PREFACE

In her Foreword to the Second Edition of California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice, Associate Justice Joyce L. Kennard of the California Supreme Court wrote about the rapid pace of change in the area of criminal law and procedure. Her observations remain as true today as when she wrote them. For this reason, CEB decided in 2005 that we could better serve our readers by making California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice an annual publication.

We have retained the book's convenient, one-volume, soft-cover format and its practical orientation. As always, California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice is intended as a guide for practicing California criminal trial lawyers and judges.

More than 60 California lawyers and judges served as update authors this year. Among them are representatives from both the prosecution and defense bars. Many of our authors have been associated with the book since its inception. CEB thanks them for devoting so much time to researching and writing their chapters.

Special book features to help serve the busy criminal lawyer were continued from previous editions. Most chapters include a chart, usually in the second section, listing important timelines intended to help lawyers find deadlines quickly, without having to skim through many pages of text. The index includes commonly used shorthand phrases to help lawyers find material quickly.

Other special features were designed particularly for beginning lawyers. Chapter 1, for example, provides guidance on criminal law practice management, and includes a list of resources. Chapter 10 contains a client interview form, followed by a section designed to help the beginning criminal lawyer spot the issues involved in a particular case. The issue-spotting information is keyed to sections of the book that discuss those issues.

California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice is published in both print and electronic formats. Purchasers of the electronic version receive a CD and online access. The online version of the book includes a search engine and links to California cases and statutes cited in the text.

Forms are included in a separate 8½ by 11 inch looseleaf book called the California Criminal Law Forms Manual (2d ed Cal CEB 2005), which is also available on CD and online. A Forms CD is available for purchasers of the print version of the Forms Manual. Contents and numbering of chapters in the Forms Manual are based on chapters in this book, which contain cross-references to the Forms Manual.

The first edition of this book replaced California Misdemeanor Procedure Benchbook (Revised) (Cal CEB 1975), and volumes one and two of California Criminal Law Practice (Cal CEB 1964, 1969). Some of the material from those books was incorporated into this book. CEB wishes to acknowledge the authors from those books: Harold J. Ackerman, Arthur L. Alarcon, John F. Aiso, Raymond J. Arata, Lawrence R. Booth, Charles W. Brown, Stanley E. Cohen, Rupert Crittenden, Bernard L. Diamond, M.D., Richard W. Erskine, Richard F. Finis, Leo R. Friedman, Albert C. Garber, Stanley P. Golde, Alvin H. Goldstein, Jr., Fred M. Henderson, Edward A. Hinz, Jr., Charles Hollopeter, James C. Hooley, William E. James, John D. Kavanaugh, William C. Lerche, Jr., John S. McInerny, Edwin Meese, Herman W. Mintz, James P. Nunnelley, Herbert L. Packer, Everette M. Porter, William L. Ritzi, James F. Thacher, and Thomas C. Yager. Authors of the supplement to volume two were: Dennis Fischer, Bradley Brunon, Edward Rucker, John J. Cleary, Rowan K. Klein, Brian Taugher, Gregory W. Baugher, and William W. Larsen. Ann Fagan Ginger, who was a CEB staff attorney at the time, planned and edited I and II California Criminal Law Practice.

The original edition of California Misdemeanor Procedure Benchbook was written under the direction and supervision of the California College of Trial Judges. The original Misdemeanor Procedure Benchbook advisory committee was composed of Claude M. Owens (chair), Hector P. Baida, Dan B. Eymann, and Manuel L. Kugler. The revised edition was written by Justice Kathryn Mickle Werdegar, who was a CEB staff attorney at that time.

The members of CEB's criminal law subcommittee and a special planning committee who helped plan the second edition were Malvina E. J. Abbott, William M. Baldwin, Jeff Brown, Nancy Chiu, Annie Gutierrez, Barbara Johnson, Kay Kohler, Jeffrey B. Kupers, Jerrold Ladar, Joyce Ladar, Cynthia Lee, Hon. William McKinstry, John T. Philipsborn, Robert Podesta, Peter Quon, Jr., John W. Noonan, Elaine M. Profant-Turner, Richard Schwartzberg, Robert L. Sills, and Stewart Spivak. The members of CEB's criminal law subcommittee and a special planning committee who helped plan the first edition were Malvina E. J. Abbott, Anita Susan Brenner, Harry Clifford, Dennis A. Fischer, Annie M. Gutierrez, Stephen Kaus, Russell I. Lynn, Gerald Z. Marer, Hon. William McKinstry, Lincoln Mintz, Fred Morrison, Hon. Lillian Lim, Peter Quon, Jr., Hon. Arjuna Saraydarian, and Alex Selvin. CEB is also very grateful to the State Bar Criminal Law Executive Committee for its help. Members of the Executive Committee who were consultants on chapters in the second edition were Randy I. Danto and Marguerite D. Whichard. Members of the Executive Committee who were consultants on chapters for the first edition were Donna Clontz, David R. Disco, John W. Noonan, Mark E. Overland, and Lael R. Rubin.

Anne Harris, former CEB Research Attorney, who planned, coordinated, edited, and nurtured this publication from its inception to its fourth edition, deserves a special note of thanks. A generation of California attorneys have benefited from her expertise and dedication.

2010 Annual. CEB Attorney Editors Nancy Yuenger (managing editor) and Amy Righter and Legal Editors Sarah Pate, Karen Nutter, and Dorothy Robins contributed to this title. Administrative support was provided by Kenya Denman and Nila Kanzaria. Paul McBrearty handled copyediting and production. Kathryn Te Selle updated the index. Composition was performed by CEB's Electronic Publishing staff.

FOREWORD TO THE SECOND EDITION

The lives of lawyers and judges would be easier (though perhaps duller) if the law never changed, if the knowledge gained in law school sufficed to guide the practice of law through a career. Alas, we know it is not so. In recent years, few areas of the law have remained static, but the area of criminal law and procedure may be unmatched in the scope and sheer number of its legislative alterations. Although definitions of most major crimes remain largely as they were 20 years ago, defenses to criminal charges, sanctions for criminal behavior, and procedures for trying and sentencing those accused of crime have undergone profound changes.

To what should we attribute this ferment in the field of criminal law? The answer may be found in Samuel Johnson's observation that "Laws are formed by the manners and exigencies of particular times." Because public concern—indeed outrage—over violent crime is one of the most powerful exigencies of our own time, it is small wonder that a vast quantity of laws has been formed in response. Two of the most significant of these laws were enacted by the voters as initiative measures.

In 1982, voters enacted Proposition 8, a state constitutional amendment. Among other significant provisions, Proposition 8 limited plea bargaining, required heavier sentences for repeat offenders, and abrogated the rule excluding evidence seized in violation of the state (but not the federal) Constitution.

In 1990, the voters again sought comprehensive reform by enacting Proposition 115. Most significantly, Proposition 115 permits the prosecution to establish probable cause for a felony charge by means of the hearsay testimony of a qualified police officer, eliminates preliminary hearings for felonies charged by indictment, and institutes reciprocal discovery procedures.

The voters have not been alone in the vast enterprise of remodeling the structure of the California Penal Code and related criminal laws. Each year, the legislature makes its own substantial contributions, as do the published decisions of state and federal appellate courts. Indeed, as this preface is being written, the legislature has enacted as an urgency measure a "three strikes" law to mandate and increase prison sentences for repeat felony offenders, and Congress is considering similar legislation at the federal level. When all these forces for change are considered together, can anyone question the need for a new edition of a work like this one?

To help busy lawyers and judges keep up with the powerful flow of new law since the publication of the first edition eight years ago, the editors of this work have added chapters covering client interviews, asset forfeiture, and parole, and they have overseen the substantial revision of many other chapters. Written by experienced criminal law practitioners, this volume contains a wealth of practical suggestions and checklists that will be of use not only to novices but also to seasoned attorneys and judges.

An adversary system of criminal justice such as ours works efficiently and justly only when defense counsel, the prosecutor, and the trial court have mastered the relevant law and procedure. This handbook can help lawyers and judges to achieve that mastery.

NEW DEVELOPMENTS IN 2010

Warrants. A warrant that identifies the suspect by his or her unique DNA profile describes the suspect with sufficient particularity to commence prosecution when there is no more particular, accurate, or reliable means of identification available to law enforcement. People v Robinson (2010) 47 C4th 1104, ___ CR3d ___. See §4.8.

Sixth Amendment claims. Doctrines ensuring the voluntariness of a Fifth Amendment waiver of the right to counsel (Miranda-Edwards-Minnick) simultaneously ensure the voluntariness of a Sixth Amendment waiver of the right to counsel. Montejo v Louisiana (2009) ___ US ___, 173 L Ed 2d 955, 969, 129 S Ct 2079 (overruling Michigan v Jackson (1986) 475 US 625, 89 L Ed 2d 631, 106 S Ct 1404, as superfluous and costly to truth-seeking process). See §45.15.

Speedy trial. The consequence for noncompliance with the 90-day deadline of Pen C §1381 with respect to a probation revocation proceeding when imposition of sentence was originally suspended is dismissal of the pending probation revocation proceeding, not dismissal of the underlying conviction. People v Wagner (2009) 45 C4th 1039, 1055, 90 CR3d 26. See §19.33.

Suppression and dismissal. The court's dismissal of a case pursuant to Pen C §1385 at the prosecutor's request following an order granting the suppression of evidence is nonappealable invited error. People v Gallagher (2009) 171 CA4th Supp 1, 90 CR3d 695. See §43.4. If the trial court's reasons for dismissing a case in the interests of justice are not set out in an order entered in the minutes, the dismissal is ineffective and the case must be remanded. On remand, the trial court may correct the defect by setting forth its reasons in a written order entered on the minutes. Alternatively, the trial court may determine the dismissal was unwarranted or should be ordered for another reason. People v Bonnetta (2009) 46 C4th 143, 153, 92 CR3d 370. See §25.8.

Discovery and competence. The court may order, on timely request by the prosecution, the examination of a defendant who places in issue his or her mental state at any phase of a criminal proceeding. Pen C §1054.3(b). See §§11.9, 48.36.

Sentencing hearing. A defendant has no right to court-appointed experts for sentencing. People v Stuckey (2009) 175 CA4th 898, 96 CR3d 477. See §35.18.

Sentencing and enhancements. The definition of serious felony in Pen C §1192.7(c)(28) does not include a misdemeanor that was punished as a felony under the alternate penalty provision of Pen C §186.22(d). People v Ulloa (2009) 175 CA4th 405, 408, 95 CR3d 905. See §24.29. Although a Pen C §12022.53 firearm enhancement can be imposed on all of the principals when a §186.22(b) enhancement has been pleaded and proved and any principal meets specified criteria (§12022.53(e)(1)), Pen C §12022.53(e)(2) bars imposition of the 15-year parole limitation under §186.22(b)(5) on anyone but the principal who personally used or discharged the firearm. People v Gonzalez (2010) 180 CA4th 1420, 1425, 103 CR3d 878. See §37.13.

Conduct credits. Instead of receiving 1 day of credit for every 2 days of custody, qualifying jail inmates will now receive 1 day of credit for each day of actual custody served. Pen C §4019. Inmates who are not in jail but who otherwise qualify for conduct credits, such as those assigned to work release, are also entitled to the new one-for-one credits under §4019. See §37.59.

Federal habeas corpus. A state procedural rule is not automatically "inadequate" because it is discretionary; if it is "firmly established" and "regularly followed," it can serve as an adequate ground to bar federal habeas review. Beard v Kindler (2009) ___ US ___, 175 L Ed 2d 417, 130 S Ct 612. See §45.24. Rule 11 of the Habeas Rules requires the district court to grant or deny a certificate of appealability (COA) at the same time that it issues a final order adverse to the petitioner. If the district court grants a COA, the petitioner must still file a timely notice of appeal to pursue an appeal. If the district court denies a COA, the petitioner can still seek a COA from the court of appeals. Habeas Rules 11; Fed R App P 22(b)(1). See §45.39.

Juveniles. Juvenile adjudications may be used as strikes (People v Nguyen (2009) 46 C4th 1007, 95 CR3d 615) and as a circumstance in aggravation to impose an upper-term sentence in adult court (People v Quiles (2009) 177 CA4th 612, 619, 99 CR3d 378). See §56.28.

Noncitizen defendants. Rehabilitative relief will not eliminate the conviction for immigration purposes if the defendant violated probation before obtaining the rehabilitative relief. Estrada v Holder (9th Cir 2009) 560 F3d 1039. See §§52.14, 52.33. The Ninth Circuit will defer to published BIA decisions on whether the particular offense is a crime of moral turpitude so long as the decision is reasonable. See §52.38.

DUI. Competent evidence about partition ratio variability is admissible to defend against a generic DUI charge because that charge requires proof that the defendant's ability to drive safely was impaired. People v McNeal (2009) 46 C4th 1183, 1188, 96 CR3d 261. See §55.8.

§1.1 I. OVERVIEW

Efficient law office management is an important aspect of a lawyer's practice. Although there are some aspects that are unique to the practice of criminal law, the general principles of law office management usually apply:

- Counsel will save a great deal of time by using standard forms for things such as retainer agreements, interviews, and release of information. See the sample forms in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§1.28 (client information letter), 1.29 (general authorization for release of information about client), 1.30 (authorization to release medical records), 3.1 (legal fee agreement), 10.1 (client interview) (2d ed Cal CEB 2005); the forms are also on the accompanying CD-ROM.
- Counsel should learn the procedures for attorney visits at the local jails and, if necessary, call ahead before visiting to make sure the client will be available. To save time, "jail kits" should be assembled in advance and ready to take to jail interviews. See §1.9. Following these procedures will ensure that valuable time is not wasted, and counsel will not have to wait for hours at the jail because, for example, counsel has arrived during mealtime.
- Counsel should carry a calendar that lists every court appearance and maintain a duplicate calendar in the office to avoid calendar conflicts. Counsel should also keep a calendar of the dates on which particular motions and other papers are to be filed and personally ensure that they are filed on time.
- Counsel should set up written office procedures for the staff so that new staff members have an office procedure manual to use. The manual should cover opening and closing files, maintaining calendars and tickler files, billing procedures, making appointments, how to take messages, how to compile a jail kit, what information to give to defendants who call from jail, how to set motion dates for the courts in which counsel practices, and what information to give witnesses and defendants when the secretary calls to remind them of a court appearance. Malpractice insurance carriers may have requirements for particular procedures for calendar matters.
- To keep accurate billing records, counsel should maintain a log of the time spent on each case, indicating next to each entry the date, the amount of time spent on the case, and how that time was spent.
- It is very important that counsel have malpractice insurance. One source of relatively inexpensive malpractice insurance that is available to attorneys representing indigent defendants is the National Legal Aid and Defender Association, 1625 K Street NW, 8th Floor, Washington DC 20006; (202) 452-0620; http://www.nlada.org/Insurance/Insurance_Home.

This chapter is by no means exhaustive. Other sources on information management are available from the State Bar Law Office Management Section. Another useful resource is Law Practice Management Magazine, published eight times a year by the American Bar Association Section of Law Practice Management (Chicago, Ill.); http://www.abanet.org/lpm/home.shtml. II. SOURCES OF CLIENTS

§1.2 A. Court-Appointed Cases

Most counties have a list of attorneys who wish to be appointed by the court to represent indigent defendants when the public defender is unable to represent them because of a conflict. In counties that do not have a public defender's office, attorneys may be appointed to represent indigent defendants in all cases. For discussion of conflicts of interest, see §§2.8-2.16.

By agreeing to take court-appointed cases, the attorney is assured both of having clients and of being paid. Not every attorney, however, is eligible for court-appointed cases. Many counties have minimum requirements for being put on the list, such as a certain amount of time in practice, previous experience in criminal cases, and previous attendance at continuing education courses in the field of criminal law. Some counties divide attorneys into different groups, depending on their level of experience in criminal law, and appoint less experienced attorneys to less difficult cases. Attorneys should contact their local bar association to find out about requirements and procedures in their county.

In some counties, the lists of attorneys who wish to be appointed are kept by the individual judges, who appoint from them as they desire. In other counties, the local bar association or a private group selects the attorney.

Ø Note: Appointed counsel must be familiar with local practice concerning the requirement that judges are only to appoint counsel in felony cases who represent to the court that they will be "ready" to go to trial or to appear at the preliminary hearing on the date set. Pen C §987.05. See discussion in §§2.29, 8.7, 19.21, 20.32, 58.21.

Attorneys may apply to the appellate projects for the local California courts of appeal and the supreme court to be appointed to represent indigent defendants on appeal. The appellate projects for the various courts of appeal, listed by district, are:

Counsel may apply to represent prisoners at parole revocation hearings, "lifer" hearings, and other hearings at which a state prisoner or parolee has a right to counsel.

§1.3 B. Court Referrals

Some courts have lists of attorneys who will accept referrals by the court of defendants of limited means who do not qualify for the public defender or appointed counsel but who do not have sufficient funds to pay a large retainer. Attorneys who accept these referrals agree to take a minimum down payment, followed by monthly payments. The attorney sets the fee. Although there is no guaranty that the attorney will be paid in full, such referrals are a good source of clients, especially for a new practitioner.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.4 C. Private Referrals

Satisfied clients are always a good source of referrals. Former clients, whether court-appointed or retained, will send their previous attorney new clients and may retain counsel again if they were satisfied with counsel's representation.

Other lawyers are also a good source of referrals. It is up to the attorney to contact lawyer friends and firms to acquaint them with his or her experience. Civil firms may be a good source of clients, particularly in driving under the influence and white collar crime cases. Many local bar associations also operate a lawyer referral service.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.5 D. Social Service Organizations

Many social service organizations have lists of attorneys to whom they make referrals. Many of these organizations serve a particular ethnic, cultural, or religious group. It is up to the attorney to contact these groups. Some groups expect or require some pro bono work; this often leads to paying clients.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.6 E. United States Military

Many legal officers and military offices keep lists of nonmilitary lawyers to whom they refer cases. Members of the military are not indigent and so do not usually qualify for a court-appointed attorney; private counsel must be employed. It is up to the attorney to contact these individuals and offices.

§1.7 F. Advertising

Advertisements for clients may be placed in newspapers, in the yellow pages, on the radio, on Internet websites, or on television. However, advertising is the most expensive method of obtaining clients. In addition, ads frequently result in calls from "shoppers" who do not become clients. Although advertising may be a good source of clients for some areas of the law, it is probably the least desirable for building up a criminal law practice.

§1.8 III. FIRST INTERVIEW

When a person's liberty is at stake, time is usually of the essence. Phone calls from prospective clients should be returned immediately because the client may be in custody. When the client is in custody, the attorney must find out in the first phone call the time and location of the arrest, the arresting agency, the charges (if known), the bail (if any and if known), and the jail in which the client is being held. Several counties now provide access to this information on the local sheriff's website. The attorney must explain the concepts of privileged communications, the right against self-incrimination, and the right to counsel. The client should be warned not to make statements to anyone without the attorney's prior knowledge and approval. The client must understand that he or she should not speak to parole or probation officers, police officers, members of the press, or family members about any pending or possible charges or case-related matters without counsel present.

Counsel should admonish the client not to have any indirect or direct contact with any potential witness against him or her because such communications may be later viewed as attempts to dissuade the witness or as an admission of guilt. People v Cribas (1991) 231 CA3d 596, 282 CR 538.

The client should be cautioned that visits or calls to others, e.g., a bondsperson or family member, may be overheard by jail authorities or other inmates. Kuhlmann v Wilson (1986) 477 US 436, 91 L Ed 2d 364, 106 S Ct 2616. Spontaneous or unsolicited incriminating statements made to an inmate who is a government informant but who serves as a mere "listening post" have been held not to violate the Sixth Amendment. Kuhlmann v Wilson, supra. See also People v Hovey (1988) 44 C3d 543, 559, 244 CR 121. Similarly, the high Court has held that an inmate's incriminating statements to an undercover police officer posing as a prisoner are not inadmissible under the Fifth Amendment simply because Miranda warnings were not administered. Illinois v Perkins (1990) 496 US 292, 296, 110 L Ed 2d 243, 250, 110 S Ct 2394. Asset data may be of as much interest to authorities as evidence of the crime. See discussion of asset forfeiture in chap 57.

> Ø Note: Defense counsel should not obtain any other information from the client over the phone. Although Pen C §636 prohibits eavesdropping on a call between an attorney and a client, it is not uncommon for a police officer to place calls for clients and to be nearby during the conversation. Also, Pen C §§629.50-629.98 and 18 USC §§2516-2518 authorize eavesdropping on conversations involving specified offenses if a court order has been obtained. Counsel should be aware that statements taken in violation of a state statute are potentially admissible against the client unless exclusion is based on a violation of the federal Constitution. See Cal Const art I, §28(f)(2).

It is fairly rare to encounter difficulties in getting in to see a jailed client. It is a misdemeanor for any officer having custody of an arrested person to willfully refuse or neglect to allow the arrested person's attorney to visit the prisoner. Pen C §825(b). In addition, the arrestee may recover $500 in damages from the officer. Pen C §825(b); Beltram v Appellate Dep't (1977) 66 CA3d 711, 136 CR 211.

Counsel should insist on a private in-person consultation, face-to-face, without wire screens, open doors, or others present or nearby. See People v Torres (1990) 218 CA3d 700, 267 CR 213 (open door not necessary because no exigent circumstances indicating threat to institutional security). See also Barber v Municipal Court (1979) 24 C3d 742, 751, 157 CR 658 (essential element of right to counsel is opportunity for defendant to consult with counsel in absolute privacy); In re Poe (1966) 65 C2d 25, 32 n5, 51 CR 896 (police officers should not be present, even if officers are not listening); In re Snyder (1923) 62 CA 697, 699, 217 P 777 (forcing interviews to be conducted across table separated by wire screen was improper; interviews under circumstances affording "absolute privacy of consultation" were ordered).

If counsel is rebuffed, he or she should go to a judge for an order. Although most judicial officers will grant the request pro forma, it is helpful to supplement the case law with examples of why one-on-one visiting is necessary in a particular case (e.g., the need to exhibit documents, have them signed, administer testing that requires observation at close range, examine for physical signs, and eliminate any fear of eavesdropping).

It is conceivable that the interview room will be bugged. If what counsel is going to discuss is highly sensitive, exchanging the information in written form or whispering it in the ear is the only alternative. In one highly visible and sensitive case, counsel brought a portable radio to the custodial facility, turned it on and held the discussion near the radio in a low voice, hoping to foil electronic eavesdropping.

Regardless of where the initial interview takes place, it is important to establish a good working relationship and rapport with the client. In criminal cases, clients are particularly concerned with "what's going to happen" and how soon they can be released. Therefore, it is very important at the first interview to explain to the client the likely stages of the criminal process and the release opportunities. For further discussion of release possibilities and procedures, see chap 4.

If there is insufficient time for an extended interview, counsel should at least get the basics: the client's true name, address, date and place of birth, work address, telephone numbers, and Social Security number; the name, address, and telephone number of a close relative or friend; and any information needed to try to obtain the defendant's release. If the defendant is in the military, counsel should obtain the client's rate, pay grade, duty station, ship movement, name of commanding or superior officer, duty hours, and a civilian contact. See the sample interview form in §10.1. Sample fee agreement and interview forms are also in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§3.1 (fee agreement), 10.1 (interview) (2d ed Cal CEB 2005); these forms are also on a CD-ROM that accompanies the book.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.9 IV. THE JAIL KIT

In many instances, the attorney's initial contact with the client is in jail. The attorney should have several "jail kits" with him or her, at home, and in the office so that time is not lost because the attorney either has to take time to find the various things that must be brought to the jail, or must return to the jail to bring documents that were forgotten the first time. Counsel should have the following items in his or her jail kit:

- Business cards;
- Retainer agreements (see discussion in §§3.14-3.18; sample forms in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§3.1-3.2 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005);
- Bail review information form;
- Interview form (see §10.1);
- Advisement of Miranda rights form (see §23.38);
- Client information letter (see sample letter in Crim Law Forms Man §1.28);
- Authorization forms for release of information (see sample form in Crim Law Forms Man §§1.29-1.30);
- Waiver of presence form (see sample form in Crim Law Forms Man §6.1);
- Counsel's jail identification card (if required locally) or State Bar card;
- Change of plea forms (obtain from court);
- Legal pads;
- Camera (preferably a digital camera or instant print);
- Calculator;
- Receipt book;
- Cassette tape recorder;
- Copy of Penal Code that contains selected offenses defined in the Health and Safety and Vehicle codes; and
- List of important telephone numbers.

The attorney should not give anything to the inmate without the prior approval of the jail captain or other person in charge. This includes cigarettes, money, food, and legal papers. It is also prudent to obtain the jail captain's permission before photographing the client.

For discussion of fees, retainer agreements, conflicts of interest, and attorney liability for accepting "tainted" fee money, see §§3.14-3.18 (fees and retainer agreements), 2.8-2.16 (conflicts), and 3.15, 57.33 (tainted fees). For discussion of asset forfeiture, see chap 57. Sample forms are in Crim Law Forms Man §§3.1 (fee agreement), 10.1 (interview); these forms are also on a CD-ROM that accompanies the book.

§1.10 V. LIST OF FREQUENTLY CALLED PHONE NUMBERS

Counsel should have readily available frequently called telephone numbers such as the following:

- The jail:
- Main number
- Watch commander or person in charge
- Number to call ahead for inmate interviews
- Psychiatric unit
- Duty judge
- Bail unit
- Numbers of jails in outlying areas
- The courthouse(s):
- Courtrooms
- Clerk: to trail a matter
- Clerk: to arraign, when permitted by phone
- Clerk: calendar information
- Clerk: court records
- All police departments in the area in which counsel practices, including sheriff's department and marshal's office
- Probation office(s):
- General information number
- Records
- Individual probation officers
- District Attorney's office(s)
- City Attorney's office(s)
- Public Defender's office(s)
- State Attorney General's office
- U.S. Attorney's office
- Law library
- Bail bond agencies
- Military:
- Ship's information
- Military bases in the area
- Shore patrol or military police
- Mental health facilities
- Detox center
- Work furlough center

Counsel should add to this list any other frequently used numbers.

§1.11 VI. OPENING, CLOSING, AND RETRIEVING FILES

Counsel should have a standard procedure for opening, closing, and retrieving files. The important thing is to keep the procedure consistent so that if there is a change in office staff, the next person to handle the file will be able to do so efficiently. Retrieval is especially important in criminal law because, even after counsel has "closed" a file, he or she may have to open it again because of a probation revocation, modification of sentence, record sealing, or bench warrant service on the client. Counsel may also want to verify previous representation for purposes of conflict in another case.

Counsel may wish to destroy a file after some period of time because of storage space problems and expense. However, it appears that the case file belongs to the client. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(D), which defines client papers and property rather broadly. Counsel can deliver the file to the client or obtain the client's consent to destroy the file, but there may be practical difficulties in locating the client. There is no statute or provision of the Rules of Professional Conduct that prescribes how long a closed file should be retained or when it may be destroyed, but it has been suggested that in the absence of an agreement with the client about the retention of files, the attorney must keep potentially significant client papers "until there is no longer any reasonably foreseeable prejudice to the client's rights." San Francisco Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 1996-1. For additional views on counsel's ethical obligations with respect to closed case files, see California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 2001-157; LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 475 (1994). If consent is given for destruction, counsel must be careful to destroy files in a manner that continues to protect the client's confidences. Bus & P C §6068(e). The State Bar Ethics Hotline, (800) 238-4427, can provide practitioners with copies of written discussions of the various problems of client file retention and destruction.

> Ø Note: Because of the Three Strikes law, counsel should make it a practice to retain files that contain records from serious and violent felony cases. See Pen C §§667.5(c), 1192.7(c). Such felony convictions can be alleged as "strikes" throughout the client's lifetime. Because court records (particularly reporter's transcripts) are not kept indefinitely, the contents of counsel's files may be the only source of exculpatory or otherwise useful information related to a prior conviction.

© The Regents of the University of California

VII. TIME MANAGEMENT

§1.12 A. Court Appointments

Counsel should always carry a calendar with every court appearance listed to avoid calendar conflicts when setting future court dates. See §58.19 on attorney contempt for failure to appear in court, and §19.21 for discussion of the requirement that the court appoint as counsel in felony cases only those attorneys who can represent that they will be ready for the preliminary hearing and trial on the dates set.

Ø Note: When filing motions in the clerk's office, counsel should first check to see what department hears motion matters, and the days and times the court hears them, so that counsel can set the motion in the proper department on the right day and at the right time.

The attorney's secretary should be familiar with the courthouses in which the attorney practices so that he or she can direct clients, witnesses, and family members to the appropriate courtroom, if necessary. Some attorneys make it a part of their regular practice to have their secretaries write or call clients before every court appearance to remind them of the date, time, location, and any documents they are to bring.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.13 B. Jail Visiting Hours

Before going to the jail it is wise to call ahead to be sure that the client is still there, and that counsel will be allowed to see him or her on arrival. Some jails have specific visiting hours and procedures; many do not allow attorney interviews during mealtimes and shift changes. For discussion of the first interview, see generally §1.8 and chap 10.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.14 C. Telephone Calls

It is wise to develop some policies and procedures with respect to telephone calls to avoid constant interruptions. For example, counsel can set aside certain hours during the day to take and return calls, and have the secretary take messages during the rest of the day. The attorney might want to instruct the secretary to put through calls from prospective clients at any time.

Attorneys should also have a policy on collect calls. In many areas, jail inmates may make only collect calls. Therefore, counsel will find that his or her jailed clients call collect at all hours of the day and night.

Many custodial facilities have made significant strides in the past few years in giving prisoners more access to telephones. It must be remembered, however, that the prisoner's right to completed telephone calls when booked came through enactment of Pen C §851.5, making it a misdemeanor to willfully deprive a prisoner of the right to telephone calls. The section needed later amendment to counter jail and police evasions of the original statutory right, e.g., requiring the prisoner to have proper change for the pay phone, or counting a busy signal as a call. Officers who violate a defendant's right to make a phone call do not have immunity for that action. Carlo v City of Chino (9th Cir 1997) 105 F3d 493.

"Voicemail" is now used in many law offices. The attorney's recorded external greeting should begin by letting the operator know that he or she accepts station-to-station collect calls. The greeting should also request that the caller leave a detailed message to help avoid unnecessary telephone tag.

D. Calendar Management

§1.15 1. Attorney Availability; Setting Up Calendars

The attorney's secretary must have a current copy of the attorney's calendar so that he or she can find the attorney at any time. Many attorneys use paging devices and cellular phones to increase accessibility. Unlike other types of practice, it is not uncommon for a criminal lawyer to be called to court with very little notice. If a client is arrested on a bench warrant or a new case, the court may call in the morning requesting that counsel appear in court with the client that afternoon. The secretary may also use the calendar to set up appointments over the phone, calendar written motions for the attorney, and set up the attorney's calendar for the day.

Because of the increasing availability of online calendars and PDAs, many attorneys now prefer to keep their calendars online or on portable devices instead of carrying a paper calendar. This practice can serve to reduce clutter and increase counsel's efficiency. However, it remains essential for counsel to ensure that their secretaries have access to their daily calendars. Counsel must therefore provide their secretaries with online access or daily printouts of the calendar so that accurate, up-to-date schedules can be maintained and calendaring conflicts can be avoided.

As soon as counsel obtains dates for future court appearances, the dates should be entered in both the attorney's and the secretary's calendars. If counsel has a law clerk, that person should also have a copy of the attorney's calendar. It is imperative for defense counsel on court-appointed cases to maintain an accurate and current calendar, and to take it to court when appearing to accept new felony cases in order to determine whether counsel can agree to accept the case, given the requirements of new Pen C §987.05. See further discussion of those requirements in §§8.7, 19.21, 58.21.

Counsel should also keep a calendar to ensure that deadlines are met for filing motions and writs, and that appointments are kept. There are a number of software programs for maintaining calendars. Attorneys who do not use a computer program may want to use a "tickler" file to remind them of appointments, court dates, and deadlines. Important dates to calendar are:

- All court dates;
- Deadlines for serving subpoenas;
- Deadlines for filing motions;
- Deadlines for writ review of particular motions;
- New client interviews;
- Witness interviews;
- Lineups; and
- Deadlines for requesting and providing discovery (Pen C §§1054-1054.7).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.16 2. Deadlines for Filing Court Papers; Computation of Calendar Days and Court Days

Attorneys should always keep a current copy of the California Rules of Court in their law offices and be thoroughly familiar with its contents. Desk copies can be obtained from LexisNexis and Thompson West publishers. The rules are also available online on the Judicial Council's website, http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/rules. Counsel should keep in mind, however, that familiarity with the state rules will not provide all necessary information. Most courts set deadlines and encourage practices that are only published in their local rules. Local rules for most California superior courts are also available on the Judicial Council's website, http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/rules/localrules.htm.

Therefore, attorneys must have a copy of local rules of the courts in which they practice. These local rules vary from court to court and, consequently, provide for different deadlines for the filing of various types of motions. See §§42.2, 43.2, 44.2 for deadlines applicable to writs and appeals, and §§4.28-4.36 on rules concerning subpoenas. Counsel should keep a list of those deadlines at the front of the office calendar and should be personally responsible for checking the filing dates of the papers he or she files.

In determining whether the number of days given in a statute refers to court days or calendar days, the rule is that calendar days are assumed unless the statute expressly states court days. Govt C §6806 ("[a] day is the period of time between any midnight and the midnight following"); Pen C §7(13) ("[t]he word 'month' means a calendar month, unless otherwise expressed"). In computing time, counsel should exclude the first day and include the last unless the last day is a holiday, and then it too is excluded. CC §10. A paper that would otherwise be filed on a holiday may be filed on the next business day. CC §11; CCP §12a. See also Govt C §§6700-6716 (holidays), 6800-6807 (computation of time); CCP §§10 (judicial holidays), 12-12b (computation of time), 13-13b (holidays and Saturdays), 133-135 (days for transaction of judicial business).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.17 3. Calendar Conflicts

Appointed counsel should not have calendar conflicts on the preliminary hearing or trial dates. See Pen C §987.05, discussed in §§8.7, 19.21.

The trial court has the power to impose sanctions not exceeding $1500 for violation of a lawful court order without good cause or substantial justification. CCP §177.5; People v Tabb (1991) 228 CA3d 1300, 279 CR 480. See People v Superior Court (Laff) (2001) 25 C4th 703, 739 n16, 107 CR2d 323. Either opposing counsel or the court may seek sanctions under this section. Notice and an opportunity to be heard must be provided, and an order imposing sanctions must be in writing and must recite in detail the conduct or circumstances that justify the order. CCP §177.5.

> Ø Note: Sanctions under CCP §177.5 are specifically not to be imposed on "advocacy of counsel before the court."

When an attorney finds that he or she has scheduled more than one court appearance for the same time, and there is enough time to change the date, the attorney may contact the prosecutor and any co-counsel and try to obtain agreement on a new date. Counsel must then obtain the court's approval of the new date either by a phone call, by seeing the judge in person during a break, or by advancing the case with notice to the other party. Local court rules or local practice will dictate which approach is appropriate for a particular jurisdiction. It is helpful if counsel obtains the court file so that the judge's clerk can enter the new dates in the file. It is preferable, of course, for counsel to keep accurate calendars so that conflicts do not occur. See generally chap 20 on continuances.

When attorneys are delayed in one court, which causes them to be late for another court appointment, they should contact the judge or the clerk of the court in which they are expected and tell him or her of their location and their estimated time of arrival; otherwise, they may be subject to contempt (see §58.19) or sanctions (CCP §177.5). Each court makes its own policy on "trailing" a case until counsel arrives, so counsel should become familiar with local practice. See Mowrer v Superior Court (1969) 3 CA3d 223, 83 CR 125.

Sole practitioners should enlist the aid of another lawyer or two who can handle calendar conflicts when they are delayed or ill. In planning a vacation, counsel should remember that some courts require counsel to file a vacation affidavit in each court in which counsel practices, indicating the dates counsel will be away. Of course, if a client is arrested during counsel's absence, counsel should have an attorney available to handle the case during his or her absence.

Many judges require compliance with the procedures for continuances set forth in Pen C §1050(b). Counsel should be aware that noncompliance may result in sanctions by the court. Pen C §§1050(c), 1050.5.

§1.18 VIII. STANDARD FORMS AND LETTERS

Using standard forms and letters saves time and money. It is therefore essential to store frequently used forms and document templates on a computer so that they can be modified and used in new cases without "reinventing the wheel." In addition, the companion to this book, California Criminal Law Forms Manual (2d ed Cal CEB 2005), contains many sample forms in a loose-leaf binder and on an accompanying CD-ROM. Other useful forms (some of which have been adopted for mandatory use) are available on the Judicial Council's website, http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/cgi-bin/forms.cgi.

The more important types of forms that counsel should keep are listed below. Many are included in the California Criminal Law Forms Manual.

- Standard office forms
- Authorization form that permits information to be released to the attorney
- Bail reduction hearing information
- Booklet that explains in simple language the procedures that are likely to be followed, and the client's constitutional rights (counsel may want to have these professionally printed)
- Booklet that instructs witnesses how to conduct themselves in court (counsel may also want to have these booklets professionally printed)
- Financial and personal data about the client
- Interview form (see §10.1 of this book)
- Retainer agreement

- Standard letters to client
- Time, date, and place of a court appearance
- Bench warrant notification and instructions on what to do
- At the close of the case, information on the status of the case, the possibility of later expungement or reduction of charges, and, if appropriate, the terms and conditions of probation

- Standard pretrial motions
- Change of venue motion (see chap 15)
- Competence to stand trial (see chap 48)
- Constitutionality of prior conviction (see chap 24)
- Continuance (see chap 20)
- Disclose informant (see chap 17)
- Discovery (see chap 11)

§1.19 IX. REQUIREMENT THAT LAWYER KEEP CLIENTS REASONABLY INFORMED CONCERNING CASE

Under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-500, lawyers must keep clients informed of significant developments relating to their case and to promptly comply with their reasonable requests for information. See also Bus & P C §6068(m). Lawyers must promptly communicate to clients "all terms and conditions of any offer made to the client" in a criminal matter, whether written or oral (emphasis added). Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-510. A sample client information letter is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §1.28 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005) and on the accompanying CD-ROM.

§1.20 X. RUNNING AN EFFICIENT CRIMINAL APPELLATE PRACTICE

Many criminal appeals are handled through the indigent appointment system. Hourly pay is less than the prevailing rate for privately retained appeals, which requires the attorney to keep costs low to be able to make a profit. To be cost-efficient, here are some things the attorney might consider:

- Work out of his or her own home.
- To save on shelf space, buy primary resources (cases and statutes) in electronic format, and the main secondary resources (like this book) in either electronic or print format, depending on availability and on counsel's preference. When funds are quite limited, buy only the publications and software that are used frequently. Use the county law library only when necessary because travel time is costly.

Ø Note: While most legal research will be performed online through services such as Westlaw and LexisNexis, these services can be expensive. If funds are limited, FindLaw (http://www.findlaw.com) provides a free Internet alternative that can serve many of counsel's research needs.

- Do not hire a secretary, or, if counsel handles both trial and appellate work, use a pooling or sharing arrangement for a secretary who works on trial-related matters, including scheduling, phone-answering, and the like (a malpractice carrier's requirements for calendar management need to be taken into account).
- Use a U-shaped desk arrangement that permits the attorney to have the keyboard for his or her personal computer at the side, frees up a large work area in front, and provides space behind, on the top of a credenza, for transcripts. Keyboard height, monitor height and distance, and other spatial arrangements should be ergonomically correct to eliminate carpal tunnel syndrome and other problems.
- Select a word processing program with the features needed for writing briefs, e.g., the ability to correctly and efficiently generate a table of authorities, as well as those needed for trial court pleadings, such as the ability to internally generate pleading paper with the lines numbered 1 through 28 down the left side.

§2.1 I. OVERVIEW

The professional responsibility issues covered in this chapter were selected because of their importance in the area of criminal law. The discussion of legal ethics is not exhaustive. An overview of California legal ethics can be obtained by reading the State Bar Act (Bus & P C §§6000-6238) and the California Rules of Professional Conduct. The ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility and subsequent ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct, although not binding on California lawyers, may provide a useful discussion of particular issues and may be persuasive when there is no controlling California authority on point. See California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1983-71.

Ethics violations may result in contempt sanctions (see chap 58), State Bar of California disciplinary proceedings (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-100(A)), reversal on appeal of cases involving misconduct because of incompetence of defense counsel or prosecutorial misconduct (see §§2.20-2.21, 2.40-2.45), or sanctions that affect the presentation of the case (see Taylor v Illinois (1988) 484 US 400, 416, 98 L Ed 2d 798, 815, 108 S Ct 646). Attorney misconduct as it relates to alleged error on appeal in a criminal defendant's case is not addressed in this chapter.

II. SOURCES OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY

§2.2 A. California Statutes and Rules of Professional Conduct

California lawyers must comply with the standards for professional conduct in the State Bar Act (Bus & P C §§6000-6238), the California Rules of Professional Conduct, the statutes defining conduct appropriate in specific situations, California state appellate court and federal appellate court published opinions, and Review Department of the California State Bar Court published opinions.

The California Rules of Professional Conduct are promulgated by the State Bar and approved by the California Supreme Court. Bus & P C §6076. The State Bar of California publishes and distributes a pamphlet, State Bar Publication No. 250, containing the State Bar Act, related statutes, and the California Rules of Professional Conduct. Many of the Rules have a "Discussion" section. The Discussions do not add an independent basis for imposing discipline but are intended to provide guidance in interpreting the Rules. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-100(C).

The State Bar's website is found at http://www.calbar.ca.gov. It includes the California Rules of Professional Conduct, the State Bar Act and related statutes, the ethics opinions published by the California State Bar Standing Committee on Professional Responsibility and Conduct (COPRAC), and a list of attorneys licensed to practice in California, together with any record of attorney discipline. See Mack v State Bar (2001) 92 CA4th 957, 963, 112 CR2d 341.

The Rules are not intended to create new civil causes of action. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-100(A). Nor are they intended to supersede existing law relating to attorneys in nondisciplinary contexts. See Discussion to Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-100. However, the Rules have been used as a standard for measuring an attorney's breach of fiduciary duty, and jury instructions based on the Rules may be proper. American Airlines Inc. v Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton (2002) 96 CA4th 1017, 1032, 117 CR2d 685; Mirabito v Liccardo (1992) 4 CA4th 41, 5 CR2d 571.

Enforcement of ethical conduct is under the jurisdiction of the State Bar of California and the California Supreme Court. Bus & P C §§6076, 6100. An attorney who violates a rule of professional conduct or a Business and Professions Code section may be subject to an agreement in lieu of discipline or actual discipline, which can be public or private reproval, suspension from practice, or disbarment. Bus & P C §§6077, 6100.

The Review Department of the State Bar Court and the California Supreme Court address attorney discipline in separate published opinions. Recent Review Department published opinions are available on the State Bar of California website, http://www.calbar.ca.gov. Both the California Supreme Court and the California courts of appeal may apply ethical standards to specific issues of attorney conduct in civil and criminal appeals.

Legislatively enacted ethical standards are minimum standards; the California Supreme Court has the inherent power to require additional standards if it is not satisfied that legislative requirements are sufficient. Stratmore v State Bar (1975) 14 C3d 887, 123 CR 101. The court also has the power to discipline attorneys for criminal convictions even if they are unrelated to the attorney's practice of law. In re Kelley (1990) 52 C3d 487, 494, 276 CR 375.

Ø Note: The court's inherent power and the generality of the legislative standards place a duty on the individual attorney to investigate all sources of ethical authority before acting when the attorney suspects an ethical concern.

Ø Warning: The California Supreme Court's discipline orders may serve as the basis for reciprocal disbarment actions by both the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals and the Board of Immigration Appeals. See, e.g., Gadda v Ashcroft (9th Cir 2004) 363 F3d 861, 865, amended, 377 F3d 934.

§2.3 B. Additional Sources of Professional Responsibility

California Attorney Guidelines of Civility and Professionalism. The State Bar of California has adopted voluntary guidelines intended to complement codes of professionalism adopted by bar associations. Section 20 of the Guidelines is an additional provision that applies to criminal law practitioners. This guideline states that criminal law practitioners must appreciate both the role of the prosecutor who is charged with seeking justice, and the role of a defender who must zealously represent his or her client even in the face of seemingly overwhelming evidence of guilt. The guideline specifically admonishes that a prosecutor should not question the propriety of defending a person accused of a crime and that appellate counsel and trial counsel should communicate openly, civilly, and without rancor, endeavoring to keep the proceedings on a professional level.

ABA Model Rules. The American Bar Association (ABA) Model Rules of Professional Conduct have not been adopted, nor are they binding, in California. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1983-71. The Rules may, however, assist in the interpretation of standards of professional responsibility in California when there is no California authority on point. Formal Opinion No. 1983-71.

The ABA's website is located at http://www.abanet.org. The ABA Model Rules and summaries of ABA formal ethics opinions from 1984 to the present are available through the ABA website.

ABA publications on professional conduct. The American Bar Association and the Bureau of National Affairs (BNA) publish the ABA/BNA Lawyers' Manual on Professional Conduct, and Current Reports. The Lawyers' Manual is divided by subject. Current Reports is updated with summaries of court decisions, ethics opinions, disciplinary proceedings, and other news, including recent legislation and specific issues of professional responsibility. This publication may be ordered from BNA's Customer Contact Center, 9435 Key West Avenue, Rockville, MD 20850; (800) 372-1033; http://www.bna.com.

Other jurisdictions. The state bar associations of many jurisdictions have their rules of professional conduct and often their legal ethics opinions online.

§2.4 C. California Legal Ethics Opinions

Individual attorneys who submit written inquiries on specific issues of professional responsibility may obtain advisory written opinions from the California State Bar Standing Committee on Professional Responsibility and Conduct (COPRAC), or from the ethics committees of the Los Angeles County (LACBA), Orange County, San Diego County, and San Francisco County Bar Associations if they are members of these bar associations. These opinions are published in the California Compendium on Professional Responsibility, which is updated annually. Copies of the Compendium may be obtained from the Office of Professional Competence, Planning and Development, State Bar of California, 180 Howard Street, San Francisco, CA 94105. The phone number is (415) 538-2112. COPRAC ethics opinions are available at the State Bar's website at http://www.calbar.ca.gov.

Ethics opinions of local bar associations are also available at the associations' websites. LACBA ethics opinions from Number 476 to the present, and summaries of opinions Numbers 302-475, are available at the LACBA's website at http://www.lacba.org. San Diego County Bar Association Formal Opinions from 1968-1 to the present are available at http://www.sdcba.org. Ethics opinions of the Bar Association of San Francisco from 1970 to 1999 are available at http://www.sfbar.org. Ethics opinions of the Orange County Bar Association from 1993 to 2005 are available at http://www.ocbar.org.

§2.5 D. Ethics Hotline and Alcohol/Drug Abuse Hotline

The State Bar of California staffs an "Ethics Hotline," which attorneys may call if they have specific questions on legal ethics. Although the information provided is not binding on the State Bar, it is intended to offer guidance. The telephone number is (800) 2-ETHICS. See Wallis v PHL Assocs., Inc. (2009) 168 CA4th 882, 899, 86 CR3d 297 (sanction upheld despite attorney's reliance on Ethics Hotline, because hotline is confidential research service, not source of legal advice).

There is a lawyer assistance program (Stress, Substance Abuse, and Chemical Dependency), which may be reached by telephoning (866) 436-6644.

§2.6 III. GENERAL ETHICS REQUIREMENTS

Business and Professions Code §6068 contains general ethical requirements for attorneys. These include supporting the Constitution and laws of the United States and California; maintaining respect for the courts and judicial officers; counseling or maintaining only actions that appear legal or just, except the defense of a person charged with a public offense; employing only means that are consistent with truth, and never seeking to mislead a judge or judicial officer by a false statement of fact or law; maintaining inviolate client confidences and preserving the client's secrets; advancing no fact prejudicial to the honor or reputation of a witness unless justice so requires; not encouraging an action or proceeding from a corrupt motive or interest; not rejecting the cause of the defenseless or oppressed; cooperating in State Bar disciplinary investigations and proceedings, and reporting one's own misconduct (see §2.7); and responding promptly to client inquiries, keeping clients reasonably informed of significant developments in their cases and providing clients with copies of required documents (see §2.19).

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/2 PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY/§2.7 IV. WHEN ATTORNEY MISCONDUCT MUST BE REPORTED TO STATE BAR

§2.7 IV. WHEN ATTORNEY MISCONDUCT MUST BE REPORTED TO STATE BAR

An attorney must report his or her own misconduct to the State Bar, in writing, within 30 calendar days after the date the attorney learns of any of the following (Bus & P C §6068(o)):

- Three or more malpractice lawsuits filed against the attorney within a year.
- A civil judgment against the attorney for fraud, misrepresentation, breach of fiduciary duty, or gross negligence in the attorney's professional capacity.
- A judicial sanction of $1000 or more imposed on attorney for any conduct other than failure to make discovery.
- Conviction of any felony, or an attempt, conspiracy, or solicitation of another to commit a felony.
- Conviction of a misdemeanor, or an attempt, conspiracy, or solicitation of another to commit a misdemeanor, that was committed in the course of the practice of law, or in which a client was the victim, or that has as an essential element of improper conduct of any attorney, including dishonesty or moral turpitude.
- The imposition of professional discipline against an attorney by any professional or occupational licensing or disciplinary agency.
- Reversal of a judgment because of an attorney's misconduct, grossly incompetent representation, or willful misrepresentation.

Courts must notify the State Bar of any of the following (Bus & P C §6086.7):

- A final order of contempt imposed against an attorney for conduct that may warrant discipline.
- The modification or reversal of a judgment because of an attorney's misconduct, incompetent representation, or willful misrepresentation.
- The imposition of any judicial sanction of $1000 or more, other than a sanction for failure to make discovery.

V. DUTY TO AVOID CONFLICTS OF INTEREST

§2.8 A. Prescreening for Conflicts

To avoid conflicts, defense counsel should screen prospective clients before interviewing them. Prescreening avoids disqualification. See, e.g., Yorn v Superior Court (1979) 90 CA3d 669, 153 CR 295.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Multiple Representation

§2.9 1. Codefendants

Conflicts of interest; multiple representation. Defense counsel must avoid conflicts of interest that infringe or deny a defendant's constitutional right to the effective assistance of counsel. People v Mroczko (1983) 35 C3d 86, 103, 197 CR 52, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209. See also People v McDermott (2002) 28 C4th 946, 990, 123 CR2d 654. This danger usually arises when counsel represents codefendants. For example, if codefendants have conflicting defenses, counsel may have to deny or weaken one defendant's defense to benefit the other. People v Mroczko, supra. Moreover, except as specified in Bus & P C §6068(e)(2) and Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-100, attorneys must maintain client confidence and secrets inviolate. Bus & P C §6068(e)(1). Multiple representation may make "undivided loyalty" difficult. It is thus common practice in California for defense attorneys to represent only one of several codefendants. When potential or actual conflicts exist, attorneys must comply with Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(C), which requires both clients' informed written consent as defined in Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(A).

If defense counsel decides to represent codefendants despite a conflict, he or she must inform the court of the existence of potential or actual conflict. Mroczko, 35 C3d at 112. See below for discussion of the court's obligations in this event.

Counsel who has obtained confidential information material to the employment from one codefendant should not continue to represent another codefendant in the same case without the informed written consent of both the first codefendant and the client. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(E).

Procedure when retained counsel is involved. If the defense attorney, prosecutor, or court perceives that a conflict may exist in joint representation of defendants, the trial court should be informed, or on its own motion ascertain, whether defense counsel has obtained a knowing and intelligent written waiver from each client. People v Bonin (1989) 47 C3d 808, 836, 254 CR 298. Additionally, the court must, on its own, determine and state on the record that there is a knowing and intelligent waiver of any conflict legally waivable. The court might inquire as follows:

Has your attorney (or outside counsel) discussed with you the dangers and possible consequences of joint representation?

Do you wish to discuss these potential drawbacks and consequences of joint representation?

You have the right to speak about this matter with outside counsel. Do you wish outside counsel?

Ø Note: If a defendant requests outside counsel, that should be provided, and full waiver should be made later on the record, with outside counsel present.

Do you understand that you have the right to conflict-free representation?

Fully understanding all I have told you, do you freely and voluntarily waive all conflicts and the right to hire separate counsel?

If the defendant answers in the affirmative, the court states:

I find that the defendant has freely, voluntarily, and intelligently waived all actual and possible conflicts.

Defense counsel must join on the record in the court's finding.

Ø Note: On the issue of conflict waivers, see People v McDermott (2002) 28 C4th 946, 990, 123 CR2d 654; People v Mroczko (1983) 35 C3d 86, 110 n26, 197 CR 52. See also Wheat v U.S. (1988) 486 US 153, 100 L Ed 2d 140, 108 S Ct 1692, in which the Supreme Court upheld the lower court's refusal to accept three codefendants' waiver of conflict-free representation; they wanted the same attorney to represent them at trial.

Procedure when appointed counsel is involved. When the court appoints counsel to represent codefendants, it must appoint separate and independent counsel for each defendant even if there is no apparent conflict of interest. People v Mroczko (1983) 35 C3d 86, 115, 197 CR 52; People v Owen (1989) 210 CA3d 561, 566, 258 CR 535. The defense attorney and prosecutor should both make sure that no conflict exists with appointed counsel. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110, 3-310.

If a potential conflict becomes an actual conflict, or is raised by either the prosecution or the defense during the scope of subsequent proceedings, the court must inquire again, as set out above, and obtain new waivers from both the defendant and defense attorney. See Wood v Georgia (1981) 450 US 261, 272, 67 L Ed 2d 220, 230, 101 S Ct 1097. See also Holloway v Arkansas (1978) 435 US 475, 484, 55 L Ed 2d 426, 434, 98 S Ct 1173; People v Bonin, supra. The defendant must be given an opportunity to confer with independent counsel. See People v Owen (1989) 210 CA3d 561, 566, 258 CR 535. Counsel must again obtain an informed written consent from each client. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(C).

When defense counsel advises the court that a conflict exists that requires counsel to withdraw from representation, the court must give counsel's remarks great weight even if counsel cannot disclose the basis for the conflict because of the attorney-client privilege. Leversen v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 530, 537, 194 CR 448; Aceves v Superior Court (1996) 51 CA4th 584, 59 CR2d 280. See also Bus & P C §6068(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.10 2. Concurrent and Former Clients, Who Are Not Codefendants, in Same Proceeding

Conflicts can occur when an attorney represents a defendant in a criminal matter and concurrently represents, or formerly represented, another person who is a witness in the represented defendant's case. The attorney is forbidden from using confidential information, acquired during the attorney-client relationship, to the detriment of any client or former client. Leversen v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 530, 538, 194 CR 448. See Bus & P C §6068(e); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(E). A conflict exists if the attorney is forced to choose between providing effective representation to the client/defendant, and protecting the confidences of the witness with whom the attorney also has or had an attorney-client relationship. Leversen v Superior Court, supra. A potential conflict also exists when an attorney represents a defendant and formerly represented someone whom the defense suspects committed the crime of which the defendant is accused. See People v Jones (2004) 33 C4th 234, 241, 14 CR3d 579. See also Lewis v Mayle (9th Cir 2004) 391 F3d 989.

When a defendant consults with an attorney about representation but no employment results, the communication may be protected from disclosure even if made in a non-office setting (see California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 2003-161), and if the attorney later represents another individual who may testify against the defendant, courts will presume that confidential information was imparted during the consultation that would preclude the later representation if they find that a "substantial relationship" was created during the consultation. Whether a substantial relationship exists depends on the facts of the particular case. See People v Thoi (1989) 213 CA3d 689, 699, 261 CR 789; Vangsness v Superior Court (1984) 159 CA3d 1087, 1090, 206 CR 45.

If an attorney represents a defendant and the prosecution calls as a witness a former client of the attorney, the attorney must provide written disclosure to the defendant of the relationship with the former client. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(B). If the representation resulted in the attorney's obtaining confidential information about the former client, the attorney must obtain from the former client informed written consent before accepting employment adverse to the former client. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(E). However, when a public defender's office formerly represented a prosecution witness, the entire office is not necessarily disqualified. Factors to be considered include the length of time between the representations, the nature and notoriety of the witness's case, whether the current attorney was a member of the office at that time, whether the attorney who represented the witness is still a member of the office, and the nature and extent of screening procedures established by the office. See Rhaburn v Superior Court (2006) 140 CA4th 1566, 45 CR3d 464.

It may be ethically improper to represent conflicting interests. For example:

- It is improper for counsel to continue representing either defendant charged in two separate, unrelated criminal cases once counsel learns that one defendant is attempting or has become an undercover informant against the other defendant. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1981-59.
- It is ethically improper for criminal defense counsel to represent a defendant when a previous client of that attorney's office is a witness against the new client and it is reasonably foreseeable that confidences or secrets of the former client may be, or may reasonably appear to the client to be, used. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1980-52.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.11 C. When Attorney Fees Are Paid by Other Than Client

Lawyers must ensure that their loyalties are reserved solely for the client when someone other than the client is paying for the client's representation. This means that a lawyer may not do anything, or promise anything, that might impair the attorney's ability to zealously represent the client with undivided loyalty. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1975-35; Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(F). The lawyer is forbidden from disclosing the client's confidences and secrets to anyone, including the person paying for his or her representation. See Bus & P C §6068(e). Finally, the attorney must obtain the client's informed written consent before representation begins. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(F)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.12 D. Attorney's Relationship With Another Party's Lawyer

Lawyers are specifically directed not to represent a client in a matter in which another party's attorney is a spouse, parent, child, or sibling of the lawyer, lives with the lawyer, is a client of the lawyer, or has an "intimate personal relationship" with the lawyer, unless the lawyer informs the client in writing of the relationship. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-320. See People v Jackson (1985) 167 CA3d 829, 213 CR 521 (defense attorney and prosecutor had dated each other and defendant was not informed; new trial granted). "Intimate personal relationship" has not been defined. See People v Jackson, supra.

Ø Note: California Rules of Professional Conduct 3-320 is not intended to apply to a lawyer's relationship with another lawyer who is a partner or an associate in the same firm as the adverse party's counsel and who has no direct involvement in the matter. See Discussion to Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-320; California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1984-83 for discussion of issues involving public defender/prosecutor spouses; California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1987-93 on ethical duties regarding relationships with witnesses and other court personnel. The court and the defendant should be informed, on the record, of these relationships.

§2.13 E. Other Possible Conflicts of Interest

Sharing office space. Attorneys sharing space or staff must take reasonable steps to ensure that their clients and potential clients are not deceived, misled, or confused about the nature of their relationship. Attorneys who share office space or services also must take reasonable steps to protect each client's confidences and secrets. If attorneys do not address these issues sufficiently, they may violate their obligation to maintain clients' confidential information. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1997-150.

Sexual relations with client. An attorney is precluded from requiring or demanding sexual relations with a client as a condition of representation, intimidating a client into entering into sexual relations, or continuing representation of the client if the sexual relations cause the attorney to perform legal services incompetently. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-120; Bus & P C §6106.9. Sexual relations with a client may become the basis of a lawsuit for violation of fiduciary duties owed the client. Barbara A. v John G. (1983) 145 CA3d 369, 193 CR 422. See also Orange County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 2003-02 (discussing attorney-client sexual relationship).

An intimate relationship with someone close to the defendant or the victim should be disclosed to the court and to the defendant on the record. See People v Singer (1990) 226 CA3d 23, 33, 275 CR 911 (covert sexual relationship between defendant's attorney and defendant's wife compelled reversal).

Attorney's own concurrent criminal prosecution. When defense counsel was being prosecuted for felony drug possession by the same district attorney's office that was prosecuting the defendant at the same time, the California Court of Appeal assumed that an actual conflict of interest existed and then determined that the defendant's representation was not adversely affected. On subsequent habeas, the Ninth Circuit concluded that this approach was neither contrary to clearly established federal law nor an unreasonable application of federal law to the facts of the case. See Campbell v Rice (9th Cir 2005) 408 F3d 1166, 1170.

§2.14 F. Attorney Business Transactions Adverse to Client

An attorney may not enter into a business transaction with a client, or knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client, unless (1) the terms are fair and reasonable; (2) the terms are fully disclosed in writing to the client; (3) the client is advised in writing that he or she may seek the advice of an independent attorney on the matter; and (4) the client consents in writing to the terms of the transaction or terms of the acquisition. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-300. Attorneys must follow all requirements of Rule 3-300 when obtaining a security or ownership interest adverse to the client to secure, or in payment of, fees.

An attorney can take a promissory note from the client as security for fees as long as the attorney complies with Rule 3-300. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1981-62.

Attorneys must comply with Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-300 when accepting a security interest in real property (or any other personal property) to ensure payment of fees by a client whenever the attorney knows that the client has any interest in the property. LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 492 (1998). See also San Francisco Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 1997-1. Moreover, if the client has an interest in the property, the attorney must comply with Rule 3-300 even when record ownership of the property is held by a third person. LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 492 (1998). Rule 3-300 is inapplicable to the extent a security interest is given the attorney for payment of legal fees by someone on the client's behalf. San Francisco Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 1997-1. An attorney may refer a potential client to a broker for the purpose of obtaining a real property loan to pay attorney fees and costs so long as the attorney (1) does not provide legal representation or receive compensation with respect to the referral or resulting loan or escrow transaction and (2) has no undisclosed business relationship with the broker. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 2002-159.

> Ø Note: Attorneys should be aware of the requirement for written fee agreements when the client's total expenses may reasonably be foreseen to exceed $1000. Bus & P C §6148. Sample attorney fee agreement forms may be obtained from the State Bar's website at http://www.calbar.ca.gov.

Defense attorneys should be aware of the pitfalls of literary contracts under which an attorney accepts rights to publish a client's story in exchange for all or part of the attorney fee:

(1) Literary contracts are regulated by Rule 3-300.

(2) They are criticized as inherently in conflict with the attorney's duty to give the client unqualified loyalty. See People v Corona (1978) 80 CA3d 684, 720, 145 CR 894.

(3) Civil Code §2225 establishes an involuntary trust for the benefit of individuals injured by a convicted felon's criminal conduct. But see Keenan v Superior Court (2002) 27 C4th 413, 117 CR2d 1, which held that California's "Son of Sam" law, CC §2225, is facially invalid under the free speech clauses of the United States and California constitutions.

§2.15 G. Conflicts That May Disqualify Defense Attorney's Firm

In certain circumstances, an entire law firm may be required to decline or withdraw from employment when a lawyer in the firm is precluded from representing the client. However, California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1993-128 states that a law firm may represent a client in a criminal matter when a member of the firm directly assisted in the matter as a government attorney before joining the firm, as long as the affected member takes no part in the defense, does not share in fees earned, and the firm effectively screens him or her from any contact with the case.

A conflict may arise when an attorney is asked to represent a client in a criminal case and the attorney's law firm had represented the client in a charged prior conviction. Prior counsel's effectiveness may be an issue, thereby creating a potential conflict of interest. Effective representation of clients, particularly in "strikes" cases, involves vigorous representation on both the immediate charge as well as exhaustive review of, and possible vigorous attack on, the validity of prior convictions. Under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310, attorneys must disclose to clients any potential conflict of interest in order to accept or continue representation.

The creation of a physically separated "firm" within a public office charged with indigent criminal defense, so that different "firms" represent different defendants, can avoid conflicts arising from the representation of multiple defendants, but only with adequate safeguards, including maintaining the separateness of the multiple "firms." California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 2002-158. See Rhaburn v Superior Court (2006) 140 CA4th 1566, 1581, 45 CR3d 464, discussed in §2.10.

§2.16 H. Conflicts Confronting Prosecutor

Recusal. Although a prosecutor may be disqualified for individual conflict, a stronger showing must be made to recuse the entire prosecution office. People v Hamilton (1988) 46 C3d 123, 139, 249 CR 320. A recusal motion should not be granted unless the evidence shows that a conflict exists that would make it unlikely that the defendant would receive a fair trial. Pen C §1424; Hollywood v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 721, 727, 76 CR3d 264. Moreover, the prosecutor's office may be able to create a "wall of silence" between the individual prosecutor and the remainder of the office so that recusal of the entire office is not necessary. Compare People v Lopez (1984) 155 CA3d 813, 827, 202 CR 333 (wall of silence created with newly hired deputy district attorney), with Younger v Superior Court (1978) 77 CA3d 892, 144 CR 34 ((decided before enactment of §1424) conflict wall could not be effectively created with third-ranking administrative prosecutor in office). Recusal is discussed in §§18.26-18.31.

Prosecutor may not also defend. A prosecutor may not also engage in criminal defense. Govt C §26540; People v Rhodes (1974) 12 C3d 180, 186, 115 CR 235; 66 Ops Cal Atty Gen 30 (1983). It is a misdemeanor, and grounds for disbarment, for an attorney to directly or indirectly help defend an individual whom the attorney has in any manner prosecuted. Bus & P C §6131.

City attorneys. A city attorney who does not exercise prosecutorial responsibilities is not precluded from private criminal defense representation, except for criminal defense of violations of that city's ordinances, and of crimes related to other matters handled by that office, as long as the city that employs the city attorney expressly relieves that attorney of all prosecutorial responsibilities, and the accused is informed of and expressly waives any rights created as a result of any potential conflict based on the attorney's position as city attorney. Govt C §41805.

Ø Note: Section 41805 does not preclude the city from limiting or prohibiting the private practice of any attorney it retains or employs. When one attorney in a firm handles misdemeanor prosecutions as a city attorney, another attorney in the firm cannot defend a criminal action brought by the same or a different prosecutorial agency. LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 453 (1990). Attorneys must also be aware that other conflicts may limit or prevent representation of clients in criminal or civil matters. See, e.g., Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310, 3-600.

Ø Note: The prosecutor reporting an actual or potential conflict should notify the supervisor as early as possible so that an early reassignment can be made.

§2.17 VI. ATTORNEY ADVERTISING AND SOLICITATION

Attorneys may advertise their services, consistent with Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-400. In addition to the usual ads in local telephone books, an attorney may send letters to persons recently arrested where that information was obtained through public records documenting the arrest. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1995-142; San Diego Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 1992-3. This type of mailing is subject to several restrictions, which are set out in Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-400. In particular, the attorney must state in the letter and on the envelope that it is an advertisement (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-400, Standard (5)), and the letter cannot include any false or misleading matter (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-400(D)). On using a website to advertise professional services, see California State Bar Formal Opinion Nos. 2001-155 (website is a "communication" and an "advertisement" but not a "solicitation") and 2005-168 (attorney who provides electronic means on his or her website to submit legal questions may owe duty of confidentiality to those who respond but do not become clients).

§2.18 VII. ATTORNEY AS WITNESS

Under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-210, an attorney may not act as an advocate before a jury when the attorney will also testify as a witness unless:

- The attorney's testimony relates to an uncontested matter;
- The testimony relates to the nature and value of legal services rendered in the case; or
- The attorney has the client's informed, written consent.

Prosecutors must obtain consent from the head of their office or the designee of the head of that office.

Rule 5-210 does not apply to partners or associates in the advocate's firm who will be witnesses. Discussion to Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-210. Further, Rule 5-210 is limited to jury trials; it does not apply to court trials or other proceedings. See Discussion to Rule 5-210.

Ø Note: One situation that may force an attorney to be a witness in his or her own case arises when the attorney interviews a witness without someone else present. If that witness must be impeached at trial with the earlier interview, the attorney is then the only one able to provide the impeaching testimony. This dilemma can be prevented by having an independent third person present (usually an assistant or an investigator) when discussing a matter with a witness or when investigating a case. Thus the third person, and not the attorney, can become the witness if the matter is contested at trial.

Ø Note: If a prosecutor becomes a voluntary witness in a case that he or she is prosecuting, that may cause reversal. People v Donaldson (2001) 93 CA4th 916, 927, 113 CR2d 548.

Only in extraordinary circumstances should an attorney in an action be called as a witness by the opposing attorney. Before the attorney is called as a witness, the opposing side must demonstrate that there is no other source for the evidence sought. People v Garcia (2000) 84 CA4th 316, 332, 100 CR2d 789.

§2.19 VIII. DUTY TO KEEP CLIENT INFORMED

Attorneys have an ethical duty to keep clients reasonably informed about "significant" developments in their cases and to respond promptly to reasonable requests for information. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-500; Bus & P C §6068(m). The Discussion to Rule 3-500 states that an attorney will not be disciplined for failing to communicate insignificant or irrelevant information. "Significant" is left undefined.

Defense counsel should contact clients about their cases in any of the following situations:

- The date of the defendant's next court appearance was set when the defendant was not present;
- A bench warrant issued because of the defendant's failure to appear;
- A motion was decided in the defendant's absence;
- The defense investigator is unable to find witnesses, and the defendant may know their whereabouts.

Ø Note: A separate rule requires that attorneys promptly communicate to the client all terms and conditions of any offer, written or oral, made in a criminal matter. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-510(A)(1).

IX. DUTY TO PROVIDE EFFECTIVE REPRESENTATION

§2.20 A. Obligations and Standards for Effective Representation

Necessary learning and skill to take case. An attorney who lacks the necessary learning and skill to represent a defendant in a particular case has several choices: decline representation; associate with another attorney reasonably believed to be competent; or acquire sufficient learning and skill before performance is required, if the attorney has sufficient time, resources, and the ability to do so. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110(C).

Proper supervision of others working on case. An attorney who represents a client is required to supervise the work of subordinate attorneys and nonattorney employees and agents, including law clerks and secretarial staff. See Discussion to Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110.

Participating in guilty plea when defendant denies guilt. For discussion of this issue, see §26.43.

Ineffective assistance of counsel (IAC). To sustain a claim of IAC, a court must determine that counsel's performance fell "below an objective standard of reasonableness… under prevailing professional norms" (People v Ledesma (1987) 43 C3d 171, 216, 233 CR 404, quoting Strickland v Washington (1984) 466 US 668, 688, 80 L Ed 2d 674, 693, 104 S Ct 2052), and that a reasonable probability exists that "but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different" (People v Ledesma (1987) 43 C3d 171, 218, 233 CR 404, quoting Strickland v Washington (1984) 466 US 668, 693, 80 L Ed 2d 674, 698, 104 S Ct 2052).

Duty to investigate. A common ground for IAC claims is failure to adequately investigate the case. The defense attorney must explore all potentially meritorious defenses before making a tactical choice about what defense (if any) to present. In re Cordero (1988) 46 C3d 161, 181 n8, 249 CR 342. See also Riley v Payne (9th Cir 2003) 352 F3d 1313, 1321 (prejudicial IAC when trial attorney failed to interview key witness who would have testified that victim angrily threatened to shoot defendant who pleaded self-defense).

Notice to State Bar of IAC. An attorney must report himself or herself to the State Bar of California when reversal of a judgment is based in whole or in part on the attorney's misconduct, grossly incompetent representation, or willful misrepresentation. Bus & P C §6068(o)(7). The court must also notify the State Bar whenever a modification or reversal of a judgment in a judicial proceeding is based in whole or in part on the misconduct, incompetent representation, or willful misrepresentation of an attorney. Bus & P C §6086.7(b). The State Bar shall investigate these matters to evaluate the appropriateness of initiating disciplinary action against the attorney. Bus & P C §6086.7.

Withdrawing from representation. Defense counsel may not withdraw from representation in a filed case without the court's consent and notice to the client. Read v State Bar (1991) 53 C3d 394, 412, 279 CR 818; Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(A). Abandonment of a client warrants attorney discipline. Borre v State Bar (1991) 52 C3d 1047, 1053, 277 CR 864. Defense counsel must also take reasonable steps to avoid any prejudice to the client, e.g., counsel shall notify the client in time for the client to secure new counsel before the next court appearance. Counsel must release to the client, or the client's new attorney, all client papers regardless of whether the attorney has been paid for his or her services (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(D); San Diego Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion Nos. 2000-1, 1984-3; San Francisco Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 1990-1; LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 509 (2002)) and must refund any unearned fee (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(D)(2)).

Duty to assist on appeal. Appointed trial counsel has the duty to execute and file a timely notice of appeal in the following circumstances (Pen C §1240.1):

- When requested to do so by the client; or
- When counsel is of the opinion that arguably meritorious grounds exist for reversal or modification of the judgment or orders to be appealed from when in counsel's judgment it is in the client's interest to pursue such relief as may be available on appeal.

Retained trial counsel has a duty to either file a notice of appeal or instruct the client on the proper procedure to do so or to see that the client has counsel to do these things for him or her. People v Diehl (1964) 62 C2d 114, 118, 41 CR 281.

Counsel must also turn over to the client or to successor counsel written materials, e.g., pleadings, reports, and correspondence, generated during the representation. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1992-127. Former counsel must also provide the client or successor counsel with information not reduced to writing if failure to provide that information might result in prejudice to the client. Formal Opinion No. 1992-127. For further discussion of trial counsel's obligations to clients on appeal, see Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases §§2.3-2.11 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

§2.21 B. Examples of Representation Challenged as Ineffective

The following cases are examples of ineffective assistance of counsel (IAC):

- Inadequate investigation. In re Marquez (1992) 1 C4th 584, 596, 3 CR2d 727 (attorney did not interview important potential witnesses, including alibi witnesses in Mexico for one of the murders; not all witnesses interviewed were subpoenaed for trial; new penalty trial ordered); In re Edward S. (2009) 173 CA4th 387, 407, 92 CR3d 725 (public defender's failure to investigate potentially exculpatory evidence not excused by caseload).
- Failure to object to amendment of information adding new charge after defendant waived preliminary hearing. People v Peyton (2009) 176 CA4th 642, 652, 98 CR3d 243.
- Failure to move to suppress evidence. People v Ledesma (1987) 43 C3d 171, 233 CR 404 (one of grounds for finding IAC).
- No investigation for penalty phase, and no presentation of evidence. See, e.g., In re Lucas (2004) 33 C4th 682, 721, 16 CR3d 331 (counsel overlooked substantial evidence of childhood abuse and presented no mitigating evidence at penalty phase).
- Failure to object to inadmissible evidence. People v Ledesma, supra (other grounds for IAC as well); People v Stratton (1988) 205 CA3d 87, 252 CR 157.
- Failure to investigate or object to use of prior. People v Marquez (1986) 188 CA3d 363, 232 CR 577 (defense counsel failed to object to prior conviction for sale of heroin in present sale of heroin case).
- Attorney on inactive status while representing client. In re Johnson (1992) 1 C4th 689, 4 CR2d 170 (IAC reversal); People v Barillas (1996) 45 CA4th 1233, 53 CR2d 418 (conviction affirmed: no IAC). But see People v Ngo (1996) 14 C4th 30, 38, 57 CR2d 456 (involuntary enrollment of attorney to inactive status for MCLE noncompliance does not, in itself, amount to IAC).
- Representation by attorney after resignation with State Bar charges pending. People v Vigil (2008) 169 CA4th 8, 86 CR3d 528 (error is reversible per se).
- Failure to tell defendant correct sentencing exposure. In re Alvernaz (1992) 2 C4th 924, 8 CR2d 713 (defendant rejected offer of 5 years because defense counsel said defendant could only serve maximum 8-year sentence; defendant found guilty and received greater sentence; while conviction not reversed because defendant received fair trial, writ of habeas corpus was subsequently granted in Alvernaz v Ratelle (SD Cal 1993) 831 F Supp 790). But see Sophanthavong v Palmateer (9th Cir 2004) 378 F3d 859, 868 ("mere inaccurate prediction" about applicability of sentencing statute that did not amount to "gross mischaracterization of the likely outcome" was not IAC).
- Failure to file opening brief within time allowed, resulting in dismissal of appeal. In re Grunau (2008) 169 CA4th 997, 1003, 86 CR3d 908.
- Failure to file a notice of appeal when one is requested by defendant. Roe v Flores-Ortega (2000) 528 US 470, 477, 145 L Ed 2d 985, 120 S Ct 1029; U.S. v Sandoval-Lopez (9th Cir 2005) 409 F3d 1193, 1197.

Ineffective counsel claims may be denied when the record shows that the omission or error resulted from an informed tactical choice within the range of reasonable competence. People v Bunyard (1988) 45 C3d 1189, 1215, 249 CR 71.

§2.22 X. DUTY TO MAINTAIN CLIENT'S CONFIDENCES AND SECRETS

Business and Professions Code §6068(e)(1) requires a California attorney to "maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve the secrets, of his or her client." The principle of client confidence encompasses, but is broader than, the attorney-client privilege. LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 436 (1985).

The duty to maintain confidence and secrets attaches when an individual consults with the attorney, even when no legal representation results. People v Gionis (1995) 9 C4th 1196, 1208, 40 CR2d 456; California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 2003-161; LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 506 (2001). The same duty outlasts the attorney's employment. People v Singh (1932) 123 CA 365, 368, 11 P2d 73; LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 389 (1981).

An exception to the nondisclosure rule is that when a client challenges an attorney's effectiveness, the attorney may reveal client confidential information to the extent it is placed in issue by the client's claim of incompetence of counsel. In re Gray (1981) 123 CA3d 614, 176 CR 721.

Confidential communications between attorney and client as they relate to a completed crime may not be disclosed. People v Singh, supra. See California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1986-89. Minimum disclosures of completed crimes may be allowed, however, as necessary, to protect an attorney from criminal liability based on client conduct. LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 329 (1972).

Business and Professions Code §6068(e)(2) and Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-100 permit, but do not require, an attorney to disclose confidential information when the attorney reasonably believes disclosure is necessary to prevent a crime that the attorney reasonably believes is likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm to an individual.

If it is reasonable under the circumstances, before revealing confidential information, the attorney must try to persuade the client:

- Not to commit the crime; and/or
- To make an effort to prevent the threatened injury or death; and
- At "an appropriate time," tell the client of the attorney's ability or decision to reveal the information.

Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-100(C). Disclosure should be limited to that which is necessary to prevent the criminal act. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-100(D). However, an attorney's decision not to reveal such information is not a violation of the rule. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-100(E). Information disclosed in these circumstances is not privileged. See Evid C §956.5.

Although no case has addressed a lawyer's civil liability for failure to warn potential victims, in Tarasoff v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 C3d 425, 131 CR 14, the California Supreme Court held that, when a psychotherapist knows or reasonably should know that a patient presents a serious danger of violence to others, the therapist must use reasonable care to protect the intended victim by warnings or other appropriate conduct.

If the attorney does decide to disclose that the client intends to commit a future crime, counsel should not reveal the client's commission of past crimes or wrongdoing. See LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 414 (1983).

When defense counsel maintains that he or she must withdraw from representation because of a disabling conflict involving privileged communications, and once the trial court accepts that statement, it may neither deny the motion to withdraw nor condition withdrawal on divulgence of the facts underlying the conflict. Aceves v Superior Court (1996) 51 CA4th 584, 587, 596, 59 CR2d 280.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.22A XI. DUTY TO RETAIN FORMER CLIENT'S FILES

"Files relating to criminal matters may well have future vitality even after judgment, sentence and statutory appeals have concluded. In criminal matters, the attorney cannot foresee the future utility of information contained in the file. [Therefore] it is incumbent on the attorney in a criminal matter to obtain some specific written instruction from the client authorizing the destruction of the file. Absent such written instruction, the attorney should not undertake the destruction of client files on the attorney's initiative." LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 420 (1983). Client files in criminal cases should not be destroyed without the former client's express consent while the former client is alive. See California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 2001-157.

© The Regents of the University of California

XII. DUTY TO COMPLY AND TO ADVISE COMPLIANCE WITH LAW

§2.23 A. Assisting in Violation of Rules of Professional Conduct

An attorney cannot advise the violation of any law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal unless the attorney believes in good faith that the law, rule, or ruling is invalid. The attorney may, however, take appropriate good faith steps to test the validity of any law, rule, or ruling. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-210.

It is a separate violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct to knowingly assist in, solicit, or induce any violation of the California Rules of Professional Conduct or the State Bar Act (Bus & P C §§6000-6238). Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-120.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.24 B. Counseling Commission of Crime

An attorney must not counsel or assist a client in committing a crime or fraud. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-210. Information exchanged between the attorney and client in furtherance of crime or fraud is not privileged. Evid C §956; see Evid C §956.5. Similarly, attorney work product undertaken in furtherance of a crime or fraud is subject to disclosure during an investigation into the criminal conduct of an attorney. CCP §2018.050.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.25 C. Conditioning Return of Stolen Property on Agreement Not to Prosecute

Not only is it ethically improper, it is also a violation of law and against public policy to try to condition return of stolen property on the victim's agreement not to prosecute. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1986-89; People v Pic'l (1982) 31 C3d 731, 183 CR 685.

Ø Note: Penal Code §§1377-1379 do permit civil compromise of actions in certain circumstances when the provisions of those sections are followed by the parties and sanctioned by the court. See discussion in §§25.5-25.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.26 D. Suppressing, Concealing, Destroying, or Removing Evidence

Destruction, alteration, or concealment of evidence may be a crime as well as the basis for attorney discipline. Pen C §§134-135; Price v State Bar (1982) 30 C3d 537, 179 CR 914. In addition, attorneys are prohibited from suppressing evidence that the attorney or client has a legal obligation to reveal or produce. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-220. Therefore, both prosecution and defense attorneys must comply with discovery requirements under Pen C §§1054-1054.10, and prosecutors must further comply with constitutionally mandated discovery. For discussion of discovery, see chap 11.

Neither the attorney-client privilege nor the duty to preserve a client's confidences and secrets authorizes an attorney to conceal physical evidence of a crime received from the client or from anyone else. People v Meredith (1981) 29 C3d 682, 175 CR 612; People v Superior Court (Fairbank) (1987) 192 CA3d 32, 237 CR 158; People v Lee (1970) 3 CA3d 514, 526, 83 CR 715. If an attorney or the attorney's agent comes into possession of, or removes or alters, physical evidence pertaining to a crime, the attorney must immediately inform the court if a case has been filed and, in any event, must provide the evidence to the prosecution. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1986-89; LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 466 (1993). In offering that evidence to a jury, the prosecution should present it in a manner that avoids revealing the content of attorney-client communications or the original source of the information. The prosecution may not reject a stipulation offered by the defense that simply informs the jury of the relevant location or condition of the evidence in question. People v Meredith (1981) 29 C3d 682, 695 n8, 175 CR 612.

When a client raises the possibility of defense counsel's taking possession of evidence, defense counsel should inform the client of the attorney's obligation to turn over the evidence to the prosecution once attorney possession is acquired. Defense counsel must question the consequences of taking possession of such evidence. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1984-76.

A defense attorney who merely observes physical evidence, without moving or altering it, is not compelled to disclose its existence. People v Meredith (1981) 29 C3d 682, 695, 175 CR 612.

> Ø Note: When an attorney inadvertently receives discovery materials from opposing counsel that are protected by either the attorney-client or work product privilege, the attorney should review the materials only to the extent needed to determine that they are privileged and then must notify the other party of the disclosure. Rico v Mitsubishi Motors Corp. (2007) 42 C4th 807, 817, 68 CR3d 758. The parties can then agree how to resolve the issue or seek guidance from the court, including the issuance of a protective order.

§2.27 E. Interfering With Witnesses; Paying Witnesses

Attorneys, as members of the general public, are prohibited by various statutes from interfering with victims and witnesses in criminal proceedings. It is a crime for anyone to attempt to prevent or dissuade a victim or witness from reporting a crime to law enforcement or from prosecuting the case. Pen C §136.1(b). It is a crime for anyone to knowingly and maliciously prevent or dissuade or to attempt to prevent or dissuade a witness or victim from testifying. Pen C §136.1(a). In addition, it is an ethical violation for an attorney directly or indirectly to cause a person to hide, or to leave the jurisdiction, in order to become unavailable as a witness. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(A). A prosecutor's substantial interference with a defense witness's choice to testify also may amount to a violation of the defendant's due process rights. See, e.g., People v Bryant (1984) 157 CA3d 582, 203 CR 733.

Attorneys are prohibited from paying or offering to pay witnesses contingent on the content of their testimony or the outcome of the case. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(B). An attorney may, however, pay a witness's expenses, may provide compensation for loss of time reasonably incurred in testifying, and may pay an expert witness fees for professional services.

§2.28 F. Making False Representations and Presenting False Evidence in Court

It is unethical for an attorney to mislead or lie to the court. Bus & P C §6068(d); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200(B); Di Sabatino v State Bar (1980) 27 C3d 159, 162 CR 458 (defense attorney disciplined for failing to disclose that he had made two previous unsuccessful bail motions in that case).

It is a felony to prepare a false or antedated book, paper, record, instrument in writing, or other matter with the intent that it will be introduced for a fraudulent or deceitful purpose at a trial, or at a legal proceeding or inquiry. Pen C §134. It is also a felony to knowingly offer in evidence as genuine or true a forged or fraudulently altered or antedated book, paper, document, record, or other writing. Pen C §132.

It is a misdemeanor to knowingly exhibit a false statement, representation, token, or writing to a witness or to a person about to be called as a witness with the intent of affecting the witness's testimony. Pen C §133. It is also a misdemeanor to practice any fraud or deceit with the intent of affecting a witness's testimony. Pen C §133.

Defense counsel should not volunteer information about a client's prior convictions to correct a trial judge's mistaken information about them. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1986-87. However, counsel cannot mislead the court by affirmative misrepresentation or silence that appears to be relied on by the court as an affirmation that there is no such record. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1986-87. See Bus & P C §6068(d); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200(B). To avoid revealing priors disclosed by the client, which would violate the duty to preserve client confidences and secrets (Bus & P C §6068(e)), Formal Opinion No. 1986-87 recommends that counsel deflect the question to the prosecutor or inform the court that silence is not intended as an affirmation and it is not appropriate for the attorney to comment further.

Orange County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 94-003 discusses the ethical obligation of a prosecutor in a contested matter to apprise the court of factual information the prosecutor has that may be adverse to the position of his or her client, such as when a prosecutor fails to inform an administrative judge, in response to an inquiry, that the defendant is not present at a hearing because he is being arraigned on a related criminal charge.

§2.29 XIII. ATTORNEYS WHO ARE UNABLE TO PROCEED

Attorneys may be ordered by the trial court to proceed in a case when they are unprepared. Defense counsel's first obligation is to the client. If counsel cannot provide effective assistance to the client because of inadequate preparation, counsel should answer "not ready for trial" and seek a continuance or move to withdraw from the case, depending on the circumstances. The trial court may then appoint another attorney. If the trial court will not permit a continuance or withdrawal, counsel must decide either to refuse to proceed, risking contempt and disciplinary proceedings, or to participate, depriving the defendant of effective assistance of counsel. See In re Edward S. (2009) 173 CA4th 387, 413, 92 CR3d 725 (public defender with an "excessive caseload" that undermines ability to adequately represent clients should move to withdraw from a number of cases so adequate representation can be provided); Hughes v Superior Court (1980) 106 CA3d 1, 4, 164 CR 721 (public defender held in contempt for refusing to go to trial because unprepared; appellate court granted public defender writ relief based on facts). When a trial court proceeds even after counsel has announced that he or she is unable to participate, a subsequent conviction may be reversed. People v Locklar (1978) 84 CA3d 224, 148 CR 322 (defendant's assigned public defender was ill, and trial court forced another public defender who knew nothing of case to participate in jury selection; that public defender sat silently through voir dire; conviction reversed). When it appears that the court will require counsel to proceed, it is important for subsequent appellate review to make as complete a record as possible of the factors relevant to the prejudice to the defendant in requiring counsel to proceed to trial.

Having sufficient time to prepare one's own case is best addressed when counsel appears in court and sets the case for pretrial hearings and trial. It is unethical for counsel to set a case for trial at a time that the attorney knows he or she will not be ready to proceed. See Bus & P C §6068(d). Adequate preparation is ethically required by Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110(A).

See §§19.21 on appointed counsel's obligation to be ready to proceed, 20.14-20.16 for additional discussion of the issue of unpreparedness, and 20.13 on the inability to appear.

XIV. PERJURY BY CLIENT OR WITNESS

A criminal defendant has a constitutional right to testify. See Harris v New York (1971) 401 US 222, 225, 28 L Ed 2d 1, 4, 91 S Ct 643. In addition, a criminal defendant has a constitutional right to effective representation by defense counsel (Strickland v Washington (1984) 466 US 668, 693, 80 L Ed 2d 674, 104 S Ct 2052), and counsel has a corresponding duty to provide zealous representation within the bounds of the law (Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 126, 116 CR 713). Criminal defense attorneys, like other lawyers, have an affirmative obligation to employ "those means only as are consistent with truth and never to seek to mislead the judge … by an artifice or false statement of fact or law." Bus & P C §6068(d); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200(B). This obligation encompasses an ethical duty not to "cooperate with planned perjury." Nix v Whiteside (1986) 475 US 157, 173, 89 L Ed 2d 123, 138, 106 S Ct 988; see People v Riel (2000) 22 C4th 1153, 1217, 96 CR2d 1.

In criminal cases, there is an apparent conflict between these duties when the defendant proposes to exercise his or her right to testify and defense counsel knows that the testimony will be false. Although defense counsel is ethically barred from affirmatively assisting the client to present testimony the attorney knows to be false, absent an admission by the client of an intent to testify falsely, a defense attorney must protect a defendant's right to testify, and assist in the presentation of the defendant's testimony. See Orange County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 2003-01.

When an attorney knows that the client intends to commit perjury, counsel should advise the client that there is no right to commit perjury (Nix v Whiteside (1986) 475 US 157, 173, 89 L Ed 2d 123, 138, 106 S Ct 988) and that giving false testimony could subject the defendant to prosecution. See Pen C §118. Counsel should also explain that if the client insists on offering perjured testimony, counsel will not participate in the testimony and will not argue it to the court or to the jury. See People v Guzman (1988) 45 C3d 915, 941, 248 CR 467, overruled on other grounds in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069 n13, 108 CR2d 409.

If the client insists on testifying despite these advisements, it is appropriate for counsel to ask the court for permission to withdraw from the case. People v Brown (1988) 203 CA3d 1335, 1339, 250 CR 762. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(C)(1). Counsel could truthfully describe the reason for the request as an irreconcilable conflict. There is no requirement in California for counsel to disclose the reason for the request to withdraw on the basis of privileged information. Aceves v Superior Court (1996) 51 CA4th 584, 59 CR2d 280. The prosecutor should be excluded from this proceeding. The trial court may properly grant or deny the motion to withdraw. People v Brown, supra. However, the court and counsel should be aware that allowing the attorney to withdraw may create more problems than it solves. See, e.g., People v Bolton (2008) 166 CA4th 343, 356, 82 CR3d 671 (permitting withdrawal 4 days before trial had to begin resulted in conflict between rights to speedy trial and effective assistance of counsel).

A defense attorney who is not permitted to withdraw may make a record, outside the jury's presence, that the defendant is taking the stand against counsel's advice and that the "free narrative" approach will be used during direct examination. People v Guzman, supra; People v Bolton (2008) 166 CA4th 343, 358, 82 CR3d 671; People v Johnson (1998) 62 CA4th 608, 72 CR2d 805. On direct examination, defense counsel should not ask the defendant any specific questions that might elicit perjury (People v Guzman, supra), which usually means that defense counsel asks defendant's name and other identifying information and then asks the defendant to give his or her testimony as a narrative statement. Defense counsel should omit from final argument any reference to the perjured testimony. Guzman, 45 C3d at 944 n8. This procedure has been held not to be a forced waiver of defendant's right to counsel, a denial of effective assistance of counsel, or a denial of the defendant's right to a fair trial. Guzman, 45 C3d at 941. See also People v Jennings (1999) 70 CA4th 899, 83 CR2d 33.

An attorney who learns that the client has committed perjury must keep that information confidential. LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion Nos. 305 (1968), 386 (1980).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.31 B. Witness's False Testimony

An attorney may not knowingly allow a witness to testify falsely. In re Branch (1969) 70 C2d 200, 210, 74 CR 238. See Bus & P C §6068(d). A defendant convicted on the basis of false testimony has been denied due process of law. Napue v Illinois (1959) 360 US 264, 269, 3 L Ed 2d 1217, 1221, 79 S Ct 1173.

Furthermore, when the state offers testimony in good faith that it later discovers to be false, it must disclose and correct the evidence. Napue v Illinois, supra. For example, in U.S. v Alli (9th Cir 2003) 344 F3d 1002, 1007, the Ninth Circuit held that the government had an independent obligation to immediately take steps to correct its witnesses' known misstatements. This obligation was incurred even though the government did not solicit the false testimony, which went only to the credibility of the witness. When the prosecution fails to correct testimony of a prosecution witness that it knows or should know is false and misleading, reversal is required if there is any reasonable likelihood the false testimony could have affected the judgment of the jury. See People v Dickey (2005) 35 C4th 884, 909, 28 CR3d 647.

Both prosecutors and defense attorneys should be careful when jailhouse informants are involved because of the likelihood of fabrication. See §17.14.

XV. MATTERS CONCERNING JUDGES

§2.32 A. Improper Communications With Judges

It is improper for an attorney, in the absence of opposing counsel, to communicate directly or indirectly with a judge or judicial officer on the merits of a contested matter pending before that officer except with opposing counsel's consent. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-300(B). See People v Hundal (2008) 168 CA4th 965, 970, 86 CR3d 166 (prosecutor's note to judge regarding defense attorney's State Bar suspension was "technical violation" of Rule 5-300(B)). An exception is made for matters legally allowed to be handled ex parte. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-300(B)(5); Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(7)(d). "Judicial officer" as used in Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-300 includes law clerks, research attorneys, and other court personnel who participate in the decision-making process (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-300(C)).

Documents filed with the court must be provided to opposing counsel. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-300(B)(4); Heavey v State Bar (1976) 17 C3d 553, 558, 131 CR 406.

An attorney cannot communicate ex parte with a trial judge on the merits of a contested matter decided by the judge and on review to a higher court if the matter may come again before the same judge. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1984-78.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.33 B. Gifts and Campaign Contributions to Judges

An attorney cannot give or lend anything of value to a judge, directly or indirectly, unless the personal or family relationship between the attorney and judge is such that gifts are customarily given and exchanged. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-300(A).

An attorney may contribute to a campaign fund for a judge running for election or re-election. The payment must be made to the judge's campaign committee and not to the judge personally. LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 387 (1981).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.34 C. Comments Regarding Judges and Judicial Rulings

Although attorneys have a duty to treat courts and judicial officers with respect (Bus & P C §6068(b)), they do have the right to comment appropriately on judges and judicial rulings. See Standing Comm. on Discipline v Yagman (9th Cir 1995) 55 F3d 1430, 1438; San Diego Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 1974-8.

§2.35 XVI. IMPROPER CONTACTS WITH REPRESENTED PARTY

An attorney may not communicate directly or indirectly with a party whom the attorney knows to be represented by another lawyer about the subject of the representation without that other lawyer's consent. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-100. The "subject of the representation," "matter," and "party" are not limited to a litigation context. See Discussion to Rule 2-100.

There is authority that permits a prosecutor to contact, ex parte and without attorney consent, a represented suspect and speak about the subject of the representation during investigation and before case filing, but not thereafter. U.S. v Powe (9th Cir 1993) 9 F3d 68; U.S. v Lopez (9th Cir 1993) 4 F3d 1455, 1461 (beginning at latest on moment of indictment, prosecutor has duty under Rule 2-100 to refrain from communicating ex parte with represented defendant); 75 Ops Cal Atty Gen 223 (1992) (during investigative phase of criminal or civil law enforcement proceeding, before formal charges have been filed, Rule 2-100 does not prohibit prosecutor from communicating ex parte with person known to be represented concerning subject of representation). There is also authority that when, prior to filing, the prosecution and defense have taken "adversarial positions, ex parte contact with a knowingly represented client, absent the consent of the client's attorney, is not permitted." U.S. v Talao (9th Cir 2000) 222 F3d 1133, 1139.

Kain v Municipal Court (1982) 130 CA3d 499, 181 CR 751, states that victims of crime are not parties within the meaning of the predecessor to Rule 2-100 (former Rule 7-103), and that an attorney is not prevented from interviewing a victim ex parte. However, a victim may refuse an interview request by the defense and set reasonable conditions for any interview to which he or she consents. Cal Const art I, §28(b)(5). Concerning ex parte and unconsented-to contacts with current employees of a represented corporation or association, see U.S. v Talao (9th Cir 2000) 222 F3d 1133, 1138; La Jolla Cove Motel & Hotel Apartments, Inc. v Superior Court (2004) 121 CA4th 773, 776, 17 CR3d 467; Snider v Superior Court (2003) 113 CA4th 1187, 7 CR3d 119; Truitt v Superior Court (1997) 59 CA4th 1183, 69 CR2d 558; Jorgensen v Taco Bell Corp. (1996) 50 CA4th 1398, 58 CR2d 178. Rule 2-100 does not apply to former employees of a corporation or association. Triple A Mach. Shop, Inc. v State (1989) 213 CA3d 131, 261 CR 493.

The Review Department of the California State Bar Court has opined that a represented criminal defendant is not a "party" within the meaning of Rule 2-100 for purposes of an unconsented-to ex parte interview by an attorney representing a party in a distinct civil proceeding in which the criminal defendant is merely a witness. See In re Dale (2005) 4 Cal St Bar Ct Rptr 798, 2005 WL 1389226.

> Ø Note: Especially in light of Dale, it is advisable that an attorney representing a client suspected or charged with a crime instruct the client not to talk to anyone about his or her matter without the attorney's prior consent.

Witnesses. A party seeking to interview a witness disclosed by the opposing party must first identity himself or herself including "the full name of the agency by whom he or she is employed, and identifying whether he or she represents, or has been retained by, the prosecution or the defendant." If the interview is in person, the party must also show the witness a business card, official badge, or other form of official identification before beginning the interview. Pen C §1054.8.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.36 XVII. IMPROPER CONTACTS WITH JURORS

An attorney connected with a case may not communicate directly or indirectly with jurors, potential jurors, or their family members while a case is pending except in the course of official proceedings before the judge and with opposing counsel present. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320. During trial, no attorney, whether or not connected with the case, may communicate directly or indirectly with a juror or juror's family about the case. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320(C), (F). An improper attempt to influence a juror with respect to a verdict is a felony. Pen C §95.

An attorney should make every effort to avoid contact with jurors outside of official proceedings. In re Possino (1984) 37 C3d 163, 170, 207 CR 543. An attorney who is approached by a juror should politely inform the juror that any conversation is improper. The attorney should then advise the court, with opposing counsel present, of the nature and extent of the juror's contact, thereby allaying any suggestion of improper conduct by the attorney.

An attorney should inform the client and, when necessary, the client's family, friends, and witnesses to stay away from jurors and prospective jurors, and to immediately report to the attorney any contact by a juror or prospective juror. All attorneys, whether or not involved in a case, must promptly reveal to the court improper conduct by a juror or member of the venire, or improper conduct of another toward a juror, member of the venire, or member of the juror's family. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320(G).

It is improper for an attorney to communicate with a juror who has been removed from an impaneled jury, regardless of whether notice is given to other counsel, until the entire jury has been discharged from further service. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320(I); California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1988-100.

Once the entire jury has been discharged, communication with discharged jurors is permitted as long as the attorney does not intend to harass or embarrass the discharged jurors, or intend to influence their state of mind or actions regarding future jury service. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320(D). An attorney may disclose to discharged jurors evidence that was excluded at trial as long as in doing so the attorney does not intend to harass, embarrass, or influence the discharged jurors in future jury service. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1987-95 (overruling California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1976-39).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.37 XVIII. PRETRIAL AND TRIAL PUBLICITY

An attorney may be subject to discipline for statements made by the attorney to the media. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-120. This rule prohibits extrajudicial statements a reasonable person would expect to be disseminated by means of public communication when the attorney knows or reasonably should know the statement will have a "substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing an adjudicative proceeding in the matter." Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-120(A).

Rule 5-120 provides for limited exceptions to this prohibition. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-120(B)-(C).

The "substantial likelihood" test has been upheld against constitutional attack. Gentile v State Bar (1991) 501 US 1030, 115 L Ed 2d 888, 111 S Ct 2720. Rule 5-120 applies equally to prosecutors and criminal defense counsel. See Discussion to Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-120.

The trial court has a duty to restrict prejudicial publicity. Sheppard v Maxwell (1966) 384 US 333, 361, 16 L Ed 2d 600, 86 S Ct 1507.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.38 XIX. TRIAL CONDUCT

Attorneys should be respectful of the court. Bus & P C §6068(b). Attorneys may not seek to mislead a judge or jury by an artifice or a false statement of fact or law. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200(B); Bus & P C §6068(d). Attorneys may not intentionally misquote to the court the language of a book, statute, or decision (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200(C)), nor knowingly cite a case that has been overruled or a statute that has been repealed or declared unconstitutional (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200(D)). An attorney may not assert personal knowledge of the facts at issue unless properly testifying as a witness. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200(E).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.39 XX. RESPONDING TO SUBPOENA OF CLIENT'S RECORDS

If counsel is served with a subpoena duces tecum for a client's records, counsel must assert both the attorney-client privilege and the duty of confidentiality. Evid C §§950-962 (attorney-client privilege); Bus & P C §6068(e) (ethical duty to maintain client's confidences and secrets). These objections are usually made through a motion to quash. On procedures for quashing subpoenas, see §§4.32-4.35.

XXI. PROSECUTOR'S SPECIAL PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITIES

§2.40 A. When Prosecutor Personally Believes Defendant to Be Innocent

A prosecutor should never file a criminal charge or prosecute a case when the prosecutor personally believes the defendant to be innocent. Berger v U.S. (1935) 295 US 78, 88, 79 L Ed 1314, 55 S Ct 629. Under such circumstances, the prosecution should be terminated or the matter reassigned to a prosecutor who believes that the defendant committed the charged criminal offense. See §2.41.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.41 B. Duty When Charges Not Supported by Probable Cause

A prosecutor should not file criminal charges that are not supported by probable cause. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-110. If, after filing, the attorney responsible for prosecuting the charges personally comes to believe that the charges are not supported by probable cause, the attorney must personally inform the court in which the case is pending. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-110. If a prosecutor moves the court to dismiss a case because he or she personally believes there is insufficient probable cause to support the charges, accompanied by a full presentation of the reasons for making the motion, and the court denies the motion, the prosecutor may continue to prosecute the case. LA County Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 429 (1984). It would be advisable, however, to immediately discuss the case with other members of the prosecution office, who could, if necessary, prosecute the case or otherwise provide assistance.

On limitations on the prosecution's charging discretion, see §7.14. On abuse of prosecutorial discretion (discriminatory prosecution) and retaliatory prosecution, see §§18.16-18.25, 18.32-18.37.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.42 C. Threatening Criminal, Administrative, or Disciplinary Charges

An attorney cannot threaten to bring criminal, administrative, or disciplinary charges to obtain an advantage in a civil dispute. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-100. Rule 5-100 applies before and after the formal filing of a civil action. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-100(C). The Rule does not apply to an attorney's threat to initiate contempt proceedings against a party for failure to comply with a court order. See Discussion to Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-100.

Rule 5-100 occurs in two contexts in criminal cases. First, some prosecution offices not only prosecute criminally but also file civil actions, e.g., unfair competition under Bus & P C §§17200-17210. It is clearly improper to threaten criminal prosecution in an attempt to obtain a favorable civil settlement. San Francisco Bar Ass'n Formal Opinion No. 1975-6. However, California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1991-124 provides that it is not ethically improper, in a private civil context, to send a letter stating that all available legal remedies will be pursued unless satisfactory settlement is promptly forthcoming. It therefore follows that a prospective litigant may be told of possible criminal and civil consequences of litigation as long as no threat of criminal prosecution is made to obtain an advantage in the civil matter. Nothing prevents the governmental agency from proceeding both criminally and civilly against a named defendant.

The second context involving Rule 5-100 occurs when a police agency requests a prosecutor to plea bargain or dismiss a criminal prosecution conditioned on a release from civil liability whereby the defendant is required to stipulate that there was probable cause for his or her arrest, thus attempting to release the police agency from potential civil liability. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1989-106 states that this practice is unethical. Also, because the prosecutor does not represent the police agency, any such negotiations involving police civil liability are best left to the agency's legal representative.

§2.43 D. Duty to Disclose Exculpatory Evidence

The prosecutor must disclose to the defense exculpatory evidence even without a request. Brady v Maryland (1963) 373 US 83, 87, 10 L Ed 2d 215, 219, 83 S Ct 1194. See also U.S. v Bagley (1985) 473 US 667, 87 L Ed 2d 481, 105 S Ct 3375; U.S. v Agurs (1976) 427 US 97, 107, 49 L Ed 2d 342, 352, 96 S Ct 2392; Giglio v U.S. (1972) 405 US 150, 154, 31 L Ed 2d 104, 108, 92 S Ct 763. The duty to disclose evidence favorable to the accused extends to evidence that may reflect on the credibility of a material witness. People v Ruthford (1975) 14 C3d 399, 406, 121 CR 261, overruled on other grounds in In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 545, 37 CR2d 446. The prosecution's duty of disclosure extends to all material evidence or material information that is favorable to the accused, and is in the possession of the prosecutor, investigating law enforcement agency, or other governmental agency that is part of the "prosecution team." In re Brown (1998) 17 C4th 873, 879, 72 CR2d 698; Strickler v Greene (1999) 527 US 263, 144 L Ed 2d 286, 119 S Ct 1936; Kyles v Whitley (1995) 514 US 419, 131 L Ed 2d 490, 115 S Ct 1555. See also Pen C §1054.1. For example, information regarding jailhouse informants must be shared among prosecutors in the same office. Giglio v U.S. (1972) 405 US 150, 154, 31 L Ed 2d 104, 109, 92 S Ct 763.

§2.43A E. Tampering With Official Jury Lists

A prosecutor may not tamper with official jury lists. In Noland v State Bar (1965) 63 C2d 298, 46 CR 305, a prosecutor was suspended from practice for 30 days for counseling and aiding in the unauthorized removal of names of prospective jurors from an official jury list.

§2.44 F. Informing Crime Victims of Possible Civil Remedies

A prosecutor may properly inform a crime victim of civil remedies available against a criminal defendant, even without being consulted about the possibility of civil action, unless the prosecutor's motivation is a desire for publicity or an intent to harass or injure the defendant. California State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1976-40.

§2.45 G. Checklist: Prosecutorial Misconduct

Issues that may constitute prosecutorial misconduct include:

Before Trial

- Discriminatory prosecution. See §§18.16-18.25.
- Vindictive or retaliatory prosecution. See §§18.32-18.37.
- Interference with attorney-client relationship. Boulas v Superior Court (1986) 188 CA3d 422, 429, 233 CR 487.
- Misconduct during grand jury proceedings. See §9.11.
- Denial of discovery of material that is legally required to be disclosed. See chap 11.
- Failure to make good faith effort to keep contact with informer who is material witness. See §17.18.
- Prejudicial statements to the press. See §§2.37, 14.6.
- Breach of plea bargain. See §26.50.
- Unauthorized ex parte communications with judge. See §2.32.

During Trial

- Intentional use of false testimony. See §§2.30-2.31.
- Reference to facts not in record. People v Bolton (1979) 23 C3d 208, 212, 152 CR 141; In re Brian J. (2007) 150 CA4th 97, 123, 58 CR3d 246.
- Eliciting or attempting to elicit inadmissible evidence in defiance of a court order. People v Wallace (2008) 44 C4th 1032, 1070, 81 CR3d 651; People v Crew (2003) 31 C4th 822, 839, 3 CR3d 733.
- Offer of inadmissible evidence. People v Hudson (1981) 126 CA3d 733, 742, 179 CR 95.
- Failure to correct false testimony of prosecution witness. Jackson v Brown (9th Cir 2008) 513 F3d 1057, 1074.
- Comment on defendant's silence after he or she was given Miranda warnings. Doyle v Ohio (1976) 426 US 610, 618, 49 L Ed 2d 91, 96 S Ct 2240.
- Comment on defendant's refusal to participate in police interview. People v Waldie (2009) 173 CA4th 358, 366, 92 CR3d 688.
- Comment on defendant's failure to testify at trial. Griffin v California (1965) 380 US 609, 613, 14 L Ed 2d 106, 85 S Ct 1229.
- Improper cross-examination of defendant. People v Zambrano (2004) 124 CA4th 228, 241, 21 CR3d 160 (prosecutor's questions to defendant whether police officers were lying constituted prosecutorial misconduct). But see People v Tafoya (2007) 42 C4th 147, 177, 64 CR3d 163 (examining when prosecutor may ask defendant "were they lying" questions).
- Stating personal opinion. People v Kirkes (1952) 39 C2d 719, 723, 249 P2d 1; In re Brian J. (2007) 150 CA4th 97, 123, 58 CR3d 246.
- Appeals to passion or prejudice. People v Criscione (1981) 125 CA3d 275, 292, 177 CR 899; People v Zurinaga (2007) 148 CA4th 1248, 1258, 56 CR3d 411 (prosecutor compared defendants' crime to terrorist attacks on 9/11). See also U.S. v Nobari (9th Cir 2009) 574 F3d 1065, 1074 (prosecutor made ethnic generalizations that encouraged jury to convict defendants on basis of their ethnicity).
- Unauthorized ex parte communication with represented defendant in a filed case, or improper communication with judge or jurors. See §§2.32, 2.35-2.36.
- Vouching for the credibility of a witness or otherwise bolstering the witness's credibility by referring to evidence outside the record. People v Alvarado (2006) 141 CA4th 1577, 1584, 47 CR3d 289. But see People v Bonilla (2007) 41 C4th 313, 337, 60 CR3d 209 (prosecutor has wide latitude to give assurances regarding honesty or reliability of prosecution witnesses as long as those assurances are based on facts in record and inferences reasonably drawn from them).

- Coercion of a defense witness or undue interference in a defense witness's decision to testify. See People v Bryant (1984) 157 CA3d 582, 590, 203 CR 733.
- Attacking the integrity of defense counsel or casting aspersions on defense counsel. See People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 832, 72 CR2d 656.
- Arguing that defense counsel had an "obligation" to present evidence. People v Woods (2006) 146 CA4th 106, 113, 53 CR3d 7.
- Misstating the law. People v Katzenberger (2009) 178 CA4th 1260, 1266, 101 CR3d 122 (prosecutor's PowerPoint presentation misrepresented "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard).

§3.1 I. OVERVIEW

Right to counsel. A criminal defendant is entitled to counsel at all crucial stages of the proceeding. US Const amend VI; Cal Const art I, §15. See also Pen C §§686, 859, 987; Gideon v Wainwright (1963) 372 US 335, 9 L Ed 2d 799, 83 S Ct 792. The defendant, however, has only a limited right to have counsel of his or her choice appointed. Harris v Superior Court (1977) 19 C3d 786, 140 CR 318. The right to appointed counsel includes the right to have ancillary defense services paid for at public expense. Corenevsky v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 307, 319, 204 CR 165. See Pen C §987.9 (funds for ancillary services in capital cases). A defendant may choose to waive the right to be represented by counsel and to represent himself or herself as long as the waiver is timely and is knowingly and intelligently made. Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 95 S Ct 2525. Representation by certified law students does not infringe on the right to counsel. People v Perez (1979) 24 C3d 133, 139, 155 CR 176.

Beginning the relationship. The first step in forming the attorney-client relationship is usually the client interview. The interview serves to acquaint the attorney with the circumstances of the case and to inform the client of the scope of the representation, explain the legal proceeding, and set the fee. Fees for retained counsel are usually set on a case-by-case basis rather than at an hourly rate, and are paid in advance. Procedures for setting and collecting fees for appointed counsel vary depending on the county and court in which the work is performed. The attorney should accept the employment, whether retained or appointed, only after determining that he or she is competent to handle the case and that no conflicts of interest exist. See §§2.8-2.16. When the attorney and client have agreed on the terms of employment in a retained case, the agreement should be confirmed by a signed retainer agreement. The attorney becomes attorney of record by filing a pleading or appearing in court on the client's behalf. Once counsel has become attorney of record, legal steps in the proceeding, and particularly tactical decisions, are typically controlled by the attorney. People v Williams (1970) 2 C3d 894, 905, 88 CR 208. The defendant, however, retains the right to decide certain issues affecting his or her fundamental rights. People v Robles (1970) 2 C3d 205, 214, 85 CR 166. See §3.23 on which rights the defendant retains and which are under the attorney's control.

In felony cases, judges may appoint lawyers for indigent defendants only if those lawyers represent on the record that they will be ready to proceed with the preliminary hearing or trial as prescribed in the Penal Code. Pen C §987.05.

Discharge, substitution, and withdrawal of counsel. The procedure for discharge, substitution, and withdrawal of retained counsel in criminal proceedings is the same as that in civil proceedings. People v Bouchard (1957) 49 C2d 438, 317 P2d 971. See CCP §§284-285, 286 (substitution, etc. in civil proceedings). A change of attorney can be accomplished by filing with the court, or entering in the minutes, the consent of both the client and the attorney to the change or, if the attorney and client do not both consent, by court order, on the application of either the client or the attorney. CCP §284. If the defendant refuses to consent to a substitution of counsel, counsel who wishes to withdraw must move for an order allowing withdrawal, citing one of the grounds for withdrawal in Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700. Defendants represented by appointed counsel may not discharge counsel but may ask the court to remove the attorney and appoint new counsel when the defendant's right to effective representation is jeopardized by the existing representation. People v Marsden (1970) 2 C3d 118, 123, 84 CR 156. The trial judge may not summarily deny a Marsden motion but must conduct an inquiry into the circumstances underlying the request. 2 C3d at 124. Although removal of counsel is generally initiated by the defendant or existing counsel, the court may, under severely restricted circumstances, dismiss counsel on its own. People v McKenzie (1983) 34 C3d 616, 630, 194 CR 462.

II. RIGHT TO COUNSEL

§3.2 A. When Right Applies

A criminal defendant is entitled to counsel at all critical stages of a proceeding when his or her substantial rights may be affected. Mempa v Rhay (1967) 389 US 128, 134, 19 L Ed 2d 336, 340, 88 S Ct 254. See US Const amend VI; Cal Const art I, §15. See also Pen C §686. Critical stages of a criminal proceeding include the evidentiary part of trial and these other stages:

- Interrogation before initiation of formal proceedings (Miranda v Arizona (1966) 384 US 436, 16 L Ed 2d 694, 86 S Ct 1602);
- Lineup that is compulsory and conducted by the police (U.S. v Wade (1967) 388 US 218, 18 L Ed 2d 1149, 87 S Ct 1926; Gilbert v California (1967) 388 US 263, 18 L Ed 2d 1178, 87 S Ct 1951 (lineup held after formal charge or indictment); People v Bustamante (1981) 30 C3d 88, 177 CR 576 (lineup held before initiation of formal proceeding));
- Preliminary hearing (Coleman v Alabama (1970) 399 US 1, 7, 26 L Ed 2d 387, 395, 90 S Ct 1999);
- Instructions (People v Dagnino (1978) 80 CA3d 981, 987, 146 CR 129);
- Exhibits requested by jurors during deliberations (People v Price (1991) 1 C4th 324, 414, 3 CR2d 106);
- Sentencing (Mempa v Rhay (1967) 389 US 128, 134, 19 L Ed 2d 336, 340, 88 S Ct 254);
- Probation (Pen C §1203.3(c); see Gagnon v Scarpelli (1973) 411 US 778, 790, 36 L Ed 2d 656, 666, 93 S Ct 1756), and some parole revocation proceedings (In re Love (1974) 11 C3d 179, 182, 113 CR 89); and
- Appeal, at least to the first appellate level in felony cases (Douglas v California (1963) 372 US 353, 9 L Ed 2d 811, 83 S Ct 814) and in misdemeanor cases in which the defendant who was represented by appointed counsel in the trial court or establishes indigency is subject to incarceration or a fine of more than $500 or is likely to suffer adverse collateral consequences as a result of conviction (Cal Rules of Ct 8.851(a)(1)).

Before arraigning a defendant who appears without counsel, the court must advise the defendant that he or she has the right to be represented by retained counsel or to have counsel appointed if the defendant is indigent. Pen C §§859, 987. A defendant's right to counsel also applies to misdemeanor offenses even when the court imposes only a suspended jail sentence. Alabama v Shelton (2002) 535 US 654, 152 L Ed 2d 888, 122 S Ct 1764.

Ø Note: A defendant can lose the right to counsel through serious misconduct, such as violence and threats of violence toward a succession of appointed counsel. See, e.g., King v Superior Court (2003) 107 CA4th 929, 132 CR2d 585; U.S. v Sutcliffe (9th Cir 2007) 505 F3d 944.

When right does not apply. There is no right to counsel in the following situations:

- Filing of a complaint by a police investigator for an arrest warrant (see Anderson v Alameida (9th Cir 2005) 397 F3d 1175, 1180);
- Commencement of extradition proceedings (People v Wheelock (2004) 117 CA4th 561, 569, 11 CR3d 796);
- State habeas proceedings (In re Barnett (2003) 31 C4th 466, 474, 3 CR3d 108); and
- Federal habeas proceedings (Miranda v Castro (9th Cir 2002) 292 F3d 1063, 1068; Miller v Keeney (9th Cir 1989) 882 F2d 1428, 1432) and other postconviction collateral attacks on a federal conviction such as a motion for a new trial (U.S. v Harrington (9th Cir 2005) 410 F3d 598).

Right to counsel is case-specific. The right to counsel is case-specific and attaches for the prosecution of particular alleged acts or events arising out of the same act or transaction. Texas v Cobb (2001) 532 US 162, 173, 149 L Ed 2d 321, 121 S Ct 1335; People v DePriest (2007) 42 C4th 1, 33, 63 CR3d 896. See, e.g., Anderson v Alameida (9th Cir 2005) 397 F3d 1175 (New Hampshire counsel appointed to represent defendant in extradition hearing played no legal role to invoke or attach Sixth Amendment right to counsel concerning California charges).

B. Right of Indigent Defendants to Have Counsel Appointed

An indigent defendant has a right to have counsel appointed at public expense when a felony or a misdemeanor is charged. Tracy v Municipal Court (1978) 22 C3d 760, 766, 150 CR 785; Mills v Municipal Court (1973) 10 C3d 288, 301, 110 CR 329. See also Pen C §§859, 987. A defendant charged with an infraction is not entitled to appointed counsel unless he or she is arrested and not released on a written promise to appear, on his or her own recognizance or on bail. Pen C §19.6. A juvenile charged with a misdemeanor who elects to proceed informally before a traffic hearing officer has a right to appointed counsel, even though the offense cannot be punished by confinement. In re Kevin G. (1985) 40 C3d 644, 221 CR 146.

In all cases in which the court determines that the defendant is entitled to appointed counsel, the court must first attempt to appoint the public defender and may appoint private counsel only if no public defender is available or the public defender is unable to represent the defendant because of a conflict of interest. Pen C §987.2(a); Govt C §27706; People v Hall (1978) 87 CA3d 125, 133, 150 CR 628. See also Charlton v Superior Court (1979) 93 CA3d 858, 863, 156 CR 107.

The court in which the proceeding is pending has jurisdiction to determine whether a defendant is entitled to appointed counsel. Pen C §987; In re Smiley (1967) 66 C2d 606, 620, 58 CR 579. The determination of indigency must be made on the basis of as complete a financial picture as is feasible to obtain. 66 C2d at 619. Factors the court may consider in determining indigency include the defendant's assets, the nature and extent of debts, encumbrances on property, the number and ages of dependents, and obligations to pay spousal and child support. 66 C2d at 619. The court may require the defendant to file a financial statement. Pen C §987(c); Govt C §27707. See §20.7 for discussion of disclosure and use of the defendant's financial statement, whether given to the court or to the public defender.

Although the trial court is charged with the responsibility for determining indigency, the public defender's office usually makes that determination. Govt C §27707. Once the public defender determines that a defendant is entitled to representation at public expense and is appointed by the court to represent the defendant, the public defender's office must continue to provide legal representation until a contrary determination is made. Govt C §27707.

> Ø Note: Financial statements are not usually required by the court when the defendant has been accepted for representation by the public defender's office.

Once the court has determined that a defendant is indigent and has appointed counsel to represent the defendant, the court cannot redetermine eligibility and discharge appointed counsel. Roswall v Municipal Court (1979) 89 CA3d 467, 475, 152 CR 337. However, the court may reevaluate the defendant's present ability to pay after the criminal proceeding has concluded and may then require the defendant to pay all or a portion of the cost of legal representation. Pen C §987.8(b)-(c). See Pen C §987.8 generally for a detailed description of hearing requirements for determination of the present ability to pay costs of representation. The court may also hold a hearing after counsel has been appointed and before the case is concluded to determine whether the defendant owns any real property or other assets that may be attached. Pen C §987.8(a).

See discussion of the right to counsel at the preliminary hearing in §8.7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.4 2. Right to Select Appointed Counsel

The defendant's personal preference for a particular attorney must be considered by the court but is not a determinative factor requiring the appointment of that attorney. People v Chavez (1980) 26 C3d 334, 347, 161 CR 762; Drumgo v Superior Court (1973) 8 C3d 930, 106 CR 631.

Ø Note: Indigent defendants do not have a federal constitutional right to be represented by their counsel of choice. Caplin & Drysdale, Chartered v U.S. (1989) 491 US 617, 624, 105 L Ed 2d 528, 540, 109 S Ct 2646; Gonzalez v Knowles (9th Cir 2008) 515 F3d 1006, 1012.

It is an abuse of discretion, however, for the court to deny a motion to appoint particular counsel when the defendant's preference is timely made and based on a relationship of trust derived from prior representation in related cases, and when no countervailing considerations have comparable weight. People v Cole (2004) 33 C4th 1158, 1179, 17 CR3d 532 (court not required to appoint private attorney who had earlier represented defendant while he was employed by Alternate Defense Counsel, because criteria not met); People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 844, 277 CR 122 (court not required to appoint private attorney who had represented defendant in earlier case, because criteria not met); Harris v Superior Court (1977) 19 C3d 786, 799, 140 CR 318 (attorneys of defendants' choice ordered appointed because they met these criteria). See also People v Chavez (1980) 26 C3d 334, 161 CR 762 (supreme court disapproved trial court policy requiring appointment of new counsel in superior court even though other counsel had been appointed and had begun representing defendant in municipal court).

When an indigent defendant has counsel appointed in one county, that same lawyer may be appointed to represent the defendant concerning offenses in other counties. Pen C §987.2(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.5 3. Appointment of Co-Counsel in Capital Cases

The trial court may appoint co-counsel in a capital case if the appointment is necessary to provide the defendant with effective representation. Pen C §987(d). See also Keenan v Superior Court (1982) 31 C3d 424, 180 CR 489 (recognizing conditional right to co-counsel in pre-Pen C §987(d) capital cases). Co-counsel, however, is not always required. People v Wright (1990) 52 C3d 367, 411, 276 CR 731. The right to co-counsel at public expense does not extend to noncapital homicide cases. Sand v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 567, 572, 194 CR 480.

A request for appointment of co-counsel is made by defendant's first-appointed counsel by filing a detailed confidential affidavit showing the reasons co-counsel is needed. Pen C §987(d). Although §987(d) does not specify facts that will support a request for co-counsel, the Keenan court considered these factors important:

- Complexity of legal and factual issues;
- Number of witnesses;
- Need for scientific and psychiatric testimony;
- Need for pretrial motions;
- Possibility of pretrial appellate review; and
- Lack of time between appointment of first counsel and trial date.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.6 4. Payment for Ancillary Defense Services

The constitutional right to effective representation includes the right to have "reasonably necessary ancillary defense services" paid for at public expense. Corenevsky v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 307, 319, 204 CR 165. Statutes providing authority for requesting public funds for ancillary defense services include Pen C §987.9 (state funds for ancillary services in capital case (see §54.11)), Pen C §987.8(g)(1) (legal representation includes ancillary services), and Evid C §730 (payment of court-appointed experts at county expense).

There is generally no right to have a particular expert appointed. Ake v Oklahoma (1985) 470 US 68, 77, 84 L Ed 2d 53, 62, 105 S Ct 1087. An indigent defendant is not entitled to "all the assistance that his wealthier counterpart might buy." Ake v Oklahoma, supra.

The test of indigency for the purpose of funding ancillary services is whether the defendant is financially able to pay for these services. Anderson v Justice Court (1979) 99 CA3d 398, 403, 160 CR 274. A defendant who is otherwise eligible for ancillary fees does not lose that right simply because someone else (for example, a family member) retains counsel for him or her. Tran v Superior Court (2001) 92 CA4th 1149, 112 CR2d 506. Thus, ancillary services may be publicly funded even though the defendant has retained counsel. Anderson v Justice Court, supra.

Fee requests in capital cases cannot be heard by the trial judge. Pen C §987.9; People v Anderson (1987) 43 C3d 1104, 240 CR 585. Check local court rules and practices to learn to which judge or department the application is to be presented.

C. Defendant's Right to Represent Self

§3.7 1. When Self-Representation Permitted; Termination of Self-Representation; Court Obligation

A defendant has the right, under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution, to waive counsel and represent himself or herself. Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 835, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 581, 95 S Ct 2525. As with other waivers of constitutional rights, the waiver of counsel must be knowing, intelligent, and voluntary. Iowa v Tovar (2004) 541 US 77, 81, 158 L Ed 2d 209, 216, 124 S Ct 1379. The Sixth Amendment does not, however, require the trial court to advise the defendant of specific dangers that may flow from self-representation. Iowa v Tovar, supra.

The trial court can deny a request for self-representation when the defendant is unable or unwilling "to abide by rules of procedure and courtroom protocol." McKaskle v Wiggins (1984) 465 US 168, 173, 79 L Ed 2d 122, 130, 104 S Ct 944; People v Watts (2009) 173 CA4th 621, 629, 92 CR3d 806. Self-representation can also be denied if the defendant cannot coherently communicate. People v Watkins (1992) 6 CA4th 595, 8 CR2d 5 (defendant had severe speech impediment; request for self-representation properly denied). Lack of fluency in the English language, however, is not a sufficient basis for denying self-representation; the remedy is to appoint an interpreter. People v Poplawski (1994) 25 CA4th 881, 891 n1, 30 CR2d 760. Further, a timely motion for self-representation cannot be denied on the ground that the defendant poses a security risk or is motivated by the desire to gain special privileges. People v Superior Court (George) (1994) 24 CA4th 350, 354, 29 CR2d 305. See Sandoval v Calderon (9th Cir 2000) 241 F3d 765, 774 (no error when court accepts defendant's trade of library privileges in lieu of self-representation).

A defendant's request to represent himself or herself must be made in a timely fashion. People v Rivers (1993) 20 CA4th 1040, 25 CR2d 602 (court properly denied represented defendant's motion to proceed in propria persona made after verdict but before prior was adjudicated). See §3.9. The defendant must make the request unequivocally. A request may be denied if it is "equivocal," i.e., is insincere or made in an emotional outburst. People v Marshall (1997) 15 C4th 1, 21, 61 CR2d 84; People v Tena (2007) 156 CA4th 598, 607, 67 CR3d 412 (defendant sought attorney amenable to his defense strategy, rather than self-representation). After a request is denied, a waiver of the request may be found if it reasonably appears that the defendant abandoned the request. People v Dunkle (2005) 36 C4th 861, 907, 32 CR3d 23, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209; People v Tena (2007) 156 CA4th 598, 67 CR3d 412.

A defendant who waives counsel and chooses self-representation cannot later appeal the result on the ground of ineffective assistance of counsel. Faretta v California, supra. When a self-represented defendant testifies, the trial court is not obligated to advise the defendant about the privilege against compelled self-incrimination. People v Barnum (2003) 29 C4th 1210, 131 CR2d 499.

The right of self-representation applies to both the guilt phase of capital cases (People v Teron (1979) 23 C3d 103, 113, 151 CR 633) and the penalty phase (People v Clark (1990) 50 C3d 583, 618, 268 CR 399). Teron and Clark apparently, though not expressly, overrule Pen C §§859 and 987, which require appointment of counsel in capital cases. However, a defendant may not plead guilty to a felony for which the maximum penalty is death or life imprisonment without parole without the appearance and consent of counsel. Pen C §1018; People v Chadd (1981) 28 C3d 739, 746, 170 CR 798.

It has been suggested, but not authoritatively decided, that an incarcerated defendant's right to self-representation includes access to a law library, telephone, and legal runners. See Wilson v Superior Court (1978) 21 C3d 816, 821, 148 CR 30. Once a defendant has been granted these privileges, he or she is deprived of due process if the privileges are later taken away without procedural safeguards, including notice and hearing. 21 C3d at 825 (describing exact safeguards that must be provided).

Once self-representation has been deemed appropriate, the court may not ordinarily terminate self-representation and impose counsel on the defendant. See People v Wilks (1978) 21 C3d 460, 468, 146 CR 364. The court may, however, suspend self-representation if the defendant's in-court conduct is disruptive to the process of justice. See Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 834 n46, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 581 n46, 95 S Ct 2525. A trial court may also terminate or revoke a criminal defendant's right of self-representation for out-of-court misconduct that seriously threatens the core integrity of the trial. See People v Carson (2005) 35 C4th 1, 23 CR3d 482.

Ø Note: With out-of-court misconduct, the trial court must create an appropriate record that documents its decision to terminate self-representation with evidence reasonably supporting a finding that the defendant's obstructive behavior seriously threatened the core integrity of the trial. The record may be created through a hearing or through written memorandums accompanied by evidentiary support. See People v Carson (2005) 35 C4th 1, 11, 23 CR3d 482.

A defendant who has been found competent to stand trial may not be competent to conduct the trial proceedings by himself or herself and may be denied the right to self-representation. Indiana v Edwards (2008) ___ US ___, 171 L Ed 2d 345, 357, 128 S Ct 2379. Likewise, a defendant may be denied the right to self-representation if his or her mental competence comes into question. People v Burnett (1987) 188 CA3d 1314, 234 CR 67; People v Powell (1986) 180 CA3d 469, 225 CR 703. Denial of a defendant's right to self-representation, however, is not required solely because a defendant has a history of mental illness. People v Clark (1990) 50 C3d 583, 618, 268 CR 399 (all mental health experts who examined defendant said he was competent). A defendant's competence to waive the right to counsel is not measured by a standard higher than or different from the standard for competence to stand trial. Godinez v Moran (1993) 509 US 389, 400, 125 L Ed 2d 321, 333, 113 S Ct 2680; People v Welch (1999) 20 C4th 701, 740, 85 CR2d 203.

When a defendant who has chosen to waive counsel and represent himself or herself chooses to terminate self-representation and makes a request for counsel, the court should ordinarily appoint counsel (or permit defendant to retain counsel) and grant a continuance to allow adequate time for the new attorney to prepare the defense. People v McKenzie (1983) 34 C3d 616, 629, 194 CR 462. See also People v Lawrence (2009) 46 C4th 186, 194, 92 CR3d 613 (trial court did not abuse discretion in denying defendant's midtrial request to revoke Faretta waiver); People v Gallego (1990) 52 C3d 115, 163, 276 CR 679 (discussion of factors to consider when defendant makes midtrial request to terminate self-representation); People v Boulware (1993) 20 CA4th 1753, 25 CR2d 381 (magistrate properly denied pro per defendant's motion for counsel made on day preliminary hearing to begin).

Ø Note: Defense counsel should refrain from formally opposing a client's motion for self-representation. People v Kirkpatrick (1994) 7 C4th 988, 30 CR2d 818.

§3.8 2. Inquiry Required Before Ruling on Motion; Second Inquiry Required After Preliminary Hearing

The only relevant inquiry into a defendant's request for self-representation is whether the defendant has the mental capacity to make a knowing and intelligent waiver. The court cannot inquire into the defendant's technical knowledge of the law or ability to litigate a case. Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 835, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 581, 95 S Ct 2525; People v Nauton (1994) 29 CA4th 976, 34 CR2d 861. Only the defendant's present mental capacity is germane; even a history of serious mental illness does not necessarily constitute substantial evidence of incompetence that would require a court to declare a doubt concerning a defendant's competence and to conduct a hearing on that issue. People v Blair (2005) 36 C4th 686, 714, 31 CR3d 485.

In making its inquiry, the court should inquire into the defendant's capacity to make intelligent decisions and admonish the defendant about the dangers and disadvantages of self-representation. Faretta v California, supra. No particular form of words is required: "the test is whether the record as a whole demonstrates that the defendant understood the disadvantages of self-representation, including the risks and complexities of the particular case." People v Koontz (2002) 27 C4th 1041, 1070, 119 CR2d 859. See, e.g., People v Burgener (2009) 46 C4th 231, 240, 92 CR3d 883; People v Blair (2005) 36 C4th 686, 707, 31 CR3d 485.

One court suggested the following areas of inquiry (People v Lopez (1977) 71 CA3d 568, 573, 138 CR 36):

- The defendant's education and familiarity with legal procedures;
- The defendant's mental capacity (if it appears questionable, the court should order a psychiatric examination);
- The defendant's awareness of the availability of counsel at no cost to himself or herself;
- The defendant's awareness of the nature of the proceedings and the possible outcome; and
- The defendant's awareness that the right to self-representation may be terminated for misbehavior or disruption of trial.

The Lopez court also recommended that the defendant who professes to want to represent himself or herself be told of some of the problems he or she may confront (71 CA3d at 572):

- Self-representation is almost always unwise; the defendant may conduct the defense to his or her own detriment.
- The defendant will have to abide by the same rules as lawyers and will receive no help from the judge.
- The prosecution will be represented by experienced, professional counsel who will have the advantage of skill, training, and ability.
- The defendant will have no special library privileges nor a staff of investigators.

Ø Note: The California Supreme Court has specifically rejected the contention that detailed advisements on the dangers of self-representation are required. People v Blair (2005) 36 C4th 686, 710, 31 CR3d 485. See People v Riggs (2008) 44 C4th 248, 277, 79 CR3d 648.

The court must re-advise a pro per defendant of his or her right to counsel after the preliminary hearing. If an effective waiver is not made, the court must appoint counsel. Error is considered prejudicial per se. Pen C §987; People v McKenzie (1983) 34 C3d 616, 636, 194 CR 462; Cordova v Baca (9th Cir 2003) 346 F3d 924, 926 (defective waiver waives nothing and is of no consequence). Note, however, that the trial court need not personally question a defendant who previously requested self-representation and subsequently decides not to proceed pro per. See Sandoval v Calderon (9th Cir 2000) 241 F3d 765, 774.

§3.9 3. Time for Making Motion

Ordinarily, a defendant's waiver of counsel and unequivocal request to represent himself or herself must be made within a reasonable time before trial in order to invoke the absolute right to self-representation. People v Windham (1977) 19 C3d 121, 127, 137 CR 8. However, there is no inflexible requirement for when the motion must be made. A midtrial motion might be considered timely depending on circumstances such as the quality of defense counsel's representation, the reasons for the request, and the delay that might be expected if the request were granted. People v Windham, supra. If the motion is made at a later time, it is subject to the court's discretion guided by the Windham factors. People v Hamilton (1988) 45 C3d 351, 369, 247 CR 31. However, a trial court must grant a postverdict request for self-representation as a matter of right when the request is made a reasonable time before sentencing; such a request is not subject to the court's discretion, because it is not made "during trial." People v Miller (2007) 153 CA4th 1015, 1023, 62 CR3d 900.

On the basis of the facts of the case, several post-Windham courts have reversed convictions because of the denial of requests for self-representation made on the first day of trial or later. See, e.g., People v Herrera (1980) 104 CA3d 167, 174, 163 CR 435; People v Tyner (1977) 76 CA3d 352, 355, 143 CR 52. On habeas, the Ninth Circuit has found denial, based on untimeliness, of a request for self-representation made on the first day of trial was not contrary to clear Supreme Court precedent. Marshall v Taylor (9th Cir 2005) 395 F3d 1058. On the other hand, in a capital case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding a request was made too late when it was made after a full day of voir dire and at the tail end of jury instruction. People v Jackson (2009) 45 C4th 662, 690, 88 CR3d 558.

No continuance is required when a motion under Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 835, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 581, 95 S Ct 2525 (see §§3.7-3.9), is granted at the penalty phase of a capital trial, despite restricted jail and courtroom conditions. People v Jenkins (2000) 22 C4th 900, 1040, 95 CR2d 377.

> Ø Note: For discussion of whether there is a difference between a federal and California standard of timeliness for a motion for self-representation, and citations to federal authorities, see People v Burton (1989) 48 C3d 843, 852, 258 CR 184.

If the court grants a motion to dismiss counsel during trial and permits self-representation, it should also consider granting the defendant a continuance to prepare the defense. People v Bigelow (1984) 37 C3d 731, 741 n3, 209 CR 328. When the motion is made before trial in a timely fashion, the defendant is entitled to a reasonable continuance. People v Maddox (1967) 67 C2d 647, 653, 63 CR 371; People v Wilkins (1990) 225 CA3d 299, 304, 275 CR 74.

§3.10 4. Advisory Counsel, Standby Counsel, Co-Counsel; Defendant's Participation as "Co-Counsel"; Ancillary Services

Advisory counsel. The trial court has discretion to permit an attorney adviser for an indigent defendant and may have a duty to appoint advisory counsel if it determines that the defendant's waiver is intelligently made but that he or she lacks the skill to defend the case. People v Bigelow (1984) 37 C3d 731, 742, 209 CR 328 (abuse of discretion not to appoint advisory counsel in complex capital case). See People v Garcia (2000) 78 CA4th 1422, 1429, 93 CR2d 796 (declined to extend Bigelow to noncapital cases).

Standby counsel and co-counsel. A defendant who chooses self-representation has no absolute right to have counsel appointed to assist in the defense, even though the defendant does have the right to have retained counsel fill that role. People v Mattson (1959) 51 C2d 777, 795, 336 P2d 937; Scott v Superior Court (1989) 212 CA3d 505, 260 CR 608. The court may appoint standby counsel or co-counsel, even over the defendant's objection. McKaskle v Wiggins (1984) 465 US 168, 79 L Ed 2d 122, 104 S Ct 944 (standby counsel participated in trial while defendant still pro per). See Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 834 n46, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 581 n46, 95 S Ct 2525. The role of standby counsel may be to advise the defendant and to be able to represent the defendant if the defendant chooses to withdraw the waiver of counsel or if self-representation is terminated; or it may include participating in the trial as co-counsel, even over defendant's objection. See McKaskle v Wiggins, supra (counsel participated when counsel chose to); Faretta v California, supra (dicta: standby counsel described as acting only on defendant's request and as available to step in if self-representation ceased).

An attorney who believes that acting as advisory counsel would be contrary to his or her duty as an attorney apparently may refuse to act as adviser. See Chaleff v Superior Court (1977) 69 CA3d 721, 138 CR 735. For discussion of the role of advisory counsel, see People v Doane (1988) 200 CA3d 852, 246 CR 366.

Defendant as co-counsel. A defendant has no constitutionally guaranteed right to act as co-counsel, but the court has discretion to permit a defendant to participate in the defense. People v Kirkpatrick (1994) 7 C4th 988, 30 CR2d 818; People v Crabtree (2009) 169 CA4th 1293, 1310, 88 CR3d 41. The court should not grant the right except on a substantial showing that the ends of justice would be served and the conduct of the court's business would not be substantially hindered. People v Kirkpatrick, supra. The burden is on the defendant to make this showing. People v Crabtree, supra. There is no requirement that a defendant granted co-counsel status be given Faretta warnings. People v Jones (1991) 53 C3d 1115, 1143, 282 CR 465.

Ancillary services. The right to ancillary services arises only when an indigent defendant demonstrates that funds are "reasonably necessary" for his or her defense. Corenevsky v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 307, 320, 204 CR 165. See discussion in §3.6. A self-represented defendant must also satisfy this requirement. People v Blair (2005) 36 C4th 686, 733, 31 CR3d 485; People v Faxel (1979) 91 CA3d 327, 330, 154 CR 132. A self-represented defendant's access to the resources necessary to present a defense must be reasonable under all the circumstances. People v Blair (2005) 36 C4th 686, 733, 31 CR3d 485 (self-represented capital defendant had reasonable access to necessary resources when he had advisory counsel, several investigators, a runner, and a fingerprint expert).

§3.11 5. Standard of Review

If a reviewing court finds that the trial court should have granted a defendant's request for self-representation, the reversible per se standard is applied. People v Joseph (1983) 34 C3d 936, 946, 196 CR 339. This standard also applies if the defendant was convicted following self-representation when the defendant's waiver of counsel was defective. Cordova v Baca (9th Cir 2003) 346 F3d 924, 926 (defective Faretta waiver waives nothing and is of no consequence). However, if the trial court erroneously denies a request for self-representation and the defendant subsequently validly waives the right to self-representation and proceeds to trial represented by counsel, the defendant is not entitled to relief on appeal for the erroneous denial. People v Dunkle (2005) 36 C4th 861, 909, 32 CR3d 23, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209. See People v Weeks (2008) 165 CA4th 882, 887, 81 CR3d 257 (Faretta error waived when defendant proceeded to trial with retained counsel and neither defendant nor counsel revisited issue of self-representation).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.12 D. Representation by Certified Law Students

Qualified law students are authorized to participate in the conduct of a defense. State Bar Rules Governing the Practical Training of Law Students, Rule 5. Representation by a qualified law student in compliance with the State Bar Rules does not violate a defendant's right to be represented by counsel. People v Perez (1979) 24 C3d 133, 144, 155 CR 176. Although the defendant must consent to such representation in writing, the consent need not be knowing and intelligent within the meaning of Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 95 S Ct 2525, because it is not a waiver of the right to counsel. People v Perez, supra.

III. BEGINNING THE RELATIONSHIP

§3.13 A. Interviewing Client

The first interview with a client serves several purposes:

- It permits counsel to ascertain whether a conflict exists that requires counsel to decline representation. See discussion of conflicts in §§2.8-2.16.
- With retained counsel, it allows counsel and the client to decide whether they wish to enter into an attorney-client relationship, and, if they do, to set the fee and other terms of employment.
- It provides an opportunity for the attorney to define the relationship for the client, explain the respective authority of the client and the attorney, and describe the legal process in which the client will be involved.
- It begins the investigation process by providing counsel with background information about the case.
- Counsel is able to advise the client not to speak with anyone about the case except counsel.
- Counsel can obtain the client's signature on any necessary release forms.
- It alerts counsel to possible motions and hearings that should be set, e.g., a Pen C §1538.5 motion, a severance motion, or a demurrer.
- Counsel can find out if there are any related problems that must be dealt with, e.g., immigration problems, a possible parole hold, a pending probation revocation, or another pending case.

For a client interview form and discussion on how the interview questions relate to counsel's case and to this book, see chap 10.

B. Fees and Retainer Agreements

1. Retained Counsel

§3.14 a. Written Attorney Retainer Agreements

Written attorney retainer agreements are required if fees and costs will exceed $1000. A signed duplicate must be given to the client—otherwise, the contract is voidable. Bus & P C §6148. The written contract must specify the hourly rate and other standard charges that may be made, the general nature of the legal services to be provided to the client, and the respective responsibilities of the client and the attorney.

Some California firms are taking the position that, despite the "shall" language in Bus & P C §6148(a), the only sanction for failing to have a written contract is Bus & P C §6148(c), which limits recovery to a "reasonable fee." This construction assumes that there is no professional disciplinary sanction for failure to have a written contract.

Ø Note: Business and Professions Code §6149 purports to create a privilege for written attorney fee contracts within the meaning of Bus & P C §6068(e)(1) and Evid C §952. How this statute will be applied with regard to state or federal subpoenas for information, to grand jury proceedings, or to actions to forfeit attorney fees remains to be seen.

An attorney who does not have professional liability insurance must inform the client in writing of that fact when it is reasonably foreseeable that his or her representation of the client in the matter will exceed 4 hours. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-410(A). This notice can be included in the retainer agreement.

See Fee Agreement Forms Manual (2d ed Cal CEB 2007) for complete discussion of preparing a fee agreement, including a sample criminal law fee agreement. There are sample criminal law fee agreements in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§3.1-3.2 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.15 b. Potentially Tainted Fee Money

Defense counsel should be quite cautious in all types of cases when deciding whether to accept fee money from a client. Both forfeiture of assets and criminal charges are potentially involved with the receipt or handling of assets that were originally obtained from, were the product of, or facilitated illegal conduct. See discussion in §57.33.

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/3 RIGHT TO COUNSEL; THE ATTORNEY-CLIENT RELATIONSHIP/§3.16 c. Fees May Not Be Illegal or Unconscionable

§3.16 c. Fees May Not Be Illegal or Unconscionable

California Rules of Professional Conduct 4-200 precludes fees that are illegal or unconscionable. Under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 4-200(B), factors to be considered in determining whether a fee is legal include:

- The amount of the fee in proportion to the value of the services performed;
- The relative sophistication of the attorney and the client;
- The novelty and difficulty of the questions involved and the skill required to perform the legal service properly;
- The likelihood, if apparent to the client, that the acceptance of the particular employment will preclude other employment by the member;
- The amount involved and the results obtained;
- The time limitations imposed by the client or by the circumstances;
- The nature and length of the professional relationship with the client;
- The experience, reputation, and ability of the attorney performing the services;
- Whether the fee is fixed or contingent;
- The time and labor required; and
- The informed consent of the client to the fee agreement.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.17 d. Ways of Setting Fees

Fees in a criminal matter are generally set on a case-by-case basis rather than at an hourly rate. In a typical arrangement, half of the fee is paid before the attorney makes an appearance as attorney of record, and the other half is paid before trial. Other common arrangements include payment of the full fee in advance or regular installment payments accompanied by a secured or unsecured promissory note. A fee in a criminal case is usually not refundable, unless counsel withdraws or another attorney is substituted. It is advisable to make the terms of any refund or lack of refund clear, because three of the factors used to determine whether a fee is conscionable are whether it is fixed or contingent, the time and labor required, and whether the client gave informed consent to the fee. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 4-200(B)(9)-(11).

Ø Note: A fee agreement providing for a nonrefundable retainer should specify that oral modification of the agreement is prohibited. See Brooks v Shemaria (2006) 144 CA4th 434, 50 CR3d 430.

Often, the most reliable starting point for determining a reasonable fee is the prevailing range within the local legal community. The inexperienced practitioner should determine what, if any, prevailing standard exists within the community for the type of case involved and should then apply the factors listed in Cal Rules of Prof Cond 4-200 to determine whether any of them justifies a fee outside the prevailing range.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.18 e. Referral Fees

Referral fees to lawyers who are not partners, associates, or shareholders are permitted as long as the client is informed in writing of the shared fee arrangement and consents in writing. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-200(A). However, the total fee may not be increased solely because of the division of fees. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-200(A). The division of fees does not have to be in proportion to the work actually done by the referring attorney. Moran v Harris (1982) 131 CA3d 913, 916 n2, 182 CR 519 (decided under former Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-108, now see Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-200).

§3.19 2. Appointed Counsel

Private counsel appointed to represent a criminal defendant are entitled to a reasonable sum for compensation and necessary expenses. Pen C §987.2(a); Gilbert v Superior Court (1985) 169 CA3d 148, 215 CR 305 (judge's order appointing second counsel in capital case and setting hourly fee constituted contract). The court sets the actual amount of compensation in a particular case. Pen C §987.2(a). If the attorney does not have professional liability insurance, he or she must inform the client in writing of that fact when it is reasonably foreseeable that his or her representation of the client in the matter will exceed 4 hours. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-410(A).

Ø Note: Many counties have schedules fixing fees for particular types of work.

Procedures for claiming fees for appointed counsel depend on the county and the court within the county in which the work was performed. Appointed counsel programs may be administered by the court, the local bar association, or another county office. Practitioners should check on the procedure for fixing and claiming fees within the individual county before accepting employment as appointed counsel. See also §41.8 on reimbursement of appointed counsel.

C. Accepting Employment

§3.20 1. Considerations Before Accepting Employment

Before accepting employment as either retained or appointed defense counsel, the attorney must determine whether any standards of professional conduct prevent or limit the employment. The attorney should consider these possibilities:

- Attorney as witness. The attorney should consider whether he or she may be called as a witness in the case. See §2.18.
- Competence. An attorney who does not have sufficient learning and skill to handle a case competently should not accept the employment. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110. An inexperienced attorney can accept a case as long as he or she consults experienced counsel or has time to learn how to handle the case. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110(C). See §2.20.
- Conflicts of interest. Such conflicts include representation of codefendants or of concurrent or former clients with interests adverse to the current defendant. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310. See §§2.8-2.16. A conflict of interest may exist when counsel accepts literary rights in lieu of a fee. People v Corona (1978) 80 CA3d 684, 720, 145 CR 894. A defendant may give an informed waiver of any conflict of interest. Maxwell v Superior Court (1982) 30 C3d 606, 180 CR 177, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209.
- Other grounds. Does the case present the potential that grounds for mandatory or permissive withdrawal will develop? Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700.

See also §19.17 on appointed counsel's obligation to be ready to proceed.

§3.21 2. Becoming Attorney of Record

It is generally accepted that an attorney becomes the attorney of record when his or her name is on a pleading or motion filed with the court on behalf of a client, or when the attorney first appears in court on behalf of a client and counsel's name is entered in the court minutes. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial §4.3 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). In civil cases, in which a defendant may be sued even though not in court if the court has personal jurisdiction (among other requirements), attorneys make "special" appearances to contest personal jurisdiction. See 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Jurisdiction §§205-207 (5th ed 2008). By analogy, private criminal attorneys sometimes make a special appearance when the defendant was unable to pay the attorney fee, on the theory that by making a special appearance they have not become the attorney of record. Once the fee is paid, the usual practice is for the attorney to formally enter the case by making a "general" appearance the next time he or she appears in court on the client's behalf. This is a common practice, even though there appears to be no statutory authority for it.

The fee agreement may restrict legal services through preliminary hearing only. Thereafter counsel may, without written motion, move to be relieved as attorney of record if a new agreement has not been reached. Lempert v Superior Court (2003) 112 CA4th 1161, 5 CR3d 700.

Once counsel becomes the attorney of record, other parties may rely on that attorney's representation until they receive notice of substitution of counsel (People v Bouchard (1957) 49 C2d 438, 441, 317 P2d 971) or until the defendant has been granted the right to represent himself or herself. CCP §285.

There are no formal requirements for associating an attorney. If possible, all attorneys who will appear in an action should be named on the initial pleading filed in court or should be identified in the court minutes at the first appearance. Counsel should notify the court and other parties if an attorney enters the case later by filing and serving an association of attorney form. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial §4.61 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004) for sample form. Before associating counsel, the primary attorney should get the client's consent to the association and to any arrangement for fee-splitting. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-200.

A member in good standing of the bar of another jurisdiction who has been retained by the defendant may apply to appear as counsel in a particular matter (called counsel pro hac vice), provided an active member of the California Bar is associated as attorney of record. Cal Rules of Ct 9.40(a). A person seeking to appear as counsel pro hac vice must file a verified application for association, with proof of service on all parties and on the State Bar of California, and schedule a hearing on the application. Cal Rules of Ct 9.40(c)(1). See Magee v Superior Court (1973) 8 C3d 949, 106 CR 647 (discusses court's discretion in ruling on application). See Civ Proc Before Trial §4.62 for sample form.

§3.23 D. Authority of Attorney

Once counsel has become attorney of record, all legal steps must be taken by the attorney, not the client. Magee v Superior Court (1973) 34 CA3d 201, 213, 109 CR 758, disapproved on other grounds in People v Norris (1985) 40 C3d 51, 56, 219 CR 7. Other attorneys may deal with the client concerning the subject matter of that representation only through the attorney of record. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-100. See discussion in §2.35.

Generally, the attorney controls all decisions affecting trial tactics and court proceedings. People v Masterson (1994) 8 C4th 965, 35 CR2d 679; People v Whittington (1977) 74 CA3d 806, 820, 141 CR 742. Decisions that have been held to be within the attorney's control include:

- Whether to call a particular witness (People v Williams (1970) 2 C3d 894, 905, 88 CR 208);
- Whether to introduce particular evidence (People v Murphy (1972) 8 C3d 349, 366, 105 CR 138);
- Whether to object to evidence (People v Lanphear (1980) 26 C3d 814, 828, 163 CR 601, vacated and remanded (1980) 449 US 810, reaff'd (1980) 28 C3d 463, 171 CR 505);
- Whether to stipulate to facts during the penalty phase (People v Cooper (1991) 53 C3d 771, 842, 281 CR 90);
- Whether to challenge a particular trial judge (People v Jackson (1960) 186 CA2d 307, 317, 8 CR 849);
- Whether to request a change of venue (People v Guzman (1988) 45 C3d 915, 937, 248 CR 467, overruled on other grounds in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069 n13, 108 CR2d 409);
- Whether to stipulate to proceed with fewer than 12 jurors (People v Masterson, supra); and
- Whether to request a determination of the defendant's competence to stand trial (Pen C §1368).

The defendant retains the absolute right to decide certain issues affecting his or her fundamental rights. People v Robles (1970) 2 C3d 205, 214, 85 CR 166. These decisions include:

- Whether to testify (People v Robles, supra);
- Whether to enter an insanity plea (Pen C §1018; People v Gauze (1975) 15 C3d 709, 717, 125 CR 773);
- Whether to plead guilty (Pen C §1018; People v Rogers (1961) 56 C2d 301, 305, 14 CR 660); and
- Whether to demand a jury trial (People v Holmes (1960) 54 C2d 442, 5 CR 871).

There are other areas in which the division of authority between counsel and the defendant is less clear because of the involvement of the defendant's fundamental rights. Counsel's general control over the proceedings permits him or her to waive the defendant's statutory right to trial within 60 days (Pen C §1382(a)(2)), but with limitations. Townsend v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 774, 781, 126 CR 251. When the waiver is simply to accommodate defense counsel's calendar, counsel has no right to set a court date beyond statutory deadlines. People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 568, 162 CR 431.

Another situation in which the attorney's authority is unclear is the decision to present a mental state defense. Compare People v Milner (1988) 45 C3d 227, 246, 246 CR 713, and People v Frierson (1985) 39 C3d 803, 814, 218 CR 73 (defendant had right to insist that diminished capacity defense (now nonexistent) be presented at guilt phase of trial), with People v Jones (1991) 53 C3d 1115, 1139, 282 CR 465 (defense counsel properly argued mental state defense over defendant's objection; defendant insisted he was innocent, but evidence of guilt was overwhelming).

IV. DISCHARGE, SUBSTITUTION, AND WITHDRAWAL OF COUNSEL

§3.24 A. Retained Counsel

The procedure for discharge, withdrawal, and substitution of retained counsel in criminal proceedings is the same as that for civil proceedings. People v Bouchard (1957) 49 C2d 438, 441, 317 P2d 971. See CCP §§284-285 (substitution of attorney in "action or special proceeding"); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1362 (motion to be relieved as counsel), 8.36 (withdrawal or substitution of attorney in pending appeal). California Rules of Court 3.1362 requires that the notice of motion, motion, declaration, and order be made on Judicial Council Forms MC-051, MC-052, and MC-053. On withdrawing from representation and substitution of counsel in civil actions, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 4 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

Ø Note: A retained attorney who represents the defendant at the preliminary hearing does not have to file a motion to withdraw at the arraignment if the attorney is retained (and compensated) only through the preliminary hearing. It is an abuse of the court's discretion to force counsel to represent an indigent defendant from arraignment on the information all the way through trial without compensation, when counsel was originally retained to represent the defendant at the preliminary hearing only. Lempert v Superior Court (2003) 112 CA4th 1161, 1171, 5 CR3d 700. See Pen C §987.1.

Defense attorneys may ask to be relieved from representation because the client has failed to pay their fee. CCP §284(2); People v Castillo (1991) 233 CA3d 36, 55, 284 CR 382. It is appropriate for the trial court to appoint the previously retained counsel if the client becomes indigent and the public defender is unavailable. People v Castillo, supra.

When an attorney is substituted by mutual consent, counsel should file a written notice of substitution with the court and serve a copy of it on the adverse party. CCP §284. Counsel may also notify the judge and adverse party in court, as long as the withdrawal is entered in the minutes. CCP §284. Substitution by mutual consent is not effective, however, in the interim between the preliminary hearing and the arraignment unless the court relieves counsel from continuing in the case. Pen C §987.1. If the attorney and client do not each consent to the attorney's withdrawal, the party requesting the attorney's withdrawal must give notice to the other and obtain the court's consent. CCP §284. Grounds for mandatory and permissive withdrawal are set out in Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(B).

An attorney seeking to be relieved because of a conflict must be careful not to provide the court with too much detail about the conflict while, at the same time, protecting the record for appeal. The attorney-client privilege and the duty to maintain the client's confidence and secrets limit the information that can be divulged. Leversen v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 530, 194 CR 448; Uhl v Municipal Court (1974) 37 CA3d 526, 112 CR 478. The trial court should accept defense counsel's good faith assertion of conflict with a third person as the basis for a motion to withdraw, without requiring details that would require counsel to breach attorney-client confidentiality. Uhl v Municipal Court, supra (sufficient for attorney to assert conflict based on representation of unnamed person in unrelated case).

An attorney who contemplates withdrawing from a case must take reasonable steps to avoid prejudicing the client's rights, including giving the client due notice, allowing time for the employment of other counsel, and delivering papers and property to which the client is entitled. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(D).

Discharge or withdrawal of an attorney is effective only when written notice of substitution of a new attorney, or of the party on his or her own behalf, is given to the adverse party. Until notice is given, the adverse party must recognize the former attorney. CCP §285; People v Bouchard, supra.

The trial court usually permits the substitution of counsel but has the discretion to refuse to permit substitution if to permit it would delay the trial or cause some other interference with the process of justice. People v Ortiz (1990) 51 C3d 975, 983, 275 CR 191; People v Durham (1969) 70 C2d 171, 190, 74 CR 262 (motion made on first day of trial; disagreement with counsel on trial tactics); People v Keshishian (2008) 162 CA4th 425, 428, 75 CR3d 539 (case had been pending for 2½ years; motion made on day case called for trial); People v Murphy (1973) 35 CA3d 905, 921, 111

CR 295 (motion made after trial date set; defendant unable to pay counsel). In making its determination, the court must balance the defendant's interest in new counsel against the disruption, if any, flowing from the substitution. People v Lara (2001) 86 CA4th 139, 155, 103 CR2d 201. If the court does not permit counsel to withdraw and counsel refuses to continue representing the client despite the court's ruling, counsel is subject to contempt proceedings. In re Jackson (1985) 170 CA3d 773, 216 CR 539.

Ø Note: Counsel who wishes to withdraw for nonpayment of fees should do so before a trial date is set, if possible. See People v Murphy, supra.

A criminal defendant who becomes indigent, and wishes to discharge retained counsel and request appointed counsel, has the right to do that as long as the change in attorneys is timely and will not significantly prejudice the defendant. People v Ortiz (1990) 51 C3d 975, 983, 275 CR 191 (once error is found, prejudice is presumed). In this situation, the defendant is not required to show that retained counsel is incompetent in order to discharge him or her. People v Stevens (1984) 156 CA3d 1119, 1127, 203 CR 505.

An attorney who is discharged or withdraws is entitled to compensation for work performed. See 1 Witkin, California Procedure, Attorneys §§194-207 (5th ed 2008). An attorney who withdraws must refund any part of a fee paid in advance that has not been earned. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(D). See §§41.8-41.9 for discussion of fee hearings and compensation of appointed counsel.

For discussion of withdrawal, discharge, and substitution of counsel, and sample forms, see Civ Proc Before Trial, chap 4. See also the forms in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§3.3 (letter notifying former counsel of substitution and requesting release of information), 3.5 (motion to remove defense counsel), and 3.6 (defense motion to withdraw as counsel) (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

B. Discharge of Appointed Counsel (Marsden Motion)

§3.25 1. In General; Right to Hearing; Remedy

A defendant represented by appointed counsel or the public defender may request that the court discharge the attorney and substitute new counsel if the defendant's right to counsel would be substantially impaired by continuing with the original attorney. People v Marsden (1970) 2 C3d 118, 123, 84 CR 156. This occurs when counsel is not providing adequate representation or when counsel and defendant have become embroiled in such an irreconcilable conflict that ineffective representation is likely to result. People v Jones (2003) 29 C4th 1229, 1244, 131 CR2d 468. Typically, the defendant makes an oral Marsden motion before the trial judge (see People v Marsden, supra); although a formal motion is not required, the defendant must make some clear indication that he or she wants a substitute attorney. People v Mendoza (2000) 24 C4th 130, 157, 99 CR2d 485. The right to counsel is personal to the defendant, and the court is not required to conduct a Marsden hearing when a third party complains concerning the representation received by a defendant. People v Martinez (2009) 47 C4th 399, 418, 97 CR3d 732. A motion for a new trial based on trial counsel's incompetence requires the court to conduct a Marsden hearing to investigate the defendant's complaints regarding his or her appointed counsel's performance, even if the defendant does not make a request for new counsel. People v Mendez (2008) 161 CA4th 1362, 1366, 75 CR3d 162; People v Mejia (2008) 159 CA4th 1081, 1086, 72 CR3d 76.

Marsden does not apply to retained counsel. Retained counsel may be discharged at any time, with or without cause, even on the eve of trial, as long as the move is not intended to delay. People v Lara (2001) 86 CA4th 139, 103 CR2d 201.

A Marsden motion may be made at any stage in the proceedings, including presentation of a motion for a new trial or a motion to withdraw a plea. People v Smith (1993) 6 C4th 684, 695, 25 CR2d 122; People v Mejia, supra (motion for new trial based on incompetence of counsel); People v Eastman (2007) 146 CA4th 688, 696, 52 CR3d 922 (motion to withdraw plea).

The trial judge must conduct a hearing on a Marsden request and allow the defendant to state specific reasons for the requested dismissal. People v Cole (2004) 33 C4th 1158, 1190, 17 CR3d 532; People v Fierro (1991) 1 C4th 173, 204, 3 CR2d 426. The court may appoint another attorney to help the defendant present the Marsden motion (People v Bean (1988) 46 C3d 919, 947, 251 CR 467), but such an appointment is not required (People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 849, 277 CR 122). The court can conduct a Marsden hearing even after proceedings have been suspended under Pen C §1368 (People v Stankewitz (1990) 51 C3d 72, 86, 270 CR 817; People v Solorzano (2005) 126 CA4th 1063, 24 CR3d 735; People v Canfield (1992) 2 CA4th 1357, 1360, 3 CR2d 825), and must promptly consider the defendant's request while proceedings are suspended when the right to effective assistance would be substantially impaired if the request were ignored. People v Stankewitz (1990) 51 C3d 72, 88, 270 CR 817; People v Solorzano (2005) 126 CA4th 1063, 1069, 24 CR3d 735. If the defendant, after being granted the opportunity, fails to specify adequate reasons for the substitution, the court may properly deny the request. People v Bean, supra; People v Silva (1988) 45 C3d 604, 247 CR 573.

On appeal, inadequate inquiry into a Marsden motion is treated as prejudicial per se error because the very nature of the error precludes meaningful appellate review of its prejudicial impact. People v Solorzano (2005) 126 CA4th 1063, 24 CR3d 735 (erroneous refusal to hear Marsden motion on whether appointed counsel was rendering effective assistance at defendant's competency hearing required reversal of conviction entered after defendant was found competent); People v Hill (1983) 148 CA3d 744, 755, 196 CR 382. However, instead of reversing the judgment, the appellate court can remand the case to the trial court for a Marsden hearing. See, e.g., People v Mejia, supra. If the trial court determines on remand that the Marsden motion should not be granted, there is no basis for a reversal on appeal. People v Maese (1985) 168 CA3d 803, 214 CR 365; People v Minor (1980) 104 CA3d 194, 200, 163 CR 501. This type of remand hearing is sometimes called a Minor hearing because the procedure was first ordered by the appellate court in People v Minor, supra.

Ø Note: If the trial court denies a defendant's Marsden motion, a subsequent plea of guilty or no contest, when intelligently and voluntarily made (see §§26.10-26.17), waives any alleged Marsden error. People v Lovings (2004) 118 CA4th 1305, 1311, 13 CR3d 710; People v Lobaugh (1987) 188 CA3d 780, 786, 233 CR 683.

The normal record on appeal includes a confidential transcript of any Marsden hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 8.328(b)(1). When appellate counsel is appointed or retained for the defendant, a copy of the confidential transcript is sent to defendant's counsel only, or to the appellate project for the district if appellate counsel has not been obtained. Cal Rules of Ct 8.328(b)(3). If the Marsden issue will be raised in the appeal, the defendant must serve and file a notice stating whether the confidential transcript contains any confidential information that is not relevant to the issues raised on appeal (including the page and line numbers of the transcript where this material appears). Cal Rules of Ct 8.328(b)(4). Even if defense counsel files such a notice, however, the prosecutor can still make a motion for a copy of the relevant portions of the confidential transcript. Cal Rules of Ct 8.328(b)(5).

If the defendant raises a Marsden issue in the opening brief but fails to serve and file a notice under Cal Rules of Ct 8.328(b)(4), on written application the prosecutor may request a copy of the confidential transcript. Within 10 days after the application is filed, the defendant may serve and file opposition to this application on the grounds that the transcript contains confidential material not relevant to the issues on appeal. Any such opposition must identify the page and line numbers of the transcript containing this irrelevant material. If the defendant does not timely serve and file opposition to the application, the reviewing court clerk must send a copy of the confidential transcript to the prosecutor. Cal Rules of Ct 8.328(b)(6).

When the trial court erroneously denies a Marsden motion and the defendant subsequently asks to represent himself or herself, the Marsden error taints the defendant's waiver of the right to be represented by counsel, even though the court's admonitions otherwise satisfy the Faretta requirements (see Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 95 S Ct 2525). People v Hill (1983) 148 CA3d 744, 755, 196 CR 382; People v Cruz (1978) 83 CA3d 308, 318, 147 CR 740.

§3.26 2. Conduct of Hearing; Role of Defense Counsel

The court must question the client and usually the attorney in order to rule on a Marsden motion. See §3.25. A ruling cannot be based on the judge's personal confidence in the attorney, observations of the attorney's previous courtroom conduct, or ex parte communications with other participants. People v Hill (1983) 148 CA3d 744, 753, 196 CR 382.

To protect the client's interests in confidentiality during this inquiry, defense counsel should move to exclude the prosecutor from the Marsden hearing. People v Madrid (1985) 168 CA3d 14, 19, 213 CR 813. Although the court is not required to exclude the prosecutor, the Madrid court stated that a trial court should exercise its discretion and exclude the prosecutor if the defense makes a timely request. People v Madrid, supra. If the defense fails to make this request, the Madrid court said the trial court should assess whether the information adduced at the hearing would be of the type that might lighten the prosecution's burden of proof (based on Prudhomme v Superior Court (1970) 2 C3d 320, 85 CR 129) and, if so, exclude the prosecutor from the hearing. Prudhomme has since been disapproved. Izazaga v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 356, 285 CR 231 (Cal Const art I, §30(c) mandates that discovery in criminal cases be reciprocal). It appears, however, that prosecutors can still be excluded from Marsden hearings because Cal Rules of Ct 8.328(b), discussed in §3.25, assumes that prosecutors are being excluded from those hearings. In addition, the discovery statutes provide that neither the defense nor the prosecution is required to disclose any work product or privileged information to the other (Pen C §1054.6), yet it is likely that both work product and attorney-client privileged material would have to be disclosed during a Marsden hearing.

The trial court generally begins its inquiry by hearing the defendant's complaints concerning defense counsel and then decides whether to hear further testimony. When the nature of the evidence requires inquiry into the attorney's state of mind to determine whether counsel can provide adequate representation, the courts are divided on whether such an inquiry should be undertaken. Compare People v Hill, supra (inquiry required), and People v Young (1981) 118 CA3d 959, 966, 173 CR 700 (inquiry required), with People v Terrill (1979) 98 CA3d 291, 159 CR 360 (no inquiry ever required of defense counsel).

When responding to the defendant's complaints, defense counsel should clearly describe for the record the work that has been done on the case by counsel, by other attorneys in the office, and by others such as paralegals and investigators. See, e.g., People v Hovey (1988) 44 C3d 543, 573, 244 CR 121.

The attorney must carefully balance the need to provide complete testimony with the client's interest in having confidentiality maintained. In an analogous area, the inquiry into competence of counsel in habeas corpus proceedings, the court in In re Gray (1981) 123 CA3d 614, 176 CR 721, held that there is no attorney-client privilege as to matters put in issue by a challenge to defense counsel's competence. See also Evid C §958 (no attorney-client privilege for communications relevant to breach of duty arising from attorney-client relationship). There are no clear guidelines on the extent to which this waiver applies to the various issues raised through Marsden motions.

After the hearing is over, defense counsel should have the court direct that the transcript be sealed and given to the judge's clerk or have the court order that it not be transcribed until appeal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.27 3. Showing Required

New defense counsel should be appointed if counsel being challenged is not providing adequate representation, or if defendant and counsel have such an irreconcilable conflict in their relationship that ineffective representation is likely to result. People v Smith (1993) 6 C4th 684, 25 CR2d 122. The standard is the same whether the motion is made before or after conviction. People v Smith, supra.

The trial court has discretion to deny a Marsden motion "in the absence of a sufficient showing that a defendant's right to counsel would otherwise be substantially impaired." People v Walker (1976) 18 C3d 232, 238, 133 CR 520. The defendant has the burden of proving substantial impairment (People v Young (1981) 118 CA3d 959, 173 CR 700) by demonstrating that counsel is inadequate (People v Marsden (1970) 2 C3d 118, 84 CR 156).

Grounds found insufficient to require the discharge of appointed counsel include:

- Defendant did not think counsel had the client's best interests at heart (People v Silva (1988) 45 C3d 604, 247 CR 573);
- Counsel would not make certain motions the defendant wanted brought (People v Silva, supra (motions either not legally cognizable or not right court));
- Defendant did not relate well with defense counsel (People v Berryman (1993) 6 C4th 1048, 25 CR2d 867, overruled on other grounds in People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 823 n1, 72 CR2d 656);
- Defendant had seen defense counsel only once (People v Silva, supra);
- Defendant did not trust the attorney and therefore could not discuss the case fully with counsel (People v Berryman, supra);
- Counsel refused to make a particular argument at a Pen C §1538.5 hearing (People v Carr (1972) 8 C3d 287, 104 CR 705); and
- Counsel and defendant disagreed on trial tactics (People v Jackson (2009) 45 C4th 662, 688, 88 CR3d 558; People v Carter (2005) 36 C4th 1114, 1200, 32 CR3d 759).

Ø Note: The Williams court noted that disagreement may signal a breakdown of such magnitude that the defendant's right to counsel is jeopardized. People v Williams (1970) 2 C3d 894, 905, 88 CR 208.

Grounds found sufficient to require reversal include the following:

- Ineffective representation on appeal (In re Banks (1971) 4 C3d 337, 93 CR 591);
- Failure to investigate adequately (People v Minor (1980) 104 CA3d 194, 200, 163 CR 501); and
- Defendant's credibility undermined by trial error (People v Coleman (1992) 9 CA4th 493, 11 CR2d 800).

§3.28 4. Discharge Initiated by Court

Although removal of counsel is generally initiated by the defendant or counsel, the court may also remove counsel on its own motion. People v McKenzie (1983) 34 C3d 616, 630, 194 CR 462. The test for dismissing appointed counsel and retained counsel is generally the same. Smith v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 547, 561, 68 CR 1. Removal of counsel by the trial court, however, is unusual. Once an attorney has been retained or appointed, the court should make a reasonable effort to ensure that the representation continues. See People v Crovedi (1966) 65 C2d 199, 208, 53 CR 284 (court abused its discretion in denying continuance during retained counsel's illness).

If the accommodation required to permit continued representation would prejudice another party or interfere in some other way with the process of justice, the court may remove the attorney. People v McKenzie, supra (appellate court advised trial court that it could discharge attorney who refused to proceed with case); Stevens v Superior Court (1988) 198 CA3d 932, 244 CR 94 (on motion of prosecutor, court removed retained counsel who was involved in another trial and would not be available for several months); People v Ward (1972) 27 CA3d 218, 233, 103 CR 671 (retained attorney required 4-week continuance while material witness was being held in custody; substitution of counsel approved). See Pen C §1050(a) (criminal cases should be set for trial and heard as quickly as possible, with precedence given to death penalty cases). The individual circumstances of a particular case determine whether a trial court has acted within its discretion in removing counsel to prevent interference with the orderly process of justice. For example, a trial court's removal of an inexperienced and injured secondary counsel at the beginning of a capital trial, and his replacement with a more experienced attorney, was not an abuse of discretion. People v Panah (2005) 35 C4th 395, 426, 25 CR3d 672.

If retained counsel has an apparent conflict, the trial court must notify the defendant of the right to conflict-free representation. If the defendant waives the conflict, the court may not remove the lawyer. Maxwell v Superior Court (1982) 30 C3d 606, 619, 180 CR 177, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209; Alcocer v Superior Court (1988) 206 CA3d 951, 254 CR 72. However, the trial court may remove appointed counsel because of a potential conflict of interest, despite the defendant's desire to waive that conflict, without violating the defendant's right to counsel. People v Jones (2004) 33 C4th 234, 240, 14 CR3d 579 (trial court removed murder defendant's appointed attorney because attorney previously represented man whom defense suspected of committing the murder). See also People v Richardson (2008) 43 C4th 959, 995, 77 CR3d 163 (appointed attorney relieved despite waiver because of representation of proposed prosecution witness). For further discussion of conflicts of interest, see §§2.8-2.16.

Egregious behavior by the prosecution can result in dismissal of the case if prejudice is shown. U.S. v Morrison (1981) 449 US 361, 66 L Ed 2d 564, 101 S Ct 665 (stated rule that prejudice must be shown but found none on facts of case); Morrow v Superior Court (1994) 30 CA4th 1252, 36 CR2d 210 (post-Morrison; eavesdropping by DA investigator was sufficient grounds to support motion to dismiss); People v Tribble (1987) 191 CA3d 1108, 236 CR 733 (post-Morrison; no prejudice); Boulas v Superior Court (1986) 188 CA3d 422, 233 CR 487 (post-Morrison; government conduct was so outrageous it interfered with accused's right to due process; dismissal of charges only appropriate remedy). See also Barber v Municipal Court (1979) 24 C3d 742, 157 CR 658 (pre-Morrison case did not require prejudice; case ordered dismissed); People v Wesley (1990) 224 CA3d 1130, 274 CR 326 (post-Morrison; conduct not found to be outrageous).

The mere bringing of a motion by the prosecution to determine whether a conflict of interest exists between the defendant and defense counsel does not constitute prosecutorial misconduct or an interference with the defendant's right to counsel. People v Harris (2005) 37 C4th 310, 342, 33 CR3d 509.

Once a prima facie case of eavesdropping has been made, the burden shifts to the prosecution to show, by clear and convincing evidence, that none occurred. People v Jordan (1990) 217 CA3d 640, 266 CR 86. A prior working relationship between police and a jailhouse informant, without more, is insufficient to show interference with the right to counsel. In re Williams (1994) 7 C4th 572, 29 CR2d 64.

The trial court may take steps to ensure that any possible prejudice is prevented. People v Benally (1989) 208 CA3d 900, 256 CR 483. In Benally, a police officer taped a conversation between the defendant's attorney and the defense investigator. The judge ordered the tape sealed, ordered the detective who heard it not to discuss it with anyone, and ruled that if at any time during trial defense counsel objected to any evidence, the prosecution would have the burden of proving that the evidence came from a source other than the tape.

§4.1 I. OVERVIEW

Arrest warrants. Arrests can be made with or without a warrant. Pen C §836. They are usually made by peace officers, but they can also be made by private persons. See Pen C §834. The United States and California constitutions and California statutes and case law place restrictions on arrests. For discussion of these restrictions, including the procedure for moving to exclude evidence based on an illegal arrest, see chap 16. For discussion of moving to exclude a confession obtained as a result of an illegal arrest, see chap 23.

Arrest warrants are usually printed forms filled in by a judge or magistrate directing any peace officer to arrest a particular person and bring him or her before the issuing judge or magistrate or, if the judge or magistrate is unavailable, before the nearest or most accessible magistrate. Pen C §§814, 1427.

Arrested persons must be taken before a magistrate "without unnecessary delay, and, in any event, within 48 hours after … arrest, excluding Sundays and holidays," unless the 48 hours expire when the magistrate's court is not in session. Pen C §825. See chap 6 for further discussion of Pen C §825.

Summons in lieu of arrest warrant. A summons may be used instead of an arrest warrant at the prosecutor's request when a complaint charging a felony is filed. Pen C §813. A summons gives the defendant the opportunity to appear in court for arraignment without being arrested.

> Ø Note: In some counties, the district attorney will send a "notify letter" advising the accused that a complaint has been filed and directing the accused to appear in court on a certain date. Failure to appear can result in issuance of a warrant.

Search warrants. Search warrants are judicial orders authorizing peace officers to search specified places and things and to seize specified evidence. US Const amend IV; Cal Const art I, §13; Pen C §§1523-1542. Searches and seizures may also be conducted in certain circumstances without a warrant. Searches and seizures that violate the Fourth Amendment are attacked by a motion to suppress under Pen C §1538.5. For further discussion, see chap 16.

Bench warrants. Bench warrants are warrants issued by a judge to bring a nonappearing defendant or witness before the court. Pen C §§978.5-981 (defendants); CCP §1993 (witnesses). These are sometimes called body attachments.

If a defendant has been ordered to appear, or has promised to appear, and counsel has not been authorized to appear on his or her behalf under Pen C §977, the court may issue a bench warrant. Pen C §§978.5-981, 985-986, 1195-1196, 1284-1285. Prescribed forms for bench warrants are in Pen C §§814 and 1197.

Bench warrants for nonappearing subpoenaed witnesses may issue only if the subpoena was personally served; service by mail under Pen C §1328d is insufficient. Pen C §1328d. See CCP §§1993 (bench warrant may issue on proof of service of subpoena), 1987(a) (personal service required).

Subpoenas. Subpoenas are orders compelling the attendance of a witness in a case. Cal Const art I, §15; Pen C §1326(a); Govt C §204. A subpoena duces tecum is an order requiring the subpoenaed person to bring with him or her specified evidence. See Pen C §§1326(b)-(d), 1327 (subpoena form). The relevant Judicial Council form is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §4.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

Special time limits apply for subpoenaing police officers if they are not personally served. If their superior officer is to be served, it should be done more than 5 working days before the hearing—otherwise, there is a risk that the police officer will not have to attend. Pen C §1328(e).

> Ø Note: In civil actions and proceedings, and administrative per se hearings, a $150 deposit must be paid to the officers' department by private parties subpoenaing peace officers. Govt C §§68096.1-68097.2. No deposit is required in criminal cases. See Govt C §68093 (no mention of such a requirement in this statute).

Ø Warning: Counsel should consult local rules before relying on this chart.

Appearance before magistrate following arrest (arraignment if pleading on file).	Arrests with a warrant. Without unnecessary delay, but no longer than 48 hours after arrest, excluding holidays and Sundays, unless the 48 hours expire when magistrate's court is not in session. Pen C §825. When a complaint or indictment is filed, defendant appears before issuing judge or magistrate. Warrantless arrests. Probable cause determination must be made within 48 hours after arrest, including Sundays and holidays. County of Riverside v McLaughlin (1991) 500 US 44, 56, 114 L Ed 2d 49, 63, 111 S Ct 1661.	Same as in felony cases.
Subpoena of police officer.	If personally served, no time limit. If service on officer's superior, and less than 5 working days before hearing date, service may be refused; or superior may accept service, then later inform server of inability to contact officer if notice given at least 48 hours before hearing. Pen C §1328.	Same as in felony cases.
Subpoena of all others.	Service must allow witness a reasonable time for preparation and travel to place of attendance. CCP §1987(a).	Same as in felony cases.

III. ARREST WARRANT

§4.3 A. Prosecutor's Role in Obtaining Arrest Warrant

An investigating officer from a police agency who wishes to obtain an arrest warrant may contact a prosecutor to discuss whether an arrest warrant should be used or whether the prosecutor should write a letter to the person to be charged stating that a charge has been filed and that the defendant must appear in court before a date certain to preclude the issuance of an arrest warrant.

Prosecutors are also available to assist investigating officers in preparing the affidavit or complaint required to secure an arrest warrant. See §4.5 for discussion of the documents that support the arrest warrant.

In felony cases proceeding by complaint, the prosecutor may ask the magistrate to issue a summons instead of an arrest warrant. Pen C §813. See discussion in §4.18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.4 B. Nature and Purpose of Warrant; Judges and Magistrates

A warrant of arrest is a written order, normally issued by a magistrate, directing any peace officer to arrest a designated person charged with a crime and bring him or her before a judge or magistrate. Pen C §§813-816, 1427; 4 Witkin & Epstein, California Criminal Law, Pretrial Proceedings §§15-23 (3d ed 2000). If the arrest is for a felony, the defendant is brought before the issuing magistrate or the nearest or most accessible magistrate in the county. Pen C §821. If the arrest is for a misdemeanor, the defendant is brought before the issuing judge or magistrate. Pen C §1427. See also Pen C §822 (arrest on out-of-county warrant), discussed in §6.30.

All judges are magistrates. Pen C §808. The office of magistrate is a statutory creation—a statutory office separate and distinct from the elective office of judge. Koski v James (1975) 47 CA3d 349, 354, 120 CR 754. Courts initially restricted the powers of magistrates to those specified in Pen C §§806, 807, 859, 859a, 859b, 871, and 872; however, later decisional law has accorded magistrates adjudicatory functions similar to those of trial judges. Gray v Municipal Court (1983) 149 CA3d 373, 377, 196 CR 808 (magistrates have "inherent judicial powers ancillary to their express statutory powers").

A magistrate uses an arrest warrant to obtain personal jurisdiction of the defendant. Personal jurisdiction is a necessary element in the prosecution of a criminal case. Burns v Municipal Court (1961) 195 CA2d 596, 599, 16 CR 64.

Arrest warrants are usually printed forms. The prescribed format is found in Pen C §§814 (felony) and 1427 (misdemeanor).

See §4.18 for discussion of the use of a summons as an alternative to a warrant.

C. Requirements for Issuance

§4.5 1. Probable Cause

Procedure for obtaining warrant. An arrest warrant can be issued only by a magistrate. See Pen C §§813, 817, 1427. See also Pen C §808 (all judges are magistrates). A police officer can obtain an arrest warrant by:

- Filing a complaint (usually accompanied by a sworn statement setting forth facts constituting the offense and facts that led officer to believe defendant committed it) (Pen C §§813 (felonies), 1427(a) (misdemeanors));
- Submitting a written declaration of probable cause (also known as a Ramey warrant) (Pen C §817(a)-(b), codifying the holding in People v Bittaker (1989) 48 C3d 1046, 1070, 259 CR 630; see also People v Ramey (1976) 16 C3d 263, 127 CR 629); or
- Making an oral statement of probable cause under oath, either in person or on the telephone, that complies with Pen C §817(c).

Probable cause required. Whatever approach is used, the officer must "allege underlying facts upon which the magistrate can independently find probable cause to arrest the accused." People v Sesslin (1968) 68 C2d 418, 421, 67 CR 409, relying on Giordenello v U.S. (1958) 357 US 480, 485, 2 L Ed 2d 1503, 1509, 78 S Ct 1245. See also People v Thompson (1970) 6 CA3d 945, 950, 86 CR 327 (complaint couched solely in language of statute defining offense will not support arrest warrant). The magistrate must independently judge the persuasiveness of these facts and not merely accept a conclusion that the person whose arrest is sought has committed an offense. Giordenello v U.S. (1958) 357 US 480, 486, 2 L Ed 2d 1503, 1509, 78 S Ct 1245. A magistrate may issue a warrant of arrest only if he or she is satisfied from the evidence presented that the offense complained of has been committed and that there is reasonable cause to believe that the arrestee committed it. Pen C §§813, 1427; People v Sesslin (1968) 68 C2d 418, 426, 67 CR 409. See also Taliaferro v Locke (1960) 182 CA2d 752, 6 CR 813 (magistrate has discretion to refuse to issue warrant).

Ø Note: A Ramey warrant is used when the police want authority to arrest a suspect without at the same time filing formal charges. People v Bittaker (1989) 48 C3d 1046, 1070, 259 CR 630; People v Case (1980) 105 CA3d 826, 831, 164 CR 662 (formal initiation of criminal proceedings not prerequisite to arrest). It cannot be used to justify an arrest to obtain probable cause to charge an individual. Goodwin v Superior Court (2001) 90 CA4th 215, 108 CR2d 553 (court could not compel individual to appear in lineup before initiation of criminal proceedings).

Probable cause defined. "Reasonable cause," "probable cause," and "sufficient cause" are synonymous terms. Ortega v Superior Court (1982) 135 CA3d 244, 256, 185 CR 297. They mean a state of facts that would lead a person of ordinary caution and prudence to believe and conscientiously entertain an honest and strong suspicion that the person to be arrested is guilty of a crime. People v Ingle (1960) 53 C2d 407, 412, 2 CR 14. Probable cause for an arrest warrant, like probable cause for issuance of a search warrant, is measured by the totality of the circumstances standard enunciated by the U.S. Supreme Court in Illinois v Gates (1983) 462 US 213, 76 L Ed 2d 527, 103 S Ct 2317. People v Rosales (1987) 192 CA3d 759, 768, 237 CR 558. As applied to arrests, this standard requires the issuing magistrate to make a practical, commonsense decision that, given all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit, a fair probability exists that a crime has been committed and that the individual named in the arrest warrant committed it.

§4.6 2. Failure to Appear on Citation

When no probable cause needed in warrant. Warrants issued for failure to post bail or appear as promised in a notice to appear (Pen C §853.8; Veh C §40515) or for failure to post bail or appear after notice and complaint in parking violation cases (Veh C §§40203, 40215, 40513) are exempt from the usual requirements of a verified complaint and finding of probable cause.

The filing of a criminal complaint and a determination of probable cause by a magistrate are unnecessary if either the offense has been committed in the presence of the court and is revealed by its records (as in failure to appear as promised (Pen C §853.8; Veh C §40515; People v Superior Court (Copeland) (1968) 262 CA2d 283, 68 CR 629)) or circumstances giving rise to the issuance of the warrant are apparent from the court records (as in failure to post bail or to appear after notice and complaint in parking violation cases (Veh C §§40202-40203, 40205, 40215, 40513; People v Weitzer (1969) 269 CA2d 274, 75 CR 318)). See generally 56 Ops Cal Atty Gen 165 (1973). A warrant issued by the clerk in such cases is valid. People v Weitzer (1969) 269 CA2d 274, 285, 75 CR 318.

Warrants issued because of a failure to appear become part of the court's case file. For example, if a defendant received a traffic citation for speeding and failed to appear in court on the citation, a warrant would be issued. Veh C §40508. A copy of the warrant would be included in the court file relating to the speeding citation.

Effect of irregularities in warrant. Any irregularities in the warrant itself, or lack of merit in the underlying case, have no bearing on a defendant's obligation to appear; the warrant's invalidity does not excuse a failure to appear. Pen C §853.7.

> Ø Note: In many counties, prosecutors do not appear in court on traffic citations even though a failure to appear may be involved. Defense counsel may appear. Veh C §40507.

Civil assessment for failure to appear. When a defendant fails to appear, the court may impose a civil assessment of up to $300 instead of issuing a bench warrant or warrant of arrest. Pen C §1214.1(a). If a warrant is outstanding on the case, it must be recalled. Pen C §1214.1(c). Notice of failure to appear may be given to the Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV). Veh C §40509.5.

Requirements for issuing warrant on Veh C §40508 violation. No arrest warrant may be issued for a violation of Veh C §40508(a) (failing to appear) unless (1) the underlying offense is a misdemeanor or felony; (2) the offense relates to an equipment violation, a towing or loading violation, or overweight or oversized violation; (3) the driver has no driver's license; and (4) the driver has other pending failures to appear. Veh C §40509.5(e).

DMV action on failure to appear, failure to pay, or failure to obey court order. On notification of a defendant's willful failure to appear or pay a fine on an infraction, the DMV must suspend the person's privilege to operate a vehicle if the person has a prior willful failure. Veh C §13365. A failure to appear on a misdemeanor or felony or to obey a court order mandates suspension on the first failure to appear or obey. Veh C §13365.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.7 D. Form of Arrest Warrant

Statutory form. The statutory forms for arrest warrants are set forth in Pen C §§814 (felony warrant), 817 (probable cause warrant), and 1427 (misdemeanor warrant).

Telegraphic and telephonic warrants. A copy or an abstract of a warrant may be transmitted by telegraph, teletype, or any other electronic device, and the copy or abstract is as effectual as the original in the hands of any peace officer. Pen C §850(a). The required contents of an abstract are set out in Pen C §850(b).

Police officers do not have to have a copy of an arrest warrant in their possession to make a valid arrest. Pen C §842. For example, officers who are advised of an arrest warrant through official channels over police radio or by telephone may make a valid arrest. See People v Sanford (1968) 265 CA2d 960, 71 CR 790.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.8 E. Contents of Warrant

Directed to peace officer. A warrant of arrest must be directed generally to any peace officer in the state, or to any public officer or employee in the state authorized to serve process when the warrant is for a violation of a statute or ordinance that the officer has the duty to enforce. The warrant may be executed by any officer to whom it is delivered. Pen C §816.

Crime charged. A warrant must state the crime alleged to have been committed. The crime may be designated generally. Pen C §§814, 1427; In re McCue (1908) 7 CA 765, 96 P 110, overruled on other grounds in Pryor v Municipal Court (1979) 25 C3d 238, 158 CR 330.

Name of person to be arrested. The warrant must specify the name of the person to be arrested. Pen C §§814-815, 1427. See Cal Const art I, §13 (warrant must particularly describe person to be seized). If the defendant's real name is unknown but he or she has an alias, that name may be used on the warrant. People v McLean (1961) 56 C2d 660, 663, 16 CR 347. Otherwise, a fictitious name may be used (Pen C §815) as long as the warrant contains "sufficient information to permit [the arrestee's] identification with reasonable certainty" (People v Montoya (1967) 255 CA2d 137, 142, 63 CR 73). See also People v McCrae (1963) 218 CA2d 725, 728, 32 CR 500; People v Erving (1961) 189 CA2d 283, 290, 11 CR 203. A statement of the defendant's occupation, appearance, physical peculiarities, or place of residence might provide sufficient information, but a description of the defendant solely by height, approximate age, coloring, and build does not meet the constitutional requirement of reasonable particularity. People v Montoya, supra. A warrant that identifies the suspect by his or her unique DNA profile describes the suspect with sufficient particularity to commence prosecution when there is no more particular, accurate, or reliable means of identification available to law enforcement. People v Robinson (2010) 47 C4th 1104, ___ CR3d ___.

Time and place issued. An arrest warrant must state the time of its issuance and the city or county where it was issued. Pen C §815.

Signature of magistrate. An arrest warrant must be signed by a magistrate, who may be a judge of the superior court or a justice of the court of appeal or the supreme court. Pen C §808. The title of his or her office or the name of the court or other agency must appear on the warrant. Pen C §§814-815, 1427.

A printed or stamped signature is sufficient if it is authorized or adopted by the magistrate for the particular arrest warrant. People v Brussel (1932) 122 CA Supp 785, 788, 7 P2d 403. However, arrest warrants issued by a clerk under a blanket order authorizing him or her to endorse the judge's facsimile signature stamp are invalid. See People v Weitzer (1969) 269 CA2d 274, 75 CR 318 (dictum), and cases cited.

Warrants issued for failure to appear as promised, and warrants issued for standing and parking violations under the Vehicle Code, when issued under a magistrate's blanket authorization, are valid even though prepared by computer, stamped by the clerk, and never seen by the magistrate. People v Weitzer (1969) 269 CA2d 274, 75 CR 318; People v Superior Court (Copeland) (1968) 262 CA2d 283, 68 CR 629. These cases were decided under Pen C §840 when it did not require a showing of good cause for nighttime service (People v Dinneen (1974) 45 CA3d Supp 5, 119 CR 186) but are otherwise valid.

Amount of bail. If the offense is bailable, the magistrate must fix the amount of bail and endorse on the warrant a signed statement that the defendant is to be admitted to bail in the amount fixed. Pen C §815a. When the bail amount set on the warrant varies from the bail schedule, the increase must be supported by factual findings. Reliance on conclusionary language, such as "a danger to public safety" or "continues to pose a threat," is insufficient. In re Christie (2001) 92 CA4th 1105, 112 CR2d 495. See §§5.16-5.38 on bail.

Authorization for nighttime service. A warrant charging the defendant with a misdemeanor or an infraction can be executed between 10:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m. if the warrant, "for good cause shown," directs that it may be served at any time of the day or night. Pen C §840.

F. Execution of Warrants

§4.9 1. Nighttime Service

A warrant charging the commission of a felony may be served at any time. Pen C §840.

A warrant charging the defendant with a misdemeanor or an infraction cannot be executed between 10:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m. unless (Pen C §840):

- The arrest is made in a public place (see People v Whitted (1976) 60 CA3d 569, 131 CR 639 (nighttime arrest in car on public street was valid under "public place" exception);
- The defendant is otherwise lawfully in custody;
- The warrant, "for good cause shown," directs that it may be served at any time of the day or night (see People v Dinneen (1974) 45 CA3d Supp 5, 119 CR 186 ("convenience of the marshals" was not good cause for nighttime arrest); or
- The arrest is made without a warrant under Pen C §§836 and 837.

The remedy for unlawful service of an arrest warrant is the same as that for unlawful service of a search warrant. The criminal action will not be dismissed because of an unlawful arrest, but if the illegality amounts to a violation of the Fourth Amendment (see Cal Const art I, §28(f)(2); People v McKay (2002) 27 C4th 601, 117 CR2d 236), evidence obtained as a result of the illegal service may be subject to suppression. In re Larry C. (1982) 134 CA3d 62, 67, 184 CR 505. See chap 16.

§4.10 2. Duty to Execute

When an officer receives a warrant that appears on its face to be in proper form, it is his or her duty to carry out the order of the court and make an arrest. Malone v Carey (1936) 17 CA2d 505, 506, 62 P2d 166. The court may punish a willful failure to execute a warrant as contempt of court. Pankewicz v Jess (1915) 27 CA 340, 149 P 997.

A warrant appears on its face to be in proper form when it emanates from a court, officer, or body having the legal authority to issue a warrant that is legal in form and contains nothing to notify or fairly apprise a reasonable person that it was issued without authority. U.S. v Leon (1984) 468 US 897, 82 L Ed 2d 677, 104 S Ct 3405; Massachusetts v Sheppard (1984) 468 US 981, 82 L Ed 2d 737, 104 S Ct 3424. These cases are discussed in §4.27. See also People v Weitzer (1969) 269 CA2d 274, 295, 75 CR 318.

When an arrest is made on communicated police information of an outstanding arrest warrant, the prosecution, if challenged, must prove that the arresting officer actually received the transmitted arrest warrant information. People v Armstrong (1991) 232 CA3d 228, 283 CR 429. On preservation of these tapes, see §8.32.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.11 3. Time Limit on Service of Warrant

Unless an arrest warrant is served within a reasonable time after the complaint is filed, the defendant may be entitled to a dismissal on the ground that he or she was deprived of the right to a speedy trial. See Jones v Superior Court (1970) 3 C3d 734, 91 CR 578; Stabio v Superior Court (1994) 21 CA4th 1488, 26 CR2d 615. See also chap 19 (right to speedy trial).

For discussion of whether passage of time renders an arrest warrant irregular on its face within the meaning of CC §43.55 (civil liability of peace officer), see 57 Ops Cal Atty Gen 542 (1974).

§4.12 4. Arrest Warrant Execution at Residence

To arrest a person inside his or her home, an arrest warrant is required unless a legal exception applies. Payton v New York (1980) 445 US 573, 63 L Ed 2d 639, 100 S Ct 1371; People v Ramey (1976) 16 C3d 263, 127 CR 629. These exceptions include consent, exigent circumstances (such as hot pursuit of a fleeing felon), and the imminent need to prevent the destruction of contraband. U.S. v Santana (1976) 427 US 38, 49 L Ed 2d 300, 96 S Ct 2406; People v Ortiz (1995) 32 CA4th 286, 292, 38 CR2d 59.

Ø Note: When the arrest is for a minor offense, the Fourth Amendment may impose an absolute ban on warrantless entry. Welsh v Wisconsin (1984) 466 US 740, 750 n1, 80 L Ed 2d 732, 739 n1, 104 S Ct 2091.

To forcibly enter a residence with an arrest warrant to arrest a resident, officers must have probable cause to believe that the resident to be arrested is in the residence at the time. Pen C §844; People v Jacobs (1987) 43 C3d 472, 233 CR 323; People v Dyke (1990) 224 CA3d 648, 274 CR 66.

To enter a residence to arrest a guest, a search warrant is required. Steagald v U.S. (1981) 451 US 204, 206, 68 L Ed 2d 38, 41, 101 S Ct 1642.

§4.13 5. Location of Arrest Warrant After It Is Served

Copies of arrest warrants are generally kept in the court file of the case to which the warrant relates. Because the file is a public record, a request to the court clerk to see the warrant is all that is required.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.14 6. Duty to Bring Arrestee Before Magistrate

Arrest warrants command the arresting officer to bring the named defendant before the issuing magistrate or, if the magistrate is absent or unable to act, before the nearest or most accessible magistrate in the county where the warrant was issued. Pen C §§814, 1427. Under Cal Const art I, §14, all defendants charged with a felony are specifically guaranteed the right to "be taken without unnecessary delay before a magistrate." Under Pen C §825, a defendant must be taken before the appropriate magistrate "without unnecessary delay, and, in any event, within 48 hours after his or her arrest, excluding Sundays and holidays," unless the prescribed 2 days expire when the magistrate's court is not in session. This section does not authorize even a 48-hour detention in all cases, but places a limit on what may be considered a necessary delay; depending on the circumstances of the case, a delay of less than 48 hours may be unreasonable. People v Powell (1967) 67 C2d 32, 59, 59 CR 817.

In Youngblood v Gates (1988) 200 CA3d 1302, 1319, 246 CR 775, the court interpreted the language of Pen C §825 to mean that an appearance the same day may be required in many instances.

Persons arrested on misdemeanor arrest warrants must be released on a citation unless certain specified conditions exist. Pen C §827.1 If an exception exists, the 48-hour rule of §825 applies.

For discussion of the legal effect of failure to comply with the 2-day requirement, and counsel's remedy, see §19.14.

If a peace officer serves a misdemeanor Vehicle Code violation warrant that states that a citation may be used instead of physical arrest, the officer may release the defendant on a promise to appear. Pen C §818. The issuance of a notice to appear and securing a promise to appear, with an appropriate endorsement on the warrant, is considered compliance with the directions of the warrant. Pen C §818.

Penal Code §853.6(h) authorizes a peace officer to use the written notice to appear procedure in Pen C §853.6 for any misdemeanor offense in which the arrest is based on Pen C §836, which includes an arrest with a warrant.

For the procedure when a defendant is arrested in a county other than the issuing county, see §6.30. For discussion of probable cause hearings, see §6.23.

§4.15 G. Surrendering Defendant on Arrest Warrant

When an out-of-custody client contacts defense counsel about an outstanding warrant, counsel should find out whether it is for an unpaid parking ticket, an outstanding warrant on a criminal case, or a failure to appear. The traffic clerk's office is usually able to accept payment for unpaid traffic tickets and clear the warrant.

When a warrant is for a case on which the defendant has not yet appeared, counsel should find out the amount of the bail. Counsel should then arrange for the defendant to be prepared to post bail at the time he or she turns him- or herself in. Arrangements must also be made for the defendant to be fingerprinted and photographed by the police. Counsel should tell the client not to discuss the case with the police and should tell the police not to question the defendant without counsel present. See the sample advisement in §23.5.

When a warrant is issued for failure to appear on a pending case, counsel may contact the judge who issued the warrant, or the judge's clerk, and arrange to have the case put on calendar. At that time, counsel should be prepared to present any necessary witnesses and evidence to support the reason for the defendant's failure to appear. The defendant should be prepared to have bail raised, or set if the defendant was on O.R. release.

Ø Note: Local rules may require 2 or more days' notice to place a case on the calendar. In jurisdictions requiring such notice, the bench warrant remains outstanding until the defendant appears in court.

IV. CONSEQUENCES OF INVALID ARREST WARRANT

§4.16 A. No Effect on Personal Jurisdiction of Defendant

A defendant cannot obtain the dismissal of a criminal prosecution on the ground that he or she was illegally arrested. People v Bradford (1969) 70 C2d 333, 344, 74 CR 726 (defendant illegally arrested on warrant that should not have issued, because no underlying facts showing probable cause were submitted to magistrate).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.17 B. Can Affect Admissibility of Evidence

Evidence seized following an illegal arrest must be suppressed unless the prosecution shows that the taint of the illegal arrest has been dissipated or the doctrine of inevitable discovery applies. People v Superior Court (Sosa) (1982) 31 C3d 883, 185 CR 113; People v DeVaughn (1977) 18 C3d 889, 893, 135 CR 786. As a result of Proposition 8, however, the term "illegal" must be construed as violating the Fourth Amendment, not merely California law. People v McKay (2002) 27 C4th 601, 117 CR2d 236 (holding under authority of Atwater v City of Lago Vista (2001) 532 US 318, 149 L Ed 2d 549, 121 S Ct 1536, that evidence obtained as result of custodial arrest for fine-only offense (here, riding bicycle against traffic) is not subject to suppression, even if illegal under California law). For discussion of motions to suppress, see chap 16.

The fruits of an illegal arrest are admissible when the prosecution can show that the connection between the illegal arrest and the discovery of the evidence is sufficiently attenuated to dissipate the taint of the illegal conduct. See U.S. v Ceccolini (1978) 435 US 268, 55 L Ed 2d 268, 98 S Ct 1054.

The doctrine of inevitable discovery applies when the prosecution can establish that there was a reasonably strong probability that the evidence would have been discovered by lawful means independent of any illegal arrest. Nix v Williams (1984) 467 US 431, 81 L Ed 2d 377, 104 S Ct 2501 (police illegally had defendant lead them to victim's body, but volunteer searchers would have discovered it without defendant's assistance); Hernandez v Superior Court (1980) 110 CA3d 355, 364, 185 CR 127. Cases analyzing this principle are collected in People v Superior Court (Tunch) (1978) 80 CA3d 665, 671, 145 CR 795.

If an arrest warrant should have been recalled because the defendant had posted bail and showed the bail receipt to the police, the officers cannot claim they acted in good faith in executing the warrant, and the resulting evidence should be excluded. People v Ivey (1991) 228 CA3d 1423, 1428, 279 CR 554.

§4.18 V. SUMMONS IN PLACE OF ARREST WARRANT

At the prosecution's request, a magistrate may issue a summons instead of an arrest warrant after a complaint has been filed. A summons gives the defendant the opportunity to appear voluntarily, without being arrested.

A summons should be in substantially the same form as an arrest warrant. It should inform the defendant of the offense with which the defendant is charged and the time and place at which the defendant is to appear, and give notice that the defendant must complete the booking process before the first court appearance, with instructions on how to do so.

The prosecutor is precluded from requesting a summons in place of an arrest warrant if (1) the offense charged involves violence, a firearm, or resisting arrest; (2) there are outstanding arrest warrants for the defendant; (3) the prosecution of this or other offenses would be jeopardized; (4) there is a reasonable likelihood that the offense would continue or the safety of persons or property would be jeopardized; or (5) there is reason to believe the defendant would not appear at the time specified. Pen C §813(e).

If the defendant has not completed the booking process at the time of the first appearance, the court must order him or her to do so. Pen C §813(d).

> Ø Note: Some counties permit a brief "book and release" in the courthouse without requiring the defendant to complete the entire booking procedure in the jail. In counties that require the defendant to be booked in jail, it may take many hours to complete a records check of the defendant. The process may also involve transporting the person to a different location. Some counties permit the defendant to complete the booking at a future date. The defendant should be advised of the time involved.

If a defendant was properly served with a summons and fails to appear at the designated time and place, a bench warrant will be issued. However, in absence of proof of actual receipt of the summons by the defendant, a failure to appear should not be charged. Pen C §813(c).

§4.19 VI. PROBABLE CAUSE FOR WARRANTLESS ARRESTS

Even when circumstances authorize an arrest without a warrant, the officer must have probable cause for the arrest. Probable cause for a warrantless arrest exists when the facts known by the officer at the time of arrest would have led a person of ordinary care and prudence to entertain an honest and strong suspicion that the person arrested was guilty of a crime. People v Price (1991) 1 C4th 324, 410, 3 CR2d 106. See People v Ortiz (1995) 32 CA4th 286, 38 CR2d 59, for what does not meet this test.

The police can arrest a person suspected of carrying a loaded firearm without a warrant even though no other crime was committed in the officer's presence. Pen C §12031. The police can also arrest a person suspected of carrying a concealed firearm (Pen C §12025) without a warrant when that person is within the inspection area of any airport (Pen C §836(e)).

An officer has the power to arrest a person whom the officer has reasonable cause to believe has been driving under the influence of alcohol, drugs, or both, when one or more of the following conditions exist (Veh C §40300.5):

- The person has been involved in a traffic incident;
- The person is observed in or about a vehicle that is obstructing a roadway;
- The person will not be apprehended unless an arrest is made immediately;
- The person may cause injury to him- or herself or damage property unless immediately arrested; or
- The person may destroy or conceal evidence of the crime unless immediately arrested (see People v Thompson (2006) 38 C4th 811, 820, 43 CR3d 750).

On a domestic violence call, the police may arrest an individual whom the police have reasonable cause to believe has committed an assault or a battery, whether or not a battery was in fact committed, as long as the officer makes the arrest as soon as reasonable cause arises. Pen C §836(d).

A probable cause determination must be made within 48 hours after the arrest when a person is arrested without a warrant. County of Riverside v McLaughlin (1991) 500 US 44, 114 L Ed 2d 49, 111 S Ct 1661. For further discussion, see §6.23.

In misdemeanor cases in which the defendant is in custody at arraignment, a probable cause hearing is required on request. Pen C §991. The case must be dismissed unless the court finds probable cause to believe that (1) a public offense has been committed and (2) the defendant is guilty of committing it. No notice is required, and the motion may be made orally following entry of a not guilty plea. Pen C §991. For further discussion, see §6.23.

In felony cases prosecuted by complaint, a preliminary hearing to test probable cause is required. See Pen C §871. Preliminary hearings are discussed in chap 8.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.20 VII. CORPORATE SUMMONS

When an accusatory pleading is filed against a corporation, the court must issue a summons rather than a warrant of arrest. Penal Code §1390 provides that the summons must be "signed by the judge with his name of office, requiring the corporation to appear before him, at a specified time and place, to answer the charge, the time to be not less than 10 days after the issuing of the summons." For form of the summons, see Pen C §1391.

At the time appointed in the summons, the magistrate proceeds in the same manner as in other cases. Pen C §1393.

VIII. BENCH WARRANT

§4.21 A. Purpose

A bench warrant is the process used to bring a nonappearing defendant before the court when his or her personal presence is required. Pen C §§978.5-981, 985-986, 1195-1197, 1284-1285. See 4 Witkin & Epstein, California Criminal Law, Pretrial Proceedings §102 (3d ed 2000). See also CCP §1993 (bench warrant may issue for witness's failure to obey subpoena).

At any time after the order for a bench warrant is made, whether the court is sitting or not, the clerk, or if there is no clerk, the judge or justice of the court, on application of the prosecuting attorney, may (or, in case of a warrant issued for failure to appear for judgment, must) issue a bench warrant. Pen C §§978.5 (general section relating to bench warrants), 1196 (bench warrant for judgment).

On issuance of a bench warrant for a subpoenaed witness who fails to appear, see §4.36.

B. Requirements for Issuance

§4.22 1. Failure of Defendant to Appear When Required

Penal Code §978.5 sets forth a nonexclusive list of situations in which a defendant's failure to appear may result in the issuance of a bench warrant by a judge or magistrate:

- The defendant was ordered by a judge or magistrate to personally appear in court at a specific time and place.
- The defendant was released from custody on bail and ordered by a judge or magistrate, or other person authorized to accept bail, to personally appear in court at a specific time and place.
- The defendant was released from custody on his or her own recognizance and promised to personally appear in court at a specific time and place.
- The defendant was released from custody or arrest on citation by a peace officer or other person authorized to issue citations and signed a promise to personally appear in court at a specific time and place.
- The defendant authorized counsel to appear for him or her, but the court or magistrate ordered the defendant to personally appear in court at a specific time and place.

Ø Note: Courts cannot have a policy of always requiring misdemeanor defendants to be present in court when the defendant wishes to appear through counsel. Unless the defendant's appearance is required by law (see, e.g., Pen C §977(a)(2)), an order requiring the defendant's personal presence must be based on the circumstances of each case. Simmons v Superior Court (1988) 203 CA3d 71, 249 CR 721.

- An information or indictment was filed in the superior court and the court fixed the date and place for the defendant to personally appear for arraignment.

If a defendant who has been released on bail, or on his or her own recognizance (see Pen C §1318), fails to appear for arraignment when his or her personal presence is necessary, the court, in addition to ordering bail forfeited, may order the clerk to issue a bench warrant. Pen C §979. See also Brewer v Municipal Court (1961) 193 CA2d 510, 514, 14 CR 391.

Ø Note: Willful failure to appear in order to evade the court's process when the person has been released on his or her own recognizance is a misdemeanor in a misdemeanor case and a felony in a felony case. Pen C §1320. In felony cases, willful failure to appear in order to evade the court's process while the defendant is released on bail is a felony. Pen C §1320.5.

Under Pen C §1043(e), the trial court in a misdemeanor case may issue a bench warrant if the defendant does not appear at or during trial and the absence was not previously authorized under Pen C §977.

If the defendant fails to appear for judgment when his or her personal appearance is necessary, the court may (or on application of the prosecuting attorney must) direct the clerk to issue a bench warrant for the defendant's arrest. Pen C §1195.

The court is not required to issue a bench warrant when a defendant is not in court when his or her case is called. When the court has reason to believe that there is an excuse for the defendant's absence, the court can continue the case for an amount of time it considers reasonable. Pen C §1305.1. It is not uncommon for courts to put cases over to a later time the same day, without immediately issuing a bench warrant, when counsel represents that the client has an excuse or has indicated that he or she will be there later.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.23 2. Order Increasing Defendant's Bail

If bail in a felony case is increased (see Pen C §1269c) and the defendant is not present in court when the order is made, the court may issue a bench warrant. Pen C §§985-986.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.24 C. Form and Contents of Warrant

Statutory forms for bench warrants are set out in Pen C §§981 (failure to appear for felony arraignment) and 1197 (failure to appear for judgment). The felony arraignment form may be adapted for use in misdemeanor cases. Pen C §690. Additional forms approved by the Judicial Council follow Pen C §814.

A bench warrant must name or describe the person to be arrested. See §4.8. If the offense is bailable, the court must fix the amount of bail and endorse on the warrant an order admitting the defendant to bail in the fixed amount. Pen C §982.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.25 D. Execution of Warrant

A bench warrant may be served in any county in the same manner as an arrest warrant. Pen C §§983, 1198.

A bench warrant, like an arrest warrant, must be served within a reasonable time after its issuance; otherwise, the defendant may be entitled to dismissal on the ground that he or she has been deprived of the right to a speedy trial. People v Mitchell (1972) 8 C3d 164, 104 CR 348 (dismissal for unjustified, prejudicial 13-month delay in service). See also chap 19 on speedy trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.26 E. Duty to Bring Arrestee Before Court or Magistrate

A bench warrant for failure to appear at arraignment directs the officer to whom it is addressed to bring the defendant before the issuing court or, on the defendant's request, before any magistrate in the issuing county or in the county of arrest for the purpose of giving bail. Pen C §§981-982, 984, 1284.

If a bench warrant is issued for the defendant's failure to appear for judgment, it directs the arresting officer to bring the defendant before the issuing court for judgment. Pen C §1197. Whether a warrant is served in the county in which it was issued or in another county, the officer serving it must bring the defendant before the issuing court or deliver him or her to any peace officer of the issuing court, who must bring the defendant before the issuing court. Pen C §1199.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.27 IX. SEARCH WARRANT

A search warrant is a written order issued by a magistrate and directed to a peace officer, commanding the officer to search for personal property and bring it before the magistrate. Pen C §1523.

"If the primary object of the search is to gather evidence of criminal activity, a criminal search warrant may be obtained only on a showing of probable cause to believe that relevant evidence will be found in the place to be searched." Michigan v Clifford (1984) 464 US 287, 294, 78 L Ed 2d 477, 484, 104 S Ct 641. The warrant must particularly describe "the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized." US Const amend IV; Cal Const art I, §13. For discussion of Illinois v Gates (1983) 462 US 213, 76 L Ed 2d 527, 103 S Ct 2317, which enunciated a commonsense, totality-of-the-circumstances test for determining probable cause in search warrants, see §4.5.

The exclusionary rule does not apply to search warrants issued by a detached and neutral magistrate if they are reasonably relied on by the police, acting in good faith. U.S. v Leon (1984) 468 US 897, 82 L Ed 2d 677, 104 S Ct 3405 (affidavit did not provide probable cause); Massachusetts v Sheppard (1984) 468 US 981, 82 L Ed 2d 737, 104 S Ct 3424 (defect in warrant form). See also People v Rodrigues-Fernandez (1991) 235 CA3d 543, 286 CR 700 (court applied Leon). For further discussion of the "good faith" exception to the exclusionary rule, see §16.18.

The statutory provisions governing search warrants are in Pen C §§1523-1542. See chap 16 for discussion of search and seizure motions.

Search warrants are kept on file by the magistrate who authorized the warrant. Clerical personnel generally file them consecutively by number according to when the warrant was issued, or by street address. The first warrant issued in each new year would bear the number one.

Police are required to leave a receipt for any property taken. Pen C §1535. See also Fed R Crim P 41(f) (officer taking property under the warrant must give a copy of the warrant and a receipt for property taken). Failure to display or provide a copy of the warrant at the time of execution does not, however, require suppression. See People v Calabrese (2002) 101 CA4th 79, 85, 123 CR2d 570. For comprehensive treatment of the law applicable to search warrants, particularly the constitutional prerequisites to issuing the warrant, the warrant's form and content, and the procedures available for challenging the warrant, see 4 Witkin & Epstein, California Criminal Law, Illegally Obtained Evidence §§79-142 (3d ed 2000), and LaFave, Search and Seizure (Criminal Practice Series) (4th ed 2004).

X. SUBPOENAS

§4.28 A. Forms, Issuance, and Service

A defendant in a criminal case has the right to compel the attendance of witnesses on his or her behalf. Cal Const art I, §15; Pen C §686(3). The state has the same right to compel the attendance of witnesses. Govt C §204. In either case, the process ordinarily used to compel the attendance of a witness is a subpoena.

However, when a material witness is imprisoned in a state prison or in a jail in another county, the party desiring to obtain his or her attendance in a criminal proceeding, a preliminary hearing, or a grand jury proceeding must obtain a court order for the witness's temporary removal and production before the judge, magistrate, or grand jury. See Pen C §§1567, 2621. If the witness is incarcerated in a state prison outside the county in which the request is made, the district attorney, defense counsel, or the defendant must file an affidavit "showing that the testimony is material and necessary." Pen C §2621. The court's order will be addressed to the sheriff of the county in which the court issuing the order is located. Pen C §§1567, 2621. There is no requirement that the inmate witness be served with a subpoena before the removal order issues. People v Garcia (2008) 160 CA4th 124, 130, 72 CR3d 544.

There are two types of subpoenas: a subpoena, which requires a person to attend a hearing (Pen C §1326(a)), and a subpoena duces tecum (Pen C §1326(b)-(d)), which requires specified evidence to be produced in court. See Pen C §1327 (form of subpoena). See also §§4.32-4.35 (quashing subpoena and subpoena duces tecum).

Counsel can obtain records from a nonparty directly if the person or entity whose records are being sought consents and signs a form authorizing release of information to counsel. See Pen C §1326(d). Without consent, counsel may cause a subpoena duces tecum to be issued directing the custodian of records to deliver the records to the court. Evid C §1560(b); Pen C §1326(b)-(c). The subpoena duces tecum, however, does not entitle the person subpoenaing records to have access to them. When the defense issues a subpoena duces tecum to a nonparty, the court may order an in camera hearing to decide whether the defense is entitled to receive the documents; the court may not order the documents disclosed to the prosecution except as required by Pen C §1054.3. Likewise, a judicial determination must first be made that the prosecution is entitled to receive subpoenaed documents. People v Blair (1979) 25 C3d 640, 651, 159 CR 818.

Among the persons authorized to sign and issue a subpoena under Pen C §1326 are a judge or magistrate, court clerk, district attorney or his or her investigator, public defender or his or her investigator, and the attorney of record for the defendant. See Pen C §1326(a). In some counties, attorneys can obtain presigned subpoena forms from the clerk's office. Use of Judicial Council Form CR-125 (Order to Attend Court or Provide Documents: Subpoena/Subpoena Duces Tecum (Criminal and Juvenile)) is mandatory. See Cal Rules of Ct 1.31. Using commercial software containing the Judicial Council form allows information required on the subpoena to be saved and reused if the court appearance is changed and new subpoenas need to be reissued. This practice is particularly helpful in cases with a large number of witnesses.

Ø Note: Defendants are entitled to obtain as many blank subpoenas as they need from the clerk or judge of the court where the case is to be tried. Pen C §1326(a)(3).

Penal Code §1327, which sets out the requirements for subpoenas duces tecum in criminal cases, requires only that the person subpoenaed be told the name of the case, where and when to appear, and what documents or papers, if any, are requested. Code of Civil Procedure §1985(b), which requires service of an affidavit or declaration showing good cause for production of the requested items with a subpoena duces tecum, does not apply in criminal cases. Michael B. v Superior Court (2002) 103 CA4th 1384, 127 CR2d 454.

Ø Note: Civil discovery rules generally do not apply in criminal cases. See, e.g., Pitchess v Superior Court (1974) 11 C3d 531, 536, 113 CR 897 (CCP §§1985.3-1985.4, for subpoenaing consumer records—called "personal records" (e.g., financial, medical, and educational records, including electronic data of those records)—that do not apply in criminal cases). They do apply, however, in civil commitment proceedings, including the special proceedings of a civil nature authorized by the Sexually Violent Predator Act (Welf & I C §§6600-6609.3). People v Yartz (2005) 37 C4th 529, 537, 36 CR3d 328. See, e.g., Lee v Superior Court (2009) 177 CA4th 1108, 1112, 99 CR3d 712 (CCP §1985 affidavit requirement for subpoena duces tecum).

Subpoenas may be personally served by anyone except a defendant in the case. Personal service means delivering the subpoena to the person to be served. Holiness Church v Metropolitan Church Ass'n (1910) 12 CA 445, 448, 107 P 633. See Pen C §1328. A telegraphic copy of a subpoena may be served in place of the original. Pen C §1328a. Peace officers are required to serve subpoenas in their county for either the prosecution or the defendant. Pen C §1328(a). Because of fiscal restraints, however, timely service may not always be possible. Many private defense attorneys use private process servers or investigators.

Subpoenas for minors are served on the parent, guardian, or other person specified in Pen C §1328(b), or on the minor directly if the minor is age 12 or older. Pen C §1328(b). Witness fees are provided to the person served on behalf of the minor. Pen C §1328(b).

Security can be required of a material witness when there is good cause to believe that he or she will not appear to testify. Pen C §1332(a). See also Pen C §§878-880, 882, 1336, 1345.

Service must be made in time to allow the witness a reasonable time for preparation and travel to the place of attendance. CCP §1987(a). Special time requirements apply for substituted service on police officers (discussed in §4.30).

A subpoena duces tecum of business records is governed by Evid C §§1560-1567. See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook §4.11 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009); Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 13 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000). Production of official writings is governed by Evid C §§1530-1532. See Evidence Benchbook §§5.1-5.5; Effective Intro of Evidence, chap 36.

Ø Note: In civil cases, the subpoenaing party may direct the witness to make the records available for inspection or copying at the witness's business address under reasonable conditions during normal business hours, rather than delivering copies to the court. Evid C §1560(e). This option is not available in criminal cases. Evid C §1560(e); Pen C §1326(b).

The subpoena server must give a written return of service to the subpoenaing party that states whether service was made (including time and place of service). Pen C §1328(a).

Ø Note: Counsel should bring the return of service to court if requesting a continuance to try to find the witness. The subpoena server may also be needed to testify to efforts made to find the witness. See Pen C §1050. The return of service will also be needed if the witness fails to appear. See §4.36.

A witness who has been subpoenaed may be placed "on call" by oral or written agreement with the party who subpoenaed the witness if the witness agrees to appear on another date and agrees to other forms of notice. Pen C §1331.5.

Ø Note: If the witness is in court when the case is continued, counsel can ask the judge to order the witness back on a particular date.

Service may be effected by mail or messenger under Pen C §1328d. Service by mail or messenger is not effected until the witness acknowledges receipt of the subpoena by telephone, by mail, or in person, and identifies him- or herself by date of birth and driver's license or Department of Motor Vehicles identification card number. Pen C §1328d. See §4.36 on remedies if witness fails to appear.

Ø Note: Service by "messenger" (Pen C §1328d) probably means delivery by a person under conditions other than those that would qualify for personal service. If "messenger" meant personal service, the acknowledgment required by §1328d would be unnecessary, because a proper personal service needs no such acknowledgment to be effective. The legislature should consider amending the statute (Pen C §1328d) to include service by fax and e-mail with the appropriate acknowledgment.

§4.29 B. Geographic Factors Affecting Issuance and Service

If the distance from a witness's residence to the place of trial is less than 150 miles, an ordinary subpoena is sufficient. Pen C §1330. If the distance is 150 miles or more (but within California), the party seeking the witness must present an affidavit or declaration (CCP §2015.5) to a judge in the court in which the offense is triable, a superior court judge, or a justice of the California Supreme Court, stating a belief that the witness's evidence is material and his or her attendance is necessary. Pen C §1330. The subpoena is valid only if the court then endorses on it an order for the witness's attendance. Pen C §1330. If only documents are subpoenaed, the 150-mile limitations do not apply. Pen C §1330.

Ø Note: If there is not enough room on the subpoena to include the mileage endorsement, some practitioners prepare a separate order and endorsement, which they staple to the subpoena. Counsel should ascertain local practice before relying on this format.

If a witness is outside California, the party desiring the witness's presence at trial must comply with the Uniform Act to Secure the Attendance of Witnesses From Without the State in Criminal Cases (Pen C §§1334-1334.6). As with a witness who lives more than 150 miles from the place of trial, only a judge can authorize an effort to secure the presence of a witness who is outside California. Pen C §1334.2; People v Cavanaugh (1968) 69 C2d 262, 266, 70 CR 438. Subpoenaed out-of-state witnesses are exempt from arrest or service of civil or criminal process. Pen C §1334.5.

If counsel represents a witness in California subpoenaed to testify out of state, counsel should appear at the hearing held under the Uniform Act in the California county where the witness resides to see if the subpoena will issue. See Pen C §1334.2. The California judge determines whether the witness should be taken into custody. Pen C §1334.3. The witness is entitled to witness fees and reimbursement for additional expenses. Pen C §1334.3.

The 150-mile limitation on the attendance of witnesses does not apply to the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum if the subpoena does not require the attendance of the custodian of records. Pen C §1330. The 150-mile limitation also does not apply in civil cases. CCP §1989.

§4.30 C. Subpoenaing Law Enforcement Officers

Peace officers. Subpoena of a peace officer must be by personal service or by service of two copies to the peace officer's immediate superior or the agent designated by his or her immediate superior to receive such service. In some counties, service may be done electronically, e.g., by e-mail, computer modem, or fax, to the officer's immediate superior or agent. The superior or agent must acknowledge receipt of the subpoena. Pen C §1328(c).

If the subpoena is served on the superior or his or her agent, the superior or agent may refuse to accept service if that person knows that he or she does not have enough time to deliver a copy of the subpoena to the subpoenaed officer. Pen C §1328(d). If the subpoena is accepted by the superior or his or her agent, but that person later determines that he or she will be unable to deliver it to the subpoenaed officer, the superior or agent must notify the subpoena server or his or her office or agent of that fact no less than 48 hours before the hearing date. Pen C §1328(f). If the subpoena is served on the superior less than 5 working days before the hearing date, the superior may refuse to accept service if he or she is not reasonably certain that service may be completed. Pen C §1328(e).

When a superior accepts service and no exception exists excusing compliance, the superior must serve the officer being subpoenaed as soon as possible, and in no event later than a time that will allow the officer to comply with the subpoena. Pen C §1328(c). When a California Highway Patrol officer's immediate superior is served with a subpoena for the officer, it must be served on the officer on the officer's first work day following acceptance of the subpoena. Failure of the superior to deliver the subpoena is not a defect in service. Pen C §1328(g).

Private parties who subpoena peace officers for civil actions or proceedings must pay a $150 deposit to the officer's department. Govt C §§68096.1-68097.2. These provisions are, by their terms, inapplicable to criminal proceedings.

A subpoena to compel the attendance of a member of the California Highway Patrol at an administrative per se hearing (see Veh C §13558 concerning those hearings) requires a $150 deposit even if the driver is indigent. Nick v DMV (1993) 12 CA4th 1407, 16 CR2d 305; Govt C §68097.2.

Department of Justice employees. Special rules govern attempts to compel the appearance of current or former employees of the Department of Justice, including FBI and DEA Special Agents. A request under 28 CFR §§16.22-16.29 must be presented to the U.S. Attorney or Assistant Attorney General. When the United States is not a party to the case, an affidavit by the party seeking the testimony or documents must be submitted that sets forth a summary of the testimony or information sought and its relevance to the proceeding. 28 CFR §16.22.

The payment of witness fees is governed by Pen C §1329. Under §1329, the court or magistrate has the discretion to grant $12 per day for each day's attendance, a reasonable sum for necessary expenses, and, if the witness is employed, up to $18 per day rather than the $12 per day if the employer does not pay the employee's wages for the time lost because of the employee's appearance in court.

Expenses for out-of-state witnesses are governed by the Uniform Act to Secure the Attendance of Witnesses From Without the State in Criminal Cases (Pen C §§1334-1334.6) and are specified in Pen C §1334.2.

Under Govt C §68098, fees for witnesses in criminal cases are charged against the same fund as jurors' fees in criminal cases. Jurors' fees in criminal cases are county charges under CCP §215. In other words, witness fees are paid by the county rather than by the party.

In criminal cases, a court does not have the power to order a party to pay additional compensation to a witness as a sanction for the party's abuse of process. Fabricant v Superior Court (1980) 104 CA3d 905, 163 CR 894.

Ø Note: It appears permissible for either the prosecution or defense to pay the reasonable cost of travel and lodging for a witness who does not reside in the local area when the court refuses to authorize such costs. However, an unreasonable expenditure of money on a witness subjects the witness to impeachment under Evid C §780(f) on the ground that the witness was influenced by the monetary attention paid to him or her.

E. Quashing Subpoena

§4.32 1. Subpoena for Witness

A trial court may quash a subpoena that is regular on its face when the facts justify such an action. See CCP §1987.1. See also People v Rhone (1968) 267 CA2d 652, 657, 73 CR 463. It may be quashed when the prospective witness would not have contributed material evidence. People v Rhone, supra (defendant failed to show how police chief's testimony was relevant to his case); Civiletti v Municipal Court (1981) 116 CA3d 105, 110, 172 CR 83 (same regarding U.S. Attorney General).

The trial court does not have the power to quash a subpoena relating to a material witness (People v Superior Court (Long) (1976) 56 CA3d 374, 126 CR 465) or a subpoena relating to a witness who can establish the materiality of another witness (People v Singletary (1969) 276 CA2d 601, 81 CR 79).

The power to quash a subpoena for a witness includes a witness subpoenaed for a hearing on a motion as well as a witness subpoenaed to testify at trial. People v Rummler (1975) 44 CA3d 638, 642, 118 CR 872.

For further discussion of motions to quash in the civil context, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§4.45-4.51 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995) (grounds, forms, and procedure). A sample motion to quash a subpoena (duces tecum) is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §4.2 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.33 2. Subpoena Duces Tecum

The issuance of a subpoena duces tecum under Pen C §§1326-1327 is a ministerial act requiring only that the described records be produced in court; it does not authorize legal access to the records by the party who obtained the subpoena until the court has decided that the party is legally entitled to receive them. Pen C §1326(c); People v Hammon (1997) 15 C4th 1117, 65 CR2d 1; People v Blair (1979) 25 C3d 640, 651, 159 CR 818.

A subpoena duces tecum may be issued in a criminal case to require the production of documentary evidence in the possession of a person or entity who is not a party to the proceeding. Pitchess v Superior Court (1974) 11 C3d 531, 113 CR 897. After such a subpoena has been issued, the person or entity who is ordered to produce the documentary evidence has the right to appear in court and show cause why the records should not be revealed to the party who issued the subpoena. Pacific Lighting Leasing Co. v Superior Court (1976) 60 CA3d 552, 131 CR 559. The court may hold an in camera hearing to decide whether the subpoenaing party is entitled to receive the documents. Pen C §1326(c). If an in camera hearing is held with respect to a defense-issued subpoena, the prosecution must receive notice of the hearing. People v Superior Court (Humberto S.) (2008) 43 C4th 737, 749, 76 CR3d 276. For further discussion of discovery, see chap 11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.34 3. Alternatives to Motion to Quash

As an alternative or in addition to moving to quash (discussed in §§4.32-4.33), counsel can object to the subpoenaed witness or evidence during the hearing or trial. Spencer v Hibernia Bank (1960) 186 CA2d 702, 9 CR 867. Objections may also be raised as defenses during contempt proceedings if the witness refuses to appear or testify. See 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Witnesses §28 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.35 F. Mandate When Motion to Quash Denied

The appropriate remedy when a motion to quash is denied is to file a petition for writ of mandate. The burden is on the party seeking the writ to demonstrate that the trial court abused its discretion. Pitchess v Superior Court (1974) 11 C3d 531, 535, 113 CR 897. For discussion and forms regarding writ of mandate, see chap 42 (writs); Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases, chaps 7-8 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

§4.36 G. Counsel's Options When Witness Fails to Appear

When a witness was not subpoenaed and fails to appear for a hearing or trial, counsel's only remedy is to request a continuance. Counsel must give opposing counsel at least 2 court days' notice if counsel knows in advance that the witness is unavailable. Pen C §§1050, 1050.5 (discussed in §§20.9-20.12).

If the witness was properly subpoenaed, counsel may ask the court to issue a bench warrant ordering the sheriff to bring the witness before the court. Pen C §§881, 980, 1196; CCP §1993. The court may also punish disobedience of a properly served subpoena as a contempt. CCP §§1209(a)(9), 1991; Pen C §1331; In re Keller (1975) 49 CA3d 663, 123 CR 223 (witness appeared but refused to answer questions). There are extra requirements and some exceptions:

- A subpoena served under Pen C §1328d (by mail or messenger) must have been issued and acknowledged according to the §1328d requirements to support contempt. Such a subpoena, however, even though issued and acknowledged according to the §1328d requirements, will not support issuance of a bench warrant. Pen C §1328d.
- If a subpoena was for a minor and was served on a parent, guardian, or other person specified in Pen C §1328(b), the adult served may be punished by contempt for failure to produce the minor. Pen C §1328(b)(1).
- When a witness has been subpoenaed and placed "on call" by agreement with the party who subpoenaed the witness, but fails to appear according to the agreement, the witness may only be punished by contempt if the subpoena stated on its face that failure to appear according to any agreement was punishable as contempt. Pen C §1331.5; In re Garcia (1974) 41 CA3d 997, 116 CR 503.

When a subpoenaed witness fails to appear at a DMV administrative per se hearing (Veh C §13558(a)), Govt C §§11455.10 and 11455.20 provide the presiding officer may transmit to the superior court certification of facts to justify a contempt sanction for failure to appear, if the party issuing the subpoena so requests. Parris v Zolin (1996) 12 C4th 839, 50 CR2d 109. This certification serves to initiate contempt proceedings in the superior court, which must promptly file the certification and issue an order to show cause. 12 C4th at 845.

§5.1 I. OVERVIEW

The in-custody client's first impression of defense counsel is usually based on counsel's ability to secure the defendant's release from custody. Counsel can help the client post the bail listed on the bail schedule at the police station; specific bail amounts are set for each of the various crimes. See §5.19 on bail schedules. In some counties, a judge or bail commissioner is on duty at all times to determine whether an own recognizance (O.R.) release is appropriate or whether the bail figure set in the bail schedule should be lowered. (The police also use the bail magistrate to raise bail.) See the list of phone numbers for these "duty" judges and bail magistrates in the larger counties in §5.2. When this service exists, counsel should phone as soon as he or she has enough information to support an O.R. or lowered bail request. In counties without a 24-hour bail magistrate or duty judge, counsel may want to attempt to call the judge if counsel knows him or her well enough, or may want to wait until the defendant makes the first court appearance to make an O.R. or bail motion.

In addition to release through a judge or magistrate, in some larger jurisdictions sheriffs or custodians release prisoners on a citation to appear ("cite" them out) on what would otherwise be a bail matter to keep the jail population within the confines of federal court orders on overcrowding. People managing the O.R. project will generally tell counsel how the procedures work in a particular county.

If a large amount of money was seized when the defendant was arrested and the police believe it was the fruit of illegal activity, various agencies such as the Internal Revenue Service may file a notice of tax lien on the money. See 18 USC §§1961-1968 (Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO)); IRC §§6321-6322 (IRS liens); see also Health & S C §§11469-11495 (drug forfeitures). Once a tax lien has been filed, forfeiture proceedings take place. If no tax lien has been filed, defense counsel may move for a return of seized currency. See chap 57 on forfeiture.

Deposits of cash for bail by the defendant (and in some circumstances by third parties on his or her behalf) are subject to forfeiture and seizure under expansive forfeiture statutes. The practice of obtaining an assignment of cash on deposit for bail to cover fees is imperiled by these forfeiture procedures. It is common in federal and state proceedings for the prosecutor to inquire about the amount posted and the source of the deposit. See Pen C §1275.1. Also, §1275.1 provides that, when a bail bond is involved, the magistrate must be convinced that no portion of the pledge, surety, consideration, deposit, or indemnification has been feloniously obtained by anyone.

The type of release obtained by a defendant, or the amount of bail, is important to the prosecutor, particularly if there is a risk that the defendant will flee, is dangerous, or has threatened a victim. Prosecutors who obtain information on a defendant's conduct if released, but who will not be in court when the defendant appears, should put a note in the file sufficient to give the deputy who will appear enough information to make the necessary representations to the court.

§5.3 III. CHART: DEADLINES

Action	Deadline	Authority
Filing of formal complaint when misdemeanor citation filed with prosecutor.	Within 25 calendar days after arrest.	Pen C §853.6(e)
Fixing amount of bail after filing notice with magistrate or filing of formal complaint.	On filing of notice or complaint, magistrate may fix amount of bail.	Pen C §853.6(e)
Bail on old offense applied to new offense when recommitted following successful Pen C §995 motion.	If new charge is filed within 15 calendar days of dismissal, old bail must be applied to new offense.	Pen C §1303
Release from bail forfeiture and bond reinstatement when defendant can show satisfactory excuse for failure to appear.	Surety, or surety and defendant, must appear before court within 180 calendar days after notice of bail forfeiture; court may extend that period if defendant was ill, insane, or in custody.	Pen C §1305(c)(1)

IV. CITATION (NOTICE TO APPEAR)

§5.4 A. Citation Described

A citation is a written notice to appear issued by a peace officer, directing the defendant to appear at a time and place before a judge, magistrate, or other officer authorized by the court to accept bail. See Pen C §853.6; Veh C §40500. The Judicial Council prescribes the form of notices to appear. Sample forms are in the Judicial Council Forms pamphlet, available from the Judicial Council. The defendant must sign the promise to appear and either show "satisfactory identification" or provide a fingerprint; the defendant will then be given a copy and released. Pen C §853.6(d).

§5.5 B. Who May Be Released

Infraction and misdemeanor arrests: non-Vehicle Code. Generally, people arrested for committing an infraction or a misdemeanor who do not ask to be taken before a magistrate must be released on signing a written notice to appear. Pen C §853.6(a)(1). There are several exceptions. This procedure does not apply to crimes specified in Pen C §1270.1. Pen C §853.6(a)(3). In addition, an individual arrested for a misdemeanor violation of a domestic violence protective order issued under Pen C §13700, or under established law enforcement policies for handling domestic violence calls (see Pen C §13701), must be taken before a magistrate unless the arresting officer determines that there is not a reasonable likelihood that the offense will continue or resume, or that the arrestee will pose an imminent danger to people or property. Each county must develop a protocol to assist officers in making these decisions. See Pen C §853.6(a)(2).

An arresting officer also may decide not to release a person arrested for any misdemeanor if (Pen C §853.6(i)):

- The arrestee is so intoxicated that he or she may be a danger to himself or herself or to others;
- The arrestee requires medical examination or care or is unable to care for his or her own safety;
- The arrestee was arrested under one or more of the circumstances listed in Veh C §40302 or §40303(b);
- The arrestee has outstanding arrest warrants;
- The arrestee cannot provide satisfactory identification;
- Immediate release would jeopardize the prosecution of the offense or offenses for which the person was arrested, or any other offense or offenses;
- A reasonable likelihood exists that the offense or offenses would continue or resume, or that the safety of persons or property would be imminently endangered by releasing the arrestee;
- The arrestee demands to be taken before a magistrate or refuses to sign the notice to appear; or
- The officer has reason to believe the arrestee will not appear at the time and place specified in the notice.

The arresting officer who decides not to cite and release an individual arrested for a misdemeanor must state the reason on a form provided by the law enforcement agency. Pen C §853.6(i).

Infraction and misdemeanor arrests: Vehicle Code. An individual arrested for a Vehicle Code violation designated as a misdemeanor or an infraction, or for violating a local traffic ordinance, must be released unless he or she asks to be taken before a magistrate (Veh C §§40302-40304, 40500, 40504), or unless the person arrested (Veh C §40302):

- Has no driver's license or other satisfactory evidence of identity;
- Refuses to give his or her written promise to appear in court; or
- Is charged with driving under the influence (Veh C §23152).

Wobbler. A peace officer may not cite and release a defendant arrested without a warrant for a violation that could be charged as either a felony or a misdemeanor (called a "wobbler"). 58 Ops Cal Atty Gen 886 (1975).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.6 C. Prosecutor's and Magistrate's Duties

The arresting officer files a duplicate copy of the notice to appear with the prosecuting attorney, unless the prosecutor has directed a filing with the magistrate. Pen C §853.6(e)(2)-(3). If the matter involves an infraction, the officer must file the notice to appear with a magistrate. Pen C §853.6(e)(1).

When a notice to appear is filed with the prosecutor, a formal complaint from that office must be filed with the magistrate within 25 calendar days after the arrest. Pen C §853.6(e). Thereafter, the magistrate has the duty to fix bail.

Failure to file a complaint within 25 calendar days does not bar the prosecutor from charging the case. It does, however, require the issuance of a new arrest warrant or citation. Pen C §853.6(e).

The defendant complies with a notice to appear by (see Pen C §§853.6(e)-(f), 977(a); Veh C §40507):

- Appearing personally at the time and place specified;
- Depositing the amount of bail set by schedule or by the magistrate; or
- Appearing by counsel, when permitted. If the arrestee has been charged with a misdemeanor offense involving driving under the influence, in an appropriate case the court may order a defendant to be present for arraignment, at the time of plea, or at sentencing. Pen C §977(a)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.8 E. Optional Bail Forfeiture in Infraction Cases

When a defendant who has deposited bail fails to appear when the case is called for arraignment, the general practice is for the magistrate to declare the bail forfeited and order that no further proceedings occur. A forfeiture of bail on a citation is equivalent to a conviction for purposes of infraction violations of the Vehicle Code and for administrative sanctions of the Department of Motor Vehicles. Veh C §§1803(a)(2), 13103. The Boykin-Tahl requirements for a valid plea of guilty to a misdemeanor or felony charge have no application to optional bail forfeitures in infraction cases. Mills v Municipal Court (1973) 10 C3d 288, 302 n11, 110 CR 329.

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/5 RELEASE PROCEDURES/§5.9 F. Effect of Failure to Appear in Misdemeanor Cases

§5.9 F. Effect of Failure to Appear in Misdemeanor Cases

After a defendant has been released on a promise to appear, an arrest warrant can issue on the charge if the defendant (Pen C §§853.6(f), 853.8, 1320; Veh C §40514):

- Fails to appear either in person or, if permitted, by counsel;
- Fails to deposit bail; or
- Fails to comply with the terms of the judgment, if any.

If the defendant fails to appear for trial in a misdemeanor case, the court may:

- Proceed with the trial in the defendant's absence if the court finds that the defendant has authorized counsel to proceed in his or her absence under Pen C §977(a), or has absented himself or herself voluntarily with full knowledge that the trial is to be held or is being held (Pen C §1043(e));
- Continue the case (Pen C §§853.6(e), 1043(e)(1));
- Order bail forfeited or revoke the defendant's O.R. (Pen C §§853.6(e), 1043(e)(2)); or
- Issue a bench warrant (Pen C §§978.5, 1043(e)(3)).

Willful violation of a promise to appear is a misdemeanor, regardless of the disposition of the original charge. Pen C §853.7; Veh C §40508(a). See also Pen C §1320 (failure to appear after O.R. release).

For discussion of appearance by counsel only, see §§6.5, 35.12-35.13.

V. OWN RECOGNIZANCE (O.R.) RELEASE

§5.10 A. Guidelines

Under Cal Const art I, §12, "[a] person may be released on his or her own recognizance in the court's discretion." See also Pen C §1270(a) (defendant not charged with offense punishable by death may be released on O.R.). A defendant charged with only misdemeanor offenses, including a defendant arrested on an out-of-county warrant, is entitled to release on O.R. unless it will compromise public safety or will not reasonably ensure the defendant's appearance in court. Pen C §1270(a). In making this determination, the court considers the factors listed in Pen C §1275, applicable to setting bail. Pen C §1270(a). The court should consider factors that relate to the individual defendant; the general failure of persons accused of similar crimes to appear for trial is not an appropriate reason to deny O.R. release. People v Arnold (1976) 58 CA3d Supp 1, 5, 132 CR 922; see In re Podesto (1976) 15 C3d 921, 937, 127 CR 97 (denial of bail on appeal requires brief statement of reasons); In re William M. (1970) 3 C3d 16, 31, 89 CR 33 (juvenile court required to consider merits of each case when deciding to release juvenile from custody). The court is not, however, constitutionally required to give a written statement of its reasons for denying O.R. Van Atta v Scott (1980) 27 C3d 424, 166 CR 149. Own recognizance release is available before and during trial and on appeal. See In re Robinson (1971) 16 CA3d 539, 94 CR 148.

Ø Note: The court's order granting release must be followed. For example, a sheriff's practice of holding prisoners for 26 plus hours after receiving a release order raised the issue of deliberate indifference to the prisoners' constitutional rights sufficient to support a federal civil rights action. Berry v Baca (9th Cir 2004) 379 F3d 764, 773.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.11 B. Own Recognizance (O.R.) Hearing: When Required, Conduct of Hearing, and Conditions of Release

Unless the defendant is charged with one of the crimes discussed in the following paragraphs, O.R. release may be granted without a formal adversarial hearing or advance notice to the prosecutor. See §5.41. It is common for persons arrested on misdemeanors to be O.R.'d at arraignment on the basis of representations by defense counsel or a report submitted by an O.R. project. The court usually asks the prosecutor for any information he or she has concerning the defendant and for the prosecutor's position on whether the defendant should be O.R.'d. The prosecutor, however, need not be given any notice or opportunity to participate in the decision. See Williams v County of San Joaquin (1990) 225 CA3d 1326, 275 CR 302.

If the defendant is charged with a serious or violent felony (other than residential burglary), specified crimes of domestic violence, or certain violations of one of the protective orders specified in Pen C §273.6, the prosecutor must receive notice, and a hearing is required before the defendant may be released on O.R. (or at a bail lower than that specified for the offense in the bail schedule). Pen C §1270.1. Note, however, that for a defendant in custody, the hearing must take place within the time limits of Pen C §825 (normally, 48 hours). See Dant v Superior Court (1998) 61 CA4th 380, 71 CR2d 546 (trial court erred in setting misdemeanor defendant's O.R. request outside §825 limit, even though prosecutor had not received notice required by Pen C §1270.1(b)). On Pen C §825, see §§6.8-6.9, 19.14.

When the charge is a violent felony listed in Pen C §667.5(c), O.R. release is prohibited if the defendant willfully and without excuse failed to appear on an earlier felony. Pen C §1319(b). In all other cases involving such a felony, a court hearing is required, and the prosecutor must have notice and a reasonable opportunity to be heard. Pen C §1319(a). The judge must consider the following factors (Pen C §1319(b)):

- The existence of any outstanding felony warrants for the defendant;
- The information in the report prepared to conform with Pen C §1318.1 (e.g., criminal record and residence); and
- Any information presented by the prosecutor.

The court must state on the record the reasons for its decision. Pen C §1319(c).

A defendant may be required to submit to reasonable conditions of O.R. release. Pen C §1318. These conditions are meant to ensure public safety and the defendant's future appearance. In re York (1995) 9 C4th 1133, 1143, 40 CR2d 308. The court may condition an O.R. release on the individual defendant's needs as they relate to making subsequent court appearances. For example, if a defendant who uses drugs plans to enter a custodial drug rehabilitation facility, an O.R. release may be granted with this condition. People v Sylvestry (1980) 112 CA3d Supp 1, 7, 169 CR 575. The condition must be based on the specific facts of the defendant's case. In re York (1995) 9 C4th 1133, 1143, 40 CR2d 308.

> Ø Note: In York, the California Supreme Court also approved an O.R. release condition of submitting to random drug testing and warrantless search and seizure. In re York (1995) 9 C4th 1133, 1144, 40 CR2d 308. However, the Ninth Circuit has ruled that a district court could not condition O.R. release on a waiver of a defendant's Fourth Amendment rights. U.S. v Scott (9th Cir 2006) 450 F3d 863. While no California court has addressed this issue since Scott, the contrary ruling in York may no longer be good law.

§5.12 C. County O.R. Programs

A court may, with the concurrence of the board of supervisors, employ an investigative staff for the purpose of preparing a report and recommendation about whether a defendant should be released on his or her own recognizance (O.R.). Pen C §1318.1. The report submitted to the court must include written verification of outstanding warrants, any prior failure to appear, criminal record, and residence for the previous year, together with a recommendation on whether to O.R. the defendant. Pen C §1318.1.

Los Angeles County, for example, operates an O.R. program that offers all Los Angeles County criminal courts handling felony cases the investigative services of its personnel. The program is located at Pretrial Services Division of Superior Court, 433 Bauchet St., Room 100, Los Angeles, CA 90012; telephone: (213) 351-0373.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.13 D. Defendant's O.R. Agreement

To be released on his or her own recognizance, the defendant must file with the clerk of the court, or other person authorized by the court to accept bail, a signed release agreement that includes (Pen C §1318):

- Defendant's promise to appear at all times and places as ordered;
- Defendant's promise to obey all reasonable conditions imposed by the court;
- Defendant's promise not to leave the state without the court's permission;
- Defendant's agreement to waive extradition, if it becomes necessary; and
- Defendant's acknowledgment that he or she has been informed of the consequences of violating the conditions of release.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Revoking O.R. Release Order

§5.14 1. Requiring Defendant to Post Bail

Former Pen C §1318.6 allowed the court to revoke O.R. and require bail under certain circumstances. That statute was repealed in 1985 and has not been reenacted. Judges may therefore lack the authority to require bail after a defendant has been released on O.R. In practice, most circumstances that would give a court reason to want to set bail involve circumstances that allow the court to set bail, e.g., a new crime, or a failure to appear (Pen C §§1320-1320.5).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.15 2. Placing Defendant in Custody

The trial court has the authority to issue a bench warrant for a defendant who fails to appear, under Pen C §978.5. See also Pen C §853.8. In addition, a person on O.R. release who willfully fails to attend a scheduled court appearance is guilty of a misdemeanor if charged with a misdemeanor (Pen C §1320(a)), or guilty of a felony if charged with a felony (Pen C §§1320(b), 1320.5). There is a presumption that a person who willfully fails to appear within 14 days of his or her scheduled appearance date intended to evade the process of the court. Pen C §§1320-1320.5. Willful failure to attend a scheduled court appearance is also a misdemeanor under Pen C §853.7.

Ø Note: A defendant who fails to appear after signing an agreement that does not meet all the requirements of Pen C §1318 cannot be guilty of the offense of failure to appear; literal compliance with the statute is required. People v Mohammed (2008) 162 CA4th 920, 933, 76 CR3d 372.

VI. RELEASE ON BAIL

§5.16 A. Bail Defined

Bail permits a defendant to be released from actual custody into the constructive custody of a surety on a bond given to procure the defendant's release. The amount of bail must be specified in a court order or on the arrest warrant. Pen C §§815a, 1268, 1269a. The methods of posting bail are described in §§5.27-5.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.17 B. When Defendant Is Entitled to Bail

Before conviction, bail is a matter of right unless the offense is punishable by death, or a public safety exception is established. Cal Const art I, §12. The "public safety exception," allowing preventive detention, applies only to certain classes of felonies and to offenses listed in Pen C §292. See discussion in §5.21.

Before the defendant goes to court, bail may be posted according to the amount on the bail schedule. See §5.19 for discussion of bail schedules. Once the defendant appears in court, the judge or magistrate has the discretion to admit the defendant to bail. See Pen C §1268.

After a conviction, the defendant in a misdemeanor case has the right to have a bail amount fixed that will cover the period between conviction and the pronouncement of judgment. Pen C §1272(1)-(2). Although this right is "absolute," the trial court may impose reasonable conditions on granting bail if those conditions are related to public safety. In re McSherry (2003) 112 CA4th 856, 863, 5 CR3d 497. Bail is discretionary after conviction in felony cases. Pen C §1272(3).

The discretionary bail allowed after conviction of a felony and before sentencing (Pen C §1272(3)) is governed by Pen C §1272.1. If the application for bail on appeal is made at sentencing, "reasonable" notice to the prosecutor is required. Pen C §1274. If the application is made after sentencing, a 5-court-day notice to the prosecutor is required. Pen C §1272(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.18 C. Duration of Bail

Bail, once posted, stands until forfeited or exonerated to ensure the defendant's appearance at all stages of the proceedings on the original charge. Pen C §§1273, 1278(a), 1458-1459. If bail was posted through a bail bond agency, the agent and the defendant (or someone acting on his or her behalf) sign a bail agreement that usually fixes the term of the bail bond as 1 year. The defendant must pay a renewal premium for any additional period.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Fixing Amount of Bail

§5.19 1. Bail Schedules

In each county, a countywide schedule of bail exists for all bailable felony offenses and for all misdemeanors and infractions other than Vehicle Code infractions. Pen C §1269b(c). The schedules typically list the offense by code section and description, then indicate the recommended amount of bail. The bail schedule usually specifies additional amounts for cases in which sentence enhancing allegations or other extraordinary facts are present. The jails have a copy of the bail schedules. Pen C §1269b(f). They are also available from the court clerk. See Pen C §1269b(f). Defendants may post the amount of bail listed in the bail schedule to effect their release before appearing in court.

Once in court, either the prosecution or the defense may argue for a departure from the bail schedule. The prosecution may request additional amounts for aggravating or enhancing factors. Defense counsel may argue for a downward departure from the bail schedule on the basis of mitigating facts.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.20 2. Discretionary Authority; Bail Hearing

Bail is set initially by the magistrate at the defendant's first court appearance. Cal Const art I, §12; Pen C §1271. A magistrate is authorized to set bail in any amount he or she deems sufficient to ensure the defendant's appearance (see Pen C §§1268, 1269c, 1275, 1289), but the usual practice is to adhere to the amount set in the county's bail schedule unless conditions specific to the case point toward a higher or lower amount. See discussion of bail schedules in §5.19. A defendant who remains in custody is entitled to a review of the initial bail order within 5 days, but this review can be waived. Pen C §1270.2.

Counsel can request any superior court judge to set a higher or lower bail amount. See Pen C §§1269c, 1270.2, 1289. In addition, a peace officer may file a declaration stating that he or she does not believe that the amount of bail set in the schedule is sufficient to assure the defendant's appearance. Pen C §1269c. Defense counsel must give the prosecutor "reasonable notice" of any request for bail when bail is discretionary. Pen C §1274. Defense counsel must also notify the prosecutor of any request for a bail reduction or an O.R. release after the information or indictment has been filed. See 71 Ops Cal Atty Gen 64 (1988).

Traditionally, the bail hearing is informal and devised to discover salient information relating to permissible guidelines for setting bail. Either side may produce evidence through testimony, declarations, or representations. See Van Atta v Scott (1980) 27 C3d 424, 437, 166 CR 149.

It is important to present new evidence at a bail hearing. Another judge can change the original bail amount only for good cause. Pen C §1289. See In re Alberto (2002) 102 CA4th 421, 125 CR2d 526 ("good cause" requires change of circumstances; second judge had no authority to increase amount previously set because he disagreed with amount set by first judge); In re Annis (2005) 127 CA4th 1190, 26 CR3d 321 (court complied with §1289 requirements in revoking O.R. and setting bail at "no bail").

Ø Warning: It is unethical for counsel to request a change in the amount of bail without telling the judge of previous bail motions in the case. Di Sabatino v State Bar (1980) 27 C3d 159, 162 CR 458 (attorney disciplined).

3. Permissible Guidelines for Setting Bail

§5.21 a. California Constitution Article I, §12

The standards governing the setting of bail are set forth in Cal Const art I, §12. This section allows preventive detention. Under art I, §12, the court can deny bail in felony cases in which the facts are evident or the presumption great, if:

- The defendant inflicted "acts of violence" on another person, and the court finds, based on clear and convincing evidence, that there is a substantial likelihood that the person's release would result in great bodily harm to others;
- The court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant has threatened another with great bodily harm and there is substantial likelihood that the defendant would carry out the threat if released; or
- The defendant is charged with a capital crime. See People v Superior Court (Kim) (1993) 20 CA4th 936, 25 CR2d 38 (error for trial court to grant bail to minor charged with capital crime despite fact that death penalty could not be imposed).

Ø Note: Penal Code §292 includes specific sex offenses within Cal Const art I, §12's preventive detention scope. (These sex offenses are not mentioned by name in art I, §12.)

The phrase "when the facts are evident or the presumption great" was defined in In re Page (1927) 82 CA 576, 578, 255 P 887:

> [I]t is not necessary that the evidence should be so convincing as to justify a verdict against the accused, but it is sufficient if it points to him and induces the belief that he may have committed the offense charged.

The standard of clear and convincing evidence has been defined as requiring a finding of high probability, based on evidence so clear as to leave no substantial doubt, and sufficiently strong to command the unhesitating assent of every reasonable mind. In re Nordin (1983) 143 CA3d 538, 543, 192 CR 38.

Article I, §12, was found to be constitutional in In re Nordin, supra.

When bail is available, the following factors are considered in fixing the amount: the seriousness of the offense; the defendant's previous criminal record; and the probability that the defendant will make future court appearances.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.22 b. Additional Guidelines for Setting Bail

Bail during pending case. Penal Code §1275 lists several factors that the court must consider in setting, reducing, or denying bail:

- Public safety, which is the primary consideration;
- Seriousness of the offense charged, including these factors:
- Alleged injury to victim,
- Alleged threats to victim or witness to crime charged,
- Alleged use of firearm or other deadly weapon in commission of the crime charged, and
- Alleged use or possession of controlled substances by defendant.

Courts routinely consider several additional aspects in ruling on whether the defendant is likely to make future court appearances. Some of the more common areas of inquiry are:

- Does the defendant have ties to the community?
- Does the defendant live in the community?
- Does the defendant's family live in the area?
- Is the defendant employed locally (give length of employment)?
- Does the defendant own property in the community?
- What is the value of the bond to the defendant (defendant's relative wealth as it affects value to him or her of bond)?
- Are there express indications by the defendant that he or she will not appear at future court hearings?
- Does the defendant have a prior record of failure to appear?

Special rules in Pen C §1275 apply when specified drug offenses are charged against the defendant.

A defendant who is charged with a serious or violent felony (other than residential burglary), specified crimes of domestic violence, or certain violations of one of the protective orders specified in Pen C §273.6 cannot be released on bail in an amount different (either higher or lower) from the bail schedule without an adversarial hearing. This hearing can be held as early as the date of arraignment. Pen C §1270.1; Dant v Superior Court (1998) 61 CA4th 380, 71 CR2d 546. If the magistrate deviates from the countywide bail schedule, the reasons for that decision must be stated on the record. If any threats were made against the victim or a witness, the court must address those issues on the record in relation to any bail set. Pen C §1270.1(d). Guidelines the court must consider at the hearing are in Pen C §1270.1(c).

> Ø Note: To allow for meaningful review, trial courts in all instances must clearly articulate on the record their reasons for deviating from the bail schedule. Facts, and not mere conclusions, must be set forth on the record. In re Christie (2001) 92 CA4th 1105, 112 CR2d 495.

If the court reduces bail below the amount established by the bail schedule approved for the county for a person charged with a serious felony, the court must make a finding, on the record, of unusual circumstances. Pen C §1275(c).

Bail pending probation or appeal. In misdemeanor cases, bail must be granted as a matter of right pending sentencing and following judgment; in all other cases, bail is discretionary. Pen C §1272. Although a convicted misdemeanant has an absolute right to bail, a court may impose reasonable conditions related to public safety. In re McSherry (2003) 112 CA4th 856, 861, 5 CR3d 497. The criteria the trial court must consider in deciding whether to set bail pending probation or appeal are in Pen C §1272.1. Pen C §1272. There are differing standards for granting bail in misdemeanor and felony cases, according to §1272; those differences do not violate equal protection of the law. In re Podesto (1976) 15 C3d 921, 931, 127 CR 97.

§5.23 4. Increasing or Reducing Bail

By the time defense counsel enters a case, police agencies may have already applied for and received a deviation of bail to a higher amount than that called for in the bail schedule. See Pen C §1269c. If this has occurred, the bail commissioner, magistrate, or judge who granted the deviation should be contacted and an attempt made to return the bail to its original figure or to a lower amount. See Pen C §1269c. In both felony and misdemeanor cases, the court has the authority to modify a bail order during the proceedings if new facts are brought to the court's attention. Pen C §§1289, 1458.

If the police have not requested a bail figure higher than that in the bail schedule, defense counsel may wish to seek a lower bail figure.

Ø Warning: Keep in mind that a request for deviation will involve the arresting agency, and facts may be elicited that work to the client's detriment, such as his or her parole status.

§5.24 5. Hearing to Determine if Bail Deposit Feloniously Obtained

Once the court has set the amount of bail, the source of bail funds becomes important. The court cannot accept a bail bond unless the judge is convinced that no portion of the consideration, pledge, security, deposit, or indemnification paid, given, made, or promised for its execution was feloniously obtained by the defendant. Pen C §1275.1. Thus the court may inquire into the legitimacy of the source of any bail, either proffered or accepted. Pen C §1275.1. This suggests an evidentiary hearing procedure, called a "Nebbia hearing" in federal court, after U.S. v Nebbia (2d Cir 1966) 357 F2d 303.

Handling of fee money must be carefully considered in view of the criminal penalties enacted in the past few years. See §§3.15, 57.33 for discussion of forfeiture and criminal penalties.

If the court concludes that the source of the bail bond is a product of criminal activity, the bail must not be accepted or, if already accepted, must be returned. The reason for not allowing bail to be posted that is the product of criminal activity is that the primary purpose of bail is to provide a financial incentive for the defendant to appear in court. The strength of this incentive depends on the defendant's commitment to assets pledged as bail. If the assets are illegally obtained, or represent the "business expense" of a larger criminal enterprise, there may be minimal incentive for the defendant to appear at court hearings. U.S. v Ellis DeMarchena (SD Cal 1971) 330 F Supp 1223, 1226.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.25 6. Excessive Bail Prohibited

"Excessive bail may not be required." Cal Const art I, §12(c). However, bail is not "excessive" merely because the defendant cannot post the amount fixed. In re Burnette (1939) 35 CA2d 358, 360, 95 P2d 684.

§5.26 E. Conditions of Bail

Magistrates have the authority to set bail on conditions that they consider appropriate. Pen C §1269c. The nature of the conditions is left to the court's sound discretion, as long as they serve the purpose of bail. See Pen C §1269c. For example, a magistrate may (1) require a defendant to surrender his or her passport, driver's license, or other document with a rational nexus to mobility; (2) require the defendant to appear at a designated location or agency at appointed times; or (3) condition bail on the defendant's not traveling outside of a designated geographic area. The court may order a defendant not to intimidate, dissuade, or contact victims and witnesses. Pen C §136.2. However, imposition of a bail condition must not violate the defendant's procedural due process rights. See Gray v Superior Court (2005) 125 CA4th 629, 23 CR3d 50 (trial court violated defendant's procedural due process rights by suspending his medical license as bail condition without prior notice). The same limitations that apply to O.R. release conditions probably apply to release on bail. See §5.11.

Defense counsel can also use imaginative thinking when making a motion for bail. Defense counsel should explore the possibility of alternatives to bail such as inpatient rehabilitative programs and private counseling. Alternatives such as these in combination with a modest bail or release on O.R. may persuade the court that it can assure the defendant's appearance in court while addressing the defendant's long-term problems.

Counsel faced with a difficult release situation may want to consider requesting a curfew condition. Electronic monitoring (commonly called "house arrest" or "home detention") is another possibility. A Global Positioning System (GPS) device is sometimes used in lieu of bail, or as a condition of bail, because the arrestee is without a home telephone or has a need to travel. The use of GPS is growing in popularity in gang cases, domestic violence cases (to enforce "stay-away" orders), or as a way to provide enhanced supervision of sex offenders and higher-risk offenders. A Secure Continuous Remote Alcohol Monitor (SCRAM) device may be used in a driving under the influence case. SCRAM devices provide continuous, 24-hour monitoring of alcohol concentration through the skin and have been used by courts to ensure sobriety. See §39.32 for discussion of home detention sentencing options.

One other part of the Penal Code covers release: Pen C §§701-714 ("Security to Keep the Peace"). This procedure is commonly called a "peace bond." Penal Code §714 states: "Security to keep the peace, or be of good behavior, cannot be required except as prescribed in this Chapter." To the extent that Pen C §1269c seeks to restrict a defendant's conduct while on bail (as opposed to enforcing the duty to appear), §§714 and 1269c seem to be in conflict.

F. Methods of Posting Bail

1. Deposit

§5.27 a. Cash, Check, Money Order, Traveler's Check

The defendant, or anyone on his or her behalf, may deposit with the court clerk or with the law enforcement agency having custody of the defendant the sum set by the applicable bail schedule or mentioned in the order admitting the defendant to bail. A personal check, bank cashier's check, money order, or traveler's check may be accepted in payment of a bail deposit for a nonfelony offense on certain conditions, including satisfactory identification. However, some courts and law enforcement agencies do not accept all of these alternatives to cash, particularly when the amount is large or when a check is from a defendant in custody. See Williams v City of Oakland (1972) 25 CA3d 346, 101 CR 137. The courts are not allowed to accept a general assistance check for this deposit. Pen C §1295(c). When counsel is not using a bail bond agency, he or she should call first to inquire about what is acceptable.

State criminal court clerks are required to send an "information return" to the Internal Revenue Service reporting receipt of more than $10,000 in cash as bail when the charges involve controlled substances, racketeering, or money laundering. IRC §6050L(g). A return is required only if cash is posted. "Structuring" a cash bail deposit is a federal felony. 31 USC §5324.

Ø Note: The defendant must receive credit for any sums already deposited as bail for an original charge if a new charge is filed on the basis of the same acts. Pen C §1295.

Defense counsel may wish to discuss with the defendant the possibility of having a third party post bail instead of using the defendant's assets. An innocent third party's assets used for bail are not subject to use by the court after the judgment to satisfy a fine or judgment, nor are they subject to seizure by a government agency. At the same time, one should keep in mind that any third party depositor makes public his or her interest in the defendant, and the existence of his or her assets. Forfeiture is discussed in chap 57; inquiry into the source of bail money is discussed in §5.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.28 b. Government Bonds; Equity in Real Property

Instead of a deposit of money, the defendant, or anyone else on his or her behalf, may deposit state or U.S. government bonds with the court, or may give as security an equity in real property. The defendant may not be charged for the transaction. Pen C §1298.

Ø Note: The jail does not have to accept bonds (Williams v City of Oakland (1972) 25 CA3d 346, 101 CR 137) or equity in real property (see Pen C §1298, which requires a court hearing on equity interest in real property used for bail).

The value of state bonds is that of present market value. Newton v Superior Court (1971) 16 CA3d 499, 505, 94 CR 120.

With respect to real estate equity, a hearing must be held in which the magistrate determines the value of the equity. Real estate equity is allowed as bail only when its value is equal to twice the amount of any required cash deposit. Pen C §1298. At the hearing, defense counsel files a bail undertaking, an appraisal of the property prepared by a licensed real estate broker or property appraiser, and a preliminary title report from a title company.

Ø Note: It is a good idea for defense counsel to coordinate with county counsel on the adequacy of the posting papers before the hearing; the district attorney may seek the county counsel's advice on requirements for these papers. Ideally, defense counsel can then take an approved package to the district attorney and court.

A careful prosecutor may insist on proof of prior recordation in the county of the property's location and then ask for submission, as a condition subsequent to release, of a title company report or policy after recordation. This process ensures that no liens other than those represented to exist at the time of initial recordation and up to release have been recorded against the property.

The prosecutor may wish to inquire, on the basis of Pen C §1275.1, into the sources underlying the purchase of the property. Defense counsel should consider this possibility before attempting to use real property as bond.

§5.29 2. Undertaking of Bail (Bail Bond)

A bail bond is a document, executed by a surety, which is a promise to pay the face amount of the bond equivalent to the sum set as bail, unless the defendant fulfills the conditions of the bond. Pen C §1269. Typically, a defendant agrees to "appear and answer any charge in an accusatory pleading… in whatever court it may be prosecuted, and… at all times hold himself or herself amenable to the orders and process of the court… and if convicted, will appear for pronouncement of judgment or grant of probation." Pen C §1278(a). A bond or undertaking of bail executed by a licensed bail agent must be accepted unless the judge or magistrate is convinced that part or all of the consideration to be posted for bail was feloniously obtained. Pen C §§1275.1, 1276(a). A qualified bail bond agent may both execute and issue a bail bond or undertaking of bail. Pen C §1276(b). All or part of the money paid to obtain the bond is designated as a nonreturnable fee.

The officer in charge of a jail, a designated employee of the police or sheriff's department, the superior court clerk of the county in which the offense was allegedly committed, or the clerk of the county in which the prosecution is pending may accept bail in the amount fixed by the complaint, warrant, or bail schedule; order the release of the arrestee; and issue a notice to appear. Pen C §1269b(a). All money and bond deposits accepted by a jailer are to be transmitted immediately to the judge or clerk of the court that fixed bail. Pen C §1269b(g).

G. When Judge Can Place Defendant Who Is on Bail in Custody

§5.30 1. After Appearance for Trial

When a defendant who has posted bail appears for trial, the court in its discretion may order him or her committed to custody. Pen C §1129.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.31 2. After Adverse Verdict

If a verdict is rendered against a defendant, Pen C §1166 says that the defendant must be remanded to custody to await judgment of the court on the verdict. However, after considering the protection of the public, the seriousness of the offenses charged and proved, the defendant's previous criminal record, the probability of the defendant's appearing before the court to hear judgment on the verdict, and public safety, the court may allow the defendant to remain out on bail if the court concludes that the evidence supports this decision. Pen C §1166. Section 1166 does not apply to defendants who plead guilty. People v Seneca Ins. Co. (2003) 29 C4th 954, 129 CR2d 842.

In a misdemeanor case, the defendant has the right to have bail fixed after conviction, although the trial court may set reasonable bail conditions related to public safety. In re McSherry (2003) 112 CA4th 856, 861, 5 CR3d 497. Bail is discretionary after conviction in felony cases. Pen C §1272.

If the defendant fails to appear for judgment after conviction, the judge must issue a bench warrant for his or her arrest. Pen C §1313.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.32 3. On Appeal

Requests for bail on appeal are made to the trial court. See Pen C §1272. On application by the defendant, the reviewing court can set or reduce bail or release the defendant on other conditions, if the defendant can show an erroneous denial by the trial court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.312(a)-(b). Bail issues are also cognizable on habeas corpus. See §§5.38, 42.22-42.34.

In misdemeanor cases, or in misdemeanor or felony cases in which only a fine is imposed, bail is a matter of right. This is true even when the appeal is from a modification or reinstatement of probation that imposes imprisonment, if the defendant was originally granted probation without imprisonment. In re O'Driscoll (1987) 191 CA3d 1356, 236 CR 882 (120 days in county jail). In all other cases, it is discretionary with the judge. Pen C §1272; In re Pipinos (1982) 33 C3d 189, 187 CR 730. The alternative to bail is custody.

Bail application on felony appeal requires reasonable notice to the prosecutor. See Pen C §1274; Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-300(B). Although there is no statutory requirement that the prosecution be given an opportunity to be heard in open court, it would be unusual for a court to deny a request to be heard. If the bail application is made after sentencing, a 5-court-day notice to the prosecutor is required. Pen C §1272(3).

When bail is discretionary, the court must release the defendant on bail pending appeal if he or she demonstrates all of the following (Pen C §1272.1):

- That, by clear and convincing evidence, the defendant is unlikely to flee, determined by his or her ties to the community and record of court appearances in previous cases, as well as the severity of the possible sentence.
- That, by clear and convincing evidence, the defendant does not pose a danger to another or to the community. The court must consider whether the crime is a violent felony described in Pen C §667.5(c).
- That appeal is not for delay, but raises a substantial legal question that is likely to result in reversal if decided in the defendant's favor.

The court must state its reasons for granting or denying bail on appeal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.33 4. After Appeal

When a case is returned to the trial court following completion of the appellate process, the court usually sets a sentencing date and notifies the attorneys. If the defendant is out of custody and fails to appear, the court can direct that he or she be arrested. See Pen C §1310.

The court has discretion to fix bail on the order of recommitment. Pen C §§1314-1315.

It remains an undecided issue whether a federal district court has the authority to grant bail to a state prisoner seeking habeas corpus relief in federal court. In re Roe (9th Cir 2001) 257 F3d 1077. Several courts, however, appear to favor the recognition of a federal court's authority to grant bail pending a decision on a habeas petition. See In re Roe (9th Cir 2001) 257 F3d 1077; Grune v Coughlin (2d Cir 1990) 913 F2d 41; Boyer v City of Orlando (5th Cir 1968) 402 F2d 966; Johnston v Marsh (3d Cir 1955) 227 F2d 528.

§5.34 5. Other Reasons for Placing Defendant in Custody

Even when a defendant has been admitted to bail, the trial court may order him or her placed in custody if:

- The defendant has failed to appear and the court has forfeited his or her bail (Pen C §1310(a));
- The court determines that the surety is dead or has left the state (Pen C §1310(b));
- The defendant fails to meet an increased amount of bail set by the court under Pen C §985 (Pen C §1310(c)); or
- The defendant has been held to answer following a preliminary examination (In re Annis (2005) 127 CA4th 1190, 26 CR3d 321).

§5.35 H. Bail Forfeiture; Bench Warrant; Defendant Appearing Through Counsel

If a defendant fails to appear as ordered by the court and does not have a sufficient excuse, the court must declare the bail forfeited. Pen C §1305. In addition, the court may issue a bench warrant for the defendant's arrest. Pen C §978.5. When the court concludes that the defendant may have a sufficient excuse for not appearing, the court may issue a bench warrant but hold service of it and continue the case for a reasonable period of time without ordering a forfeiture to enable the defendant to appear. Pen C §1305.1. This approach avoids returning the bail bond agent to court when it is not necessary. Sufficient reasons for failure to appear are usually based on the representation of counsel. See, e.g., People v Amwest Sur. Ins. Co. (1997) 56 CA4th 915, 925, 66 CR2d 29. Defense counsel should present verification of the defendant's excuse when possible, e.g., a letter from the defendant's doctor stating that the defendant was too ill to come to court or from a towing service that towed the defendant's car at the time of the court appearance.

Ø Note: A defendant's failure to appear is not cause for forfeiting bail if, within 15 court days of the scheduled arraignment, no complaint issues, or the charges are dismissed. Pen C §1305(a).

A misdemeanor defendant generally need not be personally present in court if counsel appears on his or her behalf. Pen C §977(a)(1). There are two exceptions: If the accused is charged with the offenses specified in Pen C §977(a)(2) (involving misdemeanor domestic violence offenses and violations of specified protective orders), he or she must be present; and if the accused is charged with the misdemeanor offenses involving driving under the influence specified in Pen C §977(a)(3), the court can order the defendant to be present for arraignment, at the time of plea or at sentencing. If a misdemeanor defendant appears by counsel, bail cannot be forfeited unless the court has specifically ordered the defendant to appear. See Pen C §1043(e) (court can order defendant to be personally present at trial for purposes of identification unless counsel stipulates to identity). Similarly, when the court has granted the defendant in a felony case the right to appear through counsel at certain proceedings, the court cannot forfeit bail when the defendant does not appear in compliance with the Pen C §977(b) form. See Pen C §§977(b), 1043(a)-(d).

Ø Note: Defendants are required to be present at trial readiness (sometimes called status) conferences, even without the court's order. Cal Rules of Ct 4.112(a).

§5.36 I. Relief Against Bail Forfeiture

The surety or the surety and the defendant must appear before the court within 180 calendar days after notice of forfeiture to establish a satisfactory excuse for the defendant's neglect. Pen C §1305(a). The court may extend that period if it finds that the defendant was temporarily disabled by illness, insanity, or detention by other authorities. Pen C §1305(e)(1).

The surety is entitled to be released from the forfeiture if any of the following apply (Pen C §1305):

- The court fails to meet the requirement of mailing notice;
- The defendant and his or her surety appear with a satisfactory excuse for the defendant's absence;
- The defendant surrenders to the court or to custody;
- The defendant dies or has a permanent inability to appear due to illness, insanity, or detention by other authorities, all without connivance of the surety. See People v American Sur. Ins. Co. (2000) 77 CA4th 1063, 92 CR2d 216 (defendant barred from reentry into United States because of prior conviction).

To obtain relief against bail forfeiture, the surety must strictly adhere to the technical procedural aspects of Pen C §1305.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.37 J. Exoneration of Bail; Forfeiture of Bail

Exoneration. Termination of the obligation of bail has become known as "exoneration." When bail has served its purpose, the depositor or the surety is relieved of the obligation and is entitled to return of the deposit. If the defendant is the depositor and the judgment includes a fine, the bail may be applied toward payment of the fine. Pen C §1297.

Exoneration occurs under the following conditions:

- Demurrer is sustained (Pen C §1008);
- Motion in arrest of judgment is granted (Pen C §1188);
- Case is dismissed following suppression of evidence (Pen C §1538.5(k)-(l));
- Case is dismissed under Pen C §1385 (Pen C §§1188, 1384);
- Court orders the defendant into a diversion program for drug abuse (Pen C §1000.2) or based on cognitive developmental disability (Pen C §1001.27);
- Defendant is committed to custody after an adverse verdict (Pen C §1166);
- Defendant is found mentally incompetent to stand trial under Pen C §§1368, 1370, 1370.01, or 1371; or
- Case is dismissed under Pen C §995 (Pen C §997).

Under Pen C §1166, when the jury returns a guilty verdict, the trial court is required to remand or commit the defendant to custody unless at that time it considers the propriety of allowing the defendant to remain on bail and concludes that the five factors specified in §1166 support its decision.

Forfeiture. Forfeiture of the defendant's bail as a result of his or her failure to appear is proper only when the defendant failed to appear on the charges for which the bail was posted. People v King Bail Bond Agency (1990) 224 CA3d 1120, 274 CR 335 (bail posted on Pen C §278.5 charge; defendant acquitted but held in contempt during trial; bail cannot be forfeited for failure to appear on contempt).

Before forfeiture, the surety or other person who deposited assets may surrender the defendant into custody to obtain exoneration of the bail money. Pen C §1300(a).

> Ø Note: When the defendant is surrendered to the court by the bail bond agent and the court determines that good cause does not exist for the surrender because the defendant has not failed to appear and has not violated any court order, the judge may order the bail returned to the depositor and the premium or any part of it returned to the person who paid it. Pen C §1300(b).

When bail is exonerated following a dismissal and the prosecutor recharges the defendant, bail on the original offense must be applied to the new charge if it is filed within 15 calendar days of the dismissal. Pen C §1303. This procedure permits the defendant to avoid the costs of depositing a second sum or of paying the premium on a second bond.

A deposit of bail received for an infraction in the Vehicle Code (or any local ordinance adopted under the Vehicle Code) must be refunded within 30 calendar days of cancellation, dismissal, or a finding of not guilty of the charges. Multiple deposits in payment of a parking ticket must be identified and returned within 30 calendar days. After 60 calendar days, unreturned amounts accrue interest as set by CC §3289. Veh C §42201.6. Other bail money does not earn interest for the depositor. Govt C §53647.5; Pen C §1463.1.

§5.38 K. Habeas Corpus

A writ of habeas corpus is an appropriate vehicle to gain review of a bail issue. See In re McSherry (2003) 112 CA4th 856, 859, 5 CR3d 497; In re Bright (1993) 13 CA4th 1664, 17 CR2d 105. It may be used to challenge detention without bail and to examine the amount and conditions of bail. Pen C §§1490-1491. See §§42.22-42.34 on writs of habeas corpus.

VII. DEFENSE ATTORNEY PROCEDURES

§5.39 A. Client Interview; Obtaining Prosecution Information

The defense attorney's initial contact in a criminal case may come from a suspect in custody, a member of his or her family, or his or her friends. To obtain a release, it is essential to determine the following:

- The true name of the person in custody, and, if different, the name under which he or she was booked;
- Where the person is being held;
- Who the caller is and how he or she was referred;
- A physical description of the suspect and date of birth, if possible (often several persons with the same name are held in jail facilities);
- The charges on which the person was arrested;
- Which police agency made the arrest and what officer is handling the case;
- Whether the suspect is on parole or probation and the facts concerning such cases, including whether there are parole or probation holds;
- How financial arrangements are to be made for bail and legal fees;
- Whether there is a hold by any foreign jurisdiction; and
- Whether there is an immigration hold.

It is advisable to obtain a copy of the police report to find out the police point of view about the case. Often the facts in the police report differ from those related by the suspect or his or her friends.

Defense counsel should bring to the attention of the person setting bail facts that will bear on the amount of bail to be set, or on whether an agreement can be reached to release the suspect on O.R. or by citation. In rare cases, information may be revealed that suggests the suspect's noninvolvement, which results in his or her release pending further investigation. Of course, the attorney must weigh the risks of revealing evidence at this point that may be damaging to the client at a later time against the possibility of reduced bail, O.R., a citation release, or a release without further proceedings under Pen C §849(b).

Counsel should advise the defendant that commission of a felony while on bail or O.R. for a felony will increase the sentence on the original charge. Pen C §12022.1.

Counsel should remain cognizant of the statutes governing attorney fee contracts, forfeiture potentials (including a "relation back" forfeiture of attorney fees), and the crimes that apply to attorneys who accept "tainted" money. See discussion in §§3.15, 57.33. See Fee Agreement Forms Manual (2d ed Cal CEB 2007) on fee agreements.

For further discussion of interviewing the defendant, see chap 10 and §3.13.

B. Determining Best Release Procedure Before Arraignment

§5.40 1. Release on Citation

In many misdemeanor arrests, it is possible to convince police agencies to release suspects on a citation or written promise to appear. See §§5.4-5.5. Even if the suspect is not released on a citation by the arresting officer, it may be possible to convince a superior officer at the station to do so.

In driving under the influence of alcohol cases, the police usually detain the person arrested until he or she is sober, then release him or her on a citation. Of course, the option of an earlier release should be presented to the client and bail posted if an immediate release is desired. Because of the time required for a bond to be processed, release on citation may prove to be the most expedient means.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.41 2. O.R. Release

Own recognizance release is available only from the court. In some jurisdictions there is an on-call judge or bail commissioner. That person may be called by phone at any time of the day or night, and has the authority to release a defendant on his or her own recognizance or to change the amount of bail. This procedure is not available to a defendant charged with a serious or violent felony or with certain domestic violence offenses. See Pen C §1270.1. See the chart in §5.2 for a listing of bail and O.R. telephone numbers for some of the larger jurisdictions.

When counsel will have to make a court appearance to request an O.R. release, he or she should immediately request an investigation by the court's O.R. division. The better procedure is for counsel to assist the client in filling out the O.R. form, work with the O.R. investigator, and present facts to the police investigating officer or prosecuting attorney to show that an O.R. release is appropriate so that the prosecutor will not oppose defense counsel's motion in court. Because this procedure may take some time, the client may prefer posting bail and seeking an O.R. release at a later date.

Certain factors may militate against initiating an O.R. investigation, such as the defendant's desire to prevent family or an employer from learning of the arrest or the possibility that an O.R. investigation may uncover information detrimental to the defendant.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.42 3. Effect of Parole, Probation, or Immigration Holds

An immediate release is especially important if the client is already on parole or probation. If the arrest comes to the attention of probation or parole authorities, a "hold" may be placed, in which case release will be blocked even if bail is posted on the new offense. In re Law (1973) 10 C3d 21, 23, 109 CR 573. If release is effectuated before the "hold," however, the probation or parole officer may allow the defendant to remain free on bail pending a resolution of the current charge. The client should be aware that, if he or she is arrested by the parole or probation officer after posting bail and no bail is set on the violation, the premium paid for bail will most likely be lost and the defendant will not be able to receive credit for time served on the new case. See §§37.53-37.63 on credit for time served.

If a client is detained by a hold placed by the Department of Homeland Security's (DHS) Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services, counsel should consult 8 USC §§1252(a) and 1357(a), 8 CFR §287.3, and their regulations. If counsel is inexperienced in immigration matters, counsel should also seek advice from an immigration law specialist. An immigration hold request is often initiated by a call to the immigration officials by local authorities, so defense counsel must be sure to tell the client not to answer any questions about alienage posed by local or federal authorities. The DHS's ability to "hold" without a warrant is circumscribed. A verbal hold must be followed by an administrative warrant within 24 hours. A detained noncitizen may be released on bond or conditional parole (i.e., without bond). The process involves the discretion of an immigration official and the action of an administrative law judge. Their discretion is rarely interfered with on review, which must be by a writ of habeas corpus to a federal district court. See chap 52 for general discussion of immigration issues.

§5.43 4. Cash Bail

By posting cash bail, the defendant avoids paying a 10 percent or more premium to a bail bond agent and tying up property as collateral. In certain types of cases, however, posting cash bail creates other problems. For example, in a narcotics case, the deposit of a high cash bail may be of interest to the Internal Revenue Service or the Franchise Tax Board. See also the discussion of court clerk reporting requirements on cash bail in §5.27. Furthermore, a large amount of ready cash will be noted by the police, district attorney, investigating officer, or prosecuting attorney and may be used against the defendant. There is also the possibility of a hearing under Pen C §1275 (see §5.24) to learn the source of the cash. Therefore, it may be advisable for defendants in narcotic cases to work through a bail bond agent and maintain a low profile. Even this avenue may have problems, as the subpoenaing of bail bond records and inquiry at bail hearings into the source of bail bond funds occurs with regularity.

§5.44 5. Pros and Cons of Delaying Release

Counsel should advise the defendant of the benefits and detriments of delaying release. The defendant must then make the final decision; some individuals would prefer to pay any amount to avoid the shame of incarceration.

Some of the advantages of delay are that charges may not be filed, misdemeanor charges may be filed with a lower bail schedule, or counsel may be successful in convincing the court at the time of arraignment to set lower bail than that called for by the schedule, or to release the defendant on his or her own recognizance. On the deadlines for arraigning the defendant, see §§6.7-6.8.

One of the disadvantages of delay is the possibility that the amount of bail will be increased because a misdemeanor arrest becomes a felony with the passage of time (e.g., if a victim is found to have injuries not apparent at first, priors are discovered, or parole or probation holds are placed; and, of course, if the victim dies, bail might not be set at all).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.45 C. Contacting Bail Bond Representative

Much of the legwork in obtaining a client's release can be accomplished by a reliable and competent bail bond agent. This individual can visit the client at the jail and make all the contacts and arrangements for the collateral necessary to secure a bond, including appraisals. A bail bond agent may also be able to locate an arrestee whose location in custody is unknown.

It is important for any attorney with criminal cases to establish a relationship with a good bail bond agent. The efficiency of this person will reflect on the attorney. Conversely, a poor impression may result in the client's retaining other counsel.

As a rule, counsel should never "guarantee" bail.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.46 D. Contacting Prosecutor

Defense counsel should contact the prosecutor whether or not counsel is successful in securing the client's release. If the arrest occurred in a jurisdiction in which different agencies prosecute misdemeanor and felony cases, and if there is a possibility of either being filed, counsel should contact both offices. If possible, counsel may want to attempt to communicate with the investigating police officer because he or she will probably make the initial decision on charging and on bail or other release.

In some jurisdictions, if defense counsel believes that the case against the client is weak, counsel can call the prosecutor's office and ask the charging deputy to contact defense counsel before filing the case to hear from counsel why the case should not be filed.

The purpose of discussions with the prosecutor varies. Counsel can attempt to prevent a criminal filing, convince the prosecutor to file misdemeanor rather than felony charges, attempt to limit counts, arrange for an office hearing if these are available (see §26.41), arrange for a voluntary surrender, and, if the suspect is in custody, negotiate bail. This may be the time to make a tactical decision to reveal defense evidence unknown to the prosecutor. Of course, counsel must know the prosecutor with whom he or she is dealing and weigh the consequences of such a step.

If the client is seeking immunity from prosecution or wishes to cooperate with authorities, this may be the time to make such overtures. See chap 49 on immunity for testimony.

Throughout the proceedings, counsel should continue to review the potential for lowering an agreed and reasonable bail to an even lower sum or for securing an O.R. release. As the case proceeds, the prosecutor may be agreeable to further lowering bail, which can result in release of collateral the surety posted with the bail bond agent to secure appearance, release of a cash sum posted with the court, or release of parcels of posted real property. In addition, the psychological effect of having a lower bail at the end of a given proceeding or if other charges are filed is helpful.

Counsel is required to notify the prosecutor before moving to reduce bail after an information or indictment has been filed, when O.R. is sought following arrest for a specified violent felony, or when bail is a matter of discretion rather than a matter of right. 71 Ops Cal Atty Gen 64 (1988).

If a defendant is not in custody and counsel is aware of pending criminal charges, every effort should be made to surrender the defendant before he or she is arrested. If negotiations have been ongoing with the prosecuting agency, arrangements to surrender should include setting reasonable bail or release on the defendant's O.R. Defense counsel may secure the prosecutor's agreement to a lower bail figure if the defendant agrees to conditions such as surrendering his or her passport, agreeing to check in daily with the prosecutor's office or the police department, or waiving extradition. These conditions may also be suggested in any bail argument.

Investigators often ask defense counsel to have the defendant surrender at the police station for booking (i.e., photographing and fingerprinting; Pen C §7(21)). Counsel should be sure that there is an agreement to transport the defendant to court immediately thereafter. Alternatively, counsel can arrange to surrender the client in court when the case is filed. If this is done, counsel can ask the court to release the client from court without first being booked with the order that the defendant arrange to be booked while out of custody.

Once the defendant is before the court, the arrest warrant will be recalled and counsel may argue for reasonable bail in light of the defendant's voluntary surrender. Unless an O.R. release has been agreed on, it is always best to have a bail bond agent present in court to obtain the defendant's immediate release.

Counsel may wish to have family members and friends present in court when the client surrenders. In the right case, a strong showing by friends and family can be influential in persuading the court that the defendant is not a flight risk or a danger to the community. It may even be appropriate to have the individuals who are putting up the bail or posting real property on behalf of the defendant address the court and express their opinion on the defendant's honesty, integrity, and trustworthiness.

VIII. PROSECUTION PROCEDURES

§5.48 A. Who Makes Release Recommendation

Usually, the prosecutor who prepares the complaint recommends an amount for bail. The sum is typically the amount shown on the bail schedule. The recommendation is placed on the face of the complaint and on any related arrest warrant. Alternatively, the prosecutor's original release recommendation is made by a deputy assigned to after-hours duty. Typically, such a deputy is contacted by an arresting or booking officer who desires a higher bail than that reflected on the countywide bail schedule. The deputy gleans the facts of the case, the reasons for a higher bail, and assists the officer (in person or by phone) in drafting a bail deviation declaration. See Pen C §1269c. The deputy may contact a magistrate to advise that the officer will be visiting the magistrate to request that bail be fixed at a higher amount than that given in the bail schedule.

As the case advances procedurally, the prosecutor appearing in court at any stage may recommend a different sum as additional factors are discovered. See Pen C §§1269c, 1275, 1310. See also Pen C §§1129, 1166. There are sample motions to increase bail and to examine the source of bail in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§5.1, 5.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.49 B. Factors Affecting Release Recommendation

The usual sum recommended is that indicated on the countywide bail schedule. Any variation should be based on articulable factors.

The prosecutor should fully discuss the evidence with the investigating officer. Sometimes it may be necessary to contact the victim to determine the details of what occurred, the severity of injuries, the relationship of the parties, and the existence of any threats. It is essential that all available police reports be read carefully.

In addition, the prosecutor should be amenable to requests from the defense attorney or bail bond agent to discuss factors relevant to bail. Explanations for the defendant's conduct on previous occasions can be quite informative. The prosecutor should not hesitate to discuss the matter with anyone who has relevant information.

Ø Note: If the defendant is represented by counsel, defense counsel's permission must be obtained before talking to the defendant about the subject matter of that representation. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-100.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.50 C. Preparing for Bail Hearing

Preparation for a bail hearing is the same as that for any contested adversarial setting. The prosecutor should be prepared to present evidence and oral argument to prove the case for the bail recommended. If allowed by local practice or court rules, declarations should be drafted and ready for filing. Any witnesses who would tend to establish a public safety exception or reveal the defendant's propensity to flee should be in court. In addition, the original court files, or certified copies of documents showing the defendant's previous failures to appear, should be secured for submission into evidence. See Van Atta v Scott (1980) 27 C3d 424, 441, 166 CR 149. Proof of previous failures to appear is usually conclusive. See Cal Const art I, §12.

With authority to make inquiries to satisfy the criteria in Pen C §1270 and the inquiry now allowed by Pen C §1275.1, prosecutors should prepare to ask questions about the source of assets proposed for bail or placed with a bond agent and not neglect detailed inquiry into the sureties or assets behind the bail. Alleged narcotic offenders may be discomfited when they realize that inquiry into available assets is contemplated. A sample motion to examine the source of bail is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §5.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§6.1 I. OVERVIEW

An arraignment is a court hearing at which an individual accused of a public offense—an infraction, a misdemeanor, or a felony—is informed of the nature of the charge or charges, given a copy of the accusatory pleading, and given an opportunity to enter a plea. Pen C §988; In re Mitchell (1961) 56 C2d 667, 16 CR 281. It is the defendant's first court appearance. See Pen C §§740, 806, 1462.2.

In addition to fulfilling these statutory requirements, the judge or magistrate conducting the arraignment is also required to advise each unrepresented defendant of the right to counsel and the right to have appointed counsel if indigent. Cal Const art I, §15; Pen C §§858, 859, 987(a). In counties using mass advisements, the initial advisement of rights includes other trial rights.

If the defendant is charged with a bailable offense, the court must also set bail at the first court appearance, unless bail has already been set. Cal Const art I, §12; Pen C §1271. See Van Atta v Scott (1980) 27 C3d 424, 166 CR 149.

When the arraignment takes place depends on several factors, the most important of which is the defendant's custodial status. If the defendant is in custody, arraignment must take place within 48 hours (not including weekends and court holidays) after the arrest. Pen C §825. If the defendant was arrested without a warrant and has not yet been released, the arraignment is usually combined with a probable cause determination. This determination must be made by a magistrate as soon as reasonably feasible but no later than 48 hours after arrest; weekends and holidays may not be excluded from the 48 hours. County of Riverside v McLaughlin (1991) 500 US 44, 57, 114 L Ed 2d 49, 63, 111 S Ct 1661. See §6.23.

If the case is not disposed of at the arraignment, the court will also set the date for the next hearing.

Procedure	Deadline	Authority
In-custody defendant arraigned on complaint (either misdemeanor or felony).	Without undue delay; no more than 2 calendar days after arrest (excluding Sundays and holidays).	Cal Const art I; Pen C §§825, 849; People v Lee (1970) 3 CA3d 514, 83 CR 715.
Continuance to obtain counsel.	No more than 7 days in misdemeanor cases; no less than 1 day in felony cases.	Pen C §990.
Out-of-custody defendant arraigned on citation for misdemeanor or infraction.	At least 10 calendar days after arrest unless defendant consents to earlier date.	Pen C §853.6(b); Veh C §40303.
Out-of-custody defendant arraigned on misdemeanor complaint.	Prosecutor has 25 days after misdemeanor citation to file formal complaint. No statutory deadline for arraignment.	Pen C §853.6(e). Pen C §825 time limits apply only when accused is in custody.
Out-of-custody defendant arraigned on felony complaint.	Without unnecessary delay (same as in-custody defendant for all practical purposes).	Cal Const art I, §14; Pen C §859.
Probable cause determination following warrantless arrest.	No later than 48 hours after arrest (including weekends and holidays).	County of Riverside v McLaughlin (1991) 500 US 44, 56, 114 L Ed 2d 49, 63, 111 S Ct 1661.
Defendant arraigned on information, whether in or out of custody.	When information filed.	Pen C §§859, 1382.
Defendant arraigned on indictment.	If arrested on bench warrant, same deadlines as defendants arrested on complaint.	Pen C §§945, 978.5; see Pen C §§825, 849; People v Redinger (1880) 55 C 290, 298.

MISDEMEANOR CASES

Defense Counsel

- Motion for defendant's release from custody
  - Bail motion
  - O.R. release motion
- File waiver of defendant's appearance
- Probable cause (Walters) hearing (Pen C §991)
- Serve on prosecutor and file informal discovery request
- File demurrer (before plea)
- Request continuance before entering plea
- Enter plea:
  - Not guilty
  - Guilty
  - Nolo contendere
  - Once in jeopardy
  - Former judgment of acquittal or conviction
  - Not guilty by reason of insanity (seldom used in misdemeanor cases)
- Set pretrial motions (see checklist in §18.4)
- Set trial date

Prosecutor

- Request higher bail or no bail if appropriate
- Bring discovery for defense counsel (usually a police report)
- Provide complaint to defense on request
- Serve on defense and file informal discovery request
- Make motions:
  - Handwriting exemplars
  - Fingerprints
  - Lineup
  - Severance
  - Joinder
  - Amend complaint

Defense Counsel

- Motion for defendant's release from custody
  - Bail
  - Own recognizance
- Probable cause (County of Riverside) hearing
- File waiver of defendant's appearance (Pen C §977)
- File demurrer (before plea)

Prosecutor

- Request higher bail or no bail, if appropriate
- Bring discovery for defense counsel (usually police reports)
- Provide complaint to defense on request
- Serve on defense and file with court informal discovery request

- Serve on prosecutor and file informal discovery request
- Request continuance before entering plea
- Enter plea:
- Not guilty
- Guilty
- Nolo contendere
- Once in jeopardy
- Former judgment of acquittal or conviction
- Not guilty by reason of insanity (usually entered at or after arraignment on information or indictment)
- Set date for preliminary hearing, including motions to be heard as part of preliminary hearing (e.g., former judgment of acquittal or conviction)

- Make motions for:
- Handwriting exemplars
- Fingerprints
- Lineup
- Severance
- Joinder

IV. PROCEEDINGS ON ARRAIGNMENT

§6.4 A. Purpose of Arraignment

An individual accused of a public offense has the right under the U.S. Constitution to be informed of the "nature and cause of the accusation." US Const amend VI. See also Cal Const art I, §14 (arraignment for felony). Arraignment serves this purpose, and it gives the accused a fair opportunity to plead to the charges. In re Mitchell (1961) 56 C2d 667, 16 CR 281. In addition, both federal and state constitutions grant an accused the right to a speedy trial. US Const amend VI; Cal Const art I, §15; Pen C §1382. A prompt arraignment is a component of the right to speedy trial. On the right to speedy trial, see chap 19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.5 B. Procedures Generally Applicable to Arraignments

When an accusatory pleading is filed, the defendant is arraigned on the pleading in the court in which it is filed unless the case is transferred to another court for trial, e.g., because the defendant was arrested outside the county. Pen C §976. On out-of-county arrests and arraignments, see §6.30.

Ø Note: California courts employ four kinds of accusatory pleadings: citation, complaint, information, and indictment. Although the purpose of arraignment is the same no matter what offense is charged and what accusatory pleading is used, certain aspects of the procedure may vary, depending on the kind of accusatory pleading used and the custody status of the defendant. For discussion, see §§6.6-6.10.

Arraignment occurs when a judge (or the clerk or prosecutor acting at the court's direction) reads the accusatory pleading to the defendant and asks whether the defendant pleads guilty or not guilty. Pen C §988. A defendant accused of a felony is also given a copy of the pleading.

Ø Note: When a complaint charges only misdemeanor violations, the defendant who wants a copy of the pleading must request one. Pen C §988.

A defendant in a felony case is typically required to appear in person at the arraignment and most other proceedings in the case, unless he or she executes a written waiver of appearance in open court. Pen C §977(b)(1).

Most misdemeanor defendants may appear through counsel at all stages of the case, including the arraignment. Pen C §977(a)(1). However, an individual charged with a misdemeanor involving domestic violence (see Fam C §6211) or violation of a protective order (see Pen C §273.6) must be personally present at the arraignment and sentencing (Pen C §977(a)(2)); and the court may order an individual charged with specified misdemeanors involving driving under the influence to be present at the arraignment (Pen C §977(a)(3)). If an out-of-custody defendant fails to appear at the arraignment in person (if required) or through counsel (if permitted), the court may issue a bench warrant. See Pen C §§979-984. On failure to appear, see also §6.33.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.6 C. Arraignment on Citation

A citation may be used for infractions and misdemeanors when the defendant is not taken into custody, or is released from custody at booking. Pen C §§853.5-853.6. The citation includes a written notice to appear in court, giving the time, place, and date of the court appearance. This appearance is the arraignment. The time set for arraignment must be at least 10 days after the citation is issued, unless the accused consents to an earlier date, and the arraignment takes place in the court of the magistrate before whom the accused would have appeared if he or she had not been released (Pen C §853.6(c)), i.e., the department of the superior court assigned to handle misdemeanors and infractions.

Ø Note: The term "magistrate" refers to a judge of any court (see Pen C §808) who is fulfilling the constitutional and statutory duties assigned to magistrates. These duties, which include presiding over arraignments in criminal matters, are scattered throughout the Penal Code. See, e.g., Pen C §§807, 825, 849.

If the offense for which the citation was issued is a misdemeanor, the prosecutor has discretion to issue a formal complaint, even though the arresting officer has released the accused on a promise to appear. Pen C §853.6(e). See §6.7.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Arraignment on Complaint

§6.7 1. When Complaint Used

Formal complaint discretionary. A complaint may be issued for the infractions listed in Pen C §19.8 (see Pen C §17(d)) and for other infractions when the individual arrested cannot provide satisfactory identification (see Pen C §853.5). See §6.32. In addition, a complaint may be issued for a misdemeanor, even when the arresting officer has released the accused on a promise to appear. A copy of the citation, along with the underlying police reports, goes to the prosecutor, unless the prosecutor has previously directed the officer to file it with the magistrate. Pen C §853.6(e). The prosecutor then has 25 days to initiate prosecution by filing the citation or a formal complaint with the magistrate. Pen C §853.6(e).

Ø Note: Although failure to act within the 25-day period does not preclude prosecution, a later decision to prosecute requires a new citation or an arrest warrant.

Formal complaint mandatory. A complaint must be issued when an individual is arrested for a misdemeanor if the accused (1) demands to be taken before a magistrate or (2) is not released before or at booking. Pen C §853.6. A complaint must also be issued when an individual is arrested for a felony, unless the arrest is made as a result of a felony indictment. Cal Const art I, §14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.8 2. Time for Arraignment

The filing of the complaint must be followed by arraignment. See Pen C §976. When the defendant is accused of a felony, the arraignment must take place "without unnecessary delay" (Pen C §860), but when the accused is not in custody, no specific statutory deadline applies. People v Newell (1923) 192 C 659, 221 P 622.

When, however, an individual is arrested and held in custody, the term "without unnecessary delay" means no more than "48 hours after [the] arrest, excluding Sundays and holidays." Pen C §825; CCP §§134-135; Govt C §§6700, 6706. People v Lee (1970) 3 CA3d 514, 521, 83 CR 715 (Saturday is a court holiday). See also People v Pickens (1981) 124 CA3d 800, 177 CR 555. The applicability of Pen C §825 is not limited to individuals charged with felonies; it applies to everyone arrested and held in custody, no matter what the charge.

If court is not in session when the arrest takes place, the time is extended to the next regular judicial day. Pen C §825. A defendant arrested on Wednesday must be arraigned by the following Friday, no matter what time the arrest occurred, unless the Friday is a court holiday. Pen C §825(a)(2). Code of Civil Procedure §134, authorizing local courts to conduct arraignments on judicial holidays, does not convert them into nonholidays for the purpose of computing time. Forty-eight hours is only an outside limit; a delay of less than 48 hours could be unreasonable. Dragna v White (1955) 45 C2d 469, 289 P2d 428.

If the arrest was made without a warrant, an individual accused of a felony is entitled to a prompt probable cause hearing. Gerstein v Pugh (1975) 420 US 103, 125, 43 L Ed 2d 54, 71, 95 S Ct 854. This hearing is typically combined with the arraignment. An individual taken into custody without a warrant for a misdemeanor is entitled to a probable cause hearing on request. In re Walters (1975) 15 C3d 738, 126 CR 239. For discussion, see §6.23.

An arraignment on a complaint, whether it alleges a felony or a misdemeanor, occurs in the department of the superior court that ordinarily handles infractions and misdemeanors.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.9 3. Consequences of Delay

An unreasonable delay between arrest and arraignment converts a lawful arrest into an unlawful detention, and a confession obtained as a result of the unlawful detention may be subject to suppression. See People v Pettingill (1978) 21 C3d 231, 145 CR 861 (when police kept defendant in custody for 61-hour period without arraignment and continued to interrogate him after he had invoked Miranda rights, confession was product of illegalities). But see In re Walker (1974) 10 C3d 764, 779, 112 CR 177 (delay is but one factor in determining whether statement is voluntary; confession made during illegal delay is not automatically inadmissible). See also People v Thompson (1980) 27 C3d 303, 329, 165 CR 289 (arresting officer's need for sleep did not justify delaying arraignment; however, no showing was made that illegal detention produced defendant's confession).

An unreasonable delay in bringing the defendant before the magistrate may serve as a ground for a civil suit against the arresting officer (Dragna v White (1955) 45 C2d 469, 289 P2d 428), but it is not a ground for dismissing the prosecution unless it causes prejudice. See, e.g., People v Valenzuela (1978) 86 CA3d 427, 150 CR 314 (reviewing court reversed dismissal because record did not support defendant's claim that his inability to obtain timely urine test was caused by delay in arraignment).

> Ø Note: Defense counsel may seek a defendant's release from custody when the defendant is held beyond the Pen C §825 limits by filing a petition for writ of habeas corpus. People v Wilson (1963) 60 C2d 139, 152, 32 CR 44. For further discussion of these writs, see §§42.22-42.34.

When the arraignment of a minor found to be unfit is delayed, the actual arraignment date starts the 20-day limitations period within which a writ challenging the finding of unfitness must be filed under Cal Rules of Ct 5.772(j). Rene C. v Superior Court (2006) 138 CA4th 1, 9, 41 CR3d 71.

§6.10 E. Arraignment on Information or Indictment in Felony Prosecutions

Misdemeanors and infractions are prosecuted either by citation or complaint. There are no other pleadings in these cases. See Pen C §§740, 853.5-853.6. In a felony prosecution, however, a complaint, if one is filed, is only a preliminary pleading. An information or indictment is required to initiate a felony prosecution. See Cal Const art I, §14.

Information. In California, the information is used far more often than is the indictment, and almost always when the event triggering the prosecution is the defendant's arrest. Thus, typically, when an accused is arraigned on a felony complaint and pleads not guilty, the magistrate sets the case for a preliminary hearing, which must be held no less than 2 court days and no more than 10 court days after the arraignment, unless there is "good cause" for delay and the defendant waives time. Pen C §859b. On preliminary hearings, see chap 8.

If the defendant is held to answer at the preliminary hearing, Pen C §1382(a)(1) requires dismissal unless the information is filed in the superior court within 15 calendar days after the holding order was issued. The parties and the magistrate may stipulate that the complaint is to become the information. People v Dominguez (2008) 166 CA4th 858, 864, 83 CR3d 284. Under Pen C §976, the defendant must be arraigned "when" the accusatory pleading is filed. The word "when" has been construed to mean "after." People v Hale (1957) 156 CA2d 478, 319 P2d 660. There is no separate statutory or constitutional time limit for arraigning the defendant on the information. See People v Newell (1923) 192 C 659, 221 P 622 (no statutorily prescribed time within which arraignment must take place). In practice, however, the arraignment usually takes place promptly after the information is filed.

Indictment. Although the prosecutor may seek an indictment from a grand jury after an arrest and a felony complaint, the indictment procedure is used much less frequently than is the preliminary hearing in this situation. As a rule, the prosecution seeks an indictment when the secret nature of grand jury proceedings is an important factor—e.g., in investigations involving organized crime and other criminal conspiracies, or confidential or reluctant witnesses. For additional examples, see §9.8. On grand jury proceedings generally, see chap 9.

If the grand jury finds probable cause to believe a named individual has committed a felony, it files an indictment in the superior court. If the defendant is already in custody, the court will order the defendant brought before it for arraignment. Pen C §978. If the defendant is not already in custody, the court will issue a bench warrant. Pen C §§945, 979-984. If the defendant is taken into custody on a bench warrant and held, the arraignment must take place within 48 hours (excluding noncourt days) under Pen C §825. See §§6.8-6.9.

> Ø Practice tip: When the subject of a grand jury investigation has retained counsel before the indictment is returned, defense counsel can sometimes negotiate the bail amount or O.R. release before the bench warrant issues or is served.

Arraignment on information or indictment starts statutory speedy trial clock. The date on which the arraignment on an information or indictment occurs is important for speedy trial purposes. Under Pen C §1382(a)(2), the 60-day period for bringing the defendant to trial begins to run when the defendant is arraigned on the indictment or information. Although the date the defendant is asked to plead and the date of the plea are usually the same, this is not always true. In Chartuck v Municipal Court (1975) 50 CA3d 931, 123 CR 816, the court, noting that Pen C §988 makes no reference to entry of a plea, concluded that for purposes of computing the §1382 deadline, the defendant was "arraigned" within the meaning of the statute at her first court appearance when she was given an opportunity to enter a plea, even though she did not enter a plea at that time. But see Valdes v Municipal Court (1977) 69 CA3d 434, 438 n3, 138 CR 50 (speedy trial period did not begin to run until defendant actually entered plea). On the right to a speedy trial, see chap 19.

§6.11 F. Record of Arraignment

In felony cases, a court clerk must prepare and maintain minutes that reflect the title of each action and all orders and proceedings in those actions. Govt C §69844. In misdemeanor and infraction cases, a docket entry is a legally sufficient substitute for minutes. Pen C §1428.

An official court stenographer routinely makes a verbatim record of all oral proceedings in felony cases, including the arraignment. See CCP §269(a). The practice is not as uniform in misdemeanor and infraction cases, but the state must "provide, upon the defendant's request, some method of recording verbatim, the testimony and other oral proceedings of a felony or misdemeanor criminal action." In re Armstrong (1981) 126 CA3d 565, 573, 178 CR 902. When an official court reporter is unavailable to record the oral proceedings in a misdemeanor or infraction case, they may be recorded electronically. Govt C §69955. See also Cal Rules of Ct 2.952.

V. DUTIES OF MAGISTRATE OR JUDGE AT ARRAIGNMENT

§6.12 A. Informing Defendant of Charges

The duty of the judge or magistrate to inform the defendant of the charges and give him or her the opportunity to enter a plea includes prior-conviction allegations. Thus, when the charging document alleges priors, the court must ask whether the allegation is true or not true at the time the defendant is asked to plead to the substantive charges. Pen C §1025(a). A refusal to answer is equivalent to a denial. Pen C §1025(a).

The duty to inform the defendant of the charges is ongoing. Thus, if a new accusatory pleading is filed or the original pleading is amended, the accused must be arraigned on any new charges but need not be rearraigned on existing charges. In re Mitchell (1961) 56 C2d 667, 16 CR 281. Rearraignment can, however, be waived. See, e.g., People v Mayfield (1993) 5 C4th 142, 173, 19 CR2d 836.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.13 B. Ascertaining Defendant's True Name

At arraignment, defendants must be given the opportunity to give the court their true names. If a defendant provides a true name that is different from the one on the complaint, the court must direct that the correction be entered in the court minutes. Pen C §989.

Section 989 does not require a defendant to provide his or her true name; a defendant may be tried under the name he or she provided at arrest. When the true name will incriminate the defendant, defense counsel should direct the client to remain silent.

§6.14 C. Advising Defendant of Right to Counsel

An individual charged with a misdemeanor or a felony is entitled to be represented by counsel at public expense if he or she cannot afford to hire an attorney. Pen C §686. See Tracy v Municipal Court (1978) 22 C3d 760, 150 CR 785. To implement this right, the magistrate or judge, immediately after informing the accused of the charge or charges, must inform an unrepresented defendant of the right to counsel. Pen C §§858, 859.

Ø Note: No such duty exists in infraction cases unless the defendant is in custody at the time of arraignment, because a defendant charged with an infraction is not otherwise entitled to representation by the public defender or other counsel at public expense. People v Prince (1976) 55 CA3d Supp 19, 127 CR 296. See also Pen C §19.6.

If an unrepresented defendant is charged with a felony, the magistrate must also ask the defendant whether he or she wants the assistance of counsel and must allow the defendant a reasonable time to obtain counsel. Pen C §859. The magistrate must appoint counsel for a defendant who desires representation and cannot afford to hire counsel. See Pen C §859; People v Downer (1962) 57 C2d 800, 812, 22 CR 347. In a capital case, the magistrate will assign counsel for the defendant even if the defendant can afford to hire an attorney, if the defendant refuses to hire counsel, or if he or she appears without counsel after a reasonable opportunity to obtain representation. Pen C §859. A capital defendant cannot waive counsel at the arraignment. Pen C §§686.1, 987. See also People v Mayfield (1993) 5 C4th 142, 173, 19 CR2d 836. If the defendant appears to be a minor, the magistrate must try to find out whether he or she is a minor, and if the magistrate concludes that the defendant is a minor, must either immediately notify the minor's parent or guardian of the arrest or appoint counsel. Pen C §859.

Ø Note: An unrepresented defendant in a noncapital case may enter a plea, but it is common (and better practice) for the judge to delay asking a defendant to enter a plea until after he or she appears with an attorney.

§6.15 1. Mass Advisement

Misdemeanor cases. In heavily populated counties, the magistrate often collectively advises defendants of the right to counsel in misdemeanor cases. This practice does not deny the defendant any constitutional rights. Mills v Municipal Court (1973) 10 C3d 288, 307, 110 CR 329. The court can easily cure any possible shortcomings in this procedure during the arraignment of individual defendants, by asking each one if he or she has heard and understood the advisements. In re Johnson (1965) 62 C2d 325, 332 n5, 42 CR 228. Typically, a mass advisement of rights includes the trial rights a defendant waives when pleading guilty or nolo contendere, and notice of the right to a hearing on probable cause. On pleading guilty at arraignment, see §6.22. On probable cause hearings, see §6.23.

Ø Note: Counsel may usually obtain a sample of the mass arraignment form from the court clerk in order to review what advice was given.

Although mass advisement of the right to counsel is constitutionally permissible, the magistrate may not accept the defendant's waiver of the right to counsel without making sure that the defendant knowingly and intelligently waived counsel. In re Johnson (1965) 62 C2d 325, 333, 42 CR 228. For further discussion, see §6.14.

Felony cases. Advisement of rights in felony cases is done individually. In re Tahl (1969) 1 C3d 122, 132, 81 CR 577, disapproved on other grounds in Mills v Municipal Court (1973) 10 C3d 288, 306 n16, 110 CR 329.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.16 2. Televised Arraignment and Advisements

Unless the defendant was indicted by a grand jury, the initial court appearance may, with the defendant's consent, be conducted by two-way electronic audio-video communication when the defendant is in custody. Pen C §977(c). This section applies to both felony and misdemeanor prosecutions.

Ø Note: The court may not accept a guilty or no contest plea to a felony from a defendant who is not physically present in court unless the parties stipulate to the procedure. Pen C §977(c).

Videotaped mass advisements of constitutional rights in court are not constitutionally objectionable. People v Shannon (1981) 121 CA3d Supp 1, 175 CR 331 (misdemeanor DUI prosecution).

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Appointment of Counsel

§6.17 1. Duties of Court

When the court appoints counsel, it may hold a hearing to learn whether the defendant has any assets, particularly real property, that can be attached by the county to reimburse it for legal assistance to the defendant. Pen C §987.8(a). The court must inform defendants before appointing counsel that they may be ordered to reimburse the county for all or part of the cost of court-appointed legal services if the court, at the conclusion of the criminal proceedings, determines that the defendant has the present ability to pay. Pen C §987.8(f). The court clerk must note on the docket that this admonition was given at the time the court appoints counsel. See People v Amor (1974) 12 C3d 20, 29, 114 CR 765 (due process requires notice). See Pen C §987.8 generally for a detailed description of the hearing requirements for redetermination of indigency.

Because of the potential for conflict of interest for the attorney undertaking the joint representation of codefendants, when indigent codefendants appear without counsel, the court must select separate and independent counsel for each defendant. People v Mroczko (1983) 35 C3d 86, 115, 197 CR 52, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209. Codefendants may be jointly represented only after each has made a knowing and intelligent waiver of the right to separate counsel. 35 C3d at 109. For further discussion of conflicts in joint representation, see §2.9.

§6.18 2. Procedures for Assigning Cases to Public Defender

Determining whether the defendant will be represented or unrepresented at the arraignment differs from county to county in California, depending on the policy of the local public defender or other program for indigents without counsel. In some counties, defendants are routinely interviewed by a public defender before their first court appearance and represented at that appearance. This procedure has several advantages for the defense. First, defense counsel is able to advise the defendant of his or her right to remain silent, because police officers may seek to continue or begin questioning about the crime for which the defendant was arrested, or about an unrelated crime, after arrest and before the first court appearance. Second, defense counsel is prepared to make a bail or own recognizance release recommendation at the first appearance. Third, defense counsel or an investigator can conduct any investigation that must be done right away, e.g., photographing the defendant's bruises or other injuries.

In other counties, the public defender waits until the first court appearance to be appointed by the court and then interviews the defendant. The advantage of this approach is that some or many defendants bail out before a public defender goes to the jail to interview them, and they are more likely to secure private counsel or come to the public defender's office, where they can be interviewed more conveniently.

Private counsel retained after a public defender has been appointed may give the public defender's office a substitution-of-counsel form signed by the defendant and request a copy of any discovery they have received or investigation they have conducted. See Evid C §§953-954 (lawyer-client privilege). See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(D)(1) (client papers and property). A sample letter notifying counsel of the substitution and seeking a release of information is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §3.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). In practice, many courts will accept an oral substitution of counsel when done in open court with the defendant's express consent.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.19 3. Advisement of Other Trial Rights

The vast majority of defendants charged with infractions, and many misdemeanor defendants as well, waive the right to counsel and plead guilty at the arraignment. A valid plea of guilty or no contest to a misdemeanor or felony charge requires a knowing and voluntary waiver of the right to jury trial, the right to confront witnesses, and the privilege against self-incrimination. Boykin v Alabama (1969) 395 US 238, 23 L Ed 2d 274, 89 S Ct 1709; In re Tahl (1969) 1 C3d 122, 81 CR 577, disapproved on other grounds in Mills v Municipal Court (1973) 10 C3d 288, 306 n16, 110 CR 329. See People v Sumstine (1984) 36 C3d 909, 921, 206 CR 707. An individual charged with an infraction has no right to jury trial (Pen C §19.6) but does have the privilege against self-incrimination and the right to confront witnesses.

In counties that routinely use mass advisements, the standard advisement typically advises defendants of the Boykin-Tahl rights as well as the right to counsel.

E. Taking Defendant's Plea

§6.20 1. Grounds for Postponing Entry of Plea

A defendant must be given an opportunity to enter a plea at the arraignment. However, when a defendant appears without counsel and wishes to have representation, the better practice is for the court to delay entry of a plea until after he or she appears with an attorney. If the defendant requires additional time to answer the charges, the court must allow a reasonable continuance—at least 1 day for a felony charge and no more than 7 days in a misdemeanor or infraction case. Pen C §990. A defendant who has been arrested for a Vehicle Code misdemeanor or infraction is entitled to a continuance of at least 5 days to plead and prepare for trial. However, the defendant may waive the 5-day continuance either in writing or in open court. Veh C §40306(b).

A defendant who refuses to enter a plea is deemed to have entered a plea of not guilty. Pen C §1024.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.21 2. Prior-Conviction Allegations

When a prior conviction is alleged, the court must ask the defendant whether the allegation is true. Pen C §1025. A defendant's refusal to answer is the equivalent of a denial of the prior. Pen C §1025. On prior convictions, see chap 24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.22 3. Entering Plea of Guilty or No Contest

Advisement of trial rights. Before the court accepts a plea of guilty or no contest from a defendant, whether represented or unrepresented, each of the Boykin-Tahl rights—"self-incrimination, confrontation, and jury trial—must be specifically and expressly enumerated for the benefit of and waived by the accused prior to acceptance of his guilty plea." In re Tahl (1969) 1 C3d 122, 131, 81 CR 577, disapproved on other grounds in Mills v Municipal Court (1973) 10 C3d 288, 306 n16, 110 CR 329. In addition, before pleading guilty or no contest, the defendant must be made aware of the direct consequences of the conviction. Bunnell v Superior Court (1975) 13 C3d 592, 605, 119 CR 302. See also Rhyne v Municipal Court (1980) 113 CA3d 807, 819, 170 CR 312 (in county that used mass advisements and preprinted waiver forms, use of "counseling" attorney to explain trial rights and consequences of plea was necessary to protect defendants' rights).

The court must give the same advisements before accepting the defendant's admission of the truth of a prior conviction. On challenging the constitutionality of a prior conviction, see §§24.30-24.39.

> Ø Note: It is unusual for a represented defendant to enter a plea of guilty or no contest at arraignment, because there usually has not been sufficient time to investigate the case and discuss a plea bargain with the prosecutor. However, in some cases, when counsel does have the facts, an early plea may be strategically advisable to bar prosecution for more serious uncharged offenses. See People v Bas (1987) 194 CA3d 878, 241 CR 299. For further discussion, see chaps 26 (plea bargaining and requirements when defendant enters a plea of guilty) and 35 (pronouncing judgment).

Advisement of the right to counsel. Before accepting a plea of guilty or no contest from an unrepresented misdemeanor defendant, the magistrate must ascertain that the defendant's waiver of the right to counsel was knowing and voluntary. In a felony case, the waiver must be expressly made in open court. Pen C §1018.

> Ø Note: An unrepresented defendant charged with a crime punishable by death or life in prison without the possibility of parole may not plead guilty; a defendant in such a case who appears with counsel may plead guilty only with counsel's consent.

In misdemeanor and infraction cases, the court does not have to take each individual waiver in open court. In re Johnson (1965) 62 C2d 325, 332, 42 CR 228. Many jurisdictions use mass advisements and preprinted waiver forms that are initialed by the defendant. However, the trial court retains the duty to assure itself that the defendant's waiver of the right to counsel was knowing and voluntary. 62 C2d at 333. The defendant can enter a plea of guilty or no contest through counsel in most misdemeanor cases but must appear in court to do so in felony cases. See Pen C §977; Simmons v Superior Court (1988) 203 CA3d 71, 249 CR 721.

§6.23 F. Determining Probable Cause

Felonies. An individual arrested without a warrant must be promptly taken before a magistrate, who must determine whether there is probable cause to hold the individual. Gerstein v Pugh (1975) 420 US 103, 125, 43 L Ed 2d 54, 71, 95 S Ct 854. This probable cause hearing must be held within 48 hours after the arrest, including weekends and holidays. County of Riverside v McLaughlin (1991) 500 US 44, 56, 114 L Ed 2d 49, 63, 111 S Ct 1661. See also People v Bonillas (1989) 48 C3d 757, 787, 257 CR 895 (48-hour rule is merely guideline; earlier probable cause determination may be unreasonable in some circumstances).

The probable cause hearing does not have to be adversarial; attorneys do not have to be present, and the magistrate may base his or her decision solely on documents. Gerstein v Pugh (1975) 420 US 103, 120, 43 L Ed 2d 54, 69, 95 S Ct 854. In many jurisdictions, as a matter of regular practice, prosecutors file the complaint with declarations supporting probable cause attached. The hearing may be combined with the arraignment or some other proceeding if held within the 48-hour time limit. County of Riverside v McLaughlin (1991) 500 US 44, 57, 114 L Ed 2d 49, 64, 111 S Ct 1661.

Misdemeanors. A defendant who (1) is accused of a misdemeanor, (2) is in custody when arraigned, and (3) pleads not guilty may request a probable cause determination. Pen C §991(a). At this hearing, the magistrate must determine whether there is probable cause to believe that a public offense has been committed and that the defendant is the person responsible. Pen C §991(a).

The court must give the defendant notice of the right to a probable cause hearing. In re Walters (1975) 15 C3d 738, 750, 126 CR 239. This notice can be given en masse. Sundance v Municipal Court (1986) 42 C3d 1101, 1129, 232 CR 814; Mills v Municipal Court (1973) 10 C3d 288, 303, 110 CR 329. The court may rule on the legality of any detention or arrest as part of the probable cause determination. People v Ward (1986) 188 CA3d Supp 11, 235 CR 287.

Unless the defendant requests a continuance, the court will make the probable cause determination at the arraignment. Pen C §991(b). The court may grant a continuance only for good cause, and it may not exceed 3 court days. Pen C §991(b). At the §991 hearing, the court can consider the arrest warrant and its supporting affidavits or declarations and any other documents of similar reliability that are incorporated by reference. Pen C §991(c). If the court finds probable cause, it must set the case for trial. If the court finds that no probable cause exists, it must dismiss the complaint. Pen C §991(d). This dismissal is not a bar to another prosecution for the same offense if the prosecutor refiles within 15 calendar days after the dismissal. However, a second dismissal under Pen C §991 is a bar to further prosecution for that offense. Pen C §991(e).

Infractions. Although §991 refers only to misdemeanors, the holding of In re Walters, supra, applies equally to individuals in custody who are charged with infractions.

Delinquency proceedings. A prompt probable cause hearing is required in juvenile proceedings, but it does not have to be held within 48 hours. Alfredo A. v Superior Court (1994) 6 C4th 1212, 26 CR2d 623.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.24 G. Setting Bail; Own Recognizance (O.R.) Release

The court must set bail at defendant's first court appearance if the offense is bailable. Cal Const art I, §12; Pen C §1271. A court cannot set bail on a parole hold. In re Law (1973) 10 C3d 21, 26, 109 CR 573.

The court may release on his or her own recognizance, i.e., without having to post bail, anyone for whom the court could set bail. Pen C §1270(a).

A person who is arrested on a misdemeanor charge from another county has the right to be brought to court in the county of arrest to have bail set if no bail was set by the warrant itself. Pen C §822. The magistrate in the arresting county may not set bail when the charge is a felony, although the defendant may be released on bail if the warrant specifies an amount. Pen C §821. See §6.30.

For further discussion of bail and O.R. release, see chap 5.

VI. OTHER MATTERS THAT MAY BE ADDRESSED AT ARRAIGNMENT

§6.25 A. Deferred Entry of Judgment or Diversion

Counsel may request deferred entry of judgment, or diversion, depending on what program is available, at the first court appearance. They are available in certain drug cases, bad check cases, child abuse and neglect cases, and cases involving developmentally disabled defendants. In addition, some counties may have their own programs for particular classes of cases. Pen C §§1000-1001.90. On successful completion of the program, the charge is dismissed. Pen C §§1001.1, 1001.7.

For further discussion of diversion and deferred entry of judgment, see chap 27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.26 B. Mentally Ill and Developmentally Disabled Defendants

Counsel or the judge may wish to have a defendant examined because of apparent mental incompetence. See Pen C §§1368, 4011.6. These procedures are discussed in §§48.3-48.22.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Setting Next Court Appearance

§6.27 1. Misdemeanor Cases

After arraignment, counsel can ask the court to schedule appropriate pretrial motions for hearing, pretrial hearings for plea negotiations, and trial dates. Some counties require written notice of the grounds for search and seizure motions. Counsel should check local court rules before setting motions.

Pretrial motions are discussed in chaps 11 (discovery), 19 (speedy trial), 15 (change of venue), 22 (lineups and identification), 16 (motion to return or suppress evidence), 17 (motion to disclose informant), and 18 (selected pretrial motions). See chap 48 on procedures for mentally ill and developmentally disabled defendants.

§6.28 2. Felony Cases

Initiated by complaint. In felony cases initiated by the filing of a complaint, defense counsel may obtain some discovery at arraignment, depending on local practice. However, it is important for defense counsel to obtain full discovery before the preliminary hearing. Therefore, defense counsel should make an informal discovery request at the arraignment unless a standing discovery order covers the items desired by the defense. Prosecutors should also make an informal discovery request at arraignment. On discovery, see chap 11.

If counsel wishes to have a motion heard at the preliminary hearing, he or she should check and follow the notice requirements for that particular motion as well as any local rules of court. See §§8.31-8.34 for discussion of motions that may be brought at the preliminary hearing.

Initiated by information or indictment. At arraignment on a felony information or indictment, defense counsel should notice discovery and other appropriate motions for hearing. Defense pretrial motions are discussed in chaps 11 (discovery), 19 (speedy trial), 15 (change of venue), 22 (lineups and identification), 16 (motion to return or suppress evidence), 17 (motion to disclose informant), 13 (motion to dismiss the information or indictment under Pen C §995), and 18 (selected pretrial motions). See chap 48 on procedures for mentally ill or developmentally disabled defendants. The prosecution also has the right to hearings on discovery requests made to the defense under Pen C §§1054-1054.7. See chap 11.

Prosecutors may notice a special hearing to challenge a ruling at the preliminary hearing favorable to the defense under Pen C §1538.5(j) (see §16.31), a motion to reinstate charges (see §§13.32-13.36, 16.30), a discovery motion (see chap 11), and any other relevant motion (see checklist in §18.4).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.29 D. Selecting Trial Date

A defendant is entitled to at least 5 days to prepare for trial after entering a plea. Pen C §1049.

Misdemeanor cases. In misdemeanor cases, a trial must be set no more than 30 calendar days after the defendant is arraigned when he or she is in custody, or 45 calendar days after arraignment when not in custody unless the defendant waives time or good cause is shown for a continuance. Pen C §1382(a)(3). A defendant unrepresented by counsel cannot waive these time limits or consent to a trial date beyond the statutory period unless the court has explained to him or her (1) the right to be tried within the statutory period (unless there is good cause for delay) or to have the case dismissed, and (2) the effect of consent to a postponement. Pen C §1382; Hill v Municipal Court (1962) 206 CA2d 257, 24 CR 34. See discussion of what constitutes "arraignment" in §6.5.

Felony cases. Felony trials must be set no more than 60 calendar days after the filing of the information or finding of the indictment absent a time waiver or good cause. Pen C §1382(a)(2). Another statute, Pen C §1049.5, requires felony trials to be set within 60 calendar days after arraignment on an information or indictment unless good cause is shown under Pen C §1050 for a later date. If the trial in a felony case does not take place within these guidelines, and time was not waived, the defendant is entitled as a matter of right to have the case dismissed. Pen C §1382.

Preferential setting. Trials in the following types of cases are to be set before other trials, and in any event must be set for trial within 30 calendar days after arraignment (Pen C §1048):

- When a minor is detained as a material witness or is the victim of the alleged offense, or when any person is the victim of a sex crime charged under Pen C §§261, 264.1, 286, 288, 288a, or 289 and committed by force, violence, or threat of violence;
- When a witness or victim was 70 years of age or older at the time of the alleged offense or was a dependent adult; or
- When a violation of Pen C §§261, 264.1, 273a, 273d, 285, 286, 288, 288a, or 289, committed by the use of force, violence, or the threat of violence, is charged.

Ø Note: Nothing in §1048 provides for a statutory right to trial within 30 calendar days. Pen C §1048(c).

When one of the sexual assault offenses described in Pen C §11165.1(a) or (b) or child abuse or neglect under Pen C §11165.6 is charged, the court, in scheduling a trial date, must make "reasonable efforts" to avoid setting the trial on the same day that the prosecuting attorney assigned to that case has another trial set. Pen C §1048.1.

For further discussion of speedy trial requirements, see chap 19.

§6.30 VII. OUT-OF-COUNTY ARREST AND ARRAIGNMENT

A defendant who is arrested on a felony charge in a county other than the one in which the alleged crime occurred has the right to be arraigned without unnecessary delay in the county in which the arrest occurred. The arresting officer must inform the defendant of this right in writing. Pen C §821. If the arrest warrant sets a bail amount, the magistrate must admit the defendant to bail in that amount and set a date by which the defendant is required to appear before the court or magistrate who issued the warrant. This date must be within 25 days after the defendant is admitted to bail. Pen C §821. When the warrant sets a bail amount, the officer in charge of the jail has the authority to admit the defendant to bail in that amount and to set a time and date for the defendant to appear in the appropriate court. Pen C §§821, 1269b(a)-(b).

If the warrant does not set bail, if the defendant cannot make bail, or if the defendant does not demand to be taken before a magistrate in the county of arrest, the arresting officer must immediately inform the law enforcement agency that obtained the warrant that the defendant is in custody. That law enforcement agency must take custody of the defendant within 5 days after receiving the notice (5 court days if the county that issued the warrant is more than 400 miles from the county which has the defendant in custody). Pen C §821. The procedures applicable to misdemeanors are very similar. See Pen C §822. The major difference is that when the charged offense is a misdemeanor, the magistrate in the arresting county is authorized to set and accept bail, even if the warrant does not specify a bail amount. Pen C §822, ¶1.

When the court fails to tell a defendant of these rights or to set bail, or the county that issued the warrant does not timely take custody of the defendant, defendant's remedy is to petition for a writ of habeas corpus. See chap 42.

A defendant arrested for a felony violation of the Vehicle Code is treated like any other felony defendant. Veh C §40301. For Vehicle Code violations that are not felonies, the defendant must be taken before a magistrate in the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed or, depending on the offense, be given a notice to appear before that magistrate. Veh C §§40302-40303. See People v Superior Court (Simon) (1972) 7 C3d 186, 101 CR 837; Kramer v Superior Court (1966) 239 CA2d 500, 48 CR 897.

A defendant in custody and undergoing prosecution in one county who has cases pending in other counties may not, under Pen C §§821-822, compel arraignment in another county on separate charges until the pending prosecution in the first county is completed. Ng v Superior Court (1992) 4 C4th 29, 13 CR2d 856.

Ø Note: All trial courts in the county in which an alleged criminal offense was committed have jurisdiction to try the case. Pen Code §§691(b), 777 (felonies), 1462.2 (misdemeanors). For discussion of venue and jurisdiction, see §15.3.

VIII. INFRACTION CASES

§6.31 A. Limitations of Rights of Defendant

An infraction is an offense not punishable by incarceration. Pen C §19.6. Because of this, "[p]roceedings on infractions are not attended by the same constitutional safeguards as those attending felony or misdemeanor prosecutions." People v Sava (1987) 190 CA3d 935, 939, 235 CR 694. Hence, a defendant charged with an infraction is not entitled to a jury trial. Pen C §19.6. Moreover, unless incarcerated at the arraignment, an individual charged with an infraction is not entitled to legal representation at public expense. Pen C §19.6; People v Prince (1976) 55 CA3d Supp 19, 127 CR 296. But see Pen C §19.7 (unless otherwise provided by law, all legal provisions applicable to persons accused of misdemeanors also apply to those accused of infractions).

Ø Note: If an offense is classified as a misdemeanor, the defendant has the rights applicable to all misdemeanor defendants, even if incarceration is not an authorized punishment. Tracy v Municipal Court (1978) 22 C3d 760, 150 CR 785 (Health & S C §11357(b)).

It is rare for the district attorney's office to represent the people in the trial of an infraction. However, the judge cannot take the prosecutor's place. People v Daggett (1988) 206 CA3d Supp 1, 253 CR 195.

Counsel may appear for a defendant charged with an infraction; the defendant's presence is not required. Pen C §§19.7, 977(a).

A defendant ordered to appear on a traffic infraction may, before the date of his or her required appearance, plead not guilty in writing. Veh C §40519(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.32 B. Offenses That May Be Charged Alternatively as Misdemeanors or Infractions

Penal Code §19.8 lists offenses that can be charged either as misdemeanors or infractions. Counsel should consult this list regularly because it is often amended.

Petty theft of property valued at $50 or less can also be charged as either a misdemeanor or an infraction under Pen C §490.1. If the offense was charged as a misdemeanor, however, the trial court cannot reduce the offense to an infraction over the prosecutor's objection. People v Campbell (2002) 104 CA4th Supp 1, 129 CR2d 601.

A defendant charged with a traffic infraction who has suffered three prior infraction convictions within the preceding 12 months can convert the infraction into a misdemeanor (see Veh C §40000.28) by admitting the prior convictions even though the priors are not charged or have been stricken in the interests of justice. People v Shults (1978) 87 CA3d 101, 150 CR 747. This procedure makes available those rights in misdemeanor prosecutions not otherwise available in an infraction case.

When a defendant is charged with a misdemeanor, the prosecution and the court cannot, without the defendant's consent, reduce the charge to an infraction to deny the defendant's right to a jury trial, when the charge is based on the same facts. However, when a prosecutor has the alternative of charging a single act under either of two statutes, one requiring a jury trial and the other not, he or she has no obligation to choose the one affording the right to a jury trial. People v Bowden (1978) 86 CA3d Supp 1, 150 CR 633.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.33 IX. PROCEDURE ON FAILURE TO APPEAR

When a defendant's personal appearance is necessary in court, such as for arraignment, and the defendant is in custody, the court may direct that the officer having custody bring the defendant before the court. Pen C §978.

If a defendant is released on bail or on his or her own recognizance and fails to appear at arraignment when the defendant's personal presence is required, the court may order forfeiture of bail (Pen C §§979, 1269b(g), 1305-1306) and order a bench warrant to issue for the defendant's arrest (Pen C §§978.5, 979). Failure to appear on a written promise to appear on a felony violation is a felony. Pen C §1320. Failure to appear on a written promise to appear on a misdemeanor or an infraction is a misdemeanor. Pen C §§19.7, 853.7, 1320.

Ø Note: When a bail bond is forfeited because of a failure to appear, the defendant may request that the bail bond company reassume the bond. Many courts accept the bail bond reassumption and allow the defendant to remain out of custody.

§7.1 I. OVERVIEW

Types of criminal pleadings. There are three types of pleadings (also called charging documents and accusatory pleadings) in criminal cases: complaints, informations, and indictments. A complaint may charge misdemeanor offenses, felony offenses, or both. An information is the charging document filed in felony cases (or when felonies and misdemeanors are both charged) following a holding order after a preliminary hearing based on a complaint. An indictment is returned by the grand jury and filed in superior court. For sample pleadings, see the Uniform Crime Charging Manual (updated annually) published by the Los Angeles County District Attorney's office and distributed by them to District Attorney offices throughout the state. Most prosecutors follow the Uniform Crime Charging Manual in determining whether and what charges to file. See §7.13 for a checklist of limitations on prosecutorial discretion in charging.

Amendments. The prosecutor can amend an accusatory pleading without the court's permission at any time before a plea is entered or a demurrer to the original pleading is sustained. After that, amendments are made at the court's discretion. Pen C §1009. A complaint or an indictment can be amended as long as the amendment does not change the offense charged. Pen C §1009; People v Crosby (1962) 58 C2d 713, 723, 25 CR 847 (amendment to indictment that would have tolled statute of limitations should have been allowed). However, an information may not be amended to add a charge that was not shown by the evidence at the preliminary hearing. Pen C §1009; People v Winters (1990) 221 CA3d 997, 270 CR 740. See also Pen C §739; People v Peyton (2009) 176 CA4th 642, 653, 98 CR3d 243. The prosecution may amend an information to add prior conviction enhancement allegations at any time before sentencing when there has been a guilty plea, and at any time before the jury has been excused after a trial. Pen C §969a; People v Valladoli (1996) 13 C4th 590, 54 CR2d 695. See also People v Tindall (2000) 24 C4th 767, 102 CR2d 533 (unless defendant has waived or forfeited jury on priors, amendment after discharge violates defendant's right to have same jury try guilt and priors).

If an amendment is made shortly before trial and requires further preparation by defense counsel, it is common for the court to grant a continuance. See Pen C §1050 on continuances. See also chap 20. Because amendment of an information at trial is proper only if it does not compromise the defendant's substantial rights (People v Jones (1985) 164 CA3d 1173, 1178, 211 CR 167), amendments during trial are rarely permitted. By that time, defense counsel may be committed to a defense that he or she would not otherwise have pursued if counsel had known of the new charge. However, if the defense had notice from the prosecutor earlier that additional charges might be filed, the court may allow the amendment during trial. People v Jones, supra.

Demurrer and entry of plea. Once a complaint, indictment, or information is filed, and if no alternative to court proceedings is available, e.g., a citation hearing (see §26.41) or diversion (see chap 27), defense counsel can either demur to the pleading or enter a plea. Pen C §1002. Available pleas are guilty, not guilty, not guilty by reason of insanity, once in jeopardy, nolo contendere, and former judgment of conviction or acquittal. Pen C §1016.

A demurrer asserts error on the face of the charging document, such as the running of the statute of limitations (see People v Ayhens (1890) 85 C 86, 24 P 635) or lack of notice of the charges (see People v Jordan (1971) 19 CA3d 362, 97 CR 570). A demurrer does not require the court's permission if it is made before a plea is entered. Pen C §1004. Once a plea has been entered, counsel must obtain the court's permission to demur. Pen C §§1003-1004.

Joinder and severance. It may be proper for a complaint, information, or indictment to charge one defendant with multiple crimes or multiple defendants with one or more crimes, or charge multiple crimes against multiple defendants, not all of whom are charged with each count. Pen C §§954, 1098. The prosecutor or the defense can move to join (also called consolidate) or sever counts or defendants after the pleading has been filed. See Pen C §954.

Ø Warning: Counsel should consult local rules before relying on this chart. Many counties have specific time requirements not otherwise required by the Penal Code.

Action	Deadline	Authority
File complaint.	Must be filed to comply with due process and speedy trial requirements and statute of limitations.	US Const amends VI, XIV; Cal Const art I, §15; Pen C §§799-805; see chap 19.
File indictment.	Must comply with due process and speedy trial requirements and statute of limitations.	US Const amends VI, XIV; Cal Const art I, §15; Pen C §§799-805; see chap 19.
File information.	Within 15 calendar days after holding order (commitment) following preliminary hearing, unless good cause shown for late filing.	Pen C §1382(a)(1); Ciaccio v Superior Court (1984) 156 CA3d 130, 202 CR 674.
Demur.	Before a plea is entered unless judge allows it to be made later.	Pen C §1004.
Amend pleadings.	Without leave of court before defendant pleads or demurrer sustained; with leave of court "at any stage of the proceedings." Better practice is to amend as early as possible.	Pen C §1009.
Make severance motion.	As soon as possible.	People v Aranda (1965) 63 C2d 518, 47 CR 353; Coleman v Superior Court (1981) 116 CA3d 129, 139, 172 CR 86; see Pen C §§954, 1098.
Make joinder motion.	As soon as possible.	See Pen C §§954, 1098.

III. PLEADINGS

§7.3 A. Complaint; Citation

A written complaint, subscribed under oath, can be a preliminary pleading in a felony case, or the only pleading in a misdemeanor or infraction case. Pen C §§859, 949. Infractions and misdemeanors that are not alternative misdemeanor/felonies may also be initiated by filing a citation in the court. Pen C §853.6; 58 Ops Cal Atty Gen 886 (1975). See §7.9 on the requirement of a verified pleading.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.4 B. Information; Indictment

The complaint in a felony case is followed by a preliminary hearing. The pleading filed by the people if the defendant is held to answer for a felony after a preliminary hearing is the information. If the prosecution takes the case to the grand jury, there is no formal complaint. The pleading filed by the people, if defendant is indicted by the grand jury, is the indictment. If the defendant pleads guilty to a felony before there is a holding order, the case is certified under Pen C §859a and the pleading is a complaint. Pen C §949. See also Pen C §§739, 944.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Form and Content

§7.5 1. Summary of Form and Content; Sample Charging Document

The charging document in a criminal case includes the following information:

- The defendant's name or each codefendant's name, when codefendants are jointly charged;
- The date of the alleged offense or offenses;
- The crime or crimes charged;

Ø Note: A defendant may be convicted of a necessarily lesser included offense of a crime charged. Pen C §1159. See §§8.41, 26.25, 32.8.

- Where the offense or offenses were committed;
- If a crime charged is an alternative misdemeanor/felony, whether it is charged as a misdemeanor or a felony;
- The defendant's age, if required;
- Any prior convictions that must be pleaded and proved (see chart in §24.18);
- Any special allegation, e.g., that the defendant used a gun during the commission of the crime; and
- Information on tolling of the statute of limitations, if required (see Pen C §803; see also §7.10).

The date on which an arrest warrant was obtained may be (but is not required to be) on the complaint.

A typical complaint might read as follows:

That on or about the 12th day of June, 2003, at and in the County of Santa Clara, State of California, the crime of robbery in violation of Section 211 of the Penal Code, a felony, was committed by Leslie Johnson, who, at that time and place, did willfully, unlawfully, and by means of force and/or fear take personal property from the person, possession, and/or immediate presence of Chris Potter.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.6 2. Name of Court and Parties

The accusatory pleading must contain the title of the action, the name of the court to which it is presented, and the names of the parties. Pen C §950. A criminal action is prosecuted in the name of the people of the State of California. Pen C §684; see People v Black (2003) 114 CA4th 830, 832, 7 CR3d 902 (prosecution by "The People" does not violate federal or state constitutional guaranties of fair trial and due process). If the court is not named, the accusatory pleading is sufficient if it shows that it is filed in a court having authority to receive it. Pen C §959(1). If the defendant's name is unknown, that fact must be stated, and he or she must be described by a fictitious name. Pen C §959(4).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.7 3. Manner of Statement of Offense

The accusatory pleading must contain a statement of the public offense or offenses charged. Pen C §950. No technical language is required. In charging an offense, each count is sufficient if it states in ordinary and concise language that the accused has committed a specific public offense. The statement may be in the words of the statute or ordinance making the conduct a public offense or in any words sufficient to give the defendant notice of the offense of which he or she is accused. Pen C §952. See, e.g., Brown v Superior Court (1965) 234 CA2d 628, 630, 44 CR 519 (speed violation in words of statute). When there is an issue concerning the tolling of the statute of limitations (Pen C §803), the pleading must give reasons the cause of action is not barred by the statute of limitations. People v Zamora (1976) 18 C3d 538, 564 n26, 134 CR 784. An accusatory pleading stating the charged offense also provides notice of any necessarily included offenses. People v Lohbauer (1981) 29 C3d 364, 368, 173 CR 453; People v Tardy (2003) 112 CA4th 783, 786, 6 CR3d 24.

Not every pleading that satisfies Pen C §952 will satisfy due process notice requirements when tested by demurrer. Lamadrid v Municipal Court (1981) 118 CA3d 786, 790, 173 CR 599. Due process requires that an accused be advised of the charges in order to have a reasonable opportunity to prepare and present a defense and not be taken by surprise by evidence offered at trial. In re Hess (1955) 45 C2d 171, 175, 288 P2d 5; People v Jordan (1971) 19 CA3d 362, 97 CR 570 (pleading in terms of statute, and viewed in light of preliminary hearing transcript, did not give constitutionally adequate notice of nature of charges sufficient to notify defendants of what they had to defend against and whether there was sufficient certainty to allow future plea in bar; order dismissing action affirmed). See also People v West (1970) 3 C3d 595, 612, 91 CR 385; Gaylord v Municipal Court (1987) 196 CA3d 1348, 242 CR 486 (in Pen C §647(b) prosecution, complaint must allege agreement to engage in prostitution and act in furtherance of agreement). See generally In re Rudolfo A. (1980) 110 CA3d 845, 168 CR 338 (constitutional sufficiency of petition charging "trespass" on school grounds in violation of local ordinance).

A misdemeanor complaint charging a defendant with being under the influence of a controlled substance in violation of Health & S C §11550 must specify the specific substance. Discovery will not satisfy the requirement of notice and it cannot be assumed that the defendant knows the nature of the substance, because the defendant is presumed innocent. Sallas v Municipal Court (1978) 86 CA3d 737, 743, 150 CR 543. But see Ross v Municipal Court (1975) 49 CA3d 575, 579, 122 CR 807 (complaint that does not specify substance gives adequate notice).

California courts have uniformly held that an information charging murder generally provides constitutionally adequate notice to the defendant that the prosecution might rely on theories other than malice aforethought or premeditation and deliberation, such as felony murder or murder by lying in wait. See, e.g., People v Gurule (2002) 28 C4th 557, 629, 123 CR2d 345; People v Gallego (1990) 52 C3d 115, 181, 276 CR 679. But see Sheppard v Rees (9th Cir 1990) 909 F2d 1234 (defendant ambushed by prosecutor's 11th-hour reliance on felony murder theory).

When the statute imposing an enhancement requires the facts supporting the enhancement to be stated in the accusatory pleading, the enhancement should be alleged with respect to every count on which the prosecution seeks to invoke it. However, failure to do so is not fatal as long as the defendant has fair notice of the potential punishment. People v Riva (2003) 112 CA4th 981, 985, 5 CR3d 649.

It is not necessary to negate exceptions in a statute; these are a matter of defense. People v Kinsley (1931) 118 CA 593, 597, 5 P2d 938 (information charging sale of narcotics was not defective for failure to allege that defendant was not a physician).

For discussion of demurrers, see §§7.19-7.26.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.8 4. Time of Offense

The precise date on which an offense was committed need not be stated unless the date is material to the offense. Pen C §955.

The accusatory pleading must allege facts showing that the prosecution is not barred by the statute of limitations, and if the time elapsed exceeds the statute of limitations, the pleading must allege further facts, e.g., the defendant's absence from the state for a sufficient period to toll the statute under Pen C §803(d). In re Demillo (1975) 14 C3d 598, 121 CR 725.

Pleadings in cases involving repeated or continuous acts of child sexual abuse present special problems for the defense because the charging document may be vague about when the offense occurred, e.g., Count 1: a violation of Pen C §288(a) between September 1, 2003, and December 31, 2003. The California Supreme Court has upheld such generic accusatory pleadings against due process challenge. See People v Jones (1990) 51 C3d 294, 317, 270 CR 611 (generic child molestation pleading does not deprive defendant of due process rights to notice and to present defense).

In Jones, the court observed that the defendant had a variety of procedural remedies to test the pleading, such as demurrers and pretrial motions to set aside the information or indictment (Pen C §995 motion). 51 C3d at 320. However, the decision in People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 356, 279 CR 780 (no due process notice violation in information that alleged offense occurred "on or about the summer of 1983"), suggests that a demurrer to generic child molestation charges is not likely to be successful. Defense counsel should demur but should also be prepared to pursue pretrial motions to dismiss under Pen C §995 (see chap 13) and to require the prosecutor to elect the specific incident on which he or she is relying to prove a particular count. See §31.33. At trial, counsel should request a jury unanimity instruction. See CALCRIM 3550. See also People v Jones (1990) 51 C3d 294, 321, 270 CR 611. A defendant who waives a preliminary hearing forfeits any claim regarding vagueness in the accusatory pleading. See People v Butte (2004) 117 CA4th 956, 959, 12 CR3d 221.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.9 5. Court Jurisdiction; When Signed and Sworn To

The accusatory pleading must show that the offense charged is triable in the court in which it is filed. Pen C §959(5). On jurisdiction and venue, see §15.3.

A complaint must be in writing, sworn to under oath or penalty of perjury (see CCP §2015.5; People v Salazar (1968) 266 CA2d 113, 71 CR 894), and signed by a natural person. It may be verified on information and belief. Pen C §§740, 959(3). Indictments must be endorsed as a "true bill," and the endorsement must be signed by the grand jury foreman or forewoman. Pen C §940. Informations do not have to be signed or sworn to. See Pen C §959(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.10 D. Statute of Limitations

Criminal accusatory pleadings must be filed before the applicable statute of limitations period has run. See Pen C §§799-805. This is a jurisdictional requirement and so may be asserted as a bar to prosecution either before or after judgment. People v Zamora (1976) 18 C3d 538, 134 CR 784.

On statutes of limitation, see §§19.13-19.16.

IV. CRIME-CHARGING DISCRETION

§7.11 A. Broad Discretion in Charging

Prosecutors are responsible for charging crimes in all but grand jury cases. Govt C §§26500-26501. California prosecutors generally follow the Uniform Crime Charging Standards (1996) published by the California District Attorneys Association (CDAA) and the Uniform Crime Charging Manual (updated annually), published by the Los Angeles County District Attorney's office, in deciding what charges to bring and when to bring them. Information on purchasing the standards is available at the CDAA's website: http://www.cdaa.org/pubs.

The prosecutor has broad discretion in charging. He or she can:

- Not charge at all (see Govt C §26501; see Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-110 on prosecutor's ethical obligations in charging);
- Set up a "citation" or "office" hearing with the victim and defendant instead of filing a complaint, if such an informal program is available in the district attorney's office;
- Bring the evidence before the grand jury and allow it to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to charge (see Pen C §§917, 935);
- Grant immunity instead of filing charges (see Pen C §§1324-1324.1);
- Reach a civil compromise instead of filing charges (see CCP §33);
- When alternative felony/misdemeanors are charged, decide whether they will be charged as misdemeanors or felonies (see Pen C §17(b)(4));
- Decide what crimes to charge (see Mitchell v Superior Court (1989) 49 C3d 1230, 1250, 265 CR 144; People v Cockburn (2003) 109 CA4th 1151, 1157, 135 CR2d 807);
- Decide whether to charge prior convictions and special allegations, and which ones (see People v Adams (1974) 43 CA3d 697, 707, 117 CR 905);
- Decide whether to join counts, defendants, or both in the same case (see People v Adams, supra);
- Decide whether to aggregate multiple instances of misdemeanor vandalism to make a felony offense (see In re Arthur V. (2008) 166 CA4th 61, 67, 82 CR3d 148); and
- Decide whether to aggregate several petty thefts against the same victim to make one grand theft count or charge theft counts separately (see People v Bailey (1961) 55 C2d 514, 519, 11 CR 543; People v Drake (1996) 42 CA4th 592, 49 CR2d 765).

§7.12 B. Alternative Misdemeanor/Felony ("Wobbler")

Some crimes, often called "wobblers," list both county jail (misdemeanor sentence) and state prison (felony sentence) as possible punishment. The prosecutor has the discretion to charge them either as misdemeanors or as felonies. Pen C §17(b)(4).

The prosecution may file an alternative misdemeanor/felony first as a misdemeanor, and then, before a plea is entered, dismiss the misdemeanor complaint under Pen C §1385 and refile the charge as a felony. Necochea v Superior Court (1972) 23 CA3d 1012, 100 CR 693. The prosecution may also refile a wobbler as a felony after the defendant has been allowed to withdraw a plea to the crime as a misdemeanor. People v Hudson (1989) 210 CA3d 784, 258 CR 563. But see discussion in §§18.32-18.37 of retaliatory prosecution.

The magistrate has the discretion to reduce a felony to a misdemeanor at the preliminary hearing. Pen C §17(b)(5). The trial court's authority to declare a "wobbler" to be a misdemeanor under Pen C §17(b) was not abrogated by the "three strikes" laws. People v Superior Court (Alvarez) (1997) 14 C4th 968, 60 CR2d 93.

§7.13 C. Checklist: Limitations on Prosecutorial Discretion

The prosecution's ability to charge may be limited by the following:

- There was no probable cause. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-110. See §2.41.
- The prosecution was retaliatory. Twiggs v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 360, 374, 194 CR 152. See §§18.32-18.37.
- The prosecution was discriminatory. Yick Wo v Hopkins (1886) 118 US 356, 30 L Ed 220, 6 S Ct 1064. See §§18.16-18.25.
- The defendant was already acquitted or convicted of the offense. Pen C §1023. See §26.34.
- The defendant was already once in jeopardy on the same offense. Pen C §§656, 793-794. See §§26.23-26.28.
- There was res judicata or collateral estoppel. People v Gephart (1979) 93 CA3d 989, 997, 156 CR 489. See §§26.29-26.33.
- The new offense should have been joined with an offense of which the defendant has already been acquitted or convicted. Kellett v Superior Court (1966) 63 C2d 822, 828, 48 CR 366. See §7.35.
- A charged offense was not shown by the evidence at the preliminary hearing. Pen C §739. See §§8.43, 13.37.
- The charges are inconsistent with factual findings of the magistrate at the preliminary hearing. Pizano v Superior Court (1978) 21 C3d 128, 133, 145 CR 524. See §8.39.
- The court has ruled against the prosecution on a Pen C §871.5 motion. Pen C §871.5(c) (if motion denied, dismissed complaint or portion of complaint may not be refiled). See §13.36.
- A misdemeanor case or count has been dismissed once under Pen C §1387.
- A felony case or count, or a misdemeanor count charged with a felony count, has been dismissed twice under Pen C §1387. On the "two-dismissal" rule, see §§13.31, 25.45-25.47.
- A violent felony has been dismissed three times under Pen C §1387.1. See §25.45.
- The defendant was previously found guilty or not guilty of a necessarily lesser included offense. People v Willoughby (1985) 164 CA3d 1054, 1067, 210 CR 880. See §26.25.
- The case was dismissed twice and filed a third time with added enhancements or charges that allege a violent crime to avoid the two-dismissal rule of Pen C §1387. People v Salcido (2008) 166 CA4th 1303, 1313, 83 CR3d 561.

V. AMENDING ACCUSATORY PLEADINGS

§7.14 A. Allowable Reasons for Amending Pleadings

An amendment may be made to remedy "any defect or insufficiency" in a complaint, in an information (as long as the amendment does not charge an offense not shown by the evidence taken at the preliminary hearing), and in an indictment (as long as the amendment does not change the offense charged). Pen C §1009. Thus, an accusatory pleading may be amended to:

- Correct clerical errors (see, e.g., People v Miralrio (2008) 167 CA4th 448, 458, 84 CR3d 169);
- Include an allegation charging a technically essential element of the offense;
- Allege facts showing that the charges are not barred by the statute of limitations;

Ø Note: For discussion of amendments affected by the statutes of limitation, see §19.13.

- Include prior-felony-conviction allegations (Pen C §969a (information may be amended to include enhancement any time before jury discharged); Pen C §969.5 (information may be amended to include enhancement after guilty plea); see also People v Valladoli (1996) 13 C4th 590, 54 CR2d 695);

Ø Note: If the prior conviction is an element of the substantive offense, it must be proved at the preliminary hearing. See §24.18.

- Join several different complaints or informations (see §§7.27-7.42);
- Add an offense or enhancement that was proved at the preliminary hearing (see §8.43); or
- Allege aggravating facts for sentencing purposes (Barragan v Superior Court (2007) 148 CA4th 1478, 1482, 56 CR3d 660; but see People v Superior Court (Brooks) (2007) 159 CA4th 1, 71 CR3d 49).

A defendant's due process rights may not be prejudiced by amendment of the information. An information may not be amended to add an offense not shown by the evidence at the preliminary hearing or arising out of the same transaction on which the commitment order was based. Jones v Superior Court (1971) 4 C3d 660, 664, 94 CR 289; People v Dominguez (2008) 166 CA4th 858, 866, 83 CR3d 284; People v Burnett (1999) 71 CA4th 151, 165, 83 CR2d 629. For example, the defendant's due process rights were violated when the trial court permitted the prosecution to add an alternative basis for conviction at the close of all the evidence. People v Dominguez, supra.

§7.15 B. Time to Amend Pleadings

The prosecuting attorney may file an amended complaint without leave of court any time before the defendant pleads or a demurrer to the original pleading is sustained (Pen C §1009; People v Crosby (1962) 58 C2d 713, 721, 25 CR 847), or after the defendant has withdrawn his or her original plea and before he or she has entered another (People v Stuhlmiller (1940) 37 CA2d 603, 99 P2d 1072).

After a plea has been entered or a demurrer has been sustained, a complaint may be amended only with the court's permission. See People v Brower (1949) 92 CA2d 562, 564, 207 P2d 571 (amended information filed without leave of court does not supersede original). But see People v Loggins (1955) 132 CA2d 736, 738, 282 P2d 961 (amended information filed in open court presumed to have been filed with leave).

The court is authorized to order or permit filing an amended complaint at any stage of the proceedings as long as "defendant's substantial rights are not prejudiced." People v Hernandez (1961) 197 CA2d 25, 31, 17 CR 20; Pen C §1009. See, e.g., People v Jones (1985) 164 CA3d 1173, 211 CR 167 (amendment adding misdemeanor permitted after defendant's Pen C §1118.1 motion granted at conclusion of prosecutor's case-in-chief); People v Martin (1978) 87 CA3d 573, 579, 151 CR 141 (after filing of remittitur); People v Flowers (1971) 14 CA3d 1017, 92 CR 647 (after mistrial); In re McWhinney (1968) 267 CA2d 691, 73 CR 291 (after guilty plea at time set for pronouncement of judgment); People v Sipult (1965) 234 CA2d 862, 866, 44 CR 846 (at beginning of trial); People v Alves (1957) 154 CA2d Supp 877, 879, 315 P2d 755 (after order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend but before judgment of dismissal); People v Jones (1938) 25 CA2d 517, 521, 77 P2d 897 (after close of prosecution's case).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.16 C. Procedure

An amendment may be made on the prosecuting attorney's oral application or on the court's own motion. Pen C §1009; People v Hernandez (1961) 197 CA2d 25, 17 CR 20 (prosecutor's motion); People v Walker (1947) 82 CA2d 196, 185 P2d 842 (court's motion).

A motion to amend may be heard without the defendant present if defense counsel is present and the defendant's presence is or has been properly waived. People v Cayer (1951) 102 CA2d 643, 651, 228 P2d 70.

The usual method of amending a complaint is to file a new and separate pleading, usually captioned "first amended complaint." See Pen C §1009. If the alteration to be made is slight, amendment by interlineation may be permitted (see People v Crosby (1962) 58 C2d 713, 719, 25 CR 847 (indictment); People v O'Hara (1960) 184 CA2d 798, 811, 8 CR 114 (information)), but the court's permission is necessary (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324(d)). The amended complaint must be verified. Pen C §1009.

§7.17 D. Effect of Amendment

An amended complaint supersedes the original, which then has no further function as a pleading. Muns v Superior Court (1955) 137 CA2d 728, 732, 290 P2d 951.

An amendment that does not change the substance of the original charge relates back to the original complaint's filing date. Tolling of the statute of limitations continues (In re Davis (1936) 13 CA2d 109, 113, 56 P2d 302), and the time within which the defendant must be brought to trial continues to run (Hankla v Municipal Court (1972) 26 CA3d 342, 357, 102 CR 896). Examples of amendments that do not change substance are adding priors (Huerta v Superior Court (1971) 18 CA3d 482, 95 CR 748) and adding new evidentiary allegations of the same charge as separate counts (Hankla v Municipal Court, supra).

When the amendment substantially changes the charges, e.g., circumstances are alleged that would increase punishment, several results may follow:

- The defendant may be granted additional time before having to enter a plea to the amended complaint (Pen C §1009);
- A continuance for trial may be granted (People v Hembree (1956) 143 CA2d 733, 743, 299 P2d 1043);
- The right to a jury trial may be reinstated (People v Hopkins (1974) 39 CA3d 107, 110, 113 CR 880 (when amended information increased defendant's potential punishment, jury trial waiver based on original information not binding)); and
- The original pleading does not toll the statute of limitations applicable to the added charges (see In re Davis, supra).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.18 E. Procedure After Amendment

The defendant must enter a plea to an amended complaint or information at the first court appearance at which the amended pleading is presented, unless another time is set for plea. See Pen C §1009. However, unless prejudice results, a defendant's failure to object to the amendment or to demand rearraignment usually waives the requirement. People v Hopkins (1974) 39 CA3d 107, 113 CR 880.

When a complaint or information is amended, the court must again advise an unrepresented defendant of his or her right to counsel and must determine that any waiver is knowing and intelligent. In re Peterson (1970) 4 CA3d 979, 84 CR 694 (new count added).

After an accusatory pleading is amended, the case continues as if the pleading had been originally filed as amended, unless the defendant's substantial rights would be prejudiced by failure to grant a continuance, e.g., if a trial date had already been set. See Pen C §1009.

VI. DEMURRER

§7.19 A. Function and Grounds

Demurrers are used to challenge defects that appear on the face of the accusatory pleading. Pen C §1004. Five such grounds are listed in Pen C §1004; they are discussed in §§7.20-7.24. A defendant can demur to a pleading instead of entering a plea if one of the grounds in Pen C §1004 exists. Pen C §§1002, 1004.

Defendants can demur to enhancement allegations as well as to counts. People v Equarte (1986) 42 C3d 456, 467, 229 CR 116. The objections specified in Pen C §1004 are the exclusive grounds for demurrer. People v Saffell (1946) 74 CA2d Supp 967, 972, 168 P2d 497.

Ø Note: If there is a jurisdictional error in the charging document, e.g., failure to state a cause of action or the statute of limitations has run, counsel may choose not to raise the issue by demurrer in a felony case, because a first dismissal is not final. The issue can be raised for the first time on appeal even if no objection was made in the trial court. People v Zamora (1976) 18 C3d 538, 547, 134 CR 784. See §25.45 for discussion of the two-dismissal rule in felony cases.

A possible alternative or adjunct to a demurrer is a taxpayer's complaint for injunctive and declaratory relief under CCP §526a. See Williams v Garcetti (1993) 5 C4th 561, 20 CR2d 341 (claim that amendment to Pen C §272 failed to provide fair notice or objective standard of enforcement heard and rejected).

§7.20 1. Lack of Jurisdiction (Pen C §1004(1))

The defendant may demur on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction over the offense. Pen C §1004(1). See, e.g., People v Superior Court (Caswell) (1988) 46 C3d 381, 250 CR 515 (constitutionality of Pen C §647(d)); In re Demillo (1975) 14 C3d 598, 121 CR 725 (running of statute of limitations); People v Webber (1901) 133 C 623, 66 P 38 (offense committed outside court's jurisdiction).

A dismissal for lack of territorial jurisdiction is not a dismissal in furtherance of justice under Pen C §1385 and is not subject to the two-dismissal rule of Pen C §1387. Casey v Superior Court (1989) 207 CA3d 837, 845, 255 CR 81. For discussion of §1387, see §§13.31, 25.45.

§7.21 2. Uncertainty (Pen C §1004(2))

A defendant may demur on the ground that a complaint or information does not substantially conform to the Pen C §§950 and 952 requirements relating to statement of the offense. Pen C §1004(2). See, e.g., People v Horiuchi (1931) 114 CA 415, 300 P 457 (statement of offense ambiguous). A statement in the statute's language, or in any language giving the accused notice of the offense charged, although not of the particular circumstances, is generally held to be sufficient in the face of a general demurrer. Brown v Superior Court (1965) 234 CA2d 628, 632, 44 CR 519.

Ø Warning: A defendant who waives a preliminary hearing forfeits the right to complain of vagueness in the accusatory pleading. People v Butte (2004) 117 CA4th 956, 959, 12 CR3d 221.

Literal compliance with Pen C §952 is insufficient if the accusation fails to give constitutionally adequate notice of what the accused must defend against. People v Jordan (1971) 19 CA3d 362, 97 CR 570. Pleading in the language of the statute is also insufficient when the statute is not sufficient in itself to define the offense. When a statute defines a material element by referring to other forbidden acts, the pleading must specify the forbidden acts. See, e.g., In re Jamil H. (1984) 158 CA3d 556, 204 CR 816 (charge of entering school "without lawful business," although language of statute, held vague because it did not adequately inform defendant of charge); Lamadrid v Municipal Court (1981) 118 CA3d 786, 173 CR 599 (vehicular manslaughter complaint in language of statute subject to demurrer because it did not advise defendant of factual theories on which prosecution would rely).

See §7.8 for discussion of what must be alleged concerning the date of the offense.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.22 3. Misjoinder (Pen C §1004(3))

When more than one offense is charged, a defendant may demur on the ground that joinder is not authorized by Pen C §954. Pen C §1004(3). A severance motion may also be made. See discussion of joinder and severance in §§7.27-7.42.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.23 4. No Offense Stated (Pen C §1004(4))

A defendant may demur on the ground that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense. Pen C §1004(4). This ground, like lack of jurisdiction, may be used to raise questions of constitutionality, inoperative legislation, and limitations. See, e.g., People v Superior Court (Caswell) (1988) 46 C3d 381, 250 CR 515 (constitutional challenge to Pen C §647(d)); People v Heitzman (1994) 9 C4th 189, 37 CR2d 236 (former Pen C §368(a) (defining elder abuse) unconstitutionally overbroad unless construed to apply only to person who, under existing tort principles, has duty to control conduct of individual who is directly causing or inflicting abuse on elder or dependent adult); People v Smith (1955) 133 CA2d Supp 777, 779, 284 P2d 203 (invalidity of statute).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.24 5. Prosecution Barred (Pen C §1004(5))

A defendant may demur on the ground that the complaint contains matter that, if true, is legal justification for the offense charged or is a legal bar to the prosecution. Pen C §1004(5). See, e.g., People v Ayhens (1890) 85 C 86, 24 P 635 (allegation of time of commission showed that statute of limitations had run).

In certain circumstances, Pen C §1387 bars prosecution of crimes that were previously dismissed. See chap 25 on discharge and dismissal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.25 B. Procedure; Format, Service, and Filing

A demurrer must be made before entry of a plea (Pen C §1004), either at the time of arraignment or at whatever later time the defendant is required to answer the complaint (Pen C §1003), unless the court allows the defendant to withdraw the plea and interpose a demurrer (People v Linton (1929) 102 CA 608, 283 P 389).

A demurrer must be in writing. It must "distinctly specify" the grounds of objection to the complaint. Pen C §1005. See also People v Hadley (1924) 66 CA 370, 373, 226 P 836. On sufficient specification, see People v Saffell (1946) 74 CA2d Supp 967, 980, 168 P2d 497. The demurrer must be signed by the defendant or defense counsel and filed with the court. Pen C §1005.

In addition to filing a written demurrer, the defense must state in open court that it demurs to the pleading. This demurrer is made at arraignment or at the time set to enter a plea. Pen C §1003.

> Ø Note: An oral demurrer that is unaccompanied by a written demurrer is ineffective. People v Bailey (1946) 72 CA2d Supp 880, 884, 165 P2d 558; People v Kinsley (1931) 118 CA 593, 596, 5 P2d 938.

Because Pen C §1002 defines a demurrer as a pleading, it is not entirely clear whether Cal Rules of Ct 4.111 (pretrial motion must be accompanied by a supporting memorandum) is applicable. It is, however, wise to include a supporting memorandum, so that counsel can set out full factual and legal support for the demurrer. Counsel should check local court rules to see if they regulate the time for filing demurrers. Form, service, and filing requirements for pretrial motions under Rule 4.111 are discussed in §§18.5-18.7.

Argument on the objections presented by demurrer must be heard at the time the demurrer is entered unless the court grants a continuance for exceptional cause. Pen C §1006. After argument on the motion, the court must make an order either overruling or sustaining the demurrer. Pen C §1007. If the demurrer is overruled, the defendant must immediately enter a plea unless the court extends the time for doing so. Pen C §1007.

Objections to the court's jurisdiction (see §7.20) or that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense (see §7.23) may also be made by a motion in arrest of judgment (Pen C §1012) or by appeal (People v Gann (1968) 259 CA2d 706, 709, 66 CR 508).

The California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§7.1-7.2 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005) contain a sample demurrer and an opposition to demurrer.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.26 C. Court's Ruling

If the trial court sustains a demurrer and if the defect can be remedied, it must permit the prosecutor to file an amended complaint within a set period of time, not exceeding 10 calendar days. Pen C §1007; People v Bailey (1946) 72 CA2d Supp 880, 884, 165 P2d 558 (leave to amend should be granted for remediable defect). If the defect cannot be remedied by amendment, the court should sustain the demurrer without leave to amend, and dismiss the case. Pen C §§1007-1008; People v Bailey (1946) 72 CA2d Supp 880, 884, 165 P2d 558 (dictum). Dismissal is also required if the prosecution fails to amend the pleading or files an untimely amendment. Pen C §1008.

If the case is dismissed and the defendant is in custody, the court must order his or her discharge. Pen C §1008. If the defendant has been admitted to bail, bail must be exonerated or the deposit refunded. Pen C §1008.

VII. JOINDER AND SEVERANCE

A. Checklists: Grounds for Severance

§7.27 1. Checklist: Grounds for Severing Counts

The most common grounds for severing counts are the following:

- A count with strong evidence is being used to bolster a count with weak evidence. Williams v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 441, 452, 204 CR 700 (partially superseded by statute; see Pen C §954.1); Coleman v Superior Court (1981) 116 CA3d 129, 172 CR 86.
- One of the crimes is highly inflammatory. Coleman v Superior Court, supra.
- Special care must be taken with joinder in death penalty cases. Williams v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 441, 454, 204 CR 700.
- Joinder permits the admissibility of additional prejudicial evidence such as a prior felony. Walker v Superior Court (1974) 37 CA3d 938, 942, 112 CR 767.
- Joinder of unrelated crimes will prejudice a defendant's right to remain silent when the defendant plans to testify about one or more crimes while exercising the right to remain silent about other charged crimes. People v Smallwood (1986) 42 C3d 415, 228 CR 913.
- Joinder violates Pen C §954 or §954.1.

Ø Note: When a defendant moves to sever counts on the ground that evidence on one count will impair the defendant's ability to defend against another count, the court generally considers whether the allegedly prejudicial evidence is admissible on the count or counts the defendant is seeking to sever. If the evidence is cross-admissible, there is no ground for severance. The absence of cross-admissibility is not the primary factor for the court to consider in ruling on the motion (Pen C §954.1; see People v Stitely (2005) 35 C4th 514, 532, 26 CR3d 1), but the absence of cross-admissibility may be considered as a factor suggesting prejudice (Belton v Superior Court (1993) 19 CA4th 1279, 1286, 24 CR2d 34). See discussion in §7.34.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.28 2. Checklist: Grounds for Severing Codefendants

Severance of codefendants is usually discretionary. Pen C §1098. However, the Sixth Amendment right to confrontation may require severance when an out-of-court statement of a nontestifying codefendant implicates another defendant. Bruton v U.S. (1968) 391 US 123, 20 L Ed 2d 476, 88 S Ct 1620; People v Aranda (1965) 63 C2d 518, 47 CR 353. If the extrajudicial statement cannot be edited to eliminate portions that incriminate the defendant, severance is required unless the prosecution is willing to forgo use of the statement altogether. See Gray v Maryland (1998) 523 US 185, 140 L Ed 2d 294, 118 S Ct 1151. For further discussion, see §§7.39-7.40.

The fact that one defendant is not available or ready to proceed is not a ground for severance unless it appears that it will be impossible for all defendants to be available and prepared within a reasonable time. Pen C §1050.1. See In re Samano (1995) 31 CA4th 984, 993, 37 CR2d 491 (motion by one defendant to continue preliminary hearing considered motion by all defendants). But see Greenberger v Superior Court (1990) 219 CA3d 487, 502, 267 CR 849 (lengthy continuance may implicate speedy trial guaranty; 6-month delay on facts was not abuse of discretion).

The following grounds do not require severance but give some of the reasons for granting severance that courts have found persuasive:

- Joint trial with codefendants will prejudice defendant in eyes of jury ("prejudicial association"). People v Chambers (1964) 231 CA2d 23, 28, 41 CR 551.
- Jury confusion may arise from evidence on multiple counts. People v Chambers, supra.
- Codefendants' defenses are inconsistent. People v Graham (1969) 71 C2d 303, 331, 78 CR 217; People v Reeder (1978) 82 CA3d 543, 147 CR 275. See also People v Cummings (1993) 4 C4th 1233, 1286, 18 CR2d 796.
- Evidence that was suppressed against some codefendants is admissible against others. U.S. v Graham (6th Cir 1968) 391 F2d 439, 446. See also Brown v U.S. (1973) 411 US 223, 36 L Ed 2d 208, 93 S Ct 1565.
- One defendant desires to introduce otherwise inadmissible evidence in his or her own defense. See People v Reeder, supra.
- Strong evidence against one defendant may bolster a weak case against another defendant. People v Massie (1967) 66 C2d 899, 915, 59 CR 733.
- Possibility exists that codefendant would give exonerating testimony for defendant at separate trial. See People v Anderson (1987) 43 C3d 1104, 1115, 240 CR 585; People v Conerly (2009) 176 CA4th 240, 250, 98 CR3d 76; People v Isenor (1971) 17 CA3d 324, 332, 94 CR 746.
- Prosecutor's insistence on joint trial is not in good faith, is intended to obtain an otherwise illegal delay, or is intended to take unfair advantage of defendants. People v Clark (1965) 62 C2d 870, 883, 44 CR 784.

§7.29 B. Separate Juries as Alternative to Severance

When a defendant moves to sever his or her case from that of a codefendant, the trial court has discretion to impanel separate juries as an alternative to granting the motion for severance. People v Harris (1989) 47 C3d 1047, 255 CR 352. See also People v Cummings (1993) 4 C4th 1233, 1286, 18 CR2d 796.

If the trial court impanels dual juries over a defendant's objection, that decision may not be urged as error on appeal unless the defendant can show identifiable prejudice or such gross unfairness as to deny the defendant a fair trial. People v Cummings (1993) 4 C4th 1233, 1286, 18 CR2d 796; People v Turner (1984) 37 C3d 302, 312, 208 CR 196, overruled on other grounds in People v Anderson (1987) 43 C3d 1104, 1115, 240 CR 585.

Ø Note: When the facts supporting a defense motion for severance are strong, the prosecution may be able to persuade the court to impanel separate juries if complete severance would result in substantial duplication of evidence. See, e.g., People v Jackson (1996) 13 C4th 1164, 1207, 56 CR2d 49. Defense counsel might also consider requesting separate juries as an alternative if it appears that for reasons of judicial economy, the trial court is reluctant to grant an outright severance.

§7.30 C. Defense Procedures for Challenging Multiple Counts or Defendants

Challenging joinder of counts or defendants by demurrer and by motion to sever. A defendant may attack joinder (also called consolidation) of counts or of defendants before trial by demurring to the accusatory pleading when it appears on the face of the pleading that more than one offense is charged in violation of Pen C §954. Pen C §1004(3). Penal Code §1012 states that failure to demur to errors that appear on the face of a pleading that are mentioned in Pen C §1004(2)-(3), (5), which include improper joinder, is a waiver of the right to challenge that error. Despite that language, counsel may be able to attack joinder by a pretrial motion to sever under §954, even when a demurrer was available. See People v Molano (1967) 253 CA2d 841, 61 CR 821 (district attorney did not object in trial court, and severance should have been granted).

Ø Note: The court in Molano said it was "far better practice" to raise objections to joinder issues by demurrer. 253 CA2d at 846. To be safe, counsel should always demur when misjoinder is apparent on the face of the accusatory pleading.

The supreme court approved using a motion to sever in order to attack joinder of defendants in Williams v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 441, 446, 204 CR 700. Demurrers are seldom available to attack joinder of defendants, because this error does not appear on the face of the pleading. When the prosecution moves to amend a complaint or information to add a new count, or moves to consolidate two or more separate accusatory pleadings, the defense should oppose the motion and should file an opposition memorandum when possible. For discussion of format, service, and filing, see §7.25 (demurrers) and the following paragraph on severance motions.

Format, service, and filing of severance motion. A defendant's motion for severance must be in writing and served on all parties. Cal Rules of Ct 4.111. It must be supported by affidavits or declarations (CCP §2015.5 allows declarations to be substituted for affidavits) showing the likelihood of prejudice from a joint trial. People v Kemp (1961) 55 C2d 458, 477, 11 CR 361; Coleman v Superior Court (1981) 116 CA3d 129, 139, 172 CR 86. See People v Isenor (1971) 17 CA3d 324, 333, 94 CR 746, for an example of an insufficient showing. Consult local court rules for the appropriate time to make a severance motion. See §18.7 for the service and filing requirements of Rule 4.111. Sample motions and opposition are in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§7.3-7.6 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005) (motion to sever counts and opposition memorandum, and motion to sever codefendants and opposition memorandum).

Hearing on severance motion. The trial court cannot deny a defendant's motion for severance without giving him or her the opportunity to be heard. People v Massie (1967) 66 C2d 899, 917, 59 CR 733. The defendant should present all grounds for severance and all facts supporting them at that hearing. See, e.g., People v Box (2000) 23 C4th 1153, 1195, 99 CR2d 69 (court's severance ruling reviewed on facts known to trial court at time of ruling).

D. Single Defendant; Multiple Charges

1. Permissible Joinder (Consolidation)

§7.31 a. In General

A complaint, information, or indictment may charge a defendant in separate counts with having committed two or more offenses. Pen C §954. See discussion of the requirements of Pen C §954 in §§7.32-7.34. In addition, the court may order consolidation for trial of two or more charging documents filed in the same court against the same defendant in the instances set out in §§7.32-7.35. See Pen C §954. The California Constitution is not to be construed by the courts to prohibit the joining of criminal cases. Cal Const art I, §30(a).

When different offenses are joined, the complaint must show on its face that the joinder is proper under at least one of the specified classifications. People v Degnen (1925) 70 CA 567, 234 P 129. Some examples of this charging language:

COUNT TWO

For a further and separate cause of complaint, being a different offense of the same class of crimes and offenses as the charge set forth in count one, complainant further complains and says: [crime information omitted]

COUNT THREE

For a further and separate cause of complaint, being a different offense from but connected in its commission with the charge set forth in count two, complainant further complains and says: [crime information omitted]

If different offenses or counts are properly joined, the prosecutor is not required to elect between them: "The defendant may be convicted of any number of the offenses charged, and each offense of which the defendant is convicted must be stated in the verdict or the finding of the court.... An acquittal of one or more counts shall not be deemed an acquittal of any other count." Pen C §954. Thus, if a single act constitutes more than one offense, the defendant can usually be charged with and convicted of any (or all) of them, although Pen C §654 may preclude punishment for more than one count of conviction. See §7.33.

Ø Note: There are two exceptions to the general rule:

- A defendant may not be convicted of two crimes when one is a necessarily lesser included offense of the other (see People v Ortega (1998) 19 C4th 686, 80 CR2d 489; People v Gamble (1994) 22 CA4th 446, 450, 27 CR2d 451); and
- When a conspiracy and substantive offenses are charged and the substantive charges are alleged to be the only overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, an acquittal of all the substantive offenses operates as an acquittal of the conspiracy count (see In re Johnston (1935) 3 C2d 32, 43 P2d 541).

Although misdemeanors and felonies are ordinarily tried in separate proceedings, misdemeanor counts may be joined with felony counts if tests for joinder are otherwise satisfied. Aydelott v Superior Court (1970) 7 CA3d 718, 722, 86 CR 713. However, evidence must be presented at the preliminary hearing to establish probable cause to believe that the defendant is guilty of the misdemeanor as well as the felony. People v Thiecke (1985) 167 CA3d 1015, 213 CR 731; Medellin v Superior Court (1985) 166 CA3d 290, 212 CR 171.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.32 b. Offenses Connected Together May Be Joined

If the offenses charged were "connected together in their commission," they may be joined even though they do not relate to the same transaction. Pen C §954. Similarly, offenses are properly joined if there is a "common element of substantial importance in their commission." People v Miranda (1987) 44 C3d 57, 78, 241 CR 594 (severance of robbery and unrelated attempted robbery-murder was properly denied); People v Scott (1944) 24 C2d 774, 778, 151 P2d 517 (possession of firearm common to counts charging rape and tampering with pistol). See People v Valdez (2004) 32 C4th 73, 119, 8 CR3d 271 (escape and murder were connected when apparent motive for escape was to avoid prosecution for murder); People v Meneley (1972) 29 CA3d 41, 51, 105 CR 432 (common factors in murder and kidnapping were that victims were young women walking alone, subjected to assault and kidnapping, and taken to secluded area). But see Walker v Superior Court (1974) 37 CA3d 938, 941, 112 CR 767 (charges of robbery and possession of concealable firearm by ex-felon did not have common element when there was no evidence that same weapon was involved and there was substantial time lapse between two crimes); People v Saldana (1965) 233 CA2d 24, 30, 43 CR 312 (error to join rape and possession of marijuana when only evidence connecting two offenses was that defendant possessed marijuana at time of rape).

Ø Note: A defendant's failure to appear in a case cannot be joined with the substantive offense. People v Madden (1988) 206 CA3d Supp 14, 254 CR 207 (violates Pen C §954).

The defendant must show prejudice from joinder to obtain a severance. People v Johnson (1988) 47 C3d 576, 253 CR 710 (denial of motion to sever murder from rape upheld because charges were statutorily joinable (Pen C §954), and no showing of prejudice from joinder).

Ø Note: A proper jury instruction at trial is a factor that courts will consider on appeal as supporting joinder of counts. See People v Ruiz (1988) 44 C3d 589, 607, 244 CR 200.

For further discussion of joinder of offenses connected together, see 5 Witkin & Epstein, California Criminal Law, Criminal Trial §§394-403 (3d ed 2000).

§7.33 c. Different Statements of Same Offense May Be Joined

If the offenses charged are "different statements of the same offense," they may properly be joined. Pen C §954. Thus, when only one offense has been committed but, depending on how the evidence is considered, the acts charged may violate one of several different Penal Code sections, the prosecutor is not required to elect between the offenses; he or she may join different statements of the same offense under separate counts. See Pen C §954; People v Koehn (1929) 207 C 605, 608, 279 P 646 (attempted murder and malicious use of explosives); People v Lofink (1988) 206 CA3d 161, 166, 253 CR 384 (former Pen C §273a(1) and Pen C §273d for same course of conduct); People v Jones (1985) 164 CA3d 1173, 1178, 211 CR 167 (causing death while under influence of alcohol and vehicular manslaughter). However, the defendant cannot be convicted of two crimes if one is a necessarily lesser included offense of the other. People v Ortega (1998) 19 C4th 686, 80 CR2d 489.

When an accusatory pleading includes different statements of the same offense, it must show clearly on its face that the separate counts all relate to the same act, transaction, or event. People v Degnen (1925) 70 CA 567, 573, 234 P 129.

Ø Note: Even when a defendant may properly be found guilty of different offenses based on the same act, he or she may be punished for only one of those offenses. Pen C §654. For further discussion, see §§37.44-37.50.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.34 d. Unrelated Offenses of Same Class May Be Joined

If the offenses charged are "of the same class" or have "common characteristics or attributes," they may properly be joined. Pen C §954; Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1054, 108 CR2d 409; People v Lucky (1988) 45 C3d 259, 275, 247 CR 1. Section 954 permits joinder of offenses that are not related or connected in any way in their commission. People v Walker (1988) 47 C3d 605, 621, 253 CR 863; People v Leney (1989) 213 CA3d 265, 269, 261 CR 541.

Examples of offenses determined to be of the same class and therefore properly joined include multiple murder counts (People v Carter (2005) 36 C4th 1114, 1153, 32 CR3d 759; People v Mason (1991) 52 C3d 909, 933, 277 CR 166); murder, robbery, kidnap, escape from custody, rape, sodomy, assault with a deadly weapon, and oral copulation (People v Balderas (1985) 41 C3d 144, 170, 222 CR 184); attempted murder, ex-felon in possession of a gun, and robbery (People v Thomas (1990) 219 CA3d 134, 140, 267 CR 908); and murder and a later assault (People v Macklem (2007) 149 CA4th 674, 679, 57 CR3d 237).

If the evidence from each count is admissible to prove the other counts (called cross-admissibility), severance is not warranted. People v Ruiz (1988) 44 C3d 589, 605, 244 CR 200. While severance may be appropriate when evidence is not cross-admissible, absence of cross-admissibility of evidence does not mandate severance (Pen C §954.1): It is just one factor for the court to consider (People v Geier (2007) 41 C4th 555, 575, 61 CR3d 580). Those factors include:

- Certain of the charges are unduly inflammatory;
- A weak case will be unfairly bolstered by joinder with a stronger case; and
- One of the charges carries the death penalty.

People v Arias (1996) 13 C4th 92, 127, 51 CR2d 770. See Calderon v Superior Court (2001) 87 CA4th 933, 104 CR2d 903 (joinder of counts when two defendants charged with an attempted murder and one of them also charged with an unrelated murder was unduly prejudicial to defendant charged only in the attempted murder).

> Ø Note: Penal Code §954.1 took effect on June 6, 1990. Cases decided before that date are no longer good law to the extent that they hold that lack of cross-admissibility alone is sufficient to preclude joinder. See Belton v Superior Court (1993) 19 CA4th 1279, 1286, 24 CR2d 34.

For further discussion of joinder of crimes of the same class, see 5 Witkin & Epstein, California Criminal Law, Criminal Trial §§394-403 (3d ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.35 2. Mandatory Joinder (Kellett Rule)

When the prosecution is or should be aware of more than one offense in which the same act or course of conduct plays a significant part, all such offenses must be prosecuted in a single proceeding unless joinder is prohibited or severance is permitted for good cause. Kellett v Superior Court (1966) 63 C2d 822, 828, 48 CR 366. If the prosecution charges only some of the offenses that should have been joined under this rule, a judgment in that case bars prosecution of the offenses that could have been charged but were not. Kellett v Superior Court, supra (conviction of brandishing weapon bars prosecution of ex-felon in possession of concealable weapon). This is commonly called the Kellett rule. The federal rule is similar: Successive prosecutions for the same criminal act or transaction under two different criminal statutes are forbidden unless each statute "contains an element not contained in the other." U.S. v Dixon (1993) 509 US 688, 125 L Ed 2d 556, 568, 113 S Ct 2849 (overruling Grady v Corbin (1990) 495 US 508, 109 L Ed 2d 548, 110 S Ct 2084). This is known as the "same elements" or Blockburger test (after Blockburger v U.S. (1932) 284 US 299, 304, 76 L Ed 306, 52 S Ct 180).

Ø Note: Kellett does not require that offenses committed at different times and at different places be prosecuted in a single proceeding. People v Carpenter (1999) 21 C4th 1016, 1038, 90 CR2d 607.

The rule against multiple prosecutions is based on Pen C §§654 and 954. It is meant to prevent harassment of defendants, avoid repetition of evidence, and save the state and defendants time and money. Kellett v Superior Court, supra. In deciding a motion to dismiss based on Kellett error, the court should look at the totality of the facts, examined in light of the legislative goals of §§654 and 954. People v Flint (1975) 51 CA3d 333, 336, 124 CR 269.

In the following cases, prosecution was barred because of Kellett error: Sanders v Superior Court (1999) 76 CA4th 609, 90 CR2d 481 (prosecutor could not amend information to add new charges based on the same evidence used in earlier prosecution); People v Flint, supra (guilty plea to drunk driving barred prosecution for grand theft of car defendant was driving); People v Wasley (1970) 11 CA3d 121, 89 CR 418 (defendant was acquitted of robbery alleging prior felony convictions; he could not later be prosecuted for felon with firearm on the basis of gun used in robbery).

In the following cases, prosecution was allowed because there was no Kellett error: People v Carpenter (1999) 21 C4th 1016, 90 CR2d 607 (murder of separate victims on separate days by "Trailside Killer" is not a single act or course of conduct); People v Cuevas (1996) 51 CA4th 620, 59 CR2d 146 (prosecution for possession and sale of drugs on different dates could be done separately, even though part of same investigation; plea of guilty to possession on one date did not bar later prosecution for sales counts that occurred before possession case); Stackhouse v Municipal Court (1976) 63 CA3d 243, 133 CR 694 (risk that defendant would escape prosecution of more serious charge of hit-and-run and reckless driving outweighed harassment from facing separate prosecution for citation for marijuana found in car when he was arrested); People v Hartfield (1970) 11 CA3d 1073, 90 CR 274 (defendant pleaded guilty to reckless driving of car with which he assaulted officer; defendant represented by same attorney in both reckless driving and assault cases; defendant could have avoided harassment by moving to consolidate cases); Gail v Municipal Court (1967) 251 CA2d 1005, 60 CR 91 (plea of guilty to driving without license when defendant knew his actual license status was no bar to prosecution for driving on suspended license); People v Breland (1966) 243 CA2d 644, 52 CR 696 (prosecution for battery did not bar prosecution for murder when victim died after defendant pleaded guilty to battery). See also In re R.L. (2009) 170 CA4th 1339, 88 CR3d 854 (in juvenile proceeding, prosecution may amend petition to add counts after minor has admitted one count and before disposition because successive prosecution is prohibited under §654 only after conviction and sentence).

§7.36 3. Court's Discretion to Sever Counts: In Interests of Justice, for Good Cause Shown

Even though separate counts are properly joined, or separate pleadings properly subject to consolidation, the court, "in the interests of justice and for good cause shown, may in its discretion order that the different offenses or counts set forth in the accusatory pleading be tried separately or divided into two or more groups and each of said groups tried separately." Pen C §954.

E. Multiple Defendants, Same Offense

§7.37 1. Joint Trial of Codefendants Contemplated

Penal Code §1098 provides in part that "[w]hen two or more defendants are jointly charged with any public offense whether felony or misdemeanor, they must be tried jointly, unless the court orders separate trials." Accordingly, whether or not separate accusatory pleadings are filed (see Pen C §1098), a joint trial is contemplated. A separate trial is a privilege and not a matter of right. People v Parker (1954) 122 CA2d 867, 871, 265 P2d 933. See also People v Thomas (1941) 45 CA2d 128, 137, 113 P2d 706 (rearraignment on consolidated information unnecessary).

Severance is not mandatory simply because the evidence from one case would not be admissible in the other case if separate trials were held (called cross-admissibility). Pen C §954.1; Belton v Superior Court (1993) 19 CA4th 1279, 1286, 24 CR2d 34.

For the effect of one defendant's request for a continuance, see §7.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.38 2. Grounds for Severance

Penal Code §1098 recognizes the court's discretion to order:

- A separate trial for one or more defendants, and a joint trial for the others; or
- A separate trial for each defendant.

Common grounds for severance include "an incriminating confession, prejudicial association with codefendants, likely confusion resulting from evidence on multiple counts, conflicting defenses, or the possibility that at a separate trial a codefendant would give exonerating testimony." People v Massie (1967) 66 C2d 899, 917, 59 CR 733, quoted in People v Avila (2006) 38 C4th 491, 574, 43 CR3d 1; People v Tafoya (2007) 42 C4th 147, 162, 64 CR3d 163. See checklist in §7.28.

Ø Note: Because of the statutory preference for joint trials, the trial court's denial of a motion to sever is reviewed only for abuse of discretion. See, e.g., People v Ervin (2000) 22 C4th 48, 69, 91 CR2d 623. Consequently, defense counsel can prevail on a motion to sever only by persuading the trial court that severance is necessary to afford a defendant a fair trial. Unless there is an Aranda-Bruton issue (see §§7.39-7.40), there is no binding appellate court authority controlling the trial court's ruling.

3. Effect of Codefendant's Implicating Confession

§7.39 a. Statement of Aranda-Bruton Rules

Bruton v U.S.* and People v Aranda. When the out-of-court statement of a nontestifying defendant implicates a codefendant, its admission at a joint trial presumptively violates the codefendant's Sixth Amendment right to confrontation. Bruton v U.S. (1968) 391 US 123, 20 L Ed 2d 476, 88 S Ct 1620. The Sixth Amendment violation cannot be cured by instructing the jury not to consider the statement against the codefendant. 391 US at 135, 20 L Ed 2d at 484.

If the declarant testifies at the joint trial, however, there is no error, because the declarant is available for cross-examination. Nelson v O'Neil (1971) 402 US 622, 29 L Ed 2d 222, 91 S Ct 1723; People v Coffman (2004) 34 C4th 1, 43, 17 CR3d 710; People v Ainsworth (1988) 45 C3d 984, 1010, 248 CR 568.

In People v Aranda (1965) 63 C2d 518, 47 CR 353, the California Supreme Court, anticipating Bruton by several years, reached a similar result under California law. Aranda and Bruton are coextensive. See People v Fletcher (1996) 13 C4th 451, 465, 53 CR2d 572; People v Coffman, supra.

Scope of Aranda-Bruton rule. It was conceded in Bruton that the declarant's confession was inadmissible against the nondeclarant, and the court declined to consider whether a statement admissible against the nondeclarant under an accepted hearsay exception would violate the Confrontation Clause. Bruton v U.S. (1968) 391 US 123, 128 n3, 20 L Ed 2d 476, 480 n3, 88 S Ct 1620. That question appears to have been answered in Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 124 S Ct 1354, which held that if an out-of-court statement incriminating a criminal defendant is "testimonial" in nature, the Confrontation Clause forbids its introduction in evidence in a criminal case unless the declarant is unavailable and the defendant has had an opportunity to cross-examine the declarant. 158 L Ed 2d at 194. Although the Court left the outer boundaries of the word "testimonial" to future development (158 L Ed 2d at 203 n10), it held that a suspect's statement made during police interrogation is "testimonial under even a narrow standard" (158 L Ed 2d at 193). An unanswered question in Crawford is how the admission of nontestimonial hearsay should be analyzed. See 158 L Ed 2d at 203. For further discussion, see §7.40.

The Aranda-Bruton rule applies to both the guilt and the penalty phases of a criminal proceeding (People v Floyd (1970) 1 C3d 694, 719, 83 CR 608, disapproved on other grounds in People v Wheeler (1978) 22 C3d 258, 148 CR 890), but not to court trials (People v Walkkein (1993) 14 CA4th 1401, 1409, 18 CR2d 383).

Editing or redaction. "The Confrontation Clause is not violated by the admission of a nontestifying codefendant's confession with a proper limiting instruction when, as here, the confession is redacted to eliminate not only the defendant's name, but any reference to his or to her existence." Richardson v Marsh (1987) 481 US 200, 211, 95 L Ed 2d 176, 188, 107 S Ct 1702. See also Gray v Maryland (1998) 523 US 185, 140 L Ed 2d 294, 118 S Ct 1151 (edited confession that substituted blanks and "delete" for defendant's proper name was inadmissible under Bruton). In People v Fletcher (1996) 13 C4th 451, 467, 53 CR2d 572, the California Supreme Court approved a case-by-case approach to the question of whether redaction sufficiently protects a nondeclarant defendant's right to confrontation, holding that the relevant question is whether "the average juror, viewing the confession in light of the other evidence introduced at trial, could not avoid drawing the inference that the nondeclarant is the person so designated in the confession."

When editing the codefendant's statement will not cure the Aranda-Bruton problem, severance or other relief should be granted. People v Aranda (1965) 63 C2d 518, 531, 47 CR 353; U.S. v Mayfield (9th Cir 1999) 189 F3d 895. See People v Massie (1967) 66 C2d 899, 918, 59 CR 733 (error to refuse severance). Additionally, the court should grant a severance when effective deletion would be unfair to the declarant defendant. See People v Douglas (1991) 234 CA3d 273, 285 CR 609; People v Matola (1968) 259 CA2d 686, 66 CR 610.

> Ø Note: An alternative to severance when there is an Aranda-Bruton issue is the impaneling of separate juries. People v Fletcher (1996) 13 C4th 451, 468, 53 CR2d 572. For discussion, see §7.29.

Effect of Aranda-Bruton error. Aranda-Bruton error requires reversal unless the court is convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the verdict would have been the same absent the error (Chapman v California (1967) 386 US

§7.40 b. Determining Whether Aranda-Bruton Rule Applies

For almost 25 years, determining whether the introduction of a nontestifying defendant's out-of-court statement against the nondeclarant defendant violates the Confrontation Clause was governed by the analytical framework set down in Ohio v Roberts (1980) 448 US 56, 65 L Ed 2d 597, 100 S Ct 2531, overruled in part by Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 199, 124 S Ct 1354. Under Ohio v Roberts, the introduction of an out-of-court statement admissible under a "firmly rooted" exception to the hearsay rule would ordinarily not violate the Confrontation Clause if the declarant was unavailable. 448 US at 66, 65 L Ed 2d at 608. Evidence admissible under other hearsay exceptions could be admitted without infringing on a defendant's right of confrontation if the circumstances surrounding the making of the statement provided "particularized guarantees of trustworthiness." Ohio v Roberts, supra.

Although the case-by-case approach of Ohio v Roberts may still apply to nontestimonial hearsay, Crawford v Washington substitutes a bright-line rule for that approach if the hearsay statement is testimonial (and statements made during police interrogation are by definition "testimonial"). Under Crawford, if the hearsay statement is testimonial, it is simply inadmissible unless the defendant has had an opportunity to cross-examine the declarant. Crawford v Washington, supra. Consequently, decisions made under the Ohio v Roberts framework will have to be reassessed in light of Crawford.

Under traditional Confrontation Clause analysis, the introduction of a codefendant's statement admissible under the adoptive admission exception to the hearsay rule does not violate the Confrontation Clause. People v Osuna (1969) 70 C2d 759, 765, 76 CR 462 (no Aranda-Bruton error when conversation among codefendants in noncustodial setting was admitted under adoptive admissions rule). But see People v Jennings (2003) 112 CA4th 459, 472, 5 CR3d 243 (defendant's silence during joint interrogation did not amount to adoptive admission). Following Crawford, the California Supreme Court held that adoptive admissions elicited during a joint police interrogation did not implicate the Sixth Amendment and did not constitute Crawford error in a case in which the defendants were tried separately. People v Combs (2004) 34 C4th 821, 22 CR3d 61. Express adoptive admissions elicited during a joint interrogation are also admissible in a joint trial. People v Castille (2005) 129 CA4th 863, 877, 29 CR3d 71. It is unclear whether an implicit adoptive admission manifested by an equivocal response (as opposed to silence) may also be admissible in a joint trial. See People v Castille (2005) 129 CA4th 863, 881, 29 CR3d 71. For further discussion of adoptive admissions as an exception to the Aranda-Bruton rule, see §23.16.

Admission of a codefendant's statement for a purpose other than its truth does not violate the defendant's Sixth Amendment right of confrontation. Tennessee v Street (1985) 471 US 409, 85 L Ed 2d 425, 105 S Ct 2078 (codefendant's confession properly admitted to rebut defendant's claim that sheriff had read him portions of confession and forced him to confess to same things).

> Ø Note: Defense counsel should carefully examine the prosecutor's assertion that a statement is not offered for its truth. There must be an independent nonhearsay purpose for admitting the part of the statement that implicates the nondeclarant defendant. If no such purpose exists, or if the portion of the statement implicating the nondeclarant defendant is not relevant on the nonhearsay theory of admissibility, redaction may still be appropriate.

§7.41 F. Multiple Defendants, Multiple Offenses

The Pen C §1098 preference for joint trials extends to most cases in which multiple defendants are charged with multiple offenses. However, a joint trial is not permissible unless there is at least one count in which all defendants are charged. People v Ortiz (1978) 22 C3d 38, 43, 148 CR 588. See also Dove v Superior Court (1974) 39 CA3d 960, 114 CR 889 (husband and wife charged separately with same statutory offense occurring on different dates). If the rule were otherwise, "all persons charged with the same statutory offense could be joined together in one mass trial." Dove v Superior Court, supra. An exception exists when codefendants are charged with committing offenses at the same time and place that were part of the same transaction. People v Wickliffe (1986) 183 CA3d 37, 227 CR 780; People v Hernandez (1983) 143 CA3d 936, 192 CR 432.

When joinder is permissible, the factors that weigh in favor of severance of codefendants charged with multiple offenses are the same as those supporting severance in other multiple defendant cases: incriminating confession, prejudicial association with codefendants, likely confusion resulting from evidence on multiple counts, conflicting defenses, and the possibility that a codefendant would give exonerating testimony at a separate trial. People v Turner (1984) 37 C3d 302, 312, 208 CR 196, overruled on other grounds in People v Anderson (1987) 43 C3d 1104, 1115, 240 CR 585.

For the effect of one defendant's request for a continuance, see §7.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.42 G. Appellate Review of Severance Issues

Pretrial relief. Defense counsel may file a petition for writ of mandate to challenge a refusal to sever offenses (Coleman v Superior Court (1981) 116 CA3d 129, 172 CR 86) or defendants (Dove v Superior Court (1974) 39 CA3d 960, 114 CR 889).

The prosecution may file a pretrial petition for writ of mandate challenging an order granting severance. Pen C §1512.

After conviction. In reviewing the trial court's decision on a motion to sever, the appellate court confines its review to the facts before the trial court at the time of the motion. People v Price (1991) 1 C4th 324, 388, 3 CR2d 106. Unless an Aranda-Bruton issue is involved, the trial court's denial of a motion to sever is reviewed on appeal for abuse of discretion and the defendant must make a clear showing of prejudice. People v Carter (2005) 36 C4th 1114, 1153, 32 CR3d 759; People v Price, supra. See, e.g., People v Earle (2009) 172 CA4th 372, 91 CR3d 261 (defendant satisfied burden of demonstrating actual prejudice from joinder of trials for misdemeanor indecent exposure and felony sexual assault). Determination of prejudice "is a highly individualized exercise, necessarily dependent upon the particular circumstances of each individual case." Williams v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 441, 452, 204 CR 700.

> Ø Note: Even if the trial court's denial of a motion to sever was correct at the time it was made, a judgment of conviction will be reversed if the defendant shows that joinder actually resulted in "gross unfairness" amounting to a denial of due process. People v Mendoza (2000) 24 C4th 130, 162, 99 CR2d 485. See, e.g., People v Grant (2003) 113 CA4th 579, 587, 6 CR3d 560.

An Aranda-Bruton error is reviewed under the standard established in Chapman v California (1967) 386 US 18, 17 L Ed 2d 705, 87 S Ct 824 (error that denies defendant a right guaranteed by federal Constitution requires reversal unless prosecution can show it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt). See, e.g., People v Garcia (2008) 168 CA4th 261, 281, 85 CR3d 393.

The same standards apply to the trial court's denial of a request for separate juries or the trial court's decision to impanel separate juries rather than granting outright severance. People v Cummings (1993) 4 C4th 1233, 1286, 18 CR2d 796.

§8.1 I. OVERVIEW

The prosecution begins a felony case either by filing a grand jury indictment in the trial court or by filing a complaint with a magistrate. Cal Const art I, §14. If a complaint is filed, a preliminary hearing (also called preliminary examination, "PX," "PE," or "prelim") must be held before a magistrate to ensure that there is enough evidence to hold the defendant to answer in the trial court. Pen C §872; People v Slaughter (1984) 35 C3d 629, 200 CR 448. When an indictment is filed, there is no right to a preliminary hearing. Cal Const art I, §14.1; Bowens v Superior Court (1991) 1 C4th 36, 2 CR2d 376.

At the preliminary hearing, the prosecution must present sufficient evidence to convince the magistrate that probable cause exists to believe that a crime has been committed and that the defendant committed it. See Pen C §§872 ("sufficient cause" required for holding order), 995 ("probable cause" required to uphold commitment order on superior court review). If the prosecution shows probable cause, the magistrate will hold the defendant to answer to the charge in the trial court. The prosecution must then file an information in that court within 15 days. Pen C §§739, 1382(a)(1). See also Pen C §860. Once the magistrate makes a holding order, the magistrate's power ceases and jurisdiction vests in the trial court to deal with the charges in the case. See People v Silva (1995) 36 CA4th 231, 43 CR2d 8 (magistrate lacked authority to reduce felony offense to misdemeanor after magistrate ordered defendant "bound over").

Because the vast majority of felony cases settle before trial, the preliminary hearing may be the sole proceeding in the case at which evidence is taken. The preliminary hearing gives the defense a key opportunity to show the prosecutor why a particular settlement is justified, and to show the magistrate why the case should be discharged or reduced. In Three Strikes cases, it provides one of the few opportunities to reduce a "wobbler" (an offense that can be charged as a felony or a misdemeanor) and to eliminate enhancements. Ideally, both prosecutors and defense attorneys should be as prepared for the preliminary hearing as they would be for trial. In reality, if the hearing proceeds on a "no-time-waiver" basis (i.e., 10 court days after arraignment), neither side will be fully prepared.

Defense counsel must make sure that all discovery has been obtained (see chap 11 on discovery) and that any necessary investigation has been completed so that cross-examination will be effective and complete. However, there are significant limitations on the "right" to discovery at the preliminary hearing. Defense counsel must review the police reports, witnesses' statements, the results of defense investigation, and other evidence and may discuss with the client the benefits of resolving the case by a guilty plea before the preliminary hearing. This has become common when "serious felonies" are charged because the new offenses (see Pen C §1192.7, discussed in §§8.6, 26.20) cannot be negotiated after the preliminary hearing in courts that strictly follow §1192.7. However, because many courts pay only "lip service" to §1192.7, that section usually is not a significant obstacle to negotiation and settlement.

Prosecutors should interview the witnesses needed to prove the charges and have all evidence available that must be introduced. Not all witnesses need testify at the preliminary hearing, only those required to prove the charges. See De La Riva v Owl Drug Co. (1967) 253 CA2d 593, 597, 61 CR 291.

The preliminary hearing transcript can provide a basis for later impeaching a witness at trial if the witness testifies inconsistently (Evid C §1235; California v Green (1970) 399 US 149, 26 L Ed 2d 489, 90 S Ct 1930), and may even be used as a substitute for testimony at trial if the witness is unavailable (Evid C §§240(a)(4), 1291; California v Green, supra; see §8.47).

The prosecution may present live witnesses, hearsay from qualified law enforcement witnesses, or a combination of the two. See Pen C §872(b); Cal Const art I, §30(b); Whitman v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 1063, 2 CR2d 160.

> Ø Note: If a witness's hearsay testimony was introduced at the preliminary hearing in place of live testimony, and the witness fails to appear at trial, the witness's hearsay statements admitted at the preliminary hearing are not admissible at trial. Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 196, 124 S Ct 1354. See Evid C §1200.

The defense may cross-examine witnesses for purposes of raising an affirmative defense (Jennings v Superior Court (1967) 66 C2d 867, 59 CR 440), negating an element of the offense (Jennings v Superior Court, supra), or impeaching a witness (Alford v Superior Court (1972) 29 CA3d 724, 728, 105 CR 713). Cross-examination for the purpose of discovery is not allowed. Pen C §866(b). Similarly, the presentation of defense evidence is limited to that which, if believed, is reasonably likely to establish an affirmative defense, negate an element of a crime charged, or impeach a prosecution witness or declarant. Pen C §866(a). After Crawford v Washington, supra, however, if the defendant did not have an adequate opportunity to cross-examine the witness, the preliminary examination testimony may not be admissible. See People v Price (2004) 120 CA4th 224, 239, 15 CR3d 229 (defendant allowed to "vigorously" cross-examine witness about statement to police officer later admitted at trial; no Crawford violation).

At the preliminary hearing, defense counsel may move to suppress illegally seized evidence introduced at the hearing by making a written motion under Pen C §1538.5 with 5 days' notice. Pen C §1538.5(f)(1). A favorable ruling on a motion to suppress evidence may result in a discharge of part or all of the complaint. See People v Belknap (1974) 41 CA3d 1019, 116 CR 664. It is more common, however, to make the motion in the trial court. See discussion in §8.31.

The defense may ask the magistrate to make factual findings based on a determination of the credibility of the witnesses, which may result in a discharge of some or all charges. The evidence presented at the preliminary hearing may support a defense request for lower bail.

When the felony charged in the complaint provides a misdemeanor sentencing alternative (called a "wobbler"), the magistrate may reduce the charge to a misdemeanor. Pen C §17(b).

Almost all cases that proceed to preliminary hearing result in holding orders (commitments) to the trial court.

Action	Deadline	Authority
Preliminary hearing begins.	Within 10 court days after date defendant is arraigned or enters plea, whichever is later, or within 10 court days after date criminal proceedings are reinstated under Pen C §§1367-1376 unless magistrate finds good cause for continuance or time is waived by both prosecutor and defendant. However, hearing must be held within 60 days even if good cause for continuance is shown unless there is a time waiver. See discussion of special requirements for court-appointed counsel in §§8.7, 19.17.	Pen C §859b.
Notice motions for preliminary hearing.	Absent contrary local rules, motions other than under Pen C §1538.5 need not be noticed.	People v Ciraco (1986) 181 CA3d 1142, 226 CR 541. See Pen C §1538.5(f).

§8.3 III. DESCRIPTION OF HEARING

A preliminary hearing is an evidentiary hearing that follows the filing of a felony complaint (see Pen C §859b). The judge sits as a magistrate and trier of fact. See §8.36. The prosecution must present evidence that provides sufficient cause (also called "probable cause") for the magistrate to believe that a crime was committed and that the defendant committed it. Pen C §866(b). If that is done, the magistrate "holds the defendant to answer" and the prosecution may then file an information in the trial court. People v Slaughter (1984) 35 C3d 629, 637, 200 CR 448; Williams v Superior Court (1969) 71 C2d 1144, 1147, 80 CR 747; see Cal Const art I, §14; People v Encerti (1982) 130 CA3d 791, 182 CR 139. A preliminary hearing in the average case is usually quite short: from ½ to 2 hours.

A magistrate who does not find sufficient evidence to support probable cause will discharge the complaint. See Somers v Superior Court (1973) 32 CA3d 961, 108 CR 630.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.4 IV. PROPER VENUE

A preliminary hearing may be heard in any court in the county where the offense took place, although not necessarily in a specific judicial district within that county. Stanley v Justice Court (1976) 55 CA3d 244, 127 CR 532. Some statutes relating to venue permit more than one county to be a proper site for the prosecution of an offense. See, e.g., Pen C §§781, 786, 791. See chap 15 on change of venue motions.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. DEFENSE ALTERNATIVES TO PRELIMINARY HEARING

§8.5 A. Waiver of Preliminary Hearing

The accused may relinquish the right to a preliminary hearing. Pen C §§738, 860; People v Connor (1964) 229 CA2d 716, 718, 40 CR 603. This is usually done to avoid evidence of additional offenses or to avoid preserving testimony that could later be used at trial if the witness became unavailable. Evid C §240. See §8.47. The defendant must personally waive the right to a preliminary hearing and must be represented by counsel. See Pen C §860; People v Connor, supra; People v White (1963) 213 CA2d 171, 174, 28 CR 656.

Despite the defendant's waiver, the prosecutor may proceed, or the magistrate may require the prosecutor to proceed, with the preliminary hearing. Pen C §860. A prosecutor may not add new charges to an information after the waiver of a preliminary hearing. People v Peyton (2009) 176 CA4th 642, 652, 98 CR3d 243.

Ø Warning: A defendant who waives a preliminary hearing forfeits any claim of vagueness in the accusatory pleading. See People v Butte (2004) 117 CA4th 956, 959, 12 CR3d 221.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.6 B. Prehearing Guilty or No Contest Plea

An accused may plead guilty or no contest before the magistrate makes a holding (commitment) order, if not charged with an offense punishable by death. Pen C §859a(a). If the defendant pleads guilty, the case proceeds to the sentencing phase. The magistrate has sentencing jurisdiction under §859a. See People v Superior Court (Feinstein) (1994) 29 CA4th 323, 329 n2, 34 CR2d 503. Plea and sentencing in the preliminary hearing court can be an attractive alternative for defendants charged with offenses that may not be plea-bargained after the defendant has been arraigned in superior court under Pen C §1192.7 (i.e., "serious felonies"; see §§8.6, 26.20). For further discussion of pleas of guilty and no contest, see §§26.7-26.22.

If an information is filed, the case will be assigned to a judge for sentencing, or the trial judge who presides over the remainder of the case will be the sentencing judge. See Pen C §§859a(b), 877a. If the magistrate who accepts the plea will not be the sentencing judge, the parties should obtain the trial court's approval before entering a plea before the magistrate: the sentencing judge must approve any disposition and may refuse to accept the plea if it disagrees with the bargain that is the basis for the plea. The sentencing judge may not set aside a plea bargain, however, simply because he or she disagrees with the plea itself; a proper ground under Pen C §1018 must exist. People v Superior Court (Barke) (1976) 64 CA3d 710, 715, 134 CR 704. See also Pen C §1192.5.

Although the magistrate may accept a plea and sentence the defendant on the felony complaint without filing an information (see Pen C §§682, 859a(b), 877a), some magistrates ask the parties to stipulate that the complaint is deemed to be an information when the defendant is to be sentenced on a felony in the preliminary hearing court.

VI. DEFENDANT'S RIGHTS BEFORE AND DURING PRELIMINARY HEARING

§8.7 A. Rights to Counsel and Self-Representation

A defendant has the constitutional right to the effective assistance of counsel at the preliminary hearing. Pen C §858; Coleman v Alabama (1970) 399 US 1, 26 L Ed 2d 387, 90 S Ct 1999; Bogart v Superior Court (1963) 60 C2d 436, 34 CR 850; Little v Superior Court (1980) 110 CA3d 667, 168 CR 72. At arraignment, the magistrate must permit the defendant a reasonable time to secure an attorney. If the defendant asks the magistrate to contact a particular attorney, the judge must direct a peace officer to take a message without delay or fee to any counsel named by the defendant who is within the judicial district. Pen C §859. In practice, the court clerk usually calls counsel on the telephone.

If a defendant cannot afford to pay for counsel, the court must appoint an attorney. Pen C §987; Williams v Superior Court (1964) 226 CA2d 666, 38 CR 291. If there is a holding order, the attorney who represents the defendant at the preliminary hearing must continue the representation until the date set for arraignment. The statute does not require counsel to continue representing the client after that date. Pen C §987.1; Lempert v Superior Court (2003) 112 CA4th 1161, 5 CR3d 700. Once counsel is appointed, the magistrate cannot relieve him or her even if there is a later finding that the defendant is no longer indigent. The magistrate may assess a fee, if the defendant has been apprised of that possibility before the appointment. Roswall v Municipal Court (1979) 89 CA3d 467, 152 CR 337. See §3.28.

Penal Code §987.05 requires the magistrate to appoint only counsel who represents that he or she will be ready to proceed with the preliminary hearing within the statutory time (10 court days (Pen C §859b)), unless the magistrate concludes that because of the complexities of the case no counsel could be prepared within that time. When the defendant's right to a preliminary hearing within 10 court days (see Pen C §859b) conflicts with the right to effective assistance of counsel, the latter prevails. People v Kowalski (1987) 196 CA3d 174, 178, 242 CR 32 (complex case; three attorneys stated that they could not adequately prepare within the "no time waiver" limit demanded by defendant). In deciding whether the case is one requiring more time, the magistrate may not consider the attorney's other commitments or caseload. Pen C §987.05; Williams v Superior Court (1996) 46 CA4th 320, 53 CR2d 832.

> Ø Note: Although in effect since 1990, Pen C §987.05 has not, as far as the author is aware, been stringently enforced by the trial courts. Defense counsel should check with local attorneys to learn how particular local judges apply the statute. For further discussion, see §19.21.

A defendant has the right of self-representation at every stage of the proceedings, including the preliminary hearing. If the magistrate erroneously denies the defendant this right, the error must be raised in a Pen C §995 motion; otherwise, that issue is not cognizable on appeal. People v Matthews (1986) 183 CA3d 458, 228 CR 316.

> Ø Note: The failure to grant a defendant pro per status, after a proper request, denies the defendant a substantial right and requires the trial court to grant a Pen C §995 motion without any further showing of prejudice. Moon v Superior Court (2005) 134 CA4th 1521, 1531, 36 CR3d 854.

Although denial of the effective assistance of counsel at the preliminary hearing renders the commitment unlawful and subject to challenge, the defendant must show prejudice if the challenge occurs on appeal after conviction. People v Coleman (1988) 46 C3d 749, 251 CR 83 (defendant's §995 motion on that issue had been denied). Thus, new defense counsel should challenge preliminary hearing errors by prior counsel by a petition for writ of prohibition, and not wait until appeal following conviction.

For further discussion of the right to counsel, see chap 3.

§8.8 B. Right to Interpreter

A defendant who cannot understand English has the right to a court-provided interpreter at the preliminary hearing; codefendants are entitled to separate interpreters. Cal Const art I, §14. See People v Rodriguez (1986) 42 C3d 1005, 232 CR 132.

§8.9 C. Defendant's Right to Be Present

A defendant has a right to be personally present at the preliminary hearing (Pen C §1043.5(a)), and must be present to be identified, although the magistrate may permit a temporary absence while an eyewitness testifies if no line-up was previously conducted. People v Green (1979) 95 CA3d 991, 1003, 157 CR 520; see Pen C §§977(b), 1043.5(a).

The court may continue to hold the preliminary hearing without the defendant if the defendant appeared at the beginning of the hearing, then voluntarily failed to return (in a noncapital case), or was so disruptive that he or she had to be removed from the courtroom after having been warned. Pen C §1043.5(b)(1). A defendant may regain the right to be present by showing willingness to behave properly. Pen C §1043.5(c). See People v Sully (1991) 53 C3d 1195, 1239, 283 CR 144.

§8.10 D. Right to Discovery

The prosecution is constitutionally required to turn over all exculpatory evidence and all evidence relevant to guilt or punishment independently of any demand. Brady v Maryland (1963) 373 US 83, 10 L Ed 2d 215, 83 S Ct 1194; U.S. v Bagley (1985) 473 US 667, 87 L Ed 2d 481, 105 S Ct 3375; In re Brown (1998) 17 C4th 873, 879, 72 CR2d 698; Izazaga v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 356, 285 CR 231. There is no other statutory requirement that discovery be provided by either party before the preliminary hearing unless the hearing is held more than 15 days after the discovery request. This is because under Pen C §1054.5(b), a party is not under an obligation to turn over any material at all until 15 days after the opponent makes an "informal request" for discovery. See People v Superior Court (Sturm) (1992) 9 CA4th 172, 11 CR2d 652 (finding §1054.5(b) constitutional). Many prosecutors turn over discovery before the preliminary hearing to avoid continuance requests and Brady problems. The defense should not depend on a prosecutor's general practice, however. Unless the prosecutor in a particular case promises discovery, the defense should plan on doing its own prehearing investigation.

> Ø Note: In counties where prehearing discovery is being denied, appointed counsel should ask the magistrate at arraignment for funds to pay for pre-preliminary hearing investigation. See Ake v Oklahoma (1985) 470 US 68, 84 L Ed 2d 53, 105 S Ct 1087; People v Worthy (1980) 109 CA3d 514, 167 CR 402.

Neither side may use the preliminary hearing itself to obtain discovery. Pen C §866(b).

In prosecutions for certain sex offenses, the prosecutor may file a noticed motion before the hearing to exclude from evidence the victim's current address and telephone number. The magistrate must find that the danger to the victim outweighs the probative value of the evidence in order to exclude this information. The defendant still has the right to obtain the information through discovery. Evid C §352.1. In People v Watson (1983) 146 CA3d 12, 193 CR 849, the court permitted the prosecutor to refuse disclosure in a non-sex case on a proper showing made by competent evidence.

When material should have been disclosed before the preliminary hearing and it was not, a common law motion to dismiss may lie. See Stanton v Superior Court (1987) 193 CA3d 265, 239 CR 328; see discussion in §11.17. This is another reason for the prosecution to consider carefully before deciding not to turn over discovery before the preliminary hearing.

> Ø Note: Both prosecution and defense counsel should be aware that the complete absence of pre-preliminary hearing discovery may adversely affect the defendant's constitutional right to the effective assistance of counsel at the preliminary hearing.

For discussion of discovery motions that may be made at the preliminary hearing, see §8.32.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.11 E. Right to Have Preliminary Hearing Transcribed

A defendant has the right to a transcript of the preliminary hearing without charge. People v Anderson (1961) 55 C2d 655, 657, 12 CR 500. See also Pen C §870. Although Pen C §869 still reads that in nonhomicide cases the preliminary hearing need not be reported absent a demand by one of the parties, as a matter of practice preliminary hearings are always reported.

The transcript must be filed with the county clerk within 10 days after the close of the preliminary hearing. Pen C §869(e). Late filing, however, does not require dismissal of the case. People v Ladmirault (1989) 214 CA3d 900, 263 CR 285.

When the defendant is eligible for the death penalty, the defense must be provided with a daily transcript of the preliminary hearing (Pen C §190.9(a)(1)), even if the prosecution has not announced its decision to seek the death penalty (Abernathy v Superior Court (2007) 157 CA4th 642, 645, 68 CR3d 726).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.12 F. Right to Confront and Cross-Examine Prosecution Witnesses

It is possible for the prosecution to present its entire case through the testimony of a qualified law enforcement officer. Pen C §872(b). See discussion in §8.30. All prosecution witnesses who testify, including an officer testifying under §872(b), may be cross-examined. Pen C §865. A qualified English-speaking police officer who personally received statements from a non-English-speaking witness through an interpreter may testify to those statements at the preliminary hearing. Correa v Superior Court (2002) 27 C4th 444, 117 CR2d 27.

Cross-examination may be for the purpose of raising an affirmative defense (Jennings v Superior Court (1967) 66 C2d 867, 59 CR 440), negating an element of the offense (Jennings v Superior Court, supra), or impeaching a witness (Alford v Superior Court (1972) 29 CA3d 724, 728, 105 CR 713). Cross-examination for purposes of discovery is not permitted. Pen C §866(b).

After Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 196, 124 S Ct 1354, if the defendant did not have an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, the preliminary examination testimony would not be admissible. See People v Carter (2005) 36 C4th 1114, 1172, 32 CR3d 759; People v Price (2004) 120 CA4th 224, 239, 15 CR3d 229 (defendant allowed to "vigorously" cross-examine witness on statement to police officer later admitted at trial; no Crawford violation). However, as long as a defendant is provided with the opportunity for cross-examination, the admission of preliminary hearing testimony at trial under Evid C §1291 does not offend the Confrontation Clause of the federal Constitution even if cross-examination was brief or could have been more effective. See, e.g., People v Carter (2005) 36 C4th 1114, 1172, 32 CR3d 759 (defense motive and interest in cross-examining victim's boyfriend at preliminary hearing were closely similar, if not identical, to defense objectives at guilt phase of capital trial).

§8.13 G. Right to Present Defense Witnesses and Affirmative Defenses

Although the defense has the right to call witnesses, the prosecution has the right to demand that the magistrate require an offer of proof from defense counsel before permitting any defense witness to testify. Pen C §866(a). The magistrate may not allow the defense to call a witness to testify unless the magistrate is satisfied that the testimony, if believed, "would be reasonably likely to establish an affirmative defense, negate an element of a crime charged, or impeach the testimony of a prosecution witness or the statement of a declarant." Pen C §866(a). For example, the defense can raise discriminatory enforcement (People v Hertz (1980) 103 CA3d 770, 163 CR 233) or entrapment (Jennings v Superior Court (1967) 66 C2d 867, 59 CR 440; People v Iocca (1974) 37 CA3d 73, 112 CR 102), or can show that the prosecution is barred by the statute of limitations (see Parnell v Superior Court (1981) 119 CA3d 392, 173 CR 906). See the list of affirmative defenses in §32.12. Defense counsel should make as complete an offer of proof as possible to the magistrate regarding any expected testimony. People v Eid (1994) 31 CA4th 114, 36 CR2d 835.

It is unclear whether defendants can be kept from testifying under §866(a). Compare the wording of §866(a), which appears to apply to defendants, with People v Robles (1970) 2 C3d 205, 85 CR 166, which gives defendants the absolute right to testify at the preliminary hearing. It is unusual, however, for a defendant to testify or to put on a defense, because it would provide the prosecution with discovery; even if the defendant is not held to answer, the prosecution can usually refile. See §8.44 on the effect of a dismissal.

Ø Note: The defense has a right to present hearsay evidence through a qualified officer under Pen C §872(b). Nienhouse v Superior Court (1996) 42 CA4th 83, 49 CR2d 573.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.14 H. Right to Freedom From Shackles

Only a showing of need, specific to the defendant, can justify shackling at a preliminary examination. However, the threshold for the showing of need is lower at a preliminary hearing than at a jury trial. People v Fierro (1991) 1 C4th 173, 219, 3 CR2d 426; Tiffany A. v Superior Court (2007) 150 CA4th 1344, 1356, 59 CR3d 363. The issue is not cognizable on appeal following conviction; it should be raised by a Pen C §995 motion and followed by a writ petition if the motion is denied. People v Fierro (1991) 1 C4th 173, 3 CR2d 426.

§8.15 I. Special Considerations When Codefendants Have Joint Preliminary Hearing

When multiple defendants have a joint preliminary hearing, several special considerations arise:

- The possibility of conflicts among codefendants' interests;
- The possibility that one codefendant (or more) will be given immunity to testify against another (see chap 49 on immunity);
- If one codefendant obtains a continuance that is granted for good cause, the other codefendants' cases must also be continued (Pen C §1050.1; see Greenberger v Superior Court (1990) 219 CA3d 487, 267 CR 849 (continuance approved on basis of Pen C §1098 (joint trials preferred); decided before enactment of §1050.1));
- The order in which the various parties engage in cross-examination;
- Separate interpreters are required for each witness and defendant who needs an interpreter (People v Rioz (1984) 161 CA3d 905, 207 CR 903; People v Nieblas (1984) 161 CA3d 527, 207 CR 695);
- Only one peremptory challenge to a judge is usually allowed per case, no matter how many codefendants there are (see §21.5).

VII. TIMING OF PRELIMINARY HEARING

§8.16 A. When Preliminary Hearing Must Be Held

A preliminary hearing must be set within 10 court days after the date the defendant is arraigned or enters a plea, whichever occurs later. Pen C §859b. This time requirement applies whether or not the defendant is in custody. Pen C §859b. Saturdays, Sundays, and the statewide holidays specified in Govt C §6700 are not court days, but local court holidays count as court days. People v Pickens (1981) 124 CA3d 800, 177 CR 555.

The preliminary hearing may be delayed beyond the 10-court-day period only if that time is waived by both the prosecutor and the defendant (Irving v Superior Court (1979) 93 CA3d 596, 155 CR 654), or the magistrate finds that good cause exists to continue the case beyond this time period. Pen C §859b.

If the defendant is in custody for 10 court days or more solely because of the pending complaint, the magistrate must dismiss the complaint absent a finding of good cause to continue the case beyond the 10-day period. Pen C §859b; People v Standish (2006) 38 C4th 858, 865, 43 CR3d 785. Clerical errors made by the court in setting or calendaring the hearing do not constitute good cause to extend the mandatory time period. People v Pickens (1981) 124 CA3d 800, 177 CR 555. Dismissal is not a remedy for violation of the 10-day rule if the defendant was out of custody unless the defense can prove actual prejudice. See People v Luu (1989) 209 CA3d 1399, 258 CR 10.

If the magistrate finds good cause to continue the case beyond the 10-day period and the defendant is in custody solely on that case, the magistrate must release the defendant on his or her own recognizance unless (Pen C §859b(b)(1)-(6)):

- The defendant requested setting the preliminary hearing beyond the 10-court-day period;
- The defendant is charged with a capital offense in a case in which the proof is evident and the presumption of guilt is great;
- A witness necessary to the hearing is unavailable because of the defendant's actions;
- Counsel is ill;
- Counsel is unexpectedly engaged in a jury trial; or
- Unforeseen conflicts of interest require the court to appoint new counsel.

Whether or not the defendant is in custody, the magistrate must dismiss the complaint when the preliminary hearing is set or continued more than 60 days after arraignment or plea, absent a personal waiver from the defendant. Pen C §859b. Neither Pen C §1050.1, which permits a continuance over a defendant's objection to allow joinder of a codefendant, nor good cause allows continuing a preliminary hearing past 60 days after arraignment absent a defendant's personal waiver. Ramos v Superior Court (2007) 146 CA4th 719, 731, 53 CR3d 189. A violation of the 60-day rule mandates dismissal when challenged under Pen C §995.

> Ø Note: If a defendant comes into custody on a bench warrant, e.g., for failure to appear, after having previously waived time while out of custody, the 10- and 60-day limits do not apply. Once the 60-day rule is waived, it is waived forever. However, speedy trial rights may be implicated. See People v Love (2005) 132 CA4th 276, 283, 34 CR3d 6. Speedy trial rights are discussed in chap 19.

A waiver of the right to a preliminary hearing within 10 days waives the right to have it held at the "earliest possible time." Pen C §859b. The applicable time frame then becomes the 60-day period of Pen C §859b(b). The time waived by the defendant is not subtracted from the 60 days. People v Mackey (1985) 176 CA3d 177, 221 CR 405.

The district attorney does not have to show good cause for a continuance under §859b if the defendant waives the 10-day period and is not in custody. The hearing is then held within the 60-day period of §859b(b). However, the prosecutor still has to comply with Pen C §1050, which requires good cause for a continuance. The magistrate may dismiss the case after denying the continuance if the prosecutor cannot proceed. People v Alvarez (1989) 208 CA3d 567, 256 CR 289.

When a complaint has been discharged or dismissed and then refiled, the statutory time for holding a preliminary hearing on the refiled complaint alleging the same charges is the same as if it were a new complaint. Landrum v Superior Court (1981) 30 C3d 1, 15, 177 CR 325. With the consent of the defendant and the prosecution, the defendant can be rearraigned on the same complaint. Pen C §1387.2.

Both sides may seek a writ of mandate or prohibition if the court sets a preliminary hearing beyond the §859b time limits. Pen C §871.6.

Ø Note: Defense counsel should challenge the failure to comply with Pen C §859b by a Pen C §995 motion in the trial court and by a pretrial petition for writ of prohibition if the §995 motion is unsuccessful, because on appeal after conviction, the defendant has the additional requirement of proving prejudice from the delay. Serrato v Superior Court (1978) 76 CA3d 459, 142 CR 882.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.17 B. Time to Prepare for Preliminary Hearing

Both sides have the right to at least 2 court days to prepare for a preliminary hearing. Pen C §859b. But see People v Castaneda (1987) 190 CA3d 961, 235 CR 740 (language of §859b is directory, not mandatory).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.18 C. One-Session Requirement; Continuances

A preliminary hearing must be completed in one court session unless the magistrate postpones it for good cause shown by affidavit. Pen C §861. The term "session" has not been limited to 1 day, but the magistrate is required to devote a substantial majority of his or her time to the hearing on continuous court days until it is concluded, with interruptions only to conduct brief court matters, attend to human needs, or observe legal holidays. Pen C §861. See, e.g., Kruse v Superior Court (2008) 162 CA4th 1364, 1373, 76 CR3d 664 (8-day delay in transporting in-custody defendant to court, in order to resume his preliminary hearing, required dismissal of case). But see Stroud v Superior Court (2000) 23 C4th 952, 98 CR2d 677 (even though the magistrate erred in continuing hearing for 1 day to attend Judicial Council meeting, under totality of circumstances, error did not require that information be set aside).

When the defendant is not in custody, the one-session requirement is more flexible and does not require the magistrate to devote a substantial majority of time to the hearing as long as there is a prompt disposition of the matter. People v Guevara (1982) 132 CA3d 193, 183 CR 18 (court recess from 5:10 p.m. one day to 3:00 p.m. the next did not violate §861; magistrate devoted substantial majority of its time throughout 4-day session to that preliminary hearing); People v Castagnola (1972) 28 CA3d 882, 105 CR 62 (defendant not in custody; continuance from noon one day to 8:30 a.m. the next at judge's direction for counsel to find authority on prosecutor's request for discovery did not violate §861).

The court may deny a defense motion to continue a preliminary hearing as long as that denial is not arbitrary. Wizar v Superior Court (1981) 124 CA3d 190, 177 CR 88.

§8.19 D. Postponement for Child Witness or Dependent Person

A magistrate may postpone a preliminary hearing for 1 court day to accommodate the special physical, mental, or emotional needs of a child witness who is 10 years old or younger, or a dependent person as defined in Pen C §288. The magistrate must admonish the prosecution and the defense not to coach the witness before the witness's next court appearance. Pen C §861.5.

VIII. PRESENCE OF WITNESSES AND SPECTATORS AT PRELIMINARY HEARING

§8.21 A. Defense Motion to Exclude Public

The defense may move to close the courtroom by noticed motion against all but certain specified persons. Pen C §868; Tribune Newspapers W., Inc. v Superior Court (1985) 172 CA3d 443, 218 CR 505 (notice requirement); Telegram-Tribune, Inc. v Municipal Court (1985) 166 CA3d 1072, 213 CR 7. See the sample motion in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §8.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). Requirements for closing the preliminary hearing are discussed in §14.12.

When the motion is granted, everyone is cleared from the courtroom except the judge, the defendant, defense counsel, the prosecutor, the investigators for both the defense and the prosecution, a person present to give a prosecution witness moral support under Pen C §868.5, and necessary court personnel such as the clerk, court reporter, and bailiff. On the prosecutor's motion, the victim's family is entitled to remain unless the magistrate finds a reasonable likelihood that their presence poses a risk of affecting the testimony. The magistrate must admonish family members not to discuss the testimony with anyone. The court's failure to remove all persons but those allowed to be present under §868 renders the commitment legally defective. Ortega v Superior Court (1982) 135 CA3d 244, 185 CR 297. This error may be challenged by a Pen C §995 motion. See chap 13 on §995 motions.

In cases that attract media attention, closing the preliminary hearing and sealing the transcript (see Cromer v Superior Court (1980) 109 CA3d 728, 167 CR 671, and discussion in §14.12) may be one of the few methods of preserving the defendant's right to an impartial jury. See §868 (discussed in §14.12). For further discussion of dealing with the media, and problems associated with highly publicized cases, see chap 14. A sample prosecution memorandum opposing a defense motion to close the preliminary hearing is in Crim Law Forms Man §8.2.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.22 B. Prosecution Motion to Exclude Public

The court may close the courtroom to the public at the prosecutor's request when the victim of a sex crime specified in Pen C §868.8 is under age 16 or is a dependent person with a substantial cognitive impairment, after considering the factors listed in Pen C §859.1. See Pen C §288(f)(3) ("dependent person" defined).

The court may close the courtroom in the manner specified in Pen C §868 (see §8.21) when the victim of a sex crime is a minor or a dependent person with a substantial cognitive impairment, would be caused serious psychological harm, and alternatives such as a video-recorded deposition or contemporaneous closed-circuit television examination are unavailable. Pen C §868.7(a)(1); see Globe Newspaper Co. v Superior Court (1982) 457 US 596, 73 L Ed 2d 248, 102 S Ct 2613 (closure permitted if necessary to protect psychological or physical well-being of minor victim); People v Pompa-Ortiz (1980) 27 C3d 519, 165 CR 851 (error denying defendant's right to public hearing was harmless, absent showing that defendant was prejudiced by exclusion of public from preliminary hearing); People v Baldwin (2006) 142 CA4th 1416, 1421, 48 CR3d 792 (at trial, claim that child would have difficulty testifying is, by itself, insufficient basis to exclude public); Eversole v Superior Court (1983) 148 CA3d 188, 195 CR 816 (magistrate erred in failing to consider alternatives to closure).

The court may clear the courtroom at the prosecutor's request when a witness's life would be subject to a substantial risk of harm and no alternative would adequately minimize the threat. Pen C §868.7(a)(2). The procedures suggested in §868.7(a)(2) as possible alternatives to closure include concealing the witness's features, searching members of the public before they can enter the courtroom, and temporarily excluding other actual or potential witnesses.

The court may remove spectators who are intimidating a witness. Pen C §686.2.

§8.23 C. Motion to Exclude Witnesses Under Pen C §867

Either side may move to exclude witnesses before the preliminary hearing begins. See Pen C §867. Counsel may state:

Your Honor, I move to exclude all witnesses from this preliminary hearing, and for an order that the witnesses are not to talk with each other before they have testified and are to be kept separate until after they have testified, based on Penal Code §867.

This motion is available to either party and requires the magistrate on request to exclude "all potential and actual witnesses who have not been examined." Pen C §867. The court must also order counsel to instruct the witnesses not to converse with each other until after they have testified and, when feasible, to separate them from each other until after they have testified. Pen C §867.

Section 867 permits a defense as well as a prosecution investigator to remain. If this person is to be a witness at the preliminary hearing, opposing counsel should ask the court to have him or her testify as the first witness; although there is no authority for this, it follows the reasoning behind §867.

Ø Note: A witness who has completed his or her testimony may wish to remain in the courtroom and watch the remainder of the preliminary hearing. Nothing in Pen C §867 mandates that a witness be excluded from the courtroom after testifying; however, a witness who is "subject to recall" is still a witness and can be excluded.

§8.24 D. Right of Prosecuting Witness in Certain Cases to Have Persons of Own Choosing Present While Testifying

On request by the prosecutor, the magistrate must allow a prosecuting witness to have present during his or her testimony up to two persons of his or her own choosing, one of whom may also be a witness, when the crime charged is a violation of Pen C §§187, 203, 205, 207, 211, 215, 220, 240, 242, 243.4, 245, 261, 262, 273a, 273d, 273.5, 273.6, 278, 278.5, 285, 286, 288, 288a, 288.5, 289, 314(1), 647.6; or former §277 or §647a; or §368(b), (d), or (e) when the prosecuting witness is the dependent or elder adult. Pen C §868.5. The term "prosecuting witness" in Pen C §868.5 includes all the prosecution's witnesses. People v Kabonic (1986) 177 CA3d 487, 223 CR 41. Only one person may accompany the witness to the stand. Neither person may be a news reporter as described in Evid C §1070, unless related to the victim, and neither person may take notes. Pen C §868.5(a).

If either support person is a prosecuting witness, the prosecution must present evidence that the witness desires that person's attendance and that attendance will be helpful to the witness. The magistrate must grant the prosecutor's motion unless the defense presents information, or the magistrate believes, that the support person's attendance establishes a substantial risk of influencing the witness's testimony. Pen C §868.5(b). The presence of an interpreter for a support person does not violate the statute. Ortega v Superior Court (1982) 135 CA3d 244, 185 CR 297.

A support person who is also a witness must testify before the prosecuting witness testifies, and the prosecuting witness must be excluded from the courtroom during the support person's testimony. The support person's testimony is subject to a motion to strike if it is admitted before the corpus delicti has been established, and the corpus is not later established by the prosecuting witness's testimony. Pen C §868.5(c); People v Disandra (1987) 193 CA3d 1354, 239 CR 9.

Penal Code §868.5 does not preclude the trial court from removing persons from the courtroom who may be prompting or influencing the witness. Pen C §868.5(b).

Ø Note: Objections to the presence of witnesses at preliminary hearings must be properly raised and argued at the hearing itself; they should be challenged by a motion to dismiss under Pen C §995 and a petition for writ if that motion is denied because, on appeal, prejudice must be shown. People v Coleman (1988) 46 C3d 749, 773, 251 CR 83; People v Pompa-Ortiz (1980) 27 C3d 519, 529, 165 CR 851.

§8.25 E. Contemporaneous Examination of Minor Victim

When a minor is age 10 or younger and testifying about an alleged sexual offense, the court on the prosecutor's motion may order the minor's testimony taken by contemporaneous examination and cross-examination in another place and relayed to the courtroom by one-way or two-way closed-circuit television. Pen C §1347. The prosecutor must request this procedure in writing at least 3 days before the date at which the minor is scheduled to testify. The court may also initiate this procedure on its own motion. The judge, defendant, and attorneys should not be present in the same room with the minor. The court is required to make several findings before using this procedure. See Pen C §1347(b)(1)-(3).

Penal Code §872(b)'s hearsay provision should render this section unnecessary at the preliminary hearing, because it allows the child's testimony to be related to the magistrate by a law enforcement officer with the requisite training or experience. See also Maryland v Craig (1990) 497 US 836, 111 L Ed 2d 666, 110 S Ct 3157 (upholding use of one-way closed-circuit television).

§8.26 F. Videotapes of Developmentally Disabled or Young Victims of Certain Sex Crimes

When the victim of a violation of Pen C §§243.4, 261, 261.5, 264.1, 273a, 273d, 285, 286, 288, 288a, 288.5, or 289 is age 15 or younger, or is developmentally disabled, the prosecution may apply for an order that the victim's testimony at the preliminary hearing be videotaped. Pen C §1346(a). A written application must be served at least 3 days before the preliminary hearing. Pen C §1346(b). Any videotape made under Pen C §1346 must be made available to the prosecution and the defense and is subject to a protective order to protect the victim's privacy. Pen C §1346(e)-(f). The court may admit the videotape as former testimony under Evid C §1291 if, at the time of trial, the court finds that further testimony would cause the victim such emotional trauma that the victim would be medically unavailable to testify, or if the victim is otherwise unavailable to testify within the meaning of Evid C §240. Pen C §1346(d). On using preliminary hearing testimony at trial, see §8.47. On proving unavailability of a witness, see §§31.20-31.21.

IX. EVIDENTIARY ISSUES

§8.27 A. Proof of Corpus Delicti; Sufficiency of Evidence

Under the corpus delicti rule, to obtain a conviction, the prosecution must produce some evidence, independent of the defendant's admission or confession, that a crime in fact occurred. Jones v Superior Court (1979) 96 CA3d 390, 393, 157 CR 809. Confessions and admissions are discussed in chap 23. The corpus cannot be established by the extrajudicial statement of a codefendant. The corpus delicti of a felony-based special circumstance enumerated in Pen C §190.2(a)(17) does not have to be proved independently of the defendant's extrajudicial statement. Pen C §190.41.

The truth-in-evidence provision of the California Constitution (Cal Const art I, §28(f)(2)) abrogated the evidentiary portion of the corpus delicti rule, i.e., that evidence of a defendant's admission or confession at trial is inadmissible until the corpus is established. People v Alvarez (2002) 27 C4th 1161, 119 CR2d 903. However, it did not affect the sufficiency-of-the-evidence component of the corpus delicti rule. 27 C4th at 1169. Thus, a defendant's bare admission or confession without independent proof that a crime occurred cannot provide proof beyond a reasonable doubt. See Rayyis v Superior Court (2005) 133 CA4th 138, 147, 35 CR3d 12. While the Alvarez court did not consider or decide whether the defendant's statement alone provides sufficient evidence to hold the defendant to answer, courts of appeal have decided that a defendant cannot be held to answer at the preliminary hearing simply on the basis of his or her statements. People v Herrera (2006) 136 CA4th 1191, 1200, 39 CR3d 578; Rayyis v Superior Court (2005) 133 CA4th 138, 145, 35 CR3d 12.

The corpus delicti is normally proved through the testimony of witnesses or the introduction of evidence. People v Davidson (1964) 227 CA2d 331, 38 CR 660.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.28 B. Uncorroborated Accomplice Evidence

At the preliminary hearing (as opposed to the trial), the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice can form the exclusive basis for a holding order. People v McRae (1947) 31 C2d 184, 187 P2d 741. In addition, a qualified officer may relate a nontestifying codefendant's out-of-court confession incriminating the defendant, as long as the magistrate finds it reliable. People v Miranda (2000) 23 C4th 340, 96 CR2d 758.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.29 C. Elements That Must Be Proved

Evidence of each element of a crime must be proved at the preliminary hearing. See People v Graff (2009) 170 CA4th 345, 362, 87 CR3d 827 (conviction reversed because jury permitted to convict on basis of charges not established at preliminary hearing); People v Burnett (1999) 71 CA4th 151, 83 CR2d 629 (conviction reversed because based on evidence presented at trial of completely different incident than shown at preliminary hearing). Prior convictions must be proved, including that they are in fact priors committed by the defendant, if they are elements of the crime (e.g., Pen C §12021 (ex-felon with a gun)) or enhancements (e.g., Pen C §§12022, 12022.5). People v Superior Court (Mendella) (1983) 33 C3d 754, 191 CR 1; Panos v Superior Court (1984) 156 CA3d 626, 203 CR 115. Special circumstance allegations must be established. Ghent v Superior Court (1979) 90 CA3d 944, 153 CR 720. Failure to prove these elements may be challenged by a Pen C §995 motion in trial court. Allegations of prior convictions that are not elements of the crime charged do not have to be pleaded or proved at the preliminary hearing. People v Robinson (2004) 122 CA4th 275, 281, 18 CR3d 744 (prior theft conviction when petty theft with a prior charged); Thompson v Superior Court (2001) 91 CA4th 144, 150, 110 CR2d 89. For further discussion of the use of prior convictions, see chap 24. For a detailed discussion of sufficiency of evidence issues, including a list of cases holding that a Pen C §995 motion should have been granted because the evidence at the preliminary hearing was insufficient, see §§13.6-13.10.

Ø Note: The prosecution is not precluded from amending an information to allege aggravating facts for sentencing purposes simply because those facts were not presented at the preliminary hearing. An information may be amended to add an aggravating fact for sentencing purposes when that fact was not presented at the preliminary hearing, because such a fact is not an "offense" within the meaning of Pen C §1009. Barragan v Superior Court (2007) 148 CA4th 1478, 1484, 56 CR3d 660. But see People v Superior Court (Brooks) (2007) 159 CA4th 1, 71 CR3d 49 (no amendment).

§8.30 D. Application of Rules of Evidence

General rules. Only evidence admissible under the Evidence Code can support a holding order (see Priestly v Superior Court (1958) 50 C2d 812, 815, 330 P2d 39; Pinizzotto v Superior Court (1968) 257 CA2d 582, 587, 65 CR 74), with certain exceptions: some hearsay is permitted through police officer testimony (Pen C §872, discussed below); the secondary evidence rule does not apply (Pen C §872.5); the rule of Evid C §1203 that a hearsay declarant may be called by the adverse party as if under cross-examination does not apply at preliminary hearings (Evid C §1203.1); the direct and cross-examination of certain minors can be conducted by two-way television (Pen C §1347, discussed in §8.25); and there are relaxed rules for admitting the statements of certain minor victims to provide a corpus for the purpose of admitting the defendant's confession (Evid C §1228, discussed in §8.27). If the defense does not object to inadmissible material, however, the objection may be waived. People v Castro (1968) 257 CA2d 643, 65 CR 62.

Ø Note: A hearsay declarant can have his or her credibility attacked in the same manner as a "live" witness. See Evid C §1202.

A holding based partly on incompetent evidence will not be set aside if there was sufficient competent evidence on which to hold the defendant to answer. People v Haybron (1980) 108 CA3d 31, 166 CR 264.

Hearsay by law enforcement officer or honorably retired officer. Penal Code §872(b) states that > the finding of probable cause may be based in whole or in part upon the sworn testimony of a law enforcement officer or honorably retired law enforcement officer relating the statements of declarants made out of court offered for the truth of the matter asserted. An honorably retired law enforcement officer may only relate statements of declarants made out of court and offered for the truth of the matter asserted that were made when the honorably retired officer was an active law enforcement officer. Any law enforcement officer or honorably retired law enforcement officer testifying as to hearsay statements shall either have five years of law enforcement experience or have completed a training course certified by the Commission on Peace Officer Standards and Training [POST] that includes training in the investigation and reporting of cases and testifying at preliminary hearings.

Whitman v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 1063, 2 CR2d 160, generally upheld the constitutionality of hearsay preliminary hearings under §872(b).

Completion of a POST course by an officer, which qualifies the officer to testify, may be established by the officer's testimony that he or she completed the course, and by the magistrate's taking judicial notice of POST's administrative regulations. People v Dawkins (1992) 10 CA4th 565, 12 CR2d 633; Hollowell v Superior Court (1992) 3 CA4th 391, 4 CR2d 321 (officer not qualified to testify; prosecutor failed to establish that training course was approved by POST).

In addition to the experience or educational qualifications required by Pen C §872(b), the testifying officer must possess personal knowledge of the subject matter about which he or she testifies. When the testifying officer does have personal knowledge about the case, he or she may testify as to statements made by other peace officers as well as by other witnesses. Whitman v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 1063, 1072, 2 CR2d 160; Hosek v Superior Court (1992) 10 CA4th 605, 12 CR2d 650 (acceptable in DUI case for officer to testify to blood alcohol content based on phone conversation with criminalist). Whitman, however, forbids the use of a "reader" officer who merely recites what another officer wrote in the police report. In addition, multiple hearsay is inadmissible. Whitman points out that, although §872(b) contains an exception to Evid C §1200, the rule against hearsay, it does not contain an exception to Evid C §1201, the rule that multiple hearsay is allowed only if each level of hearsay is covered by a hearsay exception. See Shannon v Superior Court (1992) 5 CA4th 676, 7 CR2d 47 (officer could testify to statements related to him by another officer, but not to statements made to other officer by victim); Tu v Superior Court (1992) 5 CA4th 1617, 7 CR2d 758 (officer's hearsay testimony about what nontestifying primary investigator told testifying officer not admissible); People v Wimberly (1992) 5 CA4th 439, 6 CR2d 800 (police detective's double hearsay testimony not allowed); Montez v Superior Court (1992) 4 CA4th 577, 5 CR2d 723 (multiple hearsay by noninvestigating officer not allowed); Hollowell v Superior Court (1992) 3 CA4th 391, 4 CR2d 321 (officer not qualified to testify).

A qualified English-speaking police officer who personally received statements from a non-English-speaking witness through an interpreter may testify to those statements at the preliminary hearing. Correa v Superior Court (2002) 27 C4th 444, 117 CR2d 27.

Hearsay from victim of physical violence. Evidence Code §1370 permits hearsay statements of a victim of physical violence to be admitted when the following requirements are met:

- The statement purports to narrate, describe, or explain the infliction or threat of physical injury on the declarant;
- The declarant is unavailable as a witness under Evid C §240;
- The statement was made at or near the time of the infliction or threat of physical injury, and less than 5 years before the action is filed;
- The statement was made under circumstances that would indicate its trustworthiness; and
- The statement was made in writing, was electronically recorded, or was made to a law enforcement official.

When determining trustworthiness, the magistrate may consider these factors:

- Whether the statement was made in contemplation of pending or anticipated litigation in which the declarant was interested;
- Whether the declarant has a bias or motive for fabricating the statement, and the extent of any bias or motive; and
- Whether the statement is corroborated by evidence other than statements that are admissible only under this section.

The statement is admissible only if the proponent "makes known" to the adverse party the intention to offer the statement and the particulars of the statement. The constitutionality of this provision was upheld in People v Hernandez (1999) 71 CA4th 417, 83 CR2d 747.

Ø Note: Although Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 124 S Ct 1354, may affect the use of Evid C §1370 at trial, it probably does not affect its use at the preliminary hearing, because there is no federal constitutional right to a preliminary hearing. Hines v Enomoto (9th Cir 1981) 658 F2d 667, 677.

Prior inconsistent statement. Evidence Code §1294 permits evidence of a witness's prior inconsistent statements that were properly admitted at a preliminary hearing to be admitted at trial if the witness is unavailable and if the witness's former testimony is admitted under Evid C §1291. The evidence of a prior inconsistent statement must be either a video-recorded statement introduced at the preliminary hearing or a transcript containing the statements made at the preliminary hearing. Evid C §1294(a)(1)-(2); see People v Martinez (2003) 113 CA4th 400, 407, 7 CR3d 49.

Ø Note: To the extent that Evid C §1294 permits the introduction for their truth of "testimonial" statements that have not been subjected to cross-examination, it has probably been abrogated by Crawford v Washington, supra.

§8.31 E. Motion to Suppress Evidence

A motion to suppress evidence may be made in conjunction with the preliminary hearing. Pen C §1538.5(b), (f). See In re Lance W. (1985) 37 C3d 873, 210 CR 631. The motion may be made in the trial court rather than at the preliminary hearing. However, a defendant is, with limited exceptions, entitled only to one evidentiary Pen C §1538.5 hearing. Pen C §1538.5(i). Many factors must be considered when deciding whether to have the §1538.5 hearing at the preliminary hearing rather than in the trial court. See §16.7.

If the defendant's motion to suppress is granted at the preliminary hearing, and the defendant is not bound over for trial, the prosecution may file a new complaint or seek an indictment after the preliminary hearing. The ruling at the prior hearing is not binding in any later proceeding. However, if the defendant's motion to suppress is granted, and the defendant is held to answer, the magistrate's order suppressing the evidence is binding unless the prosecution moves within 15 days after the preliminary hearing to relitigate the suppression motion de novo at a special hearing in the trial court. Pen C §1538.5(j); People v Jackson (2002) 96 CA4th 1265, 117 CR2d 886 (if prosecution forgoes opportunity to relitigate grant of suppression motion for special hearing, it may not relitigate that ruling by dismissing action and refiling case after time for requesting special hearing has elapsed).

Ø Note: A second motion to suppress evidence, brought after the first motion was granted and the case dismissed and refiled, must be heard by the same judge who granted the first motion. Soil v Superior Court (1997) 55 CA4th 872, 64 CR2d 319.

Failure to move for suppression at the preliminary hearing may constitute ineffective assistance of counsel if a motion in trial court proves to be an insufficient remedy. People v Rosales (1984) 153 CA3d 353, 200 CR 310 (failure to move to suppress defendant's palm print; de novo §1538.5 motion in trial court insufficient remedy because additional fingerprints were legally obtained in the interim).

Five court days' notice and a written motion with supporting memorandum are required for a motion to suppress evidence in a preliminary hearing. Pen C §1538.5(f)(2).

Ø Note: A §1538.5 motion at the preliminary hearing is restricted to evidence that the prosecutor seeks to introduce at that hearing. Pen C §1538.5(f)(1).

Live witness testimony, not affidavits, is required at a suppression hearing. People v Johnson (2006) 38 C4th 717, 720, 42 CR3d 887 (affidavit of investigating officer was inadmissible as evidence at suppression hearing). Testimony that would otherwise be hearsay is admissible on the issue of probable cause. People v Magana (1979) 95 CA3d 453, 157 CR 173. If defense counsel moves to suppress evidence at the preliminary hearing, he or she should be careful to limit the admission of otherwise inadmissible hearsay evidence to the probable cause issue both during the prosecutor's direct examination and during cross-examination. If hearsay is admitted without objection, it can provide a basis for holding the defendant to answer. W.T. Grant Co. v Superior Court (1972) 23 CA3d 284, 286, 100 CR 179. The following language may be used to obtain an order limiting the use of hearsay offered on the suppression issue:

Your Honor, I move that all hearsay admitted on the issue of probable cause be limited to that issue only, and not be admitted with regard to any other issue.

If no motion to suppress is made, cross-examination on search and seizure matters is irrelevant and may be prohibited. People v Williams (1989) 213 CA3d 1186, 262 CR 303.

If the defense suppression motion is denied at preliminary hearing (before a magistrate), the defense must renew the motion in superior court to preserve postjudgment appellate review of the denial. People v Richardson (2007) 156 CA4th 574, 67 CR3d 552 (defendant waived right to appellate review of denial of his preliminary hearing suppression motion because he took advantage of certified plea process under Pen C §859a).

For further discussion of motions to suppress, see chap 16, particularly §§16.5-16.8 (when to make motion).

F. Other Motions at Preliminary Hearing

§8.32 1. Discovery Motions

Some discovery motions may be made at the preliminary hearing. The most common are these:

- Motions to discover information concerning a police officer's prior use of excessive force or bias (Pitchess v Superior Court (1974) 11 C3d 531, 113 CR 897, discussed in §§11.19-11.24);
- Motions to disclose the identity of an informant (Cooper v Superior Court (1981) 118 CA3d 499, 173 CR 520, discussed in chap 17);
- Motions to discover information to support a motion to dismiss based on discriminatory enforcement of the law (Murgia v Municipal Court (1975) 15 C3d 286, 124 CR 204, discussed in §§18.16-18.20);
- Motions to discover prior acts of violence by the victim in a self-defense case (Engstrom v Superior Court (1971) 20 CA3d 240, 97 CR 484);
- Motions to discover information to support a motion for sanctions or to dismiss based on the prosecution's destruction or loss of evidence (Arizona v Youngblood (1988) 488 US 51, 102 L Ed 2d 281, 109 S Ct 333; California v Trombetta (1984) 467 US 479, 81 L Ed 2d 413, 104 S Ct 2528); and
- Motions to preserve and obtain video and audio recordings made of communications by the arresting officers concerning the defendant's arrest (Govt C §26202.6 (recordings need be preserved for only 100 days absent request); People v Madden (1970) 2 C3d 1017, 88 CR 171; see People v Armstrong (1991) 232 CA3d 228, 241, 283 CR 429 (Madden survived U.S. v Leon (1984) 468 US 897, 82 L Ed 2d 677, 104 S Ct 3405)).

See §8.10 on general discovery motions before and during the preliminary hearing, and §8.34 on the notice required for preliminary hearing motions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.33 2. Other Evidentiary Motions

Confessions. If the prosecution introduces a defendant's confession into evidence at the preliminary hearing, the defense can raise voluntariness and Miranda objections, discussed in §§23.34-23.48. See People v Neal (1942) 53 CA2d 379, 127 P2d 996 (no reversal because error cured at trial). The defense may wish to argue that the prosecution is bound by the contents of the confession. See §23.31.

Identification. At the preliminary hearing, counsel can challenge the procedures used by the prosecution to elicit an identification of the defendant. People v Green (1979) 95 CA3d 991, 157 CR 520; People v Malich (1971) 15 CA3d 253, 93 CR 87, disapproved on other grounds in People v Medina (1972) 6 C3d 484, 99 CR 630. Defense lineups should be held before the preliminary hearing if no prior prosecution lineups have been held so that the defendant is not identified for the first time at the preliminary hearing wearing jail clothing while seated next to defense counsel. Evans v Superior Court (1974) 11 C3d 617, 114 CR 121. In some counties, defense lineups are held the same day as the preliminary hearing. In others, they are held several days in advance. Failure to request a lineup as soon after arrest or arraignment as practicable may waive the right to hold one at or immediately before trial. People v Baines (1981) 30 C3d 143, 177 CR 861. For further discussion of defense lineups, see §22.17.

Speedy trial motions. The defense may have the right to make a speedy trial motion at the preliminary hearing. Compare People v Wright (1969) 2 CA3d 732, 82 CR 859 (yes), and People v McCoy (1983) 147 CA3d 638, 195 CR 285 (implied yes), with Jackson v Superior Court (1982) 135 CA3d 767, 185 CR 766, disapproved on other grounds in People v Konow (2004) 32 C4th 995, 1025 n10, 12 CR3d 301 (magistrate has power to allow speedy trial motion, but is not required to do so). See also §19.33. A defendant has the right to a de novo speedy trial hearing in trial court in felony cases, even though the issue was litigated in the preliminary hearing court. People v McCoy, supra.

If the court failed to hold the preliminary hearing within the deadlines required by Pen C §859b, or to conclude it in one session, counsel may move for a dismissal at the preliminary hearing. See People v Guevara (1982) 132 CA3d 193, 183 CR 18. For further discussion of these deadlines, see §§8.16-8.20. This error can also be challenged in the trial court by a Pen C §995 motion. Section 995 motions are discussed in chap 13.

Application to videotape preliminary hearing testimony of minor victim of sex crime (Pen C §1346). This motion must be noticed in writing 3 days before the preliminary hearing. Pen C §1346(b). See §8.26.

§8.34 G. Notice Required for Motions

There are no general statutes or state rules concerning notice at preliminary hearings. California Rules of Court 4.111 applies only to the trial courts. Some statutes governing specific motions give notice requirements, e.g., Pen C §§1346-1347, Evid C §1228, discussed in §8.33, and Pen C §1538.5. Counsel should find out the magistrate's preferences (or requirements) and be familiar with the applicable local rules of court.

§8.35 H. Taking Evidence Outside Court

If the magistrate wishes to take evidence outside court, he or she must follow the relevant procedures in CCP §651 (view of object, demonstration, or experiment) and Pen C §1119 (jury view). See People v Jackson (1990) 218 CA3d 1493, 267 CR 841.

X. MAGISTRATE'S ROLE

§8.36 A. Who May Be a Magistrate

Magistrates include judges of the supreme court, courts of appeal, and superior courts. Pen C §808. Only a magistrate may hear a preliminary hearing. People v Haskett (1982) 30 C3d 841, 858, 180 CR 640 (court commissioner may not hear preliminary hearing absent consent of all parties); see Foosadas v Superior Court (2005) 130 CA4th 649, 30 CR3d 358 (same).

Ø Note: It may be that a retired judge may not sit as a magistrate. See 61 Ops Cal Atty Gen 487 (1978) (temporary municipal court judge is not a magistrate).

A magistrate's jurisdiction ceases once the magistrate makes a holding order, at which time jurisdiction is vested in the trial court to deal with the charges in the case. See People v Silva (1995) 36 CA4th 231, 43 CR2d 8.

It is preferable but not mandatory that a different judge preside at the preliminary hearing from the one who arraigned the defendant. O'Neal v Superior Court (1986) 185 CA3d 1086, 230 CR 257.

§8.37 B. Challenges to Magistrates

Both challenges for cause (CCP §170.1) and peremptory challenges (CCP §170.6) may be exercised by either side against a magistrate. McCauley v Superior Court (1961) 190 CA2d 562, 12 CR 119. Counsel rarely use their peremptory challenge at the preliminary hearing, however, because they prefer to preserve it for possible use at trial. See chap 21 on challenges.

§8.38 C. Standard for Sufficiency of Evidence; Magistrate's Duty to Weigh Evidence

When a preliminary hearing concludes, the magistrate must decide whether enough evidence has been presented to hold the defendant to answer in the trial court. Pen C §872. To make that decision, the magistrate must weigh the evidence, resolve conflicts, and assess credibility. Johnson v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 248, 124 CR 32. If the judge finds the evidence sufficient, he or she makes an order referred to as a commitment order or holding order. In some counties, the judge "holds the defendant to answer." The evidence necessary to support a commitment to the trial court is a state of facts that would lead a person of ordinary caution or prudence to believe and consciously entertain a strong suspicion of the guilt of the accused. People v Encerti (1982) 130 CA3d 791, 182 CR 139.

The magistrate is not a trier of fact. He or she "does not decide whether defendant committed the crime, but only whether there is some rational ground for assuming the possibility that an offense has been committed and the accused is guilty of it." People v Slaughter (1984) 35 C3d 629, 637, 200 CR 448. See also People v McGlothen (1987) 190 CA3d 1005, 1011, 235 CR 745.

If the evidence presented at the preliminary hearing leads to two inferences, the reviewing court is bound by the magistrate's findings and cannot grant a Pen C §995 motion. People v Superior Court (Bolden) (1989) 209 CA3d 1109, 257 CR 678.

§8.39 D. Factual Versus Legal Findings

Magistrates can make factual and legal findings at the preliminary hearing. Legal findings are not binding on the prosecution after the preliminary hearing; factual findings are. People v Uhlemann (1973) 9 C3d 662, 108 CR 657. The most common example of a factual finding is a magistrate's ruling on the credibility of a witness. See, e.g., Jones v Superior Court (1971) 4 C3d 660, 94 CR 289. An example of a legal finding is that certain undisputed facts do or do not constitute a crime.

If a magistrate makes a factual finding that results in a discharge on a count, the prosecution cannot include that offense in the trial court information. Walker v Superior Court (1980) 107 CA3d 884, 166 CR 209. The prosecution's options are to refile another complaint if that is available under Pen C §§1387-1387.1 or to file a motion to reinstate the count (Pen C §871.5).

If the magistrate accepts the evidence but concludes that on legal grounds one or more charges have not been proved, that conclusion is not binding on the prosecution, and it may file the discharged count or enhancement in the information in the trial court, subject to a Pen C §995 challenge by the defense. Pen C §§739, 1009; People v Farley (1971) 19 CA3d 215, 96 CR 478.

If the magistrate agrees to make findings, defense counsel should ensure that the record is clear that the findings are factual; appellate courts require explicit rulings. People v Superior Court (Henderson) (1986) 178 CA3d 516, 223 CR 741 (magistrate's holding on manslaughter charges did not include adequate factual findings); People v Superior Court (Day) (1985) 174 CA3d 1008, 220 CR 330 (similar charges, evidence, and findings); People v Superior Court (Gibson) (1980) 101 CA3d 551, 161 CR 923. Additionally, if a magistrate focuses on one discrepancy and ignores other far more powerful evidence, his or her findings are not controlling. People v McGlothen (1987) 190 CA3d 1005, 235 CR 745.

Factual findings can be made not only on charged counts, but also on uncharged counts and enhancements that are revealed by the evidence. People v Manning (1982) 133 CA3d 159, 183 CR 727.

> Ø Note: If defense counsel believes that evidence at the preliminary hearing has shown uncharged offenses or enhancements, but that the magistrate might make a favorable factual finding on them, counsel may ask the magistrate to weigh the evidence concerning them and decide whether to hold the defendant to answer on those counts or enhancements. See discussion in §8.43.

A factual finding might be phrased as follows:

I make the following factual finding:

That witness Smith's testimony that he was able to see the fight between defendant Hayes and Mr. Greeley is unbelievable because it is improbable, if not impossible, for him to have seen the fight from where he says he was standing, given the lighting conditions, the distance, and the crowd between Mr. Smith and the fight. I therefore disregard all of his testimony because it is unbelievable.

A magistrate may not make new factual findings after a remand following the granting of a §871.5 motion. People v Childs (1991) 226 CA3d 1397, 277 CR 456.

The decisions conflict on whether a magistrate must make findings on every charge shown by the evidence at the request of the defense. People v Estrada (1987) 188 CA3d 1141, 233 CR 754, holds that, although the magistrate must name at least one offense that he or she believes was committed, there is no duty to provide specific findings on each possible charge, disagreeing with People v Brice (1982) 130 CA3d 201, 181 CR 518. The conflict still exists.

The prosecution must prove any misdemeanor counts charged together with felonies, and defense counsel may request findings concerning them. People v Thiecke (1985) 167 CA3d 1015, 213 CR 731; Medellin v Superior Court (1985) 166 CA3d 290, 212 CR 171. There is no indication that Pen C §866(b), which as amended in 1990 provides that the purpose of a preliminary hearing is to establish whether there exists probable cause to believe the defendant committed "a felony," was intended to abrogate the rule of Medellin and Thiecke or to contravene the language of Pen C §737 requiring that all "public offenses" triable in the superior court be prosecuted by indictment or information.

§8.40 E. Reducing Felony to Misdemeanor ("Wobblers"); Pen C §17(b)(5)

Felonies that provide for either a county jail sentence or a state prison commitment are often referred to as "wobblers." When a defendant is charged with a wobbler, the magistrate may order the accused held to answer to either a misdemeanor or a felony. Pen C §17(b)(5). A magistrate may also reduce a felony to a misdemeanor under Pen C §§17(b)(5) and 18 when the offense is described as a felony punishable by state prison or a fine, without an alternative sentence to county jail. But when the offense is punishable only by state prison, it is not reducible. People v Mauch (2008) 163 CA4th 669, 674, 77 CR3d 751; People v Isaia (1989) 206 CA3d 1558, 254 CR 500. A magistrate may not discharge nonwobbler felonies and hold on "lesser included" misdemeanors. People v Superior Court (Feinstein) (1994) 29 CA4th 323, 34 CR2d 503.

Reduction of a felony to a misdemeanor can be done either on the court's own motion or on that of defense counsel. People v Manning (1982) 133 CA3d 159, 183 CR 727; People v Municipal Court (Kong) (1981) 122 CA3d 176, 175 CR 861. The prosecutor's consent is not required for the court to reduce a wobbler to a misdemeanor. Esteybar v Municipal Court (1971) 5 C3d 119, 95 CR 524. The prosecutor cannot dismiss and refile the charge as a felony after the judge has reduced it under §17(b)(5) unless the judge consents. Malone v Superior Court (1975) 47 CA3d 313, 120 CR 851. Judges may reduce wobblers even in Three Strikes cases. See People v Superior Court (Alvarez) (1997) 14 C4th 968, 60 CR2d 93. Although the prosecution does not have the right under Pen C §1238 to appeal the magistrate's order reducing a wobbler charged as a felony to a misdemeanor, writ review may be available. See People v Williams (2005) 35 C4th 817, 28 CR3d 29.

The magistrate does not have the authority to fix the degree of an offense. People v Estrada (1987) 188 CA3d 1141, 233 CR 754; People v Buckley (1986) 185 CA3d 512, 228 CR 329. Thus, when an offense is one of varying degrees, such as burglary, and the greater degree is not a wobbler but the lesser is, the court cannot reduce the crime to a lesser degree and then reduce it to a misdemeanor without the prosecutor's consent, unless the evidence shows only the lesser degree. See Pen C §§1192.1-1192.2, 1192.4.

> Ø Note: The defense may be in a better position to request reductions when live witnesses have not testified (see Pen C §872(b), discussed in §8.30), because the officer may forget to testify to all details of the offense.

Section 17(b)(5) does not provide much guidance on the application of the power to reduce. The legislature had in view unburdening the superior courts from cases that were likely to be given misdemeanor sentences, saving time by eliminating unnecessary felony prosecutions, and encouraging guilty pleas because of reduced sentencing exposure. Henry v DMV (1972) 25 CA3d 649, 653, 102 CR 36. In practice, the court usually looks to sentencing factors to decide when to reduce a felony to a misdemeanor. If the accused's criminal record is not significant and the crime does not appear to be aggravated, the magistrate may consider a misdemeanor finding. If the magistrate has some question on the matter, he or she can request a waiver of the one-session rule (Pen C §861) from the defendant and order a preplea probation report (Pen C §1203.7). See chap 27 on preplea probation reports.

If the court reduces a felony to a misdemeanor, it is treated thereafter as a misdemeanor for all purposes (see, e.g., Henry v DMV, supra) except that it retains the felony statute of limitations. See Pen C §805. Any appeal of a conviction received on the reduced charge is treated as a misdemeanor appeal and handled by the appellate division of the superior court. People v Nickerson (2005) 128 CA4th 33, 36, 26 CR3d 563.

When a defendant is charged with a felony and a misdemeanor and the felony count is dismissed, the magistrate should order the defendant arraigned on the misdemeanor count. People v Hardin (1967) 256 CA2d Supp 954, 64 CR 307.

A magistrate cannot inquire whether a defendant will enter a guilty plea before determining whether to reduce the charge because it appears to penalize the accused who wishes to exercise his or her right to a jury trial. Hartman v Superior Court (1982) 135 CA3d 205, 185 CR 182.

> Ø Note: If the prosecutor is the one who seeks to reduce a felony offense to a misdemeanor, the defendant can require that it remain a felony. Pen C §17(b)(4); Larson v Municipal Court (1974) 41 CA3d 360, 116 CR 1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.41 F. Lesser Included and Related Offenses

The court can hold a defendant to answer to offenses other than those charged in the complaint "according to the fact." Pen C §872(a). Presumably, this means an offense shown by the evidence at the preliminary hearing that is either a lesser included offense or lesser related offense based either on factual or legal findings. See Walker v Superior Court (1980) 107 CA3d 884, 166 CR 209.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.42 G. Magistrate Who Hears Refiled Complaint

When a magistrate dismisses a felony complaint, and the prosecutor is able to recharge it (see §§8.39, 8.44 on when prosecutor allowed to recharge), it may be refiled before a different magistrate from the one who dismissed the first complaint (see People v Luna (1983) 140 CA3d 788, 189 CR 792), unless the dismissal followed the grant of defendant's motion to suppress (see Soil v Superior Court (1997) 55 CA4th 872, 64 CR2d 319).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.43 XI. UNCHARGED OFFENSES AND ENHANCEMENTS

The prosecutor may charge in the information filed in the trial court offenses and enhancements shown by the evidence presented at the preliminary hearing and arising from the transaction that was the basis for the commitment, even though they were not charged in the complaint on which the preliminary hearing was based and were not a part of the holding order (commitment). Pen C §739. That cannot be done, however, unless a holding order was issued on the same transaction from which the newly added charges arose. People v Dominguez (2008) 166 CA4th 858, 866, 83 CR3d 284; People v Winters (1990) 221 CA3d 997, 270 CR 740 (defendant waived preliminary hearing; information could not later be amended to add an offense to one originally pleaded in complaint). See also People v Thiecke (1985) 167 CA3d 1015, 1018, 213 CR 731 (misdemeanor charge may be added to felony count in information as long as probable cause for misdemeanor was established at preliminary hearing).

Although the presumption implicit in §739 is that the preliminary hearing itself serves as notice to the accused of potential charges, one court has suggested that there "may be cases where an uncharged offense is psychologically so well camouflaged that a claim of having been misled at the preliminary hearing has some substance." People v Brice (1982) 130 CA3d 201, 207, 181 CR 518.

Defense counsel has several options when the evidence at the hearing shows uncharged offenses. All are potentially dangerous. If defense counsel believes that factual findings on the credibility of a witness concerning an uncharged offense or enhancement will be favorable, counsel can request factual findings. People v Manning (1982) 133 CA3d 159, 183 CR 727. However, this option may alert the prosecutor to charges of which he or she was unaware. Another alternative is for defense counsel to put on a defense through cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, or affirmative defense evidence, then ask the magistrate to make factual findings. This is rarely done because it not only alerts the prosecutor to the uncharged offenses or enhancements, but also reveals the defense to the prosecutor. Finally, the defense can refrain from raising the issue.

The information filed in the trial court need only tell a defendant what kinds of offenses are charged and the number of counts, as long as the evidence presented at the preliminary hearing supports each offense charged and covers the time period described in the information. People v Jeff (1988) 204 CA3d 309, 251 CR 135. If the information contains more counts than were shown by the preliminary hearing evidence, or covers a different time period, the defendant should move to set aside the relevant counts under Pen C §995.

XII. EFFECT OF DISMISSAL

§8.44 A. Prosecution Remedies After Dismissal

If a magistrate made no factual findings but dismissed the case on legal grounds at the preliminary hearing, the prosecution may:

- Refile a new complaint (People v Luna (1983) 140 CA3d 788, 189 CR 792) or seek a grand jury indictment (People v Uhlemann (1973) 9 C3d 662, 108 CR 657), as long as there have not been two dismissals under Pen C §1387 or if an exception under §1387 applies (see discussion of the dismissal rule in §13.31); or
- Petition the superior court for reinstatement of the charges under Pen C §871.5, arguing that the dismissal was based on an erroneous legal ruling (see §13.32; see, e.g., People v Dawson (2009) 172 CA4th 1073, 1087, 91 CR3d 841).

The prosecutor may not directly appeal the magistrate's order of dismissal. See People v Mimms (1988) 204 CA3d 471, 251 CR 672; People v Belknap (1974) 41 CA3d 1019, 116 CR 664. The prosecutor may, however, appeal the denial of a motion for reinstatement. Pen C §§871.5, 1238(a)(9).

If the magistrate held the defendant to answer to fewer than all charges shown by the evidence, the prosecution may file an information in the trial court charging those offenses proved at the preliminary hearing (Pen C §739) and transactionally related to the offenses to which the defendant was held to answer. Ondarza v Superior Court (1980) 106 CA3d 195, 164 CR 892.

If the magistrate made factual findings fatal to holding the defendant to answer to any offense, the prosecution cannot recharge that offense in the trial court information. Walker v Superior Court (1980) 107 CA3d 884, 166 CR 209. The prosecution has the other remedies discussed above.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.45 B. Defense Remedies After Holding Order

Errors at the preliminary hearing are challenged by a Pen C §995 motion to dismiss in the trial court, made after an information has been filed. Failure to challenge error by a §995 motion waives the error on appeal. Pen C §996. See In re Torres (1982) 128 CA3d 826, 180 CR 700. For discussion of §995 motions, see chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.46 C. Effect on Defendant's Custody Status of Reinstatement of Complaint Following Dismissal

When the prosecutor chooses to file a new complaint after a magistrate has dismissed the case and the defendant is arrested within 15 days after dismissal of the first complaint, the defendant is entitled to apply the original bail to the new charge if he or she is arrested and charged with an offense arising from the same act or omission on which the earlier complaint was based. Pen C §1303.

If the defendant was on his or her own recognizance on the dismissed complaint, the prosecutor must send a letter to the defendant and his or her attorney, stating the date, time, and place for rearraignment unless the defendant was present in court when the complaint was refiled. Pen C §1388(a). The defendant must be allowed to continue on his or her own recognizance unless there are changed conditions that require bail to be set. Pen C §1388(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.47 XIII. USES OF PRELIMINARY HEARING TESTIMONY

Preliminary hearing transcripts may be used during other hearings, including trial, to impeach witnesses (Evid C §1235; People v Ford (1981) 30 C3d 209, 178 CR 196 (used to impeach witness who repudiated preliminary hearing identification); People v Chavez (1980) 26 C3d 334, 161 CR 762 (same); People v De Larco (1983) 142 CA3d 294, 190 CR 757. They may also be used at trial in place of the witness (Pen C §1291; People v Diaz (2002) 95 CA4th 695, 115 CR2d 799 (witness could not be found); People v Francis (1988) 200 CA3d 579, 245 CR 923 (witness refused to testify); People v Maxwell (1979) 94 CA3d 562, 156 CR 630 (witness invoked privilege against self-incrimination)), but only if the defendant had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness at the preliminary hearing. See Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 203, 124 S Ct 1354.

To use a preliminary hearing transcript in place of a witness, the following conditions must be met:

- The witness must be unavailable. 541 US at 68, 158 L Ed 2d at 203; Barber v Page (1968) 390 US 719, 722, 20 L Ed 2d 255, 259, 88 S Ct 1318. The prosecution has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the witness is unavailable. People v Turner (1990) 219 CA3d 1207, 268 CR 686, disapproved on other grounds in People v Cromer (2001) 24 C4th 889, 103 CR2d 23. The prosecution must demonstrate due diligence in trying to secure the witness's presence at trial. See, e.g., People v Diaz (2002) 95 CA4th 695, 706, 115 CR2d 799.
- The prior testimony must be reliable. Ohio v Roberts (1980) 448 US 56, 65, 65 L Ed 2d 597, 607, 100 S Ct 2531, overruled in part by Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 203, 124 S Ct 1354. See Evid C §§701-702; People v Lyons (1992) 10 CA4th 837, 13 CR2d 112 (preliminary hearing transcript not admissible at trial, because witness unable to understand duty to tell truth).
- The defendant must have had the opportunity to cross-examine the witness at the preliminary hearing. Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 203, 124 S Ct 1354; Evid C §1291(a)(2). For example, if the evidence at the preliminary hearing was presented through the hearsay testimony of an officer under Pen C §872(b), that testimony is not admissible at trial. Having the opportunity to cross-examine at the preliminary hearing means that the defendant must have had "an interest and motive similar to that which he has at the hearing." Evid C §1291(a)(2). See People v Brock (1985) 38 C3d 180, 190, 211 CR 122, for a summary of cases on the opportunity to cross-examine.
- Preliminary hearing testimony cannot be used either as prior recorded testimony or as a prior inconsistent statement when the witness at trial claims partial loss of memory that is genuine and not evasive. People v Hawthorne (1992) 4 C4th 43, 55, 14 CR2d 133. But see People v Fierro (1991) 1 C4th 173, 221, 3 CR2d 426 (loss of memory that is inconsistent "in effect" may satisfy hearsay exception as inconsistent statement).

Other uses of preliminary hearing transcripts are the following:

- At court trials at which the defense and prosecution waive jury trial and agree to submit the case on the preliminary transcript. For further discussion of these trials, see §§28.19-28.21.
- To provide a record for a later motion to revoke probation. People v Winson (1981) 29 C3d 711, 175 CR 621. See chap 46 on probation revocations.
- To establish the corpus delicti of a conspiracy. People v Lawless (1987) 195 CA3d 1248, 241 CR 344.
- To prove that a defendant's prior conviction was for a "serious felony." People v Reed (1996) 13 C4th 217, 52 CR2d 106 (witnesses considered unavailable because prosecution is precluded from proving nature of prior conviction by evidence outside record); People v Gonzales (2005) 131 CA4th 767, 32 CR3d 172 (rejecting claim that Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 203, 124 S Ct 1354, and Shepard v U.S. (2005) 544 US 13, 161 L Ed 2d 205, 125 S Ct 1254, precluded admitting evidence of preliminary hearing transcript as part of record of conviction of defendant's prior serious felony).

The testimony of a minor at the preliminary hearing is admissible at a dependency hearing (Welf & I C §300). Evid C §1293; In re Elizabeth T. (1992) 9 CA4th 636, 12 CR2d 10.

Ø Note: A video recording of testimony at the preliminary hearing may be used in place of the preliminary hearing transcript. People v Moran (1974) 39 CA3d 398, 408, 114 CR 413 (case discusses procedural safeguards to follow before showing videotape to jurors). See also Pen C §§1335-1345 (conditional examinations), discussed in §11.25A.

§8.48 XIV. PROCEDURE WHEN DEFENDANT'S MENTAL COMPETENCE IN DOUBT

When a magistrate doubts a defendant's mental competence, i.e., whether the defendant is able to understand the nature of the criminal proceedings and to assist defense counsel in a rational manner (Pen C §1367), the magistrate must set the case for a hearing in the trial court on that issue before the preliminary hearing unless defense counsel requests a preliminary hearing (Pen C §1368.1(a)).

If a preliminary hearing is to be held, defense counsel may also demur and move to dismiss the complaint. Pen C §1368.1(a). Defense counsel can make a Pen C §1538.5 motion to suppress evidence at the preliminary hearing. Pen C §1368.1(a). If there is no holding order (commitment), no competence hearing is held and the defendant is discharged. Hale v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 221, 124 CR 57.

A defendant shown to have been incompetent during the preliminary hearing is entitled to a second hearing. The procedure to raise the issue is a nonstatutory motion to dismiss. The defendant bears the burden of showing incompetence before or during the preliminary hearing. People v Duncan (2000) 78 CA4th 765, 93 CR2d 173.

If the defendant is discharged after the preliminary hearing, the prosecutor's only option, if he or she thinks the defendant is mentally ill and should be hospitalized, is to invoke the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (Welf & I C §§5000-5550), discussed in §§48.71-48.74.

> Ø Note: To avoid repetitive preliminary hearings, some prosecutors seek an indictment instead of refiling in a Hale (Hale v Superior Court, supra) situation.

For further discussion, see §48.15.

§9.1 I. OVERVIEW

Scope of chapter. This chapter is intended to give the practicing attorney a working knowledge of the state grand jury investigative and charging procedures. These procedures are sometimes inadequately understood because of confusion between trial juries and grand juries, and between the federal and state grand jury systems. For discussion of the federal grand jury system, see Brenner & Lockhart, Federal Grand Jury Practice (1996).

Purpose of grand jury. Operating in the county where it is impaneled, a grand jury investigates civil and criminal matters in proceedings closed to the public. A civil grand jury investigates the operation, management, and fiscal affairs of the county and the cities in the county. See §§9.26-9.30. A criminal grand jury has constitutional authority to indict a suspect after finding probable cause that he or she committed an offense. See §§9.6-9.25.

The grand jury process, including its selection, functions, and procedures, is largely defined in Pen C §§888-945. The prosecutor has broad discretion in deciding whether to proceed by indictment or by complaint and a preliminary hearing. See §9.7.

Presumptive validity of grand jury indictments. Counsel contemplating an attack on the validity of an indictment should consider the well-settled view attaching a strong presumption of regularity to grand jury indictments. See Costello v U.S. (1956) 350 US 359, 363, 100 L Ed 397, 403, 76 S Ct 406; People v Yu (1983) 143 CA3d 358, 191 CR 859; People v Gordon (1975) 47 CA3d 465, 120 CR 840. See the checklist of possible challenges to an indictment in §9.11.

Composition of grand jury. In most California counties, a grand jury consists of 19 citizens. Los Angeles County, which has a population of over 4 million, has 23-member grand juries. In a county with a population of 20,000 or less, a grand jury can have 11 members if the board of supervisors approves the smaller number. Pen C §888.2. The composition of the grand jury may be attacked on several grounds. See discussion in §9.5.

Procedure. The prosecutor presents the case to the grand jury in the form of testimony and other evidence and may answer questions that members of the grand jury have concerning the law. A grand jury is not supposed to receive evidence that would be inadmissible over objection at trial. However, even if the grand jury hears evidence that would be inadmissible at trial, the indictment is not void if there is sufficient competent evidence to support the indictment. Pen C §939.6(b).

Once the presentation of evidence is completed, the grand jury deliberates in secret. A 19-member grand jury may bring an indictment when 12 or more jurors conclude that the evidence presented establishes probable cause to believe that the accused committed the offense. A 23-member grand jury requires the concurrence of at least 14 jurors; an 11-member grand jury requires the concurrence of at least 8 jurors. Pen C §§888.2, 940. Probable cause is the same standard used by the magistrate at a preliminary hearing: whether the evidence would lead a person of ordinary caution or prudence to believe and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion of the guilt of the accused. Cummiskey v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 1018, 1027, 13 CR2d 551; Pen C §939.8.

In limited circumstances, the prosecutor can tell defense counsel that an indictment has been returned before the client is arrested, to allow for voluntary surrender. See §9.24. Alternatively, the indicted defendant may be arrested on a bench warrant. Pen C §945.

Action	Deadline	Authority
File indictment.	None, other than statute of limitations for that crime, and constitutional limitations.	Pen C §§799-805; US Const amend VI; Cal Const art I, §15.
Notify defendant of charge.	Bench warrant issued; no statutory limitations. Only constitutional limitations.	US Const amends V-VI; Cal Const art I, §15.
Deliver to counsel a copy of grand jury transcript.	To be delivered to county clerk within 10 calendar days after indictment is found. For good cause, judge may extend time by 20 calendar days. Court clerk must immediately deliver copies to prosecutor and defense counsel.	Pen C §938.1(a).

III. SELECTION PROCESS FOR GRAND JURORS

§9.3 A. Method of Selection

The qualifications for grand jurors are similar to those for trial (petit) jurors. Grand jurors must be citizens of the United States, over 18 years of age, and residents of the county for at least 1 year immediately before being selected. They must be in possession of their natural faculties, of ordinary intelligence, sound judgment, and fair character. They must also be "possessed of sufficient knowledge of the English language." Pen C §893(a)(3).

A person is incompetent to serve on the grand jury if he or she is serving on a trial jury in any court of this state, has been discharged as a grand juror within 1 year, has been convicted of malfeasance in office or any felony or other high crime, or is serving as an elected public officer. Pen C §893(b). Investigators from the district attorney's office may make preliminary determinations of the basic qualifications of potential grand jurors to assist the grand jury commissioner and superior court judge, who remain free to give any weight they wish to the investigation results in selecting grand jurors. See People v Thornton (2007) 41 C4th 391, 412, 61 CR3d 461.

The grand jury is selected at least once each year. Cal Const art I, §23; Pen C §901(a).

Once the grand jury is selected, its members serve until the end of the fiscal or calendar year (Pen C §905.5) or until after the completion of the business before the court (People v Leonard (1895) 106 C 302, 319, 39 P 617). After impanelment, the grand jury's duties are outlined by a superior court judge (Pen C §§914, 914.1), usually the presiding judge. At this time the presiding judge also appoints a foreperson. Pen C §912. Each grand jury determines its own rules of proceeding and elects any other officers it feels are necessary. Pen C §916.

Grand jurors serve 1-year terms usually beginning on July 1. In most counties a grand jury pool is selected by the judges of the county's superior court, and this pool (between 25 and 40 persons—Pen C §904) is then reduced by lot to the correct number (see §9.1), with those not selected remaining as potential alternates for the balance of the term of that grand jury.

The composition of either the pool or the final grand jury is subject to Sixth Amendment challenge on the ground that its membership does not represent a fair cross-section of the community. Courts have adopted various procedures (including actively seeking volunteers from identifiable groups that might not be included in lists of those selected exclusively through the nomination process) to minimize disproportionate membership. On challenging the composition of the grand jury, see §9.5.

Although most counties follow these procedures in selecting grand juries, there is a statutory alternative. The superior court may have the jury commissioner furnish the judges with a list of persons qualified to serve as grand jurors. Pen C §903.1. This list must be proportionate to the county's various wards, judicial districts, and supervisorial districts. Pen C §899. This list may apparently be drawn from the petit jury rolls. See Pen C §903.1. The superior court judges then examine the jury list and select the persons that a majority feels should be selected for grand jury duty. Pen C §903.3. The judges are not limited to names on the list; they may select any individuals in the county who would be suitable and competent grand jurors. Pen C §903.4.

The presiding judge of the superior court, or the judge appointed by the presiding judge to supervise the grand jury, may also impanel an additional grand jury. Pen C §904.6(a).

Ø Note: In Los Angeles County, the presiding judge of the superior court, or the judge appointed by the presiding judge to supervise the grand jury, may direct the impanelment of up to two additional grand juries. Pen C §904.8.

Members of this additional grand jury must be selected at random from the list of trial jurors. Pen C §904.6(b), (e). If impaneled, the additional grand jury has the sole jurisdiction to return indictments, except for any matters that the regular grand jury is already looking into when the second grand jury is impaneled. Pen C §904.6(d). The Attorney General may petition the court to convene a third "special grand jury" when public interest requires, to investigate Medi-Cal fraud. Pen C §923.

§9.4 B. Staggered Terms; Holdovers

The superior court may stagger the terms of grand jurors so that half begin a 1-year term on July 1 and the remaining half begin a 1-year term on January 1. Pen C §908.2. This method provides that at any particular time at least half of the members of the grand jury will be experienced, and thus in a position to assist in orientation of new members.

The superior court can hold over up to 10 grand jurors, with their consent, to serve on a subsequent grand jury. Pen C §901(b).

§9.5 C. Challenges to Composition of Grand Jury

In most counties, grand juries are selected by superior court judges. See Pen C §§903.1-904.6. To pass constitutional muster, grand juries must represent a fair cross-section of the community. US Const amends VI, XIV; Cal Const art I, §16. But see People v Carrington (2009) 47 C4th 145, 177, 97 CR3d 117 (noting that neither California Supreme Court nor U.S. Supreme Court has held that Sixth Amendment requirement for fair cross-section of community that applies to petit jury also applies to grand jury). There is no requirement that a grand jury mirror exactly the diversity of the county in which it sits. The selection process, however, must be free from "purposeful discrimination." People v Newton (1970) 8 CA3d 359, 388, 87 CR 394. Defense counsel may consider a challenge to the grand jury if a cognizable, distinct group is underrepresented in its membership.

Challenges to grand jury composition may be based on:

- Intentional discrimination in violation of the right to equal protection (Vasquez v Hillery (1986) 474 US 254, 88 L Ed 2d 598, 106 S Ct 617 (grand jury); Batson v Kentucky (1986) 476 US 79, 84, 90 L Ed 2d 69, 79, 106 S Ct 1712 (petit jury)); or
- Nonpurposeful exclusion that results in the absence of a fair cross-section in violation of the Sixth Amendment right to trial by an impartial jury, and in violation of due process (Duren v Missouri (1979) 439 US 357, 364, 58 L Ed 2d 579, 587, 99 S Ct 664; People v Corona (1989) 211 CA3d 529, 536, 259 CR 524; but see People v Carrington (2009) 47 C4th 145, 177, 97 CR3d 117).

The rules are the same for grand juries as for petit juries (Carter v Jury Comm'n (1970) 396 US 320, 330, 24 L Ed 2d 549, 557, 90 S Ct 518; People v Newton (1970) 8 CA3d 359, 388, 87 CR 394), and are the same for the State of California as for the federal courts (Carter v Jury Comm'n, supra).

The defendant has standing to challenge the composition of the grand jury even if he or she is not a member of the allegedly underrepresented group. Campbell v Louisiana (1998) 523 US 392, 140 L Ed 2d 551, 118 S Ct 1419 (white defendant has standing to assert equal protection rights of black persons not to be excluded from grand jury service on racial grounds); Peters v Kiff (1972) 407 US 493, 33 L Ed 2d 83, 92 S Ct 2163 (defendant has personal due process claim based on racial discrimination in selection of grand jurors); People v Estrada (1979) 93 CA3d 76, 95 n15, 155 CR 731.

The challenge is made in the superior court through a motion to quash the indictment. Vasquez v Hillery (1986) 474 US 254, 88 L Ed 2d 598, 106 S Ct 617 (defendant had made unsuccessful motion to quash indictment in California superior court; U.S. Supreme Court reversed because of systematic exclusion of African-Americans from grand jury).

Ø Note: The challenge in the trial court is not made as a Pen C §995 motion, because extensive evidence must be taken, and §995 review is almost always based exclusively on the record of the grand jury proceedings. On §995 motions and procedures, see chap 13.

At the hearing on the motion, the defense first puts on evidence to prove a prima facie case. See People v Navarette (1976) 54 CA3d 1064, 127 CR 55 (discussion of evidence presented in support of motion based on underrepresentation of women). The defense commonly relies on census figures to show what percentage of the county's population belongs to the underrepresented group and on testimony from the jury commissioner to show what criteria are used and how they are applied.

Ø Note: Unlike most of the issues subject to litigation in criminal cases, jury composition challenges involve heavy research on demographics, and occasionally on community attitudes. Such a challenge requires counsel to be familiar with the U.S. Census, the manner in which a census is conducted, the way census figures are updated, and the way the state, counties, and local governments, as well as components of private demographic research concerns, formulate population estimates. The evidence produced at a hearing on a jury composition challenge may be quite sophisticated: A party may try to introduce the fruit of a countywide special census conducted just for the case in question. More often, parties will rely on comparisons of updated census figures with specific research conducted on the demographics of jury-eligible persons in a given community. Reference materials on jury composition challenges should be consulted.

The procedures for challenging the composition of a grand jury mirror those used to establish purposeful racial discrimination in the exercise of peremptory challenges during selection of the petit jury. See Batson v Kentucky (1986) 476 US 79, 90 L Ed 2d 69, 106 S Ct 1712. If the defendant establishes a prima facie case, the burden shifts to the prosecution to rebut it. Castaneda v Partida (1977) 430 US 482, 494, 51 L Ed 2d 498, 510, 97 S Ct 1272; People v Brown (1999) 75 CA4th 916, 89 CR2d 589 (prosecution rebutted prima facie case based on historical exclusion of ethnic Chinese and Hispanic forepersons).

To prove a prima facie case in the trial court, a defendant must show that the selection procedure has resulted in substantial underrepresentation of an identifiable group over a period of time, and that the selection procedure is either not neutral on its face or susceptible to abuse. Castaneda v Partida (1977) 430 US 482, 494, 51 L Ed 2d 498, 510, 97 S Ct 1272 (grand jury). See also Duren v Missouri (1979) 439 US 357, 364, 58 L Ed 2d 579, 587, 99 S Ct 664 (petit jury); People v Bell (1989) 49 C3d 502, 525, 262 CR 1 (petit jury).

There are two different standards on appeal. Intentional racial discrimination in the selection of grand jurors renders the conviction reversible per se. Vasquez v Hillery, supra; Castaneda v Partida, supra; People v Carrington (2009) 47 C4th 145, 178, 97 CR3d 117. Other violations of the fair-cross-section requirement are subject to reversal only on a showing of prejudice. People v Carrington, supra.

Several different methods are available for analyzing the procedures a county uses to select the panel of prospective grand jurors. For discussion, see Sperlich & Jaspovice: Methods for the Analysis of Jury Panel Selections, 6 Hastings Con LQ 787 (1979); Kairys, et al., Jury Representativeness, 65 Cal L Rev 776 (1977). While a 14-percent absolute disparity was deemed constitutionally significant (Alexander v Louisiana (1972) 405 US 625, 630, 31 L Ed 2d 536, 541, 92 S Ct 1221), a 10-percent disparity was deemed inadequate to make a prima facie showing of discrimination (Swain v Alabama (1965) 380 US 202, 208, 13 L Ed 2d 759, 766, 85 S Ct 824, overruled on other grounds in Batson v Kentucky (1986) 476 US 79, 101, 90 L Ed 2d 69, 90, 106 S Ct 1712). In calculating disparity, only the portions of the population that possess the minimum statutory requirements for service should be measured. People v Bell (1989) 49 C3d 502, 529, 262 CR 1.

Motions attacking the composition of the grand jury are necessarily complicated and voluminous. A skeletal form is reproduced in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §9.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). Such motions have been made in California counties, and defense counsel can obtain information on locating and obtaining copies through California Attorneys for Criminal Justice, 1225 Eighth St., Suite 150, Sacramento, CA 95814; (916) 448-8868; (916) 448-8965 (fax); http://www.cacj.org. Prosecutors can obtain information through California District Attorneys Association, 731 K St., 3rd Floor, Sacramento, CA 95814; (916) 443-2017; http://www.cdaa.org.

§9.7 B. Differences Between Grand Jury and Preliminary Hearing

Prosecutors may initiate a criminal action either by filing a complaint before a magistrate (for both misdemeanors and felonies) or a grand jury indictment in the superior court. Cal Const art I, §14; Pen C §§737-740, 889, 949. If a felony is charged by complaint, a preliminary hearing is required unless it is waived by both parties. If a felony is prosecuted by indictment, there is no right to a postindictment preliminary hearing. Cal Const art I, §14.1.

Grand jury proceedings are secret, unless a public session of the grand jury is requested by both the prosecutor and the jury foreperson and approved by the court. See Pen C §939.1. The only persons who may be present during a grand jury criminal hearing are members of the grand jury, the prosecutor (Pen C §935), witnesses when actually being questioned, a court reporter (see Pen C §938), an interpreter if such services are necessary to assist the grand jury in understanding the testimony of a witness or who is needed by a grand juror who has a sight, hearing, or speech disability (see Pen C §§937, 939.11), and a custodial officer of a prisoner-witness testifying before the grand jury (Pen C §939). It is within the prosecutor's discretion to permit a support person to accompany a minor or dependent person (see Evid C §177 ("dependent person" defined)) into the grand jury when the minor or dependent person is testifying in specified crimes, including child abuse, molestation, and prostitution. See Pen C §939.21 for complete list. The witness has free choice of the support person, except that the support person may not be a witness in the same proceeding or a newsperson. The foreperson must admonish the support person not to reveal the testimony or to prompt or influence the witness.

Unless testifying as a witness, the accused may not be present during any portion of the grand jury proceeding. Counsel for an accused or a witness may not be present. See Farnow v Superior Court (1990) 226 CA3d 481, 484, 276 CR 275, for a review of the secrecy aspects of a grand jury and who may attend a session.

Generally, hearsay evidence that would be inadmissible during trial may not be presented to a grand jury. See Pen C §939.6. However, sworn testimony of certain law enforcement officers reporting out-of-court statements by third parties is admissible. Note the "harmless error" rule found in Pen C §939.6(b), discussed in §9.23.

Preliminary hearings, however, are held in the superior court and are usually open to the public. Pen C §§867-868, 868.7. See also §§14.12, 8.21-8.23. The preliminary hearing is presided over by a superior court judge sitting as a magistrate. The defendant and his or her attorney are present, and the case is presented by the prosecutor. Witnesses called by the prosecutor are subject to cross-examination by defense counsel, who may also call witnesses to testify on the defendant's behalf. If the magistrate concludes that sufficient evidence has been presented to believe that the person charged committed the crimes, that person is held to answer in the superior court, and the prosecutor then files an information in the superior court. Pen C §737.

> Ø Practice tip: Although a prosecutor may amend an information by adding new charges based on evidence adduced at the preliminary hearing, he or she is prohibited from adding charges to an indictment. The prosecutor may, however, cure technical defects and add prior convictions to an indictment. See Pen C §§969a, 1009; Owen v Superior Court (1976) 54 CA3d 928, 127 CR 1.

§9.8 C. Types of Cases Prosecutor Is Most Likely to Bring to Grand Jury; Prosecution Safeguards in Presenting Case

Cases that prosecutors are most likely to bring by way of indictment. Many district attorneys consider the following factors when deciding whether a case is appropriate for presentation to a grand jury:

- The preliminary hearing was unreasonably delayed.
- There are complicated factual issues, multiple counts, or multiple defendants.
- Official misconduct or corruption is involved.
- The crimes were committed by members of organized criminal organizations or groups.
- There is a need to temporarily protect the identity of a victim or witness. For example, when jailed cooperating individuals, witnesses in a witness protection program, or undercover police are involved, grand jury proceedings may postpone disclosure.
- The case could potentially generate publicity prejudicial to a fair trial.
- Indictment may be needed to prevent the flight of a defendant from the jurisdiction, or to assist in the extradition of an accused from another jurisdiction.
- The prosecutor wishes to question a reluctant witness, evaluate the presentation of an important witness, or pin down a witness's testimony.
- The prosecutor wants to add one or more defendants to a pending case to avoid multiple trials.
- Victims or witnesses need protection from the emotional trauma of multiple cross-examinations or being in the defendant's presence.

Prosecution safeguards in presenting case to grand jury. There are several specific safeguards that a prosecutor can use to present a clear and concise case to the grand jury, obtain an indictment, and protect the indictment from subsequent defense challenges in superior court:

- Establish an adequate foundation for any hearsay that can properly be admitted under an exception to the hearsay rule. See Pen C §939.6(b)-(c). For example, with evidence admissible under the business records exception, the prosecutor may bring in the custodian of records or other person qualified to testify to the preparation and maintenance of the records, or may submit an affidavit including the necessary foundational information.

  Ø Warning: Testimonial hearsay is inadmissible unless the declarant is unavailable and the defendant had an opportunity to cross-examine the declarant. Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 53, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 194, 124 S Ct 1354. Crawford restricts the admissibility of testimonial hearsay, including grand jury testimony sought to be admitted at trial. Crawford also impacts hearsay exceptions in the Evidence Code such as Evid C §§1231 (statements of deceased witnesses in gang crimes), 1253 and 1360 (statements of victims under 12), and 1360-1380 (statements in domestic and elder abuse prosecutions). See, e.g., People v Pirwani (2004) 119 CA4th 770, 786, 14 CR3d 673 (Evid C §1380 held unconstitutional on its face). After Crawford, a prosecutor should avoid presenting hearsay statements to a grand jury that will be inadmissible at trial.

- Exercise self-control in asking questions. Because there is no defense attorney present, the prosecutor should be careful not to lead a witness or elicit inadmissible evidence. When a witness is slow to answer (or to think), it is easy to lapse into leading questions to prompt an answer. Avoid the temptation.
- When appropriate, use charts or other demonstrative evidence that will keep the grand jurors' interest. Grand jurors, like petit jurors, respond to an entertaining presentation. They also appreciate the prosecutor's efforts to simplify their task. Charts and diagrams are often effective in making a case more easily understood but can be confusing to someone reading the record. Be sure that testimony referring to any charts or photos accurately identifies each exhibit and the portion of the exhibit the witness is testifying about. Identify the charts and other materials as they would be identified in court.

- To preclude a subsequent defense attack on the indictment, be sure to present all potentially exculpatory evidence to the grand jury. See Pen C §§939.7, 939.71(a); Johnson v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 248, 124 CR 32; Berardi v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th 476, 490, 57 CR3d 170. If the defense could call the evidence exculpatory under any reasonable theory of the case, it is best to present it at the indictment hearing or, at the very least, make the grand jury aware that this evidence exists, so that they may ask to view it if they so desire.
- Carefully select and word the charges in the indictment. See Pen C §1009 (limits to amendment of accusatory pleading).
- Ensure that all participants in grand jury proceedings are administered oaths and advised about their duties and responsibilities, including the court reporter, members of the grand jury, witnesses, interpreters, custodial personnel, and any support person for a minor. Pen C §911.
- Verify that only authorized persons are present during grand jury proceedings. Pen C §§934-939.11, 939.21.
- Provide all required legal instructions to the grand jury. Although the prosecutor is not required to instruct the grand jury on the law in the same way a trial judge must instruct a petit jury, the prosecutor must explain the legal principles necessary to enable it to fulfill its charge and must provide accurate legal advice in response to the jury's inquiries. See Cummiskey v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 1018, 1034, 13 CR2d 551 (prosecutor not required to instruct on lesser included offenses but must give correct advice in response to questions); People v Gnass (2002) 101 CA4th 1271, 1305, 125 CR2d 225 (prosecutor's misleading instructions required court to set aside indictment); People v Superior Court (Mouchaourab) (2000) 78 CA4th 403, 92 CR2d 829 (defendant challenging sufficiency of indictment may rely on instructions and advice given by prosecutor).
- Ensure that all communications with the grand jurors and witnesses, including questions, advisements, argument, and instructions, are placed on the record. See Pen C §938; Dustin v Superior Court (2002) 99 CA4th 1311, 122 CR2d 176 (capital indictment dismissed when prosecutor ordered court reporter to leave while he made opening and closing statements (see Pen C §190.9)); People v Superior Court (Mouchaourab) (2000) 78 CA4th 403, 92 CR2d 829 (in mandate proceeding seeking to dismiss indictment, appellate court upheld trial court's order to produce nontestimonial portions of grand jury proceedings, including all communications between the prosecutor and the grand jury, the prosecutor's opening and closing statements and argument, all responses to the jury's requests for read-backs of testimony, and the trial court's answers to jurors' questions). See also People v Bennett (2009) 45 C4th 577, 590, 88 CR3d 131.
- Be careful not to compromise the grand jury's ability to reach a determination independently and impartially. See Cummiskey v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 1018, 1032, 13 CR2d 551; People v Backus (1979) 23 C3d 360, 152 CR 710; People v Superior Court (Mouchaourab), supra.

§9.10 E. Indictment for Misdemeanor Offenses

In People v Lukenbill (1991) 234 CA3d Supp 1, 285 CR 461, the Appellate Department of the San Francisco Superior Court held that a grand jury may not indict for a misdemeanor offense. This decision rests on questionable authority: a line of cases decided in the late 1800s before the enactment of Pen C §§889 and 917. These provisions allow the grand jury to return an indictment for any public offense. Under Pen C §§15-16, "public offense" includes misdemeanors and infractions. Furthermore, Pen C §951 contains specific language stating that an indictment can charge a misdemeanor.

However, although there is a strong argument that a grand jury has the power to indict for a misdemeanor, in practice the grand jury is used almost exclusively in felony cases.

F. Role of Counsel in Representing Witness or Potential Defendant

§9.11 1. Checklist: Challenges to Indictment

The following are among the potential issues that defense counsel might want to consider in making a challenge to the indictment process:

- Error in the superior court's charge to the grand jury regarding its duties and responsibilities. See Pen C §§914-914.1.
- The indictment's failure to have the concurrence of 12 grand jurors. Stern v Superior Court (1947) 78 CA2d 9, 177 P2d 308.
- Error in the process of selecting grand jurors. See §9.3.
- The grand jury's reliance on inadmissible or irrelevant evidence. Pen C §939.6; People v Superior Court (Mouchaourab) (2000) 78 CA4th 403, 424, 92 CR2d 829.
- Failure to inform the grand jury of exculpatory evidence. Pen C §§939.7, 939.71(a); Johnson v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 248, 124 CR 32; Berardi v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th 476, 490, 57 CR3d 170.
- Improper or inadequate instructions on the law by the prosecutor. See Cummiskey v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 1018, 13 CR2d 551; People v Gnass (2002) 101 CA4th 1271, 1305, 125 CR2d 225; People v Superior Court (Mouchaourab) (2000) 78 CA4th 403, 424, 92 CR2d 829; People v Haskin (1976) 55 CA3d 231, 241, 127 CR 426.
- The presence of unauthorized persons in the grand jury hearing room. See Pen C §§934-935, 937-939; People v Rojas (1969) 2 CA3d 767, 82 CR 862.
- Failure to properly record grand jury proceedings. See Pen C §938; Dustin v Superior Court (2002) 99 CA4th 1311, 122 CR2d 176 (dismissal of indictment in death penalty prosecution when prosecutor's opening and closing remarks to grand jury were not recorded); People v Superior Court (Mouchaourab) (2000) 78 CA4th 403, 92 CR2d 829 (production ordered of nontestimonial portions of grand jury proceedings, including transcripts of argument, and answers to questions and requests, as well as the read-back of witness testimony).
- Prosecutor's compromising "the grand jury's ability to reach a determination independently and impartially." Cummiskey v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 1018, 13 CR2d 551; People v Backus (1979) 23 C3d 360, 393, 152 CR 710; People v Superior Court (Mouchaourab) (2000) 78 CA4th 403, 430, 92 CR2d 829.
- Variance in prosecution's theory and/or charges from language in indictment in violation of Fifth Amendment right to be charged by grand jury. Pen C §1009 (prohibition on adding charges to the indictment).

A successful challenge will not preclude a subsequent attempt by the prosecutor to cure any error. The challenge may, however, result in procedural changes by either the prosecutor or the superior court, or may discourage prosecutors from using a grand jury indictment as a method of initiating a criminal prosecution.

See §13.22 for discussion of raising grand jury errors by Pen C §995 motion. Defense challenges to the indictment are best made pretrial, rather than on appeal following a conviction, due to a lower standard of proof required for a successful challenge. See People v Becerra (2008) 165 CA4th 1064, 1070, 81 CR3d 348.

§9.12 2. Preparing Witnesses, Deciding Whether Privileges Apply, and Negotiating Immunities

When counsel is asked to represent a witness called to testify before the grand jury, counsel should contact the prosecutor to find out whether the witness is under investigation or is being called to testify concerning another person. Counsel for a person under investigation (i.e., a "target") may advise the witness to testify (unusual) or to refuse to testify, based on the self-incrimination privilege (US Const amend V; Cal Const art I, §17).

If the subject of the investigation is called to testify, some prosecutors advise the subject of his or her status and rights before asking questions. A warning relating to self-incrimination is not required, because answering questions before a grand jury does not amount to police custodial interrogation. U.S. v Mandujano (1976) 425 US 564, 48 L Ed 2d 212, 96 S Ct 1768. But see U.S. v McKenna (9th Cir 2003) 327 F3d 830 (discussion of "perjury trap" defense).

A grand jury witness should be vigorously and strongly admonished to tell the truth and not evade or prevaricate, even when immunized. It is better that the witness refuse to answer and confer with counsel. "Fudging" is likely to make a case for the prosecution in addition to the one under investigation.

If a witness is not the target of the grand jury's inquiry, counsel for the witness should consider seeking to elicit from the prosecutor whether the witness nonetheless has any criminal exposure. If there is the slightest doubt about exposure, the prudent course is to negotiate immunity. Statutory "use" immunity is provided in Pen C §1324 for felony matters. However, the prosecutor is authorized to seek broader protection (e.g., transactional immunity) from the court. Consideration of the adequacy of immunity concerning other states and sovereigns (federal, extraterritorial) should be reviewed. For further discussion of immunity, see chap 49.

A witness before the grand jury does not lose statutory privileges (except self-incrimination, if granted immunity). Evidence Code §300 states that the Evidence Code is inapplicable to grand jury proceedings, but Pen C §939.6 and Evid C §910 expressly apply the Evidence Code to privileged matters before the grand jury. Regardless of the prosecutor's response, careful inquiry of the witness should be made and consideration given to all applicable privileges. See Evid C §§930-1070 for statutory privileges. For further discussion of these privileges, see California Trial Objections, chaps 33-51 (Cal CEB Annual). Counsel may wish to consider whether any federal or California constitutional rights (e.g., privacy) may also apply. Counsel also should be well informed on the exceptions to the privilege, e.g., "crime-fraud," in case the witness pursues an illegal course.

Consideration must also be given to who is the holder of the privilege. An absent, nontestifying person may hold the privilege. For example, an attorney who is a grand jury witness is not the holder of the client's privilege for attorney-client communication; the attorney cannot waive it for the client. See Evid C §912. The holder or joint holder (in the case of a corporation, trustee, or receiver) may have a right to intervene. See Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v Weintraub (1985) 471 US 343, 85 L Ed 2d 372, 105 S Ct 1986 (corporation's former counsel asserted attorney-client privilege in CFTC formal investigation; trustee of corporation in bankruptcy is holder of privilege and has power to waive privilege on communications that took place prebankruptcy, in face of opposition by former director, officers, and shareholders); Upjohn Co. v U.S. (1981) 449 US 383, 394, 66 L Ed 2d 584, 594, 101 S Ct 677 (extends attorney-client privilege beyond corporate "control group"); Hugle v U.S. (9th Cir 1985) 754 F2d 863, 865 (marital privilege applies to grand jury testimony; nonsubpoenaed, absent spouse may intervene to assert privilege).

A grant of immunity applies only to the privilege against self-incrimination. Counsel should therefore carefully instruct witnesses about other applicable privileges. Often, the most effective way to avoid waiver problems is to instruct the witness that if a privileged area, e.g., any conversations with a spouse or with an attorney, is at all touched on, the witness should ask to consult with counsel before answering. Great care should be taken to ensure that the witness does not waive any applicable privileges. See generally chap 51 on representing witnesses.

> Ø Note: Defense counsel should be aware of the potential dangers of advising nonclients subpoenaed to testify before the grand jury. In at least one such instance, prosecutors charged the attorney with witness-tampering for advising a witness, among other things, to seek immunity before testifying and not to volunteer any information when testifying. See Leland, Just Doing His Job, 4 Cal Law 10 (Nov. 1984).

§9.13 3. Representation While Witness Is Testifying

A person is called to testify before the grand jury by being served with a subpoena. See Pen C §939.2. Failure to appear is punishable by contempt. See Pen C §1331; chap 58 on contempt.

A person who is being investigated is not entitled to have counsel present before the grand jury. See People v Dale (1947) 79 CA2d 370, 376, 179 P2d 870. Similarly, a person subpoenaed to appear as a witness is not entitled to have counsel present during his or her testimony before the grand jury. See Farnow v Superior Court (1990) 226 CA3d 481, 276 CR 275. Although counsel cannot be present in the grand jury hearing room while the client is being questioned, counsel can instruct the client to request a brief recess to consult with counsel outside the grand jury room, e.g., when the client is asked a difficult or surprise question, or believes that privileged information is being solicited. If either the prosecutor or the grand jury objects to such a procedure, counsel might instruct the client not to answer such questions, placing on the record the legal objections to the questions. A simple refusal may not suffice for later court proceedings.

In such a situation, to maintain a record of needing legal advice, a witness should be instructed to respond:

I need to consult with my counsel regarding my legal rights.

A bare "I refuse to answer" (or "Let me see what my lawyer says") is not as precise as needed. Writing out the objection for the witness to read is the safest procedure. The prosecutor or grand jury may then have the client brought before a superior court judge for possible contempt proceedings. See chap 58. Counsel can then represent the witness before the court, and has an opportunity to explain to the judge that the prosecutor was asked to allow the witness to consult with counsel before answering the question, and ask the court to order the prosecutor to follow that procedure. Even if the court rules against the witness, counsel will have had an opportunity to discuss the pending questions with the client before the client is required to answer before the grand jury.

§9.14 4. Defense Counsel Preparation

Representing witnesses before a grand jury requires attention to an array of issues. See Klieman & Thomas, National Lawyers Guild. Representation of Witnesses Before Federal Grand Juries (4th ed 1999), and Brenner & Lockhart, Federal Grand Jury Practice (1996). Although these books specifically discuss practice involving federal grand juries, there are sufficient similarities with state grand juries to provide counsel with a basic approach to issues involved in representing a witness or a subject of a state grand jury inquiry.

If the witness was previously interviewed by the prosecution or its agents, or previously testified before a grand jury or administrative body, the witness will need to review prior statements before testifying before the grand jury. Besides general fairness to the witness, review avoids subjecting him or her to the possibility of a "perjury trap" because of prior statements. Bursey v U.S. (9th Cir 1972) 466 F2d 1059, 1080, overruled on another ground in In re Grand Jury Proceedings (9th Cir 1988) 863 F2d 667, 670. See also U.S. v Chen (11th Cir 1991) 933 F2d 793.

If the prosecution is seeking production of documents, determine whether the "act of production" may be incriminating within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination to ascertain whether immunity is needed. Although the contents of records subpoenaed by a grand jury are not privileged under the Fifth Amendment, the act of producing the records may involve testimonial self-incrimination if the government has no previous knowledge of the records' existence or whereabouts. See U.S. v Hubbell (2000) 530 US 27, 34, 147 L Ed 2d 24, 35, 120 S Ct 2037; U.S. v Doe (1984) 465 US 605, 610, 79 L Ed 2d 552, 559, 104 S Ct 1237.

Counsel should review the procedures for preparing a "Privilege Log": Set up a system for gathering the documents to ensure compliance with the subpoena. Establish a "Bates numbering system," which also establishes the date of production. Never allow documents to be turned over to the grand jury (or law enforcement agents) without retaining a numbered copy. If any documents sought are subject to a privilege, move to quash or modify in advance rather than waiting to assert a ground for noncompliance before the grand jury. Motions to quash or modify subpoenas are discussed in §§4.32-4.35.

Many cases brought to a grand jury involve uncertain or conflicting factual situations or legal problems; the prosecutor will use the investigative powers of the grand jury to assist in determining whether a crime has been committed or whether a specific individual should be charged. In such cases, the prosecutor may invite a potential defendant to testify before the grand jury and may be willing to share crime reports with counsel representing the witness. If after examining these documents it appears to counsel to be in the client's best interest to testify, counsel may advise the client to do so. Counsel should carefully prepare the witness to testify because counsel cannot be present. Pen C §939; People v Dale (1947) 79 CA2d 370, 179 P2d 870.

Ø Note: Counsel should attempt to review with the prosecutor the line of questions to be asked before the grand jury and then appropriately advise his or her client.

§9.15 5. Report That Witness Is Not Target

A person called as a witness to an investigation before the grand jury, but who is not the subject of the investigation, can request that a report or declaration be issued so stating at the completion of the investigation. Pen C §939.91(b).

If the witness is under investigation and the grand jury does not indict, a similar procedure is available. See Pen C §939.91(a).

§9.16 6. Forcing Defense Counsel to Testify

Although fee agreements are privileged (see Bus & P C §6149), attempts to compel defense counsel to testify before the grand jury about fees paid or other details of the attorney-client relationship have become a problem in some jurisdictions. "The practice has been almost universally criticized by courts, commentators and the defense bar." U.S. v Perry (9th Cir 1988) 857 F2d 1346, 1347. See §9.12 on asserting the attorney-client privilege.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.17 G. Right to Refuse to Testify

A defendant in a criminal case has a statutory privilege not to be called as a witness and not to testify. Evid C §930. When a grand jury hearing is held before a defendant is charged with a crime in either a complaint or an indictment, however, §930 does not apply. In re Lemon (1936) 15 CA2d 82, 59 P2d 213. Of course, a witness called to testify in front of a grand jury may still exercise the right against self-incrimination at the hearing (US Const amend V; Cal Const art I, §15), and that refusal cannot later be used against the witness in either a civil or criminal proceeding. Evid C §913; Griffin v California (1965) 380 US 609, 14 L Ed 2d 106, 85 S Ct 1229; Malloy v Hogan (1964) 378 US 1, 12 L Ed 2d 653, 84 S Ct 1489. For further discussion, see §9.13, chap 49 (immunity for testimony). See also California Trial Objections, chaps 46 (self-incrimination), 47 (defendant's right not to be called and not to testify) (Cal CEB Annual). Other privileges may also apply to all or portions of a witness's testimony. See §9.12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.18 H. Immunity and Contempt

A witness who asserts the privilege against self-incrimination in response to a question cannot be forced to testify without immunity. Pen C §§939.3, 1324. See In re Critchlow (1938) 11 C2d 751, 81 P2d 966. In addition, defense counsel can seek immunity for the client through informal discussions with the prosecutor before the client testifies. If a witness is granted immunity and still refuses to testify, he or she can be ordered to testify by a superior court judge. Failure to testify is contempt of court. Once held in contempt, a witness can be jailed until the grand jury finishes its investigation (up to 1 year or for a period between 7 and 18 months, depending on the interpretations given to Pen C §§901 and 908.2), or until the witness purges the contempt by testifying. CCP §1219(a); Pen C §166(a)(4); In re Lemon (1936) 15 CA2d 82, 59 P2d 213.

Contempt is also a misdemeanor (Pen C §§166(a)(4), 19) generally punishable with a maximum penalty of 6 months in jail, a fine not exceeding $1000, or both. If an immunized witness is likely to balk at testifying, the prosecutor should call him or her early in the life of the grand jury. This approach strengthens the court's coercive power to compel performance by increasing the possible incarceration time. In contrast, defense counsel should seek to have the witness immunized as late in the proceeding as possible.

If a witness is imprisoned under CCP §1219(a), counsel should, after 5 days, seek to obtain release under the theory that further incarceration will not cause the witness to comply. In re Farr (1974) 36 CA3d 577, 111 CR 649.

§9.19 I. Presentation of Exculpatory Evidence by Prosecutor

When the grand jury has reason to believe that evidence "within its reach" will clear the defendant, it must order that the evidence be produced and may require the prosecutor to subpoena witnesses. Pen C §939.7. Furthermore, under Pen C §939.71(a), if the prosecutor is aware of exculpatory evidence, he or she must inform the grand jury of its nature and existence and must advise the grand jury of its duties under §939.7. If the prosecutor violates §939.71, and the violation causes "substantial prejudice," it is grounds for dismissal of the portion of the indictment related to that evidence. Pen C §939.71(a). See also Johnson v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 248, 124 CR 32; People v Becerra (2008) 165 CA4th 1064, 1070, 81 CR3d 348.

The traditional "reasonably probable" test applies to evaluate prejudice in determining if "a miscarriage of justice" occurred that warrants a dismissal of the indictment. Under this test, the court must consider the relative strengths and weaknesses of evidence supporting the probable cause finding, along with the undisclosed exculpatory evidence, to determine whether the record reflects a probability that an informed grand jury would not have found probable cause to indict. Berardi v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th 476, 492, 57 CR3d 170. On appeal, the "de novo" standard applies to review of the trial court's decision as to the validity of the indictment. Berardi v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th 476, 495, 57 CR3d 170.

Certain questions that may arise under Pen C §939.71 have not been definitively answered:

- What is exculpatory evidence? (Presumably, it will be as defined in Johnson v Superior Court, supra; see Pen C §939.71(b).)
- What duty, if any, does a prosecutor have to make inquiry to find the existence of exculpatory evidence? (See discussion in §2.43.)
- How does one determine the nexus of the evidence to a portion of the indictment?

Ø Note: When the grand jury is impaneled, the judge advises the panel that if it learns about the existence of any exculpatory evidence, it may order the prosecutor to subpoena witnesses and records that may negate the criminal allegations. Pen C §939.7. See Cummiskey v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 1018, 13 CR2d 551.

For an example of a request for the grand jury to consider exculpatory evidence, see California Criminal Law Forms Manual §9.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§9.20 J. Deliberations of Grand Jury

Once evidence of criminal acts has been presented to the grand jury, the prosecutor, the court reporter, and anyone else present who is not on the grand jury, must leave the grand jury room to allow the grand jury members to deliberate. Pen C §939. During deliberations, the grand jury may ask the reporter to reread testimony (see Pen C §938), or may ask the prosecutor or the presiding judge of the superior court for legal clarification (Pen C §934), but all actual deliberations must be done in privacy (Pen C §§934, 939).

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.21 K. Finding and Presenting Indictment

A grand jury may return an indictment on probable cause, i.e., when the evidence presented, if unexplained or uncontradicted, would lead a person of ordinary caution or prudence to believe and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion of the guilt of the accused. The standard of indictment set out in Pen C §939.8 (whether the evidence would warrant conviction by a trial jury) is no longer a correct statement of the law. Cummiskey v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 1018, 13 CR2d 551.

An indictment is approved on the affirmative vote of 12 or more jurors in a county with a 19-member grand jury, 14 or more in a county with a 23-member grand jury (i.e., Los Angeles), and at least 8 in a county with an 11-member grand jury. See Pen C §940. Those voting must have heard all the evidence that was presented. People v Fujita (1974) 43 CA3d 454, 117 CR 757. Once an indictment has been found by the grand jury, the foreperson informs the prosecutor, and the indictment is presented to the superior court. The grand jury assembles in the courtroom, roll is taken, and the judge then asks the foreperson whether the grand jury has any business to bring before the court. The court is then advised by the foreperson that the grand jury has an indictment to deliver to the court. The court inquires whether the required number of jurors voted for the indictment. If so, the indictment must be endorsed as "A true bill," and the endorsement is signed by the foreperson of the grand jury. The court then orders the clerk to file it. See Pen C §944. The suggested form for an indictment is set out in Pen C §951.

Ø Practice tip: An indictment may supersede a pending complaint or information and may charge an offense that has been previously dismissed. Sherwood v Superior Court (1979) 24 C3d 183, 154 CR 917; Pen C §1387.

§9.22 L. Bench Warrant, Commitment, Bail, and Release on Own Recognizance on Indictment

After an indictment has been presented, the court will ascertain whether the defendant is in custody. If not, the court will order that a bench warrant be issued. Pen C §§945, 979-984. If the defendant is in custody, the court will order the defendant brought before the court to be arraigned. Pen C §978. The court sets a bail amount, or notes that there is "no bail" on the warrant. See Pen C §815a. The grand jury itself is prohibited from recommending any bail amount. See Pen C §944. Any bail amount set at the time an indictment is returned is subject to review at the defendant's request. See Pen C §§1273-1275, 1289. The warrant is processed like any other bench warrant. See §§4.21-4.26 on bench warrants. Once arrested, the defendant is brought before the court for arraignment on the indictment. See Pen C §§889, 949. The defendant must be booked before being released on bail. Pen C §1284.

When the prosecutor contacts defense counsel before a bench warrant issues or is served, counsel may agree on own recognizance release, or on a particular bail amount. However, either a bench warrant or commitment must be issued. Pen C §168. See discussion in §9.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.23 M. Admissibility of Evidence

With one exception, the rules of evidence applicable to criminal trials, including the hearsay rule, also apply in grand jury proceedings. Pen C §939.6(b). Although inadmissible at trial, a law enforcement officer's sworn testimony as to the out-of-court statements of third parties is admissible before the grand jury. Pen C §939.6(c). The officer must have at least 5 years' experience or have completed a certified training course in investigating and reporting cases and testifying at preliminary hearings. Pen C §939.6(c).

Otherwise, a grand jury may not receive evidence that would be inadmissible over objection at trial. The prosecutor must lay a proper foundation for the admission of documentary evidence and must meet all other requirements for introducing evidence. An indictment based on insufficient admissible evidence may be challenged by a Pen C §995 motion to dismiss. See People v Backus (1979) 23 C3d 360, 393, 152 CR 710 (indictment based on incompetent or irrelevant evidence may violate due process); Cook v Superior Court (1970) 4 CA3d 822, 84 CR 664 (count supported only by hearsay dismissed). See also Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 194, 124 S Ct 1354 (testimonial hearsay inadmissible unless declarant unavailable and defendant had opportunity to cross-examine); Cummiskey v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 1018, 1022 n1, 13 CR2d 551; People v Superior Court (Mouchaourab) (2000) 78 CA4th 403, 92 CR2d 829.

Further, because a defendant has no opportunity to object to hearsay presented to a grand jury, it may be objected to for the first time in a Pen C §995 motion. Dong Haw v Superior Court (1947) 81 CA2d 153, 183 P2d 724.

Even if the grand jury heard evidence that would be inadmissible at trial, the indictment is not void if sufficient competent evidence to support the indictment was also presented to the grand jury. Pen C §939.6(b). See also People v Olf (1961) 195 CA2d 97, 15 CR 390.

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/9 GRAND JURY/§9.24 N. Secret Indictment; Disclosure of Indictment and Testimony

§9.24 N. Secret Indictment; Disclosure of Indictment and Testimony

Disclosure of indictment. Members of the grand jury are prohibited from disclosing the fact of an indictment until the defendant has been arrested. Pen C §924. However, the prosecutor may disclose the existence of an indictment or a warrant to secure voluntary compliance or to assist in apprehending the defendant. Pen C §168(b)(1)-(2).

> Ø Practice tip: Whenever practicable, defense counsel should attempt to work out an arrangement with the prosecutor that permits the indicted defendant to voluntarily appear before the court and surrender for booking under Pen C §1284, as well as an advance agreement concerning bail or O.R. release, to minimize trauma to the client. Often, the prosecution and investigating officers will agree to a voluntary surrender, if only because it saves them time and extra work and allows orderly scheduling.

Disclosure of testimony by custodial officers. If a prisoner-witness is accompanied by a custodial officer before the grand jury, as is permitted by Pen C §939, no statute prohibits the officer from disclosing the testimony he or she hears, unless he or she is considered an officer of the court. The legislature covered disclosure only by grand jurors, reporters, court officers, and interpreters for a grand juror. Pen C §§911, 924.1-924.2, 939.11. The prosecution may want to ask the superior court to order the custodial officer to keep secret what he or she has heard, in concert with Pen C §939 and the general principle that grand jury proceedings are secret. See Goldstein v Superior Court (2008) 45 C4th 218, 85 CR3d 213; McClatchy Newspapers v Superior Court (1988) 44 C3d 1162, 1180, 245 CR 774; Farnow v Superior Court (1990) 226 CA3d 481, 276 CR 275.

Disclosure by grand juror. Grand jurors are generally prohibited from revealing information obtained in grand jury proceedings. Pen C §§924.1-924.6.

Disclosure of testimony by witness who appeared before grand jury. It is a common practice in California for the grand jury foreperson to admonish witnesses not to reveal questions, answers, or information the witness has learned about the nature or subject of the investigation without a court order. See, e.g., San Jose Mercury News, Inc. v Criminal Grand Jury (2004) 122 CA4th 410, 413, 18 CR3d 645. This admonition does not deny the defendant due process. People v Mersino (1965) 237 CA2d 265, 269, 46 CR 821. See also 66 Ops Cal Atty Gen 85 (1983) (grand jury has authority to admonish witnesses not to reveal questions asked and responses given before grand jury). Note, however, that "a prospective witness and a posttestifying witness under existing law are absolutely free to discuss what they knew preexisting to the hearing before the grand jury." San Jose Mercury News, Inc. v Criminal Grand Jury (2004) 122 CA4th 410, 416, 18 CR3d 645.

This admonition is a prior restraint on speech, and, if challenged by the witness, can be upheld only on a showing that "(1) the activity restrained poses either a clear and present danger or a serious and imminent threat to a protected competing interest… ; (2) the order is narrowly drawn… ; and (3) less restrictive alternatives are not available." Levine v U.S. Dist. Court (9th Cir 1985) 764 F2d 590, 595 (citations omitted). See also San Jose Mercury News, Inc. v Criminal Grand Jury, supra. The U.S. Supreme Court invalidated a Florida statute prohibiting grand jury witnesses from ever disclosing their own testimony. Butterworth v Smith (1990) 494 US 624, 108 L Ed 2d 572, 110 S Ct 1376.

Witnesses may want to disclose their testimony to, e.g., their own counsel, to counsel for others, or to journalists. Witnesses may want to preserve their recollection of their own testimony before the grand jury by writing it down after leaving the grand jury room to allow accurate repetition at trial. Whether witnesses can openly record their own testimony while in the jury room has not been litigated. See Pen C §891, which does not specifically answer this question.

Defense counsel who learns from a witness details of the testimony must consider whether use of the information is barred by any secrecy obligation imposed on the witness. Defense counsel may challenge prohibitions against witness disclosure in three ways:

- If the court's practice is to charge the grand jury to instruct the witnesses to keep their testimony secret, counsel can ask the court to delete that instruction. See San Jose Mercury News, Inc. v Criminal Grand Jury (2004) 122 CA4th 410, 415, 18 CR3d 645 (prior restraint on speech subject to strict scrutiny).

- The witness may reject the secrecy instruction when first appearing before the grand jury by raising the issue and its effective interference with the witness's right to representation by counsel and other applicable rights, e.g., First Amendment rights. Defense counsel should prepare a script for the witness that says that the witness will testify truthfully, but will not keep secret what he or she says. If raised at the inception, the issue can be whether the witness must testify at all, and can force the matter into court on the spot.
- The witness can, after testifying, seek relief from the court from the instruction. Of course, if the witness violates the instruction, and contempt proceedings are taken, the order or instruction can be challenged in such proceeding. This practice raises a host of unnecessary problems and is not recommended. In addition, an earlier attack on the instruction as suggested above avoids any prosecution claim of waiver.

§9.25 O. Transcript of Grand Jury Proceedings

The court reporter who records testimony presented to the grand jury must deliver a copy of the transcript of any hearing that resulted in an indictment to the superior court clerk within 10 calendar days after the return of the indictment. That deadline may be extended up to 20 calendar days. Pen C §938.1(a). The transcript is not open to the public until 10 calendar days after it has been given to defense counsel or the defendant. If the transcript is limited to the testimonial portions of the proceedings, the defendant is entitled to discover the nontestimonial portions in connection with a motion to dismiss under Pen C §995. People v Superior Court (Mouchaourab) (2000) 78 CA4th 403, 92 CR2d 829.

Thereafter, on its own motion or at the request of a party, the court may order all or part of the transcript sealed until completion of the defendant's trial. Pen C §938.1(b). Sealing must be based on facts demonstrating a "reasonable likelihood" that making the transcript (or part of it) public may prejudice the defendant's right to a fair and impartial trial. Pen C §938.1(b). In assessing sealing, a court must consider reasonable alternatives, such as change of venue or jury voir dire procedures.

The "reasonable likelihood" standard of Pen C §938.1(b) places a lesser burden on a defendant seeking to seal a grand jury transcript than the "substantial probability" standard that applies to public access cases under the First Amendment. See Press-Enterprise v Superior Court (Press-Enterprise III) (1994) 22 CA4th 498, 503 n2, 27 CR2d 708. The First District has concluded that the First Amendment right of access does not extend to postindictment grand jury transcripts at a §938.1 hearing and that a defendant seeking to seal a grand jury transcript until completion of trial need only establish prejudice under the lesser "reasonable likelihood" standard. Alvarez v Superior Court (2007) 154 CA4th 642, 653, 64 CR3d 854. For further discussion of access to grand jury transcripts, see chap 14.

V. CIVIL GRAND JURY

§9.26 A. Scope of Inquiry

In addition to its criminal function, each regular grand jury has the power to investigate the operation, management, and fiscal affairs of the county and the cities within the county. Pen C §§925-925a. It may also look into all districts, joint power agencies, redevelopment agencies, special purpose assessing or taxing districts, and local agency formation commissions located partially or wholly within its county. Pen C §§925-925a, 933.1, 933.5. This examination may result in recommendations on the abolishment or creation of offices, or a change in the equipment used and the manner in which the duties of these agencies are performed. Pen C §928.

Ø Note: Some counties have established two grand juries, one for civil functions and the other for criminal cases. Pen C §904.6. The second grand jury does not have jurisdiction to carry out civil functions. 76 Ops Cal Atty Gen 181 (1993).

Persons called before the civil grand jury enjoy the same privileges, when applicable, as persons summoned to a criminal grand jury. On the privilege against self-incrimination, see §9.17. There are immense practical problems for a public official who asserts privileges not to testify, but the privileges exist.

B. Accusations Against Local Officers

§9.27 1. Authority; Grounds

The grand jury has the authority to file an accusation against any locally elected or appointed public officer, charging that person with willful or corrupt misconduct in office. See Govt C §3060. The accusation must state the offense charged in ordinary and concise language (Govt C §3061), and must charge specific instances of misconduct. See People v Harby (1942) 51 CA2d 759, 125 P2d 874. The accusation may charge violation of a specific statutory duty. It may, but need not, cite the violation of a Penal Code section or a criminal ordinance. The accusation is processed as if it were a criminal case, and the allegation must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Govt C §3070. The sole consequence of a determination that an accusation is true is removal of the accused public officer from office.

The grand jury's accusation authority under Govt C §§3060-3074 is available against elected and appointed public officers of a general law county or city but may not be used against an employee of a charter city or county. Civil service removal procedures are the only way to remove employees of those jurisdictions from office. See People v Hulburt (1977) 75 CA3d 404, 142 CR 190 (removal from office of employee of charter county); People v Bailey (1916) 30 CA 581, 158 P 1036 (removal from office of employee of charter city).

§9.28 2. Service of Accusation on Defendant

The grand jury procedures for deliberating on an accusation against a public officer are similar to those followed when the prosecutor asks for an indictment. Testimony is taken in secret, evidence is produced by the prosecutor, and the grand jury deliberates alone. See Pen C §939. The number of grand jurors who must concur in the indictment for it to be found and endorsed "a true bill" depends on the required number of members of the grand jury (Pen C §940):

- Twelve grand jurors are required to concur in counties in which the required number of grand jurors is 19.
- Fourteen grand jurors are required to concur in counties in which the required number of members of the grand jury is 23 (i.e., Los Angeles).
- Eight grand jurors are required to concur in a county in which the required number of grand jurors is 11 (counties with a population of 20,000 or less).

After the grand jury returns an accusation, the foreperson delivers it to the prosecutor (unless the prosecutor is the public officer being accused). Govt C §3062. The prosecutor serves the defendant with a copy of the accusation and a written notice asking the defendant to appear in the superior court of the county, at a time stated in the notice, to answer the accusation. Govt C §3063. The original accusation is then filed with the court clerk. Govt C §3063. If an accusation has been returned against the county prosecutor, it is served on the prosecutor by someone who has been appointed to do so by a superior court judge. Govt C §3073.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.29 3. Accusation; Trial Court Procedure

The defendant must appear in court at the time stated in the notice to answer the accusation. If the defendant fails to appear, the court may proceed to hear the evidence against the defendant in his or her absence. Govt C §3064. When the defendant does appear, he or she may (Govt C §§3065, 3069):

- Object to the legal sufficiency of the accusation;
- Deny the truth of the accusation; or
- Plead guilty to the accusation.

If the defendant denies the accusation, he or she has the right to a jury trial following the rules of evidence and procedure used in the trial of a felony criminal case. Govt C §3070. This means that the prosecutor must prove the case against the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, and the defendant cannot be called to the stand by the prosecutor and made to testify against himself or herself.

If the defendant admits the accusation, the court must pronounce judgment that the defendant shall be removed from office. Govt C §§3069, 3072.

If the accusation is against the county prosecutor, the case is prosecuted by a special prosecutor appointed by the judge, by the prosecutor of a neighboring county, or by the Attorney General at the request of a superior court judge (Govt C §3073), usually the presiding judge.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.30 C. Final Report

At the end of the fiscal or calendar year, the grand jury writes a report on the county government matters that it investigated, which must contain the grand jury's findings and recommendations. Pen C §933. The grand jury may also make interim reports on matters that it feels are particularly pressing. See Pen C §§925-925a.

The presiding judge must make sure that no part of the report exceeds the jurisdiction of the grand jury. See McClatchy Newspapers v Superior Court (1988) 44 C3d 1162, 245 CR 774 (court upheld superior court's decision to strike certain sections from proposed public report and to seal evidentiary materials that report sought to disclose).

The final report may then be given to county officers. Responses by governing boards and selected county officials must be submitted to the presiding judge. Pen C §933(b).

VI. GRAND JURY'S SUBPOENA POWER

§9.31 A. Subpoena

Whether the grand jury is meeting in its civil capacity to investigate city or county government, in its criminal capacity to hear evidence and/or vote on an indictment, or in its quasi-criminal capacity to hear evidence of an accusation against a public officer, it has the power to ask both the prosecutor and the superior court to subpoena witnesses. Pen C §939.2. This request is generally granted, and a witness, or even a person who may be the subject of an investigation, can be subpoenaed to come before the grand jury. The questioning of these witnesses is usually done by the prosecutor, and is transcribed by a court reporter. A motion made in the superior court to modify or quash a subpoena may be made in advance of compliance.

The reach of a grand jury subpoena authorized by §939.2 is statewide. Attendance of out-of-state witnesses is specifically subject to Pen C §§1334-1334.6 (Uniform Act to Secure the Attendance of Witnesses From Without the State in Criminal Cases) discussed in §4.29.

A subpoena is not necessary for a prisoner-witness who is incarcerated in state prison. Penal Code §2621 provides for issuance of an order by the superior court to produce the prisoner, with differing requirements, depending on the prisoner's geographical location.

A subpoena is not used to obtain a federal prisoner's appearance before the grand jury. A state writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum is the proper vehicle. Compliance by the federal government is discretionary, but the writs are usually honored. Curran v U.S. (D Del 1971) 332 F Supp 259.

A subpoena to federal employees or agencies presents procedural and jurisdictional problems. Procedures for Department of Justice employees are in 28 CFR pt 16. Departments and agencies have varying systems, some of which are hospitable to receipt of state process. See 5 USC §301; 44 USC §3101. If federal officers refuse to comply based on lawfully promulgated federal regulations, it is doubtful that the subpoena can be enforced. U.S. ex rel Touhy v Ragen (1951) 340 US 462, 95 L Ed 417, 71 S Ct 416; Swett v Schenk (9th Cir 1986) 792 F2d 1447, 1451.

Obtaining witnesses from out of the country requires seeking federal court assistance and presents difficult (and unadjudicated) questions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.32 B. Subpoena Duces Tecum

A subpoena duces tecum may be attacked in advance of compliance by a motion to quash in the superior court. Because of the secret nature of grand jury proceedings, any hearing on a motion to quash the subpoena may be closed, and documents filed in connection with the motion may be sealed, to the extent necessary to prevent disclosure of matters occurring before the grand jury. Los Angeles Times v Superior Court (2003) 114 CA4th 247, 251, 7 CR3d 524.

A criminal grand jury subpoena is not defective even when it is served without the good cause affidavit required by CCP §§1985 and 1987.5. Michael B. v Superior Court (2002) 103 CA4th 1384, 127 CR2d 454.

A person whose records are seized under a grand jury subpoena duces tecum can bring a Pen C §1538.5 motion to challenge the admissibility of the evidence obtained. People v Blair (1979) 25 C3d 640, 159 CR 818. See chap 16 on search and seizure motions.

When a grand jury subpoena duces tecum is to be used to obtain financial records from a financial institution, the prosecutor must comply with Govt C §7476(b)(1).

Although the grand jury's subpoena power is great, it is not unlimited. In People v Superior Court (2003) 107 CA4th 488, 492, 132 CR2d 144, a civil grand jury requested access to juvenile dependency records but refused to explain why it needed them, citing provisions that prohibit grand jurors from disclosing information about their investigations. The court denied the request, holding that the public's interest in access to the records did not outweigh their confidentiality. People v Superior Court, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.33 VII. SUING GRAND JURY MEMBERS

The accusatory language and factual allegations set out in a formal accusation naming specific individuals are privileged. Grand jurors cannot be held personally liable for voting to return an accusation against an individual. Gillett-Harris-Duranceau & Assocs. v Kemple (1978) 83 CA3d 214, 220, 147 CR 616. But defamatory language in a grand jury report concerning unindicted persons, issued by the grand jury while engaged in its "watchdog" function, is not privileged. 83 CA3d at 221; Pen C §930. See Brooks v Binderup (1995) 39 CA4th 1287, 46 CR2d 501 (cause of action allowed against individual members of grand jury).

§10.1 I. CLIENT INTERVIEW FORM

Before conducting the initial interview, the authors recommend that, when practicable, the attorney give or send the prospective client a questionnaire. A suggested form follows. Some attorneys prefer to fill out the form themselves, using it to organize their interview with the client. In the authors' experience, however, allowing the client time to complete the form before the interview usually results in more complete and accurate responses.

To protect the attorney-client privilege, the attorney or the attorney's secretary should caution the client not to share the form with anyone else or to bring any other person to the interview unless an interpreter is required. Additional new-client information is in §§1.8 (first interview), 1.9 (jail kit), 3.13 (interviewing the client), 3.14-3.19 (fees and retainer agreements), 3.20-3.22 (accepting employment), 2.8 (prescreening for conflicts of interest), and 32.12 (checklist of possible defenses).

§10.2 II. HOW INTERVIEW QUESTIONS RELATE TO COUNSEL'S CASE AND TO BOOK

Use the questions below to spot issues in the case.

1. Does the defendant have a codefendant (someone also charged with committing the same crime as the defendant)?

If so, obtain as much information as you can about the codefendant.

Consider making a severance motion (see chap 7).

Determine if the codefendant has made any statements. If so,

Obtain a copy (see chap 11).

Consider a severance motion based on Aranda-Bruton (see §§7.40-7.41).

If involuntary, make a motion to exclude (see §§23.47-23.48).

Consider whether it would be favorable to the defendant to testify against the codefendant in exchange for a dismissal, or some sort of favorable plea bargain (see §§26.36-26.50 (plea bargaining) and chap 49 (immunity).

If there is unfavorable publicity concerning the codefendant, consider a change of venue motion (see chap 15), or a severance motion (see §§7.27-7.42).

Be aware that the codefendant may testify against the defendant.

Be aware that the codefendant may tell authorities what the defendant tells him or her; warn the defendant not to talk to the codefendant about the case.

2. Was the defendant arrested on the same day the crime was committed, or later?

Obtain all details about the date the crime occurred, the date of arrest, when the complaint or indictment was issued, and where the defendant was during that time period. Was the defendant at the same address? At the same job? In jail? Did law enforcement personnel attempt to arrest the defendant?

If there was sufficient delay between the time of the crime and the time of arrest, or between the time of the crime and issuance of a charging document, consider making a speedy trial or due process motion (see chap 19).

Consider making a motion to dismiss based on running of the statute of limitations (see §§19.13-19.16).

3. Did the defendant make a statement to the police?

Was the statement oral or written, taped, or videotaped? If so, obtain a copy.

Consider making a motion to exclude the statement if a Miranda violation occurred (see §§23.34-23.46).

Consider making a motion to exclude the statement if it was involuntary (see §§23.47-23.48).

Consider making a Pen C §1538.5 motion if the statement was the result of an illegal search and seizure (see §§23.7-23.8).

Can the prosecution prove corpus delicti? If not, there may not be enough evidence for conviction (see §§23.22-23.23).

4. Was a search involved?

Was a warrant served? (Obtain a copy.)

Was anything seized?

Was the search conducted by police or another law enforcement agency?

Does the defendant have an interest in the place searched or the thing seized that will entitle him or her to contest the official conduct?

Consider making a Pen C §1538.5 motion if the search, seizure, or detention was unreasonable (see chap 16).

5. Did the police take any bodily fluids from the defendant?

Did the police take defendant's bodily fluids, e.g., blood, breath, urine, or semen? If so, obtain a copy of the report.

Consider having a sample of the fluids retested (see §55.21).

Consider making a motion to suppress the results if the fluids were illegally obtained (see §§55.25-55.30), if they were destroyed before the defense could retest them (see §11.6), or if the specific forensic test performed on them was not reliable enough to be accepted by the scientific community (see §§31.12-31.14).

6. Was an informant involved?

If so, request discovery of the informant's identity. If the prosecution refuses the request, consider a motion to discover the informant's identity (see chap 17). If the undisclosed informant provided probable cause for a search warrant, consider making a Luttenberger discovery motion to ascertain whether there are grounds to traverse the search warrant (i.e., inquire whether any information in the search warrant affidavit is false) (see §16.19).

Move to dismiss if the prosecution did not take reasonable steps to keep in touch with a material informant and the defense is now unable to find the informant (see §17.18).

7. Did the police do anything that the defendant thinks was wrong?

Consider a motion to dismiss if there was discriminatory enforcement of the law (see §§18.21-18.25). A discovery motion to find out information to support the motion to dismiss should be made (see §§18.18-18.20).

Consider a motion to dismiss if there was retaliatory prosecution (see §§18.32-18.37).

Consider a motion to dismiss if law enforcement conduct interfered with the defendant's right to counsel (see §3.29).

Consider a motion to dismiss if the defendant was entrapped (see CALCRIM 3408-3409).

Consider a motion to dismiss if the prosecution, in bad faith, destroyed or did not preserve material evidence (see §§11.27-11.28).

Consider a motion to discover information from a law enforcement or custodial officer's personnel file on alleged use of excessive force, ethnic or racial bias, or falsifying information when those issues are relevant to the case (see §§11.19-11.24).

8. What is the defense?

Find out details concerning the defense. Get names, addresses, and phone numbers of witnesses or of people who will be able to help you find them.

Have the defendant sign release forms if necessary (see sample forms in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§1.29-1.30 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

If the defendant has an alibi, get the names, addresses, and phone numbers of witnesses. Have an investigator contact them immediately.

If defendant claims self-defense, defense of others, or defense of property, and was injured, take photos of him or her right away.

Find out whether the prosecution witnesses are credible. Consider discovery about their criminal history, and having an investigator find out more about them.

If the defendant claims that a third person committed the crime, find out as many details as possible, and have an investigator begin verifying the defendant's claims right away.

9. Does the defendant need any examinations?

Does the defendant need a mental or physical examination? Is a specialist, e.g., a neurologist, required? Arrange for appropriate tests (see §3.6 on court payment for ancillary services for an indigent client).

10. Where did the crime occur?

Is the case in the proper jurisdiction and proper venue (see §15.13)?

11. Is the defendant on probation or parole?

If the defendant is on probation or parole, he or she may be in violation (see chaps 46-47); if the defendant is on parole, a no-bail hold will probably be placed on him or her (see §46.7).

Consider the ramifications of the pending criminal case on any probation or parole conditions (see chaps 46-47).

If a plea bargain will be arranged, consider including the probation or parole violation in those negotiations (see chaps 46-47).

12. Does the defendant have any prior convictions?

Priors can add a great deal of time to a defendant's sentence. Send for copies of the priors immediately. You may also have to arrange to obtain a copy of the transcript of the defendant's plea (see §24.32).

Consider challenging the truth or validity of a prior (see §24.29).

Consider challenging a prior as unconstitutional (see §§24.30-24.39) or because the defendant was not advised of or did not waive required direct consequences of the conviction (see §§26.10-26.17).

Consider the defendant's sentencing exposure for purposes of plea bargaining (see chaps 36-37).

13. Does the defendant have any pending cases?

If the defendant has pending criminal cases, is he or she represented on them? If so, that attorney should be contacted. You should work with that attorney so that all are kept informed about all cases.

Do not make a plea bargain for the defendant that does not include all of his or her pending cases, unless that is impossible.

14. Is the defendant already represented by another lawyer on this case?

Find out if the defendant wants to continue to be represented by that lawyer. If so, stop the interview (see §2.35). If not, have the defendant sign a substitution of attorney form (a sample form is in Crim Law Forms Man §3.3). After the interview, contact the other lawyer and obtain the client's file (see §2.20).

15. Was a lineup held?

Find out all details about the lineup, such as when and where it was held, whether a lawyer counseled the defendant at the lineup, and how the lineup was conducted.

Consider challenging the lineup either at the preliminary hearing or at trial (see §§22.21-22.31).

Consider holding your own lineup (see §22.17).

16. Is the defendant in custody?

Find out if the defendant will be able to make bail. Private counsel should obtain details necessary to help the defendant make bail. Counsel may want to call a duty judge to see if he or she will lower bail (see the list of phone numbers in §5.2).

Counsel may want to arrange for the local own recognizance (O.R.) project to interview the defendant in time to make a presentation to the court (see §5.11).

17. Does the defendant have a professional license?

Find out the defendant's profession, and, if he or she has a professional license, determine what effect the criminal case may have on that license (see chap 53).

18. Is the defendant a U.S. citizen?

If the defendant is not a U.S. citizen, the criminal case may have immigration consequences (see chap 52).

§11.1 I. OVERVIEW

Discovery is a crucial part of counsel's preparation of a case. In criminal cases, discovery is available based only on the reciprocal discovery scheme detailed in Pen C §§1054-1054.10, other express statutory provisions, or as mandated by the U.S. Constitution. Pen C §1054(e). See Verdin v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 1096, 1116, 77 CR3d 287.

§11.2 II. CHECKLIST: SPECIAL DEFENSE AND PROSECUTION DISCOVERY MOTIONS AND PROCEDURES AVAILABLE UNDER "OTHER" STATUTES AND THE CONSTITUTION

This section lists discovery motions and procedures available through statutes (other than Pen C §§1054-1054.10) or the U.S. Constitution.

Statute-based discovery

- Motion to discover a law enforcement or custodial officer's personnel file (Pitchess motion). Evid C §§1043-1047; Pen C §§832.7-832.8; see §§11.19-11.24. A sample Pitchess motion is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §11.12 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).
- Motion to disclose official information and/or the identity of a confidential informant. Evid C §§1040-1042, 915; see chap 17. A sample motion to disclose the identity and location of the informant, or to dismiss, is in Crim Law Forms Man §17.1.
- Motion to disclose required information concerning in-custody informants. See §51.13.
- Subpoena duces tecum for information possessed by third parties. See §§4.39, 11.25. A sample Judicial Council form subpoena duces tecum is in Crim Law Forms Man §4.1.
- California Public Records Act requests. Govt C §§6250-6265. See chap 12.
- Conditional examinations or motions to preserve witness's testimony through a deposition. See Pen C §§1335-1345, 1346-1347.5, 1349-1362, 2622. For discussion, see §§11.25A, 31.20. See also sample motion for conditional examination in Crim Law Forms Man §11.17.

Constitutionally mandated discovery

- Motion to discover evidence favorable to the accused (Brady discovery). See §11.26. The sample defense motions in Crim Law Forms Man §§11.1-11.3 include requests for Brady discovery.
- Motion to produce reports of other investigations to establish evidence that a third person was implicated in the offense(s) with which defendant is charged. See People v Hall (1986) 41 C3d 826, 226 CR 112; People v Littleton (1992) 7 CA4th 906, 9 CR2d 288; City of Alhambra v Superior Court (1988) 205 CA3d 1118, 252 CR 789.
- Motion to obtain real evidence from prosecution for testing or retesting. See Walters v Superior Court (2000) 80 CA4th 1074, 95 CR2d 880; Prince v Superior Court (1992) 8 CA4th 1176, 10 CR2d 855. See the sample defense motion for transfer of evidence for retesting in Crim Law Forms Man §11.10.
- Hammon-Reber motions to discover the psychiatric records of a witness. People v Hammon (1997) 15 C4th 1117, 65 CR2d 1; People v Reber (1986) 177 CA3d 523, 223 CR 139. See §11.29.
- Motion for sanctions based on failure to preserve, or destruction of, material evidence (Trombetta-Youngblood motions). See §§11.27-11.28. See sample Trombetta-Youngblood motion in Crim Law Forms Man §11.11.
- Motion to discover records revealing discriminatory law enforcement (Murgia motions). See §§18.16-18.20. See sample Murgia discovery motion in Crim Law Forms Man §18.13.
- Motion for defense lineup (Evans motion). See §22.17 and sample Evans motion in Crim Law Forms Man §22.3.

For a number of sample discovery motions, see California Criminal Law Forms Manual, chap 11 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

III. CALIFORNIA'S STATUTORY DISCOVERY SCHEME: PEN C §§1054-1054.10

§11.3 A. Discovery in General

Application of discovery statute. Under the reciprocal discovery provisions of Cal Const art I, §30, and Pen C §§1054-1054.10, both the prosecution and the defense are entitled to discovery. See Izazaga v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 356, 285 CR 231 (reciprocal discovery is constitutional). Sections 1054-1054.10 apply to both misdemeanor and felony cases. Hobbs v Municipal Court (1991) 233 CA3d 670, 284 CR 655, disapproved on other grounds in People v Tillis (1998) 18 C4th 284, 295, 75 CR2d 447.

Purpose of discovery. The discovery scheme codified in Pen C §§1054-1054.10 is intended to promote the ascertainment of truth; to save court time; to protect victims and witnesses from danger, harassment, and undue delay (see Pen C §1054); and to prevent trial by ambush. In re Littlefield (1993) 5 C4th 122, 131, 19 CR2d 248. These objectives are consistent with the true purpose of a criminal trial: ascertainment of the facts. See In re Littlefield, supra.

Informal discovery. Although Pen C §§1054-1054.10 set out a list of requests and procedural steps counsel may take, discovery is generally conducted informally between the parties by unwritten request. Most courts, at least in populous counties, have a standing discovery order requiring the parties to turn over standard items (e.g., police reports, names and addresses of anticipated witnesses, expert's reports, rap sheets) on request of the other party. Filing a formal discovery motion is usually necessary only when counsel seeks something not on the standing disclosure list, e.g., a Pitchess motion for law enforcement personnel files. If a dispute arises over whether disclosure of a particular item is required by the standing order, it is usually resolved by the judge at a pretrial conference. Often there is a discovery compliance date, and the parties meet on that date to report how discovery is proceeding. If there are problems, the court may schedule further appearances to make sure they get resolved.

Once counsel receives the items required to be disclosed by the standing order, that disclosure may suggest the need for a formal discovery motion to request additional material.

An informal discovery request is required before formal court enforcement of discovery can be requested. See Pen C §1054(b). Informal discovery requests and responses should be backed up by adequate record keeping to avoid subsequent confusion about what was requested and produced, to provide a basis for sanctions if necessary, and to protect defense counsel from claims of ineffective assistance of counsel. See People v Wright (1990) 52 C3d 367, 413, 276 CR 731.

Proceedings in which reciprocal discovery provisions do not apply. Reciprocal discovery is not available in probation revocation hearings, because a revocation proceeding is not a criminal trial within the meaning of Pen C §1054.3. Jones v Superior Court (2004) 115 CA4th 48, 8 CR3d 687 (probationer had no obligation to provide discovery to prosecution in revocation proceeding). This does not mean, however, that the defense has no right to discovery of the prosecution's evidence in a probation revocation proceeding. In County of Placer v Superior Court (Stoner) (2005) 130 CA4th 807, 30 CR3d 617, the court of appeal held that the attorney representing the probationer in probation revocation proceedings may issue a subpoena duces tecum to obtain the probationer's probation file, and the trial court has authority under Pen C §1203.10 to permit the probationer to inspect his or her files.

Nor do the reciprocal discovery provisions apply in juvenile delinquency proceedings; the juvenile court does, however, have discretion to order reciprocal discovery. In re Thomas F. (2003) 113 CA4th 1249, 7 CR3d 19; Clinton K. v Superior Court (1995) 37 CA4th 1244, 44 CR2d 140; Robert S. v Superior Court (1992) 9 CA4th 1417, 1422, 12 CR2d 489. Reciprocal discovery is required in juvenile proceedings only if the juvenile court expressly and specifically makes a discovery order. In re Thomas F. (2003) 113 CA4th 1249, 7 CR3d 19.

B. Discovery by Defense

§11.4 1. Summary of Discovery to Be Provided to Defense

If it is in the possession of the prosecuting attorney or if the prosecuting attorney knows it to be in the possession of the investigating agencies, the prosecution is required to disclose to the defense (Pen C §1054.1):

> (a) The names and addresses of persons the prosecutor intends to call as witnesses at trial.
> (b) Statements of all defendants.
> (c) All relevant real evidence seized or obtained as a part of the investigation of the offenses charged.
> (d) The existence of a felony conviction of any material witness whose credibility is likely to be critical to the outcome of the trial.
> (e) Any exculpatory evidence.
> (f) Relevant written or recorded statements of witnesses or reports of the statements of witnesses whom the prosecutor intends to call at the trial, including any reports or statements of experts made in conjunction with the case, including the results of physical or mental examinations, scientific tests, experiments, or comparisons which the prosecutor intends to offer in evidence at the trial. [Emphasis added.]

The prosecution must also disclose this information when it is reasonably accessible to the prosecution. See In re Littlefield (1993) 5 C4th 122, 19 CR2d 248; People v Little (1997) 59 CA4th 426, 68 CR2d 907; see also §11.5. The prosecutor should find out at an early stage in the proceedings what information is in the possession of the investigating agency involved in the case; in any event, the prosecutor is presumed to have knowledge of all information gathered by the investigating agency. In re Brown (1998) 17 C4th 873, 879, 72 CR2d 698. The prosecutor needs this information to prepare effectively for trial and to comply with Pen C §1054.1 and any other relevant statutory or constitutional discovery requirements, particularly the obligation to give the defense exculpatory evidence. See Kyles v Whitley (1995) 514 US 419, 421, 131 L Ed 2d 490, 499, 115 S Ct 1555 (prosecutor has responsibility of gauging "likely net effect" of evidence and must make disclosure when there is "reasonable probability" that outcome will be changed by disclosure); In re Brown (1998) 17 C4th 873, 72 CR2d 698 (prosecutor's duty to inquire about lab results); People v Little, supra (prosecutor's duty to inquire about rap sheet information).

> Ø Note: The Third Appellate District has ruled that statements made during interviews of potential witnesses must be disclosed, even if those interviews were never put in writing. Roland v Superior Court (2004) 124 CA4th 154, 21 CR3d 151. However, the California Supreme Court has said that it did not suggest that a party has a duty to obtain a written statement from a witness just to have something to hand over in discovery. See In re Littlefield (1993) 5 C4th 122, 136, 19 CR2d 248.

For related discussions, see §§11.14 (work product; privileges as they relate to discovery), 8.10, 8.32 (discovery before preliminary hearing), and 49.20-49.21 (discovery concerning immunity).

§11.5 2. Identity, Whereabouts, and Statements of Witnesses, Including Experts

Definition of "intends to call." The prosecution must reveal information about witnesses it "intends to call." Pen C §1054.1(a), (f). This means all witnesses a prosecutor reasonably anticipates calling at trial. Izazaga v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 356, 376 n11, 285 CR 231. For further discussion, see §11.10. The sooner this determination is made, the sooner prosecution obligations to disclose under Izazaga and Pen C §1054.1 are triggered. For discussion of constitutionally mandated witness discovery, see §11.8. For discussion of motions for disclosure of an informant's identity, see chap 17.

Ø Note: Prosecutors are officers of the court, and "good faith" should be exercised and gamesmanship avoided. See People v Tillis (1998) 18 C4th 284, 293, 75 CR2d 447.

Disclosure of whereabouts. Disclosure of witness identity without also disclosing whereabouts is not fair to the opposing party. The addresses of these witnesses must also be provided to the extent they are known or reasonably accessible to the prosecution. See In re Littlefield (1993) 5 C4th 122, 19 CR2d 248 (both prosecution and defense must disclose addresses if information is reasonably accessible). Information in the possession of law enforcement agencies that investigated or prepared the case against the defendant is reasonably accessible to the prosecution. 5 C4th at 135; Teal v Superior Court (2004) 117 CA4th 488, 491, 11 CR3d 784. However, the statutory discovery scheme does not apply to information possessed by third parties or agencies that have no connection to the investigation or prosecution of the criminal charge. Teal v Superior Court, supra; People v Superior Court (Barrett) (2000) 80 CA4th 1305, 1313, 96 CR2d 264.

Limits on disclosure of whereabouts. Although the prosecution is required to give defense counsel whereabouts information (see In re Littlefield (1993) 5 C4th 122, 19 CR2d 248), counsel may not disclose or permit disclosure of the address or telephone number of a victim or witness whose name was disclosed to counsel under Pen C §1054.1 to the defendant or anyone else, unless specifically permitted to do so by the court after a hearing and a showing of good cause (Pen C §1054.2(a)(1)). An attorney may, however, disclose or permit disclosure of such information to those employed or appointed to assist in the investigation of the case when disclosure is required for preparation of the case. The attorney must tell those to whom the information is given that any further dissemination of information about the victim or witnesses is prohibited without the court's permission. Pen C §1054.2(a)(2). Willful violation of these proscriptions is a misdemeanor. Pen C §1054.2(a)(3).

Ø Note: With a pro per defendant, the trial court must try to protect the address and telephone number of a victim or witness by providing for contact only through a court-appointed licensed private investigator, or by imposing other reasonable restrictions absent a showing of good cause. Pen C §1054.2(b).

To protect a witness when there is a specific showing of danger to the witness, the court may deny the defense pretrial discovery of the identities, addresses, and telephone numbers of witnesses, on the grounds in Pen C §§1054(d), 1054.2, and 1054.7. See Alvarado v Superior Court (2000) 23 C4th 1121, 1134, 99 CR2d 149 (witnesses to Mexican Mafia "hit" in serious danger). However, a witness may not testify anonymously (23 C4th at 1152), and once identity information is disclosed, a court may not restrict the defense from interviewing the victim or a witness absent a specific factual showing of danger, threats, or the like (Pen C §1054.7; Reid v Superior Court (1997) 55 CA4th 1326, 1335, 64 CR2d 714).

Ø Note: No court has yet considered whether any claim of danger to the witness would have to show danger from defense counsel, not the defendant, since §1054.2(a)(1) bars defense counsel from sharing prosecution witness information with the defendant unless specifically permitted to do so by the court after a hearing and a showing of good cause.

A prosecutor or law enforcement officer may not order a witness to refuse to talk to the defense. People v Pitts (1990) 223 CA3d 606, 872, 273 CR 757; Walker v Superior Court (1957) 155 CA2d 134, 139, 317 P2d 130. Counsel should note, however, that access for an interview does not ensure a conversation, because witnesses cannot be compelled to talk to investigators. Continued pursuit of a witness who refuses to be interviewed may justify restrictive orders by the court. Reid, 55 CA4th at 1337 n4.

Interviewer must identify himself or herself to witness or victim. No attorney or investigator for either side may interview, question, or even speak to a victim or witness disclosed by the opposing party (see Pen C §§1054.1, 1054.3) without first stating whether he or she represents, or has been retained by, the prosecution or defense. The attorney or investigator must clearly identify him- or herself and provide the full name of the agency by whom he or she is employed. Before an interview or questioning in person can occur, the interviewer must display a business card, official badge, or other form of official identification. Pen C §1054.8(a). Failure to meet these requirements may result in discovery sanctions. Pen C §1054.8(b); see Pen C §1054.5 (sanctions).

Disclosure of statements and reports. The prosecution must disclose relevant written or recorded statements of witnesses or reports of the statements of witnesses whom the prosecutor intends to call at trial. Pen C §1054.1(f). A police officer's rough notes (written or recorded) of interviews with these witnesses, as well as with the defendant, must be disclosed if they still exist. Thompson v Superior Court (1997) 53 CA4th 480, 485, 61 CR2d 785. However, if an officer destroys original notes after drafting a police report, the defendant has not been denied due process if (1) the notes were made for the purpose of transferring the data, (2) the officer acted in good faith in destroying the notes, and (3) the officer acted in accordance with normal procedure in destroying the original notes. People v Coles (2005) 134 CA4th 1049, 1053, 36 CR3d 484, quoting Killian v U.S. (1961) 368 US 231, 7 L Ed 2d 256, 82 S Ct 302. To prevail on appeal, the defendant must show not only that one of the above three elements is missing, but also that the notes were exculpatory within the meaning of California v Trombetta (1984) 467 US 479, 489, 81 L Ed 2d 413, 104 S Ct 2528 (evidence possessed exculpatory value apparent before destruction, and defendant was unable to obtain any comparable material by other reasonably available means). Coles, 134 CA4th at 1054.

> Ø Note: Rough notes may be particularly useful to the defense because they are usually made early in the investigation before suspicion has focused on the defendant. In addition, notes made contemporaneously at the time of investigation or interview may be more detailed and may lead to evidence that can be used for impeachment or for further investigation. Failure to disclose these notes under a valid discovery request, failure to preserve the notes, or destruction of the notes may lead to sanctions under Pen C §1054.5(b). Sanctions may also be imposed on a showing of failure to preserve favorable evidence (Trombetta-Youngblood motion). See §§11.27-11.28.

The prosecution's duty to disclose witness statements extends to any reports or statements of experts made in connection with the case, including the results of physical or mental examinations, scientific tests, experiments, or comparisons that the prosecutor intends to offer in evidence at the trial. Pen C §1054.1(f). In addition to the expert's trial report, the prosecution should include any laboratory notes, diagrams, or computer printouts made when the tests were conducted. Woods v Superior Court (1994) 25 CA4th 178, 183, 30 CR2d 182; Hines v Superior Court (1993) 20 CA4th 1818, 25 CR2d 712. Although the "intends to offer" language of Pen C §1054.1(f) could be read as limiting the scope of discovery regarding expert witnesses, expert reports remain discoverable as exculpatory evidence even when the prosecution does not intend to offer them as evidence. See Pen C §1054.1(e); Brady v Maryland (1963) 373 US 83, 10 L Ed 2d 215, 83 S Ct 1194. See also §11.26.

> Ø Note: Although witness statements must be disclosed only if relevant, no such qualification applies to the disclosure of defendants' statements; statements of all defendants must be disclosed. Pen C §1054.1(b)). See People v Jackson (2005) 129 CA4th 129, 170, 28 CR3d 136 (§1054.1(b) required prosecution to disclose all of defendant's statements intercepted by wiretap, not just statements from which evidence was derived).

No duty to disclose statement made by opposing witness. Unless it is otherwise discoverable because, for example, the information is exculpatory, the prosecution does not have a duty to disclose to the defense statements made to it by defense witnesses revealed under Pen C §1054.3 before their cross-examination. Izazaga v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 356, 377 n14, 285 CR 231; Hubbard v Superior Court (1997) 66 CA4th 1163, 1167, 78 CR2d 819. The prosecution also has no duty to disclose, before cross-examination, new information gathered as a result of previous discovery to be used during cross-examination to impeach a defense witness, unless it is otherwise discoverable under Pen C §§1054-1054.10, other statutory provisions, or the U.S. Constitution. People v Tillis (1998)

18 C4th 284, 287, 295, 75 CR2d 447 (prosecution cross-examination impeachment of defense expert witness allowed without previous disclosure to defense). However, both sides must reveal the names of new witnesses intended to be called to refute such new disclosures. See Pen C §1054.7; People v Gonzalez (2006) 38 C4th 932, 955, 44 CR3d 237; People v Tillis (1998) 18 C4th 284, 293, 75 CR2d 447; People v Hammond (1994) 22 CA4th 1611, 28 CR2d 180.

§11.6 3. Real Evidence

The prosecution must disclose to the defense all relevant real evidence seized or obtained as a part of the investigation of the offenses charged, if it is in the possession of the prosecution or if the prosecution knows it is in the possession of the investigating agencies. Pen C §1054.1(c); see In re Brown (1998) 17 C4th 873, 72 CR2d 698; In re Littlefield (1993) 5 C4th 122, 135, 19 CR2d 248. The defense must seek access to any real evidence in the possession of the prosecution that was not disclosed following an informal request, through the statutory motion procedure. Walters v Superior Court (2000) 80 CA4th 1074, 1079, 95 CR2d 880; see §§11.13-11.18. The defense should examine real evidence, such as bullets and bodily fluids, early in the case to decide whether independent forensic testing of that evidence is needed.

Disclosure of child pornography evidence is limited. Neither attorney may disclose or permit disclosure to the defendant, or anyone else, copies of child pornography evidence, unless specifically permitted to do so by the court after a hearing and a showing of good cause. Pen C §1054.10(a). Nonetheless, court permission is not necessary for an attorney to disclose or permit to be disclosed copies of child pornography evidence to persons employed by the attorney or persons appointed by the court to assist in preparing the defendant's case if that disclosure is required for that preparation. The attorney must inform such persons that any further dissemination of the material, except as directed by the attorney or court, is prohibited. Pen C §1054.10(b).

§11.7 4. Information on Arrests and Convictions

By statute, prosecutors must inquire about and make available to the defense information on the felony and misdemeanor convictions of material prosecution witnesses whose credibility is likely to be crucial to the outcome of the trial. Pen C §1054.1(d)-(e); Brady v Maryland (1963) 373 US 83, 10 L Ed 2d 215, 83 S Ct 1194. See Evid C §§452.5(b), 788; People v Duran (2002) 97 CA4th 1448, 1460, 119 CR2d 272; People v Little (1997) 59 CA4th 426, 68 CR2d 907; People v Santos (1994) 30 CA4th 169, 35 CR2d 719.

The defense is also entitled to disclosure of any pending criminal cases against prosecution witnesses (People v Martinez (2002) 103 CA4th 1071, 1078, 127 CR2d 305; People v Coyer (1983) 142 CA3d 839, 191 CR 376; People v Allen (1978) 77 CA3d 924, 144 CR 6) and discovery of the probationary status of prosecution witnesses (Millaud v Superior Court (1986) 182 CA3d 471, 227 CR 222; People v Coyer (1983) 142 CA3d 839, 191 CR 376).

Ø Note: Information on arrests and convictions that is considered Brady discovery must be disclosed without a request. People v Ruthford (1975) 14 C3d 399, 121 CR 261, overruled on other grounds in In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 545, 37 CR2d 446; In re Ferguson (1971) 5 C3d 525, 532, 96 CR 594. See §11.26.

Although some cases have stated that the rap sheets themselves need not be disclosed (People v Roberts (1992) 2 C4th 271, 308, 6 CR2d 276; People v Santos, supra), much if not all of the information contained in the rap sheets is discoverable. Cal Const art I, §28(f); Evid C §452.5(b). While it is appropriate for the prosecutor to present the rap sheets to the court for in camera inspection, accompanied by argument about what information in them may be properly disclosed, as a practical matter it is often easier to simply disclose the rap sheets themselves. For further discussion of rap sheets, see §12.5.

Ø Note: Discoverable impeachment material is much broader than information about arrests and convictions. See People v Wheeler (1992) 4 C4th 284, 14 CR2d 418 (conduct underlying misdemeanor conviction may be admissible for impeachment); In re Pratt (1999) 69 CA4th 1294, 82 CR2d 260; People v Hayes (1992) 3 CA4th 1238, 1243, 5 CR2d 105. On discovery of impeachment material, see §11.26.

§11.8 5. Constitutionally Mandated Discovery

The prosecution is required to disclose to the defense any evidence required to be disclosed under the U.S. Constitution. Pen C §1054(e). The following are examples:

- Evidence favorable to the accused (Brady discovery; see §11.26);
- Identity of confidential informant who is material witness on the issue of guilt and who can give evidence that might exonerate the defendant (see chap 17);
- Privileged psychiatric records (Hammon-Reber motions; see §11.29); and
- Records revealing discriminatory law enforcement (Murgia motions; see §§18.16-18.20).

In addition, the Constitution imposes a duty to preserve favorable evidence under certain circumstances (Trombetta-Youngblood motions; see §§11.27-11.28).

C. Discovery by Prosecution

§11.9 1. Summary of Discovery to Be Provided to Prosecution

The prosecution is not entitled to any discovery except as provided by the reciprocal discovery scheme detailed in Pen C §§1054-1054.10, as provided by other express statutory provisions, or as mandated by the federal Constitution. Pen C §1054(e). Required defense disclosures are specifically laid out in Pen C §1054.3. Note that in response to Verdin v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 1096, 1116, 77 CR3d 287, the legislature amended Pen C §1054.3, effective January 1, 2010, to authorize the court to order a defendant or juvenile in a Welf & I C §602 proceeding to submit to testing by a prosecution-retained mental health expert whenever he or she has placed his or her mental state at issue. That statute, however, requires (1) a timely request by the prosecutor; (2) a hearing at which objections can be raised by the defense; and (3) a threshold determination by the trial court that the proposed tests bear some reasonable relation to the mental state placed in issue. Pen C §1054.3(b)(1). The constitutionality of the newly enacted statute has yet to be resolved. See 43 C4th at 1116 n9.

§11.10 2. Identity, Whereabouts, and Statements of Witnesses, Including Experts

Definition of "intends to call" at trial. The defense must disclose to the prosecution the names and addresses of witnesses, other than the defendant, that it "intends to call" at trial. Pen C §1054.3(a). "Intends to call" has been defined as meaning "reasonably anticipates it is likely to call." In re Littlefield (1993) 5 C4th 122, 130, 19 CR2d 248; Izazaga v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 356, 376 n11, 285 CR 231.

Although the same definition of "intends" applies to both parties (see People v Tillis (1998) 18 C4th 284, 290, 75 CR2d 447), when it comes to determining whether it is reasonably anticipated that a witness will be called, the defense and the prosecution are not identically situated: The prosecution is always putting on a case-in-chief, whereas the defense is often not planning an affirmative defense, and whether a witness will be called depends on whether the witness's testimony is necessary for impeachment.

In In re Littlefield (1993) 5 C4th 122, 136, 19 CR2d 248, the supreme court held that the trial court correctly ruled that counsel reasonably anticipated calling a witness whom counsel's investigator had interviewed, who was present in the courtroom, and whom counsel asked the court to order to return on the day the case was trailed for trial. In that case, defense counsel's in-court conduct revealed his intention to be solid enough to warrant discovery of the witness's identity, despite defense counsel's protestations of uncertainty. People v Tillis (1998) 18 C4th 284, 293, 75 CR2d 447.

Information must be known or reasonably accessible to defense for disclosure to be required. The requirement of Pen C §1054.3 that the defense disclose the identity of witnesses whom the defense intends to call at trial includes a requirement that the defense provide this information to the extent it is known or reasonably accessible to the defense. Disclosure of witness identity without also disclosing whereabouts is not fair to the opposing party. In re Littlefield (1993) 5 C4th 122, 19 CR2d 248.

Written or recorded statements of disclosed witnesses. Defense counsel also has an obligation to disclose "any relevant written or recorded statements" of witnesses whose identity is disclosed. Pen C §1054.3(a). The court of appeal has ruled that oral statements made during interviews of potential witnesses must be disclosed, even though the interviews were never reduced to writing. Roland v Superior Court (2004) 124 CA4th 154, 21 CR3d 151. See People v Lamb (2006) 136 CA4th 575, 579, 40 CR3d 609 (accident-reconstruction expert's notes, calculations, and theories orally conveyed to defense counsel discoverable under §1054.3). However, the California Supreme Court has said that it did not suggest that a party has a duty to obtain a written statement from a witness just to have something to hand over in discovery. See In re Littlefield (1993) 5 C4th 122, 136, 19 CR2d 248.

Disagreements concerning the discoverability of defense statements may be determined at discovery compliance hearings before trial (Pen C §1054.5(b)), or at an in limine motion at trial (see U.S. v Nobles (1975) 422 US 225, 45 L Ed 2d 141, 95 S Ct 2160), depending on when the issue arises. Defense counsel can then make the tactical decision on whether to call the witness and reveal the information.

Defense witness statements and reports limited to those of witnesses intended to be called at trial, and include notes of defense interviews. The language of Pen C §1054.3(a) limits the discoverability of defense witness "statements" and "reports" to those of witnesses intended to be called at trial. Hines v Superior Court (1993) 20 CA4th 1818, 25 CR2d 712; Sandeffer v Superior Court (1993) 18 CA4th 672, 678, 22 CR2d 261. For example, the results of a defense expert's analysis of a semen sample were not discoverable by the prosecution unless the defense intended to call the expert as a witness. Prince v Superior Court (1992) 8 CA4th 1176, 10 CR2d 855. "Statements" discoverable under §1054.3 include the attorney's or investigator's rough written or recorded notes of interviews with defense witnesses who might testify at trial to the extent that they record the witness's words and not the impressions or opinions of the interviewer. Thompson v Superior Court (1997) 53 CA4th 480, 485, 61 CR2d 785. On work product and the attorney client privilege, see §11.14.

Type of expert witness reports that must be disclosed. The prosecution is entitled to documentation of the results of any examinations and tests, including handwritten notes, that memorialize the findings of the examination of an expert who will be a trial witness if the defense is offering the examination or test into evidence. Hines v Superior Court (1993) 20 CA4th 1818, 25 CR2d 712. Likewise, when the defense intends to call an expert as a witness, and the expert, in forming his or her opinion, has relied on results of standardized tests he or she conducted, the defense must disclose the results of those tests to the prosecution if the tests will be offered into evidence. Woods v Superior Court (1994) 25 CA4th 178, 181, 30 CR2d 182. The opposition is not entitled before trial to subsidiary information on which the expert relied when counsel employing the expert does not intend to offer the subsidiary information in evidence. Hines, 20 CA4th at 1823.

Penal Code §1054.6 preserves statutory and constitutional privileges such as the attorney-client privilege (Evid C §954), and the psychotherapist-patient privilege (Evid C §1021). Consequently, statements a defendant makes to an expert retained or appointed to assist in the defense are protected by the attorney-client privilege (see Evid C §952) and are not subject to discovery even if that expert is disclosed as a witness. Andrade v Superior Court (1996) 46 CA4th 1609, 54 CR2d 504 (discovery denied of those portions of appointed psychologist's report reflecting defendant's statements about charged offenses); Rodriguez v Superior Court (1993) 14 CA4th 1260, 18 CR2d 120 (proper for defense to black out portions of psychologist's report on defendant's statements to experts). The attorney-client privilege is not waived by the defendant's intention to call the expert as a witness, by partial disclosure, or by the expert's reliance on the defendant's statement in formulating his or her opinion. Andrade v Superior Court (1996) 46 CA4th 1609, 1613, 54 CR2d 504.

> Ø Note: However, in People v Jones (2003) 29 C4th 1229, 1264, 131 CR2d 468, the defendant was held to have waived the attorney-client privilege for statements made to a psychologist when he placed his mental state in issue in the penalty phase of a capital trial and called the psychologist as a witness. The prosecution was therefore entitled to an unredacted report from the testifying psychologist.

In People v Panah (2005) 35 C4th 395, 459, 25 CR3d 672, the prosecutor disclosed a coroner's report on the morning of the coroner's trial testimony. The report had been prepared the previous Friday. The supreme court ruled that "the prosecution did not commit misconduct simply because it failed to ask [the coroner] to prepare the report sooner." It is unclear whether this means that either side may ask its experts to delay preparing their reports until the last second.

For discussion of work product and privileges, see §11.14.

§11.11 3. Real Evidence

The defense must disclose to the prosecution any real evidence the defendant intends to offer in evidence at the trial. Pen C §1054.3(a). This real evidence will not necessarily be physical evidence connected to the crime.

If a defendant gives physical evidence to defense counsel, counsel has a duty to make that evidence available to the prosecution. People v Superior Court (Fairbank) (1987) 192 CA3d 32, 237 CR 158. See §2.26. The defendant may not conceal the existence of physical evidence of the crime, e.g., the murder weapon, by delivering it, or having a third party deliver it, to counsel. People v Lee (1970) 3 CA3d 514, 526, 83 CR 715. Also, knowing concealment or destruction of evidence is a misdemeanor. Pen C §135. If, however, a defendant merely reveals the location of physical evidence to defense counsel, the information is protected by the attorney-client privilege. The attorney-client privilege also protects observations the attorney or the attorney's investigator makes as a result of privileged communications, but if the attorney removes or alters the evidence, counsel must disclose its existence and its original location and condition. People v Meredith (1981) 29 C3d 682, 690, 175 CR 612. The fact that the defendant disclosed the object's location or delivered it to the attorney remains privileged, but the object itself is not privileged. People v Superior Court (Fairbank) (1987) 192 CA3d 32, 35, 237 CR 158. In Fairbank, the court of appeal established a procedure for defense counsel to follow if he or she removes, alters, or comes into possession of physical evidence. Counsel must immediately disclose to the court the existence and counsel's actions with respect the evidence. The court must then take appropriate action to ensure that the prosecution has timely access to and information about the item and any alteration. 192 CA3d at 39.

The court must also take care to shield privileged communications and defense strategies from disclosure. 192 CA3d at 39. To avoid having the jury draw the inference that the defendant was the source of the evidence, the defense may be entitled to a stipulation that limits the amount of information the jury is given about how the prosecution learned about the existence of the evidence.

§11.12 D. Nontestimonial Evidence

The prosecution and law enforcement agencies have the right to obtain "nontestimonial" evidence from a defendant, such as blood, breath, urine, handwriting, hair, and fingerprint samples, and to compel the defendant to participate in a physical or voice lineup. See Schmerber v California (1966) 384 US 757, 16 L Ed 2d 908, 86 S Ct 1826 (compelling defendant to submit to blood test and use of results in DUI prosecution did not violate Fifth Amendment; privilege against self-incrimination applies only to compelled evidence of communicative nature); Verdin v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 1096, 1110, 77 CR3d 287; People v Williams (1969) 71 C2d 614, 79 CR 65.

Ø Note: In this context, the terms "testimonial" and "nontestimonial" are synonymous with "communicative" and "noncommunicative."

Although not subject to the Fifth Amendment, such forced disclosures arguably may be subject to the Fourth Amendment prohibition against unreasonable search and seizure. Schmerber v California, supra. But see U.S. v Zimmerman (9th Cir 2007) 514 F3d 851, 855 (while Fourth Amendment did not bar compelled DNA sample, forced blood draw may violate Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993). The procedures for obtaining such information are outside the statutory discovery scheme. See Pen C §1054.4. Bodily intrusions are discussed in California Judges Benchbook: Search and Seizure §2.11 (2d ed CJER-CEB 2002).

Ø Note: Because a standard psychiatric examination consists of an interview, it is communicative and the court does not have the discretion to order a defendant to submit to an examination by the prosecution's expert under Pen C §1054.4, even if the defendant puts his or her mental state at issue. Verdin v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 1096, 1114, 77 CR3d 287.

§11.13 E. Counsel's Informal Request for Discovery

Counsel should begin the discovery process by making an informal request for discovery. An informal request is a prerequisite to court enforcement of any disclosure required by the statutory discovery scheme. Pen C §1054.5(b). Informal requests should be made as early as possible so that discoverable information may be easily obtained or, if not, court involvement or sanctions may be sought and obtained. When time limits are a problem, counsel should request an order shortening time or whatever other order is necessary. See Hobbs v Municipal Court (1991) 233 CA3d 670, 696, 284 CR 655, disapproved on other grounds in People v Tillis (1998) 18 C4th 284, 295, 75 CR2d 447.

In practice, the "informal request" ranges from an oral request for materials or a demand written on a complaint, information, or indictment, to a form listing the text of either Pen C §1054.1 or §1054.3. Counsel should always be aware of local practice and any standing order regarding what type of request is required. Written requests should be as specific as possible, separately describing each specific item. Sample informal requests are in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§11.1 (defense), 11.4 (prosecution) (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). A sample acknowledgment of discovery is in Crim Law Forms Man §11.16. To avoid disputes about what actually occurred, the better practice is to make requests for discovery, even informal requests, in writing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.14 F. Work Product and Privileged Information

Work product. Neither the defendant nor the prosecuting attorney is required to disclose any materials or information that are work product as defined in CCP §2018.030(a), or that are privileged under an express statutory provision, or as provided by the U.S. Constitution. Pen C §1054.6.

"Work product" is a "writing that reflects an attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal research or theories." CCP §2018.030(a). Work product that meets this definition is not discoverable under any circumstances. CCP §2018.030(a); Rico v Mitsubishi Motors Corp. (2007) 42 C4th 807, 814, 68 CR3d 758. Work product does not include nonderivative or noninterpretative materials of an evidentiary nature such as written or recorded statements of prospective witnesses. Thompson v Superior Court (1997) 53 CA4th 480, 485, 61 CR2d 785 (defense raw written interview notes must be produced); People v Williams (1979) 93 CA3d 40, 63, 155 CR 414 (prosecutor's summary of victim's statements must be produced). A list of witnesses intended to be called is also not work product. Hobbs v Municipal Court (1991) 233 CA3d 670, 694, 284 CR 655, disapproved on other grounds in People v Tillis (1998) 18 C4th 284, 295, 75 CR2d 447.

Nevertheless, if an attorney's impressions, conclusions, or opinions are inextricably intertwined with a witness statement summary, the document may be absolutely protected in its entirety. See Rico v Mitsubishi Motors Corp., supra.

When a witness's recorded statement contains discrete elements of both the witness's statement and counsel's impressions, conclusions, or opinions (which may reveal counsel's strategy), counsel should consider an in camera hearing that excludes opposing counsel in order to determine whether the nondiscoverable portions can be excised. See Pen C §1054.7. This practice has the advantage of counsel's not having to rely on the legal acumen and/or good faith of the disclosing side as well as making a record (sealed for possible appeal; see Pen C §1054.7) for the possible review of a higher court. Alternatives are to redact the portions that involve work product, leaving it to opposing counsel to move for disclosure; to plan ahead so that work product is not included in the same report as discoverable information; or to compartmentalize the actual statements of any witness separately from impressions about those witnesses, in separate paragraphs or even separate pages of the report of the interview.

Privileged information. Privileged information in statements and reports does not have to be disclosed at the time the witness is designated (as distinguished from later at trial). Andrade v Superior Court (1996) 46 CA4th 1609, 1613, 54 CR2d 504; Rodriguez v Superior Court (1993) 14 CA4th 1260, 18 CR2d 120; see Pen C §1054.3. Once an expert takes the stand, however, his or her opinion, the bases for it, and any information that witnesses, including the defendant, gave to him or her may be subject to cross-examination if relevant as a basis for the expert's opinion. See People v Coleman (1989) 48 C3d 112, 151, 255 CR 813. For example, when the defense "definitely" intended to call a court-appointed psychiatrist at the penalty phase of a capital murder prosecution, disclosure was properly ordered (between guilt and penalty phases) of unredacted copies of reports that included the defendant's statements and conclusions drawn from them; the defendant waived any privilege with respect to those statements by putting his mental state in issue and announcing the intention to call the psychiatrist. People v Jones (2003) 29 C4th 1229, 1263, 131 CR2d 468.

§11.15 G. Timing of Disclosures

Required discovery disclosures must be given to opposing counsel as soon as possible, but no later than 15 calendar days after they are requested, so that counsel does not face the possibility of sanctions (discussed in §11.17) for failing to turn over discovery. Pen C §1054.5(b).

A second deadline that may apply, depending on when the discovery request is made, is that discovery that is required to be given to opposing counsel must be made available at least 30 calendar days before trial, unless good cause is shown why disclosure should be denied, restricted, or deferred. Pen C §1054.7. The court, therefore, may permissibly require production of discoverable materials more than 30 days before trial. Sandeffer v Superior Court (1993) 18 CA4th 672, 677, 22 CR2d 261.

Ø Note: It is recommended that counsel receiving discovery acknowledge in writing what was received. A copy should be filed with the court.

If discovery that must be disclosed becomes known to, or comes into the possession of, a party within 30 calendar days before trial, disclosure must be made immediately unless good cause is shown why disclosure should be denied, restricted, or deferred. "Good cause" is limited to threats or possible danger to the safety of a victim or witness, possible loss or destruction of evidence, or possible compromise of other investigations by law enforcement. Pen C §1054.7.

The duty of disclosure remains a continuing one (Pen C §1054.7) because, even in the best prepared cases, new relevant material surfaces or new meaning is acquired by items formerly thought to be insignificant.

The court may issue orders shortening time. See Hobbs v Municipal Court (1991) 233 CA3d 670, 696, 284 CR 655, disapproved on other grounds in People v Tillis (1998) 18 C4th 284, 295, 75 CR2d 447. In some courts, motions for an order shortening time are handled orally. Counsel should find out each judge's practice.

The reciprocal discovery provisions of Pen C §§1054-1054.10 apply to the penalty phase of a capital trial. People v Gonzalez (2006) 38 C4th 932, 955, 44 CR3d 237; People v Superior Court (Mitchell) (1993) 5 C4th 1229, 1232, 23 CR2d 403. Defense and prosecution penalty phase evidence is discoverable before the guilt phase; it should be disclosed at least 30 days before trial. People v Superior Court (Mitchell) (1993) 5 C4th 1229, 23 CR2d 403. See Pen C §1054.7. The trial court, however, may defer penalty phase discovery until after the guilt phase on a showing of good cause. For example, counsel may have a good faith explanation for why no decision has been made before trial on which, if any, witnesses to call at the penalty phase, or why disclosure would have a potential adverse effect on the guilt phase defense.

When the prosecutor turned a consultant's report over to the defense immediately after receiving it, no discovery violation occurred even though the disclosure was made 3 days before trial and the report was 113 pages long. The court of appeal stressed that there was nothing in the record suggesting that the prosecutor learned of the expert's opinion any earlier. People v Rutter (2006) 143 CA4th 1349, 1353, 49 CR3d 925. See also People v DePriest (2007) 42 C4th 1, 36, 63 CR3d 896 (nothing in record suggested that acquisition and disclosure of shoe print evidence, disclosed by prosecutor shortly before trial, was unreasonably delayed).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.16 H. Ex Parte Discovery Orders

When the facts supporting a discovery request are privileged, the defendant may request an ex parte discovery order by filing a discovery motion and supporting declaration under seal. On receipt of such a request, the trial court may examine the documents in camera to determine "if the claim of confidentiality is justified and, if so, to what extent." City of Alhambra v Superior Court (1988) 205 CA3d 1118, 1129, 252 CR 789. The trial court should "make such orders as are appropriate to ensure that the maximum amount of information, consistent with protection of the defendant's constitutional rights, is made available to the party opposing the motion for discovery." City of Alhambra v Superior Court, supra. Other considerations, e.g., the risk of destruction of evidence, might also justify seeking an ex parte discovery order. See, e.g., People v Memro (1985) 38 C3d 658, 673, 214 CR 832, overruled on other grounds in People v Gaines (2009) 46 C4th 172, 181 n2, 92 CR3d 627 (defendant sought ex parte discovery order allowing defense investigator to photograph hole, alleging that if warned in advance, police would repair hole).

In addition, at the request of either party, the trial court may permit all or a portion of the showing of good cause for the denial or regulation of disclosures to be made in camera. Pen C §1054.7; People v Superior Court (Mitchell) (1993) 5 C4th 1229, 1239, 23 CR2d 403 (in capital case, defendant may make in camera request for delay in penalty phase discovery until after guilt phase). A verbatim record must be made of any such proceeding. If the court enters an order granting relief following a showing in camera, the entire record of the showing must be sealed and preserved in the records of the court, and must be made available to an appellate court in the event of an appeal or writ. In its discretion, the trial court may, after trial and conviction, unseal any previously sealed matter. Pen C §1054.7. Under Evid C §1042, when the defendant moves for disclosure of the identity of a confidential informant, the prosecutor may assert the informant privilege. For discussion, see §17.13.

§11.17 I. Motions for Sanctions

Counsel must make an informal request of opposing counsel for the desired materials and information before being able to seek discovery through the courts. Pen C §1054.5(b). Sample informal discovery request forms are in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§11.1 (defense), 11.4 (prosecution) (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). If, within 15 calendar days after counsel's informal request, opposing counsel fails to provide the materials and information requested, the requesting party may seek a court order, on noticed motion. Sample motions to compel discovery and for sanctions are in Crim Law Forms Man §§11.2-11.3 (defense), 11.6-11.7 (prosecution). There is also a sample opposition to a prosecution motion (Crim Law Forms Man §11.5). If the moving party shows that the opposing party has not complied with Pen C §1054.1 or §1054.3 and that the moving party complied with the informal discovery procedure provided in §1054.5(b), the court may make any order necessary to enforce Pen C §§1054-1054.10. Examples set out in §1054.5(b) include immediate disclosure; contempt proceedings (see In re Littlefield (1993) 5 C4th 122, 125, 19 CR2d 248 (use of contempt to enforce compliance with discovery order)); delaying or prohibiting the testimony of a witness or the presentation of real evidence; and continuance of the matter.

The court may advise the jury of any failure or refusal to disclose and of any untimely disclosure. Pen C §1054.5(b). The giving of CALJIC 2.28, which permits the jury to consider the failure to timely produce evidence, has been held to be prejudicial error because the instruction provides no guidance on how the defense's tardy disclosure of statements given by alibi witnesses might legitimately affect the jury's deliberations. The instruction sanctions the defendant for counsel's failure; and injecting discovery compliance issues into the jury's evaluation of the evidence means that the parties will end up litigating what happened and why, resulting in minitrials on collateral issues. People v Lawson (2005) 131 CA4th 1242, 32 CR3d 634; People v Cabral (2004) 121 CA4th 748, 17 CR3d 456; People v Bell (2004) 118 CA4th 249, 12 CR3d 808. See also People v Saucedo (2004) 121 CA4th 937, 17 CR3d 692.

The comparable CALCRIM instruction, CALCRIM 306, merely provides, "In evaluating the weight and significance of that evidence, you may consider the effect, if any, of that late disclosure." It is unclear whether this instruction sufficiently addresses the concerns of the cases cited above. The Bench Notes to CALCRIM 306 cite them and continue to caution the court to "consider whether giving this instruction could jeopardize the defendant's right to a fair trial if the jury were to attribute a defense attorney's malfeasance to the defendant." Bench Notes to CALCRIM 306. Therefore, in an appropriate case, defense counsel should object to CALCRIM 306 on due process grounds.

CALCRIM 306 also includes the following optional cautionary instruction to the jury: "[T]he fact that the defendant's attorney failed to disclose evidence within the legal time period is not evidence that the defendant committed a crime." Defense counsel should request that this clause be added if the court indicates that it plans to instruct the jury with CALCRIM 306.

There are two limits on the court's ability to sanction noncompliance with discovery. First, the court may prohibit the testimony of a witness only if all other sanctions have been exhausted. Pen C §1054.5(c). Second, the court may not dismiss a charge unless required to do so by the U.S. Constitution. Pen C §1054.5(c). Most discovery violations will not permit dismissal; the prosecution's failure to turn over unfavorable evidence does not permit dismissal as a discovery sanction. People v Ashraf (2007) 151 CA4th 1205, 1213, 60 CR3d 624. The statutory limitation on the dismissal of a charge as a sanction for a discovery violation also applies to dismissal of a special circumstance allegation. People v Superior Court (Meraz) (2008) 163 CA4th 28, 49, 77 CR3d 352.

Although it is proper in some instances for the trial court to bar defense evidence as a sanction for failure to comply with a proper discovery statute (Michigan v Lucas (1991) 500 US 145, 114 L Ed 2d 205, 111 S Ct 1743; People v Jackson (1993) 15 CA4th 1197, 19 CR2d 80), this ultimate sanction of preclusion of defense testimony or evidence may only be imposed if the following is shown on the record (People v Edwards (1993) 17 CA4th 1248, 22 CR2d 3):

- Intentional violation of a discovery order;
- Improper intent to gain a tactical advantage; and
- Exhaustion of all other less restrictive sanctions that would achieve the purposes of discovery.

See People v Gonzales (1994) 22 CA4th 1744, 28 CR2d 325 (preclusion of defense witness's testimony was reversible error because prosecution showed no willful or prejudicial violation of discovery statute).

Ø Note: Sanctions under Pen C §1054.5 are available only before the close of testimony and for as long as the trial court has jurisdiction of a criminal case. Thereafter, any discovery violation is measured by a posttrial standard, which requires a reasonable probability that, had the evidence been disclosed, the result of the proceedings would have been different. People v Zambrano (2007) 41 C4th 1082, 1135 n13, 63 CR3d 297, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209; People v Bohannon (2000) 82 CA4th 798, 805, 98 CR2d 488, disapproved on other grounds in People v Zambrano, supra.

Ø Note: The court of appeal has ruled that the failure to disclose the oral conclusions of a defense expert justified the sanction of barring the defense from presenting the defense expert in surrebuttal. The court of appeal also relied on the trial court's discretion under Evid Code §352 to bar surrebuttal evidence to prevent repetition of material already presented. Thus, it may be argued that availability of this sanction depends on whether the evidence has already been presented. People v Lamb (2006) 136 CA4th 575, 611, 40 CR3d 609.

§11.18 J. Pretrial Review of Orders Granting Discovery

The prosecution may seek pretrial writ relief from an order granting a defendant's discovery motion. Pen C §1512(a).

The defense may seek a writ of mandate (CCP §§1084-1097) or prohibition (CCP §§1102-1105) from a court order denying its request for discovery. See Hill v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 812, 112 CR 257 (mandate); Miller v Superior Court (1979) 99 CA3d 381, 159 CR 456 (prohibition). Likewise, the defense may seek writ relief from a court order granting prosecution discovery on the ground that the trial court abused its discretion in granting the discovery. See Funk v Superior Court (1959) 52 C2d 423, 340 P2d 593; Hubbard v Superior Court (1997) 66 CA4th 1163, 1166, 78 CR2d 819. A sample petition for writ of mandate or prohibition is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §42.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

Ø Note: Not complying with a discovery order, and seeking appellate review from a subsequent order of contempt, is not recommended. On contempt generally, see chap 58.

IV. DISCOVERY UNDER OTHER STATUTES

A. Pitchess Motion: Motion to Discover Personnel File of Law Enforcement or Custodial Officer

§11.19 1. Purpose of Pitchess Motion

A discovery motion is required when the confidential personnel file of a peace or custodial officer may contain evidence relevant to the defense. This motion to discover an officer's personnel file or other police agency record that contains relevant information, such as the officer's alleged prior use of excessive force, ethnic or racial bias, falsifying information, or planting evidence, is called a Pitchess motion (Pitchess v Superior Court (1974) 11 C3d 531, 113 CR 897). Pitchess discovery is often used in situations involving altercations between police officers and arrestees, but it is not limited to such circumstances. People v Memro (1985) 38 C3d 658, 679, 214 CR 832, overruled on other grounds in People v Gaines (2009) 46 C4th 172, 181 n2, 92 CR3d 627. In Memro itself, Pitchess discovery was sought to support the defendant's allegation that the police had coerced his confession. 38 C3d at 674.

The Pitchess ruling has been partly codified in Evid C §§1043-1046, which set out procedures for requesting disclosure of personnel records of peace and custodial officers, and which apply in all cases in which a party seeks disclosure of peace or custodial officer personnel records. Evid C §1043(a). The Pitchess procedure only applies to the discoverability of law enforcement personnel records. Commission on Judicial Performance v Superior Court (2007) 156 CA4th 617, 623, 67 CR3d 434 (Pitchess did not apply to records of Commission on Judicial Performance).

Pitchess motions are unaffected by the reciprocal discovery provisions of Proposition 115 because they are based on "other express statutory provisions" (Pen C §1054(e)). Albritton v Superior Court (1990) 225 CA3d 961, 275 CR 314. Pitchess discovery is also available in juvenile proceedings. City of San Jose v Superior Court (1993) 5 C4th 47, 19 CR2d 73.

Ø Note: The California Supreme Court has granted review in Galindo v Superior Court (review granted Mar. 25, 2009, S170550; superseded opinion at 169 CA4th 1332, 88 CR3d 73), which concerns whether a criminal defendant has a right to Pitchess discovery before the preliminary hearing.

§11.20 2. Requirements

Written motion required. Counsel must file a written motion that contains these items (Evid C §§1043, 1046):

- A notice of motion;
- A supporting affidavit or declaration (see CCP §2015.5, which permits declarations to be filed in place of affidavits);
- A copy of the police reports setting forth the circumstances of the defendant's stop and arrest, if the motion alleges excessive force by the officer in connection with an arrest; and
- Proof of service.

A sample Pitchess motion is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §11.12 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

Notice of motion. The notice of motion must include the following (Evid C §1043(b)):

- The name of the defendant and the criminal case for which the discovery is sought;
- The name of the peace or custodial officer whose records are sought;
- A description of the type of records sought;
- An allegation of a reasonable belief that the government agency identified in the request has the requested records; and
- The time and place the discovery motion will be heard.

Under general due process principles, the prosecutor, as a party to the underlying criminal case, is entitled to notice of the date, time, and place of the hearing on the Pitchess motion, but not its substance. Alford v Superior Court (2003) 29 C4th 1033, 1044, 130 CR2d 672.

Declaration or affidavit. To establish good cause for disclosure, the declaration or affidavit must allege specific facts showing that the records sought are material to the "subject matter involved in the pending litigation." Evid C §1043(b)(3). This materiality element requires a logical link between the pending charge and the proposed defense and articulation of how the requested discovery will support that proposed defense. Warrick v Superior Court (2005) 35 C4th 1011, 1021, 29 CR3d 2; Giovanni B. v Superior Court (2007) 152 CA4th 312, 319, 60 CR3d 469. If the court finds good cause, it must hold an in camera hearing to determine whether the requested materials are relevant. Evid C §1045(b). The trial court must grant an in camera hearing if the defendant demonstrates that "the scenario of alleged officer misconduct could or might have occurred." Warrick v Superior Court (2005) 35 C4th 1011, 1016, 29 CR3d 2, quoted in Garcia v Superior Court (2007) 42 C4th 63, 71, 63 CR3d 948. The declaration need not provide a motive for officer misconduct, nor does the scenario need to be corroborated or even necessarily credible or believable, but the scenario must be plausible in the context of the case documents and asserted defense. Uybungco v Superior Court (2008) 163 CA4th 1043, 1048, 78 CR3d 30 (citing Warrick, 35 C4th at 1019). See also People v Galan (2009) 178 CA4th 6, 12, 100 CR3d 103. Moreover, the court does not decide credibility. Warrick v Superior Court (2005) 35 C4th 1011, 29 CR3d 2.

Although the affidavit must "describe a factual scenario supporting the claimed officer misconduct," that scenario, "depending on the circumstances of the case, may consist of a denial of the facts asserted in the police report" (35 C4th at 1024) or may consist of an "alternative version of what might have occurred." Garcia v Superior Court (2007) 42 C4th 63, 72, 63 CR3d 948. See also Warrick v Superior Court (2005) 35 C4th 1011, 1016, 29 CR3d 2. Examples of showings in affidavits sufficient to compel discovery include City of Santa Cruz v Municipal Court (1989) 49 C3d 74, 85, 260 CR 520 (declaration containing specific allegations about police officers' use of force during arrest of defendant established good cause for disclosure); Uybungco v Superior Court, supra ("relatively low threshold" for establishing good cause to obtain in camera hearing met by declaration depicting a scenario that "might or could have occurred" and presented "an assertion of specific police misconduct that is both internally consistent and supports the defense proposed to the charges"); People v Johnson (2004) 118 CA4th 292, 12 CR3d 885 (declaration setting forth facts contradicting officer's account of offense in police report established that officer's truthfulness was material to case); People v Hustead (1999) 74 CA4th 410, 416, 87 CR2d 875 (declaration alleging that officer misstated information, that defendant denied the officer's claims, and that credibility of officer would be in issue at trial was sufficient to compel discovery on evading arrest charge, when defendant claimed that police were lying). In People v Thompson (2006) 141 CA4th 1312, 46 CR3d 884, the Second District held that defense cannot simply say that the police are lying, but is also required to articulate an explanation for the events. This is inconsistent with the statement of the California Supreme Court in Warrick v Superior Court (2005) 35 C4th 1011, 1016, 29 CR3d 2, and in Garcia v Superior Court (2007) 42 C4th 63, 71, 63 CR3d 948, that the scenario described in the declaration, "depending on the circumstances of the case, may consist of a denial of the facts asserted in the police report." Warrick, 35 C4th at 1024

The supporting affidavit or declaration is ordinarily made by defense counsel on information and belief. City of Santa Cruz v Municipal Court (1989) 49 C3d 74, 89, 260 CR 520. There is no requirement that there be an affidavit or a declaration from the defendant personally or any defense witness. City of Santa Cruz v Municipal Court, supra. The affidavit may be filed under seal to protect against revelation of privileged information. The sealed affidavit need not be served on the police officer who is the subject of the discovery motion or on the City Attorney representing that officer. The defense is required to make a showing that the information in the affidavit is in fact privileged as coming from the client or is core work product. The court is to consider that showing and determine whether the showing is sufficient to establish that the information is privileged. If the information is privileged, the court must order that the affidavit be sealed. If the court rules that the information is not privileged, the court must allow defense counsel to amend to include (or exclude) privileged information, rewrite the affidavit as a denial, or agree that the affidavit will not be sealed. However, this procedure need not be followed very often, because of the minimal showing necessary to compel the in camera review of the officer's personnel file. Garcia v Superior Court, supra.

Service. The motion must be served on the government agency that has custody of the records. Evid C §1043(a). The motion must be served at least 16 court days before the date set for the hearing on the motion when it is personally served. Evid C §1043(a); CCP §1005. Other methods of service require additional notice. See CCP §1005(b). For example, service by mail from inside California to an address in California extends the 16-day notice period by 5 calendar days. CCP §1005(b).

Ø Note: Defense counsel should serve the government agency, not counsel for the agency, with the Pitchess motion. The agency will then send a designated representative to court.

Informal request not required. Pitchess motions are governed by Evid C §§1043-1047, not by Pen C §§1054-1054.10. People v Superior Court (Barrett) (2000) 80 CA4th 1305, 1313, 96 CR2d 264; Albritton v Superior Court (1990) 225 CA3d 961, 275 CR 314. Therefore, defense counsel is not required to make an informal request as required by Pen C §1054.5 prior to making a Pitchess motion. See also Alford v Superior Court (2003) 29 C4th 1033, 1045, 130 CR2d 672.

§11.21 3. Proceedings on Motion

At the court hearing on a Pitchess motion (Pitchess v Superior Court (1974) 11 C3d 531, 113 CR 897), the following people are usually present: the defendant with defense counsel, the prosecutor, and a representative of the government agency, e.g., the police department, usually either the city attorney or county counsel. The prosecutor is not a party to the motion and, therefore, is not entitled to argue the prosecutorial point of view. Alford v Superior Court (2003) 29 C4th 1033, 1045, 130 CR2d 672.

If the court finds good cause for discovery of the records, it must hold an in camera hearing, to determine whether the requested materials are relevant. Evid C §1045(b). Both the prosecution and the defense are excluded from the in camera hearing; only the officer and "any other persons [the officer] is willing to have present" are allowed in chambers under the in camera procedures of Evid C §915. People v Woolman (1974) 40 CA3d 652, 115 CR 324. See also People v Superior Court (Biggs) (1971) 19 CA3d 522, 97 CR 118. Typically, the officer and the custodian of records are the only ones present.

> Ø Note: The police and custodial officer personnel records usually sought in Pitchess motions are confidential. Pen C §§832.7-832.8. However, "the officer arguably has no legitimate privacy interest in a sustained citizen complaint of misconduct." City of Los Angeles v Superior Court (2002) 29 C4th 1, 30 n6, 124 CR2d 202.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.22 4. Scope of Disclosure

If the court decides that the requested materials are relevant (Evid C §1045(a)-(c)), it must order disclosure. The "courts have generally refused to disclose verbatim reports or records… from peace officer personnel files, ordering instead… that the agency reveal only the name, address and phone number of any prior complainants and witnesses and the dates of the incidents in question." City of Santa Cruz v Municipal Court (1989) 49 C3d 74, 84, 260 CR 520.

A supplemental motion will lie to obtain the verbatim reports. Alvarez v Superior Court (2004) 117 CA4th 1107, 1112, 12 CR3d 252. If, for example, the defense shows that a witness cannot be found, disclosure of the verbatim report is required to permit the defense to try to locate the witness. People v Matos (1979) 92 CA3d 862, 155 CR 293; City of Azusa v Superior Court (1987) 191 CA3d 693, 236 CR 621. If the defense finds the witnesses but those witnesses cannot recall what they said, the defense is entitled to the verbatim reports to refresh the recollections of the witnesses. Pitchess v Superior Court (1974) 11 C3d 531, 113 CR 897; People v Matos, supra; City of Azusa v Superior Court, supra. If the witnesses refuse to talk to the defense, the defense is entitled to the verbatim reports because the witnesses are unavailable to the defense. Alvarez v Superior Court, supra.

Ø Note: A supplemental motion seeking disclosure of additional information must comply with the notice requirements of Evid C §1043 and CCP §1005 (see §11.20) applicable to an initial Pitchess motion. City of Tulare v Superior Court (2008) 169 CA4th 373, 382, 86 CR3d 707.

The following information may not be disclosed (Evid C §1045(b)):

- Information concerning conduct that occurred more than 5 years before the event that is the subject of the current litigation;

Ø Note: This is subject to a Brady exception discussed in §11.26.

- The conclusions of officers investigating complaints filed against the officer whose records are sought; and
- Facts too remote to be of practical benefit.

Despite the 5-year limitation of Evid C §1045(b)(1), citizen complaints older than 5 years are subject to disclosure as Brady material (see §11.26) if the trial court finds them to be material and exculpatory after in-chambers review. City of Los Angeles v Superior Court (2002) 29 C4th 1, 12, 124 CR2d 202; Abatti v Superior Court (2003) 112 CA4th 39, 54, 4 CR3d 767. Such materials are subject to Brady disclosure even if the law enforcement agency holding the files is technically not on the prosecution "team," and the prosecution would therefore otherwise have no Brady duty to disclose them. 112 CA4th at 57.

Ø Note: "Results" of internal police investigations, such as disciplinary action, are discoverable under Pitchess, while the "conclusions" of the investigating officer made during such investigations are not. "Conclusions" means the thought processes of, and factual inferences and deductions drawn by, an investigating officer regarding such issues as witness credibility or the significance, strength, or lack of evidence. City of Los Angeles v Superior Court (2002) 29 C4th 1, 14, 124 CR2d 202; City of San Jose v Superior Court (1993) 5 C4th 47, 19 CR2d 73.

Pitchess discovery may include confidential reports transferred from a civilian police investigation agency established by law to the police department. Pen C §832.5; San Francisco Police Officers' Ass'n v Superior Court (1988) 202 CA3d 183, 188, 248 CR 297. Disclosure of personal information, such as the officer's home address or salary history, is ordinarily not discoverable in a Pitchess motion because such information would not be material to the criminal prosecution. See Hackett v Superior Court (1993) 13 CA4th 96, 16 CR2d 405 (Evid C §§1043-1047 create conditional privilege for personal information listed in Pen C §832.8).

The court must order that the records may not be used for any purpose other than in the underlying court proceeding. Evid C §1045(e); Alford v Superior Court (2003) 29 C4th 1033, 1042, 130 CR2d 672. The information disclosed may, on request, be provided to the officer who is the subject of the records. Becerrada v Superior Court (2005) 131 CA4th 409, 31 CR3d 735. Other parties to the case, including the prosecutor, do not have automatic entitlement to Pitchess materials. Alford, 29 C4th at 1046. In addition, counsel for the agency or the officer may wish to request a protective order to protect the officer or agency from unnecessary annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression. Evid C §1045(d). To obtain such an additional protective order, there must be a noticed motion and a showing of good cause. Chambers v Appellate Div. (2007) 42 C4th 673, 680 n8, 68 CR3d 43; Evid C §1045(d). However, when complainant information has been ordered disclosed to counsel who, when later representing a different defendant, succeeds under Pitchess in discovering the same complainant information relating to the same officer, counsel may then refer to that derivative information uncovered as part of the earlier investigation. Chambers v Appellate Div. (2007) 42 C4th 673, 681, 68 CR3d 43.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.23 5. Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Order of Disclosure

Pitchess discovery may require disclosure of information for which a privilege can be asserted under Evid C §1040(b)(2). However, the privilege "is not an unmixed blessing to law enforcement." Kelvin L. v Superior Court (1976) 62 CA3d 823, 830, 133 CR 325. Even if the government agency, e.g., the police department, ordered to provide Pitchess discovery, makes a successful claim of privilege, its failure to comply with the discovery order subjects it to the adverse consequences provided in Evid C §1042(a), i.e., an adverse order or findings of fact on any issue to which the privileged information is material. Kelvin L v Superior Court, supra; People v Zamora (1980) 28 C3d 88, 99 n7, 167 CR 573.

If the court overrules the claim of privilege, and the government agency refuses to disclose the information, the charges to which the undisclosed information pertains must be dismissed. Dell M. v Superior Court (1977) 70 CA3d 782, 144 CR 418. See also People v Mejia (1976) 57 CA3d 574, 129 CR 192 (dismissal required when state action has made material witness unavailable).

§11.24 6. Appellate Review

The court's order on a Pitchess motion is reviewed for abuse of discretion. People v Samayoa (1997) 15 C4th 795, 827, 64 CR2d 400; Uybungco v Superior Court (2008) 163 CA4th 1043, 1049, 78 CR3d 30; Haggerty v Superior Court (2004) 117 CA4th 1079, 1086, 12 CR3d 467. To ensure meaningful appellate review, it is important that all parties follow proper Pitchess procedure. The court should be on the record during both the public and in camera proceedings and should make a full record of what documents or portions of the personnel file it examined, before granting or denying the Pitchess motion, in whole or in part. Statements made in camera by the custodian of records must be under oath. People v Mooc (2001) 26 C4th 1216, 1229 n4, 114 CR2d 482. If the custodian of records does not produce the entire personnel file, it must provide a record of what documents were withheld and why. People v Wycoff (2008) 164 CA4th 410, 414, 78 CR3d 907. The transcript of the in camera hearing and all copies of the documents should be sealed. See People v Coddington (2000) 23 C4th 529, 589, 97 CR2d 528, overruled on other grounds in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069, 108 CR2d 409; People v Mooc (2001) 26 C4th 1216, 1228, 114 CR2d 482; People v Guevara (2007) 148 CA4th 62, 69, 55 CR3d 581.

When an appellate court rules that the trial court erred in denying a Pitchess motion without holding an in camera hearing, the proper remedy is a conditional reversal and remand directing the trial court to conduct an in camera hearing. People v Gaines (2009) 46 C4th 172, 180, 92 CR3d 627, overruling People v Memro (1985) 38 C3d 658, 685, 214 CR 832, to the extent that Memro suggests that outright reversal, not remand, is the appropriate remedy. If no discoverable material exists, the conviction is reinstated. If discoverable material exists, the defendant is entitled to it. To warrant reversal, the defendant must show prejudice from the denial of the material, i.e., the defendant must show a reasonable probability of a different outcome had the material been disclosed. Gaines, 46 C4th at 180.

If the trial court prejudicially erred in denying Pitchess discovery after holding an Evid C §915/§1045 hearing, reversal is required. People v Memro (1985) 38 C3d 658, 685, 214 CR 832, overruled on other grounds in People v Gaines (2009) 46 C4th 172, 180, 92 CR3d 627.

§11.25 B. Subpoena Duces Tecum

The criminal discovery procedures of Pen C §§1054-1054.10 do not regulate discovery of information in the possession of uninvolved third parties (Teal v Superior Court (2004) 117 CA4th 488, 491, 11 CR3d 784; People v Superior Court (Broderick) (1991) 231 CA3d 584, 282 CR 418), such as uninvolved prosecution or police agencies, hospitals (see People v Superior Court (Barrett) (2000) 80 CA4th 1305, 96 CR2d 264; People v Superior Court (Mem. Med. Ctr.) (1991) 234 CA3d 363, 286 CR 478), doctors (see People v Superior Court (Broderick), supra), public institutions, and private businesses. Therefore, a subpoena duces tecum (Pen C §§1326-1328) should be used to compel the production of relevant materials in the possession of a third party.

The following are examples of information from third parties that counsel may wish to obtain:

- Confidential records of a state agency investigating the child abuse with which the defendant is charged. Pennsylvania v Ritchie (1987) 480 US 39, 94 L Ed 2d 40, 107 S Ct 989.
- Child Protective Services records concerning the victim. Lorenza P. v Superior Court (1988) 197 CA3d 607, 242 CR 877 (defendant, mother of victim, had right to records under Welf & I C §827).

Ø Note: A defendant can obtain his or her own records under Welf & I C §10850 by submitting a release. Lorenza P. v Superior Court, supra.

- Reports prepared by a city's special investigation team about the crime. Vela v Superior Court (1989) 208 CA3d 141, 255 CR 921.
- Videotape of minor victim's parents engaging in sex acts similar to those it was alleged that defendant performed on minor victim. Rubio v Superior Court (1988) 202 CA3d 1343, 249 CR 419 (marital privilege gave way to defendant's constitutional rights).

Often the data sought through a subpoena duces tecum is arguably privileged. In that situation, the court becomes involved in the process. An in camera hearing is required. Pennsylvania v Ritchie (1987) 480 US 39, 60, 94 L Ed 2d 40, 59, 107 S Ct 989; see Pen C §1326(c). Such an in camera hearing, at least if the information sought concerns a critical prosecution witness, occurs during, not before, trial. People v Hammon (1997) 15 C4th 1117, 65 CR2d 1 (discussed in §11.29).

When the defense has issued a subpoena duces tecum to a nonparty, the court may order an in camera hearing to decide whether the defense is entitled to receive the documents. However, the court may not condition disclosure of the documents to the defense on the prosecution's receiving a copy of the documents. Disclosure of such documents to the prosecution is required only if and when the defense decides to use the documents at trial, under the provisions of Pen C §1054.3 (discussed in §§11.9-11.11). Pen C §1326(c); Teal v Superior Court (2004) 117 CA4th 488, 492, 11 CR3d 784.

The prosecution is not entitled to participate in any third party discovery efforts of the defense but may participate if the court so desires. People v Superior Court (Humberto S.) (2008) 43 C4th 737, 750, 76 CR3d 276.

Ø Note: It appears that motions for in camera hearings to weigh assertions of privilege against a defendant's constitutional rights in subpoenaed materials, such as in Pennsylvania v Ritchie, supra, survive Proposition 115 because such hearings effectuate rights mandated by the U.S. Constitution. See Pen C §1054(e); see also §11.26.

Defense counsel must be allowed access to confidential files when the trial court determines that they contain information that is favorable to the defendant and material on guilt or punishment. In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 543, 37 CR2d 446.

Subpoenas and subpoenas duces tecum may be challenged by a motion to quash; see discussion in §§4.43-4.44.

For further discussion of subpoenas duces tecum, see §§4.39-4.47. A Judicial Council Form is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §4.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§11.25A C. Conditional Examination

Circumstances permitting conditional examination. Because of the defendant's right of confrontation, depositions are not available as a matter of course in criminal prosecutions. See generally People v Municipal Court (Runyan) (1978) 20 C3d 523, 143 CR 609. Nevertheless, under certain circumstances, a witness may be conditionally examined before trial to preserve his or her testimony under procedures prescribed in Pen C §§1335-1345. The procedure is available only in the circumstances set forth in Pen C §1336. Clark v Superior Court (1961) 190 CA2d 739, 12 CR 191.

In any noncapital criminal prosecution, either the prosecution or the defense may have a witness conditionally examined by showing that the witness's testimony is material, and that the witness is (Pen C §§1335(a), 1336(a)):

- about to leave the state;
- so sick or infirm that the witness's ability to testify at trial is in doubt;
- sixty-five years of age or older; or
- a dependent adult.

If the prosecution is for a serious felony, as defined in Pen C §1335(c), or concerns a case of domestic violence, as defined in Pen C §1335(e), either the prosecution or the defense may have a material witness conditionally examined on a showing that the witness's life is in jeopardy. Pen C §§1335(b), 1336(b). In this context, the term "serious felony" includes the crimes listed as serious felonies in Pen C §1192.7(c) and violations of Health & S C §§11351, 11352, 11378, and 11379. Pen C §1335(c). The prosecutor or the defendant may also have a witness conditionally examined if the defendant has been charged with domestic violence and there is evidence that the defendant has dissuaded or attempted to dissuade the witness from testifying or cooperating with the prosecution. Pen C §1335(d).

In a capital case, the defense may apply to have a witness conditionally examined for any of the reasons listed in Pen C §1336(a) or (b). Pen C §1335(a). The prosecution may obtain a conditional examination of a witness in a capital case only on a showing that the witness's life is in jeopardy. Pen C §§1335(b), 1336(b); People v Jurado (2006) 38 C4th 72, 112, 41 CR3d 319.

Application. An application for a conditional examination must be made to the court with at least 3 days' notice to the opposing party or parties. Pen C §1338. But see People v Frank (1933) 132 CA 360, 363, 22 P2d 792 (in emergency, order shortening time may be obtained). It must be accompanied by an affidavit (or declaration (see CCP §2015.5)) that states the following (Pen C §1337):

- The nature of the offense charged;
- The current procedural posture of the case;
- The name and address of the witness;
- That the witness's testimony is material; and
- That one of the facts listed in Pen C §1336 permitting a conditional examination of the witness is true, or that, in a domestic violence case, the witness is being or has been intimidated or threatened and dissuaded from testifying or cooperating with the prosecution as described in Pen C §1335.

Ø Note: In People v Jurado (2006) 38 C4th 72, 113, 41 CR3d 319, the supreme court held that the prosecutor's declaration asserting his belief that the prospective witness had been part of a plot to commit an uncharged murder, and that the charged murder had been committed to prevent the victim from disclosing the plan, was sufficient to justify a conditional examination.

A sample motion for conditional examination is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §11.17 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

Holding the examination. The examination takes place before a magistrate, who may issue a subpoena to secure the attendance of the witness. Pen C §§1339, 1342. The defendant has the right to be present in person and through counsel. Pen C §1340(a). The examination must be recorded by a verbatim reporter and may also be videotaped. Pen C §1343. The deposition is then sealed and transmitted to the court clerk. Pen C §1344. The deposition may be read at trial at the request of either party on a showing that the witness is unavailable within the meaning of Evid C §240. Pen C §1345. Alternatively, if the examination was videotaped, the videotape may be shown to the jury. Pen C §1345.

V. CONSTITUTIONALLY MANDATED DISCOVERY

§11.26 A. Evidence Favorable to Accused (Brady Discovery)

Due process requires disclosure of material evidence favorable to accused. Due process requires the disclosure to the defendant of "evidence favorable to an accused" that is "material either to guilt or to punishment." U.S. v Bagley (1985) 473 US 667, 676, 87 L Ed 2d 481, 490, 105 S Ct 3375; Brady v Maryland (1963) 373 US 83, 87, 10 L Ed 2d 215, 83 S Ct 1194; see Pen C §1054(e) (discovery required by U.S. Constitution must occur); Izazaga v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 356, 378, 285 CR 231. Evidence is "favorable" if it either helps the defendant or hurts the prosecution. In re Miranda (2008) 43 C4th 541, 575, 76 CR3d 172; In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 544, 37 CR2d 446; People v Uribe (2008) 162 CA4th 1457, 1471, 76 CR3d 829.

The duty to disclose material exculpatory evidence does not end when the trial is over. "[A]fter a conviction the prosecutor also is bound by the ethics of his office to inform the appropriate authority of after-acquired or other information that casts doubt upon the correctness of the conviction." Imbler v Pachtman (1976) 424 US 409, 427 n25, 47 L Ed 2d 128, 141 n25, 96 S Ct 984. See People v Johnson (2006) 142 CA4th 776, 782, 48 CR3d 439 (prosecutor improperly withheld police reports of gang-related incident involving chief prosecution witness that occurred between defendant's first and second trials).

Ø Note: Brady discovery is a "one-way street"; there is no corresponding defense duty to give implicating evidence to the prosecution.

For general review of Brady discovery requirements, see Kyles v Whitley (1995) 514 US 419, 131 L Ed 2d 490, 115 S Ct 1555.

Duty to disclose encompasses impeachment evidence. The U.S. Supreme Court has never drawn a distinction for Brady purposes between impeachment evidence, i.e., evidence that reflects on the credibility of a witness, and evidence that is directly exculpatory. See U.S. v Bagley (1985) 473 US 667, 676, 87 L Ed 2d 481, 490, 105 S Ct 3375. The prosecutor's duty to disclose material evidence that is favorable to the accused includes the duty to disclose evidence that would impeach the testimony of material witnesses. U.S. v Bagley, supra. See also Giglio v U.S. (1972) 405 US 150, 153, 31 L Ed 2d 104, 108, 92 S Ct 763 (reversal required because prosecutor failed to disclose promise of leniency in exchange for testimony); In re Miranda (2008) 43 C4th 541, 580, 76 CR3d 172 (letter detailing confession of uncharged murder by material witness to defendant's culpability should have been disclosed to allow impeachment during penalty phase; death sentence vacated and guilty plea may be withdrawn); People v Uribe (2008) 162 CA4th 1457, 1471, 76 CR3d 829 (new trial motion should have been granted on basis of suppression of medical examination videotape of purported child victim that might have supported defense expert's opinion and impeached prosecution expert opinions).

Under Evid C §780, unless otherwise provided by statute, the jury may consider (and counsel may inquire about) "any matter that has any tendency in reason to prove or disprove" a witness's testimony. Required disclosure of impeachment materials is correspondingly broad. It includes felony convictions (Pen C §1054.1(d)), misdemeanor convictions (see Evid C §452.5, People v Duran (2002) 97 CA4th 1448, 1460, 119 CR2d 272), felony acts, misdemeanor acts, and noncriminal acts of dishonesty or moral turpitude that could reflect on the witness's credibility (People v Wheeler (1992) 4 C4th 284, 14 CR2d 418). For examples of matters the jury may consider in determining credibility, see Evid C §780(a)-(g). The prosecutor has a duty to "learn of any favorable evidence known to the others acting on the government's behalf in the case, including the police." Kyles v Whitley (1995) 514 US 419, 437, 131 L Ed 2d 490, 508, 115 S Ct 1555. See U.S. v Price (9th Cir 2009) 566 F3d 900, 903; In re Brown (1998) 17 C4th 873, 879 n3, 72 CR2d 698. See also Tennison v City & County of San Francisco (9th Cir 2009) 570 F3d 1078. But see People v Panah (2005) 35 C4th 395, 460, 25 CR3d 672, quoting from In re Littlefield (1993) 5 C4th 122, 135, 19 CR2d 248 (prosecutor "has no general duty to seek out, obtain, and disclose all evidence that might be beneficial to the defense."

Ø Practice tip: The Brady obligation may well require disclosure of reports and statements of experts and witnesses the prosecutor does not intend to call at trial.

Brady* disclosure is limited. The prosecutor's constitutional obligation to disclose exculpatory information is limited to information that is both exculpatory and material. Brady v Maryland (1963) 373 US 83, 87, 10 L Ed 2d 215, 83 S Ct 1194. Exculpatory information is material only if a reasonable probability exists that disclosure would make a difference in the outcome of the trial. In re Miranda (2008) 43 C4th 541, 575, 76 CR3d 172; City of Los Angeles v Superior Court (2002) 29 C4th 1, 7, 124 CR2d 202; People v Seaton (2001) 26 C4th 598, 648, 110 CR2d 441. If the exculpatory value of information in the prosecutor's possession is not readily apparent, "disclosure is required only if the defense makes a specific request for it." In re Steele (2004) 32 C4th 682, 701, 10 CR3d 536. If the defense does make such a specific discovery request, the court may consider a resulting defense assumption about the nonexistence of that evidence and any associated inadequacy in trial preparation in assessing the materiality of nondisclosure. People v Uribe (2008) 162 CA4th 1457, 1472, 76 CR3d 829.

In addition, because the disclosure requirements of Brady are founded on the defendant's right to a fair trial, the prosecution is not required to disclose material impeachment evidence before plea bargaining. U.S. v Ruiz (2002) 536 US 622, 633, 153 L Ed 2d 586, 122 S Ct 2450. But see In re Miranda (2008) 43 C4th 541, 582, 76 CR3d 172 (leaving open issue of whether exculpatory evidence must be disclosed before defendant pleads guilty).

Ø Note: Prosecutors should resolve doubtful questions in favor of disclosure. U.S. v Agurs (1976) 427 US 97, 108, 49 L Ed 2d 342, 352, 96 S Ct 2392. The prudent prosecutor should have full and continual knowledge of what evidence is available or being produced in a case, and analyze its discoverability on an ongoing basis. People v Robinson (1995) 31 CA4th 494, 37 CR2d 183. The prosecution's failure to disclose Brady materials, even when negligent, can result in reversal. See Merrill v Superior Court (1994) 27 CA4th 1586, 33 CR2d 515; People v Robinson, supra. A prosecutor's intentional failure to disclose Brady materials may be misconduct. See People v Garcia (1993) 17 CA4th 1169, 1183, 22 CR2d 545; People v Sons (2008) 164 CA4th 90, 102, 78 CR3d 679 (sanctions and civil liability may be appropriate for Brady-related prosecutorial misconduct). An attorney must report his or her own misconduct to the State Bar when it was the basis in whole or in part of a reversal. Bus & P C §6068(o)(7). Courts are required to report attorneys found in contempt on grounds that warrant discipline and attorneys whose misconduct was the basis in whole or in part of a reversal. Bus & P C §6086.7(a)(1)-(2).

Defense is not required to make specific request for Brady disclosure. The duty to disclose exculpatory information does not depend on the defendant's request—the prosecution is required to disclose such information on its own, even in the absence of a request. U.S. v Agurs (1976) 427 US 97, 106, 49 L Ed 2d 342, 351, 96 S Ct 2392; City of Los Angeles v Superior Court (2002) 29 C4th 1, 8, 124 CR2d 202; In re Ferguson (1971) 5 C3d 525, 532, 96 CR 594. Prudent defense counsel, however, should make specific requests for material as soon as its existence is suspected, unless there are tactical reasons for not doing so. Defense counsel should always specifically ask for the identity and addresses of all percipient witnesses to the crime whether or not the prosecutor intends to call these witnesses, unless there are tactical reasons for not doing so. In this way, defense counsel is assured of the opportunity to learn of, and seek interviews with, any eyewitnesses whose testimony may point toward innocence, impeachment, or mitigation. Defense counsel cannot assume that the prosecution's investigating agencies have obtained all the useful information that these witnesses may possess. See, e.g., U.S. v Cadet (9th Cir 1984) 727 F2d 1453, 1468.

"Open file" policy may satisfy Brady obligation. Under proper circumstances, the prosecution may satisfy its Brady obligation through an "open file" policy that allows defense counsel to examine all materials regarding the case that are in the prosecutor's possession. When such a policy is in place, defense counsel may assume that the prosecution files contain all the evidence required to be disclosed. The prosecution cannot use an open file policy to impose impracticable or oppressive burdens on the defense. See People v Zambrano (2007) 41 C4th 1082, 1134, 63 CR3d 297, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209, citing Strickler v Greene (1999) 527 US 263, 283 n23, 144 L Ed 2d 286, 303 n23, 119 S Ct 1936.

Appellate review. The appellate court conducts an independent review to determine if a Brady violation occurred. People v Uribe (2008) 162 CA4th 1457, 1473, 76 CR3d 829. On appeal, evidence is considered "material" only if there is a reasonable probability that had it been disclosed to the defense the result would have been different. "Reasonable probability" is defined as a probability sufficient to undermine confidence in the outcome. In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 544 n6, 37 CR2d 446 (citing U.S. v Bagley (1985) 473 US 667, 682, 87 L Ed 2d 481, 494, 105 S Ct 3375).

See also Kyles v Whitley (1995) 514 US 419, 131 L Ed 2d 490, 115 S Ct 1555; People v Uribe, supra. The materiality of omitted evidence is assessed in the light of other evidence, not merely in terms of its probative value standing alone. Kyles, 514 US at 436. Compare People v Dickey (2005) 35 C4th 884, 907, 28 CR3d 647 (cumulative impeachment evidence held not material), with In re Miranda (2008) 43 C4th 541, 579, 76 CR3d 172 (letter could have effectively impeached prosecution witness and was wrongfully suppressed). See also Silva v Brown (9th Cir 2005) 416 F3d 980 (failure to disclose that plea agreement between prosecution and star witness required witness not to undergo psychiatric evaluation before testifying violated Brady); In re Sodersten (2007) 146 CA4th 1163, 1224, 53 CR3d 572 (failure to disclose tape-recorded statements of the two key trial witnesses that contained inconsistent statements, as well as admissions of lying and coercive interrogation of one of the witnesses, violated Brady).

B. Duty to Preserve Favorable Evidence (Trombetta-Youngblood Motion)

§11.27 1. Nature of Motion

The law does not impose a duty on the prosecution to collect evidence that might be beneficial to the defense. Once collected, however, due process imposes on the prosecution a duty to preserve material, exculpatory evidence. Arizona v Youngblood (1988) 488 US 51, 58, 102 L Ed 2d 281, 109 S Ct 333; California v Trombetta (1984) 467 US 479, 488, 81 L Ed 2d 413, 104 S Ct 2528. If the prosecution fails to preserve such evidence, the defense may make a motion for sanctions, called a Trombetta or Youngblood motion. Because Trombetta-Youngblood motions are constitutionally mandated under the Due Process Clause and concern exculpatory evidence, they survive Proposition 115. See Pen C §1054(e).

The showing the defense must make to obtain relief varies, depending on whether the loss of the evidence was in bad faith. People v Pastor Cruz (1993) 16 CA4th 322, 20 CR2d 13. A defendant who can establish that the prosecution acted in bad faith in destroying or failing to preserve evidence is entitled to relief on a showing that the lost or destroyed evidence might have exonerated him or her. Arizona v Youngblood, supra. See also Illinois v Fisher (2004) 540 US 544, 157 L Ed 2d 1060, 124 S Ct 1200; People v Memro (1995) 11 C4th 786, 47 CR2d 219. If the defendant cannot establish bad faith (the usual case), the defendant is entitled to relief only on a showing that the lost or destroyed evidence was material and exculpatory. California v Trombetta, supra.

Material, exculpatory evidence is evidence that might be expected to play a significant role in the suspect's defense. It must possess an exculpatory value that was apparent before the evidence was destroyed or lost, and be of such a nature that the defendant would be unable to obtain comparable evidence by other reasonably available means. California v Trombetta, supra; Arizona v Youngblood, supra. See also People v Frye (1998) 18 C4th 894, 942, 77 CR2d 25, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209; People v Arias (1996) 13 C4th 92, 165 n28, 51 CR2d 770.

Trombetta-Youngblood motions are difficult to win because it is almost impossible to provide proof of bad faith short of showing deliberate destruction of an irreplaceable item of evidence that has an exculpatory nature apparent to the police who possess it. For examples of fruitless motions under Trombetta-Youngblood standards, see People v Cooper (1991) 53 C3d 771, 810, 281 CR 90 (neither Trombetta satisfied nor bad faith shown); People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 855, 277 CR 122 (Trombetta not satisfied); People v Griffin (1988) 46 C3d 1011, 1021, 251 CR 643 (evidence consumed in testing; no due process violation).

When the Trombetta-Youngblood standards are satisfied, the trial court should impose appropriate sanctions based on the proved facts of each case. People v Medina (1990) 51 C3d 870, 893, 274 CR 849; see People v Zamora (1980) 28 C3d 88, 96, 167 CR 573. Sanctions include the exclusion of evidence or dismissal of the case. See California v Trombetta (1984) 467 US 479, 486, 81 L Ed 2d 413, 104 S Ct 2528. However, even if a federal due process violation is not shown, the trial court retains the discretion to impose the sanction of an adverse jury instruction. People v Huston (1989) 210 CA3d 192, 215, 258 CR 393.

The best result of a Trombetta-Youngblood motion may be that the court allows the defense to present evidence to the trier of fact that the prosecution, knowing that the evidence it had might exculpate the defendant, either failed to preserve it or destroyed it. People v Cooper, supra; People v Cruz (1993) 16 CA4th 322, 20 CR2d 13.

> Ø Note: When the defense is aware of particular evidence that it wants preserved, counsel should move for a protective court order. In that way, the defense can, e.g., run a DNA test on a bodily fluid to prove that the defendant is innocent. Because the contents of a police evidence locker are the responsibility of the prosecutor and not that of some third party in possession (such as a court), pretrial protective orders or orders for inspection or testing of booked evidence may not be made ex parte or be confidential (Walters v Superior Court (2000) 80 CA4th 1074, 95 CR2d 880) and the statutory reciprocal discovery procedures apply. See §§11.3-11.18 (reciprocal discovery), 55.21 (retesting).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.28 2. When to Make Motion; Method of Review

A motion for sanctions based on the destruction of evidence should be made in the trial court before the evidence at issue is introduced and after jeopardy has attached. People v Taylor (1977) 67 CA3d 403, 136 CR 640. Although the motion may be made before trial at the court's discretion, any such ruling is not binding on the trial judge. See People v Rawlings (1974) 42 CA3d 952, 959, 117 CR 651, disapproved on other grounds in People v Chacon (2007) 40 C4th 558, 565 n7, 53 CR3d 876; People v Leighter (1971) 15 CA3d 389, 394, 93 CR 136, disapproved on other grounds in Madril v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 73, 77, 123 CR 465; Saidi-Tabatabai v Superior Court (1967) 253 CA2d 257, 61 CR 510. A sample Trombetta-Youngblood motion is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §11.11 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). The hearing on the motion is the same as any hearing on the admissibility of evidence.

The issue cannot generally be raised for the first time on a new trial motion. People v Mayorga (1985) 171 CA3d 929, 218 CR 830.

A Trombetta-Youngblood motion is not reviewable by pretrial writ; it is reviewed on appeal from an ensuing conviction. People v Municipal Court (Ahnemann) (1974) 12 C3d 658, 117 CR 20. Although the issue of whether the denial of a Trombetta-Youngblood motion is reviewable on appeal following a guilty plea is unresolved, the weight of authority is that it is not. People v Avalos (1996) 47 CA4th 1569, 1576, 55 CR2d 450 (underlying question relates to guilt or innocence; therefore, issue does not survive guilty plea); People v Aguilar (1985) 165 CA3d 221, 224, 211 CR 333 (Pen C §1538.5(m) preserves issue after guilty plea when defendant makes unsuccessful motion to suppress tangible fruits of violation of evidence-preservation rule).

§11.29 C. Motion to Obtain Privileged Psychiatric Records (Hammon-Reber Motion)

The defense may secure the privileged psychiatric medical records of prosecution witnesses if the defense can show good cause for discovery of the records. See People v Gurule (2002) 28 C4th 557, 592, 123 CR2d 345. See generally Davis v Alaska (1974) 415 US 308, 316, 39 L Ed 2d 347, 354, 94 S Ct 1105. The motion for the disclosure of these records is known as a "Hammon-Reber motion." These motions have survived Proposition 115 because they are mandated by the U.S. Constitution. Pen C §1054(e).

Defense counsel should have a subpoena duces tecum (see §§4.39, 11.25) for the records served on the person who has the records. The records should be subpoenaed so that they arrive before a hearing is held on their admissibility. This hearing occurs during, not before, trial. People v Hammon (1997) 15 C4th 1117, 1127, 65 CR2d 1.

When a defendant proposes to impeach a crucial prosecution witness with questions that call for privileged information, the trial court must balance the defendant's need for cross-examination against the state policies that the privilege is intended to serve. The court should consider the prosecution evidence, the proffered defense as presented in opening statements, cross-examination of the prosecution's witnesses, and any other evidence relevant to this determination. If the court finds that there may be good cause for disclosure, the court examines the records in camera and rules on whether and what parts of the records should be disclosed to the defense. Only records essential to vindicate the defendant's constitutional right may be disclosed. People v Reber (1986) 177 CA3d 523, 223 CR 139, disapproved on other grounds in People v Hammon (1997) 15 C4th 1117, 1123, 65 CR2d 1. In Reber, the defendants established good cause for discovery of the complaining witnesses' psychotherapy records, which contained evidence of psychotic or hallucinatory behavior relevant to their credibility. However, a mere contention that the victim received treatment for "some mental health problem" is insufficient to establish good cause for discovery of the victim's mental health records. People v Pack (1988) 201 CA3d 679, 248 CR 240. See also Farrell L. v Superior Court (1988) 203 CA3d 521, 250 CR 25 (magistrate properly refused to compel production of names of members of victim's counseling group because information was too tangential).

> Ø Note: Defense counsel should try through independent investigation to obtain some evidence of mental disorder to make the strongest case for a Hammon-Reber motion. When there is no prior access to records, however, it is unnecessary to allege the information sought with particularity. People v Reber, supra.

A copy of all the psychological records must be kept for appellate purposes. People v Pack, supra. A full record of the hearing must be made that sets out the showings that were made, what evidence was sought, and what was or was not disclosed and why, so that appellate review will be adequately informed.

§11.30 VI. DISCOVERY OF RECORDS REVEALING DISCRIMINATORY LAW ENFORCEMENT (MURGIA MOTIONS)

Intentional and invidious discriminatory enforcement of the criminal law is a constitutional defect in the prosecution that is a defense to a criminal charge. Murgia v Municipal Court (1975) 15 C3d 286, 293, 124 CR 204. The defense is entitled to obtain discovery to support the later making of a motion to dismiss based on discriminatory enforcement. These discovery motions are commonly called Murgia motions. Murgia discovery motions are a form of constitutionally mandated discovery, brought under the Equal Protection Clause of the United States Constitution. See Pen C §1054(e). For discussion, see §§18.16-18.20. A sample Murgia motion is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §18.13 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§11.31 VII. POSTJUDGMENT DISCOVERY

A prosecutor's duty to disclose substantial material evidence favorable to the accused even without a request does not end when the trial is over. People v Garcia (1993) 17 CA4th 1169, 22 CR2d 545 (failure to disclose, during pendency of appeal, exculpatory evidence going to credibility of key prosecution witness resulted in defense success on habeas).

When no case is pending before a court, the court lacks jurisdiction to entertain a discovery motion in the absence of statutory authority. People v Gonzalez (1990) 51 C3d 1179, 1256, 275 CR 729; People v Ainsworth (1990) 217 CA3d 247, 251, 266 CR 175. Penal Code §1054.9 provides that authority in cases in which the defendant has been sentenced to death or to life without the possibility of parole (LWOP). In other cases, the defendant is not entitled to discovery to obtain information that would support the filing of a petition for postconviction relief. It may be possible to obtain information from government agencies when discovery is unavailable through the California Public Records Act, discussed in chap 12. See People v Gonzalez (1990) 51 C3d 1179, 1261, 275 CR 729. Discovery is ordinarily available at the request of a party to noncapital habeas proceedings after an order to show cause has issued. Board of Prison Terms v Superior Court (Ngo) (2005) 130 CA4th 1212, 1242, 31 CR3d 70. The court may also order discovery on its own motion when the court believes discovery is necessary to "ensure a full and fair hearing." 130 CA4th at 1242. No discovery is permitted before the issuance of an order to show cause, because a habeas petition that does not state a prima facie claim for relief does not create a cause of action and does not therefore confer discovery jurisdiction on the court. People v Gonzalez (1990) 51 C3d 1179, 1258, 275 CR 729.

Ø Note: Both Gonzalez and Ainsworth were capital cases. After they were decided, the legislature enacted Pen C §1054.9 (see Stats 2002, ch 1105), which authorizes the court to order limited postconviction discovery in capital and LWOP cases even when no petition for postconviction relief is pending.

Postconviction discovery in LWOP and death penalty cases. When the defense is prosecuting a postconviction writ of habeas corpus, or a motion to vacate the judgment, in a case in which a sentence of death or of life in prison without the possibility of parole has been imposed, the court must order that the defendant be provided reasonable access to discovery materials if counsel has made a good faith, unsuccessful effort to obtain those materials from trial counsel. Pen C §1054.9(a). "Discovery materials" are materials in the possession of the prosecution and law enforcement authorities to which the same defendant would have been entitled at time of trial. Pen C §1054.9(b). Discovery materials include materials that (1) were provided at trial but have since been lost to the defendant; (2) the prosecution should have provided at the time of trial because they came within the scope of a discovery order the trial court actually issued at that time, a statutory duty to provide discovery, or the constitutional duty to disclose exculpatory evidence; (3) the prosecution should have provided at time of trial because the defense specifically requested them at that time and was entitled to receive them; or (4) the prosecution had no obligation to provide at time of trial absent a specific defense request, but to which the defendant would have been entitled at time of trial had the defendant specifically requested them. In re Steele (2004) 32 C4th 682, 695, 10 CR3d 536. Court of appeal cases further elucidating the scope of Pen C §1054.9 include People v Superior Court (Maury) (2006) 145 CA4th 473, 51 CR3d 670; Kennedy v Superior Court (2006) 145 CA4th 359, 51 CR3d 637; Hurd v Superior Court (2006) 144 CA4th 1100, 1106, 50 CR3d 893; and Curl v Superior Court (2006) 140 CA4th 310, 330, 44 CR3d 320. Either the trial or the reviewing court has jurisdiction over the discovery motion, but when execution is not imminent, the motion should first be filed in the trial court that rendered the underlying judgment. The motion may be filed before the habeas petition or motion to vacate is filed. Steele, 32 C4th at 691.

Access to physical evidence will be granted to the defendant for the purpose of examination only on a showing that there is good cause to believe that access to that physical evidence is reasonably necessary to the defendant's effort to obtain relief. Pen C §1054.9(c).

Ø Note: Penal Code §1405 (see discussion below), provides the exclusive procedure for obtaining access to physical evidence for purposes of postconviction DNA testing. Pen C §1054.9(c).

The defendant is responsible for the actual costs of examination or copying when access to discovery materials is granted. Pen C §1054.9(d).

Motion for DNA testing. A defendant convicted of a felony, after trial or plea of guilty or nolo contendere, and currently imprisoned, may make a written motion for the performance of DNA testing. The motion is made in the trial court that entered the judgment of conviction. Pen C §1405(a); Richardson v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 1040, 1053, 77 CR3d 226. The right to file the motion is absolute and cannot be waived. Pen C §1405(m). Counsel may be appointed for an indigent prisoner. Pen C §1405(b). Among other conditions for granting the motion, a prima facie showing must be made that the evidence sought to be tested is material to the issue of the prisoner's identity as the guilty party. Pen C §1405(f)(4); Richardson, 43 C4th at 1049. Once materiality is shown, the defendant also must show that there is a reasonable probability, i.e., "a reasonable chance and not merely an abstract possibility," that the trial court verdict or sentence would have been more favorable had DNA test results been available. Richardson, 43 C4th at 1051; Pen C §1405(f)(5). An order granting the motion must identify the specific evidence to be tested and the DNA technology to be used. Pen C §1405(g). The cost of DNA testing ordered is to be borne by the state or the nonindigent prisoner, as the court may order in the interests of justice. Pen C §1405(i). An order denying a DNA testing motion is reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard. Richardson, 43 C4th at 1047.

§12.1 I. OVERVIEW

This chapter discusses (1) how to obtain records held by California state and local executive and administrative agencies (see §§12.2-12.15) and (2) court records other than juvenile court records (see §§12.16-12.22). On juvenile records, see chap 56.

This chapter does not cover access to public records through the following:

- Discovery. See chap 11.
- Subpoena duces tecum. See chap 11.
- Pitchess discovery of peace officer and custodial officer personnel records. See chap 11.
- The federal Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which governs access to the records of federal agencies in California. Procedures for obtaining records that federal agencies maintain on individuals are found in 5 USC §552a and in the Code of Federal Regulations appropriate to the agency concerned. Details of what records are kept and how they may be obtained are published annually in the Federal Register. For further discussion of obtaining federal records, see Bouchard & Franklin, Guidebook to the Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts (2d ed 1986).

This chapter does not discuss sealing, expunging, or dismissing criminal or juvenile records. These subjects are discussed in chap 41.

II. CALIFORNIA PUBLIC RECORDS ACT AND RELATED STATUTES

§12.2 A. General Description of Act

The main provisions of the California Public Records Act (CPRA) are in Govt C §§6250-6270. The CPRA broadly provides that, except as "exempted by law," public records must be available to the public for inspection. Govt C §6253(a). The CPRA was modeled on the federal Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (5 USC §552). Accordingly, courts look at the judicial construction and legislative history of the FOIA in interpreting the CPRA. See American Civil Liberties Union Found. v Deukmejian (1982) 32 C3d 440, 447, 186 CR 235. In 2004, California voters enacted Cal Const art I, §3(b), enshrining a public right of "access to information concerning the conduct of the people's business." It has been said that §3(b) is "a constitutionalization of the CPRA." Sutter's Place Inc. v Superior Court (2008) 161 CA4th 1370, 1382, 75 CR3d 9.

There is no single source, nor any standard procedure, for obtaining California public records. Individual agencies are free to adopt their own procedures to provide public access to records, as long as the procedures are consistent with the goals of the act. Govt C §6253.4. Thus, procedures for obtaining access to public records can vary from agency to agency, from county to county, from city to city, and even within a single county or city. However, the state and local agencies listed in Govt C §6253.4(a) must establish written guidelines, post them conspicuously, and make them available free of charge. While other agencies are not required to have written CPRA guidelines, some do. Often a simple request for the records will suffice; if an informal request does not succeed, then counsel might proceed more formally under the CPRA.

Each agency is required to assist members of the public to obtain the information they are seeking. If a request is too vague to enable the public agency to identify the records being sought, the agency must make a reasonable effort to assist the individual requesting the record by, for example, eliciting additional, clarifying information or by describing the information technology used to store the records. Govt C §6253.1. Except for that provision, the purpose of which is to help the agency to identify the record sought, the CPRA contains no provision authorizing an agency to inquire into the reason the records are sought. Moreover, the CPRA "does not allow limitations on access to a public record based upon the purpose for which the record is being requested." Govt C §6250.

Subsequent sections of the CPRA, Govt C §§6275-6276.48, consist of alphabetical lists of cross-references to statutes throughout the California codes that provide exemptions from CPRA disclosure. These are sometimes pejoratively referred to as the "secrecy statutes." The purpose of these lists is "to assist members of the public and state and local agencies in identifying exemptions to the California Public Records Act." Govt C §6275.

§12.3 B. Definition of Public Record

The CPRA defines "public records" in Govt C §6252(e):

> "Public records" includes any writing containing information relating to the conduct of the public's business prepared, owned, used, or retained by any state or local agency regardless of physical form or characteristics.

Case law gives this statutory definition a very broad reading. "[I]f a record is kept by an officer because it is necessary or convenient to the discharge of his official duty, it is a public record." (Internal quotation marks and citation omitted.) California State Univ., Fresno Ass'n v Superior Court (2001) 90 CA4th 810, 824, 108 CR2d 870. The term "public record" includes (90 CA4th at 825) > every conceivable kind of record that is involved in the governmental process and will pertain to any new form of record-keeping instrument as it is developed. Only purely personal information unrelated to "the conduct of the public's business" [is] exempt from this definition, i.e., the shopping list phoned from home, the letter to a public officer from a friend which is totally void of reference to governmental activities.

Ø Note: The statutory definition makes the form of the record immaterial. For the definition of a writing, see Evid C §250; Govt C §6252(f).

Certain records of a county public defender's office are not public records. In Coronado Police Officers Ass'n v Carroll (2003) 106 CA4th 1001, 1015, 131 CR2d 553, the court ruled that a database compiled by a county public defender, which was intended for use in representing individual clients, did not consist of public records, because the information was not kept for the conduct of the public's business but for the defense of individual, private clients. As an alternative holding, the court ruled that even if the information was a public record, it was exempt under Govt C §6255 because any public interest in disclosure was outweighed by the public interest served by nondisclosure. 106 CA4th at 1012.

Ø Note: Although the term "public records" is found in other California code sections, e.g., Govt C §6200 (misdemeanor for public officials to destroy public records without authorization), it is the Govt C §6252(e) definition that applies whenever the term is used in the CPRA. Govt C §6252(f). See Cook v Craig (1976) 55 CA3d 773, 782, 127 CR 712. See also 64 Ops Cal Atty Gen 317, 326 (1981) (noting that legislature "expressly chose not to adopt" definition of "record" used in §6200).

C. Specific California Public Records That Can Be Sought Under Public Records Act or Other State Statutes

§12.4 1. Law Enforcement Records

This section discusses what records kept by police and other law enforcement agencies are available to the general public. See chap 11 for discussion of obtaining records through criminal discovery techniques, such as reciprocal discovery, Pitchess motions, or subpoenas.

CPRA access to investigatory records of law enforcement agencies is governed by Govt C §6254(f); this includes records of investigations by the prosecutor's office that do not pertain to the defendant's case. Rivero v Superior Court (1997) 54 CA4th 1048, 63 CR2d 213.

While Govt C §6254(f) governs access to law enforcement records, it also exempts a wide array of law enforcement records from disclosure, such as records of complaints, investigations, intelligence information, and security procedures. Thus, §6254(f), read with §6254's introductory clause, begins by stating a broad rule of nondisclosure and only then does it list exceptions to the rule of nondisclosure.

The list of exceptions to the general rule of nondisclosure, that is, the list of records that can be disclosed, begins by providing that unless "disclosure … would endanger the safety of a person involved in an investigation or … the successful completion of the investigation or a related investigation," law enforcement agencies must make available to the public the following information about individuals the agency has arrested (Govt C §6254(f)(1)):

- The full name and occupation of every individual arrested by the agency;
- The individual's physical description, including date of birth, color of eyes and hair, sex, height, and weight;
- The time and date of arrest and booking;
- The location of the arrest and the factual circumstances surrounding it;
- The amount of bail;
- The time and manner of release or the place where the individual is currently being held; and
- All charges on which the individual is being held, including any outstanding warrants from other jurisdictions and parole or probation holds.

Subject, again, to the same array of restrictions, law enforcement agencies must also make available the following information, as it has been recorded, about a crime itself (Govt C §6254(f)(2)):

- The time, date, and location of occurrence;
- The time and date of the report;
- The name and age of the victim (except for certain domestic violence and sex offenses; see discussion below);
- The factual circumstances surrounding the crime or incident; and
- A general description of any injuries, property, or weapons involved.

Additional information may be available to victims and their representatives, including insurance companies handling specified claims.

The name of the victim of specified domestic violence or sex offenses, including forced prostitution resulting from human trafficking, may be withheld at the request of the victim or a minor victim's parent or guardian. Govt C §6254(f)(2). A law enforcement agency may not disclose the address or telephone number of a victim or witness of the alleged offense to "any arrested person, or to any person who may be a defendant in a criminal action." Pen C §841.5(a). However, this is not intended to impair the defendant's right to access information through the normal discovery process. Pen C §841.5(b). Subject to §841.5(a), licensed private investigators (and those requesting information for "scholarly, journalistic, political or governmental purposes") can obtain "the current address of every individual arrested by the agency and the current address of the victim of a crime." Govt C §6254(f)(3). The addresses of the victims of specified crimes are exempt from disclosure. Govt C §6254(f)(3). Law enforcement employees receiving reports alleging that the reporting person has been the victim of a sex offense, or was forced to commit an act of prostitution because he or she is the victim of human trafficking, must inform that person that his or her name will become a public record unless the person requests otherwise. Pen C §293.

Ø Note: A request for anonymity under the CPRA by an alleged victim of a sex offense does not make that person a "confidential witness" who can be excused from testifying at the alleged perpetrator's parole revocation hearing. In re Miller (2006) 145 CA4th 1228, 1235, 52 CR3d 256.

Other individuals involved in an investigation (e.g., witnesses, the subject of the record, and informants) have no greater right of access to the record or information from it, under the CPRA, than does any other member of the public. See, e.g., 65 Ops Cal Atty Gen 563 (1982), citing Los Angeles Police Dep't v Superior Court (1977) 65 CA3d 661, 135 CR 575.

Information from a law enforcement investigatory file that is exempt from disclosure under Govt C §6254(f) generally does not lose its exemption when the investigation is finished, even when no criminal charges were ever filed. Haynie v Superior Court (2001) 26 C4th 1061, 112 CR2d 80; Williams v Superior Court (1993) 5 C4th 337, 19 CR2d 882; Rackauckas v Superior Court (2002) 104 CA4th 169, 128 CR2d 234. Among the reasons for this is the ongoing need to protect witnesses, who might not come forward if they knew their names would be public when the investigation concludes.

Although Govt C §6254(f) exempts records of investigations and intelligence information from disclosure, a state agency cannot avoid its disclosure obligation by placing nonexempt data in a file labeled "intelligence" or "investigation." American Civil Liberties Union Found. v Deukmejian (1982) 32 C3d 440, 186 CR 235. The court held that §6254(f)'s "intelligence" exemption did not exempt from disclosure information that was compiled from public records, although it did exempt confidential and other private information. See also Rubin v City of Los Angeles (1987) 190 CA3d 560, 577, 235 CR 516 (local government had no "state secrets" exemption from disclosure under §6254(f)); Uribe v Howie (1971) 19 CA3d 194, 212, 96 CR 493 (nonexempt reports of pesticide usage compiled by county agriculture commissioner did not become exempt by being placed in file labeled "investigation" that was not currently being used for law enforcement or licensing investigation).

The CPRA cannot be used to obtain peace officer or custodial officer personnel records made confidential by Pen C §832.7(a), even though those records have been transferred to a county civil service commission that is hearing a disciplinary appeal. The Copley Press, Inc. v Superior Court (2006) 39 C4th 1272, 1284, 48 CR3d 183. However, Pen C §§832.7 and 832.8 do not exempt from disclosure the records of the Commission on Peace Officer Standards and Training containing names, employing departments, and hiring and termination dates of peace officers, provided the Commission may establish that information regarding particular officers or categories of officers should not be disclosed because disclosure would jeopardize the safety or efficacy of those officers. Commission on Peace Officer Standards & Training v Superior Court (2007) 42 C4th 278, 64 CR3d 661. See also International Fed'n of Prof'l & Technical Eng'rs, Local 21 AFL-CIO v Superior Court (2007) 42 C4th 319, 337, 64 CR3d 693.

Other reasons for nondisclosure are discussed in §12.13. On procedures used to obtain records under the CPRA, see §12.10; on court enforcement of CPRA, see §12.15.

§12.5 2. State and Local Summary Criminal History Information (Rap Sheets)

Treatment under CPRA. "Criminal offender record information" is generally exempt from disclosure under the CPRA. See Govt C §6276.12. However, other statutes may provide limited access in criminal cases.

Description. Each criminal justice agency in California must report to the Department of Justice (DOJ) specified personal identification and offense-related information about each arrest it makes. Pen C §§13100-13326. See Pen C §§13101 (defining criminal justice agency), 13102-13128 (describing information, e.g., name, birth date, aliases, date of arrest, and charges, required for each offender), and 13150-13154 (describing events, e.g., arrests and dispositions, that must be reported). This information, officially known as "criminal offender record information" (CORI) (see Pen C §13102), is commonly called a "rap sheet." Limitations on use of rap sheets are detailed in 11 Cal Code Regs §§701-708.

The DOJ maintains a central database containing master identification and criminal history records, including such information as "name, date of birth, physical description, fingerprints, photographs, date of arrests, arresting agencies and booking numbers, charges, dispositions, and similar data." Pen C §11105(a). See generally Pen C §§11100-11112. See also Govt C §§15150-15167 (establishing criminal history information database known as California Law Enforcement Telecommunications System (CLETS)).

The FBI also maintains similar rap sheets by compiling criminal history information and exchanging data with other law enforcement agencies. See 28 USC §534. Rap sheets in the FBI's possession are exempt from disclosure to third parties under the federal Freedom of Information Act. Department of Justice v Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press (1989) 489 US 749, 103 L Ed 2d 774, 109 S Ct 1468.

In addition, many local law enforcement agencies maintain criminal history databases. See Pen C §§13100, 13102, 13300. In Los Angeles County, for example, the Consolidated Criminal History Information System (CCHIS) provides computerized criminal history information to the courts.

Those entitled to obtain rap sheets. Although an individual's rap sheet falls within the definition of a public record, it is considered confidential and is accessible only to specified individuals, including prosecutors. See Pen C §11105(b)(4). An attorney representing a defendant in a criminal case, or parole revocation or revocation extension proceeding, may obtain a rap sheet if access is authorized by statute or case law. See Pen C §§11105(b)(9) (access to statewide criminal history information) and 13300(b)(9) (access to local criminal history information).

Procedure for defense to obtain defendant's rap sheet. Defense counsel can obtain a copy of the defendant's rap sheet from the DOJ under Pen C §11105(b)(9). The DOJ will provide an application form for obtaining the rap sheet on request. To obtain a rap sheet, a fingerprint card signed by the defendant and the required fee payable to the California Department of Justice should be sent to the Record Review Unit, Department of Justice, P.O. Box 903417, Sacramento, CA 94203-4170. See http://ag.ca.gov/fingerprints/security.php.

Counsel should contact local agencies for information on local procedures for requesting a client's rap sheet as authorized by Pen C §13300(b).

Counsel may also be able to get the defendant's rap sheet from the prosecutor through an informal or formal discovery request. See People v Little (1997) 59 CA4th 426, 432 n2, 68 CR2d 907 (defense access to rap sheets does not relieve prosecution of discovery obligations). But see People v Santos (1994) 30 CA4th 169, 176, 35 CR2d 719 (prosecution need not disclose witnesses' actual rap sheets).

Defense access to victim and witness rap sheets. Victim and witness rap sheets may be available to the defense through the prosecutor's obligation to disclose evidence favorable to the defendant (see U.S. v Agurs (1976) 427 US 97, 107, 49 L Ed 2d 342, 352, 96 S Ct 2392; Brady v Maryland (1963) 373 US 83, 10 L Ed 2d 215, 83 S Ct 1194; see also Izazaga v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 356, 378, 285 CR 231) and under California's statutory criminal discovery scheme, Pen C §§1054-1054.10. Defense counsel is specifically entitled to disclosure of "a felony conviction of any material witness whose credibility is likely to be critical to the outcome of the trial." Pen C §1054.1(d). For additional discussion of the obligation to disclose Brady materials, see §§11.8, 11.26. For additional discussion of California's statutory discovery scheme, see §§11.3-11.18.

Public access to information about registered sex offenders (Megan's Law). As required by Pen C §290.46, the DOJ operates a website where the public can access the names and addresses or zip codes of certain registered sex offenders. See http://www.meganslaw.ca.gov. Use of the information disclosed on the website is authorized "only to protect a person at risk." Pen C §290.46(l)(1).

Unauthorized disclosure. A state employee who knowingly provides a rap sheet to a person not authorized to receive it and the unauthorized person who receives the rap sheet are each guilty of a misdemeanor. Pen C §§11141-11143, 13302-13304. Newspersons are exempt from prosecution under Pen C §11143. McCall v Oroville Mercury Co. (1983) 142 CA3d 805, 191 CR 280. However, the release of public records by another agency that, by coincidence, corresponds to information in a rap sheet is not a violation. CBS Broad., Inc. v Superior Court (2001) 91 CA4th 892, 110 CR2d 889.

§12.6 3. Coroner's Inquest, Protocol, and Register

The coroner must inquire into the deaths specified in Govt C §27491, and notify law enforcement if that inquiry establishes reasonable grounds to suspect that a death was caused by a criminal act. Govt C §27491.1. The coroner's report on an autopsy, commonly called a protocol, is kept in the county coroner's office and is available to the public. See Govt C §27463. The coroner's register (or file) includes the name of the deceased, if known, identifying information, the circumstances of death, names of any witnesses, the cause of death, and the persons notified. The register is a public record generally open for public inspection. Govt C §§27463, 27463.5.

But some aspects of a coroner's investigation are not public records. If the coroner has obtained information made confidential by law (e.g., medical and psychiatric records) that contains confidential communications of the deceased (see, e.g., Evid C §§990-1007 (physician-patient privilege), 1010-1027 (psychotherapist-patient privilege)), then these remain confidential, unless introduced into evidence at a coroner's inquest. Govt C §27491.8(b). When the inquest is over, the court must seal the records if necessary to protect the confidentiality of the information. Govt C §27491.8(d).

When a death is caused by a law enforcement officer, law enforcement documents produced under a coroner's subpoena do not become part of the record of the inquest unless the law enforcement agency consents. Govt C §27498(b). Coroner and autopsy reports that constitute an investigation of a suspected crime in which the prospect of criminal law enforcement proceedings is concrete and definite are public records that are exempt from disclosure under this provision. Dixon v Superior Court (2009) 170 CA4th 1271, 1273, 88 CR3d 847.

§12.7 4. Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) Records

Public access to driver's license and other personal information in DMV records is sharply restricted. Under Veh C §1808(e), personal information is not publicly available unless the disclosure is in compliance with the Driver's Privacy Protection Act of 1994 (18 USC §§2721-2725). This Act restricts public access to personal information derived from motor vehicle records, including drivers' licenses and applications, except for certain specified purposes. For permissible purposes, see 18 USC §2721(b).

DMV records that are open to public inspection are listed primarily in Veh C §1808. The most important ones are the following:

- Abstracts of conviction. These are publicly available for 10 years for a driving under the influence violation, 7 years for a two-point violation, and 3 years for accidents and all other violations. Veh C §1808(b). They are also court records. See §12.19.
- Information on driver's license suspensions and revocations. These are, with some exceptions, public for 3 years after the end of the action or license reinstatement. Veh C §1808(c)-(d). They may also reflect court actions. See §12.19.
- Registration records. Only information disclosable under the Driver's Privacy Protection Act is available. Veh C §§1808.21-1808.23. See 13 Cal Code Regs §350.40.

Information that is generally exempt from disclosure includes the following:

- Residential addresses. Veh C §1808.21. But see Veh C §§1808.22-1808.23 for exceptions.
- Physical and mental condition of driver's license applicants. Veh C 1808.5; 55 Ops Cal Atty Gen 122 (1972).
- Traffic accident reports. Traffic accident reports are confidential. Veh C §§20012, 20014. They may also be privileged official records under Evid C §1040. Vallejos v California Highway Patrol (1979) 89 CA3d 781, 786, 152 CR 846. They may, however, be discoverable by the defendant in a criminal case. State ex rel Dep't of Transp. v Superior Court (1985) 37 C3d 847, 210 CR 219. Counsel whose client is accused of a driving offense is entitled to obtain the accident and supplemental reports from the law enforcement agency that has them. Veh C §20012.

Records concerning vehicle registration, title to motor vehicles, driver licensing, and dealers, dismantlers, and transporters are maintained by the DMV. Inquiries can be sent to Department of Motor Vehicles Division of Information Services (Registration Records/Histories Unit), P.O. Box 944247, Sacramento, CA 94244-2470, (916) 657-7827 (for law enforcement agencies).

The DMV must maintain records of convictions for as long as they (1) can be used as a basis for license suspension or revocation or (2) can be used with other records to establish that an individual is a "negligent driver." Veh C §1807.

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/12 PUBLIC RECORDS/§12.8 5. Other California Public Records

§12.8 5. Other California Public Records

Other information subject to disclosure, at least on a limited basis, includes:

- Complaints against public employees. While records of peace and custodial officers are available only through the Pitchess procedure discussed in chap 11, complaints against other public employees, and related records, may be available through the CPRA. For example, records of a school district employee were ordered disclosed in Bakersfield City Sch. Dist. v Superior Court (2004) 118 CA4th 1041, 13 CR3d 517. The court also held that neither the imposition of discipline nor a finding that a charge of misconduct was true was a prerequisite to disclosure when the alleged misconduct was substantial in nature and reasonable cause existed to believe the complaint was well founded.
- School pupil records. School pupil records are not exempt from disclosure under the CPRA. Access to these records is governed by Ed C §§49073-49079. Information concerning a student must be furnished in compliance with a court order or lawfully issued subpoena. The school district must make a reasonable effort to notify the parent or guardian and the pupil before complying with a subpoena. In the case of a court order, advance notice must be given if lawfully possible considering the requirements of the order. Ed C §49077.
- Mental health records maintained by public entities. An individual's mental health records that are maintained by a public agency, including evaluations related to court petitions, are generally exempt from disclosure. Govt C §6254(c). See Welf & I C §§5202, 5328. The records may be obtained by a subpoena duces tecum, although generally an in camera review and court order are required. See People v Hammon (1997) 15 C4th 1117, 65 CR2d 1.
- Grand jury transcripts. Transcripts of grand jury proceedings are available to the public 10 days after delivery to the defendant, unless the court orders otherwise to secure the defendant's right to a fair trial. Pen C §938.1(b). The defendant need show only a "reasonable likelihood" that the transcript's disclosure will prejudice his or her right to a fair trial to prevent disclosure. Alvarez v Superior Court (2007) 154 CA4th 642, 645, 64 CR3d 854. The grand jury cannot, however, disclose raw evidentiary materials gathered during a secret watchdog investigation. McClatchy Newspapers v Superior Court (1988) 44 C3d 1162, 245 CR 774. The court can seal a grand jury transcript, and related proceedings related to a motion to dismiss an indictment, when necessary to avoid impairment of the defendant's right to a fair trial, protect the privacy interests of others, and protect ongoing law enforcement investigations. People v Jackson (2005) 128 CA4th 1009, 1027, 27 CR3d 596.
- Juvenile court and child protective agency records. Access to juvenile court and child protective agency records is governed by Welf & I C §827.
- Concealed weapon permits. Access to concealed weapon permits is subject to the weighing process required by CBS, Inc. v Block (1986) 42 C3d 646, 230 CR 362. But Govt C §6254(u) exempts much information from those records. Exempt information includes where and when the applicant is vulnerable to attack, medical or psychological history of the applicant or family; and home address and phone numbers of peace officers and bench officers. The applicant's criminal history information must also be deleted. 62 Ops Cal Atty Gen 595 (1979).
- Prisoner and prison records. Regulations governing public access to information about prisoners and prisons can be found in 15 Cal Code Regs §§3260-3267. Anyone can telephone the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation's "Inmate Locater/ID-Warrants Unit" at (916) 445-6713, give a person's CDCR number or full name and date of birth and, if the person is in prison, receive the inmate's location and mailing address but not the prisoner's release date. This phone number is available 24 hours a day. An inquiry may also be faxed to the Identification Unit at (916) 322-0500. It may take up to 7 days to update location information for new or transferring prisoners. The warden is required to maintain case records as defined in Pen C §2081.5 and make them "available to the Board of Prison Terms" (now called the Board of Parole Hearings (Pen C §5075(a)). The California Supreme Court has said this implies that others, including the prisoner, are not authorized to receive those records. People v Marshall (1996) 13 C4th 799, 841, 55 CR2d 347. Likewise, the court in Yarish v

Nelson (1972) 27 CA3d 893, 901, 104 CR 205, cited Pen C §2081.5 in denying a media CPRA request for access to prison records.

Ø Practice tip: If the agency with the record says the record is not public, then check Govt C §§6275-6276.48 to verify.

§12.9 D. Location and Accessibility of Records

The California Public Records Act (CPRA) (Govt C §§6250-6270) requires that public records be accessible to the public at all times during office hours. Govt C §6253(a).

Under Govt C §6253.1, the agency must take a number of specified steps to assist the requester in making "a focused and effective request that reasonably describes an identifiable record or records."

Unauthorized destruction of a public record can be a crime (Govt C §6200), but California state (Govt C §14750), city (Govt C §34090), and county (Govt C §26205.1) governments may empower their agencies to destroy specified records under certain conditions. See 64 Ops Cal Atty Gen 435 (1981). For example, tapes of police radio broadcasts need be kept only for 100 calendar days. Govt C §26202.6. In addition, Pen C §13103 allows any criminal justice agency to destroy original records if they have been copied according to rules given in the statute.

E. Procedures for Obtaining Public Records

§12.10 1. Procedures Applicable to General Public

There is no standard method of obtaining California public records. Many agencies, including many law enforcement departments, place instructions for making requests for police reports and other CPRA information on their websites.

Certain designated agencies must post written guidelines for obtaining records in a conspicuous place and make copies of the procedure available on request. Govt C §6253.4(a). The agencies that are most relevant to criminal law are the departments of Motor Vehicles, Corrections and Rehabilitation (including the Division of Juvenile Justice), Justice, Health Care Services, Employment and Development, Social Services, Mental Health, Developmental Services, and Alcohol and Drug Abuse.

First, counsel should simply ask for the records and should not hesitate to ask for assistance. Govt C §6253(a). Be ready to pay any necessary fees if copies are desired. Govt C §6253(b). A written request is not necessary. See Los Angeles Times v Alameda Corridor Transp. Auth. (2001) 88 CA4th 1381, 1392, 107 CR2d 29.

If it becomes necessary to invoke the CPRA, the request should be, but does not have to be, in writing. Whether made orally or in writing, the request should "reasonably describe an identifiable record." Govt C §6253(b).

Ø Note: If a request is too broad or too vague to enable the agency to ascertain what record is sought, the agency must make reasonable efforts to help the requester formulate a request for an identifiable record. Govt C §6253.1.

Counsel who anticipates an objection (see §12.12) might address any possible objections in the written request.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.11 2. Special Access by Prosecutor

Both the CPRA and other statutes and authorities grant special prosecutorial access to certain records. See, e.g., Govt C §§6262-6265. Disclosure of records to the prosecutor does not make them available to the general public. Govt C §6265. On the effect of disclosure to the general public, see §12.14.

Under the CPRA, a state or local agency must grant a district attorney's request to inspect or copy any nonexempt public records. Govt C §6263. The general exemption from disclosure for "complaints to, or investigations conducted by, any state or local agency for licensing purposes" does not apply when a district attorney asks to inspect such records. Govt C §6262.

The prosecutor can petition the court for access to information a state or local agency refuses to disclose. Govt C §6264.

Other records to which the prosecutor has special access include:

- Juvenile court records of any delinquency proceeding (Welf & I C §827(a)(1)(B));
- Prison records (see 13 Ops Cal Atty Gen 180 (1949));
- Police or custodial officer personnel records, if being used in the course of an investigation of police or custodial officer conduct (Pen C §832.7);
- Child abuse information (Pen C §§11167, 11167.5, 11170; Welf & I C §827; see 65 Ops Cal Atty Gen 335 (1982)); and
- Information about present and past employers of victims, missing persons, potential witnesses, and persons for whom a felony arrest warrant has issued (Un Ins C §1095(i)).

When an agency refuses to honor a prosecutor's request to inspect and copy public documents not exempt under the CPRA, the prosecutor may petition the court for relief. Govt C §6264. The procedures appear to be the same for prosecutors as for other persons trying to obtain public records. See §12.10.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.12 3. Agency Response to Public Records Request

When an agency receives a request for public records, it has 10 days to determine whether the information sought is disclosable in whole or in part. Govt C §6253(c). Once this determination is made, the agency must promptly notify the person who made the request of its decision and the reasons for it. If the request is granted, the agency must state the estimated date and time that the records will be made available. Govt C §6253(c). In unusual circumstances, the agency may extend the 10-day determination period up to 14 more days on written notice by the head of the agency, or by his or her designee, of the reasons for the extension and expected date of the determination. Govt C §6253(c).

If the agency concludes that the requested records are disclosable, the notification of determination must specify an estimated time and date when the records will be available. Govt C §6253(c).

If an agency maintains disclosable public records in electronic format, it must make those records available in that format on request. Govt C §6253.9. Except in specified circumstances, the cost to the requester is limited to the direct cost of producing an electronic copy of the record. Govt C §6253.9(a)-(b).

An agency that withholds records, in whole or in part, must explain the following in writing (Govt C §6255):

- Why the record is exempt from disclosure under a specific provision of the CPRA (see, e.g., Govt C §§6254-6254.25); or
- Why, under the facts of the particular case, the public interest in not disclosing the record "clearly outweighs" the public interest in disclosure.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.13 4. Reasons for Nondisclosure

If an agency refuses to disclose a record, it must give written notice of the reason for refusal. Govt C §6255(a). Government Code §6254 provides several general exemptions from disclosure, and Govt C §§6275-6276.48 list many specific statutory exemptions. The burden of showing a basis for exemption is on the withholding agency. San Gabriel Tribune v Superior Court (1983) 143 CA3d 762, 773, 192 CR 415. Even when a statutory exemption exists for some information in a record, if exempt and nonexempt information can be separated, the nonexempt portions may have to be disclosed. American Civil Liberties Union Found. v Deukmejian (1982) 32 C3d 440, 449, 186 CR 235.

Among the most important exemptions from disclosure are the following:

- Records pertaining to pending litigation. Govt C §6254(b).
- Personnel, medical, or similar files, the disclosure of which would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Govt C §6254(c).
- Records exempt from disclosure or for which disclosure is prohibited by federal or state law. Govt C §6254(k). This limitation includes privileged communications. See, e.g., San Gabriel Tribune v Superior Court (1983) 143 CA3d 762, 192 CR 415 (trade secret privilege unsuccessfully asserted by contractor who provided the documents to public agency). Nondisclosure based on privilege is subject to the validity of the claim of privilege. See, e.g., Board of Med. Quality Assur. v Hazel Hawkins Mem. Hosp. (1982) 135 CA3d 561, 566, 185 CR 405.
- Correspondence of and to the Governor or employees of the Governor's office or in the custody of, or maintained by, the Governor's legal affairs secretary. Govt C §6254(l).
- Many law enforcement records. Govt C §6254(f), discussed in §§12.4-12.5.
- Information that would reveal the identity of applicants for concealed weapons permits. Govt C §6254(u), discussed in §12.8.

In addition to the specific exemptions in Govt C §6254, section 6255(a) permits an agency to refuse to disclose information if it concludes that in "the particular case the public interest served by not disclosing the record clearly outweighs the public interest served by disclosure of the record." Govt C §6255(a). The specific exemption provisions of Govt C §6254 are also permissive, and counsel can argue that the public interest would be better served by disclosure than by nondisclosure under the facts of the case. See Govt C §6254; 62 Ops Cal Atty Gen 402, 405 (1979).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.14 5. Effect of Disclosure: Loss of Ability to Deny Subsequent Request for Disclosure

Once an agency discloses a particular record to one member of the public, it must usually be disclosed to all members of the public. Govt C §6254.5 (waiver); San Gabriel Tribune v Superior Court (1983) 143 CA3d 762, 780, 192 CR 415 (respondent disposal company waived any privacy interests by voluntarily submitting information to support and justify rate increase).

This rule does not apply when a statute (or case law) authorizes disclosure of a record only to a particular person or class of people, e.g., to a criminal defendant (see Govt C §6260 (CPRA does not limit or impair any discovery rights in criminal cases); see also In re Ricky B. (1978) 82 CA3d 106, 113, 146 CR 828) or to a prosecutor (see §12.11). In such instances, disclosure to one does not require disclosure to all. See, e.g., Rackauckas v Superior Court (2002) 104 CA4th 169, 128 CR2d 234 (letter disclosed in confidence to members of another state agency did not lose exemption under Govt C §6254(f)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.15 6. Court Enforcement of the Right to Public Records

Anyone may obtain court review of an agency's denial of a request to inspect or copy a public record by seeking injunctive relief or a writ of mandate. Govt C §6258. The prosecutor will usually file under Govt C §6264, but anyone can use the general public's authorization of Govt C §6258. Private parties—but not governmental agencies—have the right to seek declaratory relief under §6258. Filarsky v Superior Court (2002) 28 C4th 419, 121 CR2d 844.

Counsel should file a verified petition in the court of the county where the records are located. Govt C §6259. The deadline for the agency's response is then set by the trial court. Govt C §6258. The trial court handles the matter as an order to show cause. Govt C §6259. The trial court's decision is not appealable but is reviewable by writ petition. Govt C §6259(c). The writ petition must be filed within 20 calendar days after service of written notice of entry of the trial court's order or, for good cause shown, within an extra 20 calendar days after that. Govt C §6259(c). Court costs and reasonable attorney fees may be awarded to a prevailing plaintiff or, if the plaintiff's case was frivolous, to the agency. Govt C §6259(d).

Refusal to obey the court's order of disclosure is punishable by contempt. Govt C §6259(c).

III. COURT RECORDS

§12.16 A. General Rule of Availability

The CPRA does not apply to court records. See Govt C §6252(a). While a court has inherent power to control its own records, and no statute provides for access to court records, the right to inspect court records must be freely allowed. Estate of Hearst (1977) 67 CA3d 777, 782, 136 CR 821. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.500-2.507 ("reasonable" public access to electronic trial court records), 2.550(c) (court records presumed to be open). See also CCP §1904 (judicial records defined); Cal Rules of Ct 2.400-2.585 (trial court records).

"Court records" for the purpose of public access are documents that represent and reflect the official work of the court as well as various documents filed in or received by the court, including (1) documents showing scheduling and administration of cases; (2) assignment of judicial officers and administrators; (3) official court minutes; (4) all written orders, dispositions, and judgments; (5) official reports of oral proceedings; (6) pleadings and motions filed by the parties; and (7) evidence admitted in court proceedings. But preliminary drafts, personal notes, and rough records are not public records. Copley Press, Inc. v Superior Court (1992) 6 CA4th 106, 113, 7 CR2d 841. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.502(1).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.17 B. Arrest Warrants, Search Warrants, and Supporting Affidavits

After filing a criminal complaint, the prosecutor usually asks a magistrate to issue an arrest warrant. The arrest warrant is available to the public in the court where it is filed, because it is a judicial record. See CCP §1904; People v Landa (1973) 30 CA3d 487, 491, 106 CR 329. However, affidavits in support of arrest warrants are frequently filed under seal. If so, a court order is usually necessary to obtain access.

Arrest warrant information is also contained in a variety of computerized files, such as those maintained in the California Law Enforcement Telecommunications System (CLETS) and the National Crime Information Center (NCIC). CLETS must "be used exclusively for … official business." Govt C §15153. Knowingly accessing and, without permission, making use of any data from a computer system is a crime. Pen C §502(c)(2). Likewise, a peace officer who misuses CLETS information is subject to discipline. See, e.g., Gilbert v City of Sunnyvale (2005) 130 CA4th 1264, 1281, 31 CR3d 297.

Search warrants (Pen C §§1523-1542) are not public records when issued but generally become so when returned or 10 days after issuance, whichever comes first. Pen C §1534(a). They are kept in the clerk's office of the court whose magistrate issued the warrant.

Affidavits in support of search warrants are generally subject to the same rules as the warrants themselves. But when it is deemed necessary to protect an informant's identity, the court can order portions of a search warrant affidavit, and occasionally even the warrant itself, sealed and thus not available to the public. People v Hobbs (1994) 7 C4th 948, 962, 30 CR2d 651. Subject to a narrow exception, the clerk of the court generally must be the custodian of such sealed records. People v Galland (2008) 45 C4th 354, 368, 86 CR3d 841.

When a search warrant has been executed and a return made to the court, but no case has been initiated, a computerized search of the clerk's files, guided by the address searched, will often yield the warrant, its supporting affidavit, and its return. These may also be records of the law enforcement agency that investigated the case or served the warrant. See §12.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.18 C. Inspection or Administrative Warrants

An inspection warrant, also called an administrative warrant, is a court-approved authorization permitting government officials to conduct an inspection required or authorized by state or local laws or regulations. These warrants generally relate to building, electrical, fire, health, plumbing, labor, safety, or zoning and include certain inspections by agencies such as the Departments of Agriculture and Fish and Game. CCP §§1822.50-1822.60. An administrative warrant is generally required for regulatory inspections, but it need not be supported by probable cause to believe that a violation of the regulation has occurred. Marshall v Barlow's, Inc. (1978) 436 US 307, 56 L Ed 2d 305, 98 S Ct 1816. "Cause," as defined in CCP §1822.52, is required unless some other provision of law makes another standard applicable; a statement that consent has been refused, or that there are circumstances justifying failure to seek consent, is also required. CCP §1822.51. But if the inspection is based on the belief that a criminal law violation has occurred, an administrative warrant will not suffice, and the requirements of a criminal search warrant must be met. Michigan v Tyler (1978) 436 US 499, 56 L Ed 2d 486, 98 S Ct 1942; Salwasser Mfg. Co. v Municipal Court (1979) 94 CA3d 223, 156 CR 292. Administrative warrants are kept in the files of the clerk of the court of origin.

Although inspection, or administrative, warrants are court records, the agency will also have copies, which can also be accessed under the CPRA.

§12.19 D. Court Hearings, Records of Proceedings, and Filings

With only narrow—or specific statutorily defined—exceptions, criminal and civil trials and other live judicial proceedings are open to the public. CCP §124 (except as provided in Fam C §214 "or any other provision of law, the sittings of every court shall be public"); Cal Rules of Ct 2.550(c) (unless confidentiality is required by law, court records are presumed to be open). See also Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (1984) 464 US 501, 510, 78 L Ed 2d 629, 104 S Ct 819 (criminal trials); NBC Subsidiary (KNBC-TV), Inc. v Superior Court (1999) 20 C4th 1178, 86 CR2d 778 (civil trials).

Statutory exceptions to the rule of open hearings include Fam C §214 (certain family law proceedings), Evid C §915 (proceedings to determine certain privileges), Pen C §1054.7 (denial or regulation of discovery), Welf & I C §345 (dependency proceedings), and Welf & I C §676 (most delinquency proceedings). Case law also authorizes closed court proceedings in limited circumstances. See, e.g., People v Marsden (1970) 2 C3d 118, 84 CR 156 (authorizing in camera proceedings on adequacy of appointed counsel). On the contents of court minutes for in camera hearings and the disposition of examined documents, see Cal Rules of Ct 2.585.

Statutory exceptions to the rule on open records include Pen C §§987(c) (defendant's financial statements for requesting appointed counsel), 987.9 (application for funding for investigators and experts in death penalty case), 1203.03(b) (90-day observation reports), and 1203.05 (probation reports). On mental health records, see Welf & I C §5328(f) (specified records can be disclosed to "the courts, as necessary to the administration of justice"). On alcohol and drug treatment patient records, see 42 CFR §§2.61-2.67. On medical records in general, see 45 CFR §§164.500-164.534.

Other records can be sealed, in accordance with the elaborate procedure set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 2.550 and 2.551. See §12.22.

Files in freedom from parental custody and control, adoption, and juvenile court proceedings are statutorily exempt from disclosure except in specified circumstances. See Fam C §§7805 (confidentiality of freedom from parental custody and control records), 9200 (confidentiality of adoption records); Welf & I C §827 (confidentiality of juvenile court records). Wescott v Yuba County (1980) 104 CA3d 103, 106, 163 CR 385. Mental health proceedings under the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (Welf & I C §§5000-5550) are, however, public records. 53 Ops Cal Atty Gen 25 (1970).

Court records usually are kept in files in the court clerk's office in the court in which the case was litigated. While a case is active, sometimes the file is kept by the judge or the judge's courtroom.

Criminal cases are indexed by the defendant's last name. With multiple defendants, the names are listed in alphabetical order. Each court maintains yearly indexes of its criminal cases by the defendants' last names. Govt C §69842. In felony cases, the clerk also maintains a register of actions and keeps minutes of all orders, judgments, and decrees. Govt C §§69844-69845. In misdemeanor and infraction cases, the clerk may instead keep a docket that records all proceedings and orders in each case. Pen C §1428. On record keeping generally, see Govt C §§69841-69848. On destruction of old court records, see Govt C §§68150-68153.

When requesting a record from a court file by mail, counsel should designate the file number, the defendant's name, the specific document(s) desired, the date on which the proceeding occurred or on which the document was filed, and any other information that will help the clerk locate the record. Counsel should also provide a self-addressed stamped envelope large enough to hold the requested documents. Counsel should tell the clerk when the record is needed; clerks often take 2 weeks or longer to send requested documents. Sometimes it is quicker for counsel to go to the court that has the records and obtain copies in person.

Because court reporter notes are not always transcribed, transcripts of proceedings taken down by a court reporter often do not exist in court files. There are some exceptions for proceedings that must be transcribed: Transcripts of preliminary hearings (Pen C §869(f)), grand jury proceedings (Pen C §938.1(b)), and felony pleas and sentencing hearings (Pen C §§859a(a), 1203.01) are kept in the court file.

The court clerk's record for a particular proceeding usually states only whether it was reported and the name of the reporter. Counsel who desires a transcription must then find out the contact information for the court reporter and arrange for that person to transcribe the notes. Sometimes the reporter is willing to read portions to counsel so that counsel may determine whether a transcription is necessary. Transcription can be costly. If the defendant is indigent, or can afford a lawyer but not ancillary services, and if the transcript is not one to which he or she is entitled as of right, it may be necessary to apply to the court for transcription fees. See, e.g., Corenevsky v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 307, 319, 204 CR 165 (indigent defendant's right to effective assistance of counsel requires public funding of necessary ancillary services); Tran v Superior Court (2001) 92 CA4th 1149, 1153, 112 CR2d 506 (following Corenevsky; defendant's relatives had paid for lawyer). In moving for funding of ancillary services, counsel should follow the procedures outlined in §§18.10-18.12 for requesting appointment of an expert.

Ø Note: An increasing number of misdemeanor and infraction proceedings are being reported electronically by video and audio recordings. These can be more difficult to transcribe and can require longer advance notice.

Although not included in the CCP §1904 definition of judicial records, court files usually contain copies of motions and opposition to motions, and those too are considered public records. See Estate of Hearst (1977) 67 CA3d 777, 136 CR 821.

§12.20 E. Probation Reports

A probation officer's report filed with the court may be inspected or copied freely by the general public for 60 days after the date judgment is pronounced or probation is granted. Pen C §1203.05(a). (This includes judgments of acquittal or dismissal.) After that, access for the general public is by a petition and court order only. Pen C §1203.05(b). When a member of the general public, such as a news organization, files a petition seeking a probation report, the subject of the report is entitled to notice and an in camera hearing on the release of his or her personal information. If the subject does not ask for a hearing, the court may release the entire report. If a hearing is held, the court must balance the subject's interest in the confidentiality of personal information against the potential benefit from its release, and then may exercise its discretion to redact personal information before releasing the remainder of the report. People v Connor (2004) 115 CA4th 669, 676, 9 CR3d 521. An order for the release of a probation report is appealable under Pen C §1237(b). 115 CA4th at 687.

The district attorney, the subject of the report, and any other authorized person may inspect or obtain a copy of the report at any time. Pen C §1203.05(d)-(f).

§12.21 F. Juror Information

After a trial is over, court-ordered access to members of the jury by parties, and their attorneys and representatives, is quite restricted. See CCP §§206, 237. During the trial, juror names are available to the parties and to the public, unless the court, after a hearing, finds a compelling interest to keep these confidential or limited. CCP §237(a)(1). After the trial, all juror information is sealed. CCP §237(a)(2). Access to the court's records is allowed only on court order after a hearing, of which the juror is notified and at which the juror can make his or her views known. CCP §237(b).

After the verdict, trial counsel can discuss the jury deliberations and verdict with a jury member at a reasonable time and place if the juror consents. See CCP §§206, 237. Note that "reasonable time" is not restricted to immediately after the verdict. Counsel (or counsel's representative) who contacts a juror to discuss the deliberations or the verdict more than 24 hours after the verdict must (CCP §206(c)):

- Identify the case and the subject of the interview;
- Tell the juror what party he or she represents; and
- Inform the juror that he or she has:
- An absolute right not to discuss the deliberations or the verdict and
- A right to review and have a copy of any declaration that is to be filed with the court.

For discussion of posttrial interviews with jurors, see §33.46.

§12.22 G. Standards and Procedures for Sealing Other Court Records

Records that are not required by law to be kept confidential, and that are not discovery motions and records, are presumed to be open but can be sealed in accordance with the procedure set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 2.550 and 2.551. Cal Rules of Ct 2.550(a), (c).

Ø Note: Since Rules 2.550 and 2.551 apply in criminal cases (Advisory Committee Comment to Rule 2.550) and do not apply to discovery motions and records, apparently a party seeking to seal a motion made under Pen C §§1054-1054.7 need not follow the procedure set forth in Rules 2.550 and 2.551. A Pitchess declaration, to protect lawyer-client privilege and attorney work product, can be filed under seal. People v Garcia (2007) 42 C4th 63, 71, 63 CR3d 948. It is unclear whether Garcia will extend to other statutory discovery methods such as subpoenas (see Pen C §1326) or motions to disclose the identity of an informant (see Evid C §1041).

Under Rules 2.550 and 2.551, a record must not be filed under seal without a court order, and a court order cannot issue solely because the parties agree. Cal Rules of Ct 2.551(a). The court may order that a record be filed under seal only if it expressly finds facts establishing that there is an overriding interest supporting the sealing that would be prejudiced if the records are not sealed, and that overcomes the public's right of access. The court must also find that the sealing is narrowly tailored and there is no less restrictive means to achieve the overriding interest. Cal Rules of Ct 2.550(d). This standard is based on the standard expounded in NBC Subsidiary (KNBC-TV), Inc. v Superior Court (1999) 20 C4th 1178, 86 CR2d 778 (Advisory Committee Comment to Rule 2.550), which was applied in People v Jackson (2005) 128 CA4th 1009, 1021, 27 CR3d 596 (trial court properly sealed search warrant and supporting affidavit).

A party requesting filing under seal must file a motion accompanied by a memorandum and a declaration. Cal Rules of Ct 2.551(b). The party must also lodge the subject records with the court under "conditional seal" in accord with prescribed procedures. Cal Rules of Ct 2.551(b)(4), (d).

Records filed publicly must not disclose material contained in a record that is sealed, conditionally under seal, or subject to a pending motion to seal. Cal Rules of Ct 2.551(c).

A sealed record must not be unsealed except on court order. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.551(h).

§13.1 I. OVERVIEW

Defense counsel may file a motion in the trial court under Pen C §995(a)(2) to dismiss an information because of error that occurred at the preliminary examination (also called preliminary hearing). The general statutory grounds are that the defendant was not legally committed or that he or she was committed without reasonable or probable cause. Pen C §995(a)(2). Indictments may be attacked because they were not found, endorsed, or presented as prescribed in the Penal Code, or because a defendant was indicted without reasonable or probable cause. Pen C §995(a)(1). Case law has established a number of specific areas of review within these broad guidelines; they are discussed in §§13.6-13.23. Failure to challenge error that occurred at the preliminary examination by Pen C §995 motion waives that issue on appeal. Pen C §996; People v Crandell (1988) 46 C3d 833, 855, 251 CR 227.

A Pen C §995 motion may challenge one or more counts of an information or indictment (People v Sherwin (2000) 82 CA4th 1404, 98 CR2d 888), including penalty enhancement clauses (People v Superior Court (Mendella) (1983) 33 C3d 754, 191 CR 1) and special circumstance allegations (People v Ghent (1987) 43 C3d 739, 239 CR 82). Misdemeanors that are charged in an information or indictment may also be challenged. People v Thiecke (1985) 167 CA3d 1015, 213 CR 731. See also Cook v Superior Court (1970) 4 CA3d 822, 84 CR 664.

The Pen C §995 motion is normally based on the court reporter's transcript of the preliminary examination or grand jury proceedings. See Stanton v Superior Court (1987) 193 CA3d 265, 270, 239 CR 328; People v Crudgington (1979) 88 CA3d 295, 299, 151 CR 737. However, some issues have been reviewed under §995 on the basis of facts outside that record. See §13.4 for examples.

An accused has the right to a transcript of the testimony on which the information or indictment is based. Pen C §§869, 938.1. The reporter is required to deliver the original transcript and copies for the accused to the clerk within 10 days after the holding order or the finding of the indictment. Pen C §§869(e), 938.1(a).

The judge hearing the Pen C §995 motion sits as an appellate judge and reviews the decision of the magistrate (in the case of an information) or grand jury (in the case of an indictment). People v Laiwa (1983) 34 C3d 711, 718, 195 CR 503. The §995 judge is unable to reweigh the evidence; when the magistrate has made findings of fact that are supported by substantial evidence, those findings are conclusive. People v Slaughter (1984) 35 C3d 629, 638, 200 CR 448.

If defense counsel's Pen C §995 motion is denied, he or she may seek a writ of prohibition. If the grounds are that the defendant was committed without reasonable or probable cause, the petition must be filed within 15 calendar days after the order denying the motion. Pen C §999a. The 15-day time limit does not apply when the grounds of the §995 motion are that the defendant was committed illegally or that a substantial right was violated. To be reviewable by writ, a §995 motion on any ground must be made within 60 days after arraignment in the trial court, unless the defense was unaware of the issue or had no opportunity to raise it. Pen C §1510.

If the Pen C §995 motion is granted and the prosecution seeks pretrial review, it is usually by way of appeal. Pen C §1238(a)(1). If only certain counts are dismissed, the prosecution may appeal the dismissed counts or clauses and either proceed to trial on the remaining counts (People v Superior Court (Caudle) (1990) 221 CA3d 1190, 270 CR 751) or seek a stay of trial from the appellate court (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.112(c), 8.116).

The prosecution may also seek pretrial review through a writ of mandate when an appeal is inadequate. See People v Superior Court (Bolden) (1989) 209 CA3d 1109, 257 CR 678. Another alternative available to the prosecution is to bypass pretrial review in favor of recharging the offense in a new felony complaint.

When there is a minor error in an information, the prosecutor may ask the Pen C §995 judge to remand the case to the committing magistrate to correct the errors alleged by the defendant. Pen C §995a(b)(1); Caple v Superior Court (1987) 195 CA3d 594, 241 CR 735. In addition, the parties may agree to have the §995 court act as a magistrate and conduct further proceedings. Pen C §995a(b)(1). A ruling on defense counsel's motion is then deferred until the proceedings before the magistrate are concluded. The usual effect is to defeat the §995 motion. The prosecutor may use this procedure only once for each information filed. Pen C §995a(b)(3).

Counsel should check local court rules for local Pen C §995 practice, or, if there are none, should consult the court clerk of a judge who hears §995 motions, or local counsel. A common defense counsel practice is to set the date for a hearing on the motion at the defendant's arraignment in the trial court. Local rules then set deadlines for defense counsel to submit a supporting memorandum, and for the prosecutor to respond with an opposition memorandum. If no local rules apply, the deadlines in Cal Rules of Ct 4.111 apply.

The defendant must be present at the hearing, unless his or her presence has been waived. See Pen C §977(b). The judge may indicate which issues he or she considers most important. It is common for defense counsel to argue first, the prosecutor second, and defense counsel last. The arguments usually take no more than 10 to 20 minutes. The judge usually announces his or her decision immediately from the bench. On occasion, however, the judge may request additional memorandums and put the case over to a later date for decision. The most common issues are discussed in §§13.6-13.23.

Action	Deadline	Authority
Setting Pen C §995 motion.	Most counties have local court rules that specify type of notice. It is most common at arraignment in the trial court to set motion for hearing. It can be set before or after entering plea.	See local court rules; if none apply, comply with Cal Rules of Ct 4.111.
Time for hearing on Pen C §995 motion.	No time set by statute or California Rules of Court. Usually heard about 1 month after the trial court arraignment.	See local court rules. See also Pen C §997, which requires motion to be heard when made unless court for cause postpones hearing (not followed in most counties).
Appellate review of Pen C §995 motion.	Available only if motion "made" (see §13.26) no later than 60 calendar days after defendant's arraignment in trial court (see §13.26), unless defendant was unaware of issue or had no opportunity to raise it.	Pen C §1510; People v Ghent (1987) 43 C3d 739, 239 CR 82. See also Pen C §996.
Prosecution review of dismissal at preliminary examination under Pen C §871.5.	Prosecutor must make Pen C §871.5 motion within 15 calendar days after dismissal.	Pen C §871.5.
Defendant's petition for writ of prohibition to review Pen C §995 ruling.	Defense counsel must file petition within 15 calendar days after Pen C §995 motion was denied if basis for relief is no reasonable or probable cause. 15-day rule does not apply if basis is improperly found indictment or illegal commitment.	Pen C §999a; Smith v Superior Court (1978) 76 CA3d 731, 143 CR 109.
Defendant's petition for writ of habeas corpus to review Pen C §995 ruling.	No time given.	See Pen C §§1473-1508.
Prosecution appeal of Pen C §995 ruling.	Within 60 calendar days after ruling on motion.	Pen C §1238(a)(1); Cal Rules of Ct 8.308(a).
Prosecution's petition for writ of mandate to review Pen C §995 ruling.	No time given; however, it should be filed no later than deadline for filing appeal: within 60 calendar days after ruling on motion.	See Popelka, Allard, McCowan & Jones v Superior Court (1980) 107 CA3d 496, 499, 165 CR 748 (civil case, but same reasoning should apply to criminal cases).

III. NATURE OF PEN C §995 MOTION

§13.3 A. Challenging Information or Indictment

By Pen C §995 motion. Defense counsel may file a motion in the trial court under Pen C §995 to dismiss an information on the ground that the defendant was not legally committed by a magistrate (Pen C §995(a)(2)(A)) or was committed without reasonable or probable cause (Pen C §995(a)(2)(B)). An indictment is subject to dismissal in the trial court when it was not found, endorsed, and presented as prescribed in the Penal Code (Pen C §995(a)(1)(A)) or when a defendant was indicted without reasonable or probable cause (Pen C §995(a)(1)(B)).

A Pen C §995 motion may challenge one or more counts of an information or indictment. People v Sherwin (2000) 82 CA4th 1404, 98 CR2d 888. When an information or indictment charges a misdemeanor as well as a felony offense, a §995 motion may be used to challenge either or both types of offenses. See People v Thiecke (1985) 167 CA3d 1015, 213 CR 731. See also Cook v Superior Court (1970) 4 CA3d 822, 84 CR 664. Penalty enhancement allegations (People v Superior Court (Mendella) (1983) 33 C3d 754, 191 CR 1; Huynh v Superior Court (1996) 45 CA4th 891, 54 CR2d 336) and special circumstance allegations (People v Ghent (1987) 43 C3d 739, 239 CR 82) may also be challenged by a Pen C §995 motion.

By common law motion to dismiss. When defense counsel wishes to have the §995 judge go beyond the preliminary examination or grand jury transcript, counsel may set a common law motion to dismiss to be heard at the same time as the §995 motion. See People v Crudgington (1979) 88 CA3d 295, 300, 151 CR 737. See also Bayramoglu v Superior Court (1981) 124 CA3d 718, 729, 176 CR 487.

By habeas corpus. It is unclear whether a petition for writ of habeas corpus may be filed in place of a Pen C §995 motion. Because Pen C §1473 contains no restriction on use of the writ, it is probable that no limits exist. In practice, habeas is rarely used instead of a §995 motion, or instead of a §995 motion combined with a common law motion to dismiss.

There are two possible advantages to habeas. First, a writ of habeas corpus is not restricted to the record of the proceeding being challenged. The defendant can produce evidence beyond the record. Pen C §1484; In re Clark (1993) 5 C4th 750, 21 CR2d 509.

The second possible advantage of habeas is that it may give defense counsel the right to appellate review when it would not otherwise exist. Failure to make the Pen C §995 motion within 60 calendar days after the defendant's arraignment on an information or indictment precludes appellate review through a writ of prohibition, the normal avenue of appellate review, when the defendant claims that he or she was committed without reasonable or probable cause. Pen C §1510. The courts are divided on whether the 15-day rule applies to habeas. Compare In re Flodstrom (1954) 134 CA2d 871, 277 P2d 101, and In re Joiner (1960) 180 CA2d 250, 4 CR 667 (no discussion of time problem), with Guerin v Superior Court (1969) 269 CA2d 80, 75 CR 923, and Smith v Superior Court (1978) 76 CA3d 731, 143 CR 109 (15-day rule of Pen C §999a defines time in which to seek habeas review of denial of defense §995 motion).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.4 B. Evidence on Which Motion May Be Based and Decided; Obtaining Transcript

When the claim on the Pen C §995 motion was insufficient evidence to support the information or indictment, appellate courts have consistently held that review of the claim is limited to the reporter's transcript of the preliminary examination or grand jury proceedings. See, e.g., People v Crosby (1962) 58 C2d 713, 725, 25 CR 847 (indictment); People v Crudgington (1979) 88 CA3d 295, 299, 151 CR 737 (information). When the claim on the §995 motion was the violation of a substantial right, appellate courts have been inconsistent in their holdings on the reviewability of facts outside the record of the reporter's transcript. One line of cases holds that, to be reviewable under §995, the violation of the substantial right must appear on the face of the transcript; if it does not, the proper procedure is a nonstatutory motion to dismiss the information. See, e.g., Currie v Superior Court (1991) 230 CA3d 83, 90, 281 CR 250; Stanton v Superior Court (1987) 193 CA3d 265, 269, 239 CR 328. One appellate court took judicial notice of facts outside the reporter's transcript to resolve a claim of the violation of a substantial right (People v Mackey (1985) 176 CA3d 177, 186, 221 CR 405), a procedure available to an appellate court reviewing such a claim after a conviction (see, e.g., People v Hayes (1990) 52 C3d 577, 611 n3, 276 CR 874). Several decisions have referred with seeming approval to the superior court's receiving evidence outside the record of the preliminary examination when reviewing a claim of the violation of a substantial right. People v Coleman (1988) 46 C3d 749, 251 CR 83 (testimony on whether counsel was effective); People v Superior Court (Greer) (1977) 19 C3d 255, 263 n5, 137 CR 476 (potential bias or appearance of conflict of prosecutor at preliminary examination); People v Pennington (1991) 228 CA3d 959, 964, 279 CR 85 (conflict of interest of defense counsel). See also Cummiskey v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 1018, 1022 n1, 13 CR2d 551 (failure of district attorney to present exculpatory evidence at grand jury proceedings).

Defense counsel should note that nothing in the language of Pen C §995 itself precludes the trial court from receiving evidence outside the record of the preliminary examination or grand jury proceedings. Although it is clearly appropriate to enforce such a limit when the claim is insufficiency of the evidence presented to the magistrate, it is not necessarily appropriate to enforce such a limit when the claim is the violation of a substantial right, because the right can be denied in ways that do not appear on the face of the transcript. Defense counsel can use the authorities cited in the previous paragraph to support an argument that the court should consider evidence outside the record of the preliminary examination. This approach has a distinct tactical advantage. Raising the violation of a substantial right on a §995 motion entitles the defendant to a presumption of prejudice from the error, whereas raising it in a nonstatutory motion does not. Compare People v Coleman (1988) 46 C3d 749, 773, 251 CR 83, with Stanton v Superior Court (1987) 193 CA3d 265, 239 CR 328.

The defendant has a statutory right to a transcript of the testimony on which the information or indictment is based. Pen C §§869, 938.1. In People v Superior Court (Mouchaourab) (2000) 78 CA4th 403, 92 CR2d 829, the Sixth District ruled that the defendant is entitled to a transcript of nontestimonial portions of proceedings before a grand jury that could have a bearing on the grand jury's probable cause determination, including "transcripts of all communications between the prosecutor and the grand jury, the prosecutor's opening and closing remarks and argument, and all responses to requests by the grand jury for read-backs of witness testimony, as well as the superior court's answers to grand jurors' questions." 78 CA4th at 407. See also Dustin v Superior Court (2002) 99 CA4th 1311, 122 CR2d 176 (in death penalty case, Pen C §190.9 entitles defendant to transcript of all portions of grand jury proceedings).

The reporter is required to deliver the original transcript and copies for the accused to the clerk within 10 days after the holding order or the finding of the indictment. Pen C §§869(e), 938.1(a). The 10 days for the delivery of the transcript of the grand jury proceedings may be extended by 20 calendar days for good cause. Pen C §938.1(a).

§13.5 IV. IMPORTANCE OF MAKING PEN C §995 MOTION

To render effective assistance within the meaning of the Sixth Amendment, defense counsel is required to investigate the merits of a Pen C §995 motion and then make reasonable tactical decisions based on that investigation. People v Maguire (1998) 67 CA4th 1022, 79 CR2d 573 (counsel ineffective for failing to bring meritorious §995 motion before advising client to plead guilty).

Errors at the preliminary examination or before the grand jury are normally not reviewable by pretrial writ or by appeal from a judgment of conviction unless defense counsel first raised them by making a §995 motion. Pen C §996; People v Harris (1967) 67 C2d 866, 870, 64 CR 313. An exception is made if the issues are otherwise substantially raised in the trial court. People v Phillips (1985) 41 C3d 29, 45, 222 CR 127.

On pretrial writ review, prejudice is presumed from errors at the preliminary examination (People v Coleman (1988) 46 C3d 749, 773, 251 CR 83; People v Pompa-Ortiz (1980) 27 C3d 519, 529, 165 CR 851) or grand jury proceedings (Dustin v Superior Court (2002) 99 CA4th 1311, 1325, 122 CR2d 176). On appeal after trial, prejudice is not presumed (see, e.g., People v Cabrera (2007) 152 CA4th 695, 701, 61 CR3d 373); to obtain reversal of the conviction, the defendant must show that the irregularities at the preliminary examination or grand jury proceedings resulted in an unfair trial or other prejudice. People v Coleman, supra (ineffectiveness of counsel at preliminary examination not shown to have prejudiced defendant at trial); People v Pompa-Ortiz, supra (erroneous closing of preliminary examination to the public did not deprive defendant of fair trial). Defense counsel should therefore usually seek review of the denial of a §995 motion by pretrial writ.

Ø Note: A tactical point for defense counsel to consider is whether bringing a Pen C §995 motion will alert the prosecution to additional, and perhaps more serious, crimes supported by the evidence at the preliminary examination, and thus lead to adverse amendment of the information. See discussion of Pen C §739 in §13.7.

V. GROUNDS FOR MAKING PEN C §995 MOTION

A. Information or Indictment Not Based on Reasonable or Probable Cause (Sufficiency of Evidence)

§13.6 1. Standard of Review

An accused may be held to answer (or an indictment may be returned) if the evidence presented to the magistrate (or the grand jury) provides probable cause to believe that the accused committed the crime. The supreme court explained the probable cause standard in Rideout v Superior Court (1967) 67 C2d 471, 474, 62 CR 581:

> Evidence that will justify a prosecution need not be sufficient to support a conviction. [Citations.] Probable cause is shown if a man of ordinary caution or prudence would be led to believe and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion of the guilt of the accused. [Citations and internal quotation marks omitted.] An information will not be set aside or a prosecution thereon prohibited if there is some rational ground for assuming the possibility that an offense has been committed and the accused is guilty of it.

Although the magistrate at the preliminary examination, or the grand jury, is able to weigh the evidence, the judge hearing the Pen C §995 motion sits strictly as an appellate judge reviewing the magistrate's or grand jury's determinations. People v Laiwa (1983) 34 C3d 711, 718, 195 CR 503; People v Pic'l (1982) 31 C3d 731, 737, 183 CR 685. Perhaps the most frequently quoted language describing the manner in which a §995 judge reviews the sufficiency of the evidence is in Rideout v Superior Court, supra:

> A reviewing court may not substitute its judgment as to the weight of the evidence for that of the magistrate, and, if there is some evidence to support the information, the court will not inquire into its sufficiency. [Citations.] Every legitimate inference that may be drawn from the evidence must be drawn in favor of the information.

This standard was reaffirmed in People v Slaughter (1984) 35 C3d 629, 637, 200 CR 448. It should be noted that at least one appellate court has questioned whether application of the standard is appropriate when the crime at issue was not charged in the complaint and the magistrate therefore did not pass on the sufficiency of the evidence at the preliminary examination. People v Soto (1977) 74 CA3d 267, 277, 141 CR 343.

For discussion of the standards used by the magistrate and the grand jury, see §§9.21 (requirement for issuing an indictment), 8.38 (requirement for a holding order), 13.34 (standard on Pen C §871.5 motion to reinstate charges).

On appeal, the trial court judge's ruling is ignored; the appellate court directly reviews the magistrate's or the grand jury's findings. People v Laiwa, supra (applying same standards that trial court used); Alvarado v Superior Court (2007) 146 CA4th 993, 999, 53 CR3d 416. In reviewing the magistrate's findings, all contradictions in the evidence and relevant presumptions are resolved in favor of the magistrate, whose express or implied findings must be upheld if supported by substantial evidence. If there are no express findings, it is implied that the court made whatever findings are necessary to support the order. Alvarado v Superior Court, supra; People v Molina (1994) 25 CA4th 1038, 1041, 30 CR2d 805.

§13.7 2. Challenging Sufficiency of Evidence

Defense counsel may challenge all or part of an information or indictment on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to show the requisite probable cause. Such a challenge should specify the insufficiency. If a misdemeanor is charged in the information, sufficient cause must also have been proved for it at the preliminary examination. People v Thrasher (2009) 176 CA4th 1302, 98 CR3d 693; People v Thiecke (1985) 167 CA3d 1015, 213 CR 731.

Defense counsel seeking to have an information or indictment set aside on the ground that the evidence is insufficient must show that there is no evidence, direct or circumstantial, from which any reasonable inference supporting the charge being challenged might be drawn. Williams v Superior Court (1969) 71 C2d 1144, 1148, 80 CR 747; People v Casillas (2001) 92 CA4th 171, 178, 111 CR2d 651. If two reasonable inferences can be drawn from the evidence, the reviewing court is bound by the magistrate's conclusions and cannot grant a Pen C §995 motion merely because the evidence is also susceptible of another, equally reasonable, interpretation. People v Superior Court (Bolden) (1989) 209 CA3d 1109, 257 CR 678.

In defense terms, counsel making this argument may ask the §995 court to satisfy itself of several things before upholding the charging document or count being challenged:

- The preliminary examination or grand jury transcript must contain some evidence to support each element of the charged offense or clause. Garabedian v Superior Court (1963) 59 C2d 124, 28 CR 318; Barber v Superior Court (1991) 1 CA4th 793, 795, 2 CR2d 403.
- The inferences drawn from the evidence must be reasonable. If they are "speculative," it is the reviewing judge's duty to discard those that "derive their substance from guesswork, speculation, or conjecture." Birt v Superior Court (1973) 34 CA3d 934, 938, 110 CR 321.
- When reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence, the court also has the duty to "resolve the issue in light of the whole record" and "may not limit [its] appraisal to isolated bits of evidence" selected by the prosecution. People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 577, 162 CR 431. This rule comes in handy when related circumstances tend to neutralize the incriminating nature of a particular piece of evidence.
- The evidence supporting the information or indictment must have been admissible. If inadmissible evidence was received over objection, the reviewing judge should disregard it and weigh the sufficiency of the evidence by reference to the remaining evidence. See Whitman v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 1063, 1068, 2 CR2d 160; People v Jimenez (1995) 38 CA4th 795, 801, 45 CR2d 466.

Most of the same rules of evidence concerning the sufficiency of the evidence at trial apply to the sufficiency of the evidence required on Pen C §995 review, but there are some exceptions. For example, a holding order may be based on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice (People v Miranda (2000) 23 C4th 340, 96 CR2d 758) or on hearsay evidence testified to by a qualified peace officer, including an honorably retired officer (Pen C §872(b)).

For further discussion of the evidence on which a holding order may be based, see §§8.27-8.30. The evidence on which an indictment may be based is discussed in §9.23. Some of the most common §995 issues concerning sufficiency of the evidence are discussed in §13.9.

§13.8 3. Holding Order or Indictment Based on Illegally Obtained Evidence

Holding order. An accused will be deemed committed without probable cause if the only evidence presented at the preliminary examination or grand jury proceeding that connects him or her to the crimes charged was seized in violation of applicable principles of search and seizure law. People v Lilienthal (1978) 22 C3d 891, 897, 150 CR 910; People v Scoma (1969) 71 C2d 332, 78 CR 491; People v Sherwin (2000) 82 CA4th 1404, 1408, 98 CR2d 888.

In reviewing the legality of a search or seizure, a reviewing judge should accept as true the evidence supporting the magistrate's decision (see People v Lawler (1973) 9 C3d 156, 160, 107 CR 13) but should determine independently whether the magistrate's application of search and seizure law to those facts was correct (see People v Leyba (1981) 29 C3d 591, 174 CR 867). If other competent evidence can be found in the transcript to support the information or count, the magistrate's ruling will be deemed "harmless," and a Pen C §995 motion will not lie to cure the error. See People v Lilienthal, supra.

If defense counsel failed to object to the use of the evidence at the preliminary examination, that issue is waived on §995 review. Robison v Superior Court (1957) 49 C2d 186, 316 P2d 1; People v Anderson (1989) 210 CA3d 24, 28, 258 CR 125. See also People v Hathcock (1973) 8 C3d 599, 621, 105 CR 540. Such a failure may constitute ineffective assistance of counsel, if it results in waiver of the search and seizure issue. See People v White (1981) 118 CA3d 767, 773, 173 CR 575. For discussion of when to notice a Pen C §1538.5 motion in a felony case, see §16.7. For discussion of ineffective assistance of defense counsel at the preliminary examination, see §13.23. For discussion of the differences between the §995 hearing and the §1538.5 hearing in the trial court, and the effect of the timing of these motions, see §16.25.

Indictment. In cases involving indictments, the defendant will not have had the opportunity to object to an illegal search or seizure. Thus, there is no waiver of the right to challenge the illegality of the search or seizure. If the illegality is not apparent on the face of the grand jury record, however, the search is presumed legal despite the fact that the defendant had no opportunity to develop essential facts concerning the search. People v Prewitt (1959) 52 C2d 330, 335, 341 P2d 1. However, the defendant may move in the trial court to suppress evidence under Pen C 1538.5(i). If that motion is granted but neither the court nor the prosecution dismisses the case, the defendant may then pursue a §995 motion challenging the indictment. People v Sherwin (2000) 82 CA4th 1404, 98 CR2d 888.

§13.9 4. Common Sufficiency of Evidence Issues

If no evidence is presented on a count, a Pen C §995 motion should be granted for that count. People v Pitts (1990) 223 CA3d 606, 902, 273 CR 757; Somers v Superior Court (1973) 32 CA3d 961, 108 CR 630.

If there is an insufficient showing of any element of a crime or enhancement allegation, the §995 motion should be granted for that count or enhancement allegation. For example, appellate courts have held that §995 motions should have been granted when the prosecution failed to prove:

- Knowledge of injury to another in a hit-and-run case (Garabedian v Superior Court (1963) 59 C2d 124, 28 CR 318);
- Trick or fraud in a forgery case (People v Looney (2004) 125 CA4th 242, 22 CR3d 502);
- Use of the firearm to further the underlying crime in a case charging the Pen C §12022.5 enhancement (Alvarado v Superior Court (2007) 146 CA4th 993, 1000, 53 CR3d 416);
- The existence of the gang in a case charging the street gang enhancement (Salazar v Superior Court (2000) 83 CA4th 840, 100 CR2d 120);
- Malice aforethought in a murder case (People v Caffero (1989) 207 CA3d 678, 255 CR 22);
- Intent to steal at the time of taking in a robbery case (Rodriguez v Superior Court (1984) 159 CA3d 821, 205 CR 750);
- Locking of doors in an automobile burglary case (People v Woods (1980) 112 CA3d 226, 169 CR 179);
- Prior theft conviction needed to elevate the crime to a felony in a petty theft case (Bradwell v Superior Court (2007) 156 CA4th 265, 67 CR3d 163);
- Prior felony conviction in an ex-felon with a firearm case (Levy v Superior Court (1973) 31 CA3d 427, 107 CR 384);
- Intent to sell in a possession of drugs for sale case (People v Upton (1968) 257 CA2d 677, 65 CR 103); and
- Dominion and control in a drug possession case (People v Monson (1967) 255 CA2d 689, 692, 63 CR 409).

See also People v Burnett (1999) 71 CA4th 151, 168, 83 CR2d 629, in which conviction was reversed because the evidence presented at trial related to a completely different incident from that shown at the preliminary examination.

Appellate courts also have held that §995 motions should have been granted when the prosecution's proof failed to connect the defendant sufficiently with the crime, e.g., the defendant's fingerprints were merely inside the car used to transport burglars away from a burglarized house (Birt v Superior Court (1973) 34 CA3d 934, 110 CR 321); the defendant was merely present at or near the scene of the crime (Pinell v Superior Court (1965) 232 CA2d 284, 287, 42 CR 676; Malleck v Superior Court (1956) 142 CA2d 396, 397, 298 P2d 115); or the defendant merely "looked like" the perpetrator (Vukman v Superior Court (1981) 116 CA3d 341, 344, 172 CR 44, disapproved on other grounds in People v Cuevas (1995) 12 C4th 252, 275 n5, 48 CR2d 135).

> Ø Note: In Williams v Superior Court (1969) 71 C2d 1144, 1147, 80 CR 747, the supreme court observed that the "probable cause" needed to uphold an information was the same as that needed to justify an arrest. Cases holding that a police officer lacked probable cause for an arrest can be cited in support of arguments in §995 motions that the evidence at the preliminary examination was insufficient. See, e.g., In re Justin B. (1999) 69 CA4th 879, 81 CR2d 852.

At the preliminary examination or grand jury proceedings, the prosecution may not rely solely on a defendant's extrajudicial statement but must produce independent proof of the corpus delicti. Rayyis v Superior Court (2005) 133 CA4th 138, 35 CR3d 12. Therefore, an information or indictment must still be set aside if the prosecution fails to produce independent proof of the corpus delicti. People v Herrera (2006) 136 CA4th 1191, 39 CR3d 578 (evidence insufficient to establish corpus); Creutz v Superior Court (1996) 49 CA4th 822, 56 CR2d 870 (evidence used was inadmissible to prove corpus). For further discussion of the corpus delicti rule, see §23.22.

If a Pen C §1538.5 motion is heard at the same time as the preliminary examination, and the corpus is insufficient without evidence suppressed under that motion, there should be no holding order. Jackson v Superior Court (1977) 74 CA3d 361, 142 CR 299, disapproved on other grounds in People v Chavers (1983) 33 C3d 462, 470, 189 CR 169 (after gun suppressed, evidence insufficient to support charge of ex-felon in possession of gun). Similarly, if an in-court identification at the preliminary hearing is suppressed as the fruit of a prior illegal lineup, the complaint should be dismissed unless other evidence establishes the defendant committed the crime charged. People v Malich (1971) 15 CA3d 253, 93 CR 87, disapproved on other grounds in People v Medina (1972) 6 C3d 484, 489, 99 CR 630.

When the prosecution introduces hearsay testimony of a police officer (or an honorably retired officer) under Pen C §872(b), but it is inadmissible because the testifying officer did not personally investigate the case, because the officer lacks the required law enforcement experience or training, or because the testimony is double hearsay, the §995 motion must be granted unless other admissible evidence supports the information. Whitman v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 1063, 2 CR2d 160; Montez v Superior Court (1992) 4 CA4th 577, 5 CR2d 723. See detailed discussion in §8.13.

§13.10 B. Defendant Not Legally Committed by Magistrate

Defense counsel may attack an information because of an error committed by the magistrate that resulted in an illegal commitment despite the sufficiency of the evidence to support the charges, or in addition to a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence. See Pen C §995(a)(2)(A). The grounds for challenging the legality of a commitment are set out in Pen C §995 and discussed in §§13.11-13.21.

§13.11 1. Preliminary Examination Held Beyond Time Limits

There are two requirements concerning time limits for holding preliminary examinations. First, a defendant's preliminary examination must be started within the time limits specified in Pen C §859b, discussed in §8.16. Serrato v Superior Court (1978) 76 CA3d 459, 142 CR 882. Second, a preliminary examination, once begun, must be completed without interruption by other significant court business, absent good cause shown by affidavit. Pen C §861; Stroud v Superior Court (2000) 23 C4th 952, 98 CR2d 677; Kruse v Superior Court (2008) 162 CA4th 1364, 1373, 76 CR3d 664 (interruption not for good cause when it was due to problems transporting defendant to court). For further discussion of the time limits for holding a preliminary examination, see §§8.13-8.20.

Historically, the rule had been that if a preliminary hearing was set outside the §859b time limit, and the defendant was not released, the resulting commitment was unlawful, and the case had to be dismissed under Pen C §995. Serrato v Superior Court, supra. In People v Standish (2006) 38 C4th 858, 866, 43 CR3d 785, however, the supreme court held that if a magistrate, on a finding of good cause, continues the preliminary hearing beyond the 10-day limit as proscribed by §859b, the court must release the defendant on his or her own recognizance. However, the court also held that a magistrate's failure to release the defendant on his or her own recognizance does not require dismissal of the information under §995 unless the court determines the error "reasonably might have affected the outcome of the preliminary examination." People v Standish, supra.

§13.12 2. Rights to Counsel and Self-Representation

The rights to counsel and to appointed counsel at the preliminary examination are guaranteed not only by statute (Pen C §§859, 860, 987) but also by the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments (Coleman v Alabama (1970) 399 US 1, 26 L Ed 2d 387, 90 S Ct 1999).

When a magistrate arraigns a defendant on a felony complaint, the magistrate must inform him or her of the right to an attorney and must allow the defendant a reasonable time to obtain one. If the defendant cannot afford to retain an attorney, the court must appoint one. Pen C §§859, 860. If a magistrate fails to implement a defendant's right to counsel as mandated by Pen C §§859, 860, a subsequent commitment order is illegal. See, e.g., Bogart v Superior Court (1963) 60 C2d 436, 34 CR 850.

The right to counsel includes the right to the effective assistance of counsel at the preliminary examination. People v Coleman (1988) 46 C3d 749, 773, 251 CR 83. See §13.23. It also includes the right to representation by an attorney who does not have a conflict of interest, such as one based on prior representation of a prosecution witness. People v Pennington (1991) 228 CA3d 959, 964, 279 CR 85.

The federal constitutional right to self-representation under Faretta v California (1975) 422 US 806, 45 L Ed 2d 562, 95 S Ct 2525, applies at the preliminary examination. People v Matthews (1986) 183 CA3d 458, 461, 228 CR 316; Curry v Superior Court (1977) 75 CA3d 221, 229, 141 CR 884. Even a defendant initially represented by counsel may invoke this right midway through a proceeding; if the defendant does so, the court on its own motion must inquire into the defendant's reasons and may weigh any ensuing disruption or delay. People v Windham (1977) 19 C3d 121, 128, 137 CR 8. Thus, the magistrate may not summarily deny as untimely a request for self-representation made midway through the preliminary examination, particularly when defendant is not requesting a continuance. Moon v Superior Court (2005) 134 CA4th 1521, 36 CR3d 854. For discussion of Faretta, see §§3.7-3.10.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.13 3. Defense Right to Cross-Examine

Preliminary examinations usually involve only prosecution evidence and defense cross-examination of prosecution witnesses on the subject matter of their direct examination. See Pen C §865. A motion to suppress under Pen C §1538.5, made at the preliminary examination, is a prerequisite to cross-examination on search and seizure issues. People v Williams (1989) 213 CA3d 1186, 262 CR 303.

Although the preliminary examination is not to be used for purposes of discovery (Pen C §866(b)), restriction or denial of a defendant's right to cross-examine a witness at a preliminary examination may deny the defendant a substantial right and may therefore result in a successful Pen C §995 motion. See, e.g., Jennings v Superior Court (1967) 66 C2d 867, 877, 59 CR 440 (restriction of cross-examination of arresting officer on defense (entrapment) deprived defendant of fair hearing); Hines v Superior Court (1988) 203 CA3d 1231, 251 CR 28 (restriction of cross-examination of officer on material issue (surveillance) deprived defendant of substantial right). See also Mills v Superior Court (1986) 42 C3d 951, 232 CR 141; People v Rivas (1985) 170 CA3d 312, 324, 216 CR 477.

Not every restriction of cross-examination is considered a denial of a substantial right sufficient to merit a dismissal under Pen C §995. "An information will not be set aside merely because of some minor irregularity or error… at the preliminary examination." People v Sheets (1967) 251 CA2d 759, 767, 59 CR 777.

The difference between a minor error and the denial of a substantial right has generated a good deal of litigation. A general guideline is that when the subject of defense counsel's cross-examination concerns the allegations in the complaint, and is aimed at establishing an affirmative defense, or defeating the prosecution's case, restrictions will be deemed to have denied the defendant a substantial right. See People v Konow (2004) 32 C4th 995, 1023, 12 CR3d 301; compare Jennings v Superior Court, supra, and Hines v Superior Court, supra, with People v Stone (1983) 139 CA3d 216, 188 CR 493 (no error in disallowing defense cross-examination of police officer on his credibility because it would have affected weight only of his direct testimony).

Penal Code §872(b) allows a finding of probable cause to be based on the hearsay testimony of a police officer, including an honorably retired officer, with certain qualifications of experience and training. Construing this provision, the supreme court has held that (1) the testifying officer must be one of the investigating officers on the case, and (2) double hearsay is not admissible. Whitman v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 1063, 1072, 2 CR2d 160. The supreme court has also held that the provision permits the testifying officer to recount a translated statement. The translation is usually considered a statement of the original declarant rather than double hearsay. Correa v Superior Court (2002) 27 C4th 444, 117 CR2d 27. For further discussion of Pen C §872(b), see §8.30.

§13.14 4. Defense Right to Present Evidence

The defense has the right to present substantial exculpatory evidence by calling its own witnesses at the preliminary examination. Pen C §866; e.g., People v Mower (2002) 28 C4th 457, 473 n5, 122 CR2d 326 (medical defense to marijuana charges). Section 866, however, requires the defense, at the request of the prosecution, to make an offer of proof that the testimony of the proffered witness, if believed, would be reasonably likely to establish an affirmative defense; negate an element of the crime charged; impeach the testimony of a prosecution witness; or impeach the statement of a declarant testified to by a prosecution witness. See People v Erwin (1993) 20 CA4th 1542, 25 CR2d 348 (Pen C §995 motion should have been granted after magistrate precluded testimony from defense witness for whom defense counsel had made adequate offer of proof); People v Buckley (1986) 185 CA3d 512, 228 CR 329 (no error in denying defense calling of witnesses whose testimony would have been cumulative and was for discovery purposes only).

Ø Note: Under Pen C §872(b), the defendant has the right to call a police officer to testify to hearsay that is favorable to the defense, such as the defendant's exculpatory statement. Nienhouse v Superior Court (1996) 42 CA4th 83, 49 CR2d 573.

§13.15 5. Defendant Was Mentally Incompetent at Preliminary Examination

The defendant has a due process right to be mentally competent at the time of the preliminary examination. Hale v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 221, 228, 124 CR 57. If the defendant is found mentally incompetent in Pen C §1368 proceedings that began shortly after the information was filed, a motion under Pen C §995 lies to set aside the information on the ground that the defendant was denied a substantial right. Miller v Superior Court (1978) 81 CA3d 132, 134, 146 CR 253; Chambers v Municipal Court (1974) 43 CA3d 809, 118 CR 120. See also People v Cadogan (2009) 173 CA4th 1502, 1511, 93 CR3d 881. But see Booth v Superior Court (1997) 57 CA4th 91, 66 CR2d 758 (incompetence must appear on face of record of preliminary examination). Even a defendant found mentally competent in such proceedings may base a motion under §995 on alleged mental incompetence at the time of the preliminary examination; in such a case, the defendant is entitled to an evidentiary hearing on the issue. Bayramoglu v Superior Court (1981) 124 CA3d 718, 176 CR 487. In People v Duncan (2000) 78 CA4th 765, 93 CR2d 173, the court held that a defendant found incompetent months after the preliminary hearing could bring the issue of his competence at the time of the preliminary examination before the court by filing a nonstatutory motion to dismiss.

Ø Note: If a defendant is found to have been mentally incompetent at the time of the preliminary examination, testimony from that proceeding is not admissible as former testimony in later proceedings, because the defendant is not considered to have had the opportunity to cross-examine the declarant effectively, as required by Evid C §1291(a)(2). Stevenson v Superior Court (1979) 91 CA3d 925, 154 CR 476.

For further discussion of mental incompetence at the preliminary examination, see §§48.14, 48.20.

§13.16 6. Reduction of Felony to Misdemeanor and Dismissal of Complaint in Interest of Justice

Some crimes, commonly called "wobblers," are punishable either as felonies or as misdemeanors. Other crimes, commonly called "straight" felonies, are punishable only as felonies. The magistrate may reduce a wobbler to a misdemeanor at the preliminary examination even though the prosecutor has charged it as a felony. Pen C §17(b)(5). The prosecutor may not circumvent the magistrate's ruling by recharging the offense as a felony in the trial court. Malone v Superior Court (1975) 47 CA3d 313, 318, 120 CR 851. If the prosecution dismisses the resulting misdemeanor, it cannot be refiled as a felony without the magistrate's consent. See Malone v Superior Court, supra. If the prosecution wants review of the magistrate's decision under Pen C §17(b)(5) to reduce a wobbler to a misdemeanor, it may not move to reinstate the complaint under Pen C §871.5 but it may have the right to petition for relief by writ. People v Williams (2005) 35 C4th 817, 832, 28 CR3d 29. For further discussion of Pen C §17(b)(5), see §8.40.

The defendant is denied a substantial right when a magistrate refuses to reduce a wobbler charged as a felony to a misdemeanor under §17(b)(5) on the stated ground that the defendant did not agree to plead guilty to the reduced charge. Hartman v Superior Court (1982) 135 CA3d 205, 185 CR 182.

A magistrate has no power to reduce a straight felony to a misdemeanor. People v Superior Court (Feinstein) (1994) 29 CA4th 323, 328, 34 CR2d 503. See Pen C §17(b)(5). Such an order may be set aside on a prosecution motion to compel the reinstatement of the complaint under Pen C §871.5. People v Superior Court (Feinstein), supra.

At the preliminary examination, the magistrate may dismiss the complaint in furtherance of justice under Pen C §1385 on "his or her own motion or upon the application of the prosecuting attorney." The defendant does not have the right to make a motion under the statute, but may nonetheless "informally suggest" that the magistrate consider dismissal on the magistrate's own motion. People v Konow (2004) 32 C4th 995, 1022, 12 CR3d 301. A magistrate's erroneous and prejudicial failure to consider such a suggestion to dismiss the complaint denies the defendant a substantial right at the preliminary examination and requires dismissal of the information under Pen C §995. People v Konow, supra.

§13.17 7. Factual Findings

At the conclusion of the preliminary examination, defense counsel may ask the magistrate to make findings of fact in support of the dismissal of charges in the complaint. A finding of fact is not a conclusion of law, i.e., the application of the magistrate's view of the law to the evidence. Pizano v Superior Court (1978) 21 C3d 128, 133, 145 CR 524. Rather, it is a factual determination made by the magistrate after weighing the evidence, drawing factual inferences, and resolving any conflicts in the evidence, as well as by resolving questions of witness credibility. Cooley v Superior Court (Marentez) (2002) 29 C4th 228, 258, 127 CR2d 177.

Factual findings need to be express, because the courts generally will not find facts implied in a magistrate's ruling. People v Superior Court (Gibson) (1980) 101 CA3d 551, 161 CR 923.

Although Pen C §739 gives a prosecutor the power to recharge in the information an offense for which there was no holding order, as long as the charge is supported by evidence taken before the magistrate, §739 does not allow the prosecutor to override a magistrate's factual findings. If a magistrate makes a factual finding that is fatal to a charge, and a prosecutor refiles it in the information, it should be dismissed under Pen C §995. See, e.g., Jones v Superior Court (1971) 4 C3d 660, 94 CR 289 (magistrate made factual finding that he did not believe complaining witness in rape case concerning allegation that force was used, and held defendants to answer to statutory rather than forcible rape; prosecutor's subsequent recharge of forcible rape in information not allowed).

The cases are in conflict on the question of whether it is error for a magistrate to refuse to issue factual findings based on facts presented at the preliminary examination, but not charged in the complaint. People v Brice (1982) 130 CA3d 201, 181 CR 518, holds that it is error, but People v Estrada (1987) 188 CA3d 1141, 233 CR 754, disagrees.

Although findings of fact must be sustained if supported by substantial evidence, a finding of lack of probable cause, unsupported by any factual findings, is subject to review as an issue of law. People v Slaughter (1984) 35 C3d 629, 200 CR 448. See also Walker v Superior Court (1980) 107 CA3d 884, 890, 166 CR 209; People v Superior Court (Gibson) (1980) 101 CA3d 551, 161 CR 923. Once a magistrate makes a factual finding, that finding is not subject to §995 review, whether fatal to the credibility of either prosecution or defense evidence. See Jones v Superior Court, supra; People v Childs (1991) 226 CA3d 1397, 1405, 277 CR 456.

§13.18 8. Identity of Informant

Either disclosure of an informant's identity, or dismissal of the case, is required at the preliminary examination when the defendant makes an adequate showing that an informant may be a material witness on the issue of guilt or innocence. People v Partlow (1978) 84 CA3d 540, 148 CR 744. When disclosure at the preliminary examination is warranted but denied, the defendant has been denied a substantial right, and the ensuing commitment is thus unlawful. Theodor v Superior Court (1972) 8 C3d 77, 104 CR 226.

§13.19 9. Failure to Provide Discovery Before or During Preliminary Examination

Penal Code §§1054(e) and 1054.5(a) make Pen C §§1054-1054.7 the "exclusive" means of discovery in criminal cases, except for discovery provided for by express statutory provisions, and mandated by the U.S. Constitution. Under Pen C §1054.5(b), the prosecution need not turn over discovery until 15 calendar days after a demand is made; thus, by implication, the production of pre-preliminary examination discovery not covered by another express statute or by the U.S. Constitution is not required unless the 15-day deadline precedes the hearing.

The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires the prosecution to disclose all matters favorable to the defendant without request. Brady v Maryland (1963) 373 US 83, 10 L Ed 2d 215, 83 S Ct 1194. This requirement operates wholly independently of the statutory scheme of Pen C §1054.5; the prosecutor is obligated to disclose such evidence voluntarily, without a request from the defense. Izazaga v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 356, 378, 285 CR 231. Failure to provide timely discovery of such evidence, before the preliminary examination, when the prosecution was aware of the evidence, deprives a defendant of due process and can be grounds for a Pen C §995 motion, as long as an appropriate record was made at the preliminary examination. People v Mackey (1985) 176 CA3d 177, 221 CR 405. See also Currie v Superior Court (1991) 230 CA3d 83, 96, 281 CR 250 (prosecution has duty to disclose police reports of misconduct by prosecution witness before preliminary examination).

Pitchess discovery motions remain operative because they are authorized by Evid C §§1043-1047. Albritton v Superior Court (1990) 225 CA3d 961, 275 CR 314. Other motions authorized by statute that remain operative include motions to disclose official information and motions to disclose informants' identities. Evid C §§1040-1042. For discussion of motions to disclose informants, see chap 17.

§13.20 10. Failure to File Information Within 15 Days After Holding Order

The prosecution must file an information in the trial court within 15 calendar days after a magistrate's holding order issues; failure to do so constitutes a ground to set aside the information. Pen C §1382(a)(1). Dismissal, however, is not automatic; the defendant must move for dismissal; otherwise, it is considered waived. People v Ganger (1950) 97 CA2d 11, 217 P2d 41. See also People v Trujillo (1977) 67 CA3d 547, 552, 136 CR 672.

Ø Note: An arraignment date can be set at a later time, because that date is not tied to the filing of the information. Ciaccio v Superior Court (1984) 156 CA3d 130, 202 CR 674.

§13.21 11. Chart: Issues That Need Not or Cannot Be Reviewed by Pen C §995 Motion

Issue	Authority
Magistrate's finding of fact is binding on trial court judge reviewing information (prosecutor may be able to recharge in new complaint; see §§13.31-13.45).	Jones v Superior Court (1971) 4 C3d 660, 94 CR 289.
Juvenile court's order remanding juvenile to criminal court for treatment as adult not ground for Pen C §995 motion; defense counsel may challenge by writ of prohibition.	People v Chi Ko Wong (1976) 18 C3d 698, 135 CR 392.
Claim of former jeopardy (not ground for Pen C §995 motion; defense counsel should plead under Pen C §1017).	People v Mims (1955) 136 CA2d 828, 289 P2d 539.
Violation of proscription against double prosecution under Pen C §654 (not ground for Pen C §995 motion; defense counsel should plead under Pen C §1017).	People v Martinson (1960) 179 CA2d 164, 3 CR 449.
Misjoinder of counts (not ground for Pen C §995 motion; defense counsel may challenge only by demurrer under Pen C §1004(3)).	People v Brooks (1985) 166 CA3d 24, 30, 210 CR 90; People v Cummings (1959) 173 CA2d 721, 343 P2d 944.
Magistrate's refusal to hear speedy trial motion unless that refusal is erroneous and prejudicial. (Magistrate has discretion to hear motion at preliminary examination, which does allow review by Pen C §995 motion; defense counsel may also challenge by separate motion in trial court; see §19.33.)	People v Konow (2004) 32 C4th 995, 1021, 12 CR3d 301.
Motion to reduce or dismiss charges based on prosecution's failure to provide defense with substantial material evidence favorable to accused (not properly considered by Pen C §995 motion because goes outside record of preliminary examination; should be brought as common law motion to dismiss).	Stanton v Superior Court (1987) 193 CA3d 265, 270, 239 CR 328.

§13.22 C. Errors Peculiar to Indictments

See §9.11 for a checklist of possible challenges to an indictment.

An indictment must be set aside when it is not found as prescribed "in this code." Pen C §995(a)(1)(A). An indictment is not found as prescribed in the code if it was not concurred in by the requisite number of grand jurors. People v Fujita (1974) 43 CA3d 454, 117 CR 757. Note that the number of grand jurors needed to lawfully return an indictment varies from county to county. If a county has 23 grand jurors, 14 are needed to return an indictment. If the county has only 11 grand jurors, 8 are needed to indict. In other counties, 12 grand jurors must agree for an indictment to be lawful. Pen C §940.

It has been suggested that an indictment may be invalid under Pen C §995 if unauthorized individuals attended the grand jury proceedings in violation of Pen C §939. See People v Rojas (1969) 2 CA3d 767, 82 CR 862 (presence of one witness during testimony of another witness may violate due process). But see People v Jablonski (2006) 37 C4th 774, 800, 38 CR3d 98 (defendant not prejudiced by "technical violation" of Pen C §939 caused by mere presence of deputy district attorneys for training purposes); People v Superior Court (Mouchaourab) (2000) 78 CA4th 403, 436 n15, 92 CR2d 829 (observing that presence of unauthorized persons was deleted as express ground for Pen C §995 motion in 1927). An indictment is not, however, invalid for failure to comply with Pen C §943, which requires the names of witnesses before the grand jury to be endorsed on the indictment. People v Carella (1961) 191 CA2d 115, 124, 12 CR 446.

Penal Code §939.6 limits the evidence that may be presented to the grand jury to evidence that would be admissible at trial in a criminal case, but it also provides that the introduction of inadmissible evidence will not void an indictment if "sufficient competent evidence to support the indictment was received by the grand jury." Pen C §939.6(b). Nevertheless, defendants have a right to due process during grand jury proceedings; failure to meet due process requirements can be challenged by a §995 motion. See also Cummiskey v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 1018, 1022 n1, 13 CR2d 551. In People v Backus (1979) 23 C3d 360, 393, 152 CR 710, the supreme court explained:

> [W]hen the extent of incompetent and irrelevant evidence before the grand jury is such that, under the instructions and advice given by the prosecutor, it is unreasonable to expect that the grand jury could limit its consideration to the admissible, relevant evidence [citations], the defendants have been denied due process and the indictment must be dismissed notwithstanding Penal Code section 939.6.

Further, incomplete instructions by the prosecutor on the elements of the crime may have the effect of denying the defendant due process at the grand jury proceedings even if the evidence is sufficient to support the indictment. People v Gnass (2002) 101 CA4th 1271, 125 CR2d 225 (prosecutor failed to instruct jury on "knowing" and "willful" elements).

Practice differs on the vehicle for challenging the prosecutor's failure to inform the grand jury of the existence and nature of exculpatory evidence as required by Pen C §939.7 (sometimes called a Johnson motion, based on Johnson v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 248, 124 CR 32). In some counties, the defense may raise this issue by §995 motion. In other counties, counsel sets a separate motion to attack this type of error. See, e.g., Berardi v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th 476, 497, 57 CR3d 170 (motion granted when prosecutor misstated information to strengthen case and omitted evidence that directly contradicted key witness). For discussion of Pen C §939.7, see §9.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.23 D. Defense Attorney Ineffective at Preliminary Examination

An information may be set aside under Pen C §995 if defense counsel did not render effective assistance at the preliminary examination. People v Coleman (1988) 46 C3d 749, 773, 251 CR 83; People v White (1981) 118 CA3d 767, 772, 173 CR 575.

To prevail on a claim that counsel was ineffective, the defendant must show that counsel's performance fell "below an objective standard of reasonableness… under prevailing professional norms" and that a reasonable probability exists that "but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different." People v Ledesma (1987) 43 C3d 171, 216, 218, 233 CR 404, quoting Strickland v Washington (1984) 466 US 668, 688, 80 L Ed 2d 674, 694, 104 S Ct 2052.

For further discussion of ineffective assistance of counsel, see §§2.20-2.21, 3.27-3.28.

§13.24 VI. WHEN OBJECTION REQUIRED AT PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION TO PRESERVE ISSUE

There is little law on when an objection is required at the preliminary examination in order for defense counsel to be able to raise an issue by Pen C §995 motion. To be safe, counsel should usually make all applicable objections. See, e.g., People v Rosales (1984) 153 CA3d 353, 200 CR 310 (propriety of admission into evidence of palm print illegally seized held not reviewable by §995 motion, because counsel—even though found to have been ineffective—failed to object).

Clearly, a reviewing judge will not set aside an information based on a motion not made at the preliminary examination, e.g., a Pen C §1538.5 motion or a motion to discover the identity of an informant. See People v Hathcock (1973) 8 C3d 599, 621, 105 CR 540; People v Anderson (1989) 210 CA3d 24, 28, 258 CR 125. It is unclear, however, whether an objection must have been made at the time when it is claimed that the defendant was deprived of a "substantial right."

Ø Note: Statute of limitations issues may be raised by §995 motion without an objection at the preliminary examination. See §19.13.

In most reported cases, either defense counsel objected (see, e.g., Murphy v Superior Court (1961) 188 CA2d 185, 10 CR 176) or it is unclear from reading the case whether counsel objected. It is obviously more likely that a defense §995 motion based on restriction of cross-examination will succeed if the defense objected at the preliminary examination than if counsel did not. Conversely, it is common for attorneys to attack an information because an element of the offense was not proven at the preliminary examination when an objection was not made to the holding order. An objection is not required to preserve sufficiency of the evidence at trial as an issue on appeal from a conviction. Bunnell v Superior Court (1975) 13 C3d 592, 604, 119 CR 302. The same rule undoubtedly applies when sufficiency of the evidence at the preliminary examination is raised as an issue on a motion under §995.

Courts may use one standard if an objection was made and another if there was none. See Reid v Superior Court (1983) 140 CA3d 624, 629, 189 CR 644, which discusses the two standards used to review a claim of conflict of interest based on representation of codefendants by the same attorney. If the defendant who claims error objected at the preliminary examination, no prejudice need be shown. If the defendant did not object, the defense must prove that an actual conflict of interest existed that adversely affected the lawyer's performance.

VII. TIME AND MANNER OF MAKING MOTION

§13.25 A. Setting Motion

Neither the Penal Code nor the California Rules of Court specifically require notice of the Pen C §995 motion. California Rules of Court 4.111, however, requires that all pretrial motions in criminal cases be accompanied by a supporting memorandum, and be served and filed 10 calendar days before the date set for the hearing. In addition, local rules often have express requirements for memorandums and for notice of the motion exceeding 10 calendar days. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 16.10 (15 calendar days).

It is common for defense counsel to announce at the defendant's arraignment in the trial court that counsel intends to make a Pen C §995 motion, and to set a date for the hearing on the motion. Defense counsel should inquire about local practice from local attorneys or the court clerk. In Alameda County, for example, defense counsel usually makes an oral request for a hearing date at the defendant's arraignment in the trial court.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.26 B. Time When Motion Made and Heard

Although Pen C §997 provides that the Pen C §995 motion may be made before or after the plea, defense counsel must make the motion no later than 60 calendar days after defendant's arraignment in the trial court to be able to seek pretrial appellate review of the ruling on the motion. Pen C §1510. Therefore, defense counsel should set the motion well within the 60-day deadline to avoid any difficulties. The easiest approach is to select a §995 hearing date within the 60-day limit at the time counsel appears with the defendant for arraignment in the trial court. See §13.41 on habeas corpus procedure following denial of a §995 motion.

A question naturally arises about what acts constitute "making the motion." In Smith v Superior Court (1978) 76 CA3d 731, 143 CR 109, the appellate court construed that phrase (for Pen C §1510 purposes) to mean something more than a request at arraignment "to reserve a 995." The court noted that "[a] motion is an application to the court for an order. [CCP §1003.] The applicant must, in some way, communicate to the court what order is desired and upon what grounds." 76 CA3d at 734.

Another issue in this context is what constitutes an "arraignment." Penal Code §988 states that it "consists in reading the accusatory pleading to the defendant and delivering to him a true copy thereof, and of the endorsements thereon, if any, including the list of witnesses, and asking him whether he pleads guilty or not guilty to the accusatory pleading." Section 988 makes no reference to the actual entry of a plea by the defendant; thus in Chartuck v Municipal Court (1975) 50 CA3d 931, 123 CR 816, a case concerning application of the speedy trial statute, Pen C §1382, the appellate court found that arraignment occurs whether or not the defendant enters a plea. This finding conflicts with Simpson v Municipal Court (1975) 45 CA3d 112, 119 CR 184, which found that entry of a plea was an integral part of arraignment, at least for §1382 purposes. Another case that dealt with §1382, Valdes v Municipal Court (1977) 69 CA3d 434, 438, 138 CR 50, distills Chartuck and Simpson to the obvious: Arraignment has occurred, at the very earliest, when the defendant is asked to enter a plea and, at the very latest, when defendant enters a plea. Of academic interest perhaps is the fact that Pen C §997 requires the §995 motion to be heard "at the time it is made, unless for cause the court postpones the hearing to another time." Local rules setting up briefing schedules appear to conflict with this provision, but no authority exists to determine the effect of this conflict, if such it be.

It is unclear how long before trial the motion must be made. The statute merely requires that the motion must be made "prior to trial," (Pen C §997), and the trial court has discretion to refuse to hear an untimely motion. See People v Arjon (2004) 119 CA4th 185, 190, 14 CR3d 129 (trial court did not abuse discretion in refusing to hear renewed §995 motion made 1 hour before jury trial was set to begin).

§13.27 C. Supporting Memorandum and Response

A supporting memorandum must be filed in support of all pretrial motions in criminal cases. Cal Rules of Ct 4.111. Local rules sometimes prescribe the format of Pen C §995 motions. More commonly, local practice has established a routine format for them. Counsel may wish to review §995 motions either found in court files or obtained from local prosecutors or defense counsel. See the sample forms in California Criminal Law Forms Manual, chap 13 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

The §995 motion must adequately apprise the court of its basis. Smith v Superior Court (1978) 76 CA3d 731, 734, 143 CR 109. Defense counsel's memorandum usually sets forth a concise statement of facts pertinent to the issues raised. Counsel should cite to page (and optionally, line) numbers of the reporter's transcript of the preliminary examination to support references to testimony taken before the magistrate. Doing so may be required by local court rules, which should be checked.

The statement of facts is usually followed by argument, supported by citation to pertinent statutory and case law. Given the numerous bases under modern law available to invalidate a holding order, it appears that more than mere recitation of statutory grounds is required. See Thompson v Superior Court (1968) 262 CA2d 98, 102, 68 CR 530. The better practice (which is most often used) is to prepare a specific and detailed legal argument stating the legal and factual bases for the §995 motion, with references to specific statutes and cases.

A statement of issues may be set forth or, alternatively, the arguments may be clearly divided into as many parts as there are issues. Because so few strictures are connected with §995 motions, the best approach to their content is the logical one: Counsel should present the facts and issues clearly, and argue them logically and concisely.

The prosecutor may submit a memorandum in opposition to the defense motion, using the same format. See the sample opposition to motion to dismiss under §995 in Crim Law Forms Man §13.3. As a rule, the prosecution may not raise legal theories in its response that it did not advance at the preliminary examination. See Booth v Superior Court (1997) 57 CA4th 91, 95, 66 CR2d 758; People v Iocca (1974) 37 CA3d 73, 78, 112 CR 102.

A local rule may state deadlines for defense counsel and the prosecutor to file their briefs before the hearing. If no local court rules apply, counsel should check local practice.

Ø Note: California Rules of Court 4.111(b) permits the court to consider a motion filed without a supporting memorandum to be meritless.

§13.28 D. Renewing Motion

Normally, only one Pen C §995 motion may be made by the defense in any one action. Therefore, all known bases for setting aside an information or indictment should be urged in the motion.

Ø Note: Of course, when a case is recharged, and a new information filed, a §995 motion is again available. Pen C §§995, 1387. See also People v Methey (1991) 227 CA3d 349, 355, 277 CR 777.

Reversal on appeal does not usually give defense counsel the right to another §995 motion, because reversal returns a defendant to the same position he or she held before conviction, i.e., facing trial after having made his or her pretrial motions. People v Dorsey (1973) 34 CA3d 70, 73, 109 CR 712, disapproved on other grounds in Bunnell v Superior Court (1975) 13 C3d 592, 602 n4, 119 CR 302.

A second motion may be justified by changed circumstances or newly discovered information. People v Sherwin (2000) 82 CA4th 1404, 1411, 98 CR2d 888 (permitting renewal of §995 motion after suppression of much of evidence presented to grand jury). See also In re Kowalski (1971) 21 CA3d 67, 70, 98 CR 444.

No cases have dealt with the effect of substitution of counsel on renewal of a §995 motion. Defense counsel who has substituted into a case in which a valid §995 issue exists should attempt to make the motion again, if former counsel did not raise the issue in his or her §995 motion. However, at least when the substitution or the motion itself is not based on the former counsel's incompetence, the new attorney is arguably subject to the same procedural bars to renewal of the motion as could have been urged against his or her predecessor. People v Trujillo (1977) 67 CA3d 547, 555, 136 CR 672 (new attorney's motion to withdraw stipulation entered into by defendant's previous attorney was denied; court said second attorney "steps into the place of his predecessor").

§13.29 E. Hearing on Pen C §995 Motion

Practice differs among counties, but it is common in the larger counties, such as Alameda, for one judge to be assigned to hear all Pen C §995 motions, and for them to be heard on a set day of the week at a set time.

At the hearing on the motion, the defendant must be present unless his or her presence has been waived. See Pen C §977(b). The judge may indicate which issues he or she considers most important. It is common for defense counsel to argue first, the prosecutor second, and defense counsel last. The arguments usually take no more than 10 to 20 minutes.

The judge usually announces his or her decision immediately from the bench. On occasion, however, the judge may request additional memorandums and put the case over to a later date for decision.

VIII. EFFECT OF COURT'S PEN C §995 RULING

§13.30 A. Bail

If a Pen C §995 motion is granted as to all charges, the court must order bail exonerated within 15 calendar days after the charges are dismissed. Pen C §§997, 1303. If the defendant is recharged within that 15-day period with a public offense arising from the same act or omission that gave rise to the dismissed charges, the bail must be applied to the new offense. Pen C §1303.

No authority has been found with regard to the possibility of partial transfer of bail when one or more counts of an action—but not all—are dismissed under §995. The logic of Pen C §§997 and 1303, however, dictates that, to the extent bail is exonerated after dismissal of a count or counts, that amount should be transferred to offenses recharged within the 15-day period.

§13.31 B. Subsequent Proceedings; When Two-Dismissal Rule Applies

The dismissal of a case under Pen C §995 terminates the criminal action. Therefore, when charges are refiled after a §995 dismissal, the refiled charges constitute a new action. See Ziesmer v Superior Court (2003) 107 CA4th 360, 364, 132 CR2d 130. In this situation, the defendant may challenge a judge whom he did not challenge in the earlier action. Ziesmer v Superior Court, supra. When a felony, or a misdemeanor charged together with a felony, has been twice dismissed under Pen C §§859b, 861, 871, 995, or 1381-1388 (the two dismissals do not have to be under the same statute), those dismissals are a bar to any other prosecution, unless an exception noted in the statute, or in Pen C §1387.1, exists. The exceptions may apply to either or both dismissals. Pen C §1387. One dismissal of a misdemeanor not charged together with a felony is a bar to any other prosecution of that misdemeanor. Pen C §1387.

If an information has been dismissed once, a dismissal at the second preliminary examination is a second dismissal. Dunn v Superior Court (1984) 159 CA3d 1110, 206 CR 242.

The following exceptions to the two-dismissal rule are in Pen C §1387 itself:

- Substantial new evidence has been discovered that could not have been previously discovered by the exercise of diligence.
- Dismissal occurred because of intimidation of a witness.
- Dismissal occurred because the complaining witness failed to appear in a prosecution for an offense defined in Pen C §§243, 262, 273.5, or 273.6, or for a misdemeanor offense based on an act of domestic violence as defined in Pen C §13700(a)-(b), if the witness had been subpoenaed (this rule only applies within 6 months after the original dismissal and may be invoked only once in any action).
- Dismissal occurred before the preliminary examination so that the case could be brought by indictment.
- Dismissal occurred because the preliminary examination was not held within 60 days after the date of arraignment or plea, if good cause is shown for the delay.
- The "second dismissal" was a Pen C §739 refiling in the trial court of the first dismissal by the magistrate at the preliminary examination; and
- A §995 motion was granted because of the following:
- Present insanity of defendant;
- Lack of counsel after defendant elected to represent himself or herself;
- Ineffective assistance of counsel (note, however, that a §995 motion brought on the ground of "ineffective counsel" owing to the magistrate's wrongful denial of a continuance is considered judicial error and therefore does count toward the Pen C §1387 two-dismissal rule (Brazell v Superior Court (1986) 187 CA3d 795, 232 CR 246));
- Defense counsel's conflict of interest;
- Violation of time deadlines based on unavailability of defense counsel; or
- Defendant's motion to withdraw a waiver of the preliminary examination.

The following are also exceptions to the two-dismissal rule of Pen C §1387:

- One dismissal was reversed on appeal. CCP §916; People v Murphy (1969) 70 C2d 109, 116, 74 CR 65.
- One dismissal was set aside by a motion to reinstate the complaint under Pen C §871.5. Ramos v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 26, 36, 184 CR 622.

When a defendant is charged with a violent felony as defined in Pen C §667.5(c), the prosecution is given a third opportunity to file the charges when a previous dismissal was caused by "excusable neglect." Pen C §1387.1(a). Excusable neglect in this context "includes, but is not limited to, error on the part of the court, prosecution, law enforcement agency, or witnesses." Pen C §1387.1(b). See, e.g., People v Massey (2000) 79 CA4th 204, 211, 93 CR2d 890 (reasonable efforts to locate and secure attendance of witnesses constitute "excusable neglect"). This exception does not apply when the conduct of the prosecution "amounted to bad faith." Pen C §1387.1(a). It also does not apply if the previously dismissed charges were not violent felonies; the prosecution may not avoid the two-dismissal rule by charging a violent felony for the first time in the third accusatory pleading. People v Salcido (2008) 166 CA4th 1303, 1313, 83 CR3d 561.

Defense counsel may challenge the improper recharging of a felony (or misdemeanor charged in conjunction with a felony) under Pen C §1387 by moving to dismiss the complaint at the preliminary examination. See Miller v Superior Court (2002) 101 CA4th 728, 124 CR2d 591 (discussing procedures for motion). If the magistrate denies the motion to dismiss, defense counsel may challenge that ruling by moving to dismiss the information under §995. See Ramos v Superior Court, supra; Miller v Superior Court, supra.

The defendant may also seek relief through a petition for writ of habeas corpus. See In re Begerow (1902) 136 C 293, 68 P 773. See also §31.46.

IX. REVIEW UNDER PEN C §871.5

§13.32 A. When Pen C §871.5 Motion Is Available

A prosecutor may challenge a magistrate's dismissal of a complaint, count, or special circumstances allegation under Pen C §§859b, 861, 871, 1008, 1381, 1381.5, 1387, or 1389, or Veh C §41403, by noticing a motion in the trial court to compel the magistrate to reinstate the complaint, or the portion that was dismissed, and to reinstate the defendant's custodial status. Pen C §871.5(a); Ramos v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 26, 36, 184 CR 622. Section 871.5 motions are available only to review legal rulings; they cannot be used to review factual findings. People v Dawson (2009) 172 CA4th 1073, 1087, 91 CR3d 841; People v Childs (1991) 226 CA3d 1397, 1405, 277 CR 456. Section 871.5 motions are not available to review rulings under the authority of Pen C §17(b)(5) to reduce a wobbler to a misdemeanor (People v Williams (2005) 35 C4th 817, 28 CR3d 29), but are available to review unauthorized rulings to reduce a straight felony to a misdemeanor (People v Superior Court (Feinstein) (1994) 29 CA4th 323, 34 CR2d 503).

The prosecution may seek §871.5 review even when the complaint cannot be refiled. See Pen C §871.5(a).

Ø Note: A Pen C §871.5 motion is available even if the case has been dismissed twice because of successful Pen C §1538.5 motions. Penal Code §1538.5(p) provides that, after a second successful motion to suppress evidence, the prosecution may not refile the complaint or seek an indictment without new evidence. However, there is no prohibition in §1538.5(p) against bringing a §871.5 motion to challenge the order dismissing the charges. People v Toney (2004) 32 C4th 228, 233, 8 CR3d 577. Nor does the two-dismissal rule of Pen C §1387 bar reinstatement of a complaint through a §871.5 motion. 32 C4th at 235. See Ramos v Superior Court, supra.

Review under §871.5 is the only method of review available to the prosecution when a case is dismissed by a magistrate at the preliminary examination. People v Mimms (1988) 204 CA3d 471, 479, 251 CR 672. Section 871.5 relief is not available after dismissal of a portion of a complaint, if it can be charged in the information under Pen C §739. See discussion of §739 in §13.37. If the prosecution's §871.5 motion is successful, the complaint may be reinstated. People v Mayo (1986) 185 CA3d 389, 395, 229 CR 762. See also People v McGlothen (1987) 190 CA3d 1005, 235 CR 745 (court discussed meaning of adverse findings of fact in context of §871.5 review of magistrate's dismissal of homicide case; see further discussion in §13.35).

§13.33 B. Noticing and Preparing Pen C §871.5 Motion

A prosecutor must make the Pen C §871.5 motion in the trial court within 15 calendar days after the dismissal. Pen C §871.5(a). This requirement is jurisdictional. People v Dethloff (1992) 9 CA4th 620, 11 CR2d 814 (superior court was without jurisdiction to proceed on motion filed 20 days after dismissal). A hearing on the motion, however, need not occur within the 15-day period. People v Dianda (1986) 178 CA3d 174, 223 CR 635. One reason for this practice is that the transcript of the preliminary examination frequently is not ready within 15 calendar days after the dismissal. On this setting date, the court sets briefing dates (prosecution's opening, defendant's response, and prosecution's reply) and a hearing date for the motion.

Notice must be given to the magistrate who ordered the dismissal, and to the defendant. Pen C §871.5(a)-(b). The prosecutor must file a written request for a transcript of the preliminary examination within 10 calendar days after the dismissal. Copies of the transcript must be provided to the prosecutor and all defendants, without cost, in the manner prescribed in Pen C §869. Pen C §871.5(d).

A sample motion to compel reinstatement of the complaint under §871.5, and a supporting memorandum, are in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§13.4, 13.6 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§13.34 C. Pen C §871.5 Hearing

Penal Code §871.5 hearings usually are not held within 15 calendar days after dismissal (see Pen C §871.5(a)) but are held at a later time set by the court. See §13.33. The manner in which the hearing is conducted is not prescribed in §871.5, so practice varies from county to county. In Alameda County, for example, oral argument on the motions is similar to that for Pen C §995 motions, except that the prosecutor, as the moving party and the party whose brief was filed first, is the first to argue, followed by defense counsel, with rebuttal by the prosecutor. The judge generally rules immediately from the bench.

In a §871.5 hearing, the trial court sits as a reviewing court and is bound by the magistrate's findings of fact as long as they are supported by substantial evidence. See People v San Nicolas (2004) 34 C4th 614, 654, 21 CR3d 612; People v Slaughter (1984) 35 C3d 629, 633, 200 CR 448. The trial judge must find a dismissal to be erroneous as a matter of law when the evidence provides a rational basis for believing that the defendant is guilty, as long as the magistrate's ruling did not involve a finding of fact. People v Slaughter, supra; People v Plumlee (2009) 166 CA4th 935, 83 CR3d 172. The reasonableness of a search or seizure is an issue of law, but a determination about reasonableness is usually based on findings of fact that are binding on the reviewing court under Pen C §1538.5(i). See People v Rosales (1989) 211 CA3d 325, 259 CR 503.

If the motion to reinstate the complaint is granted, the court may order the magistrate to resume proceedings. On occasion, if the order is a complicated one, the judge may require the prosecution to prepare an order for the judge's signature.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.35 D. Proceedings Following Reinstatement

If the judge who reviews a magistrate's dismissal at the preliminary examination orders the complaint, or a portion of it, reinstated, the magistrate must comply with that order within 10 calendar days after the order is made. Pen C §871.5(e). If prejudice can be shown, a magistrate's failure to reinstate the complaint within the 10-day period will result in a successful Pen C §995 motion. People v Mesaris (1988) 201 CA3d 1377, 247 CR 708 (rule stated, but §995 grant reversed because defendant failed to show actual prejudice from delay).

As an alternative to or in addition to reinstatement of the complaint and resumption of proceedings, the reviewing court may order the magistrate to hold the defendant to answer. See People v Childs (1991) 226 CA3d 1397, 1408, 277 CR 456. If the court so orders, the magistrate may not reopen proceedings to make factual findings. 226 CA3d at 1409.

The defendant may choose to waive the right to be committed by a magistrate, and consent to the filing of an information, or amended information, containing the reinstated charge or charges. The defendant must personally waive that right for the waiver to be effective. See Pen C §871.5(g).

Defense counsel's only remedy to reinstatement is to challenge the subsequent information by a §995 motion after the new or amended information is filed. Pen C §871.5(f).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.36 E. Effect of Denial of Pen C §871.5 Motion

A decision under Pen C §871.5 in favor of the defense is a bar to a refiling of the dismissed complaint or portion of the complaint. Pen C §871.5(c). However, Pen C §1238(a)(9) permits the prosecutor to appeal a ruling refusing reinstatement. See Pen C §871.5(f).

§13.37 X. CHARGING AND RECHARGING UNDER PEN C §739

If a magistrate makes a holding order following a preliminary examination, the prosecutor can file an information in the trial court charging any offense named in the holding order or any transactionally related offense shown by the evidence at the preliminary examination. Pen C §739; Parks v Superior Court (1952) 38 C2d 609, 612, 241 P2d 521. This includes offenses and clauses that were dismissed by the magistrate, unless the dismissal was based on factual findings by the magistrate. Pizano v Superior Court (1978) 21 C3d 128, 133, 145 CR 524; Jones v Superior Court (1971) 4 C3d 660, 666, 94 CR 289; People v Casillas (2001) 92 CA4th 171, 177, 111 CR2d 651. See §13.17 on factual findings. The prosecutor may not recharge by information an offense barred by the magistrate's factual, as opposed to legal, findings. Jones v Superior Court, supra.

Ø Note: If there is no holding order, the prosecutor cannot file an information at all. Pen C §739. See People v Luna (1983) 140 CA3d 788, 793 n3, 189 CR 792.

Although a prosecutor can recharge a count or clause in an information in the trial court under §739 after it has been dismissed once by a magistrate, the prosecution is precluded from doing so by Pen C §1387 if it has been dismissed twice by a magistrate. Ramos v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 26, 34, 184 CR 622; Dunn v Superior Court (1984) 159 CA3d 1110, 206 CR 242. If a prosecutor wishes to eliminate the effect of a second dismissal, he or she may challenge it under Pen C §871.5. Review under §871.5, however, is binding on the prosecutor; if the reviewing judge finds that the magistrate was correct, the prosecution cannot refile the dismissed action, count, or clause. Ramos v Superior Court, supra.

The prosecutor cannot challenge a magistrate's dismissal under §871.5 if the crime or other allegation can be recharged by information in the trial court under Pen C §739. See Pen C §871.5(a) (motion limited to dismissed counts and allegations "which may not be charged by information under the provisions of Section 739").

An indictment may not be amended "so as to change the offense charged." Pen C §1009.

Event	Availability of Pen C §871.5	Availability of Pen C §739
Entire complaint dismissed for first time by magistrate.	Available (Pen C §871.5(a); People v Childs (1991) 226 CA3d 1397, 1405, 277 CR 456; People v Mimms (1988) 204 CA3d 471, 479, 251 CR 672) if complaint dismissed under Pen C §§859b, 861, 871, 1008, 1381, 1381.5, 1385, 1387, or 1389, or under Veh C §41403, and by legal, not factual, ruling.	Not available. Pen C §739.
Portion of complaint dismissed for first time by magistrate.	Available if portion dismissed under Pen C §§859b, 861, 871, 1008, 1381, 1381.5, 1385, 1387, or 1389, or under Veh C §41403, and if that portion cannot be charged in information under Pen C §739. Pen C §871.5(a).	Available if portion dismissed was shown at preliminary examination to have been committed, and was transactionally related to one of charges for which defendant was held to answer, and was dismissed by legal, not factual, ruling. Pen C §739; Jones v Superior Court (1971) 4 C3d 660, 666, 94 CR 289; Parks v Superior Court (1952) 38 C2d 609, 612, 241 P2d 521.
Crime not charged in complaint, but proved at preliminary examination.	Not available. Pen C §871.5(a).	Available if uncharged crime is transactionally related to one of charges for which defendant was held to answer. Pen C §739; Jones v Superior Court, supra; Parks v Superior Court, supra.
Portion of complaint dismissed for second time by magistrate.	Available if portion dismissed under Pen C §§859b, 861, 871, 1008, 1381, 1381.5, 1385, 1387, or 1389, or under Veh C §41403, and by legal, not factual, ruling. Pen C §871.5(a); Ramos v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 26, 34, 184 CR 622.	Not available. Ramos v Superior Court, supra; Dunn v Superior Court (1984) 159 CA3d 1110, 206 CR 242.

§13.39 XII. REMANDING CASE TO MAGISTRATE; CORRECTING ERRORS IN TRIAL COURT

A prosecutor may ask the judge reviewing a Pen C §995 motion to remand a case to the magistrate to correct errors alleged by the defendant, if the court finds the errors to be "minor errors of omission, ambiguity, or technical defect which can be expeditiously cured or corrected without a rehearing of a substantial portion of the evidence." Pen C §995a(b)(1). The prosecutor must make such a request before a ruling on the §995 motion. If the parties agree, further proceedings may be conducted in the trial court. Pen C §995a(b)(1).

Appellate courts have restricted the use of remands under Pen C §995a(b)(1). For example, a magistrate's erroneous ruling on an evidentiary issue has been held not to constitute an error within the ambit of the statute (Tharp v Superior Court (1984) 154 CA3d 215, 201 CR 131 (magistrate precluded cross-examination testing validity of search warrant); Loverde v Superior Court (1984) 162 CA3d 102, 208 CR 134 (magistrate denied motion to suppress evidence under Pen C §1538.5)); and an error of omission has been determined to be "minor" only when it is "comparatively unimportant" in relation to the balance of the evidence needed for the holding order (Garcia v Superior Court (2009) 177 CA4th 803, 806, 99 CR3d 488 (no remand on Pen C §148 charge to cure failure to elicit from officer that he commanded defendant to stop); Caple v Superior Court (1987) 195 CA3d 594, 241 CR 735 (remand on drug charges to cure failure to elicit from officer that defendant admitted he owned car in which drugs were found)).

When making a remand order, the Pen C §995 court must specify which minor errors it finds could be expeditiously cured or corrected. Pen C §995a(b)(1). Because the remand does not extend the time for trial (Pen C §995a(b)(3)), it is recommended that the remand order specify a date for the case to be returned to the trial court. Under Pen C §995(b)(2), the further proceedings may include the taking of testimony and are deemed to be part of the preliminary examination. Accordingly, the magistrate should hold a hearing with a court reporter present and should order that a transcript be prepared and sent to the reviewing court and the parties. See Pen C §869.

A ruling on defense counsel's §995 motion is deferred until the proceeding to correct errors under Pen C §995a(b)(1) is completed. Pen C §995(b). The usual effect is to defeat the §995 motion.

The prosecutor may invoke §995a(b)(1) only "once for each information filed." Pen C §995a(b)(3). Although case law has not clarified this language, it appears that a prosecutor may use the §995a(b)(1) procedure again in the same case if the first information is dismissed and an indictment or second information is filed.

XIII. REMEDIES FOLLOWING RULING ON PEN C §995 MOTION

A. If Motion Is Denied

§13.40 1. Pretrial Petition for Writ of Prohibition

Defense counsel may seek review of an adverse ruling on a Pen C §995 motion by filing a petition for writ of prohibition. Pen C §999a. Counsel should seek a pretrial writ whenever the issue has substantial merit, because prejudice is presumed when review is sought before trial. Although the defendant is not required to seek writ relief to preserve the issue presented in an unsuccessful §995 motion for appeal (People v Webster (1991) 54 C3d 411, 435, 285 CR 31), if the defendant waits until after trial to challenge a §995 ruling, he or she must show prejudice (People v Pompa-Ortiz (1980) 27 C3d 519, 529, 165 CR 851). See also People v Douglas (1990) 50 C3d 468, 506, 268 CR 126. Thus, for example, a violation of Pen C §859b's 2-day requirement should be challenged by petition for writ following denial of the §995 motion, because on appeal the defense will most likely be unable to show the necessary prejudice to succeed. See People v Castaneda (1987) 190 CA3d 961, 235 CR 740.

A petition for writ of prohibition must be filed within 15 calendar days after denial of the §995 motion, if the basis for the petition is lack of reasonable or probable cause to support an information or indictment. Pen C §999a. The 15-day rule does not apply if the basis for seeking relief is an otherwise improperly found indictment or information. People v Superior Court (Brent) (1992) 2 CA4th 675, 683, 3 CR2d 375; Ondarza v Superior Court (1980) 106 CA3d 195, 197, 164 CR 892. When the 15-day rule does not apply, appellate review appears limited only by Pen C §1510.

Ø Note: A petition challenging an abuse of discretion in remanding a case to the magistrate under the authority of Pen C §995a(b) must also be filed within 15 calendar days after the trial court's ruling. Pen C §999a.

Petitions for writs grounded on any theory may be reviewed only if the §995 motion was made within 60 calendar days after the defendant's arraignment, unless the defendant was unaware of the issue or had no opportunity to raise it. Pen C §1510. For discussion of what constitutes "making a motion" and "arraignment," see §13.26.

When the issues raised in a petition for writ of prohibition apply to fewer than all counts in an information, a potential procedural morass develops. Normally, the appellant asks the trial court to stay proceedings or, more colloquially, to continue the matter to be set for trial. If the trial court refuses, the appellant may request a stay from the appellate court at the time of filing the petition for writ of prohibition. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.112, 8.116 (writ of supersedeas), 8.486 (writ of prohibition). A petition for writ of prohibition does not automatically stay proceedings, and a stay is normally granted only on a showing of good cause. Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases §8.4 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

A sample petition for writ of mandate or prohibition is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §42.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). For discussion of how to count calendar days, see §1.16.

§13.41 2. Pretrial Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus

As an alternative to bringing a pretrial writ of prohibition, defense counsel may petition for a writ of habeas corpus following denial of his or her Pen C §995 motion. Pen C §1487(7); People v Manson (1976) 61 CA3d 102, 170, 132 CR 265. The grounds for bringing a petition for habeas corpus in Pen C §1487 are so broad that they encompass those set out in §995.

The petition can be filed in the superior court, the court of appeal, or the California Supreme Court. Cal Const art VI, §10. See also Pen C §1508. However, because the appellate courts are not well equipped to resolve evidentiary questions, a habeas corpus petition that is not filed in conjunction with an appeal from the judgment of conviction should be filed first in the superior court. In re Hochberg (1970) 2 C3d 870, 87 CR 681. Even if the court of appeal does not summarily deny a habeas petition filed in the first instance in the reviewing court, it will most likely make any order to show cause returnable in the superior court. In re Hochberg, supra. The defendant cannot appeal the trial court's denial of a habeas petition but should instead file a new original petition in the court of appeal. See, e.g., In re Joiner (1960) 180 CA2d 250, 4 CR 667. Review of the denial of a habeas corpus petition in the court of appeal may be obtained by filing a petition for review in the supreme court (Pen C §1506; In re Michael E. (1975) 15 C3d 183, 193 n15, 123 CR 103), or by filing another petition invoking the high court's original habeas jurisdiction (In re Catalano (1981) 29 C3d 1, 171 CR 667).

The prosecutor may seek review of a trial court's final order made on the return of a writ of habeas corpus favorable to the defendant by appealing to the court of appeal. Pen C §1506.

For further discussion of habeas corpus proceedings, see §§42.22-42.34; Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases, chaps 9-10 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

§13.42 3. No Defense Right to Pretrial Appeal of Pen C §995 Ruling; Preserving Issue for Posttrial Appeal

Defense counsel has no right to pretrial appeal of the denial of a Pen C §995 motion. Pretrial relief is through either a petition for writ of prohibition (see §13.40) in the court of appeal or a petition for writ of habeas corpus in the trial or appellate court (see §13.41).

Defense counsel may raise errors that occurred at the preliminary examination, or before the grand jury on posttrial appeal, but only if they were first raised by §995 or other appropriate trial court motion, unless the defendant can show that he or she was deprived of a fair trial or otherwise suffered prejudice as a result of an error committed before the holding order issued. Pen C §996; People v Pompa-Ortiz (1980) 27 C3d 519, 529, 165 CR 851.

B. If Motion Is Granted

§13.43 1. Appeal

The prosecution may appeal the granting of a motion under Pen C §995, whether directed to one of several counts or to the whole indictment or information. Pen C §1238(a)(1); People v Shirley (1978) 78 CA3d 424, 430, 144 CR 282; People v Fraijo (1977) 78 CA3d 977, 980, 144 CR 424. The prosecution may also appeal from the granting of a writ of habeas corpus. Pen C §1506. See §13.41. The time limits for filing appeals in felony cases are in §44.2.

If fewer than all counts are dismissed and appealed, the prosecution may at the same time proceed to trial on any remaining counts. People v Franc (1990) 218 CA3d 588, 592, 267 CR 109.

The prosecution may appeal counts dismissed as a result of a §995 motion, and recharge an offense growing out of the same conduct, by filing a new felony complaint. However, the prosecutor must eventually elect between maintaining the appeal and proceeding under the new accusatory pleading. That election must be made at the time the defendant is arraigned on the new accusatory pleading in felony court. Anderson v Superior Court (1967) 66 C2d 863, 867, 59 CR 426; People v Franc, supra.

Ø Note: If the court grants defense counsel's §995 motion striking an enhancement clause, and the prosecution (through the Attorney General) appeals, but the appellate court does not stay the trial (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.112, 8.116), and the defendant refuses to waive time for trial, then the defendant will be tried without the enhancement clause, which will render the appeal moot. See Pen C §1242 (appeal by prosecution does not stay judgment for defendant).

The prosecution may be able to seek a writ either instead of (see, e.g., People v Superior Court (Greer) (1977) 19 C3d 255, 137 CR 476) or in addition to appealing (People v Superior Court (Engert) (1982) 31 C3d 797, 800, 183 CR 800; People v Superior Court (Brodie) (1975) 48 CA3d 195, 198, 121 CR 732). For discussion, see §13.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.44 2. Writ of Mandate

A petition for writ of mandate is available to the prosecution as an alternative to an appeal when the issue in question is appealable but an appeal would be inadequate because the matter requires quicker resolution than is possible by appeal. See People v Superior Court (Greer) (1977) 19 C3d 255, 137 CR 476. When the prosecution's remedy for dismissal of part of an information on a Pen C §995 motion is an appeal under Pen C §1238(a)(1), but a trial date is set, the prosecution should seek a writ. People v Superior Court (Bolden) (1989) 209 CA3d 1109, 257 CR 678 (writ issued); People v Superior Court (Deardorf) (1986) 183 CA3d 509, 228 CR 137 (writ issued).

The prosecution may file both a petition for writ and an appeal, and allow the appellate court to select the appropriate vehicle for review. See People v Superior Court (Brodie) (1975) 48 CA3d 195, 198, 121 CR 732. An example of this situation is when the defendant is in custody and refuses to waive time for trial. This is all the more true when the issue to be resolved involves acts claimed to be in excess of jurisdiction. People v Superior Court (Brodie), supra (trial court acted in excess of jurisdiction by misapplying Pen C §190.2; appellate court allowed prosecutor to charge prior murder conviction as special circumstance). In People v Superior Court (Day) (1985) 174 CA3d 1008, 1014, 220 CR 330, the prosecution's writ of mandate successfully challenged the trial court's §995 ruling that the prosecution could file only a voluntary manslaughter charge, not a murder charge, in the trial court.

The above examples should be distinguished from cases in which the prosecutor does not have the right to appeal. If no appellate right exists, a petition for writ will not lie. See People v Superior Court (Stanley) (1979) 24 C3d 622, 156 CR 626. See also Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases §7.10 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

For further discussion of writs of mandate, see §§42.3-42.21.

§13.45 3. Recharge

The general rule is that a matter dismissed as a result of a Pen C §995 motion may be recharged if there has been no previous dismissal. Pen C §1387. For further discussion of the two-dismissal rule, including exceptions, see §13.31.

When offenses were originally charged jointly, but then severed by a §995 motion, and the basis for joinder was the permissive provisions of Pen C §954, i.e., offenses of the same class of crime, there is no bar to trying the offenses in separate proceedings. In other words, the discharged offense may be recharged in a separate accusatory pleading.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.46 4. Dual Remedies: Recharge and Appeal

The prosecution may recharge dismissed counts in a new complaint (when recharge is available; see §13.37), and simultaneously appeal a Pen C §995 dismissal. An election between the appeal and the new complaint must be made at arraignment on the new accusations in felony court. If no election is made, the appeal is waived. Anderson v Superior Court (1967) 66 C2d 863, 867, 59 CR 426. See §13.43.

The two-dismissal rule of Pen C §1387 on recharging (in general, a felony complaint cannot be refiled after two dismissals) often causes a prosecutor to appeal as well as recharge. If the prosecutor recharges without appealing, and the recharged case is dismissed for a second time, for example, under Pen C §859b or §861, further prosecution is barred, and the prosecutor has no avenue of review.

For further discussion of charging and recharging alternatives, see §§13.31, 13.37-13.38.

§14.1 I. OVERVIEW

This chapter discusses the mandate of Cal Const art I, §15, and the Sixth Amendment that the accused in a criminal case be granted a public trial in light of the constitutional protections for freedom of the press contained in Cal Const art I, §2, and the First Amendment. These two core constitutional guaranties of a public trial and freedom of the press have led to the evolution of complex constitutional doctrines as they are both analyzed in the context of the further California constitutional rights to due process and to a jury trial (see Cal Const art I, §§7, 15, 16), and in view of federal due process and fair trial rights of the Fifth and Sixth Amendments, made applicable to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment.

Ø Note: For discussion of change of venue due to publicity, see chap 15.

While publicity may prejudice the integrity of a trial, criminal trials involve matters of public interest, and the accused has the constitutional right to have the public, including members of the press, present for proceedings. Freedom of the press, and statutes providing public access to courts and court records, ensure transparency in the judicial process. While most cases generate little or no publicity, when a given case garners public and media interest, that scrutiny may be a matter of concern not only to the court, but also to the lawyers and the parties they represent. Concerns about press or public access to certain files, documents, or proceedings may require counsel and the court to consider a limit on public access. A "megacase" may involve the constant presence of the working press as well as persistent attempts to allow cameras (both still and video) into the courtroom and to obtain statements or other information from the parties and counsel.

Media scrutiny requires that counsel monitor the accuracy and characteristics of the media coverage. In addition, if a change of venue will be sought, counsel will need to take steps early in the case to gather basic information on the nature, content, quantity, and placement of the media coverage of the case. This will likely require contacting media outlets, clipping services, change of venue experts, and the like. Counsel may choose to make an extrajudicial statement to the media, issue a press release, or maintain contact with members of the press in an effort to educate the public, or to try to ensure balance in the coverage. Counsel's media contacts are regulated, and counsel should be aware that Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-120(A) requires that statements to the press not have a substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing the case. See also ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond 3.6. Media attention not only requires counsel to know about the legal and ethical rules governing counsels' conduct, but also about how to deal with the press, how to obtain sealing and closure orders, and how to deal with the litigation that can result from a court decision to exclude the media from obtaining documents, or access to a hearing.

Courts must consider how best to provide both public and media access to court proceedings, and information about cases and court processes, while ensuring the protection of individuals' constitutional and statutory rights. See Hannaford-Agor, When All Eyes Are Watching: Trial Characteristics and Practices in Notorious Trials, 91 Judicature 197 (2008). A variety of publications has addressed this balancing act. See, e.g., Best Practices in Building Public Trust and Confidence: Working With the Media, from the National Center for State Courts, available on the center's website at http://www.ncsconline.org.

Counsel (and courts) dealing with well-publicized cases should review authoritative material on working with the media, on the impact of publicity, and on the relationship between the court process and the media. See, e.g., National Jury Project, Jurywork: Systematic Techniques (2d ed 1983); Hayslett, Anatomy of a Trial: Public Loss, Lessons Learned from The People vs. O.J. Simpson (2008); Cushner et al., Spreading the News: Communicating With the Media During High-Profile Trials, 93 Judicature 52 (2009); Duncan, Pretrial Publicity in High Profile Trials; An Integrated Approach to Protecting the Right to a Fair Trial and the Right to Privacy, 34 Ohio NU L Rev 755 (2008); Geragos, The Thirteenth Juror: Media Coverage of Supersized Trials, 39 Loy LA L Rev 1167 (2007); Radu, The Difficult Task of Model Rule of Professional Conduct 3.6: Balancing the Free Speech Rights of Lawyers, the Sixth Amendment Rights of Criminal Defendants, and Society's Right to the Fair Administration of Justice, 29 Campbell L Rev 497 (Spring 2007); Arbuthnot, Myers & Leach, Linking Juror Prejudgment and Pretrial Publicity Knowledge: Some Methodological Considerations, 20 Am J Forensic Psych 52 (2002); Allen Chair Symposium 2000, Trying Cases in the Media: Legal Ethics, Fair Trials and Free Press, 34 U Rich L Rev 1095 (2001); Bruschke & Loges, Free Press v. Fair Trials (2004); and Fulero, Empirical and Legal Perspectives on Pre-Trial Publicity: Effects and Remedies, 26 Law & Human Behavior (2002).

This chapter provides an introduction to the complications involved in high-publicity cases, or cases that otherwise require attempting to curtail public access to court records or proceedings for specific purposes. Counsel will want to become familiar with remedies available when a case is subject to a heightened level of attention, including change of venue (see chap 15); a continuance to permit abatement of the publicity or media attention (see chap 20); closing pretrial proceedings to the public (see §§14.12-14.19); sealing of transcripts or other documents pertinent to the proceedings (see §§14.11-14.11A); and the issuance of restraining orders, gag orders, or other orders aimed at curtailing the dissemination of information (see §§14.19A-14.26). See Sheppard v Maxwell (1966) 384 US 333, 357, 16 L Ed 2d 600, 86 S Ct 1507 (discussion of available remedies). The consequences of publicity will not only involve the sorts of remedies just discussed, but may also affect the questions in voir dire (see chap 15 on the use of public opinion surveys before trial), the decision whether to request sequestered voir dire (see §14.14), and the decision to request sequestration of the jury. In addition, specific jury instructions address publicity and media coverage. See chap 32. Media attention can also affect a case in other specific ways. In eyewitness identification cases, for example, media dissemination of photographs or videos, and case details, raises issues that are not related to venue or to the concerns that commonly arise with media coverage. See Devenport et al., Perspectives on Jury Decision-Making: Cases with Pretrial Publicity and Cases Based on Eyewitness Identification, published in Durso, Handbook of Applied Cognition (1999). For further discussion of eyewitness identification issues, see chap 22.

Ø Warning: Counsel should consult local rules before relying on this chart. Counties may have specific time requirements not otherwise required by the Penal Code.

Type of Motion	When Defendant Makes Motion	When Prosecutor Makes Motion
Motion to keep grand jury transcript sealed. Pen C §938.1(b). See also Daily Journal Corp. v Superior Court (1999) 20 C4th 1117, 86 CR2d 623; Alvarez v Superior Court (2007) 154 CA4th 642, 64 CR3d 854.	Within 10 calendar days after receipt of transcript. Note: In some cases, as when privileged information is involved, the motion should be made as soon as possible.	Within 10 calendar days after receipt of transcript by defendant.
Motion for pretrial publicity order. Younger v Smith (1973) 30 CA3d 138, 106 CR 225.	Any time after arrest and before trial, e.g., at arraignment, the preliminary hearing, or again in superior court in felony case.	Any time after complaint is filed or defendant arrested.
Motion to modify pretrial publicity order. Younger v Smith, supra.	Any time after order is made.	Any time after order is made.
Motion to seal pleadings. Rosato v Superior Court (1975) 51 CA3d 190, 124 CR 427. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.550-2.551.	Made when defendant files motion requiring sealing.	Made when prosecutor makes motion requiring sealing, or responds to motion made by the defense under seal.
Motion for witnesses not to converse during preliminary hearing, and to remain outside while other witnesses are testifying. Pen C §867.	Usually made at beginning of hearing.	Usually made at beginning of preliminary hearing.
Motion to exclude public from preliminary hearing. Pen C §§868 (defense), 868.7 (prosecution).	At beginning of preliminary hearing.	At beginning of preliminary hearing.
Motion to seal preliminary hearing transcript. Cromer v Superior Court (1980) 109 CA3d 728, 167 CR 671. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.550-2.551.	At close of preliminary hearing.	At close of preliminary hearing.
Motion for change of venue. Pen C §1033; Cal Rules of Ct 4.151; People v Riggs (2008) 44 C4th 248, 278, 79 CR3d 648.	At least 10 days before trial, unless good cause shown.	At least 10 days before trial, unless good cause shown.
Motion for sequestered individual jury voir dire. Haraguchi v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 706, 718, 76 CR3d 250. But see CCP §223 (manner of voir dire resides with court); People v Box (2000) 23 C4th 1153, 1173, 99 CR2d 69 (denial of sequestered voir dire reviewed for abuse of discretion); People v Waidla	Before jury voir dire begins.	Before jury voir dire begins.

Request that judge instruct jury to disregard media reports about case during trial. Pen C §1122(a).	Court is required sua sponte to give this instruction after jury has been sworn and before People's opening statement.	If court does not give instruction, prosecutor should request it before giving his or her opening statement.
Request for jury instruction, or submission of proposed instruction on pretrial publicity. Pen C §1093.5.	Required before argument begins.	Required before argument begins.
Motion to sequester jury. Pen C §1121; see People v Ayers (1975) 51 CA3d 370, 380, 124 CR 283.	No set time; probably any time before jury begins to deliberate.	No set time; probably any time before jury begins to deliberate.

See also People v Navarette (2003) 30 C4th 458, 486, 133 CR2d 89 (court has ultimate authority over questionnaire contents).
- Voir dire of jurors to reject individual jurors who are prejudiced because of publicity (see CCP §229), and to educate jurors on any misinformation in the press and their duty to be fair (see People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 853, 277 CR 122).

Ø Note: Some courts have adopted local rules concerning publicity, e.g., that no one in the courthouse may wear an item or exhibit a sign that might tend to influence a juror in a particular case, or that vehicles entering or leaving particular court parking lots may not be photographed.

§14.4 IV. ETHICAL GUIDELINES FOR LAWYERS: CAL RULES OF PROF COND 5-120

An attorney who is investigating or litigating a matter is prohibited from making an extrajudicial statement that a reasonable person would expect to have disseminated through public communication if the attorney knows or reasonably should know that the statement will have a substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing an adjudicative proceeding. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-120(A). The rule applies equally to prosecutors and criminal defense counsel. Comment to Rule 5-120.

Ø Note: Critics of Rule 5-120 have indicated their concern that, although lawyers may be more restrained in their approach to the media as a result of Rule 5-120, others, e.g., police officers, family members of the accused, or the victim, still have the unmuzzled right to comment about court proceedings.

Several categories of information are exempt from Rule 5-120. A lawyer may disclose the following (Rule 5-120(B)):

- The claim, offense, or defense involved, and, except when prohibited by law, the identity of the persons involved;
- Information in a public record;
- The fact that an investigation of the matter is in progress; and
- The scheduling or result of any step in the litigation.

An attorney may also disclose the following (Rule 5-120(B)):

- A request for assistance in obtaining evidence and information necessary to the litigation; and
- A warning of danger concerning the behavior of a person involved, when there is reason to believe there is a likelihood of substantial harm to an individual or the public interest.

In a criminal case, an attorney may also disclose these items (Rule 5-120(B)):

- The identity, residence, occupation, and family status of the accused;
- Information necessary to aid in apprehending the accused;
- The fact, time, and place of arrest; and
- The identity of the investigating and arresting officers or agencies and the length of the investigation.

Rule 5-120(C) contains a "safe harbor" provision allowing statements to be made to protect a client against (presumably adverse) publicity by someone else. The following factors may be taken into account in determining whether the rule has been violated (see the Discussion to Rule 5-120):

- Whether the extrajudicial statement contains clearly inadmissible evidence and is made for the purpose of proving or disproving a material fact in issue;
- Whether the statement is false, deceptive, or in violation of Bus & P C §6068(d) (prohibiting lawyers from deviating from the truth or misleading a court or judicial officer);
- Whether the statement violates a lawful gag order or other protective rule; and
- The timing of the statement.

The constitutionality of this rule has yet to be tested at the time of this update, but it is fair to say that the rule is controversial. Gentile v State Bar (1991) 501 US 1030, 115 L Ed 2d 888, 111 S Ct 2720, is particularly relevant. In that case, a divided U.S. Supreme Court discussed the imposition of discipline on a criminal defense lawyer under a Nevada Supreme Court rule that the court found was "almost identical" to ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond 3.6. The Nevada safe harbor rule was held void for vagueness, at least as it had been interpreted by the Nevada Supreme Court. 501 US at 1048.

Ø Note: Until further litigation clarifies aspects of the California rule, there may be legitimate questions about the true breadth of 5-120(C). Current commentary, which provides vastly ranging views on the meaning of the safe harbor provision, clearly will not substitute for careful legal research whenever counsel has a question about his or her speech rights under Rule 5-120. The State Bar maintains an ethics hotline and publishes a Compendium of the Rules of Professional Conduct. The ABA Criminal Justice Section's Standards for Fair Trial and Free Press are available on the section's website at http://www.abanet.org/crimjust/standards/fairtrial_toc.html. ABA ethics information is also available through the ABA's Center for Professional Responsibility; their home page is at http://www.abanet.org/cpr/home.html. The National Center for State Courts also offers a number of online publications that explore the relationship between media coverage and jury decision-making; their home page is at http://www.ncsconline.org.

V. APPROACHES TO TALKING TO THE MEDIA

§14.4A A. In General

There are rules by which reporters generally operate. Chief among these is whether the lawyer is talking on the record or off the record. Counsel must learn the ground rules for interviews. Reporters with a strong sense of professionalism will honor requests that the reporter describe the "angle" counsel would like taken in a given piece of reporting. Similarly, print reporters are usually careful to adhere to requests that a conversation be considered off the record and for background only. Relations with the electronic media tend to be somewhat different, although the fundamental questions remain the same. Media outlets may organize themselves into pools, with pool producers who direct part of the coverage. Some courts and media outlets have written agreements about how coverage will be "managed," and counsel should be familiar with such practices. Often a lawyer will be asked whether she or he is willing to appear "on air," or "on tape." Early in a case, it is usually best to refuse all requests for interviews, stating that a decision about whether to hold a press conference is pending, and indicating that as soon as the decision is made, the reporter will be notified.

Counsel may find it hard to obtain reliable guaranties that an editor or producer will agree either to air or publish a comment made by a lawyer on a given case. The easiest way to try to obtain some control over what information is disseminated is to prepare a statement in writing and read it at a press conference, or at a time when the lawyer has organized her or his thoughts sufficiently to present a coherent, brief, newsworthy, and "legal" statement. The written statement can then be distributed to members of the media as well.

Large prosecutors' offices have media spokespersons, as do some criminal defense organizations and large law firms. Consultation with experienced media spokespersons will enhance a lawyer's understanding of the practices governing the dissemination of information to the media, and may assist an inexperienced lawyer in outlining a plan through which to deal with the media.

A list of publications available to courts and counsel on dealings with the media is available on the website of the National Center for State Courts at http://www.ncsconline.org.

§14.5 B. Defense Relations With the Media

Various approaches may be taken to media relations. Some counsel believe that, because of the importance that the media plays in affecting public opinion, failure to participate in media "dialogue" puts the client at a disadvantage. Other lawyers disagree, and prefer not to respond to media inquiries.

Preparation is the key to successful relations with the media. A number of topics may be addressed by defense counsel in early statements to the press: humanizing the accused by giving a brief description of his or her circumstances; indicating when advisable that the case is defensible, or that certain key facts have not yet emerged; appealing, in the appropriate case, for witnesses to come forward; and responding, when appropriate, to accusations or statements that are demonstrably incorrect.

It is important to have some dialogue with a reporter in advance of an interview to set the ground rules. It is usually best to have prepared in advance a short, concise statement because the media tend to use only very short quotes, which means that your entire statement may result in a single quotation, perhaps out of context, on a news broadcast or in a newspaper article. While there are often good reasons for responding to prejudicial publicity in a forceful manner, defense counsel should exercise caution. Generating additional media coverage may hinder obtaining a change of venue because the prosecution may emphasize the defense's responsibility for publicity. Speaking to the media may not counteract the prejudice and may lead to repetition of the prejudicial material. For example, a conclusory denial of guilt does little to offset damaging publicity while encouraging rejoinders by the prosecution, victims, and others. The possibility exists that a response may violate the rules of professional conduct. When deciding what to tell the press, counsel should review the following:

- Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-120 (see §14.4);
- Cal Rules of Ct 1.150 (see §14.10);
- ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond 3.6;
- Gentile v State Bar (1991) 501 US 1030, 115 L Ed 2d 888, 111 S Ct 2720 (discusses defense counsel's dealings with press); and
- The issue of privilege concerning statements of counsel (see Barnhorst, Statements to the Press: Does the Absolute Privilege Absolutely Not Apply? 5 Cal Litigation 39 (Fall 1991)).

See generally the Notorious Cases Resource Guide available from the National Center for State Courts at http://www.ncsconline.org.

§14.6 C. Prosecution Relations With the Media

Prosecutors have the difficult task of balancing the right of the individual accused of a crime to receive fair and impartial treatment with the public's right to receive information about the public prosecutor's actions in criminal cases. Prosecutors are also subject to the regulations in Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-120 (discussed in §14.4).

Some prosecution offices have internal guidelines dealing with the news media. Also, most major district attorney offices issue numerous training circulars on practices associated with high-publicity cases. These circulars are available to lawyers in the Attorney General's office, the various district attorney offices, and criminal divisions of the city attorney's office. A prosecutor should not exploit his or her office by seeking personal publicity in connection with a case before, during, or after trial. ABA Standards for Criminal Justice: Prosecution Function (1993 revision), Parts I, II, V. In addition, under the ABA Standards, prosecutors are not to make public comments critical of a verdict. Prosecution Function, Standard 3-5.10.

Ø Note: Under ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond 3.6(b), a violation of the general guidelines listed in Rule 3.6(b) may provide the defense with grounds for a change of venue. See chap 15.

§14.7 D. Grand Jury

All grand jurors are prohibited from disclosing the fact of an indictment until a defendant is arrested. Pen C §924. They are also prohibited from disclosing evidence presented to the grand jury and from discussions among grand jury members. Pen C §924.1. See also chap 9 on the grand jury.

Ø Note: Significant litigation concerning grand jury secrecy was conducted in relation to a well-publicized Orange County bankruptcy case. Lawyers interested in legal developments in this area should review that litigation. See Daily Journal Corp. v Superior Court (1999) 20 C4th 1117, 86 CR2d 623. The authors are also aware of litigation concerning defense requests to maintain certain grand jury transcripts under seal on the basis of the contention that a lawyer for the newly indicted defendant testified before the grand jury and, in doing so, disseminated confidential communications in violation of the attorney-client privilege. See Evid C §954. Because of the procedures surrounding assertion of the attorney-client privilege and the making of objections to the publication of confidential communications (see Evid C §§917, 952), defense counsel argued that the grand jury transcripts were not subject to release under Pen C §938.1 and had to be maintained under seal pending a resolution of claims of privilege. Restrictions on media access to records of ancillary grand jury proceedings, such as motions to quash witness subpoenas, were addressed in Los Angeles Times v Superior Court (2003) 114 CA4th 247, 250, 7 CR3d 524, in which the court noted that the policies militating in favor of grand jury secrecy will likely shield such records from media access. Admonishments that restricted grand jury witnesses from discussing testimony or the subject of the grand jury's inquiry with the press were upheld against claims by media organizations that those admonishments infringed on the First Amendment. San Jose Mercury News, Inc. v Criminal Grand Jury (2004) 122 CA4th 410, 417, 18 CR3d 645. In Alvarez v Superior Court (2007) 154 CA4th 642, 656, 64 CR3d 854, the court recognized a limited, qualified right of the press and public to access grand jury transcripts after indictment, holding that a defendant moving to keep a grand jury transcript sealed until the completion of his trial needed to show only a "reasonable likelihood" that he would not receive a fair trial if the transcripts were released, rather than a "substantial probability" of prejudice. See Pen C §938.1(b).

Under the federal rules (Fed R Crim P 6(e)(6)),

> [r]ecords, orders, and subpoenas relating to grand-jury proceedings must be kept under seal to the extent and as long as necessary to prevent the unauthorized disclosure of a matter occurring before a grand jury.

This rule has been used as a guide in California. See Los Angeles Times v Superior Court (2003) 114 CA4th 247, 260, 7 CR3d 524.

VI. ACCESS TO COURT RECORDS

§14.8 A. Introduction

There is a slight, though significant, difference between, on the one hand, what courts have interpreted as the right of public access to criminal proceedings and the accused's right to a public trial within the meaning of the Sixth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution (see also Cal Const art I, §§3(b), 15) and, on the other hand, the right of access to court files and documents. Generally speaking, as noted below, pertinent law and public policy favor a public right of access to court documents. Nonetheless, situations exist in which litigants, their lawyers, and the courts have an interest in either delaying the opening of filings to public scrutiny, or even denying such access until the conclusion of appellate proceedings. An example of legally permitted delay is found in Pen C §987.9, which permits the defense in a capital case to make a confidential application for ancillary funds. However, the statutory scheme provides some right of access by the Attorney General when appellate, or collateral, litigation necessitating review of the pertinent documents is under way. See Pen C §987.9.

The state courts' "inherent and implied power to control judicial proceedings in order to insure the orderly administration of justice" provides them with "both the authority and the duty to issue … protective and seal orders" in the appropriate case and on a sufficient showing. Rosato v Superior Court (1975) 51 CA3d 190, 206, 124 CR 427. But see Cal Rules of Ct 2.550 (formal sealing procedure required, including specific sealing order). Further, notwithstanding the public's right of access to information about governmental functions (see Cal Const Art I, §3(b)), that right may have to cede to a defendant's right to fair trial. Alvarez v Superior Court (2007) 154 CA4th 642, 656, 64 CR3d 854. It should be noted that the courts' power to seal pleadings has been examined mainly against the background of a contention that the right to a fair trial might be damaged by publication or public filing of documents. Issues concerning the sealing of documents may also be raised when a lawyer makes a showing that confidential communications, within the meaning of Evid C §952 (confidential communications between client and lawyer), might be exposed to public view in the absence of a sealing order. Issues may also arise where disclosure of material concerning an information might be affected if not sealed (see Evid C §§1040-1041), or material from the personnel files of peace or custodial officers might be open to public viewing (Evid C §§1043-1047).

In addition to concerns about the effects of publicity related to the exposure of the contents of pleadings or specific court files, other concerns related to the dissemination of delayed or deferred discovery may cause the sealing of particular court documents. Penal Code §1054.7 allows a court to shield discovery from transmission between the parties, and thus, presumably from publication, when there are "threats or possible danger to a victim or witness, possible loss or destruction of evidence, or possible compromise of other investigations by law enforcement." Discovery statutes have also been interpreted to allow specific classes of witness names to be excised, thus raising the need for care and caution in the public filing of documents that include those otherwise protected names found via discovery. See Alvarado v Superior Court (2000) 23 C4th 1121, 99 CR2d 149.

§14.8A B. Court Files

Court records are presumptively open. Cal Rules of Ct 2.550(c). See also Cal Const art I, §3(b). This is true even though they are specifically exempt from the California Public Records Act (CPRA) (Govt C §§6250-6270). NBC Subsidiary (KNBC-TV), Inc. v Superior Court (1999) 20 C4th 1178, 1217, 86 CR2d 778; McClatchy Newspapers v Superior Court (1988) 44 C3d 1162, 1183, 245 CR 774; Copley Press, Inc. v Superior Court (1992) 6 CA4th 106, 111, 7 CR2d 841.

Court files commonly include all written motions, orders, plea agreements, pretrial release information, minutes, official reports, and calendars involving the case. Copley Press, Inc. v Superior Court (1992) 6 CA4th 106, 113, 7 CR2d 841. Physical evidence may or may not be listed in the court file; it is usually kept in a special evidence room. Search warrants are usually kept in a separate warrant file in the clerk's office. Court files sometimes include juror questionnaires, at least of jurors called to the jury box. Lesher Communications, Inc. v Superior Court (1990) 224 CA3d 774, 274 CR 154.

> Ø Note: Because of potential public access to jury questionnaires, counsel should consider requesting that jury questionnaires be kept confidential, or that jurors be allowed to answer sensitive questions in private, and that personal identifying information about them not be put on the questionnaire. See Copley Press, Inc. v Superior Court, supra (jurors should be advised of right to answer sensitive questions in confidence, and information such as phone numbers that is part of determining qualifications but not part of voir dire should not be disclosed); Pantos v City & County of San Francisco (1984) 151 CA3d 258, 198 CR 489 (promise of confidentiality to jurors may outweigh interest in disclosure). See also People v Rhodes (1989) 212 CA3d 541, 261 CR 1 (posttrial disclosure of names and addresses to defendant may be limited to strict showing of need).

Federal cases have applied the Press-Enterprise rules to plea agreements (Washington Post v Robinson (DC Cir 1991) 935 F2d 282), pretrial release information (Seattle Times Co. v U.S. Dist. Court (9th Cir 1988) 845 F2d 1513), search warrant material, including affidavits (Times Mirror Co. v U.S. (9th Cir 1989) 873 F2d 1210, 1214, 1218), and transcripts of a hearing when the release of that transcript could compromise law enforcement interests. U.S. v Brown (WD Texas 2006) 447 F Supp 2d 666.

§14.9 C. Publication of Identity of Sexual Assault Victims

The general rule espoused by the U.S. Supreme Court has been that if the media lawfully obtain information about the victim and if the matter is of public significance, state law cannot constitutionally prohibit its publication. Florida Star v B.J.F. (1989) 491 US 524, 105 L Ed 2d 443, 109 S Ct 2603. See also Smith v Daily Mail Publ'g Co. (1979) 443 US 97, 61 L Ed 2d 399, 99 S Ct 2667 (juvenile's identity obtained through witnesses); Cox Broad. Corp. v Cohn (1975) 420 US 469, 43 L Ed 2d 328, 95 S Ct 1029 (victim's identity found in public documents).

The prosecution may assist victims in sexual assault cases by informing them of their right to have their names withheld from disclosure when access to investigation reports is sought under the Public Records Act (Govt C §6254). The court also may grant anonymity to sex offense victims. Pen C §§293, 293.5.

§14.10 D. Extended Coverage Provisions (Recording and Broadcasting)

Restrictions exist on media recording or broadcasting of proceedings by the use of television, radio, photographic, or recording equipment (sometimes called "extended coverage"). Cal Rules of Ct 1.150.

A media request for extended coverage is made to the court on Judicial Council Form MC-500 (Media Request to Photograph, Record, or Broadcast). The form must be filed at least 5 court days before the proceeding to be covered, unless good cause is shown for an exception, and must be accompanied by a completed proposed order on Judicial Council Form MC-510 (Order on Media Request to Permit Coverage). Cal Rules of Ct 1.150(e)(1). The court may hold a hearing on the request, or rule on the request without a hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 1.150(e)(2). The court has the discretion to permit, refuse, limit, or terminate media coverage. Cal Rules of Ct 1.150(e). The factors to be considered by the court in ruling on the request are listed in Cal Rules of Ct 1.150(e)(3). See, e.g., People v Dixon (2007) 148 CA4th 414, 56 CR3d 33 (applying Rule 1.150 to proceeding under Sexually Violent Predator Act (SVPA)). Courts can limit the broadcast of taped trial proceedings until after jury deliberations to avoid potential misconduct by jurors tempted to talk about the case with others who viewed the telecast. KFMB-TV Channel 8 v Municipal Court (1990) 221 CA3d 1362, 271 CR 109.

For an empirical review of what California courts have done with former Cal Rules of Ct 980 (now see Cal Rules of Ct 1.150), see Cameras in the Courtroom: Report on Rule 980, Administrative Office of the Courts (2000). See also Cohn & Dow, Cameras in the Courtroom: Television and the Pursuit of Justice (2002); Haggerty, In the Court of Public Opinion: Winning Your Case with Public Relations (2003).

Certain portions of a trial may not be photographed, recorded, or broadcast, even when extended coverage has been allowed. They are: proceedings held in chambers or that are closed to the public; jury selection; jurors and spectators; and conferences between attorneys for the parties and their clients, witnesses, assistants, each other, and the court. Cal Rules of Ct 1.150(e)(6).

> Ø Note: In a high-profile case, counsel should consider requesting that other coverage be banned, such as pictures of the defendant in manacles and jail garb or, when identification of the defendant is an issue, any pictures of the defendant.

E. Sealing Court Records and Restricted Access

§14.11 1. Grand Jury Transcripts

A grand jury transcript is unavailable to the public until 10 days after its delivery to the defendant or his or her attorney. Pen C §938.1(b). The language used in §938.1(b) states that the standard for sealing is "a reasonable likelihood" of prejudice, a standard identical to that used for a change of venue, less than "more probable than not" (see §15.4). The Fourth District, in Press-Enterprise v Superior Court (Press-Enterprise III) (1994) 22 CA4th 498, 503, 27 CR2d 708, did not decide whether the "reasonable likelihood" or the "substantial probability" (a somewhat harder test to meet) standard applies to sealing all or part of a grand jury transcript. Press-Enterprise III had claimed that the reasonable-likelihood test was unconstitutional and that the court should use the substantial-probability standard. Because the trial court's findings and the showing made by the defendant were inadequate to support sealing under either standard, it was unnecessary for the court to decide which standard to apply. Subsequently, in Alvarez v Superior Court (2007) 154 CA4th 642, 653, 64 CR3d 854, the First District held that the standard for sealing is the "reasonable likelihood of prejudice" standard under Pen C §938.1(b).

Ø Note: If the court will not accept the "reasonable likelihood" standard, the lessons from Press-Enterprise III are as follows: First, counsel must make a strong argument that unsealing will be very prejudicial based not on speculation but on evidence from such elements as content analysis of the extant publicity and the contents of the transcript, opinion testimony, and a community survey. Second, counsel should be aware that the Press-Enterprise III court said that the sealing analysis is based on some of the same factors pertinent to a change of venue motion. Third, there must be a careful consideration of reasonable alternatives, such as partial sealing, venue change, delay, careful voir dire, and the like. The trial judge must be educated as to the need to make appropriate findings. Finally, the overall standard for demonstrating prejudice is undecided, despite the clear language of §938.1(b). However, it is clear that the presumption in favor of public filings can be trumped when the court has sufficient evidence or when the records at issue "are required to be kept confidential by law." See Cal Rules of Ct 2.550(a), (c).

Thereafter, the entire transcript or any part of it may remain sealed if the court finds a reasonable likelihood that it might prejudice the defendant's right to a fair and impartial trial. Pen C §938.1(b).

If the court does decide to seal all or part of the transcript, it may be sealed only until after the trial is over. See Pen C §938.1(b); Alvarez v Superior Court (2007) 154 CA4th 642, 645, 64 CR3d 854; Rosato v Superior Court (1975) 51 CA3d 190, 207, 124 CR 427.

Courts do not have the discretion to order grand jury transcripts unsealed when no statutory permission exists, i.e., there is no discretionary "power" to release otherwise sealed transcripts. Daily Journal Corp. v Superior Court (1999) 20 C4th 1117, 86 CR2d 623; Goldstein v Superior Court (2008) 45 C4th 218, 221, 85 CR3d 213.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.11A 2. Sealing Court Records

Unless confidentiality is required by law, court records are presumed to be open. Cal Rules of Ct 2.550(c). However, in performance of its duty to control adverse publicity to protect a defendant's right to a fair trial, the court may order removed from public scrutiny material that could result in publicity so inherently prejudicial as to endanger that right. People v Jackson (2005) 128 CA4th 1009, 1021, 27 CR3d 596.

Ø Note: Possible danger to the defendant or others may also justify sealing documents or redaction. See, e.g., In re Copley Press, Inc. (9th Cir 2008) 518 F3d 1022, 1028.

A record must not be filed under seal without a court order. A record may not be filed under seal solely on the basis of the agreement or stipulation of the parties. Cal Rules of Ct 2.551(a). A noticed motion or application, accompanied by a supporting memorandum and a declaration, is required. Cal Rules of Ct 2.551(b). The party requesting that a record be filed under seal must lodge it with the court when the motion is made, unless good cause exists for not lodging it, or the record has previously been lodged. Pending the determination of the motion, the lodged record remains conditionally under seal. Cal Rules of Ct 2.551(b)(4).

A court may order that a record be filed under seal only if it expressly finds facts that establish all of the following (Cal Rules of Ct 2.550(d)):

- There exists an overriding interest that overcomes the right of public access to the record;
- The overriding interest supports sealing the record;
- A substantial probability exists that the overriding interest will be prejudiced if the record is not sealed;
- The proposed sealing is narrowly tailored; and
- No less restrictive means exist to achieve the overriding interest.

An order sealing the record must specifically set forth the facts that support the findings. Only those documents and pages or, if reasonably practicable, portions of those documents and pages that contain the material that needs to be placed under seal may be sealed. All other portions of each document or page must be included in the public file. Cal Rules of Ct 2.550(e). See, e.g., People v Jackson (2005) 128 CA4th 1009, 27 CR3d 596 (trial court properly sealed portions of indictment, including redaction of names of unindicted purported co-conspirators, but remainder of indictment ordered unsealed by court of appeal).

VII. ACCESS AND RIGHT TO PUBLIC HEARINGS, AND RIGHT TO CLOSE THEM

§14.12 A. Which Criminal Proceedings Are Presumptively Open

The press and public have the First Amendment right to attend criminal proceedings, while criminal defendants have the Sixth Amendment right to a fair trial, which can include closing proceedings to the public. Balancing these interests is not always easy. Nebraska Press Ass'n v Stuart (1976) 427 US 539, 49 L Ed 2d 683, 96 S Ct 2791. In California, the public can also arguably rely on Cal Const art I, §3(b), in claiming a right of access to court proceedings. For further discussion, see §§14.13-14.19.

Two questions determine whether a criminal proceeding should be presumptively open (Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (Press-Enterprise II) (1986) 478 US 1, 8, 92 L Ed 2d 1, 9, 106 S Ct 2735): First, has it historically been open to the press and public? Second, does public access play a significant positive role in the functioning of the particular process in question?

Criminal trials have been held to be presumptively open to the public, and therefore to the media. CCP §124; Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (Press-Enterprise I) (1984) 464 US 501, 508, 78 L Ed 2d 629, 637, 104 S Ct 819; Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v Virginia (1980) 448 US 555, 65 L Ed 2d 973, 100 S Ct 2814. Voir dire, like other parts of a criminal trial, is presumptively open to the press and public. Press-Enterprise I, supra. On closed or sequestered voir dire, see §§14.14, 14.29, 29.18, 54.25.

The right to a public trial extends to the preliminary hearing. Pen C §868 (preliminary hearings are open and public). See also Waller v Georgia (1984) 467 US 39, 81 L Ed 2d 31, 104 S Ct 2210 ("public trial" language of Sixth Amendment, concerning defense rights, covers preliminary hearings).

Ø Note: The issue of public access to commitment proceedings under the Sexually Violent Predator Act (SVPA) (Welf & I C §§6600-6609.3) remains open. See People v Dixon (2007) 148 CA4th 414, 429, 56 CR3d 33.

The media's right of access is a corollary to the public's right to open judicial proceedings. Ukiah Daily Journal v Superior Court (1985) 165 CA3d 788, 790, 211 CR 673. Decisions have given great weight to the media's First Amendment right of access. See Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (Press-Enterprise II) (1986) 478 US 1, 92 L Ed 2d 1, 106 S Ct 2735; Globe Newspaper Co. v Superior Court (1982) 457 US 596, 73 L Ed 2d 248, 102 S Ct 2613; Ukiah Daily Journal v Superior Court, supra.

Ø Note: Film or electronic media coverage is allowed only on written court order. Cal Rules of Ct 1.150(e).

§14.13 B. Parties' Right to Public Hearings

It is often difficult to convince a trial court to close hearings or seal documents, but there are good reasons to attempt to do so. First, it demonstrates good faith in attempting to reduce prejudicial pretrial publicity. Second, from the defendant's perspective, it begins to build the case for a change of venue by sensitizing the court to the problems. Third, even if a change of venue is not granted, it reduces the local prejudice, not only because of whatever measures the court may take, but also because it often restrains the media in their coverage. Finally, before sealing records or closing hearings, the court is required to consider whether there are less drastic remedies that will protect the defendant's fair trial rights while also protecting First Amendment values. Thus, the court must consider such remedies as delay, improved voir dire procedures, and change of venue. If the court identifies one or more of these remedies as an alternative to closing or sealing, the defendant is in a strong tactical position to obtain that remedy later in the trial.

In presenting the motion, counsel should do more than simply describe pervasive media coverage and make conclusory assertions about the effect of that coverage. Counsel should also provide evidence of the extensive pretrial publicity and its impact on the community. If possible, this should be done by content analysis of the publicity and a community survey, similar to what is done in a change of venue motion. See People v Prince (2007) 40 C4th 1179, 1210, 57 CR3d 543 (public opinion survey and publicity content in support of change of venue motion).

The prosecution has the right to a public trial. Cal Const art I, §29. The defense has the right to a public trial. US Const amends VI, XIV; Cal Const art I, §15. This right extends to preliminary hearings. Waller v Georgia (1984) 467 US 39, 81 L Ed 2d 31, 104 S Ct 2210. The public also has a right of access to information "concerning the conduct of the people's business." Cal Const art I, §3(b).

The defendant's right to a public trial may be at least as extensive as the media's; Waller held that closure of a trial over a defendant's objection requires the same stringent showing set out in the Press-Enterprise I case (Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (1984) 464 US 501, 78 L Ed 2d 629, 104 S Ct 819). Waller v Georgia (1984) 467 US 39, 47, 81 L Ed 2d 31, 39, 104 S Ct 2210. See People v Prince (2007) 40 C4th 1179, 1279, 57 CR3d 543. The proponent of closure must show evidence of an overriding or compelling interest in closure, a substantial probability that that interest will be prejudiced or harmed if closure is not granted, that closure is no broader than necessary, and that no other reasonable alternative exists. See In re Copley Press, Inc. (9th Cir 2008) 518 F3d 1022, 1028.

> Ø Note: The standard for closure is probably the same under either the First or Sixth Amendment. The court in Waller v Georgia, supra, held that a defendant has a right to open a hearing on a motion to suppress evidence. The court used First Amendment cases to support its holding, which was based on the Sixth Amendment.

Under certain circumstances, such as when certain identified spectators are excluded, an issue of "partial closure" may arise. See, e.g., People v Esquibel (2008) 166 CA4th 539, 551, 82 CR3d 803.

§14.14 C. Defense Right to Close Trial

The public's right to attend a criminal trial is only a qualified right. Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (Press-Enterprise I) (1984) 464 US 501, 509, 78 L Ed 2d 629, 638, 104 S Ct 819; Globe Newspaper Co. v Superior Court (1982) 457 US 596, 73 L Ed 2d 248, 102 S Ct 2613; Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v Virginia (1980) 448 US 555, 65 L Ed 2d 973, 100 S Ct 2814.

The party seeking to close a criminal hearing bears a heavy burden to achieve it: The courtroom may be closed only if the court makes specific findings that there is a "substantial probability" that the defendant's right to a fair trial would be prejudiced by publicity, and that reasonable alternatives to closing cannot adequately protect his or her rights. Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (Press-Enterprise II) (1986) 478 US 1, 14, 92 L Ed 2d 1, 14, 106 S Ct 2735. This standard applies both to the defense and to the prosecution. See Press-Enterprise II, supra; People v Alfaro (2007) 41 C4th 1277, 1307, 63 CR3d 433. If the court grants a motion to close the trial, the court must state on the record its reasons for doing so. Press-Enterprise II, supra.

A defendant may seek to close all or part of a trial if either pretrial publicity or the presence of spectators, or both, pose a significant threat to his or her right to receive a fair trial. Spectator misconduct can violate a defendant's constitutional rights if it is so inherently prejudicial that it poses an unacceptable risk of impermissible factors coming into play. People v Houston (2005) 130 CA4th 279, 311, 29 CR3d 818 (court's admonitions cured any inherent prejudice presented by spectator displays of buttons and placards bearing murder victim's likeness during husband's murder trial). See, e.g., Holbrook v Flynn (1986) 475 US 560, 89 L Ed 2d 525, 106 S Ct 1340 (although courtroom arrangements may create risk of prejudice, no such risk was actually created by presence of four uniformed guards); Woods v Dugger (11th Cir 1991) 923 F2d 1454 (unacceptable risk of unfair trial posed by attendance of large number of uniformed prison guards in small rural community where defendant was being tried for killing prison guard); Norris v Risley (9th Cir 1990) 918 F2d 828 (presence of spectators wearing "Women Against Rape" buttons at trial created unacceptable risk that rape defendant would be convicted on the unsworn "evidence" conveyed by their message). See also Sheppard v Maxwell (1966) 384 US 333, 16 L Ed 2d 600, 86 S Ct 1507 (massive publicity before and during trial, and courtroom packed with journalists, denied due process); Estes v Texas (1965) 381 US 532, 14 L Ed 2d 543, 85 S Ct 1628 (live televising of pretrial and trial proceedings rendered trial unfair); Irvin v Dowd (1961) 366 US 717, 6 L Ed 2d 751, 81 S Ct 1639 (publicity creating "deep and bitter" community prejudice so that 90 percent of prospective jurors had an opinion about the case rendered trial unfair).

> Ø Note: The U.S. Supreme Court has not addressed the question of when the effect of spectator conduct, as opposed to a state-sponsored courtroom practice, is so inherently prejudicial as to violate the defendant's right to a fair trial. See Carey v Musladin (2006) 549 US 70, 73, 166 L Ed 2d 482, 487, 127 S Ct 649 (state court decision that buttons depicting murder victim worn by spectators during husband's murder trial did not brand defendant with unmistakable mark of guilt was not contrary to nor unreasonable application of clearly established federal law).

When certain sex offenses are charged, both the trial and the preliminary hearing can be closed during the testimony of the victim when he or she is a minor under age 16 or is a dependent person with a substantial cognitive impairment. Pen C §859.1. See Pen C §288(f)(3) ("dependent person" defined). See also §14.16.

The media's right to attend voir dire (Press-Enterprise I, 464 US 501, 510, 78 L Ed 2d 629, 638, 104 S Ct 819*;* see §14.12) can conflict with the court's discretion to allow sequestered questioning of jurors in capital cases. See Hovey v Superior Court (1980) 28 C3d 1, 80, 168 CR 128; Ukiah Daily Journal v Superior Court (1985) 165 CA3d 788, 211 CR 673. Sequestration ("Hovey voir dire") has been perceived as strongly disfavored. Code of Civil Procedure §223 (enacted after the Hovey and Ukiah cases) requires voir dire to be conducted in the open when "practicable." This provision is constitutional. People v Boulerice (1992) 5 CA4th 463, 7 CR2d 279. The California Supreme Court has recommended sequestered voir dire as a means to address pretrial publicity concerns (see Haraguchi v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 706, 717, 76 CR3d 250) and, in practice, some counties still routinely allow sequestered voir dire in death cases. Moreover, many trial judges will use sequestered, individualized voir dire when a juror expresses privacy concerns or indicates detailed knowledge of the case.

On circumstances in which specific questions and answers might be treated confidentially on voir dire, see §14.8A. On voir dire in death penalty cases, see §54.25. On in camera voir dire, see §29.18.

§14.15 D. Defense Right to Close Suppression Hearing

When a defendant seeks to close a hearing on a motion to suppress evidence, there is an obvious tension between the right of access of the public and press, and the court's duty to ensure that publicity about prejudicial, and perhaps inadmissible, evidence does not impair the defendant's right to a fair trial. No California case after Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (Press-Enterprise II) (1986) 478 US 1, 92 L Ed 2d 1, 106 S Ct 2735, which set the standard for closing hearings in criminal cases (see discussion in §§14.12, 14.14), has directly addressed the conflict between a defendant's rights and the rights of the press, when the dispute concerns closing a pretrial proceeding to suppress evidence. In an earlier case, Allegrezza v Superior Court (1975) 47 CA3d 948, 121 CR 245, the court had held that the defendant's right to a fair trial must prevail when the press seeks access to a hearing on a motion to suppress a confession in a murder prosecution. See also Oziel v Superior Court (1990) 223 CA3d 1284, 273 CR 196 (property seized pursuant to search warrant might be kept from public if interest in disclosure was outweighed by privacy interest of psychotherapist (not the accused) from whom it was seized).

§14.16 E. Closing Preliminary Hearing

Excluding individuals. The magistrate can exclude potential and actual witnesses on the motion of either party. Pen C §867. Either party can also challenge the exclusion of a person under §867. The court may also exclude a particular spectator who is intimidating a witness (Pen C §686.2), but this statute may not be invoked against either the press or the defendant. The court also has the general authority to preserve order (CCP §177), and so may exclude spectators who are disruptive.

Closing hearing to public. The court may grant a defendant's motion to close the preliminary hearing if the court makes specific findings on the record that "closure is essential to preserve higher values and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest." The defendant must show a "substantial probability" that an open hearing would offset the right to a fair trial, and remedies short of closure must be explored first. Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (Press-Enterprise II) (1986) 478 US 1, 13, 92 L Ed 2d 1, 13, 106 S Ct 2735. This standard supersedes the standard of Pen C §868, which permits closure only when necessary to protect the defendant's right to a fair and impartial trial. KFMB-TV Channel 8 v Municipal Court (1990) 221 CA3d 1362, 1365, 271 CR 109.

At the prosecutor's request, the magistrate can close proceedings during the testimony of a sexual assault victim who is a minor or is a dependent person with a substantial cognitive impairment when no alternative procedures are available to avoid the perceived psychological harm to the victim from testifying in public. Pen C §868.7(a)(1); see Pen C §288(f)(3) ("dependent person" defined). On motion of the prosecutor, the magistrate can also close proceedings during testimony of a witness whose life would be at substantial risk in appearing before the general public. Pen C §868.7(a)(2). Consistent with Globe Newspaper Co. v Superior Court (1982) 457 US 596, 73 L Ed 2d 248, 102 S Ct 2613 (see §14.14), the court may close the hearing for this testimony only after making particularized findings of need, and after considering alternatives. If the hearing is closed for these reasons, the transcript must be made available to the public as soon as is practicable. Pen C §868.7.

The court is also authorized to close "any criminal proceeding" to protect the reputation of a victim of certain sex crimes, when the victim is a minor under age 16 or is a dependent person with a substantial cognitive impairment. Pen C §859.1. While §859.1 has not been construed by the courts in light of either the First or the Sixth Amendment rights to an open proceeding, in Globe Newspaper Co. v Superior Court (1982) 457 US 596, 608, 73 L Ed 2d 248, 258, 102 S Ct 2613, the Supreme Court acknowledged that safeguarding the physical and psychological well-being of a minor was a compelling interest that could justify closure if the decision were made on a case-by-case basis. The factors that Pen C §859.1(b) directs the court to consider in determining whether to close a preliminary hearing appear to meet the concerns of Globe Newspaper Co.

People allowed to attend despite closure. If the preliminary hearing is closed, the prosecutor may make a motion to allow the victim's family into the courtroom. Pen C §868. The court must grant the motion unless exclusion is necessary to protect the defendant's right to a fair trial, or evidence establishes that the family's presence is reasonably likely to affect the content of a witness's testimony. Pen C §868. In every case, the prosecuting witness may select a supporting person who is not a witness to be present during the prosecuting witness's testimony. Pen C §868. If the crime charged is one specified in Pen C §868.5(a), the prosecuting witness is entitled to have two supporting persons present. One of them may be a witness. The testimony of a support person who is also a witness must be presented before the testimony of the prosecuting witness, who must be excluded from the courtroom during that testimony. Pen C §868.5.

§14.17 F. Juvenile Delinquency Proceedings

Some juvenile delinquency proceedings involving specified serious offenses may be opened to the public on the same basis as adult criminal cases. Welf & I C §676. When §676 applies, it includes access to fitness hearings (Welf & I C §707; Tribune Newspapers W., Inc. v Superior Court (1985) 172 CA3d 443, 218 CR 505) and competency determinations (Cheyenne K. v Superior Court (1989) 208 CA3d 331, 256 CR 68).

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.18 G. Grand Jury Proceedings

Criminal proceedings before a grand jury are closed except to the individuals specified in Pen C §939. On the request of the grand jury and the prosecutor, the superior court may order the grand jury to conduct its investigation in public sessions. Pen C §939.1.

See chap 9 on the grand jury, and §14.11 on sealing the grand jury transcript.

§14.19 H. Related Civil Proceedings

When civil restraining orders or forfeitures are sought before criminal charges are brought, the potential for adverse pretrial publicity must be considered by the defendant or soon-to-be defendant. Access by the media to civil proceedings is discussed in Cincinnati Gas & Elec. Co. v General Elec. Co. (6th Cir 1988) 854 F2d 900. See chap 57 on asset forfeiture.

VIII. REMEDIES

A. Pretrial and Trial Publicity Orders (Protective, Restraining, or "Gag" Orders)

§14.19A 1. Collecting Media Information

Counsel should keep track of media contacts and published stories (including broadcast media and Internet coverage) as soon as he or she enters a case, to support a possible later request for court restriction on comment to the press (see §§14.20-14.26) or closure of court hearings (see §§14.12-14.19), or to prepare for change of venue litigation (see chap 15). One option is to enlist a clipping service to keep track of published articles. Some services will also monitor broadcasts to ensure that all necessary material is obtained; the cost is fairly high. Alternatively, counsel may organize an effort to clip all published articles and obtain all scripts of radio and television reporting or commentary and related audio- and videotapes of coverage. Some attorneys subpoena this material. If resources permit, the task of collecting media information and establishing agreements (formal and informal) with the media may be guided by a trial consultant or media relations consultant.

Ø Note: It is important to request radio and television tapes close to the time of broadcast because many stations destroy or recycle their tapes.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.20 2. Scope of Order; Procedure

A pretrial publicity order may prohibit discussions of the merits of a case, the evidence, arguments to be adduced by either side, trial tactics, or strategy. Sheppard v Maxwell (1966) 384 US 333, 16 L Ed 2d 600, 86 S Ct 1507. It may also proscribe extrajudicial statements that divulge prejudicial matters such as the defendant's refusal to submit to interrogation or polygraph examination, the identity of prospective witnesses or their probable testimony, any statements by the defendant to the police, or an individual's belief in the defendant's guilt or innocence. Sheppard v Maxwell, supra.

A motion requesting a protective order should be served on all parties whom the order would affect and should be filed with the court. The motion should be drafted to limit dissemination of information as much as possible. See the defense motion to close the preliminary hearing, to seal the preliminary hearing transcript, and for a protective order in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §8.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

> Ø Note: Often the request for a gag order is made too late to be effective. For example, if the prosecutor, police chief, and political leaders have announced the charges at a press conference, a subsequent gag order is of limited use in mitigating prejudice resulting from the press conference. Defense counsel should consider trying to limit prejudice by seeking a gag order or other remedy as soon as possible, as well as alerting the court, prosecution, and law enforcement of the problems posed by prejudicial publicity. Such advisements, if ignored, will also lend support to a change of venue as the case proceeds.

See §§14.21-14.24 on use of gag orders for different groups of people.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.21 3. Restraining Defense

Orders restraining parties ("gag orders") to a criminal proceeding may be directed to the defendant and the defense attorney. See People v Watson (1971) 15 CA3d 28, 92 CR 860. However, a pretrial order may not prohibit the defendant from describing the charge against him or her and unequivocally asserting his or her innocence. See Hamilton v Municipal Court (1969) 270 CA2d 797, 802, 76 CR 168. The standard for determining whether a gag order can be imposed on the defense appears to be the same as that used for orders restraining the prosecution. See People v Watson (1971) 15 CA3d 28, 39 n2, 92 CR 860 (court used same standard for prosecution and defense in gag order).

Ø Note: Differing standards for the defense and the prosecution may be appropriate in light of the First Amendment analysis in Levine v U.S. Dist. Court (9th Cir 1985) 764 F2d 590.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.22 4. Restraining News Media

Generally, pretrial publicity orders that attempt to directly restrain the media have not met with much success. See, e.g., Hunt v NBC, Inc. (9th Cir 1989) 872 F2d 289 (defendant, alleged member of Billionaire Boys Club, failed in attempt to enjoin telecasting of NBC docudrama "Billionaire Boys Club" before his pending trial for murder); KCST-TV Channel 39 v Municipal Court (1988) 201 CA3d 143, 246 CR 869 (okay for television station to broadcast artist's rendering of defendant made at his arraignment despite numerous cases against him still under investigation); Sun Co. v Superior Court (1973) 29 CA3d 815, 826, 105 CR 873 (court cannot restrict freedom of speech unless necessary to prevent clear and present danger to fair administration of justice).

The news media have attacked gag orders as a prior restraint on First Amendment rights. These orders are usually held to be unconstitutional because of the availability of other means to protect a defendant's right to a fair trial, such as change of venue, continuance, closed preliminary hearing, careful jury voir dire, and proper instructions. Nebraska Press Ass'n v Stuart (1976) 427 US 539, 49 L Ed 2d 683, 96 S Ct 2791.

Ø Note: Courts have had more success in indirectly restraining the media—by restricting defendants, lawyers, law enforcement officers, and other sources from telling the media about the case, by closing pretrial proceedings to the public, and by sealing hearing transcripts—than in directly restraining the media.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.23 5. Restraining Prosecution

A judge may issue an order restraining the prosecution from discussing a case with the news media if there is a "reasonable likelihood" that information about the case would make it difficult to impanel an impartial jury and would tend to prevent a fair trial. Younger v Smith (1973) 30 CA3d 138, 160, 106 CR 225.

Defense counsel may wish to seek an order restraining the prosecution from discussing a case with the news media if there is significant prejudicial evidence about a defendant that may be inadmissible at trial, such as prior criminal convictions that may be constitutionally invalid, or the fruits of a search and seizure that may be invalid.

A federal district court case held that the restraints imposed on the prosecutor can be more stringent than those applicable to the defense. Levine v U.S. Dist. Court (9th Cir 1985) 764 F2d 590, 599, 602. Federal cases other than U.S. Supreme Court cases are not binding on California state courts. People v Henderson (1990) 220 CA3d 1632, 270 CR 248; Elliott v Albright (1989) 209 CA3d 1028, 257 CR 762.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.24 6. Restraining Witnesses and Others

Court orders can restrain a wide range of persons besides the parties in a trial. Sheppard v Maxwell (1966) 384 US 333, 16 L Ed 2d 600, 86 S Ct 1507 (witnesses, court staff, and law enforcement officers coming under court's jurisdiction); Hamilton v Municipal Court (1969) 270 CA2d 797, 800, 76 CR 168 (order directed to "all law enforcement agencies, to the Regents of the University of California and their agents and employees and to the Associated Students of the University of California, their members and affiliated organizations"). In addition, the grand jury, and a prosecutor reiterating a grand jury admonishment to a witness, may curtail contacts of a grand jury witness with the media. See, e.g., San Jose Mercury News, Inc. v Criminal Grand Jury (2004) 122 CA4th 410, 413, 18 CR3d 645.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.25 7. Enforcement: Contempt

The willful violation of a valid pretrial publicity order is an indirect or constructive contempt of court, punishable as a misdemeanor under Pen C §166(a)(4). Hamilton v Municipal Court (1969) 270 CA2d 797, 800, 76 CR 168. Because a pretrial publicity order is enforceable only with respect to disseminations that the court may constitutionally forbid, a technical but innocuous violation of the order that has no tendency to prejudice a pending criminal prosecution is not punishable as contempt. Younger v Smith (1973) 30 CA3d 138, 150, 106 CR 225. On contempt, see chap 58.

Ø Note: Another possible technique for enforcement of a pretrial publicity order is a complaint made to the State Bar alleging a violation of Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-120. Although there is no known reported case of discipline for a violation of this rule, it is possible that discipline may be imposed for a violation of Rule 5-120. When charges have not yet been filed in the criminal case, the prosecutor may be concerned that the filing of such a complaint would lead to recusal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.26 8. Review of Order

The usual method of attacking a protective order, or denial of a request for a protective order, is to petition for a writ of mandate or prohibition (in the alternative), seeking vacation, modification, or issuance of the order. Another method of attacking a protective order is to challenge it on appeal from a contempt citation. Younger v Smith (1973) 30 CA3d 138, 106 CR 225.

When a protective order is reviewed on appeal from a contempt citation, the appellate court must decide whether (1) it was justified under the circumstances, (2) the language in the order was explicit and specific, and (3) the violation threatened the impartiality of the forum. See Younger v Smith, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.27 B. Change of Venue; Continuance

The "extent and nature of the publicity" is one of the five controlling factors to be considered on a motion for change of venue. People v Balderas (1985) 41 C3d 144, 222 CR 184. It is not error for a court to consider just this factor alone, so long as the focus remains on the central inquiry: "whether it was reasonably likely that pretrial publicity had caused potential jurors to form such fixed opinions of defendant's guilt that they could not render an impartial verdict." People v Lewis (2008) 43 C4th 415, 450, 75 CR3d 588. Courts also may consider the passage of time between the pretrial publicity and the actual trial, which lessens actual prejudice. People v Riggs (2008) 44 C4th 248, 280, 79 CR3d 648; Lewis, 43 C4th at 449. When jurors express only a vague recollection of pretrial publicity, a finding of prejudice is less likely. 43 C4th at 450.

A motion to continue the trial until the effects of adverse publicity have subsided may also be filed, although few judges are willing to delay a trial long enough to cure the problem. See Pen C §1050. See also Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 387, 66 CR 724; Silverthorne v U.S. (9th Cir 1968) 400 F2d 627, 634. On continuances, see chap 20. On change of venue motions, see chap 15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.28 C. Court Trial

Judges are trained to base their opinions on proper evidence and are less likely to be swayed by publicity than a jury might be. After considering the alternatives, counsel who is persuaded that a court trial is the best option may wish to waive jury with the proviso that waiving jury requires the express consent of the defendant, defense counsel, and the prosecutor. Cal Const art I, §16; People v Holmes (1960) 54 C2d 442, 5 CR 871. On court trials, see chap 28.

§14.29 D. Jury Voir Dire

In cases involving substantial pretrial publicity, thorough voir dire of jurors is essential in selecting an impartial jury or in determining that a change of venue is required. Morgan v Illinois (1992) 504 US 719, 119 L Ed 2d 492, 112 S Ct 2222 (part of guaranty of an impartial jury is adequate voir dire to identify unqualified jurors); Ross v Oklahoma (1988) 487 US 81, 101 L Ed 2d 80, 108 S Ct 2273 (Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments guarantee right to fair and impartial jury); People v Riggs (2008) 44 C4th 248, 278, 79 CR3d 648 (voir dire demonstrated that jury could be impartial); Hollywood v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 721, 733, 76 CR3d 264 (voir dire is an appropriate means to ensure a fair trial given pretrial publicity); People v Bittaker (1989) 48 C3d 1046, 1086, 259 CR 630 (right to voir dire is means to achieve end of impartial jury). See also People v Williams (1989) 48 C3d 1112, 1127, 259 CR 473 (voir dire demonstrated change of venue necessary). See also Murphy, Loveland, & Munsterman, A Manual for Managing Notorious Cases (1992), prepared by the National Center for State Courts.

On completion of the court's initial voir dire examination, "counsel for each party shall have the right to examine … any or all of the prospective jurors." CCP §223. Although the court may specify the maximum amount of time that counsel can spend in the voir dire process, and the court can exercise its discretion in governing the manner in which voir dire is conducted to focus solely on the exercise of challenges for cause and not peremptory challenges, many trial lawyers have nonetheless welcomed the return of voir dire as a matter of statutory right. Section 223 also directs that voir dire be conducted in the presence of all other jurors when "practicable," even in capital cases.

> Ø Note: Counsel may want to submit a jury questionnaire for use during voir dire. See discussion in §29.17. Counsel should review Cal Rules of Ct 4.200 on the pre-voir dire conference, and Juror Questionnaire for Criminal Cases/Capital Case Supplement (Judicial Council Form MC-002).

Regardless of who conducts voir dire, due process requires that questioning be extensive enough to impanel an impartial jury. Mu'Min v Virginia (1991) 500 US 415, 114 L Ed 2d 493, 111 S Ct 1899; Silverthorne v U.S. (9th Cir 1968) 400 F2d 627.

When sensitive questions are involved, counsel should consider asking for individual voir dire out of the other jurors' presence so that the questioning itself does not prejudice them. See People v Visciotti (1992) 2 C4th 1, 5 CR2d 495 (individual jurors sequestered during death-qualification portion of voir dire); Hovey v Superior Court (1980) 28 C3d 1, 168 CR 128 (same). See also §§14.14, 29.18, 54.25. The ABA Standards for Criminal Justice: Fair Trial and Free Press, Standard 8-3.5(a) (3d ed 1992), "selecting the jury," recommends that jurors be examined individually in specific contexts.

> Ø Note: The media are entitled to a transcript of closed jury voir dire proceedings, except those portions sealed by the court because they are considered to be sensitive and deserving of privacy protection. Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (Press-Enterprise I) (1984) 464 US 501, 78 L Ed 2d 629, 104 S Ct 819.

Sample jury voir dire questions that relate particularly to pretrial publicity can include the following:

1. Do you watch television news? What channels, and at what times of day?
2. Do you listen to radio news? What stations, and what programs?
3. Do you subscribe to a newspaper, or buy one regularly? Which newspaper?
4. Do you read stories about pending criminal cases in the print media or online?
5. Have you heard, seen, or read anything about this case?
6. What specifically do you recall hearing, seeing, or reading?
7. What information do you feel you have about this case as a result of media sources of information?
8. Have you discussed what you saw, heard, or read with anyone?
9. Can you explain why you read, saw, or heard the particular story?

10. Did you pay attention to, listen to, or see other stories on the same case?
11. Based on what you have seen, heard, or read, what are your opinions about the facts of this case?
12. What are your opinions about the accused?
13. Based on what you believe you know from media sources, what is your opinion about the case?
14. Do you believe that the accused is likely guilty?
15. Do you believe that what you read, see, or hear in media sources is likely to be accurate?
16. Have you ever known the media to report inaccurately about a case?
17. Do you believe that your opinion about this case is such that you could not set aside your views and judge the case exclusively on what you have heard in this courtroom, as opposed to what you have heard, read, or seen in a media source?

§14.30 E. Jury Instructions

Although Pen Code §1122(a) requires jurors to be admonished at least once after their selection not to read or listen to media accounts of a case, failure to repeat the instruction is not error. People v Henderson (1965) 235 CA2d 318, 45 CR 198. Counsel should request instructions on this issue. CALCRIM's cautionary admonitions on jury conduct instruct the jury not to "read, listen to, or watch any news report or commentary about the case," conduct outside research, or visit the crime scene. CALCRIM 101. See also CALCRIM 201 (no outside investigation). Counsel may also prefer to draft an instruction or rely on the language of Pen C §1122(a). See, e.g., Devitt et al., Federal Jury Practice and Instructions (4th ed 1992):

> There has been a substantial amount of publicity about this case (and about the defendant) in the newspapers, and also on radio and television. Some of this publicity may have come to the attention of some of you. You of course must lay aside and completely disregard anything you may have read or heard about the case outside the courtroom, and your verdict must be based solely on the evidence presented in court, in accordance with the court's instructions.

See also the instruction in U.S. v Lewis (8th Cir 1984) 738 F2d 916, 922 n3.

Ø Note: You may want to ask the court to admonish the jury concerning publicity about the trial at the beginning of the case, before voir dire.

§14.31 F. Sequestering Jury

Trial judges have the discretion to sequester juries during the entire trial (Pen C §1121) or only during deliberations (Pen C §1128). The California Supreme Court has declined to prescribe guidelines for the exercise of this discretion, and has rejected arguments that sequestration should be mandatory in capital cases. People v Gallego (1990) 52 C3d 115, 198, 276 CR 679; People v Bunyard (1988) 45 C3d 1189, 1220, 249 CR 71. A party's motion to sequester the jury should identify special existing problems that make seclusion appropriate. People v Morales (1989) 48 C3d 527, 257 CR 64; People v Bunyard (1988) 45 C3d 1189, 249 CR 71.

Because sequestering jurors imposes a substantial inconvenience on them, as well as greatly increasing the cost of trial, it is not often ordered.

§15.1 I. OVERVIEW

The word "venue" refers to the territorial jurisdiction in which a case may be brought to trial. See Pen C §§691(c), 777. Venue can be conferred by statute or by the consent of the parties. Casey v Superior Court (1989) 207 CA3d 837, 843, 255 CR 81. Territorial jurisdiction is different from personal and subject matter jurisdiction, which are discussed in §15.3. A related concept, vicinage, concerns a defendant's right to a jury selected from inhabitants of the area in which the crime was committed. The boundaries of the vicinage are ordinarily coterminous with the boundaries of the county within which at least some act preliminary to or requisite to the offense charged occurred. People v Alvarado (2006) 144 CA4th 1146, 1152, 50 CR3d 923. Vicinage is discussed in §29.6.

The grounds for a motion to change venue are set forth in Pen C §1033. The defense can move to change venue to another county when it appears reasonably likely that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county. Pen C §1033(b). The prosecution or the court on its own motion can move to change venue if all jury panels have been exhausted. Pen C §1033(b). The procedures to be followed in bringing the motion are in Cal Rules of Ct 4.150-4.155.

Ø Note: Penal Code §1033 applies to "criminal cases tried in superior court," not just to felony cases. See Steffen v Municipal Court (1978) 80 CA3d 623, 145 CR 782. However, changes of venue in misdemeanor cases are very rare.

In Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069 n13, 108 CR2d 409, the California Supreme Court overruled several cases that had held that the vicinage right was an aspect of due process made applicable to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment. Consequently, a change of venue that violates the defendant's vicinage right is reviewable as an error of state law, not as a violation of the federal Constitution. On the difference between state law and federal constitutional standards for reversal, see §44.36.

The most common change of venue motion is the defense motion to change venue because of extensive pretrial publicity prejudicial to the accused. It may be brought before trial, or it may be raised for the first time during jury selection or after the jury has been selected but before it is sworn. Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 943, 187 CR 455. It is rare for the prosecution to request a change of venue. It might make such a request after reversal of the conviction on appeal in a case that was tried outside the county in which the offense took place. The judge may grant a prosecution motion to change venue or may order a change of venue on its own motion if it finds that the conditions that originally required the venue change no longer apply. Pen C §1033.1. See §15.32A for discussion of §1033.1.

Ø Note: In unusual cases, the change of venue motion may be brought for issues apart from case-specific pretrial publicity. For example, after the supreme court reversed his conviction for capital murder in People v Croy (1985) 41 C3d 1, 221 CR 592, defendant Hootie Croy successfully moved to change venue on the basis of historical and continuing prejudice against Indians in one of the Gold Rush counties.

When a judge grants a motion for change of venue, he or she must inform the presiding judge of his or her court. The presiding judge then notifies the Administrative Director of the Courts of the change of venue, and the Director advises the transferring court which courts would not be unduly burdened by the trial of the case. Cal Rules of Ct 4.152(1). The parties also may make suggestions. The presiding judge of the transferring court, or his or her designee, then determines the court in which the case is to be tried. Cal Rules of Ct 4.153(1). See §15.28. The only aspect of the case actually transferred to another county, however, is the trial itself. Pen C §1033. All pretrial proceedings are heard in the transferring court except when it is evident that a particular proceeding must be heard by the judge who is to preside over the trial. Pen C §1033. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.150(b).

Ø Note: In any case involving substantial pretrial publicity, counsel should carefully review chap 14 (Pretrial and Trial Publicity) and consider chaps 14 and 15 together for an overall approach to dealing with high-profile cases.

The transferring court, with the consent of all defendants, can order a jury to be selected in the new county and moved to the county in which the action originated. Pen C §1036.7. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.153(1).

A motion to change venue should be viewed as one that must be won in the trial court because reversal on an application for pretrial writ or on appeal on this ground is unlikely, unless it is clear that the trial court erred in its ground for the ruling. See §15.38.

Ø Note: Although there have been few published writ cases on venue in recent years (the last was Powell v Superior Court (1991) 232 CA3d 785, 283 CR 777 (the Rodney King case)), there have been some unpublished decisions, including several either ordering a change of venue or ordering a rehearing.

National Jury Project, Jurywork: Systematic Techniques (2005) is a good starting point for researching venue.

§15.3 III. VENUE AND JURISDICTION DISTINGUISHED

"Venue" and "jurisdiction" are sometimes used interchangeably. See, e.g., Pen C §1462.2, which uses "jurisdiction" instead of "venue." Venue means the territorial jurisdiction in which a case may be brought to trial and which can be conferred by consent of the parties. People v Douglas (1990) 50 C3d 468, 497, 268 CR 126 (territorial jurisdiction existed in county where murder was arranged and where defendant met victims and accomplice); People v Crise (1990) 224 CA3d Supp 1, 274 CR 242 (conviction reversed because defendant tried under Health & S C §11550 in county unrelated to one where conduct occurred). Territorial jurisdiction can refer to a county or a judicial district within a county. Pen C §691(c).

In contrast, jurisdiction refers to the inherent power of a court to hear and determine a case. Jurisdiction is composed of two elements, personal and subject matter jurisdiction. Burns v Municipal Court (1961) 195 CA2d 596, 599, 16 CR 64. Subject matter jurisdiction refers to a court's inherent power to hear and determine a case of a particular class. Original subject matter jurisdiction is conferred on California courts by Cal Const art VI, §10. Subject matter jurisdiction can neither be waived nor be conferred by consent or stipulation. Griggs v Superior Court (1976) 16 C3d 341, 344 n2, 128 CR 223. Any judgment without subject matter jurisdiction is void. Taliaferro v County of Contra Costa (1960) 182 CA2d 587, 6 CR 231.

Several statutes confer venue on more than one jurisdiction. See, e.g., Pen C §784.7 (when defendant commits specified sex offenses against same victim in more than one county, any county in which any offense took place has venue); Pen C §790(a) (venue in homicide case may be in county where homicide occurs, victim dies, or body found); Pen C §790(b) (defendant charged with multiple murders and multiple murder special circumstance may be tried in any county in which venue exists under §790(a)). Construing §784.7, the supreme court concluded that the vicinage right implicit in Cal Const art I, §16 does not limit the legislature's power to designate the place for trial of a criminal offense as long as there is "a reasonable relationship or nexus between the place designated for trial and the commission of the offense." Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1075, 108 CR2d 409. See also Stevenson v Lewis (9th Cir 2004) 384 F3d 1069, 1072 (state court decision that Vicinage Clause of Sixth Amendment does not apply to states was neither contrary to nor unreasonable application of clearly established federal law as determined by U.S. Supreme Court).

If an objection to improper venue is not raised before commencement of trial, it is waived. People v Simon (2001) 25 C4th 1082, 1086, 108 CR2d 385. Improper venue can be challenged by demurrer. Pen C §1004(1). See People v Jochinsky (1895) 106 C 638. It can also be raised at the preliminary hearing. People v Remington (1990) 217 CA3d 423, 266 CR 183. In People v Posey (2004) 32 C4th 193, 210, 8 CR3d 551, the supreme court held that venue is a question of law to be determined by the court before trial (overruling or disapproving numerous cases holding that venue is question of fact for jury). This rule applies prospectively only. 32 C4th at 216. The prosecution has the burden of establishing the facts underlying the venue by a preponderance of the evidence. See 32 C4th at 213.

> Ø Note: Counsel should carefully review Posey, which discusses in detail the statutory definitions of venue for given crimes.

The supreme court has observed that "the term 'jurisdiction' is notoriously subject to confusion." People v Simon (2001) 25 C4th 1082, 1096 n7, 108 CR2d 385. For a review of the terms "subject matter jurisdiction," "territorial jurisdiction," and "venue" as used in California, see 25 C4th at 1094. See also 4 Witkin & Epstein, California Criminal Law, Jurisdiction and Venue §§1-12, 19-26, 45-87 (3d ed 2000).

IV. CHANGE OF VENUE MOTION BASED ON FAIR AND IMPARTIAL TRIAL REQUIREMENT

A. Legal Standard for Change of Venue Because No Fair and Impartial Trial Can Be Had

§15.4 1. Reasonable Likelihood Standard

A defendant is entitled to an impartial jury. US Const amend VI; Cal Const art I, §16. The court in Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 383, 66 CR 724, established the standard for granting change of venue motions (adopting the standard set out in Sheppard v Maxwell (1966) 384 US 333, 362, 16 L Ed 2d 600, 620, 86 S Ct 1507):

> A motion for change of venue or continuance shall be granted whenever it is determined that because of the dissemination of potentially prejudicial material, there is a reasonable likelihood that in absence of such relief, a fair trial cannot be had. This determination may be based on such evidence as qualified public opinion surveys or opinion testimony offered by individuals, or on the court's own evaluation of the nature, frequency, and timing of the material involved. A showing of actual prejudice shall not be required.

Penal Code §1033 codifies the standard of reasonableness laid down in Maine. People v Bonin (1988) 46 C3d 659, 672, 250 CR 687, overruled on another ground in People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 823 n1, 72 CR2d 656. It provides that only the defendant, not the court or prosecution, can move for change of venue on the ground that there is a reasonable likelihood that an unfair trial will occur. People v Powell (1891) 87 C 348, 360, 25 P 481; Jackson v Superior Court (1970) 13 CA3d 440, 442, 91 CR 565.

The California Supreme Court has settled on five factors that the trial court should take into account in deciding whether the reasonable likelihood standard has been met: (1) the nature and gravity of the offense; (2) the nature and extent of the news coverage; (3) the size of the community; (4) the status of the defendant in the community; and (5) the popularity and prominence of the victim. These factors are discussed in §§15.5-15.10. In addition, if the motion is made after jury selection, the court should take into account the responses of jurors during voir dire to learn whether the potentially prejudicial publicity has, in fact, affected the defendant's ability to obtain an impartial jury. People v Staten (2000) 24 C4th 434, 449, 101 CR2d 213; People v Bean (1988) 46 C3d 919, 942, 251 CR 467. See also People v Cooper (1991) 53 C3d 771, 807, 281 CR 90; People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 361, 279 CR 780.

Because the defendant is the party seeking the change of venue, the defendant bears the burden of proof. People v Bonin (1988) 46 C3d 659, 673, 250 CR 687, overruled on another ground in People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 823 n1, 72 CR2d 656. Actual prejudice need not be shown before trial. People v Williams (1989) 48 C3d 1112, 1126, 259 CR 473. See Daniels v Woodford (9th Cir 2005) 428 F3d 1181, 1211. Only a reasonable likelihood that a fair trial cannot be had must be shown. Reasonable likelihood has been defined as less than "more probable than not" (People v Williams, supra), but more than "merely possible" (People v Bonin, supra).

When a pretrial petition for writ of mandate is filed challenging a court's change of venue ruling, the reviewing court independently reviews the evidence presented to the trial court to satisfy itself that the defendant will obtain a fair and impartial trial. Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 382, 66 CR 724. See discussion in §15.36. Actual prejudice need not be shown before trial, only on appeal. On appeal after conviction, a defendant must show both error and prejudice. People v Fauber (1992) 2 C4th 792, 817, 9 CR2d 24; People v Edwards (1991) 54 C3d 787, 807, 1 CR2d 696. For further discussion, see §15.38.

Ø Note: Although, in arguing for a change of venue, counsel's primary focus should be on state law; counsel should take care, as with other claims, to federalize the issue. To preserve it for the federal courts, defense counsel must argue that failure to grant a change of venue will violate the defendant's right to an impartial jury under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution and to due process under the Fourteenth Amendment. In death penalty cases, counsel should also state the relevant Eighth Amendment grounds.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. The Five Factors

§15.5 a. Use of Five Factors

When a motion for change of venue is brought before trial, the court must necessarily predict whether jurors called to hear the case are going to have been adversely affected by the publicity. Any considerations that assist the court in answering this question are relevant. The supreme court has repeatedly classified these considerations into the five categories discussed below. Note, however, that some of the supreme court's decisions have lumped the status of the victim and of the defendant together as a single category, and some decisions have added, as an additional category, whether the case has generated any political controversy. See e.g., People v Hamilton (1989) 48 C3d 1142, 259 CR 701; Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 194 CR 492. This factor is not required, however; it is used only when present in the case, as a factor supporting a change of venue. For examples of cases in which the political controversy surrounding the crime played a major role in the decision to change venue, see Powell v Superior Court (1991) 232 CA3d 785, 283 CR 777, and Smith v Superior Court (1969) 276 CA2d 145, 80 CR 693. See also §15.10A.

The courts weigh each factor as it affects the need for a change of venue. In weighing each factor, the courts ask whether the factor (1) supports a change of venue, (2) supports retention of the case in the venue, or (3) is neutral with respect to venue. The court then balances the factors against each other. If most of the factors point in a certain direction, either for or against a change of venue, the court generally rules in a like fashion. Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 194 CR 492; Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 187 CR 455; Martinez v Superior Court (1981) 29 C3d 574, 174 CR 701. At the same time, it is clear that strong prejudice found in consideration of even one of these factors can be enough to require a change of venue. Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 66 CR 724.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.6 b. First Factor: Nature and Gravity of Offense

The "nature" of an offense refers to the peculiar facts or aspects of a crime that make it sensational, or otherwise bring it to the consciousness of the community. Its "gravity" refers to its seriousness in the law and to the possible consequences to an accused in the event of a guilty verdict. People v Hamilton (1989) 48 C3d 1142, 1159, 259 CR 701; Martinez v Superior Court (1981) 29 C3d 574, 582, 174 CR 701. This factor weighs heavily in favor of a change of venue in capital cases. Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 194 CR 492; Martinez v Superior Court, supra. However, this factor alone does not require a change of venue. People v Ramirez (2006) 39 C4th 398, 432, 46 CR3d 677 (no change of venue in "Night Stalker" case); see People v Jenkins (2000) 22 C4th 900, 95 CR2d 377.

The more sensational the portrayal of facts of a case, the more likely it is that jurors will notice, remember, and be prejudiced by publicity. Corona v Superior Court (1972) 24 CA3d 872, 877, 101 CR 411. But see People v Staten (2000) 24 C4th 434, 449, 101 CR2d 213, which contrasted a multiple murder of parents in Los Angeles County to better-known and similar cases, like that of the Menendez brothers. Cases that involve mass murders or serial killings are more likely to engender the kind of publicity that requires a change of venue. The same is true of cases that have racial or sexual overtones. See the cases cited in People v Hamilton (1989) 48 C3d 1142, 1159, 259 CR 701. However, this does not mean that all crimes with facts that capture the public interest will require a change of venue, because this factor must be considered in conjunction with the others. People v Zambrano (2007) 41 C4th 1082, 1124, 63 CR3d 297, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209 (case featured on America's Most Wanted); People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 363, 279 CR 780; People v Harris (1981) 28 C3d 935, 171 CR 679.

Prosecutors may argue that the nature of the case will be equally bad wherever the case might be moved. Thus, a cop-killing will still be a cop-killing in the new venue. As the supreme court said in People v Edwards (1991) 54 C3d 787, 808, 1 CR2d 696, about the killing of one girl and attempted murder of another, "Prospective jurors would sympathize with the girls' fate whether the trial is held in Santo Domingo in the Dominican Republic, Orange County, or any other county in California. The horrendous crime, not the locale or trial, evokes the sympathy." Defense lawyers may respond that the local notoriety of the case—"our" cop and local girls as victims—increases the prejudice. Besides, the argument would virtually mean that the more horrible the nature of the crime, the less need for a change of venue.

§15.7 c. Second Factor: Nature and Extent of News Coverage

Extent of publicity. The extent of news coverage is quantitatively measured by items like the number of newspaper articles (and electronic coverage, including television, radio, and Internet), their pattern, their prominence, and other factors such as the number of pictures, editorials, and letters to the editor. The nature of publicity is qualitatively measured. If coverage has been inflammatory or sensational in nature, a venue change is more likely to be granted. Corona v Superior Court (1972) 24 CA3d 872, 877, 101 CR 411. Coverage that has featured pictures of the scene or the victim and has contained detailed descriptions of the crime using graphic language weighs in favor of a change of venue. Martinez v Superior Court (1981) 29 C3d 574, 582, 174 CR 701. The same is true when there have been editorials about the crime and its ramifications People v Hamilton (1989) 48 C3d 1142, 1156, 259 CR 701. In contrast, straightforward factual coverage does not argue in favor of a change of venue. Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 941, 187 CR 455.

Extensive publicity, even if factual in nature and noninflammatory, can weigh in favor of a change of venue. Martinez v Superior Court (1981) 29 C3d 574, 580, 174 CR 701. Whether it does so depends on how typical the coverage is for that type of crime. A venue change is unlikely based only on this factor if the coverage is typical of the amount one would expect from a crime of that nature. People v Ainsworth (1988) 45 C3d 984, 1000, 248 CR 568. For the best description of the type of publicity that, even though extensive, does not in and of itself require a change of venue, see Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 187 CR 455.

Nature of publicity. The nature of the publicity focuses on the analysis of its content. Major problems arise when the coverage is, first, inflammatory, involving emotionally charged language such as "execution-style killing." See Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 589, 194 CR 492, for the best examples of inflammatory and other prejudicial publicity.

Second, the coverage may be inaccurate. That could be prejudicial, for example, if it had been reported that the defendant had confessed or had a prior record of violence, but this was not true. Third, certain facts reported in the media may be inadmissible at trial, such as an excluded confession or the defendant's criminal record. Such coverage can be highly prejudicial.

Finally, extensive publicity that is noninflammatory and factual in nature, that is accurate, and that is admissible at trial may still provide support for a change of venue if heavily guilt oriented. Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 590, 194 CR 492; Corona v Superior Court (1972) 24 CA3d 872, 877, 101 CR 411.

> Ø Note: It was not error to refuse to change venue in the highly publicized "Night Stalker" case when the extent of coverage was not unprecedented in Los Angeles County and defendant did not show that the coverage was unfair or biased against him or revealed incriminating facts. People v Ramirez (2006) 39 C4th 398, 432, 46 CR3d 677.

This is because legal procedures essential to a fair adjudication of guilt require that the jury's verdict be based on evidence received in open court, not from outside sources. Sheppard v Maxwell (1966) 384 US 333, 351, 16 L Ed 2d 600, 613, 86 S Ct 1507. Coverage of the evidence and conclusory statements of guilt from officials may erode the defendant's presumption of innocence, forcing the defendant to disprove his or her guilt.

When pretrial publicity has been geographically widespread and pervasive throughout the state, however, a court may deny change of venue on the sensible ground that it would do no good. People v Davis (2009) 46 C4th 539, 578, 94 CR3d 322 (second motion to change venue after case was moved from Sonoma to Santa Clara County); People v Venegas (1994) 25 CA4th 1731, 1738, 31 CR2d 114; People v Manson (1976) 61 CA3d 102, 174, 132 CR 265. Nevertheless, even in the face of widespread state and even national publicity, it may be necessary to change venue where the case has high local notoriety. That is the difference between the Oklahoma City bombing case and the "Unabomber" case. There was high local notoriety to the people of Oklahoma in the former, but far less so in Sacramento, where the "Unabomber" was tried.

A change of venue is more apt to be granted when the coverage has continued up to trial. Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 194 CR 492. The reverse is true: Even when the coverage was extensive at the time of the offense, a change of venue is unlikely if publicity has abated by the time of trial. People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 363, 279 CR 780; People v Adcox (1988) 47 C3d 207, 231, 253 CR 55; Odle v Superior Court, supra.

> Ø Note: Periodically, very well-publicized cases are tried without resulting in conviction, both in counties with large jury pools (e.g., People v [O.J.] Simpson) and in counties with significantly smaller jury pools (e.g., People v [Michael] Jackson). Arguments using these cases as examples may prove initially effective in advancing the claim that notwithstanding the amount of publicity, not guilty verdicts are possible. However, analysis of the publicity in cases involving well-known figures demonstrates that the publicity often raises questions about the strength of the state's evidence. Moreover, well-publicized cases involving public figures can result in conviction (e.g., the Martha Stewart prosecution).

Presumption of prejudice in extreme case. In an extreme case, prejudice may be presumed when the community has been saturated with prejudicial and inflammatory media coverage about the crime. In determining whether prejudice should be presumed, the court should consider whether (Daniels v Woodford (9th Cir 2005) 428 F3d 1181, 1211):

- There has been a "barrage of inflammatory publicity immediately prior to trial, amounting to a huge… wave of public passion";
- News coverage was primarily factual, which tends to be less inflammatory than editorials or cartoons; and
- News coverage contained inflammatory or prejudicial material not admissible at trial.

For example, on habeas the Ninth Circuit disagreed with the California Supreme Court decision in People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 277 CR 122, and held that a presumed finding of prejudice was compelled when, among other things, the murders of two police officers generated extensive and nearly continuous publicity immediately after the shootings and again before the trial, and media accounts described the shooter as an African-American paraplegic and identified the petitioner as the killer from the very beginning. Under these facts, the failure to change venue from Riverside County deprived the defendant of due process. See Daniels v Woodford (9th Cir 2005) 428 F3d 1181, 1211. However, prejudice is to be presumed only in extraordinary cases. People v Prince (2007) 40 C4th 1179, 1216, 57 CR3d 543.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.8 d. Third Factor: Size and Character of Community

The greater the size of the community from which the jury panel is drawn, the less the chance that a change of venue motion will be granted. See People v Howard (1992) 1 C4th 1132, 1167, 5 CR2d 268 (court observed that Tulare County, with 253,000 residents, was 20th most populous county among the 58 in the state and that most recent successful venue motions have involved communities with substantially smaller populations); People v Edwards (1991) 54 C3d 787, 806, 1 CR2d 696 (Orange County); People v Ramirez (2006) 39 C4th 398, 46 CR3d 677 (Los Angeles County). Stanislaus County, however, with a population comparable to Tulare County's, has been considered a smaller county for purposes of venue changes. See Fain v Superior Court (1970) 2 C3d 46, 84 CR 135; In re Miller (1973) 33 CA3d 1005, 109 CR 648; Griffin v Superior Court (1972) 26 CA3d 672, 103 CR 379. This theme has been echoed in several recent decisions, including People v Staten (2000) 24 C4th 434, 101 CR2d 213 (Los Angeles County), and People v Welch (1999) 20 C4th 701, 85 CR2d 203 (Alameda County).

Numbers alone, however, are not conclusive on whether venue should be changed. See, e.g., People v Adcox (1988) 47 C3d 207, 253 CR 55, in which a change of venue from Tuolumne County, a very small county, was denied. The key to analyzing this issue is whether it can be shown that the size neutralizes or dilutes the impact of adverse publicity. People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 363, 279 CR 780. Changes of venue are occasionally made from large counties when warranted by the facts of the case. See, e.g., Powell v Superior Court (1991) 232 CA3d 785, 283 CR 777 (venue change from Los Angeles County; Rodney King case); Smith v Superior Court (1969) 276 CA2d 145, 80 CR 693 (same). For the size of the counties from which venue has been changed, see the chart in §15.39.

Ø Note: Trial court judges are able to be more sensitive to population size and other factors. As a practical matter, changes of venue are generally obtained in the trial court or not at all, whether in postconviction appeals or pretrial writs. To some extent, appellate decisions are misleading because, especially in postconviction cases, the appellate standard for reversal of the trial court's decision ("actual prejudice") on venue is more rigorous than in a writ case. See §15.38.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.9 e. Fourth Factor: Status of Defendant in Community

If there is something about the defendant that makes him or her peculiarly subject to the hostility of the local community, venue is more likely to be changed. Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 194 CR 492 (defendant was a nonresident and an African-American—only 402 of county's 117,000 residents were African-Americans); Frazier v Superior Court (1971) 5 C3d 287, 293, 95 CR 798 (widespread distrust of hippies). However, the fact that the defendant is a member of a minority group or a nonresident of the county does not always weigh in favor of a venue change. The court also considers how the community reacts to these factors. See People v Fauber (1992) 2 C4th 792, 818, 9 CR2d 24 (although portrayed as a "new Mexican resident," there was nothing to show that defendant was member of any organization or group that aroused community hostility); People v Adcox (1988) 47 C3d 207, 253 CR 55 (although nonresident of county, defendant was otherwise undistinguished). In People v Jenkins (2000) 22 C4th 900, 944, 95 CR2d 377, the court specifically commented on the defendant's lack of prominence in upholding the denial of the change of venue.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.10 f. Fifth Factor: Status of Victim in Community

The status of the victim in the community can arouse community passions against the defendant, arguing in favor of a change of venue. See, e.g., Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 194 CR 492 (victim was member of prominent family of good reputation); Frazier v Superior Court (1971) 5 C3d 287, 95 CR 798 (victim was well-known physician whose funeral was one of largest in county's history); Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 66 CR 724 (community raised funds out of sympathy for victims' families).

For either the victim's or the defendant's status to weigh in favor of a change of venue, the status factor must be unique to the county of original venue so that its effect would not be present in a different venue. People v Pride (1992) 3 C4th 195, 225, 10 CR2d 636 (mere fact that jury would feel sorry for victim or her family is of little weight if jurors in any county in which case were tried would have same feelings); People v Price (1991) 1 C4th 324, 392, 3 CR2d 106.

There is some confusion in the law about whether the victim must have been prominent before death for this factor to support a change of venue. Cases like People v Harris (1981) 28 C3d 935, 948, 171 CR 679, suggest that prior prominence is required: "Although the murdered boys were popular among their friends and their families were respected in their neighborhood, there is no indication the victims or their families were 'prominent.'"

In Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 940, 187 CR 455, the supreme court suggested that posthumous celebrity status is sufficient to support a change of venue. In Martinez v Superior Court (1981) 29 C3d 574, 584, 174 CR 701, the court held that employment as a brakeman by the largest single employer in Roseville, the Southern Pacific Railroad, created victim prominence deriving from the status of his employer.

> Ø Note: Defense counsel should argue that the status of the victim should affect the need to change venue only to the extent that the victim's status generates prejudicial pretrial publicity and that status may arise either before death or after. The local posthumous status of the victim may be far more prejudicial to the fair trial rights of a criminal defendant (see, e.g., People v Davis (2009) 46 C4th 539, 94 CR3d 322 (victim was child)) than the predeath prominence of a victim (see, e.g., Frazier v Superior Court (1971) 5 C3d 287, 95 CR 798 (victim was well-known doctor); Martinez v Superior Court (1981) 29 C3d 574, 584, 174 CR 701 (victim worked for county's largest employer)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.10A 3. Additional Factors Considered by Court

Political or controversial factors. Political or controversial factors are not required for a change of venue, but if present will support a change, because they may cause jurors to decide the case on issues other than the defendant's guilt. At the appellate level, these factors may be seen in such matters as one of the trial attorneys running for office (Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 66 CR 724), the kind of political controversy surrounding the beating of Rodney King (Powell v Superior Court (1991) 232 CA3d 785, 283 CR 777), or media reports that the case has imposed a heavy financial burden on the community (People v Tidwell (1970) 3 C3d 62, 71, 89 CR 44; see also Frazier v Superior Court (1971) 5 C3d 287, 95 CR 798; but see People v Price (1991) 1 C4th 324, 3 CR2d 106). At the trial level, such issues as local reaction to recent outbreaks of gang violence, concern about excessive numbers of parolees like the defendant coming to the community, protesters at the courthouse, a history of local hostility toward Native Americans, and the recent formation of local groups like MADD may weigh in decisions to grant changes of venue.

Death penalty. While the California Supreme Court has rejected a rebuttable presumption rule for venue changes in capital cases, the fact that the defendant is charged with the death penalty weighs heavily in favor of a venue change, as part of the gravity-of-the-crime test. Martinez v Superior Court (1981) 29 C3d 574, 174 CR 701. But see People v Staten (2000) 24 C4th 434, 101 CR2d 213, which involved capital offenses, but also a large county (Los Angeles). Counsel should review federal rulings on change of venue issues to ensure that the issues are properly "federalized" and be familiar with the level of deference accorded to state court findings and rulings on change of venue issues. See, e.g., Patton v Yount (1984) 467 US 1025, 81 L Ed 2d 847, 104 S Ct 2885.

Comments on guilt by government officials. California Rules of Professional Conduct 5-120(A) bans extrajudicial statements by attorneys "that a reasonable person would expect to be disseminated by means of public communication if the member knows or reasonably should know that it will have a substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing an adjudicative proceeding in the matter." The ABA Standards for Criminal Justice: Fair Trial and Free Press (see http://www.abanet.org/crimjust/standards/fairtrial_toc.html), Standard 8-1.1(a), has a similar proscription, and Standard 8-1.1(b) specifically prohibits statements on a variety of topics, including a suspect's prior criminal record, the guilt of the defendant or the merits of the case or evidence, any confession or admission or failure to make a statement, and inadmissible evidence. Such statements by the prosecution can strongly support a change of venue. Prosecutors should avoid making such statements and should encourage law enforcement not to volunteer prejudicial facts or opinions, lest they be responsible for a change of venue. Note, too, that when much of the publicity is generated by the defense, prosecutors can use this fact to oppose a change of venue.

B. Proceedings in Trial Court on Motion

1. Tactical Considerations

a. Defense Tactics

§15.11 (1) Deciding Whether to Make Motion

The defense must first consider whether it wants to seek a change of venue. The subject usually comes up at the beginning of a case, when media attention is focused on the defendant and publicity is generally unfavorable. Defendants are frequently upset about this and may demand that counsel seek a change of venue. Before rushing to file a change of venue motion, however, the defense attorney should consider a number of factors that weigh against requesting a change of venue:

- It is common for extensive, unfavorable publicity at the beginning of a case to all but disappear after the first court appearance, reviving briefly during the preliminary examination and trial. This type of publicity is usually insufficient to mandate a venue change. Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 187 CR 455.
- The defense may not obtain his or her choice for a new venue. The case may be changed from a larger, more liberal jurisdiction to a more conservative one. In addition, there may be factors in the case that a local jury is better equipped to understand than a jury from another county, such as racial tension between minorities and the police.
- Trying a case in another county has some practical disadvantages. An in-custody defendant may be isolated from his or her friends and family because of the distance. It is much more difficult for witnesses to get to court. Counsel may have difficulty finding temporary office space and may lack the ability to write the "overnight motions" that are often required during trial. Trying a case "from a suitcase" is an onerous experience, and the logistical difficulties should not be underestimated.

What these factors suggest is that in a number of situations it is not in the client's best interest to change venue, even in high-publicity cases. See Odle v Superior Court, supra.

In both private and publicly funded cases, defense counsel should carefully assemble information pertinent to assessing whether a change of venue should be brought from the time of his or her first involvement in a case. In a publicly funded case, counsel should plan to make timely and early requests for funding of venue-related research, particularly in the form of public opinion surveys (discussed in §§15.12, 15.20). See Cotsirilos & Philipsborn, A Change of Venue Road Map, NACDL Champion (July 1986); to obtain this article, contact the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers (NACDL) at their website: http://www.nacdl.org. See also California Death Penalty Defense Manual, available from the California Attorneys for Criminal Justice on their website at http://www.cacj.org/Publications.aspx. With the advent of the Internet, counsel can readily assemble documentation of the publicity attending a case to support the necessity for ancillary funds. See Cushner et al., Spreading the News: Communicating With the Media During High-Profile Trials, 93 Judicature 52 (2009), on collecting information about the nature and pervasiveness of coverage.

There are tactical reasons for counsel to address issues of pretrial publicity and a possible change of venue motion early in the proceedings. If the case is to remain in the local venue, prejudice must be minimized. Sensitizing the court and other parties to the cost of a venue change may help and will also place responsibility for minimizing prejudice should the motion become necessary.

One of the problems with a venue motion is that it often generates very adverse publicity both with respect to the prejudicial aspects of the coverage and to the fact that residents believe that the defendant is guilty. The motion for a change of venue may help with other issues, however, such as achieving better voir dire conditions or obtaining a severance. In some instances, defendants who were unwilling to accept a plea offer may reconsider after a venue hearing that emphasizes the worst aspects of the case and the community's reaction to it.

Ø Note: Even when counsel decides not to move for change of venue before trial, he or she should prepare to make the motion during voir dire if it appears at that time that an impartial jury cannot be impaneled. If made during voir dire, the motion should be repeated at the end of the jury selection and before the swearing in of the jury as well, to preserve the record. Counsel must make it clear that the jury as seated is unacceptable, should exhaust all peremptory challenges (or explain why they are not being exhausted), and should request additional peremptory challenges, or risk waiving the venue issue. Counsel should also consider carefully documenting ways in which adverse publicity affected the case, for presentation in further motions made during trial or during a motion for new trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.12 (2) Defense Use of Public Opinion Surveys

Counsel should consider conducting a professional "public opinion" survey, or poll, to show the effects of publicity on the jury pool. These results can both assist counsel in determining if a change of venue is advisable, and support the motion if it is to be made. Without such a community survey, it is much more likely that the trial court will wait until jury voir dire before deciding whether to change venue. People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 277 CR 122; Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 187 CR 455. Because experienced venue pollsters design venue studies according to the legal principles that govern venue decisions, many attorneys consider such studies crucial to a successful motion. For further discussion of public opinion surveys, see §15.20.

The survey should be completed a few weeks before the venue hearing so that the results will not be dated. The prosecution may wish to conduct its own survey, but the results are likely to be fairly close to those of the defense survey if they were both professionally done. The real issue is not the percentage who recognize the case and claim to have prejudged it, but what those numbers mean to the defendant's fair trial rights.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.13 (3) Steps to Reduce Publicity

Even when counsel in a high publicity case decides not to make a change of venue motion before trial, counsel should still take steps to reduce prejudicial publicity. A first step is to ask the prosecutor and law enforcement to stop releasing prejudicial information about the case. If this is not accomplished voluntarily, counsel may seek a gag order. See discussion of gag orders in §§14.19A-14.26.

Defense counsel face a dilemma in deciding whether to talk to the media. On one hand, speaking about the case may contribute to further coverage of the case, and may allow the judge to blame counsel for fueling prejudicial publicity. On the other hand, counsel may be able to make positive statements about the case that will defuse earlier negative publicity.

Counsel may ask that police reports, grand jury transcripts, and other material be sealed, at least materials that contain inculpatory, inadmissible, or inflammatory matters. See discussion in §14.11. A similar request can be made for pleadings that refer to case reports or evidence.

Counsel may request that hearings be closed, in whole or in part. See discussion in §§14.12-14.16. In the alternative, counsel may ask that no electronic media be permitted in the courtroom, and that, to the extent practicable, no pictures be taken of the defendant.

Once counsel is assigned a trial judge, counsel should sensitize the judge to the potential for damaging the defendant's fair trial rights. This may be done through a brief with some of the same materials and case law that counsel would otherwise have introduced in a change of venue motion.

See also the checklist of alternatives to a change of venue motion in §15.40.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.14 (4) Documenting Media Coverage

Irrespective of whether a change of venue motion will be filed, in high publicity cases, counsel should systematically document all media coverage from the beginning of the case to the end. Copies of newspaper articles showing the date of publication, name of newspaper, and page number should be obtained, and counsel should obtain circulation figures for these papers. Often, hiring a "clipping" service to do this is advisable. There are clipping services that cover radio and television as well. There can be substantial charges for these services, especially for clips of television coverage. The Internet is also an alternative means of assembling, and monitoring, media coverage. Most newspapers now post articles online, or make items available through Web-accessible listservs.

If counsel decides to personally obtain articles from major newspapers, such articles may be located on the Internet by using a few key words from the case, then downloaded. Video information is also available on the Internet. All papers with any significant circulation in the county should be monitored. Radio and television stations that cover news in the area should be contacted. They will often provide logs showing the time that stories about counsel's case were aired and the duration of the story. Radio stations often provide scripts of news items and recordings of the broadcast. Television stations may provide recordings of their coverage. If these items are not provided voluntarily, they should be subpoenaed. Recorded media are routinely destroyed or recycled, so counsel should try to obtain them as soon as possible. The organized and indexed volumes of publicity, along with a content analysis, will probably be exhibits in any motion for change of venue.

> Ø Note: As noted above, the Internet is a useful source of information about cases, and information about a case or defendant may appear on the Internet in forms other than online versions of newspaper articles. Internet sources include chat rooms, blogs, sites devoted to the victim or other aspects of the case, nonscientific surveys, unpublished news items, transcripts, and other items. Internet sites often log the number of "hits," which may help document the amount of interest generated. Internet sites can also document the extent of community knowledge of the details of a given case. Counsel should also check for items such as "missing" posters, reward notices, T-shirts, signs, and similar objects.

§15.15 (5) Making Motion

Although change of venue motions are not rare, many experienced criminal attorneys have never handled one. Counsel bringing their first change of venue motion may obtain useful assistance from professional colleagues or organizations. Some social scientists as well as some trial consultants have extensive experience with this issue and can be very helpful in deciding whether the motion should be made, what interim steps should be taken, and how to present the issues to the court if counsel decides to proceed with the motion. Such an expert can prepare an analysis of the publicity, provide a declaration to help secure funding, design and have administered a public opinion survey to measure prejudice, and prepare and present testimony at an evidentiary hearing. The expert should be contacted as early as possible in the proceedings to obtain the maximum benefit from his or her services. Some counsel and certain experts may suggest the use of more than one survey in a given case, particularly if it appears that the jury pool's opinion of guilt is likely to have increased as a result of persistent publicity. Having a measure of the change in community and jury pool attitudes toward a particular case may prove important in a specific case.

Generally, it is in the defendant's best interest to have the trial court rule on a change of venue motion before jury selection. Courts frequently want to defer ruling on the motion until after voir dire. For further discussion, see §15.22. Typically, the court will say that the motion is denied without prejudice and may be renewed during or after voir dire. Indeed, failure to renew a motion for change of venue after voir dire may waive the issue. People v Hart (1999) 20 C4th 546, 598, 85 CR2d 132. This is true even when additional information bearing on prejudicial publicity arises during voir dire. People v Jenkins (2000) 22 C4th 900, 945, 95 CR2d 377. There are several reasons why waiting until during or after voir dire is undesirable from the defense perspective. During voir dire, prospective jurors are apt to minimize their exposure to publicity and deny that they have formed an opinion because of it. Moreover, the defendant will not have adequate opportunity to seek pretrial review of the court's decision by way of writ after jury selection. And appellate courts will be reluctant to stay trial court proceedings so late in the process and will probably simply refuse to review the issue before trial. Finally, it is extremely difficult to have an adverse venue decision reversed on appeal. See §15.38. Thus, defense counsel should press the trial court to grant a change of venue motion at the pretrial hearing. If the motion is denied, review of that decision by way of writ should be sought immediately. Counsel should urge the court to grant the motion, presenting an analysis based on the five factors discussed in §§15.6-15.10. A few of the arguments that can be included under the five factors are set out below. Note that some can be used to illustrate more than one factor.

Nature and gravity of offense:

- The crime is heinous and has therefore created a great deal of desire in the community for revenge. People v Tidwell (1970) 3 C3d 62, 66, 89 CR 44.
- The accounts were capable of eliciting a hostile response from their audience, including terms like "sexual assault," "rape," "bullet-ridden body," and "execution-style killing." Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 590, 194 CR 492.

Nature and extent of news coverage:

- Prejudicial publicity is pervasive throughout the community. Corona v Superior Court (1972) 24 CA3d 872, 875, 101 CR 411.
- News coverage has been inaccurate and biased against the defendant. See People v Gomez (1953) 41 C2d 150, 161, 258 P2d 825 (deploring inaccurate news story, but finding no prejudice to defendant under circumstances).
- Although news coverage has been accurate, it has engendered a feeling that the defendant must be guilty. Corona v Superior Court, supra.
- Inadmissible evidence has been reported. Marshall v U.S. (1959) 360 US 310, 312, 3 L Ed 2d 1250, 1252, 79 S Ct 1171; Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 386, 66 CR 724.
- News coverage has continued unabated. Martinez v Superior Court (1981) 29 C3d 574, 174 CR 701; People v Tidwell (1970) 3 C3d 62, 76, 89 CR 44.
- News coverage is limited to the community where the crime was allegedly committed; there has been little or no publicity in other counties. See, e.g., Steffen v Municipal Court (1978) 80 CA3d 623, 145 CR 782.
- Publicity concerning the place where defendant was arrested has dominated the news media for several years and is prejudicial to defendant's case. Steffen v Municipal Court, supra.
- The broadcast of defendant's confession was so prejudicial that it requires a change of venue. Rideau v

Louisiana (1963) 373 US 723, 10 L Ed 2d 663, 83 S Ct 1417.

Status of defendant in community:

- The defendant is not well accepted in the community. Frazier v Superior Court (1971) 5 C3d 287, 294, 95 CR 798 (defendant a "hippie").
- The defendant is a member of a minority group that is quite small in the county, and the victim is a member of the majority group. See Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 591, 194 CR 492 (white victim, African-American defendant).

Status of victim in community:

- The victim is a prominent community leader. People v Tidwell (1970) 3 C3d 62, 65, 89 CR 44.
- The community has raised funds out of sympathy for the victim or the family. Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 66 CR 724.
- The defendant is a member of a minority group that is quite small in the county, and the victim is a member of the majority group. See Williams v Superior Court, supra (white victim, African-American defendant).
- The victim is prominent in the community because of his or her employer. See Martinez v Superior Court (1981) 29 C3d 574, 584, 174 CR 701.

Size and character of community:

- The community has raised funds out of sympathy for the victim or the family. Maine v Superior Court, supra.
- The community is small, and the chance of obtaining jurors who know nothing of the case, or who are unprejudiced, is slight. See Maine, 68 C2d at 386.
- Jurors will probably feel pressure from the community to avenge the deaths of the victims. Corona v Superior Court, supra.

Ø Note: Include in the above category elements in the publicity that showed the small-town response to the crime, such as flying the flag at half-mast, reports of gossip and rumors, widespread participation by the community in a victim search or memorial service, and comments posted in response to online newspaper articles. A survey can be used to demonstrate the community response. See §15.20.

Political or controversial factors:

- One or both attorneys in the case are running for political office. Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 594, 194 CR 492; Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 388, 66 CR 724.
- The case has raised political or other controversial issues. See Smith v Superior Court (1969) 276 CA2d 145, 149, 80 CR 693.
- High level of political controversy generated by the case. See Powell v Superior Court (1991) 232 CA3d 785, 283 CR 777.

§15.16 b. Prosecution Tactics

Position on motion. It is usually in the People's best interest to oppose change of venue motions made by the defense. A change of venue is expensive. The cost of the proceeding is borne by the county of original venue and is understandably higher than if the case were to be tried locally. Also, the inconvenience of trying a case in another county is usually felt more strongly by the prosecution. Although a prosecutor can usually arrange for office support with the district attorney of the new county, it is the prosecutor who usually has the most witnesses. It is more difficult to interview witnesses and schedule their testimony when they have to travel long distances to court. The prosecution can also argue that moving the trial may impose a substantial burden on victims and their families as well as lead to a significant delay in the trial.

In some cases, strong evidence exists that the defendant cannot have a fair trial in the county of original venue. In that situation, a prosecutor should consider agreeing to a change of venue to prevent possible reversal on appeal. The fair trial problem may not become clear until voir dire, however, so a prosecutor may well be justified in opposing the motion until that time. The prosecutor should argue that even if many are prejudiced, the court needs only 20 or so jurors, and in a county with a large population, that should prove easy to do. The prosecutor may also suggest better voir dire procedures to cope with any problems. Other steps less drastic than a change of venue that may be taken to deal with any community prejudice include questionnaires, individualized and sequestered voir dire or questioning in small groups, delay, and intracounty transfer. A strong case for a prosecutor opposing a change of venue arose in People v Harris (1981) 28 C3d 935, 950, 171 CR 679, in which the California Supreme Court held that although most prospective jurors will have an opinion about high-profile cases, "it is sufficient if the juror can lay aside his impression or opinion and render a verdict based on evidence presented in court." Thus, even a survey showing that most prospective jurors believe the defendant is guilty is insufficient to require a change of venue absent a showing that prospective jurors cannot set aside their beliefs and decide the case fairly.

When publicity should be documented. In highly publicized cases, prosecutors should undertake the same steps of documenting publicity as defense counsel (discussed in §15.14). The prosecution may also want to undertake its own opinion survey, or consult with an expert who can evaluate the reliability of the defense survey. See §§15.12, 15.20 on public opinion surveys. Experts have raised questions about the impact of publicity on jury pools, and some hearings in change of venue cases have focused on the current state of knowledge about this issue.

Prosecutors should consider taking steps to minimize the kind of publicity that could lead to a venue change. This is not to suggest that the public's "right to know" should be compromised, but law enforcement agencies can be cautioned to avoid inflammatory statements and instead to provide only factual information about the crime and its investigation.

Factors against change of venue. The following are several of the factors that are important in urging a court not to change venue:

- The offense is so minor that it has engendered little community interest. See People v Mendonsa (1982) 137 CA3d 888, 895, 187 CR 363 (crime not grave; penalty not high; community interest not prejudicial); Clifton v Superior Court (1970) 7 CA3d 245, 252, 86 CR 612.
- The victim's standing in the community will not influence a local jury. See Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 940, 187 CR 455 (victims both private persons but one became posthumous celebrity).
- The community is so large that the court will probably be able to select jurors who have not heard of the case. Odle v Superior Court, supra; People v Harris (1981) 28 C3d 935, 949, 171 CR 679.
- News coverage has abated. Odle v Superior Court, supra (2 years since crime); People v McCracken (1952) 39 C2d 336, 343, 246 P2d 913 ("public feeling" died down in 11 weeks).
- News reporting has been accurate; nothing has been reported that is not factual. Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 936 n2, 187 CR 455; People v Whalen (1973) 33 CA3d 710, 716, 109 CR 282.
- News coverage has been infrequent and in newspapers with small circulation. See Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 940, 187 CR 455 (inflammatory articles received limited circulation).
- News coverage is so widespread that there is no county in California in which coverage would be any less prejudicial. People v Manson (1976) 61 CA3d 102, 175, 132 CR 265.
- Although news coverage has been prejudicial, surveys or voir dire of jurors indicate that unbiased jurors are available. People v Mendonsa (1982) 137 CA3d 888, 895, 187 CR 363; People v Martinez (1978) 82 CA3d 1, 14, 147 CR 208. It is not necessary that jurors be ignorant of prejudicial publicity, or that they not have formed an opinion concerning defendant's culpability. It is only necessary that they be willing to set aside all impressions and base their verdict only on the evidence presented in court. People v Harris (1981) 28 C3d 935, 949, 171 CR

Urging later ruling on motion. Prosecutors who have decided to oppose a pretrial change of venue motion may want to urge the court to deny it without prejudice, and allow the defendant to renew it during voir dire if juror responses suggest they have been prejudiced by publicity. Juror responses on voir dire can provide the basis for rejection of an unfair pretrial publicity claim. See, e.g., People v Coleman (1989) 48 C3d 112, 255 CR 813. Both sides can use the opinion in Odle v Superior Court, supra, to help form their arguments; the prosecution will find their best arguments in the majority opinion, the defense will find theirs in the dissent written by then Chief Justice Bird. See §15.19 for discussion of evidence to oppose the motion.

§15.17 2. Timing of Bringing Change of Venue Motion

Except for good cause shown, a motion for change of venue must be filed at least 10 days before the date set for trial. Cal Rules of Ct 4.151(a). See Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 66 CR 724. See also Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 194 CR 492; Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 187 CR 455; Frazier v Superior Court (1971) 5 C3d 287, 95 CR 798. If the motion is denied, it should be renewed during or after voir dire. Odle v Superior Court, supra. See, e.g., People v Pride (1992) 3 C4th 195, 10 CR2d 636. Failure to renew a previously denied motion after voir dire may waive the right to challenge the court's ruling on appeal. Compare People v Howard (1992) 1 C4th 1132, 1166, 5 CR2d 268, with People v Bean (1988) 46 C3d 919, 941, 251 CR 467, and People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 359, 279 CR 780. In Howard, the court found no waiver because the motion was renewed. In Bean and Jennings, the motions were not renewed but the court reached the issue of denial of the motion on the merits and did not discuss the issue of waiver.

Although a motion to change venue based on prejudicial publicity can be made for the first time during or after voir dire if the voir dire discloses the prejudice (Odle v Superior Court, supra), there are several practical reasons such timing should be avoided. First, counsel will face serious problems in obtaining other evidence to support such a motion on short notice. Second, the trial court will probably be reluctant to grant the motion after investing time in selecting a jury. Third, as a practical matter it is unlikely that a trial judge who may have just denied a challenge to a juror for cause based on prejudice stemming from publicity will grant a motion to change venue a short time later. Finally, counsel will not have time to seek pretrial writ review of a decision denying the motion.

As a practical matter, the motion should be heard 3 weeks or so before trial. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.151(a). If brought earlier, the survey and the publicity review will be less comprehensive and may be too dated. A greater concern is that, if the motion is presented too close to the trial date, the court will be more likely to wait until voir dire to decide the venue issue. Once prospective jurors have been called and scheduling commitments have been made, the court may wish to follow its natural inclination to try to pick a jury in spite of the evidence presented at the venue hearing.

§15.18 3. Format and Filing of Change of Venue Motion

A motion to change venue must be in writing. Cal Rules of Ct 4.150-4.151. The motion typically consists of five parts:

- A notice of motion (see Cal Rules of Ct 4.151) setting the case for an evidentiary hearing on the motion.
- A supporting memorandum (see Cal Rules of Ct 4.111) that contains a statement of facts summarizing the pretrial publicity in light of the five factors discussed in §§15.6-15.10, and a legal argument that applies the reported decisions to those facts. The statement of facts is extremely important and should re-create in detail the publicity concerning the case and its prejudicial import.
- A declaration under penalty of perjury, or affidavit (CCP §2015.5), in support of the motion is required. Cal Rules of Ct 4.150-4.151. The declaration should serve the function of giving the factual basis for the motion; a declaration that just states an opinion that the defendant cannot receive a fair trial is inadequate. People v Congleton (1872) 44 C 92, 95. In practice, the declaration is frequently made by counsel and analyzes the publicity in light of the five factors discussed in §§15.6-15.10. The declaration, however, may be done by a social scientist. A declaration filed in a California case by an expert social scientist, weaving together the law, a content analysis of the publicity, an explanation of the survey results, and a consideration of alternative remedies is reproduced in National Jury Project, Jurywork: Systematic Techniques, §7.08[2] (2d ed 1983). The change of venue motion was granted in that case.

  Ø Note: A declaration from a prominent member of the local community or a person respected as an observer of local court proceedings can supply the local trial court, as well as a reviewing court, with an informed perspective on the impact of the case in the local community.

- Exhibits of actual publicity in the case; if a jury pool survey was done, that can also be attached as an exhibit.
- Proof of service (Cal Rules of Ct 4.111; CCP §1013a).

Except for good cause shown, the motion must be filed with the court at least 10 days before the date set for trial and served on the prosecutor at least 10 days before the hearing on the motion. Cal Rules of Ct 4.150-4.151.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.19 4. Prosecutor's Response

A prosecutor may oppose a motion for change of venue that was made on grounds that the defendant cannot obtain a fair trial, or that all jury panels have been exhausted, by filing counteraffidavits. Cal Rules of Ct 4.151(a). Counterdeclarations may be substituted for counteraffidavits. CCP §2015.5. Although Cal Rules of Ct 4.151 states that the counterdeclarations or counteraffidavits may be filed at the hearing on the motion, the better practice is to file and serve them earlier. On form and filing requirements for motions, see Cal Rules of Ct 4.111, discussed in §18.5.

The prosecutor may also file a qualified public opinion survey. On public opinion surveys, see §§15.12, 15.20. On evidence that may be introduced at the change of venue hearing, see §15.21.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.20 5. Public Opinion Surveys

There is increasing use of qualified public opinion surveys that directly measure the attitudes of potential jurors. This type of evidence was expressly sanctioned by the supreme court in Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 66 CR 724. A "qualified" survey means a survey that is well conceived, impartially conducted, and accurately recorded. Corona v Superior Court (1972) 24 CA3d 872, 882, 101 CR 411. Public opinion surveys are used to provide the court with two major forms of information. First, the survey shows the percentage of the surveyed population that recognizes the case. In specific surveys, efforts will be made to reach a representative cross-section of the jury-eligible population so that the integrity of the public opinion survey can be defended on the basis that it has reached those likely to serve on the county's juries. Second, the survey will be designed to measure the opinion of guilt held by the persons surveyed, thereby describing for the court the percentage of the population that believes that the accused is actually guilty of the crime. Sophisticated surveys may also be designed to describe specific details of the case taken into account by those surveyed in arriving at their opinions of guilt.

Ø Note: Testimony of witnesses that other members of the community refused to tell defense representatives that they could not give defendant a fair trial because they did not want venue changed is also admissible. See, e.g., People v McKay (1951) 37 C2d 792, 796, 236 P2d 145. See also People v Suesser (1901) 132 C 631, 635, 64 P 1095.

Ø Note: Standards for venue surveys have been promulgated by the American Society of Trial Consultants. Guidelines for Survey Research in Connection With Motions to Change Venue is available to members on the society's website at http://www.astcweb.org.

Counsel for indigent defendants may wish to apply to the court to authorize payment of experts to conduct a survey or do other necessary work concerning juror attitudes. The cost varies, but such surveys often cost upwards of $10,000 plus design costs if a survey expert is retained. In very high-profile cases, a comparative survey may be needed, i.e., one that compares levels of prejudice in the local county with levels of prejudice in one or more outside counties. A comparative survey is useful when publicity has been massive both in and out of the local community, and when a venue issue may be that there will be prejudice wherever the case is tried, given its nature, e.g., serial murders, cop killing, murder with sexual overtones, or murder of children. See §§18.10-18.12 on applications for the appointment of experts. For more detailed discussion of authorization of payment, including a list of cases by county in which expert services concerning the jury have been allowed, and the type of services, see National Jury Project, Jurywork: Systematic Techniques, App A (2d ed 1983). There is general discussion of change of venue motions in Jurywork, chap 8. For examples of cases in which surveys have been used, see People v Pride (1992) 3 C4th 195, 10 CR2d 636, and People v Howard (1992) 1 C4th 1132, 1168, 5 CR2d 268. Lower-cost alternatives to public opinion surveys are discussed in the California Death Penalty Defense Manual (CACJ-CPDA 2004). Note that recent case law suggests that poll results published in journals may be insufficient because the courts cannot gauge the adequacy of the polling and research methods employed. Ramdass v Angelone (2000) 530 US 156, 172, 147 L Ed 2d 125, 139, 120 S Ct 2113. A chart with information about post-Maine change of venue cases is in §15.39.

The trial court has the discretion to grant or deny funds to appointed counsel for a public opinion survey, but it cannot refuse to exercise discretion on the theory that voir dire of the jury is a better method of assessing the need to change venue. People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 851, 277 CR 122. As the court points out in Daniels, a failure to exhaust peremptory challenges may waive the venue issue. For extensive discussion of how one gathers data for pretrial motions on juror bias, see Jurywork, chap 8.

Ø Note: In Daniels v Woodford (9th Cir 2005) 428 F3d 1181, 1211, the Ninth Circuit disagreed with People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 277 CR 122, finding that under the extreme circumstances of the case a finding of presumed prejudice was compelled and therefore due process was violated by not granting a change of venue. The Ninth Circuit also commented that, inexplicably, the trial court had denied the defense funding for ancillary services until it was too late for these services to be used.

6. Nature of Hearing on Change of Venue Motion

§15.21 a. Presentation of Evidence

The defendant has the burden of proof and must be prepared to show facts supporting a request for change of venue. The question to be determined is whether, because of the dissemination of potentially prejudicial material, a reasonable likelihood exists that, without a change of venue, a fair trial cannot be had. A showing of actual prejudice is not required. "Reasonable likelihood" refers to a lesser standard of proof than "more probable than not." People v Hamilton (1989) 48 C3d 1142, 1156, 259 CR 701. When the issue is raised before trial, any doubt about the need for a change of venue must be resolved in favor of a venue change. Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 588, 194 CR 492. Usually, it is the publicity itself from which this inference can be made.

Ø Note: Defense counsel should prepare a summary of the content and the extent of publicity in addition to presenting the coverage itself.

If a public opinion survey was conducted, it too can be considered in evaluating juror impartiality. Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 383, 66 CR 724. See §§15.12, 15.20 on public opinion surveys. Counsel should analyze this publicity in light of the factors discussed in §§15.5-15.10A.

Ø Note: Counsel should bear in mind the difference between a challenge for cause to a particular juror and a motion to change venue, which challenges the entire panel. The fact that all jurors are qualified does not control the venue decision, which is far more searching and requires consideration of the responses of jurors who do not ultimately become members of the trial panel as well as those who do. Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 944, 187 CR 455.

There is little case law concerning the nature of the hearing on the motion. In practice, the evidence usually consists of counsel's declaration or affidavit, the exhibits filed with the motion, and the testimony of witnesses at the hearing. See People v Pride (1992) 3 C4th 195, 10 CR2d 636 (live testimony of expert); People v Fauber (1992) 2 C4th 792, 9 CR2d 24 (exhibits of media coverage); Corona v Superior Court (1972) 24 CA3d 872, 877, 101 CR 411 (public opinion surveys, opinion testimony offered by individuals, and court's own evaluation of nature, frequency, and timing of material involved are admissible); Cal Rules of Ct 4.151. Sophisticated hearings often involve testimony by the polling expert who conducted the survey, as well as a qualified social science expert who can testify about specific aspects of the survey research that tend to demonstrate that the case has acquired such a meaning in the given county that the trial should be moved. The expert may also be able to present a content analysis of the publicity, using legal and social science criteria; analyze other issues, such as the size and nature of the community and the extent and impact of media exposure; weigh alternative remedies; and express an opinion on the ultimate question of the need to change venue.

Ø Note: Counsel should be aware that there is a substantial social science literature on change of venue issues, including the impact of pretrial publicity, the effectiveness of voir dire and judicial instructions in protecting criminal defendants against prejudicial coverage, and related topics. In addition to publications that specialize in media and jury trials, publications such as Judicature also update relevant scholarship. The National Center for State Courts (see http://www.ncsconline.org) also maintains a list of publications on the media and the courts. Experts testify both for the prosecution and for the defense, interpreting the evidence of venue from different perspectives. If counsel hires an expert to assist with the motion, he or she should be familiar with this literature and should be able to address the strengths and weaknesses of arguments favoring various interpretations of the data.

Counsel should be sure that the declaration or affidavit and exhibits filed with the motion are admitted into evidence at the hearing. If opposing counsel is unwilling to stipulate to their admission, the witnesses necessary to establish the foundation for their admission should testify. For example, to introduce television station program recordings, a television station employee (such as the custodian of records or director of programming) who qualifies under the business records exception to the hearsay rule (Evid C §1271) will be needed to testify that a particular recording is the one actually aired, and about the channel on which it was aired and the dates and times it was shown. When possible, counsel should introduce recordings of the broadcasts themselves into evidence, and should be prepared to introduce transcripts of those recordings. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1040. Counsel should provide the court with a means of viewing the recording. For further discussion of introducing into evidence radio and television broadcasts, see People v Welch (1972) 8 C3d 106, 112, 104 CR 217; In re Miller (1973) 33 CA3d 1005, 1013, 109 CR 648.

Counsel should make sure that evidence of all available media coverage is part of the record: copies of newspaper articles; logs of radio and television coverage; transcripts of broadcast media coverage; audiotapes of radio coverage; and videotapes of television coverage. Each of these should be identified by source and date. There should be evidence of newspaper circulation and its geographical coverage, and equivalent evidence for the broadcast media.

Ø Note: In practice, the cost of acquisition of electronic coverage, the court time required to play and listen to it, and the fact that electronic coverage generally tracks what was in the newspapers (which are cheaper and easier to work with) make it impractical to invest much time or money in presenting the court with the electronic coverage, particularly the tapes themselves. A more useful approach is to do the quantitative analysis using just the station logs and to present a brief sampling of the television coverage to illustrate its powerful and emotional elements. However, presenting evidence in its native electronic format during hearings will give the court a sense of the nature and effect of media coverage in a form other than the traditional bound paper submissions.

§15.22 b. Trial Court Response

There is conflicting language on the proper trial court response to a pretrial change of venue motion. The law appears to be that any doubt regarding a pretrial change of venue motion should be resolved in favor of a venue change. Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 588, 194 CR 492. Yet, in Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 943, 187 CR 455, the court sanctioned a trial court's denial of a defense pretrial change of venue motion in part because the denial would allow the trial court during jury voir dire to make a realistic evaluation of the effect, if any, of pretrial publicity. The court in Williams, however, said that its decision in Odle had not established a preference for a change of venue motion to be made at voir dire. Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 588 n2, 194 CR 492. The rules of court do not clarify this issue. Under Cal Rules of Ct 4.151(b), the transferring court is directed to consider attempting to impanel a jury before ordering a change of venue. The commentary to the section, however, undermines that language by stating that Rule 4.151(b) does not mean that the trial court should always attempt to impanel a jury.

The trial court should wait until voir dire to determine a change of venue motion only when it is not satisfied that prejudice was shown at the pretrial evidentiary hearing. Postponing the decision until after voir dire cannot be justified by the court's belief that, as a general proposition, voir dire is a better method to determine prejudice.

In addition, waiting until voir dire risks confusing the standard applicable to determining a change of venue motion with the standard applicable to determining whether a particular juror is biased. Some judges and prosecutors apparently hold the view that if 12 jurors plus alternates can be found at voir dire who can survive a challenge for cause, there is no need to grant a change of venue. However, the test that should be applied in deciding a change of venue motion "is separate from, and requires a far more searching analysis than, the decision to qualify a particular juror." Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 944, 187 CR 455. The lengths to which the trial court has to go to select a jury panel is also a significant factor in determining whether a change of venue should be granted. 32 C3d at 945.

It is important to remember that the standards used by appellate courts in reviewing change of venue motions are generally laid out in postconviction appeals, i.e., after the change was denied and the defendant was convicted. Eighty-five of the 101 appellate decisions since the California law changed in Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 66 CR 724, were decided in appeals, with just 16 decisions on applications for a writ of mandate (see §15.39). Thus, much of the language in those decisions is not the proper standard for a trial court judge to apply in a pretrial motion. Under Maine (a writ case), a showing of actual prejudice is not required (68 C2d at 380). It would be impossible to show actual prejudice because no trial has occurred, and rarely has there been any voir dire. In the postconviction appeal, however, the standard "is retrospective and the test is whether the accused did, in fact, receive a fair and impartial trial." People v Frogge (1969) 270 CA2d 106, 112, 75 CR 517. The defendant must show "that the error was prejudicial, i.e., that a fair trial was not in fact had" (People v Cooper (1991) 53 C3d 771, 806, 281 CR 90), and that the prospective jurors had "fixed opinions as a result of pretrial publicity" (People v Bonin (1988) 46 C3d 659, 673, 250 CR 687, overruled on another ground in People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 823 n1, 72 CR2d 656). Some trial court judges confuse the two standards, requiring a showing of "fixed opinions" or "actual prejudice" to grant a change of venue, because that sort of language is found in many of the appellate decisions. Counsel must clarify to the court that the "reasonable likelihood" standard, which is less than a preponderance, with doubt resolved in favor of granting the change, is the appropriate standard to apply before trial. See Pen C §1033(a).

California appellate courts have ordered a change of venue in just 17 of 101 cases, the last time occurring in 1991 in Powell v Superior Court (1991) 232 CA3d 785, 283 CR 777 (the Rodney King case). However, at the trial level, courts frequently grant such motions. The experience of one of the authors, who has testified as an expert witness on venue issues in 98 criminal cases tried in California state court, is that the motion was granted in 45 cases, or 46 percent of the time.

> Ø Note: As a practical matter, defense counsel will tend to cite language from the writ cases (e.g., Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 194 CR 492), and prosecutors will cite language from the postconviction cases (e.g., People v Harris (1981) 28 C3d 935, 171 CR 679).

7. Further Actions if Pretrial Motion Is Denied

§15.23 a. Pretrial Writ Review

The defendant may seek writ review of denial of a pretrial motion to change venue. Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 66 CR 724; Powell v Superior Court (1991) 232 CA3d 785, 283 CR 777 (Pen C §§1049.5, 1050 do not eliminate defendant's right to pretrial writ review of venue motion denial). Writs are discussed in §§15.35-15.36. The advantage to the defense of seeking pretrial writ relief is that prejudice may be presumed before trial. In addition, an appellate court is less likely to be sympathetic to the venue issue when it forces a retrial, often years later, with the added expense and difficulty entailed.

The prosecution has the right to obtain pretrial writ review of alleged error in the granting of a motion for change of venue only if it can show that the trial court exceeded its jurisdiction and that the need for review outweighs the risk of harassment of the accused. People v Superior Court (Stanley) (1979) 24 C3d 622, 626, 156 CR 626.

§15.24 b. Requesting Expanded Jury Voir Dire

Whenever counsel is concerned about the effect of pretrial publicity on juror attitudes, he or she should move the trial court for expanded voir dire on that issue. CCP §223; Tapia v Superior Court (1991) 53 C3d 282, 299, 279 CR 592 (concerns about publicity constitute good cause for expanded voir dire). Possible requests are as follows:

- For a detailed questionnaire, which can expedite questioning and avoid tainting the pool;
- For individualized and sequestered "Hovey" voir dire (Hovey v Superior Court (1980) 28 C3d 1, 168 CR 128), at least regarding pretrial publicity and sensitive information disclosed in the questionnaires (see People v Visciotti (1992) 2 C4th 1, 50, 5 CR2d 495 (trial courts have discretion to conduct sequestered voir dire);
- For partially attorney-conducted voir dire;
- For open-ended questioning;
- That panel members, before they fill out questionnaires or are voir dired, not be preinstructed on the presumption of innocence, judging the case solely on the evidence presented in court, being fair and impartial, and so forth (These preinstructions can teach the panel what the "correct" answers are. Instead, there should be preinstruction that there are no right or wrong answers and that emphasizes the requirement that jurors completely disclose all relevant information. After voir dire, the jury may be fully preinstructed.);
- For extra peremptory challenges (see §15.27);
- For a reasonable time to conduct voir dire;
- That the court liberally grant challenges for cause to excuse prospective jurors who have been exposed to prejudicial pretrial publicity, even when such panel members assure the court they can be fair and impartial; and
- That the court should not heavily rely on the answers to leading questions such as "Can you be fair and impartial?" or "Can you put aside any opinions you may have and decide this case solely on the evidence you hear in court?" to decide the fairness of a juror or of the jury pool.

§15.25 c. Renewing Motion After Voir Dire

The defendant has the right to renew a pretrial motion to change venue after jury voir dire. Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 588 n2, 194 CR 492; Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 187 CR 455; Powell v Superior Court (1991) 232 CA3d 785, 793, 283 CR 777. Moreover, the rule may be that the defendant must renew the motion after voir dire in order to preserve the issue for appeal. Contrast People v Jenkins (2000) 22 C4th 900, 945, 95 CR2d 377 (motion must be renewed after voir dire to cover occurrences during voir dire), with People v Bean (1988) 46 C3d 919, 941, 251 CR 467, and People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 359, 279 CR 780 (defendants failed to renew motion, yet supreme court considered issue on appeal without discussion of waiver). The defendant should renew the motion to avoid any possibility of waiving the issue for appeal.

When a motion for change of venue is renewed after voir dire, defense counsel should ensure that all of the material submitted in support of the pretrial motion is resubmitted in support of the renewed motion. Alternatively, counsel can ask the trial court to take judicial notice of that material if it was moved into evidence at the hearing on the pretrial motion. Evid C §452. That evidence should be supplemented with proof of any additional publicity that has occurred in the interim. Counsel may also want to have an opinion poll conducted immediately before voir dire, and introduce the results of that poll. See §§15.12, 15.20 on public opinion polls.

> Ø Note: Counsel may also provide the court with a summary or content analysis of juror questionnaires, voir dire, or both.

Defense counsel should anticipate that jurors will state that they either are unaware of any publicity, have not been affected by it, or can set aside any previously formed opinion and make their decision only on the basis of the evidence presented in court. This means that the motion is usually renewed after the trial court has qualified 12 jurors to try the case, having denied challenges for cause based on exposure to pretrial publicity. Renewing a previously denied motion in this context is a daunting task, but there are at least two points that defense counsel can urge.

First, the fact that jurors can survive a challenge for cause does not necessarily mean that the defense has failed to show a reasonable likelihood that the defendant cannot receive a fair trial. For extended discussion of the difference in standards between challenges for cause and change of venue motions, see Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 943, 187 CR 455. For discussion of how jurors' responses should be analyzed to determine whether a change of venue motion should be granted, see People v Williams (1989) 48 C3d 1112, 1129, 259 CR 473 (denial of change of venue reversed on appeal despite fact that jurors who sat on case said they could disregard publicity and be fair).

Second, the appellate decisions recognize that statements by jurors that they can set aside the effects of any pretrial publicity should not be taken at face value, and are not conclusive. Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 945, 187 CR 455; Frazier v Superior Court (1971) 5 C3d 287, 294, 95 CR 798; People v Tidwell (1970) 3 C3d 62, 73, 89 CR 44; Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 380, 66 CR 724; Corona v Superior Court (1972) 24 CA3d 872, 877, 101 CR 411.

§15.26 d. Exhaustion of Peremptory Challenges

The defense's failure to exhaust its peremptory challenges will be taken by the reviewing court as an indication that the jury, as impaneled, was fair (see People v Daniels (1991) 52 C3d 815, 854, 277 CR 122; People v Leonard (2007) 40 C4th 1370, 1396, 58 CR3d 368), and that factor may then be used by the reviewing court to sustain the trial court's denial of the venue motion (see People v Alfaro (2007) 41 C4th 1277, 1322, 63 CR3d 433; People v Prince (2007) 40 C4th 1179, 1215, 57 CR3d 543; People v Fauber (1992) 2 C4th 792, 820, 9 CR2d 24).

Ø Note: In an extreme case, prejudice must be presumed. See Daniels v Woodford (9th Cir 2005) 428 F3d 1181, 1211 (counsel had not exhausted peremptory challenges); People v Prince (2007) 40 C4th 1179, 1216, 57 CR3d 543 (prejudice presumed only in extraordinary cases).

Despite this rule, counsel may decide not to exhaust all peremptory challenges. The chances of obtaining a reversal on appeal based on denial of a change of venue motion are very small. Thus, counsel must endeavor to select the best jury that can be obtained under the circumstances. If counsel concludes at some point that a worse jury might result if all peremptory challenges are used, counsel faces a dilemma. Does counsel preserve the issue for appeal, or select the best jury under the circumstances? The best solution is to explain on the record that, although counsel does not feel that a fair trial can be had in the existing venue, and that counsel is not satisfied with this jury, counsel nevertheless feels that this is the best jury that can be selected under the circumstances. It is for this reason counsel is not exercising the remaining peremptory challenges. Counsel should then ask for additional peremptory challenges and renew the motion to change venue. While this approach is reasonable, it does entail some risk in light of case law.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.27 e. Seeking Additional Peremptory Challenges

Counsel should consider asking for additional peremptory challenges before or during voir dire when counsel believes that many members of the jury panel have been tainted by pretrial publicity. Making the motion underscores counsel's concerns about the prejudicial effect of the publicity on the actual trial jury, and may, therefore, influence the reviewing court.

Further, denial of the motion represents an independent ground for appeal. The test for reviewing denial of a request for additional peremptory challenges, however, is virtually identical to that for reviewing a change of venue motion, so viewed from a strictly legal sense, making the motion adds little to improve the chance of success on appeal. The test on appeal for ruling on this issue is whether "in the absence of such additional challenges [the defendant] is reasonably likely to receive an unfair trial before a partial jury." People v Bonin (1988) 46 C3d 659, 679, 250 CR 687, overruled on another ground in People v Hill (1998) 17 C4th 800, 823 n1, 72 CR2d 656.

C. Proceedings After Change of Venue Motion Is Granted

§15.28 1. Notifying Administrative Director of Courts

Once a court has granted a change of venue, its presiding judge, or his or her designee, must notify the Administrative Director of the Courts. Cal Rules of Ct 4.152(1). The Administrative Director must suggest one or more counties to which venue should be transferred. Cal Rules of Ct 4.152(1). However, the trial judge does not have to select one of those suggestions. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.152-4.153.

Ø Note: In counties with more than one superior court, the case may be administratively transferred to another superior court in that county without a change of venue. See §15.34.

In misdemeanor cases, a court may transfer a case to another court within the county (Muller v Justice Court (1954) 129 CA2d 570, 277 P2d 866) or to another county (Pen C §1035; Steffen v Municipal Court (1978) 80 CA3d 623, 145 CR 782). Changes of venue in misdemeanor cases, however, are unusual. But see Steffen v Municipal Court, supra.

§15.29 2. Hearing to Determine New Venue

Before selecting a new county, a court must hold an evidentiary hearing. People v Cooper (1991) 53 C3d 771, 805, 281 CR 90; McGown v Superior Court (1977) 75 CA3d 648, 142 CR 262. At that hearing, the parties may agree on a new venue or may disagree and produce evidence regarding issues such as the extent of pretrial publicity in the intended transferee judicial district or county and the hardship involved in trying the case there. See People v Davis (2009) 46 C4th 539, 94 CR3d 322. Publicity in a prospective transferee county that might not be sufficient to persuade a court to change venue from that county may be sufficient to persuade the court not to select that county as the transferee county. 46 C4th at 574.

The usual practice is for the judge to inform the parties of the available counties and set a date for hearing. At the hearing, the parties state their preference and either agree on a new county, or present evidence to support their choice or to persuade the court against one or more of the other possibilities.

The decision on where to transfer a case lies within the trial court's discretion. In making this decision, "the conservation of judicial resources and public funds are important factors in deciding between various possible venue sites." People v Davis (2009) 46 C4th 539, 574, 94 CR3d 322; People v Cooper (1991) 53 C3d 771, 805, 281 CR 90. The court is entitled to select any venue in the state and is not limited to the counties selected by the Administrative Director of the Courts. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.152-4.153. The proximity of the new venue to the county of original venue is also important because the closer the new county, the more convenient for witnesses, attorneys, and others interested in attending the trial who live in the original venue. People v Davis, supra.

Counsel for both sides should ask that the hearing to determine the new venue be held after they have had sufficient time to consider which of the venue sites suggested by the Administrative Director is the most appropriate, or whether some other county would be better. Counsel should ascertain the nature and extent of publicity in those sites and the probable characteristics of the jurors who would hear the case. Factors of a more practical nature, such as the availability of office space, living arrangements, whether counsel might be able to commute from his or her home, convenience to witnesses, appropriate jail housing (particularly when there are security concerns), and the ability to consult with a client in custody in the proposed venue, should also be considered. Counsel can then make an informed choice of new venue and should then contact opposing counsel to see whether an agreement can be reached on the new venue. If no stipulation is possible, counsel should formulate arguments in favor of the preferred site and, in the appropriate case, should be prepared to present evidence indicating that holding the trial in the proposed host county will not improve the chances of seating a fair and impartial jury.

§15.30 3. Procedures if Case Is Moved to Another County

Even after a change of venue has been ordered and a new venue selected, all further proceedings in the case short of trial remain in the transferring court. Only the trial itself is transferred. Pen C §1033(a). The only exception occurs when a particular proceeding must be heard by the judge who is to preside over the trial and that judge is not a judge from the transferring court. Pen C §1033(a); Cal Rules of Ct 4.150(b). In this event, all other proceedings should be completed, and the matter to be heard by the trial judge should be reserved for the court of new venue.

The court of new venue (the "receiving court") proceeds as if the case had been commenced there originally. Cal Rules of Ct 4.154. Generally, the only remaining proceeding is the trial itself and the associated in limine motions.

California Rules of Court 4.152 states that a judge from the transferring court must try the case in the new venue unless, after a request from the presiding judge of the transferring court, the Chief Justice of California assigns another judge to the transferring court. This procedure not only solves some of the cost allocation problems, but also allows in limine and other motions usually heard by the trial judge to be heard in the transferring court before the defendant is transferred.

The defendant is transferred to the county of new venue after all pretrial proceedings have been completed in the court of original venue. Pen C §1036. If there is a period of time between the conclusion of pretrial proceedings and the start of trial, counsel for the defendant should seek a stipulation of all parties, and orders from both the old and new courts, that the defendant will not be transferred until just before trial. The orders should be given to the head of the law enforcement agency with custody of the defendant. Otherwise, counsel may find his or her client in custody some distance away during a period when counsel needs to see the client frequently.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.31 4. Procedures if Jury Is Chosen in Another Venue to Sit in Original County

After ordering a change of venue, the court, rather than transfer the case to another county or judicial district, can have a jury selected in the county or judicial district to which the case would otherwise have been transferred, and have that jury come to the original venue for trial. Pen C §1036.7. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.153(1). A motion to use this procedure can be made by the court or a party. All parties must agree to the procedure and the court must determine that it is in the interests of the administration of justice. Pen C §1036.7. The court must also give particular consideration to the convenience of the jurors. Cal Rules of Ct 4.153(1).

Ø Note: Although the decision to import a jury is made by agreement after the motion to change venue is granted, as a practical matter, an agreement to accept importation made before the court's decision on venue may encourage the court to grant the change.

Bringing a jury into the original venue county would appear to solve a number of the practical problems associated with a venue change. It may, however, create as many problems as it solves:

- Because the statute says that the jury must be selected "in" the county to which venue would otherwise have been transferred, venue still must be physically changed to select the new jury. Then, the new jury must be physically moved back to the county of original venue.
- The jurors from the other venue will be greatly inconvenienced. Unless they live in a county that is a short distance from the county of original venue, they will either have a long drive or bus trip before and after court each day, or will have to live in the county of original venue during the pendency of the trial. All parties should seriously consider whether they want to try a case to a jury that has been subjected to this kind of hardship. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.153(1) (after change of venue has been ordered, court should give particular consideration to jurors' convenience in determining whether to use §1036.7 procedure).
- This procedure is not without cost to the county, particularly if jurors are given lodging.
- If jurors are transported back and forth each day, court time may have to be shortened to allow for the extra travel time. This will mean a longer trial, which means higher costs. Moreover, additional delays are bound to occur because of problems associated with the transportation itself.

In short, while this alternative may seem attractive, it does have limitations.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.32 5. Setting Aside Order Changing Venue

After pretrial motions have been made and before the defendant or the case file is transferred to the new county for trial, the court may set aside its order changing venue on the ground that the conditions that originally required the order to change venue no longer apply. Pen C §1036.5. There are no reported decisions on the application of this statute. The parties must be notified before an order is set aside, so there is presumably a right to a hearing.

The plain language of §1036.5 suggests that the court has no power to enter such an order after the defendant has been ordered transferred to the new county, or after the case file has been transferred to the new county. Under Cal Rules of Ct 4.153, a certified copy of order of transfer and any pleadings, documents, or other papers or exhibits necessary for trying the case must be transmitted to the receiving court once the motion to change venue is granted. The order for change of venue must also be entered in the minutes of the transferring court. However, the rule no longer provides that the case file be transmitted to the receiving court "immediately" after the order is entered in the minutes of the transferring court. The transferring court would then have time to set aside its order under §1036.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.32A 6. Motion for Return of Action to Original Place of Trial

When a trial has been moved to another county, the defendant has been convicted, and the conviction has been reversed on appeal, the court, on its own motion or that of either party, can order the return of the action to the original place of trial if the conditions that required a change of venue no longer apply. Pen C §1033.1. Notice of a hearing to determine whether the conditions have substantially changed must be sent to all parties. Pen C §1033.1(b) Unless the defendant and defense counsel consent to the return, the burden is on the prosecution to establish that the conditions that originally required the order to change venue no longer apply. Pen C §1033.1(b).

Because the burden is on the prosecution, the prosecutor would want to show that so much time has passed that memories and prejudice have faded. This could be shown by the absence of recent media coverage or with a community survey. In effect, the prosecutor will be arguing against the current existence of the five Maine factors (discussed in §§15.5-15.10), given the many years since the original trial.

V. OTHER GROUNDS FOR CHANGE OF VENUE

§15.33 A. Jury Panel Exhausted

When all jury panels have been exhausted, and it appears impossible to secure a jury to try a the case, the court must order a change of venue. Pen C §1033(b). See §15.29 on selecting a new forum.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.34 B. Parties' and Court's Convenience

In counties with more than one superior court, the presiding judge may transfer a case from one court to another within the county. Pen C §691(c). In addition, following the former practice in municipal court (see former Pen C §1035(a)(1)), it seems possible that the court could transfer a case to another court within the same county for the convenience of both counsel and the court. But see People v Guzman (1988) 45 C3d 915, 937, 248 CR 467, overruled on other grounds in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069 n13, 108 CR2d 409. (Defendant "may not change venue merely as a convenience. Absent a showing that there is a reasonable likelihood of an unfair trial, a community retains the right to try its own crimes.")

VI. PROCEEDINGS IN APPELLATE COURTS

A. Pretrial Review of Trial Court Ruling

§15.35 1. Availability of Pretrial Review

A defendant may seek pretrial review of denial of a motion for change of venue through a petition for writ of mandate. Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 66 CR 724. The prosecution also may seek pretrial review, but must show that the trial court acted in excess of its jurisdiction and that the need for review outweighs the risk of harassment of the accused. People v Superior Court (Stanley) (1979) 24 C3d 622, 626, 156 CR 626.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.36 2. Pretrial Standards of Review and Reversibility

The test used by the reviewing court is the same as that used by the trial court. Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 383, 66 CR 724. That standard is set out in §15.4. The appellate court must make an independent evaluation of the defendant's claim for change of venue, to determine whether the evidence establishes a reasonable likelihood that a fair trial cannot be obtained. Williams v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 584, 194 CR 492; Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 937, 187 CR 455; Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 66 CR 724. When the issue is raised before trial, any doubt about the need to move the case to another county should be resolved in favor of a venue change. Martinez v Superior Court (1981) 29 C3d 574, 174 CR 701.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Review of Trial Court Ruling on Appeal

§15.37 1. Actions Necessary to Preserve Issue on Appeal

A motion for change of venue cannot be raised for the first time on appeal; the motion must have been made in the trial court. People v Hillery (1974) 10 C3d 897, 900, 112 CR 524. It is not necessary, however, to seek pretrial review of denial of the motion in order to preserve the issue for appeal (People v Tidwell (1970) 3 C3d 62, 68, 89 CR 44), although seeking such review is advisable because of the difficulty of obtaining a reversal on appeal.

When a motion for change of venue is made before trial and denied, it should be renewed after voir dire to avoid any possibility of waiver on appeal. See discussion in §15.25. Counsel should also either exhaust all peremptory challenges or explain why they were not exhausted. See §15.26. Finally, counsel should consider asking for additional peremptory challenges. See §15.27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.38 2. Showing Required for Reversal on Appeal

A defendant who appeals the denial of a change of venue motion after trial must show both error and prejudice. To show error, the defendant must establish that at the time of the motion, it was reasonably likely that he or she would not receive a fair trial. In determining whether the error was prejudicial, the question for the reviewing court is whether it is reasonably likely that the defendant in fact did not receive a fair trial in the court in which the case was tried. People v Leonard (2007) 40 C4th 1370, 1393, 58 CR3d 368; People v Pride (1992) 3 C4th 195, 224, 10 CR2d 636. See also People v Fauber (1992) 2 C4th 792, 819, 9 CR2d 24; People v Edwards (1991) 54 C3d 787, 807, 1 CR2d 696; People v Cooper (1991) 53 C3d 771, 805, 281 CR 90; People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 359, 279 CR 780; People v Balderas (1985) 41 C3d 144, 177, 222 CR 184. The reviewing court must uphold the trial court's findings of fact if they are supported by substantial evidence; it independently reviews the trial court's ultimate determination. People v Pride, supra.

> Ø Note: Although the California cases do not as a rule address this issue, the right to a fair trial is an aspect of due process under the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, and the right to an impartial jury is an aspect of the Sixth Amendment right to jury trial, also guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. Thus, if trial counsel has federalized the change of venue issue in the trial court, appellate defense counsel can argue that the reviewing court should apply the standard for federal constitutional error set out in Chapman v California (1967) 386 US 18, 24, 17 L Ed 2d 705, 87 S Ct 824. Furthermore, the failure to provide an impartial jury is arguably structural error, requiring reversal without a showing of prejudice. See Arizona v Fulminante (1991) 499 US 279, 309, 113 L Ed 2d 302, 111 S Ct 1246. For further discussion, see §44.36.

In answering these questions, the reviewing court must consider not only the "five factors" discussed in §§15.5-15.10, but also the jurors' statements during voir dire on the effects of pretrial publicity. People v Ainsworth (1988) 45 C3d 984, 248 CR 568; People v Harris (1981) 28 C3d 935, 949, 171 CR 679. The responses of the actual jurors during voir dire are available; thus, there is no need to resolve doubts about the potential effect of publicity on jurors in favor of a venue change. People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 363, 279 CR 780; People v Williams (1989) 48 C3d 1112, 1126, 259 CR 473.

The test for the need for a change of venue is different from the test for a challenge for cause based on exposure to pretrial publicity. All members of a jury may survive challenges for cause, even when they are aware of prejudicial information or have opinions about the case. That same level of prejudice, however, may require a change of venue. Nevertheless, as a practical matter, reviewing courts will be heavily influenced by juror statements of impartiality. See, e.g., People v Howard (1992) 1 C4th 1132, 1168, 5 CR2d 268; People v Cooper (1991) 53 C3d 771, 807, 281 CR 90; People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 361, 279 CR 780; People v Ainsworth (1988) 45 C3d 984, 1002, 248 CR 568. For an example of the rare case in which a reversal was obtained despite juror claims of impartiality, see People v Williams (1989) 48 C3d 1112, 259 CR 473.

> Ø Note: Because of the difficulty of obtaining reversal on appeal, trial counsel are well advised both to bring a motion to change venue before trial and to seek pretrial review through a petition for writ of mandate.

§15.40 VIII. CHECKLIST: ALTERNATIVES TO CHANGE OF VENUE

Counsel should observe the requirements of Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-120 on extrajudicial statements to the press, and should insist that others bound by Rule 5-120 follow it as well. It may be necessary to obtain the court's cooperation to discourage local law enforcement from releasing prejudicial material to the media. Law enforcement is usually the source of a substantial portion of the most prejudicial news reports. See §14.4 for discussion of the rule and its requirements.

- Continuance. Pen C §1050; People v Laursen (1972) 8 C3d 192, 104 CR 425. See also chap 20.
- Close preliminary hearing to public. Pen C §868; San Jose Mercury News v Municipal Court (1982) 30 C3d 498, 179 CR 772. See also §§14.16, 8.21-8.22.
- Counsel may consider waiving preliminary hearing (Pen C §§738, 860), and the prosecutor may consider proceeding by way of indictment (Cal Const art I, §14; Pen C §§737-740, 889, 949). Other hearings, such as a competency hearing or a venue hearing, could also be closed. Even if the entire hearing cannot be closed to the public, portions of the hearing dealing with the most prejudicial material may be closed. See Telegram-Tribune, Inc. v Municipal Court (1985) 166 CA3d 1072, 213 CR 7; Cromer v Superior Court (1980) 109 CA3d 728, 167 CR 671.
- Order forbidding all counsel, parties, and witnesses from discussing case with press (gag order). Younger v Smith (1973) 30 CA3d 138, 156, 106 CR 225. See also §§14.19A-14.26. Note that counsel may be more successful in eliminating or reducing extended media coverage, such as the televising or photographing of courtroom events. Further, many times damage to the defense case occurs early in the process when the defendant is arrested and statements to the press were highly prejudicial. A later gag order then prevents the defense from responding to those early statements, to continuing comments from law enforcement, and perhaps to statements from counsel for the victim's family.
- Order forbidding news media from reporting information about case (also called gag order). These are rarely successful. See Younger v Smith, supra; discussion in §14.22.
- Seal records. See §14.11.
- Waive jury.
- Jury questionnaires. See §15.24.
- Individualized, sequestered jury voir dire. See §14.31.
- Extra peremptory challenges of jurors. See §15.27.
- Use voir dire of jurors both to reject individual jurors who are prejudiced and to educate jurors concerning any misinformation or prejudice and their duty to be fair. People v Williams (1981) 29 C3d 392, 174 CR 317. See also §14.29.
- Agree in advance to import jury if court grants change of venue motion. See §15.31.
- In counties with more than one judicial district, agree to transfer case to a different district.
- When prejudicial publicity is focused in just one part of the county, agree to exclude from the jury pool those individuals with ZIP codes in that area.

§16.1 I. OVERVIEW

This chapter delineates the basic procedure for motions to suppress evidence on Fourth Amendment grounds in California state courts. For an outline of substantive Fourth Amendment jurisprudence, see California Judges Benchbook: Search and Seizure (3d ed CJER-CEB 2010). California search and seizure procedure is codified in Pen C §1538.5. A summary of the procedural stages through which a search and seizure motion may proceed is set out in People v Laiwa (1983) 34 C3d 711, 195 CR 503. All Pen C §1538.5 motions must be in writing, and must be accompanied by a supporting memorandum and a proof of service. Pen C §1538.5(a)(2). On form and format requirements for a supporting memorandum, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113. In People v Williams (1999) 20 C4th 119, 83 CR2d 275, the California Supreme Court set forth requirements for inclusion in the motion. See §16.9.

Section 1538.5 authorizes a defendant to move for suppression of any evidence, tangible or intangible, that is the product of an illegal search and seizure, or for return of property that has been illegally seized. Section 1538.5 is not available to challenge illegal confessions or identifications, unless they were the result of an illegal search and seizure. See People v Mattson (1990) 50 C3d 826, 268 CR 802. On motions to suppress illegally obtained confessions and admissions, see chap 23; on motions to suppress unduly suggestive identifications, see chap 22.

Misdemeanor cases. At arraignment, in misdemeanor cases, defense counsel may set a date for a Pen C §1538.5 motion. It must be heard before trial (Pen C §1538.5(g)), unless there was no opportunity to make the motion before trial or the defendant was unaware of the grounds for the motion (Pen C §1538.5(h)). See the sample motions and supplemental memorandums in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§16.1-16.4 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). If the motion is granted or denied, the losing party may appeal to the appellate division of the superior court. Pen C §1538.5(j). The notice of appeal must be filed within 30 calendar days after the judge's statement that the motion is granted or denied or that the appeal is void. Cal Rules of Ct 8.853(a). Review beyond the superior court appellate division is discretionary. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1000-8.1018. An alternative method of review available to defense counsel if the motion is denied is to appeal from a resulting conviction, whether by trial or by a plea of guilty or no contest. Pen C §1538.5(m); People v Callahan (1997) 54 CA4th 1419, 63 CR2d 684. Note that the right to appeal the denial of a suppression motion may be waived as part of a plea agreement. People v Berkowitz (1995) 34 CA4th 671, 40 CR2d 150.

Felony cases. In felony cases, defense counsel may challenge an illegal search and seizure at the preliminary examination if the prosecution seeks to introduce illegally seized evidence. If the magistrate denies the motion to suppress evidence in whole or in part, the defense is entitled to have the motion heard again at a "special hearing" in felony court.

> Ø Note: In counties in which the superior court is divided into departments, a department of the superior court is designated to try infractions and misdemeanors and to conduct preliminary examinations in felony cases. When a superior court judge conducts a preliminary examination, he or she sits as a magistrate. Throughout this chapter, the term "misdemeanor court" will be used to refer to a superior court department sitting to try misdemeanors or to conduct preliminary examinations in felonies, i.e., exercising the jurisdiction formerly conferred on the municipal court; the term "felony court" will be used to refer to the superior court when it presides over a felony prosecution following an indictment or a holding order at a preliminary examination.

At the special hearing, the felony court makes an independent determination of the legal issues posed, although the court is bound by any factual findings about the evidence or property made by the magistrate, unless those findings are affected by new evidence presented at the special hearing. Pen C §1538.5(i). This special hearing is not a de novo hearing, and the defense is limited to the transcript of the preliminary examination and to evidence that reasonably could not have been presented to the magistrate. Pen C §1538.5(i). See People v Drews (1989) 208 CA3d 1317, 256 CR 846. The prosecution, too, may present only evidence that could not reasonably have been presented at the preliminary examination, except that, unlike the defense, the prosecution may recall witnesses who testified at the preliminary examination. Pen C §1538.5(i). See People v Hansel (1992) 1 C4th 1211, 4 CR2d 888.

In addition to a special hearing in the felony court under §1538.5(i), defense counsel may seek review of an adverse ruling by the magistrate as part of a Pen C §995 motion. Further pretrial review is by writ of mandate or prohibition. Pen C §1538.5(i). Alternatively, defense counsel may challenge the denial of a suppression motion on appeal following a conviction by plea or by judge or jury. Pen C §1538.5(m).

> Ø Note: A defendant who pleads guilty after the magistrate denies a motion to suppress evidence before the preliminary hearing cannot seek appellate review of the denial of the suppression motion unless the motion was renewed in the superior court when the court was not acting as a magistrate. People v Richardson (2007) 156 CA4th 574, 67 CR3d 552; People v Garrido (2005) 127 CA4th 359, 25 CR3d 494.

If the defense made no Pen C §1538.5 motion at the preliminary examination, it is entitled to fully litigate the validity of the search and seizure, including any relevant witnesses and evidence. Pen C §1538.5(i). Counsel should definitely not bring a search and seizure motion at the preliminary examination if discovery and investigation are not yet complete enough to establish all possible grounds for the motion. Strategic considerations in deciding whether to make a suppression motion at the preliminary examination are discussed in §16.7.

If the magistrate dismisses a case at the preliminary examination because insufficient evidence remained (after the suppression of illegally obtained evidence) to support a holding order, the prosecutor may (1) accept the discharge, refile the charge, and seek another preliminary examination; (2) seek an indictment; or (3) move within 15 calendar days to reinstate the complaint under Pen C §871.5. If the §871.5 motion is decided against the prosecutor, he or she may not refile. If it is decided in the prosecutor's favor, the magistrate must reinstate the complaint and issue a commitment (also called a holding or bindover) order. A prosecutor may also bring a §871.5 motion when the §1538.5 motion was granted, but only a portion of the complaint was dismissed.

If, in a felony case, the defendant's §1538.5 motion is granted twice, the prosecution may not file a new complaint or seek an indictment to relitigate the suppression issue unless the prosecution discovers new evidence that was not reasonably discoverable at the time of the second motion to suppress. Pen C §1538.5(p). If the case is again dismissed because the remaining evidence was insufficient, there can be no further prosecution for the same offense, except in the circumstances detailed in Pen C §1387. However, the prosecution may bring a Pen C §871.5 motion to reinstate the complaint if there is a second dismissal after a second successful suppression motion. See People v Toney (2004) 32 C4th 228, 233, 8 CR3d 577. See also §13.32.

If a case is dismissed after a §1538.5 hearing, the prosecutor may appeal. Pen C §1238(a)(7). If the defendant's motion is granted in the felony court, but the charge is not dismissed, the prosecution may seek pretrial review by writ of mandate or prohibition. This must be preceded by a notice of intention to file the petition. Pen C §1538.5(o).

Evidentiary hearing. At any hearing under §1538.5, whether in misdemeanor or felony court, the Evidence Code applies. Jauregi v Superior Court (1999) 72 CA4th 931, 939, 85 CR2d 553; People v Sahagun (1979) 89 CA3d 1, 17, 152 CR 233. Note, however, that testimony that would be hearsay, if it were offered for the truth of the matter asserted, may well be admissible on the issue of probable cause, if it is offered only to assess whether the information apparent to the police officer was sufficient to justify the intrusion. People v Magana (1979) 95 CA3d 453, 462, 157 CR 173. In such situations, defense counsel may object to the evidence being admitted for any other purpose.

The moving party has the burden of proof and the burden of going forward. Thus, if there was no warrant, the defense must initially prove (commonly done by stipulation) that the police acted without a warrant. Once the defendant has done so, the burden shifts to the prosecution to justify the intrusion. People v Williams (1999) 20 C4th 119, 83 CR2d 275; People v Superior Court (Keithley) (1975) 13 C3d 406, 118 CR 617. If asked to do so by the prosecutor or the court, the defendant must also show that he or she had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the place or object searched. In re Lance W. (1985) 37 C3d 873, 210 CR 631.

When the police acted under the authority of a warrant, defense counsel must produce all necessary evidence and testimony to support the motion. When counsel's legal argument is based in part on whether the warrant was supported by probable cause, defense counsel must move a certified copy of the warrant, or the affidavit or return, into evidence, if the prosecution has not done so.

After both sides have presented all witnesses and evidence, counsel may argue the motion. The judge may announce a decision immediately, take it under submission, or request further research from the attorneys before making a decision. Counsel may also request an opportunity to further research and brief issues raised by the evidence.

Ø Warning: Counsel should consult local rules before relying on this chart. Many counties have specific time requirements not otherwise required by the Penal Code.

Action	Deadline in Misdemeanor Cases	Deadline in Felony Cases
Make and hear Pen C §1538.5 motion.	Before trial (Pen C §1538.5(g)), unless no opportunity earlier, or defendant unaware of grounds for motion (Pen C §1538.5(h)). Motion may be made and heard before trial in misdemeanor case only if made in writing and accompanied by supporting memorandum and proof of service. Pen C §1538.5(a)(2).	Misdemeanor court: Motion may be made at preliminary examination only if defendant has personally served prosecution with written motion, accompanied by supporting memorandum, at least 5 court days before preliminary examination. Pen C §1538.5(f)(2). Any written response by prosecution about §1538.5 hearing at preliminary examination must be filed with court and personally served on defense counsel at least 2 court days before hearing. Pen C §1538.5(f)(3). Felony court: Before trial (Pen C §1538.5(i)), unless no opportunity earlier or defendant unaware of grounds for motion (Pen C §1538.5(h)). Defendant must give written notice to prosecution at least 10 court days before hearing. Any written response by prosecution must be filed with court and served on defense at least 2 court days before hearing. Pen C §1538.5(i).
Review denial of Pen C §1538.5 motion before trial.	Writ available only if motion was filed or heard within 45 calendar days after arraignment unless defendant was unaware of issue or had no opportunity to raise it. Pen C §1510. See CCP §1005.5 (motion is made when it is filed). But see Pen C §1538.5(j). Review available by appeal to superior court appellate division. Pen C §1538.5(j). Notice of appeal must be filed within 30 calendar days after judge's statement that motion was denied. Cal Rules of Ct 8.853(a).	Writ available only if motion was filed or heard within 60 calendar days after arraignment. Pen C §1510. Review of Pen C §1538.5 motion made at preliminary examination: By Pen C §995 motion in felony court before trial. Section 1538.5 special hearing before trial is also available. Pen C §1538.5(i). Review of Pen C §995 motion: Writ of prohibition must be filed in appellate court within 15 calendar days after motion was denied. Pen C §999a.
Prosecutor refiles felony case after magistrate dismisses it at preliminary examination.		No time limits other than constitutional speedy trial and due process.
Prosecutor files		Must be filed within 15 calendar days

motion to reinstate complaint (Pen C §871.5).		after magistrate's commitment or dismissal order. Pen C §871.5.
Review grant of Pen C §1538.5 motion before trial.	Review available by appeal to superior court appellate division. Pen C §1538.5(j). Notice of appeal must be filed within 30 calendar days after judge's statement that motion was granted. Cal Rules of Ct 8.853(a).	Motion granted at preliminary examination, and defendant not held to answer: Prosecutor can file new complaint, seek grand jury indictment, or move to reinstate complaint under Pen C §871.5. Pen C §1538.5(j). Motion granted at preliminary examination, but defendant held to answer: Search and seizure ruling binding unless prosecution requests §1538.5 hearing in felony court within 15 calendar days after preliminary examination. Pen C §1538.5(j). Motion granted at hearing in felony court, and case is not dismissed: Petition for writ of mandate or prohibition filed within 30 calendar days after defendant's motion granted. Pen C §1538.5(o). If felony court §1538.5 hearing is held less than 30 calendar days before trial, prosecutor must file notice of intention to file petition for writ in felony court on or before trial date or within 10 calendar days after §1538.5 hearing, whichever occurs last. Pen C §1538.5(o). An alternative to filing petition for writ if prosecution has additional evidence not presented at hearing is to show good cause at trial why evidence was not presented at hearing and why ruling at hearing should not be binding. Pen C §1538.5(j).

III. MAKING THE MOTION

§16.3 A. What May and May Not Be Suppressed

As Pen C §1538.5 states, the defense may move for return of property or for suppression of any tangible or intangible evidence obtained as a result of an unlawful search and seizure.

A §1538.5 motion is generally unavailable to suppress statements obtained in violation of US Const amends V and VI or Miranda v Arizona (1966) 384 US 436, 16 L Ed 2d 694, 86 S Ct 1602, nor is it available to litigate the suggestiveness of identification procedures such as lineups or showups (People v Galan (1985) 163 CA3d 786, 796, 209 CR 837), because these do not involve searches or seizures. See People v Massey (1976) 59 CA3d 777, 781, 130 CR 581. Such issues may arise in §1538.5 motions, however, when they are inextricably bound up with Fourth Amendment determinations. For example, the question of whether a confession was obtained in violation of the U.S. Constitution, e.g., a claim that it was involuntary under the Fifth Amendment, may be decided by the court in a §1538.5 hearing to rule on the admissibility of physical evidence that was discovered as a result of the confession. However, a §1538.5 motion may not be used to suppress the confession itself. People v Mattson (1990) 50 C3d 826, 851, 268 CR 802. See §§23.7-23.8; Evid C §402(b). Thus, because a "technical," noncoercive violation of Miranda is not considered an actual infringement of constitutional rights (Oregon v Elstad (1985) 470 US 298, 84 L Ed 2d 222, 105 S Ct 1285), evidence seized as a result of such a violation is not subject to suppression (U.S. v Patane (2004) 542 US 630, 633, 159 L Ed 2d 667, 673, 124 S Ct 2620; People v Whitfield (1996) 46 CA4th 947, 54 CR2d 370). The tangible fruits of a confession coerced in violation of the Fifth Amendment, however, are subject to suppression. People v Vasila (1995) 38 CA4th 865, 45 CR2d 355.

Observations that result from a Fourth Amendment violation are subject to suppression under §1538.5 (People v Massey (1976) 59 CA3d 777, 130 CR 581), as are statements or testimony obtained as the result of an unlawful detention, arrest, or search (People v Superior Court (Sosa) (1982) 31 C3d 883, 185 CR 113; People v Johnson (1969) 70 C2d 469, 74 CR 889). The mere fact that a defendant was unlawfully arrested, however, does not necessarily mean that any statement that is obtained while he or she is unlawfully in custody is inadmissible. The court will consider attenuation of the taint, the extent to which the illegality was connected to obtaining the statement. People v Gonzalez (1998) 64 CA4th 432, 443, 75 CR2d 272. Although a suppression motion under §1538.5 may not be used to challenge the suggestiveness of an identification, it may seek the suppression of an identification that is the product of an illegal search and seizure. People v Teresinski (1982) 30 C3d 822, 180 CR 617.

While the body or identity of a defendant in a criminal proceeding is never itself suppressible as the fruit of an unlawful arrest or search (INS v Lopez-Mendoza (1984) 468 US 1032, 1039, 82 L Ed 2d 778, 786, 104 S Ct 3479), evidence obtained from a defendant, such as fingerprints, as the result of an unlawful search or arrest for an investigative purpose is subject to exclusion. See U.S. v Garcia-Beltran (9th Cir 2004) 389 F3d 864, 866.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.4 B. Other Uses of Suppressed Evidence

Evidence that has been previously suppressed cannot be used to revoke probation. People v Zimmerman (1979) 100 CA3d 673, 161 CR 188. See Schlick v Superior Court (1992) 4 C4th 310, 314, 14 CR2d 406. However, illegally obtained evidence that has not been suppressed may be considered when the court decides whether to revoke probation, unless the illegality is egregious. Compare People v Washington (1987) 192 CA3d 1120, 236 CR 840 (police conduct affronted sense of justice), with People v Harrison (1988) 199 CA3d 803, 245 CR 204 (conduct not egregious). Note that the exclusionary rule does not apply to parole revocation hearings. Pennsylvania Bd. of Probation & Parole v Scott (1998) 524 US 357, 141 L Ed 2d 344, 118 S Ct 2014.

Illegally seized evidence previously suppressed under Pen C §1538.5 may be used to impeach the defendant. People v Moore (1988) 201 CA3d 877, 247 CR 353. It may not be used, however, to impeach a defense witness. James v Illinois (1990) 493 US 307, 107 L Ed 2d 676, 110 S Ct 648.

Evidence suppressed under §1538.5 may also be considered by the court at sentencing. People v Brewster (1986) 184 CA3d 921, 229 CR 352.

Rulings on §1538.5 motions may be relitigated when a case is dismissed and refiled, unless the defense has received two favorable rulings under Pen C §1538.5(p). Pen C §1538.5(j). Evidence previously suppressed may be used by the prosecution in a new and different case. People v Coe (1991) 228 CA3d 526, 279 CR 362. See also People v Meredith (1992) 11 CA4th 1548, 15 CR2d 285 (federal suppression not binding on state court); People v Torres (1992) 6 CA4th 1324, 1329, 8 CR2d 332 (proper to relitigate §1538.5 ruling when case refiled in another county).

C. When to Make Motion

§16.5 1. General Practice for Setting Pen C §1538.5 Hearing

In some counties, counsel commonly sets a date for hearing on a Pen C §1538.5 motion at arraignment in both misdemeanor and felony courts. Although the motion may be reserved at arraignment, it may be better practice to set the motion for a specific future date if the practitioner is uncertain at arraignment whether a motion should be made. This practice encourages the practitioner to review the case promptly and carefully to see whether grounds exist for a motion. If not, it is usually a simple matter to withdraw the motion that was set.

Ø Note: In addition to the rules discussed in §§16.6-16.7, counsel should consult local court rules for any special time requirements. Notice requirements are discussed in §16.9.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.6 2. When to Hold §1538.5 Hearing in Misdemeanor Cases

In misdemeanor cases, the Pen C §1538.5 motion must be made and heard before trial. Pen C §1538.5(g). In addition, if pretrial writ review of the court's ruling is sought, either the motion must have been filed or the hearing must have been held within 45 calendar days after arraignment. Pen C §1510; CCP §1005.5. The arraignment is not complete until a plea is entered. Pen C §§988, 1024.

Ø Note: Penal Code §1538.5(j) permits filing a direct appeal in misdemeanor cases as long as the Rules of Court are complied with. The tension between Pen C §1538.5(j) and Pen C §1510 has not been authoritatively resolved. Some prosecutors have argued that §1510 should apply to appeals as well as writs, despite §1538.5(j).

The defense is entitled to a continuance of up to 30 calendar days if time is needed to prepare for a §1538.5 hearing. Pen C §1538.5(l).

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.7 3. When to Hold §1538.5 Hearing in Felony Cases

Two procedures. In felony cases, the defense is entitled to one of the following (Pen C §1538.5(i)):

- A fully litigated search and seizure hearing at the preliminary examination, followed by a limited special hearing after the defendant is held to answer; or
- A single fully litigated search and seizure hearing, held in the felony court.

Search and seizure motion first made at preliminary examination. If the defense moves to suppress evidence at the preliminary examination, it is limited to challenging evidence that the prosecution seeks to introduce at that hearing. Pen C §1538.5(f)(1). The motion must be in writing and it must be filed with the court and served on the prosecution at least 5 court days before the hearing. If the defense was unaware of the evidence or the grounds for suppression before the preliminary examination, the court may grant a continuance of at least 5 court days for the purpose of filing and serving the motion. Pen C §1538.5(f)(2). Any written response by the prosecution must be filed with the court and served on the defendant or defense counsel at least 2 court days before the hearing. Pen C §1538.5(f)(3).

After a search and seizure hearing is held at the preliminary examination, the defense is entitled to another hearing in the felony court, but, unless all parties agree otherwise, the evidence on which it is decided is circumscribed. The defense is limited to the transcript of the testimony at the preliminary examination, and to additional evidence that could not reasonably have been presented there. See People v Drews (1989) 208 CA3d 1317, 256 CR 846. The prosecution is subject to the same evidentiary limitations as the defense, except that it may recall any witnesses who testified at the preliminary examination. Pen C §1538.5(i). See People v Hansel (1992) 1 C4th 1211, 4 CR2d 888 (district attorney can recall witnesses even though defendant presents no new evidence). If the prosecution objects to defense evidence on the ground that it could reasonably have been presented at the preliminary examination, the defendant is entitled to have the issue determined at an in camera hearing, the purpose of which is to protect the attorney-client privilege and thus preclude improper prosecutorial discovery. Pen C §1538.5(i). See People v Drews (1989) 208 CA3d 1317, 1324, 256 CR 846.

In ruling on a renewal of a suppression motion made at the preliminary examination, the felony court independently decides the legal issues before it, but it is bound by any factual findings the magistrate has made concerning evidence or property. Pen C §1538.5(i); People v Memro (1995) 11 C4th 786, 846, 47 CR2d 219 (court defers to factual findings but independently determines whether search violated Fourth Amendment); People v Trujillo (1990) 217 CA3d 1219, 1224, 266 CR 473 (to extent testimony at motion is uncontradicted, felony court faces pure questions of law); Anderson v Superior Court (1988) 206 CA3d 533, 544, 253 CR 651 (magistrate's ruling that police officer who testified was more credible than defendant resolved question of consent to search); People v Ramsey (1988) 203 CA3d 671, 250 CR 309 (in §1538.5(i) hearing on transcript, felony court will draw all inferences in support of magistrate's factual findings if supported by substantial evidence). The felony court judge is not bound by the magistrate's factual findings, however, if it finds that the evidence presented at the hearing in the felony court would have "affected" the magistrate's finding. The test, which is an objective one, calls only for a probable material influence in or modification of the prior finding, and the court can make such a determination only after hearing the new evidence. People v Bishop (1993) 14 CA4th 203, 212, 17 CR2d 657.

If the defense prefers to raise search and seizure issues for the first time in the felony court, he or she should exercise some care in questioning witnesses about search issues at the preliminary examination. In some situations, a court can, on the basis of the evidence presented, deem a "de facto" or "constructive" suppression motion to have been brought at the preliminary examination, even when defense counsel intends to reserve the motion. See Anderson v Superior Court (1988) 206 CA3d 533, 253 CR 651 (defendant testified at preliminary examination solely on issue of consent, and magistrate ruled on issue).

Search and seizure motion first made in felony court. If the defense made no Pen C §1538.5 motion at the preliminary examination, it is entitled to litigate the validity of a search and seizure at a hearing in the felony court. Pen C §1538.5(i). At this hearing, the defense may challenge any evidence in the case, in contrast to a motion made at a preliminary examination, which can challenge only the evidence the prosecution chooses to present. Pen C §1538.5(f).

Timing of special hearing. The §1538.5 motion, whether a "first" or "second" search and seizure motion, must be made and heard before trial, and at least 10 court days after notice to the prosecution, unless the prosecution is willing to waive this requirement. Pen C §1538.5(i). Any written response by the prosecution must be filed with the court and served on the defense at least 2 court days before the hearing. Pen C §1538.5(i). In addition, if writ review of the ruling is sought, either the motion must have been filed, or the hearing held, within 60 calendar days after arraignment. Pen C §1510. Again, note that arraignment is not complete until a plea is entered.

Tactics. The defense should weigh the advantages and disadvantages of making a suppression motion at the preliminary examination. There are several advantages to making the §1538.5 motion before a holding order issues. Although discovery is disallowed as a legitimate purpose of the preliminary examination (Pen C §866(b)), a suppression motion at the preliminary examination may nonetheless expand the scope of an otherwise streamlined hearing and provide incidental discovery benefits. For one thing, it appears that, for purposes of a suppression motion, the prosecution cannot rely on hearsay statements under Pen C §872(b), which permits a holding order to be based on police hearsay statements. See discussion in §8.30. Second, a suppression motion is not limited by Pen C §866, which restricts the defense at preliminary examination to presenting only evidence that goes to an affirmative defense, negates an element of the offense charged, or impeaches prosecution evidence and requires an offer of proof at the prosecutor's demand. See discussion in §8.13. Third, given the other demands placed on it at the preliminary examination, the prosecution is often less prepared to address suppression issues or to prepare its witnesses thoroughly on those issues. Finally, if a prosecution witness important to the search issue is not called to testify at the preliminary examination, and the §1538.5 hearing is thus held without his or her testimony, the prosecutor cannot call the witness in felony court without a showing that he or she could not reasonably have been presented at the preliminary examination. Pen C §1538.5(i).

There are some corresponding disadvantages, but even they may be offset to a certain extent. Although only evidence on which the prosecution seeks to rely can be challenged at the preliminary examination (Pen C §1538.5(f)), that fact alone may permit a full evidentiary hearing in the felony court, because evidence relating to the validity of a search and seizure concerning such evidence could not reasonably have been presented at the preliminary examination. If the relevant facts are fully presented at the preliminary examination, and there are no factual findings about credibility to hamper the felony court in giving a full consideration to the merits of the motion, the defense should not be significantly handicapped in arguing the motion on the basis of the transcript from the preliminary examination.

There are two situations in which a suppression motion at the preliminary examination is probably ill-advised. The first is when there is inadequate time for discovery or investigation or preparation before the preliminary examination. Although this may enable the presentation of new evidence at a subsequent Pen C §1538.5(i) hearing in the felony court, the practitioner runs the risk of the court disallowing such evidence, if the court finds that it could reasonably have been presented at the earlier hearing. People v Bennett (1998) 68 CA4th 396, 80 CR2d 323 (defense cannot present theories of suppression in felony court that were noticed but abandoned at preliminary examination); People v Drews (1989) 208 CA3d 1317, 1324, 256 CR 846 (upholding finding that witnesses could have been presented at preliminary examination). The second is when the motion depends on a judicial assessment of credibility, because an adverse factual finding by the magistrate will bind the felony court. In this situation, the practitioner will need to carefully consider whether the magistrate or the felony court is likely to provide the more hospitable forum.

§16.8 4. Motion at Trial or Renewal of Motion

A court has no jurisdiction to reconsider a pretrial suppression motion that has been made, argued, and decided on its merits, even if the court decides that its earlier ruling was wrong. Madril v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 73, 123 CR 465; People v Sotelo (1996) 47 CA4th 264, 54 CR2d 643. This is so even when there is newly discovered evidence or a change in the law. People v Dubose (1971) 17 CA3d 43, 47, 94 CR 376. The only remedy here is to make a motion at trial under Pen C §1538.5(h).

A defendant has the right to make a Pen C §1538.5 motion "during the course of trial" if no opportunity for the motion existed before trial, or if the defense was previously unaware of the grounds for the motion. Pen C §1538.5(h); People v Minjares (1979) 24 C3d 410, 153 CR 224 (motion renewed at trial because testimony on which earlier §1538.5 ruling was based, that evidence was in plain view, was superseded by new testimony that evidence, although in plain view, was in opaque zipped tote bag). The courts have ruled, however, that no motion may be brought under this exception if the defense did not but should have known of the grounds of the motion before trial. People v Martinez (1975) 14 C3d 533, 121 CR 611 (counsel could have learned grounds "by interviewing his client"). A trial court exceeds its jurisdiction if it grants such a motion when neither exception exists. People v Takencareof (1981) 119 CA3d 492, 496, 174 CR 112, disapproved on other grounds in People v Towne (2008) 44 C4th 63, 85, 78 CR3d 530.

§16.9 D. Notice; Form of Motion; Grounds for Motion

Notice. Ten court days' written notice must be served on the prosecutor before a Pen C §1538.5 special hearing is held. Pen C §1538.5(i). An exception applies to motions brought at the preliminary examination: for those motions, the notice requirement is 5 court days. Pen C §1538.5(f)(2). Although the Penal Code requires written notice accompanied by a supporting memorandum in misdemeanor cases, it does not specify how much notice is required; thus, papers must be filed 10 court days before the hearing (Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(a)).

Preparing the moving papers. The statute requires that the motion be made in writing, accompanied by a supporting memorandum and proof of service. The memorandum must specify in detail the items of property or evidence sought to be suppressed or returned, including intangible items such as police observations. The memorandum must also set forth the factual basis and legal authorities that demonstrate why the motion should be granted. Pen C §1538.5(a)(2). When the basis of a suppression motion is a warrantless search and seizure, the defense adequately sets forth the requisite factual basis and legal authorities in the first instance by simply asserting the absence of a warrant and making a prima facie showing to support that assertion. People v Williams (1999) 20 C4th 119, 130, 83 CR2d 275. Because the prosecution has the burden of proving that a warrantless search and seizure was reasonable in the circumstances, the defense need not guess at what justifications the prosecution will offer. Only after the prosecution has offered its justifications, either in a written response before the hearing or at the time of the hearing, does the defense need to answer with its arguments why the justification is inadequate. People v Williams, supra.

When the defense challenge is to some specific aspect of the search and seizure other than the lack of the warrant, however, the defense must specify the nature of that challenge at the outset so that the party opposing the motion has fair notice of the moving party's argument and the opportunity to present responsive evidence. 20 C4th at 135. If the court decides that the prosecution has not had adequate notice of a defense challenge, the court should grant a continuance to allow the prosecution to offer additional evidence. 20 C4th at 134.

Although the prosecution bears the burden of justifying a warrantless intrusion, the burden falls on the defense to show that a search and seizure conducted pursuant to a warrant is invalid. In this situation, the defense must specify in its moving papers the factual basis and legal authorities for its challenge. Defense counsel must move the warrant, affidavit, and return into evidence at the hearing before it becomes part of the record. Appellate attorneys have sometimes been confronted with a situation in which, although a search warrant existed, it was not offered or received in evidence at the hearing on the §1538.5 motion.

Form of motion. The form and format of motion papers in criminal cases are governed by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. For discussion, see §18.5. Local court rules may impose additional requirements for the form of the motion. The rules may vary in their specificity and in local interpretation of what they require; thus, the practitioner in an unfamiliar jurisdiction may wish to consult a local practitioner in the public defender's office or in private practice on how to interpret a given local rule. Although sanctions may be imposed for failure to comply with local rules, the sanctions may not include depriving the defendant of the opportunity to fully litigate his or her search and seizure claim because counsel failed to meet local pleading requirements. People v Smith (2002) 95 CA4th 283, 301, 115 CR2d 483.

> Ø Note: Although Cal Rules of Ct 3.20 preempts local rules on motion practice in civil matters, criminal proceedings are explicitly excluded from the preemption. Cal Rules of Ct 3.20(b)(2).

Grounds for motion. The defendant is entitled to one full opportunity to litigate the legality of a search and seizure in the trial court. See Lorenzana v Superior Court (1973) 9 C3d 626, 640, 108 CR 585. Consequently, the motion to suppress should specify the facts on which it is based and include every legal theory on which it relies. People v Brooks (1980) 26 C3d 471, 483, 162 CR 177.

§16.10 E. Effect of Timing of Motion on Possibility of Appellate Review

Denial of a Pen C §1538.5 motion is reviewable by pretrial writ only if the motion was "made" within 45 calendar days after arraignment in a misdemeanor case or within 60 calendar days after arraignment on the information or indictment in a felony case. Pen C §1510. Note that arraignment is not complete until a plea is entered (Pen C §§988, 1024) and that a motion is "made" when the moving papers are filed (CCP §1005.5). "Reserving" or "noticing" the motion does not suffice. Smith v Superior Court (1978) 76 CA3d 731, 143 CR 109.

Ø Note: Penal Code §1538.5(j) permits filing of a direct interlocutory appeal in misdemeanor cases as long as the Rules of Court are observed. The tension between Pen C §1538.5(j) and Pen C §1510 has not been authoritatively resolved. Section 1510 limits "review" to suppression motions filed within 45 days after arraignment. Some prosecutors have argued that §1510 should apply to appeals as well as writs, despite §1538.5(j). The better view seems to be that §1538.5(j), as the more recent and specific enactment, controls. Section 1510 appears in the chapter of the Penal Code pertaining specifically to writs.

IV. REASONABLE EXPECTATION OF PRIVACY (STANDING)

§16.11 A. Reasonable Expectation of Privacy as Prerequisite to Fourth Amendment Claim

To assert a Fourth Amendment claim, the defendant must have a reasonable expectation of privacy in the place searched or the items seized. Many state and federal courts use the term "standing" to describe this concept. However, the California Supreme Court has indicated that "mention of 'standing' should be avoided when analyzing a Fourth Amendment claim," noting that the U.S. Supreme Court "has largely abandoned the use of the word" to describe a "reasonable expectation of privacy." People v Ayala (2000) 23 C4th 225, 254 n3, 96 CR2d 682. Cases that analyze reasonable expectation of privacy using the term "standing" remain good law, however.

The rule is most often stated as follows: Did the challenged search and seizure violate the rights of the defendant who seeks to exclude evidence obtained during it (Rakas v Illinois (1978) 439 US 128, 138, 58 L Ed 2d 387, 398, 99 S Ct 421), and did the police violate any legitimate expectation of privacy or security held by the defendant (Minnesota v Olson (1990) 495 US 91, 109 L Ed 2d 85, 110 S Ct 1684; Rawlings v Kentucky (1980) 448 US 98, 106, 65 L Ed 2d 633, 642, 100 S Ct 2556)? A subjectively held expectation of privacy in the place searched or the thing seized is not enough; it must also be a "legitimate" expectation, one that "society is prepared to consider reasonable." U.S. v Jacobsen (1984) 466 US 109, 113, 80 L Ed 2d 85, 94, 104 S Ct 1652.

The defendant has the burden of establishing a reasonable expectation of privacy in the premises searched or the items seized. Rawlings v Kentucky (1980) 448 US 98, 104, 65 L Ed 2d 633, 642, 100 S Ct 2556. The defense must include a standing allegation in its moving papers. The allegation may be simple:

The complained-of search and seizure violates defendant's Fourth Amendment rights under the United States Constitution.

When a defendant's moving papers do not include a reasonable expectation of privacy allegation, the prosecutor may at the first opportunity move to drop the motion from the calendar for want of jurisdiction. The defense response to a prosecutor's challenge to standing should be proof of the reasonable expectation of privacy allegations in the moving papers. See People v Ruster (1974) 40 CA3d 865, 874, 115 CR 572, disapproved on other grounds in In re Hoddinott (1996) 12 C4th 992, 1005, 50 CR2d 706.

When a defendant does allege a reasonable expectation of privacy, the prosecutor may challenge the claim at the beginning of the suppression hearing. See Rakas v Illinois (1978) 439 US 128, 131 n1, 58 L Ed 2d 387, 393 n1, 99 S Ct 421. Otherwise, the issue may be waived. See Steagald v U.S. (1981) 451 US 204, 208, 68 L Ed 2d 38, 43, 101 S Ct 1642; Rodriguez v Superior Court (1988) 199 CA3d 1453, 245 CR 617. But see People v Thompson (1990) 221 CA3d 923, 270 CR 863 (because reasonable expectation of privacy is part of defendant's affirmative burden, it cannot be waived). The court can also raise the issue at the hearing. People v Dasilva (1989) 207 CA3d 43, 47, 254 CR 563.

Although the court has the discretion to require the defense to prove the existence of a reasonable expectation of privacy before proceeding, the U.S. Supreme Court in Rakas v Illinois (1978) 439 US 128, 131, 58 L Ed 2d 387, 398, 99 S Ct 421, indicated that the issue of reasonable expectation of privacy should be "subsumed under substantive Fourth Amendment doctrine" and not be considered as distinct from the merits of a defendant's Fourth Amendment claims. Thus, it will generally be best to determine reasonable expectation of privacy by the usual method: "The prosecution begins and the defense concludes." Only in an appropriate case, as when only a third party's rights appear to have been implicated and the presentation of the prosecution's evidence would be overly time-consuming, might it be more expeditious to begin by examining the defendant's interest in or relationship to the place searched. People v Contreras (1989) 210 CA3d 450, 258 CR 361.

§16.13 C. List: California and U.S. Supreme Court Cases on Reasonable Expectation of Privacy (Standing)

The following cases are a starting point for research on reasonable expectation of privacy, which is very dependent on the nuances of the facts in each case.

California cases

People v Parson (2008) 44 C4th 332, 346, 79 CR3d 269 (no reasonable expectation of privacy in abandoned hotel room; intent to abandon is determined by objective factors, not defendant's subjective intent).

In re Jaime P. (2006) 40 C4th 128, 51 CR3d 430 (officer must have prior knowledge that minor is subject to probationary search condition to justify otherwise unlawful search).

People v Carter (2005) 36 C4th 1114, 32 CR3d 759 (driver of stolen vehicle lacked legitimate expectation of privacy to contest search of that vehicle).

People v Valdez (2004) 32 C4th 73, 121, 8 CR3d 271 (passenger had no reasonable expectation of privacy in area under driver's side seat and could not challenge seizure of gun found there).

People v Sanders (2003) 31 C4th 318, 2 CR3d 630 (parolee has reasonable expectation of privacy in residence; search by police who are unaware that individual is on parole cannot be justified by subsequent discovery of parole status). See also People v Bowers (2004) 117 CA4th 1261, 1264, 13 CR3d 15 (probation search condition did not justify warrantless search when police officer who conducted search was unaware of condition). But see People v Middleton (2005) 131 CA4th 732, 31 CR3d 813 (search lawful when police had determined motel room was registered to active parolee; specific knowledge of search condition not required); People v Hill (2004) 118 CA4th 1344, 13 CR3d 719 (search lawful when police had mistaken belief that defendant was on parole when he was really on probation).

People v Maury (2003) 30 C4th 342, 133 CR2d 561 (no reasonable expectation of privacy in content of phone calls defendant made to private organization that ran "secret witness program" designed to receive information about crimes from anonymous callers).

People v Camacho (2000) 23 C4th 824, 98 CR2d 232 (police officers who walked into side yard of defendant's house and looked into his open window violated his reasonable expectation of privacy). Compare Camacho with People v Shaw (2002) 97 CA4th 833, 118 CR2d 678 (no reasonable expectation of privacy in common backyard of apartment building).

People v Robles (2000) 23 C4th 789, 797, 97 CR2d 914 (search of residence of probationer's roommate violated roommate's reasonable expectation of privacy when police were unaware of probationer's status before the search). But see People v Woods (1999) 21 C4th 668, 676, 88 CR2d 88 (police who do have knowledge of cotenant's search and seizure conditions may search areas of residence over which cotenants have joint control).

People v Reyes (1998) 19 C4th 743, 80 CR2d 734 (particularized suspicion not required for parole search). But see People v Sanders (2003) 31 C4th 318, 2 CR3d 630 (summarized above); People v Cervantes (2002) 103 CA4th 1404, 127 CR2d 468 (evidence will be excluded if search and seizure was arbitrary, capricious, or harassing).

People v Roybal (1998) 19 C4th 481, 79 CR2d 487 (no reasonable expectation of privacy in plastic bag hidden in cinder block exterior wall surrounding defendant's mother's backyard).

People v Reyes (2009) 178 CA4th 1183, 101 CR3d 109 (addressee had no reasonable expectation of privacy in outside of envelope).

People v Reyes (2009) 172 CA4th 671, 91 CR3d 415 (participant in conversation intercepted pursuant to federal wiretap order may move for suppression of conversation).

People v Hughston (2008) 168 CA4th 1062, 85 CR3d 890 (reasonable expectation of privacy in tarp structure equivalent to large tent).

People v Tolliver (2008) 160 CA4th 1231, 1236, 73 CR3d 375 (no reasonable expectation of privacy in automobile paid for by defendant when his name was not on pink slip, and registration and insurance were not in his name).

In re Lisa G. (2004) 125 CA4th 801, 23 CR3d 163 (students in public schools have legitimate expectation of privacy in personal effects brought to school); In re Cody S. (2004) 121 CA4th 86, 16 CR3d 653 (same).

In re Rudy F. (2004) 117 CA4th 1124, 1131, 12 CR3d 483 (minor who lived with sister (who was legal guardian) had legitimate expectation of privacy in entire residence and had standing to contest search of sister's bedroom).

People v Stewart (2003) 113 CA4th 242, 252, 6 CR3d 249 (tenant who had key and unlimited access to main house had reasonable expectation of privacy in house even though he lived in mobilehome on property).

People v Dachino (2003) 111 CA4th 1429, 1432, 4 CR3d 691 (person's expectation of privacy in place where police seize item is same whether person admits or denies ownership of item). See also People v Dees (1990) 221 CA3d 588, 594, 270 CR 554.

People v Satz (1998) 61 CA4th 322, 71 CR2d 433 (no reasonable expectation of privacy in hotel room obtained with stolen credit card).

People v Thompson (1996) 43 CA4th 1265, 51 CR2d 334 (tenant retains reasonable expectation of privacy in rented premises even if subject to restraining order directing tenant to stay away).

People v Allen (1993) 17 CA4th 1214, 21 CR2d 668 (defendant's statement to police that he did not live in place searched was not conclusive; he could put on evidence of reasonable expectation of privacy).

People v Melnyk (1992) 4 CA4th 1532, 6 CR2d 570 (car thief cannot object to search of stolen car).

People v Moreno (1992) 2 CA4th 577, 3 CR2d 66 (babysitter has reasonable expectation of privacy to challenge search of residence).

People v Dees (1990) 221 CA3d 588, 270 CR 554 (when prosecutor has sought holding order based on police testimony that defendant had admitted ownership of car, prosecution cannot contest reasonable expectation of privacy even though defense witnesses testify that defendant had no connection to car).

People v Koury (1989) 214 CA3d 676, 262 CR 870 (estranged husband has reasonable expectation of privacy to challenge search of wife's home, where he regularly visits overnight, has key, and keeps belongings).

People v Workman (1989) 209 CA3d 687, 257 CR 753 (possessory interest in documents seized existed at some point in past but before search took place, thus no reasonable expectation of privacy in documents).

People v Dasilva (1989) 207 CA3d 43, 254 CR 563 (disclaimer of proprietary interest in area searched or evidence discovered ends privacy expectation; appellate court refused to follow lower federal cases holding that defendant may disclaim ownership yet raise expectation of privacy).

People v Glick (1988) 203 CA3d 796, 250 CR 315 (driver could challenge detention as unreasonable, even though it was subsequently determined that he was in stolen car).

People v Carvajal (1988) 202 CA3d 487, 249 CR 368 (evidence that defendant was driving truck with owner's permission and possessed keys to both ignition and camper shell was sufficient to demonstrate reasonable expectation of privacy to challenge search of camper shell).

People v Hernandez (1988) 199 CA3d 1182, 245 CR 513 (person not allowed to use another's bedroom where drugs were found has no reasonable expectation of privacy and cannot challenge their seizure, even though he occupied another bedroom in same house).

Federal cases

Brendlin v California (2007) 551 US 249, 251, 168 L Ed 2d 132, 136, 127 S Ct 2400 (passenger may challenge constitutionality of traffic stop).

Samson v California (2006) 547 US 843, 165 L Ed 2d 250, 126 S Ct 2193 (search of California parolee without particularized suspicion was permissible; approving People v Reyes (1998) 19 C4th 743, 80 CR2d 734).

Illinois v Caballes (2005) 543 US 405, 160 L Ed 2d 842, 125 S Ct 834 (use of well-trained narcotics-detection dog does not implicate legitimate privacy interests).

Minnesota v Carter (1998) 525 US 83, 142 L Ed 2d 373, 119 S Ct 469 (no reasonable expectation of privacy for "visitors" who were in apartment for 2½ hours to package cocaine).

Minnesota v Olson (1990) 495 US 91, 109 L Ed 2d 85, 110 S Ct 1684 (overnight guest has reasonable expectation of privacy regarding search of room he occupies).

O'Connor v Ortega (1987) 480 US 709, 94 L Ed 2d 714, 107 S Ct 1492 (government employee could challenge warrantless search of office during investigation of employee's malfeasance).

U.S. v Payner (1980) 447 US 727, 65 L Ed 2d 468, 100 S Ct 2439 (defendant had no reasonable expectation of privacy in hotel room or in another's briefcase).

Michigan v Tyler (1978) 436 US 499, 56 L Ed 2d 486, 98 S Ct 1942 (prosecutor failed to object to codefendant's reasonable expectation of privacy to raise search issue).

U.S. v Padilla (1993) 508 US 77, 123 L Ed 2d 635, 113 S Ct 1936 (passenger may object to search of car only if passenger has joint control or dominion over vehicle); Rakas v Illinois (1978) 439 US 128, 58 L Ed 2d 387, 99 S Ct 421 (same).

Rawlings v Kentucky (1980) 448 US 98, 65 L Ed 2d 633, 100 S Ct 2556 (no expectation of privacy in goods put in another's purse).

Combs v U.S. (1972) 408 US 224, 33 L Ed 2d 308, 92 S Ct 2284 (case remanded to allow defendant to show reasonable expectation of privacy in farm shed).

§16.14 D. Application of Federal Search and Seizure Law in California

Important issues in this area are how one knows when the remedy of the federal exclusionary rule is available to a criminal defendant and what the hierarchy is of constitutional interpretations.

All state courts are bound by the U.S. Supreme Court's interpretations of the federal Constitution. People v Bradley (1969) 1 C3d 80, 86, 81 CR 457. Absent a controlling federal precedent, a California Supreme Court decision interpreting the federal Constitution will bind all inferior courts. When neither the U.S. Supreme Court nor the California Supreme Court has decided a federal issue, the appropriate controlling authority is a decision by an intermediate California court of appeal interpreting the U.S. Constitution. See People v Birks (1998) 19 C4th 108, 116, 77 CR2d 848; Mary M. v Los Angeles (1991) 54 C3d 202, 212, 285 CR 99.

State courts are not bound by decisions of lower federal courts on federal questions, even if they conflict with state decisions. In re Javier A. (1984) 159 CA3d 913, 924, 206 CR 386. However, lower federal court decisions are "persuasive." People v Bradley, supra. Decisions of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals are entitled to no more weight than are decisions of other lower federal courts, even though California is in the Ninth Circuit. Debtor Reorganizers, Inc. v State Bd. of Equalization (1976) 58 CA3d 691, 696, 130 CR 64.

Thus, the law regarding the remedy of the federal exclusionary rule will first be found in U.S. Supreme Court decisions, then in California Supreme Court decisions, and finally in California Court of Appeal decisions.

§16.15 V. PROSECUTION RESPONSE

The proper prosecution response to a defense motion to suppress the fruits of a warrantless search and seizure under Pen C §1538.5 is to present evidence tending to justify the intrusion. The defense generally need not specify the grounds of its challenge to a warrantless intrusion beyond alleging the absence of a warrant until such time as the prosecution indicates which theories of justification it will rely on. People v Williams (1999) 20 C4th 119, 83 CR2d 275. See §16.9. Although the prosecution is not required under §1538.5 to respond in writing (In re Justin K. (2002) 98 CA4th 695, 120 CR2d 546; People v Britton (2001) 91 CA4th 1112, 111 CR2d 199), local rules in some jurisdictions may require a written response. Sanctions may be imposed for noncompliance, but they may not deprive the defendant of the right to an evidentiary hearing. See Pen C §1538.5(i); People v Smith (2002) 95 CA4th 283, 301, 115 CR2d 483 (defendant entitled to full hearing on merits of motion to suppress). The motion must be decided on the evidence presented and not on the pleadings of either party. Pen C §1538.5(i). A sample written opposition to a defense §1538.5 motion is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §16.5 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

VI. EVIDENTIARY HEARING

§16.16 A. Burdens of Proof and of Going Forward

The initial burden of going forward lies with the moving party, which is usually the defense. An exception to this general rule arises when evidence has been suppressed at a preliminary examination, and the prosecution moves for its admission at a hearing under Pen C §1538.5(j).

The moving party has the burden of going forward with the proof of each fact essential to establish the right to the relief sought. The defense must thus prove standing, and establish the invalidity of a search and seizure made pursuant to a warrant or establish that the search and seizure was undertaken without a warrant. See §§16.11, 16.13 on proof of standing. Once the defense has shown the absence of a warrant, the burden shifts to the prosecution to justify the intrusion. Badillo v Superior Court (1956) 46 C2d 269, 294 P2d 23; People v Contreras (1989) 210 CA3d 450, 258 CR 361. A defendant meets this obligation on presentation of a prima facie showing that the police acted without a warrant. Procedurally speaking, a defendant need not guess what the prosecution's justification for the warrantless search will be. People v Williams (1999) 20 C4th 119, 83 CR2d 275. Nonetheless, defense counsel should naturally seek to anticipate the prosecutor's argument. When there is a warrant, it is presumed to have been lawfully issued and executed (Evid C §664), and the defense bears the burden of proving that the resulting search and seizure was invalid. People v Amador (2000) 24 C4th 387, 393, 100 CR2d 617. However, the prosecution may still bear the burden of proof when a search and seizure is challenged as being beyond the scope of the warrant. People v Murray (1978) 77 CA3d 305, 310, 143 CR 502 (prosecution bears burden of justifying seizure of items not specified in warrant, which were purportedly in plain view).

With respect to "secondary" or "derivative" evidence, i.e., evidence that was subsequently obtained through evidence directly seized by illegal conduct, the defendant bears the initial burden of making a prima facie case that the secondary evidence was causally linked to the primary illegality, and the burden then shifts to the prosecution to justify the seizure. People v Williams (1988) 45 C3d 1268, 248 CR 834.

In a typical search and seizure motion, the defense is the moving party, claiming that the search was made without a warrant. In this situation, when the moving papers have provided a specific description of the evidence to be suppressed, it is better practice for the prosecution to stipulate that there was no warrant, and to proceed with the presentation of evidence. This practice is efficient and fulfills the responsibility of counsel, as officers of the court, not to waste the court's time. If possible, the defense should establish before the hearing whether the prosecutor will stipulate to the lack of a warrant.

Common ways of showing that there was no search warrant include:

- Calling a police officer from the case to ask whether there was a warrant;
- Calling a court clerk who is required to keep returns on warrants that have been served; and
- Having the defendant or a defense witness take the stand for the limited purpose of testifying that there was no warrant.

Alternatively, counsel can either request a continuance to obtain evidence that there was no warrant, or ask the court to order the prosecutor to subpoena the arresting officer.

The standard of proof at a suppression hearing is by preponderance of the evidence. People v James (1977) 19 C3d 99, 106 n4, 137 CR 447; People v Superior Court (Cowman) (1971) 18 CA3d 316, 95 CR 757. Therefore, when a search and seizure is without a warrant, factual testimony is in conflict, and the testimony on each side is equally credible, the motion should be granted. People v Dickerson (1969) 273 CA2d 645, 78 CR 400.

Following the presentation of evidence at the Pen C §1538.5 hearing, the court should allow oral argument, supplemental memorandums, or both, to give counsel an opportunity to make a clear and complete record for possible appeal. Both sides should advance whatever theories should be raised on appellate review, because new theories cannot be advanced for the first time in the appellate courts (Mestas v Superior Court (1972) 7 C3d 537, 102 CR 729) unless the factual record is sufficient to decide the newly raised issue as a matter of law (see Green v Superior Court (1985) 40 C3d 126, 219 CR 186). Once the prosecution offers a justification for a warrantless search and seizure, the defense must respond by specifically pointing out any inadequacies in that justification. "Defendants who do not give the prosecution sufficient notice of these inadequacies cannot raise the issue on appeal." People v Williams (1999) 20 C4th 119, 136, 83 CR2d 275.

B. Defense Search and Seizure Motion

§16.17 1. Warrantless Search

A warrantless search and seizure is presumed to be unlawful, and the burden of justifying it falls on the prosecution. People v Williams (1999) 20 C4th 119, 136, 83 CR2d 275; People v Superior Court (Keithley) (1975) 13 C3d 406, 118 CR 617. This rule also applies when there is a warrant, if the challenged evidence was not specified in the warrant (People v Murray (1978) 77 CA3d 305, 143 CR 502 (prosecution has burden of justifying seizure of items not specified in warrant that were purportedly in plain view)), or if the search exceeded the scope of the authority conferred by the warrant. See §16.18 on the defendant's initial burden of going forward.

Ø Note: Exceptions exist to the warrant requirement. Examples include a search incident to arrest (Chimel v California (1969) 395 US 752, 762, 23 L Ed 2d 685, 693, 89 S Ct 2034); the automobile exception under which police may search an automobile and the containers within it without a warrant when they have probable cause to believe the automobile contains contraband or evidence (California v Acevedo (1991) 500 US 565, 580, 114 L Ed 2d 619, 111 S Ct 1982; People v Superior Court (Nasmeh) (2007) 151 CA4th 85, 100, 59 CR3d 633); and the "special needs" exception under which a warrant is not required when special needs, beyond the normal need for law enforcement, make the warrant and probable-cause requirement impracticable (Griffin v Wisconsin (1987) 483 US 868, 873, 97 L Ed 2d 709, 107 S Ct 3164).

2. Search With Warrant

§16.18 a. Burden on Defense

A search and seizure conducted under authority of a warrant is presumed to be lawful, and the burden is on the defense to establish either that the warrant is invalid or that it was unlawfully executed. Defense counsel must locate and subpoena all necessary witnesses, and establish the salient facts on direct examination.

When the basis for suppression appears on the face of the warrant or the application for the warrant (i.e., whether an affidavit or sworn testimony supplied probable cause for issuing a warrant, or whether the warrant itself satisfied constitutional and statutory requirements), the defense normally tries to satisfy its burden through legal argument based on those documents. In that event, defense counsel must move into evidence the warrant, affidavit, and return (or just the warrant if only the warrant itself is challenged); otherwise, there will be no evidence on which to base a ruling.

Even if a warrant is later declared invalid, courts will generally not suppress the fruits of a search performed under authority of the warrant, if the officer serving the warrant relied in good faith on the warrant's validity. U.S. v Leon (1984) 468 US 897, 82 L Ed 2d 677, 104 S Ct 3405; People v Camarella (1991) 54 C3d 592, 286 CR 780. The rationale is that no police misconduct is deterred when a warrant has been sought and issued by a magistrate. The government has the burden of establishing "objectively reasonable" reliance. U.S. v Leon, supra; People v Camarella, supra.

In limited situations such good faith reliance cannot be established as a matter of law, whereupon the evidence may be suppressed. U.S. v Leon describes four of those situations (U.S. v Leon (1984) 468 US 897, 923, 82 L Ed 2d 677, 699, 104 S Ct 3405; People v Camarella (1991) 54 C3d 592, 596, 286 CR 780):

- The issuing magistrate was misled by information that the affiant officer knew or should have known was false;
- The magistrate wholly abandoned the judicial role of neutrality and disinterest;
- The affidavit was so lacking in indications of probable cause that it would be entirely unreasonable for an officer to believe probable cause existed; and
- The warrant was so facially deficient in failing to particularize the place to be searched or things to be seized that the executing officers could not reasonably presume it to have been valid.

In Camarella, the court held that the phrase "it would be 'entirely unreasonable' for an officer to believe" that probable cause existed means that a reasonable and well-trained officer "would have known that his affidavit failed to establish probable cause and that he should not have applied for the warrant." 54 C3d at 605. That a magistrate issued a warrant, which is a constant in such cases, is irrelevant. 54 C3d at 605.

The good faith exception is also unavailable to save a warrant based on illegally seized evidence. People v Machupa (1994) 7 C4th 614, 29 CR2d 775. Note, however, that the defendant must be able to establish standing to challenge the underlying illegality. People v Madrid (1992) 7 CA4th 1888, 1900, 9 CR2d 798. If sufficient evidence remains, after omitting the objectionable information from the warrant application, to support probable cause, the warrant will stand. People v Weiss (1999) 20 C4th 1073, 86 CR2d 337. Note also that such an affidavit is not entitled to ordinary deference. See discussion in §16.21.

The good faith exception applies to service of both bench warrants and search warrants. People v Palmer (1989) 207 CA3d 663, 255 CR 55.

§16.19 b. Controverting (or Traversing) Warrant

To "traverse" a warrant means to inquire whether any information in the search warrant affidavit is false. A motion to traverse a warrant is to be distinguished from a motion to quash the warrant, which challenges the sufficiency of the affidavit on its face, assuming the truth of the averments within it, a challenge that will rarely get around the good faith exception. When there is reason to believe that the information in the affidavit that was used to procure a search warrant is false, the defense has a "limited right" to challenge the truth of statements in the affidavit (People v Panah (2005) 35 C4th 395, 456, 25 CR3d 672; People v Lewis (2006) 39 C4th 970, 988, 47 CR3d 467) and may move to traverse the warrant under Franks v Delaware (1978) 438 US 154, 155, 57 L Ed 2d 667, 672, 98 S Ct 2674. See also Theodor v Superior Court (1972) 8 C3d 77, 103, 104 CR 226.

Before a hearing on a motion to traverse a warrant is required, defense counsel must give notice, setting forth "with some specificity, [the] reasons for contending that the affidavit is inaccurate." Theodor v Superior Court (1972) 8 C3d 77, 103, 104 CR 226. To obtain a hearing on a Franks motion, the defendant must make a substantial preliminary showing that (Franks v Delaware, supra; People v Lewis (2006) 39 C4th 970, 988, 47 CR3d 467):

- The affidavit in support of the warrant contained a false statement;
- The statement was made knowingly or in reckless disregard of the truth; and
- The statement was material, i.e., necessary to the magistrate's finding of probable cause.

Material omissions from a warrant affidavit may be treated in the same way as material misstatements of fact. People v Luttenberger (1990) 50 C3d 1, 15 n4, 265 CR 690.

The motion should specify the portion of the affidavit alleged to be false and should be accompanied by supporting reasons. Affidavits or "other reliable statements of witnesses" should be attached if they are available and, if not, the motions should provide a satisfactory explanation for their absence. Franks v Delaware (1978) 438 US 154, 171, 57 L Ed 2d 667, 681, 98 S Ct 2674. See also People v Box (1993) 14 CA4th 177, 183, 17 CR2d 504. If the defendant establishes material falsity at the hearing and if the remaining facts in the affidavit are insufficient to establish probable cause, the warrant must be quashed and the evidence seized through the warrant must be suppressed. Franks v Delaware, supra.

> Ø Note: While Franks identifies a defendant's important right to test the validity of the search warrant, it does not give a defendant an "unlimited right to access all information possibly needed to meet the preliminary showing requirement." U.S. v Napier (9th Cir 2006) 436 F3d 1133, 1136.

At the hearing on the motion, defense counsel must also test the veracity of the affidavit by demonstrating its error or falsehood. Theodor v Superior Court, supra. The defense has the burden of producing evidence that establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that a false statement was intentionally or recklessly included in the affidavit, and that the false statement was material to the finding of probable cause. Material omissions are treated analogously: An omission is material if its absence makes the warrant affidavit substantially misleading. When material information has been omitted recklessly or with an intent to deceive the magistrate, it is added back, and the affidavit is retested for probable cause. People v Lopez (1985) 173 CA3d 125, 133, 218 CR 799.

If the defense has cast a reasonable doubt on the veracity or completeness of material statements made by the affiant, on the existence of the informant, or on the informant's prior reliability, the court must hold an in camera hearing. See People v Estrada (2003) 105 CA4th 783, 129 CR2d 589 (in absence of response by prosecution, defendant's sworn denial that transaction described by affiant occurred cast sufficient doubt on veracity of affiant to require in camera hearing). At the in camera hearing, the court may examine the informant to determine whether the affidavit contains false or reckless statements or omissions. People v Brown (1989) 207 CA3d 1541, 256 CR 11.

If the court finds false statements or material omissions in the affidavit and that, after deleting the false statements or adding the omitted information, there is insufficient probable cause to support the search and seizure, the warrant must be quashed. Franks v Delaware (1978) 438 US 154, 156, 57 L Ed 2d 667, 672, 98 S Ct 2674; People v Luttenberger

(1990) 50 C3d 1, 10, 265 CR 690.

§16.19A c. Obtaining Information About Informant Who Provides Probable Cause for Warrant (Luttenberger Motion)

If the affidavit used to procure the search warrant was based on statements made by an undisclosed informant, it may be impossible to make the preliminary showing required to get a Franks hearing (Franks v Delaware (1978) 438 US 154, 156, 57 L Ed 2d 667, 672, 98 S Ct 2674; see §16.19) without disclosing information about the informant. However, the prosecution is not required to disclose the identity of an informant who furnished information on probable cause if the informant is not a material witness to guilt or innocence. People v Hobbs (1994) 7 C4th 948, 959, 30 CR2d 651; People v Luttenberger (1990) 50 C3d 1, 13, 265 CR 690. Disclosure of the informant's identity is not required even when the entire affidavit has been sealed to protect the informant's identity. People v Hobbs, supra.

The solution to this dilemma in California has been to permit discovery of information that could be used in traversing a warrant on a lesser showing than that required to obtain a Franks hearing. Luttenberger, 50 C3d at 16. The defendant may wish to request information on (1) the informant's relationship with law enforcement, reliability, and criminal history; (2) payments for information or promises of leniency; and (3) a copy of any statement the informant made in connection with the case.

Although the defendant need not make the "substantial preliminary showing" necessary to obtain a Franks hearing, a Luttenberger motion "must offer evidence casting some reasonable doubt on the veracity of material statements made by the affiant." This evidence could consist of a minimal showing of inconsistencies on the face of the affidavit or the search warrant, or some reason to believe that the informant does not exist or that the affiant misrepresented the informant's reliability or the nature of the information that was provided. 50 C3d at 21.

> Ø Note: Remember that the rule in Franks protects the defendant from material falsehoods on the part of the affiant, not from material falsehoods on the part of the informant (unless it can be shown that the affiant recklessly ignored information that should have alerted him or her to the fact that the informant's information was false).

If the trial court finds that the defendant has made the required showing, the court then examines the requested documents in camera to determine if any of them are material and to delete information that could disclose the informant's identity from any documents that will be given to the defense. 50 C3d at 19.

> Ø Note: If information obtained by a Luttenberger motion indicates that the informant may have been a material witness on the issue of guilt or innocence, the defendant should move to disclose the informant's identity.

§16.19B d. Procedure When Affidavit in Support of Warrant Is Sealed in Its Entirety (Hobbs Motion)

In People v Hobbs (1994) 7 C4th 948, 959, 30 CR2d 651, the supreme court recognized that, when the entire affidavit has been sealed to prevent disclosure of the informant's identity, the defendant may not be able to make even the minimal showing required by People v Luttenberger (1990) 50 C3d 1, 13, 265 CR 690. See §16.19A. In this situation, a motion to quash or traverse the search warrant triggers the trial court's duty to conduct an in camera hearing. The prosecution may present testimony at this hearing. After examining the warrant and any supporting materials, and considering any testimony, the trial court's first duty is to decide whether (1) sufficient grounds exist for maintaining confidentiality of the informant's identity, and (2) whether the affidavit is properly sealed in whole or in part. People v Hobbs (1994) 7 C4th 948, 972, 30 CR2d 651. If the court finds that the affidavit was properly sealed, it next considers the motion to quash or traverse the warrant. If it finds no support in the materials before it for granting the defendant's motion, the court simply denies the motion. If, however, the court concludes that a reasonable probability exists that the defendant would succeed on a motion to quash or traverse the warrant, the court must give the prosecution the opportunity to choose whether it prefers to disclose the information in the sealed materials or to suffer the entry of an adverse order on the motion. 7 C4th at 974. The court must retain any sealed materials in the court record to facilitate review on appeal. 7 C4th at 975. See also People v Martinez (2005) 132 CA4th 233, 33 CR3d 328 (trial court should have filed confidential attachment in sealed condition along with search warrant and related affidavit following in camera hearing instead of returning attachment to police investigator).

Unlike the Luttenberger procedure, in which deciding whether to examine the requested documents in camera remains a matter of trial court discretion (People v Luttenberger (1990) 50 C3d 1, 21, 265 CR 690), an in camera hearing under Hobbs is required whenever the defendant moves to quash or traverse a search warrant based on a sealed affidavit. People v Galland (2004) 116 CA4th 489, 10 CR3d 350.

§16.20 3. Whether Derivative Evidence Is "Fruit of the Poisonous Tree"

Evidence obtained directly through an unlawful search must be suppressed if the defendant has standing to challenge the search. See Pen C §1538.5. Evidence that is the indirect product of an unlawful search is also subject to suppression if the defense can show that the "secondary" or "derivative" evidence has been "tainted" by the initial illegality. The defense meets this burden by making a prima facie showing of a causal connection between the illegal search and the indirectly obtained evidence. Wong Sun v U.S. (1963) 371 US 471, 9 L Ed 2d 441, 83 S Ct 407; People v Williams (1988) 45 C3d 1268, 248 CR 834. Once the defense makes such a showing, the burden shifts to the prosecution to show that the taint has dissipated. The prosecution can invoke three doctrines to save presumptively tainted evidence from suppression: attenuation, independent source, and inevitable discovery.

To attenuate means to stretch thin. If the court finds that the discovery of the evidence is so far removed from that illegality that the deterrent effect of the exclusionary rule no longer justifies its cost, then the exclusionary rule does not apply even though the evidence in question would not have been found "but for" the primary illegality. U.S. v Ceccolini (1978) 435 US 268, 55 L Ed 2d 268, 98 S Ct 1054. Three primary factors apply to an analysis of whether derivative evidence is "attenuated": (1) the time lapse between the illegality and the discovery of the evidence; (2) the presence of intervening factors, like Miranda warnings; and, particularly, (3) the purpose and flagrancy of the official misconduct. Brown v Illinois (1975) 422 US 590, 45 L Ed 2d 416, 95 S Ct 2254; People v Boyer (2006) 38 C4th 412, 42 CR3d 677.

A warrant that is obtained after the police acted illegally is not necessarily tainted if it if based on a genuinely independent source, i.e., if "no information gained from the illegal entry affected either the law enforcement officer's decision to seek a warrant or the magistrate's decision to grant it." Murray v U.S. (1988) 487 US 533, 540, 101 L Ed 2d 472, 482, 108 S Ct 2529; People v Weiss (1999) 20 C4th 1073, 1082, 86 CR2d 337 (suppression not warranted unless illegal information would have affected "in a substantive manner" magistrate's decision to issue warrant, though in such case redacted affidavit not entitled to ordinary deference).

Taint may also be dissipated if the prosecution can prove inevitable discovery, i.e., a "reasonably strong probability" that the evidence would have been discovered regardless of the Fourth Amendment violation. People v Superior Court (Tunch) (1978) 80 CA3d 665, 681, 145 CR 795. Significant factors include whether a broad-based police investigation was afoot at the time (Nix v Williams (1984) 467 US 431, 81 L Ed 2d 377, 104 S Ct 2501) and the likelihood that usual and commonplace police procedures would have led to the evidence in any event (People v Boyer (2006) 38 C4th 412, 42 CR3d 677).

§16.21 4. Using Transcripts as Evidence

If the Pen C §1538.5 motion in a felony case was made at the preliminary examination, Pen C §1538.5(i) requires that the transcript be admitted at the §1538.5 special hearing.

A transcript of any other hearing, however, may not be admitted at a §1538.5 hearing unless both sides stipulate to its admission (People v Neighbours (1990) 223 CA3d 1115, 273 CR 32) or some evidentiary rule allows it to be admitted. When a transcript is thus admitted, counsel must renew objections made at the earlier hearing; otherwise, the entire transcript will be admitted in evidence, including testimony that was kept out because of an objection at the earlier hearing. People v Williams (1992) 3 CA4th 1535, 5 CR2d 372.

Ø Note: Counsel who does not wish to stipulate to admission of a transcript of an earlier proceeding should say so clearly. People v Satchell (1978) 81 CA3d 347, 146 CR 307 (defense counsel's statement that he "would have preferred that the officer testify anew" was construed as stipulation to use of transcript; not considered to be objection).

§16.22 5. Evidentiary Rules and Production of Evidence

The rules of evidence used at a Pen C §1538.5 hearing are those of the Evidence Code. Jauregi v Superior Court (1999) 72 CA4th 931, 939, 85 CR2d 553.

An officer can conduct a search or make an arrest without a warrant on the basis of information received from another officer or official police channels. People v Ramirez (1997) 59 CA4th 1548, 1553, 70 CR2d 341. See also People v Gomez (2004) 117 CA4th 531, 541, 12 CR3d 398 (officers can work together to build "collective knowledge," which may be used to establish probable cause). Testimony offered solely on the issue of probable cause, which would be hearsay if offered for the truth of the matter asserted, is not hearsay, and is admissible. For example, if a police officer testifies to the reported description of an alleged robber, the testimony is not admitted to prove that the robber was as described; it is offered to show that the officer did (or did not) have probable cause to detain, search, or arrest the defendant. See People v Magana (1979) 95 CA3d 453, 157 CR 173. However, when the officer does not have personal knowledge of the facts that provide probable cause, the evidence at the §1538.5 hearing must establish that it was reasonable for the officer to rely on the information. See, e.g., People v Gomez, supra; People v Ramirez (1997) 59 CA4th 1548, 1554, 70 CR2d 341 (information should be factual rather than conclusory, should include specific and articulable facts, and should be reliable). This rule, which derives from People v Harvey (1958) 156 CA2d 516, 319 P2d 689, and People v Madden (1970) 2 C3d 1017, 88 CR 171, is known as the Harvey-Madden rule. At a §1538.5 suppression hearing, a party may not use affidavits in lieu of live testimony to present its case. People v Johnson (2006) 38 C4th 717, 723, 42 CR3d 887.

All evidence relied on at the hearing should be marked, described, or exhibited with enough clarity that a reviewing court will be able to understand what evidence was admitted, and what items or portions were being referred to during the hearing. As with any evidentiary hearing, diagrams used in the hearing should be adequately marked and gestures described, so that a person reading the transcript and looking at the diagram can understand what the testimony referred to.

Counsel may introduce physical items into evidence, e.g., diagrams, photographs, and clothing, when it is appropriate for resolving or clarifying a fact in issue. It may sometimes be appropriate to move and receive into evidence, for purposes of the §1538.5 hearing, the very evidence that the defense is moving to suppress. (If the defense wishes to introduce evidence held by the police or prosecution, it should make arrangements in advance to have it in court. A request may suffice. If that arrangement proves ineffective, a subpoena duces tecum should be used.) It is good practice, although not required, when evidence is offered for a limited purpose, for counsel to specify what that purpose is. For example, the defense might introduce seized heroin so that the judge might decide whether it was reasonable for an officer to claim that it felt like a weapon in a pat search.

When a warrant is involved, defense counsel should be sure to move into evidence the portions that are necessary to the court's decision (the warrant, affidavit, and/or return on the warrant).

When a defendant testifies at a §1538.5 hearing, that testimony may not be used at trial except to impeach the defendant. Simmons v U.S. (1968) 390 US 377, 394, 19 L Ed 2d 1247, 1259, 88 S Ct 967. The purpose of the defendant's testimony at the hearing should therefore be considered and carefully limited so as to restrict the scope of cross-examination. For example, if the defendant will testify on whether consent was given, counsel should state that purpose at the outset so that cross-examination does not extend into the area of the charged crime itself. Counsel should also advise the defendant not to volunteer information or stray beyond the stated limited purposes of his or her testimony, so as not to inadvertently open new areas for cross-examination. Judges vary considerably in the latitude they permit on cross-examination under the rubric of "challenging credibility." Counsel may wish to clarify beforehand what latitude the court will permit. If cross-examination is permitted to expand dangerously, defense counsel must decide whether to withdraw the defendant as a witness and have the direct examination stricken, or to go ahead, giving the prosecutor the opportunity to elicit incriminating testimony.

§16.23 VII. REVIEW OF PEN C §1538.5 RULING IN MISDEMEANOR CASES

Review of a Pen C §1538.5 motion in a misdemeanor case, whether granted or denied, is by appeal to the appellate division of the superior court. Pen C §1538.5(j). The notice of appeal must be filed within 30 calendar days after the judge's statement that the motion is granted or denied. Cal Rules of Ct 8.853(a). If the notice is not filed within that time, the appeal is void. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.812.

California Rules of Court 8.800-8.817 (general rules applicable to appellate division proceedings), 8.850-8.873 (appeals and records in misdemeanor cases), and 8.880-8.891 (briefs, hearings, and decisions) govern such appeals. In the case of a defense appeal from a denial of a motion to suppress, the trial court has discretion to stay further proceedings pending the appellate outcome. In the case of a prosecution appeal from the grant of a motion to suppress, the trial court is obligated to stay further proceedings pending the appellate outcome. Pen C §1538.5(l). See People v Gallagher (2009) 171 CA4th Supp 1, 4, 90 CR3d 695. A petition for a writ of mandamus is unavailable as a means of review. Both the defense and the prosecution may seek review beyond a superior court appellate ruling only by asking the court of appeal to certify the case to itself for further review. Cal Rules of Ct 8.1000-8.1018. This review is discretionary. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.1005. On certification to the court of appeal, see §43.35.

Ø Note: Penal Code §1538.5(j) permits filing of a direct appeal in misdemeanor cases as long as the Rules of Court are followed. The tension between Pen C §1538.5(j) and Pen C §1510 has not been authoritatively resolved. Section 1510 limits "review" to suppression motions filed within 45 calendar days after arraignment. Some prosecutors have argued that §1510 should apply to both appeals and writs, despite §1538.5(j). The better view seems to be that §1538.5(j), as the more recent and specific enactment, controls. Section 1510 appears in the chapter of the Penal Code pertaining specifically to writs.

Ø Note: It is possible to file a petition for a writ of habeas corpus challenging wrongful failure to certify a case. See In re Wallace (1970) 3 C3d 289, 292, 90 CR 176; In re Eichorn (1998) 69 CA4th 382, 387, 81 CR2d 535. Relief on this ground appears to be highly unusual.

Once a court of appeal has ruled on a case, it follows the same course as a felony appeal: Either counsel may request a rehearing in the court of appeal and review in the California Supreme Court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.500-8.516.

Another review remedy available to the defense if a §1538.5 motion is denied is to proceed to trial or plea bargain and to appeal a resulting conviction. The defendant is entitled to such an appeal after conviction, whether by trial, plea of guilty, or plea of no contest. Pen C §1538.5(m); People v Callahan (1997) 54 CA4th 1419, 63 CR2d 684. No certificate of probable cause is required for such an appeal. People v Peterson (1973) 9 C3d 717, 720 n1, 108 CR 835. Note, however, that a defendant may waive this appeal right as part of a plea agreement. People v Berkowitz (1995) 34 CA4th 671, 40 CR2d 150.

For further discussion of review of misdemeanor search and seizure rulings, see Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases §§1.17, 3.49 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

VIII. DEFENSE OPTIONS WHEN PEN C §1538.5 MOTION IS DENIED AT PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION

§16.24 A. Types of Review Available

If the defendant is held to answer at the conclusion of the preliminary examination and a search and seizure motion was made and denied (see §8.31), two challenges to the evidence are then available: a motion to dismiss under Pen C §995, and a special hearing under Pen C §1538.5(i). People v Laiwa (1983) 34 C3d 711, 195 CR 503. See §16.7 on the Pen C §1538.5 motion available in this situation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.25 B. Pen C §995 Motion Compared With Pen C §1538.5 Motion After Preliminary Examination

If a Pen C §1538.5 motion was heard and denied at the preliminary examination, and if the holding order (also called a bindover) concerning one or more counts could not stand without the challenged evidence, review of the motion is available through Pen C §995. A §995 motion is a review of the magistrate's action and is based solely on the transcript of the preliminary examination; no new evidence may be heard or considered. People v Sahagun (1979) 89 CA3d 1, 20, 152 CR 233. Moreover, the judge ruling on the §995 motion is bound to defer to the preliminary examination magistrate on all factual matters. The §995 judge must review the magistrate's legal ruling and uphold it if the record supports it. People v Alonzo (1993) 13 CA4th 535, 16 CR2d 656. See chap 13 on §995 motions.

For tactical reasons, the defense may in some cases find it more advantageous to forgo raising the search and seizure issue at the preliminary examination and subsequent §995 review in favor of challenging the evidence exclusively at a §1538.5 special hearing after arraignment on the information. See discussion of those reasons in §16.7.

Whether counsel decides to bring a §995 motion, a §1538.5 motion, or both, counsel should clearly indicate on each motion which type it is because the type of review available differs, depending on the type of motion. See §§16.35-16.37 (defense review), 16.32-16.34 (prosecution review).

Ø Note: It is unclear what effect a §1538.5 motion by a codefendant at the preliminary examination has on a defendant's right to make a "first" §1538.5 motion. See People v Nelson (1981) 126 CA3d 978, 981, 179 CR 195. It can be argued that a person who is not a party to a motion is not bound by its result. Defense counsel not joining in a codefendant's §1538.5 motion at the preliminary examination should make a clear record at that examination that he or she is not joining in the motion and why, e.g., investigation has not been completed.

IX. PROSECUTION OPTIONS WHEN MOTION IS GRANTED AT PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION

A. Case Dismissed Following Successful Defense Pen C §1538.5 Motion at Preliminary Examination

§16.26 1. Two-Dismissal Rule

If a magistrate dismisses a case under Pen C §871 because insufficient evidence remains to hold the defendant to answer after illegally obtained evidence is suppressed, and the prosecutor chooses not to challenge the dismissal under Pen C §871.5, that dismissal counts as one dismissal under Pen C §1387. Two dismissals of a case are usually a bar to any further prosecution for the same offense. Pen C §§1387, 1538.5(p). There are, however, limited circumstances that allow the prosecutor to refile even after two dismissals. See discussion in §§25.45-25.46. Review under §871.5 is discussed in §16.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.27 2. Discharge and Refile

When the granting of a Pen C §1538.5 motion at the preliminary examination results in discharge of the entire case, the prosecution may elect to (1) refile the charges and obtain another preliminary examination, (2) seek an indictment, or (3) move under Pen C §871.5 to reinstate the complaint. Pen C §1538.5.

If the People elect to refile or seek an indictment, the ruling on the §1538.5 motion at the first preliminary examination is not binding in the subsequent proceeding. Pen C §1538.50. However, if the judge who granted the motion at the first hearing is available, the suppression motion must be relitigated before that judge. Pen C §1538.5(p). The prosecution may not circumvent this requirement by filing an affidavit of prejudice under CCP §170.6. Barnes v Superior Court (2002) 96 CA4th 631, 117 CR2d 621.

If the second motion to suppress is also granted and the magistrate dismisses the complaint because the remaining evidence is insufficient, the prosecution may not file a new complaint or seek reindictment unless it obtains additional evidence relating to the motion that was not reasonably discoverable at the second suppression motion. Pen C §1538.5(p). However, the prosecution may file a motion to compel the magistrate to reinstate the complaint under Pen C §871.5(a). People v Toney (2004) 32 C4th 228, 232, 8 CR3d 577 (Pen C §1538.5(p) bars only refiling complaint or seeking indictment without new evidence; it does not prevent prosecution from relitigating validity of search and seizure in §871.5 motion).

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.28 B. Motion Granted but Defendant Held to Answer

Motion granted on all charges; defendant held to answer to all charges on basis of other evidence. When a search and seizure motion is granted at the preliminary examination but the defendant is held to answer to the charges because enough other evidence remains on which to base a holding order, the prosecution is bound by the magistrate's search and seizure ruling unless the prosecution requests a de novo search and seizure hearing. Pen C §1538.5(j). For further discussion of this de novo hearing, see §16.32.

Motion granted; some counts dismissed, but defendant held to answer to other counts. A defendant may be charged with more than one count, and fewer than all counts may be dismissed at the preliminary examination on the basis of the Pen C §1538.5 motion, either because the search and seizure motion did not relate to all counts or because there was sufficient other evidence on which to base a holding order. When this occurs, a de novo search and seizure hearing is appropriate only for the count or counts on which the defendant was held to answer. A de novo ruling favorable to the prosecution allows the evidence to be used only on those counts and will not result in reinstatement of the dismissed count or counts. See Pen C §1538.5(j). The prosecution has two options regarding the dismissed count or counts. One option is to file a new complaint or seek an indictment (People v Belknap (1974) 41 CA3d 1019, 116 CR 664; see also discussion in §16.30), which may also mean dismissing the charges to which the defendant was held to answer in order to avoid potential Pen C §654 problems (discussed in §§37.43-37.50). The other option is to file a motion under Pen C §871.5 on the dismissed counts (see §16.30), and challenge the counts to which the defendant was held to answer with a de novo search and seizure hearing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.29 C. Motion Denied but Magistrate Ruled Against Prosecution on Issue

If a magistrate at a preliminary examination rules against the prosecution on an aspect of the Pen C §1538.5 motion but nevertheless denies the defense motion, the adverse ruling becomes binding on the prosecution unless the prosecution files a notice seeking review under Pen C §1538.5(j). Eiseman v Superior Court (1971) 21 CA3d 342, 98 CR 342.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.30 D. Motion to Reinstate Complaint (Pen C §871.5)

When the granting of a Pen C §1538.5 motion at the preliminary examination results in discharge of the entire case, or a portion of it, the prosecution may move within 15 calendar days to reinstate the complaint under Pen C §871.5. Vlick v Superior Court (1982) 128 CA3d 992, 180 CR 742. To "make" such a motion actually means to file the motion within 15 calendar days after the discharge. People v Dianda (1986) 178 CA3d 174, 223 CR 635.

If the Pen C §871.5 motion is decided against the prosecution, the prosecution may not refile the dismissed action. Pen C §871.5(c). If the motion is decided in favor of the prosecution, the magistrate must reinstate the complaint and issue a commitment (holding or bindover) order.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.31 E. Motion for De Novo Special Hearing (Pen C §1538.5(j))

If a Pen C §1538.5 motion is granted at the preliminary examination, and the defendant is held to answer, the prosecution may obtain a new Pen C §1538.5 hearing. Pen C §1538.5(j); People v Ramirez (1992) 6 CA4th 1583, 8 CR2d 529. The prosecution's right to a de novo hearing of a suppression motion under Pen C §1538.5(j), a right that defendants do not have under Pen C §1538.5(i), gives the prosecution an unfair advantage but offsets an advantage given to the defendant, who is permitted to surprise the prosecution at the preliminary hearing by moving to suppress evidence without prior notice. People v Weaver (1996) 44 CA4th 154, 51 CR2d 602.

The prosecution must request a new §1538.5 motion within 15 calendar days after the preliminary examination; otherwise, that ruling becomes binding on the prosecution. Pen C §1538.5(j). If the prosecution fails to request a de novo hearing under §1538.5(j), the original ruling is binding on the prosecution, even if the case is dismissed and subsequently refiled. People v Jackson (2002) 96 CA4th 1265, 117 CR2d 886.

This special hearing is a de novo hearing. Pen C §1538.5(j). The hearing is not available if two defense §1538.5 motions have been granted, unless new evidence is found that was not reasonably discoverable earlier. Pen C §1538.5(j). A sample prosecution request for a search and seizure hearing under §1538.5(j) is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §16.7 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

X. APPELLATE REVIEW OF RULINGS IN FELONY CASES

A. Review Sought by Prosecution

§16.32 1. Dismissal Following Special Hearing

If the court grants a motion to suppress evidence, and the prosecution is unable to proceed without the suppressed evidence, the court should dismiss the action under Pen C §1385 on its own motion. People v Laiwa (1983) 34 C3d 711, 722, 195 CR 503. If the prosecutor moves to dismiss, the dismissal is not appealable. People v Gallagher (2009) 171 CA4th Supp 1, 90 CR3d 695. However, the case may then be refiled under Pen C §1538.5(j), if the defendant's search and seizure motion has not been granted twice (Pen C §1538.5(p)). See People v Caserta (1971) 14 CA3d 484, 92 CR 382.

The legislative amendment to §1538.5(j) that allows the prosecution to refile charges and relitigate the §1538.5 motion de novo is constitutional. People v Gallegos (1997) 54 CA4th 252, 62 CR2d 666. The defense has the right to have the relitigation of the motion heard by the same judge who initially granted the motion if that judge is available. Pen C §1538.5(p); Soil v Superior Court (1997) 55 CA4th 872, 64 CR2d 319.

Under Pen C §1238(a)(7), the prosecution may appeal the dismissal of an information after the granting of a motion to suppress, even if the court of appeal has summarily denied a writ petition filed by the prosecution, as long as the denial was not a decision on the merits; a decision on the merits, even without a written opinion, precludes a prosecution appeal. People v Allison (1988) 202 CA3d 1084, 249 CR 218.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.33 2. Motion Granted but No Dismissal Following Special Hearing

When a defense motion is granted at a Pen C §1538.5 special hearing, a dismissal ordinarily will not occur unless the prosecutor announces the inability to proceed without the suppressed evidence. (The judge usually asks the prosecutor if he or she can proceed without the suppressed evidence; if the prosecutor says no, the judge dismisses the case.) When the charge is not dismissed (i.e., when some evidence is suppressed but enough remains to try the case), the prosecution may seek review by way of a petition for writ of mandate and/or prohibition, which is preceded by the prosecution's filing a notice of intention to file the petition. Pen C §1538.5(o).

In these circumstances, the court must order an in-custody defendant released on his or her own recognizance unless it is a homicide case. Pen C §1538.5(k).

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.34 3. Review in Defense Appeal

If evidence is suppressed at a de novo Pen C §1538.5 hearing, and the defendant is convicted at trial without the suppressed evidence and then appeals the conviction, the prosecution may challenge the granting of the suppression motion in the same appeal. Pen C §1252; People v Smith (1983) 34 C3d 251, 193 CR 692. Defense counsel should keep this in mind when deciding whether to appeal such a conviction.

B. Review Sought by Defense

1. Pretrial Writ Review

§16.35 a. Court of Appeal

Following denial of a Pen C §1538.5 motion at a special hearing, defense counsel may seek review by filing a petition for writ of mandate and/or prohibition in the court of appeal. Pen C §1538.5(i). Defense attorneys probably make more procedural errors in this process than in any other part of the §1538.5 procedure.

A petition for writ review of denial of a §1538.5 motion must be filed within 30 calendar days after the order denying the motion. Pen C §1538.5(i). Penal Code §1510 requires that the motion must have been made within 60 calendar days after arraignment; that it must have been complied with; and that the petition should state that it has been complied with, or, if it has not, should set out good cause for failure to meet this requirement.

Along with the petition, counsel must file with the clerk of the court of appeal a transcript of the §1538.5 hearing, plus copies of all written motions of both sides, all relevant pleadings, all supporting memorandums filed in the motion, any written dispositive orders, and copies of all documentary exhibits admitted at the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 8.486(b); Sherwood v Superior Court (1979) 24 C3d 183, 154 CR 917. The supporting documents required by Cal Rules of Ct 8.486 may either be submitted in a separate volume or attached at the end of the petition. Cal Rules of Ct 8.486(c). When they are lengthy, it is common in some districts to just file (or "lodge") one copy with the court; counsel should check local practice.

When exhibits other than documents were introduced at the hearing, the petition should describe them and state that they will be transmitted to the reviewing court under Cal Rules of Ct 8.224. Counsel must file a notice with the superior court clerk, specifying which exhibits should be sent to the court of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.224(a).

A transcript of the §1538.5 hearing may be ordered directly from the court reporter without an order signed by the judge, unless counsel wishes to request, in an indigent case, that the transcript be prepared at court expense. Pen C §1539(b). The transcript should be ordered immediately after the ruling on the motion, in order to give the reporter time to prepare it. If the transcript is not yet available to file with the petition, a copy of the request for the transcript should be filed with the court of appeal, along with a declaration stating that the transcript has been ordered, the date it was ordered, and the date it is expected to be filed, which must be a date before counsel has requested the reviewing court to act in finally disposing of the case. Cal Rules of Ct 8.486(b)(3)(B). If the transcript is unavailable, e.g., lost or destroyed, or, more likely, if the court reporter is ill, a declaration must be filed stating why the transcript is unavailable; the declaration must contain a summary of the proceedings, including the parties' arguments, and the basis for the court's decision, if given. Cal Rules of Ct 8.486(b)(3)(A).

An original and four copies of the petition must be filed with the court of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.44(b). The rules for form and filing of the petition are the same as for appeals. Cal Rules of Ct 8.4. These rules govern even such matters as color of the cover and covering staples. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.40, 8.204. For more detailed coverage and for sample format, see Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases, chaps 7-8 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

Counsel must serve a copy of the petition on the respondent court, the prosecutor, and the Attorney General. The petition must contain proof of service. Cal Rules of Ct 8.25(a). It is common in some counties for defense counsel to personally serve the petition and obtain the signature of each person served for filing with the court of appeal.

The petitioner should ask for a stay of trial. Counsel should comply with the Pen C §1050 requirements discussed in chap 20. There is seldom a problem in obtaining a stay from the trial court as long as the defendant waives his or her speedy trial rights. When the trial court will not grant a stay, defense counsel should ask the appellate court for a stay of trial. Counsel should not request a stay of all proceedings because this would prevent any action at all from taking place in the trial court, even, for example, a motion to reduce bail. If a request for a stay is bound with or part of the writ petition, the words "STAY REQUESTED" must be prominently displayed on the cover of the petition. Cal Rules of Ct 8.116. See Appeals & Writs §8.4.

Court of appeal review of such a petition for writ is discretionary and, in most cases, is not granted. The court's decision to deny review is not a ruling on the merits. People v Medina (1972) 6 C3d 484, 99 CR 630.

If the court of appeal allows briefing and argument and decides the cause in a full written opinion, the ruling is the law of the case and is binding in a postconviction appeal. Kowis v Howard (1992) 3 C4th 888, 894, 12 CR2d 728. The law of the case does not apply to summary denials. People v Medina, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.36 b. California Supreme Court

If pretrial review is summarily denied by the court of appeal, the defense may petition for review in the California Supreme Court. People v Medina (1972) 6 C3d 484, 99 CR 630. The petition must be filed within 10 calendar days after denial in the court of appeal is final. Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(e)(1). The petition may ask as an alternative to a hearing that the court of appeal be ordered to issue an alternative writ and hear the matter on its merits. See Cal Const art VI, §12. See also California Criminal Law Forms Manual §42.2 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005) (sample petition).

Attachments to the petition that may be filed or lodged in the state supreme court are delineated in Cal Rules of Ct 8.504(e)(1).

When petitioning the supreme court for review after an adverse ruling on the merits in the court of appeal, defense counsel may wish to remind the supreme court that the court of appeal's decision will probably become the law of the case in a later appeal if a hearing is not granted. See People v Medina, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.37 2. Postconviction Appeal

If a defense Pen C §1538.5 motion is denied and the defendant is convicted, the defense may raise the search issue on appeal, whether the conviction was by trial or plea. A certificate of probable cause is not required to appeal §1538.5 issues following a plea of guilty or no contest. Cal Rules of Ct 8.304(b). There is no requirement that the §1538.5 motion have been made within a specific time period to be able to bring an appeal. Pen C §1538.5(m).

Section 1538.5(m) allows an appeal only if at "some stage of the proceedings" the defendant moved for the suppression of evidence. This has been interpreted to require the defendant to seek review of the magistrate's decision in a special hearing in the superior court or to raise the issue in a Pen C §995 motion. People v Lilienthal (1978) 22 C3d 891, 150 CR 910 (motion to suppress made during preliminary examination in felony case does not preserve issue for appeal after conviction); People v Burns (1993) 20 CA4th 1266, 25 CR2d 230. Consolidation of the municipal and superior courts did not change this rule. People v Hoffman (2001) 88 CA4th 1, 105 CR2d 372. See also People v Richardson (2007) 156 CA4th 574, 67 CR3d 552; People v Garrido (2005) 127 CA4th 359, 25 CR3d 494; People v Hinds (2003) 108 CA4th 897, 134 CR2d 196.

When an appeal is from conviction by a plea, the notice of appeal must specify that denial of the suppression motion is the ground for the appeal. Otherwise, the notice of appeal is not operative. Cal Rules of Ct 8.304(d).

The harmless error rule is never applicable when a search issue is raised on appeal from conviction by plea. People v Miller (1983) 33 C3d 545, 189 CR 519; People v LeBlanc (1997) 60 CA4th 157, 70 CR2d 195. However, it is applicable on appeal following conviction at trial. On postconviction appellate procedure, see chaps 43-44.

§17.1 I. OVERVIEW

This chapter discusses discovery of an informer's identity and whereabouts. The prosecution has a qualified privilege to refuse to disclose the identity of a person who has furnished information purporting to disclose a violation of a law of the United States, of California, or of a California public entity. Evid C §§1041-1042. The policies served by this privilege are "to encourage citizens to report crimes regardless of their motives for doing so and to avoid inhibiting law enforcement's necessary use of professional informants." People v Navarro (2006) 138 CA4th 146, 163, 41 CR3d 164. A motion to disclose an informer's identity is a special discovery request, a subset of the general discovery process. The privilege conferred by Evid C §1041 is an "express statutory provision" under which discovery is permitted by Pen C §1054(e). People v Jackson (2003) 110 CA4th 280, 290, 1 CR3d 561. On discovery in criminal cases generally, see chap 11. Reliability of informers is discussed in chap 16.

A motion to discover an informer's identity is a request for the court to order the prosecution to disclose the identity and the present whereabouts, along with other pertinent information, of an informer who has given the police information relevant to the defendant's case.

Disclosure is required only if the informer is a material witness on the issue of guilt who could give evidence that might exonerate the defendant. Eleazer v Superior Court (1970) 1 C3d 847, 852, 83 CR 586; Honore v Superior Court (1969) 70 C2d 162, 168, 74 CR 233. An informer's identity generally does not need to be disclosed if it is sought only to aid the defense in attacking probable cause for a search warrant or to make an arrest. Evid C §1042; People v Hobbs (1994) 7 C4th 948, 959, 30 CR2d 651. On probable cause for a search warrant, see chap 16.

Although either party may calendar a matter for hearing on the subject of disclosure of the informer's identity, the prosecution rarely does so. See §17.10. Defense counsel who wishes to make the motion might want to make an informal request for the information under Pen C §1054.5(b). Although no case has held that an informal request is a prerequisite to a formal motion under Evid C §1040, the prosecution may voluntarily disclose. Then, if no disclosure is made, counsel can make a formal motion.

If the informer is to be a prosecution witness at trial, no case has decided if the prosecution can simply invoke the privilege to withhold disclosure, despite Pen C §1054.1's disclosure requirement, or can take this initiative by moving to delay or withhold disclosure under Pen C §1054.7 and Evid C §1042.

While the prosecution must disclose the witnesses it plans to use at trial, and must disclose exculpatory evidence (Pen C §1054.1), no case or statute requires the prosecution to disclose a material witness who it deems is not exculpatory and whom it does not intend to call at trial. If such a material witness is an informer, the defense will generally have to use a motion to disclose the informer.

The privilege does not prevent the informer from disclosing his or her own identity. Evid C §1041(c). The privilege also does not apply if a person is called as a witness and asked if he or she is an informer. Law Revision Comment to Evid C §1041.

> Ø Note: Evidence Code §1041 uses the term "informer." Compare with Pen C §1127a, which uses the term "informant." Cases sometimes distinguish between a "citizen informer" and a "paid informant" (see, e.g., People v Terrones (1989) 212 CA3d 139, 147, 260 CR 355), but the terminology is not consistent (see, e.g., People v Gonzalez (2006) 38 C4th 932, 949, 44 CR3d 237 ("citizen informants"); People v Cribas (1991) 231 CA3d 596, 603, 282 CR 538 ("paid informer")). Thus, "informer" and "informant" without further attribution, such as "citizen" or "paid," must be considered interchangeable, synonymous words. The difference between a paid and unpaid informer or informant is in the assessment of reliability and not in the standards for disclosure of identity.

"In-custody informants" whose testimony is based on statements that the defendant allegedly made while both were in custody are the subject of special rules set out in Pen C §1127a. See §17.14.

The following issues related to informants are not covered in this chapter:

- The defense may challenge the informant's reliability as it relates to probable cause. Illinois v Gates (1983) 462 US 213, 76 L Ed 2d 527, 103 S Ct 2317; Franks v Delaware (1978) 438 US 154, 57 L Ed 2d 667, 98 S Ct 2674.

See chap 16.

- The defense may seek discovery of search warrant affidavits and related documents that were sealed by the court. See People v Galland (2008) 45 C4th 354, 86 CR3d 841; People v Hobbs (1994) 7 C4th 948, 30 CR2d 651. See chap 16.
- The defense may seek discovery of information that the prosecution claims is privileged as official information. Evid C §1040. See People v Haider (1995) 34 CA4th 661, 665, 40 CR2d 369 (collecting cases on locations of surveillance sites).

§17.2 II. CHART: DEADLINES

Ø Warning: Counsel should consult local rules before relying on this chart as many counties have specific time requirements.

Action	Deadline	Authority
Defense informally requests informer's identity (see also §17.8).	Probably optional. Counsel should leave time to make formal motion if necessary.	Pen C §1054.5(b).
Formal motion, with memorandum, to discover informer's identity.	Served and filed at least 10 court days, and with proof of service at least 5 court days, before the hearing.	Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(a).
Response to motion to disclose informer's identity.	Served and filed at least 5 court days before the hearing.	Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(a).
Reply to response to motion to disclose informer's identity.	Served and filed at least 2 court days before the hearing.	Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(a).
Prosecution request for in camera hearing.	Before prosecutor files petition for writ, or suffers a dismissal for refusal to disclose; otherwise, prosecutor may be precluded from having in camera hearing.	Compare Williams v Superior Court (1974) 38 CA3d 412, 425, 112 CR 485 (no hearing on remand), with Goodlow v Superior Court (1980) 101 CA3d 969, 977, 162 CR 121 (hearing allowed on remand), and People v Viramontes (1978) 85 CA3d 585, 149 CR 607 (prosecutor waived issue by not requesting in camera hearing in trial court).

III. DEFENSE MOTION

§17.3 A. Defendant's Right to Seek Discovery

A defendant is entitled to seek discovery of the name and present whereabouts of a "confidential informant" who (1) is a material witness on the issue of guilt and (2) can give evidence that might exonerate the defendant if there is a reasonable possibility that nondisclosure might deprive the defendant of a fair trial. Evid C §1042(a), (d); Eleazer v Superior Court (1970) 1 C3d 847, 852, 83 CR 586; Honore v Superior Court (1969) 70 C2d 162, 167, 74 CR 233.

Sometimes the prosecution will simply reveal the informer's identity and location on request. If not, the defendant will need to make a motion to disclose the identity of the informer. This is a discovery motion grounded in the Sixth Amendment right to confront witnesses and the due process right to a fair trial. Price v Superior Court (1970) 1 C3d 836, 83 CR 369; Honore v Superior Court, supra; People v Garcia (1967) 67 C2d 830, 64 CR 110; People v McShann (1958) 50 C2d 802, 330 P2d 33. See also Brady v Maryland (1963) 373 US 83, 10 L Ed 2d 215, 83 S Ct 1194; Roviaro v U.S. (1957) 353 US 53, 1 L Ed 2d 639, 77 S Ct 623.

The defendant bears the burden of making a prima facie showing of materiality, and discharges that burden by demonstrating a "reasonable possibility" that the informer could give evidence that could result in the defendant's exoneration. Theodor v Superior Court (1972) 8 C3d 77, 88, 104 CR 226.

Circumstances in which courts have ordered disclosure include the following:

- The informer was a participant in the charged offense. People v McShann (1958) 50 C2d 802, 806, 330 P2d 33 (at police request, informant set up and made controlled buy).
- The informer was a percipient witness to the charged offense's immediate antecedents or aftermath. Price v Superior Court (1970) 1 C3d 836, 839, 83 CR 369 (informant had personal knowledge that defendant had weapon matching the weapon used in crime, and heard defendant admit shooting); People v Lee (1985) 164 CA3d 830, 837, 210 CR 799 (informant had seen defendant possess and sell drugs); People v Coleman (1977) 72 CA3d 287, 298, 139 CR 908 (informant saw heroin inside apartment and made phone call to ascertain that heroin was still there). A percipient witness with evidence favorable to the defendant is required to be disclosed under Brady v Maryland, supra. People v Robinson (1995) 31 CA4th 494, 499, 37 CR2d 183.
- While neither a participant nor a percipient witness, the informer was a material witness on the issue of the defendant's guilt who could give evidence that might exonerate the defendant. Williams v Superior Court (1974) 38 CA3d 412, 421, 112 CR 485. See Twiggs v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 360, 194 CR 152 (informant material to defense of entrapment); People v Lee, supra (informant had seen defendant possess and sell drugs); People v Viramontes (1978) 85 CA3d 585, 149 CR 607 (two separate informants told police that defendant was dealing drugs at specified address).

The defendant has a right to learn not just the name of the informer but also the informer's present whereabouts. See §17.18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.4 B. Remedy for Refusal to Disclose

While the motion is made for disclosure of the identity of the informer, counsel should consider asking, in the motion, for an alternative remedy if the prosecution refuses to disclose. Remedies are discussed in §17.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.5 C. Facts in Case That Alert Counsel to Need for Motion

Usually, defense counsel learns of the existence of a confidential informer through discovery materials, such as police reports, provided by the prosecution. On discovery generally, see chap 11. Sometimes the search warrant affidavit states that it contains information from a "confidential informer." Sometimes the affidavit and supporting documents are fully or partially sealed by the magistrate to protect the identity of a confidential informer. See, e.g., People v Seibel (1990) 219 CA3d 1279, 1296, 269 CR 313; Swanson v Superior Court (1989) 211 CA3d 332, 339, 259 CR 260.

Although the defendant is not entitled to disclosure of the identity of an informer who merely provided authorities with information that furnished probable cause (see People v Hobbs (1994) 7 C4th 948, 959, 30 CR2d 651), it is common that an informer on probable cause is also a material witness on the issue of guilt. Procedures for discovery when the affidavit in support of a search warrant is wholly or partially sealed are described in People v Hobbs, supra, and People v Luttenberger (1990) 50 C3d 1, 21, 265 CR 690, discussed in §§16.19A-16.19B. See also People v Galland (2008) 45 C4th 354, 86 CR3d 841 (discussing custody of sealed affidavit). On requirements for a motion to traverse a search warrant, see §16.19.

Occasionally, defense counsel first becomes aware of the existence of an informer through interviews with the defendant or case investigation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.6 D. Format, Service, and Filing Requirements

General motion procedures apply. Evidence Code §1042(d) requires the court to hold a hearing on the defendant's "demand" for disclosure of the identity of the informant on the ground the informant is a material witness on the issue of guilt. There are no other special statutory procedures for making this motion.

Format. A motion to disclose the informant's identity should be composed of a notice of motion directed to the court and the prosecution, the motion, and a supporting memorandum. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.111 (pretrial motion in criminal cases must be accompanied by supporting memorandum); Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119 (form and format of papers presented for filing). Also, counsel should attach necessary supporting documents, such as the search warrant and affidavit or the police report, and declarations or affidavits of relevant people in support of the motion. The motion should not be made on mere information and belief. People v Oppel (1990) 222 CA3d 1146, 1153, 272 CR 340 (defendant presented only counsel's declaration on information and belief, but no evidence suggesting that unnamed informant had information that might help his case; court thus properly refused to disclose informant's identity). For discussion of requirements for motions generally, see §18.5. A sample motion to disclose the identity and location of the informant is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §17.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

Service and filing. A copy of the motion must be filed and served on each attorney of record and any unrepresented party at least 10 court days before the hearing, and proof of service must be filed at least 5 court days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(a). See discussion of service in §18.7. The court may order different deadlines, or local court rules may apply. Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(a). For more information on filing, see §18.6.

§17.7 E. Making the Required Showing; Supporting Memorandum

The parties "may" present evidence at the hearing. Evid C §1042(d).

Ø Note: Because defense counsel should anticipate that the prosecution will claim the privilege, the memorandum should address the required evidentiary hearing on the disclosure motion.

The defendant bears the burden of demonstrating that the informant would be a material witness on the issue of guilt, and that nondisclosure would deprive the defendant of a fair trial. That burden is discharged when the defendant demonstrates a reasonable possibility that the informant could give evidence on the issue of guilt that might result in exoneration. People v Borunda (1974) 11 C3d 523, 527, 113 CR 825, quoting People v Garcia (1967) 67 C2d 830, 839, 64 CR 110.

Normally, this showing includes "an articulation of a theory of defense based upon defense or prosecution evidence … or upon declarations filed in support of the motion to disclose." People v Sewell (1970) 3 CA3d 1035, 1039, 83 CR 895. While a specific articulation of a defense is not required (People v Tolliver (1975) 53 CA3d 1036, 1048, 125 CR 905), there must be more than speculation. People v Sewell, supra. Because the defendant must present some evidence, a declaration on information and belief, without more, is insufficient. People v Oppel (1990) 222 CA3d 1146, 1153, 272 CR 340. However, it is not necessary for the defense to produce its own evidence: A reasonable inference from the prosecution's evidence is sufficient. People v Otte (1989) 214 CA3d 1522, 1536, 263 CR 393. The defense can also incorporate items such as affidavits supporting search warrants. See, e.g., Williams v Superior Court (1974) 38 CA3d 412, 416, 112 CR 485. It appears that even if the pre-evidentiary-hearing showing is insufficient, sufficient evidence can be produced at the hearing itself. See Evid C §1042(d).

Usually, at least three factual questions should be addressed in the supporting memorandum (see, e.g., People v Hardeman (1982) 137 CA3d 823, 832, 187 CR 296; Goodlow v Superior Court (1980) 101 CA3d 969, 976, 162 CR 121; Williams v Superior Court (1974) 38 CA3d 412, 423, 112 CR 485):

(1) What was the informant's vantage point in time and space?

(2) What crime is alleged in the present accusatory pleading?

(3) What is the proffered defense theory of the informant's materiality?

Ø Note: No case permits the defense to make the required evidentiary showing under seal. However, the California Supreme Court has held that the required affidavit in a Pitchess motion for discovery of police personnel records may be made under seal. Garcia v Superior Court (2007) 42 C4th 63, 63 CR3d 948.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.8 F. Time to Make Defense Motion

In general. Defense counsel should move for disclosure of an informant's identity as soon as possible. The hearing may be protracted if there is an in camera hearing, and if the motion is successful, defense counsel may need time to conduct further investigation. An order shortening time may be necessary to deal with any speedy trial or other problems. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(a). Speedy trial deadlines for preliminary hearings and trial are discussed in chap 19.

Ø Note: No case has decided if the informal discovery procedures of Pen C §§1054-1054.7 must be used before a formal motion to disclose the identity of an informant. It seems unlikely, since disclosure of an informant involves a separate statutory procedure (see Pen C §1054(e)), but defense counsel may wish to make an informal request out of caution, and because the prosecutor may voluntarily disclose.

Before preliminary hearing. The defense may move for disclosure before the preliminary hearing if the undisclosed information would have an impact on probable cause to hold the defendant to answer. See, e.g., People v Goliday (1973) 8 C3d 771, 779, 106 CR 113 (prosecution owed duty to disclose identity of two eyewitness informers at preliminary hearing).

After trial has begun. Discovery of exculpatory or favorable information can be compelled during trial. Izazaga v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 356, 377, 285 CR 231. Seeking disclosure of an informant's identity during trial is particularly appropriate when there was no opportunity to make the motion before trial, or when the motion is in the nature of a motion for reconsideration made after the evidence is not what was expected. See, generally, 2 Witkin, California Evidence, chap IX, §314 (4th ed 2000).

Before probation revocation. Discovery is available before a hearing to revoke probation (and perhaps parole) because it is constitutionally compelled, even though it is not specifically mentioned in the discovery chapter of the Penal Code. Goodlow v Superior Court (1980) 101 CA3d 969, 973, 162 CR 121.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.9 G. Relationship to Pen C §1538.5 Motion

The identity of an informant generally need not be disclosed if it is sought only to aid the defense in attacking probable cause for search and seizure. Evid C §1042; see People v Luttenberger (1990) 50 C3d 1, 13, 265 CR 690. Luttenberger discovery may, however, disclose that an informant who provided information relevant to probable cause is also a material witness on guilt or innocence. Note also that, when the trial court holds an in camera hearing on a motion to quash or traverse a warrant because the affidavit in support of a search warrant is completely sealed, one of the required determinations the trial court must make is whether the informant's identity must be disclosed because the informant is a material witness on guilt or innocence. People v Hobbs (1994) 7 C4th 948, 972, 30 CR2d 651. For further discussion of Luttenberger and Hobbs, see §§16.19A-16.19B.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.10 IV. PROSECUTION MOTION TO DENY, RESTRICT, OR DEFER

If the prosecutor intends to call a witness at trial, including an informant, the prosecutor must disclose the witness's name, address, and relevant statements. Pen C §1054.1. The prosecutor can move to deny, restrict, or defer disclosure in the event of threats or possible danger to the safety of a victim or witness, possible loss or destruction of evidence, or possible compromise of other investigations by law enforcement. Pen C §1054.7; People v Jackson (2003) 110 CA4th 280, 290, 1 CR3d 561. If law enforcement is still "using" the informant, then premature disclosure of identity may compromise other investigations. No case has decided if the prosecution can simply withhold this information by invoking the privilege of Evid C §1041.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. PROSECUTION RESPONSE TO DEFENSE MOTION

§17.11 A. Prosecutor's Three Lines of Argument

There are usually three lines of prosecution argument made in response to a defense request for disclosure of an informant's identity. First, the prosecutor can argue that the law does not require that the informant's identity be disclosed for any of the various reasons summarized in §17.12, among others. If this argument is successful, disclosure is not required. See discussion in §17.12. Second, the prosecutor can claim the Evid C §1041 privilege against disclosure. See discussion in §17.13. Third, the prosecutor can ask that disclosure be denied, restricted, or delayed under Pen C §1054.7.

Ø Note: If the first two arguments are not successful, then, whether or not the third argument is made, the prosecutor should usually ask for an in camera hearing under Evid C §1042(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.12 B. Arguing That Informant's Identity Need Not Be Disclosed

A motion to disclose the informant's identity will be denied in the following situations:

- The informant is not a material witness on the issue of the defendant's guilt of the charged offense. This is the most common reason for denying the motion. See, e.g., People v Wilks (1978) 21 C3d 460, 469, 146 CR 364 (informant provided only partial justification for defendant's detention); People v Dimitrov (1995) 33 CA4th 18, 29, 39 CR2d 257 (informant made controlled buy at defendant's apartment 2 days before search warrant was executed); People v Consuegra (1994) 26 CA4th 1726, 1736, 32 CR2d 288 (preliminary-hearing evidence of surveillance without indication of cause does not support disclosure of informant who may have caused it); People v Austin (1994) 23 CA4th 1596, 1610, 28 CR2d 885, disapproved on other grounds in People v Palmer (2001) 24 C4th 856, 861, 103 CR2d 13 (informant who introduced undercover officer to defendant may not be material witness in transaction made weeks later); In re Benny S. (1991) 230 CA3d 102, 108, 281 CR 1 (informant gave information on sale of drugs from car, not on charged offense, which was possession of drugs); People v Fried (1989) 214 CA3d 1309, 1314, 263 CR 237 (informants gave information that defendants were selling marijuana and cocaine from their home; disclosure denied because informant could give no information on charged offense, which was possession of marijuana in house).
- The defense seeks the informant's identity only to attack probable cause to arrest or to issue a search warrant. Evid C §1042. See Theodor v Superior Court (1972) 8 C3d 77, 88, 104 CR 226; People v Hardeman (1982) 137 CA3d 823, 830, 187 CR 296. See also chap 16.
- The defense admits knowing the informant's identity. People v Moran (1970) 1 C3d 755, 761, 83 CR 411; People v Tolliver (1975) 53 CA3d 1036, 1043, 125 CR 905; People v Smith (1959) 174 CA2d 129, 132, 344 P2d 435.

Ø Note: Even if the defendant knows the informant's identity, the defense may still seek disclosure of the informant's location. See §17.18.

- The defense speculates that an earlier informant who provided probable cause to issue a warrant was also present when the warrant was served, if the defense obviously already knows who was present when the warrant was served. People v Hardeman, supra.
- The informant's identity is unknown to the police, but the informant is presumed reliable because of the circumstances. See People v Ramirez (1996) 41 CA4th 1608, 49 CR2d 311 (anonymous tip sufficient to provide officers with reasonable suspicion to detain defendant because detaining officers had several forms of direct corroboration of information). See also People v Callen (1987) 194 CA3d 558, 562, 239 CR 584 (police received information from anonymous caller on "Crimestoppers" telephone hotline; held that requiring police to discover caller's identity would be onerous burden on law enforcement).
- The person who gave the information is not an "informant." See People v Guereca (1987) 189 CA3d 884, 889, 234 CR 690 (undercover police officer made buy with person who did not know of officer's job; nonpolice witness was material witness but was not informant; no duty to provide information on witness's current location).

§17.13 C. Claiming Evid C §1041 Privilege

Under Evid C §1041, the privilege against disclosure of an informant's identity may be claimed when:

- An informant furnishes information purporting to disclose a violation of law (Evid C §1041);
- The information is furnished to a law enforcement officer or agency, or related entity (Evid C §1041(b));
- The information is furnished in confidence (Evid C §1041(b); see People v Otte (1989) 214 CA3d 1522, 263 CR 393 (test is not informant's state of mind, but whether investigation is of type such that disclosure would cause public interest to suffer)); and
- There is a need to preserve the confidentiality of the informant's identity that outweighs the need for disclosure, or disclosure is prohibited by a federal or state statute (Evid C §1041(a)).

The scope of the privilege includes protecting any information that could tend to disclose the informant's identity. Evid C §1042(d); People v Hobbs (1994) 7 C4th 948, 962, 30 CR2d 651.

The privilege may be claimed by a "public entity" (Evid C §1041(a)), which usually means the law enforcement agency that has the informant's identity. California Trial Objections §43.7 (Cal CEB Annual).

The privilege is waived if a person authorized to disclose the informant's identity does disclose it. Evid C §1041(a)(2). The informant's identity may be disclosed even if the prosecution is opposed to the disclosure. Evid C §1041(c). The privilege does not apply if a person is called as a witness and asked if he or she is the informant. Law Revision Comment to Evid C §1041. However, the privilege is not waived by disclosure of the informant's identity at an in camera hearing. Evid C §1042(d).

The rationale for the privilege is a strong public interest in encouraging people to report illegal activities. Informants may be hesitant to cooperate if they believe they may be exposed to reprisals. People v Lee (1985) 164 CA3d 830, 835, 210 CR 799. Informants are more likely than the ordinary person to become homicide victims. See People v Towler (1982) 31 C3d 105, 116 n4, 181 CR 391. The privilege of nondisclosure gives the informant some protection against reprisals and maintains his or her continued usefulness to law enforcement. See People v McShann (1958) 50 C2d 802, 806, 330 P2d 33. Trial courts must be careful in assessing danger to informants. John Z. v Superior Court (PG&E) (1991) 1 CA4th 789, 791, 2 CR2d 556; People v Otte (1989) 214 CA3d 1522, 1534 n8, 263 CR 393. See People v Navarro (2006) 138 CA4th 146, 162, 41 CR3d 164.

Although the privilege against disclosure of an informant's identity is sometimes argued together with the privilege for official information, they are different motions. Compare Evid C §1040 with Evid C §§1041-1042; see People v Superior Court (Biggs) (1971) 19 CA3d 522, 97 CR 118 (defendant who had been informant wanted reports he had made to Bureau of Narcotics Enforcement).

> Ø Note: If a claim of privilege is sustained in a criminal proceeding, Evid C §1042(a) requires the court to make an order or finding of fact adverse to the "public entity bringing the proceeding" (i.e., the prosecution) on any issue to which the privileged information is material. This is true whether the privilege is an informant's identity or any other official secret or privilege.

§17.14 VI. IN-CUSTODY INFORMANTS TESTIFYING AS WITNESSES

There are special rules for in-custody informants who are neither codefendants, co-conspirators, nor percipient witnesses, concerning statements made by the defendant while both the defendant and the informant were held in a correctional institution. Pen C §1127a.

When the prosecutor calls an in-custody informant as a witness during trial, the prosecutor must file with the court, contemporaneously with calling the witness, a written statement setting out all consideration promised to or received by the informant. Pen C §1127a(c). "Consideration" is defined in Pen C §1127a(d). The in-custody informant's statement must be given to the defense before trial. Pen C §1127a(c). No specific pretrial deadline for providing the statement to the defense is given in §1127a(c); presumably the time limits for informal discovery under Pen C §1054.5 would apply. Nothing in §1127a, however, prevents the defense from seeking discovery about the in-custody informant outside the guidelines of that section. Pen C §1127a(c).

Other special rules concerning in-custody informants are:

- The amount of money law enforcement may pay in-custody informants is limited. Pen C §4001.1.
- Law enforcement and their informants are prohibited from deliberately trying to elicit incriminating statements from defendants. Pen C §4001.1.
- Victims of "in-custody informants," as defined by §1127a, must be notified when the informant is given consideration for testifying. Pen C §1191.25.
- The defendant has the right to a cautionary instruction on the testimony of an in-custody informant. Pen C §1127a(b). The defense must request that the instruction be given, however; the court need not give it sua sponte. People v Carrera (1989) 49 C3d 291, 314, 261 CR 348.
- If the state places a cooperating informant in a cell with the defendant after the defendant's right to counsel has attached, and the informant induces the defendant to talk about the crime charged, the defendant's Sixth Amendment right to counsel may have been violated, in which case the statements must be excluded. Massiah v U.S. (1964) 377 US 201, 206, 12 L Ed 2d 246, 250, 84 S Ct 1199; Randolph v California (9th Cir 2004) 380 F3d 1133, 1143.

VII. HEARINGS ON MOTION

§17.15 A. First Hearing: Defense Must Show Materiality

When the defense moves for disclosure of the identity of the informant on the ground that the informant is a material witness on the issue of guilt, the court must conduct a hearing at which all parties can present evidence. Evid C §1042(d). This hearing is held in open court but outside the presence of the jury.

The defense has the burden of showing a reasonable possibility that the informant might give exonerating testimony. Twiggs v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 360, 194 CR 152; People v Otte (1989) 214 CA3d 1522, 1535, 263 CR 393. If the defense shows that the informant was a participant or a percipient witness to the offense, the burden is met. People v Goliday (1973) 8 C3d 771, 777, 106 CR 113; Theodor v Superior Court (1972) 8 C3d 77, 88, 104 CR 226.

Many informant-disclosure cases have noted that "might" and "possibility" are words that "have vague and almost limitless perimeters that must be determined on a case-by-case basis." See, e.g., Williams v Superior Court (1974) 38 CA3d 412, 421, 112 CR 485. The defense must show more than mere speculation (People v Sewell (1970) 3 CA3d 1035, 1039, 83 CR 895) or a mere desire to cross-examine an informant who might have some information about the case. People v Duval (1990) 221 CA3d 1105, 1114, 271 CR 240.

If the court does find that the informant is not a material witness on the issue of guilt, the motion must be denied. See, e.g., People v Hardeman (1982) 137 CA3d 823, 828, 187 CR 296.

If the court finds at this hearing that the informant is a material witness, the court will order disclosure of the informant's identity and present whereabouts unless the prosecution requests an in camera hearing under Evid C §1042(d). See §17.16.

If the prosecution does not seek an in camera hearing but still refuses to disclose the informant's identity, defense counsel should move for dismissal or other appropriate remedy. Evid C §1042.

If the prosecutor seeks writ relief after a judge's ruling that the informant's identity must be disclosed, rather than requesting an in camera hearing first, the prosecutor may be precluded from thereafter having an in camera hearing. The courts of appeal are divided on this issue. Compare Williams v Superior Court (1974) 38 CA3d 412, 425, 112 CR 485 (no hearing on remand), with Goodlow v Superior Court (1980) 101 CA3d 969, 977, 162 CR 121 (hearing allowed on remand), and People v Ingram (1978) 87 CA3d 832, 840, 151 CR 239 (appeal; hearing allowed on remand).

§17.16 B. In Camera Hearing

Evidence Code §1042(d) provides that if the privilege is claimed during the open-court hearing, the prosecution can request that the court hold an in camera hearing. At the in camera hearing, the prosecution has the opportunity to establish that nondisclosure would not compromise a defendant's due process rights even when the defendant has established a prima facie case for disclosure. People v Lanfrey (1988) 204 CA3d 491, 502, 251 CR 189.

The persons present at the in camera hearing are the judge, a court reporter, the prosecutor, the law enforcement recipient of the confidential information (often the search warrant's affiant), and, normally, the informant. All witnesses must be sworn. People v Lee (1985) 164 CA3d 830, 210 CR 799. Although the defense may not participate at the hearing (People v Galante (1983) 143 CA3d 709, 712, 192 CR 184), defense counsel may submit to the court a set of interrogatories that it wants the court to ask the informant. See People v Lewis (2009) 172 CA4th 1426, 1438 n9, 92 CR3d 191 (motion to disclose police observation post). The in camera hearing may be videotaped. People v Flannery (1985) 164 CA3d 1112, 1121, 210 CR 899. Physical evidence may be considered. People v Levine (1984) 152 CA3d 1058, 1070, 199 CR 756 (tape recording).

The primary objective of an Evid C §1042(d) in camera hearing is to determine whether a reasonable possibility exists that nondisclosure might deprive the defendant of a fair trial—i.e., whether the informant might have knowledge of facts that would tend to exculpate the defendant. Honore v Superior Court (1969) 70 C2d 162, 168, 74 CR 233; People v Tolliver (1975) 53 CA3d 1036, 1044, 125 CR 905. But see People v Lanfrey (1988) 204 CA3d 491, 502, 251 CR 189 (no showing that informant would testify to self-defense); People v McCarthy (1978) 79 CA3d 547, 554, 144 CR 822 (disclosure not required when trial court reasonably concluded that informant's testimony would be incriminating).

The prosecutor often begins the hearing with an indication of the prosecution's objective, conducts a foundational examination of each witness, and invites the court to conduct the exploratory examination of the witnesses.

The law enforcement recipient of the information often testifies to the confidential nature of the communication from the informant, explains why the informant's confidentiality must be preserved, and identifies the informant in those cases in which the informant will testify. The informant often testifies to his or her identity and knowledge of the facts about the particular accusations against the defendant. An informant who is an eyewitness to the offense generally must testify at the in camera hearing. People v Ruiz (1992) 9 CA4th 1485, 12 CR2d 234. Otherwise, there is no absolute requirement that the informant testify. People v Dimitrov (1995) 33 CA4th 18, 30, 39 CR2d 257; People v Fried (1989) 214 CA3d 1309, 1314, 263 CR 237; People v Alderrou (1987) 191 CA3d 1074, 236 CR 740. See also U.S. v Ordonez (9th Cir 1984) 737 F2d 793, 809 (discusses importance of having informant testify at in camera hearing).

At the conclusion of the hearing, the reporter should transcribe a copy of the notes. That copy should be sealed with any exhibits introduced, and delivered to the judge's clerk. Defense counsel should ensure this is done. The court should state for the record whether it finds the witnesses credible and whether it finds that nondisclosure could possibly deprive the defendant of a fair trial. See People v Flannery (1985) 164 CA3d 1112, 210 CR 899; California Trial Objections §44.10 (Cal CEB Annual).

A sample motion objecting to in camera hearing procedures is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §17.2 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§17.17 C. Third Hearing; Resolution of Claim of Privilege

The proceeding following the in camera hearing is held in open court with all parties present. The court typically first summarizes its findings based on the in camera hearing.

The court then hears argument from counsel and resolves the questions of the claim of privilege and whether nondisclosure would deprive the defendant of a fair trial. The court does this on the basis of the evidence received both in open court and in camera. If the privilege was properly claimed (see Evid C §1041), and if nondisclosure would not deprive the defendant of a fair trial, the motion should be denied. Evid C §1042(d). If the court rules that the privilege does not apply or that nondisclosure "might deprive the defendant of a fair trial," the motion must be granted. Evid C §1042(d).

If the court grants the motion, defense counsel should demand at that time that the prosecution elect between disclosure and dismissal or reduction of the charge to one on which the informant's testimony would not be material. See People v Rodgers (1976) 54 CA3d 508, 517, 126 CR 719. See §17.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.18 D. Hearing on Requirement That Informant's Present Location Be Revealed (Eleazer Hearing)

If the court orders disclosure, the prosecution must provide all information necessary to assist the defense in locating the informant. People v Goliday (1973) 8 C3d 771, 782, 106 CR 113; Eleazer v Superior Court (1970) 1 C3d 847, 851, 83 CR 586. The informant's last-known address may be insufficient.

If the prosecution does not know the current whereabouts of the informant, or if the defense cannot locate the informant after being given an address by the prosecution, the court may conduct a hearing on the reasonableness of the prosecution's good faith efforts to maintain contact with the informant. Twiggs v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 360, 365, 194 CR 152; People v Cheatham (1971) 21 CA3d 675, 678, 98 CR 670; People v Goodman (1971) 20 CA3d 284, 287, 97 CR 534.

The court may refuse to order the prosecution to reveal to defense counsel the address (see Pen C §§1054(d), 1054.7) and even the identity (see Montez v Superior Court (1992) 5 CA4th 763, 7 CR2d 76) of a witness whose life is in danger. But see Alvarado v Superior Court (2000) 23 C4th 1121, 1148, 99 CR2d 149, in which three inmates were afraid for their safety after giving statements implicating defendants in the murder of another inmate. The court held that the defendants were entitled to learn the witnesses' identities, despite their fears, because, as was not true in Montez, their truthfulness and veracity were at issue and disclosure would assist in vindication of the defendants' Sixth Amendment confrontation rights. No California case has ruled on whether these rules also apply to informants.

The defense may seek dismissal for the prosecution's unexcused failure to provide sufficient information to locate the informant. See Eleazer v Superior Court, supra. See §17.19.

If the defense fails to seek timely relief from the prosecutor's noncompliance with a discovery order regarding an informant, then the issue is waived on appeal. People v Gonzalez (1990) 51 C3d 1179, 1214, 275 CR 729.

§17.19 VIII. PROSECUTION'S REFUSAL TO DISCLOSE IDENTITY OF INFORMANT ALMOST ALWAYS REQUIRES ADVERSE FINDING, AND OFTEN DISMISSAL OR REDUCTION OF CHARGES

Unless federal law prohibits disclosure, if the court sustains a privilege claim, the court must make an order or finding of fact adverse to the prosecution as required by law on any issue to which the privileged information is material. Evid C §1042(a).

The adverse finding is generally dismissal or reduction of charges and is compelled by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. See U.S. v Raddatz (1980) 447 US 667, 679, 65 L Ed 2d 424, 435, 100 S Ct 2406 (due process is basis for requiring government to disclose informant's identity at trial when identity shown to be relevant and helpful to defense); Roviaro v U.S. (1957) 353 US 53, 61, 1 L Ed 2d 639, 645, 77 S Ct 623 (judgment reversed for failure to reveal informant's identity, in part because of "fundamental requirements of fairness"; dismissal of case is appropriate remedy in trial court); People v Borunda (1974) 11 C3d 523, 527, 113 CR 825 (dismissal of only charge: possession of heroin); People v Goliday (1973) 8 C3d 771, 783, 106 CR 113 (dismissal of counts for sale of drugs, but not of counts for possession for sale). The adverse finding may be reduction to a lesser charge for which the informant is not a material witness. See, e.g., People v Long (1974) 42 CA3d 751, 758, 117 CR 200 (charge of possession of heroin for sale reduced to simple possession).

Ø Practice tip: Defense counsel should request the adverse finding; the court may not impose one otherwise.

It is common that the informant is material to a prior drug sale but not material to a later mere possession or possession with intent to sell. See, e.g., People v Goliday (1973) 8 C3d 771, 783, 106 CR 113. In that or a similar situation, the court will likely dismiss only the sales count. If there is no possession or possession with intent count, the court may suggest that the prosecutor amend the pleading to add a possession count, and wait to dismiss the sales count until after the complaint or information has been amended. People v Goliday, supra; People v Long (1974) 42 CA3d 751, 758, 117 CR 200 (proper remedy is reduction to possession).

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.20 IX. APPELLATE REVIEW OF ORDER CONCERNING INFORMANT

The trial court's ruling on a motion to disclose the informant's identity is generally subject to review in the appellate courts by writ (see, e.g., Theodor v Superior Court (1972) 8 C3d 77, 104 CR 226; chap 42) or by appeal (see, e.g., People v Gordon (1990) 50 C3d 1223, 1245, 270 CR 451, overruled on other grounds in People v Edwards (1991) 54 C3d 787, 835, 1 CR2d 696; chaps 43-44). Failure to move for disclosure in the trial court, however, precludes raising the issue on appeal. Priestly v Superior Court (1958) 50 C2d 812, 819, 330 P2d 39; People v Pendergrass (1986) 182 CA3d 63, 67, 226 CR 851.

Ø Warning: A plea of guilty or no contest generally forecloses appellate review of the trial court's order denying a motion to disclose an informant's identity. People v Hobbs (1994) 7 C4th 948, 957 n1, 30 CR2d 651; People v Ivester (1991) 235 CA3d 328, 341, 286 CR 540 (habeas corpus); People v Castro (1974) 42 CA3d 960, 963, 117 CR 295 (appeal).

If an in camera hearing was held, the trial court clerk should send the sealed transcript of the in camera proceeding to the appellate court, and the appellate court should review the sealed transcript in camera. See Evid C §1042(d).

The standard of review is not settled. See Gordon, 50 C3d at 1246 (suggesting de novo or abuse of discretion standard, but upholding trial court's ruling by any standard).

§18.1 I. OVERVIEW

Pretrial motion practice is an essential part of criminal law practice. A "motion" is an application for an order. CCP §1003. Motions may be oral or written and may be set orally in court, e.g., at arraignment, or they may be filed with the court clerk and a hearing date selected at that time, depending on local rules of court, local custom, and the circumstances of the motion. Written pretrial motions should conform to the requirements of Cal Rules of Ct 4.111, discussed in §§18.2, 18.5. The moving party is responsible for setting the motion for a hearing. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.111. Once made, a motion is disposed of at a hearing at which the moving party has the burden to support the motion by proof (Evid C §500; People v Lopez (1997) 52 CA4th 233, 251, 60 CR2d 511; People v Carson (1970) 4 CA3d 782, 785, 84 CR 699) and to require a ruling from the court. See People v Obie (1974) 41 CA3d 744, 750, 116 CR 283, disapproved on other grounds in People v Rollo (1977) 20 C3d 109, 120 n4, 141 CR 177.

This chapter discusses procedures common to pretrial motions generally. See §§18.2, 18.5-18.9. This chapter also discusses pretrial motions for appointment of experts (see §§18.10-18.15); dismissal based on discriminatory prosecution (Murgia motions) (see §§18.16-18.25); recusal of the prosecutor (see §§18.26-18.31); dismissal based on vindictive prosecution (see §§18.32-18.37); and AIDS testing of the defendant or a minor charged with a crime (see §18.38).

Other pretrial motions are discussed in other chapters. The checklist in §18.4 includes cross-references to those discussions. Although the checklist in §18.4 contains the most common pretrial motions, neither defense attorneys nor prosecutors should feel constrained by the list. Counsel should fashion motions to fit their cases and should keep track of motions discussed in the advance sheets as a source of ideas.

Ø Note: Although many pretrial motions are made orally, either because of local practice or because of the circumstances of the case, it is better practice for defense counsel to submit written motions, and for prosecutors to respond either orally or in writing. A filed document tends to make the judge think that counsel is serious about the position taken. Further, written documents provide the authority for the judge to rule on the motion as well as a clear record of counsel's contentions in case of appeal.

For forms for pretrial motions, see California Criminal Law Forms Manual (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§18.2 A. Chart: Timing of Pretrial Motions

Ø Warning: Counsel should consult local rules before relying on this chart. Many courts have specific time requirements not otherwise required by the California Rules of Court. Note that a local court rule must be adopted in accordance with the statutes governing the promulgation and adoption of local rules to be valid. See, e.g., Hall v Superior Court (2005) 133 CA4th 908, 35 CR3d 206 (trial court's practice of requiring all motions to be filed and heard 30 days before trial was invalid). For discussion of specific time requirements for particular pretrial motions, see the discussion of each motion in other parts of this book.

§18.3 B. Relying on Authority

Stare decisis. Published decisions of the California Supreme Court take precedence over published decisions of California courts of appeal concerning the same issue when the facts are not distinguishable. *Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v Superior Cour*t (1962) 57 C2d 450, 455, 20 CR 321; People v Linkenauger (1995) 32 CA4th 1603, 1613, 38 CR2d 868. A court of appeal is not bound to follow a prior decision of another district or division. Estate of Cleveland (1993) 17 CA4th 1700, 1709, 22 CR2d 590. For the doctrine of stare decisis to apply, the issue in question must have been considered and decided by the court. People v Heitzman (1994) 9 C4th 189, 209, 37 CR2d 236; People v Donaldson (1995) 36 CA4th 532, 538, 42 CR2d 314. With limited exception (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.1115(b)), parties must not cite unpublished opinions (Cal Rules of Ct 8.1115(a)), including opinions of the court of appeal superseded by a grant of review, rehearing, or other action (Cal Rules of Ct 8.1105(e)). See People v Williams (2009) 176 CA4th 1521, 1529, 98 CR3d 770.

All state courts are bound by decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court interpreting the federal Constitution. People v Bradley (1969) 1 C3d 80, 86, 81 CR 457. In the absence of a controlling precedent, a decision of the California Supreme Court interpreting the federal Constitution will control and bind all inferior courts. When neither the U.S. Supreme Court nor the California Supreme Court has decided a federal issue, the appropriate controlling authority is a decision by an intermediate California court of appeal, interpreting the federal Constitution. See Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v Superior Court, supra.

Decisions of lower federal courts are not binding on California courts but when pertinent to the court's analysis of an issue, "they are entitled to great weight." In re De Leon (2004) 117 CA4th 1116, 1121, 13 CR3d 310. See also People v Bradley, supra. Decisions of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals are entitled to no more weight than the decisions of other lower federal courts, even though California is in the Ninth Circuit. Debtor Reorganizers, Inc. v State Bd. of Equalization (1976) 58 CA3d 691, 696, 130 CR 64; People ex rel Renne v Servantes (2001) 86 CA4th 1081, 1090, 103 CR2d 870.

Law of the case. An appellate decision in a case usually binds the parties, even if it is not published. For example, if a reviewing court renders a decision on the merits, after issuance of an order to show cause and argument, in a proceeding for a writ of mandamus or prohibition, that decision becomes the law of the case. People v Veitch (1982) 128 CA3d 460, 465, 180 CR 412. Summary denial of a writ petition, however, has no preclusive effect. People v Durrett (1985) 164 CA3d 947, 955, 210 CR 874. The law of the case doctrine applies to all proceedings in the same case unless adherence to the doctrine would result in an unjust decision. People v Stanley (1995) 10 C4th 764, 787, 42 CR2d 543. On the related doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel, see People v Barragan (2004) 32 C4th 236, 252, 9 CR3d 76. See also §§26.29-26.33 on res judicata and collateral estoppel.

D. Form, Service, and Filing of Pretrial Motions

§18.5 1. Form of Motion

Components of motion. A pretrial motion filed in a criminal case should include the following parts unless other requirements are set out for that motion by statute or by local rules of court: notice of motion (see CCP §1010); memorandum (Cal Rules of Ct 4.111); and proof of service (Cal Rules of Ct 4.111; see CCP §1013a). An order is frequently attached for the judge's signature.

Format of papers. Detailed rules for the format of papers presented for filing in the trial court are in Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. Recycled paper must be used for all originals filed with the court and copies of papers, documents, and exhibits, whether filed with the court or served on other parties. Cal Rules of Ct 2.101. See generally California Criminal Law Forms Manual, chap 1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005) for form and format of court papers, including physical form of paper, margins, page numbering, exhibits, and first-page format.

Ø Note: The trial court rules in Cal Rules of Ct Title 2 apply to all cases in the trial courts unless specified otherwise by statute or another rule. Cal Rules of Ct 2.2. Consequently, although written pretrial motions are less common in misdemeanor cases than in felony cases, an attorney filing a written motion in a misdemeanor case should also comply with these rules.

Notice of motion. The first page of the notice of motion should give the court and cause, and the name, address, phone number, fax number, e-mail address, and State Bar membership number of the attorney making the motion. Cal Rules of Ct 2.111 (contains specific line numbers on which this information is to appear). The number of the case should be to the right and opposite the title of the case. Immediately below the case number should be the title of the motion (the order being sought). Cal Rules of Ct 2.111(6). Below the title of the motion should be the date, time, and location (if known) of the hearing on the motion; a description of any documents attached to the notice of motion (e.g., supporting memorandum, declaration); and any trial date.

The pages should be firmly bound together at the top (Cal Rules of Ct 2.113) and consecutively paginated at the bottom unless a rule provides otherwise for a particular type of document (Cal Rules of Ct 2.109). The pages must have two standard-sized prepunched holes, centered 2½ inches apart, and ⅝ inch from the top of the paper. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.115.

Ø Note: Some local rules of court require the caption to show the length of time required to hear the motion and whether the defendant is in or out of custody.

If there are multiple parties, the caption should identify the moving party and the nature of the motion. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.111(6). If other papers have been filed concerning the motion, it is preferable for counsel to use a title that differentiates among them.

Ø Note: On a showing of good cause, the court can permit the filing of papers that do not comply with Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. Cal Rules of Ct 2.118(c).

The substantive portion of the notice of motion should state the order being sought and the grounds for the request. Although this is not required in criminal cases, it is required in civil law and motion matters (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110) and is commonly included in criminal cases. Check local rules for any special requirements.

Supporting memorandum. All pretrial motions must be accompanied by a supporting memorandum. Failure to file the memorandum can be considered an admission that the motion is without merit. Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(b). Because no rule of court sets forth the contents of the supporting memorandum in criminal cases, counsel should follow the rule for civil cases (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113) if no local rules apply. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.2. This civil rule provides that a supporting memorandum must contain "a statement of facts, a concise statement of the law, evidence and arguments relied on, and a discussion of the statutes, cases, and textbooks cited in support of the position advanced." Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(b). Case citations must include the year of decision and the volume and page number of the official report.

See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(c). The attorney should integrate the facts of the case into the memorandum.

Ø Note: Although Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(f) requires counsel in civil cases to include a table of contents and table of authorities if the memorandum exceeds 10 pages, and an opening summary of argument if it exceeds 15 pages, this portion of Rule 3.1113 is not commonly followed in criminal cases.

Factual support for motion. The motion must allege the specific facts that, if proved, would entitle the moving party to the relief sought. These facts are alleged by declarations or affidavits, exhibits, or reference to documents in the court's file, not by putting a statement of facts in the supporting memorandum. Declarations (see CCP §2015.5) and affidavits (see CCP §2003) are interchangeable (see CCP §2015.3) and are used to state the facts the motion is based on (see Evid C §§135, 225), to fill factual gaps in the record, and as a substitute for sworn oral testimony (see CCP §2002). See forms in Crim Law Forms Man §§18.3-18.4.

Ø Note: The declarant or affiant can be cross-examined on request by the opponent at the hearing on the motion. People v Williams (1973) 30 CA3d 502, 509, 106 CR 324; People v Estrada (2003) 105 CA4th 783, 792, 129 CR2d 589.

Ordinarily, the documents providing evidentiary support for a motion should show that the facts alleged can be proved by admissible evidence. Thus, declarations should usually be based on the declarant's personal knowledge. There are exceptions, however. For example, a Pitchess motion can be based on a declaration of counsel sworn on "information and belief," i.e., hearsay (see Evid C §1043(b)(3)).

§18.6 2. Setting Motion for Hearing

Any pretrial motion that is not subject to a specific deadline should be brought as soon as practicable after counsel discovers the grounds for the motion, and if possible, should be set for hearing far enough in advance of trial to permit the matter to be resolved without any disruption to the trial schedule. See, e.g., People v Windham (1977) 19 C3d 121, 128 n5, 137 CR 8 (Faretta motion is pretrial motion and should be brought within a reasonable time before trial); People v Nicholson (1994) 24 CA4th 584, 591, 29 CR2d 485 (same).

The moving party must set the motion for hearing. Written pretrial motions in criminal cases must be filed with the court at least 10 court days before the hearing on the motion; proof of service must be filed at least 5 court days before the hearing on the motion; respondent must serve and file his or her response at least 5 court days before the hearing; and any reply from the moving party must be served and filed at least 2 court days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(a). If local court rules set different time limits, these take precedence over the Cal Rules of Ct 4.111 requirements. Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(a). Counsel should check local rules in each county in which he or she practices. In addition, some courts limit motions to a particular day of the week.

If an attorney needs to have a hearing on a motion sooner than the 10 days set by Rule 4.111, counsel should apply for an order shortening time. If possible, counsel should obtain opposing counsel's stipulation and attach that to the application. The application may be typed at the end of the notice of motion or on a separate sheet attached to and served with the moving papers. The application for an order shortening time should be accompanied by a declaration. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(b) (declaration showing good cause must accompany application for order shortening time in civil law and motion cases). Because applications for orders shortening time are made ex parte, counsel should be sure to notify opposing counsel. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1204. See also California Criminal Law Forms Manual §18.9 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). Many courts allow the request to be made orally at the time the motion is set in court, and rule on it at that time.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.7 3. Service and Filing Requirements

Pretrial motions may be filed with the criminal court clerk, or with the clerk of the court where the motion will be heard, depending on local practice. Whether filing the papers with the court in person or by mail, counsel should include a copy to be conformed by the clerk and returned to counsel. A return stamped envelope should be enclosed if papers are mailed. The conformed copy is counsel's proof of the fact and date of filing of the motion.

Ø Note: When serving a prosecutor or public defender in a large office by mail, put the deputy's name on the envelope to expedite its timely delivery.

Service should be made on each attorney of record and any unrepresented party. Service may be accomplished by mailing a copy of the motion under CCP §§1012-1013a or by serving the papers personally or by substituted service under CCP §1011. Sample forms (proof of service by mail; personal service) are in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §§18.6-18.9 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.8 E. Responding to Pretrial Motion

The response must be filed at least 5 court days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(a).

The response to a pretrial motion consists of a supporting memorandum and a proof of service. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.111; CCP §1013a. It may also include declarations or affidavits. See CCP §§2003, 2009, 2015.5. The opposition memorandum is prepared in the same format as those done by the moving party. It is captioned the same as other court papers.

Ø Note: Counsel should be sure to note on the response that it is an opposition to the motion. See the sample form in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §18.11 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

If the moving party did not summarize the case for the hearing judge, the opposing party may wish to do so, and can correct inaccuracies in the moving party's statement of facts. The memorandum should be organized so that the judge can easily compare the points made in the moving party's memorandum with the respondent's opposition arguments. An opposition memorandum may also state objections to all or part of the moving party's declarations or affidavits. Generally, the same objections that may be made to testimony and exhibits at a trial may be directed to declarations. See CCP §2002; McLellan v McLellan (1972) 23 CA3d 343, 359, 100 CR 258; Mayo v Beber (1960) 177 CA2d 544, 551, 2 CR 405.

The form of any declarations or affidavits filed with the response is the same as those prepared by moving party's counsel; the opposition memorandum and declarations or affidavits are also in the same form as the ones that accompany the motion. See §18.5. See also the forms in Crim Law Forms Man, chap 18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.9 F. Reply by Moving Party

The moving party is not required to file a reply to the opposition memorandum. But if one is filed, it should be captioned like the other papers and accompanied by proof of service. It must be served and filed at least 2 court days before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(a). The reply consists of a memorandum in the same form as the response. Its title should indicate that it is a reply, e.g., "Reply to Opposition Memorandum."

III. SELECTED PRETRIAL MOTIONS

Ø Note: Most pretrial motions are treated separately in other chapters. See the checklist of pretrial motions and cross-references in §18.4.

A. Motion for Appointment of Expert

§18.10 1. Nature of Motion

Although either side may move for the appointment of an expert in a criminal trial, and the court may appoint an expert on its own motion (see Evid C §730), with an indigent defendant, the motion is almost always made by defense counsel. See Torres v Municipal Court (1975) 50 CA3d 778, 783, 123 CR 553. The right to effective assistance of counsel entitles indigent defendants access to public funds for expert services. Ake v Oklahoma (1985) 470 US 68, 76, 84 L Ed 2d 53, 61, 105 S Ct 1087; Corenevsky v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 307, 319, 204 CR 165. Counsel for an indigent defendant may move for appointment of an expert by the court, to be compensated by public funds. See Evid C §§730-731. See California Criminal Law Forms Manual §11.8 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005) (motion for in-chambers appointment of defense expert).

The court has the authority to appoint an expert when it appears to the court that expert evidence is or may be required. Evid C §730. The burden is on the indigent defendant to show that expert services are necessary to his or her defense. People v Guerra (2006) 37 C4th 1067, 1085, 40 CR3d 118. On establishing indigency, see §3.3.

The court has the discretion to fix compensation for the expert's services (Evid C §730), which are a charge against the county (Evid C §731(a)). An appointment under §730 does not preclude a party from producing other expert evidence on the same fact or matter, but these experts must be paid by the party calling them. Evid C §733.

Ø Note: Under the Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity (Fam C §§7550-7558), a special set of statutes regulates the appointment and compensation of experts when the defendant's blood type is in issue. See Fam C §7556; People v Lindsey (1978) 84 CA3d 851, 862, 149 CR 47 (discussing former Evid C §896).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.11 2. Timing of Motion

The request for the appointment of an expert for an indigent defendant should be made by written motion before trial. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.111. When counsel first becomes aware of the need for expert testimony during trial, the motion may be made during trial. People v De La Plane (1979) 88 CA3d 223, 238, 151 CR 843.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.12 3. Burden of Proof

Although the decision to appoint an expert is within the court's discretion (Torres v Municipal Court (1975) 50 CA3d 778, 784, 123 CR 553), equal protection requires that the court appoint an expert needed to assist an indigent defendant when the defendant shows a need for such an appointment. People v Faxel (1979) 91 CA3d 327, 330, 154 CR 132. The motion must state the basic facts necessary to persuade the court that the expert is required for preparation of the defense. People v Hurley (1979) 95 CA3d 895, 899, 157 CR 364; Torres v Municipal Court (1975) 50 CA3d 778, 785, 123 CR 553. Specific factors applicable to the case should be relied on, rather than general assertions that the case is complex. See People v Hurley, supra. For example, in an eyewitness case, counsel might point out unusual factors, such as cross-racial identification or limited lighting conditions. People v McDonald (1984) 37 C3d 351, 369, 208 CR 236, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendoza (2000) 23 C4th 896, 914, 98 CR2d 431. The court cannot deny a request for an expert solely because no one with the expertise requested is on the trial court's "approval" panel. Doe v Superior Court (1995) 39 CA4th 538, 546, 45 CR2d 888.

Ø Note: Information that does not have to be disclosed to the prosecutor should be given to the judge in camera out of the prosecutor's presence. See People v Faxel (1979) 91 CA3d 327, 330 n1, 154 CR 132 (dictum). Some judges routinely allow ex parte hearings for this purpose. Others require some showing that a privilege, such as the defendant's privilege against self-incrimination, will be affected if the prosecutor is present. A sample motion for in camera appointment of a defense expert is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §11.8 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.13 4. Effect of Appointment on Confidentiality

Because nonindigent defendants will be hard-pressed to demonstrate the need for a court-appointed expert, experts are usually appointed by the court in criminal cases only after a finding that the defendant is indigent. See Torres v Municipal Court (1975) 50 CA3d 778, 783, 123 CR 553. Once this finding is made, the results of the court-appointed expert's examination of the defendant are confidential if the appointment is made under Evid C §952, dealing with confidential communications between client and lawyer. See Evid C §1017.

Communications with a defense expert who will not be called to testify at trial do not have to be given to the prosecutor under Pen C §1054.3, because the expert's knowledge about the case is privileged. See Finley v Superior Court (1972) 29 CA3d 342, 348, 104 CR 699; People v Goldbach (1972) 27 CA3d 563, 568, 103 CR 800. However, reports or statements of experts made in connection with the case are discoverable if the party intends to call the expert as a witness at trial. Pen C §§1054.1 (prosecution), 1054.3 (defense). These include the results of physical or mental examinations, scientific tests, experiments, or comparisons that the party intends to offer in evidence at trial.

Section 1054.3 does not require disclosure of communications that are within the scope of the attorney-client privilege. Rodriguez v Superior Court (1993) 14 CA4th 1260, 1267, 18 CR2d 120. In Rodriguez, the court held that the defendant's statements to a psychologist made at defense counsel's request for the purpose of evaluating the defendant to determine what defenses were available came within the attorney-client privilege and were not subject to pretrial discovery, even though the psychologist was designated as a defense witness. Rodriguez v Superior Court, supra. See §11.14 for further discussion of the relationship between reciprocal discovery and privilege.

Ø Note: Defense counsel should strike any privileged statements by the defendant (e.g., statements to a psychiatrist) from the report before giving it to the prosecutor.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.14 5. Appointment of Experts in Capital Cases

Penal Code §987.9 allows an indigent defendant in a capital case, and cases under Pen C §190.05, to seek funds through the court for the payment of experts, investigators, and others for the "preparation" or "presentation" of the defense. Application for these funds is by affidavit or declaration and must state in some detail why the funds are reasonably necessary for preparation or presentation of the defense. See Pen C §987.9; CCP §2015.5. The fact of the application and its contents are confidential. Pen C §987.9.

The application is heard by a judge of the court other than the one who will preside over the case at trial. Pen C §987.9. The judge who hears the application must rule on the reasonableness of the request at an in camera hearing. The court "shall be guided by the need to provide a complete and full defense for the defendant." Pen C §987.9.

Counsel should ensure that the court clerk seals the request and makes no record of the hearing or order in the court's minutes. A sample form for a §987.9 request and order is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §54.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). See §54.11 for further discussion of a capital defendant's right to funds for ancillary defense services.

> Ø Note: If defense counsel fails to follow the procedures set forth in Pen C §987.9 with respect to confidentiality, a subsequently convicted defendant will have to demonstrate both a lack of a tactical reason for not keeping the appointment confidential and prejudice. See, e.g., People v Blair (2005) 36 C4th 686, 726, 31 CR3d 485 (prosecution learned of expert's unfavorable conclusions when appointment was not confidential and then called him as rebuttal witness at guilt phase).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.15 6. Appellate Review

The decision on the need for the appointment of an expert under Evid C §730 lies within the trial court's discretion, and the trial court's decision will not be set aside absent an abuse of that discretion. Corenevsky v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 307, 321, 204 CR 165; People v Young (1987) 189 CA3d 891, 904, 234 CR 819; People v Hurley (1979) 95 CA3d 895, 899, 157 CR 364.

B. Murgia Motion: Dismissal Based on Discriminatory Prosecution

§18.16 1. Nature of Motion

Discriminatory prosecution denies the defendant the equal protection of the law guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. See Baluyut v Superior Court (1996) 12 C4th 826, 832, 50 CR2d 101. A criminal defendant may obtain dismissal of the criminal charges brought by the government on the ground that the prosecution is being conducted in an arbitrary or discriminatory manner.

Known as a Murgia motion (see Murgia v Municipal Court (1975) 15 C3d 286, 291, 124 CR 204), the procedure usually involves two motions:

First, the defense moves to obtain discovery, typically records relating to other arrests or prosecutions for the same offense, that would prove that the government is acting in an impermissibly discriminatory manner. See, e.g., Griffin v Municipal Court (1977) 20 C3d 300, 306, 142 CR 286 (defendants prosecuted for mistreating prisoner sought discovery of all police department records of investigations into alleged police brutality over 10-year period); Bortin v Superior Court (1976) 64 CA3d 873, 876, 135 CR 30 (defendant sought to support his claim that no other persons were prosecuted for offense with which he was charged). A sample Murgia discovery motion is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §18.13 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

Second, assuming that the discovery establishes that the prosecution is discriminatory, the defendant moves to have the charges dismissed. A dismissal based on discriminatory prosecution is a final dismissal. Yick Wo v Hopkins (1886) 118 US 356, 374, 30 L Ed 220, 227, 6 S Ct 1064.

§18.17 2. Standing

A Murgia motion may be brought by any criminal defendant in any criminal action. Murgia v Municipal Court (1975) 15 C3d 286, 303, 124 CR 204. The defendant must show that he or she was arbitrarily discriminated against on the basis of an unjustifiable standard.

To succeed in a Murgia discovery motion, however, the defendant must usually be a member of the group against which discrimination is claimed. See, e.g., Murgia v Municipal Court, supra (motion alleging selective enforcement of law, targeting members and supporters of particular labor organization, was brought by member of the labor organization); People v Ochoa (1985) 165 CA3d 885, 887, 212 CR 4 (motion alleging that prisoners who belonged to racial minorities were disproportionately prosecuted for possession of weapons under Pen C §4502 was brought by two prisoners, one Hispanic and one African-American). In Griffin v Municipal Court (1977) 20 C3d 300, 302, 142 CR 286, however, a white defendant who claimed he would not have been prosecuted if he had acted alone or if his partner (codefendant) had not been black was considered to have made a proper showing for discovery.

3. Discovery Motion

§18.18 a. Timing of Motion

As a practical matter, because the discovery requested is usually essential to prove the discrimination claim and the ultimate goal of a Murgia motion is to obtain a dismissal of the charges, the motion for discovery should be brought as early as possible.

Because Murgia discovery motions are based on the U.S. Constitution (Murgia v Municipal Court (1975) 15 C3d 286, 294, 124 CR 204), they are not subject to the discovery provisions of the Penal Code. Pen C §1054(e). On discovery in criminal cases, generally, see Pen C §§1054-1054.10, discussed in chap 11.

Under Pen C §1054.5(b), a party seeking discovery must ordinarily make an informal discovery request and then wait 15 days before seeking court enforcement. However, because Murgia discovery is needed to support the motion to dismiss, and because it does not involve discovery of trial witnesses or their possible testimony, it may be argued that the court may order Murgia discovery even if the defendant does not seek informal discovery first.

§18.19 b. Burden of Proof

A criminal defendant making a Murgia discovery motion has the burden of proof. Murgia v Municipal Court (1975) 15 C3d 286, 298, 124 CR 204; People v Superior Court (Baez) (2000) 79 CA4th 1177, 1187, 94 CR2d 706. The defendant's threshold burden is a rigorous one, which recognizes judicial deference to prosecutorial discretion and which is intended to be a barrier to litigation of insubstantial claims. U.S. v Armstrong (1996) 517 US 456, 463, 134 L Ed 2d 687, 116 S Ct 1480. To meet this burden, the defendant must produce "some evidence tending to show the existence of the essential elements of the defense, discriminatory effect and discriminatory intent." People v Superior Court (Baez) (2000) 79 CA4th 1177, 1189, 94 CR2d 706, quoting U.S. v Armstrong (1996) 517 US 456, 468, 134 L Ed 2d 687, 700, 116 S Ct 1480. In other words, the defendant must make a credible showing of different treatment of similarly situated persons. 517 US at 470. The federal constitutional standard articulated in Armstrong is mandated by Pen C §1054(e), which provides that no discovery can occur in criminal prosecutions unless it is authorized by an express statutory provision or required by the U.S. Constitution. People v Superior Court (Baez) (2000) 79 CA4th 1177, 1187, 94 CR2d 706.

The defense may meet its threshold burden with a showing that similarly situated individuals were not prosecuted. 79 CA4th at 1191. For example, the defendant in Baez met the requirement of producing "some evidence" of discriminatory prosecution. The Baez defendant was the executive director of a medical marijuana center, was receiving government housing assistance, and was indicted for grand theft and numerous marijuana counts. He submitted three affidavits supporting his claim that he had been singled out from similarly situated individuals for criminal prosecution rather than administrative proceedings.

In contrast, in People v Williams (1996) 46 CA4th 1767, 1776, 54 CR2d 521, the defendant accused of beating Reginald Denny was unsuccessful in obtaining records concerning the prosecution of Los Angeles police officers, such as those in the Rodney King case, who committed batteries but were not prosecuted. Likewise, in U.S. v Armstrong, supra, a defense study, newspaper articles, and anecdotal hearsay did not meet the defense burden of showing different treatment of similarly situated individuals.

If the defense shows plausible justification for discovery, the prosecution has the opportunity to make an evidentiary showing in opposition. See People v Moya (1986) 184 CA3d 1307, 1310, 229 CR 402 (prosecutor's evidentiary showing was strong enough to overcome defendant's showing).

§18.20 c. Appellate Review

Defense review. The defense may seek pretrial writ review of denial of a Murgia discovery motion. People v Serna (1977) 71 CA3d 229, 235, 139 CR 426. The standard of review is abuse of discretion. People v Superior Court (Baez) (2000) 79 CA4th 1177, 1195, 94 CR2d 706.

A trial court's refusal to grant discovery when the defendant was entitled to it may result in a reversal on appeal (People v Hertz (1980) 103 CA3d 770, 780, 163 CR 233) and may result in dismissal of the charges without the reviewing court reaching the question of whether the prosecution was discriminatory. See People v Hertz (1980) 103 CA3d 770, 780, 163 CR 233 (motion heard at preliminary hearing but magistrate failed to preserve reviewable record of in camera hearing; Pen C §995 motion grant upheld on appeal). See also People v Ochoa (1985) 165 CA3d 885, 889, 212 CR 4 (failure of prosecution to comply with discovery order led to dismissal).

Prosecution review. The prosecution may seek an extraordinary writ before trial to obtain review of the trial court's granting of a Murgia discovery order. Pen C §1512(a). The standard of review is abuse of discretion. People v Superior Court (Baez) (2000) 79 CA4th 1177, 1187, 94 CR2d 706.

4. Motion to Dismiss

§18.21 a. Burden of Proof

The defense burden for a motion to dismiss based on discriminatory prosecution is by a preponderance of the evidence. Miller v Superior Court (2002) 101 CA4th 728, 748, 124 CR2d 591; People v Smith (1984) 155 CA3d 1103, 1129, 203 CR 196; People v Gray (1967) 254 CA2d 256, 265, 63 CR 211.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.22 b. Required Showing

To obtain dismissal based on discriminatory prosecution, the defendant must show that he or she was deliberately singled out for prosecution on the basis of an invidious criterion, typically the defendant's membership in a particular group, and that the prosecution would not have occurred but for the discriminatory design of the prosecution. People v Superior Court (Hartway) (1977) 19 C3d 338, 348, 138 CR 66. See also Wayte v U.S. (1985) 470 US 598, 607, 84 L Ed 2d 547, 555, 105 S Ct 1524. The defendant is not required to show that the police or prosecutors had the specific intent to punish the defendant for his or her membership in the group. The "intent that must be shown is simply intent to single out the group or a member of the group on the basis of that membership for prosecution that would not otherwise have taken place." Baluyut v Superior Court (1996) 12 C4th 826, 835, 50 CR2d 101.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.23 c. Nature of Evidence

Evidence of prosecutorial discrimination may be shown in two ways: (1) direct proof of a plan to discriminate or (2) statistical data on prosecutorial conduct showing that certain offenses are prosecuted only against a particular group. Murgia v Municipal Court (1975) 15 C3d 286, 305, 124 CR 204 (correspondence, memorandums, and minutes of meetings held by prosecutor with local farmers and sheriff's deputies were held to be discoverable to establish direct proof of plan to discriminate against members of United Farm Workers Union). In addition, data on other prosecutions for the same offense may be used to establish a pattern of discrimination. See, e.g., Baluyut v Superior Court (1996) 12 C4th 826, 830, 50 CR2d 101 (arrest reports spanning 2-year period showed police decoy operation "designed to ferret out homosexuals or those who were likely to engage in homosexual acts").

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.24 d. Timing of Motion

A motion to dismiss based on discriminatory prosecution should be brought before trial. People v Superior Court (Hartway) (1977) 19 C3d 338, 348, 138 CR 66; Murgia v Municipal Court (1975) 15 C3d 286, 293 n4, 124 CR 204; People v Smith (1984) 155 CA3d 1103, 1129, 203 CR 196. See People v Hertz (1980) 103 CA3d 770, 774, 163 CR 233.

If the motion is denied before the preliminary hearing is held, it should be renewed before trial; failure to renew it may be deemed a waiver. See People v Gallegos (1960) 180 CA2d 274, 277, 4 CR 413.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.25 e. Appellate Review

Prosecution review. If a case is dismissed before trial based on discriminatory prosecution, it is a final dismissal. Yick Wo v Hopkins (1886) 118 US 356, 373, 30 L Ed 220, 227, 6 S Ct 1064. The prosecution can appeal under Pen C §§1238(a)(8), 1466(1)(B). See People v Ochoa (1985) 165 CA3d 885, 887, 212 CR 4.

Defense review. The defense may obtain review of denial of a motion to dismiss on appeal after trial. People v Smith (1984) 155 CA3d 1103, 1133, 203 CR 196. A pretrial petition for writ of prohibition/mandate is another remedy that might be considered.

Application of the wrong burden of proof by the trial court has been tested by the harmless error test. People v Smith, supra (trial court used clear and convincing evidence rather than preponderance of evidence as burden of proof).

C. Motion to Recuse Prosecutor

§18.26 1. Nature of Motion

In a criminal action, the defense may move to recuse (or disqualify) the prosecutor on the ground of a conflict of interest that would make it unlikely that the defendant would receive a fair trial. Pen C §1424(a)(1); see Cal Const art I, §7. Hambarian v Superior Court (2002) 27 C4th 826, 833, 118 CR2d 725; People v Snow (2003) 30 C4th 43, 86, 132 CR2d 271. The conflict must be caused by factors extraneous to the prosecutor's official duty. People v Superior Court (Martin) (1979) 98 CA3d 515, 521, 159 CR 625. Although both actual and apparent conflicts can form the basis for recusing the prosecution, for the motion to be granted, the likelihood that the defendant will not receive a fair trial must be actual, not merely apparent. People v Eubanks (1996) 14 C4th 580, 592, 59 CR2d 200. See People v Petrisca (2006) 138 CA4th 189, 196, 41 CR3d 182 (conflict must be so grave that it is unlikely defendant will receive fair trial). A mere subjective impression of impropriety does not support recusal. Haraguchi v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 706, 719, 76 CR3d 250. See Hollywood v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 721, 735, 76 CR3d 264.

Recusal is rarely granted. See, e.g., People v Hamilton (1989) 48 C3d 1142, 1156, 259 CR 701; People v Huston (1989) 210 CA3d 192, 216, 258 CR 393.

Ø Note: A recusal motion is more likely to be granted when the facts are closely akin to a case in which recusal was previously successful. See §18.30.

The motion may be directed to an individual prosecutor or to the entire prosecutor's office in the county in which the action has been brought. See People v Hernandez (1991) 235 CA3d 674, 680, 286 CR 652. If the motion is granted, a substitute prosecutor is brought in to handle the case, i.e., another deputy district attorney if only an individual deputy is recused, or a deputy attorney general or special prosecutor if the entire office is recused. See Pen C §1424. See also §2.16.

A sample motion to disqualify the prosecutor's office for bias and prejudice is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §18.12 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.27 2. Standing

The only persons seeking to recuse the prosecution in published cases have been the defendants who claimed a conflict of interest concerning themselves. See cases cited in §18.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.28 3. Timing of Motion

A recusal motion should be brought as soon as defense counsel is aware of the conflict. It can be made before the preliminary hearing. Trujillo v Superior Court (1983) 148 CA3d 368, 370, 196 CR 4. See also People v Municipal Court (Henry) (1979) 98 CA3d 690, 692, 159 CR 639. The motion must be served on the prosecutor and on the Attorney General at least 10 court days before the hearing. Pen C §1424.

A recusal motion may be renewed on a change of circumstances. People v Superior Court (Hollenbeck) (1978) 84 CA3d 491, 503, 148 CR 704. The motion may also be renewed in connection with a motion to dismiss under Pen C §995 if a motion to recuse was made at the preliminary hearing. Trujillo v Superior Court, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.29 4. Burden of Proof

A defendant seeking to recuse a prosecutor or a prosecutor's entire office has a two-part burden of proof. First, he or she must demonstrate the existence of a conflict. This is done by showing circumstances that demonstrate "a reasonable possibility that the DA's office may not exercise its discretionary function in an evenhanded manner." Haraguchi v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 706, 713, 76 CR3d 250; People v Conner (1983) 34 C3d 141, 148, 193 CR 148. Second, the defendant must show that the conflict is "so grave as to render it unlikely that defendant will receive fair treatment during all portions of the criminal proceedings." Haraguchi v Superior Court, supra; People v Vasquez (2006) 39 C4th 47, 55, 45 CR3d 372.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.30 5. Illustrative Cases

Recusal is rarely granted. See, e.g., People v Hamilton (1989) 48 C3d 1142, 1156, 259 CR 701; People v Huston (1989) 210 CA3d 192, 216, 258 CR 393. Recusal motions are more likely to be granted when the facts are closely akin to a case in which recusal was previously successful. The following cases illustrate factual scenarios in which a trial court granted (or should have granted) a motion to disqualify the prosecutor or the prosecutor's office:

- In People v Vasquez (2006) 39 C4th 47, 55, 45 CR3d 372, the supreme court held that the trial court should have granted the defense motion to recuse the entire district attorney's office because the record showed a reasonable possibility that the prosecutor was not exercising her discretionary functions in an evenhanded manner. The recusal motion had been based on the fact the defendant's stepfather was a prosecutor in the office and his mother was an administrator in the office. The defense argued that the prosecution was overzealous to avoid the appearance of impropriety.

  Ø Warning: Defense counsel must seek pretrial review of a trial court's denial of a motion to recuse the district attorney's office. On pretrial review, the showing of a likelihood of unfair treatment will suffice for reversal. In contrast, raising the issue after a conviction requires showing a due process violation or prejudice for reversal. See, e.g., People v Vasquez, supra.

- In People v Eubanks (1996) 14 C4th 580, 598, 59 CR2d 200, the supreme court held that the trial court would not have abused its discretion by finding a grave conflict of interest requiring recusal of an entire district attorney's office. The recusal motion had been based on the district attorney's approval of allowing the victim to pay part of the investigation costs of the criminal case. The victim, a computer program company, recommended and paid for an independent expert to assist the district attorney's investigators in the execution of a search warrant seeking stolen trade secrets in the database of the defendant's computer at a competitive company. The court considered whether private financial considerations would make it likely that an interested party could influence or control the prosecution's discretionary decisions.
- In Millsap v Superior Court (1999) 70 CA4th 196, 203, 82 CR2d 733, although the court refused to recuse the entire district attorney's office from prosecuting the defendant, it did recuse two deputy district attorneys from prosecuting the defendant for solicitation of their murders.
- In People v Hernandez (1991) 235 CA3d 674, 679, 286 CR 652, only the deputies who prosecuted the victim in an earlier case had to be recused, not the entire district attorney's office.
- In People v Lepe (1985) 164 CA3d 685, 688, 211 CR 432, the defendant, charged with assault on two individuals and infliction of great bodily injury on a third, had been represented by the district attorney (before assuming office) in a prior case with similar charges. The district attorney and the entire district attorney's office were recused because the district attorney was assumed to have obtained confidential information from the defendant while representing him, a risk of disclosure existed with respect to that information, and the defendant intended to call the district attorney as a witness.

  Ø Note: That a prosecutor may testify at the trial is not enough, standing alone, to warrant recusal of the entire district attorney's office. See People v Hernandez (2003) 30 C4th 835, 853, 134 CR2d 602; People ex rel Younger v Superior Court (Rabaca) (1978) 86 CA3d 180, 193, 150 CR 156; People v Superior Court (Hollenbeck) (1978) 84 CA3d 491, 500, 148 CR 704.

The following cases illustrate factual scenarios in which a trial court or appellate court denied a defendant's motion to recuse the prosecutor or the prosecutor's office:

- In People v Superior Court (Humberto S.) (2008) 43 C4th 737, 746, 76 CR3d 276, the trial court had recused specified Los Angeles County deputy district attorneys who had made significant efforts to prevent disclosure of the alleged victim's medical and psychotherapy records after their subpoena by a minor charged with sexual abuse. The supreme court ruled that the trial court's decision was an abuse of discretion as it rested on an error of law, i.e., that the prosecutors' efforts amounted to representation of a third party.

- In Hollywood v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 721, 76 CR3d 264, the supreme court upheld the trial court's refusal to recuse the lead prosecutor. The trial court concluded that the prosecutor did not labor under any conflict despite the fact that, while the defendant was a fugitive, he had consulted with the makers of a major motion picture that was based on the defendant's story.
- In Haraguchi v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 706, 713, 76 CR3d 250, the supreme court upheld the trial court's refusal to recuse the lead prosecutor. The trial court concluded that the fact that the prosecutor in a rape case had published a novel about a fictitious prosecutor handling a fictitious, but similar, date rape case did not create a material conflict.
- In People v Cannedy (2009) 176 CA4th 1474, 98 CR3d 596, the court of appeal found that the trial court abused its discretion in recusing the entire district attorney's office on the basis of the fact that a support staff employee of the office might be a witness, when the office was a very large one and less drastic alternatives existed. The trial court erroneously applied a "potential conflict" standard in granting the defense motion.
- In People v Petrisca (2006) 138 CA4th 189, 41 CR3d 182, the appellate court reversed a trial court ruling and found no grave conflict of interest in a Los Angeles County murder case in which the victim was the mother of a prosecutor in that county.
- In People v Turner (1994) 8 C4th 137, 163, 32 CR2d 762, the supreme court upheld the trial court's refusal to recuse the trial prosecutor after the defendant was granted a new trial because of a Batson-Wheeler violation by the same prosecutor.
- In People v Breaux (1991) 1 C4th 281, 295, 3 CR2d 81, the trial court was held not to have abused its discretion by denying a motion to recuse although the trial prosecutor belonged to the same social club as the victim, and the prosecutor's wife knew the victim.
- In People v Hamilton (1989) 48 C3d 1142, 1156, 259 CR 701, the supreme court denied the defendant's motion to recuse the district attorney's office. The basis of the recusal motion was that defense counsel had filed a complaint with the State Bar against the deputy district attorney who sent an investigator to talk to the defendant, at the defendant's request.
- In People v Hamilton (1988) 46 C3d 123, 141, 249 CR 320, a different case from the one just above, the supreme court upheld the trial court's refusal to recuse a district attorney's office on the grounds that an assistant district attorney had previously represented the accomplice on another case tried before the defendant met the accomplice. The court found no evidence of animosity on the part of anyone in the prosecutor's office as the result of the prior representation.
- In People v Lopez (1984) 155 CA3d 813, 827, 202 CR 333, a new deputy district attorney who had represented the defendant during the preliminary hearing while in private practice, and had withdrawn before arraignment on the information, declared that he would not discuss the defendant's strategy with anyone in the district attorney's office nor divulge any client-attorney confidences. The district attorney prosecuting the defendant stated that he had not communicated with the defendant's former attorney and would not seek any help from him. These declarations were sufficient to defeat the defendant's motion to recuse the entire district attorney's office.

§18.31 6. Appellate Review

When the trial court grants a defendant's motion to recuse the prosecutor, the prosecutor may challenge the recusal order by an immediate appeal. Pen C §§1424, 1466(1)(A); People v Lepe (1985) 164 CA3d 685, 688, 211 CR 432. An appeal works an automatic stay of the recusal order. Pen C §1424. What happens to the trial, however, is unclear. The statute does not state whether a criminal trial may proceed while the recusal issue is on appeal. The following cases are somewhat analogous to this situation: People v Sonoqui (1934) 1 C2d 364, 366, 35 P2d 123 (while prosecution's appeal of grant of new trial is pending, new trial cannot proceed); In re Lee G. (1991) 1 CA4th 17, 25, 1 CR2d 375 (recusal of county counsel, representing petitioner, did not stay proceedings in juvenile dependency case); People v Franc (1990) 218 CA3d 588, 592, 267 CR 109 (homicide trial proceeded while dismissed special circumstance was on appeal); People v Bogart (1970) 7 CA3d 257, 263, 86 CR 737 (prosecution can appeal dismissal of some charges in information while trial proceeds on unaffected charges). If a party moved for, or the court sua sponte considered, a stay, it would seem that pendency of an appeal would be good cause for continuing the case beyond the normal statutory time for trial. See, e.g., People v Superior Court (Gonzales) (1991) 228 CA3d 1588, 1592, 279 CR 679 (prosecution's writ petition on judicial recusal issue constituted good cause to delay trial beyond Pen C §1382 limits, despite defendant's objections).

If trial actually did proceed, presumably the district attorney would prosecute because the appeal stayed the recusal order. Pen C §1424. If the defendant did not renew the objection, a waiver might be found. People v Johnson (1980) 105 CA3d 884, 891, 164 CR 746 (defendant can waive objection to being prosecuted by own former attorney).

When the prosecution has a clear right to appeal (but this is not a speedy, plain, and adequate remedy), writ relief may be available. See, e.g., People v Superior Court (Bolden) (1989) 209 CA3d 1109, 1112, 257 CR 678 (dismissal of special circumstances; delay of homicide trial not warranted, but "complications" would ensue if trial proceeded while appeal undecided).

The trial court's ruling on the denial of a motion to recuse is reviewed under a deferential abuse of discretion standard. Haraguchi v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 706, 709, 76 CR3d 250. The trial court's findings of fact are reviewed under the substantial evidence test, its conclusions of law are reviewed de novo, and its application of the law to the facts is reversible only if arbitrary and capricious. 43 C4th at 711. See Hollywood v Superior Court (2008) 43 C4th 721, 728, 76 CR3d 264 (same standard applies in capital case). A trial court decision based on an error of law constitutes an abuse of discretion. People v Superior Court (Humberto S.) (2008) 43 C4th 737, 746, 76 CR3d 276.

A trial court's denial of a motion to recuse that does not result in a due process violation will not be reversed on appeal without a showing of prejudice. People v Vasquez (2006) 39 C4th 47, 66, 45 CR3d 372.

D. Vindictive (Retaliatory) Prosecution

§18.32 1. Nature of Motion

Vindictive prosecution, also called retaliatory prosecution, occurs when a prosecutor files more serious charges against a defendant after the defendant's exercise of a legal right or a defense against the original charge. A vindictive prosecution may also occur when separate charges brought against a criminal defendant are unrelated to the pending charge. See, e.g., U.S. v Jenkins (9th Cir 2007) 504 F3d 694, 700. The defense usually challenges vindictive prosecution by a motion to dismiss. See People v Edwards (1991) 54 C3d 787, 828, 1 CR2d 696. See also U.S. v Groves (9th Cir 1978) 571 F2d 450, 453; U.S. v DeMarco (9th Cir 1977) 550 F2d 1224, 1227. Once the defense makes a prima facie showing that the prosecution increased the charges in response to the defendant's exercise of a procedural right, the prosecution has the burden of dispelling the appearance of vindictiveness as well as actual vindictiveness. Twiggs v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 360, 371, 194 CR 152. See also U.S. v Groves, supra; U.S. v Ruesga-Martinez (9th Cir 1976) 534 F2d 1367, 1369.

Vindictive prosecution motions are based on Blackledge v Perry (1974) 417 US 21, 27, 40 L Ed 2d 628, 634, 94 S Ct 2098. Following the defendant's successful appeal of a misdemeanor assault conviction, the prosecutor obtained an indictment charging the defendant with assault with intent to kill, a felony. The new indictment was based on the same facts as the misdemeanor charge. The defendant pleaded guilty to the felony charge and received a stiffer sentence than he would have received as a result of the misdemeanor conviction. The Supreme Court overturned the conviction on due process grounds. 417 US at 28.

§18.33 2. Timing of Motion

A motion to dismiss for vindictive prosecution should be raised before trial. Twiggs v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 360, 373, 194 CR 152; Barajas v Superior Court (1983) 149 CA3d 30, 34, 196 CR 599. The only way to raise the issue for the first time on appeal is through a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. See People v Tirado (1984) 151 CA3d 341, 354, 198 CR 682, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendez (1999) 19 C4th 1089, 1097, 81 CR2d 301.

§18.34 3. Standing

Only a defendant who is the target of the retaliatory or vindictive prosecution has standing to bring the motion. See the cases cited in §18.36.

§18.35 4. Burden of Proof

After jeopardy has attached. The defendant has the initial burden of showing that he or she was recharged following the exercise of a legal right, and that the new charges subject him or her to a potentially greater punishment. This showing creates a presumption of vindictiveness, which the prosecution must rebut by showing that the increase in the severity of the new charge was not motivated by vindictiveness. To rebut the presumption, the prosecution must dispel the appearance of vindictiveness as well as the inference of actual vindictiveness. Twiggs v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 360, 371, 194 CR 152. See also In re Bower (1985) 38 C3d 865, 878, 215 CR 267; U.S. v Alvarado-Sandoval (9th Cir 1977) 557 F2d 645; U.S. v Ruesga-Martinez (9th Cir 1976) 534 F2d 1367, 1369.

Cases in which the prosecution was held to have rebutted the presumption of vindictiveness include:

- U.S. v Griffin (9th Cir 1980) 617 F2d 1342, 1347 (combination of circumstances showed that decision to file additional charges was unrelated to defendant's motion to dismiss first indictment);
- U.S. v Preciado-Gomez (9th Cir 1976) 529 F2d 935, 940 (presumption dispelled by evidence that more serious charge arose from discovery of additional evidence);
- Robinson v Superior Court (1986) 181 CA3d 746, 226 CR 724 (prosecutor rebutted presumption with showing that trial court's evidentiary ruling was reason for filing additional counts); and
- In re Anthony M. (1976) 64 CA3d 464, 543, 134 CR 540 (more stringent dispositional order after rehearing justified by deterioration of minor's behavior).

Before jeopardy has attached. No presumption of vindictiveness arises when the prosecution adds counts or enhancements before trial. People v Lucious (1984) 153 CA3d 416, 422, 200 CR 251. See also Blackledge v Perry (1974) 417 US 21, 28, 40 L Ed 2d 628, 634, 94 S Ct 2098. In the pretrial context, the defense must present evidence showing that the prosecutor's decision to file additional or more serious charges was motivated by a desire to punish the defendant for exercising a legal right. U.S. v Goodwin (1982) 457 US 368, 384, 73 L Ed 2d 74, 87, 102 S Ct 2485; People v Bracey (1994) 21 CA4th 1532, 1549, 26 CR2d 730. Reasons that have been held to justify an increase in the original charge include:

- Discovery of additional evidence. U.S. v Preciado-Gomez (9th Cir 1976) 529 F2d 935, 940;
- Impossibility of filing the additional charges with the original ones. Blackledge v Perry (1974) 417 US 21, 29 n7, 40 L Ed 2d 628, 635 n7, 94 S Ct 2098;
- Misconduct by the defendant after the original charge. In re Anthony M. (1976) 64 CA3d 464, 469, 134 CR 540; and
- Pretrial decision to file a second complaint based on a separate offense even though the decision followed the defendant's exercise of a right. People v Lucious (1984) 153 CA3d 416, 200 CR 251; People v Tirado (1984) 151 CA3d 341, 349, 198 CR 682, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendez (1999) 19 C4th 1089, 1097, 81 CR2d 301.

§18.36 5. Showing Vindictiveness

The evidence in support of a motion to dismiss based on retaliatory prosecution should consist of affidavits or declarations detailing the sequence of events leading to the filing of the new charge as well as testimony given at the hearing on the motion. See Twiggs v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 360, 369, 194 CR 152 (supreme court impliedly criticized trial court's acceptance of prosecutor's unsworn explanation for new charges). See also §18.5 on cross-examination of declarants and affiants.

The required threshold showing on legal rights exercised before trial is unclear. In U.S. v Goodwin (1982) 457 US 368, 380, 73 L Ed 2d 74, 84, 102 S Ct 2485, the Supreme Court held that there should be no presumption of vindictiveness before trial. In Goodwin, the prosecutor filed a superseding indictment containing a felony charge after the defendant asserted his right to a jury trial on the original misdemeanor counts. 457 US at 370, 73 L Ed 2d at 83. The Court pointed out that the prosecutor does not necessarily file all charges in the first charging document and that to allow a presumption after charging and before trial would restrict the prosecutor's ability to assess cases. 457 US at 382, 73 L Ed 2d at 85.

California cases have reached a similar result. See People v Bracey (1994) 21 CA4th 1532, 1544, 26 CR2d 730 (prosecutor refiled previously dismissed drug charges after defendant did not receive state prison sentence at probation violation hearing based on same drug charge); People v Matthews (1986) 183 CA3d 458, 464, 228 CR 316 (after failed plea negotiations, enhancements properly added during normal course of pretrial proceedings); People v Lucious (1984) 153 CA3d 416, 200 CR 251 (wait of several months before filing second set of similar charges acceptable); People v Tirado (1984) 151 CA3d 341, 349, 198 CR 682, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendez (1999) 19 C4th 1089, 1097, 81 CR2d 301 (prosecutor properly waited to see what sentence defendant would receive on unrelated case).

When the alleged prosecutorial vindictiveness occurred after trial, a presumption of vindictiveness arises when a defendant makes a prima facie showing that the prosecution increased the charges in response to the defendant's exercise of a procedural right. In re Bower (1985) 38 C3d 865, 873, 215 CR 267 (prosecutor and defense attorney agreed to maximum second degree murder theory; conviction reduced to second degree); Twiggs v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 360, 368, 194 CR 152 (after mistrial, prosecutor offered defendant plea bargain, which he refused; prosecutor then charged five additional Pen C §667.5 priors; reversed); People v Hudson (1989) 210 CA3d 784, 258 CR 563 (after defendant withdrew plea to misdemeanor, prosecutor recharged as felony; reversed).

Once the defense meets its burden, the prosecution assumes the burden of proving that the increase in the severity of the new charge was not motivated by vindictiveness. Robinson v Superior Court (1986) 181 CA3d 746, 749, 226 CR 724 (prosecutor justified charging additional counts after motion for new trial was granted by showing that new charges were result of trial court's evidentiary rulings); U.S. v Griffin (9th Cir 1980) 617 F2d 1342, 1347. If the prosecution fails to dispel the appearance of vindictiveness as well as actual vindictiveness, the court should grant the defendant's motion. Twiggs v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 360, 371, 194 CR 152.

§18.37 6. Appellate Review

Appellate review of denial of a motion to dismiss based on vindictive prosecution may be obtained before trial by a petition for writ of prohibition/mandate (Twiggs v Superior Court (1983) 34 C3d 360, 369, 194 CR 152) or by a petition for writ of habeas corpus (In re Bower (1985) 38 C3d 865, 872, 215 CR 267; In re David B. (1977) 68 CA3d 931, 934, 137 CR 577), depending on the procedural posture of the case. See chap 42 on writs. After trial, the issue can be raised on appeal. People v Johnson (1991) 233 CA3d 425, 448, 284 CR 579.

The prosecutor can seek judicial review of the granting of the motion through an appeal under Pen C §1238(a)(8) or §1466(1)(A). See People v Watson (1983) 146 CA3d 12, 193 CR 849. If the dismissal was by way of a Pen C §995 motion, the prosecution can appeal under Pen C §1238(a)(1). People v Haney (1984) 156 CA3d 109, 114, 202 CR 579.

§18.38 E. Petition for AIDS Testing

Both the Penal Code (Pen C §1524.1) and the Health and Safety Code (Health & S C §§121050-121070) provide for AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome) testing of criminal defendants and minors charged with crimes. Some conflicts exist between these sections and, in a conflict, Health & S C §§121050-121070 prevail. Health & S C §121050.

Under the Health and Safety Code, if the alleged victim makes a written request for the testing, any defendant or minor charged with specified sex crimes (Pen C §§261, 261.5, 262, 266b, 266c, 286, 288, or 288a) may be ordered tested for the AIDS virus and other communicable diseases. After a motion by the prosecutor or the alleged victim, the court must order the defendant or minor to provide two specimens of blood for testing if the court finds that probable cause exists to believe that a possible transfer of blood, saliva, semen, or other bodily fluid took place between the defendant or minor and the alleged victim in the specified criminal act. Health & S C §121055. See generally Health & S C §§121050-121070. Testing is also required if a peace officer, firefighter, emergency medical person, custodial officer, custody assistant, or other specified person working in a detention facility came in contact in a specified way with the bodily fluids of a criminal defendant or a juvenile charged with a crime. Health & S C §121060.

> Ø Note: Although Health & S C §§121055 and 121060 require that the defendant or juvenile provide blood specimens, testing for the AIDS virus may take the form of either a blood test or saliva test. See Pen C §1524.1(b)(1).

Under the Penal Code, the court may issue a search warrant to test the blood or saliva or a criminal defendant or minor charged with a crime for the AIDS virus when requested by the victim and when the court finds, after a hearing, that there is probable cause to believe that any bodily fluid capable of transmitting the AIDS virus has been transferred from the defendant to the victim, and that the accused committed the charged offense. Probable cause can be found either at a preliminary hearing or at the hearing on the motion to force the defendant to be tested for the AIDS virus. The same procedures are used for victims of specified uncharged offenses. Pen C §1524.1(b)(2).

> Ø Note: It is a crime to file a false sexual assault report in order to force a person to be tested for AIDS. It is also a crime to disclose test result information obtained as a result of complying with Pen C §1524.1. Pen C §1524.1(h).

Postconviction AIDS testing is required for persons convicted of specified sex offenses. Pen C §§1202.1, 1202.6. See discussion in §35.26.

§19.1 I. OVERVIEW

Delay in the investigation or prosecution of a criminal matter may violate a defendant's constitutional or statutory rights. A defendant may seek an order terminating a criminal action or for other sanctions because of a delay in the prosecution of the case. Pen C §686. The nature of the showing that a defendant must make in support of a motion to dismiss depends on the basis of the defense claim. Similarly, the prosecution also has a right to a speedy trial. Cal Const art I, §29. See People v Cole (2004) 33 C4th 1158, 1188, 17 CR3d 532.

Constitutional issues. Regarding constitutional violations based on prosecutorial delay, a criminal prosecution may be divided into two fundamental stages:

- Preaccusation delay occurs between the time of the commission of the offense and the time the defendant is charged or arrested, whichever comes first. Delay occurring during this period is governed by the due process clauses of the federal and state constitutions. US Const amends V, XIV; Cal Const art I, §7.
- Postaccusation delay occurs after the filing of the accusatory pleading or the arrest of the defendant. Delay during this period is subject to the speedy trial provisions of the federal and state constitutions. US Const amends VI, XIV; Cal Const art I, §15.

A defendant seeking dismissal should identify the period in which the delay occurred and the basis of the claim in the pleadings because the character of proof that must be offered at the hearing on the motion varies with the basis of the claim. See People v Allen (1979) 96 CA3d 268, 158 CR 54.

Statutory issues. The other aspect of speedy trial requirements is statutory. The statutes that prescribe deadlines concern these areas:

- Statutes of limitations (Pen C §§799-805);
- Arraignment on complaint (Pen C §§825, 849);
- Preliminary hearings (Pen C §§859b, 861);
- Filing of an information in the superior court (Pen C §1382); and
- Trial (Pen C §§1381, 1381.5, 1382, 1389).

Action	Deadline	Authority
Misdemeanor defendant in custody at time of arraignment or entry of plea must be brought to trial.	In general, within 30 calendar days after arraignment or entry of plea, whichever occurs later, unless defendant requests or consents to delay beyond time period, enters general time waiver, or fails to appear for trial. There are specific requirements following failure to appear, mistrial, new trial order, finding of competency to stand trial, and appeal.	Pen C §1382(a)(3).
Misdemeanor defendant not in custody at time of arraignment must be brought to trial.	Within 45 calendar days after arraignment or entry of plea, whichever occurs later, unless defendant requests or consents to delay beyond time period, enters general time waiver, or fails to appear for trial. There are specific requirements following failure to appear, mistrial, new trial order, finding of competency to stand trial, and appeal.	Pen C §1382(a)(3).
Felony information must be filed.	Within 15 calendar days after order holding defendant to answer.	Pen C §1382(a)(1).
Felony defendant, whether in or out of custody, must be brought to trial.	Within 60 calendar days after arraignment on indictment or information, unless defendant requests or consents to date beyond 60-day period, enters general time waiver, or fails to appear for trial.	Pen C §1382(a)(2).
Felony or misdemeanor defendant who has consented that trial be continued to date beyond statutory time limits without general time waiver must be brought to trial.	Within 10 days after date he or she announces ready for trial and/or objects to further delay.	Pen C §1382(a)(2)(B), (3)(B).
California defendant serving term in state prison, or county jail term of more than 90 days, who makes valid demand to be brought to trial on pending state case must be brought to trial.	Within 90 calendar days after delivery of demand to district attorney.	Pen C §1381; see People v Contreras (2009) 177 CA4th 1296, 1300, 99 CR3d 759.
Person serving term in federal prison in California who makes valid demand to be brought to trial in pending state case must be brought to trial.	Within 90 calendar days after prosecutor's receipt of assent of federal authorities to release prisoner for trial on California charges.	Pen C §1381.5.
Person serving term in state that is signatory to Interstate Compact on Detainers against whom detainer has been	Within 180 days after delivery of demand to prosecuting attorney and court.	Pen C §1389.

III. CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIMS

§19.3 A. Preaccusation Delay: Due Process

A delay between the time a crime is committed and the time a person is arrested or charged, whichever comes first, is to be tested not by the rules applicable to speedy trials but by whether the person was denied due process of law under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution or art I, §7, of the California Constitution, or both. People v Nelson (2008) 43 C4th 1242, 1250, 78 CR3d 69. Under the California Constitution, the test for determining whether the right to due process has been violated is the same as the test for determining whether the right to speedy trial has been violated: Whether the delay is negligent or intentional, actual prejudice to the defendant is weighed against such justification as may be proved. Jones v Superior Court (1970) 3 C3d 734, 741 n1, 91 CR 578.

The test may not be the same under the federal Constitution. The California Supreme Court has noted, and some lower federal courts have held, that the Due Process Clause of the federal Constitution is not violated unless, in addition to the prejudice requirement, it is also shown that the delay was undertaken to gain a tactical advantage over the defendant. See People v Catlin (2001) 26 C4th 81, 107, 109 CR2d 31; U.S. v Puett (11th Cir 1984) 735 F2d 1331, 1334 (erroneously citing U.S. v Marion (1971) 404 US 307, 30 L Ed 2d 468, 92 S Ct 455, as so holding). In the absence of evidence of deliberate delay, a defendant asserting a violation of the right to due process will wish to invoke the protections of the California Constitution.

No matter which constitution is involved, to determine whether the due process right has been violated, the court must first determine whether the defendant has established any prejudice whatsoever. People v Nelson, supra; People v Catlin, supra. The moving party, i.e., the defendant, bears the burden of establishing actual prejudice. U.S. v Lovasco (1977) 431 US 783, 52 L Ed 2d 752, 97 S Ct 2044; Serna v Superior Court (1985) 40 C3d 239, 219 CR 420 (misdemeanors); Scherling v Superior Court (1978) 22 C3d 493, 505, 149 CR 597 (felonies); People v Allen (1979) 96 CA3d 268, 274, 158 CR 54 (felonies). No matter how long the delay, prejudice will not be presumed. People v Nelson, supra (cold hit DNA test resulted in prosecution 26 years after murder). However, any showing of prejudice, no matter how slight, will be sufficient to shift the burden to the prosecution to justify the delay. People v Lowe (2007) 40 C4th 937, 942, 56 CR3d 209; People v Martinez (2000) 22 C4th 750, 766, 94 CR2d 381.

If justification is presented, the court must engage in a balancing test to decide whether the justification for the delay outweighs the prejudice to the defendant. People v Nelson (2008) 43 C4th 1242, 1251, 78 CR3d 69. See, e.g., People v New (2008) 163 CA4th 442, 77 CR3d 503 (32-year delay in prosecuting defendant for murder of his first wife).

A due process claim may be made even if the action was brought within the period of the applicable statute of limitations (Pen C §§799-805). U.S. v Marion (1971) 404 US 307, 324, 30 L Ed 2d 468, 480, 92 S Ct 455; People v Archerd (1970) 3 C3d 615, 639, 91 CR 397.

A sample defense motion to dismiss on due process grounds is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §19.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

B. Postaccusation Delay: Speedy Trial

§19.4 1. Federal and State Constitutions Apply

An "accused" is entitled to protection under the speedy trial provisions of US Const amend VI, XIV, and/or Cal Const art I, §15. The tests used under the federal and state constitutions are different, as is the time when the right attaches. See Serna v Superior Court (1985) 40 C3d 239, 219 CR 420; People v Hannon (1977) 19 C3d 588, 605, 138 CR 885.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/19 RIGHT TO SPEEDY TRIAL/§19.5 2. United States Constitution

§19.5 2. United States Constitution

When Sixth Amendment speedy trial right attaches. For the Sixth Amendment speedy trial right to attach, the defendant must be an "accused." The U.S. Supreme Court has defined an "accused" as one who is subject to "formal indictment or information or else the actual restraints imposed by arrest and holding to answer a criminal charge." U.S. v Marion (1971) 404 US 307, 320, 30 L Ed 2d 468, 478, 92 S Ct 455.

In applying U.S. v Marion to the system of criminal charging used in California, which differs from that of the federal system, the California Supreme Court has held that the federal speedy trial right attaches in misdemeanor cases when a defendant is arrested or when the misdemeanor complaint is filed, whichever comes first. Serna v Superior Court (1985) 40 C3d 239, 262, 219 CR 420. In felony cases, the federal speedy trial right attaches on a holding order following a preliminary hearing, or when an indictment is filed. People v Martinez (2000) 22 C4th 750, 94 CR2d 381; People v Hannon (1977) 19 C3d 588, 605, 138 CR 885. The filing of a felony complaint is not sufficient to trigger federal speedy trial protection on the charged crimes. People v DePriest (2007) 42 C4th 1, 26, 63 CR3d 896. Therefore, in felony cases, only Cal Const art I, §15, is clearly available to challenge delay that occurs between the filing of a criminal complaint and the magistrate's holding order. See People v Horning (2004) 34 C4th 871, 895, 22 CR3d 305; People v Hannon, supra. See §19.6.

Applying federal speedy trial analysis. Federal speedy trial evaluation is done on a case-by-case basis. The U.S. Supreme Court has identified four factors that, among any other relevant circumstances, should be considered and balanced when the court evaluates a claimed violation of the federal constitutional speedy trial right (Barker v Wingo (1972) 407 US 514, 33 L Ed 2d 101, 92 S Ct 2182):

- Length of the delay;
- Reason for the delay;
- Defendant's assertion of the right; and
- Prejudice to the defendant.

A problem when addressing federal speedy trial analysis is the use of the term "presumptively prejudicial." The phrase is actually used in two different contexts in federal law. The first refers to the amount of delay that will be deemed unreasonable enough to "trigger" an inquiry into whether the Sixth Amendment has been violated. Not every delay, even if prejudicial, will violate the right to speedy trial, and the defendant cannot complain if he or she has been prosecuted with "customary promptness." Doggett v U.S. (1992) 505 US 647, 652, 120 L Ed 2d 520, 528, 112 S Ct 2686. The second use of the term refers to a delay that is long enough to warrant a presumption that the defendant has been prejudiced in ways that cannot be demonstrated and thus to require dismissal without a specific showing of prejudice in the absence of justification for the delay. 505 US at 656, 120 L Ed 2d at 531.

In Serna v Superior Court, supra, the California Supreme Court held that a misdemeanor defendant need not establish "actual prejudice" as a prerequisite to a Barker v Wingo hearing if the postcomplaint prearrest delay exceeds 1 year. The issue left open by the courts is this: In a case in which the prosecution cannot justify the delay, what length of delay warrants dismissal without any additional showing of "actual prejudice" by a defendant?

Beyond the necessary showing of a presumptively prejudicial delay in the triggering sense, the U.S. Supreme Court has stated that a showing of prejudice is not an essential prerequisite to demonstrating a violation of the Sixth Amendment. Moore v Arizona (1973) 414 US 25, 38 L Ed 2d 183, 94 S Ct 188. However, if actual prejudice cannot be shown, the reason for the delay becomes crucial. If the government has prosecuted with reasonable diligence, and the delay is consequently not lengthy, there will usually not be a Sixth Amendment violation in the absence of actual prejudice, while, if the delay was intentional or in bad faith, dismissal will almost always be required, even if the delay is not as long and whether or not there is prejudice. See U.S. v Beamon (9th Cir 1993) 992 F2d 1009; People v Horning (2004) 34 C4th 871, 891, 22 CR3d 305. If the delay is negligent, the case for dismissal even in the absence of prejudice becomes stronger as the length of the delay increases. Doggett v U.S., supra (finding negligent delay of 8½ years in serious felony case required dismissal without showing of actual prejudice, leaving open whether shorter delay would also require dismissal).

See §19.37 for discussion of sanctions.

§19.6 3. California Constitution

Under Cal Const art I, §15, a person becomes an accused when an accusatory pleading is filed or on arrest, whichever occurs first. An accusatory pleading includes felony and misdemeanor complaints, informations, and indictments. People v Hannon (1977) 19 C3d 588, 604, 138 CR 885. See also Pen C §691(c) (defining accusatory pleading). The same test is used for both due process and speedy trial claims, i.e., any prejudice to the defendant resulting from the delay must be weighed against any justification for the delay. Scherling v Superior Court (1978) 22 C3d 493, 505 n9, 149 CR 597. See also People v Hill (1984) 37 C3d 491, 496, 209 CR 323. Prejudice is a factual question to be determined by the trial court. See People v Cave (1978) 81 CA3d 957, 147 CR 371. The defendant has the burden to show actual prejudice, and there is no presumption of prejudice. People v Martinez (2000) 22 C4th 750, 94 CR2d 381; People v Horning (2004) 34 C4th 871, 895, 22 CR3d 305. The defendant claiming the speedy trial violation under the California Constitution must show that the delay has impaired the ability to defend against the charged crime, because, for example, a witness has become unavailable, evidence has been lost, or a witness's memory has faded. People v Lowe (2007) 40 C4th 937, 946, 56 CR3d 209.

Ø Note: Although the application of the speedy trial protections of the California and U.S. constitutions are coextensive in misdemeanor cases, the California Constitution is effective in felony cases before the U.S. Constitution applies. See discussion in §19.5.

The state constitution speedy trial test is somewhat more favorable to the defendant than is the federal test, because only two factors must be balanced: actual prejudice and justification. Thus, an unjustified delay that causes actual prejudice should almost always result in dismissal under the California Constitution, even if other factors might weigh against dismissal under the U.S. Constitution. Accordingly, when actual prejudice can be proven, relief should be sought primarily under the California Constitution. When actual prejudice cannot be proven, relief must be sought under the U.S. Constitution, because actual prejudice is not an essential showing. However, in a felony case, delay that occurs between the complaint and the holding order is not protected under the U.S. Constitution. See discussion in §19.5. Of course, if the delay implicates both the state constitutional right and the federal constitutional right, both issues should be raised.

See §§19.7-19.12 for discussion of raising speedy trial issues, and see §19.37 for discussion of sanctions.

§19.7 C. Motion to Dismiss: Oral or Written

A violation of the defendant's right to a speedy trial is customarily raised in a pretrial motion to dismiss. Because of the complexity of the issues involved in challenging delay on constitutional grounds, it is more effective to file a written motion to dismiss, accompanied by a supporting memorandum. See Cal Rules of Ct 4.111(b). It should include a detailed statement of facts supporting a finding of prejudice resulting from the delay, when prejudice must be shown. On facts that may be used to demonstrate prejudice, see §19.10. Defense counsel may want to include supporting affidavits or declarations outlining the prejudice suffered. See discussion of service and filing requirements for pretrial motions in §18.7. A sample defense motion to dismiss based on a speedy trial violation is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §19.2 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

If counsel does not have enough time to file a written motion to dismiss, and a written motion is not required by local court rules or local practice, counsel may be able to make the motion orally. California Rules of Court 4.111(a) excepts pretrial motions when "specifically provided by law." It can be argued that because motions to dismiss are to be made as soon as possible after the relevant statutory time limit expires (see People v Wilson (1963) 60 C2d 139, 145 n3, 32 CR 44), they fall under the exception in this rule. Oral motions are most often used when counsel has little or no time before he or she must make the motion.

> Ø Note: When counsel has a few days to prepare the motion, he or she should consider either filing a written motion, together with an order shortening time signed by a judge, or calling the district attorney to let him or her know that the motion will be made and the grounds for it. This is particularly important if counsel expects to call witnesses.

§19.8 D. Tactical Considerations in Bringing Motion to Dismiss

Raising a pretrial motion to dismiss based on a speedy trial violation can have drawbacks. First, if the defendant testifies, the prosecution will have a record that can be used to impeach future trial testimony or even form the basis for a future perjury charge should the defendant be less than truthful on the stand. On handling the ethical dilemma faced by the attorney who knows his or her client intends to commit perjury, see §2.30. Second, the hearing on the speedy trial motion may provide the prosecution with more discovery at an earlier stage of the proceedings than would otherwise be available.

Several alternative methods of proof are available and should be explored before subjecting the defendant to cross-examination (see People v Williams (1973) 30 CA3d 502, 510, 106 CR 324):

- An affidavit or declaration by defense counsel or defense witnesses may be made under penalty of perjury. The affiant or declarant must have personal knowledge of the facts related. People v Sahagun (1979) 89 CA3d 1, 152 CR 233. Affidavits and declarations on information and belief are insufficient to establish necessary facts. Brown v Superior Court (1987) 189 CA3d 260, 265, 234 CR 416; Star Motor Imports, Inc. v Superior Court (1979) 88 CA3d 201, 204, 151 CR 721.
- Testimony by the defense investigator may be presented to show the impact of the delay on the defendant's ability to defend by showing the inability to locate key witnesses or pertinent evidence. Defense counsel should be prepared, however, to make a showing of the relevance of this unavailable evidence, e.g., the nature of the expected testimony of the missing witness or the pertinence of the destroyed evidence. The defense investigator must also be prepared to show that the witness or evidence is missing because of the delay, e.g., the witness whose address was listed in the police report has since moved with no forwarding address. If the defense cannot show that the evidence would have been available had the defendant been aware of the charges at an earlier time, the proffered prejudice may be found to be inconsequential. See the analysis in People v Benavidez (1979) 92 CA3d 264, 154 CR 552.

E. Evidence to Prove Speedy Trial or Due Process Violation

§19.9 1. Rules of Evidence Apply but Are Subject to Greater Flexibility

At the hearing on a motion to dismiss, the normal rules of evidence presumably apply, subject to the greater flexibility generally allowed when the court is sitting as the sole trier of fact. See People v Maki (1985) 39 C3d 707, 217 CR 676, and People v Winson (1981) 29 C3d 711, 175 CR 621, relating to probation violation hearings. These motions may be made and decided on the basis of affidavits or declarations made on personal knowledge under penalty of perjury. See People v Sahagun (1979) 89 CA3d 1, 152 CR 233; People v Conrad (1973) 31 CA3d 308, 107 CR 421. It is important to note, that the opposing party has the right to cross-examine the affiant or declarant on request; if the witness is not available, the witness's testimony may be stricken. See People v Williams (1973) 30 CA3d 502, 510, 106 CR 324. Counsel should subpoena the witnesses whose affidavits or declarations will be presented, although those witnesses may be placed on call, so that the witnesses can be presented if the prosecutor demands the right to cross-examination. Although defense counsel could check to see whether the prosecutor will want to cross-examine the witness, it may be the better practice not to alert the prosecutor to that right, because many attorneys faced with an affidavit or declaration simply overlook their right to cross-examination.

At the hearing on the motion, other competent relevant evidence is also admissible, including live testimony, documents, exhibits, and physical evidence. See, e.g., People v Hannon (1977) 19 C3d 588, 608, 138 CR 885.

When prejudice must be shown to support a finding of violation of a defendant's speedy trial rights (see §§19.3, 19.5-19.6), the defendant must support the claim of prejudice with competent evidence that shows both the prejudicial nature of the claim and that the prejudice was caused by the delay. People v Sahagun, supra.

Ø Note: Counsel should be sure to marshall all necessary evidence before the motion is heard, and subpoena all witnesses needed to testify (although they may be placed "on call"). Counsel should not rely on his or her opponent to have subpoenaed a particular witness if counsel needs that witness to support or attack a motion to dismiss.

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/19 RIGHT TO SPEEDY TRIAL/§19.10 2. Proof of Prejudice

§19.10 2. Proof of Prejudice

Actual prejudice is an area in which defense counsel may be creative. Counsel should be alert to any impairment of the client's defense. Prejudice to a defendant caused by delay in bringing the case to trial, however, is not confined to the possible prejudice to his or her defense at trial (often resulting from the defendant's inability to recall incidents on the date in question). Inordinate delay, wholly aside from possible prejudice to the merits, may seriously interfere with the defendant's liberty, whether free on bail or not, and may disrupt employment, drain financial resources, curtail associations, result in public obloquy, and create anxiety in the defendant and his or her family and friends. Additionally, prejudice may be found from the inability of prosecution witnesses to clearly remember the facts because of the delay.

Ø Note: Counsel must show specific facts detailing prejudice. General allegations of loss of memory, missing witnesses, or lost evidence are generally insufficient. People v Sahagun (1979) 89 CA3d 1, 152 CR 233. For California constitutional arguments, the initial showing of actual prejudice must demonstrate that the delay impaired the ability to defend against the charged crime. People v Lowe (2007) 40 C4th 937, 939, 56 CR3d 209.

The following are some of the types of prejudice to the defense that may occur:

- Loss of physical evidence by the police, defendant, or witnesses. People v Hartman (1985) 170 CA3d 572, 216 CR 641.
- Loss of a material witness. People v Mirenda (2009) 174 CA4th 1313, 1333, 95 CR3d 702; People v Cave (1978) 81 CA3d 957, 965, 147 CR 371.
- Faded memories of witnesses. People v Hill (1984) 37 C3d 491, 498, 209 CR 323. If witnesses' memories were not affected by the delay, there is no prejudice even if a long time has passed. People v Morris (1988) 46 C3d 1, 249 CR 119 (4 years), disapproved on other grounds in In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 37 CR2d 446.
- Loss of possible or potential concurrent sentences. Smith v Hooey (1969) 393 US 374, 378, 21 L Ed 2d 607, 611, 89 S Ct 575; Barker v Municipal Court (1966) 64 C2d 806, 813, 51 CR 921.

Ø Note: While the loss of the possibility of concurrent sentences is not sufficient on its own to establish an initial showing of actual prejudice in a California constitutional speedy trial motion (People v Lowe, supra), if the defense can show a prejudice that impaired the ability to defend, then the loss of a possible concurrent sentence is a prejudicial factor to be weighed in the balancing test.

- Prolonged incarceration. Craft v Superior Court (2006) 140 CA4th 1533, 1541, 44 CR3d 912.
- The client's inability to account for his or her whereabouts at the time the crime was committed because of the passage of time. Ibarra v Municipal Court (1984) 162 CA3d 853, 858, 208 CR 783; People v Vanderburg (1973) 32 CA3d 526, 108 CR 104.
- Loss of evidence potentially favorable to the defense, e.g., the destruction of a dispatch tape because of the police department's internal policies. Fowler v Superior Court (1984) 162 CA3d 215, 208 CR 408.

The showing of prejudice must be artfully drawn, specific, and complete. See Serna v Superior Court (1985) 40 C3d 239, 250, 219 CR 420. Examples of showings held adequate by the appellate courts follow:

- In Garcia v Superior Court (1984) 163 CA3d 148, 209 CR 205, the defendant, charged with possession of drugs located during a booking search, submitted a declaration that four witnesses were present when she was arrested and searched at the scene and that one of the witnesses could not be located. The three other witnesses submitted declarations that they were present but had no recollection of the search because of the delay of more than a year.
- In People v Hill, supra, the prosecution eyewitnesses were able to make tentative in-court identifications, but their memories were "too uncertain to permit adequate cross-examination on the particulars of the person who attacked them."

In the following cases, the appellate courts upheld lower courts' rulings that the following showings were inadequate:

- In Kaikas v Superior Court (1971) 18 CA3d 86, 91, 95 CR 596, defense counsel made a claim of prejudice based on inability to locate two material witnesses; the court rejected this claim.
- The defendant's claim of prejudice based on the allegation that two potential witnesses were dead and four alibi witnesses were unavailable was rejected in Blake v Superior Court (1980) 108 CA3d 244, 250, 166 CR 470, because the defendant failed to articulate specific facts demonstrating the existence and unavailability of these witnesses.
- In People v Posten (1980) 108 CA3d 633, 166 CR 661, the defendant's allegation of prejudice based on the claim that the codefendant was not able to testify because he had been released from custody was rejected because there was no showing that his testimony would have been exculpatory.
- In People v Benavidez (1979) 92 CA3d 264, 154 CR 552, the defendant claimed an inability to remember where she was at the time of an alleged narcotic sale because of a 5-month delay. The court rejected this claim, stating there was no assertion that she would have remembered had the arrest occurred earlier.

See also U.S. v Mills (9th Cir 2002) 280 F3d 915 (showing that deceased witness who had told two people he would not let the defendant "take the fall" for charged offense found too speculative and indefinite to establish prejudice).

§19.11 3. Justification for Delay

Justification for delay is relevant under all three of the constitutional tests discussed in §§19.5-19.6. Under both a due process analysis and a California constitutional speedy trial analysis, the burden shifts to the prosecution to attempt to justify the delay after the defense has made a showing of actual prejudice. Under the federal constitutional speedy trial test, justification is one of the four factors to be balanced. See §19.5.

To justify a delay, the prosecution must establish a valid "police purpose" necessitating the delay. Penney v Superior Court (1972) 28 CA3d 941, 953, 105 CR 162. This is an affirmative requirement; it cannot be met simply by showing an absence of deliberate purposeful or oppressive police conduct. Penney v Superior Court, supra. Limited resources, e.g., too few police officers to serve all warrants, courtroom congestion, and inadequately staffed prosecutor or public defender offices, do not constitute valid reasons for delay. See Barker v Wingo (1972) 407 US 514, 531, 33 L Ed 2d 101, 117, 92 S Ct 2182; Rhinehart v Municipal Court (1984) 35 C3d 772, 781, 200 CR 916; People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 571, 162 CR 431; People v Flores (2009) 173 CA4th Supp 9, 25, 92 CR3d 582; People v Cole (2008) 165 CA4th Supp 1, 11, 82 CR3d 699.

Neither negligence by police officers in gathering evidence or putting a case together for presentation to the district attorney nor incompetence of the district attorney in evaluating a case for possible prosecution can be considered valid police purposes. Penney v Superior Court, supra. A negligent delay, although not as serious as a deliberate one, will be weighed against the prosecution in all but federal due process analysis (Barker v Wingo, supra), as will a delay attributable to another branch of the state government rather than the district attorney's office. People v Hill (1984) 37 C3d 491, 497, 209 CR 323. Purposeful delay to gain an advantage is totally unjustified, and a relatively weak showing of prejudice will suffice to tip the scales towards finding a violation. People v Nelson (2008) 43 C4th 1242, 1256, 78 CR3d 69.

> Ø Note: The prosecution may be able to present evidence of justification for a delay in serving an arrest warrant by subpoenaing the police records that document attempts to serve the warrant. See Evid C §1271 (business records exception to hearsay rule).

An accused's own acts may be considered in determining justification for a delay. People v Johnson, supra. See Vermont v Brillon (2009) ___ US ___, 173 L Ed 2d 231, 241, 129 S Ct 1283. A delay that is directly attributable to the accused's own wrongful act may in and of itself justify the delay. Barker v Wingo (1972) 407 US 514, 530, 33 L Ed 2d 101, 116, 92 S Ct 2182. Some examples:

- A defendant who flees the jurisdiction of the court for the purpose of avoiding prosecution. People v Perez (1991) 229 CA3d 302, 279 CR 915. There are, however, federal appellate court decisions to the contrary. See, e.g., Rayborn v Scully (2d Cir 1988) 858 F2d 84. Of course, the U.S. Supreme Court held in Barker v Wingo, supra, that no single factor, which would appear to include the defendant's assertion of the right, can be determinative of the speedy trial issue. At any rate, a defendant who fails to appear, but does not leave the jurisdiction, has not waived his or her right to a speedy trial. Ogle v Superior Court (1992) 4 CA4th 1007, 6 CR2d 205.
- A defendant who gives an alias when being arrested on a new offense, so that subsequent checks do not show that he or she was in custody. People v Almarez (1985) 168 CA3d 262, 214 CR 105.
- A case that is refiled after the victim, who refused to prosecute the first time, is killed by the defendant. People v Abraham (1986) 185 CA3d 1221, 230 CR 325.

If the prosecution asserts that a delay was justified because of unsuccessful attempts to arrest the defendant, the defense has the right to cross-examine prosecution witnesses on attempts to serve the arrest warrant. See Evid C §1203. Cross-examination should focus on police failure to take investigative steps that would have led them to the defendant, e.g., leaving cards or other notice of attempted service, contacting neighbors if there is no answer at the defendant's residence, checking available government records (e.g., DMV or jail records), checking with the post office and utility companies, checking ownership of cars in the defendant's driveway, and attempting to serve the warrant at different times of the day if the defendant's job was the reason for a regular pattern of absence. A defendant's failure to notify the DMV or postal authorities is also relevant.

In large metropolitan areas, once service is unsuccessful at the last-known address, it is customary to enter the warrant in a computer network and abandon subsequent attempts at service. Such a cursory effort can be highlighted to defense advantage by coupling the lack of investigation with a strong showing of availability in the defendant's declaration.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.12 4. Attacking Showing of Justification

The defense can attack a showing of justification after it is made, or can anticipate the prosecutor's showing of justification in the motion to dismiss. On one hand, the advantage of waiting to see whether the prosecutor presents justification for the delay is that justification must be shown by the prosecutor; failure to do so weighs against the prosecution. On the other hand, by showing lack of justification at the beginning, the defense may make strengthen its case. However, it gives the prosecutor advance notice and the opportunity to investigate.

When proving lack of justification, counsel should show the defendant's availability for service of the arrest warrant and lack of knowledge of the warrant.

If defense counsel submits an affidavit or a declaration by the defendant to show availability for service and lack of knowledge of the warrant, it should be carefully limited to those issues. Such an affidavit or declaration is intended to demonstrate that the delay in service was unjustified and to remove the implication that the delay arose from the defendant's actions. The affidavit or declaration should include any of the following that are relevant:

- All information already known to the police and prosecution at the time the complaint was filed;
- Any facts that would have led the authorities to the defendant had minimal efforts been made to locate him or her;
- The defendant's address at the time of the offense, and any subsequent addresses up to the date of arrest, including notification to local postal authorities of address changes;
- Utilities listed in the defendant's name;
- The defendant's name and address in the phone book;
- Contacts with the local probation department;
- A driver's license or motor vehicle registration at the DMV;
- Any application for welfare or unemployment benefits;
- Voter registration;
- Any police contacts during the period the warrant was outstanding; and
- Any court appearances on unrelated charges.

The prosecutor has the right to cross-examine the affiant or declarant. If the witness is unavailable for cross-examination, his or her affidavit or declaration may be stricken. People v Williams (1973) 30 CA3d 502, 510, 106 CR 324.

IV. STATUTORY CLAIMS

§19.13 A. Statute of Limitations

If a prosecution was not commenced within the period of time provided by the appropriate statute of limitations and the statute has not been tolled, then criminal proceedings must be terminated. People v Zamora (1976) 18 C3d 538, 134 CR 784. The statutes of limitations are in Pen C §§799-805.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.14 1. Determining Applicable Statute of Limitations

The applicable statute of limitations is determined by reference to the maximum punishment possible under the statute.

If an offense is not punishable by death or imprisonment in a state prison, i.e., if it is a misdemeanor, the statute of limitations is ordinarily 1 year. See Pen C §802; People v Mincey (1992) 2 C4th 408, 6 CR2d 822. For an offense punishable by imprisonment in a state prison for less than 8 years, the statute of limitations is ordinarily 3 years. Pen C §801. The statute of limitations that applies to a "wobbler" (a crime that may be charged either as a misdemeanor or as a felony) that is charged as a misdemeanor is determined by reference to the maximum felony sentence. Pen C §805(a). When a misdemeanor is charged as a felony because of prior convictions, the felony statute of limitations applies. Pen C §801; People v San Nicolas (1986) 185 CA3d 403, 229 CR 650. If an offense is punishable by imprisonment of 8 years or more, the statute of limitations is ordinarily 6 years. Pen C §800. There is no statute of limitations for an offense that is punishable by death, imprisonment in state prison for life, or imprisonment for life without possibility of parole, or for an offense involving embezzlement of public money. Pen C §799.

There are some exceptions to these rules. Prosecution for misdemeanor violations of Bus & P C §729 and Pen C §647.6 must be commenced within 2 years after the commission of the offense. Pen C §802. Fraud-related offenses, as listed in Pen C §803(c), have a 4-year period for commencement of the prosecution. Pen C §801.5. See, e.g., People v Shetty (2009) 174 CA4th 1488, 95 CR3d 355. Keep in mind that this means that a fraud-related wobbler offense, even when filed as a misdemeanor, may have a statute of limitations of 4 years. People v Soni (2005) 134 CA4th 1510, 36 CR3d 864. Other exceptions concern specified sex crimes against victims under 18 at the time of the offense (see Pen C §§801.1(a), 803(f)) and sex crimes when the suspect's identity is later conclusively established by DNA testing (see Pen C §803(g)). Although the statute of limitations generally begins when the offense is committed (Pen C §802), for some crimes it does not begin to run until the crime is discovered. Pen C §803(c). See also Pen C §803(h), which tolls the statute of limitations until essential evidence seized under warrant is made available to the prosecution. A law that attempts to revive a previously time-barred prosecution violates the Ex Post Facto Clause of the U.S. Constitution. Stogner v California (2003) 539 US 607, 609, 156 L Ed 2d 544, 550, 123 S Ct 2446. Counsel should also be aware that there may be a separation of powers violation on a refiled case, if the legislature amended the statute of limitations after the previous dismissal was final. See People v Bunn (2002) 27 C4th 1, 115 CR2d 192; People v King (2002) 27 C4th 29, 115 CR2d 214.

For purposes of the statute of limitations and except as otherwise provided by statute, a prosecution is commenced when one of the following occurs: An indictment or information is filed; a complaint charging a misdemeanor or infraction is filed; the defendant is arraigned on a complaint that charges the defendant with a felony; or an arrest warrant or bench warrant is issued. Pen C §§804, 806. Prosecution of a minor in an adult court for statute of limitations purposes begins with the filing of an accusatory pleading, such as an indictment, in the adult court. People v Aguirre (1991) 227 CA3d 373, 381, 277 CR 771 (indictment). Note People v Superior Court (Gevorgyan) (2001) 91 CA4th 602, 615, 110 CR2d 668, disapproved on other grounds in Guillory v Superior Court (2003) 31 C4th 168, 178 n5, 1 CR3d 879, limiting Aguirre solely to the application of the statute of limitations (indictment of juveniles not permitted in current statutory scheme).

§19.15 2. Burden of Showing Prosecution Is Not Barred by Statute of Limitations; Pleading Requirements

An accusatory pleading must allege facts showing that the prosecution is not barred by the statute of limitations. In re Demillo (1975) 14 C3d 598, 601, 121 CR 725; People v Crosby (1962) 58 C2d 713, 724, 25 CR 847. The prosecution has the burden, at the preliminary hearing or before the grand jury, and at trial, of proving that prosecution is not barred by the statute of limitations.

An accusatory pleading that seeks to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations by pleading the "date of discovery" provision must allege facts showing (1) the date on which the offense was discovered; (2) how and by whom the offense was discovered; (3) lack of knowledge, both actual or constructive, before the date of discovery; and (4) the reason the offense was not discovered earlier. People v Zamora (1976) 18 C3d 538, 564 n26, 134 CR 784.

The prosecution may also attempt to show that the statute of limitations was tolled (i.e., in certain circumstances, the statute of limitations may be extended by the period of time that such circumstances are in existence). Pen C §803. The statute is tolled by any period of time during which a prosecution for the same conduct is pending in a state court (Pen C §803(b)), and by the period of time the defendant is absent from the state, up to a maximum tolling of 3 years (Pen C §803(d)). See People v Whitfield (1993) 19 CA4th 1652, 1658, 24 CR2d 210. The prosecution must produce evidence to establish how long the statute was tolled. People v Le (2000) 82 CA4th 1352, 98 CR2d 874.

At the preliminary hearing and before the grand jury, the prosecution has the burden of establishing probable cause that the prosecution is not barred by the statute of limitations. People v Lopez (1997) 52 CA4th 233, 249, 60 CR2d 511. When the defendant makes a pretrial motion to dismiss on the grounds that the statute of limitations has run, the defendant has the burden of proving that the statute of limitations has run as a matter of law. People v Moore (2009) 176 CA4th 687, 97 CR3d 844; People v Lopez, supra. If the defense is successful, the case is dismissed. The prosecution has the burden during trial of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the statute of limitations has not expired. People v Lopez, supra.

§19.16 3. Raising Issue of Failure to Comply With Statute of Limitations; Waiver

Failure to comply with the appropriate statute of limitations is a jurisdictional question. C*owan v Superior Court* (1996) 14 C4th 367, 58 CR2d 458; People v McGee (1934) 1 C2d 611, 36 P2d 378. Accordingly, a claim of violation of the statute of limitations may be raised by a demurrer under Pen C §1004(4) or §1004(5), by a motion under Pen C §995, by a motion in arrest of judgment under Pen C §1185, or by a writ of habeas corpus. See People v Crosby (1962) 58 C2d 713, 722, 25 CR 847.

Failure to comply with the appropriate statute of limitations may be raised on appeal without first having been raised in the trial court. See, e.g., People v Williams (1999) 21 C4th 335, 87 CR2d 412. It may also be raised on a Pen C §995 motion without being raised as an issue at the preliminary hearing. People v Zamora (1976) 18 C3d 538, 565 n26, 134 CR 784.

Although the statutes of limitations are jurisdictional, a defendant can expressly waive one that is applicable to plead guilty to a lesser charge for which the statute has run. When it is to a defendant's benefit, he or she may want to obtain a jury instruction for a lesser charge for which the statute of limitations has run. See Cowan v Superior Court, supra (when defendant expressly waived statute of limitations, it was error for court to set aside his plea to lesser included offense, on waiving statute of limitations, which had run on manslaughter).

§19.17 B. Time for Arraignment

Time requirements for arraignment are primarily discussed in §6.8. The basic arraignment time requirement in criminal cases is that the defendant must be brought before a magistrate for arraignment and bail-setting without any unnecessary delay, and in any event within 2 days after arrest, excluding nonjudicial days. Pen C §849(a) (arrest without warrant), §825 (arrest with warrant); People v Thompson (1980) 27 C3d 303, 329, 165 CR 289; People v Haydel (1974) 12 C3d 190, 199, 115 CR 394. An arraignment should take place within 48 hours after arrest. County of Riverside v McLaughlin (1991) 500 US 44, 56, 114 L Ed 2d 49, 63, 111 S Ct 1661.

Even if the defendant is brought to court within 2 days, the arraignment may have been illegally delayed if the 2-day delay was not necessary. People v Powell (1967) 67 C2d 32, 59 CR 817; Dragna v White (1955) 45 C2d 469, 289 P2d 428. The only delays that may be deemed "necessary" are those needed to complete the arrest, book the accused, transport the accused to court, determine which charge to file, and complete the administrative tasks necessary for filing a formal pleading. Delay is not permissible for further investigation. People v Williams (1977) 68 CA3d 36, 43, 137 CR 70; People v Thompson, supra.

> Ø Note: See discussion in §6.23 of the constitutional requirements on probable cause determinations for persons arrested without a warrant. Counsel should be sure to object on constitutional as well as statutory grounds. See People v Turner (1994) 8 C4th 137, 32 CR2d 762.

If the defendant suffers prejudice owing to delay concerning any of these deadlines, the defendant may seek sanctions. People v Valenzuela (1978) 86 CA3d 427, 432, 150 CR 314. For discussion of sanctions, see §19.37.

Relief from prearraignment delay is usually sought when the detention resulted in the defendant's inability to obtain evidence to support his or her defense. See, e.g., People v Valenzuela (1978) 86 CA3d 427, 150 CR 314. Confessions obtained during a prolonged detention are also subject to attack. See, e.g., People v Pettingill (1978) 21 C3d 231, 244, 145 CR 861 (court relied on illegal detention and Miranda violation). When evidence was seized or statements were taken during the delay, the appropriate remedy for a violation of the McLaughlin 48-hour "rule" is exclusion of the evidence if the evidence was a "fruit of the poisonous tree." Anderson v Calderon (9th Cir 2000) 232 F3d 1053, 1071, overruled on other grounds in Bittaker v Woodford (9th Cir 2003) 331 F3d 715, 728. To determine whether a statement was a fruit of the poisonous tree, the court must decide (1) whether the statement was voluntary, not simply whether it occurred during the detention; and (2) whether it was either (a) the causal product of the violation, or (b) sufficiently an act of free will to disconnect it from the primary taint. 232 F3d at 1072. See also People v Thompson (1980) 27 C3d 303, 165 CR 289 (unnecessary delay in arraigning defendant is a factor to consider in determining whether confession made during period of delay was involuntary); Rogers v Superior Court (1955) 46 C2d 3, 10, 291 P2d 929 (defendant must show that confession is "a necessary product of the illegal detention"). To obtain relief, the defense must show either that an illegal detention occurred and that the detention produced the confession or that an essential connection existed between the detention and the confession. People v Turner (1994) 8 C4th 137, 32 CR2d 762 (3-day delay not unreasonable, because of complexity of case, and defendant did not show that delay resulted in challenged statements); People v Carrera (1989) 49 C3d 291, 324, 261 CR 348 (3-day delay illegal; defendant's "but for" argument insufficient).

C. Preliminary Hearing

§19.18 1. Time Limits; Remedy for Failure to Comply With Pen C §859b

The preliminary hearing of a defendant who has been in custody for 10 or more court days solely on a felony complaint must be held within 10 court days after the defendant was arraigned or entered a plea, whichever occurred later, or within 10 court days after reinstatement of criminal proceedings under Pen C §§1367-1376. Pen C §859b. There may be a continuance beyond the 10-court-day period only if the defendant personally waives that limit (Pen C §859b(a); Irving v Superior Court (1979) 93 CA3d 596, 155 CR 654) or if the prosecution establishes good cause for a continuance under Pen C §1050 (Pen C §859b). See §19.19 for discussion of releasing the defendant as a remedy when good cause is shown.

Ø Note: Once a defendant has waived the 10-day rule, the 60-day rule, or both, there is no provision for withdrawal of that waiver. The only protection is the state constitutional speedy trial right. People v Love (2005) 132 CA4th 276, 34 CR3d 6.

In general, good cause for delaying a preliminary hearing is the same as good cause for delaying a trial under Pen C §1050. See §19.27 on good cause. However, §859b itself defines good cause for continuing a preliminary hearing as including the unavailability of a prosecuting attorney assigned to a case prosecuted under Pen C §187, §11165.1(a), or §11165.6 (concerning domestic violence). A delay under this provision can be for no more than 3 court days. Pen C §859b(b).

Ø Note: Because Pen C §872(b) permits hearsay to be introduced at a preliminary hearing, it will often be impossible for the prosecution to show that a delay in holding the preliminary hearing was justified by the unavailability of a witness.

If the defendant is not in custody, or if the hearing is being continued for good cause, the preliminary hearing must be set within 60 calendar days after arraignment or plea; otherwise, the case must be dismissed. Pen C §859b(b). There is no "good cause" exception to the 60-day period; it may be exceeded only with the defendant's personal consent. This is true even if good cause pursuant to Pen C §1050.1 is found regarding a jointly charged codefendant. Ramos v Superior Court (2007) 146 CA4th 719, 727, 53 CR3d 189. However, if a complaint is dismissed because of a violation of the 60-day rule, and there was good cause for the delay, an additional filing of charges is permitted under Pen C §1387(c)(1). For further discussion of Pen C §1387, see §25.45.

When the time requirements of Pen C §859b have been met, it is unclear whether the court has authority to dismiss an action merely because the prosecution fails to show good cause for a continuance under Pen C §1050. The court in People v Henderson (2004) 115 CA4th 922, 940, 9 CR3d 655, stated that in those circumstances, the trial court "must nevertheless postpone the hearing to another date within the statutory period." However, the Advisory Committee Comment to Cal Rules of Ct 4.115(b) states that that conclusion appears to be dicta and may be contrary to the plain language of Pen C §1050.

No case has discussed what time limit will apply if a defendant in custody consents to a delay beyond the 10-court-day period. Unlike Pen C §1382, there is no defined "trailing period" following a consensual delay. However, case law interpreting §1382 before the 10-day "trailing period" was added to that statute would suggest that the defendant has a right to have the preliminary hearing begin on the continued date unless good cause is shown for further delay. See People v Weiss (1958) 50 C2d 535, 559, 327 P2d 527; Tudman v Superior Court (1972) 29 CA3d 129, 105 CR 391.

Ø Note: Either party can request a continuance within the initial 10-court-day period without a showing of good cause. Pen C §1050(k).

The 10-court-day and 60-calendar-day rules are statutory, requiring no showing of prejudice by the defendant to obtain a dismissal if their provisions are violated. See Pen C §859b.

If a case is continued beyond the 10-day limit without good cause, consent, or waiver, the case must be dismissed and the defendant discharged if the defendant has been in custody for 10 or more court days solely on that complaint. Pen C §859b.

If there is good cause to delay the preliminary hearing of one of two or more joined defendants, then, on motion of the prosecutor, there is good cause to delay the proceedings for all joined defendants. Pen C §1050.1; see discussion in §20.20.

When a defendant moves to represent him- or herself and the court concludes that a hearing is necessary to determine the defendant's mental capacity to waive counsel, the §859b time limits are tolled according to Curry v Superior Court (1977) 75 CA3d 221, 141 CR 884. Curry, however, was decided before the good cause exception was added to §859b; this situation would probably now be considered good cause rather than "tolling" the statute.

A magistrate may postpone a preliminary hearing for 1 court day to accommodate the physical, mental, or emotional needs of a child age 10 years or younger or a dependent person. Pen C §861.5. See Pen C §288(f)(3) ("dependent person" defined).

When a defendant asserts both the right to counsel and to have a preliminary hearing within 10 days, and the preliminary hearing is postponed beyond the 10-day period to allow the defendant to obtain counsel, the constitutional right to counsel prevails over the statutory speedy trial right, and the defendant is not entitled to a dismissal on speedy trial grounds. People v Kowalski (1987) 196 CA3d 174, 179, 242 CR 32.

The general rule is that a preliminary hearing must be completed in one session. Pen C §861. See discussion of the rule and exceptions in §8.18.

§19.19 2. Release of Defendant When Good Cause for Continuance Shown Under Pen C §859b

If a preliminary hearing is delayed beyond the 10-court-day limit with good cause and the defendant has been in custody 10 or more court days solely on that felony complaint, the defendant must usually be released from custody on his or her written promise to appear. Pen C §859b. See People v Standish (2006) 38 C4th 858, 43 CR3d 785.

Section 859b lists specific exceptions to the release requirement, which are, in brief: (1) The defendant has requested the delay, (2) the defendant is charged with a capital crime; (3) a witness is unavailable because of actions by the defendant; (4) the delay is caused by illness of counsel; (5) counsel is unexpectedly engaged in a jury trial; or (6) an unforeseen conflict of interest has required the appointment of new counsel.

In In re Samano (1995) 31 CA4th 984, 37 CR2d 491, a divided court created an exception to the release requirement that is not in §859b. In Samano, the court considered a defendant to have requested a continuance only because good cause had been found for a continuance for his codefendant; the defendant, therefore, was held not to be entitled to be released from custody, even though that is not an exception listed in §859b.

§19.20 D. Filing of Information After Preliminary Hearing

If an information is not filed in superior court within 15 calendar days after a defendant has been held to answer by a magistrate, the case must be dismissed unless good cause is shown. Pen C §1382(a)(1). This requirement can be waived if, for example, the defendant specifically requests a later date to file the information (People v Murray (1967) 247 CA2d 730, 56 CR 21) or if the defendant fails to move for dismissal promptly (People v McGhee (1987) 193 CA3d 1333, 239 CR 28). Failure to object to a late arraignment date, however, does not operate to waive the right to a timely filing of the information. Ciaccio v Superior Court (1984) 156 CA3d 130, 202 CR 674. If the original information is filed within 15 days, the fact that an amended information is filed after the 15-day period does not entitle the defendant to a dismissal. People v Cryder (1949) 90 CA2d 194, 202 P2d 765. See §19.37 on sanctions.

E. Trial and Posttrial

§19.21 1. Statutory Deadlines for Trials in Felony Cases

The general rule is that a defendant charged with a felony must be brought to trial within 60 calendar days after his or her arraignment on an indictment or information, or the reinstatement of criminal proceedings under Pen C §§1367-1376. Pen C §1382(a)(2); Rice v Superior Court (1975) 49 CA3d 200, 122 CR 389. The deadline is the same for in-custody and out-of-custody defendants. See Pen C §1382(a)(2).

The trial court itself is specifically required to set all felony cases for trial within 60 calendar days after the defendant's arraignment in superior court unless a showing of good cause is made under Pen C §1050 for setting a later trial date. Pen C §1049.5. If the court sets a trial date beyond the 60-day limit, it must hold a hearing as prescribed by §1050 and put on the record the facts that justify the finding of good cause. Pen C §1049.5. Section 1049.5 applies to all felony cases, regardless of the date the crime was committed. Tapia v Superior Court (1991) 53 C3d 282, 299, 279 CR 592.

There are several differences between Pen C §§1049.5 and 1382(a)(2):

- First, although a defendant may waive the 60-day requirement of Pen C §1382 (Pen C §1382(a)(2)(A)-(B)), only a finding of good cause allows the court to avoid the 60-day limit of §1049.5;
- Second, §1049.5 applies to the prosecution as well as to the defense; and
- Third, the only remedy for violation of §1049.5 is through writ, to obtain an order that the superior court "proceed… without further delay, other than that reasonably necessary for the parties to obtain the attendance of their witnesses" (Pen C §1511), while dismissal is the remedy for violation of Pen C §1382 and can also be sought by writ review. See Rhinehart v Municipal Court (1984) 35 C3d 772, 776, 200 CR 916.

In felony cases, the trial court is only able to appoint counsel (whether the Public Defender or court-appointed private counsel) who represent on the record that they will be ready to proceed with the preliminary hearing and trial within the Penal Code's time requirements. Pen C §987.05. The trial court may make exceptions only when the court finds that counsel could not be ready within 60 days given the nature of the case, even if counsel were to diligently devote "constant" efforts to the case. Pen C §987.05. Because §987.05 applies only to appointed counsel and not to retained counsel, there are serious equal protection problems with the statute. One approach to the problem is for the deputy public defender assigned a case to prepare that case and any other cases assigned to him or her for trial on the same date, and tell the court which cases would be ready for trial but for the fact they are assigned to the same attorney. If the defendant does not waive his or her speedy trial right, the court should follow the guidelines in People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 162 CR 431, discussed in §19.25, to try to bring the case to trial within the statutory speedy trial deadline. See discussion in People v Superior Court (Alexander) (1995) 31 CA4th 1119, 37 CR2d 729.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.22 2. Statutory Deadlines for Trials in Misdemeanor Cases

A defendant charged with a misdemeanor who was in custody when arraigned or entering a plea, whichever comes later, must be brought to trial within 30 calendar days after arraignment or plea, whichever occurs later. Pen C §1382(a)(3). A defendant charged with a misdemeanor in all other cases must be brought to trial within 45 calendar days after the date of arraignment or plea, whichever occurs later. Pen C §1382(a)(3). Regardless of custodial status, a defendant charged with a misdemeanor must be brought to trial within 30 days after the date of restoration of criminal proceedings under Pen C §§1367-1376. Pen C §1382(a)(3).

Ø Note: The time for trial is based on the defendant's custody status at the time of arraignment or plea, not on custody status after that. People v Baca (1989) 211 CA3d 675, 259 CR 566.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.23 3. Statutory Deadlines When New Trial Is Granted

In felony cases in which the cause is to be tried again following a mistrial, a new trial is required within 60 calendar days after the following (Pen C §1382(a)(2)):

- The date the mistrial was declared;
- The date of entry of the order granting a new trial from which an appeal is not taken;
- The date of filing of the remittitur in the trial court following an appeal; or
- The date a writ or order that in effect grants a new trial is filed in the trial court and served on the prosecutor.

Ø Note: When the defendant pleads guilty in a felony case before a preliminary hearing was held, and a writ or an order reverses that judgment, a new trial is required within 90 calendar days after the writ or order is filed in the trial court and served on the prosecutor. Pen C §1382(a)(2).

In misdemeanor cases, a new trial is required within 30 calendar days after the following (Pen C §1382(a)(3)):

- The date the mistrial was declared;
- The date of entry of the order granting a new trial when no appeal is taken;
- The date remittitur was filed in the trial court following an appeal;
- The date of the reinstatement of criminal proceedings once a defendant is found competent (see Pen C §§1367-1376); or
- The date judgment on appeal becomes final, if a new trial is to be held in the superior court.

If one of these deadlines is not met, the remedy is dismissal. Pen C §1382(a). Dismissal is not required, however, when the deadlines are waived by the defendant, as described in Pen C §§1382(a)(2)(A)-(B) (felony cases), 1382(a)(3)(A)-(B) (misdemeanor cases).

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.24 4. Waiver of Statutory Deadline

The defendant can waive the deadline for trial to begin, either by entering a general time waiver (Pen C §1382(a)(2)(A)) or by requesting or consenting to a trial date beyond the statutory deadline (sometimes called a "limited" time waiver) (Pen C §1382(a)(2)(B)).

When a defendant has entered a general waiver and then, after notice and in open court, withdraws that waiver, the defendant must be brought to trial within 60 calendar days after that withdrawal in a felony case, or within 30 days in a misdemeanor case. Pen C §1382(a)(2)(A), (a)(3)(A); People v Wilson (1963) 60 C2d 139, 32 CR 44. See Arias v Superior Court (2008) 167 CA4th Supp 1, 84 CR3d 264 (withdrawal of general time waiver by court filing, not in open court). Unlike the limited time waiver described in §19.26, there is no 10-day "grace period" for bringing a defendant to trial following expiration of the time period. Baustert v Superior Court (2005) 129 CA4th 1269, 1276, 29 CR3d 208. A defendant may also waive the right to a speedy trial by failing to make a prompt motion to dismiss after the time limit has expired. See §19.32.

> Ø Warning: When consenting to a trial date beyond the statutory deadline, counsel should be explicit in stating that no general waiver is being entered, if that is the case. Counsel should be aware that some courts do not accept limited time waivers. For discussion of limited time waivers, see §§19.26-19.27.

The prosecution and the defense may agree that the prosecution will not require the defense to establish "good cause" for a continuance in exchange for agreement by the defense to waive time at a future date should the prosecution need a further continuance. Because of the agreement by the defense to waive time, the date to which the prosecution's continuance is granted will begin a new 10-day trailing period if the defense announces that it is ready for trial on that date. People v Haendiges (1983) 142 CA3d Supp 9, 191 CR 785.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.25 5. Defendant Requests or Consents to Trial Date Beyond 60 Days

The defendant in a felony or misdemeanor case can request or consent to a trial date beyond the initial statutory period. Pen C §1382(a)(2)(B), (a)(3)(B). The consent may be express or implied, and thus a failure to object to delay beyond a statutory period constitutes consent to that delay, whether or not such a consent was actually intended. People v Wilson (1963) 60 C2d 139, 32 CR 44. If defense counsel is not present, however, when the court continues the case, no consent can be implied. People v Superior Court (Alexander) (1995) 31 CA4th 1119, 37 CR2d 729. An unrepresented defendant will not be found to have consented to a delay by a mere failure to object unless the court has explained to him or her both the applicable speedy trial rights and the effect of a failure to object. People v Byrd (1991) 233 CA3d 806, 810, 285 CR 128.

When a defendant requests or consents to a trial date beyond the initial period without a general time waiver, or on the withdrawal of a general time waiver, the defendant must be brought to trial on that date or within 10 calendar days thereafter. Pen C §1382(a)(2)(B), (a)(3)(B). Note, however, that, if a case is continued beyond the initial period for good cause, there is no 10-day period, and the defendant must be tried on the date set unless good cause is shown for further delay. Tudman v Superior Court (1972) 29 CA3d 129, 105 CR 391.

As a rule, the statutory right to speedy trial is not personal to the defendant and can be waived by counsel. Townsend v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 774, 126 CR 251. This is true even when the defendant is represented by the public defender or other appointed counsel and appointed counsel's calendar congestion is the cause of the delay if there is no personal objection by the defendant to the continuance. Barsamyan v Appellate Div. (2008) 44 C4th 960, 981, 81 CR3d 265. If the defendant expressly objects to a continuance requested by appointed counsel solely to accommodate conflicting obligations to other clients, the calendar conflict does not constitute good cause for delay. People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 566, 162 CR 431 (delay does not benefit defendant when calendar conflict is caused by state's failure to supply sufficient resources to protect right to speedy trial).

In Johnson, the California Supreme Court set forth the procedures that a court must follow when faced with this problem. The first question is whether the problem even exists. There is a problem only when appointed counsel is requesting a delay of trial solely because of a calendar conflict (i.e., counsel is otherwise prepared for trial and is not requesting a delay to benefit the defendant) and the defendant objects to the delay.

In such a case, if the defendant is represented by a public law office or appointed firm, the court should first inquire if there is any other member of the office or firm who can bring the case to trial within statutory time limits. If not, then the court should inquire whether some other counsel could be appointed who could bring the case to trial within statutory time limits. If no other counsel can be obtained, then the court should continue the trial without relieving counsel. On a subsequent motion to dismiss, the court must conduct a hearing to determine whether the calendar conflict was the result of the state's failure to supply sufficient resources to protect the defendant's right to speedy trial. If the fault is the state's, then the motion to dismiss should be granted. People v Johnson, supra.

Two points should be emphasized. It is not proper to relieve counsel unless (1) the defendant is objecting to delay; and (2) the newly appointed attorney can bring the case to trial within statutory time limits. See People v Superior Court (Alexander) (1995) 31 CA4th 1119, 1132, 37 CR2d 729.

§19.26 6. Limited Time Waiver and 10-Day "Trailing Period"

In both felony and misdemeanor cases, the defendant may consent to delay beyond the initial statutory period (30, 45, or 60 days) without entering a general time waiver. Compare Pen C §1382(a)(2)(A) (general waiver) with Pen C §1382(a)(2)(B) (consent to setting trial date beyond deadline).

Ø Example: Counsel who consents to a specified trial date beyond the initial statutory period has not entered a general time waiver. But see People v Griffin (1991) 235 CA3d 1740, 1 CR2d 620, discussed below. On general time waivers, see §19.24.

When the defendant has waived time to a specific date, a 10-day period in which trial must commence begins on the last day to which the defendant has consented that trial be delayed. This period is known as a "trailing period" or a "grace period." Pen C §1382(a)(3)(B).

Ø Note: Counsel who appears for two or more limited time waiver trials on the same day will be found to have given implied consent to a postponement in the cases not sent out. Once one of the competing cases is sent to the trial department for trial, counsel no longer can be considered ready to proceed in the remaining cases set for the same day. Barsamyan v Appellate Div. (2008) 44 C4th 960, 970, 81 CR3d 265 (calendar conflict in misdemeanor case).

The cases are split on what action by the defendant is sufficient to start the 10-day period running. In Stephens v Municipal Court (1986) 180 CA3d 189, 194, 225 CR 508, the court of appeal stated that merely announcing readiness for trial does not commence the statutory period and that a formal objection to any delay is necessary for the 10-day period to run. This view was rejected in Bryant v Superior Court (1986) 186 CA3d 483, 498, 230 CR 777, which held that an announcement of readiness was enough in a court that understood that such an announcement constituted an objection to delay. Because a trial court may follow either Stephens or Bryant, and, more important, a reviewing court may follow either case no matter which decision the trial court follows, the better practice is to both announce readiness for trial and object to further delay, which will guarantee that the 10-day period commences.

It is certain that failure to object to a delay ordered beyond the 10-day period will constitute consent to that delay and a waiver of the right to speedy trial. People v Wilson (1963) 60 C2d 139, 146, 32 CR 44. It is not clear from Stephens, however, whether that court would find that a defendant's failure to object to a delay ordered after the 10-day period begins to a date within that period would constitute consent to the later date. For example, if the defendant objects on October 1 to a delay to October 4, but then does not object to a delay to October 6, has the defendant consented to the October 6 date, allowing a new 10-day period to commence when the defendant next objects? The better practice would be for the defendant to object to any delay that the defendant is not requesting, so that no imputation of consent or waiver can be made.

In this context, it is imperative that counsel be aware of the decision of the court of appeal in People v Griffin (1991) 235 CA3d 1740, 1 CR2d 620. Many attorneys are accustomed to "stipulating" that trial be set on a particular date, with an agreement that it will be the beginning of a "trailing period" of something other than the 10 days provided by Pen C §1382 (e.g., a case is continued to October 1 as "0 of 30," meaning that a 30-day trailing period would apply). In Griffin, it was held that such an agreement constitutes consent to the delay to the final agreed-on date, and thus the final day of the agreed-on period (in this example, October 31) is not the end of the statutory speedy trial period, but only its beginning. 235 CA3d at 1746. In the above example, by calling October 1 "0 of 30," the defendant actually agreed to a delay to October 31. An additional 10-day period would thus begin on October 31 (but only if the defendant announced ready for trial, and probably also objected to delay, on October 31). The Griffin court stated that the parties cannot agree to alter the statutory 10-day period. 235 CA3d at 1746. Thus, "stipulations" that a particular date is "Day 7 of 10" (e.g., if, in fact, the date is not 7 days after an objection to delay) are invalid. For further discussion of the complexities of determining how the 10-day statutory grace period affects the last day available for trial, see Medina v Superior Court (2000) 79 CA4th 1280, 94 CR2d 770.

Ø Note: Parties can agree to waive the 10-day grace period and thereby agree to a last day that is truly the last day for trial. Bailon v Superior Court (2002) 98 CA4th 1331, 1347 n9, 120 CR2d 360.

7. Other Exceptions to Statutory Time Limits

§19.27 a. Good Cause

Dismissal is required only if a defendant is not brought to trial within statutory time limits without good cause. Pen C §1382(a). What constitutes good cause for delay depends on the circumstances of each case. People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 570, 162 CR 431; Jensen v Superior Court (2008) 160 CA4th 266, 274, 72 CR3d 594. In considering a motion to dismiss based on lack of good cause for a continuance beyond the statutory time limits, the court may consider all relevant information that is timely presented by the parties. Mendez v Superior Court (2008) 162 CA4th 827, 836, 76 CR3d 538. Good cause can be based on many reasons, as shown by the following examples.

Ø Note: If the prosecution establishes good cause to delay an arraignment, preliminary hearing, or trial as to one defendant, that also constitutes good cause as to all defendants joined in that proceeding. Pen C §1050.1.

Unavailable witness. Counsel requesting a continuance to secure a witness must show:

- Diligence in trying to obtain the presence of the witness in court by legal means;
- That the witness's testimony is relevant, not cumulative, and that the facts cannot otherwise be proven; and
- That the witness will be available within a reasonable period of time. See Owens v Superior Court (1980) 28 C3d 238, 250, 168 CR 466; Brown v Superior Court (1987) 189 CA3d 260, 264, 234 CR 416.

Ø Note: The court should consider the general convenience and prior commitments of all witnesses, including peace officers. Pen C §1050(g)(1). However, bear in mind that Pen C §1050 merely provides guidelines for courts to use when ruling on motions to continue; Owens requirements must still be satisfied to determine that a witness's unavailability constitutes good cause for a continuance past a statutory speedy trial deadline. Baustert v Superior Court (2005) 129 CA4th 1269, 1279, 29 CR3d 208.

Ordinarily, a party will have shown diligence in securing the attendance of a witness in court if the witness has been personally served with a subpoena. The remedy for the witness's disobedience of the subpoena is punishment for contempt, not dismissal of the case. Mendez v Superior Court (2008) 162 CA4th 827, 76 CR3d 538. However, a problem can arise with the attendance of a peace officer witness if the subpoena has been served on the officer's superior or a designated agent as authorized by Pen C §1328(c). See, e.g., Jensen v Superior Court, supra. Note that while Pen C §1328d permits a witness to be subpoenaed without personal service, e.g., by mail, that statute specifically provides that the witness's failure to appear in such a case will not justify a delay of the matter beyond the time limits of Pen C §§859b and 1382.

Problems involving counsel. Delays attributable to the defendant or counsel that are not attributable to the state can constitute good cause. See, e.g., People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 572, 162 CR 431 (calendar conflicts caused by state's failure to supply sufficient assigned counsel was not good cause); Pagnini v Superior Court (1984) 163 CA3d 142, 209 CR 208 (defendant's pending pretrial writ petition was good cause for failure to timely bring him to trial); People v Da Silva (1983) 145 CA3d 872, 193 CR 811 (delays caused by defendant's refusal to cooperate with counsel were good cause for failure to timely bring him to trial).

Ø Note: The supreme court has granted review in People v Sutton (review granted Oct. 28, 2008, S166402; superseded opinion at 165 CA4th 646, 81 CR3d 195), which concerns the following issue: Were defendants' speedy trial rights violated when defense counsel announced ready but that he might be in another trial, and the court continued trial for 6 days over defendants' personal objection, and if so, was the error prejudicial?

Peremptory challenge against judge. The filing of a peremptory challenge by either side against a judge may constitute good cause for delaying trial. Bryant v Superior Court (1986) 186 CA3d 483, 501, 230 CR 777 (challenge filed by prosecution); People v Reed (1982) 133 CA3d Supp 7, 184 CR 606 (challenge filed by defendant).

Absence of judge. The predictable unavailability of any judge to try the case owing to a local judicial conference is not good cause. Lewis v Superior Court (1981) 122 CA3d 494, 176 CR 80. However, a judge's one-day absence to fulfill a long-standing committee responsibility at a distant location during a lengthy preliminary hearing was held to constitute good cause, especially when the defendants raised no protest to the delay until it was too late for the court to remedy the conflict. Stroud v Superior Court (2000) 23 C4th 952, 974, 98 CR2d 677.

Court congestion. Ordinarily, court congestion is not good cause for delay. If there are so many criminal cases that they all cannot be tried within statutory time limits, good cause for delay may be found only when the number of cases is caused by an unexpected and extraordinarily large number of case filings in the court (as in the case of, e.g., a riot or mass demonstration). This does not mean a large number of defendants requesting trial, if the number of cases filed has not increased dramatically. Additionally, civil cases cannot have been given priority over criminal cases, and the court must have notified the Chair of the Judicial Council of its calendar problems. Arreola v Municipal Court (1983) 139 CA3d 108, 114, 188 CR 529; Perez v Superior Court (1980) 111 CA3d 994, 999, 169 CR 45. See also Pen C §§1048, 1050(j); Govt C §68115(a)-(j).

Ø Note: The sheriff's failure to bring an in-custody defendant to court is not necessarily good cause. Jackson v Superior Court (1991) 230 CA3d 1391, 281 CR 545.

Court's ruling when no good cause. If the court finds that a party has not shown good cause for a continuance, the court must deny the motion to continue. Pen C §1050(e). If the prosecution delays trial beyond statutory time limits without good cause and over the defendant's objection, the court must grant a timely motion to dismiss. See Pen C §1382.

However, Pen C §1050 does not authorize the court to dismiss an action when the prosecution fails to show good cause for a continuance if the delay would not exceed statutory time limits. People v Henderson (2004) 115 CA4th 922, 934, 9 CR3d 655. See also Pen C §1050(l) ("this section is directory only and does not mandate dismissal"). In Henderson, the trial court found that the prosecutor failed to establish good cause for continuing the preliminary hearing, and dismissed the case when the prosecutor declared that he was unable to proceed. The requested delay would not have exceeded the time allowed for the preliminary hearing under Pen C §859b. The reviewing court upheld the trial court's conclusion that the prosecutor had failed to establish good cause for the delay under Pen C §1050, but reversed the order of dismissal. It concluded that neither Pen C §1050 nor §1050.5 (sanctions court may impose for violation of §1050) authorizes dismissal and that no other statutory provision authorizes dismissal when the delay would not continue the case beyond the statutory maximum and the defendant has shown no detriment from the delay. 115 CA4th at 936. Thus, although the court acknowledged that its decision placed trial courts in a difficult position (115 CA4th at 939), it held that the court "must postpone the hearing to another date within the statutory period," although not necessarily the date the prosecutor has requested (115 CA4th at 940). See also People v Rubaum (1980) 110 CA3d 930, 168 CR 291 (court has no power to deny prosecution's unjustified motion to continue trial unless delay would exceed Pen C §1382 time limits). But see People v Alvarez (1989) 208 CA3d 567, 577, 256 CR 289 (if prosecution cannot proceed after denial of continuance, trial court may dismiss under Pen C §871).

Either party may file a petition for writ of mandate or prohibition in the court of appeal challenging continuation of any hearing or trial without good cause when good cause is required by law. Pen C §1511.

Good cause is discussed at length in §§20.6-20.27.

§19.28 b. Defendant Fails to Appear

In felony cases, when a defendant has been ordered to appear in superior court for a trial, or a hearing before trial, and fails to do so, resulting in a bench warrant being issued, a new 60-calendar-day period begins to run from the date on which the defendant next appears, unless the trial date was already set beyond the 60 days. Pen C §1382(b).

In misdemeanor cases, if the defendant has been ordered to appear at a hearing set before trial but fails to appear and a bench warrant issues, or if trial is delayed because of the defendant's neglect or failure to appear on the date set for trial, the defendant is deemed "rearraigned" on the date of the defendant's arraignment on a bench warrant or submission to the court. Pen C §1382(a)(3)(C). Note that this is different from the felony rule, which starts a new period if there is any failure to appear for any pretrial hearing.

The portion of the statute applicable to felonies specifically requires a warrant to be issued, and this seems to be required for misdemeanors as well under People v Heath (1981) 125 CA3d Supp 1, 178 CR 99. If a warrant is not issued or is held, then the provisions should be found inapplicable. In Heath, the court determined that the reason the defendant failed to appear was irrelevant, and that a new statutory period commenced as long as a bench warrant was validly issued. However, the same court has stated that the original time limits of Pen C §1382 may remain in effect if the trial judge finds that "the warrant was not justified under all the circumstances before him." People v Reed (1982) 133 CA3d Supp 7, 9 n1, 184 CR 606.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.29 c. Change of Venue

A defendant who obtains a change of venue in a misdemeanor case delays the beginning of the statutory time to the date on which the defendant is arraigned in the new forum. See Simpson v Municipal Court (1975) 45 CA3d 112, 119 CR 184 (out-of-custody defendant in misdemeanor case). The same reasoning probably applies to felony cases.

§19.30 8. Effect on Speedy Trial Deadlines of Amending Charging Document

For an amendment to an information to toll the running of the 60-day period (in felony cases) or 30- or 45-day period (in misdemeanor cases) prescribed by Pen C §1382, the amendment must go to the substance of the charges. Perez v Superior Court (1980) 111 CA3d 994, 169 CR 45 (felony case); Matthews v Superior Court (1973) 35 CA3d 589, 593, 110 CR 843 (felony case); Hankla v Municipal Court (1972) 26 CA3d 342, 358, 102 CR 896 (misdemeanor case). Allegations of prior convictions or included offenses are not considered substantial changes. Hankla v Municipal Court, supra; Huerta v Superior Court (1971) 18 CA3d 482, 485, 95 CR 748.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.31 9. When Trial Begins in Relation to Statutory Speedy Trial Claims

Both the felony and misdemeanor speedy trial statutory periods end when the defendant is brought to trial. Commencement of trial within the context of Pen C §1382 has been defined as occurring when the case is called for trial by a judge who is available and ready to try the case to its conclusion, the court has committed its resources to the trial, and the parties are ready to proceed before a panel of jurors summoned and sworn. Rhinehart v Municipal Court (1984) 35 C3d 772, 780, 200 CR 916; People v Duberry (1988) 203 CA3d Supp 4, 249 CR 844.

Ø Note: This does not mean that the 12 jurors who will hear the case have been selected, but only that a panel of prospective jurors has been called and sworn.

A judge is not considered to have committed his or her resources to a trial if attempting to try a substantial part of two unrelated cases within the same time period. See People v Cory (1984) 157 CA3d 1094, 204 CR 117 (error, but no prejudice). In dicta, it has been opined that a court may be considered to have committed its resources to a case when the court has only some small part of another trial left to complete. See Thomas v Superior Court (1984) 162 CA3d 728, 208 CR 712.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.32 10. Motion to Dismiss Because of Failure to Bring Case to Trial Within Pen C §1382 Deadlines; Waiver

Violation of the deadlines of Pen C §1382 entitles the defendant to a dismissal if the prosecution cannot show good cause for the delay. Pen C §1382(a); Sykes v Superior Court (1973) 9 C3d 83, 88, 106 CR 786. To invoke the right to a dismissal under §1382, the defendant must first object to a continuance beyond the applicable statutory period and thereafter must move to dismiss under §1382. A sample defense motion to dismiss for violation of statutory deadlines is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §19.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

Ø Note: Remember that the required objection must be made at the time a case is continued beyond statutory time limits. Even if previous objections or motions to dismiss have been made, the right to speedy trial will have been waived if the statutory period is exceeded without objection. Dulsky v Municipal Court (1966) 242 CA2d 288, 292, 51 CR 381.

Counsel should not move to dismiss until after statutory time limits have expired, but should do so as soon thereafter as possible (e.g., in a 60-day case, on day 61). A motion to dismiss made before expiration of the statutory time period, even if made on the day the statutory time limits expire, is premature, and the granting of the motion at that time could be reversed even if the case would have been delayed had the motion not been made. See People v Martinez (1956) 145 CA2d 361, 302 P2d 643. See also People v Wilson (1963) 60 C2d 139, 146, 32 CR 44.

Ø Note: If the statutory time limit expires without a trial date having been set, no objection is necessary. Sykes v Superior Court, supra. Counsel can move to dismiss as soon as the statutory period runs.

A defendant who fails to comply with these requirements can be considered to have waived the right to speedy trial. See Pen C §1382(a)(2)(A)-(B), (a)(3)(A)-(B) (waiver of statutory periods for trial). However, while the defendant's failure to move for dismissal will waive his or her statutory speedy trial right, a court is not prohibited from dismissing a case on that ground sua sponte. People v Cole (2008) 165 CA4th Supp 1, 10, 82 CR3d 699.

A defendant who is not represented by counsel cannot waive the statutory period unless the court has explained to the defendant his or her rights under Pen C §1382 and the effect of the waiver. Pen C §1382(c); In re Smiley (1967) 66 C2d 606, 630, 58 CR 579. If the defendant requests a delay beyond the applicable time limits with knowledge of those limits, however, the rule may not apply. Callahan v Municipal Court (1971) 17 CA3d 1011, 95 CR 423.

If the defendant caused the delay, the court may consider that fact when ruling on whether good cause exists for the delay. See examples in §§19.25-19.28. Delay for the defendant's benefit can also be considered good cause for delay. People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 570, 162 CR 431; People v Kowalski (1987) 196 CA3d 174, 181, 242 CR 32. For discussion of the related topic of continuances, see chap 20.

§19.33 F. California Prisoner Serving State Time, With Another State Case Pending

A defendant serving a term in a California state prison or county jail of more than 90 days, with other criminal charges pending in California, can demand that the new charge be brought to trial within 90 calendar days after delivery of demand on the district attorney for the county in which the matter is pending. Pen C §1381. The defendant must actually be in jail if the sentence was county jail, or in prison if the sentence was state prison. People v Gutierrez (1994) 30 CA4th 105, 35 CR2d 526; People v Clark (1985) 172 CA3d 975, 218 CR 481.

If the prisoner is not brought to trial or sentenced within the 90-day period, on motion of the defendant, defendant's counsel or the prosecutor, or on the court's own motion, the court must dismiss the action. Pen C §1381.

> Ø Note: Section 1381 does apply to a probation revocation proceeding when imposition of sentence was originally suspended; however, the consequence for noncompliance with the 90-day deadline is dismissal of the pending probation revocation proceeding, not dismissal of the underlying conviction. People v Wagner (2009) 45 C4th 1039, 1055, 90 CR3d 26.

Good cause for a delay beyond the 90-day period will not excuse compliance with §1381. Crockett v Superior Court (1975) 14 C3d 433, 121 CR 457. However, the prosecution is not precluded from refiling after a dismissal under §1381 as long as the two-dismissal rule of Pen C §1387 does not bar prosecution. Crockett v Superior Court, supra; People v Eldridge (1997) 52 CA4th 91, 60 CR2d 400; People v Boggs (1985) 166 CA3d 851, 212 CR 683.

It is strongly suggested that any written demand either be personally served on the district attorney, with proof of service executed and retained, or be sent certified mail with a return receipt requested. Often the hardest thing to prove in a Pen C §1381 case (as well as Pen C §§1381.5 and 1389) is that the prosecutor actually received the demand. See, e.g., People v Contreras (2009) 177 CA4th 1296, 1300, 99 CR3d 759. Without proof that the demand was received, the defendant's claim that it was given to the prosecutor will often be disbelieved. Also, if the prosecution is aware that the person is serving a prison term, it has an affirmative duty to notify him or her of the pending charges. People v Cave (1978) 81 CA3d 957, 147 CR 371.

A sample form demand letter is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §19.5 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§19.34 G. Federal Prisoner in California With California State Case Pending

If a person serving a term in a federal correctional institution in California has a California state charge pending while serving the federal term, the prisoner may file a request with the prosecutor to be brought to trial on the state case. Pen C §1381.5.

If the prosecutor obtains assent from the federal authorities to release the defendant, the defendant must be brought to trial within 90 calendar days after receipt of the assent. If the prisoner is not brought to trial within the 90-day limit, on motion, the action must be dismissed. Pen C §1381.5. This event counts as one dismissal under Pen C §1387. See Selfa v Superior Court (1980) 109 CA3d 182, 189, 167 CR 153.

A sample form is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §19.5 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§19.35 H. Out-of-State Prisoner With California Detainer

Penal Code §1389 is California's enactment of the Interstate Agreement on Detainers (IAD). This is the procedure that must be used if the defendant is a sentenced prisoner in another state, or is a sentenced federal prisoner outside California. See, e.g., Netzley v Superior Court (2008) 160 CA4th 348, 72 CR3d 773. The procedures for making a demand under the IAD are detailed and explicit, and include a demand on the prosecution accompanied by a verification from the warden of the prisoner's status. See Alabama v Bozeman (2001) 533 US 146, 150 L Ed 2d 188, 121 S Ct 2079.

Any counsel representing a defendant who should make an IAD claim must carefully read the statute and comply with all its terms to the letter. Unlike dismissals under Pen C §§1381, 1381.5, or 1382, no refiling is permitted after a dismissal under §1389. See People v Cella (1981) 114 CA3d 905, 170 CR 915.

For further discussion, see §50.49; 5 Witkin & Epstein, California Criminal Law, Criminal Trial §§301-303 (3d ed 2000).

§19.36 V. WHEN SPEEDY TRIAL ISSUES SHOULD BE RAISED

Speedy trial issues (except statute of limitations issues, discussed in §19.16) must be raised in the trial court before trial by a motion to dismiss. See People v McCoy (1983) 147 CA3d 638, 195 CR 285. Ordinarily, motions to dismiss may be litigated at the preliminary hearing. See, e.g., People v Hertz (1980) 103 CA3d 770, 163 CR 233. It is undecided, however, whether a speedy trial motion may be litigated as a matter of right at the preliminary hearing or whether the magistrate has discretion to decide whether to permit the motion. Compare People v Wright (1969) 2 CA3d 732, 82 CR 859 (matter of right), with Jackson v Superior Court (1982) 135 CA3d 767, 185 CR 766, disapproved on other grounds in People v Konow (2004) 32 C4th 995, 1025 n10, 12 CR3d 301 (discretionary). See also §8.33. The advantage to litigating the motion at the preliminary hearing is that the motion can be heard more often: The motion can be made before the magistrate, renewed on a motion to dismiss under Pen C §995, and renewed de novo in the superior court. However, in some cases it may be more useful to use the preliminary hearing as a chance to develop prejudice from the delay (e.g., witnesses' fading memories) without specifically alerting the other side that the issue may be litigated. (Remember that because the defendant is presumed to be innocent, the inability of prosecution witnesses to clearly remember the events is prejudicial because with clear memories the witnesses would presumably exonerate the defendant. See People v Hill (1984) 37 C3d 491, 496, 209 CR 323.) Of course, a fundamental consideration for counsel will be an assessment of whether the motion is more likely to be successful before the magistrate or in the superior court.

A magistrate's refusal to allow a speedy trial motion at the preliminary hearing does not result in an illegal commitment of the defendant, and so cannot be raised on a Pen C §995 motion. The issue should be raised in the superior court as a common-law motion to dismiss. Jackson v Superior Court (1982) 135 CA3d 767, 185 CR 766, disapproved on other grounds in People v Konow (2004) 32 C4th 995, 1025 n10, 12 CR3d 301.

Ø Note: When a speedy trial claim requires a demonstration of prejudice, the trial court has the discretion to defer hearing the motion until after the trial. People v Martinez (2000) 22 C4th 750, 94 CR2d 381.

Statutes of limitations are jurisdictional. A claim of such a violation may therefore be raised for the first time either before or after judgment. People v Zamora (1976) 18 C3d 538, 134 CR 784. See §19.16 for further discussion.

§19.37 VI. SANCTIONS

Constitutional violations. When a defendant's Sixth Amendment speedy trial guaranty has been violated, the remedy is dismissal of the action. Strunk v U.S. (1973) 412 US 434, 37 L Ed 2d 56, 93 S Ct 2260. Dismissal of either a misdemeanor or a felony on constitutional grounds, including due process grounds, is a final, appealable order; the case cannot be recharged, and the prosecution's sole remedy is to seek review of the dismissal. U.S. v Marion (1971) 404 US 307, 30 L Ed 2d 468, 92 S Ct 455; People v Pinedo (2005) 128 CA4th 968, 27 CR3d 562.

Statutory violations. Penal Code §1387(a) limits the refiling of charges dismissed on statutory grounds (with the exception of Pen C §1389, noted in §19.35): A dismissal bars prosecution of an offense if it is a misdemeanor not charged together with a felony. A dismissal bars prosecution of an offense "if it is a felony or a misdemeanor charged together with a felony, and the offense has been previously terminated."

As a rule, the dismissal of a misdemeanor cannot be followed by another misdemeanor filing, and two dismissals of an offense bar further prosecution (except with violent felonies, in which one additional refiling is permitted by Pen C §1387.1 if one of the first two dismissals arose from "excusable neglect"). There are also exceptions for domestic violence cases and witness intimidation issues. See Pen C §1387. For further discussion of the "two-dismissal" rule in felony cases, see §25.45.

VII. APPELLATE REVIEW

A. Defense Review of Speedy Trial Ruling

§19.38 1. Review of Motions to Dismiss Before Judgment and After Trial

A petition for writ of mandate and/or prohibition can be taken before trial to challenge the denial of a motion to dismiss. Serna v Superior Court (1985) 40 C3d 239, 263, 219 CR 420. Denial of a motion to dismiss can also be appealed after trial, but actual prejudice must be shown. People v Wilson (1963) 60 C2d 139, 32 CR 44. The defense cannot raise a speedy trial or due process issue for the first time on appeal, except for statute of limitations error (see §19.16).

There are several reasons for seeking a writ:

- When statutory speedy trial violations are involved in a felony case or one in which a misdemeanor is charged together with a felony (except for Pen C §1389 violations), defendants do not have to show actual prejudice in a writ petition, but they do in a posttrial appeal. Serna v Superior Court, supra; People v Wilson, supra.
- Once a trial has occurred, the prejudice shown before trial may be considered insignificant in light of overwhelming evidence of guilt presented at trial. People v Pompa-Ortiz (1980) 27 C3d 519, 165 CR 851.
- The trial court's findings on prejudice and justification for delay are factual ones and will not be overturned on appeal if they are supported by substantial evidence. Appellate courts have applied the "abuse of discretion" standard of review to the trial court's application of the balancing test. People v Cave (1978) 81 CA3d 957, 147 CR 371.

Ø Note: Superior courts must rule on pretrial writ petitions concerning a misdemeanor defendant's motion to dismiss that was made on speedy trial grounds and grant relief whenever a violation of constitutional speedy trial rights is established. Serna v Superior Court, supra.

§19.39 2. Review of Motions to Dismiss in Misdemeanor Cases

Because in a misdemeanor case the granting of a motion to dismiss under Pen C §1382 is a bar to further proceedings, the defendant need not show prejudice on appeal. People v Wilson (1963) 60 C2d 139, 153 n5, 32 CR 44; Avila v Municipal Court (1983) 148 CA3d 807, 196 CR 286. Thus, although pretrial review is still preferred, review on appeal is essentially the same as by means of a pretrial writ petition.

There is a division among the courts on whether speedy trial issues are waived by a plea of guilty. Compare Ricki J. v Superior Court (2005) 128 CA4th 783, 792, 27 CR3d 494 (yes; Third District), People v Aguilar (1998) 61 CA4th 615, 71 CR2d 411 (yes; Second District), and People v Egbert (1997) 59 CA4th 503, 68 CR2d 913 (yes; Fourth District), with Avila v Municipal Court, supra (no; Second District).

Abuse of discretion is the standard of review of an order finding good cause for a continuance under Pen C §1382(a) when the defendant does not affirmatively show prejudice that implicates his or her federal constitutional right to a speedy trial. People v Shane (2004) 115 CA4th 196, 198, 8 CR3d 753.

In a felony case (or a misdemeanor charged together with a felony), a dismissal does not bar refiling, and thus on appeal the defendant must demonstrate prejudice as well as a violation of the statutory time limit. People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 162 CR 431. It is generally difficult, if not impossible, to demonstrate prejudice from a statutory speedy trial violation, and thus pretrial writ review is almost always the preferable course in a felony case.

§19.40 3. Review of Motions to Dismiss in Felony Cases Following Guilty Plea

A guilty plea prohibits a defendant from seeking appellate review of the denial of any speedy trial motion, statutory or constitutional, in a felony case. See People v Hernandez (1992) 6 CA4th 1355, 8 CR2d 324; People v Hayton (1979) 95 CA3d 413, 156 CR 426. It can be argued that Hayton and Hernandez are wrong, and that there are actually three different questions that must be asked to determine whether a defendant may successfully assert an issue on appeal in a felony matter:

(1) Penal Code §1237.5 bars review of issues that do not go to the "legality of the proceedings" following a guilty plea in a felony case. A statutory motion to dismiss in a felony case that can be refiled clearly does not go to the legality of the proceedings, and thus cannot be raised following a guilty plea. In contrast, it has been held that the denial of a statutory motion to dismiss that would bar further proceedings, even in a felony case (i.e., Pen C §1389), is an issue going to the legality of the proceedings, which can be raised following a guilty plea. People v Cella (1981) 114 CA3d 905, 915, 170 CR 915. See also People v Turner (1985) 171 CA3d 116, 126, 214 CR 572; People v Reyes (1979) 98 CA3d 524, 531, 159 CR 572. Of course, a dismissal for violation of the constitutional speedy trial right equally bars refiling.

(2) A plea of guilty waives litigation of any issue that goes to the guilt or innocence of the defendant. People v Ribero (1971) 4 C3d 55, 63, 92 CR 692; People v Shults (1984) 151 CA3d 714, 719, 199 CR 33. A guilty plea does not waive issues that do not concern guilt or innocence. See People v Laudermilk (1967) 67 C2d 272, 282, 61 CR 644; People v O'Daniel (1987) 194 CA3d 715, 720, 239 CR 790. A motion to dismiss because of a constitutional speedy trial violation may not have anything to do with the defendant's guilt or innocence, because prejudice may be based on grounds other than impairment of the defendant's ability to meet the charges (e.g., extended incarceration). Furthermore, prejudice is not a required showing under the federal Constitution. However, any issues concerning prejudice to the defense (e.g., faded memories) involved in a constitutional speedy trial motion would be waived by a guilty plea.

(3) As discussed in §§19.3-19.6, to obtain reversal on appeal a defendant must usually demonstrate prejudice. However, the denial of a Pen C §1382 motion that would bar refiling if granted is prejudicial per se. People v Wilson (1963) 60 C2d 139, 152, 32 CR 44; Avila v Municipal Court (1983) 148 CA3d 807, 196 CR 286. The denial of other statutory motions that bar refiling if granted, e.g., Pen C §1389, is also prejudicial per se. People v Cella, supra. Of course, a dismissal for violation of the constitutional speedy trial right also bars refiling. See §19.37.

A consideration of these applicable standards may call into question the validity of the rule set forth in Hayton and Hernandez. In fact, several cases have reached speedy trial issues after a guilty plea in felony cases in which the felony had been previously dismissed and no refiling was possible. People v Bohlen (1992) 4 CA4th 400, 5 CR2d 670; People v Mayo (1986) 185 CA3d 389, 229 CR 762. These cases did not discuss the appealability of the issue. However, given the existence of Hayton and Hernandez, counsel should be very cautious in entering a guilty plea following a motion to dismiss on speedy trial grounds. A "trial-like" proceeding (such as a submission to the court on a transcript or a stipulated set of facts, i.e., a so-called slow plea) will prevent any claim of waiver and the application of Pen C §1237.5. However, the prejudice requirement will remain on appeal. Thus, a successful appeal of a motion to dismiss a felony under Pen C §1382, if the charge was not previously dismissed, may be extremely difficult even after such a "trial."

§19.41 4. Review of Preliminary Hearing Speedy Trial Issues

The defense has the right to seek a writ of mandate or prohibition in the superior court if the magistrate sets a preliminary hearing beyond the time period specified in Pen C §859b (see §19.18) or continues the matter without a proper showing of good cause. Pen C §871.6. The purpose of seeking such a writ, however, is to require the preliminary hearing to proceed expeditiously, not to obtain dismissal of the case. See Pen C §871.6. These petitions have precedence over all other superior court matters, and, if a remittitur issues, that must take place within 3 days. Pen C §871.6.

§19.42 5. Pretrial Review of Trial Date

The defense may file a petition for writ of mandate or prohibition to seek review of a trial set on a date beyond the statutory time limits. Pen C §1511 (trial delay; writ petition filed in court of appeal).

§19.43 B. Prosecution Review of Speedy Trial Dismissal

If a defense motion to dismiss on constitutional speedy trial or due process grounds is granted before trial and the case is dismissed, the prosecution's only remedy is to seek review of that ruling, because the case cannot be recharged. U.S. v Marion (1971) 404 US 307, 30 L Ed 2d 468, 92 S Ct 455; People v Glover (1974) 40 CA3d 1006, 1011 n2, 115 CR 714, citing Strunk v U.S. (1973) 412 US 434, 440, 37 L Ed 2d 56, 61, 93 S Ct 2260. See also Pen C §§1238(a)(8), 1466(1).

If a defense motion to dismiss on statutory speedy trial grounds is granted in a felony case, and the case is dismissed, the prosecutor may:

- Appeal (Pen C §1238(a)(8); People v Superior Court (Lewis) (1970) 5 CA3d 698, 85 CR 327);

  Ø Note: Under Pen C §1238(b), an unsuccessful appeal after the first dismissal of a felony will preclude recharging. A petition for a writ of mandate may provide review of the trial court's ruling and avoid the bar of §1238(b).

- Seek review of the magistrate's ruling through Pen C §871.5 if the motion was made at the preliminary hearing; or
- Accept the dismissal and recharge the offense (see Pen C §1387) unless a showing is made of actual prejudice (Crockett v Superior Court (1975) 14 C3d 433, 437, 121 CR 457). On the "two-dismissal" rule in felony cases, see §25.45.

In misdemeanor cases, the only remedy following dismissal on statutory speedy trial grounds is appeal (Pen C §1466(1)), because no recharging is allowed after one dismissal unless the misdemeanor is charged together with a felony (Pen C §1387; Marler v Municipal Court (1980) 110 CA3d 155, 162, 167 CR 666, 670).

The prosecution has the right to seek a writ of mandate or prohibition in the superior court if the magistrate sets a preliminary hearing beyond the time period specified in Pen C §859b or continues the matter without a proper showing of good cause. Pen C §871.6.

The prosecution may file a petition for writ of mandate or prohibition to seek review of a trial set on a date beyond the statutory time limits. Pen C §1511 (trial delay; writ petition filed in court of appeal).

§20.1 I. OVERVIEW

Continuances present an alarming divergence between theory and practice. If the law were strictly and uniformly applied, continuances would be difficult to obtain. Pen C §1050 ("all proceedings in criminal cases shall be set for trial and heard and determined at the earliest possible time"); Cal Const art I, §29 (guarantees right to speedy trial both to defense and to prosecution); Standards of Judicial Administration 2.2(j)-(m) (standards for time in which to resolve criminal cases). See also Pen C §1048 (order of priority for criminal cases). Attorneys who move for a continuance must demonstrate good cause for the request. Pen C §1050(e).

However, in counties with more "last-day" cases than available departments, continuances may be granted in an effort to prevent statutory speedy trial dismissals. This practice can have unfortunate consequences. When the rules are not consistently enforced, even good lawyers get sloppy. For example, motions may be made orally without notice based on factual representations made from the counsel table. Inconsistency also fosters the appearance of bias. It is against the background of uneven application and enforcement that any honest commentary on the law of continuances must begin.

Attorneys can do many things to avoid asking for a continuance. First, they should carry calendars whenever making court appearances so that they do not set cases at the same time or too close together. When a continuance is necessary, counsel should notify all other attorneys in the case and pro per defendants, and calendar the case for a continuance motion as early as possible. There are deadlines for requesting a continuance in most situations. See the chart in §20.2. The most important statute is Pen C §1050, which requires that a motion to continue any hearing or trial be made in writing, served on all parties, and filed at least 2 court days before the hearing. Penal Code §1050(b) also requires that, within 2 court days after learning of a scheduling conflict, attorneys requesting a continuance give written notice of which hearing or trial was set first to the calendar clerk of each relevant court. Unfortunately, both compliance with and enforcement of this rule is rare. Counsel should consult local court rules before requesting a continuance because local jurisdictions often have specific requirements not found in the Penal Code.

The moving party has the burden of going forward and the burden of proof to show good cause when requesting a continuance. Owens v Superior Court (1980) 28 C3d 238, 250, 168 CR 466 (prosecution); People v Wilson (1965) 235 CA2d 266, 273, 45 CR 267 (defendant). The moving party must present evidence in support of the motion. Evid C §§300, 500. Evidence includes "testimony, writings, material objects, or other things presented to the senses that are offered to prove the existence or nonexistence of a fact." Evid C §140. Counsel can submit testimony in the form of affidavits or declarations (Pen C §1050(b)), or, if good cause is shown, make an oral offer of proof (Pen C §1050(c)). Opposing counsel has the right to cross-examine affiants, declarants, or witnesses referred to in the offer of proof (see People v Williams (1973) 30 CA3d 502, 509, 106 CR 324); however, these people are often not present in the courtroom. Presumably, the moving party has the right to introduce the same type of evidence in rebuttal. See People v Jenkins (1880) 56 C 4.

Regardless of which party moved for a continuance, the defense must notify all defense witnesses, and the prosecution all its witnesses, of the request for a continuance, the date of the hearing, and the witnesses' right to be heard at that hearing. Pen C §1050(b). Again, this is a rule that is often ignored.

> Ø Warning: Counsel should resist the temptation to be casual about compliance with the governing statutes and rules of court. It is impossible to demand or expect strict compliance by the court and opposing counsel unless we ourselves have been compliant on a consistent basis.

Continuances limited when minor or person age 70 or over is alleged victim or minor is detained as material witness, or when crime involves certain specified violent sex offenses.	Continuance allowed only if court finds it necessary after hearing; trial must begin within 30 calendar days after arraignment unless good cause is shown for continuance.	Pen C §1048.
Continuance of preliminary hearing for in-custody defendant.	Preliminary hearing must be held, or case dismissed, within 10 court days after arraignment or plea or reinstatement of proceedings that had been suspended under Pen C §1367, whichever is later, unless defendant waives that right or prosecutor shows good cause for continuance; even with good cause, defendant to be released unless exceptions apply; even with good cause, case can be continued no more than 60 days after arraignment or plea unless defendant personally waives that right.	Pen C §859b.
Continuance of preliminary hearing for out-of-custody defendant.	Preliminary hearing must be held within 60 calendar days after arraignment or plea unless defendant personally waives that right.	Pen C §859b.
Continuance of preliminary hearing after it has started (continuous-session rule).	No continuance unless defendant personally waives that right, or prosecution shows good cause by affidavit or declaration for postponement; continuance can be for no more than 10 court days unless defendant personally waives right to continuous preliminary hearing or prosecutor establishes good cause for postponement beyond 10 court days; in no event can continuance be for more than 60 calendar days after date continuance motion is granted, unless with defendant's consent.	Pen C §861.

III. TIME, FORM, AND SERVICE OF MOTION

A. Timeliness; Written and Oral Motions

§20.3 1. Pretrial

Counsel should bring a motion to continue any hearing or trial in a criminal proceeding "at the earliest possible time." Pen C §1050(a). The motion must be in writing and must be served, together with supporting declarations or affidavits, on all parties and filed at least 2 court days before the hearing to be continued. Pen C §1050(b). If the continuance is requested due to a calendar conflict, counsel must give written notice of which hearing was set first to the calendar clerk of each court. Pen C §1050(b). Witnesses must also be notified of the request for a continuance. Pen C §1050(b), discussed in §20.5. Failure to comply with §1050(b) subjects the moving party to a possible fine of up to $1000 and a disciplinary report to the State Bar. Pen C §§1050(c), 1050.5. Counsel should, however, carefully weigh all of the pros and cons before any request for sanctions other than an order denying the defective motion. The interests of the client are paramount.

Ø Note: The court may impose sanctions but may not dismiss the action. Pen C §1050.5(b).

A continuance motion should contain the reasons for the request, citation of authority supporting the request, and the length of delay desired. Written motions should be accompanied by affidavits or declarations detailing specific facts showing that a continuance is necessary. Pen C §1050(b). The affidavits or declarations should not be made on information and belief. See Brown v Superior Court (1987) 189 CA3d 260, 265, 234 CR 416. Counsel should be very clear when making any factual representations that are not based on personal knowledge. When appropriate, representations should be supported by a proof of service.

On a showing of good cause, the court may allow a continuance motion that does not comply with the notice requirements of §1050(b). Pen C §1050(c). See, e.g., People v Jacobs (2007) 156 CA4th 728, 735, 67 CR3d 615. When a continuance motion is made orally, the court must make two findings of good cause to grant it: first, that good cause exists to entertain an oral motion (Pen C §1050(d)), and second, that good cause exists to continue the hearing or trial (Pen C §1050(f)). The finding of good cause and facts supporting it must be entered in the court minutes. Pen C §1050(d), (f). Moving counsel may want to prepare an order granting the motion with the appropriate factual findings and conclusions of law.

Counsel making the motion orally, sometimes called an offer of proof, should be prepared to present the same information as in the written motion. Counsel may also present witnesses to testify to the specific facts that support the reasons for requesting a continuance. Before the hearing, counsel should learn what the trial judge's usual practice is when confronted with an oral rather than a written continuance motion.

Continuances of preliminary hearings are governed by Pen C §1050 (Pen C §859b), but there are additional requirements and conditions. On time requirements for preliminary hearings, see §§8.16-8.20.

A sample motion for continuance is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §20.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.4 2. Trial

The same requirements on written motions for continuance before trial apply to continuance motions made during trial. Pen C §1050(b). As a practical matter, however, many motions for continuance during trial are made orally. In Lee v Kemna (2002) 534 US 362, 151 L Ed 2d 820, 122 S Ct 877 (federal petition for writ of habeas corpus filed by state prisoner), the Supreme Court held that a state court procedural rule requiring written continuance motions could not bar the defendant's underlying federal constitutional claim under the circumstances of the case.

§20.5 B. Service on Parties; Notice to Witnesses

Opposing counsel must be served with the moving party's written notice of motion, and either affidavits or declarations detailing specific facts showing that a continuance is necessary, at least 2 court days before the hearing to be continued. Pen C §1050(b). Opposing counsel is not deemed to have been served with the continuance motion until he or she actually receives a copy of it or waives receipt. Pen C §1050(b). To obtain opposing counsel's waiver, counsel making the motion must notify opposing counsel of the motion, e.g., by phone, and ask him or her to agree to waive the right to have the documents timely served. Pen C §1050(b). Of course, opposing counsel does not have to agree to this proposal, so counsel making the motion should try to effect personal service whenever possible. Also, if the continuance requested is due to a calendar conflict, counsel must give written notice of which hearing was set first to the calendar clerk of each court involved. Pen C §1050(b). Counsel should check to see whether local courts have enacted rules governing notice of calendar conflicts as allowed by Pen C §1050(b).

Counsel making the continuance motion, and opposing counsel, are responsible for notifying their own witnesses that the hearing or trial at which the witnesses were to testify may be continued. Counsel must also notify their witnesses of the date and time of the hearing on the continuance motion and that they have the right to be heard by the court concerning the request for a continuance. Pen C §1050(b). If this provision required notification of all potential witnesses, then it would be quite burdensome. However, the statute does not so specify; rather, it uses only the general term "witnesses" without further amplification. A reasonable construction of the statute is that a person is not actually a witness until his or her selection as such has been made by some decisional act of the attorney, such as issuance of a subpoena. Under this interpretation, only persons already selected as witnesses need be notified. This construction accords with the legislative intent expressed in Pen C §1050(a) that "substantial hardship to victims and other witnesses" be prevented. Obviously, the hardship to witnesses is caused by having to acquire transportation and adjusting work and family activities around scheduled court dates that are continued, causing new transportation and adjustment problems. This inconvenience to witnesses does not exist until these persons are committed to a scheduled date, e.g., by subpoena. On the other hand, the duty to disclose witness statements to opposing counsel is triggered if counsel "reasonably anticipates" calling the witness. See Pen C §§1054-1054.7.

If the moving party does not comply with the service requirements discussed in this section, the court may impose sanctions unless the moving party shows good cause for failure to comply. Pen C §1050(c)-(d). Sanctions include one or both of the following (Pen C §§1050(c), 1050.5):

- Up to $1000 fine on counsel for moving party;
- Filing of report with appropriate disciplinary committee.

If the notice requirements of Pen C §1050(b) were not met, the court must hold a hearing to rule on whether there is good cause for having failed to comply with them. At the conclusion of the hearing, the court must state whether good cause was found and, if so, the facts proved that justify that finding. The finding and statement of facts must be entered in the minutes. The good cause showing for failure to comply with §1050(b)'s notice requirements is in addition to the good cause necessary for the continuance itself. Pen C §1050(d), (f); People v Harvey (1987) 193 CA3d 767, 771, 238 CR 516.

> Ø Note: Section 1050.5 does not authorize the magistrate to dismiss the action as a sanction for failure to provide proper notice under §1050(b). Pen C §1050.5(b).

On form and service of motions, see §§18.5-18.7. See sample motion for continuance in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §20.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§20.6 IV. GOOD CAUSE

Continuances in criminal cases are only to be made on a showing of good cause. Pen C §1050(b), (f). See also Cal Rules of Ct 4.115(b) (good cause required to trail the trial date); Pen C §§859b, 861 (good cause for continuing preliminary hearings); Cal Rules of Ct 4.113 (continuance of trial must be required by the ends of justice). The factual circumstances that may constitute good cause are discussed in §§20.7-20.27.

Ø Note: It is a mistake to believe that a case may be continued for trial within the 10-day grace period provided for in Pen C §1382 without a showing of good cause. The plain language of both Pen C §1050 and Cal Rules of Ct 4.115(b) require good cause for a continuance under §1050 during the 10-day grace period. Although a court may not dismiss a case during the 10-day grace period under §1382, the court must deny a request for a continuance during the 10-day grace period that does not comply with the good cause requirement under §1050. A dismissal is only appropriate after the 10 days have expired. The Advisory Committee Comment to Cal Rules of Ct 4.115 states:

> The decision in [People v Henderson (2004) 115 CA4th 922, 9 CR3d 655] states that when the prosecutor seeks a continuance but fails to show good cause under section 1050, the trial court "must nevertheless postpone the hearing to another date within the statutory period." (115 Cal.App.4th at p. 940.) That conclusion, however, may be contrary to the plain language of section 1050, which requires a court to deny a continuance if the moving party fails to show good cause. The conclusion also appears to be dicta, as it was not a contested issue on appeal. Given this uncertainty, the rule is silent as to the remedy for failure to show good cause for a requested continuance during the 10-day grace period. The committees note that the remedies under section 1050.5 are available and, but for the Henderson dicta, a court would appear to be allowed to deny the continuance request and commence the trial on the scheduled trial date.

Ø Firm and uniform enforcement of the requirement of "good cause" for all continuances during the 10-day grace period would have a dramatic impact on the administration of criminal justice and ensure that prosecutors do not file more cases than their staff can possibly handle.

§20.7 A. Continuance to Secure Counsel; Defendant's Financial Statement

A defendant is entitled by statute to a continuance at arraignment to secure counsel (implicit in Pen C §859), and at the time set for preliminary hearing (Pen C §860). No specific time is set for the period of delay needed to secure counsel for arraignment, except that it must be reasonable. See Pen C §859. If a defendant cannot secure counsel for the preliminary hearing, it must be postponed "for not less than two nor more than five days." Pen C §860.

Even in the absence of a specific statute, the constitutional rights to counsel (US Const amend VI; Cal Const art I, §§14-15) and due process (US Const amend VI; Cal Const art I, §15) require that a defendant be given a reasonable continuance to secure counsel of his or her choice (People v Courts (1985) 37 C3d 784, 789, 210 CR 193; People v Byoune (1966) 65 C2d 345, 54 CR 749) if the defendant can show that he or she is financially able to secure counsel (People v Lee (1967) 249 CA2d 234, 241, 57 CR 281; see People v Parks (1964) 230 CA2d 805, 811, 41 CR 329).

A defendant's financial ability to hire an attorney is a fact to be determined by the trial court like any other fact, namely, by a hearing and the presentation of evidence. See People v Lewis (1971) 19 CA3d 1019, 1024, 97 CR 419 (hearing on defendant's ability to pay fine). In making this financial determination, the court may ask the defendant to submit a financial statement to the court. Pen C §987(c). Compare Govt C §27707 (court can require defendant to file financial statement under penalty of perjury to determine whether defendant "is financially able to employ counsel and qualifies for the services of the public defender") with Pen C §987(c) (court can require defendant to file financial statement under penalty of perjury to determine whether he or she is "able to employ counsel"). Under §987(c), this financial statement is inadmissible in any criminal proceeding except one for perjury based on false information in the form itself. The prosecutor may not receive a copy of this statement unless investigating an alleged offense of perjury based on false material in the form.

When a public defender has interviewed a defendant and found that person ineligible for public defender representation, the court cannot compel the public defender to reveal any financial information received from the defendant in confidence, because that information is protected by the attorney-client privilege. People v Canfield (1974) 12 C3d 699, 707, 117 CR 81. The court must rely on the financial statement procedure set out in §987(c), discussed above.

When the court has given a defendant a reasonable period of time in which to secure counsel, and the defendant does not make a good faith effort to obtain an attorney, the court is entitled to deny the defendant's motion for a continuance to obtain counsel. People v Byoune (1966) 65 C2d 345, 346, 54 CR 749; People v Johnson (1970) 5 CA3d 851, 858, 85 CR 485.

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/20 CONTINUANCES/§20.8 B. Time to Prepare

§20.8 B. Time to Prepare

The right to counsel (US Const art VI; Cal Const art I, §15) includes the right to adequately prepare a defense (People v Maddox (1967) 67 C2d 647, 652, 63 CR 371), including the right to prepare and argue motions and objections before, during, and after trial. Cooper v Superior Court (1961) 55 C2d 291, 302, 10 CR 842; People v Sarazzawski (1945) 27 C2d 7, 17, 161 P2d 934. See also Pen C §1049 (5-day period to prepare for trial required after plea).

New counsel has the same right to a reasonable time to prepare as did previous counsel. See People v Simpson (1939) 31 CA2d 267, 88 P2d 175. If the defendant began a good faith effort to retain counsel a reasonable time before trial but was not able to obtain counsel until immediately before the trial date, it is error for the trial court to deny a continuance to allow counsel a reasonable time to prepare. People v Courts (1985) 37 C3d 784, 210 CR 193. For further discussion of substitution of counsel, see §§3.24-3.28.

A defendant representing himself or herself has the same right to a reasonable time to prepare as does the represented defendant. People v McKenzie (1983) 34 C3d 616, 194 CR 462; People v Maddox (1967) 67 C2d 647, 653, 63 CR 371; People v Cruz (1978) 83 CA3d 308, 325, 147 CR 740. The defendant has this right regardless of whether his or her former counsel had been prepared. People v Wilkins (1990) 225 CA3d 299, 275 CR 74. The court, however, may deny as untimely a request for self-representation made by a represented defendant so close to the trial date that the court would have to continue it to allow the defendant the necessary time to prepare (People v Windham (1977) 19 C3d 121, 137 CR 8; People v Hill (1983) 148 CA3d 744, 757, 196 CR 382; People v Morgan (1980) 101 CA3d 523, 531, 161 CR 664), unless the defendant shows reasonable cause for the lateness of the request (People v Hernandez (1985) 163 CA3d 645, 654, 209 CR 809 (defendant must show that event causing late request occurred recently and constitutes reasonable basis for dissatisfaction with present counsel's representation)). See also §§3.7-3.11 on self-representation.

> Ø Note: A prosecutor may argue that a late request to act as one's own counsel may be denied even when the defendant is not requesting a continuance. The law on this issue is unsettled.

Because the privilege against self-incrimination limits the state's power to compel a defendant to reveal information that may aid the prosecution except within the strict limits of discovery as outlined in Pen C §§1054-1054.7 (see Prudhomme v Superior Court (1970) 2 C3d 320, 85 CR 129), counsel should not have to specify in more than a general sense what he or she intends to do during the continuance. For example, it should be enough to allege the need to gather background information on the defendant for the penalty phase of a death penalty case without specifying the names of the specific persons intended to be interviewed. If the court insists on more detailed information in an area that counsel does not want to discuss for tactical reasons or because of the attorney-client privilege, counsel should consider requesting an ex parte in camera hearing that is completely confidential. See, e.g., People v Cruz (1978) 83 CA3d 308, 324, 147 CR 740 (in camera hearing conducted to decide whether pro per defendant should be granted continuance). See also People v Worthy (1980) 109 CA3d 514, 522 n2, 167 CR 402 (similar procedure suggested for showing foundation for motion to appoint expert to assist defense).

Minimum time requirements are prescribed by statute to allow counsel time to prepare the case:

- On arraignment, counsel has a right to a reasonable time to enter a plea or to demur—no less than 1 day for felonies and no more than 7 calendar days for misdemeanors. Pen C §990.
- If a demurrer is filed, argument must be heard immediately unless "exceptional cause" is shown for a continuance. Pen C §1006.
- If the complaint, information, or indictment is amended, counsel has the right to a reasonable continuance if defendant's substantial rights would otherwise be prejudiced. Pen C §1009. See §20.24.
- Counsel has a right to at least 5 calendar days between the time of entering a plea and trial to prepare. Pen C §1049; People v Wilkins, supra. See also Veh C §40306.

> Ø Note: If the court imposed jail as a sanction for attorney contempt, counsel should be entitled to a continuance or a stay to allow time for the filing of a writ petition for review.

The right to a continuance beyond the limits of these statutes is determined by the scope of the constitutional right to counsel. The right to effective representation necessarily includes the right "not [to] be brought to trial too soon, i.e., without adequate opportunity for preparation of his defense (citations omitted)." People v Maddox (1967) 67 C2d 647, 653, 63 CR 371 (forcing defendant to go to trial in less than 5 days required by §1049 denies defendant due process).

§20.9 C. Absence of Witnesses

As explained in Owens v Superior Court (1980) 28 C3d 238, 250, 168 CR 466, to obtain a continuance owing to a missing witness, whether that witness is to testify on behalf of the prosecution or on behalf of the defense, the proponent of delay must advise the court of the identity of the witness and the gist of his or her testimony, and must demonstrate that

- The testimony is material;
- The testimony is noncumulative;
- The facts to be shown cannot otherwise be proven;
- The proponent of delay has exercised diligence to secure the presence of the witness in court by legal means; and
- The witness will be available within a reasonable length of time.

Although a court is to "consider" the convenience of witnesses in determining whether good cause for delay has been shown, and in selecting a trial date if good cause for delay is demonstrated (Pen C §1050(g)(1)), mere convenience alone does not constitute good cause for delay (Pen C §1050(e)). See Cunningham v Municipal Court (1976) 62 CA3d 153, 133 CR 18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.10 1. Particular and Obtainable Witness; Witness Available Within Reasonable Time

When counsel is moving for a continuance because a witness will be unavailable on the date set for hearing, counsel should identify the witness whose testimony is needed by name and address (see People v Buckey (1972) 23 CA3d 740, 744, 100 CR 551) and state how counsel can secure the witness's attendance within a reasonable time (People v Collins (1925) 195 C 325, 333, 233 P 97). See People v Livingston (1970) 4 CA3d 251, 255, 84 CR 237. For example, if the witness is absent because he or she is in the hospital or on vacation, counsel should establish that the condition exists and the expected end date.

When defense counsel seeks a continuance because a witness is unavailable, counsel should consider making the motion in camera so that the prosecutor is not given information on the witness's identity, unless the court has already ordered prosecutorial discovery of the witness under Pen C §§1054-1054.7. On when the defense must reveal witnesses, see chap 11 on discovery.

If counsel is unable to locate a witness's place of residence after having made reasonable efforts to do so (see §20.12), that is cause for a continuance for a reasonable period of time in which to locate the witness. See People v Collins, supra; Harper v Lamping (1867) 33 C 641; People v Hanz (1961) 190 CA2d 793, 798, 12 CR 282.

Counsel may obtain a continuance to secure a new witness when a witness relied on for testimony suddenly claims the privilege against self-incrimination. A witness who claims this privilege is deemed not reasonably obtainable. People v Sandoval (1977) 70 CA3d 73, 83, 138 CR 609. A witness does not have to be called to the stand at trial before a judge can determine that he or she would assert the privilege against self-incrimination, and that such an assertion is proper; such matters may be determined at a pretestimonial inquiry of the witness. People v Cornejo (1979) 92 CA3d 637, 658, 155 CR 238. For discussion of immunity for testimony, see chap 49.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.11 2. Material or Necessary Testimony; Testimony Not Cumulative

When counsel is requesting a continuance to secure the testimony of a witness who was unavailable on the date set for hearing or trial, counsel must specify the testimony that he or she expects from the witness. See People v Ah Fat (1874) 48 C 61; People v Carter (1962) 208 CA2d 722, 724, 25 CR 527; Young v Evans (1944) 62 CA2d 365, 373, 144 P2d 651. Then, counsel must show that this testimony has a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove a fact that could influence the decision in the case. People v Dunstan (1922) 59 CA 574, 584, 211 P 813.

Proposed testimony is considered necessary if it is not cumulative of other testimony or evidence. People v Wilson (1965) 235 CA2d 266, 274, 45 CR 267. If the proposed testimony is cumulative only of the defendant's testimony, however, it is considered necessary. See People v Ah Lee Doon (1893) 97 C 171, 177, 31 P 933.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.12 3. Due Diligence

When counsel is requesting a continuance to secure the testimony of a witness who was unavailable on the date set for hearing or trial, counsel shows due diligence in trying to obtain the witness by producing evidence that counsel used legal means to try to compel the witness's attendance. This information is usually proved through the attorney's or investigator's declarations. See Pen C §1050(b) (affidavits or declarations showing specific facts required).

The exercise of diligence to secure the presence of the witness in court by legal means is frequently open to dispute. For example, if an attorney has relied on the apparent cooperation of the witness without the service of a subpoena, it would appear that this is not the "legal means" required by the statute. So, if no attempt was made to subpoena the witness, his or her absence generally does not constitute good cause for a continuance. Jensen v Superior Court (2008) 160 CA4th 266, 271, 72 CR3d 594. However, when a witness is served with a subpoena but fails to appear, there is usually good cause for a continuance.

If counsel tried to subpoena the witness, counsel must show that the efforts to serve the witness were made within a reasonable time before the hearing. If the proponent of delay has waited until the last minute to attempt to subpoena the witness, who is then found to be unavailable, there is no diligence justifying delay. People v Avila (2005) 131 CA4th 163, 31 CR3d 441. The time to ascertain the availability of witnesses is when the trial date is set. People v Collins (1925) 195 C 325, 333, 233 P 97; Brown v Superior Court (1987) 189 CA3d 260, 264, 234 CR 416; People v Rodriguez (1971) 15 CA3d 481, 484, 93 CR 182 (1-day search not enough); Pickett v Municipal Court (1970) 12 CA3d 1158, 1162, 91 CR 315. Defense counsel's lack of effort to secure a witness is not excused on the ground that the defendant obstructed defense counsel from speaking with the witness, or was dilatory in informing counsel of the existence of the witness. See People v Grant (1988) 45 C3d 829, 843, 248 CR 444; People v Valladares (1984) 162 CA3d 312, 319, 208 CR 604. A court is also justified in denying a claim of due diligence when it finds that counsel employed "delaying tactics." People v Fudge (1994) 7 C4th 1075, 1105, 31 CR2d 321.

§20.13 D. Incapacity of Defendant, Counsel, or Judge; Defendant's Failure to Appear

Defense. Physical incapacity of the defendant or defense counsel is good cause for a continuance. People v Crovedi (1966) 65 C2d 199, 53 CR 284 (illness of defense attorney). See also People v Mickey (1991) 54 C3d 612, 660, 286 CR 801 (motion properly denied because defense counsel was present in court and stated he did not feel well, but did not indicate he would be unavailable due to illness); People v Avila (2004) 117 CA4th 771, 11 CR3d 894 (no error in denying continuance to defendant with chronic back pain who was lucid, coherent, and rational); People v Hanz (1961) 190 CA2d 793, 796, 12 CR 282 (motion for continuance due to physical pain by pro per defendant properly denied because of testimony of physician that defendant was physically able to proceed).

When defense counsel cannot come to court, the court may continue the case either to a time when counsel can return or for a reasonable time to obtain other counsel. See People v Crovedi, supra; People v Logan (1854) 4 C 188.

Incapacity creates a factual issue for the court and may be determined on the basis of medical testimony. People v Augustine (1968) 265 CA2d 317, 329, 71 CR 384 (counsel's incapacity refuted by doctor's ex parte communication to trial judge); People v Hanz, supra (pro per defendant's incapacity refuted by doctor's testimony). See also §20.28 (form of proof).

When a defendant fails to appear for trial in a misdemeanor case, the court should proceed with the trial if the defendant previously authorized counsel to appear in the defendant's absence under Pen C §977(a). Pen C §1043(e). If there is no Pen C §977 form on file, the court may do the following (Pen C §1043(e)):

- Continue the case to another date;
- Revoke bail and order it forfeited, or order O.R. release status revoked;
- Issue a bench warrant; or
- Proceed to trial if the court finds that the defendant's absence is voluntary and that the defendant knew of the court date.

Ø Note: The court has the right to order the defendant to appear at trial for the purpose of identification despite a previous Pen C §977 waiver, unless there is a stipulation regarding identification. Pen C §1043. It would not appear that the court could order the defendant to appear at any time other than when an identification is being made. There is no ruling on whether the prosecution can refuse such a stipulation if offered by the defendant.

In felony cases, a trial cannot be started if the defendant is not present unless the defendant has waived his or her presence. Pen C §1043(a), (d). If, however, the defendant's absence occurs after the trial begins, and if the offense is not punishable by death, the judge can proceed with the case if the judge finds that the defendant is voluntarily absent. Pen C §1043(b)(2). See, e.g., People v Concepcion (2008) 45 C4th 77, 84 CR3d 418. The court can also proceed with a trial in the defendant's absence after the court orders the defendant removed from the courtroom because of disruptive or disrespectful behavior. Pen C §1043(b)(1). See discussion in §31.42 on removing the defendant from the courtroom.

Prosecution. When a prosecutor cannot begin a trial within the Pen C §1382 requirements because of illness, the prosecution must assign another deputy to try the case or risk dismissal. See Batey v Superior Court (1977) 71 CA3d 952, 139 CR 689 (prosecutor unable to try case because in trial on another case; case dismissed because prosecution made no attempt to assign case to another deputy). When a prosecutor becomes ill during trial, however, one appellate court suggested that the trial judge should hear evidence on the reason for the prosecutor's absence, make a finding on the record, and, if the judge finds good cause for a continuance, continue the trial for 2 or 3 days either for the same prosecutor to return or for a new deputy to take his or her place. People v McJimson (1982) 135 CA3d 873, 881, 185 CR 605. See the discussion in §20.15 of continuance because of prosecutor's other court commitments.

Court. When a judge is unable to continue hearing a trial, e.g., because of illness, the presiding judge may assign another judge to proceed with the trial, or continue the case from day to day until a new judge is assigned by the chairperson of the Judicial Council or agreed on by stipulation of the parties. Pen C §1053.

E. Other Court Commitments; Legislative Commitments

§20.14 1. Defense Attorney

When a defendant joins in requesting a continuance caused by defense counsel's court commitments on behalf of other clients, the court must grant the continuance until either defense counsel can appear or the defendant can obtain other counsel. People v Manchetti (1946) 29 C2d 452, 458, 175 P2d 533. A defendant should not be prejudiced by a situation for which he or she is not responsible. See People v Manchetti, supra. However, the defendant is entitled only to a reasonable continuance. See People v Dowell (1928) 204 C 109, 113, 266 P 807 (second continuance properly denied when defendant was previously told of conflict and was given 30 days to secure other counsel); Stevens v Superior Court (1988) 198 CA3d 932, 244 CR 94 (court appointed new counsel because original attorney required at least a 6-month delay).

Ordinarily, counsel alone controls whether a case will be continued. People v Memro (1995) 11 C4th 786, 852, 47 CR2d 219; People v Kowalski (1987) 196 CA3d 174, 242 CR 32; People v Jackson (1982) 129 CA3d 953, 181 CR 429. However, when a defendant affirmatively objects to a delay sought by appointed counsel not to benefit that defendant, but owing to counsel's conflicting obligations to another client, the attorney and defendant have a conflict as to this issue. People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 572, 162 CR 431. A defendant who does not expressly object to a proposed continuance cannot claim improper waiver of his or her speedy trial rights. Barsamyan v Appellate Div. (2008) 44 C4th 960, 981, 81 CR3d 265. The right to a speedy trial is discussed in chap 19.

In Johnson, the California Supreme Court set forth a three-step procedure to be followed in this situation:

(1) If the appointed counsel is a member of a public defender's office, the court is to inquire if another person in the office could bring the case to trial within statutory time limits. (Presumably, this would also apply to a member of a firm, if another member of the firm could bring the matter to trial.)

(2) If another member of the office cannot do so, the court is to inquire whether some other attorney could bring the case to trial within statutory time limits. If so, the court can substitute counsel in order to protect the speedy trial right.

(3) If no feasible means can be found to protect the speedy trial right, the court is to grant counsel's motion to continue. If statutory time limits are exceeded, and a motion to dismiss is made, the court is to inquire whether the delay was caused by the State's failure to provide sufficient resources to protect the speedy trial right. If the court so finds, the case must be dismissed.

There are many unanswered questions concerning this procedure: Where is the burden of proof? What kind of evidence is to be considered? If the motion to dismiss is denied, is the delay to be considered justified by consent or good cause?

When a number of defendants not in custody and represented by the public defender demand jury trials within the Pen C §1382 time limits, this is not an exceptional circumstance that justifies delaying their trials even if there are not enough local judges to try all of the cases. Arreola v Municipal Court (1983) 139 CA3d 108, 188 CR 529.

Counsel is faced with a dilemma when he or she is unprepared to go to trial, but the trial court denies counsel's request for a continuance. Some attorneys refuse to participate in trial proceedings in that situation to protect the client from having incompetent representation; total lack of representation results in reversal on appeal. Little v Superior Court (1980) 110 CA3d 667, 168 CR 72; People v Locklar (1978) 84 CA3d 224, 148 CR 322. However, this conduct may result in State Bar discipline. See People v McKenzie (1983) 34 C3d 616, 631, 194 CR 462. The proper course for counsel is to proceed with the case to the best of his or her ability. The court pointed out that "[i]f counsel builds a careful record and can demonstrate that he has been compelled to proceed with a case in which he was unprepared through no fault of his own, the matter can then be raised through the proper procedural channels." 34 C3d at 632. For discussion of effective assistance of counsel, see §2.20. See §20.32 for discussion of sanctions.

§20.15 2. Prosecuting Attorney

A prosecuting attorney who knows before trial that he or she may be unable to proceed to trial within the Pen C §1382 time limits because of a conflicting case should contact defense counsel to see whether the defendant will waive time under §1382. If the defendant will waive time, the prosecutor must then obtain the court's consent to a continuance. Pen C §1050(b). If the defendant will not waive time, the prosecution must reassign the case or risk dismissal. Batey v Superior Court (1977) 71 CA3d 952, 957, 139 CR 689. There is an exception for cases involving offenses listed in Pen C §§11165.1(a) (various sexual assault offenses), 11165.6 (child abuse or neglect), 187 (murder), 646.9 (stalking), 999b-999h (career criminal), and 13700 (domestic violence), in which the district attorney assigned to the case has another trial, preliminary hearing, or motion to suppress evidence in progress; good cause for a strictly limited continuance is allowed by statute. Pen C §1050(g). See also Pen C §§859b(b) (maximum continuance of preliminary hearing at prosecution request is 3 court days) and 1050(g) (maximum continuance of other hearings at prosecution request is 10 court days).

For discussion of the prosecutor's incapacity during trial, see §20.13.

§20.16 3. Member of Legislature

When the attorney of record at the time of the defendant's first appearance in superior court is a member of the state legislature, and the legislature is in session or an interim committee of which counsel is a member is meeting or will meet within the next 7 days, the defense must be granted a reasonable continuance, not to exceed 30 calendar days. Pen C §1050(h).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.17 F. Prejudicial Publicity

Prejudicial pretrial publicity that threatens a defendant's right to a fair trial may constitute a ground for a continuance. See Sheppard v Maxwell (1966) 384 US 333, 363, 16 L Ed 2d 600, 620, 86 S Ct 1507 (dictum). See also Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 387, 66 CR 724 (continuances may be an effective remedy in medium-sized and large cities, but not in small communities). On other remedies for prejudicial pretrial publicity, see §§14.19A-14.31.

§20.18 G. Motion to Suppress

In a misdemeanor case, a defendant who intends to file a motion to return property or suppress evidence, and needs this time to prepare for the special hearing on the motion, is entitled to a continuance of up to 30 calendar days. Pen C §1538.5(l).

If the defendant's motion to return property or suppress evidence in a felony case is granted at the preliminary hearing, and the defendant is not held to answer, the prosecution may request a special hearing on the motion. In this event, the defendant is entitled as a matter of right to a continuance of the special hearing for up to 30 calendar days. Pen C §1538.5(j).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.19 H. Desire to Try Felony First

When two separate cases arising from the same facts are pending against a defendant, one a felony and the other a misdemeanor, the prosecution may not obtain a continuance of the misdemeanor case to avoid disclosing evidence concerning it, or to preclude the defendant from entering a plea of res judicata or double jeopardy to the felony charge. Zamloch v Municipal Court (1951) 106 CA2d 260, 264, 235 P2d 25. This situation arises when the cases cannot be joined. See, e.g., People v Saldana (1965) 233 CA2d 24, 43 CR 312 (evidence that defendant at time of charged rape may have had marijuana cigarette in shirt pocket was insufficient connection to justify combined trial on both rape and possession of marijuana charges). For further discussion, see §§7.27-7.42 (joinder and severance), 26.23-26.27, 26.34 (pleas of double jeopardy, former acquittal, and former conviction).

§20.20 I. Codefendants Joined

When the cases of two or more codefendants are joined, and the court for good cause continues the case of one codefendant, that constitutes good cause for continuing the remaining codefendants' cases. Pen C §1050.1; In re Samano (1995) 31 CA4th 984, 37 CR2d 491 (§1050.1 also applies to preliminary examinations).

Ø Note: A minor cannot be detained past the statutory time limits (Welf & I C §657; Cal Rules of Ct 5.774(b)) solely because a co-minor requests continuance. A.A. v Superior Court (2003) 115 CA4th 1, 6, 9 CR3d 1.

Only if it appears impossible for all codefendants to be prepared within a reasonable period of time can the cases be severed. Pen C §1050.1. If a defendant is in custody pending a preliminary hearing, and the case is continued over the defendant's objection for good cause shown to a date beyond 10 court days following arraignment, the defendant is generally entitled to be released from custody. See §20.31. Over a vigorous dissent, the Samano majority held that a codefendant who is objecting to delay is to be "deemed" to have requested the delay, so as to avoid this release requirement when §1050.1 applies. In re Samano (1995) 31 CA4th 984, 993, 37 CR2d 491.

For further discussion of joinder and severance, see §§7.27-7.42.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.21 J. Judicial Diversion

The court does not have jurisdiction to continue a case before conviction over the prosecutor's objection in an effort to effect a nonstatutory diversion procedure whereby the defendant is promised a dismissal under Pen C §1385 (dismissal in furtherance of justice) if he or she satisfies requirements established by the judge. People v Municipal Court (Gelardi) (1978) 84 CA3d 692, 149 CR 30. For further discussion, see chap 27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.22 K. Court Unavailable

Court congestion is not good cause for a continuance when the defendant objects and the new date would exceed the time limits of Pen C §1382 for bringing a case to trial. See Rhinehart v Municipal Court (1984) 35 C3d 772, 782, 200 CR 916 (out-of-custody misdemeanor defendant with retained counsel); People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 162 CR 431 (indigent, incarcerated felony defendant); People v Flores (2009) 173 CA4th Supp 9, 25, 92 CR3d 582 (out-of-custody misdemeanor defendant); Arreola v Municipal Court (1983) 139 CA3d 108, 188 CR 529 (indigent out-of-custody defendant).

When court congestion is not chronic but is caused by an extraordinary circumstance, e.g., the death of a judge in a county with only two judges, the court may continue a case beyond the statutory speedy-trial time limits over the defendant's objection if the court notifies the chairperson of the Judicial Council that the case cannot be tried within the statutory time limits because no civil or criminal courts are available to try the case. See Pen C §1053 (trial court must notify Judicial Council chairperson). See also People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 571, 162 CR 431 (extraordinary circumstances will justify delay of trial); Hankla v Municipal Court (1972) 26 CA3d 342, 364, 102 CR 896; Herrick v Municipal Court (1957) 151 CA2d 804, 807, 312 P2d 264.

Neither a shortage of trial judges caused by many local judges attending a nearby judicial training session (Lewis v Superior Court (1981) 122 CA3d 494, 176 CR 80) nor a mere showing that civil cases are causing court congestion is considered an exceptional circumstance justifying delay of a criminal trial (Hankla v Municipal Court, supra; Herrick v Municipal Court, supra).

§20.23 L. Testimony of Defendant or Defense Witness

The prosecutor is entitled to a reasonable continuance on request when the defendant or a defense witness testifies at trial, unless the court finds that the prosecutor was, or with due diligence should have been, aware of such evidence. If the continuance is granted because of the defendant's testimony, it may not exceed 1 day. Pen C §1051.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.24 M. Amending Pleadings

When the prosecutor amends pleadings, whether before or during trial, the defendant is entitled to a continuance if the defendant's substantial rights would otherwise be prejudiced. The continuance is to be for a reasonable time, "not longer than the ends of justice require." Pen C §1009; People v Murphy (1963) 59 C2d 818, 31 CR 306. On amending pleadings, see §§7.14-7.18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.25 N. Request for Continuance During Trial

A motion for continuance may be brought during trial when counsel is surprised by testimony, evidence, or other developments. Counsel should request the amount of time needed to interview witnesses, prepare a motion, or present rebuttal testimony. A continuance motion during trial will be considered untimely if the work to be done could have been accomplished before trial. People v Bittaker (1989) 48 C3d 1046, 1094, 259 CR 630.

Factors the court may consider in ruling on a motion for continuance include the benefit sought by the party seeking the continuance and the likelihood that such benefit will result. Additionally, the trial court should consider the burden a continuance will place on other witnesses and jurors and whether justice will be accomplished or defeated by granting the motion. Whether to grant a continuance motion made during trial is within the trial court's discretion, and its determination will ordinarily be upheld on appeal. People v Beames (2007) 40 C4th 907, 920, 55 CR3d 865. See, e.g., People v Samayoa (1997) 15 C4th 795, 840, 64 CR2d 400 (no abuse of discretion to deny defendant's request for continuance to prepare for cross-examination of prosecution expert); People v Fudge (1994) 7 C4th 1075, 1105, 31 CR2d 321 (no abuse of discretion to deny defendant's request for continuance to call defense witnesses—lack of diligence in trial preparation); People v Gonzalez (2005) 126 CA4th 1539, 25 CR3d 124 (no abuse of discretion to deny defense request to get its own gang expert). However, when a continuance is necessary to afford the defendant a fair trial, the trial court's denial of a motion for continuance may be an abuse of discretion. Lee v Kemna (2002) 534 US 362, 381, 151 L Ed 2d 820, 839, 122 S Ct 877 (trial court's denial of continuance to obtain previously subpoenaed alibi witnesses may have infringed right to present defense); People v Cuccia (2002) 97 CA4th 785, 118 CR2d 668 (when scheduled defense witness could not be found, trial court abused its discretion when it denied motion for brief continuance, thereby forcing defendant to testify out of order or rest his case).

In seeking a midtrial continuance to obtain the attendance of a witness, the party seeking the continuance has the burden of showing an exercise of due diligence, that the proffered testimony is material and not cumulative, and that the witness's attendance can be secured within a reasonable time. People v Brown (1994) 28 CA4th 591, 598, 33 CR2d 678.

If counsel is surprised by new testimony or evidence that should have been disclosed during discovery, counsel may want to move to exclude it or move for some other sanction instead of requesting a continuance. See Pen C §1054.5. For discussion of discovery, see chap 11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.25A O. Request for Continuance at Sentencing

Counsel may request a continuance after the trial court announces the sentence it intends to impose. See People v Gonzalez (2003) 31 C4th 745, 3 CR3d 676. The trial court is not required to issue a tentative opinion but must describe the sentence and the reasons that support any discretionary sentencing choices, and give counsel a reasonable opportunity to object before pronouncing judgment. See People v Scott (1994) 9 C4th 331, 351, 36 CR2d 627 (most sentencing errors waived by failure to object). When the sentence is unusual or particularly complex, a continuance will allow counsel time to research whether an objection is warranted or to request permission to submit written objections. See also Turner v Calderon (9th Cir 2002) 281 F3d 851, 895 (defendant, whose counsel was admittedly unprepared for sentencing hearing, was entitled to evidentiary hearing on claim of ineffective assistance of counsel).

Counsel may request a continuance when the trial judge is temporarily unavailable to preside at the sentencing hearing. Although a defendant does not have the right to be sentenced by the trial judge, it has been held to be an abuse of discretion for the sentencing judge to refuse a continuance of 3 days so that the defendant could be sentenced by the trial judge. See People v Jacobs (2007) 156 CA4th 728, 67 CR3d 615.

§20.26 P. Cases Involving Sex Offenses and Cases Involving Minor Victims or Witnesses

When a minor is the alleged victim, when a minor is detained as a material witness, or when any person is the alleged victim of certain specified violent sex offenses, a continuance may be granted only if the judge finds, after a hearing, that a continuance is necessary. Pen C §1048(b). Moreover, the trial must begin within 30 calendar days after arraignment unless good cause is shown for a continuance. Pen C §1048(b). As a practical matter, Pen C §1048 does not appear to add anything to the general proof requirements for continuance. See Pen C §1050.

When the crime charged is listed in Pen C §11165.1(a), §11165.6, or §13700, and the prosecutor assigned to the case has another trial, preliminary hearing, or motion to suppress evidence in progress, that fact constitutes good cause for continuance of the §11165.1(a), §11165.6, or §13700 case. Pen C §1050(g). A continuance of up to 10 court days may be granted. Pen C §1050(g).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.27 Q. Convenience of Parties; Stipulations

The court may not grant a continuance except on a showing of good cause. Pen C §1050(e). Convenience of the parties is not good cause for a continuance. Pen C §1050(e). Nor is the parties' stipulation to a new court date good cause in itself for the court to grant a continuance. Pen C §1050(e). A defendant may agree, however, that the prosecution may obtain a future continuance without a showing of good cause, as long as such an agreement is not required for the defendant to obtain an otherwise justified continuance. People v Haendiges (1983) 142 CA3d Supp 9, 13, 191 CR 785.

Ø Note: As a practical matter, many trial judges routinely find good cause without a written motion if counsel stipulate to a colorable basis for a continuance on the record.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. PROOF; COURT'S RULING

§20.28 A. Form of Proof

The moving party has the burden of proving that a continuance is required. See, e.g., Owens v Superior Court (1980) 28 C3d 238, 250, 168 CR 466 (prosecution); People v Wilson (1965) 235 CA2d 266, 273, 45 CR 267 (defense).

Continuance motions must be supported by evidence. Evid C §§300 (Evidence Code applies to all proceedings not excepted by statute), 500 (parties have burden of proving facts on which their claim for relief or defense is based); Cal Rules of Ct 4.113 (affirmative proof in open court is required to continue trial). Evidence includes "testimony, writings, material objects, or other things presented to the senses that are offered to prove the existence or nonexistence of a fact." Evid C §140. Counsel should submit testimony in the form of affidavits or declarations (Pen C §1050(b)) but may be able to make an oral offer of proof (see Pen C §1050(c)). It is unclear whether moving counsel can make affidavits or declarations on information or belief. Compare court holdings on the use of information and belief in other situations in People v Leyshon (1895) 108 C 440 and Star Motor Imports, Inc. v Superior Court (1979) 88 CA3d 201, 151 CR 721 (writ petition; declaration cannot be made on information and belief when to be relied on for proof of facts), with People v Municipal Court (Hayden) (1980) 102 CA3d 181, 162 CR 347 (declaration in support of Pitchess motion may be made on information and belief).

Opposing counsel has the right to cross-examine the affiants or declarants at the hearing. See People v Williams (1973) 30 CA3d 502, 509, 106 CR 324. Presumably, opposing counsel has the right to introduce the same type of evidence in opposition to the motion for a continuance. See People v Jenkins (1880) 56 C 4 (prosecution used counteraffidavit).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.29 B. Court's Ruling

In considering whether to grant a continuance motion, the court is to specifically consider the general convenience and prior commitments of all witnesses, including peace officers. Pen C §1050(g). Both the general convenience and prior commitments of each witness must also be considered in selecting a continuance date if the motion is granted. The facts as to inconvenience or prior commitments may be offered by the witness or by a party to the case.

However, neither the parties' convenience nor their stipulation to a continuance in itself constitutes good cause. Pen C §1050(e).

The continuance shall be granted only for the period of time necessary as shown by evidence considered at the hearing on the motion. Pen C §1050(i).

At the conclusion of the hearing, the court must state its ruling on the record. If good cause was found for a continuance, the court must state for the record the facts proved that justify that finding. Those facts must be entered in the court minutes. Pen C §1050(f). The court must also state for the record the facts proved that justify the length of the continuance, and have those facts entered in the court minutes. Pen C §1050(i).

Ø Note: The requirement that findings be included in the minutes is, in part, to facilitate appellate review. Nevertheless, appellate courts are reluctant to micromanage the calendar of the superior court and reversals are rare on that basis.

© The Regents of the University of California

VI. LENGTH OF CONTINUANCE

§20.30 A. Time Requirements

Continuances are to be granted only for the period of time shown to be necessary by the evidence considered at the hearing on the motion for continuance. Pen C §1050(i). Time requirements are sometimes prescribed by statute. See the chart in §20.2.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.30A B. "Last Day" Cases

Courts should avoid calendaring or trailing criminal cases for trial to the last day permitted for trial under Pen C §1382 and must implement calendar management procedures to ensure that criminal cases are assigned to trial departments before the last day permitted for trial under §1382. Cal Rules of Ct 4.115(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.31 C. Preliminary Hearings

A defendant in custody solely on a felony complaint is entitled to a preliminary hearing within 10 court days after arraignment, plea, or reinstatement of proceedings that had been suspended under Pen C §1367, whichever occurs later. Pen C §859b, discussed in §8.16. If the preliminary hearing is not held within that time, the judge must dismiss the case unless the defendant personally waives this right or the prosecutor establishes good cause for a continuance. Pen C §859b(a)-(b). For discussion of circumstances that may constitute good cause, see §§20.6-20.27. Even with good cause, a preliminary hearing may not be postponed more than 60 calendar days after the date of arraignment or plea unless the defendant personally waves that right. Pen C §859b.

When the defendant is out of custody, the case must be dismissed if the preliminary hearing is not held within 60 calendar days after the date of arraignment or plea unless the defendant personally waives the right to a preliminary hearing within that period. Pen C §859b.

After a preliminary hearing has started, it cannot be postponed for more than 10 court days unless the defendant personally waives the right to a continuous preliminary hearing or unless the prosecution establishes good cause in an affidavit or declaration (CCP §2015.5) for a postponement beyond the 10-court-day period. Pen C §861. A defense request for a continuance of the preliminary hearing to file a Pen C §1538.5(f)(2) motion is deemed a personal waiver of the defendant's right to a continuous preliminary hearing. Pen C §861(d). The maximum time that the court can postpone the preliminary hearing on the prosecutor's motion is 60 calendar days after the date the continuance motion is granted, unless by consent or motion of the defendant. Pen C §861.

> Ø Note: A formal continuance motion is not required to continue a preliminary hearing if it was originally set on a date less than 10 court days from the date of the defendant's arraignment, and counsel's request is that it be continued to a date no more than 10 court days after the date of arraignment. This exception applies to both prosecutors and defense counsel. Pen C §1050(k).

When the court grants the prosecutor a continuance either to begin a preliminary hearing or to continue it without the defendant's consent, the court must release the defendant from custody unless (Pen C §859b(b)):

- It is a capital case in which "the proof is evident and the presumption great" (Pen C §859b(b)(2));
- The continuance is needed to secure a witness necessary for the preliminary hearing who is unavailable because of the defendant's actions (Pen C §859b(b)(3));
- Counsel is ill or unexpectedly engaged in a jury trial (Pen C §859b(b)(4)-(5)); or
- Unforeseen conflicts require that new counsel be appointed (Pen C §859b(b)(6)).

For further discussion of continuances at the preliminary hearing, see §§8.17-8.18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.32 VII. SANCTIONS

If a party has not shown good cause for delay, or if the motion is untimely without good cause for the untimeliness, it is the court's duty to deny the motion to continue. This duty applies whether the motion to continue is made by the defense or the prosecution. Oberholzer v Commission on Judicial Performance (1999) 20 C4th 371, 399, 84 CR2d 466; People v Alvarez (1989) 208 CA3d 567, 577, 256 CR 289; People v Lynch (1971) 14 CA3d 602, 607, 92 CR 411; People v Johnson (1970) 5 CA3d 851, 860, 85 CR 485. If, however, the prosecution seeks or obtains an unjustified delay, the court cannot dismiss the prosecution on that basis. Pen C §1050.5(b); Malengo v Municipal Court (1961) 56 C2d 813, 816, 17 CR 10; People v Rubaum (1980) 110 CA3d 930, 934, 168 CR 291.

If the prosecutor chooses to proceed with a preliminary hearing without a necessary witness, defense counsel may request a dismissal at the conclusion of the hearing and ask that the defendant be discharged. See Pen C §871.

If the prosecutor produces insufficient evidence at trial, defense counsel may move for judgment of acquittal under Pen C §1118 or §1118.1.

Disciplinary proceedings. The court may file a report with the State Bar on an attorney's failure to comply with Pen C §1050(b) when the party moving for a continuance was the prosecuting or defense attorney. Pen C §1050.5(a)(2).

Fine. The court may fine an attorney who violates Pen C §1050(b) (discussed in §20.3) up to $1000. Pen C §1050.5(a)(1).

Contempt. The court may hold an attorney in contempt who refuses to proceed with a case at the court's direction after a motion for continuance is denied. See Pen C §166(a)(4). See also Pen C §1050.5(b). For further discussion of contempt, see chap 58.

Appointed attorneys in felony cases. When an attorney appointed in a felony case represents that he or she will be ready on the date set, the court may impose sanctions if counsel is not ready to proceed and cannot show "good cause." Pen C §987.05. Possible sanctions include contempt, removal from the case, fines, and denying public funds as compensation. This provision does not apply to prosecutors, retained counsel, or attorneys whom the court appoints without requiring a representation of readiness. Pen C §987.05.

§20.33 VIII. EFFECT OF CONTINUANCE ON DEFENDANT'S CUSTODY STATUS

When a court grants a continuance, it has the same choices concerning the defendant's custody status as it otherwise does, unless a statute requires the defendant's release. See, e.g., Pen C §859b(b), discussed in §20.31.

See discussion of Pen C §1050.1 in §20.20. See also chap 5 on bailable offenses and O.R. release.

IX. REVIEW

§20.34 A. Pen C §995 Motion

Errors at the preliminary hearing are attacked by a Pen C §995 motion. Errors that concern the improper grant or denial of a continuance include the following:

- Improperly denying the defendant a continuance of the preliminary hearing so that he or she was unable to prepare properly for the hearing. Jennings v Superior Court (1967) 66 C2d 867, 59 CR 440.
- Improperly postponing the preliminary hearing past the statutory 10 court days. Pen C §859b. See Burnett v Superior Court (1974) 12 C3d 865, 874 n8, 117 CR 556; People v Elliot (1960) 54 C2d 498, 502, 6 CR 753, overruled on other grounds in People v Pompa-Ortiz (1980) 27 C3d 519, 528, 165 CR 851. In such cases, prejudice appears as a matter of law.
- Improperly postponing a preliminary hearing after it has started. Pen C §861 (one-session rule). See Burnett v Superior Court, supra; People v Bucher (1959) 175 CA2d 343, 346 P2d 202. Penal Code §861 appears to require dismissal for violation of its terms, thus mandating the grant of a Pen C §995 motion without an additional showing of prejudice. See Stroud v Superior Court (2000) 23 C4th 952, 963 n4, 98 CR2d 677. But see People v Castagnola (1972) 28 CA3d 882, 888, 105 CR 62 (brief continuance did not violate one-session rule, and assuming it did, defendant not prejudiced).

If defense counsel's §995 motion is granted, the information or indictment is set aside (Pen C §995) and the defendant is discharged (Pen C §997). However, the order setting aside the information or indictment is not a bar to refiling the same offense (Pen C §999), unless the case has been previously dismissed under §995 or other specified sections. Pen C §1387. For further discussion of §995 motions, see chap 13.

§20.35 B. Writ

When the trial court grants a continuance in excess of its jurisdiction before or during trial, defense counsel may seek a writ of prohibition or mandate. The same remedy is available when the court denies a continuance. Jennings v Superior Court (1967) 66 C2d 867, 875, 59 CR 440.

Similarly, the prosecution may seek a writ of mandate or prohibition to review a trial court order beyond the time limits of Pen C §1049.5, or made without good cause when good cause is required for a continuance. Pen C §1511.

Both the prosecution and defense have the right to seek a writ of mandate or prohibition from the superior court to challenge a trial court order granting a continuance of a preliminary hearing. Pen C §871.6. This type of writ petition has precedence over all other cases pending in the superior court. If the writ is granted, the superior court must issue the remittitur within 3 court days after its decision becomes final. The losing party can then seek relief from the court of appeal. Pen C §871.6.

Ø Note: Whenever time permits, this procedure should be followed rather than the later motion to dismiss.

For further discussion of writs, see chap 42. See also Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases, chaps 7-8 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.36 C. Appeal

The prosecution may not obtain review of the grant or denial of a continuance by appeal. Review is by writ of prohibition or mandate. Pen C §871.6. See §20.35.

The defense may obtain review of the grant or denial of a continuance by appeal from a judgment of conviction (People v Wilson (1963) 60 C2d 139, 32 CR 44) or by petition for writ of prohibition or mandate (Pen C §871.6). If a continuance was granted over defense objection, defense counsel must have both objected and moved to dismiss under Pen C §1382; otherwise, the error is waived. See People v Wilson, supra.

Ø Note: It is helpful for later appellate review for counsel to make a detailed record in the trial court concerning the purpose of the continuance, the good cause for it, and the anticipated harm (i.e., prejudice) caused by its denial.

A court's order granting or denying a continuance will not generally be cognizable on appeal from the judgment unless the ruling also violated some other statute such as Pen C §1382 or caused demonstrable prejudice. See, e.g., Lee v Kemna (2002) 534 US 362, 151 L Ed 2d 820, 122 S Ct 877 (denial of continuance to obtain previously subpoenaed alibi witnesses may have infringed right to present defense).

§21.1 I. OVERVIEW

Peremptory challenges. Defense counsel and prosecutors may keep a judge, court commissioner, or referee from hearing, in any action or special proceeding, any matter that involves a contested issue of fact or law by challenging him or her under CCP §170.6. (This chapter will use "judge" to refer to all three triers of fact.) This type of challenge is usually called a peremptory challenge. Although counsel is required to allege that the judge is prejudiced against him or her or against the party represented by counsel, there is no requirement that prejudice be proven. Solberg v Superior Court (1977) 19 C3d 182, 193, 137 CR 460.

There are requirements concerning when a judge may be challenged under CCP §170.6:

- A judge may be challenged only if he or she has not determined a contested issue of fact relating to the merits of the case. CCP §170.6(a)(2). See §§21.11-21.12.
- If a case is assigned from a master calendar court to a trial court (for trial to begin on that day), the challenge must be made to the judge supervising the master calendar no later than the time the case is assigned for trial. CCP §170.6(a)(2).
- If the case is not assigned from a master calendar court, and the judge who is to hear the matter is known 10 calendar days before the date set for the trial or hearing, the challenge must be made at least 5 calendar days before the trial or hearing date. CCP §170.6(a)(2).
- When a case has been assigned to a particular judge for all purposes, peremptory challenge of that judge must be made within 10 calendar days after notice of the assignment or within 10 calendar days before the party's appearance in court, if the party has not yet appeared. CCP §170.6(a)(2). See also People v Hull (1991) 1 C4th 266, 2 CR2d 526. The challenge can be presented either to the presiding judge or to the assigned judge. CCP §170.6(a)(2). Otherwise, a challenge is timely if it is filed before the hearing begins. CCP §170.6(a)(2); Villarruel v Superior Court (1973) 35 CA3d 559, 110 CR 861.
- Only one peremptory challenge can be made in any one case. CCP §170.6(a)(3). When there are codefendants, only one challenge can be made for the combined codefendants unless the codefendants are able to make a factual showing that their interests are substantially adverse. Pappa v Superior Court (1960) 54 C2d 350, 353, 5 CR 703; Welch v Superior Court (1974) 41 CA3d 50, 53, 115 CR 729. Code of Civil Procedure §170.6(a)(2) has been amended to allow the party who files an appeal that results in reversal of a final judgment of the trial court to exercise a challenge even though that side had previously done so.

Counsel may exercise a peremptory challenge either in writing under penalty of perjury or orally under oath. CCP §170.6(a)(2). It does not have to be noticed. CCP §170.6(a)(2). It must be substantially in the form set out in CCP §170.6(a)(5). The motion is filed or presented to the judge being challenged or, when the case is assigned from a master calendar court, to the master calendar judge. Suggested language for an oral motion for peremptory disqualification of a judge is in §21.20.

Challenges for cause. Either the defense or the prosecution may challenge a judge, court commissioner, or referee for cause. See CCP §§170.1, 170.5(a). Challenges for cause must allege one or more of the grounds for disqualification listed in CCP §170.1. See CCP §170.3(c)(1). There is no limit to the number of challenges for cause that may be made in a case (see CCP §170.1), and no requirement that counsel use a peremptory challenge before exercising a challenge for cause (see CCP §170.6(b)).

A challenge for cause that states the basis for the disqualification must be in writing, verified, and filed with the clerk or presented to the court, and a copy served on all parties. CCP §170.3(c)(1). The judge alleged to be disqualified, or his or her clerk, must be personally served. CCP §170.3(c)(1). A copy of the motion is usually filed with the presiding judge. The motion should be filed as soon as the information on which the challenge is based is known. CCP §170.3(c)(1).

§21.2 II. CHART: DEADLINES

Action	Deadline	Authority
Peremptory Challenge:
Attorney moves to disqualify judge peremptorily.	(1) Must be made before judge has presided at proceeding involving determination of contested issues of fact relating to merits. (2) When case not assigned from master calendar court, and identity of judge is known 10 calendar days before date set for trial or hearing, motion must be made at least 5 calendar days before that date. (3) When case is placed on master calendar for assignment, motion must be made no later than time when case is assigned for trial or hearing. (4) If directed to trial of cause that has been "assigned to a judge for all purposes," motion must be made by party within 10 calendar days after notice of all-purpose assignment. Motion is made to assigned judge or presiding judge. If party has not appeared when notice issues, motion must be made within 10 calendar days after party appears. (5) In court authorized to have no more than one judge, motion must be made before expiration of 30 calendar days after defendant's or attorney's first appearance.	CCP §170.6(a)(2).
Challenge for Cause:
Judge disqualifies himself or herself.	Immediately on discovering facts leading to disqualification.	CCP §170.3.
Attorney moves to disqualify judge for cause.	Earliest practicable opportunity after discovery of facts constituting ground for disqualification.	CCP §170.3(c)(1).
Judge responds to attorney's motion to disqualify him or her for cause.	Within 10 calendar days after service of motion or filing, whichever is later, judge must file consent to disqualification, or verified answer.	CCP §170.3(c)(3).
Selecting judge to hear challenge for cause.	Parties have 5 calendar days after notification (presumably service) of judge's answer to agree on judge. If there is no agreement, judge is selected by Judicial Council chairperson.	CCP §170.3(c)(5).

III. PEREMPTORY DISQUALIFICATION

§21.3 A. Who Can Be Disqualified; Effect of Disqualification Under CCP §170.6

Who can be disqualified. A judge, court commissioner, or referee may be challenged peremptorily. CCP §170.6(a)(1). This chapter uses "judge" to refer to all three triers of fact.

A CCP §170.6 disqualification is expressly limited to superior court judges. CCP §170.6(a)(1). A CCP §170.6 disqualification does not apply to superior court judges serving as judges of the appellate division (CCP §170.7) or to justices in the courts of appeal or supreme court (Kaufman v Court of Appeal (1982) 31 C3d 933, 184 CR 302).

Effect of disqualification. It is unclear whether a CCP §170.6 disqualification motion deprives a judge of jurisdiction in the fundamental sense of eliminating the judge's authority over the parties or subject matter. Some cases have held that any action taken by a disqualified judge on a contested matter after a peremptory challenge properly made and supported is in excess of jurisdiction and void. Retes v Superior Court (1981) 122 CA3d 799, 807, 176 CR 160 (writ granted); In re Robert P. (1981) 121 CA3d 36, 43, 175 CR 252 (court's order sustaining petition against minor in juvenile proceeding void and reversed). More recent cases, however, have held that the disqualified judge's actions are not void for lack of jurisdiction, but are at most voidable, and, unless the issue is preserved by timely objection, the error is waived and cannot be raised on appeal. Stebbins v White (1987) 190 CA3d 769, 782, 235 CR 656 (defendant waived error by withdrawing his disqualification motion); In re Christian J. (1984) 155 CA3d 276, 278, 202 CR 54 (minor waived right to raise issue on appeal, having never moved to disqualify judge and having acquiesced in judge's exercise of jurisdiction when prosecutor's disqualification motion was denied).

A CCP §170.6 disqualification motion prevents a judge from hearing any contested matter, even if it involves only questions of law. See §§21.11-21.12 on what is considered a contested matter for purposes of §170.6. A judge disqualified under §170.6, however, may not be prevented from hearing uncontested matters. See Mezzetti v Superior Court (1979) 94 CA3d 987, 990, 156 CR 802 (§170.6 challenge does not disqualify judge from hearing uncontested matters when no ruling is required).

> Ø Note: Regardless of whether the complaining party waives the error, a judge proceeding with a case after being disqualified may be subject to discipline. See Wenger v Commission on Judicial Performance (1981) 29 C3d 615, 643, 175 CR 420.

§21.4 B. Who May Exercise Challenge; Grounds

Who may exercise challenge. Defense counsel, the defendant, or the prosecutor in a criminal case may disqualify a judge under CCP §170.6. A witness responding to a subpoena is not a party to the criminal case for purposes of §170.6 and therefore may not exercise a peremptory challenge. Avelar v Superior Court (1992) 7 CA4th 1270, 1274, 9 CR2d 536.

A party to a "special proceeding" is entitled to disqualify the judge under CCP §170.6. To qualify as a special proceeding for this purpose, the matter must be separate from, and not incidental to, the underlying action. 7 CA4th at 1275 (hearing on Pitchess motion is incidental to criminal case, so police department responding to subpoena duces tecum is not entitled to disqualify judge under §170.6). Special proceedings are limited to matters that were not actions or suits under the common law or equity practice. They are of statutory origin and provide new rights and remedies. Le Louis v Superior Court (1989) 209 CA3d 669, 678, 257 CR 458. The procedures governing issuance of search warrants, extradition, and disclosure of privileged medical records in Title 12 of the Penal Code (Pen C §§1473-1564) do not automatically qualify as special proceedings for purposes of peremptory challenges under §170.6 simply because Title 12 is titled "Special Proceedings of a Criminal Nature." Avelar v Superior Court (1992) 7 CA4th 1270, 1276, 9 CR2d 536. For example, an owner's motion under Pen C §1539 for return of property seized under a search warrant would be classified as a special proceeding if no criminal action were pending but would not be a special proceeding if it were an integral part of a pending action. 7 CA4th at 1277; People v Superior Court (Aquino) (1988) 201 CA3d 1346, 1349, 248 CR 50.

It is unclear whether a nonparty who is cited for contempt (e.g., for failing to comply with a subpoena) may file a peremptory challenge to the judge assigned to preside over the contempt hearing. Compare Bridges v Superior Court (1939) 14 C2d 464, 473, 94 P2d 983, rev'd on other grounds sub nom Bridges v California (1941) 314 US 252, 275, 86 L Ed 192, 210, 62 S Ct 190 (person charged in contempt proceedings under CCP §1212 may challenge the judge), and Avelar v Superior Court (1992) 7 CA4th 1270, 1279 n9, 9 CR2d 536 (nonparty cited for contempt is entitled to file peremptory challenge under CCP §170.6), with McClenny v Superior Court (1964) 60 C2d 677, 689, 36 CR 459 (indirect contempt proceeding against party to domestic relations action is continuation of action and is not separate special proceeding for purposes of CCP §170.6(a)(3), even if it subjects contemnor to criminal sanctions).

Grounds. Although a motion to disqualify a judge under CCP §170.6 is referred to as a "peremptory" challenge, it must be supported by a statement under oath or penalty of perjury that the movant believes the judge to be prejudiced against that person or attorney or the interests of that person or attorney and, therefore, that a fair and impartial trial or hearing cannot be had before that judge. CCP §170.6(a)(2). In Solberg v Superior Court (1977) 19 C3d 182, 137 CR 460, the supreme court upheld the constitutionality of §170.6 as applied to criminal proceedings, in particular upholding the prosecutor's right to peremptorily challenge a judge. While reaffirming its disapproval of the practice of "blanket challenges" used routinely to disqualify a particular judge because of judicial philosophy or prior rulings, the court held that the practice does not violate the statute. 19 C3d at 195. A prosecutor's peremptory challenge of a judge may be invalidated as a violation of equal protection, however, if it can be shown to be based on group bias. People v Superior Court (Williams) (1992) 8 CA4th 688, 708, 10 CR2d 873.

C. Number of Challenges

§21.5 1. One Motion for Each Side; Codefendants With Adverse Interests

A party or his or her attorney is usually entitled to only one peremptory challenge to disqualify a judge for prejudice in each case or special proceeding. CCP §170.6(a)(3). See overview of peremptory challenges in §21.1. This rule holds true even when the defendant is represented successively by different attorneys. See CCP §170.6(a)(3); Pappa v Superior Court (1960) 54 C2d 350, 5 CR 703; People v Eaker (1980) 100 CA3d 1007, 161 CR 417; People v Escobedo (1973) 35 CA3d 32, 40, 110 CR 550. On what constitutes a special proceeding, see §21.4.

When there is more than one party to a side, as when there are codefendants, only one motion for each side may be made unless counsel can demonstrate that the codefendants have substantially adverse interests. Pappa v Superior Court (1960) 54 C2d 350, 353, 5 CR 703; People v Eaker, supra. The fact that they are each represented by separate counsel is not conclusive. Pappa v Superior Court, supra. The burden is on the defendant seeking to exercise the additional challenge to show that his or her interests are substantially adverse to those of his or her codefendant. Pappa v Superior Court, supra.

A factual showing of adverse interest that meets Evidence Code requirements is required, e.g., through the use of affidavits or testimony. Welch v Superior Court (1974) 41 CA3d 50, 115 CR 729 (defense counsel's statements in points and authorities inadequate). See also People v Escobedo, supra.

Counsel's testimony is sufficient to establish that the interests of the defendant and codefendant are totally adverse. Avital v Superior Court (1981) 114 CA3d 297, 302, 170 CR 588 (writ granted on basis of attorney's declaration characterizing defendant's position as "I didn't do it but the codefendant did do it"). In determining what information to provide to the court, defense counsel may provide minimal information in a declaration, with an offer to reveal more details, if deemed necessary, at an in camera hearing. Avital v Superior Court, supra.

For discussion of strategy considerations for defense counsel in codefendant cases, see §21.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.6 2. One Motion in Any One Action

Ordinarily, a party or his or her attorney may not make more than one motion to disqualify under CCP §170.6 "in any one action or special proceeding." CCP §170.6(a)(3). A criminal action is defined as "the proceeding by which a party charged with a public offense is accused and brought to trial and punishment." Pen C §683. It includes a retrial brought after a mistrial (Pappa v Superior Court (1960) 54 C2d 350, 353, 5 CR 703) and a hearing on probation and sentence (People v Rojas (1963) 216 CA2d 819, 824, 31 CR 417). See overview of peremptory challenges in §21.1.

When, however, a prosecution is dismissed before trial, and the prosecutor refiles the charges, the refiled case is a new action. Thus, a peremptory challenge is appropriate, whether or not the defendant used a peremptory challenge before the dismissal. Paredes v Superior Court (1999) 77 CA4th 24, 91 CR2d 350 (case dismissed under Pen C §1382); Ziesmer v Superior Court (2003) 107 CA4th 360, 366, 132 CR2d 130 (indictment dismissed under Pen C §995). But see, e.g., Barnes v Superior Court (2002) 96 CA4th 631, 642, 117 CR2d 621 (under Pen C §1538.5(p), when judge grants suppression motion, prosecutor must relitigate renewed motion before same judge). On supplemental proceedings, see §21.18.

Exception. There is one statutory exception to the rule that a party is entitled to only one peremptory challenge in an action. When a trial court's decision or final judgment is reversed on appeal, the party who obtained relief may bring a peremptory challenge if the trial judge whose decision was reversed is assigned to conduct the new trial, even if that party has already filed a peremptory challenge in the case. CCP §170.6(a)(2). The motion must be made within 60 days after the party or the party's attorney has been notified of the assignment. CCP §170.6(a)(2).

It is unclear whether a criminal action has begun at the time of the preliminary hearing. The court in Le Louis v Superior Court (1989) 209 CA3d 669, 678, 257 CR 458, held that the preliminary hearing is part of the criminal action that includes the trial and therefore that a CCP §170.6 challenge made at the preliminary hearing is the "one motion" allowed under CCP §170.6(a)(3) for the entire case. In Flores v Superior Court (1991) 226 CA3d 797, 277 CR 90, however, in considering whether a §170.6 challenge was timely, the court held that the criminal proceeding did not begin when the complaint was filed; it began only when the information was filed in the superior court. The court's reasoning in Flores supports an argument that a challenge made to the preliminary hearing magistrate does not count; counsel still retains the right to a §170.6 challenge in superior court.

If a party substitutes counsel, the new attorney has no right to exercise a peremptory challenge if the first attorney has already done so. Pappa v Superior Court (1960) 54 C2d 350, 355, 5 CR 703.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Form, Notice, Content, and Proof of Motion

§21.7 1. Form and Notice of Oral and Written Motions

A motion to disqualify under CCP §170.6 may be oral or written and does not require notice. CCP §170.6(a)(2). If it is in writing, it must be in the form of an affidavit or declaration made under penalty of perjury. CCP §170.6(a)(2). If it is an oral statement, it must be made under oath, which means that counsel must be sworn before making the challenge. People v St. Andrew (1980) 101 CA3d 450, 456, 161 CR 634; CCP §170.6(a)(2). Counsel's statement that he or she is speaking under penalty of perjury, without being under oath, is insufficient. People v St. Andrew, supra. If an oral motion to disqualify a trier of fact is not made under oath, or accompanied by an affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury, it may be denied. People v Jones (1991) 53 C3d 1115, 1129, 282 CR 465.

See the suggested language for an oral peremptory challenge in §21.20. A sample peremptory challenge form is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §21.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.8 2. Content of Motion; No Proof Required

The content of a CCP §170.6 motion is sufficient if it states merely that the person making it believes that prejudice exists (even though it may not in fact exist), making a fair trial impossible. People v Rodgers (1975) 47 CA3d 992, 121 CR 346 (case reversed because motion improperly denied). No proof is required to support the affidavit, declaration, or statement of prejudice. CCP §170.6(a)(3). Belief in the judge's prejudice is asserted in writing under penalty of perjury, or under oath if made orally, and is assumed to be made in good faith. People v Rodgers, supra. Therefore, attorneys are not supposed to use peremptory challenges for delay or judge-shopping.

An affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury must be in substantially the form set out in CCP §170.6(a)(5). CCP §170.6(a)(5)-(6). An oral statement under oath must include substantially the same contents as the affidavit or declaration. CCP §170.6(a)(6); People v Jones (1991) 53 C3d 1115, 282 CR 465. "Substantial" compliance with §170.6(a)(5) was found in an affidavit that failed to state the place of execution (McCauley v Superior Court (1961) 190 CA2d 562, 12 CR 119) and in an unsigned declaration (Retes v Superior Court (1981) 122 CA3d 799, 807, 176 CR 160). Errors that did not substantially comply with §170.6(a)(5) included neglecting to name the judge who was challenged in the affidavit even though a later motion attempted to cure the omission (People v Kennedy (1967) 256 CA2d 755, 759, 64 CR 345) and making an oral request without mentioning bias (People v Boyden (1960) 181 CA2d 48, 4 CR 869).

When timely compliance with a formality may be made, the court should allow the correction. Retes v Superior Court, supra.

Once the motion is timely filed and in proper form, the trial court must accept it without further inquiry. Barrett v Superior Court (1999) 77 CA4th 1, 91 CR2d 116.

E. Time for Motion

§21.9 1. In General

A motion to disqualify a judge under CCP §170.6 is a pretrial motion. CCP §170.6(a)(2). The time period in which it must be made depends on the calendaring system in effect in the court in which the motion will be filed. CCP §170.6(a)(2). For discussion, see §§21.13-21.17. In addition, the motion must be made before the judge being challenged has presided at a proceeding involving a determination of contested issues of fact relating to the merits. CCP §170.6(a)(2). See discussion in §§21.11-21.12. There are also special rules that apply to supplemental proceedings (see §21.18) and to proceedings on retrial after reversal (see §21.18A).

A local rule of court that purports to impose different or additional limits on the time for making a §170.6 motion has no effect. Cal Rules of Ct 3.20. See Govt C §68070(a).

A judge's refusal to accept a peremptory disqualification must be challenged by a writ of mandate within 10 calendar days after service of written notice to the parties of entry of the court's order determining the question of disqualification. CCP §170.3(d); People v Hull (1991) 1 C4th 266, 276, 2 CR2d 526; People v Broxson (1991) 228 CA3d 977, 278 CR 917. See also §21.34.

§21.10 2. Trier of Fact Must Not Have Determined Contested Issue of Fact

Counsel may challenge a judge under CCP §170.6 only if the judge has not presided at a proceeding involving a determination of contested issues of fact relating to the merits. CCP §170.6(a)(2). It is not always clear, however, whether a judge's particular determination was a decision involving contested fact issues relating to the merits. See §§21.11-21.12 for examples.

§21.11 a. Examples: When Judge May Be Challenged Following Particular Judicial Determination

Courts in the following cases held that particular determinations or events did not involve contested factual issues relating to the merits and that it was therefore proper to allow the judge to be challenged under CCP §170.6 after the determination:

- Amended information. See People v Hunter (1977) 71 CA3d 634, 638 n2, 139 CR 560.
- Arraignment. Moreira v Superior Court (1989) 215 CA3d 42, 265 CR 437 (does not normally involve determination of contested issues of law or fact going to ultimate merits of action).
- Continuance motion. Los Angeles Dep't of Pub. Social Servs. v Superior Court (1977) 69 CA3d 407, 417, 138 CR 43. Note, however, that if a continuance is requested to try to circumvent the 10-day/5-day rule, a judge may deny the motion. People v Richard (1978) 85 CA3d 292, 298, 149 CR 344.
- Demurrer. Zdonek v Superior Court (1974) 38 CA3d 849, 113 CR 669, disapproved on other grounds in Woodman v Superior Court (1987) 196 CA3d 407, 241 CR 818.
- Hearing to determine competence of defense counsel. People v Whitfield (1986) 183 CA3d 299, 304, 228 CR 82.
- Denial of Pen C §995 motion. Kohn v Superior Court (1966) 239 CA2d 428, 48 CR 832. See also People v Superior Court (Cooper) (2003) 114 CA4th 713, 721, 7 CR3d 862.
- Pen C §1368 proceedings to determine defendant's competence to stand trial. Waldon v Superior Court (1987) 196 CA3d 809, 815, 241 CR 123.
- Discovery motion not related to merits of case. Swift v Superior Court (2009) 172 CA4th 878, 883, 91 CR3d 504 (civil case).
- Unsuccessful plea negotiations. It appears that a party can file a CCP §170.6 motion after the trial court has rejected a proposed plea agreement. People v Montalvo (1981) 117 CA3d 790, 796, 173 CR 51 (in determining whether to accept or reject proposed plea bargain, judge does not determine contested issues of fact; therefore, defendant's motion to disqualify judge who rejected proposed agreement was timely). See also Fraijo v Superior Court (1973) 34 CA3d 222, 225, 109 CR 909 (same). For further discussion, see §21.17A.
- Polygraph results shown judge. In re Jose S. (1978) 78 CA3d 619, 628, 144 CR 309.
- Summary revocation of probation. Depper v Superior Court (1999) 74 CA4th 15, 87 CR2d 563.

Ø Note: A judge should not honor a peremptory challenge in only one of two cases before him or her involving the same party; both should be granted to avoid the appearance of judicial impropriety. Woods v Superior Court (1987) 190 CA3d 885, 235 CR 687 (judge granted challenge in one of defendant's cases but denied challenge in case in which judge had heard contested issue of fact—a Pen C §1538.5 motion). On challenging judge after reversal on appeal, see §21.18A.

§21.12 b. Examples: When Judge May Not Be Challenged Following Particular Judicial Determination

In the following cases, the reviewing courts found that a determination of contested factual issues relating to the merits had been made by a particular judge, and therefore precluded that judicial officer from being challenged under CCP §170.6:

- On retrial after mistrial declared. People v Richard (1978) 85 CA3d 292, 149 CR 344.
- On relitigation of motion to suppress evidence after court has granted motion. Pen C §1538.5(p); People v Superior Court (Jimenez) (2002) 28 C4th 798, 806, 123 CR2d 31; Barnes v Superior Court (2002) 96 CA4th 631, 642, 117 CR2d 621; Woods v Superior Court (1987) 190 CA3d 885, 235 CR 687; In re Abdul Y. (1982) 130 CA3d 847, 851, 182 CR 146. See also People v Superior Court (Cooper) (2003) 114 CA4th 713, 718, 7 CR3d 862.
- After trial court has ruled on pretrial motion concerning admissibility of evidence. People v Bean (1988) 46 C3d 919, 948, 251 CR 467.
- After trial has begun. People v Richard, supra.
- When trial judge presides at probation revocation hearing. People v Barnfield (1975) 52 CA3d 210, 123 CR 859.

3. Determining Timeliness Under Different Calendaring Systems

§21.13 a. Rule When Case Assigned From Master Calendar

If a motion to disqualify a judge under CCP §170.6 is directed to a case that is on a master calendar for assignment to a trial court, the motion must be made to the judge supervising the master calendar no later than the time the case is assigned for trial, i.e., immediately on the announcement of the assignment. CCP §170.6(a)(2); see People v Wilks (1978) 21 C3d 460, 466, 146 CR 364; Moreira v Superior Court (1989) 215 CA3d 42, 265 CR 437.

Assignment for future trial from a master calendar department is not considered assignment from a master calendar for purposes of this rule. People v Superior Court (Lavi) (1993) 4 C4th 1164, 1175, 17 CR2d 815; People v Escobedo (1973) 35 CA3d 32, 110 CR 550; Villarruel v Superior Court (1973) 35 CA3d 559, 110 CR 861. See also Cal Rules of Ct 10.950-10.951. For the master calendar rule to apply, there must be an assignment of a trial-ready case to a ready courtroom. People v Superior Court (Lavi) (1993) 4 C4th 1164, 1177, 17 CR2d 815. The courtroom is considered "ready" if it is available or reasonably expected to become available shortly, e.g., by that afternoon if the assignment is made in the morning. 4 C4th at 1177 n8. If the assignment is not considered one from a master calendar, and the judge's identity is known 10 days before the trial date, the 10-day/5-day rule applies. See §21.15. For discussion of the rule when less than 10 days remain, see §21.17.

An exception applies when neither the attorney nor the client is in court when the case is assigned. When this circumstance occurs, counsel may challenge the judge as soon as he or she discovers the judge's identity. See People v Montalvo (1981) 117 CA3d 790, 794, 173 CR 51 (§170.6 affidavit cannot be required before identity of trial judge is known). Also, when counsel has been misled about the identity of the judge to whom he or she is being assigned, counsel should be permitted to execute a §170.6 challenge as soon as the actual judge's identity is known. People v Bonds (1988) 200 CA3d 1018, 1022, 248 CR 5.

Ø Note: In the Central District of the Los Angeles County Superior Court, the master calendar rule of CCP §170.6(a)(2) cannot be imposed against misdemeanor defendants whose cases are being transferred for trial from one "direct set" courtroom to another within the district. See Ruiz v Appellate Div. (2004) 119 CA4th 282, 292, 14 CR3d 190. Although Ruiz appears to be limited to Los Angeles County, the reasoning should apply to any county that has a similar calendaring system.

§21.14 b. Rule When Case Assigned to Judge for All Purposes

When a case is assigned to one judge "for all purposes," a CCP §170.6 challenge must be made to the assigned judge or the presiding judge within 10 calendar days after notice of the all-purpose assignment. CCP §170.6(a)(2). If a party has not yet appeared when the notice issues, however, the challenge may be made within 10 calendar days after counsel's first appearance in the case. CCP §170.6(a)(2). "Appearance" is probably defined as a general, not a special, appearance, because only the former submits the defendant to the court's jurisdiction. La Seigneurie U.S. Holdings, Inc. v Superior Court (1994) 29 CA4th 1500, 35 CR2d 175.

Counsel should evaluate whether the assignment is in fact an assignment to a judge for all purposes. The label used by the court does not necessarily control, although it is considered prima facie evidence. People v Superior Court (Lavi) (1993) 4 C4th 1164, 1179, 17 CR2d 815. Two prerequisites must be met for the assignment to qualify as an all-purpose assignment. First, it must immediately pinpoint which judge is expected to preside at the trial. 4 C4th at 1180. If the case is assigned to a numbered department but not a named judge, the judge will nonetheless be considered "pinpointed" if (a) a particular judge regularly presides in that department, (b) the judge's identity is either known to the challenger or discoverable on reasonable inquiry, and (c) there is reasonable certainty that the judge will ultimately hear the case, i.e., evidence is produced indicating that the case will likely remain in the department to which it was assigned. 4 C4th at 1180 n11.

The second prerequisite of an all-purpose assignment is that the judge be expected to process the entire case from the time of the assignment. 4 C4th at 1180. This does not mean that the assignment must be made at the very outset of the case; it can qualify as an assignment for all purposes if at the time of assignment substantial matters remain to be processed in addition to trial. 4 C4th at 1180 n12.

It is not clear at what point the 10 days begin to run in a felony case that begins with a complaint. Compare Flores v Superior Court (1991) 226 CA3d 797, 277 CR 90 (action did not commence and thus 10 days did not begin to run until information was filed in superior court), with Le Louis v Superior Court (1989) 209 CA3d 669, 257 CR 458 (preliminary hearing on felony complaint filed in municipal court is part of criminal action, and therefore §170.6 challenge made at preliminary hearing constitutes one motion allowed under CCP §170.6(a)(3) for entire case).

Courts cannot require counsel to follow the 10-days-after-assignment rule that applies to judges for all purposes when the assignment is in fact made only to a department and not to a particular judge. Reygoza v Superior Court (1991) 230 CA3d 514, 281 CR 390; People v Superior Court (Gonzales) (1991) 228 CA3d 1588, 279 CR 679.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.15 c. Rule When Case Neither Assigned From Master Calendar Nor Assigned to Judge for All Purposes (10-Day/5-Day Rule)

When a case is neither assigned from a master calendar to a trial court for the trial to begin shortly nor assigned to a judge for all purposes, and the judge who is to hear the matter is known 10 calendar days before the date set for the trial or hearing, a motion to disqualify under CCP §170.6 must be made at least 5 calendar days before the trial or hearing date. CCP §170.6(a)(2). This requirement is called the 10-day/5-day rule and cannot be superseded by local rule. Govt C §68070; People v Superior Court (Gonzales) (1991) 228 CA3d 1588, 279 CR 679. See also People v Superior Court (Lavi) (1993) 4 C4th 1164, 1173 n5, 17 CR2d 815.

When a case is assigned from a master calendar department to a trial department well in advance of the trial date, rather than on or immediately before the trial date itself, the 10-day/5-day rule applies, and not the master calendar provision discussed in §21.13. People v Superior Court (Lavi), supra.

For the 10-day/5-day rule to apply, the trial judge need not be known with absolute certainty 10 days before the trial date; there need only be a reasonable assurance that the judge assigned to the case will in fact hear the case. 4 C4th at 1183. If the assignment is made to a department of a court rather than to a specific judge, the 10-day/5-day rule may still be triggered if a particular judge regularly presides over that department. 4 C4th at 1186. The court distinguished the facts of Retes v Superior Court (1981) 122 CA3d 799, 176 CR 160, in which the record indicated that the judge of the assigned department frequently transferred cases initially assigned to him.

Authorities are divided on whether the 10-day/5-day rule is triggered when an assignment is made to a particular department of a court, but not to a particular known judge. Compare Mackey v Superior Court (1990) 221 CA3d 1124, 270 CR 905 (assignment to particular department not assignment to judge for all purposes; 10-day/5-day rule applies), and Reygoza v Superior Court (1991) 230 CA3d 514, 281 CR 390 (local rule to evade Mackey invalid under Govt C §68070), with Lawrence v Superior Court (1988) 206 CA3d 611, 617, 253 CR 748 (assignment to particular department triggers 10-day/5-day rule, even though case might later be transferred to different judge for trial), and Thomas Realty Co. v Superior Court (1988) 199 CA3d 91, 244 CR 733 (assignment to department same as to particular judge; court said, however, that if different judge there on trial date, and no previous §170.6 challenge, new judge can be challenged).

It is not always clear what effect a continuance has on the 10-day/5-day rule. The following cases held that a motion to disqualify may be filed 5 calendar days before the date to which a trial or hearing is continued: Zdonek v Superior Court (1974) 38 CA3d 849, 852, 113 CR 669, disapproved on other grounds in Woodman v Superior Court (1987) 196 CA3d 407, 241 CR 818; Woodman v Selvage (1968) 263 CA2d 390, 394, 69 CR 687; Eagle Maintenance & Supply Co. v Superior Court (1961) 196 CA2d 692, 16 CR 745. One case, People v Richard (1978) 85 CA3d 292, 149 CR 344, limited relief in this situation to good faith, good cause continuances.

For discussion of the history and purpose of the 10-day/5-day and master calendar rules, see People v Superior Court (Lavi), supra.

§21.16 d. Rule in One-Judge Courts

If the court in which an action is pending is authorized to have no more than one judge, CCP §170.6(a)(2) requires that the motion be made before the expiration of 30 calendar days after the date of the first appearance of the party or his or her attorney. The right to bring a peremptory challenge in this situation lapses 30 calendar days after the defendant's first appearance in court, whether or not defense counsel appears at that time. People v Superior Court (Smith) (1987) 190 CA3d 427, 235 CR 482.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.17 e. Rule in Other Cases

If a case does not fit within the master calendar rule, the one judge for all purposes rule, or the 10-day/5-day rule, the challenge must be made before any juror's name is drawn (CCP §170.6(a)(2); People v Eaker (1980) 100 CA3d 1007, 1016, 161 CR 417) or, if there is to be no jury, before the counsel for "plaintiff" makes an opening statement or, if no such statement is made, before any witness is sworn or any evidence is taken. CCP §170.6(a)(2). If the motion is directed to a hearing other than a trial of a cause, it must be made before the hearing begins. CCP §170.6(a)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.17A F. Availability of Motion in Case Involving Plea Bargain

As noted in §21.11, when the trial judge rejects a proposed plea agreement, the case remains in a pretrial posture, and a peremptory challenge that meets the other requirements of CCP §170.6(a)(2) (see §§21.13-21.17) is timely. People v Montalvo (1981) 117 CA3d 790, 796, 173 CR 51. This is true even when the trial court has initially accepted the proposed agreement. Fraijo v Superior Court (1973) 34 CA3d 222, 225, 109 CR 909. Entry of a guilty plea, however, is the functional equivalent of a trial. Smith v Municipal Court (1977) 71 CA3d 151, 153, 139 CR 121. Thus, in Smith, the court held that a CCP §170.6 motion made after the defendant had entered a plea in accordance with the agreement was untimely. The court distinguished Fraijo, explaining that, when the trial court rejects the proposed agreement, the case remains in a pretrial posture. See also People v Barnfield (1975) 52 CA3d 210, 123 CR 859.

Neither party, however, has the right to challenge the trial judge under §170.6(a)(2) when a case is remanded for resentencing after appeal. Peracchi v Superior Court (2003) 30 C4th 1245, 135 CR2d 639. See also People v Arbuckle (1978) 22 C3d 749, 150 CR 778 (implied term of plea bargain in which judge retains sentencing discretion is that defendant will be sentenced by judge who accepted plea).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.18 G. Availability of Motion in Supplemental Proceedings

A recurrent issue concerns the availability of a CCP §170.6 challenge at a supplemental proceeding. When the judge who presided at trial is charged with conducting a hearing that is "a part or a continuation of the original proceedings," a peremptory challenge will be deemed untimely. Jacobs v Superior Court (1959) 53 C2d 187, 190 1 CR 9. See also People v Barnfield (1975) 52 CA3d 210, 215, 123 CR 859 (probation revocation hearing is continuation of original proceeding). Thus, in Barnfield, the defendant's peremptory challenge was denied as untimely because the judge conducting the probation revocation hearing was the same judge who presided at the trial and the original sentencing hearing.

When, however, a new judge is assigned to the supplemental proceeding, a litigant who has not previously exercised a peremptory challenge in the case may challenge the judge. People v Smith (1961) 196 CA2d 854, 856, 859, 17 CR 330. See also Depper v Superior Court (1999) 74 CA4th 15, 87 CR2d 563.

Note, however, that when a case is dismissed and refiled, the refiled case is considered a new proceeding for §170.6 purposes. See People v Superior Court (Cooper) (2003) 114 CA4th 713, 721, 7 CR3d 862 (after case refiled, judge who granted first Pen C §995 motion could be disqualified from hearing second §995 motion); Ziesmer v Superior Court (2003) 107 CA4th 360, 366, 132 CR2d 130 (judge who granted §995 motion could be disqualified after case refiled, because original action terminated with dismissal); Paredes v Superior Court (1999) 77 CA4th 24, 91 CR2d 350 (dismissal under Pen C §1382 terminated case; defendant could use peremptory challenge in refiled action even though codefendant had already used peremptory challenge before dismissal).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.18A H. Availability of Motion in Retrial Following Reversal

A peremptory challenge may be made "following reversal on appeal of a trial court's decision, or following reversal on appeal of a trial court's final judgment, when the trial judge in the prior proceeding is assigned to conduct the new trial." CCP §170.6(a)(2). Case law construing §170.6(a)(2) has limited the availability of a postremand peremptory challenge to cases in which there is a remand for a new trial. Thus, in Peracchi v Superior Court (2003) 30 C4th 1245, 1258, 135 CR2d 639, the reviewing court held that no peremptory challenge was available when the sole task left for the trial court after remand was to resentence the defendant. The court in State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (2004) 121 CA4th 490, 503, 17 CR3d 146, held that the defendant was not entitled to issue a peremptory challenge against a judge whose ruling was invalidated in pretrial mandate proceedings. See also Geddes v Superior Court (2005) 126 CA4th 417, 423, 23 CR3d 857. The court in Burdusis v Superior Court (2005) 133 CA4th 88, 34 CR3d 575, held that no basis existed for a peremptory challenge when remand was simply to permit the trial court to consider the record in accordance with new precedent and when remand resulted from reversal of an order that neither addressed the merits nor terminated the action.

Even though a party is normally limited to one peremptory challenge in an action (see §21.6), the statute permits the prevailing party on appeal to bring a peremptory challenge against the trial judge even if that party has already exercised a CCP §170.6 challenge. The motion must be made within 60 days after the party or the party's attorney has been notified of the assignment. CCP §170.6(a)(2). This same rule applies to challenges made after remittitur from a writ proceeding. Overton v Superior Court (1994) 22 CA4th 112, 114, 27 CR2d 274.

On making the motion after charges have been refiled following dismissal, see Paredes v Superior Court (1999) 77 CA4th 24, 91 CR2d 350, discussed in §21.6.

§21.19 I. Availability of Motion in Juvenile and Civil Proceedings

A peremptory challenge for prejudice under CCP §170.6 is available in proceedings in juvenile court. People v Superior Court (Tony S.) (1975) 44 CA3d 904, 119 CR 125 (Welf & I C §602 case). Peremptory challenges are also available in civil cases. CCP §170.6(a)(1).

§21.20 J. Stating Peremptory Challenge in Court (Attorney)

The following statement is based on CCP §170.6(a)(5) and is made after the attorney is sworn, usually by the court clerk:

Your Honor, I certify under penalty of perjury that I do not believe _ _[my client]_ _ can receive a fair and impartial trial or hearing before _ _[you/_ _[state name of trier of fact]_ _]_ _ because of _ _[your/his/her]_ _ prejudice against _ _[me/him/her/his interest/her interest]_ _. Therefore, under Code of Civil Procedure §170.6, I ask the Court to reassign this case to another judge for _ _[state type of proceeding, e.g., trial]_ _.

A sample peremptory challenge form is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §21.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). Note also that the court may have a form to be used for the challenge.

K. Strategy Considerations

§21.21 1. Advantages

The biggest advantage of a CCP §170.6 challenge is that it does not require actual proof of bias or prejudice. See §21.8. The only requirement is an allegation of a good faith belief in prejudice. Solberg v Superior Court (1977) 19 C3d 182, 137 CR 460. A party's or a party's attorney's belief in prejudice is decisive, and there is usually no way to measure the sincerity of that belief.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.22 2. Disadvantages

The first disadvantage of a CCP §170.6 challenge is that there is no assurance that the next judge assigned to the case will be more "desirable," unless the only available alternatives are well known to counsel. See Solberg v Superior Court (1977) 19 C3d 182, 196, 137 CR 460. If counsel uses the challenge for a contested hearing before trial, counsel has no further §170.6 challenges left for the trial judge.

Second, in a single-judge court, disqualification may result in a significant delay until an outside judge is brought into the case. Disqualification may also result in a change in the place and date of trial.

Third, some judges take a §170.6 challenge personally; challenging such a judge may create ill feelings between the attorney and the judge.

Ø Note: Defense attorneys can take some of the sting out of challenging a judge by having the client act as the declarant. Another possible approach, if the judge is known sufficiently in advance, is for counsel to file a written motion with the clerk before the first appearance. Often this results in the clerk's transferring the matter, thereby avoiding in-court proceedings on the motion.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.23 3. Discovering Information About Judges

Information about judges is generally acquired through the experience of having appeared before them. Alternatively, there are some published sources of information on judges' backgrounds, e.g., Bogen, Thompson, & Smith, California Courts and Judges, James Publishing Co., ordering information at http://www.jamespublishing.com, and Judicial Profiles, Daily Journal Corp., ordering information at http://www.dailyjournal.com. LexisNexis and Westlaw can be used to search newspaper and magazine articles on the jurist, and an Internet search can be run using the judge's name. A search of published appellate cases in which a trial judge has been reversed or affirmed on appeal may also provide some insight. Reports of bar association committees on judicial evaluations may provide additional information, as may local criminal law practitioners.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.24 4. Judge's View of Peremptory Challenge (CCP §170.6)

Judges should be circumspect about any displeasure they feel at being challenged under CCP §170.6. An excessive reaction may be considered willful misconduct in office. McCartney v Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 C3d 512, 116 CR 260. Similarly, judges may not refuse to appoint the public defender to cases because of anger over blanket challenges by the public defender. Moreira v Superior Court (1989) 215 CA3d 42, 265 CR 437. The best way to handle peremptory challenges is to view them like peremptory challenges to jurors.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.25 5. Defense Considerations in Cases Involving Multiple Defendants

In a multidefendant proceeding, defense counsel should consider the following actions to avoid troublesome situations:

Agreeing on use of CCP §170.6 challenge. If more than one defendant appears in a case, only one §170.6 motion for each side is permitted unless the codefendants have substantially adverse interests. See discussion in §21.5. If one codefendant moves to disqualify a judge without the knowledge or consent of the other defendant, the burden is then on the defendant seeking to exercise an additional challenge to show that he or she has an adverse interest. This task may prove to be difficult or impossible. The problem may sometimes be circumvented if codefendants consult with each other before exercising a §170.6 challenge, so they can see whether it is possible to agree on how and when to exercise it.

Withdrawing CCP §170.6 motion. Occasionally, unknown to each other, both sides file simultaneous §170.6 motions. One party may wish to ask to withdraw its challenge and preserve it for later use. Some judges suggest that a unilateral withdrawal should not be permitted or, if the challenge is withdrawn, that the party's right to a §170.6 challenge should not be reinstated.

Arguing that challenge is no longer applicable, because case or party exercising challenge was dismissed. Even when the defendant who exercised a peremptory challenge is dismissed from the case before it is reassigned, the remaining defendants are unlikely to be successful in arguing either that the disqualified judge should be allowed to try the case or that their right to a §170.6 challenge should be reinstated. Unless the remaining defendant can show that his or her interests are adverse to the interests of the dismissed party (see §21.5), the dismissed party's motion will probably be treated as an exercise of the challenge for that side, and the judge will probably remain disqualified.

Arguing that the challenge was exercised before one defendant was a party. Counsel for a late-appearing defendant may argue that the challenge for the defense was exercised before he or she even became a party. Even in this situation, reinstatement of the right to a §170.6 challenge requires a showing that the newly joined defendant has adverse interests. See §21.5.

§21.26 6. Tactical Timing of Motion

In multijudge courts, it is important to consider at what point before trial the motion should be exercised. For example, if a case is to be decided at a suppression hearing and the judge assigned to the hearing is notoriously biased against such motions, it would be wise to consider challenging that judge under CCP §170.6.

It is unclear whether the time for making a peremptory challenge in a felony case begins with the filing of a complaint or the filing of the information. See discussion in §21.14.

IV. DISQUALIFICATION FOR CAUSE

§21.27 A. Who Can Be Disqualified; Grounds; Exceptions

A judge, court commissioner, or referee can be challenged for cause. See CCP §§170.1, 170.5. Juvenile court judges and referees may also be challenged for cause. In re Arthur S. (1991) 228 CA3d 814, 279 CR 69. The following discussion uses "judge" to refer to all three triers of fact.

Code of Civil Procedure §170.1(a) specifies the following grounds for disqualification of a judge for cause in any matter:

- The judge has personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts concerning the proceeding. CCP §170.1(a)(1).
- The judge has been counsel for any party or has given advice to any party on matters involved in the present action, or in any previous action involving any of the same issues. CCP §170.1(a)(2). Whether a particular proceeding is part of an earlier action is a question of fact that counsel making the challenge must address. In re Steven O. (1991) 229 CA3d 46, 279 CR 868 (referee disqualified from hearing probation revocation because he was district attorney in underlying case); In re Arthur S., supra (proceeding deemed new Welf & I C §602 petition, not supplemental petition). When at issue, counsel must show that the judge actually participated in the disqualifying action. People v Peralez (1971) 14 CA3d 368, 92 CR 256 (former district attorney not disqualified, because evidence showed no actual participation in defendant's previous case).

Ø Note: A judge who served as a lawyer for a public agency that is a party to the proceeding is deemed to have served as a lawyer in the proceeding if he or she personally advised or in any way represented the agency concerning the factual or legal issues in the proceeding. CCP §170.1(a)(2)(C).

- The judge has a financial interest in the subject matter of the case or in a party to the case. CCP §170.1(a)(3). See also CCP §170.5(b) (defines financial interest).
- The judge, the judge's spouse, a person within the third degree of relationship to either of them (see CCP §170.5(d)), or the spouse of such a person is a party to the proceeding, or is an officer, director, or trustee of a party. CCP §170.1(a)(4).
- The judge or judge's spouse is related in a specified way to a lawyer or spouse of a lawyer in the proceeding or to someone associated in the private practice of law with one of the lawyers in the proceeding. CCP §170.1(a)(5). See also CCP §170.5(e) (defines private practice of law).
- The judge believes that his or her recusal would further the interests of justice, the judge believes that there is a substantial doubt concerning his or her capacity to be impartial, or a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt concerning the judge's ability to be impartial. CCP §170.1(a)(6). See In re Scott (1991) 52 C3d 968, 277 CR 201 (judge, a cocaine user, should have recused himself from case in which defendant had sold him cocaine); People v Enriquez (2008) 160 CA4th 230, 244, 72 CR3d 718 (judge's comments gave rise to reasonable doubt as to whether he could be impartial in case); Sincavage v Superior Court (1996) 42 CA4th 224, 49 CR2d 615 (when judge in three-strikes case was active in prosecution of defendant's prior felonies and had stated earlier that she would recuse herself if she learned that was so, a person knowing these facts might reasonably doubt her impartiality on matters involving priors); In re Steven O. (1991) 229 CA3d 46, 279 CR 868 (judge pro tem was district attorney in underlying case; issue waived because no objection in trial court). But see People v Chatman (2006) 38 C4th 344, 42 CR3d 621 (mere fact that judge's daughter had been robbed at knifepoint many years earlier did not by itself support doubt of judge's ability to be impartial in similar criminal case; judges' widely varying experiences and backgrounds not directly related to case do not disqualify judges except in extreme circumstances).

Ø Note: Potential bias and prejudice in a challenge for cause must be clearly established by an objective standard. When making a challenge for cause, counsel must clearly articulate the potential bias and prejudice. The result seems to turn on the specific facts of each case.

- There is evidence of bias or prejudice toward a lawyer in the proceeding. CCP §170.1(a)(6). See discussion of bias in People v Carter (2005) 36 C4th 1215, 32 CR3d 838; Pacific & S.W. Annual Conf. of United Methodist Church v Superior Court (1978) 82 CA3d 72, 86, 147 CR 44.
- The judge is unable to properly perceive the evidence or properly conduct the proceedings because of permanent or temporary physical impairment. CCP §170.1(a)(7).
- The judge was the trier of fact; he or she may not participate in any appellate review of the case. CCP §170.1(b).
- The judge has served or has prospective employment as a dispute resolution neutral with a party to the proceeding. CCP §170.1(a)(8).

An appellate court, on its own or a party's motion, may direct that trial court proceedings after appellate review of a case be heard by a different judge from the one whose judgment or order was reviewed by the court. CCP §170.1(c). See People v Gulbrandsen (1989) 209 CA3d 1547, 1562, 258 CR 75 (rule stated, but no showing that application of §170.1(c) was required).

A judge may not be challenged for cause because he or she does not belong to the same group, e.g., race or religion, as the challenging party (CCP §170.2(a)), or because the judge has expressed a view on the legal or factual issues involved in the case (CCP §170.2(b)). A judge cannot be disqualified for having helped draft or pass a statute being interpreted or applied unless the judge believes that his or her previous involvement with the statute was so well known that it would raise a reasonable doubt of the judge's capacity to be impartial. CCP §170.2(c).

An attorney does not have to use his or her peremptory challenge before challenging a trier of fact for cause. See CCP §170.6(b); Pacific & S.W. Annual Conf. of United Methodist Church v Superior Court (1978) 82 CA3d 72, 80, 147 CR 44.

Only one challenge for cause in a case may be filed by a party against a particular judge unless that party learns of new grounds for disqualification. CCP §170.4(c)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.28 B. Statement of Disqualification (Challenge for Cause)

Judges may disqualify themselves from hearing a case and must notify the presiding judge of their recusal. CCP §170.3(a)(1). If a judge does not disqualify himself or herself from hearing a case, the attorney for any party to the action may challenge the judge under CCP §170.1. The challenge must be made at the earliest practicable opportunity after counsel or the parties discover the facts constituting grounds for disqualification. CCP §170.3(c)(1). See Alhusainy v Superior Court (2006) 143 CA4th 385, 394, 48 CR3d 914 (16-day delay made motion untimely). Disqualification must be alleged in a written verified statement that objects to a named judge hearing any issue of fact or law in the action or proceeding, and that sets out the facts that support disqualification. CCP §170.3(c)(1). Counsel must personally serve the judge alleged to be disqualified, or his or her clerk, and must immediately serve a copy on all parties or their attorneys. Counsel should not state mere conclusions, or refer to a large transcript without citing to a specific page and line. In re Morelli (1970) 11 CA3d 819, 843, 91 CR 72, and cases cited.

It is not a ground for challenge that a judge appears adverse to one of the parties if that attitude is based on actual observation of the evidence. Kreling v Superior Court (1944) 25 C2d 305, 312, 153 P2d 734. See also CCP §170.2(b).

The procedure and manner of filing a statement of disqualification should be strictly followed to avoid an inadvertent waiver. For example, counsel should be sure to verify the statement of disqualification. Compare Bompensiero v Superior Court (1955) 44 C2d 178, 183, 281 P2d 250 (statement stricken in its entirety because unverified), with Hollingsworth v Superior Court (1987) 191 CA3d 22, 236 CR 193 (substance of attorney's declaration, made under penalty of perjury, held sufficient to excuse lack of verification).

Ø Note: Counsel should bear in mind that if the challenged judge contests the disqualification, the judge who decides the question will not be required to hold an evidentiary hearing and may decide solely on the basis of documents already filed. CCP §170.3(c)(6). See §21.33. Therefore, it is incumbent on counsel to include the entire evidentiary basis for the challenge in the original papers rather than waiting to ascertain how the trial judge will defend before fleshing out the challenge.

§21.29 C. Possible Responses by Judge Being Challenged

A challenged judge may respond in one of three ways:

- File a written verified answer admitting or denying the allegations and setting forth any additional information relevant to disqualification. CCP §170.3(c)(3);
- File a consent to the disqualification and notify the presiding judge to appoint a replacement. CCP §170.3(c)(3); or
- Strike the statement of disqualification on the ground that it was untimely filed or discloses no legal grounds for disqualification. CCP §170.4(b).

A judge who wishes to file a consent or an answer must do so within 10 calendar days after service or filing of the challenge, whichever is later. CCP §170.3(c)(3). The judge's power to strike the statement as legally insufficient must be exercised within the same 10-day period. Lewis v Superior Court (1988) 198 CA3d 1101, 1104, 244 CR 328. Failure to respond to the charge or strike the statement of disqualification within the 10 days allowed for an answer is treated as a consent. CCP §170.3(c)(4); Lewis v Superior Court, supra.

Although §170.4(b) allows a judge to strike a statement of disqualification that was untimely filed, it is unclear what constitutes an untimely challenge for cause. The only guideline appears to be the language in CCP §170.3(c)(1) that the statement is to be presented "at the earliest practicable opportunity after discovery of the facts constituting the ground for disqualification."

Trial judges frequently respond to a challenge for cause by simply striking it as untimely or as failing to state grounds for disqualification under CCP §170.4(b). Neither the procedure by which the challenged judge determines the sufficiency of the challenge nor the underlying issue of bias may be reviewed on appeal. Because the procedure can be challenged only by a prompt petition for writ of mandate (see §21.34), counsel must be prepared to pursue writ remedies through the California Supreme Court in order to preserve any federal constitutional questions concerning bias for federal habeas corpus proceedings in the future. See chap 45 on federal habeas corpus. The clerk must send a copy of any statement or consent to all parties who have appeared in the action or proceeding, or to their attorneys. CCP §170.3(c)(3).

> Ø Note: When a judge finds that the ground for disqualification is not based on the judge's personal bias against a party, earlier participation in the case as an attorney, or status as a material witness in the case, the judge can ask the parties to waive the disqualification. CCP §170.3(b)(1).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.30 D. Powers of Judge Either Disqualified or Being Challenged

When a statement of disqualification is filed, the judge loses authority to make orders or take other actions in the case, except those specified in CCP §170.4, until the question of disqualification has been decided. CCP §170.4(d). A challenged or disqualified judge may:

- Take any action necessary to maintain the court's jurisdiction until another judge is assigned. CCP §170.4(a)(1).
- Request another judge agreed on by the parties to act in the judge's place. CCP §170.4(a)(2).
- Hear and determine default matters. CCP §170.4(a)(3).
- In eminent domain matters, issue an order for possession before judgment. CCP §170.4(a)(4).
- Set proceedings for trial or hearing. CCP §170.4(a)(5).
- Conduct a settlement conference. CCP §170.4(a)(6).
- Strike the statement of disqualification as untimely or legally insufficient. CCP §170.4(b).
- Continue to preside over a hearing or trial that began before the statement of disqualification was filed. CCP §170.4(c).

Ø Note: For purposes of CCP §170.4(c), the trial or hearing is considered to have begun after the start of voir dire, the swearing of the first witness, or the submission of a motion for decision. In this situation, the challenged judge may continue to hear the matter but must refer the disqualification issue to another judge for decision in the meantime. See §21.31. If the challenged judge is ultimately disqualified, all orders and rulings in the case made after the challenge was made must be vacated. CCP §170.4(c)(1).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.31 E. Procedure After Challenge for Cause and Any Response Filed

All questions about a judge's disqualification are to be heard and determined by some other judge agreed on by the parties or, if there is no agreement within 5 calendar days after the challenged judge's answer, by a judge selected by the Judicial Council chairperson. CCP §170.3(c)(5).

A judge who is disqualified, despite the disqualification, can ask the judge who has been agreed on by the parties to sit in his or her place. CCP §170.4(a)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.32 F. Waiving Disqualification; Exceptions

The parties and their attorneys may stipulate to waive any disqualification unless the basis for the disqualification is (1) the judge's personal bias or prejudice against a party; (2) that the judge was an attorney in the case; or (3) that the judge was a material witness in the case. CCP §170.3(b)(2).

A stipulation waiving disqualification of a judge must state the basis for the disqualification, be signed by the parties and their attorneys, and be filed with the court. CCP §170.3(b)(1). The court may then proceed with the performance of all duties connected with the case with the same legal effect as if no disqualification existed. See CCP §170.3(b)(1).

Judges are not to try to induce a waiver, nor to try to discover which parties favored or opposed a waiver, but they may ask the parties if they wish to waive the disqualification. CCP §170.3(b)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.33 G. Hearing on Challenge for Cause

There is no absolute right to an evidentiary hearing on a motion to disqualify a judge. Garcia v Superior Court (1984) 156 CA3d 670, 680, 203 CR 290, disapproved on other grounds in People v Jenkins (1987) 196 CA3d 394, 241 CR 827. The judge hearing the motion may decide the question on the basis of the motion papers and such written arguments as the judge requests. CCP §170.3(c)(6). If a hearing is granted, the court must hear argument but is required to take evidence only if a party shows good cause for taking evidence. CCP §170.3(c)(6).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.34 V. REVIEW OF DISQUALIFICATION ORDER

Review of orders concerning both peremptory challenges and challenges for cause can be accomplished only by a petition for writ of mandate, filed within 10 calendar days after service of written notice of entry of the court's order determining the question of disqualification. CCP §170.3(d); People v Hull (1991) 1 C4th 266, 276, 2 CR2d 526 (§170.3(d) applies to both peremptory challenges and challenges for cause). People v Webb (1993) 6 C4th 494, 24 CR2d 779. These orders are not appealable. CCP §170.3(d). See People v Carter (2005) 36 C4th 1215, 1243, 32 CR3d 838.

Ø Note: Although a disqualification order is not appealable, the inherent authority vested in the trial court to reconsider its own rulings may allow another judge of the court to correct an erroneous grant of a disqualification motion even when the original judge has no authority to vacate the erroneously granted order. See Geddes v Superior Court (2005) 126 CA4th 417, 425, 23 CR3d 857 (civil case). Furthermore, in the interests of justice under CCP §170.1(c), an appellate court on its own motion may direct that further proceedings be heard by a trial judge other than the judge who issued the order being reviewed. See, e.g., Alhusainy v Superior Court (2006) 143 CA4th 385, 48 CR3d 914. Only the parties to the proceeding may seek review of an order concerning a challenge. CCP §170.3(d). The prosecution is a party that may seek such review. Flier v Superior Court (1994) 23 CA4th 165, 169, 28 CR2d 383.

For further discussion of the use of writ petitions to review disqualification issues, see Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases §7.24 (3d ed Cal CEB 2007).

§22.1 I. OVERVIEW

The prosecution usually presents eyewitness identification testimony as extremely reliable—the linchpin in determining the admissibility of identification testimony. See U.S. v Field (9th Cir 1980) 625 F2d 862. The defense is most likely to take a view more in keeping with that of Justice Felix Frankfurter in his book The Case of Sacco and Vanzetti (1927): "What is the worth of identification testimony even when uncontradicted? The identification of strangers is proverbially untrustworthy." In particular, when an eyewitness's identification of a stranger is based on a single, quick encounter, the witness's level of certainty about the identification may not always correlate to the accuracy of the identification. People v Alvarado (2006) 141 CA4th 1577, 1585, 47 CR3d 289 (citing this text). Everyone agrees that accurate eyewitness identifications both help to ensure that the innocent are not convicted and assist law enforcement in the timely and proper investigation of a crime.

It has long been recognized that a variety of circumstances can undermine the reliability of eyewitness identifications. As early as 1957, research showed that when an event is unexpected, an identification may be less reliable. See Bruner, On Perceptual Readiness, 64 Psych Rev 123 (1957); Burtt, Applied Psychology (1957). Likewise, strong emotions experienced either at the time of the observation or later when reporting the observation tend to increase the probability of error. See Anastasi, Fields of Applied Psychology (1964). Even when initial perceptions are good, the memory begins a rapid decline. See Clifford, The Relevance of Psychological Investigation to Legal Issues in Testimony and Identification, 1979 Crim L Rev 153 (1979).

As a result of these and other findings, extensive attention has been devoted to the reliability of eyewitness identification by both social scientists and law enforcement. For example, in 1999 and 2003, the National Institute of Justice, the research branch of the U.S. Department of Justice, issued reports that recognize nearly 20 years of psychological research that reveal "investigators' unintentional clues… negatively impact the reliability of eyewitness evidence." These same reports also discuss the merits of using "blind lineup" procedures in order to promote "reliability, fairness, and objectivity." See U.S. Dept. of Justice, Eyewitness Evidence: A Guide for Law Enforcement (1999), available at http://www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/nij/178240.pdf, and U.S. Department of Justice, Eyewitness Evidence: A Trainer's Manual for Law Enforcement (2003), available at http://www.innocenceproject.org/docs/NIJ%20training%20manual.pdf.

§22.2 II. TERMS

Eyewitness identifications can be made at or near the crime scene or can be made later through the viewing of photographs or at an in-person lineup organized by law enforcement. The terms "lineup," "photo ID," and "showup" will be used as follows in this chapter:

- Lineup. A police identification procedure by which the suspect in a crime is exhibited, along with others with similar physical characteristics, before a victim or witness to see whether the suspect can be identified. To be valid, the lineup must meet certain standards and be free of undue suggestiveness. U.S. v Wade (1967) 388 US 218, 18 L Ed 2d 1149, 87 S Ct 1926.
- Photo ID. A procedure in which a photo of the suspect is shown to the witness for identification. The witness may either view a single photograph to confirm the identity of the suspect or select the suspect from a series of photographs of different individuals. Often "photo showup," "photographic lineup," "six-pack," "mug run," "photo spread," or "mug book" are used to describe this identification procedure.
- Showup. An in-the-field identification procedure as a result of exigent circumstances in which one or more suspects are exhibited to victims or witnesses. It is generally conducted close to the time and location of the incident, but is inherently suggestive.

III. IDENTIFICATION PROCEEDINGS

A. Lineups

§22.3 1. Description of Lineups

Lineups are generally held by the local police agency at a police station or jail. The number of individual lineups held at any one session varies from one jurisdiction to another. Generally, lineups take place in a special viewing area with some barrier to prevent the lineup subjects from viewing the witnesses. The barrier may be one-way glass, lighting, screens, a peephole, or a combination of those things. The number of subjects in any lineup varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, but is normally from four to ten, with six being the most common number. The number and quality (similarity) of the subjects may be limited by the size of the custody population, since they are normally selected from the jail inmate population. Small jail populations create problems for law enforcement in obtaining enough subjects similar to the suspect for a legally sufficient lineup; therefore, many investigative agencies now conduct their lineups at large county jails in metropolitan areas. (The Los Angeles Police Department uses the Los Angeles County Jail, which is run by the Los Angeles Sheriff's Department, for its lineups.)

The subjects in a lineup are usually presented to the witness all at once. They may file onto the stage from a side entrance or become visible when a curtain opens or when the stage area is illuminated. At that time the subjects are often asked to turn, stopping at the four points of the compass, and to walk the length of the viewing area so that they present all profiles to the witnesses. The subjects may be asked to repeat certain words or phrases used during the commission of the crime (People v Neely (1999) 70 CA4th 767, 789, 82 CR2d 886; Garcia v Superior Court (1991) 1 CA4th 979, 2 CR2d 707), or to try on a certain item of clothing, such as a jacket or hat (People v Stanton (1969) 274 CA2d 13, 78 CR 771). The purpose of such try-ons is to simulate the appearance of the person who committed the crime and not to see if the clothing or object fits one of the people in the lineup. If one participant in the lineup is asked to do a particular thing, all subjects should be asked to do the same thing.

The theory of the lineup is that, by providing a closed environment with a number of similar choices, a fair identification can be obtained. Efforts are made to eliminate any suggestion of influence based on anything other than the view by the witness. Keeping this concept in mind may help the attorney anticipate and eliminate a situation that could cause problems.

§22.4 2. Right to Counsel at Lineup

Defendants are entitled to counsel at a lineup or showup after the indictment or after the accusatory pleading has been filed. U.S. v Wade (1967) 388 US 218, 18 L Ed 2d 1149, 87 S Ct 1926; Gilbert v California (1967) 388 US 263, 18 L Ed 2d 1178, 87 S Ct 1951. Under Wade-Gilbert, testimony by a witness who identified the accused at a lineup or showup that was held in violation of the right to counsel is inadmissible per se.

Defendants also have the right to counsel at precharging lineups. People v Bustamante (1981) 30 C3d 88, 177 CR 576. This is true despite passage of Cal Const art I, §24, part of Proposition 115, which declares that the California Constitution no longer provides a basis independent of the U.S. Constitution for the right to counsel. The court in Raven v Deukmejian (1990) 52 C3d 336, 276 CR 326, held art I, §24 to be an invalid revision of the California Constitution, and specifically cited Bustamante as a still-viable example of independent state grounds.

Despite Bustamante, evidence of identification at a preindictment lineup cannot be excluded on the ground that the defendant did not have counsel. Federal law controls on the issue of exclusion of evidence, and federal law allows exclusion only when a defendant was denied counsel at a lineup following indictment. See Kirby v Illinois (1972) 406 US 682, 32 L Ed 2d 411, 92 S Ct 1877 (states federal rule); People v Cook (2007) 40 C4th 1334, 1353, 58 CR3d 340; People v Johnson (1992) 3 C4th 1183, 1222, 14 CR2d 702. If counsel was not present, the remedy is a civil action for violation of a state constitutional right. If no advice was given on the right to counsel or if the right to counsel was denied and the suspect refused to participate in the lineup, the question arises whether the prosecution can be barred from using that refusal as evidence of guilt.

> Ø Note: The defendant can waive the right to counsel at a lineup. U.S. v Wade (1967) 388 US 218, 236, 18 L Ed 2d 1149, 1162, 87 S Ct 1926; People v Wells (1971) 14 CA3d 348, 354, 92 CR 191 (describing effective waiver). However, merely informing the defendant of his right to have counsel present at the lineup is insufficient to support a waiver of that right unless he is also told that an attorney will be appointed if he cannot afford one. A Miranda warning during interrogation, before the lineup, will not support a waiver of the right to counsel at the lineup. See People v Banks (1970) 2 C3d 127, 134, 84 CR 367. The defendant need not be informed of the obvious purpose of a lineup to make an effective waiver of the right to counsel. People v Tribble (1971) 4 C3d 826, 94 CR 613.

§22.5 3. Advantages of Fair Lineup

A fair lineup represents the earliest, cheapest, and best way of protecting an innocent person. If the result of the lineup is a "no-ID" or a "mis-ID," it is possible that no charges will be filed. The prosecution has a strong interest in seeing that innocent people are not accused of a crime or held in jail. Misidentification also compromises the ability of law enforcement to properly investigate a crime, by both delaying the pursuit of truth and injecting a tone of unreliability into the investigation process.

When the suspect may be guilty, the prosecution wants to build the strongest possible case. An identification based on a fairly conducted lineup helps put any identification issue to rest. The prosecution enjoys a further benefit from a lineup in that it will often solidify the witness's recall of the events of the crime if the lineup participant is in fact identified.

4. What Defense Counsel Should Do at Lineup

§22.6 a. Theory of Representation at Lineups; What to Bring

There are two divergent theories of how a defense attorney should approach a lineup; commentators disagree on which is better. One calls for the attorney to merely observe and take no action or make any objection to the lineup, in the hope of obtaining a tainted lineup, and then having the identification excluded at trial. The California Supreme Court, in People v Bustamante (1981) 30 C3d 88, 99 n7, 177 CR 576, overruled on other grounds based on Proposition 8 in People v Johnson (1992) 3 C4th 1183, 1222, 14 CR2d 702, adopted language from Justice Mosk's dissent in People v Williams (1971) 3 C3d 853, 860, 92 CR 6, that supports this choice: "At most, defense counsel is merely present at the lineup to silently observe and to later recall his observations for purposes of cross-examination or to act in the capacity of a witness." This holding from Bustamante was cited as controlling in People v Wimberly (1992) 5 CA4th 773, 786, 7 CR2d 152.

The other theory calls for the attorney to object to any errors he or she believes are occurring. See People v Stearns (1971) 14 CA3d 178, 183, 92 CR 69 ("It is an idle gesture to give to a defendant the right to the presence of counsel at this stage of the criminal proceeding and not to require such counsel to take affirmative action at that time to protect the rights of the accused"). For example, this ensures that law enforcement officials at the lineup do not attempt to use undue influence by making statements such as, "Doesn't number 4 look familiar to you?" Although U.S. v Wade (1967) 388 US 218, 18 L Ed 2d 1149, 87 S Ct 1926, discussed in §22.4, did not expressly define the role of defense counsel at a lineup, the court did indicate that counsel was required to assure meaningful confrontation and eliminate risks of abuse and unintentional suggestion, to prevent unfairness, and to preserve the defendant's basic right to a fair trial. If counsel is prevented from taking an active role, steps should be taken to preserve the Wade rationale. When objecting to the lineup procedure, counsel should clearly state (preferably in writing) any objections to the manner in which the lineup is conducted. Even if, after objection, the officers conducting the lineup refuse to make any changes to any aspect of the lineup process, putting objections on the record may be helpful at a later hearing to suppress any identification. The argument in favor of this theory of defense attorney participation at lineups is that, whether a client is guilty or innocent, the fairer the lineup, the better the chance that the client will not be identified. Both the People and the defense are better served by a fair lineup that genuinely tests the witness's recollection. On what defense counsel can do to help ensure a fair lineup, see discussion in §22.12.

Whichever approach is selected, counsel must be prepared to attend lineups on very short notice. Counsel should have a lineup folder in his or her briefcase that has everything needed: a summary of case law concerning lineups (such as a copy of this chapter), a seating chart, a characteristics chart, a sheet with choices for eyewitnesses to mark at the lineup, carbon paper, pens and pencils, and blank paper. See §22.13. A blank piece of paper with the typed caption "Lineup Objection" will add credibility to any written objection made at the lineup, and provide for a better presentation if a motion to suppress an identification is made later. Bringing a camera with high-speed film or a videotape camera, if permitted, can also assist in providing a record of what occurred in jurisdictions that do not routinely photograph lineups.

§22.7 b. Lineup Team

It is preferable for counsel to bring at least one other person to lineups who can be a credible witness. The ideal person is either another lawyer or an investigator, but paralegals and law students are also possible candidates. The use of another person is most important in providing a witness to describe the event should a description be needed for any motions or at trial, or to photograph or videotape the lineup. Neither the defendant nor the attorney should be placed in the position of becoming a witness. See §2.18 on the attorney as witness.

c. Activities Before Lineup Begins

§22.8 (1) In General

Defense counsel should arrive as early as possible (at least 1 hour early is recommended), sign in, note the arrival time, and contact the officer conducting the lineup (usually the investigating officer). If the lineup is being held before charges are filed, it provides an excellent opportunity for defense counsel to find out information from the investigating officer that may provide insight into issues or problems, and how seriously the police regard the client as a suspect. Also, the investigating officer may be able to tell counsel whether a prosecutor will be attending the lineup and may provide copies of police and crime reports, or at least give him or her the opportunity to read them.

It is absolutely imperative that counsel, whenever possible, speak to the client and prepare him or her for the lineup experience. The client will be nervous and everything possible should be done to eliminate the unexpected for the client.

There may also be time to do the following:

- Observe the witness or witnesses as they arrive, noting their physical and mental condition and with whom they arrive (e.g., with a police officer, another witness) while correlating their name(s), physical appearance(s), and seating position(s);
- Have an investigator speak with each witness, write down the information, and ask the witness to sign it;
- Meet and speak with the prosecutor; and
- Observe the relationship between the witness and police.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.9 (2) Procedure if Counsel Will Be Late in Arriving

If counsel will be delayed in arriving, he or she should make every effort to contact the police or the prosecutor to explain the reason for the delay, let law enforcement know that counsel represents the client and wishes to be present for the lineup, and give an estimated time of arrival. Otherwise, the lineup may be held in counsel's absence.

Counsel should obtain the name and phone number of the person spoken to. The police are required to wait a reasonable amount of time before beginning a lineup without counsel. People v Keim (1970) 8 CA3d 776, 87 CR 597 (starting lineup after waiting only half an hour was reversible error).

Ø Note: What constitutes a "reasonable delay" was not explained in Keim. Defense counsel's best course is good communication with law enforcement at the location where the lineup is being held and documentation of all interactions with law enforcement before the beginning of the lineup.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.10 (3) Interviewing Client

If counsel is called by the accused before the lineup, or is able to interview the accused before the lineup takes place, counsel should tell him or her to consent to booking, including a face photograph and fingerprints. These procedures are not covered by the privilege against self-incrimination because they are considered noncommunicative. See Schmerber v California (1966) 384 US 757, 764, 16 L Ed 2d 908, 916, 86 S Ct 1826. The client should be told not to talk to anyone about the crime, and not to talk to the police or consent to any other police procedure without having defense counsel present. Defense counsel should then call the jail and talk to the watch captain, if possible. Counsel should tell the person spoken to that counsel is representing the defendant and does not want the police to talk to him or her and does not want any type of identification procedure conducted without counsel present. Counsel should write down the name and phone number of the person spoken to, and, depending on the jurisdiction, may want to send or have delivered a written confirmation of that conversation.

The chances of speaking with the accused are much greater if counsel arrives at least 1 hour before the scheduled lineup. Counsel who is able to interview the client before the lineup should discuss the lineup and advise the defendant to be natural and, most of all, listen to the officer's instructions. If the client does not speak English, counsel should arrange for all instructions to be given in the defendant's language as well as English; counsel should instruct the client to wait for the full translation before following any instruction.

Counsel should ask if the client has any injuries that might need to be covered during a lineup, e.g., a limp, bandage, or scar. If the client is wearing the clothes in which he or she was arrested, counsel should ensure that the client is allowed to change into jail clothing like that of the other lineup subjects. See People v Floyd (1970) 1 C3d 694, 83 CR 608, disapproved on other grounds in People v Wheeler (1978) 22 C3d 258, 287 n36, 148 CR 890 (not unfair to force defendant to wear pants in which he was arrested in lineup, because they did not make him stand out).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.11 (4) Client's Refusal to Participate in Lineup

If the client is considering not participating in the lineup, counsel should advise him or her that a refusal is admissible at trial. People v Johnson (1992) 3 C4th 1183, 1221, 14 CR2d 702. See also People v Carter (1972) 26 CA3d 862, 103 CR 327 (defendant's volunteered statement that he did not want to participate in lineup was admissible at trial even though he eventually did participate).

A suspect may be required to do things such as move or gesture, stand in front of a witness, model clothing, or speak for the purpose of a voice sample. The privileges in the federal and state constitutions in the Fifth Amendment and Cal Const art I, §15, do not apply, because they protect a person only from being forced to testify on criminal matters and do not bar the use of a person's physical attributes as evidence against the person. See People v Williams (1977) 68 CA3d 36, 137 CR 70; In re Marshall K. (1970) 14 CA3d 94, 92 CR 39.

§22.12 (5) Defense Counsel's Actions to Help Ensure Fair Lineup

Counsel should observe and note everything that occurs at the lineup. If a prosecutor is present, counsel should discuss identification procedures with him or her. If not, counsel should see the investigating officer. In some counties, one officer conducts all lineups.

Defense counsel should read over the admonition and identification slip that will be given to the witness, and ask the prosecutor to substitute counsel's previously prepared form if the standard one used by law enforcement is unfair, e.g., does not give the witness the option of positively stating that a participant in the lineup is not the person responsible for the crime. Most important, counsel should establish before the actual lineup whether multiple witnesses will attend. If so, counsel must assure that there are no opportunities for any witness to influence any other possible identification during the course of the lineup(s).

If defense counsel's verbal request for a change in the lineup is refused, counsel must ensure that both police and the prosecutor will remember the objection. To accomplish this, counsel should always have paper, a pen, and carbon paper, and should write out the verbal request that was refused and ask the police or prosecutor to sign it. If they refuse, counsel should note that fact on the paper, including the names of the people who refused. Copies should be given to the police and prosecutor at that time.

If counsel is given the opportunity to view the lineup before it is seen by witnesses, and counsel determines to try to make the lineup as fair as possible, he or she should actively make recommendations for changes when necessary.

> Ø Note: Because prevailing law holds that counsel is a mere observer at lineups (see People v Wimberly (1992) 5 CA4th 773, 7 CR2d 152), diplomacy and tact, not legalese and an overbearing attitude, are likely to be most helpful to the client.

Defense counsel should strive for the least amount of disparity possible between the appearance of lineup participants. Some of the possible factors to consider include the following:

Singling out individuals. Any action that takes place on the stage should be done equally by all participants. This includes trying on clothes, movement, and statements. Special care must be exercised if a witness requests that certain participants repeat some action or take some new action; all members of the lineup should do the same thing.

Language. Lineup participants who do not understand English will find it impossible to obey instructions on stage. Also, if the lineup participants are to repeat certain words, then participants must be selected who are similar not only in appearance, but also in voice. For example, although six people are similar looking, if the perpetrator of the crime has a New York accent, and only one of six lineup participants has a New York accent, it is not hard to conclude who will be picked from the lineup.

Clothing and objects. All try-ons should be conducted before the lineup begins to be sure the clothes or accessories fit properly.

All participants should be dressed the same. This does not mean that a witness may not identify clothing, only that a person should not be in the clothing when it is identified. By placing the clothing on a hanger, it can be presented to the witness.

It is preferable that participants in a lineup be in jail clothing because street clothes can create an outside influence that may unfairly affect the lineup. This is particularly true when the prime suspect is the only participant dressed in clothing similar to that worn by the perpetrator.

> Ø Note: Case law is not favorable to the defense on the need for similarity of clothing, so it is important for defense counsel to step in and try to make sure the participants are dressed in a similar way. Examples of convictions that were upheld despite great disparities in clothing are In re Robert W. (1977) 68 CA3d 705, 710, 137 CR 558 (although court criticized lineup, in which defendant was forced to wear victim's coat, which he was wearing when arrested, conviction not reversed); People v McDaniels (1972) 25 CA3d 708, 102 CR 444 (defendant was only one in lineup wearing same color shirt as perpetrator; no error); People v Thomas (1970) 5 CA3d 889, 86 CR 97 (suspect was barefoot and wore tattered blue denim shirt; two other participants wore white and black pants with cummerbund; final two wore "dirty street clothing"; lineups were not "unnecessarily suggestive"); People v Stanton (1969) 274 CA2d 13, 15, 78 CR 771 (defendant, who was bare-chested before lineup, was required to wear green shirt that robber had worn during holdup; no error).

Height. Great disparity in height may result in reversal. See Foster v California (1969) 394 US 440, 22 L Ed 2d 402, 89 S Ct 1127 (error based in part on six-foot suspect in line with five-foot-five and five-foot-six persons). There are ways of trying to equalize height. For example, in People v DeSantis (1992) 2 C4th 1198, 9 CR2d 628, the defendant was asked to stand on books so that his five-foot-four-inch height was somewhat similar to the height of the other participants. The court had no trouble with this procedure because the witness could not see the books.

Race. The courts frequently find error when a defendant stands out in a lineup because of race. See, e.g., People v Carpenter (1997) 15 C4th 312, 366, 63 CR2d 1; People v Caruso (1968) 68 C2d 183, 65 CR 336 (defendant was only large, dark Italian-American male with wavy hair); People v Hogan (1968) 264 CA2d 254, 70 CR 448 (defendant was only African-American in lineup).

Unusual physical characteristics. Unique problems arise when a suspect is at the extreme end of any characteristic, such as when the suspect weighs 300 pounds or has a heavily scarred face. Attorneys should attempt to anticipate those problems and seek unique solutions. One method is to conceal the unique item from the witness's view. Clothing, hats, and tape can be used to conceal many unique features. Another method is to try to find lineup participants who are similar.

§22.13 d. Defense Counsel's Activities During Lineup

Once the procedures for the lineup are fixed, defense counsel has two main areas of concern: the subjects in the lineup and the witnesses to the lineup. Of the two, it is usually more important for counsel to observe the witnesses than to observe the subjects in the lineup, because either the police will photograph or videotape the lineup, or counsel can have someone do it. A sample lineup characteristics chart is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §22.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). Counsel should find out ahead of time whether the police will photograph or videotape the lineup and, if not, arrange for another person to be present to do that. Counsel must ensure ahead of time that the police will allow the defense to photograph the lineup; if not, a court order should be requested.

There are a great many time pressures at a lineup. Things may be going very slowly when suddenly 15 witnesses arrive and counsel cannot keep track of what occurs in a short time. There are several devices that can help counsel save time in recording objections and observations. This is true whether counsel is alone or accompanied by an assistant.

Counsel should bring a piece of paper set up like a seating chart, with a box for each witness's seat. Each witness's name and a brief physical description can be written in the square representing where each witness is sitting. Be sure to write down whether the witness wears glasses, contact lenses, or a hearing aid.

Counsel should also bring a "characteristics chart" that has numbered places across the top for each person who will appear in the lineup, and a list of general physical characteristics down the left. Typical characteristics are hair color, hair style, skin color, eye color, height, age, distinguishing marks, special features, and voice. In this way, counsel can go down the list and record a complete description of the subjects in less time than starting from scratch. Room should be left on the chart to record any unusual occurrences during the lineup, such as someone turning left when told to turn right, laughing, grinning, etc.

Counsel should watch the witness(es) as each member of the lineup is asked to move or speak, and write down if the witness makes any entries on the identification sheet, when those entries are made, and any hesitation or erasures. Counsel should write down any attempt by a witness to communicate with anyone else before completing the identification form.

§22.14 e. Defense Counsel's Activities After Lineup

It is crucial for counsel to be present at any post-lineup conference between police investigators and witnesses. Some investigating agencies make it common practice to ask witnesses questions about their identification or lack of identification of the defendant at the conclusion of the lineup. Defense counsel has the right to be present while this questioning occurs and can ask that the lineup identification be suppressed if counsel is not allowed to be present. People v Williams (1971) 3 C3d 853, 92 CR 6 (conviction reversed because defense counsel was excluded from immediate post-lineup police interrogation of witness). Compare Williams with People v Carpenter (1999) 21 C4th 1016, 90 CR2d 607 (identifications admissible; although counsel was excluded from post-lineup interviews, trial court could have credited detective's testimony that witnesses marked identification cards during lineup). Suppression of the lineup identification because of infringement of the right to counsel does not mean, however, that the witness will not be allowed to identify the defendant in court. An in-court identification will be allowed unless it was tainted by unduly suggestive and unnecessary lineup procedures. Manson v Brathwaite (1977) 432 US 98, 114, 53 L Ed 2d 140, 97 S Ct 2243; People v DeSantis (1992) 2 C4th 1198, 9 CR2d 628.

Ø Note: Counsel does not have the right to be present at interviews conducted after witnesses have left. People v Mitcham (1992) 1 C4th 1027, 5 CR2d 230; People v Williams (1971) 3 C3d 853, 857, 92 CR 6.

To be entitled to be present at a post-lineup police interview with a witness, defense counsel must ask to be present. People v Perkins (1986) 184 CA3d 583, 591, 229 CR 219 (after defense counsel left, deputy questioned victim who had failed to make identification; no error because defense counsel made no request to be present if such a session were held).

Counsel may wish to find out what factors the witness considered in making or not making an identification; how sure the witness is of the identification, e.g., on a scale of 1-100; if the witness was shown photographs before the lineup; and what the police told the witness about who would be in the lineup.

The person conducting the lineup may provide defense counsel with copies of relevant lineup evidence, e.g., any written identification card filled out by the witness. Counsel should provide the police investigator with a self-addressed stamped envelope to ensure that items that must be photocopied will later be sent to counsel. See the sample witness identification sheet in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §22.2 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

Once any post-lineup witness interviews are completed, counsel should see the client and tell him or her the results of the lineup. Then counsel should prepare a report summarizing what occurred. It should include the seating chart, the characteristics chart, and any additional information that was not written on them because of time constraints. All notes made at the lineup should be attached. Counsel should review any problems or errors in conducting the lineup and any attempts to correct those errors. Copies of material provided by the police or prosecutor, or objections or material given to them by defense counsel, should also be included. If counsel interviewed the client, or attempted to interview the client, that fact should be included. Notes from the actual interview with the client should be kept separate from other ID information because they are work product and not discoverable if defense counsel is called as a witness to the identification proceeding.

It is not unusual for defense counsel who attended a lineup to be called as a witness. Counsel should keep this in mind when preparing the lineup report, and make sure that it will be intelligible in several months or even years.

The prosecution is not required to hold a physical lineup before holding a photographic lineup when the defendant is in custody. People v Rist (1976) 16 C3d 211, 217 n5, 127 CR 457.

In challenging the fairness of a photographic lineup, the burden is on the defendant to show that the lineup was so impermissibly suggestive "as to give rise to a very substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification" and deprive him or her of due process. Simmons v U.S. (1968) 390 US 377, 382, 19 L Ed 2d 1247, 1252, 88 S Ct 967. See also People v Avila (2009) 46 C4th 680, 700, 94 CR3d 699. The unfairness must be a demonstrable reality, not merely speculation. People v DeSantis (1992) 2 C4th 1198, 1222, 9 CR2d 628. If the lineup is held to be fair, evidence of it is admissible. If the court finds the identification procedure suggestive, evidence of the identification itself may still be admitted if the trial court finds that it is reliable under the "totality of the circumstances." Manson v Brathwaite (1977) 432 US 98, 110, 53 L Ed 2d 140, 151, 97 S Ct 2243. A procedure that is unfair suggests the identity of the person in advance of identification by the witness. People v Brandon (1995) 32 CA4th 1033, 1052, 38 CR2d 751; People v Sanders (1990) 51 C3d 471, 508, 273 CR 537; People v Hernandez (1988) 204 CA3d 639, 251 CR 393. The factors to be considered include:

- The opportunity of the witness to view the criminal at the time of the crime;
- The witness's degree of attention;
- The accuracy of the witness's prior description of the criminal;
- The level of certainty demonstrated at the confrontation; and
- The time between the crime and the confrontation.

To be weighed against these factors is the corrupting effect of the suggestive identification. Manson v Brathwaite (1977) 432 US 98, 114, 53 L Ed 2d 140, 154, 97 S Ct 2243. See People v Alvarado (2006) 141 CA4th 1577, 1585, 47 CR3d 289 (when eyewitness identification of stranger is based on single, quick encounter, witness's level of certainty about identification may not correlate to accuracy of that identification; citing this text).

It is preferable for multiple photos to be of the same type, e.g., all black and white or all color, all front view rather than one front and the rest side view, and all of the same size, not one photo of the defendant and five of a different size of others. However, failure to comply does not necessarily make the identification procedure too suggestive. People v Holt (1972) 28 CA3d 343, 104 CR 572, disapproved on other grounds in Evans v Superior Court (1974) 11 C3d 617, 625 n6, 114 CR 121. The other men or women in a photo lineup do not need to be nearly identical in appearance to the defendant. People v Brandon (1995) 32 CA4th 1033, 1052, 38 CR2d 751. A photo lineup is sufficiently neutral if the persons in the photos are similar in age, complexion, physical features, and build, and if the photo of the accused does not stand out. People v Holt, supra. See, e.g., U.S. v Beck (9th Cir 2005) 418 F3d 1008, 1012 (photo spread not impermissibly suggestive when all six pictures were of Caucasian males in same age range, with similar skin, eye, and hair coloring; each photo depicted a subject wearing distinctive glasses; four of six photos showed men with similar length hair, with two having somewhat shorter hair, and all except one were clean-shaven). The wearing of an item of apparel of the same color as that recalled by the witness does not by itself make a lineup unduly suggestive. People v DeSantis (1992) 2 C4th 1198, 1223, 9 CR2d 628. There should be no more than one picture of the defendant in the group. People v Citrino (1970) 11 CA3d 778, 90 CR 80. But see People v Wimberly (1992) 5 CA4th 773, 789, 7 CR2d 152 (sets of photographs each containing picture of defendant not impermissibly suggestive). When the photograph of the defendant was the only photograph among six that bore a name and an identification number directly below his picture, the effect was "plainly suggestive" and contributed to an impermissibly suggestive and prejudicial photo array. People v Carlos (2006) 138 CA4th 907, 912, 41 CR3d 873.

Single photo identifications are less reliable than those involving multiple photos. Compare People v Evans (1952) 39 C2d 242, 252, 246 P2d 636 (conviction reversed because victim's identification of defendant was based on suggestive questioning by police, single photo of defendant was shown, and defendant physically showed up; evidence was closely balanced), with People v Greene (1973) 34 CA3d 622, 646, 110 CR 160 (under circumstances of case, single photo identification not so impermissibly suggestive as to taint witness's courtroom identification of defendant as a matter of law), and People v Hernandez (1988) 204 CA3d 639, 251 CR 393 (tentative identification of defendant wearing hat in single photo admissible after tentative identification of defendant in multiphoto spread).

A recent approach gaining credibility in the research literature is the sequential presentation of photographs or even live lineups. While not required in California, sequential, as opposed to simultaneous, presentation can deter the eyewitness from making a "relative judgment," i.e., selecting from among those shown the person who most closely resembles the witness's memory of the perpetrator. A sequential presentation is more likely to allow a witness to assess the resemblance of each person against his or her memory of the perpetrator. Wells, et al., Eyewitness Identification Procedures: Recommendations for Lineups and Photo Spreads, 22 Law & Human Behavior 603 (1998).

Permitting a victim or witness to view a videotape of a crime in progress before seeing a photo lineup is not so suggestive that it violates due process. People v Ingle (1986) 178 CA3d 505, 513, 223 CR 723 (video was independent evidence of identity, and image of suspect was not conclusive on issue of identity). When a video or surveillance photo is unclear, or the defendant's appearance has changed between the time of the crime and the trial, opinion testimony of persons having personal knowledge of the defendant's appearance at or before the time of the crime is permissible. People v Mixon (1982) 129 CA3d 118, 131, 180 CR 772. See Evid C §800(a).

An in-court identification of a defendant from a single photograph is "no more impermissibly suggestive than an in-court identification with the defendant personally sitting at the defense table in the courtroom." People v Yonko (1987) 196 CA3d 1005, 1008, 242 CR 269 (defendant "voluntarily absented himself" from trial; victim had previously identified defendant at preliminary hearing; ID of defendant from single photo not unduly suggestive).

Prosecutors should preserve the photographs shown to a witness. See People v Hawkins (1970) 7 CA3d 117, 86 CR 428 (preservation of photo spread presumed), and the format and order of presentation. The opportunity for defense counsel to view the photographs at a later date and to be able to demonstrate at trial the potential for error is necessary to adequately safeguard the rights of the accused. People v Rist (1976) 16 C3d 211, 127 CR 457. The defense should request this information through discovery. When a photo lineup is negligently lost or destroyed, identification based on the photo lineup is subject to suppression if the witness has no adequate independent recollection of the defendant from the time the crime occurred. People v Ratliff (1986) 41 C3d 675, 690, 224 CR 705.

§22.16 C. One-Person Showups

When a suspect is quickly apprehended, law enforcement may either bring victims or witnesses to the location to view the suspect or bring the detainee back to where the victims or witnesses are located. This is done both to eliminate possible suspects and to make identifications while the details of the crime are fresh in the minds of the victims and witnesses. Safeguards required at photo IDs or lineups are not required at showups.

One-person showups are also called "cold shows" and in-the-field, one-person identifications. They normally occur close in time and location to the arrest and are permitted as an expeditious method of exonerating persons detained near the crime scene. See People v Rodriguez (1987) 196 CA3d 1041, 1049, 242 CR 386. Although a showup and the more formal lineup are similar, they serve different, though related, functions and involve different considerations. People v Dampier (1984) 159 CA3d 709, 712, 205 CR 728.

There is no right to counsel at one-person showups held promptly between witnesses and a suspect who is apprehended at or near the scene of the crime. In re Richard W. (1979) 91 CA3d 960, 971, 155 CR 11.

To detain a suspect for a showup, the officer must reasonably believe that some activity out of the ordinary was occurring or about to occur, and that the suspect was connected with the activity. The officer's suspicions must be objectively reasonable. People v Rodriguez (1987) 196 CA3d 1041, 1047, 242 CR 386.

Police cannot transport a person to the scene of the crime or another location to be identified if there is no probable cause to believe that he or she is the person responsible. People v Harris (1975) 15 C3d 384, 389, 124 CR 536. The "transportation detention" impermissibly intrudes on the detainee's constitutional rights because "ordinarily there exist less intrusive and more reasonable alternatives to pre-arrest transportation." 15 C3d at 391. There are exceptions in which transportation is reasonable. See, e.g., In re Carlos M. (1990) 220 CA3d 372, 383, 269 CR 447 (transportation of two rape suspects to hospital where victim was being treated was reasonable in circumstances, and identification was not impermissibly suggestive); People v Courtney (1970) 11 CA3d 1185, 1191, 90 CR 370 (officer transported suspect to station for investigation because of hostile crowd).

In determining whether a showup was impermissibly suggestive, the burden of proof is on the defendant to show that under the "totality of the circumstances" (Stovall v Denno (1967) 388 US 293, 302, 18 L Ed 2d 1199, 1206, 87 S Ct 1967), the showup gave rise to "a very substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification" (Simmons v U.S. (1968) 390 US 377, 384, 19 L Ed 2d 1247, 1253, 88 S Ct 967; People v Johnson (1989) 210 CA3d 316, 322, 258 CR 347). Factors to be considered when determining whether a showup was impermissibly suggestive include (Neil v Biggers (1972) 409 US 188, 199, 34 L Ed 2d 401, 411, 93 S Ct 375; People v Cowger (1988) 202 CA3d 1066, 1072, 249 CR 240):

- The witness's opportunity to observe the suspect at the time of the crime;
- The witness's degree of attention;
- The accuracy of the witness's description of the suspect;
- The certainty shown by the witness at the confrontation; and
- The length of time between the crime and the confrontation.

Whether a showup has been held "promptly" after the commission of a crime depends on the circumstances. Compare People v Nash (1982) 129 CA3d 513, 517, 181 CR 145 (showup conducted 20 hours after crime reasonable under circumstances), with People v Bisogni (1971) 4 C3d 582, 586, 94 CR 164 (single-person showup of codefendant at station conducted many months after robbery unfair under circumstances; defendant's conviction reversed because of prejudicial effect on his alibi defense).

Occasionally, more than one suspect may be presented in the same showup. There is no requirement that the other persons closely resemble the defendant. People v Rodriguez (1987) 196 CA3d 1041, 1049, 242 CR 386. However, defense counsel must be careful to determine if multiple victims or witnesses were allowed to identify the suspect at the same time.

Defense counsel should be aware that an in-court identification of the defendant made at a preliminary hearing or at trial with no prior out-of-court identification is the equivalent of a showup, particularly when the defendant is in jail clothing, and seated next to defense counsel. If there has been no identification proceeding, and identity is at issue, defense counsel should consider requesting a defense lineup before the preliminary hearing. See the discussion in §22.17. But see People v Harris (1985) 175 CA3d 944, 958, 221 CR 321 (trial counsel's failure to object to courtroom identification of defendant when no prior lineup had been held not ineffective assistance of counsel; witness was familiar with and had seen defendant on prior occasions). When a defendant is first identified in a lineup and then identified in a single-person showup, the procedure is less suggestive than when the reverse occurs. People v Eaton (1969) 275 CA2d 584, 80 CR 192 (three codefendants first identified in lineup while in jail clothing, and later ID'd in showup of three suspects while in civilian clothes); People v Fields (1969) 271 CA2d 500, 76 CR 358.

Ø Note: The spontaneous viewing of a defendant in the back of a patrol car did not taint an in-court identification in People v Johnson (1989) 210 CA3d 316, 322, 258 CR 347. The victim-witness had, before the spontaneous viewing, provided a description that matched the defendant perfectly.

§22.17 D. Defense (Evans) Lineups

As indicated, defense counsel may request a lineup. A defense-requested lineup will be ordered if good cause is established. Evans v Superior Court (1974) 11 C3d 617, 114 CR 121. See People v Williams (1997) 16 C4th 153, 235, 66 CR2d 123. A sample Evans motion is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §22.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

Defense counsel must show three necessary elements in the Evans motion:

(1) That the motion is timely (it should be made as soon after the arrest or arraignment as possible; an Evans motion made just before trial will probably be denied);

(2) That the eyewitness identification is a material issue; and

(3) That there is a reasonable likelihood of a mistaken identification, which a lineup would tend to resolve.

A defendant, however, is not entitled to a lineup as a matter of right. The need for a lineup will be balanced against the burden imposed by the lineup on the prosecution, the police, the court, and the witnesses. Evans v Superior Court (1974) 11 C3d 617, 625, 114 CR 121. See People v Underwood (1983) 139 CA3d 906, 911, 189 CR 105.

Whether to seek an Evans lineup is a difficult tactical decision and, therefore, counsel's to make. People v Blomdahl (1993) 16 CA4th 1242, 1248, 20 CR2d 491. It must be made early in the case, before all the facts are known and discovery is completed, and usually before the preliminary hearing. Counsel must weigh the possible benefits against the dangers. The following are some of the areas to consider:

- Factual and legal guilt of the client;
- Strength of the prosecution's case;
- Possibility that the police or prosecutor will subsequently hold a lineup; and
- Differences in a client's appearance from the description.

An Evans lineup is conducted by court order. Defense counsel may request that the order include special instructions on the way the lineup is conducted. Either party can object that the proposed lineup will be impermissibly suggestive.

If the defendant requests an Evans lineup, but then refuses to participate in it, the prosecution can request a jury instruction at trial on efforts to suppress evidence. CALCRIM 371; see also CALJIC 2.06. See People v Johnson (1992) 3 C4th 1183, 1235, 14 CR2d 702. There will probably be no error on appeal based on incompetence of counsel for defendant's failure to participate. People v Harmon (1989) 215 CA3d 552, 263 CR 623. If the defendant does not request an Evans lineup, the prosecutor may refer to that lack in questioning and argument. People v Lewis (2004) 117 CA4th 246, 249, 12 CR3d 1. In Lewis, the defendant opened the door to such comment by pointing out alleged deficiencies in the police lineups and photo lineups. 117 CA4th at 257. If a defendant has not opened the door and identity has not been seriously contested, the failure to request a lineup is not material and reference to such a failure could be found to be prejudicial. The People can compel a voice lineup; therefore, the defense is also entitled to a court-compelled voice lineup. Garcia v Superior Court (1991) 1 CA4th 979, 986, 2 CR2d 707. See also Cal Const art I, §30(c) (discovery is reciprocal). Voice lineups are discussed in §22.20.

§22.18 E. Identification Secured or Improved Through Hypnosis

The testimony of a witness, other than the defendant, who has undergone pretrial hypnosis for the purpose of recalling events that are the subject of the witness's testimony is inadmissible under People v Shirley (1982) 31 C3d 18, 181 CR 243, unless it meets the following conditions (Evid C §795):

(1) The testimony is limited to those matters that the witness recalled and related prior to the hypnosis.

(2) The substance of the prehypnotic memory was preserved in a writing, audio recording, or video recording prior to the hypnosis.

(3) The hypnosis was conducted in accordance with all the following procedures:

(A) A written record was made prior to hypnosis documenting the subject's description of the event, and information that was provided to the hypnotist concerning the subject matter of the hypnosis.

(B) The subject gave informed consent to the hypnosis.

(C) The hypnosis session, including the pre- and post-hypnosis interviews, was video recorded for subsequent review.

(D) The hypnosis was performed by a licensed medical doctor, psychologist, licensed clinical social worker, or a licensed marriage and family therapist experienced in the use of hypnosis and independent of and not in the presence of law enforcement, the prosecution, or the defense.

(4) Prior to admission of the testimony, the court holds a hearing pursuant to Section 402 at which the proponent of the evidence proves by clear and convincing evidence that the hypnosis did not so affect the witness as to render the witness's prehypnosis recollection unreliable or to substantially impair the ability to cross-examine the witness concerning the witness's prehypnosis recollection. At the hearing, each side shall have the right to present expert testimony and to cross-examine witnesses.

Ø Note: Neither the rule of exclusion adopted in Shirley nor the procedural requirements of Evid C §795 apply to defendants. 31 C3d at 67; People v Aguilar (1990) 218 CA3d 1556, 1565, 267 CR 879, disapproved on other grounds in People v Ervin (2000) 22 C4th 48, 90, 91 CR2d 623. See Rock v Arkansas (1987) 483 US 44, 97 L Ed 2d 37, 107 S Ct 2704 (blanket rule excluding testimony of hypnotized defendant violates Fifth Amendment).

The basis for the decision in Shirley was People v Kelly (1976) 17 C3d 24, 130 CR 144, which bars the introduction of evidence based on novel scientific techniques unless they have gained general acceptance in the relevant scientific community. The Kelly rule survived the adoption of the truth-in-evidence provision of the California Constitution (People v Harris (1989) 47 C3d 1047, 1093, 255 CR 352) and continues to set the standard for the admission of scientific evidence in California. People v Leahy (1994) 8 C4th 587, 599, 34 CR2d 663. Thus, it appears that the Shirley rule still bars the admission of posthypnosis testimony that does not meet the requirements of Evid C §795.

A witness who has undergone hypnosis is not barred from testifying about topics that are completely unrelated to the subject of the hypnosis. People v Shirley (1982) 31 C3d 18, 67, 181 CR 243. Nor is the witness barred from testifying about events recalled and related before the hypnotic session. People v Alcala (1992) 4 C4th 742, 770, 15 CR2d 432; People v Hayes (1989) 49 C3d 1260, 265 CR 132. However, evidence discovered by investigators acting on information obtained during a hypnotic session is not inadmissible. People v Shirley, supra.

Ø Note: A witness whose posthypnosis testimony is ruled inadmissible may be "unavailable as a witness" under Evid C §240(a)(2). Prehypnosis preliminary hearing testimony (if it exists) is then potentially admissible under Evid C §1291. See People v Reed (1996) 13 C4th 217, 52 CR2d 106.

§22.19 F. Dog-Tracking Evidence

Some dog-tracking evidence has been held to be admissible in California if a proper foundation is laid and if corroborative evidence supports the accuracy of the tracking. People v Gonzales (1990) 218 CA3d 403, 413, 267 CR 138; People v Craig (1978) 86 CA3d 905, 915, 150 CR 676.

To lay a foundation, the following must be shown (People v Malgren (1983) 139 CA3d 234, 238, 188 CR 569, disapproved on other grounds in People v Jones (1991) 53 C3d 1115, 1144, 282 CR 465):

- The dog handler was qualified by training and experience to use the dog;
- The dog was adequately trained;
- The dog has been found to be reliable in tracking humans;
- The dog was placed on the track where circumstances indicated the guilty party to have been; and
- The trail had not yet become stale or contaminated.

The corroborative evidence that is required to support the accuracy of the tracking need not be independent evidence that links the defendant to the crime. People v Gonzales (1990) 218 CA3d 403, 414, 267 CR 138 (corroborative evidence need only support accuracy of tracking itself). Dog-tracking evidence has given rise to CALCRIM 374 and CALJIC 2.16. However, nationwide authority is conflicting on whether dog-tracking evidence is admissible. See Anno, Evidence of Trailing by Dogs in Criminal Cases, 81 ALR5th 563 (2000).

Dog scent identification lineups are more problematic. People v Mitchell (2003) 110 CA4th 772, 2 CR3d 49. Other jurisdictions have admitted scent lineup evidence based on criteria similar to dog-tracking evidence. Anno, Dog Scent Discrimination Lineups, 63 ALR4th 143 (1988). However, in Mitchell the court held that the proponent of evidence based on scent lineup procedures must show that the technique has gained acceptance in the scientific community under People v Kelly (1976) 17 C3d 24, 130 CR 144. People v Mitchell, supra.

§22.20 G. Voice Identifications

Voice identification is real evidence, and a request to a defendant to provide voice identification evidence does not violate his right against self-incrimination or his right to privacy. See People v Ellis (1966) 65 C2d 529, 55 CR 385. Further, failure of a defendant to "display his voice" can be presented to a trier-of-fact to indicate consciousness of guilt, just as flight or the suppression of evidence can. 65 C2d at 536. In determining whether a voice identification was unduly suggestive, the court must decide whether it was reliable under the totality of the circumstances. People v Clark (1992) 3 C4th 41, 135, 10 CR2d 554. Factors to be considered include (People v Gordon (1990) 50 C3d 1223, 1242, 270 CR 451):

- The witness's opportunity to view (or hear) the person;
- The degree of the witness's attention;
- The accuracy of any prior description of the person (or voice);
- The level of certainty of the identification; and
- The time between the incident and the confrontation.

A single-voice identification may pose a danger of suggestiveness, but such lineups are not necessarily or inherently unfair. People v Clark (1992) 3 C4th 41, 136, 10 CR2d 554. The failure to object to voice identification evidence could give rise to a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. See People v Maury (2003) 30 C4th 342, 415, 133 CR2d 561. A cautionary instruction similar to CALCRIM 315 (see CALJIC 2.92) on eyewitness identification should also be requested.

IV. CHALLENGING EYEWITNESS IDENTIFICATION

§22.21 A. Summary of Defense Counsel's Remedies for Failure to Hold Lineup or for Tainted Identification Proceeding

When eyewitness identification is a central issue in a criminal prosecution, defense counsel must develop a plan for challenging that identification. Counsel must decide which identifications to attack, how to attack, and when to launch the attack in the course of the proceedings. These decisions must be made in the context of the entire defense strategy.

Failure to hold lineup. When identification is at issue but no identification proceeding has been held, defense counsel must decide whether to ask the prosecutor to hold a lineup, move for a defense lineup (see §22.17), or wait for an in-court identification. Each strategy has its own strengths and weaknesses. If the perpetrator's identity is at issue, the eyewitnesses are uncertain, corroborating evidence is scant or nil, the defendant steadfastly maintains innocence, and the prosecutor recognizes that the case has problems, then it may be appropriate to request a prosecution lineup very early in the case, shortly after arrest or arraignment. Ordinarily, however, if a decision is made to request a lineup, it should be by an Evans motion, which guarantees the defense more input into the lineup process. Failure to request an Evans lineup early in the proceedings is a factor in deciding to grant or deny the motion. If the client admits guilt, or if it seems likely that the client would be picked out at a lineup, it may be more effective to wait for an in-court identification. Defense counsel then has the option of attempting to discredit the in-court identification by arguing to the jury that the defendant was the only person in the courtroom who could have been selected as the perpetrator. See §22.29 for discussion of cross-examining the eyewitness in this situation.

> Ø Note: A defendant may claim on appeal that counsel's failure to request a lineup was ineffective assistance of counsel. Counsel who forgoes a lineup request should insert a memo in the file, detailing why the decision was a tactical choice. See People v Blomdahl (1993) 16 CA4th 1242, 1248, 20 CR2d 491.

Failure of a witness to appear at a scheduled prosecution lineup is not cause for the witness's first-time identification of the defendant at trial to be excluded. A cautionary jury instruction, however, should be given. People v Fernandez (1990) 219 CA3d 1379, 269 CR 116. In this situation, defense counsel may want to ask the prosecution to schedule another out-of-court lineup before the witness attempts to identify the defendant at trial. 219 CA3d at 1386.

Tainted identification procedure. In felony cases, if an identification proceeding occurred before a defendant's identification at the preliminary hearing, counsel can challenge the identification at that hearing and ask the magistrate to strike the in-court identification. People v James (1976) 56 CA3d 876, 128 CR 733. If there is a holding order, counsel can move to set aside the information (Pen C §995) based on the illegal identification procedure. See People v Martin (1970) 2 C3d 822, 827, 87 CR 709; People v Malich (1971) 15 CA3d 253, 93 CR 87, disapproved on other grounds in People v Medina (1972) 6 C3d 484, 489, 99 CR 630. Review of an identification submitted to the grand jury and forming a basis for an indictment can be challenged in superior court by a motion to set aside the indictment. Pen C §995.

Counsel may also consider a pretrial common law motion to suppress eyewitness identification evidence gathered in violation of the defendant's right to counsel or due process. People v Lawrence (1971) 4 C3d 273, 275 n1, 93 CR 204. Such a motion is a method of obtaining a pretrial ruling on evidence admissibility but is not binding on the court in trial. People v Superior Court (Zolnay) (1975) 15 C3d 729, 734, 125 CR 798. The motion can be raised at any pretrial hearing, including the preliminary examination. People v James (1976) 56 CA3d 876, 884, 128 CR 733. A common law motion to suppress performs the same function as an evidence objection; thus, the court may allow an oral motion to be made at trial. People v Martin (1970) 2 C3d 822, 828, 87 CR 709.

At trial, in both misdemeanor and felony cases, defense counsel may move to exclude any identification based on an earlier tainted out-of-court identification procedure. This method is the usual way of challenging out-of-court identification procedures. The motion is commonly made immediately before trial as an in limine motion in the trial court. A sample motion is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §22.4 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005). The issue is decided by the trial judge. See People v Martin, supra. See §22.25 for discussion of how the court makes this decision.

If the out-of-court identification procedure is ruled untainted, it can be introduced, and the witness can testify without showing an independent origin for the in-court identification. In addition, evidence of the prior identification can be introduced. The defense can offer evidence of any suggestiveness in the procedure. People v Greene (1973) 34 CA3d 622, 110 CR 160. The prosecution can ask for an instruction on the legality of the identification procedure. See §22.30.

If the court finds that the out-of-court identification procedure was tainted, the People may show, by clear and convincing proof, an independent source for the in-court identification. If an independent source is proven to the court's satisfaction, the eyewitness can testify to identity. The defense can then (1) introduce to the jury evidence of the taint, and (2) ask the court to instruct the jury that the identification procedure was tainted. See People v Rodriguez (1977) 68 CA3d 874, 137 CR 594.

If the issue is decided in the defendant's favor, and the court rules that there is no independent source for an in-court identification, no evidence is allowed concerning the identification of the defendant from the witness. See People v Martin (1970) 2 C3d 822, 831, 87 CR 709. If there is no other evidence on which to find the defendant guilty, the prosecutor may decide to dismiss the case. If jeopardy has attached before the motion is decided and the case is dismissed, the case cannot be tried again. See Larios v Superior Court (1979) 24 C3d 324, 329, 155 CR 374. If there is other evidence on which to base a conviction, the prosecutor will probably continue with the case.

> Ø Note: Defense counsel should wait until jeopardy has attached (see §26.24) before challenging the identification. The prosecutor should ask the judge to hear the motion before jeopardy attaches.

The defense can challenge denial of its motion on appeal from a guilty verdict. See People v Castellano (1978) 79 CA3d 844, 145 CR 264; People v Davis (1969) 270 CA2d 841, 76 CR 242. If the identification was excluded and the defendant was found guilty and appealed, the prosecution may ask the reviewing court to pass on rulings of the trial court adverse to the prosecution. See Pen C §1252.

The defendant can challenge the tainted identification of a codefendant if it prejudices him or her during trial. People v Bisogni (1971) 4 C3d 582, 94 CR 164 (codefendant shown to witnesses in highly suggestive single-person showup months after crime; defendant had apparently valid alibi; conviction reversed).

Burden of proving unfair identification procedure. A defendant bears the burden of showing the unreliability of an identification procedure. People v DeSantis (1992) 2 C4th 1198, 1222, 9 CR2d 628. The constitutional reliability of a lineup depends on two factors: (1) whether the identification procedure was unduly suggestive and unnecessary and, if so, (2) whether the identification itself was reliable when one considers the entire process. The court should take into account, e.g., the opportunity of the witness to view the criminal at the time of the crime, the witness's degree of attention, the accuracy of any prior description of the criminal, the level of certainty demonstrated at the confrontation, and the time between the crime and the confrontation. If the court finds that the procedure was unduly suggestive and the identification was unreliable, the identification is constitutionally invalid. People v Gordon (1990) 50 C3d 1223, 1242, 270 CR 451. If a court finds that a challenged procedure is not impermissibly suggestive, the inquiry into the due process claim ends. U.S. v Bagley (9th Cir 1985) 772 F2d 482, 492; People v Ochoa (1998) 19 C4th 353, 412, 79 CR2d 408.

In determining whether a lineup was unduly suggestive, the court must consider whether anything caused a suspect to "stand out" from the others in the lineup in any way that would push the witness toward selecting that suspect. People v Cook (2007) 40 C4th 1334, 1355, 58 CR3d 340. The fact that the defendant alone appeared in both a photo lineup and a subsequent live lineup does not per se violate due process. Cook, 40 C4th at 1355; People v DeSantis (1992) 2 C4th 1198, 1224, 9 CR2d 628.

The standard of independent review applies to a trial court's ruling that a pretrial identification procedure was not impermissibly suggestive. People v Kennedy (2005) 36 C4th 595, 608, 31 CR3d 160.

B. Gathering Information

§22.22 1. Viewing Crime Scene

In preparation for attacking an eyewitness identification at trial, defense counsel should go to the scene of the crime under the same conditions as at the time of the offense. For example, if it was night and the moon was full, counsel should wait for a full moon. Counsel should also be sure that nothing has changed that might have affected the eyewitness's ability to see at that time, e.g., a tree cut down or a fence raised or lowered. This is more often a problem when counsel in a felony case does not assume representation until months after the crime occurred. Defense counsel should look for any conditions that would have made it difficult or impossible for the eyewitness to have seen what he or she claims to have seen.

Defense counsel should also ascertain whether anything would have made it difficult for the eyewitness to make the reported observation, such as poor eyesight or hearing, or that the witness was listening to loud music at the time.

The prosecutor needs to verify these matters as well. Both counsel should bring an investigator along in case testimony is needed at trial. See §2.18 on the attorney as witness.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.23 2. Interviewing and Investigating Witnesses

Defense counsel should try to have an investigator interview eyewitnesses as soon as possible after the crime. If possible, eyewitnesses should be interviewed before they have seen a lineup. This is the time to obtain a description of the suspect if one has not been previously recorded, or the time to explore a previously given description. When witnesses are interviewed closer to the time the crime happened, their memories are fresher. They may remember the names of others present or details that are helpful to the defense, which they may forget several months later. Because witnesses sometimes move away, the defense investigator should ask the witnesses for names and phone numbers of several people who will always know where to contact them.

If witnesses refuse to speak to the defense because the prosecution has forbidden it, counsel can subpoena the witness to court and have a judge tell the witness that he or she has the right to talk to the defense as well as to the prosecution. Walker v Superior Court (1957) 155 CA2d 134, 140, 317 P2d 130 (sheriff prohibited witness from talking to defense counsel). Defense counsel may ask the court to admonish or hold in contempt a prosecutor who tells a witness not to talk to the defense. See chap 58 on contempt.

When questioning witnesses, defense counsel should obtain the following information:

- A complete description of what the eyewitness saw, including a description of the suspect, of the crime, and of anything else that was happening at that time.
- Whether the witness saw the suspect before or after the crime.
- All information on out-of-court identification proceedings, including when they occurred, what kind, who was present, what police said to the witness, whether the witness made an identification of anyone or indicated that none of those shown was the suspect, and the degree of certainty of any identification.
- Whether the witness discussed the case with anyone, what others said about the case, whether the witness discussed the case with any other witnesses, and whether the witness knows if any other witness identified someone, and who that was.
- The conditions under which the eyewitness saw the suspect at the time of the alleged crime. If the witness wears glasses, was he or she wearing them at that time? What kind of light was available? Where was the suspect, and where was the witness? How long did the witness look at the suspect?
- Whether the witness discussed the case, including any identifications, with law enforcement or prosecutors, including how many times those discussions occurred and, for each discussion, the location, who was present, and any statements made by law enforcement or prosecutors to the witness about the identifications, the defendant, or the defendant's guilt or innocence.

Ø Note: Do not forget investigation and tests that may exonerate your client, such as having his or her fingerprints or bodily fluids compared with those connected to the crime.

§22.24 C. Challenging Eyewitness Identification at Preliminary Hearing

It is unusual for defense counsel to challenge eyewitness identification procedures at the preliminary hearing for three reasons: First, this issue is within the magistrate's discretion, and, if the lineup is upheld, will probably be upheld on Pen C §995 review. See chaps 8 (preliminary hearings) and 13 (Pen C §995 review). Second, rulings on evidentiary issues are not binding on the trial judge. People v Leighter (1971) 15 CA3d 389, 93 CR 136, disapproved on other grounds in Madril v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 73, 123 CR 465. Finally, defense counsel does not have the absolute right to call witnesses at the preliminary hearing. See §8.13. If defense counsel believes that a dismissal is possible either at the preliminary hearing or on §995 review, however, the motion should be seriously considered.

Ø Note: If no prior identification of the defendant has been made, counsel is in effect consenting to a showup at the preliminary hearing, particularly if the defendant is in jail clothes or is the only person of his or her type in the courtroom. See §22.21 for discussion of this problem. One option is to obtain the magistrate's permission to have the defendant, in street clothes, sit in the audience. In any event, defense counsel should be sure to move to exclude eyewitnesses from the courtroom under Pen C §867 before the defendant arrives or is brought in. Other options are to stipulate to ID for purposes of the preliminary hearing only, or to waive the preliminary hearing if the prosecutor also agrees to waive it.

Defense counsel who wishes to cross-examine eyewitnesses at the preliminary hearing should consider subpoenaing them in case the prosecution plans to present its evidence through the hearsay provisions of Pen C §872(b), discussed in §8.30. If the prosecutor did not call the eyewitnesses, he or she will probably ask for an offer of proof that the proffered testimony "if believed, would be reasonably likely to establish an affirmative defense, negate an element of a crime charged, or impeach the testimony of a prosecution witness or the statement of a declarant testified to by a prosecution witness." Pen C §866(a). The defense should be able to make a successful offer of proof if defense investigation has yielded an inconsistent statement by the eyewitness because the defense has the right to impeach hearsay at the preliminary hearing. Pen C §872(b).

The defense should not call prosecution eyewitnesses who will leave the jurisdiction, because the prosecution may then be able to use the preliminary hearing testimony at trial in place of live testimony. See §8.47.

Ø Note: Prosecutors can request a deposition under Pen C §§1335-1345 to take the testimony of a witness who they know will leave the jurisdiction, whose life is in danger, who is so sick he or she probably will not be able to testify at trial, or who, in a domestic violence case, has been dissuaded from testifying or cooperating with the prosecution by the defendant through threats or intimidation. These conditional examinations are discussed in §11.25A.

If defense counsel chooses to challenge out-of-court identification procedures at the preliminary hearing, counsel must first present evidence showing that the procedure was "so impermissibly suggestive as to give rise to a very substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification." Simmons v U.S. (1968) 390 US 377, 384, 19 L Ed 2d 1247, 1253, 88 S Ct 967. This showing can be made by questioning the eyewitnesses. If the court finds that the out-of-court eyewitness identification procedure was tainted, the prosecutor then has the opportunity to prove that the in-court identification is based on the eyewitness's independent recollection of the defendant at the time the crime was committed. If the court finds no independent basis for the in-court identification, defense counsel should move to exclude it. People v George (1972) 23 CA3d 767, 100 CR 427; People v Citrino (1970) 11 CA3d 778, 90 CR 80. For further discussion of these procedures, which are usually raised as in limine motions at trial, see §22.25.

§22.25 D. In Limine Motion at Trial

Defense counsel has the right to have a hearing on his or her lineup motion in the trial court before trial begins. See People v Enos (1973) 34 CA3d 25, 38, 109 CR 876 (error for court not to conduct hearing, but harmless; therefore no reversal); People v Citrino (1970) 11 CA3d 778, 782, 90 CR 80 (establishing rule). But see People v George (1972) 23 CA3d 767, 772, 100 CR 427 (criticizing rule).

Ø Note: Any objection to a suggestive in-court identification may be waived if the defendant refused to participate in a lineup. People v Harmon (1989) 215 CA3d 552, 568, 263 CR 623.

Defense counsel has the right to have this hearing held outside the presence of jurors. People v Enos, supra; People v George, supra. If defense counsel wishes to question prosecution witnesses, counsel must subpoena them to the hearing; the prosecutor will not do so unless by prior agreement. When there is more than one eyewitness, counsel should exclude all from the courtroom except the one testifying.

The defense has the burden of producing evidence that the identification procedure was tainted. People v Stearns (1971) 14 CA3d 178, 92 CR 69. The standard used by the trial court to decide whether an identification procedure was tainted is whether the procedure was "so impermissibly suggestive as to give rise to a very substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification." Simmons v U.S. (1968) 390 US 377, 19 L Ed 2d 1247, 88 S Ct 967. This test is primarily a factual one.

If the trial court finds that the identification procedure was tainted, the burden shifts to the prosecution to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the in-court identification was based on observations at the scene and was not tainted by the procedure. People v Martin (1970) 2 C3d 822, 87 CR 709 (conviction reversed). In ruling on this issue, the court examines whether "the identification itself was nevertheless reliable, under the totality of the circumstances, taking into account such factors as the witness's opportunity to view (or hear) the person, the degree of the witness's attention, the accuracy of any prior description of the person (or voice), the level of certainty of the identification, and the time between the incident and the confrontation." People v Clark (1992) 3 C4th 41, 135, 10 CR2d 554 (quoting from People v Gordon (1990) 50 C3d 1223, 1242, 270 CR 451); People v Collins (1971) 20 CA3d 601, 97 CR 821. See also People v DeSantis (1992) 2 C4th 1198, 1222, 9 CR2d 628.

The courts rarely find any taint. Defense counsel's best opportunity to win at this stage is if he or she were able, at an earlier time, e.g., at the preliminary hearing or in an interview with the defense investigator, to get the eyewitness to state that his or her identification was based on the identification procedure and that he or she no longer has any independent recollection of the responsible party.

When taint is found but the identification is allowed, defense counsel can ask the court to instruct the jury that the identification procedure was tainted. Even if this is not allowed, counsel can introduce the same evidence before the jury that was introduced at the identification hearing and may persuade jurors that the identification is wrong.

In questioning prosecution eyewitnesses, defense counsel may inquire into the areas discussed in §22.23 and should also point out in argument to the court any of the following facts:

- The witness did not or was unable to identify the defendant, or identified the wrong person, on one or more occasions, e.g., immediately after the crime, at an identification proceeding, or at the preliminary hearing.
- The witness's description to the police varies from the way the defendant actually appears.
- Discrepancies exist among the descriptions of several eyewitnesses; another person was identified by one or more of them; or the defendant was not identified by one or more of them.
- The witness had a very limited opportunity to observe the suspect.
- The witness has a reason to lie about the identity of the suspect.

E. Challenging Eyewitness Identification Before Trier of Fact

§22.26 1. Lineup Held but Defendant Not Identified

A challenge to an eyewitness identification may be made at trial with or without a contemporaneous identification of the defendant at trial. Occasionally, an eyewitness fails to identify the defendant both at a lineup and at trial. In fact, the witness may have identified another person at the lineup. This situation rarely occurs in a one-defendant, one-witness case, but is rather common in cases involving four or more defendants, multiple counts, and many witnesses. The prosecutor may put on a witness to identify A, B, and C, but not D. Defense counsel who represents D may want to introduce the lineup to show that the witness was right about A, B, and C (thereby making the witness more reliable), but not about D. In fact, not only did the witness not identify counsel's client, but this reliable witness picked out someone else. Be aware of the trial dangers for A, B, and C in using this approach and for defendant D if in custody with A, B, or C.

A positive in-court identification of a defendant is admissible even though the victim did not identify the defendant at an earlier identification proceeding. See, e.g., People v Dominick (1986) 182 CA3d 1174, 1197, 227 CR 849 (defendant argued that lack of identification at videotape lineup tainted in-court identification at preliminary hearing; no error, and if there was it was harmless beyond reasonable doubt); People v Prado (1982) 130 CA3d 669, 673, 182 CR 129 (failure to positively identify appellant in photographic display did not taint in-court identification and went to weight rather than sufficiency of evidence). See also People v Contreras (1993) 17 CA4th 813, 822, 21 CR2d 496.

When the witness did not identify the defendant at the lineup, but makes an identification at trial, defense counsel generally covers the matter through cross-examination. Defense counsel should be prepared for an excuse by the witness, e.g., that the light was poor or that the witness was too nervous, not close enough to the lineup, forgot his or her glasses, or feared the defendant.

An alternative to cross-examining the witness on the failure to identify at the lineup is to put on evidence of the lineup, by perhaps calling the officer who selected the members of the lineup and the police officer who obtained the identification card marked by the witness, or by showing a videotape of the lineup. Defense counsel may want to introduce the card itself into evidence. This approach may force the prosecutor to recall the witness to explain the failure to identify, or the prosecutor may choose to leave the whole issue alone.

It is generally good practice for prosecutors to ask the witness about his or her failure to identify the defendant at the lineup on direct examination or, at least, on redirect examination if defense counsel did not cross-examine on that issue. If defense counsel is the one to first present this information to jurors, they may get the impression that the prosecutor is not giving them the whole truth.

If an eyewitness fails to identify the defendant both at a lineup and at trial, and insufficient evidence remains to convict the defendant, defense counsel can move for a judgment of acquittal under Pen C §1118 or §1118.1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.27 2. Client Identified at Lineup; Procedure Held Lawful

When a defendant is identified at a lineup but not in court, the prosecutor may, when the requirements are met, introduce evidence of the prior identification under either Evid C §1235 or §1238. Section 1235 permits evidence of a prior identification if the witness's testimony at a hearing or trial is inconsistent with an earlier identification. Section 1238 allows evidence of an earlier identification if the witness testifies that the identification was made when the crime was fresh in the witness's memory and was a true reflection of his or her opinion at that time.

When a prior identification is not supported by an identification at trial, and there is no other evidence connecting the defendant with the crime, the out-of-court identification may still support a conviction if it passes the substantial evidence test of People v Johnson (1980) 26 C3d 557, 578, 162 CR 431. People v Cuevas (1995) 12 C4th 252, 48 CR2d 135. The Johnson substantial evidence test is that the evidence must be sufficient to prove the elements of the charged offense beyond a reasonable doubt to a rational jury. In practical terms, this means that trial counsel should introduce evidence of, and argue, specific factors that may have affected the probative value of the out-of-court identification to demonstrate that it is or is not sufficient to support a criminal conviction. In Cuevas, the court gives examples of circumstances that might affect an out-of-court identification's probative value, and those affecting a witness's failure to make an in-court identification. 12 C4th at 274.

If the witness identified the defendant at a preliminary hearing, that testimony is sufficient as a matter of law to support a conviction at trial, even though there is no identification at trial and no other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the crime. People v Ford (1981) 30 C3d 209, 215, 178 CR 196.

The situation that occurs in most trial matters is an identification at both the lineup and trial. On rare occasions, defense counsel may reach an agreement with the prosecutor that neither party will introduce the lineup or its results.

Even when the trial judge has found the identification procedure lawful, counsel may produce evidence of its unreliability to jurors because it goes to the weight of the evidence. People v Diaz (1967) 66 C2d 801, 58 CR 729 (pre-Wade-Gilbert case). Counsel, in effect, can present the same evidence and make the same arguments to jurors that were unsuccessful with the trial judge.

Defense counsel's primary tools in attacking an eyewitness identification are education of jurors during voir dire, opening statement, cross-examination of prosecution eyewitnesses (see §22.29), presentation of percipient or expert defense witnesses (see §22.28), special eyewitness jury instructions (see §22.30), and closing argument (see §22.31).

3. Defense Witnesses and Strategies

§22.28 a. Possible Defense Witnesses

The following are possible defense witnesses and evidence that can be used to combat eyewitness identification:

- Defense eyewitnesses;
- Defense investigators who can testify to conditions at the scene that would have made the claimed identification difficult or impossible;
- Technicians who can testify that other indicia of identification, e.g., footprints or fingerprints, do not belong to the defendant;
- Testimony from an expert on eyewitness identification (People v McDonald (1984) 37 C3d 351, 208 CR 236, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendoza (2000) 23 C4th 896, 914, 98 CR2d 431);
- Alibi witnesses; and
- Impeachment evidence concerning the prosecution eyewitness, e.g., a prior felony conviction or a reputation for lying.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.28A b. Eyewitness Identification Expert

In People v McDonald (1984) 37 C3d 351, 361, 208 CR 236, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendoza (2000) 23 C4th 896, 914, 98 CR2d 431, the California Supreme Court held that, under the facts of that case, it was an abuse of discretion not to allow the testimony of an eyewitness identification expert. However, the testimony of such an expert is limited to narrow circumstances: When eyewitness identification of the defendant is a key element of the prosecution case but is not substantially corroborated by reliable evidence and the proffered testimony is from a qualified expert. In this situation, although discretion remains with the trial court, it is usually error to exclude the testimony.

The McDonald decision virtually makes it obligatory for defense counsel to move to permit the testimony of an eyewitness identification expert in appropriate cases. That expert should be prepared to testify on specific psychological factors shown by the record that could have affected the accuracy of the identification but are not likely to be fully known to or understood by the jury. Also, the expert may be permitted to testify about empirical research that undermines a number of widespread lay misconceptions about eyewitness identification, e.g., that the accuracy of a witness's recollection increases with the witness's certainty, that accuracy improves with stress, or that cross-racial factors are not significant. The expert will not be permitted to testify to the accuracy or to the truth or falsity of the identification testimony.

In People v Sanders (1995) 11 C4th 475, 46 CR2d 751, the California Supreme Court upheld the trial court's decision to exclude expert testimony on eyewitness identification, emphasizing that the decision to admit such testimony resides squarely in the trial court's discretion and is seldom reversible error. The court also held that, even if the decision to exclude the testimony was error, that error was harmless.

Defense counsel should consider making a request for expert eyewitness testimony early, but not too early, i.e., not until all the inculpatory evidence is known. If the motion is granted, all police reports, defense interviews of percipient witnesses, and other information bearing on the identification issue should promptly be sent to the designated expert for review. The strategy for the presentation of such evidence must be developed on the basis of the facts in each individual case.

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/22 LINEUPS AND IDENTIFICATION/§22.29 c. Cross-Examination of Identification Witness

§22.29 c. Cross-Examination of Identification Witness

There are at least four levels of identification:

(1) The witness knew the defendant before the alleged crime was committed and is sure that the defendant is the guilty party;

(2) The witness did not know the defendant but is sure that the defendant is the person responsible;

(3) The defendant looks similar to the person responsible; and

(4) The witness is unable to identify the defendant, but describes the person responsible in terms that match the defendant.

When the witness knows the party being identified, counsel should focus on the length of time since the parties last saw each other, any change in the appearance of the person being identified, the witness's opportunity to observe the person responsible at the time of the alleged crime, and whether the witness has a motive to lie.

If the witness had never seen the party being identified before the incident, defense counsel must evaluate how the trier of fact perceives the identification. It is very important not to turn a positive, but tentative, identification into a positive and sure one. Cross-examination on this type of witness might focus on the details of the responsible person's clothing and of the surroundings. If the witness responds "I don't know" or "I don't remember" to every such question, it may be reason to violate the rule of never asking a question without knowing the answer first. The trier of fact needs to be shown that this witness remembers nothing, yet claims to be able to identify the defendant.

Some witnesses will perceive that "I don't know" answers are hurting them, and may begin to answer with guesses. Defense counsel should be prepared for such answers by using a list of questions with provable answers concerning details like, e.g., the color of the rug or how many people were present. The key is not the subject matter (on which corner is the stop sign) but rather that the witness, while under oath, gives a wrong answer to the question. (Prosecutors may, however, be able to successfully object to these questions as irrelevant to the factual issues. The defense may counter that the questions are for the purpose of testing the witness's memory and recollection.)

A first-time identification made in court may be attacked on the theory that it was a choice of one from a field of one. This is particularly true of defendants who are in custody. The trier of fact must be made aware that the witness has selected the only person in the courtroom who is in jail clothes, or the only person in handcuffs. Race or unique physical characteristics may also single out the defendant as the one to be identified. Unusual hair styles are typical of this problem. The attorney may choose to point this out in closing argument rather than cross-examination. See §22.17 for discussion of the decision to hold or request a lineup.

If, however, an in-court identification is based on a prior photo identification, lineup, or showup, then a somewhat different approach may be taken. An attorney may argue that the in-court identification has been tainted by the prior out-of-court identification (see §22.25). Although the cross-examination may be completely different, the theory is really the same: Because of some outside factor the witness had only one choice, that being the defendant.

When a witness is less than sure of an identification, he or she may testify that the person "looked just like," or "is very similar to," the defendant, or that the witness is "90 percent sure" that the defendant is the person responsible. This type of identification is very difficult to evaluate because the witness may give a stronger identification under cross-examination. Prior statements about the uncertainty may lessen this danger.

When a witness testifies only that the person responsible had certain very general characteristics, such as being "a young white woman" or "a tall black man," the attorney's decision concerning cross-examination is often based on the size of the class. The more people in the class, the less advisable it is for counsel to cross-examine. There is a risk that the witness will remember some special characteristic of the perpetrator on cross-examination, while without cross-examination on this issue, defense counsel can still argue that, because the number of people in the group, e.g., "young white women," is so large, the witness's description should be discounted by the jury.

Ø Note: Great caution should be exercised in asking questions like "The person did not have a scar, did he?" The question may cause the witness to correctly recall otherwise forgotten facts.

Source: Criminal Law/California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice/22 LINEUPS AND IDENTIFICATION/§22.30 4. Instructions

§22.30 4. Instructions

The trial court has the discretion to instruct on eyewitness testimony, but it is not required to give an eyewitness instruction absent a request. Bench Notes to CALCRIM 315; People v Alcala (1992) 4 C4th 742, 802, 15 CR2d 432; People v Blair (1979) 25 C3d 640, 663, 159 CR 818. The jury instructions on eyewitness identification are CALCRIM 315 and CALJIC 2.91-2.92. Counsel should also consult Lundy, FORECITE California (1994), and Rucker & Overland, California Criminal Practice, Motions, Jury Instructions and Sentencing (3d ed 2004).

The defense is entitled to special pinpoint instructions on identification on request if the instructions concern theories involving identification and not the particular facts of the case, if they address matters not covered by the instruction, and if identification is a crucial issue and there is no substantial corroborative evidence. People v Wright (1988) 45 C3d 1126, 248 CR 600 (discussing CALJIC 2.92; now see CALCRIM 315). See also People v Fudge (1994) 7 C4th 1075, 1110, 31 CR2d 321 (failure to give defense instruction was harmless error under facts of this case). A proper instruction on identification should focus the jury's attention on facts relevant to its determination of the existence of reasonable doubt on identification in a nonargumentative way that does not take a position on the impact of the factors. People v Wright (1988) 45 C3d 1126, 1143, 248 CR 600. Pinpoint instructions should not invade "the domain of either jury or expert witness." People v Johnson (1992) 3 C4th 1183, 1234, 14 CR2d 702. Explanation of the effect of the factors should be left to cross-examination, presentation of expert testimony, and argument. A modified version of CALJIC 2.92 that is more favorable to the defense is set out at 3 C4th at 1230 n12.

> Ø Note: CALCRIM 315 now sets out the issues addressed in CALJIC 2.92 as "questions" for the jury to consider when evaluating eyewitness testimony. CALCRIM 315 adds some new details not previously found in CALJIC 2.92, including questions relating to the witness's eyesight and level of attention and any prior identifications by the witness or prior failures of the witness to identify the defendant, as well as a restatement of the People's burden of proof. CALCRIM 315. The courts have not yet addressed the new level of detail in CALCRIM 315 or considered the need for other identification instructions when it is given.

The language of the many lineup cases, including Wade and Gilbert (see §3.2), can be an excellent source of material for special identification instructions. Other cases that may give some guidance, but must be read in light of Wright and Johnson, are People v Hurley (1979) 95 CA3d 895, 900, 157 CR 364, and People v Brown (1984) 152 CA3d 674, 678 n3, 199 CR 680.

While the court has a sua sponte duty to instruct on factors relevant to witness credibility (see Bench Notes to CALCRIM 226), there is no sua sponte duty to instruct on certain specific factors affecting credibility. The instruction that lists the factors for jurors to consider in evaluating a witness's credibility is CALCRIM 226. Defense counsel should request the appropriate bracketed (optional) factors in CALCRIM 226, such as those on the witness's "character for truthfulness." Other instructions that defense counsel may use to argue identification issues to the jury include instructions on:

- The credibility of an adult witness (CALCRIM 105; see also CALJIC 2.20) or a child witness (CALCRIM 330; see also CALJIC 2.20.1). See People v McCoy (2005) 133 CA4th 974, 978, 35 CR3d 366 (rejecting constitutional challenge to CALJIC 2.20.1).
- Discrepancies in testimony (CALCRIM 302; see also CALJIC 2.21.1).
- Weighing conflicting testimony (CALCRIM 302; see also CALJIC 2.22); the court must instruct on weighing contradictory evidence sua sponte unless corroborating evidence is required. See Bench Notes to CALCRIM 302, citing People v Rincon-Pineda (1975) 14 C3d 864, 884, 123 CR 119.
- Effect on witness's credibility of a felony conviction or a witness's other crime or misconduct (CALCRIM 316; see also CALJIC 2.23); although there is no sua sponte duty to give this instruction, it must be given on request. People v Hernandez (2004) 33 C4th 1040, 1051, 16 CR3d 880.
- The sufficiency of testimony of one witness (CALCRIM 301; see also CALJIC 2.27); the court has a sua sponte duty to give this instruction in every case. See Bench Notes to CALCRIM 301, citing People v Rincon-Pineda

(1975) 14 C3d 864, 884, 123 CR 119.

In practice, most published cases uphold trial court refusals to give defense eyewitness identification instructions. See, e.g., People v Harris (1989) 47 C3d 1047, 1097, 255 CR 352 (no error in trial court's refusal to give defense special instructions on cross-racial identification); People v Martinez (1989) 207 CA3d 1204, 1220, 255 CR 691 (defense special instructions properly refused because already covered by CALJIC 2.91-2.92; now see CALCRIM 315).

Because the defense is limited in being able to get the court to give an instruction explaining the effect of the factors in CALCRIM 315 and CALJIC 2.92 on the accuracy of the identification, increased emphasis should usually be given to other areas of attack. See discussion of other options in §22.27.

If the defendant fled, the prosecution should consider requesting the flight instruction. That instruction may be given if there is evidence identifying the person who fled as the defendant, and if that evidence is relied on as tending to show guilt. People v Mason (1991) 52 C3d 909, 943, 277 CR 166.

§22.31 5. Closing Argument

For defense counsel, closing argument is a time to pull together the logic of the attack on the eyewitness identification that the prosecution has presented at trial. Counsel must evaluate the eyewitnesses. A witness should not be attacked as a liar if he or she is possibly making an honest mistake.

Most eyewitness issues are best argued within the context of reasonable doubt. The general instruction on eyewitness identification, CALCRIM 315, includes the instruction that the People have the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that it was the defendant who committed the crime. Defense counsel should emphasize this language in closing argument to establish the relationship between identification issues and reasonable doubt. See People v Wright (1988) 45 C3d 1126, 1143, 248 CR 600. It is sometimes valuable to save trial eyewitness points for argument rather than make them during cross-examination. This approach provides the jury with new evidence and deprives the prosecutor of the opportunity of having the witness explain the discrepancy.

The trial court has discretion to allow defense counsel to argue information from articles on mistaken identification. People v Farmer (1989) 47 C3d 888, 922, 254 CR 508, overruled on other grounds in People v Waidla (2000) 22 C4th 690, 724 n6, 94 CR2d 396. The trial court's decision is usually upheld. See, e.g., People v Farmer, supra; People v London (1988) 206 CA3d 896, 909, 254 CR 59.

§22.32 V. PROSECUTION PRESENTATION OF EYEWITNESS IDENTIFICATION

The key to a successful identification case is careful preparation. The prosecutor should do the following:

- Evaluate possible defenses;
- Review police and investigation reports;
- Visit the crime scene;
- Interview key eyewitnesses as soon as possible;
- Anticipate defenses and take them into account when planning strategy for the case;
- Decide whether to hold a lineup or photo identification proceeding if one has not already been held;
- Decide which witnesses to call at the preliminary hearing in a felony case; and
- Ascertain what additional investigation is needed from investigators, and which witnesses to subpoena for trial.

When eyewitness identification is the only thing to link a defendant to a crime, it is important to obtain as detailed a description of the perpetrator as possible from witnesses, and to consider holding some form of identification proceeding as soon as possible while the witnesses' recollections are still fresh. Some prosecutors prefer photo lineups because defense counsel does not have to be present. See U.S. v Ash (1973) 413 US 300, 37 L Ed 2d 619, 93 S Ct 2568; People v Rist (1976) 16 C3d 211, 216, 127 CR 457. A sample prosecution motion for lineup is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §22.5 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

When identification is at issue but other evidence links the defendant to the crime, the prosecutor may choose not to hold a special identification proceeding in felony cases, because the victim will have the opportunity to identify the defendant at the preliminary hearing. It is crucial that the prosecutor evaluate and use this corroborating evidence to bolster the identification.

When an identification case will go to trial, the prosecutor should visit the scene of the crime with an investigator to make the observations discussed in §22.22 and then interview the eyewitness again.

At trial, the direct examination of eyewitnesses should usually be complete, but short, in order to hold the attention of jurors. Counsel should be sure to lay the proper foundation as to the date, time, place, lighting, and opportunity to view the crime and the defendant, and explore any problem areas such as the witness not wearing glasses at the time, the witness having had only a fleeting look, or the witness having had physical obstacles blocking his or her view.

The prosecutor should present evidence in addition to the identification to support a conviction. If there is no physical evidence or confession, there may be a motive for the crime, or the defendant may have committed similar offenses (see §§24.52-24.55). Evidence of identification of the defendant at a prior lineup, particularly shortly after the time of the crime, may be persuasive and should usually be introduced.

The defense may move to introduce testimony from an eyewitness identification expert. People v McDonald (1984) 37 C3d 351, 208 CR 236, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendoza (2000) 23 C4th 896, 914, 98 CR2d 431, permits such testimony on the subject of factors that may influence the reliability of eyewitness identification, but not on the subject of the reliability of any particular identification. However, the McDonald case permits such testimony only if there is eyewitness identification testimony that is not substantially corroborated such that it has "independent reliability." People v Sanders (1995) 11 C4th 475, 508, 46 CR2d 751. If other evidence, such as physical evidence or incriminating statements by the defendant, corroborate the identification evidence, the prosecutor should oppose the motion.

The prosecutor should consider who could provide an alibi and interview these witnesses as soon as possible to find out whether an alibi will be presented and to prevent a fabricated alibi at the last minute. The defendant's work associates, friends, and family are the three most common sources of alibi witnesses.

If the witness or victim recants an earlier identification of the defendant as the perpetrator, and refuses to make an in-court identification, the earlier identification is admissible both to impeach the victim or witness and as substantive proof of the facts asserted in the earlier statement. Evid C §1235.

If the eyewitness is an accomplice, other corroborating evidence connecting the defendant to the crime will be necessary. Pen C §1111. See also People v Green (1971) 3 C3d 981, 92 CR 494.

If the defendant presents a defense witness of whom the prosecutor is unaware, the prosecutor is entitled to a reasonable continuance. Pen C §1051. If the continuance is based on the defendant's testimony, it cannot exceed 1 day. Pen C §1051.

The defendant's refusal to participate in a lineup is admissible and may be commented on by the prosecutor in closing argument. See People v Huston (1989) 210 CA3d 192, 217, 258 CR 393 (comment by prosecutor that defendant refused to participate in lineup but then later appeared in lineup after altering appearance was proper). See also CALCRIM 371 (defendant's efforts to suppress evidence); CALJIC 2.06.

Prosecutors should be prepared to argue for the eyewitness identification. The specific details of the description given by the victim or witness should be pointed out. The different identifications of the defendant by the witness, e.g., showup, followed by lineup, followed by in-court identification, should be highlighted. Corroborating evidence should be introduced. The prosecutor should be prepared for defense counsel's arguments on mistaken eyewitness identification. The defense in an eyewitness case will usually try to magnify small discrepancies in the testimony of eyewitnesses. It is important for the prosecutor to point this out to the jury. It is rarely productive to respond to every defense issue; the prosecutor should emphasize that the important fact is that the witness identified the defendant. If the witness knew the defendant, or had seen the defendant on prior occasions, that strengthens the identification. If the witness was a stranger to the defendant, the prosecutor can point out that there is no reason for the witness to lie.

Defense counsel frequently argue the weakness of eyewitness identification in general, on the basis of mistaken identifications discussed in local newspapers or magazines. See People v Woodson (1964) 231 CA2d 10, 15, 41 CR 487 (account from newspaper was related to jury of man convicted of crimes based on mistaken eyewitness identification). Judges commonly allow both counsel a great deal of latitude in argument, including references to mistaken eyewitness identification. However, prosecutors can object to such an argument if it purports to be expert evidence on eyewitness identification or if it is unrelated to the defendant's case. See People v Williamson (1977) 71 CA3d 206, 215, 139 CR 222 (excerpt of Scientific American article read to jurors, but defense attorney not allowed to tell jurors source of article or conclusions of author of article). See also the cases and discussion in §22.31. Prosecutors should also prepare a rebuttal to this type of argument.

Prosecutors should not overlook the advantages of constructing their own eyewitness identification instructions, or modifying CALCRIM 315 to include elements that favor the prosecution. See People v Moore (1954) 43 C2d 517, 524, 275 P2d 485. See also §32.25.

§22.33 VI. PROSECUTION PRESENTATION OF VICTIM PHOTOGRAPHS

Photographic evidence can be compelling proof of what occurred when a crime was committed because it allows the trier of fact to travel back in time and see the results of criminal behavior. However, use of photographic evidence is constrained by due process considerations.

The prosecutor will probably want to show jurors pictures of dead victims. The use of photos of the deceased victim is within the trial court's discretion. See People v Smithey (1999) 20 C4th 936, 86 CR2d 243 (no error in trial court's admission of photos of victim's body or in prosecutor's reference to photos in penalty phase closing argument); People v Thompson (1988) 45 C3d 86, 114, 246 CR 245 (photograph of victim's face and of injuries admissible to show care taken during commission of crime, to refute defendant's contention that he had been drunk on night of crime). The trial court's decision to admit a victim photograph will stand unless the prejudicial effect of the photograph clearly outweighs its probative value. People v Navarette (2003) 30 C4th 458, 495, 133 CR2d 89. Although a photo or video taken while a murder victim was still alive may generate sympathy for the victim, especially during the penalty phase, the trial court may still admit such evidence if it is otherwise relevant. See People v Walker (1988) 47 C3d 605, 630, 253 CR 863 (use of victim's high school yearbook photo to aid witness in court in identifying victim permissible; photo was only one available to prosecutor); People v Thompson, supra (photo of victim while alive admissible to show that victim was a live human being on night of crime); People v Harris (2005) 37 C4th 310, 332, 33 CR3d 509 (silent videotape of victim at child's party admissible to show victim owned and wore jewelry that the prosecution alleged was stolen during her murder). But see People v Bonin (1989) 47 C3d 808, 848, 254 CR 298 (showing photographs of victims to parents of victims in court at guilt phase of capital trial was error because defense had offered to stipulate to their identity; however, error was harmless).

When the issue is not the identity of the victim, but the credibility of an eyewitness concerning the age of the victim, a photograph of the victim as he or she appeared in life is admissible at the guilt phase of a capital trial. People v Anderson (2001) 25 C4th 543, 594, 106 CR2d 575. Photographs of victims as they appeared in life are always admissible at the penalty phase of a capital trial. People v Anderson (2001) 25 C4th 543, 594, 106 CR2d 575; People v Lucero (2000) 23 C4th 692, 714, 97 CR2d 871.

§22.34 VII. APPELLATE REVIEW

Before trial. Through a Pen C §995 motion made in the superior court, the defense can seek review of a motion, made at the preliminary hearing, concerning an identification. A writ can be taken from the denial of a Pen C §995 motion. Pen C §999a. See chap 13 on §995 motions. For discussion of prosecution alternatives when a charge or case is dismissed at the preliminary hearing, see §§13.32-13.39, 13.43-13.46.

After trial. The defense can seek review of a trial ruling on the admissibility of identification evidence on appeal. See, e.g., People v McDonald (1984) 37 C3d 351, 208 CR 236, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendoza (2000) 23 C4th 896, 914, 98 CR2d 431. A conviction is reversible following trial only if the identification procedure was so impermissibly suggestive that it gave rise to a very substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification. Simmons v U.S. (1968) 390 US 377, 384, 19 L Ed 2d 1247, 1253, 88 S Ct 967. Although an objection is ordinarily required in the trial court (see People v Morrow (1969) 276 CA2d 700, 81 CR 201), the issue of an impermissibly suggestive identification procedure can be raised for the first time on appeal as the basis of a claim of incompetence of counsel (People v Nation (1980) 26 C3d 169, 161 CR 299; People v Harris (1985) 175 CA3d 944, 958, 221 CR 321).

If the defendant appeals, the prosecution may also seek review of the trial court ruling excluding an identification. See Pen C §1252.

§23.1 I. OVERVIEW

Ø Note: The advice given to counsel in this chapter is the work of previous authors and CEB editors and does not necessarily reflect the views or advice of the current update author.

General approach to confessions and admissions. When criminal defendants make statements to investigating police officers, or sometimes to other private citizens, that tend to incriminate them, issues under the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution and Cal Const art I, §§13-15, become evident. The terms "confession" and "admission" are defined in §23.3. A checklist for spotting issues concerning a defendant's statement is in §23.5.

Prosecutors usually use inculpatory statements against the defendant during trial. Even what was originally meant to be an exculpatory statement will often tend to indicate guilt and will be used in court against the criminal defendant. For instance, statements made by the accused when arrested that were self-serving at the time may be inconsistent with trial testimony or with other exculpatory statements made to other witnesses.

Criminal cases that involve the potential trial use of statements by a defendant must be closely analyzed by both the prosecutor and defense counsel. A prosecutor must review each statement to determine how it may fit in with other evidence, i.e., does it help or hinder the proof of guilt? If the decision to use a statement is made, potential admissibility problems must be researched. The prosecutor must also consider which statements he or she does not want the jury to hear. Legal authority both pro and con must be reviewed. The defense attorney must make the same analysis, but from the opposite point of view. The potential devastating effect that admissions of guilt can have on a client's defense makes a thorough study of the rules on admissions and confessions of primary importance.

Neither side should fall into the trap of thinking that only Fifth Amendment self-incrimination considerations apply. Admissibility of statements may also be closely related to the rules of search and seizure (Fourth Amendment), the right to counsel and speedy trial (Sixth Amendment), and due process and privilege considerations (Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments).

Neither prosecutors nor defense counsel should take police reports reflecting a confession or admission at face value. Both counsel should attempt to interview the police officers about the factors that might have motivated the defendant to make a statement as well as the circumstances under which the statement was obtained. Statements described by police officers as "confessions" are often no more than admissions. Other seemingly innocuous statements not considered important by the police, and therefore not included in the police reports, often exist. The attorneys must talk to the officers to determine the existence and significance of such statements.

No procedural difference between admissions and confessions. In the trial court, there is no difference in the procedural treatment of admissions and confessions. Any relevant statement by a defendant is generally admissible when offered by the prosecution against him or her. Evid C §1220. Confessions and admissions, whether obtained voluntarily or involuntarily, are now subject to the harmless error rule. People v Cahill (1993) 5 C4th 478, 20 CR2d 582.

Introducing statement. The truth-in-evidence provision of the California Constitution (Cal Const art I, §28(f)(2)) abrogates the portion of the corpus delicti rule prohibiting admission of extrajudicial statements without independent proof. People v Alvarez (2002) 27 C4th 1161, 119 CR2d 903. See §§23.41-23.42 for further discussion of proof of corpus delicti.

Statements must be relevant (Evid C §350), properly authenticated (Evid C §§1400-1454), and come within some hearsay exception (for the prosecutor, usually Evid C §1220). Statements must also have been obtained in a manner that was not unconstitutional or otherwise illegal. The following are the most common means of attacking a defendant's statement:

- The defendant is not competent to make a voluntary statement.
- Miranda warnings were required but were not given.
- Miranda warnings were incorrectly given, or an ineffective or incomplete waiver was taken.
- Privilege applies to the defendant's statement.

- The defendant's right to counsel was violated.
- The defendant's statement was obtained during a delay in arraignment.
- The defendant's statement was obtained through physical or mental abuse.
- The defendant's statement resulted from an unlawful detention, arrest, or search (i.e., some Fourth Amendment ground).

§23.2 II. CHART: DEADLINES

Ø Warning: Counsel should consult local rules before relying on this chart. Many counties have specific time requirements not otherwise required by the Penal Code.

Action	Deadline	Authority
Motion to suppress statement because obtained as result of illegal search or seizure.	Same as any other Pen C §1538.5 motion. See deadlines in chap 16.
Common law exclusion motion.	Usually brought as in limine motion in trial court because pretrial ruling not necessarily binding on trial judge. Although pretrial ruling is not always binding on trial judge, judge is not required to hold second hearing, and parties are not entitled to second hearing.	People v Clark (1992) 3 C4th 41, 118, 10 CR2d 554; People v Superior Court (Zolnay) (1975) 15 C3d 729, 125 CR 798; People v Beasley (1967) 250 CA2d 71, 77, 58 CR 485.
Introduction of defendant's statement inconsistent with trial testimony.	During prosecution's rebuttal case.	People v May (1988) 44 C3d 309, 243 CR 369.

§23.3 III. CONFESSIONS AND ADMISSIONS: DEFINITIONS AND DIFFERENCES

A confession is a defendant's statement that contains a complete and express acknowledgment of all facts necessary to establish the defendant's guilt of the crime charged. People v Morse (1969) 70 C2d 711, 721, 76 CR 391. Assuming that there is independent evidence of the crime that satisfies any corpus delicti requirement (see §§23.41-23.42), a confession is, by definition, sufficient evidence to sustain a guilty verdict if believed by the jury. People v Manson (1977) 71 CA3d 1, 42, 139 CR 275; People v Beach (1963) 212 CA2d 486, 492, 28 CR 62.

Ø Note: Even a confession may be susceptible to more than one interpretation. The defendant may be able to give an exculpatory explanation of what was meant when making the statement, or give an exculpatory meaning to the statement by putting it in context.

If a defendant's statement contains facts that amount to a claim of mitigation, justification, or excuse, or fails to admit (at least by inference) every element of the offense, it is only an admission. See People v McClary (1977) 20 C3d 218, 142 CR 163, overruled on other grounds in People v Cahill (1993) 5 C4th 478, 20 CR2d 582 (defendant admitted killing, but claimed it was accidental); People v Maynarich (1978) 83 CA3d 476, 481, 147 CR 823 (defendant admitted stabbing, but claimed that it was unintentional and the result of his consumption of alcohol). Mere admissions fail to express full responsibility for the crime and may show defense counsel where to concentrate in building a defense.

Any extrajudicial statement made by a defendant that tends to prove guilt when considered with the rest of the evidence is an admission, even though nonhearsay, and whether inculpatory or exculpatory. People v Brackett (1991) 229 CA3d 13, 280 CR 305.

Lawyers and judges alike sometimes have the mistaken notion that, for a defendant's statement to qualify as an exception to the hearsay rule, it must contain some admission of guilt; but this is not true. Evidence Code §1220 makes any statement of a party an exception to the hearsay rule if offered by an opposing party; this exception applies to both criminal and civil cases. Thus, a hearsay objection will not bar the prosecutor from introducing a statement made by a criminal defendant. However, even if the statement qualifies under a hearsay exception, such a statement must be relevant to be admitted, i.e., the statement must have a tendency to prove or disprove a disputed fact of consequence to the action. Evid C §§210, 350.

For evidentiary purposes, the distinction between "confession" and "admission" has little practical significance.

§23.4 IV. HOW DEFENSE COUNSEL CAN PREVENT STATEMENTS BY DEFENDANT

When counsel is contacted by defendant. Defense counsel need remember only one basic rule of practice when consulted by a client during a criminal investigation: A client who is the subject of a criminal investigation or accusation must be advised not to speak about the case with anyone without first conferring with his or her attorney and having that attorney present before deciding whether to speak to someone else. The defendant should be told to tell the police he or she wants counsel present for any questions. Counsel should also call the police and advise them of the items set out in the next part of this section.

Counsel may also wish to furnish clients with an "alternative Miranda card" such as that suggested in Amsterdam, Trial Manual 5 for the Defense of Criminal Cases §51 (5th ed 1988):

My lawyer has instructed me not to talk to anyone about my case or anything else, and not to answer questions or reply to accusations. On advice of counsel and on the grounds of my rights under the Fifth and Sixth Amendments, I shall talk to no one in the absence of counsel. I shall not give any consents or make any waivers of my legal rights. Any requests for information or for consent to conduct searches or seizures or investigations affecting my person, papers, property, or effects should be addressed to my lawyer: _ _[name, address, telephone number]_ _. I want all communications with the authorities henceforth to be made only through my lawyer. I request that my lawyer be notified and allowed to be present if any identification confrontations, tests, examinations, or investigations of any sort are conducted in my case, and I do not consent to any such confrontations, tests, examinations, or investigations.

On the right to counsel as it concerns a defendant's statements, see §23.44.

When counsel is contacted by defendant's friends or relatives. When counsel's first contact comes from a relative of a suspect in custody, counsel should immediately call the appropriate arresting, investigative, and custodial agencies to request that any interrogation in progress immediately cease, and to advise them of the following:

- The client is represented by counsel;
- The client has been advised not to speak with anyone (if this has been done) without counsel present;
- The client should not be contacted or interrogated without counsel's consent; and
- Each agency should so inform any additional agency, including out-of-state or federal agencies, of counsel's request (see, e.g., the interjurisdictional problems discussed in cases such as People v Mattson (1984) 37 C3d 85, 207 CR 278).

The police are not required to tell the defendant that counsel called when charges have not yet been filed. Moran v Burbine (1986) 475 US 412, 89 L Ed 2d 410, 106 S Ct 1135. See People v Ledesma (1988) 204 CA3d 682, 691, 251 CR 417. See also §23.44.

Given Moran's holding, counsel should immediately and persistently attempt to see a client in police custody to personally advise the client to remain silent. All rebuffed attempts to see a client should be thoroughly documented. It may still be that, in the appropriate case, due process considerations will convince a court to suppress that which Miranda, as interpreted by Moran, does not. It is also a misdemeanor to refuse an attorney's request to see a client in custody when the prisoner or a relative of the prisoner requested the attorney's assistance. Pen C §825. Although an aggressive detective may not wish to interrupt an interrogation, a jailer may allow the attorney to see the client before the detective gets there because of §825.

Ø Note: Penal Code §825 does not create an independent statutory exclusionary rule. People v Ledesma, supra.

When the defendant is not aware that a lawyer is attempting to stop the interrogation, his or her statements are still admissible unless the questioning police officers' actions somehow deprive the defendant of knowledge essential to the defendant's ability to understand the nature of his or her rights and the consequences of abandoning them. Moran v Burbine, supra; People v Stephens (1990) 218 CA3d 575, 267 CR 66.

§23.5 V. SPOTTING ISSUES CONCERNING DEFENDANT'S STATEMENT

That a defendant in a criminal case has confessed does not end the issue. Both the defense and the prosecution must investigate the circumstances surrounding the taking of the defendant's statement. It is wrong to assume that police reports alone will indicate all possible grounds for suppression of a defendant's statements. Counsel must analyze the following:

The content and legality of the statement

- Is the statement reliable or truthful? See People v Cox (1990) 221 CA3d 980, 987, 270 CR 730.
- Is the statement relevant? See Evid C §§210, 350.
- How does the statement fit into counsel's case?
- Is there an innocent explanation for the statement, e.g., the defendant misunderstood the question or was too drunk to understand it, or is the statement subject to more than one interpretation?
- Is there a hearsay objection? See §23.6.
- Was there a Miranda violation? See §§23.16-23.30.
- Did the police continue to interrogate after an invocation of Miranda? See §§23.23-23.25.
- Was the statement involuntary? See §§23.31-23.32.
- Even if the statement is legally voluntary, can defense counsel provide testimony to jurors that the confession is not worthy of belief because of the physical and psychological environment in which it was obtained? See Crane v Kentucky (1986) 476 US 683, 90 L Ed 2d 636, 106 S Ct 2142.
- Was defendant's right to counsel violated? See §23.44.
- Was the statement a product of unlawful detention, arrest, search, or seizure? See §§23.9-23.10.
- Was the statement obtained during delay in arraignment? See §23.43.
- Was the statement privileged? See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chaps 37-46 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

The credibility of the individual who heard the statement

- If a police officer took the statement, have any complaints of lying or coercing confessions been brought against the officer? See §§11.19-11.24 (Pitchess motions).
- Is a statement by the defendant being reported by an in-custody informant? If so, special rules apply. See Pen C §§1127a, 1191.25, 4001.1, discussed in §17.14.
- Is an in-custody informant acting in violation of Massiah? See §23.44.
- Is the witness a paid informant? If so, the witness can be impeached with proof of any benefits. See People v Allen (1978) 77 CA3d 924, 931, 144 CR 6. For further discussion of informants, see chaps 17 (Motion to Disclose Informant's Identity), 49 (Immunity for Testimony).
- If a non-police officer other than an in-custody informant heard the statement, does the witness have a motive to lie or a bias against the defendant? Can the witness be impeached, e.g., with a prior felony conviction? Has the witness made contrary statements to others that can be used to impeach the witness? Is there evidence that can rehabilitate the witness? For further discussion, see Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chaps 14-16 (character evidence), 19 (credibility) (2d ed Cal CEB 2000).

Ø Note: The prosecutor who promises a benefit to a witness to secure his or her testimony might consider having the witness testify to this fact on direct examination. This tactic avoids making it appear as if something underhanded was done and gets the impeaching information out of the way early, so that the substance of the witness's testimony can then be stressed.

The means and accuracy by which the statement was recorded

- If the statement is in writing, did the defendant sign it?

- If the statement was recorded, did the defendant waive his or her rights on the recording? Was the defendant told that the statement was being recorded? Was the recorder turned off at any time? Was the recording tampered with?
- If the statement was not put in writing or was not transcribed verbatim, can the accuracy of the verbal account of the statement be brought into question? In addition, voice inflection, hesitation, and emotion may change the meaning of the statement and may be open to argument.
- Do written notes exist of police officers or citizens who will testify to a defendant's statement that counsel can obtain through pretrial discovery? These notes may help in cross-examining the witness. Although there is no duty to preserve such notes (People v Tierce (1985) 165 CA3d 256, 264, 211 CR 325), their intentional destruction may violate the Trombetta-Youngblood rule (see People v Goss (1980) 109 CA3d 443, 454, 167 CR 224). Defense counsel should therefore request a court order forbidding the destruction of police officer notes as early in the proceedings as possible.

Ø Note: Prosecutors should encourage the use of recorded statements by law enforcement. Defense attorneys should argue that failure to record a statement makes the accuracy and meaning of the statement subject to question.

The defendant's capacity to confess

- Is the defendant developmentally disabled or mentally ill? See §23.32.
- Did the defendant have the capacity to refrain from making a statement to police? See People v MacPherson (1970) 2 C3d 109, 84 CR 129 (defendant did not have mental capacity to refrain from making admissions). See §23.32.
- Was the defendant insane or incompetent when he or she made the statement? On competence to stand trial, see §§48.7-48.22. On the insanity defense, see §§48.40-48.51.
- Was psychological coercion used on the defendant? See §23.32.
- Was the defendant incapacitated at the time the confession was made because of alcohol or drugs? See People v Johnson (1973) 32 CA3d 988, 1002, 109 CR 118 (defendant was under influence of sodium amytal). See also §§23.32, 48.26, 48.28-48.39.
- What is the defendant's primary language? See People v Cortes (1999) 71 CA4th 62, 83 CR2d 519. See also §23.20.
- Was there a combination of elements that an expert might testify would result in the statement not being the product of a rational intellect and free will? See People v MacPherson, supra. For example, low intelligence, lack of criminal sophistication, a chronic mental disorder, and being under the influence of alcohol or drugs might combine to make a statement involuntary. See §§23.31-23.32.

Other factors

- Is the defendant a public employee, licensee, or contractor who was given use immunity in exchange for the statement? See §23.26.
- Has the prosecutor violated ethical standards by contacting a represented defendant or by permitting law enforcement officers to do so? See §23.52.
- Is the defendant suspected of child abuse or neglect?

VI. ISSUES REGARDING THE INTRODUCTION OF STATEMENTS

§23.6 A. Hearsay Problems

Hearsay exceptions available to the prosecution. Like any extrajudicial (i.e., out-of-court) statement, a defendant's admissions or confessions are hearsay. Evid C §1200. Therefore, they would be inadmissible in court were it not for statutory exceptions to the hearsay rule that permit them to be introduced. These are some of the exceptions available to the prosecution:

- Evid C §1220. "Evidence of a statement is not made inadmissible by the hearsay rule when offered against the declarant in an action to which he is a party."
- Evid C §1221. Adoptive admissions.
- Evid C §1222. Authorized admissions.
- Evid C §1223. A co-conspirator's admissions.

Hearsay exceptions available to the defense. The statutory exceptions that permit the prosecution to introduce a defendant's extrajudicial statements do not allow a defendant to introduce them for his or her own benefit. See Evid C §§1220-1223. As a matter of tactics, the prosecution may decide not to offer a defendant's statement that includes exculpatory elements to encourage the defendant to testify in his or her own defense. When defense counsel wishes to introduce the defendant's extrajudicial statement, exceptions other than §§1220-1223 must be used to make the statement admissible. These are some possibilities:

- Evid C §356. Under the "rule of completeness," whenever a part of an act, declaration, conversation, or writing is given in evidence, the adverse party is entitled to inquire into the rest of the act, declaration, conversation, or writing. The purpose of §356 is to keep evidence in context and to ensure that the trier of fact is not misled by hearing only a partial account of certain evidence.
- Pen C §872(b). Hearsay is admissible at the preliminary hearing to establish probable cause when testified to by qualified law enforcement officers. An honorably retired law enforcement officer may also relate statements of declarants made out of court and offered for the truth of the matter asserted when the statements were made when the honorably retired officer was an active law enforcement officer. See also Cal Const art I, §30(b).

Ø Note: The right to cross-examine a hearsay declarant under Evid C §1203 does not apply to hearsay offered at a preliminary hearing by a law enforcement officer pursuant to Pen C §872(b). Evid C §1203.1.

- Evid C §1236. Prior consistent statements.
- Evid C §1237. Past recollection recorded.
- Evid C §1240. Spontaneous statements.
- Evid C §1241. Contemporaneous statements.
- Evid C §1250. Statements of declarant's then-existing mental or physical state. People v Morales (1989) 48 C3d 527, 551, 257 CR 64.

Nonhearsay. Whether a particular statement is hearsay at all depends on whether it is offered for its truth. The admissibility of a defendant's out-of-court statement that is offered for a nonhearsay purpose may depend on relevancy alone. People v Jackson (1989) 49 C3d 1170, 1187, 264 CR 852 (capital case in which the defense was unconsciousness; defendant's statements to police were properly admitted as nonhearsay evidence because they were not offered for truth that defendant had shot victim, but as circumstantial evidence that defendant had a memory of the shooting). Audio or video recordings of the alleged crime itself are not hearsay and are generally admissible if properly authenticated. People v Patton (1976) 63 CA3d 211, 219, 133 CR 533. Recorded speech relevant to the defendant's degree of intoxication is admissible when his or her mental state is in issue. See People v Filson (1994) 22 CA4th 1841, 1848, 28 CR2d 335, disapproved on other grounds in People v Martinez (1995) 11 C4th 434, 452, 45 CR2d 905.

§23.7 B. Relevance and Authentication

When a defendant's statements are to be used in trial against the defendant, they must also be authenticated. Evid C §§1400-1454. Authentication is the process of laying a foundation to show that the out-of-court statement, whether it is to be presented orally, in writing, or on a recording, is in fact what the proponent claims it to be, i.e., a statement made by the defendant. See Evid C §1400.

For further discussion, see Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chaps 11 (authentication), 45 (relevance) (2d ed Cal CEB 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.8 C. Secondary-Evidence Rule

The secondary-evidence rule (see Evid C §§1521-1523) generally allows the content of a writing to be proved by an original or by "otherwise admissible secondary evidence." Evid C §§1520-1521. Included in the definition of a writing (Evid C §250) are tape recordings (People v Fujita (1974) 43 CA3d 454, 472, 117 CR 757), motion pictures (People v Enskat (1971) 20 CA3d Supp 1, 3, 98 CR 646), and videotapes (People v Moran (1974) 39 CA3d 398, 114 CR 413).

Ø Note: Police failure to tape-record a defendant's statement does not make it inadmissible. People v Holt (1997) 15 C4th 619, 663, 63 CR2d 782; People v Lucas (1995) 12 C4th 415, 442, 48 CR2d 525.

For further discussion of the secondary-evidence rule, see Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chaps 12-13 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000).

VII. PROCEDURES REGARDING THE EXCLUSION OF STATEMENTS

A. Statements Related to Fourth Amendment Issues

§23.9 1. Statements Related to Fourth Amendment Violations May Be Raised by Pen C §1538.5 Motion

Statement suppression motions based solely on the theory that the statement is the product of an unlawful search or seizure must be litigated according to the procedures set out in Pen C §1538.5. People v Johnson (1969) 70 C2d 541, 545, 75 CR 401, modified on a related issue in People v DeVaughn (1977) 18 C3d 889, 899 n8, 135 CR 786; People v Superior Court (Redd) (1969) 275 CA2d 49, 52, 79 CR 704. See also People v Mattson (1990) 50 C3d 826, 858, 268 CR 802. The same is true of statements elicited solely as the result of an illegal detention or arrest. People v Takencareof (1981) 119 CA3d 492, 496, 174 CR 112, disapproved on other grounds in People v Towne (2008) 44 C4th 63, 85, 78 CR3d 530 (unlawful arrest). Likewise, §1538.5 must be used to suppress evidence obtained through a search or seizure based on an unlawfully obtained statement. People v Superior Court (Zolnay) (1975) 15 C3d 729, 735, 125 CR 798; People v Warburton (1970) 7 CA3d 815, 86 CR 894. See chap 16 on search and seizure motions and procedure.

When no search and seizure issue is involved, §1538.5 is not the proper procedural vehicle to use to suppress a statement. Examples of other grounds are inadmissible hearsay, voluntariness, Miranda, and privilege. If a §1538.5 hearing is mistakenly used, that ruling is not binding on the trial court and the issue is not preserved for appeal unless an objection is made at the time the evidence is offered at trial. People v Jennings (1988) 46 C3d 963, 975, 251 CR 278. For discussion of the procedures available to suppress statements when no Fourth Amendment issue is present, see §§23.11-23.14.

Frequently, statement issues are not easily categorized as search and seizure problems as opposed to voluntariness or Miranda problems. For example, a defendant may claim that his or her statement is the fruit of an illegal arrest and was involuntary because of the circumstances surrounding the arrest. An illegal arrest is but one factor in the voluntariness determination and does not necessarily render the statement inadmissible. See People v Boyer (1989) 48 C3d 247, 267, 256 CR 96, disapproved on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394 (defendant's confession was erroneously admitted in violation of Fourth Amendment and Miranda because he was taken to police station for interrogation without probable cause to arrest, was lied to by police, and was interrogated despite his request for lawyer); People v DeVaughn (1977) 18 C3d 889, 898, 135 CR 786.

When a statement is properly challenged by the defense under Pen C §1538.5, the prosecution must adhere to §1538.5 procedures for review of any trial court order. The prosecution cannot ignore a §1538.5 ruling that a statement is inadmissible and then attempt to introduce the statement at trial (see Pen C §1538.5(d)), unless one of the exceptions in Pen C §1538.5(j) exists.

Section 1538.5 rulings on statements are binding on the trial court unless reversed by the pretrial appellate process set out in §1538.5. Pen C §1538.5(i)-(m); Saidi-Tabatabai v Superior Court (1967) 253 CA2d 257, 61 CR 510.

A sample defense motion to suppress a statement as the product of a Fourth Amendment violation is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §23.2 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.10 2. Burden to Be Satisfied in Pen C §1538.5 Motion Concerning Statement

In both federal and California state courts, statements obtained after an illegal Fourth Amendment action (a detention, arrest, search, or seizure) are inadmissible on Fourth Amendment grounds only if they constitute "fruit" of the illegal Fourth Amendment activity. Wong Sun v U.S. (1963) 371 US 471, 9 L Ed 2d 441, 83 S Ct 407. See, e.g., Kaupp v Texas (2003) 538 US 626, 155 L Ed 2d 814, 123 S Ct 1843 (per curiam). The exclusionary rule requires a causal connection between the illegal conduct and the evidence sought to be suppressed. Dunaway v New York (1979) 442 US 200, 218, 60 L Ed 2d 824, 839, 99 S Ct 2248; New York v Harris (1990) 495 US 14, 19, 109 L Ed 2d 13, 21, 110 S Ct 1640.

Even when a statement is shown to be the fruit of a Fourth Amendment violation, factors that intervene between the initial unlawful police act and the later confession or admission may "dissipate the taint," allowing the statement to be admissible. See, e.g., Lozoya v Superior Court (1987) 189 CA3d 1332, 1340, 235 CR 77 (no attenuation). Among the factors to consider are whether a Miranda admonition followed the Fourth Amendment violation and preceded the statements, the amount of time between the illegal police act and when the statements were made, the "purpose and flagrancy of the official misconduct," and any other intervening factors. The burden of showing admissibility rests on the prosecution. Kaupp v Texas, supra; Brown v Illinois (1975) 422 US 590, 603, 45 L Ed 2d 416, 427, 95 S Ct 2254; People v DeVaughn (1977) 18 C3d 889, 135 CR 786; People v Gonzalez (1998) 64 CA4th 432, 446, 75 CR2d 272.

B. Statements Not Involving Fourth Amendment Issues

§23.11 1. Procedures for Raising Statement Errors Not Involving Fourth Amendment Issues

Non-Fourth Amendment violations, e.g., voluntariness, Miranda, hearsay, and privilege objections, can be raised by one or more of the following methods:

Objection at preliminary hearing or at any pretrial hearing at which prosecution attempts to introduce statement. The defense should object to the use of a defendant's extrajudicial statement at every hearing at which the prosecution tries to introduce it. However, it is unclear that an objection always lies, e.g., at a probable cause or bail hearing. See, e.g., In re Martinez (1970) 1 C3d 641, 649, 83 CR 382 (Miranda does not apply to parole revocation hearings).

Such an objection is made on foundational grounds under Evid C §402. Defense counsel may follow this objection by a request to litigate the objection immediately through voir dire examination of the witnesses or may ask the court to allow evidence on the question later in the hearing. However, a judicial decision made before trial is not binding on the trial court, and the prosecution may again offer the evidence, or the defense may again challenge the statement at trial. Saidi-Tabatabai v Superior Court (1967) 253 CA2d 257, 266, 61 CR 510. The trial court has discretion to accept the prior ruling, however, and can preclude the parties from relitigating it depending on the circumstances. People v Clark (1992) 3 C4th 41, 118, 10 CR2d 554; People v Smithson (2000) 79 CA4th 480, 499, 94 CR2d 170 (due process does not require trial court to hold second full evidentiary hearing when defendant renews motion to suppress, as long as trial judge independently reviews record of preliminary hearing and allows defendant to submit any additional evidence not presented to magistrate).

Following a mistrial, a new judge assigned to the case may overrule the previous judge's pretrial ruling on the defendant's motion to suppress, as long as the defendant is given notice and an opportunity to be heard and the revised ruling is not arbitrary or made without reason. People v Riva (2003) 112 CA4th 981, 5 CR3d 649. For reasons of comity and public policy, trial judges should not reverse or modify other trial judges' rulings without a highly persuasive reason to do so. 112 CA4th at 992.

Penal Code §995 motion to set aside information or indictment. This motion is available when a foundational objection at the preliminary hearing was overruled and the resulting holding order was implicitly or explicitly based on the statement. It is also available to attack a statement on which the grand jury relied in reaching an indictment. See Pen C §995.

Pretrial common law motion to exclude. All non-Fourth Amendment statement issues may be litigated by common-law exclusion motions. Griffin v Superior Court (1972) 26 CA3d 672, 696, 103 CR 379. The major drawback to the common law motion is that it may result in prejudicial publicity. See discussion of pretrial publicity in chap 14. Common law motions, like all pretrial motions, should be filed, noticed, and heard before trial in accordance with Cal Rules of Ct 4.111, unless there are local pleading and notice requirements. Cal Rules of Ct 4.111; Griffin v Superior Court, supra. Such motions are heard at the discretion of the court because the court's rulings do not bind the trial judge. People v Beasley (1967) 250 CA2d 71, 77, 58 CR 485. No pretrial appellate or writ relief is available from an adverse ruling on a common law motion. People v Municipal Court (Ahnemann) (1974) 12 C3d 658, 660, 117 CR 20. See also People v Edelbacher (1989) 47 C3d 983, 1005, 254 CR 586; People v Jennings (1988) 46 C3d 963, 975, 251 CR 278; In re Juma P. (1988) 204 CA3d 1228, 251 CR 739.

Unnoticed motion in limine and foundational objections during trial. A motion at trial to suppress a statement is much more common than a pretrial common law motion because it avoids possible prejudicial publicity and is made before the trier of fact. Motions challenging a statement made on the eve of trial or raised as an objection during trial, must be heard, on request, outside the jury's presence. Evid C §402(b); see People v Massey (1976) 59 CA3d 777, 780, 130 CR 581. The proper objection is lack of foundation. See California Trial Objections, chap 21 (Cal CEB Annual). Any hearing on the admissibility of a statement should be conducted out of the jury's presence. Evid C §405; People v Torrez (1987) 188 CA3d 723, 734, 233 CR 627 (trial court ruled that confession was inadmissible after hearing in front of jury; no error, applying People v Watson (1956) 46 C2d 818, 836, 299 P2d 243, standard discussed at §44.36). A sample defense motion to exclude statement is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §23.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

Ø Note: An objection made out of the jury's presence must be made again during trial when the evidence is presented unless the court has specifically agreed on the record that a renewed objection is unnecessary; otherwise, the issue has probably not been preserved for appeal. People v Boyer (1989) 48 C3d 247, 270 n13, 256 CR 96, disapproved on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394.

§23.12 2. Tactical Considerations in Choosing Appropriate Procedural Vehicle

Counsel may use one or more of the procedures listed in §23.11 to litigate the admissibility of a statement that does not involve a Fourth Amendment issue. Choice of procedure is largely a strategic decision, which may be influenced by many factors.

Extent of dispute regarding facts. If facts are not in dispute, leaving only legal issues for resolution, the motion is best heard in the forum with the time and inclination to carefully consider the issues. If, however, counsel expects sharp factual disputes to arise and fears that opposition witnesses may tailor their testimony to counsel's framing of the issues, it may be preferable to present the motion at the first unnoticed opportunity: the preliminary hearing in felony cases or the trial in misdemeanor cases. By proceeding at the preliminary hearing, counsel can obtain a transcript of relatively unrehearsed testimony from the opponent's witnesses. The transcript can be used to impeach these witnesses at later hearings if their testimony changes. Evid C §§770, 1235. Supplemental or contradictory testimony may be presented at the preliminary hearing or saved for a later court hearing, depending on counsel's view of the likelihood of prevailing in each hearing.

> Ø Note: Failure to move for suppression at the preliminary hearing does not constitute a waiver for trial purposes, but it will preclude raising the issue as part of a Pen C §995 dismissal motion or on a related writ.

Importance of statement to prosecution's case. If the prosecution's case depends substantially or entirely on introduction of the statement, timing of the motion can have dramatic effects on the outcome of a case. In a felony case, if the motion is heard before trial begins and results in a ruling favorable to the defense, the prosecution may wish to dismiss before trial to preserve the option of refiling if new evidence becomes available; refiling is precluded if the motion is heard during trial, because jeopardy has attached. US Const amend V, XIV; Cal Const art I, §15; Richard M. v Superior Court (1971) 4 C3d 370, 376, 93 CR 752. Conversely, if defense counsel anticipates a favorable ruling followed by dismissal, he or she will want to bring the motion during trial, not before. See chap 26 on when jeopardy attaches.

> Ø Note: This consideration does not apply in misdemeanor cases, because refiling is generally barred by Pen C §1387 after just one dismissal. See Pen C §1387(b) (exception for domestic violence offense when complaining witness failed to appear after being subpoenaed).

Effect of publicity on jury pool. Pretrial litigation does increase the possibility of publicity that could taint the jury pool. Counsel can move to close the hearing to the press and public and to seal the transcript of the hearing. Allegrezza v Superior Court (1975) 47 CA3d 948, 950, 121 CR 245. The prosecutor, however, has the right to a "public trial." Cal Const art I, §29.

Use in opening statement. Prosecutors often seek to discuss a defendant's "confession" in their opening statement. Defense counsel may seek to use a defendant's out-of-court statement in a positive way in their opening statement. The mention of a defendant's out-of-court statement in counsel's opening statement, before the trial court has ruled on the statement's admissibility, is risky. If the court finds the out-of-court statement inadmissible, the court may sanction the party that mentioned the statement. A mistrial is a possibility. It is therefore the better practice for counsel to seek an in limine ruling on the admissibility of a defendant's out-of-court statement before mentioning it in the opening statement.

§23.13 3. Burden of Proof for Voluntariness and Miranda Issues

The defense has the burden of making the motion, which includes presenting evidence. The burden of proof in both voluntariness and Miranda questions is on the prosecution. People v Dykes (2009) 46 C4th 731, 751, 95 CR3d 78 (Miranda); People v Duren (1973) 9 C3d 218, 237, 107 CR 157 (voluntariness).

§23.14 4. Standard of Proof for Voluntariness and Miranda Issues

The federal preponderance-of-the-evidence standard governs the standard of proof in California for voluntariness and Miranda issues. People v Markham (1989) 49 C3d 63, 71, 260 CR 273. The federal standard is set out in Lego v Twomey (1972) 404 US 477, 30 L Ed 2d 618, 92 S Ct 619.

§23.15 C. Calling Defendant as Witness at Statement Suppression Hearing or at Pen C §1538.5 Hearing Challenging Statement

A defendant's testimony at a suppression hearing may not be used against him or her in the prosecution's case-in-chief at trial. Simmons v U.S. (1968) 390 US 377, 19 L Ed 2d 1247, 88 S Ct 967. It may be used for impeachment. People v Douglas (1977) 66 CA3d 998, 1003, 136 CR 358. The decision to call a defendant to testify at a suppression hearing depends, therefore, on these factors:

- Whether defendant has any credible evidence to offer (if not, defendant should not testify);
- Whether any other witnesses can testify to the same information the defendant has to offer (if they can, they should testify instead of the defendant);
- The existence of prior inconsistent statements by the defendant (if there are any, there might be no point in the defendant's testifying, because the judge would probably find the defendant's present testimony incredible); and
- Whether the defendant will be testifying at the trial (if not, there is no need to worry about anything the defendant says at the suppression hearing being used for impeachment at trial).

Similarly, a defendant's testimony at a Pen C §1538.5 hearing challenging a statement cannot be used against the defendant in the prosecution's case-in-chief at trial (Simmons v U.S., supra), but it can be used for impeachment (People v Douglas (1977) 66 CA3d 998, 1003, 136 CR 358).

VIII. MIRANDA V ARIZONA

§23.16 A. Miranda Rule

In general. Expanding on the constitutional protection against self-incrimination and the right to the assistance of an attorney, it has been held that an accused who is in custody must be informed of the rights to remain silent and to an attorney, including an appointed attorney if the defendant is indigent, before any questioning begins. Miranda v Arizona (1966) 384 US 436, 468, 16 L Ed 2d 694, 720, 86 S Ct 1602. Because a criminal suspect cannot be expected to exercise these rights unless he or she is first made aware of them, the Miranda court held that any evidence resulting from an unwarned in-custody interrogation of the defendant could not be used against the defendant in a criminal proceeding. Later cases have held that statements that violate Miranda may not be used in the prosecution's case-in-chief but may be used for impeachment as long as they were voluntarily made. People v May (1988) 44 C3d 309, 243 CR 369. Such statements may be used for impeachment even when the police officer deliberately fails to honor a suspect's request for counsel for the purpose of securing evidence for impeachment purposes. People v Peevy (1998) 17 C4th 1184, 1200, 73 CR2d 865. See §23.46 for further discussion. However, an officer's intentional violation of Miranda is a factor the court should consider in determining the voluntariness of a confession. People v Neal (2003) 31 C4th 63, 1 CR3d 650.

Limits on Miranda. The Miranda rule does not apply to every situation involving the questioning of a criminal suspect. Generally, three factors must be present: There must be (1) an interrogation, (2) by a police officer or the officer's agent, (3) while the suspect is in police custody. These factors are discussed in §§23.17-23.19. See also §23.25 for exceptions to the Miranda requirement.

For discussion of standing to raise Miranda violations, see §§23.33-23.37.

§23.17 B. Requirement of Interrogation

An "interrogation" is either express questioning or other police actions that are reasonably likely to elicit an incriminating response. Rhode Island v Innis (1980) 446 US 291, 301, 64 L Ed 2d 297, 308, 100 S Ct 1682; People v Underwood (1986) 181 CA3d 1223, 1231, 226 CR 840. Whether particular questioning is in fact an interrogation depends on the "total situation," including the length, place, and time of the questioning, the nature of the questions, the conduct of the police, and all other relevant circumstances. People v Morse (1969) 70 C2d 711, 722, 76 CR 391.

This test is not always easy to apply. See, e.g., People v Gallego (1990) 52 C3d 115, 169, 276 CR 679 (inmate's recorded statements with visitors admissible); People v Lewis (1990) 50 C3d 262, 274, 266 CR 834 (defendant's statements made to police officer were casual conversation and not product of interrogation, even though defendant had been arrested and put in police car before making statements); In re Curt W. (1982) 131 CA3d 169, 178, 182 CR 266 (no interrogation unless police "should have known" that words or actions were reasonably likely to elicit an incriminating response); People v Williams (1982) 128 CA3d 981, 987, 180 CR 734 (no Miranda warnings required when statements were legally recorded by police, in a police vehicle, without questioning); People v Jones (1979) 96 CA3d 820, 827, 158 CR 415 (officer's questions to criminal suspect about medical treatment for suspect did not require Miranda warning because they were not intended to elicit incriminating response); Beaty v Stewart (9th Cir 2002) 303 F3d 975, 988 (defendant's confession to psychiatrist following group counseling program in jail was spontaneous, not result of interrogation).

Questions asked during booking that result in a confession usually require a decision on whether an interrogation occurred. See, e.g., People v O'Sullivan (1990) 217 CA3d 237, 265 CR 784 (deputy sheriff's comment, "I think I have something here," referring to discovery of drugs during booking search, was not functional equivalent of interrogation; comment was addressed to fellow deputy assisting with search, and defendant was never addressed directly); People v Morris (1987) 192 CA3d 380, 387, 237 CR 402 (booking officer went to defendant's cell to give him identifying wristband and asked him several questions for purposes of jail security, including "Who are you accused of killing?"; defendant's confession inadmissible); U.S. v Salgado (9th Cir 2002) 292 F3d 1169, 1172 (when defendant was in custody on state weapons charge, INS agent who questioned him about birthplace and citizenship to ascertain whether he was subject to administrative action for deportation was not required to give Miranda advisement).

To determine whether police conduct constituted an interrogation, the California Supreme Court seems to focus on police intent. See People v Grant (1988) 45 C3d 829, 842, 248 CR 444 (action not taken to elicit incriminating statements will not be considered an interrogation and thus no Miranda warnings required). The court apparently considers this type of issue a factual one and will not disturb the trial court's ruling unless it is palpably erroneous. People v Siripongs (1988) 45 C3d 548, 575, 247 CR 729.

When a represented defendant initiates contact with a detective after previously invoking Miranda and volunteers information, there is no interrogation. People v Stephens (1990) 218 CA3d 575, 581, 267 CR 66 (court found knowing waiver of right to counsel because detective advised defendant to make no statement without counsel, but defendant proceeded voluntarily without interrogation).

§23.18 C. Requirement That Questioning Be by Police Officer or Agent

Civilians. Civilians who are not acting as agents of law enforcement need not advise a criminal suspect of his or her Fifth Amendment and Sixth Amendment rights before questioning, even when the suspect is in custody. Such un-Mirandized statements are admissible against the defendant in court. See In re Deborah C. (1981) 30 C3d 125, 131, 177 CR 852. Although store security guards are not law enforcement officers and therefore need not give Miranda warnings before questioning arrested shoplifters, giving a Miranda-type admonishment is usually encouraged by prosecutors because it can serve as evidence that the suspect's statements were voluntary and not coerced. However, if private security guards do give a suspect the Miranda advice, and the suspect chooses to remain silent, that silence cannot be used at trial to impeach the defendant's testimony. People v Givans (1985) 166 CA3d 793, 212 CR 762.

Police officers and those working for them. Miranda admonishments must be given before questioning when the interrogator is a police officer or someone working for or at the request of the police. In re Eric J. (1979) 25 C3d 522, 527, 159 CR 317. This includes a psychiatrist sent by the prosecutor (People v Anderson (1990) 52 C3d 453, 470, 276 CR 356; People v Montgomery (1965) 235 CA2d 582, 588, 45 CR 475), as well as one appointed by the court on the issue of insanity (In re Spencer (1965) 63 C2d 400, 410, 46 CR 753), or competency to stand trial (Estelle v Smith (1981) 451 US 454, 68 L Ed 2d 359, 101 S Ct 1866).

Conversely, a criminal suspect need not be advised of the Miranda rights before questioning by certain other classes of people not otherwise acting as agents of the police. For instance, medical personnel and social workers asking questions as a part of their duties need not advise a defendant of Miranda rights, even when they know that the defendant has been arrested. People v Battaglia (1984) 156 CA3d 1058, 1064, 203 CR 370 (social worker); People v Salinas (1982) 131 CA3d 925, 937, 182 CR 683 (medical personnel).

Probation officers. Under the truth-in-evidence provision of the California Constitution (Cal Const art I, §28(f)(2)), federal rather than state laws govern the admissibility of a defendant's statements. Under the federal rule of Minnesota v Murphy (1984) 465 US 420, 429 n5, 79 L Ed 2d 409, 421 n5, 104 S Ct 1136, which controls in California (see People v May (1988) 44 C3d 309, 243 CR 369), probation officers need not Mirandize probationers who are not in police custody before questioning them about new offenses. In U.S. v Saechao (9th Cir 2005) 418 F3d 1073, 1081, the Ninth Circuit held that a probationer's inculpatory out-of-custody statements to his probation officer were compelled, and thus inadmissible at trial, when the probationer was subject to a condition of probation that required him to promptly and truthfully answer all reasonable inquiries by the probation officer. The court distinguished that case from a situation in which probation conditions required only that the probationer be "truthful" but did not impose an affirmative obligation to respond to the probation officer's inquiries. 418 F3d at 1078. Whether a probation officer must Mirandize a probationer who is in police custody before questioning him or her about a new offense is an open question. See Minnesota v Murphy (1984) 465 US 420, 429 n5, 79 L Ed 2d 409, 420 n5, 104 S Ct 1136.

California courts have held that statements made to a probation officer during a pre-sentence investigation interview may be used against the defendant, at least in the absence of any evidence that the probation officer threatened the defendant with an unfavorable recommendation if the defendant refuses to give a statement. People v Coffman (2004) 34 C4th 1, 117, 17 CR3d 710; People v Goodner (1992) 7 CA4th 1324, 1330, 9 CR2d 543.

Jailhouse informants. Questions continue to arise over the admissibility of defendants' statements made to jailhouse informants. Most of these cases focus on whether the informant actually questioned a charged defendant in violation of the defendant's Sixth Amendment right to counsel. These cases are analyzed in §§23.23, 23.44. It has been argued that a Miranda claim can also be made if the informant was acting as an agent of the police. Following People v Walker (1988) 47 C3d 605, 628, 253 CR 863, however, Miranda warnings are probably not required. The court in Walker ruled that no Miranda warnings are required when a defendant is questioned by an undercover agent, and is neither under arrest nor in custody at the time because the warnings were designed to dispel the coercive effect of police custodial questioning. Similarly, when a defendant talks to someone not known to him or her to be a police agent, there are no coercive effects. See also §17.14 on in-custody informants.

§23.19 D. Requirement That Suspect Be in Police Custody

"Custody" is defined as a circumstance in which a suspect is "deprived of his freedom of action in any significant way or is led to believe, as a reasonable person, that he is so deprived." People v Arnold (1967) 66 C2d 438, 448, 58 CR 115, overruled on other grounds in Walker v Superior Court (1988) 47 C3d 112, 122, 253 CR 1. For purposes of Miranda, "custody" means that the subject has been formally arrested, or a restraint on freedom of movement of the degree associated with a formal arrest has been imposed. Thompson v Keohane (1995) 516 US 99, 112, 133 L Ed 2d 383, 394, 116 S Ct 457; California v Beheler (1983) 463 US 1121, 1125, 77 L Ed 2d 1275, 1279, 103 S Ct 3517.

"[T]he initial determination of custody depends on the objective circumstances of the interrogation, not on the subjective views harbored by either the interrogating officers or the person being questioned." Stansbury v California (1994) 511 US 318, 323, 128 L Ed 2d 293, 298, 114 S Ct 1526. The test is "how a reasonable man in the suspect's position would have understood his situation." Berkemer v McCarty (1984) 468 US 420, 442, 82 L Ed 2d 317, 336, 104 S Ct 3138.

Because the Miranda custody test is an objective test, consideration of a suspect's age and inexperience with law enforcement, which is subjective, is inappropriate. Yarborough v Alvarado (2004) 541 US 652, 158 L Ed 2d 938, 124 S Ct 2140. In Alvarado, the Court noted that there is an important conceptual difference between the Miranda custody test and the line of cases considering age and experience in other contexts, such as determining the voluntariness of a statement. 541 US at 666, 158 L Ed 2d at 952. The Court did not believe that a police officer should be expected to consider the psychological effect of a particular suspect's past experience with law enforcement in deciding whether to administer Miranda. 541 US at 668, 158 L Ed 2d at 954. According to the Court, the reason for the objective test in the Miranda custody inquiry is "to give clear guidance to the police, while consideration of a suspect's individual characteristics—including his age—could be viewed as creating a subjective inquiry." 541 US at 668, 158 L Ed 2d at 954.

"[E]vidence of the officer's subjective suspicions or beliefs is relevant only… 'if the officer's views or beliefs were somehow manifested to the individual under interrogation and would have affected how a reasonable person in that position would perceive his or her freedom to leave,' or if such evidence is 'relevant in testing the credibility of [the officer's] account of what happened during the interrogation.'" People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830, 38 CR2d 394; Stansbury v California (1994) 511 US 318, 325*,* 128 L Ed 2d 293, 300, 114 S Ct 1526.

Custody for purposes of Miranda can occur even in the absence of a formal arrest. People v Benally (1989) 208 CA3d 900, 911, 256 CR 483 (defendant was considered deprived of his freedom in significant way when police entered his room with passkey, with guns drawn, ordered him out of bed, and began questioning him without giving him Miranda warnings). When no formal arrest takes place, the relevant inquiry is whether a reasonable person would have felt he or she was not at liberty to terminate the interrogation and leave. Thompson v Keohane (1995) 516 US 99, 112, 133 L Ed 2d 383, 394, 116 S Ct 457. In U.S. v Kim (9th Cir 2002) 292 F3d 969, the Ninth Circuit found that, despite the defendant's voluntary entrance into her place of business during the execution of a search warrant, she was "in custody" for Miranda purposes under the totality of the circumstances, including the nature and length of questioning and the officers' conduct: The officers surrounded the defendant, locked her husband out of the store, restricted her communication with her son, and gave orders about what language she should speak and when and where she could sit. The court noted (292 F3d at 976),

> In the Fourth Amendment context, locking doors and restricting the occupants' movement are often reasonable police procedures to control access to a scene during the execution of a search warrant.… But whether an individual detained during the execution of a search warrant has been unreasonably seized for Fourth Amendment purposes and whether that individual is "in custody" for Miranda purposes are two different issues.

The totality of the circumstances is relevant, and no one factor is dispositive. The following are some of the factors to consider when determining whether a defendant believed he or she was free to leave (People v Forster (1994) 29 CA4th 1746, 1753, 35 CR2d 705; People v Herdan (1974) 42 CA3d 300, 306, 116 CR 641):

- The site or location of the interrogation;
- Whether the suspect has been formally arrested;
- Whether the objective indicia of arrest are present;
- Absent formal arrest, the length of the detention;
- The ratio of officers to suspect; and
- The demeanor of the officer, including the nature of the questioning.

The "in custody" determination is based on the "circumstances surrounding the interrogation." Thompson v Keohane, supra (emphasis added). In U.S. v Crawford (9th Cir 2004) 372 F3d 1048, 1059, the court held that, even though the defendant was initially detained during a parole search at his home, his detention ended when he agreed to go to the FBI office for questioning, and once there, because he was expressly told that he was not under arrest and was free to leave, the questioning did not amount to a custodial interrogation. In U.S. v Craighead (9th Cir 2008) 539 F3d 1073, 1089, the court found that a defendant in his own home was in custody for Miranda purposes, even though he was told he was free to leave when the circumstance effected "a police-dominated atmosphere;" i.e., after being escorted to a storage room, the defendant was sitting on a box with an armed guard by the door. See also U.S. v Bassignani (9th Cir 2009) 575 F3d 879, 887 (considering totality of circumstances, while question was "close" one, defendant not in custody when interrogated for over 2 hours in conference room at workplace).

The fact that questioning took place at the police station is not, by itself, determinative. In People v Rich (1988) 45 C3d 1036, 1077, 248 CR 510, the court ruled that the defendant was not in custody during and immediately after taking a polygraph examination at the police station because he had not been arrested, was never told he could not leave, was merely asked to stay and finish talking, and stood up and left after the questions were finished. See also People v Holloway (2004) 33 C4th 96, 120, 14 CR3d 212 (defendant who was handcuffed by parole officer while awaiting arrival of police was not in custody when police removed handcuffs as soon as they arrived, told defendant he was not under arrest, gave him a ride to station, and drove him home after questioning); People v Ochoa (1998) 19 C4th 353, 401, 79 CR2d 408 (defendant who sat unguarded in public waiting room was not in custody for purpose of agreeing to polygraph); In re Kenneth S. (2005) 133 CA4th 54, 66, 34 CR3d 430 (minor brought to police station by foster mother and questioned alone in room was not in custody; detective told minor that he was not under arrest and was free to leave); People v Fradiue (2000) 80 CA4th 15, 21, 95 CR2d 1 (defendant inmate under investigation for possession of heroin in state prison was not subjected to "custodial" interrogation when he was uncuffed and correctional officer remained outside his cell and informed him he was free to walk away from cell door and stop talking to officer at any time; under totality of circumstances, no restraints were placed on defendant over and above those normally associated with his inmate status, and thus Miranda warnings were not required); People v Macklem (2007) 149 CA4th 674, 696, 57 CR3d 237 (under totality of circumstances, defendant detained on murder charge was not in custody for Miranda purposes when questioned uncuffed in interview room about separate jailhouse assault); People v Spears (1991) 228 CA3d 1, 25, 278 CR 506; People v Inman (1986) 186 CA3d 1137, 1141, 231 CR 265 (defendant on bail called detective, set up appointment, came to police station to talk, and left after conversation held; no custody); People v Anthony (1986) 185 CA3d 1114, 230 CR 268 (incarcerated defendant found not in custody for Miranda purposes when he phoned police and volunteered statements); Saleh v Fleming (9th Cir 2008) 512 F3d 548, 551 (same). See also California v Beheler (1983) 463 US 1121, 1124, 77 L Ed 2d 1275, 1279, 103 S Ct 3517; Oregon v Mathiason (1977) 429 US 492, 50 L Ed 2d 714, 97 S Ct 711.

A detention short of arrest does not necessarily invoke Miranda. Berkemer v McCarty (1984) 468 US 420, 82 L Ed 2d 317, 104 S Ct 3138; California v Beheler, supra; In re Victor B. (1994) 24 CA4th 521, 524, 29 CR2d 362; People v Montoya (1981) 125 CA3d 807, 178 CR 211; People v Hubbard (1970) 9 CA3d 827, 833, 88 CR 411; People v Manis (1969) 268 CA2d 653, 74 CR 423. Even when an officer develops a rational suspicion that a detained suspect may be armed, and "frisks" or "pats down" the suspect for weapons, there is no requirement that a Miranda admonishment be given. In re Richard C. (1979) 89 CA3d 477, 490, 152 CR 787. However, the closer the situation approaches that nebulous point where "probable cause" has been reached, the more likely Miranda warnings will be required. People v Ceccone (1968) 260 CA2d 886, 67 CR 499.

The fact that questioning takes place over the phone has been found inconsistent with a "custody" finding. People v Murphy (1972) 8 C3d 349, 361, 105 CR 138; People v Strohl (1976) 57 CA3d 347, 364, 129 CR 224. Similarly, no Miranda warning is necessary when police are negotiating by telephone with a defendant who has barricaded himself or herself in a building with a hostage. See People v Mayfield (1997) 14 C4th 668, 732, 60 CR2d 1.

§23.20 E. Sufficiency and Form of Advice of Rights

Whether the words used in giving suspects their Miranda rights sufficiently inform suspects of their constitutional rights must be considered. A person in custody "must be informed in clear and unequivocal terms" of the following:

- The right to remain silent;
- Anything said can and will be used against him or her in court;
- The right to consult with a lawyer and to have the lawyer present during any interrogation. Miranda v Arizona (1966) 384 US 436, 469, 16 L Ed 2d 694, 721, 86 S Ct 1602. See People v Hinds (1984) 154 CA3d 222, 235, 201 CR 104 (attempting in any way to dissuade suspect from seeking advice or assistance of counsel is Miranda violation); People v Stewart (1968) 267 CA2d 366, 378, 73 CR 484 (Miranda advisement insufficient because suspect not told he had right to have attorney present during questioning).
- An attorney will be appointed to represent the defendant if he or she is indigent. People v Diaz (1983) 140 CA3d 813, 819, 189 CR 784. There is no need to inform a defendant of the right to have an appointed lawyer present during questioning if the defendant is told of the right to be represented by a lawyer, to have an attorney present before and during questioning, and to have an attorney appointed free of charge if the defendant cannot afford to hire an attorney. People v Thompson (1990) 50 C3d 134, 164, 266 CR 309. In Duckworth v Eagan (1989) 492 US 195, 203, 106 L Ed 2d 166, 177, 109 S Ct 2875, the Supreme Court said it is sufficient to inform a defendant that he or she has the right to have an attorney appointed "if and when" he or she goes to court.

There is no requirement that a defendant be told of the actual charge pending against him or her (People v Boyde (1988) 46 C3d 212, 240, 250 CR 83) or of all possible crimes concerning which he or she may be questioned (Colorado v Spring (1987) 479 US 564, 93 L Ed 2d 954, 107 S Ct 851; People v Henderson (1990) 225 CA3d 1129, 1159, 275 CR 837, overruled on other grounds in People v Davis (1994) 7 C4th 797, 814, 30 CR2d 50).

No magic wording is required to make a Miranda warning legally sufficient. It is only necessary that the suspect be fully and unambiguously advised. See People v Bradford (2008) 169 CA4th 843, 854, 86 CR3d 866 (omission of one of four warnings made confession inadmissible). Warnings in a form equivalent to the language in the Miranda decision are sufficient. California v Prysock (1981) 453 US 355, 359, 69 L Ed 2d 696, 701, 101 S Ct 2806; People v Kelly (1990) 51 C3d 931, 947, 275 CR 160. In U.S. v San Juan-Cruz (9th Cir 2002) 314 F3d 384, the defendant, an illegal alien, was given two different and conflicting warnings, one after another: first, his administrative rights under 8 CFR §287.3, including the right to an attorney during questioning, but not at government expense, in connection with his deportation proceedings; second, his Miranda rights, including the right to a court-appointed attorney. The Ninth Circuit held that the warnings were confusing and inadequate because the defendant could not reasonably ascertain whether he could or could not retain the services of an attorney for free. 314 F3d at 387.

Although it is preferable for the police to read Miranda rights to everyone, no matter how many times they have been arrested, the courts will not throw out a confession when the defendant interrupts the police and recites the Miranda rights if it is clear from the record that the defendant knew what the Miranda rights were. People v Nitschmann (1995) 35 CA4th 677, 680, 41 CR2d 325.

Inadequate warnings that follow an adequate warning will not necessarily invalidate a confession obtained after the second (inadequate) admonishment if the defendant waived his or her rights after each admonishment, and the warnings were close in time. People v Duren (1973) 9 C3d 218, 242, 107 CR 157.

Most law enforcement agencies use a preprinted card from which they read the suspect his or her rights. Officers who attempt to advise a suspect of the Miranda rights from memory are vulnerable to what is sometimes very embarrassing cross-examination when, under the pressure of testifying, they do not recall the exact wording of the warning given or cannot recall whether all the rights were in fact recited to the suspect.

Common form of advisement. Defendants are commonly advised in the following form:

1. You have the right to remain silent.

2. If you give up the right to remain silent, anything you do say can and will be used in court against you.

3. You have the right to speak with an attorney of your choice before questioning, and to have the attorney present during questioning.

4. If you cannot afford an attorney, one will be appointed for you by the court before any questioning, if you so desire. The attorney will not cost you anything; the services are free.

Because the prosecution has the burden of proving that the defendant made a knowing and intelligent waiver of his or her rights (People v Lilliock (1965) 62 C2d 618, 621, 43 CR 699), police officers should ask two additional questions:

5. Do you understand each of these rights that I have explained to you?

6. Having in mind and understanding your rights as I have told you, are you willing to talk to me?

Foreign language advisement. Advisement of rights in a foreign language may result in an insufficient advisement if the proper words are not used. People v Diaz (1983) 140 CA3d 813, 822, 189 CR 784 (Spanish word for "to get" was used instead of "to afford" (an attorney); advisement held to be insufficient); U.S. v Perez-Lopez (9th Cir 2003) 348 F3d 839, 848 (as translated from Spanish to English, Miranda warning advising defendant that he had the right to "solicit" court for attorney if he had no funds implied that request might be rejected and, thus, did not properly convey government's obligation to appoint attorney for indigent accused). But see People v Cortes (1999) 71 CA4th 62, 70, 83 CR2d 519 (risk of "cultural misunderstanding" minimal when certified bilingual officer gave Miranda advisement to Spanish-speaking defendant, and defendant indicated no uncertainty or confusion).

Ø Note: When litigating the sufficiency of a foreign language advisement, counsel should consult with an expert interpreter, certified or registered under Govt C §§68560-68566, and take care to establish an accurate and detailed trial court record, e.g., by recording the interpreted portion of the trial. On appeal, the trial court's findings on the sufficiency of a foreign language advisement will be upheld if supported by the record. People v Marquez (1992) 1 C4th 553, 571, 3 CR2d 710.

Advisement to minors. The police have no duty to advise a minor that he or she may call his or her parents. In re Charles P. (1982) 134 CA3d 768, 772, 184 CR 707. However, juvenile arrests trigger certain statutory advisement requirements (Welf & I C §§625-641; 18 USC §5033). See §23.28.

Advisement to aliens. International law requires that arrested aliens be advised of the right to contact their consulate (see also Pen C §834c). Failure to advise an arrestee of this right, however, does not require suppression of a postarrest, properly Mirandized statement. People v Corona (2001) 89 CA4th 1426, 1429, 108 CR2d 210.

§23.21 F. Assertion of Miranda Rights

A request for an attorney automatically invokes the privilege to remain silent. People v Soto (1984) 157 CA3d 694, 705, 204 CR 204. The request for an attorney must be made in response to interrogation; thus, a request for counsel upon arrest does not invalidate a later waiver during interrogation. People v Buskirk (2009) 175 CA4th 1436, 1450, 96 CR3d 889. On the difference between requesting an attorney and invoking the right to remain silent, see §23.23. Any other words or conduct that are inconsistent with a present willingness to discuss the case freely and completely with the police may also be an invocation of that right, depending on the circumstances. People v Soto, supra; People v Duran (1983) 140 CA3d 485, 492, 189 CR 595.

A suspect must unambiguously request counsel with sufficient clarity that a reasonable police officer under the circumstances would understand the statement to be a request for an attorney. Davis v U.S. (1994) 512 US 452, 454, 129 L Ed 2d 362, 368, 114 S Ct 2350 (ambiguous mid-interview comment—"maybe I should talk to a lawyer"—following clear waiver not deemed unequivocal request for counsel; proper for officers to clarify that defendant was not asking for lawyer); Clark v Murphy (9th Cir 2003) 331 F3d 1062 (suspect's statement—"I think I would like to talk to a lawyer"—was not unambiguous invocation of right to counsel); People v Gonzalez (2005) 34 C4th 1111, 1125, 23 CR3d 295 (suspect's statement to interrogating officers that he wanted a lawyer if he were going to be charged was, at best, ambiguous and equivocal because reasonable police officer under circumstances would not have known if suspect would be charged, since charging decision not made by police); People v Simons (2007) 155 CA4th 948, 957, 66 CR3d 571 (defendant's questions regarding how long it would take for attorney to get there if he asked for one were not unequivocal invocation of right to counsel). The analysis of whether a defendant unambiguously waived his or her rights is an objective one. A police officer's subjective view concerning whether the defendant waived his or her rights is irrelevant to the analysis. People v Roquemore (2005) 131 CA4th 11, 27, 31 CR3d 214.

The importance of the context in which the suspect's statement is made, rather than the actual statement itself, is illustrated by People v Jennings (1988) 46 C3d 963, 978, 251 CR 278. There, during the course of an interrogation, a suspect said he did not want to talk to the police because they were scaring him. The court acknowledged that the claim that the suspect had invoked his rights appeared meritorious based on the transcript alone. However, there was a videotape of the interrogation. Viewing the tape established that the remarks were made in anger to one of the three officers doing the interrogation and that the suspect was merely indicating he was not going to respond to that officer anymore—not that he was invoking his right to remain silent.

The following are examples of conduct that has been considered to be assertion of the right to remain silent:

- Refusal to sign a written waiver form. People v Fioritto (1968) 68 C2d 714, 717, 68 CR 817, overruled on other grounds in People v Cahill (1993) 5 C4th 478, 509 n17, 20 CR2d 582. But see People v Maier (1991) 226 CA3d 1670, 277 CR 667, discussed below.
- Refusal to continue participation in an interrogation already in progress. People v Randall (1970) 1 C3d 948, 955, 83 CR 658, overruled on other grounds in People v Cahill (1993) 5 C4th 478, 509 n17, 20 CR2d 582.
- Making a telephone call to his or her attorney. People v Randall, supra.
- An adult's "repeated and insistent pleas" to call his or her parents. People v Soto (1984) 157 CA3d 694, 705, 204 CR 204.

The following are examples of conduct that has been held not to invoke the privilege to remain silent:

- A suspect's refusal to sign a waiver form or to allow his or her statements to be tape-recorded, unless refusal is accompanied by other circumstances disclosing a clear intent to speak privately and in confidence to others. People v Johnson (1993) 6 C4th 1, 25, 23 CR2d 593 (no invocation when defendant expressly consented to be interviewed after remarking, "No tape recorder. I don't want to incriminate myself"); People v Samayoa (1997) 15 C4th 795, 829, 64 CR2d 400 (follows Johnson); People v Maier (1991) 226 CA3d 1670, 1678, 277 CR 667 (refusal to sign written waiver or be recorded was not an invocation of right to silence). But see People v Fioritto, supra. A refusal to sign a written waiver form is looked at in context with other facts.

- An 18-year-old suspect's question "Can I call a lawyer or my mom to talk to you?" People v Roquemore (2005) 131 CA4th 11, 25, 31 CR3d 214.
- A suspect's request for clarification of Miranda rights (People v Hart (1999) 20 C4th 546, 642, 85 CR2d 132; People v Crittenden, supra; People v Maynarich (1978) 83 CA3d 476, 481, 147 CR 823), unless the clarification request follows a valid invocation of the Miranda rights (Smith v Illinois (1984) 469 US 91, 83 L Ed 2d 488, 105 S Ct 490).

Suspect's ambiguous response. The police may seek clarification of a suspect's ambiguous response to a Miranda admonition. People v Farnam (2002) 28 C4th 107, 181, 121 CR2d 106 (defendant's prearrest refusal to answer officer's investigatory questions, not made in response to Miranda advisement, warranted clarification); People v Box (2000) 23 C4th 1153, 1195, 99 CR2d 69 (defendant's statement to officer that either an attorney or his attorney had told him not to speak with anyone was sufficiently ambiguous to justify officer's clarification whether defendant was exercising right to remain silent or right to counsel). The Ninth Circuit has held that, absent any prior waiver, an officer has a duty to clarify a suspect's ambiguous assertion of Miranda rights before further questioning. U.S. v Rodriguez (9th Cir 2008) 518 F3d 1072, 1080 (defendant's response of "I'm good for tonight" after being read Miranda rights was ambiguous and required further clarification).

An effort to clarify an ambiguous response may not be made in an attempt to talk a suspect into changing his or her mind after an invocation of the rights. People v Carey (1986) 183 CA3d 99, 103, 227 CR 813. A police attempt to clarify a suspect's response (known as the "clarification rule") "requires ambiguity as a precedent." 183 CA3d at 103. See Anderson v Terhune (9th Cir 2008) 516 F3d 781, 787 (defendant's statement, "I plead the Fifth," was not ambiguous). An officer may not inquire into the reason a suspect wishes to invoke his or her rights. People v Peracchi (2001) 86 CA4th 353, 360, 102 CR2d 921. Remarks that courts have found to be ambiguous include the following:

- An interrogated suspect's refusal to answer only some of the questions asked. People v Silva (1988) 45 C3d 604, 629, 247 CR 573; People v Turnage (1975) 45 CA3d 201, 210, 119 CR 237.
- A defendant's statement that she was calling her lawyer made during her arrest. People v Nguyen (2005) 132 CA4th 350, 357, 33 CR3d 390.
- A request by a criminally sophisticated suspect to see a third person other than an attorney. People v Robertson (1982) 33 C3d 21, 39, 188 CR 77.
- A minor's request to have his or her probation officer present during questioning. Fare v Michael C. (1979) 442 US 707, 61 L Ed 2d 197, 99 S Ct 2560.
- Indicating a desire to leave the office where the interrogation is taking place. People v Rich (1988) 45 C3d 1036, 1078, 248 CR 510.
- A suspect's statement before submitting to a polygraph that, if he was going to be charged, he wanted to talk to an attorney. People v Gonzalez (2005) 34 C4th 1111, 1116, 23 CR3d 295.
- A suspect's statements that his lawyer had told him not to talk. People v Thompson (1990) 50 C3d 134, 165, 266 CR 309 (court interpreted comments as explanation of why defendant was willing to proceed without counsel).

§23.22 G. Sufficiency of Waiver; Capacity to Waive

Sufficiency of waiver. An express waiver of one's Miranda rights is not necessarily required. Waiver may be implied from the circumstances when, after a full advisement and acknowledgment of rights, the defendant freely submits to questioning. North Carolina v Butler (1979) 441 US 369, 373, 60 L Ed 2d 286, 292, 99 S Ct 1755; People v Whitson (1998) 17 C4th 229, 247, 70 CR2d 321. A waiver will not be presumed, however, simply from an accused's silence after being advised, or because a confession was in fact later obtained, if the surrounding circumstances do not support that conclusion. Miranda v Arizona (1966) 384 US 436, 475, 16 L Ed 2d 694, 724, 86 S Ct 1602; People v Johnson (1969) 70 C2d 541, 557, 75 CR 401. The better practice is for police officers to ask a suspect if he or she understands the rights as explained and whether the suspect is willing to waive them. Requesting clarification is not an invocation of the Miranda rights. People v Bestelmeyer (1985) 166 CA3d 520, 526, 212 CR 605; People v Maynarich (1978) 83 CA3d 476, 481, 147 CR 823. A request for clarification, if correctly answered, would seem to provide even clearer evidence of the defendant's understanding of his or her rights and a knowing waiver.

A waiver that results from a "clever softening-up" of the suspect, such as by involving him or her in an "ingratiating conversation" before giving the Miranda advisement, will likely result in any statement being held to be involuntary. People v Honeycutt (1977) 20 C3d 150, 160, 141 CR 698. An involuntary waiver is invalid. See §23.31.

Capacity to waive. To be valid, a waiver of one's rights under Miranda must be knowingly and intelligently made. In re Schlette (1965) 232 CA2d 407, 412, 42 CR 708. The defendant may not have been capable of waiving his or her rights. Some of the possible reasons counsel might wish to raise follow:

- The defendant has low intelligence.
- The defendant was under the influence of alcohol or drugs.
- The defendant is not fluent in the language of the advisement. See §23.20.
- The defendant was insane or suffering from some other disabling mental condition. U.S. v Bradshaw (DC Cir 1991) 935 F2d 295, 298; Derrick v Peterson (9th Cir 1990) 924 F2d 813, 824.

The court will look to the defendant's actions and words at the time of the confession, and will consider the testimony of any experts on the issue, in deciding whether any of these factors affected the defendant's waiver. People v Marshall (1990) 50 C3d 907, 925, 269 CR 269 (defendant's hypertension and medication did not affect his waiver); People v Jackson (1989) 49 C3d 1170, 1189, 264 CR 852 (voluntary ingestion of PCP insufficient under the circumstances).

In determining whether a minor has the capacity to make a valid waiver, the court will consider such factors as the minor's age, intelligence, education, experience, and ability to comprehend the meaning and effect of making a statement. People v Lara (1967) 67 C2d 365, 385, 62 CR 586; In re John S. (1988) 199 CA3d 441, 245 CR 17.

In Colorado v Connelly (1986) 479 US 157, 159, 93 L Ed 2d 473, 479, 107 S Ct 515, the Supreme Court ruled that a defendant's mental condition by itself does not necessarily render a Miranda waiver involuntary. In this regard Miranda protects only against police coercion. However, a Miranda waiver must be knowing and intelligent as well as voluntary.

A defendant can waive his or her Miranda rights concerning an oral confession while asserting those rights concerning a written statement. Connecticut v Barrett (1987) 479 US 523, 527, 93 L Ed 2d 920, 927, 107 S Ct 828.

§23.23 H. Effect of Request for Counsel Versus Invocation of Right to Remain Silent; Difference Between Fifth and Sixth Amendment Right to Counsel

Effect of request for counsel versus invocation of right to remain silent. As soon as a suspect asserts the right to counsel, all questioning must cease until an attorney is present. Minnick v Mississippi (1990) 498 US 146, 112 L Ed 2d 489, 111 S Ct 486; Edwards v Arizona (1981) 451 US 477, 484, 68 L Ed 2d 378, 386, 101 S Ct 1880; Miranda v Arizona (1966) 384 US 436, 473, 16 L Ed 2d 694, 723, 86 S Ct 1602; People v Ireland (1969) 70 C2d 522, 537, 75 CR 188. This is the suspect's Fifth Amendment right to counsel. Minnick v Mississippi, supra. It bars further police questioning on both the crime charged (People v Montano (1991) 226 CA3d 914, 277 CR 327) and any unrelated offenses (Arizona v Roberson (1988) 486 US 675, 100 L Ed 2d 704, 108 S Ct 2093), as long as the defendant remains in custody (Minnick v Mississippi, supra). This is true even if the officer conducting the second questioning is unaware that the defendant was Mirandized earlier and requested counsel. Arizona v Roberson, 486 US at 687, 100 L Ed 2d at 717. Further attempts at interrogating the defendant are forbidden. 486 US at 687, 100 L Ed 2d at 717.

Readmonishing the suspect will not produce evidence that is admissible in the prosecution's case-in-chief (People v Smith (1983) 34 C3d 251, 265, 193 CR 692; People v Fioritto (1968) 68 C2d 714, 719, 68 CR 817, overruled on other grounds in People v Cahill (1993) 5 C4th 478, 509 n17, 20 CR2d 582), but it will be admissible for impeachment purposes (Michigan v Harvey (1990) 494 US 344, 351, 108 L Ed 2d 293, 303, 110 S Ct 1176). The purpose of this rule is to protect against wearing the defendant down by repeated attempts to get him or her to answer questions. See also People v Boyer (1989) 48 C3d 247, 270, 256 CR 96, disapproved on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394 (egregious example of continued questioning by overbearing police officers despite defendant's invocation of Miranda rights). Questioning may not be later resumed merely because defendant has been provided with the opportunity or did in fact consult with an attorney in response to his or her request. The attorney must be present during the questioning. Minnick v Mississippi, supra.

Once a suspect in custody invokes the right to counsel, subsequent statements to police are presumed involuntary and inadmissible if obtained in an encounter initiated by police in the absence of counsel. Edwards v Arizona (1981) 451 US 477, 481, 68 L Ed 2d 378, 384, 101 S Ct 1880. A 14-day break in custody vitiates the Edwards no-recontact rule. Maryland v Shatzer (2010) ___ US ___, 175 L Ed 2d 1045, 130 S Ct 1213. However, a defendant who has experienced a 14-day break in custody after invoking Miranda can still claim that any subsequent waiver of his or her Miranda rights was in fact involuntary. 175 L Ed 2d at 1057 n7.

In contrast to a request for counsel, a suspect's assertion only of the right to remain silent does not preclude later police questioning on a separate case, as long as the police "scrupulously honor" the defendant's wish not to discuss the original case by immediately terminating the questioning. McNeil v Wisconsin (1991) 501 US 171, 175, 115 L Ed 2d 158, 166, 111 S Ct 2204; Michigan v Mosley (1975) 423 US 96, 102, 46 L Ed 2d 313, 320, 96 S Ct 321; People v DeLeon (1994) 22 CA4th 1265, 1269, 27 CR2d 818.

Differences between Fifth Amendment and Sixth Amendment right to counsel. An important distinction has arisen between invocations of the Fifth Amendment and Sixth Amendment rights to counsel. The Fifth Amendment right to counsel arises when a suspect requests a lawyer in response to a Miranda warning. Edwards v Arizona, supra. The Fifth Amendment precludes subsequent police approaches and questioning on any subject when the defendant who remains in custody invokes the right to counsel. Arizona v Roberson (1988) 486 US 675, 687, 100 L Ed 2d 704, 717, 108 S Ct 2093.

The Sixth Amendment provides a right to counsel at each "critical stage" of the proceedings, even when there is no interrogation and no Fifth Amendment applicability. Montejo v Louisiana (2009) ___ US ___, 173 L Ed 2d 955, 963, 129 S Ct 2079. For discussion of critical stages, see §3.2. The Sixth Amendment right to counsel arises when a suspect is charged and seeks or is appointed counsel. When counsel is appointed for an indigent defendant who has not requested that appointment, the defendant has not "elected" to exercise the right to counsel and questioning is allowed, unless the defendant has specifically invoked the Fifth Amendment right to counsel. Montejo v Louisiana (2009) ___ US ___, 173 L Ed 2d 955, 965, 129 S Ct 2079.

Counsel should advise clients to request an attorney after receiving a Miranda warning. If a client did not request an attorney at the time of the warning, counsel should have the client invoke his or her right to counsel and right to remain silent under Miranda v Arizona, supra, and Edwards v Arizona, supra, in court, on the record, at the earliest opportunity. A sample form is in California Criminal Law Forms Manual §23.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2005).

§23.24 I. Multiple Interrogations and Admonitions

Contemporaneous questioning period. Once a suspect is properly admonished and has chosen to talk to the police, a new warning is not necessary before each subsequent interrogation as long as each questioning period is reasonably contemporaneous with the prior one. People v Smith (2007) 40 C4th 483, 504, 54 CR3d 245 (readvisement unnecessary when defendant reinterviewed less than 12 hours after first interview, defendant remained in custody between interrogations, interrogations conducted by same officers, and defendant was asked whether he remembered the Miranda warnings); People v Mickle (1991) 54 C3d 140, 170, 284 CR 511 (readvisement of Miranda rights unnecessary when defendant was reinterviewed in the hospital 36 hours after he had twice received and twice waived his rights and when reinterview was conducted by the same two officers who had previously interrogated defendant at the police station); People v Johnson (1969) 70 C2d 469, 477, 74 CR 889 (one warning may be sufficient); People v Riva (2003) 112 CA4th 981, 993, 5 CR3d 649 (suspect's statement "I don't want to say anything else right now" indicated that he might be willing to talk later; officer did not violate Miranda by initiating further questioning an hour later; readvisement not required given that both interrogations were conducted by same officer and suspect's presumed sophistication with law enforcement based on education (college student) and prior juvenile arrest experience). Renewed questioning without readmonishment the next day may be valid (People v Sievers (1967) 255 CA2d 34, 37, 62 CR 841), but 3 days later is probably invalid (People v Quirk (1982) 129 CA3d 618, 625, 181 CR 301). See also U.S. v Rodriguez-Preciado (9th Cir 2005) 399 F3d 1118, 1128, as amended by 416 F3d 939 (readvisement of Miranda rights unnecessary during second day of interrogation that began 16 hours after original waiver of rights). Although it is the better practice to readmonish the suspect before continuing the questioning, it is not necessary absent evidence that indicates that the defendant was acting in ignorance of his or her rights. In re Frank C. (1982) 138 CA3d 708, 714, 188 CR 68.

That a person is questioned in violation of Miranda before a proper admonishment is but one factor to look at in determining whether the Miranda waiver was voluntary. Oregon v Elstad (1985) 470 US 298, 84 L Ed 2d 222, 105 S Ct 1285; People v Gastile (1988) 205 CA3d 1376, 1384, 253 CR 283, disapproved on other grounds in People v Wrest (1992) 3 C4th 1088, 1104, 13 CR2d 511. The defendant has the burden of proving that the second confession was obtained by exploitation of the earlier illegality. If the defendant makes this showing, the burden shifts to the prosecution to prove that the taint has been purged and that the evidence is admissible in spite of the primary illegality. People v Beardslee (1991) 53 C3d 68, 108, 279 CR 276.

Two-step interrogation process. If a defendant is first engaged in un-Mirandized but uncoerced conversation, then later gives a statement following a voluntary and informed waiver, the second statement is admissible. Oregon v Elstad, supra; People v Bradford (1997) 14 C4th 1005, 1040, 60 CR2d 225 (continued interrogation after defendant invokes right to counsel does not inherently constitute coercion). See also Garvin v Farmon (9th Cir 2001) 258 F3d 951 (second interrogation not tainted by earlier interrogation 3 days before that was tainted by numerous violations). In Missouri v Seibert (2004) 542 US 600, 159 L Ed 2d 643, 124 S Ct 2601, the Court held that the Elstad rule did not apply to a confession the police secured through a two-step interrogation process designed to circumvent Miranda. In Seibert, the police deliberately omitted the Miranda advisements during an initial interrogation in which the suspect confessed. This was followed by a second interrogation in which the suspect was Mirandized and questioned about statements made in the first interview. The incriminating statements made during the second interview were inadmissible.

See §23.46 for discussion of deliberate violations of Miranda. See §23.30 for discussion of the applicability of the "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine to Miranda violations.

Voluntary reinitiation of questioning. When a suspect voluntarily reinitiates the questioning, despite an earlier invocation of his or her rights, any later statements are proper. People v Marshall (1990) 50 C3d 907, 923, 269 CR 269 (defendant invoked right to counsel, then reopened dialogue with police and waived rights; proper); People v Inman (1986) 186 CA3d 1137, 1141, 231 CR 265 (defendant out of custody and returned to police station only to claim belongings; confession proper despite earlier request for counsel); People v Dominick (1986) 182 CA3d 1174, 1188, 227 CR 849 (court upheld confession because second interview initiated by defendant, despite falsehood); Pollard v

Galaza (9th Cir 2002) 290 F3d 1030, 1035 (when defendant initially invoked right to remain silent but then initiated further conversation, officer's deliberate Miranda violation—because officer knew statements could be used for impeachment at trial—did not constitute coercive conduct per se).

An accused initiates questioning when he or she "speaks words or engages in conduct that can be 'fairly said to represent a desire' on his or her part 'to open up a more generalized discussion relating directly or indirectly to the investigation.'" People v Mickey (1991) 54 C3d 612, 648, 286 CR 801. See, e.g., People v Waidla (2000) 22 C4th 690, 730, 94 CR2d 396 (after suspect was detained and invoked right to counsel, suspect initiated further communication the next day by spontaneously asking detective questions to the effect of, "What can I do for you?," "What do you want from me?," and "What can I do to help you?").

Continued interrogation in violation of Miranda. In People v Neal (2003) 31 C4th 63, 1 CR3d 650, the officer in his initial custodial interrogation of the defendant intentionally continued questioning in deliberate violation of Miranda despite the defendant's repeated invocation of his right to remain silent and right to counsel (nine times). The officer also badgered the defendant, accusing him of lying, and telling him, "this is your one chance" and "if you don't try and cooperate… the system is going to stick it to you as hard as they can." The defendant made only exculpatory statements in the initial session and was kept in jail overnight without access to counsel or noncustodial personnel and without food or drink or toilet facilities. The next morning, the defendant asked to speak to the officer, who met with him and resumed questioning and ultimately obtained two confessions from the defendant. The court found that in light of all the surrounding circumstances—including the officer's deliberate violation of Miranda; the fact that the defendant remained in custody without being provided access to counsel before requesting to speak to the officer; the defendant's youth, inexperience, minimal education, and low intelligence; the deprivation and isolation imposed on the defendant during his confinement; and the promise and threat the officer made to the defendant during the initial interrogation after questioning should have ceased—the defendant's initiation of further contact with the officer, and the two subsequent confessions, were involuntary. The court held that the confessions were not only inadmissible in the prosecution's case-in-chief because they were obtained in violation of Edwards v Arizona (1981) 451 US 477, 484, 68 L Ed 2d 378, 386, 101 S Ct 1880, but they were inadmissible for any purpose because they were involuntary. People v Neal (2003) 31 C4th 63, 78, 1 CR3d 650.

Previous un-Mirandized questioning of a suspect, if done with the intention of softening up the suspect, may invalidate a subsequent confession. People v Honeycutt (1977) 20 C3d 150, 160, 141 CR 698. But absent a deliberate attempt to trick a suspect, the rule in Honeycutt does not apply. People v Posten (1980) 108 CA3d 633, 647, 166 CR 661.

§23.25 J. Exceptions to Miranda Requirement: Rescue, Public Safety, and Officer Safety Doctrines

Even when an in-custody suspect is questioned by law enforcement officers, there are exceptions to the requirement that the suspect be advised of the Miranda rights. For instance, when a suspect voluntarily answers questions asked by officers who are primarily concerned with rescuing the victim and do not wish to impede their efforts by giving the Miranda warnings, the suspect's responses are admissible. People v Davis (2009) 46 C4th 539, 591, 94 CR3d 322; People v Coffman (2004) 34 C4th 1, 55, 17 CR3d 710. This exception is sometimes referred to as the "rescue doctrine." The rescue doctrine has been applied to situations in which a defendant was thought to be the one endangered. See, e.g., People v Stevenson (1996) 51 CA4th 1234, 59 CR2d 878, disapproved on other grounds in People v Davis (2009) 46 C4th 539, 594 n4, 94 CR3d 322 (defendant had swallowed large quantity of cocaine).

Under what is known as the "public safety" exception, no warnings may be required when a police officer asks a defendant questions devoted to locating an abandoned deadly weapon out of concern for the public safety. New York v Quarles (1984) 467 US 649, 81 L Ed 2d 550, 104 S Ct 2626; People v Simpson (1998) 65 CA4th 854, 861, 76 CR2d 851 (Quarles public safety exception applies when questions asked are primarily related to objectively reasonable need to protect police officers or public from danger during execution of search warrant); People v Cole (1985) 165 CA3d 41, 52, 211 CR 242; Allen v Roe (9th Cir 2002) 305 F3d 1046, 1050 (questioning about location of gun fell within public safety exception). An officer is also entitled to ask a defendant un-Mirandized questions about information that might affect the officer's own health. See People v Cressy (1996) 47 CA4th 981, 987, 55 CR2d 237 (officer saw defendant drop hypodermic syringe, and was entitled to ask whether defendant had any other needles).

§23.26 K. Interrogating Police Officers and Other Public Employees

Public safety officers who refuse to answer questions that are part of an administrative investigation are subject to administrative discipline. Govt C §3303(e); Lybarger v City of Los Angeles (1985) 40 C3d 822, 221 CR 529. If the officers can be charged with a criminal offense, they must immediately be informed not only of their constitutional rights but must also be told that their responses to the questions asked during the administrative investigation generally cannot be used against them in court. Govt C §3303(f), (h); Lybarger v City of Los Angeles, supra. See Lefkowitz v Turley (1973) 414 US 70, 77, 38 L Ed 2d 274, 281, 94 S Ct 316; Garrity v New Jersey (1967) 385 US 493, 500, 17 L Ed 2d 562, 567, 87 S Ct 616; Williams v City of Los Angeles (1988) 47 C3d 195, 200 n3, 252 CR 817.

The rights and duties extended to public safety officers under Govt C §3303, Lybarger, and Williams actually apply to all public employees and contractors (and arguably to all governmentally licensed professionals) under the authority of Lefkowitz and Garrity. Counsel representing such clients should recognize that the use immunity afforded them by these cases presents broad opportunities for successful trial strategies, because the state has the burden of establishing that a subsequent prosecution is based on independent evidence. See discussion of immunity in chap 49.

§23.27 L. Interrogation in Another Country

When a defendant is apprehended in and interrogated by officials in a foreign country, the results of that interrogation may be used against him or her in a California prosecution as long as the methods used by the interrogators were not so violative of "fundamental due process as to undermine the truth of the evidence acquired." People v Helfend (1969) 1 CA3d 873, 890, 82 CR 295. If U.S. officials were involved in the questioning, however, or if the foreign officers acted on behalf of U.S. officials, the laws of the jurisdiction in which the case is tried in the United States apply. People v Neustice (1972) 24 CA3d 178, 186, 100 CR 783.

§23.28 M. Application of Miranda to Juveniles

There is a statutory exception to the rules developed for adult arrestees that requires a Miranda-type admonishment for minors whenever they are taken into custody, even if they are not questioned. Welf & I C §625. Under California law, unlike under federal law, the failure to comply with the statutory requirements applicable to juvenile arrests does not affect admissibility of the arrestee's statements absent a due process violation. Compare In re Michael E. (1980) 112 CA3d 74, 78, 169 CR 62 (failure to bring juvenile before magistrate without unnecessary delay does not affect admissibility of statement), with U.S. v Female Juvenile (Wendy G.) (9th Cir 2001) 255 F3d 761, 765 (in which (1) arresting officers violated 18 USC §5033 by failing to inform parents of juvenile in custody that they might advise and counsel child before interrogation, (2) violation was a cause of confession, and (3) juvenile was prejudiced by confession; confession should be suppressed even though deficient notification does not rise to level of due process violation).

A minor may validly waive his or her Miranda rights. The same test applies to a minor as applies to an adult to determine whether the minor has waived the Fifth Amendment privilege. The court must inquire into the totality of the circumstances surrounding the interrogation. People v Lessie (2010) 47 C4th 1152, 104 CR3d 131. The test is whether, under all the circumstances, including age, experience, background, intelligence, and education, the minor had the capacity to understand the warnings given, the nature of his or her Fifth Amendment rights, and the consequences of waiving those rights. People v Lessie, supra.

> Ø Note: Age and inexperience with law enforcement are not factors in determining whether a suspect is "in custody" for Miranda purposes. See §23.19. However, the factors may be considered in determining whether a waiver was knowing and intelligent (see §23.22), or whether a statement was voluntary. See §23.32.

There is no requirement that the police obtain a parent's consent before interrogating a minor. In re John S., supra. Similarly, there is no requirement that the police advise a minor of his or her right to speak with a parent. People v Lara, supra; In re Charles P. (1982) 134 CA3d 768, 772, 184 CR 707.

Opinion is split over whether the police must advise a minor that a parent is present and wishes to speak to him or her. Compare In re Patrick W. (1980) 104 CA3d 615, 163 CR 848, with In re John S., supra.

A juvenile tried as an adult may be impeached with statements made to a probation officer while being interviewed for a Welf & I C §707(c) fitness hearing. People v Macias (1997) 16 C4th 739, 756, 66 CR2d 659.

§23.29 N. Application of "Fruit of the Poisonous Tree" Doctrine: Subsequent Statement

The high court first addressed the applicability of the "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine of Wong Sun v U.S. (1963) 371 US 471, 485, 9 L Ed 2d 441, 453, 83 S Ct 407, to Miranda violations in Michigan v Tucker (1974) 417 US 433, 41 L Ed 2d 182, 94 S Ct 2357. In Tucker, the Court declined to extend the fruits doctrine to exclude the testimony of a witness who was identified by the defendant in a statement given without a Miranda warning, but found to be voluntary. 417 US at 445, 41 L Ed 2d at 193. Later, in Oregon v Elstad (1985) 470 US 298, 84 L Ed 2d 222, 105 S Ct 1285, the Court considered whether a suspect's voluntary incriminating statement in custody, made after a waiver of Miranda rights, was nonetheless inadmissible because it followed an earlier incriminating statement obtained by custodial questioning without a Miranda warning. Finding that the subsequent statement need not be excluded, the Elstad majority held that (1) a Miranda violation does not require full application of the "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine developed for Fourth Amendment violations; (2) instead, if an unwarned custodial statement was otherwise voluntary, a later statement must be deemed untainted if also voluntary and in compliance with Miranda; and (3) in determining whether the second statement was voluntary, the suspect's awareness that he had already "let the cat out of the bag" is not dispositive. 470 US at 305, 84 L Ed 2d at 230.

Conversely, when an earlier statement was coerced or otherwise involuntary, any subsequent statement is presumed tainted. The burden is on the prosecution to show a break in the causative chain between the first and subsequent confessions in such a way that the second confession was not in fact obtained by exploitation of the illegality. People v Sims (1993) 5 C4th 405, 444, 20 CR2d 537; People v Beardslee (1991) 53 C3d 68, 109, 279 CR 276. In Oregon v Elstad, supra, the Miranda violation appeared unintentional. In Missouri v Seibert (2004) 542 US 600, 159 L Ed 2d 643, 124 S Ct 2601, the high court held that a police protocol calling for no Miranda warnings until after a first confession was obtained rendered the second statement of the defendant inadmissible. Seibert is discussed in §23.46.

In People v Bradford (1997) 14 C4th 1005, 1039, 60 CR2d 225, the less stringent Elstad "tainted product" analysis was held to apply when a prior confession was obtained despite the custodial suspect's Miranda request for counsel. The Bradford court reasoned that "just as a failure to give Miranda warnings does not in and of itself constitute coercion, neither does continued interrogation after a defendant has invoked his right to counsel, or an Edwards violation, inherently constitute coercion." 14 C4th at 1039. See Edwards v Arizona (1981) 451 US 477, 484, 68 L Ed 2d 378, 386, 101 S Ct 1880, discussed in §23.23.

Bradford involved the Fifth Amendment right to counsel. In Fellers v U.S. (2004) 540 US 519, 157 L Ed 2d 1016, 124 S Ct 1019, the police intentionally omitted any Miranda warning when they went to the defendant's home to arrest him. The U.S. Supreme Court held that the police violated the Sixth Amendment by deliberately eliciting incriminating information after the right to counsel had attached. The Court remanded the case to the court of appeals to determine whether the Elstad rationale applies to the defendant's subsequent jailhouse statement made after he was Mirandized and knowingly and voluntarily waived counsel. In Missouri v Seibert (2004) 542 US 600, 159 L Ed 2d 643, 124 S Ct 2601, the Court decided that an intentional Miranda violation that results in an incriminating statement taints a subsequent statement made after proper advisements and a knowing and intelligent waiver of Fifth Amendment rights. Seibert is discussed in §23.46. On the difference between the Fifth and Sixth Amendments' right to counsel, see §23.23.

See also People v Carpenter (1999) 21 C4th 1016, 1039, 90 CR2d 607 (inevitable discovery rule applies to evidence obtained as result of noncoerced interview of defendant in violation of Miranda, even if violation was deliberate); People v Lujan (2001) 92 CA4th 1389, 1403, 112 CR2d 769 (even though defendant's decision to testify at retrial was result of court's erroneous denial of defendant's motion to suppress his confession, reversal not required when there was no evidence that confession obtained in violation of Miranda was involuntary or that trial testimony was involuntary); People v Brewer (2000) 81 CA4th 442, 456, 96 CR2d 786 (noncoerced statements obtained in violation of Miranda may be used in search warrant affidavit and do not require suppression of their "fruits").

§23.30 O. Application of "Fruit of the Poisonous Tree" Doctrine: Physical Evidence

In U.S. v Patane (2004) 542 US 630, 159 L Ed 2d 667, 673, 124 S Ct 2620, the Supreme Court settled the issue of whether the exclusionary rule requires suppression of physical evidence obtained as a result of unwarned but voluntary statements, holding that it does not. The court stated that the exclusionary rule does not apply, because the Miranda rule is a prophylactic designed to protect against violations of the Fifth Amendment Self-Incrimination Clause, which is not implicated by the introduction at trial of physical evidence resulting from voluntary statements. "The Miranda rule is not a code of police conduct, and police do not violate the Constitution (or even the Miranda rule, for that matter) by mere failures to warn." 542 US at 636, 159 L Ed 2d at 674. Thus, the Court reasoned, police do not violate a suspect's constitutional rights (or the Miranda rule) by negligent or even deliberate failure to provide a suspect with the Miranda advisement. 542 US at 637, 159 L Ed 2d at 675. "Potential violations occur, if at all, only upon the admission of unwarned statements into evidence at trial." 542 US at 641, 159 L Ed 2d at 678. The Court stated that, unlike unreasonable searches under the Fourth Amendment or actual violations of the Due Process Clause or Self-Incrimination Clause, there is nothing to deter with respect to mere failures to warn. 542 US at 642, 159 L Ed 2d at 678. See also People v Whitfield (1996) 46 CA4th 947, 956, 54 CR2d 370 (physical evidence seized as result of defendant's statement that she possessed narcotics, made in response to officer's questioning in violation of Miranda, was admissible, even though verbal statement was not).

IX. VOLUNTARINESS

§23.31 A. Involuntary Statements Obtained by Police Are Inadmissible

Confessions coerced by the police are considered involuntary and are inadmissible. Colorado v Connelly (1986) 479 US 157, 93 L Ed 2d 473, 107 S Ct 515. An involuntary statement cannot be used against the accused in a criminal proceeding for any purpose. See Schneckloth v Bustamonte (1973) 412 US 218, 225, 36 L Ed 2d 854, 861, 93 S Ct 2041; Brown v Mississippi (1936) 297 US 278, 286, 80 L Ed 682, 687, 56 S Ct 461. Evidence that is the direct "fruit" of an involuntary confession is also inadmissible. Evidence that is not directly obtained by illegal conduct may be admitted if the prosecution can show that the connection between the primary illegality and the challenged evidence has "become so attenuated as to dissipate the taint." Wong Sun v U.S. (1963) 371 US 471, 491, 9 L Ed 2d 441, 457, 83 S Ct 407; People v Beardslee (1991) 53 C3d 68, 108, 279 CR 276.

§23.32 B. When Statements Are Involuntary

Definition of involuntary. A statement is obtained involuntarily from a defendant when the accused's abilities to reason, comprehend, or resist were so disabled that he or she was incapable of free or rational choice. In re Cameron (1968) 68 C2d 487, 498, 67 CR 529. To determine this issue, the "totality of the circumstances" surrounding the interrogation must be considered. In re Cameron, supra; People v Benson (1990) 52 C3d 754, 276 CR 827. An involuntary statement violates due process (In re Cameron, supra), and is of doubtful reliability (People v Garner (1961) 57 C2d 135, 163, 18 CR 40). In Colorado v Connelly (1986) 479 US 157, 93 L Ed 2d 473, 107 S Ct 515, the Supreme Court added the additional requirement that coercive police activity is a necessary predicate to the finding that a confession is involuntary within the meaning of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Under the truth-in-evidence provision of the California Constitution (Cal Const art I, §28(f)(2)), federal rather than state law governs admissibility of defendant's statements. See People v May (1988) 44 C3d 309, 243 CR 369.

Both physical and psychological coercion are prohibited. Rogers v Richmond (1961) 365 US 534, 540, 5 L Ed 2d 760, 767, 81 S Ct 735. This is true despite a prior valid admonishment and waiver of Miranda rights. See People v Hill (1967) 66 C2d 536, 547, 58 CR 340.

When a defendant challenges the voluntariness of a statement, the prosecution bears the burden of proof. People v Lucas (1995) 12 C4th 415, 442, 48 CR2d 525.

Examples of situations that may require suppression of a statement as involuntary:

- Drugs or alcohol. In re Cameron (1968) 68 C2d 487, 500, 67 CR 529 (medication administered by police; confession involuntary). Cases before Colorado v Connelly, supra, that considered voluntary ingestion of alcohol or drugs in determining whether a statement was voluntary (see, e.g., People v Loftis (1984) 157 CA3d 229, 235, 203 CR 590) are probably no longer good law.
- Low intelligence, brain damage, or mental illness, when taken advantage of by law enforcement. See U.S. v Barbour (11th Cir 1995) 70 F3d 580, 585; U.S. v Montgomery (9th Cir 1994) 14 F3d 1189, 1195. See also Blackburn v Alabama (1960) 361 US 199, 4 L Ed 2d 242, 80 S Ct 274; Payne v Arkansas (1958) 356 US 560, 2 L Ed 2d 975, 78 S Ct 844; People v Watson (1977) 75 CA3d 384, 396, 142 CR 134.

Ø Note: When defense counsel has such an issue, the better technique is to have experts testify to the defendant's lack of capacity to exercise a free will and rational intellect. See People v MacPherson (1970) 2 C3d 109, 84 CR 129.

- Religious beliefs. "Religious beliefs [of the interrogator or suspect] are not matters to be used by governmental authorities to manipulate a suspect." People v Montano (1991) 226 CA3d 914, 935, 277 CR 327.
- Sleep deprivation. Sleep deprivation to induce a defendant to confess may be such that the confession will not be considered the product of a free will. Clewis v Texas (1967) 386 US 707, 712, 18 L Ed 2d 423, 428, 87 S Ct 1338.
- Threats or promises of leniency. A confession is invalid if it results from a police threat (People v Brommel (1961) 56 C2d 629, 632, 15 CR 909, overruled on other grounds in People v Cahill (1993) 5 C4th 478, 509 n17, 20 CR2d 582) or if motivated by an express or implied promise of leniency (People v Jimenez (1978) 21 C3d 595, 611, 147 CR 172, overruled on other grounds in People v Cahill (1993) 5 C4th 478, 509 n17, 20 CR2d 582; People v Cahill (1994) 22 CA4th 296, 309, 28 CR2d 1). This is true even though the defendant was properly admonished and waived his or her Miranda rights. People v Brommel, supra. The offer or promise of a benefit need not be express, but may be implied in equivocal language not otherwise made clear. People v Jackson (1980) 28 C3d 264, 299, 168 CR 603, overruled on other grounds in People v Cromer (2001) 24 C4th 889, 901 n3, 103 CR2d 23. The fact that the promise of leniency is fulfilled does not make the statement voluntary. People v Vasila (1995) 38 CA4th 865, 45 CR2d 355.

Examples of threats and promises of leniency. Some examples of threats and promises of leniency:

- Police officer threatened to inform the judge that the defendant was a liar. People v Brommel (1961) 56 C2d 629, 633, 15 CR 909, overruled on other grounds in People v Cahill (1993) 5 C4th 478, 509 n17, 20 CR2d 582 (involuntary).
- Police officer promised a reward. People v Trout (1960) 54 C2d 576, 583, 6 CR 759, overruled on other grounds in People v Cahill (1993) 5 C4th 478, 509 n17, 20 CR2d 582 (involuntary).
- Police officer improperly threatened a minor with the death penalty, called her a liar, and promised leniency if she cooperated. People v McClary (1977) 20 C3d 218, 229, 142 CR 163 (involuntary), overruled on other grounds in People v Cahill (1993) 5 C4th 478, 509 n17, 20 CR2d 582.
- Police threatened death penalty. People v Hinds (1984) 154 CA3d 222, 238, 201 CR 104 (involuntary).
- Police officer threatened to jail minor if he lied, but promised citation if he told the truth. In re J. Clyde K. (1987) 192 CA3d 710, 716, 237 CR 550, disapproved on other grounds in People v Badgett (1995) 10 C4th 330, 349, 41 CR2d 635 (involuntary).
- Police officer and federal agent promised defendant an O.R. release and that he would not be prosecuted federally. People v Vasila, supra (involuntary).
- Police officer conveyed impression that interrogation would continue until the defendant confessed. People v Azure (1986) 178 CA3d 591, 602, 224 CR 158, overruled on other grounds in People v Markham (1989) 49 C3d 63, 71 n4, 260 CR 273 (involuntary).

Examples of activities found not to be threats or promises. The following are some examples of activities either found not to be threats or promises or found not to require suppression of a statement as involuntary:

- Officer expressing his opinion that a judge and jury would give greater weight to defendant's remorse than to fear of punishment was not a promise of leniency. Clark v Murphy (9th Cir 2003) 331 F3d 1062, 1073.
- Just commenting on the realities of the accused's position and the courses of conduct open to him or her, or pointing out the benefits that would flow naturally from a truthful and honest statement, do not make a subsequent confession involuntary. People v Andersen (1980) 101 CA3d 563, 583, 161 CR 707.
- Detective's statement, "We're talking about a death penalty case here," and suggestions that the defendant might benefit from giving a truthful, mitigated account of the crimes did not amount to an implied promise of lenient treatment in exchange for a confession. People v Holloway (2004) 33 C4th 96, 112, 14 CR3d 212.
- Statement that there's "no death penalty here" did not make a confession involuntary, given the totality of the circumstances. People v Benson (1990) 52 C3d 754, 779, 276 CR 827.
- Telling a properly Mirandized suspect during interrogation that he or she would be better off telling the officers what happened, and that it would be good to get it off his or her chest, is not likely to be held to constitute a threat sufficient to warrant suppression of a subsequent confession. People v Robinson (1969) 274 CA2d 514, 520, 79 CR 213.
- Single comment by a detective that he wanted the record to show defendant's "degree of cooperation" is too brief and insubstantial to qualify as an inducement; nor does comment suggest any benefit in exchange for cooperation. People v Musselwhite (1998) 17 C4th 1216, 1237, 74 CR2d 212.
- The use of a mock polygraph test and fake results after defendant requested a lie detector test. People v Mays (2009) 174 CA4th 156, 166, 95 CR3d 219.
- A detective's statement that the defendant's cooperation would benefit him in the judicial process, qualified by an admonition that the detective would present evidence of cooperation to the prosecutor, but the prosecutor would decide any consideration in return for cooperation, did not constitute a promise of leniency. People v Ramos (2004) 121 CA4th 1194, 1202, 18 CR3d 167.
- An officer's statement that "what happens here affects your whole family" is not coercive. People v Chutan (1999) 72 CA4th 1276, 1282, 85 CR2d 744.
- Promising something to a defendant does not necessarily render a statement involuntary; the promise has to be a sufficient inducement to be the motivating cause of the confession. People v Massie (1998) 19 C4th 550, 575, 79 CR2d 816 (officer did not make his promise to attempt to place defendant in protective custody contingent upon defendant making a statement); People v Hernandez (1988) 204 CA3d 639, 650, 251 CR 393 (promise of food and a soda not enough).
- Even loud, aggressive accusations of lying may not jeopardize the admissibility of a confession. In re Joe R.

(1980) 27 C3d 496, 515, 165 CR 837.

- A statement is not invalid if the defendant initiated the prospect of a benefit and the police made it clear they could make no promises, but merely said they would pass any information on to the district attorney. People v Boyde (1988) 46 C3d 212, 238, 250 CR 83.
- Mere advice or exhortation to tell the truth when unaccompanied by threats or promises is permissible. People v Belmontes (1988) 45 C3d 744, 773, 248 CR 126, disapproved on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209; People v Higareda (1994) 24 CA4th 1399, 1409, 29 CR2d 763. But see People v Jones (1998) 17 C4th 279, 298, 70 CR2d 793 (court expressed disapproval of detective's exhortation "the truth is going to set you free," but found that it did not render defendant's statement inadmissible). The distinction between permissible and impermissible conduct does not depend on the language of the inducement, but rather on the nature of the benefits to be derived by the suspect from telling the truth. When the benefits are those that flow naturally from an honest and truthful course of conduct, the statement is not involuntary. People v Belmontes, supra.

Deception. Deception that is reasonably likely to produce an untrue statement results in a finding that the statement is involuntary. In most situations, however, the courts find that the deception involved was not likely to result in an untrue statement. See, e.g., People v Smith (2007) 40 C4th 483, 505, 54 CR3d 245; People v Maury (2003) 30 C4th 342, 411, 133 CR2d 561; People v Gurule (2002) 28 C4th 557, 603, 123 CR2d 345; People v Jones (1998) 17 C4th 279, 299, 70 CR2d 793; People v Jackson (1996) 13 C4th 1164, 1206, 56 CR2d 49; In re Walker (1974) 10 C3d 764, 777, 112 CR 177; People v Arguello (1967) 65 C2d 768, 775, 56 CR 274. Although it is improper to use deception to cause a suspect to waive his or her Miranda rights, its use may not invalidate the statement of one who has already made a free and voluntary waiver. See, e.g., People v Dominick (1986) 182 CA3d 1174, 1189, 227 CR 849 (police falsely told defendant that surviving victim had identified him as perpetrator). The contrary is also true: deception that is not likely to produce an untrue statement is admissible. People v Felix (1977) 72 CA3d 879, 885, 139 CR 366. Such deception, however, is a factor the court will consider when determining, based on all the circumstances, whether a resulting confession was involuntary. People v Hogan (1982) 31 C3d 815, 840, 183 CR 817, overruled on other grounds in People v Cooper (1991) 53 C3d 771, 836, 281 CR 90.

Coercion. The following cases dealt with a combination of circumstances, some involving physical coercion, others psychological coercion:

- When a suspect signed a written advice of Miranda rights form and a consent to polygraph form and was told that he was free to go at any time, and there was no evidence that his age, education, or intelligence made him susceptible to coercion, his statements were voluntary, despite the following circumstances: The agent drove the suspect to the FBI office for a polygraph examination, the suspect was interrogated all day before taking the polygraph examination and accused of being untruthful during the examination, the agent gave the suspect a newspaper article that discussed the possible consequences of lying, and the agent influenced the words used by the suspect in a written confession that followed his oral confession. U.S. v Haswood (9th Cir 2003) 350 F3d 1024.
- A minor's confession was deemed voluntary, even though the defendant was interrogated for 2 hours while in custody for 7 hours, was rewarded with a burrito and a coke, was reminded that his father died in prison, was told that a successful polygraph test could result in his release, and was not told that his mother was at the jail to see him. People v Maestas (1987) 194 CA3d 1499, 1505, 240 CR 360.
- Sixteen-year-old's relative youth, time of questioning (past midnight), length of interrogation (3 hours), absence of an attorney or parent, fact that minor was given no food and possibly no water and was offered no rest break, denial of minor's requests to speak with his mother, and denial of access to a telephone to call his lawyer rendered confession involuntary. Taylor v Maddox (9th Cir 2004) 366 F3d 992, 1015.
- Admissions were found voluntary despite deception, promises, and threats used by police. People v Thompson (1990) 50 C3d 134, 166, 266 CR 309.
- Repeated refusal of defendant's request to cease interrogation and use of defendant's religious beliefs required suppression of first and subsequent confession, even though defendant requested second interview. People v Montano (1991) 226 CA3d 914, 277 CR 327.
- Defendant's incriminating statements found voluntary and not coerced when made during jail facility's group psychiatric therapy session, even though defendant signed confidentiality agreement regarding his participation in such sessions. Beaty v Schriro (9th Cir 2007) 509 F3d 994.

X. CHALLENGING CODEFENDANT'S STATEMENT

A. Fifth Amendment Challenges

§23.33 1. Defendant May Challenge Voluntariness of Codefendant's Statement

A defendant has the right to challenge a statement made by a codefendant or other third party on the ground that it was involuntary. People v Johnson (1989) 47 C3d 1194, 1226 n8, 255 CR 569. A coerced confession is usually considered unreliable and contrary to public policy. Therefore, any defendant has standing to challenge the admissibility of evidence obtained as a result of any other person's coerced or involuntary confession or admission. People v Jones (1980) 105 CA3d 572, 581, 164 CR 605. Third party evidence that is the direct product of unlawful police coercion is inherently unreliable and must be excluded under the Due Process Clause. People v Jenkins (2000) 22 C4th 900, 966, 95 CR2d 377; People v Lee (2002) 95 CA4th 772, 786, 115 CR2d 828.

A trial witness's testimony, however, is subject to suppression only when the trial testimony itself, as opposed to pretrial statements that were allegedly coerced, is the product of continuing coercion and its admission would deprive the defendant of a fair trial. People v Badgett (1995) 10 C4th 330, 344, 41 CR2d 635; People v Douglas (1990) 50 C3d 468, 500, 503, 268 CR 126. See also U.S. v Merkt (5th Cir 1985) 764 F2d 266. Even when a codefendant's pretrial confession is found involuntary, if the trial court finds attenuation, the codefendant can testify against the defendant. People v Johnson (1989) 47 C3d 1194, 1227, 255 CR 569 (attenuation found); People v Superior Court (Sosa) (1982) 31 C3d 883, 887, 185 CR 113 (no attenuation found).

Similarly, when a defendant claims that evidence at trial, such as a murder weapon, is the "fruit" of unlawful police coercion of a third party, the defendant must show some connection between the evidence and the coercion that makes the evidence unreliable. People v Jenkins, supra; People v Lee (2002) 95 CA4th 772, 788, 115 CR2d 828. See §23.30 for further discussion of the application of the exclusionary rule to physical evidence obtained as the result of a statement taken in violation of Miranda.

§23.34 2. Defendant May Not Raise Violation of Another's Miranda Rights

A defendant has no standing to challenge a violation of a codefendant's Miranda rights. Thus, when evidence is developed against the defendant that is the product of improperly obtained statements from a codefendant, the defendant cannot successfully move to suppress that evidence even though it was the product of a violation of the codefendant's Miranda rights. People v Douglas (1990) 50 C3d 468, 501, 268 CR 126; People v Varnum (1967) 66 C2d 808, 812, 59 CR 108.

B. Confrontation Clause Challenges

§23.35 1. Crawford v Washington

Introduction of an out-of-court statement made by a codefendant (or any other third party) may violate the defendant's right to confront witnesses if the defendant has not had an opportunity to cross-examine the declarant. See Crawford v Washington (2004) 541 US 36, 158 L Ed 2d 177, 124 S Ct 1354. When an out-of-court statement implicating the defendant is "testimonial" in nature, its admission violates the Confrontation Clause unless the declarant is unavailable and the defendant has had an opportunity to cross-examine the declarant. 158 L Ed 2d at 203. "Testimonial" statements are those that are made in circumstances that reasonably suggest their future use in a trial. 158 L Ed 2d at 192. Although the Court declined to delineate the outer contours of the term "testimonial," it concluded that statements made to police officers during interrogation are "testimonial under even a narrow standard." 158 L Ed 2d at 203. Consequently, Crawford makes the out-of-court statement of a nontestifying accomplice, made during police interrogation, inadmissible against the defendant if the defendant has had no opportunity to cross-examine the accomplice. 158 L Ed 2d at 203. For discussion of the impact of Crawford v Washington on the admissibility of other out-of-court statements, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook §§2.19-2.25 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

Ø Note: The Crawford holding substitutes a bright-line rule for the case-by-case search for indicia of trustworthiness for "testimonial" hearsay. Although subsequent California cases have suggested that the case-by-case approach of Ohio v Roberts (1980) 448 US 56, 65 L Ed 2d 597, 100 S Ct 2531, may still apply to nontestimonial hearsay (see, e.g., People v Cervantes (2004) 118 CA4th 162, 174, 12 CR3d 774 (accomplice's statement made to neighbor was nontestimonial, trustworthy, and admissible under exception for statements made against penal interest)), the Supreme Court has made clear that if a statement is not testimonial, it is not subject to the Sixth Amendment. Davis v Washington (2006) 547 US 813, 165 L Ed 2d 224, 236, 126 S Ct 2266.

§23.36 2. Aranda-Bruton Rule

Under Evid C §1220, in a joint trial of two or more defendants, an out-of-court admission or confession is generally admissible against the defendant who made the statement. When such a statement implicates a nondeclarant defendant, its introduction in a joint trial may violate the nondeclarant's right of confrontation when the declarant does not testify. People v Aranda (1965) 63 C2d 518, 47 CR 353; Bruton v U.S. (1968) 391 US 123, 20 L Ed 2d 476, 88 S Ct 1620. Under Aranda and Bruton, a limiting instruction directing the jury to consider the statement only as it relates to the declarant is insufficient to cure a Confrontation Clause problem because accusations from a codefendant are so inherently prejudicial that a jury cannot be trusted to ignore them when considering the defendant's guilt or innocence, even when specifically instructed to do so. People v Anderson (1987) 43 C3d 1104, 1120, 240 CR 585.

The Aranda-Bruton rule applies whether the incriminating extrajudicial statement is offered by the prosecution or by a defendant. People v Floyd (1970) 1 C3d 694, 720, 83 CR 608, disapproved on other grounds in People v Wheeler (1978) 22 C3d 258, 287, 148 CR 890. The rule's applicability does not turn on whether the extrajudicial statement can be technically categorized as a "confession" (i.e., a complete and express acknowledgment of intentional participation in the crime) or whether it is offered for its truth; all statements inculpating the nondeclarant defendant fall within the rationale of the rule. People v Anderson (1987) 43 C3d 1104, 1124, 240 CR 585. Nor can the police avoid Aranda-Bruton issues by interrogating codefendants together and then attempting to use one defendant's silence as an implied adoptive admission of another defendant's statement. People v Jennings (2003) 112 CA4th 459, 471, 5 CR3d 243. But see People v Combs (2004) 34 C4th 821, 841, 22 CR3d 61 (statement incriminating defendant made by accomplice during joint interrogation and followed by defendant's silence is admissible against defendant as implied adoptive admission; Aranda-Bruton rule does not apply to exclude statement when accomplice is not jointly charged or tried with defendant).

The Aranda-Bruton rule does not apply to bench trials (People v Walkkein (1993) 14 CA4th 1401, 1406, 18 CR2d 383) or to preliminary hearings (People v Miranda (2000) 23 C4th 340, 352, 96 CR2d 758). Nor does it apply when the defendant puts the nontestifying accomplice's confession at issue. Tennessee v Street (1985) 471 US 409, 414, 85 L Ed 2d 425, 431, 105 S Ct 2078.

Under Aranda and Bruton, a nontestifying defendant's extrajudicial, self-incriminating statement that inculpates a codefendant presumptively violates the latter's right of confrontation. See People v Anderson (1987) 43 C3d 1104, 1120, 240 CR 585. However, neither case considered whether there were circumstances under which such a statement could be introduced at trial without violating the nondeclarant's right of confrontation. See Bruton v U.S. (1968) 391 US 123, 128 n2, 20 L Ed 2d 476, 480 n2, 88 S Ct 1620. In the wake of Crawford, it appears that such statements would be admissible without the need for editing or severance if the statements are nontestimonial and otherwise admissible under a statutory hearsay exception.

In People v Cervantes (2004) 118 CA4th 162, 176, 12 CR3d 774, the statement of a codefendant identifying himself and his codefendants as participants in a shooting qualified as a declaration against interest hearsay exception and was thus admissible without redaction in a joint trial. See People v Greenberger (1997) 58 CA4th 298, 336, 68 CR2d 61 ("Bruton does not stand for the proposition that all statements of one defendant that implicate another may not be introduced against all defendants in a joint trial"); People v Smith (2005) 135 CA4th 914, 921, 38 CR3d 1 ("spontaneous statement" of codefendant to girlfriend regarding defendant's participation in murder that had just occurred did not violate Aranda, Bruton, or Crawford). But see People v Song (2004) 124 CA4th 973, 982, 22 CR3d 118 (codefendant's inculpatory statement introduced against the defendant was Aranda-Bruton and Crawford error; "[a] limiting instruction is not always an adequate substitute for a defendant's constitutional right of cross-examination").

§23.37 C. Fourth Amendment Challenge

An attack on a codefendant's confession as the product of an unlawful search and seizure is usually difficult because a defendant must have a "reasonable expectation of privacy" in the place searched or the items seized in order to contest the legality of a search or seizure. Rakas v Illinois (1978) 439 US 128, 130, 58 L Ed 2d 387, 392, 99 S Ct 421. For further discussion, see §§16.11-16.14.

XI. SPECIAL PROBLEMS

§23.38 A. Providing Defendant's Statement to Prosecution

In the extremely rare case, an attorney may advise a client to discuss the case with the police or prosecutor in order to terminate an investigation and avoid the issuance of a formal complaint or indictment. This is a dangerous tactic that should be used most cautiously, and only after counsel has reviewed all available evidence and has determined that giving a statement will clearly result in exonerating the client. If counsel reaches this conclusion incorrectly, the client may be burdened with an incriminating statement and no means of preventing its introduction at trial. See, e.g., People v Claudio (Sup Ct 1982) 447 NYS2d 972, aff'd on appeal (1983) 466 NYS2d 271, 453 NE2d 500.

Statements recorded by a defendant and given to defense counsel, e.g., a diary or a murder checklist, are protected by the Fifth Amendment only when four requirements are met: The evidence is (1) incriminating, (2) personal to the defendant, (3) obtained by compulsion, and (4) testimonial or communicative in nature. People v Sanchez (1994) 24 CA4th 1012, 1020, 30 CR2d 111. It may be an ethical violation for a defense attorney not to turn such evidence over to the prosecution (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-220) as well as a possible criminal violation (Pen C §135).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.39 B. Polygraphs (Lie Detectors)

Polygraph test results are admissible at trial or at any pretrial or postconviction hearings, including juvenile hearings, only if their admission is stipulated to by both the prosecution and the defense. Evid C §351.1; In re Aontae D. (1994) 25 CA4th 167, 173, 30 CR2d 176; People v Kegler (1987) 197 CA3d 72, 84, 242 CR 897. Any reference to taking, offering to take, or failure to take a polygraph examination is similarly inadmissible under Evid C §351.1. This absolute bar on the admission of polygraph evidence in a criminal case absent a stipulation is constitutional. People v Wilkinson (2004) 33 C4th 821, 842, 16 CR3d 420 (relying on U.S. v Scheffer (1998) 523 US 303, 140 L Ed 2d 413, 118 S Ct 1261).

Police requests that a client submit to a polygraph examination should be treated no differently from requests to interrogate the defendant. A polygraph examination typically includes a pre- and postexamination "interview." All statements made by a client during any part of the examination can be admissible regardless of the admissibility of the test results. Evid C §§351-351.1.

Miranda warnings are required before a defendant in custody can be questioned. See Miranda v Arizona (1966) 384 US 436, 16 L Ed 2d 694, 86 S Ct 1602; People v Rich (1988) 45 C3d 1036, 1078, 248 CR 510 (new Miranda warnings not required when defendant questioned immediately after polygraph unless "the circumstances changed so seriously that his answers no longer were voluntary, or unless he no longer was making a 'knowing and intelligent relinquishment or abandonment' of his rights"). The use of waiver forms signed by the defendant specifying that he or she is taking the test totally without threat or promise, including promise of immunity, was upheld by the supreme court in People v Ochoa (1998) 19 C4th 353, 79 CR2d 408. In People v Rankins (1986) 178 CA3d 1163, 224 CR 282, the court upheld the introduction of the defendant's statements made when confronted with polygraph results despite an agreement that no questioning would go on outside the polygraph test. The Rankins court held that questioning about unfavorable test results is part of the very nature of a polygraph exam. Hence, the vague agreement involved here did nothing to protect the defendant. The court noted that the defense attorney could have instructed the client either to refuse to answer questions after the polygraph machine was turned off or to summon counsel to observe any subsequent questioning.

The better practice is for counsel to insist on being present during the entire examination, so that the examination can be monitored and terminated whenever it is in the client's interests to do so. Nevertheless, allowing a defendant to submit to a law enforcement polygraph is always a dangerous tactic, which should be considered only after the defendant has been examined confidentially by a competent defense polygraph expert and found to be truthful on the relevant factual issues. If the results are favorable, defense counsel may approach the prosecution and offer to allow the defendant to take a prosecution polygraph examination with the understanding that the prosecutor will consider a dismissal, depending on the results, or that both sides stipulate to admission of the results.

It may be incompetent for defense counsel to allow the defendant to take a prosecution polygraph without having first taken a defense-run polygraph. See People v Reeder (1976) 65 CA3d 235, 135 CR 421 (claim of defense counsel's incompetence based on stipulation to admissibility of polygraph results of defendant and victim denied because defendant also signed stipulation).

A defense offer to take a polygraph is itself inadmissible as evidence, even if the police refuse the offer. People v Espinoza (1992) 3 C4th 806, 818, 12 CR2d 682.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.40 C. Effect of Statements Provided by Counsel During Plea Negotiations

Statements provided by counsel during plea negotiations have been held inadmissible (People v Tanner (1975) 45 CA3d 345, 119 CR 407) except in cross-examination as rebuttal to the defendant's testimony on direct concerning the same factual issues (People v Crow (1994) 28 CA4th 440, 451, 33 CR2d 624).

Ø Note: A defendant's unprompted, spontaneous statement in the courtroom declaring his guilt when no plea negotiations were underway was not an inadmissible offer to plead guilty. People v Leonard (2007) 40 C4th 1370, 58 CR3d 368.

Some commentators have questioned the continuing validity of Tanner under the truth-in-evidence provision of the California Constitution (Cal Const art I, §28(f)(2)). Counsel may wish to guard against making a usable authorized admission by requiring the prosecutor to stipulate in advance that statements made during plea negotiations will not be used as evidence.

Prosecutors may wish to refuse such a stipulation absent the evidentiary need to engage in plea negotiations. For further discussion of plea bargaining, see chap 26.

XII. CORPUS DELICTI REQUIREMENT

§23.41 A. Corpus Delicti Need Not Be Proved Before Statement Can Be Introduced

The elements of an offense are known as the corpus delicti. Under California law, an uncorroborated confession is insufficient evidence by itself to support a conviction. Traditionally, the corpus delicti rule also meant that statements of an accused were not admissible at the preliminary hearing or at trial against him or her until the prosecution had established prima facie proof of every element of the offense. People v Jennings (1991) 53 C3d 334, 279 CR 780 (trial); Hall v Superior Court (1953) 120 CA2d 844, 262 P2d 351 (preliminary hearing). The truth-in-evidence provision of the California Constitution (Cal Const art I, §28(f)(2)) abrogated the corpus delicti rule to the extent that the rule prohibited the admission of a defendant's extrajudicial statements in the absence of independent proof of the corpus delicti. People v Alvarez (2002) 27 C4th 1161, 119 CR2d 903. Thus, there no longer exists a trial objection to the admission in evidence of the defendant's out-of-court statements on grounds that independent proof of the corpus delicti is lacking. However, the truth-in-evidence provision did not eliminate the aspect of the corpus delicti rule that bars conviction when the only evidence that the crime was committed is the defendant's own out-of-court statement. 27 C4th at 1169.

Only a slight or prima facie showing, permitting the reasonable inference that a crime was committed, is required. People v Ray (1996) 13 C4th 313, 342, 52 CR2d 296; People v Alcala (1984) 36 C3d 604, 624, 205 CR 775; People v Riccio (1996) 42 CA4th 995, 1000, 50 CR2d 52. The prosecutor need not show that the defendant was the perpetrator as part of the corpus delicti. See People v Manson (1977) 71 CA3d 1, 41, 139 CR 275. The corpus delicti may be shown by circumstantial as well as direct evidence. People v Andrews (1963) 222 CA2d 242, 244, 35 CR 118. Although neither the extrajudicial statements of the accused nor those of a codefendant may be used to establish the corpus (Jones v Superior Court (1979) 96 CA3d 390, 396, 157 CR 809), the defendant's statements may be used to prove the degree of the charged crime once the elements of the basic offense have been proved (People v Sanders (1983) 145 CA3d 218, 222, 193 CR 331). The defendant's statements may also be used to prove that the defendant was the perpetrator, once the corpus delicti of the offense has been shown. People v Manson (1977) 71 CA3d 1, 41, 139 CR 275 (identity of accused is not an element of offense). It is possible for statements by the defendant to be the only evidence establishing identity. 71 CA3d at 42. The corpus delicti rule is similarly not violated when a defendant's statements are the sole evidence establishing the facts necessary for a sentencing enhancement. People v Miranda (2008) 161 CA4th 98, 107, 73 CR3d 759.

The court has a sua sponte duty to instruct the jury that the corpus must be proved independent of the defendant's statements. People v Lara (1994) 30 CA4th 658, 674, 35 CR2d 886. See CALCRIM 359 (defendant may not be convicted of crime on the basis of his or her out-of-court statement(s) alone).

§23.42 B. Corpus Delicti Requirements for Homicides, Similars, Conspiracies

Homicides. In homicide prosecutions involving the felony murder rule, once evidence is presented showing a death by criminal means, the defendant's admissions themselves may be used to prove the underlying offense. People v Cantrell (1973) 8 C3d 672, 680, 105 CR 792; People v Martinez (1994) 26 CA4th 1098, 1103, 31 CR2d 869.

Ø Note: The corpus delicti of any of the felony-based special circumstances listed in Pen C §190.2(a)(17) does not need to be proved independent of a defendant's extrajudicial statement. Pen C §190.41.

Similars. Proof that a defendant committed a similar offense to prove the defendant's intent in committing the offense for which the defendant is on trial may be shown by defendant's statements without having to first put on evidence of the corpus of the similar offense. People v Denis (1990) 224 CA3d 563, 273 CR 724.

Co-conspirator's statements. Under former law, the introduction of a co-conspirator's statement in a conspiracy case required independent proof that there was a conspiracy and that the defendant was a member. Evid C §1223; People v Saling (1972) 7 C3d 844, 103 CR 698. Presumably, the truth-in-evidence provision of the California Constitution (Cal Const art I, §28(f)(2)) abrogated the independent-proof requirement as it relates to the introduction of the statement, but not as it relates to independent proof of the conspiracy.
