Tenants may not seek injunctive relief under Unfair Competition Law (Bus & P C §§17200-17210), alleging that the owners violated the Subdivided Lands Act (Bus & P C §§11000-11200) as a way to stop an Ellis Act eviction. Daro v Superior Court (2007) 151 CA4th 1079, 61 CR3d 716. Tenants are not among the class of persons the Subdivided Lands Act was intended to protect. 151 CA4th at 1095.

§7.64H d. Local Requirements and Restrictions on Evictions

After Santa Monica's unsuccessful direct challenge to the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) (see §7.64A), some cities attempted to deter owners from removing units or tried to mitigate the effect of the withdrawal of rental units. Typically, absent some perceived specific authorization in the Ellis Act itself, the reviewing court will determine whether the local enactment directly conflicts with the Act or unreasonably restricts the owner's right to go out of the rental housing business. When the local enactment adds a defense to an eviction action, it will often militate in favor of finding an impermissible conflict. See, e.g., Javidzad v City of Santa Monica (1988) 204 CA3d 524, 529, 251 CR 350; Channing Props. v City of Berkeley (1992) 11 CA4th 88, 14 CR2d 32; and Johnson v City & County of San Francisco (2006) 137 CA4th 7, 40 CR3d 8. But see Pieri v City & County of San Francisco (2006) 137 CA4th 886, 40 CR3d 629.

Many local efforts to deter withdrawal of residential units were unsuccessful. In Javidzad v City of Santa Monica, supra, for example, the city contended that its removal permit provisions were consistent with the Ellis Act as "a legitimate land use regulation which does not implicate a landlord's right to cease operating residential rental property but instead simply regulates the subsequent use of such property after the owner has stopped rental operations." The court of appeal rejected this contention as disingenuous and as a clear attempt to evade the goals of the Act. The court ruled that the city's attempt to withhold a demolition permit from a landlord unless the landlord provided alternative housing "imposes a prohibitive price" on the exercise of the landlord's right under the Act. 204 CA3d at 531. The court held that the restriction on the demolition permit seeking to impose requirements not found in the Ellis Act itself was preempted.

In another preemption case, a city ordinance restricted the issuance of demolition permits by withholding the permit unless the owner agreed to sign a waiver of the right to build a condominium or stock cooperative on the property for a given period, but permitting the demolition if the landlord agreed to build low-to-moderate income housing on the property. See Los Angeles Lincoln Place Investors, Ltd. v City of Los Angeles (1997) 54 CA4th 53, 62 CR2d 600. Following Javidzad, the court held that the ordinance was preempted by the Ellis Act.

But after the decisions in Javidzad and Lincoln Place, the legislature amended the Ellis Act to specify that it was not intended to preempt local land use or environmental law governing demolition and redevelopment. See Govt C §7060.7(b). Afterward, a court of appeal ruled that the Act does not prevent a city from enforcing mitigation conditions granting relocation rights to existing tenants when those rights were part of a local land use or environmental review process. The court noted that the landlord had agreed to the conditions during the process, the conditions did not impermissibly burden the landlord, and the conditions fit into the exceptions in Govt C §§7060.1(b)-(c), 7060.7(b). See Lincoln Place Tenants Ass'n v City of Los Angeles (2007) 155 CA4th 425, 66 CR3d 120.

In San Francisco, a residential hotel conversion ordinance sought to require an owner to furnish comparable residential units to occupants or pay a substantial sum to the city for a permit to convert to tourist hotel use. In Bullock v City & County of San Francisco (1990) 221 CA3d 1072, 1101, 271 CR 44, the court held that the Ellis Act preempted the ordinance because it denied the property owner the benefits conferred by the Act. But see amendments to Act (effective January 1, 2004, superseding Bullock) that exempt specified residential hotel accommodations, discussed in §7.64B.

The City of Berkeley enacted a requirement that tenants to be evicted under the Ellis Act be given 6 months' notice and a payment of $4500 per unit. Channing Properties challenged the requirements as imposing a burdensome obstacle not authorized by the Ellis Act. The trial court dismissed the case, but the court of appeal held that both the 6-month notice requirement and the mandatory relocation assistance provision were preempted by the express provisions of the Act. Channing Props. v City of Berkeley, supra. The court construed the Act as limiting notice requirements to tenants to 60 days and limiting allowable relocation payments for the benefit of low-income tenants. 11 CA4th at 97. At the time of the Channing Props. decision, the Ellis Act (Govt C §7060.1(c)(1)-(2)) authorized mitigation requirements only for housing for low-income households. The City of Berkeley was precluded from imposing "mitigation" payments without any showing of need by the tenant. However, 10 years later, Govt C §7060.1(c) was amended to allow a local public entity to mitigate adverse impacts on persons displaced by withdrawal of any rental unit regardless of the type of housing or the income of the tenant.

Some cities took advantage of this change to enact local ordinances requiring payments to any tenant displaced by an Ellis Act withdrawal of that tenant's building. San Francisco's enactment was the object of an unsuccessful facial challenge in Pieri v City & County of San Francisco, supra. There the court of appeal upheld the increase in tenant payments because of the legislature's revision of Govt C §7060.1(c). The court specifically left open the question of whether the amount of the payment in any particular case was reasonable. The landlord is not required, however, to notify the tenants about their rights to receive relocation payments and to state the amount of payment which the landlord believes to be due. Johnson v City & County of San Francisco, supra.

PRACTICE TIP: The "reasonableness" standard discussed in Pieri v City & County of San Francisco, supra is a somewhat unusual Ellis Act standard. Most other decisions refer to whether a restriction is an impermissible burden on a property owner's right to go out of the rental housing business. An owner who is having a difficult time raising the cash necessary to pay tenants to leave a building may attempt to meet the "reasonableness" standard to show how the total payments are a burden to the particular owner.

The Ellis Act, however, may not supersede all local controls, particularly those that involve land use. In First Presbyterian Church v City of Berkeley (1997) 59 CA4th 1241, 69 CR2d 710, the court held that the Act did not preempt a local ordinance designed to preserve historic structures and allowed the city to deny a demolition permit under the ordinance. Similarly, in San Remo Hotel, LP v City & County of San Francisco (2002) 27 C4th 643, 117 CR2d 269, the supreme court ruled that hotel owners wishing to change their residential hotel to "tourist-only" could be required by the city under a conditional use permit to replace the number of housing units lost or pay an "in lieu" fee into the city fund for housing construction. Note, however, in San Remo, Ellis Act notices were not given by the hotel, so the court refused to consider the preemption issue on appeal.

For further discussion of cases interpreting the Ellis Act, as well as detailed defense tactics for Ellis Act evictions, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§17.14, 17.25-17.49 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

4. Occupancy by Owner or Owner's Relative

§7.65 a. Typical Ordinance Provisions

All eviction control ordinances permit an owner to evict a tenant to enable the owner or specified relatives of the owner to occupy the premises. Practitioners must read eviction control ordinances carefully to determine the scope of the right to evict. Some ordinances require a landlord to be a "natural person" to evict for owner or family member occupancy. Some ordinances permit any "landlord" (as defined in the ordinance) to evict to occupy a unit, whether he or she is the fee owner or not. Other ordinances permit only a fee owner, or record owner, to evict for owner occupancy.

Most ordinances that permit owner occupancy evictions require the owner to hold a minimum percentage interest in the property. Some local enactments require as much as a 51 percent ownership interest. Some ordinances, which when enacted had a relatively low ownership requirement, have been amended to increase the requirement creating local confusion as well as application and retroactivity issues. See, e.g., Garber v Levit (2006) 141 CA4th Supp 1, 46 CR3d 348 (in San Francisco, under Proposition G, landlord may only need 25 percent ownership interest to evict tenant for owner-move-in; Proposition G supersedes Bierman Amendment, which required 50 percent ownership interest).

Owner-occupancy provisions permit evictions for occupancy by certain named relatives of the landlord as well as by the landlord. Because the ordinances often restrict the relatives included, each ordinance must be read carefully. Besides containing definitional limitations of "owner" and of "relatives," the ordinances frequently contain other substantial limitations on evictions for owner occupancy.

In Bohbot v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2005) 133 CA4th 456, 34 CR3d 827, the court held that a Santa Monica rent control requirement that owners obtain a removal permit before owner occupancy did not apply to legally converted condominiums. The court also struck down a regulation that prohibited a landlord from bringing a second owner-occupancy case against a tenant within 4 years of an owner-occupancy case dismissed without prejudice prior to trial. The regulation conflicted with CCP §581, which allows a plaintiff to voluntarily dismiss a case without prejudice prior to commencement of the trial. Left intact, however, is a regulation which prohibits a landlord from bringing a second owner-occupancy case within 4 years against a tenant who prevailed on the merits in the first case.

Other definitional problems frequently arise regarding the owner-occupancy exemption. For example, it is unclear whether a landlord may evict and occupy more than one unit as his or her principal residence, thereby evicting tenants from more than one unit on the grounds of owner occupancy.

Some rent control ordinances do not specify a period within which the owner or owner's relatives must move into premises vacated on the basis of their expressed intent to occupy. In Sylve v Riley (1993) 15 CA4th 23, 18 CR2d 608, the court held that the date on which the evicted tenant should be held to have known that the reasons given for the eviction were false depends on the facts of each individual case. Under the "delayed discovery" rule, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the plaintiff discovers or should have discovered all facts essential to the cause of action. 15 CA4th at 26.

Rent control ordinances often prohibit evictions for owner occupancy if a "comparable" unit is vacant and available. Reasonable subjective factors affecting the desirability of a unit must be considered in determining "comparability." In other words, objective criteria such as rental amount or size are not the sole or even most important criteria. See Bakanauskas v Urdan (1988) 206 CA3d 621, 253 CR 764, in which the court suggested that in a small building of, e.g., three units, there will usually be differences between the units that "could reasonably make any one unit more desirable than the others as a personal residence depending on one's individual tastes and criteria.... 'Comparable' units are more likely to be found in a large apartment building with many units having identical floor plans and being similarly situated." 206 CA3d at 628. For discussion of hazards posed to landlords by "comparable unit" provisions in local ordinances, see §7.68.

In Adler v Elphick (1986) 184 CA3d 642, 229 CR 254, an owner was able to evict a tenant and assume occupancy for himself over the objection that the owner's occupation constituted a "community apartment project." The landlords sought to evict the tenant under a local rent control ordinance provision that allowed eviction for owner occupancy. The landlords had taken title as tenants in common, and one of the landlords sought to occupy the tenant's unit. The tenant argued that the occupation would create a "community apartment project," which was prohibited by another local ordinance because of a low vacancy rate in the city. The court rejected the tenant's argument, holding that a community apartment project exists only when the right to exclusive occupancy of a particular unit is specified in the deed. 184 CA3d at 647. See also Bakanauskas v Urdan (1988) 206 CA3d 621, 624, 253 CR 764 (because grant deed failed to give landlord exclusive right of occupancy of part of property, apartment building did not constitute a "community apartment project," even though parties recorded an agreement giving landlord exclusive right to occupy specific unit simultaneously with grant deed).

In Cwynar v City & County of San Francisco (2001) 90 CA4th 637, 109 CR2d 233, the court of appeal was asked to rule on the constitutionality of an owner move-in provision that prevented the owner (or close relative or future landlord) invoking the provision from using the provision again to obtain possession of another unit in the same building. It also allowed the owner to move in a close relative only if the owner lived in the same building, and prevented the owner from using the provision to evict certain elderly or disabled tenants. The court of appeal held that such an ordinance might be a "taking"—if the landlord can prove at trial the "permanency" requirement of a per se physical taking and the city fails to prove that the requirements substantially advance a legitimate governmental interest. Additionally, a court of appeal held that the Costa-Hawkins Act preempted a local rent ordinance provision that required an owner who wished to move into a controlled unit to offer any other unit owned by the owner to the tenant at the tenant's existing rent-controlled rent. See Bullard v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization Bd. (2003) 106 CA4th 488, 130 CR2d 819. See also §§7.25, 7.67.

In rent controlled jurisdictions, relocation assistance is usually required to be paid in such evictions. The amount of relocation assistance and the timing of payment vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, and the rules may change suddenly. See, e.g., San Francisco Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance Section 37.9C; Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance Section 151.09.G.

§7.66 b. Statutory Provisions; CC §1947.10

Under CC §1947.10, when an owner evicts a tenant based on the intention of the owner or the owner's immediate relative to occupy the unit, the owner or relative must reside in the unit for at least 6 continuous months. This requirement applies to all evictions after July 1, 1990, in any rent-controlled jurisdiction that requires registration of rents. If a court determines that the eviction was based on fraud by the owner or the owner's relative in not intending to fulfill the 6-month requirement, a court may order the owner to pay three times the cost of relocating the tenant from his or her existing unit back into the previous unit and may order the owner to pay three times the amount of any increase in rent that the tenant has paid. If the tenant decides not to relocate back into the previous unit, the court may order the owner to pay three times the amount of one month's rent paid by the tenant for the unit from which he or she was evicted and three times the amount of any costs in relocating to a different unit. The prevailing party is entitled to attorney fees and court costs. CC §1947.10(a). These remedies do not preclude any other remedies available to a party aggrieved by the kind of conduct described in the statute. CC §1947.10(b). Examples of such remedies might include tort damages for emotional distress. See Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194. The great majority of cities with rent and eviction control ordinances provide for a longer requirement than 6 months, usually at least 1 year.

An action to recover treble damages must be filed within 1 year of receipt of the notice to vacate. Mandatory treble damages have been construed as a penalty and as such are subject to CCP §340(a), which provides a 1-year statute of limitations for an action on a statute for penalty or forfeiture. Menefee v Ostawari (1991) 228 CA3d 239, 278 CR 805.

A city may not enact an evidentiary presumption of violation of the ordinance if the owner fails to reside in the unit for a specified time period after evicting a tenant for owner move-in. Rental Hous. Ass'n of N. Alameda County v City of Oakland (2009) 171 CA4th 741, 90 CR3d 181.

§7.67 c. "Good Faith" Intent to Occupy

Most rent control ordinances provide that the owner or relative must intend to occupy the unit "in good faith." Some ordinances also contain a rebuttable presumption of lack of good faith if the owner or relative for whom the tenant was evicted does not occupy the unit for 12 continuous months. Under CC §1947.10, an owner who evicts a tenant based on the owner's or the owner's immediate relative's intention to occupy the unit is required to reside in the unit for at least 6 continuous months. This requirement applies to all evictions after July 1, 1990, in any rent-controlled jurisdiction that requires registration of rents. See §7.66. For discussion of the standard for good faith, see §7.54.

In Baba v Board of Supervisors of the City & County of San Francisco (2004) 124 CA4th 504, 21 CR3d 428, a court of appeal invalidated a local eviction control provision that had made it unlawful for a landlord to request that a tenant move unless the landlord in good faith intended to recover the housing unit as an "owner move-in" eviction. The court found that the ordinance unlawfully regulated free speech because it suppressed speech that was neither false nor inherently misleading. 124 CA4th at 520. See §§7.12, 7.64F.

In Castillo v Friedman (1987) 197 CA3d Supp 6, 243 CR 206, the court held that the landlord had served a 30-day notice to vacate in bad faith. Although the notice stated that the landlord's mother was to occupy the premises, she never did so; after the tenant vacated, the landlord placed a "for rent" sign on the building and showed the apartment to the tenant's friend, who was posing as a prospective tenant. The court rejected the landlord's arguments that the tenant's failure to demand return of the apartment created an estoppel and a failure to mitigate damages. For further discussion of Castillo, see §7.77. On the preemption of certain evidentiary presumptions created by local rent ordinances, see §7.71.

In Zimmerman v Stotter (1984) 160 CA3d 1067, 207 CR 108, the court addressed res judicata and collateral estoppel issues presented by an action by an evicted tenant based on the landlord's failure to occupy the rental unit and later reoffering of the unit at a substantially higher rent. The court held that, although the landlord's "good faith" had been determined in the unlawful detainer trial, the evicted tenant had the right to litigate abuse of process and intentional infliction of emotional distress on the theory that the landlord had abused the right to possession awarded as part of the judgment in the unlawful detainer action.

In earlier California cases interpreting good-faith requirements under former federal regulations that restricted evictions (e.g., Janise v Bryan (1948) 89 CA2d Supp 933, 201 P2d 466; Gibson v Corbett (1948) 87 CA2d Supp 926, 200 P2d 216), the courts held that the landlord's intent to occupy the premises is not the equivalent of good faith. If the dominant motive is revenge, the landlord is not acting in good faith. The landlord's desire must be to possess the premises, not to dispossess the tenant.

PRACTICE TIP: The tenant's attorney might try to show lack of good faith with evidence that: (a) The apartment is similar to other apartments in the building but has a lower rent than the other apartments (this was not an issue on appeal, but possibly could have been raised in Bullard v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization Bd. (2003) 106 CA4th 488, 130 CR2d 819, cited in §§7.25, 7.65); or (b) The landlord or landlord's relative presently lives in a home or neighborhood very different from the apartment or its neighborhood, indicating that the landlord or relative has no intention of residing in the apartment for the indefinite future.

§7.68 d. Counseling Potential Buyers Who Plan to Occupy Rented Premises

Buyers who plan to occupy their units should review rent-board ordinances and rules carefully. Municipalities with low vacancy rates often tighten their owner-occupancy requirements. If the property is in a jurisdiction with registration requirements, those records should be reviewed to determine whether the seller has complied with registration and rent regulations. The seller's failure to comply may lead to a substantial delay in the buyer's eviction of the current tenants.

The seller usually has no right to evict a tenant on the ground of owner occupancy, because the seller is not the person who intends to occupy the property. The buyer cannot evict before the sale closes, because the buyer is not yet the owner or the landlord. See §7.65. To protect the buyer, the buyer's attorney should consider having title transferred to the buyer so that eviction proceedings can begin. The purchase price may be held in escrow until the tenant vacates the premises and no further appeals are pending. Eviction expenses should be deducted from the balance of the purchase price.

Many rent control laws require that the landlord evict the most recent tenant to occupy an apartment of the size the landlord wants, (often referred to as the "last-in, first-out rule"). See, e.g., Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance §151.30.D; Santa Monica Rent Control Board Regulation 9002(j); West Hollywood Rent Stabilization Ordinance §17.52.010(12)(g).

PRACTICE TIPS:

- A seller of residential apartment should advise the buyer, in writing, that the units are subject to a rent-control ordinance. If the buyer's plans for the units are known (e.g., that the owner intends to occupy a unit), the buyer must be advised of the possibility that an eviction might be required, thus delaying occupancy. The buyer should also be advised that he or she might be required to pay the tenant relocation benefits.
- The seller might wish to approach a tenant in possession before the sale is completed to attempt to negotiate a mutually acceptable relocation agreement and payment. For instance, the $4500 available to a tenant in an Ellis Act eviction context (see §7.64) would provide the vacancy desired by the new owners without the time and notice burdens otherwise associated with an Ellis Act eviction. This payment can often be financed as part of the mortgage financing.

Potential buyers who plan to occupy their units in the "distant" future should be counseled that the courts have not viewed the right to evict for owner occupancy as an absolute constitutional right insulated from local regulation. Strong curbs on owner occupancy are common in condominium conversions. See, e.g., Berkeley Mun C §21.28.050(B). However, in Santa Monica, an owner of a condominium that has been legally converted may, for owner-occupancy, evict a tenant who was not a tenant in the unit at the time of the conversion. The owner does not need to obtain a removal permit. Bohbot v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2005) 133 CA4th 456, 34 CR3d 827. A Massachusetts regulation prohibiting evictions for owner occupancy of units that have been converted to condominiums was upheld in Flynn v City of Cambridge (Mass 1981) 418 NE2d 335. A New Jersey state law that granted lifetime tenancies to specified classes of senior citizen tenants was upheld in Troy Ltd. v Renna (3d Cir 1984) 727 F2d 287. The court rejected the view that granting lifetime tenancies constituted a taking for public use. 727 F2d at 300.

Outside the context of conversion, however, some courts have indicated that owners have a constitutional right to evict for owner occupancy. See Kennedy v City of Seattle (Wash 1980) 617 P2d 713 (ban on owner-occupancy evictions invalidated); Sabato v Sabato (NJ Super Ct Law Div 1975) 342 A2d 886, 897, overruled in part in 407 A2d at 844 (suggesting a constitutionally-based right to evict for owner occupancy in "buildings or structures ordinarily utilized for owner occupancy" such as two- to three-unit buildings).

Some California ordinances, e.g., in Berkeley, expressly permit eviction for owner occupancy if a comparable unit in the property is unavailable. See §7.65. Without ruling directly on whether an owner's right to occupancy is constitutionally based, a court held that applying the Berkeley ordinance in a manner preventing the landlord from using "reasonable subjective factors" in selecting the desired unit would render the ordinance "constitutionally confiscatory." Bakanauskas v Urdan (1988) 206 CA3d 621, 627, 253 CR 764.

New Jersey courts have rejected attacks on the constitutionality of just-cause requirements that prohibit a landlord from recovering possession for residence by a member of the landlord's family (Stamboulos v McKee (NJ Super Ct 1975) 342 A2d 529) and from recovering possession of an apartment to use it for the landlord's own business (Puttrich v Smith (NJ Super Ct 1979) 407 A2d 842).

D. Grounds Not Set Forth in Ordinance

§7.69 1. Tenant Eviction Not Allowed After Foreclosure

Most rent control ordinances contain language indicating that the grounds for eviction set out in the ordinance are the exclusive grounds allowed. In Gross v Superior Court (1985) 171 CA3d 265, 217 CR 284, the owner bought the property at a foreclosure sale, and claimed that this gave him the right to evict, although the San Francisco rent stabilization ordinance did not list purchase at a foreclosure sale as a ground for eviction. The court ruled in the tenant's favor, holding that a substantive right to evict is not created by CCP §1161a, which specifically permits the purchaser at a foreclosure sale to use unlawful detainer procedures to evict the tenant or owner. 171 CA3d at 272.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.70 2. Termination of Manager

Most eviction control ordinances do not specify that termination of a resident manager's employment constitutes a ground for terminating the manager's tenancy. In Chan v Antepenko (1988) 203 CA3d Supp 21, 250 CR 851, the court held that a discharged resident manager is a licensee, holding occupancy as a condition of employment, not a tenant. Thus, a discharged resident manager was not covered by San Francisco's rent control ordinance. Consequently, the landlord was not required to show good cause for the eviction. As the court stated (203 CA3d Supp at 24):

> Discharged employees are not tenants. Their presence on the premises is not a possession or an occupancy, for these are retained by the owner; they are like guests or lodgers who, when their right to remain has ceased, may be removed without notice.

In Karz v Mecham (1981) 120 CA3d Supp 1, 174 CR 310, however, the court ruled that a resident manager was a tenant at sufferance because, when the manager was terminated, the owner served the manager with a notice to pay rent or quit as an alternative choice. The court held that this notice gave the terminated manager the rights of a tenant. See §1.4.

PRACTICE TIP: The attorney should review the local ordinance and its implementing rules for special issues. Some ordinances, for example, provide that a manager who was formerly a tenant may have certain rights to continue as a tenant, or that a manager who paid rent while employed has the rights of a tenant.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.71 3. Tenant Gives Notice of Termination But Fails to Vacate

Suppose the tenant gives the landlord notice to terminate the tenancy but later changes his or her mind and does not vacate. Most ordinances do not list this as a ground for eviction, and so far the courts have not ruled on this situation, which presents difficult issues. See, e.g., §7.55A. Rent control ordinances usually preclude tenant waivers of their rights under the ordinance. On the other hand, it would seem inequitable to deny possession to a landlord who has relied on the notice and agreed to rent the premises to another tenant.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.72 4. Death of Tenant

The law is not settled on the effect of the death of a tenant when a local rent control ordinance provides protections to roommates and co-tenants. See, e.g., ordinances discussed in §7.55A. In Miller & Desatnik Mgmt. Co. v Bullock (1990) 221 CA3d Supp 13, 270 CR 600, a month-to-month tenant died, and the tenant's mother claimed that she then became the new tenant by inheritance. The landlord brought an unlawful detainer action against the mother, and the trial court ruled for the mother on the ground that the landlord had failed to show that he had served a notice stating one of the just causes for eviction allowed by Santa Monica's rent control ordinance. The appellate department reversed. When the landlord received notice of the tenant's death, the tenancy was terminated under CC §1934. Therefore, the mother was not a tenant under the rent control ordinance, but a trespasser, and she was not entitled to notice under the ordinance.

PRACTICE TIP: In the Miller situation, the surviving tenant may be entitled to remain in possession under the existing lease if the deceased tenant had executed a sublease or assignment of rights before leaving the unit to the successor.

In Pick v Cohen (2000) 83 CA4th Supp 6, 100 CR2d 839, the court upheld the validity of a provision of the West Hollywood rent control ordinance that certain surviving close relatives or the domestic partner of a tenant could not be evicted if the landlord had been notified of the additional tenant, the original tenant had died, and the additional tenant occupied the premises for more than one year before death. The court held that this provision was not preempted by state law (including the Ellis Act) and did not exceed the city's police power.

E. Notice and Pleading Requirements

§7.73 1. Eviction Notices

When drafting notices of eviction and unlawful detainer complaints, the attorney should follow the requirements of rent control ordinances and regulations carefully. Failure to comply with such provisions may lead to absolute defenses to evictions.

Several ordinances require that eviction notices state the grounds for eviction with particularity, including a description of the triggering event, the date and time, and the identities of witnesses. For evictions alleging breach of a lease covenant, some ordinances require that the notice cite the particular section, subsection, or paragraph of the lease that was allegedly violated. Some rent control ordinances even require that the notice recite the specific section of the ordinance under which the landlord is proceeding. Some ordinances further require that a copy of the notice be mailed to the rent board. See also §§7.56, 8.26.

PRACTICE TIP: These varying notice requirements present a prime example of the need to review very carefully the ordinance before taking any action. A notice that would support an eviction in an area not under rent control may be insufficient in a rent-controlled municipality.

Some rent control ordinances require not only that a landlord intending to evict have a specified permissible cause to do so, but also that written notice to that effect (sometimes containing other information as well) be given to the tenant. See §7.73. There are no recent California cases on whether an unlawful detainer complaint must allege compliance with, or, if applicable, exemption from, local rent control laws. Certain World War II-era cases suggest that the plaintiff must so plead. See, e.g., Lester v Isaac (1944) 63 CA2d Supp 851, 853, 146 P2d 524. See also Gross v Superior Court (1985) 171 CA3d 265, 275, 217 CR 284 (World War II-era cases considered useful for interpreting current rent control ordinances). Nonetheless, cases from that era dealt with federally imposed rent controls and generally hinged on issues of federal preemption.

In Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley (1976) 17 C3d 129, 149, 130 CR 465, the supreme court stated that local legislative bodies could create substantive defenses to an unlawful detainer action as part of their rent control legislation. Attorneys for landlords and tenants have been arguing ever since over whether the court's language meant that rent ordinance compliance must be pleaded in the complaint or noncompliance must be raised by the tenant as an affirmative defense. See, e.g., discussion in §9.16.

This issue presents a dilemma for a landlord's attorney. If the landlord pleads compliance with a rent control ordinance, particularly in the form of a "general allegation of compliance" under CCP §459, as exemplified by paragraph 14 of the Judicial Council's unlawful detainer complaint form (see §9.31), the tenant's denial arguably puts the entire ordinance into issue, without informing the landlord which sections of the ordinance the tenant claims were violated. When a "general denial" form of answer is allowed, the landlord may not even know whether compliance with the ordinance is even at issue. The tenant might also move to strike before answering, alleging that the compliance allegation is surplusage, consequently delaying the action.

If the landlord elects not to plead compliance, tenant's counsel might demur to the unlawful detainer complaint, alleging that the landlord has failed to state sufficient facts to prevail in the unlawful detainer. If the landlord's attorney believes that the demurrer might be overruled, the risk of delay caused by the demurrer might be offset by the advantage gained by forcing the tenant to raise the rent ordinance issue by affirmative defense rather than by denial, placing the burden of proof on this issue on the tenant. However, because ultimately the landlord must plead and prove compliance with the eviction section of the particular rent control law, the burden of proof is on the landlord to show "just cause" for eviction.

For discussion of the time limit for bringing an action for treble damages for violation of an eviction control statute, see §7.66.

§7.75 F. Burdens of Proof and Presumptions

Besides requiring just cause for eviction, some rent control ordinances shift the burden of proof or create rebuttable presumptions for factual issues in eviction cases. The California Supreme Court has held that a provision of the Berkeley rent control ordinance that shifted the burden of proof to the landlord when retaliatory eviction was raised as a defense was invalid, because the provision conflicted with Evid C §500. Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045.

In Beeman v Burling (1990) 216 CA3d 1586, 265 CR 719, a wrongful eviction action, the landlord argued that a rebuttable presumption provision in the San Francisco rent control ordinance, that "the landlord has not acted in good faith if the owner or relative for whom the tenant was evicted does not move into the unit and occupy said unit for a minimum of 12 continuous months," impermissibly conflicts with Evid C §500. The court of appeal acknowledged the conflict, but found it unnecessary to resolve the question because the landlord had admitted bad faith by failing to file an answer denying the tenant's allegation of bad faith. 216 CA3d at 1596. In Rental Hous. Ass'n of N. Alameda County v City of Oakland (2009) 171 CA4th 741, 90 CR3d 181, however, the court struck down a section of the Oakland Just Cause for Eviction Ordinance because it created a presumption of a violation of the ordinance if the owner failed to continuously occupy a unit for 3 years after evicting the tenant for owner-occupancy. But an evidentiary presumption that affects the burden of producing evidence was permitted in TG Oceanside, LP v City of Oceanside (2007) 156 CA4th 1355, 68 CR3d 320.

In TG Oceanside, the court validated a provision in the Oceanside rent control ordinance that required an owner to meet the burden of presenting evidence that the rent increase adjustments provided for in the ordinance did not provide the owner a just and reasonable return on investment in any given year. The court held that the provision involved the burden of producing evidence and not a burden of proof outlawed in Fisher. 37 C3d at 698.

§7.76 G. Defenses to Evictions Provided by Local Ordinance

Some rent control ordinances provide possible defenses in unlawful detainer actions. Depending on the ordinance, a tenant may be able to defend an eviction action on the ground that:

(1) The units are not properly registered;

(2) The landlord is charging an incorrect rent;

(3) The landlord has breached the implied warranty of habitability in the tenant's unit or in another tenant's unit; or

(4) The landlord has failed in some other respect to comply with the rent control ordinance (e.g., failed to serve the tenant with proof of current registration).

Rent control ordinances may specifically prohibit evictions made in retaliation for the tenant's exercise of rights under the ordinance. Under such a provision, a tenant could raise the landlord's retaliation as a defense to an eviction attempt even when good cause otherwise exists for eviction under the ordinance. Rent control ordinances frequently provide for protection against retaliatory evictions even if the jurisdiction does not otherwise restrict evictions to those made for "good cause."

PRACTICE TIP: Attorneys should read the applicable ordinance carefully, list all possible defenses that a tenant might raise to an eviction, and then determine whether the tenant can prevail on any of them.

§7.76A H. Required Payments to Tenants on Eviction

The Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) authorizes localities to enact provisions that require landlords who withdraw properties from rent or lease to make payments to evicted tenants in advance of the tenant's vacating the withdrawn rental unit. See Govt C §7060.1(c), discussed in §§7.64, 7.64H. Some localities require landlords to make payments to tenants in other situations, typically where a tenant is being asked to leave due to no fault on the part of the tenant (e.g., owner move in). See, e.g., San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.9C.

X. CIVIL DAMAGES AND OFFSETS FOR ORDINANCE VIOLATIONS

§7.77 A. Damages for Rent Overcharges

Rent control ordinances commonly authorize damages for rent overcharges (up to three times the amount of the overcharge). Some ordinances set a minimum level of damages for rent overcharges and an administrative procedure for determining the refund of overcharges. See, e.g., Baychester Shopping Ctr., Inc. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2008) 165 CA4th 1000, 81 CR3d 341, cited in §7.40A. In the absence of administrative remedies for rent overcharges, a tenant must pursue the usual civil remedies in a court action for a refund of the overcharges, for declaratory relief concerning the proper rent, or both.

Many ordinances contain no provision for an administrative determination of the correct rent. In these jurisdictions, a tenant faced with what may be an unlawful rent increase must contest the amount in an unlawful detainer proceeding or pay the amount demanded and then seek a judicial determination in a declaratory relief action.

Under CC §1947.7, in a jurisdiction that requires registration of rent, restitution of overcharges to the tenant and recovery of registration or filing fees are the exclusive remedies for a landlord's failure to register when a landlord is in "substantial compliance" with the ordinance. No other penalties may be assessed against such a landlord. In Richman v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1992) 7 CA4th 1457, 9 CR2d 690, the court held that CC §1947.7 does not prevent a rent board from determining whether parking was included in the landlord's base rent, when the board did not assess any excess rent penalty against the landlord.

In rent-controlled jurisdictions that require registration of rent, once a certified rent has been established (see CC §1947.8, discussed in §7.45), any landlord who charges rent to a tenant in excess of the certified rent ceiling must refund the excess rent to the tenant on demand. CC §1947.11(a). If the landlord refuses to refund the excess rent and a court finds the landlord willfully charged the tenant rent in excess of the certified lawful rent ceiling, the court must award the tenant a judgment for the excess amount of rent and may treble that amount. The prevailing party is entitled to attorney fees and costs. CC §1947.11(a). The remedy under CC §1947.11 does not prohibit any other remedy that might be available to a party aggrieved by rent in excess of a certified level. CC §1947.11(b).

Unlawful business practices that also constitute a violation of local rent control ordinances may be enjoined and penalized under Bus & P C §§17200-17209. In People v Beaumont Invs., Ltd. (2003) 111 CA4th 102, 3 CR3d 429, e.g., the court of appeal sustained judgments of $525,000 in restitution and $525,000 in civil damages in favor of the residents of two mobilehome parks and against the two parks and a mobilehome dealer, who entered into long-term leases favorable to the parks and then sold the new mobilehomes to consumers subject to the leases to evade local rent controls. The damages included repayment of several years of "excess" rent payments.

A rent control board may not issue an order allowing a tenant to withhold a portion of the monthly rent as restitution for past overcharges, nor may it declare that such withholding may not form the basis of an unlawful detainer action. Such orders represent "an unwarranted intrusion into the power of the courts to 'check' administrative adjudications." McHugh v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 C3d 348, 377, 261 CR 318. The supreme court also held that, although an administrative agency may assess certain penalties, a local rent board's award of treble damages is invalid. Such penalties are not reasonably necessary to effect the board's primary, legitimate regulatory purposes. Moreover, a rent board's power to award treble damages "poses a risk of producing arbitrary, disproportionate results that magnify, beyond acceptable risks, the possibility of arbitrariness inherent in any scheme of administrative adjudications." 49 C3d at 379. In addition, the court upheld the power of local rent boards to adjudicate excess rent claims, rejecting the arguments that such adjudications violate the judicial powers clause (Cal Const art VI, §1) or the right to a jury trial (Cal Const art I, §16).

A treble damage award for fraudulent collection of rents in excess of those allowed by a local rent control ordinance is not dischargeable in bankruptcy. Cohen v de la Cruz (1998) 523 US 213, 140 L Ed 2d 341, 118 S Ct 1212.

§7.78 B. Damages for Unlawful Evictions

Most rent control ordinances authorize civil actions for damages arising from eviction attempts or actual evictions that violate the eviction control ordinance. However, these ordinance provisions are undergoing many challenges. Claims for wrongful eviction under such ordinances arising out of court actions for unlawful detainer violate the litigation privilege under state law and are barred. See Action Apartment Ass'n v City of Santa Monica (2007) 41 C4th 1232, 63 CR3d 398, discussed in §7.55. In other words, if a tenant successfully defends the unlawful detainer action by invoking the local ordinance, the litigation privilege bars a wrongful eviction suit for damages, but a malicious prosecution action may be available to the tenant. 41 C4th at 1249. If the basis of the wrongful eviction suit is a mere eviction notice that violates the ordinance, the act of serving the eviction notice is protected by the litigation privilege only if litigation is contemplated in good faith and under serious consideration. 41 C4th at 1251. This is a factual question that would be difficult to resolve on a summary judgment motion. For further discussion, see Busch, Reader Alert: Action Apartment Association Case May Bar Many Wrongful Eviction Lawsuits, 25 Cal Real Prop J 51 (No. 3, 2007). See also Bisno v Douglas Emmett Realty Fund 1988 (2009) 174 CA4th 1534, 95 CR3d 492 (granting summary judgment on malicious prosecution claim and applying litigation privilege to wrongful eviction claim), cited in §7.55.

One court of appeal allowed a suit for wrongful eviction to be defended with an anti-SLAPP (strategic lawsuit against public participation) motion to strike under CCP §425.16. See Birkner v Lam (2007) 156 CA4th 275, 67 CR3d 190. To succeed on this type of motion, the moving party defendant must show that the statements or acts complained of were in furtherance of the defendant's constitutional right of petition or free speech in connection with a public issue. The plaintiff defeats the motion by proving the probability that the plaintiff will prevail on the complaint. The Birkner decision held that the protection under §425.16 extends to an allegedly illegal notice of termination of tenancy served on the tenant even if an unlawful detainer action does not follow. The court ruled that even though the notice was not part of a judicial proceeding, service of the notice was a protected activity under §425.16 because the notice "is a legal prerequisite for bringing an unlawful detainer action." 156 CA4th at 282.

PRACTICE TIP: In view of Birkner, tenant attorneys bringing wrongful eviction suits should be especially diligent when preparing the complaint to gather sufficient facts to overcome an anti-SLAPP motion, which is often brought within 60 days of service of the complaint. See CCP §425.16(f). This should not be difficult if the tenant has prevailed in an unlawful detainer action on the same theory as the wrongful eviction claim.

In Clark v Mazgani (2009) 170 CA4th 1281, 89 CR3d 24, the tenant sued the landlord for fraud and unlawful eviction after the landlord evicted the tenant for supposed occupancy by the landlord's daughter. The daughter never moved in. The trial court granted the landlord's anti-SLAPP motion. The court of appeal reversed. The tenant's complaint was based on the landlord's violation of rent control laws, not on actions in furtherance of the right of free speech or petition. The landlord's fraudulent act of terminating a tenancy or removing a unit from the rental market and allowing that unit to stand empty was an actionable unlawful eviction under CC §1947.10(a) and was not protected by the rights of petition or speech.

In Delois v Barrett Block Partners (2009) 177 CA4th 940, 99 CR3d 609, the landlord, without filing suit, entered into a settlement agreement with the tenant requiring the tenant to vacate the property. Thereafter, the landlord raised the tenant's rent for breaching the settlement agreement. The tenant vacated and sued the landlord in tort and contract, alleging that he was forced to vacate his unit in violation of the local rent control act. The landlord brought an anti-SLAPP motion claiming that its actions were protected because they arose from a settlement agreement that was entered into to avoid litigation. The court held that the landlord's actions were not the basis of the plaintiff's lawsuit but merely preceded it and denied the anti-SLAPP motion.

Earlier cases interpreted the eviction control statutes liberally. For example, a court of appeal held that a private cause of action for damages exists when a landlord terminates a tenancy in bad faith in violation of a local rent control ordinance, even if the ordinance does not provide for such an action and the ordinance makes the landlord's action a crime. Castillo v Friedman (1987) 197 CA3d Supp 6, 243 CR 206.

Some ordinances authorize treble damages for unlawful evictions or eviction attempts. In Kelly v Yee (1989) 213 CA3d 336, 261 CR 568, the court of appeal held that an award of treble damages for unlawful eviction is mandatory under the San Francisco rent control ordinance, which authorizes the tenant or the rent board to institute a civil proceeding for "not less than" treble damages. Although the language of the ordinance appears to authorize a higher award, the opinion states in dicta that it is "an obviously absurd interpretation" to contemplate that more than three times actual damages might be awarded. 213 CA3d at 340. In addition, the court held that the ordinance was not preempted by CC §3294 (which authorizes awards of punitive damages in civil actions generally) because the treble damages provision was created to encourage private enforcement of the ordinance rather than to punish extreme and outrageous conduct. The court summarily rejected the landlords' argument that the ordinance violated due process by imposing treble damages without regard to fault or magnitude of violation. 213 CA3d at 341. See also Beeman v Burling (1990) 216 CA3d 1586, 265 CR 719, in which the court upheld the trebling of an award of $20,000 for mental anguish in an unlawful eviction action brought under the San Francisco ordinance. The court also awarded the tenant attorney fees incurred in the appeal under CC §1717 (see §13.25).

In Balmoral Hotel Tenants Ass'n v Lee (1990) 226 CA3d 686, 276 CR 640, the court held that mental anguish was a proper element of damages in a wrongful eviction action under the San Francisco rent control ordinance. The court of appeal refused to treble the portion of the damages attributable to mental anguish, however, and it limited treble damages to out-of-pocket expenses. The court held that the dominant motive of the board of supervisors in providing for treble damages was to encourage suits to protect tenants' rights, when the stakes would otherwise be too small to make litigation worthwhile. The amount of damages for mental suffering might easily be large enough to support litigation without trebling them. Interpreting the ordinance to authorize trebling only of economic damages avoided the substantive due process problems that might arise if a mandatory formula results in an excessive penalty. See Hale v Morgan (1978) 22 C3d 388, 149 CR 375, discussed in §8.149.

After the Balmoral decision, the San Francisco Board of Supervisors amended its ordinance to provide that damages for mental or emotional distress should be trebled, but only if the trier of fact finds that the landlord acted in knowing violation or reckless disregard of the eviction control ordinance.

In contrast, CC §1942.4 (see §§3.15A, 3.36) permits an award of "actual damages" in actions to remedy untenantability of the premises, and that term includes emotional distress damages. McNairy v C.K. Realty (2007) 150 CA4th 1500, 59 CR3d 429. The court distinguished Balmoral, because that case involved a constitutional challenge to the trebling of damages, which was not present in McNairy.

Damages for breach of an ordinance typically are calculated under CC §3333. Damages designed to compensate the tenant for actual losses are typically awarded, such as the difference between what the tenant was paying in the rent-controlled property and what the tenant was forced to pay for rent in a new apartment. On one occasion, even in the absence of pleading a contract based cause of action, one court has employed a contract measure of damages and awarded the tenant the benefit of the tenant's bargain (i.e., the difference between what the tenant was paying for rent in the rent-controlled apartment and the amount of rent the landlord obtained for the unit after the tenant left) if no other means of compensation for the wrong existed. Castillo v Friedman, supra, in which the tenant who was wrongfully evicted had moved to a smaller apartment and in fact had paid significantly less rent than had been paid in the rent-controlled apartment, thus rendering inappropriate the more traditional measure of damages for the wrong. For further discussion of Castillo, see §7.67.

For practical tips on how to prosecute or defend a lawsuit for an eviction that violates a local rent control ordinance, see Souza, The Wrongful Eviction Lawsuit, 10 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 52 (Mar. 1988); Souza, The Wrongful Eviction Lawsuit: Update, 12 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 63 (Mar. 1990); Souza, Wrongful Eviction Update and Introduction to Habitability Litigation, 15 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 100 (Mar. 1993). §7.79 C. Attorney Fees

Some rent control ordinances provide for an award of attorney fees to the prevailing party in eviction cases and in civil actions for violation of the ordinance. They do not provide for attorney fees for hearings on individual-adjustment petitions. For discussion of attorney fee awards in unlawful detainer actions, see §§13.25-13.33.

§7.80 D. Liability of New Owner

A new owner is liable for rent overcharges collected by a previous owner when the local ordinance imposes successor liability. Baychester Shopping Ctr., Inc. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2008) 165 CA4th 1000, 81 CR3d 341 (interpreting San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §§37.2, 37.8(e)(7)). Therefore, potential buyers should explore compliance and registration issues before buying property. They may wish to consider requiring that funds be held in escrow pending potential resolution of liability issues. See §7.68.

PRACTICE TIP: Buyers of apartment buildings in jurisdictions that have controls on rents should be careful to determine prior rent increases. The task of ascertaining correct rent levels may be easier in jurisdictions where the locality required registration of rents. If the buyer ascertains the prior rent increases did not comply with the local rent controls, the buyer may reduce the rent to an amount that complies. If there is no rent registration, adequate disclosures and hold harmless agreements should be obtained from sellers and estoppel letters sent to existing tenants. See strategies in comment following Baychester case summary in 31 CEB Real Prop L Rep 173 (Sept. 2008).

CAUTION: If a tenant has been overcharged rent by a former landlord, the new owner may risk having the tenant exercise the remedy of offsetting prior excess rent against current rents. The definition of "landlord" in many rent control laws includes a successor-in-interest. The rationale of Minelian v Manzella (1989) 215 CA3d 457, 263 CR 597, and Nourafchan v Miner (1985) 169 CA3d 746, 215 CR 450, permits all excess rent previously paid to be offset against future rents if permitted by local ordinance. The remedy of the new owner is to sue the former owner for fraud or negligence.

§8.1 I. METHODS OF TERMINATING TENANCY

A tenancy may be terminated in a variety of ways, either automatically or on action of one or both parties, depending on the nature of the tenancy and the reasons for termination. Terminating a tenancy is not the same as physically vacating the premises, but termination may be a prerequisite to vacating physically. The classic termination of a tenancy is the series of steps initiated by the landlord on the tenant's breach, beginning with service of a notice to quit (see §§8.22-8.108). Termination in this context is a necessary step to enable the landlord to file and maintain an unlawful detainer lawsuit (see chaps 9-13). In addition to covering terminations initiated by the 3-day notice, this chapter will discuss the other most commonly encountered ways that tenancies are terminated.

§8.2 A. Expiration of Term

A tenancy for a specified or fixed term terminates automatically when the term expires (see CC §1933(1); Canning v Fibush (1888) 77 C 196, 19 P 376; Stoppelkamp v Mangeot (1871) 42 C 316), but rent- and eviction-controlled jurisdictions prohibit such terminations and require that the landlord have a reason authorized by the ordinance and use a CC §1946 or §1946.1 notice to effect a termination (see §§7.53-7.54, 8.69). See also §§3.66, 8.82. Special rules also apply to owners of mobilehomes being evicted from a mobilehome park after the lease term expires (see §6.73) and to tenants in government-assisted housing being evicted after the lease term expires (see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993)).

The parties may alter the CC §1933(1) rule by agreeing on some contingency that will terminate the tenancy before its term expires (Caswell v Gardner (1936) 12 CA2d 597, 55 P2d 1222) or that will authorize one party to terminate by giving prescribed notice (Kurihara v City Market of Los Angeles (1928) 90 CA 374, 265 P 987). See §8.82. For a tenancy with an indefinite term (periodic tenancy), the landlord-tenant relationship continues indefinitely until either the landlord or the tenant terminates it by giving notice (see §§8.20, 8.69-8.80).

§8.3 B. By Actions of Landlord or Tenant

The tenancy may be terminated by either the landlord or the tenant if the other party breaches a covenant of the lease or rental agreement. See §§8.19, 8.26-8.68. The tenant's abandonment (see §§8.8-8.16), or surrender to the landlord (see §8.17) of the premises may also terminate the tenancy.

§8.4 C. Death of Landlord or Tenant

The death of either the landlord or the tenant terminates a periodic tenancy and a tenancy at will or at sufferance (see §§1.10-1.11, 1.65). CC §1934; Joy v McKay (1886) 70 C 445, 11 P 763 (death of landlord); Miller & Desatnik Mgmt. Co. v Bullock (1990) 221 CA3d Supp 13, 270 CR 600 (death of tenant); Dugand v Magnus (1930) 107 CA 243, 290 P 309 (death of tenant). But see Pick v Cohen (2000) 83 CA4th Supp 6, 100 CR2d 839 (West Hollywood Rent Stabilization Ordinance may legally permit tenant's surviving roommate/caretaker to remain in unit after tenant dies). A tenancy for a specified term, however, does not terminate before expiration of the term, despite the death of either the tenant (Joost v Castel (1939) 33 CA2d 138, 91 P2d 172) or the landlord (City of Los Angeles v Greines (1930) 107 CA 481, 290 P 509). See also §§7.72, 8.21.

§8.5 D. Destruction of Premises; Governmental Regulation

Destruction of the leased premises terminates a tenancy. CC §1933(4); Hamer v Ellis (1919) 40 CA 57, 180 P 30. If the leased premises are destroyed by fire, a lease cancellation provision in the lease will prevail over the tenant's option to extend the term. 11382 Beach Partnership v Libaw (1999) 70 CA4th 212, 82 CR2d 533. Unless the lease specifically provides to the contrary, a tenancy for a specified term is not terminated by a governmental regulation that frustrates the purposes for which the property was leased, such as a zoning change, denial of a use permit or variance. Mitchell v Ceazan Tires (1944) 25 C2d 45, 153 P2d 53.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.6 E. Eminent Domain

When the entire property subject to a lease is acquired by eminent domain, the lease terminates absent a provision to the contrary. CCP §§1265.110, 1265.160. A partial taking, however, terminates the lease only for the portion taken (CCP §1265.120), unless the court adjudges that the remainder of the property is no longer suitable for the purposes of the lease (CCP §1265.130). In City of Vista v Fielder (1996) 13 C4th 612, 54 CR2d 861, the supreme court held that a commercial tenant is entitled to compensation on condemnation of the premises, despite a lease provision that the lease would terminate if the building were condemned. The tenant will not have a right to obtain damages against a redevelopment agency for inverse condemnation, however, if the tenant is lawfully evicted by a private landlord under no threat of condemnation. Langer v Redev. Agency (1999) 71 CA4th 998, 84 CR2d 19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.7 F. Sale of Premises

Sale of the leased premises by the owner (as opposed to a foreclosure sale or deed in lieu of foreclosure) does not, in itself, terminate the tenancy; the new owner takes the place of the seller and becomes the new landlord. See §8.68D. See also Rosenkranz v Pellin (1950) 99 CA2d 650, 222 P2d 249. The parties may provide in the lease, however, that the tenancy will terminate on a sale of the property by the landlord. Such a provision is binding (Lewis v Agoure (1908) 8 CA 146, 96 P 327), but the landlord must show that the sale was bona fide (Davis v Schweikert (1900) 130 C 143, 62 P 411).

An eviction remedy under CCP §§1161a, 1161b is available to a new-owner landlord whose tenant holds over after a sale of the property by execution, foreclosure, or under a power of sale in a deed of trust, unless the tenant holds a fixed-term lease that has priority over the foreclosed lien. See §8.68E. But see §7.69 on evictions following foreclosure in rent-controlled jurisdictions.

II. TERMINATION BY TENANT

A. Abandonment

§8.8 1. Definition

Abandonment is the unilateral, voluntary relinquishment of the premises by a tenant who does not intend to perform the future obligations of the lease. Martin v Cassidy (1957) 149 CA2d 106, 307 P2d 981; Pickens v Johnson (1951) 107 CA2d 778, 238 P2d 40. Abandonment is distinguishable from surrender (see §8.17), which is the tenant's relinquishment of the premises with the landlord's express or implied consent. Scott v Mullins (1962) 211 CA2d 51, 27 CR 269; Dorcich v Time Oil Co. (1951) 103 CA2d 677, 230 P2d 10.

Establishing both the tenant's breach of the lease and abandonment of the premises may have the important consequence of terminating the lease and the parties' obligations under it. Compare, e.g., §8.14 with §8.15.

WARNING: Written acceptance of a tenant's offer to "surrender" the premises extinguishes the tenant's obligation to pay any future rent. See §8.17. A savvy tenant will offer to surrender the premises to the landlord; such an offer, if accepted, cuts off both privity of estate and privity of contract between the parties.

2. Establishing Abandonment

§8.9 a. Under CC §§1951.2-1951.3

Civil Code §§1951.2-1952.2 provide a procedure for establishing abandonment, initiated by notice under CC §1951.3 that the landlord believes that the premises have been abandoned. If there is no response to the notice, the landlord may then reenter and take possession of the premises without filing an unlawful detainer action and obtaining a writ of possession. See §§8.14-8.16.

Strict adherence to the notice procedure is important because a landlord who reenters the premises under the mistaken belief that they have been abandoned, without filing the notice under the procedure specified in CC §§1951.2-1952.2, may be liable for damages for wrongfully evicting the tenant. See Kassan v Stout (1973) 9 C3d 39, 106 CR 783; Saferian v Baer (1930) 105 CA 238, 287 P 142. On "self-help" evictions generally, see §§8.137-8.153. Following the statutory procedure in CC §1951.3(a) may also enable the landlord to avoid the time and expense of an unlawful detainer action as a prerequisite to reletting the premises. Notice may be given only after the rent has been due for 14 or more consecutive days, and the landlord's belief that the tenant has abandoned the property must be "reasonable." CC §1951.3(b). The fact that the tenant has left personal property on the premises does not preclude a reasonable belief that the premises have been abandoned. CC §1951.3(e)(2). The notice must also specify a termination date for the lease that is not less than 15 days after service if the notice is served personally, or 18 days if it is served by mail. CC §1951.3(b). The premises will be considered abandoned if no response to the notice is received stating that the tenant does not intend to abandon the property and submitting an address where the tenant may be served by certified mail in an unlawful detainer action. CC §1951.3(a).

PRACTICE TIP: The landlord is not required to use the notice procedure to establish abandonment and is not precluded from otherwise proving that the property was abandoned. CC §1951.3(f). Many landlords follow the notice procedures, which provide simple and expeditious protection against liability for reentering and reletting the premises—even if it turns out that the tenant has not, in fact, abandoned the premises. On the other hand, the eviction process may be nearly as fast, and it provides the added protection of a judgment for possession and damages.

Use of the notice procedure for establishing abandonment is not a prerequisite for initiating an unlawful detainer action (CCP §§1161-1179a; see chap 9), nor does it satisfy the notice requirements for an unlawful detainer action (CC §1951.3(g); see §§8.22-8.85), and the landlord's attorney may find it advisable to undertake both notice procedures at the same time. If the abandonment procedure succeeds, the landlord will be able to reenter and relet faster than eviction procedures would have permitted. Conversely, if the tenant opposes the abandonment notice, the landlord can then proceed with the unlawful detainer action.

If the termination is for unpaid rent, the dual notice procedure may be followed as long as the rent has been unpaid for 14 days. CC §1951.3(b). The landlord may then file an unlawful detainer action after 3 days to prevent delay in case the tenant opposes the abandonment notice. On 3-day notices to pay rent or quit, see §§8.26-8.68.

8.10-1 Notice of belief of abandonment

NOTICE OF BELIEF OF ABANDONMENT

To _ _[name of lessee/tenant]_ _, _ _[address]_ _:

This notice is given pursuant to Civil Code §1951.3 concerning the real property leased by you at _ _[state location of property by address or other sufficient description]_ _. The rent on this property has been due and unpaid for 14 consecutive days, and the lessor/landlord believes that you have abandoned the property.

The real property will be deemed abandoned within the meaning of Civil Code §1951.2, and your lease will terminate on _ _[specify a date not less than 15 days after this notice is served personally or, if mailed, no less than 18 days after this notice is deposited in the mail]_ _ unless before such date the undersigned receives at the address indicated below a written notice from you stating both of the following:

(1) Your intent not to abandon the real property.

(2) An address at which you may be served by certified mail in any action for unlawful detainer of the real property.

You are required to pay the rent due and unpaid on this real property as required by the lease, and your failure to do so can lead to a court proceeding against you.

Date: _ _ _ _ _ _ __[Signature of lessor/landlord]__
_ _[Typed name of lessor/landlord]_ _
_ _[Address to which lessee/tenant is to send notice]_ _

Copies: Original (served on tenant and each cotenant); copies for landlord's and attorney's files.

Comment: This form is taken almost verbatim from the notice in CC §1951.3(d), which merely requires that the notice be given in "substantially" the format it sets forth.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.11 (2) Service of Notice

The notice of belief of abandonment (see §8.10) may be served personally or sent by first class mail to the tenant at his or her last known address. CC §1951.3(c). If the landlord believes that notice sent to the last known address (presumably the premises in question) will not reach the tenant, then notice also must be sent to other addresses, if any, at which the tenant reasonably could be expected to receive the notice. CC §1951.3(c). This provision does not express a preference for personal service over service by mail, and an attempt at personal service does not appear to be required. Compare CC §1951.3(c) with CCP §1162, which sets service requirements for a notice to quit, and requires that an attempt first be made to serve notice personally.

PRACTICE TIP: The landlord probably should mail a notice of abandonment to the tenant's work address. See CCP §1162(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.12 (3) Countering Notice of Abandonment

The property is not considered abandoned, and the landlord therefore cannot reenter and relet the premises, if the tenant proves any of the following:

(a) The rent was not due and unpaid for 14 consecutive days at the time that the notice of belief of abandonment was served. CC §1951.3(e)(1).

(b) The landlord's belief that the property had been abandoned was not reasonable at the time notice was given. (The landlord's knowledge that the tenant left personal property on the premises does not justify a finding that the landlord's belief was unreasonable. CC §1951.3(e)(2).)

(c) Within the time specified in the landlord's notice (see §8.10), the tenant gave written notice to the landlord that he or she did not intend to abandon the property and stated an address at which service could be made by certified mail in an unlawful detainer proceeding concerning the property. CC §1951.3(e)(3).

(d) The tenant paid to the landlord all or a portion of the rent due on the property from 14 days before the notice of belief of abandonment was served through the date that the lease would have terminated under the notice. CC §1951.3(e)(4).

If the tenant proves any of the foregoing in response to the notice, the landlord must obtain a judgment in an unlawful detainer action to reenter and relet the premises. The landlord may not reenter under the abandonment provisions. CC §1951.3.

If the landlord served the appropriate notice to quit while serving the notice of belief of abandonment (see §8.9), the time within which the landlord may bring an unlawful detainer action will be shortened when it is clear that an abandonment procedure is unavailing. Otherwise, the landlord must serve a notice to quit (CCP §§1161-1162) at this time in order to recover possession of the premises.

§8.13 b. At Common Law

The landlord is expressly permitted by CC §1951.3(f) to prove that the premises have been abandoned by means other than statutory procedure. Moreover, the lease does not terminate under CC §1951.3 if the tenant vacates the premises but is not in default under the lease. In these instances, the existence of an abandonment is determined by time-honored case law on the subject. It is important to note that a landlord who proceeds under common law may be liable if he or she mistakenly believes that the tenant has abandoned the premises, whereas the CC §1951.3 procedure protects the landlord from liability in the event of a "wrong guess" about abandonment unless the "wrong guess" was not a reasonable belief at the time notice was given.

The primary difference between the statutory and case definitions of abandonment is that the statutory definition requires that the tenant be in breach of the lease for an abandonment to be found. Under case law, abandonment turns primarily on the tenant's intent: Abandonment is the voluntary relinquishment of the premises with the intent not to perform future obligations under the lease. Martin v Cassidy (1957) 149 CA2d 106, 307 P2d 981; Pickens v Johnson (1951) 107 CA2d 778, 238 P2d 40. Whether an abandonment exists is a question of fact that must show that the tenant intended to relinquish all right to the property. Kulawitz v Pacific Woodenware & Paper Co. (1944) 25 C2d 664, 155 P2d 24; Wiese v Steinauer (1962) 201 CA2d 651, 20 CR 295. For examples of factual determinations of abandonment or its lack, see Kassan v Stout (1973) 9 C3d 39, 106 CR 783 (subletting premises in breach of lease not an abandonment); Kulawitz v Pacific Woodenware & Paper Co., supra (not an abandonment for commercial tenant to conduct "retirement sale" on premises and to give keys to landlord's agent); Riner v Vernon (1933) 132 CA 178, 22 P2d 255 (delivering keys and vacating premises not sufficient to constitute abandonment).

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords may consider entering the tenant's unit based on CC §1954(e), allowing entry without notice based on the tenant's abandonment of the dwelling. See §§3.2-3.4, 4.43, 5.17. A less risky procedure is serving a notice of intent to enter the premises under CC §1954(d). Landlord attorneys argue that, after posting the notice, the landlord can enter the unit to confirm a good faith belief that the tenant has abandoned it. The least risky, but most time-consuming, is the notice of belief in abandonment procedure under CC §1951.3(d).

3. Remedies

§8.14 a. Termination of Lease (CC §1951.2)

Unless the lease specifically provides for the remedy in CC §1951.4 (see §8.15), the tenant's breach of the lease and eviction from (or abandonment of) the premises terminates the lease. CC §1951.2(a). On lease termination, the landlord is entitled to recover the following:

- unpaid rent earned to the time of termination (CC §1951.2(a)(1)), with interest (CC §1951.2(b));
- the amount by which the unpaid rent from the time of termination to the time of the award exceeds the amount that the landlord could have obtained by acting reasonably in reletting the property (i.e., "the amount of such rental loss that the lessee proves could have been reasonably avoided" (CC §1951.2(a)(2)); and
- any other amount necessary to compensate the landlord for any loss proximately caused by the tenant's failure to perform, or that reasonably could have been foreseen to be a likely result of the tenant's breach (CC §1951.2(a)(4)).

The landlord may also be able to recover the amount by which the unpaid rent for the balance of the term exceeds the amount that the landlord reasonably could have obtained by reletting the premises (CC §1951.2(a)(3)), but only if the lease so provides or if the landlord actually relets the premises and the reletting constitutes a reasonable, good faith effort to mitigate damages (CC §1951.2(c)). See Millikan v American Spectrum Real Estate Servs. Cal., Inc. (2004) 117 CA4th 1094, 12 CR3d 459. If either of these conditions is met, the landlord may then recover the amount by which the unpaid rent for the balance of the term exceeds the amount of rent loss that the tenant proves could reasonably have been avoided (discounted at the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco discount rate at the time of the award, plus 1 percent). CC §1951.2(b).

An obvious purpose of CC §1951.2 is to induce the landlord to relet the premises in order to mitigate damages. The statute expressly provides that the landlord's efforts to mitigate damages do not constitute a waiver of the right to recover damages. CC §1951.2(d). In the somewhat curious wording of CC §1951.2(a)(2)-(3) ("the amount of such rental loss that the lessee proves could have been reasonably avoided"), the legislature permits the tenant to offset against unpaid rent not only amounts actually received by the landlord as a result of the reletting, but also any amounts that the tenant can prove that the landlord should have obtained by making reasonable efforts to relet the property. If the landlord relets the abandoned premises for a higher rent, the breaching tenant can offset the increase against the amounts due under the old lease. The landlord is not entitled to recover a windfall, and the tenant may owe nothing or a reduced amount. Willis v Soda Shoppes (1982) 134 CA3d 899, 184 CR 761.

The tenant may defend against a claim for future rent by proving acts or statements by the landlord that constitute cancellation, waiver, or estoppel. Desert Plaza Partnership v Waddell (1986) 180 CA3d 805, 225 CR 775. See also CCP §1161.5, discussed in §§8.44, 8.49. Efforts to mitigate damages, however, e.g., discussions with the tenant concerning a sublet, do not waive the lessor's right to recover damages under CC §1951.2. Walt v Superior Court (1992) 8 CA4th 1667, 1678, 11 CR2d 278 (distinguishing Desert Plaza).

The landlord's duty to mitigate damages does not require him or her to run the business that was operated by the tenant, nor to sell the property. Therefore, profits that the landlord makes by running the business or selling the property shall not be deducted from recoverable damages. Lu v Grewal (2005) 130 CA4th 841, 30 CR3d 623. But it might be appropriate for the landlord to mitigate damages by selling the property rather than reletting it, and if the landlord does so, it may recover reasonable selling expenses. See Millikan v American Spectrum Real Estate Servs. Cal., Inc. (2004) 117 CA4th 1094, 12 CR3d 459. In Millikan, the court stated that the tenant (a real estate leasing, selling, and management business that had leased the whole building) was free to prove that a greater rental loss could have been avoided by retaining the property, or that the sale price was unreasonably low. However, Millikan involved a lease that specifically provided for postjudgment damages under CC §1951.2(a)(3). The court in dicta opined that when the lease does not so provide, a sale is not the proper method of mitigation and reletting would be a necessary precondition to obtaining postjudgment damages. 117 CA4th at 1101. In First Nat'l Mortgage Co. v Federal Realty Inv. Trust (ND Cal 2009) 633 F Supp 2d 985, the court held that the sale of property following the tenant's abandonment of a lease does not deprive the landlord of its available contract remedies under CC §1951.2. The landlord retains the right to claim rental loss accruing after the date of sale, except to the extent the breaching tenant can prove the rental loss was avoidable. A rental stream of a value equivalent to the sale proceeds can be determined using a market capitalization rate. 633 F Supp 2d at 999.

An action for damages under CC §1951.2 may be maintained even when the tenant has been allowed to remain in possession of the premises. Walt v Superior Court, supra.

NOTE: A lease may reserve landlord's rights under both CC §§1951.2 and 1951.4 (see §8.15), allowing the landlord to elect between them after the tenant defaults. For further discussion in a commercial leasing context, see Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 29 (Cal CEB 1996).

§8.15 b. Continuation of Lease (CC §1951.4)

The landlord may continue the lease in force and collect the rent as it becomes due, on the tenant's breach of the lease and abandonment of the property, but only if the lease so provides and the landlord does not terminate the tenant's right to possession of the property. CC §1951.4(a)-(b). For this remedy to be available to the landlord, not only must the lease provide for it (CC §1951.4(a)), but the lease must also permit the tenant, subject only to reasonable limitations, to assign or sublet the leasehold estate (CC §1951.4(b)). Under CC §1951.4(a), a lease provision in substantially the following form satisfies the requirements of that subsection:

The lessor has the remedy described in California Civil Code §1951.4 (lessor may continue lease in effect after lessee's breach and abandonment and recover rent as it becomes due, if lessee has right to sublet or assign, subject only to reasonable limitations).

This provision is not the exclusive method of providing for the remedy of CC §1951.4 in the lease (CC §1951.4(a)), but it is a clear and useful method that lessors should consider incorporating in their leases if they intend to avail themselves of the remedy under the statute.

Thus, it is the tenant's duty to relet the premises in order to mitigate damages under such a lease provision. The landlord's actions to maintain or preserve the property, to relet it, to appoint a receiver to protect the landlord's interest, or to withhold consent to or terminate a subletting or assignment (provided the action does not violate the lessee's rights under CC §1951.4(b)) do not constitute a termination of the tenant's right to possession under this section. CC §1951.4(c).

PRACTICE TIP: In an inflationary market, the landlord might be better off terminating the tenancy under CC §1951.2 (see §8.14) rather than continuing the lease. This is so because the tenant is entitled to offset any increase in rent on reletting against the rent owed under the original lease. See Willis v Soda Shoppes (1982) 134 CA3d 899, 184 CR 761.

§8.16 c. Liquidated Damages; Equitable Relief; Nonexclusivity of Remedies

A lease executed on or after July 1, 1971, may contain a liquidated damages provision (see CC §1671), and the provision is enforceable if reasonable. CC §§1951.5, 1952.2.

The statutory remedies for recovering damages on termination or abandonment (CC §§1951.2, 1951.4; see §§8.14-8.15) are not exclusive. Thus, the landlord is entitled to obtain equitable relief in addition to the statutory remedies when such relief is otherwise appropriate. CC §1951.8. For example, the landlord may have a receiver appointed without being held to have terminated the tenant's rights under the lease. CC §1951.4(c)(2). Moreover, nothing in the abandonment sections affects the parties' rights to proceed with actions for unlawful detainer or forcible entry or detainer. CC §1952(a). Bringing such an action does not affect the landlord's ability to obtain relief under the abandonment provisions, but no damages may be recovered in the subsequent action for detriment for which a claim for damages was made and determined in the previous action. CC §1952(b).

In Harbor Island Holdings, LLC v Kim (2003) 107 CA4th 790, 132 CR2d 406, the court held that a lease provision tripling the rent if the tenant breached any provision of the lease was an unenforceable penalty under CC §1671(b) rather than a valid liquidated damages clause, because it bore no reasonable relationship to the range of actual damages that the parties could have anticipated would flow from a breach. The fact that the lease was a commercial lease negotiated by seasoned business entities, not a consumer lease between unsophisticated individuals, was held to have no bearing on the result.

It might be appropriate in some circumstances for the landlord to mitigate its damages by selling the property rather than reletting it, and if it does so, it may recover reasonable selling expenses. See Millikan v American Spectrum Real Estate Servs. Cal., Inc. (2004) 117 CA4th 1094, 12 CR3d 459, cited in §8.14. The sale of the property following the tenant's abandonment of a lease does not deprive the landlord of its available contract remedies under CC §1951.2. The landlord retains the right to claim rental loss accruing after the date of sale, except to the extent the breaching tenant can prove the rental loss was avoidable. A rental stream of a value equivalent to the sale proceeds can be determined using a market capitalization rate. See First Nat'l Mortgage Co. v Federal Realty Inv. Trust (ND Cal 2009) 633 F Supp 2d 985, 999.

B. Surrender

§8.17 1. Historical Significance

A surrender is the voluntary relinquishment of the tenant's rights under the lease with either the express or implied consent of the landlord. Welcome v Hess (1891) 90 C 507, 27 P 369; Scott v Mullins (1962) 211 CA2d 51, 27 CR 269. An effective surrender terminates the tenancy and extinguishes the tenant's obligation to pay future rent. CC §1935; Rognier v Harnett (1941) 45 CA2d 570, 114 P2d 654; Baker v Eilers Music Co. (1915) 26 CA 371, 146 P 1056.

Before July 1971, the doctrine of surrender was important because the tenant could not abandon the premises and terminate the tenancy unilaterally (see §8.13). The tenant's abandonment, however, could be interpreted as an offer to surrender that the landlord accepted by reentering and reletting the premises or engaging in similar conduct. Welcome v Hess, supra; Dorcich v Time Oil Co. (1951) 103 CA2d 677, 230 P2d 10. Enactment of CC §§1951-1952.2 in 1970 rendered the concept of surrender less crucial because the tenant's breach and abandonment now terminate the tenancy without any need for the landlord's acceptance. Thus, surrender rarely arises in the context of an attempted abandonment.

Surrender may retain some significance in the limited situation in which a tenant makes an offer to surrender, but wishes to determine whether the landlord accepts the offer before abandoning the premises. Under a lease that is required by the statute of frauds (CC §1624(a)(3)) to be in writing, the tenant can surrender his or her rights only by written agreement or executed oral agreement (Bonetti v Treat (1891) 91 C 223, 27 P 612) or by operation of law (CCP §1971; Welcome v Hess, supra). If the landlord accepts the tenant's written offer to surrender the lease in writing, the tenant must vacate the premises within the time specified in the notice and may be evicted in an unlawful detainer action for failure to do so. CCP §1161(5).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.18 2. Implied Surrender

A surrender by operation of law (implied surrender) may arise when the parties' conduct is so inconsistent with the terms of the lease or the landlord-tenant relationship as to indicate that both parties consider the lease to be terminated. Such a surrender is based on estoppel doctrine, i.e., an implied surrender occurs when the parties' actions would be valid only if the lease were considered to be terminated. Welcome v Hess (1891) 90 C 507, 27 P 369; Dorcich v Time Oil Co. (1951) 103 CA2d 677, 230 P2d 10. The landlord's reentry and releting of the premises often constitutes an implied surrender. See Welcome v Hess, supra; Dorcich v Time Oil Co., supra. If the lease is covered by CC §1951.2 (see §8.14), the tenant's abandonment terminates the tenancy in any event, and the landlord's remedy is to reenter and relet the premises and then seek to recover any difference between contract rent and reasonable rent after the breach. Implied surrender may continue to be an issue, however, for a lease covered by CC §1951.4, under which the landlord's remedy is to treat the lease as continuing in effect, and to seek to recover the rent as it becomes due.

PRACTICE TIP: A landlord's conduct in taking possession of the premises might constitute acceptance of an offer to surrender and thus terminate the lease despite CC §1951.4. To avoid this problem, the landlord could send a letter to the tenant indicating his or her intention to invoke the lease provision permitting the landlord to use the CC §1951.4 remedy.

§8.19 C. Landlord's Breach of Lease Covenant

The landlord's failure to comply with any of the material conditions of the lease constitutes a material failure of consideration. The landlord's breach, sometimes called "constructive eviction" (see §§3.6-3.8, 3.15B), entitles the tenant to terminate the lease and his or her obligation to perform under it. Fong v Rossi (1948) 87 CA2d 20, 195 P2d 854. A landlord who has breached a material covenant is not entitled to notice or to a reasonable opportunity to comply with the covenant; the tenant has the right to treat the lease as ended without giving notice. Kulawitz v Pacific Woodenware & Paper Co. (1944) 25 C2d 664, 155 P2d 24.

The breached covenant may be either express or implied. For example, breach of an express covenant not to lease the landlord's other property for specified purposes during the term of the lease entitles the tenant to terminate the lease. Kulawitz v Pacific Woodenware & Paper Co., supra. Breach of the landlord's duty to maintain the premises in a habitable condition may entitle the tenant to terminate the lease as a matter of statutory right (CC §1942(a); see §3.7) or as a breach of the implied warranty of habitability (Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704; see §§3.16-3.48A). Breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment also entitles the tenant to vacate the premises and to cease paying rent. See Guntert v City of Stockton (1976) 55 CA3d 131, 126 CR 690; Petroleum Collections, Inc. v Swords (1975) 48 CA3d 841, 122 CR 114. See also §§3.5-3.7.

The tenant may actually have a choice of remedies for constructive eviction. In Petroleum Collections, Inc. v Swords, supra, the court held that, on breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment, the tenant's sole remedy is to terminate the lease, vacate the premises, and sue for damages. In Guntert v City of Stockton, supra, however, the court held that the tenant may choose either to treat the lease as terminated, or to keep the lease in effect, remain in possession, and sue for damages. See also Marchese v Standard Realty & Dev. Co. (1977) 74 CA3d 142, 141 CR 370. See the discussion of these cases in §§3.6-3.7, 3.15B.

A periodic tenancy is one that has no fixed term. The most common periodic tenancy is a month-to-month rental agreement with an indefinite term. See §1.9. The tenant may terminate a month-to-month tenancy by giving at least 30 days' written notice at any time. CC §§1946, 1946.1(b); see Kingston v Colburn (1956) 139 CA2d 623, 293 P2d 805; Vavuris v Pinelli (1957) 147 CA2d 390, 305 P2d 149. Under CC §1946.1(e), after the landlord has given notice of termination, a residential tenant may also give notice to terminate the tenancy, provided that the tenant's notice is for a period at least as long as the term of the periodic tenancy (usually 30 days) and the proposed date of termination occurs before the landlord's proposed date of termination (usually 60 days).

After the tenant gives notice, rent is then due and payable to and including the date of termination. CC §1946. By an express agreement in a nonresidential lease, the parties may provide for a shorter notice period of not less than 7 days before the expiration of the term. CC §1946. If notice of less than 30 days is given, as provided for in the rental agreement, the notice should not take effect until the time for which the tenant has paid rent has elapsed.

Any other tenancy for an unspecified term is considered to be renewed at the term implied by law, and continues indefinitely until one of the parties gives written notice of an intent to terminate it. This notice must specify a period before termination at least as long as the implied term of the hiring, not to exceed 30 days, unless the notice period was reduced in the lease or rental agreement. CC §§1946, 1946.1.

If the tenant gives less than 30 days' notice (when 30 days is required), the notice is ineffective to terminate the tenancy on the date stated in the notice but may be held to be effective after the lapse of 30 days from the date of notice. Kingston v Colburn, supra. (For extensive discussion of notice requirements under CC §§1946, 1946.1, in the context of termination by the landlord, see §§8.69-8.80.)

If the tenant gives notice and then does not vacate the unit, the landlord may bring an unlawful detainer action (see §8.81).

§8.21 E. Death of Tenant

When the landlord receives notice of the death of a month-to-month tenant, the rental agreement is automatically terminated; the tenant's heirs have no tenancy to inherit, although a valid assignment by the deceased will permit the assignee to remain on the premises until 30 days have passed since the last rent payment. Miller & Desatnik Mgmt. Co. v Bullock (1990) 221 CA3d Supp 13, 18, 270 CR 600. See also §§1.65, 8.4.

§8.21A F. Servicemembers Civil Relief Act

In December 2003, the federal government enacted the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA) (50 USC App §§501-596) (Pub L 108-189, 117 Stat 2835), which supersedes the previous Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940. The new law applies to all military servicemembers and their dependents, whether they entered military service before or after signing a lease agreement. The law allows servicemembers to terminate a lease agreement on giving of 30 days' written notice, along with a copy of orders showing that they are going to be deployed for a period of over 90 days or have received a permanent change of duty station. The servicemembers are then liable for rental payments under the following formula: Take the date the notice is given by the servicemember; go to the next rental due date; add 30 days. 50 USC App §535. For further discussion, see §1.73.

§8.21B G. Victim of Domestic Violence

Under CC §1946.7, which became effective on September 27, 2008, a tenant who is a victim of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking may terminate a fixed-term lease by providing written notice of lease termination within 60 days of specified court orders or police reports and be liable only for a maximum of 30 days' rent from the date of the written notice, unless the unit is re-rented during that period. Under this section, cotenants who are not victims are not relieved of their responsibilities under the rent agreement.

Code of Civil Procedure §1161(4) was also amended effective September 27, 2008, but it sunsets on January 1, 2012. It provides that a person's act of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking of a resident on the premises creates a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof that the person has committed a nuisance and is subject to a 3-day notice to quit. See §8.58.

III. TERMINATION BY LANDLORD: NOTICE ISSUES

A. Termination for No Stated Reason, for Tenant's Breach, or Because Landlord Is Going Out of Business

§8.22 1. Periodic Tenancies

The landlord usually terminates a periodic tenancy (defined in §§1.9 and 8.20) by serving a termination notice on the tenant that gives a notice period that is at least as long as the term of the periodic tenancy. Prior to January 1, 2003, for example, a 30-day notice was required for both commercial and residential tenancies when the landlord terminated a month-to-month tenancy without stating a reason (unless a shorter period was specified in the lease). CC §1946. See §§8.20, 8.69-8.70. Between January 1, 2003, and January 1, 2006, landlords were required by CC §1946.1 to give a 60-day notice to residential tenants to terminate a periodic tenancy, but that law was repealed by its own terms. Effective January 1, 2007, however, that section was re-enacted with minor changes, so currently and for an indefinite period (see Stats 2009, ch 347), landlords are required by CC §1946.1, in most situations, to give a 60-day notice to residential tenants to terminate a month-to-month or other periodic tenancy, unless any tenant has resided in the unit for less than 1 year or the unit is up for sale.

The 60-day notice requirement does not affect commercial tenancies. Nor does it impede the authority of local public entities to regulate the basis for an eviction of a residential tenant. CC §1946.1(g). In jurisdictions without local controls on evictions, no reason needs to be stated in the 30-day or 60-day notice terminating a tenancy. In jurisdictions with such controls, the landlord typically must state the reason in the notice for the eviction, in the language mandated by the local regulation, and must provide such additional information to the tenant with the notice as is set forth in such local regulations. See chap 7.

NOTE: The period for tenants giving notice of termination remains unchanged (i.e., for a period "at least as long as the term of the periodic tenancy"). See CC §§1946, 1946.1(b). Also, under CC §1946.1(e), after the landlord has given a 60-day notice, a residential tenant may then give notice to terminate the tenancy, provided that the tenant's notice is for a period at least as long as the term of the periodic tenancy and the proposed termination date occurs before the landlord's proposed termination date.

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/8 Terminating the Tenancy/§8.22A 2. Sale of Residential Unit

§8.22A 2. Sale of Residential Unit

When a landlord wishes to terminate a periodic tenancy to sell a residential unit, CC §1946.1(d) requires the use of a 30-day notice if all of the following apply at the time the landlord gives the notice:

- The dwelling or unit is alienable, separate from the title to any other dwelling unit (i.e., a single-family home on a single lot or a condominium);
- The owner has contracted to sell the unit to a bona fide purchaser for value and has opened escrow meeting certain conditions to facilitate the sale;
- The purchaser is a natural person;
- The notice is given no more than 120 days after escrow is established;
- No other CC §1946.1 notice has previously been given to the tenant; and
- The purchaser in good faith intends to reside in the property for at least 1 year after termination of the tenancy.

PRACTICE TIP: It is not clear whether cooperatives or other subdivided interests are covered by the language in CC §1946.1(d). Compare it with the language in the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535), which references Bus & P C §11004.5. See CC §1954.52.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.22B 3. Tenant Breaches

When the tenant has not paid the rent or has breached another covenant of the lease, the landlord must serve a 3-day notice that is phrased either "in the alternative" (e.g., the tenant must either rectify the breach or quit the premises; see §§8.35-8.40) or not (e.g., the tenant must quit the premises if the breach cannot be rectified; see §§8.50, 8.55-8.59). CCP §1161. Special notices apply to owners of mobilehomes being evicted from mobilehome parks (see §§6.62, 6.74). In addition to state law, mobilehome parks and long-term recreational vehicle parks may be subject to local rent control laws; CC §1954.25, banning commercial rent control, does not preempt local ordinances that apply to long-term recreational vehicle park tenants. Griffith v County of Santa Cruz (2000) 79 CA4th 1318, 94 CR2d 801.

Within these legal requirements, various other options are available to the landlord. For example, in the case of a month-to-month tenancy, the landlord may choose to serve a CC §1946 or §1946.1 termination notice even though the tenant has breached the rental agreement, so that the tenant does not have an opportunity to cure the breach. The landlord may also serve both a CC §1946 or §1946.1 notice and a 3-day notice to perform or quit in the case of a month-to-month tenancy and proceed under the 3-day notice if the tenant fails to cure the breach. In a rent-controlled jurisdiction, however, the CC §1946.1 notice applicable to residential tenancies must state an approved ground for eviction under the particular rent control law. For further discussion, see §§8.69-8.70.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.22C 4. Ellis Act Evictions

The Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) (see §§7.64-7.64H) provides that in jurisdictions with "good cause" eviction ordinances a landlord may terminate a tenancy for the purpose of going out of the rental business by giving "extended notice" to the tenant. In Channing Props. v City of Berkeley (1992) 11 CA4th 88, 14 CR2d 32, the court interpreted the Ellis Act as permitting municipalities to require a notice period of up to 60 days. See §7.64H.

After Channing Props., the Ellis Act was substantially amended and currently allows a city to require 120 days' notice to the city of the landlord's intent to withdraw the unit from rental housing use. Any city choosing to adopt that standard must follow the notice procedures stated in Govt C §7060.4(b), including special extension options to senior and disabled tenants. Specifically, if a tenant is at least 62 years of age or disabled, and has lived at the premises for at least 1 year before the delivery of the 120-day notice to the city, the date of permitted withdrawal of the unit from rental housing use for that tenant shall be extended to 1 year after the date of delivery of the notice to the city if the tenant gives the landlord written notice of his or her entitlement to the extension within 60 days of the delivery of the notice to the city. Govt C §7060.4(b). During the period that any such tenant continues to reside at the premises, the landlord is required to perform all obligations under the lease or rental agreement. Govt C §7060.4(b)(2), (c)(5)(B)-(C).

PRACTICE TIP: Because the 60-day period for a senior or disabled tenant to extend the tenancy runs from the date of delivery of the notice to the city and not the tenant, public records must be checked to guarantee the tenant's timely response. Although the statute is unclear, arguably the 120-day notice of intent to withdraw the unit is separate and distinct from and succeeds a 30-day or 60-day termination notice, because one component of the 120-day notice is that the landlord certify that "actions have been initiated as required by law to terminate any existing tenancies." Govt C §7060.4(b). But see interpretation of the Ellis Act in §§7.64F-7.64G.

In most rent-controlled jurisdictions, a copy of a 30-day, 60-day, or other termination notice must be served on the rent control board as well as on the tenant. Some rent control ordinances require that the landlord register the unit and serve the tenant with a copy of the certificate of registration with a 3-day notice. Failure to comply with this requirement is a defense to an eviction for nonpayment of rent. Some rent-controlled jurisdictions also require that the notice allege that the property is in compliance with the local rent and eviction control ordinance and with the warranty of habitability. See §§7.56, 7.73-7.75.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.23 B. Common Pitfalls

Giving notice is a step where the landlord is likely to make a mistake that may be fatal to an unlawful detainer action based on the notice. A copy of the notice is usually attached to the complaint and incorporated by reference. If the notice is defective, the tenant may either file a demurrer (see §§10.29-10.31) or move to quash the special 5-day summons permitted in unlawful detainer actions (see §§10.18-10.23). Parsons v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th Supp 1, 58 CR3d 48; Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court (1983) 146 CA3d 1033, 194 CR 685. A defect that does not appear on the face of the complaint or that cannot be challenged by a motion to quash may be attacked only by means of a specific denial in the answer. CCP §430.30.

PRACTICE TIP: The tenant's attorney should ascertain at the initial client interview whether the notice was served properly (see §§8.62-8.67, 8.74-8.76, 10.31, 10.52, 12.35) and scrutinize it carefully to determine whether it can be attacked. Conversely, the landlord's attorney should avoid potential problems by ensuring that the notice to quit complies with statutory requirements and is served on the tenant properly.

Local rent control ordinances usually limit the grounds on which landlords may terminate residential tenancies. See §§7.53-7.76.

NOTE: A landlord may not evict by asserting that an eviction is needed in order to comply with statutory requirements that water heaters be braced to protect against earthquake movement. Health & S C §19211(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.24 C. Strict Compliance With Notice Provisions Required for Unlawful Detainer

Because unlawful detainer law involves a forfeiture of the tenant's right to possession, the courts strictly construe the statutory procedures that regulate it and require that the landlord comply strictly with those procedures. See Liebovich v Shahrokhkhany (1997) 56 CA4th 511, 65 CR2d 457; Kwok v Bergren (1982) 130 CA3d 596, 599, 181 CR 795; Vasey v California Dance Co. (1977) 70 CA3d 742, 139 CR 72; Briggs v Electronic Memories & Magnetics Corp. (1975) 53 CA3d 900, 126 CR 34. It follows that the landlord's strict compliance with statutory notice requirements is a prerequisite to invoking the summary procedures of unlawful detainer. Lamey v Masciotra (1969) 273 CA2d 709, 713, 78 CR 344; Baugh v Consumers Assocs. (1966) 241 CA2d 672, 674, 50 CR 822; Feder v Wreden Packing & Provision Co. (1928) 89 CA 665, 670, 265 P 386. In general, there is no "substantial compliance" exception to statutory notice requirements for terminating a residential tenancy. But see Schulman v Vera (1980) 108 CA3d 552, 166 CR 620, in which the court permitted a substantial compliance exception in the case of a commercial lease. In some jurisdictions, courts have allowed an exception to strict compliance if the rent demanded in the notice was higher than the actual rent but the difference in amount was "de minimis." See discussion in §8.37.

§8.25 D. Remedies When No Notice Given: Ejectment; Quiet Title

A landlord who wants to evict a tenant for breach of the lease without giving the required 3-day notice must proceed by the nonsummary actions of ejectment (Samuels v Singer (1934) 1 CA2d 545, 549, 36 P2d 1098) or quiet title (Universal Milk Co. v Wood (1928) 205 C 751, 755, 272 P 745; City of Stockton v Stockton Plaza Corp. (1968) 261 CA2d 639, 656, 68 CR 266). In Canal-Randolph Anaheim, Inc. v Wilkoski (1978) 78 CA3d 477, 144 CR 474, the landlord filed an unlawful detainer action in superior court. At trial, the court found the 3-day notice defective, and announced its intention to rule for the tenant. The landlord then moved for relief in ejectment. The court denied the motion on the ground that it lacked authority to grant it. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's ruling, holding that (a) the motion was proper, and (b) the superior court had authority to enter a judgment of ejectment in a proper case. This strategy might be unavailable in a rent control jurisdiction, however, because rent control laws generally require "just cause" eviction and because the basis for the eviction must be stated on the face of the notice.

IV. TERMINATION FOR TENANT'S BREACH: 3-DAY NOTICE

§8.26 A. Notice Required Before Filing Unlawful Detainer Action

The prerequisites for maintaining an unlawful detainer action are set forth in CCP §1161. A 3-day notice is a necessary basis for the action in the following instances of the tenant's breach:

- Rent overdue and tenant in possession (CCP §1161(2); see §§8.35-8.45);
- Violation of a covenant in the lease other than payment of rent (CCP §1161(3); see §§8.46-8.54); and
- Violation of a covenant against subletting, assignment, waste, maintaining a nuisance, including acts of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking, or using the premises for an unlawful purpose (CCP §1161(4); see §§8.55-8.59).

On unlawful detainer actions, see chaps 9-13.

WARNING: A 3-day notice is the minimum amount of notice required to be given to a tenant for breach of a provision in a lease. However, the lease may require that more notice be given (e.g., 5-day notice for breach of any covenant to pay rent and 10-day notice for breach of any other covenant). Therefore, counsel should always review the lease terms applicable to the type of breach at issue before serving (if landlord) or accepting as valid (if tenant) any 3-day notice.

Special notice periods apply to owners of mobilehomes being evicted from mobilehome parks (see §§6.62, 6.74).

Some rent control ordinances require that the landlord register the unit and serve the tenant with a copy of the certificate of registration with a 3-day notice. Failure to comply with this requirement is a defense to an eviction for nonpayment of rent. Some rent-controlled jurisdictions also require that the notice allege that the property is in compliance with the local rent and eviction control ordinance and with the warranty of habitability. See §§7.56, 7.73-7.75.

§8.26A B. Effect of Debt Collection Practices Act

The federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) (15 USC §§1692-1692o) provides that a "debt collector" (one who regularly tries to collect any consumer debt for another) must tell the consumer, in the initial communication with the consumer or within 5 days thereafter, that he or she has 30 days after receipt of the communication to dispute the validity of the debt; if the consumer does so, the debt collector must send verification of the debt to the consumer.

In Romea v Heiberger & Assocs. (2d Cir 1998) 163 F3d 111, the court held that a law firm violated the FDCPA by serving a standard 3-day notice to pay or quit served as a prerequisite to bringing an eviction action in New York. The court affirmed the trial court's refusal to dismiss a class action lawsuit brought by tenants against the law firm. (The Act allows suits for actual damages, $1000 statutory damages, and attorney fees.) 15 USC §1692k(a).

Although the Ninth Circuit has not yet addressed this identical issue, Romea relied in part on a Ninth Circuit case that held that the FDCPA applies to a law firm's efforts to collect on a bounced check. Charles v Lundgren & Assocs. (9th Cir 1997) 119 F3d 739. Anecdotal reports indicate that some California state judges hearing unlawful detainers follow the Romea decision, while others do not.

The FDCPA applies only to "debt collectors," and that term might include law firms that "regularly" try to collect debts for another. Romea did not deal with this "regularity" issue, but several other cases have. See, e.g., White v Simonson & Cohen PC (ED NY 1998) 23 F Supp 2d 273 and cases cited therein, noting that the "critical factor" about "regularity" is the firm's volume of debt collection activity. See also Garrett v Derbes (5th Cir 1997) 110 F3d 317; Nance v Petty, Livingston, Dawson, & Devening (WD Va 1994) 881 F Supp 223; Catherman v First State Bank (Tex 1990) 796 SW2d 299. A law firm that regularly uses litigation to collect consumer debts is a "debt collector." Heintz v Jenkins (1995) 514 US 291, 131 L Ed 2d 395, 115 S Ct 1489; Fox v Citicorp Credit Servs. (9th Cir 1994) 15 F3d 1507, 1512.

If the FDCPA applies, a debt collector must—within 5 days of the initial communication to a consumer—send a "written validation" which states the amount of the debt, the name of the creditor, and that the consumer has 30 days to dispute the validity of debt (in which case the collector will send verification). 15 USC §1692g. This, in effect, means that a lawyer who is a "debt collector" may not file an unlawful detainer suit until the 30 days has expired without a request for verification.

Two New York cases have held that a violation of the FDCPA may be raised as an affirmative defense in an eviction case. See Eina Realty v Calixte (1998) 679 NYS2d 796; Dearie v Hunter (1998) 676 NYS2d 896.

The Romea decision has stirred much debate among practitioners. Some argue that an unlawful detainer action is not a debt collection process because it is primarily an action to recover possession. Others believe a landlord's attorney may safely avoid being characterized as a debt collector under the FDCPA by never signing a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit, and having only the owner (or the property manager; see Franceschi v Mautner-Glick Corp. (SD NY 1998) 22 F Supp 2d 250) do that. The uncertainty exists because a complaint and summons, if it is the first contact the attorney has with the debtor, is exempt from the FDCPA's written validation requirement. See 15 USC §1692g(d). Until the courts or the legislature resolve the ambiguities in the FDCPA, landlord attorneys should proceed with caution.

PRACTICE TIP: One option (in addition to not having the landlord's attorney sign the 3-day notice) is to send the validation notice to the tenant before serving the complaint to state that the unlawful detainer action does not preclude the tenant's rights to validation under the FDCPA. In most instances, the validation and certification of the debt could be accomplished while the action is proceeding, but before the action is tried. The most conservative approach is to send the validation notice as soon as possible after the 3-day notice and wait the full 30 days to file the action. Note that any of these alternatives is capable of confusing a tenant, because of the inconsistencies between the notice periods in the state unlawful detainer procedures and those in the FDCPA.

For further discussion of the FDCPA, see §13.74. See also Debt Collection Practice in California, chaps 1, 4 (2d ed Cal CEB 1999).

§8.27 C. Effect of Lease Provision Altering Notice Requirements

A provision in a residential lease that modifies or waives the tenant's right to any notice required by law is void under CC §1953(a)(3). A lease for commercial premises may provide notice requirements different from those provided by CCP §1161. Folberg v Clara G.R. Kinney Co. (1980) 104 CA3d 136, 140, 163 CR 426. See also CC §§1946, 1946.1, discussed in §8.70; Schulman v Vera (1980) 108 CA3d 552, 563, 166 CR 620.

D. Computation of Notice Period

§8.28 1. Computation Rules (CCP §1161)

A cause of action for unlawful detainer does not accrue until after 3 days have elapsed. See CCP §1161; Downing v Cutting Packing Co. (1920) 183 C 91, 95, 190 P 455. After a 3-day notice is served, 3 full days must pass before the complaint can be filed, because the "time in which any act provided by law is to be done is computed by excluding the first day and including the last." CCP §12. If the third day falls on a holiday, the complaint may be filed the day after the next business day. See CCP §12a. Legal holidays are Saturday, Sunday, and the other days listed or defined in Govt C §6700 and CCP §§10, 12a, 12b, and 135. Thus, for example, if a 3-day notice is served on Wednesday, the complaint may not be filed until the following Tuesday. Wednesday is not counted, because the first day is excluded. CCP §12. The third day falls on Saturday. Because Saturday and Sunday are holidays, however, the rent may be paid on Monday, the next business day. CCP §12a. If it is not paid, the landlord may file the complaint on Tuesday. Landlords often serve the notice on Friday, leaving the tenant only the weekend and Monday to pay the rent. If the tenant fails to pay the rent by Monday, the landlord may file the complaint on Tuesday.

How holidays stretch the time under the 3-day notice was demonstrated in Lamanna v Vognar (1993) 17 CA4th Supp 4, 22 CR2d 501. In Lamanna, the landlord served a 3-day notice to pay or quit on Wednesday, May 20, and filed an unlawful detainer action on Tuesday, May 26. The court held that the action was filed prematurely. The first day (May 20) did not count in the 3 days, so the third day was Saturday, May 23. But that day, the following day (Sunday), and the next day (Memorial Day) were all legal holidays. Therefore, the third day became Tuesday, May 26, and the tenant had until the end of that day to pay the rent or quit. The court held that the earliest the landlord could file the unlawful detainer action was Wednesday, May 27. For further discussion of the effects of holidays on the notice period, including a list of legal holidays, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§6.7, 6.25-6.26 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

§8.29 2. Computation When Notice Served by Mail

Attorneys representing tenants frequently argue that a landlord may not file an unlawful detainer action until 8 days after a 3-day notice has been posted and mailed (or served by substituted service and mailed). Under CCP §1013, when a legally required notice is served by mail, the time for responding to it is extended 5 calendar days if the address and the place of mailing are within California, 10 calendar days if either the place of mailing or the place of address is outside California but within the United States, and 20 calendar days if either the place of mailing or the place of address is outside the United States. See People v $20,000 U.S. Currency (1991) 235 CA3d 682, 286 CR 746 (CCP §1013 applies whenever a prescribed time period is triggered by "service" of a notice). See also Davidson v Quinn (1982) 138 CA3d Supp 9, 10 n2, 188 CR 421, discussed in §8.65.

Attorneys representing landlords assert that the extensions of time under CCP §1013 do not apply to notices served as a prerequisite to an unlawful detainer filing. See Losornio v Motta (1998) 67 CA4th 110, 78 CR2d 799, a decision of the Fourth Appellate District, and Walters v Meyers (1990) 226 CA3d Supp 15, 18, 277 CR 316, both of which are discussed in §8.65.

Landlord attorneys have the additional argument that the extension of time granted by CCP §1013 does not apply to service of prelitigation eviction notices because they are not simply "mailed." The landlord also either leaves a copy with a person on the premises or at the tenant's place of business (CCP §1162(2)), or posts a copy of the notice on the premises (CCP §1162(3)). See §§8.64-8.65 on these methods of service. See also §9.44.

PRACTICE TIP: Both landlord and tenant attorneys should be familiar with the appellate district cases and the particular trial judge's interpretation of the applicability of CCP §1013 to landlord-tenant notices, and counsel their clients accordingly.

E. Form and Content of Notice

§8.30 1. In Writing; Signature Not Required

Under CCP §1161, the 3-day notice to quit must be in writing; oral notice will not suffice.

There is no express requirement in CCP §1161 that the 3-day notice be signed; therefore, it appears that an unsigned notice will terminate the tenancy. See Cavanaugh v High (1960) 182 CA2d 714, 721, 6 CR 525 (unsigned notice held sufficient when personally served on tenant by landlord). If the notice is prepared and served by someone other than the landlord, such as an attorney or agent, the landlord may be required to prove that he or she authorized the attorney or agent to serve the notice. Earl Orchard Co. v Fava (1902) 138 C 76, 70 P 1073; Felton v Millard (1889) 81 C 540, 21 P 533. See §8.71 for discussion of this point in connection with a CC §1946 or §1946.1 notice. When only one of several landlords signs the notice, it may be necessary to show that the co-lessors authorized or ratified service of the notice. See Axis Petroleum Co. v Taylor (1941) 42 CA2d 389, 108 P2d 978.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.31 2. Description of Premises

The landlord should identify the premises with some specificity in the notice, although CCP §1161 does not expressly require a description. The unlawful detainer complaint that follows the notice must "describe the premises with reasonable certainty." CCP §1166(a)(3). See §9.37. Because CCP §1161 requires that the notice demand the tenant's surrender of possession "of the property," it follows that the property should be described in the notice. Any description that enables the tenant to identify the property (e.g., the street address or other locational information) will probably be held sufficient. Even a partially erroneous description will not render the notice defective, unless the tenant shows that the mistake was detrimentally misleading. King v Connolly (1872) 44 C 236, 238.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.31A 3. Description of Breach; Demand for Cure

A 3-day notice must specify the nature of the breach (e.g., nonpayment of rent or other breach of covenant) and demand that the tenant cure the breach within 3 days (see §8.33) or relinquish possession (see §8.32).

If the 3-day notice is based on the tenant's nonpayment of rent, the notice must also specify the amount due and to whom and where to pay it. See §§8.35-8.40. See form in §8.41. If the 3-day notice is based on a breach of another covenant in the lease or rental agreement or other ground constituting unlawful detainer, see §§8.46-8.59 for additional 3-day notice requirements and §§8.53-8.54 for notice forms.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.32 4. Unequivocal Demand for Possession

A 3-day notice is ineffective to terminate the tenancy if it does not clearly, positively, and unequivocally state the landlord's intention to repossess the premises. Turney v Collins (1941) 48 CA2d 381, 119 P2d 954. In Horton-Howard v Payton (1919) 44 CA 108, 186 P 167, an unlawful detainer action based on breach of a covenant, the notice sought possession, but also requested that the tenant make a full statement regarding the breach. The court held that a request for such information rendered the demand for possession ambiguous, because it suggested that the landlord wanted to resolve the breach without evicting the tenant.

Of course, a demand for possession is not rendered equivocal or unclear merely because the notice is stated in the "alternative" form required by CCP §1161, i.e., a demand that the tenant either perform the covenant allegedly breached or vacate the premises (see §§8.36, 8.50).

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords often serve a month-to-month tenant who fails to pay rent with both a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit and a 30-day or 60-day notice to quit. Such notices should make the tenant's situation clear. It could be argued that these notices are invalid for lack of clarity if they are so worded that the tenant believes that paying rent will allow the tenancy to continue indefinitely.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.33 5. Tenant Has 3 Days to Pay Rent or Perform Covenant

The purpose of the 3-day notice period for a rectifiable breach of the lease is to give the tenant an opportunity to perform within that period. Haydell v Silva (1962) 201 CA2d 20, 19 CR 705. It is axiomatic, therefore, that the notice should indicate clearly that the tenant has 3 days in which to rectify the breach. In Berryman v Gibson (1908) 7 CA 679, 681, 95 P 671, a notice to pay rent or quit was held sufficient even though it did not refer to the 3 days allowed by CCP §1161 for the tenant to act on it. In light of the purpose of the notice period, landlords' counsel should be cautious about relying on Berryman. The decision probably means merely that a notice may be upheld if the tenant is given 3 days to act on it, presuming that the tenant does not show that he or she would have complied with the notice if notified of the 3-day limit.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.34 6. Election of Forfeiture

The landlord may obtain a provision in an unlawful detainer judgment declaring the lease forfeited only if the notice to quit indicated the landlord's election to declare a forfeiture. (On the effect of a judgment declaring a forfeiture of the lease, see §13.17.) The notice must use some language indicating forfeiture in addition to demanding that the tenant perform a covenant of the lease or quit the premises. See §§8.41, 8.53-8.54.

A 3-day notice that merely demands that the tenant pay rent or surrender possession does not sufficiently indicate the landlord's intent to declare a forfeiture. See Neuhaus v Norgard (1934) 140 CA 735, 738, 35 P2d 1039. The notice need not, however, specifically use the word "forfeiture"; any language showing the landlord's intent to treat the lease as terminated should suffice. The court in Neuhaus held that a 3-day notice that included the clause, "or the said lessors will institute legal proceedings against you to recover possession of said premises with treble rent," indicated the landlord's intention to elect a forfeiture.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Bases for Termination With 3 Days' Notice

§8.35 1. Failure to Pay Rent: Purpose and Effect of Notice

The 3-day notice period (see CCP §1161(2)) is intended to give the tenant the opportunity to pay the rent within the 3 days, and thus to cure the default and remain in possession. Haydell v Silva (1962) 201 CA2d 20, 23, 19 CR 705. If the tenant pays the rent within this time, the lease or rental agreement remains in effect as if the default had never occurred. Downing v Cutting Packing Co. (1920) 183 C 91, 190 P 455.

If the tenant quits the premises within the 3-day period or is thereafter evicted, the tenant's liability for any future rent due under the lease is governed by CC §1951.2, discussed in §8.14.

© The Regents of the University of California

a. Demand for Rent

§8.36 (1) Stated "In the Alternative"

When an unlawful detainer action is based on default in rent, the 3-day notice must include a demand for the rent. The demand must state the amount of rent due and offer an alternative demand that the tenant quit the premises (e.g., either pay the rent or leave the premises). CCP §1161(2).

A notice that is not stated "in the alternative" does not render the defaulting tenant guilty of an unlawful detainer. Hinman v Wagnon (1959) 172 CA2d 24, 341 P2d 749.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords' attorneys should be aware of this common notice defect. Landlords often believe that a lease provision for termination on breach permits them to avoid offering an alternative in the notice. For tenants' attorneys, landlords' failure to give this type of notice may form the basis for a successful demurrer (if the notice is attached to the complaint) or defense to the action (if it is not attached).

STRATEGIES: Landlords may consider other options to beginning eviction procedures. In areas where it may be difficult to find a new tenant, the landlord may wish to renegotiate the lease provisions with the existing tenant. See Puleo and Polger, Landlord's Dilemma When Faced With a Defaulting Tenant: Negotiate or Litigate? 29 CEB Real Prop L Rep 265 (May 2006).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.37 (2) Amount Due: Residential Leases

A common defect of a 3-day notice to quit is an erroneous designation of the exact amount of rent due. Under CCP §1161(2) the notice must state "the amount which is due." This requirement has been interpreted to require both that the notice demand the rent due (Gage v Bates (1870) 40 C 384) and that the amount demanded be no more than the exact sum due (Levitz Furniture Co. v Wingtip Communications, Inc. (2001) 86 CA4th 1035, 103 CR2d 656; Baugh v Consumers Assocs. (1966) 241 CA2d 672, 50 CR 822). A 3-day notice that demands rent in excess of that allowable under an applicable rent control ordinance is invalid. Dertiman v Almey (1949) 92 CA2d 724, 207 P2d 615. In Nourafchan v Miner (1985) 169 CA3d 746, 753, 215 CR 450, the court held that a 3-day notice that overstated the amount of rent due by $5.96 was invalid.

PRACTICE TIP: Tenant lawyers should verify whether the landlord complied with CC §827(b)(2)-(3) in raising the rent by more than 10 percent on or after January 1, 2001. See §3.65A. If a rent increase of more than 10 percent in the preceding 12 months was given on only 30 days' notice, the landlord will have collected excess rent for one month.

In Gruzen v Henry (1978) 84 CA3d 515, 148 CR 573, however, the court refused to reverse a judgment based on a 3-day notice demanding more than the amount due, rejecting the tenants' argument that an eviction was improper because the notice "demanded accrued rent in the amount of $600 whereas the judgment was for only $582." 84 CA3d at 519. The court did not mention the general rule that a 3-day notice may demand no more than the rent actually due.

A notice that merely demands "the rent due," without stating any amount, does not support an unlawful detainer action. See J. B. Hill Co. v Pinque (1919) 179 C 759, 762, 178 P 952. When the precise amount of rent due, however, is peculiarly within the tenant's knowledge (e.g., rent based on percentage of tenant's crop), the 3-day notice may leave calculation of the precise amount to the tenant. Valov v Tank (1985) 168 CA3d 867, 214 CR 546.

If the amount demanded in the notice exceeds a judgment later entered on it, the notice is insufficient to support the judgment for rent. Werner v Sargeant (1953) 121 CA2d 833, 264 P2d 217. A demand for a sum less than the precise amount due, however, will probably not invalidate the notice. See Cavanaugh v High (1960) 182 CA2d 714, 722, 6 CR 525 (notice demanding only September rent held valid although October rent had accrued by time of suit).

In Canal-Randolph Anaheim, Inc. v Wilkoski (1978) 78 CA3d 477, 144 CR 474, the court reaffirmed the rule that the 3-day notice must demand no more than the exact amount due, but added a footnote suggesting that the rule be reexamined. The court suggested that when the amount stated in the notice is incorrect, but it is shown at trial that a substantial amount is due, multiplicity of litigation could be avoided by the court's entering judgment in favor of the tenant on the condition that he or she pay the rent within a specified period of time. 78 CA3d at 488 n4. The Canal-Randolph court may have overlooked the fact that an inaccurate statement of the rent amount due may confuse the tenant, and deter him or her from paying either the amount demanded or the amount actually due. This would frustrate a major purpose of the demand requirement: encouraging tenants to pay arrearages, and thus to avoid unnecessary litigation (see §8.36). Landlords' attorneys might argue, however, that a tenant would not be harmed by a conditional judgment unless he or she did not have the ability to pay the rent.

Arguably, any weakening of the strict requirement of accuracy in the demand might tax judicial resources rather than conserve them. On the other hand, landlord advocates might argue that the landlord should not be penalized by losing the right to obtain possession because of negligently caused inaccuracies in the notice when a substantial amount of rent is nonetheless due. See §9.6.

PRACTICE TIP: A landlord should be counseled to exercise caution if the landlord prepares the 3-day notice and the tenant attempts to cure the default. Civil Code §1947.3 provides that a landlord or landlord's agent may not require cash as the exclusive form of payment of rent or security deposit, unless the tenant has previously attempted to pay with a check drawn on insufficient funds or stopped payment, in which case the landlord may demand cash for up to the next 3 months. Any waiver of the tenant's rights under this section is void.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.37A (3) Amount Due: Commercial Leases

In commercial leases, the landlord may state in the 3-day notice an estimated amount due, as long as it is clearly identified as an estimate. CCP §1161.1. Code of Civil Procedure §1161(2) limits the rents that may be listed on a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit to those due within one year before service of the notice. In commercial cases only, if the landlord states that the amount of rent is an estimate under CCP §1161.1, seeking rent that is more than one year old will not invalidate the notice as long as the estimate is no more than 20 percent above the amount due within the one-year period before service of the notice. Levitz Furniture Co. v Wingtip Communications, Inc. (2001) 86 CA4th 1035, 103 CR2d 656. For further discussion of estimated rent in 3-day notices, see California Eviction Defense Manual §19.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

Code of Civil Procedure §1161.1(c) permits the landlord to continue an unlawful detainer action after accepting partial payment of rent only if the landlord has provided actual notice in writing to the tenant that acceptance of partial payment will not waive the landlord's right to recover possession. In Woodman Partners v Sofa U Love (2001) 94 CA4th 766, 114 CR2d 566, the landlord accepted partial payment while the eviction lawsuit was pending. Although the landlord's 3-day notice to pay or quit failed to include the language required by subsection (c), the lease itself contained the required language. The court held that the lease gave the tenant the actual notice required by the statute.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.37B (4) To Whom and Where Rent Must Be Paid

Code of Civil Procedure §1161(2) provides that a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit must include the name, phone number, and address of the person to whom rent must be paid and, if rent may be paid personally, the usual days and hours that person will be available. If the address does not allow for personal delivery (e.g., a post office box) and the tenant mails the rent to that address, the rent is deemed paid on the date posted if the tenant shows proof of mailing. The notice may instead designate the name and street address and the account number of a financial institution within five miles of the rental property to which the tenant may send or deposit the rent. The notice may direct the tenant to make an electronic funds transfer, if such a procedure has been previously established with the tenant.

This requirement applies to notices for both residential and commercial tenancies.

§8.38 (5) Limitation to Rent Due Within Year Preceding Notice

A 3-day notice to pay rent or quit may be served at any time within 1 year after the rent becomes due. CCP §1161(2). Thus, the landlord is apparently limited to demanding rent that becomes due within the year preceding service of the notice. Although a landlord usually serves a notice to pay rent or quit within a relatively short period after rent is due and unpaid, problems may arise under this statute—primarily as a result of the landlord's accounting procedures.

EXAMPLE: If a tenant fails to pay the March 2001 rent, but then pays the April rent, the landlord may credit the tenant for paying the April rent, and consider the March rent to be unpaid. After 1 year has passed, if the landlord shows the March 2001 rent to be still unpaid but the tenant to be otherwise current, an unlawful detainer action based on nonpayment of the March rent is now precluded. Had the landlord followed the more common practice of considering the payments to be late each month, after 1 year the tenant would be late on the last month's payment and CCP §1161(2) would not invalidate the notice.

A more complicated problem arises if the tenant in this example stops paying rent altogether in April 2002, and the landlord serves a 3-day notice in June. Presumably, if the 3-day notice includes a demand for the March 2001 rent as well as the April and May 2002 rent payments, the entire notice would be ineffective under the rule that the notice must demand the exact amount due (see §8.37). Again, the landlord's bookkeeping method would have invalidated the notice.

Because each periodic monthly rental payment is a severable contractual obligation, the statute of limitations begins to run on each monthly payment from the time it is due. Tsemetzin v Coast Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1997) 57 CA4th 1334, 67 CR2d 726.

The 1-year limitation imposed by CCP §1161(2) applies only to periodic payments that the lease designates as "rent." Other payments due (e.g., for maintenance of common areas in a shopping center lease) are enforceable under CCP §1161(3) (breach of covenant), so the 1-year limitation does not apply to them. Cal-American Income Prop. Fund IV v Ho (1984) 161 CA3d 583, 207 CR 532. Although the tenant's failure to pay those charges may serve as a basis for eviction, the charges may not be recovered in an unlawful detainer action as damages caused by the holdover. See §13.19.

A landlord who wishes to recover rent due beyond one year may file a civil complaint for money damages on a standard 30-day summons, but may not seek such sums in an unlawful detainer case. A commercial landlord may serve a notice that states the rent due in a "reasonably estimated amount" under CCP §1161.1, and as long as the total amount of rent sought is not more than 20 percent above the amount due within the year before service of the notice the unlawful detainer case can proceed subject to proof of the true amount due. Levitz Furniture Co. v Wingtip Communications, Inc. (2001) 86 CA4th 1035, 103 CR2d 656. In Levitz, the landlord's notice of estimated rent due explicitly included rent more than one year overdue. The court held that the landlord could not recover such rent in the unlawful detainer action, but the inclusion did not invalidate the notice. If including rent more than one year old results in a sum more than 20 percent above the amount of rent due within the one-year period before service of the notice, CCP §1161(2) would invalidate the notice.

b. Demand for Interest and Late Charges

§8.39 (1) Interest and Late Charges May Be Includable in Notice

Under CCP §1161(2), a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit may be served "after default in the payment of rent," and the notice must require "its payment, stating the amount which is due." No mention is made of charges other than rent, e.g., late charges, interest, attorney fees, fines, compensation for damage to the premises. From this language, an argument could be made that a notice would be ineffective if it included any amounts due that were not rent, because the sum demanded would exceed the amount of rent due. See Jack v Sinsheimer (1899) 125 C 563, 566, 58 P 130; Werner v Sargeant (1953) 121 CA2d 833, 264 P2d 217. See §§4.43A, 8.37.

Under California case law, however, at least interest and possibly late charges may be included in the notice. In Canal-Randolph Anaheim, Inc. v Wilkoski (1978) 78 CA3d 477, 144 CR 474, the 3-day notice included a demand for the unpaid rent and for interest on the unpaid rent as specified in the lease. The court held that inclusion of the demand for interest did not invalidate the notice" because "the statutory language is sufficiently broad to encompass any sums due under the lease or agreement under which the property is held." 78 CA3d at 492.

PRACTICE TIP: In most residential tenancy cases, any charge other than rent is best omitted from a notice to pay rent or vacate. If the late charge is small, the risk of challenge for defective notice far outweighs the potential benefits. If the late charge is large, the amount of rent charged will usually also be large and the potential loss threatened by any resulting delay (and possible res judicata bar to any future suit for the same rent installments) dictates against risking inclusion of a late charge in a notice. See also Practice Tip in §1.41.

Items that may not be included in a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit under CCP §1161(2) may be included in a 3-day notice served on the tenant under CCP §1161(3) for failure to perform covenants other than payment of rent. See §§8.46-8.54. The landlord, for example, may serve the 3-day notice to pay rent or quit at the same time as the 3-day notice for failure to perform covenants or quit, and eliminate the risk of the court finding that the sum demanded exceeds the amount of rent due either because it was not properly deemed "rent" or because the charge identified in the lease as "rent" may be an unenforceable penalty, e.g., late charges, or unreasonable liquidated damages.

Although late charges may arguably be included in a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit (see §§1.41, 4.43A, 8.39), counsel for both landlords and tenants should examine the facts carefully to determine whether the late charge is excessive. A late charge is a liquidated damages provision; to be valid, it must meet the requirements of CC §1671. Ridgley v Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 73 CR2d 378; Garrett v Coast & S. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1973) 9 C3d 731, 738, 108 CR 845. See also Utility Consumers' Action Network, Inc. v AT&T Broadband of S. Cal. (2006) 135 CA4th 1023, 37 CR3d 827. But see Jack v Sinsheimer (1899) 125 C 563, 566, 58 P 130 (late charges not permitted in action for possession in any event).

The first requirement of CC §1671 is that the landlord in a residential tenancy must show that it would be "impracticable" or "extremely difficult" to fix the amount of actual damages whenever the tenant pays the rent late. See CC §1671(d); Orozco v Casimiro (2004) 121 CA4th Supp 7, 17 CR3d 175. See also Garrett v Coast & S. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, supra. The landlord should be able to prove this if it is difficult to determine the actual administrative cost (in addition to loss of interest) of processing a late payment. But see McCarthy v Tally (1956) 46 C2d 577, 297 P2d 981 (no presumption that damages resulting from tenant's breach of covenant to pay rent are difficult to fix).

The second requirement of CC §1671 is that the landlord must show that the late charge is based on a "reasonable endeavor to estimate a fair compensation for a loss which would be sustained on the default" of the tenant. See Garrett v Coast & S. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1973) 9 C3d 731, 740, 108 CR 845. (In commercial tenancies, this burden of proof was shifted onto the tenant, who must prove that the late charge was also "unreasonable under the circumstances existing at the time" the lease was executed. See CC §1671(b), enacted after Garrett.)

Despite the amendments to CC §1671 after the Garrett decision, the supreme court reaffirmed the invalidity of excessive late charges. See Ridgley v Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 73 CR2d 378. The court in Ridgley held that nothing in the 1977 legislation indicated any intent to "abrogate Garrett's analysis of unjustified late fees as unenforceable penalties." 17 C4th at 981 n6. See also Perdue v Crocker Nat'l Bank (1985) 38 C3d 913, 931, 216 CR 345.

If, for example, the late charge is 20 percent of the rent, then the landlord clearly intended it as a penalty to coerce timely payment of rent, rather than as compensation for any loss caused by the late payment. Such a penalty provision in a lease is invalid. See Garrett v Coast & S. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, supra.

Civil Code §2954.4(a) also provides some guidance on the amount that the landlord may charge, limiting late charges in residential mortgages to 6 percent of the payment due or $5, whichever is greater. A late charge of 1-1/2 percent of the overdue balance was upheld in Fox v Federated Dep't Stores (1979) 94 CA3d 867, 156 CR 893. The court noted that the charge could not be a penalty because it was too low to cover the cost of processing late payments.

For further discussion of late charges, see California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 8 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

Date: _ _ _ _ _ _ __[Signature of landlord]__
_ _[Typed name of landlord]_ _

Comment: When preparing a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit, always review CCP §1161(2) for possible amendments to notice requirements. Avoid using preprinted forms entitled "Notice To Quit" (rather than "Notice To Pay Rent or Quit") when an alternative demand for payment of rent or giving up possession is required, even if the body of the notice contains the alternative demand (a contradiction between title and body of notice may make notice ambiguous). See §8.35. Attention to these details will lower the risk of a tenant claim that the notice is invalid.

Some rent control ordinances require not only that a landlord intending to evict have a specified permissible cause to do so, but also that written notice to that effect (sometimes containing other information as well) be given to the tenant whose eviction is contemplated. See §8.72.

On contents of the notice, see §§8.30-8.40. On allowable methods of service, see §§8.62-8.67. The amount of rent demanded must be no more than the precise amount due on a residential lease (see §8.37) and may be estimated on a commercial lease (see §8.37A); any rent demanded must have become due within the year immediately preceding service of the notice (see §8.38). On whether attorney fees are recoverable, see §§13.25-13.33. On damages available, see CCP §1174 and §13.19.

§8.42 d. Timing Service of Notice

A 3-day notice to pay rent or quit is effective only if it is served after the rent demanded becomes due. Lydon v Beach (1928) 89 CA 69, 74, 264 P 511. Thus, premature service of the notice renders the notice ineffective even if the rent demanded eventually becomes due and unpaid.

If the lease contains a "grace period," the tenant may argue that the rent is not late if it is paid within that period. In Baypoint Mortgage Corp. v Crest Premium Real Estate Trust (1985) 168 CA3d 818, 214 CR 531, a deed of trust provided that payments were to be made on the first of each month and a late charge would be imposed if payment was not received by the tenth. The court held that this language created a grace period and refused to "allow the drastic sanction of foreclosure" when the borrower failed to pay on the first. The same reasoning seems to apply to a rental agreement providing for payment on the first and a late charge to become effective at a later date, unless the agreement makes it clear that the tenant is in default if payment is not made on the first. A court is unlikely to interpret a grace period as precluding service of a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit until the grace period has elapsed if the lease provides that rent is "due and payable on the first."

The rent due date is statutorily extended to the next business day if it falls on a legal holiday. CCP §13. Holidays include Sundays, all other holidays specified in Govt C §6700 and in CCP §§10, 12a, and 135. But see Stoltenberg v Harveston (1934) 1 C2d 264, 268, 34 P2d 472. See also §8.28. For further discussion of the effects of holidays on the notice period, including a list of legal holidays, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§6.7, 6.25-6.26 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993). On statutory methods of serving the notice, see §§8.62-8.67.

e. Effect of Tender of Rent

§8.43 (1) Before Service of Notice

The tenant's tender of rent before service of a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit will not constitute a defense to an unlawful detainer action based on the notice if the landlord refuses the rent and the tenant does not deposit it in a bank account in the landlord's name under CC §1500. The tenant must retender the rent during the subsequent 3-day notice period. See Occidental Real Estate Co. v Gantner & Mattern (1908) 7 CA 727, 731, 95 P 1042; Webb v Jones (1927) 88 CA 20, 29, 263 P 538.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.44 (2) During Notice Period

Tender of the full amount of rent demanded in the notice and its acceptance by the landlord within the 3-day notice period cures the default and extinguishes the rental obligation. The tenant's performance within the 3-day period also nullifies any declaration of forfeiture in the notice. CCP §1161.5. The obligation is not extinguished merely by the tenant's tendering the rent or depositing the money in a bank. Owen v Herzihoff (1906) 2 CA 622, 84 P 274. To extinguish the obligation, the tenant must actually pay the amount due, or (under CC §1500) deposit it in a bank account in the landlord's name and give the landlord notice of the deposit. See Mau v Hollywood Commercial Bldgs. (1961) 194 CA2d 459, 15 CR 181. A deposit in accordance with the provisions of CC §1500 is not a mere "tender" of rent, but actual performance that discharges the obligation. Walker v Houston (1932) 215 C 742, 746, 12 P2d 952. Payment of the rent demanded in a 3-day notice within the 3 days nullifies any declaration of forfeiture in the notice. CCP §1161.5.

Although a tender of rent refused by the landlord and not deposited in a bank to the landlord's credit does not extinguish the rental obligation, it does ensure that the tenant has not breached the covenant to pay rent. Randol v Tatum (1893) 98 C 390, 398, 33 P 433. See also Walker v Houston (1932) 215 C 742, 745, 12 P2d 952. Thus, although the landlord may still maintain an action for rent, the tender protects the tenant against an unlawful detainer action based on breach of the covenant to pay rent. An unaccepted tender is also sufficient to terminate the incidents of the tenant's obligation to pay rent under the lease or rental agreement (e.g., interest, attorney fees, costs). CC §1504. See also 215 C at 746; Holland v Paddock (1956) 142 CA2d 534, 539, 298 P2d 587. A tenant who defeats an unlawful detainer action by proving tender of the rent, and who deposits the rent into court, might recover attorney fees under CC §1717(b)(2) (see §13.25).

Although the general rule is that a creditor may refuse a tender made by check rather than in cash, if the mode of payment during the lease has been by check, then a tender by check is proper unless the tenant has been notified otherwise. Strom v Union Oil Co. (1948) 88 CA2d 78, 84, 198 P2d 347.

WARNING: If the 3-day notice to pay rent or quit does not give an address that allows the tenant to personally deliver the rent (e.g., lists a post office box but no street address) and the tenant mails the rent to that address, the rent is deemed paid on the date posted if the tenant shows proof of mailing. See CCP §1161(2), discussed in §8.37B.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.45 (3) After Expiration of Notice Period

In earlier cases, the courts held that a tender of rent after expiration of the notice period, but before commencement of the unlawful detainer action, is not a defense to the action. Roussel v Kelly (1871) 41 C 360, 363. See Cambridge v Webb (1952) 109 CA2d Supp 936, 244 P2d 505, in which the court held that an offer at trial to pay the rent, plus costs and attorney fees, did not relieve the tenant of forfeiture of the lease when the notice provided for forfeiture.

Of course, the landlord may accept the tender and waive his or her right to terminate the tenancy under the notice. The landlord may also agree to extend the notice period. If the tenant tenders within the extended time, the landlord presumably must accept the tender when the tenant has detrimentally relied on the extension, as is usually the case. See Schulman v Vera (1980) 108 CA3d 552, 564, 166 CR 620 (notice providing for fewer days than required by lease held in substantial compliance because tenants did not pay rent before unlawful detainer filed).

Other, more recent cases have held that the tenant may retain possession by paying the rent after expiration of the notice period if the 3-day notice does not provide for forfeiture of the rental agreement. In Briggs v Electronic Memories & Magnetics Corp. (1975) 53 CA3d 900, 905, 126 CR 34, the court stated in dictum:

> Where there is no provision in the notice for forfeiture, a tenant is not foreclosed from paying the rent after the expiration of the three-day period and retaining possession.

See also Cambridge v Webb, supra. In EDC Assocs., Ltd. v Gutierrez (1984) 153 CA3d 167, 200 CR 333, the court held that acceptance of rent by the landlord after the notice period expires constitutes a waiver of the breach, and that tender of such rent by mail raises a rebuttable presumption that the landlord accepted it.

If the landlord accepts partial payment during the 3-day notice period, a new notice for the balance of the rent must be served in order to continue with an unlawful detainer action against a residential tenant. If, however, the tenant could prove that a specific arrangement was made for the payment of the balance at a future date, the court may determine that a new notice could not be served until after the expiration of the extended period granted to pay. See discussion on waiver and estoppel in §8.49. For different rules on partial payments in commercial tenancies, see CCP §1161.1(b) and (c) and California Eviction Defense Manual §19.6 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

After judgment, the court has discretion to relieve the tenant of forfeiture of the lease or rental agreement, whether written or oral, and restore the tenant to possession on condition that the tenant pay the back rent in full or otherwise perform. CCP §1179 (see §§13.56-13.57). At this stage, however, most courts will require that the tenant pay the judgment in full, including attorney fees and costs.

2. Tenant's Breach of Lease Covenant

§8.46 a. Statutory Provision

The landlord has a statutory right under CCP §1161(3) to terminate the tenancy and recover possession by an unlawful detainer action when a tenant fails to perform a condition or covenant of the lease, even if the lease contains no reentry or forfeiture clause. McCarty v Raso (1951) 102 CA2d 909, 228 P2d 577. The landlord must serve a tenant who continues in possession after breaching the lease with a 3-day notice in writing as a prerequisite to maintaining an unlawful detainer action.

When the breach can be rectified, the notice must be phrased "in the alternative" (e.g., either cure the breach or quit the premises), as in the case of failure to pay rent. CCP §1161(3). When the covenant breached cannot be performed, a 3-day written notice to vacate is still required, but it need not offer an alternative. See §8.50.

PRACTICE TIP: Most landlords prepare and serve their own notices. It is therefore imperative that the landlord's attorney examine the notice to ensure it is not ambiguous or vague.

b. Breaches Covered

§8.47 (1) Breach of Express Covenant Only

It appears that a landlord may terminate a tenancy under CCP §1161(3) only for breach of an express covenant or condition. Because the law abhors forfeitures, a landlord may not terminate a tenancy for breach of an implied covenant unless the lease expressly provides for that remedy. Keating v Preston (1940) 42 CA2d 110, 118, 108 P2d 479. The landlord's remedy for breach of an implied covenant is to sue either for damages or for injunctive relief. 42 CA2d 110 at 115. Further support for the argument that only breach of an express covenant entitles the landlord to terminate the tenancy is found in CC §1442, which provides: "A condition involving a forfeiture must be strictly interpreted against the party for whose benefit it is created." See generally McNeece v Wood (1928) 204 C 280, 267 P 877.

When a landlord alleges breach of an express covenant as a basis for termination of the tenancy, the court will construe the covenant strictly against the landlord. Salton Community Servs. Dist. v Southard (1967) 256 CA2d 526, 535, 64 CR 246. See also Randol v Scott (1895) 110 C 590, 42 P 976.

In King v Menachem (Sup Ct 1981) 450 NYS2d 933, the court held that the tenant did not violate a lease provision limiting the number of "occupants" in an apartment by allowing a person to reside with him to provide necessary health care. The caretaker was held not to be an "occupant," and therefore the tenant could not be evicted for violation of that provision of the lease.

Certain rent control laws provide that the presence of a medically necessary healthcare provider is not a breach of a lease limiting occupancy. See, e.g., West Hollywood Rent Stabilization Ordinance §17.52.010(2)(e); Santa Monica Rent Control Charter Amend, Reg 2005. In addition, cities with rent control laws may also provide that a tenant may move in certain family members, a spouse, or a domestic partner despite language in a rental agreement limiting occupancy of a unit. See, e.g., Los Angeles (one additional person), Santa Monica (spouse, child, domestic partner), West Hollywood (certain family members, domestic partner).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.48 (2) Minor Breach Not Sufficient

Forfeiture in an unlawful detainer action will not be supported by a technical or minor breach (see McNeece v Wood (1928) 204 C 280, 285, 267 P 877; Randol v Scott (1895) 110 C 590, 597, 42 P 976; Keating v Preston (1940) 42 CA2d 110, 118, 108 P2d 479) or a breach that does not harm the landlord's interests (Feder v Wreden Packing & Provision Co. (1928) 89 CA 665, 673, 265 P 386). But see Hignell v Gebala (1949) 90 CA2d 61, 202 P2d 378 (when violation of lease provision is willful, court will not measure extent of violation). For a recent out-of-state case holding that payment of the rent 2 days late in a commercial context was not a material breach, see Foundation Dev. Corp. v Loehmann's, Inc. (Ariz 1990) 788 P2d 1189.

The tenant's substantial compliance with a covenant is a defense to the landlord's claim, especially when uncontrollable circumstances prevent literal fulfillment of the covenant. Knight v Black (1912) 19 CA 518, 526, 126 P 512.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.49 c. Waiver and Estoppel

If the landlord has full knowledge of all pertinent facts, acceptance of rent or other benefits after breach of a covenant constitutes a waiver of the breach. The landlord is then precluded from declaring a forfeiture of the lease by reason of the breach. Kern Sunset Oil Co. v Good Roads Oil Co. (1931) 214 C 435, 440, 6 P2d 71; Randol v Tatum (1893) 98 C 390, 396, 33 P 433; Salton Community Servs. Dist. v Southard (1967) 256 CA2d 526, 533, 64 CR 246; Julien v Gossner (1951) 103 CA2d 338, 344, 229 P2d 786. See also EDC Assocs., Ltd. v Gutierrez (1984) 153 CA3d 167, 200 CR 333; Rafolin Constr. Corp. v Lippman (Civ Ct 1982) 457 NYS2d 712 (acceptance of rent estops landlord from evicting tenant under lease provision limiting occupants of unit).

The landlord's failure to object to the tenant's conduct that breaches the lease may also constitute a waiver. Thriftimart, Inc. v Me & Tex (1981) 123 CA3d 751, 753 n3, 177 CR 24 (landlord's failed to object when tenant removed portion of paving from leased parking lot). If the landlord objects to the tenant's conduct, however, the objection may prevent a waiver, even when the landlord continues to accept rent while trying to settle the dispute. 123 CA3d at 754.

PRACTICE TIP: The landlord may avoid the waiver problem by entering into a written agreement with the tenant that acceptance of a partial rent payment is not a waiver. This is often done when there is a large rent arrearage that the tenant agrees to pay within a specified time.

The landlord's waiver of the breach after service of a 3-day notice nullifies any election of forfeiture in the notice. CCP §1161.5.

Leases frequently provide that the landlord's acceptance of rent with knowledge of the breach does not constitute a waiver of the breach (see §1.75). The courts will enforce such a provision as an exception to the general rule. Salton Community Servs. Dist. v Southard (1967) 256 CA2d 526, 530, 64 CR 246*; Karbelnig v Brothwell* (1966) 244 CA2d 333, 341, 53 CR 335. Even under such a provision, the landlord will be estopped from asserting the breach as the basis for an unlawful detainer action, if the tenant detrimentally relied on a belief inferred from the landlord's conduct that strict compliance with the covenant would not be required. 256 CA2d at 531.

For continuing conditions or covenants of the lease, the waiver of one breach does not preclude the landlord from proceeding against the tenant for subsequent breaches, except in estoppel situations. Budaeff v Huber (1961) 194 CA2d 12, 20, 14 CR 729; Extension Oil Co. v Richfield Oil Corp. (1942) 52 CA2d 105, 125 P2d 895.

d. Form of Notice

§8.50 (1) Alternative of Performing or Vacating

The form of the notice depends on whether the covenant breached can be performed after notice is given. When the breach can be cured, the notice must be phrased "in the alternative" (e.g., either cease breaching the covenant or quit the premises) (see §8.53). CCP §1161(3); Feder v Wreden Packing & Provision Co. (1928) 89 CA 665, 672, 265 P 386. When the covenant cannot be performed after its breach, a 3-day demand to vacate must be given, but it need not offer an alternative (see §8.54). Schnittger v Rose (1903) 139 C 656, 662, 73 P 449; Richard v Degen & Brody, Inc. (1960) 181 CA2d 289, 294, 5 CR 263, disapproved on other grounds in Kendall v Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 498, 220 CR 818; Horton-Howard v Payton (1919) 44 CA 108, 111, 186 P 167.

Thus, for example, if the tenant violates a covenant banning pets by keeping a dog, notice in the alternative is probably required because the tenant can perform under the covenant by getting rid of the dog.

On the other hand, if the tenant breaches a covenant that is not curable, the notice need not offer the alternative of performance; it may simply demand that the tenant vacate the premises within 3 days. Noncurable defects most commonly arise under CCP §1161(4) (see §8.54). In Crowell v City of Riverside (1938) 26 CA2d 566, 579, 80 P2d 120, for example, the court held that > where the breach of a condition consists of subletting, no notice requiring the performance of the covenant need be served since it is impossible for the one guilty of the breach not to do that which he has already done.

The reasoning in Crowell seems flawed. The same logic would result in concluding that any violation of a restrictive covenant, such as having a dog in violation of a covenant banning pets, is not curable.

Code of Civil Procedure §1161(4) was amended effective September 27, 2008, but it sunsets on January 1, 2012. It provides that a person's commission of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking of a resident on the premises creates a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof that the person has committed a nuisance and is subject to the 3-day notice to quit authorized by §1161(4). This is apparently a noncurable act justifying termination.

If a tenant has impermissibly sublet the premises, the breach can be cured by termination of the subtenancy. Although the tenant could not force the removal of a subtenant within 3 days, but would have to use a 30-day notice (unlike the pet situation, which could be cured unilaterally), the tenant arguably could negotiate for the subtenant to vacate within 3 days (perhaps in exchange for some mutually acceptable monetary consideration) and thus cure the breach complained of by the landlord within the time demanded in the notice. Only if the tenant had assigned the lease in violation of a nonassignment clause does it seem correct that the tenant could not undo the violation.

In Salton Community Servs. Dist. v Southard (1967) 256 CA2d 526, 529, 64 CR 246, a 3-day notice to quit, not stated in the alternative, alleged that the tenant had violated a provision of the lease that prohibited the tenant from allowing camping on the premises. The court held that the notice was valid, because the breach was not curable.

Because forfeitures are not favored under the law (see CC §1442; Randol v Scott (1895) 110 C 590, 42 P 976), notice given under CCP §1161(3) should provide the tenant, whenever possible, with an option to remedy the breach and save the lease from forfeiture. See Feder v Wreden Packing & Provision Co., supra.

When the covenant cannot be performed after its breach, giving the tenant the alternative of performing or vacating does not invalidate the notice. Richard v Degen & Brody, Inc. (1960) 181 CA2d 289, 293, 5 CR 263.

§8.51 (2) Stating the Breach

A 3-day notice, required by CCP §1161(3) to be phrased "in the alternative" (see §8.50), must specifically set forth the breach on which the notice is based, so that the tenant has an opportunity to remedy the breach. Feder v Wreden Packing & Provision Co. (1928) 89 CA 665, 671, 265 P 386. See also Julien v Gossner (1951) 103 CA2d 338, 344, 229 P2d 786.

It is unclear whether the notice must specify the breach if the notice need not offer an alternative. In Zucco v Farullo (1918) 37 CA 562, 568, 174 P 929, the court indicated that the breach need not be specified. The tenant might argue, however, that the breach must be stated, because deciding whether or not to abide by the notice to quit (and thereby avoid the possibility of a suit and $600 statutory damages for unlawful detainer) depends on whether the breach on which it is based actually occurred. The tenant can decide whether the landlord's statement that a breach occurred is correct only if the notice specifies the breach. Also, in rent control jurisdictions, a notice to quit for breach of covenant generally must give the tenant the opportunity to cure the breach and state specific details of the breach.

§8.52 e. Effect of Tenant's Performance

The tenant's performance within the 3-day period, in response to a notice to perform or quit, keeps the tenancy in effect. See Feder v Wreden Packing & Provision Co. (1928) 89 CA 665, 671, 265 P 386. A tenant who has a fixed-term lease and vacates the premises after receiving a 3-day notice to perform or quit still may be held liable for future rent under very limited circumstances. See CC §1951.2, discussed in §8.14. See also CC §1952.

An interesting situation develops when a tenant performs within the 3-day period but later commits the same breach, e.g., the tenant is served with a 3-day notice for violating a no-pet clause and the tenant removes the pet within the 3-day period but brings it back the following week. Landlord attorneys would argue that the breach was not cured because the pet was not removed from the property permanently. "Plain text" of a statute should prevail when interpreting the meaning of a statute, but under J. A. Jones Constr. Co. v Superior Court (1994) 27 CA4th 1568, 1578, 33 CR2d 206, the court ruled that "a void created by an absurd result should also be filled, … if possible." See also CCP §§1858-1859.

Copies: Originals (served on tenant and each cotenant); copies for landlord's and attorney's files.

Comment: The landlord's attorney should use this form only when the facts indicate that the covenant breached by the tenant is not one that can thereafter be performed. If the breach is rectifiable, the form in §8.53 should be used. See §8.50. On required contents of the notice, see §§8.46-8.51. On requirements for service, see §§8.62-8.67. On whether attorney fees are recoverable, see §13.25. On declaring a forfeiture under CCP §1174, see §8.34.

This form also may be used for terminating a tenancy for the tenant's violation of a lease covenant against subletting, assignment, waste, maintaining a nuisance, or using the premises for an illegal purpose under CCP §1161(4). In those instances, the reason for the termination need not be stated in the notice (see §8.56), but it is safer to state the reason to discourage a demurrer to the complaint and the defense of retaliation. Note that some courts may treat an assignment or subletting as a curable breach (see §8.50).

This form may not be usable in a rent-controlled jurisdiction. Many rent control laws require that the landlord give the tenant an opportunity to cure the breach. Even if the landlord believes the breach is not curable, the notice may have to give the option of curing the breach in order to comply with the rent control law.

Under CCP §1161(4), a tenant is guilty of unlawful detainer for any of the following:

- Violating a covenant of the lease against subletting, assignment, or committing waste (see §§8.56-8.57);
- Maintaining a nuisance, including acts of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking (see §8.58); or
- Using the premises for an unlawful purpose, including certain drug-related activity or unlawful possession (or use) of illegal weapons or ammunition (see §8.59).

Subletting, assignment, and committing waste form a basis for an unlawful detainer action only if they violate a condition or covenant of the lease. Maintaining a nuisance or using the premises for an unlawful purpose will support an action even if no covenant in the lease bars such activity. CCP §1161(4).

NOTE: Section 1161(4) was amended effective September 27, 2008, but the amendment sunsets on January 1, 2012. It provides that a tenant's act of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking of a resident on the premises creates a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof that the tenant has committed a nuisance and is subject to a 3-day notice to quit. If the victim has not vacated the premises, the presumption does not apply.

To terminate a tenancy under CCP §1161(4), the landlord must serve the tenant with a 3-day notice to quit, which need not be phrased "in the alternative" (i.e., either perform a covenant of the lease or vacate the premises). See §8.56. When a city attorney intends to file suit to abate a nuisance in the form of an unlawful detainer action under the provisions of CC §§3485-3486 (see §4.44), a specially prescribed 30-day notice must precede the 3-day notice and suit under CCP §1161(4).

The form in §8.54 should be used for terminations under CCP §1161(4).

a. Breach of Covenant Against Subletting, Assignment, or Waste

§8.56 (1) Covenant Must Be Express; Notice Considerations

It appears that the landlord may proceed under either CCP §1161(3) or §1161(4), or both, to terminate a tenancy for breach of a covenant against subletting, assignment, or waste. Under either section, the tenant must be in breach of an express covenant. See §8.35. If the lease or rental agreement does not contain a covenant against waste, the landlord's only remedy is an action for damages. Chipman v Emeric (1853) 3 C 273.

For termination under CCP §1161(4), the notice need not be phrased "in the alternative." Zucco v Farullo (1918) 37 CA 562, 567, 174 P 929. In Zucco, a notice that merely canceled the lease and demanded possession, without specifying the breach on which the termination was based, was held sufficient because the breach (waste) was not curable. Even under CCP §1161(3), a court might rule that notice need not offer an alternative, if the breach cannot be revoked or undone by the tenant (see §8.50).

Note that the 3-day notice may be based on more than one of the grounds enumerated in CCP §1161, and will be enforced if any one of the stated grounds is valid. Richard v Degen & Brody, Inc. (1960) 181 CA2d 289, 294, 5 CR 263, disapproved on other grounds in Kendall v Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 498, 220 CR 818. Thus, a notice may be based on violation of both CCP §1161(3) and (4).

See §3.51 on subletting and assignment as grounds for unlawful detainer. On subletting and assignment generally, see §§3.49-3.59A. On lease assumption and assignment rules when the tenant is in bankruptcy, see §§14.35, 14.43, 14.49-14.52.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.57 (2) Evidence Required to Establish Waste

To maintain an unlawful detainer action based on waste, the landlord must show that the tenant has committed acts that substantially or permanently diminish the property's market value. See Rowe v Wells Fargo Realty Servs. (1985) 166 CA3d 310, 212 CR 374 (tenant's repeated tampering with thermostats did not substantially affect value of property; damage done to thermostats was temporary; therefore, court held that tenant's actions did not constitute "committing waste"). In Freeze v Brinson (1991) 3 CA4th Supp 1, 5 CR2d 227, the trial court impliedly found that the premises were unclean and unsanitary, a breach of the lease covenant, and ordered the tenant evicted for committing waste. On appeal, the court noted that the tenant must both have breached a covenant and committed waste, and that the court "must construe the ambiguous concept of 'waste' in order to avoid a forfeiture of the lease, if at all possible" (3 CA4th at Supp 4). On the issue of waste, the landlord in Freeze proved the amount of damage done to the premises, but that "is merely a starting point. A landlord must then present evidence that this damage caused a substantial or permanent diminution in the market value of the premises." 3 CA4th at Supp 4. Because such evidence was lacking, the court reversed.

§8.58 b. Nuisance

A landlord may terminate a tenancy if the tenant maintains, commits, or permits a nuisance on the premises, whether or not there is a covenant in the lease or rental agreement prohibiting a nuisance. The criminal conduct described in CC §§3485(c) and 3486(c) (the illegal manufacture, possession, sale, or use of a controlled substance, the unlawful possession or use of illegal weapons or ammunition, or the use of the premises to further such activities) is expressly considered a nuisance under CCP §1161(4). Nuisance is further defined in CC §3479 as > Anything which is injurious to health, including, but not limited to, the illegal sale of controlled substances, or is indecent or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property….

Under this definition, the existence of a nuisance seems to depend on the extent to which the activity affects others' ability to enjoy their lives and property. In the landlord-tenant context, nuisance most commonly applies to tenant activity that seriously disturbs other tenants or neighbors, such as loud noise late at night, vile and offensive language, and quarrelsome behavior. For further discussion of a landlord's rights and obligations concerning drug-related activity in residential housing, see discussion of nuisance in §§1.58, 4.44.

Code of Civil Procedure §1161(4) was also amended effective September 27, 2008, and that amendment sunsets on January 1, 2012. It provides that a person's commission of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking of a resident on the premises creates a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof that the person has committed a nuisance and is subject to the 3-day notice to quit authorized by §1161(4). The presumption does not apply if the victim has not vacated the premises.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.59 c. Unlawful Purpose

Under CCP §1161(4), the landlord may terminate the tenancy by serving a 3-day notice to quit if the tenant uses the premises for an unlawful purpose. See Haig v Hogan (1947) 82 CA2d 876, 187 P2d 426 (using premises as boarding house in violation of zoning ordinance). Tenant violations of local zoning, fire, or health ordinances present common instances of such unlawful tenant activity. Similarly, even though not specifically mentioned or incorporated in §1161(4), illegal activities such as gambling, prostitution, or other criminal activity on the premises probably entitle the landlord to terminate the tenancy under §1161(4). The definition of "nuisance" in CC §3479 includes the illegal sale of controlled substances, and CCP §1161(4) expressly allows an eviction if the tenant manufactures, possesses, sells, or uses a controlled substance on the premises (by incorporating CC §3486); possesses or uses illegal weapons or ammunition on the premises (by incorporating CC §3485); or uses the premises to further those purposes. For further discussion of a landlord's rights and obligations concerning drug-related activity in residential housing, see discussion of nuisance in §§1.58, 4.44.

Under federal law, a public housing authority may evict a tenant because of a household member, guest, employee, or any other person under the tenant's control who engages in any drug-related criminal activity at or near the tenant's unit. HUD v Rucker (2002) 535 US 125, 152 L Ed 2d 258, 122 S Ct 1230. In Rucker, the United States Supreme Court reversed Rucker v Davis (9th Cir 2001) 237 F3d 1113, which had construed 42 USC §1437d(l)(6) as meaning that "innocent tenants" could not be evicted for drug-related criminal activity outside the premises that they neither knew of nor had reason to know of. In an opinion written by Justice Rehnquist that expressed the unanimous agreement of the eight participating members of the Court, it was held that "[T]he plain language of the statute … provides that 'each public housing authority shall utilize leases which … provide that … any drug-related criminal activity on or off such premises, engaged in by a public housing tenant, any member of the tenant's household, or any guest or other person under the tenant's control, shall be cause for termination of tenancy.'" Thus, "Congress' decision not to impose any qualification in the statute, combined with its use of the term 'any' to modify 'drug-related criminal activity' precludes any knowledge requirement." 152 L Ed 2d at 266. On federal legislation and regulation regarding drug-related activity in public housing, see 42 USC §1437d(l)(6); 24 CFR §966.4(f)(12)(i)(B). See also California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

Minor regulatory violations do not constitute an unlawful purpose under CCP §1161(4). In Rowe v Wells Fargo Realty Servs. (1985) 166 CA3d 310, 212 CR 374, the court held that the tenant's repeated tampering with the thermostats on the premises did not constitute use of the premises for an unlawful purpose, although the temperature adjustments violated Department of Energy regulations. The violation did not affect the legitimate purpose for which the tenant used the premises, threaten the physical safety of the property, stigmatize the premises, or jeopardize the landlord's receipt of rent.

In Cook v City of Buena Park (2005) 126 CA4th 1, 23 CR3d 700, the court struck down a city ordinance requiring landlords to evict all occupants of a rental unit when the police chief suspected that the premises were used for drug or gang-related activity. "Because the ordinance imposes on landlords a substantial risk of erroneous deprivation of property rights through compelled eviction litigation, unwarranted fines and penalties, and countersuits by tenants, we hold that the ordinance violates procedural due process." 126 CA4th at 3.

G. Service of Notice

§8.62 1. Statutory Requirements

Courts are not always as strict in evaluating proper service of notice as in evaluating proper service of process. Proper service of process is necessary to give the court jurisdiction over the defendant. Whether proper service of notice is a jurisdictional requirement, or only a necessary element for the plaintiff's cause of action, is not clear. See Parsons v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th Supp 1, 58 CR3d 48; Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court (1983) 146 CA3d 1033, 194 CR 685; Marini v Ireland (NJ 1970) 265 A2d 526, 530.

Under CCP §1162, a 3-day notice may be served by the following methods:

(1) A copy of the notice may be delivered to the tenant personally;

(2) If the tenant is absent from his or her place of residence and usual place of business, a copy may be left with a person of suitable age and discretion at either place, and a copy mailed to the tenant at his or her place of residence; or

(3) If the places of residence and business cannot be ascertained, or a person of suitable age or discretion cannot be found, a copy of the notice may be affixed in a conspicuous place on the property, a copy delivered to a resident (if one can be found), and a copy mailed to the tenant at the location of the property.

Note that method (2) may be used only if method (1) was tried, but failed to reach the tenant. Method (3) may be used only if methods (1) and (2) were tried, but failed. See Lamey v Masciotra (1969) 273 CA2d 709, 713, 78 CR 344. On timing of service, see §8.42.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.63 a. Service by Mail Alone

Without proof of actual receipt of a mailed 3-day notice (see §8.66), service only by mail does not comply with CCP §1162. See Davidson v Quinn (1982) 138 CA3d Supp 9, 188 CR 421. Compare CCP §1162 with CC §§1946 and 1946.1(f), which permit service of both 30-day and 60-day termination notices by certified or registered mail, as well as in any manner permitted by CCP §1162.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.64 b. "Substituted" Service

When the tenant is absent from both his or her residence and place of business, "substituted" service may be made by the landlord's leaving a copy of the notice with a person of suitable age and discretion at either place, plus mailing a copy to the tenant at the tenant's residence. CCP §1162(2). Proof of actual receipt is not necessary.

The landlord's failure to attempt to serve the tenant at the tenant's place of business does not preclude substituted service when there is no evidence that the tenant has a place of business. Lehr v Crosby (1981) 123 CA3d Supp 1, 5, 177 CR 96. A "person of suitable age and discretion" to satisfy CCP §1162(2) need not be 18 years or older; a 16-year-old may qualify. 123 CA3d at Supp 5.

On proof of service and time to respond to a 3-day notice when, as in substituted service, notice is also served by mail, see §8.65.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.65 c. "Conspicuous" Service

Under "conspicuous" service, sometimes called "nail and mail," the landlord affixes a copy of the notice to a conspicuous place on the property, mails another copy to the tenant, and leaves a third with a person residing on the premises (if one can be found). CCP §1162(3). Serving the notice by placing it under the door, but not mailing a copy, does not comply with §1162(3). Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 608, 12 CR 488. Proof of actual receipt is not required by §1162(3). This method may be used only if the tenant's places of residence and business cannot be ascertained, or if a person of "suitable age and discretion" cannot be found on the premises.

What begins as substituted service under CCP §1162(2) frequently becomes compliance with CCP §1162(3) and thus effects conspicuous service. See Highland Plastics v Enders (1980) 109 CA3d Supp 1, 167 CR 353.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlord attorneys should counsel their clients who serve their own notices to mail a copy of the notice so that it is postmarked the same day in compliance with CCP §1162. Also, the proof of service of mailing should be filled out and signed on the same day as the notice was served to add credibility to the landlord's testimony that the notice was served on the day alleged in the complaint. See also Practice Tip in §12.20.

Code of Civil Procedure §1013(a) provides that "any period of notice and any right or duty to do any act or make any response within any period or on a date certain after service of the document, which time period or date is prescribed by statute or rule of court, shall be extended five calendar days, upon service by mail…." For quite a while, it has been unclear whether this 5-day extension applies where a landlord chooses to use the "nail and mail" method of service provided by CCP §1162(3) to serve a 3-day notice to pay or quit or a notice of termination of a month-to-month tenancy. In 1995, however, it appeared that the Legislature resolved this issue when it added the following sentence to CCP §1013(a): "This extension applies in the absence of a specific exception provided for by this section or other statute or rule of court." This seemed to settle the matter: CCP §1162(3) includes no "specific exception" to the rule of extension, so the 5-day extension applies.

In Losornio v Motta (1998) 67 CA4th 110, 78 CR2d 799, however, the court ruled otherwise—at least as to 30-day notices terminating month-to-month tenancies. The court held that the notice prerequisites to unlawful detainer suits and the provisions of CCP §1013 are "mutually exclusive," because "Unlawful detainer is a unique body of law and its procedures are entirely separate from the procedures pertaining to civil actions generally." The court overlooked CCP §1177: "Except as otherwise provided in this chapter the provisions of part two of this code are applicable to, and constitute the rules of practice in the proceedings mentioned in this chapter." Part 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure is from §307 to §1062.20—it clearly includes §1013. More troubling, however, is the court's failure to consider how its ruling might undermine the legislative purpose behind the notice requirements. Code of Civil Procedure §1162 requires the landlord to try to serve the tenant in a manner that has the best chance of assuring that the tenant receives the notice in time to act on it. Code of Civil Procedure §1162(1) requires the landlord to try to serve the tenant personally. If that fails, the landlord may leave a copy of the notice with a person of suitable age and discretion. CCP §1162(2). If that fails, the landlord may use a method less likely to succeed: "affixing" a copy of the notice in a conspicuous place on the premises, and mailing a copy to the tenant. Why both? Because someone might tear down the affixed copy. A risky method of service requires a backstop. But this backstop—mailing—takes more time. A tenant who must pay the rent or move in 3 days (or face an eviction lawsuit) needs a full 3 days to act. If a nailed notice is torn down and the mailed notice does not reach the tenant until 4 or 5 days later, the tenant will be deprived of the 3 days the legislature granted in CCP §1161. Likewise, the tenant being given 30 or 60 days' notice terminating a month-to-month tenancy will be deprived of the full 30 or 60 days needed, e.g., to find another place to live or work, or to arrange for movers, that the legislature contemplated in enacting CC §§1946 and 1946.1. Losornio's "mutually exclusive" approach failed to consider these difficulties.

Although the notice in Losornio was a 30-day notice, language in the opinion indicates its ruling also applies to 3-day notices. The court broadly stated that CCP §1013(a) does not extend the statutory notice periods pertaining to unlawful detainer actions. 67 CA4th at 115. The decision, however, does not resolve earlier conflicting opinions.

In Davidson v Quinn (1982) 138 CA3d Supp 9, 10 n2, 188 CR 421, for example, the court declined to decide the question of whether §1013 applies to 3-day notices to quit, but held that service of a 3-day notice by mail is not effective until the tenant actually receives the mailed notice. (Under §1013, however, service is complete when the notice is deposited in the mail.) In Walters v Meyers (1990) 226 CA3d Supp 15, 18, 277 CR 316, the court held that the time to respond to a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit that is served by posting and mailing under CCP §1162(3) is not extended by CCP §1013(a). The court also held that service of a 3-day notice by posting and mailing is effective on the date the notice is posted and mailed, not the date the tenant actually receives the mailed notice. Note that Davidson and Walters were decided both before the 1995 amendment to CCP §1013 and the decision in Losornio v Motta, supra. See also §§8.29, 9.44.

§8.66 2. Actual Receipt of Improperly Served Notice

The courts have not conclusively determined whether actual receipt of a 3-day notice is sufficient to support an unlawful detainer action even though the method of service does not strictly comply with CCP §1162. Although not dealing directly with a 3-day notice, several courts have held that personal service was accomplished when a letter carrier delivered a termination notice to the tenant. In University of S. Cal. v Weiss (1962) 208 CA2d 759, 769, 25 CR 475, the tenant admitted receiving in the mail a 30-day notice to vacate. The court held that CCP §1162's requirement of personal service was met by the mail delivery. See also Colyear v Tobriner (1936) 7 C2d 735, 743, 62 P2d 741; Shearman v Jorgensen (1895) 106 C 483, 39 P 863; Heinlen v Heilbron (1892) 94 C 636, 638, 30 P 8; Reserve Oil & Gas Co. v Metzenbaum (1948) 84 CA2d 769, 774, 191 P2d 796.

These cases may merely be applications of the requirement that the notice be served personally. The rationale in University of S. Cal. v Weiss, supra, was that the tenant waived any defect in the method of service by acknowledging receipt and agreeing to vacate the premises. In Reserve Oil & Gas Co. v Metzenbaum, supra, and Heinlen v Heilbron, supra, the notices were served by registered mail; i.e., the mail carrier personally handed the notice to the tenant, rather than merely put it in the mailbox. In Colyear v Tobriner, supra, and Shearman v Jorgensen, supra, there is no indication that the notices were sent by registered mail, but the party in Shearman admitted receiving the notice, and the court in Colyear stated that the post office department or any other type of messenger may effect personal service.

In Liebovich v Shahrokhkhany (1997) 56 CA4th 511, 65 CR2d 457, the court of appeal held that strict compliance with CCP §1162 is required. Because the tenant did not admit receiving the notice, service by certified mail did not establish personal delivery. For further discussion of this rule as applied in commercial tenancies, see California Eviction Defense Manual §19.5 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

In Highland Plastics v Enders (1980) 109 CA3d Supp 1, 7 n2, 167 CR 353, the court indicated (in dictum) that a tenant has actual notice if he does not prove that he did not receive an improperly served notice. In Lehr v Crosby (1981) 123 CA3d Supp 1, 6 n3, 177 CR 96, the court implied that actual receipt of an improperly served notice cures any defect in service. See also Valov v Tank (1985) 168 CA3d 867, 214 CR 546.

PRACTICE TIP: Because of language in the opinions in Losornio v Motta (1998) 67 CA4th 110, 78 CR2d 799, and Liebovich v Shahrokhkhany, supra, some tenant attorneys have successfully argued that Losornio and Liebovich overrule Lehr v Crosby, supra. That is, actual receipt of an improperly served notice does not cure the defects of service. A landlord's attorney should be prepared to argue that any language in Losornio and Liebovich that refers to "strict compliance" with service statutes is merely dictum and not the holding.

When service of process is involved, however, actual receipt of an improperly served summons does not cure the defect. Sternbeck v Buck (1957) 148 CA2d 829, 307 P2d 970. See also Taliaferro v Hoogs (1963) 219 CA2d 559, 33 CR 415.

§8.67 3. Service on Cotenants or Subtenants

Proper service on one of several cotenants named in a written lease is proper service on the other cotenants. University of S. Cal. v Weiss (1962) 208 CA2d 759, 769, 25 CR 475; Gentry v Citron (1918) 36 CA 288, 171 P 1079.

If the landlord properly serves the tenant, the subtenant need not be served in order for the landlord to maintain an unlawful detainer action against the tenant. Chinese Hosp. Found. Fund v Patterson (1969) 1 CA3d 627, 81 CR 795. If the landlord wishes to evict both the tenant and subtenant, however, the subtenant must be served with a separate notice that complies with CCP §1161. Service on the subtenant of a copy of the notice to the tenant is not sufficient. Briggs v Electronic Memories & Magnetics Corp. (1975) 53 CA3d 900, 904, 126 CR 34. The purpose of serving the subtenant is to give the subtenant an opportunity to cure the tenant's default. Four Seas Inv. Corp. v International Hotel Tenants' Ass'n (1978) 81 CA3d 604, 611, 146 CR 531. This rationale suggests that if the defect is not curable, no notice need be given to the subtenant.

§8.68 4. Withdrawal of Notice

A notice that gives the tenant the alternative of performing or vacating may be withdrawn within the 3-day period; the withdrawal maintains the lease in effect. Downing v Cutting Packing Co. (1920) 183 C 91, 190 P 455. When a notice to vacate is not phrased "in the alternative," however, the landlord may not withdraw it without the tenant's consent. Devonshire v Langstaff (1935) 10 CA2d 369, 51 P2d 902.

V. TERMINATION AFTER SALE OR FORECLOSURE (CCP §§1161a, 1161b)

§8.68A A. Property Owners and Commercial Tenants (3-Day Notice)

Under CCP §1161a(b)(1)-(5), an unlawful detainer action may be brought against the property owner or a commercial tenant who holds over after being served with a 3-day notice to quit when the property has been sold by:

- Execution;
- Foreclosure;
- Power of sale contained in a deed of trust;
- Voluntary sale; or
- Sale in accordance with Health & S C §18037.5 under the default provisions of a conditional sales contract or security agreement.

This list does not provide for a termination notice to the property owner or a tenant who holds over after the transfer of the property by a deed in lieu of foreclosure to the lender. On deeds in lieu, see California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 7 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

After a voluntary sale, CCP §1161a operates primarily against owners rather than tenants, because the purchaser usually knows that the tenant is in possession and therefore takes the property subject to the leasehold interest. See Rosenkranz v Pellin (1950) 99 CA2d 650, 222 P2d 249. For further discussion, see California Real Property Sales Transactions §§4.71-4.73 (4th ed Cal CEB 2007).

NOTE: After an involuntary sale, such as a foreclosure, the interests of a commercial tenant depend on whether the lease has priority over the foreclosing mortgage. Only a tenant whose interest is subordinate to the mortgage can be evicted under CCP §1161a. See §8.68E.

Although the law is unsettled on this issue, the tenant (as well as the borrower under the loan and former owner) may arguably defend an unlawful detainer action following a foreclosure by challenging the plaintiff's title, e.g., by claiming that the foreclosure sale was not conducted properly (although not by challenging the validity of the underlying mortgage). See Cheney v Trauzettel (1937) 9 C2d 158, 160, 69 P2d 832, discussed in §8.68B. See also Evans v Superior Court (1977) 67 CA3d 162, 170, 136 CR 596 (tenant having express agreement to purchase property from subsequent purchaser after foreclosure may litigate title defensively in unlawful detainer action); Vella v Hudgins (1977) 20 C3d 251, 255, 142 CR 414. The defendants may put the new owner's title at issue in an action under CCP §1161a, although the new owner's lack of title may not be raised as a defense to an ordinary unlawful detainer action brought under CCP §1161. Kessler v Bridge (1958) 161 CA2d Supp 837, 838, 327 P2d 241. See Johnson v Hapke (1960) 183 CA2d 255, 259, 6 CR 603. See also §§9.8, 10.54.

If the foreclosure was legally insupportable, defective, or wrongfully executed, the unlawful detainer action may be stayed pending the resolution of an affirmative suit by the borrower to set aside the foreclosure. See Banke, Staying Postforeclosure Eviction Actions Pending Borrower Actions Against Lenders, 32 CEB Real Prop L Rep 92 (July 2009).

On serving 3-day notices, see §§8.62-8.68. For additional discussion of enforcing possessory interests after foreclosure, see Mortgage Deed of Trust Foreclosure, chaps 2-3, 6-7.

B. Residential Tenants

1. Foreclosure Sale

§8.68B a. Notice of Foreclosure Sale

Civil Code §2924.8, effective September 8, 2008, through the end of 2012 (see Stats 2008, ch 69, §4 (SB 1137), amended by Stats 2009, ch 43 (SB 306)), requires the trustee or authorized agent to post and mail first class an additional notice to the occupants concurrently with the mailing of the notice of trustee sale (nonjudicial foreclosure) for residential real property if the billing address for the note is different from the property address. The notice must be given at least 20 days before the date set for sale of the property. CC §2924f(b). The additional notice is designed to communicate the urgency and gravity of the foreclosure to residential tenants. See California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation §§2.49, 2.63-2.68 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

The additional notice must (1) conform to CC §2924.8(a) (see form in Mortgage Deed of Trust Foreclosure §2.133), (2) be prepared in English and the languages described in CC §1632, (3) be posted on the property in foreclosure, and (4) be served by first-class mail on persons living in the property in an envelope addressed to "Resident of property subject to foreclosure sale."

It is unclear whether the trustee's noncompliance with this requirement is a defense to a subsequent unlawful detainer action. Arguably, under Cheney v Trauzettel (1937) 9 C2d 158, 160, 69 P2d 832, the tenant might be able to defend the eviction (on the basis of noncompliance) by denying in the answer that the foreclosure sale was conducted properly because the plaintiff has the burden of proof on that issue. The court in Cheney stated that in a postforeclosure eviction action, the plaintiff-purchaser must prove a foreclosure sale conducted in compliance with statutory law and the deed of trust, followed by purchase at the sale, and the defendant-occupant may raise objections only on that phase of the issue of title. Note that in Cheney, the defendant was the borrower, not a tenant of the borrower, but that fact may not make a difference for the rule on the plaintiff's burden of proof. See Evans v Superior Court (1977) 67 CA3d 162, 171, 136 CR 596 (tenant having express agreement to purchase property from subsequent purchaser after foreclosure may litigate title defensively in unlawful detainer action); Vella v Hudgins (1977) 20 C3d 251, 255, 142 CR 414.

Another possible remedy for a violation of §2924.8 would be in the nature of equitable relief; the trial court in the unlawful detainer action could award possession to the plaintiff but stay execution of the judgment for a time at least equal to the notice period specified in §2924.8. For further discussion, see Mortgage Deed of Trust Foreclosure §§7.38, 7.75.

§8.68C b. Notice of Termination of Tenancy (60-Day Notice)

A tenant in a rental housing unit of the former owner (see §8.68A) falls within the language of CCP §§1161a and 1161b and may be forced to vacate because of that owner's transactions. For example, if the landlord defaults on mortgage payments and suffers foreclosure, the ultimate purchaser may evict both the landlord and the tenant. See, e.g., Moss v Williams (1948) 84 CA2d 830, 191 P2d 804 (tenants did not appeal). When this scenario unfolds, a residential tenant holding a lease subordinate to the mortgage or a subtenant must be given 60 days' written notice to quit under CCP §1161b, even though a former owner (borrower) or commercial tenant (see §8.68A) must be given only 3 days' notice under CCP §1161a.

Concerned about the increase in foreclosures caused by the proliferation of unsustainable residential mortgage loans, the California legislature enacted urgency legislation, effective July 8, 2008, and sunsetting at the end of 2012. Stats 2008, ch 69 (SB 1137). It added, among other things, CCP §1161b, requiring the 60 days' termination notice for residential tenants, which temporarily supersedes the 30 days' notice mandated by CCP §1161a(c). (It also added CC §2924.8, effective September 8, 2008, requiring the posting and first-class mailing of an additional notice when the trustee mails the notice of foreclosure sale for residential property if the billing address for the note is different from the property address. See §8.68B.)

When any party to the note on which the foreclosure was based remains in the property as a tenant, subtenant, or occupant, the 60-day notice does not apply. On serving 60-day notices, see §§8.74-8.78.

WARNING: In May 2009, Congress enacted preemptive legislation that temporarily protects residential tenants holding possession under a month-to-month agreement or a lease from immediate eviction after a foreclosure sale by the purchaser. See Protecting Tenants at Foreclosure Act of 2009 (Pub L 111-22, §§701-704, 123 Stat 1660), discussed in §8.68F.

Only a tenant whose interest is subordinate to the mortgage can be evicted under CCP §1161a or §1161b. See §8.68E.

CAUTION: In most rent-controlled jurisdictions, foreclosure is not a ground for eviction of the tenant. See §7.69. See also Gross v Superior Court (1985) 171 CA3d 265, 217 CR 284.

See Banke, Staying Postforeclosure Eviction Actions Pending Borrower Actions Against Lenders, 32 Real Prop L Rep 92 (July 2009).

§8.68D 2. Voluntary Sale

If the tenant has a month-to-month rental agreement or another type of periodic tenancy, eviction after a voluntary sale by the owner can be accomplished under the rules applicable to periodic tenancies. See §§8.22-8.22A, 8.69.

If the tenant has a fixed-term lease, a voluntary sale of the property does not abrogate the lease. Rosenkranz v Pellin (1950) 99 CA2d 650, 222 P2d 249. Therefore, if the tenant has a 1-year lease running from January 1 to December 31, and the landlord sells the property on April 1, the buyer may not use CCP §1161a to evict the tenant through a 30-day notice served in April. The buyer simply becomes the new landlord; if the tenant fails to leave on December 31, the buyer may have the tenant evicted. CC §821. This result follows even if the lease is unrecorded. The tenant's possession puts a purchaser on notice of the tenant's interest (Scheerer v Cuddy (1890) 85 C 270, 24 P 713) despite CC §1214, which provides that an unrecorded lease for more than 1 year does not bind a subsequent purchaser in good faith (i.e., without notice) who records first.

On transitional issues in selling residential or commercial property subject to a lease (e.g., rent control, lease assignment, estoppel certificate, proration of rent), see California Real Property Sales Transactions, chap 4 and Apps C-D, J-L (4th ed Cal CEB 2007).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.68E C. Lease Priority Issues After Foreclosure

Only a tenant whose interest is subordinate to the mortgage can be evicted under CCP §1161a or §1161b. Subordination of the lease can be accomplished by agreement if the lease predated the mortgage. On the meaning of "subordinate" and on ascertaining priority between leases and mortgages, see California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation §§6.90-6.98 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009). On the effect of foreclosure sales on subordinate leases, see Mortgage Deed of Trust Foreclosure §§6.86-6.89.

If the lease has priority over (i.e., was executed before) the foreclosed mortgage, and there is no subordination agreement, the tenant has a complete defense to the eviction action, as long as the tenant is not in default. See Mortgage Deed of Trust Foreclosure §§6.84-6.85. In that situation, the landlord has mortgaged only a future reversionary interest in the land, subject to the lease. (Although it is possible that the recording act (CC §1214) may reverse this result, possession by a tenant generally constitutes notice to a subsequent, secured lender and preserves the tenant's priority even if the lease was not recorded. See R-Ranch Mkts. #2, Inc. v Old Stone Bank (1993) 16 CA4th 1323, 21 CR2d 21.) Because most standard leases and rental agreements are by their terms automatically subordinated to future mortgages, this issue does not arise very often. On automatic subordination, see Mortgage Deed of Trust Foreclosure §6.92; Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 28 (Cal CEB 1996).

In an unreported decision similar to R-Ranch Mkts., the owner and lessor of real property sold it to a buyer who executed a deed of trust to the plaintiff-lender. The defendant-tenant already occupied the property under a 10-year lease, and was not a party to the sale or the deed of trust. When the lender foreclosed following the new owner's default, it sought to evict the tenant under CCP §1161a. The court held that the plaintiff acquired its interest subject to the leasehold interest, and that the tenant could not be evicted. The tenant's continuous occupation of the property gave the lender constructive notice of the tenant's interest (see Scheerer v Cuddy (1890) 85 C 270, 24 P 713; Evans v Faught (1965) 231 CA2d 698, 705, 42 CR 133); therefore, the lender could not be a bona fide purchaser protected by CC §1214. See Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Piggee (SF Super Ct App Dep't, Nov. 23, 1981, No. 3833 (unpublished opinion).

§8.68F D. Effect of 2009 Federal Law on Evictions After Foreclosure

Effective May 21, 2009, the federal government enacted legislation that temporarily protects bona fide residential tenants holding possession under a month-to-month agreement or a lease from immediate eviction after a foreclosure sale by the purchaser or the foreclosing lender. See Protecting Tenants at Foreclosure Act of 2009 (Pub L 111-22, §§701-704, 123 Stat 1660). Under §704, the Act automatically terminates on December 31, 2012. To qualify for protection under the Act, the lease or tenancy must be bona fide by meeting the following criteria (12 USC §5220(b)):

- The tenant must not be the borrower or related to the borrower as a child, spouse, or parent;
- The lease or tenancy must be the result of an arm's length transaction; and
- The rent must not be substantially less than the fair market rent for the property.

Under California law, most residential tenants holding possession under a lease subordinate to the foreclosed loan are entitled to 60 days' notice of eviction after foreclosure under CCP §1161b. See §8.68C. The new federal law increases this to 90 days for month-to-month tenants. 12 USC §5220(a)(1). Tenants holding possession under a residential lease have the right to possession until the end of the lease term, unless the purchaser will occupy the unit as a primary residence, in which case the 90-day notice applies. 12 USC §5220(a)(2).

VI. TERMINATION OF MONTH-TO-MONTH TENANCY: 30-DAY OR 60-DAY NOTICE

§8.69 A. Statutory Requirements

Under CC §§1946 and 1946.1, a tenancy that has an unspecified termination date ("periodic tenancy"; see §§1.9, 8.20) is considered to be renewed automatically at the expiration of the specified term, unless one of the parties gives written notice of intent to terminate the tenancy. A tenancy for an indefinite period under which rent is payable monthly is considered to be a month-to-month tenancy. Palmer v Zeis (1944) 65 CA2d Supp 859, 151 P2d 323. This type of tenancy is by far the most common form of periodic tenancy; many landlords and tenants prefer its flexibility to a fixed-term lease. Because it is so prevalent in residential landlord-tenant situations, month-to-month tenancy is emphasized in this discussion.

A month-to-month tenancy does not terminate automatically by lapse of time, as does a fixed-term lease (see §§8.2, 8.82). Stoppelkamp v Mangeot (1871) 42 C 316, 323; Palmer v Zeis, supra. It can be terminated only by either party giving the appropriate written notice allowed by statutory law—or notice for a shorter period of not less than 7 days, if provided for in a commercial lease or rental agreement. Civil Code §1946.1 provides that a residential landlord must give the tenant at least 60 days' notice to terminate a month-to-month tenancy, unless the tenant has resided on the premises for less than one year, in which case only 30 days' notice need be given. Code of Civil Procedure §1161b provides that a purchaser at a foreclosure sale who seeks to recover possession must give any residential tenant in possession (but not the foreclosed owner) 60 days' notice to quit (except for tenants covered by temporary federal legislation; see §8.68F). In commercial tenancies, a 30-day notice applies to terminate a month-to-month tenancy, and a 3-day notice applies to terminate after a foreclosure sale if the tenancy is subject to the mortgage. See CC §§1946, 1946.1, discussed in detail in §§8.20, 8.22, 8.70. See also CCP §1161a, discussed in §§8.68A, 8.68C, 8.68E. (On serving the notice, see §8.74.)

WARNING: The 60-day notice requirement in CC §1946.1 contains numerous exceptions, and CCP §1161b has sunset provisions. See §§8.20, 8.68C.

Civil Code §§1946 and 1946.1 apply only when the parties have not specified a definite term for the tenancy. If the parties have set a term, but its length is in dispute, no notice need be served. See Pierce v Walter (1933) 129 CA 228, 18 P2d 345.

Local rent control ordinances and state laws governing the eviction of owners of mobilehomes from mobilehome parks usually limit the grounds on which a residential tenancy may be terminated. See §§6.62-6.74, 7.54.

When the 30-day or 60-day notice period expires, the month-to-month tenancy ends in the same way that a fixed-term lease is over when the term expires. After this period, no 3-day notice is required before the landlord may file an unlawful detainer complaint. CC §791; Hennessy v Gleason (1947) 81 CA2d 616, 184 P2d 913; La Cava v Breedlove (1946) 77 CA2d 129, 174 P2d 880; Palmer v Zeis, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.70 B. Alteration of Notice Period; Commercial Tenancies

Although CC §1946 requires that 30 days' notice be given to terminate a month-to-month commercial tenancy (see §8.69), it also provides that the parties may agree at the outset of the tenancy to a shorter notice period "of not less than 7 days before the expiration of the term thereof." Because of this language, it appears that a month-to-month rental agreement (running from the first day of each month) could provide for service of a termination notice at least 7 days before the end of the month, and require the tenant to vacate at the end of the month. Apparently, it does not allow service of the notice at any time during the month to take effect 7 days later. On service of the 30-day notice, see §8.74.

If the landlord and tenant agree that the tenancy may be terminated only by either party's giving more than 30 days' notice, the notice served will be valid only if it complies with the agreement. Watkins v McCartney (1922) 57 CA 643, 207 P 909 (60 days' notice). When there is no notice agreement, the landlord may give more than 30 days' notice. See Bauer v Neuzil (1944) 66 CA2d Supp 1020, 1027, 152 P2d 47.

Under CC §1946.1, the required 60-day notice apparently overrides any attempt to shorten the notice period in rental agreements for residential periodic tenancies. Arguably, a residential tenant cannot legally waive its right to a 60-day termination notice by agreeing to a shorter period in the rental agreement because

- such a provision is void under CC §1953(a)(3);
- the 60-day notice required by CC §1946.1 supersedes that part of CC §1946 allowing a shorter period by mutual agreement, which now applies only to commercial tenancies; and
- California courts recognize that the bargaining power of residential landlords generally exceeds that of tenants (see, e.g., Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 625, 111 CR 704), and therefore landlords should not be permitted to force waiver of important rights.

C. Format and Contents of Notice

§8.71 1. Description of Premises; Signature

A 30-day or 60-day termination notice must be in writing (CC §§1946, 1946.1). Like a 3-day notice to quit (see §8.31), the notice to terminate should include a reasonably accurate description of the property.

Although not expressly required by CC §1946 or §1946.1, the notice should include the signature of the owner or an authorized agent. This seemingly innocuous requirement can cause an inattentive landlord a good deal of trouble. In Orange St. Assocs. v Naton (Alameda Super Ct App Dep't, Nov. 10, 1982, No. 1226; unpublished opinion; CAVEAT: Cal Rules of Ct 8.1115 restricts citation of or reliance on this opinion), Orange Street Associates had been the defendant's landlord, but sold the property with title passing on June 4. On June 12, a 30-day termination notice was served on the tenant, signed by an attorney "as agent for: Orange Street Associates." The court held that the notice was invalid. Although CCP §1161 allows an unlawful detainer action when the tenant remains in possession without consent of the landlord or the landlord's successor in interest, Orange Street Associates was not the landlord when the notice was served. The court rejected Orange Street's argument that it served the notice as agent for the new owner, because the notice did not mention the agency or the new owner. The court stressed that the plaintiff in an unlawful detainer action must demonstrate strict adherence to notice requirements (see §§10.20, 10.31, 12.35).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.72 2. Grounds for Termination

Civil Code §§1946 and 1946.1 contain no express requirement that a 30-day or 60-day notice to quit specify the reason for termination. In fact, the demand for possession in the notice must be unequivocal, with no statement of the alternatives of performing under the lease or vacating as with some 3-day notices under CCP §1161 (see §§8.36, 8.50). Turney v Collins (1941) 48 CA2d 381, 119 P2d 954.

PRACTICE TIP: In some situations, the landlord may want to state the reason for termination in a 30-day or 60-day notice, although the notice need not be phrased "in the alternative." One reason to state the grounds for termination in the notice is the possibility of a claim that the eviction is retaliatory (see §§8.109-8.136). If the notice requires the tenant to vacate within 180 days after any of the actions enumerated in CC §1942.5(a), the landlord should state the reason for termination to demonstrate that grounds exist for termination other than retaliation (see §8.129).

The landlord may be required to state the grounds for termination under a local "just-cause eviction" ordinance. Several cities have enacted rent control ordinances that limit the grounds on which landlords may terminate month-to-month tenancies or refuse to renew leases. For discussion of eviction controls under rent control ordinances, see §§7.53-7.76.

Note that even when there is no requirement that the landlord state the reason for termination in the notice, the tenant still may defend a subsequent unlawful detainer action by claiming that the notice was served for retaliatory or discriminatory reasons. See §§8.133, 12.38.

NOTE: A landlord may not evict by asserting that an eviction is needed in order to comply with statutory requirements that water heaters be braced to protect against earthquake movement. Health & S C §19211(c).

§8.73 3. 30 or 60 Days to Vacate; Service in Middle of Term

Any termination notice given under CC §1946 or §1946.1 should state specifically that the month-to-month tenancy will terminate in 30 or 60 days, whichever applies. In Kingston v Colburn (1956) 139 CA2d 623, 293 P2d 805, the court held that a notice giving fewer than 30 days to vacate was ineffective on the date stated in the notice, but was effective to terminate the tenancy after 30 days.

For termination of a month-to-month tenancy, a 30-day notice need not be served at the beginning of a given 30-day period of the tenancy. Under CC §1946, the 30-day notice may be served "at any time and the rent shall be due and payable to and including the date of termination." Similarly, CC §1946.1 does not require the 60-day notice to be given on any particular date relative to rent payment for a month-to-month tenancy. Thus, a 30-day or 60-day notice may be served at any time during the month, and the rent will be apportioned for the days of possession during the following month. In Wheeler v Bainbridge (1948) 84 CA2d Supp 849, 191 P2d 134, a 30-day notice was served on October 13, and the November rent was due on November 8. Because rent for an entire month was $50.50, the tenant owed $10.10 as the apportioned amount for the period from November 8 to November 13, when the tenancy was terminated.

D. Serving 30-Day or 60-Day Notice

§8.74 1. Method of Service

Under CC §§1946 and 1946.1, service of a 30-day or 60-day notice to quit must be made in accordance with the provisions of CCP §1162, or "by sending a copy by certified or registered mail addressed to the other party." Thus, service by mail alone is clearly permitted for a 30-day or 60-day notice, unlike for a 3-day notice. This distinction makes some sense, because the courts have expressed concern over the possibility that mail delay would render the short time period under a 3-day notice meaningless (see §§8.62-8.67 for detailed discussion of §1162).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.75 2. Withdrawal of Notice

The landlord may withdraw a 30-day or 60-day notice to quit only with the tenant's consent. See Downing v Cutting Packing Co. (1920) 183 C 91, 94, 190 P 455; Devonshire v Langstaff (1935) 10 CA2d 369, 373, 51 P2d 902. In contrast, the landlord's withdrawal of a 3-day notice to quit phrased "in the alternative" maintains the lease in effect (see §8.36). Downing v Cutting Packing Co., supra.

An implied withdrawal of a 30-day or 60-day notice might be found if, after service, the landlord accepts rent for a period beyond the 30 or 60 days. In Highland Plastics v Enders (1980) 109 CA3d Supp 1, 11, 167 CR 353, the court held that, when the landlord serves a 30-day termination notice, acceptance of rent for any period beyond the termination date "probably" constitutes an "implied withdrawal" of the notice. Mere tender of the rent, not accepted by the landlord, does not result in withdrawal of the notice. Highland Plastics v Enders, supra. The landlord should be able to avoid this problem by notifying the tenant that no waiver is intended, and by refunding the rent for those days beyond the date of termination.

In EDC Assocs., Ltd. v Gutierrez (1984) 153 CA3d 167, 200 CR 333, the landlord served a 30-day termination notice on August 30th, and then on September 14th served a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit. On October 2nd, the tenant sent the landlord a money order for the October rent. By accepting this rent, the landlord "waived its right to obtain possession of the leased premises." 153 CA3d at 171.

PRACTICE TIP: When a landlord serves a defective notice, a second notice must be served. Some tenants may refuse consent to withdrawal of the first notice in an attempt to force the landlord to prosecute an unlawful detainer action based on a defective notice. To avoid this predicament, the landlord should serve a second notice before filing an unlawful detainer action and argue that the defective notice was a nullity and need not be withdrawn. The second notice should also indicate that it supersedes any previously served notices.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.76 3. Service on Subtenants

A 30-day or 60-day termination notice need not be served on subtenants; service on the tenant is sufficient because there is no default that the subtenants could cure, unlike the situation with a 3-day notice under CCP §1161 (see §§8.36, 8.50). Four Seas Inv. Corp. v International Hotel Tenants' Ass'n (1978) 81 CA3d 604, 611, 146 CR 531. Although the subtenants in the Four Seas case were not served with 30-day termination notices, they were apparently named in the unlawful detainer action, served with the complaint, and eventually evicted by the sheriff. Thus, it appears that subtenants may be evicted by legal process even though they have not been served with a 30-day termination notice. (See §§9.35, 9.45, 13.70-13.73 on naming occupants in the unlawful detainer action and effecting service of process in such an action.)

§8.77 4. When Tenant Must Vacate

Under CCP §12, the service date is excluded in calculating the 30-day or 60-day period of a notice to terminate a month-to-month tenancy (or the final day of a shorter notice period; see §8.28). If the 30th or 60th day falls on a holiday, the tenant must vacate on the following business day. CCP §§12a-13. Legal holidays are every Saturday, Sunday, and other days listed in Govt C §6700 and in CCP §§10, 12a, 12b, 135. Thus, if a 30-day notice is served on Monday, June 16, the 30-day period expires on Wednesday, July 16, and the tenant must vacate on that date. If the 30-day notice is served on Thursday, June 12, the 30 days expire on Saturday, July 12. Because Saturday and Sunday are holidays, the tenant need not vacate until Monday, July 14.

Service of a 30-day or 60-day notice by mail arguably extends the period within which the tenant must vacate under CCP §1013(a). See §8.29. In Highland Plastics v Enders (1980) 109 CA3d Supp 1, 167 CR 353, the 30-day notice was posted and mailed as required by CCP §1162(3) on February 9th (see §8.65), but apparently was not sent by registered or certified mail as required by CC §1946 (see §8.74). An unlawful detainer action was filed on March 16th. The tenant argued that the action was filed prematurely because the time to vacate should have been extended an additional 5 days under CCP §1013. The court rejected this argument, holding that:

(a) "Service is complete under CCP §1162(3) when the notice is posted and a copy is deposited in the mail addressed to the tenant at the address where the premises are located" (109 CA3d at Supp 7 n3); and

(b) "The notice period is not extended by provisions of [CCP] §1013(a) and the plaintiff's unlawful detainer action was not prematurely filed" (109 CA3d at Supp 7). See §9.44.

Despite a 1996 amendment to CCP §1013(a), the reasoning in Highland Plastic was implicitly followed in Losornio v Motta (1998) 67 CA4th 110, 78 CR2d 799. See §§8.29, 8.65.

§8.78 E. Notice Period Must Expire Before Filing of Complaint

A periodic tenancy (see §§1.9, 8.20) is not terminated on service of the notice required by CC §§1946 and 1946.1, but on expiration of the period specified in the notice. Nicolaysen v Pacific Home (1944) 65 CA2d 769, 151 P2d 567. The landlord has no cause of action in unlawful detainer until the tenancy has terminated, on expiration of the notice period. See Bauer v Neuzil (1944) 66 CA2d Supp 1020, 1028, 152 P2d 47.

§8.79 F. Terminating a Tenancy at Will

A tenant at will is one who enters the premises with the landlord's permission for an indefinite period, when no rent is paid or reserved (see §1.10). Covina Manor v Hatch (1955) 133 CA2d Supp 790, 284 P2d 580. Such a tenancy might occur when the tenant enters the property with the landlord's consent while the lease is still being negotiated, but has not been finally executed and delivered. It may also arise under a void lease or a void oral agreement. Covina Manor v Hatch, supra. The landlord's consent is the characteristic that distinguishes a tenancy at will from a tenancy at sufferance (see §1.11). Hull v Laugharn (1934) 3 CA2d 310, 314, 39 P2d 478.

The landlord may terminate a tenancy at will by serving the tenant with a 30-day termination notice. CC §§789-790; Turney v Collins (1941) 48 CA2d 381, 391, 119 P2d 954. It is unsettled whether an additional 3-day notice is required under CCP §1161 to maintain an unlawful detainer action. See Alves v Rodrigues (1948) 84 CA2d 333, 190 P2d 649 (not required); Martin v Splivalo (1880) 56 C 128 (required). Civil Code §789 refers only to the manner of service under CCP §1162, and specifies not less than 30 days' notice. Under these provisions, it seems that a 3-day notice would be superfluous and a 30-day notice should suffice.

Comment: On required contents of notice, see §§8.71-8.73. Note that a specification of reasons for the termination is not normally required in jurisdictions without rent control (see §8.72), but may be advisable or necessary to anticipate tenant defenses that the eviction is retaliatory (see CC §1942.5(e)). In a jurisdiction with rent control, it is usually necessary to state the specific ground for eviction on the face of the notice. For specific requirements, check the language of the individual rent control law and any regulations promulgated by the local rent control board. On requirements for service of the notice, see §8.74. On whether attorney fees are recoverable, see §13.25.

If a commercial rental agreement provides for a shorter notice period (of not less than 7 days; see §§8.69-8.70), the notice should be changed to specify the shorter period.

VII. UNLAWFUL DETAINER ACTIONS THAT REQUIRE NO NOTICE

§8.81 A. Tenant Gives Notice, But Remains After Notice Expires

When the tenant gives a 30-day or other notice of termination of a periodic tenancy under CC §1946 or §1946.1 (see §§8.20, 8.69-8.70), but remains after the notice period expires, the landlord need not serve the tenant with a termination notice, specifying 3 days or any other period, before initiating an unlawful detainer action. CCP §1161(5). Note that this rule may not apply under a local rent control ordinance, so the landlord may be required to give notice in this situation. See chap 7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.82 B. Expiration of Fixed-Term Lease

In jurisdictions without rent control, the lessor may file an unlawful detainer action without serving any notice whatsoever, when the lease provides for a fixed-term tenancy, the term has expired, and the tenant holds over without permission. CCP §1161(1); Lee Chuck v Quan Wo Chong & Co. (1891) 91 C 593, 597, 28 P 45; Ryland v Appelbaum (1924) 70 CA 268, 233 P 356. See CC §1933(1) and cases cited in §8.2. But see Martin v Splivalo (1880) 56 C 128, 129 (dictum stating that 3-day notice required).

A tenant who holds over without the landlord's consent after the fixed term has expired is a tenant at sufferance (Colyear v Tobriner (1936) 7 C2d 735, 742, 62 P2d 741; Hull v Laugharn (1934) 3 CA2d 310, 314, 39 P2d 478) and is liable for the reasonable rental value of the premises during the holdover period (Colyear v Tobriner, supra).

If the tenant remains in possession after the expiration of a fixed term, and the landlord accepts monthly rent, the parties are presumed to have created a month-to-month tenancy (Renner v Huntington-Hawthorne Oil & Gas Co. (1952) 39 C2d 93, 102, 244 P2d 895), on the same terms as under the original lease, unless modified. CC §1945; Miller v Stults (1956) 143 CA2d 592, 598, 300 P2d 312, 316. Note that the original lease may entitle the parties to attorney fees in an unlawful detainer action even though there is no present agreement. See §§13.25-13.34 on recovery of attorney fees. The landlord's consent, express or implied, is essential to create such a tenancy, even when the lease provides that a month-to-month tenancy will result if the tenant holds over after expiration of the lease term. Ryland v Appelbaum (1924) 70 CA 268, 270, 233 P 356.

The lease may provide for automatic renewal or extension if the tenant either (a) remains in possession after expiration of the lease or (b) fails to give notice of intent not to renew or extend before expiration of the lease term. The tenant may void such a provision unless it is set forth in boldface type, at least eight points in size. CC §1945.5. Without a renewal or extension provision, or a rent control ordinance (see §§7.54-7.68), a private nonsubsidized landlord generally is under no obligation to renew or extend a fixed-term lease. Even so, such a landlord may not be able to refuse to renew or extend for retaliatory or arbitrary reasons. See §§8.109-8.136. Special rules apply to expired leases for spaces in mobilehome parks (see §6.73).

§8.83 C. Hotel and Motel Guests

Guests in certain categories of hotels and motels are not considered to be tenants, are not subject to the general provisions of California landlord-tenant law (see CC §§1940-1954.1), and are not entitled to notice before their occupancy is terminated. CCP §1161; CC §1940. For further discussion, see §1.3. All other categories of occupants, including many who were considered to be "lodgers" or "licensees" before enactment of CC §1940 in 1976, are "persons who hire dwelling units" under CC §1940, and they thus are subject to the notice provisions of CCP §1161. Under CCP §1161, a "tenant" is "any person who hires real property" except those persons whose occupancy is described in CC §1940(b), i.e.:

(a) Persons who maintain transient occupancy in a hotel, time-share, or other facility, subject to the hotel tax under Rev & T C §7280;

(b) Persons who have not made valid payment for all room and other related charges owing as of the last day on which the occupancy is or would be subject to that tax; or

(c) Persons who maintain occupancy in a hotel where the management retains a right to enter and control the rooms, and offers all the following services to every resident: facilities for safeguarding personal property; central telephone service; maid, mail, and room services; occupancy for fewer than 7 days; and food service meeting specified requirements.

See Note in §1.3C concerning the status and rights of tenants living in residential hotels offering only long-term occupancy.

§8.84 D. Employees

A landlord who is also the tenant's employer may bring an unlawful detainer action under CCP §1161(1) against the tenant-employee on termination of the employment, without prior notice, provided that the tenant became the occupant of the premises as a

- servant,
- employee,
- agent, or
- licensee.

The language of CCP §1161(1) does not appear to make a terminated employee guilty of unlawful detainer on termination of the employment if he or she became the occupant of the premises first as a tenant and was thereafter hired by the landlord as an employee. The landlord-employer may not, however, evict the tenant by force; an unlawful detainer action is the proper remedy. Eichhorn v De La Cantera (1953) 117 CA2d 50, 54, 255 P2d 70. Resident managers of apartment complexes are probably employees under CCP §1161(1). See Cook v Klenk (1904) 142 C 416, 76 P 57.

In Karz v Mecham (1981) 120 CA3d Supp 1, 174 CR 310, after the tenant's employment was terminated, the landlord served a notice stating that the rent would be $200 a month if the tenant did not vacate. The tenant did not vacate, and the court held that the rental provision converted a tenancy at sufferance into a month-to-month tenancy that could be terminated only by a 30-day notice in the absence of a breach by the tenant. In Chan v Antepenko (1988) 203 CA3d Supp 21, 250 CR 851, the court refused to follow Karz v Mecham, holding that a resident manager was a licensee, not a tenant at sufferance. Therefore, on termination of the employment relationship, the manager was not entitled to a 30-day notice to quit before the landlord could bring an unlawful detainer action.

On evictions of farmworkers who reside in grower-supplied housing, see Vargas v Municipal Court (1978) 22 C3d 902, 150 CR 918; S. P. Growers Ass'n v Rodriguez (1976) 17 C3d 719, 131 CR 761. In Vasquez v Glassboro Serv. Ass'n (NJ 1980) 415 A2d 1156, the court held that a grower's employment contract with a farmworker, which provided housing for the worker but required the worker to vacate immediately on termination of employment, was an unconscionable adhesion contract. The court concluded that "public policy requires the implication of a provision for a reasonable time to find alternative housing." 415 A2d at 1166.

§8.85 VIII. TERMINATION BY LANDLORD UNDER GOVERNMENT-SPONSORED PROGRAM

When rental housing is owned or subsidized by a federal, state, or local government agency, special termination requirements are imposed on the landlord in addition to those imposed generally by state law. Typically imposed as conditions to provision of government funding, these requirements may stem from state or federal statutes, regulations (usually those of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD)), or the due process clause of the Fifth or Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. They mandate a pretermination notice, good cause for termination, and a pretermination hearing, with certain exceptions created by contract, statute, or regulation. For comprehensive discussion of substantive law, procedures, and special issues arising in evictions from government-owned or government-assisted housing, see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

IX. LIMITATIONS ON LANDLORD'S ABILITY TO TERMINATE TENANCY

§8.109 A. Retaliatory Eviction

A tenant has a complete defense to an unlawful detainer action if the landlord's intent in initiating the eviction is retaliatory. If the eviction is brought under the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) (see §7.64), special rules on the burden of proof apply. See Drouet v Superior Court (2003) 31 C4th 583, 3 CR3d 205, explained in §§7.64G, 12.38.

In an affirmative defense in an unlawful detainer suit, retaliation is any action by the landlord that is intended to punish the tenant (or to set an intimidating example to other tenants) because the tenant has committed a legally protected act. Actionable retaliatory conduct often takes the form of the landlord's serving a termination notice or initiating an unlawful detainer action, but it may also consist of a rent increase, decrease in services, refusal to renew a lease, change of lease terms, or increase in fees or deposits, or threat to do any of the foregoing. CC §1942.5. With the minor exceptions discussed below, the legal analysis remains the same, no matter what form the landlord's conduct takes (assuming that the tenant can prove a retaliatory intent behind the landlord's action). In analyzing whether legally cognizable retaliatory conduct has occurred, the starting point is not the nature of the landlord's action, but the nature of the tenant's act that induced the landlord's conduct. As discussed below, different legal theories may support a claim of retaliation. Their applicability usually depends on whether the conduct that induced the retaliation is legally protected.

Landlord's attorneys might argue that a retaliatory eviction defense would not apply to an eviction based on expiration of a fixed-term lease. After expiration of the lease term, it might be argued, the leasehold no longer exists and the tenant becomes a tenant at sufferance, giving the owner an absolute right to the return of the property. See §§1.11, 3.64, 8.2.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.110 1. Several Sources of Law May Apply

Counsel should be aware that several sources of law against retaliation may apply in a given instance, including federal and state constitutions, California statutes, local ordinances, and common law. The fact that one legal theory is inapplicable does not preclude the tenant from relying on other theories. The tenant apparently may proceed on any one or more theories of retaliation that apply. See Barela v Superior Court (1981) 30 C3d 244, 250, 178 CR 618 (retaliation against tenant for reporting to police that landlord had molested her child; tenant entitled to proceed under both CC §1942.5 and California common law on retaliatory eviction).

Thus, for example, if the landlord attempts to terminate the tenancy to punish the tenant for reporting housing code violations, and the termination notice expires more than 180 days after the tenant's action, CC §1942.5 might not apply (see §§8.111-8.117), but the tenant might be able to rely on common law theories of retaliatory eviction (see §8.125). Glaser v Meyers (1982) 137 CA3d 770, 187 CR 242 (tenant complaint to city council about conditions at mobilehome park; tenant entitled to proceed under common law doctrine when CC §1942.5 time limit had expired).

The tenant may also be able to file a special motion to strike the unlawful detainer under CCP §425.16 on the ground that the landlord's suit is a strategic lawsuit against public participation (SLAPP). If the tenant prevails, attorney fees are available under CCP §425.16(c). Ketchum v Moses (2001) 24 C4th 1122, 104 CR2d 377. See §§5.18A, 10.38A.

The seminal case on retaliation, Edwards v Habib (DC Cir 1968) 397 F2d 687, is a good illustration of the point that several sources of law may bar retaliation in a particular case. In Edwards, the tenant contended that the landlord was evicting her for reporting housing code violations to the city code-enforcement agency. The court allowed this defense after carefully analyzing the following three theories supporting it.

First, the court considered the argument that to permit the eviction would interfere with the tenant's right under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution to petition the government for redress of grievances. The required "state action" would be found in use of the courts to enforce the eviction, just as the U.S. Supreme Court held that it was state action for a court to enforce a private covenant restricting residential property to whites only (Shelley v Kraemer (1948) 334 US 1, 92 L Ed 1161, 68 S Ct 836). Expressing reservations about the possible ramifications of Shelley, but concerned that state courts not unreasonably restrict First Amendment rights, the court declined to accept or reject this theory. 397 F2d at 696.

Second, the court examined the argument that state action was not necessary, because a citizen's right to inform the government of a legal violation is constitutionally protected against private action as well as government action. 397 F2d at 690. This theory stems from the holding in In re Quarles & Butler (1895) 158 US 532, 536, 39 L Ed 1080, 15 S Ct 959, that "[t]he right of a citizen informing of a violation of law … does not depend upon any of the Amendments to the Constitution, but arises out of the creation and establishment by the Constitution itself of a national government, paramount and supreme within its sphere of action." Edwards v Habib (DC Cir 1968) 397 F2d 687, 697. The court also declined to adopt or reject this theory, but noted that the decision in Quarles seemed to apply to a retaliatory eviction. 397 F2d at 698.

Third, the court ultimately adopted the legal theory that to permit retaliatory evictions would be contrary to the legislative intent behind the housing code, and thus would contravene public policy. The court held that permitting retaliatory evictions "would clearly frustrate the effectiveness of the housing code as a means of upgrading the quality of housing," because tenants in homes with code violations would hesitate to complain, fearing eviction. The court stated (397 F2d at 701):

> In light of the appalling condition and shortage of housing in Washington, the expense of moving, the inequality of bargaining power between tenant and landlord, and the social and economic importance of assuring at least minimum standards in housing conditions, we do not hesitate to declare that retaliatory eviction cannot be tolerated.… [A]n eviction under the circumstances of this case would… punish appellant for making a complaint which she had a constitutional right to make, a result which we would not impute to the will of Congress simply on the basis of an essentially procedural enactment.

(1) Tenant Actions on Habitability (CC §1942.5(a))

§8.111 (a) Protected Acts

Under CC §1942.5(a), the tenant is protected from retaliatory conduct by the landlord for using the "repair-and-deduct" remedy (CC §1942; see §§3.12-3.15) and for reporting code violations to the local building inspection agency. Section 1942.5 bars the landlord from retaliating by means of eviction, rent increase, or decrease in services.

In Kemp v Schultz (1981) 121 CA3d Supp 13, 175 CR 412, the tenant claimed that the unlawful detainer action was brought in retaliation for his complaints to the landlord about the tenantability of the premises. In CC §1942.5(a)(1)-(5), the legislature listed a series of possible operative dates from which the 180-day protection of the subsection may extend (see §8.112). The court in Kemp allowed the tenant's defense under CC §1942.5(a)(1), which makes the date of a tenant complaint to the landlord one of the dates from which the protection period may run. Although the result in Kemp seems correct, the court's analysis appears faulty.

Subsections (a)(1)-(5) of CC §1942.5 do not purport to itemize tenant acts protected by the section, but merely to establish the date from which the protection extends. The acts protected by CC §1942.5(a) are set out in its first clause: "If the lessor retaliates against the lessee because of the exercise… of his rights under this chapter or because of his complaint to an appropriate agency as to tenantability of a dwelling." A tenant's complaint to the landlord should be "an exercise of his rights under this chapter," because CC §1942 (a part of "this chapter") not only permits but requires the tenant to complain to the landlord before exercising the repair-and-deduct remedy.

§8.112 (b) Limitations on Protection

A tenant who is in default in payment of rent may not invoke the protection of CC §1942.5(a). It is unclear whether this section means that the tenant cannot be in default at the time of the landlord's retaliatory conduct or at the time that the tenant invokes the claim of retaliation, i.e., as a defense to the landlord's action for possession. The latter time seems the more reasonable interpretation of CC §1942.5(a). Moreover, the tenant may not invoke subsection (a) more than once in any 12-month period. CC §1942.5(b).

Retaliatory conduct by the landlord more than 180 days after the tenant's action does not fall within the ambit of CC §1942.5(a). The tenant is protected only for 180 days after the latest of the following dates, on which (CC §1942.5(a)(1)-(5)):

(1) The tenant told the landlord of defects in the premises (see Kemp v Schultz (1981) 121 CA3d Supp 13, 175 CR 412, discussed in §8.111);

(2) The tenant filed a written complaint (or oral complaint recorded in writing) with a government agency, if the landlord knew of the complaint;

(3) The government agency inspected the premises or issued a citation, if the landlord did not know of the complaint;

(4) The tenant filed a judicial or arbitration proceeding involving tenantability; or

(5) The tenant won a judgment or arbitration award involving tenantability.

In Kriz v Taylor (1979) 92 CA3d 302, 154 CR 824, the court held that the landlord may serve a termination notice within the time period specified by CC §1942.5 (then 60 days), as long as the notice does not require the tenant to vacate until after the statutory period, and the §1942.5 defense is not then available to the tenant in the landlord's action for possession.

§8.113 (2) Tenant Union Activity or "Rights Under Law" (CC §1942.5(c))

When a tenant organizes or joins a tenant union or peaceably exercises "any rights under the law," CC §1942.5(c) prohibits the landlord from retaliating or threatening to retaliate by eviction, rent increase, or decrease in services. Note that subsection (c) contains none of the limitations imposed in CC §1942.5(a) (see §8.112). The tenant may invoke subsection (c) more than once in any 12-month period, even though behind in rent payments and 180 days have expired. See EDC Assocs., Ltd. v Gutierrez (1984) 153 CA3d 167, 172, 200 CR 333 (concurring opinion of Andreen, J).

Conduct encompassed by the phrase "any rights under the law" appears at first glance to include the tenant's exercise of the repair-and-deduct remedy (a "right" under CC §1942; see §§3.12-3.15) and complaining to a building inspection department about conditions on the premises (arguably a "right" under the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution; see §8.111). See Glaser v Meyers (1982) 137 CA3d 770, 776 n4, 187 CR 242. Because CC §1942.5(a) specifically covers these acts, with its limitations on exercise of tenants' rights (see §8.112), §1942.5(c) probably does not cover them, or the limitations imposed by subsection (a) would be ineffective.

"Any rights under the law" should include at least the rights granted by the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996; see §§2.49-2.56), the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51; see §§2.57-2.59), other statutes, and judicial decisions. Section 1942.5(c) also seems to cover constitutional rights and thus may apply to retaliation for constitutionally protected acts such as marrying, having sex with an unmarried person, having a baby, gathering signatures on a petition, or joining an unpopular political party. (Note that the Unruh Civil Rights Act might also protect these acts from retaliation by the landlord. See §2.58.

In Barela v Superior Court (1981) 30 C3d 244, 178 CR 618, the court held that, by reporting to the police a crime allegedly committed by the landlord, the tenant had "lawfully and peaceably exercised her rights" within the meaning of CC §1942.5(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.114 (3) Tenant Cannot Waive Rights (CC §1942.5(d))

Any attempt by the tenant to waive his or her rights under CC §1942.5 is void. CC §1942.5(d). Thus, a waiver in a lease or rental agreement is clearly barred (see, e.g., Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 625 n9, 111 CR 704; Henrioulle v Marin Ventures, Inc. (1978) 20 C3d 512, 143 CR 247), but it is doubtful that §1942.5(d) was intended to invalidate a waiver in a settlement agreement negotiated by attorneys during a pending lawsuit. In such a case, the bargaining power is more equal, the waiver is subject to judicial oversight, and public policy favors settlement of lawsuits.

§8.115 (4) Notice and Burden of Proof (CC §1942.5(e))

Civil Code §1942.5(e) provides that, despite the other subsections of §1942.5, a landlord may recover possession if the notice to the tenant states the ground on which the landlord "in good faith" seeks to recover possession. If the statement is controverted, the landlord must "establish its truth" at the unlawful detainer trial.

Civil Code §1942.5(e) does not contain the same ambiguity as CC §1942.5(d) (discussed in §8.114), because the requirement that the landlord state the ground "in good faith" seems to preclude the landlord from stating an otherwise valid ground if the dominant purpose is to retaliate. The problem with §1942.5(e) is that CC §§827, 1946, and 1946.1 (see §8.69) do not require a landlord to state the ground for giving a notice raising the rent or terminating a month-to-month tenancy. If the landlord does state a ground, he or she thus acquires the burden of proving the ground under CC §1942.5(e). Although the tenant would still have the burden of "producing evidence" of retaliation (see CC §1942.5(c)), the landlord would have the ultimate burden of negating retaliatory motive by proving the truth of the stated ground. See §8.130. A landlord's attorney, therefore, should recommend that the notice state cause to avoid the relatively easy showing of a prima facie retaliatory defense by a tenant who alleges the reason for the notice was retaliation for the tenant's protected act within the 180-day period.

Does CC §1942.5(e) require that the landlord state the nonretaliatory ground in the termination notice and plead it in the complaint as a prerequisite to introducing evidence that the eviction was motivated by that ground? It is possible that the legislature intended this effect (see discussion of cases in §8.130), but subsection (e) does not contain such mandatory language, and retaliation is an issue in only a minority of eviction and rent increase cases. Perhaps the legislature meant to require that the landlord state the ground whenever CC §1942.5(a) or (c) might apply, e.g., whenever the notice will expire within 180 days of any of the dates set out in subsection (a). See cases interpreting CC §1942.5(e) in §12.38.

§8.116 (5) Remedies (CC §1942.5(f)-(g))

A landlord (or landlord's agent) who violates CC §1942.5 is liable for actual damages sustained by the tenant, and for punitive damages from $100 to $2000 for each retaliatory act if the retaliation was committed with "fraud, oppression, or malice" (which are often present in retaliation cases). CC §1942.5(f). The prevailing party is entitled to recover attorney fees if either party requested them at the outset of the action (presumably in the initial pleadings, i.e., complaint or answer). CC §1942.5(g).

§8.117 (6) Remedies Not Exclusive (CC §1942.5(h))

Civil Code §1942.5(h) requires that "remedies provided by this section shall be in addition to any other remedies provided by statutory or decisional law." The meaning of this subsection is not entirely clear. If the legislature used the word "remedies" in a narrow sense (covering only means of redressing violations of the substantive rights granted by CC §1942.5), then the subsection arguably permits the tenant to invoke other methods of redressing retaliation (such as injunctive relief and punitive damages over $2000; see Aweeka v Bonds (1971) 20 CA3d 278, 97 CR 650; but see De Anza Santa Cruz Mobile Estates Homeowners Ass'n v De Anza Santa Cruz Mobile Estates (2001) 94 CA4th 890, 114 CR2d 708), even though other sources of law concerning retaliation are "preempted" by CC §1942.5.

The California Supreme Court appears to have rejected this narrow view. Instead, the court has implied that CC §1942.5(h) refers to remedies in the broad sense (i.e., that it includes substantive rights as well as means of redressing their violation), so that a tenant may invoke applicable theories of retaliation in addition to those provided for in §1942.5. Barela v Superior Court (1981) 30 C3d 244, 250, 178 CR 618 (tenant, evicted in retaliation for complaining to police that landlord had molested her child, entitled to proceed under both CC §1942.5 and California common law on retaliatory eviction). b. Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51)

§8.118 (1) Arbitrary Conduct Prohibited by Act's Discrimination Protections

The tenant may be protected from the landlord's "arbitrary" retaliatory conduct by the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51), which is amended frequently and extensively discussed in chap 2. It provides (CC §51(b)):

> All persons … are free and equal, and no matter what their sex, race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, disability, medical condition, marital status, or sexual orientation are entitled to … full and equal accommodations … in all business establishments.

Effective January 1, 2006, persons protected under the Unruh Act include those who are perceived to have any particular characteristic of the listed classes in the Act or who associate with persons who have, or are perceived to have, any such characteristic. CC §51(e)(5).

Although customarily invoked in cases involving the protected classes, the Act also prohibits all arbitrary discrimination by business establishments. The listed classes must be construed as illustrative rather than restrictive. See uncodified declarations of the legislature in Stats 2005, ch 420, §2; In re Cox (1970) 3 C3d 205, 216, 90 CR 24. In Cox, the petitioner (who was on a motorcycle and speaking to a young man "who wore long hair and dressed in an unconventional manner") was ordered to leave a shopping center for no apparent justifiable reason. After refusing to do so, he was arrested and prosecuted under a local ordinance. The court held that the Unruh Act forbids "arbitrary" exclusions, and requires that the prosecution show some reasonable ground for the order to leave. See also Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 180 CR 496.

Because a person who is in the business of renting apartments or houses is covered by the Unruh Act (Swann v Burkett (1962) 209 CA2d 685, 26 CR 286), it appears that a landlord may not evict a tenant, raise the rent, or withhold services for an "arbitrary" reason. The tenant may raise arbitrary retaliatory conduct under the Unruh Act as a defense to an unlawful detainer action. Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson, supra. For discussion, see §2.58.

Note that although Swann v Burkett, supra, involved the renting of units in a triplex, the court implied that duplexes and single-family homes might also be covered by the Unruh Act. Swann v Burkett (1962) 209 CA2d 685, 695, 26 CR 286. The California Attorney General determined that the Act covers virtually all landlords, even "an owner of a non-owner occupied single family dwelling who sells, rents, or leases it for income or gain." 56 Ops Cal Atty Gen 546, 551 (1973). For further discussion, see §§2.21, 2.57-2.59.

§8.119 (2) "Arbitrary" Defined

The term "arbitrary" appears to be synonymous with "without good cause." See Stoumen v Reilly (1951) 37 C2d 713, 717, 234 P2d 969; Madonna v County of San Luis Obispo (1974) 39 CA3d 57, 62, 113 CR 916. From the supreme court's holding in In re Cox (1970) 3 C3d 205, 90 CR 24, that the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) bars arbitrary discrimination (see §8.118), the following bases for eviction or other action by the landlord appear to be "arbitrary":

(1) The tenant has long hair. In re Cox, supra.

(2) The tenant associates with black people. Winchell v English (1976) 62 CA3d 125, 133 CR 20. See also Woods-Drake v Lundy (5th Cir 1982) 667 F2d 1198 (eviction violates federal law).

(3) The tenant associates with homosexuals. Hubert v Williams (1982) 133 CA3d Supp 1, 184 CR 161.

(4) The tenant receives public assistance. 59 Ops Cal Atty Gen 223 (1976). The landlord might, however, establish reasonable criteria related to the tenant's ability to pay rent (see §§2.9, 2.57-2.58).

(5) The tenant is a student. See 59 Ops Cal Atty Gen 70 (1976).

In Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 180 CR 496, the court held that a landlord's policy of excluding and evicting families with children was an arbitrary exclusion of a class of people and therefore violated the Unruh Act. In O'Connor v Village Green Owners Ass'n (1983) 33 C3d 790, 191 CR 320, the Marina Point ruling was applied to a condominium owners' association that forbade occupancy by minors. For further discussion, see §§2.57-2.59.

In response to the Marina Point and O'Connor decisions, the legislature adopted CC §§51.2-51.4, which permit owners to develop or rehabilitate certain multi-unit buildings for senior citizens, and to limit occupancy to such tenants and people who provide physical or economic support for them. For discussion, see §2.25.

In non-Unruh Act cases, the courts have held the word "arbitrary" to include the landlord's basing a decision to evict on a valid purpose but alleging insufficient facts to support that purpose: Guntert v City of Stockton (1974) 43 CA3d 203, 210, 117 CR 601; Hollon v Pierce (1967) 257 CA2d 468, 64 CR 808.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.120 (3) Burden of Proof

The tenant usually raises an Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) violation as an affirmative defense to an unlawful detainer action. Thus, the tenant seems to have the burden of proof on the issue.

One municipal court ruled to the contrary when the tenant pleaded retaliatory eviction as a defense. In M & D Props. v Lopez (LA Mun Ct, Nov. 7, 1978, No. 241 584) 13 Clearinghouse Rev 310 (1979), the court held that the landlord has the burden of proving a valid nonretaliatory reason for the eviction, because of the tenant's inherent inability to know the landlord's reasons.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.121 (4) Remedies

In addition to constituting an affirmative defense to an unlawful detainer action, arbitrary conduct in violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) may also render the landlord subject to various affirmative civil remedies. See §2.58.

A person who violates the Unruh Act is liable under CC §52(a) for:

- actual damages;
- up to three times actual damages (but at least $4000); and
- attorney fees.

Under CC §52(b), additional damages are available against anyone who denies the right to be free of violence or to be free of sexual harassment (see also §3.70A).

If there is reasonable proof that someone is engaging in "conduct in resistance to the full enjoyment" of any right secured by the Unruh Act, injunctive relief may be obtained by the Attorney General, a district or city attorney, or any aggrieved person. CC §52(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.122 c. California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA)

The California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) prohibits discrimination based on the tenant's race, color, religion, sex, marital status, national origin, ancestry, familial status, disability, sexual orientation, or source of income. Govt C §12955(a). The portions of FEHA that cover housing discrimination were adopted from the former Rumford Fair Housing Act (former Health & S C §§35700-35745). Much of FEHA's coverage duplicates the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) (see §§8.118-8.121). Differences include specific mentions in FEHA of "marital status," and the fact that no court has construed FEHA to cover all "arbitrary" discrimination (see §8.119). FEHA is primarily enforced by Department of Fair Employment and Housing. Govt C §§12930, 12980-12988. See §§2.49-2.59.

In Atkisson v Kern County Hous. Auth. (1976) 59 CA3d 89, 130 CR 375, the court held under the former Rumford Act that a landlord's policy of evicting unmarried couples constituted an illegal eviction based on "marital status." The supreme court later ruled that a landlord who refused to rent to unmarried couples on the basis of her religious beliefs violated the FEHA. Smith v FEHC (1996) 12 C4th 1143, 51 CR2d 700. See further discussion of this issue in §2.50. Other states have addressed this issue. See Johnson, The Conflict Between Religious Exercise and Efforts to Eradicate Housing Discrimination Against Nontraditional Couples: Should Free Exercise Protect Landlord Bias?, 53 Wash & Lee L Rev 351 (1996); Wistner, Cohabitation, Fornication and the Free Exercise of Religion: Landlords Seeking Religious Exemption From Fair Housing Laws, 46 Case W Res L Rev 1071 (1996).

Under Govt C §12955(f), a property owner may not:

> harass, evict, or otherwise discriminate against any person in the sale or rental of housing accommodations when the owner's dominant purpose is retaliation against a person who has opposed practices unlawful under this section, informed law enforcement agencies of practices believed unlawful under this section, has testified or assisted in any proceeding under this part… Nothing herein is intended to cause or permit the delay of an unlawful detainer action.

The last sentence in §12955(f) appears to bar only frivolous retaliation defenses to unlawful detainer actions. If the action is brought in retaliation for the tenant's assertion of rights under FEHA, it would seem improper for the court to deny this defense and thus assist in a clear violation of the Act. This provision presumably would bar injunctive relief to delay an unlawful detainer action.

In Hess v FEHC (1982) 138 CA3d 232, 187 CR 712, the landlord required each member of an unrelated couple to meet certain financial standards, while allowing married couples to aggregate their income. The Fair Employment and Housing Commission found that the' practice violated Govt C §12955, which forbids discrimination on the basis of marital status. The court upheld this ruling, rejecting the landlord's defense of a legitimate business purpose.

In Brown v Smith (1997) 55 CA4th 767, 64 CR2d 301, the jury awarded damages against a landlord for sexually harassing a tenant. On appeal, the landlord argued that FEHA and the Unruh Act did not cover sexual harassment. The appellate court ruled that FEHA is to be broadly construed to accomplish its purpose of prohibiting discrimination and read in conformity with federal law, which prohibits sexual harassment as a form of discrimination. Note also that CC §51.9 has since been amended to allow a civil action for damages for sexual harassment by a landlord or a property manager.

§8.123 d. Federal Statutes

A retaliatory eviction defense is available to a tenant who is evicted for asserting rights under federal law. In S. P. Growers Ass'n v Rodriguez (1976) 17 C3d 719, 131 CR 761, the court held that the tenants could not defend against an unlawful detainer action by alleging that the landlord sought to evict employees from company housing because they were on a labor strike. The court ruled, however, that the tenants could defend on the ground that the landlord 'retaliated against the tenants for having sued the landlord under a federal farm labor statute (former Farm Labor Contractor Registration Act (former 7 USC §§2041-2055); see 29 USC §§1801-1872). The court noted that the statute relied primarily on private lawsuits for its enforcement, and that the Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution prevents states from frustrating federal legislation.

In Halet v Wend Inv. Co. (9th Cir 1982) 672 F2d 1305, the court held that the tenant's complaint stated a cause of action under 42 USC §1983 (denial of civil rights under color of state law) by alleging that the defendant landlord had an "adults-only" rental policy. See also Note, Use of the Fair Housing Act to Redress Housing Discrimination Against Families with Children, 17 Clearinghouse Rev 736 (1983).

§8.124 e. Other Statutes

Any statute that authorizes certain conduct by tenants, or contemplates such conduct, appears to contain implicit protection from retaliation by the landlord for engaging in such conduct. This conclusion stems from the reasoning of various courts that to permit evictions in retaliation for exercise of statutory rights undercuts the intent behind protective legislation and contravenes public policy. See Edwards v Habib (DC Cir 1968) 397 F2d 687 (discussed in §8.110). See also Vargas v Municipal Court (1978) 22 C3d 902, 915, 150 CR 918; S. P. Growers Ass'n v Rodriguez (1976) 17 C3d 719, 131 CR 761; Schweiger v Superior Court (1970) 3 C3d 507, 90 CR 729. Each of these cases involved a statute that did not deal directly with retaliation, but in each case the court inferred that the legislature intended to prohibit retaliation to promote the statute's purpose.

Note that this reasoning applies even when the statute contemplates action by the tenant in some other role. See, e.g., S. P. Growers Ass'n v Rodriguez, supra (exercise by farm laborer-tenant of rights under statute regulating farm labor contractors). Thus, for example, a court might infer that the legislature intended a statute that permits citizens to circulate petitions to place initiatives on the ballot (see Elec C §9021) to prohibit landlords from retaliating against tenants who circulate such petitions. Also, because CC §51.9 allows a tenant to bring a civil action for damages for sexual harassment by a landlord or a property manager, a court could easily conclude that the statutory purpose would be frustrated if the tenant were evicted in retaliation for bringing an action under §51.9.

Some statutes prohibit retaliation with respect to certain types of housing. See, e.g., Health & S C §17031.5 (employee housing).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.125 f. Common Law

A separate and independent basis for a prohibition on retaliatory evictions exists under California common law. Barela v Superior Court (1981) 30 C3d 244, 178 CR 618; S. P. Growers Ass'n v Rodriguez (1976) 17 C3d 719, 131 CR 761; Schweiger v Superior Court (1970) 3 C3d 507, 90 CR 729; Glaser v Meyers (1982) 137 CA3d 770, 187 CR 242. See also Comment, Laws In Flux: Landlord Retaliation and the California Courts, 10 West St U L Rev 197 (1983). Under this doctrine, the tenant may assert a valid defense of retaliatory eviction if, on balance, the public policies furthered by protecting a tenant from eviction outweigh the state's interest in ensuring that unlawful detainer proceedings remain summary. Barela v Superior Court (1981) 30 C3d 244, 250, 178 CR 618.

Note that the common law doctrine typically arises when the landlord retaliates for the tenant's exercise of some statutory right and therefore is quite similar to the statutory protection of CC §1942.5(c) (exercise of any rights under the law; see §8.113) and to the notion of an implicit prohibition against retaliation for exercising rights under statutory protections (see §8.123). Any or all of these doctrines may apply to a particular case of retaliation. See, e.g., Barela v Superior Court, supra (tenant's complaint to police that landlord had molested her child); S. P. Growers Ass'n v Rodriguez, supra (tenants filed action under federal farm labor regulatory statute against employer-landlord); Schweiger v Superior Court, supra (tenant's exercise of repair-and-deduct remedy (CC §1942; see §§3.12-3.15)).

The common law retaliatory eviction doctrine might also be applied to protect a tenant who exercises a right that itself arises under common law (e.g., the implied warranty of habitability). As with statutory enactments, such common law doctrines would be frustrated if landlords could retaliate against tenants for invoking them. Thus, courts might read a prohibition against retaliation into the common law right itself, as did the court in Robinson v Diamond Hous. Corp. (DC Cir 1972) 463 F2d 853. See also Moskovitz, The Implied Warranty of Habitability: A New Doctrine Raising New Issues, 62 Cal L Rev 1444, 1493 (1974). This reasoning should also apply to any component of the common law doctrine. Thus, for example, if the tenant is required to give prior notice of defects to the landlord before withholding rent for breach of the warranty of habitability (see §§3.16-3.48), the landlord should not be permitted to retaliate against the tenant for complaining about the condition of the premises (see §§8.111-8.112).

For discussion of the retaliatory eviction defense in a commercial tenancy, see California Eviction Defense Manual §19.25 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

§8.126 g. Local Ordinances

Several California rent control ordinances prohibit retaliation against tenants who exercise their rights under the ordinances. These local ordinances are probably not preempted by state law. See CC §1942.5(h); Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley (1976) 17 C3d 129, 148, 130 CR 465. See also Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 705, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045.

Whether local ordinances prohibiting retaliation are valid when they are not part of local rent control laws was left open in Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley (1976) 17 C3d 129, 151 n22, 130 CR 465. A local ordinance prohibiting retaliation may not alter the burden of proof set by the Evidence Code. Fisher v City of Berkeley, supra.

§8.127 h. Constitutional Protections

In a particular case, the federal or state constitution may constitute a bar against retaliatory conduct by the landlord. If so, the fact that other sources of law against retaliation are not available is irrelevant.

EXAMPLE: Suppose that the tenant successfully defends an eviction action by claiming that the landlord brought the action in retaliation for the tenant's reporting code violations to the appropriate government agency. More than 8 months later, the landlord again sues to evict the tenant. May the tenant raise a retaliation defense again? Not under CC §1942.5(a), because that section cannot be invoked more than once in any 12-month period. CC §1942.5(b). The 180-day limitation in §1942.5(a) might also bar the defense (see §8.112). If the U.S. Constitution were held to bar evictions in retaliation for complaints to code enforcement agencies, however, the tenant could base the defense on constitutional grounds and would not be subject to the limitations of CC §1942.5(a)-(b).

The constitutional provision usually invoked in retaliation cases is U.S. Const Amend I, which guarantees freedom of speech and association (e.g., tenant union organizing) and the right to petition the government for redress of grievances (e.g., complaints to local housing inspectors). See also Cal Const art I, §§2-3. The First Amendment restrains only government action, however, not purely private action. The requisite state action might be found in retaliation cases in a private landlord's use of state courts to evict, or in the landlord's interaction with government agencies regarding the financing and operation of the building.

In Edwards v Habib (DC Cir 1968) 397 F2d 687, the court seemed inclined to accept the theory that use of state courts to evict constitutes state action. See discussion in §8.110. That "state action" theory was rejected, however, in Higbee v Starr (8th Cir 1983) 698 F2d 945; Miller v Hartwood Apartments, Ltd. (5th Cir 1982) 689 F2d 1239, 1242; Fallis v Dunbar (ND Ohio 1974) 386 F Supp 1117; Mullarkey v Borglum (SD NY 1970) 323 F Supp 1218, 1226. But see Hosey v Club Van Cortlandt (SD NY 1969) 299 F Supp 501.

In McQueen v Druker (D Mass 1970) 317 F Supp 1122, aff'd (1st Cir 1971) 438 F2d 781, the court held that tenant organizing is protected by the First Amendment. The court found the required state action in substantial city, state, and Federal Housing Administration financial support given to the landlord, rather than in state court participation in the intended eviction. See also Holt v Richmond Redev. & Hous. Auth. (ED Va 1966) 266 F Supp 397.

2 Powell, Powell on Real Property, §16B.05[1][a] (1949), cites several out-of-state cases holding that retaliation for the tenant's exercise of various rights is prohibited. This includes the right to oppose the landlord's plans to develop the property, the right to support certain political platforms, and the right to join a tenant union.

§8.128 i. Applicability of Law to Retaliatory Eviction in Commercial Tenancies

A commercial tenant may be protected from a landlord's retaliatory conduct, although the courts have had little occasion to rule on this issue to date. Sources of law such as statutes, common law doctrines, and federal or state constitutions (see §§8.123-8.125) might apply to commercial tenancies when a landlord's retaliation against a commercial tenant for exercising rights under these legal sources would frustrate the policies behind them. For further discussion of applying the retaliatory eviction defense in a commercial tenancy, see California Eviction Defense Manual §19.25 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

In Custom Parking, Inc. v Superior Court (1982) 138 CA3d 90, 101, 187 CR 674, the court held that the "strong public policy against intimidating witnesses in a lawsuit from testifying honestly" outweighed the landlord's need for a summary proceeding. The court reasoned that even a commercial tenant must be allowed to defend an unlawful detainer action on the ground that the landlord retaliated against him or her because the tenant's employees refused to perjure themselves in lawsuits brought by the landlord against other tenants. See also Mobil Oil Corp. v Handley (1978) 76 CA3d 956, 966, 143 CR 321 (suggesting that retaliation defense might be available to filling-station lessee who alleges landlord is retaliating, in violation of Bus & P C §21140.2, for tenant's refusal to buy landlord's products); Windward Partners v Delos Santos (Haw 1978) 577 P2d 326.

2. Proof of Retaliatory Motive

§8.129 a. Sole or Dominant Motive

For a tenant to assert a retaliatory eviction defense successfully, must retaliation be the landlord's sole motive or may it be one of several motives? This question is not answered by any of the California cases on retaliation decided under the common law or by CC §1942.5 in its present form. (Section 1942.5 formerly provided that it was sufficient for the tenant to show that the landlord's "dominant purpose" was retaliation, but that language was deleted from the statute (Stats 1970, ch 1280, §5).)

The California Supreme Court concluded that under §1942.5(d)-(e), a landlord's bona fide intent to withdraw rental property from the market under applicable state law (see §7.64G) defeats the statutory defense of retaliatory eviction. See Drouet v Superior Court (2003) 31 C4th 583, 3 CR3d 205. The opinion suggests that trial courts first determine whether, under CC §1942.5(e), the landlord's withdrawal of the property was bona fide, because a finding of bona fide intent would overcome the statutory defense of retaliatory eviction set forth in CC §1942.5(a) and (c). This formula seems to preclude the possibility of the court finding that the landlord was motivated by numerous factors; however, a tenant may argue that evidence establishing several motives, some of which are retaliatory, could defeat a finding of bona fide intent under CC §1942.5(e).

In labor law cases, the courts have held that discrimination against union activity need not be an employer's sole motive, but must be a substantial or motivating reason to sustain a claim of wrongful termination. In NLRB v Whitin Mach. Works (1st Cir 1953) 204 F2d 883, 885, the court held that:

> In order to supply a basis for inferring discrimination, it is necessary to show that one reason for the discharge is that the employee was engaging in protected activity. It need not be the only reason but it is sufficient if it is a substantial or motivating reason, despite the fact that other reasons may exist.

See Mt. Healthy City Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ. v Doyle (1977) 429 US 274, 50 L Ed 2d 471, 97 S Ct 568; Western Land Office, Inc. v Cervantes (1985) 175 CA3d 724, 220 CR 784, discussed in §8.130.

Similarly, in Sand v Queen City Packing Co. (ND 1961) 108 NW2d 448, 452, the court reversed a judgment for the employer, holding improper a jury instruction requiring employees to prove that the employer's "sole" motive for firing them was their union affiliation. The court ruled that the employees needed to prove only that their union affiliation was the "real or motivating cause" for the discharge. 108 NW2d at 452.

In NLRB v Transportation Mgmt. Corp. (1983) 462 US 393, 76 L Ed 2d 667, 103 S Ct 2469, an employee claimed to have been fired for union activities. The Supreme Court upheld an NLRB rule that firing an employee was an unfair labor practice if anti-union intent was a "substantial or motivating factor," even if other valid reasons for the firing were shown.

Under the federal test, an employer may have several legitimate grounds for firing an employee, but the firing is wrongful if the employee's union affiliation was the "motivating" ground. A. P. Green Fire Brick Co. v NLRB (8th Cir 1964) 326 F2d 910, 916; NLRB v Howe Scale Co. (7th Cir 1963) 311 F2d 502, 505. By analogy, evidence that the landlord has some justifiable reasons for evicting a tenant should not defeat a retaliatory eviction defense, if the evidence shows that retaliation was the landlord's "motivating" ground for bringing the action.

When a California agricultural employer fires an employee for both anti-union and legitimate business reasons, determining whether the firing violated the California Agricultural Labor Relations Act (Lab C §§1140-1166.3) depends on whether the firing would not have occurred "but for" the anti-union bias. Martori Bros. Distribs. v ALRB (1981) 29 C3d 721, 729, 175 CR 626. A court might apply this "but for" test to a retaliatory eviction case.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.130 b. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

Because retaliation is an affirmative defense to be raised by the tenant, the tenant usually has the burden of proving retaliatory motive. Evid C §500. This burden may not be shifted by a local ordinance. Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 698, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045. When the basis for the tenant's claim is CC §1942.5(c) (see §8.113), that section expressly imposes the "burden of producing evidence" on the tenant, although it says nothing about the burden of proof. If the termination notice states a reason for termination, however, the landlord has the burden of proving the truth of the reason. CC §1942.5(e). See §8.115.

In Western Land Office, Inc. v Cervantes (1985) 175 CA3d 724, 220 CR 784, the court rejected a tenant's contention that CC §1942.5 creates a rebuttable presumption of retaliation. The court indicated (175 CA3d at 742) that the following procedure should be followed in a retaliation case:

(a) The tenant must prove the "landlord's retaliatory motive by a preponderance of the evidence."

(b) "If the landlord takes action for a valid reason not listed in the unlawful detainer statutes, he must give notice to the tenant of the ground upon which he proceeds…." This requirement is taken from CC §1942.5(e), but the court failed to clarify if and when the notice must specify a reason. The apparent meaning of the phrase, "not listed in the unlawful detainer statutes," is that when the eviction is by means of a 30-day or 60-day notice under CC §1946 or §1946.1, some reason for giving notice or for filing an unlawful detainer action, other than the intent to terminate the tenancy, is required.

(c) If the tenant controverts the reason given in the notice, the landlord must prove the truth of the stated reason by a preponderance of the evidence.

Proof of the existence of a valid reason to evict, however, does not necessarily prove good faith, i.e., that the landlord is seeking to evict because of the valid reason rather than to punish the tenant for exercising some right. Therefore, even if the landlord proves the existence of a valid reason, the tenant may prove retaliation by showing that the landlord does not seek to evict in good faith.

The tenant may be able to shift the burden of proof to the landlord by showing that the landlord's conduct is "'inherently destructive' of tenants' rights, or unavoidably chills their exercise." Robinson v Diamond Hous. Corp. (DC Cir 1972) 463 F2d 853, 865. See Moskovitz, The Implied Warranty of Habitability: A New Doctrine Raising New Issues, 62 Calif L Rev 1444, 1497 (1974). Such a showing was held to raise a "presumption" of retaliatory motive, requiring the landlord "to rebut it by demonstrating that he is motivated by some legitimate business purpose rather than by the illicit motive which would otherwise be presumed." Robinson v Diamond Hous. Corp., supra.

c. Evidence

§8.131 (1) Typically Circumstantial and Inferential

A retaliatory motive might be difficult to prove because it turns on the landlord's subjective state of mind (unless the CC §1942.5(e) presumption is available because the landlord stated the reason for termination in the notice (see §§8.115, 8.130)). Testimony concerning statements by the landlord is the best evidence of retaliatory intent, of course, but a careful landlord will be circumspect about expressing this intent verbally. Landlords' attorneys need to counsel their clients carefully concerning their conduct in this area. (See generally chap 4.)

Usually, the tenant must rely on circumstantial evidence from which the factfinder can infer a retaliatory motive. Often, the timing of the landlord's act gives rise to a legitimate inference of retaliatory intent. In Hosey v Club Van Cortlandt (SD NY 1969) 299 F Supp 501, the tenant filed complaints with city officials and then met in his room with other tenants to consider making further complaints. The following day he was informed that his rent would be raised; 5 days later he was told that he would have to leave the premises. The court found that "the coincidence of the tenants' meeting and the landlord's threat to evict," along with the absence of threats to evict before the tenants' meeting, probably furnish proof that retaliation was "the overriding reason" for the eviction threats. 299 F Supp at 503. See also Kriz v Taylor (1979) 92 CA3d 302, 308, 154 CR 824 (notice to quit served 1 week after tenant won prior eviction action).

A landlord who contends that the tenant's misbehavior is the reason for the eviction must show that the misbehavior arose after the tenant's act allegedly giving rise to the retaliation. (If the misbehavior had occurred earlier, and that act were the basis for the eviction, presumably the landlord would have objected and begun the eviction at that point.) See Kriz v Taylor (1979) 92 CA3d 302, 309, 154 CR 824.

In Karas v Floyd (Ohio Ct App 1981) 440 NE2d 563, the court upheld the trial court's finding that the landlord's purpose in evicting was retaliatory, rather than an attempt to close the premises because necessary repairs were economically unfeasible. The court held that the landlord's evidence regarding economic unfeasibility was "vague and general" because it failed to define "extensive" repairs and to show the landlord's financial resources. 440 NE2d at 567.

If an employee incurs a discriminatory discharge, and the employer then seeks to evict the employee from company housing, it may be proper to infer that the eviction was also discriminatory. Rivcom Corp. v ALRB (1983) 34 C3d 743, 763, 195 CR 651.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.132 (2) Analogy to Labor Law Cases

Labor law cases might be instructive on the issue of the landlord's motive because retaliation is often an issue in wrongful termination cases (see §8.129). In NLRB v Melrose Processing Co. (8th Cir 1965) 351 F2d 693, the employee had worked in the defendant's turkey-processing plant, but was not rehired for a particular season. The court affirmed the NLRB's finding that the defendant refused to rehire the employee because of her union affiliation. In finding substantial evidence to support the NLRB's finding, the court relied on several items of evidence.

First, the court held that the lack of evidence of a justifiable reason for the refusal to rehire was evidence of an improper motive (351 F2d at 698):

> If one can show that every other alternative except the fact sought to be proved is not true, you indirectly prove that fact is true.... By showing that there was no other reasonable explanation for [the employee's] not being rehired, her union activity stood out as the logical explanation of her employer's action.

Second, the court ruled that the employer's refusal to give the employee an explanation for why she was not rehired might be enough to support an inference that the refusal to rehire was discriminatory. 351 F2d at 699.

Third, the court held that the employer's failure to reprimand the employee for alleged rule infractions also supported an inference that the refusal to rehire was discriminatory. 351 F2d at 699.

Finally, the court relied on evidence that employees guilty of far more serious rule infractions had not been treated as severely as this employee. 351 F2d at 699. See A. P. Green Fire Brick Co. v NLRB (8th Cir 1964) 326 F2d 910, 916.

PRACTICE TIP: To prove a retaliatory eviction defense, the tenant's attorney might use evidence similar to that introduced in labor law cases, such as facts showing that:

- The client was a model tenant (e.g., always paid rent on time, behaved properly); therefore, the landlord could have no reason for eviction other than retaliation;
- The landlord refused to answer the tenant, or was evasive, when asked the reason for the termination notice;
- The landlord never reprimanded or warned the tenant about paying the rent late or being noisy; or
- Other tenants were late in paying rent for longer periods and more frequently than the tenant.

Attorneys can avoid these kinds of evidentiary struggles by counseling their landlord clients carefully. When the landlord has a clear nonretaliatory purpose for terminating the tenancy, that purpose should be stated (although stating it in the notice might shift the burden on this issue to the landlord under CC §1942.5(e)). The landlord should issue warnings and document tenant infractions as they occur in order to be able to establish the existence of independent grounds. The landlord should also be prepared to show that the tenant is not being treated less fairly than other tenants.

3. Remedies for Retaliation

§8.133 a. Defense to Unlawful Detainer Action

When the landlord files an unlawful detainer action, the tenant may raise retaliatory eviction as an affirmative defense in the answer. Vargas v Municipal Court (1978) 22 C3d 902, 150 CR 918; S. P. Growers Ass'n v Rodriguez (1976) 17 C3d 719, 131 CR 761; Kriz v Taylor (1979) 92 CA3d 302, 154 CR 824.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.134 b. Injunctive and Declaratory Relief

Instead of waiting to defend an eviction lawsuit, the tenant may sue to enjoin an impending retaliatory action by the landlord, and for a declaration that such action is unlawful. See Aweeka v Bonds (1971) 20 CA3d 278, 97 CR 650. See also Atkisson v Kern County Hous. Auth. (1976) 59 CA3d 89, 130 CR 375.

Note, however, that a tenant whose claim is based solely on the U.S. Constitution probably cannot sue to enjoin the landlord's termination of the tenancy because there had been no "state action" at the point that the termination notice was served (see §8.127). Newby v Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 CA3d 288, 131 CR 547.

In Hernandez v Stabach (1983) 145 CA3d 309, 193 CR 350, the court upheld an injunction against the landlord's filing of any unlawful detainer action without a showing of good cause. The court held that the landlord's practice of renting to families knowing that they would overcrowd the apartments, and then evicting them for overcrowding when they sought to organize other tenants and assert their right to the repair-and-deduct remedy (see §§3.12-3.15), constituted retaliation under CC §1942.5(a). For other cases approving injunctive relief against unlawful detainer actions, see Byrne v Baker (1963) 221 CA2d 1, 7, 34 CR 178; Dennis v Overholtzer (1957) 149 CA2d 101, 307 P2d 1012.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.135 c. Action for Damages

A tenant may sue for actual and punitive damages for the landlord's retaliatory conduct. Aweeka v Bonds (1971) 20 CA3d 278, 97 CR 650. If the landlord's act is covered by CC §1942.5, then the tenant may recover damages as set out in CC §1942.5(f)-(g). See §8.116. (Because CC §1942.5(h) provides that the remedies in CC §1942.5 are not exclusive, the tenant might invoke the decision in Aweeka and attempt to recover punitive damages beyond the $2000 permitted by CC §1942.5(f). See §8.117. But see De Anza Santa Cruz Mobile Estates Homeowners Ass'n v De Anza Santa Cruz Mobile Estates (2001) 94 CA4th 890, 114 CR2d 708.) While a jury may consider the fact that a defendant harmed nonparties in determining the reprehensibility of defendant's conduct, it may not consider the injuries to nonparties when setting the amount of punitive damages. Because such nonparties are not before the court, their injuries are speculative; allowing the jury to consider them would deny the defendant due process. Philip Morris USA v Williams (2007) 549 US 346, 166 L Ed 2d 940, 127 S Ct 1057.

Damages for violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) are discussed in §§2.58, 8.121.

§8.136 4. Beyond Retaliatory Eviction: Good Cause to Evict

California presently has no good-cause requirement applicable to tenants in general. Because the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) forbids "arbitrary" discriminatory conduct (see §8.119), however, tenant advocates argue that a logical extension of this concept would be a rule that a landlord must show "good cause" in order to evict a tenant (or to terminate a month-to-month tenancy, or to refuse to renew a lease). "Good cause" might be found, for example, if the tenant failed to pay rent or breached some other term of the lease, or if the landlord intends to occupy the rental unit. Landlord advocates would, on the other hand, argue that good cause requirements constitute an unlawful taking of their property without just compensation and deny their right to due process and equal protection under the law, and that requiring good cause not to renew a periodic tenancy or lease would drastically alter the foundations of landlord-tenant law.

California has enacted good-cause requirements protecting owners of mobilehomes being evicted from mobilehome parks (CC §§798.55-798.56) and filling-station lessees (Bus & P C §20999.1; CCP §1174(a); see §6.68; see also E. S. Bills, Inc. v Tzucanow (1985) 38 C3d 824, 215 CR 278). In addition, most tenants in public housing and government-subsidized housing cannot be evicted without good cause.

Some California cities have enacted local rent control laws that require landlords to show good cause to evict. See also §§8.126, 7.54-7.76. For discussion of good cause to evict, see Blumberg & Robbins, Beyond URLTA: A Program for Achieving Real Tenant Goals, 11 Harv CR-CL L Rev 1 (1976).

§8.137 B. "Self-Help" Not Permitted

Case law clearly establishes that landlords may not use "self-help" to recover possession of real property. Daluiso v Boone (1969) 71 C2d 484, 499, 78 CR 707. Landlords are afforded the rights and remedies provided by the unlawful detainer statutes in place of a common-law right to use "self-help" to evict the tenant. Superior Motels, Inc. v Rinn Motor Hotels, Inc. (1987) 195 CA3d 1032, 1066, 241 CR 487. The summary remedy of an unlawful detainer lawsuit "is a complete answer to any claim that self-help is necessary." Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 604, 12 CR 488. In Stone v Center Trust Retail Props., Inc. (2008) 163 CA4th 608, 77 CR3d 556 (discussed in §§3.68C, 13.33D), the court stated: "Unlawful detainer actions substitute for a landlord's self-help to avoid, in part, the conflict and possible violence of a landlord trying on its own initiative to physically evict a defaulting tenant." 163 CA4th at 613.

Society will tolerate a forcible eviction only when it is both necessary and judicially authorized, i.e., when the eviction is carried out by a marshal under a writ of possession issued on a valid judgment. Bedi v McMullan (1984) 160 CA3d 272, 206 CR 578. When the tenant has abandoned the premises, however, the landlord may use self-help to retake possession (see §§8.8-8.16). Kassan v Stout (1973) 9 C3d 39, 106 CR 783; Martin v Cassidy (1957) 149 CA2d 106, 307 P2d 981.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords' attorneys must counsel their clients carefully concerning the possible pitfalls of self-help evictions. Problems frequently arise in "gray areas," e.g., when it is unclear whether the tenant abandoned the premises (see §§8.8-8.16), or when it is unclear whether an occupant is a "tenant" and thus subject to landlord-tenant law generally (see §§1.3-1.7, 8.83-8.84). Whenever there is doubt, the landlord should be advised to exercise caution by strictly following the statutory abandonment procedures for terminating the tenancy. See §§8.8-8.16.

An occupant who is in peaceable possession of the premises—even after the tenancy has been terminated—enjoys the protections of CC §1954 (limiting situations in which a landlord may enter a dwelling unit) and §789.3 (preventing a landlord from engaging in self-help). In Spinks v Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments (2009) 171 CA4th 1004, 90 CR3d 453, the occupant's employer rented an apartment and identified the occupant by name. Her employment agreement provided that she would vacate after her temporary assignment ended. Because of an injury, the occupant was unable to complete her assignment. The employer told her to vacate and then requested that the landlord change the locks. The landlord notified the occupant that the locks would be changed and thereafter changed the locks. The court held that CC §1954 is intended to protect people who are actually living in the dwelling—even though it seemed that the tenancy had been validly terminated by the occupant's employer. 171 CA4th at 1050. Also, CC §789.3 is broad and protects such an occupant from landlord's self-help. 171 CA4th at 1050. See §8.148.

If the landlord uses self-help to terminate the tenancy, several remedies are available to the tenant. The tenant may seek restitution of the premises and damages by bringing an action for forcible entry, forcible detainer, or both (see §§8.138-8.146). The tenant may also invoke remedies for wrongful termination by bringing an action under CC §789.3 (see §§8.147-8.149), suing for the tort of wrongful eviction (see §8.150), or seeking criminal prosecution of the landlord (see §8.152). A landlord's improper use of the police to effect eviction was held to show sufficient "state action" to allow the tenants to bring an action under 42 USC §1983 in Howerton v Gabica (9th Cir 1983) 708 F2d 380. See Depriest, Self-Help Evictions, 25 Clearinghouse Rev 798 (1991). Strategies for dealing with self-help terminations are discussed in §§5.20-5.23, 8.153.

§8.138 1. Forcible Entry and Detainer

In CCP §§1159-1160, the legislature provided tenants with causes of action for restitution of the premises and damages for the landlord's "self-help" efforts to recover possession of the premises. According to the court in Daluiso v Boone (1969) 71 C2d 484, 495, 78 CR 707 (quoting from San Francisco & Suburban Home Bldg. Soc'y v Leonard (1911) 17 CA 254, 262, 119 P 405), the purpose of these statutes is > to secure a judicial adjustment of differences [concerning the right to possession of real property,] and thus prevent the parties themselves from redressing or attempting to redress their own wrongs which is likely to lead to serious wrongs against the public or society.

See also Bedi v McMullan (1984) 160 CA3d 272, 206 CR 578 (forcible entry and detainer statutes designed to ensure that the only forcible evictions carried out are those that are necessary and judicially authorized). For a case distinguishing Bedi v McMullan, supra, see Glass v Najafi (2000) 78 CA4th 45, 92 CR2d 606 (landlord who evicts tenant under writ of possession that is later found invalid is not liable for forcible entry and detainer).

PRACTICE TIP: The statutes and the cases interpreting them express a strong public policy in favor of legal resolution of landlord-tenant disputes and against self-help measures that may unfairly cut off the tenant's legal rights or result in violence. Landlords' attorneys should ensure that their clients are aware of this policy so as to avoid liability for using self-help measures.

a. Elements of Cause of Action

(1) Forcible Entry

§8.139 (a) Tenant's Possession Prerequisite

The tenant must show, and the complaint must allege, that he or she was in actual peaceable possession of the premises at the time of the landlord's entry. CCP §1172; Knowles v Crocker Estate Co. (1899) 125 C 264, 57 P 998; Shusett, Inc. v Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1964) 231 CA2d 146, 154, 41 CR 622. To be in "actual possession," the tenant need not be present at the time of the landlord's entry. Karp v Margolis (1958) 159 CA2d 69, 74, 323 P2d 557; Martin v Cassidy (1957) 149 CA2d 106, 307 P2d 981. No particular length of time of possession by the tenant is required; possession for less than a full day has been held sufficient. Highland Park Oil Co. v Western Minerals Co. (1905) 1 CA 340, 82 P 228.

For a forcible entry action to lie, the landlord must take possession away from the tenant. A landlord who simply enters and leaves is guilty of a trespass, but not a forcible entry. Merrill v Forbes (1863) 23 C 379; Davis v Stark (1914) 25 CA 519, 144 P 315. See also Shusett, Inc. v Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1964) 231 CA2d 146, 41 CR 622 (to maintain action for forcible entry, plaintiff must seek possession).

§8.140 (b) Statutory Definitions and Judicial Applications

Under CCP §1159, a person who performs the following acts is guilty of a forcible entry:

- breaks open "doors, windows, or other parts of a house, or by any kind of violence or circumstances of terror enters upon or into real property"; or
- "after entering peaceably upon any real property, turns out by force, threats, or menacing conduct, the party in possession."

Under CCP §1159(2), an entry is "forcible" if the landlord "turns out by force, threats, or menacing conduct, the party in possession"—even if the entry itself is peaceable. Here again, not much of a "threat" by the landlord is required. In Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 607, 12 CR 488, the court held that this element was satisfied when the tenant found her apartment occupied by the landlord's employee, who said, "Get the hell out of here. You're out of this place." The court held that all the tenant must show is a reasonable belief that any attempt to retake possession would have been met by force. Jordan v Talbot, supra.

Some of the language in CCP §1159(1) (e.g., "breaking open doors," "any kind of violence or circumstances of terror") indicates that the word "forcible" should be taken literally. The courts reviewing this issue, however, have not required a showing of violence and terror. In fact, forcible entry and detainer may occur through the legal eviction process even if the sheriff's eviction is based on a writ of possession. Bedi v McMullan (1984) 160 CA3d 272, 206 CR 578. But see Glass v Najafi (2000) 78 CA4th 45, 92 CR2d 606 (no forcible entry and detainer when owner entered under orderly legal process that was later found invalid).

Forcible entries have been found when the landlord:

(a) Entered with a passkey when the tenant was not at home (Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 12 CR 488; Winchester v Becker (1906) 4 CA 382, 88 P 296);

(b) Paid a locksmith to change the locks (Lamey v Masciotra (1969) 273 CA2d 709, 78 CR 344); and

(c) Opened a closed door or window in order to enter (Winchester v Becker, supra).

In view of these cases, and the policy that the availability of an unlawful detainer lawsuit "is a complete answer to any claim that self-help is necessary" (see §8.138; Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 604, 12 CR 488), any entry to take possession might constitute a forcible entry if the landlord could have brought an unlawful detainer action instead and had the marshal execute the judgment under a valid writ. See Young, The Law of Forcible Entry and Detainer in California, 10 Lincoln L Rev 1, 24 (1977).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.141 (2) Forcible Detainer

Under CCP §1160, a person who performs the following acts is guilty of a forcible detainer:

(1) By force, or by menace and threats of violence, unlawfully holds and keeps the possession of any real property, whether it was acquired peaceably or otherwise; or

(2) At night, or during the occupant's absence, unlawfully enters on real property and, after demanding its surrender, refuses to surrender it within 5 days after a demand by the former occupant.

An "occupant" under CCP §1160(2) is one who was in peaceable and undisturbed possession of the property within 5 days preceding the unlawful entry.

The language of CCP §1160(1) is very similar to that of CCP §1159(2). See §§8.139-8.140. In Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 607, 12 CR 488, the court relied on the same statement by the landlord's employee ("Get the hell out of here. You're out of this place") to find violations of both CCP §§1159(2) and 1160(1). In construing §1159(2), the court held that the key issue is whether the tenant reasonably believes that the landlord will use force to keep him or her off the premises. Jordan v Talbot, supra. See also Dickinson v Maguire (1858) 9 C 46. Improper or invalid use of the judicial process to keep the tenant off the premises may constitute a forcible entry and detainer. See Bedi v McMullan (1984) 160 CA3d 272, 206 CR 578. For a case distinguishing Bedi, see Glass v Najafi (2000) 78 CA4th 45, 92 CR2d 606 (landlord who evicts tenant under writ of possession that is later found invalid is not liable for forcible entry and detainer).

If the tenant had the right to possession-but not actual possession-when the landlord entered the property, there might be an advantage to invoking CCP §1160(1) to prove forcible detainer, rather than to invoke CCP §1159(2) to prove forcible entry. Under CCP §1172, the tenant must show "actual possession" to prove forcible entry, but only that he or she was entitled to possession to prove forcible detainer. See, e.g., White v Pfieffer (1913) 165 C 740, 134 P 321.

There appears to be no particular advantage to the tenant's invoking CCP §1160(2), as opposed to §1160(1). Although subsection (2) contains no explicit language requiring a display of "force," the force required under subsection (1) is so minimal that it is usually easy to prove. See Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 608, 12 CR 488. Subsection (2) has the disadvantage of requiring the tenant to wait 5 days after making a demand for possession before filing suit.

For a forcible detainer action to lie, the landlord must actually bar the tenant's possession of the property, not merely trespass on it. Dickinson v Maguire (1858) 9 C 46.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.142 b. Kinds of Occupants Protected

An occupant of real property who is forcibly evicted by the owner may invoke the protection of CCP §§1159 and 1160 (see §§8.139-8.141), whether the occupant is a tenant, an employee, or a licensee. Eichhorn v De La Cantera (1953) 117 CA2d 50, 255 P2d 70. It appears that even the legal tenant's spouse may bring the action if the spouse was in possession at the time of the eviction. 117 CA2d at 52.

Lodgers, boarders, and tenants in certain residential hotels are protected from "self-help" evictions by CCP §1159, which defines the party in possession as "any person who hires real property and includes a boarder or lodger, except those persons whose occupancy is described in [CC §1940(b)]." See §1.3. Civil Code §1940(b) exempts a person who either (a) maintains transient occupancy, in a hotel, time-share, or other facility, subject to the hotel tax under Rev & T C §7280, or (b) has not made valid payment for all room and other related charges owing as of the last day on which the occupancy is or would be subject to that tax, or who (c) maintains occupancy in a hotel where the management retains a right to enter and control the rooms, and offers all the following services to every resident: facilities for safeguarding personal property; central telephone service; maid, mail, and room services; occupancy for fewer than 7 days; and food service meeting specified requirements. Landlords may use the unlawful detainer procedure to evict the protected categories of tenants, lodgers, boarders, and residential hotel tenants. "Tenant" for this purpose is defined as "any person who hires real property except those persons whose occupancy is described in [CC §1940(b)]." CCP §1161.

Commercial tenants as well as residential tenants may invoke CCP §§1159 and 1160, even though CCP §1159(1) refers to a "house." Karp v Margolis (1958) 159 CA2d 69, 73, 323 P2d 557.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.143 c. Affirmative Defenses

The landlord may deny any of the material allegations of the complaint and thus put at issue the factual question of whether a forcible entry or detainer occurred. Otherwise, only two affirmative defenses appear to be available: abandonment by the tenant (see §§8.8-8.16) and the 1-year statute of limitations in CCP §1172, which provides that the landlord may defend against the proceedings by showing > that he or his ancestors, or those whose interest in such premises he claims, have been in the quiet possession thereof for the space of one whole year… before the commencement of the proceedings, and that his interest therein is not then ended or determined…

Note that the landlord must prove possession for 1 year, not merely title. Karp v Margolis (1958) 159 CA2d 69, 323 P2d 557.

The courts have not authorized any other defenses to actions for forcible entry or detainer. The following proffered defenses have been expressly rejected:

- the landlord's title and right to possession (Daluiso v Boone (1969) 71 C2d 484, 78 CR 707; Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 12 CR 488);
- a lease provision giving the landlord the right to enter on the tenant's breach of the lease (Kassan v Stout (1973) 9 C3d 39, 106 CR 783; Jordan v Talbot, supra); and
- the landlord's entry in order to assert the right to a baggage lien (Jordan v Talbot, supra).

The tenant's breach of the lease or rental agreement does not justify the landlord's use of "self-help" and accordingly is no defense to an action for forcible entry or detainer. This rule applies regardless of the nature of the tenant's breach. For example, tenants' lawsuits have been upheld when the tenant's breach involved nonpayment of rent (Jordan v Talbot, supra), an unauthorized assignment of the lease (Kassan v Stout, supra), and changing the locks (Eichhorn v De La Cantera (1953) 117 CA2d 50, 255 P2d 70).

§8.144 d. Remedies

A tenant who prevails in an action for forcible entry or detainer is entitled to possession of the premises. CCP §1174(a). Damages may not be awarded unless the tenant recovers possession of the premises. Brawley v Risdon Iron Works (1869) 38 C 676; Edwards v Bodkin (1919) 43 CA 405, 185 P 423.

When the tenant recovers possession, actual damages caused by the forcible entry or detainer may also be recovered. CCP §1174(b). Recoverable damages include "any damage that was the natural and proximate consequence" of the entry or detainer. San Francisco & Suburban Home Bldg. Soc'y v Leonard (1911) 17 CA 254, 266, 119 P 405; Karp v Margolis (1958) 159 CA2d 69, 323 P2d 557. In dictum, these cases indicate that the award may include damages for loss of use of personal property left on the premises (Karp v Margolis (1958) 159 CA2d 69, 76, 323 P2d 557) and for various business expenses caused by the entry or detainer (San Francisco & Suburban Home Bldg. Soc'y v Leonard (1911) 17 CA 254, 265, 119 P 405). Although no reported case has decided this issue, a displaced tenant may be able to recover hotel or other housing expense incurred during the time of dispossession if it is greater than the rental value of the premises, but not both. Loss of reasonable rental value may alternatively be recovered, although the amount must be subtracted from any unpaid rent covering the detention period (to prevent double recovery). Karp v Margolis (1958) 159 CA2d 69, 75, 323 P2d 557.

Although the fact that the landlord has title to the property is not a defense to a forcible entry and detainer action (see §8.143), evidence of the landlord's title may be admitted on the issue of the extent of the tenant's damages. See Karp v Margolis, supra. See also Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 603 n3, 12 CR 488.

The tenant's discomfort, annoyance, and mental distress also seem to be elements of actual damages that may be recovered for a forcible entry or detainer of residential property. Although no reported California case discusses this issue, such damages are natural and proximate consequences of the usual residential "self-help" eviction. See §8.150 for discussion of similar damages in actions for the tort of wrongful eviction. See also Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194.

A tenant who fails to prove any actual damages nevertheless may be awarded nominal damages. Karp v Margolis, supra; Pacific States Auxilary Corp. v Farris (1931) 118 CA 522, 5 P2d 452. Nominal damages might support an award of punitive damages and attorney fees, in appropriate cases. See §§3.40-3.41, 13.40.

A tenant who proves the landlord's "malice" may be awarded actual damages and statutory damages of up to $600 (formerly treble damages). CCP §1174(b); Daluiso v Boone (1969) 71 C2d 484, 78 CR 707. To support a claim for statutory damages, the complaint must allege facts constituting malice (i.e., that dispossession of the tenant was intentional, as opposed to negligent or mistaken); a mere conclusory allegation of malice is insufficient. Cyrus v Haveson (1976) 65 CA3d 306, 317, 135 CR 246. Evidence of the landlord's title is admissible "[f]or the limited purpose of assisting the [factfinder] in exercising its discretion to treble the damages…." Karp v Margolis, supra; see Jordan v Talbot, supra.

§8.145 e. Procedure

The forcible entry and detainer statutes are part of the same chapter of the Code of Civil Procedure as the unlawful detainer statutes, and the procedure is essentially the same for both. (On unlawful detainer procedure, see chaps 9-13.)

Like unlawful detainer, forcible entry and forcible detainer are summary proceedings. Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 604, 12 CR 488. See also Daluiso v Boone (1969) 71 C2d 484, 78 CR 707. The statutes (CCP §§1159-1160) are strictly construed (House v Keiser (1857) 8 C 499; Chase v Peters (1918) 37 CA 358, 174 P 116), and the tenant must comply strictly with their requirements (Castro v Tewksbury (1886) 69 C 562, 11 P 339; Hoag v Pierce (1865) 28 C 187; House v Keiser, supra). The complaint must be verified and, effective January 1, 2005, include the typed or printed name of the person verifying the complaint. CCP §1166(a)(1).

Like the tenant in an unlawful detainer action, the landlord must respond within 5 days to a forcible detainer summons (CCP §1167), and like an unlawful detainer action, forcible detainer has precedence over other civil actions (CCP §1179a). No cross-complaints are allowed. Schubert v Lowe (1924) 193 C 291, 223 P 550; Warburton v Doble (1869) 38 C 619.

An unlawful detainer complaint may not include other causes of action; because the relief sought is prompt recovery of possession of the property, the action therefore must be summary. Vasey v California Dance Co. (1977) 70 CA3d 742, 746, 139 CR 72. Although there is no reported case law on point, the same rationale should apply to forcible entry and detainer actions because they also seek recovery of possession of the property.

9. Defendants' actions were committed intentionally, with full knowledge that defendants were forcibly entering and dispossessing plaintiff. Therefore, defendants' acts were committed with malice, and the damages alleged in paragraphs 6 through 8 should be supplemented by statutory damages under Code of Civil Procedure §1174(b).

10. On or about _ _[date]_ _, plaintiff and defendant, _ _[name]_ _ entered into a written rental agreement that provided that defendants could recover attorney fees if legal action were necessary to enforce the terms of the rental agreement. Under such a provision, plaintiff is entitled to recover attorney fees under Civil Code §1717 if _ _[he/she]_ _ is the prevailing party in this action.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION

1. Plaintiff incorporates by reference paragraphs 1 through 3 and 6 through 10 of the First Cause of Action.

2. On or about _ _[date]_ _, without plaintiff's consent, defendants entered and took possession of the premises.

3. Defendants forcibly prevented plaintiff from regaining possession of the premises by the following means: _ _[specify facts demonstrating defendants' commission of forcible detainer under CCP §1160]_ _. _ _[Add, if applicable, circumstances of fraud, force, or violence that may have accompanied the forcible detainer and resulting damages; see CCP §1166(b)]_ _.

4. Defendants have continued in possession of the premises to the date on which this complaint was filed, without plaintiff's consent.

5. Defendants' actions were committed intentionally, with full knowledge that defendants were forcibly entering and dispossessing plaintiff. Therefore, defendants' acts were committed with malice, and the damages incurred by plaintiff should be supplemented by statutory damages under Code of Civil Procedure §1174(b).

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays for judgment as follows:

1. For possession of the premises.

2. For damages of:

a. $_ _[amount]_ _ per day for each day defendants have continued in possession of the premises, until judgment is entered;

b. $_ _[amount]_ _ per day for each day defendants have prevented plaintiff from using plaintiff's personal property, until judgment is entered; and

c. $_ _[amount]_ _ for plaintiff's mental distress, discomfort, and annoyance.

3. For statutory damages.

4. For reasonable attorney fees.

5. For costs of this action.

6. For further relief that the Court considers just and proper.

Comment: A complaint for forcible entry and detainer must be verified including the typed or printed name of the person verifying it. CCP §1166(a)(1). The facts usually give rise to causes of action that can be pleaded for both forcible entry (CCP §1159) and forcible detainer (CCP §1160). See §8.138. The attorney preparing the complaint should allege, in as much detail as possible, facts indicating the manner in which the landlord was guilty of forcible entry, forcible detainer, or both, following the elements of the cause of action and allowable damages set forth in CCP §§1159-1160, 1166, 1174. See §§8.139-8.141.

2. Denial of Tenant's Use of, or Access to, Premises

§8.147 a. Utility Cutoffs

By cutting off utility service to the premises, with the intention of denying the tenant use of the premises and thus terminating the tenancy, the landlord may have committed a violation of CC §789.3(a), which provides:

> A landlord shall not with intent to terminate the occupancy under any lease or other tenancy or estate at will, however created, of property used by a tenant as his residence willfully cause, directly or indirectly, the interruption or termination of any utility service furnished the tenant, including, but not limited to, water, heat, light, electricity, gas, telephone, elevator, or refrigeration, whether or not the utility service is under the control of the landlord.

Note that under §789.3(a), it must be proved that the landlord caused the utility service to be cut off "with intent to terminate the occupancy." Although it may be difficult to obtain direct evidence of the landlord's subjective intent, an intent to terminate might be inferred if the landlord knows that absence of the utility will make the premises uninhabitable. Civil Code §789.3(a) also forbids the landlord to interrupt or terminate the utility service "directly or indirectly." Thus, the landlord should be liable if he or she indirectly causes the cutoff by failing to pay the utility bill (if this is done with intent to terminate the occupancy). See Kinney v Vaccari (1980) 27 C3d 348, 165 CR 787. On remedies for violation of §789.3(a), see §8.149.

A landlord's direct interference with utility equipment may constitute criminal conduct. See Pen C §591.

In O'Neal v City of Seattle (9th Cir 1995) 66 F3d 1064, the court held that a city policy of denying water service to a new tenant because of a previous tenant's unpaid water bill denied the new tenant equal protection of the laws.

§8.148 b. Access to Premises; Removal of Personal Property

Under CC §789.3(b), a landlord who does any of the following acts with intent to terminate the tenant's occupancy may incur liability:

- prevents the tenant from gaining reasonable access to the property by changing the locks or using a bootlock or any similar method or device;
- removes the outside doors or windows;
- removes from the premises the tenant's personal property, furnishings, or any other item without the tenant's prior written consent, except when the tenant has abandoned the premises.

Spinks v Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments (2009) 171 CA4th 1004, 90 CR3d 453; Tooke v Allen (1948) 85 CA2d 230, 192 P2d 804. (See §§8.8-8.16 on abandonment.)

Nothing in CC §789.3(b) prohibits the tenant's lawful eviction by legal authorities, and the subsection does not apply to hotel occupancies as defined in CC §1940(b) (see §8.83).

Regarding removal of personal property, note that CC §1861a gives an apartment-house landlord a lien on the tenant's baggage and other property. This lien seldom permits the landlord to take possession of the tenant's personal property, however, because (a) the lien is subject to numerous exemptions (see §8.161); and (b) the landlord may take possession of nonexempt property only after final judgment in an action for the rent, or under an interim court order obtained after service of a 10-day notice of motion on the tenant showing that the property is "about to be destroyed, substantially devalued, or removed from the premises." CC §1861a. If the affidavit is true, the tenant will probably remove the property as soon as he or she reads the notice, thus mooting the motion. To counter such removal, the landlord's attorney might attempt to obtain a temporary restraining order to be served with the motion.

§8.149 c. Remedies Under CC §789.3

If the landlord violates either CC §789.3(a) (see §8.147) or §789.3(b) (see §8.148), the tenant may recover one or more of the following:

- actual damages;
- up to $100 for each day that the landlord violates CC §789.3, but not less than $250 for each separate cause of action, and subsequent or repeated violations being treated as separate causes of action subject to separate awards of damages;
- attorney fees; or
- injunctive relief.

Those remedies are not exclusive and do not prohibit the tenant from pursuing any other legal remedies. CC §789.3(c)-(d). See Spinks v Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments (2009) 171 CA4th 1004, 90 CR3d 453.

The tenant may alternatively have a common law tort cause of action against a landlord who discontinues utility service. See Jones v Kelly (1929) 208 C 251, 280 P 942; Tooke v Allen (1948) 85 CA2d 230, 192 P2d 804. Punitive damages (not affected by the limits of CC §789.3(c)) may be recoverable in such an action. See Kinney v Vaccari (1980) 27 C3d 348, 165 CR 787.

In Hale v Morgan (1978) 22 C3d 388, 149 CR 375, the court held that a mandatory $100-per-day penalty (provided by CC §789.3 at that time) was not itself unconstitutional, but that the penalty awarded to the tenant was so large that the landlord was denied due process. The court noted that the landlord's trailer park was "a modest operation by a relatively unsophisticated landlord" and, although the monthly rent was only $65, the penalty awarded was $17,300 ($100 for each of the 173 days that the water and electricity were cut off), an award the court characterized as "confiscatory." 22 C3d at 405.

In Kinney v Vaccari (1980) 27 C3d 348, 165 CR 787, in which the landlord discontinued utility service to families living in six cabins for 2 months, the court upheld an award under CC §789.3 of $7901 in compensatory damages, $36,000 in penalties ($100 per cabin per day for 60 days), and $1750 in punitive damages. In upholding the statutory awards, the court relied primarily on the landlord's egregious conduct and the tenants' efforts to mitigate and to seek judicial relief promptly. The court rejected the tenants' argument that each individual tenant (as opposed to each tenant-family) should be entitled to recover the $100-per-day penalty. 27 C3d at 357.

Hale and Kinney are discussed in City & County of San Francisco v Sainez (2000) 77 CA4th 1302, 92 CR2d 418.

In Camacho v Schaefer (1987) 193 CA3d 718, 238 CR 609, the court considered the effect of a fee agreement between tenants and their attorney on the landlord's liability for fees under CC §789.3(d). The trial court awarded $15,600 in statutory, compensatory, and punitive damages. The court also awarded the tenants $17,500 in attorney fees under the statute. The tenants' agreement with their attorney had provided that if attorney fees were awarded under CC §789.3, the attorney would accept that as full payment; otherwise, the attorney would receive 25 percent of any recovery. On appeal, the landlord argued that attorney fees should be limited to 25 percent of $15,600. The court of appeal rejected this contention, holding that, when making an award of reasonable attorney fees under §789.3, the fact that the attorney worked under a contingent fee agreement is relevant but not necessarily controlling.

§8.149A d. Remedies Under Public Utilities Code and CC §1942.2

If a corporation, public utility, or publicly owned utility provides electricity, gas, heat, or water through individual metering to residential occupants of a detached single-family dwelling, a multiunit residential structure, mobilehome park, or permanent residential structures in a labor camp, and the owner, manager, or operator is listed by the utility provider as the customer of record, the provider is required to make a good faith effort to inform the residential occupants, by means of a 10-day notice, when the account is in arrears and that the utility service will be terminated. See Pub Util C §§777, 10009, 12822, 16481. When utility service is provided through master metering, a 15-day notice is required. See Pub Util C §§777.1, 10009.1, 12822.1, 16481.1. These notices must be written in English, Spanish, Chinese, Tagalog, Vietnamese, and Korean.

These utility laws also provide procedures by which those residential occupants may become customers of the provider. For example, if one or more of the residential occupants are willing and able to assume responsibility for the entire account to the satisfaction of the provider, the electrical, gas, heat, or water provider is required to make service available to the residential occupants. After a residential occupant becomes a customer of the utility provider, if the periodic payments due to the landlord, such as rental payments, include charges for residential electrical, gas, heat, or water service, when those charges are not separately stated, these utility laws allow the occupant to deduct the utility payment from the periodic payment due to the landlord.

Civil Code §1942.2 further authorizes a tenant or occupant who has made a payment for utility service under these public utility laws to a corporation, a public utility, or a publicly owned utility to deduct the amount of the payment from the rent when due.

§8.150 3. Suit for Tort of "Wrongful Eviction"

Forcible entry and forcible detainer (see §§8.138-8.146) are remedies designed to restore the tenant to possession of the premises, and thus are not available when the tenant does not seek to recover possession. In this situation, however, the tenant may sue for damages for the tort of "wrongful eviction." See Richardson v Pridmore (1950) 97 CA2d 124, 217 P2d 113; Spinks v Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments (2009) 171 CA4th 1004, 90 CR3d 453; Emden v Vitz (1948) 88 CA2d 313, 198 P2d 696. See also Daluiso v Boone (1969) 71 C2d 484, 78 CR 707 (forcible entry and detainer action).

Although the cases cited above involved substantial physical intrusions by the landlord, wrongful eviction can be found merely in the landlord's improper use of the legal system to evict the tenant. Landlords' attempts to evade additional eviction controls imposed by local rent control ordinances are prime examples of an area in which a wrongful eviction action might arise. On eviction control provisions, see §§7.54-7.76. In Zimmerman v Stotter (1984) 160 CA3d 1067, 207 CR 108, the landlord served the tenants with 30-day notices to quit on the ground that she intended to put relatives in the units as permitted by the Los Angeles rent control ordinance. After the landlord proceeded to judgment and had the tenants evicted, the units were placed back on the rental market at various times without ever being occupied by the landlord's relatives. The court held that the tenant had stated a cause of action for wrongful eviction. Although the landlord's good faith in complying with the rent control ordinance was res judicata at the time judgment was entered, the tenants were entitled to challenge her good faith in obtaining the writ and evicting them 2 weeks later. 160 CA3d at 1074.

The holding in Zimmerman seems to go further than that in Asell v Rodrigues (1973) 32 CA3d 817, 108 CR 566. In Asell, the court suggested that, when the landlord merely served a notice to quit rather than physically intruding on the premises, a cause of action for wrongful eviction would lie only if the complaint alleged malice in service of the notice. 32 CA3d at 825. The court did not seem to require malice in Zimmerman v Stotter, supra. See also Bedi v McMullan (1984) 160 CA3d 272, 206 CR 578 (forcible entry and detainer lie when landlord merely uses invalid writ to evict tenant, rather than physically intruding); Aweeka v Bonds (1971) 20 CA3d 278, 97 CR 650 (tenant may recover for retaliatory eviction when alleged conduct was retaliatory service of rent increase notice); Tranchina v Arcinas (1947) 78 CA2d 522, 178 P2d 65 (landlord committed abuse of process by (1) obtaining Office of Price Administration certificate to evict in order to occupy premises himself, (2) successfully suing to evict, and (3) renting premises instead of occupying them).

A tenant who proves a wrongful eviction may recover damages for all injuries to his or her person or property that are the natural and proximate result of the eviction. Daluiso v Boone (1969) 71 C2d 484, 498, 78 CR 707. This may include damages for mental distress. Spinks v Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments (2009) 171 CA4th 1004, 90 CR3d 453; Richardson v Pridmore (1950) 97 CA2d 124, 129, 217 P2d 113. See also Anno, 6 ALR4th 528 (1981).

Damages may also be allowed for personal injuries (Goldman v House (1949) 93 CA2d 572, 209 P2d 639) and amounts advanced for future rent (Johnson v Snyder (1950) 99 CA2d 86, 221 P2d 164). When malice is proved, punitive damages may also be recovered. Tooke v Allen (1948) 85 CA2d 230, 192 P2d 804. While a jury may consider the fact that a defendant harmed nonparties in determining the reprehensibility of defendant's conduct, it may not consider the injuries to nonparties when setting the amount of punitive damages. Because such nonparties are not before the court, their injuries are speculative; allowing the jury to consider them would deny the defendant due process. Philip Morris USA v Williams (2007) 549 US 346, 166 L Ed 2d 940, 127 S Ct 1057.

PRACTICE TIP: Some wrongful eviction suits will be defended and ultimately covered by the landlord's insurance policy. See Gerchick, Reader Alert: Insurance Coverage for Constructive Eviction, 21 Cal Real Prop J 22 (Summer 2003). Others will not. See Swain v California Cas. Ins. Co. (2002) 99 CA4th 1, 120 CR2d 808, and cases cited in Swain. Note: Insurance policies vary and coverage terms often change on policy renewal.

§8.150A 4. Anti-Harassment Statute (CC §1940.2)

If the tenant has been harassed or the landlord has interfered with the tenant's quiet enjoyment of the premises, but the tenant has not been dispossessed, CC §1940.2 gives a tenant additional remedies for wrongful and illegal acts committed by a landlord for the purpose of influencing the tenant to vacate the dwelling. Prohibited acts under CC §1940.2(a) include:

- Theft or extortion as defined in Pen C §§484(a), 518.
- The use, or threatened use, of force, threats, or menacing conduct constituting a course of conduct that interferes with the tenant's right to quiet enjoyment of the premises that would create an apprehension of harm in a reasonable person.
- A significant and intentional violation of CC §1954.

The aggrieved tenant is entitled to a civil penalty of not more than $2000 for each act. CC §1940.2(b).

Section 1940.2 does not prohibit certain warning notices, explanations, and legally authorized acts of the landlord:

- A landlord may give an oral or written warning notice, in good faith, regarding conduct by a tenant, occupant, or guest that violates, may violate, or violated the applicable rental agreement, rules, regulations, lease, or laws. CC §1940.2(c).
- A landlord may give an oral or written explanation of the rental agreement, rules, regulations, lease, or laws in the normal course of business. CC §1940.2(c).

Section 1940.2 is not intended to enlarge or diminish (a) a landlord's right to terminate a tenancy under existing state or local law or (b) any ability of local government to regulate or enforce a prohibition against a landlord harassing a tenant. CC §1940.2(d).

§8.151 5. Other Injuries to Premises; Common Law Remedies

A landlord who renders the premises unsuitable for habitation may be liable to the tenant for damages, regardless of whether the tenant can show that the landlord's intention was to evict. Farvour v Geltis (1949) 91 CA2d 603, 205 P2d 424. In Farvour, a person purporting to act on behalf of the landlord removed several doors and windows from the tenant's apartment. They were not replaced until after the action was filed, despite notice from the health department. The court granted compensatory and punitive damages against both the landlord and the remover, holding that the landlord had ratified the remover's action by failing to replace the doors and windows after notice. No proof was necessary that the landlord had ordered the removal. The court did not discuss whether the landlord's motivation was an attempt to evict.

When such acts are motivated by an intent to force the tenant to vacate, a cause of action against the landlord clearly lies. Tooke v Allen (1948) 85 CA2d 230, 192 P2d 804. Such acts might also constitute a breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment (see §§3.5-3.7), or of the implied warranty of habitability (see §§3.16-3.48), or may be actionable under CC §789.3(b)(2) or §1940.2 (see §§8.148, 8.150A). On remedies available to commercial tenants, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§19.11-19.19 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

§8.152 6. Criminal Prosecution

As originally enacted, the forcible entry and detainer statutes (CCP §§1159-1160; see §§8.138-8.146) provided for criminal penalties. See Young, The Law of Forcible Entry and Detainer in California, 10 Lincoln L Rev 1 (1977). (Note that CCP §§1159 and 1160 still refer to a person who is "guilty" of forcible entry or forcible detainer.) In 1872, these criminal sanctions were moved from CCP §§1159-1160 to Pen C §418, which provides:

> Every person using or procuring, encouraging or assisting another to use, any force or violence in entering upon or detaining any lands or other possessions of another, except in the cases and in the manner allowed by law, is guilty of a misdemeanor.

Some language of the statute ("entering upon… any lands… of another") might cast doubt that it was meant to apply to landlords, but the supreme court suggested otherwise in Daluiso v Boone (1969) 71 C2d 484, 499, 78 CR 707.

In 1961, Pen C §418 was supplemented by Pen C §602.5, which specifically applies to dwelling houses and apartments:

> Every person other than a public officer or employee acting within the course and scope of his employment in performance of a duty imposed by law, who enters or remains in any noncommercial dwelling house, apartment, or other such place without consent of the owner, his agent, or the person in lawful possession thereof, is guilty of a misdemeanor.

The phrase "without consent of the owner" creates a problem in applying this statute to landlords. Is the landlord's own consent a defense to prosecution under this section, or must "the person in lawful possession" (in most cases, the tenant) also consent? This issue has not been discussed in any reported case.

§8.153 C. Strategy on "Self-Help" Evictions

Five sources of law relating to "self-help" evictions have been discussed in the preceding sections: forcible entry and detainer (see §§8.138-8.146), CC §789.3 (see §§8.147-8.149), CC §1940.2 (see §8.150A), common law torts (see §§8.150-8.151), and criminal prosecution (see §8.152). Because each of these potential remedies has its advantages, the tenant's attorney should consider carefully which one or combination of remedies best fits the circumstances of the case and the client's needs. See discussion in §§5.20-5.23. The landlord's attorney should be aware of the problems that each remedy poses for the client, and of possible ways to combat the tenant's action.

X. EFFECTS OF TERMINATION

A. Tenant's Personal Property

§8.154 1. Statutory Requirements After Unlawful Detainer, Abandonment, or Vacation by Tenant

If a tenant leaves personal property on the premises after the tenancy is terminated, or if a tenant otherwise vacates the premises, the landlord must comply with statutory procedural requirements in disposing the tenant's personal property. CCP §1174(e)-(l); CC §§1980-1991 (residential tenancy), §§1993-1993.09 (commercial tenancy). If the personal property consists of records as defined in CC §§1980(e) and 1993(f), the tenant is presumed to be the owner of the records. CC §§1983(a), 1993.03(a).

A landlord may be liable for conversion if he or she enters the premises wrongfully and holds the tenant's personal property (see Gilbert v Peck (1912) 162 C 54, 121 P 315; Eichhorn v De La Cantera (1953) 117 CA2d 50, 255 P2d 70) or enters the premises lawfully but takes possession of the tenant's property wrongfully (Gruber v Pacific States Sav. & Loan Co. (1939) 13 C2d 144, 88 P2d 137).

When the tenant leaves personal property on the premises after the tenancy has been terminated (i.e., by vacating after service of a notice to quit, after entry of an unlawful detainer judgment, or after actual eviction by a sheriff or marshal under a writ), the landlord may dispose of it either as lost property or as abandoned property. CCP §1174(e); CC §§1982, 1993.01. For purposes of the discussion in §§8.155-8.160, counsel should remember that, if the tenant was evicted by an unlawful detainer action, the procedures are governed by both CCP §1174 and CC §§1980-1993.09; if the tenant vacated voluntarily or abandoned the premises, the procedures are governed by CC §§1980-1993.09. These procedures are complementary for the most part, and counsel should have no difficulty determining the applicable requirements.

If the landlord believes that the property is lost, he or she must deliver it to the local police or sheriff under CC §§2080-2080.9. CCP §1174; CC §§1982(a), 1993.01. If the appropriate authorities refuse to accept the property as lost, the landlord may proceed with the statutory procedures for disposing of abandoned property (CC §§1980-1993.09). CCP §1174; CC §§1982(b), 1993.01.

Under CC §1965, when the tenant vacates the premises, the landlord must surrender personal property left by the tenant on receipt of a written request from the tenant within 18 days after the tenant vacates. The tenant must tender the landlord's removal and storage costs.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.155 a. Landlord Must Store Tenant's Property

In handling the tenant's property as abandoned property, the first step is for the landlord to store it in a safe place. CCP §1174(g); CC §§1986, 1993.06. The storage place may be on the premises, but presumably the landlord will want to remove the property in order to relet the unit. If space is not available on the premises, the landlord should place the property under lock and key in a suitable safe location. In order to avoid later disputes, the landlord should make an inventory of the tenant's property, witnessed by a disinterested person.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.156 b. Notice to Tenant Required

In cases of abandonment of the premises, the landlord must notify the tenant, and any other person that the landlord reasonably believes to be the owner of the abandoned property, that property has been left on the premises. See §§8.8-8.16. The notification must describe the property, and specify that it must be claimed within 15 days of personal delivery of the notice (or within 18 days of mailing), or the property may be sold at public auction. CCP §1174(f); CC §§1983-1984, 1993.03-1993.04. When the tenancy has been terminated by means of an unlawful detainer action, the writ of possession gives the tenant notice covering the personal property, and the landlord need not give the tenant an additional notice under CC §1983 or §1993.03. CCP §§715.010(b)(3), 1174(f). The notice must advise the addressee that storage charges may be imposed as a condition to return of the property. CC §§1983(b), 1993.03(b).

A separate notice is required if the landlord believes the personal property belongs to a person other than the tenant. The format for notices to tenants and other owners of the personal property is specified in CC §§1984-1985 and 1993.04-1993.05 (see §§8.159-8.160). The notice may be delivered personally or mailed to the last known address of the tenant and any other potential owner. CC §§1983(c), 1993.03(c). The writ of possession (see §13.64) must include notification to the tenant that the landlord will dispose of any personal property remaining on the premises by sale or other disposition if the tenant does not pay the storage costs and take possession of the property within 15 days after the landlord takes possession of the premises. CCP §§715.010(b)(3), 1174(d). Mobilehomes are excluded from the tenant's personal property covered by this notice. CCP §710(b)(3).

Note that the notices required by CCP §1174(f) and CC §1983 or §1993.03, and the notification required in the writ, provide a different starting point for the 15-day period: Under CC §1983 or §1993.03, the starting date is the date of delivery or mailing; for the writ, the starting date is the date that the landlord takes possession (CCP §715.010(b)(3)). To ensure full compliance with the statutes, the landlord should make the date specified in the CC §1983 or §1993.03 notice the operative date because that date almost certainly will be later than the date specified in the writ. If the landlord believes that the tenant has abandoned the premises, as opposed to having been evicted, the notice required by CC §1983 or §1993.03 may be combined with the notice of belief of abandonment required by CC §1951.3 (see §8.10), so that the required 15-day (or 18-day, if mailed) time periods run concurrently. CC §§1991, 1993.09.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.157 c. Return of Property on Payment of Storage Costs

During the 15-day (or 18-day) period during which the tenant may reclaim the property (see §8.156), the landlord may return the property to the tenant or other owner, and require payment of reasonable storage costs as a condition of its release. CCP §1174(h). The landlord may not require that the tenant pay any money judgment that has been entered as a condition to return of the tenant's property. CCP §1174(h); Love v Keays (1971) 6 C3d 339, 98 CR 811; Gray v Whitmore (1971) 17 CA3d 1, 94 CR 904. If the property is returned to the tenant, the landlord is not liable to any other person who may claim a right to it, e.g., a lienor, secured creditor, or person claiming ownership or right to possession of the property. CCP §1174(j). A landlord who has released the property to someone he or she reasonably believes to be its owner is not liable to the tenant or to any other person who received the required notice but may be liable to a person to whom notice was not given if the landlord reasonably should have known of that person's interest in the property and whereabouts. CCP §1174(k).

Under CC §1965, when a tenant vacates the premises, the landlord must surrender personal property left by the tenant on receipt of a written request from the tenant within 18 days after the tenant vacates. The tenant must tender the landlord's removal and storage costs.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.158 d. Disposition of Unclaimed Property

If the property is not claimed and released within the 15-day (or 18-day) period for giving notice under CC §1983 or §1993.03, the landlord may dispose of it under CC §1988 or §1993.07, which essentially provides for the property's sale at public auction if it is worth more than $300. If the notice given to the tenant and other potential owners indicated that the property would be sold if not claimed (see §§8.159-8.160), the landlord still must release the property to the tenant if it is claimed before the sale. If the claim is made after expiration of the 15-day period, the landlord may require payment of reasonable advertising and sale costs in addition to storage costs. CC §§1987(b), 1993.01.

A landlord who reasonably believes that the unreleased property is worth less than $300 (residential) or $750 (commercial) may simply retain it or dispose of it in any manner. CC §§1988(a), 1993.07(a). Otherwise, the property must be sold by competitive bidding at a public auction. CC §§1988(b), 1993.07(b). The notice required by CC §1983 or §1993.03 must state the landlord's intention in this respect. CC §§1984, 1993.04. Notice of the sale must be published in accordance with Govt C §6066, and the landlord's protection against liability extends only to property adequately described in the notice. CC §§1988(b), 1993.07(b). After the sale, the landlord may deduct the costs of storage, advertising, and sale; the balance must be paid to the county treasurer. CC §§1988(c), 1993.07(c). The former tenant or owner of the property may claim the balance within 1 year after it has been paid to the county. CC §§1988(c), 1993.07(c).

When property has been disposed of under CC §1988 or §1993.07, the landlord is not liable to anyone who was given notice under CC §1983 or §1993.03, or to any other person, unless the landlord reasonably should have known of that person's interest in the property and whereabouts. CC §§1989(c), 1993.08(c).

Comment: This form essentially follows that in CC §1984(a). Under CC §1983, the notice must be in "substantially" the format set forth in that subsection. The notice may be delivered personally or sent by mail. See CC §1983(c). The 15-day (or 18-day) period to reclaim the property runs from the date of delivery or mailing, so the applicable date should be inserted when the notice is served. This form may be amended for use in commercial tenancies under CC §§1993-1993.09. See CC §1993.04.

§8.161 2. Enforcement of Landlord's Lien (CC §§1861-1861a)

A lien against the baggage and other personal property of the tenant is available to some residential landlords for charges due for rent and other services. CC §§1861-1861a.

Civil Code §1861 provides a lien to the keepers of hotels, motels, inns, boardinghouses, and lodginghouses. The primary characteristic distinguishing such keepers from ordinary landlords is that the management retains a right to enter and control the rooms without prior judicial approval. CC §1861.1(a). On filing a complaint to recover charges assessed for rent, board, and lodging, the keeper may seek a writ of possession of the property under detailed notice and hearing procedures set forth in CC §§1861.5-1861.13. The keeper may also obtain a temporary restraining order on a showing of immediate danger that the property will be disposed of before the matter can be heard. CC §1861.16. As a condition for obtaining either a temporary restraining order or a writ of possession, the keeper must post an undertaking. CC §1861.21. The legislature enacted these detailed procedural safeguards because of constitutional objections to the earlier version of CC §1861, which authorized the keeper to take possession of the property by "self-help," without notice and a hearing, and to hold the tenant's property for 60 days. Klim v Jones (ND Cal 1970) 315 F Supp 109. See also Mihans v Municipal Court (1970) 7 CA3d 479, 87 CR 17.

Civil Code §1861a makes a lien available to the landlords of furnished and unfurnished apartment houses, apartments, cottages, or bungalow courts. Subject to the limited right to obtain a writ of possession if the property is about to be destroyed or removed, the lien may be enforced only after a final money judgment. CC §1861a. There is no provision for a temporary restraining order, in contrast to the lien provided by CC §1861. A writ of possession requires 10 days' written notice. As noted above, the requirement of notice and a hearing, combined with the exclusion of all statutorily exempt property, probably renders this lien an ineffective tool for most landlords. If a money judgment is obtained, and remains unpaid for 30 days, the landlord may sell the tenant's property at a public auction and apply the proceeds to the judgment and costs of enforcing the lien. CC §1861a.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel for both landlords and tenants should be aware of these statutory liens because one might come into play in a particular case. Landlords do not often invoke the liens, however, apparently for the following reasons:

- The liens do not apply to any of the debtor's property that is exempt from enforcement of a money judgment. Thus, they do not apply to items that most likely would be found on the premises (e.g., household furnishings (CCP §704.020), tools of the tenant's trade or business (CCP §704.060)). Note: §704.060 is amended periodically to raise the exemption amounts.
- Subject to certain limitations regarding the innkeeper's lien (discussed below), prejudgment enforcement of the liens requires notice and a hearing (CC §§1861.5-1861.13, 1861a).
- A prudent tenant probably would remove his or her property from the premises after reading the moving papers. To counter removal, a landlord's attorney might attempt to obtain a temporary restraining order and serve it with the notice of motion.

§8.162 B. Disposition of Fixtures

Unless the lease or rental agreement expressly provides to the contrary, any improvements made to the premises by the tenant become real property and a part of the premises, and thus become the landlord's property at the end of the lease term. Peiser v Mettler (1958) 50 C2d 594, 328 P2d 953; Long v Keller (1980) 104 CA3d 312, 321, 163 CR 532.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.163 1. Rule: Fixtures Are Part of Real Property (CC §1013)

A fixture is an item of personal property that the tenant affixes to the rented premises. See CC §1013. The general rule for fixtures, as for improvements, is that they are considered part of the real property, and thus become the owner's property on expiration of the term of the tenancy. CC §1013. (But see the exceptions to this rule, discussed in §§8.164-8.165.) The parties are free, however, to make any disposition they wish concerning the fixtures. The courts will enforce such provisions, whether they give the landlord title to the fixtures (Wilmerton v Morton (1946) 74 CA2d 891, 169 P2d 992) or give the tenant a reasonable time after expiration of the term to remove the fixtures (United Pac. Ins. Co. v Cann (1954) 129 CA2d 272, 276 P2d 858; Clark v Talmadge (1937) 23 CA2d 703, 74 P2d 825). A tenant who removes fixtures in violation of a lease covenant is liable for damages measured by the fixtures' value as part of the property, and not merely as sold on the open market after removal. Wilmerton v Morton, supra. On negotiating removal of fixtures by tenant when tenancy terminates, see Retail Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 21 (Cal CEB 2007).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.164 2. Tenant's Limited Right to Remove Fixtures (CC §1013.5)

When the lease or rental agreement makes no provision for fixtures, special rules apply to the tenant's right to remove fixtures. If a tenant believes in good faith and under a mistake of law or fact that he or she has a right to install fixtures, then CC §1013.5 permits the tenant to remove them on termination of the tenancy. The tenant must pay the owner (and anyone else with an interest in the land) damages that result from affixing and removing the fixtures. CC §1013.5(a).

Procedures for bringing and litigating an action to enforce the tenant's right to remove fixtures are set forth in CC §1013.5(b)-(d). If the court cannot readily ascertain damages, it may enter an interlocutory judgment authorizing removal on the condition that the tenant pay estimated total damages. CC §1013.5(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.165 3. Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures (CC §1019)

Another exception to the general rule is provided for "trade fixtures," which are defined as "anything affixed [to the premises] for purposes of trade, manufacture, ornament, or domestic use…." CC §1019. The tenant may remove such fixtures any time before expiration of the tenancy if they can be removed without injuring the premises. CC §1019; see Rinaldi v Goller (1957) 48 C2d 276, 309 P2d 451. In Rinaldi, the court held that the tenant lost this right when the lease was terminated for nonpayment of rent and the landlord reentered the premises.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.166 4. Disposition of Encumbered Fixtures

Special problems arise when the tenant encumbers fixtures that have been attached to the rented premises. The question of who has priority of claim to the fixtures, the landlord or holders of security interests in the fixtures, almost always arises in the context of trade fixtures. Rules for determining priority of claims to the fixtures are established by Com C §9334. Counsel should consult applicable Commercial Code sections (and commentaries on them) to determine who has priority of claim to the fixtures.

C. Disposition of Tenant's Security Deposit

1. Statutory Framework

§8.167 a. Summary of Security Deposit Law

The law on security deposits is contained almost entirely in CC §1950.5 (residential tenancies) and §1950.7 (commercial tenancies); there is little case law interpreting these sections. Commercial tenants have somewhat fewer protections than residential tenants under these sections. The law applicable to residential tenancies underwent significant amendments between 2002 and 2004. Under CC §1950.5:

(a) The amount that a landlord may charge as a security deposit to a residential tenant is limited (CC §1950.5(c); see §§4.24, 8.169);

(b) For the express purpose of identifying damage caused by the tenant and giving the tenant an opportunity to repair it, the landlord must give the tenant an opportunity to request an inspection within a reasonable time after either party serves a termination notice, except 3-day notices served under CCP §1161(2)-(4) (CC §1950.5(f); see §§4.28, 8.172A-8.172B);

(c) Within 3 weeks after the tenant moves out, the landlord must return all amounts not necessary to remedy tenant defaults with an itemized statement of the security received and its disposition, including copies of receipts or other documents showing amounts expended to repair or clean the unit (CC §1950.5(g); see §§4.28, 8.173-8.173F);

NOTE: A preliminary itemized statement, separate from the one described in §1950.5(g), is required if the tenant requests an inspection before vacating the premises; see §8.172A.

(d) An itemized statement of the disposition of the deposit on termination of the landlord's interest in the dwelling unit is required (CC §1950.5(h)-(i); see §§4.29, 8.172); and

(e) Penalties are imposed on a landlord who retains the deposit in bad faith (CC §1950.5(l); see §8.174).

Under CC §1950.7, a commercial tenant has roughly comparable protections, except that no ceiling is set on the amount of a security deposit and an itemized statement of disposition of the deposit is not required. In addition, the definition of a security deposit is much less comprehensive in CC §1950.7 than in §1950.5, affording commercial tenants less protection. See the definition of "security" in §§4.23, 8.168.

For further discussion, including Drafting Tips for landlords on security deposits in leases and rental agreements, the limits on landlords' use of security during tenancy, and increasing deposits during tenancy, see §§4.23-4.29.

NOTE: Special rules apply to refund and disposition of tenants' security deposits for mobilehome leases. See chap 6. Special statutes or regulations may also govern security deposits for rental housing owned or subsidized by a governmental agency. See, e.g., 24 CFR §882.414 on security deposits under the Section 8 certificate or voucher program; California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/8 Terminating the Tenancy/§8.168 b. What Payments Are Covered?

§8.168 b. What Payments Are Covered?

For residential tenancies, it is particularly important to determine whether a specific tenant payment falls within the broad definition of "security" in CC §1950.5(b). If the payment is not covered by CC §1950.5:

(a) There is no ceiling on the amount that the landlord may demand (unless restricted by a local rent control ordinance);

(b) The payment may be considered nonrefundable; and

(c) The requirements regarding return of the payment may not apply.

Civil Code §1950.5(a) applies to security for residential property rental agreements. "Security" is defined in §1950.5(b) as > including, but not limited to, any payment, fee, deposit, or charge, except as provided in Section 1950.6, that is imposed at the beginning of the tenancy to be used to reimburse the landlord for costs associated with processing a new tenant or that is imposed as an advance payment of rent, used or to be used for any purpose, including, but not limited to, any of the following:

> (1) The compensation of a landlord for a tenant's default in the payment of rent.
> (2) The repair of damages to the premises, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear, caused by the tenant or by a guest or licensee of the tenant.
> (3) The cleaning of the premises upon termination of the tenancy necessary to return the unit to the same level of cleanliness it was in at the inception of the tenancy [but same-level-of-cleanliness standard applies only to tenancies created after January 1, 2003; see CC §1950.5(b)(3)].
> (4) To remedy future defaults by the tenant in any obligation under the rental agreement to restore, replace, or return personal property or appurtenances, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear, if the security deposit is authorized to be applied thereto by the rental agreement.

The purposes listed are normally associated with the term "security deposit." The definition in §1950.5(b) indicates, however, that the term "security" includes more than these items. The statute seems to encompass (a) "last month's rent" paid in advance, (b) a "finder's fee" or "bonus" paid on execution of the lease, (c) and a higher rental payment for the first month. Note that §1950.5(b) expressly excludes from the definition of "security" a nonrefundable "screening fee" that a landlord may charge to cover the cost of obtaining information about a residential rental applicant, allowed by CC §1950.6. See also discussion of court interpretations of "security" and attempted legislative reforms in §§4.11, 4.23.

In Granberry v Islay Invs. (1984) 161 CA3d 382, 207 CR 652, the landlord rented each of its apartments for an initial 30-day term at a set rent. If the tenant chose to continue the tenancy, the landlord would reduce the rent for subsequent months by $100. A class of tenants sued for a declaration that the additional $100 charged for the first month is a "security" covered by CC §1950.5.

The court of appeal noted that reading CC §1950.5(b) literally, to mean that any advance payment of rent is "security," would lead to an absurd result that would put landlords out of business. On the other hand, the statute was clearly intended to encompass more than just those payments intended to be used for purposes described in CC §1950.5(e) (e.g., to repair damage). Therefore, whether rent is "security" depends on whether the payment is for "legitimate rent" or is a disguised security. 161 CA3d at 389. To answer this question, the trial court should examine whether:

(a) Varying monthly rents are customary (as they may be, e.g., in resort areas);

(b) The landlord has a history of charging payments that resemble security deposits; and

(c) The landlord sincerely intends the payment to induce tenants to stay longer, and thereby "amortize" the payment over more months.

For commercial tenancies, the legislature provided a much less comprehensive definition of "security" in CC §1950.7(a):

> Any payment or deposit of money the primary function of which is to secure the performance of a rental agreement for other than residential property,… other than a payment or deposit, including an advance payment of rent, made to secure the execution of a rental agreement.

However, the legislature specified the type of offsets available to a commercial landlord against the deposit in CC §1950.7(c):

> The landlord may claim of the payment or deposit only those amounts as are reasonably necessary to remedy tenant defaults in the payment of rent, to repair damages to the premises caused by the tenant, or to clean the premises upon termination of the tenancy, if the payment or deposit is made for any or all of those specific purposes.

Section 1950.7(c) was narrowly construed in 250 L.L.C. v Photopoint Corp. (2005) 131 CA4th 703, 32 CR3d 296 not to allow an offset from the security deposit for future rent damages the landlord may later recover in a court action under CC §1951.2.

A landlord or landlord's agent may not require cash as the exclusive form of payment of a security deposit, unless the tenant has previously attempted to pay with a check drawn on insufficient funds or stopped payment, in which case the landlord may demand cash for up to the next 3 months. CC §1947.3. Any waiver of the tenant's rights under this section is void. CC §1947.3(c).

§8.169 c. Statutory Ceiling

A landlord may not demand or receive a total amount of security that exceeds 2 months' rent for an unfurnished dwelling or 3 months' rent for a furnished dwelling. CC §1950.5(c). An advance payment of at least 6 months' rent is not prohibited by CC §1950.5(c) if the lease term is at least 6 months. Moreover, subsection (c) does not preclude the landlord and tenant from entering into an agreement, at the tenant's request, for the landlord to make structural, decorative, furnishing, or other alterations in exchange for a fee.

In Kraus v Trinity Mgmt. Servs. (2000) 23 C4th 116, 138, 96 CR2d 485, the supreme court did not disturb the lower court's order requiring the owner of an apartment house to make restitution and enjoining the owner from further collecting any unreasonable liquidated damages (see §4.43). By analogy this remedy would be available to the affected tenants if the required security deposit exceeds the statutory ceiling, and the court may order restitution of the illegal deposit to the tenants.

Civil Code §1950.7 does not impose a ceiling on the amount of the security deposit that may be charged to a commercial tenant.

For further discussion, see §4.24.

§8.170 d. Landlord's Duty to Maintain Deposit; Interest on Deposit

Civil Code §§1950.5 (residential tenancy) and 1950.7 (commercial tenancy) impose specific duties on landlords with respect to maintenance of the security deposit, including the requirements to

- transfer or refund the deposit if the landlord transfers its interest in the unit,
- allow the tenant to repair and clean the unit before vacating (in residential tenancies), and
- account to the tenant for disposition of the deposit and return any balance to the tenant after the tenant vacates.

These obligations, especially in residential tenancies, involve detailed procedures and documentation that were made more complex by legislation enacted in 2002 and 2003. See discussion of CC §§1950.5(e)-(k), 1950.7(c) in §§8.172-8.173F.

State law does not impose any obligation on the landlord to pay interest on tenant deposits (Korens v R.W. Zukin Corp. (1989) 212 CA3d 1054, 261 CR 137) or to segregate them from other assets. Local ordinances may, however, require payment of interest on deposits. See Small Prop. Owners v City & County of San Francisco (2006) 141 CA4th 1388, 47 CR3d 121 (upholding local ordinance requiring landlords to pay 5 percent interest on security deposits). But see Action Apartment Ass'n v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2001) 94 CA4th 587, 114 CR2d 412 (holding ordinance requiring landlords to pay 3 percent interest on security deposits to be unconstitutional taking). For a general discussion on interest on security deposits, see §4.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.171 e. Priority of Tenant's Claim

The security deposit is held for the tenant's benefit, and the tenant's claim to the security has priority over that of any creditor of the landlord. CC §1950.5(d). The rule is the same for commercial tenancies, except that a commercial tenant's claim does not have priority over the claim of the landlord's trustee in bankruptcy. CC §1950.7(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.172 f. Termination of Landlord's Interest in Unit

On termination of a residential landlord's interest in the dwelling unit by sale, assignment, death, appointment of a receiver, or otherwise, the landlord (or his or her agent) may avoid further liability for the security deposit under CC §1950.5(h), by

- transferring it to the landlord's successor (less lawful deductions), and notifying the tenant by personal delivery or certified mail of the transferee's name, address, and telephone number, and of any claims made against the security; or
- returning the security (less lawful deductions) to the tenant, with the itemized statement required by CC §1950.5(g).

If the landlord uses the first option, the transferee acquires all the rights and obligations of a landlord holding such security. CC §1950.5(k). The rule is basically the same for commercial tenancies, except that a landlord who uses the first option need not send an itemized statement to the tenant. CC §1950.7(d)-(e).

The landlord's liability with respect to the security deposit continues until expiration of the lease, so that the applicable statute of limitations runs from that point rather than from the point at which the landlord sells the premises and fails to comply with CC §1950.5(h) or §1950.7(d). Trypucko v Clark (1983) 142 CA3d Supp 1, 191 CR 165.

Civil Code §1950.5(i) provides that a landlord must give the successor in interest a written statement that (a) indicates the amount of any security deposits, (b) itemizes any lawful deductions from any security received, and (c) specifies the landlord's election under CC §1950.5(h). The successor in interest will be jointly and severally liable to the tenant for repayment of the security deposit if the landlord failed to comply with subdivision (h) (unless the successor believed in good faith that the landlord had so complied) and may not require the tenant to replace any security deposit that was not transferred to the successor by the former landlord. CC §1950.5(j).

For further discussion, see §4.29.

2. After Termination of Tenancy

§8.172A a. Tenant's Right to Request Inspection of Premises and to Cure Deficiencies

Effective January 1, 2003, CC §1950.5(f) provides a notice and inspection process on termination of a tenancy that gives residential tenants the opportunity to minimize deductions from their security deposits by

- requesting an "initial" inspection after either party gives notice of termination, and
- curing any deficiencies in the condition of the rental unit before vacating it.

NOTE: Legislation enacted later in 2003 clarified that this process does not apply to a tenancy terminated by a 3-day notice (i.e., on tenant's default) under CCP §1161(2)-(4), and this is declaratory of existing law. See CC §1950.5(f)(1), (q); Stats 2003, ch 576.

Under CC §1950.5(f)(1), the landlord must notify the tenant of its right to request an inspection "within a reasonable time"

- after either the landlord or the tenant gives the other a notice of intention to terminate the tenancy; or
- before the end of the lease term.

See sample notice form in §8.172B.

If the tenant requests an inspection, the tenant has the right to be present during the inspection, the landlord must give the tenant 48 hours' notice of it, and the inspection must be conducted by the landlord or its agent during the 2-week period before the termination or end-of-lease date. Unless waived in writing, the 48-hour notice applies whether or not the landlord and tenant mutually agree on an inspection date. If the tenant does not request an inspection, the landlord's obligations under CC §1950.5(f) are discharged. CC §1950.5(f)(1).

After the inspection, CC §1950.5(f)(2) requires the landlord to prepare and deliver to the tenant, or leave inside the rental unit, an itemized statement based on the inspection that both

- specifies proposed repairs or cleaning and the amount for each item the landlord intends to deduct from the security deposit "pursuant to paragraphs (1) to (4), inclusive of subdivision (b)," and
- includes "the texts of paragraphs (1) to (4), inclusive, of subdivision (b)."

The language of §1950.5(f)(2) suggests that the landlord must prepare the itemized statement during or immediately after the inspection, that it be delivered to the tenant the same day of the inspection, and that the tenant need not be present during the inspection to have the opportunity to cure the any deficiencies in the condition of the rental unit before vacating it. (Note that a second itemized statement is required under CC §1950.5(g) after the tenant vacates the premises; see §8.173B.)

Under CC §1950.5(f)(3), the tenant may remedy identified deficiencies "in a manner consistent with the rights and obligations of the parties under the rental agreement" before vacating the unit. A landlord may use the security deposit for deductions that were itemized but not cured by the tenant, "so long as the deductions are for damages" authorized by CC §1950.5(f). See CC §1950.5(f)(4). The landlord may also use the security deposit "for any purpose specified in paragraph (1) to (4), inclusive, of subdivision (b) that"

- occurs between the "initial" inspection and the termination of the tenancy, or
- was not identified during the inspection because of the presence of the tenant's possessions.

See CC §1950.5(f)(5). See also §§8.167-8.168, 8.173A.

If you request an inspection, you will be given 48 hours' advance notice of the inspection, but you may waive in writing the required 48 hours' notice and have the inspection done sooner.

Date: _ _ _ _ _ _ __[Signature of landlord]__
_ _[Typed name of landlord]_ _

Comment: This notice must be given to the tenant "within a reasonable time" (a) after either the landlord or the tenant gives the other a notice of intention to terminate the tenancy (except terminations based on the tenant's default; see §8.172A); or (b) before the end of the lease term. CC §1950.5(f)(1). Some landlords routinely include an inspection notice in all 30-day or 60-day notices served on tenants. See §8.80.

§8.173 c. Landlord's Duty to Give Itemized Statement and Return Deposit

Several amendments to CC §1950.5 made by the legislature in 2002, 2003, and 2004 create potential traps for the unwary. Read the statute carefully and be prepared to support arguments on statutory ambiguity by citing relevant legislative history. The procedure is detailed in §§8.173A-8.173F. Note that under CC §1950.6, a landlord may legally charge an applicant for a residential rental unit a nonrefundable "screening fee" to cover the cost of obtaining information about the applicant. See §4.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.173A (1) Items to Which Deposit May Be Applied

Despite numerous statutory amendments in 2002, 2003, and 2004, the security deposit statute remains ambiguous about which categories of losses, expenses, or costs the landlord may use the security deposit for after termination of a residential tenancy. See, e.g., §4.26. When the tenancy is terminated or the tenant vacates voluntarily, the tenant attorneys should argue that the landlord may retain only as much of the security deposit as is necessary to remedy tenant defaults in rent, to repair tenant-caused damage to the premises (other than ordinary wear and tear), to clean the premises, and to remedy future defaults by the tenant as specified in CC §1950.5(b). Because of the words "including but not limited to" in describing these uses of the security, landlord attorneys should argue that the statute allows for other uses as well, e.g., late charges, insufficient check charges, and attorney fees, especially if the lease or rental agreement expressly allows such uses.

A lease or rental agreement might instead provide for a security deposit with more limited purposes than those set forth for residential leases in CC §1950.5(b) or for commercial leases in CC §1950.7(c). For instance, the lease might provide for a security deposit in the form of a "cleaning deposit" or "last month's rent." Under CC §1950.5(e), it is unclear whether the landlord may apply such a limited deposit to other items such as unpaid rent or tenant-caused damage. For example, may a "cleaning deposit" be applied to unpaid rent? Subsection (e) is not clear on this question. It provides that the landlord "may claim of the security only those amounts as are reasonably necessary" to remedy four tenant defaults: unpaid rent, damage to the premises, cleaning, or the tenant's failure to restore, replace, or return personal property or appurtenances, as stated in CC §1950.5(b)(1)-(4). Subsection (e) could mean that the landlord may use the security for any of the first three defaults, even if the agreement specifies only one. An argument can be made, however, that subsection (e) should not be construed to give a landlord the right to use the security for purposes not specified in the original rental agreement. The legislature's use of the word "only" may suggest that it intended this provision, at most, to limit the landlord's use of the security to the enumerated uses, even if the rental agreement provides that the security may be used for additional purposes. Whether the legislature intended to expand the landlord's right to use the security for other than its originally stated purpose in the rental agreement will need to be clarified in future amendments.

Another question arises when the security deposit is called "last month's rent" (as opposed to "security for last month's rent") in the lease, and the rent has increased since the deposit was paid. In this situation, the tenant has a strong argument that the last month's rent has been paid, and the landlord has no right to demand any further rent for the last month of the tenancy. See §1.48.

Civil Code §1950.7 does not permit a landlord of commercial premises to retain a security deposit to cover its damages for future rent, i.e., rent accruing after the date on which the deposit is required by statute to be returned to the tenant. 250 L.L.C. v Photopoint Corp. (2005) 131 CA4th 703, 32 CR3d 296. This can create problems for a landlord who collects a large security deposit on a long-term fixed lease and reserves the right to recover future rent damages under CC §1951.2 if the tenant should abandon the lease. However, the court stated that the parties may waive this aspect of CC §1950.7 in their lease. The amount of an security deposit wrongly retained may not be offset against future damages actually incurred by the landlord before return of the deposit. 250 L.L.C. v Photopoint Corp., supra.

§8.173B (2) When Landlord Must Deliver Itemized Statement and Deposit Refund

Within 21 calendar days after the tenant vacates the premises, the landlord must (a) give the tenant an itemized written statement of the basis for the security, the amount received as security, and the disposition of the security (i.e., how the landlord applied it to rent, repairs, or cleaning), and (b) refund the balance, if any. CC §1950.5(g)(1). (Note that a preliminary itemized statement is required under CC §1950.5(f)(2) immediately after the inspection but before the tenant vacates the premises; see §8.172A.)

An amendment to §1950.5(g)(1), effective January 1, 2004, prohibits the landlord from prematurely itemizing and taking deductions from the security deposit. The landlord must give an accounting and refund the balance of the security deposit "[n]o later than 21 calendar days after" the tenant vacates, "but not earlier than" the time that either the landlord or the tenant gives a termination notice under CC §§1946 and 1946.1 or CCP §1161. If the tenant vacates because of the expiration of a fixed term lease, the landlord's obligation cannot be and need not be performed earlier than 60 days before the expiration.

WARNING: As written, this amendment may also have the effect of exonerating a landlord who does not strictly comply with §1950.5(g) after a tenant vacates the unit without properly giving to (or receiving from) the landlord a termination notice.

§8.173C (3) Contents of Itemized Statement

Within the time period described in §8.173B, the landlord must give the tenant an itemized written statement of the basis for the security, the amount received as security, and the disposition of the security (i.e., how the landlord applied it to rent owed, repairs, or cleaning). Any remaining portion must be returned to the tenant at the same time. CC §1950.5(g)(1). The statement and any refund must be sent to the address provided by the tenant or to the unit that has been vacated if the tenant did not provide one. CC §1950.5(g)(6). A similar refund provision for commercial tenancies exists in CC §1950.7(c), which does not require that the landlord furnish an itemized statement.

Effective January 1, 2004, the residential landlord must include the following information or documents with the itemized statement (CC §1950.5(g)(2)):

- If the landlord or landlord's employee did the work, the statement must reasonably describe the work performed and include the time spent and the reasonable hourly rate charged.
- If the landlord or landlord's employee did not do the work, the landlord must include a copy of the bill, invoice, or receipt supplied by the person or entity performing the work. The itemized statement must contain the name, address, and telephone number of such person or entity, if the bill, invoice, or receipt does not have that information.
- If a deduction is made for materials or supplies, the landlord must include a copy of the bill, invoice, or receipt. If a particular material or supply item is purchased by the landlord on an ongoing basis, the landlord may document its cost by including a copy of a bill, invoice, receipt, vendor price list, or other vendor document that reasonably documents the cost of the item used in the repair or cleaning of the unit.

See exceptions to requirements of §1950.5(g)(2) in §8.173E.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.173D (4) When Repairs Cannot Be Finished Within Required Time

When a repair to be done by the landlord or the landlord's employee cannot reasonably be completed within 21 calendar days after the tenant vacates, or if documents from a person or entity providing services, materials, or supplies are not in the landlord's possession within 21 calendar days after the tenant vacates, CC §1950.5(g)(3), effective January 1, 2004, allows the landlord to use a repair estimate in calculating the security deposit refund.

The landlord may deduct the amount of a good faith estimate of the charges that will be incurred and provide that estimate in or with the itemized statement. If the reason for the estimate is because the documents from a person or entity providing services, materials, or supplies are not in the landlord's possession, the itemized statement shall include the name, address, and telephone number of that person or entity. Within 14 calendar days of completing the repair or receiving the documentation, the landlord shall complete the requirements in CC §1950.5(g)(1)-(2), including refunding the appropriate amount of the security deposit.

See exceptions to requirements of §1950.5(g)(3) in §8.173E.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.173E (5) Exceptions to Required Documentation

Under CC §1950.5(g)(4), the landlord need not give the tenant the documentation required by CC §1950.5(g)(2) or (3) (see §§8.173C-8.173D) if either

- the total amount deducted for repairs and cleaning does not exceed $125, or
- the tenant waived the rights specified in CC §1950.5(g)(2) and (3), but the waiver shall only be effective if signed at the same time as (or after) a notice to terminate under CC §1946 or §1946.1 or CCP §1161 was given, or no earlier than 60 calendar days before the expiration of a fixed-term lease; the waiver (see form in §8.173F) must substantially include the text of paragraph (2).

NOTE: Under CC §1950.5(g)(5), however, if a tenant requests the documentation required by CC §1950.5(g)(2) or (3) within 14 calendar days after receiving the itemized statement, the landlord must comply within 14 calendar days after receiving the tenant's request, despite the existence of a waiver and regardless of the amount deducted for repairs and cleaning.

Waiver of Right To Receive Documents With Security Deposit Refund

The undersigned _ _[name of tenant]_ _ hereby waives the right to receive documents and information specified in California Civil Code §1950.5(g), paragraphs (2) and (3), when _ _[name of landlord or landlord's agent]_ _ calculates the deductions to be made from the security deposit paid by the tenant to the landlord in the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ at the beginning of the tenancy or on _ _[date]_ _.

This waiver is effective only if you sign it at the same time as (or after) a notice to terminate the tenancy under Civil Code §1946 or §1946.1 or Code of Civil Procedure §1161 is (or was) given, or no earlier than 60 calendar days before the expiration of a fixed-term lease.

Civil Code §1950.5(g)(2) provides that a landlord shall send to the tenant certain documents and information at the same time the landlord sends a statement itemizing the deductions made from the tenant's security deposit, as follows (this waiver means you will not get these documents or this information):

(A) If the landlord or landlord's employee did the work, the statement must reasonably describe the work performed and include the time spent and the reasonable hourly rate charged.

(B) If the landlord or landlord's employee did not do the work, the landlord must include a copy of the bill, invoice, or receipt supplied by the person or entity performing the work. The itemized statement must contain the name, address, and telephone number of such person or entity, if the bill, invoice, or receipt does not have that information.

(C) If a deduction is made for materials or supplies, the landlord must include a copy of the bill, invoice, or receipt. If a particular material or supply item is purchased by the landlord on an ongoing basis, the landlord may document its cost by including a copy of a bill, invoice, receipt, vendor price list, or other vendor document that reasonably documents the cost of the item used in the repair or cleaning of the unit.

Further, Civil Code §1950.5(g)(3) allows the landlord to use a repair estimate in calculating your security deposit refund when a repair to be done by the landlord or the landlord's employee cannot reasonably be completed within 21 calendar days after you vacate your unit. It also allows the landlord to provide the name, address, and telephone number of a person or entity providing services, materials, or supplies if documents from that person or entity are not in the landlord's possession within 21 calendar days after you vacate. This waiver means you will not get these documents or this information.

§8.174 d. Remedies for Landlord's Improper Retention of Deposit

A bad faith claim to or retention of any part of a security deposit may subject a residential landlord to a damages award of up to twice the amount of the security, in addition to actual damages. CC §1950.5(l). In an action for the landlord's bad-faith retention of the security deposit, the landlord has the burden of proving the reasonableness of the amounts claimed against the security. CC §1950.5(l). For commercial tenancies, CC §1950.7(f) contains a similar provision concerning damages, but does not expressly impose the burden of proof on the landlord.

An action to recover security deposit funds and for statutory damages may be brought by the tenant in small claims court if the damages claimed, punitive or actual or both, are within the court's jurisdictional limits (presently $7500 if the tenant is a natural person; see CCP §116.221). CC §1950.5(n). Although Civil Code §1950.7 contains no comparable language for commercial tenancies, small claims courts seem to have jurisdiction over these claims under their general powers, with a jurisdictional limit of $5000 if the tenant is not a natural person. See CCP §116.220(a); 59 Ops Cal Atty Gen 321 (1976).

A landlord's good faith failure to furnish the itemized statement or otherwise comply with CC §1950.5 does not preclude the landlord from asserting a setoff against the security deposit for unpaid rent, repairs, and cleaning. Granberry v Islay Invs. (1995) 9 C4th 738, 38 CR2d 650. In Granberry, the landlord initially charged tenants nonrefundable cleaning deposits, and then stopped charging such deposits and instead increased the first month's rent. A class action was filed on behalf of 10,000 present and former tenants, seeking to recover the excess first month's rent (a fund totaling about $1 million). A jury found that the excess was in fact a "security deposit" that must be refunded under §1950.5 but that the landlord had not acted in "bad faith" in failing to return the deposit. The landlord then sought to offset unpaid rent and costs of cleaning and repairs against the "security deposit," but the trial court held that an offset would not be permitted, because the landlord had failed to supply tenants with an itemized statement of the basis for retention of the security within the time required by §1950.5.

The supreme court reversed, holding that a landlord who has failed in good faith to take advantage of the summary nonjudicial deduct-and-retain procedure allowed under §1950.5 may recover damages for unpaid rent, repairs, and cleaning in a subsequent judicial proceeding, but under §1950.5, the landlord has the burden of proving that he or she has suffered such damages and that the amount claimed is reasonable.

PRACTICE TIP: Some landlords become known for their failure to return security deposits to vacating tenants. When counseling a tenant who has such a landlord, and who does not want to take the time or trouble to sue for return of the deposit, the attorney might consider practical alternatives. For example, the attorney might attempt to negotiate an arrangement under which the tenant would keep the last month's rent, leave the premises in good condition, and abandon the security deposit. Such a solution might satisfy both parties, but caution should be exercised in advising the tenant to undertake this course unilaterally. The landlord could serve a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit, and the tenant could end up liable for costs and attorney fees for an unlawful detainer action.

§8.175 e. "Nonrefundable" Deposits and Waivers in Leases Prohibited

No residential lease or rental agreement may contain a provision characterizing any security deposit as "nonrefundable." CC §1950.5(m). A provision in a residential lease or rental agreement in which the tenant agrees to waive or modify his or her rights under CC §1950.5 is void as contrary to public policy. CC §1953(a)(1). (There are no comparable nonwaiver provisions for commercial tenancies. A court of appeal held that a commercial tenant may waive its CC §1950.7 security deposit rights. See 250 L.L.C. v Photopoint Corp. (2005) 131 CA4th 703, 32 CR3d 296.)

Note, however, that under CC §1950.6, a landlord may charge an applicant for a residential rental a nonrefundable "screening fee" to cover the cost of obtaining information about the applicant. See §4.11.

§8.176 f. Effect on Unlawful Detainer Action

A landlord is under no legal obligation to apply the security deposit before serving a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit, or before bringing an unlawful detainer action for nonpayment of rent. See Willys of Marin Co. v Pierce (1956) 140 CA2d 826, 830, 296 P2d 25; Toplitz v Standard Co. (1914) 25 CA 575, 576, 143 P 52.

Because the tenant is entitled to have the security deposit applied toward a money judgment obtained by the landlord, and to have any excess over the judgment returned (Thompson v Swiryn (1950) 95 CA2d 619, 213 P2d 740), the deposit may be pleaded affirmatively in the answer. In Thompson, the tenant's attorney claimed the deposit by counterclaim, and the landlord's attorney presumably did not object. The landlord's attorney might demur or move to strike the answer on the ground that the security deposit is not a basis to defend against the landlord's claim for possession. It could be argued, however, that the tenant may plead the security deposit as a setoff against any money judgment in favor of the landlord. See Wickstrom v McGrath (1927) 86 CA 651, 656, 261 P 326 (when lease indicated that security deposit had been given, the amount should have been applied to satisfy the judgment); Garfinkle v Montgomery (1952) 113 CA2d 149, 157, 248 P2d 52. The landlord's attorney might argue, however, that the security deposit should not constitute a setoff because the landlord's obligation to return the deposit does not arise until after the tenant vacates, and the security deposit may be applied to items other than rent (i.e., to clean and repair damage to the premises).

If the deposit is not applied to the unlawful detainer judgment, the tenant may institute a separate action to recover it, and the prior unlawful detainer action is not res judicata. Bacciocco v Curtis (1938) 12 C2d 109, 82 P2d 385.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.177 g. Effect on Subsequent Action Against Tenant

A landlord who in good faith fails to return a security deposit in the time required by statute may still recover damages for unpaid rent, repairs, and cleaning in a subsequent judicial action. Whether that judgment may be offset against the security deposit must be decided on a case-by-case basis. See Granberry v Islay Invs. (1995) 9 C4th 738, 747, 38 CR2d 650, cited in §8.174.

I. INTRODUCTION

§9.1 A. Scope of Chapter

This chapter describes the necessary steps for preparing and serving unlawful detainer actions and discusses preliminary considerations not covered in other chapters. When a tenancy has been terminated (see chap 8), but the tenant remains in possession of the premises, an unlawful detainer lawsuit is the remedy most commonly used by the landlord to evict the tenant and regain possession of the premises. Because the landlord's use of "self-help" eviction is not permitted in California (see §§8.137-8.153), the landlord must use legal means to remove the tenant from the premises. See Bedi v McMullan (1984) 160 CA3d 272, 206 CR 578. The process of terminating a tenancy must be distinguished from the process of evicting a tenant by means of a judgment obtained in an unlawful detainer action. The tenancy must have been terminated in some fashion by the landlord or tenant, or by expiration of its term, before an unlawful detainer action will lie. See CCP §§1161-1161a, 1174. See also CCP §1161b, effective July 8, 2008, until the end of 2012, discussed in §8.68C.

The landlord's notice to terminate a tenancy is usually an integral part of the process of evicting a tenant and is governed by a substantial body of law, discussed in chap 8. Because defenses to unlawful detainer actions involve analysis of the substantive rights and obligations of the landlord and tenant, they also are treated elsewhere in this book. For discussion of the tenant's defense that the landlord has breached the implied warranty of habitability, see §§3.24-3.48. On the defense that the eviction is retaliatory, see §§8.109-8.135. For a summary of available defenses, see §§10.53-10.69.

An indigent landlord, such as one renting out an in-law unit or an apartment in a small, owner-occupied apartment building, may not be able to afford court costs and may apply to the court to proceed in forma pauperis. See §§10.5-10.12 for procedures.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.2 B. Statutory Authority

Counsel for both landlord and tenant should become familiar with the statutory framework, because unlawful detainer is a statutory remedy. With the exception of some local rent control ordinances, unlawful detainer substantive rights and procedures are governed by provisions of state law. The principal statutes are CCP §§1159-1179a (unlawful detainer and forcible entry and detainer (see §§8.138-8.146)), CC §§1940-1954.1 (landlord-tenant relationship), and CC §§789-793 (termination of estates in real property). State law governs unlawful detainer procedure but does not preempt substantive law requirements under local ordinances. Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 704, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045; Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley (1976) 17 C3d 129, 141, 130 CR 465.

Other statutes that might apply to particular unlawful detainer actions include the following: CC §51 (Unruh Civil Rights Act) (protecting from discrimination on the basis of sex, gender identity and expression, race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, disability, medical condition, marital status, or sexual orientation); CC §§54-55.1 (protecting from discrimination against blind, physically disabled, and other designated persons); CC §§1859-1864 (baggage lien law); CCP §§71-77 (superior court; unlimited civil cases); CCP §§85-89 (superior court; limited civil cases), CCP §§415.10-415.50 and Govt C §§26662, 71265 (service of process); CCP §§715.010-715.040 (enforcement of judgments for possession of real property); and CC §§1980-1991 (disposition of personal property remaining on premises after termination of tenancy).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should be familiar with chapter 8, which thoroughly presents all pre-litigation notice requirements and other considerations in laying a proper foundation for an eviction action. Counsel should determine whether the landlord must also meet local requirements, especially eviction control laws (see chap 9), to obtain an unlawful detainer judgment. The most commonly encountered provisions are "just-cause" eviction ordinances that bar landlords from terminating month-to-month tenancies or from refusing to renew fixed-term tenancies except on grounds specified in the ordinance (see §§7.53-7.72).

C. Applicability of Unlawful Detainer Remedy

§9.3 1. Grounds In General

An owner of real property must demonstrate that the case falls within the situations enumerated in CCP §§1161-1161a for the unlawful detainer remedy to be available. See Greene v Municipal Court (1975) 51 CA3d 446, 124 CR 139. See also CCP §1161b, effective July 8, 2008, until the end of 2012, discussed in §8.68C. The statutes provide for an unlawful detainer action in only four basic situations:

(1) Termination of landlord-tenant relationship. When a landlord wishes to remove a tenant who holds over after a fixed-term lease has expired, after service of notice terminating a month-to-month tenancy, after service of notice terminating a tenancy at will pursuant to CC §789, or after a tenant has breached the lease and not complied with a notice to cure the breach, if required (CCP §1161).

(2) Forcible entry and detainer. When an owner of real property or a person claiming superior possession wishes to remove another who holds possession by force (CCP §§1159, 1160).

(3) Termination of employment relationship. When an owner of real property wishes to remove an employee, agent, or licensee from the premises after that relationship has been terminated (CCP §1161(1)).

(4) After foreclosure. When a purchaser at an execution sale, sale by foreclosure, or sale under a power of sale in a mortgage or deed of trust wishes to remove the former owner or person claiming under him or her from the premises (CCP §§1161a, 1161b).

An unlawful detainer action generally will not lie if the plaintiff and defendant are not associated in one of those relationships. See 51 CA3d at 450. An exception exists for unidentified occupants not named in an otherwise appropriate unlawful detainer action against a known tenant. Such occupants may be brought into the unlawful detainer action as defendants by serving them with a prejudgment claim of right to possession under CCP §415.46. See §§9.51-9.55. In addition, see §§8.138-8.146 and 9.5 for further discussion of forcible entry and detainer.

§9.4 2. Termination of Landlord-Tenant Relationship

This chapter primarily focuses on unlawful detainer actions governed by CCP §1161(1)-(5). A landlord is authorized to use unlawful detainer procedures to remove a tenant in the following situations (subject to conditions imposed by a local eviction control ordinance):

- A fixed-term lease has expired before it has become a month-to-month tenancy by the landlord's acceptance of further rent (CCP §1161(1));
- The landlord has terminated a month-to-month tenancy by serving a 30-day or 60-day notice to terminate as provided in CC §§1946 and 1946.1 (CCP §1161(1));
- The tenant has defaulted in payment of rent, after proper service of a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit (CCP §1161(2));
- The tenant has breached a covenant or condition of the lease, including covenants against subletting and assignment, after proper service of a 3-day notice (to cure the breach or quit, if the breach can be remedied) (CCP §1161(3));
- The tenant has sublet or assigned without the landlord's consent, committed waste or nuisance (including illegal drug dealing, or acts of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking), or used the premises for an unlawful purpose (CCP §1161(4)); or
- The tenant has given the landlord written notice of an intent to vacate under CC §1946 or §1946.1, or has made a written offer to surrender the premises that the landlord accepted in writing, and then fails to deliver possession on the date specified (CCP §1161(5)).

NOTE: Section 1161(4) was amended effective September 27, 2008, but the amendment sunsets on January 1, 2012. It provides that a tenant's act of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking of a resident on the premises creates a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof that the tenant has committed a nuisance and is subject to a 3-day notice to quit. If the victim has not vacated the premises, the presumption does not apply.

For discussion of basic landlord-tenant relationships, see chap 1. On notice requirements for terminating tenancies under CCP §1161, see chap 8.

II. NATURE OF UNLAWFUL DETAINER ACTIONS

§9.5 A. Suit for Possession

Unlawful detainer is an action, purely statutory in origin (CCP §§1161, 1174; Markham v Fralick (1934) 2 C2d 221, 39 P2d 804) to restore possession of real property to the person entitled to it (Knowles v Robinson (1963) 60 C2d 620, 36 CR 33). With limited exceptions (see CCP §1174), the action cannot be used for purposes other than recovery of possession. Fontana Indus. v Western Grain & Fertilizer Co. (1959) 167 CA2d 408, 334 P2d 611. It cannot, for example, be used to litigate title to the property (Tewksbury v Magraff (1867) 33 C 237; Yuba River Sand Co. v City of Marysville (1947) 78 CA2d 421, 177 P2d 642), although the tenant may raise the landlord's lack of title defensively if the landlord first puts title at issue by seeking to quiet title against the tenant (Greenhut v Wooden (1982) 129 CA3d 64, 180 CR 786). See §§9.8, 10.54. Moreover, unlawful detainer is not a proper remedy when the tenant already has surrendered possession of the premises. Markham v Fralick, supra; Briggs v Electronic Memories & Magnetics Corp. (1975) 53 CA3d 900, 126 CR 34. Thus, in order to prevail, the plaintiff must be entitled to possession when the action begins. For discussion of the parties' rights when the tenant surrenders possession after an unlawful detainer action is filed, see §11.51.

The right to bring an unlawful detainer action usually depends on the existence of a landlord-tenant relationship, but there are other grounds for recovery of possession using summary procedures. See §§9.3-9.4. For example, an action for forcible entry may be brought to evict a person who uses force or terror to gain possession of the premises, or who enters peaceably and turns out the party in possession. CCP §1159. A forcible detainer action also may be brought to evict a person who (1) uses force or the threat of violence to unlawfully hold property, or (2) gains possession in the absence of a lawful occupant (who was in possession within the previous 5 days) and then refuses to surrender possession after 5 days' notice. CCP §1160. See §§8.138-8.146.

Another use of the unlawful detainer remedy is to recover possession from a person who occupied the premises as an employee, agent, or licensee of the landlord (e.g., an apartment manager). Such occupants may be evicted by means of an unlawful detainer action, without service of notice, once the relationship of employer-employee, principal-agent, or licensor-licensee has been terminated. CCP §1161(1). Chan v Antepenko (1988) 203 CA3d Supp 21, 250 CR 851. See §§1.3-1.7.

Finally, in an otherwise appropriate unlawful detainer action against a known tenant, unidentified occupants not named in the suit may be made subject to the unlawful detainer judgment, even though not named as defendants, by serving them with a prejudgment claim of right to possession under CCP §415.46. See §§9.51-9.55. Even if such occupants do not respond to the service by actually filing a claim, they are subject to the writ of possession and may be evicted. See §§13.67, 13.70.

§9.6 B. Summary Remedy

Unlawful detainer is frequently described as a "summary remedy" because California law recognizes that an owner of property must be able to recover possession without delay, by means of a relatively uncomplicated action. Thus, the time to plead and set the action for trial is shorter than in other civil actions, and the action has priority over other civil matters (see §9.7). Moreover, the issues that can be raised are strictly limited to possession and closely related ancillary matters such as recovery of back rent, damages, and attorney fees (see §9.8).

In order to take advantage of this specially provided summary remedy, which involves termination of the tenant's right to possession, the owner must demonstrate that the action falls strictly within the statutory provisions (Horton-Howard v Payton (1919) 44 CA 108, 186 P 167) and that applicable notice provisions have been followed (Lamey v Masciotra (1969) 273 CA2d 709, 78 CR 344; Baugh v Consumers Assocs. (1966) 241 CA2d 672, 50 CR 822; Feder v Wreden Packing & Provision Co. (1928) 89 CA 665, 265 P 386).

NOTE: Sometimes an unlawful detainer action will be interrupted by the tenant's filing a bankruptcy petition. See chap 14. In that event, Cal Rules of Ct 3.650 requires attorneys (and parties who are not represented) to immediately notify the court and all other counsel or appearing parties. See §§9.18D, 14.57.

§9.7 1. Expedited Procedures; Trial Priority

For the most part, no civil action regularly proceeds as quickly from filing to trial as unlawful detainer. The courts are required by CCP §1179a to give unlawful detainer actions priority over nearly all other categories of civil actions. The summons in an unlawful detainer action is returnable within 5 days of service (CCP §1167), instead of the usual 30 days (see CCP §412.20(a)(3)).

The court must set the trial date of a contested unlawful detainer action not more than 20 days after the request for setting is filed. CCP §1170.5(a). If the landlord prevails, a writ of execution must be issued immediately. CCP §1170.5(a). The trial date may be extended on agreement of the parties. CCP §1170.5(b). If the trial will not occur within the 20-day period and the court finds that the landlord is likely to prevail in the action, it must order the tenant to deposit into court the damages from the delay, as the rent would otherwise become due. CCP §1170.5(c). For further discussion, see §§11.44-11.50.

PRACTICE TIP: In many trial courts, especially those with a high volume of criminal trials, CCP §1170.5's 20-day deadline is rarely (if ever) met even for nonjury trials. Although the landlord's attorney might consider a mandamus proceeding in an appellate court to compel compliance with CCP §1170.5, such a procedure is unlikely to succeed when the trial court has a large backlog of criminal cases, because criminal trials still have precedence over unlawful detainer actions. CCP §1170.5(i); Pen C §1050(a). In cases in which the occupant is threatening physical harm or damage to the property, an ex parte appearance by the landlord's counsel may be appropriate to request an earlier trial date. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1203(b).

Under CCP §594(b), the clerk's notice of trial of an unlawful detainer action must be served 10 days before trial, rather than the 20 days required in other cases. For further discussion of setting the case for trial, see §§11.41-11.43. Other pretrial proceedings are similarly expedited for unlawful detainer actions. For example, the time to respond to discovery is greatly foreshortened (see §§11.5, 11.8, 11.17, 11.20, 11.23-11.24) as are the notice provisions for motion for summary judgment (see §11.36). The California Judicial Council adopted case disposition time goals for unlawful detainer actions. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(i).

§9.8 2. Issues Limited

An unlawful detainer is an action designed to restore possession of real property to the owner expeditiously. It is generally limited to issues concerning the right to possession; neither the landlord nor the tenant may raise other issues. See Knowles v Robinson (1963) 60 C2d 620, 36 CR 33; Union Oil Co. v Chandler (1970) 4 CA3d 716, 84 CR 756. Exceptions to this general rule, however, can be found in statutes and case law. The landlord may set forth in the complaint any circumstances of fraud, force, or violence that accompanied the unlawful detention, and claim damages based on such facts. CCP §1166(b). Also at issue in an unlawful detainer action are the landlord's damages resulting from the unlawful detention (i.e., reasonable rental value of the premises from the date of termination of the tenancy through the date of judgment), the amount of rent due if the action is based on default in payment of rent, and statutory damages of up to $600 if the tenant is guilty of malice. CCP §1174(b). See §§12.32-12.34.

The landlord may not seek damages beyond those permitted in unlawful detainer actions by CCP §§1166(b) and 1174. Roberts v Redlich (1952) 111 CA2d 566, 244 P2d 933. Thus, damages for breaches of the lease not connected with the unlawful detention may not be recovered in an unlawful detainer action. Vasey v California Dance Co. (1977) 70 CA3d 742, 139 CR 72. See also Greene v Municipal Court (1975) 51 CA3d 446, 124 CR 139. Although landlords often attempt to seek relief in unlawful detainer actions for physical damage to the rental premises, CCP §§1166(b) and 1174 do not authorize this relief unless the damages were a result of fraud, force, or violence that accompanied the unlawful detainer or forcible entry. See §9.40. The landlord must utilize the security deposit, or file a separate action, to recover for injury to the property. Neither party may use an unlawful detainer action to litigate title (see Tewksbury v Magraff (1867) 33 C 237; Yuba River Sand Co. v City of Marysville (1947) 78 CA2d 421, 177 P2d 642), but the tenant may raise the landlord's lack of title defensively if the landlord puts title at issue by filing a separate quiet title action against the tenant (Greenhut v Wooden (1982) 129 CA3d 64, 180 CR 786) or if the plaintiff alleges acquisition of title by foreclosure under CCP §1161a (see Vella v Hudgins (1977) 20 C3d 251, 142 CR 414).

The issues that the tenant may raise defensively in an unlawful detainer action are strictly limited. There are almost no situations in which the tenant is permitted to cross-complain against the landlord. See §§10.73-10.75. Although affirmative defenses generally may not be asserted in unlawful detainer actions, the courts and the legislature have created a number of exceptions to this rule. See, e.g., Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704 (implied warranty of habitability (see §§3.24-3.48)); Schweiger v Superior Court (1970) 3 C3d 507, 90 CR 729 (retaliatory eviction (see §§8.109-8.135)); Abstract Inv. Co. v Hutchinson (1962) 204 CA2d 242, 22 CR 309 (racial discrimination (see chap 2)); McAlister v Essex Prop. Trust (CD Cal 2007) 504 F Supp 2d 903 (failure of landlord to provide accommodation for person with disability and one of his children). Some of them permit the tenant to offset delinquent rent with damages incurred by the tenant during the tenancy. See, e.g., Green v Superior Court, supra. (For a summary of permitted affirmative defenses, see §§10.53-10.69. See also California Eviction Defense Manual §§19.11-19.26 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

NOTE: Because of the summary nature of (and limitation on issues in) an unlawful detainer action, the limitation on allowable affirmative defenses (see §10.53), and the unavailability of relief by cross-complaint (see §10.73), unlawful detainer judgments have collateral estoppel or res judicata effect when an issue could have been raised, or actually was adjudicated, in the unlawful detainer proceeding. See Vella v Hudgins (1977) 20 C3d 251, 142 CR 414, and discussion in §13.39.

§9.9 3. Application of Other Procedures

Although unlawful detainer is described as a summary remedy because the action is accelerated and the issues are limited, the parties to the action are entitled to some of the same benefits and protections afforded by other civil litigation, such as the rights to discovery, summary judgment, and a jury trial. See Gerchick, No Easy Way Out: Making the Summary Eviction Process a Fairer and More Efficient Alternative to Landlord Self-Help, 41 UCLA L Rev 759 (1994).

Practice rules that apply to civil actions generally (see Code of Civil Procedure, Part II) also apply to unlawful detainer actions, except as provided in CCP §§1159-1179a. CCP §1177. The "economic litigation" statutes (CCP §§90-107.65), however, which impose certain limitations on litigation tactics (including restricting discovery), expressly do not apply to unlawful detainer actions. CCP §91(b).

Thus, for example, the parties have the right to conduct discovery as in any other civil action, although time periods are foreshortened (see chap 11). For purposes of the discovery statutes, CCP §2016.020 defines "action" to include a "special proceeding of a civil nature." Such a proceeding falls under Part III of the Code of Civil Procedure, which includes CCP §§1159-1179a for unlawful detainer actions. See Tide Water Assoc. Oil Co. v Superior Court (1955) 43 C2d 815, 279 P2d 35; Turem v Texaco, Inc. (1965) 236 CA2d 758, 46 CR 389.

Whenever an issue of fact is presented by the pleadings in an unlawful detainer action, the parties have the right to have the case tried before a jury. CCP §1171. See §§11.53-11.55.

§9.10 C. Compare: Other Actions for Possession

A landlord who wishes to remove a tenant from the premises may bring one of three judicial actions:

- ejectment,
- quiet title, or
- unlawful detainer.

In practice, a landlord usually chooses to file an unlawful detainer action because it affords the most expeditious means of regaining possession of the property. Of the three remedies, only unlawful detainer is a summary proceeding that has precedence over other civil matters (see §9.7) and in which only the right to possession of the property, and not title, is at issue (see §9.5).

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.11 1. Common Law Ejectment

The nonstatutory action in ejectment is also a suit to recover possession of real property and damages, but differs from unlawful detainer in the following respects:

- No termination notice is required as a preliminary step;
- The tenant has the usual 30 days to respond to the summons;
- The tenant may cross-complain;
- The issue of title may be raised and tried; and
- The class of defendants is not limited.

Moreover, special provisions in CCP §1174 governing unlawful detainer judgments and their enforcement, including statutory damages of up to $600 for malicious holding over, do not apply. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 10 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

For all those reasons, an action in ejectment usually is a less desirable remedy for the landlord than unlawful detainer. There is one exception: In limited circumstances (especially for commercial tenancies), the landlord may be awarded greater damages by proceeding in ejectment than by filing an unlawful detainer action. See Real Property Remedies §10.17. A complaint that fails to state a cause of action in unlawful detainer may be construed as a complaint in ejectment. The court may grant relief on that basis if the complaint alleges the essential elements of a cause of action for ejectment. Chinese Hosp. Found. Fund v Patterson (1969) 1 CA3d 627, 81 CR 795; Baugh v Consumers Assocs. (1966) 241 CA2d 672, 50 CR 822. This rule apparently applies only when the tenant makes a general appearance (and thus has conceded jurisdiction) and does not otherwise object by way of a demurrer or an affirmative defense, because of the shorter time for service in unlawful detainer actions than in other actions for possession. A tenant wishing to force a landlord to start a new lawsuit may move to quash service of the 5-day summons. See §§10.20-10.21. Actions for unlawful detainer are improper when the buyer is in possession under a land sale contract or other purchase agreement and the buyer has made payment towards the purchase of the subject premises. In these cases, an action for ejectment must be filed. See §9.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.12 2. Quiet Title

An action to quiet title under CCP §§760.010-764.080 may be used to recover possession of real property, and a judgment quieting title may include an order for possession. See South Shore Land Co. v Peterson (1964) 226 CA2d 725, 38 CR 392. See also California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 7 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002). The primary advantage of a quiet title action is that the owner not only may litigate title, but also may obtain a judgment with in rem effect, binding known and unknown persons who may have a claim to the property. See Real Property Remedies §7.5. Thus, when the occupant of real property holds under some claim of title, the landlord might wish to proceed by a quiet title action. As with ejectment actions, the statutes that expedite procedure in unlawful detainer actions (CCP §§1159-1179a) are not available in actions to quiet title. Therefore, such actions normally take an owner much longer to regain possession of the property. For further discussion of the advantages and disadvantages of quiet title actions, see Real Property Remedies §7.18.

D. Effect of Local Rent and Eviction Control

§9.13 1. Legal Background

A number of local California jurisdictions have enacted rent control ordinances in past decades. Accordingly, attorneys for both landlords and tenants should be aware that the premises may be regulated by a local ordinance. Local rent control ordinances may have a substantial impact on substantive and procedural rights of the parties in unlawful detainer proceedings. (For discussion of such ordinances, see chap 7.)

Rent control ordinances typically affect unlawful detainer actions by controlling the amount of rent that the landlord may lawfully charge, and by limiting the grounds on which the landlord may evict a tenant. For example, if the landlord's demand for rent in a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit exceeds the amount to which he or she is entitled under a rent control ordinance, the notice is defective and the court cannot award possession of the premises to the landlord. See §§7.56, 7.73, 10.31, 10.59; Dertiman v Almey (1949) 92 CA2d 724, 207 P2d 615. For a case in which the tenant was allowed to assert as an affirmative defense to an unlawful detainer action the landlord's charging of rent over the amount allowed by a rent control ordinance, see Nourafchan v Miner (1985) 169 CA3d 746, 215 CR 450. Similarly, the eviction control provisions found in most rent control ordinances limit evictions to those with "just cause," and prohibit those sought for any reason other than the reasons enumerated in the ordinance. Permitted grounds may include:

- nonpayment of the lawful rent,
- commission of a nuisance or unlawful act on the premises,
- breach of a covenant of the lease or rental agreement,
- refusal to allow the landlord to enter the premises to make necessary repairs,
- the landlord's intention to reside on the premises or to have specified family members reside on the premises,
- the landlord's performance of major improvements that require the unit to be vacant for a substantial period of time, or
- permanent removal of the premises from the rental market.

See §§7.54-7.72.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlord's counsel should closely examine the rent control ordinance (and rules and regulations promulgated under it) before counseling the client on the right to evict the tenant. As the scope of rent control ordinances varies widely, the attorney must determine whether the unit is governed by the ordinance and whether the ordinance permits the reasons on which the landlord wishes to evict. Relying on thinly disguised grounds in an effort to regain possession of the unit and raise the rent could subject the landlord to liability for wrongful eviction. See, e.g., Zimmerman v Stotter (1984) 160 CA3d 1067, 207 CR 108. See also §8.150. For discussion of additional effects of rent control ordinances on unlawful detainer actions, see §§9.14-9.16. On practicing under rent control ordinances generally, see chap 7.

2. Recurring Issues in Evictions

§9.14 a. Retroactivity of Ordinance

Rent control ordinances either specify their own effective date or become effective under applicable local or state law. Rarely, however, do rent control ordinances address the issue of their applicability to cases not reduced to final judgment on the ordinance's effective date. The applicability of a newly enacted or amended rent control ordinance to a pending unlawful detainer action might be questioned:

- if a termination notice had been served, but had not expired, as of the ordinance's effective date;
- when the time period under a notice expired prior to the effective date; or
- if an unlawful detainer action was on file, but not reduced to judgment, as of the ordinance's effective date.

Rent control enactments presumably are substantive rather than procedural. See Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley (1976) 17 C3d 129, 149, 130 CR 465; Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045. Accordingly, their retroactive application turns on legislative intent. City of Sausalito v County of Marin (1970) 12 CA3d 550, 557, 90 CR 843. When an ordinance or amendment is not explicit on retroactivity, its "statement of purpose" (especially any reference to forced displacement of tenants) might be held to indicate that the enactment applies to all cases not reduced to final judgment on its effective date. See City of Sausalito v County of Marin, supra (Govt C §65801 is substantive in nature, but nevertheless applicable to all cases not reduced to final judgment); Marriage of Silvers (1972) 23 CA3d 910, 911, 100 CR 731 (Family Law Act, former CC §§4000-5174, applicable to case at issue before, but tried after, its effective date; partial or incomplete right vests only when reduced to final judgment).

A notice terminating the tenancy, given under CCP §1161 or CC §§1946, 1946.1, terminates the tenancy on the expiration of the notice period. See chap 8. Arguably, the rights of the parties become vested at that point.

Although there is no California case directly on point, courts in other jurisdictions have given rent control ordinances retroactive effect. See Scholtz Partnership v District of Columbia Rental Accommodations Comm'n (DC Ct App 1981) 427 A2d 905, 913 (rent control act in effect at the time is applicable to agency decision unless manifest injustice would result or statutory direction or legislative history exists to the contrary); Huard v Forest St. Hous., Inc. (1974) 316 NE2d 505 (rent rollback provision of newly enacted ordinance applies to preexisting lease; no unconstitutional impairment of contract).

Rules of construction applicable to statutes in general also apply to the interpretation of local ordinances. Evola v Wendt Constr. Co. (1959) 170 CA2d 21, 338 P2d 498. Presumably, this principle also applies to construction of a rent control scheme enacted by initiative.

§9.15 b. Estoppel Effect of Administrative Decision

Some rent control enactments allow tenants to petition the agency that administers the ordinance for a rent reduction based on reduction in housing services, prior collection of amounts over the controlled rent, and the like. After notice and a hearing, the agency may establish the lawful rent if it finds for the tenant. See chap 7. The question raised by such proceedings is whether the landlord may then maintain an unlawful detainer action based on nonpayment of the rent demanded (which exceeds the amount administratively determined as legal); i.e., is the administrative determination binding on the trial court in the ensuing unlawful detainer action?

In California, the rule appears to be that an administrative decision must be challenged directly through judicial review and may not be attacked collaterally in a separate action. In Hazon-Iny Dev. v Unkefer (1980) 116 CA3d Supp 1, 172 CR 191, the landlord filed a petition with the rent board for determination of a vested right to convert his rental property to condominiums. The day after the board's denial of his petition, the landlord served 30-day notices terminating the tenancies of the premises' occupants. The appellate court reversed a judgment in favor of the landlord, holding that the trial court exceeded its jurisdiction in permitting the landlord to attack the rent board's decision collaterally. The appellate court held that the landlord's proper remedy was to challenge the rent board's decision directly in an administrative mandamus action (under CCP §1094.5) rather than to attempt an indirect challenge in an unlawful detainer action. 116 CA3d at Supp 4. See also Hollywood Circle, Inc. v Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (1961) 55 C2d 728, 13 CR 104 (board's dismissal of appeal from revocation of liquor license not void, even if erroneous, and therefore res judicata in later judicial proceedings); Holder v California Paralyzed Veterans Ass'n (1980) 114 CA3d 155, 170 CR 455 (tort action for damages arising out of quasi-judicial proceeding must be preceded by successful mandamus action overturning agency's decision); City & County of San Francisco v Ang (1979) 97 CA3d 673, 159 CR 56 (determination of city's board of permit appeals res judicata and beyond collateral attack).

Administrative decisions are given res judicata or collateral estoppel effect when the agency is acting in a quasi-judicial capacity (i.e., when resolving disputed issues of fact that the parties have an adequate opportunity to litigate, and when the proceeding results in a final decision). See People v Sims (1982) 32 C3d 468, 186 CR 77. Under this test, most individual rent adjustment hearings probably qualify as quasi-judicial proceedings and thus have a collateral estoppel effect on the issue of the proper rent in later unlawful detainer proceedings. See also Mahon v Safeco Title Ins. Co. (1988) 199 CA3d 616, 245 CR 103, for a discussion of when administrative findings and conclusions are accorded res judicata or collateral estoppel effect in later judicial proceedings.

Similarly, if a landlord proceeds with an unlawful detainer action after the tenant files a rent board petition but before the board conducts a hearing or issues an order, the unlawful detainer action may be subject to temporary abatement. See Vargas v Municipal Court (1978) 22 C3d 902, 150 CR 918, cited in §§10.30-10.31.

WARNING: In view of Hazon-Iny Dev. v Unkefer, supra, and Vargas v Municipal Court, supra, attorneys should be extremely cautious about advising landlords to proceed with unlawful detainer actions based on nonpayment of rent if a rent board action is pending or the board has ordered the rent reduced or authorized the tenant to withhold rent for past overcharges. In such a situation the proper course is for the landlord to attack the rent board's decision directly in an administrative mandamus action rather than litigate the propriety of the order in an unlawful detainer action. When an administrative decision is the result of an invalid administrative rule, regulation, or policy, however, a party prejudiced by the decision might argue that the agency exceeded its jurisdiction and that the decision has no collateral estoppel effect. But a court may opine that even this kind of attack may not be made collaterally.

§9.16 c. Pleading and Proving Just Cause to Evict

Rent control ordinances usually limit evictions from regulated units to those based on grounds permitted by the ordinance. See §§7.53-7.72. In those jurisdictions having a rent control ordinance which restricts evictions unless a landlord has a specified "just cause," the parties must determine how the ordinance provisions affect the pleadings, the burden of producing evidence, and, if the matter is tried, which party has the burden of proof. In most instances, rent control ordinances not only list the permitted grounds for eviction (e.g., to allow the landlord or a family member to move into a rented unit, or to have the unit vacated to allow major construction or repair projects; see §§7.65-7.67), but also require that the landlord proceed under the permitted ground in good faith and without ulterior motive. Both elements (the substantive ground and the underlying motive) must be considered in determining these issues.

§9.16A (1) Pleading in Complaint and Answer

Code of Civil Procedure §459 provides:

> In pleading … an ordinance of county or municipal corporation, or a right derived therefrom, it is sufficient to refer to such statute or ordinance by its title and the day of its passage. In pleading the performance of conditions precedent under a statute or an ordinance of a county or municipal corporation, or of a right derived therefrom, it is not necessary to state the facts showing such performance, but it may be stated generally that the party duly performed all the conditions on his part required thereby; if such allegations be controverted the party pleading must establish in the trial the facts showing such performance.

Moreover, the court in People v Gordon (1951) 105 CA2d 711, 724, 234 P2d 287 held that if a party relies on a statute that contains an exception in the enacting clause, or clause creating and defining the asserted right, "such exception must be negatived in the initial pleading."

The application of the rule in Gordon and CCP §459 allocates to the landlord the obligation to plead compliance with the conditions that enable an eviction to be brought, because most ordinances set forth permissible grounds for eviction as exceptions to eviction control. Moreover, it is the practice in some rent control jurisdictions to require the landlord to allege compliance with the local ordinance. Also, most (if not all) eviction control ordinances require that the landlord state the ground for eviction in the termination notice. In addition, the landlord must allege service of proper notice of termination in the complaint under CCP §1161. Some ordinances mandate compliance with habitability standards as a prerequisite to eviction actions. These requirements appear to make compliance with an applicable eviction control ordinance an element of the landlord's case and thus to impose on the landlord at least the obligation of pleading that the landlord has complied with the local ordinance.

The defendant tenant, however, may not simply rely on a denial of the landlord's allegations in the complaint that the landlord has complied with the subject rent control ordinance. Since the supreme court in Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 697, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045, characterized rent control ordinances as creating substantive defenses to eviction, the tenant must plead that the plaintiff landlord has violated the ordinance as an affirmative defense and probably needs to allege factual matters that support the defense.

This apparent dichotomy is reflected in the Judicial Council's unlawful detainer complaint and answer forms. The complaint form (¶14) contains a provision for the landlord to allege whether the tenant's unit is subject to a local rent control ordinance and, if so, that plaintiff has met all applicable requirements of the ordinance (see form in §9.31). The answer form allows the tenant to deny statements made in the complaint, but contains in the list of affirmative defenses an allegation (¶3.g) that the landlord's demand for possession violates an applicable rent control ordinance (see §10.51). See also §10.59.

PRACTICE TIP: To withstand a demurrer, a landlord should allege compliance with the applicable rent control ordinance in the language established and required by CCP §459. A general allegation is probably sufficient for the pleading stage. Similarly, the defendant, in order to raise the defense properly, must comply with pleading requirements for new matter in the nature of an affirmative defense.

§9.16B (2) Burden of Producing Evidence

The pleading requirements for both landlords and tenants appear to dictate the minimum obligations on both parties as to the burden of producing evidence, but with the same apparent duality as the pleading issues discussed in §9.16A. As part of the plaintiff landlord's case in chief, the landlord must introduce competent evidence to demonstrate that the landlord has complied with the applicable ordinance.

EXAMPLE 1: In a case based on the landlord's personal intention to move into the tenant's apartment, the landlord must testify as to the desire to occupy the apartment in addition to the factual matters that would tend to demonstrate that the landlord (in efforts to obtain possession) is operating in good faith and with no ulterior motives. See §§7.55, 7.65-7.68.

EXAMPLE 2: Similarly, if habitability is a precondition of an owner move-in, or if obtaining final building permits is a requirement for a repair or capital improvement project, the plaintiff must introduce evidence that he or she has obtained and complied with the proper applications, permits, and orders. See §§7.63-7.64.

The attorney representing the plaintiff landlord's case must be prepared to introduce evidence that will be sufficient to withstand a motion by the defendant tenant for nonsuit under CCP §581c (jury trial) or for judgment under CCP §631.8 (nonjury trial).

Once the landlord's case in chief has been presented, the tenant has the burden of producing evidence to negate the contentions of the landlord or to introduce new evidence which would demonstrate that the landlord is not acting in good faith, is retaliating for some reason against the tenant, or has failed to obtain a permit or other governmental order that is a precondition for the action which the landlord seeks to take. If the defendant tenant does not meet the burden of producing evidence that negates the landlord's case in chief, then at the conclusion of the tenant's defense the landlord should move for a directed verdict or judgment. See CCP §§630, 631.8.

§9.16C (3) Burden of Proof

Determining which party has the ultimate burden of proof after each party has met the burden of producing evidence is unsettled on the issue of just cause for eviction. No court of appeal has squarely addressed that issue in the context of local eviction control laws.

Such was not the case in decisions which interpreted federal price control regulations during and immediately following World War II. In interpreting the eviction restrictions of the federal enactments, that often used the same terminology as modern rent control ordinances in California cities and counties, courts frequently held that the matter of "good faith" was an ultimate fact to be determined by the trier of fact and, therefore, the landlord had the burden of proof. See, e.g., Janise v Bryan (1948) 89 CA2d Supp 933, 201 P2d 466. See §7.55.

In Janise, the court did not apply California law in interpreting the federal regulation. Under California law the issue of which party has the ultimate burden of proof is far less clear, and the result ultimately may be the opposite from the holdings of the cases interpreting the World War II federal price regulations.

Evidence Code §500 provides that a party has the burden of proof on each fact the existence (or nonexistence) of which is essential to establish its claim or defense, unless provided otherwise by law. The supreme court in Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 698, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045, held that the phrase "unless otherwise provided by law" did not refer to local or municipal ordinances. The court held that the creation of any presumption affecting the burden of proof in a municipal ordinance is preempted by state law.

The party on whom the law places the burden of proof bears the risk of nonpersuasion if the trier of fact, after hearing all the evidence, believes that the evidence is evenly weighted between the parties. This consequence could be particularly significant in a close case tried before a jury. See discussion in §§12.38, 12.60-12.63 regarding allocation of the burden of proof on the defense of retaliatory eviction. For further discussion of burden of proof generally, see Hazard, Tait & Fletcher, Cases and Materials on Pleading and Procedure: State and Federal (7th ed 1994).

§9.16D d. Pleading and Proving Compliance With Local Ordinance

A few rent control ordinances (e.g., those in Berkeley and Santa Monica) require in unlawful detainer actions that a landlord plead and prove general compliance with the ordinance in addition to allegations of just cause for eviction under the ordinance. Such requirements, insofar as they affect the pleading of a complaint, may be subject to challenge as impermissible attempts to regulate unlawful detainer procedure under Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045. See §9.16C. In any event, the application of CCP §459 (discussed in §9.16A) would require at a minimum that the landlord generally plead compliance with the substantive conditions of the ordinance. See also §§7.73-7.75 for discussion of notice and pleading requirements, presumptions, and burdens of proof.

If lack of compliance is expected to be disputed, the landlord should be aware of CC §1947.7(a), which may exempt the landlord from fines and penalties imposed by a local rent ordinance containing registration requirements if the landlord attempted in good faith to comply with the ordinance. Landlords who have so acted in good faith should also plead in the unlawful detainer complaint substantial compliance under CC §1947.7(b) to counter an affirmative defense based on any violation of the ordinance (see §10.59). In a jurisdiction that requires registration of the units, such as the City of Berkeley, a landlord who attempted to comply, in good faith, with those requirements may plead compliance under CC §1947.7(c), but must have substantially complied as provided in CC §1947.7(e) prior to initiating the unlawful detainer action.

III. SETTLEMENT AND STIPULATIONS

§9.17 A. Counseling and Negotiation

Unlawful detainer litigation poses unusual problems for the attorney because it touches on basic values, expectations, and fears, and thus often engenders emotional responses to the situation in the client. Landlords frequently express anger and frustration when the tenant asserts a defense to the action that not only delays the eviction but also appears to accuse the owner of improper conduct. Tenants commonly express emotions ranging from resigned despair to anger at the prospect of losing their home. At the extreme, the attorney may encounter the "deadbeat," destructive tenant or the unscrupulous landlord who pursues profit without the corresponding responsibilities of ownership.

The client's intense feelings are frequently compounded by economic realities. For landlords who operate on narrow profit margins, lost rent, attorney fees, and court costs may cut deeply into their standard of living. The financial condition of many tenants may prevent them from finding other housing, meeting the expenses of a move, or retaining counsel. Clients' emotional responses to the situation may be heightened by a lack of understanding of the law and procedure regulating the landlord-tenant relationship. Typically, the parties also feel righteous about their own position and remain insensitive to the trauma that the other party may be experiencing. Landlords may focus, for example, on their violated property rights but overlook the fact that an unlawful detainer action may force the tenant to leave his or her home, with all its emotional attachments. Tenants, on the other hand, may be caught up in asserting what they perceive to be their rights but lose sight of the fact that the landlord may depend on the rent for the necessities of life from month to month.

These emotional, ideological, and decidedly nonlegal factors pose significant challenges to the attorney who handles a number of landlord-tenant cases. Attorneys who make no effort to understand the needs and fears of their client and the opposing party, and who do not inform their client of the advantages and disadvantages of the alternative courses of action, will tend to negotiate from a "take it or leave it/win at all costs" perspective. As a result, options are frequently not explored and the problems that may have caused the litigation are left unresolved (e.g., an abusive manager or lack of maintenance unknown to the landlord). After settlement or trial, the client may leave the courthouse just as confused and upset as before. The attorney's failure to explore alternative means of resolving problems may result in more unlawful detainer actions going to trial and engender public distrust of the judicial system and lawyers in general. From the attorney's perspective, ethical problems may arise (see, e.g., Snyder v State Bar (1976) 18 C3d 286, 133 CR 864, discussed in §10.2), and future business may be lost. For discussion of counseling landlords and tenants generally, see chaps 4-5.

On first being retained by a landlord, the attorney should attempt to uncover the various financial and emotional factors underlying the client's desire to evict the tenant. Dissuading the landlord from relying on nonfinancial factors may benefit the client in the long run. See, e.g., Clarion Corp. v American Home Prods. Corp. (7th Cir 1974) 494 F2d 860, 864, in which the court set out "a model of the kind of 'evaluation' letter an embattled lawyer might send a difficult client" (from Mellinkoff, Lawyers and the System of Justice (1976)), including the following excerpt (p 76):

> The sole objective of the litigation is to get money for you; it is not to visit some kind of revenge on the defendants, nor is it to make an example of them so that, for fear of further repercussions, they will mend their ways.
> [I]t is a major mistake to let extraneous factors—such as "proving" something to someone—get in the way of a hard-headed, dollars and cents, monetary evaluation of the case.

The tenant's attorney must not only evaluate the merits of the defense, but also pay close attention to the real needs of the client. Whether a residential or commercial tenant, the client may need only additional time to move or may be willing to meet the landlord's reasonable expectations regarding some underlying problem. In addition, the attorney must advise the tenant concerning the economic cost of litigation and vindication of "rights."

Because each case is different, no generalizations can be made about a lawyer's "appropriate" response. Increased awareness of the client's genuine needs, however, will often eliminate unnecessary litigation and result in the client's long-range satisfaction with the legal process.

§9.17A B. CCP §998 Offers to Settle

An offer to settle before trial under CCP §998 can be an effective litigation fee-shifting tool and provide an incentive to settle. A party who refuses the offer and then fails to get a more favorable judgment will have to pay the other party's postoffer costs (including attorney fees as costs), and possibly expert witness fees, that otherwise would have been borne by the other party. CCP §998(c)-(d). The following are examples of landlord-tenant actions ruling on an award of fees and costs under §998:

- Wong v Thrifty Corp. (2002) 97 CA4th 261, 118 CR2d 276.
- Meissner v Paulson (1989) 212 CA3d 785, 260 CR 826.

For further discussion, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 47 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

§9.18 C. Participation by Parties Is Essential

Under CCP §664.6, a party to a settlement agreement may enforce the agreement in a law and motion proceeding filed in the underlying action. This procedure is not available unless an action is pending. Kirby v Southern Cal. Edison Co. (2000) 78 CA4th 840, 93 CR2d 223. If a confession of judgment under CCP §§1132-1134 is used (e.g., to collect delinquent rent) before an action is filed, that process requires that the party confessing judgment (defendant) be represented by independent counsel.

All parties must meaningfully participate in the negotiations and must personally sign the stipulation for judgment or dismissal, or orally agree to the settlement on the record in court. Harris v Rudin, Richman & Appel (1999) 74 CA4th 299, 87 CR2d 822 (Harris I). Note, however, that a settlement agreement may be mutually rescinded. In Harris v Rudin, Richman & Appel (2002) 95 CA4th 1332, 116 CR2d 552 (Harris II), lawyers who had all signed the settlement agreement were permitted to rescind it in light of later-discovered information about the Governor's signing into law an amendment that materially changed the controlling statute on which the agreement was based.

The attorney's signature or representation to the judge in lieu of a party's signature or appearance will not suffice in an enforcement motion under CCP §664.6. See Levy v Superior Court (1995) 10 C4th 578, 41 CR2d 878, in which, on the defendant's motion to enforce the settlement agreement signed only by the plaintiff's attorney, the court ruled that under §664.6 the term "party" means the litigant, not the litigant's attorney. Participation by a party's insurer instead of the party itself has also invalidated a settlement agreement. Elnekave v Via Dolce Homeowners Ass'n (2006) 142 CA4th 1193, 48 CR3d 663. See also Williams v Saunders (1997) 55 CA4th 1158, 64 CR2d 571.

The Levy decision presents a technical problem about the immediate ability of the attorneys to put on the record a settlement made at the courthouse, if the principal having the authority to enter into the settlement is absent. Having a client on telephone standby during courthouse negotiations is not sufficient. See Johnson v Department of Corrections (1995) 38 CA4th 1700, 1709, 45 CR2d 740.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel for landlords in particular may prepare for the possibility of settlements reached "on the courthouse steps" by having the principals themselves appear at all scheduled settlement conferences and at the day of trial (for an informal conference), or by obtaining in advance a special, written power of attorney giving authority to settle the case to the principal's representative who will attend the court proceedings.

In Stewart v Preston Pipeline, Inc. (2005) 134 CA4th 1565, 36 CR3d 901, the court of appeal affirmed a summary judgment award enforcing a settlement agreement following mediation that had not been signed by all parties, but rather by defendants' attorney with authority. The challenge came from the plaintiff who had (with his former counsel) signed the agreement. The court also found that the agreement contained a clause that waived the confidentiality provisions of Evid C §1152.

D. Settlement Terms and Conditions

§9.18A 1. Judgment Versus Dismissal

Unless the parties are irreconcilably opposed on the issue of possession, unlawful detainer suits are generally amenable to settlement. If the tenant is willing to vacate the premises, for example, the landlord might waive all or a portion of back rent and damages, give the tenant additional time to vacate, or both. It may also benefit the landlord to offer to pay the tenant's moving expenses when these expenses pose a major stumbling block for the tenant in vacating the premises. Conversely, if the tenant's proof of breach of the implied warranty of habitability is compelling, the landlord might agree to dismiss the unlawful detainer action, to allow the tenant to pay a reduced sum for the months during which rent was withheld, and to devise a schedule under which needed repairs will be made and a commensurate rent will be paid.

When a settlement restores possession to the landlord and compromises the remaining issues of money and time for the tenant to vacate, the most common settlement takes the form of a stipulation for entry of judgment and a judgment that (a) awards possession to the landlord and (b) stays execution of the judgment until a specified date, perhaps on the condition that the tenant pay a specified sum by a certain date. A judgment entered on such a stipulation may not include damages beyond the date on which it is entered (see §§10.40, 12.27). However, many courts will uphold a stipulation for judgment that makes the acceptance of payments due under the stipulated judgment conditioned upon the current rent being paid. If the landlord waives past-due rent and damages in exchange for possession, the stipulation should so provide in order to protect the tenant against a later action for back rent, damages, or both. To protect the landlord's interests in the event of a default, the stipulation may provide that, if the defendant does not vacate the premises as specified (or pay back rent or damages as agreed), the landlord may file a verified application to obtain a writ of possession without further notice or hearing. Some judges will require notice in this situation even if the tenant has waived it.

If the parties are unable to agree on attorney fee allocation, the settlement agreement may expressly provide for a court award of attorney fees at a later time if certain conditions are satisfied or if the lawsuit will be dismissed after certain actions have been taken. See Jackson v Homeowners Ass'n Monte Vista Estates-East (2001) 93 CA4th 773, 113 CR2d 363.

WARNING: Always check the underlying lease or rental agreement for an attorney fee provision, and always provide for a resolution of attorney fee and cost issues in any settlement offer. A court of appeal enforced a commercial lease clause (that allowed the landlord to recover attorney fees in any enforcement action that "determined" that the tenant was in default) after the landlord accepted the tenant's CCP §998 offer (which was silent on costs and fees). See Wong v Thrifty Corp. (2002) 97 CA4th 261, 263, 118 CR2d 276.

Other issues that should be considered in settling an unlawful detainer action include disposition of a security deposit and waivers of claims by both parties. A stipulation for judgment without a proper waiver of claims, even if judgment is entered in favor of the landlord, does not preclude a subsequent suit by the tenant for claims arising out of the tenancy. Landeros v Pankey (1995) 39 CA4th 1167, 1174, 46 CR2d 165. See Morris v Blank (2001) 94 CA4th 823, 114 CR2d 672. Some attorney errors, however, are correctable under CCP §473. For example, entry of judgment following acceptance of an erroneous CCP §998 offer (see §9.17A) resulting from attorney mistake, neglect, or inadvertence may be vacated under the discretionary relief clause in CCP §473. Zamora v Clayborn Contracting Group (2002) 28 C4th 249, 121 CR2d 187. However, a voluntary dismissal entered pursuant to a settlement agreement is not subject to mandatory relief from dismissal resulting from attorney mistake, neglect, or inadvertence under CCP §473. Huens v Tatum (1997) 52 CA4th 259, 60 CR2d 438. Whether the Huens rule applies with equal force to entry of judgment pursuant to a settlement has not been the subject of decisional law, but it is likely to be the same, given the reasoning of the supreme court in Zamora and the court of appeal in Huens (52 CA4th at 262) and the specific referral to "default judgment" in the mandatory relief clause in CCP §473.

PRACTICE TIP: A landlord settling an eviction suit by compromising substantial back rent owed, or making other concessions, will expect that the settlement is comprehensive. In view of the opinions in Landeros and Huens, counsel for the landlord should either insist that any settlement include a waiver and release of all known and unknown potential claims by the tenant, including an express waiver of the provision of CC §1542, or counsel the client carefully with regard to the risk of further claims. From the landlord's point of view, it is also desirable to have a tenant having potential claims based on the condition of the premises or wrongful eviction expressly acknowledge and release those claims.

§9.18B 2. Disadvantages of Stipulated Judgment

Attorneys for both landlords and tenants should be aware that stipulated judgments contain potential for abuse. In Little v Sanchez (1985) 166 CA3d 501, 213 CR 297, a landlord of low-income residential units followed a practice of using a stipulation for judgment form in unlawful detainer actions. In the stipulations, the tenants obtained stays of execution in return for their agreement to pay all past-due rent and to make monthly payments that often were in excess of the maximum legal rent. The court of appeal held that the judgments entered under these stipulations were void for removing the tenants' statutory protections. The court further held that a class action attacking these judgments should have been certified by the trial court.

In Pelletier v Alameda Yacht Harbor (1986) 188 CA3d 1551, 230 CR 253, the court held that a stipulated judgment in an unlawful detainer action was not a bar to a later action for retaliatory eviction. The court reasoned that the defense "was not fully and fairly litigated in an adversary hearing, and thus was not conclusively established." 188 CA3d at 1557. This result could have been avoided if the landlord had insisted on a clause in the stipulated judgment releasing the parties from any further liability arising out of the tenancy. See also Landeros v Pankey (1995) 39 CA4th 1167, 46 CR2d 165, discussed in §3.35, in which the tenant was not collaterally estopped (by the settlement of the unlawful detainer action) from suing the landlord for damages for breach of the implied warranty of habitability. Careful drafting of the settlement documents could have avoided this problem.

Even though it represents a legitimate agreement settling the parties' differences, a stipulation allowing for immediate entry of judgment may affect the tenant's ability to obtain rental premises in the future. In some localities, landlords pay private reporting services to search judicial records to determine whether a prospective tenant has previously been sued. Because these services often report only that an unlawful detainer action was filed, or that judgment was entered against the tenant, the actual nature of a stipulated judgment might not be reported. Thus, a future rental application submitted by the tenant might be rejected, even though the prior judgment may have represented a significant compromise on both sides.

PRACTICE TIP: To minimize the negative impact of an actual judgment against the tenant, the parties might stipulate that the action be dismissed with prejudice on the tenant's performance of certain conditions (i.e., vacating the premises and paying rent or damages, or both, by a specified date), rather than stipulate to immediate entry of judgment. The stipulation could further provide that the landlord would be authorized to file the stipulation and obtain an immediate judgment and writ of possession if the conditions were not performed. For a form for such a stipulation, see §9.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.18C 3. Stipulated Judgment Procedure

In order for the landlord to obtain immediate entry of judgment and issuance of a writ, the stipulation must cover all the essentials of the judgment. When a stipulation sets forth all the terms of a judgment agreed on by the parties, the mere filing of the stipulation normally provides a sufficient basis for entry of judgment on either party's ex parte application. See Heller v Dyerville Mfg. Co. (1897) 116 C 127, 47 P 1016. If the stipulation omits any essential element, however, judgment cannot be entered until the missing element is supplied by proof or further stipulation. See Rooney v Vermont Inv. Corp. (1973) 10 C3d 351, 368, 110 CR 353. Although it delays the landlord more than a stipulation for immediate entry of judgment, a conditional stipulation for entry of judgment might mitigate the adverse impact of a report to a prospective landlord by allowing the tenant to point out that a dismissal with prejudice does not reflect negatively on his or her future prospects as a responsible tenant. In addition, the landlord would normally want the stipulation to contain provisions whereby the tenant expressly waives the right to seek any appeal or any further stay of any proceeding beyond that which is expressly set out in the stipulation.

PRACTICE TIP: The type of stipulation that best protects the landlord from further delay in the event of non-performance by the tenant is one that provides for filing of the stipulation, entry of judgment thereon, issuance of a writ of possession, and the posting of the sheriff's notice, with a stay only on the final act of eviction by the sheriff. Under such a stipulation, default by the tenant will create minimum prejudice to the landlord. Conditional stipulations that do not allow for entry of judgment prior to default by the tenant generally result in at least two weeks of further delay before the landlord can recover possession of the premises. This arrangement may be resisted by the tenant. See §9.18B.

§9.18D 4. Duty to Inform Court of Stay or Settlement

California Rules of Court 3.650 and 3.1385 require attorneys (and parties who are not represented) to notify the court and all other counsel or appearing parties immediately if a case is stayed (Rule 3.650) or if it is settled (Rule 3.1385). Rule 3.1385 also requires the plaintiff to notify an arbitrator or other court-connected neutral of the settlement immediately in writing. Oral notice must also be given if the settlement occurs within 10 days of a hearing, conference, or trial. Sanctions are awardable if the responsible party does not notify all opposing counsel or parties and the arbitrator or neutral at least two days before a scheduled hearing or settlement conference. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1385(a)(2). Rule 3.1385 further provides that, except for good cause, the plaintiff or party seeking affirmative relief must dismiss any case within 45 days after the date of settlement, or the court must do so. If it is a conditional settlement, the date of filing the dismissal must be specified in the notice to the court that a settlement has occurred, and the party or, failing that, the court, must dismiss the case, unless good cause is shown, within 45 days of the date when the last act is to be accomplished.

Comment: The landlord's attorney should ensure that the stipulation spells out all the essential elements of the proposed judgment, so that entry of judgment and issuance of a writ of possession will be essentially ministerial acts on the tenant's failure to comply with the stipulation. See §9.18. The parties may alternatively stipulate to immediate entry of judgment with execution stayed so long as the tenant complies with the stipulated terms. See §9.18. Or they may instead stipulate to immediate dismissal, with a provision for the trial court to retain jurisdiction under CCP §664.6 for enforcement of settlement, to prevent the tenant's name from being published by credit reporting agencies. See §5.25. In some cases, the landlord may wish to include a waiver and release of all known and unknown potential claims by the tenant, including an express waiver of CC §1542. A judgment must declare in its terms the specific names of the parties against whom and in whose favor the judgment is to be entered. A judgment must also separately state the amounts of principal damages, costs, and attorney fees. On the obligations regarding dismissal of court actions after settlement, see §9.18D. See also California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 40, 46-48 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

IV. REPRESENTING LANDLORDS IN EVICTIONS

A. Ethical Considerations for Attorney

§9.20 1. Rules of Professional Conduct

California attorneys are bound by the Rules of Professional Conduct of the State Bar of California, the most recent version of which was promulgated May 27, 1989. Bus & P C §6077. The rules are also found in the California Rules of Court. The conduct of California attorneys is governed by these rules, and not by the American Bar Association's Model Rules of Professional Conduct, although the two sets of rules are similar in many respects. People v Ballard (1980) 104 CA3d 757, 164 CR 81. An attorney who violates professional rules risks more than state bar disciplinary action. Under CCP §128.7(c), by presenting any pleading, petition, written notice of motion, or other similar paper to the court, an attorney is certifying that a variety of conditions relating to the proper motive and good faith of the document are met, and may be subject to sanctions if any of the conditions is not met.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.21 2. Communicating With Tenant

Any communication between an attorney and an adverse party known to be represented by counsel is clearly prohibited. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-100. Communication with an unrepresented adverse party is not prohibited. McMillan v Shadow Ridge at Oak Park Homeowner's Ass'n (2008) 165 CA4th 960, 81 CR3d 550. Because of limited scope representation (see §§4.2A, 5.4A), confusion may arise about whether an adverse party is represented by counsel. If an attorney is aware that the adverse party may have been assisted by counsel who is not counsel of record, the attorney should clarify that fact and tell the opposing party not to reveal the content of any communications with counsel.

When the tenant is not represented by counsel, the landlord's attorney must be extremely cautious about suggesting the propriety of a settlement to the tenant. For instance, the landlord's attorney may inadvertently make certain "suggestions" to the tenant, such as "If I were you, I would settle this case," or "How soon can you move?" If the tenant perceives such statements as legal advice, grounds for disciplinary action may exist. California Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(B) provides that an attorney may not represent even potentially conflicting interests, except with the written consent of each client. If the attorney makes any statements to the tenant at all, they should be accompanied by a clear notification that the attorney represents the opposing party.

Misrepresentations of fact or law to an opponent appearing in propria persona may also constitute grounds for disciplinary action. California Rules of Prof Cond 5-220 prohibits an attorney from suppressing "any evidence that [the attorney or his or her client] has a legal obligation to reveal or to produce," and Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200(B) prohibits an attorney from seeking "to mislead the judge, judicial officer, or jury by an artifice or false statement of fact or law." It appears that counsel's duty to be accurate and complete in representing fact and law would extend to an unrepresented opponent. Although attorneys frequently exaggerate the facts and law when negotiating with opposing counsel, they are trained to expect and meet such tactics. The average landlord or tenant who is unable to secure counsel, however, is more vulnerable to being misled by misrepresentation by experienced, and often intimidating, counsel. Attorneys should avoid any conduct that smacks of impropriety.

§9.22 B. Initial Meeting With Landlord

During the initial meeting with the landlord, the landlord's attorney should establish by written agreement the attorney's scope of legal representation (see §§4.2-4.2B, 9.23A) and obtain sufficient information to make at least a preliminary determination of whether the landlord is likely to prevail in an unlawful detainer action. Among other things, the attorney should determine:

- the nature of the breach of the rental agreement;
- the materiality of the breach;
- whether the property is regulated by a local rent control law; and
- whether the tenant has any defenses to the action.

In jurisdictions that have adopted eviction controls as part of a rent control scheme, the attorney must also determine whether the owner has complied with the law and whether one of the enumerated "good causes" for eviction exists (see §§7.53-7.72, 9.13, 9.16).

Even if a landlord has a completely meritorious cause of action for unlawful detainer, it is always prudent to explore with the client whether the dispute could be resolved by negotiation. The practitioner should be aware, however, that no agreement with the tenant will be enforceable unless it is made a part of the unlawful detainer action (see §9.18). Confessions of judgment are extremely difficult to prepare properly, they require the participation of counsel for the defendant (see CCP §1132(b)), and courts are sometimes reluctant to enforce them. If the landlord is amenable to negotiating a settlement but also wishes to have a remedy if the tenant fails to perform, the only viable mechanism is to file a stipulation in an unlawful detainer action, providing for entry of judgment if the tenant breaches and for dismissal on the tenant's performance of the settlement.

Before filing an eviction action, the attorney should also advise the landlord of any risks that may exist if the case is not successful. These include the risk of having to pay the tenant's attorneys fees and costs if they are provided for in a written agreement and the tenant prevails, and, in rent-controlled jurisdictions, the potential that the tenant might file an "attempted wrongful eviction" action against the landlord.

If the landlord decides to proceed with the eviction, the attorney should explain eviction procedures to the client. Some attorneys hand out fact sheets that explain court procedures and answer questions most commonly asked by landlords. Some property owners may not be aware of the delays that may occur in litigation and the time it may take to bring the case to trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.23 1. Actions In Propria Persona

A landlord may initiate an unlawful detainer action in propria persona in a limited civil case. If the eviction is uncontested, allowing the landlord to win by default, a pro per action is adequate. If the tenant resists the eviction, however, the landlord is unlikely to be able to handle the case competently without legal guidance. Some attorneys provide assistance to pro per landlords by drafting pleadings, completing judicial council forms, and advising the landlords on procedure. See §9.23A. Before doing so, an attorney should consider the fact that he or she will have no control over the litigation and may later be accused of inadequate representation if the landlord misunderstands advice, fails to follow it, or fails to inform the attorney of a significant circumstance or development in the case.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.23A 2. Fee Agreement and Limited Scope Representation

Attorneys representing landlords should use written retainer agreements. See §4.2. The scope of the employment should be described in detail. Limited scope representation (sometimes called "unbundling") is a "relationship between an attorney and a person seeking legal services in which they have agreed that the scope of the legal services will be limited to specific tasks the attorney will perform for the person." Cal Rules of Ct 3.35(a). The State Bar of California has created guidelines to assist attorneys in limited scope representation. See full discussion and a useful checklist in §§4.2-4.2B.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.24 3. Wrongful Eviction

An attorney must explain to a landlord client the legal restrictions on eviction, the rights of a tenant faced with eviction, and the potential liability for wrongful eviction, especially if there is any suspicion of impropriety on the landlord's part. See generally chaps 7-8. The landlord's need to understand tenant rights is even more pronounced in rent-controlled jurisdictions where any eviction that would enable the landlord to raise the rent on a vacated unit is vulnerable to challenge as being motivated by the intent to increase rent. See §§7.4, 7.25-7.28, 7.54-7.55, 7.78, 8.150. Attorneys should consider providing the landlord with excerpts of local rent or eviction control ordinances (or attaching copies to a written retainer agreement), so that the landlord has written notice of both the permitted grounds for eviction and the penalties for wrongful eviction. Some attorneys also provide copies of the state retaliatory eviction law (CC §1942.5; see §§8.109-8.135).

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.25 4. Information Necessary to Pursue Eviction

To evaluate the legality and potential success of an eviction, and to commence eviction proceedings, the landlord's attorney must obtain detailed information from the client concerning the tenancy. The attorney may use this information to determine, for example, whether:

- There are any circumstances that may invite a wrongful eviction claim;
- The landlord's motive may be (or appear to be) retaliation;
- Any notices already served by the landlord were proper; and
- There are any persons other than those the landlord considers to be "tenants" who should be made parties to the litigation (see §§9.26, 9.51).

Section 9.27 contains an example of an eviction information form that the client can complete and return to the attorney, or that the attorney can complete based on the client's answers in the initial interview. The former procedure should not be viewed as a substitute for an interview, however, and the client should be encouraged to ask questions about any aspect of eviction procedures.

The attorney has an obligation to examine the landlord for all facts relevant to the case. If the attorney fails to investigate the facts adequately before proceeding with an eviction, he or she could be liable to the landlord for malpractice or to the tenant for malicious prosecution, if the eviction action lacked probable cause. See Norton v Hines (1975) 49 CA3d 917, 924, 123 CR 237.

§9.26 a. Defendants Other Than Known Tenant

Landlords sometimes believe that if they rent an apartment to one or more named parties, anyone else who occupies the unit is a trespasser or an "illegal subtenant" with no right to be part of an eviction proceeding even if the rental agreement did not limit occupancy to specified persons. In an action to regain possession of real property, however, unless a prejudgment claim of right to possession has been served on occupants in accordance with CCP §415.46, any occupant not named in the judgment for possession who occupied the premises on the date the action was filed may object to enforcement of the judgment against him or her by filing a claim of right to possession under CCP §1174.3. At a minimum, the filing of such a claim will delay the landlord's recovery of the premises. The landlord can usually avoid this problem by serving a prejudgment claim of right to possession on any person who appears to be occupying or claims to have occupied the premises at the time the unlawful detainer action is filed. On serving and evicting unnamed occupants, see §§9.51-9.55.

C. Role of Insurance

§9.28 1. Wrongful Eviction Coverage

Attorneys should take particular care to evaluate the landlord's insurance coverage. Landlords, especially those who purchase a single-family dwelling with the intent of occupying it themselves and renting the premises out at a later time, or of renting out a portion of the premises, might obtain only "homeowner" rather than "landlord" insurance. Homeowner insurance generally excludes coverage for "business pursuits" and is provided at a lower rate. Such insurance usually does not afford the landlord any protection from a tenant's claim for damages, so the attorney should read the client's policy rather than taking at face value the client's assertion that coverage exists.

Most owners of rental properties carry fire and general liability insurance. When deciding whether to pursue an eviction action, the attorney should inquire whether the landlord's liability insurance is in full force and effect and whether it contains "wrongful eviction" coverage. Moreover, before giving the tenant an eviction notice, it is prudent to advise a landlord who does not appear to have such coverage to attempt to obtain it. See §§1.35, 8.150.

In California, earthquake risks have increased the number of availability and cost cycles for property insurance. Coverage for "wrongful eviction" had been expressly listed as a covered item in many liability policies or had been included as part of a general liability policy. Some insurers, noting an increase in eviction-related claims and perhaps suspecting that landlords are depending on insurance "payoffs" to permit them to proceed with questionable evictions, now expressly exclude coverage for wrongful eviction.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.29 2. Tenant Claim for Punitive Damages

Landlords should be informed that an insurance carrier will not pay a judgment based on a finding of intentional wrongful misconduct by the landlord. Tenants often allege that a wrongful eviction was based on willful, oppressive, or malicious conduct as a basis for claiming punitive damages. Such tenant claims might prompt a "reservation of rights" by the insurance company, on the basis of possible noncoverage under the policy. The landlord then may hire independent counsel at the insurance company's expense under San Diego Navy Fed. Credit Union v Cumis Ins. Soc'y (1984) 162 CA3d 358, 208 CR 494. This right is now codified in CC §2860.

Not every reservation of rights entitles an insured to independent counsel (sometimes called Cumis counsel). See cases discussed in Dynamic Concepts, Inc. v Truck Ins. Exch. (1998) 61 CA4th 999, 71 CR2d 882. A mere allegation of punitive damages, e.g., will not by itself trigger the obligation to pay for independent counsel. Foremost Ins. Co. v Wilks (1988) 206 CA3d 251, 253 CR 596 (insurers barred by statute from indemnifying for punitive damages). And when a reservation of rights is based on coverage disputes that have nothing to do with the issues being litigated in the underlying action, the insurer need not pay for independent counsel. Dynamic Concepts, Inc. v Truck Ins. Exch., supra.

Another possible coverage problem is highlighted by Insurance Co. of the W. v Haralambos Beverage Co. (1987) 195 CA3d 1308, 241 CR 427. The court held that, when the terms of the policy apply only in the event of an "occurrence," defined as an accident neither expected nor intended from the standpoint of the insured, the insurer had no duty to defend if liability is based on claims of intentional misconduct. The inclusion of causes of action for negligence or other insured claims will generally require the insurer to defend the entire action. See Buss v Superior Court (1997) 16 C4th 35, 65 CR2d 366; California Liability Insurance Practice: Claims & Litigation §§4.14-4.15 (Cal CEB 1991).

V. PREPARING THE COMPLAINT

§9.30 A. Form of Pleading Optional

The Judicial Council has approved optional complaint and answer forms for use in unlawful detainer actions. Cal Rules of Ct 1.30, 1.35, App A. Although many trial court judges prefer that landlords use the Judicial Council form because it facilitates the process of locating the essential allegations of the complaint, the form complaint may be difficult to complete and may contain pitfalls in rent control jurisdictions. Clerks of each trial court must make copies of the forms available. CCP §425.12(c).

The discussion in §9.37 on necessary allegations applies to both the approved complaint form and a drafted complaint. The Judicial Council form (see §9.31) should be sufficient in most residential unlawful detainer actions. The form (¶7) is best suited for the most commonly encountered type of unlawful detainer action by a landlord against a tenant after service of a 3-day notice for nonpayment of rent, breach of a covenant of the lease, nuisance, or using the premises for an unlawful purpose (CCP §1161(2)-(4)), or after service of a 30-day or 60-day notice terminating a month-to-month tenancy (CC §§1946, 1946.1). The form (¶9) also accommodates pleading an eviction after the expiration of a fixed-term tenancy for which no notice is required. CCP §1161(1). See §8.82. For the eviction of an employee, agent, or licensee (no notice required other than that terminating the relationship; see §8.84) (CCP §1161(1)), counsel will need to modify the form to meet the needs of the case. The form (¶15) specifically provides for attachment of additional allegations. At the bottom of the first page of the form, there is a note indicating that the form should not be used for evictions after a sale or foreclosure of the property (3-day or 30-day notice required; see §§8.68A-8.68D). CCP §1161a. See also CCP §1161b, effective July 8, 2008, until the end of 2012, discussed in §8.68C.

Comment: This Judicial Council form was revised effective July 1, 2005. If the landlord's attorney anticipates postjudgment claims to possession (see §§13.70-13.73) by persons not named by their true names in the complaint (and consequently not named in the judgment or writ), those persons should not be labeled as "subtenants" in ¶6.c of the form unless that status is definite. Conceding the status of subtenant to a claimant would enhance his or her chances of successfully challenging the eviction. Therefore, the "other (specify)" box should be marked, the allegation "present status unknown" inserted, and a prejudgment claim form served with the complaint. See §§9.51-9.55. In such instances, using the Judicial Council form may be preferable to an attorney-drafted complaint.

In ¶6.d, modifications to the contract at the time relevant to the action should be alleged with sufficient completeness to support the existence of the cause of action. More information than this is not required. For example, every rent increase in a 20-year tenancy need not be listed, only the current rent.

Attaching a copy of the agreement as stated by ¶6.e of the form is optional. Landlords should be advised that the more items that are attached, the more likely errors in copying or assembly will occur, increasing exposure to a successful motion to quash. See chap 10.

There is some authority for the proposition that a complaint based on a written contract must either quote the relevant provisions verbatim or attach and incorporate the contract. See Harris v Rudin, Richman & Appel (1999) 74 CA4th 299, 307, 87 CR2d 822; Otworth v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1985) 166 CA3d 452, 458, 212 CR 743.

Landlord counsel should ensure that the defendant's name is inserted after the colon in the first line of ¶7.a, in addition to checking the appropriate boxes concerning which notice or notices were served.

An award of postjudgment damages is not proper in an unlawful detainer judgment. See Lehr v Crosby (1981) 123 CA3d Supp 1, 10, 177 CR 96. Thus, ¶17.f should be checked in every case.

C. Selecting the Court

§9.32 1. Subject Matter Jurisdiction; Limited Versus Unlimited Civil Case

Subject matter jurisdiction is losing relevance as an issue in unlawful detainer actions because of trial court unification statewide. Under CCP §86(a)(4), unlawful detainer actions in which the total amount of claimed damages does not exceed $25,000 are considered "limited civil cases" for which the superior court has subject matter jurisdiction. Actions in which the total amount of claimed damages exceeds $25,000 are considered "unlimited civil cases" for which the superior court also has subject matter jurisdiction. See CCP §88; Cal Const art VI, §10. Unlawful detainer actions may not be brought in small claims courts. See CCP §116.220(a)(3).

Current focus is on whether an unlawful detainer action is properly designated as a limited or an unlimited civil case and whether it is filed in the proper venue and trial court location. (On venue, see §9.33.) Under CCP §422.30(b), unlawful detainer actions classified as "limited civil cases" are to be identified as such in the caption of each pleading.

In calculating damages for classifying the action properly, the rental value of the premises for the time the tenant continues to occupy the premises after termination of the tenancy is probably the most significant form of damages in an unlawful detainer action when no back rent can be collected. See §§9.37-9.40. If statutory damages (formerly treble damages) under CCP §1174 are sought, that amount must be included in calculating whether the case is an unlimited or a limited civil case. See Hoban v Ryan (1900) 130 C 96, 62 P 296.

A prayer for damages that could exceed limited civil case jurisdiction probably does not require transfer to another court location for trial and reclassification as an unlimited civil case if the landlord is willing to remit any excess recovery, exclusive of costs over the jurisdictional amount. See Stokus v Marsh (1990) 217 CA3d 647, 266 CR 90; Babcock v Antis (1979) 94 CA3d 823, 156 CR 673. If the landlord does not want to remit excess recovery, the parties may stipulate (or the landlord may make a motion) to amend the complaint to reclassify the case. See CCP §§403.020-403.030, 471.5-473; Cal Rules of Ct 2.111(11). See also §9.43.

Costs (including attorney fees) that are incidental to the unlawful detainer action are not included in calculating whether the aggregate amount claimed exceeds the jurisdictional limit; the court has jurisdiction to award costs and attorney fees that, when added to the substantive award, exceed the jurisdictional limit. Bakkebo v Municipal Court (1981) 124 CA3d 229, 177 CR 239. See Henigan v Ervin (1895) 110 C 37, 42 P 457. Therefore, any statement that the landlord is willing to remit any excess over the jurisdictional amount (e.g., complaint form ¶16, in §9.31) should be understood to apply only to damages and not costs or attorney fees.

WARNING: A judgment in an action filed as an unlimited civil case that awards a principal amount less than the jurisdictional maximum of a limited civil case may lead to a denial in whole or in part of costs of suit. See CCP §1033(a).

A complaint that indicates on its face that the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the action is subject to demurrer under CCP §430.10(a). See §10.31.

A court with proper subject matter jurisdiction is not deprived of power to try an unlawful detainer action by the fact that the tenant first filed a declaratory relief action in a neighboring county for a determination of the amount of rent owed. Childs v Eltinge (1973) 29 CA3d 843, 105 CR 864. The court in Childs held that the tenant's remedy in such a situation is to pay the amount of the landlord's demand under protest, and to seek a judgment in the declaratory relief action to establish the correct amount. Of course, the tenant could also defend the unlawful detainer action on the ground that the notice incorrectly stated the amount of rent due. When the landlord and tenant file actions in the same court, the question of which action may proceed to trial is one of precedence, and not of jurisdiction. Mobil Oil Corp. v Superior Court (1978) 79 CA3d 486, 493, 145 CR 17. As a summary action (see §§9.6-9.9), the unlawful detainer will usually be tried first, but might not be entitled to precedence if the tenant seeks a preliminary injunction under CCP §527 (see §§11.63-11.64). The preferred procedure will often be to consolidate or coordinate the cases (see §§11.65-11.69).

§9.33 2. Venue and Trial Court Location

The proper court for filing an unlawful detainer action is the superior court in the county where all or part of the leased premises is located. CCP §392(a)(1); see Childs v Eltinge (1973) 29 CA3d 843, 851, 105 CR 864. For residential tenancies, this rule coincides with the general civil rule that venue is proper in the county where the defendant resides. See CCP §395(a). Further, the proper court location for trial (i.e., branch or district office of the superior court) is the courthouse where the court tries unlawful detainer actions and that is nearest or most accessible to the premises. CCP §392(b). Many counties have local policies or rules requiring limited civil cases for unlawful detainer to be filed and/or tried in the court branch or district that would have been the proper municipal court for the action before trial court unification.

Improper venue is not usually a jurisdictional defect. Thus, an ordinary action filed in a court constituting improper venue may proceed to trial and judgment unless the defendant moves for an order transferring the action to the proper court. CCP §396b; see Barquis v Merchants Collection Ass'n (1972) 7 C3d 94, 101 CR 745. When an action for unlawful detainer is filed in an improper venue or court location for trial, however, an order transferring the action to the proper county or court location appears to be mandated by CCP §396a(b), unless the tenant is represented by counsel and consents to keeping the action in the county or court location where commenced. If the tenant files a transfer motion under CCP §396b, the court may award "reasonable expenses and attorney's fees incurred in making or resisting the motion." Code of Civil Procedure §§398-399 specify the procedures for designating the court to which the action will be transferred, and for transmitting the action to that court. For further discussion see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 20 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

A landlord should be wary of filing an unlawful detainer action in a court outside the county or court location where the premises are located, and then refusing to transfer the action voluntarily. Law and motion judges often view such actions as deliberate attempts to prejudice the tenant's rights and frequently impose sanctions on landlords for this conduct. See, e.g., CCP §396a(a), under which the landlord must allege facts in either the complaint or a separately filed affidavit, verified by either the landlord or its attorney, showing that the action was commenced in the proper county and court location for trial. If this statement does not appear in the complaint or an affidavit, the court may dismiss the action without prejudice. If the complaint is verified by a different individual (e.g., by a property manager when the named plaintiff is the landlord), a separate declaration of proper venue signed by the plaintiff or the plaintiff's attorney must be filed and served with the complaint. See CCP §396a.

See also CCP §128.7, under which an attorney, by presenting any pleading, petition, written notice of motion, or other similar paper to the court, is certifying that a variety of conditions relating to the proper motive and good faith of the document are met, and may be subject to sanctions if any of the conditions is not met. A landlord who follows a pattern of filing unlawful detainer actions in the wrong county or judicial district may be liable for an unlawful business practice under Bus & P C §§17200-17209. See Barquis v Merchants Collection Ass'n, supra, in which the court condemned such a pattern in collection suits.

NOTE: The caption of each pleading in an action must state the name of the court and the county, and, if the action is brought as a limited civil case, the caption must also state that the case is a limited civil case. CCP §422.30. See example in §9.19.

D. Proper Parties

§9.34 1. Plaintiffs

The general provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to proper parties apply to plaintiffs in unlawful detainer actions. See CCP §1165. Under these general provisions, the landlord must have the legal capacity to sue. See CCP §430.10(b). A complaint that fails to state whether the landlord is a corporation, an individual doing business under a fictitious name, or a partnership or other unincorporated association—or whether the landlord is licensed to do business in the jurisdiction—is subject to demurrer under CCP §430.10(b), (f).

When the lease or rental agreement is between the tenant and a management firm or resident manager, the issue of capacity to sue becomes important. A management firm that has entered into the lease or rental agreement in its own name and has the right to possession (generally provided in sophisticated management arrangements, often including a power of attorney) probably has the capacity to bring an unlawful detainer action in its own name without joining the owner. See CCP §369, which provides that persons who may sue without joining as parties those for whose benefit the action is prosecuted include, among others, a trustee of an express trust and (except for one on whom a power of sale has been conferred under a deed of trust or mortgage) a person with whom, or in whose name, a contract is made for the benefit of another. See also Cheney v Trauzettel (1937) 9 C2d 158, 69 P2d 832 (in unlawful detainer, the right to possession alone is involved; the broad question of title cannot be raised as a defense); Builders' Control Serv. v North Am. Title Guar. Co. (1962) 205 CA2d 68, 76, 22 CR 712 (assignee of sale proceeds has standing to sue escrow holder to recover amounts allegedly withheld without authority, even though assignee was required under terms of assignment to pay funds to assignor).

This conclusion does not conflict with the real-party-in-interest rule (CCP §367) because both the tenant and property owner would be bound by the judgment, and thus would be spared from further litigation brought in the owner's name. See Giselman v Starr (1895) 106 C 651, 657, 40 P 8 (purpose of real-party-in-interest rule (now CCP §367) is "to save a defendant, against whom a judgment may be obtained, from further harassment or vexation at the hands of other claimants to the same demand"). See also Friendy Village Community Ass'n v Silva & Hill Constr. Co. (1973) 31 CA3d 220, 107 CR 123 (plaintiff who has sold property, and therefore is no longer entitled to possession, is probably not "real party in interest" and has no standing to bring action). If the sale took place after the unlawful detainer action was filed, the new owner may, upon motion to the court, be substituted in place of the plaintiff as the real party plaintiff in the cause of action. CCP §368.5.

If a manager entered into the lease or rental agreement as an agent for the owner, and does not have the right to possession, then the owner must be joined as a plaintiff in an unlawful detainer action. Unlike a management firm, a resident manager rarely has the right to possession. In most cases, the manager either did not execute the lease, or executed it on behalf of the owner (see §§1.16-1.20). Even when the lease was made between the tenant and the management company, an unlawful detainer action may be brought by the owner suing in his or her own name. See Schader v White (1916) 173 C 441, 160 P 557 (undisclosed principal can sue in own name). For multi-unit residential property, the lease must identify the property owner or agent authorized to manage the premises and receive process, all notices, and demands on behalf of the owner. CC §§1961-1962.7. See §1.76.

A successor in interest of the landlord is a proper plaintiff in an unlawful detainer action even though he or she is not in privity of contract with the tenant. CC §821; Hewitt v Justice's Court of Brooklyn Township (1933) 131 CA 439, 21 P2d 641. When leased property is transferred, an unlawful detainer action may continue in the name of the transferor or the court may allow the transferee to be substituted in the action. See CCP §368.5. The right to accrued but unpaid rents remains, however, with the transferor unless it is expressly assigned to the transferee. Ginsberg v Austin (Fed Cir 1992) 968 F2d 1198. Purchasers who anticipate evicting a tenant in default on rent payments should request an express assignment from the seller of accrued rents and causes of action arising out of the assigned rental agreement.

A stock cooperative can sue in its own name to evict a tenant-shareholder. Sun Terrace Manor v Municipal Court (1973) 33 CA3d 739, 108 CR 307. It is doubtful, however, that an association of condominium or community apartment owners can sue in its own name to evict a tenant who has rented from an owner of an individual unit. See, e.g., Laguna Royale Owners Ass'n v Darger (1981) 119 CA3d 670, 174 CR 136.

2. Defendants

§9.35 a. Tenant and Subtenant

The tenant and any subtenant in possession are proper "parties defendant" to an unlawful detainer action. CCP §1164. If the name of the tenant or subtenant is unknown, the complaint may state a fictitious name. CCP §474. A "Doe" allegation is allowable unless the plaintiff actually knows the defendant's name. Munoz v Purdy (1979) 91 CA3d 942, 154 CR 472. Constructive knowledge of a defendant's name does not prevent a plaintiff from alleging a fictitious name. Grinnell v Fire Protection Sys. Co. (1986) 183 CA3d 352, 228 CR 292. For a default to be entered against a "Doe," CCP §474 requires that the summons allege that the defendant is being served either as an individual or on behalf of the person sued under the fictitious name. See Fuss v City of Los Angeles (1958) 162 CA2d 643, 646, 328 P2d 831; Armstrong v Superior Court (1956) 144 CA2d 420, 424, 301 P2d 51. On service of process, see §§9.45-9.51.

Subtenants need not be named in the complaint if a landlord wishes to evict only the tenant, but not the subtenants. Markham v Fralick (1934) 2 C2d 221, 39 P2d 804; Briggs v Electronic Memories & Magnetics Corp. (1975) 53 CA3d 900, 126 CR 34. If a landlord wishes to evict both the tenants and the subtenants under a month-to-month tenancy with a 30-day or 60-day notice, the landlord need not serve all of them with the notice, but must name and serve each of them in the unlawful detainer action. See Four Seas Inv. Corp. v International Hotel Tenants' Ass'n (1978) 81 CA3d 604, 146 CR 531. Markham v Fralick (1934) 2 C2d 221, 39 P2d 804. A 3-day notice, however, must be served on each party from whom possession is demanded. See CCP §1161(2)-(3). See §§7.27-7.28 on rent control provisions conferring tenant status on subtenants.

A tenant who sublets the premises may use the unlawful detainer remedy to evict the subtenant. CCP §1161(3); Reed v South Shore Foods, Inc. (1964) 229 CA2d 705, 711, 40 CR 575. When a tenant makes a valid assignment of the entire leasehold estate, the tenant (assignor) is not a necessary defendant in an action by the landlord against the assignee to recover possession of the premises, even though the tenant remains liable for rent under the lease. Chase v Peters (1918) 37 CA 358, 174 P 116.

Landlords frequently encounter unidentified persons on the premises who entered after the tenancy began. Every effort should be made to identify these persons immediately, at least before service of notice, so that they can be served with notice and named in the complaint. Many courts require a physical description of the "Doe" defendant before entering a judgment for possession against the defendant. "Doe" allegations and service in both termination notices and summonses and complaints may be used to avoid claims of right to possession (see §§9.26, 9.35A, 13.70-13.73) by persons whose existence as occupants is only suspected, or whose names are best left unspecified, until potentially unlawful detention can be confirmed. This tactic reduces landlord exposure for malicious prosecution.

§9.35A b. Occupant Unnamed in Complaint

An occupant unnamed in the complaint may be made subject to an unlawful detainer action and evicted under a writ of possession if the landlord employs the procedures provided in CCP §§415.46, 1174.25. See §§9.51-9.55. Even if a landlord fails to comply with these procedures, the exclusive remedy for contesting the eviction by a known occupant who is not named in the judgment for possession is a postjudgment claim for possession under CCP §1174.3, not a writ of mandate ordering the sheriff to restore possession to the tenant. Cardenas v Noren (1991) 235 CA3d 1344, 1 CR2d 367. See §§13.70-13.73. Compare Cardenas with Arrieta v Mahon (1982) 31 C3d 381, 182 CR 770 (occupant not named in judgment is not bound by writ of possession), decided prior to the enactment of CCP §§415.46, 1174.25 (Stats 1990, ch 1535, Stats 1991, ch 57, effective June 14, 1991).

Under CCP §1164, the court is specifically authorized to enter judgment against any tenant or subtenant who is served with process or who appears in the proceeding. Nonjoinder of a person who might have been named as a defendant is not available as a defense to a served defendant in an unlawful detainer action. CCP §1164. Subtenants who enter the premises after service of a notice to pay rent or quit under CCP §1161(2) may be named in the action; the fact that they were not served with notice is not a defense. CCP §1164. Persons who enter the premises under the tenant after commencement of the action are bound by the judgment as if they had been parties to the action. CCP §1164.

§9.35B c. Lender Holding Security Interest in Lease

Whether a lender who holds a security interest in the lease is a necessary party to the action depends on the lender's relationship with the landlord. In Glendale Fed. Bank v Hadden (1999) 73 CA4th 1150, 87 CR2d 102, a bank lent money to a tenant and obtained a deed of trust on the lease as security for the loan, but the bank failed to obtain from the landlord any lease amendment or other agreement giving the bank the right to cure any default in the payment of rent. The court held that the bank was not an indispensable party to an unlawful detainer action against the tenant for nonpayment of rent, because the bank had no right to possession. Also, the judgment for possession in the unlawful detainer action terminated the bank's security interest, even though the bank was not a party to the action.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.36 E. Relationship of Parties

The existence of a landlord-tenant relationship is a prerequisite to maintenance of an action to remove a tenant under CCP §1161(1)-(5), and the relationship must be alleged in the complaint. Francis v West Virginia Oil Co. (1917) 174 C 168, 162 P 394; Fredericksen v McCosker (1956) 143 CA2d 114, 299 P2d 908. The existence of some other relationship (e.g., an employer and an employee or tenant at will (CCP §1161(1)) or a foreclosure-purchaser and a defaulting owner (CCP §§1161a, 1161b) may also form a basis for an unlawful detainer action. For additional facts regarding the relationship of the purchaser to the tenant that must be pleaded and proved in unlawful detainer actions following foreclosure, see Cheney v Trauzettel (1937) 9 C2d 158, 69 P2d 832.

The complaint must allege that the tenant entered into possession under a written or oral lease or rental agreement and remains in possession without the landlord's permission after termination of the tenancy or expiration of the term. The landlord-tenant relationship continues for purposes of CCP §§1161 and 1174 if the tenancy has expired, or has been terminated, but the tenant remains in possession. O'Dell v Buttrick (1899) 126 C 551, 59 P 133.

Except for certain relationships stated in CCP §1161(1), the owner cannot remove an occupant, whose relationship to the owner began in some form other than landlord and tenant, by later characterizing the relationship as that of landlord and tenant in order to employ the unlawful detainer statutes. In Harper v Raya (1984) 154 CA3d 908, 201 CR 563, the owner purchased real property for his mistress. When their relationship ended, he sent the mistress a notice to pay rent or quit the premises, and then filed an unlawful detainer action. The court held that the summary remedy was unavailable because the mistress was never a tenant; sending a 3-day termination notice did not make her one. The landlord-tenant relationship must begin by mutual consent or by operation of law.

In a proceeding under CCP §1161a, the court in Evans v Superior Court (1977) 67 CA3d 162, 136 CR 596, held that the successor in interest of the purchaser at a foreclosure sale may maintain an unlawful detainer action against the defaulting owner. For discussion of termination notice requirements after foreclosure and the issues that arise when a foreclosure-purchaser attempts to evict a tenant who leased for a fixed term from the defaulting owner, see §§8.68A-8.68D.

When the relationship between the parties does not meet the definitions in CCP §§1161-1161b, unlawful detainer is not available—regardless of the manner in which the parties characterize their relationship. For example, when a transaction is actually a sale of real property, rather than a hiring, the courts will not permit use of unlawful detainer against the defaulting buyer. Thus, in Greene v Municipal Court (1975) 51 CA3d 446, 124 CR 139, the court held that the buyer's breach of an installment land sale contract, which allowed the seller to retain the downpayment and subsequent payments as rent in the event of breach, did not allow the seller to proceed in unlawful detainer. See also Marvell v Marina Pizzeria (1984) 155 CA3d Supp 1, 202 CR 818, in which the court held that the defaulting buyer of a business (including the leasehold interest) was neither a licensee nor a tenant at will, and therefore could not be removed by an unlawful detainer action. But see Provouskivitz v Snow (1977) 74 CA3d 554, 141 CR 531, in which the court held unlawful detainer to be proper when a simultaneously executed lease and installment land sale contract provided that the buyers were taking possession under the lease. See also Klein v Loeffler (1929) 96 CA 383, 274 P 373.

A landlord may maintain an unlawful detainer action only if the tenant is in possession or asserts a right to possession of the premises when the action is filed; if the tenant has vacated or otherwise surrendered possession, an unlawful detainer action will not lie. Markham v Fralick (1934) 2 C2d 221, 225, 39 P2d 804. See §9.5. In such an event, the landlord's proper remedy is a civil action for back rent and damages. Briggs v Electronic Memories & Magnetics Corp. (1975) 53 CA3d 900, 126 CR 34. On the effect of a tenant's vacating after the unlawful detainer suit is filed, see §11.51.

§9.37 F. Summary of Essential Allegations

Whether the landlord's attorney uses the Judicial Council's complaint form (see §9.31) or prepares an original pleading, the complaint must contain the following allegations and prayers:

(1) Legal capacity. The complaint must allege the plaintiff's legal capacity (e.g., an individual, a partnership, a corporation) and plaintiff's interest in the premises. See ¶¶2, 4 of the Judicial Council form in §9.31. If the lease or rental agreement was entered into between the tenant and a manager (or a management firm), counsel must decide in whose name the action will be brought. See §9.34.

(2) Relationship. The complaint must allege the existence of the requisite relationship between plaintiff and defendant (e.g., landlord and tenant, subtenant, or assignee). Fredericksen v McCosker (1956) 143 CA2d 114, 299 P2d 908. See form in §9.31, ¶6; §9.36. The alleged relationship must be one that arose by mutual consent; the plaintiff landlord cannot create the relationship unilaterally. Harper v Raya (1984) 154 CA3d 908, 201 CR 563.

(3) Lease or rental agreement. Failure to allege the existence of a lease or rental agreement, or whether it is written or oral, may subject the complaint to demurrer. CCP §430.10(g). See form in §9.31, ¶6.b; §§10.29, 10.31. A copy of any applicable written lease or rental agreement for a residential tenancy, including addenda, attachments, and exhibits, must be attached to the complaint, unless the landlord or agent does not have it or the action is based on a default in the payment of rent. CCP §1166(c)(1)(B).

(4) Venue. In an unlawful detainer action brought under CCP §1161, the complaint must allege facts showing that the action has been commenced in both the proper county and the proper court location for trial. CCP §396a(a). See form in §9.31, ¶3; see also §9.33.

(5) Premises. The complaint must describe the premises sufficiently to permit the sheriff or marshal to serve a writ of possession and physically evict the tenant, CCP §§455, 1166(a)(3). Alleging the street address is sufficient. Olcovich v Deremberg (1915) 27 CA 194, 149 P 375. See form in §9.31, ¶3. If the designation of the street is not indicated or is incorrect, i.e., "avenue" instead of "street," the marshal or sheriff may decline to enforce the writ of possession.

(6) Notice. If notice is required, the complaint must allege that the required notice was served on the tenant and expired. Zucco v Farullo (1918) 37 CA 562, 568, 174 P 929. The complaint must allege the method used to serve the required notice by either completing all related items on the Judicial Council form or attaching to the complaint the proof of service of the notice. CCP §1166(a)(5). This applies in residential and nonresidential tenancies alike. The Judicial Council form alleges both the fact of service (¶7) and the manner of service (¶8). If notice is required, a copy may be attached to the complaint as an exhibit and incorporated by reference, or the notice may be recited verbatim in the complaint or pleaded according to its legal effect. Wilson v Sadleir (1915) 26 CA 357, 146 P 1061. In residential tenancies, a copy of the notice of termination that was served on the residential tenant must be attached to the unlawful detainer complaint. CCP §1166(c)(1)(A). An inconsistency between a notice attached as an exhibit and references to the notice in the complaint may subject the complaint to a demurrer. CCP §430.10(f).

(7) Supporting facts. Under CCP §1166(a)(2), the complaint must allege facts supporting the plaintiff's recovery:

- When the proceeding is based on the tenant's nonpayment of rent, the complaint must allege (a) the fact of default and the amount of unpaid rent, (b) that a written notice was served on the tenant after the rental due date, and (c) that the notice stated the precise amount of rent due and demanded that the tenant pay the rent or quit the premises within 3 days. CCP §§1161(2), 1166(a)(4). See ¶¶7-8, 10 of the complaint form in §9.31.
- When the action is based on breach of a covenant other than to pay rent, the complaint must allege (a) the covenant allegedly breached, (b) that the tenant breached it, and (for a curable breach) (c) that the notice demanded that the tenant either cure the breach or quit the premises within 3 days. CCP §1161(3). See ¶¶7-8 of the form in §9.31.
- When the action is based on expiration of the lease term, the complaint must allege (a) expiration of the term, and (b) that the tenant remains in possession without the landlord's permission. See CCP §§1161(1), 1166(a)(2); Earl Orchard Co. v Fava (1902) 138 C 76, 70 P 1073. See ¶¶3, 9 of the form in §9.31. No termination notice is needed for an unlawful detainer action based on expiration of the term of a lease, unless a local rent control ordinance requires that the grounds for termination be stated in a notice. See CCP §1161(1).

- When the proceeding is based on sale of the property by foreclosure under CCP §§1161a, 1161b, the complaint must allege the circumstances under which title was acquired. Cheney v Trauzettel (1937) 9 C2d 158, 69 P2d 832; Evans v Superior Court (1977) 67 CA3d 162, 136 CR 596 (proof that sale complies with statutes and security instrument). See §§8.68A-8.68C. The complaint form provides at ¶7 (see §9.31) an allegation that the 3-day notice to quit was served on the tenant, but does not contain other allegations essential to eviction on sale of the property under CCP §1161a. Counsel might want to add these allegations in ¶15 of the form. But see note at bottom of form, warning counsel not to use form with CCP §1161a (postforeclosure) evictions.
- When the action is based on termination of a month-to-month tenancy, the complaint must allege (a) that written notice was served on the tenant declaring the tenancy terminated in 30 or 60 days (or less, if the written lease or rental agreement so provides; see §8.70) and requiring the tenant to surrender possession of the premises on or before expiration of that period, and (b) that 30 or 60 days (or a lesser period, if applicable) has passed since service of the notice. CC §§1946, 1946.1; CCP §§1161(1), 1166(a)(2). See ¶¶7-8 of complaint form in §9.31.

(8) Possession of premises. The tenant must be in possession of the premises when the unlawful detainer action is filed (see §9.5), and the complaint must allege this fact. CCP §§1161-1161b; Shusett, Inc. v Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1964) 231 CA2d 146, 154, 41 CR 622. See ¶¶3, 7.b(2) of complaint form in §9.31. Landlord attorneys should argue that "possession" includes not only actual possession but also a right to possession, especially if the defendant asserts control over the property without having physical possession.

(9) Restitution of premises. The prayer must request restitution of the premises. Shusett, Inc. v Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n, supra. See ¶17.a of complaint form in §9.31. Under Shusett, a complaint that seeks only damages, and not restitution of the premises, fails to state a cause of action for forcible entry. Presumably, the same rationale would apply to an unlawful detainer. If the termination notice served on the tenant did not contain a declaration of forfeiture, the plaintiff may not pray for forfeiture in the complaint. CCP §1174. Paragraph 17.e permits the landlord to seek forfeiture of the lease or rental agreement. Note that CCP §1174(a) limits forfeiture to breach of the lease and rent default cases.

(10) Rent control. If the premises are subject to a local rent control or eviction control ordinance, the application of that ordinance and compliance with it should be alleged. See complaint form ¶14. On the impact of rent control see §§7.24, 7.73-7.75, 9.13-9.16D.

G. Monetary Relief

§9.38 1. Eviction Based on Rent Default

The plaintiff may allege, and pray for, both back rent and damages "occasioned" by the unlawful detainer if the action is based on a default in the payment of rent. CCP §1174(b). Back rent accrues from the tenant's last rent payment through the expiration of the 3 days provided in the notice. After the tenancy terminates by expiration of the notice, rent cannot be awarded for the period following the expiration date, even if the tenant does not vacate. Damages "occasioned" by the unlawful detainer, however, may be awarded and are calculated per diem from the date of expiration of the termination notice through the date of judgment. They are characterized as the reasonable rental value of the premises after termination of the tenancy and are usually, but not necessarily, measured by the contract rent. See §§10.40-10.41.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.39 2. Eviction Based on Other Grounds

Back rent may be recovered only in an unlawful detainer action based on a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit under CCP §1161(2) (see §§8.35-8.81, 9.38); it may not be recovered when the tenancy was terminated under CCP §1161(1), (3)-(5), or §§1161a-1161b (see §§8.46-8.59, 8.81-8.84). Rent, as distinct from damages, also cannot be recovered in an unlawful detainer action based on a 30-day or 60-day notice terminating a month-to-month tenancy under CC §1946 or §1946.1 (see §§8.69-8.80). Castle Park No. 5 v Katherine (1979) 91 CA3d Supp 6, 154 CR 498. See CCP §1174(b). In such cases only damages occasioned by the unlawful detainer are recoverable. The unlawful detainer does not begin until the expiration of the lease term (CCP §1161(1)), expiration of a 3-day termination notice (CCP §1161(2)-(4)), expiration of a termination notice given by a tenant (CCP §1161(5)), or expiration of a 30-day or 60-day termination notice given by a landlord (CCP §1161(1); CC §§1946, 1946.1). Accordingly, any damages resulting from the unlawful detainer accrue only after that date, and are based on the reasonable rental value of the premises from that date until entry of judgment. See Glouberman v Coffey (1955) 138 CA2d Supp 906, 292 P2d 681. See discussion of rent and damages in §§10.40-10.41 and chaps 12-13.

EXAMPLE: If a tenant fails to pay rent when lawfully due after being served with a 30-day or 60-day notice terminating the tenancy, the landlord must proceed in unlawful detainer on that notice (and, under the decision in Castle Park No. 5 v Katherine, supra, effectively waive the back rent in that action), or also serve a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit (being careful to apportion the precise amount of rent due if the 30-day or 60-day notice period expires earlier than 30 or 60 days from the date that the rent was due). A landlord who chooses the latter course should plead two causes of action: one for recovery of possession of the premises and damage (based on the 30-day or 60-day notice), and the other for back rent (based on the 3-day notice), and should wait to file and serve the complaint after both notices have expired. See §9.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.40 3. Malicious Holdover, Fraud, Force, or Violence

If statutory damages are sought, the complaint must allege evidentiary facts showing malice in defendant's holding over, not mere conclusions. CCP §1174(b). See §§9.8, 10.42. See also Judicial Council form, ¶12 (see §9.31), which requires specific facts to be set forth in an attachment.

PRACTICE TIP: The landlord's attorney should emphasize the "mental element" when pleading "malicious holding over." Counsel should plead actual intent to injure or reckless disregard for the known negative financial consequences to the landlord by a holdover tenant who could have lodged elsewhere rather than cost the landlord additional lost rents. The landlord's attorney also may allege that the defendant-tenant actually is aware that he or she has no lawful right to remain and that the tenant's intent is to be unjustly enriched at the landlord's expense. Courts rarely award statutory damages in residential eviction cases; alleging such damages in the termination notice and the complaint may cause tenants to defend vigorously when they would otherwise default.

The plaintiff also may allege any circumstances of fraud, force, or violence that have accompanied the alleged unlawful detainer, and may claim damages based on them. CCP §1166(b). The attorney may add such allegations to ¶15 of the Judicial Council form (see §9.31).

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.41 H. Relief Other Than Possession and Damages

One of the most common pitfalls for a landlord's attorney is the pleading and demand of monetary or other relief not authorized by the unlawful detainer statutes. This can be fatal to (or cause considerable pretrial delay of) the proceedings. Under CCP §1174(b), the plaintiff's right to claim damages is limited to those "occasioned" by the unlawful detainer. Except for additional damages caused by the tenant's fraud, force, or violence accompanying the unlawful detainer (CCP §1166(b)), a request for any other category of damages is improper. See §§9.38-9.40.

In Vasey v California Dance Co. (1977) 70 CA3d 742, 139 CR 72, the landlord obtained a judgment on causes of action for both unlawful detainer and breach of lease provisions relating to alterations. On appeal, however, the court modified the judgment, holding that the trial court exceeded its jurisdiction in entering judgment for the alteration damages. The court ruled that even though a tenant who is guilty of unlawful detainer may also have breached the terms of the lease, damages resulting from that breach do not necessarily result from the unlawful detainer. Thus, the landlord may not recover such damages in an unlawful detainer action. 70 CA3d at 748. The landlord, however, may recover damages for other breaches of the lease under CC §1952.3 if the tenant vacates the premises before trial. See §11.51.

A prayer for "such other and further relief as the court deems just" is sufficient, at least in a contested case, to justify an award for damages authorized but not otherwise requested in an unlawful detainer action. Furthermore, an award for interest is permitted even if the complaint contains no prayer for interest. Superior Motels, Inc. v Rinn Motor Hotels, Inc. (1987) 195 CA3d 1032, 1067, 241 CR 487.

For causes of action on relief other than possession and authorized damages, the landlord must proceed in a regular civil action, using the standard 30-day summons (Greene v Municipal Court (1975) 51 CA3d 446, 124 CR 139), or prosecute them in the summary proceeding with the tenant's consent (Vasey v California Dance Co. (1977) 70 CA3d 742, 747, 139 CR 72).

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.42 I. Verification

Complaints in unlawful detainer actions must be verified and include the typed or printed name of the person verifying it. CCP §1166(a)(1). A complaint that is not properly verified is subject to a motion to strike. CCP §436. The Judicial Council's unlawful detainer complaint form (see §9.31) contains a verification appropriate only for an individual plaintiff. A different verification form should be used if the complaint is verified by the landlord's attorney or by an individual representing a corporation or partnership. On verification generally, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 15 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

PRACTICE TIP: Attorney verifications of unlawful detainer complaints are quite common, but sometimes of questionable validity. Counsel should be aware of DeCamp v First Kensington Corp. (1978) 83 CA3d 268, 147 CR 869, in which the court noted that the object of the verification is to insure good faith in the averments of the party. While CCP §446 allows attorneys to sign verifications when their clients are out of the county, this practice is discouraged. The court in DeCamp held that CCP §446 "does not authorize attorney verifications where the absence of the party creates no inability on his part to verify." 83 CA3d at 275.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.43 J. Amendments

Unlawful detainer actions are subject to CCP §§471.5-473, governing amendments to complaints in civil actions. To avoid delaying the summary nature of the proceeding by amending the complaint, the landlord's attorney should ensure that the original complaint is as thorough as possible. But see CCP §1173, allowing amendments at trial in unlawful detainer actions to conform to proof. The statute specifically discourages continuances when such amendments are made.

Attorneys for landlords sometimes serve two or more notices with differing response times (e.g., a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit together with a 30-day or 60-day notice to vacate). See §9.39 for another alternative on the timing of service of such notices. Aside from the need to avoid possible "confusion" defenses that a tenant might raise, counsel should note that, if only one action is intended to be filed, the landlord must wait to bring an action covering both notices until the longer notice period expires, even if an earlier action could be based on the shorter notice period.

PRACTICE TIP: A landlord might wish to file an action on the shorter-term notice immediately, to allow the landlord to conduct discovery without waiting to file a combined action after the longer notice period has expired. It may be that a second action then could be filed when the statute permits, and the two cases could be consolidated. See chap 11 on consolidation motions.

An amendment to a complaint may not introduce a new theory of recovery based on facts first arising after institution of an action; amendments relate to facts as they existed when the original complaint was filed. California Farm & Fruit Co. v Schiappa-Pietra (1907) 151 C 732, 91 P 593; Cohen v Superior Court (1966) 244 CA2d 650, 53 CR 378. Matters occurring after the complaint has been filed may be raised only by a supplemental complaint, filed after a noticed motion, and not by an amendment to the original complaint to conform to proof. Earp v Nobmann (1981) 122 CA3d 270, 175 CR 767. For further discussion of amendments and supplemental complaints, see chap 12. See also California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 16 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

VI. FILING AND SERVING THE ACTION

§9.44 A. When to File Unlawful Detainer Complaint

An unlawful detainer cause of action arises on expiration of the period required to be specified in the termination notice (CCP §1161(2)-(5)), or on expiration of the lease term (CCP §1161(1)). Downing v Cutting Packing Co. (1920) 183 C 91, 95, 190 P 455. See §§8.1-8.4, 8.20, 8.22-8.24. If the expiration date specified in the termination notice falls on a weekend or holiday (as defined in Govt C §6700; CCP §§12-12b, 135), the opportunity to perform is extended to and including the next day that is not a holiday. CCP §§12-13. Thus, if a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit expires on a Saturday or Sunday, the tenant has until Monday to perform or vacate, and the cause of action does not accrue until Tuesday. See §§8.28-8.29, 8.42, 8.77. A 3-day notice provides a period of time within which a tenant might perform an act or pay rent or quit. A 30-day notice terminating a tenancy presumably requires the tenant to vacate within the 30 days. Arguably, the provisions of CCP §§12, 12a and 13 which extend the time for the performance of an act also apply to a 30-day notice.

EXAMPLE: On how weekends and holidays extend the time to perform under a 3-day notice, see Lamanna v Vognar (1993) 17 CA4th Supp 4, 22 CR2d 501, discussed in §8.28. For further discussion of effects of holidays on notice periods, including a list of legal holidays, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§6.7, 6.25-6.26 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

In other reported decisions, courts have held that CCP §12 applies to notices served in related situations such as the following: a notice for incorporation of a municipality (City of Pleasanton v Bryant (1965) 63 C2d 643, 47 CR 807); a physician's affidavit supporting a petition for commitment (In re Rodriguez (1964) 60 C2d 822, 36 CR 609); a notice of a disciplinary hearing (Cooper v Board of Med. Exam'rs (1975) 49 CA3d 931, 123 CR 563); a tort claim filed with a government agency (Adams v City of Modesto (1960) 53 C2d 833, 3 CR 561); and a notice of road improvement (Municipal Improvement Co. v Thompson (1927) 201 C 629, 258 P 955).

Some practitioners believe that there is additional time to respond to a 3-day notice when it is served by mail as a secondary procedure, e.g., to complete either substituted service (CCP §1162(2)) or posting of a copy of the notice on the premises (CCP §1162(3)). See §§8.64-8.65 on these service methods. Under CCP §1013(a), when a legally required notice in a pending suit (see CCP §§1003-1020) is served by mail, the time for responding to it is extended by 5 calendar days if the place of mailing and the place of address are both within California.

According to CCP §1013(a), the extensions apply "in the absence of a specific exception" stated in CCP §1013, another statute, or court rule. This quoted language, which was added by a 1995 amendment, arguably supersedes the conflicting decisions in Davidson v Quinn (1982) 138 CA3d Supp 9, 10 n2, 188 CR 421 (service of 3-day notice by mail is not effective until tenant actually receives mailed notice) and Walters v Meyers (1990) 226 CA3d Supp 15, 18, 277 CR 316 (time to respond to 3-day notice served by posting and mailing is not extended by CCP §1013 and service is effective on date notice is posted and mailed, not when tenant actually receives mailed notice). Assuming that CCP §1013 applies to a 3-day notice served by substituted service or by posting and mailing, the unlawful detainer action may not be filed until at least 8 days after the notice is mailed. See §8.29 for more detailed information on CCP §1013.

It is equally arguable that CCP §1013 does not apply to service of a 3-day notice because no action is pending at the time of service. See reasoning in Walters v Meyers, supra. Under this assumption, the action may be filed 3 days after the date of mailing. See also Losornio v Motta (1998) 67 CA4th 110, 78 CR2d 799, holding that CCP §1013(a), which extends the time to respond to motions served by mail in pending litigation, does not extend the statutory notice period for a 30-day termination notice served under CCP §1162(2)-(3). See extended analyses in §§8.28-8.29, 8.65.

NOTE: A trial court may adopt local rules that permit parties to file their documents electronically with the court; the Judicial Council has adopted uniform rules that apply statewide for electronic filing and service of papers on parties. CCP §1010.6; Cal Rules of Ct 2.250-2.261. Practitioners should pay particular attention to the January 1, 2008, California Rules of Court amendments, which contain detailed requirements for electronic service of pleadings. See, e.g., Cal Rules of Ct 2.253, 2.260. On the effect of underpayment of filing fees, see §10.1B.

B. Service of Summons and Complaint

§9.45 1. Legal Requirements

As in most civil actions, service of process is necessary in an unlawful detainer action for the court to obtain personal jurisdiction over the defendant. Chapter 4 of Title V of the Code of Civil Procedure, which governs service of summons in civil actions (CCP §§413.10-417.40), also applies to unlawful detainer suits. CCP §1177. Thus, service may be accomplished by the methods generally available to plaintiffs in all civil actions, which include:

- personal delivery under CCP §415.10 (usually applicable to individuals; see §9.47);
- if not by personal delivery after reasonable diligence, by "substituted service," which is effected by leaving copies of the summons and complaint with a person at the individual defendant's residence or place of business, and mailing copies to the defendant at the same address (CCP §415.20(b); see §9.48);
- mailing under CCP §415.30, with service completed on the defendant's execution of a written acknowledgment of service (impractical in unlawful detainer);
- publication under CCP §415.50 if the defendant cannot with reasonable diligence be served and a publication has been ordered by the court (also impractical in unlawful detainer);
- service on a defendant corporation or other business or public entity in lieu of personal delivery by leaving a copy of the summons and complaint at the office during usual office hours or, if no physical address is known, at the entity's usual mailing address (other than a United States Postal Service post office box), with the person apparently in charge, and mailing copies to the defendant at the same address under CCP §415.20(a); and
- personal service on a business organization, form unknown, by leaving summons and complaint with "the person who is in charge of the office" and then mailing a copy to that office address under CCP §415.95.

Service by mailing or publication is rarely used because of the delay and cost involved, and because the "post and mail" (or constructive service) method is available in unlawful detainer suits under CCP §415.45. Under this procedure, if the plaintiff shows that the defendant cannot be served with reasonable diligence by using either the personal delivery or the substituted service method, the plaintiff may obtain a court order for service by posting the summons on the premises and mailing a copy to the defendant. See §9.49. Code of Civil Procedure §415.47 also allows service by certified mail following a tenant's written response to a landlord's notice of belief of abandonment under CC §1951.3. See §9.50. For further discussion, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 17 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

The Judicial Council has approved a summons form for use in unlawful detainer actions; it contains a 5-day rather than a 30-day response limit and is reproduced in §9.46. See CCP §§1167, 1167.3. Errors in the summons served on a tenant might prevent the landlord from obtaining the necessary personal jurisdiction and precipitate a motion to quash. See Beck v Ransome-Crummey Co. (1919) 42 CA 674, 679, 184 P 431 (service of summons that omits any statement expressly required by statute does not give the court jurisdiction to proceed against the defendant); Armstrong v Superior Court (1956) 144 CA2d 420, 424, 301 P2d 51 (summons not endorsed to show that defendant was served as fictitious party, as required by CCP §474, was fatally defective). See also §§10.18-10.23.

On the other hand, technical errors that do not mislead the tenant, or affect substantive rights, may not render the summons defective. Hershenson v Hershenson (1962) 205 CA2d 382, 23 CR 185 (copy of summons lacking case number, date of issuance, and name of issuing clerk was not defective). See CCP §412.20 for the requirements for a proper summons. Proper use of the Judicial Council's unlawful detainer summons form should prevent problems caused by defective summons.

NOTE: There are forms (separate from the summons) for proving service of summons and complaint; the landlord must file (with the original summons) either a Proof of Service of Summons (Judicial Council Form POS-010) or a Notice And Acknowledgment of Receipt—Civil (Judicial Council Form POS-015). See CCP §417.10(a).

Amendment or verification of the complaint after service of summons does not necessitate service of a new summons on a defendant over whom the court already has jurisdiction. Only the amended complaint must be served, and it may be served by mail in the manner provided in CCP §§1010-1020 for service of papers in civil actions. Cyrus v Haveson (1976) 65 CA3d 306, 315, 135 CR 246.

A complaint and summons, if it is the first contact the attorney has with the debtor, is exempt from the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) (15 USC §§1692-1692o) written validation requirement. 15 USC §1692g. See §§8.26A, 13.74.

NOTICE TO DEFENDANT:
(AVISO AL DEMANDADO):

YOU ARE BEING SUED BY PLAINTIFF:
(LO ESTÁ DEMANDANDO EL DEMANDANTE):

FOR COURT USE ONLY
(SOLO PARA USO DE LA CORTE)

You have 5 CALENDAR DAYS after this summons and legal papers are served on you to file a written response at this court and have a copy served on the plaintiff. (To calculate the five days, count Saturday and Sunday, but do not count other court holidays. If the last day falls on a Saturday, Sunday, or a court holiday then you have the next court day to file a written response.) A letter or phone call will not protect you. Your written response must be in proper legal form if you want the court to hear your case. There may be a court form that you can use for your response. You can find these court forms and more information at the California Courts Online Self-Help Center (www.courtinfo.ca.gov/selfhelp), your county law library, or the courthouse nearest you. If you cannot pay the filing fee, ask the court clerk for a fee waiver form. If you do not file your response on time, you may lose the case by default, and your wages, money, and property may be taken without further warning from the court.

There are other legal requirements. You may want to call an attorney right away. If you do not know an attorney, you may want to call an attorney referral service. If you cannot afford an attorney, you may be eligible for free legal services from a nonprofit legal services program. You can locate these nonprofit groups at the California Legal Services Web site (www.lawhelpcalifornia.org), the California Courts Online Self-Help Center (www.courtinfo.ca.gov/selfhelp), or by contacting your local court or county bar association. NOTE: The court has a statutory lien for waived fees and costs on any settlement or arbitration award of $10,000 or more in a civil case. The court's lien must be paid before the court will dismiss the case.

*Tiene 5 DÍAS DE CALENDARIO después de que le entreguen esta citación y papeles legales para presentar una respuesta por escrito en esta corte y hacer que se entregue una copia al demandante. (Para calcular los cinco días, cuente los sábados y los domingos pero no los otros días feriados de la corte. Si el último día cae en sábado o domingo, o en un día en que la corte esté cerrada, tiene hasta el próximo día de corte para presentar una respuesta por escrito). Una carta o una llamada telefónica no lo protegen. Su respuesta por escrito tiene que estar en formato legal correcto si desea que procesen su caso en la corte. Es posible que haya un formulario que usted pueda usar para su respuesta. Puede encontrar estos formularios de la corte y más información en el Centro de Ayuda de las Cortes de California (www.sucorte.ca.gov), en la biblioteca de leyes de su condado o en la corte que le quede más cerca. Si no puede pagar la cuota de presentación, pida al secretario de la corte que le dé un formulario de exención de pago de cuotas. Si no presenta su respuesta a tiempo, puede perder el caso por incumplimiento y la corte le podrá quitar su sueldo, dinero y bienes sin más advertencia.*

Hay otros requisitos legales. Es recomendable que llame a un abogado inmediatamente. Si no conoce a un abogado, puede llamar a un servicio de remisión a abogados. Si no puede pagar a un abogado, es posible que cumpla con los requisitos para obtener servicios legales gratuitos de un programa de servicios legales sin fines de lucro. Puede encontrar estos grupos sin fines de lucro en el sitio web de California Legal Services, (www.lawhelpcalifornia.org), en el Centro de Ayuda de las Cortes de California, (www.sucorte.ca.gov) o poniéndose en contacto con la corte o el colegio de abogados locales. AVISO: Por ley, la corte tiene derecho a reclamar las cuotas y los costos exentos por imponer un gravamen sobre cualquier recuperación de $10,000 ó más de valor recibida mediante un acuerdo o una concesión de arbitraje en un caso de derecho civil. Tiene que pagar el gravamen de la corte antes de que la corte pueda desechar el caso.

3. Methods of Service

§9.47 a. Personal Delivery (CCP §415.10)

Personal service means actual delivery of a copy of the summons and complaint to the tenant by the person effecting service. Service is considered to be complete at the time of the delivery. CCP §415.10; see Sternbeck v Buck (1957) 148 CA2d 829, 307 P2d 970. If the tenant can be served with reasonable diligence, service is not properly made by the process server's leaving copies of the summons and complaint with a member of the household, even if the tenant actually receives them. CCP §415.20(b) (see §9.48); Sternbeck v Buck, supra.

Although the concept of personal service means the actual handing of copies of the summons and complaint to the tenant, when the process server and the tenant are within speaking distance of each other and a reasonable person could assume that service of a legal document is being attempted, the tenant cannot avoid service by moving away and refusing to touch the documents. See Trujillo v Trujillo (1945) 71 CA2d 257, 162 P2d 640; In re Ball (1934) 2 CA2d 578, 38 P2d 411. On personal service generally, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 17 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

A summons may be served by any person who is at least 18 years old and not a party to the action. CCP §414.10. Accordingly, service is defective if the landlord or a minor serves the summons.

Neither substituted service (see §9.48) nor constructive service (see §9.49) can be used unless the process server exercises "reasonable diligence" in attempting to serve the tenant personally. To demonstrate reasonable diligence, the process server must:

- attempt service when the tenant is most likely to be on the premises;
- ask people who might know the whereabouts of the tenant (e.g., neighbors, employers) or at what times the tenant is available; and
- inquire at the local post office whether the tenant has left a forwarding address.

For further discussion of reasonable diligence, see §§9.48-9.49.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.48 b. Substituted Service (CCP §415.20(b))

If the tenant cannot be served personally after exercise of "reasonable diligence," process may be served by the process server's leaving a copy of the summons and complaint at the tenant's residence or place of business, in the presence of a competent member of the household or a person apparently in charge of the business. CCP §415.20(b). Afterwards, the process server must mail copies of the summons and complaint to the tenant at the same address. CCP §415.20(a). When service is effected on a natural person by substituted service, the process server must inform the person actually served of the contents. CCP §415.20(b). Because service is considered to be complete on the tenth day after the copies have been mailed (CCP §415.20(a)-(b)), the answer is due 5 days after that date (see §§10.1, 13.2).

Substituted service may be used only after the landlord has exercised reasonable diligence to have the tenant served personally. Ordinarily, two or three attempts at personal service at a proper place should fully satisfy the reasonable diligence requirement of CCP §415.20. See Ellard v Conway (2001) 94 CA4th 540, 114 CR2d 399 (substituted service at private, commercial post office box held proper); Bein v Brechtel-Jochim Group, Inc. (1992) 6 CA4th 1387, 8 CR2d 351 (service on residential gate guard considered service on competent member of household, and person apparently in charge, for purposes of CCP §415.20). See also CCP §415.21 (gated community access requirements). Landlords' agents for service should be instructed to document their efforts to effect personal service. When substituted service is used, the agent for service must recite facts showing that service was legally performed. CCP §417.10(a).

Service on a managing agent employed by the party, but not specifically authorized to accept service of summons and complaint and not shown to be in "regular and frequent contact" with the party, was insufficient under CCP §416.90 despite the party's actual receipt of the summons and complaint. Summers v McClanhan (2006) 140 CA4th 403, 44 CR3d 338.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.49 c. Posting and Mailing (CCP §415.45)

Under CCP §415.45, the court in which the action is pending may, on application of the plaintiff, order constructive service, by posting the summons on the premises and mailing a copy of the summons and complaint by certified mail to the defendant's last known address. Curiously, CCP §415.45(a) requires that the summons be posted on the premises but does not mention the complaint, and CCP §415.45(b) directs that a copy of both summons and complaint be mailed. To avoid a claim that the tenant has been denied due process, however, the landlord should post and mail copies of both the summons and the complaint. Service is deemed to be complete on the tenth day after posting and mailing. CCP §415.45(c).

Constructive service is authorized if the court finds that the defendant cannot with reasonable diligence be served in any authorized manner other than publication. CCP §415.45(a). The Judicial Council Comment construing the parallel "reasonable diligence" requirement of CCP §415.50 (service by publication) states:

> The term… denotes a thorough, systematic investigation and inquiry conducted in good faith by the party or his agent or attorney. [Citations.] A number of honest attempts to learn defendant's whereabouts or his address by inquiry of relatives, friends, and acquaintances, or of his employer, and by investigation of appropriate city and telephone directories, the voters' register, and the real and personal property index in the assessor's office… are generally sufficient.

Under CCP §415.50(e), the court must not "require that a search be conducted of public databases where access by a registered process server to residential addresses is prohibited by law or by published policy of the agency…" (e.g., Department of Motor Vehicles database search).

For further discussion of reasonable diligence, see §9.47.

§9.50 d. Certified Mail After Response to Notice of Abandonment

When a landlord has given a tenant a notice of belief of abandonment under CC §1951.3 and the tenant has answered the notice by denying abandonment and providing an address for service of unlawful detainer summons and complaint (see CC §1951.3, discussed in §§8.8-8.13), CCP §415.47 authorizes service by certified mail of the summons in an unlawful detainer action. Service by this method must be accomplished within 60 days after the landlord's receipt of the tenant's notice.

If the tenant's notice denied abandonment but failed to provide an address for service, the summons and complaint may be mailed to the address to which the landlord's notice of belief of abandonment was mailed or to the address of the subject property if the notice of belief of abandonment was personally served on the tenant. CCP §415.47(b). In addition, compliance with CC §1951.3 often requires that the notice of belief of abandonment be mailed to more than one address (see §8.11). Under those circumstances a copy of the summons and complaint should be mailed to each such address, even if the return address on the tenant's responding notice matches only one of the addresses to which the notice of belief of abandonment was sent. Proof of multiple delivery in this way may assist a landlord in opposing a motion to vacate a default judgment.

§9.51 4. Occupants Not Named in Complaint: Prejudgment Claim of Right to Possession

Occupants at the premises who are not named in the complaint may be brought into an unlawful detainer action whether or not they are ultimately identified. They are served with the summons and complaint under a procedure that in effect allows the landlord to elect the process of a prejudgment claim of right to possession by such occupants. See CCP §415.46. This procedure should be used whenever a landlord wants to prevent postjudgment claims of right to possession under CCP §1174.3 from delaying prompt enforcement of a judgment for possession. See §§13.70-13.73. Only a marshal, sheriff, or registered process server may serve process on unnamed occupants using this procedure. CCP §415.46(b).

§9.52 a. Investigating for Occupants Unnamed in Complaint

When serving an unlawful detainer summons and complaint on a tenant or subtenant, the process server must make a reasonably diligent effort to ascertain whether there are other adult occupants of the premises who are not named in the summons and complaint by inquiring of the persons being personally served, or any person of suitable age and discretion who appears to reside at the premises. CCP §415.46(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.53 b. Serving Unnamed Occupants

An unnamed occupant whose identity is disclosed and who is present at the premises must be personally served with a prejudgment claim of right to possession form, attached to a copy of the summons and complaint. See CCP §415.46(c). If personal service cannot be made at the time the occupant's identity is ascertained by the process server, service is made by (1) leaving the prejudgment claim form, attached to the summons and complaint and addressed to the occupant, with a person of suitable age and discretion at the premises, (2) affixing copies of the same documents on the premises, and (3) sending copies of the same documents addressed to that occupant by first class mail. CCP §415.46(c).

If no unnamed occupant is disclosed, or if substituted service is made on the known tenant or any known subtenant, service of a prejudgment claim of right to possession for all other persons who may claim to occupy the premises may be made by (1) leaving the prejudgment claim form, attached to the summons and complaint, at the same time service is made on the tenant or any subtenant, (2) affixing copies of the same documents on the premises, and (3) sending copies of the same documents, addressed to "all occupants in care of the named tenant" to the premises by first class mail. The process server must write in the date of service on the claim form, but omitting the date will not invalidate the claim. CCP §415.46(c). See §9.55 for Judicial Council form.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.54 c. Filing Prejudgment Claim: 10-day Limit

When the prejudgment claim of right to possession procedure is implemented in accordance with the service provisions of CCP §415.46, no occupant of the premises, whether named in the judgment for possession or not, may object to the enforcement of the judgment as allowed in CCP §1174.3 (postjudgment claim of right to possession; see §§13.70-13.73). CCP §715.020(d). Instead, an occupant served with a prejudgment claim of right to possession must file a claim with the court within 10 days after the date of service. CCP §§415.46(f), 1174.25(a).

At the time of filing the prejudgment claim of right to possession, the claimant is added as a defendant in the action for unlawful detainer and the court clerk notifies the plaintiff. CCP §1174.25(b).

§9.56 C. Writ of Immediate Possession

Under CCP §1166a, a landlord who files an unlawful detainer complaint may at the same time file a motion for a writ of immediate possession. The writ may be granted if the court, after a hearing, finds that the tenant:

- resides out of the state,
- has left the state,
- cannot be found within the state after due diligence, or
- has concealed himself or herself to avoid service of process.

WARNING: The wording of this statute indicates that the writ may be issued, for example, if the defendant resides out of state or has left California, regardless of whether the defendant was actually served with the summons and complaint. Counsel for the landlord may wish to restrict this procedure to situations in which the landlord cannot effectively achieve service of the summons and complaint because of one of the four grounds enumerated in the statute.

The motion must state that the writ applies to all tenants, subtenants, named claimants, and any other occupants of the premises. CCP §1166a(a). Presumably, the writ must also indicate the same. The defendants must be served with written notice of the motion as provided in CCP §1011. CCP §1166a(b).

At the hearing on the motion, the landlord must prove the existence of a ground for issuance of the writ by affidavits or oral testimony, and the tenant may appear and contest this evidence. CCP §1166a(a)-(b). Before the writ will be issued, the landlord must file an undertaking (in a sum fixed by the court) to cover the tenant's damages from the forced move if the landlord ultimately loses the action. CCP §1166a(c). For discussion of procedures under CCP §1166a, see Clark, Landlord-Tenant: Possession Before Trial-A Still Viable Procedure, 8 Bev Hills BJ 27 (Jan.-Feb. 1974).

Applications for writs of immediate possession are not often filed in current unlawful detainer practice because the narrow grounds on which the writs may be issued rarely arise. This was not always the case. Before 1970, a writ could be obtained on two additional grounds under an earlier version of CCP §1166a: (1) if the tenant were insolvent; or (2) if the tenant had no property subject to execution and sufficient to satisfy the damages sought by the plaintiff. Landlords used these grounds to obtain possession when they anticipated a protracted legal battle to recover possession in the main action. In Mihans v Municipal Court (1970) 7 CA3d 479, 87 CR 17, however, the grounds were held to violate due process and equal protection. The legislature amended CCP §1166a shortly after the Mihans decision to delete them.

I. INTRODUCTION

§10.1 A. Shortened (5-Day) Response Time

This chapter presents the alternatives available to a tenant in making the initial response to an unlawful detainer action. Unless an order or stipulation extending the time to plead is issued (see §10.48), or an occupant unnamed in the complaint responds to service by means of a prejudgment claim of right to possession (see §9.54), a defendant has only 5 days after service in which to respond to an unlawful detainer action. CCP §§1167, 1167.3, 1170. On the face of the unlawful detainer summons, information is provided that a response must be filed within 5 calendar days after service of the summons and complaint, that weekends count in the 5-day period, but that court holidays do not count. See §9.46. While trial courts are closed the third Wednesday of each month due to budget issues, the Wednesdays on which the courts are closed are treated as holidays and should not be counted as part of the 5-day period. See Govt C §68106. In addition to (or in lieu of) an answer (see §§10.50-10.71), a tenant may have available a motion to quash (see §§10.18-10.28), a demurrer (see §§10.29-10.37), a motion to strike (see §§10.38-10.47), a cross-complaint (see §§10.72-10.76), or a combination of these responses. A tenant may move to quash, demur, move to strike, and answer simultaneously without making a general appearance. See CCP §418.10(e), discussed in §10.18.

The chapter begins with a discussion of ethical considerations pertaining to the representation of tenants (see §§10.2-10.4), and waiver of court fees for indigent parties who meet the statutory criteria for appearing in the action in forma pauperis (see §§10.5-10.12). At the end of the chapter is a checklist of common defects found in unlawful detainer complaints with corresponding alternatives for challenging the defects (see §10.77; see also §10.31).

§10.1A B. Local Rules Preempted

Much of this chapter covers motion procedures that may be used by a tenant with or in lieu of an answer to the complaint. Local rules concerning pleadings, pretrial law and motion proceedings, ex parte applications, and other pretrial matters are preempted by the state rules. Cal Rules of Ct 3.20(a). Certain exceptions are listed in Cal Rules of Ct 3.20(b). See also Cal Rules of Ct 2.100 (state preemption of form and format rules for papers presented for filing in the trial courts). California Rules of Court 1.200 requires that citations to cases and other authorities in all filed documents either be in the style established by the California Style Manual or The Bluebook: A Uniform System of Citation. The party filing the document may choose either style but must be consistent throughout the document. An important change to the state rules allows for shorter notice on ex parte applications in unlawful detainer actions. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1203(b).

§10.1B C. Relief for Underpayment of Filing Fee

When a paper is filed with the court and the check for the filing fee is later returned without payment by the bank, the court clerk shall mail notice to the party, and the party will have 20 days from the mailing date to pay the fee by cash, certified check, or other means specified by the court, plus an administrative charge for processing the returned check. Similarly, if a filing is accompanied by an amount less than the required fee, the clerk will accept the filing and give the same type of 20-day notice, but will not issue a summons until fully paid. If the filing person is not a party or his or her attorney (e.g., a messenger), the party or that party's attorney must also be notified. CCP §§411.20-411.21. Under CCP §§411.20(e), 411.21(f), "[i]f any trial or other hearing is scheduled to be heard prior to the expiration of the 20-day period … the fee shall be paid prior to the trial or hearing. Failure of the party to pay the fee… shall cause the court to void the filing and proceed as if it had not been filed."

II. ATTORNEY ETHICS

§10.2 A. Delaying Tactics

California attorneys are bound by the Rules of Professional Conduct of the State Bar of California, the most recent version of which was promulgated May 27, 1989. Bus & P C §6077. The rules are also found in the California Rules of Court. The conduct of California attorneys is governed by these rules, and not by the American Bar Association's Model Rules of Professional Conduct, although the two sets of rules are similar in many respects. People v Ballard (1980) 104 CA3d 757, 164 CR 81. Counsel should note that an attorney who violates professional rules risks more than state bar disciplinary action. Under CCP §128.7, by presenting any pleading, petition, written notice of motion, or other similar paper to the court, an attorney is certifying that a variety of conditions relating to the proper motive and good faith of the document are met, and may be subject to sanctions if any of the conditions is not met.

California Rules of Prof Cond 3-200 prohibits the filing of an action or assertion of a defense solely to harass or delay the other party in obtaining his or her legal rights. Because the essence of an unlawful detainer action and the summary nature of the proceeding is speed in restoring possession to the landlord (see §9.5), Rule 3-200 may be violated if the tenant's attorney asserts technicalities merely for purposes of delay. An attorney who files an answer in the form of a general denial, knowing that the defendant has no defense, might be considered to have violated Rule 3-200. Assertion of a defense could constitute delay in an unlawful detainer action, but it seems that Rule 3-200 was not intended to apply to assertion of a defense that merely requires the plaintiff to prove his or her case.

In Snyder v State Bar (1976) 18 C3d 286, 133 CR 864, the supreme court upheld an order disbarring an attorney for conduct in an unlawful detainer action. The attorney, in violation of a court order, advised his client not to attend a deposition and in bad faith filed an involuntary bankruptcy petition against the landlord to delay the eviction, falsely alleging that the tenant was a creditor of the landlord. See also In re Bithoney (1st Cir 1973) 486 F2d 319 (discipline imposed on attorney for repeated filing of frivolous immigration review petitions); Gullo v Hirst (4th Cir 1964) 332 F2d 178, 179 (monetary sanction and discipline proper for attorney's "recklessly invoking court action in frivolous causes or by foot dragging and delaying in order to deny or postpone the enjoyment of unquestioned rights").

Although counsel must always be sure that a given procedure is merited by the law or facts of the case, a mere finding that a position advanced was frivolous should not be the sole cause for disciplining an attorney. In re Bithoney (1st Cir 1973) 486 F2d 319, 322. The court in Bithoney reasoned that such discipline might inhibit the bar from vigorous advocacy of clients' positions, and thus restrict meaningful access to the court. Sensitivity to these concerns requires that courts indulge every presumption in favor of the attorney who presents or defends a position that is found to lack merit. There are limits, however, to the exercise of advocacy. Thus, the court stated that under former ABA Code Prof Resp EC-1, a lawyer has a duty to represent his or her client zealously, but only within legal bounds.

A tenant's attorney who repeatedly files frivolous motions or asserts defenses without any basis in law or fact, solely for the purpose of delay, clearly risks liability as well as disciplinary action. See CCP §128.7(b), under which an attorney, by presenting any pleading, petition, written notice of motion, or other similar paper to the court, is certifying that a variety of conditions relating to the proper motive and good faith of the document are met, and may be subject to sanctions if any of the conditions is not met.

Much of this chapter is devoted to discussion of procedures available to tenant's defense, use of which will often result in some delay in the prosecution of an unlawful detainer action. Discussion of such procedures should not be construed as condoning their abuse. An attorney should not, however, be dissuaded from filing motions or demurrers to clarify the issues or defeat the landlord's case, or from pursuing complete discovery in a case that may go to trial. Failure to pursue all possibilities of prevailing on procedural matters or the merits might expose the attorney to a claim of malpractice.

§10.3 B. Group Representation

Representing tenants as a group may be more efficient and effective than representing each as an individual under certain circumstances. For example, an attorney may be retained by a tenant complaining of defective conditions on the premises and discover that other tenants in the building have the same problem. Courts have indicated that prosecuting an action on behalf of a class of tenants may be appropriate when they share a common cause of action against the landlord, and when the respective causes of action have common questions of fact and law. See Little v Sanchez (1985) 166 CA3d 501, 213 CR 297 (class action permissible in municipal court); Rich v Schwab (1984) 162 CA3d 739, 209 CR 417. See also Granberry v Islay Invs. (1995) 9 C4th 738, 38 CR2d 650.

When, if ever, may the attorney suggest the advisability of a collective response to the underlying problems and his or her availability to provide legal representation to other interested tenants? On the one hand, Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-400 prohibits counsel from soliciting business. On the other hand, group representation appears to be contemplated by Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-600. See generally Schoor, Class Actions: The Right to Solicit, 16 Santa Clara L Rev 215 (1976).

Thus, if a collective response reasonably and in good faith appears to be in the client's best interests, it does not appear improper for the attorney to have the client make the attorney's advice and availability known to the client's neighbors. An attorney invited to the building by the client may wish to present a short discussion on the legal points and answer questions so that other tenants in the group may make an informed decision as to whether to join in any concerted action. Group representation, however, appears to violate rules of professional conduct when the attorney has no reasonable expectation that it would favorably affect the original client's legal position.

§10.3A C. Fee Agreement and Limited Scope Representation

Attorneys representing tenants should always use written retainer agreements (see §4.2) regardless of whether the attorney agrees to provide full services or limited scope representation. Limited scope representation (sometimes called "unbundling") is a "relationship between an attorney and a person seeking legal services in which they have agreed that the scope of the legal services will be limited to specific tasks the attorney will perform for the person." Cal Rules of Ct 3.35(a). The State Bar of California has created guidelines to assist attorneys in limited scope representation. For a full discussion and a useful checklist, see §§5.4A-5.4B.

§10.4 D. Paying Rent for the Tenant

In an unlawful detainer action for nonpayment of rent, in which breach of the implied warranty of habitably has been raised as an affirmative defense, a tenant who has paid no rent whatsoever may nevertheless become the "prevailing party" by tendering rent within 5 days following the decision of the court (see §13.36). When there is an attorney fee provision in the rental agreement, and the tenant is of limited means and can neither post the rent nor pay the fees requested by the attorney, there is a strong motivation for the tenant's attorney to post the back rent in order to obtain an attorney fee award against the landlord and collect accordingly. California Rules of Professional Conduct 4-210, which prohibits an attorney from paying personal expenses for a client, forbids doing so; rent is obviously a personal expense, and such funds cannot be advanced on a tenant's behalf by an attorney.

NOTE: A landlord who brings an unlawful detainer action based on the tenant's nonpayment of rent, and who is liable for a violation of the habitability standards in CC §1942.4, shall be liable for reasonable attorney fees and costs of the suit in an amount to be fixed by the court. CCP §1174.21. See §§3.15A, 3.41.

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/10 Unlawful Detainer: Responsive Pleadings/§10.13 III. COURT FEES; IN FORMA PAUPERIS PROCEDURES (OPERATIVE JULY 1, 2009)

§10.13 III. COURT FEES; IN FORMA PAUPERIS PROCEDURES (OPERATIVE JULY 1, 2009)

Effective July 1, 2009, Govt C §§68630-68641 replaced the procedures in former Govt C §68511.3, which were repealed on the same date. The Judicial Council adopted rules that govern fee waivers, also effective July 1, 2009. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.50-3.58 (trial courts), 8.26, 8.818 (appellate courts). Legislative findings and declarations supporting the standards for waiver of court costs and fees are stated in Govt C §68630. Under Govt C §68632, the class of eligible parties for waiver of court fees and costs was expanded and includes the following:

- Parties receiving benefits under:
- Supplemental Security Income (SSI);
- State Supplemental Payments (SSP);
- California Work Opportunity and Responsibility to Kids Act (CalWORKS) program;
- Tribal Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (Tribal TANF) grant program;
- Federal food stamp or California food assistance program;
- County relief, general relief, or general assistance;
- Cash Assistance Program for Aged, Blind, and Disabled Legal Immigrants (CAPI);
- In-Home Supportive Services (IHSS); or
- Medi-California program.
- Parties whose gross monthly income is 125 percent or less of the current monthly poverty threshold.
- Parties who are unable to proceed without using money that is needed to provide for the common necessaries of life.

See Govt C §68632(c) for the required showing of indigency in the last category for the court to consider in determining whether to allow the party to proceed in forma pauperis. The required information and documentation for obtaining the fee and cost waiver was also expanded. See Govt C §68633.

The court clerk must accept for filing all applications for an initial fee waiver. If an applicant submits an application without providing all required information, the clerk may request that the applicant supply the omitted information, but must not refuse to file the application, or refuse to file any pleadings on the basis that the fee has not been paid. Govt C §68634(b).

The court must grant an initial fee waiver at any stage of the proceedings "at both the appellate and trial court levels if an applicant meets the standards of eligibility and application requirements." An initial fee waiver "excuses the applicant from paying fees for the first pleading or other paper, and other court fees and costs as specified in rules adopted by the Judicial Council," unless the court orders the applicant to make partial payments. Govt C §68631.

Under Govt C §68634(e), on reviewing the initial fee waiver application, the court must do one of the following:

- Grant the application if the information establishes that the applicant "meets the criteria for eligibility and application requirements" in Govt C §§68632-68633.
- Deny the application if it is incomplete; if the application is denied on that basis, the applicant must be given notice of the specific reason for denial and an opportunity to submit a revised application.
- Deny the application if the information "conclusively establishes that the applicant is not eligible for an initial fee waiver." If the application is denied on that basis, the applicant must be given notice of the specific reason for denial and an opportunity to request a hearing, at which the applicant may submit additional information.
- Schedule an eligibility hearing if the court has good reason to doubt the truthfulness truth of factual statements in the application. The applicant must be given 10 days' notice of the hearing and the specific reason why the court doubts the truthfulness of the statements.
- Schedule an eligibility hearing if the information does not establish that the applicant meets the criteria for eligibility and application requirements, but the information does not conclusively establish that the applicant is not eligible for an initial fee waiver on the bases requested. The applicant must be given 10 days' notice and the specific reason why the court did not grant the application.

Fee waivers in the appellate courts are governed by Govt C §68634.5. Special procedures for prisoners are in Govt C §68635. Procedures governing the continuation of the fee waiver if the applicant's financial condition or eligibility changes after the court has granted an initial fee waiver are in Govt C §68636.

The fee waiver law provides for reimbursement to the court of waived court fees and costs when the party who obtained a fee waiver subsequently collects money as part of a satisfaction of judgment or settlement in Govt C §§68637-68638. A special exception applies in unlawful detainer actions. See Govt C §68637(b)(3)(A). An initial fee waiver expires 60 days after the judgment, dismissal, or other final disposition of the case. Govt C §68639. The Judicial Council may adopt a rule allowing parties who are not eligible for a fee waiver to pay court fees in installments. Govt C §68640.

In an appropriate case, the court may decline to award attorney fees against an indigent party. See Garcia v Santana (2009) 174 CA4th 464, 94 CR3d 299.

For detailed discussion of fee waiver procedures, see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 10 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

IV. MOTION TO QUASH

§10.18 A. Statutory Basis and Tactical Considerations

If any aspect of the summons or the manner in which it was served is defective, the tenant's attorney may file a motion to quash service of summons based on the court's lack of jurisdiction over the tenant. CCP §418.10(a)(1). A notice of motion to quash must be served and filed within the 5-day period to answer after the alleged service of the summons (see §10.1), unless the court allows an extension of time. See CCP §418.10(a). The landlord cannot take the tenant's default if a motion to quash has been filed. CCP §585(b).

In challenging service of process, the tenant's attorney must be careful to designate on the pleadings that the attorney is making a "special appearance," which does not by itself subject the tenant to the court's jurisdiction. A party's "general appearance" in a case is considered to be equivalent to personal service of summons, confers personal jurisdiction over the party, and waives its right to contest jurisdiction. See CCP §§410.50(a), 1014. A special appearance is made only if the tenant files and serves a motion to quash without taking other steps inconsistent with a special appearance (e.g., entering stipulations (other than a stipulation to extend the time to plead), moving for a trial continuance, or moving to disqualify a judge). Filing an ex parte application for an order setting a deposition constitutes a general appearance and, therefore, waives the right to challenge personal jurisdiction. Factor Health Mgmt. v Superior Court (2005) 132 CA4th 246, 33 CR3d 599. See CCP §1014.

Under CCP §418.10(d)-(e), however, the tenant may move to vacate a default, request an extension of time to plead, or when it files a motion to quash, simultaneously answer, demur, or move to strike the complaint without making a general appearance. If the court denies the motion to quash, the tenant's general appearance is effective on the date the order denying the motion is entered. CCP §418.10(e)(1)-(2). Failure to make a motion to quash under §418.10 at the time of filing a demurrer or motion to strike constitutes a waiver of the issues of personal jurisdiction, inadequacy of process, or inadequacy of service of process. CCP §418.10(e)(3).

Filing a motion to quash extends the tenant's time to plead until 5 days after service of an order denying the motion; the court may extend this time by an additional 15 days for good cause. CCP §1167.4(b). When a motion to quash is granted, the tenant has 5 days to respond after a new or amended summons and complaint are served. Thus, a motion to quash can delay an unlawful detainer action considerably.

PRACTICE TIP: The tenant's attorney should make a motion to quash only when justified, and not merely for purposes of delay. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-200. Landlord counsel should monitor proceedings under CCP §418.10 to discover delaying tactics, e.g., commencing writ proceedings and then taking no action, or setting hearings on extremely long notice.

Tenant advocates have attacked CCP §1167's 5-days-to-answer requirement by means of motions to quash, contending that it violates the due process and equal protection clauses of the U.S. and California Constitutions. Such challenges have been rejected by the courts. In Lindsey v Normet (1972) 405 US 56, 31 L Ed 2d 36, 92 S Ct 862, the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of an Oregon statute requiring the case to go to trial within 6 days after service of the summons. Citing the Lindsey decision as dispositive, the court in Deal v Municipal Court (1984) 157 CA3d 991, 997, 204 CR 79, held that California's requirement that the tenant file a responsive pleading within 5 days of service violates neither the due process nor equal protection clause because:

- The tenant may use a simplified answer form; and
- The court may extend the time to answer for good cause.

For further discussion, see California Eviction Defense Manual §11.33 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

PRACTICE TIP: If the tenant only contacts the practitioner as the 5-day time to plead is about to run, the practitioner can prepare a simple answer, sometimes just a general denial of all allegations, and file it to prevent a default. The tenant may then file an amended answer within 10 days and include appropriate defenses. See CCP §430.40(b), and discussion in §10.71.

B. Grounds

§10.19 1. Defective Service of Summons

Personal service means actual delivery of a copy of the summons and complaint to the defendant by the process server. A summons may be served by "any person who is at least 18 years of age and not a party to the action." CCP §414.10. Consequently, service of process is defective if made by the landlord or a minor.

Service is considered to be complete at the time of delivery. See Sternbeck v Buck (1957) 148 CA2d 829, 832, 307 P2d 970. In Sternbeck, service of summons did not satisfy the requirements of personal service when process was served on the defendant's wife while he was out of view, some 100 feet away. After the wife promised the process server that she would deliver the summons to her husband, she immediately did so. Even though the defendant had actual knowledge of the summons and its contents, the court held service to be defective because the statute was not strictly obeyed. 148 CA2d at 833.

The court's language in Sternbeck emphasized that strict compliance with the technical requirements of service of process is necessary. The court stated that, unless the technical requirements are strictly followed, "the court has no jurisdiction whatsoever over the defendant, its judgment is a complete nullity and should, after proper proceedings, be set aside." 148 CA2d at 834. The court explained that the legislature, and not the courts, has responsibility for liberalizing the procedures of service of process (148 CA2d at 834):

> Merely because an action sounds in equity, it does not justify the court in rewriting the code sections relating to personal jurisdiction by proclaiming that "substituted service" is just as good as "personal service". … If such reasoning were sound, service by mail would similarly suffice where the defendant actually opened the envelope and received the documents.

See Lettenmaier v Lettenmaier (1962) 203 CA2d 837, 22 CR 156. See also Waller v Weston (1899) 125 C 201, 203, 57 P 892. If service is made by mail with a notice and acknowledgment of receipt under CCP §415.30, the summons is deemed served on the date that written acknowledgment of receipt is executed, not on the date the documents are mailed.

When the affidavit of proof of service (required by CCP §417.10) states that service was made by personal delivery, a motion to quash should be granted if the process server did not actually hand the summons and complaint to the defendant. When the process server and the defendant are within speaking distance of each other, however, and a reasonable person could assume that service of a legal document is being attempted, the defendant cannot avoid service by moving away and refusing to touch the documents. See Trujillo v Trujillo (1945) 71 CA2d 257, 162 P2d 640 (defendant remained inside locked car and refused to open door); In re Ball (1934) 2 CA2d 578, 38 P2d 411.

As with an attack on jurisdiction grounded on defective personal service, a defendant served with process through another authorized method of service may use the motion to quash if the method did not strictly comply with statutory requirements. Such an attack might arise if the landlord did not use "reasonable diligence" to effect personal service before using substituted service (CCP §415.20; see §9.48) or constructive service (CCP §415.45; see §9.49).

PRACTICE TIP: Defense counsel will generally know after an initial interview whether a motion to quash service based on defective service might be made, and could raise the possibility of waiving the motion in exchange for a longer time in which to plead. The landlord's attorney may wish to bargain with defense counsel over the length of an extension to answer, i.e., to vary the length of time based on representations of what kind of response might be made.

2. Defective Complaint

a. No Cause of Action Stated in Unlawful Detainer

§10.20 (1) Judicial Reasoning

Service of a complaint accompanied by the 5-day summons expressly reserved for unlawful detainer (CCP §1167) may be challenged by a motion to quash if the complaint does not state a cause of action for unlawful detainer. Smith v Municipal Court (1988) 202 CA3d 685, 688, 245 CR 300; Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court (1983) 146 CA3d 1033, 1036, 194 CR 685 (complaint failed to allege service of proper 3-day notice to perform or quit as required by CCP §1161(3)). A denial of a motion to quash on this ground is reviewable by a writ of mandate. 146 CA3d at 1035. See §10.27.

Because strict compliance with the specifically prescribed notice conditions is a condition precedent to bringing an unlawful detainer, lack of compliance with the jurisdictional prerequisites is properly tested by a motion to quash. In Parsons v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th Supp 1, 58 CR3d 48, e.g., the court upheld a motion to quash which challenged the use of a 30-day notice to terminate a houseboat tenancy when a 60-day notice is required by CC §800.70. The court held that a motion to quash is the only method to test whether the complaint states a cause of action for unlawful detainer when the pleading defect affects personal jurisdiction.

The same reasoning in Parsons and Delta Imports applies by analogy to an unlawful detainer action in a rent control jurisdiction if the notice attached to the complaint fails to comply with requirements of the rent control law (e.g., fails to state the "just cause" basis of the eviction, usually with a required recitation of specific facts). Following the logic of the Delta Imports decision even further means that a complaint failing to allege any element essential to an unlawful detainer action is vulnerable to a motion to quash. These conclusions follow from the principle that unlawful detainer, as a summary remedy, is limited to recovery of possession and ancillary relief allowed by statute. Statutory procedures for recovery of possession must be strictly followed. Greene v Municipal Court (1975) 51 CA3d 446, 450, 124 CR 139.

When a complaint fails to state an unlawful detainer cause of action, but states some other cause of action, a 30-day rather than a 5-day summons is appropriate, and the court does not acquire personal jurisdiction over a tenant who is served such a complaint with a 5-day summons. 51 CA3d at 451. If a complaint otherwise properly states a cause of action for unlawful detainer, but also seeks relief that is not properly the subject of an unlawful detainer action, alternatives are a motion to quash the service of the summons and complaint or a motion to strike the improper allegations, both of which may be filed simultaneously without making a general appearance. See §§10.18, 10.22-10.23, 10.38-10.47.

Claims falling outside the scope of unlawful detainer must be treated as ordinary civil actions in which the 30-day summons (CCP §412.20(a)(3)) must be used. Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court, supra; Martin v Pacific S.W. Royalties, Inc. (1940) 41 CA2d 161, 167, 106 P2d 443; Tropical Inv. Co. v Brown (1919) 45 CA 205, 210, 187 P 133. Thus, an action that seeks possession of the premises without alleging compliance with the unlawful detainer notice requirements, and requests relief not recoverable in an unlawful detainer action, would effectively be an ejectment, trespass, or quiet title action requiring service of a 30-day summons.

§10.21 (2) Compare: Demurrer

A complaint that fails to allege facts essential to an unlawful detainer cause of action may also be attacked by a demurrer. See §§10.29-10.37. The difference between the procedures is that a motion to quash attacks service of the summons and complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction, while a demurrer tests the legal sufficiency of the allegations in the complaint. A motion to quash is frequently decided on factual evidence, while a demurrer assesses the legal sufficiency of the pleading by reviewing the complaint and matters of which the court may take judicial notice; a demurrer is not an evidentiary motion. See §§10.24-10.25, 10.33. A motion to quash may be made by specially appearing, but the filing of a demurrer without simultaneously moving to quash constitutes a general appearance. See CCP §418.10(e), discussed in §10.18.

When a motion to quash is granted, a defective complaint (if amendable) must be amended and personally served with a summons on the defendant. When a demurrer is sustained and the complaint is capable of being amended, the amended pleading may be served on defendant's counsel. The time for the defendant to answer after service of the amended complaint is the same in either case, unless counsel is served by mail after a demurrer is sustained. CCP §1013. Another major difference between the two motions is that the notice period for a hearing on a motion to quash is shortened by CCP §1167.4(a) (see §10.24), while a demurrer may only be scheduled on a minimum of 16 court days' notice under CCP §1005(b) (see §10.32).

PRACTICE TIP: Whether counsel for defendant employs a motion to quash or a demurrer to address deficient allegations in an unlawful detainer complaint depends on a number of factors including local court attitudes and practices, and the needs and circumstances of the case. In Los Angeles County, for example, at the hearing on a motion to quash, the judge will often allow the landlord's attorney to serve the defendant with the summons and complaint in the courtroom, take the motion to quash service off calendar, and tell the defendant that he or she has 5 days to respond.

Another important factor is whether the defect appears on the face of the complaint or whether it must be proved by extrinsic evidence. Because a motion to quash challenges service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction, certain jurisdictional facts must be proved by competent evidence at the hearing. If, for example, the challenge to the termination notice extends beyond the face of the complaint to the issue of what kind of notice applies, the issue can and must be resolved by extrinsic evidence, and a motion to quash is the proper procedure. Parsons v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th Supp 1, 58 CR3d 48; Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court (1983) 146 CA3d 1033, 1036, 194 CR 685 (motion to quash is "only method" by which defendant can test whether complaint states cause of action in unlawful detainer). See also §10.29.

NOTE: If the motion to quash is granted because an improper termination notice was used or it appears on the face of the complaint that the notice was improperly served, the defect is fatal, the complaint cannot be amended, and the landlord must start over.

b. Unauthorized Relief Sought in Unlawful Detainer

§10.22 (1) Judicial Reasoning

When an unlawful detainer complaint seeks relief beyond what is expressly permitted by the unlawful detainer statutes, use of the 5-day summons is improper. Castle Park No. 5 v Katherine (1979) 91 CA3d Supp 6, 8 n1, 154 CR 498 (unlawful detainer complaint, based on 30-day notice to quit, improperly requested back rent). In such circumstances, a motion to quash or a motion to strike is available to attack the pleadings served on the tenant. 91 CA3d Supp at 9. But see Saberi v Bakhtiari (1985) 169 CA3d 509, 517, 215 CR 359 (motion to strike, not motion to quash, is proper method of objecting to unauthorized relief in an otherwise valid unlawful detainer complaint). Under the reasoning in the Castle Park decision, a motion to quash is appropriate even if the complaint otherwise properly states a cause of action in unlawful detainer. This reasoning appears to be inconsistent with the statutory and constitutional framework governing a court's personal jurisdiction over a defendant generally. If a complaint were adequately pleaded to state a cause of action in unlawful detainer, the defendant would have proper notice and an opportunity to be heard on the unlawful detainer issues, and the court would have jurisdiction over the defendant to enter a judgment awarding possession irrespective of superfluous and improper claims for damages. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 6, 17, 19, 24 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.23 (2) Compare: Motion to Strike

An unlawful detainer action that demands relief unauthorized by the summary unlawful detainer procedures may also be challenged by a motion to strike the improper allegations. See §§10.40-10.44. The essential difference between these methods is that a motion to quash attacks service of the summons and complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction, while a motion to strike seeks to eliminate improper allegations or prayer for relief from the complaint. See §§10.38-10.47. The procedural differences between a motion to quash and a motion to strike are nearly the same as those between a motion to quash and a demurrer. See §§10.21, 10.46. Landlord attorneys claim that since unlawful detainer actions are unique in that they are to recover possession of premises unlawfully detained by the defendant, the landlord's attorney may verify the complaint if the plaintiff is "otherwise unable to do so" the same day the unlawful detainer action is to be filed. CCP §446. But see discussion in §9.42.

C. Procedure

§10.24 1. Shortened Hearing Notice

The statutory authority for a motion to quash is CCP §418.10, as limited by CCP §1167.4. To make a motion to quash, the attorney must file a notice of motion, a factual declaration, and a supporting memorandum. See notice form in §10.28. The notice of motion must be filed within the 5-day period in which to file responsive pleadings to the complaint, unless the court extends the time on a showing of good cause. CCP §418.10(a). An extension might be required if the motion contends that the alleged service was never made, because the tenant in such a case might not have knowledge of the action early enough to allow preparation and filing of the motion within the 5-day period. See §10.48.

According to the precise statutory language peculiar to unlawful detainer actions, a motion to quash must be made not less than 3, nor more than 7, days after the date that the notice of motion is filed. CCP §1167.4(a). Presumably, this means that the motion must be heard within that 3- to 7-day period. This statutory language, however, is literally inconsistent with CCP §1005.5, which states that a motion is deemed to have been made when notice of the motion is filed.

Service of a motion to quash in an ordinary civil action is generally governed by CCP §1005. See CCP §1005(a)(4). Under CCP §1005(b), serving the motion by mail extends the notice period of 16 court days by 5 days, and serving by express mail, or other method of overnight delivery, or (by stipulation) facsimile transmission, extends the notice period by 2 calendar days. A notice of motion governed by CCP §1005(b) is expressly excluded from the extension rules of CCP §1013. Because motions to quash in unlawful detainer actions are governed by both CCP §418.10 and CCP §1167.4, which are silent on the effect of alternative methods of service on the shortened notice prescribed by CCP §1167.4(a), it is arguable that the extension rules of either CCP §1005(b) or CCP §1013 apply when the motion is not personally served. The rules are effectively the same in any event. The Los Angeles Superior Court as a matter of practice applies CCP §1013.

PRACTICE TIP: This shortened notice period under CCP §1167.4(a) may actually work to the landlord's detriment. Under it, the tenant theoretically could file and personally serve a motion to quash on Friday afternoon, to be heard on Monday morning. Under Cal Rules of Ct 1327, which governs the time periods and methods for opposing a motion to quash in an unlawful detainer action, the landlord may either present oral opposition at the hearing or file and serve written opposition on or before the court day of the hearing. The landlord's attorney should file opposition prior to the hearing and as quickly as possible after being served with the motion.

Code of Civil Procedure §1005(c) requires that all papers opposing a motion and all reply papers be served by personal delivery, facsimile transmission, express mail, or other means that are reasonably calculated to ensure delivery to the other party by the close of the next business day after the papers are filed with the court.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.25 2. Supporting Documents

The notice of motion must state the specific grounds on which the motion is based. CCP §1010; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110(a). Failure to file and serve a supporting memorandum may be cause for denial of the motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(a).

NOTE: Cal Rules of Ct 3.1114(a) dispenses with the need for a supporting memorandum for certain civil motions, applications, and petitions filed on Judicial Council forms, including applications for an order extending the time to serve a pleading and a motion to be relieved as counsel. However, a party may submit or the court may order submission of a supporting memorandum if it would further the interests of justice. Rule 3.1114(b).

The declarations setting forth specific facts in support of the motion should be based on firsthand knowledge, and avoid conclusions of law or statements made on information and belief. Even if no objection is made, the court may ignore an unverified declaration or one that contains inadmissible hearsay, opinion, or supposition. Inselberg v Inselberg (1976) 56 CA3d 484, 489, 128 CR 578. See notice, supporting memorandum, and declaration forms in §§10.28-10.28B.

Some trial courts allow oral testimony concerning the manner of service at the hearing on the motion; others do not. It is a mistake, therefore, to prepare a supporting declaration hastily, in the hope that oral testimony can cure its deficiencies. If the claimed defect is in the manner of service, the landlord's attorney should have the process server in court or file an opposing declaration to contest the tenant's claim with admissible evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.26 3. Order After Hearing

Unless tenant's counsel waives notice of the ruling during the hearing on the motion, the landlord's attorney must serve some form of notice of the ruling denying the motion to start the 5-day period to answer. See alternatives for notice discussed in §10.34. See also Cal Rules of Ct 3.1312; CCP §664.5.

The tenant has 5 days to answer after service of notice of an order or the ruling denying the motion to quash, but the court may extend this time up to 15 additional days for good cause. CCP §1167.4(b). The court clerk will not enter the tenant's default until 6 days after service of the notice (11 days if service is made by mail).

If the trial court grants the defendant's motion to quash service of process and to dismiss the case, the trial court loses jurisdiction to reconsider its ruling after judgment is entered. APRI Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1999) 76 CA4th 176, 90 CR2d 171. In APRI, the defendant successfully moved to quash service of the summons and to dismiss the case. The plaintiff moved for reconsideration. The defendant filed the order granting her motion. The trial court then granted the plaintiff's motion for reconsideration. The Second District Court of Appeal held that a written order of dismissal is a judgment, and that, once the trial court enters a judgment, it lacks the power to grant reconsideration.

§10.27 4. Review by Writ of Mandate

It is generally impractical for a landlord to appeal a trial court's grant of a motion to quash; it is more economical to re-serve the summons and complaint as quickly as possible. The tenant may attack the trial court's denial of a motion to quash by seeking a writ of mandate from the applicable reviewing court. See, e.g., Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court (1983) 146 CA3d 1033, 194 CR 685. A petition for a writ of mandate should be filed with the appropriate reviewing court within 10 days after service of notice of entry of an order denying the motion, or within up to an additional 20 days if allowed by the trial court for good cause. CCP §418.10(c). When a writ petition is filed, and notice of the filing is served on the plaintiff and filed with the court before the time prescribed for filing a responsive pleading:

- The time to respond in the main action is extended to 10 days (plus up to an additional 20 days if allowed by the trial court) after service of notice of denial of the writ petition (see CCP §418.10(c)); and
- The defendant is not considered to have made a general appearance until the writ proceedings conclude (see CCP §418.10(e)(2)).

It is unclear whether the CCP §418.10(c) automatic stay of proceedings is applicable in unlawful detainer actions while a petition for a writ is pending following the denial of a motion to quash. Code of Civil Procedure §1177 states that the general rules of civil procedure (CCP §§307-1062.10) apply in unlawful detainer actions except as provided in CCP §§1159-1179a. Both CCP §§1167.4(a) and 418.10(b) set the time for hearing of a motion under §418.10(a), but §1167.4(a) provides for a shorter time. Similarly, both CCP §§1167.4(b) and 418.10(b) prescribe the time to plead after denial of a motion to quash, except that the unlawful detainer statute shortens the time to file a responsive pleading to 5 days after service of notice of an order denying the defendant's motion; the court may extend the defendant's time to plead for an additional 15 days on a showing of good cause (CCP §1167.4(b)).

Code of Civil Procedure §1167.4(b) thus requires a general appearance within, at the most, 20 days after denial of a motion to quash service. This timing may have the practical effect of denying defendant-tenants the right to mandate proceedings under CCP §418.10(c), because it would be impossible to prepare and file a mandate petition and supporting memorandum, allow any time for the respondent court and real parties in interest to respond, and have a hearing on the merits before the 5- to 20-day time period of CCP §1167.4(b) elapses.

PRACTICE TIP: Code of Civil Procedure §1167.4 may be interpreted to mean that the 5-to-20-day response time runs from either denial of a motion to quash or, if a writ petition is timely filed, from the denial of the petition. Arguably, the 2002 amendment (see Stats 2002, ch 69) adding CCP §418.10(e)(2) expresses a legislative intent that any defendant may wait until after the conclusion of the writ proceedings to appear. Without this interpretation, it arguably denies tenants equal protection of the law. See California Eviction Defense Manual §11.43 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

For further discussion of the procedure for a motion to quash, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 19 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). For discussion of writ of mandate proceedings, see §13.63 and California Civil Writ Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2008).

SUPPORTING MEMORANDUM

A MOTION TO QUASH IS AUTHORIZED WHEN A DEFENDANT HAS NOT BEEN PROPERLY SERVED WITH THE SUMMONS AND COMPLAINT

1. California CCP §1167.4, in conjunction with CCP §418.10, gives authority for a motion to quash in unlawful detainer proceedings. Absent proper service of summons, the court has no jurisdiction over a party who does not voluntarily appear. See also CCP §§415.45, 410.50.

JURISDICTION IS REQUIRED FOR AN ENFORCEABLE JUDGMENT

2. A judgment entered without jurisdiction over the party subject to that judgment is void. Sternbeck v Buck (1957) 148 CA2d 829, 307 P2d 970. Service of summons is a jurisdictional requirement, without which the court has no jurisdiction in the action. Chaplin v Superior Court (1927) 81 CA 367, 253 P 954; CCP §1917. In an unlawful detainer action, it is of particular importance that proper service of summons be achieved. Greene v Municipal Court (1975) 51 CA3d 446, 124 CR 139.

3. Defective service of summons is not service and confers no jurisdiction over the party. Smith v Jones (1917) 174 C 513, 163 P 890; Sternbeck v Buck (1957) 148 CA2d 829, 307 P2d 970. Mere knowledge of the action, absent voluntary appearance by the party, is not sufficient for the court to assert its jurisdiction over the party. Coulston v Cooper (1966) 245 CA2d 866, 54 CR 302; Varra v Superior Court (1960) 181 CA2d 12, 4 CR 920. See CCP §§415.10-415.50.

4. California CCP §§415.10-415.50 govern the methods by which a summons and complaint may be served on a defendant in an unlawful detainer action. They include personal delivery to the defendant (CCP §415.10); substituted service by personal delivery to home or business, in the presence of or to the appropriate person there, and thereafter mailing (CCP §415.20); and posting and mailing under court order (CCP §415.45).

PROPER SERVICE IN THIS MATTER HAS NOT BEEN ACHIEVED

5. As can be seen from the declaration of _ _[name of defendant]_ _, attached to this motion, no personal, substituted, or "nail and mail" service has been achieved on Defendant.

WHEREFORE, AND FOR ALL OF THE ABOVE REASONS, Defendant prays that the court grant this motion and order service of summons quashed.

Respectfully submitted,

V. DEMURRER

§10.29 A. Legal Basis and Grounds

Demurrer is a procedure used at the pleading stage to obtain the trial court's ruling on the formal or legal sufficiency of allegations in an adverse party's complaint, cross-complaint, or answer. See CCP §§430.10-430.80, 589, 591. (For a discussion of demurrers generally, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 23 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).) The grounds for objecting to a complaint or cross-complaint by demurrer are set forth in CCP §430.10. Recodification in 1971 of the statutes governing demurrers abolished the historical distinction between "general" demurrers (complaint fails to state a cause of action) and "special" demurrers (all other grounds). See §§10.32-10.36 for a complete discussion of demurrer procedures.

The grounds for objecting to an answer by way of demurrer are set forth in CCP §430.20. See, e.g., Evans v Superior Court (1977) 67 CA3d 162, 136 CR 596 (unlawful detainer action). The discussion in this chapter focuses on demurrers to complaints (not answers) because they are common in unlawful detainer actions. Grounds for demurrer are limited to those enumerated in CCP §§430.10, 430.20.

A complaint is not immune from demurrer merely because the plaintiff uses a Judicial Council form complaint. People ex rel Dep't of Transp. v Superior Court (1992) 5 CA4th 1480, 7 CR2d 498. The court noted (5 CA4th at 1486):

> In some cases, merely checking a box on a Judicial Council form complaint will be sufficient. In other cases, such as this one, where specific allegations need be alleged, the form complaint is like a partially completed painting. It is up to the pleader to add the details that complete the picture.

Under CCP §1170, the tenant has the right to demur in an unlawful detainer action. Under CCP §430.10(a)-(c), (e), a demurrer may be used to attack the following defects:

- The court lacks subject matter jurisdiction;
- The complaint fails to state a cause of action in unlawful detainer;
- The plaintiff lacks legal capacity to sue; and
- Another action is pending between the same parties on the same cause of action (court must take judicial notice of the other action).

See §10.31 for a checklist. Although CCP §430.10(e) includes the failure of a pleading to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action as a ground for demurrer, there is authority that such defect must be attacked by a motion to quash rather than a demurrer, particularly if the defect is jurisdictional and the court must review extrinsic evidence to decide the issue. See Parsons v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th Supp 1, 58 CR3d 48; Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court (1983) 146 CA3d 1033, 1036, 194 CR 685. See §§10.20-10.21. A motion to quash, rather than a demurrer, arguably must also be used if the complaint improperly pleads a cause of action for unlawful detainer, but does plead a cause of action for something else, as such a case may not be served on a 5-day summons. See analogous discussion on motion to strike and conflicting appellate decisions in §10.22.

In Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court, supra, the court stated that a motion to quash service "is the only method by which the defendant can test whether the complaint states a cause of action for unlawful detainer." The court also remarked that a general demurrer tests only "whether the complaint states a cause of action for something even if it is on a theory other than unlawful detainer." This language is confusing but it does not preclude the use of a demurrer to attack the sufficiency of the allegations for a cause of action in unlawful detainer, particularly if the demurrer can be resolved solely by reviewing the face of the pleading. See, e.g., California Eviction Defense Manual §§11.28, 13.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

The supreme court, however, noted the Delta Imports decision and remarked (in dicta) that the only circumstance in which a motion to quash "has been approved as a procedure by which to challenge the sufficiency of the complaint is in unlawful detainer, where a demurrer is unavailable." Greener v WCAB (1993) 6 C4th 1028, 1036, 25 CR2d 539. That statement, which caused further confusion, was explained in a superior court reported opinion, which noted that Greener may be properly read "to approve the use of a motion to quash to attack an unlawful detainer complaint" if the pleading defect affects personal jurisdiction under the 5-day summons, because a demurrer is "unavailable" in the sense that a demurrer, as a general appearance, "would deprive the defendant of the relief he seeks in challenging personal jurisdiction." Parsons v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th Supp 1, 6, 58 CR3d 48. The court also noted that if the jurisdictional basis of the complaint is challenged, such as the service of a proper notice to quit, that issue frequently extends beyond the face of the complaint and must be resolved by an evidentiary review; a motion to quash rather than a demurrer is the proper procedure for doing this.

PRACTICE TIP: Prudent counsel will investigate local court interpretation of the Delta Imports decision and the manner in which it is applied. A motion to quash cannot be filed after a defendant appears by a demurrer, but both of these motions may be filed simultaneously without making a general appearance. See §10.18. See also CCP §1014; Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court, supra, discussed in §§10.20-10.21.

§10.30 B. Practical Considerations and Tactics

Landlord's Considerations

If the tenant demurs, and the landlord can cure the defect, a demurrer will delay the action, but will not terminate it in favor of the tenant because a court will likely give the landlord leave to amend the complaint. See CCP §472a(c); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g); Wennerholm v Stanford Univ. Sch. of Medicine (1942) 20 C2d 713, 128 P2d 522.

When the complaint is fatally defective and amending it is not possible, the landlord should consider dismissing the action without prejudice. This should be done, for example, when the eviction notice is defective or was improperly served. Dismissing immediately and starting over will save the landlord great expense and avoid further delays. If the landlord has pleaded an otherwise meritorious cause of action improperly, it is more expeditious to amend and serve the amended complaint, thereby making the demurrer moot. CCP §472.

Service of an amended complaint can be accomplished by mail addressed to tenant's counsel because the tenant's demurrer constitutes a general appearance in the action (unless the tenant demurs and moves to quash simultaneously; see CCP §418.10(e), discussed in §10.18). Personal service of an amended complaint, however, will require the tenant to respond to the amended complaint within 5 days, whereas mailing would extend the time to respond. When a landlord wishes to oppose the demurrer rather than amend the complaint, an order advancing the hearing date on the demurrer may be obtained. See §§10.32-10.37 for a complete discussion of demurrer procedures.

Tenant's Considerations

If a rent board case involving the primary issues in the eviction action was filed before the unlawful detainer and a hearing has either already occurred or is about to take place, counsel may wish to file a motion to abate alongside of a demurrer in the eviction action to permit the administrative agency to rule on the issues. See, e.g., Vargas v Municipal Court (1978) 22 C3d 902, 150 CR 918 (trial court had authority to postpone unlawful detainer trial temporarily to afford administrative agency opportunity to speedily resolve unfair labor practice charge pending against employer). For instance, if the eviction is based on nonpayment of rent, and there is a dispute about the maximum allowable rent, and the rent board has either ruled on or is about to rule on the issue of the maximum allowable rent for the unit, the trial court should abate the eviction for a reasonable period to allow the administrative agency to act. Obviously, the further along the administrative proceeding is, the more likely the trial court is to abate the unlawful detainer.

A demurrer may not always be the best strategy. If the landlord voluntarily dismisses the action because a demurrer for failure to state a cause of action is meritorious, the tenant cannot recover attorney fees under a provision in the lease or rental agreement. CC §1717. Accordingly, tenants' attorneys sometimes prefer to raise incurable defects in the answer, rather than by demurrer, in order to preserve the right to recover attorney fees after a trial on the merits. Apart from delay, demurring for curable defects may actually work to the tenant's detriment by enabling the landlord to cure defects in the complaint that otherwise might keep him or her from prevailing when the case goes to trial. On the other hand, a special demurrer may serve an important discovery function, especially in light of the shortened time for setting unlawful detainer actions for trial. Such demurrers may also preserve issues for trial and appeal.

When the ground for objection does not appear on the face of the complaint, the objection may be stated as an affirmative defense in the answer. CCP §430.30(b). In some instances, a motion to strike may be able to reach defects in a complaint that are not within the grounds enumerated in CCP §430.10, or that do not strictly appear on the face of the complaint (see §§10.38-10.47). Thus, it is not uncommon for the tenant to file a demurrer and motion to strike simultaneously in an unlawful detainer action.

The following is a checklist of the permitted grounds for demurrer, with cross-references to pertinent sections of statutory procedure and sections in this book where the allegation is discussed. In some cases a motion to quash under Parsons v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th Supp 1, 58 CR3d 48 and Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court (1983) 146 CA3d 1033, 194 CR 685 may be preferable because of local court interpretation of decisional law or other considerations. See §§10.20-10.21, 10.29. A tenant may demur, answer, move to strike, and move to quash simultaneously without making a general appearance. See CCP §418.10(e), discussed in §10.18.

___ 1. Plaintiff lacks legal capacity to sue. CCP §430.10(b); see §§7.64, 9.34, 9.37.

___ 2. Defect or misjoinder of parties. CCP §430.10(d); see §9.35.

___ 3. Lack of requisite relationship. CCP §430.10(e); see §§9.36-9.37. Motion to quash should be considered.

___ 4. No subject matter jurisdiction. CCP §430.10(a); see §9.32.

___ 5. Premature filing of complaint. CCP §430.10(e); see §9.44. Motion to quash should be considered.

___ 6. Inadequate description of premises. CCP §430.10(e) or (f); see §9.37.

___ 7. Failure to allege existence of lease or rental agreement, or whether lease or rental agreement is written or oral. CCP §430.10(e) or (g); see §9.37.

___ 8. Failure to attach to complaint written lease or rental agreement, as required in residential tenancies by CCP §1166(c)(1)(B), unless agreement is oral or eviction is based on rent default. CCP §430.10(e) or (g); see §9.37.

___ 9. Failure to attach to complaint copy of required termination notice, as required in residential tenancies by CCP §1166(c)(1)(A). CCP §430.10(e); see §9.37. Motion to quash should be considered.

___ 10. Failure to allege fact of prior service of required termination notice. CCP §430.10(e); see §9.37. Motion to quash should be considered.

___ 11. Failure either to allege method of service of required termination notice or to attach to complaint copy of proof of service of required notice, as required by CCP §1166(a)(5). CCP §430.10(e) or (f); see §9.37. Motion to quash should be considered.

___ 12. Notice, if required, not pleaded according to legal effect, verbatim, or attached as exhibit. CCP §430.10(e) or (f); see §9.37.

___ 13. No allegation of facts on which landlord seeks recovery. CCP §430.10(e) or (f); see §§9.37-9.40. Motion to quash should be considered.

___ 14. No allegation that tenant remains in actual possession. CCP §430.10(e); see §9.37. Motion to quash should be considered.

___ 15. Allegations uncertain. CCP §430.10(f); see §9.37.

___ 16. No request for possession of premises in complaint. CCP §430.10(e); see §9.37.

___ 17. Request for forfeiture when not requested in prior notice. CCP §430.10(e). This defect is also subject to a motion to strike; see §§8.34, 9.37.

___ 18. Request for relief not appropriate to unlawful detainer action. CCP §430.10(e). This defect also may be subject to a motion to quash or a motion to strike; see §§9.37-9.41, 10.22, 10.39-10.45.

___ 19. Failure to allege compliance with applicable rent or eviction control law. CCP §430.10(e); see §§9.16, 9.37. Motion to quash should be considered. If the complaint does not reveal that the premises are subject to rent control, the tenant should raise the issue by answer if appropriate.

___ 20. Request for prospective damages until possession returned to landlord. CCP §430.10(e); see §§9.37-9.41, 10.40. Motion to strike should be considered.

___ 21. Another action pending. CCP §430.10(c). See also Vargas v Municipal Court (1978) 22 C3d 902, 150 CR 918. May apply when rent board case is pending, but not yet decided. See §§9.15, 10.30.

___ 22. After a foreclosure, failure to allege that plaintiff acquired title by a foreclosure sale that was conducted in compliance with statutory law and the deed of trust, followed by purchase at the sale. See §§8.68B, 10.54.

___ 23. After a foreclosure, failure to allege that plaintiff served the 3-day or 60-day notice on the former owner or tenant required by CCP §1161a or §1161b. See §§8.68A, 8.68C.

___ 24. After a foreclosure, failure to allege that plaintiff's title is superior to defendant's interest in the lease. See §8.68E.

NOTE: The Appendixes in California Eviction Defense Manual (2d ed Cal CEB 1993) contain numerous sample supporting memoranda for situations described in the above checklist.

D. Procedure

§10.32 1. Scheduling the Hearing

Unless a motion to quash service of summons has been filed (see §§10.18-10.28) or an extension of time to plead has been granted, a demurrer must be filed within 5 days after the unlawful detainer summons was served. CCP §1167. Failure to demur within this time waives all objections subject to demurrer except lack of subject matter jurisdiction and failure to allege facts sufficient to state a cause of action. CCP §430.80(a). The tenant may demur and answer at the same time. CCP §430.30(c). Or the tenant may first demur, and then answer after the ruling on the demurrer. CCP §§472a-472b. The tenant may also demur, answer, move to strike, and move to quash simultaneously without making a general appearance. See CCP §418.10(e), discussed in §10.18.

The scheduling of a hearing on a demurrer is generally governed by CCP §1005, which applies to many civil motions, except that a demurrer must be set for hearing within 35 days after it was filed or on the first date available to the court thereafter, except that the court may set the hearing for an earlier or a later date on a showing of good cause. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(c)-(d). Notice of the motion must be given at least 16 court days before the hearing; add 5 calendar days if the notice is served by regular mail within California and 2 calendar days if service is by express mail or another method of overnight delivery or (by agreement of the parties) facsimile transmission. Opposing papers must be filed at least 9 court days before the hearing, and reply papers at least 5 court days before the hearing. CCP §1005(b). Late-filed papers will likely be disregarded by the court. All opposing and reply papers must be served by personal delivery, facsimile transmission, express mail, or other means that are reasonably calculated to ensure delivery to the other party by the close of the next business day after the papers are filed with the court. CCP §1005(c). It is usually not in the tenant's interest to obtain an order shortening time for scheduling a demurrer, but the landlord may wish to seek an order advancing the hearing date. In Los Angeles County, some courts advance the hearing on a demurrer on their own initiative so that the case is not unduly delayed. This is particularly true with pro per demurrers, which may be summarily denied.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.33 2. Supporting Documents

The demurrer must specify the grounds on which the tenant objects to the complaint. CCP §430.60. See §§10.30-10.31. Each ground must be stated in a separate paragraph, which must also state whether the ground applies to the entire complaint or to specified causes of action. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(a). A ground for objection to a pleading may be raised by demurrer only if the defect appears on the face of the pleading, or arises from a matter of which the court may take judicial notice. CCP §430.30(a); James v Superior Court (1968) 261 CA2d 415, 67 CR 783. With few exceptions, the demurring party may not allege facts or introduce evidence to prove the grounds for a demurrer. See Middlebrook-Anderson Co. v Southwest Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 18 CA3d 1023, 1039, 96 CR 338.

When a ground for demurrer is based on a matter of which the court may take judicial notice, the matter to be judicially noticed must be specified in the demurrer or in the supporting memorandum unless the court permits otherwise; copies of the matter to be judicially noticed must be provided to the court and each party. CCP §430.70; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(c). Judicial notice of documents submitted as legislative history will only be granted to cognizable legislative history documents. Kaufman & Broad Communities, Inc. v Performance Plastering, Inc. (2005) 133 CA4th 26, 34 CR3d 520 (contains lists of documents that do and do not constitute cognizable legislative history in the Court of Appeal, Third District). The demurrer may be combined with a notice of hearing or prepared as a separate document. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(a), (c). A supporting memorandum must be filed with the demurrer and support each ground. The absence of a supporting memorandum may be taken as a waiver of all grounds not supported. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(a). See forms in §§10.36-10.36A.

Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(f), if either party fails to appear at the hearing, the party who appears may ask the court to dispose of the demurrer on the merits, and the court must do so, unless the hearing is continued for good cause. If neither party appears, the court may dispose of the matter on its merits, drop the matter from the calendar, or continue the hearing. The tenant's failure to appear in support of a special demurrer (presumably, one premised on CCP §430.10(b)-(d), (f)-(h)) may be construed as an admission that the demurrer has no merit, and that all grounds stated in it are waived. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(f).

3. Order After Hearing

§10.34 a. Demurrer Overruled

If the demurrer is overruled, leave to answer is considered to be granted unless otherwise ordered. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g). Most often, the court will state orally from the bench that the demurrer is overruled and that the tenant has 5 calendar days to answer. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g). Some courts will try to obtain a waiver of written notice under CCP §472b. If the tenant asks for written notice, it may be given by counsel for the landlord. California Rules of Court 3.1312 requires an order to be prepared by the prevailing party, approved as "conforming to the court's order" by the other party, and then submitted to the court for approval and signature. In limited civil cases, some courts bypass that rule by entering a minute order at the hearing and requiring the prevailing party to unilaterally prepare and sign a notice of ruling. Whatever procedure is used, the order or notice must be served by the landlord's attorney (to start the running of the time to answer) and ultimately must be filed with the court with a proof of service. Attorneys for landlords should bring a proposed "notice of ruling" or "order" to court with copies to conform when an opponent is represented in propria persona so that personal service may be made.

In unlawful detainer actions, unless otherwise ordered, the demurring party has 5 calendar days to answer from service of notice of an adverse ruling on the demurrer (with an additional 5 calendar days if service is by regular mail and the place of address and place of mailing are within California, or an additional 2 court days if service is by express mail, another method of overnight delivery, or (with the parties' agreement) by facsimile transmission). CCP §§472b, 1013; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g). If the demurrer is overruled, and the tenant fails to answer within the time allowed, the landlord may seek and obtain a default judgment. CCP §586(a)(2). See §13.3. The court clerk will not enter the tenant's default unless the clerk or the landlord has filed and served a proper notice of ruling or order on the demurrer, or notice was waived in open court and noted in the court file. See CCP §472b; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1109, 3.1320(g).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.35 b. Demurrer Sustained

If the defect in the complaint cannot be cured, the demurrer may be sustained without leave to amend. Lemoge Elect. v County of San Mateo (1956) 46 C2d 659, 297 P2d 638; Andrews v Joint Clerks Port Labor Relations Comm. (1966) 239 CA2d 285, 300, 48 CR 646. If, however, the complaint raises a reasonable possibility that its defects can be cured by amendments, the landlord should be given leave to amend and has 5 calendar days in which to amend. CCP §472a(c); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g); Harman v City & County of San Francisco (1972) 7 C3d 150, 157, 101 CR 880.

The court must state its grounds for sustaining a demurrer. CCP §472d. However, a plaintiff's failure to notify the court of its failure to state grounds waives the error. Krawitz v Rusch (1989) 209 CA3d 957, 257 CR 610. The court will dismiss the complaint after a demurrer is sustained without leave to amend. Whether or not the plaintiff has requested leave to amend, the judgment entered after an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend may be appealed on the question of whether the court abused its discretion. CCP §472c(a).

If a demurrer is sustained with leave to amend the complaint, but the plaintiff does not amend within the time permitted in the order, the court will dismiss the complaint after the defendant files a noticed motion or makes an ex parte request with notice to the plaintiff. See Datig v Dove Books, Inc. (1999) 73 CA4th 964, 87 CR2d 719. In this situation, the landlord's attorney must be prepared to respond quickly. If plaintiff files no opposition to the demurrer and then attempts to dismiss the case after a tentative ruling is made to sustain the demurrer without leave to amend but before the hearing on the motion, the trial court has jurisdiction to vacate the voluntary dismissal and grant the demurrer without leave to amend. Groth Bros. Oldsmobile, Inc. v Gallagher (2002) 97 CA4th 60, 118 CR2d 405. In an appropriate case, the tenant may then seek reasonable attorney fees under CC §1717.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel for the landlord may concede a meritorious demurrer before the hearing through the use of a permissive amendment under CCP §472 to expedite the case, particularly when personal service of the amended complaint on the tenant's counsel is convenient.

If the amended complaint is served by mail, the tenant has an additional 5 calendar days to respond, and if the amended complaint is served by express mail, another method of overnight delivery, or, on the parties' agreement, facsimile transmission, the tenant has an additional 2 court days to respond. CCP §1013. If the complaint is amended (before or after a ruling on demurrer), the tenant's pleading to the amended complaint must be filed within 5 days after service. CCP §1167.3. Of course, the tenant may also demur to the amended complaint.

AUTHORITY FOR DEMURRER

1. California CCP §430.10(e) permits a party to object to a pleading, by demurrer, if "[t]he pleading does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action."

2. A party may also object to a pleading by demurrer if "[t]he pleading is uncertain." "Uncertain" includes ambiguous and unintelligible. CCP §430.10(f).

TERMINATION NOTICE REQUIREMENTS MUST BE STRICTLY FOLLOWED IN UNLAWFUL DETAINER ACTIONS

3. "The statutory situations in which the remedy of unlawful detainer is available are exclusive, and the statutory procedure must be strictly followed. [Citations.]" Greene v Municipal Court (1975) 51 CA3d 446, 450, 124 CR 139. Among other statutory situations, a tenant is guilty of unlawful detainer for continuing in possession, without permission of the landlord, after default in the payment of rent required by the lease or rental agreement. CCP §1161(2).

4. When the claim is nonpayment of rent, the tenant must have been served with a written notice stating the exact amount of rent alleged to be due, and must have been given 3 days within which to pay the rent or quit the premises. Baugh v Consumers Assocs. (1966) 241 CA2d 672, 674, 50 CR 822. The notice must also state the name, telephone number, and address of the person to whom the rent payment shall be made, and either the usual days and hours that person will be available to receive it or the number of an account in a financial institution into which the payment may be made and the name and street address of the institution (which must be within five miles of the rental property). CCP §1161(2). "A notice to pay rent or quit which overstates the rent due is ineffective and will not support an action for unlawful detainer." Ernst Enters. v Sun Valley Gasoline, Inc. (1983) 139 CA3d 355, 359, 188 CR 641. See Nourafchan v Miner (1985) 169 CA3d 746, 215 CR 450. "Strict compliance with this provision of the unlawful detainer statute is mandatory." Baugh v Consumers

Assocs., supra*.

THE 3-DAY NOTICE OVERSTATES THE AMOUNT OF RENT ALLEGED DUE, BY INCLUDING A SECURITY DEPOSIT

5. Plaintiff's Exhibit 2 demands a total of $_ _[dollar amount]_ _ to be paid within 3 days to avoid forfeiture. The notice conflicts with the demand of the complaint at ¶10, and a demand for security deposit may not be included in a 3-day notice. See, e.g., Werner v Sargeant (1953) 121 CA2d 833, 836, 264 P2d 217, and California Eviction Defense Manual §6.18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993). It is no argument for Plaintiff to claim that the 3-day notice separates "rent" from "deposit." Clearly the notice demands payment of the full amount including the deposit to cure the alleged default. The notice therefore does not comport with the law.

THE AMOUNT OF RENT STATED IN THE 3-DAY NOTICE CONFLICTS WITH THE CONTRACT

6. In the present complaint, Plaintiff alleges a written rental agreement, at a monthly rental of _ _[dollar amount]_ _. A copy of the rental agreement, attached to the complaint as Exhibit 1, confirms that allegation. The 3-day notice, attached to the complaint as Exhibit 2, demands _ _[dollar amount]_ _ for the period _ _[e.g., January 1 through January 31]_ _. There is no explanation in the complaint of the differing amounts. "A notice to pay rent or quit which overstates the rent due is ineffective and will not support an action for unlawful detainer." Ernst Enters. v Sun Valley Gasoline, Inc. (1983) 139 CA3d 355, 359, 188 CR 641; Nourafchan v Miner (1985) 169 CA3d 746, 753, 215 CR 450.

THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES AMBIGUOUS CONTRACT TERMS

7. In the present complaint, Plaintiff alleges that the parties entered into a written agreement and that it is attached to the complaint as Exhibit 1. Complaint, ¶6. Plaintiff further alleges, supported by Exhibit 1, that the rental agreement provides for a monthly rent of _ _[dollar amount]_ _. The 3-day notice attached to the Complaint as Exhibit 2 conflicts with the alleged terms of the rental agreement by demanding more than the monthly rent alleged in the Complaint. There is no explanation in the Complaint of the reasons for the amount of the demand. The only hint of a rental amount different from that alleged in the Complaint and contained in the Rental Agreement is by three unreferenced pages purporting to be notices of rent increases. Paragraph 6.d. of the Complaint, however, is not checked, nor is there any verified allegation as to the meaning of these documents. At a minimum, an allegation that Plaintiff has complied with the notice and service provisions of CC §827 is required.

THE ALLEGED TENANCY WAS TERMINATED, ACCORDING TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT, WHEN THE 3-DAY NOTICE WAS SERVED

8. The expiration of a notice to quit is the act that terminates the tenancy for the purposes of rent. See Roberts v Redlich (1952) 111 CA2d 566, 568, 244 P2d 933; Kriz v Taylor (1979) 92 CA3d 302, 313, 154 CR 824.

9. Plaintiff alleges service of both a 30-day notice terminating the tenancy as of _ _[date]_ _, and a 3-day notice demanding rents from _ _[date]_ _ through _ _[date]_ _. Complaint, ¶7, and Exhibits 2 and 3. If the tenancy had terminated through operation of the 30-day notice, no rent, based on a contractual relationship or agreement of the parties, could be due beyond _ _[date]_ _.

10. Plaintiff's complaint is hopelessly inconsistent. Its allegations are ambiguous and unintelligible, and fail to state a cause of action for unlawful detainer.

THE COMPLAINT DEMANDS RENT THAT ALLEGEDLY BECAME DUE MORE THAN 1 YEAR BEFORE SERVICE OF THE NOTICE

11. When nonpayment of rent is the basis of the action, the exact amount of rent claimed to be due must be stated in the statutory notice to pay rent or quit. Baugh v Consumers Assocs. (1966) 241 CA2d 672, 674, 50 CR 822. The tenant must have been served with a written notice stating the amount of rent due, and must have been given at least 3 days within which to cure any default. CCP §1161(2). "Such notice may be served at any time within one year after the rent becomes due." CCP §1161(2). "Strict compliance with this provision of the unlawful detainer statute is mandatory." Baugh v Consumers Assocs. (1966) 241 CA2d 672, 674, 50 CR 822. "A notice to pay rent or quit which overstates the rent due is ineffective and will not support an action for unlawful detainer." Ernst Enters. v Sun Valley Gasoline, Inc. (1983) 139 CA3d 355, 359, 188 CR 641; see

12. "If a landlord waits over one year to sue for unpaid rent he is relegated to an ordinary breach of contract action, which results only in a money judgment without restitution of the demised property." Cal-American Income Prop. Fund IV v Ho (1984) 161 CA3d 583, 585, 207 CR 532.

13. In the present action, Plaintiff claims that a 3-day notice was served on _ _[date]_ _. Complaint, ¶8.a. The notice demands rent for the period of _ _[date]_ _ to _ _[date]_ _, which period spans over 1 year. Exhibit 2 to the Complaint. The rent demanded in the 3-day notice includes rent that became due, if at all, for the months of _ _[e.g., May, 1999 through July, 2000, inclusive]_ _. According to the written agreement attached as Exhibit 1 to the Complaint, the rent is due in advance, _ _[e.g., on the first day of the month]_ _. Exhibit 1, _ _[specify page and paragraph]_ _. According to the allegations of the Complaint, rent for the month(s) of _ _[e.g., May and June, 2000]_ _ became due on _ _[specify due date(s)]_ _, which _ _[is/are]_ _ more than 1 year before the date the notice was allegedly served. Because Plaintiff cannot maintain an action for unlawful detainer based on a notice that demands rent more than 1 year past due, and the notice predates the complaint and cannot be amended after service, the defect is fatal, and the complaint should be dismissed.

WHEREFORE Defendants pray that the Court will sustain their demurrer, and order this matter dismissed with prejudice.

Respectfully submitted,

§10.37 G. Frivolous Demurrers

A demurrer, as opposed to an answer, cannot be stricken on the grounds of being a sham or frivolous. Larco v Casaneuava (1866) 30 C 560, 565. Attorneys should be aware, however, that a court may impose sanctions under CCP §128.7 against a party or an attorney who files a frivolous demurrer or frivolously opposes a meritorious demurrer. A court also might regard a patently frivolous demurrer as evidence of the requisite malice in holding over to justify an award of statutory damages of up to $600, in addition to actual damages, including rent found due. CCP §1174 (see §§12.31-12.34). Many attorneys include a statement in the demurrer that it is filed in good faith and not for purposes of delay, but there is no legal requirement for such a statement.

Code of Civil Procedure §128.7(a) requires that every pleading must be signed by at least one attorney of record in the attorney's individual name, or if the party is pro per, the party must sign. The attorney or pro per party who signs the pleading thereby certifies that, to the best of the person's knowledge, the following are true:

- The pleading is not presented primarily for an improper purpose;
- Allegations and other factual contentions have evidentiary support;
- Denials of factual contentions have evidentiary support; and
- Claims, defenses, and other contentions are warranted by existing law or by a nonfrivolous argument for extension, modification, or reversal of existing law or establishment of new law.

CCP §128.7(b). Violation may subject the responsible attorney and/or party to sanctions. CCP §128.7(c).

VI. MOTION TO STRIKE

A. Legal Basis and Tactical Considerations

§10.38 1. Under CCP §§435-437 (Irrelevant, False, or Improper Matter)

Any party to an action may move to strike all or any part of a pleading, within the time allotted to respond to that pleading. CCP §435(b)(1). Thus, a motion to strike is available to both landlord and tenant, although (like a demurrer) it is used primarily by tenants to attack the complaint. On grounds under CCP §436, see §10.39. A trial court also has power to strike a pleading that is filed in disregard of established procedural requirements or that would otherwise violate orderly judicial administration. Neal v Bank of America (1949) 93 CA2d 678, 209 P2d 825.

Although a party may not demur to a portion of a cause of action, a substantive defect on the face of a portion of a cause of action (such as a claim barred by the statute of limitations or an improper claim for punitive damages) may be subject to a motion to strike. PH II, Inc. v Superior Court (1995) 33 CA4th 1680, 40 CR2d 169. The court emphasized that using the motion should be "cautious and sparing," so that the defendant would not have a "line item veto" over the complaint.

A motion to strike filed within the time allotted to answer extends the time to answer, but not the time to demur. CCP §§435(c)-(d), 585(b)-(c). Thus, when a pleading is arguably open to attack by demurrer or motion to strike, both should be filed at the same time and noticed for hearing at the same date and time. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1322(b). Filing a motion to strike also generally constitutes a general appearance in the action (see CCP §1014), unless the tenant moves to strike and moves to quash simultaneously (see CCP §418.10(e), discussed in §10.18), and precludes entry of a default judgment (CCP §§585-586). Filing a motion to strike by itself, however, may not preclude entry of a default in an unlawful detainer action. In such actions, "the defendant may appear and answer or demur." CCP §1170. This statute suggests that a tenant who wishes to avoid default must at least file an answer or demurrer within the time to respond.

PRACTICE TIP: A safer practice would be for the tenant to file either an answer or a demurrer along with a motion to strike. A scorched-earth policy in litigation, however, even if it does not lead to sanctions, can lead to a large attorney fee award to an opposing party who prevails. See Stokus v Marsh (1990) 217 CA3d 647, 266 CR 90, in which the appellate court affirmed an attorney fee award of $75,000 to the landlord and against the tenant. If the unlawful detainer defense is weak on the merits, dragging the case out by motions that do not ultimately benefit the tenant may result in a large judgment against the tenant for costs and attorney fees, in addition to loss of the premises.

§10.38A 2. Under CCP §425.16 (Anti-SLAPP Motion)

If the landlord responds to the tenant's complaints to government agencies about numerous code violations by suing the tenant, the tenant may be able to file a special motion to strike under CCP §425.16 on the ground that the landlord's suit is a strategic lawsuit against public participation (SLAPP). (See Making and Opposing Special Motions to Strike Under the California Anti-SLAPP Statute (Cal CEB Action Guide March 2009). See also §§5.18A, 8.110.) If the tenant prevails, attorney fees are available under CCP §425.16(c). See Ketchum v Moses (2001) 24 C4th 1122, 104 CR2d 377. (See chap 13 on procedures for recovering attorney fees after entry of judgment.) No other reported case validates filing an anti-SLAPP motion in an unlawful detainer case, so counsel should proceed cautiously in this as-yet uncharted area. If the court were to find that a special motion to strike is presented for an improper purpose, such as to harass, cause unnecessary delay, or increase litigation costs, or is frivolous and unwarranted by existing law, an award of costs and reasonable attorney fees to the plaintiff prevailing on the motion or other sanctions may be available under CCP §128.7. Moreover, it is a breach of ethics to take an action solely to cause unnecessary delay.

§10.39 B. Grounds

The following may be stricken from a pleading under CCP §436:

- Any irrelevant, false, or improper matter; and
- All or part of any pleading not drawn or filed in conformity with state law, a court rule, or a court order.

A motion to strike may be based on matter appearing on the face of the challenged pleading, or on matters of which the court takes judicial notice. CCP §437. Both of these statutes were enacted in 1982 (Stats 1982, ch 704), but it is unclear what effect they have on two established common law principles governing motions to strike:

- A motion to strike may be used to raise objections to a pleading that do not fall within the grounds for demurrer enumerated in CCP §430.10 (see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 24 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004)).
- A motion to strike may be used to attack defects not apparent on the face of a pleading (White Lighting Co. v Wolfson (1968) 68 C2d 336, 353, 66 CR 697).

The motion is most commonly used to attack the following procedural or technical defects on the face of the complaint:

- Lack of or improper verification (see CCP §1166(a)(1); Pearlman v Municipal Court (1979) 99 CA3d 568, 575, 160 CR 567);
- Late filing of a pleading (see Buck v Morrossis (1952) 114 CA2d 461, 250 P2d 270); and
- Unauthorized filing of a pleading (see Estate of Walters (1949) 89 CA2d 797, 202 P2d 89 (unauthorized intervention); Gilbert v Sherrod (1925) 75 CA 437, 243 P 30 (amended pleading without leave of court)).

NOTE: Many of the cases cited below in §§10.40-10.44 were decided before the effective date of CCP §§436-437. The decisions must be read with that fact in mind. The cases will probably still be relevant, but it is unclear how each might be decided under CCP §§436-437.

§10.40 1. Improper Request for Damages

The prayer in an unlawful detainer complaint is improper under CCP §436 if it seeks to recover damages not arising from the unlawful detainer itself, because CCP §1174(b) allows only damages occasioned by the unlawful detainer. Consequently, a request for other damages for breaches that occurred during or before the unlawful detainer would be improper and subject to a motion to strike. See, e.g., Vasey v California Dance Co. (1977) 70 CA3d 742, 748, 139 CR 72 (in action for unlawful detainer, trial court improperly awarded damages for tenant's breach of lease in making alterations to premises). See §9.41.

There are few exceptions; for example, a landlord can recover both back rent and damages resulting from the unlawful detainer under CCP §1174(b), when the action is brought for default in the payment of rent after the expiration of a 3-day notice under CCP §1161(2), but only damages resulting from the unlawful detainer, when the action follows the expiration of a 30-day or 60-day notice under CC §1946 or §1946.1. See Saberi v Bakhtiari (1985) 169 CA3d 509, 515, 215 CR 359 (request for pretermination rent when action based on 30-day notice is subject to motion to strike). See discussion of additional monetary relief allowed in §§9.38-9.40.

A defective prayer for relief is not within the grounds enumerated in CCP §430.10 and is not subject to demurrer. See Neblett v Neblett (1936) 13 CA2d 304, 56 P2d 969; Grisingher v Shaeffer (1938) 25 CA2d 5, 76 P2d 149. Thus, if only the prayer requests an improper item of damages, this defect should be challenged by a motion to strike. If a complaint seeks damages by way of a cause of action not proper in an unlawful detainer (e.g., cause of action for injury to the property), a motion to quash is appropriate because it is not proper to serve such a complaint on a 5-day summons. Parsons v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th Supp 1, 58 CR3d 48; Delta Imports, Inc. v Municipal Court (1983) 146 CA3d 1033, 194 CR 685.

Prospective damages for the tenant's continued possession of the premises after the date of judgment cannot be awarded in unlawful detainer proceedings. Cavanaugh v High (1960) 182 CA2d 714, 722, 6 CR 525; Roberts v Redlich (1952) 111 CA2d 566, 569, 244 P2d 933. A prayer for damages that uses language such as "while the defendant remains in unlawful possession," is improper, therefore, and should be stricken. A court may find a motion to strike sanctionable, however, if brought primarily to cause unnecessary delay or needless cost in the litigation. CCP §128.7(b)(1). See §§10.2, 10.37 and Practice Tip in §10.38.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.41 2. Improper Request for Back Rent

When a landlord bases an unlawful detainer action on a 30-day notice terminating a month-to-month tenancy (see §8.69), recovery of pretermination ("back") rent is not allowed; the landlord is limited to recovery of possession and damages. See Saberi v Bakhtiari (1985) 169 CA3d 509, 215 CR 359; Castle Park No. 5 v Katherine (1979) 91 CA3d Supp 6, 154 CR 498. Castle Park was a consolidated appeal of two cases. In one, the trial court had quashed service of the 5-day summons; in the other, the trial court had stricken the allegations and prayer for back rent. The court of appeal affirmed both orders. In Saberi, however, the court of appeal stated that a motion to strike is the exclusive remedy for improper matter in an otherwise valid unlawful detainer complaint. See §10.22.

Thus, when an unlawful detainer action is based on termination of a month-to-month tenancy, and the landlord has not served a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit, inclusion of an allegation and a prayer for back rent may subject the summons and complaint to either a motion to quash, based on the theory that a claim for back rent, not properly preceded by a 3-day notice, is invalid (see §10.20), or a motion to strike. If an unlawful detainer cause of action is otherwise properly stated in the complaint, a motion to strike may be directed at the request for improper damages. Saberi v Bakhtiari, supra. See §§9.38-9.41, 10.40 concerning recovery of both back rent and damages.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.42 3. Lack of Allegations for Statutory Damages

Under CCP §1174(b), if a defendant is found guilty of unlawful detainer and malice is shown, the plaintiff may be awarded statutory damages of up to $600, in addition to actual damages (including rent found due). Before January 1, 1994, §1174(b) provided for treble damages. Because the requirement of "malice" remains the same, cases addressing malice under the former treble-damages version of the statute should continue to apply to the current statutory scheme.

To support a prayer for statutory damages, the complaint must allege specific facts indicating that the tenant's continued possession is malicious. CCP §1174(b); Cyrus v Haveson (1976) 65 CA3d 306, 316, 135 CR 246 (to recover treble damages for forcible entry and detainer, complaint must allege specific facts constituting malice; conclusory allegations are insufficient).

A motion to strike the prayer for statutory damages is proper if the complaint fails to allege facts showing a malicious holdover. On the other hand, a motion to strike may only educate the landlord and permit him or her to file an amended complaint in which the facts are pleaded with great specificity. An alternate method would be to file a motion in limine at the time of trial. Landlord attorneys may file a motion at trial to amend the complaint for statutory damages based on facts supporting "malice" that were unknown to the parties when the complaint was served. See §§12.39-12.40. But see North 7th St. Assocs. v Constante (2001) 92 CA4th Supp 7, 111 CR2d 815 (landlord may not amend unlawful detainer complaint at trial to add new cause of action when amendment not based on same general facts).

The allegations of the complaint must be considered as a whole in determining whether a complaint sufficiently states facts to support statutory damages. Monge v Superior Court (1986) 176 CA3d 503, 222 CR 64. Thus, when a complaint alleges tenant conduct that is, e.g., malicious, intentional, and obstinate, without supporting facts, the tenant's attorney should determine whether the complaint contains specific language elsewhere that supports statutory damages. See Perkins v Superior Court (1981) 117 CA3d 1, 6, 172 CR 427 (conclusory allegations based on language in CC §3294 are not objectionable when sufficient foundational facts are also pleaded).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.43 4. No Attorney Fees in Rental Agreement

If the complaint seeks to recover the landlord's attorney fees, it must allege the existence of a provision in the lease or rental agreement authorizing an award of attorney fees. Stockton Theatres, Inc. v Palermo (1954) 124 CA2d 353, 268 P2d 799. Unless the complaint prays that reasonable attorney fees be determined by the court, the landlord may not recover them. Flournoy v Everett (1921) 51 CA 406, 408, 196 P 916. A trial court arguably would not abuse its discretion, however, by awarding attorney fees under a general prayer if the lease or rental agreement were to provide for fees and it is pleaded by legal effect, verbatim, or by incorporation and attachment as an exhibit. A prayer for attorney fees will likely be stricken if it is not supported by the necessary allegations.

NOTE: A landlord who brings an unlawful detainer action based on the tenant's nonpayment of rent, and who is liable for a violation of the habitability standards in CC §1942.4, shall be liable for reasonable attorney fees and costs of the suit in an amount to be fixed by the court. CCP §1174.21. See §§3.32, 3.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.44 5. Irrelevant, False, or Improper Matter

Under CCP §436(a) the court may strike from any pleading any matter that is "irrelevant, false or improper." It is unclear to what extent this standard differs from the "irrelevant and redundant" matter under former CCP §453. Cases in which the courts struck sham pleadings (i.e., pleadings in proper form but false in fact and not pleaded in good faith) might still apply under this standard. See, e.g., Tostevin v Douglas (1958) 160 CA2d 321, 325 P2d 130; Neal v Bank of America (1949) 93 CA2d 678, 209 P2d 825. See generally California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 24 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). The tenant's attorney should move to strike from the complaint irrelevant material that might prove injurious to the tenant if the complaint were read to the jury.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.45 6. Unverified Complaint

An unlawful detainer complaint must be verified and include the typed or printed name of the person verifying it. CCP §1166(a)(1). The landlord's attorney may verify the complaint when the client is out of the county where the attorney has his or her office or is otherwise unable to do so. CCP §446. If the complaint is not properly verified, it should be subject to a motion to strike on the ground that it is not drawn or filed in conformity with state law. CCP §436(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.46 C. Procedure

A motion to strike must be filed within the 5-day period required for a responsive pleading. CCP §§435, 1167.3. Under CCP §1170, a motion to strike may not be sufficient alone to prevent entry of the tenant's default. Filing a motion to strike in conjunction with a demurrer (see §10.32) or an answer (see §10.50) is the safer practice. A motion to strike does not extend the time to demur (CCP §435(d)); therefore, a demurrer, if applicable, must be filed and scheduled for hearing concurrently with the motion to strike. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1322(b). Notice of the motion must be given at least 16 court days before the time set for hearing; add 5 calendar days if the notice is served by regular mail within California and add 2 calendar days if service is by express mail or another method of overnight delivery or (by agreement of the parties) facsimile transmission. CCP §1005(b).

If directed at objectionable portions of a complaint, the motion to strike must specify the portions sought to be stricken. Every word sought to be stricken must be quoted in the motion, unless the motion seeks to strike an entire paragraph, cause of action, count, or defense. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1322(a). When the motion seeks to strike a portion of a pleading, mere reference to certain words, sentences, or paragraphs (e.g., by page and line references) is inadequate. See notice form in §10.47.

A supporting memorandum must be submitted with the motion to strike. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(a). See form in §10.47A. Some courts require the moving party also to meet and confer before filing a motion to strike. Opposing papers must be filed at least 9 court days before the hearing and reply papers at least 5 court days before the hearing. CCP §1005(b). Late-filed papers will likely be disregarded by the court. Unless otherwise ordered, all opposing and reply papers must be served by personal delivery, facsimile transmission, express mail, or other means that are reasonably calculated to ensure delivery to the other party by the close of the next business day after the papers are filed with the court. CCP §1005(c); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a).

SUPPORTING MEMORANDUM

AUTHORITY FOR MOTION TO STRIKE IN UNLAWFUL DETAINER ACTIONS

1. A party may move to strike the whole or a part of any pleading. CCP §435(b)(1). A motion to strike is authorized in an unlawful detainer action. Saberi v Bakhtiari (1985) 169 CA3d 509, 517, 215 CR 359.

2. The court may strike from any pleading any irrelevant, false, or improper matter. CCP §436(a). The court may also strike all or any part of a pleading that is "not drawn or filed in conformity with the laws of this state, a court rule, or an order of the court." CCP §436(b). The complaint shall contain a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language and a demand for judgment, stating the amount of damages demanded. CCP §425.10(a).

THE COMPLAINT FAILS TO ALLEGE A BASIS FOR PLAINTIFF TO RECOVER UNPAID RENT

3. Code of Civil Procedure §1174 allows damages to a successful plaintiff only when they are "occasioned" by an unlawful detainer. See Roberts v Redlich (1952) 111 CA2d 566, 569, 244 P2d 933. To avail itself of the summary proceeding, the landlord must state a complaint squarely within the terms of the statute and pray only for such damages as are allowed under it. Markham v Fralick (1934) 2 C2d 221, 39 P2d 804. To support a claim for rent, an unlawful detainer complaint must be based on allegations of service of the statutorily required 3-day notice to pay rent or quit. CCP §1161(2); Baugh v Consumers Assocs. (1966) 241 CA2d 672, 675, 50 CR 822.

4. No rent at all can be recovered in an unlawful detainer action unless both the notice to quit and the complaint are based on a default in the payment of rent. CCP §1174(b); Harris v Bissell (1921) 54 CA 307, 313, 202 P 453. A tenant is not guilty of unlawful detainer for nonpayment of rent unless a 3-day notice, stating the precise amount of rent, has been properly served. CCP §1161(1). An unlawful detainer complaint praying for rent does not state a cause of action unless service of a 3-day notice is alleged. Samuels v Singer (1934) 1 CA2d 545, 549, 36 P2d 1098. Therefore, when only a 30-day notice is alleged, no rent at all can be recovered.

Castle Park No. 5 v Katherine (1979) 91 CA3d Supp 6, 11, 154 CR 498; Glouberman v Coffey (1955) 138 CA2d Supp 906, 292 P2d 681.

5. In the present complaint, Plaintiff has prayed for "past due rent of _ _[dollar amount]_ _." Complaint, ¶17.c. There is no allegation of service of a 3-day notice. Because the complaint is based only on a purported _ _[30-day/60-day]_ _ notice, no rent can be awarded in this action. The demand for rent should be stricken.

PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO PROPERLY STATE THE AMOUNT OF DAMAGES SOUGHT

6. Code of Civil Procedure §425.10(a) requires a complaint to state the amount of damages demanded by the plaintiff. Although damages for the reasonable rental value of premises unlawfully detained are uncertain at the time of filing the complaint, that uncertainty comes only from ignorance of the date the tenant may vacate, or of the date judgment may be entered. No uncertainty should exist as to the date the rental value damages commence.

7. In the present complaint, Plaintiff has failed to _ _[e.g., check the box of ¶11 to indicate the fact and amount of damages/allege in ¶11 the exact fair or daily rental value of the premises]_ _. The unlawful detention, if any, commences after expiration of the termination notice. Plaintiff cannot recover damages in this action, and therefore, Plaintiff's demand for damages should be stricken.

IMPROPER PRETERMINATION DAMAGES MAY BE STRICKEN: PLAINTIFF DEMANDS "DOUBLE DAMAGES" ON 3-DAY NOTICE

8. Paragraph 17.f. of the Complaint requests daily damages from _ _[date]_ _ to date judgment is entered. However, Plaintiff's 3-day notice demands rent of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ for the rental period from _ _[date]_ _ through the end of _ _[date]_ _ (i.e., the same period described in ¶17.f.). Plaintiff therefore seeks both damages and rents for the same period. Code of Civil Procedure §1174 allows a successful plaintiff damages only when they are "occasioned" by an unlawful detainer. See Roberts v Redlich (1952) 111 CA2d 566, 569, 244 P2d 933. To avail itself of the summary proceeding, the landlord must state a complaint squarely within the terms of the statute and pray only for such damages as are allowed under it. Markham v Fralick (1934) 2 C2d 221, 39 P2d 804. In most cases, the damages that may be assessed are those that result from the detention itself, up to the time of trial. Roberts v Redlich, supra. The unlawful detention, if any, commences after expiration of the termination notice. CCP §1161(3); Roberts v Redlich, supra. Plaintiff may therefore claim rents up through the end of the period covered by the 3-day notice, and damages thereafter, but not both rents and damages for the same period. See California Eviction Defense Manual §11.30 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

9. Paragraph 11 of the Complaint alleges that the reasonable rental value of the premises is _ _[dollar amount]_ _ and that damages to Plaintiff are accruing at that rate per day. _ _[Plaintiff's prayer (e.g., Complaint, ¶17.h) asks "For rent and damages according to proof"]_ _. Plaintiff fails to allege, however, the date on which it claims that the daily rental value damages commenced, i.e., when the termination notice expired. _ _[It should be stressed that Plaintiff also failed to allege the manner by which it claims the notice was served]_ _. It cannot be ascertained from the complaint, therefore, when Plaintiff's alleged rental value damages began to accrue, and whether Plaintiff is improperly seeking damages for a period before the expiration of the notice period or whether Plaintiff is improperly seeking rent for a period after the expiration of the notice period.

10. The unlawful detention, if any, commences only after expiration of the termination notice. Given the hopeless uncertainty, Plaintiff can recover neither damages nor rent in this action. Plaintiff's prayers for damages and rent are therefore improper, and both should be stricken.

PLAINTIFF HAS NOT PROPERLY ALLEGED THE RIGHT TO ATTORNEY FEES

11. The allegations of ¶13 of the Complaint are ambiguous under the most liberal reading. Strictly read, they are meaningless with respect to this action. When a written contract is the necessary link in a cause of action, its applicable terms should be quoted in the complaint or set out in haec verba, or the contract attached and incorporated by reference. A. Teichert & Son, Inc. v State (1965) 238 CA2d 736, 748, 48 CR 225. Plaintiff has done none of these things. Without a proper allegation of the terms of the written agreement, Plaintiff cannot claim a right to attorney fees. The reference to and demand for attorney fees in ¶17.d of the Complaint should be stricken.

THE COMPLAINT SEEKS DAMAGES NOT PERMITTED IN AN UNLAWFUL DETAINER

12. Attachment 15 to the Complaint alleges that _ _[e.g., checks of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ were returned unpaid]_ _. Paragraph 17.h. demands that Plaintiff be awarded _ _[e.g., (1) unpaid checks in the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _*; (2) returned check fees of _ _[dollar amount*]_ _*; and (3) penalties for returned checks as allowed by law*]_ _. These damages are not permitted within the summary process of an action for unlawful detainer. _ _[Cite direct authority, if any, denying award of specific items claimed]_ _.

13. Moreover, CCP §1174 allows damages to a successful plaintiff only when they are "occasioned" by an unlawful detainer. See Roberts v Redlich (1952) 111 CA2d 566, 569, 244 P2d 933. To avail itself of the summary proceeding, the landlord must state a complaint squarely within the terms of the statute and pray only for such damages as are allowed under it. Markham v Fralick (1934) 2 C2d 221, 39 P2d 804. The damages sought must be directly related to the claimed unlawful detention itself, up to the time of trial. Roberts v Redlich, supra; Vasey v California Dance Co. (1977) 70 CA3d 742, 748, 139 CR 72. Any damages not related to the unlawful detention must be claimed in an independent civil action without the benefit of the summary process of unlawful detainer. Greene v Municipal Court (1975) 51 CA3d 446, 450, 124 CR 139; Hudec v Robertson (1989) 210 CA3d 1156, 1163, 258 CR 868.

14. The unlawful detention, if any, commences after expiration of the termination notice. CCP §1161(3); Roberts v Redlich, supra; California Eviction Defense Manual §§11.30, 26.1-26.13 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993). Damages accruing before the unlawful detainer are therefore improper and must be stricken.

VERIFICATION OF THE COMPLAINT BY PLAINTIFF'S COUNSEL IS INAPPROPRIATE AND A SHAM

15. The complaint in action alleging unlawful detainer shall be verified and include the typed or printed name of the person verifying it. CCP §1166(a)(1). If the complaint is unverified or if the verification does not comply with CCP §446, the court may strike the entire complaint on a motion by defendant. Ware v Stafford (1962) 206 CA2d 232, 237, 24 CR 153. Under §446, when a corporation is a party, the verification may be made by any officer of the entity. In the present action, _ _[state facts as to location of corporate offices, officers, etc.]_ _.

16. Under §446, an attorney may verify a pleading when "the parties are absent from the county where the attorney has his or her office." Section 446 is silent about the time when the absence from the county permits an attorney verification. However, from the earliest cases, the statute has been subject to judicial restriction. "The practice of attorneys verifying for their clients should be discouraged, and to that end the provisions of the code referred to should receive a strict construction." Silcox v Lang (1889) 78 C 118, 20 P 297. Clearly, then, the fact that the client is out of the county at the hour the verification is ready for signature, or even on the day or week, is not sufficient to warrant an attorney verification based on information and belief. But is the bare fact of absence from the county ever sufficient without more?

17. Perhaps the earlier courts placed greater value on a verification executed within the geographic limits of the court. However, as recent statutory and case law has shown, that value has faded, if not disappeared completely. Inability, not inconvenience, is the key concept. Consider CCP §2015.5, which now permits a verification to be executed anywhere if a declaration under penalty of perjury is made "under the laws of the State of California."

18. In a case almost directly on point, the Second District Court of Appeal affirmed the striking of an answer, verified by the attorney, when the facts made known to the trial court demonstrated that the client was not absent from the county for purposes of the statute. DeCamp v First Kensington Corp. (1978) 83 CA3d 268, 275, 147 CR 869. After discussing the facts, and finding that the party in question was not, by his temporary absence from the county, "unable to make the verification" (see CCP §446), the DeCamp court enlarged on the language of Silcox v Lang, quoted in paragraph 16, and ruled that Section 446 does not authorize attorney verifications when the absence of the party creates no inability on its part to verify the pleading.

19. Verification by a party with actual knowledge of the facts would more fully comport with the judicial policy disfavoring attorney verifications and fulfill the object of verification, i.e., to ensure good faith in the averments of a party. H.G. Bittleston Law & Collection Agency v Howard (1916) 172 C 357, 360, 156 P 515.

20. In the present case, the verification was made by _ _[name]_ _ on _ _[date]_ _, but the Complaint was not filed until _ _[date]_ _, _ _ days later. Clearly time was not a major consideration in obtaining verification based on personal knowledge. Nor could geography have been the decisive factor because the corporate address of Plaintiff, the premises, and, presumably, the resident manager, are all located in the jurisdictional area of the court. _ _[It is only counsel's office that is out of the county]_ _.

21. The practice of attorney verification of unlawful detainer complaints presents special problems in that the allegations of the complaint are quite often the only facts that are presented to the court by Plaintiff at trial. The attorney's verification subjects the attorney to deposition as a witness and to being called to testify at trial. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 15 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

22. For all of the foregoing reasons, the verification of the complaint by the Plaintiff's attorney in this matter was unjustified, and the complaint should be stricken in its entirety.

DEMAND FOR DAMAGES FOR MALICE IS IMPROPER WITHOUT SPECIFIC FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

23. Plaintiff's allegations in ¶12 do not supply the requisite facts for a claim for statutory damages for malice. To show malice, Plaintiff must establish "that defendant willfully, deliberately, intentionally and obstinately withholds possession of the property with knowledge of the termination of his lease and against the will of the landlord." Fifth & Broadway Partnership v Kimny, Inc. (1980) 102 CA3d 195, 204, 162 CR 271. In addition, to support an award of damages for malice, the complaint must allege "ultimate facts of the defendant's oppression, fraud, or malice." CC §3294; Cyrus v Haveson (1976) 65 CA3d 306, 316, 135 CR 246. See also Brousseau v Jarrett (1977) 73 CA3d 864, 872, 141 CR 200. The form complaint, used by this Plaintiff, clearly requires a party to "State specific facts supporting a claim up to $600 in attachment 12." (Instructions at ¶12.) Without the requisite factual allegations, Plaintiff's complaint cannot support a demand for statutory damages. Paragraph 12 is surplusage that should be stricken.

WHEREFORE, AND ON ALL OF THE ABOVE IMPROPER ALLEGATIONS, Defendant prays that this court grant this motion, and order the offending language stricken from the complaint.

Copies: As with all papers for filing (except confidential documents like fee waiver applications), one copy is served on each opposing attorney or unrepresented party, the original with the completed original proof of service is filed with the court clerk, and one copy should be stamped at the clerk's office, and retained by the tenant, to prove the date and fact of filing.

VII. EXTENSION OF TIME TO PLEAD

§10.48 A. Legal Basis

Trial courts have the authority to extend a party's time to plead on a showing of good cause. CCP §1054(a). See also Cal Rules of Ct 2.20. In ordinary civil actions, the time to plead may be extended up to 30 days for good cause, and more than 30 days with the adverse party's consent. CCP §1054(a). In unlawful detainer actions, the court's discretion to extend the time is limited by CCP §1167.5, which provides that an extension may not exceed 10 days without the adverse party's consent unless the court orders otherwise for good cause. Thus, even in unlawful detainer actions, the time to plead may be extended more than 10 days on either a showing of good cause or consent of the adverse party.

The tenant's application for an extension of time to plead must be presented to the trial court before expiration of the 5-day period to answer, because an extension granted after expiration of the time allowed to appear and defend is void and may be ignored. The court then has jurisdiction to enter a default judgment. Start v Heinzerling (1915) 27 CA 145, 148, 149 P 50. If the tenant's application cannot be filed within the 5 days and default has not yet been entered, the application for an extension should be based also on CCP §473, which allows the court to extend the time to answer or demur, in furtherance of justice and presumably on a showing of good cause. If a default has been entered, a motion to set aside entry of default (see §§13.7-13.16) must be made and be accompanied by proposed responsive pleadings (see §13.10). A party whose attorney failed to file a timely answer without the party's knowing participation is entitled to mandatory relief from a default judgment under CCP §473(b). Solv-All v Superior Court (2005) 131 CA4th 1003, 32 CR3d 202.

A stipulation between counsel to extend the time to plead should be considered. In many cases, the landlord's attorney will agree to a short extension of time. Any such stipulation should be memorialized in writing and promptly submitted to opposing counsel.

PRACTICE TIP: An application for an order extending the time to plead is generally heard in the law and motion department or a court assigned to hear ex parte matters. Some courts do not hold ex parte hearings on Fridays. The application invariably is made ex parte in unlawful detainers. Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1203, a party seeking an ex parte order must notify all parties no later than 10:00 a.m. on the court day before the ex parte appearance, absent "exceptional circumstances," but in an unlawful detainer action shorter notice may be given if reasonable; Rule 3.1202(c) requires "an affirmative factual showing … of irreparable harm, immediate danger, or any other statutory basis for granting relief ex parte."

Applications for such orders must disclose in writing the nature of the case and the extensions, if any, previously granted by court order or stipulation. Cal Rules of Ct 2.20(b). The court must grant an extension to plead when all attorneys of record agree by written stipulation. CCP §1054(b). But see Lorraine v McComb (1934) 220 C 753, 756, 32 P2d 960, and County of San Bernardino v Doria Mining & Eng'g Corp. (1977) 72 CA3d 776, 784, 140 CR 383, which construed similar language of a mandatory nature in other code sections applicable to postponement of trials and motion hearings. Both cases held that the legislature intended only a directive to the court rather than a strict mandate. The Lorraine case based its reasoning on the overriding constitutional right of a court "to control its order of business."

An appearance at a hearing at which a defendant seeks ex parte relief for an extension of the time to plead is not a general appearance and does not constitute a waiver of the right to make a motion under CCP §418.10, authorizing motions to quash. See CCP §§418.10(d), 418.11.

VIII. ANSWER TO COMPLAINT

§10.50 A. Legal Basis

A tenant served with a summons and complaint in an unlawful detainer action may appear in the action by filing an answer. CCP §1170. A proper answer raising triable issues of fact assures the tenant of the right to a trial. Unless some other pleading has been filed (e.g., a demurrer (see §10.29) or motion to quash (see §10.18)), the answer must be filed within 5 days after service of the summons. CCP §§1167, 1167.3. The tenant may answer, demur, move to strike, and move to quash simultaneously without making a general appearance. See CCP §418.10(e), discussed in §10.18.

In computing the 5 days, Saturdays and Sundays are included, but other judicial holidays are not. The third Wednesday of each month, when the courts are closed for budgetary reasons, is treated as a holiday and should not be counted as part of the 5-day period. See Govt C §68106. If the last day for filing the answer falls on a Saturday or Sunday, the response may be filed on the next court day. CCP §1167. The 5-day requirement also applies to the time to answer an amended complaint (see CCP §1167.3), and to the time to answer the complaint after a demurrer (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1320(g) or a motion to quash (see CCP §1167.4(b)) has been overruled. It should also apply when a motion to strike has been overruled or a motion to strike part of the complaint has been granted (see CCP §472a), unless otherwise ordered after a showing of good cause.

PRACTICE TIP: Before filing the answer in a rent default case, tenant's counsel should consider having the tenant tender the rent owed, if possible. A landlord cannot be the prevailing party for purposes of an award of attorney fees under CC §1717 if (1) the tenant truthfully alleged in the answer that the full amount of rent was tendered to the landlord; and (2) the tenant deposits this amount into court for the landlord. CC §1717(b)(2). If the court finds the allegation to be true, the tenant would be the prevailing party and thus would be entitled to recover attorney fees under CC §1717. If the tenant tendered the rent due during the 3-day notice period, of course, he or she should prevail in any case and should not need the benefit of this law. See §§8.43-8.45.

The Judicial Council has an answer form for unlawful detainer actions (in addition to a complaint form; see §9.31). Available from local courts and legal publishers, the answer form is reprinted in §10.51. See Cal Rules of Ct 1.45(a). Use of these forms is not mandatory (see CCP §425.12(a)), but the forms provide an efficient means of answering in most residential unlawful detainer actions.

The Judicial Council form Answer—Unlawful Detainer is also available online in both fillable and nonfillable formats. http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/forms/.

Comment: Note that the prayer includes specific relief for violation of the warranty of habitability, the affirmative defense list does not contain an option for failure of the landlord to perform under the rental agreement, and there is no specific phrase for the tenant to claim an offset for deposits held by the landlord, but this may be inserted in ¶5(e) if appropriate. The form also inquires of the responding tenant whether an unlawful detainer assistant gave advice or assistance for compensation, to monitor incidents of the unlawful practice of law.

§10.52 C. Denials

Because an unlawful detainer complaint must be verified (CCP §1166(a)(1)), "general denials" normally are not permitted, and specific paragraphs or parts of the complaint must be denied, either positively or on information and belief. CCP §431.30(d). An exception exists, however, for cases in which the demand or "value of the property in controversy" does not exceed $1000; for these a general denial is permitted even if the complaint has been verified. CCP §431.40(a). In a reported decision on an unlawful detainer action based on nonpayment of rent in a month-to-month tenancy, the quoted phrase was interpreted in dicta as including "at most the unexpired term of the tenant's lease." Hall v Municipal Court (1974) 10 C3d 641, 644 n2, 111 CR 721 (dealing with whether written findings were required under former CCP §632). Thus, the "value of the property in controversy" is the unexpired term of the leasehold interest, and not the market value of the premises. Under ¶2(a) of the Judicial Council unlawful detainer answer form (see §10.51), a defendant may deny generally "each statement of the complaint" if the complaint demands less than $1000. If the complaint demands more than $1000, the defendant must make specific denials in ¶2(b).

The answer form includes the most common affirmative defenses (discussed in §§10.53-10.69). Although a general denial puts at issue all allegations in the complaint essential to the landlord's recovery, it is impossible to foresee all possible denials that might be made in order to raise cognizable defenses. The actual scope of the defense will depend on:

- The allegations in the complaint;
- The tenant's view of the facts; and
- Whether the court considers a proffered defense to be within the ambit of a general denial.

There is a question, however, about the scope of defenses allowed under a general denial if no affirmative defenses are raised. The landlord may move for judgment on the pleading in such a case.

PRACTICE TIP: Because the answer form lists the most common affirmative defenses, defense counsel would be taking a risk in attempting to "hide" an affirmative defense under a general denial. Not only would there be little tactical advantage to such an approach in most cases, the attorney also would risk antagonizing the trial judge. This issue is most likely to arise when tenants appear in propria persona; trial courts usually resolve doubts in the unrepresented party's favor or allow a short continuance if the plaintiff resists surprise assertion of a defense.

§10.53 D. Principal and Affirmative Defenses

Both principal defenses (denying or contesting essential elements of unlawful detainer action) and affirmative defenses are discussed in §§10.54-10.69A. The California Supreme Court held in 1974 that prior dicta barring affirmative defenses (except for "equitable" defenses (see §10.58)) in unlawful detainer actions were "inaccurate." Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 633 n19, 111 CR 704. The Green decision asserts that the traditional distinction between legal and equitable defenses is not dispositive; instead, the court held, the primary inquiry should be whether proof of the defense "will preclude the removal of the tenant from the premises." 10 C3d at 633 n19. The court noted that several prior decisions had allowed "legal" defenses based on the issue of possession. See, e.g., Schweiger v Superior Court (1970) 3 C3d 507, 90 CR 729 (retaliatory eviction); Abstract Inv. Co. v Hutchinson (1962) 204 CA2d 242, 22 CR 309 (discrimination). For further discussion of the Green decision and its arguable effect of adding to the affirmative defenses available to a commercial tenant, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§19.11-19.26 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

Before the Green decision, several courts of appeal also had stated a general rule that affirmative defenses may not be asserted in unlawful detainer actions because of the summary nature of such actions (see §§9.6-9.8). See*, e.g., Union Oil Co. v Chandler* (1970) 4 CA3d 716, 84 CR 756; D'Amico v Riedel (1949) 95 CA2d 6, 212 P2d 52.

Although case law provides guidance concerning defenses that are permitted in unlawful detainer actions, trial courts, when faced with a proffered defense of first impression, "may balance the interest in preserving the summary nature of the unlawful detainer action against the public policies furthered by protecting the defendant from eviction," and may refuse the defense if the defendant "has an adequate remedy at law and/or the trial of his alleged defenses would be lengthy and difficult." Mobil Oil Corp. v Handley (1978) 76 CA3d 956, 963, 143 CR 321 (antitrust defense disallowed).

§10.54 1. Title Dispute, Improper Foreclosure, or Improper Notice Following Foreclosure

The general rule is that a tenant in possession cannot challenge the landlord's title to the premises (Evid C §624); therefore such a defense is usually unavailable in an unlawful detainer action. See Tewksbury v Magraff (1867) 33 C 237 (lessee estopped from asserting title as defense in ejectment action because lessee did not show on appeal sufficient facts to establish lessee's interest in fee, which contradicted lessee's possessory interest). If a landlord first puts title at issue, however, by filing a quiet title action against the tenant, the tenant may raise the landlord's lack of title defensively in an unlawful detainer action. Greenhut v Wooden (1982) 129 CA3d 64, 180 CR 786. See Yuba River Sand Co. v City of Marysville (1947) 78 CA2d 421, 425, 177 P2d 642 (cross-actions between landlord and tenant to quiet title). See also Evans v Superior Court (1977) 67 CA3d 162, 136 CR 596 (tenant having express agreement to purchase property from subsequent purchaser after foreclosure may litigate title defensively in unlawful detainer action).

A holdover trustor's (i.e., borrower's or former owner's) ability to challenge the plaintiff's title in an eviction action brought after foreclosure under CCP §1161a (see §8.68A) is limited. Absent a showing of fraud or lack of compliance with the foreclosure statutes, the trustor may not litigate title to the premises in the unlawful detainer action. See Cheney v Trauzettel (1937) 9 C2d 158, 160, 69 P2d 832; Old Nat'l Fin. Servs., Inc. v Seibert (1987) 194 CA3d 460, 239 CR 728; Mehr v Superior Court (1983) 139 CA3d 1044, 189 CR 138; Asuncion v Superior Court (1980) 108 CA3d 141, 166 CR 306; Abrahamer v Parks (1956) 141 CA2d 82, 296 P2d 341. See also Banke, Staying Postforeclosure Eviction Actions Pending Borrower Actions Against Lenders, 32 CEB Real Prop L Rep 92 (July 2009); California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chaps 2, 7 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

PRACTICE TIP: Although the issue appears to be unsettled regarding tenants, arguably, under Cheney v Trauzettel, supra, the tenant might be able to defend an eviction following a foreclosure sale by denying in the answer that the sale was conducted properly. If the sale was improper, the purchaser does not have the requisite interest in the property to bring the eviction action. On defense strategies at trial when essential elements have not been proved, see §§12.19, 12.35. One way for a residential tenant to dispute the propriety of a trustee sale (nonjudicial foreclosure) would be to raise the lack of prior notice to the tenant of a trustee sale required by CC §2924.8. See §8.68B.

Because the legislature did not specify a remedy in §2924.8, the courts will have to resolve what remedies a tenant has if that section is violated. Another possible remedy for a violation of §2924.8 would be in the nature of equitable relief; the trial court in the unlawful detainer action could award possession to the plaintiff but stay execution of the judgment for a time equal to the notice period specified in §2924.8.

After a completed foreclosure, CCP §1161b, effective July 8, 2008, alters the notice period for residential tenants in CCP §1161a, which has for many years required a 3-day termination notice to a former owner or a commercial tenant, and a 30-day notice to a tenant or a subtenant in possession of a rental housing unit, after the property is sold in foreclosure. Until January 1, 2013, unless extended, CCP §1161b requires that a tenant or subtenant in possession of a rental housing unit after a foreclosure sale must be given a 60-day written notice to quit under CCP §1162 before the tenant or subtenant may be removed from the property. The 60-day notice does not apply if a party to the note on which foreclosure is based remains a tenant, subtenant, or occupant of the property. (The statute was apparently written with single-family homes in mind; thus, there is an ambiguity when it is applied to multiple-unit buildings. Literally read, the statute states that if a party to the note occupies one unit, no tenant in any unit on the property is entitled to a 60-day notice.) Lack of compliance with this prerequisite is a defense to an unlawful detainer action. See §§10.31, 12.35.

WARNING: In May 2009, the federal government enacted preemptive legislation that temporarily protects residential tenants holding possession under a month-to-month agreement or a lease from immediate eviction after a foreclosure sale by the purchaser or the foreclosing lender. See Protecting Tenants at Foreclosure Act of 2009 (Pub L 111-22, §§701-704, 123 Stat 1660), discussed in §8.68F.

In an eviction action by the purchaser in a foreclosure sale based on "good faith" owner occupancy under a rent control law, the landlord may have to prove a requisite percentage ownership. If the foreclosed unit is subject to a local eviction control law, the lender may not evict unless the local ordinance permits eviction in the event of a foreclosure. Gross v Superior Court (1985) 171 CA3d 265, 217 CR 284. For further discussion, see §§7.69, 8.68C.

On the right to resolve title issues in an unlawful detainer action on a cross-complaint, see §10.73.

§10.55 2. Landlord Fraud

The defense of fraud in the execution of a lease has not been allowed if the tenant was not in possession of the premises when the lease was executed, because the tenant's claim of right to possession would then be based on the lease that he or she claims was fraudulently executed. Kalmanovitz v Rempp (1952) 111 CA2d 242, 244 P2d 457; D'Amico v Riedel (1949) 95 CA2d 6, 212 P2d 52. The defense has been held available, however, when the tenant had been in lawful possession and was fraudulently induced to enter into the lease. Knowles v Robinson (1963) 60 C2d 620, 626, 36 CR 33; Smith v Whyers (1923) 64 CA 193, 221 P 387. See discussion of this issue in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 633 n19, 111 CR 704.

In Asuncion v Superior Court (1980) 108 CA3d 141, 166 CR 306, the court held that, when the unlawful detainer action is brought under CCP §1161a after a trustee's sale (see §8.68A), the defendant may assert an affirmative defense that the plaintiff obtained title from the defendant as security for a usurious loan induced by the plaintiff's fraud. But see Old Nat'l Fin. Servs., Inc. v Seibert (1987) 194 CA3d 460, 239 CR 728 (fraud in inducement of certain loans was too remote to be allowed as defense).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.56 3. Breach of Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment

Whether the tenant may assert the landlord's breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment as a defense to an unlawful detainer action is an unsettled question. (For a discussion of the landlord's breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment in commercial leases, see California Eviction Defense Manual §19.18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).) In Petroleum Collections, Inc. v Swords (1975) 48 CA3d 841, 122 CR 114, a commercial tenant's attempt to defend an action for unpaid rent by claiming a breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment was rebuffed. The court held that the landlord's improper removal of a sign installed in violation of local codes could serve as a basis for the tenant's claim, but that the tenant could not assert breach of the implied covenant unless and until he or she vacated within a reasonable time (i.e., until a constructive eviction (see §§3.6-3.7, 3.15B, 8.19) had occurred). The court noted that, if the landlord sued for rent accruing before the constructive eviction, the tenant could claim as an offset any damages arising before the eviction or bring an action against the landlord for damages.

In Guntert v City of Stockton (1976) 55 CA3d 131, 126 CR 690, the court declined to follow the decision in Petroleum, and held that the tenant may elect to keep the lease in effect, remain in possession, and sue for damages. The Guntert court also held that the landlord's service of an invalid termination notice (which the court characterized as "arbitrary and unreasonable") constituted a breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment and supported the monetary judgment for the tenant. 55 CA3d at 141. In recognizing the tenant's choice of remedies, one of which is the "option to stand upon the lease and sue for damages" (55 CA3d at 140), the Guntert decision arguably supports the assertion of a landlord's breach of the implied covenant as a defense to the landlord's action in unlawful detainer when, e.g., the tenant has withheld rent in response to the breach and the landlord is evicting for nonpayment of rent. Guntert was followed in Marchese v Standard Realty & Dev. Co. (1977) 74 CA3d 142, 141 CR 370. For further discussion of constructive eviction, affirmative suits on breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment, and these reported cases, see §§3.5-3.7, 3.15B, 8.19.

PRACTICE TIP: Further support for an argument that the tenant should be able to raise the landlord's breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment as a defense is found in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704. In Green, the supreme court rejected the doctrine that the covenants of the landlord and tenant are independent, holding that the tenant may assert breach of the implied warranty of habitability as a defense to an unlawful detainer action (see §§3.16, 3.32, 10.64).

For a sample jury instruction based on breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment, see §12.63A. For further discussion of the covenant of quiet enjoyment pertaining to commercial tenancies and the measure of damages for a breach of the covenant, see California Eviction Defense Manual §19.18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

§10.57 4. Setoff for Preexisting Debt

Although setoffs for preexisting debts are generally prohibited as defenses in unlawful detainer actions, a tenant who has been overcharged rent might be entitled to what amounts to a setoff in an unlawful detainer action. The rationale is that the tenant has essentially prepaid the rent, so that the notice to pay or quit overstates the amount of rent due. Nourafchan v Miner (1985) 169 CA3d 746, 215 CR 450. In Nourafchan, the landlord had previously charged the tenant more rent than that allowed by a local rent control law, and the tenant had paid it. In a later eviction action based on nonpayment of rent, the court held that the tenant was "entitled to claim as an affirmative defense the right to offset the excess rent paid during the three-year statutory period" in which the tenant might have sued for the excess. 169 CA3d at 752. This case is authority for the proposition that if the notice to pay or quit is $5.96 too high, it is defective and will not support an unlawful detainer action.

The opinion in Nourafchan did not mention CCP §431.70 which ordinarily provides a defendant the right to plead an offset in cross-demands for money, even if the statute of limitations would have barred the defense asserted as an affirmative cause, but the offset cannot exceed the value of the relief awarded to the plaintiff. Nevertheless, it is arguable that CCP §431.70 provides independent authority for a tenant to offset excess rent paid beyond any limitations period against a claim of the landlord for nonpayment of rent.

In Minelian v Manzella (1989) 215 CA3d 457, 263 CR 597, the same court that decided Nourafchan held that in an unlawful detainer action no statute of limitations applies to an affirmative defense of excess rent paid when the landlord has charged rents in excess of those allowed by a local rent control ordinance. The court noted that the landlord was the "fundamental wrongdoer" in this case, and cited CC §3517 for the maxim, "No one can take advantage of his own wrong." 215 CA3d at 467 n5.

In rent-controlled jurisdictions that establish successor owner liability, if landlord A overcharges the tenant and then sells to landlord B, who files an unlawful detainer based on a 3-day pay or quit notice, the tenant may defend on the basis of excess rent previously paid, including rent paid to landlord A. See Baychester Shopping Ctr., Inc. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2008) 165 CA4th 1000, 81 CR3d 341.

If the landlord has raised the tenant's rent by more than 10 percent in the 12 months immediately preceding the effective date of a proposed increase on 30 days' notice, rather than the 60 days' notice required by CC §827(b)(3), there is excess rent in the amount of the increase for one month. See §§3.65A, 8.37. Likewise, if the landlord is required to pay interest on the tenant's security deposit under a rent control law in effect in the relevant jurisdiction and has failed to do so, a sum is owed to the tenant. See chap 7. In either event, the tenant may raise as an affirmative defense the amount of the funds owed when the landlord is evicting for nonpayment of rent. See Minelian v Manzella, supra.

In Nork v Pacific Coast Med. Enters. (1977) 73 CA3d 410, 140 CR 734, the court held that the tenant could not claim an earlier unrelated debt owed by the landlord as a setoff for past-due rent when proving that the debt would be complex and time-consuming. It is unclear whether the same result would apply if the debt were established by prior judgment or judicial admissions in the unlawful detainer litigation, or if the parties intended that the debt satisfy the rent obligation (see discussion of cross-complaints in §10.73).

§10.58 5. Equitable Defenses

The distinction between "legal" and "equitable" defenses has lost much of its analytical and predictive value, and the courts have largely abandoned it. Nonetheless, defenses to unlawful detainer actions are sometimes characterized as "equitable," and the distinction retains some significance on the question of whether the parties are entitled to have a particular issue tried before a jury (see §11.55).

The application of equitable principles to unlawful detainer actions is generally discussed in Superior Motels, Inc. v Rinn Motor Hotels, Inc. (1987) 195 CA3d 1032, 1069, 241 CR 487. See also Minelian v Manzella (1989) 215 CA3d 457, 465, 263 CR 597 (defense of equitable setoff permitted); Nork v Pacific Coast Med. Enters. (1977) 73 CA3d 410, 414, 140 CR 734 (expands on appropriateness of raising equitable defenses in unlawful detainer actions).

The tenant's attorney may wish to review the following cases that allowed equitable defenses in unlawful detainer actions:

- Schubert v Lowe (1924) 193 C 291, 223 P 550: Tenant occupied the premises under an oral lease, not as a month-to-month tenant. An oral lease may not exceed 1 year. CC §1624(a)(3).
- Manning v Franklin (1889) 81 C 205, 22 P 550: Parties were not in a landlord-tenant relationship, but were parties to a sale of property.
- Strom v Union Oil Co. (1948) 88 CA2d 78, 198 P2d 347: Landlord acted in bad faith by intentionally avoiding payment of rent.
- Rishwain v Smith (1947) 77 CA2d 524, 175 P2d 555: Landlord refused to execute lease conforming to a prior written agreement for tenant's purchase of the landlord's business.
- Knight v Black (1912) 19 CA 518, 126 P 512: Exact compliance with terms for security for rent provision was impossible, and tenant had offered suitable alternative security.
- Gray v Maier & Zobelein Brewery (1906) 2 CA 653, 84 P 280: Landlord acquiesced to subletting, although prohibited by the lease.
- Pico v Cuyas (1874) 48 C 639: Relationship of the parties was a partnership rather than one of landlord and tenant. But see Union Oil Co. v Chandler (1970) 4 CA3d 716, 725, 84 CR 756 (lessor's alleged antitrust violation scheme could not be raised by petroleum dealer/tenant as equitable defense).
- Underwood v Corsino (2005) 133 CA4th 132, 34 CR3d 542: The service of a notice to quit against commercial tenants that prevents them from conducting business is a frustration of purpose.

The doctrine of unclean hands does not block relief to a plaintiff merely because of any past misconduct by plaintiff —the misconduct must be directly related to the matter in which plaintiff seeks relief. Kendall-Jackson Winery, Ltd. v Superior Court (1999) 76 CA4th 970, 90 CR2d 743.

§10.59 6. Violation of Rent Control Ordinance

A local rent control ordinance typically affects an unlawful detainer action by controlling the amount of rent that the landlord may legally charge, and by limiting the grounds on which the landlord may evict a tenant (see §9.13, chap 7). Most rent control ordinances set forth the permissible grounds for eviction as exceptions to their own eviction controls, using phrases such as "The landlord may not evict except…." These ordinances also require that the landlord state the ground for eviction in the termination notice, the complaint, or both.

Some rent control ordinances require that the landlord also plead general compliance with the ordinance (e.g., registration and payment of fees must be pleaded and proved at trial in the landlord's case in chief). See Judicial Council unlawful detainer complaint form (¶14) in §9.31. The allocation of the burden of pleading and proving that an eviction is permitted by an applicable rent control law is the subject of much discussion among attorneys, some of whom opine that a local law cannot reallocate that burden because it is preempted by state law. See §9.16.

If compliance is an essential element of the landlord's case (rather than noncompliance constituting a defense of the tenant's case), the Judicial Council unlawful detainer answer form (see §10.51) adds to the confusion on this issue by listing violation of the local rent control ordinance as an affirmative defense (¶3.g). Because of this, tenant's counsel should be cautious in pleading this issue to avoid an accidental waiver of it.

PRACTICE TIP: If the applicability of a local ordinance is apparent from the face of the complaint (including attached exhibits) or from matters of which the court takes judicial notice, then a lack of allegation of compliance with the ordinance is a demurrable defect (see §§10.29-10.31) or one that subjects the complaint and summons to a motion to quash (see §§10.20-10.21). Otherwise, a lack of compliance should be pleaded as an affirmative defense, including the supporting facts, in order to avoid waiving the issue. Moreover, the judge will appreciate knowing where the defense is going, and the landlord will not be able to object to the tenant's evidence on the basis that it is beyond the scope of the pleadings.

§10.60 7. Waiver or Estoppel

Courts have allowed tenants to defend against unlawful detainer on the ground that the landlord has waived or is estopped from asserting a breach of the lease or rental agreement. The difference between these related defenses has not always been clear. In DRG/Beverly Hills, Ltd. v Chopstix Dim Sum Cafe & Takeout III, Ltd. (1994) 30 CA4th 54, 35 CR2d 515, the court distinguished waiver from estoppel, noting that waiver by one party does not require any act by the other party, but estoppel requires that such other party rely on the actor's conduct and be injured by it. The court also held that waiver must be proved by clear and convincing evidence, and that estoppel is to be tried by the court, not the jury. For sample jury instructions, see §§12.63B-12.63C.

Acceptance of rent after the tenant's breach of a covenant by a landlord who has full knowledge of all the facts constitutes a waiver of the breach and precludes the landlord from declaring a forfeiture by reason of the breach. Kern Sunset Oil Co. v Good Roads Oil Co. (1931) 214 C 435, 440, 6 P2d 71; Salton Community Servs. Dist. v Southard (1967) 256 CA2d 526, 533, 64 CR 246; Julien v Gossner (1951) 103 CA2d 338, 344, 229 P2d 786. Acceptance of the rent after expiration of a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit constitutes waiver of the breach. EDC Assocs., Ltd. v Gutierrez (1984) 153 CA3d 167, 200 CR 333. A tender of the rent by mail raises a rebuttable presumption that the landlord accepted it. EDC Assocs., Ltd. v Gutierrez, supra. See Thriftimart, Inc. v Me & Tex (1981) 123 CA3d 751, 177 CR 24 (landlord's failure to object, when tenant planted flowers in part of parking lot, waived the right to evict on that basis; no waiver, however, when landlord objected to tenant's construction of new addition to premises in violation of lease, although landlord accepted rent while trying to settle dispute).

Courts have held that the general rules described above do not apply when the lease or rental agreement provides that acceptance of rent does not in itself constitute a waiver. Salton Community Servs. Dist. v Southard (1967) 256 CA2d 526, 530, 64 CR 246; Karbelnig v Brothwell (1966) 244 CA2d 333, 341, 53 CR 335. (See §1.75 for a form lease provision to this effect.) A commercial lease provision stating that landlord's acceptance of rent would not waive the right to proceed with an unlawful detainer not only prohibited a defense of waiver but also satisfied the statutory requirement of CCP §1161.1(c) that before accepting partial payment, landlord must give actual notice of such nonwaiver to a commercial tenant. Woodman Partners v Sofa U Love (2001) 94 CA4th 766, 114 CR2d 566. Even if the rental agreement contains such a provision, the tenant's detrimental reliance, or conduct by the landlord that leads the tenant to believe that strict compliance with a covenant is not required, may estop the landlord from asserting the breach as a basis for the eviction. Salton Community Servs. Dist. v Southard (1967) 256 CA2d 526, 531, 64 CR 246. Thus, waiver turns on the landlord's express or implied intent, while estoppel depends on the tenant's detrimental reliance on the landlord's conduct.

When performance of conditions or covenants of the lease is of a continuing nature, waiver of one breach does not preclude the landlord from proceeding against the tenant for subsequent breaches. Budaeff v Huber (1961) 194 CA2d 12, 20, 14 CR 729; Extension Oil Co. v Richfield Oil Corp. (1942) 52 CA2d 105, 125 P2d 895.

§10.61 8. Breach of Express Promise to Repair

A landlord's failure to make repairs to the premises, in violation of an express promise to repair, may constitute a defense to an unlawful detainer action based on nonpayment of rent. The promise may either be contained in the lease or be made by the parties in an additional agreement, such as correspondence between the parties. For discussion of agreements to repair, and their enforceability, see §§3.8-3.15. See CC §1698 on the manner in which written contracts may be modified. (On statutory requirements to repair, see CC §§1941, 1942.4, discussed in §§3.10-3.12, 3.15A, 3.41, 13.25. On the implied warranty of habitability, see §§3.16-3.48, 10.64.)

An oral promise that accompanies or follows a written lease (and is not superseded by the lease) is not in conflict with the statute of frauds if the oral promise is to be fulfilled within 1 year of its making. CC §1624. Section 1624 applies to the leasing of real property only if the term of the lease is greater than 1 year. CC §1624(a)(3).

Traditionally, the landlord's duty to repair (even an express duty to repair) was considered to be independent from the tenant's duty to pay rent (Arnold v Krigbaum (1915) 169 C 143, 145, 146 P 423), so that the landlord's breach of an express promise to repair could not be raised as a defense to an unlawful detainer action. In recent years, however, the doctrine of independent lease covenants has fallen into disfavor, and the California Supreme Court has held that the tenant may defend an unlawful detainer action based on nonpayment of rent by alleging the landlord's breach of the warranty of habitability. Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704. Even before Green, the courts had permitted tenants in constructive eviction to vacate the premises and stop paying rent, holding that the covenants of landlord and tenant were mutually dependent. See Groh v Kover's Bull Pen, Inc. (1963) 221 CA2d 611, 34 CR 637. See also Medico-Dental Bldg. Co. v Horton & Converse (1942) 21 C2d 411, 132 P2d 457. In Secretary of HUD v Layfield (1978) 88 CA3d Supp 28, 152 CR 342, the court indicated that breach of an express warranty may be raised as a defense to an unlawful detainer action. These cases provide analogous authority for a tenant to raise as a defense a landlord's failure to make repairs to the premises in violation of an express promise to repair.

In order to raise this defense, the tenant may be required to have given the landlord notice of the need for repairs. See Sieber v Blanc (1888) 76 C 173, 18 P 260; McNally v Ward (1961) 192 CA2d 871, 14 CR 260. (On notice requirements for assertion of the implied warranty of habitability, see §3.29.) See, however, Lopez v Superior Court (1996) 45 CA4th 705, 52 CR2d 821, in which the court of appeal held that at the time a commercial lease is executed, and on renewal of the lease, the landlord must inspect the premises to make sure they are reasonably safe from dangerous conditions. The same considerations may apply upon renewal of a residential lease.

In the commercial context, it is less clear that breach of an express promise to repair will afford the tenant a defense. In Schulman v Vera (1980) 108 CA3d 552, 166 CR 620, the court held that a commercial tenant could not invoke breach of the implied warranty of habitability as a defense because the doctrine of independent covenants remains applicable in unlawful detainer actions based on commercial tenancies. The Schulman court's reasoning appears to be inconsistent with that of Groh v Kover's Bull Pen, Inc., supra, and Medico-Dental Bldg. Co. v Horton & Converse, supra. See §3.18. For further discussion relating to commercial tenancies, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§19.11-19.19 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

§10.62 9. Lack of Certificate of Occupancy

Many local jurisdictions require landlords to obtain a certificate of occupancy indicating that the premises comply with local housing codes, before leasing the premises. In Gruzen v Henry (1978) 84 CA3d 515, 148 CR 573, the landlord's failure to obtain a certificate of occupancy from the city before entering into a rental agreement rendered the agreement void and unenforceable as contrary to public policy. Thus, the court of appeal held that the landlord could not recover rent in the unlawful detainer action, but it affirmed that portion of the judgment awarding the landlord possession. The court stated, however, that persons in the position of the tenant defendants could not continue to occupy the premises without compensating the landlord.

The Gruzen opinion did not specify whether the unlawful detainer action was based on the tenant's failure to obey a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit or on a 30-day notice. Either way, that portion of the decision permitting the eviction appears to be the result of declaring the lease void. In unlawful detainer actions premised on the failure to pay rent, tenants' attorneys should avoid using the landlord's failure to obtain a certificate of occupancy as a defense if the goal is to keep possession. Instead, counsel might consider using the code violations to establish breach of the implied warranty of habitability as a defense and obtain a reduction in the rent without loss of possession (see §§3.24-3.29, 10.64).

In Espinoza v Calva (2008) 169 CA4th 1393, 87 CR3d 492, the trial court awarded judgment for possession in favor of the landlord in an unlawful detainer action and entered a money judgment for reduced rent because of the untenantable condition of the premises. The court of appeal followed the ruling in Gruzen and reversed the money judgment, holding that the absence of a certificate of occupancy for the residential unit rendered the lease illegal and void. The appeal on the judgment for possession was moot because before the hearing, the tenants vacated.

PRACTICE TIP: If a tenant has no money to pay even reduced rent under a "pay and stay" order arising from a breach of the warranty of habitability, or if the city has issued an order requiring the building to be vacated, the tenant's lawyer may want to use the landlord's failure to get a certificate of occupancy as a defense to avoid a money judgment against the tenant, but the tenant will have to move if the court declares the lease void. A money judgment is good for 10 years and can be renewed for another 10 years. CCP §§683.020, 683.120(b). Also, the threat of using such a defense may be a strong negotiating point in trying to settle the case with landlord's counsel.

For further discussion of certificate of occupancy violations, see §3.11E.

§10.63 10. Rental Agreement Not Translated Into Required Language

A non-English-language copy of a lease or rental obligation for a period greater than 1 month, that was negotiated primarily in any of the five enumerated languages (see CC §1632(a)) by a person engaged in a trade or business (i.e., most landlords), must be furnished to the tenant before signing, if the tenant does not provide his or her own interpreter. The copy must be translated into the language used to negotiate the agreement. CC §1632(b)(3). The tenant may rescind the agreement if the landlord fails to comply. CC §1632(k).

PRACTICE TIP: If a landlord who violated CC §1632(b)(3) attempts to evict for nonpayment of rent, the tenant should give notice of rescission of the agreement, creating a tenancy at will, which obligates the tenant to pay a reasonable rent, not the rent provided by the rescinded agreement. Although rescission might invalidate a 3-day notice, such action by the tenant is risky if the reasonable rent is greater than the contract rent.

§10.64 11. Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability

Breach of the implied warranty of habitability is a defense to an unlawful detainer action filed to recover possession of residential premises based on nonpayment of rent. Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704. See also Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 171 CR 707; Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 102 CR 661. (For extensive discussion of the implied warranty and its ramifications in residential unlawful detainer actions, see §§3.16-3.34.) Courts have held that a commercial tenant may not invoke breach of the warranty of habitability (express or implied) as a defense to an unlawful detainer action. Schulman v Vera (1980) 108 CA3d 552, 166 CR 620. See discussion of Schulman in §3.18. See also Fish Constr. Co. v Moselle Coach Works, Inc. (1983) 148 CA3d 654, 658, 196 CR 174. (For extensive discussion of the availability of the defense in a commercial context, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§19.11-19.26 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).)

Although the defense will not defeat the recovery of possession by the landlord in an unlawful detainer action after the termination of a tenancy (i.e., an unlawful detainer based on a 30-day notice; see §8.69), the defense may still be relevant. A tenant's successful assertion of a breach of the implied warranty of habitability will affect the landlord's ability to recover damages for unlawful detainer.

Assertion of the defense of breach of the implied warranty of habitability raises the following issues about the relief available in an unlawful detainer action and the appropriate procedures:

- Proof of defects (see §§3.11-3.12, 3.28, 3.32-3.33, 12.36-12.37, 12.54-12.55);
- Computation of reasonable rent (see §§3.37-3.39, 12.36-12.37, 12.56-12.59, 13.36-13.38);
- Landlords' protective orders (see §§3.34, 11.49, 11.56-11.61); and
- Procedure after reasonable rent is resolved (see §§13.35-13.39).

For a full summary of procedures when breach of the implied warranty is disputed, see §3.32. See also §3.16 on development of the breach of habitability defense under Green v Superior Court, supra. (On the implied warranty of habitability generally, see §§3.16-3.48. On statutory requirements to repair, see CC §§1941, 1942.4, discussed in §§3.10-3.12, 3.15A, 3.41. On attorney fee awards, see §§3.41, 13.25.)

In some rent control jurisdictions, e.g., Berkeley, compliance with building code and habitability standards is an affirmative duty under the ordinance and may be a prerequisite to just cause eviction under the ordinance. Some ordinances also require that compliance with all such duties be stated in the termination notice, or alleged in the complaint, or both, and also provide that a tenant who prevails on the habitability issue defeats the eviction, even if it is otherwise warranted.

If breach of the implied warranty of habitability is alleged as a defense in an unlawful detainer action, failure to provide for a release of it in any settlement may mean that the tenant is still free to allege the breach in a subsequent action for damages. See Landeros v Pankey (1995) 39 CA4th 1167, 46 CR2d 165, discussed in §§3.35, 9.18.

§10.65 12. Retaliatory Eviction

An allegation that the eviction is motivated by the landlord's desire to retaliate for the tenant's exercise of a protected right constitutes a valid defense to an unlawful detainer action. If proved, such an allegation defeats the landlord's right to possession. See comprehensive discussion of the authorities and remedies for retaliatory eviction in §§8.109-8.135. See also §§8.129-8.132, 12.38, 12.61-12.63 for discussion of burden of proof when retaliatory eviction defense is raised in an unlawful detainer action.

The defense of retaliatory eviction is based both on statute (CC §1942.5) and on common law (Barela v Superior Court (1981) 30 C3d 244, 178 CR 618). Some retaliation defenses are part of fair housing legislation (see §§8.118-8.123, 10.68).

If the tenant prevails on a retaliation defense in the eviction action, the tenant may bring a subsequent action alleging that the tenant suffered damages from the landlord's retaliatory conduct, but it may be difficult to actually establish damages. See Gombiner v Swartz (2008) 167 CA4th 1365, 85 CR3d 83.

A commercial tenant may also defend an unlawful detainer action on the ground that it is retaliatory. Custom Parking, Inc. v Superior Court (1982) 138 CA3d 90, 187 CR 674. See California Eviction Defense Manual §19.25 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

The defense is not available in an action brought under CCP §1161a after a foreclosure. California Livestock Prod. Credit Ass'n v Sutfin (1985) 165 CA3d 136, 211 CR 152. But if the foreclosure was wrongfully obtained, the unlawful detainer action may be stayed pending the resolution of an affirmative suit by the former owner to set aside the foreclosure. See Banke, Staying Postforeclosure Eviction Actions Pending Borrower Actions Against Lenders, 32 CEB Real Prop L Rep 92 (July 2009).

In an eviction under the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7), the tenant may raise the defense of retaliatory eviction under CC §1942.5 to controvert the landlord's good faith in going out of the rental housing business. Drouet v Superior Court (2003) 31 C4th 583, 3 CR3d 205. In Drouet, the supreme court held that the landlord must then establish at a trial or hearing by a preponderance of the evidence the existence of a bona fide intent to withdraw the property from the rental market. If the landlord is able to convince the trier of fact of a bona fide intent to withdraw the property, the landlord may evict the tenants and withdraw the property despite having a retaliatory motive. See McGranahan, Molho, Molloy & Zanger, The Ellis Act: Easing the Transition for the Evicted Tenant, 23 CEB Real Prop L Rep 270 (Oct. 2000), for defenses to Ellis Act evictions. See also expanded discussion on the same subject in California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 17 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

On whether a landlord may evict a tenant because of a tenant's speech activities, see Greenhalgh & Zucker, Tenants' Free Expression Rights on California Rental Properties, 29 Real Est LJ 210 (Winter 2001).

§10.66 13. Lack of Good Cause to Evict From Government Housing

For housing owned or subsidized by a public agency, good cause or a prior administrative hearing to determine whether good cause exists, or both, may be a prerequisite to an unlawful detainer action, under statutory or regulatory provisions governing the agency's operations, or as a matter of due process. See Escalera v New York City Hous. Auth. (2d Cir 1970) 425 F2d 853.

A Section 8 tenant is entitled to a 90-day notice of lease termination when the landlord withdraws from the Section 8 program, regardless of whether the unit is subject to any rent control law. Wasatch Prop. Mgmt. v Degrate (2005) 35 C4th 1111, 29 CR3d 262.

For full discussion of the requirements for terminating a tenancy in various types of government-funded housing, see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993). In many instances, a landlord of government-sponsored housing must meet additional notice requirements in order to take advantage of state law governing unlawful detainer actions.

14. Discriminatory Eviction

§10.67 a. Unruh Civil Rights Act

A tenant may raise retaliatory conduct by the landlord that violates the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) as a defense to an unlawful detainer action. See Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 180 CR 496. The Unruh Act prohibits discrimination in all business establishments based on sex (including pregnancy, childbirth, medical conditions related to pregnancy or childbirth, gender identity, and gender related appearance and behavior), race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, disability, medical condition, marital status, or sexual orientation. See §§2.26, 2.57.

The Unruh Act further protects persons who are perceived to have any particular characteristic of the listed categories in the Act or who associate with persons who have, or are perceived to have, any particular characteristic of the listed categories. CC §51(e)(5). The Unruh Act also protects persons the tenant has associated with (or sublet the premises to) if the landlord has a discriminatory motive in evicting that person. See Winchell v English (1976) 62 CA3d 125, 129, 133 CR 20.

The Unruh Act prohibits all forms of arbitrary discrimination, not merely discrimination against the categories enumerated in it. See uncodified declarations of the legislature in Stats 2005, ch 420, §2; Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson, supra; In re Cox (1970) 3 C3d 205, 216, 90 CR 24. The California Supreme Court recognized that the Act may protect the rights of unmarried couples and individuals "to equal access to public accommodations under some circumstances," but that distinctions drawn between married and unmarried couples and individuals "that are supported by legitimate business reasons" do not violate the Act. See Koebke v Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 C4th 824, 831, 31 CR3d 565 (Act protects registered domestic partners; case decided before marital status protections added to enumerated categories in CC §51).

The Act forbids discrimination based on sexual orientation. A doctor may not refuse on First Amendment grounds to provide a medical procedure to lesbians that is provided to heterosexual women. North Coast Women's Care Med. Group, Inc. v Superior Court (2008) 44 C4th 1145, 81 CR3d 708.

Registered sex offenders are not a "protected class" under the Unruh Act. 89 Ops Cal Atty Gen 85 (2006). See also Harris v Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C3d 1142, 278 CR 614 (Unruh Act does not proscribe, as economic discrimination, landlord's requirement that prospective tenant have gross monthly income of at least three times the rent); Schmidt v Superior Court (1989) 48 C3d 370, 256 CR 750.

Based on the Marina Point decision, some tenant advocates argue that the Unruh Act should be interpreted to prohibit any evictions except those for good cause, but no California appellate court has so held. For discussion of the argument that good cause may be required to evict a tenant, see §8.136.

For comprehensive discussion of the Unruh Act, see §§2.21, 2.57-2.59, 8.118-8.121.

§10.68 b. Other Fair Housing Acts and Protections

The California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Govt C §§12900-12996) generally proscribes discrimination based on several protected characteristics. See §§2.48-2.56, 8.122. The Act expressly prohibits retaliatory eviction. Govt C §12955(f). The Act makes it an unlawful practice to refuse "to make reasonable accommodations in rules, policies, practices, or services when these accommodations may be necessary to afford a disabled person equal opportunity to use and enjoy a dwelling." Govt C §§12927(c)(1), 12955. Refusal to permit a small dog kept by the disabled person in a condominium where dogs are not allowed is a violation of the Act when the dog alleviates depression, and the disabled person is under treatment for depression. Auburn Woods I Homeowners Ass'n v FEHC (2004) 121 CA4th 1578, 18 CR3d 669.

Before the passage of the Act, a tenant was permitted to defend an unlawful detainer action on the ground that the eviction was being brought because of the tenant's race, in violation of the federal and state constitutions. Abstract Inv. Co. v Hutchinson (1962) 204 CA2d 242, 22 CR 309.

A tenant who is being evicted for a pet in violation of a lease provision prohibiting pets may be entitled to the protections of the federal Fair Housing Amendments Act (42 USC §§3601-3631). Title 24 CFR §100.204 makes it unlawful for any person "to refuse to make reasonable accommodations in rules, policies, practices, or services, when such accommodations may be necessary to afford a handicapped person equal opportunity to use and enjoy a dwelling unit, including public and common use areas." The "Examples" cited in this regulation include accommodation to allow a seeing eye dog in a "no pets" building. In Bronk v Ineichen (7th Cir 1995) 54 F3d 425, the court implied that an animal may be considered a service animal, even in the absence of formal training and certification, if it "facilitate[d] a disabled individual's ability to function," a decision to be made based on the facts of each case. See also Majors v Housing Auth. (5th Cir 1981) 652 F2d 454 (reversed summary judgment that applied no-pets rule against woman alleging mental disability requiring companionship of pet dog); Whittier Terrace v Hampshire (Mass App Ct 1989) 532 NE2d 712 (tenant with psychiatric disability cannot be evicted from subsidized housing for keeping cat in defiance of no-pets rule if evidence shows relationship between her ability to function and companionship of cat). The Act may also require a landlord to permit a financially qualified mother to cosign a lease for her financially ineligible and disabled son as a reasonable accommodation. Giebeler v M & B Assocs. (9th Cir 2003) 343 F3d 1143.

A tenant with a disability cannot require under the Unruh Act (CC §51) or the Disabled Persons Act (CC §54) that a landlord make structural modifications unless required by a separate provision of law relating to structural access standards. Coronado v Cobblestone Village Community Rentals, LP (2008) 163 CA4th 831, 77 CR3d 883, disapproved on other grounds in Munson v Del Taco, Inc. (2009) 46 C4th 661, 94 CR3d 685. The court held that neither state law access standards nor the Americans With Disabilities Act (see chap 2) require structural modifications to portions of rental property not used by the general public.

For more thorough discussion of federal statutes and other protections against housing discrimination, and their impact on evictions, see §§2.29-2.47, 2.67, 8.123-8.128.

§10.69 15. Notice Served More Than 1 Year After Rent Due

Code of Civil Procedure §1161(2) provides that a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit "may be served at any time within one year after the claimed rent becomes due." This language, although permissive, has been construed to require that a 3-day notice be served within 1 year of the due date in order to support an unlawful detainer action. Bevill v Zoura (1994) 27 CA4th 694, 697, 32 CR2d 635. In Bevill, the court held that a notice is defective if it demands payment of rent more than 1 year overdue. The court also held that this defense does not need to be pleaded as an affirmative defense if the defect appears on the face of a notice attached to the complaint. 27 CA4th at 698. See also Cal-American Income Prop. Fund IV v Ho (1984) 161 CA3d 583, 585, 207 CR 532.

Under the reasoning of the Bevill case, a landlord could serve a 3-day notice demanding rent due within the year preceding service of the notice, successfully proceed with an unlawful detainer action, and file an ordinary civil action separately to collect the rent that is more than 1 year overdue. Another court of appeal has held, however, that a landlord must sue for all past-due rent in one action. A landlord who does not do so is precluded from obtaining a judgment for rent in a second action because this would constitute splitting the cause of action. Lekse v Municipal Court (1982) 138 CA3d 188, 195, 187 CR 698. Although the decision in Lekse involved two successive small claims actions, and may be distinguished on that basis, the reasoning was based on the general rule (derived from several authorities cited in Lekse) against splitting causes of action when they are based on running accounts or installment payments. 138 CA3d at 193. There are no reported cases as yet establishing that CCP §1161(2) either allows or prohibits a separate action to collect rent delinquent for more than 1 year if an unlawful detainer judgment were to award the other part of the delinquent rent to the landlord.

A different rule applies in a commercial tenancy under CCP §1161.1. The notice may state that the amount of rent due is a "reasonably estimated amount," and the amount given, if not more than 20 percent above the amount ultimately found to be due for the year before service of the notice will not defeat the unlawful detainer action. Levitz Furniture Co. v Wingtip Communications, Inc. (2001) 86 CA4th 1035, 103 CR2d 656.

In Levitz Furniture Co., the landlord's notice of estimated rent due under a commercial lease explicitly included rent more than one year overdue. The court held that the landlord could not recover such rent in an unlawful detainer action but that the inclusion did not invalidate the notice. For further discussion of estimated rent in commercial tenancy notices, see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 19 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

PRACTICE TIP: If the defect (that the 3-day notice includes rent more than a year overdue) does not appear on the face of the complaint or in an attached exhibit, the tenant should raise the defense in the answer. Whether or not the rent is a year overdue may be affected by the landlord's bookkeeping procedure. See §8.38. If the tenant states on the face of the check or money order that the payment is to be applied to rent for a particular month, it must be so applied (CC §1479), despite the landlord's bookkeeping methods.

§10.69A 16. Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

A 3-day notice to pay rent or quit that is signed by someone other than the landlord may be subject to the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) (15 USC §§1692-1692o) and may thus be defective if it fails to advise that the tenant has 30 days after receipt of the notice to dispute the validity of the back rent sought. Romea v Heiberger & Assocs. (2d Cir 1998) 163 F3d 111; Dearie v Hunter (1998) 676 NYS2d 896; Eina Realty v Calixte (1998) 679 NYS2d 796. For elaboration on this development and Practice Tip, see §8.26A.

§10.70 E. Verification of Answer

The tenant's answer in an unlawful detainer action must be verified (CCP §446), because the complaint is required to be verified (CCP §1166(a)(1)). The usual exception for answers filed in limited civil cases, under the economic litigation statute that permits a defendant to file an unverified answer even when the complaint is verified (CCP §92(b)), does not apply in unlawful detainer actions (CCP §91(b)). When a tenant appearing in propria persona files an unverified answer, the landlord usually need not move to strike the answer because trial judges routinely ask such defendants to verify their answers in response to the motion.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.71 F. Amendment to Answer

An answer may be amended generally as a matter of right (i.e., without leave of court or notice to other parties) within the time for demurring to an answer (10 days under CCP §430.40(b)), or after a demurrer has been filed but before the hearing on the demurrer (CCP §472; see Tingley v Times Mirror Co. (1907) 151 C 1, 10, 89 P 1097). See also California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 25 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). In unlawful detainer actions, however, the effect of CCP §1167.3 is to allow only 5 days to amend the answer after the court rules on a demurrer to the answer or a motion to strike the answer.

Beyond that period, the tenant must, on a showing of good cause, seek court permission before amending the answer. Under CCP §473(a)(1), the court, "in furtherance of justice, and on any terms as may be proper," may allow a party to amend any pleading to correct a mistake or permit an amendment "in other particulars."

Amending the answer might be necessary in an unlawful detainer action if the 5-day period in which to plead is not long enough to permit adequate investigation of the facts. Subsequent investigation may require changing admissions to denials, or vice versa, or may disclose the availability of additional affirmative defenses.

§10.72 IX. AFFIRMATIVE RELIEF

The "summary nature" of unlawful detainer actions restricts a tenant's right to seek affirmative relief that is usually available in ordinary civil actions. See §§9.6-9.9. In civil actions generally, affirmative relief other than setoff may not be claimed in the answer. CCP §431.30(c). See §10.57. Thus, a defendant must seek affirmative relief in a cross-complaint. As discussed in §§10.73-10.74, however, a tenant defendant's ability to cross-complain is strictly limited.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.73 A. Right to Cross-Complain Limited

In California, cross-complaints are not allowed in unlawful detainer actions because they would subvert the summary nature of the proceedings. Knowles v Robinson (1963) 60 C2d 620, 36 CR 33; Arnold v Krigbaum (1915) 169 C 143, 146 P 423; Union Oil Co. v Chandler (1970) 4 CA3d 716, 721, 84 CR 756. Although tenant advocates have frequently argued the issue, no reported case has established a tenant's right to cross-complain. Accordingly, when a tenant has affirmative claims against a landlord that would not adequately be redressed by a setoff against the damages sought by the landlord in unlawful detainer, a separate action to pursue such claims may be necessary. See, e.g., Evans v Superior Court (1977) 67 CA3d 162, 171, 136 CR 596 (pendency of unlawful detainer action does not bar simultaneous prosecution of quiet title action by tenant, and unlawful detainer judgment does not operate as res judicata on quiet title issues affecting title or possession).

An unlawful detainer action may be enjoined by a court in a related action brought by a tenant for affirmative relief against the landlord (see §§11.62-11.64). A court might rule favorably on a motion to consolidate an unlawful detainer action with a cross-action by the tenant if both actions involve the same issues (see §§11.65-11.68). See Greenhut v Wooden (1982) 129 CA3d 64, 69, 180 CR 786; Mobil Oil Corp. v Superior Court (1978) 79 CA3d 486, 493, 145 CR 17. Also, a tenant may proceed with a filed cross-complaint unless the landlord moves to strike it or objects to the admissibility of evidence presented under it. The landlord's right to challenge the cross-complaint is waived if the landlord does not take some affirmative step in the trial court to object. Lakeside Park Ass'n v Keithly (1941) 43 CA2d 418, 422, 110 P2d 1055.

There is authority for an argument that the prohibition on cross-complaints in unlawful detainer suits applies only when the cross-complaint raises new issues that go beyond the tenant's affirmative defenses and therefore would delay the summary proceeding. In Knowles v Robinson (1963) 60 C2d 620, 625, 36 CR 33, e.g., the court stated that issues "irrelevant to the right of immediate possession" raised by a cross-complaint defeat the purpose of CCP §1161, which is to restore possession of premises wrongfully withheld from the owner. Similarly, in Mobil Oil Corp. v Handley (1978) 76 CA3d 956, 965, 143 CR 321, the court implied that in determining whether to allow a cross-complaint the same rule should be applied as is used for allowing a specific affirmative defense in an unlawful detainer action.

A cross-complaint raising issues similar to those allowable in an affirmative defense would not delay the proceedings and could save court time in the long run. For example, a tenant alleging breach of the warranty of habitability as an affirmative defense must prove both the breach and damages in order for the factfinder to determine the reasonable rental value of the premises (see §§3.32-3.39). The same evidence would also prove all the elements of an affirmative lawsuit for breach of the warranty (see §3.35). Thus, a limited cross-complaint for damages for breach of the warranty arguably would add no new issues to the case and would likely save the court and the parties the time and expense of trying the question of breach again in the tenant's suit against the landlord. Because these damages may be the subject of expert testimony (see §§3.37, 12.29, 12.36), proving them is often time-consuming.

In Peoria Hous. Auth. v Sanders (Ill 1973) 298 NE2d 173, the Illinois Supreme Court held that the tenant could cross-complain for damages because the legislature had allowed landlords to expand the issues in an eviction by seeking unpaid rent. To hold otherwise would violate "common sense and accepted rules of statutory interpretation." 298 NE2d at 175. See also Kaplan v Sanders (Ga 1976) 227 SE2d 38.

When the landlord seeks "money" in the form of back rent, damages, or both, in addition to possession of the premises, the tenant's attorney may argue that the tenant should be able to assert a "cross-demand" for money by a cross-complaint under CCP §431.70, as long as the tenant's claim relates directly to an affirmative defense, proof of which would preclude restitution of the premises to the landlord. See §10.57.

If the facts warrant such a claim, a tenant may be able to file a cross-complaint against the landlord for forcible entry or forcible detainer. Because such cases are also served with a 5-day summons (see CCP §§428.10, 1159-1160, 1167), one Southern California trial court approved the practice.

§10.74 B. Exception: If Tenant Has Vacated Premises

If a tenant has vacated the premises before trial, the case becomes an ordinary civil action, and the tenant may seek any affirmative relief by way of a cross-complaint and assert all defenses to which ordinary civil litigants are entitled. CC §1952.3(a); Fish Constr. Co. v Moselle Coach Works, Inc. (1983) 148 CA3d 654, 196 CR 174. See §11.51. Failure to assert a cause of action by cross-complaint does not bar the tenant, under CCP §426.30(a), from later asserting that claim unless the tenant files a cross-complaint, an answer, or an amended answer in response to an amended complaint filed by the landlord after the tenant vacates the premises. CC §1952.3(a)(2). Thus, if a tenant who has vacated thereafter files a cross-complaint, any available cause of action not pleaded in the cross-complaint will be barred.

PRACTICE TIP: Litigating a cross-complaint as an ordinary civil action after the tenant vacates possession has several advantages for the tenant over defending a simple unlawful detainer: (1) there is more time to hire necessary experts, locate potential witnesses, do discovery, and prepare for trial (see §§11.5-11.6, 11.42); (2) the monetary relief awarded to the tenant may exceed that which is awarded to the landlord (see §10.57); and (3) the action may proceed on issues not otherwise allowed in unlawful detainer actions (see §§9.6-9.9, 10.73).

A tenant who has vacated the premises may not be required to pay back rent as a condition to filing a cross-complaint. Medford v Superior Court (1983) 140 CA3d 236, 189 CR 227. If, after physically surrendering the premises, the tenant continues to assert a legal right to immediate possession, the right to file a cross-complaint may be denied. Erbe Corp. v W & B Realty Co. (1967) 255 CA2d 773, 778, 63 CR 462. After Erbe was decided, the legislature (in 1977) enacted CC §1952.3, which provides that if the landlord is restored to possession before trial, the case is converted to an ordinary civil action. The statute does not carve out an exception for a tenant who merely claims a right to possession.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.75 C. Failure to Object to Cross-Complaint

A landlord who does not move to strike the tenant's cross-complaint, and makes no objection to evidence offered to prove the elements of the cross-complaint, waives the right to challenge the filing of the cross-complaint and cannot raise it on appeal. Lakeside Park Ass'n v Keithly (1941) 43 CA2d 418, 422, 110 P2d 1055; see Servais v Klein (1931) 112 CA 26, 33, 296 P 123. See also Garfinkle v Montgomery (1952) 113 CA2d 149, 155, 248 P2d 52. Accordingly, the tenant's attorney may consider filing a cross-complaint against the landlord when it is desirable to have the tenant's claims adjudicated at the same time as the unlawful detainer. The landlord may decide to waive objection to the cross-complaint and have all issues resolved in one trial or may simply overlook the tenant's filing of the cross-complaint. The tenant's attorney may want to discuss this with the landlord's attorney and negotiate a stipulation allowing for a cross-complaint. If the landlord objects to the filing of the cross-complaint, the tenant's attorney risks possible sanctions under CCP §128.7.

§10.76 D. Procedure

A cross-complaint may be filed without the court's permission at the same time as the answer (CCP §428.50(a)), or, if against parties other than the plaintiff, at any time before the action is set for trial (CCP §428.50(b)). Leave of court must be obtained for the tenant to file a cross-complaint at any other time; leave may be granted at any time "in the interest of justice." CCP §428.50(c). Other statutes governing cross-complaints include CCP §§428.40 (cross-complaint must be separate document), 428.60 (service of cross-complaint), 428.10 (causes of action assertable in cross-complaint), 428.20 (permitted joinder of cross-complainant or cross-defendant), 428.30 (permitted joinder of causes of action), 425.10 (contents of cross-complaint), 432.10 (time to respond to cross-complaint after service), and 435 (motion to strike cross-complaint).

On the procedure for filing and challenging cross-complaints generally, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 26 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

The following is a checklist of the most common defects encountered in unlawful detainer complaints, with cross-references to allegations or requirements that are discussed in chap 9 and to the method of attacking each defect, as noted in chap 10 or other sources:

___ 1. Service of summons and complaint did not comply with legal requirements (see §§9.45-9.50): Motion to Quash (see §10.19).

___ 2. Complaint fails to state cause of action for unlawful detainer, so that use of 5-day summons is improper (see §9.37): Motion to Quash (see §10.20).

___ 3. Complaint seeks relief not properly the subject of an unlawful detainer action but otherwise states cause of action for unlawful detainer (see §§9.5-9.12, 9.38-9.41): Motion to Strike (see §§10.40-10.41); Motion to Quash (see §10.20).

___ 4. Complaint does not allege that plaintiff has legal capacity to sue (e.g., as owner of premises) (see §§9.34, 9.37): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(b) (see §10.31).

___ 5. Complaint does not allege existence of landlord-tenant or other cognizable relationship (see §§9.4, 9.36-9.37): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(e) for failure to state cause of action (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §10.52); Motion to Quash (see §10.20).

___ 6. Complaint does not state that plaintiff is entitled to possession (see §§9.5, 9.37): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(e) (see §10.31); Answer (see §10.52.); Motion to Quash (see §10.20).

___ 7. Complaint does not allege existence of lease or rental agreement and whether it is written, oral, or implied by conduct (see §§9.3-9.4, 9.36-9.37): Demurrer (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §10.52); Motion to Quash (see §10.20).

___ 8. Failure to attach to complaint written residential lease or rental agreement, as required by CCP §1166(c)(1)(B), unless agreement is oral or eviction is based on rent default (see §9.37): Demurrer (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §10.52); Motion to Quash (see §10.20).

___ 9. Failure to attach to complaint copy of applicable termination notice, as required in residential tenancies by CCP §1166(c)(1)(A) (see §9.37): Demurrer (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §10.52); Motion to Quash (see §10.20).

___ 10. Action was not brought in proper county or judicial district (see §9.33): Motion for Change of Venue; see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 20 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

___ 11. Complaint does not (a) allege notice verbatim or according to its legal effect, (b) incorporate notice by reference, or (c) allege fact of service of notice (see §9.37): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(f) for uncertainty or under CCP §430.10(e) (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §10.52); Motion to Quash for defects in notice (see §10.20).

___ 12. Failure either to allege method of service of required termination notice in complaint or to attach to complaint copy of proof of service of notice, as required by CCP §1166(a)(5) (see §9.37): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(f) for uncertainty or under CCP §430.10(e) (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §10.52); Motion to Quash for defects in notice (see §10.20).

___ 13. Notice was legally insufficient (see §§8.22-8.85, 9.37, 9.44): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(e) (see §10.31);

Answer (see §10.52); Motion to Quash (see §10.20).

___ 14. The 3-day notice for nonpayment of rent (a) did not state exact amount due when notice was served (see §8.37), (b) was served before rental due date (see §§8.24, 8.42), (c) did not demand that tenant either pay amount of rent due or vacate premises within 3 days (see §8.36), demanded payment of rent due for more than 1 year preceding notice (see §§8.38, 10.69, 3.18), or (d) lacked name, telephone number, and address of person to whom rent payment shall be made, and either usual days and hours that person will be available to receive it or account number in financial institution into which rent payment may be made and name and street address of institution (which must be within five miles of the rental property) (see §§8.37B, 10.36A): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(e) (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer, denying allegations not appearing on face of complaint (see §§10.52, 10.69); Motion to Quash for defects in notice (see §10.20).

___ 15. Notice of breach of a covenant other than nonpayment of rent did not (a) specify covenant allegedly breached or nature of breach (see §8.51) or (b) demand that tenant either perform breach (if curable) or quit premises within 3 days (see §8.50): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(e) (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §10.52.); Motion to Quash for defects in notice (see §10.20).

___ 16. Complaint does not allege expiration of notice period (see §§8.28-8.29, 9.44): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(e) (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §10.52); Motion to Quash for defects in notice (see §10.20).

___ 17. Complaint does not allege that tenant continues in possession after lapse of notice period (see §§9.5, 9.37): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(e) (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §10.52); Motion to Quash for lack of essential allegations (see §10.20).

___ 18. Tenant was not actually in possession of premises on date complaint filed (see §§9.5, 9.37, 10.74): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(e) (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §10.52); Motion to Quash for lack of essential allegations (see §10.20).

___ 19. Complaint does not base claim for daily damages on reasonable rental value of premises (see §§9.38-9.39, 12.28): Motion to Strike (prayer) (see §10.40); Answer (see §10.52).

___ 20. Complaint does not allege that damages resulted from tenant's unlawful detainer of property (see §§9.37-9.39, 12.27, 12.30): Motion to Strike (see §§10.40-10.41); Answer (see §10.52).

___ 21. Complaint seeks rent due (as opposed to damages) after expiration of notice period (see §§9.38-9.39, 12.27): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(e) (see §§10.29-10.31); Motion to Strike (see §10.40); Answer (see §10.52).

___ 22. Complaint seeks damages other than reasonable daily rental value of premises after expiration of notice period (see §§9.38-9.39, 12.27): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(e) (see §§10.29-10.31); Motion to Strike (see §10.40); Answer (see §10.52); Motion to Quash for joining improper cause of action with an unlawful detainer (see §10.20).

___ 23. Complaint seeks damages for period after entry of judgment (see §§9.38-9.39, 12.27, 12.30): Motion to Strike (see §10.40); Answer (see §10.52).

___ 24. Allegations for rent and damages in body of complaint and prayer do not seek same amounts for same periods (see §§9.37-9.39, 12.30): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(f) for uncertainty (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §10.52).

___ 25. Prayer seeks recovery of sums not supported by allegations in body of complaint (see §§9.37-9.39): Motion to Strike (see §§10.38-10.44); Answer (see §10.52).

___ 26. Complaint alleges rent or damages not requested in prayer (see §§9.37-9.39): Motion to Strike (see §§10.38, 10.44; Answer (see §10.52).

___ 27. No statement in body of complaint supports prayer for $600 statutory damages by specifically alleging that tenant's possession is malicious (see §§9.37-9.40): Motion to Strike (see §§10.38, 10.42); Answer (see

___ 28. Complaint contains irrelevant, false, or improper matter (see §§9.8, 9.37, 9.41): Motion to Strike (see §§10.38, 10.44).

___ 29. Complaint seeks double recovery (i.e., both damages and rent) for same time period (see §§9.38-9.39): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(f) for uncertainty (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §10.52); Motion to Quash (see §§10.22-10.23).

___ 30. Complaint contains allegations that are unclear or internally inconsistent (see §9.37): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(f) for uncertainty (see §§10.29-10.31).

___ 31. Complaint has not been verified (see §9.42): Motion to Strike (see §10.45).

___ 32. Complaint or affidavit does not allege facts showing action was filed in both proper county and proper court location for trial (see §9.33): Motion to Dismiss under CCP §396a(a) (see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 39 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004)); Motion to Transfer under CCP §§396a(b), 396b (see Civ Proc Before Trial, chaps 6, 20).

___ 33. Prayer is outside of jurisdictional limit for limited civil cases (see §9.32): Motion to Transfer under CCP §396 (see Civ Proc Before Trial, chaps 6, 20).

___ 34. Complaint in a limited civil case does not allege that plaintiff agrees to remit to court any recovery over jurisdictional limit (see §§9.32, 9.37): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(a) (see §§10.29-10.31); Motion to Transfer under CCP §396 (see Civ Proc Before Trial, chap 6).

___ 35. Complaint or notice does not allege compliance with applicable rent eviction control ordinance (see §§7.74, 8.22, 9.16, 9.37): Demurrer under CCP §430.10(e) for failure to state cause of action (see §§10.29-10.31); Answer (see §§10.52, 10.59.); Motion to Quash for lack of essential allegations (see §10.20).

___ 36. Prayer seeks attorney fees, but complaint does not allege existence of provision for their recovery in lease or rental agreement (see §§9.37, 13.25): Motion to Strike (see §10.43); Answer (see §10.52).

___ 37. After a foreclosure, failure to allege that plaintiff acquired title by a foreclosure sale that was conducted in compliance with statutory law and the deed of trust, followed by purchase at the sale. See §§8.68B, 10.54.

___ 38. After a foreclosure, failure to allege that plaintiff served the 3-day or 60-day notice on the former owner or tenant required by CCP §1161a or §1161b. See §§8.68A, 8.68C.

NOTE: See also demurrer checklist in §10.31. The Appendixes in California Eviction Defense Manual (2d ed Cal CEB 1993) contain numerous sample motions and supporting memoranda for many situations described in the above checklist.

§11.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter details or summarizes most pretrial activity in an unlawful detainer action, including a plaintiff's motion to strike and demurrer to attack a tenant's answer to the complaint (see §11.2), tactical considerations and procedures for discovery (see §§11.3-11.30), motions for summary judgment or summary adjudication (see §§11.31-11.39), motions for judgment on the pleadings (see §11.40), trial setting and conditions for trial continuance (see §§11.41-11.50), vacating the trial date when a tenant surrenders the premises before trial (see §11.51), case management and settlement conferences (see §11.52), the availability of jury trials in unlawful detainer actions (see §§11.53-11.55), motions for protective orders, stipulations, and other procedures for escrowing rent pending trial (see §§11.56-11.61), enjoining eviction actions (see §§11.63-11.64), and consolidation (see §§11.65-11.68) or coordination (see §11.69) of eviction actions with other lawsuits. Defaults, default judgments, and relief from default are discussed in chap 13. Tenant responsive pleadings are presented in chap 10.

§11.2 II. LANDLORD'S DEMURRER TO ANSWER OR MOTION TO STRIKE

The landlord may file a demurrer to the tenant's answer within 10 days (plus an additional 5 days under CCP §1013 if service of the answer was by regular mail) after service of the answer. CCP §430.40(b). Except for an objection that the answer does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense, an objection to an answer is waived unless attacked by demurrer. CCP §430.80(b). A motion to strike all or parts of the answer may be filed within the time to respond (i.e., demur) to the answer (CCP §435(b)) and should be filed together with a demurrer (if any) to the answer (for discussion of grounds see §§10.29, 10.39). Counsel should attempt to have the hearing on shortened notice under CCP §1005, citing among other things CCP §§1179a and 1170.5 (calendar preference and short trial setting for unlawful detainers) and CCP §1170.7 (5-day notice for summary judgment motions).

If service of the answer was by express mail or another method of overnight delivery, the time to file a demurrer is extended by 2 court days. CCP §1013(c). If service was by facsimile transmission, which requires the parties' consent, the time to respond is likewise extended by 2 court days. CCP §1013(e).

A landlord's demurrer or motion to strike is especially appropriate when the tenant employs evasive and conclusory language because it requires the landlord to engage in discovery and suffer resulting delay or proceed to trial without adequate notice of the factual basis for the tenant's defenses. If the tenant's answer is on the Judicial Council's answer form (see §10.51), and the tenant alleges no facts to support the legal conclusions asserted as affirmative defenses, landlord counsel in the demurrer should refer to language in the form that specifically calls for a statement of facts in the blank space near the top of the form's second page. For further discussion of demurrers and motions to strike generally, see chap 10.

Some tenants routinely allege "arbitrary discrimination" in the check-off box of the Judicial Council answer form. Assuming that additional costs and delay are justified, landlord counsel should move aggressively to test such claims by demurrer, motion to strike, or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of issues.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords and their counsel should carefully weigh the advantages of attacking the answer by filing a demurrer or motion to strike with the disadvantages of delaying the unlawful detainer process and incurring additional costs and attorney fees, especially when the answer is filed in pro per.

III. DISCOVERY

§11.3 A. Tactical Considerations

California's liberal discovery procedures may be very helpful in preparing an unlawful detainer action for trial. Although tenants usually have the greatest need to undertake discovery, landlords may find discovery helpful in certain instances. For example, by uncovering the identities of all occupants of the premises, discovery may enable a landlord to name all necessary parties as defendants and thus to obtain a judgment and writ for eviction of all current occupants. (For discussion of this problem, see §§1.21, 8.67.) The use of the prejudgment claim of right to possession procedure (see §§9.51-9.55) makes formal discovery about other occupants unnecessary if the landlord serves the prescribed forms at the beginning of the action.

For the tenant, affirmative defenses raising code violations or breach of the implied warranty of habitability may be strengthened if pretrial admissions regarding notice and failure to correct defects are obtained during discovery. The defense of retaliatory eviction may require pretrial investigation into the landlord's motivations. Under a rent control ordinance that permits eviction for the purpose of moving in a specified relative of the landlord (see §§7.65-7.68), discovery may confirm or refute the authenticity of the landlord's intentions. Interrogatories and requests for admissions may be used to obtain more facts in disputes over the sufficiency of a 3-day termination notice. Depositions may be useful, but are difficult to take within the time constraints of unlawful detainers. If counsel for defendant wants to take a deposition, he or she should try to get the landlord's counsel to stipulate to the timing of the deposition and scheduling of the trial.

The purpose of discovery is to obtain evidence and evidentiary "leads," and to resolve undisputed issues. The process of discovery tests the pleadings by enabling a party to find out the opponent's contentions and the facts supporting them. Burke v Superior Court (1969) 71 C2d 276, 281, 78 CR 481. By eliminating surprise, discovery removes much of the "sporting" element from litigation. Greyhound Corp. v Superior Court (1961) 56 C2d 355, 376, 15 CR 90. For extensive discussion of discovery rights, theories, and methods, see California Civil Discovery Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

In unlawful detainer cases, the most commonly used discovery tools are:

- Depositions of witnesses and parties (see §§11.7-11.10);
- Written interrogatories to adverse parties (see §§11.11-11.19);
- Requests for production of documents before or during trial, e.g., statutory notice, subpoena duces tecum (see §§11.20-11.22, 12.16);
- Demands for inspection of real property (see §§11.20-11.22); and
- Requests for admissions (see §§11.23-11.27).

Although this chapter discusses only those five procedures, any other authorized discovery procedure (e.g., motions for physical or mental examinations) may also be used when appropriate.

Once counsel decides that some form of discovery is appropriate, the cost and benefit of each discovery procedure must be analyzed. The following discussion outlines the advantages and disadvantages of each procedure, and suggests ways to accommodate clients of limited means.

§11.4 B. Statutory Authority

Formal discovery in unlawful detainer actions is governed by the Civil Discovery Act (CCP §§2016.010-2036.050). Effective January 1, 2008, the discovery law was substantially amended to shorten time periods in discovery proceedings and in motions to enforce discovery rights in unlawful detainer actions. See Stats 2007, ch 113. These changes are reflected in this chapter where appropriate.

The discovery statutes clearly apply to unlawful detainer proceedings despite the summary nature of the action. For purposes of the discovery sections, "action" is defined in CCP §2016.020 to include a "special proceeding of a civil nature." Unlawful detainer actions (see CCP §§1159-1179a) are included in Part 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure (CCP §§1063-1822.59), which provides for "special proceedings." Further, several discovery statutes expressly provide shortened notice and response periods in unlawful detainer cases. See, e.g., CCP §2030.260(a) (response to interrogatories due 5 days after service unless court, on propounding party's motion, shortens time, or on responding party's motion, lengthens time).

Legislative provisions on economical litigation (CCP §§90-100) restrict discovery in most limited civil cases, but they do not apply to unlawful detainer cases. CCP §91(b).

NOTE: Operative January 1, 2008, CCP §§1170.8 and 1170.9 were added to address the timing of discovery motions, including the serving of opposition and reply papers, in unlawful detainer proceedings. Further, CCP §§2020.510, 2025.240, 2025.270, 2030.020, 2030.260, 2031.020, 2031.030, 2031.260, 2033.220, and 2033.250 were amended to address consumer and employee record disclosure and the timelines for certain discovery methods in unlawful detainer actions. See §§11.5-11.24.

C. Scheduling Unlawful Detainer Discovery and Discovery Motions

§11.5 1. Shorter Response Periods

Time requirements for discovery procedures in unlawful detainer suits are substantially different from those in civil actions generally. In many instances, the notice period for and response time to a discovery request are shortened. See, e.g., CCP §§2025.270(b) (oral depositions; see §11.8), 2030.020(c), 2030.260(b) (interrogatories; see §11.17), 2031.020(c), 2031.030(c)(2), 2031.260(b) (document demands; see §11.20), 2033.020(c), 2033.250(b) (requests for admissions; see §11.24). But the parties to unlawful detainer actions may conduct discovery closer to the trial date than is allowed in ordinary civil actions. See CCP §§2024.020(a), 2024.040(b)(1), 2024.050, which, except on leave of court, allows discovery only through the 30th day before trial in civil actions generally, but allows discovery through the 5th day before trial in unlawful detainer actions.

There is no special cutoff before trial in unlawful detainer actions on the hearing of discovery motions. In ordinary civil actions, all discovery motions must be heard on or before the 15th day before the date initially set for trial. CCP §2024.020(a). This provision expressly does not apply to unlawful detainer actions (CCP §2024.040(b)(1)), and CCP §1170.8 provides that a discovery motion in an unlawful detainer action "may be made at any time" on 5 days' notice. Thus, discovery motions will be heard at any time before trial. The Judicial Council adopted Cal Rules of Ct 3.1347, which governs the due dates and methods for opposing a discovery motion in an unlawful detainer action.

NOTE: Under CCP §2016.060, if the pretrial cutoff dates for discovery or discovery motions fall on a Saturday, Sunday, or holiday, "the time limit is extended until the next court day closer to the trial date." This section appears to apply to discovery and discovery motions in unlawful detainer actions, despite the cutoff date specified for unlawful detainer discovery in CCP §2024.040(b)(1).

§11.6 2. Discovery and Trial-Setting Conflicts

No specific statute prevents the trial date from being set before discovery is complete. Under CCP §1170.5(a), the trial must be held within 20 days after the request to set trial has been filed. See §11.42. If trial is not held within this time, the court must hold a hearing to determine whether the landlord is likely to prevail. If the court so determines, it must order the tenant to pay whatever it determines to be the landlord's damages from the extension as the rent would otherwise become due. CCP §1170.5(b)-(c). See §§11.43-11.50.

PRACTICE TIP: When the landlord wishes to undertake discovery, filing the request to set trial can simply be delayed until after the landlord has completed discovery. Because the tenant's discovery may conflict with the landlord's desire to bring the case to trial, the tenant's attorney should begin discovery immediately. The tenant may begin discovery on being served with the summons and complaint, and even before answering, without the court's permission. See, e.g., CCP §2025.210. The tenant's attorney should contact the landlord's attorney and attempt to work out a discovery and trial schedule by stipulation. Professional courtesy can eliminate expensive pretrial motions. See §11.45.

If served with a request to set trial before discovery has been completed, a tenant may use a motion to strike or set aside the request (under the court's inherent powers in CCP §128) or to extend the trial date (see §11.44), or may file a counter-request. If the court continues the trial date, it is required to hold a hearing under CCP §1170.5(c) to determine whether the landlord is likely to prevail in the action and whether the tenant should be required to pay damages for the delay into court as the rent would otherwise become due. See §§11.44-11.50, 11.56.

If a trial court denies a tenant the opportunity to conduct adequate discovery, the tenant may seek review by petition for writ of mandate. Burke v Superior Court (1969) 71 C2d 276, 277 n1, 78 CR 481 (remedy of mandate is ordinarily appropriate for improper denial of discovery, while remedy of prohibition is used to prevent improper discovery).

D. Depositions

§11.7 1. Legal Basis; Methods

Any party may take the testimony of any person, including a party, by deposition on oral examination or written questions. CCP §§2025.010, 2028.010. The scope of examination is broad, covering any unprivileged matter that is relevant to the subject matter of the action. CCP §2017.010. Examination and cross-examination of deponents is carried out in the same manner as at trial. CCP §2025.330. Generally, the deposition of a nonparty witness may be used at trial only to impeach that witness or if the witness will be unavailable for trial, and his or her testimony is necessary, while a party's deposition may be used by an adverse party for any purpose. CCP §2025.620.

Depositions are expensive. The reporter who records and transcribes the deposition must be paid by the party who requests the deposition; this cost increases if a transcript is ordered. Generally, an expedited transcript will be necessary because of the short time to trial, thereby increasing costs. The court may issue protective orders denying or limiting the examination. CCP §2025.420(b). Deposition costs may be awarded to the prevailing party. CCP §§1032(b), 1033.5(a)(3).

A deposition must be conducted under the supervision of an officer (usually a certified shorthand reporter) who is authorized to administer an oath, who is not a relative or an employee of any attorneys of the parties or of any of the parties, and who is not financially interested in the action. CCP §2025.320. All "services and products" offered by the deposition officer to any party shall be offered to all parties. The deposition officer is also prohibited from offering comments or notations on the demeanor of any witness, party, or attorney. If a party (or a party's attorney) requests, a party is required to enter into the record at the deposition all services and records made available to the party by the deposition officer. CCP §2025.320. Unless the parties agree or the court orders otherwise, the testimony and objections to questions or testimony must be recorded stenographically. CCP §2025.330(b). A deposition may be audiotaped or videotaped or recorded by stenographic method using instant visual display if the notice of deposition stated an intention to record the testimony by those methods, or if all the parties agree. CCP §§2025.220(a)(5), 2025.330(c).

Rules for depositions of nonparty deponents by telephone or other remote electronic means are provided in CCP §2025.310. Any other party may make a simultaneous audio- or videotape of the deposition if the party serves written notice of his or her intention to do so on all parties to the deposition at least 3 calendar days before the deposition date. CCP §2025.330(c). Detailed procedures for audiotaping and videotaping depositions are prescribed by CCP §2025.340. The cost of video recording a deposition is a recoverable court cost. CCP §1033.5(a)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.8 2. Procedure

Depositions may be taken at any time by a defendant after service of the summons and complaint. A plaintiff must obtain leave of court to serve a deposition notice less than 20 days after the earlier of service of summons or appearance of the defendant. CCP §2025.210. A court order must be obtained if either party desires to take a deposition at a place that is neither (CCP §2025.250(a))

- Within 75 miles of the deponent's residence; nor
- Within the county where the action is pending and within 150 miles of the deponent's residence.

A subpoena need not be served on a party if proper notice of the taking of the deposition is given to his or her attorney or to the party (if unrepresented). CCP §2025.280(a). A party scheduling a deposition in an unlawful detainer action must schedule the deposition for a time that is at least 5 days after written notice, but not later than 5 days before trial. CCP §2025.270(b). The court may order a longer or shorter time on a showing of good cause. CCP §2025.270(d). Time is extended if service is made by mail. CCP §1013. The notice must state the following:

- The time and place of the deposition;
- The name, address, and telephone number of each deponent;
- The materials required to be produced by the deponent;
- Any intention to record the deposition by audiotape or videotape; and
- Any intention to use at trial a videotape deposition of a treating physician or expert witness instead of the witness's testimony.

A witness subpoenaed for a deposition is entitled to the same fees and mileage as if compelled to attend a trial, except that the fees that must be paid to a witness who is required to produce business records under Evid C §1560, but who is not required to personally attend a deposition away from the witness's place of business, are those prescribed by Evid C §1563. CCP §1986.5. This amounts to $35 per day plus 20 cents per mile both ways. Govt C §68093. The subpoena must advise the witness of the right to request fees and mileage. CCP §2065. Payment of witness fees is not required when the deponent is a party (or officer, director, or managing agent of a party), whose deposition is properly noticed under the discovery statutes. Di Napoli v Superior Court (1967) 252 CA2d 202, 60 CR 394.

On rules for deposition of nonparty deponents by telephone or other remote electronic means, see §10.7.

Examination and cross-examination of deponents proceed as though at trial. CCP §2025.330(d). Thus, when an adverse party's deposition is taken, leading questions are allowed as in cross-examination, and counsel for the deponent may conduct a redirect examination on the matters on which the deponent testifies. Evid C §776(b)(1). Under CCP §2025.610, once a party has taken a person's deposition on due notice to all other parties, subject to specified exceptions, neither that party nor any other party who received notice of the first deposition may take that same person's deposition again, unless the court for good cause grants leave to do so.

See also CCP §2025.320 and §11.7 for rules on goods and services offered by a deposition officer to a party or a party's attorney.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.9 3. Inspecting Documents at Deposition

The deposing party may compel by subpoena duces tecum (under CCP §2020.020) the production by a nonparty witness of books, documents, or other tangible items at the deposition. A party to the action may be compelled to produce such materials by service of a notice on the party's attorney, specifying the materials to be produced (CCP §2025.280); use of a subpoena duces tecum is not required. An affidavit showing good cause for production is not necessary for a deposition subpoena, although it is required for a trial subpoena. CCP §§1985, 2020.510(a)-(b).

A subpoena duces tecum may be used to obtain the consumer or employment records of a party. CCP §§1985.3, 1985.6. The party giving the subpoena must also serve on the "consumer" or "employee" a notice of the deposition, a privacy notification, and a copy of the deposition subpoena. CCP §2025.240(b). A court has an inherent right to quash such a subpoena or may modify or limit its effect. CCP §1987.1. A deposition subpoena with a request for either consumer or employee records must be scheduled for a date that is at least 20 days after the issuance of the subpoena. CCP §2025.270(c). The deposition subpoena is directed to the witness holding the records and must be served with proof of service of the notice to the consumer or employee or a consumer's or employee's written authorization to release personal records. CCP §2020.510(c)-(d). See CCP §§1985.3(c), (e), 1985.6(c), (e).

An attorney of record in California is authorized to issue a subpoena duces tecum without court seal or other assistance of the court clerk, except in cases in which Govt C §§68097.1-68097.10 (special procedure for witnesses who are peace officers or firemen) apply. CCP §1985.

§11.10 4. Taking Deposition Before Action Filed

Under a procedure rarely used in civil actions generally, a deposition may be taken before an unlawful detainer action is filed, to perpetuate the testimony of a witness or a party. CCP §§2035.010-2035.060. Under CCP §§2035.010-2035.020, a party may use oral and written depositions; inspection of documents, things, and places; and physical and mental examinations to perpetuate the testimony of a witness or party or to preserve evidence before an action is filed. To invoke this procedure, the person taking the deposition must file a verified petition in the superior court of the county of residence of at least one expected adverse party. CCP §2035.030(a). Under CCP §2035.030(b)-(c), the petition must state the following:

- That the petitioner expects to be a party to an action;
- That the petitioner is presently unable to bring the action;
- The subject matter of the expected action, and the petitioner's involvement in it;
- The type of discovery methods the petitioner wishes to use;
- The facts the petitioner wishes to establish;
- The reasons the petitioner wishes to perpetuate, or preserve, the facts;
- The names of the expected adverse parties; and
- The names of the persons from whom discovery is sought, and the substance of the information from each.

Either party might invoke this procedure when the action is not yet ready for filing but there is a need to perpetuate testimony. For example, if an occupant may not be available after the action is filed, the landlord's attorney might wish to examine him or her during the notice period to uncover possible defenses to the action. A tenant who is served with a termination notice, and who intends to remain on the premises and contest the unlawful detainer action, might also wish to undertake discovery without waiting for the notice period to expire. This procedure might be particularly useful for mobilehome tenancies, which have longer notice periods. See §6.74.

Invoking CCP §§2035.010-2035.060, a party could immediately petition the superior court for an order permitting the taking of the expected adverse party's deposition before the unlawful detainer action is filed. The deposing party could inquire about matters expected to be at issue in the case (e.g., the identity of occupants and the nature of their claims to occupancy), facts that later may be difficult to prove, and the existence of possible defenses (e.g., retaliatory motives, racial discrimination). The court will make an order authorizing all or part of the discovery if it determines that it may prevent a failure of or delay in justice. CCP §2035.050(a). Because the unlawful detainer action will be a "summary proceeding" (see §9.6), it is arguable that depositions should be taken as early as possible to prevent a "delay of justice."

PRACTICE TIP: Taking the tenant's deposition before filing the lawsuit may be desirable when the municipal or limited jurisdiction court that hears the action is expected to deny or limit discovery rights because of the "summary nature" of the eviction. By putting the opponent on the defensive, this tactic may result in the disclosure of information that he or she would rather not have revealed. The procedure also might facilitate resolution of the dispute without litigation, by disclosing the strengths and weaknesses of the parties' respective positions.

One possible problem with the procedure in unlawful detainer actions is the requirement under CCP §2035.040 that the petition be served on the adverse party at least 20 days before the date of the hearing on the petition, which may be too long to permit effective use of the procedure in a case based on a 3-day notice. Although the statute does not indicate whether an order shortening time is permitted, CCP §1005 expressly authorizes the court to shorten time for service of a written notice of motion. Because a CCP §§2035.010-2035.060 petition is functionally identical to a written motion, the court arguably has authority to shorten time for service on a showing of good cause.

E. Written Interrogatories

1. Nature, Purpose, and Use

§11.11 a. Advantages; Disadvantages

Written interrogatories under CCP §§2030.010-2030.410 are often a useful discovery tool in unlawful detainer actions. They are inexpensive and can be used to discover the opponent's factual and legal contentions, the existence and location of potential witnesses and documents, and names for taking depositions if the opponent is a corporation. Despite expedited trial-setting in unlawful detainer cases (see §11.41), interrogatories may be used under the procedures described in §§11.17-11.19. The disadvantages of written interrogatories include a lack of spontaneity, the fact that opposing counsel (and not the party) prepares the answers, and the fact that they cannot be directed to nonparties. On the advantages and disadvantages of depositions and interrogatories, see California Civil Discovery Practice, chaps 6-7 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.12 b. Depositions on Written Questions Distinguished

Written interrogatories to adverse parties should not be confused with depositions on written questions under CCP §§2028.010-2028.080. For these depositions (which are rarely used), a regular deposition hearing is held; the deposition officer reads the questions to the deponent, and records his or her answers. When written interrogatories are propounded under CCP §§2030.010-2030.410, no hearing need be held. Written interrogatories may be propounded only to parties, however, while the procedure for deposition on written questions applies to any witness. See CCP §§2028.040-2028.080. See also California Civil Discovery Practice, chap 6 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.13 c. Scope and Use Restrictions

Under CCP §2030.010(a), interrogatories may be propounded within the scope fixed by CCP §§2017.010-2017.740 and subject to the restrictions of CCP §§2019.010-2019.210. Under CCP §§2017.010-2017.740, discovery may be obtained on any unprivileged matter that is relevant to the subject matter of the pending action or of any motion in the action if the matter is itself admissible or appears reasonably calculated to lead to discovery of admissible evidence. Answers to interrogatories may be used only against the party who answered the interrogatories, as far as admissible under the rules of evidence, at the trial or any other hearing. CCP §2030.410. A party may propound any number of Judicial Council form interrogatories in addition to special interrogatories. CCP §2030.030. Under CCP §§2033.710-2033.740, the Judicial Council has developed optional form interrogatories for use in unlawful detainer actions. These form interrogatories are reproduced in §11.16.

§11.14 d. Number Generally Limited to 35

Under CCP §2030.030, the number of special interrogatories a party may propound "as a matter of right" to any other party is limited to 35. A supplemental interrogatory may elicit any later acquired information bearing on all answers previously made, twice before the initial trial setting and once again after the initial trial setting, subject to statutory time limits on discovery and discovery motions. CCP §2030.070. An interrogatory may not be made "a continuing one" that imposes a duty on the responding party to supplement an answer with later-acquired information if the earlier answer was correct and complete. CCP §2030.060(g).

Code of Civil Procedure §§2030.040-2030.050 allow a party to exceed the limit of 35 by a prescribed declaration (accompanying the larger number of interrogatories) attesting with specific facts applicable to the lawsuit that the information sought is warranted under the criteria stated in CCP §2030.040 and that none of the interrogatories is being propounded "for any improper purpose … or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation." Bad faith use of this provision may be sanctioned on motion under CCP §§2023.010-2023.040. Code of Civil Procedure §2030.060 expressly outlaws prefaces or instructions and all subparts to interrogatories (except prefaces, instructions, or subparts contained in form sets of interrogatories approved by the Judicial Council; see CCP §§2033.710-2033.740). "Each interrogatory shall be full and complete in and of itself," and a specially prepared interrogatory may not "contain subparts, or a compound, conjunctive, or disjunctive question." CCP §2030.060.

§11.15 e. Considerations When Non-Individual Entities Are Responding

If the party to whom the interrogatories are directed is a public or private corporation, partnership, association, or government agency, one of its officers or agents must sign the response under oath on behalf of that party. Thus, use of interrogatories is particularly appropriate when information is sought from a party that is not an individual, and the identities or capacities of party witnesses for depositions are unknown or difficult to ascertain.

If the officer or agent signing the response is an attorney, that party waives any lawyer-client privilege and any protection for work product prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial during any later discovery from the attorney concerning the identity of the sources of the information in the response. CCP §2030.250(b).

FORM INTERROGATORIES—UNLAWFUL DETAINER Asking Party: Answering Party: Set No.:	CASE NUMBER:

Sec. 1. Instructions to All Parties

(a) These are general instructions. For time limitations, requirements for service on other parties, and other details, see Code of Civil Procedure sections 2030.010-2030.410 and the cases construing those sections.

(b) These interrogatories do not change existing law relating to interrogatories nor do they affect an answering party's right to assert any privilege or objection.

Sec. 2. Instructions to the Asking Party

(a) These interrogatories are designed for optional use in unlawful detainer proceedings.

(b) There are restrictions that generally limit the number of interrogatories that may be asked and the form and use of the interrogatories. For details, read Code of Civil Procedure sections 2030.030–2030.070.

(c) In determining whether to use these or any interrogatories, you should be aware that abuse can be punished by sanctions, including fines and attorney fees. See Code of Civil Procedure section 128.7.

(d) Check the box next to each interrogatory that you want the answering party to answer. Use care in choosing those interrogatories that are applicable to the case.

(e) Additional interrogatories may be attached.

Sec. 3. Instructions to the Answering Party

(a) An answer or other appropriate response must be given to each interrogatory checked by the asking party. Failure to respond to these interrogatories properly can be punished by sanctions, including contempt proceedings, fine, attorneys fees, and the loss of your case. See Code of Civil Procedure sections 128.7 and 2030.300.

(b) As a general rule, within five days after you are served with these interrogatories, you must serve your responses on the asking party and serve copies of your responses on all other parties to the action who have appeared. See Code of Civil Procedure sections 2030.260–2030.270 for details.

(c) Each answer must be as complete and straightforward as the information reasonably available to you permits. If an interrogatory cannot be answered completely, answer it to the extent possible.

(d) If you do not have enough personal knowledge to fully answer an interrogatory, say so, but make a reasonable and good faith effort to get the information by asking other persons or organizations, unless the information is equally available to the asking party.

(e) Whenever an interrogatory may be answered by referring to a document, the document may be attached as an exhibit to the response and referred to in the response. If the document has more than one page, refer to the page and section where the answer to the interrogatory can be found.

(f) Whenever an address and telephone number for the same person are requested in more than one interrogatory, you are required to furnish them in answering only the first interrogatory asking for that information.

(g) Your answers to these interrogatories must be verified, dated, and signed. You may wish to use the following form at the end of your answers:

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing answers are true and correct.

(DATE) _____ (SIGNATURE) _____

Sec. 4. Definitions

Words in BOLDFACE CAPITALS in these interrogatories are defined as follows:

(a) PERSON includes a natural person, firm, association, organization, partnership, business, trust, corporation, or public entity.

(b) PLAINTIFF includes any PERSON who seeks recovery of the RENTAL UNIT whether acting as an individual or on someone else's behalf and includes all such PERSONS if more than one.

(c) LANDLORD includes any PERSON who offered the RENTAL UNIT for rent and any PERSON on whose behalf the RENTAL UNIT was offered for rent and their successors in interest. LANDLORD includes all PERSONS who managed the PROPERTY while defendant was in possession.

(d) RENTAL UNIT is the premises PLAINTIFF seeks to recover.

(e) PROPERTY is the building or parcel (including common areas) of which the RENTAL UNIT is a part. (For example, if PLAINTIFF is seeking to recover possession of apartment number 12 of a 20-unit building, the building is the PROPERTY and apartment 12 is the RENTAL UNIT. If PLAINTIFF seeks possession of cottage number 3 in a five-cottage court or complex, the court or complex is the PROPERTY and cottage 3 is the RENTAL UNIT.)

(f) DOCUMENT means a writing, as defined in Evidence Code section 250, and includes the original or a copy of handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photographing, electronically stored information, and every other means of recording upon any tangible thing and form of communicating or representation, including letters, words, pictures, sounds, or symbols, or combinations of them.

(g) NOTICE TO QUIT includes the original or copy of any notice mentioned in Code of Civil Procedure section 1161 or Civil Code section 1946, including a 3-day notice to pay rent and quit the RENTAL UNIT, a 3-day notice to perform conditions or covenants or quit, a 3-day notice to quit, and a 30-day notice of termination.

(h) ADDRESS means the street address, including the city, state, and zip code.

(b) the date of the report;
(c) the name of the PERSON who reported;
(d) the name of the PERSON to whom the report was made;
(e) what action was taken as a result of the report;
(f) the identity of all DOCUMENTS evidencing the report and for each state the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has each DOCUMENT.

☐ 71.8 Does the complaint allege violation of a term of a rental agreement or lease (other than nonpayment of rent)? If so, for each covenant:
(a) identify the covenant breached;
(b) state the facts supporting the allegation of a breach;
(c) state the names, ADDRESSES, and telephone numbers of all PERSONS who have knowledge of the facts;
(d) identify all DOCUMENTS that support the facts and state the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has each DOCUMENT.

☐ 71.9 Does the complaint allege that the defendant has been using the RENTAL UNIT for an illegal purpose? If so, for each purpose:
(a) identify the illegal purpose;
(b) state the facts supporting the allegations of illegal use;
(c) state the names, ADDRESSES, and telephone numbers of all PERSONS who have knowledge of the facts;
(d) identify all DOCUMENTS that support the facts and state the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has each DOCUMENT.

[Additional interrogatories on this subject may be found in sections 75.0, 78.0, 79.0, and 80.0.]

72.0 Service

[If a defense is based on allegations that the NOTICE TO QUIT was defectively served, then either party may ask any applicable question in this section.]

☐ 72.1 Does defendant contend (or base a defense or make any allegations) that the NOTICE TO QUIT was defectively served? If the answer is "no", do not answer interrogatories 72.2 through 72.3.

☐ 72.2 Does PLAINTIFF contend that the NOTICE TO QUIT referred to in the complaint was served? If so, state:
(a) the kind of notice;
(b) the date and time of service;
(c) the manner of service;
(d) the name and ADDRESS of the person who served it:
(e) a description of any DOCUMENT or conversation between defendant and the person who served the notice.

☐ 72.3 Did any person receive the NOTICE TO QUIT referred to in the complaint? If so, for each copy of each notice state:
(a) the name of the person who received it;
(b) the kind of notice;
(c) how it was delivered;
(d) the date received;
(e) where it was delivered;
(f) the identity of all DOCUMENTS evidencing the notice and for each state the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has the DOCUMENT.

73.0 Malicious Holding Over

[If a defendant denies allegations that defendant's continued possession is malicious, then either party may ask any applicable question in this section. Additional questions in section 75.0 may also be applicable.]

☐ 73.1 If any rent called for by the rental agreement is unpaid, state the reasons and the facts upon which the reasons are based.

☐ 73.2 Has defendant made attempts to secure other premises since the service of the NOTICE TO QUIT or since the service of the summons and complaint? If so, for each attempt:
(a) state all facts indicating the attempt to secure other premises;
(b) state the names, ADDRESSES, and telephone numbers of all PERSONS who have knowledge of the facts;
(c) identify all DOCUMENTS that support the facts and state the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has each DOCUMENT.

☐ 73.3 State the facts upon which PLAINTIFF bases the allegation of malice.

74.0 Rent Control and Eviction Control

☐ 74.1 Is there an ordinance or other local law in this jurisdiction which limits the right to evict tenants? If your answer is no, you need not answer sections 74.2 through 74.6.

☐ 74.2 For the ordinance or other local law limiting the right to evict tenants, state:
(a) the title or number of the law;
(b) the locality.

☐ 74.3 Do you contend that the RENTAL UNIT is exempt from the eviction provisions of the ordinance or other local law identified in section 74.2? If so, state the facts upon which you base your contention.

☐ 74.4 Is this proceeding based on allegations of a need to recover the RENTAL UNIT for use of the LANDLORD or the landlord's relative? If so, for each intended occupant state:
(a) the name;
(b) the residence ADDRESSES from three years ago to the present;
(c) the relationship to the LANDLORD;
(d) all the intended occupant's reasons for occupancy;
(e) all rental units on the PROPERTY that were vacated within 60 days before and after the date the NOTICE TO QUIT was served.

☐ 74.5 Is the proceeding based on an allegation that the LANDLORD wishes to remove the RENTAL UNIT from residential use temporarily or permanently (for example, to rehabilitate, demolish, renovate, or convert)? If so, state:
(a) each reason for removing the RENTAL UNIT from residential use;
(b) what physical changes and renovation will be made to the RENTAL UNIT;
(c) the date the work is to begin and end;
(d) the number, date, and type of each permit for the change or work;

(e) the identity of each DOCUMENT evidencing the intended activity (for example, blueprints, plans, applications for financing, construction contracts) and the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has each DOCUMENT.

☐ 74.6 Is the proceeding based on any ground other than those stated in sections 74.4 and 74.5? If so, for each:
(a) state each fact supporting or opposing the ground;
(b) state the names, ADDRESSES, and telephone numbers of all PERSONS who have knowledge of the facts;
(c) identify all DOCUMENTS evidencing the facts and state the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has each DOCUMENT.

75.0 Breach of Warranty to Provide Habitable Premises

[If plaintiff alleges nonpayment of rent and defendant bases his defense on allegations of implied or express breach of warranty to provide habitable residential premises, then either party may ask any applicable question in this section.]

☐ 75.1 Do you know of any conditions in violation of state or local building codes, housing codes, or health codes, conditions of dilapidation, or other conditions in need of repair in the RENTAL UNIT or on the PROPERTY that affected the RENTAL UNIT at any time defendant has been in possession? If so, state:
(a) the type of condition;
(b) the kind of corrections or repairs needed;
(c) how and when you learned of these conditions;
(d) how these conditions were caused;
(e) the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has caused these conditions.

☐ 75.2 Have any corrections, repairs, or improvements been made to the RENTAL UNIT since the RENTAL UNIT was rented to defendant? If so, for each correction, repair, or improvement state:
(a) a description giving the nature and location;
(b) the date;
(c) the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who made the repairs or improvements;
(d) the cost;
(e) the identity of any DOCUMENT evidencing the repairs or improvements;
(f) if a building permit was issued, state the issuing agencies and the permit number of your copy.

☐ 75.3 Did defendant or any other PERSON during 36 months before the NOTICE TO QUIT was served or during defendant's possession of the RENTAL UNIT notify the LANDLORD or his agent or employee about the condition of the RENTAL UNIT or PROPERTY? If so, for each written or oral notice state:
(a) the substance;
(b) who made it;
(c) when and how it was made;
(d) the name and ADDRESS of each PERSON to whom it was made;
(e) the name and ADDRESS of each person who knows about it;
(f) the identity of each DOCUMENT evidencing the notice and the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has it;
(g) the response made to the notice;
(h) the efforts made to correct the conditions;
(i) whether the PERSON who gave notice was an occupant of the PROPERTY at the time of the complaint.

☐ 75.4 During the period beginning 36 months before the NOTICE TO QUIT was served to the present, was the RENTAL UNIT or PROPERTY (including other rental units) inspected for dilapidations or defective conditions by a representative of any governmental agency? If so, for each inspection state:
(a) the date;
(b) the reason;
(c) the name of the governmental agency;
(d) the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each inspector;
(e) the identity of each DOCUMENT evidencing each inspection and the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has it.

☐ 75.5 During the period beginning 36 months before the NOTICE TO QUIT was served to the present, did PLAINTIFF or LANDLORD receive a notice or other communication regarding the condition of the RENTAL UNIT or PROPERTY (including other rental units) from a governmental agency? If so, for each notice or communication state:
(a) the date received;
(b) the identity of all parties;
(c) the substance of the notice or communication;
(d) the identity of each DOCUMENT evidencing the notice or communication and the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has it.

☐ 75.6 Was there any corrective action taken in response to the inspection or notice or communication identified in sections 75.4 and 75.5? If so, for each:
(a) identify the notice or communication;
(b) identify the condition;
(c) describe the corrective action;
(d) identify each DOCUMENT evidencing the corrective action and the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has it.

☐ 75.7 Has the PROPERTY been appraised for sale or loan during the period beginning 36 months before the NOTICE TO QUIT was served to the present? If so, for each appraisal state:
(a) the date;
(b) the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of the appraiser;
(c) the purpose of the appraisal;
(d) the identity of each DOCUMENT evidencing the appraisal and the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has it.

☐ 75.8 Was any condition requiring repair or correction at the PROPERTY or RENTAL UNIT caused by defendent or other occupant of the RENTAL UNIT or their guests? If so, state:
(a) the type and location of condition;
(b) the kind of corrections or repairs needed;
(c) how and when you learned of these conditions;
(d) how and when these conditions were caused;
(e) the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who caused these conditions;

(f) the identity of each DOCUMENT evidencing the repair (or correction) and the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has it.

[See also section 71.0 for additional questions.]

76.0 Waiver, Change, Withdrawal, or Cancellation of Notice to Quit

[If a defense is based on waiver, change, withdrawal, or cancellation of the NOTICE TO QUIT, then either party may ask any applicable question in this section.]

☐ 76.1 Did the PLAINTIFF or LANDLORD or anyone acting on his or her behalf do anything which is alleged to have been a waiver, change, withdrawal, or cancellation of the NOTICE TO QUIT? If so:
(a) state the facts supporting this allegation;
(b) state the names, ADDRESSES, and telephone numbers of all PERSONS who have knowledge of these facts;
(c) identify each DOCUMENT that supports the facts and state the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has it.

☐ 76.2 Did the PLAINTIFF or LANDLORD accept rent which covered a period after the date for vacating the RENTAL UNIT as specified in the NOTICE TO QUIT? If so:
(a) state the facts;
(b) state the names, ADDRESSES, and telephone numbers of all PERSONS who have knowledge of the facts;
(c) identify each DOCUMENT that supports the facts and state the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has it.

77.0 Retaliation and Arbitrary Discrimination

[If a defense is based on retaliation or arbitrary discrimination, then either party may ask any applicable question in this section.]

☐ 77.1 State all reasons that the NOTICE TO QUIT was served or that defendant's tenancy was not renewed and for each reason:
(a) state all facts supporting PLAINTIFF'S decision to terminate or not renew defendant's tenancy;
(b) state the names, ADDRESSES, and telephone numbers of all PERSONS who have knowledge of the facts;
(c) identify all DOCUMENTS that support the facts and state the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has it.

78.0 Nonperformance of the Rental Agreement by Landlord

[If a defense is based on nonperformance of the rental agreement by the LANDLORD or someone acting on the LANDLORD'S behalf, then either puffy may ask any ap - plicable question in this section.]

☐ 78.1 Did the LANDLORD or anyone acting on the LANDLORD'S behalf agree to make repairs, alterations, or improvements at any time or provide services to the PROPERTY or RENTAL UNIT? If so, for each agreement state:
(a) the substance of the agreement;
(b) when it was made;
(c) whether it was written or oral;
(d) by whom and to whom;
(e) the name and ADDRESS of each person who knows about it;
(f) whether all promised repairs, alterations, or improvements were completed or services provided;
(g) the reasons for any failure to perform;
(h) the identity of each DOCUMENT evidencing the agreement or promise and the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has it.

☐ 78.2 Has PLAINTIFF or LANDLORD or any resident of the PROPERTY ever committed disturbances or interfered with the quiet enjoyment of the RENTAL UNIT (including, for example, noise, acts which threaten the loss of title to the property or loss of financing, etc.)? If so, for each disturbance or interference, state:
(a) a description of each act;
(b) the date of each act;
(c) the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who acted;
(d) the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who witnessed each act and any DOCUMENTS evidencing the person's knowledge;
(e) what action was taken by the PLAINTIFF or LANDLORD to end or lessen the disturbance or interference.

79.0 Offer of Rent by Defendant

[If a defense is based on an offer of rent by a defendant which was refused, then either party may ask any applicable question in this section.]

☐ 79.1 Has defendant or anyone acting on the defendant's behalf offered any payments to PLAINTIFF which PLAINTIFF refused to accept? If so, for each offer state:
(a) the amount;
(b) the date;
(c) purpose of offer;
(d) the manner of the offer;
(e) the identity of the person making the offer;
(f) the identity of the person refusing the offer;
(g) the date of the refusal;
(h) the reasons for the refusal.

80.0 Deduction from Rent for Necessary Repairs

[If a defense to payment of rent or damages is based on claim of retaliatory eviction, then either party may ask any applicable question in this section. Additional questions in section 75.0 may also be applicable.]

☐ 80.1 Does defendant claim to have deducted from rent any amount which was withheld to make repairs after communication to the LANDLORD of the need for the repairs? If the answer is "no", do not answer interrogatories 80.2 through 80.6.

☐ 80.2 For each condition in need of repair for which a deduction was made, state:
(a) the nature of the condition;
(b) the location;
(c) the date the condition was discovered by defendant;
(d) the date the condition was first known by LANDLORD or PLAINTIFF;

(e) the dates and methods of each notice to the LANDLORD or PLAINTIFF of the condition;
(f) the response or action taken by the LANDLORD or PLAINTIFF to each notification;
(g) the cost to remedy the condition and how the cost was determined;
(h) the identity of any bids obtained for the repairs and any DOCUMENTS evidencing the bids.

☐ 80.3 Did LANDLORD or PLAINTIFF fail to respond within a reasonable time after receiving a communication of a need for repair? If so, for each communication state:
(a) the date it was made;
(b) how it was made;
(c) the response and date;
(d) why the delay was unreasonable.

☐ 80.4 Was there an insufficient period specified or actually allowed between the time of notification and the time repairs were begun by defendant to allow LANDLORD or PLAINTIFF to make the repairs? If so, state all facts on which the claim of insufficiency is based.

☐ 80.5 Does PLAINTIFF contend that any of the items for which rent deductions were taken were not allowable under law? If so, for each item state all reasons and facts on which you base your contention.

☐ 80.6 Has defendant vacated or does defendant anticipate vacating the RENTAL UNIT because repairs were requested and not made within a reasonable time? If so, state all facts on which defendant justifies having vacated the RENTAL UNIT or anticipates vacating the rental unit.

81.0 Fair Market Rental Value

[If defendant denies PLAINTIFF allegation on the fair market rental value of the RENTAL UNIT, then either party may ask any applicable question in this section. If defendant claims that the fair market rental value is less because of a breach of warranty to provide habitable premises, then either party may also ask any applicable question in section 75.0.]

☐ 81.1 Do you have an opinion on the fair market rental value of the RENTAL UNIT? If so, state:
(a) the substance of your opinion;
(b) the factors upon which the fair market rental value is based;
(c) the method used to calculate the fair market rental value.

☐ 81.2 Has any other PERSON ever expressed to you an opinion on the fair market rental value of the RENTAL UNIT? If so, for each PERSON:
(a) state the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number;
(b) state the substance of the PERSON'S opinion;
(c) describe the conversation or identify all DOCUMENTS in which the PERSON expressed an opinion and state the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who has each DOCUMENT.

☐ 81.3 Do you know of any current violations of state or local building codes, housing codes, or health codes, conditions of delapidation or other conditions in need of repair in the RENTAL UNIT or common areas that have affected the RENTAL UNIT at any time defendant has been in possession? If so, state:
(a) the conditions in need of repair;
(b) the kind of repairs needed;
(c) the name, ADDRESS, and telephone number of each PERSON who caused these conditions.

Comment: The form was revised effective January 1, 2009. The following comments are numbered to correspond to the above numbered interrogatories:

70.1. The responding party should include an objection that preserves the attorney-client privilege.

70.7, 71.6. These interrogatories are subject to objection because the possession of a permit or certificate of occupancy is a matter of public record. They appear to apply only to actions for nonpayment of rent or other breach of contract, which require an enforceable agreement between the landlord and the tenant, setting forth the rent claimed as due or the contract provision claimed to have been violated. At most, the lack of a valid certificate of occupancy would render any rental agreement provisions concerning the subject building illegal and therefore unenforceable.

75.4-75.5. Objection may be raised to these interrogatories on the ground that the information sought may be obtained from public records.

79.1. With the possible exception of cases in which the landlord's good faith or dominant motive is at issue, inquiry into the landlord's refusal of rent after expiration of a notice to pay rent or quit would not reasonably tend to lead to discoverable evidence. Thus, a relevancy objection could be made to the interrogatory. In all other unlawful detainer situations, the landlord must refuse the offer of rent to avoid waiving the notice (see §10.60). Thus, the answer to the interrogatory could not lead to discoverable evidence.

The Judicial Council's form interrogatories are frequently used for the improper purpose of annoying the opposition. Tenants should avoid checking every box on the form. Section 2 of the instructions on the form warns the litigants that sanctions may be imposed for abusing the use of the form.

Landlords should object to specific interrogatories propounded if they bear no relevance to the defenses asserted by the tenant's answer. The preface to many sections of the form states that the interrogatory may be asked if a particular defense is asserted. If no such defense is asserted (or no answer has yet been filed), an objection by the landlord is appropriate. Counsel for landlords should be aware, however, that some form interrogatories may be relevant under the facts of a particular case, even if the specified defense mentioned in the preface to the form interrogatories has not been asserted. Thus, objections should be used carefully.

3. Procedure

§11.17 a. Time for Service and Response

Interrogatories may be served by a defendant at any time. CCP §2030.020(a). A plaintiff in an unlawful detainer may propound interrogatories on a party at any time that is 5 days after service of the summons on (or appearance by) that party, whichever is first. CCP §2030.020(c). Responses to interrogatories are due within 5 days of service, unless the court on a motion lengthens or shortens the time period. CCP §2030.260(b). Additional time under CCP §1013(a) applies, however, if the interrogatories are not personally served. The parties may also agree in writing to extend the time. CCP §2030.270.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.18 b. Answers and Objections to Interrogatories

The interrogatories must be answered in writing under oath, and the answers must be signed. CCP §2030.250. The interrogatories should not be filed with the court. The propounding party must retain the originals of both the interrogatories and the response until 6 months after final disposition of the action. CCP §2030.280.

The responding party should answer the interrogatories fully, as required by CCP §§2030.210-2030.310. In an unlawful detainer proceeding, answers are due within 5 days of the service of the interrogatories, unless on motion of either party, the court has shortened or lengthened the response time. CCP §2030.260(b). Failure to provide adequate information in response to discovery requests is a common ground for the trial court to grant a continuance in an unlawful detainer action. See §11.45.

When answers to interrogatories must be derived from business records, a compilation, abstract, audit, or summary may not exist or may not be in the party's possession or control. If so, the party may state this in the answer, specify records from which the answer may be derived, and afford the party serving the interrogatory reasonable opportunity to (CCP §2030.230):

- Examine, audit, or inspect such records; and
- Make copies, compilations, abstracts, or summaries.

Instead of (or in addition to) an answer to an interrogatory, the responding party may state an objection to the particular interrogatory, and the specific ground for the objection must be set forth clearly in the response. CCP §§2030.210-2030.250. The propounding party has up to 45 days (plus 5 calendar days under CCP §1013 if the response was served by mail) from the date of service of the response (see §8.29 for more details), or any additional period agreed on in writing by the parties, to move for an order compelling a further response. CCP §2030.300. A discovery motion may be made in an unlawful detainer action on 5 days' notice. CCP §1170.8. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration under CCP §2016.040, "showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt" to resolve each issue presented by the motion. CCP §2030.300.

§11.19 c. Protective Orders

After receiving interrogatories, the responding party may move "promptly" for a protective order accompanied by a declaration under CCP §2016.040, "showing a reasonable and good faith attempt" at informal resolution of the dispute. The court may issue a protective order under CCP §2030.090 to prevent or minimize the following effects:

- Exposure of trade secrets or confidential business information;
- Unwarranted annoyance;
- Embarrassment;
- Oppression; or
- Undue burden and expense.

Under CCP §1170.8, such a motion may be heard on 5 days' notice.

F. Inspection of Documents or Property

1. Demands Addressed to a Party

§11.20 a. Making the Demand

Without first obtaining a court order, a party to an action may request any other party to:

- Produce nonprivileged documents, records, papers, and other materials for inspection and copying; and
- Permit entry on designated real property for inspection, measurement, and photography.

CCP §2031.010. This procedure provides only a means of inspecting, copying, or photographing the materials or property. For evidentiary purposes at trial, a proper foundation still must be made through pretrial requests for admissions (regarding the authenticity of the documents), stipulations, or oral testimony. (See §12.17 for discussion of the best evidence rule.) The scope of such an inspection is the same as that of examination on deposition (see §11.9): to discover materials that are relevant to the subject matter of the action or that are reasonably calculated to uncover admissible evidence. CCP §2031.010. Although this procedure is inexpensive, it applies only to parties and not to nonparty witnesses. See CCP §2031.010. For a general discussion of procedures, see California Civil Discovery Practice, chap 8 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

A party and his or her expert may inspect premises open to the public without complying with discovery notice requirements. Pullin v Superior Court (2000) 81 CA4th 1161, 97 CR2d 447.

Under CCP §2016.020, "document" is defined by reference to Evid C §250, which includes e-mail and facsimile transmissions. To make a written demand for inspection, a plaintiff in an unlawful detainer action must wait at least 5 days (or earlier on court order for good cause shown in a motion with or without notice) after service of the summons on (or after the appearance by) the party to whom the demand is directed, whichever occurs first. CCP §2031.020. The demand must specify a reasonable time for inspection that is at least 5 days after service of the demand (plus 5 calendar days under CCP §1013 if service is by mail) unless the court for good cause shown has allowed specification of an earlier date. CCP §2031.030(c)(2).

A party may propound a supplemental demand to inspect any later acquired or discovered documents, tangible things, or land or other property that are in the possession, custody, or control of the party on whom the demand is made, subject to specific restrictions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.21 b. Responding to the Demand

The party on whom the demand was made must respond in writing to the request within 5 days (plus 5 calendar days under CCP §1013 if service is by mail) after service of the request (see §8.29 for more details), unless on motion the court has either extended or shortened the response time (CCP §2031.260(b)) or unless the parties have agreed in writing to extend the date for inspection or response time (CCP §2031.270). The responding party must respond separately to each item or category of items under CCP §2031.210 by:

- Stating that the party will comply with the demand by the date set for inspection under CCP §2031.030(c)(2) (see CCP §2031.220);
- Representing that the party cannot comply (see CCP §2031.230); or
- Objecting in whole or in part, specifying grounds for the objection (see CCP §2031.240).

Under CCP §2031.240(b), the objecting party must particularly identify the items subject to the objection and indicate whether they are subject to attorney-client, work product, or other privileges, risking the possibility that the very information sought to be protected will be divulged. In such situations, the respondent should move for a protective order to allow a special master or the court in camera to determine the validity of the objection.

Under CCP §2031.280(a), documents must be produced either "as they are kept in the usual course of business" or "organized and labeled to correspond with the categories in the demand." The responding party must sign the response under oath unless the response contains only objections. The attorney for the responding party must sign any responses that contain an objection. CCP §2031.250.

Failure to timely respond to a demand waives any objection based on the demand. On motion, however, the court may relieve the party from such a waiver on a showing that the party has served a later response that complies substantially with the response requirement and that the failure to respond was due to mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. CCP §2031.300. If the party fails to respond, the propounding party may on 5 days' notice move for an order compelling response and for a monetary sanction. CCP §§1170.8, 2031.300. Sanctions may be awarded unless that party acted with substantial justification or circumstances make the imposition of sanctions unjust. CCP §2031.300(c). If an inadequate response has been served, the propounding party may move for an order compelling further response; the motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at informal resolution of any issue in the motion. CCP §2031.310. The right to compel further response is waived unless filed within 45 days of service of the response (plus 5 calendar days under CCP §1013 if service was made by mail) (see §8.29 for more details), or on any later date to which the parties have agreed in writing. CCP §2031.310(c).

After receiving a demand for inspection, the responding party may move "promptly" for a protective order (in unlawful detainer actions, may give 5 days' notice of motion under CCP §1170.8), accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at informal resolution of the disputed issues. The court may make a protective order to prevent exposure of trade secrets, unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden and expense. CCP §2031.060(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.22 2. Demands Addressed to a Nonparty

A subpoena duces tecum must be used if documents are in the possession of a nonparty witness. CCP §§1985, 2020.410, 2020.510(b). The demanding party must offer to pay witness and mileage fees under a subpoena duces tecum. Under CCP §1985.6, a subpoena duces tecum may be used, e.g., to obtain employment records of an employee that are maintained by his current or former employer. Such a request however, must be made in accordance with the provisions of CCP §§2020.510(d), 2025.240(b). This section might be invoked if the acts of a landlord's employee are at issue in an unlawful detainer action. In unlawful detainer actions based on criminal activity on the premises, police reports should be subpoenaed at the earliest possible date because of the length of time it takes to produce police records. See §11.9.

G. Requests for Admissions

1. Use and Procedure

§11.23 a. Making the Request

A party to a civil action may serve on any other party a written request for admission of the genuineness of specified documents or of the truth of specified matters of fact, opinion relating to fact, or application of law to fact, and such request may relate to a matter that is in controversy between the parties. CCP §2033.010.

EXAMPLE 1: If a tenant in an unlawful detainer case denies proper service of a termination notice, the landlord may ask the tenant to admit having received the notice on a particular date, and to admit the genuineness of an attached copy of the notice. If the tenant admits receipt of the notice, the landlord need not call the process server as a witness.

EXAMPLE 2: When habitability is at issue, the tenant may ask the landlord to admit that the premises were inspected by the health or building inspector, that an inspection report (attached to the request) was received by the landlord in the ordinary course of business, and that the copy attached is genuine. The tenant might also use requests for admissions to establish that the landlord received notice of defective conditions from the tenant, and that specified repairs were not made.

Requests for admissions narrow the issues in the action, and save time and expense in preparation for trial. They are also useful to establish facts necessary to lay the foundation for admitting relevant evidence, such as obtaining admissions of the authenticity of documents to be admitted into evidence. Evid C §1414; see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 30 (3d ed CJA-CEB 1997). A party requesting an admission of the genuineness of any documents must attach copies of the documents to the requests. CCP §2033.060(g).

Under CCP §2033.030, the number of requests for admissions is limited generally to 35, unless the number is increased by stipulation or court order. There is no similar limit, however, on requests to admit the genuineness of documents. Moreover, a party may request more than 35 admissions by serving a declaration that the larger number is necessary and not for an improper purpose. CCP §2033.050. Unless approved by the Judicial Council, a set of requests for admissions may not include a preface or instructions; no request may have subparts; and each request must be "full and complete in and of itself" and may not be "compound, conjunctive, or disjunctive." CCP §2033.060.

Requests for admissions may be made by a defendant at any time. A plaintiff may make requests for admissions without leave of court at any time after 5 days from service of an unlawful detainer summons or appearance by the defendant, whichever is first, unless the court on a showing of good cause shortens that time on motion with or without notice. CCP §2033.020.

The Judicial Council requests for admissions form (DISC-020) is reprinted in §11.27. Under CCP §2033.710, the Judicial Council is directed to develop and approve optional official form requests for admissions in unlawful detainer actions, but has not yet prepared them. On requests for admissions generally, see California Civil Discovery Practice, chap 9 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.24 b. Responding to the Request

The responding party's responses in an unlawful detainer action are due within 5 days after service of the requests, unless on motion the court has extended or shortened the time for response. CCP §2033.250(b). The parties also may informally agree to extend the time for response, which they must confirm in writing. CCP §2033.260.

After receiving requests for admissions, the responding party may move "promptly" for a protective order accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at informal resolution of the disputed issues. CCP §2033.080(a). The motion may be made on 5 days' notice. CCP §1170.8. The court may make a protective order to prevent exposure of trade secrets or confidential business information, unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden and expense. CCP §2033.080(b).

A party must respond in writing under oath to each separate request. See Steele v Totah (1986) 180 CA3d 545, 225 CR 635 (a party's attorney may not verify responses to requests for admissions; only a party may do so). The response must either answer or object to each specific request. CCP §2033.210(b). Specific grounds must be stated clearly for each objection. CCP §2033.230(b). Each answer must admit any part of each request that is true, deny any part of each request that is untrue, and specify any matter in each request about which the responding party lacks sufficient information or knowledge to determine its truth. CCP §2033.220.

Code of Civil Procedure §2033.270 directs that requests for admissions and responses not be filed with the court, and that the requesting party retain the originals of both the requests and the responses until 6 months after final disposition of the action. Under CCP §2033.410, an admission made by a party in response to a request may not be used against that party for any other purpose or in any other action.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlord counsel should answer the request for admissions as soon as possible to avoid a continuance of the trial based on lack of response to discovery.

NOTE: Pursuant to CCP §2033.420, if a party denies the genuineness of a document or the truth of an admission and it later is proven that the document is genuine or the admission is true, then the party denying such allegations can be subject to the reasonable expenses, including attorney fees, incurred in proving those facts. If, however, the party did not have to submit proof on the truth of a requested admission at trial (e.g., the parties stipulated to liability pretrial), then reasonable expenses and attorney fees are not recoverable. See Stull v Sparrow (2001) 92 CA4th 860, 112 CR2d 239.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.25 c. Consequences of Failure to Respond

Code of Civil Procedure §2033.280(b) provides that if there is no timely response, the requesting party must move for an order to have the unanswered matter deemed admitted. The court must grant the motion unless a proposed response in substantial compliance with CCP §§2033.210-2033.230 is belatedly served on the requesting party before the hearing on the motion. CCP §2033.280(b)-(c). A monetary sanction under CCP §2023.030 must be imposed on the party who failed to serve a timely response, unless that party acted with substantial justification or circumstances make the imposition of sanctions unjust. CCP §§2023.030(a), 2033.280(c).

The requesting party has up to 45 days (plus 5 calendar days under CCP §1013 if the response was served by mail) (see §8.29 for more details), from the date of service of the response, or any additional period agreed on by the parties, to move for an order compelling a further response. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt to resolve any issue presented by the motion. CCP §2033.290. The motion may be made on 5 days' notice. CCP §1170.8.

If a party fails to admit the genuineness of any document or the truth of any matter when requested under CCP §§2033.010-2033.420, and if the requesting party later proves the genuineness of the document or the truth of the matter, the requesting party may move for an award of reasonable expenses incurred in making the proof, including attorney fees. The court must make the award under CCP §2033.420 unless it finds that:

- An objection to a request was sustained, or a response was waived;
- The admission sought was of no substantial importance;
- The party failing to make the admission had reasonable grounds to believe the party would prevail on the matter; or
- There was other good reason for failure to admit.

Reasonable expenses are not awardable unless a party actually proves the genuineness of a document or the truth of a matter in the action. See Stull v Sparrow (2001) 92 CA4th 860, 112 CR2d 239 (party served with requests for admissions, who at first denied but later stipulated before trial not to contest liability, was not subject to sanctions under discovery statute). Proof at trial is not necessary if a matter is established by summary judgment. Barnett v Penske Truck Leasing (2001) 90 CA4th 494, 108 CR2d 821.

§11.26 d. Withdrawing Admission; Relief From Default

Code of Civil Procedure §2033.410 states that any matter admitted in response to a request for admission is conclusively established in the pending action against the party making the admission, unless the court has permitted withdrawal. Withdrawal or amendment of an admission on noticed motion is permitted if (1) the admission was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, and (2) the party who obtained the admission will not be substantially prejudiced. CCP §2033.300.

PRACTICE TIP: It is the opinion of some practitioners that CCP §473 provides independent grounds for withdrawal or amendment of an admission, and for relief from admissions made by default under CCP §2033.280, or at least that the cases decided under CCP §473 may be used to interpret and apply the relief for withdrawal of an admission under CCP §2033.300. See §§13.7-13.9.

INSTRUCTIONS

Requests for admission are written requests by a party to an action requiring that any other party to the action either admit or deny, under oath, the truth of certain facts or the genuineness of certain documents. For information on timing, the number of admissions a party may request from any other party, service of requests and responses, restrictions on the style, format, and scope of requests for admission and responses to requests, and other details, see Code of Civil Procedure sections 94–95, 1013, and 2033.010–2033.420 and the case law relating to those sections.

An answering party should consider carefully whether to admit or deny the truth of facts or the genuineness of documents. With limited exceptions, an answering party will not be allowed to change an answer to a request for admission. There may be penalties if an answering party fails to admit the truth of any fact or the genuineness of any document when requested to do so and the requesting party later proves that the fact is true or that the document is genuine. These penalties may include, among other things, payment of the requesting party's attorney's fees incurred in making that proof.

Unless there is an agreement or a court order providing otherwise, the answering party must respond in writing to requests for admission within 30 days after they are served, or within 5 days after service in an unlawful detainer action. There may be significant penalties if an answering party fails to provide a timely written response to each request for admission. These penalties may include, among other things, an order that the facts in issue are deemed true or that the documents in issue are deemed genuine for purposes of the case.

Answers to Requests for Admission must be given under oath. The answering party should use the following language at the end of the responses:

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing answers are true and correct.

These instructions are only a summary and are not intended to provide complete information about requests for admission. This Requests for Admission form does not change existing law relating to requests for admissions, nor does it affect an answering party's right to assert any privilege or to make any objection.

REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION

You are requested to admit within 30 days after service, or within 5 days after service in an unlawful detainer action, of this Requests for Admission that:

1. ☐ Each of the following facts is true (if more than one, number each fact consecutively):

2. ☐ The original of each of the following documents, copies of which are attached, is genuine (if more than one, number each document consecutively):

H. Discovery Sanctions and Protective Orders

§11.28 1. Punishable Conduct

Under CCP §2023.010, abuses of discovery include, but expressly are not limited to:

(1) Persisting, over objection and without substantial justification, in an attempt to obtain information or materials that are outside the scope of permissible discovery.

(2) Using a discovery method in a manner that does not comply with its specified procedures.

(3) Employing a discovery method in a manner or to an extent that causes unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense.

(4) Failing to respond or submit to an authorized method of discovery.

(5) Making, without substantial justification, an unmeritorious objection to discovery.

(6) Making an evasive response to discovery.

(7) Disobeying a court order to provide discovery.

(8) Making or opposing, unsuccessfully and without substantial justification, a motion to compel or to limit discovery.

(9) Failing to confer in person, by telephone, or by letter with an opposing party or attorney in a reasonable and good faith attempt to resolve informally any dispute concerning discovery, if the section governing a particular discovery motion requires the filing of a declaration stating facts showing that such an attempt has been made.

Despite the outcome of the discovery motion, the court shall impose a monetary sanction and order any party or attorney who fails to meet and confer to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney fees, incurred by anyone as a result of that failure. CCP §2023.020.

§11.29 2. Types of Sanctions

To the extent authorized by any statute governing a particular discovery method, CCP §2023.030 provides that a court (after notice to any affected party, person, or attorney, and after opportunity for a hearing) may impose sanctions against anyone engaging in conduct constituting an abuse of the discovery process. A discovery-related motion for sanctions may be made in an unlawful detainer action on 5 days' notice. CCP §1170.8. The types of sanctions available are:

(a) Monetary sanctions. The court may order that anyone engaging in discovery abuse, or any attorney so advising, pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney fees, incurred by another as a result of that conduct. The court may also impose this sanction on one unsuccessfully asserting that another has engaged in a discovery abuse and on any attorney who so advised. If a statute governing a particular method of discovery authorizes a monetary sanction, the court must impose that sanction unless it finds that the person subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the sanction unjust. CCP §2023.030(a). Further, a violation of CCP §2025.320 by any person may result in a civil penalty of up to $5000. CCP §2025.320(f). See §11.7.

(b) Issue sanctions. The court may order that designated facts be taken as established in the action in accordance with the claim of the party adversely affected by discovery abuse. The court may also by an order prohibit any party engaging in discovery abuse from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses. CCP §2023.030(b).

(c) Evidence sanctions. The court may prohibit any party engaging in discovery abuse from introducing designated matters in evidence. CCP §2023.030(c).

(d) Terminating sanctions. The court may punish the offending party by (CCP §2023.030(d):

- Striking out its pleadings (or parts of them);
- Staying further proceedings initiated by the offending party until it obeys the discovery order;
- Dismissing its action, or any part of its action; or
- Entering a default judgment against it (see Maldonado v Superior Court (2002) 94 CA4th 1390, 1398, 115 CR2d 137).

(e) Contempt sanctions. The court may treat discovery abuse as a contempt of court and order punishment accordingly. CCP §2023.030(e).

The court also has the power to deny a summary judgment motion if, during a continuance period on the motion, the moving party unreasonably obstructs discovery that the opposing party needs to oppose the motion. See CCP §437c(i), cited in §11.39.

A pro bono attorney is entitled to monetary sanctions on a successful discovery motion, even if the attorney does not charge the client for services in connection with the case. See Do v Superior Court (2003) 109 CA4th 1210, 135 CR2d 855. This case is distinguishable from Trope v Katz (1995) 11 C4th 274, 45 CR2d 241, and Argaman v Ratan (1999) 73 CA4th 1173, 86 CR2d 917, cited in §13.28, in which two courts ruled that attorney fees were not properly awarded to an attorney who represents himself or herself in pro per.

NOTE: Decisional law has limited the imposition of some types of sanctions on due process and other constitutionally based grounds. See California Civil Discovery Practice §§15.101, 15.107, 3.10, 3.154 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006). For further discussion of discovery sanctions generally, including cases interpreting and applying sanction statutes, see Civil Discovery, chap 15.

§11.30 3. Protective Orders

The discovery laws (CCP §§2016.010-2036.050) provide ample authority for the granting of protective orders against abusive discovery. See, e.g., CCP §2017.020 (general), §2019.030 (general), §2025.420 (depositions), §2030.090 (interrogatories), §2031.060 (inspection of documents), §2033.080 (requests for admissions), and §2034.250 (exchanges of expert witness information). The parties should move for protective orders whenever the need arises. The scope of discovery should be limited because the triable issues in unlawful detainer actions are limited. Knowles v Robinson (1963) 60 C2d 620, 36 CR 33; Union Oil Co. v Chandler (1970) 4 CA3d 716, 84 CR 756. See §9.8. A court must restrict the frequency or extent of all discovery methods if the selected method of discovery is unduly burdensome or expensive, taking into account the needs of the case, the amount in controversy, and the importance of the issues being litigated. CCP §2019.030(a)(2). A motion for a protective order affecting discovery may be made in an unlawful detainer action on 5 days' notice. CCP §1170.8.

For motions to compel responses and protective orders that may be made under specific methods of discovery, see California Civil Discovery Practice §§15.30-15.58, 15.59-15.84 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

IV. MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

A. Nature and Purpose

§11.31 1. Granted If No Triable Issue of Material Fact

A tenant or landlord who wishes to end the unlawful detainer action before trial may move for summary judgment, on the respective ground that the action has no merit or that there is no defense to it. CCP §§437c(a), 1170.7. The purpose of the procedure is to determine whether a trial is necessary to resolve the dispute. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 107 CR2d 841. The motion should be granted if the papers submitted show that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law because there is no triable issue of material fact. CCP §437c(c). If none exists, summary judgment is granted as a means of expediting litigation and avoiding unnecessary trials. Martens v Winder (1961) 191 CA2d 143, 149, 12 CR 413.

Summary judgment in unlawful detainer actions must be granted or denied under CCP §437c on the same basis as for summary judgment motions in other civil actions. CCP §1170.7. Summary judgment cuts off the losing party's right to a trial. The motion should not be granted if there is any doubt whether a triable issue of fact exists. See Podolsky v First Healthcare Corp. (1996) 50 CA4th 632, 642, 58 CR2d 89; Martens v Winder, supra. "Summary judgment is a severe remedy which is to be granted with caution." Paper Savers, Inc. v Nacsa (1996) 51 CA4th 1090, 1094, 59 CR2d 547. When denying a motion for summary judgment, the court must in its order refer specifically to evidence establishing a triable controversy. CCP §437c(g); Young v Superior Court (1986) 179 CA3d 28, 224 CR 405.

Summary judgment is also appropriate when there are no disputed facts, and the sole question before the court is one of law. In such cases, it is the duty of the trial court to hear and decide the disputed legal issues. Varni Bros. Corp. v Wine World, Inc. (1995) 35 CA4th 880, 887, 41 CR2d 740. Even if the facts are undisputed, but conflicting inferences may be drawn from them, the motion must be denied. Anderson v Metalclad Insulation Corp. (1999) 72 CA4th 284, 85 CR2d 331. For further discussion of motions for summary judgment, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 36 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

In civil actions generally, under CCP §437c(f)(1), a party may also move for summary adjudication of issues (sometimes erroneously called "partial summary judgment"), if granting the motion would completely dispose of a cause of action, an affirmative defense, a claim for damages, or an issue of duty.

Code of Civil Procedure §1170.7 does not mention motions for summary adjudication. Rather than a reference to motions "under CCP §437c," it uses the phrase "summary judgment." Because the amount of work to be performed by each side and by the court in evaluating a summary judgment motion is virtually the same as for summary adjudication of issues, judicial economy would favor allowing summary adjudication on one or more issues, at least if made in conjunction with and as an alternative to a motion for summary judgment.

PRACTICE TIP: In making or opposing a motion for summary adjudication of issues, counsel should be prepared to argue whether the policies in creating a 5-day noticed motion for summary judgment, capable of completely ending an action, also justify a motion for summary adjudication, that could eliminate numerous time-consuming issues from trial but would not eliminate the trial. Summary adjudication may be useful to a landlord's attorney if a tenant has pleaded an affirmative defense that is inapplicable or irrelevant to the grounds for the eviction, depending on the benefit to be derived from the cost of such a motion.

2. Burden of Proof

a. Plaintiff as Moving Party

§11.32 (1) Statutory Amendment

Under 1992 amendments to CCP §437c, the California legislature adopted in part the federal standard for allocating the burden of proof in motions for summary judgment. Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 107 CR2d 841. The result is that in some instances the opposing party rather than the moving party will bear the burden of proof. A plaintiff moving for summary judgment, for example, must prove each element of the cause of action on which summary judgment or summary adjudication is sought. After the plaintiff establishes its prima facie case, the burden shifts to the defendant to show the existence of one or more disputed material facts on that cause of action, or a defense to it. CCP §437c(p)(1). A moving party plaintiff need not negate the defenses raised by the other party's initial pleadings. Compare Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 853, 107 CR2d 841, and Montrose Chem. Corp. v Superior Court (1993) 6 C4th 287, 301 n4, 24 CR2d 467, with Nymark v Heart Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1991) 231 CA3d 1089, 1094, 283 CR 53 (decided before 1992 amendments to CCP §437c).

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid the additional time and expense of trial, landlord attorneys may want to consider filing summary judgment motions when frivolous answers are filed by pro per defendants. Failure to respond to the summary judgment motion will likely result in judgment being entered in favor of the plaintiff.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.33 (2) Amendment Ambiguous

The language in CCP §437c(p)(1), which shifts the burden of proof to the defendant after a plaintiff meets the initial burden, is ambiguous. One interpretation is that once the moving-party plaintiff makes a prima facie showing on one or more causes of action, the opposing defendant must show either that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists on each of the subject causes of action, or that a triable issue of material fact exists on one or more applicable defenses. (Merely showing that there are disputed facts on defenses raised by the pleadings, however, cannot by itself overcome plaintiff's prima facie case).

Another (more likely) interpretation is that once the plaintiff meets the necessary burden, the opposing defendant must either show that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists on each of the subject causes of action, or make a prima facie showing on one or more applicable defenses. In view of the acknowledged intent of the legislature not to require a plaintiff to disprove any defenses in plaintiff's moving papers (see Montrose Chem. Corp. v Superior Court (1993) 6 C4th 287, 301 n4, 24 CR2d 467), the second interpretation is logically more consistent with that intent. Implicitly, once the opposing defendant firmly establishes each element of one or more applicable defenses, the motion must be denied, even if the moving-party plaintiff were to controvert the defenses in reply papers (i.e., show that a triable issue exists on those defenses), but this result was not addressed in the amendment.

PRACTICE TIP: The supreme court did not address this aspect of an opposing defendant's burden in Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 107 CR2d 841, because it was hearing the appeal of a defendant's (rather than a plaintiff's) motion for summary judgment. Until the courts or the legislature clarify this issue, counsel representing a defendant should submit in opposing documents prima facie proof of at least one (but preferably each and every) defense necessary to defeat each cause of action on which the summary judgment motion is based. Also, the defendant should raise all triable issues of material fact on the elements of those causes of action.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.34 b. Defendant as Moving Party

A defendant moving for summary judgment has the initial burden of showing either that a cause of action has no merit or that there is a "complete defense" to it. Once the defendant meets that burden, the burden shifts to the plaintiff to show that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists on that cause of action or defense. CCP §437c(p)(2). See Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 849, 107 CR2d 841.

A defendant moving for summary judgment or summary adjudication, by attacking a specific cause of action in the complaint, may meet its initial burden by proving that the cause of action has no merit because an element of it cannot be established or because there is a complete defense to it. See Saelzler v Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 C4th 763, 107 CR2d 617. See also Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 854, 107 CR2d 841 (defendant may use plaintiff's responses to discovery or other evidence to show plaintiff does not possess, and cannot reasonably obtain, necessary evidence to support claim); Scheiding v Dinwiddie Constr. Co. (1999) 69 CA4th 64, 81 CR2d 360 (plaintiff had no duty to volunteer information that was not requested in discovery).

The burden on a defendant moving for summary judgment based on an affirmative defense is heavier than the burden to show that a cause of action has no merit. Instead of submitting evidence "to negate a single element of the plaintiff's cause of action, or offering evidence such as vague or insufficient discovery responses," the defendant must show that undisputed facts support each element of the affirmative defense. Anderson v Metalclad Insulation Corp. (1999) 72 CA4th 284, 289, 85 CR2d 331; Bacon v Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1997) 53 CA4th 854, 62 CR2d 16.

The manner in which a party's factually insufficient discovery responses may be used against that party in motions for summary judgment is discussed in Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co., supra. See also California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 36 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

EXAMPLE: A tenant moving for summary judgment under the Aguilar standard might meet the initial burden by submitting the landlord's answer to an interrogatory, in which the landlord fails to present facts showing that the tenant breached the rental agreement. If the landlord then fails to submit declarations showing that the tenant breached the rental agreement, summary judgment should be entered for the tenant.

Of course, the tenant might instead take the more traditional approach, attaching to the motion a declaration by the tenant showing that he or she did not breach the rental agreement. If the landlord fails to submit declarations showing that the tenant did in fact breach the rental agreement, summary judgment should be entered for the tenant. On the similarities and differences between the burden of proof for a summary judgment motion and that which must be carried at trial, see Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co., supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.35 3. Oral Testimony

The reference in CCP §437c(c) to the motion's being decided on "all the papers submitted" has been interpreted ordinarily to bar oral testimony at summary judgment hearings. Spencer v Hibernia Bank (1960) 186 CA2d 702, 717, 9 CR 867. Although Cal Rules of Ct 3.1351(b) (see §11.37) allows opposition to the motion and any reply to opposition to be made orally at the time of the summary judgment hearing in an unlawful detainer action, the rule may not be enough to assure a fair trial for unrepresented defendants who unsuccessfully oppose the motion. Late-entering counsel should file a prompt motion for relief from summary judgment under CCP §473, accompanied by competent declarations raising one or more triable issues of fact on some or all of the moving party's issues. On relief from default generally under CCP §473, see §§13.7-13.14.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Hearing Procedures; Deadlines for Filing and Service

§11.36 1. 5-day Notice of Motion

Under CCP §1170.7, either party may make a motion for summary judgment in an unlawful detainer action, any time after the answer is filed, by giving 5 days' notice to the opposing party. This provision drastically shortens the usual time limits. For most civil actions, CCP §437c(a) provides that the motion must be scheduled with a minimum of 75 days' notice, heard at least 30 days before trial, and filed no earlier than 60 days after the general appearance of the party against whom the motion is directed. Code of Civil Procedure §437c(r), however, makes CCP §437c(a) inapplicable to unlawful detainer actions. On grounds for continuances, see §11.37.

California Rules of Court 3.1350-3.1354 set format and other rules on supporting and opposing papers and objections to evidence specifically in summary judgment motions. In other respects, motions for summary judgment are governed by the uniform rules applicable to law and motion generally. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1100-3.1362. For discussion of the substantive and evidentiary requirements of supporting and opposing papers, see §§11.38-11.39.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.37 2. Filing and Serving Opposition

The usual requirement of CCP §437c(b)(2), that opposition papers to a motion for summary judgment be filed 14 days before the hearing, is made inapplicable to unlawful detainer actions by CCP §437c(r). Instead, Cal Rules of Ct 3.1351 governs the time periods and methods for opposing a summary judgment motion and replying to opposition in an unlawful detainer action.

Opposition to the motion and any reply to opposition may be made orally at the time of the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1351(b). Alternatively, if a party seeks to have the court consider its opposition before the hearing, written opposition must be filed and served on or before the court day before the hearing. In that event, service must be by personal delivery, facsimile transmission, express mail, or other means consistent with the Code of Civil Procedure and "reasonably calculated to ensure delivery to the other party or parties no later than the close of business on the court day before the hearing." Cal Rules of Ct 3.1351(c). In any event, the supreme court has stated that a party opposing a summary judgment motion must have a reasonable opportunity to oppose it. See Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 854, 107 CR2d 841. Regarding setting aside defaults in summary judgment motions, see Warning in §11.39. See also CCP §1005(c), requiring opposing papers to be promptly served on other counsel.

NOTE: Arguably, under CCP §437c(q), a landlord may assert that the filing of a summary judgment motion in an unlawful detainer action should not be the basis for continuing the trial date.

If the party opposing a motion for summary judgment, however, is unable to contact essential witnesses and obtain their declarations or has a discovery proceeding pending (e.g., has served interrogatories that have not yet been answered or has served a notice of a deposition that has not yet been held), and that party submits an affidavit pursuant to CCP §437c(h) showing that facts essential to justify opposition to summary judgment may exist, the court must reschedule the hearing and grant an extension of time to file an opposition to the motion for summary judgment because the witness or discovery proceeding might reveal a triable issue of fact. See Frazee v Seely (2002) 95 CA4th 627, 115 CR2d 780. This is one more reason why defendants to an unlawful detainer action should initiate discovery as soon as possible.

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/11 Unlawful Detainer; Pretrial Proceedings/§11.38 C. Supporting Documents

§11.38 C. Supporting Documents

A party moving for summary judgment must ordinarily file and serve a notice of motion, a supporting memorandum, supporting evidence, and a separate statement of undisputed material facts containing specific citations to the supporting evidence. See CCP §437c(b)(1); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(c)-(d). But in 2009, the Judicial Council amended Cal Rules of Ct 3.150(c), which currently states that the supporting documents listed in the Rule are mandatory except as provided in CCP §437c(r) and Cal Rules of Ct 3.151. Although CCP §437c(r) makes CCP §437c(a)-(b) inapplicable to unlawful detainer actions, no other statute or rule of court states what a moving party must file and serve as supporting documents besides the notice of motion required by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1351(a). Code of Civil Procedure §1170.7 (the unlawful detainer action summary judgment statute) simply refers to CCP §437c for the basis on which a summary judgment "shall be granted or denied." This lack of specificity in the governing statutes and court rules may simply be the result of an assumption that a notice of motion and a properly verified complaint will adequately support a summary judgment brought by the plaintiff in most unlawful detainer actions. But if the summary judgment motion is brought by the defendant, the statutes and rules are totally unclear.

NOTE: Despite the 2009 amendment to Rule 3.150(c), uncertainty continues about the scope of the exceptions in CCP §437c(r) for unlawful detainer suits. It seems likely that the legislature intended to make the exceptions in CCP §437c(r) apply only to the motion scheduling and timing provisions of subdivisions (a)-(b) (see §11.36) because subdivisions (c)-(e), which remain applicable to unlawful detainer suits, all assume the requirements of (and directly refer to) the supporting evidence and papers originally described in subdivisions (a)-(b).

PRACTICE TIP: Prudent counsel will act on the probability that CCP §437c(r) is directed only at the scheduling and timing provisions of subdivisions (a)-(b). Counsel should always submit at a minimum declarations of competent witnesses and a separate statement of undisputed facts with a summary judgment motion in any event because it enables the court to review properly the merits of the motion. These papers are particularly crucial if the defendant is the moving party or if verification of the complaint is defective in any way and the plaintiff is the moving party.

A request for judicial notice, if applicable, must be served with the moving papers. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(c). All issues sought to be established by a motion for summary adjudication of issues should be listed specifically in the notice of motion and repeated, verbatim, in the separate statement of undisputed material facts. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(b), (d). See also Maryland Cas. Co. v Reeder (1990) 221 CA3d 961, 974 n4, 270 CR 719; Homestead Sav. v Superior Court (1986) 179 CA3d 494, 224 CR 554.

A summary judgment motion usually must be supported by affidavits or declarations containing admissible evidence demonstrating that there is no triable issue of fact. See CCP §437c(b)-(d); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(c)(4). Generally, the motion may also be supported by admissions, answers to interrogatories, and judicially noticeable matters. CCP §437c(b)(1). The use of factually insufficient discovery responses by an adverse party in a motion for summary judgment was clarified in Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 855, 107 CR2d 841. See §11.34.

A party seeking to incorporate a portion of the court's file by reference must specify the exact portion of the file to which the party is referring; incorporation of the entire file is not permitted. CCP §437c(b)(7).

The court decides whether a triable issue of fact exists primarily by reviewing supporting declarations and discovery responses, not the pleadings. See Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co., supra. The facts in the declarations must be evidentiary, and not ultimate facts or conclusions of law. Estate of Nelson (1964) 227 CA2d 42, 46, 38 CR 459. A declaration must be based on the declarant's personal knowledge, must show competency to testify to the stated matters, and must set forth admissible evidence. CCP §437c(d); Estate of Nelson, supra. The declarant's competence to testify need not be stated expressly, as long as it appears clearly from the foundational facts in the declaration. University of S. Cal. v Weiss (1962) 208 CA2d 759, 25 CR 475.

Unless circumstances shift the burden of proof on the opposing party (see §§11.32-11.33), the moving papers must include sufficient facts to establish every element necessary to sustain a judgment in his or her favor. See Estate of Nelson, supra. Accordingly, when a single necessary allegation is not supported in the moving papers, the motion cannot be granted even if the opposing party fails to dispute the allegation. CCP §437c(p)(1)-(2); Thatcher v Lucky Stores, Inc. (2000) 79 CA4th 1081, 94 CR2d 575.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/11 Unlawful Detainer; Pretrial Proceedings/§11.39 D. Opposing Documents

§11.39 D. Opposing Documents

A party opposing a summary judgment must ordinarily file and serve a written memorandum in opposition to the motion, a separate statement (responding to the moving party's statement of undisputed material facts and containing specific citations to controverting evidence), and evidence in the form of written declarations. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(e)-(f). A request for judicial notice, if applicable, must be served with the opposing papers. See CCP §437c(b); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1350(e)(4).

In unlawful detainer actions, however, opposition to a summary judgment motion and any reply to opposition may be made orally at the time of the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1351(b). Alternatively, if a party seeks to have the court consider its opposition before the hearing, written opposition papers must be filed and served on or before the court day before the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1351(c). On service methods, see §11.37.

When the moving party's evidence is sufficient to support the judgment, summary judgment may be granted unless the opponent submits controverting evidence that raises at least one triable issue of material fact. CCP §437c(c)-(d); University of S. Cal. v Weiss (1962) 208 CA2d 759, 767, 25 CR 475. The opponent may use declarations or other evidentiary sources, such as the moving party's responses to discovery, and "matters of which judicial notice shall or may be taken," to defeat a summary judgment motion. CCP §437c(b). The use of factually insufficient discovery responses by adverse parties in summary judgment motions is explained in Aguilar v Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 C4th 826, 855, 107 CR2d 841. See also discussion of the shifting of the burden of proof in §§11.32-11.34.

The opponent cannot resort to allegations or denials in that opponent's own verified complaint or answer, in lieu of counterdeclarations. CCP §437c(p)(1)-(2); Vesely v Sager (1971) 5 C3d 153, 169, 95 CR 623 (verified complaint); Coyne v Krempels (1950) 36 C2d 257, 262, 223 P2d 244 (verified answer). When the moving party's declaration is inadequate, there is no need for the court to consider the sufficiency of the declarations of the opposing party. Witchell v DeKorne (1986) 179 CA3d 965, 225 CR 176.

A party wishing to object to evidence in a summary judgment motion must submit objections in writing or arrange to have a court reporter present and make the objections at the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1352. Any objections not so made will be deemed waived. See CCP §437c(d); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1352. On the format for written objections, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1354, which requires that written objections be filed at the same time as the objecting party's opposition or reply papers are served and filed unless excused by the court on a showing of good cause.

PRACTICE TIP: Sometimes a trial court will not rule on the evidentiary objections in a tentative ruling or at the hearing. Counsel making the objections should make the record for appeal by asking the trial judge to specifically rule on the objections, or they will be deemed waived. See City of Long Beach v Farmers & Merchants Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 780, 97 CR2d 140.

When investigation or discovery is incomplete and a motion for summary judgment is pending, the opposing party may request a continuance ex parte under CCP §437c(h) (see §11.37) to obtain additional evidence that may exist to oppose the motion. On obtaining ex parte orders, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1203(b). The request for a continuance may be denied if the requesting party does not, by affidavit, show that "facts essential to justify opposition may exist but cannot, for reasons stated, then be presented." On the adequacy of an affidavit to support a continuance under §437c(h), see Bushling v Fremont Med. Ctr. (2004) 117 CA4th 493, 11 CR3d 653; Frazee v Seely (2002) 95 CA4th 627, 115 CR2d 780; Bahl v Bank of America (2001) 89 CA4th 389, 107 CR2d 270. If the party moving for summary judgment unreasonably obstructs discovery during the continuance period, the court must grant another continuance to complete the discovery or deny the summary judgment motion. See CCP §437c(i).

The moving party's declarations are strictly construed; the opposing party's declarations are liberally construed. Podolsky v First Healthcare Corp. (1996) 50 CA4th 632, 642, 58 CR2d 89; Armstrong v Optical Radiation Corp. (1996) 50 CA4th 580, 585 n2, 57 CR2d 763. The facts alleged in the opposing party's declarations, and reasonable inferences drawn from them, must be accepted as true for purposes of deciding the motion. Armstrong v Optical Radiation Corp., supra. Such inferences, however, cannot be speculative and must meet the "more likely than not" burden of proof the

The counterdeclarations must state evidentiary facts within the declarant's personal knowledge, and to which he or she can competently testify. CCP §437c(d).

Counterdeclarations may be based on circumstantial evidence. In Rich v Schwab (1984) 162 CA3d 739, 742, 209 CR 417, e.g., a landlord was sued for allegedly raising the rent in retaliation against mobilehome park tenants, who had taken collective action to lobby for a rent moratorium from the city. A summary judgment was awarded to the landlord by the trial court on the basis of the landlord's assertions that the rent increase was motivated by business judgment, supported by appraisers' declarations that the rent was unreasonably low without the increase. The court of appeal reversed, stating that an inference of retaliation could be drawn from the circumstantial evidence presented by the tenants, which included, among other things, facts tending to show a temporal relationship between the landlord's actions and the tenants' organizing activities, and remarks made by the landlord about his intentions to a tenant. 162 CA3d at 744.

A local rule stating that a motion for summary judgment may be granted solely because the opposing party failed to file opposing declarations is inconsistent with CCP §437c and is invalid. The motion may be granted only if the court first finds that the moving party met its initial burden of proof. Thatcher v Lucky Stores, Inc. (2000) 79 CA4th 1081, 94 CR2d 575.

WARNING: The rule in CCP §473(b), which requires a court to set aside a default judgment or dismissal on an attorney's affidavit swearing to his or her "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or neglect," does not apply to an attorney's failure to oppose a summary judgment motion. See English v IKON Bus. Solutions, Inc. (2001) 94 CA4th 130, 114 CR2d 93. See also Prieto v Loyola Marymount Univ. (2005) 132 CA4th 290, 33 CR3d 639.

§11.40 V. MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS

A motion for judgment on the pleadings is allowed in unlawful detainer actions. CCP §438; Jayasinghe v Lee (1993) 13 CA4th Supp 33, 17 CR2d 117. Defendant may file such a motion on the ground that the court does not have subject matter jurisdiction or that the complaint fails to state a cause of action. CCP §438(c). The motion may raise any grounds not raised in any prior demurrer, and it may raise the same grounds raised in a prior demurrer if there has been a material change in applicable case law or statute since the ruling on the demurrer. CCP §438(g).

The motion may not be made within 30 days of the date the action is initially set for trial, "unless the court otherwise permits." CCP §438(e). Because it is usually impossible to make a motion for judgment on the pleadings more than 30 days before trial, given the relative quickness of unlawful detainer actions, the court should permit the motion to be made within the 30-day limit. The moving party should argue that, at common law, the motion could be made even during trial and at any time before judgment was entered. See McNew v Mulcahy (1938) 24 CA2d 656, 658, 76 P2d 143. Many judges will, in their discretion, permit the motion to be made at the beginning of the trial.

In Jayasinghe v Lee, supra, decided before enactment of CCP §438, the landlord's complaint and a stipulation signed by the parties showed that the 3-day notice to pay or quit demanded rent higher than that allowed by the lease. On its own motion, the trial court took judicial notice of the stipulation and granted judgment on the pleadings for the tenant, without giving the landlord notice or an opportunity to amend the complaint. The appellate department affirmed, holding that the trial court had not abused its discretion. Note that CCP §438(b)(2), (d) specifically authorizes a court to grant judgment on the pleadings on its own motion, based on matters of which it has taken judicial notice.

VI. SETTING CASE FOR TRIAL

A. Request for Trial Setting

§11.41 1. Procedure

The Judicial Council adopted a mandatory trial-setting request form for unlawful detainer actions. See Judicial Council Form UD-150, Request/Counter-Request to Set Case for Trial—Unlawful Detainer in §11.41A. Although a few courts will set an unlawful detainer case for trial automatically, others will not set it for trial (or a case management or settlement conference) unless the court deems the case to be at issue or a party files and serves a request to set the case for trial. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 6.5 and Alameda Ct R 3.620, which require the filing of a trial setting request.

Among the items required in the request to set the case for trial are statements concerning the nature of the case, whether the case is entitled to legal preference, whether the right to possession is still in issue (i.e., whether the tenant has vacated the premises), whether a jury trial is demanded, and the time estimated for trial. The plaintiff must represent to the court in the request that all parties have been served with process and "have appeared" or have had a default entered against them.

An opposing party may respond to the request to set the case for trial by filing his or her own counter-request within 5 days. Counsel should always check local practices and customs on trial setting. On general procedures for requesting a trial date, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 40-42 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004); California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chaps 2, 6 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

A motion may be made to advance or reset a trial date (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1335), or for a continuance (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332). The request must be made by noticed motion (or ex parte application) accompanied by a declaration showing the reason for the continuance under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)-(d). See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(b). On ex parte applications, see also Cal Rules of Ct 3.1203(b). This is so, even if the motion is unopposed or the parties stipulate to the continuance. Extensions of unlawful detainer trial dates are strictly limited by CCP §1170.5(c)-(d), which requires a hearing and possible order requiring the tenant to pay rent into court as a condition to the court's granting an extension. For a discussion of extensions, see §11.44.

Precedence is accorded to unlawful detainer actions over other civil actions "to the end that all such actions shall be quickly heard and determined." CCP §1179a. The landlord is not entitled to precedence in setting the trial date, however, when possession is no longer an issue in the case. CC §1952.3; Cohen v Superior Court (1967) 248 CA2d 551, 56 CR 813. See §11.51. See also Karz v Mecham (1981) 120 CA3d Supp 1, 4, 174 CR 310.

As a practical matter, some courts require the case to be taken off the priority calendar automatically when possession is no longer at issue. Others require the defendant to make a motion to vacate the trial date. The advantage to the landlord of maintaining the trial date is obtaining a monetary judgment expeditiously, but the court will likely limit the damages to rent, court costs, and, if provided for in the rental agreement, attorney fees. Some plaintiffs, therefore, elect to amend their complaints to include causes of action for damage to the premises or other monetary losses that are unobtainable in an unlawful detainer judgment. See §§9.8, 9.41.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlord attorneys should always consult local court rules, many of which require plaintiffs to notify the court immediately when possession is no longer at issue. See, e.g., Alameda Ct R 3.630.

Comment: The Judicial Council adopted as mandatory Judicial Council Form UD-150, Request/Counter-Request to Set Case for Trial—Unlawful Detainer. The status of the case may require the defendant to file a motion to strike a premature request made by the plaintiff. If the case is not at issue and should not be set for trial, the defendant may submit its Counter-Request.

§11.42 B. 20-day Mandatory Trial Setting

Priority is given to unlawful detainer trials by CCP §1170.5(a), which requires that trial be held no later than the 20th day after a request for trial setting is made. The language of CCP §1170.5(a) is mandatory; i.e., the clerk must set the trial date within 20 days of the request for setting, even if a jury trial is demanded. For discussion of the legislative policy behind CCP §1170.5, see Medford v Superior Court (1983) 140 CA3d 236, 189 CR 227.

Two aspects of §1170.5 may mitigate the strictness of its application. First, CCP §1170.5(i) provides that it must not be construed to interfere with the precedence given to criminal trials. This subsection appears to authorize suspension of the 20-day requirement in order for the court to meet its criminal trial obligations. Second, the 20-day period begins to run when a "request to set the time of the trial is made." CCP §1170.5(a). This should be interpreted to mean that the 20-day period begins to run when a proper request to set trial has been filed. See procedure in §§11.41-11.41A.

Some courts automatically set an unlawful detainer action for trial after the answer is filed. In most courts, the court clerk will set a date within or close to the 20-day requirement in CCP §1170.5(a). Some California trial courts are unable to comply with CCP §1170.5. Most courts do not automatically set unlawful detainers for trial, but instead require that a request to set trial be filed. A landlord seeking to enforce compliance with the 20-day requirement appears to have no remedy other than to initiate a mandamus proceeding in an appellate court or a motion under CCP §1170.5(c) for a rent deposit order. See §§11.45-11.50, 11.56.

In limited civil cases in, e.g., Los Angeles, San Francisco, Alameda, and San Diego counties, courts require a request to set trial, generally meet the statutory time requirement, and give priority to unlawful detainer cases on the day of trial over other civil cases on calendar.

PRACTICE TIP: The landlord could file a request to set trial as soon as the answer is filed, leaving the tenant little time for discovery. The tenant, therefore, should serve discovery with the answer.

It is a good practice for the tenant's attorney to initiate discovery even before serving the answer. If the landlord's attorney files a request to set trial on the date the answer is due, the attorney may later resist an attempt to strike the request on the grounds that it was filed in good faith. Landlord counsel should oppose any motion to strike the request to set trial if the motion is based solely on the need for discovery, because such motions are arguably contrary to the expedited trial-setting procedures and conditions for payment of rent pending a continuance of trial under CCP §1170.5.

The California Judicial Council adopted case disposition time goals for unlawful detainer actions. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(i).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.43 C. Notice of Trial

Notice of trial must be served on all parties to an unlawful detainer action at least 5 days before the trial date, or 10 days if service is made by mail. CCP §594(a)-(b). The court clerk is directed to serve notice of trial by mail; any party may serve notice by mail at least 10 days before the trial date if the clerk fails to do so. The provisions of CCP §1013 extending the time for serving notice by mail do not apply to the time limits for notice of trial in unlawful detainer actions. CCP §594(b).

Because CCP §594(a) provides that the adverse party is entitled to only 5 days' notice of trial, apparently a party may obtain approval of a given trial date from the court clerk and then arrange for personal service of notice of trial not less than 5 days before the date set for hearing. See, e.g., Au-Yang v Barton (1999) 21 C4th 958, 90 CR2d 227 (strictly construing 15-day notice provision under §594(a)).

PRACTICE TIP: It is a good practice for landlords to give their own notice of trial so that if the clerk fails to give notice, the trial date will be preserved without having to reset or renotice the matter for trial. The notice should contain the date, time, and place of trial. The original notice, along with a proof of service, should be filed with the court before trial.

§11.44 D. Extension of Trial Date

Code of Civil Procedure §1170.5, which requires that the trial date in an unlawful detainer action be set within 20 days of the filing of an appropriate request for setting (see §11.42), also provides procedures for extending the trial date beyond the 20-day period under the following strictly limited circumstances:

- The parties agree to an extension (CCP §1170.5(b)); or
- For another cause, but only if the court finds in a hearing that the landlord is likely to prevail, and conditions the extension on the tenant's payment into court of damages that the plaintiff will suffer from an extension (CCP §1170.5(c)).

The second process is discussed in §§11.45-11.50.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.45 1. Good Cause for Extension

On a request for continuance of trial the court must first determine whether the party has shown good cause for the extension. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332. If good cause has not been shown, the court will deny the motion. If the party has shown good cause, the court must hold a hearing under CCP §1170.5(c). See §11.46. This situation almost always arises when the tenant seeks an extension. If the landlord seeks an extension, the tenant will probably agree to it because he or she can remain in possession of the premises while the action is pending. In this instance, the extension can be handled by agreement under CCP §1170.5(b).

Although good cause is not mentioned or defined in CCP §1170.5, this issue is governed by the standards for trial continuances in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)-(d), which cites numerous circumstances indicating good cause, including a party's excused inability to obtain "essential testimony, documents, or other material evidence despite diligent efforts," and places the determination within the trial court's discretion. See also Cohen v Herbert (1960) 186 CA2d 488, 493, 8 CR 922. The shortened discovery schedules in unlawful detainer actions provide fertile ground for motions to continue the trial date, especially if the party opposing the continuance has been uncooperative in responding to discovery or if the issues in the case merit discovery procedures which cannot be fully accomplished before the trial date. See §§11.5-11.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.46 2. Probability That Landlord Will Prevail

After the court finds good cause for an extension of the trial date, it must then hold a hearing under CCP §1170.5(c) to determine whether there is a reasonable probability that the landlord will prevail at trial. If the court finds that the landlord is not likely to prevail, the extension is ordered and there is no need to go further with the statutory procedure. If there is a reasonable probability that the landlord will prevail, however, the court must condition the extension on payment of damages incurred by the delay. See §11.47.

It is unclear what evidence the court must consider to determine whether the landlord is likely to prevail (i.e., whether the court may rely on declarations and argument, or whether the court must hear live testimony and cross-examination). Under CCP §1170.5(c), the court must determine the amount to be paid into court after a finding of reasonable probability, on the basis of verified statements of the contract rent and objections, and on "oral or demonstrative evidence presented at the hearing." Thus, CCP §1170.5(c) appears to contemplate that all necessary determinations will be made at one hearing.

The most practical approach would be for the court to make all necessary determinations on the basis of verified statements, objections, and oral and demonstrative evidence. On the other hand, it could be argued that the legislature's failure to provide expressly for the means of proof of reasonable probability means that it did not intend that an evidentiary hearing with oral testimony be used in connection with that determination. If oral testimony is allowed, cross-examination must be allowed. Evid C §773(a).

NOTE: In Los Angeles County, trial courts do not generally hold a separate hearing required by CCP §1170.5(b). If the tenant moves for a continuance, and the continuance is granted over objection, the court will often summarily condition the continuance on the tenant's payment of the contract rent for the period of the continuance. The tenant is generally given a short period (24 to 48 hours) to post certified funds with the court. Tenant attorneys, in trying to stipulate to a continuance with landlord's counsel, may want to offer the payment of the rent or rental value to the landlord for the period of the continuance.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.47 3. Amount of Landlord's Damages

If the court finds a reasonable probability that the landlord will prevail at trial, it must determine the amount of damages to be suffered by the landlord due to the delay in the trial date. Damages may be based on the landlord's verified statement of the contract rent, on the tenant's verified objections to it, and on oral and demonstrative evidence. CCP §1170.5(c). Note that the damages must result from the extension and not from the tenant's failure to pay rent, the tenant's holding over, or the lawsuit.

PRACTICE TIP: A landlord sues to evict a tenant for failure to pay monthly rent of $300 in January and February (a total of $600). Trial is set for March 10th. On March 5th, the tenant moves for an extension, claiming the need for an additional 30 days to prepare a defense of breach of the implied warranty of habitability (see chap 3). The court grants the motion and extends the trial date to April 10th. As the extension delays the landlord's ability to charge rent to a new tenant by 30 days, the damages suffered by the landlord as a result of the extension would be $300. If the hearing date had been extended to April 5th, the simplest measure of damages would be to calculate the daily rent ($10), and assess the landlord's potential damages as $250. These damages may be subject to setoff (see §11.48).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.48 4. Potential Offsets to Damages

After determining the potential damages from the extension of the trial date, the court must consider any diminution in the value of the premises or setoff permitted by law. CCP §1170.5(c). For example, the tenant may present the same evidence of the reduced value of the premises under CCP §1170.5(c) as would be given to support the defense of the landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability at trial (see §§3.36-3.38). Thus, under the decision in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, although the contract rent may be $300, breach of the warranty may reduce the reasonable rental value of the premises to some other figure, such as $200 (see §3.37). If the action is for nonpayment of rent, and the tenant has strong evidence of breach of the warranty, the proceedings may not reach this stage because the court will not have found a reasonable probability that the landlord will prevail on the issue of possession.

Diminution in value is an issue independent of the effect of the implied warranty of habitability in setting the amount to be escrowed (e.g., when the lawsuit is based on expiration of a fixed-term lease, or on a 30-day or 60-day termination notice, and market conditions have reduced the rental value).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.49 5. Order to Deposit Damages

The final step in a motion to continue the trial date (see §§11.44-11.48) is that the court must order the tenant to pay the landlord's potential damages into court or into an escrow account. CCP §1170.5(c). The order cannot require the tenant to deposit the damages immediately, but only as the rent otherwise becomes due and payable. See Medford v Superior Court (1983) 140 CA3d 236, 241, 189 CR 227. Thus, for example, if the court extends the trial date from March 10th to April 10th and finds that the landlord is likely to prevail and to lose one month's rent (e.g., $1300) from the extension, the tenant would be required to pay $1300 into court on the date that the rent next comes due—probably April 1st.

The court may order the tenant to make payments into a designated escrow account (CCP §1170.5(c)); any costs of administering the account are recoverable by the prevailing party (CCP §1170.5(e)). Under CCP §1170.5(g), the court may order that the payments be invested in an insured, interest-bearing account, with interest to be allocated as the distributions are allocated. Courts that frequently hear unlawful detainer actions may have one interest-bearing account for all tenant payments. After trial, the court determines distribution of the amounts paid into court by the tenant. CCP §1170.5(f). Presumably, the prevailing party will be awarded this amount. If the tenant prevails in a breach of implied warranty of habitability defense, the tenant should recover a fraction of the payments held by the court, representing the amount by which the contract rent was reduced to "reasonable rent" by the breach (see §3.37).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.50 6. Trial Date Advanced Upon Default

If the tenant fails to pay the landlord's potential damages into court as ordered by the court (see §11.49), trial of the action must be held within 15 days of the date the payment was due. CCP §1170.5(d). The statute does not specify whether the landlord must make a motion to advance the trial date, or whether the court may simply advance the date on its own motion. Advancing the trial date is the only sanction provided for the tenant's failure to make the ordered payment. There is no provision in CCP §1170.5(d) permitting a court to impose other sanctions such as striking the answer, entering a default judgment, or holding the tenant in contempt of court. The effectiveness of CCP §1170.5(d) depends on the extended trial date set by the court. If trial was originally set for March 10th, and extended to April 10th in an order conditioned on the tenant's payment of $1300 into court on April 1st, the landlord would gain nothing from the tenant's failure to pay on April 1st. If the trial date had been extended to some date beyond April 15th, however, then CCP §1170.5(d) might be useful in advancing the trial to an earlier date.

§11.51 E. Effect of Tenant's Vacating Before Trial

A properly filed unlawful detainer action becomes an "ordinary civil action" if possession of the premises is no longer at issue at the time of trial or judgment because the plaintiff has been restored to possession. CC §1952.3(a). Accordingly, the action is no longer entitled to precedence on the trial calendar and is not subject to the shortened time limits provided in CCP §§1159-1179a. The landlord may then seek damages not otherwise recoverable in unlawful detainer (CC §1952.3(a)(1)), but must amend the complaint. Defenses to the proper service of notices preceding the unlawful detainer action in accordance with CCP §§1161-1162 arguably would no longer apply because service is only a required element for a prima facie case in unlawful detainer actions. The tenant may seek "any affirmative relief," and assert all defenses, whether the landlord amends the complaint or not. CC §1952.3(a)(2); Heller v Melliday (1943) 60 CA2d 689, 696, 141 P2d 447.

Whether the defendant is entitled to a continuance for purposes of moving for leave to file a cross-complaint is not within the trial court's discretion. In Fish Constr. Co. v Moselle Coach Works, Inc. (1983) 148 CA3d 654, 196 CR 174, e.g., the tenant's attorney delivered the keys to the premises to the landlord's attorney on the day before trial, along with a letter stating that the tenant no longer claimed possession of the commercial premises. Before trial began, the tenant moved to take the case off the calendar and reset it as an ordinary civil matter, so that he could amend the answer to assert the defense that the landlord had breached the lease by not maintaining the premises. The court of appeal held that the trial court should have granted the tenant's motion.

Allowing a tenant a reasonable period of time to plead all cognizable issues in one case is preferable to forcing the parties to proceed with two lawsuits. Other courts have held that, whenever feasible, all issues should be tried between the parties together even in unlawful detainer actions. See Greenhut v Wooden (1982) 129 CA3d 64, 180 CR 786; Mobil Oil Corp. v Superior Court (1978) 79 CA3d 486, 145 CR 17. A tenant who vacates before trial cannot be required to pay the back rent claimed as a condition to filing a cross-complaint. Medford v Superior Court (1983) 140 CA3d 236, 189 CR 227. In Medford, the court held that such a requirement would have the same effect as a prejudgment attachment, which is prohibited in a residential unlawful detainer action.

The compulsory cross-complaint rule (CCP §426.30) does not apply to the tenant's response unless the tenant files either a cross-complaint or an answer or amended answer in response to the landlord's amended complaint filed under CC §1952.3(a)(1). If the landlord files an amended complaint, the tenant has 30 days to respond, as in an ordinary civil action. CC §1952.3(b). If the landlord elects to proceed on the existing complaint, however, the tenant's time to respond is not enlarged. CC §1952.3(b). If the court has entered the default of a tenant who has vacated, and the complaint has not been opened by amendment or otherwise set aside, the matter may nevertheless proceed as an unlawful detainer action. CC §1952.3(c).

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords may have a difficult time determining whether or not the tenant has vacated. Without strong evidence of abandonment, landlords are well advised to continue with the trial for unlawful detainer and receive a judgment and writ of possession to avoid an allegation of bad faith in retaking possession.

It is not uncommon for a tenant to vacate immediately before the scheduled trial date. If this occurs, the landlord must inform the trial or calendar court judge. Such an obligation is imposed by written court rule, e.g., in some districts of the Los Angeles Courts. The case is then transferred to the master calendar department for further proceedings. Many courts, however, proceed with trial on the date originally set to allow the landlord to prove damages if the tenant has defaulted in the action. See CC §1952.3(c). See §11.41.

PRACTICE TIP: A tenant may gain significant strategic advantages in a case by surrendering possession before trial, such as more time to investigate the potential for affirmative relief. Surrender also gives the landlord that which he or she mainly seeks in the action: possession of the premises. A tenant who vacates before trial, and who wishes to raise additional defenses or a cross-complaint, should file a motion for an order removing the case from the trial calendar and resetting it as an ordinary civil case.

§11.52 F. Case Management and Settlement Conferences

The California Rules of Court govern case management and settlement conferences in general civil cases. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.735, which deal with initial case management reviews, case management conferences, meet and confer requirements, and case management statements. These rules do not apply to unlawful detainer actions because such actions are excluded from the definition of "general civil cases," they will be designated as short-cause cases for trial, or they will be resolved in any event within 180 days. See Cal Rules of Ct 1.6(4), 3.10, 3.721, 3.735. If possession is no longer at issue in an unlawful detainer action, many courts now transfer the matter to the "general civil" calendar. If such a transfer occurs, counsel will need to be cognizant of the requirements of Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.735.

California Rules of Court 3.735(b) allows the trial court to exempt a short cause case from the requirements of case management review. This can be accomplished by order of the court or stipulation of all parties. A short cause case is a civil case in which the time estimated for trial by all parties or the court is 5 hours or less. Cal Rules of Ct 3.735(a).

California Rules of Court 3.1380(a) allows the court to set one or more mandatory settlement conferences on the court's own motion or the request of any party. Rule 3.1380(b) specifies that trial counsel, parties, and persons with full authority to settle the case must personally attend the conference unless excused by the court for good cause. Further, Cal Rules of Ct 3.1380(c) requires the submission of a mandatory settlement conference statement 5 court days before the settlement conference date.

VII. JURY TRIAL

§11.53 A. Right to Jury Trial; Procedure

When an issue of fact is presented in an unlawful detainer action, the parties are entitled to have the case tried by a jury, unless that right is waived. CCP §1171. (On waiver, see §11.54.) In determining whether to demand a jury trial, a party and his or her attorney must consider the relative likelihood of success in trial before a jury or the court, and the expense and delay of a jury trial. Jury trials tend to benefit tenants who have persuasive proof of retaliatory eviction, waiver, and "bad-faith" eviction under local eviction controls. Breach of the implied warranty of habitability, however, has often been successfully tried before judges, and a jury trial on that defense may be unnecessary. In general, when the case turns on credibility, tenants appear to fare better with juries than with bench trials. However, on a technical legal issue, a court trial may be preferred for the tenant because a judge is more likely to understand the legal technicality.

Merely demanding a jury trial (in a request to set trial (see §11.41), counter-request, or separate pleading that simply recites the requesting party's demand) is not sufficient to secure the right to a jury trial. The party demanding a jury also must post advance jury fees for the first day of trial, no later than 5 days before the date set for an unlawful detainer trial. CCP §631(b). Because only 10 days' notice of trial is required in unlawful detainer actions, most court clerks will accept the required deposit if it is made by the tenant immediately after receiving the notice of trial date by mail (see CCP §594). A tenant who waits until receiving notice of the trial date, however, risks waiving the right to a jury trial.

PRACTICE TIP: The safest course for a tenant who wishes a jury trial appears to be:

- To file and serve a separate notice demanding a jury trial at the same time that the answer is filed and served, or to file a Counter-Request to Set Case for Trial (Judicial Council of California Form UD-150) within 5 days of the mailing of the landlord's Request to Set Case for Trial (see §11.41A); and
- To deposit the required advance fees as soon as practicable after receipt of the plaintiff's request to set trial, which deposit should ensure posting more than 14 days before trial.

Jury fees range from $120 to $300 per day, but a court may not require an advance deposit of more than $150. CCP §631(b). Jury expenses are recoverable as costs for the prevailing party. CCP §1033.5(a)(1). If a party is proceeding in forma pauperis, the jury fees may be waived. See §10.11. On procedures for obtaining a jury trial generally, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 41 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.54 B. Waiver

Under CCP §631(d), a party waives the right to a jury trial by any of the following ways:

- Failure to appear at the trial;
- Written consent, filed with the court clerk or judge;
- Oral consent, in open court, entered in the minutes;
- Failure to announce that a jury is required at the time the cause is first set for trial, if it is set on notice or stipulation, or within 5 days after setting if set without notice or stipulation;
- Failure to deposit with the clerk or court before trial advance jury fees, in accordance with CCP §631(b); or
- Failure to deposit with the clerk or court after trial begins daily jury fees and transportation fees, in accordance with CCP §631(c).

To avoid risk of waiver, counsel should use the procedure discussed in §11.53.

In 2005, the supreme court ruled that contractual predispute jury trial waivers are invalid. See Grafton Partners LP v Superior Court (2005) 36 C4th 944, 32 CR3d 5. The court cited the California Constitution (Cal Const art I, §16), which states that in a civil action, the litigants may waive their right to a jury trial only as prescribed by statute, and CCP §631, which prescribes only six means for waiving a jury trial. Because an agreement made before any dispute arises between the contracting parties is not one of the means authorized by CCP §631, the court concluded that a predispute agreement to waive a jury trial is unenforceable. The court specifically disapproved the ruling in Trizec Props., Inc. v Superior Court (1991) 229 CA3d 1616, 280 CR 885, which had upheld a jury trial waiver in a commercial lease.

The court in Grafton distinguished predispute arbitration and judicial reference agreements, which are generally enforceable because they "are specifically authorized by statute" and "represent an agreement to avoid the judicial forum altogether." 36 C4th at 955. However, many courts will scrutinize these types of agreements in any event. See, e.g., Treo @ Kettner Homeowners Ass'n v Superior Court (2008) 166 CA4th 1055, 83 CR3d 318, in which the court of appeal refused to enforce an ADR provision in CC&Rs that required submission of disputes to judicial reference, because it did not meet constitutional standards for a jury trial waiver.

PRACTICE TIP: Some courts insist that the party demanding a jury have all proposed jury instructions ready and will treat failure to meet this requirement as a waiver. This practice appears to be aimed at lawyers who demand a jury solely for the purpose of obtaining bargaining leverage over an opponent; i.e., lawyers who expect the case to settle but have no intention of proceeding with a jury trial. This court practice appears questionable under the holding in Grafton Partners LP v Superior Court, supra.

A state court rule, which was repealed, did provide that if the party demanding a jury later waives that demand, all other parties have 5 days after receipt of a notice of waiver mailed by the clerk to demand a jury trial and to deposit the advance jury fees. See former Cal Rules of Ct 222.1. No statute or court rule is known that governs this situation currently. In that event, or if the party demanding the jury waives the demand at the time or after the case is assigned to a specific court department, or if that party fails to deposit the advance jury fees, then the other party should promptly act to request a jury and deposit the fees to avoid a waiver. The safest practice is for each party wanting a jury trial to make the minimum advance deposit required by CCP §631(b), which is a small amount. See §11.53.

The trial court has discretion to allow a jury trial, on such terms as may be just, even though a party has waived the right to a jury. CCP §631(e). Because of the constitutional guarantee of a jury trial (see CCP §631(a)), doubt about whether to relieve a party of a waiver should be resolved in favor of granting a jury trial. Cowlin v Pringle (1941) 46 CA2d 472, 116 P2d 109. A party who wishes to be relieved of a waiver must request relief by motion. See Taylor v Union Pac. R.R. Corp. (1976) 16 C3d 893, 130 CR 23. See also California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 41 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). The motion, which should be noticed if time permits, should state why a jury trial was initially waived and why the interests of justice would be served by a jury trial. See CCP §631(e).

§11.55 C. No Right to Jury Trial on Equitable Issues

A party has no right to a jury trial on equitable issues. See Richard v Degen & Brody, Inc. (1960) 181 CA2d 289, 295, 5 CR 263, disapproved on other grounds in Kendall v Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 498, 220 CR 818. If both legal and equitable issues are involved in an unlawful detainer action, the court will try the equitable issues first, because this may obviate the need for a jury trial on the legal issues. In Richard, the trial court ruled that it first would try the equitable defense of estoppel. The defendant's attorney then agreed to allow the court to determine damages without the aid of a jury. The court found against the tenant and concluded that, aside from damages (which were to be fixed by the court), there were no factual issues left for the jury. The appellate court held that it was not error to deny the tenant a jury trial. See also Union Oil Co. v Chandler (1970) 4 CA3d 716, 728, 84 CR 756.

In Unilogic, Inc. v Burroughs Corp. (1992) 10 CA4th 612, 12 CR2d 741, plaintiff brought a conversion claim, on which the trial court submitted an equitable defense of unclean hands to a jury. The court of appeal held that this submission to the jury was proper, for two reasons:

- The gist of the plaintiff's action was legal, not equitable, and the assertion of an equitable defense in a law action will not change it into an action in equity requiring trial by the court.
- Even if the action were viewed as equitable in nature, the trial court has discretion to submit an equitable defense to a jury.

In this case, because the unclean hands defense was intertwined with legal issues and raised questions of fact and credibility properly submitted to a jury, it was "particularly prudent" for the judge to exercise his discretion to submit that issue to the jury. 10 CA4th at 623.

A tenant should have the right to a jury trial on the issue of retaliatory eviction. In Department of Transp. v Kerrigan (1984) 153 CA3d Supp 41, 200 CR 865, the court held that a claim of retaliatory eviction under CC §1942.5 is a legal, rather than an equitable, defense. See also Barela v Superior Court (1981) 30 C3d 244, 178 CR 618, and Schweiger v Superior Court (1970) 3 C3d 507, 90 CR 729, on the common law defense of retaliatory eviction.

PRACTICE TIP: A landlord's attorney is often forced to litigate a jury trial that has numerous inapplicable defenses, inappropriate requests for damages, or numerous procedural flaws. A motion in limine, pretrial, to exclude affirmative defenses not applicable in an unlawful detainer action, strike inappropriate requests for damages, or sever equitable defenses, is a good technique to narrow issues and save court time.

VIII. MOTIONS TO ESCROW RENT PENDING TRIAL

§11.56 A. Mandatory Orders (CCP §1170.5)

If the trial of an unlawful detainer action is extended beyond 20 days after the filing of a request for setting the trial date (see §11.42), the court must hold a hearing to determine whether there is a reasonable probability that the landlord will prevail; if there is such a probability, the court must order that the landlord's potential damages from the delay be paid into court or into an escrow account as the rent would otherwise become due. CCP §1170.5(b)-(c).

This provision appears to make a hearing mandatory whenever the trial is extended (even if the landlord unilaterally requests the continuance or the court extends the date on its own motion), and to make an order for payment into court mandatory if the court finds a "reasonable probability" that the landlord will prevail at trial. This provision also appears to make a hearing on a rent deposit order mandatory if a trial court simply fails to follow the time prescription of CCP §1170.5(a) when the case is first set for trial. See CCP §1170.5(b). (For extensive discussion of procedures for escrowing rents under CCP §1170.5(c)-(d), see §§11.45-11.50.)

B. Discretionary Orders; Habitability Cases

§11.57 1. Purposes

On request of a landlord, trial courts occasionally order a tenant to deposit rent payments into court or into an escrow account at the contract rate, or in some lesser amount, as they become due and for as long as the tenant remains in possession of the premises while the unlawful detainer action is pending. This procedure protects the landlord's interest by continuing rent payments during trial. It is used less frequently since the enactment of CCP §1170.5, which (1) requires that the trial date be set within 20 days after a request to set trial is filed (see §11.42), and (2) provides a statutory procedure for escrowing rents if the trial will not occur on the 20-day schedule (see §§11.44-11.50, 11.56). Note, however, that CCP §1170.5 provides for escrowing rents only after a noticed motion has been filed and only for rent due after the 20-day period for setting the case for trial. Thus, a nonstatutory, discretionary escrow procedure may be used to require payment of rent falling due before the 20-day period expires, especially when filing the request to set trial is delayed (e.g., to allow extensive discovery or writ proceedings).

This nonstatutory procedure might be available to a landlord when the court finds, under the mandatory CCP §1170.5 procedure, that the landlord is unlikely to prevail in an unlawful detainer action. See §11.46. For example, the landlord is not likely to prevail on the issue of possession when the tenant raises a warranty of habitability defense and introduces persuasive evidence to support it at the CCP §1170.5 hearing. Even though this defense prevents the landlord from repossessing the premises, the court may ultimately adjudge that the landlord is entitled to a reasonable monthly rent for the premises (see §3.37). In such a case, the court might enter a nonstatutory protective order directing that all or a portion of the amount of monthly rent be placed in escrow pending trial. On stipulations for rent deposits, see §11.61.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.58 2. Legal Basis

California courts have recognized the potential role of protective orders when the tenant withholds rent as a response to uninhabitable conditions (see §§3.16-3.48) and may look favorably on motions for escrowing rents when the tenant remains in possession of the premises during extended litigation. See Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 636, 111 CR 704; Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 71, 102 CR 661. Both Green and Hinson discuss only the possibility of protective orders to secure the landlord's financial interest, but there are no reported California cases that indicate an appellate court has actually reviewed such an order.

A nonstatutory protective order is limited to rental payments "as they become due." See Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 637, 111 CR 704; Hinson v Delis, supra. See also Medford v Superior Court (1983) 140 CA3d 236, 240, 189 CR 227. The financial interest protected by the order extends only to possible rental loss caused directly by the tenant's assertion of the implied warranty of habitability defense. Tenant attorneys should argue that because the landlord does not risk loss of past rent in allowing the tenant to litigate this defense, unpaid rent accrued before the action was filed should not be included in the protective order. (See cases discussed in §3.34.)

PRACTICE TIP: Protective orders are rarely used by landlord attorneys in low-rent residential leases because there are few practical remedies available to landlords if defendants fail to comply with the order. A motion for contempt, e.g., might fail if the defendants are insolvent, and the benefit must always be balanced with the expense of a contempt motion.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.59 3. Required Showing

No reported California case has discussed the showing necessary for the landlord to obtain an order escrowing rent payments. (For discussion of cases on protective orders from other jurisdictions, see §3.34.) A leading case on the issue of protective orders imposing rent escrow is Bell v Tsintolas Realty Co. (DC Cir 1970) 430 F2d 474, 483, in which the court held that protective orders are proper only "when the tenant has either asked for a jury trial or asserted a defense based on violations of the housing code."

Balancing the landlord's need for security against the apparent merits of the tenant's defense, the court listed the following factors to be considered in determining whether to grant or deny a protective order (430 F2d at 484):

- The amount of rent allegedly due;
- The number of months that the landlord has not received even partial payment;
- The landlord's obligations for the premises, e.g., mortgage, taxes;
- The "reasonableness" of rent for the premises;
- Whether the landlord faces a substantial threat of foreclosure; and
- Whether the tenant proceeds in forma pauperis.

The court noted that requiring an indigent tenant to deposit rent in order to maintain a meritorious defense creates a "monetary barrier" to participation in the judicial system. 430 F2d at 480.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.60 4. Amount of Rent to Be Escrowed

After granting a motion for an escrow order, the court must determine the amount of rent that must be paid into the account. When the tenant raises the warranty of habitability defense (see §§3.16-3.48), the court might find that the amount to be escrowed should be less than the contract rent. In Bell v Tsintolas Realty Co. (DC Cir 1970) 430 F2d 474, 484, the court noted that a trial court should "consider imposition of a lesser amount … when the tenant makes a very strong showing that the condition of the dwelling is in violation of Housing Regulations norms."

PRACTICE TIP: Although the affirmative defense of uninhabitability has not been fully litigated when the court considers a motion for an escrow order, a strong showing of housing code violations may demonstrate that the value of the premises is less than the contract rent. If the landlord had attempted to raise the rent before filing the unlawful detainer action, the tenant's attorney could argue that only the original contract rent should be placed in escrow. (See §3.37 for further discussion of determination of the amount of rent to be escrowed.)

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.61 5. Stipulation for Rent Deposit

To show good faith, while contesting a landlord's right to the rent, the tenant might offer a stipulation for a protective order. This maneuver gives the tenant the ability to negotiate the amount of monthly rent deposits, particularly if the tenant has a persuasive habitability defense. Alternatively, the tenant's attorney should consider having the tenant deposit all unpaid rent into a trust account and pay future rent into the account as it becomes due. This would obviate the need for a protective order and show the court that the tenant is not attempting to concoct a defense after failing to pay rent. Even if the tenant ultimately prevails on the issue of possession, the contract rent (or a lesser sum) may be payable immediately as a condition of the tenant's continued possession. If so, a trust account will greatly assist the tenant. The availability of such funds also may be useful in settlement negotiations with the landlord, e.g., the rent deposits can be traded off for repairs.

IX. RELATED ACTIONS: PRELIMINARY INJUNCTIONS, CONSOLIDATION, AND COORDINATION

§11.62 A. Nature of Related Actions

While an unlawful detainer action is pending, either the landlord or the tenant might file other actions raising similar issues and arising out of the same facts. Because the issues are limited (see §§9.8, 10.72-10.73), an unlawful detainer judgment usually has no res judicata effect on issues not cognizable in unlawful detainer. Vella v Hudgins (1977) 20 C3d 251, 142 CR 414; Gonzales v Gem Props. (1974) 37 CA3d 1029, 112 CR 884. But unlawful detainer judgments have collateral estoppel or res judicata effect when an issue could have been raised (or actually was adjudicated), in the unlawful detainer action. See Vella v Hudgins, supra, and discussion in §13.39.

Bringing an unlawful detainer action does not preclude the landlord from bringing a separate action for breach of a lease or rental agreement. CC §1952. Filing an unlawful detainer action does not bar the simultaneous prosecution of a quiet title action brought by either landlord or tenant. Evans v Superior Court (1977) 67 CA3d 162, 171, 136 CR 596.

The need for some mechanism for coordinating the prosecution of related actions is demonstrated in a number of reported cases. As a summary proceeding entitled to preference in trial setting (see §§9.7, 11.42), an unlawful detainer action may not be stayed solely because the tenant filed an action against the landlord earlier in the same court. Mobil Oil Corp. v Superior Court (1978) 79 CA3d 486, 145 CR 17; Childs v Eltinge (1973) 29 CA3d 843, 105 CR 864. In Mobil Oil, a gas station lessee sued for declaratory and injunctive relief based on the landlord's alleged practice of terminating franchises without good cause and filing unlawful detainer actions to enforce such terminations. While the tenant's action was pending, the landlord filed an unlawful detainer action against the tenant in the same court. The court of appeal held that the trial court should have denied the tenant's motion to stay the unlawful detainer action because the tenant's causes of action were not entitled to trial precedence over the unlawful detainer action. 79 CA3d at 494. The court noted that:

- The two actions "probably" should be consolidated for trial (79 CA3d at 493); and
- The stay might have been proper if the lessee had sought a preliminary injunction, which does have precedence over unlawful detainer actions (79 CA3d at 495).

In Greenhut v Wooden (1982) 129 CA3d 64, 69, 180 CR 786, the landlord filed both a quiet title action and an unlawful detainer action against the tenant, based on the claim that the lease had expired. The appellate court noted that the trial court could have consolidated these two cases with the tenant's declaratory relief action, or the tenant could have sought an injunction against the unlawful detainer action. Also, in Asuncion v Superior Court (1980) 108 CA3d 141, 146, 166 CR 306, when the landlord filed an unlawful detainer action under CCP §1161a, the tenant moved to transfer the case to the superior court, and filed an affirmative suit for damages and to quiet title. The appellate court indicated that, on a proper factual showing, the trial court could either enter a preliminary injunction staying the unlawful detainer action or consolidate the two actions. The court distinguished the decision in Mobil Oil Corp. v Superior Court, supra, on the grounds that it involved commercial property and the stay was not supported by adequate facts.

PRACTICE TIP: The credit crisis of 2007-2010 precipitated an increase in civil filings in the superior courts arising from foreclosures, particularly eviction cases and related civil actions by borrowers against lenders. This increased the awareness of the need for coordinating the actions. For example, if a foreclosure was wrongfully obtained, the eviction case may be stayed pending the resolution of an affirmative suit by the borrower to set aside the foreclosure sale. See Banke, Staying Postforeclosure Eviction Actions Pending Borrower Actions Against Lenders, 32 CEB Real Prop L Rep 92 (July 2009).

In multiparty actions that are related, similar coordination issues arise. Mobil Oil, Greenhut, and Asuncion all involved competing claims over the parties' interests in a single premises. If, however, a number of tenants in a building are facing separate unlawful detainer actions after withholding rent because of the landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability, they may consider consolidating the actions into a single action or seeking to enjoin the individual unlawful detainer actions as part of an affirmative suit based on breach of the implied warranty of habitability. See Hernandez v Stabach (1983) 145 CA3d 309, 193 CR 350. A tenants' association may file an action on behalf of affected tenants to enjoin evictions pending an action to enforce relocation benefits required by development agreements with a local entity. See Lincoln Place Tenants Ass'n v City of Los Angeles (2007) 155 CA4th 425, 66 CR3d 120. On injunctions, see §§11.63-11.64.

When the landlord has filed an unlawful detainer action against a rent-withholding tenant who files a separate action against the landlord (either before or after commencement of the landlord's action, in either the same or a higher court) for damages or an injunction based on breach of the implied warranty of habitability, the pretrial remedy of coordination (see §11.69) or the remedy of consolidation (see §§11.65-11.68) may be available.

B. Injunctive Relief

§11.63 1. Legal Basis; Grounds

In order to protect the tenant against the summary remedy of unlawful detainer before any related actions have been resolved, the tenant's attorney may wish to enjoin further prosecution of the unlawful detainer action while the related actions are pending. See Greenhut v Wooden (1982) 129 CA3d 64, 69 n3, 180 CR 786; Asuncion v Superior Court (1980) 108 CA3d 141, 146, 166 CR 306. But see Old Nat'l Fin. Servs., Inc. v Seibert (1987) 194 CA3d 460, 239 CR 728 (court of appeal upheld trial court's refusal to stay unlawful detainer action pending homeowner's fraud action because it determined that issues in fraud action were only remotely related to unlawful detainer defense). See also §8.134. Or the tenant's attorney may use an injunction to address housing rights violations before the unlawful detainer actions are actually filed. See, e.g., Price v City of Stockton (9th Cir 2004) 390 F3d 1105.

A preliminary injunction may be issued to preserve the status quo if the unlawful detainer action would result in irreparable injury, a multiplicity of actions, or injury for which there is no adequate remedy at law. See CCP §526(a); Asuncion v Superior Court, supra. See also Banke, Staying Postforeclosure Eviction Actions Pending Borrower Actions Against Lenders, 32 CEB Real Prop L Rep 92 (July 2009); Guntert v City of Stockton (1974) 43 CA3d 203, 117 CR 601 (injunction restraining landlord from filing eviction action affirmed when landlord had no ground for terminating lease). Whether injunctive relief will be granted in a particular case depends primarily on the factual showing made, and not on mere recitation of authority. See §11.64.

California courts have considered the propriety of enjoining unlawful detainer under the following circumstances:

- The landlord's title was at issue in a related action to quiet title to the premises (Greenhut v Wooden, supra; Asuncion v Superior Court, supra);
- The eviction was motivated by retaliatory intent (Mobil Oil Corp. v Superior Court (1978) 79 CA3d 486, 495, 145 CR 17; Aweeka v Bonds (1971) 20 CA3d 278, 97 CR 650; see §8.134) or unlawful racial discrimination (see Prendergast v Snyder (1966) 64 C2d 877, 878, 50 CR 903); and
- A commercial landlord breached the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment (Guntert v City of Stockton, supra; Petroleum Collections, Inc. v Swords (1975) 48 CA3d 841, 847, 122 CR 114).

PRACTICE TIP: A request for a preliminary injunction will more likely succeed if the underlying theory of the tenant's action against the landlord is based on a statute that expressly authorizes or has been interpreted to permit temporary or permanent injunctive relief independently of the general, equitable grounds enumerated in CCP §526(a). See, e.g., the remedies designated in the chart in §2.28. See also authorities prohibiting housing discrimination cited throughout chap 2.

§11.63A 2. The Newby Exception: Adequate Remedy at Law

In Newby v Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 CA3d 288, 131 CR 547, the tenant filed an action for damages and injunctive and declaratory relief, stemming from the landlord's service of a 30-day termination notice and allegedly abusive conduct in retaliation for the tenant's organizing activities. The landlord had not yet filed an unlawful detainer action. The appellate court held that the trial court properly denied an injunction against the proposed eviction (60 CA3d at 302) because:

- The tenant's claims were also cognizable affirmative defenses to an unlawful detainer action; and
- The tenant therefore failed to show lack of an adequate remedy at law.

Interpreted broadly, Newby suggests that injunctive relief is not available when the gravamen of the tenant's complaint (e.g., breach of the implied warranty of habitability, retaliatory eviction) can be raised as a defense to possession in an unlawful detainer action. The rationale of Newby may also bar a tenant from enjoining an eviction while proceeding in an affirmative suit to obtain repairs to the premises based on a breach of the warranty of habitability. Code of Civil Procedure §1174.2(a), enacted after the decision in Newby, allows the trial court in an unlawful detainer action to order the landlord "to make repairs and correct the conditions" that constitute the breach.

§11.63B 3. Overcoming Newby Limitations

Although the application of the "adequate remedy at law" standard in Newby v Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 CA3d 288, 131 CR 547, might be appropriate in "routine" unlawful detainer cases (see §11.63A), the tenant's legal remedy of defending the eviction may not be adequate, and a preliminary injunction may be granted in certain situations, such as the following:

- A foreclosure is imminent or has occurred (see Asuncion v Superior Court (1980) 108 CA3d 141, 146, 166 CR 306; Weingand v Atlantic Sav. & Loan (1970) 1 C3d 806, 83 CR 650; see also Banke, Staying Postforeclosure Eviction Actions Pending Borrower Actions Against Lenders, 32 CEB Real Prop L Rep 92 (July 2009));
- The landlord's breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment is continuous, substantial, and materially harmful to the tenant's business or healthy enjoyment of the premises;
- Another party is necessary to a related court proceeding, but is not an appropriate party to the unlawful detainer action (see Lincoln Place Tenants Ass'n v City of Los Angeles (2007) 155 CA4th 425, 66 CR3d 120);
- The eviction is in response to a tenant's withholding of rent for an extreme case of breach of the warranty of habitability tantamount to a constructive eviction (see, e.g., Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 928, 162 CR 194);
- A landlord violates tenants' rights under good cause eviction standards in local ordinances (see, e.g., Barrientos v 1801-1825 Morton LLC (9th Cir 2009) 583 F3d 1197, holding that federal rules that allow property owners to opt out of Section 8 program and rents to exceed rent control levels do not preempt local eviction controls; see §7.19);
- A city violates the tenants' federal housing rights while exercising its redevelopment rights (see, e.g., Price v City of Stockton (9th Cir 2004) 390 F3d 1105, in which plaintiffs proved substantial likelihood of success in showing that they were denied relocation benefits required by federal law; court enjoined city from vacating, demolishing, or converting SRO hotels until it adopted and implemented antidisplacement and relocation assistance plan);
- A group of tenants in substandard housing seek in an affirmative suit to effectuate needed repairs to an entire building and to enjoin unfair business practices, when only some of the units are the subject of eviction actions (see Hernandez v Stabach (1983) 145 CA3d 309, 193 CR 350; but see Daro v Superior Court (2007) 151 CA4th 1079, 61 CR3d 716, ruling that tenants were not among class of persons Subdivided Lands Act was intended to protect; therefore, had no standing to sue); or
- The landlord has engaged in a pattern of serving termination notices and unlawful detainer complaints, followed by voluntary dismissal.

PRACTICE TIP: The decision in Newby was based on the tenant's presumed adequate remedy at law. When a defense allowable in an unlawful detainer action, e.g., retaliatory eviction or uninhabitability, is also the basis of the tenant's affirmative suit against the landlord, the tenant should emphasize that a separate and independent basis for the injunction is to prevent a multiplicity of judicial proceedings, i.e., multiple lawsuits. See CCP §526(a)(6), (b)(1). This argument is most effective when the facts show that the defense, if successful, would not only defeat the landlord's claim for possession but also result in (a) affirmative relief for the tenant beyond a mere setoff against the delinquent rent (see Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 911, 162 CR 194) because such relief is not permitted in unlawful detainer suits (Landeros v Pankey (1995) 39 CA4th 1167, 1174, 46 CR2d 165), or (b) affirmative relief for a class of persons beyond those actually being evicted (see Hernandez v Stabach, supra. See §§9.8, 10.73. See also cases cited in §11.63.

§11.64 4. Procedure; Bond Required

The procedure for obtaining a preliminary injunction is set forth in CCP §§525-534 and Cal Rules of Court 3.1150-3.1153, and discussed comprehensively in California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 32 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). Grounds for a preliminary injunction are listed in CCP §526(a). If trial of the unlawful detainer is imminent, counsel may first request a temporary restraining order. CCP §527.

In order to obtain a preliminary injunction, the tenant must demonstrate, on motion, through a verified complaint or declarations, that "sufficient grounds exist" for the injunction. CCP §527(a). A court will not grant a preliminary injunction unless there is a "reasonable probability" that the plaintiff will succeed on the merits of the complaint. Continental Baking Co. v Katz (1968) 68 C2d 512, 528, 67 CR 761.

A preliminary injunction may be modified or dissolved on a showing under CCP §533 that:

- The underlying facts have materially changed;
- The law on which the injunction was granted has changed; or
- "[T]he ends of justice would be served."

A bond or undertaking is generally required as a condition to the issuance of a preliminary injunction. CCP §529(a). The most practical approach to determine the amount of the bond is to apply the same formulae used for rent deposit orders (see §§11.47-11.48, 11.56-11.61), but courts have inherent power to waive the bond requirement for an indigent litigant. Conover v Hall (1974) 11 C3d 842, 851, 114 CR 642; Asuncion v Superior Court (1980) 108 CA3d 141, 147, 166 CR 306. The landlord's obvious response to a proposed issuance of an injunction without bond based on the tenant's indigence is to point out that, without income, the landlord may lose the building. This argument is especially effective when a number of tenants are participating in a rent strike.

PRACTICE TIP: If a rent deposit order has already been entered in the pending unlawful detainer action, the tenant has a strong argument that no bond or undertaking should be required to enjoin the progress of the eviction and that compliance with the rent deposit order while both actions are pending is sufficient to protect the interest of the landlord under CCP §529(a).

C. Consolidation

§11.65 1. Multiple Actions Pending in Same Court

A court may consolidate separate actions pending before it when they involve "a common question of law or fact." CCP §1048(a). See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 43 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). The primary requirement is a showing that all the pending actions sought to be consolidated involve a common question of law or fact. CCP §1048. The more similar that the questions of law or fact appear to be, both in quality and quantity, the stronger the argument for consolidation will be. This situation may arise when the landlord's unlawful detainer action is a limited civil case and either party has filed in the same superior court an affirmative action arising out of the landlord-tenant relationship.

The argument for consolidation is strengthened if a joint trial will prevent unnecessary cost and delay and will not prejudice the rights of the opposing party. See, e.g., Greenhut v Wooden (1982) 129 CA3d 64, 180 CR 786; Mobil Oil Corp. v Superior Court (1978) 79 CA3d 486, 145 CR 17. "The purpose of consolidation is merely to promote trial convenience and economy by avoiding duplication of procedure, particularly in the proof of issues common to both actions." Wouldridge v Burns (1968) 265 CA2d 82, 86, 71 CR 394. Thus, when a number of tenants in a building are facing eviction after withholding rent, the argument for consolidation is stronger if the rent was withheld in response to defects in the common areas of the building, as well as to defects in the individual units.

Before CCP §1048 was amended in 1971, it authorized consolidation only "whenever it can be done without prejudice to a substantial right." Although the present version omits this reference to prejudice, it nevertheless may be advisable to show that the opposing party will not be prejudiced if the motion is granted. Grounds on which the motion might be denied for prejudice include the following:

- Evidence that is relevant in one action might prejudice the claim or defense of another party against whom such evidence is inadmissible;
- A joint trial would result in denial of a jury trial in one or more of the actions; or
- Consolidation would complicate the issues, thereby confusing the jurors.

The court has discretion to issue an order to consolidate, and such a decision will not be reversed unless that discretion has been abused. The circumstances of a particular case may show that the court could not refuse to consolidate without clearly abusing its discretion, in which case mandamus would lie to compel the trial court to grant the order. Realty Constr. & Mortgage Co. v Superior Court (1913) 165 C 543, 547, 132 P 1048; Cicinelli v Iwasaki (1959) 170 CA2d 58, 71, 338 P2d 1005. See Clore v Fredman (Ill 1974) 319 NE2d 18 (error to deny request for consolidation of class action for declaratory and injunctive relief with forcible detainer action).

The manner for obtaining an order of consolidation is not specified in CCP §1048, but the commonly accepted method is by noticed motion. Consolidation may also be effected by stipulation or on the court's own motion. See McClure v Donovan (1949) 33 C2d 717, 722, 205 P2d 17. For forms for a notice of motion to consolidate actions, a declaration in support of a motion to consolidate, and an order for consolidation, see Civ Proc Before Trial, chap 43.

§11.66 2. Multiple Actions Pending in Different Courts

When actions sharing a common question of law or fact are pending in more than one county, the superior court in one county may transfer any action from another to its own court for coordination and consolidation for trial. CCP §403. See also Cal Rules of Ct 3.500. Transfer and coordination provide an alternative to the more unwieldy procedure of coordination, which is authorized by CCP §404. See §11.69.

The superior court may issue a coordination order on a motion showing that the standards of CCP §404.1 are met, that the action is not "complex" as defined by the Judicial Council, and that the moving party made a good faith effort to obtain a stipulation for coordination from all parties to each action. CCP §403. For forms for a notice of motion, supporting declaration, and order (adaptable for coordination under CCP §403), see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 43-44 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.67 3. Effect of Consolidation Order

An order of consolidation unites the separate actions so that they become a single action with the case number of the earlier action. The court treats separate pleadings as one set, and renders a single verdict or judgment. Bank of Cal. v Connolly (1973) 36 CA3d 350, 363, 111 CR 468. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 43 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). Different procedures with respect to the statement of decision (CCP §632) and entry of judgment may be followed if only specified issues in the actions were consolidated (see §11.68). Even complete consolidation, however, does not eradicate the trial court's power to distinguish the rights and liabilities of the individual parties. For example, if the landlord fails to prove his or her case as to one tenant, the court may dismiss the case as to that tenant, while continuing to hear the action against the remaining tenants.

§11.68 4. Consolidation for Trial of Related Issues Only

When only a single common question of law or fact exists (or a few), consolidation may still be a viable tool for adjudicating the related issue or issues even though separate statements of decision and judgments ultimately will be made. Code of Civil Procedure §1048(a) provides for a "joint hearing or trial of any or all the matters in issue," thus expressly authorizing consolidation for the limited purpose of trying related issues while the actions themselves remain discrete.

When actions are consolidated only for specified issues, the cases maintain separate identities and case numbers; evidence particular to each case is restricted to that case; the pleadings are considered separately; and verdicts, statements of decision, and judgments are separate. See 4 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §341 (5th ed 2008). In McClure v Donovan (1949) 33 C2d 717, 722, 205 P2d 17, the court remarked that, when such limited consolidation is ordered, relevant evidence presented in one case applies in the other, "but separate findings and judgments must be made in each case in disposition of the particular issues as independently submitted." (Note that findings of fact have been replaced by a statement of decision. See §§12.64-12.66.)

Counsel should consider carefully the possible benefits of seeking limited consolidation as an alternative to complete consolidation. For consolidated tenant actions, for example, separate judgments may be desirable due to the disparate nature of the tenants' cases or personalities.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.69 D. Coordination by Judicial Council

Coordination by the chair of the Judicial Council is available when the landlord has an unlawful detainer case pending in one county, and the tenant has a case (e.g., for damages and injunctive relief) pending in another. CCP §§404-404.8; Cal Rules of Ct 3.500-3.550. The cases must share common issues of fact or law, as in consolidation procedures. For extensive discussion of coordination, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 44 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

As with consolidation (see §§11.65-11.68), coordination results in multiple actions being tried together, but the procedure for obtaining coordination may be quite different from that for consolidation, depending on the nature of the case. The precise procedure to be used for coordination is dictated by whether the case is "complex" (e.g., multiple related cases, extended trial periods, class actions, difficult or novel issues, substantial postjudgment judicial supervision; see Cal Rules of Ct 3.400) requiring judicial management under Cal Rules of Ct 3.400-3.403, 3.714-3.715, 3.750-3.751. See also Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.10.

Coordination is initiated in a "complex" case by petitioning the chairperson of the California Judicial Council for assignment of a judge to determine whether the actions are complex and whether coordination is appropriate. CCP §404. See also Cal Rules of Ct 3.400, 3.521. Because the petitioning procedure is very time consuming, the petition should be filed even before the answer for it to have any chance of success in an unlawful detainer action.

In an action which does not meet the Judicial Council standards for "complex" cases, any party to one action may file a noticed motion to obtain an order to transfer another action, from another court, to the court in which the motion is heard, for coordination of the actions if there are one or more common questions of fact or law. CCP §403. The actions may then be consolidated for trial. See §11.66.

It is unlikely that the more cumbersome coordination procedures will be used successfully in complex unlawful detainer actions, particularly in view of the accelerated, mandatory trial-setting provisions (see §11.42). However, the enactment of CCP §403 enables a noncomplex case to be transferred from one county to another as easily as consolidation is ordered of cases within the same county.

§12.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter discusses unlawful detainer trials. Methods and deadlines for challenging the judge are discussed (see §§12.2-12.9). Required procedures for compelling witnesses' attendance (see §§12.10-12.13) and production of documents (see §§12.15-12.17) are detailed. Additionally, the chapter outlines the elements and burden of proof for both the plaintiff/landlord's case (see §§12.19-12.34) and the defendant/tenant's affirmative defenses (see §§12.35-12.38). Sample jury instructions also are included (see §§12.41-12.63). The chapter ends with a discussion of the trial's outcome in court trials (see §§12.64-12.66) and jury trials (see §§12.67-12.68).

II. DISQUALIFYING THE JUDGE

§12.2 A. Challenge for Cause

A judge has a legally imposed duty to decide any proceeding in which he or she is not disqualified. CCP §170. A judge who determines himself or herself to be disqualified must notify the presiding judge and refrain from further participation in the proceeding. CCP §170.3(a)(1). Grounds for a judge's disqualification include (CCP §170.1):

- Personal knowledge of disputed facts in the case;
- Prior service as a lawyer in the case;
- Financial interest in the subject matter;
- Status as a party to the proceeding;
- Familial relationship to a party;
- Any reason casting doubt on the judge's ability to be impartial, including bias or prejudice toward an attorney in the proceeding;
- Inability to properly conduct the proceeding because of permanent or temporary physical impairment; and
- Current arrangement for prospective employment as a dispute resolution neutral or, within previous two years, participation in discussions on such employment if:
- Arrangement or discussions occurred with a party; or
- The proceeding before the judge requires a decision on whether to submit a dispute to alternative dispute resolution or appoint a dispute resolution neutral.

Grounds for disqualification do not include (CCP §170.2):

- Membership in a racial, ethnic, religious, sexual, or similar group when the proceedings involve the rights of such a group; or
- Expression of an opinion on a factual or legal issue in the proceeding, except as a lawyer in the proceeding or as a judge in prior trial proceedings in the case in question.

The fact that a judge is a landlord or a tenant, or has a financial interest in the rental housing or commercial market, is probably not sufficient to warrant disqualification. As emphasized in People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v McCullough (1950) 100 CA2d 101, 110, 223 P2d 37, bias or prejudice disqualifies a judge only if it is directed against the party moving for disqualification.

§12.3 1. Procedures for Challenging for Cause

A party who believes that a judge should be disqualified may file a written statement with the clerk, objecting to the hearing or trial before that judge, and setting forth the grounds for disqualification. CCP §170.3(c)(1). The statement must be presented at the earliest possible opportunity after discovery of the facts constituting grounds for disqualification. CCP §170.3(c)(1). Copies of the statement must be served on each party and the judge. CCP §170.3(c)(1). Within 10 days after filing or service, whichever is later, the judge may file either a consent to the disqualification or a written, verified answer concerning the allegations made and any additional relevant facts. CCP §170.3(c)(3).

If the judge contests the request for disqualification, the question must be heard and determined by another judge agreed on by the parties or, if no agreement is possible, by a judge assigned by the chairperson of the California Judicial Council. CCP §170.3(c)(5). A challenged judge who fails to file a response within 10 days is considered to have consented to the disqualification. CCP §170.3(c)(4). In North Beverly Park Homeowner's Ass'n v Bisno (2007) 147 CA4th 762, 54 CR3d 644, however, the court ruled that a judge's failure to respond to a CCP §170.1(a)(7) challenge, after the issuance of a permanent injunction on a judgment which had become final, did not amount to a "consent" to the disqualification. The court also found that, even if a CCP §170.1 challenge did apply to a final judgment, the defendant did not make a showing of "impairment" within the meaning of CCP §170.1(a)(7).

For further discussion of procedures for a challenge for cause, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§6.26-6.56 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

§12.4 2. Standard for Disqualification in Contested Challenge for Cause

The code provisions on disqualification for cause (CCP §§170-170.5), enacted in 1984, replaced former CCP §§170-170.1. Although the new sections are more detailed, particularly with respect to grounds for disqualification, cases interpreting the former sections probably still represent good law on the issues presented. Under such cases, if the disqualification statement is sufficient and the request is contested, the issue at the hearing is whether the facts presented raise a probability that a fair and impartial trial cannot be held. Rohr v Johnson (1944) 65 CA2d 208, 212, 150 P2d 5. The standard against which a judge's possible bias is measured is high. See Johnston v Dakan (1908) 9 CA 522, 526, 99 P 729 (trial judge presumed to be "honest and solvent").

§12.5 B. Peremptory Challenge

Under CCP §170.6, a judge may be disqualified merely on the basis of a motion, supported by a conclusory declaration that the judge is prejudiced against a party or attorney in the action. The constitutionality of CCP §170.6 has been upheld in Solberg v Superior Court (1977) 19 C3d 182, 137 CR 460, and Johnson v Superior Court (1958) 50 C2d 693, 329 P2d 5. No further act or proof is necessary. CCP §170.6(a)(3); Johnson v Superior Court, supra. Other than following reversal on appeal of a trial judge's decision or final judgment, a challenge under CCP §170.6 may be exercised only once in any action by a given attorney, party, or side. CCP §170.6(a)(3).

Code of Civil Procedure §170.6(a)(2) authorizes a motion to establish prejudice after a trial court's decision is reversed on appeal if the trial judge in the prior proceeding is assigned to conduct a new trial on the matter. A "new trial" includes proceedings on remand that require the case to be reopened with, presumably, a trial on the merits. People v Superior Court (Maloy) (2001) 91 CA4th 391, 109 CR2d 897. If the appellate court remands the decision to the trial judge for a ministerial purpose, however, the judge is not subject to a challenge for prejudice. Stubblefield Constr. Co. v Superior Court (2000) 81 CA4th 762, 97 CR2d 121. The procedure is essentially the same as for peremptory challenges made before trial.

While a challenge under CCP §170.6 may be exercised only once in any action, there is one limited exception. A party may exercise a post-appeal challenge if the matter is assigned, on remand, to the trial judge who originally heard the case. CCP §170.6(a)(2). However, on remand, a party may only exercise one post-appeal peremptory challenge even if that party did not make a pre-appeal challenge. Casden v Superior Court (2006) 140 CA4th 417, 44 CR3d 474.

A trial judge's decision on a pretrial motion to resolve a conflict of laws issue is not a trial under §170.6(a)(2); consequently the moving party has no right to disqualify the judge after the decision is affirmed by the court of appeal. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (2004) 121 CA4th 490, 17 CR3d 146. See also Peracchi v Superior Court (2003) 30 C4th 1245, 135 CR2d 639 (trial judge not subject to peremptory challenge following remand if sole task remaining for judge is resentencing defendant). See also Geddes v Superior Court (2005) 126 CA4th 417, 23 CR3d 857 (judge who determined summary judgment motion not subject to peremptory challenge following remand for court to explain its reasoning in accordance with CCP §437c(g)).

§12.6 1. Procedures for a Peremptory Challenge

A party or attorney may exercise a peremptory challenge by making an oral or written motion without notice, supported by an affidavit or declaration that the judge is so prejudiced against the party or attorney that he or she cannot conduct a fair and impartial trial. CCP §170.6(a)(2). The declaration must be in substantially the form set forth in CCP §170.6(a)(5). Many courts provide declaration forms. The form may be available online; e.g., the Los Angeles Superior Court has its own fillable form for the declaration at http://www.lasuperiorcourt.org/forms/, and clerks in Los Angeles Superior Court may require this form. The declaration need state only that the judge before whom the proceeding is pending is prejudiced. It need not state any facts supporting the charge of prejudice, and no judicial determination on the existence of any supporting facts need be made. Johnson v Superior Court (1958) 50 C2d 693, 329 P2d 5; Autoland, Inc. v Superior Court (1988) 205 CA3d 857, 252 CR 662. Another party cannot contest the motion by offering facts to prove the challenged judge's lack of prejudice. On the timing of a peremptory challenge and who may be challenged, see Pedus Servs., Inc. v Superior Court (1999) 72 CA4th 140, 84 CR2d 771.

2. Deadline for Making Peremptory Challenge

§12.7 a. Before Trial Commences; After Appeal on Remand

Because different courts use different calendaring methods, and some will assign a case to a single judge for all purposes at various times after the case is filed, it can be very difficult to ascertain when a CCP §170.6 challenge must be made. The general rule under CCP §170.6(a)(2) is that the challenging motion must be made at least 5 days before the date set for trial if the judge assigned to try the case is known at least 10 days before that date. In a jurisdiction with a master calendar, the motion should be directed to the supervising judge no later than the time that the case is assigned for trial. The motion will not be granted if it is made after:

- The drawing of the first juror's name in a jury trial; or
- The plaintiff's opening statement or, when no such statement is made, after the first witness has been sworn, any evidence has been given, or trial of the case has otherwise commenced in a court trial.

If the case is assigned to a judge for all purposes, the motion must be made to the assigned judge or to the presiding judge within 10 days after notice of the assignment, or if a party has not yet appeared in the action, within 10 days after its appearance. See CCP §170.6(a)(2).

Because the prejudice must be directed against a party or an attorney appearing in the action, the motion may not be made after a default has been entered against the moving party unless the default is first set aside. Mackie v Mackie (1960) 186 CA2d 825, 830, 9 CR 173; see CCP §170.6(a)(1).

A peremptory challenge to the original trial judge (if that judge is reassigned to conduct a new trial after a remand) must be brought within 60 days of the reassignment. CCP §170.6(a)(2); Stubblefield Constr. Co. v Superior Court (2000) 81 CA4th 762, 97 CR2d 121. Such a challenge may be made only by the party who filed the appeal resulting in the remand and may be made even if that party exercised a peremptory challenge against another judge earlier in the action. However, no peremptory challenge is permitted to a judge who determined a summary judgment motion if the case is remanded for the court to explain its reasoning in accordance with CCP §437c(g). Geddes v Superior Court (2005) 126 CA4th 417, 23 CR3d 857.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.7A b. Before Other Proceedings

Except in cases assigned to a judge for all purposes, which require a challenge early in the action (see §12.7), a party may challenge a judge assigned to hear a matter other than the trial no later than the commencement of the hearing. CCP §170.6(a)(2). But the right may be exercised only if a hearing involving a contested issue of law or fact is actually pending. Grant v Superior Court (2001) 90 CA4th 518, 108 CR2d 825. Because judges presiding over settlement and case management conferences do not decide the merits of the action, the peremptory challenge procedure does not apply to those proceedings. Grant v Superior Court, supra. A party may therefore challenge a judge who presided over such proceedings if the judge is later appointed for a trial or hearing on the merits of the case. CCP §170.6(a)(2).

In Swift v Superior Court (2009) 172 CA4th 878, 91 CR3d 504, the court found that a judge's rulings on discovery motions were only factual in nature and did not relate to the merits of the case. The court then ordered the trial court to accept the peremptory challenge filed by plaintiff. The court distinguished the ruling in Autoland, Inc. v Superior Court (1988) 205 CA3d 857, 252 CR 662, by holding that Autoland did not discuss whether discovery disputes constituted contested issues of fact and law.

When judges are assigned in proceedings not specifically covered by §170.6(a)(2), a peremptory challenge may be made using the procedures in §170.6(a)(2) "as nearly as may be."

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.7B c. Effect of Intervening Decisions

Other than following reversal on appeal of a trial judge's decision or final judgment, a peremptory challenge may not be made after a contested issue of fact "relating to the merits" of the case has been decided or submitted for decision to the challenged judge. CCP §170.6(a)(2); Briggs v Superior Court (2001) 87 CA4th 312, 104 CR2d 445; La Seigneurie U.S. Holdings v Superior Court (1994) 29 CA4th 1500, 35 CR2d 175. One court allowed a peremptory challenge to be made after the judge decided a summary judgment motion that involved only contested legal matters. Bambula v Superior Court (1985) 174 CA3d 653, 220 CR 223. See also Fight for the Rams v Superior Court (1996) 41 CA4th 953, 48 CR2d 851 (ruling on demurrer not decision on contested fact issue). But see California Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Superior Court (1987) 189 CA3d 267, 234 CR 413 (challenge denied after trial court decided class certification issues and several complex questions of law on summary adjudication).

A discovery referee may be disqualified for future proceedings on a peremptory challenge after the referee's decisions on earlier motions in the case are accepted by the trial court. Pedus Servs., Inc. v Superior Court (1999) 72 CA4th 140, 84 CR2d 771. But see Autoland, Inc. v Superior Court (1988) 205 CA3d 857, 252 CR 662 (challenge to discovery referee must be made immediately after notice of appointment).

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/12 Unlawful Detainer: Trial/§12.8 3. Effect of Exercise of Peremptory Challenge

§12.8 3. Effect of Exercise of Peremptory Challenge

A judge who fails to disqualify himself or herself on the filing of a timely motion under CCP §170.6 is without jurisdiction to take any further action in connection with the case; any subsequent acts are void, including all orders and the judgment. See Ball v City Council (1967) 252 CA2d 136, 145, 60 CR 139.

The fact that a party has exercised a peremptory challenge under CCP §170.6 does not bar that party from challenging another judge under §170.6, following reversal on appeal of that judge's decision or final judgment, or for cause under CCP §§170.1-170.5 (see §§12.2-12.4). CCP §170.6(a)(2), (a)(7).

For further discussion of procedures for making a peremptory challenge under CCP §170.6, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§6.57-6.77 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

§12.8A C. Appealing the Challenge Motion

Under CCP §170.3(d), an order granting or denying a motion to challenge a judge is not appealable, but it may be reviewed by a writ of mandate. Only the parties to the underlying proceeding may pursue writ relief under §170.3(d); the judge is not such a party. See Curle v Superior Court (2001) 24 C4th 1057, 103 CR2d 751.

§12.9 D. Tactical Considerations in Deciding Whether to Challenge Judge

Because the consequences may be significant, a motion to disqualify a judge, whether for cause or peremptorily, should never be made lightly. A party who loses a challenge for cause under CCP §170.3 may face a judge who is more alienated and hostile than originally anticipated. When this occurs, the party should consider using a peremptory challenge under CCP §170.6, if one is still available. If the challenge for cause is made diplomatically and on narrow grounds, the judge may be more receptive to the challenging party.

Although a peremptory challenge eliminates the risk of having to proceed before the challenged judge, it may alienate the judge against the attorney for future cases. Making the challenge before the supervising judge at the master calendar stage may lessen the chance that the challenged judge will be antagonized by the motion.

Before moving to disqualify a judge, the attorney should determine who might be assigned as a replacement judge. If the new judge is not likely to be more sympathetic, a challenge may only cause unnecessary delay. When there is no judge in the court who is not disqualified, the chairperson of the California Judicial Council will assign a judge from another county or judicial district to try the case. See CCP §§170.6(a)(3), 170.8. The outside judge may be from a less busy, rural district. The attorney should consider whether a judge from such a district would benefit the case.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlord or tenant attorneys will occasionally need to challenge a judge who they believe has misinterpreted the law in prior decisions and is therefore likely to be consistent in that interpretation for future cases. Whenever a motion to disqualify a judge is made, it may be wise to request a visit with the judge or notify the court clerk in advance to informally explain the reasons for the motion. Judges generally appreciate the effort to give them further explanation for the challenge.

III. COMPELLING PARTY AND NONPARTY ATTENDANCE AT TRIAL

A. Nonparty Witness

§12.10 1. Subpoena Required

A witness's attendance at trial may be compelled by service of a writ (or order), known as a subpoena. CCP §1985. See also CCP §2064 (subpoenaed witness must attend trial and testify). The subpoena specifies the time and place that the witness must appear. CCP §1985(a). The subpoenaing party and the witness may change the time and place specified in the subpoena by mutual agreement. CCP §1985.1.

Court clerks' offices provide blank form subpoenas, presigned and stamped with the clerk's seal, to attorneys who request them. CCP §1985(c). An ordinary subpoena compelling attendance is issued as a matter of course; good cause for attendance need not be shown. CCP §1986. An attorney of record in a proceeding may issue subpoenas without seal, which have the same force and effect as subpoenas issued with the court clerk's seal. CCP §1985(c).

On compelling attendance by subpoena generally, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§4.1-4.18 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.11 2. Service of Subpoena

Any person may serve the subpoena by personally delivering a copy "or a ticket containing its substance" to the witness. CCP §1987(a). The subpoena must advise the witness of his or her right to request fees and mileage. CCP §2065; §12.14. The witness must be given the witness and mileage fees, if demanded, at the time of service. CCP §1987(a).

A trial subpoena must be served so as to allow the witness "a reasonable time for preparation and travel" to the courthouse. CCP §1987(a). On service generally, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 17-18 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Parties

§12.12 1. Notice to Appear or Subpoena

If written notice requesting the adverse party or the party's agent to appear at trial is served on an opponent's attorney of record, no subpoena is necessary; the notice operates in lieu of a subpoena. CCP §1987(b).

If the time to serve a notice to appear has expired (see §12.13), counsel may still subpoena the opposing party (see §12.10). Subpoenaing counsel may want to call opposing counsel to ascertain if counsel will accept service of the subpoena or will stipulate to produce the party at trial. Any such stipulation should be confirmed in writing.

See §12.16 for discussion of use of the notice procedure in lieu of a subpoena duces tecum to compel production of certain documents at trial.

On compelling attendance by notice to appear, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§4.36-4.39 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.13 2. Service of Notice to Appear

A notice to appear (see §12.12) must be served on the party's attorney of record at least 10 days before the time required for attendance, unless the court fixes a shorter time. Such a notice has the same effect as a subpoena. CCP §1987(b). If the notice is mailed both from and to an address in California, 5 calendar days must be added to the time. CCP §1013. For service of a subpoena, see §12.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/12 Unlawful Detainer: Trial/§12.14 C. Statutory Witness and Mileage Fees

§12.14 C. Statutory Witness and Mileage Fees

A subpoena must include written notice that the witness is entitled to request statutory witness and mileage fees. CCP §2065. A witness who is a party in the action whose attendance is compelled by a notice to appear (see §12.12) may also be entitled to demand witness and transportation fees. CCP §1987(b). For attendance at all levels of trial courts, witness fees are currently $35 per day plus 20 cents per mile both ways (Govt C §68093; see also Govt C §68097). Counsel should check for amendments to these sections.

© The Regents of the University of California

IV. COMPELLING PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS AND OTHER MATERIALS

§12.15 A. Nonparty Witnesses: Subpoena Duces Tecum

A subpoena duces tecum is used to compel the production of books, records, or documents for possible introduction at trial. See generally California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§4.21-4.28 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995). As of January 1, 2000, a separate Judicial Council form is used for a Civil Subpoena (Duces Tecum) for Personal Appearance and Production of Documents and Things at Trial or Hearing and Declaration. The Judicial Council form declaration may be used or a separate declaration may be attached.

Service of a subpoena duces tecum is made personally in the same manner as an ordinary subpoena, except that a "copy of an affidavit shall be served with a subpoena duces tecum issued before trial." CCP §1985(b). The affidavit must describe exactly the documents or other matters and set forth facts showing both the existence of good cause for their production and their materiality to the issues in the case. CCP §1985(b). The affidavit must further state that "the witness has the desired matters or things in his or her possession or under his or her control." CCP §1985(b). A declaration under penalty of perjury may be used in place of an affidavit, and often is. See CCP §2015.5.

Under CCP §1985.6, a subpoena duces tecum may be used to obtain employment records of an employee that are maintained by his current or former employer. This section might be invoked if the acts of a landlord's employee are at issue in an unlawful detainer action.

A subpoena duces tecum is invalid unless a copy of the underlying affidavit or declaration is served along with it. CCP §1987.5.

A witness served with a subpoena duces tecum is entitled to demand witness fees and mileage, as with service of a subpoena or a notice to appear (see §12.14). CCP §1987(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.16 B. Parties: Notice to Produce or Subpoena Duces Tecum

Code of Civil Procedure §1987(c) allows a party to compel another party, a person for whose immediate benefit an action is being prosecuted or defended, or an agent of such a party to bring "books, documents or other things" to the trial on at least 20 days' notice (or a shorter time if the court, on proper application, allows). If the notice is mailed from a California address to a California address, add 5 calendar days. CCP §1013. The notice must "state the exact materials or things desired and that the party or person has them in his or her possession or under his or her control." CCP §1987(c). If the adverse party serves and files objections, the requesting party must make a noticed motion supported by a showing of both good cause and materiality in order to have a court order production of the evidence. CCP §1987(c). See generally California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§4.36-4.39 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

Although the statutory notice to produce at trial has significant advantages, the 20-day service requirement may be impossible to satisfy in light of the expedited trial-setting and shortened period for notification of trial unique to unlawful detainer cases (see §§11.41-11.43).

Code of Civil Procedure §1987(c) provides alternatives for obtaining the production at trial of documentary evidence under the adverse party's control:

- The subpoena duces tecum, which must be served only a "reasonable" time before the scheduled appearance (see §12.11); or
- A court order, obtained by appropriate application, shortening time for service of the CCP §1987(c) notice.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.17 C. Production of Original Document; Stipulations Regarding Duplicates or Photocopies

It is not uncommon for the adverse party to have possession of the original of an important document, the contents of which must be proved at trial (e.g., notices of rent increases, letters of complaints regarding habitability). If the original of a writing is otherwise admissible, it may be introduced into evidence to prove its contents. Evid C §1520. Under Evid C §1521, a duplicate of a writing is admissible to the same extent as an original, unless a genuine dispute exists about the material terms of the writing or its authenticity, or if under the circumstances it would be unfair to admit the duplicate instead of the original. Duplicates include those made by standard photocopying techniques. See Evid C §260.

It is common for counsel to stipulate to the use of photocopies at trial. However, the original should be made available for inspection.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.18 V. PENALTIES FOR DISOBEYING SUBPOENA

A witness who disobeys a subpoena or a court order to appear may be found in contempt of court, ordered to pay a $500 penalty, and held liable for all damages suffered by the party requiring that witness's attendance. CCP §§1991-1992. In addition, a warrant for the arrest of the witness may be issued. CCP §§1993-1994. See California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§4.52-4.54 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

VI. PLAINTIFF'S CASE

§12.19 A. Elements of Unlawful Detainer

In the usual unlawful detainer action, the landlord establishes a prima facie case by offering evidence of all of the following:

- The landlord-tenant relationship (see chaps 1, 9);
- Proper termination of the relationship, usually through proof of service of a 3-day, 30-day, or 60-day notice (see §§5.24A, 8.26, 8.69, 12.20); and
- The tenant's withholding possession of the premises.

Knowles v Murphy (1895) 107 C 107, 112, 40 P 111. The plaintiff must prove the existence of a relationship other than landlord-tenant if the defendant is an employee, agent, or licensee of the plaintiff (CCP §1161(1)), or if the plaintiff acquired the property by foreclosure (CCP §1161a(b)(2)). See §§8.68A-8.68E, 10.54. Failure to prove any of the above matters, if disputed, will result in a dismissal. Ahlers v Barrett (1906) 4 CA 158, 87 P 232 (landlord-tenant relationship not shown).

Proof that the tenant retained the key and left personal property on the premises is sufficient to show that the tenant is withholding possession. Levy v Henderson (1916) 31 CA 789, 791, 161 P 1004. See also Cohen v Superior Court (1967) 248 CA2d 551, 554, 56 CR 813 (equipment on premises may constitute holdover, even if keys returned). See §§12.39-12.40 on amendments to conform to proof.

In proving up damages after obtaining a default judgment, the plaintiff need only establish a prima facie case to obtain judgment. Johnson v Stanhiser (1999) 72 CA4th 357, 85 CR2d 82.

Local rent control laws impose on a landlord additional proof requirements on the issues of just cause for eviction and general compliance with the local ordinance. See §§7.73-7.75, 9.16-9.16D.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.20 1. Proving Service of Notice; Statutory Presumptions Regarding Return of Service

If proper service of the requisite notice is denied in the answer, or put at issue by a general denial, the plaintiff must introduce sufficient proof on the issue. Liebovich v Shahrokhkhany (1997) 56 CA4th 511, 65 CR2d 457. In Lacrabere v Wise (1904) 141 C 554, 75 P 185, the defendants denied the plaintiff's allegation of service of a 3-day notice to terminate the tenancy. At trial, the plaintiff offered in evidence the purported notice and affidavits of several persons to show service of the notice on the defendants. The court ruled that the affidavits were comparable to hearsay and that the plaintiffs must offer the testimony of a witness with personal knowledge of service. 141 C at 556. Even though CCP §2009 allows use of affidavits to prove service of a summons or other paper in an action or other proceeding, the court refused to apply that statute to service of notices essential to sustain the action itself. 141 C at 556. In Liebovich v Shahrokhkhany, supra, the court stated that the affidavit of service alone was insufficient to prove at trial that the service of a 3-day notice met the requirements of CCP §1162; the testimony of the person who made the service is required. Note that Evid C §647 only creates a presumption, affecting the burden of producing evidence, that the facts stated in the return of service filed by a licensed process server are true. Also, a sheriff's or marshal's return of service of process or notice is only prima facie evidence of the facts stated in the return. Govt C §§26662, 71265.

PRACTICE TIP: When the action is for nonpayment of rent, the court itself may raise a hearsay objection to the landlord's attempt to introduce a declaration of service (of a notice to pay rent or quit) by someone other than a licensed process server or sheriff's or marshal's deputy. If the landlord's attorney has reason to expect that a particular judge will raise such an objection or that a tenant will deny service of the notice, the attorney should produce in court the actual person who accomplished the service or an eyewitness to the event.

§12.21 2. Proving Case When Tenant Fails to Appear at Trial

Tenants in unlawful detainer actions frequently fail to appear at the trial after having filed an answer. In this situation, the landlord must still prove the basic elements of the case, and in addition must prove that the tenant was properly served with notice of the time and place of trial. CCP §594(a); Marriage of Goddard (2004) 33 C4th 49, 14 CR3d 50. If the tenant is not present to controvert evidence, the landlord may prove notice of trial by introducing into evidence an affidavit or certificate or other competent evidence. CCP §594(b). The standard of proof should be a prima facie case rather than proof by a preponderance of the evidence. See Johnson v Stanhiser (1999) 72 CA4th 357, 85 CR2d 82.

Code of Civil Procedure §594(a) prohibits a trial from being held in the absence of a party unless the absent party had 15 days' notice of the trial date, or 5 days' notice in an unlawful detainer. (Notice of trial must be served on all parties to an unlawful detainer action at least 5 days before the trial date, or 10 days if service is made by mail. CCP §594. See trial setting procedures in §§11.41-11.43.) In Au-Yang v Barton (1999) 21 C4th 958, 90 CR2d 227, the California Supreme Court held that when a case was set with 15 days' notice to all parties, but the trial court then advanced the trial date, §594(a) prohibits the court from holding the trial in the absence of a party who has not received notice of the new trial date. Section 594(a) does not require 15 days' notice of a continuance of a trial to a later date if the party received proper notice of the initial trial date. On trial setting procedures, see chap 11.

B. Elements to Be Proved for Unlawful Detainer Based on Nonpayment of Rent

1. Proof of Rent Due

§12.22 a. Landlord Has Burden of Proof

When an unlawful detainer action is based on nonpayment of rent, failure to pay rent is an essential element of the landlord's case. Therefore, the landlord has the burden of proof on this issue. Evid C §500. Under Evid C §636, "payment of earlier rent or installments is presumed from a receipt for later rent or installments." This presumption requires the landlord to carry the burden of producing evidence to the contrary. Evid C §604.

If the tenant contends that a rent payment allegedly not made was in fact made by mail, he or she may rely on Evid C §641, which provides that a "letter correctly addressed and properly mailed is presumed to have been received in the ordinary course of mail." This presumption, however, does not prevail over uncontradicted testimony that the letter was not received. Carl v Thomas (1931) 116 CA 294, 300,2 P2d 872. See also 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Burden of Proof and Presumptions §78 (4th ed 2000). The lease may also provide for the method of payment, i.e., payment in person at the rental office.

NOTE: Code of Civil Procedure §1161(2) provides that if a notice to pay rent or quit does not provide an address for the personal payment of rent, and the tenant can show that the rent was mailed to the landlord at the address provided in the notice, then the landlord is conclusively presumed to have received the rent payment.

If the tenant proves that there is no certificate of occupancy for the dwelling unit, then no rent is due, although the court will order the eviction because it is illegal for the tenant to continue living there, and the lease may be declared void. Espinoza v Calva (2008) 169 CA4th 1393, 87 CR3d 492; Gruzen v Henry (1978) 84 CA3d 515, 148 CR 573. See §§3.11E, 10.62.

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/12 Unlawful Detainer: Trial/§12.23 b. Use of Books and Records to Prove Amount or Receipt of Rent

§12.23 b. Use of Books and Records to Prove Amount or Receipt of Rent

When there is no written lease or rental agreement, the landlord must prove the amount of agreed-on rent. Oral testimony is sufficient if the point is not controverted by the tenant.

Past rent receipts, account books, and other written records may be invaluable to the landlord in proving the contract rent. These items also serve as evidence of whether disputed rent payments were or were not made.

PRACTICE TIP: Careful examination and questioning of a landlord whose books are very disorganized might allow a successful defense under CCP §1161(2) that the landlord is claiming rent that is more than 1 year overdue. This assertion might require a late request from defense counsel to amend the pleadings to conform to the proof (see §§12.39-12.40).

§12.24 (1) To Refresh Witness's Memory

Although Evid C §771(a) is very liberal in allowing the use (but not necessarily the admission into evidence) of any type of writing to refresh recollection, it gives the adverse party the right to inspect the writing at the trial or hearing, and to cross-examine the witness concerning it. The right to inspect the writing is protected even when the witness used it before trial to refresh his or her memory. Evid C §771(a). In addition, the adverse party may introduce pertinent portions of the writing into evidence on cross-examination. Evid C §771(b). See also 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §§177-181 (4th ed 2000). If the writing is not produced, the testimony of the witness concerning the matter must be stricken from the record (Evid C §771(a)), unless the writing is impossible to procure (Evid C §771(c)). Thus, while Evid C §771 may help the landlord prepare for trial and substantiate testimony concerning the amount and receipt of rent, it may require that the landlord produce the books or records in question and be cross-examined concerning them.

§12.25 (2) Introduction as a Past Recollection Recorded

When a witness's memory is not refreshed by reference to a writing, the writing may be read into evidence as a past recollection recorded (Evid C §1237) if a proper foundation is laid by establishing all of the following:

- The writing must have been made "at a time when the fact recorded in the writing actually occurred or was fresh in the witness' memory."
- The writing must have been made by the witness, under the witness's direction, or "by some other person for the purpose of recording the witness' statement at the time it was made."
- The witness must testify that the writing was a true statement of the facts.
- The writing must be "authenticated as an accurate record of the statement."

The adverse party has the right to inspect the writing and cross-examine the witness on it. Evid C §768(b). Although the writing may be read into evidence if it qualifies as past recollection recorded, only the adverse party may offer the document itself into evidence. Evid C §1237(b). See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 11 (3d ed CJA-CEB 1997).

§12.26 (3) Admissible Under Business Records Exception to Hearsay Rule

A writing may be admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule (Evid C §1271) if a proper foundation is laid by establishing all of the following:

- The writing was made in the regular course of business.
- The writing was made at or near the time of the act, condition, or event.
- The custodian or other qualified witness testifies to its identity and the mode of its preparation.
- The sources of information and method and time of preparation indicate its trustworthiness.

If these foundational requirements cannot be met, the writing may still be used to refresh the witness's memory.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlord attorneys should urge on-site managers to keep daily incident logs or records as a regular course of business.

2. Proof of Damages

§12.27 a. Damages Limited to Period From Termination of Tenancy Through Judgment

A plaintiff's failure to prove that the tenant is guilty of an unlawful detainer (CCP §1161) precludes an award of damages. Roberts v Redlich (1952) 111 CA2d 566, 244 P2d 933. When the unlawful detainer is established, however, the landlord may recover damages for the period of unlawful detainer (see §13.19).

Because CCP §1174(b) authorizes only those damages resulting from the unlawful detainer, the landlord may not recover damages (other than back rent in an action based on nonpayment of rent) for breaches of a lease or rental agreement. Vasey v California Dance Co. (1977) 70 CA3d 742, 139 CR 72; Harris v Bissell (1921) 54 CA 307, 313, 202 P 453; Chase v Peters (1918) 37 CA 358, 360, 174 P 116. See §13.18. Therefore, the court should not award a judgment for unpaid rent that accrued during the 30-day notice period, if the unlawful detainer was based solely on the 30-day notice. See Saberi v Bakhtiari (1985) 169 CA3d 509, 215 CR 359; Castle Park No. 5 v Katherine (1979) 91 CA3d Supp 6, 154 CR 498. The court, too, lacks jurisdiction to enter judgment for the tenant on the condition that the tenant immediately pay pendente lite rents. Balassy v Superior Court (1986) 181 CA3d 1148, 226 CR 817.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.28 b. Damages Based on Reasonable Rental Value

The measure of damages is the reasonable rental value of the premises during the time the tenant unlawfully withheld possession. Stockton Morris Plan Co. v Carpenter (1936) 18 CA2d 205, 210, 63 P2d 859; Flournoy v Everett (1921) 51 CA 406, 196 P 916.

Although the contractual rent may be considered as evidence of the reasonable rental value of the premises (Lehr v Crosby (1981) 123 CA3d Supp 1, 9, 177 CR 96), the court may find the reasonable rental value to be a greater or lesser amount (Harris v Bissell (1921) 54 CA 307, 313, 202 P 453). Thus, for termination of a month-to-month tenancy, if the tenant introduces evidence of the landlord's breach of the warranty of habitability, the trier of fact may consider the nature and extent of the landlord's breach in assessing and awarding either back rent or damages for the period between termination and judgment. Four Seas Inv. Corp. v International Hotel Tenants' Ass'n (1978) 81 CA3d 604, 146 CR 531.

Assuming that the tenant has properly raised a defense of breach of the warranty of habitability, the trial court must permit the tenant to introduce evidence of the breach and may not limit the tenant to an offer of proof. Espinoza v Calva (2008) 169 CA4th 1393, 1398, 87 CR3d 492. If the court finds a breach of the warranty of habitability, the court is required to perform its duties under CCP §1174.2. 169 CA4th at 1399. See §§12.37, 13.36, 13.40.

Although a court may abate rent if a residential landlord breaches the implied warranty of habitability, there is no statutory authority to permit abatement of rent for a commercial tenant who successfully defends an unlawful detainer. Underwood v Corsino (2005) 133 CA4th 132, 34 CR3d 542.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.29 (1) Determination of Reasonable Rental Value; Opinions of Landlord or Expert

An owner of property is competent to testify concerning its value, without showing any special qualifications (Evid C §813; Schroeder v Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 C3d 908, 114 CR 622), but is bound by the same rules of admissibility as any other witness (Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v Goehring (1970) 13 CA3d 58, 91 CR 375). Any other evidence of the value of real property must be given by someone familiar with property and rental values in the area. Evid C §813(a)(1); San Bernardino County Flood Control Dist. v Sweet (1967) 255 CA2d 889, 63 CR 640. Depending on the landlord's experience, it may be possible to qualify him or her as an expert based on familiarity with the rental market. Technical skill, training, or ability is not necessary; knowledge of comparable rental values may be sufficient. See San Bernardino County Flood Control Dist. v Sweet, supra; City of Stockton v Ellingwood (1929) 96 CA 708, 716, 275 P 228. Both of those cases concern market value rather than rental value, but the same principles should apply to both.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlord attorneys should consider calling an expert witness, i.e., a property manager or broker, to testify if the reasonable rental value is higher than the contract rent.

When there is no testimony establishing reasonable rental value, damages for unlawful detainer should be denied. See Stockton Morris Plan Co. v Carpenter (1936) 18 CA2d 205, 214, 63 P2d 859; Lehr v Crosby (1981) 123 CA3d Supp 1, 9, 177 CR 96.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.30 (2) Damage Award in Absence of Request for Such Relief

It has been held proper for the court to award damages for reasonable rental value even though the complaint does not pray for such relief (see Flournoy v Everett (1921) 51 CA 406, 408, 196 P 916; Holland v Eastern Outfitting Co. (1911) 16 CA 441, 117 P 562); however, this result is questionable if the tenant is unprepared to meet the landlord's proffered evidence because he or she has not been notified that damages would be sought at trial. Just as recovery cannot be awarded for damages accruing before the unlawful detainer, the judgment cannot award future damages (i.e., accruing after the date of the judgment) for continued possession, such as "$3 per day until defendant gives up possession." Cavanaugh v High (1960) 182 CA2d 714, 722, 6 CR 525. See Lehr v Crosby (1981) 123 CA3d Supp 1, 9, 177 CR 96; Pfitzer v Candeias (1921) 53 CA 737, 200 P 839.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/12 Unlawful Detainer: Trial/§12.31 c. Special Damages

§12.31 c. Special Damages

Code of Civil Procedure §1174 does not preclude an award of damages beyond that in the nature of rent; i.e., the "reasonable rental value" or "fair rental value" of the premises need not be the only measure of damages. If malice is shown, the plaintiff may be awarded statutory damages of up to $600. CCP §1174(b); see §§12.32-12.33, 12.52. See also CCP §1166(b), which permits the plaintiff to recover any damages resulting from "fraud, force or violence" that accompanied the forcible entry or forcible or unlawful detainer.

EXAMPLE: Special damages might be assessed when a tenant's malicious refusal to vacate has caused any of the following:

- Damages suffered by a landlord who promised possession to a new tenant because of the failure of defendant to vacate;
- Delay in closing of an escrow when gaining possession is a condition of sale;
- Delay in planned construction, and thus increased costs; or
- Mental distress for an extended period to a peculiarly susceptible landlord, e.g., an elderly owner-occupier.

No authority other than CCP §§1166 and 1174(b) exists for this list of special damages in unlawful detainer actions; if those statutory prescriptions are not met, tenants may oppose them on that basis. See discussion on limited issues and damages in §9.8.

(1) Pleading Statutory Damages

§12.32 (a) Proof of Statutory Damages for Defendant's Malice

Under CCP §1174(b), when a defendant is found guilty of unlawful detainer and malice is shown, the plaintiff may be awarded statutory damages of up to $600, in addition to actual damages (including rent found due). Until 1994, §1174(b) provided for treble damages. Because the requirement of "malice" remains the same, however, cases addressing malice under the former treble-damages version of the statute should continue to apply under the current statutory-damages version.

The trier of fact is directed by CCP §1174(b) to determine whether statutory damages should be awarded. Thus, a landlord who wishes to recover statutory damages should allege the tenant's malice in the complaint (see §9.40) and prove this allegation at trial. The landlord may be able to recover statutory damages that are not specifically included in the prayer, if the complaint otherwise pleads facts that justify statutory damages. See Rogers v Kabakoff (1947) 81 CA2d 487, 184 P2d 312. Counsel should be sure, however, to pray for statutory damages if the landlord wishes to recover them. See Hall v Berkell (1955) 130 CA2d 800, 279 P2d 832 (punitive damages not recoverable when there was neither a prayer for them, nor a pleading of malice, although sufficient evidence at trial to establish malice). If the tenant fails to answer or otherwise appear in the action, the landlord cannot recover statutory damages unless the complaint specifically requested them. See CCP §580; Gudarov v Hadjieff (1952) 38 C2d 412, 240 P2d 621.

PRACTICE TIP: If the landlord learns of new facts after filing the complaint that support a finding of malice, a motion to amend the complaint at the time of trial to recover damages based on malice should be made. However, an amendment to the complaint to add a new theory will not be allowed if the amendment is not based on the same general facts. North 7th St. Assocs. v Constante (2001) 92 CA4th Supp 7, 111 CR2d 815.

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/12 Unlawful Detainer: Trial/§12.33 (b) Establishing Malice

§12.33 (b) Establishing Malice

"Malice" is not defined in CCP §1174(b). For a jury instruction specifically approved for unlawful detainer actions by the Judicial Council that defines "malice" when §1174(b) applies, see CACI 4341, quoted in §12.52.

"Malice" is defined in BAJI 7.34 (more specifically than in CACI 4341) as "a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another person." The jury instruction goes on to describe malice as > that attitude or state of mind which actuates the doing of an act for some improper or wrongful motive or purpose. It does not necessarily require that the defendant be angry or vindictive or bear any actual hostility or ill will toward the plaintiff.

Malice is also defined in CACI 3940, under a general Punitive Damage Instruction, as follows:

> "Malice" means that [name of defendant] acted with intent to cause injury or that [name of defendant]'s conduct was despicable and was done with a willful and knowing disregard of the rights or safety of another. A person acts with knowing disregard when he or she is aware of the probable dangerous consequences of his or her conduct and deliberately fails to avoid those consequences.

For a sample jury instruction on statutory damages and the requisite showing of malice, see §12.52.

Malice is proved when the evidence shows that the tenant willfully, deliberately, and obstinately withheld possession of the premises against the landlord's will, with knowledge that the tenancy had terminated legally. Erbe Corp. v W & B Realty Co. (1967) 255 CA2d 773, 63 CR 462. In Erbe, the court upheld an award of treble damages under CCP §1174 when the tenant, in addition to holding over after termination of the lease, kept the new tenant out by putting armed guards and locked chains on the premises.

Under BAJI 7.34, even though actual malice is an intangible state of mind, "[m]alice, like any other fact, may be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence." To prove the tenant's malice, the landlord usually is forced to rely on circumstantial evidence, rather than direct evidence of statements or actions by the tenant. See, e.g., Sasson v Katash (1983) 146 CA3d 119, 194 CR 46 (treble damages upheld because evidence indicated that tenant had no reasonable belief that landlord was obligated to renew lease); Fifth & Broadway Partnership v Kimny, Inc. (1980) 102 CA3d 195, 204, 162 CR 271 (treble damages upheld because tenant's statements to landlord indicated "that he might as well stay because he had nothing to lose by leaving, and he might as well try to fight the [unlawful detainer action] so he could at least get something out of the space"); Buck v Morrossis (1952) 114 CA2d 461, 467, 250 P2d 270 (treble damages upheld because tenant "made no claim of right to the premises," failed to file answer, and filed demurrer after discharging attorney, for purpose of remaining in premises through Christmas season).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.34 (2) Difficulty in Obtaining Award of Statutory Damages

In seeking statutory damages, counsel should note that CCP §1174(b) "is penal in its nature and should receive a strict construction." Gwinn v Goldman (1943) 57 CA2d 393, 399, 134 P2d 915. Thus, the court will not award statutory damages if the tenant's holding over of the premises is "characterized by good faith and a reasonable belief in his right to remain." Board of Pub. Serv. Comm'rs v Spear (1924) 65 CA 214, 218, 223 P 423. Whether to award statutory damages is within the trial court's discretion even if the tenant's holding over is found to be willful. Richard v Degen & Brody, Inc. (1960) 181 CA2d 289, 294, 5 CR 263, disapproved on other grounds in Kendall v Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 498, 220 CR 818. If the cause of action for unlawful detainer fails because the tenant surrenders possession before the action is filed, there can be no award of statutory damages under CCP §1174(b). Briggs v Electronic Memories & Magnetics Corp. (1975) 53 CA3d 900, 126 CR 34. Note that there are no reported cases awarding statutory damages against a residential tenant. This fact indicates the difficulty of proving the requisite malice, and it may also reflect the penal nature of CCP §1174 and the resultant strict construction of its terms.

VII. PRINCIPAL DEFENSES

§12.35 A. That Elements of Unlawful Detainer Not Proved

If the landlord fails to introduce sufficient evidence on each element of the unlawful detainer cause of action to support a verdict or judgment (see §§12.19-12.30), the tenant may move for nonsuit under CCP §581c (jury trial) or for judgment under CCP §631.8 (court trial) at the close of the landlord's case.

EXAMPLE: If the landlord's 3-day notice fails to specify the name, telephone number, and address of the person to whom the rent payment shall be made, the usual days and hours that person is available, and additional information required under CCP §1161(2), the notice is defective and nonsuit should be granted.

PRACTICE TIP: If the defect cannot be corrected (e.g., a defective notice) and comes out during the landlord's case-in-chief, the tenant may move for judgment at the close of plaintiff's case. However, if the defect can be corrected (e.g., putting on testimony of the tenant's neighbors as to alleged acts of nuisance), the landlord may reopen the case-in-chief. In this circumstance, it is better to wait until the evidence phase has concluded and then argue the defect during closing argument. At this point, many judges will not permit the landlord to reopen.

If the tenant submits evidence to refute any of the elements of the cause of action, the trier of fact must weigh the conflicting evidence and determine whether each disputed element has been established. The tenant may also present evidence to support an affirmative defense alleged in the answer (e.g., breach of warranty of habitability; see §12.36) and argue for judgment on the grounds that even if the landlord has established a prima facie case, the affirmative defense has been proved by a preponderance of the evidence.

In an unlawful detainer action based on nonpayment of rent, if the tenant has ever paid excess rent under a rent control ordinance, all excess rent previously paid acts as a credit against future months' rent. There is no statute of limitations. Minelian v Manzella (1989) 215 CA3d 457, 263 CR 597. Excess rent paid to a previous landlord may be offset against a new landlord seeking to evict for nonpayment of rent. Baychester Shopping Ctr., Inc. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2008) 165 CA4th 1000, 81 CR3d 341. If the notice seeks as little as $5.96 more than the rent owed, it is defective. Nourafchan v Miner (1985) 169 CA3d 746, 215 CR 450. Nourafchan was disapproved in Minelian as to whether a statute of limitations operates when an offset of excess rent is applied to future months' rent, but is still good law as to the notice asking for only the rent actually due. If the notice seeks rent for specific named months, and the tenant can show that those specific months have been paid by checks or money orders designating that the funds must be applied to the specific months, the notice may be defective. CC §1479. This is so, even if rent is owed for other, earlier months. Landlord attorneys should argue that the law does not require that a 3-day notice identify the months for which the rent is outstanding; therefore, any reference to specific dates is superfluous and, if the amount demanded is correct, the notice should be declared valid. See CCP §1161(2).

A problem of proof may arise when the tenant pays rent in cash, but the landlord refuses to give receipts. Civil Code §1499 provides that a debtor may require a written receipt for cash paid to the creditor.

NOTE: Under CCP §1161(2), if a landlord does not supply a tenant with an address where rent can be delivered personally by the tenant, then it will be conclusively presumed that the landlord received the rent if a tenant can show proof of mailing. It is therefore essential that a landlord have a place where rent can be personally delivered by the tenant to avoid this presumption.

B. Breach of Warranty of Habitability in Nonpayment of Rent Cases

§12.36 1. General Elements of Defense

If a residential unlawful detainer action is based on nonpayment of rent, the tenant may defend by alleging that the landlord has breached the implied warranty of habitability. The tenant has the burden of proof (see §§12.53-12.54A). The defense is based on the theory that the covenants of the lease are interdependent, i.e., if the landlord breaches the implied warranty of habitability, the tenant is relieved of the obligation to pay rent. Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704. See §3.35. Breach of the implied warranty is an affirmative defense; compliance with the warranty is not an element of the landlord's case. De La Vara v Municipal Court (1979) 98 CA3d 638, 159 CR 648. If the tenant proves a breach of the warranty of habitability, however, the tenant is entitled to possession and a conditional judgment (including a rent reduction) in his/her favor. Hyatt v Tedesco (2002) 96 CA4th Supp 62, 117 CR2d 921. The court in Hyatt ruled that whether such a breach is "substantial" is a matter of law and can be determined by an appellate court. For discussion of proving the elements of a breach of the implied warranty defense, see §§3.24-3.31. On procedures for invoking and rebutting breach of the implied warranty in an unlawful detainer action, see §§3.22-3.23. On orders that the rent be paid into court while the defense is being litigated, see §§3.34, 11.56-11.60. If the tenant proves a defense of breach of the warranty of habitability, the court is required to make the findings required by CCP §1174.2 and to give the tenant 5 days from the date of judgment to pay the back rent at the rate set by the court. Espinoza v Calva (2008) 169 CA4th 1393, 87 CR3d 492.

Under CC §1942.3, in any unlawful detainer action, the tenant may establish a presumption of breach of the statutory habitability requirements (see CC §§1941-1941.1) if there has been no abatement of conditions for 60 days after a notice to abate nuisance or repair substandard conditions has been issued to the landlord by a public official. On the interaction between the statutory habitability requirements and the implied warranty of habitability, see §§3.24-3.25. On the differences in remedies, see §§3.15A, 3.32-3.41.

If breach of the implied warranty of habitability is alleged as a defense in an unlawful detainer action, failure to provide for it specifically in any settlement may mean that the tenant is still free to allege the breach in a subsequent action for damages. See Landeros v Pankey (1995) 39 CA4th 1167, 46 CR2d 165, discussed in §3.35.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.37 2. Adjudication of Reasonable Rent

If the tenant fails to prove the landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability (see §12.36), judgment is entered for the landlord for possession and damages. If the tenant proves that the landlord breached the warranty, the trier of fact must determine a "reasonable rent" for the premises (i.e., contract rent minus damages from the breach; see §§3.36-3.41), and must allow the tenant a reasonable time to pay this rent as a condition to retaining possession of the premises. See Espinoza v Calva (2008) 169 CA4th 1393, 87 CR3d 492; Lee v Vignoli (1979) 98 CA3d Supp 24, 160 CR 79. See also Golden Gateway Ctr. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1999) 73 CA4th 1204, 87 CR2d 332 (discomfort during repairs to unit does not entitle tenant to reduction under rent control law). If the tenant fails to pay the determined "reasonable rent," the landlord may obtain a writ of possession and evict the tenant. If the tenant proves the breach, the court may retain jurisdiction and order the landlord to correct the breaches of the warranty of habitability. CCP §1174.2(a)(3).

See §§13.36, 13.40 for discussion of CCP §1174.2, which directs that the landlord is the prevailing party when a tenant who successfully establishes the defense of breach of any warranty of habitability fails to pay the reasonable rental value, as determined by the court, within a 5-day period.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.38 C. Retaliatory Eviction for Tenant's Exercise of Legal Rights

The tenant may defend against an unlawful detainer action by alleging that the landlord's motive in bringing the action is to retaliate against the tenant for some legally protected conduct. (For extensive discussion of the retaliatory eviction defense, see §§8.109-8.136.)

The basic retaliatory eviction statute (CC §1942.5(a)) provides that a landlord who retaliates against a tenant for complaining about the tenantability of the premises may not recover possession within 180 days after the date of the oral complaint if the tenant is not in default on rent payments. Under CC §1942.5(a), the tenant's attorney must prove as three facts the following:

(1) The tenant complained to an appropriate agency regarding the tenantability of the premises, or otherwise exercised tenants' rights under CC §§1940-1954.1;

(2) The tenant is not in default in rent payments; and

(3) The landlord retaliated against the tenant within 180 days of the tenant's complaint by attempting to recover possession of the subject property.

If the tenant proves those basic facts, it appears that the tenant has shown the eviction to be retaliatory. For an extensive discussion of CC §1942.5, see §§8.110-8.117.

Under CC §1942.5(c), the tenant generally bears the burden of producing evidence that the landlord's conduct was in retaliation for the tenant's participation in a tenants' association. See §8.130. In Western Land Office, Inc. v Cervantes (1985) 175 CA3d 724, 741, 220 CR 784, the court rejected a tenant's contention that CC §1942.5 creates a rebuttable presumption of retaliation and formulated the following procedure for retaliation cases (175 CA3d at 742):

- The tenant must prove the "landlord's retaliatory motive by a preponderance of the evidence."
- "If the landlord takes action for a valid reason not listed in the unlawful detainer statutes, he must give notice to the tenant of the ground upon which he proceeds." This requirement is taken from CC §1942.5(e), but the court failed to clarify if and when the notice must specify a reason. The apparent meaning of the phrase, "not listed in the unlawful detainer statutes" is that when the eviction is by means of a 30-day notice under CC §1946, no reason for giving notice or for filing an unlawful detainer action, other than the intent to terminate the tenancy, is required. Code of Civil Procedure §1161(1)-(5) lists a series of eviction grounds. Included is the landlord's right to evict a tenant whose tenancy has been terminated under CC §1946 but who has failed to move out. CCP §1161(5).
- If the tenant controverts the reason given in the notice, the landlord must prove the truth of the stated reason by a preponderance of the evidence.

Proof of the existence of a valid reason to evict, however, does not necessarily prove good faith, i.e., that the landlord is seeking to evict because of the valid reason rather than to punish the tenant for his or her exercise of some right. Therefore, even if the landlord proves the existence of a valid reason, the tenant may prove retaliation by showing that the landlord does not seek to evict in good faith. In an eviction under the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) (see §7.64G), the rule is somewhat different. See Drouet v Superior Court (2003) 31 C4th 583, 3 CR3d 205. In Drouet, the supreme court held that if the tenant contends under CC §1942.5 that the landlord's intent to take the unit off the rental housing market is retaliatory, the landlord must establish by a preponderance of the evidence the existence of a bona fide intent to withdraw the property from the rental market. If the landlord is able to convince the trier of fact of a bona fide intent to withdraw the property, the landlord may evict the tenants and withdraw the property despite having a retaliatory motive. For a discussion of the application of the common law doctrine of retaliatory eviction to commercial tenancies, see California Eviction Defense Manual §19.25 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

PRACTICE TIP: If the landlord has a history of tenant complaints about habitability issues and is attempting to terminate the tenancy of a complaining tenant, or if the tenant has formed a tenant association or "asserted any other right" within 180 days of the serving of a termination notice, it is advisable that the landlord include the reason for eviction in the notice. Although this changes the initial burden of proof in the action, it avoids the confusion of CCP §1942.5(e).

VIII. AMENDMENTS TO CONFORM TO PROOF

§12.39 A. Liberality in Granting Amendments

When evidence produced at trial to support a claim or defense is inconsistent with allegations in the party's pleading, the inconsistency may be regarded as a material variance (CCP §469), an immaterial variance (CCP §470), or a failure of proof (CCP §471). For material or immaterial variances, the court may order the pleading amended to conform to the proof. CCP §§469-470. A complaint or answer may be amended in this manner at any stage of trial. Normally, the courts are liberal in granting such amendments, but if an amendment considered to be a material variance prejudices the other party, the amendment may be granted on "such terms as may be just." CCP §469. See, e.g., Glaser v Meyers (1982) 137 CA3d 770, 777, 187 CR 242 (even amendment that adds new and separate cause of action is allowed if based on same general set of facts and does not prejudice party against whom it is offered). But an amendment to a complaint may be denied when it adds a new cause of action not based on the same general facts, and the tenant will be prejudiced. North 7th St. Assocs. v Constante (2001) 92 CA4th Supp 7, 111 CR2d 815. See also Garcia v Roberts (2009) 173 CA4th 900, 93 CR3d 286 (amendment proposed during trial by original plaintiff's successor to allege written lease option contract in action originally brought on oral contract unfairly prejudiced defendants because original plaintiff had denied existence of written lease in deposition and could not testify at trial); Babcock v Antis (1979) 94 CA3d 823, 156 CR 673 (failure of complaint to allege that amounts prayed for were within municipal court's jurisdiction, correctable by amendment to conform to proof); Feigin v Kutchor (1951) 105 CA2d 744, 234 P2d 264 (when issue fully litigated at trial, trial court had power and duty to permit amendment to answer denying plaintiff's right to possession). See generally California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§18.103-18.123 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/12 Unlawful Detainer: Trial/§12.40 B. Scope of Amendment Under CCP §1173; Supplemental Versus Amended Complaint

§12.40 B. Scope of Amendment Under CCP §1173; Supplemental Versus Amended Complaint

Counsel should be aware of CCP §1173, which provides:

> When it appears from the evidence that the defendant has been guilty of either a forcible entry or a forcible or unlawful detainer, and other than the offense charged in the complaint, the judge must order that such complaint be forthwith amended to conform to such proofs ….

One court ruled that §1173 does not apply to motions to amend made before an unlawful detainer trial commences. In North 7th St. Assocs. v Constante (2001) 92 CA4th Supp 7, 111 CR2d 815, for example, the Los Angeles Superior Court, Appellate Department, held that the trial court abused its discretion in permitting a landlord to orally amend an unlawful detainer action immediately before trial to add a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit when the original case was based on a 30-day notice to terminate tenancy. In allowing the landlord to state a new and different cause of action, the trial court had failed to give the tenant the opportunity to investigate the new allegation or call rebuttal witnesses. Additional defenses were available to the tenant under the new allegation of nonpayment of rent. The appellate court held that §1173 only affects the discretion of the judge to deny amendment or grant a continuance after evidence is admitted. At the time that the motion to amend the complaint was made and granted, there was no evidence before the court, as trial had not yet commenced.

In motions made under §1173, the requirement that the court allow the landlord to amend its complaint is softened by the tenant's right to a continuance if the tenant shows good cause. Few cases have interpreted §1173, and it is unclear just how far it extends in permitting the plaintiff to amend the complaint to conform to the proof.

From a tenant perspective, the section permits minor amendments, such as an amendment to change the date of service of a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit, provided that the amended date is not fatal to the cause of action by showing that the court action was filed prematurely (i.e., before the 3-day period expired). Beyond that, it is unclear what types of amendments §1173 authorizes. Arguably, a plaintiff should not be able to allege an entirely different cause of action, e.g., one based on a 30-day notice, after the tenant successfully proved defenses to an action based on a 3-day notice if the tenant can show that at least one defense to the amended cause of action would have been entirely different (see authorities discussed in §§8.28, 8.78, 9.44). Under Glaser v Meyers (1982) 137 CA3d 770, 187 CR 242 (see §12.39), a cause of action based on a different notice would not be based on the same facts and could prejudice the tenant.

From the landlord perspective, it is arguable that by expressly providing for actions "other than the offense charged" the statute should allow for alternative causes of action and theories based on the facts that have been proven, or can be proven at trial. Merely stating the general rule regarding amendments (see §12.39) does not answer the threshold question of whether varying theories of unlawful detainer are separate causes of action or, instead, just alternative means of pleading the same cause of action for unlawful detainer. Even if each separately accruing basis for unlawful detainer is deemed a separate cause of action, §1173 arguably was intended to supersede general "amendment to conform to proof" procedures and differs from "general" law.

Matters occurring after the complaint has been filed may generally be raised only by a supplemental complaint, filed after a noticed motion, and not by an amendment to the original complaint to conform to proof. Earp v Nobmann (1981) 122 CA3d 270, 175 CR 767. Although a supplemental complaint adds additional matters to the original complaint, it cannot be used to add causes of action that have not accrued at the time the original complaint was filed. 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1250 (5th ed 2005). Evidence of a notice not alleged in the complaint should be subject to exclusion under the objection that it would be irrelevant, subject of course to the above discussion of what can properly be raised by way of amendment to a complaint.

Counsel for the landlord might urge the court to allow amendment to state a new cause of action under CCP §1173 based on an offer of proof of the service of the notice. The tenant can counter by attempting to show prejudice. If the service date indicates that the tenant was not given the full 3-day period to pay rent, that fact is a defense to the action. See §§8.43-8.45, 9.44. If the notice was not received, the failure of service can be raised as a substantive defense. See §§8.24, 9.6.

From a tenant perspective, new causes of action should not be added to the case at the time of trial. "Amendments" to a complaint are made to allege facts that existed when the original complaint was filed. CCP §473. A landlord may "supplement" the complaint with leave of court to allege relevant facts that occurred after the original complaint was filed, but the supplemental complaint cannot be used to allege facts constituting an entirely new cause of action. CCP §464(a). If the landlord acquires a new cause of action after filing the first unlawful detainer, neither an amendment to the complaint nor a supplemental complaint is applicable. Instead, the landlord must serve the new notice, wait until the time expires, then file a new unlawful detainer case. The landlord may, of course, move to consolidate the two cases for trial.

IX. JURY INSTRUCTIONS

§12.41 A. General Sources of Jury Instructions

Jury instructions are designed to inform the jurors of the law applicable to the case, and to assist them in the deliberation process. Various general instructions provide guidance to the jury on the nature of direct and circumstantial proof, the distinction between formal proof and counsels' argument, the credibility of witnesses, and the like. Because these subjects are commonly considered to be noncontroversial, the pattern instructions in California Civil Jury Instructions are routinely used. These instructions are usually referred to as CACI from the Judicial Council's California Civil Jury Instructions; or as BAJI, the acronym from the earlier title (Book of Approved Jury Instructions). On jury instructions generally, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chap 20 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995). On CACI and BAJI instructions and how to request them, see Civ Proc During Trial §§20.12-20.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.42 B. Specific Instructions for Unlawful Detainer Cases

California Civil Jury Instructions 4300-4341 specifically apply to unlawful detainer actions. In December 2007, CACI VF-4300-VF-4302 were added as general and specific verdict forms for use in unlawful detainer actions. The CACI do not cover all unlawful detainer situations. The Judicial Council did not mandate the use of CACI to the exclusion of other jury instructions in any event. The CACI are designated the "official instructions for use" in California state courts and are recommended for use unless a judge "finds that a different instruction would more accurately state the law and be understood by jurors." Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(a), (e).

The Book of Approved Jury Instructions (BAJI) is not geared to the specific facts of unlawful detainer cases or to the law applicable to those facts. Because each party has the right to have the jury instructed on all theories of the party's case that are supported by the pleadings, and all evidence or any inferences that may properly be drawn from the evidence (see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§20.7-20.8 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995)), the parties to an unlawful detainer action must prepare special instructions on their respective legal theories, unless the trial judge rules that one or more of the CACI instructions will be given.

Required instructions normally cover the burden of proof (based on BAJI 2.60, CACI 200), the required elements of the landlord's case (see §§12.19-12.34, 12.46-12.52), and the tenant's defenses (see §§12.35-12.38, 12.53-12.63C). Because of their frequent use and complexity, sample instructions on the defenses of breach of the implied warranty of habitability (see §§3.24-3.48) and retaliatory eviction (see §§8.109-8.136) are presented in §§12.53-12.59 and 12.60-12.63, respectively. Counsel may need to draft specific instructions to cover other potential defenses.

For additional instructions applicable to unlawful detainer actions, see California Eviction Defense Manual, App II (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

§12.43 C. Procedure for Filing Proposed Instructions; Filing Deadlines

In civil cases, the right to have the jury instructed on appropriate factual and legal theories is conditioned on the parties' filing proposed instructions before the first witness is sworn. CCP §607a; see Agarwal v Johnson (1979) 25 C3d 932, 950, 160 CR 141. (On procedural requirements generally, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§20.12-20.36 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).) A party who fails to submit specific proposed instructions may not argue on appeal that the trial court's failure to instruct on that issue was error. Willden v Washington Nat'l Ins. Co. (1976) 18 C3d 631, 135 CR 69. Although the court's complete failure to instruct on a crucial issue may be reversible error (see Agarwal v Johnson, supra), counsel should file proposed special instructions to support all factual and legal theories. In addition, although trial courts have the power to modify or correct proposed instructions that they consider to be deficient, they generally are under no duty to do so. See Civ Proc During Trial §§20.37-20.41.

Counsel should be thoroughly familiar with filing deadlines in the court in which they are scheduled to appear. Local rules or customs may require that the parties file or exchange proposed instructions before trial begins, or may postpone the filing of instructions until some later time, e.g., when the plaintiff rests his or her case. See Civ Proc During Trial §20.34. Because unanticipated issues may arise at trial, the parties have the right to present additional instructions as warranted by the evidence. CCP §607a. The opportunity to file additional instructions, however, is no excuse for not filing the initial set of proposed instructions at the appropriate time.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.44 D. Format

California Rules of Court 2.1055 requires that each set of proposed jury instructions have a cover page containing the caption of the case and stating the name of the party proposing the instructions, and an index listing all proposed instructions. In the index, approved jury instructions (i.e., Judicial Council's California Civil Jury Instructions—CACI) must be identified by their reference numbers, and special instructions must be numbered consecutively. The index must contain a checklist that the court may use to indicate whether the instruction was given as proposed, given as modified, refused, or withdrawn. Each proposed instruction must be on a separate page or pages, contain the instruction number and title of the instruction at the top of the first page of the instruction, and be prepared without any blank lines or unused bracketed portions. The instruction must be in a form suitable to allow it to be read directly to the jury. Special instructions require a citation of authorities at the bottom of the page that support the specific instruction; approved instructions do not require any citation. No local court form or rule may depart from the requirements of Rule 2.1055.

Although the form and format of preparing jury instructions for submission to the court are governed exclusively by Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055, local rules or the trial court may determine the form and format of jury instructions that are "presented to the jury." Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(a)(2), (e). All proposed instructions must be printed on recycled paper. Cal Rules of Ct 2.101. The instructions must be in the form and format for court papers specified in Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b). See generally California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chap 20 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

PRACTICE TIP: Always review Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050 and 2.1055 before preparing proposed jury instructions; the rules are frequently amended. The Judicial Council instruction forms have a special box for designating a case as a limited civil case. On attorney-drafted pleadings, the logical place would be underneath the title of the court. Because the case numbers used in limited civil cases may differ from those in unlimited civil cases, no confusion, to the knowledge of this author, has resulted nor has any of her pleadings been refused for failure to include the words "Limited Civil Case."

§12.45 E. Sample Jury Instructions

Sections 12.46-12.63C contain sample jury instructions covering allocation of the burden of proof, elements of a cause of action for unlawful detainer, and principal affirmative defenses.

WARNING: Because the facts of the particular case play the primary role in determining the actual content of jury instructions, these sample instructions are printed here to illustrate possible approaches, and are not intended as forms that may be used in every case. Using these samples as a guide, counsel should draft proposed instructions tailored to the facts of the case.

BURDEN OF PROOF; PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE

In this action, Landlord (who is the plaintiff in this action) has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence all facts necessary to prove the following issues:

1. That a landlord-tenant relationship was created between the Landlord and the Tenant (who is the defendant in this action);

2. That the landlord-tenant relationship was legally terminated by Landlord;

3. That Tenant remains in possession of the premises;

4. The amount of rent owed by Tenant up to and through the date that the relationship was terminated; and

5. The amount of damages suffered by Landlord because of Tenant's unlawful remaining in possession. These damages are calculated from the date that the unlawful detainer of the premises began, i.e., the day following the date that the notice terminated the tenancy, through the date of trial.

[Add If breach of warranty of habitability defense is raised]

In this action, Tenant has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence all facts necessary to prove the following issues:

A. That Landlord breached the implied warranty of habitability;

B. That Tenant was injured because of that breach; and

C. The amount of damages suffered by Tenant as a result of the breach.

[Continue]

A preponderance of the evidence is evidence that has more convincing force and greater probability of truth, when weighed against the evidence opposed to it. If the evidence is evenly balanced, so that the evidence on neither side of an issue preponderates, then your finding on that issue must be against the party who has the burden of proving it.

In determining whether an issue has been proved by a preponderance of the evidence, you must consider all the evidence bearing on that issue, regardless of who produced it.

Comment: See format requirements in §12.44. This sample is based on BAJI 2.60 (CACI 200), but is substantially modified for use in unlawful detainer actions. Further modification may be required under CC §1942.3 if the defense is based on breach of statutory habitability requirements (see CC §§1941-1942.4) in addition to, or instead of, the implied warranty of habitability. For discussion see California Eviction Defense Manual §§14.26, 15.26 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

This instruction is intended to apply to the usual case in which the parties are landlord and tenant. If the defendant is an employee, agent, or licensee of the plaintiff (see CCP §1161(1)), or the plaintiff claims to have acquired the property by foreclosure (see CCP §§1161a, 1161b), the first two numbered paragraphs on the landlord's burden of proof would have to be changed. See Cheney v Trauzettel (1937) 9 C2d 158, 160, 69 P2d 832 (plaintiff-purchaser must prove foreclosure sale complied with statutory law and deed of trust, followed by purchase at sale), discussed in §§8.68-8.68E, 10.54.

For an introductory jury instruction approved by the Judicial Council, see CACI 4300. On the elements of the landlord's case, see §12.19. On the implied warranty of habitability defense, see §§3.24-3.48. For further instructions on habitability, see §§12.53, 12.59. For sample instructions on the burden of proof when the landlord's retaliatory motive is raised as a defense, see §§12.62-12.63.

FACTS PLAINTIFF MUST ESTABLISH

In this action for unlawful detainer, by which Landlord seeks to recover possession of the premises together with rent and damages, Landlord must establish the following facts by a preponderance of the evidence introduced at trial:

1. Landlord is the _ _[e.g., owner, manager, lessee]_ _ of the premises;

2. Landlord and Tenant entered into the relationship of _ _[e.g., landlord and tenant, sublessor and sublessee]_ _ by _ _[executing/signing]_ _ _ _[an oral/a written]_ _ _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ concerning the premises owned by Landlord;

3. Tenant took possession of the premises under the _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _;

[Add if action is based on nonpayment of rent]

4. Under the _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ the agreed-on monthly rent for the premises was $_ _[amount]_ _.

5. Tenant is in possession of the premises at the present time.

[Continue]

[Add if 30-day/60 day notice was served]

[6.] Landlord served or caused to be served on Tenant, in a legally sufficient manner, a properly worded _ _[30-day/60-day]_ _ notice terminating the landlord-tenant relationship;

[7.] After expiration of the term of the _ _[30-day/60-day]_ _ notice, Tenant refused to vacate the premises; and

[Add if 3-day notice was served]

[8.] After Tenant's failure to pay the agreed-on rent on its due date, Landlord served or caused to be served on Tenant, in a legally sufficient manner, a properly worded 3-day notice to pay rent or quit the premises;

[9.] On expiration of the 3-day period, Tenant neither paid the amount of rent demanded in the notice nor vacated the premises; and

[Continue]

A tenant of real property is guilty of unlawful detainer when:

A. The Tenant continues in possession of the premises after the landlord-tenant relationship has been legally terminated _ _[e.g., after 30 days from valid service of a 30-day notice/after 60 days from valid service of a 60-day notice)]_ _; or

B. The Tenant has been properly served with a valid 3-day notice to pay rent or quit, but continues in possession of the premises after failing to pay the rent within the specified 3-day period.

Comment: See format requirements in §12.44. See CCP §1161(1)-(2). This instruction provides alternative language for unlawful detainer actions based on termination of a month-to-month tenancy (see §8.69), or termination for nonpayment of rent (see §8.26). This instruction must be adapted to fit the facts of the particular case, because it must include all disputed elements of the cause of action. This sample instruction is intended to apply to the usual case in which the parties are landlord and tenant. If the defendant is an employee, agent, or licensee of the plaintiff (see CCP §1161(1)), or the plaintiff claims to have acquired the property by foreclosure (see CCP §§1161a, 1161b), the first two to four numbered paragraphs on the landlord's burden of proof would have to be modified. See Cheney v Trauzettel (1937) 9 C2d 158, 160, 69 P2d 832. For similar jury instructions approved by the Judicial Council, see CACI 4302, 4306.

SERVICE OF NOTICES; COMPUTATION OF TIME

For a _ _[30-day termination notice/60-day termination notice/3-day notice to pay rent or quit]_ _ to terminate the landlord-tenant relationship effectively, it must be served in a legally sufficient manner, i.e., by one of the following methods:

1. Notice server delivers the notice to Tenant personally;

2. If Tenant cannot be found at his or her residence or usual place of business, notice server leaves a copy with a person of suitable age and discretion at either place, and mails a copy to Tenant at his or her residence; or

3. If Tenant's place of residence or business cannot be ascertained, or a person of suitable age and discretion cannot be found there, notice server posts a copy in a conspicuous place on the premises, delivers a copy to a person residing on the premises (if such a person can be found), and mails a copy to Tenant at the premises.

[Add only if 30-day or 60-day notice]

[4.] By sending the notice by certified or registered mail addressed to the Tenant.

Comment: If proper service of notice is in dispute, it may be necessary to tailor the instruction to the facts in dispute (e.g., the requisites of personal service or whether the landlord attempted personal service before using substituted or conspicuous service). On requisites of service of the notice, see §§8.62-8.67, 8.74, 8.76. Note that actual receipt of an improperly served notice may cure any defects in its service. See §8.66.

[Continue]

[Add one of the following alternatives on when the 3-day notice period begins to run]

[Alternative 1: Time runs from tenant's receipt of notice]

When a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit is served by either method 2 or 3 above, the 3-day period in which Tenant may pay the rent demanded, and remain in possession of the premises, begins to run on the date that Tenant actually receives the mailed copy of the notice.

[Alternative 2: Time runs from date notice mailed]

When a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit is served by either method 2 or 3 above, the 3-day period in which Tenant may pay the rent demanded, and remain in possession of the premises, begins to run on the date that the notice is left or posted and mailed.

Comment: There is a split of decisional law among the appellate districts, and uncertainty in the statutes, on the issue of when the time begins to run on a 3-day notice not personally served. Under a strict application of CCP §1013(a), which was rejected in Losornio v Motta (1998) 67 CA4th 110, 78 CR2d 799, the 3-day period in which tenant may pay the rent demanded and remain in possession of the premises begins to run 5 days after the mailing of the 3-day notice, for a total of 8 days. Compare Davidson v Quinn (1982) 138 CA3d Supp 9, 188 CR 421 (time begins to run when tenant actually receives notice), with Losornio v Motta, supra, and Walters v Meyers (1990) 226 CA3d

Supp 15, 277 CR 316 (time begins to run on date notice posted and mailed). See discussion in §§8.29, 8.65. The above options must be modified if the action is based on a 30-day notice. See §§8.69, 8.74, 8.77.

[Continue]

Service of a notice on one of two or more Cotenants also constitutes service of the same notice on the other Cotenants, if it is addressed to them.

Comment: See §§8.67, 8.76. When two or more tenants hold their interest in the premises jointly or in common, service of a notice to quit on one terminates the tenancy of all cotenants. University of S. Cal. v Weiss (1962) 208 CA2d 759, 25 CR 475. See also Four Seas Inv. Corp. v International Hotel Tenants' Ass'n (1978) 81 CA3d 604, 146 CR 531.

In determining the date on which a landlord-tenant relationship was terminated, you must exclude the date on which the notice was served on Tenant and begin counting on the day after service of the notice. If the last day of the notice period falls on a holiday, Tenant's time to comply with the notice is extended to include the next day that is not a holiday. The term "holiday" includes Saturdays and Sundays as well as all other days officially designated as holidays.

Comment: See CCP §§10, 12-13. See also §§8.28-8.29, 8.42, 8.65, 8.77. See jury instruction format requirements in §12.44. For similar instructions approved by the Judicial Council, see CACI 4303, 4305, 4307.

CALCULATION OF RENT AND DAMAGES

Landlord claims to be entitled to recover both unpaid rent and damages. The amounts of rent and damages, if any, to which Landlord is entitled are computed _ _[before setoff, if there has been a breach of the implied warranty of habitability]_ _ in accordance with the following instructions:

The landlord-tenant relationship terminates under the law on the date of expiration of a _ _[3-day notice to pay rent or quit/30-day termination notice/60-day notice]_ _.

"Rent" is the sum due to Landlord under the terms of the lease or rental agreement before termination of the landlord-tenant relationship and as long as the relationship remains in existence. Rent is the consideration that Tenant has agreed to pay to Landlord for occupancy and use of the premises, plus the amount of any increase to which Tenant has acquiesced by remaining on the premises after the effective date of a notice of a rent increase.

The amount of rent to which Landlord is entitled, which must be awarded if you find in Landlord's favor under these instructions, is the sum that has accrued as of the date on which a valid 3-day notice to pay rent or quit expired.

When Tenant fails to pay rent on the due date, Landlord may serve on Tenant a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit. If Tenant fails both to pay the rent and to leave the premises, Landlord may recover in an unlawful detainer action both the amount of rent accrued as of the date on which a valid notice to pay rent or quit expired, and damages.

"Damages" is the amount that Tenant is obligated to pay to Landlord after the landlord-tenant relationship has been terminated, i.e., after expiration of a _ _[3-day notice to pay rent or quit/30-day termination notice/60-day termination notice]_ _. As used in these instructions, damages means the reasonable or fair rental value of the premises, i.e., the reasonable value for occupancy and use of the premises for the period commencing on the first day on which termination of the relationship is effective, and ending on the date of the jury's verdict.

Landlord must establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, (1) the rate of rent that Tenant was obligated to pay by the terms of the lease or rental agreement, including any valid modifications of that agreement; and (2) the fair rental value of the premises during the period for which Landlord claims damages.

"Fair rental value" for purposes of computing damages is not necessarily the same as the rent on which the parties agreed in the lease or rental agreement, but may be a greater or lesser amount.

In determining the fair rental value of the premises, you may consider the opinion of value given by their owner. You may also consider the opinion of any other witness who has testified to the value of the premises, and who has knowledge of the rental value of similar rental units in the area in which the premises are located.

Comment: On the burden of proof, see Haig v Hogan (1947) 82 CA2d 876, 187 P2d 426. The portion of this instruction relating to proof of rent must be modified or deleted if the unlawful detainer action is based on anything other than a rent default by the tenant. See CCP §1174(b). On the distinction between fair rental value and the contract rent, see Harris v Bissell (1921) 54 CA 307, 202 P 453; Glouberman v Coffey (1955) 138 CA2d Supp 906, 292 P2d 681.

DAMAGES: DEFINITION OF "FAIR RENTAL VALUE"

The "fair rental value" of the premises is the highest price on the date of valuation that would be agreed on (1) by a landlord who is willing to rent, but under no necessity or obligation to do so; and (2) by a prospective tenant who is ready, willing, and able to rent, but under no necessity to do so—each having full knowledge of the uses and purposes for which the property is reasonably adaptable and available.

The fair rental value of the premises does not relate to their potential worth to Landlord for speculation or possible use.

WITNESSES' OPINIONS CONCERNING FAIR RENTAL VALUE

You must determine the fair rental value of the premises only from the opinions of witnesses who have been permitted by the Court to express their opinions on the rental value. Thus, in assessing damages, you may not find that the rental value of the premises is either less or more than that to which such witnesses have testified.

The owner of the property, and any witness who has knowledge of rental values in the area in which the premises are located, may state an opinion of the rental value and the reasons for his or her opinion. You must consider evidence that has been received from such witnesses regarding the reasons for their respective opinions of rental value, and all other evidence concerning the premises and other similar property, for the limited purpose of enabling you to understand and weigh the testimony of the witnesses.

You should consider each witness's opinion by weighing his or her qualifications and reasons for the opinion. Give each opinion the weight to which you consider it to be entitled. You must resolve any conflict in the testimony of the witnesses by weighing each opinion against the others, taking into consideration the reasons given for the opinion; the facts relied on in forming it; and the witness's relative credibility, expertise, skill, knowledge, experience, training, and education.

STATUTORY DAMAGES; "MALICE"

If Tenant is found guilty of unlawful detainer, and actual malice is shown in Tenant's holding over of the premises, Landlord may be awarded statutory damages of up to $600 in addition to actual damages.

Landlord has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that Tenant held over the premises with malice. "Malice" means a willingness to vex, harass, annoy, or injure another person. To be malicious, the conduct must be willful, intentional, deliberate, and obstinate. Malice may be shown by direct evidence of declarations of hatred or ill will, or by indirect inferences from acts and conduct (e.g., by a showing that Tenant's conduct was willful and intentional, and undertaken in reckless disregard of the possible results).

Comment: On recovery of statutory damages authorized by CCP §1174(b), see §§12.32-12.33. Malice is not defined in §1174(b). For a definition of "malice," see Brewer v Second Baptist Church (1948) 32 C2d 791, 197 P2d 713; Dietrich v Litton Indus., Inc. (1970) 12 CA3d 704, 90 CR 856. See also authorities cited in §§12.32-12.33.

For an instruction specifically approved for unlawful detainer actions by the Judicial Council that defines "malice" when §1174(b) applies, see CACI 4341, which has a different definition of "malice" from the above quoted instruction. It states: "A tenant acts with malice if he or she willfully continues to occupy the property with knowledge that he or she no longer has the right to do so." The Judicial Council did not mandate the use of CACI to the exclusion of other jury instructions. The CACI are designated the "official instructions for use" in California state courts and are recommended for use unless a judge "finds that a different instruction would more accurately state the law and be understood by jurors." Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(a), (e).

For another definition of "malice" arising from the general punitive damages statute, see CACI 3940, which also has a different definition of "malice" from the above quoted instruction and states: "Malice" means that [name of defendant] acted with intent to cause injury or that [name of defendant]'s conduct was despicable and was done with a willful and knowing disregard of the rights or safety of another. A person acts with knowing disregard when he or she is aware of the probable dangerous consequences of his or her conduct and deliberately fails to avoid those consequences.

If the conduct on which the landlord relies in seeking statutory damages falls under constitutional guaranties (e.g., freedom of speech and association), the landlord might be held to a heavier burden of proof, i.e., "clear and convincing evidence." See People v Thomas (1977) 19 C3d 630, 637, 139 CR 594; Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook §45.1 (3d ed CJA-CEB 1997). See jury instruction format requirements in §12.44.

§12.53 5. Habitability of Premises

For detailed discussion of substantive issues raised by the defense of breach of the implied warranty of habitability, see §§3.24-3.48. For discussion of evidentiary presumptions and allocation of the burden of proof, see §§12.36, 12.54, 12.54A. See also California Eviction Defense Manual §§19.11-19.17 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993) for a discussion of the implied warranty of habitability and its potential effects on an unlawful detainer action in a commercial lease.

The tenant generally has the burden of proving breach of the implied warranty by a preponderance of the evidence. If the evidence warrants, the court must instruct the jury on the defense. In some rent-controlled jurisdictions, a landlord is required to plead and prove compliance with the warranty of habitability as an essential element of an unlawful detainer case. See §§9.16, 10.64. See also §7.75. Although tenant advocates have argued that compliance with the warranty of habitability should be an element of the landlord's burden in every case, no reported case supports this position. In De La Vara v Municipal Court (1979) 98 CA3d 638, 159 CR 648, the court held that the landlord need not allege compliance with the warranty in the complaint. In light of this decision, and in the absence of a local ordinance prescribing otherwise, a court is unlikely to deviate from the traditional view of a breach of the warranty as an affirmative defense that the tenant must prove in order to prevail.

In Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 110, 176 CR 112, an affirmative suit by the tenant for damages for breach of the implied warranty, the court approved the following instruction as "a correct statement of the law" and "necessary to the jury's understanding of the doctrine": The "fact that plaintiffs remained in premises which they claim were uninhabitable does not mean, under the law, that the premises were therefore habitable." The court also held that the trial court should have instructed the jury on the legislature's finding of a housing crisis (see former Health & S C §33250, repealed by Stats 1996, ch 799, §15) to explain (1) why a tenant might remain in a dwelling with habitability problems, and (2) why the landlord's failure to comply with relevant building and housing code provisions materially affecting the tenant's health and safety would constitute a breach. 120 CA3d at 111. An instruction may also restate the standards set forth in CC §1941.1, if applicable to the facts, regardless of whether the tenant utilized the repair-and-deduct remedy. Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 171 CR 707. (See §§3.12-3.15 on the repair-and-deduct remedy.) On circumstances that constitute a substantial breach of the implied warranty of habitability, see Hyatt v Tedesco (2002) 96 CA4th Supp 62, 117 CR2d 921 (conditions affecting tenant's health and safety, including leaky roof, wall cracks, water damage, and inadequate plumbing).

DEFINITION OF "HABITABILITY"

One of the defenses asserted by Tenant is that Landlord breached the implied warranty of habitability. The landlord must maintain the premises in a habitable condition during the term of the landlord-tenant relationship. This implied warranty does not require that a landlord ensure that leased premises are in perfect, aesthetically pleasing condition, but it does mean that "bare living requirements" must be maintained. The terms "habitable" and "habitability" relate to conditions of the premises that affect the health and safety of the occupants and visitors. Minor housing code violations standing alone that do not affect habitability must be considered de minimis and will not entitle the tenant to reduction in rent.

Tenant has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence all facts necessary to prove that Landlord breached the warranty, that Tenant suffered damages as a result of the breach, and the nature and extent of the damages. Additional instruction on this burden of proof will be given in another jury instruction.

Comment: See CCP §1174.2; Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 635, 111 CR 704; Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 70, 102 CR 661. Modification may be required under CC §1942.3 if the defense is based on breach of statutory habitability requirements (see CC §§1941-1942.4) in addition to, or instead of, the implied warranty of habitability. For discussion of evidentiary presumptions and burden of proof, see §§12.36, 12.53. See jury instruction format requirements in §12.44. For a habitability jury instruction approved by the Judicial Council, see CACI 4320.

DEFINITION OF "HABITABILITY"

One of the defenses asserted by Tenant is that Landlord breached the implied warranty of habitability during the term of the landlord-tenant relationship.

Every residential lease or rental agreement in California contains an implied warranty of habitability, which guarantees that the premises are habitable when the landlord-tenant relationship begins, and that the landlord will maintain the premises in a habitable condition during the term of the landlord-tenant relationship. This implied warranty does not require that a landlord ensure that leased premises are in perfect, aesthetically pleasing condition, but it does mean that "bare living requirements" must be maintained. In deciding whether the premises are habitable in this case, you may consider, but are not limited to, the following statements:

(1) In most cases substantial compliance with those applicable building and housing code standards that materially affect health and safety will suffice to meet the Landlord's obligations under the common-law implied warranty of habitability.

(2) The fact that Tenant remained in the premises while claiming it was uninhabitable does not mean, under the law, that the premises therefore were, in fact, habitable.

(3) Minor housing code violations standing alone that do not affect habitability must be considered de minimis and will not entitle the tenant to reduction in rent.

Tenant has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence all facts necessary to prove that Landlord breached the warranty, that Tenant suffered damages as a result of the breach, and the nature and extent of the damages. Additional instruction on this burden of proof will be given in another jury instruction.

Comment: See Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 637, 111 CR 704; Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 70, 102 CR 661. See also Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 176 CR 112; Hyatt v Tedesco (2002) 96 CA4th Supp 62, 117 CR2d 921. The difference between the landlord's and tenant's instruction mainly stems from whether CCP §1174.2 was intended by the legislature to limit the decision in Green v Superior Court, supra, and narrow the scope of the implied warranty of habitability to cover only defects that affect health and safety. (This a point of disagreement among landlord-tenant counsel.) Note that, in a reported rent board appeal, the court of appeal held that inconvenience resulting from repairs and maintenance done by the landlord that does not substantially interfere with the tenant's right to live in the premises does not entitle the tenant to a rent decrease. Golden Gateway Ctr. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1999) 73 CA4th 1204, 87 CR2d 332. If the tenant is not entitled to a rent decrease from the particular rent control board, probably no decrease is warranted in a court trial for breach of the warranty of habitability.

Modification of this instruction may be required under CC §1942.3 if the defense is based on breach of statutory habitability requirements (see CC §§1941-1942.4) in addition to, or instead of, the implied warranty of habitability. For discussion of evidentiary presumptions and burden of proof, see §§12.36, 12.53. See jury instruction format requirements in §12.44. For a habitability jury instruction approved by the Judicial Council, see CACI 4320.

BREACH OF WARRANTY OF HABITABILITY—FACTORS TO CONSIDER; NOTICE OF DEFECTS

You may consider the following factors in deciding whether Landlord has breached the implied warranty of habitability:

The warranty does not require that the rented premises be in a perfect, or aesthetically pleasing, condition. The law requires substantial compliance with applicable building, housing, and health code standards that materially affect the health and safety of human occupants. The law also requires that other conditions within and around the premises may not materially affect the normal use and enjoyment of the premises. Landlord must substantially comply with these requirements as they apply to the interior of the rental unit and to the common areas. On the other hand, minor housing code violations that do not affect habitability do not constitute breach of the warranty.

More specifically, you may consider the following:

1. Adequacy of waterproofing and weather protection of the roof and exterior walls (including windows and doors);

2. Condition of exterior and interior walls and ceilings;

3. Operation of doors and windows;

4. Adequacy of ventilation;

5. Adequacy of plumbing, heating, and electrical equipment;

6. Maintenance of bath and toilet facilities;

7. Adequacy of water supply (i.e., volume and pressure);

8. Presence of rodents, vermin, and insects;

9. Presence of odors and gases;

10. Cleanliness of common areas under Landlord's control;

11. Maintenance of floors, carpets, and stairways;

12. Whether buildings, grounds, and other areas under Landlord's control are clean, sanitary, and free of debris, filth, rubbish, garbage, rodents, vermin, and insects;

13. Whether Landlord has supplied an adequate number of containers for garbage and rubbish, in clean condition and good repair;

14. Whether Landlord has installed locks on doors, security or locking devices on windows, and locks on doors to common areas (for breaches on or after July 1, 1998); and

15. Presence of lead hazards as described in Health & S C §§17920.3 or 17920.10, including deteriorated lead-based paint, lead-contaminated dust, lead-contaminated soil, or disturbing lead-based paint without containment, if the amount of lead exceeds the permissible levels established by law and is likely to endanger the health of the public or the tenant.

To prove breach of the warranty, Tenant must also prove:

1. That Tenant gave _ _[Landlord/Landlord's agent]_ _ notice of the defective conditions within a reasonable time after Tenant discovered or should have discovered the defects or that _ _[Landlord/Landlord's agent]_ _ had actual or constructive knowledge of the defects; and

2. That the defects were not caused by Tenant's wrongful action or abnormal use of the premises.

Comment: The tenant need not prove that he or she had no knowledge of the defects when the tenancy began (see §3.21) or that the landlord had a reasonable time to repair the defects (see §3.30). Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 171 CR 707; see Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 176 CR 112. It appears that notice to the landlord of the defects, or the landlord's actual or constructive knowledge of the defects, is still a required element of the defense (see §3.29). See Knight v Hallsthammar, supra.

The list of conditions in this instruction is illustrative only, not exhaustive. See §§3.11-3.12. The attorney should draft the instruction to include all conditions that apply to the specific case, according to the facts at issue. See Barker v Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 C3d 413, 418, 143 CR 225. In defining the warranty, and specifying factors to guide the jury in determining whether there has been a breach, counsel should consider the opinions in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 637, 111 CR 704, and Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 70, 102 CR 661.

If the facts of the case warrant, the instruction may refer to the standards for "tenantability" in CC §1941.1. Knight v Hallsthammar, supra; Smith v David, supra. If the tenant's defense is based on the repair-and-deduct remedy (see §§3.12-3.15), as opposed to breach of the warranty of habitability, CC §1941.1 would provide an appropriate basis for instructions. Modification may be required under CC §1942.3 if the defense is based on breach of statutory habitability requirements (see CC §§1941-1942.4) in addition to, or instead of, the implied warranty of habitability. See jury instruction format requirements in §12.44. For a habitability jury instruction approved by the Judicial Council, see CACI 4320.

§12.56 c. Drafting Instructions on Computing "Reasonable Rent" Owed When Warranty Breached

The California courts have not adopted a uniform method of computing the "reasonable rent" owed the landlord when the tenant proves a breach of the warranty of habitability, although several ways have been suggested (see Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 638, 111 CR 704); see discussion in §§3.16-3.48). As a general proposition, reasonable rent is determined by (1) using some measure to determine the extent to which the tenant has been damaged by the landlord's breach of the implied warranty, and (2) using that figure to reduce the contract rent and arrive at the reasonable rent.

The sample instructions in §§12.57-12.58 contain two methods of calculation supported by case law: the percentage-reduction-in-use method (see Cazares v Ortiz (1980) 109 CA3d Supp 23, 168 CR 108), and the difference-in-value method (see Quevedo v Braga (1977) 72 CA3d Supp 1, 140 CR 143). (For discussion of these methods, see §3.37.) Another method, indirectly supported by case law, is for the jury to award the tenant general damages for discomfort and annoyance (see, e.g., Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194). A sample instruction for this method of calculation is set forth in §12.59. (For discussion of this method, see §3.38) Which of these instructions is used depends on the court's ruling regarding the measure of damages to be applied in the particular case.

Note that, under each of these instructions, damages are awardable only for the period for which the tenant failed to pay rent. Thus, the instructions do not take into account the theory advanced by tenant advocates that damages may be assessed for periods during which the tenant did not withhold rent, and that such prior damages may offset the rent demanded in the 3-day notice to pay rent or quit. (For discussion of this theory, see §§13.36-13.38.) If this theory is adopted by the court in a particular case, counsel should draft an instruction providing for such an offset to arrive at the reasonable rent.

CALCULATION OF REASONABLE RENT:
PERCENTAGE-REDUCTION-IN-USE METHOD

If you find that Landlord breached the implied warranty of habitability during a period for which Tenant failed to pay rent, Tenant owes Landlord only a reasonable rent for that period. You may determine the amount of reasonable rent by deciding by what percentage Tenant's use of the premises was reduced as a result of the breach, and by reducing the agreed-on rent by that percentage. If you determine that the damages were equal to or greater than the agreed-on rent, Tenant would owe no rent at all.

Comment: This instruction is based on the percentage-reduction-in use method of calculating "reasonable rent," approved by the court in Cazares v Ortiz (1980) 109 CA3d Supp 23, 168 CR 108, and apparently approved in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 639 n24, 111 CR 704. For discussion of the various methods of calculation, see §§3.37-3.38. For discussion of the proposition that the tenant's rent may be reduced to zero by this method, see Green v Superior Court, supra. See also Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 112, 176 CR 112. See jury instruction format requirements in §12.44. The habitability and damages jury instructions approved by the Judicial Council (see CACI 4320, 4340) do not address this issue.

CALCULATION OF REASONABLE RENT:
DIFFERENCE-IN-VALUE METHOD

If you find that Landlord breached the implied warranty of habitability during a period for which Tenant failed to pay rent, Tenant owes Landlord only a "reasonable rent" for that period. You may determine the reasonable rent by the following method:

1. Determine the fair rental value of the premises as if the defects constituting the breach had not existed; and

2. Subtract from that amount the fair rental value of the premises in their actual condition during occupancy by Tenant (taking into account the defects constituting the breach).

To arrive at the reasonable rent, subtract the result of your subtraction from the rent in the lease or rental agreement. If you determine that the difference between the warranted value and the actual fair rental value is equal to the rent in the lease or rental agreement, Tenant would owe no rent at all.

Comment: This instruction uses the difference-in-value method of calculating "reasonable rent," adopted by the court in Quevedo v Braga (1977) 72 CA3d Supp 1, 140 CR 143, and noted with apparent approval in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 638, 111 CR 704. For discussion of the various methods of calculation, see §§3.37-3.38. For discussion of the proposition that the tenant's rent may be reduced to zero by this method, see Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 639, 111 CR 704. See also Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 112, 176 CR 112. See jury instruction format requirements in §12.44. CALCULATION OF REASONABLE RENT:
FACTORING IN TENANT'S DISCOMFORT AND ANNOYANCE

If you find that Landlord breached the implied warranty of habitability during a period for which Tenant failed to pay rent, Tenant owes Landlord only a "reasonable rent" for the period. In determining the amount of reasonable rent, you first must find the amount of general damages that Tenant suffered because of the breach. No definite standard or method of calculation is prescribed by law for determining the amount of general damages, or for determining compensation for discomfort and annoyance, and no witness's opinion is required to fix the amount of reasonable compensation. General damages may include compensation for discomfort and annoyance suffered by Tenant and his or her family as a result of Landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability.

In determining the amount of damages, you must calmly and reasonably exercise your duties by fixing damages that are just and reasonable in light of the evidence. You may consider any evidence of the severity of the defects, including the length of time that they persisted, their effect on Tenant's mental and physical health and safety, and the percentage of the premises that became uninhabitable. Having determined the amount of general damages for discomfort and annoyance, you should subtract that amount from the rent in the lease or rental agreement, to arrive at the reasonable rent.

Comment: This method of calculating "reasonable rent" has not been utilized in any reported California unlawful detainer case. But see Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194, in which the court approved this measure of damages in an affirmative suit by a tenant. For discussion of out-of-state authority for this method, and the rationale behind it, see §3.38. But see Cazares v Ortiz (1980) 109 CA3d Supp 23, 168 CR 108, in which the court criticized this method of measuring the tenant's damages for the landlord's breach of the implied warranty. See jury instruction format requirements in §12.44. The habitability and damages jury instructions approved by the Judicial Council (see CACI 4320, 4340) do not address this issue.

§12.60 6. Retaliatory Eviction

The tenant generally bears the burden of proving the defense of retaliatory eviction by a preponderance of the evidence, but the burden of proving the landlord's intent is shifted to the landlord when the termination notice states a reason not listed in the unlawful detainer statutes and the tenant controverts it. Western Land Office, Inc. v Cervantes (1985) 175 CA3d 724, 742, 220 CR 784. See §8.130. See instructions in §§12.62-12.63. In an eviction under the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) (see §§7.64-7.64G), if the tenant puts on evidence that the landlord's attempt to take the unit off the rental housing market is retaliatory, the landlord must establish by a preponderance of the evidence the existence of a bona fide intent to withdraw the property from the rental market. If the landlord does so, the landlord may evict the tenants and withdraw the property despite having a retaliatory motive. Drouet v Superior Court (2003) 31 C4th 583, 3 CR3d 205.

The elements of retaliatory eviction are set out in the sample instruction in §12.61. A similar instruction, tailored to the facts of the case, should always be used when retaliatory eviction is an issue for the jury. A tenant may rely on multiple theories of retaliation. See §§8.110, 8.117. See discussion regarding the common law doctrine of retaliatory eviction in a commercial context at California Eviction Defense Manual §19.25 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

ELEMENTS OF RETALIATORY EVICTION

Tenant raises the defense that Landlord, in seeking to evict Tenant by serving a _ _[30-day/60-day]_ _ notice terminating the landlord-tenant relationship and by initiating this unlawful detainer action, is retaliating against Tenant because Tenant _ _[specify conduct, e.g., complained about condition of the premises to an appropriate government agency, participated in the formation or activities of a tenants' association, associated with persons against whom Landlord held discriminatory attitudes, or engaged in other legally protected conduct]_ _.

The type of landlord-tenant relationship involved in this litigation is a month-to-month agreement. Although a month-to-month agreement may be terminated by a landlord for any legitimate reason, or for no reason at all, it may not be terminated for an improper reason. Despite the fact that a month-to-month agreement may be terminated without cause, California law prohibits a landlord from retaliating against a tenant because the tenant _ _[e.g., complained about tenantability of the premises, exercised other protected rights]_ _. If Landlord or Landlord's agent had no knowledge of Tenant's _ _[e.g., complaints, conduct]_ _ you may not find that Landlord's purpose in evicting Tenant is retaliatory.

If you find, in accordance with these instructions, that the _ _[30-day/60-day]_ _ termination notice is retaliatory, then that notice is legally ineffective. If it is legally ineffective, (1) Tenant was entitled under the law to ignore it, and (2) Landlord is not entitled to recover possession of the premises or damages of any kind.

[Add, if applicable]

An "appropriate government agency" is a public agency with jurisdiction over complaints relating to habitability, including _ _[e.g., county health departments, city building inspection departments, city fire departments, environmental agencies]_ _.

Comment: This instruction is based on Barela v Superior Court (1981) 30 C3d 244, 178 CR 618; S. P. Growers Ass'n v Rodriguez (1976) 17 C3d 719, 131 CR 761; and Schweiger v Superior Court (1970) 3 C3d 507, 90 CR 729. For discussion of the retaliatory eviction defense generally, see §§8.109-8.135. Note that the defense may be alleged under CC §1942.5, common law, other statutes or constitutional provisions, or a combination of legal theories. The instructions must be tailored to fit the facts and legal theories of each particular case. Because the defense of retaliatory eviction may apply to tenancies other than month-to-month, this sample should be modified accordingly. See jury instruction format requirements in §12.44. For retaliatory eviction jury instructions approved by the Judicial Council, see CACI 4321-4322.

RETALIATORY EVICTION: BURDEN OF PROOF
WHEN TENANT BEARS BURDEN ON DEFENSE

[Insert instruction on plaintiff's burden of proof; see sample in §12.46]

Tenant has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence all facts necessary to prove the following issues:

1. That Tenant took the following action(s):

[Include one or more of the following, if applicable; see §8.110]

a. Tenant complained to _ _[an appropriate government agency/ Landlord/Landlord's agent]_ _ concerning the tenantability of the rental unit or the common areas of the premises;

[b.] Tenant exercised _ _[his/her]_ _ rights under Civil Code sections 1940-1954.1 by _ _[allege conduct on which Landlord's retaliation was based]_ _;

[c.] Tenant participated in the formation or activities of a tenants' association;

[d.] Tenant exercised rights protected under _ _[common law/state or federal law/the state or federal constitution]_ _;

[Add if complaint concerning tenantability or exercise of rights under Civil Code sections 1940-1954.1 (a. or b., above) is applicable]

[2.] That Tenant is not in default in payment of rent; and

[3.] That Landlord retaliated against Tenant within 180 days of Tenant's complaint by attempting to recover possession of the subject property.

[In all cases, continue]

[4.] That Landlord had knowledge or notice of Tenant's _ _[e.g., complaint, exercise of rights]_ _, and commenced this unlawful detainer action in retaliation against Tenant because of Tenant's conduct.

A preponderance of the evidence is evidence that has more convincing force and greater probability of truth, when weighed against the evidence opposed to it. If the evidence is evenly balanced, so that the evidence on neither side of an issue preponderates, then your finding on that issue must be against the party who has the burden of proving it.

In determining whether an issue has been proved by a preponderance of the evidence, you must consider all the evidence bearing on that issue, regardless of who produced it.

Comment: This instruction, adapted from BAJI 2.60 (also see CACI 200), should be used when the circumstances of the case cause the entire burden of proof to be allocated to the tenant. For discussion of allocation of the burden of proof on retaliatory intent, see §§8.130, 12.60. On retaliatory eviction generally, see §§8.109-8.135. For an instruction allocating the burden of disproving intent to the landlord, see §12.63. Note that the 180-day limit under CC §1942.5(a) applies to the tenant's complaints concerning tenantability or exercise of rights under CC §§1940-1954.1, but not to defenses grounded on CC §1942.5(c) or on common law retaliation arising out of the tenant's complaints about conditions constituting breach of the implied warranty of habitability. See jury instruction format requirements in §12.44. For retaliatory eviction jury instructions approved by the Judicial Council, see CACI 4321-4322.

RETALIATORY EVICTION: BURDEN OF PROOF WHEN LANDLORD BEARS BURDEN OF DISPROVING INTENT

In this action, Landlord (who is the plaintiff in this action) has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence all facts necessary to prove the following issues:

1. That a landlord-tenant relationship was created between the Landlord and the Tenant (who is the defendant in this action);

2. That the landlord-tenant relationship was legally terminated by Landlord;

3. That Tenant remains in possession of the premises;

4. The amount of rent owed by Tenant up to the date that the relationship was terminated; and

5. The amount of damages suffered by Landlord because of Tenant's unlawful remaining in possession. These damages are calculated from the date that the unlawful detainer of the premises began, i.e., the date that the relationship was terminated, through the date of trial.

6. That Landlord's conduct in terminating the landlord-tenant relationship and attempting to evict Tenant was not undertaken in retaliation against Tenant for engaging in conduct protected by state or federal laws or constitutions.

Tenant has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence all facts necessary to prove the following Issues:

1. That Tenant took the following action(s):

[Include one or more of the following, if applicable; see §8.110]

a. Tenant complained to _ _[an appropriate government agency/ Landlord/Landlord's agent]_ _ concerning the tenantability of the rental unit or the common areas of the premises;

[b.] Tenant exercised _ _[his/her]_ _ rights under Civil Code sections 1940-1954.1 by _ _[allege conduct on which Landlord's retaliation was based]_ _;

[c.] Tenant participated in the formation or activities of a tenants' association;

[d.] Tenant exercised rights protected under _ _[common law/state or federal law/the state or federal constitution]_ _;

[Add if complaint concerning tenantability or exercise of rights under Civil Code sections 1940-1954.1 (a. or b., above) is applicable]

[2.] That Tenant is not in default in payment of rent; and

[3.] That landlord retaliated against Tenant within 180 days after Tenant's complaint by attempting to recover possession of the subject property.

[Continue]

A preponderance of the evidence is evidence that has more convincing force and greater probability of truth, when weighed against the evidence opposed to it. If the evidence is evenly balanced, so that the evidence on neither side of an issue preponderates, then your finding on that issue must be against the party who has the burden of proving it.

In determining whether an issue has been proved by a preponderance of the evidence, you must consider all the evidence bearing on that Issue, regardless of who produced it.

Comment: This instruction, adapted from BAJI 2.60 (see CACI 200), should be proposed by tenant's counsel when the circumstances of the case cause the burden of disproving intent to be allocated to the landlord, or if the tenant's attorney wishes to preserve the issue for appeal. For discussion of allocation of the burden of proof on retaliatory intent, see §§8.130, 12.60. Note that the 180-day limit under CC §1942.5(a) applies to the tenant's complaints concerning tenantability or exercise of rights under CC §§1940-1954.1, but not to defenses grounded on CC §1942.5(c) or on common law retaliation arising out of the tenant's complaints about conditions constituting breach of the implied warranty of habitability. ▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

DEFENSE: LANDLORD'S BREACH OF IMPLIED COVENANT OF QUIET ENJOYMENT

In every lease and rental agreement, there is an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. This means that Landlord promises not to interfere, either directly or indirectly, with the Tenant's peaceful enjoyment of the premises while the Tenant is in possession.

In this action the Tenant has asserted that the Landlord interfered with the Tenant's enjoyment of the premises by the following conduct:

[Describe all testimony and documents admitted into evidence showing conduct of Landlord which directly or indirectly interfered with Tenant's enjoyment of premises.]

If you find that the Landlord substantially breached the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment during the period for which rent is demanded in this case, then the Tenant owes the Landlord only a reasonable rent for that period.

Comment: See §§3.5-3.7, 10.56. This instruction should be given only when the unlawful detainer complaint is based on an allegation of nonpayment of rent or other breach of the lease or rental agreement. See instructions in §§12.57-12.59 for methods of determining "reasonable rent," which may be used with modifications in cases in which the landlord has breached the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment during the period for which rent is demanded. See jury instruction format requirements in §12.44.

§12.63B b. Form: Sample Instruction on Waiver

DEFENSE: LANDLORD'S WAIVER OF RIGHT TO TERMINATE TENANCY

A Landlord may waive the right to terminate a tenancy for an alleged breach of a provision of the lease or rental agreement. A waiver occurs when the Landlord, with knowledge of his or her rights, communicates to the Tenant that he or she will not assert those rights. A waiver may be express or implied. It is express when the Landlord states that he or she will not assert those rights under that provision or will not assert any rights as a result of the Tenant's breach of that provision. A waiver is implied when the Landlord commits acts that are inconsistent with an assertion of that provision or of a breach of that provision.

In this action the Tenant has asserted that any alleged breach of the lease or rental agreement has been waived by the Landlord because of the following:

[Summarize all testimony and documents admitted into evidence showing conduct of Landlord that expressly or impliedly waived Tenant's breach, e.g., acceptance of rent with knowledge of breach.]

If you find that a waiver has occurred, then you should render a verdict for the defendant.

Comment: See DRG/Beverly Hills, Ltd. v Chopstix Dim Sum Cafe & Takeout III, Ltd. (1994) 30 CA4th 54, 59, 35 CR2d 515, for a distinction between waiver and estoppel. See cases discussed in §§8.49 and 10.60 for examples of the application of the principles of waiver and estoppel in landlord-tenant disputes. For a specific jury instruction on establishing the landlord's waiver of the tenant's breach by acceptance of rent after expiration of the 3-day notice, see CACI 4324. DEFENSE: ESTOPPEL OF LANDLORD'S RIGHT TO TERMINATE TENANCY

A Landlord may be estopped from terminating a tenancy for a breach of a provision of the lease or rental agreement. This occurs when the Landlord, by words or actions, leads the Tenant to reasonably believe that the Landlord will not take action against the Tenant for breach of that provision, and the Tenant relies on this belief to his or her substantial detriment.

In this action the Tenant contends that the Landlord should be estopped from terminating the tenancy for the alleged breach of the lease or rental agreement because of the following:

[Summarize all testimony and documents admitted into evidence showing conduct of Landlord and reliance by Tenant, e.g., Landlord accepting rent or amending lease with knowledge of breach and Tenant making improvements, incurring other expenses, or foregoing good opportunity to relocate.]

If you find that an estoppel has occurred, then you should render a verdict for the defendant.

Comment: See DRG/Beverly Hills, Ltd. v Chopstix Dim Sum Cafe & Takeout III, Ltd. (1994) 30 CA4th 54, 59, 35 CR2d 515, for a distinction between waiver and estoppel. Because estoppel is an equitable defense, the court in DRG/Beverly Hills, Ltd. did not permit the issue to be decided by a jury. 30 CA4th at 61. But see Unilogic, Inc. v Burroughs Corp. (1992) 10 CA4th 612, 12 CR2d 741, discussed in §11.55. §12.63D d. Form: Sample Instruction on Landlord's Refusal of Rent

DEFENSE: LANDLORD'S WRONGFUL REFUSAL OF RENT

A landlord may not evict a tenant if the tenant tendered the rent demanded within the 3-day notice period but the landlord wrongfully refused to accept it. The tenant claims that the landlord is not entitled to evict _ _[him/her/it]_ _, because the landlord refused to accept the tenant's payment of the rent. To succeed on this defense, the tenant must prove that after service of the 3-day notice but before the end of the notice period, the tenant presented the full amount of rent that was due to the landlord and that the landlord refused to accept the payment.

If the landlord's practice was to accept payment by check and the tenant presented a check, the check constitutes payment of the rent. If the landlord notified the tenant by the notice itself or prior to service of the notice that the rent could not be paid by check, then payment by the tenant by check was not sufficient.

If you find that the tenant tendered the rent demanded within the 3-day notice period and that the landlord wrongfully refused to accept the payment, then you should render a verdict for the defendant.

X. COURT TRIAL: STATEMENT OF DECISION

§12.64 A. Party Must Request Statement of Decision

In court trials, the court must provide a formal written decision (known as a statement of decision) if a party requests one. CCP §632; Espinoza v Calva (2008) 169 CA4th 1393, 87 CR3d 492. The statement must explain the trial court's factual and legal basis for its decision on each of the principal controverted issues. CCP §632. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590. The requirement that a statement of decision be provided when requested applies with equal effect in both unlimited and limited civil cases. CCP §632. For discussion of statements of decision generally, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§24.34-24.50 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

The requesting party must "specify those controverted issues as to which the party is requesting a statement of decision." CCP §632. The opponent then may request a statement of decision on controverted issues not mentioned by the initial requesting party. CCP §632.

If a statement of decision is not requested, a minute order constitutes the decision of the court. See Perry v Perry (1969) 270 CA2d 769, 771, 76 CR 212.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.65 B. Deadlines for Request; Determining Whether Statement Must Be Written or Oral

A statement of decision is required only if a party appearing at trial requests it within 10 days after the court announces its intended decision. CCP §632. The statement must be in writing unless the parties stipulate otherwise. CCP §632. Note, however, that for trials concluded within 1 day (or in less than 8 hours over more than 1 day), which would include most unlawful detainer actions, a party desiring a statement of decision must request it before the matter is submitted for decision, i.e., no later than the close of argument. CCP §632. In this instance, the statement must be in writing, unless (CCP §632):

- The parties stipulate otherwise; or
- The trial is completed in less than 1 day, or in less than 8 hours over more than 1 day, in which case it may be made orally on the record.

A trial will be deemed to commence at the beginning of the opening statement of any party or counsel or, if there is no opening statement, at the administering of the oath to the first witness or instruction of any witness, or the introduction of any evidence. CCP §581(a)(6). Failure to provide a statement of decision when properly requested is reversible error. Miramar Hotel Corp. v Frank B. Hall & Co. (1985) 163 CA3d 1126, 210 CR 114. See also Auer v Frank (1964) 227 CA2d 396, 38 CR 684. See also Espinoza v Calva (2008) 169 CA4th 1393, 1397, 87 CR3d 492 (trial court's failure to provide properly requested statement of decision normally results in remand requiring trial court to issue statement of decision).

The statement of decision is the functional equivalent of, and serves the same purpose as, findings and conclusions. In some situations, the trial court's findings may be implied from the judgment and facts in the record. For example, in Lee v Vignoli (1979) 98 CA3d Supp 24, 160 CR 79, the record on appeal showed that even though the trial court had awarded possession of the premises to the landlord, it had allowed admission of the tenant's evidence of uninhabitability and had determined that the rent owed was $135 per month less than the contract rate. Despite the absence of express findings in the record, the appellate court construed the rent reduction as an implied finding that the landlord had breached the warranty of habitability, and reversed the judgment. It may be unwise, however, for counsel to rely on the record to supply the trial court's findings. Instead, counsel should request a statement of decision under CCP §632 whenever the judgment might be challenged.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.66 C. Counsel's Role Regarding Ambiguous or Inadequate Statement of Decision

The trial court's statement of decision (i.e., finding) on an issue is considered an implied negation of all contrary assertions. Kanner v Globe Bottling Co. (1969) 273 CA2d 559, 566, 78 CR 25. If a finding is made on a controverted fact, the court need not make a further finding with respect to the probative facts, or a statement of decision regarding evidentiary matters. Kanner v Globe Bottling Co., supra.

When a statement of decision does not resolve a controverted issue (or a specific finding is ambiguous), but the record demonstrates a party's attempt to bring the omission or ambiguity to the court's attention either before entry of judgment, or in conjunction with a motion for new trial (CCP §657) or a motion for vacation of judgment (CCP §663), another court may not infer that the trial court decided in favor of the prevailing party with respect to the controverted fact or issue. CCP §634. Thus, if the requesting party fails to bring the omission or ambiguity to the trial court's attention, the new trial court (following a motion for new trial or a motion for vacation of judgment) or the court of appeal may assume that the original trial court decided in favor of the prevailing party on those controverted facts or issues, as long as that determination is consistent with the judgment and results by necessary implication from any express findings or statements that are made. See Branche v Hetzel (1966) 241 CA2d 801, 810, 51 CR 188; Auer v Frank (1964) 227 CA2d 396, 406, 38 CR 684. Therefore, the party requesting a statement of decision must bring any omission or ambiguity in the statement to the trial court's attention.

XI. JURY TRIAL

§12.67 A. Jury Verdict; General and Special Verdicts

In a jury trial, the verdict performs the function performed by the statement of decision (see §§12.64-12.66) in a court trial. The verdict is the jury's means of delivering and formally recording its resolution of the disputed issues in a case. See CCP §§613, 618. The jury may return either a general or a special verdict. CCP §624. When rendering a general verdict, the jury simply resolves all issues in favor of the plaintiff or the defendant. CCP §624.

The court has two different methods available to further refine the jury's fact-finding process:

(1) The court may instruct the jury to return a general verdict, and—to test the general verdict further—instruct the jury to make special findings of fact in response to specific, written questions. CCP §625. When a special finding and the general verdict are inconsistent, the special finding controls and the court must enter judgment on it. CCP §625. If the special verdict is inconsistent, the trial court may direct the jury to deliberate further. See CCP §619; Mizel v City of Santa Monica (2001) 93 CA4th 1059, 113 CR2d 649.

(2) The court may instruct the jury to return a special verdict in which the jury makes findings only on the facts and leaves resolution of the legal consequences of those facts to the court. CCP §624.

Many trial judges use one of these procedures to sharpen the jury's verdict in unlawful detainer jury trials because of the complexity of the causes of action and defenses. California Civil Jury Instructions VF-4300-VF-4302 are the general and specific verdict forms for use in unlawful detainer actions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.68 B. Judgment Based on Jury Verdict

A verdict is not the same as a judgment; pronouncing judgment is a judicial act that must be performed by a judge. CCP §664. After a verdict has been rendered, judgment is entered on the basis of the verdict unless the court has stayed proceedings or reserved judgment pending posttrial motions. CCP §664. On motions after trial, see §§13.43-13.63.

For extensive discussion of general and special verdicts and entry of judgment following rendition of the verdict, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chaps 22-23 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

§12.69 XII. DEFAULTS AT TRIAL

Occasionally, one party or another does not appear for trial after having appeared in the action. A judgment entered after a contested trial may be set aside if the party's failure to appear is the fault of counsel. See Marriage of Hock (2000) 80 CA4th 1438, 96 CR2d 546. But see Vandermoon v Sanwong (2006) 142 CA4th 315, 47 CR3d 772, in which the court ruled that mandatory set-aside provisions of CCP §473(b) did not apply to a trial conducted in a party's absence since this was not a "default," "default judgment," or "dismissal" within the meaning of §473(b). See also Hossain v Hossain (2007) 157 CA4th 454, 69 CR3d 356, in which the court ruled that §473(b) applied only to a default or default judgment entered by the court clerk. On setting aside entries of default and default judgments, see §§13.7-13.16.

§13.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter focuses on preparing judgments and posttrial motions. Whether or not the trier of fact is a judge or a jury, counsel for the prevailing party must prepare a judgment for the judge presiding over the trial to sign, so that judgment can be entered. Judgment forms and discussion of their contents are presented in §§13.17-13.34 for plaintiff as the prevailing party, and in §§13.35-13.41 for a prevailing defendant. Judgment by default and relief therefrom are explained in §§13.2-13.16.

Grounds and procedures for universally applicable posttrial motions such as for a new trial, for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, to vacate judgment and enter a different judgment, and to correct clerical error are found in §§13.43-13.47. Posttrial procedures peculiar to unlawful detainer actions are detailed with attorney-drafted or Judicial Council forms as follows:

- Stay of execution of judgment (see §§13.48-13.55);
- Relief from forfeiture (see §§13.56-13.57);
- Appeals, stay pending appellate review, and extraordinary writs (see §§13.58-13.63);
- Enforcing a judgment by writ of possession (see §§13.64-13.69);
- Postjudgment claim of right to possession (see §§13.70-13.73); and
- Enforcing a judgment for monetary relief (see §13.74).

II. DEFAULT

§13.2 A. When Defendant Is in Default

If a tenant fails to appear and defend an unlawful detainer action within 5 days after service of the summons and complaint (CCP §1167), the clerk, on the landlord's application, must enter the tenant's default (CCP §1169). See §13.3. The constitutionality of statutes providing an even shorter time to respond in unlawful detainer actions than that provided in California actions was upheld in Lindsey v Normet (1972) 405 US 56, 31 L Ed 2d 36, 92 S Ct 862. See also Deal v Municipal Court (1984) 157 CA3d 991, 996, 204 CR 79, in which the court cited Lindsey as dispositive in its upholding of the 5-days-to-answer requirement of CCP §1167.

The clerk must also, on request of the landlord, immediately enter a judgment for restitution of the premises and issue a writ of possession. CCP §1169. See §13.4. The landlord may then seek any further relief, such as a monetary award of rent or damages, which must be obtained from the court, not the clerk. CCP §1169. See §13.5. In some cases in which the designation of the street of the subject premises is incorrect, i.e., "street" instead of "avenue," the marshal or sheriff may refuse to execute the writ of possession. In such cases, landlord attorneys may request the judge to sign an order to amend the judgment under CCP §§470 and 473(d) and have a new or amended writ of possession issue with the correct address.

If the tenant is served by "substituted service" or "constructive service," service is not complete until 10 days after a copy of the summons and complaint is mailed (CCP §§415.20(b), 415.45(c); see §§9.48-9.49), and the tenant's 5 days to answer only begin to run at that point (CCP §1167). If the fifth day after service becomes effective falls on a weekend or holiday, the tenant's time to appear and defend is extended to "the next day which is not a holiday." CCP §12a. Weekend days are included, but judicial holidays other than weekends are excluded, in calculating the 5-day response period. CCP §1167. While trial courts are closed on the third Wednesday of each month due to budget issues, the Wednesdays on which the courts are closed are treated as holidays and should not be counted as part of the 5-day period. See Govt C §68106.

A tenant may file a responsive pleading, even if the time to plead has elapsed, as long as the clerk has not yet entered the tenant's default. Goddard v Pollock (1974) 37 CA3d 137, 112 CR 215. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 38 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). After a default is entered by the clerk, the tenant may not file an answer or any other pleading until the default is set aside. Brooks v Nelson (1928) 95 CA 144, 147, 272 P 610. See §§13.7-13.16.

PRACTICE TIP: If a default has just been entered at the time the defendant attempts to file an answer, the defendant may ask to file an answer "on demand." In that event, if the request for default is rejected for any reason, the defendant has an answer on file. If the default is not rejected, the defendant must, of course, still act to set aside the default and resulting default judgment.

If the landlord's attorney refuses to agree to an extension of time to respond to the complaint, tenant's counsel may make an ex parte application to the court for an extension order. CCP §§473(a)(1), 1054. See discussion and sample form in §§10.48-10.49. This request is likely to be granted in the absence of unusual circumstances.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel for the landlord should be wary of unnecessary requests for extensions in simple cases. Delay costs the client money, and the right to an expedited trial is set forth by statute. See §11.42. Since the answer is generally filed on a preprinted form, 1 or 2 days' extension, if any, should be sufficient without monetary compensation. See §11.6.

B. Procedure for Obtaining Default Judgment

§13.3 1. Entry of Default

Code of Civil Procedure §1169 provides that, on written application by the landlord and proof of service of the summons and complaint, the clerk must enter the tenant's default. The default form prescribed by the Judicial Council (see §13.6) must be used. See CCP §585.5 and Cal Rules of Ct 3.1800 on required documents. The default form provides a box to be checked when the landlord's attorney also wishes to apply for immediate entry of judgment for restitution and issuance of a writ of possession, as authorized by CCP §1169. The form also includes the declaration of mailing required by CCP §587. When filed with the clerk, it must be accompanied by the original unlawful detainer summons and a separate proof of service of summons. CCP §1169. There are mandatory forms for proving service of summons; the landlord must file with the court either Proof of Service of Summons (Judicial Council Form POS-010) or Notice And Acknowledgment of Receipt (Judicial Council Form POS-015) with the original summons. See CCP §417.10(a).

Paragraph 8 of the Request for Entry of Default (Judicial Council Form CIV-100) (see §13.6) requires the landlord's attorney to attest that no defendants are "in the military service so as to be entitled to the benefits of the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act." If the tenant is in fact in the military, the attorney needs to check with the local court as to how to proceed. Some courts allow client declarations to prove that the tenant's military service does not materially affect the tenant's ability to pay rent and some courts require an oral prove-up hearing. (See Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA) (Pub L 108-189, 117 Stat 2835) 50 USC App §§501-596, cited in §1.73.)

PRACTICE TIP: Many courts (e.g., Los Angeles) have their own printed forms for default judgment, which include a decree for immediate possession. Such forms should be used whenever possible. Because the clerks are familiar with them, using the forms expedites entry of judgment and issuance of the writ of possession. Fillable forms for Default Judgment—Unlawful Detainer and for Application for Issuance of Writ of Possession are available online at http://www.lasuperiorcourt.org/forms.

A party requesting entry of default and claiming costs must itemize them on the request for entry of default form (see §13.6) at the time of applying for the judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(a)(2). As attorney fees authorized by contract are an item of costs (CCP §1033.5(a)(10)(A)), they should be requested at that time as well. CCP §1033.5(c)(5). See §§13.21, 13.24 for a discussion of allowable costs in unlawful detainer actions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.4 2. Immediate Judgment for Possession

In addition to entering a default, the clerk must enter judgment for restitution of the premises and issue a writ of execution, on the landlord's request. CCP §1169. Under this procedure, the clerk may enter judgment only for restitution but not for monetary relief such as back rent, damages, or attorney fees. The method of entry of judgment prescribed by CCP §1169 constitutes a departure from the usual procedure in civil actions. See CCP §585(a)-(b). See generally California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 38 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

PRACTICE TIP: Local procedures should be investigated before submitting default papers. Some courts have instructed their clerks not to issue clerk's judgments under CCP §1169 unless the landlord submits not only the materials necessary to enter default (request form, summons, and proof of service), but also the materials most important to show that a judgment for all relief requested by the complaint may also be obtained (written contract, if any, and termination notice). Although there is no authority for this practice, it is far easier to accede to these special requirements than to fight them. Moreover, if on assembling the necessary papers counsel discovers a fatal defect (e.g., notice demanding more rent than was due), this additional review of the case may prevent later delays or liability for wrongful eviction.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.5 3. Judgment for Monetary Relief

A landlord who wants a default judgment on issues other than possession (e.g., damages, attorney fees, costs) must provide proof of these claims in the usual default hearing under CCP §585(b). Unless the landlord gives prior notice to the tenant, the default judgment may not award greater damages than those pleaded in the complaint. Janssen v Luu (1997) 57 CA4th 272, 66 CR2d 838. In proving up damages, the plaintiff need only establish a prima facie case to obtain judgment. Johnson v Stanhiser (1999) 72 CA4th 357, 85 CR2d 82. For discussion of default hearings generally, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 38 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

The court may permit the use of affidavits (or declarations; see CCP §2015.5) in lieu of personal testimony for proving the default and damages. CCP §585(d). See also Cal Rules of Ct 3.1800 on required documents. The following information, if applicable, should be incorporated into the landlord's declaration:

- Location of premises (i.e., street address and apartment number);
- Date on which notice to quit was served, with a copy attached as exhibit;
- Date on which unlawful detainer action was filed;
- Date on which complaint was served on tenant;
- Fact that 5 days have elapsed since complaint was served;
- Amount of unpaid rent to date tenancy was terminated;
- Fair rental value of premises and per diem damages after termination;
- Costs incurred in bringing unlawful detainer action;
- Amount of reasonable attorney fees, if authorized by agreement, including paragraph number of attorney fee provision; and
- Amount of security or cleaning deposit, if any, being withheld. (Many courts do not require deposit information, because the landlord normally has up to 21 days after recovering possession of the property for the use of the security deposit, and the condition of the property is unknown at the time of trial. See CC §1950.5.)

PRACTICE TIP: The use of affidavits in lieu of personal testimony will nearly always shorten the time to obtain a default judgment for rent and damages. In Los Angeles County Superior Court, for example, it may take 8 weeks to schedule a default hearing for personal testimony to be heard and for judgment to be entered. In contrast, the use of affidavits may shorten this time to only 5 court days. Many courts urge the use of affidavits in all but exceptional cases (e.g., when the landlord requests statutory damages). Trial courts' practices vary considerably, and counsel should call a court clerk to find out the local practice.

D. Relief From Default

1. Grounds Under CCP §473(b)

§13.7 a. Fault of Defendant Party; Discretionary Relief

Grounds for setting aside a default and vacating a default judgment are provided by statute. The most commonly used is CCP §473(b), which gives a court the discretionary power to relieve a party from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken through his or her "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect." Although CCP §473(b) also requires that a court set aside a default entered because of an attorney's mistake or neglect, even if inexcusable (see §13.8), it does not allow the court to set aside a default entered because of a client's inexcusable mistake or neglect. Cisneros v Vueve (1995) 37 CA4th 906, 44 CR2d 682. A default will be set aside under CCP §473(b) if it is caused by error committed by both the attorney and the client as long as there is no intentional misconduct. Benedict v Danner Press (2001) 87 CA4th 923, 104 CR2d 896.

If the affidavit of mailing that accompanies the request for entry of default (see §13.3) has an inaccurate address, that defect is not jurisdictional. Consequently, a motion to set aside the default and the resulting judgment on that basis will not lie under CCP §473. Rodriguez v Henard (2009) 174 CA4th 529, 94 CR3d 313.

§13.8 b. Fault of Attorney; Mandatory Relief

Code of Civil Procedure §473(b) requires a court to vacate a default or default judgment on grounds of attorney mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect whenever an application for relief is made no more than 6 months after entry of judgment, in proper form, and is accompanied by an attorney's sworn affidavit, unless the court finds that the default was not in fact caused by the attorney's mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect. See Marriage of Hock (2000) 80 CA4th 1438, 96 CR2d 546 (set aside judgment after uncontested trial). The purpose of an attorney's declaration admitting fault is to relieve the innocent client of the burden of the attorney's fault and avoid causing more litigation in the form of malpractice suits. 80 CA4th at 1446. See also Solv-All v Superior Court (2005) 131 CA4th 1003, 32 CR3d 202 (party whose attorney, without knowing participation of party, failed to file timely answer because settlement discussions were in progress is entitled to mandatory relief from default judgment); Matera v McLeod (2006) 145 CA4th 44, 51 CR3d 331 (§473(b) required reversal of default judgment after court struck answer as discovery sanction and entered default and default judgment).

The courts have limited the application of CCP §473(b). See, e.g., Jerry's Shell v Equilon Enters., LLC (2005) 134 CA4th 1058, 36 CR3d 637 (§473(b) does not provide relief from sanctions imposed for deliberate failure to respond to discovery or oppose discovery motions); English v IKON Bus. Solutions, Inc. (2001) 94 CA4th 130, 114 CR2d 93 (§473(b) does not apply to judgment resulting from attorney's failure to oppose summary judgment motion); Prieto v Loyola Marymount Univ. (2005) 132 CA4th 290, 33 CR3d 639 (§473(b) does not permit the court to set aside a summary judgment if losing party's counsel filed no opposition). See also Ambrose v Michelin N. Am., Inc. (2005) 134 CA4th 1350, 37 CR3d 1 (§473(b) does not permit court to set aside summary judgment if losing party's counsel did file opposition, but failed to file affidavit seeking continuance to allow expert witness more time to examine evidence; request for continuance at hearing on summary judgment was insufficient). See also Hossain v Hossain (2007) 157 CA4th 454, 69 CR3d 356, holding that CCP §473(b) does not apply to an attorney's failure to timely file opposition and a cross-motion to a motion to enforce a settlement. Mandatory relief was not available because there was neither a default nor a default judgment within the meaning of §473(b). The court explained that a default judgment within the meaning of CCP §473(b) is a judgment after a defendant has failed to answer the complaint and the defendant's default has been entered. On applying §473(b) to defaults in discovery proceedings, compare Matera v McLeod, supra, with Jerry's Shell v Equilon Enters., LLC, supra. On whether CCP §473 allows for relief from dismissal resulting from an attorney's failure to amend the complaint on time, compare Harlan v Department of Transp. (2005) 132 CA4th 868, 33 CR3d 912, with Leader v Health Indus. of Am. (2001) 89 CA4th 603, 107 CR2d 489.

If the default is caused by the combined error of the attorney and the client, it will be set aside as long as there is no intentional misconduct. Benedict v Danner Press (2001) 87 CA4th 923, 104 CR2d 896. In Benedict, the court found the mandatory relief provision of §473(b) is applicable to a default even if the actions of the party are an additional cause in fact of the default. In Benedict, the attorney in part relied on the client's agent's erroneous description of service of process in failing to timely file an answer.

PRACTICE TIP: In appropriate situations, counsel might consider seeking alternative relief under both discretionary and mandatory provisions of CCP §473. See, e.g., Solv-All v Superior Court, supra, which suggests a broader definition of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and neglect than is found in most cases interpreting CCP §473.

The motion to set aside the default and default judgment must be correctly addressed to the opposing party or attorney. In Moghaddam v Bone (2006) 142 CA4th 283, 47 CR3d 602, the attorney filing the motion sent it to the correct P.O. Box but the wrong zip code for the opposing attorney. The intended recipient failed to receive the motion and failed to oppose it. The reviewing court ultimately held that the ruling setting aside the default judgment was void.

In seeking relief under CCP §473(b), an affidavit setting forth the attorney's "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect" must be signed by the attorney who represented the client and caused the mistake even if that attorney is not the attorney of record in the unlawful detainer case. See SJP, LP v City of Los Angeles (2006) 136 CA4th 511, 39 CR3d 55 (affidavit of bankruptcy counsel who both represented client and caused mistake was competent).

If the court grants relief based on an attorney's affidavit of fault, it must order the attorney to pay reasonable compensatory legal fees and costs to opposing counsel or parties. CCP §473(b). Further, when relief from a default or default judgment is granted under CCP §473(b), the court may (CCP §473(c)(1)):

- Impose a penalty of up to $1000 on an offending attorney;
- Direct the offending attorney to pay up to $1000 to the State Bar Client Security Fund; or
- Grant other relief, as appropriate.

Relief under CCP §473(b), however, may not be made conditional on the attorney's payment of such fees, costs, or monetary penalties imposed by the court, or on compliance with other sanctions. CCP §473(c)(2).

§13.9 c. Default Obtained by Fraud

Although not specifically referred to in the statute, proceedings under CCP §473 can also be used to set aside defaults obtained through intrinsic or extrinsic fraud. Batchelor v Finn (1959) 169 CA2d 410, 341 P2d 803; Guardianship of Levy (1955) 137 CA2d 237, 244, 290 P2d 320. For additional discussion, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 36 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

If the defendant was never served with process, but a fraudulent declaration asserting service was filed and used as the basis for a default judgment, the default and default judgment may be set aside, but not under CCP §473. See, e.g., CCP §86(b)(3). A motion should, however, be brought promptly after the defendant discovers the judgment. See §13.13. For additional discussion, see Civ Proc Before Trial, chaps 19, 42.

2. Procedure Under CCP §473(b)

§13.10 a. Noticed Motion

Once the clerk has entered the tenant's default, the tenant may not file an answer or other pleading, or appear at trial or in any other manner in the action until the default is set aside. Heathman v Vant (1959) 172 CA2d 639, 343 P2d 104. See also CCP §1010. To set aside the default and vacate a judgment entered under it, the tenant must submit (CCP §§473(b), 1003):

- Written notice of motion, stating the grounds on which the motion is made; and
- Proposed answer or other pleading.

Because entry of the default by the clerk and entry of default judgment by the clerk or the court are two distinct acts (see §§13.3-13.5), the motion must request relief from both to be effective. See Heathman v Vant, supra. If only the judgment is vacated, the default may remain as a bar to the tenant's appearing in the action. See Heathman v Vant, supra.

The notice of motion must be accompanied by a supporting memorandum. See CCP §§473(b), 1005; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113. If the motion is made within 6 months after entry of judgment and is accompanied by an affidavit by the defendant's attorney admitting the attorney's mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect, then the court must vacate the entry of default unless it finds the default was not a result of the attorney's neglect. CCP §473(b).

For forms for a notice of motion, points and authorities, and a court order, see California Eviction Defense Manual, Apps VV-WW (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

When moving to set aside a default under CCP §473(b), the tenant must show a satisfactory excuse for the default, as well as diligence in making the motion. See generally California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 38 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). The motion must be accompanied by the answer, or other pleading that the moving party proposes to file, if the default is vacated. CCP §473(b).

PRACTICE TIP: If a writ of execution has been issued under a default judgment, the tenant should include (in the notice of motion to set aside the default and vacate the judgment) a request that the court quash the writ. Under CCP §473(b), the court may relieve a party from a judgment, order, or other proceeding. An order quashing the writ will not take effect automatically. If the motion succeeds, counsel should immediately serve the order on the levying officer to ensure that the writ will not be executed despite issuance of the order.

b. Time Limits for Motion

§13.11 (1) Usually 6 Months

The motion for relief from default caused by a party or that party's attorney must be made within a "reasonable time," but not more than 6 months from entry of default or default judgment. CCP §473(b). For a discussion of the "reasonable time" issue, see Lee v Wells Fargo Bank (2001) 88 CA4th 1187, 106 CR2d 726. Note that entry of the default by the clerk, and not entry of the default judgment, fixes the beginning of the 6-month period. Title Ins. & Trust Co. v King Land & Improvement Co. (1912) 162 C 44, 120 P 1066; Castagnoli v Castagnoli (1954) 124 CA2d 39, 268 P2d 37.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.12 (2) 90-Day Exception

In unlawful detainer actions, if written notice of the default judgment or entry of default is personally served within the state on the tenant and tenant's attorney, if any, stating that any application for relief must be made within 90 days, then the defendant has only 90 days after service of the notice in which to move to set aside the default. CCP §473(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.13 (3) Fraud and Other Exceptions

Despite the 6-month and 90-day limits of CCP §473(b), trial courts have inherent power to entertain a motion to set aside a default entered through extrinsic fraud or mistake more than 6 months after entry. Weitz v Yankosky (1966) 63 C2d 849, 48 CR 620. The 6-month and 90-day limits also do not apply to a motion to vacate a judgment that is void on its face, or a motion to correct clerical errors in a judgment. See CCP §473(d).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should determine whether or not the merits and economics of the case favor the parties stipulating to have the default judgment set aside to try the case on the damage issues, because in most cases possession will have already been restored to the landlord and there may be other causes of action available to both the landlord and the tenant.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.14 3. Conditions for Relief Under CCP §473(b)

Code of Civil Procedure §473(b) allows a court to relieve a party from a judgment, order, or other proceeding "upon any terms as may be just." Thus, attention should be paid to specific conditions that the court, in granting relief, should impose to render a "just" decision for all parties. The landlord's attorney should request that:

- The setting aside of a default be conditioned on payment of contract rent into court, for the period from when eviction could have been obtained on the default judgment through trial; and
- The default be reinstated on the tenant's failure to pay.

See Goodson v The Bogerts, Inc. (1967) 252 CA2d 32, 42, 60 CR 146 (trial court has power to impose condition of protective deposit in granting motion to vacate default judgment).

Counsel may also seek reimbursement for attorney fees attributable to obtaining the default and default judgment and costs attributable to the eviction (writ of execution and sheriff's fees). See, e.g., Reeves v Hutson (1956) 144 CA2d 445, 301 P2d 264. Counsel could argue that the tenant should be required to post cash or an equivalent bond to cover the increased costs of litigation attributable to setting aside the default (e.g., deposition costs and attorney fees, including a trial attorney's fees if the tenant will not waive the right to jury trial as a condition to setting aside the default).

On awarding mandatory costs, fees, and penalties on the granting of a motion to set aside a default, see §13.8.

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Other Grounds and Procedures for Relief From Default

§13.15 a. Lack of Actual Notice of Suit

Under CCP §473.5, a party may move for relief from a default when service of the summons did not result in actual notice to that party. The general noticed motion format (see §13.10) must be used, and the notice of motion must contain all relief requested by the motion. Under CCP §473.5, however, the motion must be filed within a reasonable time, but no more than 2 years after entry of the default or 180 days after service of written notice of entry of default. CCP §473.5(a). The CCP §473.5 motion must be accompanied by an affidavit that the tenant's lack of actual notice was not caused by his or her avoidance or inexcusable neglect. CCP §473.5(b). It must also include a copy of the answer or other proposed pleading. CCP §473.5(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.16 b. Limited Civil Case Omnibus Rule

California has unified trial courts, consisting of superior courts that hear both unlimited civil cases and limited civil cases. See §9.32. Consult the local court policies on unlawful detainer actions for practice guidelines. In limited civil cases, a defendant may file a motion to vacate a judgment obtained through extrinsic fraud, mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. See CCP §86(b)(3). Although no time period is specified in §86(b)(3), a default may be set aside more than 6 months after entry only if the basis for the challenge is extrinsic fraud or mistake. Marianos v Tutunjian (1977) 70 CA3d 61, 138 CR 529.

Under some circumstances, a default improperly obtained against the tenant will precipitate sanctions against the landlord and landlord's counsel. See, e.g., Magnolia v Fields (1987) 191 CA3d Supp 1, 236 CR 900. In Magnolia, the landlord's attorney served by mail a notice that the tenant's demurrer had been overruled, allowing the tenant 10 days to file an answer. However, on the same day on which he mailed the notice, the attorney had the tenant's default entered. Ruling that this was a frivolous action, the appellate court held that the trial court's denial of sanctions under CCP §128.5 was an abuse of discretion and that attorney fees for obtaining a writ of mandate to set aside the default should be paid by the landlord's attorney.

III. JUDGMENT

A. When Plaintiff Prevails

§13.17 1. Forfeiture of Possession and Leasehold Rights

Under CCP §1174(a), if the verdict or judgment is "in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, judgment shall be entered for the possession of the premises." The judgment is not self-executing, however; it must be enforced through a writ of possession issued under CCP §§715.010-715.040; see §§13.64-13.69. The landlord may, for tactical reasons, wish to limit the unlawful detainer judgment to possession and seek rent and damages in a separate action. This procedure is permissible under CCP §1174(b) and CC §1952(b). Northrop Corp. v Chaparral Energy, Inc. (1985) 168 CA3d 725, 214 CR 173.

The effect of the judgment with respect to forfeiture of the tenant's rights under a lease is more complex. Although the word "forfeiture" is specifically mentioned only in CCP §1161(3), it has been held that CCP §1161 generally gives a landlord the statutory right to elect a forfeiture whether or not there is a forfeiture clause in the lease or rental agreement. Sexton v Nelson (1964) 228 CA2d 248, 256, 39 CR 407.

A court has no power to declare a forfeiture, however, unless the landlord has elected to declare it expressly in the required termination notice. CCP §1174(a). See §8.34. Thus, mere default in the payment of rent, or breach of a covenant in the lease or rental agreement, does not create a forfeiture; an affirmative act of election must be included in the 3-day or 30-day notice. See, e.g., Igauye v Howard (1952) 114 CA2d 122, 126, 249 P2d 558; Bank of America v Moore (1937) 18 CA2d 522, 526, 64 P2d 460. A 3-day notice that simply recites the rent due and demands possession is insufficient as a basis for forfeiture. Neuhaus v Norgard (1934) 140 CA 735, 739, 35 P2d 1039. But language such as "or the said lessors will institute legal proceedings against you to recover possession of said premises with treble rent" would indicate sufficient intention to elect a forfeiture. 140 CA at 740.

If the landlord did not elect a forfeiture in the 3-day notice to pay rent or quit, and the lease or rental agreement has not by its terms expired, the court may allow the tenant 5 days following entry of an unlawful detainer judgment to pay all back rent (with interest), damages, and costs, thereby restoring the tenancy. CCP §1174(c). If the lease is in writing and for a term of more than 1 year, the court must allow the tenant to avoid forfeiture. CCP §1174(c) (see §§13.48-13.51). Otherwise, if the landlord elects forfeiture and judgment is entered accordingly, the tenant may be able to avoid forfeiture only on a showing of "hardship." CCP §1179 (see §13.56).

A previous judgment for rent, damages, and forfeiture of the lease may not bar a landlord from recovering prospective damages for unpaid rent for the balance of the lease term in a subsequent action brought under CC §1951.2. See Danner v Jarrett (1983) 144 CA3d 164, 192 CR 535; see §§8.14-8.16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.18 2. Back Rent

Rent as a form of actual damages may be recoverable along with possession in an unlawful detainer judgment. See §§10.40-10.41, 12.22. Back rent (delinquent rent through the expiration of the tenancy) is recoverable only when the action is based on nonpayment of rent. CCP §1174(b); Saberi v Bakhtiari (1985) 169 CA3d 509, 215 CR 359; Castle Park No. 5 v Katherine (1979) 91 CA3d Supp 6, 154 CR 498. See also Harris v Bissell (1921) 54 CA 307, 202 P 453. See also §§9.38-9.41. The amount found due, if any, is determined by the contract or the agreed-on rent and is recoverable only for the period of delinquency through expiration of the 3-day notice to pay rent or quit. See CCP §1174. A landlord is not permitted, however, to recover rent due for more than 1 year preceding service of the notice. See §§10.41, 10.69. In commercial tenancies, a landlord may seek rent more than 1 year old if the sum prayed for is listed as an estimate and is no more than 20 percent above the amount due within the 1-year period before service of the notice. Levitz Furniture Co. v Wingtip Communications, Inc. (2001) 86 CA4th 1035, 103 CR2d 656. See §§8.37A, 10.69. The landlord may consider suing for all past-due rent in another action, separately from the unlawful detainer. Otherwise, the landlord may be precluded from obtaining a judgment for rent in a second action because that would constitute splitting a cause of action. See Lekse v Municipal Court (1982) 138 CA3d 188, 193, 187 CR 698, discussed in §10.69.

Unless the lease is terminated through the landlord's fault (e.g., when there is a constructive eviction (see §8.19)), rent paid by the tenant in advance will not be apportioned in the absence of a qualifying provision in the lease, even though the tenant lawfully surrenders the premises during the prepaid period. Friedman v Isenbruck (1952) 111 CA2d 326, 335, 244 P2d 718.

See §§12.22-12.26 regarding proof at trial of rent owed by the tenant.

§13.19 3. Damages Caused by Unlawful Detainer

Code of Civil Procedure §1174(b) allows the court to award only those damages occasioned to the plaintiff by the unlawful detainer. Unless the tenant used fraud, force, or violence to remain in possession, the court may award only those damages resulting from the detainer itself, i.e., reasonable rental value, calculated daily from the date of expiration of the termination notice up through the date of judgment. See Roberts v Redlich (1952) 111 CA2d 566, 244 P2d 933. See also Hudec v Robertson (1989) 210 CA3d 1156, 258 CR 868 (trial court lacked jurisdiction to award landlord back rent in unlawful detainer based on alleged expiration of a lease, an issue on which tenant prevailed). See also §§9.38-9.41, 10.40, 12.27-12.30.

Code of Civil Procedure §1174(b) also authorizes an award of additional "statutory" damages of up to $600 for a malicious holding over, in place of the former provision for treble damages. For discussion of statutory damages, see §§9.40, 10.42, 12.31-12.34.

Any sums claimed by the landlord for the tenant's breaches before the unlawful detainer are characterized as back rent (for which the landlord must have served a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit; see CCP §1174(b)) or as "non-allowable" damages. See Vasey v California Dance Co. (1977) 70 CA3d 742, 139 CR 72 (separate action required for damages from tenant's unauthorized alteration of premises).

Damages are measured by the premises' reasonable rental value, usually at a per diem rate, during the period of unlawful detainer. See Flournoy v Everett (1921) 51 CA 406, 196 P 916. Although the agreed-on rent is evidence of the rental value (Lehr v Crosby (1981) 123 CA3d Supp 1, 9, 177 CR 96; Harris v Bissell (1921) 54 CA 307, 312, 202 P 453), the reasonable rental value may be found to be higher or lower (Harris v Bissell, supra).

The measure of rental value for assessing unlawful detainer damages is not simply "all rents, issues and profits" of a leasehold. Superior Motels, Inc. v Rinn Motor Hotels, Inc. (1987) 195 CA3d 1032, 1069, 241 CR 487. Damages for wrongful possession are not limited to the rent set by a local rent control ordinance. See Adler v Elphick (1986) 184 CA3d 642, 229 CR 254.

PRACTICE TIP: Following the full impact of the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535), on January 1, 1999, rent-controlled cities that had either no vacancy decontrol or limited vacancy decontrol (e.g., Santa Monica, Berkeley, West Hollywood) have seen a dramatic escalation in rents. As a result, the damages for unlawful detention may far exceed the rent-controlled rent. Counsel for tenants need to consider this fact when taking a weak unlawful detainer case to trial.

It has been held proper for the trial court to award damages in the absence of a prayer for them in the complaint. Flournoy v Everett (1921) 51 CA 406, 408, 196 P 916; Holland v Eastern Outfitting Co. (1911) 16 CA 441, 117 P 562. Such an award appears questionable in light of CCP §1174(b), which authorizes the trier of fact to assess damages alleged in the complaint and proved at trial. However, a lack of allegations or prayer could be cured by seeking leave to amend under CCP §1173. The court may not award future damages, i.e., a specified sum for each day of the tenant's continued possession after entry of judgment. Lehr v Crosby (1981) 123 CA3d Supp 1, 10, 177 CR 96; Cavanaugh v High (1960) 182 CA2d 714, 722, 6 CR 525.

§13.20 4. Prejudgment Interest

Code of Civil Procedure §1174(c) authorizes interest on the rent found due if a tenant is awarded possession on curing the default because the landlord did not elect a forfeiture (see §13.49). When the unlawful detainer action is based on nonpayment of rent, and rent is found due, interest on the rent from the date each installment was due may be awarded also under CC §3287(a). Chambers v Security Commercial & Sav. Bank (1920) 46 CA 32, 188 P 818.

In Tripp v Swoap (1976) 17 C3d 671, 682, 131 CR 789, overruled on other grounds in Frink v Prod (1982) 31 C3d 166, 180, 181 CR 893, the court listed the following three conditions for an award of prejudgment interest under CC §3287(a):

- An underlying monetary obligation must exist;
- Recovery must be certain or capable of being made certain by calculation; and
- Right to recovery must vest on a particular day.

See also CC §1951.2(b) (discussed in §8.14) regarding interest on the "worth at the time of award" in a breach-of-lease case.

Interest is not recoverable, however, on damages occasioned by an unlawful detainer. Such damages, as distinguished from rent, are not a liquidated sum, capable of being made certain by calculation. Stockton Morris Plan Co. v Carpenter (1936) 18 CA2d 205, 213, 63 P2d 859; Samuels v Singer (1934) 1 CA2d 545, 555, 36 P2d 1098. See also Superior Motels, Inc. v Rinn Motor Hotels, Inc. (1987) 195 CA3d 1032, 1072, 241 CR 487. The tenant's tender of the rent due during the 3-day notice period precludes an award of interest on the amount tendered (see CC §1504), although interest would be allowable for the period up to the date of tender. Webb v Jones (1927) 88 CA 20, 30, 263 P 538.

A trial court may award prejudgment interest when it is otherwise allowable, even though it was not requested in the complaint. Chambers v Security Commercial & Sav. Bank, supra. The trial court's failure to award interest cannot be claimed as error on appeal when interest was not requested in the complaint or at trial. Garfinkle v Montgomery (1952) 113 CA2d 149, 159, 248 P2d 52.

If allowable, prejudgment interest on back rent would be awarded at the legal rate, which is 7 percent per year under Cal Const art XV, §1, unless the parties agree in the lease or rental agreement for a higher rate, in which case the prejudgment interest may not exceed 10 percent per year under Cal Const art XV, §1(1). See also CC §3289(b). The landlord is also entitled to recover interest at the rate of 10 percent per year on the principal amount of the money judgment remaining unsatisfied, as distinct from the prejudgment interest discussed above. CCP §685.010(a). See California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §27.114 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

5. Costs

§13.21 a. Awarded to Prevailing Party

The party in whose favor judgment is ordered is entitled to claim his or her costs in the action. CCP §1032(b). Although this proposition is straightforward enough, it may not always be clear in an unlawful detainer action who is the prevailing party for purposes of recovering costs. Confusion formerly arose when a tenant succeeded on an implied warranty of habitability defense, because the landlord might still obtain a conditional judgment for possession of the premises if the tenant did not pay the amount of "reasonable rent" (see forms in §§13.40B-13.41). Currently, under CCP §1174.2, the landlord is the prevailing party when a tenant who successfully establishes the defense of breach of any warranty of habitability fails to pay the reasonable rental value, as determined by the court in a conditional judgment, within a 5-day period. For further discussion, see §§13.36-13.40.

When a party recovers relief other than a monetary judgment, the court has discretion to award costs. CCP §1032(a)(4). An award of purely equitable relief (e.g., possession or an injunction) or a plaintiff's dismissal of monetary damage claims on the eve of trial, therefore, may result in a court awarding no costs to either party. See United States Golf Ass'n v Arroyo Software Corp. (1999) 69 CA4th 607, 615, 81 CR2d 708. See also Fries v Rite Aid Corp. (2009) 173 CA4th 182, 92 CR3d 523 (allowed defendant to file cost memorandum after plaintiff voluntarily dismissed action). This discretionary standard differs from the standards applied in attorney fee disputes (see §§13.26-13.27).

§13.22 b. Allowable Costs and Expenses

Allowable costs are governed by CCP §§1032-1034.5. They include:

- Filing (appearance), motion, and jury fees and jury expenses (CCP §1033.5(a)(1)-(2));
- Actual cost of service of process (CCP §1033.5(a)(4));
- Deposition costs, including travel expenses (CCP §1033.5(a)(3));
- Court reporter fees (CCP §1033.5(a)(11); Govt C §69953);
- Transcripts of court proceedings ordered by the court (CCP §1033.5(a)(9));
- Models, blowups, and photocopies of exhibits, if reasonably helpful to the trier of fact (CCP §1033.5(a)(12));
- Costs on appeal (CCP §1034(b)); and
- Costs advanced to the sheriff or marshal for an eviction (CCP §1034.5).

Ordinary witness fees are recoverable. CCP §1033.5(a)(7); Govt C §§68093, 68097; see Fay v Fay (1913) 165 C 469, 132 P 1040. Expert witness fees, however, are not recoverable as costs, unless the use of the expert is ordered by the court or is authorized by law. CCP §1033.5(a)(8), (b)(1); Sanchez v Bay Shores Med. Group (1999) 75 CA4th 946, 89 CR2d 634. See Fairchild v Park (2001) 90 CA4th 919, 109 CR2d 442 (parties to contract cannot change meaning of statutory law excluding award of expert witness fees). Fees for an interpreter, if appointed by the court, may also be recoverable. Evid C §752.

On recovery of costs generally, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chap 27 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995). For discussion of attorney fees as an item of costs, see §§13.23, 13.33.

§13.23 c. Procedure for Claiming Costs

If a judgment includes an award of costs, or if costs are claimed after a dismissal, the party claiming costs must file and serve an appropriate memorandum of costs within 15 days after the mailing date of the notice of entry of judgment or dismissal or within 180 days after entry of judgment, whichever is earlier. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(a)(1). The party claiming costs and the party contesting costs may extend the time for serving and filing the cost memorandum and a motion to strike or tax costs by filing written confirmation of such an agreement with the court. In the absence of an agreement, the court may extend the time for serving and filing the memorandum of costs for a maximum of 30 days. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(b)(3).

The time provisions relating to the filing of a memorandum of costs, while not jurisdictional, are mandatory. Sanabria v Embrey (2001) 92 CA4th 422, 426, 111 CR2d 837. If the cost claim arises from a dismissal of the action, whether voluntary or involuntary, the memorandum of costs may be filed without an entry of judgment. Fries v Rite Aid Corp. (2009) 173 CA4th 182, 92 CR3d 523.

The party against whom costs are sought may challenge the costs by filing a motion to strike the cost bill or a motion to tax costs, no later than 15 days after service of the cost memorandum (response time is extended if memorandum served by mail). See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(b)(1); California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§27.103-27.105 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.2000, a plaintiff in an unlawful detainer proceeding who has complied with CCP §1034.5 may file a supplemental cost memorandum for costs of eviction by a sheriff or marshal within 10 days after being advised by the sheriff or marshal of the exact amount of the costs. The defendant may move to tax those costs within 10 days after service of the supplemental cost memorandum.

Because the costs of eviction (serving a writ of possession or for posting and serving a copy of the writ) are generally limited to the statutory eviction fee (currently $75 plus (if needed) $50 "for removing an occupant or occupants from the premises and putting a person in possession of the premises; see Govt C §26733.5) plus the statutory writ of execution fee, such supplemental cost bills are often more expensive to prepare than their recovery amount. A landlord who waits, however, to include such costs in a later postjudgment filing (e.g., for accrued postjudgment interest or for wage garnishment expenses) may not be allowed eviction expenses on the ground that they were not claimed within 10 days of having been ascertained.

Attorney fees are defined by statute as a cost item (CCP §1033.5(a)(10)) but are claimed in the memorandum of costs (without a noticed motion after judgment) only if the party claiming them is awarded either statutory or contractual attorney fees that are fixed without the necessity of a court hearing. CCP §1033.5(c)(5); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(e). Examples of this are fees fixed in a certain amount by contract or statute, schedules in local rules that prescribe a fixed amount of attorney fees on default, or a stipulation by the parties to accept the amount set by local jurisdictions for contested actions (usually based on the principal amount claimed as damages or the nature of the action). Otherwise, if attorney fees are awarded to the prevailing party by the trial court, the amount is generally determined on a motion filed after judgment (CCP §1033.5(c)(5); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702). See §§13.33-13.33C.

§13.24 d. Limitations on Costs

Unlawful detainer actions are not within the jurisdiction of small claims court. See CCP §116.220. Consequently, under CCP §1033(b)(2), because a prevailing landlord could not have brought the unlawful detainer action in small claims court, if the recovery in a superior court, limited civil case is less than the small claims court's jurisdictional maximum, the landlord's costs are limited to the actual filing fee for the action, the actual costs for service of process, and, if applicable, reasonable attorney fees. These may be awarded only if the plaintiff advised the defendant in writing before the action was brought that legal action was contemplated and that such action could result in the award of these costs against the defendant.

Code of Civil Procedure §1033(b)(2) may prove to be troublesome to landlords. Small recoveries are common in unlawful detainer actions, particularly when the judgment is recovered quickly and the monthly rent is low. In such cases, the amount of rent or damages awarded could easily be less than the small claims court's jurisdictional limit ($7500 if the plaintiff is a natural person; see CCP §§116.220(a)(1), 116.221). On the other hand, the recovery of "possession" is a recovery in excess of the jurisdiction of the small claims court. The small claims court no longer has jurisdiction to award possession. Arguably, CCP §1033(b) should not apply in cases where possession has been awarded to the landlord.

PRACTICE TIP: Notices to quit or to terminate tenancies should include the warning prescribed in CCP §1033(b)(2) when the monetary relief (back rent and damages) is expected to be less than $7500. Furthermore, the notices should closely follow the wording of the statute to avoid claims of intimidation and harassment, and may state that the warning is given without a waiver of the right to argue the inapplicability of CCP §1033(b) altogether.

In superior court, when a prevailing plaintiff recovers a judgment that could have been recovered in a court of lesser jurisdiction, an award of costs is within the court's discretion as governed by CCP §1034. CCP §1033(a).

There is no statutory language limiting the amount of the costs that a prevailing defendant may claim.

6. Attorney Fees

§13.25 a. Basis for Recovery

Except as expressly provided by statute, the "measure and mode" of compensating attorneys are left to the agreement of the parties. CCP §1021. The parties may, and often do, provide in the lease or rental agreement for recovery of attorney fees incurred in enforcing the provisions of that agreement (see §1.74). A party may recover attorney fees under a contractual provision even if neither party has pleaded entitlement to the fees as an item of damages, because such fees are recovered as costs. Allstate Ins. Co. v Loo (1996) 46 CA4th 1794, 54 CR2d 541. The better practice is to plead for attorney fees at least in the prayer of the complaint.

Some leases are one-sided and provide only for recovery of attorney fees when the landlord enforces its terms. Under California law, however, such a provision is interpreted to provide for recovery of attorney fees by the prevailing party, regardless of language limiting the right to one party. CC §1717(a). In other words, a unilateral contractual provision for attorney fees is transformed into a reciprocal provision by authorizing an award of fees to the prevailing party, "whether he or she is the party specified in the contract or not." CC §1717(a). Thus, if the lease provides for attorney fees at all, the party prevailing at trial in an unlawful detainer action may recover attorney fees. Moreover, if the contract provides for attorney fees, the prevailing party is entitled to fees regardless of which party initiated the action. Pacific Custom Pools, Inc. v Turner Constr. Co. (2000) 79 CA4th 1254, 94 CR2d 756.

A commercial lease provision that allowed the lessor to recover attorney fees in an enforcement action that "determined" that the tenant was in default entitled the landlord to attorney fees after accepting the tenant's CCP §998 offer. Wong v Thrifty Corp. (2002) 97 CA4th 261, 264, 118 CR2d 276. The Court of Appeal held that a party that accepts a §998 offer may recover attorney fees under CC §1717 when the compromise agreement was silent as to costs and fees.

In Cruz v Ayromloo (2007) 155 CA4th 1270, 1277, 66 CR3d 725, the court of appeal allowed attorney fees for both contract and tort causes of action under a lease that provided that the prevailing party would be awarded fees "for all claims in any civil action in connection with the lease." (Emphasis in original.)

When there is no contractual provision for attorney fees, there is no general statutory authorization for attorney fees in unlawful detainer proceedings except for CCP §1174.21, which provides that a landlord who brings an unlawful detainer action based on nonpayment of rent, and who violates the habitability standards in CC §1942.4, must pay the tenant's reasonable attorney fees and costs (see §§3.15A, 3.41), and CC §798.85, which entitles the prevailing party in an action regarding a tenancy under the Mobilehome Residency Law (CC §§798-799.10) to an award of reasonable attorney fees and costs (see chap 6). A city or county ordinance may serve as authority for an award of attorney fees. City of Santa Paula v Narula (2003) 114 CA4th 485, 8 CR3d 75. Other statutes that authorize an award of attorney fees in related contexts include the following:

- CC §52(a) (enforcement of Unruh Act (CC §51));
- CC §789.3(d) (unlawful termination of utility services);
- CC §1940.1(b) (violation of residential hotel tenancy rights);
- CC §1942.4(b) (affirmative suit for breach of statutory habitability requirements);
- CC §1942.5(g) (action for damages for retaliatory eviction);
- CCP §527.6(i) (action to enjoin harassment);
- CCP §1021.5 (private attorney general); and
- CCP §1021.8 (court's discretion when Attorney General is prevailing party and enforcing important public rights).

For a complete listing of statutes authorizing awards of attorney fees, see California Attorney Fee Awards, chaps 3, 9, 12-13 (2d ed Cal CEB 1994).

b. Determining Who Is Prevailing Party

§13.26 (1) Party Recovering "Greater Relief"

Attorney fees in routine unlawful detainer actions usually turn on the presence or absence of an attorney fee provision in the lease. See §13.25. Civil Code §1717(a) authorizes an award of attorney fees to the prevailing party, who is defined in CC §1717(b)(1) as the party who recovered a greater relief in the action on the contract. Civil Code §1717 was amended (in piecemeal fashion) several times between 1980 and 1988. In its current version a court has the authority to decide that neither party is the prevailing party for purposes of awarding attorney fees under CC §1717(b)(1) even though it may make an award of costs to one of the parties. See Nasser v Superior Court (1984) 156 CA3d 52, 202 CR 552. If the tenant defeats the plaintiff's claim for possession in the unlawful detainer action, the tenant is the party prevailing on the contract as a matter of law and may not be denied reasonable attorney fees under CC §1717. See Hsu v Abbara (1995) 9 C4th 863, 39 CR2d 824. Because the primary objective of an unlawful detainer action is recovery of possession of the premises (see Gray v Whitmore (1971) 17 CA3d 1, 17, 94 CR 904), the tenant must be considered to have prevailed in the action if the landlord for any reason is denied recovery of the premises. If a tenant successfully defeats the claim for possession by proving at trial the defense of breach of warranty of habitability, however, and thereafter fails to pay the reasonable rental value as determined by the court within a 5-day period, and if a statute or a contract (i.e., rental agreement, lease) provides for attorney fees to the prevailing party, then the landlord will be awarded costs and attorney fees. CCP §1174.2. For further discussion, see §§13.36, 13.40-13.40A.

In Public Employees' Retirement Sys. v Winston (1989) 209 CA3d 205, 258 CR 612, the court held that the tenant, who was entitled to return of the security deposit, which exceeded the amount of unpaid rent, was the prevailing party. A tenant was held to be the prevailing party in Haire v Stevenson (1987) 196 CA3d 1249, 242 CR 433, although the landlord prevailed in the unlawful detainer action. Because the tenant's judgment for damages in his action for breach of the lease exceeded the landlord's judgment in the unlawful detainer action, the tenant was the prevailing party. Both of these cases are consistent with the current version of CC §1717(b)(1), which provides that the prevailing party is the one who recovered greater relief.

A party may actually be the prevailing party under the terms of the lease, but may be denied attorney fees. In a commercial lease that defined the prevailing party as the party "who substantially obtains or defeats the relief sought, as the case may be, whether by compromise, settlement, judgment, or the abandonment by the other [p]arty… of its claims or defenses," a tenant received a voluntary dismissal while its summary judgment motion was pending and filed a motion for attorney fees. The court of appeal agreed that the language of the lease qualified the tenant as the prevailing party, but denied attorney fees because CC §1717 governs the award of attorney fees in "any action on a contract" and does not permit attorney fees in the event of a voluntary dismissal. Mitchell Land & Improvement Co. v Ristorante Ferrantelli, Inc. (2007) 158 CA4th 479, 70 CR3d 9.

A commercial landlord recovered attorney fees in North Assocs. v Bell (1986) 184 CA3d 860, 229 CR 305. The landlord filed an unlawful detainer action based on a 30-day notice terminating a month-to-month tenancy. The tenant defended the action on the ground that he had exercised an option to extend the expired lease, which contained an attorney fees provision. The trial court ruled in the landlord's favor. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's award of attorney fees under CC §1717, even though the trial court found that the lease containing the attorney fee provision had expired and had not been extended. Had the tenant prevailed in his defense, he would have been allowed to recover attorney fees based on the lease. The court thus found that it would be inequitable to deny attorney fees to the landlord.

Similarly, in Real Prop. Servs. Corp. v City of Pasadena (1994) 25 CA4th 375, 30 CR2d 536, the court held that the prevailing signatory defendant was entitled to fees against the losing nonsignatory plaintiff because the plaintiff would have been entitled to an attorney fees award had it prevailed. But see Whiteside v Tenet Healthcare Corp. (2002) 101 CA4th 693, 708, 124 CR2d 580, as to when there is a sufficient nexus between a signatory landlord and a nonsignatory sublessee so that the sublessee may enforce an attorney fee provision in the lease as a third party beneficiary.

WARNING: There are many other appellate court decisions on whether attorney fees may be awarded to or against persons who were not signatories to the agreement in dispute. See, e.g., §§13.31, 13.40. For further discussion, see California Attorney Fee Awards §§6.10-6.12 (2d ed Cal CEB 1994). Many of the opinions on this issue appear to be in conflict because they were decided on factually driven analyses, or because the court applied equitable principles that appear to be inconsistent with the language of CC §1717. Because of the apparent conflicts among the appellate districts, counsel should review carefully the facts of the reported cases and check to see which cases are binding in his or her district, or be prepared to argue the view most favorable to one's client for an action pending in a district where there is no published opinion on this issue.

§13.27 (2) Effect of Dismissal

If the plaintiff dismisses the contract action voluntarily, or the action is dismissed as part of a settlement, effectively there is no party prevailing on the contract. CC §1717(b)(2). Consequently, the defendant may not recover attorney fees incurred in defending a contract action that is voluntarily dismissed before trial, even if the contract expressly authorizes recovery of those fees. Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 617, 71 CR2d 830 (real estate purchase contract); Mitchell Land & Improvement Co. v Ristorante Ferrantelli, Inc. (2007) 158 CA4th 479, 70 CR3d 9; Exxess Electronixx v Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 75 CR2d 376 (commercial lease). See also Blickman Turkus, LP v MF Downtown Sunnyvale, LLC (2008) 162 CA4th 858, 76 CR3d 325 (commercial lease; analysis by court of value of studying exact language of fee provision in contract).

For example, in Honey Baked Hams, Inc. v Dickens (1995) 37 CA4th 421, 424, 43 CR2d 595, disapproved on other grounds in Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 614 n8, 71 CR2d 830, a commercial lease required that "the losing party" in any action for possession pay "the successful party" a reasonable attorney fee, "whether or not such action is prosecuted to judgment." The landlord sued to evict for nonpayment of rent, but voluntarily dismissed the action when it learned of a weakness in its evidence. The trial court granted the tenant's motion for attorney fees, and the court of appeal affirmed. The ruling in Honey Baked Hams was expressly disapproved in Santisas, because §1717(b), not CCP §1021, governs the award of fees after a voluntary dismissal of a contract action.

In an action on a contract that is ultimately settled, however, the parties may in their settlement agreement waive rights under §1717(b)(2). See, e.g., Jackson v Homeowners Ass'n Monte Vista Estates-East (2001) 93 CA4th 773, 113 CR2d 363, in which the parties entered into a pretrial settlement agreement and inserted a clause providing that the trial court would determine the prevailing party and the amount of the attorney fee award. The court of appeal held the agreement to be valid and enforceable because the parties contemplated that that the case would not be dismissed until the trial court had decided the attorney fee issue.

Note also that the Santisas decision arose from a contract that contained an attorney fee clause awarding fees to the prevailing party and does not apply to attorney fee awards authorized by statute. See, e.g., Del Cerro Mobile Estates v Proffer (2001) 87 CA4th 943, 105 CR2d 5 (mobilehome tenant in whose favor dismissal was entered was entitled to recover attorney fees under Mobilehome Residency Law, CC §798.85, a statute independent of the cost statutes and wholly separate from CC §1717); Galan v Wolfriver Holding Corp. (2000) 80 CA4th 1124, 96 CR2d 112 (trial court had discretion to rule that defendant was not prevailing party for purposes of recovering attorney fees under CC §1942.4 after plaintiff voluntarily dismissed suit for untenantable unit). See also Parrott v Mooring Townhomes Ass'n (2003) 112 CA4th 873, 6 CR3d 116 (CC §1717 not applicable in suit against condominium association for injunctive and declaratory relief; attorney fees governed by statute); Damian v Tamondong (1998) 65 CA4th 1115, 77 CR2d 262 (§1717 does not bar statutory attorney fee award for defendant in whose favor dismissal was entered in action under automobile sales financing law).

A defendant is not entitled to fees under CC §1717 even if the plaintiff dismisses voluntarily after trial, judgment for the plaintiff, and reversal on appeal. Investors Capital Mgmt. v Reiff (1979) 96 CA3d Supp 26, 158 CR 272. But see Wells v Marina City Props. (1981) 29 C3d 781, 176 CR 104 (plaintiff lost right to dismiss voluntarily when demurrer sustained and plaintiff failed to amend complaint), and Groth Bros. Oldsmobile, Inc. v Gallagher (2002) 97 CA4th 60, 118 CR2d 405 (absolute right to voluntarily dismiss case before trial did not apply when previous court order (by tentative ruling) sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend; defendant allowed to seek reasonable attorney fees under §1717).

A voluntary dismissal does not always exculpate a plaintiff from liability for attorney fees. See, e.g., Santisas v Goodin, supra; Del Cerro Mobile Estates v Proffer, supra (when plaintiff joins noncontract claim with contract action and dismisses entire action, defendant might recover attorney fees if contract or statute permits fee award in noncontract claim); Drybread v Chipain Chiropractic Corp. (2007) 151 CA4th 1063, 60 CR3d 580 (after landlord dismissed unlawful detainer suit that claimed tenant was holding over after lease expired, court ruled that §1717 did not apply and defendant, as prevailing party under CCP §1032(a)(4), was entitled to fees); Kelley v Bredelis (1996) 45 CA4th 1819, 53 CR2d 536 (when voluntary dismissal is set aside, defendant may be awarded attorney fees).

Also, under CCP §581(i), a plaintiff may not dismiss the entire action voluntarily if a defendant has sought relief in a cross-complaint, but a plaintiff may dismiss the complaint or any part of it under CCP §581(c), despite a cross-complaint.

PRACTICE TIP: Before voluntarily dismissing an action prior to trial, a landlord's attorney should scrutinize the complaint to make sure all causes of action pleaded arise from the contract. For a list of potential attorney fee entitlements, see §13.24.

On effect of dismissal on claims for costs, see §§13.21, 13.23.

c. Limits on Recovery by Prevailing Party

§13.28 (1) Attorney Representing Self

An attorney who represents himself or herself in propria persona may not recover attorney fees under CC §1717. Trope v Katz (1995) 11 C4th 274, 292, 45 CR2d 241. Nor may a pro per attorney recover attorney fees as discovery sanctions. Argaman v Ratan (1999) 73 CA4th 1173, 86 CR2d 917. A pro se litigant, including an attorney, may recover as a discovery sanction reasonable expenses incurred, even though he or she may not recover attorney fees. Kravitz v Superior Court (2001) 91 CA4th 1015, 111 CR2d 385.

The supreme court held that under CCP §128.7, a self-representing attorney may not be awarded attorney fees incurred in the defense of meritless claims. Musaelian v Adams (2009) 45 C4th 512, 87 CR3d 475 (applied Trope v Katz, supra, and reversed order awarding $25,050 in attorney fees). Although court of appeal decisions have allowed pro per attorneys to recover attorney fees under a companion statute (CCP §128.5) if the opposing party is guilty of bad faith tactics (see, e.g., Abandonato v Coldren (1995) 41 CA4th 264, 48 CR2d 429), the supreme court disapproved those rulings in Musaelian v Adams, supra.

For further discussion of attorney fees under CC §1717, see cases cited in §13.40 and California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 6 (2d ed Cal CEB 1994).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.28A (2) In-House or Pro Bono Representation

An entity that is represented by in-house counsel may recover attorneys fees under CC §1717. PLCM Group, Inc. v Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 95 CR2d 198. Similarly, a pro bono attorney may be awarded attorney fees on a successful motion to redress discovery abuses under the discovery laws, even if the attorney was not charging for services rendered in the case. See Do v Superior Court (2003) 109 CA4th 1210, 135 CR2d 855.

When applicable, CCP §1021.8 gives the court discretion when the Attorney General is the prevailing party and is enforcing important public rights.

§13.28B (3) Effect of Tenant Tendering Full Amount of Rent Owing

Under CC §1717(b)(2), a tenant may argue that the landlord cannot be the prevailing party for purposes of CC §1717 if:

- The court finds that the tenant truthfully alleged in the answer that the tenant tendered to the landlord the full amount to which the landlord was entitled; and
- The tenant deposits that amount into court for the landlord.

The landlord may argue in response that the failure to tender the rent during the 3-day notice period terminates the tenancy irrespective of CC §1717(b)(2). See §8.45. If the court accepts the tenant's view of CC §1717 and finds the allegation to be true, the tenant would be the prevailing party and thus would be entitled to recover attorney fees under CC §1717. If the tenant tendered the rent due before or during the 3-day notice period, of course, he or she should prevail and would not need the benefit of this provision. See §§8.43-8.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.28C (4) If Attorney Files Action in Wrong Court

Attorney fees may be denied or reduced if a landlord who is otherwise the prevailing party sues in the wrong jurisdictional level of the courts. CCP §1033. In Dorman v DWLC Corp. (1995) 35 CA4th 1808, 42 CR2d 459, a landlord sued his tenant in superior court for $50,000 for damage to the leased commercial premises, but the court awarded the landlord only $22,910. Because this amount was within the jurisdiction of the municipal court, the court exercised its discretion under §1033 to deny the landlord an award of attorney fees and costs, although the lease provided for attorney fees and costs to the prevailing party, and the landlord had prevailed. On appeal, the landlord argued that CC §1717 requires the trial court to award attorneys fees to the prevailing party if the lease so provides. The court of appeal held that CCP §1033 controlled, but that the trial court had abused its discretion by failing to award any fees. After trial court unification, the rule in §1033 that was the basis of the Dorman decision was preserved, but it distinguishes between unlimited and limited civil cases.

§13.28D (5) Actions Not Arising From Lease

In Artesia Med. Dev. Co. v Regency Assocs. (1989) 214 CA3d 957, 266 CR 657, the court held that a subtenant could not be the prevailing party, although it was awarded relief from forfeiture of the lease in an unlawful detainer action. Although the lease provided for attorney fees, there was no privity of contract between the landlord and the subtenant. Therefore, CC §1717 did not authorize an award of attorney fees for either party. In any event, the subtenant could not be the prevailing party under CC §1717, because it actually lost the unlawful detainer action and was allowed relief from forfeiture only as "an act of grace."

In McCulloch v M & C Beauty Colleges, Inc. (1987) 194 CA3d 1338, 1347, 240 CR 189, the tenant argued that attorney fees should not be awarded under the lease because the issues actually litigated in the suit were "entirely outside of the lease." In defense to an unlawful detainer action, the tenant raised complicated questions of title in an effort to prove that he had exercised a right of first refusal. The court rejected this argument on the ground that the tenant, and not the landlord, was responsible for introducing those issues into the case. Thus, the case essentially remained an unlawful detainer action. But see (the current) CC §1717(c) (allows for setoff in a case between contract and noncontract awards to ascertain prevailing party).

§13.29 d. Determining Amount of Fees

Attorney fees actually awarded to the prevailing party are often based on the amount in controversy, and they may not accurately reflect the actual amount of time expended by counsel on the case. This problem may arise especially in unlawful detainer actions, in which counsel for both parties may expend much time litigating complicated issues such as habitability and retaliation, but in which the actual dollar amounts in dispute (basically back rent and damages; see §§13.18-13.19) may be small.

The court in Stokus v Marsh (1990) 217 CA3d 647, 266 CR 90, however, upheld an award of $75,000 in attorney fees to a landlord because of the extremely vigorous, but unsuccessful, defense attempted by counsel for the tenants. Similarly, in Honey Baked Hams, Inc. v Dickens (1995) 37 CA4th 421, 43 CR2d 595, disapproved on other grounds in Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 614 n8, 71 CR2d 830, a court of appeal allowed an attorney fee award of over $5000 to the tenant's attorney, citing the facts that the landlord served the 3-day notice on the Friday of the 3-day New Year's weekend (although it had prepared the notice a month earlier), the tenant had submitted detailed billings to support the award, and a 5-year tenancy was at stake.

To assess attorney fees, trial courts frequently refer to local fee schedule tables. See Bakkebo v Municipal Court (1981) 124 CA3d 229, 236, 177 CR 239. On procedures see §§13.33-13.33C. For further discussion of fixing the amount of attorney fees, see California Attorney Fee Awards, chaps 11-13 (2d ed Cal CEB 1994).

An attorney fee award may be immunized from appellate review under the well-established rule that the trial court's decision "cannot be reversed in the absence of an abuse of discretion." Melnyk v Robledo (1976) 64 CA3d 618, 623, 134 CR 602. In Hadley v Krepel (1985) 167 CA3d 677, 214 CR 461, however, the court held that the trial court had abused its discretion in awarding the prevailing party only 20 percent of the attorney fees requested. Particularly in cases of unusual complexity or duration, the trial court should consider many factors in determining the amount of the award, "including the nature of the litigation, its difficulty, the amount involved, the skill required in its handling, the skill employed, the attention given, the success or failure," and other circumstances. Melnyk v Robledo, supra.

The trial court may consider, but need not follow, the fee arrangement between the prevailing party and his or her counsel. Vella v Hudgins (1984) 151 CA3d 515, 198 CR 725. A court may consider the attorney's "age and experience in the particular type of work demanded." La Mesa-Spring Valley Sch. Dist. v Otsuka (1962) 57 C2d 309, 316, 19 CR 479. The determination should focus on reasonably necessary services and not on the mere total of hours expended. Cirimele v Shinazy (1955) 134 CA2d 50, 52, 285 P2d 311. The trial court may also need to decide who gets the fees awarded—the attorney or the party. In Flannery v Prentice (2001) 26 C4th 572, 110 CR2d 809, e.g., the supreme court held that attorney fees awarded under Govt C §12965 (exceeding the fees already paid) belong to the attorney and not the client, unless their agreement provides otherwise.

PRACTICE TIP: When attorney fees might be awarded in a case, counsel should document the need for each expenditure of time as the case proceeds and be prepared to submit a detailed declaration stating (1) the hours worked and a justification for them, (2) material concerning his or her background and experience, (3) the complexity and importance of the case, and (4) any other facts that might support an award of fees in the amount requested. See California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 12, Apps A-L (2d ed Cal CEB 1994); California Eviction Defense Manual §26.24 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

A $500 limit on attorney fees in a rental agreement does not preclude an award of a higher amount under CCP §128.5, which authorizes sanctions for frivolous litigation tactics). Park Magnolia v Fields (1987) 191 CA3d Supp 1, 236 CR 900. Sanctions for frivolous litigation actions are currently governed by CCP §128.7.

In awarding attorney fees, a court hearing a limited civil case is not restricted by its $25,000 jurisdictional limit, as long as the fees are reasonable and bear a rational relationship to the substantive recovery. Stokus v Marsh (1990) 217 CA3d 647, 266 CR 90. Upholding a $75,000 fee award in an unlawful detainer action in which actual damages were $6166, the court in Stokus rejected dicta in Bakkebo v Municipal Court, supra, which suggested that a fee award could not exceed a court's jurisdictional limit.

§13.30 e. Fees for Services Before Complaint Filed

If counsel for the prevailing party can establish that significant services were performed before the action was filed, and that such services were necessary to prosecute or defend the action successfully, fees for such services may be awarded within the court's discretion. In La Mesa-Spring Valley Sch. Dist. v Otsuka (1962) 57 C2d 309, 316, 19 CR 479, the supreme court held that the fees must proximately and directly result from the action, but not be disallowed merely because the services were rendered before the action was filed. Thus, counsel might be able to recover for time spent preparing and serving the termination notice, investigating the facts of the case, or even attempting to persuade the parties to resolve their dispute.

Upholding an award of prefiling attorney fees, the court in Stokus v Marsh (1990) 217 CA3d 647, 266 CR 90, extended the reasoning of La Mesa-Spring Valley Sch. Dist. v Otsuka, supra, to all civil actions in municipal court. For further discussion of Stokus, see §13.29.

§13.31 f. Award of Fees Against Successors in Interest

Although the prevailing party is entitled to attorney fees under CC §1717 if they are expressly authorized in a lease or rental agreement (see §13.25), it is less certain whether such a contractual provision is enforceable between a landlord's successor in interest and the tenant or the tenant's assignee. This question is significant because parties to the litigation often succeed to the interests of either the landlord or the tenant, without having executed an assignment of an existing lease or rental agreement. See caveat in §13.26.

Under CC §821, a person to whom any real property is conveyed is entitled to the same remedies for breach of any of the terms of the lease as the grantor might have had. This provision is complemented by CC §823, which states:

> Whatever remedies the lessee of any real property may have against his immediate lessor, for the breach of any agreement in the lease, he may have against the assigns of the lessor, and the assigns of the lessee may have against the lessor and his assigns, except upon covenants against encumbrances or relating to the title or possession of the premises.

Those two statutes preserve the reciprocal rights of both parties to the lease or rental agreement to enforce a contractual attorney fee provision when there are successors in interest to one or both parties who have not executed a new lease (see §§3.52, 3.54). Upton v Toth (1940) 36 CA2d 679, 684, 98 P2d 515; Rosenkranz v Pellin (1950) 99 CA2d 650, 652, 222 P2d 249. For discussion of assignment and subletting generally, see §§3.49-3.59.

Civil Code §§821 and 823 apply, however, only when the lease does not provide to the contrary. Commonwealth Mem., Inc. v Telophase Soc'y (1976) 63 CA3d 867, 871, 134 CR 58 (sales agreement between landlord and successor reserved rights under lease to landlord; court held that successor did not become tenant's landlord). Similarly, a tenant is not bound by a preexisting lease that the tenant neither signed, nor agreed to be bound by. See Canal-Randolph Anaheim, Inc. v Wilkoski (1978) 78 CA3d 477, 485, 144 CR 474 (attorney-tenant, who moved into suite occupied by law firm under lease with owner, not entitled to attorney fees under CC §1717 after successfully defending unlawful detainer action).

When a party did not execute the lease or rental agreement, or agree to be bound by it, the test for applicability of CC §1717 appears to be whether the plaintiff claims that the nonsignatory party is bound to the contract by principles of agency or "coventureship." If such a relationship is established, a prevailing plaintiff is entitled to attorney fees against both a signatory and a nonsignatory defendant. A nonsignatory defendant who successfully defends against such a claim should also be entitled to attorney fees under CC §1717. See Reynolds Metals Co. v Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 128, 158 CR 1.

When a nonsignatory plaintiff sues a signatory defendant in an action on a contract and the signatory defendant prevails, the signatory defendant is entitled to attorney fees only if the nonsignatory plaintiff would have been entitled to its fees had the plaintiff prevailed. Real Prop. Servs. Corp. v City of Pasadena (1994) 25 CA4th 375, 30 CR2d 536. But see Whiteside v Tenet Healthcare Corp. (2002) 101 CA4th 693, 708, 124 CR2d 580, as to when there is a sufficient nexus between a signatory landlord and a nonsignatory sublessee so that the sublessee may enforce an attorney fee provision in the lease as a third party beneficiary.

§13.32 g. Attorney Fees on Appeal

Attorney fees may be awarded for services rendered in successfully prosecuting or opposing an appeal. Erbe Corp. v W & B Realty Co. (1967) 255 CA2d 773, 63 CR 462; Care Constr., Inc. v Century Convalescent Ctrs. (1976) 54 CA3d 701, 126 CR 761. Attorney fees are generally determined by the trial court, following remand, when it determines costs on appeal under CCP §1034(b) (see Genis v Krasne (1956) 47 C2d 241, 302 P2d 289) and Cal Rules of Ct 8.278 and 8.891.

Fees on appeal may be fixed by the appellate court, although the trial court is normally considered to be in a better position to determine the amount. Beverly Hills Nat'l Bank v Glynn (1968) 267 CA2d 859, 870, 73 CR 808. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(c); California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 15 (2d ed Cal CEB 1994).

See Cal Rules of Ct 8.278(c) and 8.891(c), which respectively govern the procedure for claiming costs awarded on appeal to an appellate court and to the appellate division of the superior court from limited civil cases.

See also Cal Rules of Ct 8.276(a), which allows the court of appeal to impose sanctions, including the award or denial of costs under Rule 8.278 on a party or an attorney for taking a frivolous appeal or appealing solely to cause delay, for including in the record matters not needed for the appeal's determination, for filing a frivolous motion, or for committing other unreasonable violation of the rules.

On the timing of a motion for attorney fees after a postjudgment appeal, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(c). Note that a party may postpone seeking attorney fees for a prejudgment appeal until after entry of judgment in the trial court (see §13.33C). The parties may stipulate to extend the time for filing a motion for attorney fees on appeal as well as at trial or may seek an order of court to extend the time for filing the motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(b)(2), (c)(2), (d).

If the underlying judgment is reversed, but the losing party has already paid the attorney fees of the prevailing party, the party that paid the fees may be able to petition for relief from the fee judgment. See, e.g., California Med. Ass'n v Shalala (9th Cir 2000) 207 F3d 575.

§13.33 h. Procedure for Claiming Fees

Attorney fee awards in unlawful detainer actions are frequently based on contractual provisions for such awards to the prevailing party (found in many leases and rental agreements; see §1.74). Occasionally, attorney fees are granted to the prevailing party under a statute (e.g., a successful defense to an unlawful detainer action based on a landlord's violation of fair housing laws; see §§2.47, 2.56, 2.59). For further examples and additional grounds for attorney fees, see California Attorney Fee Awards, chaps 4-8 (2d ed Cal CEB 1994).

(1) Basis of Award Governs Procedure

§13.33A (a) Contractual Attorney Fees

When the basis of the award is contractual, attorney fees are adjudicated during or after trial in one of the following three ways:

(1) Fixed by a noticed motion after entry of judgment;

(2) Awarded on entry of default judgment; or

(3) Claimed in a memorandum of costs after entry of judgment.

See CC §1717(a); CCP §1033.5(a)(10)(A), (c)(5); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(a), (e). See also Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 618, 71 CR2d 830. A noticed motion after judgment is the most common method, although attorney fees are claimed in the memorandum of costs without a motion when "a party is entitled to statutory or contractual attorney's fees that are fixed without the necessity of a court determination." See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(a), (e). See examples in §13.23.

The noticed motion procedure is based on a combination of statutes, decisional law, and rules of court. Civil Code §1717(a) provides: "Reasonable attorney's fees shall be fixed by the court, and shall be an element of the costs of suit." See also CCP §1033.5(c)(5); Stats 1990, ch 804, §2. Under CC §1717(b)(1), on notice and motion, the court must first determine the party prevailing on the contract for the purpose of awarding fees under CC §1717. The motion can and should also request that the court fix the amount of the award. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(a). See also California Attorney Fee Awards, chaps 6 and 14 (2d ed Cal CEB 1994).

A question of how to proceed may arise when a court has adopted a local rule fixing attorney fees in a schedule that is based on the amount in controversy or some other standard. Some courts have a sliding scale system and vary the fees, depending on whether the case is contested or defaulted. Other jurisdictions have a policy (if not a local rule) for contested unlawful detainer actions (e.g., in several divisions of the Los Angeles Courts a standard attorney fee of $350 is set for contested cases). Under CCP §1033.5(c)(5), attorney fees are awarded only on a noticed motion unless the parties stipulate otherwise or the judgment is entered by default (see Stats 1990, ch 804, §2). Therefore, a motion apparently may be avoided in a contested case only if the parties stipulate to an award consistent with the fee schedule or local policy, or if the parties have agreed on a fixed fee in the rental agreement. Despite the lack of authority, a few courts award attorney fees at the end of trial under the local fee schedule without a fee stipulation to expedite entry of judgment in unlawful detainer actions.

PRACTICE TIP: Most judges try to resolve attorney fees at the end of trial, if judgment is announced at that time, by asking the parties to stipulate to an award based on the local policy or rule of court. This is generally a good idea. The fixed fee is usually low enough to reward a stipulation from the losing party, who would have to pay more attorney fees to oppose a motion after trial. Many courts will not deviate from the local policy or rule unless there are extraordinary circumstances, such as a lengthy trial or a bankruptcy. In such courts, or if a prevailing landlord knows that the tenant is judgment-proof, the prevailing party may also benefit from stipulating in lieu of a motion.

§13.33B (b) Statutory Attorney Fees

When the basis of an attorney fee award is statutory, the fee amount may be fixed as follows:

- On a noticed motion after entry of judgment;
- At the time a statement of decision is rendered;
- On application (supported by a declaration) accompanying the filing of the memorandum of costs; or
- On entry of a default judgment.

See CCP §§1033.5(a)(10)(B), (c)(5); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(a), (e). See also California Attorney Fee Awards, chaps 4-5 and 11-14 (2d ed Cal CEB 1994) for a thorough discussion of statutory fees.

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/13 Unlawful Detainer: Judgment and Posttrial Proceedings/ §13.33C (2) Time Limits for Claiming Attorney Fees

§13.33C (2) Time Limits for Claiming Attorney Fees

If attorney fees are allowed to be claimed along with or in the memorandum of costs, the memorandum and supporting documents must be served and filed within the time prescribed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700. See CCP §1033.5(a)(10), (c)(5); Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(e) and discussion in §13.23.

If the attorney fees must be claimed in a motion filed after entry of judgment in the trial court, the motion to determine the prevailing party or the amount of attorney fees, or both, must be served and filed within the time for filing a notice of appeal under Cal Rules of Ct 8.104 and 8.108, i.e., usually within 60 days. This appears to apply to both limited and unlimited civil cases. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1-3.10, 3.1702(b)(1). The notice of entry of judgment (or copy of the judgment) must show the date on which the clerk mailed the document in order to establish the date on which the time period begins to run. Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a)(1); Advisory Committee Comment to Rule 8.104 (2006).

WARNING: Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702 only refers to the time to file a notice of appeal under Cal Rules of Ct 8.104 and 8.108, which govern appeals in unlimited jurisdiction matters. The time to file a notice of appeal in a limited jurisdiction matter may be as short as 30 days. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.822-8.823. While it is unclear whether the attorney fees claim must be brought within the shorter period, the cautious practitioner should do so in order to avoid any argument that the fee claim has been waived.

Entry of judgment triggers the time period for filing an attorney fee motion under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(b)(1). See Saben, Earlix & Associates v Fillet (2005) 134 CA4th 1024, 36 CR3d 610 (order granting summary judgment, unlike entry of judgment, is not appealable order and, thus, does not trigger deadline).

A party may postpone seeking attorney fees for a successful appeal that occurred "before the rendition of judgment in the trial court" until after the entry of judgment, and then seek both the attorney fees for that appeal and the attorney fees for trial in the same motion. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(b)(1).

Because the time for making a motion for an award of attorney fees refers only to the appeal periods in unlimited civil cases (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(b)(1)), the time for making the motion arguably is automatically extended when certain posttrial motions are made. For example, under Cal Rules of Ct 8.108(b) and 8.823(b), when a notice of intention to move for a new trial is served and filed and the motion is denied, the appeal time (and the time for an attorney fees motion (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(b)(1)) is increased until 30 days (15 days in a limited civil case) after either the superior court clerk mails, or a party serves, an order denying the motion or a notice of entry of that order or denial by operation of law, but in no event later than 180 days (90 days in a limited civil case) after the date of entry of judgment. This filing time is also automatically extended by various formulae for other posttrial procedures: under Cal Rules of Ct 8.108(c) and 8.823(c) when a notice of intention to move to vacate a judgment, or to vacate a judgment and enter a different judgment, is made; under Cal Rules of Ct 8.108(d) and 8.823(d) when a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is made; and under Cal Rules of Ct 8.108(e) and 8.823(e) when a motion for reconsideration of an appealable order is made.

Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(b)(2), the time for an attorney fee motion may be extended further by stipulation:

- Until 60 days after the expiration of the time for filing a notice of appeal; or
- If a notice of appeal has been filed, until the time in which a memorandum of costs must be filed as required in Cal Rules of Ct 8.278(c).

For good cause, the trial judge may extend the time for a period that is the same as (or longer than) that allowed by stipulation. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(d).

In California Recreation Indus. v Kierstead (1988) 199 CA3d 203, 209, 244 CR 632, the court held that failure to file a noticed motion under the former version of CC §1717 did not deprive the court of jurisdiction to award attorney fees when the party seeking fees filed and served only a memorandum of costs and the party opposing fees was not prejudiced by the lack of a noticed motion. See also M.C. & D. Capital Corp. v Gilmaker (1988) 204 CA3d 671, 678, 251 CR 178 (following Kierstead concerning attorney fees on appeal). Although these cases were decided before amendments to CCP §1033.5(c)(5) (see Stats 1990, ch 804, §2), they may be relevant to an argument about whether a court may proceed on an attorney fees motion that is filed later than currently allowed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(b). See, e.g., Russell v Trans Pac. Group (1993) 19 CA4th 1717, 1725, 24 CR2d 274 (trial court has no discretion to disregard compliance with noticed motion requirement, although it has discretion to grant relief for excusable neglect under CCP §473). Compare Russell with Gunlock Corp. v Walk on Water, Inc. (1993) 15 CA4th 1301, 19 CR2d 197 (filing memorandum of costs instead of noticed motion for fees within statutory time period constitutes substantial compliance with "notice and motion" requirement).

PRACTICE TIP: The safest practice is to file a timely and properly noticed motion within the time frame established in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(b). The opinion in Gunlock is questionable in view of the legislative intent stated in Stats 1990, ch 804, §2. See Russell v Trans Pac. Group (1993) 19 CA4th 1717, 1724, 24 CR2d 274.

§13.33D 7. Landlord Posttrial Inspections

A court of appeal created, at least in commercial leases, a duty for the landlord to inspect the premises to avoid injury to third parties after obtaining a judgment on its unlawful detainer action. In Stone v Center Trust Retail Props., Inc. (2008) 163 CA4th 608, 77 CR3d 556, a slip and fall case resulting from the tenant's negligence in maintaining the premises, the court of appeal ruled that the date on which a landlord obtains a judgment for possession of the premises is the date on which the landlord becomes liable for the condition of the premises. For further discussion of Stone, see §§3.68C, 3.72.

Another similar, judicially created duty requires the landlord to:

- Inspect the premises before leasing and on renewal to ascertain and correct "unsafe conditions";
- Use reasonable care to correct an unsafe condition in an area under the landlord's control after a tenant has taken possession if the landlord knows or reasonably should have known about the condition; and
- Use reasonable care to correct an unsafe condition in an area under the tenant's control after a tenant has taken possession if the landlord has actual knowledge of the condition and the right and ability to correct it.

This duty is summarized in a Judicial Council-approved jury instruction, CACI 1006. For further discussion, see §3.68C.

Comment: This judgment form is drafted for the most simple case, in which the tenants lose on all defenses. For judgment forms to be used when the tenant prevails on the defense of breach of the implied warranty of habitability, see §§13.40B-13.41. Counsel should adapt this form to meet the requirements of the specific case. On preparing and serving a notice of entry of judgment, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§23.28, 23.40 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995). The attorney preparing the notice may either recite the terms of the judgment in the notice or simply attach a conformed copy of the judgment as an exhibit to the notice.

Code of Civil Procedure §1174(b) generally limits the kind of damages that may be awarded in unlawful detainer actions (see §§13.18-13.19), but also authorizes an award of "statutory" damages of up to $600 for a malicious holding over, in place of the former provision for treble damages.

Costs are described in a judgment either "according to memorandum of costs to be filed after entry of judgment" or, if costs were proved at trial, in the dollar amount awarded by the court. See §13.23.

Attorney fees are characterized in a judgment in one of the following three ways, which are mutually exclusive: (1) to be fixed by a noticed motion after entry of judgment, (2) to be claimed in the memorandum of costs, or, if attorney fees were proved at trial, (3) in the dollar amount awarded by the court. See §13.33.

B. When Defendant Prevails

§13.35 1. Tenant's Retention of Possession

Because the primary objective of an unlawful detainer action is recovery of possession of the premises (see Gray v Whitmore (1971) 17 CA3d 1, 17, 94 CR 904), the tenant must be considered to have prevailed in the action if the landlord for any reason is denied recovery of the premises. This result is clear-cut if, for example, judgment were entered in the tenant's favor because the landlord failed to prove an element of the unlawful detainer cause of action (see §§12.19-12.35), or because the tenant established that the eviction was retaliatory (see §§12.38, 12.60-12.63; see also §§8.109-8.136).

If the tenant were to prove successfully an affirmative defense of breach of any warranty of habitability (see §§12.36-12.37, 12.46, 12.53-12.59; see also §§3.16-3.48), the tenant's victory may not be clear-cut, however, because the trier of fact probably would award the landlord some amount for "reasonable rent" due (see §§12.36, 12.56; see also §§3.35-3.38), entitling the landlord to a favorable judgment and execution by writ of possession if the rent found due is not paid. See CCP §1174.2. See also Lee v Vignoli (1979) 98 CA3d Supp 24, 29, 160 CR 79; Strickland v Becks (1979) 95 CA3d Supp 18, 157 CR 656 (when defendant prevails on affirmative defense, error to award costs to plaintiff). See forms in §§13.40B-13.41.

A trial court, however, may not condition entry of judgment for the tenant on payment of unpaid rent if the landlord has failed to prove an unlawful detainer. In Balassy v Superior Court (1986) 181 CA3d 1148, 226 CR 817, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's order conditioning judgment for the tenant on payment of back rent because the landlord's unlawful detainer action was based solely on an alleged nuisance committed by tenant.

§13.36 2. Warranty of Habitability Damages

Under CCP §1174.2(a), when a court finds that a substantial breach of any warranty of habitability has occurred, the court must determine the reasonable rental value of the premises in their untenantable state to the date of trial, and it must adjudge the tenant to be the prevailing party conditioned on the tenant's payment of the reasonable rental value within a reasonable period not to exceed 5 days from the date of judgment (plus additional time under CCP §1013 if service of the court's decision is by mail, express delivery, or facsimile). If the tenant fulfills this condition, judgment will be entered in the tenant's favor, and the tenant will be awarded costs and attorney fees if they are authorized by statute or contract.

Under CCP §1174.2(b), judgment will be entered for the landlord, who will be the prevailing party for purposes of awarding costs and attorney fees, if a tenant who successfully establishes the defense of breach of any warranty of habitability fails to pay the reasonable rental value, as determined by the court, within a 5-day period. See §§13.26, 13.41 (comment to form). For an example of application of this rule (based on Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, rather than on statute), see Park Magnolia v Fields (1987) 191 CA3d Supp 1, 6, 236 CR 900. The court may order the landlord to make repairs and correct defective conditions, and may reduce the monthly rent until repairs are completed and retain jurisdiction to ensure compliance. CCP §1174.2(a).

This conditional judgment approach appears to be consistent with the decision in Green v Superior Court, supra. See §13.41 for a sample form of order for a defendant prevailing on the issue of landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability. The trier of fact should make an express finding of the extent of uninhabitability, no matter what method of measuring damages for breach of the implied warranty is used. See CCP §1174.2(a); Lee v Vignoli (1979) 98 CA3d Supp 24, 29, 160 CR 79. The tenant's damages should be measured by the difference between the fair rental value of the premises if they had been as warranted and the fair rental value of the premises as they were during occupancy by the tenant in the unsafe or unsanitary condition. For further discussion of measuring damages for breach of the warranty of habitability, see §§3.35-3.38, 12.36-12.37, 12.46, 12.53-12.59.

An unresolved question is whether the factfinder is limited to assessing damages from the landlord's partial breach of the warranty only for the period during which the tenant withheld rent, or may determine the extent of damages for the period of the tenancy during which the landlord had notice of the breach. No reported California decision expresses a preference for either approach, although each party would select or urge the court to follow the most advantageous formula, depending on a number of factors, including:

- The amount of delinquent rent before the termination notice was served on the tenant;
- The period of unlawful detainer to the date of judgment;
- The duration of the landlord's actual or constructive knowledge of the conditions giving rise to the breach;
- The applicable statute of limitations, as governed by whether the agreement is written or oral; and
- The degree of uninhabitability.

NOTE: The consequences resulting from each assessment approach (see §§13.37-13.38) are different. In order to keep the case as simple as possible, most trial judges do not allow evidence of uninhabitability for any time before the period described in the 3-day notice, especially in light of the precedence that unlawful detainer cases have on the trial calendar under CCP §1170.5(a).

§13.37 a. Assessing Only Against Delinquent Rent

Under the formula that offsets breach of warranty damages only for the period during which the tenant withheld rent, if the landlord serves a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit immediately after the tenant's first rent withholding, and trial occurs 3 months later, the factfinder would be concerned only with damages for that 3-month period. Unless the breach is total, the tenant probably would be ordered to pay reduced rental value for that period to the landlord in order to retain possession. If the defects constituting the breach existed before the rent withholding, the tenant would not be able to claim them as an offset to the back rent and unlawful detainer damages due for the period of rent withholding. Instead, the tenant would have to seek damages in the form of "retroactive rent abatement" for the alleged overpayments in a separate lawsuit (see §§3.35, 3.45-3.47). As an affirmative claim, the tenant's damages would be subject to the applicable statute of limitations. See CCP §§337.2 (written contract), 339(1) (oral agreement).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.38 b. Assessing Against All Rent Due After Notice

Under the approach offsetting breach of warranty damages for the entire period of the tenancy during which the landlord had either actual or constructive notice of the breach, the factfinder would determine the extent of the tenant's damages from the landlord's breach throughout the period of the tenancy that the landlord had notice of the breach, and these damages would be offset against any back rent due for the rent withholding period and any damages for unlawful detainer. The statute of limitations would not apply to a setoff by the tenant under this approach, but the amount of the setoff would be limited to the extent of affirmative relief awarded to the landlord. See CCP §431.70.

In Nork v Pacific Coast Med. Enters. (1977) 73 CA3d 410, 416, 140 CR 734, the court held that a tenant could not allege, as a defense to an unlawful detainer action, an unrelated debt owed to the tenant by the landlord that was irrelevant to the issue of immediate possession. Other cases suggest that a factfinder may offset damages against back rent in a breach of warranty case. The court in Knight v Black (1912) 19 CA 518, 126 P 512, held that:

- A tenant could allege that rent had been paid or that a security deposit had been left with the landlord; and
- Both of these sums could be used to offset rent due.

Note, however, that the tenant had vacated the premises prior to the judgment. See also Berzito v Gambino (NJ 1973) 308 A2d 17, 21 ("in action by landlord for unpaid rent, tenant may plead, by way of defense and set-off, breach by landlord of continuing obligation to maintain adequate standard of habitability").

Although not squarely faced with the issue of determining the extent of damages, the California Supreme Court discussed the issue in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 638, 111 CR 704. Additionally, as part of its rationale for abandoning the independent covenant doctrine and allowing breach of the warranty as a defense, the court in Green noted the authorities that have taken or recommended this result, and stated that this position accords with the trend toward adjudicating the rights and liabilities of litigants in one action, rather than multiple actions (quoting from Jack Spring, Inc. v Little (Ill 1972) 280 NE2d 208, 213). 10 C3d at 636. Those authorities suggest that offsetting damages for breach of the warranty against rent for a duration of the tenancy beyond the period of rent withholding might be appropriate in a partial breach case. The order of proof would be approximately as follows:

- The time limit for the setoff would commence when the owner had notice of the alleged uninhabitable conditions, whether the notice was the result of an inspection, notification by the tenant, constructive knowledge, or any other source.
- Because proof of the breach during the period of rent withholding is clearly admissible, additional proof of the breach for the time during which the landlord had notice (and during which the tenant did not withhold rent), if admitted, would not unduly prolong the proceedings.
- The setoff would be applied only to sums otherwise found due for back rent and damages but not result in an affirmative award of money damages to the tenant in the unlawful detainer action.

§13.39 3. Res Judicata Effect

Because of the summary nature of the unlawful detainer remedy (see §§9.6-9.8), the significant limitation on allowable affirmative defenses (see §10.53), and the unavailability of relief by cross-complaint (see §10.73), unlawful detainer judgments should have collateral estoppel or res judicata effect only when an issue could have been raised, or actually was adjudicated, in the unlawful detainer proceeding. See Vella v Hudgins (1977) 20 C3d 251, 142 CR 414 (unlawful detainer judgment following trustee sale was not res judicata because no transcript of unlawful detainer trial existed and no findings of fact or conclusions of law were in record). See also Gombiner v Swartz (2008) 167 CA4th 1365, 1371, 85 CR3d 83 (determination of rent control ordinance's applicability to property in final judgment in unlawful detainer action was binding on parties in tenant's subsequent action for damages against landlord). In Lovely v Laliberte (1st Cir 1974) 498 F2d 1261, the court held that the tenant's civil rights action against the landlord was barred because the tenant could have raised the defense of retaliatory eviction in an earlier eviction action, but did not do so.

The doctrine of res judicata will not apply to an issue if a party to the action did not have a fair adversary hearing on the issue. Gonzalez v Toews (2003) 111 CA4th 977, 4 CR3d 434. See also Gonzales v Gem Props. (1974) 37 CA3d 1029, 112 CR 884 (no res judicata effect because plaintiff did not have opportunity to litigate fully contentions regarding title); Bacciocco v Curtis (1938) 12 C2d 109, 82 P2d 385 (tenant's action for return of security deposit held not barred by unlawful detainer judgment). But see Wood v Herson (1974) 39 CA3d 737, 745, 114 CR 365 (judgment given res judicata effect because tenants had full hearing on their contentions). Compare McAlister v Essex Prop. Trust (CD Cal 2007) 504 F Supp 2d 903 (state court judgment given res judicata effect because tenants prevailed on affirmative defense based on discrimination in unlawful detainer action) with Stein v Braum Inv. & Dev., Inc. (9th Cir Cal 2007) 2007 US App Lexis 18971 (state court judgment not given res judicata effect, because record did not establish that tenants' defense based on discrimination was fully and fairly litigated in eviction action).

A related question is whether a judgment in favor of the tenant based on the defense of breach of the warranty of habitability or retaliatory eviction would bar the landlord from relitigating those issues in the tenant's subsequent affirmative suit for damages. No reported decision has addressed this issue. The key to the question would be whether the landlord had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue in the prior proceeding. If the tenant raised the issue as an affirmative defense, which the landlord had a full opportunity to meet, a ruling on the issue should bar further litigation except over any damages not adjudicated in the unlawful detainer action.

In Pelletier v Alameda Yacht Harbor (1986) 188 CA3d 1551, 230 CR 253, the court held that a stipulated judgment in an unlawful detainer action was not a bar to a later action for retaliatory eviction. The court reasoned that "[t]he retaliation defense was not fully and fairly litigated in an adversary hearing, and thus was not conclusively established." 188 CA3d at 1557. This result could have been avoided if the landlord had insisted on a clause in the stipulated judgment releasing the parties from any further liability arising out of the matter in controversy. See also Landeros v Pankey (1995) 39 CA4th 1167, 46 CR2d 165, discussed in §3.35, in which the tenant was not collaterally estopped (by the settlement of the landlord's unlawful detainer action) from suing the landlord for damages for breach of the implied warranty of habitability. Careful drafting of the settlement documents could have avoided this problem for the landlord.

4. Attorney Fees and Costs

§13.40 a. Under Contract

If the lease or rental agreement contains an attorney fee provision, a tenant who prevails in the action is entitled to an award of reasonable attorney fees and costs. CC §1717; Strickland v Becks (1979) 95 CA3d Supp 18, 157 CR 656 (although landlord awarded back rent, tenant prevailing on habitability defense entitled to costs).

In Hsu v Abbara (1995) 9 C4th 863, 877, 39 CR2d 824, the court held that "[w]hen a defendant obtains a simple, unqualified victory by defeating the only contract claim in the action," the trial court has no discretion to deny an award of attorney fees to the defendant under CC §1717. The trial court has discretion, however, to award no attorney fees to either party (CC §1717(b)(1)) if the ostensibly prevailing party receives only part of the relief sought.

In Public Employees' Retirement Sys. v Winston (1989) 209 CA3d 205, 258 CR 612, the court held that the tenant, who was entitled to return of the security deposit, which exceeded the amount of unpaid rent, was the prevailing party. A tenant was held to be the prevailing party in Haire v Stevenson (1987) 196 CA3d 1249, 242 CR 433, although the landlord prevailed in the unlawful detainer action. Because the tenant's judgment for damages in his action for breach of the lease exceeded the landlord's judgment in the unlawful detainer action, the tenant was the prevailing party.

In Beverly Hills Props. v Marcolino (1990) 221 CA3d Supp 7, 270 CR 605, a legal services organization that represented the tenant without a fee recovered attorney fees despite a lease provision that the successful litigant could recover fees "actually" paid or to be paid. Currently, legal aid attorneys, based on a directive from the Legal Services Corporation, are not pursuing attorney fees when they prevail in unlawful detainer actions.

In A & M Produce Co. v FMC Corp. (1982) 135 CA3d 473, 494, 186 CR 114, the court upheld an award of attorney fees when the contract provided for their recovery to enforce the contract and the action was for a breach of express or implied warranty. The court reasoned that the fact that a warranty is not stated in the agreement "does not mean it is not part of the contract." 135 CA3d at 495.

The A & M Produce decision seems particularly applicable to cases resolved in a defendant's favor on issues of breach of the implied warranties of habitability and quiet enjoyment. Would CC §1717 apply, however, if a defendant prevails on the defense of retaliatory eviction, or other improper, discriminatory motive? The answer may turn on whether such a defense is necessary "to enforce the terms of the agreement," a phrase often found in attorney fee clauses in preprinted lease and rental agreements. See, e.g., §1.74. See also Lewis v Alpha Beta Co. (1983) 141 CA3d 29, 189 CR 840 (CC §1717 authorized award of fees to lessees who, on basis of their own lease, sued both their landlord and another tenant to enforce restrictive covenant assumed by tenant in its lease for lessees' benefit, and each lease contained attorney fee provision).

Civil Code §1717 authorizes an award of attorney fees to a tenant who proves that the lease is invalid and unenforceable. Care Constr., Inc. v Century Convalescent Ctrs. (1976) 54 CA3d 701, 126 CR 761. See also Hsu v Abbara (1995) 9 C4th 863, 39 CR2d 824. A tenant who is not a party to a lease containing an attorney fee provision, however, may not recover attorney fees under the lease and CC §1717. Canal-Randolph Anaheim, Inc. v Wilkoski (1978) 78 CA3d 477, 485, 144 CR 474. That rule was questioned, however, in dictum in Manier v Anaheim Bus. Ctr. Co. (1984) 161 CA3d 503, 207 CR 508. See also Reynolds Metals Co. v Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 158 CR 1 (nonsignatory defendant who is sued on a contract may recover attorney fees under CC §1717). See caveat in §13.26 and discussion of cases generally in §§13.26-13.31. On procedures for claiming fees, see §13.33-13.33C. See also California Attorney Fee Awards, chaps 6, 14 (2d ed Cal CEB 1994).

§13.40A b. Under Anti-SLAPP Statute

An important alternative basis for the tenant's attorney recovering attorney fees and costs is the anti-SLAPP statute (CCP §425.16), forbidding "strategic lawsuits against public participation." See Ketchum v Moses (2001) 24 C4th 1122, 104 CR2d 377, cited in §§5.18A, 8.110, 10.38A. See also Dowling v Zimmerman (2001) 85 CA4th 1400, 103 CR2d 174, in which the court held that the tenant's attorney met her burden of establishing a prima facie showing that the landlord's defamation action against the tenants and their attorney arose from their free speech and petition activity. In both Ketchum and Dowling, the attorneys were entitled to recover their fees and costs under the mandatory provisions of CCP §425.16(c).

In ComputerXpress, Inc. v Jackson (2001) 93 CA4th 993, 113 CR2d 625, the court ruled that partial attorney fees are recoverable if the defendant prevails on some but not all of the claims attacked in its motion to strike. In order to be awarded fees, however, the defendants must obtain significant benefits by bringing the anti-SLAPP motion. If the defendants obtain limited success, they may get limited fees. See Mann v Quality Old Time Serv., Inc. (2006) 139 CA4th 328, 42 CR3d 607. If the defendants' motion accomplishes nothing and the potential recovery against them remains the same after the motion is adjudicated, defendants will not be awarded fees. Endres v Moran (2006) 135 CA4th 952, 37 CR3d 786. For further discussion of protections under the anti-SLAPP statute, see §5.18A.

On recovering fees under other statutes, see §13.25.

This action came on regularly for trial on _ _[date]_ _, at _ _[time]_ _. Appearing were _ _[name]_ _, as attorney for plaintiff, and _ _[name]_ _, as attorney for defendant.

[Option 1: If court trial]

A jury trial having been waived; the Court having heard and considered testimony, documentary evidence, and argument of counsel; the matter having been submitted for decision; and [Add if statement of decision is requested]

the Court having issued its statement of decision;

[Add if statement of decision is not requested or is waived]

a statement of decision _ _[not having been requested/having been waived]_ _;

[Continue]

the Court finds that defendant _ _[name]_ _ has established that plaintiff _ _[name]_ _ breached the implied warranty of habitability, and that for the period _ _[state beginning date through date of trial]_ _ said plaintiff is entitled to the reduced sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _.

[Option 2: If jury trial]

A jury of _ _[number]_ _ persons was impaneled and sworn to try the action. Witnesses for both plaintiff and defendant were sworn and examined. After hearing the evidence, the arguments of attorneys, and the instructions of the Court, the jurors retired to consider their verdict. After returning to court, the jurors rendered their verdict as follows: _ _[*Specify verdict, e.g., plaintiff having breached the implied warranty of habitability for specified untenantable conditions, defendant is entitled to retain possession of the premises, and plaintiff is not entitled to recover possession of the premises. Further, because of the breach of the implied warranty of habitability, the reasonable monthly rental value for the premises for the period of the breach is _ _[dollar amount]_ _, making the total rental value owed to plaintiff the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _]_ _.

[Continue]

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED AND ADJUDGED AS FOLLOWS:

1. Defendant _ _[name]_ _ is to pay into court the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ no later than 5 days after _ _[the date of this Order/service of notice of this Order on the parties under CCP §1013, if service is by mail]_ _.

2. Should said defendant pay the above-specified sum by the above-specified date, defendant _ _[name]_ _ shall be deemed the prevailing party in this action. The clerk of this Court is directed under such circumstances to pay forthwith to plaintiff _ _[name]_ _ the entire sum thus paid into court. On submission by either party of an appropriate form of judgment, final judgment will be entered in said defendant's favor as follows:

a. For possession of the premises commonly known and described as _ _[address]_ _.

b. For costs of suit, according to memorandum of costs to be filed within the prescribed time after entry of such judgment.

c. Plaintiff _ _[name]_ _ _ _[is/is not]_ _ ordered to repair or correct on said premises the following conditions, which have been found to be a breach of the implied warranty of habitability: _ _[list separately and describe each condition found to constitute the breach]_ _.

d. After entry of such judgment, whether or not plaintiff is ordered to repair or correct any such condition, and until each and every condition set forth above has been repaired or corrected, the monthly rent shall be limited to the reasonable rental value of the premises, which has been found to be _ _[dollar amount per month]_ _.

[Add if applicable]

e. This Court retains jurisdiction after entry of final judgment to enforce the terms of the judgment pertaining to the order to repair or correct the conditions found to be a breach of the implied warranty of habitability.

[Add if applicable]

f. For reasonable attorney fees, to be fixed by the court upon motion made by defendant after entry of such judgment.

[Continue]

3. Should said defendant not pay into court the above-specified sum by the above-specified date, plaintiff _ _[name]_ _ shall be deemed to be the prevailing party in this action. On submission to the Court by either party of an appropriate form of judgment, final judgment will be entered in said plaintiff's favor as follows:

a. For possession of the premises commonly known and described as _ _[address]_ _.

b. For rent and rental value damages in the sum total of _ _[dollar amount from paragraph 1]_ _.

c. For costs of suit, according to memorandum of costs to be filed within the prescribed time after entry of such judgment.

[Add if applicable]

d. For reasonable attorney fees, to be fixed by the court upon motion made by plaintiff after entry of such judgment.

JUDGE, SUPERIOR COURT

Copies: Original (to be presented to judge for signature); conformed copies (one for each attorney of record and unrepresented party) or for attaching to notice of entry of order (to be served and filed with original proof of service); office copies; copies for client(s).

Comment: Under CCP §1174.2(a), when a substantial breach of any warranty of habitability has occurred, the trier of fact determines the reasonable rental value of the premises in its untenantable state to the date of trial, and adjudges the tenant to be the prevailing party conditioned on the tenant's payment of the reasonable rental value within a period not to exceed 5 days from the date of the order (plus additional time under CCP §1013 if service is by mail). If the tenant fulfills this condition, judgment will be entered in his or her favor (see §§13.35-13.38), and the tenant will be awarded costs and attorney fees if authorized by statute or contract. See §§13.23, 13.33-13.33C.

If the tenant fails to pay the amount found due within the prescribed period, judgment will be entered in the landlord's favor, and the landlord will be awarded possession and adjudicated the prevailing party for purposes of awarding costs and attorney fees. CCP §1174.2(b). If a tenant misses the deadline for payment, rights under CCP §1174 are not forfeited. CCP §1174.2(a).

As an alternative to the terms in this form, some judges prefer to order the tenant to pay the reduced rent directly to the landlord rather than deposit it into court (see ¶1), place the burden on the landlord to apply ex parte for entry of judgment if the tenant fails to pay by the date prescribed (see ¶3), and additionally order that judgment will be entered for the tenant automatically if the landlord does not apply for entry of judgment by a specified date.

The judgment form in §13.34 may be modified for submission to the court when the tenant becomes the prevailing party by complying with the terms of ¶2 of this form of order. On preparing and serving a notice of entry of judgment, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§23.28, 23.40 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995). The attorney preparing the notice may either recite the terms of the judgment in the notice or simply attach a conformed copy of the judgment as an exhibit to the notice. On captions for court papers, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 11 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

§13.42 C. Successive Actions Not Barred by Appeal

Under CCP §1176(b), a subsequent unlawful detainer action "on the same agreement for the rental of real property" is not barred by the pendency of an appeal of an earlier action. This provision, added by the legislature in 1979 (Stats 1979, ch 958) overturned the decision in Woods-Drury, Inc. v Superior Court (1936) 18 CA2d 340, 63 P2d 1184, in which the court held that the municipal court had no jurisdiction to entertain a subsequent unlawful detainer action based on nonpayment of rent after the tenant had lost the first action (based on a 30-day termination notice) and had obtained a stay pending appeal. The subsequent action, however, must be on a "new cause of action." CCP §1176(b).

IV. POSTTRIAL PROCEEDINGS

§13.43 A. Posttrial Motions Generally

The usual motions available after trial of civil actions are available to the parties to an unlawful detainer action. The court may stay execution of judgment pending the determination of posttrial motions or an appeal. CCP §§918, 1176(a). See §§13.52-13.53, 13.60, 13.63. For extensive discussion of posttrial motions after unlawful detainer actions, see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 27 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993). For further discussion of posttrial motions generally, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chap 25 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

§13.44 1. Motion for New Trial

Either party may move for a new trial to seek reexamination of an issue of fact after trial and a determination by a jury or judge. CCP §§656, 659. The party may make the motion by noticing the intention to move for a new trial. CCP §659. The grounds specified in CCP §657 are the only grounds on which the motion may be granted. Fomco, Inc. v Joe Maggio, Inc. (1961) 55 C2d 162, 10 CR 462. If the trial court grants the defendant's motion for a new trial on the basis of insufficient evidence and states findings that support the granting of the motion, such an order is entitled to deference from a reviewing appellate court and should be reversed only if the opposing party demonstrates that no reasonable trier of fact could have found for the moving party on the trial court's theory. Lane v Hughes Aircraft Co. (2000) 22 C4th 405, 93 CR2d 60. All the statutory grounds base the court's granting of the motion on a finding that there has been a miscarriage of justice. See Mercer v Perez (1968) 68 C2d 104, 112, 65 CR 315.

Under CCP §659, the notice of motion for a new trial may be made either:

- Before the entry of judgment; or
- By the earliest of:
- 15 days after the date of mailing by the clerk of written notice of entry of judgment;
- 15 days after the date of service of that notice by any party, or
- Within 180 days after the entry of judgment.

The new trial motion statutes do not require the party that gives notice of entry of judgment to file an original notice of entry (or a file-stamped copy of the judgment) accompanied by proof of service to start the time limits for bringing and determining the motion. Palmer v GTE Cal., Inc. (2003) 30 C4th 1265, 135 CR2d 654. If neither the clerk of the court nor the prevailing party give notice of entry of judgment, but notice is mailed by the losing party who thereafter files a motion for new trial, the 60-day period in which the court must decide the new trial motion will begin when the defendant files the motion for new trial. People ex rel Dep't of Transp. v Cherry Highland Props. (1999) 76 CA4th 257, 90 CR2d 214, disapproved on other grounds in Palmer v GTE Cal., Inc., supra.

Code of Civil Procedure §1013(a), which extends the time to act when notice is served by mail, does not apply to the 60-day time limit for granting a new trial under CCP §660. Once the 60 days have passed, the new trial motion is automatically denied, and the court lacks jurisdiction to grant the motion. Westrec Marina Mgmt. v Jardine Ins. Brokers Orange County (2000) 85 CA4th 1042, 102 CR2d 673.

WARNING: The requirement under CCP §657 that the trial court's statement of reasons be filed no later than 10 days after the order granting a new trial is jurisdictional, and a statement of reasons filed more than 10 days after the order is ineffective. See Oakland Raiders v National Football League (2007) 41 C4th 624, 634, 61 CR3d 634 (new trial order reversed because trial court's order failed to set out reasons for granting new trial on ground of jury misconduct); Malkasian v Irwin (1964) 61 C2d 738, 40 CR 78 (trial court orally stated ground for granting new trial, but clerk mistakenly failed to specify ground in written order).

For further discussion of motions for new trial, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial, chap 25 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995). In addition to the power to grant a new trial, the court in a nonjury trial has broad discretion to modify the statement of decision, and may reopen the case for further proceedings and the introduction of additional evidence, in order to do so. CCP §662. See Civ Proc During Trial §§25.22-25.63.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.45 2. Judgment Notwithstanding Verdict

Under CCP §629, a trial court may enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of a party against whom a jury verdict was rendered, when a motion for a directed verdict should have been granted had the motion been made. See Garrett v Shenson Meat Co. (1970) 5 CA3d 69, 85 CR 65. The trial court may enter such judgment on the motion of a party or its own motion. Like a directed verdict, a judgment notwithstanding the verdict is proper only when the court determines that there is insufficient evidence to support a verdict for the nonmoving party, after viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to that party, accepting every inference in that party's favor, and disregarding conflicting evidence. Baker v Manning's, Inc. (1953) 122 CA2d 390, 393, 265 P2d 96; Lehmann v Mitchell (1952) 109 CA2d 719, 723, 241 P2d 573. For further discussion, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§25.2-25.14 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

§13.46 3. Motion to Vacate and Enter Different Judgment

Another posttrial procedural device is a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and enter a different judgment under CCP §663. This motion is available only when the judgment is:

- Based on incorrect or erroneous conclusions of law not consistent with or supported by the facts; or
- Inconsistent with or unsupported by the jury's special verdict.

CCP §663. Thus, this procedure allows the court to substitute a proper judgment when the judgment is improper in view of the facts found in the statement of decisions or special verdict. It does not provide for an attack on findings made in the statement of decision or special verdict; those findings cannot be modified under this motion. The appropriate method for attacking the findings is a motion for new trial. Dahlberg v Girsch (1910) 157 C 324, 327, 107 P 616. For more discussion of motions to vacate, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§25.72-25.76 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.47 4. Motion to Correct Clerical Error

The parties may move to correct a clerical error in the judgment, under CCP §473(d) or under the court's inherent power to correct those errors. See Bastajian v Brown (1941) 19 C2d 209, 214, 120 P2d 9. This procedure could be useful in unlawful detainer actions to correct errors made in recording the factfinder's mathematical calculation of rent and damages, or to correct the street designation, e.g., "street" instead of "avenue," and transposed numbers. On motions to correct clerical errors, see California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §§25.78-25.82 (3d ed Cal CEB 1995).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.48 B. Stay of Execution

When a landlord prevails in an unlawful detainer action, judgment must be entered for "possession of the premises." CCP §1174(a). In the usual action, the landlord obtains a writ of possession under CCP §§715.010-715.040, and the sheriff or marshal physically evicts the tenant from the premises. See §§13.64-13.69. The tenant may be able to obtain an order from the trial court, staying execution of the judgment for possession for some period of time, either to pay the rent due and be restored to possession (see §13.49) or for some other reason under the court's inherent power to stay execution (see §13.52).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.49 1. 5-day Stay; Restoring Possession on Unexpired Lease (CCP §1174(c))

In limited instances, and under a lease that has not expired by its own terms, a tenant may obtain a 5-day stay of execution of judgment for the purpose of paying the back rent and having possession restored under his or her leasehold interest. For such stay to be available, the landlord must have failed to declare a forfeiture of the lease in the termination notice. See §13.17. During the stay period, the tenant (or other interested party) may pay into court the amount found owing as back rent (with interest), the amount of damages awarded for the unlawful detainer, and costs. The judgment is then considered to be satisfied, and the tenant's right to possession is restored for the balance of the lease term. CCP §1174(c). The stay is either mandatory or discretionary, depending primarily on the reason for the eviction, the terms of the lease, and other factors described in §§13.50-13.51.

No statute requires a noticed motion to obtain an order under CCP §1174(c) for a 5-day stay of execution of judgment in unexpired lease cases. Counsel for the tenant should be prepared to make and argue the motion orally or on written application at the end of trial, so that if the matter is taken under submission, the court will provide for a stay of execution in the judgment itself, in its notice of ruling, or in its statement of decision. To obtain that result, evidence supporting either a mandatory or discretionary stay should be offered at trial (the documentary evidence or testimony will take minimal time to present) or on written application at the end of trial.

PRACTICE TIP: If not made directly at the end of trial, the stay motion should be made in writing ex parte as soon as possible after notice that possession was awarded to the landlord. Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1202(c) and 3.1203, notice to the opposing party is generally required no later than 10:00 a.m. the court day before a party seeks an ex parte order, but in a unlawful detainer action shorter notice may be given if reasonable, and "an affirmative factual showing… of irreparable harm, immediate danger," or other statutory basis for ex parte relief is required. The forms in §§13.54-13.55 may be adapted for a motion under CCP §1174(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.50 a. Mandatory Stay

The court must order a stay of execution for 5 days after entry of judgment under CCP §1174(c), when all of the following apply:

- The unlawful detainer proceeding is for nonpayment of rent;
- The 3-day notice did not declare a forfeiture of leasehold rights (see §13.17);
- The lease or rental agreement has not expired by its terms; and
- The lease or rental agreement is written, is for a term of more than 1 year, and does not contain a forfeiture clause.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.51 b. Discretionary Stay

The 5-day stay of execution is discretionary under CCP §1174(c), if all of the following apply:

- The unlawful detainer proceeding is for nonpayment of rent;
- The 3-day notice did not declare a forfeiture of leasehold rights; and
- The lease or rental agreement has not expired by its terms.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Court's Inherent Power (CCP §918)

§13.52 a. Grounds

The trial court has discretionary authority under CCP §918(a) to stay execution of any judgment or order. See Colby v Colby (1954) 127 CA2d 602, 274 P2d 417; Buffandeau v Edmondson (1861) 17 C 436. Although CCP §918 does not expressly so provide, the usual grounds for a request by a tenant for a stay under this statute are:

- Hardship or other good cause (see §13.55 for a tenant's declaration form setting forth facts constituting hardship);
- To allow time to give notice and be heard on the tenant's application for relief from forfeiture and restoration of the tenancy, under CCP §1179 (see §13.56); and
- To allow a full hearing before execution of judgment on posttrial procedures such as noticed motions for a new trial, for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and to vacate the judgment (see §§13.43-13.47 for discussion of posttrial motions; see §13.54 for an application form for stay of execution).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.53 b. Length and Conditions of Stay

Under CCP §918(b), if enforcement of the judgment would be stayed on appeal only on posting of an undertaking (see CCP §917.4), the trial court may not stay enforcement for more than 10 days beyond the last date on which a notice of appeal could be filed, without the consent of the opposing party. This usually would mean that execution could not be stayed more than 40 days from the date that the notice of entry of judgment is served for unlawful detainer actions in limited civil cases. See §13.59 on the time for filing a notice of appeal, and §13.60 on procedures for a stay pending appeal.

In Medford v Superior Court (1983) 140 CA3d 236, 240, 189 CR 227, the court stated in dictum that a stay of execution may be conditioned on the tenant's payment of rent accruing during the period of the stay, but not on payment of back rent:

> The possibility of loss of back rent or accrued damages is not a consequence of granting such relief to the tenant. The landlord gains sufficient protection from the deposit of the contract rent as it becomes due.

A landlord can oppose a request for stay of execution by claiming and proving that the tenant has committed and will commit or cause waste on (or damage to) the premises. The landlord must appear at the hearing on the request for stay, which is usually conducted under an ex parte notice, prepared with sufficient declarations alleging waste and damage. Alleging loss of rent is usually insufficient because most stays are granted on the condition that rent be paid into court. Allegations of disruptive behavior or threats of violence, sale of the subject property conditioned on giving possession to buyer, and a new lease allowing tenants to take possession are reasons that are more likely to allow the landlord successfully to oppose a request for stay of execution.

PRACTICE TIP: If the trial court gives judgment orally at the end of the trial for plaintiff in a case in which defendant is not at fault (i.e., an eviction under a rent control law—for the landlord or a family member to move into defendant's unit—or an eviction after a foreclosure; see §§7.65, 8.68B-8.68C, 10.54) and defendant is a long-term tenant (i.e., 5 years or longer), many courts will permit an immediate oral request for a stay pursuant to CCP §918. Requesting the stay immediately may provide comfort to a tenant who faces a need to move quickly in a tight, difficult, or expensive housing market.

JUDGE, SUPERIOR COURT

Copies: Original (to be presented to judge for signature); conformed copies (one for each attorney of record and unrepresented party) or for attaching to notice of entry of order (to be served and filed with original proof of service); office copies; copies for client(s).

Comment: Application for a stay of execution is typically made ex parte. Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1202(c) and 3.1203, notice to the opposing counsel/party is generally required no later than 10:00 a.m. the court day before a party seeks an ex parte order, but in a unlawful detainer action, shorter notice may be given if reasonable, and "an affirmative factual showing… of irreparable harm, immediate danger," or other statutory basis for ex parte relief is required. (Note, always review Cal Rules of Ct 3.1200-3.1207, which are subject to frequent amendment.)

There are no specific grounds for granting a stay of execution under CCP §918, but it is common for such relief to be granted on either the basis of hardship or to allow posttrial motions to be heard. See §13.52. Under CCP §918 and Cal Rules of Ct 8.824, execution generally may be stayed for not more than 40 days from the date of entry of judgment in a limited civil case. See §13.53. If the application is based on a motion made contemporaneously (e.g., a motion for new trial), the argument for the application is quite straightforward. In the landlord-tenant context, the most commonly encountered alternative ground is the hardship that the tenant would endure by immediate execution of the judgment. See §13.55. As discussed in §13.53, an order staying execution may be conditioned on the tenant's payment of rent during the period of the stay, but not on payment of the judgment. The application should be supported by declarations setting forth the facts on which it is based and by a supporting memorandum (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113). On captions for court papers and further discussion of ex parte motions, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 11, 13 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

Comment: A declaration like this (see CCP §2015.5) may be submitted in connection with an application for stay under CCP §918 which may be based on hardship (see §13.52), or for relief from forfeiture under CCP §1179 which must be based on a showing of hardship (see §13.56). For further strategy on preparing declarations, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 12-13 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

C. Relief From Forfeiture (CCP §1179)

§13.56 1. Statutory Requirements

When an unlawful detainer judgment (see §§13.17, 13.34) declares a forfeiture of the lease or rental agreement, whether written or oral, and whether or not the tenancy has terminated, the tenant may obtain relief from the forfeiture and restoration of the tenancy under CCP §1179. Relief from forfeiture may be granted only on the condition that the tenant make full payment of rent due or fully perform other breached covenants of the lease to the extent that performance is practicable. CCP §1179. When there has been no declaration of forfeiture, the tenant may be able to obtain restoration of the tenancy under CCP §1174(c). See §§13.49-13.51.

A general statute authorizing relief from forfeiture is CC §3275, which expressly disallows relief from forfeiture caused by a grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent breach. Code of Civil Procedure §1179 is a specific statute, however, and thus governs relief from forfeiture in unlawful detainer actions. Arguably, relief from forfeiture may not be granted under CC §3275 for a willful breach, but the fact that the breach and holding over are willful does not itself bar relief under CCP §1179. In Superior Motels, Inc. v Rinn Motor Hotels, Inc. (1987) 195 CA3d 1032, 1063, 241 CR 487, however, the court expressed a "deep distaste for forfeitures" and noted its authority to grant relief from forfeitures under the broader scope of CC §3275. Whether the application is made under CCP §1179 or CC §3275 or both, the standard of appellate review of the trial court's decision on the application is the same: The appellate court will not reverse unless an abuse of discretion is shown. 195 CA3d at 1064.

Relief from forfeiture under CCP §1179 is peculiar to unlawful detainer actions, and only to a tenant who loses the action. It is not available to a tenant's secured creditor who is not a party to an unlawful detainer action. 366-386 Geary St., LP v Superior Court (1990) 219 CA3d 1186, 268 CR 678.

In 2009, the legislature enacted Health & S C §11571.1(b), which declares that certain state law civil remedies for illegal drug activities, such as nuisance abatement in the form of an unlawful detainer action (see §§4.44, 8.59), are not intended to prevent a tenant from obtaining relief from forfeiture under CCP §1179.

Hardship is the only ground on which a trial court may relieve a tenant from forfeiture under CCP §1179. The court should balance the equities, and take into consideration the circumstances of the case, the hardship to both tenant and landlord, and the nature of the breach (e.g., whether it was willful or malicious). The court must then exercise its "best discretion in determining whether relief will be granted." Hignell v Gebala (1949) 90 CA2d 61, 71, 202 P2d 378 (case remanded to trial court for consideration of, e.g., willfulness and amount of money subtenant expended during tenancy for repairs and improvements). A finding that hardship would result from forfeiture does not automatically require the court to grant the relief. Olympic Auditorium, Inc. v Superior Court (1927) 81 CA 283, 253 P 944.

Although the statute does not refer to payment of damages, costs, or attorney fees as conditions to be performed by the tenant, the court has the discretion to require payment of any of these amounts as a condition to granting relief. Olympic Auditorium, Inc. v Superior Court, supra. By the phrase, "so far as the same is practicable," in reference to payment of rent due or performance of conditions or covenants, CCP §1179 allows a court to grant relief even if the conditions, including the payment of back rent, cannot be fully performed. In Gill Petroleum, Inc. v Hayer (2006) 137 CA4th 826, 40 CR3d 648, the landlord obtained an unlawful detainer judgment against a commercial tenant which awarded the landlord forfeiture of the lease and fair market rent for each day the tenant remained in possession after expiration of the 3-day notice. The fair market rent was substantially higher than the rent provided by the lease. The trial court granted the tenant's motion for relief from forfeiture under CCP §1179. In setting the conditions for the tenant to obtain the relief, the court required payment of the lease rent for the post 3-day notice period, not the fair rental value. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that while §1179 requires the tenant to pay past rent due as a condition to obtaining relief from forfeiture, the trial court retains broad equitable discretion to determine other conditions for relief.

The application for relief must be made before restoration of the premises, and may be made by the tenant, a subtenant, a "mortgagee of the term," or other person "interested in the continuance of the term." CCP §1179. The application may be filed and served as early as the conclusion of trial with as few as 5 days' notice before the hearing.

The application must be made by a verified petition and state the grounds for relief. Notice of the application and a copy of the petition must be served on the landlord, who may appear and contest the application. The court also has discretion to grant relief from forfeiture on its own motion. CCP §1179.

PRACTICE TIP: Tenant: Although CCP §1179 allows the application to be made anytime before restoration of the premises, counsel for the tenant should act quickly on losing the case and request an ex parte stay of execution pending a hearing on the application. See §§13.52-13.55. A pro per tenant may make an oral motion for relief under §1179 without notice if the landlord either is present and has an opportunity to contest the motion or was given ex parte notice of the hearing and its purpose. This could occur as early as the end of the unlawful detainer trial regardless of whether the court announces its decision from the bench at that time.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlord: The landlord's attorney should oppose any attempt to extend the coverage of CCP §1179 or CC §3275 to cases beyond those in which a literal "declaration of forfeiture" has been made. Arguably, a declaration of forfeiture under CCP §1174(a) is appropriate only in an action based on "neglect" or nonpayment of rent or other breach of an express lease term. Evictions based on nuisance, illegal use of the premises, or a notice to vacate under CC §§1946 and 1946.1 do not require that the notice elect a forfeiture, or that a forfeiture be requested in the complaint. Most form judgments issued by courts routinely declare a forfeiture whether or not the notice or complaint mentions it. To preserve the landlord's objections to a possible petition for relief from forfeiture by the tenant, boilerplate forfeiture clauses should be deleted from judgment forms whenever they are not relevant to the immediate action.

An argument can also be made that CC §3275 does not permit relief from forfeiture when a landlord sues to enforce a 30-day or 60-day notice to vacate. The statute provides relief on "full compensation to the other party" (e.g., the landlord). Because full compensation in this context arguably means that the tenant vacates the premises, the statute should not apply when relief from forfeiture means that the tenant will continue to occupy the premises. If the statute is applied, the landlord might argue that "full compensation" should at least include payment of attorney fees and costs to the landlord.

D. Appeal

§13.58 1. Governing Statutes and Rules of Court

Appeals in unlawful detainer cases are governed by the general provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure (i.e., CCP §§901-936.1) to the extent that they comport with the provisions of CCP §§1159-1179a and Judicial Council unlawful detainer rules. CCP §1177.

Judgments and orders that may be appealed are set forth in CCP §§904.1 (superior court, unlimited civil cases) and 904.2 (superior court, limited civil cases). These include:

- Appeals from a final judgment;
- An order made after final judgment;
- An order granting a motion to quash service of summons;
- An order granting a new trial or denying a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict;
- An order discharging or refusing to discharge an attachment; and
- An order granting or dissolving an injunction.

For discussion of appealable orders generally, see California Civil Appellate Practice, chap 3 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

Even though CCP §916 provides that perfecting an appeal generally stays proceedings on a judgment in the trial court automatically, the trial court is governed by CCP §1176 on staying enforcement of an unlawful detainer judgment pending an appeal. See §13.60.

PRACTICE TIP: A tenant's attorney planning to appeal should first seek a stay of execution ex parte under CCP §918 (see §§13.52-13.55). This would stay execution until the appeal is perfected and the trial judge decides whether to stay execution of judgment pending appeal under CCP §1176.

Most unlawful detainer actions are brought as limited civil cases, for which the appropriate court of appeal is the appellate division of the superior court. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.800-8.843, 8.880-8.891, 8.930-8.936. A party has no absolute further right of appeal from a decision of the superior court appellate division. The district court of appeal may hear an appeal from the appellate division if the superior court certifies, or the court of appeal determines, that transfer of the case to the court of appeal appears necessary to secure uniformity of decision or to settle important questions of law. CCP §911. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.1000-8.1018. If the case is accepted and decided by the court of appeal, a dissatisfied party may file a petition for review with the California Supreme Court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.500(a)(1). The petitioner may file a reply to the answer. Rule 8.500(a)(3). For discussion of appellate courts and procedure generally, see Civ App Prac.

An appellant might avoid imposition of costs by dismissing a nonmeritorious appeal early in the process. See Small v Hall's Furniture Defined Benefit Pension Plan (2000) 79 CA4th 648, 94 CR2d 313. For discussion on an appellate court's inherent authority to impose sanctions for the making of a frivolous motion on appeal, see Dana Commercial Credit Corp. v Ferns & Ferns (2001) 90 CA4th 142, 108 CR2d 278. See also Evans v CenterStone Dev. Co. (2005) 134 CA4th 151, 35 CR3d 745 (case remanded to determine both attorney fees for the appeal and the motion for sanctions plus additional sanctions and to report attorney to State Bar).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.59 2. Procedure and Time Limits

California Rules of Court 8.104(a) requires that a notice of appeal from a judgment in an unlimited civil case (see Rule 8.4) be filed on or before the earliest of the following dates: 60 days after the superior court clerk mails the party filing the notice of appeal a document entitled "Notice of Entry" of judgment or a file-stamped copy of the judgment, showing the date either was mailed; 60 days after the party filing the notice of appeal serves or is served by a party with a document entitled "Notice of Entry" of judgment or a file-stamped copy of the judgment, accompanied by proof of service; or 180 days after the date of entry of judgment. The 60-day period is not triggered by service of a minute order that notes the date of entry but is not entitled "Notice of Entry." Cuenllas v VRL Int'l, Ltd. (2001) 92 CA4th 1050, 112 CR2d 383.

If there are multiple counsel for appellant, service of the notice of entry of judgment and the notice of entry of the order denying a new trial on only the original attorney is sufficient to start the 60-day notice period in which to appeal. Adaimy v Ruhl (2008) 160 CA4th 583, 72 CR3d 926.

A postjudgment award of attorney fees is separately appealable. A notice of appeal from the original judgment alone does not give the appellate court jurisdiction to hear a challenge to the award of attorney fees. DeZerega v Meggs (2000) 83 CA4th 28, 99 CR2d 366. See also Colony Hill v Ghamaty (2006) 142 CA4th 1408, 48 CR3d 798 (court of appeal lacked jurisdiction to review attorney fee award because order granting fees was neither included in judgment nor separately appealed).

A notice of appeal from a judgment in a limited civil case (see Rule 8.821), normally must be filed within 30 days after the date that the notice of entry of judgment is mailed by the clerk or by any party, or within 90 days after the date of entry of judgment, whichever is earlier. Cal Rules of Ct 8.822(a). Times for filing appeals after various postjudgment motions have been filed are specified in Cal Rules of Ct 8.822-8.823.

A motion for reconsideration that is filed but not heard before the entry of judgment does not extend the time to file an appeal. Safeco Ins. Co. v Architectural Facades Unlimited, Inc. (2005) 134 CA4th 1477, 36 CR3d 754. To avoid the effects of the decision in Safeco, a request to stay entry of judgment pending the hearing on the motion can be made in the trial court, and if the request is denied, the appeal must be filed in the period prescribed by the court rules.

A party may initiate an appeal by filing a notice of appeal with the clerk of the superior court. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.100(a), 8.821(a). Note that in unlimited civil cases, Cal Rules of Ct 8.100(b) requires payment of a $655 filing fee and a $100 deposit when a notice of appeal is filed, and the appealing party must prepare a Civil Case Information Statement under Cal Rules of Ct 8.100(g). The clerk must mail notification of the filing of the notice to the opposing party's attorney. Cal Rules of Ct 8.100(e), 8.821(d).

If the appellant fails to pay the deposit to the superior court, the superior court clerk must notify the appellant in writing of the default. The appellant has 15 days to deposit the funds or seek a fee waiver. If the appellant fails to take action, the superior court clerk must notify the appellate court of the default; the appellate court may dismiss the appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.100(d).

The party noticing the appeal must then arrange for preparation of the clerk's and reporter's transcripts, if needed, as provided in Cal Rules of Ct 8.120-8.163 and 8.830-8.843 and pay associated fees. The reporter's transcript must contain an index listing the volume and page where any exhibit is marked for identification and where it is admitted or refused; the index must identify each exhibit by number or letter and a brief description of the exhibit. Cal Rules of Ct 8.144(b)(3), 8.838(b). When an appellant proceeds in forma pauperis, Cal Rules of Ct 3.61(9) authorizes a waiver of clerk's transcript fees. Mehdi v Superior Court (1989) 213 CA3d 1198, 261 CR 919. See generally California Civil Appellate Practice, chap 9 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996). The parties must also adhere to applicable rules on the preparation, service, and filing of appellate briefs; these rules require use of recycled paper for all records and briefs. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.144, 8.200-8.224, 8.880-8.884. See generally Civ App Prac, chaps 12-13. For appeals in the court of appeal, one electronic copy or four paper copies of each brief must be served on the supreme court. Cal Rules of Ct 8.212(c).

§13.60 3. Stay Pending Appeal (CCP §1176)

A tenant appealing the judgment in an unlawful detainer action must obtain a stay of execution of the judgment for the appeal to be effective. Possession of the premises is the principal issue in unlawful detainer proceedings, and a reversal on appeal often is of little benefit to a tenant who has already been evicted. Notably, an appeal is not moot if the tenant was evicted under the judgment (see Lee v Vignoli (1979) 98 CA3d Supp 24, 160 CR 79), and the tenant may have important reasons to pursue the appeal even if the court does not grant a stay.

Under CCP §916, perfecting an appeal in civil actions generally stays enforcement of the judgment. In unlawful detainer actions, however, there is no automatic stay of execution when the tenant appeals; rather, the trial court shall order a stay if it finds "that the moving party will suffer extreme hardship in the absence of a stay and that the nonmoving party will not be irreparably injured by its issuance." CCP §1176(a). See Mehr v Superior Court (1983) 139 CA3d 1044, 189 CR 138, decided before the statute was amended in 1985. In Goldie's Bookstore, Inc. v Superior Court (9th Cir 1984) 739 F2d 466, 471, the court held that the lack of an automatic stay in unlawful detainer actions does not violate a tenant's equal protection rights.

Code of Civil Procedure §1176 does not specifically require an undertaking as a condition to the court's granting a stay. As a condition of an order to stay execution pending appeal under CCP §1176(a), the tenant must pay the "reasonable monthly rental value" into court, in advance, as rent would otherwise become due. The value is the same as the contract rent unless the trial court has modified the rental value. The statute does not say whether such a modification must have occurred at the trial or whether it could be considered solely on the motion for a stay. The court has discretion to impose other conditions.

Under CCP §§916-936.1, a party must post an undertaking, along with perfecting the appeal, to obtain a stay of certain types of judgments pending the appeal. Because these provisions are subject to CCP §1176, posting an undertaking and perfecting the appeal do not automatically stay enforcement of an unlawful detainer judgment. Mendoza v Small Claims Court (1958) 49 C2d 668, 671, 321 P2d 9; St. Clair v Joos (1924) 66 CA 398, 226 P 623. In any event, if the judgment debtor pays the underlying judgment and appeals only from the postjudgment award of costs, no appeal bond is required. CCP §917.1(d); Ziello v Superior Court (1999) 75 CA4th 651, 89 CR2d 398.

Code of Civil Procedure §1176(a), rather than CCP §917.4, governs the propriety of a bond required for the stay during an appeal of an unlawful detainer judgment. Selma Auto Mall II v Superior Court (1996) 44 CA4th 1672, 1681, 52 CR2d 599. The trial judge has discretion to determine whether to require an undertaking at all and, if so, to set the amount. The court in Selma Auto Mall held that the trial court had abused its discretion by conditioning the stay on a requirement that the tenant guarantee payment of attorney fees awarded to that landlord against other, nonappealing parties "to balance the equities between the parties." 44 CA4th at 1676. The court stated a general principle that might apply to many unlawful detainer appeals (44 CA4th at 1686):

> We conclude that section 1176(a)'s provision, "the court may condition the stay on whatever conditions the court deems just," must be read as authorizing the court to impose a just condition otherwise authorized by law and bearing some reasonable relationship to the injury the nonmoving party might otherwise suffer from an unconditional stay. Such conditions would include provisions to protect the status quo pending appeal and to pay the damages the nonmoving party may sustain by virtue of the stay.

EXAMPLE: The manner in which a reviewing court might grant a stay pending appeal is illustrated in Mehr v Superior Court, supra. The tenants petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate compelling the trial court to grant a stay pending appeal. The tenants alleged that they were about to be evicted from their home of 15 years, had paid the rental value awarded in the judgment, and were willing to pay the rental value pending appeal. The court of appeal denied their petition, but the supreme court stayed execution (on condition that the tenants pay the monthly rental value of $950), pending its determination of whether to grant the petition for review. 139 CA3d at 1048. The supreme court then granted review, transferred the case to the court of appeal for issuance of an alternative writ of mandate, and ordered that the stay remain in effect pending final resolution of the appeal. 139 CA3d at 1049. The court of appeal held that, because the tenants had shown a "substantial question" for appeal (concerning fraud in a sale under a deed of trust), the trial court had abused its discretion in denying their motion for a stay. 139 CA3d at 1050.

A denial of a motion for a stay pending appeal is immediately reviewable by a petition for an extraordinary writ. CCP §1176(a). Denial of a stay by the trial court may also be avoided if the reviewing court decides to review the case on its merits under an extraordinary writ (see §13.63). In Schweiger v Superior Court (1970) 3 C3d 507, 90 CR 729, the tenant unsuccessfully sought to assert the defense of retaliatory eviction in the trial court and in successive appellate courts. The supreme court granted an alternative writ of mandate, however, and stayed execution of the judgment (without mentioning CCP §1176), pending a full hearing before it on the merits of the defense. See also Green v Superior Court, supra. In Custom Parking, Inc. v Superior Court (1982) 138 CA3d 90, 187 CR 674, the court granted a stay pending its decision on a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its judgment and permit the tenant to raise the defense of retaliatory eviction. The court subsequently granted a peremptory writ of mandate, stating (138 CA3d at 91 n1):

> Writ of mandate is appropriate even though there is a right to immediate appeal. Code of Civil Procedure section 1176 permits the trial judge to issue a stay pending appeal. Here, the trial judge issued only a temporary stay to permit the filing of this petition. Without a stay pending appeal, appeal is not an adequate remedy for the dispossessed tenant.

§13.61 4. Effect of Tenant's Vacating Pending Appeal

If an unlawful detainer judgment awarding a landlord possession of the premises is reversed, the appellate court may direct the trial court to restore possession to the tenant as long as this result is consistent with the rights of third parties (such as new tenants). CCP §908. Thus, a tenant's appeal is not necessarily moot even though the tenant has vacated the premises after losing an unlawful detainer action. Old Nat'l Fin. Servs., Inc. v Seibert (1987) 194 CA3d 460, 467, 239 CR 728 (court rejected argument of mootness because (1) tenant vacated only after being compelled by the trial court's order to vacate, and (2) tenant could still obtain relief on appeal by obtaining an order restoring right to possession). See Union Oil Co. v Chandler (1970) 4 CA3d 716, 720, 84 CR 756 (tenant's appeal not moot because tenant vacated premises as a result of trial court's decision).

An appeal may be taken whether or not the tenant sought a stay of execution. Lee v Vignoli (1979) 98 CA3d Supp 24, 160 CR 79. An appeal will not be dismissed as moot even if the tenant is no longer in possession of the premises, when the issue in the case is an important one that is likely to arise frequently (see Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 622 n6, 111 CR 704; Kriz v Taylor (1979) 92 CA3d 302, 308, 154 CR 824), or when the judgment awarded the landlord damages, attorney fees, or both.

If a tenant vacates the premises while the landlord is appealing an adverse unlawful detainer judgment, the action is not moot per se. In Cinnamon Square Shopping Ctr. v Meadowlark Enters. (1994) 24 CA4th 1837, 1842, 30 CR2d 697, the tenant, who had prevailed in the trial court by proving that the eviction notice was deficient, argued that its relinquishment of possession made the appeal moot. The court of appeal held that, because the landlord's unlawful detainer action sought back rent as well as possession, the action was not moot, and its decision (after review of the trial court's finding on the amount of rent owed) would operate as collateral estoppel in any subsequent action by the landlord to recover the rental obligation.

Copies: Original (filed with court clerk); copies for service on each attorney of record and unrepresented party; office copies.

Comment: Because granting or denying the stay is grounded on a balancing of the equities (see §13.60), supporting declarations must be filed to indicate the importance of a stay in the particular case.

The attorney's declaration should (a) state that he or she believes the appeal to be meritorious, and (b) outline the reasons for this belief.

The tenant's declaration should (a) state that he or she believes the appeal to be meritorious (and not taken for purposes of delay), and (b) describe the hardship that would be involved in moving. See, e.g., the facts in Mehr v Superior Court (1983) 139 CA3d 1044, 189 CR 138, discussed in §13.60.

Because the court is now required to condition a stay on a monthly deposit of reasonable rental value to protect the landlord during the appeal, the tenant's declaration might set forth his or her ability to meet this condition. The landlord may file his or her opposition to the stay, including counterdeclarations that either negate the tenant's claim of hardship, or assert the irreparable injury that a stay would impose on the landlord, or both.

The format by which the tenant may request a stay of execution is not specified in CCP §1176. Opposition from the landlord is likely, however, because a stay might work a real hardship on a landlord in light of the time required for an appeal to be decided. For this reason, the tenant's application for a stay has been put in the form of a noticed motion. A memorandum must be filed in support of the motion and should be filed in opposition to it. §13.63 E. Extraordinary Writs

Relief by appeal may be ineffective for the tenant in an unlawful detainer action because an appeal does not automatically stay enforcement of the judgment. See §§13.58, 13.60. When the trial judge is unwilling to grant a stay, or will do so only on posting of a substantial bond or undertaking, the judgment may be executed before the appeal is heard. Thus, the appeal will be of little practical benefit to the tenant. In this situation, tenant's counsel might resort to an extraordinary writ proceeding to have the matter heard and execution stayed pending the hearing. Some of the most significant California landlord-tenant decisions have resulted from writ proceedings. See, e.g., Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704 (implied warranty of habitability); Schweiger v Superior Court (1970) 3 C3d 507, 90 CR 729 (retaliatory eviction).

Extraordinary writs available include prohibition, supersedeas, and certiorari (see generally California Civil Writ Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2008)), but the writ most likely to be used in an unlawful detainer action is mandamus. A writ of mandate (see CCP §§1084, 1097) may be issued by any superior or appellate court to compel performance of an act specially enjoined by law (including an act by a judicial officer). See CCP §1085. It may be issued only when no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy exists in the ordinary course of law. CCP §1086. On common situations in which relief by writ is sought, see California Eviction Defense Manual §30.10 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

The breadth of a tenant's mandamus writ right was clarified in Sites v Superior Court (review dismissed Nov. 20, 2002, and remanded to court of appeal due to repeal and adoption of former Cal Rules of Ct 62-64, effective January 1, 2003; former opinion at 86 CA4th 504, 103 CR2d 432). In Sites, the municipal court entered judgment in the landlord's favor in an unlawful detainer proceeding. The appellate division of the superior court summarily affirmed, and the superior court denied the tenant's request for certification of the case to the court of appeal. The tenants responded with a writ of mandate to compel the appellate division to certify the case. The court of appeal held that mandamus relief is not available to permit transfer, because that transfer is governed by the California Rules of Court.

NOTE: Former Cal Rules of Ct 62-64 were renumbered as Cal Rules of Ct 8.1002-8.1008. Under Rule 8.1008(b)(4), a party must not file an answer to a petition for transfer unless the court requests an answer.

A reviewing court that grants an alternative writ of mandate, in order to hear the matter presented in the mandamus proceeding, may stay enforcement of the judgment despite CCP §1176. In an unlawful detainer action, the reviewing court may stay the action to preserve the status quo pending a hearing on the merits of the mandamus action. See Green v Superior Court, supra; Schweiger v Superior Court, supra; Custom Parking, Inc. v Superior Court (1982) 138 CA3d 90, 187 CR 674. Even if an appellate court stays the action on substantive grounds beyond those provided in CCP §1176, it is required to condition the stay on monthly deposits of reasonable rental value pending the review. See §13.60. On obtaining stays of execution pending a decision of petition for a writ of mandate, see California Eviction Defense Manual §30.6 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

A party seeking a stay of the enforcement of a judgment pending an appeal in a limited civil case may file a petition for writ of supersedeas in the appellate division of the superior court under Cal Rules of Ct 8.824. Similarly, a party seeking a stay of the enforcement of a judgment pending an appeal in an unlimited civil case may file a petition for writ of supersedeas in the court of appeal under Cal Rules of Ct 8.112 and 8.116.

WARNING: On the risk of filing a writ of supersedeas to stay an eviction pending appeal and of abandoning the appeal following the writ's denial, see Coast Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Black (1986) 187 CA3d 1494, 1501, 232 CR 483 (pro per tenant ordered to pay landlord $10,000 in damages under CCP §907 for delay tactics).

Extraordinary writ proceedings present a complex area of practice well beyond the scope of this book. Counsel considering initiating such proceedings should consult available authorities, including California Civil Writ Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2008), California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 30 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993), and 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Writs (5th ed 2008).

V. ENFORCING THE JUDGMENT

A. For Possession

§13.64 1. Writ of Possession; Procedure

Under CCP §1174(a), the unlawful detainer judgment may award the landlord possession of the premises. The judgment is not self-executing, however, and the landlord must obtain a writ of possession from the court to have a tenant who does not voluntarily vacate the premises removed by a sheriff or marshal (see CCP §1174(d)). Procedures for executing the writ of possession are set forth in CCP §§715.010-715.040, which are made applicable to unlawful detainer actions by CCP §1174(d). For the Judicial Council Writ of Possession Form, see §13.69.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.65 a. Contents of Writ

The writ of possession must contain the following information required by CCP §712.020, which covers enforcement of nonmonetary judgments generally:

- Pertinent dates, including date writ is issued, date judgment was entered, date of judgment renewals, and location of entry or renewal of judgment information;
- Title of court and number of the action; and
- Names and addresses of both judgment creditor and judgment debtor.

In addition, pursuant to CCP §715.010 the writ must:

- Describe the subject real property (i.e., the rental premises);
- Notify the party that, if the property is not vacated within 5 days from the date that the writ is served, the levying officer will remove the occupants and restore the judgment creditor (i.e., the landlord) to possession;
- Notify the party that any personal property left on the premises will be disposed of in accordance with CCP §1174 (see §§8.154-8.159);
- State the date on which the complaint was filed;
- State the date on which the court will hear objections of unnamed occupants making a postjudgment claim of right to possession (see §§13.70-13.73), unless the landlord elected to serve notice of right to a prejudgment claim of possession with the complaint under CCP §415.46 (see §§9.51-9.55);
- Specify daily rental value of the premises as of the date of filing of the complaint, unless the landlord elected to serve notice of right to a prejudgment claim of possession under CCP §415.46; and
- If the landlord did serve notice of right to a prejudgment claim of possession under CCP §415.46, state that the writ applies to all tenants, subtenants, or named claimants, if any, and any other occupants of the premises.

Under CCP §715.010(c), the levying officer must also serve or post a copy of the form for a postjudgment claim of right to possession (see §13.73) at the time the writ of possession is served or posted, unless the landlord previously gave notice of the right to a prejudgment claim of possession under CCP §415.46. Such notice would have been given by serving a prejudgment claim of right to possession form at the commencement of the action with the summons and complaint. See §§9.51-9.55.

Code of Civil Procedure §712.010 requires that the "application" of a judgment creditor for a writ of possession of real property "include a declaration under penalty of perjury stating the daily rental value of the property as of the date the complaint for unlawful detainer was filed." The apparent purpose of this amendment is to document or support the "daily rental value" figure included on the writ form itself. Because all unlawful detainer complaints must be verified (CCP §1166) and because most plaintiffs file declarations on reasonable rental value in support of their applications for default judgment, this requirement serves no useful purpose, except in the uncommon case in which there is no written declaration or judgment on file in the action establishing the reasonable rental value.

§13.66 b. Service of Writ

The levying officer who performs the eviction is usually a deputy from the civil division of the county sheriff's department or the office of the county marshal. Most departments will not enforce the writ until they have received a deposit from the landlord to cover the estimated expenses of serving the writ. Procedures for serving and enforcing the writ of possession are set forth in CCP §715.020. To execute the writ, the levying officer must serve it on one occupant of the property. CCP §715.020(a). Service must be made by the officer's leaving a copy with the occupant personally, with a person of suitable age and discretion on the premises who is either an employee or agent of the occupant, or with a member of the occupant's household. CCP §715.020(a).

If the levying officer is unable to effect service in this manner, he or she may execute the writ by posting a copy of it in a conspicuous place on the premises and serving a copy on the judgment debtor (either personally or by mail). CCP §715.020(b). If the judgment debtor's address is unknown, the copy may be mailed to the premises. CCP §715.020(b). In most residential tenancies, the judgment debtor and the occupant specified in CCP §715.020(a) are the same person. However, if the original tenant has assigned or sublet the premises, he or she would no longer be an occupant at the time of the unlawful detainer judgment, but would usually still be a judgment debtor.

The levying officer must serve or post a copy of the form for a postjudgment claim of right to possession at the time the writ of possession is served or posted, unless the landlord previously gave notice of the right to a prejudgment claim of possession under CCP §415.46. See §13.65.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.67 c. Eviction Under the Writ

If the judgment debtor, members of the judgment debtor's household, and any other occupants holding possession of the premises under the judgment debtor do not vacate within 5 days after service of the writ on an occupant or judgment debtor, the levying officer must remove the occupants and restore the judgment creditor to possession. CCP §715.020(c). The provisions of CCP §684.120, extending time for service by mail, do not apply to the 5-day period specified in this subsection. CCP §715.020(c).

If the landlord did not previously give notice of the right to a prejudgment claim of possession under CCP §415.46 (see §13.65), the levying officer may not remove from the premises a person not named in the writ who (a) claims a right to possession of the premises accruing before commencement of the unlawful detainer action, or (b) claims to have been in possession of the premises on the date that the unlawful detainer action was filed. CCP §715.020(d). See §§13.70-13.73. As a practical matter, a backlog of evictions may prevent the levying officer from returning on the sixth day to evict the occupants. In addition, some sheriff's and marshal's offices evict tenants only on certain days of the week, and the sixth day might not fall on one of those days.

An eviction under a writ of execution based on a judgment that has been set aside will cause the landlord to be liable for forcible entry. Bedi v McMullan (1984) 160 CA3d 272, 275, 206 CR 578. Although the landlord in Bedi had obtained a subsequent, valid judgment for possession after the original judgment had been set aside, the latter judgment established only his entitlement to possession. "There is no substitute for the crucial element of a valid writ of execution." 160 CA3d at 277. But see Glass v Najafi (2000) 78 CA4th 45, 92 CR2d 606. In Glass, the court held a landlord not liable for forcible entry and detainer when the plaintiff-tenants were evicted under an invalid writ of possession, because defendants complied with judicial process in evicting plaintiffs under a judicially granted writ of possession. See also George v County of San Luis Obispo (2000) 78 CA4th 1048, 93 CR2d 595 (no liability for sheriff who served writ of possession regular on its face that was issued by court with competent jurisdiction).

On whether a landlord who has a valid writ of possession may proceed to evict a tenant who files a bankruptcy after entry of an unlawful detainer judgment, see §13.68.

On postjudgment claims of right to possession by occupants who were residing on the premises when the unlawful detainer action was filed but not named in the judgment for possession, see CCP §1174.3, discussed in §13.70.

§13.68 d. Effect of Bankruptcy; CCP §715.050

In many instances, the filing of a bankruptcy petition effectively stays a residential eviction until the bankruptcy court permits the eviction to proceed by an order lifting or modifying the stay. See §§14.4-14.10, 14.17-14.29. A California statute (CCP §715.050) that allows immediate execution of a writ of possession issued after an unlawful detainer judgment (despite the tenant's filing of a subsequent bankruptcy petition) has been both challenged and clarified. A California court of appeal gave full force to §715.050 by applying the reasoning found in federal decisions holding that a tenancy interest terminated by a judgment cannot be property of the bankruptcy estate. See Lee v Baca (1999) 73 CA4th 1116, 86 CR2d 913 (petition for review denied by California Supreme Court).

In Baca v Lee (2000) 529 US 1020, 146 L Ed 2d 314, 120 S Ct 1422, the United States Supreme Court denied a writ of certiorari, letting stand the court of appeal ruling in Lee v Baca, supra, that §715.050 was not inconsistent with federal law in that, under bankruptcy decisional law, the laws of the state define what constitutes an asset belonging to the debtor. Although under Lee a residential lease that is declared forfeited in an unlawful detainer judgment is no longer an asset belonging to the debtor-tenant, whether the landlord must file a motion to terminate or modify the automatic stay remains a federal question.

A district court in the Ninth Circuit held in 2002 that §715.050 was preempted by federal bankruptcy law and, therefore, unconstitutional. Consequently, the landlord had to request relief from the automatic bankruptcy stay from the bankruptcy court. See Westside Apartments v Butler (In re Butler) (Bankr CD Cal 2002) 271 BR 867, discussed in §§14.9, 14.11, 14.16-14.17. But see In re Smith (Marquand v Smith) (Bankr CD Cal 1989) 105 BR 50, also discussed throughout chap 14.

NOTE: Despite the unsettled state of the law, some sheriff's and marshal's offices are complying with §715.050, which applies only to unlawful detainer judgments; prejudgment petitions are not affected and a motion for relief from stay is always required in those situations (see §14.17). The Central and Southern District Bankruptcy Courts have officially taken the position that they will not do a lock-out, even postjudgment, until relief from stay is obtained in federal bankruptcy court.

3. Postjudgment Claim of Right to Possession

§13.70 a. Notice Procedure and Limitations on Use

A statutory procedure, set forth in CCP §1174.3, enables nontenant occupants, not named in the judgment and writ of possession, to object to enforcement of the judgment after service of the writ by filing a postjudgment claim of right to possession. See §13.71. An occupant or tenant who is named in the action, however, "shall not be required to file a claim of right to possession to protect that occupant's right to possession of the premises." CCP §1174.3(a). This language appears to overrule the decision in Cardenas v Noren (1991) 235 CA3d 1344, 1 CR2d 367, and to require a landlord always to serve known tenants and occupants with a summons and a complaint, for which a simple notice of right to claim of possession cannot be a substitute.

Under CCP §715.010(c), the levying officer must serve or post a copy of the form for a postjudgment claim of right to possession (see §§13.65-13.66) at the time the writ of possession is served or posted, unless the landlord previously gave notice of the right to a prejudgment claim of possession under CCP §415.46. A postjudgment claim of right to possession is distinct from a prejudgment claim, and the procedures are mutually exclusive. See CCP §1174.3(a).

Code of Civil Procedure §415.46(a) permits a landlord to serve a prejudgment claim of right to possession form on any previously unidentified person who appears to be occupying or may claim to have occupied the premises at the time of the filing of the unlawful detainer action. Service is made in accordance with a complicated procedure prescribed by CCP §415.46(c). See §§9.51-9.55.

If the prejudgment claim of right to possession is served in accordance with CCP §415.46, no occupant, whether named or unnamed in the judgment for possession, may object to the enforcement of the judgment under a postjudgment claim of right to possession provided in CCP §1174.3. See CCP §§415.46(e), 715.010(c), 715.020(d), 1174.3(a). Instead, an occupant served with notice of the right to a prejudgment claim of possession must file a claim with the court within 10 days after the date of service. CCP §§415.46(f), 1174.25(a). See §9.54. See claim form in §9.55. Presumably, the statutory claim procedures under CCP §§415.46, 715.020(d), 1174.25, and 1174.3 supersede the claim process developed in Arrieta v Mahon (1982) 31 C3d 381, 182 CR 770.

§13.71 b. Filing of Postjudgment Claim

Under CCP §1174.3(a), any occupant not named in the judgment for possession, not served with notice of the right to a prejudgment claim of possession, and who resided on the premises on the date the unlawful detainer action was filed, can object to the enforcement of judgment "against that occupant" by filing a postjudgment claim of right to possession. The claim must be made on the form prescribed by CCP §1174.3(h), reproduced in §13.73. The claim may be filed at any time after service or posting of the writ of possession up to and including the time at which the levying officer returns to evict those named in the judgment. CCP §1174.3(a). Because the claim constitutes a general appearance, a fee must be collected under Govt C §70614. The fee may be waived if the claimant qualifies for appearing in forma pauperis. CCP §1174.3(a). See §10.13.

When the completed claim of possession is presented to the levying officer, the officer must immediately "stop the eviction of occupants" at the premises. CCP §1174.3(b). The statute is ambiguous about whether the officer may proceed with the eviction of those persons who are named in the judgment, as the statute also indicates that enforcement is to cease as "against that occupant" filing the claim. See CCP §1174.3(a).

§13.72 c. Hearing on Postjudgment Claim

The court issuing the writ of possession of real property must schedule a hearing to determine the validity of objections to enforcement of the judgment. CCP §1174.3(b). If the claimant presents the completed form to the levying officer, and within 2 court days presents 15 days' rent plus the appropriate fee (or form for proceeding in forma pauperis) to the court, the hearing on the claim must be set not less than 5 nor more than 15 days after the claim is filed with the court. CCP §1174.3(c)(1). If the claimant presents the completed form and within 2 court days presents the fee (or an in forma pauperis form) to the court without delivering the equivalent of 15 days' rent, the hearing on the claim must be held on the fifth day after the filing is completed. CCP §1174.3(c)(2).

If the court determines that the claim is valid and that the unlawful detainer is based on a curable breach, the claimant is given an opportunity to cure the breach. If the claimant fails to cure the breach within the required time, the plaintiff can file and serve a supplemental complaint against the claimant as a defendant in the same unlawful detainer action. CCP §1174.3(e)(1). If the court determines that the claim is valid and that the unlawful detainer is not based on a curable breach, the claimant is deemed to be a served defendant in the unlawful detainer action and must answer or otherwise respond within 5 days. CCP §1174.3(e).

Under CCP §1174.3(f)-(g), the court must deny the claim and order the levying officer to proceed with enforcement of the original writ of possession, deemed amended to include the claimant if any one of the following events occurs:

- The claimant fails to pay an appearance fee or obtain a waiver of that fee;
- The claimant fails to appear at the hearing;
- The court, after hearing, decides the claim is invalid; or
- The claimant loses on the merits at trial.

The original writ is "deemed amended" presumably to avoid the possibility of new claims being made with respect to a new writ. Execution must be effected within a reasonable time not to exceed 5 days. On receipt of the court's order, the levying officer can enforce the writ of possession of real property against any of the occupants. CCP §1174.3(g). Typically, the sheriff's or marshal's office completes the lockout procedures within 2-3 days from the time it receives new instructions and the amended writ of possession.

§13.74 B. For Rent and Damages

To collect rent and damages awarded in the judgment, the landlord may seek to execute the judgment on the tenant's property. The landlord may not simply withhold possession of personal property remaining on the premises in an attempt to recover the monetary portion of the judgment. Love v Keays (1971) 6 C3d 339, 98 CR 811; Gray v Whitmore (1971) 17 CA3d 1, 94 CR 904. (For discussion of procedures for disposition of the tenant's personal property, see §§8.154-8.161.) Provisions for enforcement of money judgments are set forth in CCP §§695.010-695.220. (For discussion of methods of enforcing money judgments generally, see Debt Collection Practice in California, chaps 7, 9, 10 (2d ed Cal CEB 1999).)

Much of the tenant's property may be exempt from execution to satisfy the landlord's money judgment. Exemptions are specified in CCP §§704.010-704.210. Those of most concern in the residential landlord-tenant context are exemptions for:

- A motor vehicle with an equity of no more than $2300 (CCP §704.010);
- Household furnishings, appliances, and apparel (CCP §704.020);
- Personal property used in a trade, business, or profession (CCP §704.060);
- Personal earnings (CCP §§704.070, 706.010-706.154);
- Social Security deposit accounts (CCP §704.080); and
- Benefits paid under various retirement, insurance, disability, and unemployment compensation programs (CCP §§704.110-704.130).

The homestead exemption is usually not significant in enforcing a residential unlawful detainer judgment, except for mobilehome tenancies, which are subject to this exemption (CCP §704.710(a)(2)).

Wage garnishments are governed by the Wage Garnishment Law (CCP §§706.010-706.154), which provides a detailed procedure for executing on the debtor's wages. Garnishment is accomplished by means of an earnings withholding order. CCP §706.021. The amount to be withheld under state law is the same as that provided by federal law. CCP §706.050. Under 15 USC §1673, the maximum amount to be withheld is defined in terms of a weekly paycheck, and may not exceed 25 percent of a debtor's disposable earnings or all amounts above 30 times the federal minimum wage, whichever is less.

The earnings withholding order contains a chart showing how much should be withheld for one pay period. All earnings over the maximum amount that may be withheld are automatically exempt. CCP §706.050. The judgment debtor may also claim an exemption for any amounts necessary to support his or her family. CCP §706.051. Note, however, that this total wage exemption does not apply to debts incurred for the common necessaries of life. CCP §706.051(c). Rent is likely to be considered a debt for a common necessity of life when the landlord executes on an unlawful detainer judgment. See Evans v Noonan (1912) 20 CA 288, 293, 128 P 794 (common necessaries of life include shelter).

The procedures for claiming most exemptions are found in CCP §§703.510-703.610. Procedures for claiming exemptions from wage garnishments are set forth in CCP §706.105. The tenant must file a claim of exemption within 10 days after the date of the levy. CCP §§703.520, 706.105. The landlord may oppose the claim of exemption by filing a notice of opposition and a notice of motion for order determining the claim. CCP §§703.550, 706.105. A hearing is then held in the trial court to determine whether the property is exempt. CCP §§703.580, 706.105.

Although some federal employees are exempt from wage garnishments, wages due from the federal government that are not subject to garnishment by an earnings withholding order under CCP §§706.010-706.154 may be assigned to a judgment creditor by a court order following a noticed motion under CCP §§708.510-708.560. See CCP §708.510(a)(1). This procedure is very similar in its result to an earnings withholding order, and the debtor may file a claim of exemption. In addition, other federal employees (e.g., the military) may be subject to an involuntary allotment of pay under 5 USC §5520a.

If the debtor is self-employed, the creditor has the option of instructing the levying officer to conduct a "till tap." See CCP §§687.020-687.030. This means that the levying officer will appear at the place of business during regular business hours and empty all the cash registers on the premises.

If there are no known assets, wages, or bank accounts to attach, the landlord can compel the judgment debtor to appear in court to answer questions under penalty of perjury concerning the location and existence of the debtor's assets. CCP §§708.120-708.205. The court may issue a bench warrant for the debtor's arrest and award attorney fees if the debtor fails to appear. CCP §708.170.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords should advise their clients of the importance of maintaining accurate information on the tenant's rental application, especially bank account information and work addresses. See also §§4.4-4.16.

On occasion, the tenant's performance under the lease is guaranteed by a third party (usually a parent or guardian). If the tenant defaults on the lease, the landlord has basically three options:

(1) Name the guarantor as a defendant in the unlawful detainer action (if the guarantee agreement so provides);

(2) Add the guarantor to the judgment through CCP §989; or

(3) File a separate action against the guarantor.

On collection against cosigners of the lease, see CC §§1799.90-1799.99.

§13.75 C. Credit Reporting Issues

Landlords pursuing debts that are not yet in the form of a judgment should be careful to comply with state and federal credit reporting laws. For instance, under the provisions of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 USC §§1681-1681t), if the completeness or accuracy of any information furnished by a creditor to the credit bureau is disputed by a consumer, the creditor may not furnish the information to the credit bureau without notice that such information is disputed by the consumer. 15 USC §1681s-2. Under California law, a landlord intending to report a defaulting tenant to a credit reporting agency must give notice to the tenant, prior to or within 30 days after the landlord transmits the negative credit information, by personal delivery or first class mail to the tenant's last known address. CC §1785.26(c). See also CC §§1785.13, 1785.20-1785.26, discussed in §§1.29, 1.43, 2.9, 4.9.

A credit reporting agency is permitted to provide credit reports containing information from public records. CC §1785.11.2. See U.D. Registry, Inc. v State (2006) 144 CA4th 405, 50 CR3d 647. A credit reporting agency may be liable under 15 USC §§1681e and 1681i for inaccurately investigating or reporting whether a judgment exists against a tenant. Dennis v BEH-1, LLC (9th Cir 2007) 504 F3d 892.

§13.76 D. Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

Of concern for California landlords and practitioners is the potential for damages actions under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) (15 USC §§1692-1692o). In Romea v Heiberger & Assocs. (2d Cir 1998) 163 F3d 111, the court held that an attorney who sends a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit for the client is subject to the requirements of the FDCPA. The notice was defective for failing to advise that the tenant had 30 days after receipt of the notice to dispute the validity of the back rent sought. Two New York cases found 3-day notices to pay rent or quit to be subject to the FDCPA and void as a basis for an eviction because they failed to comply with the requirements of the Act. Dearie v Hunter (1998) 676 NYS2d 896; Eina Realty v Calixte (1998) 679 NYS2d 796.

The Romea case was taken one step further in Goldman v Cohen (2d Cir 2006) 445 F3d 152, where the court ruled that the filing of an unlawful detainer action seeking recovery of unpaid resident rent is an initial communication within the FDCPA. This ruling necessitated landlord attorneys to include a debt validation notice in the unlawful detainer complaint. This validation notice added much confusion to the complaint as the complaint required payment of rent in 3 days, while the debt validation notice allows a tenant 30 days to dispute the debt. Congress addressed the problem in the Financial Services Regulatory Relief Act of 2006 (Pub L 109-351, 120 Stat 1966), specifically exempting "formal pleadings" as an initial communication under the FDCPA. See 15 USC §1692g(d).

PRACTICE TIP: Many landlord attorneys are now advising owners and managers to serve their own pre-lawsuit notices. The safest course for attorneys serving prerequisite notices for an unlawful detainer (requesting rent or other monetary payment from the tenant) is to comply with current conditions of correspondence required of debt collectors under the FDCPA. This includes the so-called "mini-Miranda" notification and notification of the debtor's right to dispute the debt and receive verification of the validity of the debt. For further discussion and strategies, see §8.26A.

Defending violations of the FDCPA is not easy. The Act imposes strict liability subject to a narrow exception for bona fide errors. In Reichert v National Credit Sys., Inc. (9th Cir 2008) 531 F3d 1002, a suit brought by a tenant after terminating his tenancy on a dispute about the amount of money owing under the lease, the court found that the collection agency for the landlord failed to establish the bona fide defense because it did not produce evidence of reasonable preventive procedures to avoid the error.

Property managers apparently are not considered to be debt collectors subject to the FDCPA. See, e.g., Franceschi v Mautner-Glick Corp. (SD NY 1998) 22 F Supp 2d 250 (landlord's management agent was not "debt collector" under FDCPA, since it obtained right to collect tenant's rent before it became overdue).

For further discussion of fair debt collection laws, see Debt Collection Practice in California, chaps 1, 4 (2d ed Cal CEB 1999).

I. INTRODUCTION

§14.1 A. Chapter Scope

This chapter addresses basic principles of bankruptcy law that apply when a tenant files bankruptcy, including:

- The effect and scope of the automatic stay that becomes effective upon a tenant's filing of a bankruptcy petition (see §§14.2-14.16B);
- Alternatives for relief from or termination of the stay (see §§14.17-14.32);
- The purpose and the process of assuming or rejecting an unexpired residential lease (see §§14.33-14.42);
- Special issues and rules concerning assumption and assignment or rejection of nonresidential leases, including landlord claims for rejection damages (see §§14.43-14.55); and
- Ethical considerations and remedies for the filing of bankruptcy petitions in bad faith (see §14.56).

§14.1A 1. BAPCPA

On April 20, 2005, after years of debate and impasse, the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act (Pub L 109-8, 119 Stat 23) (cited throughout this chapter as "BAPCPA") was signed into law. The BAPCPA represented the most sweeping revision of bankruptcy law since 1978. Most of its provisions are more stringent rules applicable to debtors filing for bankruptcy protection, and are beyond the scope of this chapter. Some provisions, however, directly affect landlord-tenant relationships in the bankruptcy context, and significantly changed the law in this area. Those changes are discussed in this chapter, and include:

- Exceptions to the automatic stay applicable to residential debtor tenants, if the landlord already has a judgment for possession, or if the landlord is attempting to evict the tenant for endangering the property or illegally using controlled substances upon it (see §§14.16, 14.16B; see also §§14.3, 14.8-14.9, 14.17, 14.19, 14.31);
- A firm deadline for assumption or rejection of commercial leases (see §§14.44, 14.47; see also §§14.43, 14.48-14.49, 14.53);
- Clarification of the effect of a nonmonetary default on a debtor-tenant's right to assume a lease (see §14.45A);
- Stronger protections against a nonconforming lease assignment (see §14.50); and
- Capping a landlord's administrative claim for rejection of a lease after it has been assumed in bankruptcy (see §§14.52, 14.55).

The BAPCPA generally applies to all bankruptcy cases filed on or after October 17, 2005. Bankruptcy petitions filed before that date remain governed by the former version of the Bankruptcy Code. A few provisions of BAPCPA became effective upon the enactment in April 2005, or on different dates, but those provisions generally do not affect the issues addressed in this chapter. (See the BAPCPA effective dates table in §14.1B.)

§14.2 B. Bankruptcy Notices and Forms

Because a bankruptcy filing instantly stays a state court proceeding against the debtor or property of the estate, counsel must notify the state court that this has occurred as soon as counsel becomes aware of the filing. See §§14.4-14.5 and mandatory form in §14.57.

Similarly, because counsel representing parties affected by the bankruptcy need to know about developments in the bankruptcy case that may affect their client's interests or require a response, counsel should promptly file a request for special notice in the bankruptcy court as soon as they learn of the bankruptcy filing. See Practice Tip in §14.25 and form in §14.58. Requesting notice is a critical first step to being able to represent a landlord or creditor effectively after a tenant files a petition in bankruptcy.

Additional sample forms for use in bankruptcy proceedings are also provided in this chapter, including:

- Landlord forms for requesting or compelling payment (see §§14.59-14.61);
- Landlord's objections to extension of time to assume or reject nonresidential lease, to proposed going out of business sale procedures, and to expedited procedures for assuming or rejecting commercial leases (see §§14.62, 14.62A, and 14.62B);
- Forms for initiating alternative procedures for obtaining permission from the bankruptcy court to proceed with an eviction and court orders (see §§14.63-14.70);
- Forms for debtor's further certification of cure of monetary default underlying eviction judgment and landlord's objections to it (see §§14.71-14.72); and
- Forms for proceedings arising from new exceptions to the automatic stay concerning prepetition judgment for possession or residential eviction based on endangerment of property or illegal use of a controlled substance (see §§14.73-14.74).

§14.3 C. When Tenant Files Bankruptcy

In today's economy, counsel practicing in the landlord-tenant area are likely to encounter the obstacles associated with a tenant bankruptcy. In the 1980s, bankruptcy courts were clogged with residential tenants filing petitions in bankruptcy simply to delay inevitable evictions. See Marquand v Smith (In re Smith) (Bankr CD Cal 1989) 105 BR 50, 51. Immediately after the BAPCPA went into effect, however, bankruptcy filings declined substantially nationwide, presumably based on the more stringent requirements for consumer filings. Nonetheless, with the recent collapse of the housing market and the freeze in commercial credit availability, consumer bankruptcies have hit record levels, and retail bankruptcies are sharply up nationwide.

Landlord counsel often respond to tenant bankruptcies by either engaging bankruptcy counsel to assist them or developing their own set of countermeasures to protect their rights or keep an eviction moving after a tenant files (see §§14.17-14.32). Whether appearing as attorney of record in bankruptcy court or not, all counsel involved in landlord-tenant relationships should familiarize themselves and their clients with the basic consequences of a bankruptcy filing, primarily the automatic stay (see §§14.4-14.13). While a bankruptcy filing will ordinarily stop an eviction or collection action in its tracks, provisions in the BAPCPA have attempted to address the problem identified in In re Smith, supra (see §§14.16, 14.16B). Still, because the stay is effectively a federal court injunction, and a violation of the stay carries serious consequences (see §14.6), counsel must carefully follow the procedures for invoking exceptions to the stay, or for seeking relief from the stay.

Tenant bankruptcies can have significant effects on commercial landlords and raise special issues under the Bankruptcy Code. While landlords generally cannot avoid these issues by drafting special rights or options triggered by bankruptcy in their leases, the bankruptcy statutes provide important protections for the interests of commercial landlords. The Bankruptcy Code provides special limits on the right of a bankrupt nonresidential tenant to assume or assign its lease (see §§14.43-14.55), and requires that any such assumption or assignment be of all terms of the lease —debtor-tenants may not pick and choose which terms to accept or ignore. See 11 USC §365(b)(1), (b)(3)(C); Stewart Title Guar. Co. v Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (5th Cir 1996) 83 F3d 735. Moreover, provisions added to the Bankruptcy Code in the BAPCPA (see §14.1A) have confirmed a landlord's right to obtain compensation for damages caused by nonmonetary defaults and to object to an assignment to a nonconforming use. See 11 USC §365(b)(1)(A), (b)(3), (f), discussed in §§14.45A, 14.50.

II. AUTOMATIC STAY AFFECTS LEASE RIGHTS

§14.4 A. Stay Arises on Filing of Bankruptcy Petition

When a debtor files a bankruptcy petition, the Bankruptcy Code provides an automatic stay (11 USC §362(a)) that immediately prevents a third party, such as a landlord or any other creditor, from taking action or continuing to take any action against the debtor or property of the bankruptcy estate. The scope of the stay is very broad. It specifically enjoins:

- Commencement or continuation of judicial proceedings against the debtor;
- Enforcement of a judgment obtained before the petition was filed;
- Any act to obtain possession of property of the estate; and
- Any action that may affect or interfere with the reorganization of the debtor's financial affairs.

In general, an action taken by a third party in violation of the stay is void at its inception, not merely voidable. See Burkhart v Coleman (In re Tippett) (9th Cir 2008) 542 F3d 684. This is true even if the bankruptcy petition is later dismissed as a bad faith filing. 40235 Washington St. Corp. v Lusardi (9th Cir 2003) 329 F3d 1076, cert denied (2003) 540 US 983. While a bankruptcy court could retroactively annul the stay after dismissal to ratify an otherwise void act, the bankruptcy court has no authority to decline jurisdiction over a dispute concerning whether the stay has been violated, nor may it attempt to avoid future automatic stays with an in rem order. See 40235 Washington St. Corp., supra, Johnson v TRE Holdings (In re Johnson) (BAP 9th Cir 2006) 346 BR 190, and In re Johnson (Bankr ND Cal 2008) 2008 Bankr Lexis 983.

Because the stay is a federal injunction against the prohibited actions, violation of the stay is punishable by contempt or other sanctions. See §14.6. Courts frequently cite the legislative history of 11 USC §362(a), which indicates that Congress intended to give debtors "a breathing spell" from their creditors and to stop "all collection efforts, all harassment, and all foreclosure actions." Accordingly, §362 is "extremely broad in scope" and "should apply to almost any type of formal or informal action against the debtor or the property of the estate." See Kertesz v Ostrovsky (2004) 115 CA4th 369, 373, 8 CR3d 907, quoting Delpit v Commissioner (9th Cir 1994) 18 F3d 768, 771, and legislative history from 1978. The stay applies even if the bankruptcy petition is ultra vires or a sham. Wekell v U.S. (9th Cir 1994) 14 F3d 32, 33.

Unless an exception to the stay applies under 11 USC §362(b), or relief from the stay is granted by the Bankruptcy Court, the stay of an act against property of the estate continues until the property is no longer property of the estate. 11 USC §362(a), (c)(1). Property of the estate is broadly defined. 11 USC §541. The stay of any other prohibited act, such as actions or proceedings against the debtor, continues until the earliest of:

- The time the bankruptcy case is closed;
- The time the bankruptcy case is dismissed; or
- The time a discharge is granted or denied.

11 USC §362(c)(2). A mere ruling granting a motion to dismiss, or even a writing setting forth the court's findings or determinations in considering such a motion, is not effective as a dismissal of a bankruptcy case. A separate, unambiguous order is required before the dismissal will be effective. Garland v Estate of Maloney (In re Garland) (BAP 9th Cir 2003) 295 BR 347. See also §14.32.

In addition, confirmation of a plan of reorganization may have the effect of lifting the automatic stay as to acts that would result in exercise of control over property of the estate, because confirmation of the plan usually terminates the existence of the bankruptcy estate. See Hillis Motors, Inc. v Hawaii Auto. Dealers' Ass'n (9th Cir 1993) 997 F2d 581. Whether plan confirmation would have this effect in any particular case depends upon the terms of the plan in that case.

NOTE: The BAPCPA (see §14.1A) limits the availability of the stay to individual or joint debtors who are repeat bankruptcy filers whose previous bankruptcy cases were recently dismissed. See, e.g., Nelson v George Wong Pension Trust (In re Nelson) (BAP 9th Cir 2008) 391 BR 437 (no automatic stay took effect when Chapter 13 debtors had two prior cases dismissed within 1 year). Landlord counsel faced with repeat filer situations should carefully review the statutes on this issue to determine if they apply. 11 USC §362(c)(3)-(4). See California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation §11.6 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009). The debtor may file a motion asking the court to extend or impose the stay if the repeat filing was made in good faith. See ND Cal Local Bankr R 4001-2.

§14.5 1. Notice of Stay of State Court Proceedings

Because the automatic stay immediately stays existing state court litigation against the debtor, the state court should be promptly informed of the bankruptcy filing. Thus, Cal Rules of Ct 3.650(a) requires the party that caused a stay of the state court proceeding to immediately file in that proceeding a notice of the stay, and attach a copy of the order or other document evidencing the automatic stay. See §14.57 for a mandatory form notice of stay. The usual practice is to attach a copy of the file-stamped bankruptcy petition or the notice to creditors (also referred to as the notice of commencement of bankruptcy action or case) sent out by the clerk of the bankruptcy court (see Practice Tip in §14.40) to the notice of stay. If the party that caused the stay has not appeared in the state court action, or fails to promptly notify the state court, even if that party has appeared, the other party should promptly notify the state court of the bankruptcy filing and resulting stay of the action.

When a stay is vacated or no longer in effect, the party who filed the original notice of the stay is required to immediately serve and file a notice to the effect that the stay is vacated or no longer in effect. Cal Rules of Ct 3.650(d). See mandatory form in §14.67A. If a levying officer is requested to execute a writ of possession after the stay has been vacated, the landlord would usually provide such officer with a copy of such notice.

§14.6 2. Violation of Automatic Stay Carries Serious Consequences

A willful violation of the automatic stay exposes the offending party to serious consequences. In general, an individual injured by a willful violation of the stay may recover actual damages, including costs and attorney fees, and, in appropriate circumstances, punitive damages. 11 USC §362(k)(1); see also Associated Credit Servs., Inc. v Campion (In re Campion) (9th Cir 2003) 294 BR 313 (creditor liable for stay violations attributable to its computer). "Willful" has been very broadly defined to include mere knowledge of the automatic stay and intentionally taking the action; a good faith belief that the stay did not apply is irrelevant to whether a willful violation of it has occurred. See, e.g., Ozenne v Bendon (In re Ozenne) (BAP 9th Cir 2006) 337 BR 214 (decided under pre-BAPCPA law). The BAPCPA created a limited exception to this principle: where an entity violates the stay concerning personal property, based on a good faith belief that personal property is no longer property of the estate, the recovery may be limited to actual damages. 11 USC §362(k)(2). Nor may creditors safely quibble with the debtor concerning the application of the automatic stay; debtors have no burden of proving to creditors that the stay exists before liability for violating the stay can be imposed. Morris v Peralta (In re Peralta) (BAP 9th Cir 2004) 317 BR 381, 389.

Emotional distress damages are recoverable for a violation of the stay if clear evidence establishes that the debtor suffered significant harm. Dawson v Washington Mut. Bank, F.A. (In re Dawson) (9th Cir 2004) 390 F3d 1139; Sternberg v Johnston (9th Cir 2009) 582 F3d 1114 (attorney liable for emotional distress damages for willfully violating stay by defending overly broad state court order on spousal support).

A trustee may obtain sanctions under the civil contempt authority of 11 USC §105(a) or the bankruptcy court's inherent sanction authority. Knupfer v Lindblade (In re Dyer) (9th Cir 2003) 322 F3d 1178. Unlike under §362(k), "serious" punitive damages are not available under §105(a) or the court's inherent sanction authority. 322 F3d at 1192. See §14.56. Moreover, a sanction of contempt should not be issued for violating the automatic stay or a discharge injunction without a finding of fact that the violation was made with actual knowledge of the injunction. ZiLog, Inc. v Corning (In re ZiLog, Inc.) (9th Cir 2006) 450 F3d 996.

PRACTICE TIP: Because a willful violation of the automatic stay presents a risk of severe penalties, the better practice in a questionable case is to file a motion for relief from (or modification or termination of) the stay. See §§14.18-14.29. Alternatively, counsel may consider negotiating a stipulation for relief from the stay, which is generally quicker than a motion, even with a notice period and the time it takes for the bankruptcy court to review and approve the stipulation. See §14.30. It also may be possible to obtain an order for possession or surrender of the premises directly from the bankruptcy court. See §14.31. In some cases, a motion to dismiss the bankruptcy may be available. See §14.32.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.7 3. Automatic Stay May Not Be Waived in Advance

Because the automatic stay is a binding federal injunction of the prohibited action, only the bankruptcy court can provide relief from the stay. The stay therefore cannot be waived, modified, or changed in advance through artful drafting. Hence, landlords should not rely on any contractual terms that purport to alter the parties' rights when a bankruptcy is filed. So-called "ipso facto" clauses in many leases, which provide that the lease terminates automatically when the tenant files for bankruptcy (Nelson v Angel (1954) 124 CA2d 861, 269 P2d 626), becomes insolvent (People v California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. (1919) 41 CA 727, 183 P 289), or makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors (Boness v Richardson Mineral Springs (1956) 141 CA2d 251, 296 P2d 581), are not enforceable against debtors or trustees in bankruptcy (11 USC §365(e)), and do not justify a landlord's "self-help" eviction (see §§8.137-8.153). Moreover, even a bankruptcy court does not have authority to nullify future automatic stays by issuing an "in rem" order to insulate property from the effect of a bankruptcy filing. Johnson v TRE Holdings (In re Johnson) (BAP 9th Cir 2006) 346 BR 190. On the other hand, during a pending bankruptcy, a debtor-tenant may stipulate to an order for relief from automatic stay, but only with permission from the bankruptcy court after notice to interested parties. See Fed R Bankr P 4001; §14.30.

B. Scope of Automatic Stay Is Broad

1. Activity Subject to Stay

§14.8 a. All Litigation, Administrative Procedures, and Informal Actions Against Debtor

Generally, 11 USC §362(a) provides a broad stay of any act to collect a debt from the debtor or retrieve property from the debtor or the estate in bankruptcy. Such acts include commencement of litigation, service of process, arbitration, actions to enforce liens or administrative actions to collect debts, and continuing the process of pending litigation, such as discovery or law and motion proceedings. 11 USC §362(a)(1). The automatic stay also prohibits any action to enforce existing judgments against either the debtor or the property of the bankruptcy estate, such as recording an abstract of judgment, issuing a writ of execution, or conducting an examination of judgment debtor. 11 USC §362(a)(2). In general, the stay applies to any action after the bankruptcy petition is filed that seeks to obtain possession of property of the estate or to exercise control over property of the estate. 11 USC §362(a)(3). Demand letters, telephone calls, and other informal collection or enforcement activities to collect, assess, or recover funds or property to further a prepetition claim against a debtor are also prohibited. 11 USC §362(a)(6).

The BAPCPA (see §14.1A) contains additional exceptions to the stay for residential tenants, if a judgment for possession was entered before the bankruptcy or the landlord is seeking possession based on endangerment of the property or the illegal use of controlled substances on it. 11 USC §362(b)(22), (23). Those exceptions are governed by specific procedures which must be carefully followed to be applicable or invoked. See §§14.16 and 14.16B.

While broad, the scope of the automatic stay is limited by its underlying purposes. Rett v White Motor Sales Co. (ND Cal 1989) 99 BR 12, 14. A person is not prohibited by the automatic stay, e.g., from prosecuting a civil action under CCP §527.6 to enjoin the conduct of a debtor that "alarms, annoys, or harasses the person, and which serves no legitimate purpose." Grant v Clampitt (1997) 56 CA4th 586, 65 CR2d 727. An insurer does not violate the stay when it determines its obligations under a policy and acts to withdraw defense of a prepetition lawsuit. Benz v DTRIC Ins. Co. (In re Benz) (BAP 9th Cir 2007) 368 BR 861. Moreover, a settlement negotiated in violation of the automatic stay may nonetheless be enforceable if the bankruptcy is later dismissed, lifting the stay. Valencia v Rodriguez (2001) 87 CA4th 1222, 105 CR2d 281. For exceptions related to common lease issues, see §§14.14-14.16B.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.9 b. Acts of Landlord

When a tenant files a petition in bankruptcy, the landlord is enjoined from enforcing the lease by, e.g., serving a 3-day notice to cure a default or quit, filing an unlawful detainer complaint, proceeding in a pending action against the tenant, or proceeding with an eviction by a writ of execution. See 11 USC §362(a). In somewhat overlapping provisions, 11 USC §362(a)(1) forbids the prosecution of an action to collect a prepetition debt, while 11 USC §362(a)(6) precludes an action to collect, assess, or recover against the debtor "claims" existing or arising prepetition. Because the definition of a "claim" is read more broadly than "debt," even an action for possession of property, as well as collection of rent, will fall within the scope of the stay. 11 USC §§362(a)(6), 101(5), 101(12); Lanford v Northwest Bell Tel. Co. (In re Lanford) (Bankr D Minn 1981) 10 BR 129, 131. In addition, 11 USC §362(a)(3) bars actions for possession of property of the estate.

Under bankruptcy law before the BAPCPA (see §14.1A), if a bankruptcy petition was filed after a judgment for possession had been entered, execution of the writ would violate the automatic stay of 11 USC §362(a) if such action affected "property of the estate" of the debtor. Title 11 USC §541(a)(1) defines "property of the estate," as used in 11 USC §362(a), to include "all legal or equitable interests of the debtor in property as of the commencement of the [bankruptcy] case." If the tenant were deemed to have no legal or equitable interests after entry of judgment, however, then the stay would not prevent execution of the writ. Thus, whether a tenant's mere possessory interest in such circumstances is a property right protected by the stay has been a controversial issue in recent years.

The BAPCPA partially resolved the controversy, by creating an exception to the automatic stay if a judgment for possession of residential premises was entered before the petition was filed. 11 USC §362(b)(22). See §14.16. Since these provisions do not apply to commercial tenancies, landlords with judgments for possession of commercial premises would still be stayed from enforcement, but now have additional arguments for relief, based on the added exceptions for residential tenancies.

In general, state law is used to determine the debtor's rights in property at the time bankruptcy is commenced, subject to any qualifying or contrary Bankruptcy Code provisions. See, e.g., Raleigh v Illinois Dep't of Revenue (2000) 530 US 15, 147 L Ed 2d 13, 120 S Ct 1951; Vanderpark Props. v Buchbinder (In re Windmill Farms, Inc.) (9th Cir 1988) 841 F2d 1467, 1469.

In 1989, a bankruptcy court held that entry of a judgment for possession causes the tenant to lose whatever interest the tenant previously had in the apartment. Marquand v Smith (In re Smith) (Bankr CD Cal 1989) 105 BR 50. Further, CCP §715.050, enacted in 1994, ostensibly permits enforcement of a writ of possession issued after a judgment in an unlawful detainer action despite the tenant's filing bankruptcy, but the enforceability of this section is doubtful. In 1996, a federal district court ruled that §715.050 conflicted with the Bankruptcy Code and declared it invalid under US Const art VI, cl 2 (the supremacy clause). Di Giorgio v Lee (In re Di Giorgio) (Bankr CD Cal 1996) 200 BR 664, judgment vacated as moot, remanded with instructions to dismiss (9th Cir 1998) 134 F3d 971 (see §§14.11, 14.16). While a California appellate court in 1999 agreed with Smith and held that §715.050 was constitutional, a later California bankruptcy court opinion agreed with DiGiorgio that §715.050 is unconstitutional and preempted by bankruptcy law. Compare Lee v Baca (1999) 73 CA4th 1116, 1119, 86 CR2d 913, with Westside Apartments v Butler (In re Butler) (Bankr CD Cal 2002) 271 BR 867. In Butler, the court stated that creditors who seek to rely on Smith, Baca, or CCP §715.050 to avoid obtaining relief from the automatic stay risk liability for violating the automatic stay.

Because the BAPCPA added procedures that provide an exception to the stay if a judgment for possession of residential property has been entered (see 11 USC §362(b)(22); see §14.16), the problem addressed in Butler is now of diminished significance in the residential context. The policy issues and arguments concerning postbankruptcy enforcement of a judgment for possession of commercial property, however, remain in play. For further discussion, see §§14.14, 14.16-14.16B, 14.17.

§14.10 c. Acts of State Court

The acts of state courts, such as rendering judgments or orders against the debtor, are generally prohibited in the same manner after the filing of the bankruptcy petition as are acts of creditors under 11 USC §362(a). See §§14.8-14.9. State court actions, including entry of judgment, taken in violation of the automatic stay are void. Wright v Turner (In re Turner) (BAP 9th Cir 1997) 204 BR 988, 992. See also Sindler v Brennan (2003) 105 CA4th 1350, 129 CR2d 888 (state court's dismissal of action while stay in effect is void).

Is a state court judgment entered after a trial on the merits a violation of the automatic stay, when the bankruptcy petition is filed after the completion of trial but before judgment is entered? The Second Circuit has held that entry of judgment postbankruptcy, following a verdict or a statement of decision on the merits made before the bankruptcy, is a ministerial act not subject to the automatic stay. Rexnord Holdings, Inc. v Bidermann (2d Cir 1994) 21 F3d 522, 527. No published Ninth Circuit case has squarely addressed this issue. Some courts have recognized an implied exception under 11 USC §362(a) for a technical violation of the stay, and have ruled that, under appropriate circumstances, the automatic stay may be annulled retroactively to give effect to an act that would otherwise be voidable as a violation of the stay. See authorities and discussion in Wright v Turner (In re Turner) (BAP 9th Cir 1997) 204 BR 988, 991. See also National Envt'l Waste Corp. v City of Riverside (In re National Envt'l Waste Corp.) (9th Cir 1997) 129 F3d 1052 (court will balance equities on case-by-case analysis to determine whether retroactive annulment is justified). Note that in the First Circuit, if the nonbankruptcy court has not publicly announced its judgment or submitted its decision to the clerk before the bankruptcy, the ministerial act exception to the automatic stay will not apply. Bonilla v Trebol Motors Corp. (1st Cir 1998) 150 F3d 77.

2. Property Protected by Stay

§14.11 a. Lease Rights

The protection of the automatic stay inures to the benefit only of the debtor, property of the debtor, or property of the bankruptcy estate. Advanced Ribbons v Interstate Distrib., Inc. (In re Advanced Ribbons & Office Prods.) (BAP 9th Cir 1991) 125 BR 259, 263. The sweeping definition of property of the estate, "all legal and equitable interests of the debtor in property as of the commencement of the case" (11 USC §541(a)(1)), includes lease rights when the lease remains unexpired or unterminated. Marquand v Smith (In re Smith) (Bankr CD Cal 1989) 105 BR 50, 54. Further, until the state legislature expressly eliminates any equitable interest in possession after lease termination, the automatic stay also protects bare possessory interests in a terminated lease, even if a judgment for unlawful detainer has been entered, although the BAPCPA (see §14.1A) made it easier for landlords to enforce such judgments in the residential context. See 11 USC §362(b)(22); Westside Apartments v Butler (In re Butler) (Bankr CD Cal 2002) 271 BR 867. See also §§14.16-14.17. During a bankruptcy, any lease rights that have become property of the estate must be either accepted or rejected by the trustee or debtor in possession. See §§14.33-14.55.

§14.12 b. Security Deposits

The automatic stay prohibits "the setoff of any debt owing to the debtor that arose before the commencement of the case under this title against any claim against the debtor." 11 USC §362(a)(7). By considering a deposit as having created a "debt" owed to the debtor, some view this statute as prohibiting application of a security deposit without relief from stay. A bankruptcy decision from Delaware, however, disputes this view, holding that a security deposit is not a "debt" owing from the landlord to the debtor-tenant unless the term had expired and there were no defaults. In re APF Co. (Bankr Del 2001) 270 BR 363. The court therefore held that the landlord did not need to seek relief from stay to preserve its right to apply the deposit in partial satisfaction of the amount of rent owed to it.

Because a security deposit provides a landlord with a secured claim in the amount of the deposit for unpaid rent due at the filing of the petition, or for any damages resulting from the rejection of the lease, it may be claimed as such when a proof of claim is filed. See, e.g., In re Far W. Corp. (Bankr ED Cal 1990) 120 BR 551. When a proof of claim is filed, the deposit must be applied to the capped amount of damages allowable under 11 USC §502(b)(6). In re Connectix Corp. (Bankr ND Cal 2007) 372 BR 488, based on a rule from Oldden v Tonto Realty Corp. (2d Cir 1944) 143 F2d 916. This rule applies even if the security deposit is in the form of a letter of credit rather than cash. In re Connectix Corp., supra; Redback Networks, Inc. v Mayan Networks Corp. (In re Mayan Networks Corp.) (BAP 9th Cir 2004) 306 BR 295. Indeed, rejection of a lease does not bar an action to recover on the balance of a security deposit, even if held as a letter of credit. First Ave. W. Bldg. LLC v James (In re Onecast Media, Inc.) (9th Cir 2006) 439 F3d 558. If the debtor was current on the rent before the bankruptcy was filed, the trustee may offset any security deposit against postpetition rental obligations. In re Standard Furniture Co. (Bankr SD Cal 1980) 3 BR 527, 531. For a discussion of postpetition rental obligations in residential tenancies, see §§14.39-14.40; in nonresidential tenancies, see §§14.45-14.46. If the deposit is greater than the capped amount of damages the landlord may claim, and the amount of postpetition administrative rent due, it may be subject to disgorgement back to the bankruptcy estate. In re Pyxsys Corp. (Bankr D Mass 2003) 288 BR 309, 319, citing Oldden and legislative history of §502(b)(6).

WARNING: If the debtor was current under a commercial lease before the lease terminated, the landlord may have to return the entire deposit, and cannot use it offset the landlord's damages for lost future rent, unless CC §1950.7 is waived. See 250 L.L.C. v Photopoint Corp. (2005) 131 CA4th 703, 32 CR3d 296. For a discussion of security deposits, see §8.167. In order to reduce the prospect of disgorgement, landlords should add express waivers of CC §1950.7 to their commercial lease forms.

Because security deposits must be applied to a landlord's capped amount of damages, and are subject to disgorgement if held in an amount in excess of a landlord's allowable general and administrative claims, landlords holding very large deposits may not be as "secured" as they think they are against the consequences of a tenant bankruptcy. However, the rule requiring application of a letter of credit to a capped claim may not apply if no proof of claim is filed. EOP-Colonnade of Dallas Ltd. Partnership v. Faulkner (In re Stonebridge Technols., Inc.) (5th Cir. 2005) 430 F3d 260. In Stonebridge, the Fifth Circuit held that the cap on rejection damages allowed under §502(b)(6) "does not limit the beneficiary's entitlement to the proceeds of a letter of credit unless and until the lessor makes a claim against the estate." 430 F3d at 270. This holding appears analytically correct based on the words of the statute, but it has not yet been addressed in the 9th Circuit, where the Oldden rule is firmly established. See In re AB Liquidating Corp. (9th Cir 2005) 416 F3d 961, 964-965 (Oldden rule bars drawing on letter of credit in excess of damages allowed under §502(b)(6)) and In re Connectix Corp., supra.

PRACTICE TIP: After a bankruptcy has been filed, landlords with large security deposits in the form of letters of credit in excess of the allowed amount of a claim under §502(b)(6) should consider not filing a claim against the estate, in effect waiving recovery from the bankruptcy estate in order to claim the full amount available under a letter of credit. This tactic allowed the landlord in Stonebridge to apply the full amount of its letter of credit to its damages. On the other hand, it is uncertain whether courts in the Ninth Circuit will follow Stonebridge, and the debtor may attempt to impose the damages limitation of §502(b)(6) by filing a proof of claim on behalf of the landlord under Fed R Bankr P 3004. The extent of the landlord's actual damages, the size of the letter of credit, and the potential amount of security lost under the Oldden rule may determine whether this tactic is prudent under the circumstances.

For more on the damages cap of §502(b)(6), see §14.55. See also Wang & Bradbury, Commercial Lease Termination Damages—Calculation and Application of the Bankruptcy Cap, 26 Cal Real Prop J 33 (Vol 26, No 2, 2008).

§14.13 3. Persons Shielded by Stay

The automatic stay protects only the debtor, not codefendants in the same lawsuit. 11 USC §362(a); Almy v Terrace Land Dev., Ltd. (ND Cal 1983) 32 BR 390. Therefore, in most cases a landlord can proceed against nondebtor codefendants (i.e., nonfiling tenants) in an unlawful detainer action, although as a practical matter, execution of the judgment for possession should wait until the writ can be enforced against all occupants. Also, a landlord may pursue a separate action for damages against a co-obligor on the lease who is not in possession of the premises, such as a guarantor or nonfiling cosigner of the lease. See Veeco Inv. Co. v Mercantile Nat'l Bank (In re Veeco Inv. Co.) (Bankr ED Mo 1993) 157 BR 452, 454; Anniston Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v E.K.P., Inc. (In re E.K.P., Inc.) (Bankr ND Ala 1984) 42 BR 19, 20.

WARNING: Chapter 13 cases impose a codebtor stay for the benefit of nonfiling parties who may be jointly liable with the debtor for "consumer debts," i.e., debts incurred primarily for personal or household purposes. 11 USC §§101(8), 1301. The broad definition of consumer debt can be a two-edged sword, however, since the BAPCPA contains provisions making it easier for bankruptcies involving primarily consumer debt to be dismissed. See 11 USC §707(b); In re Maya (Bankr SD Cal 2007) 374 BR 750; In re Davis (Bankr ND Ohio 2007) 378 BR 539.

In any event, counsel should be alert to the possibility of successive filings in cases in which there are multiple occupants.

C. Exceptions to Automatic Stay

§14.14 1. Expired Commercial Leases

With respect to nonresidential real property leases, the Bankruptcy Code allows recovery of possession after expiration of the term, without seeking relief from stay. While the automatic stay prohibits acts to recover possession of "property of the estate" (11 USC §362(a)(3)), a debtor/lessee's interest in a nonresidential lease that expired before the bankruptcy or during the pendency of the bankruptcy case is excluded from the definition of property of the bankruptcy estate. 11 USC §541(b)(2). Acts against such property are therefore not subject to the automatic stay. 11 USC §362(b)(10), (c)(1). Note, however, that this exception applies only to leases where the stated term has expired. If a lease has been terminated before the expiration of the stated term, for example because of a tenant default, the landlord must seek relief from the stay or a surrender order from the bankruptcy court, unless one of the exceptions to the stay provided in the BAPCPA (see §14.1A) applies. See §§14.16-14.31.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.15 2. Declaratory Relief and Dischargeability Actions Not Subject to Stay

The automatic stay does not prohibit a creditor or any other interested party from filing an adversary proceeding in the bankruptcy court to seek a decree or declaratory judgment of what is or is not property of the estate. Civic Ctr. Square, Inc. v Ford (In re Roxford Foods, Inc.) (9th Cir 1993) 12 F3d 875.

Adversary proceedings against a debtor in bankruptcy to determine the dischargeability of debts are not prohibited by the automatic stay. They are specifically authorized by 11 USC §523(c)(1) and Fed R Bankr P 4007. For an example of a landlord's unsuccessful attempt to have a debt for back rent and damages declared nondischargeable, see Kuan v Lund (In re Lund) (BAP 9th Cir 1996) 202 BR 127.

The trustee, a creditor, or the United States trustee may object to a debtor's Chapter 7 discharge (11 USC §727(c)(1)) on the grounds set forth in 11 USC §727(a), or request revocation of a discharge (11 USC §727(d)-(e)) on the grounds set forth in 11 USC §727(d). Because the BAPCPA expanded the grounds for denying a discharge, the relevant bankruptcy rules were revised accordingly. See Fed R Bankr P 4004 and 4007. A state court judgment against a debtor on a fraudulent misrepresentation claim can preclude the debtor from contesting the issue in a subsequent proceeding to declare the debt to be nondischargeable. Diamond v Kolcum (In re Diamond) (9th Cir 2002) 285 F3d 822. See also Muegler v Bening (9th Cir 2005) 413 F3d 980 affirming the preclusive effect of a state court fraud judgment on nondischargeability action in bankruptcy court.

§14.16 3. Possessory Rights After Termination of Lease or Entry of Judgment

A 2002 bankruptcy court opinion confirms that because of the broad definition of property interests under 11 USC §541, the automatic stay protects a tenant's bare possessory interest in a terminated lease. Westside Apartments v Butler (In re Butler) (Bankr CD Cal 2002) 271 BR 867. Previously, other reported cases disregarded bare possession as a property interest protected under the stay, at least with respect to residential tenancies. See Lee v Baca (1999) 73 CA4th 1116, 86 CR2d 913; Marquand v Smith (In re Smith) (Bankr CD Cal 1989) 105 BR 50, 54 n6. The Butler court, however, expressly warned creditors against relying on Lee or Smith to "end run" the automatic stay. 271 BR at 876.

The BAPCPA (see §14.1A) resolved the controversy concerning whether and to what extent the automatic stay applies to a residential lease in which a judgment for possession has been entered before the bankruptcy was filed. Congress created an exception to the stay to allow a residential landlord to enforce a judgment for possession obtained before the tenant files a petition for bankruptcy. 11 USC §362(b)(22). Generally, if the landlord has obtained a judgment for possession before the bankruptcy and it is based on a nonmonetary default, the automatic stay will not apply to enforcement of the judgment. See 11 USC §362(b)(22), (l). The exception in §362(b)(22) is subject, however, to the provisions of 11 USC §362(l), concerning judgments based on monetary defaults, such as nonpayment of rent. Under §362(l), if the judgment is based on a default in paying rent, in jurisdictions like California where the state law may allow the tenant to remain in possession if the default is cured after judgment is entered (see CCP §1179, discussed in §§13.56-13.57), the tenant may be able to keep the stay in effect to block eviction.

Residential tenants filing bankruptcy must disclose in their petitions if a judgment for possession of their residence has been entered. 11 USC §362(l)(5). If the judgment is based on a monetary default, the exception to the stay applies automatically to allow the eviction to proceed unless the tenant files with the petition and serves upon the landlord a certification that:

- There are circumstances under which he or she would be permitted to cure, under nonbankruptcy law applicable in that jurisdiction, the entire monetary default that gave rise to the judgment for possession, after that judgment for possession was entered (11 USC §362(l)(1)(A)); and
- He or she (or an adult dependant of the tenant) has deposited with the clerk of the court any rent that would become due in the 30 days following the filing of the petition (11 USC §362(l)(1)(B)).

Both conditions must be satisfied. Filing such a certification allows the tenant to retain the protection of the automatic stay for 30 days after the petition is filed, with specified exceptions. 11 USC §362(l)(1); see Central District Form F 4001-1.1 at §14.70A. If such a certification is filed, the clerk will arrange for the rent deposited to be promptly transmitted to the landlord. 11 USC §362(l)(5)(D).

After filing the certification, the tenant may extend the automatic stay beyond 30 days by filing and serving an additional certification, within 30 days after the bankruptcy petition was filed, that the tenant "has cured, under nonbankruptcy law applicable in the jurisdiction, the entire monetary default that gave rise to the judgment." 11 USC §362(l)(2); see Central District Form F 4001-1.2 at §14.71. In that case, the automatic stay will apply to the landlord's action for possession unless the landlord successfully objects to the tenant's certifications. 11 USC §362(l)(2)-(3).

WARNING: Whether bankruptcy courts will interpret "cure" as simply requiring payment of the money owed, or as including some additional equitable showing, is unknown. Under applicable nonbankruptcy law, a court has discretion to grant or deny relief from forfeiture; tendering the full amount of rent due is simply a condition required for the court to consider such an application. See CCP §1179.

If no certification is filed, the clerk immediately serves upon the parties a certified copy of the docket indicating the absence of a filed certification and the applicability of 11 USC §362(b)(22) as an exception to the stay. 11 USC §362(l)(4)(B). If the exception applies, the landlord can proceed to enforce the judgment for possession without further court order. See 11 USC §362(l)(4).

If the tenant files the certifications to keep the stay in effect, the landlord can try to invoke the exception to the stay by objecting to the veracity of the tenant's certifications. 11 USC §362(l)(3); see Central District Form F 4001-1.3 at §14.72. The court must then hold a hearing on the objection within 10 days to determine whether the certification is true. 11 USC §362(l)(3)(A). If the court sustains the landlord's objection, §362(b)(22) applies immediately and relief from the stay is not required to enable the landlord to complete the eviction process. 11 USC §362(l)(3)(B). If the court finds that the certifications are true, the eviction will be stayed and the exception to the stay provided by §362(b)(22) will not go into effect. See 11 USC §362(l)(2).

These elaborate provisions reflect an awkward balancing of Congress's desire to make it easier to proceed with residential evictions notwithstanding a bankruptcy filing (the problem identified in In re Smith and discussed in §§14.3 and 14.9), against a tenant's state law rights to request relief from forfeiture even after a judgment for possession has been entered. Congress did not address how bankruptcy courts should apply these provisions in the context of applicable nonbankruptcy law. For instance, while California law does allow relief from forfeiture to be granted after judgment is entered, such relief is discretionary. CCP §1179. See §13.56. Until case law is developed on these issues under the BAPCPA, it remains unclear whether this would allow a bankruptcy court that conducts the hearing on the landlord's objection to the tenant's certifications to exercise its discretion and sustain the landlord's objections, even if the certifications are true. See also §§14.9, 14.17.

WARNING: Although the problem of tenants filing bankruptcy to stall and delay evictions occurs in the commercial context, as well as with residential leases, the BAPCPA exception for terminated leases applies only to residential leases. See 11 USC §362(b)(22). Yet there is arguably less need for the stay to apply in the commercial context, because housing is a more basic need than retaining possession of commercial space. Until the law changes on this issue, however, commercial landlords must still seek relief from the bankruptcy court before attempting to enforce any writ of possession concerning a terminated commercial lease. On consequences of violating the automatic stay, see §14.6.

§14.16A 4. Actions Against Chapter 13 Debtors on Postpetition Obligations After Plan Confirmation

If the obligation of a debtor-tenant in Chapter 13 arose postpetition, three reported trial cases within the Ninth Circuit suggest that the automatic stay would not apply to efforts to collect that debt after confirmation of the debtor's Chapter 13 plan. In re Petruccelli (Bankr SD Cal 1990) 113 BR 5, 6; In re Mason (D Ore 1985) 51 BR 548; In re Rhodes (Bankr D Idaho, Mar. 2, 1995, No. 93-02411) 1995 Bankr Lexis 2175. This exception is based upon the language of 11 USC §1327(b), which provides: "Except as otherwise provided in the plan or the order confirming the plan, the confirmation of a plan vests all of the property of the estate in the debtor." The automatic stay created under 11 USC §362 generally applies to any actions against a debtor on account of a prepetition obligation, and applies to protect "property of the estate" even after the petition is filed. Because the stay does not protect debtors from postpetition obligations, and because plan confirmation "revests" estate property in the debtor, the Petruccelli, Mason, and Rhodes courts held that the automatic stay did not apply to efforts to collect a postpetition obligation against a Chapter 13 debtor under a confirmed plan.

This conclusion is not without controversy. One opinion from the Eighth Circuit suggests a different result. Security Bank of Marshalltown v Neiman (8th Cir 1993) 1 F3d 687. In Security Bank, the issue was whether a Chapter 13 debtor's debt incurred post-confirmation but before conversion to Chapter 7 was entitled to administrative status. In finding that such debts were entitled to administrative status, the Court of Appeals held that the bankruptcy estate continued to exist post-confirmation. To the extent something of the "estate" remains after confirmation, this case suggests that the automatic stay would protect it. The decision did not, however, address exactly what property is in the post-confirmation estate, and therefore it is unclear what the stay might protect. In addition, one earlier reported trial case in the Ninth Circuit suggests that revesting in the debtor does not "convert property of the estate into property of the debtor." In re Aneiro (Bankr SD Cal 1987) 72 BR 424, 429. Instead, the Aneiro court suggests that the "revesting" referred to in §1327(b) means the debtor regains supervision and control of the estate property, but such rights are limited to the extent that the property is committed to successful performance of the plan. 72 BR at 429.

A 2001 Internal Revenue Service General Litigation Bulletin analyzed the diverging authorities on this issue, noting that "many courts have agreed that after confirmation of the Chapter 13 plan, all property revests in the debtor except property that is specifically retained as property of the estate in the plan or order confirming the plan." IRS GLB 200127046, at p 13, citing Petruccelli and several other cases within and outside the Ninth Circuit. It described the view expressed in Aneiro, requiring creditors to obtain relief from stay to pursue a postpetition debt post-confirmation, as a "minority" view. Note, however, that assets that vest in the debtor upon confirmation may revest in the bankruptcy estate upon conversion to Chapter 7. See Captain Blythers, Inc. v Thompson (In re Captain Blythers, Inc.) (BAP 9th Cir 2004) 311 BR 530, aff'd (9th Cir 2006) 182 Fed App 708.

PRACTICE TIP: The split of authority on this issue presents a dilemma for practitioners. On the one hand, because the penalties for violating the stay are harsh, it is generally advisable to seek relief from stay if there is any possible doubt. On the other hand, seeking relief from stay invariably burdens a creditor with significant additional expense and delay. In situations like this, where a majority of courts within one's circuit have held that the stay does not apply, the risk of being sanctioned for violating the stay may be small enough that a client could rationally decide to authorize an attempt to proceed without moving for relief. Such a decision should only be made after counsel has carefully explained the risks and benefits of each alternative course of action to the client.

§14.16B 5. Eviction Action Against Residential Tenant for Endangerment of Property or Illegal Use of Controlled Substance

Another exception to the stay was added by the BAPCPA (see §14.1A), for residential evictions based on endangerment of the property or the illegal use of controlled substances on it. See 11 USC §362(b)(23). This exception is subject to 11 USC §362(m), however, so that unlike a true "exception" to the stay, this exception will apply only if it is affirmatively invoked by the landlord. See 11 USC §362(b)(23). It provides landlords with a procedure to nullify the stay after the tenant files bankruptcy, to allow an eviction based on the tenant's endangering the property or using controlled substances on it to proceed. The stay applies for at least 15 days after the tenant files for bankruptcy, but if a landlord files the proper certification, and if the certification withstands any challenges the tenant may raise as to truth or legal sufficiency, then the stay will be nullified. 11 USC §362(b)(23), (m).

Procedurally, the landlord must file and serve on the tenant a certification that (11 USC §362(b)(23)):

- A pending eviction action seeks possession of residential property based on endangerment of the property or the illegal use of controlled substances on it; or
- The tenant, during the 30-day period before the date of the filing of the certification, has endangered the property or illegally used or allowed to be used a controlled substance on the property.

See Central District Form F 4001-1.4 at §14.73.

The stay on the landlord's eviction action will then expire 15 days after the certification is filed, unless the tenant files and serves upon the landlord an objection to the truth or legal sufficiency of the landlord's certification. 11 USC §362(m)(1), (2); see Central District Form F 4001-1.5 at §14.74.

If the tenant fails to object to the truth or legal sufficiency of the landlord's certification within 15 days, the §362(b)(23) exception applies immediately, and relief from stay is not required for the landlord to proceed with the process to recover possession. 11 USC §362(m)(3)(A). The clerk of the court will then immediately serve upon the parties a certified copy of the docket indicating lack of objection. 11 USC §362(m)(3)(B). If the tenant files and serves upon the landlord an objection to the landlord's certification, the court must hold a hearing within 10 days to determine if the situation giving rise to the landlord's certification existed or has been remedied. 11 USC §362(m)(2)(B).

If the tenant can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the court that the situation giving rise to the landlord's certification did not exist or has been remedied, the stay remains in effect until otherwise terminated. 11 USC §362(m)(2)(C). Conversely, if the tenant cannot convince the bankruptcy court that the situation giving rise to landlord's certification did not exist or has been remedied, the court will decree that 11 USC §362(b)(23) applies and relief from stay will not be required for the landlord to continue with the eviction. 11 USC §362(m)(2)(D)(i). The clerk of the court will immediately serve upon the parties a certified copy of the court's order upholding the landlord's certification. 11 USC §362(m)(2)(D)(ii).

Under this scheme, the Bankruptcy Court is required to decide ultimate facts concerning the viability of the eviction action on just 10 days' notice, even though state courts decide these kinds of facts with the full panoply of due process procedures. It is unknown whether or to what extent bankruptcy courts will allow pre-hearing discovery on an expedited basis, an opportunity for pre-trial motions, or live testimony at such exception hearings.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlord counsel concerned that the 10-day hearing may not provide adequate due process on the issues should consider seeking relief from the stay as an alternative remedy, in case the court is not convinced by the landlord's certifications that the §362(b)(23) exception to the stay should apply. See §§14.18-14.29.

III. AVOIDING EFFECT OF AUTOMATIC STAY

§14.17 A. When Order for Relief From Stay Is Required

Unless a clear exception to the stay applies, there is still debate among practitioners concerning whether a formal motion for permission from the bankruptcy court to proceed with an eviction is required. If the law is uncertain, there is tension between taking the conservative approach (always seeking relief from stay before taking any action of any sort against debtors in bankruptcy) and accepting the risk of reliance on a legal authority that indicates the stay may not apply.

Previously, practitioners desiring to avoid the expense and delay of moving for relief from stay to execute a writ of possession issued before the bankruptcy could arguably rely on two decisions that held that the stay did not apply to a landlord seeking to execute a state court prepetition judgment for physical possession of premises. Marquand v Smith (In re Smith) (Bankr CD Cal 1989) 105 BR 50, 55; Lee v Baca (1999) 73 CA4th 1116, 86 CR2d 913, cert denied (2000) 529 US 1020. In 1994, the California legislature passed a statute that expressly authorizes enforcement of a writ of possession without delay, "notwithstanding receipt of notice of the filing by the defendant of a bankruptcy petition." CCP §715.050.

But bankruptcy courts have indicated that §715.050 was unconstitutional and warned against relying on Smith and Lee to end run the automatic stay. See Di Giorgio v Lee (In re Di Giorgio) (Bankr CD Cal 1996) 200 BR 664, 672, judgment vacated as moot, remanded with instructions to dismiss (9th Cir 1998) 134 F3d 971, and Westside Apartments v Butler (In re Butler) (Bankr CD Cal 2002) 271 BR 867, 876.

This controversy was resolved as to residential tenancies with the exceptions to the stay added by the BAPCPA (see §§14.1A, 14.16, 14.16B). With the new provisions set forth in §362(b)(22)-(23), residential landlords have now specific procedures to enable them to proceed with an eviction if the tenancy was terminated before the bankruptcy or if the tenant is endangering the property or illegally using controlled substances on it. Moreover, the tenant's equitable rights under state law, recognized in Di Giorgio as supporting the stay, are expressly recognized and given a place in the statutory scheme. Such rights provide the tenant a basis for keeping the tenancy in effect, if the tenant certifies the existence of such rights under state law and posts the appropriate cure amount. See 11 USC §362(l). The BAPCPA also provides a means for the landlord to challenge such certifications. The exceptions provide a means for residential landlords to avoid the expense and delay of moving for relief from the stay, although questions remain concerning how these provisions will be applied. Moreover, the BAPCPA contains no additional exceptions to the stay for commercial leases. See §§14.16, 14.16B.

The consequences of violating the automatic stay are serious. See §14.6. Therefore, in almost all instances where the law is uncertain, the safe course is to seek either permission to enforce the writ or a surrender order from the bankruptcy court. As a practical matter, a landlord may not have any choice but to seek relief from stay because a California sheriff may be unwilling to proceed with an eviction after bankruptcy without an order for relief, regardless of the holding in Lee. See, e.g., California State Sheriffs' Association Civil Procedural Manual (rev'd 2005), indicating practices adopted statewide on the circumstances under which sheriffs will perform evictions without a release of the stay.

PRACTICE TIP: If time is crucial and if necessary to prevent irreparable injury, relief may be sought on an emergency or ex parte basis under 11 USC §362(f). If either of the BAPCPA exceptions to the stay might apply, landlords should file the appropriate documentation in the bankruptcy court to be sure they can proceed without obtaining relief from the stay. See 11 USC §362(b)(22)-(23), discussed in §§14.16, 14.16B, and Forms at §§14.73-14.74. If no statutory exception applies, and only in the limited context of collecting a postpetition obligation against a Chapter 13 debtor after confirmation of a plan, a practitioner could make a reasonable decision not to seek relief from stay and be able to convince a levying officer (or the local county counsel with whom the sheriff consults) that such relief is not required. See authorities cited in §14.16A.

B. Motion for Relief From Stay

§14.18 1. Grounds for Relief From Stay

The landlord may request relief from the automatic stay on specific grounds. 11 USC §362(d). For example, the motion may allege that the debtor has no equity or interest in the property and that the property is not necessary for reorganization (11 USC §362(d)(2)), or that nonpayment of rent or other reason for termination of the stay constitutes "cause" (11 USC §362(d)(1)). In addition, the same facts that support dismissal of a bankruptcy may also support a motion for relief from stay. Farber v 405 N. Bedford Dr. Corp. (In re 405 N. Bedford Dr. Corp.) (9th Cir 1985) 778 F2d 1374, 1378. See §14.32.

In the context of a nonresidential lease, a district court held that the filing of a complaint for unlawful detainer terminates the lease for purposes of preventing it from being an executory contract, which can be assumed in bankruptcy. In re Escondido W. Travelodge (SD Cal 1985) 52 BR 376. In Escondido, the court noted that cause exists to lift the automatic stay if the lease cannot be assumed, and that termination under California landlord-tenant law occurs when a landlord, after complying with the appropriate notice requirements, files an unlawful detainer in state court. Although the court recognized that mere filing is not a formal adjudication of the validity of the termination, it reasoned that relief from stay was nonetheless appropriate, to allow the validity of the termination to be litigated in the state court forum under state law. 52 BR at 382.

§14.19 a. Property Interests Defined by State Law

When considering a motion for relief from the stay, bankruptcy courts look to state law to determine whether the debtor has an interest in the leased property. The prevailing view in the Ninth Circuit is that a lease is terminated for nonpayment of rent at least by the time that the landlord files an unlawful detainer action after proper notice is given. Vanderpark Props. v Buchbinder (In re Windmill Farms, Inc.) (9th Cir 1988) 841 F2d 1467, 1470. In California, bankruptcy courts have held that once a lease is terminated, the leasehold interest no longer exists, and therefore the reason for the stay no longer exists as to that interest. Thus, the termination of a lease constitutes "cause" within the meaning of 11 USC §362(d) to terminate the stay. In re Windmill Farms, Inc., supra; In re Eureka S. R.R., Inc. (Bankr ND Cal 1987) 72 BR 813, 817; In re Escondido W. Travelodge (SD Cal 1985) 52 BR 376; Kearny Mesa Crossroads v Acorn Invs. (In re Acorn Invs.) (Bankr SD Cal 1981) 8 BR 506, 509.

Although a debtor's possessory interest may be asserted as property of the estate subject to protection under the stay (see, e.g., Westside Apartments v Butler (In re Butler) (Bankr CD Cal 2002) 271 BR 867, discussed in §§14.9, 14.11, 14.16), this consideration arguably should carry little weight. After all, the basic function of the bankruptcy courts is to facilitate reorganization or the orderly liquidation of the debtor's assets and the payment of creditors. A residential leasehold holds no value to the trustee or the creditors, at least in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, because the leasehold cannot be liquidated and typically has no value as an asset. Hence, there is little justification for protecting it from at least nonmonetary relief. In re Torrez (Bankr ED Cal 1991) 132 BR 924, 941; California Sec. Mgmt. Corp. v Kennedy (In re Kennedy) (Bankr CD Cal 1984) 39 BR 995, 997. This reasoning is likely underlying the BAPCPA exception to the stay for residential tenancies that have been terminated before the bankruptcy. See 11 USC §362(b)(22), discussed in §14.16. Further, while a residential lease in a rent controlled jurisdiction may have value for allowing occupancy at below market rates, such a leasehold interest may not be property which the trustee could assume and assign, if the rent control law excuses the landlord from accepting performance of the lease from anyone other than the debtor. See, e.g., 11 USC §365(c); B.N. Realty Assocs. v Lichtenstein (SD NY 1999) 238 BR 249, 254. Specific analysis of the landlord's right to relief from stay under such circumstances would be required. B.N. Realty Assocs. v Lichtenstein, supra.

PRACTICE TIP: A debtor in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy may argue, however, that maintaining an equitable possessory interest in his or her residence is necessary or essential to successful reorganization, especially if the debtor would have to pay significantly more rent in a new residence. An increase in rent and moving expenses would deplete the available resources of the debtor to pay creditors under the reorganization plan. See §14.33.

A nonresidential leasehold that has been terminated before the bankruptcy holds no value to the estate, because there is no longer an interest that can be assumed and assigned. In re Escondido W. Travelodge (SD Cal 1985) 52 BR 376. When there is nothing to assume or assign, a landlord may seek an order from the bankruptcy court directing the debtor to surrender possession, without even litigating an unlawful detainer action. 11 USC §365(d)(4); Anderson v Elm Inn, Inc. (In re Elm Inn, Inc.) (9th Cir 1991) 942 F2d 630, 633. See §14.31.

NOTE: Under the BAPCPA (see §14.1A), exceptions to the stay for residential tenancies may obviate the need to move for relief from the stay in some circumstances. See 11 USC §362(b)(22)-(23) to determine if any motion is necessary. See §§14.16, 14.16B. Practitioners should always review the most current version of the Bankruptcy Code to ascertain whether the tenant's interest remains protected by automatic stay.

§14.20 b. State Judgment Given Collateral Estoppel Effect

If the BAPCPA exceptions to the stay (see §§14.16, 14.16B) do not apply, landlords can argue that the state court proceedings should provide the basis for relief from the stay. For instance, if the tenant has filed bankruptcy after a judgment for possession of commercial property has been entered, the new exceptions to the stay for judgments in residential eviction actions would not apply. But on the landlord's motion for relief, the bankruptcy court could rule that the judgment for possession is preclusive under collateral estoppel principles. Brown v Felsen (1979) 442 US 127, 139 n10, 60 L Ed 2d 767, 776 n10, 99 S Ct 2205 (noting that state court judgments cannot bind the bankruptcy court on issues of exclusively federal law but that "questions actually and necessarily decided" may be collaterally estopped); McArthur v Bugna (In re Bugna) (Bankr CD Cal 1992) 137 BR 785, aff'd (9th Cir 1994) 33 F3d 1054; Nelson v Tsamasfyros (In re Tsamasfyros) (10th Cir 1991) 940 F2d 605, 606. See also Huse v Huse-Sporsen (In re Birting Fisheries, Inc.) (BAP 9th Cir 2003) 300 BR 489 (bankruptcy court had exclusive jurisdiction to determine whether foreign judgment conflicted with bankruptcy law or orders). Thus, an unlawful detainer judgment can be given preclusive effect on the bankruptcy court absent fraud or similar circumstances. Beaver St. Assocs. v Lady Liberty Tavern Corp. (In re Lady Liberty Tavern Corp.) (Bankr SD NY 1988) 94 BR 812, 814.

A state court judgment against a debtor on a fraudulent misrepresentation claim can preclude the debtor from contesting the issue in a subsequent proceeding to declare the debt to be nondischargeable. Diamond v Kolcum (In re Diamond) (9th Cir 2002) 285 F3d 822. See also Muegler v Bening (9th Cir 2005) 413 F3d 980, affirming the preclusive effect of a state court fraud judgment on a nondischargeability action in bankruptcy court. Likewise, even a state court default judgment will be given preclusive effect in a later adversary proceeding to exempt a judgment debt from discharge, if the elements of collateral estoppel under state law are present. See Baldwin v Kilpatrick (In re Baldwin) (9th Cir 2001) 249 F3d 912 and Bankruptcy Recovery Network v Garcia (In re Garcia) (BAP 9th Cir 2004) 313 BR 307.

§14.21 c. Eviction Following Foreclosure

Special considerations may apply to evictions under CCP §1161a, which involve recovery of possession of residential property from the occupants or former owners by a purchaser after a foreclosure sale. The first example involves a bankruptcy filing before foreclosure; the second a bankruptcy filing after foreclosure.

EXAMPLE 1: A borrower defaults on a loan secured by real property, then files bankruptcy. The secured lender obtains relief from the automatic stay to conduct the foreclosure sale. The purchaser (who may or may not be the lender) then wants to proceed with an eviction of the occupants or former owners. In such case, there should be no question that there is no longer a stay against proceeding with and completing an eviction. In fact, once the foreclosure sale has taken place and the trustee's deed on sale has been recorded, the property is no longer property of the estate. The bankruptcy court has given the lender permission to complete the foreclosure process and title becomes vested in a party other than the debtor.

In addition, if the purchaser is not the original lender, it is arguable that the stay cannot apply because the cause of action under CCP §1161a did not arise until after the bankruptcy petition was filed. In other words, it follows from the nature of the action that an eviction suit, brought by a stranger to the creditor-debtor relationship after a trustee's sale, is not a prepetition claim against the debtor.

Unlawful detainer proceedings are summary in nature and are limited to issues concerning the right to possession. See §§9.5-9.9. The plaintiff's burden on a cause of action under CCP §1161a is limited to demonstrating that it acquired the property at a regularly conducted sale and thereafter perfected title. Vella v Hudgins (1977) 20 C3d 251, 255, 142 CR 414; Cruce v Stein (1956) 146 CA2d 688, 692, 304 P2d 118. Generally, neither a landlord nor a tenant may raise other issues. See §§9.8, 10.53-10.55.

There is a narrow exception, however, that allows raising lack of title defensively if the plaintiff alleges acquisition of title by foreclosure under CCP §1161a. See §10.54. In Vella v Hudgins, supra, the supreme court stressed that availability of such a challenge to title is "a narrow and sharply focused examination of title" limited to the formalities of the trustee's sale. 20 C3d at 255. An attack on title acquired at a foreclosure sale, other than to show a purchaser's noncompliance with the statutes governing such sales, does not constitute a valid defense to recovery of possession. MCA, Inc. v Universal Diversified Enters. Corp. (1972) 27 CA3d 170, 177, 103 CR 522; Old Nat'l Fin. Servs., Inc. v Seibert (1987) 194 CA3d 460, 239 CR 728.

Similarly, a defense to eviction based on lack of compliance with statutory formalities should not prevent the landlord from obtaining relief from stay to proceed with an eviction after the foreclosure. This is because the order that terminated the stay to allow the foreclosure in the first place is often an adjudication that the debtor has no protectable interest in the property, allowing the landlord to argue that the stay literally does not apply to the subsequent eviction proceeding. Further, at least one court has declared that the bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction over a debtor in possession after foreclosure, requiring the landlord to proceed in state court to obtain possession. See California Sec. Mgmt. Corp. v Kennedy (In re Kennedy) (Bankr CD Cal 1984) 39 BR 995.

PRACTICE TIP: To prevent confusion, in any proposed order granting relief from stay to proceed with a foreclosure, counsel should include language that allows the creditor or lender and its successors to obtain possession from the debtor after the sale according to procedures under state law, in addition to allowing the foreclosure sale itself. See, e.g., form in Moving for Relief From an Automatic Stay in Bankruptcy, App S (Cal CEB Action Guide Sept. 2006). See also Practice Tip in §14.26.

Although the better practice in pleading for an order for relief from the automatic stay on behalf of a lender is to include the right to both conduct the sale and recover possession of the property, this does not always happen. The lender's counsel and eviction counsel may be different. If the purchaser is also the foreclosing lender, the debtor may argue that the action for possession constitutes yet another (albeit separate) aspect of enforcing a prepetition claim and that the order did not provide for that action. If the order is ambiguous or uncertain, it may mean that proceedings in state court must come to a halt, or it may yield a claim for violation of the stay.

In that event, counsel should seek an amended order providing for additional relief, nunc pro tunc, if necessary, to validate any notices or complaints already served. Although even unknowing violations of the automatic stay are void, bankruptcy courts have discretion to annul the automatic stay retroactively so as to validate past actions that would otherwise be void. See Jewett v Shabahangi (In re Jewett) (BAP 9th Cir 1992) 146 BR 250, 252; and Davis v Courington (In re Davis) (BAP 9th Cir 1995) 177 BR 907, 911. The bankruptcy court will balance the equities on a case-by-case basis to determine whether retroactive annulment is justified. National Envt'l Waste Corp. v City of Riverside (In re National Envt'l Waste Corp.) (9th Cir 1997) 129 F3d 1052.

The lender may also seek relief from stay on the separate issue of possession, if necessary.

EXAMPLE 2: A borrower defaults on a loan secured by real property. The secured lender conducts the foreclosure sale. Then the borrower files bankruptcy. When a foreclosure sale is completed before the petition is filed, proof of the debtor's lack of interest in the property is usually straightforward and made by offering the trustee's deed into evidence. The debtor cannot undo a completed valid sale by filing a bankruptcy petition. However, debtors claiming an irregularity in the sale may argue that the right to bring an action to cancel the sale is a chose in action, which is personal, if not real, property of the estate. Crevier v Welfare & Pension Fund for Local 701 (In re Crevier) (9th Cir 1987) 820 F2d 1553.

Potentially, debtors in this position could seek an injunction under the bankruptcy court's general injunctive powers found in 11 USC §105 as a substitute for the stay under 11 USC §362. Grundy Nat'l Bank v Looney (In re Looney) (4th Cir 1987) 823 F2d 788, 792; Explorer Drilling Co. v Martin Exploration Co. (In re Martin Exploration Co.) (5th Cir 1984) 731 F2d 1210, 1214. But see Official Creditors Comm. v Metzger (In re Dominelli) (9th Cir 1986) 788 F2d 584, 586 (noting limitations on bankruptcy court's broad equitable powers). Such injunctive relief may be pursued alternatively or in addition to defending the eviction based on an irregularity in the sale. See §§9.3, 9.36, 10.54, 11.62.

§14.22 2. Procedure for Motion for Relief From Stay

Relief from the automatic stay is obtained primarily by a motion to modify or terminate the stay under 11 USC §362(d). See grounds in §§14.18-14.21 and sample forms in §§14.63-14.66. If time is critical, the landlord's motion can be made ex parte or be accompanied by a request for an order shortening notice time on the hearing. See, e.g., 11 USC §362(f); Fed R Bankr P 4001(a)(2). Bankruptcy courts routinely grant such requests because unlawful detainer actions are summary proceedings entitled to preference in state court. Likewise, bankruptcy courts routinely grant relief from the automatic stay when the landlord seeks only possession of residential rental property and no unexpired long-term lease is involved.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.23 a. Format and Supporting Documents

The motion should be supported by admissible evidence of the factual basis for the relief sought. Declarations should be made by competent witnesses who have personal knowledge of the facts; if they are not within the personal knowledge of the attorney for the moving party, then a declaration signed under penalty of perjury by the creditor or landlord, or an employee or representative of the creditor or landlord, is required. See, e.g., declaration in Central District motion form in §14.65. (If the motion itself contains the necessary foundational facts, it may be verified as in the form in §14.63). The motion should state:

- The landlord's interest in the property;
- The debtor's continued possession;
- The existence, nature, and status of any existing or former lease;
- Any defaults, such as nonpayment of rent; and
- Any steps taken to terminate the tenancy.

If an unlawful detainer action was filed before the tenant's filing of the bankruptcy petition, the motion should include copies of any termination notices, complaints, answers, or other procedural matters and request that judicial notice be taken of them. See forms in §§14.63, 14.65. Note that under the BAPCPA (see §14.1A), a motion for relief from stay would not be needed to proceed with a residential eviction if judgment was entered before the bankruptcy, subject to provisions allowing the debtor to cure the default. See 11 USC §362(b)(22), (l), discussed in §14.16.

The motion should argue with reference to authorities that the debtor has no interest or equity in the property or that the defaults, and any subsequent actions to terminate based on them, constitute cause for relief from stay, or both. Finally, the prayer for relief should seek termination of the stay, or if counsel wishes to avoid invalidation of notices or other actions already taken, for example, in ignorance of the stay, retroactive annulment of the stay. National Envt'l Waste Corp. v City of Riverside (In re National Envt'l Waste Corp.) (9th Cir 1997) 129 F3d 1052; Schwartz v U.S. (In re Schwartz) (9th Cir 1992) 954 F2d 569, 572; Jewett v Shabahangi (In re Jewett) (BAP 9th Cir 1992) 146 BR 250, 252.

WARNING: Because Fed R Bankr P 4001(a)(3) stays the order granting relief from stay for 14 days after entry of the order unless the bankruptcy court orders otherwise, counsel should request in the moving papers that the stay period be shortened or that the order become effective immediately on being entered.

Counsel should always consult local rules on any relief from stay motion, and ascertain whether the court requires submission of a proposed order with the motion. See forms in §§14.64, 14.66. Particular requirements for the format and contents of moving papers are also set forth in local district court rules and in the policies of individual court departments; counsel should check these before preparing and filing the motion. In the bankruptcy courts of the southern district of California, e.g., specific motion forms for cases involving unlawful detainer matters are required. SD Cal Local Bankr R 4001-2; Form CSD 1163. In the central district, e.g., preprinted forms for motions for relief from automatic stay in unlawful detainer matters are mandatory. See forms in §§14.65-14.66A.

§14.24 b. Filing Motion for Relief From Stay

A motion to modify or terminate the automatic stay is the initiation of a contested matter in a bankruptcy case, but it will not always be filed before it is served. The court (or the attorney) may assign a separate number to the motion (usually called an "RS [Relief from Stay] number" or "Motion Control Number"), so that the moving papers and opposing papers will show both the bankruptcy case and motion number on the caption of all pleadings. ED Cal Local Bankr R 9014-1(c); ND Cal Local Bankr R 4001-1; SD Cal Local Bankr R 4001-1(b)(1). All districts require some form of cover (or information) sheet for the motion. Forms may be obtained from the respective clerks' offices.

NOTE: Bankruptcy courts are moving toward requiring electronic filing and may not permit paper filing; counsel should consult local rules and the court's website for current filing requirements and how to apply for an exemption from them. See Warning at §14.58.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.25 c. Serving Motion for Relief From Stay

Local rules usually require service of the motion, by first class mail or personal service, on or before the same day as it is filed. See, e.g., ND Cal Local Bankr R 9013-3; ED Cal Local Bankr R 4001-1, 9014-1(m). Proof of service should be filed promptly, because the failure to show proper notice can be cause for denial. See, e.g., ED Cal Local Bankr R 9014-1(m)(1). Some rules require the proof of service to identify the capacity (e.g., debtor, creditor, debtor attorney) in which the person was served. See, e.g., ND Cal Local Bankr R 9013-3(b) and sample proof of service in §14.58.

In a Chapter 7 case, the motion should be served on the debtor, debtor's counsel, and the Chapter 7 trustee (note that CD Cal Local Bankr R 9013-1(a)(5)(A) only requires service on the debtor and debtor's attorney). In a Chapter 13 case, the motion should be served on the debtor, debtor's counsel, the Chapter 13 trustee, and the United States trustee for the district and division in which the case is pending.

In a Chapter 11 case, notice should be given to the debtor, debtor's counsel, the Chapter 11 trustee if one has been appointed; the United States trustee for the district and division in which the case is pending; and the committee of unsecured creditors (if one has been appointed) and its counsel. If a committee has not been appointed, notice should be given to the 20 largest unsecured creditors. The identities of all these parties can be obtained from the court files. Fed R Bankr P 4001(a)(1), 9014; ND Cal Local Bankr R 4001-1, 9013-3; SD Cal Local Bankr R 4001-1, 4001-2.

PRACTICE TIP: In all cases, counsel should check local rules to see if notice should be given to any party who has filed a request for special notice with the court under Fed R Bankr P 2002. See, e.g., ND Cal Local Bankr R 9013-3(b). The identities and addresses of all these parties can be readily obtained from the court files. Particular requirements of the time periods and methods of service of moving papers are also set forth in local district rules, and in the policies of individual court departments, so counsel should also check these before serving the motion.

§14.26 d. Scheduling and Attending the Hearing

When there is a pending execution of a writ of possession (see §§13.64-13.67), and assuming the writ pertains to commercial property, counsel may want to set a hearing date for the landlord's motion for relief from the stay as close as possible to the next available date for the sheriff to complete the eviction and lockout. The earlier the hearing, the less time will be available, for example, for delaying tactics such as successive bankruptcy filings on behalf of another occupant. Because the BAPCPA (see §14.1A) provides an exception to the stay for residential leases that were terminated before the bankruptcy, those provisions would control the landlord's rights in that context, and relief from stay would not be necessary if the exception applies. See 11 USC §362(b)(22), (l), discussed in §14.16.

Under 11 USC §362(g), the moving party has the burden of showing at the hearing lack of equity in the property. The burden on all other issues is on the party resisting the motion.

PRACTICE TIP: Because time is crucial in an eviction, counsel should bring a proposed order and copies of it to the hearing for immediate signature and entry on granting of the motion. The order should provide that it be effective in the pending bankruptcy despite conversion of the case to another chapter. It should also include relief to seek and enforce remedies incidental to recovery of possession, such as disposition of abandoned personal property. See also Warning in §14.23.

3. Defending Stay Relief Motion

§14.27 a. Bankruptcy Discharge of Delinquent Rent in Public or Subsidized Housing

There is a split of authority concerning whether 11 USC §525(a) precludes evicting a public housing tenant for nonpayment of rent. Section 525(a) prohibits bankruptcy-based discrimination by governmental units against debtors.

In 2002, the Second Circuit issued a controversial opinion concerning the application of §525(a) to public housing debtor-tenants. See Stoltz v Brattleboro Hous. Auth. (In re Stoltz) (2d Cir 2002) 315 F3d 80, 92. The Stoltz court ruled that a debtor-tenant's current right to participate in public housing is a governmental grant protected under §525(a), and that this provision trumps conflicting provisions of 11 USC §365 in the public housing context. Accordingly, Stoltz holds that debtor-tenants whose unpaid prepetition rent is discharged are shielded from eviction for nonpayment of such rent under §525(a). The Stoltz opinion follows a line of prior bankruptcy court decisions. See, e.g., Johnson v Chester Hous. Auth. (In re Johnson) (Bankr ED Pa 2000) 250 BR 521, 530, and Curry v Metropolitan Dade County (In re Curry) (Bankr SD Fla 1992) 148 BR 966, 972.

Other courts have declined to protect public housing tenants from eviction because of their unpaid prepetition rent. For instance, in In re Valentin (Bankr ED Pa 2004) 309 BR 715, the court disagreed with Stoltz and granted relief from stay to allow the housing authority to evict. The Valentin court explained that relief was appropriate so long as the creditor did not attempt to preclude the debtor from future participation in public housing programs. Several cases support this view. See, e.g., Housing Auth. v Caldwell (In re Caldwell) (Bankr ND Ga 1994) 174 BR 650 (even if the rent debt was discharged in bankruptcy, nothing in the Bankruptcy Code precludes a public housing authority from requiring a tenant to cure past rent defaults in order to continue occupancy), and Housing Auth. v Collins (In re Collins) (Bankr WD Pa 1996) 199 BR 561 (11 USC §365(b)(1) expressly permits landlords to require that tenants cure prepetition delinquent rent when tenants assume unexpired leases). Likewise, the court in In re Bacon (Bankr ED Pa 1997) 212 BR 66 held that as long as a landlord's in rem remedies to evict a debtor-tenant are not used to deprive the tenant of a protected "grant" under 11 USC §525(a) (i.e., the right to participate in public housing), the landlord is free to exercise its contractual rights to terminate the tenancy for nonpayment of rent if it does not seek to collect the dischargeable rent debt. Thus, eviction from the leasehold does not prohibit the tenant from reapplying for housing. See §§14.36, 14.52.

Similarly, in Robinson v Chicago Hous. Auth. (In re Robinson) (Bankr ND Ill 1994) 169 BR 171, the trial court held that a lease terminated under Illinois state law could not be assumed by the bankruptcy trustee. The court of appeals affirmed the judgment in Robinson v Chicago Hous. Auth. (7th Cir 1995) 54 F3d 316. Under the reasoning in Robinson, a landlord who serves a proper notice to pay rent or quit on the tenant may obtain relief from stay to proceed with an eviction if the notice expired before the tenant filed its bankruptcy petition and even if the lease term is otherwise unexpired. See §§14.17-14.26.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.28 b. Other Defenses

In addition to defenses based on lack of proper procedures in the motion for relief from stay (see §§14.22-14.26), a debtor may be able to raise substantive issues. For example, in an eviction following a foreclosure sale, the debtor may claim that there were mistakes made during the foreclosure process that invalidate the sale. See §14.21. Also, if no judgment was entered in the state court eviction proceeding, the debtor may try to litigate the eviction in the bankruptcy court and raise state court defenses, such as warranty of habitability (see §10.64), retaliatory eviction (see §10.65), discrimination (see §§10.67-10.68), or others (see §§10.53-10.69). In that event, the bankruptcy court will usually grant relief and abstain from adjudicating the defenses because the forum for such defenses is more properly the state court in which the eviction is pending. See, e.g., California Sec. Mgmt. Corp. v Kennedy (In re Kennedy) (Bankr CD Cal 1984) 39 BR 995 (bankruptcy court lacked jurisdiction to hear complaint for possession after foreclosure). The bankruptcy judge may, however, limit any recovery by the landlord to possession only, and require the landlord to come back to the bankruptcy court for any orders or to file a claim to allow the landlord to collect money damages from the debtor. See §14.59.

§14.28A c. Responsive Pleadings

The United States Bankruptcy Court, Central District of California, adopted an optional, preprinted form for use in opposing a stay relief motion, unless an individual judge or court department makes this form mandatory. See Response to Motion for Order to Terminate, Annul, Modify, or Condition the Automatic Stay Under 11 USC §362 (Central District Form F 4001-1M.RES; Optional).

Like the moving papers, the opposing papers must contain supporting law and declarations regarding contested facts.

§14.29 4. Relief Granted on Conditions

The court may grant relief from stay to proceed with the eviction, or it may wish to stay the order on condition that the debtor meets specific obligations, e.g., payment of postpetition rent to the landlord when due or according to a specified schedule. If the debtor's interests have terminated or the leased property is not property of the bankruptcy estate, landlords have a strong argument against imposing any conditions on relief from stay in order to proceed swiftly with an eviction, and relief from stay may not even be necessary under the BAPCPA. See §§14.1A, 14.4, 14.11-14.16B. Indeed, if a judge has ruled that there is no estate or debtor interest to be protected, the judge arguably has no jurisdiction to address issues related to the debtor's bare possessory interest. See, e.g., California Sec. Mgmt. Corp. v Kennedy (In re Kennedy) (Bankr CD Cal 1984) 39 BR 995. But see discussion of the BAPCPA exception to automatic stay in §14.16.

On the other hand, if a state court action is in its early stages, and the landlord's objective is to collect the rent or get possession as soon as possible, a landlord might wish to have the bankruptcy court impose these types of conditions on the debtor and specifically order that the debtor must relinquish possession directly if the conditions are not met; this could save the landlord the time and expense of litigating a state court eviction action from beginning to end. Bankruptcy courts may issue surrender orders when a debtor's rights to possession have terminated, and they have broad authority to issue orders necessary to carry out the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. See, e.g., Anderson v Elm Inn, Inc. (In re Elm Inn, Inc.) (9th Cir 1991) 942 F2d 630, 633. See also 11 USC §105. In any event, Fed R Bankr P 4001(a)(3) provides that an order granting relief from stay is stayed for 14 days after entry of the order unless the bankruptcy court orders otherwise.

One common condition to relief from stay is that the landlord may only seek possession of the property in state court, but may not attempt to collect any rent due. Typically, a landlord would be required to pursue any monetary claim by filing a proof of claim against the estate (or a request for payment of administrative expense, with respect to postpetition amounts that are due), and would not be allowed to collect any judgment from the debtor or estate without a separate order from the bankruptcy court granting relief from the stay for that purpose. See §14.59 for claim form and §14.60 for request for payment of administrative expense. Note that if limited relief is granted for the purpose of continuing existing state court claims, a material amendment to the pleadings that changes the nature of the relief sought could violate the automatic stay and render any findings made in the state court void. Griffin v Wardrobe (In re Wardrobe) (9th Cir 2009) 559 F3d 932.

§14.30 C. Stipulation for Relief From Stay

Before or after the filing of a motion to modify, terminate, or obtain relief from the automatic stay, nothing prevents landlord counsel from attempting to obtain from the debtor or debtor's attorney a stipulation for an order for relief from (or modification of) the stay. Generally, if the parties cooperate, a stipulation is quicker, less costly, and usually more reliable than a motion, even if additional terms are imposed by the debtor. A stipulation for an order granting relief from the bankruptcy stay to allow an eviction to proceed will frequently be accepted by a debtor-tenant if the landlord is willing to grant a temporary stay of execution of the state court writ of possession to allow the tenant additional time to move out voluntarily. See sample form in §14.67.

WARNING: The stipulation should only grant relief to allow entry and execution of judgment for possession of the premises. Any attempt to exact a monetary judgment for prepetition debts against the tenant, as a condition of allowing more time for the tenant to move, will inevitably meet with objections from creditors and the trustee, and result in the court not approving the stipulation.

Theoretically, the stipulation could be conditioned on certain payments from the debtor, but the basis for the amount must clearly be represented as a postpetition obligation and must be reasonable, and may be characterized as ensuring the landlord adequate protection under 11 USC §362(d). (See, e.g., 11 USC §365(b)(1)(B), which provides a method for adequate protection on a lease assumption in bankruptcy.) Any overreaching in this respect will result in the court rejecting the stipulation.

If a stipulation can be reached among the parties, simplified procedures and special forms exist to give notice and obtain approval by the court in the form of an order. Fed R Bankr P 4001(d). See, e.g., ND Cal Local Bankr R 9014-1(b)(3); ED Cal Local Bankr R 9019-1, Form 92. Parties to the stipulation will nearly always include the creditor and the debtor, and the trustee if the stipulation allows the creditor to take action against property of the estate. The stipulation will be more easily approved by the court if it contains a recitation of facts sufficient to enable the court to determine whether:

- The property against which the creditor intends to take action is property of the debtor, the bankruptcy estate, or neither;
- There is a statutory or equitable basis for the relief requested;
- The terms imposed on the debtor are reasonable under the circumstances; and
- Any other creditor's rights or rights of the trustee are affected by the terms of the stipulation.

Whether the order should be prepared as a document separate from the stipulation is largely a matter of local practice. See sample form in §14.67. Also, the application process for court approval of a stipulation varies, including the form of the application and to whom (and the number of days for which) notice must be given. Local rules and individual court department practices should be consulted even though most courts in all districts generally follow Fed R Bankr P 4001(d). An ex parte application for an order shortening time for notice to interested parties of the stipulation may be routinely granted in some courts. In the Northern District of California, a Chapter 7 trustee can move to reject a lease on 24 hours' notice without a formal hearing, so court approval of a stipulation with the trustee in such circumstances should be similarly swift. See ND Cal Local Bankr R 6006-1(b). For a detailed outline of additional matters to be considered when preparing and negotiating a stipulation for an order granting relief from stay, and sample forms for a stipulation and a motion for approval and notice to interested parties, see Moving for Relief From an Automatic Stay in Bankruptcy, Steps 12-14, Apps G, L (Cal CEB Action Guide September 2006).

§14.31 D. Application for Surrender of Premises

A landlord may attempt to recover possession by obtaining relief directly from the bankruptcy court by applying for an order requiring the debtor to surrender or vacate the property after the debtor fails to assume a lease of commercial property (see §14.54) or rejects it. See 11 USC §365(d)(4); Anderson v Elm Inn, Inc. (In re Elm Inn, Inc.) (9th Cir 1991) 942 F2d 630, 633). See sample forms in §§14.68-14.70. This process may also be used in a case involving a commercial lease that has terminated by its own terms or by operation of law. See §14.14. In the residential context, where a judgment for possession was entered before the bankruptcy, relief from stay is generally no longer necessary under the BAPCPA (defined in §14.1A). See 11 USC §362(b)(22), (l). This exception could save landlords significant expense and delay, although the practical application of its new procedures remains uncertain. See §14.16.

PRACTICE TIP: In a bankruptcy case involving a commercial lease, the issues of whether the lease was assumed in a timely manner, whether the lease was validly terminated, or whether possession should be turned over to the landlord may be contested in a lease assumption motion filed by the trustee or debtor. A landlord may oppose such a motion by submitting an application for surrender of the premises in the forms found in §§14.68-14.70.

§14.32 E. Motion to Dismiss Bankruptcy

Motions to dismiss are available in all chapters of bankruptcy actions (see, e.g., 11 USC §§105(a), 349, 707, 1112, 1307). Historically, they have been used less frequently to terminate the automatic stay than motions for relief under 11 USC §362(d). See §§14.17-14.29. The primary disadvantage of moving to dismiss had been that such motions were rarely granted. Indeed, until the BAPCPA, there was a statutory presumption in favor of allowing bankruptcy relief requested by the debtor. See Voelkel v Naylor (In re Voelkel) (BAP 9th Cir 2005) 322 BR 138 (bankruptcy court's dismissal order reversed for not reciting facts rebutting statutory presumption of 11 USC §707(b) and articulating clear abuse found). In the BAPCPA, however, the presumption has been deleted from §707(b), and the circumstances in which bankruptcy cases may be dismissed have been expanded, encouraging bankruptcy courts to dismiss more cases, more often.

A bankruptcy may be dismissed for "cause," e.g., for the debtor's failure to propose a plan in Chapter 11 or 13, for the debtor's failure to file the necessary schedules and financial information, or for any unreasonable delay by the debtor or trustee in prosecuting the case that is prejudicial to the creditors, especially the landlord. See 11 USC §707(a) (Chapter 7), §1112(b) (Chapter 11), §1208(c) (Chapter 12), §1307(c) (Chapter 13); Fed R Bankr P 1017. Other reasons under these statutes include:

- Failure to timely propose a plan;
- Inability to effectuate or denial of confirmation of a proposed plan;
- Inability to effectuate, material default under, or revocation of a confirmed plan;
- Nonpayment of fees; and
- Failure to file required information with the court.

"Cause" also includes the filing of a bankruptcy case in bad faith. Marsch v Marsch (In re Marsch) (9th Cir 1994) 36 F3d 825 (affirming dismissal based on filing used solely as litigation tactic by solvent debtor).

The BAPCPA (see §14.1A) made major changes to the dismissal statutes to make dismissal of bankruptcy cases more readily available. In Chapter 7 cases before the BAPCPA, for example, dismissal or, with the debtor's consent, conversion to Chapter 11 or Chapter 13 was appropriate if granting relief under Chapter 7 to a debtor with primarily consumer debts would be a "substantial abuse" of Chapter 7. See former 11 USC §707(b). Under the BAPCPA, 11 USC §707(b) requires only "abuse" and further presumes that "abuse" exists if the debtor's monthly income, after deduction for certain standardized expenses over a 60-month period, is not less than the lesser of $10,000 or 25 percent of the debtor's unsecured debt (not to exceed $6000). The BAPCPA also expanded the definition of "cause" for conversion or dismissal of Chapter 11 cases in 11 USC §1112(b)(4). Notable additions include:

- Failure to maintain appropriate insurance;
- Unauthorized use of cash collateral;
- Gross mismanagement of the estate;
- Failure to attend meetings of creditors or a scheduled examination of the debtor;
- Failure to comply with reporting requirements, court orders, or requests for information from the United States Trustee; and
- Nonpayment of fees or taxes.

Section 521(i)(1), added in the BAPCPA, also mandates an "automatic" dismissal on the 46th day after a bankruptcy petition is filed, if a Chapter 7 or 13 debtor fails to file all of the information required, though it is unclear what is meant by "automatic." See In re Riddle (Bankr SD Fla 2006) 344 BR 702 (explaining the uncertainty of new provision with opinion entirely in verse). Counsel concerned that a bankruptcy filing might be improper should carefully consult the BAPCPA amendments in the applicable chapter to determine if grounds for dismissal of the case might exist.

It is improper for a solvent tenant to use the bankruptcy process to obtain the section 502(b)(6) cap on its landlord's damages for breach of a commercial lease. Recent authorities have dismissed such cases, confirming that using the bankruptcy process in this way does not meet the requirement of "good faith." See NMSBPCSLDHB, LP v Integrated Telecom Express, Inc. (In re Integrated Telecom Express, Inc.) (3d Cir 2004) 384 F3d 108 and In re Liberate Technols. (Bankr ND Cal 2004) 314 BR 206, 214. In Integrated Telecom Express, Inc., the debtor had over $200 million in cash and assets, and its liabilities were primarily a $26 million obligation under a long term lease. The Third Circuit reversed the Delaware bankruptcy court, holding that the landlord's motion to dismiss the case for bad faith should have been granted. See also BEPCO, LP v 15375 Mem. Corp. (In re 15375 Mem. Corp.) (D Del 2009) 400 BR 420 (reversing bankruptcy court's denial of dismissal of debtors' petitions). In the event of such a dismissal, the landlord may, in a separate state court proceeding, recover the attorney fees it incurred in obtaining a dismissal of the bankruptcy matter. See, e.g., Circle Star Assocs. v Liberate Technols. (2007) 147 CA4th 1203, 55 CR3d 232; Chinese Yellow Pages v Chinese Overseas Mktg. Serv. Corp. (2008) 170 CA4th 868, 88 CR3d 250.

In the context of an unlawful detainer for nonpayment of rent, a motion to dismiss a tenant bankruptcy may be successful, particularly if there is evidence that the landlord is the only creditor (or one of a few) and that the bankruptcy was filed in bad faith. See, e.g., Meadowbrook Invs. Group v Thirtieth Place, Inc. (In re Thirtieth Place, Inc.) (BAP 9th Cir 1983) 30 BR 503, 505; In re Fast Food Props., Ltd. No. 1 (Bankr CD Cal 1980) 5 BR 539, 540. But see Smyrnos v Padilla (In re Padilla) (BAP 9th Cir 1997) 213 BR 349; In re Johns-Manville Corp. (Bankr SD NY 1984) 36 BR 727, 737.

A dismissal revests property of the bankruptcy estate in the person or entity in which it was vested before the filing of the petition (11 USC §349(b)(3)). An advantage to this procedure over a motion for relief under 11 USC §362(d) is that counsel may be able to obtain in the dismissal order a bar to the refiling of another bankruptcy by the same debtor for 180 days. See 11 USC §109(g)(1). In addition, a judgment of dismissal is effective when entered. See Fed R Bankr P 9021. On the effect of dismissal on the adjudication of creditors' claims made before dismissal, see Nathanson v Hecker (2002) 99 CA4th 1158, 121 CR2d 773, discussed in §14.40.

PRACTICE TIP: Some practitioners argue that a motion to dismiss may be employed even after an unsuccessful motion for relief from stay because the statutory grounds are different for each procedure. Also, if a landlord is aware of facts supporting grounds for dismissal, they may be raised in a motion for relief from stay, because the same facts that support a dismissal may also support a motion for relief from stay. Farber v 405 N. Bedford Dr. Corp. (In re 405 N. Bedford Dr. Corp.) (9th Cir 1985) 778 F2d 1374, 1378. See §14.18.

IV. RESIDENTIAL LEASE ASSUMPTION OR REJECTION

§14.33 A. Purpose

Lease assumption or rejection by formal process was instituted to inject a degree of certainty into the landlord-tenant relationship after a bankruptcy filing. It allows the court, the landlord, and other creditors to ascertain whether the debtor or trustee will perform the obligations of the lease, and it provides a landlord assurances that defaults in rent will be cured if the lease is assumed. It also allows for the rejection of burdensome obligations while permitting retention of those which have some value to the estate. Dellway Villa Apartments v Goodloe (In re Goodloe) (Bankr MD Tenn 1986) 61 BR 1016, 1018.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.34 B. 60-Day Limit for Assumption or Rejection

The trustee in bankruptcy must accept or reject a lease of residential property within 60 days after the order for relief in a Chapter 7 proceeding (liquidation). 11 USC §365(d)(1). In a proceeding under Chapter 9 (adjustment of municipality debts), Chapter 11 (reorganization of debts of an individual not qualified for Chapter 13), or Chapter 13 (adjustment of debts of an individual with regular income), the trustee may accept or reject a lease of residential property at any time before a plan is confirmed. 11 USC §365(d)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Effect of Lease Assumption

§14.35 1. Rights of Assuming Trustee or Debtor

A trustee who assumes the lease within the required time may assign the lease despite lease restrictions on transfers. 11 USC §365(f)(3); Cukierman v Mechanics Bank (In re J. F. Hink & Son) (9th Cir 1987) 815 F2d 1314; In re David Orgell, Inc. (Bankr CD Cal 1990) 117 BR 574. While transfer restrictions will be disregarded to allow the debtor to assign the lease under bankruptcy law, a debtor who assumes a lease must assume the entire lease, taking all the burdens with the benefits and with all other covenants and rights unchanged as to both parties. See Stewart Title Guar. Co. v Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (5th Cir 1996) 83 F3d 735, 741.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Obligations of Assuming Trustee or Debtor

§14.36 a. Curing Existing Defaults

An assuming trustee (or debtor) must cure all existing defaults under the lease or give prompt assurance that the defaults will be cured. 11 USC §365(b)(1)(A). The assurance also must cover the future performance of the lease. 11 USC §365(b)(1)(C). As a condition of assumption, the trustee must pay all delinquent rent, and pay or give adequate assurance of payment of actual consequential out-of-pocket losses. 11 USC §365(b)(1)(B).

The Bankruptcy Code does not distinguish between "former," "existing," or "current" landlords, so a landlord may claim a right to cure payment on assignment of the lease even after the property is sold, provided the right is preserved in the sale agreement. ECPG (Peoria) Assocs. Ltd. Partnership v Building Block Child Care Ctrs. (In re Building Block Child Care Ctrs.) (BAP 9th Cir 1999) 234 BR 762. In Building Block Child Care Ctrs., the tenant had filed its bankruptcy petition before the sale and assignment, and the landlord expressly retained its interest in the past due payments when it assigned the lease to the new owner. If the tenant is in default under the lease when the petition is filed, the trustee may not require the landlord to continue paying for utilities or other services incidental to the lease before the trustee assumes the lease, unless the landlord is compensated for any such services supplied before the assumption. 11 USC §365(b)(4).

Under California law, a landlord who intentionally interrupts or terminates a tenant's utility service with the intent of terminating the tenant's occupancy is subject to statutory penalties. CC §789.3. Although the statute does not create a presumption that a landlord who interrupts services does so with the intent to evict, a landlord runs a risk of such a claim if utility services happen to be interrupted without notice after a tenant bankruptcy. Thus, a landlord who stops paying utilities should provide advance notice to both the tenant and the trustee in bankruptcy that payment will cease (as permitted by 11 USC §365(b)(4)) on a specified date, and that the landlord expects the trustee to assume the payments if the trustee intends to retain the services. Proceeding in this manner permits the trustee to assume the payments without interrupting utility service to the tenant, and minimizes the risk of a claim that the landlord violated. CC §789.3(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.37 b. Prepetition Rent Workouts

Occasionally, before the filing of the petition, the debtor and the landlord may informally resolve rent delinquencies by mutual agreement in the form of a payment schedule or even a promissory note that extends the time for payment of past due rental obligations. Such arrangements present the question of whether the debtor can separate this obligation as a mere monetary claim and avoid curing the default in order to remain in possession. The problem has been addressed, with mixed results, in the context of nonresidential leases.

In In re Offices & Servs. of White Plains Plaza (Bankr SD NY 1986) 56 BR 607, e.g., the court held that when back rent obligations had been reduced to a promissory note payable over an extended period of time, defaults under the note had to be cured as part of the assumption of the lease. The Ninth Circuit confirmed that payments under promissory notes defined as "further rent" under a lease are considered administrative rent claims under 11 USC §365(d)(3). Cukierman v Uecker (In re Cukierman) (9th Cir 2001) 265 F3d 846. But see Moore v Pollock (In re Pollock) (BAP 9th Cir 1992) 139 BR 938, 940 (court reached opposite result on similar facts); Upstairs Gallery v Macklowe W. Dev. Co. (In re Upstairs Gallery) (BAP 9th Cir 1994) 167 BR 915).

In Pollock, the court considered an attempt by Chapter 11 debtors to assume a sublease of commercial property. The sublease had been executed by the debtors in connection with a purchase agreement, note, and security agreement, all entered into contemporaneously with the objecting sublessor for the purchase of a campground. Before the order for relief, the debtors defaulted on the note. While the sublessor argued that the note and sublease were integral and indivisible parts of the purchase transaction, the trial court and the bankruptcy appellate panel both concluded that the obligations were divisible such that one could be assumed without performing the other, based on three principal factors: (1) ruling for the sublessor would result in forfeiture, "which courts of equity abhor"; (2) the sublessor had received the agreed consideration—a secured note; and (3) the sublease had already been pledged to the sublessor under the security agreement, putting it in secured status. 139 BR at 941.

In Upstairs Gallery, the court held that lease termination payments made to a landlord may be recoverable as a preference under 11 USC §547. The issue was whether compromise of rent obligations that extended into the future gave rise to payments on account of an antecedent debt, or provided "new value" by releasing the future rent obligation. The court looked at the substantive effect of the agreement over its form, and held that because the lease obligation was incurred when the lease was formed, the later compromise of the obligation did generate a payment on account of an antecedent debt. 167 BR at 918. See also Richardson v Philadelphia Hous. Auth. (In re Richardson) (Bankr ED Pa 1988) 94 BR 56, 62 (prepetition payment agreement for delinquent rent was preferential transfer under §547(b) requiring landlord to remit to bankruptcy estate).

Note that the BAPCPA (see §14.1A) modified §547 to provide that a transfer would not be preference to the extent that it was in payment of a debt incurred by the debtor in the ordinary course of business with the transferee, and if it was made in the ordinary course of business or according to ordinary business terms (previously, a showing of both was required for the defense). See 11 USC §547(c)(2). Additionally, the BAPCPA modified §547 to exclude transfers of less than $5000 from preference exposure in cases in which the debtor's debts "are not primarily consumer debts". See 11 USC §547(c)(9). Nonetheless, landlords should be aware of preference issues when substituting or modifying rent obligations for potentially insolvent tenants.

D. Effect of Rejection

§14.38 1. Rejection Implies Voluntary Termination

The Ninth Circuit has yet to squarely address the effect of rejection on a residential lease. The Ninth Circuit has repeatedly held, however, that rejection of a nonresidential lease terminates the lease and the right of possession. See Anderson v Elm Inn, Inc. (In re Elm Inn, Inc.) (9th Cir 1991) 942 F2d 630; George v City of Morro Bay (In re George) (9th Cir 1999) 177 F3d 885, based on 11 USC §365(d)(4) which expressly applies to nonresidential leases. These cases have held that when a nonresidential lease was rejected, the landlord was entitled to an immediate order directing the surrender of possession, avoiding the need for relief from stay.

Although 11 USC §365(d)(4) on its face applies only to nonresidential leases, the reasoning of these cases could also apply to rejection of residential leases. As a practical matter, rejection of the leasehold interest is logically inconsistent with continued possession by the tenant. Rejection indicates a voluntary decision to discontinue the relationship represented by the lease. Thus, although a tenant's equitable possessory interest may be protected by the stay after an involuntary termination (Westside Apartments v Butler (In re Butler) (Bankr CD Cal 2002) 271 BR 867), the 2005 exceptions to the stay for terminated residential leases reflect Congressional intent to reduce the protection of such interests. See, e.g., 11 USC §362(b)(22), (l), discussed in §14.16. Moreover, a lease rejection indicates a voluntary termination of the lease and thus an arguable relinquishment of any equitable interest the tenant might otherwise have had. See George v City of Morro Bay (In re George) (9th Cir 1999) 177 F3d 885; Anderson v Elm Inn, Inc. (In re Elm Inn, Inc.) (9th Cir 1991) 942 F2d 630, 633, cited in §14.54. See also Marquand v Smith (In re Smith) (Bankr CD Cal 1989) 105 BR 50, 55; Lee v Baca (1999) 73 CA4th 1116, 86 CR2d 913; discussion of Butler, Smith, and Lee in §§14.16-14.17.

Outside the Ninth Circuit, it has been said that the effect of rejection of a residential lease "is one of the great mysteries of bankruptcy law." In re Henderson (Bankr SD NY 2000) 245 BR 449, 453. Although rejection of a lease is treated as a breach that occurred before the bankruptcy was filed (see 11 USC §365(g)(1)), the Second Circuit has held that this does not mean that the lease has terminated (see Medical Malpractice Ins. Ass'n v Hirsch (In re Levigne) (2d Cir 1997) 114 F3d 379, 386). Under this authority, courts addressing the effect of rejection on rent-controlled leases have suggested that, although a rejection of a residential lease may terminate the estate's interest in the lease, it leaves a right of possession to revert to the debtor. See, e.g., In re Henderson, supra; B.N. Realty Assocs. v Lichtenstein (SD NY 1999) 238 BR 249, 254. Therefore, especially in the context of a residential rent-controlled lease, a landlord would be required to seek relief from stay to regain the right of possession after rejection.

PRACTICE TIP: If a tenant remains in possession after rejection of the lease, a landlord could request a surrender order (see §14.31) under the reasoning of Smith, Lee, Elm Inn, and George and the court's broad equitable powers under 11 USC §105. Although this method is certainly the quickest in regaining possession, the landlord should always seek relief from stay in the alternative (see §14.17), because it is unclear whether a court would apply the principles of 11 USC §365(d)(4) in a residential context.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.39 2. Postpetition Rent Must Be Paid

Even if a lease is rejected, the landlord is entitled to compensation for rent or rental value of the premises from the date of the petition through the date of rejection, which should also be the date by which possession is relinquished. 11 USC §503(b); Thompson v IFG Leasing Co. (In re Thompson) (9th Cir 1986) 788 F2d 560. The compensation is set at the reasonable rental value, which may be, but is not always, the same as the lease rate. Brown v Danning (In re Frederick Meats, Inc.) (9th Cir 1973) 483 F2d 951; Merchants Fund, Inc. v Bartl (In re Merchants Storage Co.) (Bankr ED Va 1981) 15 BR 448. On setoffs for security deposits held by the landlord, see §14.12.

§14.40 3. Landlord Claim Issues

Rent that accrues from and after the order for relief (which is usually the date the bankruptcy petition is filed) but before the effective date of a lease rejection is granted administrative priority under 11 USC §503(b)(1). Towers v Chickering & Gregory (In re Pacific-Atlantic Trading Co.) (9th Cir 1994) 27 F3d 401; Thompson v IFG Leasing Co. (In re Thompson) (9th Cir 1986) 788 F2d 560. This means the claim will ordinarily be paid ahead of other claims against the estate. See §§14.45-14.46. In cases commenced by involuntary petitions or resulting from a conversion from one chapter to another, the order for relief would occur after the date of the original petition. See 11 USC §§303(h), 348(b). Nonetheless, claims arising in the ordinary course of business after the filing date but before the order for relief are still accorded administrative priority status. See 11 USC §502(f) on claims for the "gap" period between an involuntary petition and the order for relief; §502(f) claims are granted administrative priority under §507(a)(2).

In general, landlords claiming postpetition rent should not use the standard proof of claim form required for other kinds of claims (see, e.g., §14.59). Rather, a request for payment of administrative expenses under §503(b)(1) should be made. If the debtor does not pay the amount claimed or if a dispute is anticipated, the request should be set for hearing, and made in the form of a motion for allowance and payment of administrative expenses. See forms in §§14.60-14.61 and Practice Tip in §14.46. If a lease is terminated prepetition and the debtor does not move to assume the lease or obtain relief from forfeiture, damages for rental value accruing in unlawful detainer are not allowed as an administrative claim. In re Boll Weevil, Inc. (Bankr SD Cal 1996) 202 BR 762.

To seek recovery of amounts due for prepetition rent and damages resulting from rejection of the lease, a landlord should file a proof of claim, as a general unsecured creditor. See form in §14.59. The amount of a landlord's claim for damages from lease rejection is capped according to a formula provided by statute. See 11 USC §502(b)(6) and §14.55. If the debtor-tenant contests the claim, the bankruptcy court's determination of the allowable amount of the claim may be res judicata of the lease liability, prohibiting the tenant from contesting the liability in a subsequent state court proceeding after the bankruptcy has been dismissed. Nathanson v Hecker (2002) 99 CA4th 1158, 121 CR2d 773.

PRACTICE TIP: The notice of commencement of a case in Chapters 7 or 13 (essentially, a notice sent out by the bankruptcy clerk to the creditors listed in the debtor's schedules; see §14.5) contains the deadline for filing claims. That date is called the "Claims Bar Date," and should be promptly calendared because claims filed after that date may be disallowed. In cases under Chapter 11, the bar date is generally set by the court on the debtor's motion. In all cases, any notice of a bar date should be calendared to be sure the claim is timely filed.

Note that special rules apply to the assumption or rejection of nonresidential leases. 11 USC §365(d)(3)-(4). See §§14.43-14.55.

§14.41 E. Exceptions: Expired or Terminated Leases

If a lease has expired by its own terms or has terminated, in most cases, the debtor or trustee cannot assume the lease. See 11 USC §365(a). "Bankruptcy cannot breathe new life into a terminated lease." In re Bacon (Bankr ED Pa 1997) 212 BR 66, 70. In such cases the landlord may proceed against the tenant to recover possession as if the lease were rejected. See §§14.14, 14.38, 14.43, 14.54.

EXAMPLE: Under a public housing lease, the trustee of the bankruptcy estate of a defaulting tenant could not assume the lease because the lease had terminated before the bankruptcy petition was filed. See Robinson v Chicago Hous. Auth. (In re Robinson) (Bankr ND Ill 1994) 169 BR 171, 174, aff'd (7th Cir 1995) 54 F3d 316.

Note that the court in Robinson construed the term "expired" in reference to 11 USC §365(a) to include a residential lease that was terminated under Illinois state law by a judgment of possession before the filing of the bankruptcy petition.

§14.42 F. Government Housing Cases

Whether a debtor is obligated to assume the lease to retain rights to possession in public or government-subsidized housing after the filing of a bankruptcy petition is the subject of conflicting reported opinions. Some courts have held that such a debtor is protected by 11 USC §525(a) and may retain the tenancy despite the failure of the trustee to assume the lease. See Stoltz v Brattleboro Hous. Auth. (In re Stoltz) (2d Cir 2002) 315 F3d 80 (debtor-tenant may retain lease if unpaid prepetition rent is discharged, even though lease is deemed rejected due to trustee's failure to assume); In re Day (Bankr ED Pa 1997) 208 BR 358, 363; In re Sudler (Bankr ED Pa 1987) 71 BR 780, 786. Furthermore, such a debtor may confirm a Chapter 13 plan, if proposed in good faith, without assuming the lease, unless the Chapter 13 petition was filed within 6 years of a Chapter 7 discharge; in that case, all rent owing after the discharge must be paid in the Chapter 13 reorganization. In re Day (Bankr ED Pa 1997) 208 BR 358, 374.

Another line of cases has declined to follow the Sudler rule altogether. See In re Valentin (Bankr ED Pa 2004) 309 BR 715 (disagreeing with Stoltz and granting relief from stay); In re Bacon (Bankr ED Pa 1997) 212 BR 66, 69 n4 (states in dictum that Chapter 7 debtor has no right to assume lease; it is only trustee's right); Housing Auth. v Collins (In re Collins) (Bankr WD Pa 1996) 199 BR 561 and authorities cited. V. NONRESIDENTIAL LEASE ASSUMPTION OR REJECTION

§14.43 A. Overview

The policy underlying the Bankruptcy Code provisions for assumption or rejection of commercial leases recognizes that a debtor's nonresidential leasehold may have value that can be realized for the benefit of the estate and creditors by allowing the lease to be assumed and assigned. Leases for desirable properties or that might be considered to be at below market rents can be among a debtor's most valuable assets. Similarly, the Bankruptcy Code provides debtors a valuable right to reject leases that require above market rent payments or that are otherwise burdensome to the estate. Because debtors do not always know whether a leasehold has value or not, the stakes in nonresidential assumption or rejection can be high. If the debtor rejects a lease prematurely, it may lose value that should be brought into the estate for the benefit of creditors. On the other hand, if a debtor assumes the lease, the obligations under it become postpetition administrative priority obligations of the estate. See, e.g., Nostas Assocs. v Costich (In re Klein Sleep Prods.) (2d Cir 1996) 78 F3d 18; In re Bergt (Bankr D Alaska 1999) 241 BR 17, 25. Under the BAPCPA, premature assumption now presents less risk to debtors, because the BAPCPA (see §14.1A) caps the landlord's administrative claim for rejection of an assumed lease at 2 years' rent. See 11 USC §503(b)(7), discussed in §14.52. See also discussion of rejection damages in §14.55.

For business planning, commercial landlords need to know whether their leases will be assumed. They also have a keen interest in ensuring that any prospective assignee will be committed to full performance of the lease obligations and not adversely affect the synergy of the landlord's commercial property. With 1984 amendments to 11 USC §365, the so-called "shopping center amendments," Congress sought to balance these competing interests, by imposing special rules on the timing of the decision to assume or reject, and new parameters on the debtor's rights to assume and assign commercial leases. Over time, however, the desire of bankruptcy courts to accommodate the needs of debtors and creditors resulted in a relaxation of the principles of the 1984 amendments. In the BAPCPA, Congress made changes to reinforce the principles of the 1984 amendments. Those changes include additional protections for landlords against the uncertainty of a prolonged period of time to assume or reject, clarification of the effect of a nonmonetary default on the tenant's right to assume the lease, and strengthening the protections against an assignment to a nonconforming use. See §§14.44, 14.45A, 14.48, 14.50, 14.52, 14.55.

B. Time Limits

§14.44 1. Decision or Extension Required in 120 Days

Under the BAPCPA (see §14.1A), after a bankruptcy petition has been filed, the debtor-tenant under a nonresidential real property lease must assume or reject the lease by the earlier of 120 days after the date of the order for relief (which is typically the day the petition was filed) or the date of entry of an order confirming a plan of reorganization. See 11 USC §365(d)(4)(A). Before the 120-day period expires, the bankruptcy court may extend the period an additional 90 days on motion "for cause." 11 USC §365(d)(4)(B). If the court grants the additional 90-day extension, however, it may not grant any further extension without the prior written consent of the landlord in each instance. 11 USC §365(d)(4)(B)(ii). Thus, the uncertainty for commercial landlords concerning whether a lease will be assumed or rejected is limited to a maximum of 210 days, unless the landlord consents to a further extension. If the debtor-tenant fails to assume the lease within the 120 days, or 210 days if an extension is granted, the lease is deemed rejected, and the debtor must immediately surrender possession to the landlord. 11 USC §365(d)(4)(A).

This represents a significant and beneficial change in the law for landlords in commercial tenant bankruptcies. Under the former version of §365(d)(4) (which still applies to cases filed before October 17, 2005), a debtor-tenant had to make its decision within 60 days, or such additional time as the court "for cause" would fix. Although the wording of the statute suggested that any extension must be "fixed" by the court "within such 60-day period," the Ninth Circuit interpreted this as only requiring that the motion be made within the 60-day period, even if it was heard or decided after the expiration of the 60 days. See Turgeon v Victoria Station, Inc. (In re Victoria Station, Inc.) (9th Cir 1988) 840 F2d 682, 684; Southwest Aircraft Servs., Inc. v City of Long Beach (In re Southwest Aircraft Servs., Inc.) (9th Cir 1987) 831 F2d 848, 850, cert denied (1988) 487 US 1206, 101 L Ed 2d 885, 108 S Ct 2848. While the time could be shortened or extended by motion of the debtor, it was held that such motion must be filed (but not necessarily heard) within the 60-day period. Southwest Aircraft Servs., Inc. v City of Long Beach, supra.

Outside the Ninth Circuit, courts criticized the view that §365(d)(4) only required that the motion be made within the initial period; they held that the statute unambiguously requires that any additional time be granted within the initial 60-day period. See, e.g., In re DCT, Inc. (Bankr ED Mich 2002) 283 BR 442, 444 (failure to have extension motion heard within 60 days resulted in lease being deemed rejected), citing DeBartolo Props. Mgmt., Inc. v Devan (In re Merry-Go-Round Enters.) (D Md 1996) 194 BR 46, 51, and many others. Likewise, in a case decided under the BAPCPA, a bankruptcy court held that any order extending the initial (120-day) deadline must be entered before the deadline expires, and the court has no discretion to extend the time after the date expires. In re Tubular Technols. LLC (Bankr D SC 2006) 362 BR 243; see also In re Monahan Ford Corp. (Bankr ED NY 2008) 390 BR 493 (attorney's failure to make timely motion for extension under §365(d)(4) was negligence as matter of law).

While the BAPCPA lengthened the initial assumption period to 120 days, and placed a firm limit of 210 days without landlord consent, it is unclear whether or to what extent bankruptcy courts in the Ninth Circuit will follow these authorities. By only authorizing an additional 90-day extension "prior to the expiration of the 120-day period," the BAPCPA suggests that the extension motion can only be granted before the 120 days expire. Yet the prior version of 11 USC §365(d)(4) also required the further extension to be granted within the original 60 days, and the Ninth Circuit interpreted this to mean that only the motion had to be made within that time, and the order granting it could come after the period had expired.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlord counsel faced with an extension motion set for hearing after the 120-day period has expired should argue that the motion cannot be granted, because the BAPCPA only allows an extension to be granted prior to the expiration of the 120-day period. The argument would be that the Ninth Circuit's decision in Victoria Station has been superseded, and the strict statutory construction applied in other jurisdictions should be applied in the Ninth Circuit. Similarly, because it is unclear whether Victoria Station would still apply to extension motions under the BAPCPA, counsel for debtor-tenants will be taking a risk in filing an extension motion too late to be heard before the 120-day period runs; an incorrect guess about whether a bankruptcy court will still follow the rule of Victoria Station could mean that a valuable lease is inadvertently deemed rejected.

§14.45 2. Debtor Must Remain Current on Postpetition Rent; Proration Versus Payment Date Approach

In the 1984 amendments to the Bankruptcy Code, Congress expressly required debtors to remain current on postpetition rent arising under nonresidential real property leases pending assumption or rejection, and this obligation is unchanged in the BAPCPA (defined in §14.1A). 11 USC §365(d)(3). Prepetition rent arrearages need not be paid currently. If a lease is rejected, they are claimed as a general unsecured claim (see §14.59); if a lease is assumed, they must be cured (see §14.52). Section 365(d)(3) expressly requires performance of lease obligations arising under a commercial lease from the date of the order for relief until such lease is assumed or rejected. See Feld v S & F Concession, Inc. (In re S & F Concession, Inc.) (Bankr ED Pa 1985) 55 BR 689. In most cases, the date of the "order for relief" is the date that the bankruptcy petition is filed, and hence that is the date the obligations under §365(d)(3) commence. If the bankruptcy case was commenced by an involuntary petition, or if it has been converted from one chapter to another, however, the order for relief will be after the petition date. See 11 USC §303(h) (entry of order for relief in involuntary cases).

Previously, courts generally interpreted 11 USC §365(d)(3) to require the debtor to pay prorated daily rent for each day from and after the date the petition is filed until a lease is rejected, even if the first of the month (when rent is normally due) occurred before the petition was filed. See, e.g., Feld v S & F Concession, Inc., supra; In re Galvan (Bankr SD Cal 1986) 57 BR 732, 734; Matter of Swanton Corp. (Bankr SD NY 1986) 58 BR 474, 475; Child World, Inc. v Campbell Mass. Trust (In re Child World, Inc.) (SD NY 1993) 161 BR 571, 576; In re Ernst Home Ctr. (Bankr WD Wash 1997) 209 BR 955, 964. The highest-level court to adopt the proration rule is the Seventh Circuit. In re Handy Andy Home Improvement Ctrs., Inc. (7th Cir 1998) 144 F3d 1125. In Handy Andy, Judge Posner (Chief Judge of the 7th Circuit Court) explained that the proration rule is more sensible, tracks the purpose of the statute by giving postpetition creditors their rightful due, and allocates expenses equitably among the pre- and postpetition periods, rather than on the happenstance of billing dates and the strategic moves of landlord and tenants. 144 F3d at 1128. Later cases from other jurisdictions agreed with Handy Andy's approach and prorated expenses. In re Furr's Supermarkets, Inc. (BAP 10th Cir 2002) 283 BR 60, 67, In re NETtel Corp. (Bankr DC 2002) 289 BR 486, 490, In re Phar-Mor, Inc. (Bankr ND Ohio 2003) 290 BR 319, 323 (proration is "majority rule").

Decisions from courts of appeals for the Sixth, Third, Fourth, and Eighth Circuits, however, rejected the proration rule, holding that whether an obligation is postpetition depends on the date the obligation is due. See In re Koenig Sporting Goods, Inc. (6th Cir 2000) 203 F3d 986 (lease rejected on second of month; landlord awarded postpetition rent for whole month); Centerpoint Props. v Montgomery Ward Holding Corp. (In re Montgomery Ward Holding Corp.) (3d Cir 2001) 268 F3d 205 (requiring debtor to make tax payments that related to prepetition period because they came due postpetition); In re Rose's Stores, Inc. (4th Cir 1998) 155 F3d 560 (affirming district court decision that rent due after filing petition was postpetition obligation, even though it related to prepetition period); Burival v Creditor Comm. (In re Burival) (BAP 8th Cir 2009) 406 BR 548 (reversing proration applied to crop land lease that required two payments per crop per year); and In re Appletree Markets, Inc. (Bankr SD Tex 1992) 139 BR 417, 420.

Later decisions applying this "payment date" or "billing date" approach have relied on the wording of §365(d)(3), finding that an obligation "arises" when it is due and finding it is inconsistent with the statute to prorate obligations which became due before or after the petition was filed, even if they relate to work done or services rendered during both periods. See, e.g., Urban Retail Props. v Loews Cineplex Entertainment (SD NY 2002) 2002 US Dist Lexis 6186, 2002 WL 535479 (landlord's capital improvement expense that came due postpetition required to be paid in full, although some work done prepetition); In re CCI Wireless, LLC (Bankr D Colo 2002) 279 BR 590; In re UAL Corp. (Bank ND Ill 2003) 291 BR 121 (calls payment date approach "majority view"). But see In re Pac-West Telecomm, Inc. (Bankr Del 2007) 377 BR 119 (utility bill, usually sent by landlord to tenant on monthly basis, but because of malfunctioning meter was billed postpetition in one lump sum for 18-month prepetition period, was not required to be paid under §365(d)(3)).

The split of authority on this issue makes it difficult to predict which approach may ultimately be applied. Both sides claim to follow the "majority" approach, and lower court decisions are not even consistent with cases decided by their own circuit court of appeals or within their own district. For example, the bankruptcy court in In re UAL applied the payment date approach notwithstanding that Handy Andy, a court of appeals opinion from the same circuit, applied proration. Similarly, the bankruptcy court in Phar-Mor applied proration, notwithstanding that in Koenig, the Sixth Circuit applied the payment date approach. While the Second Circuit has not yet decided the issue, in In re Stone Barn Manhattan LLC (Bankr SD NY 2008) 398 BR 359, the court recently held that landlords were entitled to prorated postpetition rent for the month in which the bankruptcy petition was filed, notwithstanding that the payment date approach was applied in Urban Retail Props. v Loews, supra.

The Ninth Circuit itself has not squarely addressed the proration versus billing date issue. Earlier opinions from bankruptcy courts within the Ninth Circuit applied proration. See, e.g., In re Nat'l Refractories & Minerals Corp. (Bankr ND Cal 2003) 297 BR 614, 619 (adopting proration and calling it "majority" approach); Sticka v Lambert (In re Lambert) (BAP 9th Cir 2002) 283 BR 16 (tax refund pertaining to year 2001 is properly prorated to number of days prepetition and postpetition). More recently, after extensive discussion of the split of authority on this issue, a bankruptcy court in Arizona held that the performance date determined whether an expense was required to be paid currently under §365(d)(3). See In re Designer Doors, Inc. (Bankr D Ariz 2008) 389 BR 832. Ironically, just as this bankruptcy court in the Ninth Circuit seems to be following a trend toward the payment date approach, courts in the east seem to be trending back to proration, at least as to prorated postpetition rent for the month in which the bankruptcy was filed (called "stub rent"). See, e.g., Goody's Family Clothing, Inc. v Mountaineer Prop. Co. II, LLC (In re Goody's Family Clothing, Inc.) (D Del 2009) 401 BR 656 (while Third Circuit in Centerpoint Props. v Montgomery Ward Holding Corp., supra, applied payment date approach for amounts due under §365(d)(3), district court affirmed bankruptcy court's allowing stub rent as administrative expense under §503(b)(3)); In re Stone Barn Manhattan LLC, supra (allowing stub rent claim under §365(d)(3), including lengthy analysis of the divergent views on the issue); In re Manis Lumber Co. (Bankr ND Ga, Feb. 6, 2009, No. 08-40398) 2009 Bankr Lexis 506 (agreeing with Stone Barn regarding proration).

Failure to stay current on postpetition lease obligations is grounds for deeming the lease rejected or, at a minimum, for an order for relief from stay. Buffkin v Goodson (In re Goodson) (Bankr SD Fla 1981) 12 BR 883; In re Future Growth Enters., Inc. (Bankr ED Pa 1986) 61 BR 469. It can provide cause for denying an extension of time to assume or reject a nonresidential real property lease. In re Perfectlite Co. (Bankr ND Ohio 1990) 116 BR 84, 87, citing Southwest Aircraft Servs., Inc. v City of Long Beach (In re Southwest Aircraft Servs., Inc.) (9th Cir 1987) 831 F2d 848. Postpetition defaults may also be a factor in determining whether a lease option may be exercised by a debtor-tenant. Compare Cannery Row Co. v Leisure Corp. (In re Leisure Corp.) (BAP 9th Cir 1999) 234 BR 916 with Coleman Oil Co. v Circle K Corp. (In re Circle K Corp.) (9th Cir 1997) 127 F3d 904.

§14.45A 3. Performance of Nonmonetary Obligations

Under 11 USC §365(d)(3), the tenant must perform "all the obligations" of a lease, except those specified in 11 USC §§365(b)(2), arising from and after the order for relief, until the lease is assumed or rejected. Since the phrase "all the obligations" is not limited to monetary obligations, courts have struggled to determine the impact of a nonmonetary default on rights to assume a lease. See, e.g., Worthington v GMC (In re Claremont Acquisition Corp.) (9th Cir 1997) 113 F3d 1029 (debtor's default under covenant requiring continuous operations was "historical fact" that could not be cured and rendered contract unassumable); Eagle Ins. Co. v Bankvest Capital Corp. (In re Bankvest Capital Corp.) (1st Cir 2004) 360 F3d 291 (disagreeing with Claremont); and Bank of America v Garcia (In re Garcia) (Bankr D Ariz 2002) 276 BR 627 (limiting Claremont). In the BAPCPA (see §14.1A), however, Congress added provisions that address this issue and resolve the controversy.

In the BAPCPA, Congress modified §365(b)(2)(D) to confirm that nonmonetary defaults need not be cured before assumption and will not preclude the debtor from assuming the lease; however, if the default is for failure to operate in accordance with a commercial lease, then the default must be cured at or after the time for assumption of the lease and the debtor must compensate the landlord for "pecuniary losses" resulting from the nonmonetary breach, as part of the cure obligation required to assume the lease. See 11 USC §365(b)(1)(A). Thus, a breach of a covenant to operate under a commercial lease will no longer result in losing the right to assume the lease, but a debtor must compensate the landlord for damages resulting from such a breach as part of the cure required to assume the lease.

PRACTICE TIP: The right to claim damages resulting from breach of an operating covenant still presents landlords with a dilemma of how to calculate such damages. Claims that cannot be quantified cannot be cured, and Congress provided no guidance on how landlords might calculate such claims. Landlords suffering from a bankrupt tenant whose store has gone dark in violation of an operating covenant should consider the impact of the dark store on foot traffic, percentage rent, and image of the shopping center, and may need expert testimony to quantify such damages for purposes of making a complete cure claim when the lease is being assumed.

Even though debtors must perform all obligations under the lease while deciding whether to assume or reject, many debtors desire to have store closing or "going out of business" ("GOB") sales during the pendency of the bankruptcy. While many commercial leases prohibit conducting such sales at leased premises, those provisions are generally unenforceable in bankruptcy because of the great need to provide debtors an efficient means to liquidate inventory. On the other hand, this need does not give debtors carte blanche to conduct GOB sales in violation of lease provisions. Instead, debtors must specifically move for permission to conduct GOB sales according to a proposed set of guidelines; bankruptcy courts have recognized the need for reasonable modifications to proposed GOB sale guidelines to protect landlord interests. See, e.g., In re Ames Dep't Stores, Inc. (Bankr SD NY 1992) 136 BR 357, 359. Thus, while debtor motions to conduct GOB sales are routinely granted, timely landlord objections often result in modifications to proposed guidelines for GOB sales, including limitations on signage, duration, and advertising for the sale, and providing procedures for termination of the sale and handling of personal property that may be abandoned. For a sample landlord objection to a proposed GOB sale, see §14.62A.

In addition, while courts have wrestled with the payment date or proration controversies concerning payment of rent under §365(d)(3), similar controversies exist concerning non-rent obligations due under a lease. In addition to following the payment date approach for postpetition rent under §365(d)(3), the bankruptcy court in In re Designer Doors, Inc. (Bankr D Ariz 2008) 389 BR 832 (see §14.45) held that the obligation to remove a mechanics' lien filed postpetition was not a §365(d)(3) obligation, because the obligation "arose" when the work was performed, which was prepetition. In In re BH S&B Holdings LLC (Bankr SD NY 2009) 401 BR 96, the court analyzed a similar lease obligation to keep the premises free of liens, agreed with the analysis from Designer Doors, but reached the opposite result because under New York law, a lien arises when it is filed rather than when the work is done. See also In re Plastech Engineered Prods., Inc. (Bankr ED Mich 2009) 402 BR 217 (holding that Koenig (see §14.45) does not require billing date approach for cost of repairs; administrative status depends on when costs accrued).

§14.46 4. Priority Claim for Postpetition Rent

Under 11 USC §503(b)(1), administrative expenses are required to be "actual and necessary" to the estate, and they are allowed only in their "reasonable value." See, e.g., Figone v Spear (In re GFS Creations, Inc.) (Bankr ND Cal 1999) 240 BR 43, 45 (reasonable rental value used when no lease specified rent due); In re Dant & Russell, Inc. (9th Cir 1988) 853 F2d 700, 707. Under 11 USC §365(d)(3), however, debtors must remain current on postpetition obligations, "notwithstanding section 503(b)(1)." Hence, the Ninth Circuit has held that 11 USC §365(d)(3) gives landlords an administrative claim for the full amount of lease rent due for the postpetition, prerejection period, regardless of the actual value conferred by the lease on the estate. See Towers v Chickering & Gregory (In re Pacific-Atlantic Trading Co.) (9th Cir 1994) 27 F3d 401.

Further, because §365(d)(3) applies "notwithstanding section 503(b)(1)," there has been much discussion in reported cases concerning whether §365(d)(3)'s mandate for "immediate payment of postpetition lease obligations" provides commercial landlords a de facto superpriority, requiring payment regardless of the administrative solvency of the estate. The common view is that §365(d)(3) requires immediate performance of all lease obligations. Towers v Chickering & Gregory (In re Pacific-Atlantic Trading Co.) (9th Cir 1994) 27 F3d 401, 404; In re Telesphere Communications, Inc. (Bankr ND Ill 1992), 148 BR 525, 530; In re Leisure Time Sports, Inc. (Bankr SD Cal 1995) 189 BR 511 (citing In re Telesphere). Under this interpretation, postpetition rent payments are immune from the usual tests applied to assertions of administrative priority and must be made regardless of the estate's solvency. See, e.g., Omni Partners, Ltd. Partnership v Pudgie's Dev. of NY, Inc. (In re Pudgie's Dev. of NY, Inc.) (Bankr SD NY 1999) 239 BR 688, 694, and In re Brennick (Bankr D Mass 1995) 178 BR 305, 307 (rent payments are immune from disgorgement). See also In re Pyxsys Corp. (Bankr D Mass 2003) 288 BR 309, 316 (landlord entitled to immediate payment for rent, but it is subject to disgorgement in event of later administrative insolvency).

Previously, some cases in the Ninth Circuit held that §365(d)(3) did not give landlords a superpriority right to immediate payment of postpetition rent, but only an administrative claim for it, payable like other administrative claims under 11 USC §503(b). See Great W. Sav. Bank v Orvco, Inc. (In re Orvco, Inc.) (BAP 9th Cir 1989) 95 BR 724; In re Daisy/Cadnetix, Inc. (Bankr ND Cal 1991) 126 BR 87 (citing Orvco). Later cases have expressed the view that Orvco was rejected by the Ninth Circuit in In re Pacific-Atlantic Trading Co., supra. See, e.g., In re Leisure Time Sports, supra; Cukierman v Uecker (In re Cukierman) (9th Cir 2001) 265 F3d 846 (on final appeal, Ninth Circuit did not address Orvco). Other courts noted, however, that because Pacific-Atlantic did not squarely overrule Orvco on the super-priority issue, a lessor is not entitled to immediate payment "unless it is shown that there are sufficient funds in the estate to pay the claim without jeopardizing full payment to all current and future administrative expense claimants." See, e.g., In re MS Freight Distrib. (Bankr WD Wash 1994) 172 BR 976, 979. The Ninth Circuit ultimately came to the same conclusion in Kir Temecula, Ltd. Partnership v LPM Corp. (In re LPM Corp.) (9th Cir 2002) 300 F3d 1134 (affirming bankruptcy court's refusal to grant relief from stay to allow landlord to collect postpetition rent payments when estate was administratively insolvent). See also In re Palace Quality Servs. Indus., Inc. (Bankr ED Mich 2002) 283 BR 868, 906 (rent payments due after conversion have administrative priority, but need not be paid immediately if estate's administrative solvency is uncertain).

Further, if a landlord's claim does not arise from postpetition, prerejection conduct, it will not have administrative priority. See, e.g., K-4, Inc. v Midway Engineered Wood Prods., Inc. (In re Treesource Indus.) (9th Cir 2004) 363 F3d 994 (because damages for breach of lease obligation to restore property arose on rejection, they were not administrative expense); In re Nat'l Refractories & Minerals Corp. (Bankr ND Cal 2003) 297 BR 614 (landlord's claim for postrejection rent applicable to period necessary for landlord to repair damage to premises would not be recoverable as administrative expense if debtor did not actually occupy premises during that time); In re Designer Doors, Inc. (Bankr D Ariz 2008) 389 BR 832 (obligation to remove postpetition mechanics' lien was not section 365(d)(3) obligation, because obligation "arose" prepetition). Note, however, the obligation to stay current on postpetition obligations under 11 USC §365(d)(3) applies only to debtor-tenants, not debtor-landlords. Einstein/Noah Bagel Corp. v Smith (In re BCE W., Ltd. Partnership) (9th Cir 2003) 319 F3d 1166 (denied administrative claim by subtenants for debtor-sublandlord's breach of sublease).

PRACTICE TIP: If a debtor-tenant fails to keep postpetition rent current, a request for payment of administrative expenses and, if necessary, a motion to compel payment should be made. See forms in §§14.60-14.61. In addition, if permitted under applicable state law, a landlord may claim attorney fees incurred in making the motion, which may be recoverable to compensate the landlord for "actual pecuniary loss" resulting from the debtor's failure to pay the postpetition rent as required under 11 USC §365(d)(3). See §14.51.

5. Extensions of Time and Grounds for Objection

§14.47 a. Extension for Cause

The standard governing a request for an extension of the initial 120-day period of time to assume or reject leases is vague, specifying only that "cause" be shown. See 11 USC §365(d)(4)(B). Before the BAPCPA (see §14.1A), when extensions could be granted repeatedly, the "cause" requirement was intended to protect commercial landlords "from delay and uncertainty by forcing a trustee or a debtor in possession to decide quickly whether to assume unexpired leases." Sea Harvest Corp. v Riviera Land Co. (9th Cir 1989) 868 F2d 1077, 1079. The seminal case on this issue of "cause" was In re Wedtech Corp. (Bankr SD NY 1987) 72 BR 464, 471. Wedtech held that debtors seeking an extension had the burden of persuasion to show why they needed more that the 60 days allowed by the former law, and landlords opposing a motion for an extension had to show how they would be prejudiced if the extension were granted (see §14.48).

The Wedtech decision cited a number of factors for courts to consider in determining whether cause existed to extend the deadline, such as whether the case was exceptionally complex and involved a large amount of leases, whether the leases were a primary asset of the estate or if they gave potential value and importance to a plan, and whether the debtor was current on the rent. As it played out, however, the risk of making a decision too soon, specifically the risk of assuming leases that may be burdensome or rejecting those that might be valuable to the estate, led bankruptcy courts to grant extensions virtually whenever debtors asked for them, rendering the standard of "cause" almost meaningless.

Congress addressed this issue in the BAPCPA. Although "cause" is still required to obtain a 90-day extension of the initial 120-day period, the meaning of "cause" is less important because bankruptcy courts no longer have discretion to grant repeated or open-ended extensions. Thus, under current law, even if cause is found to support a 90-day extension, no further extensions can be granted without the landlord's written consent. See 11 USC §365(d)(4)(B).

This change has had a dramatic impact on the course of retail bankruptcies after the BAPCPA went into effect. Debtors in large retail cases are finding that the maximum 210 days is not enough time for them to make the decisions they want to make, and they are developing new approaches for trying to meet the statutory requirement of obtaining landlord's written consent. In many cases, debtors are negotiating with landlords more directly, trying to persuade landlords that the extension benefits them by keeping the debtor in possession paying rent. Landlords with more valuable space may seek conditions on granting the written consent, such as requiring debtors to operate and pay rent for some portion of the extension, such as through the winter holiday season.

PRACTICE TIP: If the first extension has already been granted, landlord counsel should be alert for debtor attempts to obtain "written consent" from landlords who might not wish to provide such consent. In some cases, debtors are moving to approve "procedures" that would automatically extend the time based on a schedule debtor might file listing the landlord consents it claims to have, thus avoiding any scrutiny of whether or to what extent written consent was actually obtained. In other cases, debtors may seek to bypass counsel of record, seeking a signature from a property manager or leasing agent who may not be aware of the landlord's rights in bankruptcy. To avoid any inadvertent granting of "consent," landlord counsel should insist that all communications go through counsel and carefully review any motion to establish procedures for further extensions, so that a timely objection can be filed.

§14.48 b. Prejudice to Landlord; Stipulations to Extend

Under the former law, a common basis for asserting "prejudice" to a landlord in response to a debtor's showing of cause for an extension, was if the extension sought would be unreasonably long or indefinite. Indeed, the courts recognized that the 1984 amendments were intended to limit the amount of time in which debtors may hold landlords in limbo. See, e.g., Southwest Aircraft Servs., Inc. v City of Long Beach (In re Southwest Aircraft Servs., Inc.) (9th Cir 1987) 831 F2d 848, 850, cert denied (1988) 487 US 1206, 101 L Ed 2d 885, 108 S Ct 2848. Hence, open-ended extensions were generally disfavored. Chapman Inv. Assocs. v American Healthcare Mgmt. (In re American Healthcare Mgmt., Inc.) (5th Cir 1990) 900 F2d 827, 830; In re Musikahn Corp. (Bankr ED NY 1986) 57 BR 938, 942 n5.

Because the BAPCPA (see §14.1A) limits the period of uncertainty for commercial landlords to 210 days (unless they consent to a further extension), landlords need no longer worry about long or indefinite extensions, and will have less need to litigate the issue of "cause" for an extension. See 11 USC §365(d)(4). Nonetheless, landlords who would be prejudiced by even one 90-day extension of the 120-day period should make a showing of such prejudice in response to the debtor's extension motion. For instance, failure to pay postpetition rent, as required under 11 USC §365(d)(3) until the lease is assumed or rejected, can be grounds for denying an extension. See, e.g., In re Muir Training Technols., Inc. (Bankr SD Cal 1990) 120 BR 154, 160).

Specific facts may also show sufficient prejudice to warrant denial of an extension as to a particular lease. For instance, a landlord with another prospective tenant ready to lease the premises would be prejudiced if debtor's decision is delayed, the prospective tenant goes away, and the lease is later rejected, leaving the landlord with a costly vacancy it could have filled earlier. See form in §14.62 (objection to motion for extension of time to assume or reject lease).

Previously, when debtors could obtain multiple extensions of the time to assume or reject, stipulated compromises of the competing needs of the parties were common. For example, landlords objecting to long or open ended extensions often stipulated to a finite extension if the debtor would agree to a "lock-in" through the December holiday season. Under such a scenario, a debtor might obtain a stipulated extension through January 31, while agreeing that it cannot reject the lease, and must remain open, operating, and paying the rent through December 31. Because the period for decision can no longer be extended beyond 210 days without the landlord's consent (see 11 USC §365(d)(4)(B), cited in §§14.44, 14.47), it remains to be seen how much litigation over extensions will occur in cases governed by the BAPCPA. To the extent any extension is sought over the holiday shopping season, however, landlords are likely to continue to press for "lock-in" commitments.

PRACTICE TIP: Debtors often agree to "lock-in" stipulations for the holiday season because they do their best business during the holidays, and have no need of the right to reject the lease before the holidays have concluded, while landlords often seek stipulations to avoid the prospect of a rejected lease and a vacancy too late to relet the space for the key retail season.

C. Assumption and Assignment Procedures

§14.49 1. Motion Required

Unlike rejection of a lease, which may occur automatically if a debtor allows the 120 days (provided by amendment to 11 USC §365(d)(4) in the BAPCPA; see §§14.1A, 14.44) to run without taking action, a debtor must affirmatively move to assume, or assume and assign, a lease. Turgeon v Victoria Station, Inc. (In re Victoria Station, Inc.) (9th Cir 1988) 840 F2d 682. The standard applied to a debtor's motion (provided it meets statutory requirements) is the "business judgment" test, which generally defers to the debtor's reasonable business judgment that assumption would be beneficial to the estate. Orion Pictures Corp. v Showtime Networks, Inc. (In re Orion Pictures Corp.) (2d Cir 1993) 4 F3d 1095. Under 11 USC §365(b), however, a debtor will not be allowed to assume a lease unless the debtor:

- Cures, or provides adequate assurances of a prompt cure, of any prepetition default (other than a nonmonetary default that cannot be cured by performance at or after assignment; however, a breach of a covenant to operate must be cured at or after assignment, and the landlord's damages from such a breach must be paid as part of the cure; see §14.45A);
- Compensates the landlord for any actual pecuniary loss resulting from a such default; and
- Provides adequate assurances of future performance under the lease.

Similarly, a debtor may not assign a lease unless the debtor assumes the lease in accordance with the requirements of 11 USC §365(b) and provides adequate assurance of future performance by the assignee. 11 USC §365(f)(2).Thus, a debtor-tenant moving to assume or assign a lease must make an affirmative showing addressing these issues, and a landlord objecting to such a motion would challenge such a showing (see §14.50). Because of the need for retail tenants to move quickly on decisions once made, however, retail debtors often seek court approval of expedited procedures for assumption or rejection of leases, and bankruptcy courts routinely grant such motions. Once such procedures are in place, the time and opportunity for landlords to object to debtors' decisions about their leases are often considerably reduced.

PRACTICE TIP: Because of the current trend of approving expedited procedures, the need for vigilant monitoring and taking swift action to assert a landlord's rights is more acute than ever. For a sample objection to a proposed expedited procedures motion, see §14.62B.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.50 2. Grounds for Motion or Objection

As with a residential lease (see §14.36), when a trustee (or debtor in possession) assumes a commercial lease, all defaults must be cured and adequate assurances of future performance must be given. 11 USC §365(b)(1). In addition, however, with respect to assumption of a lease in a shopping center under 11 USC §365(b)(3), adequate assurance of future performance is specifically defined to mean that:

- The source of rent and financial condition of the proposed assignee and its guarantors, if any, shall be similar to the financial condition and operating performance of the debtor and its guarantors, if any, when the debtor became the lessee;
- The percentage rent due under the lease will not substantially decline;
- Assumption or assignment is subject to all the terms of the lease, including radius, use, location, and exclusivity provisions, and will not breach any such provisions; and
- Assumption of assignment will not disrupt the tenant mix or balance in the shopping center.

Because the requirements for assumption and assignment of nonresidential real property leases are so specific, the grounds for landlords to object to assumption or assignment are obviously that the statutory requirements are not met. Landlords may oppose a motion to assume the lease if the motion, e.g., does not provide for a complete and prompt cure of defaults, does not provide adequate assurances that the assignee will be able to pay the rent, or (in the case of a shopping center lease) does not show that the assignee will abide by all terms of the lease, including the use, radius, and other terms mentioned in §365(b)(3). In order to preserve the time and opportunity to analyze a proposed showing of adequate assurances before an assignment, landlords should carefully scrutinize any motion to approve expedited procedures for assumption of leases. See §§14.49 and 14.62B.

Although §365(b)(3) contains restrictions on the right to assign a shopping center lease, §365(f)(1) allows a court to approve an assignment despite language in a lease that would restrict or limit the tenant's right to assign. Formerly, it was unclear whether §365(f)(1) would allow a court to approve an assignment that violated §365(b)(3). Because bankruptcy courts are generally focused on realizing value from leases for the estate, some courts held that a use restriction that effectively prevented assignment could be viewed as an unlawful restriction on bankruptcy rights and disregarded under §365(f). See, e.g., In re Rickel Home Ctrs. (D Del 1998) 240 BR 826*,* appeal dismissed as moot (3d Cir 2000) 209 F3d 291. Other courts held that the specific provisions in §365(b)(3) trump the more general provision of §365(f), so an assignment in violation of a use restriction in a shopping center lease cannot be approved. Trak Auto. Corp. v West Town Ctr. (In re Trak Auto Corp.) (4th Cir 2004) 367 F3d 237 (reversing lower court decisions allowing the assignment). The BAPCPA resolved this debate and strengthened a landlord's ability to object to an assignment of the lease for a nonconforming use. The BAPCPA confirms that the restrictions on assignment in §365(b) prevail over the court's ability to disregard anti-assignment language in §365(f). The power to assign under §365(f) is now expressly limited by §365(b). See 11 USC §365(f)(1).

§14.51 3. Recovering Attorney Fees to Enforce Lease

For years, counsel representing landlords in bankruptcy proceedings were burdened with an anomalous rule that attorney fees incurred in bankruptcy litigation seeking to "enforce the contract" may be recoverable (if recoverable under substantive state law), but fees incurred litigating issues unique to the bankruptcy context were not. See, e.g., Collingwood Grains, Inc. v Coast Trading Co. (In re Coast Trading Co.) (9th Cir 1984) 744 F2d 686; Fobian v Western Farm Credit Bank (In re Fobian) (9th Cir 1991) 951 F2d 1149. This rule was problematic, because the only way to enforce contractual rights against a party in bankruptcy was in a bankruptcy proceeding. Yet under Fobian, fees incurred litigating bankruptcy issues were not recoverable. In 2007, a unanimous United States Supreme Court struck down the Fobian rule, holding that a claim for attorney fees could not be disallowed solely because the fees were incurred litigating bankruptcy issues. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. of Am. v Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2007) 549 US 443, 167 L Ed 2d 178, 127 S Ct 1199. The Court confirmed that a contract allowing recovery of attorney fees that is enforceable under substantive nonbankruptcy law is enforceable in a bankruptcy context unless the Bankruptcy Code expressly provides otherwise. The Court noted that under 11 USC §502(b), a claim is allowed except to the extent the claim implicates any of the nine exceptions in that statute, and since attorney fees are not included in such sections they could not be disallowed simply for arising in the bankruptcy context. The demise of the Fobian rule has had a material impact on litigants seeking fees in bankruptcy proceedings, as litigants have pressed for fees in a wide variety of contexts. In Qmect, Inc., v Burlingame Capital Partners II, LP (In re Qmect, Inc.) (Bankr ND Cal 2007) 368 BR 882, for instance, a bankruptcy court that had previously denied a motion for attorney fees to a successful defendant in an adversary proceeding, based on the Fobian rule, granted an amended motion to recover such fees based on the change in law represented by Travelers. In other cases, courts have denied fees anyway, finding the litigation was not the source of the state law right, or that the claim was not entitled to administrative status. See, e.g., In re Decker (Bankr D Mont 2008) 2008 Bankr Lexis 982 and In re Security Aviation, Inc. (Bankr D Alaska 2007) 374 BR 720.

In the landlord-tenant context, the source in federal law of a landlord's claim to attorney fees is 11 USC §365(b)(1), which requires compensation for "actual pecuniary loss" as part of a debtor-tenant's cure of defaults required for assumption of the lease. See, e.g., Andrew v KMR Corp. (In re Bullock) (BAP 9th Cir 1982) 17 BR 438. In Bullock, after a "considerable amount of legal maneuvering," the trustee was permitted to assume the lease. In connection with the assumption, the bankruptcy court awarded the landlord its fees and the bankruptcy appellate panel affirmed, stating that the purpose of 11 USC §365(b)(1)(B) is "to indemnify the other party to the contract or lease being assumed, against loss," and noted that the purpose of an attorney fee clause in a lease was the same. 17 BR at 439. Moreover, attorney fees and interest may be recoverable if necessary to enforce a landlord's right to receive postpetition amounts due under a lease and authorized by the lease. See Urban Retail Props. v Loews Cineplex Entertainment (SD NY 2002) 2002 US Dist Lexis 6186, 2002 WL 535479 (allowing fees and interest under §365(d)(3)); In re Entertainment, Inc. (Bankr ND Ill 1998) 223 BR 141, 151 (allowing fees and interest in connection with an assumed lease).

Some bankruptcy courts have relied on the reasoning in Bullock to award lessors their attorney fees as part of the obligations of 11 USC §365. See, e.g., In re Pacific Sea Farms, Inc. (Bankr D Haw 1991) 134 BR 11, 16; In re 2495 Broadway Supermarket, Inc. (Bankr SD NY 1989) 97 BR 765; In re Westworld Community Healthcare, Inc. (Bankr CD Cal 1989) 95 BR 730. In Westworld, the court devised a three-pronged test for approving attorney fees in connection with an assumed lease (95 BR at 734):

(1) Does the expense directly or indirectly relate to a default under the lease?

(2) If so, was the expense necessary to cure the default, adequately protect the landlord against future defaults, or indemnify the landlord against loss?

(3) If so, was the expense reasonable under the circumstances?

This test was cited and applied in In re Pacific Sea Farms, Inc., supra.

But the decision in Westworld was criticized by the bankruptcy appellate panel in Lacey v Westside Print Works, Inc. (In re Westside Print Works, Inc.) (BAP 9th Cir 1995) 180 BR 557 for indicating in dicta that fees might be allowed independent of a fees clause. Attorney fees may not be recoverable if the scope of the fees clause in the contract would not cover the actions taken by the landlord for which the fees were claimed, if they were incurred for handling bankruptcy matters unrelated to the curing of defaults or for prepetition matters, or if the lease is ultimately rejected. See, e.g., Abercrombie v Hayden Corp. (In re Abercrombie) (9th Cir 1998) 139 F3d 755, 759; In re Westside Print Works, Inc., supra; In re Pacific Arts Publ'g, Inc. (Bankr CD Cal 1996) 198 BR 319. Likewise, one court held that an attorney fees clause allowing recovery of fees to the prevailing party in a dispute arising from a breach of the lease is not broad enough to support recovery of fees on assumption of the lease in bankruptcy. In re I-Mind Educ. Sys., Inc. (Bankr ND Cal 2001) 269 BR 47. In addition, attorney fees resulting from a debtor's postpetition conduct are not recoverable as an administrative expense if they arise from litigation commenced prepetition on a prepetition contract. Decker v Kadjevich (In re Kadjevich) (9th Cir 2000) 220 F3d 1016. On the other hand, if the litigation is commenced by the trustee and fails, fundamental fairness may support an award of attorneys fees to the prevailing party, as an administrative expense. In re Good Taste, Inc. (Bankr D Alaska 2004) 317 BR 112.

In recent years, the Ninth Circuit has emphasized that the language of the attorney fees clause in the particular lease is a threshold issue in allowing administrative priority to attorney fees incurred in obtaining payment of administrative obligations. In Cukierman v Uecker (In re Cukierman) (9th Cir 2001) 265 F3d 846, the Ninth Circuit reversed the BAP's decision that attorney fees incurred in an administrative rent claim were entitled to administrative priority. The court noted that the fee clause in the contract—like many such clauses—applied to an action or proceeding in which there was a prevailing party, and the Ninth Circuit did not view the bankruptcy litigation as falling within that definition. In light of Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. of Am. v Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2007) 549 US 443, 167 L Ed 2d 178, 127 S Ct 1199, it is unclear to what extent the Ninth Circuit's strict interpretation of the attorney fee clause in Cukierman will still apply to a claim for attorney fees as an administrative expense under 11 USC §365(b), since "bankruptcy litigation" itself is no longer a bar to recovery of contractual attorney fees.

PRACTICE TIP: Although the usual language awarding attorney fees to the prevailing party in an action or proceeding is appropriate in the context of nonbankruptcy litigation, practitioners may want to modify their attorney fees clauses with additional language to apply in the event of the tenant's bankruptcy, such as specifically providing that attorney fees are due "on demand" when they are incurred in connection with asserting or protecting the landlord's rights under the lease in a bankruptcy proceeding of the tenant. Moreover, because the Fobian rule against recovering fees in "bankruptcy litigation" is gone, counsel should not hesitate to press for recovery of attorney fees when a lease is assumed or, in appropriate contexts, for claims litigation, as well as in state court litigation after a bankruptcy case has been dismissed. See e.g., Circle Star Assocs. v Liberate Technols. (2007) 147 CA4th 1203, 55 CR3d 232; Chinese Yellow Pages v Chinese Overseas Mktg. Serv. Corp. (2008) 170 CA4th 868, 88 CR3d 250 (reversing trial court's denial of postjudgment attorney fees incurred in connection with judgment debtor's bankruptcy, in light of rule in Travelers).

See §14.55 concerning the impact of the cap (on a landlord's claim for rejection damages) on the recoverability of attorney fees.

§14.52 4. Effect of Assumption and Assignment

As part of the assumption process, landlords are entitled to a cure of all existing defaults. 11 USC §365(b)(1). This means the debtor will typically submit proposed cure amounts in any motion to approve the assumption or assignment of a commercial lease.

WARNING: Landlord counsel should scrutinize such motions and confirm with clients the correct amount of the proposed cure payment, so that a landlord can timely object or submit the correct amount required to be paid as a cure in connection with the assumption.

After a lease has been assumed and assigned, the new assignee becomes the responsible tenant under the lease, and the debtor has no further liability under it. 11 USC §365(k). If the lease is assumed but not assigned, the obligations of the lease become administrative obligations of the estate, entitled to payment and priority under the Bankruptcy Code, even if a lease is later rejected when a reorganization fails. 11 USC §§503(b), 507; Nostas Assocs. v Costich (In re Klein Sleep Prods.) (2d Cir 1996) 78 F3d 18; Eliot v Four Seasons Props. (In re Frontier Props.) (9th Cir 1992) 979 F2d 1358, 1367. Note, however, that the BAPCPA (see §14.1A) limits a landlord's administrative claim for rejection of a lease after it has been assumed. 11 USC §503(b)(7).

Under the BAPCPA, the landlord's administrative claim for rejection of a previously assumed lease is capped at the sum of all monetary obligations due under the lease (except those arising from a failure to operate or a penalty rate or provision) for a period of 2 years from the later of rejection of the lease or the date of actual surrender of the premises. 11 USC §503(b)(7). No setoffs or reductions of this administrative claim amount are allowed except for amounts actually received or to be received from a third party. 11 USC §503(b)(7). While this amendment caps the administrative claim, the balance of the landlord's damages from the rejection would be a general unsecured claim, calculated in accordance with §502(b)(6). See 11 USC §503(b)(7). See also §14.55.

The administrative obligation of an assumed lease may be converted to a general unsecured claim if the debtor refiles a second Chapter 11 bankruptcy (sometimes referred to as a "Chapter 22"). See, e.g., In re Jartran, Inc. (7th Cir 1989) 886 F2d 859, 871; In re Jamesway Corp. (Bankr SD NY 1996) 202 BR 697, 702. If the reorganization plan has not been substantially consummated by a distribution to creditors, and the circumstances underlying the refiling were foreseeable, however, creditors may be able to get the second filing dismissed. In re Delaware Valley Broadcasters Ltd. Partnership (Bankr Del 1994) 166 BR 36. See also In re Brown (Bankr WD Va 2009) 399 BR 162 (dismissing Chapter 13 debtor's second filing while first case pending, as filed in bad faith). Note also that the BAPCPA includes substantial changes to the dismissal statutes in the Bankruptcy Code, expanding the availability of dismissal for repeat filings. See §14.32.

For further discussion of bankruptcy limitations on landlords' damage awards, as well as pre-bankruptcy workout agreements, see Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 47 (Cal CEB 1996).

D. Rejection of Lease

§14.53 1. Automatic Rejection or Noticed Motion

Unlike moving to assume a lease or for an extension of time to make the decision, a debtor may reject a lease by doing nothing at all. If a debtor does not make a motion to assume or to extend the time within 120 days after the petition is filed, or within the additional 90 days that the court may allow, the lease is "deemed rejected." 11 USC §365(d)(4). If the court grants a 90-day extension, the court may only grant a subsequent exception if the lessor gives prior written consent. 11 USC §365(d)(4)(B)(ii). If the debtor wishes to reject the lease sooner than the expiration date for assumption, the debtor must make a noticed motion. Because postpetition (administrative) rent must be paid through the date that the order approving the rejection is entered, regardless of whether the estate derives any benefit from the premises before the rejection, debtors typically make motions to reject leases in order to shorten the time period during which they must pay postpetition rent. Debtors have much latitude to reject executory contracts (including leases), and courts will apply a liberal business judgment rule to the decision. See e.g., Agarwal v Pomona Valley Med. Group, Inc. (In re Pomona Valley Med. Group, Inc.) (9th Cir 2007) 476 F3d 665, 670, citing many cases on this point.

Because landlords have an administrative claim for postpetition rent through the date of rejection, landlords and debtor-tenants have disagreed about whether a formal order approving the rejection is required before the debtor's administrative rent obligation ceases. If the lease has not been deemed rejected under 11 USC §365(d)(4), many courts have held that rejection is effective when the court enters an order approving the rejection. See, e.g., Thinking Machs. Corp. v Mellon Fin. Servs. Corp. (In re Thinking Machs. Corp.) (1st Cir 1995) 67 F3d 1021; Maroon v Four Star Pizza (In re Four Star Pizza) (Bankr WD Pa 1992) 135 BR 498, 501. See also WB, Ltd. v Tobago Bay Trading Co. (In re Tobago Bay Trading Co.) (Bankr ND Ga 1991) 142 BR 528, 532; In re Worths Stores Corp. (Bankr ED Mo 1991) 130 BR 531.

Some courts have held that court authorization is not required and that a rejection can be effective when a motion to reject is filed. See, e.g., In re Joseph C. Spiess Co. (Bankr ND Ill 1992) 145 BR 597, authorities allowing retroactive rejection, cited in Thinking Machs. Corp. v Mellon Fin. Servs. Corp., supra, and In re South Lincoln Med. Group (Bankr D Neb 2008) 2008 Bankr Lexis 468. Moreover, a bankruptcy court has equitable authority to allow rejection of a commercial lease retroactive to the date of the motion, when a debtor-tenant acts diligently and the landlord does nothing to secure rejection sooner. Pacific Shores Dev., LLC v At Home Corp. (In re At Home Corp.) (9th Cir 2004) 392 F3d 1064. In Pacific Shores, the tenant gave notice on the day of its petition of an intent to reject leases for premises it had never actually occupied, and sought an emergency hearing to allow rejection to be retroactive to the date of the motion. Although the landlord did not receive actual possession until the order was entered 11 days later, the Ninth Circuit affirmed the equitable authority of the bankruptcy court to allow the retroactive rejection on such facts. See also Duke Realty Ltd. Partnership v North Metro Mill Work Distribs., Inc. (In re Manis Lumber Co.) (Bankr ND Ga, Feb. 6, 2009, No. 08-40398) 2009 Bankr Lexis 506 (allowing equitable adjustment of effective date of rejection to 10 days after service of debtor's rejection motion). In recent years, debtors in larger cases have sought to avoid these issues by seeking bankruptcy court approval of streamlined procedures for assumption or rejection of leases. Through such procedures, debtors can avoid the time and expense of a formal motion to reject a lease, and have such rejection effective automatically after giving a notice and expiration of a specified period (often 10 days) without a landlord objection.

PRACTICE TIP: The result in Pacific Shores was heavily dependent on the unique facts of that case. In the usual context, with a tenant in possession, administrative rent should continue to accrue, and rejection should not be effective until possession is actually surrendered. To preserve the right to administrative rent for the full post-petition period until the landlord can effectively relet the premises, landlords should ask that any rejection not be effective until the later of the date of entry of the order or the date that possession is actually surrendered. See §14.54. Landlords should also insist that any rejection procedures order include a minimum amount of notice of a rejection and an outside date for exercising the right. See form at §14.62B.

§14.54 2. Requires Relinquishment of Possession

If a nonresidential lease is rejected, it may no longer be assumed and assigned, and hence the premises must immediately be surrendered to the landlord. 11 USC §365(d)(4); George v City of Morro Bay (In re George) (9th Cir 1999) 177 F3d 885; Anderson v Elm Inn, Inc. (In re Elm Inn, Inc.) (9th Cir 1991) 942 F2d 630, 633. See §14.31. If the property is not voluntarily vacated, a landlord may apply ex parte for an order directing the tenant to surrender the property and permitting a sheriff or marshal to execute the order for possession. See sample forms in §§14.68-14.69. Moreover, if personal property remains on the premises after the debtor's tenant has vacated and rejected the lease, the landlord has an administrative priority claim for the reasonable value of storage of the property until it is removed. See In re Pyxsys Corp. (Bankr D Mass 2003) 288 BR 309, 316.

Note, however, that if possession is not surrendered after rejection, and no action is taken to compel surrender, the rejection itself may not terminate the lease. See McLaughlin v Walnut Props., Inc. (2004) 119 CA4th 293, 14 CR3d 369. In McLaughlin, a ground lease was deemed rejected for failure to timely assume it in bankruptcy, but the ground tenant never formally surrendered possession, and the bankruptcy case was later dismissed. Noting a recent federal trend to require surrender along with rejection to terminate lease obligations, the court of appeal held that the rejection of the ground lease was only a breach and did not terminate a lease. 119 CA4th at 300. The court reasoned that to conclude otherwise "would allow unscrupulous lessees to evade their contractual obligations by the simple expediency of filing for bankruptcy, then dismissing their petition after the lease had been rejected." 119 CA4th at 301.

PRACTICE TIP: Although the McLaughlin decision concluded that lease rejection did not equal lease termination, its main concern was to preserve the landlord's right to contractual damages against the debtor-tenant when the case is dismissed after rejection. For this purpose, its rejection/termination analysis may be unnecessarily confusing. In bankruptcy, the landlord's claim for damages after a lease rejection would be capped according to the formula of 11 USC §502(b)(6). See §14.55. But if the bankruptcy is dismissed, the landlord can claim the full damages allowed by state law under CC §1951.2. Thus, the practical effect of the McLaughlin analysis appears to be that the landlord's obligation to mitigate its rental damages did not accrue until after the rejection, when the debtor clearly relinquished any interest in the property.

§14.54A 3. Effect on Rights Held by Nondebtor Parties

While rejection of a nonresidential lease requires the tenant to vacate and surrender possession, the impact on third parties is less obvious but can be very important. For instance, subtenants claiming a right of possession through a master tenant that has rejected a lease lose their right of possession if the master lease is rejected in bankruptcy. Syufy Enters. Ltd. Partnership v City of Oakland (2002) 104 CA4th 869, 128 CR2d 808. Unlike a right of possession, however, a right of first refusal or third party option rights attached to a lease may survive a debtor's rejection of the lease. Because landlords sometimes include specific property rights (e.g., to purchase equipment) that arise upon termination of the lease, they need to know whether a tenant can frustrate those rights by rejecting its other obligations under a lease. In the Ninth Circuit, a debtor is unlikely to be allowed to avoid an option by rejecting the underlying contract. In re Helms Constr. & Dev. Co. (9th Cir 1998) 139 F3d 702; In re Bergt (Bankr D Alaska 1999) 241 BR 17.

In Helms, the debtor sought to sell property free and clear of an option of the original seller to repurchase the property, claiming the option was an executory contract that it had rejected. 139 F3d at 703. Reciting the Countryman definition, the Ninth Circuit noted that an option is not executory unless further performance is required from both sides before the bankruptcy petition is filed. If an option has been paid for and requires no performance unless it is exercised, and has not been exercised when the petition is filed, it is not executory and thus cannot be rejected by the debtor. 139 F3d at 706. In Bergt, the bankruptcy court analyzed a right of first refusal, and went a step further than Helms in holding that even if the right were an executory contract, a debtor's rejection of it would not result in avoidance of any property interest held by a nondebtor party. 241 BR at 21. In Bergt, Judge Herbert Ross supported his conclusion with an exhaustive and scholarly analysis of the numerous divergent authorities on this question, which can provide great assistance to any court or counsel grappling with the issue in the future. A later decision from Delaware, however, rejected the Bergt decision and called it the "minority" view. See In re Kellstrom Indus., Inc. (Bankr D Del 2002) 286 BR 833 (creditor's right of first refusal to purchase debtor's property was executory contract that could be rejected).

§14.55 4. Landlord's Claim for Rejection Damages; Unsecured Claim

Rejection of a lease is deemed to be a breach of the lease occurring immediately before the petition was filed. 11 USC §365(g)(1). Consequently, a landlord's claim for damages resulting from the breach is treated as a general unsecured claim that is not entitled to administrative priority under 11 USC §507. (In contrast, the BAPCPA (see §14.1A) allows a landlord an administrative claim for rejection of a lease after it has been assumed. See 11 USC §503(b)(7), discussed in §§14.43, 14.52.)

The landlord can and should assert its unsecured claim for rejection damages by filing a proof of claim promptly after the rejection occurs and definitely before any claims bar date (see form in §14.59). Note that in Chapter 7 and 13 cases, the claims bar date is set by statute to be 90 days following the first date set for the meeting of creditors under 11 USC §341. See Fed R Bankr P 3002(c). In Chapter 11 cases, the claims bar date is set by the court, usually in response to the debtor's motion to set it on a particular date. Fed R Bankr P 3003(c)(3).

Under 11 USC §502(a), a proof of claim is deemed allowed unless a party in interest objects. Thus, filing a timely claim with sufficient documentation creates a presumption of the validity of the claim. Moreover, a bare objection to a claim, without substance, may be inadequate to overcome the presumption of a claim's validity, even if the claim lacks appropriate documentation. See Campbell v Verizon Wireless S-CA (In re Campbell) (BAP 9th Cir 2005) 336 BR 430. Moreover, recent amendments to the bankruptcy rules include new limitations on debtors' ability to make "omnibus" objections to invalidate large numbers of claims without making a showing as to each one. See Fed R Bankr P 3007. These changes make it more likely that a proper proof of claim, timely filed, will survive and that the claimant will receive its share in any eventual distribution, absent a specific objection by the debtor. If the debtor rebuts the presumption of validity with a meritorious objection, however, the claimant has the burden of proving the amount of the claim. See Litton Loan Servicing v Garvida (In re Garvida) (BAP 9th Cir 2006) 347 BR 697.

The amount of a landlord's unsecured claim for damages resulting from the rejection of a lease is limited in bankruptcy. Although the claim may include the full amount of any unpaid prepetition rents (11 USC §502(b)(6)(B)), the amount of a claim for damages resulting from the rejection of the lease is limited to the greater of (a) 1 year's rent or (b) 15 percent of the rent reserved for the remainder of the term of the lease, not to exceed 3 years' rent. 11 USC §502(b)(6)(A).

NOTE: While the cap can substantially reduce a tenant's exposure under a long-term lease, obtaining such a limit on damages is not, by itself, a legitimate basis for filing bankruptcy. If a solvent tenant files bankruptcy simply to cap the lease damages, the landlord should move to dismiss the case for bad faith. See §§14.32, 14.56.

This cap on damages that a landlord may claim in bankruptcy applies not only to a debtor-tenant, but also to a debtor-guarantor of lease obligations. Arden v Motel Partners (In re Arden) (9th Cir 1999) 176 F3d 1226. In order for charges that may not be designated as "rent" to be included in a claim for rejection damages, they must be equivalent to rent under the lease. Kuske v McSheridan (In re McSheridan) (BAP 9th Cir 1995) 184 BR 91, 99. McSheridan provides a three-part test for determining which charges are equivalent to rent and thus includable in the calculation of the claim, subject to the cap; they must be:

- Designated as "rent" or "additional rent" in the lease;
- Related to the value of the lease; and
- Fixed, regular, and periodic.

In re McSheridan, supra. In a shopping center lease, recurring charges for common area maintenance, insurance, and taxes typically meet the definition of "rent" and may be included in the claim. Note that the cap will apply to all damages resulting from lease termination. Hence, if the lease is terminated under state law before the bankruptcy, the damages limitation of 1 year or 15 percent under 11 USC §502(b)(6)(A) will apply to all amounts accruing from that prepetition termination date. In re Connectix Corp. (Bankr ND Cal 2007) 372 BR 488. This is true even if future damages attributable to lost rent for the full lease term were awarded to the landlord in a judgment before the bankruptcy. Mid-Wilshire Assocs. v Lomax (In re Lomax) (BAP 9th Cir 1996) 194 BR 862. Attorney fees recoverable under such an action, however, may be claimed in addition to the capped amount of rental damages allowed by §502(b)(6). See Wall Street Plaza, LLC v JSJF Corp. (In re JSJF Corp.) (BAP 9th Cir 2006) 344 BR 94, aff'd and remanded (9th Cir 2008) 2008 US App Lexis 10320.

On its face, 11 USC §502(b)(6) applies to cap damages "resulting from the termination of a lease of real property." Courts have reached divergent conclusions, however, concerning whether all of a landlord's potential damages against a debtor-tenant were subject to this statute. Previously, dicta in In re McSheridan, supra, stating that a debtor's rejection of a lease "results in the breach of each and every provision of the lease, including covenants," suggested that a landlord's claim was limited to whatever could be included in a claim under §502(b)(6). Kuske v McSheridan, 184 BR at 102. Under this analysis, if a landlord had damages from a tenant breach that did not meet the definition of "rent reserved" under McSheridan, not only could such damages not be included in the calculation of the claim allowed by §502(b)(6), but also they arguably could not be claimed at all. See e.g., In re Gantos, Inc. (Bankr WD Mich 1995) 181 BR 903, 907 (unused construction allowance cannot be claimed separately from §502(b)(6)); In re Pacific Arts Publ'g, Inc. (Bankr CD Cal 1996) 198 BR 319, 322 (sustaining objection based on §502(b)(6) to lessor's claim for attorney fees); In re Edwards Theatres Circuit, Inc. (Bankr CD Cal 2002) 281 BR 675 (disallowing landlord's damages claim for failure to construct theatre, without reaching scope of §502(b)(6)); New Valley Corp. v Corporate Prop. Assocs. (In re New Valley Corp.) 2000 US Dist Lexis 12663 (holding deferred maintenance claim is subject to §502(b)(6) and disallowing claim because it did not meet the definition of "rent reserved").

This view was rejected in 2006 in Wall Street Plaza, LLC v JSJF Corp., supra, which clarified McSheridan and criticized Pacific Arts Publ'g and Edwards Theatres Circuit, in confirming that a lessor may have an uncapped claim for something other than damages resulting from the termination of the lease. The court explained that "the 'landlord's cap' of §502(b)(6) may limit the amount of a lessor's claim, but is not a criterion for its allowance…." Wall Street Plaza, LLC, 344 BR at 101. Accordingly, the bankruptcy court's disallowance of a landlord's claim for attorney fees (in litigating a prepetition breach of lease case) because it is not for "rent" (as defined by McSheridan) is an error of law. In 2007, the Ninth Circuit confirmed that claims for damages not directly arising from the rejection of the lease are not limited by the §502(b)(6) cap, expressly overruling McSheridan to the extent that it suggests otherwise. Saddleback Valley Community Church v El Toro Materials Co. (In re El Toro Materials Co.) (9th Cir 2007) 504 F3d 978 (tort claims for waste, nuisance, and trespass arising from massive pile of dirt left on premises after rejection not subject to damages cap of §502(b)(6)).

These decisions are consistent with an established line of cases holding that certain kinds of damage claims that do not result from termination of the lease may be claimed by landlords in addition to their capped claims under §502(b)(6). See In re Atlantic Container Corp. (Bankr ND Ill 1991) 133 BR 980 (claim for intentional damage to property and failure to maintain); In re Farley (Bankr ND Ill 1992) 146 BR 739 (equipment taken); In re Bob's Sea Ray Boats, Inc. (Bankr D ND 1992) 143 BR 229 (property damages); In re Q-Masters, Inc. (Bankr SD Fla 1991) 135 BR 157 (property damages and vandalism); In re Best Prods. Co. (Bankr ED Va 1998) 229 BR 673 (allowing claim for prepetition deferred maintenance in addition to a §502(b)(6) claim). Moreover, claims based on nonrent breaches may also be entitled to administrative priority, depending on when they occurred. Compare, e.g., K-4, Inc. v Midway Engineered Wood Prods., Inc. (In re Treesource Indus.) (9th Cir 2004) 363 F3d 994 (debtor's obligation to restore premises to prelease condition was a prepetition claim, not entitled to administrative priority); In re Nat'l Refractories & Minerals Corp. (Bankr ND Cal 2003) 297 BR 614 (cleanup costs would be allowable and allocable as an administrative or prepetition claim, according to when events giving rise to them occurred). Of course, if the claimed damages are directly a result of the rejection breach, they will not be allowed in addition to the capped amount of rent allowable. In re Brown (Bankr ND Ohio 2008) 398 BR 215 (refitting costs resulting from rejection included in section 502(b)(6) capped claim).

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords with claims for damages resulting from breaches other than rejection or termination of the lease should claim them in addition to amounts allowable under 11 USC §502(b)(6). Such claims might include damages for failure to maintain, failure to keep the premises free of liens, failure to construct the premises, or attorney fees in litigating a prepetition breach of lease case. For a discussion regarding the recovery of attorney fees incurred in a bankruptcy proceeding, see §14.51.

Landlords with rent escalators in their leases should be aware that there is a split of authority concerning whether 15 percent "of the rent reserved" means the rent for the first 15 percent of the term remaining (a time calculation), or 15 percent of the total rent and charges to the end of the term (a money calculation). The former view, which seems to have the edge in California, generally reduces a landlord's claim by not allowing the landlord to include the value of escalated rent; the latter view allows landlords to claim a capped amount of escalated rental damages through the end of the lease term. Compare In re Connectix Corp. (Bankr ND Cal 2007) 372 BR 488 (time), In re Iron-Oak Supply Corp. (Bankr ED Cal 1994) 169 BR 414, 420 (time), and In re Allegheny Intern., Inc. (Bankr WD Pa 1991) 136 BR 396 (time) with In re Gantos, Inc. (Bankr WD Mich 1995) 176 BR 793 (money), In re Today's Woman of Florida, Inc. (Bankr MD Fla 1996) 195 BR 506 (money), and In re Bob's Sea Ray Boats, Inc. (Bankr D ND 1992) 143 BR 229 (money).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel preparing a claim should clearly explain the basis for the claim and attach all relevant supporting documents, including a narrative explanation of the facts underlying the claim, the calculation of the claim amount, spreadsheets itemizing the amounts included in the calculation, and a copy of the lease. By doing so, landlords can invoke the presumption that their claim is prima facie valid under Fed R Bankr P 3001(f) and reduce the chance of a later objection to the claim. It will also help landlord's counsel understand and defend the claim if an objection is made later. (Sometimes years can elapse between the filing date of a claim and the time the bankruptcy estate is actually deciding which claims to allow or challenge.)

Security deposits may only be applied to the capped amount of damages allowable on a landlord claim under §502(b)(6). See AMB Prop., LP v Official Creditors for the Estate of AB Liquidating Corp. (In re AB Liquidating Corp.) (9th Cir 2005) 416 F3d 961; Oldden v Tonto Realty Corp. (2d Cir 1944) 143 F2d 916. Landlords holding deposits in excess of this sum may be required to disgorge such funds to the bankruptcy estate. In re Pyxsys Corp. (Bankr D Mass 2003) 288 BR 309, 319. Accordingly, secured landlords should consider applying deposits promptly in the event of a tenant default. Note, however, that Oldden rule may not apply if the landlord never files a proof of claim. See discussion of In re Stonebridge Technols., Inc. (5th Cir 2005) 430 F3d 260 in §14.12.

For further discussion, see Wang & Bradbury, Commercial Lease Termination Damages—Calculation and Application of the Bankruptcy Cap, 26 Cal Real Prop J 33 (No. 2, 2008).

§14.56 VI. SANCTIONS AND ETHICAL CONSIDERATIONS

The good faith mandates and remedies found in Fed R Civ P 11 apply to bankruptcy proceedings. See Fed R Bankr P 9011. The rule requires a good faith, objective basis for signing and filing pleadings in federal court proceedings. When the court determines a bankruptcy petition is filed not to reorganize, but simply to delay an existing proceeding and frustrate a creditor, the case may be properly dismissed for bad faith, with sanctions ordered against the debtor. See Price v U.S. Trustee (In re Price) (9th Cir 2004) 353 F3d 1135 (dismissal of Chapter 7 appropriate if debtor could have paid debts through Chapter 13); Moneymaker v CoBen (In re Eisen) (9th Cir 1994) 31 F3d 1447. Likewise, a debtor's bad faith concealment of assets can work a forfeiture of the debtor' right to convert from Chapter 7 to Chapter 13. Marrama v Citizens Bank of Massachusetts (2007) 549 US 365, 166 L Ed 2d 956, 127 S Ct 1105. When an otherwise solvent debtor files bankruptcy for the purpose of obtaining the limit on a landlord's claims for damages for breach of lease provided by 11 USC §502(b)(6), the case may be properly dismissed. See NMSBPCSLDHB, LP v Integrated Telecom Express, Inc. (In re Integrated Telecom Express, Inc.) (3d Cir 2004) 384 F3d 108, In re Liberate Technols. (Bankr ND Cal 2004) 314 BR 206 214, and authorities cited in §14.32. Similarly, dismissal is more appropriate than conversion if more creditors would benefit from dismissal. Shulkin Hutton, Inc. v Treiger (In the Matter of Owens) (9th Cir 2008) 552 F3d 958. Alternatively, once the equitable jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is invoked, a debtor's desire for a jury trial may not constitute sufficient cause to approve the debtor's request for voluntary dismissal of the case, if opposed by creditors and the trustee. Hickman v Hana (In re Hickman) (BAP 9th Cir 2008) 384 BR 832. See also In re Jabarin (Bankr ED Pa 2008) 395 BR 330 (denying debtor's motion to dismiss to protect family assets as prejudicial to creditors).

Courts are willing to impose significant sanctions against debtor's counsel for bad faith bankruptcy petitions. See Miller v Cardinale (In re Deville) (9th Cir 2004) 361 F3d 539 (sanctions for delaying tactics affirmed); Dressler v Seeley (In re Silberkraus) (9th Cir 2003) 336 F3d 864 (affirming sanctions of $57,696 against counsel who filed frivolous bankruptcy petition two days before state court trial). Creditors cannot seek redress for a bad faith petition in state court; rather, they must employ the remedies available in the bankruptcy proceeding. See Choy v Redland Ins. Co. (2002) 103 CA4th 789, 127 CR2d 94. The Bankruptcy Court also has continuing jurisdiction, even after dismissal of the case, to annul the stay retroactively to validate actions that might otherwise be void because of a debtor's bad faith filing. Aheong v Mellon Mortgage Co. (In re Aheong) (BAP 9th Cir 2002) 276 BR 233.

If a tenant files a petition in bankruptcy solely to avoid eviction, the filing may constitute an abuse of the bankruptcy process, and may subject both the tenant and his or her attorney to sanctions. See National Home Equity Corp. v Villareal (In re Villareal) (Bankr CD Cal 1984) 46 BR 284 (filing for bankruptcy solely to avoid foreclosure when debtor has no unsecured debts subjects debtor and attorney to sanctions). Note that the BAPCPA (see §14.1A) contains a special exception to the automatic stay if a judgment for possession of residential rental property has been entered before the bankruptcy. See 11 USC §362(b)(22), discussed in §14.16. The court may also sanction an attorney if it finds a petition was unjustifiably filed to frustrate a pending eviction. Norwest Mortgage, Inc. v Waters (In re Waters) (Bankr ED Wis 1986) 60 BR 339, 343. Sanctions or an injunction to enjoin a person from acting as a bankruptcy petition preparer can be issued if there is appropriate notice and specific findings. Demos v Brown (In re Graves) (BAP 9th Cir 2002) 279 BR 266. Moreover, on requisite findings that debtor's counsel acted in bad faith and committed willful misconduct, the bankruptcy court has inherent authority to suspend a lawyer from practicing in that court. Price v Lehtinen (In the Matter of Lehtinen) (9th Cir 2009) 564 F3d 1052.

Note, however, that fee-shifting sanctions for violating Rule 9011 cannot be issued on the court's own motion without providing the 21-day safe harbor (opportunity to cure) required by Rule 9011(c)(1)(a). Chase v Kosmala (In re Loyd) (BAP 9th Cir 2003) 304 BR 372 (bankruptcy court's sanctions order reversed). Nor may a sanction of contempt be issued for violating the automatic stay or a discharge injunction without a finding of fact that the violation was made with actual knowledge of the injunction. ZiLog, Inc. v Corning (In re ZiLog, Inc.) (9th Cir 2006) 450 F3d 996.

Comment: This form was adopted by the Judicial Council for mandatory use in the state court action to advise other parties and the court of the filing of a bankruptcy. Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.650(a), the party that caused the stay must file a notice of the stay and attach a copy of the petition or other document that gives notice of the stay of the state court proceeding. Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.650(c), the notice must state whether the action is stayed as to all parties or only certain parties. If the latter, those parties must be identified in the notice. Under Rule 3.650(d), when the stay is vacated or terminated, the party who files the notice must immediately file and serve a notice of termination or modification of the stay. See also §§14.2, 14.5, 14.67A.

Copies: Original (file in bankruptcy court with original proof of service); copies for service (one for debtor, debtor's attorney, trustee of the bankruptcy estate, and United States trustee); office copy; client copy.

Comment: Some bankruptcy court districts have a court-prescribed form "request for notice" or "request for special notice." Always check if such a form exists and whether its use is mandatory. Any interested person may file a request for special notice with the bankruptcy court under Fed R Bankr P 2002. See §§14.2, 14.25. Most bankruptcy courts require notice of a motion for relief from the automatic stay (and other proceedings) to be served on all persons who have filed a request for special notice. See, e.g., ND Cal Local Bankr R 9013-3(b). The proof of service should be attached as a separate document at the end of the set of documents being served. The proof of service should identify the capacity and address of each person served. This proof of service form may be adapted for use with all other bankruptcy court forms in this chapter for which notice is required.

WARNING: Most bankruptcy courts have moved away from paper filing. For example, since January 1, 2005, the Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of California has required all documents to be electronically filed, requiring special training in order to obtain a login name and password. See Amended Operating Order, August 15, 2005, Bankruptcy Court ND Cal. In such courts, paper filings will not be accepted, unless the filer obtains an order allowing an exemption to the e-filing requirements. The Northern District has a form application for exemption which lists the limited circumstances in which an exemption is available, including "Infrequent-Filer." See Revised Application for Exemption from Electronic Filing, Bankruptcy Court ND Cal. Nonbankruptcy practitioners intending to file papers in the bankruptcy court should consult the local rules for filing requirements in the court in which the matter is pending. Court websites generally provide extensive details and forms for filing requirements and exemptions.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR PROOF OF CLAIM FORM

The instructions and definitions below are general explanations of the law. In certain circumstances, such as bankruptcy cases not filed voluntarily by the debtor, there may be exceptions to these general rules.

Items to be completed in Proof of Claim form

Court, Name of Debtor, and Case Number:
Fill in the federal judicial district where the bankruptcy case was filed (for example, Central District of California), the bankruptcy debtor's name, and the bankruptcy case number. If the creditor received a notice of the case from the bankruptcy court, all of this information is located at the top of the notice.

Creditor's Name and Address:
Fill in the name of the person or entity asserting a claim and the name and address of the person who should receive notices issued during the bankruptcy case. A separate space is provided for the payment address if it differs from the notice address. The creditor has a continuing obligation to keep the court informed of its current address. See Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure (FRBP) 2002(g).

1. Amount of Claim as of Date Case Filed:
State the total amount owed to the creditor on the date of the Bankruptcy filing. Follow the instructions concerning whether to complete items 4 and 5. Check the box if interest or other charges are included in the claim.

2. Basis for Claim:
State the type of debt or how it was incurred. Examples include goods sold, money loaned, services performed, personal injury/wrongful death, car loan, mortgage note, and credit card. If the claim is based on the delivery of health care goods or services, limit the disclosure of the goods or services so as to avoid embarrassment or the disclosure of confidential health care information. You may be required to provide additional disclosure if the trustee or another party in interest files an objection to your claim.

3. Last Four Digits of Any Number by Which Creditor Identifies Debtor:
State only the last four digits of the debtor's account or other number used by the creditor to identify the debtor.

3a. Debtor May Have Scheduled Account As:
Use this space to report a change in the creditor's name, a transferred claim, or any other information that clarifies a difference between this proof of claim and the claim as scheduled by the debtor.

4. Secured Claim:
Check the appropriate box and provide the requested information if the claim is fully or partially secured. Skip this section if the claim is entirely unsecured. (See DEFINITIONS, below.) State the type and the value of property that secures the claim, attach copies of lien documentation, and state annual interest rate and the amount past due on the claim as of the date of the bankruptcy filing.

5. Amount of Claim Entitled to Priority Under 11 U.S.C. §507(a).
If any portion of your claim falls in one or more of the listed categories, check the appropriate box(es) and state the amount entitled to priority. (See DEFINITIONS, below.) A claim may be partly priority and partly non-priority. For example, in some of the categories, the law limits the amount entitled to priority.

6. Credits:
An authorized signature on this proof of claim serves as an acknowledgment that when calculating the amount of the claim, the creditor gave the debtor credit for any payments received toward the debt.

7. Documents:
Attach to this proof of claim form redacted copies documenting the existence of the debt and of any lien securing the debt. You may also attach a summary. You must also attach copies of documents that evidence perfection of any security interest. You may also attach a summary. FRBP 3001(c) and (d). If the claim is based on the delivery of health care goods or services, see instruction 2. Do not send original documents, as attachments may be destroyed after scanning.

Date and Signature:
The person filing this proof of claim must sign and date it. FRBP 9011. If the claim is filed electronically, FRBP 5005(a)(2), authorizes courts to establish local rules specifying what constitutes a signature. Print the name and title, if any, of the creditor or other person authorized to file this claim. State the filer's address and telephone number if it differs from the address given on the top of the form for purposes of receiving notices. Attach a complete copy of any power of attorney. Criminal penalties apply for making a false statement on a proof of claim.

DEFINITIONS

Debtor
A debtor is the person, corporation, or other entity that has filed a bankruptcy case.

Creditor
A creditor is a person, corporation, or other entity owed a debt by the debtor that arose on or before the date of the bankruptcy filing. See 11 U.S.C. §101 (10)

Claim
A claim is the creditor's right to receive payment on a debt owed by the debtor that arose on the date of the bankruptcy filing. See 11 U.S.C. §101 (5). A claim may be secured or unsecured.

Proof of Claim
A proof of claim is a form used by the creditor to indicate the amount of the debt owed by the debtor on the date of the bankruptcy filing. The creditor must file the form with the clerk of the same bankruptcy court in which the bankruptcy case was filed.

Secured Claim Under 11 U.S.C. §506(a)
A secured claim is one backed by a lien on property of the debtor. The claim is secured so long as the creditor has the right to be paid from the property prior to other creditors. The amount of the secured claim cannot exceed the value of the property. Any amount owed to the creditor in excess of the value of the property is an unsecured claim. Examples of liens on property include a mortgage on real estate or a security interest in a car.

A lien may be voluntarily granted by a debtor or may be obtained through a court proceeding. In some states, a court judgment is a lien. A claim also may be secured if the creditor owes the debtor money (has a right to setoff).

Unsecured Claim
An unsecured claim is one that does not meet the requirements of a secured claim. A claim may be partly unsecured if the amount of the claim exceeds the value of the property on which the creditor has a lien.

Claim Entitled to Priority Under 11 U.S.C. §507(a)
Priority claims are certain categories of unsecured claims that are paid from the available money or property in a bankruptcy case before other unsecured claims.

Redacted
A document has been redacted when the person filing it has masked, edited out, or otherwise deleted, certain information. A creditor should redact and use only the last four digits of any social-security, individual's tax-identification, or financial-account number, all but the initials of a minor's name and only the year of any person's date of birth.

Evidence of Perfection
Evidence of perfection may include a mortgage, lien, certificate of title, financing statement, or other document showing that the lien has been filed or recorded.

INFORMATION

Acknowledgment of Filing of Claim
To receive acknowledgment of your filing, you may either enclose a stamped self-addressed envelope and a copy of this proof of claim or you may access the court's PACER system (www.pacer.psc.uscourts.gov) for a small fee to view your filed proof of claim.

Offers to Purchase a Claim
Certain entities are in the business of purchasing claims for an amount less than the face value of the claims. One or more of these entities may contact the creditor and offer to purchase the claim. Some of the written communications from these entities may easily be confused with official court documentation or communications from the debtor. These entities do not represent the bankruptcy court or the debtor. The creditor has no obligation to sell its claim. However, if the creditor decides to sell its claim, any transfer of such claim is subject to FRBP 3001(e), any applicable provisions of the Bankruptcy Code (11 U.S.C. § 101 et seq.), and any applicable orders of the bankruptcy court.

Copies: Original (file in bankruptcy court or with designated claims agent); copies for service, if required; office copy; client copy. Note that unlike other bankruptcy court filings, proofs of claim are not always required to be served. Counsel should consult the bar date order setting the procedure for filing and service of claims, or the local rules if there is no bar date order.

Comment: This form is available in all bankruptcy court clerks' offices, and should be used for general, unsecured claims; e.g., prepetition delinquent rent and damages resulting from lease rejection are each paid as general, unsecured claims. On the use of this form, see §§14.12, 14.28-14.29, 14.37, 14.40, 14.45, 14.55. On claim filing requirements, see Fed R Bankr P 3001-3022, and local bankruptcy court rules and regional United States Trustee Guidelines, since requirements may vary among regions, districts, and court departments (see, e.g., ND Cal Bankr Local R 1002-2, 3003-1, 3007-1). See also Warning at §14.58 regarding electronic filing requirements in some courts.

Re: _ _[caption and bankruptcy case number]_ _

Dear _ _[name of debtor's counsel]_ _:

To follow up on my conversations with your office of earlier this _ _[week/month]_ _, enclosed please find the landlord's request that the debtor immediately remit the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ due and owing for postpetition rent and charges for the period of _ _[date of default on postpetition lease obligations]_ _ through _ _[date premises vacated]_ _. The request includes an itemization of the total and supporting invoices.

Although you have admitted your client owes rent through _ _[date lease deemed rejected by operation of law]_ _, you have denied responsibility for rent after that date. My client, however, did not obtain possession until _ _[date premises vacated]_ _.

[If appropriate, add]

Your client changed the locks on the premises while it was in possession, and despite my best efforts to have the keys returned as soon as possible in order to restore my client to possession, the keys were not returned until _ _[date premises vacated]_ _.

[Continue]

Please check with your client about this, and I think you will conclude that your client in fact retained possession and control through _ _[date premises vacated]_ _. As you know, we had been seeking possession since directly after the bankruptcy was filed—we certainly wanted it as soon as possible.

In any event, unlike other types of administrative claims, postpetition rent is required to be paid timely, and no motion should be necessary. 11 USC §365(d)(3). Further, if we are forced to incur attorney fees to enforce our rights under the lease, we can collect those fees as an administrative claim as well. In re Narragansett Clothing Co. (Bankr D RI 1990) 119 BR 388. As I mentioned previously, however, I would like to handle this as economically as possible to avoid unnecessary expense to both sides.

Please let me know if the debtor will pay our postpetition rent claim without requiring us to file a motion and set it for hearing. If there is an informal way to resolve this issue, let me know what you suggest. I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Very truly yours,

Comment: This form should be used to request payment of administrative priority claims, such as postpetition rent. The formal request may be preceded by a letter request, a sample of which accompanies this form. MEMORANDUM

I. INTRODUCTION AND FACTS

This is a motion for allowance and payment of an administrative claim for both postpetition rent and the attorney fees incurred in collecting the rent claim. Movant is the owner of nonresidential real property located at _ _[address]_ _ (the Premises). On or about _ _[date]_ _, the Debtor entered into a written lease of the Premises (the Lease) for a term of _ _[e.g., five (5)]_ _ years. _ _[Refer to supporting evidence, e.g., paragraph number of declaration of party or party witness]_ _. A true and correct copy of the Lease is attached to the declaration of _ _[name]_ _ as Exhibit "A" and is hereby incorporated by reference.

On _ _[date]_ _, the Debtor filed its petition commencing the present case under Chapter 11.

On or about _ _[date]_ _, the Debtor filed a motion for an order authorizing rejection of the Lease. The Motion stated that the Debtor intended to vacate the Premises on _ _[date]_ _. Debtor, in fact, did vacate the Premises on that date. _ _[Refer to supporting evidence]_ _.

From the date of the bankruptcy filing until _ _[date]_ _, Debtor was in possession of and doing business at the Premises. Despite the provisions of 11 USC §365(d)(3), which required the Debtor, as a debtor in possession, to make timely payments of all amounts due under the Lease pending assumption or rejection, and despite written and oral requests that it do so, the Debtor failed to pay any rent or charges for the postpetition, prerejection period of _ _[date of default on postpetition lease obligations]_ _ through _ _[date premises vacated]_ _. _ _[Refer to supporting evidence]_ _. These charges are based on the testimony in _ _[refer to supporting evidence, e.g., paragraph 6, declaration of party witness]_ _, and are calculated as follows:

Rent	_ _[applicable dates]_ _	_ _[dollar amount]_ _
CAM	_ _[applicable dates]_ _	_ _[dollar amount]_ _
Taxes	_ _[applicable dates]_ _	_ _[dollar amount]_ _

The Lease also provides that Movant is entitled to reimbursement of attorney fees incurred in collecting unpaid rent and related charges. Movant expects to incur _ _[dollar amount]_ _ in attorney fees in bringing this Motion. _ _[Refer to supporting evidence]_ _. Thus, Movant has an administrative claim against the Debtor in the sum of _ _[insert sum of total rent claim and attorney fees]_ _.

II. ARGUMENT

Section 365(b)(3) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that a debtor-in-possession shall timely perform all obligations "arising from and after the order for relief under any unexpired lease of nonresidential real property, until such lease is assumed or rejected, notwithstanding section 503(b)(1) of this title." These provisions have not been changed by the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act.

In Towers v Chickering & Gregory (In re Pacific-Atlantic Trading Co.) (9th Cir 1994) 27 F3d 401, the Ninth Circuit concluded that the trustee's failure to pay rent under a nonresidential real estate lease for the period prior to the rejection of the lease created an allowed administrative claim, regardless of the actual value conferred by the lease on the estate. Thus, it is clear that Movant is entitled to an administrative claim for the full contractual rent due and unpaid for the postpetition, prerejection period of _ _[date of default on postpetition lease obligations]_ _ through _ _[date premises vacated]_ _, the date the Lease was rejected and possession was returned to the Movant. It is also clear that Movant is entitled to immediate payment of the outstanding postpetition Rent.

In addition, insofar as the Debtor failed to comply with section 365(d)(3) by refusing to pay postpetition rent for the subject period, Movant is entitled to an administrative claim for attorney fees incurred in bringing this Motion and immediate payment thereof. In re Pacific Sea Farms, Inc. (Bankr D Haw 1991) 134 BR 11; In re Narragansett Clothing Co. (Bankr D RI 1990) 119 BR 388, 391; In re Revco D.S., Inc. (Bankr ND Ohio 1989) 109 BR 264, 272.

Movant is thus entitled to allowance and payment of an administrative claim in the amount of _ _[enter sum of total rent claim and attorney fees]_ _, the amount due and unpaid under the terms of the Lease for the postpetition, prerejection period of _ _[date of default on postpetition lease obligations]_ _ through _ _[date premises vacated]_ _, including attorney fees incurred in bringing this Motion.

III. CONCLUSION

For all the foregoing reasons, Movant respectfully requests that its administrative claim for compensation for Debtor's postpetition use of the Premises be allowed in the amount of _ _[enter sum of total rent claim and attorney fees]_ _ and that the Court order the Debtor to pay said administrative claim immediately.

Comment: This is a motion for the payment of an administrative priority claim for postpetition rent that became due before rejection of the lease either by debtor's motion of by operation of law. Note that the landlord cannot claim prepetition rent as an administrative claim (see Comment in §14.59). On the use of this form, see §§14.39-14.40, 14.45-14.46. If the formal request and motion is preceded by a demand letter for payment of postpetition rent (see sample in §14.60), a copy of the letter attached to the declaration of counsel may give additional support to the request for attorney fees. See also Warning at §14.58 regarding electronic filing requirements in some courts.

TO THE HONORABLE _ _[Name]_ _, UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE, THE DEBTOR AND ITS COUNSEL OF RECORD, THE UNSECURED CREDITORS' COMMITTEE AND ITS COUNSEL OF RECORD, THE OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE, AND ALL OTHER PARTIES IN INTEREST:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that _ _[name of landlord]_ _ (Landlord), as creditor in this proceeding, and as owner of the premises located at _ _[address]_ _ (Premises), hereby objects to the debtor's motion for an additional 90-day extension of time to assume or reject its unexpired leases.

The objection is made on the grounds that no good cause has been shown for the extension sought, debtor has failed to meet its obligations to remain current on postpetition rent and charges owed to Landlord, and the extension requested materially prejudices Landlord. Accordingly, the motion should be denied and the debtor ordered to assume or reject the leases forthwith.

I. DEBTOR HAS NOT MET ITS BURDEN OF ESTABLISHING CAUSE FOR THE EXTENSION.

Bankruptcy Code §365(d)(4) limits a debtor's time to assume or reject its commercial leases to 120 days, unless the court "for cause" extends the time. The "cause" requirement is intended to protect commercial landlords "from delay and uncertainty by forcing a trustee or a debtor in possession to decide quickly whether to assume unexpired leases." Sea Harvest Corp. v Riviera Land Co. (9th Cir 1989) 868 F2d 1077, 1079. Moreover, the burden of persuasion on the issue of "cause" rests with the debtor. In re Wedtech Corp. (Bankr SD NY 1987) 72 BR 464, 471. No such cause is present here.

[Add one of the following alternatives]

[Alternative 1: No evidence supporting motion]

Despite the requirements of the Code, debtor's motion is unsupported by any evidence or declarations to justify prolonging the Landlord's uncertainty. This contravenes the policy of §365(d)(4). Absent an evidentiary showing of a need for more than the 120 days initially allowed under the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act, no extension should be granted.

[Alternative 2: Insufficient evidence supporting motion]

Debtor's motion is not supported by evidence that is sufficient to justify holding Landlord in a state of uncertainty. _ _[State authority showing what is required and how debtor failed to make the showing. Add additional facts or arguments relevant to the objection, e.g., debtor has a mere 10 leases in the Premises, not the volume of leases that might justify a modest extension. Nor does debtor disclose any efforts it has made to make its decisions in a timely fashion]_ _.

[Continue]

Granting an extension in these circumstances is contrary to the Code. Because debtor has failed to meet its burden of establishing cause for the extension requested, the motion should be denied.

[If appropriate, add]

II. NO EXTENSION SHOULD BE ALLOWED BECAUSE DEBTOR HAS FAILED TO REMAIN CURRENT ON ITS POSTPETITION OBLIGATIONS TO LANDLORD.

As a tenant of nonresidential real property, debtor is required to stay current on all postpetition lease obligations pending assumption or rejection. Bankruptcy Code §365(d)(3); Feld v S & F Concession, Inc. (In re S & F Concession, Inc.) (Bankr ED Pa 1985) 55 BR 689, 691. Failure to stay current on postpetition lease obligations is ground for deeming the lease rejected or, at a minimum, relief from stay. Buffkin v Goodson (In re Goodson) (Bankr SD Fla 1981) 12 BR 883, 885; In re Future Growth Enters., Inc. (Bankr ED Pa 1986) 61 BR 469. The debtor's obligations of §365(d)(3) have not changed under the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act.

Here, debtor has failed to meet this most basic requirement for maintaining its rights under its leases. It has failed to pay rent or lease charges due for the Premises for the period of _ _[date of default on postpetition lease obligations]_ _ through _ _[date payments resumed/the present date]_ _. _ _[Refer to supporting evidence, e.g., paragraph number of declaration of party or party witness]_ _. Indeed, debtor is now in arrears on its postpetition obligations to Landlord in the approximate sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _.

Debtor's failure to timely meet its postpetition obligations establishes that it is not entitled to the privilege of delaying assumption or rejection. Accordingly, its request for an extension of time as to its leases in the Premises should be denied. At a minimum, any extension should be conditioned on immediate cure of postpetition defaults, and full and timely compliance with §365(d)(3) in the future. In re Tandem Group, Inc. (Bankr CD Cal 1986) 60 BR 125, 127.

CONCLUSION

For all the foregoing reasons, Landlord respectfully submits that the debtor's motion should be denied. Alternatively, any extension should (1) be conditioned on immediate cure of postpetition defaults and (2) provide that the leases will be deemed rejected on failure to timely cure and perform postpetition obligations.

Comment: This form may be used to object to a debtor's (i.e., tenant's) request for an extension of time to assume or reject the lease under the BAPCPA, as well as for cases filed before October 17, 2005. Because the BAPCPA (defined in §14.1A) made significant changes to the law and procedure on extensions of time to assume or reject leases, landlords have less need to object to such requests. TO THE HONORABLE _ _[Name]_ _, UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE, THE DEBTOR AND ITS COUNSEL OF RECORD, THE UNSECURED CREDITORS' COMMITTEE AND ITS COUNSEL OF RECORD, THE OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE, AND ALL OTHER PARTIES IN INTEREST:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that _ _[name of landlord]_ _ (Landlord), as creditor in this proceeding, and as owner of the premises located at _ _[address]_ _ (Premises), hereby objects to the Motion of Debtors and Debtors in Possession for an Order Approving Auction Procedures, Agency Agreement, Store Closing Sales, and Related Relief (the "Motion"), as follows:

Landlords are the owners of the following shopping centers as that term is used in Bankruptcy Code §365(b)(3), at each of which Debtors lease nonresidential real property pursuant to certain unexpired leases: _ _[List centers and city/state of location]_ _. Each of Debtors' premises in Landlord's centers is a large store, with significant impact on the centers. Debtors' store at _ _[location]_ _ is _ _[number]_ _ square feet and at _ _[location]_ _ is _ _[number]_ _square feet.

In the Motion, Debtors seek permission to conduct store closing sales at Landlord's centers under a proposed Agency Agreement containing proposed Store Closing Guidelines (the "Guidelines") attached as Exhibit _ _[e.g., A]_ _. On _ _[date]_ _, Debtors filed a Notice of Selection of "Stalking Horse" in Connection with the proposed sale and a proposed Agency Agreement. Several aspects of the Guidelines and proposed Agency Agreement are unfair and violate Landlord's rights as follows:

(a) The proposed Agency Agreement requires Agent to pay per diem rent without ensuring that Landlord will be paid full rent and charges in advance on the first of the month.

(b) Sales are proposed to start on _ _[date]_ _ and end on _ _[date]_ _, but they may be extended by "mutual written agreement between the Agent and the Merchant" (Proposed Agency Agreement ¶6.1), thus allowing potentially unlimited duration.

(c) The Guidelines do not prohibit augmentation of inventory from other sources, allowing Debtors or Agent to unfairly prolong the sales and potentially convert the use of the premises to a liquidation facility.

(d) The Guidelines unfairly allow outside advertising and banners the length of the storefront at Landlord's centers, in violation of Landlord's rights, and unfairly discriminating against Landlord, whose centers are not "enclosed," where such signage would be prohibited.

(e) The Guidelines allow sign-walkers on Landlord's property, without any legal right or basis for doing so, and in violation of Landlord's rights.

(f) The Guidelines give Landlord inadequate notice of when the sale will end, depriving Landlord of the time needed to plan for closing of a large store.

The proposed order states that notice of the termination of the sale "shall not serve" as a rejection of the lease, leaving open the prospect that Debtors could retain possession of stores indefinitely after they are dark and closed.

Landlord objects to the Motion to the extent that it seeks to alter the timing and amount of rental payments required by Bankruptcy Code §365(d)(3). That section requires debtors to timely perform all post petition obligations under their nonresidential real property leases until such leases are assumed or rejected. The leases require rent to be paid on the first day of each month. Per diem rental payments are not authorized under Landlord's leases or the Bankruptcy Code. Thus, regardless of any possible reimbursement right from Agent, the order should be clear that Debtors are required to pay full monthly rent and charges in advance on the first of the month, until the effective date of any rejection of a lease.

Because Bankruptcy Code §365(d)(3) imposes an affirmative duty to perform all obligations under an unexpired lease, the statute necessarily includes use and signage restrictions. Thus, courts have recognized the need for reasonable modifications to a debtor's proposed guidelines to protect a landlord's legitimate interests. See, e.g., In re Ames Dep't Stores, Inc. (Bankr SD NY 1992) 136 BR 357, 359 (time, place, and manner restrictions for closing sales are appropriate to safeguard landlords' rights).

Indeed, restrictions on the manner in which sales may be conducted are critical to preserving the character and quality of the shopping center experience. Because such sales tarnish the image of a shopping center, and all the individual merchants at the center, they must be limited in duration. Likewise, allowing augmentation from other sources could unfairly prolong such sales, and potentially transform Landlord's properties from first-class retail centers into liquidation outlets. No authority supports allowing a debtor to convert a shopping center to a liquidation facility. Thus, any closing sales should be limited to 90 days, and the merchandise should be limited to the inventory at each store, with no augmentation from other stores or warehouses.

Similarly, banners and sign-walkers tarnish the image of a center and all of its tenants. By detracting from the overall appearance of a shopping center, such advertising makes the center a less desirable location for customers and tenants alike, reducing revenue for tenants and percentage rent for landlords. Nor is there any rational basis for Debtors' discrimination against Landlord, by allowing oversized banners and exterior signage in its centers that would be prohibited in enclosed malls. Landlord has the same interest as landlords of enclosed malls in preserving the appearance of its centers. Thus, any sales should be advertised in conformity with Landlord's lease provisions on signage and last for no longer than the duration of the sale. Under no circumstances should sign-walkers be allowed on Landlord's properties.

The Guidelines propose that Landlord get only three days notice of when a closing sale will end, but three days is an unreasonably short time for Landlord to plan for the closing of such large stores. Nor does any good cause support allowing Debtors to hold these large stores dark, indefinitely, while generating no income to the bankruptcy estate. Accordingly, all parties would benefit from requiring Debtors to assume or reject the lease of any dark store promptly after the conclusion of the closing sale.

The modifications to the Guidelines requested above are reasonable, provide genuine protection of Landlord's interests, and are not burdensome to Debtors or Agent. They simply reflect a common-sense accommodation of Landlord's legitimate concerns.

Landlord joins in any and all objections to the Motion filed by other landlords to the extent that such objections are consistent with this objection. Moreover, because the Auction will not be held until _ _[date]_ _, Landlord may not be privy to the proposed sale order or proposed final sale procedures until shortly before the hearing on _ _[date]_ _, if at all. Landlord therefore reserves the right to supplement this objection or present additional objections at the hearing on the Motion.

Accordingly, and for all of the foregoing reasons, Landlord respectfully requests that the Court deny the Motion to approve store closing sales, unless such procedures are modified to:

(1) Require payment of full rent and charges on the first day of the month as required under Landlord's leases;

(2) Limit sales to no longer than 90 days and prohibit augmentation of inventory;

(3) Limit banners and signage to be in compliance with leases and prohibit sign-walkers on Landlord's property;

(4) Require at least 30 days' notice of when a sale will end, and prompt assumption or rejection of any lease at the conclusion of its sale; and

(5) Grant such other and further relief as is just and proper.

TO THE HONORABLE _ _[Name]_ _, UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE, THE DEBTORS AND THEIR COUNSEL OF RECORD, THE UNSECURED CREDITORS' COMMITTEE AND ITS COUNSEL OF RECORD, THE OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES TRUSTEE, AND ALL OTHER PARTIES IN INTEREST:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that _ _[name of landlord]_ _ (Landlord), as creditor in this proceeding, and as owner of the premises located at _ _[address]_ _ (Premises), hereby objects to the Debtors' Motion for an Order Approving Expedited Procedures for the Rejection or Assumption and Assignment of Executory Contracts and Unexpired Leases (the "Motion"), as follows:

Landlord is the owner of the following shopping centers as that term is used in Bankruptcy Code §365(b)(3), at each of which Debtors have leased nonresidential real property under certain unexpired leases:

_ _[List centers and city/state of location]_ _.

The Motion proposes expedited procedures not only for rejection of leases, but also assumption and assignment of leases. In both respects, the proposed procedures unfairly prejudice Landlord's rights.

OBJECTIONS TO PROPOSED EXPEDITED PROCEDURES FOR REJECTION OF LEASES

Debtors' proposed procedure allows Debtors to give a rejection notice to counterparties to the lease being rejected, but does not include counsel for Landlord in the list of those to whom notice must be given. Since counsel are typically included in expedited notice procedures, there is no cause for not serving counsel, and substantial prejudice could result from notices possibly going astray at the Landlord entity. The procedures should be modified to require service on counsel for Landlord, as well as Landlord itself.

Under the proposed procedure, the rejection is not effective until the later of (1) 10 days after the notice is served or (2) when Debtors "unequivocally relinquish control" of the premises by turning over the keys. While 10 days is certainly the minimum notice that should be provided to Landlord, the proposed procedure unfairly leaves the effective date open-ended and at Debtors' complete discretion. Because the procedures do not require Debtors to surrender possession by any particular date, Debtors could give the notice simply as a way to preserve their options to reject on no notice at all. It would not be effective until they surrendered possession, and they could do that at any time after the 10 days passed. The net result is that the proposed rejection notice gives Landlord no meaningful notice of rejection.

Of course, a landlord cannot relet until a rejection is effective. If Landlord does not have a real notice with some idea of the effective date, it cannot attempt to mitigate damages from the rejection. This issue is of particular importance with the critical back-to-school and holiday seasons looming. Without some certainty concerning the effective date of rejection, Landlord will not be able to fill the vacancy in time for the next big seasons, when the majority of sales are made. Thus, the procedures should be modified to require Debtors to surrender possession not later than 30 days after the rejection notice is given.

In ¶ _ _[e.g., 3]_ _, Debtors propose to be allowed to abandon personal property, and then unfairly limit Landlord's remedies for resulting damages. Indeed, the right to assert a claim for costs associated with this abandonment is expressly limited to claims filed "in accordance" with procedures for filing a claim based on rejection of the lease under ¶ ____. Paragraph _____ imposes a short deadline for filing rejection claims to as little as 30 days after the effective date of rejection. Yet the Motion offers nothing to support imposing such a short deadline for rejection claims, let alone for claims arising from the abandonment of personal property. Imposing such a deadline on the latter is especially unfair, since Landlord is unlikely to be able to quantify such claims within 30 days after the effective date of rejection.

Accordingly, the rejection procedures should be modified to:

(1) Require Debtors to serve counsel for Landlord, as well as Landlord, with any notice;

(2) Require Debtors to surrender possession within 30 days after giving the rejection notice (since Debtors control the notice date, they should be required to surrender possession not later than the date they specify in the notice; if they do not, Landlord should be entitled to change the locks without further order);

(3) Eliminate the time limit on claims for costs resulting from abandoned property; and

(4) Change the bar date for rejection claims to be at least 60 days from the effective date of any rejection.

OBJECTIONS TO PROPOSED EXPEDITED PROCEDURES FOR ASSUMPTION AND ASSIGNMENT

A debtor's decision to assume and assign a lease is subject to many more statutory restrictions than the decision to reject a lease. Assumption and assignment cannot be approved unless the debtor:

(i) Cures or provides adequate assurance of a prompt cure of existing lease defaults;

(ii) Compensates, or provides adequate assurance of prompt compensation, for "actual pecuniary loss" resulting from default; and

(iii) Provides "adequate assurance of future performance."

11 USC §365(b)(1). When the lease is for shopping center space, "adequate assurance of future performance" is specifically defined to mean that:

(a) The source of rent and financial condition of the proposed assignee and its guarantors, if any, shall be similar to the financial condition and operating performance of the debtor and its guarantors, if any, when the debtor became the lessee.

(b) The percentage rent due under the lease will not substantially decline.

(c) Assumption or assignment is subject to all the terms of the lease, including radius, use, location, and exclusivity provisions, and will not breach any such provisions.

(d) Assumption of assignment will not disrupt the tenant mix or balance in the shopping center.

11 USC §365(b)(3).

Against these stringent statutory requirements, the proposed "expedited" procedures are inadequate and unfair to Landlord. Analysis of the statutory factors of adequate assurance can be complex. Landlord's leases with Debtors are for large spaces, over _ _[number]_ _ square feet each. As such, these premises play a much more important role in Landlord's centers than those of smaller retailers. These premises are often subject to a web of restrictions not only from the use clauses in each lease, but from master agreements that bind the development, and from existing exclusives provided to other tenants. Analysis of these issues can be complex; the consequences of error are serious. Allowing an assignment of such large premises that does not comply with the requirements of §365(b)(3) simply because a landlord did not have time to fully analyze the myriad of issues in less than 10 days could wreak havoc on the tenant mix at Landlord's properties and subject Landlord to substantial litigation risk for violating the many covenants that may restrict these premises. Ten days is simply not enough time to evaluate a transaction with such serious consequences.

The unfairly short 10-day notice is exacerbated by Debtors' failure to require that counsel for Landlord receive the complete packet of information concerning the proposed assignee, and by Debtors' proposal to start the 10 days running from service, instead of from receipt. As a matter of fundamental fairness, and to respect the rights of Landlord under the Code, Landlord and its counsel must be provided with complete information to meet all the requirements of §365(b)(3), and at least 30 days from receipt of such notice within which to respond to the proposed assumption and assignment. Nor should adequate assurance information be limited, as proposed in ¶_____ of the Motion, to whatever Debtors think §365(f) allows, because under current law since 2005, §365(f) is expressly subject to §365(b). Thus, the language in the proposed notice otherwise should be stricken.

Debtors' proposed procedures also unfairly prejudice Landlord's rights concerning cure amounts. Debtors propose to include a cure amount in their notice, but unfairly require Landlord to object to the cure amount within the same tight timeframe as it is provided to object to assumption and assignment itself. Ten days is simply not enough time to evaluate and respond to all these issues, nor is there any particular need for Debtors to impose this unfair deadline on Landlord, especially when their own deadlines have been extended.

The proposed procedures also conspicuously omit any requirement that Debtors promptly pay the cure amount. The proposed order approving any such assumption and assignment simply sets a cure amount and bars additional claims, but does not require payment of the cure amount at all, let alone require prompt payment, as required by the Code. Because the Code requires both a cure or prompt cure of defaults and a showing of adequate assurances of future performance, Debtors' procedures must be modified to require both, and to provide Landlord a fair and reasonable amount of time to respond to both.

Landlord joins in any and all objections to the Motion filed by other landlords to the extent that such objections are consistent with this objection.

Accordingly, and for all of the foregoing reasons, Landlord respectfully submits that the Motion be denied, or any relief be modified as set forth above, and for such further relief as the Court deems proper.

TO THE COURT, ALL PARTIES AND THEIR COUNSEL, THE TRUSTEES, AND THE DEBTOR:

1. PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that on the date and time set above, in Department _ _ of the United States Bankruptcy Court, located at _ _[address]_ _, the court will hold a hearing on the above-captioned motion by Movant _ _[name]_ _.

2. Movant _ _[name]_ _ hereby moves for an order from the court annulling, modifying, or terminating the automatic stay presently in effect in this case for the purpose of proceeding with an unlawful detainer action to recover possession of _ _[residential/commercial]_ _ real property, commonly known as _ _[address]_ _, California, from the debtor herein, pursuant to Title 11 United States Code §362(d), (e), and (f) on the grounds that: _ _[state applicable grounds, e.g., cause exists because debtor's right to occupancy of the property has been duly terminated in conformance with state law/debtor has no executory or other lease with the movant/debtor has defaulted in its obligations under the lease postpetition/trustee or debtor in possession failed to assume lease in a timely manner/debtor has no equity or ownership interest of any kind in the property and the property is not necessary to an effective reorganization]_ _. Movant requests that the order be effective immediately on entry of the order.

I. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS IN SUPPORT OF MOTIONS

3. At all relevant times, movant was the owner of real property commonly known as _ _[address]_ _, California, (the subject property).

4. At all relevant times, debtor _ _[name]_ _ was in possession of the subject property. Debtor filed a petition under Chapter _ _[7/11/13]_ _ of the Bankruptcy Code on _ _[date]_ _. _ _[Add additional relevant facts, e.g., that movant is informed and believes that at all relevant times debtor was an attorney licensed to practice law in California, filed bankruptcy petition in pro per, etc.]_ _.

[Add or modify paragraphs 5-11, as appropriate]

5. On or about _ _[date]_ _, movant entered into an _ _[oral/written]_ _ lease with the debtor for the subject property at a monthly rental of _ _[dollar amount]_ _. On or about _ _[date]_ _, debtor defaulted in the payment of rent. On _ _[date]_ _, movant served a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit on debtor. The notice expired without debtor either paying any rent or surrendering possession of the subject property. A true and correct copy of the notice is attached as Exhibit A to the unlawful detainer complaint attached hereto as Exhibit 1.

6. On _ _[date]_ _, movant filed an action in the _ _[Municipal/Superior]_ _ Court of the County of _ _[name]_ _, Action No. _ _[number]_ _, _ _[title of action]_ _, to recover possession of the subject property based on nonpayment of rent. A true and correct copy of the complaint is attached hereto as Exhibit 1.

7. After service of the complaint, debtor filed an answer to the complaint. A true and correct copy of the answer is attached hereto as Exhibit 2.

8. Debtor has failed to pay _ _[prepetition/postpetition]_ _ _ _[rent/rental value]_ _ for the period _ _[date]_ _ through _ _[date]_ _, and the lease was effectively terminated by the filing of the complaint for unlawful detainer.

9. _ _[Describe additional facts and list supporting documents showing additional grounds for relief, bad faith acts of the debtor, or equities of the case favoring the petition to terminate or modify automatic stay, such as trustee or debtor in possession failed to assume residential lease in a timely manner, other occasions in which debtor has been subject to eviction for nonpayment of rent and has filed a bankruptcy proceeding to avoid eviction, etc.]_ _.

10. Debtor has not filed a plan of reorganization.

11. Debtor is not in the armed forces of the United States or of any state, on active duty.

[Continue]

12. Based upon the foregoing, there is cause to terminate or modify the stay herein so as to allow movant to proceed with its state court action for recovery of possession of the subject property and to execute any resulting judgment for possession, including storage or disposal of abandoned personal property remaining on the subject property after repossession, according to state law.

13. Movant requests termination of the stay effective in this action, and any conversions to any other chapter of the United States Bankruptcy Code.

14. Movant requests that this court take judicial notice of the Exhibits hereto _ _[and of the bankruptcy cases described in paragraph 11 above]_ _.

15. The applicable relief from stay _ _[cover/information]_ _ sheet is attached hereto and made a part hereof.

II. ARGUMENTS IN SUPPORT OF MOTIONS

THE STAY SHOULD BE TERMINATED

In California, bankruptcy courts hold that once a lease is terminated such that the leasehold interest no longer exists, the reason for the stay no longer exists as to such property. Thus, the termination of a lease can be "cause" within the meaning of 11 USC §362(d) to terminate the stay. Vanderpark Props. v Buchbinder (In re Windmill Farms, Inc.) (9th Cir 1988) 841 F2d 1467, 1470; Kearny Mesa Crossroads v Acorn Invs. (In re Acorn Invs.) (Bankr SD Cal 1981) 8 BR 506, 509; In re Eureka S. R.R., Inc. (Bankr ND Cal 1987) 72 BR 813, 817.

[With respect to a commercial lease, add]

The filing of a complaint or unlawful detainer terminates the lease, preventing it from being an executory contract that can be assumed in bankruptcy. In re Escondido W. Travelodge (SD Cal 1985) 52 BR 376. Because the leasehold interest no longer exists, relief from stay should be granted to allow Movant to reclaim possession. In re Escondido W. Travelodge, 52 BR at 382.

CONCLUSION

Because of the existing unlawful detainer action, there is no leasehold interest to assume. This filing is simply a delaying tactic used by the debtor to remain in possession without any valid right to do so.

Based upon the foregoing, the stay should be terminated immediately to allow the eviction and other attendant remedies to proceed.

TO THE DEBTOR: SHOULD YOU FAIL TO APPEAR AND OPPOSE THE MOTION, THE RELIEF PRAYED FOR MAY BE GRANTED. THIS MAY INCLUDE THE RESUMPTION OF FORECLOSURE, EVICTION, OR OTHER PROCEEDINGS AGAINST YOU, RESULTING IN THE INVOLUNTARY SALE, LIQUIDATION, OR REPOSSESSION OF YOUR PROPERTY. IF YOU FILE AN OPPOSITION IN WRITING WITH THE CLERK, YOU MUST ALSO SERVE IT ON THE MOVING PARTY OR APPEAR AT THE HEARING PERSONALLY OR BY COUNSEL TO OPPOSE THE MOTION.

VERIFICATION

I, _ _[name]_ _, declare:

I am the moving party in the above-mentioned action.

I have read the foregoing MOTION TO TERMINATE OR MODIFY STAY and know the contents thereof. I declare that the facts stated therein are true of my own personal knowledge, and if called as a witness I could competently testify thereto.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States that the foregoing is true and correct and that this was executed at _ _[city and state]_ _ on the date below.

Copies: Original (file in bankruptcy court with original proof of service); copies for service (one for debtor, debtor's attorney, trustee of the bankruptcy estate, United States trustee, and other persons as required by rules); office copy; client copy. Note Warning at §14.58 regarding electronic filing requirements in some courts.

Comment: Unless a preprinted form is prescribed by local rule, a landlord who wishes to proceed with an eviction may use this form in any bankruptcy court jurisdiction in which the bankruptcy petition is filed by the tenant before a default or expiration of a lease. It is also required by most jurisdictions when the petition is filed while an unlawful detainer action is pending. See §§14.17, 14.23.

NOTE: This form was developed for use in bankruptcy cases filed before October 17, 2005, but has been modified for use in bankruptcy cases governed by the BAPCPA (see §14.1A). Because the BAPCPA contains two exceptions to the automatic stay for residential tenancies if a judgment for possession has been entered before the bankruptcy, or if the landlord seeks possession based on the tenant's endangering the property or illegally using controlled substances on the premises, a motion for relief from stay in such circumstances will no longer be necessary. See 11 USC §362(b)(22)-(23), discussed in §§14.16, 14.16B. Specific forms may be required where such exceptions apply. See §§14.71-14.74. The form may be modified for other grounds set forth as options in paragraph 2 of the notice of motion. Attorneys should always investigate prescribed formats, notice periods, and other requirements, as these may vary among the court departments. All districts require some form of cover (or information) sheet for the motion; these may be obtained from the respective clerks' offices. Some districts have mandatory, preprinted forms for stay relief motions. See §§14.65-14.66A. Additional supporting declarations may be necessary if one person does not have sufficient personal knowledge of all the facts recited in the motion.

NOTICE OF MOTION AND MOTION FOR RELIEF FROM THE AUTOMATIC STAY OR FOR ORDER CONFIRMING THAT THE AUTOMATIC STAY DOES NOT APPLY UNDER 11 U.S.C. § 362(l) (with supporting declarations)
(MOVANT: _____)
(Unlawful Detainer)

1. NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN to the Debtor(s), Debtor's(s') attorney, and other interested parties ("Responding Party") that on the above date and time and in the indicated courtroom, Movant in the above-captioned matter will move this Court for an Order granting relief from the automatic stay or for an order confirming that the automatic stay does not apply as to Debtor(s) and Debtor's(s') bankruptcy estate on the grounds set forth in the attached Motion.

   ☐ NOTICE IS ALSO GIVEN to the Trustee as an additional Responding Party, because the Motion relates to a nonresidential property.

2. Hearing Location: ☐ 255 East Temple Street, Los Angeles ☐ 411 West Fourth Street, Santa Ana ☐ 21041 Burbank Boulevard, Woodland Hills ☐ 1415 State Street, Santa Barbara ☐ 3420 Twelfth Street, Riverside

3. a. ☐ This Motion is being heard on REGULAR NOTICE pursuant to Local Bankruptcy Rule 9013-1. If you wish to oppose this Motion, you must file a written response to this Motion with the Bankruptcy Court and serve a copy of it upon the Movant's attorney (or upon Movant, if the Motion was filed by an unrepresented individual) at the address set forth above no less than 14 days before the above hearing and appear at the hearing of the Motion.

   b. ☐ This Motion is being heard on SHORTENED TIME. If you wish to oppose this Motion, you must appear at the hearing. Any written response or evidence must be filed and served:

   ☐ at the hearing ☐ at least _____ court days before the hearing.

   (1) ☐ A Motion for Order Shortening Time was not required (according to the calendaring procedures of the assigned judge).

   (2) ☐ A Motion for Order Shortening Time was filed per Local Bankruptcy Rule 9075-1(b) and was granted by the Court and such motion and order have been or are being served upon the debtor and trustee, if any.

   (3) ☐ A Motion for Order Shortening Time has been filed and remains pending. Once the Court has ruled on that Motion, you will be served with another notice or an order that will specify the date, time and place of the hearing on the attached Motion and the deadline for filing and serving a written opposition to the Motion.

Copies: Original (file in bankruptcy court with original proof of service); copies for service (one for debtor, debtor's attorney, trustee of the bankruptcy estate, United States trustee, and other persons as required by rules); office copy; client copy. Note Warning at §14.58 regarding electronic filing requirements in some courts.

Comment: This form is to be used when all interested parties can agree on the terms for vacating the property, after a judgment for possession has been entered in a state court unlawful detainer action against a defendant who thereafter files a bankruptcy petition. See §14.30. Local bankruptcy court (and individual court department) rules and policies should be consulted for applicable notice procedures or additional form requirements. The permission of the trustee should be obtained when it appears that the possessory interest in the subject property belongs to the bankruptcy estate, and not the debtor. See §§14.11, 14.14, 14.16-14.17. This form may be modified to allow for relief from stay by stipulation in other situations, such as when a tenant files bankruptcy before judgment in the unlawful detainer action, but before or after the tenancy legally terminates by the expiration of a 3-day or other termination notice.

1. Movant is an individual residing in _ _[city]_ _, California, and owns _ _[residential/commercial]_ _ real property at _ _[address]_ _, California. Debtors acquired possession of the property by virtue of a _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ entered into on _ _[date]_ _.

2. On _ _[date]_ _, debtor(s) filed a petition under Chapter _ _[7/11/13]_ _ in this court.

[Alternative 1: If tenancy NOT terminated before bankruptcy filed and lease is for commercial property]

3. Debtors, as a matter of law, cannot assume the nonresidential lease, which has _ _[expired/been terminated or rejected by operation of law/been breached after the filing of the petition herein, and the breach was not cured within the time prescribed for assumption of the lease]_ _.

[Alternative 2: If tenancy terminated before bankruptcy filed; residential or commercial tenancies]

3. Debtors' interest in the real property was effectively and finally terminated according to state law prior to the filing of the petition herein in that:

[Add one or more of the following, (a)-(f), if applicable, under Alternative 2]

a. On _ _[date]_ _, movant served a termination notice under state law. The notice expired on _ _[date]_ _. A true and correct copy of the Notice is attached hereto as Exhibit A and made a part hereof.

b. On _ _[date]_ _, movant commenced an unlawful detainer action against debtors in the _ _[Superior/Municipal]_ _ Court of California, County of _ _[name of county]_ _, Action No. _ _[number]_ _, entitled _ _[title of action]_ _. A true and correct copy of the Complaint is attached hereto as Exhibit _ _[letter/number]_ _ and made a part hereof.

c. After debtors appeared in the action, they entered into a stipulation for judgment which provided for forfeiture of the lease, termination of tenancy and possession, and stay of execution of the judgment until _ _[date]_ _. It also provided for periodic payments from the debtors to movant, which payments, if continuously made, would preserve the stay of execution. A true and correct copy of the stipulation is attached hereto as Exhibit _ _[letter/number]_ _ and made a part hereof. Subsequent to the formation of the stipulation, debtors defaulted in the payments.

d. On _ _[date]_ _, the state court entered a judgment for possession after _ _[a trial of the action/the debtors defaulted under the stipulation]_ _. A true and correct copy of the judgment is attached hereto as Exhibit _ _[letter/number]_ _ and made a part hereof.

e. On _ _[date]_ _, the state court issued a writ of execution on the judgment. A true and correct copy of the writ is attached hereto as Exhibit _ _[letter/number]_ _ and made a part hereof. The county sheriff scheduled an eviction for _ _[date]_ _.

f. The _ _[progress of the state court action/trial/enforcement of judgment/eviction]_ _ was stayed by the filing of the petition herein _ _[and the sheriff refused to evict debtors]_ _.

[Continue]

4. Movant has not been paid any rent since _ _[date]_ _.

5. Debtors have not paid nor offered to pay any rent postpetition _ _[except through the period ending _ _[date]_ _, after which rent payments ceased]_ _.

6. Debtors have no ownership interest or equity in the real property.

[Add if applicable, Chapter 11 or 13 cases]

7. The real property is not necessary to debtor's reorganization. Debtors have not filed a plan of reorganization.

[Continue]

THEREFORE, movant prays for relief from this court as follows:

(a) for an Order requiring the debtors immediately to surrender possession of the real property at _ _[address]_ _, California, to movant;

(b) for an Order that a writ of execution be issued, directing the United States Marshal or the County Sheriff to take possession of the premises from debtors forthwith and restore possession to movant;

(c) for an Order terminating the stay in this action immediately, to be effective notwithstanding any conversion of this action to another chapter under the Bankruptcy Code; and

(d) for such further and other relief as the court deems proper.

VERIFICATION

I, _ _[name]_ _, declare:

I am the _ _[movant/attorney for movant]_ _ in the above-mentioned action.

I have read the foregoing EX PARTE APPLICATION FOR SURRENDER OF REAL PROPERTY / TERMINATION OF STAY and know the contents thereof. I declare that the facts stated therein are true of my own personal knowledge, and if called as a witness I could competently testify thereto.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States that the foregoing is true and correct and that this was executed at _ _[city and state]_ _ on the date below.

Date: _ _ _ _ _ _

_ _[Typed name of declarant]_ _

Copies: Original (file in bankruptcy court with original proof of service); copies for service (one for debtor, debtor's attorney, trustee of the bankruptcy estate, United States trustee, and other persons as required by rules); office copy; client copy. Note Warning at §14.58 regarding electronic filing requirements in some courts.

Comment: This form is primarily used in a case involving a nonresidential lease deemed rejected under 11 USC §365(d)(4), or terminated by its own terms or by operation of law. See §§14.14, 14.31, 14.54. Note that the BAPCPA (see §14.1A) contains two exceptions to the automatic stay for residential tenancies if a judgment for possession has been entered before the bankruptcy or if the landlord seeks possession based on the tenant's endangering the property or illegally using controlled substances on it. See 11 USC §362(b)(22)-(23), discussed in §§14.16, 14.16B. Those provisions dictate a different set of procedures to complete the eviction, and some courts have developed special forms for use in such circumstances. See §§14.71-14.74. Some court departments require a preprinted form to be used in unlawful detainer-related applications. Attorneys are cautioned to always investigate local court practices and interpretation of the conflicting opinions in reported cases. Additional declarations may be necessary if one person does not have sufficient personal knowledge of all the facts recited in the application. This application is not intended to be an exact parallel to the supporting memorandum form in §14.70, which contains additional factual recitations that may be incorporated into this form, if needed.

1. FACTS.

Movant _ _[name]_ _ is _ _[specify type of entity, e.g., an individual, a partnership, or a corporation]_ _ _ _[who/that]_ _ owns _ _[residential/commercial]_ _ real property located at _ _[address of premises]_ _, California.

On _ _[date]_ _, the above-named debtor, who is a tenant of the property pursuant to a lease, filed a petition under Chapter _ _[7/11/13]_ _ in this Court. (Request for Judicial Notice (RFJN) No. 1). _ _[Add additional facts if appropriate, e.g., debtor filed petition in pro per; movant was not listed as a creditor; debtor's statement of executory contracts/leases did not list any executory contracts (RFJN No. _); debtor's mailing matrix did not include movant (RFJN No. _); the court's computerized mailing list did not include movant (RFJN No. _)]_ _.

[Add if applicable]

Debtor converted this matter from a Chapter _ _[7/11/13]_ _ to a Chapter _ _[7/11/13]_ _ case. A conversion Order was entered on _ _[date]_ _ (RFJN No. _).

[Continue]

More than 60 days have elapsed since the filing of the initial petition _ _[and the conversion to Chapter _ _[7/11/13]_ _]_ _. _ _[In the Chapter _ _[7/11/13]_ _ proceeding, debtor's statement of executory contracts/leases, executed on _ _[date]_ _*, again omitted any reference to the contract with movant (RFJN No. _)*]_ _. From a review of the file, it appears that this case is still pending.

[Add, if applicable, one or more of the following]

As of the date of preparation of this application, _ _[debtor/trustee has neither accepted nor formally rejected the lease/the lease has expired by its own terms/debtor/trustee cannot assume the lease because of a breach of the lease, as set forth below]_ _.

Movant has not received any notifications from this Court. Movant was never informed by the debtor that this case was pending. Nonetheless, debtor negotiated an extension, executed on _ _[date]_ _, extending the term of the lease to _ _[date]_ _. The negotiations and extension were not disclosed to or approved by the Court (Declaration of _ _[e.g., movant/movant's attorney]_ _, paragraphs _ _[number]_ _-_ _[number]_ _ and Exhibit _ _[letter/number]_ _).

During the months of _ _[dates]_ _ debtor was _ _[e.g., late in paying the rent/made only partial payments of rent]_ _ and had to be given numerous notices to comply with the lease.

On _ _[date]_ _, debtor breached the lease in that debtor _ _[e.g., completely defaulted in payment of rent/made improvements without movant's permission/committed waste, etc.]_ _.

On _ _[date]_ _, movant _ _[after proper notice]_ _ commenced an unlawful detainer action against debtor in the _ _[Municipal/Superior]_ _ Court of California, County of _ _ _ _ _, Action No. _ _ _ _ _, _ _[title of action]_ _ (Declaration of _ _[e.g., movant/movant's attorney]_ _, paragraphs _ _[number]_ _-_ _[number]_ _ and Exhibit _ _[letter/number]_ _; RFJN No. _).

On _ _[date]_ _, debtor filed and served in response to the unlawful detainer action _ _[e.g., a motion to quash service of summons/a demurrer/an answer to the complaint/a notice of the bankruptcy action]_ _. _ _[Debtor did not notify the Municipal Court of the bankruptcy action]_ _. (Declaration of _ _[e.g., movant/movant's attorney]_ _, paragraphs _ _[number]_ _-_ _[number]_ _ and Exhibit _ _[letter/number]_ _; RFJN No. _).

Subsequent to the commencement of the eviction action, debtor informally mentioned that movant would not be able to recover the property because he was "in bankruptcy." Thereafter, on _ _[date]_ _, movant sought bankruptcy counsel and requested a copy of the file in this case (Declaration of _ _[e.g., movant/movant's attorney]_ _, paragraphs _ _[number]_ _-_ _[number]_ _).

Movant has not been paid any rent for the period of _ _[date]_ _ to the present (Declaration of _ _[e.g., movant/movant's attorney]_ _, paragraphs _ _[number]_ _-_ _[number]_ _).

2. THIS COURT CAN ORDER IMMEDIATE TURNOVER OF THE PROPERTY.

A trustee in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy must assume an executory lease of residential real property within 60 days of the filing of the bankruptcy petition (11 USC §365(d)(1)), and in a bankruptcy under any chapter, must assume an executory lease of nonresidential real property within the same time period (11 USC §365(d)(4)). In the Ninth Circuit, a debtor in a Chapter 11 proceeding must also assume an executory lease of nonresidential real property within 60 days of the filing of the petition. 11 USC §365(d)(4); Turgeon v Victoria Station, Inc. (In re Victoria Station, Inc.) (9th Cir 1988) 840 F2d 682, 684.

[Add brief summary of appropriate facts, such as]

In this action, debtor never attempted to assume the lease with movant. Debtor also did not seek any extensions of time to assume the lease. In particular, there was a failure to assume the lease within _ _[specify number, e.g., 60 for residential/120 for nonresidential]_ _ days after the Chapter _ _[7/11/13]_ _ petition was filed on _ _[date]_ _, _ _[*and a failure to assume after the conversion of this case to a Chapter _ _[7/11/13]_ _ by an Order entered _ _[date]_ _]_ _.

[Continue]

The lease is now rejected or deemed rejected as a matter of law under 11 USC §365(d), _ _[whether the court applies the _ _[60-day/120-day]_ _ period to the initial filing or to the entry of the conversion order]_ _. Southwest Aircraft Servs., Inc. v City of Long Beach (In re Southwest Aircraft Servs., Inc.) (9th Cir 1987) 831 F2d 848, cert denied (1988) 487 US 1206, 101 L Ed 2d 885, 108 S Ct 2848.

Under 11 USC §365(d)(4), a debtor must immediately surrender possession of nonresidential real property to the lessor upon rejection of the lease. George v City of Morro Bay (In re George) (9th Cir 1999) 177 F3d 885; Anderson v Elm Inn, Inc. (In re Elm Inn, Inc.) (9th Cir 1991) 942 F2d 630, 633. Because the Debtor is now in possession of the real property, movant is entitled to relief in the form of a surrender order. Because the lease is terminated by operation of law, the debtor has no interest in the property of the estate; thus, there is no need for notice or hearing.

Under 11 USC §365(d)(3), a trustee or debtor must timely perform all obligations of the lease from the date the bankruptcy petition is filed until the lease is assumed or rejected, except those obligations specified in 11 USC §365(b)(2). See also 11 USC §365(b)(1). In this case, such performance was not given in that _ _[summarize facts from application showing default]_ _. Therefore the lease cannot be assumed under 11 USC §365(b)(1) in any event.

[Continue]

3. CONCLUSION.

Under the above authorities, the Court is respectfully requested to enter an Order compelling the debtor, as lessee, to surrender immediately possession of the above-described premises to movant. The Court is requested to authorize movant to apply to the United States Marshal or the County Sheriff to enforce the Court's proposed Order accompanying this Application. See Anderson v Elm Inn, Inc. (In re Elm Inn, Inc.) (9th Cir 1991) 942 F2d 630, 634. A bankruptcy court may grant this type of relief in fairness to a landlord leasing to a bankrupt party who continues to enjoy possession of the property without compensation to the landlord.

Comment: This form should accompany an application such as that in §14.68. This procedure is primarily used in a case involving a nonresidential lease deemed rejected under 11 USC §365(d)(4), or terminated by its own terms or by operation of law, in cases filed before October 17, 2005. See §§14.14, 14.31, 14.54. Bankruptcy cases filed on or after that date are governed by the BAPCPA (see §14.1A), which contains significant changes to the law concerning extensions of time to assume or reject leases. See §§14.47-14.48. Some court departments may require a preprinted form to be used in unlawful detainer related applications. Attorneys are cautioned to always investigate local court practices and interpretation of the conflicting opinions in reported cases. This brief is not intended to be an exact parallel to the application form in §14.68, which contains optional factual recitations that may be incorporated into this form, if needed.
