitments changed substantially in 2007 as a result of the passage of SB 81 (operative Sept. 1, 2007) and AB 191 (operative Sept. 29, 2007). Amendments limiting the range of offenses for which a juvenile can be committed to the DJJ do not apply to dispositions that occurred before the effective date of SB 81. In re N.D. (2008) 167 CA4th 885, 84 CR3d 517. Practitioners must be familiar with the new rules governing DJJ commitments.

The purpose of the DJJ is not to achieve retribution. Rather, the DJJ seeks to achieve "community restoration, victim restoration, and offender training and treatment." Welf & I C §1700. To commit a minor to the DJJ, the court must be fully satisfied that the mental and physical condition and qualifications of the ward are such as to make it probable that the minor will benefit from the reformatory educational discipline or other treatment provided by the DJJ. Welf & I C §734. See In re John H. (1978) 21 C3d 18, 22, 145 CR 357. But see In re Jonathan T. (2008) 166 CA4th 474, 486, 82 CR3d 753 (no requirement that court specify the precise manner in which minor will benefit from commitment to DJJ). The record must also show that less restrictive alternatives would be ineffective or inappropriate. In re Teofilio A. (1989) 210 CA3d 571, 576, 258 CR 540. See also In re M.S. (2009) 174 CA4th 1241, 1250, 95 CR3d 273 (commitment to DJJ based on proper factors, including diabetic minor's medical treatment needs); In re Carl N. (2008) 160 CA4th 423, 433, 72 CR3d 823. There is, however, no requirement that a less restrictive placement actually be attempted before a DJJ commitment is ordered. In re Ricky H. (1981) 30 C3d 176, 183, 178 CR 324.

The DJJ must accept a person committed to it if it believes the person can materially benefit from its reformatory and educational discipline, unless the DJJ lacks adequate facilities, staff, and programs to care for the committed person. Welf & I C §736(a). If the court finds that a minor will not benefit from DJJ treatment, and no suitable alternatives exist, the court should dismiss the case. In re Aline D. (1975) 14 C3d 557, 565, 121 CR 816. Minors under age 11 may not be committed to the DJJ. Welf & I C §733.

When the court is considering a DJJ commitment, it may order the minor transported to the DJJ for a 90-day diagnostic study of the minor to help it make that decision. However, the DJJ will only accept the minor if the county has agreed to pay the DJJ for the diagnostic study. See Welf & I C §§704, 1752.1. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.782(c).

Ø Practice tip: Because of the severity and length of a DJJ commitment, minor's counsel should vigorously contest a DJJ recommendation by the probation department. Counsel should attempt to develop less restrictive alternatives to the DJJ that might satisfy the court, and should not rely on the probation department to explore and document alternative placements. Counsel should also consider hiring experts to assist in developing an alternative disposition or to testify why the DJJ does not have facilities, staff, or programs to meet the minor's needs. See Welf & I C §736(a). Counsel may wish to submit a comprehensive alternative disposition report and social study for the court's consideration.

A court may not stay a DJJ commitment conditioned on the minor's compliance with the conditions of his or her probation. In re Ronnie P. (1992) 10 CA4th 1079, 1090, 12 CR2d 875. However, the imposition of a ranch commitment, previously stayed, has been upheld when the juvenile court lifted the stay only after a particularized determination at the disposition hearing that imposing the suspended commitment was appropriate. See In re Kazuo G. (1994) 22 CA4th 1, 5, 27 CR2d 155.

© The Regents of the University of California

§56.65A B. Qualifying Offenses

Effective September 1, 2007, a minor may be committed to DJJ only if the most recent offense alleged in a petition that is admitted by the minor or found true by the court is listed in Welf & I C §707(b), or is a sex offense specified in Pen C §290.008(c). Welf & I C §733. A court may no longer commit a minor to the DJJ on less serious offenses. A court's ability to avoid this result by dismissing the most recent sustained petition is sharply limited. See V.C. v Superior Court (2009) 173 CA4th 1455, 93 CR3d 851 (dismissal not in the interests of justice). The provisions of SB 81 are not retroactive to juvenile cases when the disposition hearing was held before September 1, 2007. In re Brandon G. (2008) 160 CA4th 1076, 1081, 73 CR3d 273; In re Carl N. (2008) 160 CA4th 423, 437, 72 CR3d 823. However, nonserious offenders committed to the DJJ before September 1, 2007, may be eligible to have their DJJ commitment recalled by the juvenile court. See §56.67.

Ø Note: The literal language of Welf & I C §731(a)(4) requires a sustained Welf & I C §707(b) offense as a predicate for a commitment to the DJJ. On the other hand, Welf & I C §733 acts only as a limitation, precluding certain nonserious offenders from commitment to the DJJ. Arguably, if the minor's current adjudication is for a sex offense listed in Pen C §290.008(c), and that offense is not listed in Welf & I C §707(b), the minor may not be committed to the DJJ. See Welf & I C §731(a)(4).

The juvenile court may commit a ward to DJJ on a probation violation when the most recent, previolation sustained petition qualifies for DJJ commitment. In re M.B. (2009) 174 CA4th 1472, 1477, 95 CR3d 359. However, a court may not dismiss a previously sustained petition for a DJJ-ineligible offense in order to commit a minor to DJJ on an earlier, DJJ-eligible petition. V.C. v Superior Court (2009) 173 CA4th 1455, 1469, 93 CR3d 851. But see In re J.L. (2008) 168 CA4th 43, 85 CR3d 35 (upholding dismissal of DJJ-ineligible petition before disposition on that petition when purpose of dismissal was to facilitate DJJ commitment on earlier petition).

People under 21 who are convicted in criminal court of an offense committed while they were under age 18 may be committed to the DJJ under limited circumstances. Welf & I C §1731.5. See People v Thomas (2005) 35 C4th 635, 27 CR3d 2. Those commitments are discussed in chap 37.

§56.65B C. Determining Maximum Period of Confinement for DJJ Commitments

When a trial court sentences a minor to the DJJ, the trial court must set a maximum term of confinement "based upon the facts and circumstances of the matter or matters that brought or continued the ward under the jurisdiction of the juvenile court." Welf & I C §731(c). The court considers factors about the offense and the offender's history that would be comparable to those employed for the sentencing of adults. See In re Sean W. (2005) 127 CA4th 1177, 1185, 26 CR3d 248. The court also considers the facts in light of the purposes of the juvenile system and is not restricted solely to the criminal aggravating or mitigating circumstance that would apply to adults. In re Carlos E. (2005) 127 CA4th 1529, 1542, 26 CR3d 551. A court sentencing a minor for an offense that would require an indeterminate term for an adult may select a shorter term for the minor. In re R.O. (2009) 176 CA4th 1493, 98 CR3d 738.

In setting a term less than the maximum, the court may set any appropriate term and is not limited to the triadic sentencing structure applicable in adult court. In re H.D. (2009) 174 CA4th 768, 776, 94 CR3d 627; In re Carlos E. (2005) 127 CA4th 1529, 1542, 26 CR3d 551. For an offense punishable by an adult indeterminate sentence, the court has discretion to set a term of confinement less than the indeterminate sentence applicable to an adult. In re R.O. (2009) 176 CA4th 1493, 1498, 98 CR3d 738. However, the court may not impose a maximum period of confinement less than the minimum adult term for an offense punishable by an adult determinate sentence. In re Joseph M. (2007) 150 CA4th 889, 896, 58 CR3d 756. The upper term is used to calculate the maximum period of confinement if the minor is committed to the DJJ. Welf & I C §731(c). Notwithstanding Cunningham v California (2007) 549 US 270, 166 L Ed 2d 856, 127 S Ct 856, the juvenile court may set the maximum term of confinement at the adult maximum term even though the minor does not have the right to a jury determination of aggravating factors. In re Christian G. (2007) 153 CA4th 708, 63 CR3d 215; In re Alex U. (2007) 158 CA4th 259, 69 CR3d 695.

The court is not required to orally pronounce the maximum period of confinement or state its reasons. In re Julian R. (2009) 47 C4th 487, 499, 97 CR3d 790. Compare Pen C §1170(b)-(c).

§56.65C D. Release From DJJ

The DJJ sets an initial parole consideration date on the basis of the classification of the offense or offenses specified in the California Code of Regulations. See 15 Cal Code Regs §§4951-4957. This ranges from 1 year or less for misdemeanors and nonserious felony offenses (see 15 Cal Code Regs §§4956-4957) to 7 years for the most serious offenses, including murder (see 15 Cal Code Regs §4951). It is not unusual for DJJ wards to be kept in custody far beyond the initial parole consideration dates because of "time adds" and other factors that result in a denial of parole.

If the period of parole is considered, a DJJ commitment is for a minimum of 2 years. Generally, a minor must be released from the DJJ after turning a specified age or after having been subject to DJJ control for 2 years, whichever is later. The age of release depends on the offense that led to the commitment (Welf & I C §§1769, 1770).

Persons released on parole had been monitored by the DJJ. However, as of September 1, 2007, persons released from the DJJ on parole for offenses not named in Welf & I C §707(b) or Pen C §290.008(c) are supervised by the committing court and its probation department. See Welf & I C §§1766(b), 1767.35.

§56.66 E. Extended Commitment of Dangerous Minors

The DJJ may request the prosecuting attorney to seek an order extending a DJJ commitment if it determines the person is physically dangerous to the public because of a "mental or physical deficiency, disorder, or abnormality which causes the person to have serious difficulty controlling his or her dangerous behavior." Welf & I C §1800; In re Howard N. (2005) 35 C4th 117, 24 CR3d 866. The extended detention scheme satisfies due process and equal protection, and a further finding that the inability to control behavior results in a "serious and well-founded risk of reoffense" is unnecessary to preserve the scheme's constitutionality. In re Lemanuel C. (2007) 41 C4th 33, 38, 58 CR3d 597.

Such a request to the prosecutor must be filed with the committing court at least 90 days before the discharge date and must be accompanied by a written statement of facts. Welf & I C §1800. The 90 days' notice is not jurisdictional, although lack of sufficiently timely notice may warrant dismissal. People v Hernandez (1983) 148 CA3d 560, 196 CR 31. If the prosecution declines to proceed, it must promptly notify the DJJ. Welf & I C §1800. If the court agrees that probable cause supports the petition, it must order a hearing. The person involved has the right to a hearing, to the assistance of counsel, and to appear and compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence. A probable cause hearing must be held within 10 calendar days after the court's order. Welf & I C §1801(a).

If the court finds no probable cause, it must dismiss the petition and the person must be discharged at the conclusion of his or her commitment. If the court does find probable cause, it must order that a trial be conducted to decide whether the person is physically dangerous to the public because a mental or physical deficiency, disorder, or abnormality causes the person serious difficulty in controlling dangerous behavior. Welf & I C §1801(b). If the cause of the offender's "dangerousness" is not a mental or physical condition, however, or if the offender is not amenable to DJJ treatment, the DJJ's control may not be extended. See Welf & I C §§734, 779, 1800; In re Francecisco (1971) 16 CA3d 310, 94 CR 186.

At any trial under Welf & I C §1801, the person is entitled to a jury, unless he or she is advised and waives it. In re Gary W. (1971) 5 C3d 296, 96 CR 1. If not waived, the jury must be summoned within 4 to 30 days after the date of the order for a hearing, unless time is waived. Any verdict must be unanimous, and the standard of proof is beyond a reasonable doubt. Welf & I C §1801.5. The subject of the petition is entitled to "all rights guaranteed under the federal and state constitutions in criminal proceedings," Welf & I C §1801.5. See, e.g., Joshua D. v Superior Court (2007) 157 CA4th 549, 68 CR3d 715 (right against self-incrimination).

Before the expiration of the 2-year term, the DJJ has the discretion to conditionally release a person subject to an extended commitment. In re Schmidt (2006) 143 CA4th 694, 710, 49 CR3d 477.

A continued DJJ detention terminates 2 years after the continued commitment order was made, unless the DJJ files a new application for continued detention. Welf & I C §1802. There is no limit on the number of extensions that can be granted. Welf & I C §1802. The DJJ may order a person over age 21 to be transferred to the state prison system. Welf & I C §1802.

> Ø Note: A minor committed to the DJJ by the juvenile court is not subject to an extended commitment under Welf & I C §1780. That section, which requires a conviction, applies to commitments to the DJJ from the adult court. See In re John R. (1981) 116 CA3d 940, 946, 172 CR 387.

§56.67 F. Juvenile Court Oversight of Wards Committed to DJJ

DJJ must share written reviews with court and probation department. The DJJ must prepare various reports about a ward and provide these reports to the court and the probation department of the county of commitment. Welf & I C §1720. Initially, the case of each ward must be reviewed by the DJJ within 45 days of the ward's arrival. Welf & I C §1720(a). Within 60 days of a ward's commitment to the DJJ, the DJJ must set an initial parole consideration date for the ward and notify the probation department and the committing juvenile court of that date. Welf & I C §1731.8. Within 60 days of intake, the DJJ must provide the court and the probation department with a treatment plan for the ward. Welf & I C §1766(c).

Reviews are required throughout a ward's commitment to the DJJ. No less often than annually, the DJJ must review the case of each ward for the purpose of determining whether existing orders and dispositions in individual cases should be modified or continued in force. Welf & I C §1720(b).

Ø Note: There is no statutory requirement that these reports be provided to the prosecution or minor's counsel. See Welf & I C §1720(f). However, given the requirement that trial counsel continue to represent DJJ wards after disposition is pronounced (Welf & I C §634.6; Cal Rules of Ct 5.663; see §56.18), an attorney is ethically obligated to request copies of these reports from the trial court and carefully review them to ensure that the ward is receiving treatment consistent with Welf & I C §734. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110. If counsel determines that the ward's needs are not being met, a motion to modify or recall the DJJ commitment, discussed below, may be appropriate.

Court's authority to change, modify, or recall a DJJ commitment. A commitment to the DJJ removes the ward from the direct supervision of the juvenile court. In re Allen N. (2000) 84 CA4th 513, 100 CR2d 902. Nonetheless, the juvenile court retains jurisdiction to modify conditions of wardship following a commitment to the DJJ. In re Robert W. (1991) 228 CA3d 32, 279 CR 625.

The juvenile court has the authority to change, modify, or set aside an order of commitment after a noticed hearing and on a showing of good cause that the minor is not benefiting from the DJJ commitment. See Welf & I C §§734, 779; In re John H. (1978) 21 C3d 18, 145 CR 357. When the court vacates the DJJ commitment, the court does not change the maximum period of court jurisdiction. In re Antoine D. (2006) 137 CA4th 1314, 1323, 40 CR3d 885 (trial court would still have jurisdiction until age 25 for minor committed for Welf & I C §707(b) offense). See §56.3.

When an application is made to change, modify, or set aside an order of commitment to the DJJ, 10 days' notice of the hearing on the application must be served by U.S. mail on the director of the DJJ. In changing, modifying, or setting aside the order of commitment, the court must consider the effect upon the discipline and parole system of the DJJ. Welf & I C §779.

Recall of DJJ commitment of nonserious offenders. Wards committed to the DJJ before September 1, 2007, may be eligible to have their sentences recalled if they would currently not be eligible for commitment. On the recommendation of the chief probation officer of the county, the juvenile court may recall the commitment of any ward whose commitment offense was not an offense listed in Welf & I C §707(b) or a sex offense listed in Pen C §290.008(c) and who remains confined in a DJJ institution. On recall of the ward, the court must set and convene a recall disposition hearing for the purpose of ordering an appropriate alternative disposition for the ward. Welf & I C §731.1. Once recalled, wards become a full county responsibility and may not be returned to the DJJ on a violation of probation.

A recalled ward may be confined in juvenile hall or other county juvenile facilities. Beginning September 1, 2007, wards aged 19 and 20 years may be housed in county juvenile facilities such as juvenile halls, camps, and ranches, together with wards aged 18 years and under, so long as the facility has received approval for this purpose by the Corrections Standards Authority. Welf & I C §208.5.

§56.68 XV. POSTDISPOSITION PROCEEDINGS

This section discusses the various postdisposition proceedings for offenders not committed to the DJJ. Postdisposition proceedings relevant to DJJ commitments are discussed in §§56.65C-56.67.

Review hearing for out-of-home placement. If a child is detained and is awaiting placement, the court must review the case at least every 15 days. Welf & I C §737(b). While a minor is placed in foster care, status review hearings must take place "no less frequently than once every six months." Welf & I C §727.2(c). "Foster care" is defined broadly and includes almost any placement outside the home in an unlocked facility, including placement with relatives, a guardian, or a foster family agency. See Welf & I C §§727.4, 11402. A permanency planning hearing must take place no less frequently than once every 12 months. Welf & I C §727.3(a). The probation officer prepares a written social study report at least 10 days before the hearing. Welf & I C §727.4. Conditions inside the home may ultimately lead to termination of parental rights. See Welf & I C §§727.31, 727.32.

Ø Note: While a minor in placement is entitled to be present at 6-month status review hearings (Welf & I C §679; Cal Rules of Ct 5.530(b)(1)), commonly the minor's appearance is waived to avoid disruption of the minor's progress in placement.

Modification of disposition order. A parent "or other person" with an interest in a minor who is a ward of the juvenile court may bring a supplemental petition under Welf & I C §778 to modify or set aside the court's disposition order if the modification would not result in a more restrictive placement. In re Ronald W. (1985) 175 CA3d 199, 204, 220 CR 557. The court itself retains authority to change, modify, or set aside its own order committing a minor to the DJJ. Welf & I C §§731.1, 779. See §56.67. See also Petition to Modify Previous Orders—Change of Circumstances (Judicial Council Form JV-740). The court must terminate its jurisdiction after learning that the minor no longer requires the protection of wardship. In re Francecisco (1971) 16 CA3d 310, 94 CR 186.

Probation violations. When a minor already on probation commits a criminal offense, the prosecution may pursue a probation violation by filing a petition alleging the new offense and stating an intention to aggregate the period of confinement under Welf & I C §726. See In re Michael B. (1980) 28 C3d 548, 554, 169 CR 723. See also §§56.16, 56.68.

Alternatively, either the district attorney or the minor's probation officer may file a notice alleging a violation of the terms of the minor's probation "not amounting to a crime." Welf & I C §777. See Notice of Hearing to Modify, Change, or Set Aside Previous Orders—Violation of Probation (Judicial Council Form JV-735). Any probation violation, even one that could be charged as a crime, can form the basis of a §777 notice as long as it is actually charged only as a probation violation. In re Eddie M. (2003) 31 C4th 480, 3 CR3d 119; In re Emiliano M. (2003) 31 C4th 510, 512, 3 CR3d 140.

Charging a violation of probation as contempt will not increase the maximum period of confinement. In re Francisco S. (2000) 85 CA4th 946, 102 CR2d 514.

The standard of proof at a probation violation hearing is by a preponderance of the evidence. Welf & I C §777(c). Due process does not require a higher standard of proof. See In re Eddie M. (2003) 31 C4th 480, 502, 3 CR3d 119.

The prosecutor or the probation officer may use hearsay to prove the violation "to the same extent such evidence would be admissible in an adult probation revocation hearing, pursuant to the decision in [People v Brown (1989) 215 CA3d 452, 263 CR 391]." Welf & I C §777(c). See People v Arreola (1994) 7 C4th 1144, 31 CR2d 631. The hearsay must, however, be reliable. In re Kentron D. (2002) 101 CA4th 1381, 125 CR2d 260 (violation may not be based on hearsay allegations in probation report).

The Welf & I C §777 petition does not have to state explicitly that a more restrictive placement is being sought. In re Tyrone O. (1989) 209 CA3d 145, 257 CR 134.

For commitment to DJJ on a probation violation, see §56.65A.

Sealing of records. Five years or more after juvenile court jurisdiction has terminated, or any time after the minor has reached 18 years of age, the minor or the probation department may request that the minor's records be sealed.

See Order to Seal Juvenile Records (Judicial Council Form JV-590). Counsel should contact the court clerk or the probation department to learn if a county prescribes a particular form or charges a fee for sealing the records. The records to be sealed include the records of the probation department, the juvenile court, and law enforcement agencies. Welf & I C §781(a). The court holds a hearing on the motion to seal and must grant the petition if it finds the minor has been rehabilitated and the minor has not been convicted of a felony or a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude since the termination of jurisdiction. Welf & I C §781(a). Once sealed, the records may be disclosed only in a defamation action and to automobile insurance companies in limited situations. Welf & I C §781(b)-(c). See In re James H. (2007) 154 CA4th 1078, 1083, 65 CR3d 410 (trial court's broad authority to order the release of juvenile records does not extend to records sealed under Welf & I C §781).

A minor's record may not be sealed if the minor committed an offense listed in Welf & I C §707(b) when 14 years of age or older. Welf & I C §781(a). This prohibition on sealing applies even if the minor was honorably discharged from the DJJ. In re Chong K. (2006) 145 CA4th 13, 21, 51 CR3d 350. If any count in a single petition is a §707(b) offense, none of the records on any on the counts in that petition may be sealed. In re Jeffrey T. (2006) 140 CA4th 1015, 1020, 44 CR3d 861.

An order sealing the records relieves a minor of the obligation to register as a sex offender. Welf & I C §781(a).

§56.69 XVI. REVIEW OF ORDERS MADE BY REFEREES AND COMMISSIONERS

Referees, commissioners, and judges pro tem hear juvenile cases in addition to judges. The distinction is important because, in theory, the decisions of a referee are subject to review by a juvenile court judge on the minor's request. See Welf & I C §§248-252. In practice, the parties almost always will have effectively stipulated to the referee or commissioner acting as a judge pro tem, even if the parties did not explicitly so stipulate and had no intention of stipulating. See, e.g., In re Courtney H. (1995) 38 CA4th 1221, 1227, 45 CR2d 560 ("merely by intending to have the subordinate judicial officer decide the case, the parties may impliedly confer temporary judge status on the officer even without their knowledge that a stipulation is required"); In re Lamonica H. (1990) 220 CA3d 634, 270 CR 60; Contra Costa Ct R 10(C)(5) (party not objecting to court commissioner's hearing case stipulates to commissioner's hearing matter as judge pro tem); In re Brittany K. (2002) 96 CA4th 805, 117 CR2d 813. Although Cal Rules of Ct 2.831 does provide that a referee may hear a case only as a temporary judge with a written stipulation, in practice this is widely ignored.

Ø Practice tip: An attorney for a party who does not intend to stipulate to a subordinate judicial officer acting as a judge pro tem should place that intention on the record at every hearing before the subordinate judicial officer.

A referee assigned to a juvenile case has "the same powers as a judge of the juvenile court" with one exception: The referee may hear a jurisdiction hearing only if sitting pursuant to stipulation as a judge pro tem. Welf & I C §248. See Cal Rules of Ct 5.536(b). In addition, a referee's order removing a minor from his or her home becomes final only if approved by a juvenile court judge within 2 court days. Welf & I C §249. In contrast, a commissioner sitting as a commissioner may hear juvenile cases only if it is stipulated that he or she will act as a judge pro tem. See In re Ian J. (1994) 22 CA4th 833, 836, 27 CR2d 728. A commissioner, however, may be assigned to sit as a referee. See Govt C §71622; Cal Rules of Ct 5.536.

A minor has the right to have a judge review any order made by a referee (Welf & I C §252), unless the parties stipulated to the referee as a judge pro tem. See Cal Const art VI, §§21-22; Welf & I C §250; In re Edgar M. (1975) 14 C3d 727, 732, 122 CR 574. The minor requests review by asking for a rehearing. The application for a rehearing must contain a short statement of the reason for the request and may challenge all or part of an order or finding. Welf & I C §252; Cal Rules of Ct 5.542(a). If the prior proceedings before the referee were not recorded by an official reporter, the court must hold a rehearing. Welf & I C §252. Rehearings are de novo. Welf & I C §254. A minor's request for a rehearing cannot be denied unless the judge first reviews the transcript. In re Winnetka V. (1980) 28 C3d 587, 592, 169 CR 713.

The prosecutor has no right to request a rehearing. Nonetheless, the prosecutor may properly ask a judge in writing to grant a rehearing on the court's own motion under Welf & I C §253 if the prosecutor complies with certain procedural requirements. The judge is not required to look at the record of the underlying proceedings before ruling on the prosecutor's request. In re Winnetka V. (1980) 28 C3d 587, 169 CR 713.

§56.70 XVII. APPEAL

A juvenile court judgment or order that finds a minor to be a ward under Welf & I C §602, and any subsequent orders, including a change of placement ordered under Welf & I C §777, may be appealed to the court of appeal. Welf & I C §800. The minor may not immediately appeal from the juvenile court's jurisdictional findings; the appeal is taken from the order made at the disposition hearing. In re James J. (1986) 187 CA3d 1339, 232 CR 456. Before July 1, 2010, a notice of appeal must be filed within 60 days of the disposition or subsequent hearing or, in matters heard before referees, within 60 days of the date the judgment becomes final. Cal Rules of Ct 8.400(d). Effective July 1, 2010, a notice of appeal must be filed within 60 days after the rendition of the judgment or the making of the order being appealed (Cal Rules of Ct 8.406(a)(1)), provided that in matters heard by a referee not acting as a temporary judge, a notice of appeal must be filed within 60 days after the referee's order becomes final (Cal Rules of Ct 8.406(a)(2)). When an application for rehearing of an order of a referee not acting as a temporary judge is denied, a notice of appeal from the referee's order must be filed within 60 days after that order is served or 30 days after entry of the order denying rehearing, whichever is later. Cal Rules of Ct 8.406(a)(3). See Notice of Appeal—Juvenile (Judicial Council Form JV-800).

A minor unable to afford counsel has a constitutional right to appointed counsel on a first appeal. In re Kevin S. (2003) 113 CA4th 97, 119, 6 CR3d 178.

A minor does not have to obtain a certificate of probable cause (see Pen C §1237.5) to appeal the judgment following an admission to the allegations of the petition. In re Joseph B. (1983) 34 C3d 952, 196 CR 348. While an admission waives most issues (see In re John B. (1989) 215 CA3d 477, 263 CR 607; Ricki J. v Superior Court (2005) 128 CA4th 783, 27 CR3d 494), after an admission a minor may still appeal the denial of a motion to suppress evidence. Welf & I C §800(a).

Issues the prosecution may appeal are set out in Welf & I C §800(b). The prosecution may appeal pretrial evidentiary rulings that resulted in dismissal before the attachment of jeopardy. Welf & I C §800(b)(4). See In re Ricardo C. (1995) 37 CA4th 431, 436, 43 CR2d 585.

An attorney representing a minor in a delinquency case has a duty to advise the client regarding the merits of an appeal. The attorney must file a notice of appeal if requested by the minor or if doing so is in the minor's best interest and arguably meritorious grounds exist for granting the appeal. Pen C §1240.1. As in adult criminal court, the minor's appellate counsel must file a Wende brief if he or she does not find any reasonably arguable grounds for appeal. In re Kevin S., supra. See People v Wende (1979) 25 C3d 436, 158 CR 839. On Wende briefs, see §44.37.

Although parents are not listed in Welf & I C §800, they may appeal to protect their own interests. In re Jeffrey M. (2006) 141 CA4th 1017, 1021, 46 CR3d 533.

§57.1 I. OVERVIEW

Definition of forfeiture. Forfeiture is the taking by the government, without compensating the owner, of property that was illegally used or obtained. Provisions on narcotics asset forfeiture are in Health & S C §§11469-11495. The Health and Safety Code forfeiture statutes apply only to controlled substances offenses.

Forfeiture provisions for criminal profiteering (Pen C §§186-186.8) that cover assets acquired through a pattern of criminal profiteering activity or proceeds thereof are similar in many respects to Health & S C §§11469-11495. Penal Code §186.2(a) lists more than 29 specific offenses that can lead to asset forfeiture if found to be part of a "pattern of criminal profiteering activity" as defined in Pen C §186.2(b). This approach is in sharp contrast to federal forfeiture law, which covers more than 50 offense categories. See, e.g., 18 USC §§981, 1961-1968.

Neither federal forfeiture law nor California's criminal profiteering provisions are discussed in detail in this chapter. Note, however, that California forfeiture provisions are modeled on federal law. Consequently, California courts consider federal decisions on asset forfeiture to be persuasive authority. People v $497,590 U.S. Currency (1997) 58 CA4th 145, 151, 68 CR2d 185.

Prerequisites for forfeiture. It is a condition precedent to forfeiture of property under Health & S C §11470(e)-(g) that a defendant be convicted in an underlying or related criminal action of an offense specified in Health & S C §11470(f) or (g) that occurred within 5 years before the seizure or the notice of the intent to seek forfeiture. If the defendant is found guilty of the underlying or related criminal offense, the issue of forfeiture must be tried to the same trier of fact unless all the parties waive the requirement. Health & S C §11488.4(i)(3), (5). Express waiver may be required. See People v $10,153 U.S. Currency (2009) 179 CA4th 1520, 1526, 102 CR3d 584 (failure to try forfeiture to same jury that convicted defendant deprived court of jurisdiction to enter order of forfeiture 4 years later). But see People v Brach (2002) 95 CA4th 571, 578, 115 CR2d 753 (in forfeiture-like proceeding to recover costs of marijuana eradication under Health & S C §11470.1, jury trial was waived by failure to request).

> Ø Note: In light of the apparent conflict regarding whether the requirement that the cases be tried together can be waived, prosecutors should obtain express waivers in those cases in which both parties agree to try the forfeiture separately from the underlying criminal case. Defense counsel will want an express waiver when it is not in the client's best interest to have the same jury that convicted the client decide the issue of forfeiture. Counsel representing a claimant who is not the criminal defendant also will want to try to obtain an express waiver of the requirement that the cases be tried together, because it is unlikely that he or she will be permitted to participate in jury selection in the underlying criminal case and may then find himself or herself trying the forfeiture to a jury that he or she did not pick and that just returned a verdict of guilty.

There are three exceptions to the conviction requirement:

- For the forfeiture of cash or negotiable instruments whose value is at least $25,000. In such cases, the presiding judge must assign the forfeiture action for trial. Health & S C §11488.4(i)(4)-(5).
- When the defendant in the underlying criminal case is also the claimant in the forfeiture action and willfully fails to appear in the criminal case. On application by the prosecution, the court may order judgment of forfeiture against the defendant. The prosecution must provide notice of its application for entry of default to the defense attorney and make a showing of due diligence to locate the defendant. Health & S C §11488.4(k).
- When no one files a claim contesting the forfeiture. See Health & S C §11488.4(i)(1)-(3); People v Mendocino County Assessor's Parcel No. 056-500-09 (1997) 58 CA4th 120, 68 CR2d 51.

Types of forfeiture proceedings. Forfeiture can occur automatically, with no notice and no proceedings, after notice but without a judicial proceeding, or after notice and hearing, depending on the type of property and its use. Health & S C §§11473, 11488.4(i)-(j). For discussion, see §§57.9-57.10.

Nonjudicial forfeiture proceedings. In nonjudicial forfeiture proceedings, the prosecuting agency must notify all potential claimants of the initiation of forfeiture proceedings. Health & S C §11488.4(c). Persons with legitimate, legally cognizable interests in the property sought to be forfeited may file with the superior court indicated in the forfeiture notice a verified claim stating the nature of their interest in the property. The claim must be filed within 30 calendar days after receipt of the notice, if the person received actual notice, unless the court extends the time for filing for good cause shown. Health & S C §11488.5(a)(1). Persons who did not receive actual notice must file their claims within 30 calendar days after the date of the first publication of notice in the newspaper. Health & S C §11488.5(a)(1). An endorsed copy of the claim must be served on the prosecuting agency within 30 calendar days after filing. Health & S C §11488.5(a)(1).

Ø Warning: Failure to file the claim within the prescribed time periods makes it almost impossible to defend against the forfeiture proceeding. See §57.11.

If a timely, verified claim is served on the prosecuting agency, the prosecuting agency must file a petition for forfeiture of property within 30 calendar days after receiving the claim. Health & S C §11488.4(j). This step converts the procedure into a judicial forfeiture.

If no claim is filed within the deadlines discussed above, and proper notice was given, the prosecutor can file a declaration of forfeiture. The property then legally belongs to the government. Health & S C §11488.4(j).

Judicial forfeiture proceedings. Judicial forfeiture proceedings are civil and are begun by filing a petition in the superior court. Health & S C §11488.4(a). The petition must be served on persons designated in the receipt issued for the property seized, on persons with an interest in the property seized (Health & S C §11488.4(c)), and if the case began as a nonjudicial forfeiture, on any claimants who filed claims in response to the forfeiture notice (Health & S C §11488.4). Once a petition for forfeiture of property has been filed and served, a claimant must file a claim within 30 calendar days after personal service or within 30 calendar days after the first publication of notice if no personal service was made. Health & S C §11488.5(a)(1). A claimant who filed a claim in response to notice of nonjudicial forfeiture is not required to file a second claim. Health & S C §11488.4(j).

If at the end of the 30 days no timely claims have been filed, the prosecuting agency is entitled to judgment by default after it establishes a prima facie case in support of its petition for forfeiture. Health & S C §11488.5(b)(1).

If a verified claim is timely filed, the forfeiture proceedings may be set for hearing. Health & S C §11488.5(c)(1). A jury trial is required unless it is waived by both parties. Health & S C §11488.5(c)(2). If the court or jury finds that the property is subject to forfeiture, and finds that the person claiming an interest in the property had actual knowledge of the facts that made the property subject to forfeiture, then the court must order that person's interest in the property forfeited (Health & S C §11488.5(d)(2)) and direct that the forfeited property be distributed according to Health & S C §11489. Health & S C §11488.5(f). The burden of proof on the prosecuting agency is beyond a reasonable doubt (Health & S C §11488.4(i)), with three exceptions:

- Cases that involve the forfeiture of cash or negotiable instruments worth at least $25,000 may be proved by clear and convincing evidence. Health & S C §11488.4(i)(4).
- In a default case, the prosecuting agency may forfeit by establishing a prima facie case. Health & S C §§11488.4(i)(1)-(2), (k), 11488.5(b)(1), (d)(1)-(2).
- Cases involving the forfeiture of property listed in Health & S C §11470(a)-(d) may be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. People v Nazem (1996) 51 CA4th 1225, 1232 n7, 59 CR2d 794.

§57.2 II. CHART: DEADLINES

Action	Deadline	Authority
Seizing agency refers case in writing to prosecutor for initiation of forfeiture proceedings.	15 calendar days after the seizure.	Health & S C §11488.2.
Initiation of nonjudicial forfeiture proceedings by prosecutor.	None; subject to "due process" considerations for any delay in filing.	See Health & S C §11488.4(j), which gives no deadline for initiating nonjudicial proceedings.
Initiation of judicial forfeiture proceedings by prosecutor.	One year after date of seizure subject to "due process" considerations for any delay in filing.	Health & S C §11488.4(a); People v Ten $500 Barclays Bank Visa Traveler's Checks (1993) 16 CA4th 475, 20 CR2d 128.
Person with interest in property subject to forfeiture files claim in opposition to forfeiture.	30 calendar days after receipt of actual notice; 30 calendar days after date of first published notice, if no actual notice was received.	Health & S C §11488.5(a)(1).
Prosecutor files petition for forfeiture in judicial forfeiture proceeding.	30 calendar days after receipt of claim opposing forfeiture, if there was one. NOTE: Failure to file petition within 30 calendar days after receipt of claim is not jurisdictional defect and does not prevent subsequent filing of petition and eventual forfeiture of assets in question.	Health & S C §11488.4(j). See People v Property Listed in Exhibit One (1991) 227 CA3d 1, 277 CR 672.

§57.3 III. CHART: DIFFERENCES BETWEEN 1993 AND 1994 FORFEITURE LAW [Deleted]

IV. NATURE OF FORFEITURE PROCEEDINGS

§57.4 A. Forfeiture Proceedings Are Primarily Civil in Nature

A forfeiture action is categorized as a civil, in rem action in which the property is proceeded against as if it were the defendant, based on the legal fiction that the property is a "guilty" party. See Calero-Toledo v Pearson Yacht Leasing Co. (1974) 416 US 663, 40 L Ed 2d 452, 94 S Ct 2080; People v Superior Court (Rishwain) (1989) 215 CA3d 1411, 264 CR 28; People v $6,500 U.S. Currency (1989) 215 CA3d 1542, 264 CR 294. In practical terms, however, forfeiture actions are a mix of civil and criminal law. For example, the forfeiture of all property except cash or negotiable instruments of at least $25,000 in value requires as a condition precedent to forfeiture that a defendant have been convicted, in an underlying or related criminal action, of an offense specified in Health & S C §11470(f) or (g) that occurred within 5 years before the seizure of the property or the notification of the intention to seek forfeiture. Health & S C §11488.4(i)(3), (5). In addition, in cases in which a conviction is required, the same trier of fact that convicted the defendant must try the forfeiture issue unless all parties waive that requirement. Health & S C §11488.4(i)(3). Express waiver may be required. See §57.1. This is probably true even if the claimant in the action is not the defendant, because the statute requires the conviction of "a defendant," not "the claimant or the defendant." See discussion in §57.27. With the exceptions listed in §57.1, the standard of proof is beyond a reasonable doubt. See Health & S C §11488.4(i). Finally, a prosecutor retains the same absolute immunity from civil liability for initiating a forfeiture action that he or she enjoys in criminal cases. See Vosburgh v Welch (9th Cir 1998) 83 AFTR2d 99-524 (unpublished disposition; for limitations on citation, see 9th Cir R 36-3), relying on Imbler v Pachtman (1976) 424 US 409, 47 L Ed 2d 128, 96 S Ct 984. See also Goodson v Griffith (ND Iowa 1999) 1999 WL 33655738.

§57.5 B. Government's Interest in Property; Relation-Back Rule

Forfeiture actions, like quiet title actions, determine the government's right to the seized property as against the whole world. U.S. v Gilbert (11th Cir 2001) 244 F3d 888, 920; Lee v Silva (1925) 197 C 364, 240 P 1015.

If the government proves a violation of Health & S C §11351, §11351.5, §11352, §11355, §11359, §11360, §11366.8 (felony violation), §11378, §11378.5, §11379, §11379.5, §11379.6, §11382, or §11383, or conspiracy with respect to one of those offenses, title to the property sought to be forfeited ordinarily vests in the state from the time of the commission of the act giving rise to the forfeiture. Health & S C §11470(h); People v Fifteen Thousand Two Hundred Seventeen Dollars (1990) 218 CA3d 720, 723, 268 CR 450. This is called the "relation-back" rule, and it means that the drug trafficker never owned the profits of that corrupt enterprise in the first place. See U.S. v Monsanto (1989) 491 US 600, 105 L Ed 2d 512, 109 S Ct 2657.

There are exceptions to this rule. It obviously does not apply if the property is found not to be forfeitable. Nor does it apply to defeat a claim made under Health & S C §11488.5, §11488.6, or §11489 by a third party claimant with an existing ownership interest in the property. Health & S C §11470(h). But see U.S. v Chavez (9th Cir 2003) 323 F3d 1216 (conditional gift that granted property to third-party claimant in case of "impediment" did not create sufficient interest to defeat forfeiture). On defenses to forfeiture, see §§57.31-57.32.

§57.6 C. Federal Forfeiture Laws

The federal system provides for both "criminal" and "civil" forfeiture in controlled substance cases. See 18 USC §§982, 1963; 21 USC §853. Criminal forfeiture of assets requires alleging the extent of interest or property subject to the forfeiture in the criminal pleading (information or indictment). Fed R Crim P 7(c)(2). The criminal forfeiture allegations are tried to the jury during the criminal case or before the same jury in a bifurcated proceeding. There is a rebuttable presumption that the property is subject to forfeiture if the defendant is convicted and the government establishes, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the property was acquired during the period the criminal activity was going on, or during a reasonable period thereafter, or that there was no likely source for the property other than as a result of drug transactions. 21 USC §853(d). In criminal forfeiture proceedings only, if assets declared forfeited (e.g., proceeds of drug sales, property purchased with drug money (securities, etc.), real property, or a business that facilitated the offenses) cannot be located for specified reasons, a court may take over the defendant's nonforfeitable assets to "substitute" for the forfeited assets. 21 USC §853(p). Prosecutors have a choice of whether to use criminal or civil forfeiture proceedings, and they exercise that choice under guidelines issued by the Department of Justice. Civil forfeiture poses fewer hurdles for the prosecution, both in burden of proof and in procedural aspects.

The California forfeiture provisions are modeled after the federal forfeiture provisions (21 USC §881) and are primarily based on three theories of forfeiture: the "proceeds traceable to an exchange" theory, the "furnished in exchange for" theory, and the "facilitation" theory. The proceeds theory provides that money, negotiable instruments, securities, or other things of value that are proceeds traceable to an exchange for a controlled substance are subject to forfeiture. The exchange theory provides that money, negotiable instruments, securities, or other things of value furnished or intended to be furnished by a person in exchange for a controlled substance are subject to forfeiture. The facilitation theory provides that money, negotiable instruments, or securities used or intended to be used to facilitate specified violations of the Health and Safety Code are subject to forfeiture.

California courts consider federal decisions on asset forfeiture to be persuasive authority. People v $497,590 U.S. Currency (1997) 58 CA4th 145, 151, 68 CR2d 185.

§57.7 V. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO FORFEITURE

The following types of property are subject to forfeiture:

Controlled substances. All controlled substances that were manufactured, distributed, dispensed, or acquired in violation of Division 10 of the Health and Safety Code. Health & S C §11470(a).

Raw materials and equipment. All raw materials, products, and equipment that were used or intended to be used in manufacturing, compounding, processing, delivering, importing, or exporting any controlled substance in violation of Division 10 of the Health and Safety Code. Health & S C §11470(b).

Containers. Property (except real property, boats, airplanes, and vehicles) used or intended to be used as a container for controlled substances, raw material, or equipment. Health & S C §11470(c).

Records and research products. All books, records, research products, and materials used or intended to be used in violation of Division 10 of the Health and Safety Code. Health & S C §11470(d).

Vehicles. The interest of any registered owner of a boat, airplane, or other vehicle that has been used as an instrument to facilitate the manufacture of, possession for sale, or sale of specified drugs, in specified amounts. See Health & S C §11470(e). An exception is made for an "implement of husbandry" as defined in Veh C §36000. Health & S C §11470(e).

Ø Note: An exemption applies to anyone other than the defendant who has a community property interest in a vehicle that requires a class C, M1, or M2 driver's license (see Veh C §12804.9) when the vehicle is the only class C, M1, or M2 vehicle available to the defendant's immediate family. Health & S C §11470(e).

Money, negotiable instruments, securities, or other things of value. Money, negotiable instruments, securities, and "other things of value" that are furnished or intended to be furnished in exchange for a controlled substance, traceable to an exchange for a controlled substance (see Baca v Minier (1991) 229 CA3d 1253, 280 CR 810 (property not specifically listed as forfeitable in §11470 may still be forfeited if it is proceeds traceable to exchange)) or used or intended to be used to facilitate certain violations of specified sections of the Health and Safety Code. Health & S C §11470(f).

Ø Note: Property used to facilitate the violation of Health & S C §11351, §11351.5, §11352, §11355, §11359, §11360, §11366.8 (felony violation), §11378, §11378.5, §11379, §11379.5, §11379.6, §11380, §11382, or §11383, or Pen C §182, is subject to forfeiture if the offense involved manufacture, sale, possession for sale, offer for sale, or offer to manufacture, or conspiracy to commit at least one of those offenses and the conduct that was the basis for the forfeiture occurred within 5 years before the seizure of the property, the filing of the petition, or the issuance of an order of forfeiture, whichever comes first. Health & S C §11470(f).

Real property. The real property of any property owner who is convicted of violating Health & S C §11366, §11366.5, or §11366.6 with respect to that property, with the exception noted below. Health & S C §11470(g).

Ø Note: There is an exemption for property used as a family residence or for other lawful purposes, or owned by two or more persons, one of whom had no knowledge of its unlawful use. Health & S C §11470(g).

§57.8 VI. JURISDICTION; VENUE

Jurisdiction. Jurisdiction is contingent on either actual or constructive possession of the res. Health & S C §11488.4(a)-(b); People v $6,500 U.S. Currency (1989) 215 CA3d 1542, 264 CR 294; People v Superior Court (Rishwain) (1989) 215 CA3d 1411, 264 CR 28. The prosecuting agency may elect to obtain a restraining order with respect to the property sought to be forfeited rather than seizing it, which gives the court jurisdiction through constructive possession. Health & S C §11488.4(b); People v $6,500 U.S. Currency, supra.

If the res is removed from the court's jurisdiction because of fraud, mistake, or accident, jurisdiction is retained. Republic Nat'l Bank v U.S. (1992) 506 US 80, 88, 121 L Ed 2d 474, 484, 113 S Ct 554; U.S. v Tit's Cocktail Lounge (7th Cir 1989) 873 F2d 141; Nasir v Sacramento County Office of Dist. Attorney (1992) 11 CA4th 976, 15 CR2d 694; Baca v Minier (1991) 229 CA3d 1253, 280 CR 810.

Venue. Real property forfeitures must be filed in the county in which the real property is located. The prosecutor must have a lis pendens recorded on the property. Health & S C §11488.4(a).

A petition for forfeiture of other than real property must be filed in the superior court of the county in which the underlying criminal offense is filed, or in which the property subject to forfeiture has been seized, or if no seizure has occurred, in the county in which the property subject to forfeiture is located. Health & S C §11488.4(a).

Venue may be established by stipulation of the parties or waived if not objected to. People v Remington (1990) 217 CA3d 423, 266 CR 183.

When an investigation results in multicounty seizures, jurisdictional problems can be resolved in one of two ways:

- The property can be relocated to the seizing agency's county, and the petition for forfeiture of all the property filed in the county where the underlying criminal action is filed; or
- A petition can be filed in each county in which a seizure occurred, and thereafter the actions can be consolidated under CCP §404.

Federal seizure. If a state action is pending, a federal court will not entertain an action concerning the subject matter of the state action regardless of who has custody of the property. This is because the nature of these actions is in rem; two courts cannot have jurisdiction over the res at the same time. U.S. v One 1985 Cadillac Seville (9th Cir 1989) 866 F2d 1142. Under the rule of "prior exclusive jurisdiction," the first court to assume jurisdiction may enjoin proceedings in the second. U.S. v One 1985 Cadillac Seville, supra; U.S. v $79,123.49 (7th Cir 1987) 830 F2d 94, 96.

Under California law, property seized pursuant to a search warrant is subject to state court jurisdiction even when no state forfeiture action is filed. See Pen C §1536. Consequently, even when the state has not initiated forfeiture proceedings, property seized in California under state law and pursuant to a search warrant may not be released to federal authorities for federal forfeiture proceedings without a state court "turnover" order relinquishing jurisdiction over the property. In re Seizure of Approximately 28 Grams of Marijuana (ND Cal 2003) 278 F Supp 2d 1097, 1105. The state court retains jurisdiction to issue a turnover order even after the limitations period for initiating a forfeiture proceeding has expired; in addition, no notice to potentially interested parties is required in issuing the turnover order. People v $25,000 (2005) 131 CA4th 127, 134, 31 CR3d 637.

VII. TYPES OF FORFEITURE PROCEEDINGS

§57.9 A. Three Types of Forfeiture Proceedings

The type of property or its use can affect whether and how forfeiture will occur:

- Controlled substances listed in Schedule I used in violation of Division 10 may be seized and summarily forfeited without any proceedings at all. Health & S C §11475. The same is true of plants from which Schedule I and II controlled substances may be derived. Health & S C §11476. See Health & S C §§11477, 11479-11479.5 on summary forfeiture and destruction. See also City of Garden Grove v Superior Court (2007) 157 CA4th 355, 389, 68 CR3d 656 (defendant legally entitled to possess marijuana was entitled to its return); Chavez v Superior Court (2004) 123 CA4th 104, 111, 20 CR3d 21 (request for return of marijuana under Compassionate Use Act denied because defendant was not qualified user and destruction was required under Health & S C §11473.5).
- Real property, and personal property worth more than $25,000, that are subject to forfeiture under Health & S C §11470, require judicial forfeiture proceedings. Health & S C §11488.4(j).
- Personal property worth $25,000 or less, subject to forfeiture under §11470, may be forfeited administratively without judicial supervision as long as proper notice is given. If no proper or timely claim is filed, the prosecuting agency may declare the property forfeited. Health & S C §11488.4(j).

Ø Note: If property subject to forfeiture is also evidence in a criminal case, it may be held on two grounds: as evidence in the criminal case, and as the defendant in the forfeiture case. Health & S C §11488.1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§57.10 B. Differences Between Administrative Forfeiture and Judicial Forfeiture

An administrative (nonjudicial) forfeiture action is initiated and concluded without judicial supervision. It may be used only to forfeit personal property worth $25,000 or less. Health & S C §11488.4(j). The prosecuting agency notifies all potentially interested parties of the pendency of the action, publishes notice in a newspaper of general circulation in the county where the property was seized or where it is located, and if no timely claims are filed, issues a declaration of forfeiture. Health & S C §11488.4(j). This ability to declare property forfeited without judicial supervision was given to prosecuting agencies for two reasons: to avoid burdening the courts with cases that were uncontested, and to avoid the need to obtain defaults. If there is no response to notice of nonjudicial forfeiture proceedings, the prosecution need not prove that it is entitled to the property, it merely declares the property forfeited. Health & S C §11488.4(j).

Cases involving real property, or personal property worth more than $25,000, must be litigated in the superior court. See Health & S C §11488.4(j). A court order must be obtained to forfeit property judicially. The prosecution must establish a prima facie case for the forfeiture of the property even if the claimant defaults. If a default occurs, relief from default may be had if the claimant establishes good cause for the failure to timely file the claim, quick action to set aside the default, and a meritorious defense. See People v One Parcel of Land (1991) 235 CA3d 579, 286 CR 739. In addition, if notice was inadequate, or if there were other procedural or substantive errors, the claimant can challenge the forfeiture by filing a writ petition. See Nasir v Sacramento County Office of Dist. Attorney (1992) 11 CA4th 976, 15 CR2d 694.

VIII. ADMINISTRATIVE (NONJUDICIAL) FORFEITURE

§57.11 A. Meant to Be Summary Procedure

The administrative (nonjudicial) forfeiture provisions of the Health and Safety Code permit a prosecuting agency to forfeit personal assets worth $25,000 or less without having to obtain a default judgment in court if the forfeiture action is not contested and if notice of the forfeiture was properly given (see §57.12). People v Property Listed in Exhibit One (1991) 227 CA3d 1, 6, 277 CR 672.

§57.12 B. Notice of Administrative Forfeiture Required

Differences in how notice is given; defense inquiry. In some counties, police departments, acting as agents for the prosecuting agency, issue 30-day notices (notices giving the recipient 30 days within which to file a claim, under Health & S C §11488.5(a)) in the field at the moment of seizure, in addition to a receipt for the seized property. In other counties, the prosecutor initiates nonjudicial forfeiture proceedings by issuing a 30-day notice after the property has been seized. Health & S C §11488.4(j).

Persons who must receive notice. Notice that the state intends to forfeit property must be given to the following people:

- Everyone designated in the receipt issued for the property seized. Health & S C §11488.4(j), (c). (The receipt is given to the person whose property is taken unless that person denies ownership. The receipt must comply with Pen C §1412 when property is taken by the police from a person arrested.)
- Everyone who has an interest in the property. Health & S C §11488.4(c). Interested persons include bona fide or innocent purchasers and persons holding a valid lien, mortgage, security interest, or interest under a conditional sales contract. People v Fifteen Thousand Two Hundred Seventeen Dollars (1990) 218 CA3d 720, 724, 268 CR 450 (convicted drug dealer's ex-wife and judgment creditor for spousal and child support arrearages was not interested party entitled to personal notice); see Health & S C §§11488.6, 11489(a). This requirement has been interpreted in federal cases to mean persons whose identities and addresses are known or easily ascertainable and whose legally protected interests are directly affected by the forfeiture proceedings. See Wiren v Eide (9th Cir 1976) 542 F2d 757, 762. The state is also obligated to investigate Department of Motor Vehicle and appropriate federal agency records on title to vehicles, boats, and airplanes, and send registered owners notice if ownership existed before the date of the seizure. Health & S C §11488.4(d).

The notice requirements are designed to ensure that the persons whose rights to the property would be most affected by the forfeiture have a reasonable opportunity to respond to the initiation of forfeiture proceedings. See CCP §413.30; U.S. v U.S. Currency Totaling $3,817.49 (8th Cir 1987) 826 F2d 785.

Contents of notice. The notice must contain a description of the property, its appraised value, the date and place of seizure (or location of property if property has not been seized), the violation of law giving rise to the forfeiture, instructions for filing a claim, and the time limit for filing a claim. Health & S C §11488.4(j)(1)-(5). The notice must be accompanied by a claim form and directions for filing and serving the claim. Health & S C §11488.4(c).

Ø Note: The form should specify the name and location of the court where the claim is to be filed. It is recommended that the notice also state that a Judicial Council claim form is available, and tell where it may be obtained.

Any ambiguity in the notice will be interpreted in the claimant's favor and may result in the setting aside of the forfeiture. See Nasir v Sacramento County Office of Dist. Attorney (1992) 11 CA4th 976, 15 CR2d 694; Baca v Minier (1991) 229 CA3d 1253, 1265, 280 CR 810.

Ø Note: The Health & S C §11488.4(j) notice requirements do not require that details be given of the reasons for the seizure.

Service of notice. Service of the notice on those named in the receipt issued for the property is by "service of process." Health & S C §11488.4(c). Service is probably according to CCP §§413.10-417.40 and 1013-1013a. Service on any person with an interest in the seized property, other than those named in the receipt, must be by personal delivery or registered mail. Health & S C §11488.4(c). In addition to serving the notice on individuals, the prosecuting agency must publish the notice once a week for 3 successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in the county where the seizure is made or the property is located. Health & S C §11488.4(e).

Time limits. Claims opposing an administrative forfeiture must be filed within 30 calendar days after receipt of actual notice or, if the claimant received no actual notice, within 30 calendar days after the date the first notice is published in the newspaper. Health & S C §11488.5(a)(1).

Result if no response to notice. Assuming that the notice is adequate and that no other defects exist in the procedure used to give notice, either actual notice or publication starts the clock ticking. If there is no response to the notice within the time described above, the property can be forfeited by the prosecuting agency. Health & S C §11488.5(d).

Advice to prosecutor. Whether the prosecuting agency's actions in giving notice to all potentially interested parties complied with due process can be a key issue in defending a nonjudicial forfeiture. See, e.g., Baca v Minier, supra. Prosecutors should therefore undertake a full investigation of the existence of anyone who may have a legally cognizable interest in the property to ensure that a declaration of forfeiture is properly issued. This is not to say that the prosecuting agency must turn over every stone looking for potential claimants. As the Supreme Court noted in Mullane v Central Hanover Trust Co. (1950) 339 US 306, 314, 94 L Ed 865, 873, 70 S Ct 652, due process does not place impossible or impracticable obstacles in the way of a vital state interest. Rather, due process simply requires that notice be given in the best possible manner under the circumstances. See Dusenbery v U.S. (2002) 534 US 161, 151 L Ed 2d 597, 122 S Ct 694 (actual notice is not required as long as government's efforts at providing notice were reasonably calculated under the circumstances to apprise property owner of pendency of forfeiture proceedings).

Advice to defense counsel. Defense counsel in a case involving property that might be subject to forfeiture should consider immediately checking with the prosecution to see whether forfeiture notice has been given, and when, because of the short deadline for responding. If forfeiture has occurred, defense counsel should carefully review the notice requirements and the way in which notice was given in the particular case to see whether due process was violated. See, e.g., Nasir v Sacramento County Office of Dist. Attorney, supra.

§57.13 C. Standing: Only Those With Standing Can Oppose Forfeiture

Claimants must show standing to prevail in a forfeiture action. Standing means that the potential claimant has a bona fide ownership, possessory, or security interest in the property. See Health & S C §11488.5(a)(1); Jauregi v Superior Court (1999) 72 CA4th 931, 85 CR2d 553 (hearsay inadmissible to prove standing in forfeiture action); People v Fifteen Thousand Two Hundred Seventeen Dollars (1990) 218 CA3d 720, 268 CR 450. There is no Fifth Amendment privilege to avoid establishing standing. See §§57.34-57.37 (constitutional considerations). The claimant shoulders the burden of proving standing by a preponderance of the evidence. People v Superior Court (Plascencia) (2002) 103 CA4th 409, 423, 126 CR2d 793. The issue of standing is usually resolved before trial in a motion for summary judgment. When, however, resolution of the issue rests on disputed facts, the trier of fact determines standing by special verdict. 103 CA4th at 424.

Ø Note: Some police agencies, when seizing assets, ask persons who disclaim ownership to sign a form disclaiming ownership. The prosecution may wish to use that form to counter a claimant's later assertion of standing.

Ø Warning: Claimants' counsel should carefully consider the effect of standing statements, especially when a client seeks the return of a weapon or money, the origin of which may give rise to an unwanted surge of interest by state or federal officers. See Pen C §12021; 18 USC §§924, 1956-1957. See also §57.35.

§57.14 D. Claim Opposing Administrative Forfeiture

The Judicial Council has approved an official form for the verified claim: Claim Opposing Forfeiture (MC-200), which is available on the Council's website at http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/forms.

Claims opposing an administrative forfeiture must be filed within 30 calendar days after receipt of actual notice or, if the claimant received no actual notice, within 30 calendar days after the date the first notice is published in the newspaper. Health & S C §11488.5(a)(1). The claim must be verified by the claimant and must state the nature of the claimant's interest in the property. See CCP §446 for verification requirements. The claim must be filed in the superior court where the instructions in the notice say claims should be filed. An endorsed copy of the verified claim must be served on the prosecuting agency within 30 calendar days after the filing. Health & S C §11488.5(a)(1).

Ø Note: There is no filing fee if the value of the contested property as specified in the notice is $5000 or less. If the value is over $5000, the clerk must charge a fee as specified in Govt C §70611. Health & S C §11488.5(a)(3).

Service on the prosecuting agency should be physically accomplished by the 30th calendar day in order to avoid arguments about whether mailing on the 30th calendar day or depositing with an overnight carrier is sufficient. CCP §1013. If mailed or expressed on the due date, counsel should assure compliance with all the conditions of CCP §1013.

Ø Note: If the claim is not filed until the 30th day, and the prosecutor is not served until 30 days later, as permitted by Health & S C §11488.5(a), the prosecutor will not receive notice until 60 calendar days after publication. Defense counsel may want to call the prosecutor within the 30-day limit to make sure a declaration of forfeiture is not issued before the prosecutor is served with the claim.

On possible remedies for failure to comply with one or more of these requirements, see §57.16.

§57.15 E. If No Claim or if Improper or Late Claim Is Filed, Property Is Forfeited

If no claim is filed with the prosecuting agency within the statutory time period discussed in §57.14, default is mandatory. Health & S C §11488.4(j)(5); see Baca v Minier (1991) 229 CA3d 1253, 1260, 280 CR 810. A defective claim may also result in a default: If the claim fails to state the nature of the claimant's interest, establishes on its face that the claimant does not have standing, or is not verified, it can probably be stricken under CCP §§435-437. See §57.16.

The prosecutor declares property forfeited in a declaration of forfeiture. A copy of the declaration of forfeiture must be "provided" to everyone designated in the receipt and to everyone who was personally served with the notice. The declaration of forfeiture is sufficient to transfer title of the forfeited property to the state. Health & S C §11488.4(j).

The author recommends that, before declaring the property forfeited, the prosecuting agency wait the full 60 days a claimant who does not receive actual notice is allowed for filing and serving a claim (see §57.14); doing so avoids having the forfeiture set aside if a claimant appears at the last minute.

§57.16 F. Limited Relief From Failure to File or Late Filing

Counsel representing a potential claimant must exercise diligence in meeting the deadline for filing a claim because relief from error in preparing or filing a claim is difficult to obtain. Unlike other civil cases, in which the filing of a late answer before entry of default is obtained may foreclose a default, default in nonjudicial forfeiture cases is self-executing, and an untimely filed claim is ineffective in preventing forfeiture. Health & S C §11488.4(j)(5).
