Contents

VOLUME 1

Preface
About the Authors
Acknowledgments
Selected Developments
Cutoff Dates and CEB Citation

1 Creating the Tenancy
E. Houston Touceda
Patricia H. Tirey

2 Fair Housing Considerations
James Morales
Michael Rawson
Susan M. Saylor
Paul E. Smith

3 Rights and Duties During Tenancy
Ted Kimball
Nancy C. Lenvin
Myron Moskovitz

4 Counseling the Landlord
Nancy C. Lenvin

5 Counseling the Tenant
Myron Moskovitz
Sonya Bekoff Molho

6 Mobilehome Tenancies
Ronald S. Javor
Terry R. Dowdall
Robert S. Coldren
Linda J. Lester

7 Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws
Nancy C. Lenvin
Myron Moskovitz

8 Terminating the Tenancy
Myron Moskovitz

VOLUME 2

9 Unlawful Detainer: Preparing and Filing the Action
Andrew J. Wiegel

10 Unlawful Detainer: Responsive Pleadings
Sonya Bekoff Molho

11 Unlawful Detainer: Pretrial Proceedings
Sonya Bekoff Molho
Andrew J. Wiegel

12 Unlawful Detainer: Trial
Sonya Bekoff Molho
Andrew J. Wiegel

13 Unlawful Detainer: Judgment and Posttrial Proceedings
Sonya Bekoff Molho

14 Tenant Bankruptcies: Relief From Stay, Rent Claims, and Lease Issues
Nancy J. Newman

Directory
Table of Statutes, Regulations, and Rules
Table of Cases
Table of References
Table of Forms
Index

© The Regents of the University of California

Preface

Landlord-tenant matters are a mainstay of many real estate practices and also come up frequently for general practitioners. The first edition of this book provided a much needed comprehensive resource on landlord-tenant practice in California. Focusing on residential tenancies, it guided attorneys for both landlords and tenants through every stage of the landlord-tenant relationship.

This new, fully updated edition builds on the strengths of the first edition, retaining its depth, broad scope, and focus on residential tenancies. The new edition also adds important enhancements:

- Organizational changes make the material more accessible;
- Practice tips have been added to every chapter;
- A new chapter on bankruptcy provides key forms for use in tenant bankruptcies; and
- The chapter on rent and eviction control has been completely revised to make it more practice-oriented and to fully explain recent California legislation affecting rent control.

CEB is extremely fortunate to have expert landlord-tenant practitioners as the authors of this new edition, drawn as equally as possible from the landlord and tenant bars. The authors are named on the Contents page; their biographical footnotes appear on the respective title pages of their chapters.

CEB wishes to give special thanks to Professor Myron Moskovitz of Golden Gate University School of Law, San Francisco, and Nancy C. Lenvin, formerly of Browning, Wholey & Lenvin, San Francisco. These respected attorneys wrote or coauthored several of the chapters in the new edition, bringing balance and expert practical advice (from both tenant and landlord perspectives) to key areas of landlord-tenant practice. Professor Moskovitz was also a key author of the first edition.

CEB also wishes to thank the many consultants who reviewed and commented on the manuscript. Their names are listed in the Acknowledgments.

The project supervisor for this book was Johanna Sherlin, Manager of the Real Property Group at CEB. Legal editing, including the addition of many practice tips, forms, and other original material, was performed primarily by CEB Attorney Bonnie C. Maly, with additional legal editing assistance from Craig H. Scott, Janis L. Blanchette and Dianne M. Millner.

Legal research assistance was provided by Marty Weis, assisted by Maria Borje-Bonkowski, Maria Donohoe, Bettina Fernandez, and Ken Marr. Esther Chin provided administrative assistance. The book was designed by Cheryl Ventimiglia. Robert W. Burke, Jr., prepared the index. Composition was performed by CEB's Electronic Publishing Staff.

February 2010 Update

CEB expresses its gratitude to the following authors for their continuing dedication to this publication and their contributions to this update: Professor Myron Moskovitz, Golden Gate University, San Francisco; Ronald S. Javor, Assistant Deputy Director, Division of Codes and Standards, California Department of Housing and Community Development, Sacramento; Diana D. Sam, Kaplan & Sam, San Francisco; Nancy C. Lenvin, Of Counsel, Zachs, Utrecht & Leadbetter, P.C., San Francisco; Sonya Bekoff Molho, Los Angeles; Nancy J. Newman, Hanson Bridgett LLP, San Francisco; Susan M. Saylor, Associate Chief Counsel, California Department of Fair Employment and Housing, Oakland; Paul E. Smith, Chief of Intake Branch, United States Housing and Urban Development Department, San Francisco; and Patricia H. Tirey, Kimball, Tirey & St. John, San Diego. Also, David J. Tubman, Jr., Tubman Law Group, Oakland, consulted on chapter 6.

CEB also acknowledges with appreciation those who have worked as authors or consultants on previous updates to this edition, including Michael Rawson, Public Interest Law Project, Oakland; Robert S. Coldren and Linda J. Lester, Hart, King & Coldren, Santa Ana; Mark J. Romeo, San Francisco; Andrew J. Wiegel, Wiegel & Fried, LLP, San Francisco; Clifford R. Horner, Horner & Singer, LLP, Walnut Creek; Zona Sage, Oakland; Jim Smith, Berkeley; Ted Kimball, Kimball, Tirey & St. John, San Diego; Marc Treitler, Conservice Utility Management and Billing, San Diego;

Rhonda L. Nelson, Severson & Werson, San Francisco; D. Patrick O'Laughlin, Kimball, Tirey & St. John, San Diego; Hon. Barry D. Kohn, Court Commissioner, Los Angeles Superior Court; Hon. Diana M. Wheatley, Judge, Los Angeles Superior Court; and Hon. Patricia H. Wong, Commissioner, Sacramento Superior Court.

CEB Attorney Editor Bonnie C. Maly and Legal Editors Philip Weverka and Kenneth Marr contributed to this title. Administrative support was provided by Kenya Denman and Nila Kanzaria. Elizabeth J. Asborno handled copyediting and production. Robert W. Burke updated the index. Composition was performed by CEB's Electronic Publishing staff.

John K. Chapin
Practice Group Manager
Real Property

Pamela J. Jester
Director

© The Regents of the University of California

About the Authors

MYRON MOSKOVITZ, who received his law degree in 1964 from Boalt Hall, Berkeley, coauthored chapters 3, 5, 7, and 8 and has continued to update those chapters annually for this edition. He served as law clerk to Justice Raymond E. Peters of the California Supreme Court, Chief Attorney of the National Housing Law Project, and Chairman of the State Commission of Housing & Community Development. He has been a Professor of Law at Golden Gate University in San Francisco for more than 30 years. He specializes in appellate practice and landlord-tenant law, areas in which he has written several books and has taught MCLE courses for attorneys.

NANCY C. LENVIN, B.A., 1966, Barnard College, Columbia University; J.D., 1969, Rutgers University, coauthored chapters 3, 7, and 9, wrote chapter 4, and has continued to update those chapters annually for this edition. Ms. Lenvin is Of Counsel with Zachs Utrecht & Leadbetter, P.C., San Francisco, and for many years was a partner with Browning, Wholey & Lenvin, San Francisco. She specializes in both commercial and residential landlord-tenant law and real property transactions and represents landlords before the San Francisco Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Board.

E. HOUSTON TOUCEDA, B.A., 1959, B.S., 1960, North Texas State University; L.L.B., 1981, San Fernando Valley College of Law, wrote chapter 1. Mr. Touceda is the owner of the Law Offices of E. Houston Touceda, Los Angeles.

PATRICIA H. TIREY, B.A., University of California, Santa Barbara; J.D., University of San Diego Law School, has worked as an annual update author on chapters 1 and 11-13 since 2001. Ms. Tirey is a senior partner with Kimball, Tirey & St. John, San Diego, specializing in unlawful detainer litigation and appeals, both residential and commercial. She has lectured extensively on the subject of landlord-tenant law to property owners and managers and to other attorneys in MCLE courses.

JAMES MORALES, B.A., 1976, University of California, Berkeley; J.D., 1979, University of Michigan, wrote chapter 2. Mr. Morales is the Director of the San Francisco Redevelopment Agency. At the time he wrote this chapter, he was a staff attorney with the National Center for Youth Law, San Francisco.

MICHAEL RAWSON, B.A., 1975, University of California, Santa Barbara; J.D., 1980, Golden Gate University School of Law, San Francisco, was the principal update author of chapter 2 from 1998 to 2007. Mr. Rawson is codirector of the Public Interest Law Project in Oakland. He contributed substantial new material to chapter 2 during the 1998 and 1999 book updates.

DIANA D. SAM, B.A., University of Hawaii at Manoa, Honolulu; J.D., 1997, Golden Gate University School of Law, San Francisco, began working as an update author on this book in 2008. Ms. Sam is a partner with Kaplan & Sam in San Francisco, representing primarily landlords.

SUSAN M. SAYLOR, B.A., 1987, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor; J.D., 1991, University of San Francisco, began working on the annual updates for chapter 2 in 2004. Ms. Saylor is Associate Chief Counsel with the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing in Oakland. That affiliation is provided for identification only; opinions in chapter 6 do not represent those of the Department or the State of California.

TED KIMBALL, B.S., 1973, Arizona State University; J.D., 1977, Western State University, coauthored chapter 3 and for several years (1998-2001) worked as an update author on this edition. Mr. Kimball is a senior partner with Kimball, Tirey & St. John, San Diego, specializing in landlord-tenant law (commercial and residential), leases and related document review, opinion letters, and fair housing counseling.

TERRY R. DOWDALL, B.A., 1973, J.D., 1977, University of Southern California, coauthored chapter 6. Mr. Dowdall is the owner of Dowdall Law Offices, Orange, California, specializing in representing mobilehome park owners.

RONALD S. JAVOR, B.A., 1967, University of California, Los Angeles; J.D., 1974, University of Southern California, coauthored chapter 6 and has been updating the chapter since 1998. Mr. Javor is Assistant Deputy Director, Division of Codes and Standards, with the California Department of Housing and Community Development in Sacramento. That affiliation is provided for identification only; opinions in chapter 6 do not represent those of the Department or the State of California.

ROBERT S. COLDREN, B.A., 1975, University of Denver; J.D., 1978, Loyola Law School, began working on the annual updates for chapter 6 in 2004. Mr. Coldren is a founding partner in Hart, King & Coldren, Santa Ana, specializing in business and real estate issues, including landlord and tenant disputes, homeowners association law, manufactured housing and RVs, and broker commission disputes. Mr. Coldren enjoys a special reputation in the area of property rights, land use, and regulatory "taking" issues.

LINDA J. LESTER, B.A., 1971, Loyola Marymount University; J.D., 1978, University of California, Berkeley, School of Law, began working on the annual updates for chapter 6 in 2004. Ms. Lester is an associate attorney in Hart, King & Coldren, Santa Ana, representing owners of manufactured housing parks in unlawful detainer actions, including evictions based on substantial annoyance, in bankruptcy court to obtain relief from stay to complete evictions, and in foreclosures and warehousemen's liens against mobilehomes. She has defended owners in suits based on violations of the Fair Housing Act.

ANDREW J. WIEGEL, B.A., 1972, M.A., 1974, California State University, San Francisco; J.D., 1977, Golden Gate University School of Law, San Francisco, coauthored chapters 9-13. Mr. Wiegel is Senior Litigator with Wiegel & Fried, San Francisco.

SONYA BEKOFF MOLHO, B.A., 1971, San Fernando Valley College (now California State University, Northridge); J.D., 1977, Loyola of Los Angeles Law School, has worked as an update author on chapters 7 and 10-13 since 2000. Ms. Molho is a sole practitioner in Los Angeles, representing primarily tenants.

NANCY J. NEWMAN, B.A., 1980, University of California, Santa Cruz; J.D., 1983, University of California, Davis, School of Law, began annually updating chapter 14 in 1999 and has substantially rewritten the chapter. Ms. Newman is a partner with Hanson Bridgett LLP, San Francisco, specializing in commercial and real estate litigation and representing landlords in tenant bankruptcies nationwide.

PAUL E. SMITH, B.A., University of California, Berkeley; J.D., Golden Gate University School of Law, San Francisco, is presently Chief of the Intake Branch, Office of Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity of the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), in San Francisco. Before working at HUD, he was the Fair Housing Program Director at Midpeninsula Citizens for Fair Housing, Assistant Director of Operation Sentinel, South County Director and Staff Attorney at Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity, and in private practice. The views expressed in his chapter 2 material are solely those of the author and do not necessarily represent the views of the Department of Housing and Urban Development or those of the United States Government.

© The Regents of the University of California

Acknowledgments

CEB gratefully acknowledges the contributions of the authors of the original edition of this book, whose work provided the foundation for this new edition. Many chapters in this new edition incorporate or adapt substantial portions of those original chapters. The authors of the original edition were:

Myron Moskovitz: Chapters 3 (Rights and Duties During Tenancy), 5 (Counseling the Residential Tenant), and 6 (Terminating the Tenancy)
Kenneth K. Baar: Chapter 9 (Rent Control)
Daniel D. Buchalter: Chapter 4 (Counseling the Residential Landlord)
Ronald S. Javor: Chapter 8 (Mobilehome Tenancies)
Richard C. Solomon: Chapter 7 (Unlawful Detainer Actions)
Benjamin L. Susman: Chapter 8 (Mobilehome Tenancies)
The Honorable W. James Ware: Chapter 2 (Selection of Tenants)

CEB also acknowledges the contributions of the attorneys who updated the original edition after its publication. They include Myron Moskovitz, Daniel D. Buchalter, and Clifford Fried.

Substantial portions of chapter 14 of this second edition are based on an earlier version of chapter 14, written in 1997 for this edition by Mark Romeo. Mr. Romeo is a sole practitioner specializing in bankruptcy law, Law Offices of Mark J. Romeo, San Francisco.

Finally, CEB is very grateful to each of the following attorneys, who served as consultants on this new edition. Their valuable insights and suggestions have made this new edition more practical, balanced, and reflective of California landlord-tenant practice.

Steven R. Kellman, San Diego
Ted Kimball, Kimball, Tirey & St. John, San Diego
Jay Koslofsky, Oakland
Edward C. McDonald, Jr., Campbell
Sonya Bekoff Molho, Los Angeles
Martha Lynn Passalaqua, Shapiro & Miles, Walnut Creek
Timothy P. Rumberger, Berkeley
Zona Sage, Oakland
Crystal C. Sims, Legal Aid Society Orange County, Santa Ana
Bruce E. Stanton, Crosby & Stanton, Saratoga
E. Houston Touceda, Los Angeles
Anthony Trendacosta, Santa Monica Rent Control Board, Santa Monica
Larry Weaver, Law Offices of Larry Weaver, Cerritos
The Honorable Diana M. Wheatley, Municipal Court, West Los Angeles Branch, Los Angeles.

© The Regents of the University of California

Selected Developments

February 2010 Update

Supreme Court Updates. A plaintiff alleging discrimination based on disability under CC §51 need not prove intent, because the American With Disabilities Act (ADA) requires only a showing that the plaintiff was denied full and equal accommodations as a result of the landlord's failure to accommodate the disability. Munson v Del Taco, Inc. (2009) 46 C4th 661, 94 CR3d 685. See §§2.21, 2.57, 5.7.

In Vasquez v State (2008) 45 C4th 243, 85 CR3d 466, the court clarified that prelitigation settlement negotiations are not required for non-catalyst theory for recovery of attorney fees under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA). See §2.56.

Under CCP §128.7, a self-representing attorney may not be awarded attorney fees incurred in the defense of meritless claims. Although court of appeal decisions allowed pro per attorneys to recover fees under a companion statute if the opposing party is guilty of bad faith tactics, the supreme court disapproved those rulings. Musaelian v Adams (2009) 45 C4th 512, 87 CR3d 475. See §13.28.

Fair Housing. Persons with disabilities may request reasonable accommodations in the screening process if necessary to afford them equal opportunity to use and enjoy a dwelling. 42 USC §3604(f)(3)(B); Govt C §12927; CC §54.1(b)(3)(B). See §2.4.

In Bell v Tower Mgmt. Servs. (D NJ, July 15, 2008, No. 07-CV-5305) 2008 US Dist Lexis 53514, the court held that a reasonable accommodations case must establish a nexus between accommodations being requested and the necessity for providing handicapped individuals equal opportunity in housing. See §2.9D.

In Sutton v Freedom Square, Ltd. (ED Mich, Oct. 15, 2008, No. 07-14897) 2008 US Dist Lexis 81600, a disabled rental applicant's request to waive minimum credit standard was unreasonable because it constituted a fundamental alteration of landlord's business. See §2.9D.

In Matter of Yancey v New York City Hous. Auth. (Sup Ct 2009) 879 NYS2d 661, the court reversed an eviction order on finding that a hearing officer mistakenly believed that termination of tenancy was required under facts and that the officer had no discretionary power. See §2.15.

Local ordinances and policies that deliberately target protected immigrant classes by prohibiting overcrowding in rental housing and by promoting excessive and selective enforcement of building codes against owners that rent to immigrants may be challenged under 11 USC §1983. Young Apartments v Town of Juniper (11th Cir 2008) 529 F3d 1027. See §2.19.

In Birke v Oakwood Worldwide (2009) 169 CA4th 1540, 87 CR3d 602, a complaint requesting abatement of public nuisance created by owner's failure to limit secondhand smoke in outdoor common areas survived demurrer, but the court rejected a cause of action under ADA because no specific facts were alleged concerning whether tenant requested reasonable accommodations. See §2.21.

In November 2009, as urgency legislation, California amended the Unruh Act to provide that any discount or other benefit offered or given to a consumer or prospective consumer by a business because the consumer "has suffered the loss or reduction of employment or reduction of wages" will not be considered arbitrary discrimination under the Act. CC §51.13. See §§2.21, 2.58.

The ADA Amendments Act (ADAAA) was passed in 2008, clarifying Congressional intent on existing language in the ADA and specifically overturning Sutton v United Air Lines, Inc. (1999) 527 US 471, 144 L Ed 2d 450, 119 S Ct 2139, and Toyota v Williams (2002) 534 US 184, 151 L Ed 2d 615, 122 S Ct 681. Pub L 110-325, §2, 122 Stat 3553. Provisions include a bright line standard of 6 months to determine whether the duration of a condition renders it permanent; working is considered a major life activity (MLA) along with a number of additional MLAs; conditions that are episodic or in remission are to be considered as if active; and disability status is to be construed without regard to the effects of mitigating measures such as medication, equipment, or prosthetics (but not eyeglasses or contact lenses). 42 USC §12102; Kemppainen v Aransas County Detention Ctr. (SD Tex, June 23, 2009, No. C-08-194) 2009 US Dist Lexis 52914). See §2.26.

A facility for the severely disabled violated the Fair Housing Act (FHA) when it drew distinctions on the basis of severity of disability in admissions eligibility criteria. LaFlamme v New Horizons, Inc. (D Conn 2009) 605 F Supp 2d 378. See §2.26.

In Bell v Tower Mgmt. Servs. (D NJ, July 15, 2008, No. 07-CV-5305) 2008 US Dist Lexis 53514, a disabled plaintiff who asked for waiver of a minimum income requirement as an accommodation to her disability, which she alleged caused her to have a lower income, was denied relief because she did not allege she "was capable of meeting the minimum income requirements prior to becoming disabled." See §2.27A.

A new section has been added that discusses the obligations of landlords in providing accessibility to persons with disabilities. Addressed in particular are design and construction requirements under the FHA, federally assisted programs subject to §504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, state or local government activities subject to the ADA accessible features requirements, residential facilities covered by the ADA public accommodations accessibility requirements, and the removal of accessible features. See §2.27C.

In Birke v Oakwood Worldwide (2009) 169 CA4th 1540, 1552, 87 CR3d 602, the ADA does not apply to privately owned houses, apartments, and condominiums. However, the public accommodations accessibility requirements in Title III of the ADA (42 USC §12182(a)) may apply to privately owned facilities. In Nicholls v Holiday Panay Marina, LP (2009) 173 CA4th 966, 93 CR3d 309, a tenant who rented a boat slip in a private marina was allowed to sue the owners for lack of wheelchair accessibility, and in Kuchmas v Towson Univ. (D Md 2008) 553 F Supp 2d 556, a resident in a private dormitory on public school property was allowed to bring an ADA action for lack of wheelchair accessibility. See §2.27C.

While the FHA does not require a dwelling to be made available to a disabled person who presents a danger to the person or property of third parties, Boston Hous. Auth. v Bridgewaters (Mass 2009) 898 NE2d 848 reaffirmed that this safe harbor applies only if an interactive process indicates that a reasonable accommodation is not possible. See §2.27D.

Under the ADA, the trial court has the discretion to award attorney fees to a prevailing plaintiff, unless special circumstances make the award unjust. Jankey v Poop Deck (9th Cir 2008) 537 F3d 1122. A prevailing defendant, however, is not entitled to fees unless the plaintiff's action was frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation. See Hubbard v SoBreck, LLC (9th Cir 2009) 554 F3d 742. See §2.27E.

New sections have been added that discuss gender discrimination, including sexual harassment and domestic violence discrimination. In Jackson v Chicago Hous. Auth. (ND Ill, Oct. 7, 2008, No. 08 CV 278) 2008 US Dist Lexis 79655, the court held that a claim under the FHA was stated in allegations that the landlord placed a man across the hall from a female tenant whom that man had previously sexually assaulted. In Robinson v Cincinnati Metro. Hous. Auth. (SD Ohio, Apr. 29, 2008, No. 1:08-CV-238) 2008 US Dist Lexis 39523, the court held that the denial of a transfer request by a public housing tenant who was a victim of domestic violence did not violate the FHA. See §§2.27F-2.27H.

In Reycraft v Lee (2009) 177 CA4th 1211, 99 CR3d 746, a disabled guest of a mobilehome park tenant, who did not register as a guest or pay the guest fee and did not suffer any actual damages, did not have standing to state a claim under CC §54.3 for monetary damages due to lack of compliance with accessibility guidelines under the Disabled Persons Act (CC §§54-55.2). See §§2.67, 5.7.

Habitability and Premises Liability. In Birke v Oakwood Worldwide (2009) 169 CA4th 1540, 87 CR3d 602, the court overruled demurrer to complaint requesting abatement of a public nuisance created by the owner's failure to limit secondhand smoke in outdoor common areas. See §§3.15C, 3.42, 3.48A, 3.67A.

In Tan v Arnel Mgmt. Co. (2009) 170 CA4th 1087, 88 CR3d 754, the court held that prior assaults on the premises were sufficiently similar to make an attack foreseeable and to place a duty on defendants to provide relatively minimal security measures. See §3.68B.

Effective January 1, 2010, the level of methamphetamine allowed on an indoor surface of the premises to be considered safe for human occupancy was increased from 0.1 micrograms per 100 square centimeters to 1.5 micrograms. Health & S C §25400.16. See §4.16C.

Rights During Tenancy. The legislature added Health & S C §11571.1, which declares that the state law is not preemptive over local ordinances relating to drug abatement and that state law remedies are not intended to prevent a tenant from asserting relief against forfeiture under CCP §1179. Civil Code §3486 was added to California nuisance law to replace former Health & S C §11571.1. It authorizes city attorneys in specified areas to bring an eviction action against a tenant who unlawfully manufactures, sells, possesses, or uses controlled substances on the premises. See §4.44, 13.56.

When a city attorney intends to file suit to abate a nuisance in the form of an unlawful detainer action under the provisions of CC §§3485-3486, a specially prescribed 30-day notice must precede the 3-day notice and suit under CCP §1161(4). See §§8.55, 8.59.

Professional Responsibility. Effective January 1, 2010, an attorney must disclose to the client in writing the absence of professional liability insurance at the outset of the attorney-client relationship when it is reasonably foreseeable that the total amount of time to be used in representing the client will exceed 4 hours. An attorney who does not provide this notice must inform the client in writing within 30 days of the date that the attorney subsequently knows or should know that he or she no longer has the insurance. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-410. See §§4.2C, 5.4A.

Unlawful Detainer Proceedings. In Espinoza v Calva (2008) 169 CA4th 1393, 87 CR3d 492, the court denied and reversed an order for payment of past due rent, holding that the absence of a certificate of occupancy rendered the lease illegal. Once the tenant properly raises a defense of breach of the warranty of habitability, the trial court must permit the tenant to introduce evidence of the breach and may not limit the tenant to an offer of proof. If the tenant proves a defense of breach of the warranty of habitability, the court is required to make the findings under CCP §1174.2 and to give the tenant 5 days from the date of judgment to pay the back rent at the rate set by the court. See §§3.11E, 6.16, 6.73A, 10.62, 12.22, 12.28, 12.36-12.37, 12.65.

A lawsuit brought by a former tenant against a landlord who fraudulently evicted the tenant under a rent control ordinance in order to have a family member occupy the premises was not subject to an anti-SLAPP special motion to strike. Clark v Mazgani (2009) 170 CA4th 1281, 89 CR3d 24. A landlord's protected actions that were not the basis of plaintiff's lawsuit but merely preceded it did not support an anti-SLAPP motion. Delois v Barrett Block Partners (2009) 177 CA4th 940, 99 CR3d 609. See §5.18A, 7.78.

While trial courts are closed on the third Wednesday of each month due to budget issues, the Wednesdays on which the courts are closed are treated as holidays for the purpose of calculating time in which to transact judicial business. Govt C §68106. See §§10.1, 10.50, 13.2.

Effective July 1, 2009, rules regarding applications for fee waivers were amended. Current procedures are summarized in §10.13 and detailed in California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 10 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

The time periods and methods for opposing and replying to an opposition for motion for summary judgment in an unlawful detainer action were amended under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1351(b). Opposition to the motion and any reply to opposition may be made orally at the time of the hearing, or if a party seeks to have the court consider its opposition before the hearing, written opposition must be filed and served on or before the court day before the hearing. See §§11.35, 11.37, 11.39. Some ambiguity exists regarding what documents are required to support such motions and oppositions. See §11.38.

In Treo @ Kettner Homeowners Ass'n v Superior Court (2008) 166 CA4th 1055, 83 CR3d 318, the court of appeal refused to enforce an ADR provision in CC&Rs that required submission of disputes to judicial reference, because it did not meet constitutional standards for a jury trial waiver. See §11.54.

In Swift v Superior Court (2009) 172 CA4th 878, 91 CR3d 504, on a peremptory challenge, the court found that a judge's rulings on discovery motions were only factual in nature and did not relate to the merits of the case. The court then ordered the trial court to accept the peremptory challenge filed by plaintiff. See §12.7A.

In Garcia v Roberts (2009) 173 CA4th 900, 93 CR3d 286, an amendment to conform to proof proposed during an action originally brought on an oral contract unfairly prejudiced defendants because original plaintiff had denied existence of written lease in deposition and could not testify at trial. See §12.39.

A new sample jury instruction regarding a landlord's wrongful refusal of rent is provided in §12.63D.

If the affidavit of mailing that accompanies the request for entry of default has an inaccurate address, that defect is not jurisdictional. Consequently, a motion to set aside the default and the resulting judgment on that basis will not lie under CCP §473. Rodriguez v Henard (2009) 174 CA4th 529, 94 CR3d 313. See §13.7.

In Fries v Rite Aid Corp. (2009) 173 CA4th 182, 92 CR3d 523, the defendant was allowed to file a cost memorandum after the plaintiff voluntarily dismissed the action. See §§13.21, 13.23.

Mobilehome Tenancies. In Sequoia Park Assocs. v County of Sonoma (2009) 176 CA4th 1270, 98 CR3d 669, an ordinance imposed procedural and substantive requirements regarding park conversions in excess of those in Govt C §66427.5. The court held that the ordinance was both expressly and impliedly preempted by the state statute and therefore invalid. See §§6.13, 6.51, 6.70.

Beginning January 1, 2010, local fire departments and districts may enforce local fire codes within a mobilehome park, relating to combustible brush and vegetation that creates an imminent fire hazard, hazardous material storage, and open fires or burning. Health & S C §18691. See §6.13.

In Los Altos El Granada Investors v City of Capitola (9th Cir 2009) 583 F3d 674, the court held that a litigant may reserve federal claims for hearing in federal court and that a state court rejection of those claims does not have preclusive effect on the federal court action. See §6.15.

In Guggenheim v City of Goleta (9th Cir 2009) 582 F3d 996, a rent control ordinance that provided for an annual rent increase of 75 percent of the consumer price index and arbitration to determine more rent to cover actual expenses effectively forced park owners to rent their property significantly below market value and was a regulatory taking. See §6.15, 7.11.

By September 1, 2010, park operators must adopt an emergency preparedness plan that includes specific posting and notice requirements. Failure to comply is deemed an immediate risk to life, health, and safety. Health & S C §18603. See §6.47.

Beginning January 1, 2010, park management may not require a homeowner who is replacing a mobilehome on a space in the park to use a specific broker, dealer, or other person as an agent in the purchase or installation of the mobilehome. CC §798.71(d). See §6.57.

After September 1, 2008, all new mobilehomes installed, and most existing mobilehomes relocated or altered, in mobilehome parks that are in specified high fire hazard areas must meet new HCD ignition-resistant construction standards. 25 Cal Code Regs §§4200-4216. See §6.57A.

Terminating Tenancies. In Spinks v Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments (2009) 171 CA4th 1004, 90 CR3d 453, the court held that a discharged employee may not be dispossessed without regard to the circumstances surrounding her occupancy or by means of the landlord's self-help. The employee was allowed to state a claim for wrongful eviction, trespass, negligent and intentional invasion of privacy, negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and negligence. See §§1.4, 3.7, 4.3A, 6.61, 8.137, 8.148-8.150.

The sale of property following the tenant's abandonment of a lease does not deprive the landlord of its available contract remedies under CC §1951.2. The landlord retains the right to claim rental loss accruing after the date of sale, except to the extent the breaching tenant can prove the rental loss was avoidable. A rental stream of a value equivalent to the sale proceeds can be determined using a market capitalization rate. First Nat'l Mortgage Co. v Federal Realty Inv. Trust (2009) 633 F Supp 2d 985. See §§8.14, 8.16.

The required 60-day notice to residential tenants to terminate a month-to-month or other periodic tenancy under CC §1946.1 has been extended for an indefinite period. Stats 2009, ch 347. See §8.22.

If the owner, manager, or operator is listed by the utility provider as the customer of record, the provider is required to make a good faith effort to inform the residential occupants, by means of a 10-day notice, when the account is in arrears and that the utility service will be terminated. See Pub Util C §§777, 10009, 12822, 16481. When utility service is provided through master metering, a 15-day notice is required. See Pub Util C §§777.1, 10009.1, 12822.1, 16481.1. Under certain circumstances, the residential occupants may become customers of the provider and deduct utility costs from the rent. See §8.149A.

When a tenant leaves personal property on the premises after the tenancy is terminated, or if a tenant abandons the premises, the landlord must comply with statutory procedures in the disposal of the tenant's personal property. If the personal property consists of records as defined in CC §§1980(e) and 1993(f), the tenant is presumed to be the owner of the records. CC §§1983(a), 1993.03(a). Disposition of the records is treated much the same as the tenant's other personal property. See §§8.154-8.158.

Rent Control. In Barrientos v 1801-1825 Morton LLC (9th Cir 2009) 583 F3d 1197, HUD rules that related to property owners opting out of Section 8 programs and allowing rents to exceed rent control levels did not preempt local rent controls. The court affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the tenants, permanent injunctive relief, and award of attorney fees. See §§6.15A, 7.19, 11.63B.

A Los Angeles ordinance, enacted under CC §7060.2(d), that subjects new residential rental units to rent control if built within 5 years on land that contained rent controlled residential property that was demolished is not preempted by CC §1954.52(a) of the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act. Apartment Ass'n of Los Angeles County, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (2009) 173 CA4th 13, 92 CR3d 441. See §§7.25, 7.64D.

The Costa-Hawkins Act preempted a Los Angeles land use plan that imposed affordable housing requirements on certain residential and mixed-use development projects of more than ten dwelling units per lot. Palmer/Sixth St. Props. v City of Los Angeles (2009) 175 CA4th 1396, 96 CR3d 875. See §7.25B.

A successor landlord is liable under a rent ordinance for overpayments charged to the tenant by a predecessor landlord. Baychester Shopping Ctr., Inc. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2008) 165 CA4th 1000, 81 CR3d 341. See §§7.29, 12.35.

A provision of a rent ordinance purported to create a presumption of violation if the owner recovered possession on the basis of an owner move-in eviction but maintained continuous occupancy for less than 3 years; such a provision was an invalid presumption affecting the burden of proof in conflict with Evid C §500 and was preempted. Rental Hous. Ass'n of N. Alameda County v City of Oakland (2009) 171 CA4th 741, 757, 90 CR3d 181. See §§7.54, 7.66, 7.75.

In Bisno v Douglas Emmett Realty Fund 1988 (2009) 174 CA4th 1534, 95 CR3d 492, the litigation privilege barred the tenant's claims of a violation of the Santa Monica rent control law arising out of the service of an eviction notice and subsequent unlawful detainer action. See §§7.55, 7.78.

Terminating Tenancies After Foreclosure. Civil Code §2924.8 was amended by Stats 2009, ch 43 (SB 306), requiring the trustee or authorized agent to mail first class an additional notice to the occupants concurrently with the mailing of the notice of trustee sale for residential real property if the billing address for the note is different from the property address. See §8.68B.

Congress has enacted preemptive legislation that temporarily protects residential tenants holding possession under a month-to-month agreement or a lease from immediate eviction after a foreclosure sale by the purchaser. See Protecting Tenants at Foreclosure Act of 2009 (Pub L 111-22, §§701-704, 123 Stat 1660). Residential tenants holding possession under a lease subordinate to the foreclosed loan are entitled to 90 days' notice of eviction after foreclosure. 12 USC §5220(a)(1). Tenants holding possession under a residential lease have the right to possession until the end of the lease term, unless the purchaser will occupy the unit as a primary residence, in which case the 90-day notice applies. 12 USC §5220(a)(2). See §§8.68C, 8.68F, 10.54.

Bankruptcy Procedures. In Sternberg v Johnston (9th Cir 2009) 582 F3d 1114, an attorney was held liable for emotional distress damages for willfully violating the automatic stay by defending an overly broad state court order on spousal support. See §14.6.

Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 4001(a)(3) has been amended to stay the order granting relief from stay for 14 days (previously 10 days) after entry of the order unless the bankruptcy court orders otherwise. See §§14.23, 14.29, 14.64, 14.66.

The United States Bankruptcy Court, Central District of California, has adopted an optional, preprinted form for use in opposing a stay relief motion, unless an individual judge or court department makes this form mandatory. See §14.28A.

If limited relief is granted for the purpose of continuing existing state court claims, a material amendment to the pleadings that changes the nature of the relief sought could violate the automatic stay and render any findings made in the state court void. Griffin v Wardrobe (In re Wardrobe) (9th Cir 2009) 559 F3d 932. See §14.29.

In the Northern District of California, a Chapter 7 trustee can move to reject a lease on 24 hours' notice without a formal hearing, so court approval of a stipulation with the trustee in such circumstances should be similarly swift. See ND Cal Local Bankr R 6006-1(b). See §14.30.

In BEPCO, LP v 15375 Mem. Corp. (In re 15375 Mem. Corp.) (D Del 2009) 400 BR 420, the court reversed the bankruptcy court's denial of a dismissal of debtors' petitions when the debtor had filed in bad faith. In the event of dismissal of a bad faith bankruptcy filing, the landlord may, in a separate state court proceeding, recover the attorney fees it incurred in obtaining a dismissal of the bankruptcy matter. Chinese Yellow Pages v Chinese Overseas Mktg. Serv. Corp. (2008) 170 CA4th 868, 88 CR3d 250. See §14.32, 14.51.

In determining the amount of rent owed under 11 USC §365(d)(3), several cases applied proration, at least as to prorated postpetition rent for the month in which the bankruptcy was filed (i.e., "stub rent"). See Goody's Family Clothing, Inc. v Mountaineer Prop. Co. II, LLC (In re Goody's Family Clothing, Inc.) (D Del 2009) 401 BR 656; In re Stone Barn Manhattan LLC (Bankr SD NY 2008) 398 BR 359; In re Manis Lumber Co. (Bankr ND Ga, Feb. 6, 2009, No. 08-40398) 2009 Bankr Lexis 506. See §14.45.

In In re BH S&B Holdings LLC (Bankr SD NY 2009) 401 BR 96, the court analyzed a lease obligation to keep the premises free of liens and held that the obligation to remove a mechanics' lien filed postpetition was not an 11 USC §365(d)(3) obligation, because under New York law a lien arises when it is filed rather than when the work is done. See §14.45A.

In In re Brown (Bankr WD Va 2009) 399 BR 162, the court dismissed a Chapter 13 debtor's second filing while the first case was pending, finding that it was filed in bad faith. See §14.52.

In Duke Realty Ltd. Partnership v North Metro Mill Work Distribs., Inc. (In re Manis Lumber Co.) (Bankr ND Ga, Feb. 6, 2009, No. 08-40398) 2009 Bankr Lexis 506, the court allowed an equitable adjustment of the effective date of rejection of a lease to 10 days after service of the debtor's rejection motion. See §14.53.

If the landlord's claimed rejection damages are directly a result of the rejection breach, they will not be allowed in addition to the capped amount of rent allowable. In re Brown (Bankr ND Ohio 2008) 398 BR 215. See §14.55.

A dismissal is more appropriate than conversion if more creditors would benefit from dismissal. Shulkin Hutton, Inc. v Treiger (In the Matter of Owens) (9th Cir, Dec. 31, 2008, No. 07-35634) 2008 US App Lexis 26947; In re Jabarin (Bankr ED Pa 2008) 395 BR 330. See §14.56.

On requisite findings that a debtor's counsel acted in bad faith and committed willful misconduct, the bankruptcy court has the inherent authority to suspend a lawyer from practicing in that court. Price v Lehtinen (In the Matter of Lehtinen) (9th Cir 2009) 564 F3d 1052. See §14.56.

March 2009 Update

Supreme Court Updates. If substandard housing endangers the health and safety of residents, a local agency may give the owner a notice to repair or abate and enforce it by having a receiver appointed to manage the property, remediate the violations, or take other action, including demolition. In City of Santa Monica v Gonzalez (2008) 43 C4th 905, 76 CR3d 483, the supreme court held that technical noncompliance with prelitigation notice provisions did not invalidate the receivership action or demolition order. See §§3.10, 4.50.

In In re Marriage Cases (2008) 43 C4th 757, 76 CR3d 683, the California Supreme Court held that the constitutional rights to privacy and equal protection prevented discrimination against same-sex couples and that statutes treating persons differently on the basis of sexual orientation are subject to strict scrutiny analysis. See §2.58.

Fair Housing. Several state courts have ruled that state and local laws prohibiting source of income discrimination also prohibit discrimination against tenants with housing assistance such as Section 8. See Commission on Human Rights & Opportunities v Sullivan (Conn 2008) 939 A2d 541; Montgomery County v Glenmont Hills Assocs. (Md App 2007) 936 A2d 325; DiLiddo v Oxford St. Realty, Inc. (Mass 2007) 876 NE2d 421. See §2.9B.

In Stevens v Housing Auth. of S. Bend (ND Ind, July 22, 2008, No. 3:08-CV-51) 2008 US Dist Lexis 55935, the court distinguished HUD v Rucker (2002) 535 US 125, 152 L Ed 2d 258, 122 S Ct 1230, and found that criminal activity outside the unit by persons who were not residents, guests, or under the tenant's control is not grounds for eviction. See §2.15.

In Villas at Parkside Partners v City of Farmers Branch (ND Tex 2008) 577 F Supp 2d 858, the court issued a temporary restraining order enjoining an ordinance that required landlords to screen tenants to determine residency status, expressing serious concerns that the ordinance may violate the supremacy and due process clauses. See §2.19.

On March 5, 2008, the U.S. Department of Justice and HUD issued a Joint Statement of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Department of Justice—Reasonable Modifications Under the Fair Housing Act that addressed reasonable modifications. See §§2.27, 2.27B.

A refusal to rescind an eviction notice because of the disability of a disruptive minor may be held an unreasonable refusal to accommodate under the FHA, FEHA, and the Unruh Civil Rights Act. See McAlister v Essex Prop. Trust (CD Cal 2007) 504 F Supp 2d 903. See §2.27A.

Neither state law access standards nor the Americans With Disabilities Act require structural modifications to portions of rental property not used by the general public. Coronado v Cobblestone Village Community Rentals, LP (2008) 163 CA4th 831, 77 CR3d 883. See §§2.27B, 10.68.

If the Department of Fair Employment and Housing has found against a party and the party fails to bring an administrative mandamus action, collateral estoppel may apply, but not to internal grievance procedures (Ahmadi-Kashani v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008) 159 CA4th 449, 71 CR3d 556) or grievance procedures under a collective bargaining agreement, which settles contractual, rather than statutory, disputes (Ortega v Contra Costa Community College Dist. (2007) 156 CA4th 1073, 67 CR3d 832). See §2.56.

In Fair Hous. Council v Roommates.com, LLC (9th Cir 2008) 521 F3d 1157, the court ruled that a website operator whose on-line questionnaire required subscribers to disclose their sex, family status, and sexual orientation engaged in discrimination under the Fair Housing Act and was not entitled to immunity under the Communications Decency Act of 1996. See §5.7.

Habitability and Premises Liability. In Raven H. v Gamette (2007) 157 CA4th 1017, 68 CR3d 897, the trial court granted summary judgment for the landlord, ruling that the injured tenant had not provided sufficient evidence to establish that the landlord's failure to provide security on her doors and windows caused the rape. The court of appeal reversed, holding that she need show only that the landlord's failures were a "substantial factor" in causing the rape, and that she had presented sufficient evidence to permit a jury to hear the case. See §§3.68, 3.68B.

A landlord has the right to enter and inspect commercially leased premises while pursuing an unlawful detainer action against a defaulting tenant. In Stone v Center Trust Retail Props., Inc. (2008) 163 CA4th 608, 77 CR3d 556, a slip and fall case resulting from the tenant's negligent maintenance, the court of appeal ruled that the date on which a landlord obtains a judgment for possession of the premises is the date on which the landlord becomes liable for its condition. California Civil Jury Instruction 1006 was amended to reflect the ruling. See §§3.68C, 3.72, 8.137, 13.33D.

Rights During Tenancy. Some government-subsidized housing projects are subject to contracts that limit the avenue or forum to resolve disputes for breach of the contract. In 300 DeHaro St. Invs. v Department of Hous. & Community Dev. (2008) 161 CA4th 1240, 75 CR3d 98, the court of appeal held that mandamus was not the appropriate remedy for rent increase denials and that the owner could instead pursue declaratory relief and breach of contract causes of action in superior court. See §§3.66B, 7.14, 7.14B, 7.38.

Civil Code §1946.7, which took effect as an urgency bill on September 27, 2008, allows a tenant who is a victim of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking to provide a written notice of lease termination within 60 days of specified court orders or police reports and be liable only for 30 days' rent from the date of the written notice. See §§6.14, 8.21B.

Code of Civil Procedure §1161(4) was amended, effective September 27, 2008, to add a provision that a person's acts of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking of a resident on the premises creates a rebuttable presumption that the person has committed a nuisance and is subject to the 3-day notice to quit authorized by that section. See §§6.14, 8.21B, 8.26, 8.50, 8.55, 8.58.

Mobilehome Tenancies. In an unpublished decision, MHC Fin. Ltd. Partnership v City of San Rafael (ND Cal, Jan. 29, 2008, No. C00-03785) 2008 WL 440282, the court found that there was a substantial loss in value functionally equivalent to an unconstitutional taking as result of the rent control ordinance. It also held that the ordinance violated the takings clause protection by virtue of the transfer of premium value to the residents. The 98-page opinion also ruled that the San Rafael ordinance did not violate the federal due process clause. See §6.15.

In Manufactured Home Communities, Inc. v County of San Luis Obispo (2008) 167 CA4th 705, 84 CR3d 367, the court held that 12-month leases that allowed for rent increases upon 90 days' notice were facially valid because the lease provision expressly included the caveat "as allowed by state and local laws," which the court held incorporated the local rent control ordinance's rent increase restrictions. See §6.15.

In SC Manufactured Homes, Inc. v Liebert (2008) 162 CA4th 68, 76 CR3d 73, a mobilehome dealer's allegations that a mobilehome park and specified dealers were involved in an illegal tying arrangement and alleged violations of the Cartwright Act and the Unfair Competition Law, as well as tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, was denied when the court held that the facts did not support the causes of action. See §6.20.

Under Pub Util C §739.5(h), the PUC may not deny eligibility for the California Alternative Rates for Energy (CARE) Program on the basis that some residential units in a mobilehome park are not submetered. See §6.43.

Civil Code §798.26 has been amended to clarify that park management cannot enter any enclosed accessory structure without prior written consent of the resident, except in the event of an emergency or abandonment. See §§6.47, 6.115.

Under CC §798.29.6, effective January 1, 2009, management must permit a homeowner or resident to install disabled access accommodations on a lot or space if they comply with the applicable building code and, when required, are installed with a permit. See §§6.48, 6.114.

In Surf & Sands, LLC v City of Capitola (ND Cal, Feb. 13, 2008, No. 07-05043) 2008 US Dist Lexis 14640, a park owner's challenge of several city ordinances regulating mobilehome park rents, closures, and conversions was barred by the statute of limitations and was not ripe because the park had not sought compensation through state procedures. See §6.51.

Effective January 1, 2009, sellers must provide a declaration, as part of the sales transaction, that there is an operable certified smoke alarm in every sleeping room of a mobilehome or manufactured home (Health & S C §18029.6). No later than July 1, 2009, regulations must be adopted to ensure that water heaters in mobilehomes or manufactured homes are seismically strapped, anchored, or braced pursuant to law (Health & S C §18031.7). See §6.57A.

Rent Control. In Small Prop. Owners v City & County of San Francisco (2006) 141 CA4th 1388, 47 CR3d 121, the court held that a San Francisco ordinance requiring landlords to pay tenants 5 percent interest on security deposits held for more than one year was not an unconstitutional taking because the ordinance did not require the landlords to place deposits into accounts paying interest below the rate they had to pay tenants. See §§7.13, 8.170.

In TG Oceanside, LP v City of Oceanside (2007) 156 CA4th 1355, 68 CR3d 320, a rent control ordinance that allowed three options for rent increases met constitutional requirements, and the park owner was required to comply with the ordinance or prove the options were inadequate rather than merely substitute a different return-on-investment standard. See §§6.15, 7.10, 7.13, 7.38, 7.47, 7.75.

In Action Apartment Ass'n v Santa Monica Rent Control Opinion Bd. (9th Cir 2007) 509 F3d 1020, the Ninth Circuit recognized that landlords can challenge the rationality of land use regulations as a denial of substantive due process. However, the court concluded that the facial due process Fourteenth Amendment claim was time-barred and the as-applied due process claim was unripe. See §§7.10, 7.14, 7.14B, 7.47.

In Baychester Shopping Ctr., Inc. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2008) 165 CA4th 1000, 81 CR3d 341, the court held that excess rent paid to a prior owner may be recovered against the current owner if the local rent ordinance provides for successor liability. See §§7.40A, 7.44, 7.56, 7.77, 7.80, 10.57.

In Gombiner v Swartz (2008) 167 CA4th 1365, 85 CR3d 83, the court acknowledged that a partial waiver of a right to complain to a governmental agency in a mutually agreed settlement of a specific issue may be enforceable, but the landlord cannot circumvent the local rent control ordinance setting maximum rents. See §§7.54, 7.55, 10.65, 13.39.

In Marlin v Aimco Venezia, LLC (2007) 154 CA4th 154, 64 CR3d 488, the court held that tenants may file actions for declaratory relief to determine whether landlords are entitled to Ellis Act evictions. The court further held that the tenants' filing was not an anti-SLAPP suit because it was not based on the landlord's filing and serving of the notice, but instead was based on the tenants' claim that the landlord was not entitled to invoke or rely on the Ellis Act. See §7.64G.

Terminating Tenancies After Foreclosure. Effective September 8, 2008, through the end of 2012, CC §2924.8 requires the trustee or authorized agent to post and mail an additional notice for the benefit of the tenant when posting the 20-day notice of trustee sale (nonjudicial foreclosure) for residential real property if the billing address for the note is different from the property address. See §§8.68B, 10.54.

Effective July 8, 2008, and sunsetting at the end of 2012, CCP §1161b requires a residential tenant holding a lease subordinate to the mortgage or a subtenant to be given 60 days' written notice to quit. See §§8.68C, 8.69, 9.36-9.39, 10.54, 12.46, 12.47.

Unlawful Detainer Proceedings. If a landlord brings an anti-SLAPP motion based on the tenant's filing a wrongful eviction action, the tenant must make a prima facie showing of his or her right to prevail. Birkner v Lam (2007) 156 CA4th 275, 67 CR3d 190. See §7.78.

While a jury may consider the fact that a defendant harmed non-parties in determining the reprehensibility of defendant's conduct, it may not consider the injuries to nonparties when setting the amount of punitive damages. Philip Morris USA v Williams (2007) 549 US 346, 166 L Ed 2d 940, 127 S Ct 1057. See §§8.135, 8.150.

While communication by an attorney with an unrepresented adverse party is not prohibited, if an attorney is aware that the adverse party may have been assisted by counsel who is not counsel of record, the attorney should clarify that fact and tell the opposing party not to reveal the content of any communications with counsel. McMillan v Shadow Ridge at Oak Park Homeowner's Ass'n (2008) 165 CA4th 960, 81 CR3d 550. See §9.21.

Effective January 1, 2008, California Rule of Court amendments to Cal Rules of Ct 2.253, 2.260 contain detailed requirements for electronic service of pleadings. See §9.44.

Effective July 1, 2009, Govt C §§68630-68641, regarding waiver of filing fees and other court expenses for indigent parties, will replace the procedures in Govt C §68511.3, which will be repealed on the same date. Additional classes of parties are eligible for fee waivers, and the required information and documentation for obtaining a fee waiver has been expanded. The court is also entitled to reimbursement when the party who obtains a fee waiver collects money in satisfaction of judgment. See §§10.5, 10.13.

California Civil Jury Instructions VF-4300-VF-4302 were added as general and/or specific verdict forms for use in unlawful detainer actions. See §§12.42, 12.67.

In Hossain v Hossain (2007) 157 CA4th 454, 69 CR3d 356, the court held that CCP §473(b) does not apply to an attorney's failure to timely file opposition and a cross-motion to a motion to enforce a settlement because there was neither a default nor a default judgment within the meaning of §473(b). See §§12.69, 13.8.

If there are multiple counsel for appellant, service of the notice of entry of judgment and the notice of entry of the order denying a new trial on only the original attorney is sufficient to start the 60-day notice period in which to appeal. Adaimy v Ruhl (2008) 160 CA4th 583, 72 CR3d 926. See §13.59.

The California Rules of Court regarding payment of deposit to the superior court, the indexing of exhibits in the reporter's transcript, delivery of copies to the court, and answers to petitions to transfer have been amended. Cal Rules of Ct 8.100(d), 8.144(b)(3), 8.212(c). See §§13.59, 13.63.

In Reichert v National Credit Sys., Inc. (9th Cir 2008) 531 F3d 1002, a suit brought by a tenant under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, the court found that the collection agency for the landlord failed to establish the bona fide defense because it did not produce evidence of reasonable preventive procedures to avoid the error.

Attorney Fees. In Cruz v Ayromloo (2007) 155 CA4th 1270, 66 CR3d 725, the court of appeal allowed attorney fees for both contract and tort causes of action under a lease that provided that the prevailing party would be awarded fees "for all claims in any civil action in connection with the lease." See §13.25.

In a commercial lease that broadly defined the prevailing party, a tenant who received a voluntary dismissal while its summary judgment motion was pending was adjudged to be the prevailing party, but was denied attorney fees because CC §1717 does not permit attorney fees in the event of a voluntary dismissal. Mitchell Land & Improvement Co. v Ristorante Ferrantelli, Inc. (2007) 158 CA4th 479, 70 CR3d 9. See §§13.26, 13.27.

Bankruptcy Procedures. When a solvent tenant attempts to use the bankruptcy process to obtain the 11 USC §502(b)(6) cap on its landlord's damages for breach of a commercial lease, a dismissal may be properly denied if bankruptcy is in creditors' best interests. In re 15375 Memorial Corp. (Bankr D Del 2008) 386 BR 548. See §14.32.

An Arizona bankruptcy court held that the performance date determined whether an expense was required to be paid under 11 USC §365(d)(3). See In re Designer Doors, Inc. (Bankr D Ariz 2008) 389 BR 832. See §14.45.

Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure 3007 includes new limitations on debtors' ability to make "omnibus" objections to invalidate large numbers of claims without making a showing as to each one. See §14.55.

Once the equitable jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is invoked, a debtor's desire for a jury trial may not constitute sufficient cause to approve the debtor's request for voluntary dismissal of the case, if opposed by creditors and the trustee. In re Hickman (Bankr SD Cal 2008) 384 BR 832. See §14.56.

New forms entitled "Objection to Debtors' Motion on Proposed Going Out of Business Sale" and "Objection to Proposed Expedited Procedures for Assumption and Rejection of Leases" have been added. See §§14.62A, 14.62B.

February 2008 Update

Supreme Court Updates. In a case involving a landlord's duty to prevent injuries caused by criminal acts or third parties, the supreme court decided in Castaneda v Olsher (2007) 41 C4th 1205, 63 CR3d 99, that even if an owner has no duty to provide security, it may still owe a duty, by having special knowledge or by virtue of a special relationship, to take other protective measures. See §§3.68, 3.68B, 6.16, 6.20, 6.55, 6.65.

The supreme court held that it is not necessary for a person to demonstrate that a request for nondiscriminatory treatment was made and refused in order to state a claim under the Unruh Civil Rights Act. Angelucci v Century Supper Club (2007) 41 C4th 160, 59 CR3d 142. See §5.7.

The supreme court held that the Mobilehome Residency Law (CC §798.49(d)(4)) does not preempt local rent control ordinances to the extent that they allow mobilehome park owners to separately charge park residents for property taxes imposed on park land. Cacho v Boudreau (2007) 40 C4th 341, 53 CR3d 43. See §§6.15, 6.29, 6.30.

In Action Apartment Ass'n v City of Santa Monica (2007) 41 C4th 1232, 63 CR3d 398, the supreme court held that the litigation privilege of CC §47(b) conflicts with and thus preempts a section of a Santa Monica ordinance that authorizes civil and criminal penalties against a landlord who brings a court action to recover possession of a rental unit without a reasonable factual or legal basis. See §§7.55-7.55A, 7.78.

In Oakland Raiders v National Football League (2007) 41 C4th 624, 634, 61 CR3d 634, the supreme court stated that the requirement under CCP §657 that the trial court's statement of reasons for granting a new trial be filed no later than 10 days after the order is jurisdictional, and therefore a statement of reasons filed more than 10 days after the order is ineffective. See §13.44.

Rental Agreement Forms. The California Apartment Association Furniture Inventory form has been revised. See §1.26. New rental and lease agreement forms have been revised. See §§1.81, 1.82, 1.83. Lead paint disclosures provided at the beginning of a residential tenancy must include all information on lead-based paint or hazards in the unit known by the owners or their agents, including the existence and location of inspection records and reports. See §§1.29, 1.77, 1.82A.

Fair Housing. Under CCP §1161(4), a person who unlawfully possesses or uses weapons or ammunition on the premises, or uses the premises for those purposes, is considered to have committed a nuisance. Under CC §3485, the landlord may have obligations to abate such a nuisance, or a city attorney may bring an unlawful detainer action if the owner fails to do so. See §§1.58, 3.7, 3.10, 4.44, 8.55, 8.58, 8.5, 9.4.

The definition of "sex" for the purpose of California anti-discrimination laws includes a person's gender, gender identity, and gender-related appearance and behavior. See §§2.1, 2.2, 2.19, 2.20, 2.28, 2.48, 2.49, 2.59, 4.12, 4.14, 5.7, 6.20, 9.2, 10.67.

A plaintiff stated a prima facie case for violation of the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Govt C §§12900-12996) by pleading that a lender's policy against making loans for home daycare providers had a disparate impact on women and families with children. Sisemore v Master Fin., Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 1386, 60 CR3d 719. See §§2.5, 2.21, 2.48, 2.58.

Although Gunther v Lin (2006) 144 CA4th 223, 50 CR3d 317 held that a showing of intentional discrimination is necessary to obtain monetary damages, in Wilson v Haria and Gogri Corp. (ED Cal 2007) 479 F Supp 2d 1127 the court rejected Gunther, as did Johnson v Barlow (ED Cal, June 9, 2007, No. S-06-01150) 2007 US Dist Lexis 44855. In Wilson v PFS, LLC (SD Cal 2007) 493 F Supp 2d 1122 the court found that the law was too unsettled for it to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over Unruh Act claims. See §§2.5, 2.21, 2.57.

The discussion of the effect of a tenant's character on the landlord's enforcement of the lease is enhanced in §2.8.

In U.D. Registry, Inc. v State (2006) 144 CA4th 405, 429-430, 50 CR3d 647, the court held as unconstitutional CC §1785.13's prohibition against a credit agency reporting unlawful detainer actions unless the landlord is the prevailing party. However, a credit reporting agency may be liable under 15 USC §§1681e and 1681i for inaccurately investigating or reporting whether a judgment exists against a tenant. Dennis v BEH-1, LLC (9th Cir 2007) 504 F3d 892. See §§2.9, 5.25A, 13.75.

Beginning in 2008, under CC §1940.3, landlords may not inquire about or obtain documents regarding a tenant's or prospective tenant's immigration of citizenship status. See §§2.12, 2.19, 2.20.

Residency preferences must not have the effect of delaying or otherwise denying admission to the program based on the protected classes. 24 CFR §960.206(b)(1)(iii). Local residency preferences violate the federal Fair Housing Act if they disproportionately exclude racial or ethnic minorities. Comer v Cisneros (2d Cir 1994) 37 F3d 775, 793. See also Langlois v Abington Hous. Auth. (1st Cir 2000) 207 F3d 43. See §2.14A.

Local ordinances that prohibit certain forms of discrimination against existing or prospective tenants who hold Section 8 vouchers are not preempted by 42 USC §1437(f). Rosario v Diagonal Realty (2007) 840 NYS2d 748, 872 NE2d 860. See §2.17.

In Drenik v Ohanesian (ED Cal, Aug. 15, 2006, No. 05-209) 2006 US Dist Lexis 60870, a landlord who refused to rent a second-floor unit to a family with children was in violation of the Fair Housing Act. See §2.23.

The Fair Housing Act, Americans with Disabilities Act, and the Fair Employment and Housing Act create remedies for persons who are denied housing due to their disabilities. Substantial discussion regarding accommodations for such persons were added to this 2008 update to provide additional guidance. See §§2.26-2.27C, 2.29.

Transitional housing for homeless persons is subject to the restrictions of the Fair Housing Act. Community House, Inc. v City of Boise (9th Cir 2007) 490 F3d 1041. See §2.30.

A new housing discrimination complaint form has been provided by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. See §2.34.

If the plaintiff shows a prima facie case of disparate treatment by the landlord, the landlord may present evidence that it has a legitimate safety concern, not based on stereotypes, that justifies the discrimination. Community House, Inc. v City of Boise (9th Cir 2007) 490 F3d 1041. See §2.63.

Tenant Rights During Tenancy. The use of testers is a common method to gather evidence of housing discrimination. Significant discussion has been added to this 2008 update regarding the use of testers. See §2.66. A list of categories of plaintiffs who have standing to bring discrimination cases is also provided. See §2.67. Increased analysis of the calculation of statutes of limitation in such cases is enhanced. See §2.69.

There is no insurance coverage for a judgment against a landlord for breach of lease due to failing to keep the premises in good condition where the only damages are economic loss. Golden Eagle Ins. Corp. v Cen-Fed Ltd. (2007) 148 CA4th 976, 56 CR3d 279. See §3.9.

Health & Safety Code §17958.3 was added to require residential hotels to provide a locking receptacle for each unit in the hotel. See §3.12.

A plaintiff may recover actual damages, including emotional distress damages, when a landlord attempts to collect rent, increase rent, or serves a 3-day notice after being notified of substandard conditions on the property. McNairy v C.K. Realty (2007) 150 CA4th 1500, 59 CR3d 429. See §§3.15A, 3.36, 3.38, 3.67, 5.9, 5.16, 7.78.

In Barber v Chang (2007) 151 CA4th 1456, 60 CR3d 760, the court held that summary judgment was not appropriate where a perpetrator had exhibited prior similar threatening conduct and landlord did not undertake minimally burdensome measures to address known threat of aggressive tenant. See §3.68B.

A landlord who obtains a writ of possession in an unlawful detainer action has a duty to inspect the premises even if the tenant remains in possession. Failure to do so might lead to liability to third parties who are injured by defects that might have been cured by proper maintenance. Stone v Center Trust Retail Props. (2007) 146 CA4th 1435, 53 CR3d 668. See §3.72.

Included in this 2008 update is discussion regarding requiring that renters obtain renter's insurance. See §4.43B.

An online interactive roommate matching website may be subject to FHA anti-discrimination provisions for questionnaires it requires prospective members to complete but not for the members' answers to an open-ended "Additional Comments" form. Fair Hous. Council v Roommates.com, LLC (9th Cir 2007) 489 F3d 921, rehearing granted en banc (9th Cir 2007) 2007 US App Lexis 23922. See §5.7.

A San Francisco landlord must have "just cause" to remove or sever housing services such as parking or storage. San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.2(r). In March, 2007, the San Francisco Rent Control Board declined to adopt regulations to implement this legislation, thereby leaving it up to the courts to interpret the provisions. The Rent Board did, however, amend Regulation 12.20(a) to allow landlords to evict for a tenant's breach of an obligation or covenant of the tenancy after a substantial decrease in housing services involving garages, storage space, or access to common areas, so long as the tenant has received a commensurate rent reduction for loss of the service. See §§5.14, 7.54.

An arbitration provision was unenforceable where there was a high degree of substantive unconscionability arising from a class action waiver included in a service agreement. Gatton v T-Mobile USA, Inc. (2007) 152 CA4th 571, 61 CR3d 344. See §5.16.

When a landlord illegally enters the tenant's premises, the only express statutory remedy that allows for the recovery of damages and penalties for a "significant and intentional violation of CC §1954" is in CC §1940.2. Discussion of this remedy and other legal theories applicable to these issues has been enhanced in this February 2008 update. See §5.17.

An ordinance outlawing picketing within 300 feet of residence was constitutional because it was content neutral and narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest. Klein v San Diego County (9th Cir 2006) 463 F3d 1029. See §5.37.

Mobilehome Tenancies. In an effort to clarify the confusion created by the terms "manufactured home" and "mobilehome," the legislature has amended the Mobilehomes-Manufactured Housing Act of 1980 (Health & S C §§18000-18153), which is now known as the Manufactured Housing Act of 1980. See §§6.1, 6.4, 6.8.

Several new cases have addressed the constitutionality of mobilehome rent control ordinances. For discussions of MHC Fin. Ltd. Partnership v City of San Rafael (ND Cal, Dec. 5, 2006, No. C00-3785) 2006 US Dist Lexis 89195, Stardust Mobile Estates, LLC v City of San Buenaventura (2007) 147 CA4th 1170, 55 CR3d 218, S.G. Borello & Sons v City of Hayward (ND Cal, Nov. 20, 2006, No. C03-0891) 2006 US Dist Lexis 86293, and Equity Lifestyle Props. Inc. v County of San Luis Obispo (9th Cir, Sept. 17, 2007, No. 05-55406) 2007 US App Lexis 22142, see §§6.15, 6.21, 7.10, 7.11, 7.13, 7.14, 7.14B, 7.31.

Effective January 1, 2008, after the sale of a mobilehome, management is prohibited from requiring a mobilehome's removal unless management has provided the homeowner with a notice particularly specifying the condition that permits requiring removal of the mobilehome. CC §798.73(e). See §6.58.

In SC Manufactured Homes, Inc. v Canyon View Estates, Inc. (2007) 148 CA4th 663, 56 CR3d 79, involving a dispute between a mobile home dealer and a landlord, the court denied attorney fees because the matter did not arise out of the MRL. In Cruz v Ayromloo (2007) 155 CA4th 1270, 66 CR3d 725, the court interpreted an attorney fee clause in a lease that stated "if civil action is instituted in connection with this Agreement" holding that it was broad enough to encompass causes of action for both breach of the lease as well as tort causes of action. See §6.89.

Rent Control. Discussion of just cause and retaliatory eviction ordinances has been significantly enhanced in this 2008 update.

Tenants have no right to insist that compliance with the Subdivided Lands Act (Bus & P C §§11000-11200) be undertaken as a precondition to an eviction based on the Ellis Act, and a landlord does not violate the Subdivided Lands Act by selling partial interests in a building withdrawn from rent or lease under the Ellis Act. Daro v Superior Court (2007) 151 CA4th 1079, 61 CR3d 716. See §§7.64, 7.64B, 7.64E, 7.64G, 11.63B.

Discussion of the requirements of just cause and Ellis Act evictions, including relocation assistance, has been enhanced in this 2008 update in §§7.54, 7.55, 7.56, 7.63, 7.64, 7.64F, 7.65, 7.76A.

The Ellis Act does not prevent a city from enforcing mitigation conditions granting relocation rights to existing tenants when those rights are part of a vesting tentative tract map under the local land use and environmental review process. Lincoln Place Tenants Ass'n v City of Los Angeles (2007) 155 CA4th 425, 452, 66 CR3d 120. See §7.64D, 7.64G, 7.64H, 11.62, 11.63B.

Unlawful Detainer Proceedings. Participation by a party's insurer instead of the party itself has invalidated a settlement agreement. Elnekave v Via Dolce Homeowners Ass'n (2006) 142 CA4th 1193, 48 CR3d 663. See §9.18.

Stipulated judgments are commonly used in unlawful detainer actions. This 2008 updates discusses bringing an action for retaliatory eviction after entering into a stipulated judgment. See §9.18B.

Service on a managing agent employed by a party (but not specifically authorized to accept service of summons and complaint and not shown to be in "regular and frequent contact" with the party) is insufficient service under CCP §416.90 despite the party's actual receipt of the summons and complaint. Summers v McClanhan (2006) 140 CA4th 403, 44 CR3d 338. See §9.48.

In Parsons v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th Supp 1, 58 CR3d 48, the court upheld a motion to quash that challenged the use of a 30-day notice to terminate a houseboat tenancy because a 60-day notice is required by CC §800.70 and the inappropriate notice resulted in lack of jurisdiction by the court. See §§8.23, 8.62, 10.20, 10.21, 10.29, 10.31, 10.40.

Effective January 1, 2008, the Judicial Council is required to adopt rules prescribing the time for filing and serving opposition and reply papers, if any, relating to a motion under §1167.4 (motion to quash) or CCP §1170.7 (summary judgment motion) in an unlawful detainer action. Stats 2007, ch 113, §2. See §§10.24, 11.37.

Effective January 1, 2008, discovery statutes were substantially amended to shorten time periods in discovery proceedings, including propounding and responding to discovery requests, and in motions to enforce discovery rights in unlawful detainer actions. Stats 2007, ch 113. See §§11.5-11.30.

A judge's failure to respond to a CCP §170.1(a)(7) challenge (disqualification for physical impairment), after the issuance of a permanent injunction on a judgment which had become final, did not amount to a "consent" to the disqualification. North Beverly Park Homeowner's Ass'n v Bisno (2007) 147 CA4th 762, 54 CR3d 644. See §12.3.

A party may exercise a post-appeal peremptory challenge if the matter is assigned, on remand, to the trial judge who originally heard the case. CCP §170.6(a)(2). However, on remand, a party may only exercise one post-appeal peremptory challenge even if that party did not make a pre-appeal challenge. Casden v Superior Court (2006) 140 CA4th 417, 44 CR3d 474. See §12.5.

Under CCP §473(b) a reversal from default judgment was required after the court struck a defendants' answer as discovery sanction and then entered default and a default judgment. Matera v McLeod (2006) 145 CA4th 44, 51 CR3d 331. See §13.8.

After a landlord dismissed an unlawful detainer suit that claimed the tenant was holding over, the court ruled that CC §1717 did not apply and defendant, as prevailing party under CCP §1032(a)(4), was entitled to attorney fees. Drybread v Chipain Chiropractic Corp. (2007) 151 CA4th 1063, 60 CR3d 580. See §13.27.

In a case currently on review, a court, in allowing attorney fees when the party was a self-represented attorney, referred to case law concerning Fed R Civ P 11, on which CCP §128.7 is modeled. Musaelian v Adams (review granted Oct. 10, 2007, S156045; superseded opinion at 153 CA4th 882, 63 CR3d 603). See §13.28.

In determining the res judicata effect of a judgment, the court in McAlister v Essex Prop. Trust (CD Cal 2007) 504 F Supp 2d 903 found the judgment was res judicata effect because tenants prevailed on affirmative defense based on discrimination in unlawful detainer action. In Stein v Braum Inv. & Dev., Inc. (9th Cir Cal 2007) 2007 US App Lexis 18971, however, the state court judgment was not given res judicata effect because record did not establish that tenants' defense based on discrimination was fully and fairly litigated in eviction action. See §13.39.

In Gill Petroleum, Inc. v Hayer (2006) 137 CA4th 826, 40 CR3d 648, the court held that while CCP §1179 requires a tenant to pay past rent due as a condition to obtaining relief from forfeiture, the trial court retains broad equitable discretion to determine other conditions for relief. See §13.56.

In Colony Hill v Ghamaty (2006) 142 CA4th 1408, 48 CR3d 798 the court of appeal lacked jurisdiction to review an attorney fee award because the order granting fees was neither included in the judgment nor separately appealed. See §13.59.

Bankruptcy Procedures. An insurer does not violate the automatic stay when it determines its obligations under a policy and acts to withdraw the defense of a prepetition lawsuit. In re Benz (BAP 9th Cir 2007) 368 BR 861. See §14.8.

When a proof of claim is filed, the bankrupt tenant's security deposit must be applied to the capped amount of damages allowable under 11 USC §502(b)(6), even if the deposit is in the form of a letter of credit. In re Connectix Corp. (Bankr ND Cal 2007) 372 BR 488. The rule requiring application of a letter of credit to a capped claim may not apply if no proof of claim is filed. EOP-Colonnade of Dallas Ltd. Partnership v. Faulkner (In re Stonebridge Technols., Inc.) (5th Cir 2005) 430 F3d 260. See §§14.12, 14.55.

When a landlord's motion to dismiss a bankruptcy case for bad faith is granted, the landlord may, in a separate state court proceeding, recover the attorney's fees it incurred in obtaining dismissal of the bankruptcy matter. Circle Star Assocs. v Liberate Technols. (2007) 147 CA4th 1203, 55 CR3d 232. See §14.32, 14.51.

Any order under 11 USC §365(d)(4)(B) extending the initial (120-day) deadline in which a landlord must accept or reject the lease must be entered before the deadline expires, and the court has no discretion to extend the time after the date expires. In re Tubular Technols. LLC (Bankr D SC 2006) 362 BR 243. See §14.44.

A utility bill, usually sent by the landlord to the tenant on a monthly basis, but because of a malfunctioning meter was billed postpetition in one lump sum for 18-month prepetition period, was not required to be paid under §365(d)(3). In re Pac-West Telecomm, Inc. (Bankr Del 2007) 2007 Bankr Lexis 3332 (unpublished). See §14.45.

A debtor's default under a covenant requiring continuous operations was an "historical fact" that could not be cured and rendered the contract unassembled. Worthington v GMC (In re Claremont Acquisition Corp.) (9th Cir 1997) 113 F3d 1029. See §14.45A.

The United States Supreme Court confirmed that a contract allowing recovery of attorney fees that is enforceable under substantive nonbankruptcy law is enforceable in a bankruptcy context unless the Bankruptcy Code expressly provides otherwise. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. of Am. v Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2007) 549 US 443, 167 L Ed 2d 178, 127 S Ct 1199. The holding has had a material impact on litigants seeking fees in bankruptcy proceedings. For example, DeRoche v Arizona Indus. Comm. (In re DeRoche) (9th Cir 2006) 434 F3d 1188, cited in the 2006 update, was vacated and remanded for further consideration consistent with Travelers. DeRoche v Arizona Indus. Comm. (In re DeRoche) (2007) ___ US ___, 167 L Ed 361, 127 S Ct 1873. Another bankruptcy court has granted an amended motion to recover fees based on the change in law represented by Travelers. Qmect, Inc., v Burlingame Capital Partners II, LP (In re Qmect, Inc.) (Bankr ND Cal 2007) 368 BR 882. See §14.51.

Debtors have much latitude to reject executory contracts (including leases), and courts will apply a liberal business judgment rule to the decision. See, e.g., Agarwal v Pomona Valley Med. Group, Inc. (In re Pomona Valley Med. Group, Inc.) (9th Cir 2007) 476 F3d 665, 670. See §14.53.

A bare objection to a claim, without substance, may be inadequate to overcome the presumption of a claim's validity, even if the claim lacks appropriate documentation. Campbell v Verizon Wireless S-CA (In re Campbell) (BAP 9th Cir 2005) 336 BR 430. See §14.55.

The Ninth Circuit confirmed that claims for damages not directly arising from the rejection of the lease are not limited by the §502(b)(6) cap. Saddleback Valley Community Church v. El Toro Materials Co. (In re El Toro Materials Co.) (9th Cir 2007) 2007 US App Lexis 22991 (unpublished). See §14.55.

A debtor's bad faith concealment of assets can work a forfeiture of the debtor' right to convert from Chapter 7 to Chapter 13. Marrama v Citizens Bank of Massachusetts (2007) 549 US 365, 166 L Ed 2d 956, 127 S Ct 1105. See §14.56.

February 2007 Update

Limited Scope Representation. Limited scope representation (also called "unbundling") is a relationship between an attorney and a client in which the scope of the legal services provided by the attorney will be limited to specific tasks. To assist attorneys in this area, the State Bar of California has created guidelines. Handy checklists were added to the book in this 2007 update so that confusion and malpractice claims can be avoided or minimized. See §§4.2A-4.2B, 5.4A-5.4B. Unlawful detainer actions are a prime area for unbundled services, both for tenants and landlords. While tenants are more likely to need limited scope representation, many practitioners find that low income landlords also benefit from such assistance. See §§9.23A, 10.3A.

Supreme Court Updates. The supreme court decided in Wasatch Prop. Mgmt. v Degrate (2005) 35 C4th 1111, 29 CR3d 262 that when a landlord terminates or fails to renew a Section 8 contract, a tenant is entitled to, under CC §1954.535, a 90-day notice of termination. The 90-day notice is required regardless of whether or not the property is under rent control. The court also implicitly condoned the use of a no-cause notice by finding that the tenant was entitled to have such a notice be a 90-day notice. See §1.36.

In Apartment Ass'n, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (2006) 136 CA4th 119, 38 CR3d 575, the supreme court denied the petition for review of a court of appeals, holding that CC §1954.535 preempts a city ordinance which prohibits a landlord, after termination or nonrenewal of a Section 8 housing contract, from ever charging the tenant more than the tenant's portion of the rent. See §§1.36, 3.66, 7.19, 7.25, 7.25B.

The California Supreme Court ruled that a city may deny a rental subsidy to a lessee of city property that discriminates on the basis of sexual orientation. Evans v City of Berkeley (2006) 38 C4th 1, 40 CR3d 205. See §5.7.

The supreme court decided Cacho v Boudreau (2007) 40 C4th 341, 53 CR3d 43, overruling the court of appeal, which had invalidated a landlord's pass-through of a proportional share of real property taxes. The court of appeal had ruled that because the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §798.49(d)(4)) expressly excludes property taxes from the provision allowing local governments to permit pass-throughs of government-imposed fees and assessments, the MRL therefore preempted local ordinances to the contrary. The supreme court disagreed. See §§6.15, 6.29-6.30.

Fair Housing. Congress has amended the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 USC §1437-1437z-7) to prevent a public housing agency, or a landlord operating under that act, from discriminating against victims of domestic violence, dating violence, or stalking and has provided a means for the landlord to obtain a certification of the tenant's status as a victim of domestic violence and/or stalking. See §§1.33, 1.36, 2.15A, 2.17, 2.19.

In Vance v Bakas (ND Cal, Mar. 1, 2006, No. C-05-3385) 2006 US Dist Lexis 11183, the court found that plaintiffs stated a claim for disparate impact on the basis of familial status and sex under the federal Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §§3601-3631) and the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) where the landlord informed the plaintiffs they would not be allowed to rent the property for the operation of a home day-care business. See §§2.5, 2.9B.

Several communities across the country have enacted ordinances requiring landlords to screen tenant households for legal residency status, thus making it a crime to rent to households with members lacking documentation of legal residency. At least one California municipality has adopted such an ordinance, which is being challenged in federal court. A federal court in Pennsylvania has issued (on supremacy, due process, equal protection, and FHA grounds) a temporary restraining order enjoining enforcement of a similar ordinance. Lozano, et al. v City of Hazelton (MD Penn. 2006) No. 06-cv-56-JMM. See §§2.19, 4.14.

In Ross v Ragingwire Telecommunications, Inc. (review granted Nov. 30, 2005, S138130; superseded opinion at 132 CA4th 590, 33 CR3d 803), the court held that a request to permit marijuana use prescribed for a disability pursuant to Compassionate Use Act (Health & S C §11362.5) is an unreasonable accommodation request. See §2.27A.

A landlord is under no obligation to provide accommodations unless a request is made, but requests do not need to include the words "reasonable accommodations" or "modifications." Douglas v Kriegsfeld Corp. (DC 2005) 884 A2d 1109. See §2.27C.

A court may not award minimum monetary and other monetary damages under CC §52 if plaintiff has not proven intentional discrimination. Gunther v Lin (2006) 144 CA4th 223, 50 CR3d 317. See §2.57.

Registered sex offenders are not a "protected class" under the Unruh Act. 89 Ops Cal Atty Gen 85 (2006). See §2.57.

The exclusion of a transgender individual from a nightclub for failure to conform to a dress code that prohibited men from wearing dresses or skirts is arbitrary and therefore discriminatory under the Unruh Act. The Department of Fair Employment and Housing, however, may not claim a trebling of damages in cases brought under the Unruh Act before the Fair Employment and Housing Commission (FEHC). DFEH v Marion's Place (2006) (FEHC Decision 03-04-070, Feb. 1, 2006) 2006 CAFEHC Lexis 1. See §§2.58-2.59.

A plaintiff's acceptance of CCP §998 offer precludes recovery of attorney fees under the Unruh Act because there is no finding of defendant's liability under the Act. Doran v North State Grocery (2006) 137 CA4th 484, 491, 39 CR3d 922. See §2.59.

Tenant Rights During Tenancy. Abatement is not available in a commercial lease. In Underwood v Corsino (2005) 133 CA4th 132, 34 CR3d 542, the trial court's abatement of a commercial tenant's rent was reversed even when the tenant had successfully defended an unlawful detainer action based on a theory that the landlord's conduct had frustrated the purpose of the lease. See §§3.15A, 3.18, 10.58, 12.28.

Where plaintiff's damages derive solely from breach of contract, plaintiff may not recover damages for emotional stress arising solely from property damage or economic injury, as contrasted with personal injury. Framing the cause of action in terms of negligence does not avoid this rule. Butler-Rupp v Lourdeaux (2005) 134 CA4th 1220, 36 CR3d 685. See §§3.67, 5.22.

Once having undertaken to provide security services, a property owner may be liable if the security services are provided in a negligent manner. Mukthar v Latin Am. Sec. Serv. (2006) 139 CA4th 284, 42 CR3d 563. See §§3.68, 3.68C.

In addition to showing that harmful conduct was foreseeable and that there was a breach of duty, the injured party must also show a causal link between the injury and the defendant's failure to provide adequate security measures. Rinehart v Boys & Girls Club (2005) 133 CA4th 419, 34 CR3d 677. See §§3.68, 3.68C.

A lease requiring a tenant to maintain and repair a roof may not reasonably be construed to require the tenant to replace the roof with a new roof. ASP Props. Group v Fard (2005) 133 CA4th 1257, 35 CR3d 343. See §3.73.

When bringing an anti-SLAPP (strategic lawsuit against public participation) motion in a retaliatory suit filed by a landlord, a party must achieve a practical benefit in order to receive an award of attorney fees. In Mann v Quality Old Time Serv., Inc. (2006) 139 CA4th 328, 42 CR3d 607, attorney fees were awarded when one cause of action was eliminated by an anti-SLAPP motion, thereby narrowing the scope of the lawsuit, limiting discovery, reducing potential recoverable damages, and altering the settlement posture of the case. See §§5.18A, 13.40A.

In Endres v Moran (2006) 135 CA4th 952, 37 CR3d 786, however, attorney fees were denied where the defendants' successful anti-SLAPP motion did not affect the factual allegations or change the possible recovery or the work involved in trying the case. See §§5.18A, 13.40A.

In Goldman v Cohen (2d Cir 2006) 445 F3d 152, the court ruled that the filing of an unlawful detainer action seeking recovery of unpaid residential rent is an initial communication within the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) (15 USC §§1692-1692o). This ruling necessitated landlord attorneys to include a debt validation notice in the unlawful detainer complaint. Congress addressed the problem in the Financial Services Regulatory Relief Act of 2006 (Pub L 109-351, 120 Stat 1966), specifically exempting "formal pleadings" as an initial communication under the FDCPA. See 15 USC §1692g(d). See §§9.45, 13.74.

The service of a notice to quit against commercial tenants that prevents them from conducting business is a frustration of purpose. The court also held that a court may abate rent if a residential landlord breaches the implied warranty of habitability, but there is no statutory authority to permit the abatement of rent for a commercial tenant who successfully defends an unlawful detainer action. Underwood v Corsino (2005) 133 CA4th 132, 34 CR3d 542. See §§3.15A, 3.18, 10.58, 12.28.

Mobilehome Tenancies. Mobilehome owners and mobilehome park operators are now subject to the Methamphetamine Contaminated Property Clean-Up Act of 2005 (Health & S C §§25400.10-25400.47), and they are responsible for the costs of remediation of methamphetamine storage areas and laboratories. Health & S C §§25400.19-25400.47. See §6.13.

Civil Code §798.20 was amended to prohibit discrimination on the additional bases of familial status, disability, or sexual orientation for membership in any private club or organization that is a condition for tenancy in a park. See

§§6.14A, 6.20.

Hillsboro Props. v City of Rohnert Park (2006) 138 CA4th 379, 41 CR3d 441 addressed remedies when a rent control ordinance is found unconstitutional. The park owner sought a rent increase as compensation for rent increases lost during a period in which the unconstitutional ordinance was in effect. The city's ordinance allowed rent increases to achieve a fair rate of return, but plaintiff only claimed an increase for the retroactive loss under the so-called "Kavanau adjustment" (Kavanau v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1993) 16 C4th 761, 66 CR2d 672; see §7.14). The court of appeal sustained the city's refusal to consider the adjustment because plaintiff did not prove he was denied a fair rate of return. See §§6.15, 7.14B, 7.38.

Rent Control. In Bohbot v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2005) 133 CA4th 456, 34 CR3d 827, the court held that a Santa Monica rent control requirement that owners obtain removal permits before owner occupancy does not apply to legally converted condominiums. The court also struck down a regulation that prohibited a landlord from bringing a second owner-occupancy case against a tenant within 4 years of an owner-occupancy case dismissed without prejudice prior to trial. The regulation conflicts with CCP §581, which allows a plaintiff to voluntarily dismiss a case without prejudice prior to commencement of the trial. Left intact, however, is a regulation which prohibits a landlord from bringing a second owner-occupancy case within 4 years against a tenant who prevailed on the merits in the first case. See §§4.52, 7.65, 7.68.

Where a mobilehome park owner fails to exhaust its administrative remedies, a court action based on inverse condemnation, due process, or equal protection is subject to a demurrer. Los Altos El Granada Investors v City of Capitola (2006) 139 CA4th 629, 43 CR3d 434. See §§7.11, 7.14B.

Where two rent control amendments conflict because they are amended by two different acts passed at different times, the last amendment repeals the first and operates as the only amendment to the original section. Garber v Levit (2006) 141 CA4th Supp 1, 46 CR3d 348. See §§7.17, 7.65.

HUD regulations preempt local rent control laws only during the period that the properties are subject to federal regulation. Neither a federal regulations nor a mortgage subsidy program preempts local rent control laws as applied to properties that are no longer subject to federal regulation. Independence Park Apartments v U.S. (Fed Cir 2006) 449 F3d 1235. See §7.19.

A landlord may not evict nonresident tenants who pay the rent where such tenants are still protected by the just cause eviction protections of a rent control law. Borten v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2006) 141 CA4th 1485, 47 CR3d 178. See §§7.23A-7.24.

Where an administrative decision does not substantially affect a vested right, the trial court will consider only whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence. Jaramillo v State Bd. for Geologists & Geophysicists (2006) 136 CA4th 880, 39 CR3d 170. See §7.51.

If the trial court, in reviewing a rent board decision, vacates the board's decision, it may not set the amount of a rent increase but must remand the case to the rent control board. Carson Gardens, LLC v City of Carson Mobilehome Park Rental Review Bd. (2006) 135 CA4th 856, 37 CR3d 768. See §7.51.

The San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance has been amended to require that a landlord have just cause to remove or sever certain housing services such as parking and/or storage from a tenancy. If the parties dispute a certain item, a court will determine whether just cause exists to sever and/or remove that item. Either party may then petition the rent board to determine the amount of the corresponding rent reduction. See §§1.59, 7.54.

A landlord may not be required, under a rent control ordinance, to notify tenants about their rights to receive relocation payments and to state the amount of payment which the landlord believes to be due. Such a requirement places a burden on the landlord to state a belief as to the tenant's entitlement to assistance and creates a substantive defense in eviction cases not contemplated by the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7). Johnson v City & County of San Francisco (2006) 137 CA4th 7, 40 CR3d 8. See §§7.64, 7.64F, 7.64H.

The court of appeal upheld an ordinance requiring payments to a tenant displaced by an Ellis Act withdrawal of that tenant's building. The court considered recent amendments to Govt C §7060.1(c) that allow a local public entity to mitigate adverse impacts on persons displaced by withdrawal of a rental unit. The court specifically left open the question of whether the amount of the payment in any particular case was reasonable. Pieri v City & County of San Francisco (2006) 137 CA4th 886, 40 CR3d 629. See §7.64H.

Terminating Tenancies. Effective January 1, 2007, CC §1946.1 was re-enacted with minor changes, so that currently (until January 1, 2010) landlords are required by CC §1946.1, in most situations, to give a 60-day notice to residential tenants to terminate a month-to-month or other periodic tenancy, unless any tenant has resided in the unit for less than 1 year or the unit is up for sale. The 60-day notice requirement does not affect commercial tenancies, nor does it impede the authority of local public entities to regulate the basis for an eviction of a residential tenant. CC §1946.1(g). See §8.22.

When a landlord wishes to terminate a periodic tenancy to sell a residential unit, CC §1946.1(d) requires the use of a 30-day notice if several requirements are met at the time the landlord gives the notice. See §8.22A.

Under CC §1946.1(e), after the landlord has given notice of termination, a residential tenant may also give notice to terminate the tenancy, provided that the tenant's notice is for a period at least as long as the term of the periodic tenancy (usually 30 days) and the proposed date of termination occurs before the landlord's proposed date of termination (usually 60 days). See §8.20.

Unlawful Detainer Proceedings. For purposes of the mandatory provision of CCP §473(b), a default means only a defendant's failure to answer a complaint, while a default judgment means only a judgment entered after the defendant has failed to answer and the defendant's default has been entered. Where a judgment was neither a default nor a default judgment for purposes of CCP §473(b), the mandatory relief provision of that statute did not apply. Vandermoon v Sanwong (2006) 142 CA4th 315, 47 CR3d 772. See §12.69.

If the moving party fails to properly give notice of the motion, the court's order setting aside the default and default judgment is void. Moghaddam v Bone (2006) 142 CA4th 283, 47 CR3d 602. See §§12.69, 13.8.

Relief under CCP §473(b) is not available from sanctions imposed for the deliberate failure to respond to discovery or oppose discovery motions. Jerry's Shell v Equilon Enters., LLC (2005) 134 CA4th 1058, 36 CR3d 637. See §13.8.

The court is also not permitted, under CCP §473(b), to set aside a summary judgment if the losing party's counsel filed an opposition, but failed to file an affidavit seeking a continuance to allow expert witness more time to examine evidence. Ambrose v Michelin N. Am., Inc. (2005) 134 CA4th 1350, 37 CR3d 1. See §13.8.

In seeking relief under CCP §473(b), an affidavit setting forth the attorney's "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect" must be signed by an attorney who represented the client and caused the mistake even if that attorney is not the attorney of record in the unlawful detainer case. SJP, LP v City of Los Angeles (2006) 136 CA4th 511, 39 CR3d 55. See §13.8.

An order granting summary judgment, unlike a summary judgment order, is not an appealable order and, thus, does not trigger the attorney fees motion filing deadline under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(b)(1). Saben, Earlix & Associates v Fillet (2005) 134 CA4th 1024, 36 CR3d 610. See §13.33C.

The court may award contract rent payable as a condition of relief from forfeiture of a lease under CCP §1179, even though the court's judgment awards per diem charges at a higher rate. Gill Petroleum, Inc. v Hayer (2006) 137 CA4th 826, 40 CR3d 648. See §13.56.

A motion for reconsideration may not extend the time to file an appeal. In Safeco Ins. Co. v Architectural Facades Unlimited, Inc. (2005) 134 CA4th 1477, 36 CR3d 754, the trial court granted defendants' motions for summary judgment. Three days after plaintiff filed its motion for reconsideration, the trial court signed and entered the judgment, divesting itself of jurisdiction to rule on the motion for reconsideration. As a result, the filing of plaintiff's reconsideration motion had no effect on the time limits to file a notice of appeal. Defendants' appeal, filed 66 days after the date of service of notice of entry of the judgment, was untimely. See §13.59.

Bankruptcy Procedures. The bankruptcy court has no authority to decline jurisdiction over a dispute concerning whether the automatic stay has been violated, nor may it attempt to avoid future automatic stays with an in rem order. Johnson v TRE Holdings (In re Johnson) (BAP 9th Cir 2006) 346 BR 190. See §§14.4, 14.7.

A willful violation of the automatic stay has been very broadly defined to include mere knowledge of the stay and intentionally taking the action; a good faith belief that the stay did not apply is irrelevant to whether a willful violation of it has occurred. Ozenne v Bendon (In re Ozenne) (BAP 9th Cir 2006) 337 BR 214. See §14.6.

A sanction of contempt should not be issued for violating the automatic stay or a discharge injunction without a finding of fact that the violation was made with actual knowledge of the injunction. ZiLog, Inc. v Corning (In re ZiLog, Inc.) (9th Cir 2006) 450 F3d 996. See §§14.6, 14.56.

Acts taken by the debtor itself are not considered subject to the stay. See Irwin Mortgage Co. v Tippett (In re Craig Tippett) (BAP 9th Cir 2006) 338 BR 82. See §14.8.

Rejection of a lease does not bar an action to recover on the balance of a security deposit, even if held as a letter of credit. First Ave. W. Bldg. LLC v James (In re Onecast Media, Inc.) (9th Cir 2006) 439 F3d 558. See §14.12.

United States Code, Title 11, §521(i)(1), added in the 2005 Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act (BAPCPA), mandates an "automatic" dismissal on the 46th day after a bankruptcy petition is filed, if a Chapter 7 or 13 debtor fails to file all of the information required, though it is unclear what is meant by "automatic." In re Riddle (Bankr SD Fla 2006) 344 BR 702. See §14.32.

Attorney fees are not recoverable in bankruptcy for litigating issues peculiar to federal bankruptcy law. An exception exists for the litigation of state law issues. DeRoche v Arizona Indus. Comm. (In re DeRoche) (9th Cir 2006) 434 F3d 1188. See §14.51.

Under 11 USC §502(a), a proof of claim is deemed allowed unless a party in interest objects. Filing a timely claim with sufficient documentation creates a presumption of the validity of the claim. If the debtor rebuts that presumption, however, the claimant has the burden of proving the amount of the claim. Litton Loan Servicing v Garvida (In re Garvida) (BAP 9th Cir 2006) 347 BR 697. A bare objection to a claim, without substance, may be inadequate to overcome the presumption of a claim's validity, even if the claim lacks appropriate documentation. Campbell v Verizon Wireless S-CA (In re Campbell) (BAP 9th Cir 2005) 336 BR 430. See §14.55.

If a lease is terminated under state law before a bankruptcy, the damages limitation of 1 year or 15 percent under 11 USC §502(b)(6)(A) will apply to all amounts accruing from that date, even if future damages attributable to lost rent for the full lease term were awarded to the landlord in a judgment before the bankruptcy. Attorney fees recoverable under such an action, however, may be claimed in addition to the capped amount of rental damages allowed by §502(b)(6). See Wall St. Plaza, LLC v JSJF Corp. (In re JSJF Corp.) (BAP 9th Cir 2006) 344 BR 94. See §14.55.

Effective January 1, 2007, an extensive reorganization of the California Rules of Court took effect. California Rules of Court cites in this publication have been updated to the new rule number. Concordance tables of old and new rule numbers and a link to any amendments to the Rules are available on http://www.ceb.com.

February 2006 Update

New Residential Lease Disclosures. In 2005, the legislature revised the disclosure requirements regarding Megan's Law (statewide database of registered sex offenders). It also established disclosure, remediation, and record-keeping obligations for property owners under Health & S C §25400.10 when the property is contaminated by methamphetamine. Civil Code §1940.7.5 was repealed; it required owners to disclose the presence of a controlled substance. See §§1.29, 3.10, 3.11B, 4.16C.

Supreme Court Updates. Contractual predispute jury trial waivers are invalid, but predispute arbitration and judicial reference agreements are enforceable. Grafton Partners LP v Superior Court (2005) 36 C4th 944, 32 CR3d 5. Proposed legislation would allow predispute waivers in commercial transactions. See §§1.30, 11.54.

Fair Housing. The supreme court allowed an action to proceed under the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) against a country club that discriminated against a member and her registered domestic partner in Koebke v Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 C4th 824, 31 CR3d 565. See §§2.21, 2.58, 10.67.

The Unruh Act was amended in 2005 to expressly prohibit landlords from discriminating on the basis of marital status and sexual orientation. See §§2.48, 2.57-2.58, 5.7, 10.67.

In uncodified declarations expressed in Stats 2005, ch 420, §2; the legislature stated that the classes protected from discrimination, as listed in the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §§51-52), are to be construed as illustrative rather than restrictive. See §§2.21, 2.58.

Effective January 1, 2006, persons protected under the Unruh Act include those who are perceived to have any particular characteristic of the listed classes in the Act or who associate with persons who have, or are perceived to have, any particular characteristic of the listed classes. CC §51(e)(5). See §§2.57-2.58, 8.118, 10.67.

A landlord's refusal to accept a Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher does not violate the source of income discrimination restrictions of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA), 15 USC §1691, because a residential lease is not a credit transaction. Laramore v Ritchie Realty Mgmt. Co. (7th Cir 2005) 397 F3d 544. See §2.9B.

A refusal to communicate with a home-seeker via a telephone relay-service operator for the deaf was held to be an illegal response to a request for reasonable accommodation by a disabled person in U.S. v Space Hunters, Inc. (SD NY 2004) 2004 US Dist Lexis 23699, WL 2674608, aff'd in part and vacated in part (2d Cir 2005) 429 F3d 416. See §2.27.

Two recent cases interpreting attorney fee provisions in the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA)

(Govt C §§12900-12996) are Graham v DaimlerChrysler (2004) 34 C4th 553, 21 CR3d 331, Horsford v Board of Trustees of Cal. State Univ. (2005) 132 CA4th 359, 33 CR3d 644, and EEOC v United Parcel Serv. (9th Cir 2005) 424 F3d 1060, discussed in §2.56.

The Fair Employment and Housing Act provides more protections than does CC §54.1 for tenants who need companion animals for psychiatric disabilities. See Auburn Woods I Homeowners Ass'n v FEHC (2004) 121 CA4th 1578, 18 CR3d 669. See §§1.62, 2.60.

Officers of a corporation cannot ordinarily be held personally liable for their failure to ensure the corporation's compliance with the Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631), except when an agent acts under the authority of a licensed real estate broker or if the corporate veil can be pierced. See Holley v Crank (9th Cir 2004) 400 F3d 667. See §2.68.

Landowner Duties & Liabilities. In Andrews v Mobile Aire Estates (2005) 125 CA4th 578, 22 CR3d 832, the court held that the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment requires a landlord to take reasonable measures to protect a tenant from the substantial annoyances of a neighboring tenant who resides on the same property. See §§3.5-3.7, 6.16.

Effective January 1, 2006, Health & S C §§25400.10-25400.46 established stringent remediation and record-keeping obligations for a property owner who has been notified by the city that the property is contaminated by methamphetamine. See §§1.29, 3.10, 3.11B, 4.16C.

The supreme court recently reiterated that even if a landowner has no duty to provide security guards or take expensive preventative measures when it has knowledge about potential criminal activity, it may still owe a duty by virtue of a special relationship to call 911 or give a warning, to protect a tenant, an invitee, or a customer from third-party criminal acts. See Morris v De La Torre (2005) 36 C4th 260, 30 CR3d 173; Delgado v Trax Bar & Grill (2005) 36 C4th 224, 30 CR3d 145; Wiener v Southcoast Childcare Ctrs., Inc. (2004) 32 C4th 1138, 12 CR3d 615, cited in §3.68C.

A court of appeal held that an exculpatory provision in a lease did not bar a commercial tenant's lawsuit for damages caused by mold caused by the landlord's "active" negligence. See Burnett v Chimney Sweep, LLC (2004) 123 CA4th 1057, 20 CR3d 562, cited in §3.69.

A landlord who sells his property is not liable to third parties injured after the sale, even if the injury was caused by the landlord's negligence before the sale—unless the landlord concealed the defect from the new owner. Lewis v Chevron U.S.A. Inc. (2004) 119 CA4th 690, 14 CR3d 636. See §3.71.

After a tenant abandons the lease, the landlord may withhold from the deposit only unpaid rent that has accrued as of the date the deposit is required to be refunded, but may not withhold or offset future rent damages the landlord may later recover under CC §1951.2. 250 L.L.C. v Photopoint Corp. (2005) 131 CA4th 703, 32 CR3d 296. See §§4.28C, 8.168, 8.173A, 8.175, 14.12.

For strategies and developments in rent control jurisdictions, where tenants may attempt to sublease their rent-controlled units (or not use them as a primary residence), see §§4.38, 7.23A, 7.28-7.28A, 7.38A.

For additional strategies for drafting late fee clauses in rental agreements following the decision in Orozco v Casimiro (2004) 121 CA4th Supp 7, 17 CR3d 175, see §§1.41, 4.43A, 8.40.

In Cook v City of Buena Park (2005) 126 CA4th 1, 23 CR3d 700, a court of appeal held unconstitutional on due process grounds a local ordinance in a non rent control jurisdiction that gave the local police chief discretion to force a landlord to evict tenants suspected of illegal drug activity because the landlord was given insufficient information or time to prevail in an eviction action and was required to prevail in the action to avoid criminal penalties. See §§4.44, 8.59.

Tenant Rights During Tenancy. A court of appeal held an option to renew a lease was not superseded by a later estoppel certificate, because read together the lease and estoppel certificate were ambiguous. See Minor v Tustin Avenue Investors, LLC (2004) 116 CA4th 264, 272, 10 CR3d 178. See §§4.41, 5.9.

When a landlord petitioned for injunctive relief against a tenant who demonstrated with others at the landlord's church, the court of appeal required the trial court to grant the tenant's anti-SLAPP motion, defeating the landlord's suit. Thomas v Quintero (2005) 126 CA4th 635, 24 CR3d 619. See §§5.18A, 5.37.

A new anti-SLAPP statute, CCP §425.18, operative October 5, 2005, limits the use of anti-SLAPP motions to strike in SLAPPback malicious prosecution actions by setting different standards and procedures for motions to strike in those actions. See §5.18A.

Mobilehome Tenancies. The preemptive nature of the HCD statutes was reaffirmed in County of Santa Cruz v Waterhouse (2005) 127 CA4th 1483, 26 CR3d 543. Also, the PUC provided additional clarity on costs that may be passed through via a rent increase in a two-phase PUC hearing process, resulting in Decision 04-04-043 (costs for serving the common areas, the submeter, the pedestal, and other specified costs) and Decision 04-11-033. See §§6.13, 6.15.

As a result of the decision in Lingle v Chevron U.S.A., Inc. (2005) 544 US 528, 161 L Ed 2d 876, 125 S Ct 2074, and in response to the City of Cotati's petition for rehearing, the Ninth Circuit withdrew its prior opinion and affirmed the District Court's decision in Cashman v City of Cotati (9th Cir 2005) 415 F3d 1027. See §§6.15, 7.10.

In a second round of appeals in MHC, Inc. v City of San Jose (9th Cir 2005) 420 F3d 1022, the court held that the fair return challenges were barred by res judicata arising from the state court decision and that other claims were unripe for lack of exhausting administrative remedies or were barred by the statute of limitations. See §6.15.

In H.N. & Frances C. Berger Found. v City of Escondido (2005) 127 CA4th 1, 25 CR3d 19, the court of appeal invalidated a rent increase based on averaging three different rent increase rates, because two of them were not within the range of reasonable rents based on a fair rate of return standard, but the court ruled that the determination of fair rent by the rent board need not follow any specific formula in making its determination. See §§6.15, 7.12-7.13, 7.42, 7.47.

A mobilehome rent control ordinance adopted by a city council after presentation of an initiative petition, and then amended with retroactive effect by the council to correct inadvertent and insignificant errors was upheld by the court of appeal in MHC Fin. Ltd. Partnership Two v City of Santee (2005) 125 CA4th 1372, 23 CR3d 622. See §§6.15, 7.10, 7.12.

In Andrews v Mobile Aire Estates (2005) 125 CA4th 578, 22 CR3d 832, the court held a landlord could be liable for not taking reasonable measures to protect a tenant from the substantial annoyances of a neighboring tenant in a mobilehome park. See §§3.5-3.7, 6.16.

The Attorney General ruled, in 87 Ops Cal Atty Gen 148 (2004), that a local government may promote the development and preservation of senior mobilehome parks despite the prohibition in Govt C §65008 on local government actions to discriminate on the basis of age. See §6.18.

Mobilehome park management may not require a first right of refusal for a mobilehome sold in the park to a third party in rental agreements entered into or renewed on or after January 1, 2006. Such an agreement may be separately negotiated after the lease is in effect. CC §798.19.5. See §§6.20, 6.54.

Effective January 1, 2006, CC §798.36(b) authorizes mobilehome park owners to charge a reasonable fee for cleaning or clearing a resident's lot if the resident fails to do so after notice. See §6.33.

Rent Control. (Also see developments in "Mobilehome Tenancies," above.) In San Remo Hotel, LP v City & County of San Francisco (2005) 545 US 323, 162 L Ed 2d 315, 125 S Ct 2491, the United States Supreme Court rejected the arguments of an owner who sought review of a federal takings claim de novo in federal court after litigating and losing the federal takings claims in the California courts, which had decided the owner's state takings claims under an interpretation of California law that was coextensive with federal law. See §7.14.

A constitutional challenge to rent control in commercial tenancies was heard in Lingle v Chevron U.S.A., Inc. (2005) 544 US 528, 161 L Ed 2d 876, 125 S Ct 2074, which reversed a summary judgment in favor of an oil company that had challenged a state rent cap on gasoline franchises. See §§6.15, 7.10-7.11.

Under Wasatch Prop. Mgmt. v Degrate (2005) 35 C4th 1111, 29 CR3d 262, Section 8 tenants are entitled to 90-day notice prior to eviction rather than the standard 30-day notice, regardless of whether the unit is subject to any rent control law. See §§1.36, 7.19, 10.66.

A Santa Monica rent board regulation that would deny rent control protection if the tenant does not make the rental unit the tenant's principal place of residence was upheld as a valid exercise of the board's rule making authority in Bisno v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2005) 130 CA4th 816, 30 CR3d 441. See §§7.23A, 7.38A.

For strategies and developments in rent control jurisdictions, where tenants may attempt to sublease their rent-controlled units (or not use them as a primary residence), see §§4.38, 7.23A, 7.28-7.28A, 7.38A.

An owner of a hotel that is being withdrawn from the rental housing market need not comply with requirements imposed by the city's sprinkler ordinance, nor need the owner first obtain a permit to convert or demolish the building. Reidy v City & County of San Francisco (2004) 123 CA4th 580, 19 CR3d 894. In response to Reidy, the Ellis Act was amended to allow cities having a population of over 1,000,000 to prohibit most residential hotel owners from going out of the residential hotel business. See §§7.64, 7.64B.

Damages After Lease Termination. The landlord's duty to mitigate damages under CC §1951.2 does not require him to run the business that was operated by the tenant, nor to sell the property. Therefore, profits made from the landlord's running the business or selling the property will not be deducted from recoverable damages. Lu v Grewal (2005) 130 CA4th 841, 30 CR3d 623. See §§5.19, 8.14.

Unlawful Detainer Procedures. Between January 1, 2003, and January 1, 2006, landlords were required by CC §1946.1 to give a 60-day notice to residential tenants to terminate a month-to-month tenancy, but that law was repealed by its own terms. See §§8.22, 8.69. Consequently, chap 8 was substantially amended.

There are new judicial council forms for proving service of summons; the landlord must file with the court Judicial Council Form POS-010, Proof of Service of Summons or Judicial Council Form POS-015, Notice And Acknowledgment of Receipt with the original summons. See CCP §417.10(a) and chaps 9-13.

Many California Rules of Court applicable to unlawful detainer practice in chaps 9-14 were revised.

The statutes providing relief for underpayment of filing fees (CCP §§411.20-411.21) were substantially revised. See §10.1B.

The legislature created a complex statutory scheme (see Govt C §§26826, 68511.3, 70612, 70614; Bus & P C §§6321-6322.1) to establish a uniform schedule of filing fees and other civil fees for the superior courts. See Stats 2005, chs 75, 706, cited in §10.5.

A party whose attorney failed to file a timely answer is entitled to mandatory relief from a default judgment under CCP §473(b). Solv-All v Superior Court (2005) 131 CA4th 1003, 32 CR3d 202. See §§10.48, 13.8.

Effective January 1, 2005, the Judicial Council adopted a mandatory request form for setting an unlawful detainer case for trial. Tenants may use it to request a jury trial if not already done in the answer. See Judicial Council Form UD-150, Request/Counter-Request to Set Case for Trial—Unlawful Detainer and discussion throughout chap 11.

Effective July 1, 2005, the "Civil Discovery Act of 1986" (CCP §§2016-2036) was repealed and the new "Civil Discovery Act" (CCP §§2016.010-2036.050) became operative. In chapter 11, we replaced all 1986 discovery citations with citations to the new Act. See §11.4.

Revised Judicial Council judgment forms (both stipulated and court judgments) for unlawful detainer actions are reprinted in chaps 9, 13.

The trial judge who ruled on a summary judgment motion is not subject to a peremptory challenge following a remand by the court of appeal for the trial court to explain its reasoning. Geddes v Superior Court (2005) 126 CA4th 417, 23 CR3d 857. See §§12.5, 12.7.

The jury instructions on the implied warranty of habitability in chap 12 were revised to address issues in current practice.

Bankruptcy Procedures. The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act (BAPCPA) (Pub L 109-8, 119 Stat 23) generally applies to bankruptcy petitions filed on or after October 17, 2005. But some provisions affect proceedings occurring either before or after the October date if the bankruptcy was pending on the enactment date (April, 2005). Many changes significantly affect landlord-tenant relationships and include:

- limitations on the availability of the stay to individual or joint debtors who are repeat bankruptcy filers (see §4.4);
- two additional exceptions to the automatic stay that apply to residential tenants, if the landlord already has a judgment for possession, or if the landlord is attempting to evict the tenant for endangering the property or illegally using controlled substances on it (see §§14.3, 14.8-14.9, 14.16, 14.16B-14.17, 14.19, 14.31);
- extensive revisions making dismissal of bankruptcy cases more readily available (see §14.32);
- standards applicable to determination of whether a transfer is a preference (see §14.37);
- a firm deadline for assumption or rejection of commercial leases (see §§14.43-14.44, 14.47-14.49, 14.53);
- clarification of the effect of a non-monetary default on a debtor-tenant's right to assume a lease (see §14.45A);
- stronger protections against a non-conforming lease assignment (see §14.50); and
- capping a landlord's administrative claim for rejection of a lease after it has been assumed in bankruptcy (see §§14.43, 14.52, 14.55).

Debtors have no burden of proving to creditors that the stay exists before liability for violating the stay can be imposed. Morris v Peralta (In re Peralta) (BAP 9th Cir 2004) 317 BR 381, 389. See §14.6.

A Ninth Circuit court affirmed the preclusive effect of a state court fraud judgment on a nondischargeability action in bankruptcy court. See Muegler v Bening (9th Cir 2005) 413 F3d 980, cited in §§14.15, 14.20.

Bankruptcy courts are moving toward requiring electronic filing and eliminating paper filing; counsel should consult local rules for current filing requirements and how to apply for an exemption from them. See §14.24 and Warning in §14.58.

It is improper for a solvent tenant to use the bankruptcy process to obtain the 11 USC §502(b)(6) cap on its landlord's damages for breach of a commercial lease. See NMSBPCSLDHB, LP v Integrated Telecom Express, Inc. (In re Integrated Telecom Express, Inc.) (3d Cir 2004) 384 F3d 108, and In re Liberate Technols. (Bankr ND Cal 2004) 314 BR 206, cited in §14.32.

Before the 2005 Act, there was a statutory presumption in favor of allowing bankruptcy relief requested by the debtor. See Voelkel v Naylor (In re Voelkel) (BAP 9th Cir 2005) 322 BR 138, which reversed a bankruptcy court's order dismissing a case because the court did not cite facts rebutting the statutory presumption of 11 USC §707(b) and articulate the clear abuse in the evidence. In the 2005 Act, however, the presumption has been deleted from §707(b). See §14.32.

A motion to dismiss may be appropriate when an otherwise solvent debtor files bankruptcy for the purpose of obtaining the limit on a landlord's claims for damages for breach of lease provided by 11 USC §502(b)(6). See NMSBPCSLDHB, LP v Integrated Telecom Express, Inc. (In re Integrated Telecom Express, Inc.) (3d Cir 2004) 384 F3d 108, cited in §§14.32, 14.56.

Attorney fee issues continue to be litigated; if the litigation is commenced by the trustee and fails, fundamental fairness may support an award of attorneys fees to the prevailing party, as an administrative expense. In re Good Taste, Inc. (Bankr D Alaska 2004) 317 BR 112. See §14.51.

A bankruptcy court has equitable authority to allow rejection of a commercial lease retroactive to the date of the petition. Pacific Shores Dev., LLC v At Home Corp. (In re At Home Corp.) (9th Cir 2004) 392 F3d 1064. See §14.53.

Security deposits may only be applied to the capped amount of damages allowable on a landlord claim. See AMB Prop., LP v Official Creditors for the Estate of AB Liquidating Corp. (In re AB Liquidating Corp.) (9th Cir 2005) 416 F3d 961, cited in §14.55.

Bankruptcy courts continue to impose sanctions against debtor's counsel for bad faith petitions and frivolous tactics. See Miller v Cardinale (In re Deville) (9th Cir 2004) 361 F3d 539; Smyth v City of Oakland (In re Brooks-Hamilton) (BAP 9th Cir 2005) 329 BR 270. See §14.56.

New mandatory Judicial Council forms for state court, giving notice of the automatic stay and of modification or termination of the stay are in §§14.57, 14.67A.

Newly revised mandatory stay relief motion forms for bankruptcy courts in the Central District are reprinted in §§14.65-14.66A.

February 2005 Update

Legislation Affecting Residential Tenancies. Effective January 1, 2005, a landlord may not demand that a tenant pay rent or security deposits in cash unless the tenant has previously attempted to pay the landlord with a check drawn on insufficient funds or the tenant has instructed the drawee to stop payment on a check, draft, or money order. Even then, the landlord may only demand a cash payment for no more than 3 months after a check bounces. CC §1947.3. See §§1.21A, 1.30, 1.40, 1.42, 3.3A, 3.65, 4.30, 4.33.

Effective January 1, 2005, CC §1940.1(a) was amended to prohibit a proprietor from requiring an occupant of a residential hotel to move or to check out and reregister before the expiration of 30 days' occupancy if a purpose is to have that occupant maintain transient occupancy status under CC §1940(b)(1), which would deprive the tenant of the protections under CC §§1940-1954.1. See §1.3C.

Effective January 1, 2005, hotels that have a contractual obligation to provide a guest room to an arriving person may use self-help to evict guests who do not pay rent or who do not leave on the agreed date by the agreed time, with conditions. CC §1865. See §1.3D.

An amendment to federal law governing the contractual rights of members of the military (50 USC App §§501-596) allows a servicemember to terminate a lease agreement on the giving of 30 days' written notice. See §§1.73, 8.21A.

Ellis Act Cases. In Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. v Pearl Street, LLC (2003) 109 CA4th 1308, 135 CR2d 903, the rent board sued to enjoin the landlord from entering into sham tenancies in order to evade the recontrol provisions of the Ellis Act. The landlord claimed that the suit was a strategic lawsuit against public participation (SLAPP), but the court disagreed, holding that the suit was based primarily on whether the landlord was entitled to charge market rents.

See §§7.64C, 10.38A.

To curtail attempts to circumvent notice and reporting requirements for Ellis Act evictions, San Francisco added provisions to its eviction control ordinance that punish both civilly and criminally a landlord who, among other things, requests that a tenant move, or threatens to recover possession either verbally or in writing (unless the landlord has a good faith intent to evict and actually goes forward with it), or seeks or obtains a tenant's waiver of rights under the ordinance. These provisions were held to be an unconstitutional denial of free speech in Baba v Board of Supervisors of the City & County of San Francisco (2004) 124 CA4th 504, 21 CR3d 428. See §§7.64F, 7.67.

Unlawful Detainer Procedures. Effective January 1, 2005, CCP §1166 requires a residential landlord to attach to an unlawful detainer complaint copies of the termination notice and, in many cases, the applicable written lease or rental agreement. Also, for both residential and nonresidential tenancies, the complaint must allege the method used to serve the required termination notice by either completing all related items on the Judicial Council form or attaching to the complaint the proof of service of the notice. Pleading verification details are also affected. See §§9.37, 9.42, 10.31.

A landlord may not evict a tenant on the basis that water heaters must be braced to protect against earthquake damage. Health & S C §19211(c). See §§8.23, 8.72.

A group of tenants may sue to enjoin their evictions and to address housing rights violations before the unlawful detainer actions are actually filed. See Price v City of Stockton (9th Cir 2004) 390 F3d 1105, cited in §§11.63, 11.63B.

A pro bono attorney is entitled to monetary sanctions on a successful discovery motion, even if the attorney does not charge the client for services in connection with the case. Do v Superior Court (2003) 109 CA4th 1210, 135 CR2d 855. See §11.29.

If the defendant in an unlawful detainer case prevails within 60 days after the complaint is filed by either dismissal or judgment, access to the court file is permanently blocked for persons other than the parties and their counsel. CCP §1161.2. See §5.15.

The tenant may be able to file a special motion to strike the unlawful detainer under CCP §425.16 on the ground that the landlord's suit is a strategic lawsuit against public participation (SLAPP), but some courts are not receptive to such motions. See §§5.18A, 8.110, 10.38A.

Housing Discrimination and Civil Rights. Fair housing laws not only prohibit discriminatory refusals to rent, but also require a landlord to assume reasonable financial burdens to accommodate disabled residents, which may include alteration of administrative polices against allowing guarantors on leases (Giebeler v M & B Assocs. (9th Cir 2003) 343 F3d 1143) or allowing pets (Auburn Woods I Homeowners Ass'n v FEHC (2004) 121 CA4th 1578, 18 CR3d 669; Janush v Charities Hous. Dev. Corp. (ND Cal 2000) 169 F Supp 2d 1133). See §§2.27, 10.68.

No showing of intentional discrimination is required under the California Unruh Act when violation of the Act is premised on violation of the federal Americans with Disabilities Act. Lentini v California Ctr. for the Arts (9th Cir 2004) 370 F3d 837. See §§2.5, 2.57, 10.68.

All public housing authorities must adopt five-year Public Housing Agency Plans (PHA Plans) that must include the policy on admissions, including residency preferences, which may be adopted or implemented only in accordance with fair housing and other nondiscrimination laws. Langlois v Abington Hous. Auth. (D Mass 2002) 234 F Supp 2d 33. See §2.14.

Over the last decade, many affordable-housing developments have been financed with state and federal "tax credits." A new section was added to chapter 2 describing how project owners must comply with antidiscrimination laws. See §2.18A.

A district court's dismissal of an action that alleged discrimination and retaliation based on the plaintiff's gender, under the federal Fair Housing Act was reversed in Edwards v Marin Park, Inc. (9th Cir 2004) 356 F3d 1058. The court of appeals held that her allegation that defendant "targeted… a disproportionate number of women" met the relaxed pleading standards of federal procedures. See §§2.30, 6.14A.

The Department of Fair Employment and Housing may request the Fair Employment and Housing Commission to conduct mediation of a complaint at any time after the complaint is filed. The DFEH may, however, withdraw a request for mediation at any time to pursue an investigation. See §2.54.

Habitability and Premises Liability. A long-term failure to comply with housing or building codes may subject an owner to penalties, sanctions, and attorney fees and costs. See City of Santa Paula v Narula (2003) 114 CA4th 485, 8 CR3d 75, cited in a new section of chapter 4 (§4.49) discussing (from a landlord's perspective) repairs and building code compliance.

Because collateral estoppel precludes an issue decided in small claims court from being relitigated (Pitzen v Superior Court (2004) 120 CA4th 1374, 16 CR3d 628), it may be unacceptably risky to have a tenant litigate in small claims court a complex issue such as implied warranty of habitability without counsel. See §§5.16, 5.39.

In MacKinnon v Truck Ins. Exch. (2003) 31 C4th 635, 3 CR3d 228, a "pollution exclusion" provision in a comprehensive general liability insurance policy was held not to preclude coverage for the landlord's defense and indemnity in a tenant's suit for injuries from exposure to pesticides negligently applied by the landlord. See §3.47.

In Vasquez v Residential Invs., Inc. (2004) 118 CA4th 269, 12 CR3d 846, a landlord who, after notice, failed to replace a broken glass pane in the door to tenant's apartment was held to owe a duty to replace the pane, because the burden of doing so was minimal compared to the foreseeable danger of entry by criminals. See §3.68B.

For new developments in premises liability in the commercial context, see §3.68C.

In Yuzon v Collins (2004) 116 CA4th 149, 10 CR3d 18, an invitee who was bitten by a tenant's dog sued the landlord, but the court upheld summary judgment for the landlord, finding no substantial evidence that the landlord knew the dog was vicious. See §3.72.

Mobilehome Tenancies. Effective July 7, 2004, new California regulations governing mobilehome parks and special occupancy parks took effect. See §6.1.

Effective January 1, 2005, CC §798.16(b) requires that mobilehome park management must return an executed copy of the rental agreement to the homeowner within 15 business days after management has received the rental agreement signed by the homeowner. See §6.21.

The Recreational Vehicle Park Occupancy Law (CC §§799.20-799.79) governs the removal of recreational vehicles and park trailers (of defaulting residents) from recreational vehicle parks (or the recreational vehicle portion of a mobilehome park). Effective January 1, 2005, newly enacted CC §§1866-1867 permit the summary removal of vehicles, including recreational vehicles. See §§6.1, 6.5.

Park management may neither charge a homeowner for initial landscaping on the space nor require the homeowner to purchase, rent, or lease goods or services from any person for the landscaping or, effective January 1, 2005, for landscaping, remodeling, or maintenance. See §6.39.

Effective January 1, 2005, if a third-party billing agent prepares utility bills when park management provides utility services, CC §798.38(c) requires management to disclose specified information about that agent in each resident's billing. Further, Pub Util C §739.5(g) requires the PUC to accept and respond to complaints regarding the rights of master meter customers and users. See §6.43.

Under CC §798.25, management can amend park rules and regulations without homeowners' consent after 6 months' written notice. Effective January 1, 2005, CC §798.25(d) permits management to avoid the resident consent requirement and the 6-month notice period if the amendment is mandated by a change in law, ordinance, or government regulation. See §6.45.

For special rules, effective January 1, 2005, for the removal of vehicles from a homeowner's or resident's driveway or designated parking space, see CC §798.28.5(b), cited in §6.47.

Rules governing the conversion of mobilehome parks to another use were amended effective January 1, 2005, in Govt C §65863.7, which triggers the protection of the Mobilehome Parks Act (Health & S C §§18200-18700) if a park closes or changes use as a result of an order by an enforcement agency. See §§6.13, 6.50.

Some mobilehome parks include many utilities or service fees in the rent. In Yucaipa Mobilehome Residents' Ass'n v Knollwood Mobilehome Estate, Ltd. (CPUC Decision 04-05-056, Oct. 28, 2004; http://www.cpuc.ca.gov/published/final_decision), the Public Utilities Commission overruled the local rent board and ordered that $111,445 in costs for a trench containing water lines and master metered electric and gas lines be apportioned out of the rent increase pass-through, since they were included in the approved utility fees as costs related to the repair and maintenance of the submetered gas and electric utility systems. See §6.13.

A district court's dismissal of an action that alleged discrimination and retaliation based on the plaintiff's gender, subject to the federal Fair Housing Act was reversed in Edwards v Marin Park, Inc. (9th Cir 2004) 356 F3d 1058. The court of appeals held that her allegation that defendant "targeted… a disproportionate number of women" met the relaxed pleading standards of federal procedures. See §§2.30, 6.14A.

In Morgan v City of Chino (2004) 115 CA4th 1192, 9 CR3d 784, the court held that due process and the city's mobilehome rent control ordinance merely require the city to take into account the costs related to capital improvements (along with other expenses and income) when determining whether the owner is receiving a fair rate of return. An owner is not entitled to a fair return on a capital improvement investment, separate and apart from the return on the property as a whole. See §§6.15, 7.35.

Beginning January 1, 2005, net listings of mobilehomes for sale are strictly regulated under Health & S C §§18014.5, 18060.5, which establish written disclosure requirements for licensed and unlicensed mobilehome dealers. Park management may not prohibit the listing or sale of a manufactured home or mobilehome in the park and may not, as a condition of buyer approval, require that the selling homeowner authorize the management or any other specified broker, dealer, or person to act as the sales agent. CC §798.71(b)-(c). See §6.57.

In the event of misrepresentation or fraud in the purchase or sale of a mobilehome or manufactured home, the seller or buyer may be entitled to reimbursement from the Manufactured Home Recovery Fund. See Health & S C §§18070-18070.7, cited in §6.57.

Terminations of tenancy and eviction procedures are explained in §§6.62-6.89, which were revised and substantially reorganized for this update to clarify the procedures, made complicated by various rights held by park owners and possessory or other rights in the mobilehome held by lenders, homeowners, and tenants of homeowners.

See also cases listed under "Rent Control and Vacancy Decontrol," below.

Rent Control and Vacancy Decontrol. Several reported cases examined the constitutionality of mobilehome rent control ordinances on both facial and as-applied bases but rejected the claims on procedural grounds. See Hacienda Valley Mobile Estates v City of Morgan Hill (9th Cir 2003) 353 F3d 651 (facial challenge barred by statute of limitations and as-applied taking challenge not ripe); Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v City of Carson (9th Cir 2004) 353 F3d 824 (similar ripeness outcome); Ventura Mobilehome Communities Owners Ass'n v City of San Buenaventura (9th Cir 2004) 371 F3d 1046 (lack of ripeness in both facial and as-applied challenges). See §§6.15, 7.11.

In 2004 a successful constitutional challenge was made to San Francisco's eviction control ordinance that punished both civilly and criminally a landlord who (1) requests that a tenant move or threatens to recover possession either verbally or in writing, unless the landlord has a good faith intent to evict and does actually go forward with the eviction, (2) seeks or obtains a tenant's agreement not to cooperate with an investigation by the city for violations of the ordinance, and (3) seeks or obtains a tenant's waiver of rights under the ordinance. The court held these attempts to restrict a landlord's actions were an unconstitutional denial of free speech in Baba v Board of Supervisors of the City & County of San Francisco (2004) 124 CA4th 504, 21 CR3d 428. See §§7.12, 7.55, 7.64F.

In Topa Equities, Ltd. v City of Los Angeles (9th Cir 2003) 342 F3d 1065, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance was not preempted by federal law. Thus, the landlord must adhere to the requirements of the local ordinance and not increase rents to market levels until units are vacated. See §§1.35, 7.19.

When major disruptions from code violations or other defects continue for a lengthy period, tenants may be entitled to a rent decrease, but in a rent controlled city they must individually petition the local rent control board. See Ocean Park Assocs. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2004) 114 CA4th 1050, 8 CR3d 421, cited in §§5.11, 7.39.

In the absence of a limitations provision in a local rent control ordinance, stating a deadline for when court review of a rent board decision must be filed, the governing time period is 90 days after the date that the rent board sends notice of its final decision. See Liang v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2004) 124 CA4th 775, 21 CR3d 715, cited in §7.51.

See also cases listed in Selected Developments under "Ellis Act Cases" and "Mobilehome Tenancies," above.

Rental Agreements and Security Deposits. Since January 1, 2001, a landlord has been required to give a 60-day notice of a rent increase for a residential tenancy if the increase is greater than 10 percent of the rent charged to the tenant during the preceding 12 months. In 2004, the sunset provision of the law was repealed, so the 60-day notice requirement is indefinitely extended. See §3.65A.

In Minor v Tustin Avenue Investors, LLC (2004) 116 CA4th 264, 10 CR3d 178, the tenant sued to enforce an option to renew (after accepting an estoppel certificate when the property was sold), and the court of appeal concluded that the lease and estoppel certificate, read together, were ambiguous on the question whether an option existed. Because neither party offered extrinsic evidence to explain it, the court construed the ambiguous contract against the owner. See §4.41.

Because some lease transactions are recorded, the Attorney General issued an opinion that a county recorder may accept for recordation a document entitled "memorandum of lease" that states that the parties have executed a certain unrecorded lease, describes various terms of the lease, is signed, and includes a certificate of acknowledgment. 87 Ops

Cal Atty Gen 1 (2004). See §1.13.

In commercial tenancies, a landlord may not collect "key money" unless it is disclosed in writing in the prospective (not existing) lease. See CC §1950.8, discussed in §§4.28, 4.29A.

Civil Code §1947.3 provides that a landlord may not demand cash as payment for either rent or a security deposit. See §§1.30, 4.24.

When a tenant breaks a lease, a landlord may be able to recover selling expenses. See Millikan v American Spectrum Real Estate Servs. Cal., Inc. (2004) 117 CA4th 1094, 12 CR3d 459 (it was foreseeable that landlord would sell property rather than bear burden of vacant commercial building indefinitely). See §§5.19, 8.16.

An amendment to federal law (50 USC App §§501-596), applicable to all military servicemembers and their dependents, allows a servicemember to terminate a lease agreement on giving 30 days' written notice. See §§1.73, 8.21A.

Court Procedures, Fees, and Rules. Effective January 1, 2005, CCP §411.20 provides that when a paper is filed with the court and the check is later returned without payment by the bank (or the check is for an amount less than the required fee), the clerk shall mail notice to the party and the party will have 20 days from the mailing date to pay the fee. See §10.1B.

If an individual completes and files a fee waiver form, but there is "substantial evidentiary conflict" about the right to proceed in forma pauperis, the trial court may not deny the application for a waiver without a noticed hearing to determine eligibility. Cruz v Superior Court (2004) 120 CA4th 175, 14 CR3d 917. See §10.8.

A motion may be made to advance or reset a trial date (Cal Rules of Ct 375.1), or for a continuance (Cal Rules of Ct 375). Extensions of unlawful detainer trial dates are strictly limited by CCP §1170.5(c), which requires a hearing and possible order requiring the tenant to pay rent into court as a condition to the court's granting an extension. See §§11.41, 11.45.

A trial judge's decision on a pretrial motion to resolve a conflict of laws issue is not a trial under §170.6(a)(2); consequently the moving party has no right to disqualify the judge after the decision is affirmed by the court of appeal. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (2004) 121 CA4th 490, 17 CR3d 146. See §12.5.

Effective January 1, 2004, Cal Rules of Ct 229, governing the preparation of proposed jury instructions, was revised. See §12.44.

As a result of budget deficits, filing fees and other government service fees associated with court actions are increasing and need to be checked frequently. For example, Govt C §26733.5 now provides that costs of eviction, i.e., serving a writ of possession or posting and serving a copy of the writ, are $75, plus an additional $50 (effective January 1, 2005, and if needed) "for removing an occupant or occupants from the premises and putting a person in possession of the premises." See §§13.23, 13.69. Note also that Cal Rules of Ct 1(b)(1) now requires payment of a $655 (instead of a $265) filing fee when a notice of appeal is filed. See §13.59.

Attorney Fees. A new statute, effective January 1, 2004, provides that any landlord who brings an unlawful detainer action based on a tenant's nonpayment of rent and who is found to be in violation of CC §1942.4 (statutory habitability standards) is liable for reasonable attorney fees and costs of the suit. See CCP §1174.21, cited in §§3.15A, 3.41, 13.25.

A city or county ordinance may serve as authority for an award of attorney fees. City of Santa Paula v Narula (2003) 114 CA4th 485, 8 CR3d 75. See §13.25.

Bankruptcy. The bankruptcy rule that a security deposit held by a landlord must be applied to the capped amount of damages allowable for a claim under 11 USC §502 applies even if the security deposit is in the form of a letter of credit rather than cash. Redback Networks, Inc. v Mayan Networks Corp. (In re Mayan Networks Corp.) (BAP 9th Cir 2004) 306 BR 295. See §14.12.

Assets that vest in the debtor on plan confirmation may revest in the bankruptcy estate on conversion to Chapter 7. See Captain Blythers, Inc. v Thompson (In re Captain Blythers, Inc.) (BAP 9th Cir 2004) 311 BR 530. See §14.16A.

When a tenant has filed bankruptcy after a judgment for possession has been entered in a state court, a bankruptcy court can generally rule that the judgment for possession is preclusive under collateral estoppel principles. A Ninth Circuit bankruptcy appellate panel has ruled that for determining this type of issue, a bankruptcy court has exclusive jurisdiction. See Huse v Huse-Sporsen (In re Birting Fisheries, Inc.) (BAP 9th Cir 2003) 300 BR 489. See §14.20.

There is a split of authority concerning whether 11 USC §525(a) precludes evicting a public housing tenant for nonpayment of rent. The most recent example occurred in a case from a bankruptcy trial court in Pennsylvania, which allowed the eviction. See In re Valentin (Bankr ED Pa 2004) 309 BR 715, cited in §14.27.

A well established bankruptcy rule that requires the debtor to pay prorated daily rent for each day after the petition is filed until a lease is rejected has been questioned by some courts. Although the Ninth Circuit has not addressed the issue, proration is commonly applied in lower courts within the circuit. See, e.g., In re Nat'l Refractories & Minerals Corp. (Bankr ND Cal 2003) 297 BR 614; Sticka v Lambert (In re Lambert) (BAP 9th Cir 2002) 283 BR 16, cited in §14.45.

Under 11 USC §503, administrative expenses are required to be "actual and necessary," and they are allowed only in their "reasonable value." The conflict among the circuit courts of appeal continues. In the Ninth Circuit, if a landlord's claim does not arise from postpetition, prerejection conduct, it will not have administrative priority. See, e.g., K-4, Inc. v Midway Engineered Wood Prods., Inc. (In re Treesource Indus.) (9th Cir 2004) 363 F3d 994; In re Nat'l Refractories & Minerals Corp. (Bankr ND Cal 2003) 297 BR 614, cited in §14.46.

Because bankruptcy courts focus on realizing value from leases for the estate, a use restriction that effectively prevents assignment may be viewed as an unlawful restriction on bankruptcy rights and disregarded under 11 USC §365(f). More recent authority from the Fourth Circuit, however, holds that the specific provisions in 11 USC §365(b)(3) trump the more general provision of 11 USC §365(f), so an assignment in violation of a use restriction in a shopping center lease cannot be approved. Trak Auto. Corp. v West Town Ctr. (In re Trak Auto Corp.) (4th Cir 2004) 367 F3d 237. See §14.50.

Because landlords have an administrative claim for postpetition rent through the date of rejection, landlords and debtor-tenants have disagreed about whether a formal order approving the rejection is required before the debtor's administrative rent obligation ceases. If the lease was not deemed rejected under operation of law, the majority view is that rejection is effective when the court enters an order approving the rejection, rather than when the motion for approving the rejection is filed. See cases cited in §14.53.

© The Regents of the University of California

Cutoff Dates and CEB Citation

Cutoff Dates

We completed legal editing and analysis of authorities cited in this publication as of September 2, 2009, and monitored developments through December 4, 2009.

CEB Citation

Cite this publication as: California Landlord-Tenant Practice (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

1

Creating the Tenancy

E. Houston Touceda
Patricia H. Tirey

I. NATURE OF LANDLORD-TENANT RELATIONSHIP
- A. Created by Agreement; Terminology §1.1
- B. Dual Character of Landlord-Tenant Agreement §1.2
- C. Distinguished From Other Relationships
  - 1. Proprietor-Lodger §1.3
    - a. Under Common Law §1.3A
    - b. Under CC §1940 §1.3B
    - c. Exclusions Under CC §1940 §1.3C
    - d. Effect on Evictions and Abandoned Personal Property §1.3D
  - 2. Employer-Employee §1.4
  - 3. Seller-Purchaser §1.5
  - 4. Licenses §1.6
  - 5. Tenant Roommates §1.7
    - a. As Tenants of Owner §1.7A
    - b. As Subtenants of Tenant §1.7B
  - 6. Cotenant Owners §1.7C

II. TYPES OF TENANCIES
- A. Fixed-Term Tenancy §1.8
- B. Periodic Tenancy §1.9
- C. Tenancy at Will §1.10
- D. Tenancy at Sufferance §1.11
- E. Trespassers §1.11A

III. DRAFTING LANDLORD-TENANT AGREEMENT
- A. Option to Use Preprinted Forms §1.12
- B. Written or Oral Agreement?
  - 1. Legal Requirements §1.13
  - 2. Advantages and Disadvantages
    - a. For Landlord §1.14
    - b. For Tenant §1.15
- C. Requisites of Agreement
  - 1. Parties
    - a. Capacity to Enter Into Lease §1.16
    - b. Execution
      - (1) By Spouses §1.17
      - (2) By Joint Tenants or Tenants in Common §1.18
      - (3) By Corporations and Other Entities §1.19
      - (4) By Agents §1.20
    - c. Listing All Tenants §1.21
    - d. Required Agent and Service of Process Information; Copy of Lease; CC §1962 §1.21A
  - 2. Rent §1.22
  - 3. Description of Premises
    - a. Basic Parameters §1.23
    - b. Condition of the Premises
      - (1) Joint Pre-Possession Inspection §1.24
      - (2) Form: Move-In/Move-Out Itemized Statement (California Apartment Association Form 16.0) §1.25
      - (3) Form: Furniture Inventory (California Apartment Association Form 16.1) §1.26
  - 4. Deposits, Screening Fees, Key Money §1.26A
  - 5. Term §1.27
  - 6. Use of Premises §1.28

7. Required Disclosures §1.29
D. Prohibited Provisions §1.30
E. Special Considerations in Jurisdictions With Rent Control Ordinances §1.31
F. Special Requirements for Government-Owned and Government-Subsidized Rental Housing §1.32
1. Public Housing
a. HUD Requirements Imposed on Public Housing Authority §1.33
b. Regulations Governing Tenant Conduct §1.34
2. FHA-Subsidized Rental Programs §1.35
3. Section 8 Programs §1.36

IV. BASIC RESIDENTIAL LEASE OR RENTAL AGREEMENT
A. Form: Parties §1.37
B. Form: Description of Premises §1.38
C. Form: Deposit on Execution of Agreement §1.39
D. Rent
1. Form: Monthly Amount; Manner of Payment §1.40
2. Form: Late Charges §1.41
3. Form: Rent Check Returned for Insufficient Funds §1.42
4. Form: Notice That Failure to Pay Rent on Time May Be Reported to Credit Record Agencies §1.43
E. Form: Term §1.44
F. Occupants
1. Form: Identification; Joint Liability §1.45
2. Form: Guests, Boarders, Lodgers, and Roommates §1.46
G. Form: Indemnification of Landlord §1.47
H. Deposits; Screening Fees
1. Security Deposit
a. Form: Amount and Terms of Security Deposit §1.48
b. Form: Provision for Maintaining Security Deposit by Multiple Tenants §1.49
c. Form: Replenishment and Increase of Deposit §1.50
2. Form: Nonrefundable Applicant Screening Fee §1.51
I. Condition of Premises
1. Form: Landlord's Duty to Maintain Premises §1.52
2. Form: Statement of Condition of Premises §1.53
J. Form: Assignment and Subletting §1.54
K. Form: Use of Premises §1.55
L. Form: Utilities §1.56
M. Tenant Obligations and Restrictions
1. Form: Tenant's Obligation to Maintain and Protect Landlord's Property §1.57
2. Form: Tenant's Obligations to Refrain from Disturbance, Unlawful Conduct, and Waste §1.58
3. Form: Tenant's Obligation to Comply With Rules and Regulations §1.59
4. Form: Conditions Governing Tenant Repairs and Alterations §1.60
5. Form: Tenant Agreement to Maintain Premises as Consideration for Rental §1.61
6. Form: Pets §1.62
7. Form: Waterbeds §1.63
8. Form: No Automobile Repair §1.64
N. Form: Tenant's Death or Disability §1.65
O. Form: Landlord's Entry on Premises; Notice §1.66
P. Breach of Covenant
1. Form: Covenants Are Material and Reasonable §1.67
2. Form: Consequences of Tenant's Breach; Service of Notice §1.68
Q. Form: Misrepresentation in Tenant's Application §1.69
R. Form: Malicious Holding Over; Statutory Damages §1.70
S. Form: Personal Property Remaining on Premises §1.71
T. Form: Possession of Premises §1.72
U. Form: Tenant's Termination for Cause Under Fixed-Term Lease §1.73
V. Form: Attorney Fees §1.74
W. Form: No Waiver §1.75
X. Form: Service of Notices §1.76
Y. Form: Lead Disclosure §1.77
Z. Concluding Paragraphs
1. Form: Entire Agreement §1.78
2. Form: Signatures §1.79

V. SAMPLE RESIDENTIAL LEASES AND RENTAL AGREEMENTS §1.80
A. Form: Rental Agreement (Month-to-Month) (California Apartment Association Form 2.0) §1.81

B. Form: Lease Agreement (California Apartment Association Form 2.1) §1.82
C. Form: Disclosure of Information on Lead-Based Paint and Lead-Based Paint Hazards (California Apartment Association Form LEAD1) §1.82A
D. Forms: Residential Lease or Month-to-Month Rental Agreement (CAR Form LR-14); Lease/Rental Commission Agreement (CAR Form LCA-6) §1.83
E. Form: Residential Lease-Rental Agreement and Deposit Receipt (Professional Publishing Form 105) §1.84
F. Form: Lease Agreement (National Housing Law Project Standard Form Lease (California)) [Deleted] §1.85

© The Regents of the University of California

I. NATURE OF LANDLORD-TENANT RELATIONSHIP

§1.1 A. Created by Agreement; Terminology

This chapter discusses the creation of the landlord-tenant contract in the context of residential tenancies. Commercial leases are considerably more complex and present more difficult drafting problems than do residential agreements. For discussion of drafting commercial leases, and form lease provisions, see Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease (Cal CEB 1996).

The landlord-tenant relationship is created by a contract between the parties. This contract is known by a variety of names, e.g., rental agreement, lease, month-to-month agreement. It may be oral, written, or implied (see §1.13). Samuels v Ottinger (1915) 169 C 209, 146 P 638. The contract must show (expressly or from the facts) that the parties intend to create a landlord-tenant relationship (Gavina v Smith (1944) 25 C2d 501, 154 P2d 681; Beckett v City of Paris Dry Goods Co. (1939) 14 C2d 633, 96 P2d 122), and it must:

- designate the parties;
- describe the premises;
- specify the rent to be paid and the time and manner of payment; and
- specify the term for which the tenant will rent the property.

City of Santa Cruz v MacGregor (1960) 178 CA2d 45, 2 CR 727; Frey v Corbin (1948) 84 CA2d 536, 191 P2d 21.

Terminology in landlord-tenant contracts is somewhat imprecise and subject to inconsistent usage. The statutes use the terms "lease" and "rental agreement" (see, e.g., CC §§798.8, 1953) but do not define them. The section that provides authority for the basic landlord-tenant agreement, CC §1925, does not use either term:

> Hiring is a contract by which one gives to another the temporary possession and use of property, other than money for reward, and the latter agrees to return the same to the former at a future time.

The term "lease" is commonly used to mean an agreement that creates a tenancy for a fixed term, i.e., an "estate for years." See §1.8. Support for this interpretation may be found in a number of cases in which the courts held that the tenancy created by a lease must be for a definite and agreed-on term, with possession of the premises reverting to the landlord on expiration of the term. Stone v City of Los Angeles (1931) 114 CA 192, 299 P 838. See City of Santa Cruz v MacGregor, supra; Frey v Corbin, supra. See the form lease in §1.82.

The term "rental agreement" usually refers to the agreement that creates the most common form of periodic tenancy, a month-to-month tenancy. See §1.9. Although the decisions in Stone, MacGregor, and Frey do not expressly distinguish between a lease creating an estate for years and a rental agreement creating a periodic tenancy, they implicitly support such a distinction because a periodic tenancy is a tenancy for an indefinite term that does not terminate automatically on expiration of a specified term. A periodic tenancy terminates only when one of the parties gives notice of termination under CC §1946 or §1946.1. See §1.9.

"Lease" and "rental agreement" are terms often used as discussed above, but they are also invoked in a broader sense. For example, the legislature specified the term "rental agreement" for the contract between a mobilehome owner and the mobilehome park management. In this context, the term is synonymous with "lease." CC §798.8. On the other hand, the term "lease" is frequently used to include all manner of contracts between the landlord and tenant for the use and occupancy of real property. See, e.g., Health & S C §§18005.6, 18209, which define "lease" under statutes regulating mobilehome parks in virtually identical language: "Lease is an oral or written contract for the use, possession, and occupation of property. It includes rent." See also Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, in which the supreme court held that the implied warranty of habitability is an implied provision in residential "leases," apparently using the term "leases" to encompass all manner of contracts creating residential tenancies.

The terms "lessor" and "lessee" are not used in this book to discuss relations between the landlord and tenant in general because the authors have found that too often these terms are used to describe only the parties to a formal lease. See Stone v City of Los Angeles, supra. Although "landlord" is not a strictly gender-neutral term, the authors use the terms "landlord" and "tenant" throughout the book when referring to the relationship in its broad sense.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.2 B. Dual Character of Landlord-Tenant Agreement

A lease or rental agreement has a dual character: It is both a conveyance of an estate in real property (Ellingson v Walsh, O'Connor & Barneson (1940) 15 C2d 673, 104 P2d 507), creating "privity of estate," and a contract between the landlord and tenant (see CC §1925) creating "privity of contract."

Historically, the landlord-tenant contract was regarded as a conveyance of an estate in real property, and the rights and obligations arising from it were interpreted according to the law of real property. The doctrine of independent covenants, for example, resulted from the courts' interpretation of lease obligations under real property rules. Under this doctrine, the landlord's obligation to maintain the premises was considered independent of the tenant's obligation to pay rent. See Arnold v Krigbaum (1915) 169 C 143, 146 P 423. Note: The historical development of landlord-tenant law from its common-law roots is traced in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 622, 111 CR 704.

Sensing limitations in the rigid application of real property concepts to the modern landlord-tenant relationship, courts increasingly recognized the contractual nature of lease arrangements and began to analyze such agreements by referring to contract law principles. See Green v Superior Court, supra; Medico-Dental Bldg. Co. v Horton & Converse (1942) 21 C2d 411, 132 P2d 457; Groh v Kover's Bull Pen, Inc. (1963) 221 CA2d 611, 34 CR 637. In Green, for example, the court held that application of contract principles is particularly appropriate for residential leases of urban dwelling units. The court held that under contract law the rent and habitability covenants in a lease should be interpreted as mutually dependent, so that the tenant's obligation to pay rent would be dependent on the landlord's performance of his or her covenant to maintain and repair the premises. Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 635, 111 CR 704. The courts continue to hold, however, that the lease covenants are independent in commercial tenancies. Thus, a commercial tenant cannot withhold rent for the landlord's failure to repair the premises; the tenant's remedy is to bring an action for breach of the lease. Schulman v Vera (1980) 108 CA3d 552, 558, 166 CR 620. See extended discussion in California Eviction Defense Manual §§19.11-19.17 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Distinguished From Other Relationships

§1.3 1. Proprietor-Lodger

Historically, the rights and obligations of parties to a lease or rental agreement differed markedly, depending on whether their relationship was that of landlord and tenant or proprietor and lodger. Because many occupants (who were considered lodgers under common law) were made subject to California landlord-tenant statutes by the enactment of CC §1940 (see §1.3B), the distinction between tenants and lodgers is not currently significant. Under CC §1940(b), only certain categories of transient hotel guests are treated as lodgers in the historical sense, i.e., as exempt from most statutes regulating the landlord-tenant relationship. See §1.3C. In addition, CC §1946.5 sets forth special rules for a single lodger who resides in an owner-occupied dwelling unit.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.3A a. Under Common Law

Under common law, a lodger has no cognizable interest in real property, but merely occupies a portion of premises under the control of another. See Stowe v Fritzie Hotels (1955) 44 C2d 416, 282 P2d 890. Although a tenant has the right to exclusive possession of the leased premises and is responsible for their care and condition (Green v Watson (1964) 224 CA2d 184, 36 CR 362), a lodger merely has nonexclusive use of the premises while the proprietor maintains actual or exclusive possession (Stowe v Fritzie Hotels, supra). Under CC §1940(b), certain classes of transient occupants are considered lodgers that are still governed by the common law. See §1.3C.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.3B b. Under CC §1940

Unless exempt under CC §1940(b), persons who hire dwelling units (including tenants, lessees, boarders, lodgers, and others) are subject to most statutes that regulate the hiring of dwellings, specifically:

- Civil Code §§1940-1954.1 (see CC §1940(a)); and
- Portions of the Code of Civil Procedure that prohibit "self-help" eviction and provide for eviction by unlawful detainer actions (see CCP §§1159, 1161).

Commonly encountered examples of affected lodgers are two or more persons who rent a room in a private home, nontransient residents of hotels or residence clubs, and roommates. Although a "lodger," each of these persons is probably subject to those statutes.

The tenant-lodger distinction under the common law, however, may still determine other rights and obligations not regulated by those statutes. For example, two or more persons who rent a room or rooms in a private home may be entitled to notice and unlawful detainer proceedings before eviction (see CCP §1161; chaps 8-9) and remedies under habitability statutes (see CC §§1941-1942; §§3.11, 3.24, 3.36), but they may not have rights under the implied warranty of habitability (see §§3.16-3.48). Lodgers are not subject to other chapters in Title V of the Civil Code (e.g., implied covenant of quiet enjoyment; see CC §1927; §§3.5-3.7) unless specifically included.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.3C c. Exclusions Under CC §1940

§1.3C c. Exclusions Under CC §1940

Lodgers excluded under CC §1940(b), who are subject to common law rules (see §§1.3A, 1.3D), are those who:

- Maintain transient occupancy in a hotel, motel, residence club, or other facility when the occupancy is or would be subject to tax under Rev & T C §7280 and have not made valid payment for all room and other related charges owing as of the last day on which their occupancy is or would be subject to §7280 tax; or
- Maintain occupancy in a hotel or motel in which the proprietor retains a right to enter and control the dwelling unit and provides, under CC §1940(b)(2), the following services to all residents:
- Facilities for safeguarding personal property, as provided in CC §1860;
- Central telephone service subject to tariffs filed with the California Public Utilities Commission;
- Maid, mail, and room services;
- Occupancy for periods of less than 7 days; and
- Food service meeting specified requirements.

NOTE: Under Rev & T C §7280, local governments may tax occupancy for 30 days or less in a hotel, inn, tourist home, time-share, house, motel, or other lodging. Effective January 1, 2005, CC §1940.1(a) was amended to prohibit a proprietor from requiring an occupant of a "residential hotel," as defined in Health & S C §50519, to move or to check out and reregister before the expiration of 30 days' occupancy if a purpose is to have that occupant maintain transient occupancy status under CC §1940(b)(1). Evidence that an occupant was required to check out and reregister creates a rebuttable presumption, affecting solely the burden of producing evidence, of that purpose. CC §1940.1(a). As a result, an occupant who has paid the landlord a full month's rent is entitled to the protections under CC §§1940-1954.1 (see §1.3B), even if he or she has not yet occupied the unit for 30 days. Many municipalities also have ordinances defining "transient occupancy."

Thus, other than residential hotels offering only long-term occupancy, many formal hotel-type facilities are exempt from the basic landlord-tenant provisions of the Civil Code and the Code of Civil Procedure and are instead governed by the common law rules stated in §§1.3A, 1.3D. Many less formal arrangements (e.g., occupancy in roominghouses and residential hotels), however, are not exempt, and occupancies under those arrangements are covered by most landlord-tenant statutes even though they are classed as lodgers at common law. See §§1.3-1.3B. The existence of an exemption under CC §1940(b)(1) seems to turn on the status of both the facility and the occupant: Only a transient occupant (i.e., a person who resides in one of the listed facilities for fewer than 30 days) is excluded.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.3D d. Effect on Evictions and Abandoned Personal Property

At common law, one of the primary factors distinguishing a lodger from a tenant is the landlord's right to use "self-help" to evict a lodger, i.e., not to be required to follow the steps set forth in unlawful detainer statutes. See, e.g., Roberts v Casey (1939) 36 CA2d Supp 767, 93 P2d 654. The occupants defined in CC §1940(b), i.e., those with short-term tenancies in formal hotel-type facilities, are subject to self-help evictions because they are expressly excluded from statutes authorizing lawsuits for forcible entry (CCP §1159; see §8.138) and requiring unlawful detainer as the only legal means of eviction (CCP §1161; see chap 9). See also §§1.3A, 1.3C. Conversely, the occupants defined in CC §1940(a) are covered by the forcible entry and unlawful detainer statutes and may legally resist self-help evictions. See §1.3B.

In many "roommate" situations, the landlord cannot use self-help but must use unlawful detainer to evict an occupant who might be categorized as a lodger at common law but is nevertheless covered by landlord-tenant statutes. See §1.7.

Hotel, motel, inn, boarding house, and lodging-house keepers have liens against the tenant's or lodger's personal property, enforceable only after final judgment in an action to recover rent charges. CC §§1861, 1861a. These liens cannot be enforced against any of the tenant's property otherwise exempt from enforcement of a money judgment. CC §§1861, 1861a. This exemption renders the liens rather meaningless for most residential tenants and lodgers because household furnishings and personal effects "ordinarily and reasonably necessary" to the debtor are exempt under CCP §704.020. When landlord-tenant statutes apply to the tenant or lodger under CC §1940(a), however, disposition of exempt and nonexempt personal property left on the premises on termination of the tenancy and after judgment is governed by CCP §1174(e)-(i) and CC §§1980-1991. See §§8.154-8.161.

Under CC §§1861 and 1861a, the landlord or proprietor may enter the premises under a court order and take possession of the personal property pending litigation of the claim. To obtain a writ, a proprietor must show the probable validity of his or her claim. CC §§1861.8, 1861.10. In contrast, a landlord must show that the property is about to be destroyed, substantially devalued, or removed from the premises. CC §1861a. In each case, the landlord or proprietor must post an undertaking. CC §§1861.21, 1861a.

Hotels that have a contractual obligation to provide the room to an arriving person may use self-help to evict guests who do not pay rent or who do not leave on the agreed date by the agreed time, with conditions. CC §1865.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.4 2. Employer-Employee

§1.4 2. Employer-Employee

The attorney for the landlord or tenant may need to determine whether an occupant of rental premises is merely an employee of the landlord, or both an employee and a tenant, or whether the employee was a tenant before becoming an employee, because the rights and obligations of the parties differ depending on the characterization. As a general rule, if the occupancy is connected with services to be performed by the employee, or is required by the landlord in connection with such services, the occupant is regarded as an employee and not as a tenant. See Mitchell v Davis (1862) 20 C 45; Wukaloff v Malibou Lake Mountain Club (1950) 96 CA2d 147, 214 P2d 832. Most resident managers, caretakers, and janitors are therefore not regarded as tenants. See, e.g., Cook v Klenk (1904) 142 C 416, 76 P 57. If the occupancy is treated as independent of the services to be rendered, however, and the occupant is granted exclusive control of the premises, he or she may be a tenant as well as an employee. See Morris v Iden (1913) 23 CA 388, 138 P 120.

The primary importance of the distinction between employee and employee-tenant lies in their respective occupancy rights when the employment is terminated. An employee has no further right to occupy the premises when the employment terminates (see Eichhorn v De La Cantera (1953) 117 CA2d 50, 255 P2d 70; see also Chan v Antepenko (1988) 203 CA3d Supp 21, 250 CR 851) and is not entitled to notice terminating the tenancy (CCP §1161(1)). An occupant who is a tenant as well as an employee, however, may continue to occupy the premises, despite termination of the employment, until the landlord terminates the tenancy by serving proper notice. (See §8.84 on notice requirements.) Thus, an employee-tenant is essentially a tenant at will (see §1.10).

In Spinks v Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments (2009) 171 CA4th 1004, 90 CR3d 453, the court both distinguished and disapproved of the decision in Chan. The Spinks case dealt with an employee of a corporate tenant who had rented an apartment from defendant landlord for use by the employee. When the employee was terminated, the corporate tenant returned possession of the premises to the landlord, but the terminated employee refused to move. The landlord resorted to self-help and moved the employee out. The employee then sued the landlord under various causes of action. The trial court awarded summary judgment to the landlord, but the court of appeal overturned the award. The court distinguished Chan, holding that the case did not involve "landlord self-help." The Spinks decision then went on to state: "Second, to the extent that Chan suggests that any discharged employee may be dispossessed —without regard to the circumstances surrounding his occupancy and by means of the landlord's self-help—we reject that suggestion as contrary to the law of the state." 171 CA4th at 1042.

WARNING: Most employment agreements contain a specific time period during which the employee is required to vacate the premises after termination of employment. The employment agreement must be reviewed if an unlawful detainer occurs.

Although a mere employee's right to occupancy terminates when the employment ends, if the former employee does not vacate the premises, the landlord still must take the appropriate steps to file and proceed with an unlawful detainer action (see chap 9) to evict the employee. Eichhorn v De La Cantera, supra. The employee becomes a tenant at sufferance (see §1.11) on termination of the employment, and thus must be evicted by legal process although the employee is not entitled to notice before the landlord files an unlawful detainer action. Karz v Mecham (1981) 120 CA3d Supp 1, 174 CR 310; Eichhorn v De La Cantera, supra. Although no notice is required, a landlord who gives notice must be cautious because the notice may convert the occupancy into a tenancy. In Karz v Mecham, supra, the employer served a notice stating that the rent would be $200 per month if the employee did not vacate. The court held that this notice converted the tenancy at sufferance into a month-to-month tenancy, which could be terminated only by service of a 30-day notice to terminate.

PRACTICE TIP: If the property is subject to a rent control ordinance, the practitioner must check the ordinance carefully. A terminated employee who had been a tenant before becoming an employee may be treated as a tenant on termination and may be entitled to certain rights and protections under the ordinance.

Existence of an employment relationship does not deprive an employee-tenant of other defenses and causes of action, such as retaliatory eviction (see §§8.109-8.136). In S. P. Growers Ass'n v Rodriguez (1976) 17 C3d 719, 131 CR 761, the court held that the tenants stated a defense to an unlawful detainer action by alleging that the grower-landlord sought to evict them in retaliation for an action that they filed under federal farm labor legislation.

WARNING: Landlord attorneys need to be cognizant that the law is unsettled as to whether wrongful termination can serve as a defense to an unlawful detainer action based on an employee termination (see, e.g., Vargas v Municipal Court (1978) 22 C3d 902, 150 CR 918; S. P. Growers Ass'n v Rodriguez, supra. If a landlord is forced to try such an issue in an unlawful detainer action, the potential res judicata or collateral estoppel effects could be disastrous in a separate action brought by the tenant for wrongful termination.

Landlords should also be aware of state requirements regulating the employment of apartment-house managers. If the owner does not reside on the premises, a building of 16 or more residential units must have a resident manager, janitor, housekeeper, or other responsible person who has charge of the apartment house. 25 Cal Code Regs §42. Local laws may impose similar or more stringent requirements.

An apartment-house manager is usually treated as an employee of the owner, not as an independent contractor, and thus is subject to legal requirements concerning the employment relationship: minimum wage and overtime law; social security; worker's compensation; and limitations on the value of the apartment that may be credited against wages. For discussion of the ramifications of this relationship, see §§4.45-4.49; 7 Miller & Starr, California Real Estate §§19.9-19.11 (3d ed 2000).

On provisions in CC §§1962, 1962.5 that require the owner to disclose building manager, service of process, and other agency information to tenants, see §§1.21A, 1.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.5 3. Seller-Purchaser

In some cases, it may not be readily apparent whether an occupant of real property holds it as a tenant or as a purchaser under a contract providing that title will pass to the occupant on completion of the specified payments. A sale of property under an installment land sale contract may confuse this issue, because legal title under such a contract remains in the seller and passes to the buyer only on completion of the contract payments. On installment land sales contracts, see California Real Property Sales Transactions §§9.14-9.17 (4th ed Cal CEB 2007); California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 4 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002). Although the instrument is called a "lease," and the payments are called "rent," the transaction is a sale if fee title eventually will pass to the buyer-occupant. Bachenheimer v Palm Springs Mgmt. Corp. (1953) 116 CA2d 580, 254 P2d 153; Moss v Williams (1948) 84 CA2d 830, 191 P2d 804.

The importance of the distinction between tenants and purchasers lies in the different remedies available to the landlord for a breach of the lease or rental agreement. If the "tenants" have taken occupancy as tenants, e.g., in the context of a lease-option, and not as vendees-in-possession, the owner may proceed with unlawful detainer. See Provouskivitz v Snow (1977) 74 CA3d 554, 141 CR 531.

Practitioners should note that "option to buy" language should be carefully drafted to avoid the creation of an equitable interest in the subject premises. Tenants are routinely credited with a portion of the "rent" paid under the lease towards the option amount, which matures into a "down payment" deemed received on the satisfactory completion of the lease term. In the event of a lease default, all "credits" should be deemed forfeited, and the option "terminated," to avoid the repugnant scenario of evicting a tenant still vested with an option entitlement. Further, such equity interest may cloud the landlord's prerogative to terminate the tenancy through an unlawful detainer remedy, unless the lease reserves that right over and above the tenant's option rights and other interests. Provouskivitz v Snow, supra.

If the property is being sold to the "tenant" under a contract of sale, unlawful detainer is not available to the property owner as a remedy for the "tenant's" breach. Marvell v Marina Pizzeria (1984) 155 CA3d Supp 1, 202 CR 818; Greene v Municipal Court (1975) 51 CA3d 446, 124 CR 139. Instead, the owner must either proceed under the nonjudicial foreclosure remedies provided in the contract or bring an action in ejectment or to quiet title. CC §3375; see Hicks v Lovell (1883) 64 C 14, 27 P 942, overruled on other grounds in Harding v Harding (1906) 148 C 397, 83 P 434. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chaps 4, 7, 10 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

PRACTICE TIP: To recover possession of the premises when they are occupied under a sales agreement, the practitioner must determine the status of the occupant when he or she took possession: If as a tenant (e.g., lease with option to buy) unlawful detainer may be used; if as a buyer (e.g., vendee-in-possession) ejectment, quiet title, or other nonsummary procedure must be used.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.6 4. Licenses

A license confers a privilege to perform a particular act or series of acts on the land of another. Because a license is a personal right rather than a property interest, it usually cannot be assigned. Eastman v Piper (1924) 68 CA 554, 229 P 1002. Unlike a tenancy, a license does not convey an estate in land nor a contract right to possession and use of the property. Kaiser Co. v Reid (1947) 30 C2d 610, 184 P2d 879. Whether a particular contract is a license or a lease is a question of law to be determined by the court from the contract itself. Kaiser Co. v Reid, supra; Von Goerlitz v Turner (1944) 65 CA2d 425, 150 P2d 278. License issues frequently arise in commercial, rather than residential, contexts. Because a license is an arrangement merely to perform certain acts on the property rather than to occupy the property exclusively, it usually contemplates some business activity, e.g., mining or operating a concession. See Qualls v Lake Berryessa Enters., Inc. (1999) 76 CA4th 1277, 91 CR2d 143.

Historically, the distinction between a license and a lease was important in determining the extent of the owner's right to reenter the premises and to terminate the occupancy. In the absence of estoppel, the owner could terminate a license at will, without notice or judicial proceedings. Stoner v Zucker (1906) 148 C 516, 83 P 808; Von Goerlitz v Turner, supra. Licenses in most recent reported cases are for commercial purposes. Although the common-law at-will rule probably still applies (a license may be terminated without recourse to notice or unlawful detainer proceedings) the only right of "self-help" with regard to a licensee might apply to a short-term residential guest. Eviction of a licensee is governed by CCP §1161(1).

PRACTICE TIP: Practitioners should advise a landlord client not to undertake a self-help eviction in any situation, including eviction of a licensee.

If the contract gives exclusive possession of the premises against all the world, including the owner, it is a lease. If it merely confers a privilege to occupy under the owner, it is a license. Qualls v Lake Berryessa Enters., Inc., supra.

When determining whether a contract is a license or a lease, courts examine the nature of the possessory interest granted. For example, an arrangement for mining gold was held to be a license in the property because the licensee's interest was in the proceeds and not in the land (Wheeler v West (1886) 71 C 126, 11 P 871). In Northern Light Mining Co. v Blue Goose Mining Co. (1914) 25 CA 282, 143 P 540, however, a similar agreement was held to be a lease because the agreement gave the licensee a mining privilege and an interest in the land, and because the licensee's interest was assignable. A tenant in a shopping center who has a right to use sidewalks, parking lots, and similar facilities in common with other tenants has only a license, and not a lease, with respect to those facilities. Nahas v Local 95 Retail Clerks Int'l Ass'n (1956) 144 CA2d 808, 301 P2d 932. This distinction may be only a technical one because it is doubtful that a landlord could revoke the license without breaching the lease.

In Golden W. Baseball Co. v City of Anaheim (1994) 25 CA4th 11, 31 CR2d 378, the court held that an agreement between a baseball team and a property owner that gave the team the use of a stadium and a minimum number of parking spaces for a portion of game days and retained for the property owner the use of the unused spaces on game days and the property's use on all other occasions was not a lease but more akin to an easement or license. In Wukaloff v Malibou Lake Mountain Club (1950) 96 CA2d 147, 214 P2d 832, the court held that the concessionaire of a dining facility in a private club was an invitee rather than a tenant. In Beckett v City of Paris Dry Goods Co. (1939) 14 C2d 633, 96 P2d 122, on the other hand, the court held that an agreement under which an optometrist conducted an optical department in a department store was a lease, on the basis of the language and terms of the agreement.

Other rights accruing under a tenancy arrangement (e.g., the covenant of quiet enjoyment (see §§3.5-3.7) and the implied warranty of habitability (see §§3.16-3.48)) presumably would not be available to a mere licensee.

PRACTICE TIP: Parking rights issues are common in apartment communities and often involve the towing of unauthorized vehicles. Recognizing parking spaces as "amenities" and not part of the leased property is an important distinction to clarify in the lease agreement.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.7 5. Tenant Roommates

Many tenants attempt to deal with the increasing scarcity and resulting high cost of rental housing by sharing housing with roommates. Attorneys should consider the legal ramifications of such arrangements and be prepared to advise both landlord and tenant clients of their rights and obligations. The legality of shared housing arrangements has been upheld in California, and the courts will be skeptical of local zoning ordinances limiting the right of unrelated adults to share housing. See City of Santa Barbara v Adamson (1980) 27 C3d 123, 164 CR 539; College Area Renters & Landlord Ass'n v City of San Diego (1996) 43 CA4th 677, 50 CR2d 515.

There are two basic types of roommate arrangements when the landlord does not live in the rental unit:

- Those in which all roommates have a contractual arrangement with the landlord; and
- Those in which the roommates have an arrangement with one tenant who has a contractual relationship with the landlord.

The second type is fraught with problems for the landlord and is often discouraged. And the second type may be less advantageous for occupants not in privity with the landlord in some rent-controlled jurisdictions. See, e.g., San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Board Rules and Regulations §6.15C, which allows the master tenant to evict a subtenant without cause under specified conditions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.7A a. As Tenants of Owner

Under the first roommate arrangement, all roommates are named in, and sign, a lease or series of leases. Thus, each roommate is in privity of contract with the landlord, and a normal landlord-tenant relationship exists between them. If there is only one lease, each roommate is liable for the entire rent, regardless of the arrangement among the roommates themselves, unless the landlord expressly agrees to accept rent from each roommate as his or her sole share. See CC §§1659-1660. It is therefore in the landlord's interest to make each roommate responsible for the entire rent, but in each roommate's interest to pay only his or her share as negotiated with the "original tenant." Roommates in this situation should make an agreement of their own on the manner of paying rent and utilities and the effect on the tenancy of a roommate's departure or default. For discussion of such agreements, see Portman & Brown, California Tenants' Rights (16th ed 2005).

When each tenant has a contractual relationship with the landlord, it is probably impossible for one roommate to expel another by the usual means of terminating the tenancy and evicting a tenant (see chaps 8-9); only the landlord may do so with respect to each roommate. It might be possible to expel such a roommate by means of an action to partition the cotenancy. On partition, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 8 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

PRACTICE TIP: As a practical matter, an unlawful detainer action may be brought by the landlord only against the unwanted roommate with an arrangement for the tenant to reimburse the landlord for attorney fees and costs. The tenant must refrain from accepting substituted service of the summons and complaint because he could be deemed the landlord's agent.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.7B b. As Subtenants of Tenant

In the second common roommate situation—the "original" tenant takes in other occupants, i.e., "roommates," after entering into an agreement with the landlord—the roommates probably are technically lodgers of the original tenant, unless they enter into a direct contractual relationship with the landlord. They also are considered to be subtenants if they have a contractual arrangement for possession with the tenant. At common law, characterization as a lodger meant that the original tenant could terminate the interests of the new roommates by "self-help" eviction, without recourse to the unlawful detainer provisions. See §1.3D. Under CC §1940, however, it appears that the roommates are considered to be "persons who hire dwelling units," and therefore are subject to the requirements of California landlord-tenant law. CC §§1940-1954.1. As such, their interests may be terminated only by means of notice and unlawful detainer procedures. CCP §§1159-1179a.

WARNING: Some jurisdictions have local ordinances defining roommates as tenants entitled to protection under the ordinance in certain circumstances. In DeZerega v Meggs (2000) 83 CA4th 28, 99 CR2d 366, e.g., the court found that under Berkeley's eviction control ordinance a roommate of a former tenant was a person "entitled to the use or occupancy" of the rental unit and thus could not be evicted except for just cause. Other jurisdictions contain special regulations for "master tenants" in the capacity of landlords, and master tenants should be familiar with them. See, e.g., San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.9(b); San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Board Rules and Regulations §§6.15A-6.15D. For further discussion, see chap 7.

Because of the problems frequently encountered in identifying and actually evicting all tenants residing on the premises (see §§8.67, 13.70-13.73), this form of roommate arrangement is not advantageous to the landlord. To avoid this situation, the landlord might provide in the lease or rental agreement that the original tenant must notify the landlord promptly of any additional parties on the premises or that the premises may only be occupied by the persons identified in the body of the lease. See §1.46. A provision absolutely prohibiting subletting or assigning the lease is also well advised. After being notified—and such notification or knowledge is often difficult to obtain—the landlord might choose to raise the rent if the lease or rental agreement permits, or commence eviction proceedings. At the very least, the landlord should enter into some form of contractual arrangement with the new roommates, if known of, such as an entirely new lease with all the cotenants, or a parallel agreement with the new roommates. The landlord's acceptance of rent from the new roommates might create a month-to-month tenancy with them. See §1.9.

PRACTICE TIP: In a rent-controlled jurisdiction, renting out rooms in a single-family home may subject the property to the local ordinance, with each room becoming a "dwelling unit." Depending on zoning and other factors, however, a single-family residence may not be subject to rent control, even if rooms are rented out. Gabor v Cox (1994) 26 CA4th Supp 16, 31 CR2d 925.

WARNING: Relationships between roommates are often personal melodramas. A landlord is best advised to stay out of personal interactions between tenants in most instances. A common consequence of roommate situations is small claims court litigation against the landlord for failure to return the security deposit paid by one occupant to another. A landlord should have a written policy in the rental agreement regarding renting to new roommates and a provision for the return of the security deposit.

For further discussion of the various problems arising in roommate situations, assignments, and subletting, see §§3.49-3.59A, 4.40-4.40B, 5.28-5.32, 7.62.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.7C 6. Cotenant Owners

Owners of real property who share title as tenants in common may, by title or agreement, designate their respective rights of possession in all or part of the property. See California Real Property Sales Transactions §§4.20-4.23, and App O (4th ed Cal CEB 2007). They may terminate their relationship by statutory partition. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 8 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002). Occasionally, their legal relationship may take the form of landlord and tenant, in which event an unlawful detainer action may be available on the default of the cotenant having exclusive possession. For example, in Rossetto v Barross (2001) 90 CA4th Supp 1, 110 CR2d 255, an agreement among owners holding the real property as tenants in common that one cotenant would occupy the property and pay all expenses created a landlord-tenant relationship between the nonpossessing owners on the one hand and the possessing owner on the other.

© The Regents of the University of California

II. TYPES OF TENANCIES

§1.8 A. Fixed-Term Tenancy

A tenancy for a fixed term (or "estate for years") is a common form of leasehold interest. It is usually created by a written lease, and if the term of the lease exceeds one year the lease must be written. CC §1624(a)(3). See §1.82 for a sample fixed-term lease. In such a tenancy, the tenant has exclusive use and possession of the premises for a specified term (from less than a year to any number of years); the tenancy terminates automatically on expiration of the term. Camp v Matich (1948) 87 CA2d 660, 197 P2d 345; Palmer v Zeis (1944) 65 CA2d Supp 859, 151 P2d 323.

To create an estate for years, the duration of the tenant's possession must be specifically computed, so that the beginning and ending dates are determinable. Camp v Matich, supra. As long as the period is specified, a tenancy for a fixed term is created; even if the term specified is one month, the tenancy is an estate for years and not a month-to-month tenancy. Stoppelkamp v Mangeot (1871) 42 C 316.

A tenant who holds over after expiration of a specified term becomes a tenant at sufferance (see §1.11). Colyear v Tobriner (1936) 7 C2d 735, 62 P2d 741; Hull v Laugharn (1934) 3 CA2d 310, 39 P2d 478. A tenant holding over has bare possession of the property; the landlord may bring an unlawful detainer action to evict such a tenant without first giving notice to terminate the tenancy. CCP §1161(1). If the landlord accepts rent from a tenant who holds over, however, a presumption arises that a month-to-month tenancy has been created (CC §1945), and the landlord must serve the tenant with a 30-day or 60-day notice to terminate the tenancy, as prescribed by CC §§1946 and 1946.1, before commencing an unlawful detainer action (see §§8.69-8.82).

NOTE: Under ordinances with just cause eviction requirements, a tenant who holds over becomes a month-to-month tenant and may be evicted only for just cause. Expiration of a lease is not just cause unless the landlord wants the tenant to execute a new lease with the same terms and conditions and the tenant refuses. See chap 7.

The tenancy for a fixed term has advantages and disadvantages for both parties. From the tenant's point of view, a fixed-term tenancy provides the certainty of the right to occupy the premises for a definite period of time at a fixed rent, without the possibility that the landlord will terminate the tenancy by giving a 30-day or 60-day notice (CC §§1946, 1946.1) or increase the rent by giving a 30-day or 60-day notice (CC §827). See §§3.65-3.66, 8.69-8.82. Tenants in jurisdictions with "just-cause" eviction controls (see §7.54) may prefer a month-to-month tenancy (see §1.9) because under a fixed-term lease the tenant remains liable for the rent for the entire term, and may have difficulty in arranging to sublet or assign the right to occupy the premises if he or she vacates. On assignment and subletting, see §§3.49-3.59A.

The certainty of the fixed nature of the term and periodic rent in a fixed-term tenancy may be advantageous for the landlord. Because the tenancy expires automatically on expiration of the term without notice to the tenant, the landlord may file an unlawful detainer action immediately if the tenant holds over (CCP §1161; see §8.82), except in jurisdictions in which rent control ordinances restrict this right (see §7.54).

If the lease provides that a residential periodic tenancy is renewed or extended automatically at the end of the lease term, the lease must bring that to the attention of the lessee by inserting that provision in eight-point bold-face type. The lease must also contain a recital of the fact that the provision is included in the agreement, in eight-point boldface type, immediately above the tenant's signature line. CC §1945.5. Some fixed-term tenancy agreements require the service of a 30-day notice by the tenant or the landlord of their intent not to renew the lease, and otherwise require the lease to renew automatically on a month-to-month basis. Depending on the language, this could be construed to fall under the provisions of CC §1945.5. In those circumstances, the landlord may be required to serve a 30-day notice to terminate the month-to-month tenancy created after the expiration of the lease unless notice of nonrenewal was served in accordance with the lease. See §§8.69-8.70. However, if the lease clearly states that the landlord has discretion to renew or not renew the lease, the landlord may file an unlawful detainer action immediately. See §§1.44, 8.2, 8.82, 9.44.

PRACTICE TIP: If the lease requires the landlord to give a 30-day notice of intent not to renew, make sure that the notice is worded in the form of a "Thirty-day Notice of Intent Not To Renew Lease." Because there is currently no expectancy that a lease will be renewed under California law (see, e.g., Ferry v McNeil (1963) 214 CA2d 411, 29 CR 577), this wording diminishes potential defenses such as retaliation and discrimination at the unlawful detainer stage.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.9 B. Periodic Tenancy

A periodic tenancy is a tenancy that continues for successive periods of the same length for an indefinite term. See Camp v Matich (1948) 87 CA2d 660, 197 P2d 345. The most common example of a periodic tenancy is the month-to-month tenancy regularly used in modern residential hirings.

A periodic tenancy in residential property may be defined in terms of any period; unless the rental agreement specifies otherwise, the agreement period is determined by the interval between rental payments (i.e., annual, monthly, and weekly rental payments respectively imply year-to-year, month-to-month, and week-to-week tenancies). CC §1944; Camp v Matich, supra; Palmer v Zeis (1944) 65 CA2d Supp 859, 151 P2d 323.

If a residential rental agreement specifies neither the tenancy period, nor the rent intervals, the hiring is presumed to create a month-to-month tenancy. CC §1944. A hiring of nonresidential property for an unspecified term is presumed to create a month-to-month tenancy, and a hiring of real property for agriculture or grazing purposes is presumed to create a fixed, one-year tenancy. CC §1943. When a tenant for a fixed term holds over after expiration of the term, and the landlord accepts monthly rent payments, the tenancy is extended as a periodic tenancy. CC §1945; see Knox v Wolfe (1946) 73 CA2d 494, 167 P2d 3.

Unlike a tenancy for a fixed term (see §1.8), a periodic tenancy does not terminate by mere lapse of time. See Camp v Matich, supra. It can be terminated only when one of the parties gives the notice to terminate required by CC §1946 or §1946.1. On termination of month-to month tenancies, see §§8.69-8.80.

An advantage of a month-to-month tenancy for both parties is that it can be terminated by either party's giving notice to terminate. See CC §§1946, 1946.1. Thus, the tenant has more flexibility than under a fixed-term lease and the landlord can remove an undesirable tenant without cause, or change the terms of the agreement by serving a notice of change of terms of tenancy (see CC §827, discussed in §§3.65-3.65B). These advantages may not exist for a landlord under a rent control ordinance, and do not exist for a landlord with a fixed-term lease (see §1.8). Many local rent control ordinances restrict the situations in which landlords can terminate month-to-month tenancies without good cause (see §7.54).

Some local ordinances have created a hybrid of fixed-term and periodic tenancies by requiring landlords to offer all residential tenants leases for at least a one-year period. See, e.g., Roble Vista Assocs. v Bacon (2002) 97 CA4th 335, 342, 118 CR2d 295, which upheld such an ordinance after it examined the issue of state law preemption and concluded that "there is no full and complete state coverage of the field of the duration of leases so as to 'clearly indicate' that the field is exclusively a matter of state concern."

With enactment of CC §1954.53 in 1995, rent-controlled jurisdictions had to begin phasing out prohibitions on landlords' raising the rent when premises became vacant, so that as of January 1, 1999, vacancy decontrol was fully implemented. Since that date, an owner is entitled to reset the initial rents of any new tenants. See §7.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.10 C. Tenancy at Will

A tenancy at will is created when the tenant enters the premises with the landlord's consent, for an indefinite period, and with no express provision for rent. Covina Manor v Hatch (1955) 133 CA2d Supp 790, 284 P2d 580. Such a tenancy is created by the express or implied agreement of the parties. Carteri v Roberts (1903) 140 C 164, 73 P 818 (implied agreement); Blum v Robertson (1864) 24 C 127 (express agreement). A tenancy at will obligates the tenant to pay rent by operation of law rather than by contract, even in the absence of a lease. Parkmerced Co. v San Francisco Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1989) 215 CA3d 490, 495, 263 CR 617. The landlord's consent is crucial to the creation of a tenancy at will, and it may take very little for a tenancy at will to be implied; the landlord's acquiescence, silence, or failure to take action are often sufficient. See Parkmerced Co. v San Francisco Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd., supra. A tenant who enters without permission is either a tenant at sufferance (see §1.11) or a trespasser (see §1.11A), and the landlord may terminate such occupation without serving a notice to quit. Tenancies at will arise in a variety of ways, e.g.:

- entry under a void oral contract (Carteri v Roberts, supra; Hall v Wallace (1891) 88 C 434, 26 P 360);
- entry under a void parol lease (Phelan v Anderson (1897) 118 C 504, 50 P 685; Psihozios v Humberg (1947) 80 CA2d 215, 181 P2d 699);
- entry while negotiations for a lease are pending (Miller v Smith (1960) 179 CA2d 114, 3 CR 492; Linnard v Sonnenschein (1928) 94 CA 729, 272 P 315);
- remaining in possession of the premises after rescission of contract of sale (Simpson v Applegate (1888) 75 C 342, 17 P 237);
- by implication (Moy v Silveira (1960) 184 CA2d 80, 7 CR 251).

PRACTICE TIP: A tenancy at will may be found where a parent allows a child to live in his or her residence and the parent then dies, or when a relationship breaks up and only one party is the sole owner of the premises.

Although landlords have the right to terminate a tenancy at will, they must give 30 days' notice in the manner prescribed in CCP §1162 in order to do so. CC §789. The landlord's acceptance of periodic rent payments, however, converts a tenancy at will into a periodic tenancy. CC §1945; Linnard v Sonnenschein, supra. On notice required for termination of a periodic tenancy, see §8.69. A tenant at will does not have a transferable interest and is terminated if the tenant attempts to assign his or her interest. McLeran v Benton (1887) 73 C 329, 14 P 879.

PRACTICE TIP: Tenant applicants may falsify their application in order to be approved. If the misrepresentation was material to the landlord's decision to accept, an unlawful detainer action may be filed after service of a 30-day notice to terminate the tenancy at will or, if the lease provides that falsification on the rental application constitutes a breach of lease, after the service of a 3-day notice to quit based on incurable breach. If the landlord chooses to use a 30-day notice to terminate the tenancy at will for false information in the tenant's application, it may be necessary to serve along with the notice, or contain in the notice, a notice of rescission under CC §1689.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.11 D. Tenancy at Sufferance

A tenancy at sufferance is created when a tenant who entered the property lawfully continues to occupy the premises after expiration of the term without the owner's consent, e.g., when a tenant holds over without the landlord's consent after expiration of a fixed-term lease (Colyear v Tobriner (1936) 7 C2d 735, 62 P2d 741) or when a tenant at will who has a right of first refusal to enter into a lease remains in possession of the premises without agreeing to execute a lease (Vandenbergh v Davis (1961) 190 CA2d 694, 12 CR 222). See Gartlan v C. A. Hooper & Co. (1918) 177 C 414, 170 P 1115; Hull v Laugharn (1934) 3 CA2d 310, 39 P2d 478.

NOTE: The status of a fixed-term tenant who holds over is less clear in a jurisdiction with eviction controls under a rent control ordinance. Such a tenancy will probably become a periodic tenancy rather than a tenancy at sufferance. See §7.54. Counsel should be sure to check the terms of applicable local ordinances in this regard.

A tenant at sufferance merely has bare possession of the property. Because he or she does not stand in privity to the landlord, such a tenant is not liable for rent, but may be liable for the reasonable rental value of the premises. Colyear v Tobriner, supra. The landlord may bring an unlawful detainer action against a tenant at sufferance under CCP §1161(1) without first serving a notice to quit (Colyear v Tobriner, supra; Marquez-Luque v Marquez (1987) 192 CA3d 1513, 1518, 238 CR 172), except perhaps in jurisdictions with rent control ordinances (see §§1.31, 7.54). The landlord may also bring an ejectment action without first serving a notice to quit (192 CA3d at 1518). If the landlord elects to treat the tenant's possession as rightful, however, the tenancy becomes a tenancy at will (see §1.10). Shenson v Shenson (1954) 124 CA2d 747, 269 P2d 170; Cowell v Snyder (1911) 15 CA 634, 115 P 961. A landlord who accepts rent from a tenant at sufferance is presumed to have elected to treat the tenancy as a periodic tenancy. CC §1945; Shenson v Shenson, supra. On notice and procedures required for termination of a periodic tenancy, see §8.69.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.11A E. Trespassers

Trespass to property is defined as an unlawful interference with possession. Staples v Hoefke (1987) 189 CA3d 1397, 235 CR 165; Restatement (Second) of Torts §158 (1965). See California Real Property Remedies and Damages §1.17 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002). A person may gain entry to vacant property and take up residence, or a landlord may provide a key to a prospective tenant for viewing the premises and the person then moves in, in either event without the landlord's permission. The law is unsettled on whether some type of notice must be given to the unauthorized intruder before the commencement of an unlawful detainer action. It is advisable that a landlord first attempt getting law enforcement involved. If, as is usually the case, law enforcement considers it a "civil" matter and will not remove the trespasser, then two other courses of action may be taken: The trespasser may be served with a 30-day notice followed by an unlawful detainer action. Alternatively, the property owner may treat the entry as a type of tenancy at sufferance and commence an unlawful detainer without notice. An action in ejectment (see §9.11) or forcible entry and detainer (see CCP §§1159-1160) may also be available. For a general discussion regarding remedies available for trespass, see Real Property Remedies §§11.21-11.35.

© The Regents of the University of California

III. DRAFTING LANDLORD-TENANT AGREEMENT

§1.12 A. Option to Use Preprinted Forms

Many residential landlords use some sort of printed form for both fixed-term leases and month-to-month rental agreements. See, e.g., §§1.81-1.82. For very simple tenancies, a printed form may be adequate to meet the needs of the parties. Owners of multi-unit buildings or owners of large numbers of rental properties often have their attorneys prepare custom-made forms to be printed and used for all the units. Even the owner of a few units should consider having an attorney draft a customized residential lease form. This is particularly important in a rent-controlled jurisdiction where special provisions might be required (see §1.31).

Many landlords use commercially printed forms produced by trade associations, other landlords, or printing companies. Some printed forms have been drafted to benefit the tenant, and might be proposed for use by an association of the tenants of a given apartment building (see §§5.33-5.42). Most printed forms in common use, however, contain provisions that primarily benefit the landlord.

In nonresidential tenancies, commercially printed forms are also available, but in many instances the leases are drafted by the attorney for the landlord and specific terms may be subject to negotiation. See, e.g., lease forms in Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease (Cal CEB 1996).

Both the landlord and tenant should be cautious about automatically using a printed form to make their agreement. A printed form may contain provisions that are simply invalid (see §1.30) or do not meet the specific needs of the rental property or unit. For further discussion of the pros and cons of using printed lease forms, see §§4.17-4.19. Use of a printed form probably increases the likelihood that the agreement will be construed against the landlord as an adhesion contract. See Wilson v San Francisco Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1976) 62 CA3d 1, 132 CR 903 (deed of trust with impound provisions); Spence v Omnibus Indus. (1975) 44 CA3d 970, 119 CR 171 (home-remodeling contract); Neal v State Farm Ins. Co. (1961) 188 CA2d 690, 10 CR 781 (employment contract).

A printed form will make it more difficult for the tenant to negotiate for the inclusion of provisions more favorable to him or her. Many landlords will refuse to deviate from a printed form even if a provision is clearly illegal, or the tenant's proposal would be in the landlord's interest. The tenant should not hesitate, however, to suggest that certain provisions be deleted from a printed form. If a court later bars enforcement of such provisions (see §1.30), the landlord's refusal to delete them will not make the provisions valid. A custom-drafted agreement—whether oral, handwritten, or typed—offers a greater prospect for give-and-take by landlord and tenant in negotiating the terms of the agreement.

On the landlord's duty to provide the tenant with a copy of the signed lease or rental agreement within 15 days of its execution, see CC §1962, discussed in §1.21A.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Written or Oral Agreement?

§1.13 1. Legal Requirements

An agreement is necessary to create a landlord-tenant relationship. See Samuels v Ottinger (1915) 169 C 209, 146 P 638; §1.1. The agreement need not be in writing to be enforceable; the existence of an agreement depends on the parties' intent, and no particular words or format are required. Beckett v City of Paris Dry Goods Co. (1939) 14 C2d 633, 96 P2d 122; Timm v Brown (1947) 78 CA2d 609, 178 P2d 10. Whether written or oral, the agreement must establish the identity of the parties, the rent and its manner of payment, the duration of the tenancy, and a reasonable description of the premises. Beckett v City of Paris Dry Goods Co., supra; Frey v Corbin (1948) 84 CA2d 536, 191 P2d 21.

An agreement for a fixed term tenancy (see §1.8) of more than one year is enforceable only if it is in writing. CC §§1091, 1624(a)(3); CCP §1971. See also CC §798.15 (rental agreement for mobilehome park tenancy must be in writing). A lease for a term of more than one year must be executed by the landlord to be enforceable at all. CC §1091; CCP §1971. If a lease for a term of more than one year is executed by the landlord's agent, the agent's authority must be in a writing signed by the landlord. CC §1624(a)(3). To be enforceable against the tenant, the lease must be executed by both the landlord, as grantor of the estate (CC §1091; CCP §1971), and the tenant, as the party to be charged (CC §1624(a)(3)). A lease not signed by the tenant may be enforceable if the landlord signed the lease and delivered it to the tenant for signature, and the tenant accepted it without comment and paid the rent. Walker v Dorn (1966) 240 CA2d 118, 49 CR 362.

A lease normally need not be recorded. An unrecorded lease is enforceable between the parties (CC §1217) and against any third party who acquires an interest in the property with notice of the leasehold interest (Scheerer v Cuddy (1890) 85 C 270, 24 P 713). The tenant's possession usually is sufficient to give notice to third parties of the tenant's unrecorded interest. CC §1214; Scheerer v Cuddy, supra; Evans v Faught (1965) 231 CA2d 698, 42 CR 133.

If the property is sold at a trustee's sale, any leasehold interest that is subordinate to the foreclosing deed of trust is extinguished and the new owner may commence eviction procedures under CCP §1161a. See §§8.60-8.61.

Some lease transactions are recorded. See Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 38 (Cal CEB 1996). A county recorder may accept for recordation a document entitled "memorandum of lease" that states that the parties have executed a certain unrecorded lease, describes various terms of the lease, is signed, and includes a certificate of acknowledgment by both parties. 87 Ops Cal Atty Gen 1 (2004).

PRACTICE TIP: A tenant with a favorable long-term lease, a lease with an option to purchase or other contingent interest, or a lease containing rights affecting co-tenants (e.g., an exclusive clause in a lease for shopping center space) should consider recordation of the lease or a memorandum of the lease. The lease should be checked beforehand to ensure that it does not contain a clause prohibiting its recordation.

An oral lease for a term of one year or less is usually not avoided by the statute of frauds (CC §1624(a)(3)), but it must be in writing if it will take effect in the future and expire more than one year after its execution. Wickson v Monarch Cycle Mfg. Co. (1900) 128 C 156, 60 P 764. A tenant who enters under an unenforceable oral lease becomes either a tenant at will or a periodic tenant (see §§1.9-1.10). Phelan v Anderson (1897) 118 C 504, 50 P 685.

A landlord who negotiates primarily in Spanish, Chinese, Tagalog, Vietnamese, or Korean for a tenancy longer than one month, must give the tenant a copy of the lease or rental agreement written in that language before the tenant signs, unless the tenant has provided his or her own interpreter. CC §1632(b)(3), (d), (i). If the landlord fails to comply with this requirement, the tenant may rescind the agreement. CC §1632(k).

On a landlord's general duty to provide a tenant with a copy of the signed lease or rental agreement within 15 days of its execution, see CC §1962, discussed in §1.21A.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Advantages and Disadvantages

§1.14 a. For Landlord

It is almost always in the landlord's interest to prepare a tenancy agreement in writing, whether a fixed-term lease or a month-to-month rental agreement. Written agreements are especially important in rent-controlled jurisdictions. See §1.31. Specifying the terms of the agreement and the tenancy in writing may avoid ambiguity and prevent future disputes. A written agreement, together with written rules and regulations incorporated into it, facilitates control of tenant behavior in matters as diverse as use of the pool and spa, the storage of items on balconies or in common areas, parking, use of the parking area for washing and maintaining cars, and so on. A written agreement may also provide a basis for just-cause eviction of unwanted tenants, for managing intertenant relations, and for resolving disputes.

Whether a specially prepared or a preprinted form rental agreement is used, it is strongly recommended that the landlord and the tenant discuss its provisions, particularly those that amend local or state law or that impose responsibilities on the tenant. The tenant should be required, in particular, to initial those provisions that waive rights that the tenant might otherwise have without the agreement.

Residential landlords may wish to include a prohibition against assignment and subletting in the lease or rental agreement (see CC §1995.230), again particularly in rent-controlled jurisdictions (see §1.31). Such a prohibition must be included in the agreement. When the lease does not otherwise provide, a tenant has the right to transfer the leasehold interest, either by assignment (Kassan v Stout (1973) 9 C3d 39, 106 CR 783), or by sublease (Chandler v Hart (1911) 161 C 405, 119 P 516). See also Little v Guadron (1986) 187 CA3d Supp 1, 4, 232 CR 516. If the lease permits assignment and subletting, the landlord will be held to a standard of good faith and reasonableness in withholding consent to any assignment or subletting. CC §1995.260. See, e.g., Court House Plaza Co. v Goodenough (2003) 106 CA4th 832, 131 CR2d 193, in which the court found that a party who took possession under a sublease and executed an assignment of the original lease, without the consent of the lessor, was neither an "assignee" nor a third party beneficiary to the original lease and therefore lacked standing to sue the lessor for alleged breach of contract, specific performance, and declaratory relief. On assignment and subletting, see §§1.54, 3.49-3.59A.

To benefit from the damages remedy provided by CC §1951.4 when the tenant breaches the lease and abandons the premises, the landlord must include a provision to that effect in the lease. Under CC §1951.4, the landlord may elect to continue the lease and enforce the right to recover rent as it becomes due for the term of the lease. For discussion of this remedy, see §8.15. For the CC §1951.4 remedy to be available, the lease must also afford the tenant the various rights to sublet specified in CC §1951.4(b)(1)-(3). See §8.15.

Unless the lease or rental agreement expressly provides for attorney fees, neither the landlord nor the tenant will be able to recover attorney fees for enforcing its terms. See CCP §1021; Bank of America v Moore (1937) 18 CA2d 522, 64 P2d 460. Although some of the essential terms of an oral lease can be proved from the parties' conduct, the existence of an oral attorney fee provision would be almost impossible to prove. Landlords may prefer a written lease because it permits inclusion of an attorney fees provision, but the courts will interpret a provision authorizing only the landlord to recover attorney fees for enforcing the lease or rental agreement as authorizing recovery of fees by the prevailing party in an action under the agreement. CC §1717(a).

PRACTICE TIP: Because most residential tenants have a better chance of collecting a judgment against the landlord than the landlord has of collecting a judgment against the tenant, the landlord's attorney should consider all relevant circumstances to determine whether an attorney fee provision should be included. See §4.42.

Other rental agreement provisions that must be specified in writing typically include the following:

- Specification of the purpose of the security deposit and how it is to be applied (see §1.48);
- Indemnification for personal injury or property damage caused by the tenant (see §1.47); and
- Provision for options to renew the lease, if applicable.

See §1.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.15 b. For Tenant

It is often in the tenant's interest to obtain the security of a fixed-term occupancy by having the terms of the lease set forth in a written agreement. The agreement must be in writing if the term is for more than one year. CC §1624(a)(3). See §1.13.

Whether it benefits the tenant for the rental agreement to contain an attorney fee provision is unclear. On the one hand, even if the agreement provides that only the landlord may recover attorney fees on the tenant's breach, it must be interpreted reciprocally to permit an award to a tenant who prevails in an action brought by either party to enforce the lease. CC §1717(a). See §13.25. On the other hand, the landlord may not recover attorney fees in an unlawful detainer action if the lease does not provide for them. CCP §1021. The absence of such a provision probably frees the tenant to raise any available defenses, meritorious or not, knowing that he or she cannot become liable for the landlord's legal expenses.

In certain instances, particularly when covered by rent control ordinances that contain "just-cause" eviction limitations (see §§1.31, 7.54), the tenant may be better off without a written agreement. "Just cause" typically includes:

- Failure to pay rent;
- Breach of the lease;
- Nuisance;
- Illegal use of the premises;
- Withdrawal of the unit from the rental market;
- Conversion to condominiums;
- Demolition;
- Owner or relative occupancy;
- Major renovation; and
- Other causes enumerated in a particular rent control ordinance.

Under rent control, it is primarily the landlord who benefits from a written lease or rental agreement. The more conditions in the agreement, the more likely that the landlord will be able to evict an unwanted tenant for cause (see §1.31).

In contrast, an oral month-to-month agreement under a rent control ordinance gives the tenant essentially the security of a written lease, without a number of written lease covenants, breach of which may be cause for eviction. State law and the rent control ordinance will contain most of the protections necessary for the tenant, independent of the terms of the agreement. Other major advantages for the tenant under an oral agreement are that the tenant is free to use the premises for any reasonable purpose (see §1.28), may sublet or assign without permission (see §§1.54, 3.56), may have pets (see §1.62), and may repaint or reasonably alter the premises (see §1.60).

There are, however, some advantages for the tenant in securing a written lease for a term:

(1) The landlord cannot change any of the terms of the lease by serving a 30-day or 60-day notice;

(2) The landlord cannot use any of the discretionary eviction justifications (e.g., owner or relative occupancy); and

(3) The tenant may obtain the relief from forfeiture remedy provided by CCP §1179 (see §§13.56-13.57).

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Requisites of Agreement

1. Parties

§1.16 a. Capacity to Enter Into Lease

All natural persons are capable of entering into leases, except minors, persons of unsound mind, and persons deprived of their civil rights. CC §1556. See also §1.37. For real property owned by a minor or an incompetent person, a lease may be executed by a court-appointed guardian or conservator. Prob C §§2550, 2553-2556. A minor emancipated under Fam C §§7000-7143 (Emancipation of Minors Law) may enter into a lease of real property. Fam C §7050(e)(3). A guardian or conservator may lease real property without court authorization when the rental value does not exceed $5000 per month and the term does not exceed two years, or when the tenancy is from month to month. Prob C §2555. Otherwise, court authorization is required. Prob C §§2550, 2553-2554.

The parties to a lease or rental agreement must be "capable of contracting" (CC §1550(1)), and their identities must be "ascertainable" (CC §1558). Accordingly, a lease or rental agreement should set forth the names of the parties, their legal status, and the nature of their interests in the property. See Losson v Blodgett (1934) 1 CA2d 13, 36 P2d 147; Dodd v Pasch (1907) 5 CA 686, 91 P 166.

On the benefits of including specific tenant information in the lease or rental agreement, see §1.21. On required disclosures under CC §§1962, 1962.5 regarding owner, building manager, agent for service of process, rent payment, and other information, see §§1.21A, 1.29. For sample lease or rental agreement provisions designating the parties and making the required disclosures, see §§1.37, 1.40, 1.76.

On the landlord's duty to provide the tenant with a copy of the signed lease or rental agreement within 15 days of its execution, see CC §1962, discussed in §1.21A.

© The Regents of the University of California

b. Execution

§1.17 (1) By Spouses

Both spouses must join in executing a lease of community real property for a term of longer than one year, except when the lease runs from one spouse to the other. Fam C §1102. A lease executed on or after January 1, 1975, is presumed to be valid if either spouse holds record title to the community real property and leases it to a tenant who takes the interest in good faith and without knowledge of the marriage relationship. Fam C §1102(c)(2). A lease of community real property executed before that date is presumed to be valid if the husband had record title and leased the property to a tenant acting in good faith and without knowledge of the marriage. Fam C §1102(c)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.18 (2) By Joint Tenants or Tenants in Common

If title to the property is held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common, all the owners should execute the lease, unless one of them has been designated an agent to act on behalf of the others. When one owner executes a lease with the other owners' knowledge, the owners ratify the lease if they fail to object. Halsey v Robinson (1942) 19 C2d 476, 122 P2d 11. Acceptance by the joint tenants or tenants in common of benefits under the lease also constitutes ratification of the lease. Atlantic Oil Co. v County of Los Angeles (1968) 69 C2d 585, 72 CR 886. One joint tenant or tenant in common may also confer his or her right of possession under the lease by conveying a lease to a third person. Atlantic Oil Co. v County of Los Angeles, supra; Verdier v Verdier (1957) 152 CA2d 348, 313 P2d 123. In such a situation, another owner cannot divest the lessee of the right of possession conferred by the lease. Swartzbaugh v Sampson (1936) 11 CA2d 451, 54 P2d 73. The single owner's lease, however, conveys only his or her interest, and cannot bind or prejudicially affect the interests of the other joint tenants or tenants in common. Tenhet v Boswell (1976) 18 C3d 150, 133 CR 10.

In Rossetto v Barross (2001) 90 CA4th Supp 1, 110 CR2d 255, the court found that tenants in common could create, by contract, a landlord/tenant relationship with one of the other tenants in common. The court held that the fact that one of the tenants in common had exclusive possession of the premises was a strong indicator of lessee status, thus entitling the remaining tenants in common to state a cause of action in unlawful detainer.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.19 (3) By Corporations and Other Entities

In addition to natural persons, the following entities may enter into leases:

- corporations (Corp C §207(g));
- nonprofit corporations (Corp C §§5140(i), 7140(i), 9140(i));
- limited liability companies (Corp C §17003(e), (f));
- unincorporated benevolent and fraternal societies and associations, lodges, and labor organizations (Corp C §20001);
- medical associations (Corp C §21200);
- partnerships (Corp C §§16103, 16203, 16303);
- limited partnerships (Corp C §15503); and
- school districts (Ed C §81360).

The capacity of corporations, nonprofit corporations, and unincorporated associations to enter into leases is subject to limitations in the entities' articles of incorporation, bylaws, or regulations. Corp C §§207, 5140, 20001.

With the emergence in California of "corporate" housing projects, i.e., premises leased to a corporation to house its corporate officers or employees, landlord attorneys should be aware of Corp C §313. Section 313 provides that a lease agreement that is executed by an "operational" officer (i.e., chairman of the board, president, vice-president) and "financial" officer (i.e., secretary, chief financial officer, assistant treasurer) is valid even if the person or persons signing the lease lacked authority to do so. This is so only if the landlord had no actual knowledge of the signatory's lack of authority.

In Snukal v Flightways Mfg. (2000) 23 C4th 754, 98 CR2d 1, the court held that a corporation will also be bound to a lease under Corp C §313 if the person signing the lease holds two corporate offices, as chairman of the board, president, or any vice-president and secretary, assistant secretary, chief financial officer, or assistant treasurer, even if that person signed the lease solely in the capacity of president.

The capacity of a limited liability company to enter into leases is subject to the limitations in its articles of organization pertaining to management. Corp C §§17150-17151, 17157.

When title is in the name of a partnership, a leasehold interest may be transferred as provided in Corp C §16302.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.20 (4) By Agents

A lease need not be executed by the owner of the property or the actual tenant, but may be executed by an agent of either party. CC §2305. On appointment of agents, see CC §§2295-2296. Either the landlord or the tenant may authorize an agent to negotiate and execute a lease or to collect or pay rent for the leased premises. CC §§2304-2305: see Holwick v Walker (1935) 6 CA2d 669, 45 P2d 374. If one of the parties authorizes an attorney in fact to execute a lease or rental agreement, the attorney must sign the name of the principal to it, as well as his or her own name as attorney in fact. CC §1095. For discussion of problems on termination from use of an agent, see §8.71.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.21 c. Listing All Tenants

When terminating the tenancy, landlords frequently encounter problems in determining which parties are occupying the premises and thus must be served with notices to quit and be named in an unlawful detainer action. See §13.70. Leases usually provide that the premises may be occupied only by those expressly named as tenants. In rent control jurisdictions, naming the actual tenants who are permitted to occupy the residence and providing that no other tenant may occupy the unit may assist the landlord in controlling revolving door tenancies. See §1.37. Listing the names of all tenants and tenant's children in the lease or rental agreement is vital in this regard. See §1.45. Many landlords also require the date of birth of all occupants to identify each occupant 18 years of age or older who should be named as a defendant in the event an unlawful detainer action is to be filed. In addition, the lease might specify that anyone not named as a tenant in the lease is a guest and limit guest occupancy to a certain number of days and a certain number of guests at any one time. (See the time limitations on guests in mobilehome tenancies under CC §798.34 (20 consecutive days or 30 days in a calendar year).) See §1.46. The landlord might also include a provision prohibiting the tenant's right to assign or sublet (see §§1.54, 3.49-3.59A). To avoid the unknown-tenant problem on termination, the landlord should require strict compliance with any clause conditioning assignment or subletting on first obtaining the landlord's written consent and, when prosecuting an unlawful detainer action, should use the prejudgment claim of right to possession procedure under CCP §415.46. See §§13.70-13.71. On the effect of tenant bankruptcy on lease assignment and restrictions on assignment, see §§3.59A, 14.35, 14.43, 14.49-14.52.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.21A d. Required Agent and Service of Process Information; Copy of Lease; CC §1962

§1.21A d. Required Agent and Service of Process Information; Copy of Lease; CC §1962

Civil Code §1962(a)(1) provides that the owner of one or more rental units must include, in the lease or rental agreement, the name, telephone number, and usual street address at which personal service may be effected on

- Each authorized building manager; and
- Each owner or person who is authorized to act for and on behalf of the owner for the purposes of service of process and of receiving and receipting notices and demands.

Civil Code §1962.5 provides an alternative for disclosing the written information required under CC §1962(a)(1). Instead of being inserted into the lease, the information may be

- Posted in a conspicuous spot in an elevator, if there be one; or
- Posted in at least two conspicuous places on the premises, if there be no elevator.

For a single-unit dwelling, such information may be disclosed by posting either in an elevator or in two conspicuous places on the property. CC §1962.5.

The lease or rental agreement must include the name of the person or entity to whom rent payments shall be made, and its address and telephone number, as well as the form or forms in which rental payments shall be made. CC §1962(a)(2)-(3). This information may not be disclosed by posting it on the property in lieu of stating it in the lease. If rent may be paid in person, the lease must state the usual days and hours that the owner or agent will be available to receive payments. CC §1962(a)(2)(A). At the owner's option, the lease may instead state either (CC §1962(a)(2)(B)):

- The account number of a financial institution into which the rent may be paid and the name and street address of that institution, which must be within five miles of the rental property; or
- The information necessary to establish an electronic transfer procedure for paying the rent.

The information and disclosures required by CC §1962 must be kept current and a new owner or manager must comply with its provisions within 15 days of succeeding the previous owner or manager. CC §1962(c).

The penalties for nondisclosure in violation of CC §1962 are that the party who enters into the lease or rental agreement is deemed the agent of each person that is the owner for the purpose of service of process and receiving and receipting notices and demands and the purpose of receiving rental payments. CC §1962(d). Payments may be made in cash, by check, by money order, or in any form previously accepted by the landlord's agent, unless the form of payment has been specified in the oral or rental agreement or the landlord has notified the tenant in writing that a particular form of payment is unacceptable. CC §1962(d).

WARNING: A landlord generally may not demand cash as the exclusive form of payment of rent or of a security deposit. CC §1947.3. A landlord may, however, require cash as the exclusive form of payment, for a period not to exceed 3 months, if the tenant previously has attempted to pay the landlord with a check drawn on insufficient funds or has stopped payment on a check for rent or security. To make a demand for cash payment, the landlord must give the tenant written notice and attach a copy of the dishonored check. CC §1947.3(a)(2).

Finally, CC §1962(f) provides that if the address disclosed by the landlord does not allow for personal delivery, then it shall be conclusively presumed that upon the mailing of rent or notice to the landlord at the address provided, the notice or rent is received by the landlord on the date posted, if the tenant can show proof of mailing to the name and address provided by the landlord.

For sample lease or rental agreement provisions designating the parties and making the required disclosures, see §§1.37, 1.40, 1.76.

The landlord must provide a copy of the lease or rental agreement to the tenant within 15 days of its execution. Thereafter, once each calendar year, the landlord must provide an additional copy upon the tenant's request. If the landlord does not have a copy of the lease or rental agreement, that landlord must furnish the tenant with a written statement stating that fact and disclose all required information about the manager, the agent for service of process, rental payment, and form of payment. CC §1962(a)(4).

If the rental agreement is oral, within 15 days of the agreement, the landlord must provide the tenant with a written statement containing the required information. Landlord must provide that information once each calendar year if the tenant requests it. CC §1962(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.22 2. Rent

A valid lease must be supported by mutual consideration; a lease that allows one party to withdraw without cause is unenforceable. See Cox v Hollywood Film Enters. (1952) 109 CA2d 320, 240 P2d 713. In the usual lease, mutual consideration is found in the landlord's implied covenant that the tenant will have quiet enjoyment of the premises (see §§3.5-3.7) and in the tenant's promise to pay rent. See Blackman v Dalton's Auto & Furniture Loans (1942) 51 CA2d 14, 124 P2d 123. The tenant's promise to repair the premises may be sufficient to create a binding lease even if no rent will be paid. See Riner v Vernon (1933) 132 CA 178, 22 P2d 255. For discussion of the pitfalls of "labor-for-rent" arrangements, see §4.31.

The lease or rental agreement should clearly specify the amount and manner of rent payment. See Beckett v City of Paris Dry Goods Co. (1939) 14 C2d 633, 96 P2d 122. On lease provisions regarding rent payments and agent information required in residential tenancies under CC §1962, see §1.21A. For sample lease or rental agreement provisions on rent payments, see §1.40. See also §§4.19, 4.30.

When determining the amount of rent, landlords frequently consider:

- rents charged for similar premises in the area;
- vacancy rate in the area;
- the return that the landlord expects for the property, factoring into that equation debt service, property and income taxes, insurance, and repair and maintenance expenses on the property;
- use to be made of the premises;
- length of the lease term; and
- any ceilings imposed on rents under a local rent control ordinance.

For further discussion of setting the rent, see §4.34.

Most residential and commercial leases provide that the tenant must pay the rent at the beginning of the period for which it is due. See §1.40. The rent is not payable in advance unless the lease so provides. CC §1947. Under most residential leases, the rent is a fixed sum, payable monthly. Commercial leases may specify a net rent or percentage rent and, if one of these is used, the lease should specify the manner of computing the rent. See Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chaps 11-12 (Cal CEB 1996).

WARNING: To impose a late charge for delayed rent payments, the landlord must provide for this in the lease or rental agreement. The landlord should exercise caution in this area, however, because the law concerning late charges is still unsettled. For discussion of late charges, see §§4.43A, 8.39-8.40. For examples of late charge provisions, see §§1.41, 1.80-1.82.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Description of Premises

§1.23 a. Basic Parameters

The premises must be sufficiently described in the lease or rental agreement so that the location and extent of the property can be determined. Beckett v City of Paris Dry Goods Co. (1939) 14 C2d 633, 96 P2d 122. The description need not be the property's legal description; a description by unit number and street address will suffice for most rental property. Baranov v Scudder (1918) 177 C 458, 170 P 1122. See §1.37 for a lease or rental agreement provision identifying the property. When a tenant takes possession of premises with an uncertain description and pays rent, that conduct constitutes evidence of the parties' intent that the tenant lease the premises and permits enforcement of the lease. Guttman v Berry (1948) 83 CA2d 507, 189 P2d 41.

PRACTICE TIP: The landlord must ensure that the property address is spelled correctly and is complete (including apartment number or letter) in the lease or rental agreement. For example, is the street a Place, Avenue, Street, or Boulevard? Should it be followed by North, South, East, or West? When the attorney drafts an unlawful detainer complaint, this information is often obtained from the lease or rental agreement. The correct information is crucial to successful prosecution of the action and especially for execution of a writ of possession. The levying officer will not evict the occupants if there is any confusion or ambiguity concerning the address.

A lease or rental agreement also passes to the tenant, as part of the leasehold interest, all appurtenances that are reasonably necessary to the tenant's use and enjoyment of the premises. Owsley v Hamner (1951) 36 C2d 710, 227 P2d 263 (maintenance of adjacent patio and arcade necessary to enjoyment of lease of store); Ng v Warren (1947) 79 CA2d 54, 179 P2d 41 (driveway on adjoining lot necessary appurtenance for access to leased premises); Mayer v Hazzard (1935) 10 CA2d 1, 51 P2d 189 (maintenance of appurtenant entrance necessary for use of premises, although not only means of access); Sierad v Lilly (1962) 204 CA2d 770, 22 CR 580 (parking spaces in front of premises reasonably necessary for use of premises). But see Froomer v Drollinger (1962) 201 CA2d 90, 19 CR 891 (parking behind store not reasonably necessary when lease provided for other parking area). Although all reasonably necessary appurtenances are considered to be part of the leased premises, the lease should specify any additional areas that the tenant may use (e.g., parking spaces, storage areas, patios) to avoid future disputes over the tenant's right to use these areas. See §1.38.

Many older buildings have fewer parking spaces than apartments. In this situation, the landlord can either adopt a "first come, first served" policy, or assign and limit the parking. Parking assignments, limitations, and exclusions should be set forth in the written agreement.

PRACTICE TIP: The attorney should review how an applicable rent control ordinance treats "services" or "base amenities." Parking, storage, and swimming pools fall into these categories. A landlord may not be able to withdraw these services unilaterally, or, if they are withdrawn, the landlord may be required to reduce the tenant's rent under a formula prescribed in the rent control ordinance.

Some appurtenances such as garages and storage areas may be subject to separate lease agreements and complicate the unlawful detainer process. Some levying officers require separate writs of possession for separate garages or storage areas if they are not included in the description of the property listed in the judgment for possession.

© The Regents of the University of California

b. Condition of the Premises

§1.24 (1) Joint Pre-Possession Inspection

The condition of the premises often becomes an issue when the tenancy is terminated. If the landlord seeks to terminate the tenancy for nonpayment of rent, the tenant may raise the affirmative defense that the landlord has breached the implied warranty of habitability. See §§3.16-3.48. When either the landlord or the tenant terminates the tenancy, the amount of the security deposit that the tenant may recover usually depends on the condition of the premises. In proving their cases on both of these issues, the landlord and tenant may need to refer to some objective statement of the condition of the premises at the beginning of the tenancy. For example, the tenant might use such a statement to demonstrate the falsity of the landlord's contention that he or she did not breach the warranty of habitability because the tenant caused the defects. Similarly, whether the landlord may apply the security deposit to correct various defects could turn on whether the defects existed at the start of the tenancy.

To ensure that these issues can be proved at a future date, the landlord and tenant should conduct a joint tour of the premises before the tenant takes possession, inspecting the premises for defects that may become material. The tenant can take this opportunity to note defective conditions and request that they be corrected before he or she takes possession. The parties should note the condition of major systems, appliances, and furnishings and both should sign and date the lists. For sample checklists to use for this purpose, see §§1.25-1.26. All items that may be the subject of dispute on termination of the tenancy should be inspected, e.g., the general structure of the premises, plumbing, appliances and fixtures, water heater, water, heat, lighting, ventilation, wiring, electrical outlets, fire safety, cleanliness, and sanitation. On refundability of security deposits, see §§4.11, 4.28, 8.172-8.176. For additional drafting tips regarding deposits, see §§4.23-4.29. For requirements of pre-moveout inspections, see CC §1950.5(f), discussed in §§8.167, 8.172A.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.25 (2) Form: Move-In/Move-Out Itemized Statement (California Apartment Association Form 16.0)

§1.25 (2) Form: Move-In/Move-Out Itemized Statement (California Apartment Association Form 16.0)

MOVE-IN/MOVE-OUT ITEMIZED STATEMENT

Resident Name(s)		Initial Inspection Date	Initial Inspection by	Final Inspection Date	Final Inspection By
Address/Apt. #	City	State	Zip	Move in Date	Move out Date

The condition of these premises is clean, undamaged, in good working order and adequate for customary use unless otherwise noted hereon. Use codes and comments to describe exceptions. Cross out items not applicable.

CODES: NCC - Needs complete cleaning • REP - Replace • SC - Needs spot cleaning • SP - Needs spot painting
RPR - Needs repair • PT - Needs painting • SCR - Scratched • CLN - Clean • NEW – New

	Move-In Inspection	Initial Inspection (residents option)	Final Inspection
KITCHEN
Ceiling
Doors
Walls
Floors
Hood/Filter
Fan/Light
Counter top
Sink/Faucets
Drains/Disposal
Cabinet/Doors
Shelves/Drawers
Under sink
Windows
Screens
Curtains/Blinds
Electric fixtures
Light bulbs
STOVE/OVEN
Stove-Outside Burners
Drip pans
Vent
Timer/Controls
Oven surfaces
Oven racks
Broiler pan
Light
REFRIGERATOR
Inside (all parts)
Outside DISHWASHER
Outside/Controls
Inside (all parts)
LIVING ROOM
Walls
Ceiling
Doors
Windows
Screens
Drapes/Blinds
Shades/_____
Floor
Closet
Electric fixtures
Light bulbs
Fireplace

Comments:

	Move-In Inspection	Initial Inspection (residents option)	Final Inspection
1st BATH
Ceiling
Walls/Tile
Floors
Cabinets
Shelves
Doors
Mirror
Tub/Shower
Caulking
Shower Dr/Tracks
Basin
Drains
Faucets
Counter tops
Exhaust fan
Bowl/Seat
Towel racks
Window
Screen
Electric fixtures
Light bulbs
2nd BATH
Ceiling
Walls/Tile
Floors
Cabinets
Shelves
Doors
Mirror
Tub/Shower
Caulking
Shower Dr/Track
Basin
Drains
Faucets
Counter tops
Exhaust fan
Bowl/Seat
Towel racks
Window
Screen
Electric fixtures
Light bulbs
DINING ROOM
Walls
Ceiling
Drapes/Blinds
Shades/_____
Closet
Doors
Floor
Windows
Screens
Electric fixtures
Light bulbs

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

Print

CODES: NCC - Needs complete cleaning • REP - Replace • SC - Needs spot cleaning • SP - Needs spot painting
RPR - Needs repair • PT - Needs painting • SCR - Scratched • CLN - Clean • NEW – New

	Move-In Inspection	Initial Inspection (residents option)	Final Inspection
1st BEDROOM
Walls
Ceiling
Windows
Screens
Drapes/Blinds
Shades/_____
Doors
Closet
Floor
Electric fixtures
Light bulbs
2nd BEDROOM
Walls
Ceiling
Windows
Screens
Drapes/Blinds
Shades/_____
Doors
Closet
Floor
Electric fixtures
Light bulbs
3rd BEDROOM
Walls
Ceiling
Windows
Screens
Drapes/Blinds
Shades/_____
Doors
Closet
Floor
Electric fixtures
Light bulbs

	Move-In Inspection	Initial Inspection (residents option)	Final Inspection
OTHER ROOM
Walls
Ceiling
Closet/Cabinets
Windows
Curtain/Shade/Blind Screen
Floor
Door
Electric fixtures
Light bulbs
FRONT PORCH
Electric fixtures
Light bulbs
BACK PORCH
Electric fixtures
Light bulbs
GARAGE/CARPORT
Electric fixtures
Light bulbs
Remote/Opener

Move-In Inspection:

Resident Date

Resident Date

Resident Date

Resident Date

Owner/Agent Date

Initial Inspection:

Owner/Agent Date

Final Inspection:

Owner/Agent Date

According to state law:

Any security shall be held by the landlord for the tenant who is party to the lease or agreement. The claim of a tenant to the security shall be prior to the claim of any creditor for the landlord. (Civil Code Section 1950.5(d)). According to Civil Code Section 1950.5(b), the security deposit may be used by the owner for any purpose, including, but not limited to, any of the following:

(1) The compensation of a landlord for a tenant's default in the payment rent.
(2) The repair of damages to the premises, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear, caused by the tenant or by a guest or licensee of the tenant.
(3) The cleaning of the premises upon termination of the tenancy necessary to return the unit to the same level of cleanliness it was in at the inception of the tenancy. The amendments to this paragraph enacted by the act adding this sentence shall apply only to tenancies for which the tenant's right to occupy begins after January 1, 2003. (Amendment underlined)
(4) To remedy future defaults by the tenant in any obligation under this rental agreement to restore, replace, or return personal property or appurtenances, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear, if the security deposit is authorized to be applied thereto by the rental agreement.

From the time of the initial inspection until the termination of the tenancy, the tenant may remedy the deficiencies identified in the initial inspection, in a manner consistent with the rights and obligations of the parties under the rental agreement, in order to avoid deductions from the security deposit.

The law allows the Owner/Agent to use the security deposit for legal deductions itemized in this statement that are not corrected by the Resident prior to the termination of the tenancy or that were not identified due to the presence of the Residents' possessions during the time of the initial inspection. It also allows Owner/Agent to use the security deposit to correct any damages that occur to the unit/property between the time of the initial inspection and the termination of the tenancy.

An itemized statement will be sent to you within 21 calendar days after the Owner/Agent has regained possession of the premises.

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.26 (3) Form: Furniture Inventory (California Apartment Association Form 16.1)

§1.26 (3) Form: Furniture Inventory (California Apartment Association Form 16.1)

FURNITURE INVENTORY

On _____ (date), the undersigned carefully inspected the furniture and furnishings in the premises located at:

_____, Unit # (if applicable)_____
(Street Address)

_____ , CA _____ .
(City) (Zip)

and unless indicated with any defect explained below, each item has been found:

a) To be undamaged and in good working order;
b) Adequate and appropriate for customary use; and,
c) Free of vermin and in clean and sanitary condition.

Furnishings received as follows (Codes):			Location Symbols:
1 – Bent	8 – Gouged	15 – Rusty
2 – Broken	9 – Holes	16 – Scratched	B – Bottom	Re – Rear	Se – Seat
3 – Burned	10 – Loose	17 – Soiled	Ba – Back	Rt – Right	Cu – Cushion
4 – Chipped	11 – Marred	18 – Stained	C – Corner	S – Side	D – Door
5 – Cracked	12 – Moth-eaten	19 – Torn	F – Front	T – Top	Dr – Drawer
6 – Dented	13 – Normal wear	20 - _____	Le – Left	Lg – Leg	V – Veneer
7 – Faded	14 – Rubbed	21 - _____

Use the above codes to describe defects in condition (example: 4-C = chipped corner)

	Condition				Condition
Item Name	Move-In Inspection	Initial Inspection*	Final Inspection*	Item Name	Move-In Inspection	Initial Inspection*	Final Inspection*

* From the date of the initial inspection until the termination of the tenancy, the tenant may remedy the deficiencies identified in the initial inspection, in a manner consistent with the rights and obligations of the parties under the Rental/Lease Agreement, in order to avoid deductions from the security deposit.

General comments: _____

_____

_____

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

Print

According to state law:

Any security shall be held by the landlord for the tenant who is party to the Rental/Lease Agreement. The claim of a tenant to the security shall be prior to the claim of any creditor for the landlord. (Civil Code Section 1950.5(d)).

According to Civil Code Section 1950.5(b), the security deposit may be used by the owner for any purpose, including, but not limited to, any of the following:

(1) The compensation of a landlord for a tenant's default in the payment of rent.
(2) The repair of damages to the premises, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear, caused by the tenant or by a guest or licensee of the tenant.
(3) The cleaning of the premises upon termination of the tenancy necessary to return the unit to the same level of cleanliness it was in at the inception of the tenancy. The amendments to this paragraph enacted by the act adding this sentence shall apply only to tenancies for which the tenant's right to occupy begins after January 1, 2003. (Amendment underlined)
(4) To remedy future defaults by the tenant in any obligation under this rental agreement to restore, replace, or return personal property or appurtenances, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear, if the security deposit is authorized to be applied thereto by the rental agreement.

The law allows the Owner/Agent to use the security deposit for legal deductions itemized in this statement that are not corrected by the Resident prior to the termination of the tenancy or that were not identified due to the presence of the Residents' possessions during the time of the initial inspection. It also allows Owner/Agent to use the security deposit to correct any damages that occur to the unit/property between the time of the initial inspection and the termination of the tenancy.

A final itemized statement will be sent to you within 3 weeks (21 days) after the Owner/Agent has regained possession of the premises.

Resident acknowledges receipt of a copy hereof:

_____ Date	_____ Resident	_____ Date	_____ Resident
_____ Date	_____ Resident	_____ Date	_____ Resident
_____ Date	_____ Owner/Agent

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.26A 4. Deposits, Screening Fees, Key Money

§1.26A 4. Deposits, Screening Fees, Key Money

The laws on security deposits, screening or application fees, and key money that can be levied by a landlord at the beginning of a tenancy vary greatly between residential and nonresidential tenancies. On residential tenancies, see CC §§1950.5-1950.6, discussed in §§1.30, 1.48-1.51, 4.23-4.29, 8.167-8.175. On nonresidential tenancies, see CC §§1950.7-1950.8, discussed in §§4.28, 4.29A, 8.167-8.175; see also Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease §§5.17, 9.1, 10.1, 13.3-13.9 (Cal CEB 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.27 5. Term

The term of the tenancy is the period for which the tenant may occupy the premises, and is one of the essential elements of a lease or rental agreement. See Taylor v Terry (1886) 71 C 46, 11 P 813. The landlord should specify the precise term of the tenancy to avoid ambiguity or undesired results. Because the term might not commence with execution of the lease, the landlord should identify the beginning and ending dates. If the term is not specified, certain statutory presumptions will dictate the term, and these presumptions may not comport with the parties' intent. Use of the word "term" in this context does not connote only a tenancy for a fixed term (or "estate for years"; see §1.8). Specification in the rental agreement of a month-to-month tenancy, or a tenancy for some other period, constitutes adequate specification of the term because a periodic tenancy is a tenancy for the period specified that is renewed for that period each time the tenant continues to occupy the premises and pay rent for yet another period (see §1.9).

NOTE: In Roble Vista Assocs. v Bacon (2002) 97 CA4th 335, 118 CR2d 295, the appellate court upheld a City of Palo Alto ordinance that requires landlords to offer all tenants leases of at least a one-year period. See §1.9.

When the tenant's occupancy is to begin on completion of construction of the rental premises, the adequacy of the statement of the term in the lease often becomes an issue. As a general rule, a statement that the term will commence on completion of the premises is adequate; actual completion of the premises removes any ambiguity. City of Santa Cruz v MacGregor (1960) 178 CA2d 45, 2 CR 727. The term begins on completion of construction under such a provision even if completion occurs well after the date originally contemplated by the parties. Fanta v Maddex (1926) 80 CA 513, 252 P 630; Lang v Pacific Brewing & Malting Co. (1919) 44 CA 618, 187 P 81. The rule against perpetuities applies to leasehold interests (Haggerty v City of Oakland (1958) 161 CA2d 407, 326 P2d 957), which, therefore, must vest within lives in being plus 21 years (CC §715), or within 30 years (CC §715). The rule against perpetuities is not violated by a lease provision that the lease will commence on completion of construction, because the courts will presume that the landlord was obligated to complete the premises within a reasonable time. Wong v DiGrazia (1963) 60 C2d 525, 35 CR 241.

When no term is specified in the lease or rental agreement, the term is determined in accordance with statutory presumptions. For residential tenancies, the period adopted for the payment of rent is presumed to be the term of the lease (i.e., if the rent is paid monthly, then the tenancy is for one month). If there is no agreement concerning the frequency of rent payments, the tenancy is presumed to be monthly. CC §1944. For leases of agricultural or grazing property, the tenancy is presumed to be for one year. CC §1943. For leases of other kinds of property, the tenancy is presumed to be from month to month. CC §1943.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.28 6. Use of Premises

The lease or rental agreement may include a provision specifying the permitted uses of the property. See §1.55. If the lease does not specify permissible uses or restrict changes in use, the tenant may use the premises for any lawful purpose that is not materially different from that for which the premises ordinarily are used or for which they were constructed. Davidson v Goldstein (1943) 58 CA2d Supp 909, 136 P2d 665; Keating v Preston (1940) 42 CA2d 110, 108 P2d 479. See discussion on Covenants Restricting Changes in Use in Commercial Tenancies, California Eviction Defense Manual §19.10 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993). See also Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 14 (Cal CEB 1996). Under CC §1930, when something is hired for a particular purpose, the hirer must not use it for any other purpose and is liable for any damages caused by the unauthorized use. Under CC §1941.2(a)(5), a residential tenant has an affirmative obligation to use the premises as an abode. See §1.48. Despite CC §1930, the courts usually do not interpret a covenant in commercial leases to use the premises for a particular purpose as limiting the tenant to that use of the property if there is no evidence that the parties intended the covenant to have that effect. Lippman v Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1955) 44 C2d 136, 280 P2d 775. Such a covenant may be interpreted to permit the tenant to use the premises for any reasonable purpose that is not expressly excluded by the terms of the lease. Lippman v Sears, Roebuck & Co., supra; Eltinge & Graziado Dev. Co. v Childs (1975) 49 CA3d 294, 122 CR 369.

Since 1982, residential tenants have had the absolute right to operate a small daycare business (six or fewer children) in their unit despite any lease provision, local ordinance, or zoning ordinance to the contrary. See Health & S C §1597.40. Effective in 1997, this law was amended to require the tenant to give 30 days' advance written notice of the tenant's intention to commence operating a small daycare business at the leased premises, and gave the landlord the right to increase the tenant's security deposit up to the maximum allowed by law. Health & S C §1597.40(d). Small daycare businesses are limited to six or fewer children unless the landlord agrees in writing to up to eight children. Health & S C §1597.44.

A tenant operating a daycare business out of a residential premise is required to have either (Health & S C §1597.531):

- liability insurance of at least $100,000 per occurrence and $300,000 total annual aggregate; or
- affidavits by all parents acknowledging the lack of insurance.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.29 7. Required Disclosures

§1.29 7. Required Disclosures

Federal and state law require that landlords make certain disclosures. Some disclosures must be made before the tenant enters into the rental agreement; others must be incorporated into the rental agreement, while still other notifications are required after the tenant enters into the rental agreement in the event of renovation or repair to the rental unit. Some of these disclosures apply to all tenancies; others are applicable only to residential units, and others are necessary only if a situation arises that triggers the disclosure law. See also chap 4.

Common-Area Utilities

If the landlord of a residential dwelling unit or his agent has knowledge that gas or electric service provided through the tenant's meter serves an area outside the tenant's unit, this condition must be disclosed explicitly before the rental agreement or lease is executed, and the landlord and tenant may then make a written agreement that the tenant will pay the extra cost, or make any other mutually agreeable written arrangement. CC §1940.9.

Carcinogenic Material

Under Proposition 65, the Safe Drinking Water and Toxic Enforcement Act of 1986 (Health & S C §§25249.5-25249.13), a landlord with ten or more employees must disclose the existence of known carcinogenic material (e.g., asbestos) to prospective tenants. Health & S C §25249.6.

Because this warning must be clear and reasonable, the best practice is to give a written disclosure statement to the prospective tenant before the rental agreement or lease is executed, and then to provide it again in the lease or rental agreement.

Lead Paint Warning Statement

The federal Residential Lead-Based Paint Hazard Reduction Act of 1992 (42 USC §§4851-4856) and its implementing regulations (24 CFR pt 35 and 40 CFR pt 745, subpt F) apply to residential property built before 1978 (24 CFR §35.80). For further discussion, see §4.37. The Act imposes the following duties on owners, rental agents, and licensed real estate salespersons and brokers involved in the rental or leasing process of any residential property constructed before 1978:

(a) A tenant or prospective tenant must be provided with a written Disclosure of Information on Lead-Based Paint and/or Lead-Based Paint Hazards (24 CFR §35.88). The disclosure must include all information on lead-based paint or hazards in the unit known by the owners or their agents, including the existence and location of inspection records and reports. 24 CFR §35.88; 40 CFR §745.107(a). All disclosures and acknowledgments must be in writing, certified for accuracy, and separately acknowledged by the tenant's signature. 24 CFR §35.92.

(b) The lease or rental agreement must contain as an attachment or within the agreement a Lead Warning Statement (24 CFR §35.88; see §§1.77, 4.37).

(c) The tenant must be provided with a federally approved pamphlet on lead poisoning prevention. The pamphlet "Protect Your Family From Lead In Your Home," or another approved publication that incorporates the pamphlet, must also be given to all existing tenants at the renewal of their lease or rental agreement. 24 CFR §35.88(a)(1). The pamphlet may be obtained from the Government Printing Office, or a copy ready for reproduction may be obtained from the National Lead Information Clearinghouse by calling (800) 424-LEAD.

(d) Real estate agents have a duty to inform landlords of their duty of disclosure and to ensure compliance. 24 CFR §35.94.

Effective June 1, 1999, Environmental Protection Agency regulations require residential landlords to give 7 days' written notice to residential tenants of the landlord's intent to renovate or repair pre-1978 rental housing if the repair involves disturbance of at least two square feet of lead-based product. The landlord is required to keep written record of the tenant's notice and acknowledgment for 3 years. If an outside contractor has been hired to do the work, the notification and record-keeping requirements are the responsibility of the contractor, not the landlord. Similar notification must be given if the work to be performed is in the common area and will likewise disturb at least two square feet of lead-based paint. 40 CFR §§745.80-745.88.

Effective March 6, 2001, the Environmental Protection Agency issued final regulations applicable to "target housing" and child-occupied facilities. 40 CFR §§745.61-745.65; 66 Fed Reg 1206. The regulations "support the implementation of regulations already promulgated, and others under development, which deal with worker training and certification, lead hazard disclosure in real estate transactions, requirements for lead cleanup under State authorities, lead hazard evaluation and control in Federally-owned housing prior to sale and housing receiving Federal assistance…." In addition, the regulations establish "residential lead dust cleanup levels and amendments to dust and soil sampling requirements" and provide guidance "to all owners and occupants of pre-1978 housing and child-occupied facilities" by defining scope, applicability, and all other important terms.

Manager; Agent for Service of Process; Place of Rent Payment; Form of Rent Payment

Under CC §§1962, 1962.5, all residential leases and rental agreements must disclose information about owners, building managers, agents for service of process, rent payments, and other information. Some information is required to be in the lease or rental agreement and other information must be either disclosed in the lease or posted in specified areas of the building. See §1.21A. For sample lease or rental agreement provisions designating the parties and making the required disclosures, see §§1.37, 1.40.

Automatic Renewal

An automatic renewal or extension provision is voidable by the tenant unless the statement that the lease contains an automatic renewal or extension provision is set forth in at least eight-point bold-face type immediately above the tenant's signature line. CC §1945.5.

Notice of Negative Credit Report

If a landlord intends to report a tenant's negative credit to a credit reporting agency, the landlord must disclose that intention to the tenant. CC §1785.26. The best place to make that disclosure is in the rental agreement and in any eviction notices. See, e.g., §1.43. For additional disclosures that must be made in connection with obtaining consumer reports from credit reporting agencies and investigative reporting agencies, see §4.9.

Death of Tenant

Residential landlords are required to inform prospective tenants of any death (and the manner of death) occurring in a unit within the past three years. CC §1710.2(a). Landlords are not, however, to disclose that a previous occupant was afflicted with or died from AIDS. CC §1710.2. The landlord is not immunized from liability that may arise from an intentional misrepresentation in response to a direct inquiry concerning deaths on the property. CC §1710.2(d).

Proposed Demolition

A landlord of a residential dwelling unit who applies to a public agency for a permit to demolish that unit must give written notice to a prospective tenant of that fact before executing a rental agreement and to a current tenant before applying for the permit. CC §1940.6.

Location of Ordnance

A landlord of a residential dwelling unit who has actual knowledge that any former federal or state ordnance (i.e., weapons and ammunition) is located in the neighborhood area must give written notice to a prospective tenant of that knowledge before executing a rental agreement. CC §1940.7.

"Megan's Law" Disclosure in Residential Leases

Under CC §2079.10a, the following language (in a minimum font size of 8 point) must be inserted in all residential leases made on or after July 1, 1999, and before September 1, 2005, to inform tenants of the database containing information about criminal sex offenders:

> Notice: The California Department of Justice, sheriff's departments, police departments serving jurisdictions of 200,000 or more, and many other local law enforcement authorities maintain for public access a database of the locations of persons required to register pursuant to paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of Section 290.4 of the Penal Code. The database is updated on a quarterly basis and is a source of information about the presence of these individuals in any neighborhood. The Department of Justice also maintains a Sex Offender Identification Line through which inquiries about individuals may be made. This is a "900" telephone service. Callers must have specific information about individuals they are checking. Information regarding neighborhoods is not available through the "900" telephone service.

In all residential leases made on or after April 1, 2006, the following paragraph must be used:

> Notice: Pursuant to Section 290.46 of the Penal Code, information about specified registered sex offenders is made available to the public via an Internet Web site maintained by the Department of Justice at www.meganslaw.ca.gov. Depending on an offender's criminal history, this information will include either the address at which the offender resides or the community of residence and ZIP Code in which he or she resides.

In all residential leases made on or after September 1, 2005, and before April 1, 2006, the lease must contain one of the above notices.

Structural Pest Control Notice

Effective January 1, 2001, a landlord of a residential dwelling unit must give each new tenant who occupies the unit a copy of the notice provided by a registered structural pest control company under Bus & P C §8538, if the landlord has executed a contract for periodic pest control service for the premises (CC §1940.8). Landlords can obtain the required notice directly from their pest control provider.

Methamphetamine Contamination

Effective January 1, 2006, Health & S C §§25400.10-25400.47 established disclosure, remediation, and record-keeping obligations for a property owner (similar to those required by the former CC §1940.7.5) after the owner has been notified by a local health officer that the property is contaminated by methamphetamine.

For further discussion of these required disclosures, see California Real Property Sales Transactions chaps 2, 5, and 6 (4th ed Cal CEB 2007). See also chap 4 in this book.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.30 D. Prohibited Provisions

§1.30 D. Prohibited Provisions

Both the landlord and the tenant should be aware that certain provisions included in a lease or rental agreement are void and will not be enforced. Most of the prohibited provisions are purported waivers of various tenant rights. The most inclusive catalog of prohibited provisions is found in CC §1953, which provides that any provision in the lease or rental agreement of a dwelling is void as contrary to public policy if it modifies or waives any of the following rights of the tenant:

(1) Rights and remedies under CC §1950.5. That section limits the amount and handling of security deposits and requires the landlord to refund any unused portion of the security deposit. CC §1953(a)(1). Although advance waivers are prohibited by CC §1953, a tenant may waive the right to obtain certain documentation when the security deposit is refunded on termination of the tenancy. See CC §1950.5(g)(2)-(4), discussed in §§8.173C, 8.173E. On refundability of security deposits, see §§4.11, 4.28, 8.167-8.176. For additional drafting tips regarding deposits, see §§4.23-4.29.

(2) Rights and remedies under CC §1954. That section limits the landlord's right of entry onto the rented premises. CC §1953(a)(1). (On the landlord's right of entry, see §§1.66, 3.2-3.4.)

(3) The right to assert a future cause of action against the landlord. CC §1953(a)(2). Because this subsection applies only to causes of action that arise in the future, it apparently does not bar a rental agreement under which the tenant compromises and waives an existing cause of action. Possible future causes of action might include actions for damages for (a) breach of the warranty of habitability (see §§3.16-3.48), (b) forcible entry and detainer (see §§8.138-8.146), (c) wrongful eviction (see §8.150), and (d) personal injuries caused by defective conditions (see §§3.67-3.72).

(4) The right to a notice or hearing required by law. CC §1953(a)(3). Presumably, this subsection prohibits the tenant from waiving the right to service of legally required notice when the landlord terminates the tenancy (see §§8.22-8.54), or to eviction by legal process (see chap 9).

(5) Procedural rights in litigation in any action involving the tenant's rights and obligations as a tenant. CC §1953(a)(4). Thus, in an unlawful detainer action filed by the landlord, or in an affirmative action filed by the tenant against the landlord, the tenant cannot waive in advance the right, e.g., to conduct discovery and to have a jury trial. This applies to an advance jury waiver in the form of an arbitration clause. See Jaramillo v JH Real Estate Partners, Inc. (2003) 111 CA4th 394, 3 CR3d 525 (arbitration clause in lease was both unconscionable and contract of adhesion despite public policy favoring arbitration as speedy and less expensive means of dispute resolution). (On procedural rights in unlawful detainer actions, see chap 7.)

(6) The right to have the landlord exercise a duty of care to prevent personal injury or damage to personal property when that duty is imposed by law. CC §1953(a)(5). (On landlord liability for personal injury or property damage, see §§3.67-3.72.)

(7) Any statutory right. These include any right other than the nonwaivable rights under CC §§1953(a) and 1954 (see above) and CC §§1942.1, 1942.5 (see below) unless the lease or rental agreement is presented to the tenant before he or she takes possession of the premises. CC §1953(b). This provision does not apply to a waiver in an agreement renewing the lease or rental agreement if the original lease or rental agreement contained the waiver. CC §1953(b).

Civil Code §1953 applies to leases and rental agreements executed on or after January 1, 1976. CC §1953(c). Despite this express limitation in the section, exculpatory clauses (see CC §1953(a)(5)) in residential leases executed before that date have been held to be invalid under CC §1668, which bars contracts that exempt one party from responsibility for certain willful or negligent acts. Henrioulle v Marin Ventures, Inc. (1978) 20 C3d 512, 143 CR 247.

Any provision in a residential lease or rental agreement is void if it modifies or waives the tenant's right to invoke the "repair-and-deduct" remedy for dilapidations rendering the premises untenantable (CC §§1941-1942). CC §1942.1. The parties may agree, however, that the tenant will make certain repairs in exchange for rent. CC §1942.1. On the repair-and-deduct remedy, see §§3.12-3.15. Similarly, the courts are likely to consider a provision to be void if it waives the tenant's rights under the implied warranty of habitability. See Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 625 n9, 111 CR 704, 709 n9. On the implied warranty of habitability, see §§3.16-3.48.

A waiver of the tenant's right to assert the defense of retaliatory eviction (CC §1942.5) to an unlawful detainer action brought by the landlord is void. CC §1942.5(d). On retaliatory eviction, see §§8.109-8.128. The landlord cannot escape liability in forcible entry and detainer actions for using "self-help" to evict the tenant by means of a provision permitting the landlord to reenter and relet the premises on the tenant's breach. Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 12 CR 488.

In addition to the protections afforded by CC §1953, practitioners should be aware that in 2005, the California Supreme Court ruled that contractual predispute jury trial waivers are invalid. See Grafton Partners LP v Superior Court (2005) 36 C4th 944, 32 CR3d 5. The court cited the California Constitution (Cal Const art I, §16), which states that in a civil action, the litigants may waive their right to a jury trial as prescribed by statute, and CCP §631, which prescribes only six means for waiving a jury trial. Because an agreement made before any dispute arising between the contracting parties is not one of the means authorized by §631, the court concluded that a predispute agreement to waive a jury trial is unenforceable. The court distinguished predispute arbitration and judicial reference agreements, which are enforceable because they "are specifically authorized by statute" and "represent an agreement to avoid the judicial forum altogether." 36 C4th at 955. In the wake of this decision, legislation is expected that will allow predispute waivers in commercial transactions. For further discussion, see California Real Estate Finance Practice: Strategies and Forms, chaps 3-4 (Cal CEB 2000).

A landlord may not demand that a tenant pay rent or a security deposit in cash unless the tenant has previously attempted to pay the landlord with a check drawn on insufficient funds or the tenant has instructed the drawee to stop payment on a check, draft, or order for the payment of money. Even then, the landlord may demand a cash rent payment or security deposit payment for no more than 3 months after the check bounces. CC §1947.3.

Most rent control ordinances make it illegal for landlords to insert lease provisions waiving tenants' rights under the ordinance.

PRACTICE TIPS:

- Landlords' attorneys should advise their clients that some district attorneys have prosecuted landlords who routinely include illegal provisions in their leases, especially those that designate a security deposit or portion of a security deposit as "nonrefundable."
- Tenant's counsel should be aware of Bus & P C §17200, under which a tenant who sustains monetary damage might file an action for unfair business practices against a landlord who routinely includes prohibited provisions in leases.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.31 E. Special Considerations in Jurisdictions With Rent Control Ordinances

By specifying situations in which eviction is permissible, rent control ordinances in some California municipalities restrict the landlord's ability to evict a tenant. These ordinances make it much more difficult for a landlord to remove a tenant without cause than otherwise would be the case on expiration of a fixed-term lease (see §8.82) or on service of a 30-day notice of termination of a month-to-month tenancy (see §§8.69-8.80).

For landlords, the most important provisions in the lease or rental agreement may be those that limit the number of persons occupying the premises and that require tenants to specify their identities. A potential problem in an eviction-controlled city is the difficulty of locating and identifying all tenants in order to terminate the tenancy (see §§4.40, 13.70). In a tight rental market, many tenants find it necessary to share housing, and the landlord may discover that none of the occupants of the premises actually signed the original rental agreement. A related problem is that of the "guest" who remains after the tenant has vacated, even though the original tenant continues to pay the rent and claims to be the tenant.

To avoid these and related problems in evicting the current occupants (see §§7.53, 9.13-9.16), the landlord should include a provision in the lease limiting occupancy to the persons named in the lease, with any substitution or addition of tenants requiring the landlord's prior written approval (see §1.46). The date of birth of all occupants should also be requested in the lease document to ascertain who should properly be named in the event an unlawful detainer or other legal action is filed. All tenants should be required to execute the lease. The lease should provide that all cotenants are jointly and severally liable for all obligations under the lease (see §1.45). Finally, some sort of limitation should be placed on the presence of guests on the premises. Civil Code §798.34, which applies only to mobilehome tenancies, limits guest occupancy to 20 consecutive days or 30 days in a calendar year. See §1.46. A similar provision might be included in a residential rental agreement.

Most rent control ordinances permit eviction on the ground of the tenant's breach of a covenant of the lease. Some ordinances restrict "good cause" eviction to the breach of a material lease provision and require that the provision be "reasonable" and "legal." In an eviction-controlled jurisdiction, the landlord's interests are best served if the lease contains as many covenants as possible that, if breached by the tenant, could form the basis for an eviction action. The courts are likely to require that such a covenant be legal, and might require that it meet some reasonableness standard. The lease should also specify that the parties consider all covenants of the lease to be material and reasonable. See §§1.67, 4.22.

The following are provisions that the landlord might include in the lease:

(1) The tenant may not take in boarders, lodgers, or roommates without the landlord's prior written consent, which may not be withheld unreasonably (see §1.46);

(2) The tenant must maintain the premises in a safe and sanitary condition, and refrain from causing or permitting damage to, or defacing of, the premises (see §1.57);

(3) The tenant must dispose of all garbage and trash in a safe and sanitary manner (see §1.57);

(4) The tenant may not paint or wallpaper the premises without the landlord's prior written approval, or change or add to any lock or locking device, or refuse to provide the landlord with a key (see §§1.60, 1.66);

(5) The tenant may not use a waterbed without adequate waterbed insurance (see §1.63);

(6) The tenant may not engage in conduct that disturbs other tenants or neighbors and must obey restrictions on the hours of use of television, stereo, musical instruments, swimming pool, and hot tub (see §1.58);

(7) The tenant may not keep pets (e.g., an absolute ban on pets or a "cats-only" policy) (see §1.62);

(8) The tenant may not repair, service, or change the oil of automobiles, motorcycles, any motor vehicle, or other heavy machinery on the premises (see §1.64);

(9) The tenant must comply with all laws, and with building rules and regulations (see §1.59);

(10) The tenant must restrict use of the premises to residential purposes only (see §1.55);

(11) The tenant may not use any common-area utilities or water;

(12) The tenant may not store any item in the common areas, or place plants on balconies or balcony railings;

(13) The tenant may not improperly install, maintain, or remove a satellite dish or antennae in violation of Federal Communications Commission Order 98-273; and

(14) The tenant must pay rent on time; if tenant habitually pays rent later than allowed by agreement (i.e., tenant pays more than 7 days after the rent is due and/or tenders a check not honored by tenant's bank more than 3 times in any 12-month period), tenant breaches agreement and risks eviction).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.32 F. Special Requirements for Government-Owned and Government-Subsidized Rental Housing

§1.32 F. Special Requirements for Government-Owned and Government-Subsidized Rental Housing

Special lease requirements apply to tenancies in housing that is either owned by a government entity (e.g., a public housing authority), or subsidized by a government entity (usually the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD)). For further discussion of various public housing programs and subsidy issues, see §§2.6, 3.66A-3.66B, 6.71-6.91. On defending evictions from government-assisted housing, see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

Sections 1.33-1.35 provide a brief overview of lease requirements in three federally funded housing programs: publicly owned housing, federally subsidized housing (still known as "FHA" subsidized programs because they were originally administered by the Federal Housing Administration), and Section 8 privately owned, publicly subsidized rental housing. These are the primary public housing programs that attorneys for landlords or tenants are likely to encounter. Counsel should be aware, however, that other state or local programs may impose particular lease requirements. Counsel should also be aware of the case of Appel v Beyer (1974) 39 CA3d Supp 7, 114 CR 336, in which the court found that evictions from certain properties in which the landlord receives tax credits or mortgage incentives from the government require a tenant to be terminated/evicted for "good cause." For public housing, attorneys who represent tenants may become involved in negotiations or litigation with local housing authorities. Attorneys who primarily represent residential landlords may need to learn the lease requirements of the Section 8 program because private landlords frequently make housing available for rental under this federally subsidized housing program.

PRACTICE TIP: Because HUD rules and regulations are subject to frequent change, counsel should contact the regional HUD office to determine the current regulations for the program in question. See Directory. Attorneys should be aware that the terms of the lease between a landlord and a Section 8 tenant may be negotiable (landlords are now permitted to use their own leases), although HUD approval may take additional time. For more detailed discussion of these programs and their legal requirements, see National Housing Law Project, HUD Housing Programs: Tenants' Rights (3d ed 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/ 1. Public Housing/§1.33 a. HUD Requirements Imposed on Public Housing Authority

1. Public Housing

§1.33 a. HUD Requirements Imposed on Public Housing Authority

Although often used in a broader sense, the term "public housing" refers to housing for low-income people that is supported by public funds and owned and administered by a local public housing authority established in California under Health & S C §§34200-34380. Local housing authorities receive much of their funding from the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) under the revised United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 USC §§1437-1437z-7) and are subject to HUD regulations (see Thorpe v Housing Auth. (1969) 393 US 268, 280 n35, 21 L Ed 2d 474, 483, 89 S Ct 518).

Public housing authorities (PHAs) are required by 42 USC §1437d(l) to use leases that

- Have a term of 12 months and are automatically renewed except for noncompliance;
- Do not contain unreasonable terms and conditions;
- Contain certain provisions relating to evictions and to the authority's obligation to maintain the project in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition;
- Require the agency to give adequate written notice of termination of the lease; and
- Require that the agency not terminate the tenancy except for serious or repeated violation of the terms or conditions of the lease or for other good cause.

In addition, the leases must provide that the following conduct shall be cause for termination of tenancy (42 USC §1437d(l)):

- Any criminal activity that threatens the health, safety, or right to peaceful enjoyment of the premises by other tenants;
- Any drug-related criminal activity on or off such premises engaged in by a public housing tenant, any member of the tenant's household, or any guest or other person under the tenant's control; or
- Tenant flight to avoid prosecution, or custody or confinement after conviction, or violation of a condition of probation or parole.

In HUD v Rucker (2002) 535 US 125, 152 L Ed 2d 258, 122 S Ct 1230, the United States Supreme Court struck down a Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruling regarding the "zero tolerance" policy for drug use in public housing. The case involved the interpretation of 42 USC §1437d(l)(6), which allows a PHA to terminate a tenancy for "any drug-related criminal activity on or off such premises, engaged in by a public housing tenant, any member of the tenant's household, or any guest or other person under the tenant's control."

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals had upheld the district court's issuance of a preliminary injunction against the eviction of the tenants and distinguished between "innocent" tenants (those who have "taken reasonable steps to prevent criminal drug activity from occurring but, for lack of knowledge or other reason, could not realistically exercise control over the conduct of a household member or guest") and "culpable" tenants (those who knew or should have known of drug activity).

The United States Supreme Court, in a unanimous decision (Justice Breyer recused himself), strongly disagreed with the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals' interpretation of 42 USC §1437d(l)(6) and stated (152 L Ed 2d at 270):

> We hold that 'Congress has directly spoken to the precise question at issue' [Citation]… Section 1437d(l)(6) requires lease terms that give local public housing authorities the discretion to terminate the lease of a tenant when a member of the household or a guest engages in drug-related activity, regardless of whether the tenant knew, or should have known, of the drug-related activity.

Thus, at least in public housing, a "zero tolerance" policy for drug-related activity by anyone under the control of the tenant, regardless of knowledge by the tenant of such activity, is constitutional.

HUD regulations give PHAs and assisted housing owners the tools "for adopting and implementing fair, effective, and comprehensive policies for screening out program applicants" who engage in criminal activity and for evicting or terminating assistance to persons who engage in such activity. 66 Fed Reg 28776 (2001) (amending 24 CFR pts 5, 200, 247, 880, 882, 884, 891, 960, 966, 982).

Despite the holding in Rucker and federal regulations, which allow a PHA to adopt a no-grievance-hearing policy for criminal acts in public housing, in Brown v Philadelphia Hous. Auth. (ED Pa 2002) 237 F Supp 2d 567, the court upheld a consent decree entered into between public housing tenants and the local PHA, in which tenants were required to be afforded a grievance hearing, even if being evicted for drug crimes or other criminal activity.

See also New York City Hous. Auth. v Grillasca (Civ Ct 2007) 852 NYS2d 610 and Long Branch Hous. Auth. v Villano (NJ 2007) 933 A2d 607, in which the Rucker decision was further diluted. In Grillasca, a New York court held that the New York statute the PHA relied on for eviction of a tenant for drug possession required a showing that the subject apartment was "customarily or habitually" used for an illegal trade or business such as the sale of illegal drugs. In Villano, a New Jersey court remanded the case for further hearing, finding that the Rucker decision did not mandate eviction for all cases related to drugs, but vested the PHA with "discretion" under 24 CFR §966.4(l)(5)(vii)(B) to evict after looking at all the circumstances of a particular case. For further discussion of Rucker, see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

WARNING: The United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 USC §1437-1437z-7) prevents a public housing agency from denying rental to, or terminating the tenancy of, a person who is or has been a victim of domestic violence, dating violence, or stalking. The agency may require an applicant or a tenant to provide a "certification" of his or her status as a victim. A public housing authority may still evict the victim if the agency can demonstrate an actual and imminent threat to other tenants or those employed at or providing service to the property. See 42 USC §1437d and §2.15A.

HUD does not require that public housing authorities use a specific lease form, but its regulations parallel the lease requirements of 42 USC §1437d(l). See 24 CFR §966.4. HUD regulations require a number of lease provisions, some of which are found in most leases, and many of which address the special needs of low-income tenants. Uniquely, public housing leases are required to contain a list of obligations to be met by the public housing authority as landlord. Under 24 CFR §966.4(e), a housing authority must do the following:

- Maintain the dwelling unit and project in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition.
- Comply with applicable building codes, housing codes, and HUD regulations that materially affect health and safety.
- Make necessary repairs to the premises.
- Keep project buildings and common areas in a clean and safe condition.
- Maintain in safe working order all electrical and mechanical systems and appliances supplied by the housing authority.
- Provide and maintain trash and garbage receptacles.
- Supply running water and reasonable amounts of heat and hot water, except when not required by law or when the generating device is individually metered and within the tenant's control.
- Notify the tenant of the specific grounds for any proposed adverse action by the housing authority (e.g., a proposed lease termination, transfer of the tenant to another unit, or imposition of charges for maintenance and repair or for excess consumption of utilities), and of grievance hearing rights.

Because these obligations are considerably more detailed than those that exist under the implied warranty of habitability (see §§3.16-3.48) or local housing codes, they may be useful to the tenant's attorney in defending an unlawful detainer action or maintaining an affirmative suit against the housing authority.

HUD also prohibits the housing authority from including certain provisions in public housing leases. The following clauses are barred by 24 CFR §966.6:

- the tenant's confession of judgment in any lawsuit brought by the housing authority;
- the tenant's agreement that the housing authority may take and hold certain property of the tenant as a pledge for the tenant's performance;
- exculpatory clauses (see §3.69);

- the tenant's waiver of the right to the housing authority's service of a termination notice (see §§8.22-8.80 on notice required under state law);
- the tenant's waiver of legal proceedings before eviction (see chap 9);
- the tenant's waiver of his or her right to a jury trial;
- the tenant's waiver of the right to appeal judicial error or to file an equitable action to prevent execution of judgment; and
- the tenant's agreement to pay costs and attorney fees in a legal action by the housing authority regardless of the outcome.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.34 b. Regulations Governing Tenant Conduct

HUD regulations require that a public housing lease set forth the following tenant obligations; the tenant must (24 CFR §966.4(f)):

(1) Refrain from assigning the tenant's rights under the lease or subletting the unit;

(2) Refrain from providing accommodations for boarders or lodgers;

(3) Use the unit only as a private dwelling for the tenant's family;

(4) Abide by necessary and reasonable housing authority regulations;

(5) Comply with tenant obligations in the building and housing codes that materially affect the tenants' health and safety;

(6) Maintain the premises in a clean and safe condition;

(7) Dispose of garbage and waste in a sanitary and safe manner;

(8) Use all electrical and mechanical appliances and facilities in a reasonable manner;

(9) Refrain from defacing or damaging any part of the premises;

(10) Pay reasonable charges (other than for normal wear and tear) for the repair of damage to the premises or common areas;

(11) Act in a manner that does not disturb the neighbors' peaceful enjoyment of the premises and that is conducive to maintaining the project in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition; and

(12) Refrain from illegal acts or other activities that impair the physical or social environment of the project.

See also §1.33.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.35 2. FHA-Subsidized Rental Programs

Counsel may be called on to represent either the landlord or the tenant in a housing dispute under the federal Section 221(d)(3) and Section 236 programs. The Federal Housing Administration (FHA) was formed in 1934 to provide mortgage assistance to homebuyers under the National Housing Act (12 USC §§1701-1750g). In 1961, the FHA was given responsibility for administering §221(d)(3) of the Act (see 12 USC §1715*l*(d)(3)), under which private developers were encouraged to build and manage apartment buildings for low- and moderate-income people. Under the Section 221(d)(3) below-market interest rate (BMIR) program, tenants pay a controlled, "economic rent," based on a specified formula, and FHA (now HUD) pays the difference between the market rent and what the tenant pays.

In 1968, the Section 221(d)(3) program was effectively replaced by the Section 236 program, under which HUD pays a rent subsidy to the lender and charges eligible tenants a below-market rent based on a specified formula (see 12 USC §1715z-1). FHA was absorbed into HUD in 1965, but the Section 221(d)(3) and Section 236 programs are still commonly called "FHA"-subsidized programs. Most housing projects subsidized under §221(d)(3) and §236 of the National Housing Act receive project-based Section 8 assistance (as opposed to Section 8 Certificates), and thus tenants receive rent subsidies and eviction protections.

HUD has developed a lease form that any tenant who pays less than market rent under the Section 221(d)(3) and Section 236 programs must execute. See HUD, Occupancy Requirements of Subsidized Multifamily Housing Programs Handbook No. 4350.3, App 4-A (2004). This lease form also applies to projects subsidized or assisted under the following programs: Section 8 additional assistance, Section 8 property disposition, Section 8 new construction, and Section 8 substantial rehabilitation. See §1.36.

HUD has not adopted extensive regulations for leases in FHA projects, but HUD regulations do prohibit the eight lease clauses that are also prohibited in public housing leases under 24 CFR §966.6 (see §1.33). See 24 CFR §236.750. Counsel should contact the nearest HUD regional office to determine the current lease requirements. See Directory. A Congressional statute that prevented landlords from exercising their contractual rights to escape these restrictions by prepaying their FHA-insured loans after 20 years was held to be a "taking" in Cinega Gardens v U.S. (Fed Cir 2001) 265 F3d 1237.

NOTE: In Topa Equities, Ltd. v City of Los Angeles (9th Cir 2003) 342 F3d 1065, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance (LARSO) was not preempted by federal laws applicable to Section 236 housing. In Topa, the landlord was the owner of a Section 236 housing project and opted out of the program after the end of its contract with the government. The court held that LARSO was not expressly preempted by federal law nor was it preempted because of excessive conflict with the federal scheme. Thus, the landlord must adhere to the requirements of the local ordinance and not increase rents to market levels until units are vacated.

On evictions from federally assisted housing, see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.36 3. Section 8 Programs

§1.36 3. Section 8 Programs

The Section 8 programs are currently the primary vehicle for the federal government's participation in providing low-income housing. The term "Section 8" refers to §8 of the revised United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 USC §§1437-1437z-7), which was added by the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 as 42 USC §1437f. (The various Section 8 programs are identified and discussed in §§2.16-2.17.) For further discussion, see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

Under some Section 8 housing programs (e.g., the certificate and voucher programs; see §§2.16-2.17), low-income tenants find housing that is currently available on the housing market from private landlords. If an eligible Section 8 tenant cannot find housing within a city or town that has an organized public housing authority, the housing authority may contract for such housing outside the borders of the local jurisdiction. Williams v Hanover Hous. Auth. (D Mass 1994) 871 F Supp 527.

The landlord enters into a housing provider agreement with the local housing authority to participate in the Section 8 program. See 42 USC §1437f. The tenant becomes certified or receives a voucher for housing assistance, and the local housing authority inspects the property. The landlord receives a payment equal to the market rental rate, the tenant paying a percentage of his or her income directly to the landlord as "rent," and the housing authority paying the landlord a "rental assistance payment." See 42 USC §1437f(c)(3). The rental assistance payment is not rent. Savett v Davis (1994) 29 CA4th Supp 13, 34 CR2d 550. This distinction is important because acceptance of the rental assistance payment from the housing authority, after expiration of a notice to pay or a notice to perform or quit that was served on the tenant, does not trigger a waiver and estoppel defense to an unlawful detainer action, and it does not reinstate the tenancy.

Landlords of Section 8 existing housing may adopt their own lease forms, although leases must:

- be approved by the housing authority;
- include an addendum required by HUD; and
- contain all provisions required by HUD and none of the prohibited provisions.

See 24 CFR §982.308.

The required lease addendum must be obtained from HUD or the local housing authority, and is no longer printed verbatim as an appendix to 24 CFR pt 882. The lease addendum typically includes the following provisions and others that HUD may adopt:

- housing assistance payments (HAP) contract;
- conflict with other provisions of lease;
- term of lease;
- rent;
- security deposit;
- utilities and appliances;
- maintenance and services;
- termination of tenancy;
- nondiscrimination;
- notices;
- amendment of lease;
- termination of lease by tenant;
- effective date of lease; and
- prohibited lease provisions.

WARNING: The United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 USC §§1437-1437z-7) prevents a landlord operating under a low-income housing assistance voucher program from denying rental to, or terminating the tenancy of, a person who is or has been a victim of domestic violence, dating violence, or stalking. The applicant or tenant may be required to provide a certification of his or her status as a victim of domestic violence and/or stalking. However, a landlord may evict a victim of domestic violence or stalking if the landlord can demonstrate an actual and imminent threat to other tenants or those employed at, or providing service to, the property. 42 USC §1437f. See also 42 USC §1437d (applying same prohibitions to public housing agencies).

For many years, the term of a Section 8 certificate or voucher housing lease had no specified expiration date; it continued until the tenant terminated it in accordance with the lease, the contract with the housing authority was terminated, or the landlord terminated the lease for cause (i.e., serious and repeated violations of the lease; violation of applicable federal, state, or local law; or other good cause). Currently, most leases are issued with a one-year initial term, subject to renewal. Families receiving Section 8 assistance must have their eligibility recertified annually.

A criticism of the Section 8 subsidy program was the so-called "endless lease" problem. As cause is required to terminate a tenancy under this program, participating lessees could successfully argue that "cause" was required whenever the lessor desired to terminate the tenancy, even on expiration of the lease term. Recognizing this chilling effect on the industry, given the dynamics of the residential market and the unwillingness of lessors to enter into what many considered an indenture, Congress passed the Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act of 1998 (QHWRA) (Pub L 105-276, Title V, §§514, 549(a)(2), 112 Stat 2461, amending 42 USC §§1437f(o) and 1437f(d)(1)(B), respectively), which permanently eliminated the so-called endless lease provision. Except as otherwise provided by state or local law, a lessor participating in the Section 8 tenant-based (i.e., "voucher" or "certificate") assistance programs may refuse to renew the tenancy without cause at the end of the initial lease term. It is significant to note that this amendment does not affect new construction (project-based), moderate rehabilitation, or other funding programs. See §2.17.

The amendment further entitles a lessor to terminate the tenancy without cause at the end of a successive definite term. If the lease provides for an automatic renewal on a month-to-month basis after the initial term expires, for example, the lessor may terminate the lease without cause, but only at the end of the term, i.e., at the end of each month, effective the end of the following month. Termination during the month could only be accomplished if the notice stated cause and complied with all other prerequisites contained within the termination provisions of the lease, consistent with the procedures found in the Code of Federal Regulations (CFR). Assuming continued occupancy after the first year, the lessor should further note that if there is no month-to-month holdover provision in the lease, and the entitlement of the tenant is for an indefinite term, termination for cause is required.

It is notable that trial courts have not uniformly acted upon this amendment; some have enforced the lessor's entitlement and some have indulged defense arguments that the contractual cause requirements are separate and distinct from the legislative limitations imposed by the amendment. The amendment did not address retroactivity. Tenant advocates assert that the entitlement to refuse to renew a lease without cause was not in place when the lease was executed and that the cause requirements in leases entered into before a statutory amendment cannot be invalidated by that amendment, whether the lease term is for successive one-year terms or for an unspecified term. Lessors' advocates argue that (a) the lease could not exist but for subsidy pursuant to the enabling legislation, hence a "separate existence" divides a house against itself, and (b) the amendment clarifies existing law more than changes it, in that all leases commence and expire by their own terms.

The supreme court ruled in Wasatch Prop. Mgmt. v Degrate (2005) 35 C4th 1111, 29 CR3d 262 that when a landlord terminates or fails to renew a Section 8 contract, a tenant is entitled to, under CC §1954.535, a 90-day notice of termination. The 90-day notice is required regardless of whether the property is under rent control. The court did not explicitly rule on the propriety of a landlord using an "endless lease" (no-cause) notice, but implicitly condoned the use of such a notice by finding that the tenant was entitled to have such a notice be a 90-day notice.

PRACTICE TIP: In the aftermath of the Wasatch opinion, practitioners should advise landlords to give a 90-day notice of termination whenever a landlord is either opting out of the Section 8 Program or serving an "endless lease" (no-cause) notice.

See also Apartment Ass'n, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (2006) 136 CA4th 119, 38 CR3d 575 (CC §1954.535 preempts city ordinance that prohibited a landlord, after termination or nonrenewal of a Section 8 housing contract, from ever charging the tenant more than the tenant's portion of the rent).

In addition to the existing housing program, HUD also administers the following types of programs under Section 8:

- newly constructed housing (24 CFR pt 880);
- substantially rehabilitated housing (24 CFR pt 881);
- moderately rehabilitated housing (24 CFR §§882.401-882.516);
- state Housing Agency programs (24 CFR pt 883);
- rural rental housing (24 CFR pt 884);
- housing loan programs for the elderly and handicapped (24 CFR pt 885); and
- additional assistance for HUD-insured and HUD-held mortgages and property disposition for HUD-owned property (24 CFR pt 886).

For discussion of these programs, see National Housing Law Project, HUD Housing Programs: Tenants' Rights, chap 1 (3d ed 2004). See also California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

Under the moderately rehabilitated housing program (see 24 CFR §§882.401-882.516), the local housing authority must assist the landlord in preparing the lease, if necessary. The lease must (a) be for a term of at least one year (see 24 CFR §882.403(d)), (b) contain the provisions required by HUD and none of the prohibited provisions, and (c) include the termination procedures required by 24 CFR §882.511. The extent of the landlord's ability to refuse to renew the lease without good cause, and to withdraw from its Section 8 contract with the housing authority, is not entirely clear. See §6.91; National Housing Law Project, Tenants' Rights §§14.4.2.3, 15.4.3.3.

For tenancies under the Section 8 new construction, substantial rehabilitation, additional assistance, and property disposition programs, landlords must use the lease form set forth in HUD, Occupancy Requirements of Subsidized Multifamily Housing Programs Handbook No. 4350.3, App 4-A (2004). See discussion in National Housing Law Project, Tenants' Rights §§10.1, 10.5, 10.5.2.

© The Regents of the University of California

IV. BASIC RESIDENTIAL LEASE OR RENTAL AGREEMENT

§1.37 A. Form: Parties

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.37-1 Alternative: owner executes agreement

This _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ is entered into on _ _[date]_ _, between _ _[name of owner]_ _, _ _[nature of entity, e.g., a corporation, partnership, husband and wife]_ _, whose address and telephone number are _ _[street address & tel. no. of owner]_ _ ("Landlord"), and _ _[name of tenant]_ _, _ _[nature of entity, e.g., a corporation, partnership, husband and wife]_ _ ("Tenant"). The tenant(s) named in this agreement _ _[is/are]_ _ the only permitted tenants. Rent will not be accepted from any person not named as an original tenant.

1.37-2 Alternative: agent of owner executes agreement

This _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ is entered into on _ _[date]_ _, between _ _[name of owner]_ _, _ _[nature of entity, e.g., a corporation, partnership, husband and wife]_ _ ("Landlord"), and _ _[name of tenant]_ _, _ _[nature of entity, e.g., a corporation, partnership, husband and wife]_ _ ("Tenant"). Landlord has authorized _ _[name of owner's agent]_ _, _ _[nature of entity, e.g., a corporation, partnership, husband and wife]_ _, whose address and telephone number are _ _[street address & tel. no. of owner's agent]_ _ ("Landlord's Agent"), to enter into this agreement with Tenant and to act on Landlord's behalf as provided under this agreement. The tenant(s) named in this agreement _ _[is/are]_ _ the only permitted tenants. Rent will not be accepted from any person not named as an original tenant.

Comment: This clause serves to identify the names of all the parties to the lease or rental agreement, and their capacities. For comment on clause restricting tenancy to persons named in lease, see Comment in §1.54. This clause also satisfies some of the disclosure requirements of CC §1962(a)(1) as to owners or their agents who execute the agreement. See clauses in §§1.40, 1.76 for further required disclosures. For discussion of a party's capacity to enter into and execute leases and property contracts generally, see §1.16 and California Real Property Sales Transactions §§4.14-4.28 (4th ed Cal CEB 2007). If an agent, trustee, or representative executes the lease on behalf of a party, that fact and the extent of the agent's authority (e.g., agent for service of process; see §1.76) should be specified. On execution of the lease or rental agreement by an agent of a party, see §1.79.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.38 B. Form: Description of Premises

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.38-1 Description of premises

Landlord agrees to rent to Tenant the premises commonly known as _ _[address and apartment number]_ _, in _ _[city]_ _, California ("the premises"). The premises also include the following: _ _[Specify other portions of the property that Tenant may occupy]_ _.

Comment: A description of the premises by street address and unit number is usually sufficient; the property's legal description is not required. See §1.23. A clause describing the premises typically designates the entire rental space, including any space separate from the living quarters that is included in the unit (e.g., parking spaces, storage areas, patio). If necessary, a map may be attached to the lease to identify the additional space.

The tenancy may include "additional services," i.e., something other than the premises and the base amenities, such as parking space, when parking is not provided to every tenant; a storage locker; or a locked garage. In a rent-controlled jurisdiction, the landlord should prepare a written "additional services" contract that describes these services and their location. This contract should state that the service is optional and is not a part of the base amenity package. The landlord is then entitled to charge the tenant an additional amount for this service above and beyond the base rent and, depending on the particular ordinance, may not be subject to limitations on the charge for the service and be able to terminate the service under the terms of the additional service contract. Depending on the ordinance, it may be that the tenant cannot be evicted for breach of the additional service contract; the only remedy may be to terminate the service and to file a civil action for damages.

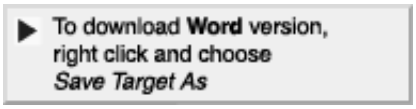
Leases should be carefully drafted to clarify whether the amenity, i.e., parking spaces, is a part of the premises rented or a service that can be unilaterally terminated by the landlord.

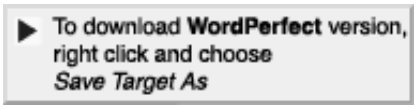
PRACTICE TIP: The landlord's attorney should review the applicable rent control ordinance for definitions of base rent, base amenities, services, and additional services contract. It is important to the landlord that this additional service not be construed as a service to which the tenant is entitled simply by reason of occupancy or one in which the tenant has a vested right. See 301 Ocean Ave. Corp. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1991) 228 CA3d 1548, 279 CR 636. For further discussion, see §7.39.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.39 C. Form: Deposit on Execution of Agreement

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.39-1 Deposit on execution of agreement

Landlord acknowledges receipt of the sum of $_ _[amount]_ _ as a deposit pending Landlord's approval of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _. Landlord has _ _[e.g., 15]_ _ days to approve this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _, and will refund the entire deposit to Tenant if acceptance is not made within that time. If Landlord accepts this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _, the deposit will be applied to _ _[e.g., the first month's rent, security deposit]_ _.

Comment: In some circumstances, this clause may benefit both parties. Under it, the landlord holds the premises for the tenant for a fixed period in exchange for a monetary deposit. This gives the landlord an opportunity to check the tenant's financial status and references (see §2.3) and assures the tenant that the landlord will refund the deposit if the rental application is not approved. Civil Code §1950.5 probably requires return of the deposit in any case (see §§4.11, 4.28, 8.172-8.176). Another practice is to have the holding deposit agreement be a separate contract signed by both the applicant and the landlord so there is no confusion regarding the holding deposit being misconstrued as a security deposit. (The California Apartment Association has a holding deposit form titled "Offer to Rent.") Under this arrangement, the landlord agrees to hold the rental unit off the market during the time it takes to process the rental application. If the applicant is accepted and refuses to execute the lease, the deposit is forfeited as consideration for holding the premises off the market.

It is common for many leases to contain a provision allowing the landlord to retain all or a portion of the "holding deposit" in the event the application is approved and the prospective tenant changes his or her mind or obtains other housing. The landlord's claim is that the rental unit was taken off the market on the applicant's behalf and that the landlord is entitled to damages if the approved applicant fails to execute the lease within a certain time. Landlord advocates will argue that this is an agreement between the owner or manager and the applicant, not a tenant, so that security deposit laws do not apply. But see §§4.23, 4.26, 4.28, 8.168, 8.172A-8.174, discussing expansion of the term "security" effective January 1, 2003, and tenant's right to refund of deposit. For additional drafting tips and strategies regarding deposits, see §§4.23-4.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/ D. Rent/§1.40 1. Form: Monthly Amount; Manner of Payment

D. Rent

§1.40 1. Form: Monthly Amount; Manner of Payment

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.40-1 Monthly amount; manner of payment

Tenant will pay $_ _[dollar amount]_ _ rent per month, in advance, on the _ _[e.g., first]_ _ day of each month to_ _[Landlord/Landlord's Agent]_ _, whose address and telephone number are _ _[street address & tel. no. of Landlord/Landlord's Agent]_ _. Payments made in person may be delivered to _ _[Landlord/Landlord's Agent]_ _ between the hours of _ _[specify acceptable times of day during which payment will be received]_ _, on the following days of the week _ _[specify days on which payment will be received]_ _.

Acceptable method of payment: [ ] Personal Check; [ ] Cashier's Check; [ ] Money Order; [ ] EFT/Credit (see landlord/landlord's agent for details).

Comment: To avoid future disputes, the lease should specify the day of the month on which the rent is due, the manner of payment, and the address where the rent must be personally delivered or mailed. This clause satisfies the disclosure requirements of CC §1962(a)(2)(A), (3). See §§1.21A-1.22. On providing in the lease for rent payment by bank deposit or electronic funds transfer, see CC §1962(a)(2)(B). Although rent is usually due on the first of the month, it will not legally be due in advance unless the lease so provides. CC §1947. If a tenant takes possession in the middle of a month, the rent may be made payable on that date in each succeeding month, or prorated for the first month. Providing that the rent must be paid by mail could raise problems for both the landlord and the tenant. For discussion of the manner and time of payment, see §§4.30-4.31.

NOTE: A landlord may not demand that a tenant pay rent or security deposit payments in cash unless the tenant has previously attempted to pay the landlord with a check drawn on insufficient funds or has instructed the drawee to stop payment on a check. Even then, the landlord may only demand a cash rent payment or security deposit payment for no more than 3 months after a check bounces. CC §1947.3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.41 2. Form: Late Charges

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.41-1 Alternative: fixed amount

Tenant agrees to pay a late charge of $_ _[specify amount, e.g., 50 dollars]_ _, if the rent is not received _ _[*by the*_ _[specify]_ _ day of the month/within _ _[number]_ _ days of its due date]_ _. Tenant and Landlord agree that Landlord will sustain damage on account of any late payment of rent, including but not limited to added accounting, administrative, and management expenses and costs, but that it will be impracticable and extremely difficult to specify the actual amount of such damage. The parties agree that this late charge represents a fair and reasonable estimate of the damages that Landlord will incur by reason of the late payment of rent. Tenant bears the risk of loss or delay of any payment made by mail.

This late charge, which shall be considered to be "additional rent," does not establish a grace period; Landlord may serve a Three-Day Notice to Pay Rent or Quit if rent is not paid on its due date.

1.41-2 Alternative: percentage of rent due

Tenant agrees to pay a late charge of _ _[_ _[e.g., 5]_ _ percent of monthly rent then in effect and due]_ _ if rent is not received within _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ calendar days of its due date. Tenant and Landlord agree that Landlord will sustain damage on account of any late payment of rent, including but not limited to added accounting, administrative, and management expenses and costs, but that it will be impracticable and extremely difficult to specify the actual amount of such damage. The parties agree that this late charge represents a fair and reasonable estimate of the damages that Landlord will incur by reason of the late payment of rent. Tenant bears the risk of loss or delay of any payment made by mail.

This late charge, which shall be considered to be "additional rent," does not establish a grace period; Landlord may serve a Three-Day Notice to Pay Rent or Quit if rent is not paid on its due date.

Comment: This clause is intended for the benefit of the landlord. Although not technically "rent," a late charge may be demanded along with overdue rent in a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit (see §8.35). Canal-Randolph Anaheim, Inc. v Wilkoski (1978) 78 CA3d 477, 144 CR 474. The courts are likely to permit a late charge that is reasonably related to the cost of the delay to the landlord. If the charge is not reasonable, however, it may be held to be an invalid penalty. See CC §1671(c)-(d), and the authorities in §§4.43A, 8.39-8.40.

PRACTICE TIP: With respect to items other than interest and late charges, the landlord might avoid the problem that only rent may be demanded in the 3-day notice by drafting the rental agreement to provide that other items (e.g., tax assessments, common-area maintenance charges, insurance) will be considered "rent." See Folberg v Clara G.R. Kinney Co. (1980) 104 CA3d 136, 141, 163 CR 426.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.42 3. Form: Rent Check Returned for Insufficient Funds

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.42-1 Rent check returned for insufficient funds

Tenant agrees to pay a service charge of $_ _[amount]_ _ if Tenant's bank returns a rent check for insufficient funds or Tenant instructs the bank to stop payment of said funds. If the bank returns Tenant's check, Landlord may serve written notice to Tenant that the next rental payments, for a period of up to three (3) months, shall be in cash. In addition, Landlord may serve, in accordance with Civil Code §827, a 30-day written notice that all future payments must be in the form of electronic funds transfer, cashier's check, or money order.

Comment: This clause complies with the requirements of CC §1947.3, which went into effect on January 1, 2005. See §§1.30, 1.40. Another way to deal with returned checks is simply to make the tenant liable for all bank charges incurred by the landlord as a result of the returned check, including all charges for returned checks of the landlord as a direct result of the return of the tenant's check. This avoids the penalty problem associated with fixed late charges. See Perdue v Crocker Nat'l Bank (1985) 38 C3d 913, 216 CR 345, concerning bounced-check charges and the need to comply not only with liquidated damages statutes, but also with the covenant of good faith and fair dealing concerning the setting of amounts of those charges.

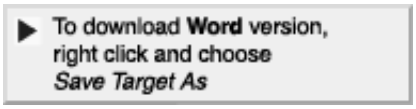
For further discussion of the problem of returned checks, see §4.30.

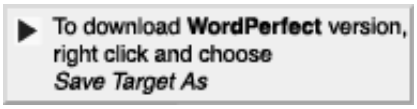
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.43 4. Form: Notice That Failure to Pay Rent on Time May Be Reported to Credit Record Agencies

§1.43 4. Form: Notice That Failure to Pay Rent on Time May Be Reported to Credit Record Agencies

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.43-1 Notice that failure to pay rent on time may be reported to credit record agencies

As required by law, Tenant is hereby notified that a negative credit report reflecting on Tenant's credit record may be submitted to a credit reporting agency if Tenant fails to fulfill the terms of credit obligations by failing to pay rent on time.

Comment: Landlords must notify tenants that negative credit information may be submitted to a credit reporting agency if the tenant fails to fulfill the terms of the tenancy. CC §1785.26. See §1.29. This provision should comply with the notice requirement of CC §1785.26(b)-(c). The notice need not be included in the agreement, but if it is not, it must be sent to the tenant no later than 30 days after the negative information has been submitted to the credit agency. CC §1785.26(c). Landlords should be cautious about making a negative credit report on a tenant who withholds rent to enforce the warranty of habitability. The landlord could arguably incur tort liability to the tenant in this situation. A tenant has the right to register disagreement with the information reported by the landlord to the credit agency. See §2.9. For further discussion, see §§4.9, 13.75.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.44 E. Form: Term

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.44-1 Alternative: Fixed-term tenancy

The term of this lease will commence on _ _[date]_ _, and continue until _ _[date]_ _. If Tenant holds over after expiration of the term, and Landlord accepts rent from _ _[him/her]_ _ at the above-specified monthly rent, the tenancy will then continue on a month-to-month basis.

Comment: This clause merely states existing law, but spelling out the law may benefit both parties. On the advantages and disadvantages of a fixed-term tenancy, see §§1.8, 4.20. In jurisdictions with rent control ordinances, the length of the lease term may not be significant because the landlord probably will not be able to remove the tenant on expiration of the term, except for just cause. See §§1.8, 7.54. Further, some rent control ordinances require not only that a landlord have a specified permissible cause to evict, but also that written notice to that effect be given to the tenant. See §7.54. It is always advisable for the landlord to give a "notice of nonrenewal" to the tenant before filing the action, even though no notice to vacate or notice of termination is required by state procedural law before a landlord evicts a holdover tenant after expiration of a fixed-term lease.

NOTE: Some local ordinances require residential rental agreements to have a minimum, fixed term. See, e.g., Roble Vista Assocs. v Bacon (2002) 97 CA4th 335, 118 CR2d 295 (appellate court upheld Palo Alto ordinance that requires landlords to offer all tenants leases of at least one-year period).

1.44-2 Alternative: Month-to-month tenancy

The term of this rental agreement will commence on _ _[date]_ _, and will continue on a month-to-month basis until terminated after either party gives _ _[e.g., 30 or 60]_ _ days' written notice to the other party or other notice provided by law.

Comment: A month-to-month tenancy is terminated in most instances by the landlord's or the tenant's service of a 30-day or 60-day notice, unless, in a commercial lease, the parties agree that the tenancy may be terminated by shorter notice, as long as the notice period is at least 7 days before the expiration of the term. See CC §§1946 and 1946.1. See §8.69. On the advantages and disadvantages of month-to-month tenancies, see §§1.9, 4.20. Under a rent control ordinance, a month-to-month tenancy may have advantages over a fixed-term tenancy for the tenant. Most rent control ordinances provide that a landlord may terminate a tenancy only for just cause (see §§1.9, 7.54); a tenant, however, may still terminate a month-to-month tenancy on service of 30 days' notice.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Occupants

§1.45 1. Form: Identification; Joint Liability

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.45-1 Identification; joint liability

The premises will be occupied only by the following named persons, each of whom has executed this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _: _ _[Specify occupants who will execute lease or rental agreement]_ _ _ _[and by _ _[number of children]_ _ minor children, who need not execute this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _]_ _. Each such occupant is an original occupant and is entitled to the benefit of any local rent control ordinance, if applicable.

This agreement is between Landlord and each named Tenant, individually and severally. The named Tenant(s) _ _[is/are]_ _ jointly and severally responsible for performance of _ _[his/her/their]_ _ obligations under this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _, including the payment of rent.

Comment: This clause gives the landlord some protection against the addition of unwanted tenants and the problem of identifying the current tenants when the landlord wishes to terminate the tenancy. See §§1.21, 13.70. See also CCP §§1174.25, 1174.3 and Arrieta v Mahon (1982) 31 C3d 381, 182 CR 770. If the lease or rental agreement contains a provision limiting the tenants to the named occupants, any person remaining on the premises after the named occupants have vacated may be evicted. In a non-rent-controlled jurisdiction, the landlord may evict an unknown occupant who is not named in the rental agreement without notice. See §13.70.

In a rent-controlled jurisdiction, the landlord may be required to serve a 3-day notice to quit on the basis that such a person is an unauthorized subtenant in possession of the premises at the termination of the tenancy. The practitioner must check the rent control ordinance to ensure that the unnamed occupant is evicted for one of the authorized reasons, to determine whether the unnamed occupant has achieved the status of a tenant and is thus subject to a "just-cause" eviction requirement, and to ascertain whether the rent control ordinance specifies a procedure for objecting to the presence of new occupants. Practitioners should also advise landlords not to accept rent from unnamed occupants. See §§1.31, 7.25.

PRACTICE TIP: In some circumstances, this clause may not be sufficient to prevent creation of a tenancy by consent. Under some rent or eviction control ordinances, the only way to limit occupancy and avoid creating additional tenancies is to object to the presence of the new occupants and to accept no further rent from the authorized tenants to avoid a waiver and estoppel defense.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.46 2. Form: Guests, Boarders, Lodgers, and Roommates

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.46-1 Guests, boarders, lodgers, and roommates

Tenant may have guests on the premises for not more than _ _[e.g., 15]_ _ consecutive days or _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days in a calendar year, and no more than _ _[e.g., two]_ _ guests at any one time. Tenant may not take in any boarders, lodgers, or roommates without Landlord's prior written consent, which shall not unreasonably be withheld. Any guest whose stay exceeds the specified limits, or any boarder, lodger, or roommate to whom Landlord has not consented, is not a tenant of the premises, and will be subject to eviction by Landlord under legal process without prior service of notice to quit or other termination notice.

Comment: Some provision limiting guests is necessary to prevent abuse of the provision limiting occupancy, a particularly important consideration in rent-controlled jurisdictions. See §1.31. Although CC §798.34 applies only to mobilehome tenancies, it may be of some guidance to residential landlords; it limits guest occupancy to 20 consecutive days or 30 days in a calendar year. Depending on the size of the unit and the number of occupants, the landlord might want to limit guests more strictly (e.g., by specifying that no more than one guest be allowed on the premises at one time), or to limit severely the number of days that a guest may reside on the premises. Note that the validity under state law of the last sentence in the clause has not been tested in any reported case. Moreover, that provision may conflict with a local rent control ordinance. If in doubt, counsel should not rely on the clause, but make sure that all occupants are served with notice anyway, before filing an unlawful detainer action.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.47 G. Form: Indemnification of Landlord

§1.47 G. Form: Indemnification of Landlord

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.47-1 Indemnification of landlord

Tenant(s) _ _[agree/agrees]_ _ to indemnify Landlord for any liability arising before termination of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ for personal injuries or property damage caused by the negligent, willful, or intentional conduct of Tenant(s), _ _[and/or]_ _ _ _[his/her/their]_ _ guests or invitees. This indemnification agreement does not waive Landlord's duty of care to prevent personal injury or property damage when that duty is imposed by law.

Comment: This clause is intended to cover allocation of tort liability between the landlord and tenant. Because the scope of the landlord's liability for personal injuries and property damage has expanded in recent years (see §§3.67-3.72), the landlord must be extremely cautious in this area, particularly with regard to obtaining adequate insurance coverage. See Sullivan, Landlord Liability Insurance: Why an Old Lease May Need to Learn New Tricks, 26 Cal Real Prop J 22 (Vol 26, No. 2, 2008). Although not purporting to waive the landlord's duty of care (a waiver that would probably be ineffective in any event), the provision entitles the landlord to seek indemnification for any liability incurred because of the tenant's lack of care.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/ H. Deposits; Screening Fees/ 1. Security Deposit/§1.48 a. Form: Amount and Terms of Security Deposit

H. Deposits; Screening Fees

1. Security Deposit

§1.48 a. Form: Amount and Terms of Security Deposit

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.48-1 Amount and terms of security deposit

Tenant will deposit with Landlord _ _[*the sum of $*_ _[amount]_ _]_ _ _ _[as the last month's rent/as a deposit against the monthly rental in effect in the last month of the _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _]_ _ and the sum of $_ _[amount]_ _ as a security deposit. Landlord will hold the security deposit for the faithful performance by Tenant of _ _[his/her]_ _ obligations under this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _, including payment of rent, repair of damages to the premises, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear, caused by Tenant or Tenant's guest or licensee, and cleaning of the premises on termination of the tenancy, and to remedy any default in Tenant's obligation under the _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ to restore, replace, or return personal property or appurtenances, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear. Within three weeks after Tenant has vacated the premises, Landlord will furnish _ _[him/her]_ _ with an itemized written statement of the basis for, and amount of, the security received and its expenditure (or good faith estimate as allowed by law), including all supporting documentation required by law, and will return any remaining portion of the security deposit to Tenant.

No trust relationship between Landlord and Tenant is created on account of the security deposit and Landlord may commingle the deposit with other funds of Landlord.

1.48-2 Optional addition to 1.48-1: Move-out inspection

Tenant agrees to participate in a move-out inspection with Landlord at the time of vacating. If Tenant fails or refuses to participate in a move-out inspection, Landlord's written inspection report will be conclusively presumed to be correct.

NOTE: The above provision is in addition to, and does not replace, the initial inspection requirements of CC §1950.5(f)(1). See §§4.28A, 4.51, 8.172B.

Comment: Form 1.48-1 follows the requirements of CC §1950.5, which regulates security deposits on residential property. See §§4.23, 4.26, 4.28, 8.168, 8.172A-8.174 discussing expansion of the term "security" effective January 1, 2003, and tenant's right to refund of deposit. For additional drafting tips and strategies regarding deposits, see §§4.23-4.29. For comprehensive discussion of security deposit law, extensively amended in both 2002 and 2003, see §§8.167-8.176. The total amount of security demanded for a residential tenancy includes any amounts demanded for the last month's rent, and may not exceed 2 months' rent for unfurnished units or 3 months' rent for furnished units. CC §1950.5(c). Other sums demanded such as deposits for keys or garage-door openers are also included within CC §1950.5's definition of security deposit. See §8.168. A landlord may not demand that a tenant pay a security deposit payment in cash unless the tenant has previously attempted to pay the landlord with a check drawn on insufficient funds or the tenant has instructed the drawee to stop payment on a check, draft, or order for the payment of money. Even then, the landlord may only demand a cash security deposit payment for 3 months following a tenant's attempt to pay with a check on insufficient funds or following the tenant's instruction to stop payment on the funds. CC §1947.3.

Section 1950.5(m) has rendered nonrefundable security deposits illegal. See §8.175. Any purported advance waiver by the tenant of his or her rights under CC §1950.5 is void. CC §1953(a)(1). See §1.30. But on termination of the tenancy, a tenant may waive the right to obtain certain documentation regarding deductions from the security deposit when the deposit is refunded. See CC §1950.5(g)(2)-(4), discussed in §§8.173C, 8.173E.

Many landlords call the security deposit "last month's rent" or divide the security deposit into "last month's rent" and "security deposit." Any money demanded from a residential tenant other than the first month's rent will probably be held to be a "security deposit" except for a screening fee charged under CC §1950.6 (see §1.51).

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords: To prevent disputes over the disposition and application of the security deposit, a landlord should not denominate any portion of the security deposit for a specific purpose. For example, if a portion is called "last month's rent," the tenant may believe that he or she does not have to pay the last month's rent because it has been prepaid. If the rent had been raised during the term of the tenancy, the "last month's rent" paid in advance would be less than the amount due, and the landlord would be forced either to litigate the issue or to accept the lesser amount.

A requirement in the lease or rental agreement that the tenant participate in a move-out inspection with the landlord (Form 1.48-2) may avoid disputes concerning proper application of the security deposit. A notice of the opportunity to have a move-out inspection before the tenant vacates is mandated by CC §1950.5(f). See §§4.28, 8.172A. Also, a recital in a rental agreement that the premises were in good condition at the inception of the tenancy and were to be maintained in that condition has some weight in supporting a landlord's claim to expenses for cleaning. See Bauman v Islay Inv. (1973) 30 CA3d 752, 756, 106 CR 889.

Under some rent control ordinances, the landlord must place the security deposit in an interest-bearing account for the tenant's benefit. The landlord is not required to do so, however, under state law generally applicable to security deposits. See CC §1950.5. When a local ordinance requires the landlord to accumulate interest on the deposit and affords alternative methods for paying it to the tenant (e.g., landlord must pay the amount of interest to tenant at end of first full year of occupancy, or credit it against rent, and yearly thereafter), the landlord should specify the method for such payment in the rental agreement. In Action Apartment Ass'n v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2001) 94 CA4th 587, 114 CR2d 412, a group of landlords sued to invalidate a provision of the local rent control ordinance requiring a landlord to pay interest on a tenant's security deposit at the rate of 3 percent regardless of the prevailing bank interest rates. The Second Appellate District held that the ordinance was an unconstitutional "taking" of their property and that it did not further the legitimate purposes of rent control. But see Small Prop. Owners v City & County of San Francisco (2006) 141 CA4th 1388, 47 CR3d 121.

PRACTICE TIPS: Tenant: A tenant should not sign a lease or rental agreement with a "received in good condition and repair" statement unless the tenant has taken the time to inspect the premises thoroughly. A tenant should make a list of any obvious defects at the inception of the tenancy or before executing the rental agreement, and should obtain the landlord's written acknowledgment of these conditions.

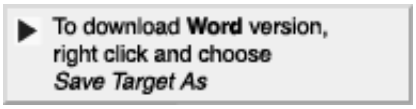
Tenants' attorneys should advise their clients to take photos or to conduct a walk-through with a witness, or both, before vacating the premises to preserve proof of the property's condition.

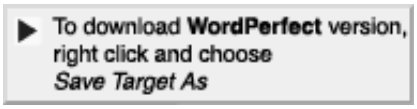
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.49 b. Form: Provision for Maintaining Security Deposit by Multiple Tenants

§1.49 b. Form: Provision for Maintaining Security Deposit by Multiple Tenants

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.49-1 Alternative: Vacating tenant refunded proportionately; remaining occupants replenish original deposit

If one or more Tenants vacates and receives a proportionate refund (less lawful deductions) of the deposit, the remaining Tenants will immediately on demand by Landlord replace the portion of the deposit refunded to or otherwise accounted to the departing individual. The remaining Tenants will not have the right to contest the amount of any deductions assessed against the departing Tenants.

1.49-2 Alternative: No portion of deposit refunded until final occupant vacates

At the sole and exclusive option of the landlord, the security deposit shall not be returned nor an accounting be due until the last of the named occupants vacates the premises. Any tenant vacating the premises shall receive a reimbursement for his or her share of the security deposit from the tenants remaining in possession of the premises.

Comment: When one member of a group of tenants departs, that member generally demands a return of his or her proportionate share of the security deposit, unless an incoming member reimburses the departing member and succeeds to the departing member's share of the deposit. A refund to a departing tenant depletes the amount available to the landlord to secure the return of the premises at the end of the occupancy in reasonably good condition or to pay for cleaning and repairs as needed. The second alternative above protects the landlord in that case. The first alternative might be prohibited by some rent control ordinances.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.50 c. Form: Replenishment and Increase of Deposit

§1.50 c. Form: Replenishment and Increase of Deposit

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.50-1 Replenishment and increase of deposit

If all or any portion of Tenant's security deposit is properly applied by Landlord during the term of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ to make necessary repairs to the premises, Landlord may demand that Tenant replenish the full amount so applied. Tenant's failure to replenish such amount within _ _[e.g., 3, 10, or 30 days]_ _ after written demand by Landlord will constitute a material breach of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _. Landlord's written demand for replenishment will include an itemized statement describing the disposition of the security.

At any time during the term of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ and after 30 days' prior written notice to Tenant, Landlord may increase the security deposit to the maximum amount then permitted by law. Tenant's failure to deposit such increase in accordance with Landlord's notice will constitute a material breach of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _.

Comment: The purpose of the first paragraph in this provision is to permit the landlord to insist that the tenant replenish any part of the security deposit properly applied under law by the landlord during the tenancy (rather than upon termination). See §4.27. The purpose of the second provision is to permit the landlord to increase the security deposit when the rent is increased. Under CC §1950.5, the total security demanded by the landlord may not exceed two months' rent for unfurnished units and three months' rent for furnished units. See §§4.24, 8.169. See also People v Tannenbaum (1994) 23 CA4th Supp 6, 29 CR2d 534, in which a landlord was held to have violated a local rent control provision by demanding a deposit increase that exceeded the allowable maximum.

WARNING: Attorneys for landlords should be aware, however, that the validity of the foregoing provisions has not been tested in the courts. Civil Code §1950.5 could be interpreted as prohibiting the landlord from demanding any security at any time other than the inception of the tenancy. Furthermore, in rent-controlled jurisdictions, replenishment of or increase in the deposit might constitute an unlawful rent increase. See §§4.27, 7.33.

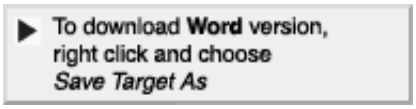
PRACTICE TIP: Attorneys in rent-controlled jurisdictions should check the applicable ordinance and not generalize from one ordinance to another. For example, one might preclude raising a security deposit after the tenancy's inception, but another might permit the landlord to raise the security deposit on an annual basis by the same percentage as the allowable rent increase.

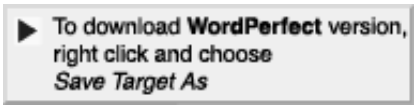
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.51 2. Form: Nonrefundable Applicant Screening Fee

§1.51 2. Form: Nonrefundable Applicant Screening Fee

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.51-1 Nonrefundable applicant screening fee

Any "screening fee" charged to process tenant's rental application is nonrefundable, and has not and will not be credited to tenant's security deposit or deemed to be a security deposit.

Comment: Under CC §1950.6, a landlord may charge an applicant for a residential rental a nonrefundable "screening fee" to cover the cost of obtaining information about the applicant. This information may include personal reference checks, credit reports, and tenant screening reports, and may include other information as well. CC §1950.6(a). For discussion, see §4.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/ I. Condition of Premises/§1.52 1. Form: Landlord's Duty to Maintain Premises

I. Condition of Premises

§1.52 1. Form: Landlord's Duty to Maintain Premises

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.52-1 Landlord's duty to maintain premises

Landlord will provide and maintain the premises, including common areas, in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition, and will comply with all state and local laws, ordinances, and regulations concerning the condition of the dwelling units.

Comment: The California standard is that the premises be in a "tenantable condition." CC §1941.1. This provision uses the more specific federal decent, safe, and sanitary standard. See 42 USC §1437d(l). See also §1.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.53 2. Form: Statement of Condition of Premises

§1.53 2. Form: Statement of Condition of Premises

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.53-1 Alternative: Joint inspection of premises

Landlord and Tenant have jointly inspected the premises and noted the condition of the premises and of all fixtures, appliances, and furnishings. Attached is an itemized statement of that inspection, including all deficiencies noted and corrective action to be taken, if any. Except as noted in the statement, Tenant agrees that the premises, fixtures, appliances, and furnishings are in satisfactory condition.

1.53-2 Alternative: Landlord's itemization

The rented premises include the following fixtures, furnishings, and appliances: _ _[specify]_ _. The fixtures, furnishings, and appliances are in good condition except for the following defects, which Landlord agrees to repair as indicated: _ _[Specify defects and dates by which Landlord agrees to repair or replace fixtures, furnishings, or appliances]_ _.

Comment: The best way to avoid future disputes over the condition of the premises is to provide in the lease or rental agreement for a joint inspection of the premises by the landlord and tenant. The parties can inspect the premises together, noting the condition of all major fixtures and appliances, paint, carpet, window treatments, and listing any actions that the landlord promises to make to remedy the deficiencies. Such an inspection protects both the landlord and tenant from disputes over who is responsible for deteriorated conditions on the premises. See §1.24 for discussion of inspection procedures. See §§1.25-1.26 for sample inspection checklists.

The less comprehensive alternative is for the lease to list all fixtures, furnishings, and appliances on the premises, noting any that are defective. This provision can benefit the landlord by having the tenant agree to the condition of the premises without a full-fledged inspection.

If the tenant is less than diligent, attentive, and informed these provisions may be a pitfall; the tenant may be held responsible for a preexisting condition.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.54 J. Form: Assignment and Subletting

§1.54 J. Form: Assignment and Subletting

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.54-1 Alternative: Assignment by tenant prohibited

Tenant may not assign _ _[his/her]_ _ interests under this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ or sublet any portion of the premises.

1.54-2 Alternative: Assignment by tenant subject to landlord's consent

Tenant may not assign _ _[his/her]_ _ interests under this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ or sublet any portion of the premises, without Landlord's prior written consent, which may not be unreasonably withheld.

Comment: A residential landlord may place an absolute restriction on assignment and subletting in the lease or rental agreement. CC §§1995.210, 1995.230. The parties should be aware that there are consequences to an absolute prohibition of subleasing both under state law (see CC §1995.230) and under some rent control enactments (see, e.g., San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Board Rules and Regulations §§6.14, 6.15A-6.15B, 6.15D. If a lease requires the landlord's consent to an assignment or subletting, the restriction must be construed to provide that the landlord's consent may not be unreasonably withheld. CC §1995.260. This statutory rule follows case law that preceded its enactment. See Kendall v Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 220 CR 818. See also San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Board Rules and Regulations §6.15B, codifying Kendall rule for residential tenancies. For discussion of assignment and subletting, see §§3.49-3.59, 3.75, 7.28.

When the lease does not provide otherwise, a tenant has the right to transfer the leasehold interest, either by assignment (Kassan v Stout (1973) 9 C3d 39, 106 CR 783) or by sublease (Chandler v Hart (1911) 161 C 405, 119 P 516). See also Little v Guadron (1986) 187 CA3d Supp 1, 4, 232 CR 516.

For assignment and subletting that violates a covenant of the lease, the landlord may terminate the tenancy by serving a 3-day notice not phrased "in the alternative," i.e., a 3-day notice to quit. Without sufficient proof of an actual sublet or assignment, it is prudent to serve a 3-day notice in the alternative, allowing the tenant to remove the unauthorized occupant. CCP §1161(4). See §§8.54-8.55. For further discussion of assignment and subletting, see §§3.49-3.59A, 14.35. For discussion of rules pertaining to limitations of a commercial landlord's ability to restrict the transfer of a tenant's interest in a lease, including the effect of bankruptcy law, see §§14.43, 14.49-14.52 and California Eviction Defense Manual §19.9 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.55 K. Form: Use of Premises

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.55-1 Use of premises

The premises are rented to Tenant for residential purposes only, and may not be used by Tenant for any other purpose.

Comment: In a residential tenancy, the landlord should include a clause limiting the tenancy to residential use even though CC §1941.2(a)(5) codifies such use as a tenant's "affirmative obligation." The lease or rental agreement should also specify any other permitted uses of the premises. The landlord's failure to specify the use of the premises may entitle the tenant to use them for any lawful purpose that is not materially different from the purpose for which the premises are normally used. See §1.28. The landlord may also want to prohibit certain specific uses of the premises, such as operating a mail-order business or repairing automobiles. See §1.64.

PRACTICE TIP: The landlord should be aware of uses permitted by local ordinances such as zoning codes, and of the permitted use of the premises (e.g., a single family house; a duplex; a mixed use such as one store and one apartment). Landlords cannot prohibit use of residential premises as a "Family Day Care Home." Health & S C §1597.40. For discussion on covenants restricting changes in use for commercial tenancies, see California Eviction Defense Manual §19.10 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.56 L. Form: Utilities

§1.56 L. Form: Utilities

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.56-1 Utilities

Tenant shall pay all utilities, service charges, and costs related to occupancy of the premises, except for _ _[specify, e.g., garbage collection, sewer]_ _, which Landlord will pay. The following utility services are individually metered for Tenant's unit and Tenant shall contact each local utility company directly to arrange and pay for service: _ _[specify, e.g., gas, electricity]_ _. The following utility services to the Tenant will be billed by the landlord or its billing company based on either a submeter or an allocation formula: _ _[specify, e.g., gas, electricity, water, sewer]_ _. The amount owing for utility services billed by the landlord or its billing company is considered additional rent under this agreement, and nonpayment of any such bill within 14 days of the billing date shall constitute a default in the payment of rent. The amount of the bill is subject to applicable government rules, regulations, and guidelines and the rules of the utility providing the service to Landlord. _ _[The third party billing company that will calculate, send, and receive payment for Tenant's utility bills is _ _[name & address of billing company]_ _]_ _.

Comment: During the last several years, submetering and allocation of utilities have become an extremely important factor in the operation of many apartment complexes in California. When a landlord is billed directly by the local utility, the landlord will subsequently bill the tenants for that utility through the use of a submeter or an allocation formula. The actual billing is frequently performed by a third party billing provider. See §§4.41A-4.41E. The landlord may only exercise certain remedies, such as eviction, if the covenant to pay such utility charges is express. Keating v Preston (1940) 42 CA2d 110, 118, 108 P2d 479.

Note that one utility charge might be billed by the landlord using a submeter and another billed using the allocation method. Under an allocation method, tenants are charged based on a variety of formulas from the number of occupants, bathrooms, square footage, or other factors. This process is known as the ratio utility billing system (RUBS). Tenant advocates claim that this process is illegal without a submeter in place. The California Public Utilities Commission (CPUC) investigated this matter (Investigation No. 98-12-012) and issued a decision in May 2001 concluding that it has limited jurisdiction over mobilehome parks on this issue. See CPUC Final Decision D01-05-058, available online at http://www.cpuc.ca.gov/PUBLISHED/FINAL_DECISION/7183.htm. (A draft decision, published in Summer 2000, recommended several legislative responses. See CPUC Agenda Decision (Investigation No. 98-12-012; 8/3/00), available online at http://www.cpuc.ca.gov/PUBLISHED/AGENDA_DECISION/2114.htm.)

1.56-2 Optional addition to 1.56-1: Submeter billing method

A _ _[water/gas/electric]_ _ submeter will measure the Tenant's _ _[water/gas/electricity]_ _ usage and the _ _[Landlord/third party billing company]_ _ will bill Tenant based on this usage.

1.56-3 Optional addition to 1.56-1: Allocation billing method

The _ _[Landlord/third party billing company]_ _ will bill Tenant a percentage of the Landlord's actual _ _[e.g., water and sewer]_ _ costs based on the following formula: The square footage of the Tenant's apartment divided by the square footage of all apartments in the complex multiplied by the Landlord's _ _[e.g., water and sewer]_ _ bills. _ _[Use alternate descriptions for other RUBS formulas]_ _.

1.56-4 Optional addition to 1.56-1: Hot-water ratio billing method

A water submeter will measure the Tenant's hot water usage and the _ _[Landlord/third party billing company]_ _ will bill Tenant based on the following formula: The hot water usage of the Tenant divided by the hot water usage of all Tenants at the Property multiplied by the Landlord's water and sewer bills.

Comment: Landlords and third party billing companies use a wide variety of allocation formulas and billing methods; therefore, it is important to obtain this information prior to drafting the lease so that the language accurately reflects precisely how the tenant will be billed.

1.56-5 Optional addition to 1.56-1: Security deposit withholding

Upon termination or expiration of the lease, unpaid utility bills may be deducted from Tenant's security deposit.

Comment: A landlord seeking to collect unpaid utility bills may choose to deduct unpaid utility charges from the security deposit. Under CC §1950.5(b), the security deposit may be "used for any purpose" including tenant defaults "in the payment of rent." See §§4.23, 4.26. See also form 1.56-1.

1.56-6 Optional addition to 1.56-1: Remedies

The failure of Tenant to make payment in full in a timely manner for utilities is a substantial and material breach entitling Landlord to pursue any and all legal remedies available under this Lease or applicable laws.

Comment: A landlord seeking to evict a tenant for nonpayment of utilities is permitted to do so under CCP §1161(3) as a failure of the tenant to perform a condition or covenant of the rental agreement. As some ordinances limit the right to evict to "substantial" breaches of "material" terms, this type of provision may be useful in arguing the substantiality and materiality of the failure to make utility payments. On the materiality requirements of §1161(3), see §8.48.

1.56-7 Optional addition to 1.56-1: Fees

As part of each monthly utility bill, Tenant shall pay an administrative fee in the amount of $_ _[dollar amount]_ _, which is used to cover administrative and billing expenses. Tenant agrees to pay a one-time account set-up fee in the amount of $_ _[dollar amount]_ _. This fee shall be included on Tenant's first bill. Tenant agrees to pay a one-time account processing fee in the amount of $_ _[dollar amount]_ _ when Tenant vacates the Unit. This fee shall be included on Tenant's final utility bill.

Comment: A landlord billing under a gas or electric submetering program may only charge the specific amounts authorized by Pub Util C §739.5 and the tariffs of the providing utility. See §§4.41D-4.41E.

1.56-8 Optional addition to 1.56-1: Limitation of liability

Landlord shall not be liable for any losses or damages that result from outages, interruptions, or fluctuations in utilities provided to Tenant's unit, unless such loss or damage was the direct result of the willful conduct or negligence of Landlord or Landlord's employees. Tenant hereby releases Landlord from any and all such claims arising from or relating to such outages, interruptions, or fluctuations. Tenant hereby waives any and all claims for offset, rent reduction, or diminished value of the apartment due to such outages, interruptions, or fluctuations.

Comment: On the enforceability of tenant waivers of liability and other legal rights, including the implied warranty of habitability, see CC §§1668, 1953(a)(2), (5), discussed in §§1.30, 4.39.

1.56-9 Optional addition to 1.56-1: Tampering

Tenant agrees not to disturb, terminate, interrupt, tamper with, adjust, or disconnect any utility service or submetering system or device. Violation of this section is a material and substantial breach of the Lease and shall entitle Landlord to all available remedies under the Lease or applicable laws.

1.56-10 Optional addition to 1.56-1: Estimation

Tenant agrees to allow Landlord to estimate consumption if the Tenant's submeter is broken or otherwise does not transmit a meter reading.

Comment: If a submeter is damaged or cannot be read, the common practice among billing companies is to estimate for some period of time; consent to this practice should be obtained in advance from the tenant.

1.56-11 Optional addition to 1.56-1: No waiver/receiving rent

Landlord's receipt of rent with knowledge of Tenant's failure to pay utility charges does not waive Landlord's right to enforce any covenant of this lease.

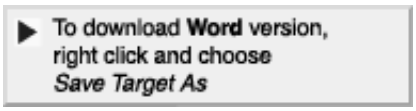
Comment: Acceptance of rent by a landlord that has full knowledge of the failure to pay utility bills may constitute a waiver of the breach, thereby precluding the landlord from terminating the tenancy. The landlord may avoid the waiver issue by entering into a written agreement with the tenant specifying that accepting rent payments is not a waiver of the breach of failing to pay utility charges. See §8.49.

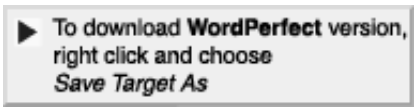
© The Regents of the University of California

M. Tenant Obligations and Restrictions

§1.57 1. Form: Tenant's Obligation to Maintain and Protect Landlord's Property

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.57-1 Tenant's obligation to maintain and protect landlord's property

Tenant agrees to perform the following obligations:

1. To keep the premises as clean and sanitary as their condition permits;

2. To dispose of all rubbish, garbage, and other waste in a clean and sanitary manner;

3. To use and operate properly all electrical, gas, and plumbing fixtures and pipes, and to keep them as clean and sanitary as their condition permits;

4. To refrain from willfully or wantonly destroying, defacing, damaging, impairing, or removing any part of the premises or the facilities, equipment, or appurtenances, or permitting any person on the premises to commit such acts; and

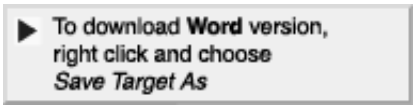
5. To occupy the premises as _ _[his/her]_ _ abode, utilizing designated portions of the premises for living, sleeping, cooking, and dining purposes.

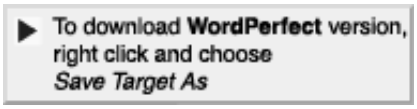
Comment: This comprehensive provision includes a number of tenant obligations derived from CC §1941.2.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.58 2. Form: Tenant's Obligations to Refrain from Disturbance, Unlawful Conduct, and Waste

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.58-1 Tenant's obligations to refrain from disturbance, unlawful conduct, and waste

Tenant may not disturb, annoy, endanger, or interfere with other tenants of the building or occupants of neighboring buildings. Tenant may not use the premises for any unlawful purpose, violate any law or ordinance, or permit waste or nuisance on the premises.

1.58-2 Optional addition to 1.58-1: Limitations on sound equipment

Tenant may not play _ _[his/her]_ _ television, stereo, radio, any other amplified electrical device, or any musical instrument that may disturb other tenants, between _ _[e.g., 10:30]_ _ p.m. and _ _[e.g., 8:30]_ _ a.m., unless Tenant uses earphones.

1.58-3 Optional addition to 1.58-1: Rugs

Tenant will be responsible for placing rugs on the floors of the following rooms of the premises: _ _[Specify]_ _.

Comment: This standard clause protects the rights of other tenants and enables the landlord to terminate the tenancy of a troublesome tenant. Note that for waste (provided the lease expressly prohibits waste) or nuisance, the landlord may terminate the tenancy on 3 days' notice not phrased "in the alternative," i.e., a 3-day notice to quit. CCP §1161(4). See §§8.54-8.55.

NOTE: For purposes of CCP §1161, which defines "unlawful detainer," a person who sells a controlled substance or unlawfully possesses or uses weapons or ammunition on the premises, or uses the premises for those purposes, is considered to have committed a nuisance. CCP §1161(4). See §4.44.

For other standards of conduct covered by this provision, termination is governed by CCP §1161(3). If the tenant can cure such conduct, the landlord might be required to give notice phrased in the alternative (e.g., either cure the conduct, or quit the premises).

Some landlords find it advisable to require that tenants in upstairs units keep rugs on the floors as a means of reducing complaints from the tenants below about noise.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.59 3. Form: Tenant's Obligation to Comply With Rules and Regulations

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.59-1 Tenant's obligation to comply with rules and regulations

Tenant agrees to comply with the building rules and regulations, a copy of which is attached to this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ and incorporated by reference. Landlord may amend or modify the rules and regulations by serving a copy of the amendments or modifications on Tenant 30 days before their effective date.

Comment: Some landlords issue rules covering problems that commonly arise in particular buildings or complexes. Under this clause, the tenant's breach of the rules becomes a breach of the lease or rental agreement, entitling the landlord to terminate the tenancy if the tenant fails to cure the breach after appropriate notice. This provision may be particularly important for landlords in rent-controlled jurisdictions. See §1.31.

PRACTICE TIP: In nonrent-controlled jurisdictions, most terms or conditions of a month-to-month agreement (except rent increases and terminations; see §§3.65-3.65B, 8.69) may be changed on 30 days' notice. See Wilcox v Anderson (1978) 84 CA3d 593, 148 CR 773, in which a 30-day notice was used to delete an option to purchase. In most rent-controlled jurisdictions, any term of a month-to-month agreement may be changed except for provisions specifically covered by the ordinance, and in some the landlord may reduce or terminate services, as long as the rent is reduced according to specified formulas.

WARNING: The San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance requires a landlord to have just cause to remove or sever certain housing services such as parking and/or storage from a tenancy. If the parties dispute a certain item, a court will determine whether just cause exists to sever and/or remove that item. Either party may then petition the rent board to determine the amount of the corresponding rent reduction. See §7.54.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.60 4. Form: Conditions Governing Tenant Repairs and Alterations

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.60-1 Conditions governing tenant repairs and alterations

Before making any repairs to defective conditions on the premises, Tenant must first notify Landlord of the need for such repairs and allow a reasonable time for Landlord to arrange for the necessary repairs. If Landlord does not act within _ _[e.g., 30 days]_ _, Tenant may have the repairs made and may deduct their cost from up to one month's rent.

Tenant may not make alterations to the premises by _ _[e.g., removing or adding walls, windows, paint, wallpapering, electrical wiring, plumbing fixtures, or tile]_ _ without first obtaining Landlord's written consent, which may not be unreasonably withheld.

On completion, any such repairs or alterations become part of the premises.

Comment: This provision gives the landlord a reasonable opportunity (usually 30 days) to make repairs relating to the habitability of the premises before the tenant can use the "repair-and-deduct" remedy (CC §§1941-1942; see §§3.12-3.15). A landlord who makes the necessary repairs controls both the quality and cost. If the landlord does not correct defects that affect habitability within a reasonable time, the tenant may deduct the cost of such repairs up to one month's rent. CC §1942(a)-(b). For alterations to the premises, landlords usually prefer to maintain control over the removal of lead-based paint or other hazardous material, the color and type of paint or wallpaper, or the quality and nature of any other alterations that the tenant wishes to make. The tenant's failure to obtain the landlord's consent would constitute a breach of the lease, entitling the landlord to terminate the tenancy.

Civil Code §1942(b) provides that, if a tenant acts to repair and deduct after the 30th day following notice, he or she is rebuttably presumed to have acted after a reasonable time. The statute also provides that a tenant may repair and deduct after shorter notice "if all the circumstances require shorter notice."

Civil Code §1942(a) specifies that the remedy provided by the statute (i.e., repairing and deducting from rent when the landlord fails to repair within a reasonable time) is not available to the tenant more than twice in any 12-month period. See §3.16 for further discussion.

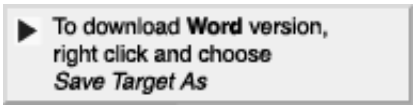
The above provisions do not prevent a tenant from resorting to the rent-withholding remedy approved for breach of the implied warranty of habitability in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704. See §3.8. Moreover, the tenant need not provide notice to the landlord before initiating rent withholding if the landlord is, in fact, aware that a defect exists. Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 171 CR 707 (court left open question of whether landlord's knowledge of defect is prerequisite to right to withhold rent). Generally, a tenant may not waive rights of habitability, even regarding defects known in advance by the tenant. See §3.23.

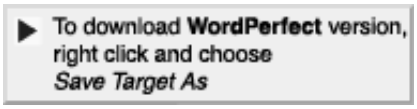
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.61 5. Form: Tenant Agreement to Maintain Premises as Consideration for Rental

§1.61 5. Form: Tenant Agreement to Maintain Premises as Consideration for Rental

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.61-1 Tenant agreement to maintain premises as consideration for rental

Tenant agrees that, as part of the consideration paid for use and occupancy of the premises, Tenant will perform the following items of improvement, repair, and maintenance: _ _[Specify]_ _.

Landlord and Tenant agree to the following arrangements concerning the provision of necessary tools and materials to enable Tenant to carry out the work: _ _[Specify]_ _.

Tenant acknowledges that the specified items are within Tenant's capacity and experience and were specifically agreed on after due negotiation with Landlord.

Comment: Civil Code §1942.1 provides that a tenant's waiver of rights to the landlord's maintenance of tenantable conditions is void as contrary to public policy, except under a specific agreement that the tenant "improve, repair or maintain all or stipulated portions of the dwelling as part of the consideration for rental." Such arrangements often break down, with serious consequences for the landlord. See §4.31 for further discussion. In the absence of specific language showing that a true exchange at arm's length was the basis for the arrangement, a "maintenance-for-rent" arrangement might be found unenforceable as an attempt by the landlord to avoid responsibility for required maintenance and repair.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.62 6. Form: Pets

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.62-1 Pets

Without Landlord's written consent, Tenant may keep no animals on or about the premises _ _[, except, e.g., small birds, a cat]_ _.

Comment: Most landlords prefer to place some limitations on the pets that the tenant may keep on the premises. Pets may cause property damage and even subject the landlord to liability for personal injury damages to a tenant or a third party (see §§3.67-3.72). Some landlords are willing to permit small pets such as birds or cats.

A landlord cannot refuse to rent to a blind or otherwise disabled person, or persons licensed to train guide dogs, on the ground that the person must be accompanied by a guide dog, signal dog, or service dog. CC §§54.1(b), 54.2(b). A landlord may, however, establish terms and conditions in the lease or rental agreement that reasonably regulate the presence of such dogs. No public agency that owns and operates rental housing or landlord who is participating in a HUD subsidized program may prohibit the keeping of up to two pets by an elderly person or person requiring supportive services in the housing accommodations. Health & S C §19901.

Both federal and state fair housing laws require landlords to make reasonable accommodations when such accommodations are necessary to afford a disabled tenant equal rights to use and enjoy the property. 42 USC §3604(f)(3)(B); Govt C §12927; CC §54.1(b)(3)(B). Fair housing enforcing agencies and courts have consistently ruled that allowing assistive animals (including companion animals) for disabled tenants is a reasonable accommodation. See, e.g., Auburn Woods I Homeowners Ass'n v FEHC (2004) 121 CA4th 1578, 18 CR3d 669 and 24 CFR §100.204. A landlord is prohibited from charging any kind of fee as a condition of granting such an accommodation, which means no pet deposit, pet rent, or other additional fee may be charged. See Joint Statement of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Department of Justice Reasonable Accommodations Under the Fair Housing Act (#11); see also HUD v Purkett (HUD ALJ 1990) 09-89-1495-1. Additionally, normal pet restrictions (such as type, size and/or breed restrictions) may not be applied. See 24 CFR §100.204. The tenant may, however, be required to sign reasonable rules of conduct for the animal. CC §54.1(b)(6)(B). If the tenant's disability and need for the animal are not obvious, the landlord may request written verification from the tenant's health care provider or other credible party that: a) the tenant meets the California definition of disability; and b) the animal is related to, and needed because of, the disability. See Joint Statement of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Department of Justice Reasonable Accommodations Under the Fair Housing Act (#18). For further discussion on reasonable accommodation, see §§2.26-2.27C, 2.60.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.63 7. Form: Waterbeds

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.63-1 Waterbeds

Tenant may install and maintain a waterbed on the premises only in compliance with all of the following requirements:

Before installation, Tenant will furnish Landlord with a valid waterbed insurance policy or certificate of insurance for property damage. The policy will be issued by a company licensed to do business in California and possessing a Bests Insurance Report rating of "B" or higher. The policy will be maintained in full force and effect until the waterbed is permanently removed from the premises. The policy will be written for no less than $100,000 of coverage, and will cover, up to its policy limits, replacement value of all property damage, including loss of use, incurred by Landlord and caused by or arising out of the ownership, maintenance, use, or removal of the waterbed on the premises only, except for any damage caused intentionally or at the direction of the insured, or for any damage caused by or resulting from fire. Landlord may require Tenant to produce evidence of insurance at any time. The carrier will give Landlord notice of cancellation or nonrenewal 10 days before such action.

The waterbed will conform to the pounds-per-square-foot weight limitation and placement as dictated by the floor load capacity of the residential structure. The weight will be distributed on a pedestal or frame that is substantially the dimensions of the mattress itself.

Tenant will install, maintain, and remove the waterbed, including, but not limited to, the mattress and frame, according to standard methods of installation, maintenance, and removal as prescribed by the manufacturer, retailer, or state law, whichever provides the highest degree of safety. Tenant will notify Landlord in writing of the intent to install, remove, or move the waterbed. The notice will be delivered at least 24 hours before the installation, removal, or movement. Landlord may be present at the time of installation, removal, or movement at Landlord's option. If the waterbed is installed or moved by any person other than Tenant, Tenant will deliver to Landlord a written installation receipt stating the installer's name, address, and business affiliation when appropriate.

Any new waterbed installation will conform to Landlord's reasonable structural specifications for placement within the rented premises and be consistent with floor capacity of Tenant's rental unit.

Tenant will comply with the minimum component specification list prescribed by the manufacturer, retailer, or state law, whichever provides the highest degree of safety.

The waterbed will comply with the rules and regulations governing the quality of bedding construction promulgated by the Bureau of Home Furnishings under Business and Professions Code section 19155 and will display a label declaring compliance with those rules and regulations.

Subject to the notice requirements set forth in this agreement, Landlord will have the right to inspect the waterbed installation on completion, and periodically thereafter, to ensure its conformity with the requirements set forth in this provision. If installation or maintenance is not in conformity with these requirements, Landlord may serve Tenant with a written notice of breach of this agreement. Landlord may give Tenant 3 days either to bring the installation into conformity with these requirements or to remove the waterbed, unless there is an immediate danger to the structure, in which case there will be immediate corrective action.

If Tenant chooses to install a waterbed in accordance with these provisions, Tenant's security deposit will be increased in an amount equal to one half of one month's rent.

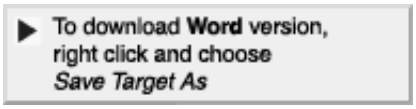
Comment: Civil Code §1940.5 prohibits landlords from refusing to rent to a tenant solely on the basis of the tenant's possession of a waterbed or other bedding with liquid filling material, provided that the tenant meets the requirements of that section, which are incorporated in this provision.

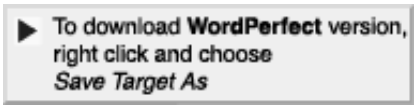
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.64 8. Form: No Automobile Repair

§1.64 8. Form: No Automobile Repair

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.64-1 No automobile repair

Tenant may not repair automobiles, motorcycles, other motor vehicles, or any other heavy machinery, anywhere in the parking area, garage, or driveway, or on any other portion of the property.

Comment: Tenants who repair automobiles or other equipment on the premises may create an eyesore, make noise, or cause damage to the premises. Including a provision that prohibits these activities gives the landlord a potential basis for eviction for a tenant's material breach of the lease. This provision is especially important in a rent-controlled jurisdiction (see §1.31).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.65 N. Form: Tenant's Death or Disability

§1.65 N. Form: Tenant's Death or Disability

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.65-1 Alternative: Death or removal due to disability of tenant of unit not subject to vacancy control

Tenant may not cause this rental agreement to be assigned, either voluntarily or involuntarily. If no cotenant or subtenant previously approved by Landlord in writing remains in the premises after Tenant's death, this rental agreement shall be considered terminated and the premises voluntarily vacated 30 days after the death of Tenant. Any representative of Tenant's estate in possession of the premises during the 30-day period following Tenant's death shall not be considered to be a subtenant approved by Landlord. Any payment of rent during and for the 30-day period shall be considered to be made on behalf of decedent or _ _[his/her]_ _ estate and shall not create a new tenancy.

Should Landlord permit possession of the premises by Tenant's estate or representative or any other person after expiration of the 30th day following Tenant's death, the rent for possession of the premises shall be the maximum amount of rent for the premises that landlord is permitted to charge under applicable law. If that amount is the full fair market rent, then Landlord shall have the right to unilaterally determine that amount. The tenancy will also terminate if Tenant fails to occupy the premises for 30 consecutive days on account of Tenant's disability and no cotenant or subtenant previously approved by Landlord in writing remains in the premises after expiration of the 30-day period.

If there is no authorized representative of Tenant and Tenant dies or becomes so disabled that Tenant can no longer reside, and ceases to reside, in the premises, Tenant hereby authorizes Landlord to enter the premises, to pack Tenant's belongings and personal property, to remove the property from the premises, and to store it. The disposition of said property shall be governed either by Tenant, Tenant's authorized representative, the authorized representative of Tenant's estate, or the provisions of the Civil Code. Landlord shall not be liable for any loss of, or damage to, Tenant's property not caused by Landlord's gross negligence or willful and bad faith conduct, nor shall Landlord be liable in any way to Tenant for entering the premises, taking possession and control of Tenant's property, and removing it.

1.65-2 Alternative: Death or removal due to disability of tenant of unit subject to vacancy control

Tenant may not cause this rental agreement to be assigned, either voluntarily or involuntarily. If no cotenant or subtenant previously approved by Landlord in writing remains in the premises after Tenant's death or removal due to disability, this rental agreement shall be considered terminated and the premises voluntarily vacated 30 days after the death of Tenant. Any representative of Tenant's estate in possession of the premises during the 30-day period following Tenant's death shall not be considered to be a subtenant approved by Landlord. Any payment of rent during and for the 30-day period shall be considered to be made on behalf of decedent or _ _[his/her]_ _ estate and shall not create a new tenancy.

Comment: The issue of whether the death of a tenant terminates a month-to-month tenancy was addressed in Miller & Desatnik Mgmt. Co. v Bullock (1990) 221 CA3d Supp 13, 270 CR 600, a case of first impression. The court interpreted the language of CC §1934 to mean that the death of a tenant in a month-to-month tenancy terminates the tenancy effective 30 days following the tenant's last payment of rent before death. The court then held that a relative who moved into the rental unit after the death without the knowledge or consent of the landlord was not entitled to protection under the local rent control charter amendment. Although the Miller decision should provide some comfort to property owners, landlords should add provisions such as the above to their rental agreements to avoid any uncertainty concerning this issue. For further discussion, see §§7.72, 8.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.66 O. Form: Landlord's Entry on Premises; Notice

§1.66 O. Form: Landlord's Entry on Premises; Notice

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.66-1 Landlord's entry on premises; notice

On not less than 24 hours' advance written notice, or as otherwise required by law, Tenant must make the premises available, at a time acceptable to Tenant during normal business hours _ _[e.g., 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., Monday through Saturday]_ _, for entry by Landlord or _ _[his/her]_ _ agent for the purpose of:

1. Making necessary or agreed-on repairs, decorations, alterations, or improvements;

2. Supplying necessary or agreed-on services;

3. Showing the premises to prospective or actual purchasers, mortgagees, tenants, workers, or contractors, or to make an inspection pursuant to CC §1950.5(f); or

4. Conducting any activity required or permitted by court order.

In the event of an emergency, or if Tenant is present and consents to entry at the time of entry, or after Tenant has abandoned or surrendered the premises, Landlord or _ _[his/her]_ _ agent may enter the premises without giving Tenant prior notice.

1.66-2 Optional addition to 1.66-1: Changing locks

_ _[Landlord/Landlord's agent]_ _ currently has a key to the premises. Tenant may not change the lock or add a lock without Landlord's prior written consent, and without furnishing to _ _[Landlord/Landlord's agent]_ _ a key to the changed or added lock.

Comment: The first paragraph in this clause sets forth some of the requirements of CC §1954 concerning the landlord's right of entry. See full discussion of statutory notice requirements and drafting tips in §§3.2-3.4, 4.43. The landlord might wish to alter the permissible hours of entry to suit his or her particular needs, but CC §1954 specifies that the right of entry applies only during normal business hours unless the tenant consents at the time of entry. On limitations on waiver, see §§1.30, 4.43. Section 1954 also requires that the landlord give written notice of entry in many cases. The notice may be personally delivered to the tenant, left with a person of suitable age and discretion at the premises, or posted on, near, or under the usual entry door of the premises in a manner that a reasonable person would find the notice. The statutory 24 hours is presumed reasonable notice in the absence of evidence to the contrary. If the landlord elects to mail the notice to the tenant, then the landlord should give the tenant 6 days' prior notice to have the benefit of the statutory presumption of reasonable notice by mail.

The notice should include the date, approximate time, and purpose of the entry. For a sample notice, see §3.3A.

The advance notice need not be given if there is an emergency, the tenant is present and consents to entry at the time of entry, or the tenant has abandoned or surrendered the premises. The statute states no other guidelines for when the landlord may enter on less than 24 hours' notice. The landlord may not use the right of entry to harass the tenant. On the remedies available to either landlord or tenant if the other refuses to cooperate, see §3.4.

The optional paragraph is intended to deal with the problem that arises when a tenant decides to change the locks, either to keep the landlord out or for other reasons. The landlord must have a key to the premises for emergencies and in case the tenant vacates. Without this provision, a court might hold that the tenant's failure or refusal to furnish the landlord with a key does not constitute a material breach of the lease. A problem arises for the tenant when the landlord abuses the right of entry. On the remedies available to a tenant who wishes to remain in the premises on such an occasion, see §§3.4, 8.150A, explaining CC §1940.2(a) and other remedies.

WARNING: A common mistake that landlords make is to give a notice to the tenant that the landlord will enter to "inspect" the premises. But CC §1954 does not give the landlord a right to "inspect" the premises. Exceptions to this rule include certain federally subsidized and tax credit programs that mandate periodic inspections of the premises.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/ P. Breach of Covenant/§1.67 1. Form: Covenants Are Material and Reasonable

P. Breach of Covenant

§1.67 1. Form: Covenants Are Material and Reasonable

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.67-1 Covenants are material and reasonable

The parties consider each and every term, covenant, and provision of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ to be material and reasonable.

Comment: The lease or rental agreement should include this clause because some rent control ordinances provide that a violation of a material covenant is a permissible ground for eviction. Under such an ordinance, a dispute could arise about whether the breach on which the landlord seeks to base an eviction is a breach of a material covenant. This provision may prevent that problem. See §§1.31, 4.22.

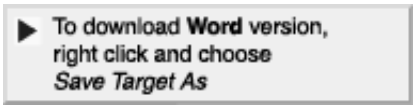
A rent control ordinance may also require that termination be based only on a covenant that is lawful, reasonable, or both. To overcome this problem, this clause states that the parties consider all the terms of the lease or rental agreement to be reasonable. A court is unlikely, however, to hold binding a statement in the lease that the parties consider the terms to be lawful.

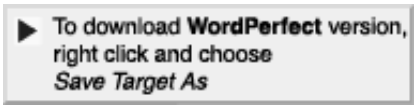
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.68 2. Form: Consequences of Tenant's Breach; Service of Notice

§1.68 2. Form: Consequences of Tenant's Breach; Service of Notice

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.68-1 Consequences of tenant's breach; service of notice

For any breach of a covenant or condition of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _, Landlord may, at _ _[his/her]_ _ option, serve a 3-day notice (1) specifying the nature of the breach, and (2) demanding that Tenant cure the breach if the breach can be cured. The notice may further declare that, if Tenant fails to cure a curable breach within the 3-day period or if the breach is not curable, the tenancy is terminated and Tenant forfeits all rights under this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _.

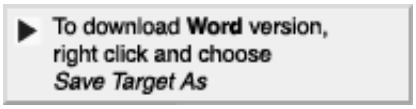
Comment: This clause merely restates the requirements in CCP §1161(3)-(4) for the landlord's termination of the tenancy for a breach of the lease or rental agreement. See §§8.46-8.54. Inclusion is probably unnecessary but may benefit the landlord by spelling out the consequences of the tenant's breach of a covenant of the lease or rental agreement.

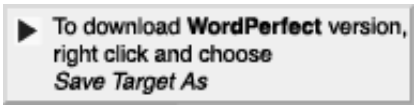
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.69 Q. Form: Misrepresentation in Tenant's Application

§1.69 Q. Form: Misrepresentation in Tenant's Application

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.69-1 Misrepresentation in tenant's application

Tenant's rental application _ _[, date of application,/on the reverse side of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _]_ _ is hereby incorporated in and made a part of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _. Any material misrepresentation or omission made by Tenant in the application will constitute a material breach of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _.

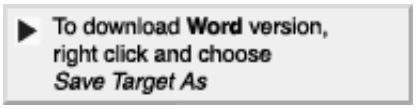
Comment: Many landlords now insist that tenants complete an application, and they select tenants on the basis of the information in those applications, especially information pertaining to the tenant's ability to pay the rent. Under this clause, the landlord would be able to evict the tenant if it later becomes known that the tenant provided false information in the rental application.

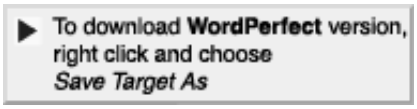
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.70 R. Form: Malicious Holding Over; Statutory Damages

§1.70 R. Form: Malicious Holding Over; Statutory Damages

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.70-1 Malicious holding over; statutory damages

If Tenant maliciously remains in possession of the premises after expiration of the tenancy, or on termination of the tenancy, Landlord may recover statutory damages of up to $600, in addition to rent due and any other actual damages.

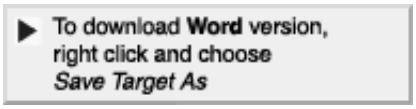
Comment: This clause restates CCP §1174(b); its inclusion may benefit landlords by spelling out to tenants their liability for damages under the statute.

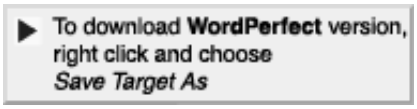
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.71 S. Form: Personal Property Remaining on Premises

§1.71 S. Form: Personal Property Remaining on Premises

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.71-1 Personal property remaining on premises

After Tenant vacates the premises, either by expiration of the term or on termination of the tenancy, Landlord must give the notices required by law concerning disposition of any personal property of Tenant that remains on the premises. Tenant is responsible for all reasonable costs of storing such personal property. The property will be released to Tenant or its rightful owner only after Tenant or the rightful owner pays to landlord the reasonable costs of storage within the time required by law.

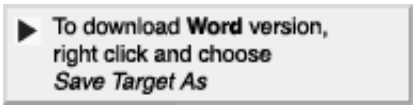
Comment: Disposition of the tenant's personal property remaining on the premises is governed by CC §§1980-1991. CCP §1174(e)-(m). For discussion of the operation of these provisions, see §§8.154-8.161. Note that the landlord may charge only the reasonable cost of storing the property as a condition of the return of the property. CC §1983(b). The landlord may not attempt to recover back rent or other charges (even if reduced to judgment) as a condition to return of the tenant's property. See Love v Keays (1971) 6 C3d 339, 98 CR 811; Gray v Whitmore (1971) 17 CA3d 1, 94 CR 904.

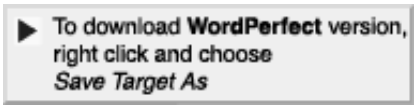
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.72 T. Form: Possession of Premises

§1.72 T. Form: Possession of Premises

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.72-1 Possession of premises

If Landlord is unable to deliver possession of the premises to Tenant at the commencement of the term specified in this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _, Landlord will not be liable for any damage caused thereby, nor will this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ be void or voidable. Landlord will take reasonable steps to obtain possession of the premises from previous tenants or occupants. Tenant will not be liable for any rent, however, until the date that possession is actually delivered. Tenant may terminate this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ if Landlord fails to deliver possession of the premises within _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days of commencement of the specified term.

Comment: This clause addresses the problem that arises when the landlord cannot deliver possession of the premises, either because the previous tenant refuses to vacate, or because necessary work on the premises is not complete. A tenant with any bargaining power might balk at the inclusion of such a provision precluding recovery of damages for a delay in receiving possession of the premises. In any case, the tenant should be permitted to withdraw from the agreement if the landlord does not deliver possession within a reasonably short time after the term was to commence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.73 U. Form: Tenant's Termination for Cause Under Fixed-Term Lease

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.73-1 Tenant's termination for cause under fixed-term lease

On service of 30 days' written notice, Tenant may, for good cause, terminate this lease and vacate the premises. Good cause for termination, which must be specified in the notice, means circumstances beyond Tenant's control that force _ _[him/her]_ _ to vacate the premises, including but not limited to entry on active duty with U.S. military services and employment in another community.

Comment: This clause permits the tenant to terminate a fixed-term lease when circumstances arise that are essentially beyond the tenant's control and relate to the tenant's ability to continue to reside in that community.

NOTE: Many leases contain what has become known as a "military clause." This is especially true in communities with a large military presence where landlords desire to attract military clientele. In December 2003, the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA) was enacted into law by the federal government (50 USC App §§501-596) (Pub L 108-189, 117 Stat 2835). It supersedes the previous Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940. It applies to all military servicemembers and their dependents, whether they entered military service before or after signing a lease agreement. The law allows a servicemember to terminate a lease agreement on 30 days' written notice, along with a copy of orders showing that the servicemember is going to be deployed for a period of over 90 days or has received a permanent change of duty station. The servicemember is then liable for rental payments from the date notice is given by the servicemember up to the next rental due date, plus 30 days. 50 USC App §535. Under California law, a landlord may collect only 45 days' worth of rent when a lease is terminated due to military service. Mil & V C §409(b). Because the amount of rent for which a servicemember is liable when terminating a lease under the SCRA is sometimes more stringent than the typical "military clause" contained in most lease agreements, landlord attorneys should make their clients aware of the SCRA.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.74 V. Form: Attorney Fees

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.74-1 Attorney fees

In any legal action brought by either party to enforce the terms of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _, the prevailing party is entitled to all costs incurred in connection with such an action, including reasonable attorney fees.

Comment: Attorney fees are not recoverable in an action to enforce the terms of the lease or rental agreement unless expressly provided for in the lease or agreement. CCP §1021. If the agreement contains an attorney fee clause, however worded, it must be interpreted reciprocally to permit either party who prevails to recover attorney fees. CC §1717. Counsel involved in negotiating a lease with an attorney fee clause should be familiar with Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 71 CR2d 830, discussed in §13.27.

An attorney fee clause might deter some tenants from conducting an extensive defense to an unlawful detainer action, knowing that they will be liable for the landlord's attorney fees if they lose. Judgment-proof tenants, however, may not be deterred by such a threat. See §4.42. Moreover, inclusion of such a clause opens the door for a prevailing tenant's recovery of attorney fees from the landlord. For discussion of these and other issues, see §§13.25-13.33C. See also California Attorney Fee Awards (2d ed Cal CEB 1994).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.75 W. Form: No Waiver

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.75-1 No waiver

Waiver by either party of a breach of any covenant of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ will not constitute a continuing waiver of any subsequent breach. Landlord's receipt of rent with knowledge of Tenant's violation of a covenant does not waive Landlord's right to enforce any covenant of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _. No waiver by either party of a provision of this _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ will be considered to have been made unless expressed in writing and signed by all parties.

Comment: This clause is designed to preclude a claim of waiver or estoppel by either party following the other party's breach. The second sentence is intended to allow the landlord to continue to collect rent while demanding that the tenant remedy a violation. In some instances, the landlord's acceptance of rent probably constitutes a waiver of the breach. For example, the landlord's acceptance of rent may waive the right to object to nonpayment of rent (see §§8.43-8.45), and acceptance after service of a 30-day notice to terminate a month-to-month tenancy may waive the notice (see §8.75) if the rent covers any time after expiration of the notice.

Although the courts will give effect to a lease provision that acceptance of rent does not waive a breach, the landlord may be estopped from relying on the provision if his or her conduct leads the tenant to believe that strict compliance with the lease covenant in question would not be required. See Salton Community Servs. Dist. v Southard (1967) 256 CA2d 526, 531, 64 CR 246. See discussion of waiver and estoppel in §8.49.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.76 X. Form: Service of Notices

§1.76 X. Form: Service of Notices

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.76-1 Alternative: Service of notices—no manager of premises

For the purpose of service of process and service of notices and demands, Tenant's address is _ _[address of _ _[premises/other residence]_ _]_ _.

Notices, demands, and service of process for Landlord may be served on _ _[Landlord/Landlord's Agent/other person authorized to accept service on Landlord's behalf]_ _ at the following street address and telephone number: _ _[specify]_ _.

Comment: Several trial courts have interpreted CCP §1162 to mean that a landlord has to attempt service of notices to a tenant at his or her place of employment before utilizing the post and mail method of service. Such an interpretation may render the above lease provision meaningless.

1.76-2 Alternative: Service of notices—premises has manager

For the purpose of service of process and service of notices and demands, Tenant's address is _ _[address of _ _[premises/other residence]_ _]_ _.

Notices, demands, and service of process for Landlord may be served on _ _[Landlord/ Landlord's Agent/manager/other person authorized to accept service on Landlord's behalf]_ _ at the following street address and telephone number: _ _[specify]_ _.

_ _[Name of manager]_ _ is the person authorized to manage the premises, and _ _[his/her]_ _ usual street address and telephone number is: _ _[specify]_ _.

Comment: The second and third paragraphs are required by CC §1962(a)(1) for a lease or rental agreement of a dwelling structure containing one or more units. If a person is authorized to manage the premises, his or her name, address, and telephone number must also be included in the lease or rental agreement. CC §1962(a)(1). If this information is not included in the agreement, it must be posted on the premises in the elevator or another conspicuous place. CC §1962.5. The clause that governs the manner of payment of rent and the address for payment is in §1.40.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.77 Y. Form: Lead Disclosure

§1.77 Y. Form: Lead Disclosure

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.77-1 Lead disclosure

_ _[Check if following statement applies]_ _ Lead Disclosure: If checked, the Premises were built before 1978 and the following must be completed by the landlord, tenant, and real estate agent, if any.

LEAD WARNING STATEMENT

Housing built before 1978 may contain lead-based paint. Lead from paint, paint chips, and dust can pose health hazards if not managed properly. Lead exposure is especially harmful to young children and pregnant women. Before renting housing built before 1978 landlords must disclose the presence of known lead-based paint and/or lead-based paint or other lead-based hazards in the dwelling. Tenants must also receive a federally approved pamphlet on lead poisoning prevention.

LANDLORD'S DISCLOSURE

_ _[Initial to show accord]_ _ Landlord has no knowledge of lead-based paint and/or lead-based paint hazards in the Premises. Landlord has no reports or records pertaining to lead-based paint and/or lead-based paint hazards in the premises.

REAL ESTATE AGENT'S ACKNOWLEDGMENT

_ _[Initial to show accord]_ _ Real Estate Agent has informed the landlord of the landlord's obligations under 42 USC §4852d and is aware of his/her responsibility to ensure compliance.

OWNER'S AND AGENT'S ACKNOWLEDGMENT

The following parties/agents have reviewed the information above and certify, to the best of their knowledge, that the information they have provided is true and correct.

Landlord: __[signature of landlord]__; Dated: _ _[date]_ _
Real Estate Agent: __[signature of agent]__; Dated: _ _[date]_ _

TENANT'S ACKNOWLEDGMENT

Tenant has received the above-stated Lead Warning Statement and Landlord's Disclosure and has received the pamphlet "Protect Your Family from Lead in Your Home." Tenant further certifies, to the best of Tenant's knowledge, that this statement is true and correct.

Tenant: __[signature of tenant]__; Dated: _ _[date]_ _

Comment: Most of the time this disclosure form is an addendum or attachment to the rental agreement or lease because it must be separately signed and acknowledged. Some owners do not want their names known to their tenants because they have employed property managers to represent the ownership interests. Therefore, lead disclosure requirements might be satisfied by having the real estate agents acknowledge that they have informed the landlords of their lead-based paint hazard responsibilities and have knowledgeable representatives of the landlords sign the disclosure acknowledgments that are given to the tenants. The California Association of Realtors Form FLD-11: Lead-Based Paint and Lead-Based Paint Hazards Disclosure also may be used. For discussion of disclosure requirements,

see §§1.29, 4.37.

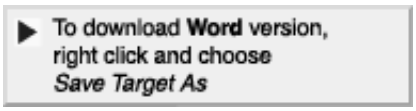
© The Regents of the University of California

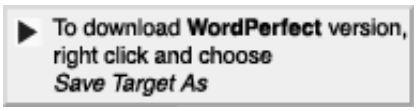
Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/ Z. Concluding Paragraphs/§1.78 1. Form: Entire Agreement

Z. Concluding Paragraphs

§1.78 1. Form: Entire Agreement

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.





1.78-1 Entire agreement

This _ _[lease/rental agreement]_ _ contains all of the agreements of the parties _ _[except _ _[specify]_ _]_ _ and cannot be amended or modified except by written agreement.

Comment: This clause is designed to prevent either party from later claiming rights under other agreements between the parties. Although CC §1625 provides that execution of a written contract supersedes all stipulations that preceded it, this clause emphasizes that the parties intend that the lease or rental agreement is fully integrated and includes all agreements between them. If there are side agreements, they may be stated under the optional provision for exceptions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.79 2. Form: Signatures

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§1.37-1.79.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

1.79-1 Signatures

__[Signature of Landlord]__

_ _[Typed name of Landlord]_ _

__[Signature of Tenant]__

_ _[Typed name of Tenant]_ _

__[Signature of Owner's Agent]__
_ _[Typed name of Owner's Agent]_ _

__[Signature of Tenant]__
_ _[Typed name of Tenant]_ _

Comment: Any written lease or rental agreement should be executed by the parties. A lease with a term longer than one year must be in writing and must be signed by the parties. CC §§1091, 1624; CCP §1971. If a lease or rental agreement with a term longer than one year is signed by an agent, the agent's written authority must be signed by the principal. CC §1624(a)(3). A party's signature may be handwritten, typed, printed, or stamped, and consist of his or her full name or initials, as long as it is intended as the execution. Weiner v Mullaney (1943) 59 CA2d 620, 140 P2d 704. (On the need for a lease or rental agreement to be in writing, see §1.13.) For further discussion, see California Real Property Sales Transactions §§4.71-4.75 (4th ed Cal CEB 2007).

The persons executing the lease or rental agreement should indicate their capacities (e.g., husband and wife, joint tenants) and any entities that they represent (e.g., a corporation, a partnership) in connection with their signatures and typed names, and should use the appropriate introductory clause alternative in §1.37. For corporate and partnership signature blocks, see Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 39 (Cal CEB 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.80 V. SAMPLE RESIDENTIAL LEASES AND RENTAL AGREEMENTS

Sample residential lease and rental agreement forms are set forth in §§1.81-1.84 to provide illustrations of printed forms drafted from different perspectives. Their inclusion here is meant to be illustrative, and CEB takes no position on their respective merits. As discussed in §1.12, sound practice usually calls for custom drafting, even of residential leases, and the form lease provisions in §§1.37-1.79 are intended to assist the attorney in tailoring a lease to the client's needs. The California Apartment Association (CAA), the National Housing Law Project, the California Association of Realtors, and Professional Publishing are to be commended for their cooperation in permitting reproduction of their form leases. See also CAA's sample inspection checklists in §§1.25-1.26.

The California Apartment Association is a statewide association of owners of rental real property. It publishes forms for many commonly encountered landlord-tenant situations, in addition to the form leases reprinted in §§1.81-1.82. See, e.g., the inspection checklist in §1.25. The various forms published by CAA are drafted primarily to benefit its membership, which consists of apartment owners. For information on how to receive CAA forms, apartment owners may contact CAA at its statewide headquarters. See the Directory for address and phone numbers.

The National Housing Law Project was established in 1968 to provide back-up assistance to legal services attorneys on issues relating to publicly assisted and privately owned housing, including all aspects of landlord-tenant law. It primarily focuses on publicly subsidized housing matters rather than private ones, and also publishes books and periodicals of interest to attorneys active in the housing field. See, e.g., National Housing Law Project, HUD Housing Programs: Tenants' Rights (3d ed 2004). Attorneys interested in information from the Project may view its web page or contact it at the address listed in the Directory. See Directory also for the web and mailing addresses of the California Association of Realtors and the Professional Publishing organization, whose respective preprinted leases are reproduced in §§1.83-1.84.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.81 A. Form: Rental Agreement (Month-to-Month) (California Apartment Association Form 2.0)

§1.81 A. Form: Rental Agreement (Month-to-Month) (California Apartment Association Form 2.0)

RENTAL AGREEMENT (Month-to-Month)

THIS AGREEMENT is made and entered into this _____ day of _____, _____ between
(Day) (Month) (Year)

_____"Owner/Agent", whose address and phone
(Name of Owner/Agent)

number are _____,
(Address and Telephone of Owner/Agent)

and _____ "Resident."

THE PARTIES AGREE AS FOLLOWS:

1. RENTAL UNIT: Subject to the terms and conditions of this Agreement, Owner rents to Resident and Resident rents from Owner, for residential use only,

   the premises located at: _____, Unit # (if applicable),_____
   (Street Address)
   _____CA, _____
   (City) (Zip)

   on a month-to-month term.

2. RENT: Rent is due in advance on the _____ day of each and every month, at $_____ per month, beginning on

   _____, payable at _____. Payments made in person may be (Date) (Address where payments should be delivered)

   delivered to Owner/Agent between the hours of _____ and _____ on the following days of the week:
   ❒ Monday ❒ Tuesday ❒ Wednesday ❒Thursday ❒ Friday ❒ Saturday ❒ Sunday

   ❒ Other _____

   Acceptable methods of payment:
   ❒ Personal Check ❒ Cashier's Check ❒ Money Order ❒ EFT/Credit (see Owner/Agent for details) and ❒ Cash

   If rent is paid after the _____ of the month, there will be a late charge of $_____ assessed. The parties agree that this late fee is presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by late payment of rent. It would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage. This sum represents a reasonable endeavor by the Owner/Agent to estimate fair average compensation for any loss that may be sustained as a result of late payment of rent. Pursuant to California law, if Resident passes a check on insufficient funds, Resident will be liable to Owner/Agent for the amount of the check and a service charge of $ _____, not to exceed $25 for the first check passed on insufficient funds, and $35 for each subsequent check passed on insufficient funds.

3. SECURITY DEPOSIT: Resident shall deposit with Owner/Agent, as a security deposit, the sum of $_____
   ❒prior to taking possession of the unit _____or ❒ no later than _____.
   Resident shall not use the security deposit to pay any month's rent. Owner/Agent may withhold from the security deposit only such amounts as are reasonably necessary to remedy Resident defaults including, but not limited to, the following:
   (a) defaults in the payment of rent,
   (b) to repair damages to the premises caused by Resident, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear, and/or
   (c) to clean the premises, if necessary, upon termination of the tenancy in order to return the unit to the same level of cleanliness it was in at the inception of the tenancy, and/or
   (d) to restore, replace, or return personal property or appurtenances, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear.

   No later than 21 calendar days after Owner/Agent has regained possession of the premises, Owner/Agent shall return any remaining portion of such security deposit to Resident.

4. UTILITIES: Resident shall pay for all utilities, services and charges, if any, made payable by or predicated upon occupancy of Resident, except: _____

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

Print

5. CASH PAYMENT: The Owner/Agent may demand or require cash as the exclusive form of payment of rent or deposit of security if the tenant has previously attempted to pay the Owner/Agent with a check drawn on insufficient funds or the tenant has instructed the drawee to stop payment on a check, draft, or order for the payment of money. If the Owner/Agent chooses to demand or require cash payment under these circumstances, the Owner/Agent shall give the Resident a written notice stating that the payment instrument was dishonored and informing the Resident that the Resident shall pay in cash for a period determined by Owner/Agent, not to exceed three months, and attach a copy of the dishonored instrument to the notice.

6. TERMINATION: Except as prohibited by law, this Agreement may be terminated by Resident after service upon the Owner/Agent of a written 30-day notice of termination of tenancy. Except as prohibited by law, this Agreement may be terminated by the Owner/Agent by service upon the Resident of a written 60-day notice of termination of tenancy. However, Civil Code Section 1946.1 provides that "if any tenant or resident has resided in the dwelling for less than one year", the Owner/Agent may terminate this Agreement by service upon the Resident of a written 30-day notice. Any holding over thereafter shall result in Resident being liable to Owner/Agent for daily rental damages equal to the current fair rental value of the unit, divided by 30.

7. OCCUPANTS: Premises shall be occupied only by the following named person(s):

_____	_____	_____	_____
Name	Birthdate	Name	Birthdate
_____	_____	_____	_____
Name	Birthdate	Name	Birthdate

8. PROHIBITIONS: Without Owner/Agent's prior written permission as an addendum to this Agreement, no pets, no waterbeds or _____ shall be kept or allowed in or about the premises.

9. QUIET ENJOYMENT: Resident shall not violate any criminal or civil law, ordinance or statute in the use and occupancy of the premises, commit waste or nuisance, annoy, molest or interfere with any other Resident or neighbor. Any such action may result in the immediate termination of this Agreement as provided herein and by law.

10. REPAIRS AND ALTERATIONS: Except as provided by law, no repairs, decorating or alterations shall be done by Resident without Owner/ Agent's prior written consent. Resident shall notify Owner/Agent in writing of any repairs or alterations contemplated. Decorations include, but are not limited to, painting and wallpapering. Resident shall hold Owner/Agent harmless and indemnify Owner/Agent as to any mechanics lien recordation or proceeding caused by Resident. Resident may not make any alterations to cable or telephone inside wiring (such as may occur when changing telecommunications providers or adding phone lines) without prior written consent of the Owner/Agent. The notice shall include the name, address, and telephone number of any new telecommunication provider. Resident agrees to pay all costs resulting from the alteration and agrees to pay to the Owner/Agent any costs associated with restoring the inside wiring to the condition at the time of move-in, except for reasonable wear and tear.

11. ACCEPTANCE OF PREMISES: Resident has inspected the premises, furnishings and equipment, and has found them to be satisfactory. All plumbing, heating and electrical systems are operative and deemed satisfactory.

12. CARE, CLEANING, MAINTENANCE AND INSURANCE: Resident agrees to leave the premises in the same condition as it was received, subject to normal wear and tear. Except as prohibited by law, Resident shall keep the premises and furniture, furnishings and appliances, and fixtures, which are rented for Resident's exclusive use, in good order and condition. Upon move-out, Resident agrees to return the unit to the same level of cleanliness it was in at the inception of the tenancy. Resident ❒ is ❒ is not (check one) responsible for the upkeep of the yard and landscaping. Resident shall pay Owner/Agent for costs to repair, replace or rebuild any portion of the premises damaged by the Resident, Resident's guests or invitees. Resident's property is not insured by Owner/Agent. Resident is not a co-insured and is expressly excluded from any insurance policy held by Owner/Agent which is now in effect or becomes effective during the term of this Agreement.

13. WAIVER OF BREACH: The waiver of either party of any breach shall not be construed to be a continuing waiver of any subsequent breach. The receipt by Owner/Agent of the rent with the knowledge of any violation of a covenant or condition hereto shall not be deemed a waiver of such breach. No waiver by either party of the provisions herein shall be deemed to have been made unless expressed in writing and signed by all parties to this Rental Agreement.

14. JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY: The undersigned Resident(s), whether or not in actual possession of the premises, are jointly and severally liable for all obligations under this Rental Agreement, and shall indemnify Owner/Agent for liability arising prior to the termination of the Rental Agreement for personal injuries or property damage caused or permitted by Resident(s), their guests and invitees. This does not waive "Owner/ Agent's duty of care" to prevent personal injury or property damage where that duty is imposed by law.

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

Print

15. ENTRY: California law allows Owner/Agent or his/her employee(s) to enter the premises for certain purposes during normal business hours. The Owner/Agent will provide written notice to the Resident prior to the entry of the dwelling unit whenever required by state law. (Civil Code Section 1954.) Resident's non-compliance with Owner/Agent's lawful request for entry is a material breach of this Agreement that may be cause for immediate termination as provided herein and by law.

16. SUBLETTING AND ASSIGNMENT: No portion of the premises shall be sublet nor this Agreement assigned. Any attempted subletting or assignment by Resident shall, at the election of Owner/Agent, be an irremediable breach of this Agreement and cause for immediate termination as provided herein and by law.

17. SALE OF PROPERTY: In the event of the sale or refinance of the property: If Owner/Agent presents to Resident a "Resident's Certification of Terms - Estoppel Certification," or other similar Estoppel Certification form, Resident agrees to execute and deliver the certificate acknowledging that this Agreement is unmodified and in full force and effect, or in full force and effect as modified with the consent of Owner/Agent, and stating the modifications, within ten (10) days of written notice. Failure to comply shall be deemed Resident's acknowledgement that the certificate as submitted by Owner/Agent is true and correct and may be relied upon by any lender or purchaser.

18. SMOKE DETECTION DEVICE: The premises are equipped with a functioning smoke detection device(s), and Resident shall be responsible for testing the device weekly and immediately reporting any problems, maintenance or need for repairs to Owner/Agent. If battery operated, Resident is responsible for changing the detector's battery as necessary. Owner/Agent shall have a right to enter the premises to check and maintain the smoke detection device as provided by law.

19. NOTICE: Pursuant to Section 290.46 of the Penal Code, information about specified registered sex offenders is made available to the public via an Internet Web site maintained by the Department of Justice at www.meganslaw.ca.gov. Depending on an offender's criminal history, this information will include either the address at which the offender resides or the community of residence and ZIP Code in which he or she resides.

20. ADDENDA: By initialing as provided, Resident acknowledges receipt of the following applicable addenda, as indicated, copies of which are attached hereto, and are incorporated as part of this Agreement.

____Resident Policies Addendum	____Smoke Detector Addendum	____C C & Rs
____Move-In/Move-Out Itemization	____Pet Addendum	____Drug Free Housing Addendum
____Pest Control Notice Addendum	____Asbestos Addendum	____Proposition 65 Brochure
____Satellite Addendum	____Lead Disclosure Addendum	____Other: _____
____Pool Rules Addendum	____Mold Notification Addendum	____Other: _____

21. ENTIRE AGREEMENT: This Agreement, which includes all attachments referred to above, constitutes the entire Agreement between the parties and cannot be modified except in writing and signed by all parties, except as permitted by applicable law. Neither Owner/Agent, nor any agent or employee of Owner/Agent has made any representations or promises other than those set forth herein.

22. CREDIT REPORTS: A negative credit report reflecting on your credit history may be submitted to a credit reporting agency if you fail to fulfill the terms of your credit obligations. Resident expressly authorizes Owner/Agent (including a collection agency) to obtain Resident's consumer credit report, which Owner/Agent may use if attempting to collect past due rent payments, late fees, or other charges from Resident, both during the term of the Agreement and thereafter.

23. ATTORNEYS' FEES: If any legal action or proceeding is brought by either party to enforce any part of this Agreement, the prevailing party shall recover, in addition to all other relief, reasonable attorneys' fees and court costs, unless one of the following two boxes is checked:
❒ the prevailing party shall recover, in addition to all other relief, attorneys' fees not to exceed $_____, plus court costs.
or ❒ each party shall be responsible for their own attorneys' fees and court costs.

The undersigned Resident(s) acknowledge(s) having read and understood the foregoing, and receipt of a duplicate original.

_____	_____	_____	_____
Date	Resident	Date	Resident
_____	_____	_____	_____
Date	Resident	Date	Resident
_____	_____
Date	Owner/Agent

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.82 B. Form: Lease Agreement (California Apartment Association Form 2.1)

§1.82 B. Form: Lease Agreement (California Apartment Association Form 2.1)

LEASE AGREEMENT

THIS AGREEMENT is made and entered into this _____ day of _____, _____ between
(Day) (Month) (Year)

_____"Owner/Agent", whose address and phone
(Name of Owner/Agent)

number are _____,
(Address and Telephone of Owner/Agent)

and _____ "Resident."

THE PARTIES AGREE AS FOLLOWS:

1. RENTAL UNIT: Subject to the terms and conditions of this Agreement, Owner rents to Resident and Resident rents from Owner, for residential use only,

   the premises located at: _____, Unit # (if applicable)_____,
   (Street Address)

   _____CA, _____
   (City) (Zip)

2. RENT: Rent is due in advance on the _____ day of each and every month, at $_____ per month, beginning on

   _____, payable at _____. Payments made in person may be (Date) (Address where payments should be delivered)

   delivered to Owner/Agent between the hours of _____ and _____ on the following days of the week:
   ❒ Monday ❒ Tuesday ❒ Wednesday ❒Thursday ❒ Friday ❒ Saturday ❒ Sunday
   ❒ Other _____

   Acceptable methods of payment:
   ❒ Personal Check ❒ Cashier's Check ❒ Money Order ❒ EFT/Credit (see Owner/Agent for details) and ❒ Cash

   If rent is paid after the _____ of the month, there will be a late charge of $_____ assessed. The parties agree that this late fee is presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by late payment of rent. It would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage. This sum represents a reasonable endeavor by the Owner/Agent to estimate fair average compensation for any loss that may be sustained as a result of late payment of rent. Pursuant to California law, if Resident passes a check on insufficient funds, Resident will be liable to Owner/Agent for the amount of the check and a service charge of $ _____, not to exceed $25 for the first check passed on insufficient funds, and $35 for each subsequent check passed on insufficient funds.

3. SECURITY DEPOSIT: Resident shall deposit with Owner/Agent, as a security deposit, the sum of $_____
   ❒ prior to taking possession of the unit or ❒ no later than _____ (check one).

   Resident shall not use the security deposit to pay any month's rent. Owner/Agent may withhold from the security deposit only such amounts as are reasonably necessary to remedy Resident defaults including, but not limited to, the following:
   (a) defaults in the payment of rent,
   (b) to repair damages to the premises caused by Resident, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear, and/or
   (c) to clean the premises, if necessary, upon termination of the tenancy in order to return the unit to the same level of cleanliness it was in at the inception of the tenancy, and/or
   (d) to restore, replace, or return personal property or appurtenances, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear.
   No later than 21 calendar days after Owner/Agent has regained possession of the premises, Owner/Agent shall return any remaining portion of such security deposit to Resident.

4. TERM: The term of this Agreement is for _____, beginning on _____ and ending on _____ , at which time this (Term) (Date) (Date)
   Lease shall terminate without further notice. Any holding over thereafter shall result in Resident being liable to Owner/Agent for daily rental damages equal to the current market value of the unit, divided by 30. A "month-to-month" tenancy subject to the terms and conditions of this agreement shall be created only if Owner/Agent accepts rent from Resident thereafter, and if so accepted, tenancy may be terminated by Resident after service upon the Owner/Agent of a written 30-day Notice of Termination. Except as prohibited by law, that month-to-month tenancy may be terminated by the Owner/Agent by service upon the Resident of a written 60-day notice of termination of tenancy. However, Civil Code Section 1946.1 provides that "if any tenant or resident has resided in the dwelling for less than one year", the Owner/Agent may terminate the tenancy by service upon the Resident of a written 30-day notice.

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

Print

5. UTILITIES: Resident shall pay for all utilities, services and charges, if any, made payable by or predicated upon occupancy of Resident, except: _____

6. CASH PAYMENT: The Owner/Agent may demand or require cash as the exclusive form of payment of rent or deposit of security if the tenant has previously attempted to pay the Owner/Agent with a check drawn on insufficient funds or the tenant has instructed the drawee to stop payment on a check, draft, or order for the payment of money. If the Owner/Agent chooses to demand or require cash payment under these circumstances, the Owner/Agent shall give the Resident a written notice stating that the payment instrument was dishonored and informing the Resident that the Resident shall pay in cash for a period determined by Owner/Agent, not to exceed three months, and attach a copy of the dishonored instrument to the notice.

7. OCCUPANTS: Premises shall be occupied only by the following named person(s):

Name	Birthdate	Name	Birthdate
Name	Birthdate	Name	Birthdate

8. PROHIBITIONS: Without Owner/Agent's prior written permission as an addendum to this Agreement, no pets, no waterbeds or _____ shall be kept or allowed in or about the premises.

9. QUIET ENJOYMENT: Resident shall not violate any criminal or civil law, ordinance or statute in the use and occupancy of the premises, commit waste or nuisance, annoy, molest or interfere with any other Resident or neighbor. Any such action may result in the immediate termination of this Agreement as provided herein and by law.

10. REPAIRS AND ALTERATIONS: Except as provided by law, no repairs, decorating or alterations shall be done by Resident without Owner/ Agent's prior written consent. Resident shall notify Owner/Agent in writing of any repairs or alterations contemplated. Decorations include, but are not limited to, painting and wallpapering. Resident shall hold Owner/Agent harmless and indemnify Owner/Agent as to any mechanics lien recordation or proceeding caused by Resident. Resident may not make any alterations to cable or telephone inside wiring (such as may occur when changing telecommunications providers or adding phone lines) without prior written consent of the Owner/Agent. The notice shall include the name, address, and telephone number of any new telecommunication provider. Resident agrees to pay all costs resulting from the alteration and agrees to pay to the Owner/Agent any costs associated with restoring the inside wiring to the condition at the time of move-in, except for reasonable wear and tear.

11. ACCEPTANCE OF PREMISES: Resident has inspected the premises, furnishings and equipment, and has found them to be satisfactory. All plumbing, heating and electrical systems are operative and deemed satisfactory.

12. CARE, CLEANING, MAINTENANCE AND INSURANCE: Resident agrees to leave the premises in the same condition as it was received, subject to normal wear and tear. Except as prohibited by law, Resident shall keep the premises and furniture, furnishings and appliances, and fixtures, which are rented for Resident's exclusive use, in good order and condition. Upon move-out, Resident agrees to return the unit to the same level of cleanliness it was in at the inception of the tenancy. Resident ❒ is ❒ is not (check one) responsible for the upkeep of the yard and landscaping. Resident shall pay Owner/Agent for costs to repair, replace or rebuild any portion of the premises damaged by the Resident, Resident's guests or invitees. Resident's property is not insured by Owner/Agent. Resident is not a co-insured and is expressly excluded from any insurance policy held by Owner/Agent which is now in effect or becomes effective during the term of this Agreement.

13. WAIVER OF BREACH: The waiver of either party of any breach shall not be construed to be a continuing waiver of any subsequent breach. The receipt by Owner/Agent of the rent with the knowledge of any violation of a covenant or condition hereto shall not be deemed a waiver of such breach. No waiver by either party of the provisions herein shall be deemed to have been made unless expressed in writing and signed by all parties to this Rental Agreement.

14. JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY: The undersigned Resident(s), whether or not in actual possession of the premises, are jointly and severally liable for all obligations under this Rental Agreement, and shall indemnify Owner/Agent for liability arising prior to the termination of the Rental Agreement for personal injuries or property damage caused or permitted by Resident(s), their guests and invitees. This does not waive "Owner/Agent's duty of care" to prevent personal injury or property damage where that duty is imposed by law.

15. ENTRY: California law allows Owner/Agent or his/her employee(s) to enter the premises for certain purposes during normal business hours. The Owner/Agent will provide written notice to the Resident prior to the entry of the dwelling unit whenever required by state law. (Civil Code Section 1954.) Resident's non-compliance with Owner/Agent's lawful request for entry is a material breach of this Agreement that may be cause for immediate termination as provided herein and by law.

16. SUBLETTING AND ASSIGNMENT: No portion of the premises shall be sublet nor this Agreement assigned. Any attempted

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

Print

subletting or assignment by Resident shall, at the election of Owner/Agent, be an irremediable breach of this Agreement and cause for immediate termination as provided herein and by law.

17. BREACH OF LEASE: In the event that Resident breaches this Lease Agreement, Owner/Agent shall be allowed at Owner/Agent's discretion, but not by way of limitation, to exercise any or all remedies provided Owner/Agent by California Civil Code Section 1951.2 and 1951.4. Damages Owner/Agent "may recover" include the worth at the time of the award of the amount by which the unpaid rent for the balance of the term after the time of award, or for any shorter period of time specified in the Lease Agreement, exceeds the amount of such rental loss for the same period that the Resident proves could be reasonably avoided.

18. SALE OF PROPERTY: In the event of the sale or refinance of the property: If Owner/Agent presents to Resident a "Resident's Certification of Terms - Estoppel Certification," or other similar Estoppel Certification form, Resident agrees to execute and deliver the certificate acknowledging that this Agreement is unmodified and in full force and effect, or in full force and effect as modified with the consent of Owner/Agent, and stating the modifications, within ten (10) days of written notice. Failure to comply shall be deemed Resident's acknowledgement that the certificate as submitted by Owner/Agent is true and correct and may be relied upon by any lender or purchaser.

19. SMOKE DETECTION DEVICE: The premises are equipped with a functioning smoke detection device(s), and Resident shall be responsible for testing the device weekly and immediately reporting any problems, maintenance or need for repairs to Owner/Agent. If battery operated, Resident is responsible for changing the detector's battery as necessary. Owner/Agent shall have a right to enter the premises to check and maintain the smoke detection device as provided by law.

20. NOTICE: Pursuant to Section 290.46 of the Penal Code, information about specified registered sex offenders is made available to the public via an Internet Web site maintained by the Department of Justice at www.meganslaw.ca.gov. Depending on an offender's criminal history, this information will include either the address at which the offender resides or the community of residence and ZIP Code in which he or she resides.

21. ADDENDA: By initialing as provided, Resident acknowledges receipt of the following applicable addenda, as indicated, copies of which are attached hereto, and are incorporated as part of this Agreement.

____Resident Policies Addendum	____Smoke Detector Addendum	____C C & Rs
____Move-In/Move-Out Itemization	____Pet Addendum	____Drug Free Housing Addendum
____Pest Control Notice Addendum	____Asbestos Addendum	____Proposition 65 Brochure
____Satellite Addendum	____Lead Disclosure Addendum	____Other: _____
____Pool Rules Addendum	____Mold Notification Addendum	____Other: _____

22. ENTIRE AGREEMENT: This Agreement, which includes all attachments referred to above, constitutes the entire Agreement between the parties and cannot be modified except in writing and signed by all parties, except as permitted by applicable law. Neither Owner/Agent, nor any agent or employee of Owner/Agent has made any representations or promises other than those set forth herein.

23. CREDIT REPORTS: A negative credit report reflecting on your credit history may be submitted to a credit reporting agency if you fail to fulfill the terms of your credit obligations. Resident expressly authorizes Owner/Agent (including a collection agency) to obtain Resident's consumer credit report, which Owner/Agent may use if attempting to collect past due rent payments, late fees, or other charges from Resident, both during the term of the Agreement and thereafter.

24. ATTORNEYS' FEES: If any legal action or proceeding is brought by either party to enforce any part of this Agreement, the prevailing party shall recover, in addition to all other relief, reasonable attorneys' fees and court costs, unless one of the following two boxes is checked:
❒ the prevailing party shall recover, in addition to all other relief, attorneys' fees not to exceed $_____, plus court costs.
Or ❒ each party shall be responsible for their own attorneys' fees and court costs.

The undersigned Resident(s) acknowledge(s) having read and understood the foregoing, and receipt of a duplicate original.

_____	_____	_____	_____
Date	Resident	Date	Resident
_____	_____	_____	_____
Date	Resident	Date	Resident
_____	_____
Date	Owner/Agent

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

Print

ADDENDUM TO RENTAL AGREEMENT OR LEASE

THIS ADDENDUM is entered into this _____ day of _____ (month), _____ (year), by and between _____, "Owner/Agent"

and _____, "Resident".

IN CONSIDERATION OF THEIR MUTUAL PROMISES OWNER AND RESIDENT AGREE AS FOLLOWS:

1. Resident is renting from Owner/Agent the premises located at:

_____, Unit # (if applicable) _____
(Street Address)

_____, CA _____.
(City) (Zip)

2. This Addendum shall be and is incorporated into the Rental Agreement /Lease between Owner/Agent and Resident.

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

This addendum to be effective as of _____(date).

_____	_____
Date	Resident
_____	_____
Date	Resident
_____	_____
Date	Owner/Agent

UNAUTHORIZED REPRODUCTION OF BLANK FORMS IS ILLEGAL

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.82A C. Form: Disclosure of Information on Lead-Based Paint and Lead-Based Paint Hazards (California Apartment Association Form LEAD1)

§1.82A C. Form: Disclosure of Information on Lead-Based Paint and Lead-Based Paint Hazards (California Apartment Association Form LEAD1)

TARGET HOUSING RENTAL/LEASE AGREEMENT ADDENDUM DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION ON LEAD-BASED PAINT AND LEAD-BASED PAINT HAZARDS

Resident is renting from Owner/Agent the premises located at:

_____, Unit # (if applicable)_____
(Street Address)

_____ , CA _____ .
(City) (Zip)

Lead Warning Statement
Housing built before 1978 may contain lead-based paint. Lead from paint, paint chips, and dust can pose health hazards if not taken care of properly. Lead exposure is especially harmful to young children and pregnant women. Before renting pre-1978 housing, landlords must disclose the presence of known lead-based paint and lead-based paint hazards in the dwelling. Tenants must also receive a Federally approved pamphlet on lead poisoning prevention. NOTE: The existence of lead on the rental property is not, by itself, cause for termination of the tenancy. (Public Law 102-550 sec. 1018(c))

Owner's Disclosure or Agent* acting on behalf of Owner (initial)

____ (a) Presence of lead-based paint or lead-based paint hazards (check one below):

___Known lead-based paint and/or lead-based paint hazards are present in the housing (explain).

_____

___Owner has no knowledge of lead-based paint and/or lead-based paint hazards in the housing.

____ (b) Records and reports available to the Owner (check one below):

_____Owner has provided the lessee with all available records and reports pertaining to lead-based paint and/or lead-based paint hazards in the housing (list documents below).

_____Owner has no reports or records pertaining to lead-based paint and/or lead-based paint hazards in the housing.

Agent's* Acknowledgment (initial)
*The term Agent is defined as any party who enters into a contract with the Owner, including anyone who enters into a contract with a representative of the Owner for the purpose of leasing housing. An on-site resident manager may act as the Agent if authorized to do so by either the Owner or the property management company.

____ (c) Agent has informed the Owner of his/her obligations under 42 U.S.C. 4852d, and the Agent is aware of his/her responsibility to ensure compliance.

Lessee's Acknowledgment (initial)

____ (d) Lessee has received copies of all information listed above.

____ (e) Lessee has received the pamphlet Protect Your Family from Lead in Your Home.

Certification of Accuracy
The following parties have reviewed the information above and certify, to the best of their knowledge, that the information provided by the signatory is true and accurate.

_____	_____	_____	_____
Date	Resident	Date	Resident
_____	_____	_____	_____
Date	Resident	Date	Resident
_____	_____
Date	Owner/Agent

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.83 D. Forms: Residential Lease or Month-to-Month Rental Agreement (CAR Form LR-14); Lease/Rental Commission Agreement (CAR Form LCA-6)

§1.83 D. Forms: Residential Lease or Month-to-Month Rental Agreement (CAR Form LR-14); Lease/Rental Commission Agreement (CAR Form LCA-6)

CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS®

RESIDENTIAL LEASE OR MONTH-TO-MONTH RENTAL AGREEMENT

(C.A.R. Form LR, Revised 1/06)

_____ ("Landlord") and _____ ("Tenant") agree as follows:

1. PROPERTY:
   A. Landlord rents to Tenant and Tenant rents from Landlord, the real property and improvements described as: _____
   _____ ("Premises").
   B. The Premises are for the sole use as a personal residence by the following named person(s) only: _____
   _____.
   C. The following personal property, maintained pursuant to paragraph 11, is included: _____
   _____ or ☐ (if checked) the personal property on the attached addendum.
2. TERM: The term begins on (date) _____ ("Commencement Date"), (Check A or B):
   ☐ A. Month-to-Month: and continues as a month-to-month tenancy. Tenant may terminate the tenancy by giving written notice at least 30 days prior to the intended termination date. Landlord may terminate the tenancy by giving written notice as provided by law. Such notices may be given on any date.
   ☐ B. Lease: and shall terminate on (date) _____ at _____ ☐ AM/☐ PM. Tenant shall vacate the Premises upon termination of the Agreement, unless: (i) Landlord and Tenant have extended this agreement in writing or signed a new agreement; (ii) mandated by local rent control law; or (iii) Landlord accepts Rent from Tenant (other than past due Rent), in which case a month-to-month tenancy shall be created which either party may terminate as specified in paragraph 2A. Rent shall be at a rate agreed to by Landlord and Tenant, or as allowed by law. All other terms and conditions of this Agreement shall remain in full force and effect.
3. RENT: "Rent" shall mean all monetary obligations of Tenant to Landlord under the terms of the Agreement, except security deposit.
   A. Tenant agrees to pay $ _____ per month for the term of the Agreement.
   B. Rent is payable in advance on the 1st (or ☐ _____) day of each calendar month, and is delinquent on the next day.
   C. If Commencement Date falls on any day other than the day Rent is payable under paragraph 3B, and Tenant has paid one full month's Rent in advance of Commencement Date, Rent for the second calendar month shall be prorated based on a 30-day period.
   D. PAYMENT: Rent shall be paid by ☐ personal check, ☐ money order, ☐ cashier's check, or ☐ other _____, to (name) _____ (phone) _____ at (address) _____, (or at any other location subsequently specified by Landlord in writing to Tenant) between the hours of _____ and _____ on the following days _____. If any payment is returned for non-sufficient funds ("NSF") or because tenant stops payment, then, after that: (i) Landlord may, in writing, require Tenant to pay Rent in cash for three months and (ii) all future Rent shall be paid by ☐ money order or ☐ cashier's check.
4. SECURITY DEPOSIT:
   A. Tenant agrees to pay $ _____ as a security deposit. Security deposit will be ☐ transferred to and held by the Owner of the Premises, or ☐ held in Owner's Broker's trust account.
   B. All or any portion of the security deposit may be used, as reasonably necessary, to: (i) cure Tenant's default in payment of Rent (which includes Late Charges, NSF fees or other sums due); (ii) repair damage, excluding ordinary wear and tear, caused by Tenant or by a guest or licensee of Tenant; (iii) clean Premises, if necessary, upon termination of the tenancy; and (iv) replace or return personal property or appurtenances. SECURITY DEPOSIT SHALL NOT BE USED BY TENANT IN LIEU OF PAYMENT OF LAST MONTH'S RENT. If all or any portion of the security deposit is used during the tenancy, Tenant agrees to reinstate the total security deposit within five days after written notice is delivered to Tenant. Within 21 days after Tenant vacates the Premises, Landlord shall: (1) furnish Tenant an itemized statement indicating the amount of any security deposit received and the basis for its disposition and supporting documentation as required by California Civil Code § 1950.5(g); and (2) return any remaining portion of the security deposit to Tenant.
   C. Security deposit will not be returned until all Tenants have vacated the Premises and all keys returned. Any security deposit returned by check shall be made out to all Tenants named on this Agreement, or as subsequently modified.
   D. No interest will be paid on security deposit unless required by local law.
   E. If the security deposit is held by Owner, Tenant agrees not to hold Broker responsible for its return. If the security deposit is held in Owner's Broker's trust account, and Broker's authority is terminated before expiration of this Agreement, and security deposit is released to someone other than Tenant, then Broker shall notify Tenant, in writing, where and to whom security deposit has been released. Once Tenant has been provided such notice, Tenant agrees not to hold Broker responsible for the security deposit.
5. MOVE-IN COSTS RECEIVED/DUE: Move-in funds made payable to _____ shall be paid by ☐ personal check, ☐ money order, or ☐ cashier's check.

Category	Total Due	Payment Received	Balance Due	Date Due
Rent from _____ to _____ (date)
*Security Deposit
Other _____
Other _____
Total

*The maximum amount Landlord may receive as security deposit, however designated, cannot exceed two months' Rent for unfurnished premises, or three months' Rent for furnished premises.

The copyright laws of the United States (Title 17 U.S. Code) forbid the unauthorized reproduction of this form, or any portion thereof, by photocopy machine or any other means, including facsimile or computerized formats. Copyright © 1991-2007, CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS®, INC. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

Tenant's Initials (_____)(_____)
Landlord's Initials (_____)(_____)

Reviewed by _____ Date _____

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

6. LATE CHARGE; RETURNED CHECKS:

A. Tenant acknowledges either late payment of Rent or issuance of a returned check may cause Landlord to incur costs and expenses, the exact amounts of which are extremely difficult and impractical to determine. These costs may include, but are not limited to, processing, enforcement and accounting expenses, and late charges imposed on Landlord. If any installment of Rent due from Tenant is not received by Landlord within 5 (or ☐ _____) calendar days after the date due, or if a check is returned, Tenant shall pay to Landlord, respectively, an additional sum of $ _____ or _____% of the Rent due as a Late Charge and $25.00 as a NSF fee for the first returned check and $35.00 as a NSF fee for each additional returned check, either or both of which shall be deemed additional Rent.

B. Landlord and Tenant agree that these charges represent a fair and reasonable estimate of the costs Landlord may incur by reason of Tenant's late or NSF payment. Any Late Charge or NSF fee due shall be paid with the current installment of Rent. Landlord's acceptance of any Late Charge or NSF fee shall not constitute a waiver as to any default of Tenant. Landlord's right to collect a Late Charge or NSF fee shall not be deemed an extension of the date Rent is due under paragraph 3 or prevent Landlord from exercising any other rights and remedies under this Agreement and as provided by law.

7. PARKING: (Check A or B)

☐ A. Parking is permitted as follows: _____

_____.

The right to parking ☐ is ☐ is not included in the Rent charged pursuant to paragraph 3. If not included in the Rent, the parking rental fee shall be an additional $ _____ per month. Parking space(s) are to be used for parking properly licensed and operable motor vehicles, except for trailers, boats, campers, buses or trucks (other than pick-up trucks). Tenant shall park in assigned space(s) only. Parking space(s) are to be kept clean. Vehicles leaking oil, gas or other motor vehicle fluids shall not be parked on the Premises. Mechanical work or storage of inoperable vehicles is not permitted in parking space(s) or elsewhere on the Premises.

OR ☐ B. Parking is not permitted on the Premises.

8. STORAGE: (Check A or B)

☐ A. Storage is permitted as follows: _____

The right to storage space ☐ is ☐ is not included in the Rent charged pursuant to paragraph 3. If not included in the Rent, storage space fee shall be an additional $ _____ per month. Tenant shall store only personal property Tenant owns, and shall not store property claimed by another or in which another has any right, title or interest. Tenant shall not store any improperly packaged food or perishable goods, flammable materials, explosives, hazardous waste or other inherently dangerous material, or illegal substances.

OR ☐ B. Storage is not permitted on the Premises.

9. UTILITIES: Tenant agrees to pay for all utilities and services, and the following charges: _____ except _____, which shall be paid for by Landlord. If any utilities are not separately metered, Tenant shall pay Tenant's proportional share, as reasonably determined and directed by Landlord. If utilities are separately metered, Tenant shall place utilities in Tenant's name as of the Commencement Date. Landlord is only responsible for installing and maintaining one usable telephone jack and one telephone line to the Premises. Tenant shall pay any cost for conversion from existing utilities service provider.

10. CONDITION OF PREMISES: Tenant has examined Premises and, if any, all furniture, furnishings, appliances, landscaping and fixtures, including smoke detector(s).

(Check all that apply:)

☐ A. Tenant acknowledges these items are clean and in operable condition, with the following exceptions: _____

_____.

☐ B. Tenant's acknowledgment of the condition of these items is contained in an attached statement of condition (C.A.R. Form MIMO).

☐ C. Tenant will provide Landlord a list of items that are damaged or not in operable condition within 3 (or ☐ _____) days after Commencement Date, not as a contingency of this Agreement but rather as an acknowledgment of the condition of the Premises.

☐ D. Other: _____.

11. MAINTENANCE:

A. Tenant shall properly use, operate and safeguard Premises, including if applicable, any landscaping, furniture, furnishings and appliances, and all mechanical, electrical, gas and plumbing fixtures, and keep them and the Premises clean, sanitary and well ventilated. Tenant shall be responsible for checking and maintaining all smoke detectors and any additional phone lines beyond the one line and jack that Landlord shall provide and maintain. Tenant shall immediately notify Landlord, in writing, of any problem, malfunction or damage. Tenant shall be charged for all repairs or replacements caused by Tenant, pets, guests or licensees of Tenant, excluding ordinary wear and tear. Tenant shall be charged for all damage to Premises as a result of failure to report a problem in a timely manner. Tenant shall be charged for repair of drain blockages or stoppages, unless caused by defective plumbing parts or tree roots invading sewer lines.

B. ☐ Landlord ☐ Tenant shall water the garden, landscaping, trees and shrubs, except: _____

_____.

C. ☐ Landlord ☐ Tenant shall maintain the garden, landscaping, trees and shrubs, except: _____

_____.

D. ☐ Landlord ☐ Tenant shall maintain _____.

E. Tenant's failure to maintain any item for which Tenant is responsible shall give Landlord the right to hire someone to perform such maintenance and charge Tenant to cover the cost of such maintenance.

F. The following items of personal property are included in the Premises without warranty and Landlord will not maintain, repair or replace them: _____.

Tenant's Initials (_____)(_____)

Landlord's Initials (_____)(_____)

Copyright © 1994-2007, CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS®, INC.

Reviewed by _____ Date _____

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

12. NEIGHBORHOOD CONDITIONS: Tenant is advised to satisfy him or herself as to neighborhood or area conditions, including schools, proximity and adequacy of law enforcement, crime statistics, proximity of registered felons or offenders, fire protection, other governmental services, availability, adequacy and cost of any speed-wired, wireless internet connections or other telecommunications or other technology services and installations, proximity to commercial, industrial or agricultural activities, existing and proposed transportation, construction and development that may affect noise, view, or traffic, airport noise, noise or odor from any source, wild and domestic animals, other nuisances, hazards, or circumstances, cemeteries, facilities and condition of common areas, conditions and influences of significance to certain cultures and/or religions, and personal needs, requirements and preferences of Tenant.
13. PETS: Unless otherwise provided in California Civil Code § 54.2, no animal or pet shall be kept on or about the Premises without Landlord's prior written consent, except: _____.
14. RULES/REGULATIONS:
    A. Tenant agrees to comply with all Landlord rules and regulations that are at any time posted on the Premises or delivered to Tenant. Tenant shall not, and shall ensure that guests and licensees of Tenant shall not, disturb, annoy, endanger or interfere with other tenants of the building or neighbors, or use the Premises for any unlawful purposes, including, but not limited to, using, manufacturing, selling, storing or transporting illicit drugs or other contraband, or violate any law or ordinance, or commit a waste or nuisance on or about the Premises.
    B. (If applicable, check one)
    ☐ 1. Landlord shall provide Tenant with a copy of the rules and regulations within _____ days or _____.
    OR ☐ 2. Tenant has been provided with, and acknowledges receipt of, a copy of the rules and regulations.
15. ☐ (If checked) CONDOMINIUM;PLANNED UNIT DEVELOPMENT:
    A. The Premises is a unit in a condominium, planned unit development, common interest subdivision or other development governed by a homeowners' association ("HOA"). The name of the HOA is _____. Tenant agrees to comply with all HOA covenants, conditions and restrictions, bylaws, rules and regulations and decisions. Landlord shall provide Tenant copies of rules and regulations, if any. Tenant shall reimburse Landlord for any fines or charges imposed by HOA or other authorities, due to any violation by Tenant, or the guests or licensees of Tenant.
    B. (Check one)
    ☐ 1. Landlord shall provide Tenant with a copy of the HOA rules and regulations within _____ days or _____.
    OR ☐ 2. Tenant has been provided with, and acknowledges receipt of, a copy of the HOA rules and regulations.
16. ALTERATIONS; REPAIRS: Unless otherwise specified by law or paragraph 27C, without Landlord's prior written consent, (i) Tenant shall not make any repairs, alterations or improvements in or about the Premises including: painting, wallpapering, adding or changing locks, installing antenna or satellite dish(es), placing signs, displays or exhibits, or using screws, fastening devices, large nails or adhesive materials; (ii) Landlord shall not be responsible for the costs of alterations or repairs made by Tenant; (iii) Tenant shall not deduct from Rent the costs of any repairs, alterations or improvements; and (iv) any deduction made by Tenant shall be considered unpaid Rent.
17. KEYS; LOCKS:
    A. Tenant acknowledges receipt of (or Tenant will receive ☐ prior to the Commencement Date, or ☐ _____):
    ☐ _____ key(s) to Premises, ☐ _____ remote control device(s) for garage door/gate opener(s),
    ☐ _____ key(s) to mailbox, ☐ _____,
    ☐ _____ key(s) to common area(s), ☐ _____.
    B. Tenant acknowledges that locks to the Premises ☐ have, ☐ have not, been re-keyed.
    C. If Tenant re-keys existing locks or opening devices, Tenant shall immediately deliver copies of all keys to Landlord. Tenant shall pay all costs and charges related to loss of any keys or opening devices. Tenant may not remove locks, even if installed by Tenant.
18. ENTRY:
    A. Tenant shall make Premises available to Landlord or Landlord's representative for the purpose of entering to make necessary or agreed repairs, decorations, alterations, or improvements, or to supply necessary or agreed services, or to show Premises to prospective or actual purchasers, tenants, mortgagees, lenders, appraisers, or contractors.
    B. Landlord and Tenant agree that 24-hour written notice shall be reasonable and sufficient notice, except as follows. 48-hour written notice is required to conduct an inspection of the Premises prior to the Tenant moving out, unless the Tenant waives the right to such notice. Notice may be given orally to show the Premises to actual or prospective purchasers provided Tenant has been notified in writing within 120 days preceding the oral notice that the Premises are for sale and that oral notice may be given to show the Premises. No notice is required: (i) to enter in case of an emergency; (ii) if the Tenant is present and consents at the time of entry or (iii) if the Tenant has abandoned or surrendered the Premises. No written notice is required if Landlord and Tenant orally agree to an entry for agreed services or repairs if the date and time of entry are within one week of the oral agreement.
    C. ☐ (If checked) Tenant authorizes the use of a keysafe/lockbox to allow entry into the Premises and agrees to sign a keysafe/lockbox addendum (C.A.R. Form KLA).
19. SIGNS: Tenant authorizes Landlord to place FOR SALE/LEASE signs on the Premises.
20. ASSIGNMENT; SUBLETTING: Tenant shall not sublet all or any part of Premises, or assign or transfer this Agreement or any interest in it, without Landlord's prior written consent. Unless such consent is obtained, any assignment, transfer or subletting of Premises or this Agreement or tenancy, by voluntary act of Tenant, operation of law or otherwise, shall, at the option of Landlord, terminate this Agreement. Any proposed assignee, transferee or sublessee shall submit to Landlord an application and credit information for Landlord's approval and, if approved, sign a separate written agreement with Landlord and Tenant. Landlord's consent to any one assignment, transfer or sublease, shall not be construed as consent to any subsequent assignment, transfer or sublease and does not release Tenant of Tenant's obligations under this Agreement.

Tenant's Initials (_____)(_____)
Landlord's Initials (_____)(_____)
Reviewed by _____ Date _____

Copyright © 1994-2007, CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS®, INC.

21. JOINT AND INDIVIDUAL OBLIGATIONS: If there is more than one Tenant, each one shall be individually and completely responsible for the performance of all obligations of Tenant under this Agreement, jointly with every other Tenant, and individually, whether or not in possession.
22. ☐ LEAD-BASED PAINT (If checked): Premises was constructed prior to 1978. In accordance with federal law, Landlord gives and Tenant acknowledges receipt of the disclosures on the attached form (C.A.R. Form FLD) and a federally approved lead pamphlet.
23. ☐ MILITARY ORDNANCE DISCLOSURE: (If applicable and known to Landlord) Premises is located within one mile of an area once used for military training, and may contain potentially explosive munitions.
24. ☐ PERIODIC PEST CONTROL: Landlord has entered into a contract for periodic pest control treatment of the Premises and shall give Tenant a copy of the notice originally given to Landlord by the pest control company.
25. ☐ METHAMPHETAMINE CONTAMINATION: Prior to signing this Agreement, Landlord has given Tenant a notice that a health official has issued an order prohibiting occupancy of the property because of methamphetamine contamination. A copy of the notice and order are attached.
26. DATABASE DISCLOSURE: Notice: Pursuant to Section 290.46 of the Penal Code, information about specified registered sex offenders is made available to the public via an Internet Web site maintained by the Department of Justice at www.meganslaw.ca.gov. Depending on an offender's criminal history, this information will include either the address at which the offender resides or the community of residence and ZIP Code in which he or she resides. (Neither Landlord nor Brokers, if any, are required to check this website. If Tenant wants further information, Tenant should obtain information directly from this website.)
27. POSSESSION:
    A. Tenant is not in possession of the premises. If Landlord is unable to deliver possession of Premises on Commencement Date, such Date shall be extended to the date on which possession is made available to Tenant. If Landlord is unable to deliver possession within 5 (or ☐ _____) calendar days after agreed Commencement Date, Tenant may terminate this Agreement by giving written notice to Landlord, and shall be refunded all Rent and security deposit paid. Possession is deemed terminated when Tenant has returned all keys to the Premises to Landlord.
    B. ☐ Tenant is already in possession of the Premises.
28. TENANT'S OBLIGATIONS UPON VACATING PREMISES:
    A. Upon termination of the Agreement, Tenant shall: (i) give Landlord all copies of all keys or opening devices to Premises, including any common areas; (ii) vacate and surrender Premises to Landlord, empty of all persons; (iii) vacate any/all parking and/or storage space; (iv) clean and deliver Premises, as specified in paragraph C below, to Landlord in the same condition as referenced in paragraph 10; (v) remove all debris; (vi) give written notice to Landlord of Tenant's forwarding address; and (vii) _____
    B. All alterations/improvements made by or caused to be made by Tenant, with or without Landlord's consent, become the property of Landlord upon termination. Landlord may charge Tenant for restoration of the Premises to the condition it was in prior to any alterations/improvements.
    C. Right to Pre-Move-Out Inspection and Repairs as follows: (i) After giving or receiving notice of termination of a tenancy (C.A.R. Form NTT), or before the end of a lease, Tenant has the right to request that an inspection of the Premises take place prior to termination of the lease or rental (C.A.R. Form NRI). If Tenant requests such an inspection, Tenant shall be given an opportunity to remedy identified deficiencies prior to termination, consistent with the terms of this Agreement. (ii) Any repairs or alterations made to the Premises as a result of this inspection (collectively, "Repairs") shall be made at Tenant's expense. Repairs may be performed by Tenant or through others, who have adequate insurance and licenses and are approved by Landlord. The work shall comply with applicable law, including governmental permit, inspection and approval requirements. Repairs shall be performed in a good, skillful manner with materials of quality and appearance comparable to existing materials. It is understood that exact restoration of appearance or cosmetic items following all Repairs may not be possible. (iii) Tenant shall: (a) obtain receipts for Repairs performed by others; (b) prepare a written statement indicating the Repairs performed by Tenant and the date of such Repairs; and (c) provide copies of receipts and statements to Landlord prior to termination. Paragraph 28C does not apply when the tenancy is terminated pursuant to California Code of Civil Procedure § 1161(2), (3) or (4).
29. BREACH OF CONTRACT; EARLY TERMINATION: In addition to any obligations established by paragraph 28, in the event of termination by Tenant prior to completion of the original term of the Agreement, Tenant shall also be responsible for lost Rent, rental commissions, advertising expenses and painting costs necessary to ready Premises for re-rental. Landlord may withhold any such amounts from Tenant's security deposit.
30. TEMPORARY RELOCATION: Subject to local law, Tenant agrees, upon demand of Landlord, to temporarily vacate Premises for a reasonable period, to allow for fumigation (or other methods) to control wood destroying pests or organisms, or other repairs to Premises. Tenant agrees to comply with all instructions and requirements necessary to prepare Premises to accommodate pest control, fumigation or other work, including bagging or storage of food and medicine, and removal of perishables and valuables. Tenant shall only be entitled to a credit of Rent equal to the per diem Rent for the period of time Tenant is required to vacate Premises.
31. DAMAGE TO PREMISES: If, by no fault of Tenant, Premises are totally or partially damaged or destroyed by fire, earthquake, accident or other casualty that render Premises totally or partially uninhabitable, either Landlord or Tenant may terminate this Agreement by giving the other written notice. Rent shall be abated as of the date Premises become totally or partially uninhabitable. The abated amount shall be the current monthly Rent prorated on a 30-day period. If the Agreement is not terminated, Landlord shall promptly repair the damage, and Rent shall be reduced based on the extent to which the damage interferes with Tenant's reasonable use of Premises. If damage occurs as a result of an act of Tenant or Tenant's guests, only Landlord shall have the right of termination, and no reduction in Rent shall be made.
32. INSURANCE: Tenant's or guest's personal property and vehicles are not insured by Landlord, manager or, if applicable, HOA, against loss or damage due to fire, theft, vandalism, rain, water, criminal or negligent acts of others, or any other cause. Tenant is advised to carry Tenant's own insurance (renter's insurance) to protect Tenant from any such loss or damage. Tenant shall comply with any requirement imposed on Tenant by Landlord's insurer to avoid: (i) an increase in Landlord's insurance premium (or Tenant shall pay for the increase in premium); or (ii) loss of insurance.

Tenant's Initials (_____)(_____)
Landlord's Initials (_____)(_____)

Reviewed by _____ Date _____

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

Copyright © 1994-2007, CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS®, INC.

33. WATERBEDS: Tenant shall not use or have waterbeds on the Premises unless: (i) Tenant obtains a valid waterbed insurance policy; (ii) Tenant increases the security deposit in an amount equal to one-half of one month's Rent; and (iii) the bed conforms to the floor load capacity of Premises.
34. WAIVER: The waiver of any breach shall not be construed as a continuing waiver of the same or any subsequent breach.
35. NOTICE: Notices may be served at the following address, or at any other location subsequently designated:
Landlord: _____ Tenant: _____
36. TENANT ESTOPPEL CERTIFICATE: Tenant shall execute and return a tenant estoppel certificate delivered to Tenant by Landlord or Landlord's agent within 3 days after its receipt. Failure to comply with this requirement shall be deemed Tenant's acknowledgment that the tenant estoppel certificate is true and correct, and may be relied upon by a lender or purchaser.
37. TENANT REPRESENTATIONS; CREDIT: Tenant warrants that all statements in Tenant's rental application are accurate. Tenant authorizes Landlord and Broker(s) to obtain Tenant's credit report periodically during the tenancy in connection with the modification or enforcement of this Agreement. Landlord may cancel this Agreement: (i) before occupancy begins; (ii) upon disapproval of the credit report(s); or (iii) at any time, upon discovering that information in Tenant's application is false. A negative credit report reflecting on Tenant's record may be submitted to a credit reporting agency if Tenant fails to fulfill the terms of payment and other obligations under this Agreement.
38. MEDIATION:
    A. Consistent with paragraphs B and C below, Landlord and Tenant agree to mediate any dispute or claim arising between them out of this Agreement, or any resulting transaction, before resorting to court action. Mediation fees, if any, shall be divided equally among the parties involved. If, for any dispute or claim to which this paragraph applies, any party commences an action without first attempting to resolve the matter through mediation, or refuses to mediate after a request has been made, then that party shall not be entitled to recover attorney fees, even if they would otherwise be available to that party in any such action.
    B. The following matters are excluded from mediation: (i) an unlawful detainer action; (ii) the filing or enforcement of a mechanic's lien; and (iii) any matter within the jurisdiction of a probate, small claims or bankruptcy court. The filing of a court action to enable the recording of a notice of pending action, for order of attachment, receivership, injunction, or other provisional remedies, shall not constitute a waiver of the mediation provision.
    C. Landlord and Tenant agree to mediate disputes or claims involving Listing Agent, Leasing Agent or property manager ("Broker"), provided Broker shall have agreed to such mediation prior to, or within a reasonable time after, the dispute or claim is presented to such Broker. Any election by Broker to participate in mediation shall not result in Broker being deemed a party to this Agreement.
39. ATTORNEY FEES: In any action or proceeding arising out of this Agreement, the prevailing party between Landlord and Tenant shall be entitled to reasonable attorney fees and costs, except as provided in paragraph 30A.
40. C.A.R. FORM: C.A.R. Form means the specific form referenced or another comparable form agreed to by the parties.
41. OTHER TERMS AND CONDITIONS;SUPPLEMENTS: ☐ Interpreter/Translator Agreement (C.A.R. Form ITA); ☐ Keysafe/Lockbox Addendum (C.A.R. Form KLA); ☐ Lead-Based Paint and Lead-Based Paint Hazards Disclosure (C.A.R. Form FLD)

The following ATTACHED supplements are incorporated in this Agreement: _____

42. TIME OF ESSENCE; ENTIRE CONTRACT; CHANGES: Time is of the essence. All understandings between the parties incorporated in this Agreement. Its terms are intended by the parties as a final, complete and exclusive expression of their Agreement with respect to its subject matter, and may not be contradicted by evidence of any prior agreement or contemporaneous oral agreement. If any provision of this Agreement is held to be ineffective or invalid, the remaining provisions will nevertheless be given full force and effect. Neither this Agreement nor any provision in it may be extended, amended, modified, altered or changed except in writing. This Agreement is subject to California landlord-tenant law and shall incorporate all changes required by amendment or successors to such law. This Agreement and any supplement, addendum or modification, including any copy, may be signed in two or more counterparts, all of which shall constitute one and the same writing.
43. AGENCY:
    A. CONFIRMATION: The following agency relationship(s) are hereby confirmed for this transaction:
    Listing Agent: (Print firm name) _____ is the agent of (check one): ☐ the Landlord exclusively; or ☐ both the Landlord and Tenant.
    Leasing Agent: (Print firm name) _____ (if not same as Listing Agent) is the agent of (check one): ☐ the Tenant exclusively; or ☐ the Landlord exclusively; or ☐ both the Tenant and Landlord.
    B. DISCLOSURE: ☐ (If checked): The term of this lease exceeds one year. A disclosure regarding real estate agency relationships (C.A.R. Form AD) has been provided to Landlord and Tenant, who each acknowledge its receipt.
44. ☐ TENANT COMPENSATION TO BROKER: Upon execution of this Agreement, Tenant agrees to pay compensation to Broker as specified in a separate written agreement between Tenant and Broker.
45. ☐ INTERPRETER/TRANSLATOR: The terms of this Agreement have been interpreted for Tenant into the following language: _____. Landlord and Tenant acknowledge receipt of the attached interpretor/translator agreement (C.A.R. Form ITA).

Tenant's Initials (_____)(_____)
Landlord's Initials (_____)(_____)

Reviewed by _____ Date _____

Copyright © 1994-2007, CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS®, INC.

Print

Premises: _____ Date: _____

46. FOREIGN LANGUAGE NEGOTIATION: If this Agreement has been negotiated by Landlord and Tenant primarily in Spanish, Chinese, Tagalog, Korean or Vietnamese. Pursuant to the California Civil Code Tenant shall be provided a translation of this Agreement inthe language used for the negotiation.
47. OWNER COMPENSATION TO BROKER: Upon execution of this Agreement, Owner agrees to pay compensation to Broker as specified in a separate written agreement between Owner and Broker (C.A.R. Form LCA).
48. RECEIPT: If specified in paragraph 5, Landlord or Broker, acknowledges receipt of move-in funds.

Landlord and Tenant acknowledge and agree Brokers: (a) do not guarantee the condition of the Premises; (b) cannot verify representations made by others; (c) cannot provide legal or tax advice; (d) will not provide other advice or information that exceeds the knowledge, education or experience required to obtain a real estate license. Furthermore, if Brokers are not also acting as Landlord in this Agreement, Brokers: (e) do not decide what rental rate a Tenant should pay or Landlord should accept; and (f) do not decide upon the length or other terms of tenancy. Landlord and Tenant agree that they will seek legal, tax, insurance and other desired assistance from appropriate professionals.

Tenant agrees to rent the premises on the above terms and conditions.

Tenant _____ Date _____
Address _____ City _____ State _____ Zip _____
Telephone _____ Fax _____ E-mail _____
Tenant _____ Date _____
Address _____ City _____ State _____ Zip _____
Telephone _____ Fax _____ E-mail _____

☐ GUARANTEE: In consideration of the execution of this Agreement by and between Landlord and Tenant and for valuable consideration, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the undersigned ("Guarantor") does hereby: (i) guarantee unconditionally to Landlord and Landlord's agents, successors and assigns, the prompt payment of Rent or other sums that become due pursuant to this Agreement, including any and all court costs and attorney fees included in enforcing the Agreement; (ii) consent to any changes, modifications or alterations of any term in this Agreement agreed to by Landlord and Tenant; and (iii) waive any right to require Landlord and/or Landlord's agents to proceed against Tenant for any default occurring under this Agreement before seeking to enforce this Guarantee.

Guarantor (Print Name) _____
Guarantor _____ Date _____
Address _____ City _____ State _____ Zip _____
Telephone _____ Fax _____ E-mail _____

Landlord agrees to rent the premises on the above terms and conditions.

Landlord _____ Landlord _____
Address _____
Telephone _____ Fax _____ E-mail _____

REAL ESTATE BROKERS:

A. Real estate brokers who are not also Landlord under the Agreement are not parties to the Agreement between Landlord and Tenant.
B. Agency relationships are confirmed in paragraph 43.
C. COOPERATING BROKER COMPENSATION: Listing Broker agrees to pay Cooperating Broker (Leasing Firm) and Cooperating Broker agrees to accept: (i) the amount specified in the MLS, provided Cooperating Broker is a Participant of the MLS in which the Property is offered for sale or a reciprocal MLS; or (ii) ☐ (if checked) the amount specified in a separate written agreement between Listing Broker and Cooperating Broker.

Real Estate Broker (Listing Firm) _____ DRE Lic. # _____
By (Agent) _____ DRE Lic. # _____ Date _____
Address _____ City _____ State _____ Zip _____
Telephone _____ Fax _____ E-mail _____

Real Estate Broker (Leasing Firm) _____ DRE Lic. # _____
By (Agent) _____ DRE Lic. # _____ Date _____
Address _____ City _____ State _____ Zip _____
Telephone _____ Fax _____ E-mail _____

THIS FORM HAS BEEN APPROVED BY THE CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS® (C.A.R.). NO REPRESENTATION IS MADE AS TO THE LEGAL VALIDITY OR ADEQUACY OF ANY PROVISION IN ANY SPECIFIC TRANSACTION. A REAL ESTATE BROKER IS THE PERSON QUALIFIED TO ADVISE ON REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS. IF YOU DESIRE LEGAL OR TAX ADVICE, CONSULT AN APPROPRIATE PROFESSIONAL.
This form is available for use by the entire real estate industry. It is not intended to identify the user as a REALTOR®. REALTOR® is a registered collective membership mark which may be used only by members of the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS® who subscribe to its Code of Ethics.

Published and Distributed by:
REAL ESTATE BUSINESS SERVICES, INC.
a subsidiary of the California Association of REALTORS®
525 South Virgil Avenue, Los Angeles, California 90020

Reviewed by _____ Date _____

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

Print

LEASE/RENTAL COMMISSION AGREEMENT

THIS IS INTENDED TO BE A LEGALLY BINDING CONTRACT — READ IT CAREFULLY.

CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS® (C.A.R.) STANDARD FORM

COMPENSATION:

Notice: The amount or rate of real estate commissions is not fixed by law. They are set by each broker individually and may be negotiable between the Landlord/Tenant/Principal and Broker.

For services in arranging this tenancy, I agree to pay to _____, Broker(s), compensation equal to _____

_____.

Broker(s) may retain said compensation from any first monies (advance rentals and security deposits) collected by Broker(s) from the tenant(s). If the Lease or Rental Agreement is extended or renewed, or the tenant holds over in possession beyond the initial period (collectively, "extension period"), I agree to pay to Broker(s) additional compensation equal to _____ within 5 days of the commencement of each such extension period. If the tenant(s) directly or indirectly acquires, or enters into an agreement to acquire, title to the Property or any part of it, whether by sale, exchange, or otherwise, during the term of the tenancy or any extension period, I agree to pay to Broker(s) compensation equal to _____ percent of the selling price or total consideration in said transfer, whichever is greater. Said sum shall be payable upon close of escrow, or if there is no escrow then upon tenant(s)'s direct or indirect acquisition of any legal or equitable interest in the Property. If there is more than one Landlord, by my signature below I agree and represent that I am authorized to obligate all or both of us and that the other Landlord(s) and I shall be jointly and individually responsible for payment of the sums due as above.

_____,

The undersigned has read and acknowledges receipt of a copy of this Agreement and agrees to pay compensation as stated above.

Date: _____ Telephone _____ LANDLORD/TENANT/PRINCIPAL _____

Address _____ LANDLORD/TENANT/PRINCIPAL _____

Real Estate Broker(s) agree(s) to the foregoing.

Broker _____ By _____ Date _____

Broker _____ By _____ Date _____

THIS STANDARDIZED DOCUMENT HAS BEEN APPROVED BY THE CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS® (C.A.R.) IN FORM ONLY. NO REPRESENTATION IS MADE AS TO THE APPROVAL OF THE FORM OF ANY SUPPLEMENTS NOT CURRENTLY PUBLISHED BY C.A.R. OR THE LEGAL VALIDITY OR ADEQUACY OF ANY PROVISION IN ANY SPECIFIC TRANSACTION. IT SHOULD NOT BE USED WITH EXTENSIVE RIDERS OR ADDITIONS.

A REAL ESTATE BROKER IS THE PERSON QUALIFIED TO ADVISE ON REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS. IF YOU DESIRE LEGAL OR TAX ADVICE, CONSULT AN APPROPRIATE PROFESSIONAL.

This form is available for use by the entire real estate industry. The use of this form is not intended to identify the user as a REALTOR®. REALTOR® is a registered collective membership mark which may be used only by real estate licensees who are members of the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS® and who subscribe to its Code of Ethics.

The copyright laws of the United States (17 U.S. Code) forbid the unauthorized reproduction of this form by any means including facsimile or computerized formats.

Copyright © 1994, CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS®
525 South Virgil Avenue, Los Angeles, California 90020

FORM LCA-6

OFFICE USE ONLY

Reviewed by Broker or Designee _____

Date _____

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

MO-FEB-95

Reprinted with permission, California Association of Realtors. Endorsement not implied.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.84 E. Form: Residential Lease-Rental Agreement and Deposit Receipt (Professional Publishing Form 105)

§1.84 E. Form: Residential Lease-Rental Agreement and Deposit Receipt (Professional Publishing Form 105)

RESIDENTIAL LEASE-RENTAL AGREEMENT AND DEPOSIT RECEIPT

AGENCY RELATIONSHIP CONFIRMATION. The following agency relationship is hereby confirmed for this transaction and supersedes any prior agency election (If no agency relationship insert "NONE"):

LISTING AGENT: _____ is the agent of (check one):
(Print Firm Name)
☐ the Owner exclusively; or ☐ both the Tenant and the Owner.

LEASING AGENT: _____ (if not the same as the Listing Agent) is the agent of (check one):
(Print Firm Name)
☐ the Tenant exclusively; or ☐ the Owner exclusively; or ☐ both the Tenant and the Owner.

Note: This confirmation DOES NOT take the place of the AGENCY DISCLOSURE form (such as P.P. Form 110.42 CAL) required by law if the term exceeds one year.

RECEIVED FROM _____, hereinafter referred to as Tenant, the sum of $_____ (_____ dollars), evidenced by _____, as a deposit. Upon acceptance of this Agreement, the Owner of the premises, will apply the deposit as follows:

	TOTAL	RECEIVED	BALANCE DUE PRIOR TO OCCUPANCY
Rent for the period from _____ to _____.	$_____	$_____	$_____
Security deposit (not applicable toward last month's rent)	$_____	$_____	$_____
Other _____	$_____	$_____	$_____
TOTAL	$_____	$_____	$_____

In the event this Agreement is not accepted by the Owner, within _____ days, the total deposit received will be refunded.

Tenant offers to rent from the Owner the premises located in the City of _____, County of _____, State of California, commonly known as _____, upon the following terms and conditions:

DRAFT

1. TERM. The term will commence on _____, and continue (check one of the two following alternatives):
☐ LEASE until _____, for a total rent of $_____ (_____ dollars).
☐ RENTAL on a month-to-month basis until either party terminates this Agreement by giving the other party written notice as required by law.

2. RENT. Rent will be $_____, per month, payable in advance by personal check, cashier's check, cash or money order, on the _____ day of each calendar month to Owner or his or her authorized agent, by mail or personal delivery to the following address: _____
or at such other place as may be designated by Owner in writing from time to time. Payment by personal delivery may be made (check one): ☐ Monday through Friday, 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., or ☐ at the following times: _____. In the event rent is not received by Owner in full within ____ days after due date, Tenant agrees that it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damages to Owner caused by that failure, and Tenant agrees to pay a late charge of $_____. Tenant further agrees to pay $ 25.00 for each dishonored bank check. All late fees and returned check fees will be considered additional rent. The late charge period is not a grace period, and Owner is entitled to make written demand for any rent if not paid when due and to collect interest thereon. Any unpaid balance including late charges, will bear interest at 10% per annum, or the maximum rate allowed by law, whichever is less.

3. MULTIPLE OCCUPANCY. It is expressly understood that this Agreement is between the Owner and each signatory jointly and severally. Each signatory will be responsible for timely payment of rent and performance of all other provisions of this Agreement.

4. UTILITIES. Tenant will be responsible for the payment of all utilities and services, except: _____, which will be paid by Owner.

5. USE. The premises will be used exclusively as a residence for no more than _____ persons. Guests staying more than a total of _____ days in a calendar year without written consent of Owner will constitute a violation of this Agreement. Tenant shall park operable automobiles in assigned spaces only. Trailers, boats, campers, and inoperable vehicles are not allowed without the written consent of Owner. Tenant may not repair motor vehicles on the leased premises.

6. ANIMALS. No animals will be brought on the premises without the prior consent of the Owner; except _____.

7. RULES AND REGULATIONS. In the event that the premises is a portion of a building containing more than one unit, or is located in a common interest development, Tenant agrees to abide by all applicable rules, whether adopted before or after the date of this Agreement, including rules with respect to noise, odors, disposal of refuse, animals, parking, and use of common areas. Tenant will pay any penalties , including attorney fees, imposed by homeowners' association for violations by tenant or tenant's guests.

CAUTION: The copyright laws of the United States forbid the unauthorized reproduction of this form by any means including scanning or computerized formats.

8. ORDINANCES AND STATUTES. Tenant will comply with all statutes, ordinances, and requirements of all municipal, state and federal authorities now in force, or which may later be in force, regarding the use of the premises. Tenant will not use the premises for any unlawful purpose including, but not limited to, using, storing or selling prohibited drugs. If the premises are located in a rent control area, the Tenant should contact the Rent and Arbitration Board for his or her legal rights.
9. ASSIGNMENT AND SUBLETTING. Tenant will not assign this Agreement or sublet any portion of the premises without prior written consent of the Owner.
10. MAINTENANCE, REPAIRS, OR ALTERATIONS. Tenant acknowledges that, unless the Owner is notified immediately upon occupancy, the premises, including the furniture, furnishings and appliances, including all electrical, gas and plumbing fixtures, are in good working order and repair. Tenant will keep the premises in a clean and sanitary condition, and will immediately notify Owner of any damage to the premises or its contents, or any inoperable equipment or appliances. Tenant will surrender the premises, at termination, in as good condition as received, normal wear and tear excepted. Tenant will be responsible for any damage, repairs or replacements, caused by Tenant's negligence and that of the tenant's family, invitees, and guests, except ordinary wear and tear. Verification of the working order and the maintenance of the smoke detector is the responsibility of the Tenant. Tenant will not commit any waste upon the premises, or any nuisance or act which may disturb the quiet enjoyment of any neighbors. Tenant will not paint, paper or otherwise redecorate or make alterations to the premises without the prior written consent of the Owner. Tenant will irrigate and maintain any surrounding grounds, including lawns and shrubbery, if they are for the Tenant's exclusive use. It is understood that Owner's insurance does not cover Tenant's personal property.
11. INVENTORY. Any furnishings and/or equipment to be furnished by Owner will be listed in a special inventory. The inventory will be signed by both Tenant and Owner concurrently with this Lease. Tenant will keep the furnishings and equipment in good condition and repair, and will be responsible for any damage to them other than normal wear and tear. Tenant acknowledges receipt of _____ sets of keys, _____ garage door openers, other: _____
12. DAMAGES TO PREMISES. If the premises are damaged by fire or from any other cause which renders the premises untenantable, either party will have the right to terminate this Agreement as of the date on which the damage occurs. Written notice of termination will be given to the other party within fifteen (15) days after occurrence of such damage. Should such damage or destruction occur as the result of the negligence of Tenant, or his or her invitees, then only the Owner will have the right to terminate. Should this right be exercised by either Owner or Tenant, rent for the current month will be prorated between the parties as of the date the damage occurred. Any prepaid rent and unused security deposit will be refunded to Tenant. If this Agreement is not terminated, Owner will promptly repair the premises and there will be a proportionate reduction of rent until the premises are repaired and ready for Tenant's occupancy. The proportionate reduction will be based on the extent which repairs interfere with Tenant's reasonable use of the premises.
13. ENTRY AND INSPECTION. Owner and Owner's agents will have the right to enter the premises: (a) in case of emergency; (b) to make necessary or agreed repairs, decorations, alterations, improvements, supply necessary or agreed services, show the premises to prospective or actual purchasers, lenders, tenants, workers, or contractors; (c) when tenant has abandoned or surrendered the premises. Except under (a) and (c), entry may be made only during normal business hours, and with at least 24 hours prior written notice to Tenant including the date, approximate time, and purpose of entry.

    If the purpose of the entry is to exhibit the dwelling unit to prospective or actual purchasers, the notice may be given orally, in person or by telephone, if the owner or his or her agent has notified the tenant in writing within 120 days of the oral notice that the property is for sale. At the time of entry, the Owner or agent shall leave written evidence of the entry inside the unit.
14. INDEMNIFICATION. Owner will not be liable for any damage or injury to Tenant, or any other person, or to any property, occurring on the premises, or in common areas, unless such damage is the legal result of the negligence or willful misconduct of Owner, his or her agents, or employees. Tenant agrees to hold Owner harmless from any claims for damages, no matter how caused, except for injury or damages caused by negligence or willful misconduct of Owner, his or her agents or employees.
15. PHYSICAL POSSESSION. If Owner is unable to deliver possession of the premises at the commencement date set forth above, Owner will not be liable for any damage caused, nor will this Agreement be void or voidable, but Tenant will not be liable for any rent until possession is delivered. Tenant may terminate this Agreement if possession is not delivered within _____ days of the commencement of the term in Item 1.
16. DEFAULT. If Tenant fails to pay rent when due, or perform any provision of this Agreement, after not less than three (3) days written notice of such default given in the manner required by law, the Owner, at his or her option, may terminate all rights of Tenant, unless Tenant, within said time, cures such default. If Tenant abandons or vacates the property while in default of the payment of rent, Owner may consider any property left on the premises to be abandoned and may dispose of the same in any manner allowed by law. In the event the Owner reasonably believes that such abandoned property has no value, it may be discarded. All property on the premises will be subject to a lien for the benefit of Owner securing the payment of all sums due, to the maximum extent allowed by law.

    In the event of a default by Tenant, Owner may elect to: (a) continue the lease in effect and enforce all his rights and remedies, including the right to recover the rent as it becomes due, provided that Owner's consent to assignment or subletting by the Tenant will not be unreasonably withheld; or (b) at any time, terminate all of Tenant's rights and recover from Tenant all damages he or she may incur by reason of the breach of the lease, including the cost of recovering the premises, and including the worth at the time of such termination, or at the time of an award if suit be instituted to enforce this provision, of the amount by which the unpaid rent for the balance of the term exceeds the amount of such rental loss which the Tenant proves could be reasonably avoided.

Tenant [_____] [_____] [_____] [_____] has read this page.

CAUTION: The copyright laws of the United States forbid the unauthorized reproduction of this form by any means including scanning or computerized formats.

17. SECURITY. The security deposit will secure the performance of Tenant's obligations. Owner may, but will not be obligated to, apply all portions of said deposit on account of Tenant's obligations. Any balance remaining will be returned to Tenant, together with an accounting of any disbursements, 21 calendar days after the Tenant has vacated the premises, or earlier if required by law. Tenant will not have the right to apply the security deposit in payment of the last month's rent. No interest will be paid to Tenant on account of the security deposit, unless required by local ordinance.

18. WAIVER. Failure of Owner to enforce any provision of this Agreement will not be deemed a waiver. The acceptance of rent by Owner will not waive his or her right to enforce any provision of this Agreement.

19. NOTICES. Unless otherwise provided, any notice which either party may give or is required to give, must be in writing, may be given personally or by mailing the same, postage prepaid, to Tenant at the premises or to Owner or Owner's authorized agent at the address shown in the signature block or at such other places as may be designated by the parties from time to time. Notice will be deemed effective three (3) days after mailing, or on personal delivery, or when receipt is acknowledged in writing.

20. HOLDING OVER. Any holding over after expiration of this Agreement, with the consent of Owner, will be a month-to-month tenancy at a monthly rent of $_____ payable in advance and otherwise subject to the terms of this Agreement and local ordinance, as applicable, until either party terminates the tenancy by giving the other party thirty (30) days (or longer if required by law) written notice.

21. TIME. Time is of the essence of this Agreement.

22. ATTORNEY'S FEES. In any action or proceeding involving a dispute between Tenant and Owner arising out of the execution of this Agreement, whether for tort or for breach of contract, and whether or not brought to trial or final judgment, the prevailing party will be entitled to receive from the other party a reasonable attorney's, expert witness fees, and costs to be determined by the court or arbitrator(s).

23. SUBROGATION. To the maximum extent permitted by insurance policies which may be owned by the parties, Lessor and Lessee waive any and all rights of subrogation against each other which might otherwise exist.

24. FAIR HOUSING. Owner and Tenant understand that state and federal housing laws prohibit discrimination in the sale, rental, appraisal, financing or advertising of housing on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, marital status, national origin, ancestry, familial status, source of income, age, mental or physical disability.

25. ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS:

_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____

DRAFT

26. ☐ This unit is subject to rent control and the agency responsible to adjudicate claims is: _____

27. ENTIRE AGREEMENT. The foregoing constitutes the entire agreement between the parties and may be modified only in writing signed by all parties. This Agreement and any modifications, including any photocopy or facsimile, may be signed in one or more counterparts, each of which will be deemed an original and all of which taken together will constitute one and the same instrument. The following addenda, if checked, have been made a part of this Agreement before the parties' execution:

☐ Addendum _____ : Lead-Based Paint Disclosure (Required by Law for Rental Property Built Prior to 1978)
☐ Addendum _____ : Regarding Mold Contamination and Agreement to Maintain Premises
☐ Addendum _____ : _____
☐ Addendum _____ : _____

NOTICE: Pursuant to Section 290.46 of the Penal Code, information about specified registered sex offenders is made available to the public via an Internet Web site maintained by the Department of Justice at http://www.meganslaw.ca.gov. Depending on an offender's criminal history, this information will include either the address at which the offender resides or the community of residence and ZIP Code in which he or she resides.

Tenant [_____] [_____] [_____] [_____] has read this page.

CAUTION: The copyright laws of the United States forbid the unauthorized reproduction of this form by any means including scanning or computerized formats.

Print

Property Address _____

Tenant _____ (Signature)

_____ (Please Print Name)

Date _____ Telephone _____

Address _____

_____

Email _____

Tenant _____ (Signature)

_____ (Please Print Name)

Date _____ Telephone _____

Address _____

_____

Email _____

Tenant _____ (Signature)

_____ (Please Print Name)

Date _____ Telephone _____

Address _____

_____

Email _____

Tenant _____ (Signature)

_____ (Please Print Name)

Date _____ Telephone _____

Address _____

_____

Email _____

DRAFT

The undersigned Owner accepts the foregoing offer and agrees to lease the premises on the terms and conditions set forth above.

Owner _____ (Signature of Owner or Authorized Agent)

_____ (Please Print Name)

Date _____

Telephone _____ Fax _____

Address _____

_____

Email _____

Owner _____ (Signature)

_____ (Please Print Name)

Date _____

Telephone _____ Fax _____

Address _____

_____

Email _____

Receipt for deposit acknowledged by _____ Date _____

Tenant acknowledges receipt of a copy of the accepted lease on (date) _____

[_____] [_____] [_____] [_____]
initials

CAUTION: The copyright laws of the United States forbid the unauthorized reproduction of this form by any means including scanning or computerized formats.

FORM 105.4 CAL (12-2005) COPYRIGHT BY PROFESSIONAL PUBLISHING, NOVATO, CA

Form generated by: TrueForms™ from REVEAL SYSTEMS, Inc. 800-499-9612

PROFESSIONAL PUBLISHING

Print

Property Address _____

COMMISSION AGREEMENT ON LEASE

NOTICE: The amount or rate of real estate commissions is not fixed by law. They are set by each broker individually and may be negotiable between the owner and broker.

The Owner agrees to pay to _____, the Broker in this transaction, compensation equal to $_____ for services rendered. Owner authorizes Broker to deduct said sum from the deposit received from Tenant.

In the event the Lease is extended for a definite period of time or on a month-to-month basis after expiration of the original term, Owner will pay to Broker an additional commission of _____% of the total rental for the extended period. This commission will be due and payable at the commencement of the extended period if for a fixed term, or if on a month-to-month basis, at the termination of Tenant's occupancy or one year, whichever is earlier.

In any action for commission, the prevailing party will be entitled to reasonable attorney fees.

Owner _____ Date _____

Owner _____ Date _____

DRAFT

COMMISSION AGREEMENT ON SALE

NOTICE: The amount or rate of real estate commissions is not fixed by law. They are set by each broker individually and may be negotiable between the owner and broker.

If a sale or exchange of the real property subject to this lease is made to the Tenant or any member of Tenant's family during the term of the lease, or any extension of the term, or within 180 days after termination of occupancy, Owner agrees to pay Broker named above a commission of _____% of the sale price or exchange value; provided, however, that in order for the commission to be payable, said sale or exchange must occur on or before (date) _____. This Agreement will not limit any other rights of the Broker provided for in any listing or other agreement which may be in effect between Owner and Broker.

In any action for commission, the prevailing party will be entitled to reasonable attorney fees.

Owner _____ Date _____

Owner _____ Date _____

CAUTION: The copyright laws of the United States forbid the unauthorized reproduction of this form by any means including scanning or computerized formats.

FORM 105.5 CAL (12-2005) COPYRIGHT BY PROFESSIONAL PUBLISHING, NOVATO, CA

PROFESSIONAL PUBLISHING

Form generated by: TrueForms™ from REVEAL SYSTEMS, Inc. 800-499-9612

Reprinted by permission of the copyright owner:

Professional Publishing, A Division of McKenney's Standard Forms, Inc., 122 Paul Dr., San Rafael, CA 94903, 800-288-2006, Fax: 415-472-2069.

Comment: Note that this form does not include a notice of negative credit report (see CC §1785.26), so no later than 30 days after submitting a negative credit report, the landlord must send separate notice to the tenant. See §§1.29, 1.43.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/1 Creating the Tenancy/§1.85 F. Form: Lease Agreement (National Housing Law Project Standard Form Lease (California)) [Deleted]

§1.85 F. Form: Lease Agreement (National Housing Law Project Standard Form Lease (California)) [Deleted]

This form has been deleted in its entirety because it is outdated and the entity providing it has no new edition.

© The Regents of the University of California

2

Fair Housing Considerations

James Morales
Michael Rawson
Susan M. Saylor
Paul E. Smith

I. IMPACT OF FAIR HOUSING LAWS ON LANDLORDS' CHOICE OF TENANTS
- A. Practitioner's Responsibility to Know Applicable Law §2.1
- B. Overview of Applicable Law §2.2

II. SCREENING PROSPECTIVE TENANTS
- A. Landlord's Objectives §2.3
- B. Legal Constraints in Applying Screening Factors §2.4
  - 1. Selection Standards Must Not Have Disparate Impact on Protected Classes §2.5
  - 2. Were Permissible Factors Used to Reject Applicant? §2.6

III. SELECTION CRITERIA AND REASONABLE ACCOMMODATIONS §2.7
- A. Tenant Character and Safety Issues §2.8
- B. Ability to Pay Rent
  - 1. Credit and Income Information §2.9
  - 2. Minimum Income Requirements §2.9A
  - 3. Source of Income Protections §2.9B
  - 4. Income and Marital Status §2.9C
  - 5. Income and Disability §2.9D
- C. Subjective Criteria Should Be Avoided §2.10
- D. Special Criteria Applicable to Public and Subsidized Housing §2.11
  - 1. Some Immigrants Barred From Subsidized Housing §2.12
  - 2. Authority to Select Tenants §2.13
    - a. By Public Housing Authority
      - (1) Specific Selection Criteria and Preferences §2.14
      - (2) Residency Preferences §2.14A
      - (3) Checking Criminal Background of Applicants; Controlled Substances, Alcohol Abuse §2.15
      - (4) Denial of Admission Based on Status as Domestic Violence Victim Prohibited §2.15A
    - b. Private Landlord and Housing Authority: §8 Housing Choice Voucher Programs
      - (1) Applicant Eligibility Determined by Public Housing Authority §2.16
      - (2) Private Landlord's Discretion in Tenant Selection §2.17
    - c. Under State or Federally Subsidized Programs §2.18
    - d. Under State and Federal Tax Credit Programs §2.18A
- E. Prohibited Selection Factors §2.19
- F. Protected Categories
  - 1. Summary; Authorizing Legislation §2.20
  - 2. Protected Categories Created by Unruh Act's Arbitrary Discrimination Proscription §2.21
  - 3. Familial Status Protections §2.22
    - a. Statutory Definitions §2.23
    - b. Effect of Occupancy Standards §2.24
    - c. Senior Housing Exceptions §2.25
      - (1) Fair Housing Act (Federal) Exemptions §2.25A
      - (2) California (State) Exemptions §2.25B
      - (3) Application of State vs. Federal Exemptions §2.25C
  - 4. Protections for Persons With Disabilities
    - a. Impairments Covered by Statutory Definitions; Proscribed Inquiries by Prospective Landlords §2.26
    - b. Reasonable Accommodations and Modifications §2.27
      - (1) Reasonable Accommodations §2.27A
      - (2) Reasonable Modifications §2.27B
      - (3) Accessibility §2.27C
      - (4) Accommodation and Modification Request Procedures; Interactive Process §2.27D

c. Attorney Fees §2.27E
5. Gender Protections §2.27F
a. Sex Harassment §2.27G
b. Domestic Violence Discrimination §2.27H

IV. CHART: GUIDE TO FAIR HOUSING AND ANTIDISCRIMINATION LAWS §2.28

V. FEDERAL ANTIDISCRIMINATION AND FAIR HOUSING LAWS §2.29
A. Fair Housing Act
1. Scope
a. Application, Protections, and Requirements §2.30
b. Exemption §2.31
2. Enforcement §2.32
a. Administrative Action
(1) Preparing and Filing Complaint
(a) Filing With HUD §2.33
(b) Filing With USDA §2.33A
(2) Form: Housing Discrimination Complaint (HUD 903.1) §2.34
(3) Response to Complaint §2.35
(4) Investigation and Conciliation of Dispute §2.36
(5) Issuance of a Charge or Dismissal §2.37
(6) Charge Issued: Election of Civil Action; Administrative Hearing §2.38
b. Civil Action Under 42 USC §3613 §2.39
c. U.S. Attorney General "Pattern-or-Practice" Action §2.40
B. Civil Rights Act of 1866
1. Application §2.41
a. No State Action Requirement §2.42
b. The Protected Classes §2.43
2. Enforcement
a. Litigating Claims Under the Act §2.44
b. Remedies
(1) Damages §2.45
(2) Injunctive Relief §2.46
(3) Attorney Fees §2.47

VI. CALIFORNIA ANTIDISCRIMINATION AND FAIR HOUSING LAWS §2.48
A. California Fair Employment and Housing Act
1. Scope §2.49
2. Prohibited Forms of Housing Discrimination §2.50
3. Enforcement §2.51
a. Administrative Relief
(1) Filing Administrative Complaint §2.52
(2) DFEH Action on Complaint §2.53
(3) Conciliation or Mediation §2.54
(4) Prosecution of Complaint If DFEH Finds Reasonable Cause §2.55
b. Civil Action §2.56
B. Unruh Civil Rights Act §2.57
1. Application §2.58
2. Enforcement and Remedies §2.59
C. Equal Access Requirements for Persons With Disabilities §2.60

VII. PROSECUTION OF A RENTAL DISCRIMINATION CASE
A. Establishing Illegal Discrimination §2.61
1. Overt Discrimination §2.62
2. Disparate Treatment §2.63
3. Mixed Motives §2.64
4. Disparate Impact §2.65
B. Use of Testers §2.66
C. Standing §2.67
D. Owner's Responsibility for Agent's Discriminatory Acts §2.68
E. Statute of Limitations §2.69

© The Regents of the University of California

I. IMPACT OF FAIR HOUSING LAWS ON LANDLORDS' CHOICE OF TENANTS

§2.1 A. Practitioner's Responsibility to Know Applicable Law

Attorneys practicing landlord-tenant law must be familiar with the various federal, state, and local fair housing laws. Fair housing laws are the most significant limitation on a landlord's discretion in selecting tenants. They require landlords not only to avoid intentional discrimination against certain classes but also to use selection criteria that do not unduly burden (i.e., have a disparate impact on) members of protected classes. Under California fair housing law, for example, a landlord may be required to justify criteria that apply equally to all applicants and have some legitimate purpose, but that disproportionately exclude tenants on the basis of certain designated factors, such as race, color, national origin, ancestry, source of income, sexual orientation, religion, sex (including gender identity, appearance and behavior), marital status, familial status, age, disability, or medical condition. See Govt C §§12921(b), 12926(p), 12955.8; Pen C §422.56(c) (defining "gender"). On disparate impact analysis under federal law, see §§2.5, 2.65.

A knowledge of fair housing laws is essential to enable a landlord to select good tenants without knowingly or unknowingly violating the law. A landlord has a legitimate interest in selecting tenants who will pay the rent on time, will not damage the premises, and will not disturb other tenants. The landlord's attorney must be able to advise the client on factors and procedures that may be used to achieve these ends without violating any antidiscrimination laws. From the standpoint of the tenant's attorney, knowledge of these laws is important to providing effective representation, particularly in a tight rental housing market, where the landlord may consider certain groups to be undesirable, such as families with children. Tenants can use fair housing laws to limit a landlord's arbitrary selection criteria and to enhance their own potential for gaining access to housing.

If in doubt about a selection policy or practice, contact a local fair housing counseling and enforcement agency such as the HUD Office of Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity (FHEO) or the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH). See Directory for information on how to contact these agencies.

While recipients are not required to do so, many cities have chosen to be served by a local agency that investigates complaints of housing discrimination and provides counseling and mediation services. Although the counselors at these agencies are usually not attorneys and should not be relied on as the final word, they generally do an excellent job of staying up-to-date on the fairly frequent statutory, regulatory, and case law changes in state and federal antidiscrimination laws. These agencies are often the first entities contacted by tenant applicants who believe they have been victims of discrimination. To find the agency that serves a particular area, contact the local government housing and community development office or planning department.

This chapter provides practitioners with an overview of fair housing laws that affect the tenant selection process. Several other publications that provide an extensive analysis of fair housing law include Schwemm, Housing Discrimination: Law and Litigation (2001) and Relman, Housing Discrimination Practice Manual (2006).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.2 B. Overview of Applicable Law

Various federal, state, and local antidiscrimination laws bar discrimination on a number of specific grounds including race, color, national origin, ancestry, sexual orientation, religion, sex (including gender identity, appearance and behavior), marital status, familial status, source of income, age, disability, or medical condition. See e.g., Govt C §§12926(p), 12955; Pen C §422.56. Some antidiscrimination laws prohibit any arbitrary discrimination. The general rule is that the law providing the greatest protection to a class controls over other laws. See 42 USC §3615; Govt C §12955.6.

Fair housing laws prohibit not only discriminatory refusals to rent, but also discriminatory rental terms and conditions, advertising, and statements regarding the availability of housing. In some contexts, fair housing law requires landlords to do more than merely refrain from discrimination. For example, a landlord may be required to assume reasonable financial burdens to accommodate disabled residents. See Jankowski Lee & Assocs. v Cisneros (7th Cir 1996) 91 F3d 891, cited with approval in U.S. v California Mobile Home Park Mgmt. Co. (9th Cir 1997) 107 F3d 1374, 1381. A reasonable accommodation can also include alteration of administrative polices to accommodate a disabled individual's inability to generate income. Giebeler v M & B Assocs. (9th Cir 2003) 343 F3d 1143 (cosigner on lease).

Violations may result in severe consequences. Under the federal Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 (42 USC §§3610-3612) and amendments to the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (see Govt C §§12955.1-12955.6, 12989-12989.3), government investigation of complaints of housing discrimination and prosecution of meritorious claims are a real possibility. If the government prosecutes the claim, it is at no expense to the complainant. Fair housing laws authorize the courts to issue injunctions and to award compensatory and punitive damages and attorney fees to the aggrieved party. Finally, fair housing protections extend to individuals who are not themselves the objects of discrimination. Trafficante v Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (1972) 409 US 205, 34 L Ed 2d 415, 93 S Ct 364 (white tenants had standing to challenge landlord's racially discriminatory selection criteria because of their interest in living in integrated housing). Moreover, violations of the federal Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 USC §§12101-12213) constitute a violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51).

© The Regents of the University of California

II. SCREENING PROSPECTIVE TENANTS

§2.3 A. Landlord's Objectives

Among several applicants for a rental vacancy, a landlord wants to select the one who appears most likely to pay the rent on time and least likely to damage the premises or disturb other tenants. To avoid future problems in terminating the tenancy, landlords want to select wisely among applicants. Thus, the landlord must establish procedures for screening tenants without risking charges of illegal discrimination.

Essential questions in evaluating an applicant's ability to meet specified tenancy requirements include:

(1) Will the applicant pay rent and other charges under the lease in a timely manner?

(2) Will the applicant take care of the premises?

(3) Will the applicant avoid interfering with the rights and enjoyment of property by others and avoid damaging the property of others?

(4) Will the applicant comply with necessary and reasonable rules of the landlord and comply with health and safety codes?

PRACTICE TIP: An obvious approach to answering these questions is to check the applicant's housing history over the past three-to-five years. An applicant's conduct more than five years ago is not as reliable a predictor of future conduct as more recent conduct.

To assess an applicant's minimal qualifications to meet essential tenancy obligations objectively a landlord may use factors such as the following when choosing a tenant:

- credit standing;
- employment history, with care to provide for equal treatment of applicants who have other sources of income, or who cannot work because of a disability;
- amount (but not source) of income;
- personal references;
- rental history; and
- past bad conduct relevant to reasonable belief applicant may be direct threat to health or safety of current tenants or neighboring property (in public or subsidized housing; see §§2.14-2.15).

As explained in §2.5, however, the fact that the landlord applies selection factors uniformly to all applicants does not guarantee compliance with fair housing law if less stringent criteria could be used to assess the applicant's ability to meet his or her tenancy obligations.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords would be well advised to establish a uniform screening procedure. For example, a landlord may require all applicants to complete a standard rental application form providing credit information, employment history, references, and rental history (see form in §4.7).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.4 B. Legal Constraints in Applying Screening Factors

§2.4 B. Legal Constraints in Applying Screening Factors

Screening criteria should relate to legitimate landlord objectives. See §2.3. Failure to apply screening criteria in a justifiable and consistent manner to an applicant who is a member of a protected group may result in exposure to liability under either disparate treatment or disparate impact theories. See §2.63. Failure to follow established procedures may constitute evidence of illegal discrimination. Seaton v Sky Realty Co. (7th Cir 1974) 491 F2d 634, 636. In addition, persons with disabilities may request reasonable accommodations in the screening process if necessary to afford them equal opportunity to use and enjoy a dwelling. 42 USC §3604(f)(3)(B); Govt C §12927; CC §54.1(b)(3)(B). See §§2.27-2.27E.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.5 1. Selection Standards Must Not Have Disparate Impact on Protected Classes

Fair housing laws prohibit application of a uniform and objective standard for selecting tenants if the standard excludes a disproportionate number of members of a protected class and the landlord does not have a business necessity for using it. NAACP v The Town of Huntington (2d Cir 1988) 844 F2d 926, 938; U.S. v Black Jack (8th Cir 1974) 508 F2d 1179, 1184; Sisemore v Master Fin., Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 1386, 60 CR3d 719 (plaintiff stated claim for disparate impact on basis of sex and familial status after being denied loan to purchase home she intended to use for home day care operation). But see Community House, Inc. v City of Boise (9th Cir 2007) 490 F3d 1041, 1050, citing International Union v Johnson Controls (1991) 499 US 187, 204-206, 113 L Ed 2d 158, 111 S Ct 1196 (housing provider may present evidence of legitimate safety concern that justifies discrimination that is not based on stereotypes). See also 24 CFR §1.4(b)(2)(i) (HUD regulations declaring disparate treatment and disparate impact illegal); Govt C §12955.8(b).

Fair housing law borrowed the principle typically referred to as "disparate impact" or "discriminatory effect," from employment discrimination law. A classic example, in the employment context, is the use of height and weight requirements to select applicants for law enforcement positions. Uniform application of these objective requirements operates to exclude a significantly higher percentage of women than of men. In Dothard v Rawlinson (1977) 433 US 321, 53 L Ed 2d 786, 97 S Ct 2720, the U.S. Supreme Court invalidated such requirements because the employer failed to show that height and weight standards objectively and accurately assessed job-related characteristics.

Courts have applied the principle of disparate impact consistently in the fair housing area. In Sisemore v Master Fin., Inc., supra, the plaintiffs stated a prima facie case for violation of the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Govt C §§12900-12996) by pleading that a lender's policy against making loans for home day care providers had a disparate impact on women and families with children. Sisemore, 151 CA4th at 1417. In Betsey v Turtle Creek Assocs. (4th Cir 1984) 736 F2d 983, 988, the court ruled that a landlord's adults-only policy had a racially discriminatory effect that could be justified only if the property owner "prove[d] a business necessity sufficiently compelling to justify the challenged practice." In Bronson v Crestwood Lake Section 1 Holding Corp. (SD NY 1989) 724 F Supp 148, the court held that a landlord's refusal to consider applicants whose income was not at least three times the rent, or who received federal Section 8 housing assistance, had a discriminatory effect on African-American and Hispanic applicants. In issuing a preliminary injunction against the triple income and Section 8 policies, the court rejected the landlord's assertion that the policies were necessary to insure payment of rent. See also §2.17. In Bishop v Pecsok (ND Ohio 1976) 431 F Supp 34, 36, the landlord explained that he had rejected an African-American after applying criteria that applicants be graduate students and "have a certain financial status so as to be clearly capable of paying the rent." The court noted that these objective criteria violated the Fair Housing Act because the landlord could not establish that his criteria reasonably measured whether an applicant would be a "successful tenant." 431 F Supp at 37. In Vance v Bakas (ND Cal, Mar. 1, 2006, No. C-05-3385) 2006 US Dist Lexis 11183, the landlord informed the plaintiffs they would not be allowed to rent the property for the operation of a home day care business. The court found that plaintiffs stated a claim for disparate impact on the basis of familial status and gender under the federal Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §§3601-3631) and the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996).

Although the California Supreme Court has generally rejected disparate impact analysis in fair housing cases brought under the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) (see Harris v Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C3d 1142, 1160, 278 CR 614), both the federal FHA and the California FEHA clearly prohibit unjustified housing practices that have a discriminatory effect on a protected class. For discussion of the Unruh Act, see §2.57.

Some courts consider evidence of discriminatory intent in disparate impact cases. Compare NAACP v The Town of Huntington (2d Cir 1988) 844 F2d 926, 935 (intent is not considered in analysis) with Metro. Hous. Dev. Corp. v Village of Arlington Heights (7th Cir 1977) 558 F2d 1283 (intent is part of four-part weighing test to determine if conduct resulting in disparate impact violated FHA; proof of intent may not be necessary if other factors are strong enough to justify relief). In Arlington Heights, the court observed that the equitable argument for relief under the FHA is stronger when the plaintiff shows that the defendant purposefully discriminated against members of minority groups, and the absence of evidence of discriminatory intent may be a factor weighing against relief under the Act. 558 F2d at 1292.

Another issue in disparate impact cases has been the court's standard of review in evaluating the reasons for the challenged policy, i.e., how strong must the landlord's evidence be to justify the policy. See, e.g., Keith v Volpe (9th Cir 1988) 858 F2d 467. Although some debate over this issue still exists in the federal courts (see, e.g., Mountain Side Mobile Estates v Secretary of HUD (10th Cir 1995) 56 F3d 1243 (rejecting compelling necessity test in favor of standard requiring that the policy have a manifest relationship to housing in question), the California legislature in 1993 resolved the issue definitively in cases arising under the state FEHA.

Under California law, a landlord's selection criteria that have a discriminatory effect must be "necessary to the operation of the business and effectively carry out the significant business need it is alleged to serve." Govt C §12955.8(b). Moreover, a court must consider "whether or not there are feasible alternatives that would equally well or better accomplish the purpose advanced with a less discriminatory effect." Govt C §12955.8(b)(1).

The importance of disparate impact analysis to the landlord's selection criteria cannot be overstated. Although use of disparate impact to challenge a policy is generally limited to members of a protected class, the doctrine's implications extend beyond a landlord's treatment of particular classes. Because many criteria—particularly those that relate to creditworthiness and income—may have a racially discriminatory effect, a landlord must be careful to choose criteria that he or she can justify as necessary. See Bronson v Crestwood Lake Section 1 Holding Corp. (SD NY 1989) 724 F Supp 148. See also Sisemore v Master Fin., Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 1386, 60 CR3d 719 (plaintiff stated claim for disparate impact on basis of sex and familial status after being denied loan to purchase home to use for home day care operation).

PRACTICE TIP: If other criteria measure an applicant's ability to meet his or her tenancy obligations, and have less of an impact on protected classes, a landlord should use those criteria. The bottom line is that a landlord should use factors that measure minimal requirements for tenancy accurately and should not use excessively stringent criteria that screen out applicants who would be good tenants.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.6 2. Were Permissible Factors Used to Reject Applicant?

Even when a landlord adopts permissible factors in selecting tenants (see §2.5), a court may scrutinize whether the landlord actually relied on the factors he or she claims to have considered in rejecting an applicant who is a member of a protected class. Under the decision in Bush v Kaim (ND Ohio 1969) 297 F Supp 151, 163, a court may ask the following questions when making this determination:

(a) Did the landlord request information concerning selection factors from the plaintiff and other applicants?

(b) Did the landlord secure such information from other sources?

(c) Did the landlord request the information from the plaintiff and other applicants while selecting a tenant?

(d) Did the landlord make any attempt to check the accuracy of the information?

(e) Did the landlord perform this check while he or she was deciding to whom to rent?

(f) Did other applicants have better ratings in these areas than the plaintiff?

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.7 III. SELECTION CRITERIA AND REASONABLE ACCOMMODATIONS

Fair housing laws play an important role in a landlord's choice of particular selection criteria. See §§2.8-2.27H. Landlords typically have an interest in applying uniform and objective criteria to lessen their administrative burdens. Consistent application of uniform and objective criteria also provides a landlord some measure of protection from legal challenges to the selection process, although there are major exceptions to this principle.

Landlords follow a number of different practices in selecting tenants, varying from an informal meeting with the prospective tenant when the premises are shown, to an extensive credit and reference check. With the exception of publicly subsidized housing projects (see §§2.11-2.18), no laws require that landlords use any particular tenant selection procedure.

Before the tenancy begins or during a tenancy, the applicant or tenant may ask the landlord to make a reasonable accommodation under applicable fair housing criteria. See §§2.26-2.27E. See also §§2.9D, 2.21, 2.25A, 2.30, 2.50, 2.60.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.8 A. Tenant Character and Safety Issues

Landlords may wish to establish selection criteria concerning the tenant's general character, but this inquiry is fraught with risk because of the potential for class-based discrimination, arbitrary decisions, and invasions of privacy. On the other hand, case law has established that landlords have some duty to protect the public and other tenants from foreseeable harms from a tenant that could have been prevented. See §3.72; Rosales v Stewart (1980) 113 CA3d 130, 169 CR 660 (child killed by bullet fired from adjoining premises; parents stated cause of action by alleging that perpetrator's landlord knew of tenant's dangerous propensities before renewing lease). See also the federal law and regulations authorizing owners of public or subsidized housing to inquire about an applicant's prior bad or criminal conduct relevant to the reasonable belief that the applicant may threaten the health or safety of other tenants or neighbors, discussed in §§2.14-2.15.

Case law has not, however, established a landlord's duty to acquire information from applicants, such as gang membership, criminal background, or drug abuse, to protect other tenants from possible harm. Recent cases suggest the California courts have moved to lessen the responsibility of landlords for the safety of the tenants. See, e.g., Castaneda v Olsher (2007) 41 C4th 1205, 63 CR3d 99; Saelzler v Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 C4th 763, 107 CR2d 617; Peterson v Superior Court (1995) 10 C4th 1185, 43 CR2d 836. Nonetheless, if a landlord knows (or is put on notice) that a tenant subject to eviction or enforcement of contractual obligations is causing injuries to other tenants, then the landlord must take action to avoid those injuries. See Barber v Chang (2007) 151 CA4th 1456, 60 CR3d 760; Madhani v Cooper (2003) 106 CA4th 412, 130 CR2d 778; Rosales v Stewart (1980) 113 CA3d 130, 169 CR 660; Uccello v Laudenslayer (1975) 44 CA3d 504, 118 CR 741. This theory has been extended under the Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981, 1982) to a landlord who failed to act against white tenants in the complex who racially harassed a black tenant. Bradley v Carydale Enters. (ED Va 1989) 730 F Supp 709.

PRACTICE TIP: Predicting a person's conduct based on previous acts is difficult. Tenant advocates argue that potential tort liability is a weak justification for a landlord to make intrusive and broad inquiries about an applicant's criminal record or general character unless the inquiry is authorized by and conforms to a specific law (see, e.g., §§2.14-2.15). Landlords, however, may be very concerned about the safety of all residents, not just from a legal point of view, but for business and social reasons. Advising a landlord client, therefore, requires the consideration of numerous factors, including potential tort liability, antidiscrimination laws, and the Constitution.

California's constitutional right to privacy (Cal Const, art I, §1) protects persons from being required to disclose personal information if they have a reasonable expectation of privacy, the invasion of privacy is serious, and countervailing interests do not justify the disclosure. Hill v National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n (1994) 7 C4th 1, 26 CR2d 834. See also Loder v City of Glendale (1997) 14 C4th 846, 59 CR2d 696.

While fair housing laws prohibit landlords from using selection criteria that have a disparate impact on protected classes, when the landlord lacks a business necessity for using such criteria (see §2.5), denial of admission and termination of tenancy based on specifically-defined types of criminal background is authorized for HUD-assisted housing (24 CFR §5.854; 24 CFR §5.856), public housing (42 USC §1437d(l)(6); 24 CFR §960.204; 24 CFR §966.4(l)(5)), and tenant-based Section 8 (24 CFR §982.307(a)(3)(iv); 24 CFR §982.310(c)). These regulations were upheld by the Supreme Court in U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev. v Rucker (2002) 535 US 125, 152 L Ed 2d 258, 122 S Ct 1230 (lack of knowledge of criminal conduct not defense to public housing eviction; statute and regulations are constitutional). Landlords should limit any inquiries about an applicant's background to recent criminal convictions or behavior that directly relate to tenancy obligations. Compare Orloff v Los Angeles Turf Club (1951) 36 C2d 734, 227 P2d 449 (excluding from racetrack person with immoral reputation for acts committed more than 6 years ago violated civil rights), with Lowe v City of Commerce (1997) 59 CA4th 1075, 69 CR2d 356 (ejecting from casino person who was actively harassing employees and customers did not violate civil rights).

The federal Fair Housing Act provides that a landlord is not required to rent to disabled applicants "whose tenancy would constitute a direct threat to the health or safety of other individuals or whose tenancy would result in substantial physical damage to the property of others." 42 USC §3604(f)(9). Congress intended that a landlord be able to reject an applicant under §3604(f)(9) only "[i]f the landlord determines, by objective evidence that is sufficiently recent as to be credible, and not from unsubstantiated references, that the applicant would pose" a threat. H Rep No. 100-711, 100th Cong, 2d Sess (1988), reprinted in 1988 US Code Cong & Ad News 2191. Accordingly, an objective, narrowly focused, and uniformly applied inquiry about the threat posed by all applicants to the property or to other tenants' health and safety is probably permissible because it relates to essential tenancy obligations.

WARNING: Balancing of interests between applicants and affected tenants requires careful evaluation. Even if a landlord has assessed an applicant as a physical threat under permissible standards, the landlord may have an obligation to make a reasonable accommodation to an applicant with a disability. See §§2.27-2.27E.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Ability to Pay Rent

§2.9 1. Credit and Income Information

The tenant's ability to pay rent is central to the landlord's legitimate interest in renting units on the private housing market. A landlord may establish procedures to evaluate an applicant's ability to pay rent. 59 Ops Cal Atty Gen 223 (1976). A landlord, however, may not use an applicant's source of income as a basis to deny tenancy. See §2.9B. See also Bush v Kaim (ND Ohio 1969) 297 F Supp 151, 162. Such procedures generally require the prospective tenant to complete a standard application form that provides information regarding the tenant's employment, past rental history, and references. The application may also require credit information, including sources of income, living expenses, and current and long-term liabilities. See CC §1940.3(c)(2). The information should be sufficiently detailed to enable the landlord to evaluate it and verify its accuracy. It also should authorize the landlord to check references, and to verify the information independently. See rental application form in §4.10.

A landlord may subscribe to a credit reporting agency to verify the applicant's credit status or consult an agency that tracks unlawful detainer actions in the courts to verify the applicant's rental history. A number of organizations provide these services to landlords and many of them are able to track unlawful detainer actions statewide. However, no consumer reporting agency may produce or furnish a consumer report containing unlawful detainer actions if the tenant was the prevailing party or when the action is resolved by settlement agreement. See CC §1786.18.

When using services that report unlawful detainer actions to assess rent payment ability, however, a landlord should not consider a listed action unless the plaintiff was the prevailing party. See CC §§1785.13, 1786.18. Although courts have held unconstitutional (as a violation of free speech) CC §1785.13's prohibition against a credit agency reporting unlawful detainer actions unless the landlord is the prevailing party (see U.D. Registry, Inc. v State (2006) 144 CA4th 405, 429, 50 CR3d 647; U.D. Registry, Inc. v State (1995) 34 CA4th 107, 40 CR2d 228), another decision held this type of noncommercial speech is not without limitations and a tenant may clarify inaccurate or incomplete information reported by an unlawful detainer registry (see Schoendorf v U.D. Registry, Inc. (2002) 97 CA4th 227, 118 CR2d 313). Therefore, a landlord considering a prospective tenant should investigate to determine which party prevailed in the reported action. See §§4.9, 13.75. For further discussion on the effect of an unlawful detainer judgment on consumer credit reporting, see California Eviction Defense Manual §26.38 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.9A 2. Minimum Income Requirements

A landlord may establish certain minimum income requirements, but they must be tailored carefully to the applicant's actual qualifications for tenancy. Courts have split on use of rent-to-income ratios that preclude renting to a tenant whose rent would exceed a designated percentage of his or her monthly income. In Bronson v Crestwood Lake Section 1 Holding Corp. (SD NY 1989) 724 F Supp 148, the court invalidated a triple income requirement under the federal Fair Housing Act because of its racially discriminatory effect. On the other hand, in Harris v Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C3d 1142, 278 CR 614, the California Supreme Court upheld, under the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51), the same type of triple income requirement that the Bronson court had rejected. The message to landlords from this conflicting case law is that they use stringent rent-to-income ratios at their peril. This is particularly true in light of the amendments to state fair housing law, enacted after the Harris decision, that place a heavy burden on landlords to justify facially neutral policies that have a discriminatory effect. Govt C §12955.8.

Essentially, it is unlawful, where there is a government rent subsidy, to use a financial or income standard in assessing eligibility that is not based on the portion of rent to be paid by the tenant. Govt C §12955(o). In other words, if the landlord used a three-times-the-amount-of-rent standard for income, and the rent was $600 per month, an applicant who paid only 50 percent of the total monthly rent would need to receive $900 per month in income to qualify.

Whatever standards a landlord establishes, they must be applied in a uniform and nondiscriminatory manner. See U.S. v Reddoch (5th Cir 1972) 467 F2d 897 (African-American applicant subjected to credit-check ruse); Hall v Freitas (ND Cal 1972) 343 F Supp 1099 (African-American applicants subjected to more stringent background check). A landlord must be careful to avoid establishing arbitrary financial standards because of disparate impact analysis, which requires that a landlord establish a significant justification for policies that have a discriminatory effect on a protected class (see §2.5). Such a standard may also violate the Unruh Civil Rights Act's prohibition against arbitrary discrimination. See §2.58.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.9B 3. Source of Income Protections

The California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) expressly prohibits a landlord from using source of income as a basis for rejecting a prospective tenant. Govt C §12955. See Vance v Bakas (ND Cal, Mar. 1, 2006, No. C-05-3385) 2006 US Dist Lexis 11183 (plaintiff stated claim for source of income discrimination in violation of Govt C §12955(a) when landlord refused to rent after being informed that plaintiff intended to operate licensed home day care on premises). Moreover, a landlord's refusal to consider certain applicants because of their source of income may state a claim under the federal Fair Housing Act. See Gilligan v Jamco Dev. Corp. (9th Cir 1997) 108 F3d 246 (exclusion of applicants receiving public benefits for dependent children states claim of familial status discrimination). Under California law, source of income "means lawful, verifiable income paid directly to a tenant or paid to a representative of a tenant." For the purposes of §12955, the landlord is not considered a representative of a tenant. Govt C §12955(p)(1). The statute provides that it is not discriminatory to make a written or oral inquiry concerning "the level or source of income." Govt C §12955(p)(2). See §2.19.

It is unclear from the statute's wording whether the law applies to certain Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher programs in which the rental assistance payments are made directly to the landlord. Some communities have adopted local ordinances that prohibit certain forms of discrimination against existing, and sometimes potential, tenants holding Section 8 certificates or vouchers or other kinds of tenant-based rental assistance. See, e.g., Corte Madera Mun C §5.30.020; San Francisco Police C §3304(a)(5); East Palo Alto Mun C §14.16.010; Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance §151.04(b). Some state courts have ruled that state and local laws prohibiting source of income discrimination also prohibit discrimination against tenants with housing assistance such as Section 8. See, e.g., Commission on Human Rights & Opportunities v Sullivan (Conn 2008) 939 A2d 541; Montgomery County v Glenmont Hills Assocs. (Md App 2007) 936 A2d 325; DiLiddo v Oxford St. Realty, Inc. (Mass 2007) 876 NE2d 421.

PRACTICE TIP: Because the state law is unclear (and local laws may vary), before rejecting a tenant based on the offer of Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher assistance (1) consider the social purpose of the Section 8 program: to provide housing opportunities for less fortunate households who may live or work in the community, and (2) check for local ordinances prohibiting discrimination against tenants with rental assistance.

The Seventh Circuit has held that a landlord's refusal to accept a Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher does not violate the source of income discrimination restrictions of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) 15 USC §1691, finding that a residential lease is not a credit transaction within the meaning of the ECOA. Laramore v Ritchie Realty Mgmt. Co. (7th Cir 2005) 397 F3d 544.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.9C 4. Income and Marital Status

A landlord may not use marital status as a basis for applying different financial standards. The Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) also makes it unlawful to use a financial or income standard that fails to treat the aggregate income of persons proposing to reside together on the same basis as the aggregate income of married persons. Govt C §12955(n). In Hess v FEHC (1982) 138 CA3d 232, 187 CR 712, the landlord required each member of an unmarried couple to satisfy the financial standards separately; if the couple had been married, only one of them would have been required to satisfy the standards. The court of appeal held that this practice violated FEHA because it discriminated on the basis of marital status. Govt C §12955. See §2.50. The landlord's ability to use married couples' community property to satisfy any unpaid rent claims did not justify the differential treatment of unmarried couples. The landlord could achieve the same financial protection by requiring each member of an unmarried couple to assume personal liability for the rent.

The Unruh Act (CC §51) also prohibits discrimination based on marital status, including discrimination against same sex couples and registered domestic partners. Koebke v Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 C4th 824, 31 CR3d 565. See also Smith v FEHC (1996) 12 C4th 1143, 51 CR2d 700 (under Govt C §12955, landlord cannot use religious belief that unmarried cohabitation is sin as basis to refuse to rent apartment to unmarried couple; see §2.50) and Atkisson v Kern County Hous. Auth. (1976) 59 CA3d 89, 130 CR 375 (housing may not be denied to cohabiting single person or family group solely because unmarried or unrelated by blood or adoption).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.9D 5. Income and Disability

A state statute protects persons with disabilities from the imposition of income requirements. A landlord may not refuse to rent to a person with a disability merely because he or she is partially or wholly dependent on the income of a spouse, unless the spouse is not a party to the rental agreement. CC §54.1(b)(7). See §2.26. A landlord may, however, consider the aggregate financial status of a disabled person and his or her spouse. CC §54.1(b)(7).

In Giebeler v M & B Assocs. (9th Cir 2003) 343 F3d 1143, the court held that allowing family members to cosign a lease guaranteeing rent payment by a disabled person unable to work was a reasonable accommodation of the tenant's inability to meet the landlord's income requirements. But see Bell v Tower Mgmt. Servs. (D NJ, July 15, 2008, No. 07-CV-5305) 2008 US Dist Lexis 53514 (reasonable accommodations case must establish nexus between accommodations being requested and necessity for providing handicapped individuals equal opportunity to use and enjoy housing; in order to establish need to waive minimum income requirement or that waiver would directly ameliorate disability, plaintiff must plead she could have met income requirement before onset of disability caused her to be unable to work); Sutton v Freedom Square, Ltd. (ED Mich, Oct. 15, 2008, No. 07-14897) 2008 US Dist Lexis 81600 (disabled rental applicant's request to waive minimum credit standard was unreasonable because it constituted fundamental alteration of landlord's business).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.10 C. Subjective Criteria Should Be Avoided

A landlord's use of valid, objective selection factors applied in a uniform and nondiscriminatory manner is the best means of avoiding challenges to a tenant-selection procedure. Landlords should apply subjective factors cautiously. Although federal civil rights statutes, as well as the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996), prohibit discrimination against particular classes, California's Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) prohibits all arbitrary discrimination. Thus, although some forms of discrimination do not violate federal statutes or the FEHA, arbitrary application of subjective factors may violate the Unruh Act. See In re Cox (1970) 3 C3d 205, 90 CR 24, in which the court held that the refusal to admit a person to a shopping center because of his long hair and unconventional dress was a violation of the Unruh Act. See §2.58.

Furthermore, a court will scrutinize a landlord's use of subjective factors closely to determine whether the landlord used them to cover illegal discrimination. See Stevens v Dobs, Inc. (4th Cir 1973) 483 F2d 82, in which the refusal to rent to an African-American applicant because of his alleged "offensive odor" was held to be a subterfuge for racial discrimination. A landlord should not rely solely on subjective factors in the tenant-selection process. The absence of objective criteria itself can be important evidence supporting a finding of racial discrimination. U.S. v Real Estate Dev. Corp. (ND Miss 1972) 347 F Supp 776, 782.

Nevertheless, in a few narrow contexts, courts have upheld landlords' use of subjective factors, provided that they do not disguise illegal discrimination. For example, a landlord may reject an applicant simply because he or she does not like the applicant, without violating federal civil rights statutes. Bush v Kaim (ND Ohio 1969) 297 F Supp 151, 163. Similarly, in Normal v St. Louis Concrete Pipe Co. (ED Mo 1978) 447 F Supp 624, the court held that a landlord did not wrongfully discriminate by denying an African-American couple's rental application because of their persistent, harassing, and rude demands that the landlord act on their application before completion of regular credit verification procedures.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.11 D. Special Criteria Applicable to Public and Subsidized Housing

Publicly subsidized projects differ from private housing in terms of the factors that landlords may use in selecting tenants. Although fair housing laws apply to publicly subsidized projects, public housing authorities and private, subsidized landlords are subject to additional restrictions on tenant selection. See §§2.12-2.18. For an excellent discussion of tenant-selection criteria in publicly assisted or subsidized projects, see National Housing Law Project, HUD Housing Programs: Tenants' Rights (3d ed 2004).

WARNING: Many of the regulations and guidelines applicable to the selection of tenants for federally or state subsidized public or subsidized housing may have been temporarily suspended or modified to accommodate people displaced by Hurricane Katrina. Landlords of subsidized units, including units subsidized under state and federal tax credit programs (see §2.18A), should check with the appropriate regulating agency (i.e., HUD, HCD, or the local housing authority) to find out if any changes are in effect.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.12 1. Some Immigrants Barred From Subsidized Housing

The Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act of 1998 (QHWRA) amended 42 USC §1436a by repealing the language granting discretion to public housing authorities to ignore the immigration status of housing assistance applicants. See Pub L 105-276, Title V, §592, 112 Stat 2461. Before the amendment, housing authorities were required to verify status but allowed to ignore the results. The amendment effectively permits the housing authorities to choose not to take any steps to verify immigration status, but, if they do, they may grant assistance only to those who qualify under the amendment.

Only citizens, nationals, and six categories of immigrants are eligible to receive housing assistance. Nevertheless, the statute permits applicant families in which one or more persons is a citizen or eligible immigrant to receive prorated assistance even though ineligible immigrants live in the household. See 42 USC §1436a, 24 CFR §5.500, and 24 CFR §983.4.

Some of the regulations on immigrants' access to public and subsidized housing in light of QHWRA and the Use of Assisted Housing by Aliens Act of 1996, Title V, Subtitle E of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (Pub L 104-208, §§571-577, 110 Stat 3009-684—3009-688) have been revised and some have not. See generally 24 CFR pt 5, subpt E and pt 401, subpt E; for regulations applicable to certain housing programs, see 24 CFR §§236.765, 880.504, 880.603, 882.514, 882.515, 882.808, 884.214, 884.223, 886.121, 886.124 and 886.321.

For certain housing subsidized under state programs that it administers, the state Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) has adopted regulations that place restrictions against renting to immigrants who are not citizens or "qualified aliens." See 25 Cal Code Regs §§6935-6939.4. The stated purpose for the regulations is to implement the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (PRWORA) (Pub L 104-193, 110 Stat 2104). See 8 USC §1621. However, housing owned or sponsored by nonprofit charitable organizations is exempt from these regulations. 25 Cal Code Regs §§6935.4, 6939(a). And when only state subsidies are involved, the regulations are invalid to the extent they require landlords to inquire about or obtain documents regarding a tenant's or prospective tenant's immigration or citizenship status. CC §1940.3. The California Housing Finance Agency (CHFA) has promulgated similar regulations for the subsidized housing programs that it administers. See, e.g., 25 Cal Code Regs §§12001-12108. If a housing complex is funded under both HCD and CHFA programs, the regulations governing HCD programs prevail over those of CHFA. 25 Cal Code Regs §12104(b).

WARNING: Enforcement of the HCD regulations was permanently enjoined. See Mercy Charities v Department of Hous. & Community Dev. (SF Super Ct, Aug. 9, 1999, No. 305541) (order granting peremptory writ of mandate). The Department subsequently issued a formal notice that it will not enforce these regulations under the order. HCD Administrative Notice: Monitoring & Management 00-02, Suspension of HCD Enforcement of Applicant Verification Regulation, August 16, 2000. (This notice is available from HCD; see Directory.)

Because commentators also contend that the CHFA regulations are vague and overly broad, the regulations may undergo numerous challenges based on, among other things, the equal protection clause of the federal constitution and antidiscrimination statutes. Consequently, until the issues are resolved through the Administrative Procedures Act process and the courts, landlords of state-subsidized housing should first contact CHFA before excluding immigrant tenants or checking immigration status, unless otherwise notified that they are required to do so.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.13 2. Authority to Select Tenants

The authority to select tenants for publicly subsidized housing depends on the type of project or program:

- If a public housing authority owns the units (or leases them from the owner), it assumes responsibility for selecting the tenants. See §2.14.
- Under the Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher programs, private housing providers own the units, but public assistance pays part of the tenants' rent. In these programs, the housing authority determines the tenants' eligibility for assistance, but the private owner selects the tenants. See §2.17. "Section 8" refers to §8 of the revised United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 USC §§1437-1437aaa-8). It was added by the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 as 42 USC §1437f. See §1.36.
- When a private landlord has an agreement with HUD, the State of California, or a local government under which the government entity provides mortgage insurance or housing assistance to the landlord, the public housing authority is not involved in selecting tenants. Instead, the contract between the landlord and HUD and the government entity regulations govern the landlord's tenant-selection process. See §2.18.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/ a. By Public Housing Authority/§2.14 (1) Specific Selection Criteria and Preferences

a. By Public Housing Authority

§2.14 (1) Specific Selection Criteria and Preferences

All public housing authorities must now adopt five-year Public Housing Agency Plans (PHA Plans) that, among other things, must include the housing authority's policy on admissions. 42 USC §1437c-1; 24 CFR pt 903. The housing authority must also prepare and submit to the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) an Annual Plan that includes a statement describing policies that govern tenant eligibility, selection, and admissions. 24 CFR §903.7. Housing authorities must certify in their PHA Plans that the housing authority's policies and practices affirmatively further fair housing. 24 CFR §903.7(o). Consequently, in addition to the statutory and regulatory parameters described below, the PHA Plan and the Annual Plan provide important information regarding permissible selection criteria.

When it selects tenants for units that it owns, a public housing authority must apply criteria that

- are "reasonably related to individual attributes and behavior of an applicant and shall not be related to those which may be imputed to a particular group or category of persons of which an applicant may be a member" (24 CFR §960.203(a));
- conform to federal, state, and local fair housing laws; and
- do "not automatically deny admission to a particular group or category of otherwise eligible applicants (e.g., unwed mothers or families with children born out of wedlock)" (Ressler v Pierce (9th Cir 1982) 692 F2d 1212, 1218).

See generally 24 CFR §§960.202-960.208. The housing authority may apply other criteria, including preferences. Under the Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act of 1998 (QHWRA) (Pub L 105-276, 112 Stat 2518, 2547), any preferences established must be based on local needs and priorities established in consideration of information obtained in the public comment process for preparation of the local Public Housing Agency Plan and Consolidated Plan. 42 USC §1437d(c)(4); 24 CFR §960.206(a). Housing authorities must also avoid any preferences that would have a disparate impact on the classes of persons protected by the state and federal fair housing laws unless it is "necessary to achieve an important purpose sufficiently compelling to override the discriminatory effect." Govt C §12955.8. Housing authorities may be required periodically to collect data on their terminations of tenancies and housing assistance to identified protected classes. See, e.g., Health & S C §34328.1(c). See also §§2.5, 2.65; Langlois v Abington Hous. Auth. (D Mass 2002) 234 F Supp 2d 33, 68 (24 CFR §5.105(a) provides that residency preferences may be adopted or implemented only in accordance with fair housing and other nondiscrimination laws). HUD Notice PIH 2005-5(HA) permits housing authorities to provide preferences or an admission set aside for families with a disabled person.

WARNING: HUD allowed PHAs and federally subsidized landlords to create special temporary preferences for people displaced by Hurricane Katrina. These may remain in effect at some PHAs and in some other subsidized housing.

HUD regulations also permit preferences for persons with disabilities (24 CFR §960.206(b)(3)), victims of domestic violence (24 CFR §960.206(b)(4)), and single persons who are elderly, displaced, homeless, or disabled (24 CFR §960.206(b)(5)).

When applicants are equally qualified under criteria meeting these standards, a housing authority is required to select among them by some reasonable means, including chronological order of application. 24 CFR §960.202(a)(2)(iv); Ressler v Pierce, supra; Holmes v New York City Hous. Auth. (2d Cir 1968) 398 F2d 262. However, QHWRA authorizes housing authorities to use separate "site based" waiting lists in many situations, rather than one centralized, housing-authority-wide waiting list. 42 USC §1437d(r). Authorities may skip over a household on a waiting list if necessary to achieve a "deconcentration of poverty and income-mixing." 42 USC §1437n(a)(3).

Title 24 CFR pt 903, subpt A provides that a PHA may adopt admissions criteria in its PHA Plan to decrease the "concentration of poverty" in complexes in which the income of existing residents falls below a certain income range. Among other things, a PHA may establish a preference for admission of working families or skip a family on the waiting list to reach another family in an effort to further the goals of the PHA's deconcentration policy. 24 CFR §903.2.

However, these criteria must not have the purpose or effect of denying or delaying admission to persons protected by the fair housing laws. 24 CFR §903.2(d); see also 24 CFR §960.206(b)(1)(iii) and discussion above.

HUD authorizes housing authorities to preclude "admission of applicants whose habits and practices reasonably may be expected to have a detrimental effect on the residents or the project environment." 24 CFR §960.202(a)(2)(iii). Specifically, under 24 CFR §960.203(c), the housing authority may consider an applicant's:

- past performance in meeting financial obligations, especially rent;
- "record of disturbance of neighbors, destruction of property, or living or housekeeping habits at prior residences which may adversely affect the health, safety or welfare of other tenants"; and
- "history of criminal activity involving crimes of physical violence to persons or property which would adversely affect the health, safety or welfare of other tenants."

It is significant that the housing authority must also consider mitigating evidence about an applicant who has an unfavorable tenant history. This evidence (including the seriousness of the offense) includes "the time, nature, and extent of the applicant's conduct [and] factors which might indicate a reasonable probability of favorable future conduct." 24 CFR §960.203(d). Furthermore, a housing authority may not summarily reject an applicant because the applicant owes rent for a prior tenancy. The applicant is entitled to a hearing to determine whether there are legitimate defenses to the rent claim or changed circumstances affecting the applicant's ability to pay rent. Neddo v Housing Auth. (ED Wis 1971) 335 F Supp 1397.

The QHWRA grants the right to all public housing authority tenants to have one or more pets, subject to reasonable requirements that may include requiring payment of a nominal fee and pet deposit and restrictions or prohibitions based on number, size, or dangerousness of the pets. 42 USC §1437z-3; 24 CFR §§5.350-5.380.

If a housing authority has acted in any way to discriminate, then an action may be maintained under the Fair Housing Act (race, color, national origin, sex, religion, familial status, disability), Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (federally-assisted programs discriminating based on race, color, or national origin), the Americans With Disabilities Act, Title II, Subtitle A (state or local government discriminating activities against the disabled), or Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (federally-assisted programs discriminating against the disabled). In addition, the Fair Housing Act requires HUD and recipients of HUD funds not only to not discriminate but also to affirmatively further fair housing and seek open housing including through regional and metropolitan remedies. 42 USC §3608(e)(5); Trafficante v Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (1972) 409 US 205, 34 L Ed 2d 415, 93 S Ct 364; see also Hills v Gautreaux (1976) 425 US 284, 47 L Ed 2d 792, 96 S Ct 1538.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.14A (2) Residency Preferences

Residency preferences must not "have the purpose or effect of delaying or otherwise denying admission to the program" based on the protected classes. 24 CFR §960.206(b)(1)(iii). Local residency preferences or "working family" preferences may violate the federal Fair Housing Act if they would disproportionately exclude racial or ethnic minorities. Comer v Cisneros (2d Cir 1994) 37 F3d 775, 793. See also Langlois v Abington Hous. Auth. (1st Cir 2000) 207 F3d 43 (injunction against residency preferences upheld for some local housing authorities and vacated for others); Davis v New York City Hous. Auth. (2d Cir 2002) 278 F3d 64 (injunction against working family preferences). HUD regulations permit preferences for working families (24 CFR §960.206(b)(2)), but under Davis, such preferences must not violate the fair housing laws.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.15 (3) Checking Criminal Background of Applicants; Controlled Substances, Alcohol Abuse

§2.15 (3) Checking Criminal Background of Applicants; Controlled Substances, Alcohol Abuse

Congress has provided housing authorities with additional powers to obtain information about the criminal background of applicants and to prohibit occupancy by persons who illegally use a controlled substance. Under the Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act of 1998 (QHWRA) (Pub L 105-276, 112 Stat 2518, 2634), the National Crime Information Center, police departments, and other law enforcement agencies must, on request, provide information to public housing agencies concerning the "criminal conviction records" of adult applicants for, or tenants of, public housing. A law enforcement agency may provide information on the conviction of a juvenile only to the extent that applicable state, local, or tribal law will permit. 42 USC §1437d(q). Finally, the housing authority must also ensure that any criminal records it receives are:

- Kept confidential;
- Not disclosed to any person unless an officer, employee, or authorized agent of the authority, with a job-related need to have access to the information; and
- Destroyed once the purpose for which the record was requested has been accomplished.

42 USC §1437d(q)(4), (5). The law provides, however, that "[b]efore an adverse action is taken with regard to assistance under this title on the basis of a criminal record, the public housing agency shall provide the tenant or applicant with a copy of the criminal record and an opportunity to dispute the accuracy and relevancy of that record." 42 USC §1437d(q)(2).

The QHWRA further provides that housing authorities may require applicants to sign releases allowing the authority to receive information from drug treatment facilities, but only regarding whether the applicant is currently illegally using a controlled substance. The authority may only ask applicants to sign the release if it requires all applicants to sign; it may only request information from treatment facilities if it makes requests for all applicants who have criminal records or all applicants with a tenant history of property destruction, violence, or interference with the peaceful enjoyment of the premises of another tenant. 42 USC §1437d(t)(3).

A tenant who has been evicted from federally assisted housing for drug-related criminal activity during the previous 3 years is ineligible to live in public housing unless the tenant has successfully completed a rehabilitation program approved by the housing agency. 42 USC §13661(a). Persons who the authority determines to be illegal drug users or alcohol abusers or who exhibit a pattern of illegal use or abuse are also ineligible; however, the authority may consider whether the person has been rehabilitated or is enrolled in a supervised rehabilitation program and is no longer an illegal user or abuser. 42 USC §13661(b). If a housing authority determines that a member of the applicant household "is or was, during a reasonable time preceding the date when the applicant household would otherwise be selected for admission, engaged in any drug-related or violent criminal activity or other criminal activity which would adversely affect the health, safety, or right to peaceful enjoyment of the premises by other residents," the authority may exclude the household. 42 USC §13661(c). If an applicant engaged in such activity prior to a reasonable period of time preceding admissions determination, the authority may require the applicant to submit sufficient evidence to determine that the applicant has not engaged in any criminal activity during the reasonable period. 42 USC §13661(c)(2). See also 24 CFR §960.204(a)(3), which expressly requires the PHA to establish standards to permanently prohibit admission if any household member has ever been convicted of drug-related criminal activity for the production or manufacture of methamphetamine on the premises of federally assisted housing.

The provisions of QHWRA also require housing agencies to exclude all households that include a registered sex offender. The PHA must conduct background checks on all applicants. An applicant household denied admission must be afforded the opportunity to dispute the accuracy and relevance of the information. See 42 USC §13663. This federal law overrides state law prohibitions against the release of information to a public housing agency concerning whether an applicant is subject to a lifetime registration requirement. 83 Ops Cal Atty Gen 143 (2000).

On a public housing agency's right to evict a tenant because of a household member's, guest's, or employee's drug-related activity, see HUD v Rucker (2002) 535 US 125, 152 L Ed 2d 258, 122 S Ct 1230, holding that 42 USC §1437d(l)(6) permits housing authorities, in their discretion, to evict tenants for drug-related activity of household members or guests regardless of whether the tenant knew or should have known of the activity. See also Matter of Yancey v New York City Hous. Auth. (Sup Ct 2009) 879 NYS2d 661 (reversed eviction order on finding that hearing officer mistakenly believed that termination of tenancy was required under facts and that officer had no discretionary power under regulations and Rucker decision). But see Stevens v Housing Auth. of S. Bend (ND Ind, July 22, 2008, No. 3:08-CV-51) 2008 US Dist Lexis 55935 (distinguishing Rucker and finding that criminal activity outside unit by persons who were not residents, guests, or under tenant's control is not grounds for eviction). See also extensive discussion of this issue in California Eviction Defense Manual §§18.17A, 18.18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

A housing authority may bring an action to vacate a longstanding consent decree based on changes to HUD law, regulations, and circulars. See Brown v Philadelphia Hous. Auth. (ED Pa 2002) 237 F Supp 2d 567, 573, rev'd (3d Cir 2003) 350 F3d 338. In Brown, the lower court held that there were no statutory or regulatory changes that rendered the consent decree inequitable, and that the housing authority had failed to demonstrate any conflict between the consent decree and current federal law and regulations. The court of appeal reversed, holding that there need not be a conflict to justify vacating a consent decree.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.15A (4) Denial of Admission Based on Status as Domestic Violence Victim Prohibited

As long as an applicant is otherwise qualified for admission, public housing authorities are expressly prohibited from denying admissions because the applicant is a victim of domestic violence, dating violence, or stalking. 42 USC §1437d(c)(3). See also 42 USC §1437c-1(d)(13).

The PHA or the landlord may request an individual to certify, on a HUD-approved form, that the individual is a victim of domestic violence and that any incidents in question are of actual or threatened abuse. The individual must provide certification within 14 days of the request and must include the name of the abuser. The applicant may satisfy this certification requirement by (1) providing documentation signed by a staff member of a victim service provider, an attorney, or a medical professional from whom the victim sought assistance, or (2) producing police or court records. All information provided must be kept confidential. 42 USC §1437d(u). PHAs must also provide notice to tenant applicants of their rights under these laws, including the right to confidentiality. 42 USC §1437d(u)(2)(B).

For further discussion of laws protecting victims of domestic violence, see §2.27H.

© The Regents of the University of California

b. Private Landlord and Housing Authority: §8 Housing Choice Voucher Programs

§2.16 (1) Applicant Eligibility Determined by Public Housing Authority

HUD's Section 8 housing programs (42 USC §1437f) place restrictions on tenant selection that affect both the private landlord and the public housing authority. Under this program, the responsibility for selecting tenants is divided between the public housing authority and the private landlord. The housing authority determines the tenants' eligibility for Section 8 assistance and issues a voucher. The amount of rental assistance provided is calculated by subtracting the amount of adjusted income that the tenants will pay for rent from the rent established by the landlord. Landlords may charge market rent; the housing authority does not set the maximum rent for a particular unit. See 42 USC §1437f(c). The tenants must pay at least 30 percent of their monthly adjusted income, but no less than the minimum rent established by the housing authority (up to $50) directly to the landlord. (Tenants on the Section 8 voucher program can be required to pay up to 40 percent of their monthly income if they rent a unit with a rent higher than the HUD fair market rent standard for the area. 42 USC §1437f(o)(2), (3).) The housing authority pays the balance of the rent to the landlord. 42 USC §§1437a(a), 1437f(c)(3). Because the housing authority does not guarantee the tenants' direct rental obligations, landlords of Section 8 units have legitimate concerns about the tenants' ability to pay the tenant's share of the Section 8 rent. See §2.9B.

For further discussion, see §1.36. See also California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.17 (2) Private Landlord's Discretion in Tenant Selection

§2.17 (2) Private Landlord's Discretion in Tenant Selection

Because the Section 8 voucher programs depend so heavily on the participation of the private sector, HUD has adopted a relatively hands-off approach to regulating landlords' exercise of discretion in selecting tenants. Procedural protections for tenants in such housing govern eligibility determinations by the housing authority, and do not regulate the tenant-selection practices of private landlords. Consistent with this approach, Congress amended some aspects of the Section 8 program. For example, Congress repealed the so-called "Take One, Take All" provisions of §8(f) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 USC §1437f(t)). This provision had prohibited landlords who accepted one Section 8 tenant from discriminating against subsequent tenants because of their status as rental subsidy holders. See Pub L 105-276, §554, 112 Stat 2518, 2610; see also 42 USC §1437f(d)(1), amended by Pub L 104-99, §402(d), 110 Stat 41 (providing that selection of tenants shall be owner's function subject to annual contributions contract between HUD and local agency). However, a housing authority may now require an owner to use any local preferences in the selection of tenants that the housing authority has adopted under its Public Housing Agency Plan. 42 USC §1437f(d)(1); see §2.14. In addition, as with housing authorities, any residency preference must not have the purpose or effect of delaying or denying acceptance of tenants based on the classes protected by the Fair Housing Act. 24 CFR §§5.410(i), 982.207(b). Similarly, under the same regulation, persons with disabilities must be afforded the same preference as working households.

WARNING: HUD allowed some federally subsidized landlords to create special temporary preferences for people displaced by Hurricane Katrina. These may still remain in effect in some subsidized housing buildings.

The California Fair Employment and Housing Act's prohibition of discrimination based on source of income may prohibit landlords from rejecting prospective tenants on the basis of their having federal Section 8 voucher assistance. See Martinez, The Case for Applying California's Source of Income Anti-Discrimination Statute to Section 8 Tenants, 31 Hous L Bull 147 (National Housing Law Project, June 2001). Some communities have adopted local ordinances that prohibit certain forms of discrimination against existing or prospective tenants who hold Section 8 vouchers. See §2.9B. Several courts have held that such laws are not preempted by the federal Section 8 statute (42 USC §1437(f)). See, e.g., Rosario v Diagonal Realty (2007) 840 NYS2d 748, 872 NE2d 860; Timkovsky v 56 Bennett, LLC (Sup Ct 2009) 881 NYS2d 823.

With respect to denial of admission for criminal activity and alcohol abuse, HUD issued final regulations in question and answer format. 24 CFR §§5.850-5.861. These regulations apply to all federally assisted housing except public housing, including housing assisted under the Section 8 voucher programs. The regulations permit the landlord to consider all relevant circumstances when screening tenants, but only in accordance with the landlords' established admission standards. The landlord may require an applicant or tenant to exclude a "culpable" household member, but may first consider whether the household member "is participating in or has successfully completed a supervised drug or alcohol rehabilitation program, or has otherwise been rehabilitated successfully." 24 CFR §5.852(b).

A landlord must deny admission to an applicant for 3 years after the date of the eviction if any household member has been evicted from federally assisted housing for drug-related criminal activity unless the person has successfully completed an approved supervised drug rehabilitation program or the culpable household member is no longer a member of the household. 24 CFR §5.854(a). A landlord must also establish standards that prohibit admission of a household if any household member is currently using an illegal drug or if past drug use may interfere with the health, safety, or right to peaceful enjoyment of the premises by other residents. 24 CFR §5.854(b). A landlord may deny admission for drug-related or violent criminal activity or other criminal activity that would threaten the health or safety of the PHA or owner or any agent or contractor who is involved in housing operations. 24 CFR §5.855(a).

Like PHAs (see §2.15A), private landlords are prohibited from denying admission to prospective Section 8 voucher tenants based on the applicant being a victim of domestic violence, dating violence, or stalking if the applicant is otherwise qualified for admission. 42 USC §1437f(c). Also like PHAs, landlords may require applicants to provide information, which must be kept confidential, documenting that the persons were abused. 42 USC §1437f(ee).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.18 c. Under State or Federally Subsidized Programs

In addition to the Section 8 voucher programs (see §§2.16-2.17), Congress created a Section 8 substantial rehabilitation program and new construction programs. See 42 USC §1437f(b)(2). Congress subsequently repealed these programs, but retained program requirements for existing projects. Under these programs, HUD entered into a direct agreement with the developer; the public housing authority was not involved. Any restrictions on private landlords' methods of tenant selection arise as a result of this agreement and applicable regulations. Other privately owned, federally subsidized housing, such as housing subsidized under the Section 221d and 236 programs are also administered by a direct agreement between HUD and the private property owner without the involvement of a public housing authority. For regulations under these programs, see 24 CFR pts 221, 236. Although no new Section 221d or 236 projects will be undertaken in the future, a number of projects controlled by HUD agreements currently exist in California. The same is true for Section 8 new construction and substantial rehabilitation projects.

Owners and managers of housing subsidized by the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA), in addition to the classes of persons protected by the Fair Housing Act, may not discriminate against persons on the basis of marital status, sexual orientation, or receipt of public assistance. 7 CFR §15d.

Generally, no project owner or PHA that owns or manages a project for the elderly or persons with disabilities may prohibit or prevent any tenant from owning common household pets or restrict or discriminate against any person in connection with admission to, or continued occupancy of, housing because of the ownership of common household pets or the presence of pets in the unit. 24 CFR §5.309.

California also has many programs that subsidize the development or rehabilitation of affordable housing. See generally 25 Cal Code Regs §§6900-6999 (governing programs administered by the state Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD)) and 25 Cal Code Regs §§10001-19400 (governing programs administered by the California Housing Finance Agency (CHFA)). Privately owned affordable housing projects funded with these subsidies often also receive federal subsidies, including subsidies from the Section 8 voucher programs. Therefore, it is possible that both federal and state regulations will apply to the tenant selection process. Moreover, some local governments have their own housing subsidy programs that are likely to have specific tenant selection criteria and discrimination protections.

Along with federal, state, and local regulations, most government subsidized housing will also be subject to a "regulatory agreement" between the governmental entity (or entities) providing the funding and the developer/owner of the housing. These agreements generally incorporate by reference the antidiscrimination protections in the applicable law or regulations, but they may also include additional selection criteria and discrimination protections.

PRACTICE TIP: The use of tenant selection preferences by private owners (including nonprofit corporations) of subsidized housing requires careful consideration and analysis of the possible impact on persons protected by the fair housing laws. Sometimes, either in an effort to better effectuate the purpose of a particular type of subsidized housing or at the behest of a local government providing the subsidy, an owner will institute a facially neutral preference that could have a discriminatory impact on protected classes. The most common type of preference that could cross the line are residency preferences or preferences for employed persons. Such preferences must be justified by a business necessity that cannot be achieved by less discriminatory means. See discussion in §2.14.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.18A d. Under State and Federal Tax Credit Programs

§2.18A d. Under State and Federal Tax Credit Programs

Over the last decade, many affordable-housing developments have been financed with state and federal "tax credits." Under these programs, investors in affordable-housing projects receive a credit applicable to their federal and state income taxes in exchange for investing in housing reserved for and affordable to lower income households. Owners of these developments are expressly prohibited from discriminating against protected classes in the operation and management of the housing. See 26 CFR §1.42-9(a). They must also certify compliance with the terms of the low income housing commitment, which includes a provision prohibiting an owner from refusing to rent to tenants with Section 8 vouchers. 26 CFR §1.42-5(c)(1)(v), (xi). State housing agencies—in California, the California Tax Credit Allocation Committee (TCAC)—must review the certifications for compliance. 26 CFR §1.42-5(c)(2); 4 Cal Code Regs §§10300-10358.

The federal departments of Housing and Urban Development, Justice, and Treasury entered into a Memorandum of Understanding on August 11, 2000, to improve oversight and compliance with these nondiscrimination requirements. The memorandum establishes procedures and standards for coordination of the investigation of cases of discrimination. See http://www.hud.gov/offices/fheo/lihtcmou.cfm.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.19 E. Prohibited Selection Factors

§2.19 E. Prohibited Selection Factors

Federal and state fair housing laws prohibit use of certain factors in selecting tenants:

- race;
- color;
- religion;
- national origin or ancestry;
- sex (including pregnancy, childbirth, gender identity and gender-related appearance and behavior);
- marital status;
- disability (see §§2.26-2.27E);
- familial status (see §§2.22-2.25);
- age;
- source of income;
- sexual orientation;
- medical condition;
- victim of domestic violence (see §§2.15A, 2.27H); and
- immigration or citizenship documentation or status.

See §§2.20, 2.30, 2.43, 2.49, 2.57-2.58, 2.60.

In California, local ordinances may prohibit housing discrimination on other grounds as well, although state law may preempt any local regulation of housing discrimination. Govt C §12993(c). See §2.48.

Communities may not adopt ordinances requiring landlords to screen tenant households for legal residency status or make it a crime to rent to households with members lacking documentation of legal residency. CC §1940.3. The Legislature adopted §1940.3 in response to the adoption of such an ordinance by the City of Escondido and consideration of similar anti-immigrant ordinances by other California cities. The court issued a temporary restraining order enjoining the Escondido ordinance, expressing serious concerns that the ordinance may violate the supremacy and due process clauses. Garret v City of Escondido (SD Cal 2006) 465 F Supp 2d 1043. The District Court in Pennsylvania permanently enjoined a similar ordinance. Lozano v City of Hazelton (MD Pa 2007) 496 F Supp 2d 477. The Northern District of Texas did the same. See Villas at Parkside Partners v City of Farmers Branch (ND Tex 2008) 577 F Supp 2d 858.

Similarly, local ordinances and policies that deliberately target protected immigrant classes by prohibiting overcrowding in rental housing and by promoting excessive and selective enforcement of building codes against owners that rent to immigrants may be challenged under 11 USC §1983. See Young Apartments v Town of Juniper (11th Cir 2008) 529 F3d 1027.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Protected Categories

§2.20 1. Summary; Authorizing Legislation

The following list includes most of the categories that are protected from landlord discrimination in selecting prospective tenants. The list is not complete because, as noted in §2.21, the Unruh Act covers arbitrary discrimination in general and thus protects an indefinite multitude of classes. The list includes references to federal and state laws and to sections in this chapter where these laws are discussed in detail. For a ready reference to the applicable fair housing laws, see the chart in §2.28.

Race:

- Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981-1982; see §§2.41-2.47);
- Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631; see §§2.30-2.40);
- California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996; see §§2.49-2.56); and
- Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51; see §§2.57-2.59).

Sex, Religion, National Origin, or Familial Status:

- Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631; see §§2.30-2.40);
- California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996; see §§2.49-2.56);
- Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51; see §§2.57-2.59); and
- Civil Code §1940.3 (immigration and citizenship status; see §§2.12 and 2.19).

Disability:

- Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631; see §§2.30-2.40);
- Americans With Disabilities Act (42 USC §§12101-12213; 28 CFR §35);
- Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 USC §794; 24 CFR §8);
- California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996; see §§2.49-2.56);
- Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51; see §§2.57-2.59); and
- Civil Code §§54.1-55 (see §2.60).

Marital Status, Ancestry, Sexual Orientation, Gender Identity, Gender Related Appearance and Behavior, or Source of Income:

- California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996; see §§2.49-2.56) and
- Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51; see §§2.57-2.59).

Age and Medical Condition:

- Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51); CC §51.2 (see §§2.22, 2.57-2.59).

In addition, discrimination is expressly prohibited against a person who is perceived to be a member of a protected class specified in the Act. CC §51.5. This also includes protection against discrimination for a person who is associated with a person who has or is perceived to have any of those characteristics. CC §51.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.21 2. Protected Categories Created by Unruh Act's Arbitrary Discrimination Proscription

§2.21 2. Protected Categories Created by Unruh Act's Arbitrary Discrimination Proscription

The Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51), which prohibits discrimination in a wide variety of businesses, including rental housing, is unique among fair housing laws. It is significant that its listing of protected classes is merely illustrative of the persons who receive protection from its prohibition against arbitrary discrimination. The listed classes are construed as illustrative rather than restrictive. See uncodified declarations of the legislature in Stats 2005, ch 420, §2; Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 180 CR 496. While the scope of the Unruh Act's non-enumerated (arbitrary) classes was limited by the cases of Gatto v County of Sonoma (2002) 98 CA4th 744, 756, 120 CR2d 550 and Hessians Motorcycle Club v J.C. Flanagans (2001) 86 CA4th 833, 103 CR2d 552, more recently courts have been receptive to construing Unruh more expansively. See Koebke v Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 C4th 824, 31 CR3d 565 (marital status discrimination by country club); Butler v Adoption Media, LLC (ND Cal 2007) 486 F Supp 2d 1022, (marital status, sexual orientation, and sex); Sisemore v Master Fin., Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 1386, 1405, 60 CR3d 719 (occupational status of home day care provider).

The Act prohibits all arbitrary discrimination against persons by a business establishment. See §§2.57-2.58. Accordingly, the Act covers housing discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, physical appearance, and other factors that the California Supreme Court has vaguely described as "personal characteristics." Harris v Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C3d 1142, 1160, 278 CR 614. It does not, however, cover discrimination on the basis of "economic characteristics" (52 C3d at 1160), although the court has indicated that characteristics related to economic status such as occupation and receipt of welfare are covered (Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 736, 180 CR 496).

In November 2009, as urgency legislation, California amended the Unruh Act to provide that any discount or other benefit "offered to or conferred on a consumer or prospective consumer by a business because the consumer or prospective consumer has suffered the loss or reduction of employment or reduction of wages" will not be considered arbitrary discrimination under the Act. CC §51.13.

Significantly, the Unruh Act covers only intentional discrimination against individuals; unlike the federal and state fair housing laws, it does not prohibit facially neutral policies that unduly burden a particular group. Harris v Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C3d 1142, 1172, 278 CR 614. Moreover, the Act does not absolutely prohibit discrimination; it prohibits only arbitrary or unreasonable discrimination. This weaker standard of review is irrelevant for the classes protected under the federal and state fair housing laws because those laws supersede the Unruh Act. See 42 USC §3615; Govt C §12955.6. For classes covered only by the Unruh Act, a standard of reasonableness suggests that the landlord may argue that overt discrimination is permissible in some circumstances, provided there is a statutory or regulatory basis indicating a societal interest in the practice. Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 743, 180 CR 496. See Sargoy v Resolution Trust Corp. (1992) 8 CA4th 1039, 10 CR2d 889 (financial institution's preferential treatment of older persons did not violate Unruh Act because of societal interest in assisting senior citizens). The landlord must still meet a significant burden, however, to justify the discrimination. Moreover, if discrimination that is permissible under the Unruh Act violates the federal Fair Housing Act or the state FEHA, those statutes will control. A violation of the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 (ADA) (42 USC §§12101-12213) (see §2.26) constitutes a violation of the Unruh Act. CC §51(f). Consequently, the California Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit held that a plaintiff alleging discrimination based on disability under CC §51 need not prove intent, because the ADA requires only a showing that the plaintiff was denied full and equal accommodations as a result of the landlord's failure to accommodate the disability. See Munson v Del Taco, Inc. (2009) 46 C4th 661, 94 CR3d 685; Lentini v California Ctr. for the Arts (9th Cir 2004) 370 F3d 837, 847; Presta v Peninsula Corridor Joint Powers Bd. (ND Cal 1998) 16 F Supp 2d 1134. Munson did not follow Gunther v Lin (2006) 144 CA4th 223, 50 CR3d 317, which had held that a showing of intentional discrimination is necessary to obtain monetary damages.

PRACTICE TIP: Pleading a violation of the ADA requires the cause of action to be asserted specifically under the Unruh Act. See, e.g., Birke v Oakwood Worldwide (2009) 169 CA4th 1540, 87 CR3d 602 (allowed complaint requesting abatement of public nuisance created by owner's failure to limit secondhand smoke in outdoor common areas to survive demurrer, but rejected cause of action under ADA; no specific facts were alleged concerning whether tenant requested (or landlord refused) reasonable accommodations, and court cited federal authority concluding that ADA does not apply to apartments and condominiums).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.22 3. Familial Status Protections

Expansion of fair housing law to prohibit discrimination on the basis of familial status has significantly increased landlords' potential liability for tenant selection. The Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 (Pub L 100-430, 102 Stat 1619) strengthened civil and administrative enforcement in housing discrimination cases and extended fair housing protections to families with children. The California Fair Employment and Housing Act was subsequently amended to conform to federal law. Stats 1993, ch 1277; Stats 1992, ch 182; see Govt C §§12955.1-12955.9; 12989-12989.3.

NOTE: Although federal and state law has prohibited familial status discrimination for many years, a national survey found that only 38 percent of the respondents were aware that refusing to rent to families with children was illegal. See 30 Hous & Dev Rep 811 (April 29, 2002). This survey suggests that lawyers representing either landlords or tenants may have an important role in educating their clients about the law.

In general, families receive the same protections as the "traditional" classes, such as race and sex. See 54 Fed Reg 3235-3236. Case law and evidentiary standards that developed in other fair housing cases are relevant to cases involving families with children, as well as to persons with disabilities (see §2.26).

Although the landlord may perceive that there are legitimate safety issues that apply to present or prospective minor residents, landlords must comply with applicable housing and building codes and statutory maintenance requirements. By doing so, the premises are considered safe for all persons, including minors and persons with disabilities. See 54 Fed Reg 3236-3237; 134 Cong Rec 19,887-88 (1988). Consequently, HUD has rejected an "unsafe for children" exemption or similarly broad limitations on civil rights protections for children based on safety. HUD v Edelstein (HUD ALJ 1991) 05-90-0821-1; HUD v Davis (HUD ALJ 1992) 10-90-0023-1 (no reasonable cause determination issued when policy at issue was to require children to be accompanied by adult at any one of three swimming pools, which was justified as reasonable limitation on actual potential danger to children); HUD v Guglielmi (HUD ALJ 1990) 02-89-0450-1 (rule excluding children from utility building that contained water pumps, shutoff valves, and electrical units, unless accompanied by parents, was not discriminatory); HUD v Murphy (HUD ALJ 1990) 02-89-0202-1 (rule prohibiting children between ages of 14 and 18 from using pool or clubhouse without adult were legitimate rules to maintain safety).

PRACTICE TIP: In practical terms, those standards can enable landlords to determine whether they are discriminating against families with children or the disabled by substituting race for any reference to children or persons with disabilities. For example, just as the law prohibits landlords from maintaining separate swimming pools based on race, it prohibits separate pools for children. See, e.g., U.S. v Plaza Mobile Estates (CD Cal 2003) 273 F Supp 2d 1084. On the other hand, fair housing law provides significant exceptions that may both expand and limit the rights of these particular classes, e.g., senior housing may discriminate against families with children. See §2.25.

Landlords may not deny a unit to a family with children because conditions at the housing are unsafe. Fair Hous. Congress v Weber (CD Cal 1997) 993 F Supp 1286 (apartment rule prohibiting children from playing in building's common areas and policy of not renting second-floor balcony apartments to families with small children); U.S. v Grishman (D Me 1993) 818 F Supp 21 (landlord's belief that property's physical characteristics would impose serious and real danger to young children); HUD v Bucha (HUD ALJ 1993) 09-91-1384-1 (manager's concern about danger posed by steep stairs did not justify refusal to rent apartment to mother with two children).

Segregating or steering tenants to different sections of a complex or to different common facilities on the basis of familial status constitutes a violation of the Fair Housing Act (FHA). Llanos v Estate of Coehlo (ED Cal 1998) 24 F Supp 2d 1052, 1058 (summary judgment denied because of factual dispute about whether landlord truly denied rights or merely offered alternative location in which to live); Drenik v Ohanesian (ED Cal, Aug. 15, 2006, No. 05-209) 2006 US Dist Lexis 60870 (landlord refused to rent second-floor units to families with children); U.S. v Plaza Mobile Estates (CD Cal 2003) 273 F Supp 2d 1084 (overly restrictive rules and limiting children's use of common facilities to certain times of day held to violate FHA); 24 CFR §100.70(a) (unlawful to restrict choices in a development); 24 CFR §100.70(c)(4) (unlawful steering practice includes assigning any person to particular section of community, neighborhood, or development or to particular floor of building because of protected characteristic).

Landlords cannot impose rules that act to unreasonably limit children's ability to play. The court in U.S. v M. Westland Co. (HUD ALJ 1994) CV 93-4141, Fair Housing-Fair Lending ¶15,941, addressed a variety of rules, applicable both to children and to all persons, imposing the standard that the rules must be the least restrictive means to accomplish a legitimate purpose. The court ruled that outright prohibitions of children in areas with billiards or shuffleboard, in the clubhouse, or in common areas was unjustified; requirements for adult supervision of minors in the pool area or "always" was also unjustified; requirements for adult supervision in the jacuzzi and while riding a bicycle were reasonable.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.23 a. Statutory Definitions

§2.23 a. Statutory Definitions

Both federal and state housing laws prohibit discrimination on the basis of "familial status." The federal Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631) defines familial status as "one or more individuals (who have not attained the age of 18 years) being domiciled with … a parent or another person having legal custody of such individual or individuals; or … the designee of such parent or other person having such custody, with the written permission of such parent or other person." 42 USC §3602(k). The Act also specifies that "familial status includes pregnant women and persons "in the process of securing legal custody" of a child. 42 USC §3602(k). The California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Govt C §§12900-12996) contains a similar definition. Govt C §12955.2.

Notably, this definition does not protect all families from discrimination, but only those that meet the definition of "familial status." By way of contrast, fair housing law protects all races from discrimination. The restrictive nature of the definition may give landlords some leeway to discriminate in favor of families with children because households without children are not protected by these definitions. The Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) would require that any discrimination in favor of families with children be reasonable. See §2.57.

Fair housing law protects virtually all households living with children. The vast majority of children live with a parent, someone having legal custody, or the designee of such persons. In Gorski v Troy (7th Cir 1991) 929 F2d 1183, the court ruled that a landlord's refusal to allow a couple to add a foster care child to their household violated the Fair Housing Act. The court explained that the Act covers a child welfare agency's proposed placement of a child in a foster care home because the agency was legal custodian of the child and had designated the foster care parents. Under this analysis, group homes for children are also included within the definition of "familial status."

Protections also extend to families with children who are guests of housing facility residents, even if the residents do not have children themselves. HUD Title VIII regulations extend protections to persons injured by decisions about their guests who may be members of any of the protected classes under the Fair Housing Act. 24 CFR §100.65(b)(4) (prohibits discrimination limiting use of privileges, services, or facilities based on protected status of "an owner, tenant or a person associated with him or her"); 24 CFR §100.60(b)(5) (prohibits evictions due to protected status of tenant or "guest").

These regulations do not distinguish among the protected categories. Therefore, guest standing is not limited only to race cases, and can be extended also to familial status, disability, or the other protected categories. Even though the regulations only refer to evictions or disparate terms and conditions, they arguably apply equally to denials of admission and retaliation. Guest standing, therefore, should apply to minors and their families who are clients or guests of residents providing family home day care services, whose exclusion by landlords, homeowner associations, or zoning authorities would be direct discrimination. See the following race cases extending civil rights protection to the resident hosts (who may not have a protected status) and the guests with the protected status: Woods-Drake v Lundy (5th Cir 1982) 667 F2d 1198; Olzman v Lake Hills Swim Club, Inc. (2d Cir 1974) 495 F2d 1333 (Civil Rights Act of 1866: discriminatory guest policies for nonprivate clubs or other amenities associated with housing; restrictive rule imposed upon application to bring in black guests violation of the Civil Rights Acts of 1866, 1871, and 1964 (42 USC §§1981, 1982, and 2000a-2000a-6)). See Lane v Cole (ED Pa 2000) 88 F Supp 2d 402; Bills v Hodges (4th Cir 1980) 628 F2d 844, 845 n1; U.S. v L & H Land Corp. (SD Fla 1976) 407 F Supp 576, 580.

The Fair Housing Act also imposes a prohibition on statements or notices that "tenants could not entertain black guests." Tillman v Wheaton-Haven Recreation Ass'n (1973) 410 US 431, 35 L Ed 2d 403, 93 S Ct 1090 (whites-only policy of swimming pool association applied to residents in local area and members seeking to use pool with black guests violated 42 USC §1982 (Civil Rights Act of 1866), 42 USC §1981 (Civil Rights Act of 1870), and Title II of Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 USC §2000a(e)). Notice that in none of these cases did the guests reside in the subject dwellings.

In general, HUD regulations under the Fair Housing Act provide a good description of particular housing practices that constitute discrimination on the basis of familial status. Prohibited practices include charging higher rents or security deposits, steering to certain units, and limiting access to facilities because of the presence of children in the household. 24 CFR §§100.50-100.90.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.24 b. Effect of Occupancy Standards

§2.24 b. Effect of Occupancy Standards

One of the most controversial areas in fair housing is occupancy standards, i.e., a landlord's restrictions on the number of occupants in a unit. Occupancy standards have become associated with familial status because families with children are by definition more likely than childless households to be large families. Occupancy standards also affect other protected classes, however, such as Latino and Asian households, which are more likely to contain multigenerational, extended families.

The U.S. Supreme Court stated that fair housing law absolutely protects governmental restrictions on occupancy if they are designed to protect the health and safety of residents, are applied uniformly, and are based on a unit's size. City of Edmonds v Oxford House, Inc. (1995) 514 US 725, 131 L Ed 2d 801, 810, 115 S Ct 1776. California's adoption of §503 of the Uniform Housing Code as a maximum occupancy standard meets this test. Health & S C §§17922, 17958.5; 25 Cal Code Regs §32.

The legality of a private, nongovernmental occupancy standard that is not intentionally used to limit families with children depends on the landlord's justification for the standard, a test that raises the issue of "disparate impact" (see §§2.5, 2.65). Explicit limitations on the number of children, as opposed to the number of persons, violate fair housing laws. See Sams v U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev. (4th Cir 1996) 76 F3d 375 (affirmance of HUD decision without a published opinion; refusal to rent to family with "too many children" because large families were destructive and needed supervision held invalid). Occupancy standards that include restrictions based on the age or sex of the children are also violative.

A landlord's intentional use of facially neutral occupancy standards to limit the number of families with children, if proved, unquestionably violates fair housing law. U.S. v Badgett (8th Cir 1992) 976 F2d 1176. See also Fair Hous. Council v Ayres (CD Cal 1994) 855 F Supp 315 (landlord's occupancy restriction of two persons per unit had disparate impact on families with children and thus discriminated on basis of familial status). But see Maki v Laakko (6th Cir 1996) 88 F3d 361 (rent increase based on number of occupants on premises, when added persons were children, was not intentional discrimination and did not violate familial status protections).

For purposes of HUD investigations, Congress attached a rider to the Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act of 1998, adopting a 1991 HUD policy, known as the Keating II Memo, that set forth numerous factors to be considered including the history of the restriction and the size and configuration of the bedrooms and units. Pub L 105-276, §589, 112 Stat 2518, 2651. HUD issued this policy as a "Notice of Statement of Policy" (see 63 Fed Reg 70257 (1998)).

In Pfaff v HUD (9th Cir 1996) 88 F3d 739, applying the Fair Housing Act (FHA), the court upheld an occupancy standard of four persons in a two bedroom house because it met HUD's test that a standard must be carefully examined "to determine whether it operates unreasonably to limit or exclude families with children." 88 F3d at 748. This test is applied on a case-by-case basis. The Pfaff court expressly rejected the more stringent "business necessity" standard that is used in other disparate impact cases. 88 F3d at 747.

WARNING: Pfaff bases its reasoning on the FHA provisions concerning "reasonable local, State, or Federal restrictions" on numbers of occupants (42 USC §3607(b)(1)), as addressed in City of Edmonds v Oxford House, Inc, supra. But the situation in Pfaff concerned private standards imposed by owners who were a married couple and not a government. This puts the precedential value of this decision into doubt as it is inconsistent with the plain meaning of the FHA and with how the Supreme Court treated this section of the FHA in Edmonds.

California law requires that an occupancy standard meet this more stringent test, i.e., that the standard "is necessary to the operation of the business and effectively carries out the significant business need it is alleged to serve." Govt C §12955.8. California law governs occupancy standards for cases that arise in California, because it provides greater rights to a protected class. 42 USC §3615; see §2.5. California landlords should therefore be prepared to provide objective evidence in support of an occupancy standard's necessity. Such evidence may include proof that the infrastructure limits occupancy. Mountain Side Mobile Estates v Secretary of HUD (10th Cir 1995) 56 F3d 1243 (limitations of mobilehome park's sewage system); Snyder v Barry Realty, Inc. (ND Ill 1996) 953 F Supp 217 (general concern about housing more than four persons in a three-bedroom apartment is insufficient absent demonstrated business necessity); U.S. v Weiss (D Nev 1994) 847 F Supp 819 (limitations of hot water system). But see U.S. v Lepore (MD Pa 1991) 816 F Supp 1011 (limitations of mobilehome park's septic tank did not justify occupancy restrictions because of existence of alternatives).

Other occupancy concerns a landlord may have that are "necessary to the operation of the business" may include the size and configuration of bedrooms, extraordinary wear and tear, increased expenses for utilities paid by the landlord, and parking restrictions.

California fair housing agencies no longer refuse to investigate cases where the occupancy standard challenged allowed at least two persons per bedroom plus one additional occupant, and will examine each claim on a case-by-case basis.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.25 c. Senior Housing Exceptions

Senior housing developments may exclude families with children or underage persons if the development meets federal and state exemptions. 42 USC §3607(b)(2); Govt C §12955.9; CC §§51.2-51.4. The federal Fair Housing Act's requirements for Housing for Older Persons (HOP) apply to all senior housing in California. For private rental units, the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) imposes additional requirements on "housing for older persons" by incorporating standards of CC §§51.2-51.4 for "senior citizen housing developments." Govt C §12955.9(b)(2). Mobilehome parks, however, qualify as senior housing by complying with the federal requirements for HOP. Govt C §12955.9(b)(3); CC §798.76.

The private landlord (other than a mobilehome park owner) seeking to limit rental units to senior citizens must follow both the federal HOP requirements and the standards of CC §§51.2-51.4. To the extent that these two laws conflict, the landlord must comply with those aspects of the law that define senior housing more stringently. This rule of construction is the result of federal and state provisions mandating that protected classes (i.e., families with children) receive the greatest protections under the law. 42 USC §3615; Govt C §12955.6. Moreover, as an exception to fair housing law, senior housing must be narrowly construed to preserve the law's purpose in prohibiting discrimination. Gibson v County of Riverside (CD Cal 2002) 181 F Supp 2d 1057.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.25A (1) Fair Housing Act (Federal) Exemptions

§2.25A (1) Fair Housing Act (Federal) Exemptions

The federal Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §§3601-3631) establishes three categories of Housing for Older Persons (HOP):

- Housing provided under any state or federal program that the HUD Secretary determines is specifically designed and operated to assist elderly persons, as defined in the state or federal program (see 42 USC §3607(b)(2)(A); 24 CFR §100.302) (note that the Secretary has not allowed any HUD funded project to claim this exemption);
- Housing intended for, and solely occupied by, persons 62 years of age or older (see 42 USC §3607(b)(2)(B); 24 CFR §100.303) (underage persons may reside in the housing if they are employees of the housing development or they provide necessary assistance to the senior as a reasonable accommodation); and
- Housing intended and operated for occupancy by persons 55 years of age or older ("55 and over housing") (see 42 USC §2607(b)(2)(C); 24 CFR §100.304).

To qualify for this last exception, the housing provider must ensure that 80 percent of the total number of occupied units have at least one person who is 55 or older, must publish and adhere to policies and procedures demonstrating its intent to provide housing for older persons, and must routinely and reliably verify the age of occupants. 24 CFR §§100.305-100.307. Prior to 1995, federal law required that 55 and over housing have significant facilities and services for older adults, but Congress repealed that requirement in the Housing for Older Persons Act of 1995 (Pub L 104-76, 109 Stat 787).

The HOP exemption is an affirmative defense to a charge of familial status discrimination. The party asserting the exemption has the burden of persuasion. Gibson v County of Riverside (CD Cal 2002) 181 F Supp 2d 1057. The FHA provides a limited immunity from monetary liability for persons who reasonably believe, in good faith, that they were complying with the exemption requirements. 42 USC 3607(b)(5); 24 CFR §100.308.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.25B (2) California (State) Exemptions

The California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) also exempts "housing for older persons" (HOP). It applies the federal HOP exemptions to mobilehome parks, Govt C §12955.9(b)(3), and uses the federal language for certain elderly housing provided under state or federal programs. 42 USC §3607(b)(2)(A); Govt C §12955.9(b)(1). In addition, it incorporates the senior housing standards found in CC §§51.2-51.12. Govt C §12955.9(b)(3). These standards apply in addition to the FHA's HOP requirements.

The senior housing development's "covenants, conditions,… restrictions, and other documents or written policy" must contain the age limitations, which may be either 55 or 62 years of age or older. CC §51.3(c). Housing for persons 55 and over must have at least 35 units except in Riverside County, where the minimum number of units is 20. CC §§51.3(b)(4) and 51.11(b)(4). This means that owners of smaller buildings (having less than 35 units) may only use a 62 and older age limitation. Given that the state occupancy limitations for underage residents in senior housing (as described below) are more permissive than the federal exemption for 62 and older housing (which allows no underage residents), the small building owner must follow the federal exemption for 62 and older housing. 42 USC §3607; 24 CFR §100.303.

At a minimum, occupancy limitations must require that "the persons commencing any occupancy of a dwelling unit include a senior citizen who intends to reside in the unit as his or her primary residence on a permanent basis." A housing provider may impose more restrictive occupancy limitations, but they "shall not be more exclusive" than one person in each unit being a senior citizen and other persons in the same unit being "a qualified permanent resident, a permitted health care resident, or a person under 55 years of age whose occupancy is permitted" because that underage person previously resided in or used the unit prior to 1985 (or 1990 under certain conditions). See CC §§51.3(h) and 51.4(b).

"Qualified permanent residents" are defined as persons who resided with the senior citizen "prior to the death, hospitalization, or other prolonged absence of, or the dissolution of marriage with, the senior occupant" and who are "45 years of age or older, or… a spouse, cohabitant, or person providing primary physical or economic support to the qualifying resident or senior citizen…." CC §51.3(b)(2). They are also certain persons with disabilities who need to live "with the senior citizen or other qualified permanent resident because of the disabling condition, illness or injury." CC §51.3(b)(3). Qualified permanent residents generally have the right to remain in the unit even though the senior citizen with whom they lived leaves the unit. CC §51.3(e). Those who have a disability and relied on the now absent senior citizen for assistance may be asked to leave if their disabling condition ends or if it continues but they pose a "significant threat to the health or safety others." CC §51.3(b)(3)(A)-(B).

Certain applications of CC §51.3 may result in inconsistencies with the federal HOP requirements. If the number of units containing underage residents (those under 55 years of age) exceeds 20 percent of all occupied units, then the housing development does not meet the HOP standard that 80 percent of the total number of occupied units have at least one person who is 55 or older. Given that CC §51.3 confers a right on certain underage persons to remain in a unit after a senior citizen leaves, the housing development may not qualify for an exemption as the number of units without a senior occupant, as defined, increases. Consequently, the development would have to become available to persons of all ages.

Unlike federal law, state law also requires that senior housing be "designed to meet the physical and social needs of senior citizens." CC §51.2(a). The design requirement does not apply to (1) developments constructed prior to February 8, 1982, and (2) developments located in Riverside County. CC §51.2(a), (c). The Unruh Act also provides a list of design features that "shall be presumed" to meet the design requirement for senior housing constructed on or after January 1, 2001. CC §51.2(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.25C (3) Application of State vs. Federal Exemptions

§2.25C (3) Application of State vs. Federal Exemptions

Civil Code §51.2 provides that housing specially designed "to meet the physical and social needs of senior citizens" be established and preserved under the terms of CC §51.3, unless otherwise preempted "by the prohibition in the federal Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 (Pub L 100-430, 102 Stat 1619) and implementing regulations against discrimination on the basis of familial status." CC §51.2(a). See also Govt C §12955.9(b)(2), cited in §2.25B. In other words, California requires application of the most restrictive senior housing exceptions under federal and state law in order to further the policy of protecting families with children from discrimination.

EXAMPLE 1: California law requires that to qualify as a "senior citizen housing development" for persons 55 years or older, the development must have at least the designated minimum number of units. CC §§51.3(b)(4), 51.11(b)(4). Otherwise, the senior housing provider must use an age limit of 62 years or older. Because federal law does not place any size requirements on housing that uses an age limit of 55 years, California law applies to require a minimum number of units in housing for persons 55 years and older.

EXAMPLE 2: Since 1985, California law has required that senior housing contain specific accommodations "designed to meet the physical and social needs of senior citizens." CC §51.2; Bliler v Covenant Control Comm. (1988) 205 CA3d 18, 24, 252 CR 50. Federal law no longer requires any significant facilities or services in housing for older adults. See 42 USC §3607(b)(2)(C). To determine if a development for persons 62 years and older or 55 years and older qualifies as senior housing, California law applies and requires special design.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/ 4. Protections for Persons With Disabilities/§2.26 a. Impairments Covered by Statutory Definitions; Proscribed Inquiries by Prospective Landlords

4. Protections for Persons With Disabilities

§2.26 a. Impairments Covered by Statutory Definitions; Proscribed Inquiries by Prospective Landlords

The federal Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 (Pub L 100-430, 102 Stat 1619) added "handicap" as a protected class. See 42 USC §3604(f). Under 42 USC §3602(h), the definition of "handicap" is:

> (1) a physical or mental impairment which substantially limits one or more of such person's major life activities,
> (2) a record of having such an impairment, or
> (3) [being] regarded as having such an impairment, but such term does not include current, illegal use of or addiction to a controlled substance.

This broad definition is based on long-standing federal law protecting the civil rights of persons with disabilities under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 USC §794) (Pub L 93-112, Title V, §504). It is also virtually identical to the definition of "handicap" in the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 (ADA). 42 USC §12102(2). Under the ADA regulations, major life activities include "caring for oneself, performing manual tasks, walking, seeing, hearing, speaking, breathing, learning, and working." 29 CFR §1630.2(i).

In 2008, Congress amended the ADA to require the courts to determine whether an individual is disabled "without regard to the ameliorative effects of mitigation measures," excepting eyeglasses or contact lenses. ADA Amendments Act of 2008 (ADAAA) (Pub L 110-325, §3(4)(E), 122 Stat 3553). The ADAAA did not change the language defining "disability." Therefore, no change should be implied in the policy of construing these statutes in a consistent manner.

The ADAAA superseded decisional law, including Sutton v United Air Lines, Inc. (1999) 527 US 471, 144 L Ed 2d 450, 119 S Ct 2139, and similar rulings in Albertson's, Inc. v Kirkingburg (1999) 527 US 555, 144 L Ed 2d 518, 119 S Ct 2162; Toyota v Williams (2002) 534 US 184, 151 L Ed 2d 615, 122 S Ct 681. The ADAAA clarified congressional intent on existing language in the ADA, whereas the Supreme Court had previously limited protections to disabled persons in opinions interpreting the ADA. These decisions began to be used as analogous precedent in Fair Housing Act (FHA) and section 504 cases, and the ADAAA specifically overturned the ADA decisions of Toyota and Sutton and codified language intended to clarify the meaning of "disability" under ADA. See Pub L 110-325, §2, 122 Stat 3553.

Important provisions of the ADAAA include the following:

- A bright line standard of 6 months is used to determine whether the duration of a condition renders it permanent (42 USC §12102(3)(B));
- Working is considered a major life activity (MLA) along with a number of additional MLAs (42 USC §12102(2)(A));
- Conditions that are episodic or in remission are to be considered as if active (42 USC §12102(4)(D)); and
- Disability status is to be construed without regard to the effects of mitigating measures such as medication, equipment, or prosthetics (but not eyeglasses or contact lenses) (42 USC §12102(4)(E)) (see also Kemppainen v Aransas County Detention Ctr. (SD Tex, June 23, 2009, No. C-08-194) 2009 US Dist Lexis 52914).

The three primary fair housing statutes that address disability (the FHA, 42 USC §§3601-3631 (virtually all housing); §504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 USC §794) (federally funded projects); and the Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA), Title II, Subtitle A, 42 USC §§12131-12134 (state and local government activities)) and the many regulations and cases interpreting these statutes concerning accommodation or modification requirements are interrelated in a unique manner. The FHA provisions concerning disability were intended by Congress to be interpreted in a manner consistent with Rehabilitation Act of 1973 §504. HUD v Dedham Hous. Auth. (HUD ALJ 1992) 01-90-0424-1; HUD v Ocean Sands, Inc. (HUD ALJ 1993) 04-90-0231-1; H Rep No. 100-711, reprinted in 1988 US Code Cong & Ad News 2186 (referencing Southeastern Community College v Davis (1979) 442 US 397, 60 L Ed 2d 980, 99 S Ct 2361). The ADA extends the section 504 discrimination prohibitions to state and local governments and adopts the general prohibitions of discrimination established under §504. The FHA and the ADA are both to be interpreted in a manner that is consistent with §504. 42 USC §12201(a) (ADA does not "apply a lesser standard" than that found in §504); Bragdon

v Abbott (1998) 524 US 624, 631, 141 L Ed 2d 540, 553, 118 S Ct 2196 (ADA is to be "construed in accordance with pre-existing regulatory interpretations," referring to §504 and the FHA); 28 CFR §35.

Both the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) and the Civil Code explicitly prohibit housing discrimination on the basis of a person's disability. Govt C §12955; CC §54.1(b). In 2000, the California legislature struck the definition of disability in the housing section of the FEHA (Govt C §12955.3) and incorporated the language of Govt C §12926 in both the FEHA and Civil Code. It also clarified that this definition of "disability" has a "broader coverage" than the federal law. Govt C §12926.1. Most significantly, protected disabilities under state law include those that simply cause a limitation (rather than federal law's more stringent substantial limitation) on a major life activity. Govt C §§12926(i), (k), (l), 12926.1(c). Additionally, the FEHA does not consider mitigating measures (such as medications, assistive devices, or reasonable accommodations) in determining whether a physical or mental impairment limits a major life activity. Govt C §12926(k)(1)(B). See Colmenares v Braemar Country Club, Inc. (2003) 29 C4th 1019, 130 CR2d 662. The effect of this broad definition is that a potentially large segment of the population falls within the FEHA's protected class of persons with disabilities.

The federal regulations provide a nonexhaustive listing of the various physical or mental impairments covered by the definition. 24 CFR §100.201. The definition includes protections for persons who take drugs legally and persons who once were, but are no longer, illegal drug users. See §2.17. See also U.S. v Southern Mgmt. Corp. (4th Cir 1992) 955 F2d 914.

The protections of the Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §§3601-3631) for persons with disabilities provide an important exception: A landlord is not required to rent to people "whose tenancy would constitute a direct threat to the health or safety of other individuals or whose tenancy would result in substantial physical damage to the property of others." 42 USC §3604(f)(9). This safe harbor applies only if an interactive process indicates that a reasonable accommodation is not possible. See Roe v Sugar River Mills Assocs. (D NH 1993) 820 F Supp 636; Roe v Housing Auth. of the City of Boulder (D Colo 1995) 909 F Supp 814. Notably, FEHA does not contain a similar exception, and, in spite of the federal exception, a landlord still has an obligation, as described in §2.27 below, to make a reasonable accommodation to a person with a disability.

Because all the substantive prohibitions of federal and state fair housing law are available to persons with disabilities, landlords cannot exclude or otherwise discriminate against applicants because they have disabilities. For example, requiring persons with certain disabilities to purchase liability insurance because of unfounded fears that they may cause injury to themselves or others constitutes intentional discrimination on the basis of disability. HUD v Twinbrook Village Apartments (HUD ALJ 2001) 02-00-0256-8; HUD v Country Manor Apartments (HUD ALJ 2001) 05-98-1649-8. See Directory for website containing HUD ALJ decisions.

In general, landlords cannot ask applicants about whether they have a disability or about the nature of the disability. 24 CFR §100.202(c); HUD Notice PIH 2003-31 (HA) (11/26/03); HUD Notice PIH 2006-13 (HA). For example, a landlord may not ask whether a person with a disability is capable of living independently. Cason v Rochester Hous. Auth. (WD NY 1990) 748 F Supp 1002. Landlords may ask all applicants, however, about their ability to meet the obligations of tenancy, their qualifications for housing reserved for persons with disabilities, their qualifications for a priority available to persons with disabilities, their conviction of the illegal manufacture or distribution of a controlled substance, and their current use of controlled substances. 24 CFR §100.202(c)(1)-(5); LaFlamme v New Horizons, Inc. (D Conn 2009) 605 F Supp 2d 378 (facility for severely disabled violated FHA when it drew distinctions on basis of severity of disability in admissions eligibility criteria, required extensive medical information for review by panel of disabled tenants and staff, and refused to allow plaintiff to resume residency after week in medical facility).

The housing provider may ask for information from the disabled person when the nexus between a disabled person's accommodation request and a disability is not apparent. See Magee v Boston Land Co. (2d Cir 2004) 90 Fed Appx 560 (unpublished opinion) (person with disability failed to provide medical or other trustworthy documentation to establish that his disability required requested accommodation); Roe v Sugar River Mills Assocs. (D NH 1993) 820 F Supp 636 (under FHA, accommodation must be attempted or must not be possible before eviction can occur when plaintiff did not ask for accommodation); Roe v Housing Auth. of the City of Boulder (D Colo 1995) 909 F Supp 814 (citing Sugar River Mills with approval and applying rationale under FHA). See §§2.27-2.27E regarding accommodations.

California privacy rights, however, may further limit the scope of inquiries permitted under federal law. See generally Hill v National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n (1994) 7 C4th 1, 26 CR2d 834 (right to privacy recognized where there is a legally protected privacy interest, a reasonable expectation of privacy, and a serious invasion of privacy). See also Loder v City of Glendale (1997) 14 C4th 846, 59 CR2d 696.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.27 b. Reasonable Accommodations and Modifications

A person's disability is a relevant factor for the landlord to consider when the applicant or tenant requests that the landlord make a reasonable accommodation under otherwise valid selection or fair housing criteria. Under both federal and state fair housing law, a landlord must make "reasonable accommodations in rules, policies, practices or services, when such accommodations may be necessary to afford [a person with a disability] equal opportunity to use and enjoy a dwelling." 42 USC §3604(f)(3)(B); Govt C §12927; CC §54.1(b)(3)(B). In 2004, the U.S. Department of Justice and the Department of Housing and Urban Development issued a joint statement regarding the rights and responsibilities of housing providers and persons with disabilities relating to the reasonable accommodations requirements of the Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §§3601-3631). See Joint Statement of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Department of Justice—Reasonable Accommodations Under the Fair Housing Act (May 17, 2004). See http://www.hud.gov/offices/fheo/library/huddojstatement.pdf.

On March 5, 2008, the U.S. Department of Justice and HUD issued a joint statement regarding reasonable modifications under the Fair Housing Act. See Joint Statement of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Department of Justice—Reasonable Modifications Under the Fair Housing Act (Mar. 5, 2008), online at http://www.hud.gov/utilities/intercept.cfm?/offices/fheo/disabilities/reasonable_modifications_mar08.pdf.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.27A (1) Reasonable Accommodations

§2.27A (1) Reasonable Accommodations

Under a "reasonable accommodation" requirement, a landlord must do something more than treat tenants with a disability equally. It imposes a duty on landlords to reasonably accommodate the needs of handicapped tenants. An accommodation request occurs when:

- The tenant is disabled (see §2.26);
- There is a request or notice of a need for accommodation;
- There is a nexus between the request and the tenant's disability; and
- The request is reasonable.

An accommodation request is generally required for the denial to be actionable. Frazier v City of Grand Lodge, Michigan (WD Mich 2001) FH-FL ¶16,502; HUD v Dutra (HUD ALJ 1996) 09-93-1753-8. See Directory for website containing HUD ALJ decisions. However, an accommodation request is not required where the respondent has previously communicated that any such request would be a "futile gesture." International Bhd. of Teamsters v U.S. (1977) 431 US 324, 52 L Ed 2d 396, 97 S Ct 1843; Norris v Allied (9th Cir 1996) 948 F Supp 1418, aff'd sub nom Norris v Sysco Corp. (1999) 191 F3d 1043. A request also may not be needed where the respondent is on notice that the complainant is disabled and that they may need an accommodation to address known adverse housing conditions. In this case the housing provider is obligated to initiate "an interactive process" to determine what accommodation might be needed. This recent development in the law has vast implications.

The housing provider may need to inquire whether a disabled tenant needs an accommodation. In School Bd. of Nassau County v Arline (1987) 480 US 273, 94 L Ed 2d 307, 107 S Ct 1123, the employee never requested an accommodation before the school district attempted to terminate her as a teacher because she had communicable tuberculosis. Nonetheless, the Supreme Court ruled that in order for employers to escape liability, they have "an affirmative obligation to make a reasonable accommodation." 480 US at 288 n19.

To establish the necessary nexus between the accommodation and the disability, the Fair Housing Act requires that the accommodation "may be necessary" to provide the disabled person equal opportunity to use and enjoy a dwelling. 42 USC §3604(f)(3)(B). The standard for determining if a request is necessary was addressed in U.S. v California Mobile Home Park Mgmt. Co. (9th Cir 1997) 107 F3d 1374, where a disabled tenant requested as an accommodation a waiver of $1.50 per day or $25 per month guest parking fees for her home health care aide. The Ninth Circuit ruled that to establish that an accommodation request "may be necessary" the disabled person must show that the denial of accommodation "caused the denial of her use and enjoyment of her dwelling." 107 F3d at 1380.

Until recently, courts uniformly held that the policy must affect the disabled differently than the nondisabled. That was changed, however, in U.S. Airways, Inc. v Barnett (2002) 535 US 391, 152 L Ed 2d 589, 122 S Ct 1516, which established that the policy that is the subject of the accommodation request does not have to adversely affect only disabled persons but can also pose a barrier to those who are presently not disabled. In the case of Barnett, after developing a disability an airline baggage handler requested to be transferred to a less physically demanding position contrary to a seniority policy for such transfers.

In Giebeler v M & B Assocs. (9th Cir 2003) 343 F3d 1143, the court ruled that a disabled person who had limited financial resources due to disability had a right to request as an accommodation that the landlord accept a co-signer, despite the existing rule that co-signers were not accepted. The court pointed out that since the disabled person was in financial straights because of the disability, the financial barrier was "on its face" related to his disability and constituted an acceptable basis for an accommodation request of a no co-signer policy that affected disabled and nondisabled alike. The court cited, among other cases, the Supreme Court's opinion in Barnett, which held that barriers to a disabled facility's use permit that affected the facility's financial viability denied one of the few sources of housing for persons with serious mental or physical disabilities that "prevent these persons from maintaining employment, obtaining education or securing permanent housing." See 74 F3d at 942.

A request is reasonable if it does not pose any fundamental alteration or undue burden on the respondent's program. In Southeastern Community College v Davis (1979) 442 US 397, 60 L Ed 2d 980, 99 S Ct 2361, the first §504 case for the Supreme Court to interpret, the Court held that a nursing school did not have to undertake "affirmative action," and did not have to "accommodate" the needs of a candidate for admission who did not meet the established physical qualifications where doing so would have involved the "substantial" or "major" adjustments in its program. The student had substantial hearing impairments such that use of a hearing aid was not enough, and she had to lip read or use some other auxiliary assistance. The college showed that allowing this nursing student to continue on in her studies would have substantially lowered standards for nurses, who should be able to understand oral commands during instruction or while on the job in order to safely discharge their duties. 442 US at 413. The Davis decision relied heavily on the then newly implemented HEW regulations that defined many key concepts for disabled accommodations. 45 CFR §84 (1978). Particularly, the Davis decision cited with approval the HEW approach of requiring that disabled persons be able to meet all of the essential criteria for participation in a program "in spite of his [or her] handicap." 442 US at 405, referring to 45 CFR §84.3(k)(3) (1978) and 45 CFR pt 84, App A (1978).

In Majors v Housing Auth. (5th Cir 1981) 652 F2d 454, the court held that a housing authority must reasonably accommodate a mentally disabled tenant with the need for a companion animal despite a "no pets" policy, unless the policy constitutes an undue financial or administrative burden. The court noted that it was possible for the tenant to enjoy the benefits of the companion animal provided that some accommodation was made for the disability. The no pet rule was different from the qualifications in Southeastern Community College which were "inherent in the program and in the nursing profession." 652 F2d at 457.

In U.S. Airways, Inc. v Barnett (2002) 535 US 391, 152 L Ed 2d 589, 122 S Ct 1516, the Supreme Court enunciated a shifting burden test under the ADA that first requires the disabled person to show that the accommodation requested is reasonable "on its face." Once the plaintiff makes this showing, the defendant then must show special circumstances that demonstrate undue hardship to the defendant if the accommodation is made. The burden then shifts back to the disabled person.

Examples of failures to make a reasonable accommodation include the following:

- A refusal to waive a "no pet" rule to accommodate a depressed tenant's emotional need for her dog (Auburn Woods I Homeowners Ass'n v FEHC (2004) 121 CA4th 1578, 18 CR3d 669; HUD v Riverbay Corp. (HUD ALJ 1994) 02-93-0320-1; see 24 CFR §100.204(b)).
- A refusal to waive a "first-come/first-served" policy for allocating parking spaces (Shapiro v Cadman Towers, Inc. (2d Cir 1995) 51 F3d 328; see 24 CFR §100.204(b)).
- A refusal to accept a rent "guarantor" as an accommodation to a disabled tenant-applicant whose income was restricted because of his disability (Giebeler v M & B Assocs. (9th Cir 2003) 343 F3d 1143, 1146); but see Bell v Tower Mgmt. Servs. (D NJ, July 15, 2008, No. 07-CV-5305) 2008 US Dist Lexis 53514, in which the disabled plaintiff also asked for waiver of the minimum income requirement as an accommodation to her disability, which she alleged caused her to have a lower income. The court ruled against the plaintiff because she did not allege she "was capable of meeting the minimum income requirements prior to becoming disabled."
- A refusal to communicate with a home-seeker via a telephone relay-service operator for the deaf (U.S. v Space Hunters, Inc. (SD NY 2004) 2004 US Dist Lexis 23699, WL 2674608, aff'd in part and vacated in part (2d Cir 2005) 429 F3d 416).
- A refusal to rescind an eviction notice because of the disability of a disruptive minor may be held an unreasonable refusal to accommodate under the FHA, FEHA, and the Unruh Civil Rights Act. The minor had been placed in residential care after the disturbance. McAlister v Essex Prop. Trust (CD Cal 2007) 504 F Supp 2d 903.

Examples of unreasonable accommodation requests are the following:

- A request by long-term tenants (who later developed disabilities) that the landlord install a ramp or lift costing from $25,000 to $55,000 to make units built in 1910 accessible to wheelchairs (Rodriquez v 551 W. 157th St. Owners Corp. (SD NY 1998) 992 F Supp 385).
- A request to permit marijuana use prescribed for a disability under the Compassionate Use Act (Health & S C §11362.5) (Ross v RagingWire Telecommunications, Inc. (2008) 42 C4th 920, 70 CR3d 382).

A landlord may be obligated to accept a Section 8 rental assistance voucher as rent payment from a disabled tenant, especially if the tenant is already in residence. The court in Salute v Stratford Greens Garden Apartments (ED NY 1996) 918 F Supp 660, aff'd (2d Cir 1998) 136 F3d 293, found that the Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 (42 USC §§3601-3619) obligation to afford reasonable accommodation does not require the landlord to accept a Section 8 voucher. However, the Supreme Court's subsequent decision in U.S. Airways, Inc. v Barnett (2002) 535 US 391, 152 L Ed 2d 589, 122 S Ct 1516, calls into question the reasoning in Salute. Barnett recognized that accommodations:

- Are not limited to the direct manifestations of the disability and must address practical needs caused by the disability; and
- May include special treatment for disabled persons.

535 US at 405, 152 L Ed 2d at 604. See Freeland v Sisao LLC (ED NY, Apr. 1, 2008, No. CV-07-3741) 2008 US Dist Lexis 26184. Accordingly, in Giebeler v M & B Assocs. (9th Cir 2003) 343 F3d 1143, the court held that allowing family members to cosign a lease guaranteeing rent payment by a disabled person unable to work was a reasonable accommodation of the tenant's inability to meet the landlord's income requirements. In Freeland, the court ruled that an existing tenant can allege sufficient facts to support a claim that acceptance of Section 8 was a reasonable accommodation of a disability that prevented the tenant from working.

Another source of reasonable accommodation standards is a HUD conforming rule that authorizes local public housing authorities to provide specified accommodations to Section 8 voucher tenants who are disabled. See 24 CFR pt 982. These include higher rent and utility allowances, longer search time, and live-in aides. (See HUD Notice PIH 2005-5 (HA) and HUD Notice PIH 2008-13 (HA), which provide that there is no limit on the extra time that the housing authority may allocate to a disabled tenant seeking a unit for which to use a voucher; that a PHA may approve a payment standard of up to 110 percent of the HUD Fair Market Rent; and that housing authorities must provide the tenant with a list of accessible units and agencies that provide assistance for moving expenses and security deposits.) Public housing authorities must also provide reasonable accommodations in the tenant selection and screening process to ensure that persons with disabilities have equal access to assisted housing. In addition to agency offices being accessible, the PHA should provide materials for sight- and hearing-impaired persons and should make special arrangements for applicants unable to come to the PHA. HUD Notice PIH 99-52 (Dec. 15, 1999).

In public housing and for Section 8/voucher programs administered by a public housing authority, a PHA must waive its occupancy standards if a family with a person with disabilities needs a unit that is larger than the occupancy standards allowed by the PHA because of the person's disabilities. HUD Notice PIH 99-52. A PHA also may not prohibit an eligible disabled family from accepting a nonaccessible unit that the family is eligible for which may become available before an accessible unit. HUD Notice PIH 2002-01.

Accommodation requests to repair housing facilities may be reasonable if the tenant can show that the lack of the repair that is otherwise required under the contract or by applicable codes would deny equal use and enjoyment of the premises. See Congdon v Strine (ED Pa 1994) 854 F Supp 355, in which the court held that repair requests were rightfully the subject of accommodation requests and were subject to the undue burden defense.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.27B (2) Reasonable Modifications

§2.27B (2) Reasonable Modifications

Another unique aspect of the protections for persons with disabilities is the requirement that landlords permit reasonable tenant modifications to existing premises if they are necessary to afford a disabled person full enjoyment of the premises. 42 USC §3604(f)(3)(A); Govt C §12927(c)(1); CC §54.1(b)(3)(A). See U.S. v Freer (WD NY 1994) 864 F Supp 324 (trailer park owner's refusal to allow tenant's installation of wheelchair ramp to trailer's entrance preliminarily enjoined as probable violation).

However, a tenant with a disability cannot require, under the Unruh Act (CC §51) or the Disabled Persons Act (CC §54), that a landlord make structural modifications unless required by a separate provision of law relating to structural access standards. Coronado v Cobblestone Village Community Rentals, LP (2008) 163 CA4th 831, 77 CR3d 883, disapproved on other grounds in Munson v Del Taco, Inc. (2009) 46 C4th 661, 94 CR3d 685. The court held that neither state law access standards nor the Americans With Disabilities Act require structural modifications to portions of rental property not used by the general public.

On March 5, 2008, the U.S. Departments of Justice (DOJ) and Housing and Urban Development (HUD) issued a "Joint Statement of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Department of Justice—Reasonable Modifications Under the Fair Housing Act." See http://www.hud.gov/utilities/intercept.cfm?/offices/fheo/disabilities/reasonable_modifications_mar08.pdf. The Joint Statement resolved a number of questions. It characterizes requests for assigned accessible parking spaces that require the housing provider to create signage, repaint markings, redistribute spaces, or create curb cuts as accommodations, not modification requests, even though some construction is required. Joint Statement, p 7, Q 11.

The Joint Statement states unequivocally that a request for permission for a modification is required; it does not refer to a requirement for an interactive process, as exists under accommodation rules. Joint Statement, p 9, Q 15. Note that the statute refers to discrimination in regard to modifications as "a refusal to permit" modifications. 42 USC §3604(f)(3)(A). The Joint Statement says: "An applicant or resident is not entitled to receive a reasonable modification unless she requests one." It also says that "[a] person with a disability must have the housing provider's approval before making the modification." It does not say what the consequence of making a modification without prior approval is, and states immediately after the above that the request for modification must be granted if the person with a disability meets the requirements for modification under the Act and provides the relevant documents and assurances. Joint Statement, p 10, Q 16.

The Joint Statement also precludes a private housing provider from insisting on moving a person with a disability requesting a reasonable modification to another unit that already has the requested feature. Since the person with a disability will be financing the modifications, and they are reasonable, the housing provider can propose, but not insist on, the move. Joint Statement, p 10, Q 18. However, since federally assisted housing providers must pay for accommodations that would otherwise be modifications under the Fair Housing Act for private housing providers, a federally assisted housing provider may offer an alternative unit with the needed features instead of being required to alter facilities in a person with a disability's current unit. Joint Statement, p 17, Q 31, Example 2.

Federal regulations limit the landlord's obligation to permit tenant modifications by requiring the tenant to pay for the modifications, to restore the interior of the premises to the condition that existed before the modification, to make payments into an account for purposes of covering restoration costs, and to make assurances that the modifications will be made according to applicable building permits and done in "a workmanlike manner." 24 CFR §100.203. A landlord may not, however, impose a higher security deposit on a disabled person who seeks a reasonable modification. 24 CFR §100.203; CC §54.1(b)(3)(A). Also, the landlord may impose restoration requirements after considering the following factors: (1) the extent and nature of the proposed modifications; (2) the expected duration of the lease; (3) the credit and tenancy history of the individual tenant; and (4) other information that may bear on the risk to the housing provider that the premises will not be restored. Further, the landlord may only require restoration in a common area if there is no public benefit to keeping the modification in the area. See generally Joint Statement, pp 12-15, Q 24-28. For the units it owns, a public housing authority must follow the more stringent requirements of 24 CFR §§8.4, 8.23(b)(1), 8.24, and 8.33, which require PHAs to pay the cost of necessary modification unless such modifications are determined to be an undue financial hardship and administrative burden.

People with disabilities seeking accessible features in housing may have rights to those accessible features under other rules than those that apply to modification, and in this manner avoid obligations to finance the modification.

People with disabilities may make requests to comply with otherwise applicable design and construction requirements under the Fair Housing Act. Joint Statement, p 8, Q 12. The design and construction requirements of Fair Housing Act are found at 42 USC §3604(f)(1) and (2), as defined by 42 USC §3604(f)(3)(C). Privately operated housing first occupied on or after March 12, 1991, must have seven accessibility features regarding its facilities in common areas and in covered units, if there is at least one covered unit located in a structure with four or more units. Covered units are in structures with four or more units, and are on the ground floor or in structures that contain an elevator. 42 USC §3604(f)(7). More information on design and construction requirements can be obtained from Fair Housing Accessibility First (see Directory).

Federally funded projects must provide accessible facilities that do not require modification in many respects, so that the program participant does not have to ask the recipient to change the nature of facilities. 24 CFR §§8.20-8.33. New construction and certain alterations of multifamily housing facilities must be accessible. 24 CFR §§8.22, 8.23. The Americans With Disabilities Act (42 USC §§12101-12213) regulations similarly require state and local government activities to be accessible, including the housing activities. 28 CFR §§35.149-35.151. Note that the ADA requirements for accessibility do not have the 5-unit threshold required for the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 USC §794) accessibility standards. Compare ADA regulations defining "facility" at 28 CFR §35.104 with Rehabilitation Act regulations defining "multifamily housing project" at 24 CFR §8.3. Where an undue financial hardship is found, the PHA must provide and implement alternatives to the modification.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.27C (3) Accessibility

§2.27C (3) Accessibility

Landlords must provide facilities that are accessible to persons with disabilities. Failure to do so creates exposure to liability when the dwelling is covered by fair housing laws with accessibility requirements and disabled persons are denied use and enjoyment of these premises because of inaccessible features.

NOTE: Requests to repair features that were already accessible can be an accommodation request. See Congdon v Strine (ED Pa 1994) 854 F Supp 355. See §2.27A.

- Design and Construction Requirements Under the Fair Housing Act. There may be a design and construction violation of the Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §§3601-3631). See 42 USC §3604(f)(1)-(3). Under 42 USC §3604(f)(3)(C), privately operated housing first occupied on or after March 13, 1991, must have seven accessibility features regarding its facilities in common areas and in covered units, if there is at least one covered unit located in a structure with four or more units. Covered units are in structures with four or more units and are on the ground floor or in structures that contain an elevator. 42 USC §3604(f)(7). More information on design and construction requirements can be obtained from Fair Housing Accessibility First (see Directory). Disabled persons may make requests to comply with otherwise applicable design and construction requirements. Joint Statement of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Department of Justice—Reasonable Modifications Under the Fair Housing Act, p 7, Q 12.
- Federally Assisted Programs Subject to §504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973. If a disabled person who needs a modification lives in housing that receives federal assistance, then the housing is subject to the accessibility requirements of §504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 USC §794). HUD's section 504 accessibility regulations for HUD-assisted and HUD-funded public housing are found at 24 CFR §§8.20-8.33. The various federal agencies will have their own regulations implementing the Rehabilitation Act of 1973. Section 504 requires federally assisted housing providers to provide accessible programs at their own expense and not at the expense of the disabled persons who are the ultimate beneficiaries. HUD Handbook 4350.3, §§2-8(A)(1); Joint Statement, p 16, Q 31. The disabled person does not need to finance modifications that are already required by §504. See Joint Statement, p 16, Q 31.
- State or Local Government Activities Subject to the ADA Accessible Features Requirements. If a disabled person who needs a modification lives in housing that is a state or local government facility, then the housing is subject to the Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA), Title II, Subtitle A accessibility requirements. See 42 USC §§12131-12134. The Department of Justice ADA accessibility regulations that apply to housing are found at 28 CFR §§35.149-35.151. These regulations are administered by various federal agencies, as designated in 28 CFR §35.190. The ADA and its regulations require state or local governments and state or local government-assisted housing providers to provide accessible programs at their own expense. 28 CFR §§35.149-35.151. Thus, the disabled person does not need to finance modifications that are already required by the ADA.
- Residential Facilities Covered by the ADA Public Accommodations Accessibility Requirements. Although the ADA does not apply to privately owned houses, apartments, and condominiums (Birke v Oakwood Worldwide (2009) 169 CA4th 1540, 1552, 87 CR3d 602; Independent Hous. Servs. v Fillmore Ctr. Assocs. (ND Cal 1993) 840 F Supp 1328, 1344), the public accommodations accessibility requirements in Title III of the ADA (42 USC §12182(a)) may apply to privately owned facilities. See Nicholls v Holiday Panay Marina, LP (2009) 173 CA4th 966, 93 CR3d 309 (tenant who rented boat slip in private marina allowed to sue owners for lack of wheelchair accessibility); Kuchmas v Towson Univ. (D Md 2008) 553 F Supp 2d 556 (resident in private dormitory on public school property allowed to bring ADA action for lack of wheelchair accessibility).
- Removal of Accessible Features. In Elliot v Sherwood Manor Mobile Home Park (MD Fla 1996) 947 F Supp 1574, a federal district court treated the threat to remove an access ramp as either a denial of a request for accommodation or a modification. The disabled plaintiff did not specify which provision of the Fair Housing Act (FHA) the defendants violated. The court observed that the accommodation and modification provisions of the FHA were implicated. 947 F Supp at 1577. Similarly, in Thompson v Westboro Condominium Ass'n (WD Wash, Aug. 25, 2006, No. C05-1893) 2006 US Dist Lexis 60328, a disabled person alleged that the denial of the ability to leave an access ramp installed when not in use was a denial of a reasonable accommodation request. In denying the homeowners association's motion for summary judgment, the court recognized that by denying the plaintiff access to her unit, plaintiff experienced pain and suffering every day. There was no allegation of denial of a request for modification in Thompson, yet the right to make a reasonable modification was implicated because removal of a modification is denial of a modification.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.27D (4) Accommodation and Modification Request Procedures; Interactive Process

§2.27D (4) Accommodation and Modification Request Procedures; Interactive Process

The HUD/DOJ Joint Statement on Reasonable Modifications (see §2.27B) provides guidance to landlords receiving requests for reasonable accommodations or modifications. A landlord may establish written procedures for making and handling a request, but may not refuse a request on the basis of a tenant's failure to follow the procedures. Requests do not need to include the words "reasonable accommodation" or "modification." In addition, requests are not needed where they would be a "futile gesture," or where the housing provider is on notice that an accommodation may be necessary for a disabled person having difficulty with his or her housing. See §2.27A. See Douglas v Kriegsfeld Corp. (DC 2005) 884 A2d 1109.

Once a generalized request for an accommodation is made (see §2.27A), the landlord is obligated to engage in an interactive process with a tenant to determine whether a request for accommodation is necessary to afford the tenant with an equal opportunity to use and enjoy the housing. Auburn Woods I Homeowners Ass'n v FEHC (2004) 121 CA4th 1578, 1598, 18 CR3d 669. In making inquiries, however, care must be taken to avoid asking for unnecessary, private information about the nature or severity of a person's disability. See 24 CFR §100.202.

When there is a requirement to engage in an interactive process the provider must ask the tenant if there is an accommodation that the housing provider can consider to resolve the housing-related problem, but not ask if the disabled tenant does not wish to proceed. Otherwise, the housing provider risks taking action that illegally intrudes on the disabled tenant's privacy, and engaging in discriminatory disparate treatment in the terms and conditions of residency. If the actions of the tenant still breach the rental agreement and the tenant does not wish to engage in an interactive process to seek an accommodation, then the housing provider should proceed as it would for any other tenant who breaches the rental agreement. However, the housing provider should prepare proper documentation to withstand an investigation of a fair housing complaint alleging that the housing provider denied a reasonable accommodation, or failed to engage in an interactive process to seek a reasonable accommodation. See, e.g., Groner v Golden Gate Garden Apartments (6th Cir 2001) 250 F3d 1039.

If the disabled person responds to the provider's inquiry then the housing provider is obligated to seek an accommodation, and should follow interactive process guidelines. Barnett v US Air, Inc. (9th Cir 2000) 228 F3d 1105.

The Fair Housing Act (FHA) states that it does not require a dwelling to be made available to a disabled person who presents a danger to the person or property of third parties. 42 USC §3604(f)(9). This safe harbor applies only if an interactive process indicates that a reasonable accommodation is not possible. See Roe v Sugar River Mills Assocs. (D NH 1993) 820 F Supp 636; Roe v Housing Auth. of the City of Boulder (D Colo 1995) 909 F Supp 814; Boston Hous. Auth. v Bridgewaters (Mass 2009) 898 NE2d 848. The FHA does not expressly include in this safe harbor dangers posed by the disabled person to himself or herself. 42 USC §3604(f)(9).

Courts have still held, even in the face of this provision of the FHA, that for an eviction to occur the housing provider must show that no accommodation is possible. Roe v Sugar River Mills Assocs., supra; Roe v Housing Auth. of the City of Boulder, supra. These decisions heavily rely on language in the House Judiciary Committee report on amending the FHA in 1988 to include disability provisions that follow the United States Supreme Court's decision in School Bd. of Nassau County v Arline (1987) 480 US 273, 94 L Ed 2d 307, 107 S Ct 1123. See, e.g., Roe v Sugar River Mills Assocs., 820 F Supp at 639.

In general, if an accommodation has been attempted and did not work, and there is no other accommodation that can be identified, then there may be no further obligation to engage in an interactive process to seek an accommodation. In Groner v Golden Gate Garden Apartments (6th Cir 2001) 250 F3d 1039, a disabled person with depression and schizophrenia was the subject of several noise complaints over six years, and landlord attempted to accommodate by contacting the disabled person's social worker and soundproofing the front door. The annual lease was later converted to month-to-month, and then the disabled person was given a termination notice when the disturbance continued. The court held that no accommodation would have solved the problems, and that the disabled person must show that a requested accommodation was reasonable.

PRACTICE TIP: Housing providers should exercise caution before determining that no reasonable accommodation is possible. The cases that address the requirement for an interactive process are replete with egregious conduct by the subject disabled person that still needed to be accommodated.

The following cases required further interactive process before eviction:

- Roe v Housing Auth. of the City of Boulder (D Colo 1995) 909 F Supp 814 (court did not grant eviction after tenant struck and injured another tenant; accommodation must be attempted or must not be possible before an eviction can occur in case where plaintiff did not ask for an accommodation);
- Roe v Sugar River Mills Assocs. (D NH 1993) 820 F Supp 636 (disabled person threatened resident with physical violence leading to disabled person's conviction in criminal court for disorderly conduct; court ruled that accommodation must be sought through interactive process and must demonstrate that no reasonable accommodation will eliminate or acceptably minimize risk posed to other residents before eviction could be carried out);
- Scialabba v Sierra Blanca Condominium Number One Ass'n (ND Ill, July 11, 2001, No. 00 C 5344) 2001 US Dist Lexis 10054 (to evict disabled tenant posing direct threat to other tenants, landlord must show attempt to reasonably accommodate could not remove risk; court pointed to failures by condominium association to respond to requests to negotiate accommodation by disabled child's parents); and
- Douglas v Kriegsfeld Corp. (DC 2005) 884 A2d 1109 (plaintiff stated claim for failure to accommodate after landlord failed to discuss reasonable accommodation that would have cured tenant's default).

The courts allowed the eviction in the following cases:

- Wirtz Realty Corp. v Freund (Ill App 1999) 721 NE2d 589 (court upheld eviction based on recent objective threats by disabled tenant including brandishing large knives; parents of disabled tenant were involved throughout and behavior only escalated);
- Arnold Murray Constr. v Hicks (D SD 2001) 621 NW2d 171 (eviction allowed based on direct threat where brain-injured tenant exposed women in complex to his nudity, failed to close security door, and presented abusive and threatening behavior; court required landlord show no accommodation would eliminate or acceptably diminish risk disabled man posed; disabled man did not offer any proposed accommodation to deal with threatening behavior); and
- Foster v Tinea (La App 1997) 705 So2d 782, 785-6 (disabled man denied renewal of lease based on direct threats; court pointed to several years of misconduct including chasing children with machete, throwing tire tool into group of children, vulgarity, drinking that worsened temper, vulgar music, and sexual comments made to women in complex; court held that direct threats would not be considered if reasonable accommodations would eliminate or acceptably minimize risk; parents of disabled man tried to address behavior, at request of landlord in seeking accommodation).

Generally, information establishing whether a person is disabled can be provided by the person. Verification may also be provided by a medical professional, peer support group, social service agency, or reliable third person in a position to know about the individual's disability.

See generally Belville and Ryan, Enabling the Disabled in Multi-Family Housing, 23 Cal R Prop J 37 (Winter 2005); Garland, A New Framework for Evaluating the Fair Housing Amendment Act's "Direct Threat" Cases, 41 Clearinghouse Rev J of Poverty L & Policy 594 (Mar.-Apr. 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.27E c. Attorney Fees

Under the Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA) (42 USC §12205), the trial court has the discretion to award attorney fees to a prevailing plaintiff, unless special circumstances make the award unjust. Jankey v Poop Deck (9th Cir 2008) 537 F3d 1122. A prevailing defendant, however, is not entitled to fees unless the plaintiff's action was frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation. See Hubbard v SoBreck, LLC (9th Cir 2009) 554 F3d 742. On attorney fees in actions under the Fair Housing Act (FHA), see §2.38.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.27F 5. Gender Protections

Discrimination based on gender involves not only the same fundamental rules discussed above for other protected groups but also specialized rules for cases involving sexual harassment and domestic violence.

Not renting to recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children was held by a court to have a disparate impact on women. HUD v Ross (HUD ALJ 1994) 01-92-0466-8.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.27G a. Sex Harassment

Sex harassment comes in two forms, quid pro quo and hostile environment. Honce v Vigil (10th Cir 1993) 1 F3d 1085, 1089; HUD v Krueger (HUD ALJ 1996) 05-93-0196-1. Quid pro quo harassment involves a housing provider conditioning the terms, conditions, or privileges of housing on granting a request for sexual favors. See 24 CFR §§100.65(b)(5), 100.400(c)(2); HUD v Krueger, supra. Under these authorities, the plaintiff must show that the request for sexual favors is unwelcome, that it affects the plaintiff's enjoyment or use of housing, and that it regards sex.

Hostile environment harassment exists "when the offensive behavior unreasonably interferes with use or enjoyment of the premises." Honce, 1 F3d at 1090; DiCenso v Cisneros (7th Cir 1996) 96 F3d 1004, 1008. Whether an environment is sufficiently hostile or abusive depends on the frequency, severity, and degree to which it is physically threatening or humiliating or whether it involved a "mere offensive utterance." 96 F3d at 1008. In Jackson v Chicago Hous. Auth. (ND Ill, Oct. 7, 2008, No. 08 CV 278) 2008 US Dist Lexis 79655, the court held that a claim under the Fair Housing Act (FHA) was stated in allegations that the defendant placed a man across the hall from a female tenant whom that man had previously sexually assaulted.

An owner is vicariously liable for an agent's sexual harassment if the owner is sufficiently involved or on notice. U.S. v Veal (WD Mo 2004) 365 F Supp 2d 1034, 1037; U.S. v Balistrieri (7th Cir 1992) 981 F2d 916, 930.

Confusion is engendered by the notion that a perpetrator of sex harassment can assert a defense that he or she subjected both men and women to harassing conduct and thus such equal treatment is not disparate treatment. See Oncale v Sundowner Offshore Servs., Inc. (1998) 523 US 75, 80, 140 L Ed 2d 201, 118 S Ct 998. In fact, any intentional discrimination is illegal as long as the adverse conduct is motivated "because of" the subject's membership in a protected group. Price Waterhouse v Hopkins (1989) 490 US 228, 239, 104 L Ed 2d 268, 109 S Ct 1775; Oncale, 523 US at 81. Arguably, under the ruling in Price Waterhouse, this proposition must also be true even if the discriminatory activity happened only once or as an exception to otherwise even-handed conduct.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.27H b. Domestic Violence Discrimination

§2.27H b. Domestic Violence Discrimination

Fair housing laws may help targets of domestic violence when the housing provider uses policies that on their face reveal stereotypical assumptions about women (overt intent theory), when actions of a housing provider reveal stereotypical assumptions about women (overt intent theory), or when the housing provider terminates the tenancy of the female target but not the tenancy of the male perpetrator or otherwise when responding to incidents of domestic violence treats females differently than males (disparate treatment theory). If the domestic violence victim lives separately from the perpetrator, her eviction based on general "no violence" policies may be prohibited by fair housing laws under the disparate impact theory because, based on criminal statistical data available from the United States and California Attorney Generals' offices, the victims of domestic violence are predominantly women. See, e.g., http://www.ag.ca.gov/cjsc/publications/misc/dv98.pdf.

It is presently uncertain whether protections exist under fair housing laws if there are reoccurring incidents of domestic violence that materially disturb the neighbors or result in property damage. Recurring domestic violence may eventually give a housing provider just cause to terminate a victim's tenancy. This may not be merely on a second incident. Questions about the applicability of the Fair Housing Act (FHA) also exist when the victim requests a transfer to escape the perpetrator. See, e.g., Robinson v Cincinnati Metro. Hous. Auth. (SD Ohio, Apr. 29, 2008, No. 1:08-CV-238) 2008 US Dist Lexis 39523. Some untested theories described below may provide more opportunities for plaintiffs under fair housing laws in these circumstances.

Domestic violence can perhaps result in a successful eviction, or other adverse action, if the eviction is directed against both the target and the perpetrator who are residents and does not involve policies or practices based on stereotypical assumptions. This is especially true given the "one-strike-you're-out" HUD public housing policies not proscribed by the federal Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) (Pub L 109-162, 119 Stat 2960).

The following California state laws may be used to seek rights for the target of domestic violence:

- The Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) (prohibits arbitrary discrimination against "all persons"; see Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 732, 180 CR 496; In re Cox (1970) 3 C3d 205, 216, 90 CR 24);
- The Unfair Competition Law (UCL) (Bus & P C §§17200-17210) (prohibits unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business practices); and
- Civil Code §1946.7 (permits breaking lease for domestic violence victims on 30-day notice documented by police report or restraining order; establishes that incidence of domestic violence creates rebuttable preemption of nuisance if victim does not reside in the housing facility (see CCP §1161)).

In Bouley v Young-Sabourin (D Vt 2005) 394 F Supp 2d 675, the court denied a landlord's motion for summary judgment when the landlord evicted a woman after finding out that she was the victim of domestic violence. The court found that claims that the termination was initiated because the tenant was a victim of domestic violence and because the tenant refused to listen to the defendant's attempt to discuss religion with her after the incident, if proven, could constitute unlawful discrimination under the FHA. See also Smith v City of Elyria (ND Ohio 1994) 857 F Supp 1203, 1212, an equal protection case commenced under 42 USC §1983 against a police department, in which the court stated, "There is evidence in the record from which a jury could find the defendant's domestic disputes policy had a discriminatory impact and was motivated by intent to discriminate against women," citing stereotypical attitudes toward women reflected in the policies and in the manner in which the police responded to the domestic violence incident in question.

In Robinson v Cincinnati Metro. Hous. Auth. (SD Ohio, Apr. 29, 2008, No. 1:08-CV-238) 2008 US Dist Lexis 39523, the court held that the denial of a transfer request by a public housing tenant who was a victim of domestic violence did not violate the FHA. The court stated that there was no likelihood of success on the merits in this injunction action because the defendant's transfer policy was gender neutral and nondiscriminatory on its face, and the law applicable to public housing does not mandate a transfer on the basis of domestic violence. Although the housing authority did provide for transfers in instances in which there was a hate crime related to the placement of the victim by the housing authority, the placement of the victim has no bearing on the perpetration of the domestic violence. The court also found that there was no irreparable injury because the defendant cannot be required to deter an independent third party from causing potential injury through criminal conduct. Ultimately, the court found that the housing authority had not denied the plaintiff any benefits due to her under its relationship with the housing authority; there was no eviction, nor were any housing authority services denied.

In Jackson v Chicago Hous. Auth. (ND Ill, Oct. 7, 2008, No. 08 CV 278) 2008 US Dist Lexis 79655, the court denied a motion to dismiss an intimidation claim, under FHA §3617, that the Chicago Housing Authority (CHA) intimidated a woman resident by placing a man who had sexually assaulted her across the hall from her dwelling. The CHA's control of the proximity of the perpetrator to the subject of domestic violence was the basis of liability in this case.

PRACTICE TIP: These cases suggest that the landlord in Robinson could be liable under fair housing laws for not responding to control the perpetrator by removing the victim to an undisclosed location if there is proof of discriminatory impact on women. It may have assisted the court if the plaintiff in Robinson produced records of the defendant's transfer of others. This would show that denying a transfer to the female target of domestic violence was an act of omission or an exception made on the basis of gender, creating fair housing liability by failing to control a known perpetrator of violence.

To date, no case has adopted the theory that landlords should control domestic violence perpetrators by removing the target to an undisclosed location. Although there is no duty to accommodate on the basis of gender under fair housing laws, the duty to act when there is both an opportunity to control violence and an ongoing relationship involving a duty to protect the victim may create fair housing obligations that reach outcomes similar to those in premises liability cases. See, e.g., Rosales v Stewart (1980) 113 CA3d 130, 169 CR 660; Uccello v Laudenslayer (1975) 44 CA3d 504, 118 CR 741; Bradley v Carydale Enters. (ED Va 1989) 707 F Supp 217.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.28 IV. CHART: GUIDE TO FAIR HOUSING AND ANTIDISCRIMINATION LAWS

§2.28 IV. CHART: GUIDE TO FAIR HOUSING AND ANTIDISCRIMINATION LAWS

Both landlords' and tenants' attorneys may use the chart that begins on page 208 as a guide for determining which federal and state fair housing laws apply to a particular case. The chart is indexed to the discussion of the fair housing laws in this chapter, including the Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631), the Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981-1982), the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51), and the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996).

A. ACTIONABLE BASES OF DISCRIMINATION

	Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631) (see §2.30)	Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §1982) (see §2.41)	Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) (see §2.57)	California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) (see §2.49)
Basis of Discrimination
1. Race	Yes (42 USC §3604)	Yes (42 USC §1982)	Yes (CC §51)	Yes (Govt C §12955(a))
2. Religion, National Origin, Ancestry	Yes (42 USC §3604)	No	Yes (CC §51)	Yes (Govt C §12955(a))
3. Immigration status	Yes, if effect on class protected under FHA (42 USC §3604; see Espinoza v Hillwood Square Mut. Ass'n (ED Va 1981) 522 F Supp 559).	No under §1982. Uncertain under §1981 if based on private acts (compare Bhandari v First Nat'l Bank (5th Cir 1987) 829 F2d 1343 with Duane v GEICO (4th Cir 1994) 37 F3d 1036 and Espinoza v Hillwood Square Mut. Ass'n (ED Va 1981) 522 F Supp 559) (§1981 covers alienage and immigration status in privately owned and managed housing)	Yes, if arbitrary (see In re Cox (1970) 3 C3d 205, 90 CR 24); or if a violation of CC §1940.3	Yes, if effect on basis of race, national origin (see also CC §1940.3; §§2.12, 2.19)
4. Sex	Yes (42 USC §3604)	No	Yes (CC §51)	Yes (Govt C §12955(a)); except for shared living area of single dwelling unit, available only to persons of one sex (Govt C §12927(c)(2)(B))
5. Marital Status	No	No	Yes (CC §51)	Yes (Govt C §12955(a); Smith v FEHC (1996) 12 C4th 1143, 51 CR2d 700)
6. Arbitrary Discrimination (e.g., receipt of welfare payments, long hair)	No	No	Yes (In re Cox (1970) 3 C3d 205, 90 CR 24)	No
7. Familial Status	Yes (42 USC §3604)	No	Yes, if arbitrary (see Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 740, 180 CR 496)	Yes (Govt C §12955(a))
8. Disability	Yes (42 USC §3604)	No	Yes (CC §51)	Yes (Govt C §12955(a))
9. Age	No	No	Yes (CC §§51-51.3)	No
10. Sexual Orientation	No	No	Yes (CC §51)	Yes (Govt C §12955(a))

11. Source of Income	No	No	Yes, if arbitrary (see 59 Ops Cal Atty Gen 223 (1976); Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 180 CR 496)	Yes (Govt C §12955(a))
12. Medical Condition	No	No	Yes (as defined in Govt C §12926)	Yes (Govt C §12926)
13. Gender Identity Appearance and Behavior	No	No	Yes (CC §51; Govt C §12926(p); Pen C §422.56)	Yes (Govt C §§12926(p), 12955(a); Pen C §422.56)

B. PARTIES WHO MAY ENFORCE THE LAW

	Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631) (see §§2.30-2.40)	Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §1982) (see §2.41)	Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) (see §2.57)	California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) (see §§2.49-2.56)
Enforcement Party
1. Private Citizens Against Whom Discrimination Is Directed	Yes (42 USC §§3610(a), 3613(a))	Yes (Denny v Hutchinson Sales Corp. (10th Cir 1981) 649 F2d 816)	Yes (CC §52(a))	Yes (Govt C §12980(a))
2. Persons Affected by Discrimination Directed at Persons Protected by Fair Housing or Civil Rights Laws	Yes (Trafficante v Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (1972) 409 US 205, 34 L Ed 2d 415, 93 S Ct 364)	Yes (Walker v Pointer (ND Tex 1969) 304 F Supp 56)	Yes (CC §51.5) (see §2.20)	Probably, but unsettled
3. Noncitizens	Yes (42 USC §3612)	No	Yes (CC §52(a))	Yes (Govt C §12980(a))
4. Public Agency or Official	U.S. Attorney General, if there is a "pattern or practice" of denial of rights "raises an issue of general public importance" (42 USC §3614(a)); if enforcement matter referred to Attorney General by Sec'y of HUD (42 USC §3614(b)(1)(A), (b)(2)(A))	No	State Attorney General, District Attorney, or city attorney (CC §52(c))	State Attorney General or Director of Fair Employment and Housing (Govt C §12980(b))
5. Fair Housing Agencies and Other Organizations Diverting Resources to Enforce Fair Housing Laws	Yes Havens Realty Corp. v Coleman (1982) 455 US 363, 71 L Ed 2d 214, 102 S Ct 1114	No	Unsettled	Yes
	Fair Housing Act	Civil Rights Act of 1866
6. Guest	Yes; Woods-Drake v Lundy (5th Cir 1982) 667 F2d 1198, FH-FL ¶15,417; U.S. v L & H Land Corp. (SD Fla 1976) 407 F Supp 576, 580; 24 CFR §100.60(b)(5); 24 CFR §100.65(b)(4)	Yes, Olzman v Lake Hills Swim Club, Inc. (2d Cir 1974) 495 F2d 1333
7. Neighborhood Resident	Yes, Havens Realty v Coleman (1982) 455 US 363, 71 L Ed 2d 214, 102 S Ct 1114
8. Broker denied commission	Yes, Crumble v Blumthal (7th Cir 1977) 549 F2d 462

9. Other member of household not the target of the discrimination	Yes, U.S. v Forest Dale (ND Tex 1993) 818 F Supp 954

C. PROCEDURAL CONSIDERATIONS

	Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631) (see §2.24)		Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §1982) (see §2.34)	Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) (see §2.45)	California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) (see §§2.42-2.44)
	Administrative Remedies; Civil Action (42 USC §§3610, 3612) (see §§2.33-2.38)	Civil Action (independent of HUD involvement (42 USC §3613)) (see §§2.39-2.40)
Procedure
1. Agency Handling	HUD for investigation, conciliation, and possible enforcement (42 USC §3610(a)-(c)); HUD refers to state agency if equivalent rights and remedies available under state law (42 USC §3610(f))	No	No	DFEH can investigate, conciliate, adjudicate, and order relief (Govt C §§12930(f)(2), 12970)	DFEH for investigation, conciliation, hearing, and binding decision (Govt C §§12980-12989.3)
2. Civil Action	Yes, if HUD believes a civil action is justified (42 USC §3610(c))	Yes, even if complaint was filed with HUD under (42 USC §§3610(a), 3613(a))	Yes (Denny v Hutchinson Sales Corp. (10th Cir 1981) 649 F2d 816)	Yes (CC §52(a))	Yes (Govt C §§12980(h), 12989)
3. Statute of Limitations	One year to file with HUD (42 USC §3610(a)(1)(A)(i); for Attorney General, the statute is 18 months for enforcement of act regarding discriminatory practice; and 90 days for enforcement of conciliation agreement (42 USC §3614(b))	Two years (42 USC §3613(a)(1))	Probably 2 years under CCP §335.1 (see Wilson v Garcia (1985) 471 US 261, 85 L Ed 2d 254, 105 S Ct 1938)	Unsettled (see §2.69); probably 2 years under CCP §335.1; possibly 1 year under CCP §340(a)	Complaint must be filed with DFEH within 1 year after alleged violation occurred or terminated (Govt C §12980(b)); civil action must be filed within 2 years after occurrence or after termination of alleged discriminatory practice (Govt C §§12980(h), 12989.1)
4. Federal Court Jurisdiction	Yes (42 USC §§3610(e)-(f), 3612(o)); enforcement of administrative order in federal circuit court (42 USC §3612(j))	Yes (42 USC §3613(a)(1)(A))	Yes, without regard to amount in controversy (28 USC §1343(a)(4)	No	No
5. State Court Jurisdiction	Yes (see Williams v Horvath (1976) 16 C3d 834, 129 CR 453)	Yes (42 USC §3613(a)(1)(A))	Yes (Sullivan v Little Hunting Park, Inc. (1969) 396 US 229, 24 L Ed 2d 386, 90 S Ct 400)	Yes (CC §52)	Yes (Govt C §12980(h))
6. Limited Civil Case Jurisdiction	No	No	No	Yes, subject to jurisdiction limit	Yes (Govt C §12980(h))

D. REMEDIES

	Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631) (see §§2.32-2.40)		Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §1982) (see §§2.41-2.47)	Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) (see §2.57)	California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) (see §§2.51-2.56)
	Administrative Remedies; Civil Action (42 USC §§3610, 3612, 3614) (see §§2.33-2.38)	Civil Action (independent of HUD involvement (42 USC §3613)) (see §§2.39-2.40)			Administrative Proceeding (Govt C §§12980-12989.3) (see §§2.52-2.55)	Civil Action (if DFEH does not issue an accusation (Govt C §§12980(h), 12989) (see §2.56)
Remedy
1. Temporary Restraining Order	Yes (42 USC §§3610(e), 3612(g)(3), (j), 3614(d)(1)(A))	Yes (42 USC §3613(c)(1))	Yes (see Sullivan v Little Hunting Park, Inc. (1969) 396 US 229, 24 L Ed 2d 386, 90 S Ct 400)	Yes (see Burks v Poppy Constr. Co. (1962) 57 C2d 463, 20 CR 609)	Yes (Govt C §12983)	Yes (see Govt C §12989.2; Commodore Home Sys., Inc. v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 211, 185 CR 270)
2. Injunction	Yes (42 USC §§3610(e), 3612(g)(3), (j), 3614(d)(1)(A))	Yes (42 USC §3613(c)(1))	Yes (see Jones v Alfred H. Mayer Co. (1968) 392 US 409, 20 L Ed 2d 1189, 88 S Ct 2186)	Yes (see Burks v Poppy Constr. Co. (1962) 57 C2d 463, 20 CR 609)	Yes (Govt C §§12983, 12987(a)(2))	Yes (see Govt C §12989.2; Commodore Home Sys., Inc. v Superior Court, supra)
3. Affirmative Relief (e.g., landlord must rent unit to plaintiff)	Yes (42 USC §§3612(g)(3), (o)(3); 3614(d)(1)(A))	Yes (42 USC §3613(c)(1))	Yes (see Sullivan v Little Hunting Park, Inc., supra)	Yes (see Burks v Poppy Constr. Co. (1962) 57 C2d 463, 20 CR 609)	Yes (Govt C §12987(a)(1))	No (see Govt C §12989.2, superseding Commodore Home Sys., Inc. v Superior Court, supra)
4. Punitive Damages	Yes, civil penalties (42 USC §§3612(g)(3), 3614(d)(1)(C))	Yes (42 USC §3613(c)(1))	Yes (Woods-Drake v Lundy (5th Cir 1982) 667 F2d 1198)	Statutory penalties of up to three times actual damage, but not less than $4000 (CC §52(a). No additional punitives under CC §3294 (Doran v Embassy Suites Hotel (ND Cal 2002) 2002 US Dist Lexis 16116)	Civil penalty of up to $10,000 to $50,000, depending on prior violations (Govt C §12987(a)(3))	Yes (as limited by Govt C §12989.2; Commodore Home Sys., Inc. v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 211, 185 CR 270)
5. Compensatory Damages	Yes (42 USC §§3612(g)(3), (o)(3), 3614(d)(1)(B))	Yes (42 USC §3613(c)(1))	Yes (Phiffer v Proud Parrot Motor Hotel, Inc. (9th Cir 1980) 648 F2d 548)	Yes (CC §52(a))	Yes (Govt C §12987(a)(4)) (and recovery for emotional distress is allowed; see §2.55)	Yes (see Govt C §12989.2; Commodore Home Sys., Inc. v Superior Court, supra)
6. Costs	Yes, prevailing party other than U.S. (42 USC §§3612(p), 3614(d)(2))	Yes (42 USC §3613(c)(1))	Yes, unless court otherwise directs (42 USC §1988(b); Fed R Civ P 54(d))	Yes, to prevailing plaintiff (CC §52(a))	Yes (Govt C §12987(a)(3)) (including expert witness fees; see §12965(b))	Yes (Govt C §12989.2; Commodore Home Sys., Inc. v Superior Court, supra) (including expert witness fees; see §2.56)

7. Attorney Fees	Yes, prevailing party other than U.S. (42 USC §§3612(p), 3614(d)(2))	Yes (42 USC §3613(c)(2))	Yes, to prevailing party (42 USC §1988(b); Fed R Civ P 54(d)(2))	Yes, to prevailing plaintiff (CC §52(a))	Yes (Govt C §12987(a)(3))	Yes (Govt C §12998(h)) (see Flannery v California Highway Patrol (1998) 61 CA4th 629, 71 CR2d 632; Graham v DaimlerChrysler (2004) 34 C4th 553, 21 CR3d 331, affirming availability of "catalyst" theory; confirming that multiplier is appropriate in certain cases)
8. Court-Appointed Attorney	Yes	Yes (42 USC §3613(b))	No	No	Yes	Yes

E. EXEMPT HOUSING RENTALS

	Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631) (see §2.31)	Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §1982) (see §2.41)	Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) (see §2.57)	California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) (see §2.49)
Type of Housing Rented
1. Single-Family House Rented by owner	Exempt (42 USC §3603(b)(1)) if: 1. Owner is "private Individual" and does not own more than 3 single family homes at one time; 2. Owner does not own interest in or hold right to sale or rental proceeds of more than 3 single-family homes at one time; 3. Owner does not use rental facilities of real estate broker, agent, salesperson, or any person in business of selling or renting dwellings; and 4. Owner does not use discriminatory advertising in rental of dwelling.	No exemption	Probably no exemption if nonowner occupied (see 56 Ops Cal Atty Gen 546 (1973))	Exempt (Govt C §12927(c)(2)(A)-(B)): 1. Rental of portion of owner occupied single-family dwelling to no more than 1 roomer or border; 2. Advertising for housing limited to persons of one sex for sharing of living areas in a single dwelling unit.
2. Duplex, Triplex, or Fourplex	Exempt if owner resides in one of the units (42 USC §3603(b)(2))	No exemption	No exemption	No exemption
3. Five Units or More	No exemption	No exemption	No exemption	No exemption
4. Housing Owned by Private Club	Limitation of rental to members is exempt (42 USC §3607(a)) if: 1. Club is not open to public (i.e., limited to members); 2. Club provides	No exemption	Unsettled	No exemption lodging as incident to its primary purpose; and 3. Housing is not owned or operated for commercial purpose.

5. Housing Owned by Religious Organization	Limiting rentals to persons of same religion exempt (42 USC §3607(a)) if project does not restrict tenancy on basis of race, color, or national origin and is not owned or operated for commercial purpose.	No exemption	Unsettled	Exempt to extent preference given, to persons of same religion, unless membership in religion restricted to race, color, or national origin (Govt C §12955.4)
6. Mobilehome Sites	No exemption (42 USC §3602(b) see U.S. v City of Hayward (9th Cir 1994) 36 F3d 832), unless qualified as housing for older persons under 42 USC §3607(b). See §§2.22-2.25C, 6.18.	No exemption, unless qualified as housing for older persons under 42 USC §3607(b). See Taylor v Rancho Santa Barbara (9th Cir 2000) 206 F3d 932.	No exemption, unless qualified as housing for older persons under CC §§51.2-51.4. See §§2.25B, 6.18.	No exemption, unless qualified as housing for older persons under Govt C §12955.9. See §§2.25B, 6.18.
7. Emergency Shelters and Transitional Housing	No exemption (see Turning Point, Inc. v City of Caldwell (9th Cir 1996) 74 F3d 941, 942 ; Community House, Inc. v City of Boise (9th Cir 2007) 490 F3d 1041, 1048, fn 2)	No exemption	No exemption	No exemption

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.29 V. FEDERAL ANTIDISCRIMINATION AND FAIR HOUSING LAWS

The principal federal statute that prohibits discrimination in the sale, rental, and financing of housing is the Fair Housing Act of 1968, as amended by the Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 (42 USC §§3601-3619; see §§2.30-2.40). It is also referred to as Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 (Pub L 90-284, 82 Stat 73). With its 1988 amendments, the Fair Housing Act has become the most important federal fair housing statute because of its expanded civil and administrative enforcement and protection of new classes from housing discrimination. HUD regulations adopted under the Fair Housing Act provide help in understanding the law and some basic examples of the law's coverage. 24 CFR §§100.50-100.400.

The Fair Housing Act establishes only the minimum for fair housing protections. It expressly permits state laws, such as California's Fair Employment and Housing Act, to grant additional protections to the enumerated classes. 42 USC §3615. On the other hand, the federal Act preempts any state or local law that provides lesser protections to the enumerated classes. 42 USC §3615.

Other significant federal fair housing laws include:

- The Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981-1982; see §§2.41-2.47);
- Title IX of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 (42 USC §3631), which makes it a crime to intimidate or interfere with a potential tenant because of his or her race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status, or national origin;
- Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 USC §§2000d—2000d-6), which prohibits discrimination in federally assisted programs;
- Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 USC §794), which prohibits handicap discrimination in federally assisted programs;
- Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (42 USC §§6101-6107), which prohibits age discrimination in federally assisted programs; and
- Executive Order No. 11,063 (as amended by Executive Order No. 12,259, 46 Fed Reg 1253 (1980); Executive Order No. 12892, 59 Fed Reg 2939 (1994) and reprinted in the historical and statutory notes to 42 USC §1982), which requires equal opportunity in housing.
- Americans With Disabilities Act, Title II, Subtitle A, 42 USC §§12131-12134 which prohibits discrimination against the disabled in state or local government activities. HUD is assigned administrative authority over state and local government public housing, housing assistance, and referral programs. See 28 CFR §35.190(b)(4).

© The Regents of the University of California

A. Fair Housing Act

1. Scope

§2.30 a. Application, Protections, and Requirements

The Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631) (FHA) is a comprehensive statute designed to enforce a policy of fair housing throughout the United States. Enacted as Titles VIII and IX of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, the FHA is substantially broader in scope than the Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981-1982; see §§2.41-2.47). It protects all persons, not just citizens, against discrimination on specified bases. 42 USC §3604. Therefore, a noncitizen who has suffered discrimination on the basis of race, color, national origin, or any other enumerated basis, may invoke the protections of the FHA. See, e.g., Espinoza v Hillwood Square Mut. Ass'n (ED Va 1981) 522 F Supp 559. The FHA makes it illegal to take any of the following actions based on a person's race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status, or national origin (42 USC §3604(a)-(e)):

- Refuse to sell or rent after making a bona fide offer, or to refuse to negotiate for the sale or rental of a dwelling, or otherwise to make the dwelling unavailable (see 24 CFR §§100.60, 100.202(a));
- Discriminate in the terms, conditions, or privileges of the sale or rental of a dwelling, or in the provision of services or facilities (see 24 CFR §§100.65, 100.202(b));
- Make, print, or publish any notice, statement, or advertisement, with respect to the sale or rental of a dwelling, that indicates any preference, limitation, or discrimination (see 24 CFR §100.75);
- Represent that any available dwelling is not available for inspection, sale, or rental (see 24 CFR §100.80); and
- Induce or attempt to induce for profit the sale or rental of any dwelling through representations regarding the possible entry into the neighborhood of persons of a particular race, color, religion, sex, familial status, or national origin.

The FHA also prohibits discrimination based on a person's handicap or association with a handicapped person, and requires landlords to make reasonable accommodations and to allow reasonable modifications to a dwelling unit for a person with a handicap (see §2.27). 42 USC §3604(f); 24 CFR §§100.201-100.205.

The FHA may be invoked when retaliation against a protected class occurs. Edwards v Marin Park, Inc. (9th Cir 2004) 356 F3d 1058.

Under HUD regulations it is illegal to "steer" a housing applicant, i.e., to discourage a person from renting by communicating that he or she would not be comfortable or compatible with existing residents, or assigning a person to a particular section of development on the basis of that person's race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status, or national origin. 24 CFR §100.70.

The FHA also protects persons who associate with members of a protected class. Woods-Drake v Lundy (5th Cir 1982) 667 F2d 1198, 1201.

"Dwelling" is defined as any building or portion of a building that is actually occupied or intended for occupancy as a residence, and vacant land offered for sale or lease for the construction of such a building. 42 USC §3602(b). This definition includes mobilehome sites (U.S. v Grooms (MD Fla 1972) 348 F Supp 1130), summer homes (U.S. v Columbus Country Club (3d Cir 1990) 915 F2d 877), and transitional housing for homeless persons (Community House, Inc. v City of Boise (9th Cir 2007) 490 F3d 1041).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.31 b. Exemption

Expressly exempt from coverage by the Fair Housing Act is the rental of a single-family home in narrow circumstances in which (42 USC §3603(b)(1)):

(1) The landlord does not own, or have an interest in, more than three single family dwellings;

(2) The landlord does not sell more than one dwelling in a two-year period; and

(3) The rental relies on neither a real estate broker nor written discriminatory statements.

See Hodorowski v Bell (ED Wis 1978) 455 F Supp 432; Singleton v Gendason (9th Cir 1976) 545 F2d 1224. Also exempt are owner-occupied roominghouses or small apartments if they contain living quarters for no more than four families living independently of one another. 42 USC §3603(b)(2).

As indicated by a leading commentator on fair housing, the most important lesson about these exemptions is that they have rarely succeeded in protecting a defendant from liability. Schwemm, Housing Discrimination: Law and Litigation (2001). More important, the California Fair Employment and Housing Act does not exempt the properties described in federal law and thus covers virtually all rental units in the state (see §2.49).

As noted in §2.25, the Fair Housing Act exempts "housing for older persons" from its prohibition against discrimination based on "familial status." 42 USC §3607(b); 24 CFR §§100.300-100.308. State law, however, provides a different and more restrictive exemption for senior housing, and California landlords must comply with those more restrictive provisions. See §2.1.

A religious group or organization may give preference to persons of the same religion in the sale, rental, or occupancy of dwellings that it owns or operates for noncommercial purposes, provided religious membership is not restricted by race, color, or national origin. 42 USC §3607. In addition, a private club, not open to the public, which maintains a noncommercial lodging incidental to its primary purpose, may limit rental to its members or give its members preference. 42 USC §3607. But see U.S. v Columbus Country Club (3d Cir 1990) 915 F2d 877.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.32 2. Enforcement

There are three separate and independent methods for enforcing the provisions of the Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631):

(1) A victim of illegal discrimination may file an administrative complaint with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), which is obligated to investigate and prosecute meritorious complaints. 42 USC §3610; 24 CFR §§103.1-103.515. See §§2.33-2.38. Under a 1994 agreement reached with the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH), HUD will transfer most complaints that it receives to DFEH for handling. If HUD determines that reasonable cause exists to believe that housing discrimination has occurred, the complainant has a right to prosecute the case with the assistance of government attorneys. Any party can elect a civil action rather than an administrative hearing. 42 USC §3612(a).

(2) The victim may bypass the foregoing procedure and commence a civil action immediately. 42 USC §3613. See §2.39.

(3) In a "pattern or practice" case, the U.S. Attorney General may bring an action for preventive relief. 42 USC §3614. See §2.40.

© The Regents of the University of California

a. Administrative Action

(1) Preparing and Filing Complaint

§2.33 (a) Filing With HUD

Responsibility for overall administration of the Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §§3601-3631) rests with HUD. 42 USC §3608(a). HUD has investigation, conciliation, and enforcement powers with respect to complaints of housing discrimination. 42 USC §3608(c)-(d). As noted in §2.32, the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH) has now assumed most of these responsibilities.

Any person who feels that he or she has been or will be injured by an alleged violation of the Act may file a written complaint with HUD in the proper format and containing the information required by HUD. 42 USC §3610(a). The complainant may initiate a complaint by telephone, by mail, or in person at any HUD Office of Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity. 24 CFR §103.30. (These offices are located in most major cities and will be listed in the phone book's "Government" section. The HUD website (see Directory) also has a complete list.) The Secretary of HUD may also file a complaint. 42 USC §3610(a)(1)(A)(i). For a copy of the complaint form, see §2.34.

A complainant must file an administrative complaint within 1 year after the alleged discriminatory housing practice has occurred or terminated (42 USC §3610(a)(1)(A)(i)), but has 2 years to file a civil complaint (42 USC §3613(a)(1)(A)). See §2.39. The respondent is entitled to file an answer to the complaint. Both the complaint and answer must be verified.

An aggrieved person may file a complaint in person or by mail at: Fair Housing, Department of Housing and Urban Development, Washington, D.C. (see Directory) or any HUD office. Practitioners should check for the location of the nearest office.

A complainant may also file a complaint with a state or local agency that has been certified as "substantially equivalent." 24 CFR §103.30. No California local agencies are so certified.

Whenever an appropriate state or local agency (a "substantially equivalent agency") has been certified by the Secretary to process discrimination complaints (see 42 USC §3610(f)(3)-(5)) and a complaint falls within the agency's jurisdiction, the Secretary must refer the complaint to the certified agency. 42 USC §3610(f)(1). The Secretary is not allowed to take any further action on the complaint unless certain specified exceptions apply. 42 USC §3610(f)(2).

When the complaint is received by HUD or DFEH, it is considered filed for purposes of satisfying the statute of limitations. HUD can consider a complaint to be filed when it has received information by phone identifying the parties and describing generally the alleged discriminatory housing practice. 24 CFR §103.35.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.33A (b) Filing With USDA

Historically, housing discrimination complaints filed against recipients of Rural Housing Services (RHS) funds, administered by the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) (formerly the Farmers Home Administration), were treated as violations of nondiscrimination laws other than the Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §§3601-3631). As a result, the victims of housing discrimination in USDA subsidized rural housing programs were not afforded the substantially greater rights and remedies available under the FHA. However, beginning in October 1997, USDA began formally referring all complaints of housing discrimination in its federally subsidized rural housing programs to HUD pursuant to the Memorandum of Understanding between USDA and HUD, July 11, 1997 (MOU). The MOU basically provides that HUD has jurisdiction over complaints alleging jurisdiction under the FHA, but that USDA retains jurisdiction to the extent the complaints allege discrimination under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 or the Age Discrimination Act of 1975.

Under the MOU, when violation of the FHA is alleged, HUD and USDA agree to cooperate in conducting investigations. The agencies also agree to cooperate in the resolution or conciliation of a complaint under any of the civil rights laws. However, HUD may conciliate or settle complaints only under the FHA without the express consent of USDA, but it may not do so for complaints alleging violation of the other civil rights laws.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.34 (2) Form: Housing Discrimination Complaint (HUD 903.1)

§2.34 (2) Form: Housing Discrimination Complaint (HUD 903.1)

PLACE
POSTAGE
HERE

MAIL TO:

Public Reporting Burden for this collection of information is estimated to average 20 minutes per response, including the time for reviewing instructions, searching existing data sources, gathering and maintaining the data needed, and completing and reviewing the collection of information.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development is authorized to collect this information by Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, as amended by the Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988, (P.L. 100-430); Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, (P.L. 88-352); Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, as amended, (P.L. 93-112); Section 109 of Title I- Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended, (P.L. 97-35); Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, (P.L. 101-336); and by the Age Discrimination Act of 1975, as amended, (42 U.S.C. 6103).

The information will be used to investigate and to process housing discrimination complaints. The information may be disclosed to the United States Department of Justice for its use in the filing of pattern and practice suits of housing discrimination or the prosecution of the person(s) who committed that discrimination where violence is involved; and to State or local fair housing agencies that administer substantially equivalent fair housing laws for complaint processing. Failure to provide some or all of the requested information will result in delay or denial of HUD assistance.

Disclosure of this information is voluntary.

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

Print

HOUSING DISCRIMINATION INFORMATION

Departamento de Vivienda y Desarrollo Urbano | Oficina de Derecho Equitativo a la Vivienda
U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development | Office of Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity

Instructions: (Please type or print) Read this form carefully. Try to answer all questions. If you do not know the answer or a question does not apply to you, leave the space blank. You have one year from the date of the alleged discrimination to file a complaint. Your form should be signed and dated.

Your Name

Your Address

City | State | Zip Code

Best time to call | Your Daytime Phone No | Evening Phone No

Who else can we call if we cannot reach you?

Contact's Name | Best Time to call

Daytime Phone No | Evening Phone No

Contact's Name | Best Time to call

Daytime Phone No | Evening Phone No

What happened to you?

How were you discriminated against?

For example: were you refused an opportunity to rent or buy housing? Denied a loan? Told that housing was not available when in fact it was? Treated differently from others seeking housing?

State briefly what happened.

Print

HOUSING DISCRIMINATION INFORMATION

Departamento de Vivienda y Desarrollo Urbano — Oficina de Derecho Equitativo a la Vivienda
U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development — Office of Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity

Why do you think you are a victim of housing discrimination?

Is it because of your:

· race · color · religion · sex · national origin · familial status (families with children under 18) · disability?

For example: were you denied housing because of your race? Were you denied a mortgage loan because of your religion? Or turned down for an apartment because you have children?

Briefly explain why you think your housing rights were denied and circle the factor(s) listed above that you believe apply.

Who do you believe discriminated against you?

For example: was it a landlord, owner, bank, real estate agent, broker, company, or organization?

Identify who you believe discriminated against you.

Name

Address

Where did the alleged act of discrimination occur?

For example: Was it at a rental unit? Single family home? Public or Assisted Housing? A Mobile Home?

Did it occur at a bank or other lending institution?

Provide the address.

Address

City State Zip Code

When did the last act of discrimination occur?

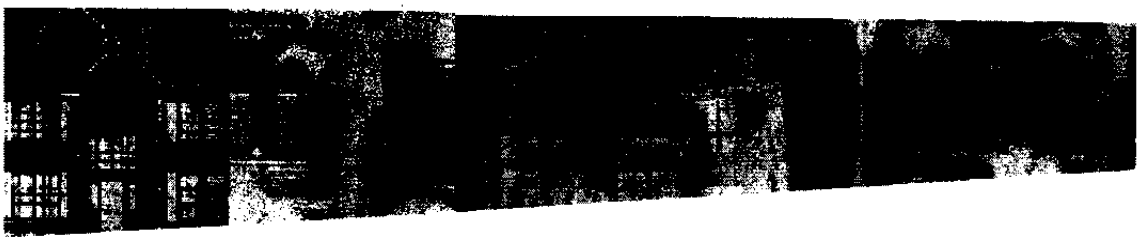
Enter the date ____/____/____

Is the alleged discrimination continuing or ongoing? Yes No_____ _____

Signature Date

Send this form to HUD or to the fair housing agency nearest you. If you are unable to complete this form, you may call that office directly. See address and telephone listings on back page.

Print



It is Unlawful to Discriminate in Housing Based on These Factors...

- Race
- Color
- National origin
- Religion
- Sex
- Familial status (families with children under the age of 18, or who are expecting a child)
- Handicap (if you or someone close to you has a disability)

If You Believe Your Rights Have Been Violated...

- HUD or a State or local fair housing agency is ready to help you file a complaint.
- After your information is received, HUD or a State or local fair housing agency will contact you to discuss the concerns you raise.

Detach here. Fold and close with glue or tape (no staples)

Keep this information for your records.

Date you mailed your information to HUD: ____/____/____

Address to which you sent the information:

Office _____ Telephone _____

Street _____

City _____ State _____ Zip Code _____

If you have not heard from HUD or a State or local fair housing agency within three weeks from the date you mailed this form, you may call to inquire about the status of your complaint. See address and telephone listings on back page.

Comment: This form may be filled out and filed online electronically (go to www.hud.gov). California complaints may be sent by mail to the San Francisco office of HUD (see Directory).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.35 (3) Response to Complaint

§2.35 (3) Response to Complaint

Within 10 days after a complaint is filed, the Secretary must serve on the respondent (the person accused of the discriminatory practice) a copy of the complaint and a notice identifying the alleged discrimination and advising the respondent of his or her procedural rights and obligations. The respondent may file an answer to the complaint; the answer must be received within 10 days after receipt of the notice. 42 USC §3610(a)(1)(B).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.36 (4) Investigation and Conciliation of Dispute

The Secretary must investigate the matter within 100 days or notify the complainant and respondent of the reasons for not doing so. 42 USC §3610(a)(1)(B)-(C). The failure of HUD to complete an investigation within 100 days does not deprive HUD of jurisdiction over the matter, or a court of jurisdiction to resolve a subsequent civil action filed on behalf of the complainant. U.S. v Sea Winds of Marco, Inc. (MD Fla 1995) 893 F Supp 1051; U.S. v Curlee (CD Cal 1992) 792 F Supp 699, 700.

Between the time that a complaint is filed and either a charge is issued or the complaint is dismissed, the Secretary must engage in conciliation of the dispute, to the extent feasible. 42 USC §3610(b)(1). The Secretary must also prepare a final investigative report at the end of the investigation. 42 USC §3610(b)(5). If conciliation is successful, the agreement between the parties is reduced to a written conciliation agreement. 24 CFR §103.310. Under an agreement, the aggrieved party can receive damages, including those for humiliation or embarrassment, and attorney fees. He or she can also receive equitable relief, including access to the housing or alternative housing. 24 CFR §103.315. If a conciliation agreement is reached and there is reason to believe that the respondent has breached the agreement, the Secretary must refer the matter to the Attorney General with a recommendation that a civil action be filed under 42 USC §3614 to enforce the agreement. 42 USC §3610(c). If the Secretary concludes after the complaint is filed that prompt judicial action is required, the Secretary can authorize the Attorney General to file a civil action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending disposition of the complaint. 42 USC §3610(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.37 (5) Issuance of a Charge or Dismissal

Unless it is impracticable to do so or a conciliation agreement has been approved, the Secretary, within 100 days of the filing of the complaint (or within 100 days of "further action" under 42 USC §3610(f)(2)), must determine whether a discriminatory housing practice has occurred or is about to occur. 42 USC §3610(g)(1). If reasonable cause is found to believe that a discriminatory practice has occurred or is about to occur, the Secretary must immediately issue a charge under 42 USC §3612. If the matter concerns the legality of any state or local land-use ordinance, the matter must be referred to the Attorney General under 42 USC §3614. 42 USC §3610(g)(2). If there is no reasonable cause to believe that a discriminatory practice has occurred, the complaint must be dismissed. 42 USC §3610(g)(3). The Secretary is barred from issuing a charge once trial has begun in a civil action commenced by an aggrieved party under state or federal law. 42 USC §3610(g)(4). After HUD issues a charge, it must serve, on each respondent and complainant, a copy of the charge, information on making an election under 42 USC §3612(a) (see §2.38), and notice of an opportunity for a hearing. 42 USC §3610(h).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.38 (6) Charge Issued: Election of Civil Action; Administrative Hearing

After a charge is issued, the complainant, the aggrieved person, or the respondent may elect to have it decided in a civil action instead of an administrative hearing. The election must be made no later than 20 days after receipt of service under 42 USC §3610(h) by the electing person or, if HUD has filed the complaint, no later than 20 days after service. 42 USC §3612(a). If an election is made to proceed with a civil action, the Secretary must authorize the Attorney General to begin a civil action within 30 days of the election. 42 USC §3612(o)(1). The court may grant the same relief available in civil actions brought under 42 USC §3613. 42 USC §3612(o)(3).

An administrative law judge who finds that a respondent has engaged or is about to engage in a discriminatory housing practice must promptly issue an order for appropriate relief. Such relief may include actual damages, injunctive or other relief, and civil penalties of up to $50,000. 42 USC §3612(g). HUD issued final regulations on the department's fair housing civil penalty procedures. See 24 CFR §180.671. Administrative law judges may assess a separate civil penalty against a respondent for each separate and distinct discriminatory housing practice. Under the old procedure, judges could only assess a single penalty in a particular case, regardless of how many incidents of discrimination were shown in the case. If the final decision includes a finding that the respondent has violated the Fair Housing Act in the course of a business that is regulated by a state or local licensing authority, the Secretary will notify the appropriate licensing agency of the decision and recommend appropriate suspension or revocation of the respondent's license. 42 USC §3612(g)(5); 24 CFR §180.700.

In either a civil or administrative proceeding under 42 USC §3612, prevailing parties may be awarded reasonable attorney fees and costs. 42 USC §3612(p).

The Secretary may petition any United States court of appeals for the circuit where the discriminatory practice occurred for enforcement of the administrative law judge's order and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining orders. 42 USC §3612(j). Judicial review of the administrative law judge's order is available under 28 USC §158. 42 USC §3612(i). If within 60 days after the judge's order is entered no petition for review under §3612(i) has been filed and the Secretary has not sought enforcement under §3612(j), any person entitled to relief under the order can petition the United States court of appeals for a decree enforcing the order. 42 USC §3612(m).

Any person who willfully fails to attend and testify or answer any lawful inquiry or to produce evidence under subpoena or other order is subject to a fine of up to $100,000, imprisonment for up to one year, or both. 42 USC §3611(c)(1). On the Secretary's power to issue subpoenas and order discovery to aid HUD investigations and hearings, see 42 USC §3611. In addition, a person may be subject to fine or imprisonment if he or she willfully falsifies, alters, or tampers with evidence. 42 USC §3611(c)(2).

Under 42 USC §3614a, the Secretary may issue regulations to effectuate the Administrative Procedure Act. Regulations on HUD's investigatory, conciliation, and enforcement procedures are found at 24 CFR pts 103-104.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.39 b. Civil Action Under 42 USC §3613

The Fair Housing Act authorizes civil remedies for aggrieved persons to enforce their rights without exhausting any administrative remedies. 42 USC §3613. An aggrieved person may commence a civil action in an appropriate federal district or state court no later than 2 years after the occurrence or termination of an alleged discriminatory housing practice, or the breach of a conciliation agreement (see §2.36), whichever occurs last. Except for actions arising from the breach of a conciliation agreement, the 2-year period is tolled while an administrative proceeding concerning a complaint or charge based on the discriminatory practice is pending. 42 USC §3613(a)(1). However, in an unpublished opinion, the Seventh Circuit has upheld a district court ruling that the statute is only tolled in complaints for "certified" state or local civil rights agencies. Radivojevic v Granville Terrace Mutual Ownership Trust (7th Cir 2001) 2001 US App Lexis 21797; CAVEAT: Federal rules restrict citing unpublished court opinions. (In California, DFEH is certified as a "substantially equivalent" fair housing agency by HUD, but local fair housing or human rights commissions are not.) Filing a complaint under 42 USC §3610(a) (see §2.33) does not bar a civil action on the same matter. If a conciliation agreement has been reached, however, a civil action may not be filed except to enforce the agreement. 42 USC §3613(a)(2). Once a hearing has been commenced by an administrative law judge on a charge of discrimination (see §2.38), a civil action may not be filed. 42 USC §3613(a)(3).

On timely application, the Attorney General may intervene in the civil action if the Attorney General certifies that the case is of general public importance. The Attorney General can obtain the same relief under 42 USC §3614(e) as is available to a complainant. 42 USC §3613(e).

On application of either the person alleging the discriminatory practice or the person against whom it is alleged, the court may appoint an attorney for such person, or may authorize commencement or continuation of the action without payment of fees, costs, or security if the person is unable to bear the costs of the action. 42 USC §3613(b). The court may award the plaintiff actual and punitive damages, in addition to appropriate relief, such as a permanent or temporary injunction, or a temporary restraining order. However, punitive damages may not be awarded unless compensatory or nominal damages are awarded or there is a violation of the Constitution. Louisiana ACORN Fair Hous. v LeBlanc (5th Cir 2000) 211 F3d 298, rehearing and rehearing en banc denied (5th Cir 2000) 224 F3d 767, cert denied (2001) 532 US 904. In its discretion, the court may allow the prevailing party, other than the United States, reasonable attorney fees and costs. 42 USC §3613(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.40 c. U.S. Attorney General "Pattern-or-Practice" Action

Under 42 USC §3614, the U.S. Attorney General may initiate a civil action to enforce provisions of the Fair Housing Act if there is reasonable cause to believe that:

(1) Any person or group is engaged in a "pattern or practice" of resistance to the full enjoyment of the rights protected under the Act; or

(2) A group of persons is denied rights granted by the Act and the denial raises an issue of general public importance.

A "pattern or practice" of discrimination occurs when the discriminatory conduct is not an isolated, accidental, or peculiar departure from otherwise nondiscriminatory practices. U.S. v Pelzer Realty Co. (5th Cir 1973) 484 F2d 438, 445. Proof of a pattern or practice of discrimination may be established through a demonstrated discriminatory policy rather than proof of numerous specific acts. U.S. v Hughes Mem. Home (WD Va 1975) 396 F Supp 544, 551.

A civil action on a discriminatory housing practice must be commenced by the Attorney General within 18 months after the occurrence or termination of the practice. 42 USC §3614(b)(1)(B). An action based on the breach of a conciliation agreement (see §2.36), however, must be commenced within 90 days after it was referred to the Attorney General under 42 USC §3610(c). 42 USC §3614(b)(2)(B). Private persons are allowed to intervene in civil actions commenced by the Attorney General under the act. 42 USC §3614(e).

In addition to preventive relief, such as injunctions and restraining orders, monetary damages may be awarded to aggrieved persons in actions brought by the Attorney General. Civil penalties of up to $100,000 may also be assessed. In its discretion, the court may award the prevailing party, other than the United States, reasonable attorney fees and costs. 42 USC §3614(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Civil Rights Act of 1866

§2.41 1. Application

The Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981-1982) enforces the provisions of the 13th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which abolished slavery and prohibits racial discrimination. Section 1 of the original Act prohibited discrimination against any citizen with respect to property and the right to contract, and it extended equal protection under the law to all citizens. Section 16 of the Civil Rights Act of 1870 extended the right to contract and equal protection under the law to all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States; this protection is codified at 42 USC §1981. The 1866 Act's prohibition against discrimination regarding property rights is codified at 42 USC §1982:

> All citizens of the United States shall have the same right, in every State and Territory, as is enjoyed by white citizens thereof to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property.

Section 1982 prohibits racial discrimination in any type of housing; there are no exemptions (unlike the Fair Housing Act, which exempts certain housing accommodations (42 USC §3607); see §2.31). In Jones v Alfred H. Mayer Co. (1968) 392 US 409, 20 L Ed 2d 1189, 1192, 88 S Ct 2186, the Supreme Court held that §1982 covers a racially based refusal to sell a house but also noted that "§1982 is not a comprehensive open housing law." The courts have interpreted the section as applying to the sale or rental of a single-family residence by the owner (see Ford v Wisconsin Real Estate Examining Bd. (1970) 179 NW2d 786) and to the rental of apartments (Jones v Sciacia (ED Mo 1969) 297 F Supp 165, aff'd (2d Cir 1970) 422 F2d 393). It prohibits indirect as well as direct forms of discrimination. See, e.g., Hall v Freitas (ND Cal 1972) 343 F Supp 1099 (background check conducted on African-American applicants more stringent than typical check on white applicants).

In addition to discrimination in the sale or rental of property, §1982 prohibits discrimination affecting related property rights. It covers the right of white tenants to have African-American guests (Walker v Pointer (ND Tex 1969) 304 F Supp 56), and it protects an African-American homebuyer from exclusion from a subdivision recreational club if membership is routinely sold with the property (Tillman v Wheaton-Haven Recreation Ass'n (1973) 410 US 431, 35 L Ed 2d 403, 93 S Ct 1090). See also Terry v Elmwood Cemetery (ND Ala 1969) 307 F Supp 369 (rights of African-Americans to purchase cemetery plot). Section 1982 prohibits the owner of a housing project from reducing services and allowing the project to deteriorate when the tenant composition changes from predominantly white to predominantly African-American. Concerned Tenants Ass'n v Indian Trails Apartments (ND Ill 1980) 496 F Supp 522.

Persons who are not the direct victims of discrimination have standing under §1982 based on the theory that (a) they are often the only effective proponents of the rights of the "targets" of discrimination, and (b) they have the right under §1982 to associate with racial minorities. See, e.g., Sullivan v Little Hunting Park, Inc. (1969) 396 US 229, 24 L Ed 2d 386, 90 S Ct 400; Walker v Pointer, supra.

Some courts have held that §1981 extends to racial discrimination in property-related contracts such as leases (e.g., Gore v Turner (5th Cir 1977) 563 F2d 159; Williamsburg Fair Hous. Comm'n v New York City Hous. Auth. (SD NY 1980) 493 F Supp 1225), but the section is not often asserted as a basis for housing discrimination actions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.42 a. No State Action Requirement

For many years, the courts declared that the Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981-1982) prohibited only acts of discrimination that state law sanctioned or supported. In the landmark decision of Jones v Alfred H. Mayer Co. (1968) 392 US 409, 20 L Ed 2d 1189, 88 S Ct 2186, the U.S. Supreme Court held that 42 USC §1982 prohibits racial discrimination by private citizens in the sale or rental of housing without regard to the presence or absence of state action and that the 1866 Act has independent and concurrent existence with the Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.43 b. The Protected Classes

Although 42 USC §1982 primarily prohibits discrimination based on race (Jones v Alfred H. Mayer Co. (1968) 392 US 409, 20 L Ed 2d 1189, 1192, 88 S Ct 2186), the Supreme Court concluded that 42 USC §1981 protects all "identifiable classes of persons" who are discriminated against "solely because of their ancestry or ethnic characteristics." Saint Francis College v Al-Khazraji (1987) 481 US 604, 95 L Ed 2d 582, 592, 107 S Ct 2022. This broad description of the protected class encompasses most groups that traditionally have been considered ethnic minorities. See also Gonzalez v Stanford Applied Eng'g (9th Cir 1979) 597 F2d 1298, 1300 (dark-skinned Mexican-American); Enriquez v Honeywell, Inc. (WD Okla 1977) 431 F Supp 901 (Mexican-American); Ortiz v Bank of America (ED Cal 1982) 547 F Supp 550, 568 (Puerto Rican). In Saint Francis College v Al-Khazraji, supra, the Supreme Court indicated, however, that §1982 does not cover discrimination based solely on "the place or nation of his origin." 481 US at 613.

Section 1981 extends to discrimination directed at white persons. McDonald v Santa Fe Trail Transp. Co. (1976) 427 US 273, 49 L Ed 2d 493, 96 S Ct 2574. Because the relevant language is identical in both §§1981 and 1982, §1982 will presumably also be construed to apply to racial discrimination directed against whites. Section 1982 has been held to authorize whites to sue for discrimination based on their association with African-Americans. Woods-Drake v Lundy (5th Cir 1982) 667 F2d 1198, 1201.

Section 1982 applies only to racial discrimination against citizens. Other federal and state legislation, e.g., the Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631), protects noncitizens from racial and other forms of discrimination in property-rights matters. See, e.g., Espinoza v Hillwood Square Mut. Ass'n (ED Va 1981) 522 F Supp 559, cited in §2.30.

Section 1981 protects all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States from discrimination involving state action, including persons who are not citizens. See Takahashi v Fish & Game Comm'n (1948) 334 US 410, 92 L Ed 1478, 68 S Ct 1138. A federal district court in California ruled to the contrary regarding private acts of discrimination against noncitizens. See De Malherbe v International Union of Elevator Constructors (ND Cal 1977) 438 F Supp 1121. More recent Circuit-level and trial court decisions conflict on this issue. Compare Bhandari v First Nat'l Bank (5th Cir 1987) 829 F2d 1343 with Duane v GEICO (4th Cir 1994) 37 F3d 1036 and Espinoza v Hillwood Square Mut. Ass'n, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Enforcement

§2.44 a. Litigating Claims Under the Act

Only a private litigant may file a claim under the Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981-1982). HUD's right of enforcement under the Fair Housing Act (see §2.30) does not apply to the 1866 Act. An action under the 1866 Act may be filed in federal district court without regard to the amount in controversy, or in any state court of general jurisdiction. Sullivan v Little Hunting Park, Inc. (1969) 396 US 229, 24 L Ed 2d 386, 90 S Ct 400.

The 1866 Act contains no limitation period, so state statutes of limitation control. 28 USC §1652; Baker v F.F. Invs. (7th Cir 1970) 420 F2d 1191; Hoffman v Halden (9th Cir 1959) 268 F2d 280, 305, overruled on other grounds in Cohen v Norris (9th Cir 1962) 300 F2d 24, 30. In Wilson v Garcia (1985) 471 US 261, 85 L Ed 2d 254, 105 S Ct 1938, the U.S. Supreme Court held that claims under 42 USC §1983 are best characterized as claims for personal injury, and are thus subject to state statutes of limitation for personal injury actions. Wilson implicitly overruled Smith v Cremins (9th Cir 1962) 308 F2d 187, in which the court held that 42 USC §1983 claims were subject to the 3-year limitation period of CCP §338(a), applicable to actions for liability created by statute.

Although Wilson addressed only §1983 claims, the court's reasoning appears to be equally applicable to civil rights actions under 42 USC §§1981 and 1982. Thus, it is reasonable to conclude that the 2-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions, set forth in CCP §335.1, will apply to actions to enforce the 1866 Act in California. In Barajas v Bermudez (9th Cir 1994) 43 F3d 1251, a case brought under the federal Migrant and Seasonal Agricultural Worker Protection Act, the court distinguished Wilson, but Wilson clearly remains good law for cases enforcing federal civil rights statutes.

© The Regents of the University of California

b. Remedies

§2.45 (1) Damages

A cause of action under 42 USC §§1981-1982 is generally based on tort principles. Therefore, damages for violations are normal tort damages, including punitive or exemplary damages when the facts warrant. See Gore v Turner (5th Cir 1977) 563 F2d 159; Seaton v Sky Realty Co. (7th Cir 1974) 491 F2d 634; Woods-Drake v Lundy (5th Cir 1982) 667 F2d 1198. The defendant in a case involving housing discrimination is held responsible for the natural consequences of his or her actions. In Brown v Ballas (ND Tex 1971) 331 F Supp 1033, the defendant's discrimination forced the plaintiff to prolong her search for housing. Therefore, the court held the defendant liable for the time that the plaintiff lost from work and expenses incurred in her attempts to locate another residence.

In determining the amount of compensatory damages to award, the court begins with the proposition that a person denied housing through illegal discrimination has suffered a substantial injury to the basic rights of citizenship—a right considered to be so valuable that damages are presumed without proof of actual damages. Seaton v Sky Realty Co. (7th Cir 1974) 491 F2d 634, 637. See Washington v Official Court Stenographer (ED Pa 1966) 251 F Supp 945, 947; Basista v Weir (3d Cir 1965) 340 F2d 74, 88. Thus, in addition to out-of-pocket expenses, compensatory damages may be awarded for mental anguish and personal humiliation. Phiffer v Proud Parrot Motor Hotel, Inc. (9th Cir 1980) 648 F2d 548; Moore v Greene (9th Cir 1970) 431 F2d 584; McArthur v Pennington (ED Tenn 1963) 253 F Supp 420, 430. See also Richardson v Communications Workers of Am. (8th Cir 1971) 443 F2d 974, 983. The plaintiff is still entitled to damages even if he or she locates other housing or obtains the right to occupy the disputed property. Brown v Ballas, supra; Marr v Rife (6th Cir 1976) 545 F2d 554.

Because damages in cases under the Civil Rights Act are based on tort, the court may award punitive damages in appropriate circumstances. Woods-Drake v Lundy, supra. See also Wills v Trans World Airlines (SD Cal 1961) 200 F Supp 360, 367. A showing of actual malice is unnecessary; it is sufficient that the defendant acted wantonly, with a conscious, deliberate disregard of the consequences. Phiffer v Proud Parrot Motor Hotel, Inc., supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.46 (2) Injunctive Relief

Injunctive relief is available in an action under the Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981-1982) when there has been a deprivation of civil rights. In Lee v Southern Home Sites Corp. (5th Cir 1970) 429 F2d 290, the defendants violated the Act by mailing letters (to named addressees) that offered housing at the advertised price only to members of the white race. The court enjoined the defendants from further racial discriminatory practices, and from renting or selling any lots, until first offering a lot to the nonwhite plaintiff on the terms specified in the letter. In addition, the court extended the same right to any other "class" members who could show by competent evidence that the letter deterred them from acquiring a house.

In Smith v Sol D. Adler Realty Co. (7th Cir 1970) 436 F2d 344, the court awarded compensatory damages to an African-American plaintiff for loss of civil rights and mental anguish when the defendants refused to rent to her. The court also ordered the defendants to tender the property to the plaintiff, and enjoined them from interfering with her peaceable enjoyment of the property.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.47 (3) Attorney Fees

Under the Civil Rights Attorney's Fees Awards Act of 1976 (42 USC §1988), trial courts are given discretion to allow reasonable attorney fees in cases brought under the Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981-1982) and certain other federal civil rights statutes. See Woods-Drake v Lundy (5th Cir 1982) 667 F2d 1198, 1204; Phiffer v Proud Parrot Motor Hotel, Inc. (9th Cir 1980) 648 F2d 548.

The legislative history of 42 USC §1988 supports the awarding of attorney fees to the prevailing plaintiff if no special circumstances make the award unjust. S Rep No. 1011, 94th Cong, 2d Sess (1976), 1976 US Code Cong & Ad News 5908, 5912. The good faith of a landlord does not necessarily constitute a special circumstance. Williams v Hanover Hous. Auth. (1st Cir 1997) 113 F3d 1294. The amount of attorney fees is governed by the same standards that apply to other types of equally complex federal litigation; there should be no reduction because the rights involved are nonpecuniary. S Rep No. 1011 at 5913. For a list of factors to be considered in computing the fees, see Fountila v Carter (9th Cir 1978) 571 F2d 487, 496; ABA Model Rules Prof Cond 1.5(a); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 4-200. See also California Attorney Fee Awards §2.9 (2d ed Cal CEB 1994).

The lawsuit need not be the sole cause of the relief obtained. See Williams v Hanover Hous. Auth., supra. The fact that a legal aid group or pro bono attorney represents the plaintiff does not affect the right to recover attorney fees. Washington v Seattle Sch. Dist. (1982) 458 US 457, 73 L Ed 2d 896, 918 n31, 102 S Ct 3187, citing with approval Dennis v Chang (9th Cir 1980) 611 F2d 1302, 1304; Brandenburger v Thompson (9th Cir 1974) 494 F2d 885; Stevens v Dobs, Inc. (ED NC 1974) 373 F Supp 618.

Section 1988 provides that fees may be awarded to the prevailing party; therefore, if there is a defense judgment, the defendant may request attorney fees. As a general rule, however, the court will not award such fees unless the plaintiff brought the action in bad faith. Richardson v Hotel Corp. of Am. (ED La 1971) 332 F Supp 519, aff'd (5th Cir 1972) 468 F2d 951. See generally United States Steel Corp. v U.S. (3d Cir 1975) 519 F2d 359, 364.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.48 VI. CALIFORNIA ANTIDISCRIMINATION AND FAIR HOUSING LAWS

The two principal California statutes that prohibit discrimination in housing are the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) and the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51). The FEHA prohibits housing discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, marital status, national origin, ancestry, familial status, source of income, sexual orientation, or disability. Govt C §12955. The definition of sex discrimination has been amended to include "gender." Govt C §12926(p), referring to Pen C §422.56(c) (which defines "gender" to include "a person's gender identity and gender related appearance and behavior whether or not stereotypically associated with the person's assigned sex at birth"). Therefore, housing discrimination on the basis of transgender or perceived transgender status, is prohibited under FEHA. See §§2.49-2.56.

The Unruh Act prohibits business establishments, including landlords, from engaging in arbitrary discrimination. It lists certain protected classes, including sex (which includes pregnancy, childbirth and gender identity and expression), race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, disability, medical condition, marital status, sexual orientation, and age. CC §51; Govt C §12926(p); Pen C §422.56. These classes are illustrative only; the Act actually prohibits any arbitrary discrimination. See §2.58. The California Supreme Court has ruled that the Unruh Act covers discrimination on the basis of "personal characteristics," but not economic characteristics. Harris v Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C3d 1142, 1160, 278 CR 614. But see Sisemore v Master Fin., Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 1386, 60 CR3d 719 (unlawful to discriminate on basis of source of income—the operation of a day care home). Civil Code §54.1 prohibits housing discrimination against persons with disabilities. See §2.60.

Local ordinances may prohibit discrimination on other grounds, such as personal appearance, but state law may preempt any local regulation. See Govt C §12993(c). This section appears to preempt any local ordinance that prohibits housing discrimination against the classes covered by the FEHA, but whether it preempts local laws that cover other types of discrimination is unsettled. See, e.g., San Francisco Police Code Article 33, §3304 (prohibiting housing discrimination based on additional categories of place of birth, weight, and height); Santa Cruz Municipal Code §21.01.010 (prohibiting housing discrimination based on additional category of personal appearance).

Both the Unruh Act and the FEHA provide administrative procedures and civil remedies for challenging housing discrimination in California. The principal advantage of the FEHA is that it guarantees an administrative procedure through which a complainant can obtain free legal representation to prosecute a meritorious case. See §§2.52-2.55. The Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH) is obligated to investigate all complaints arising under the FEHA and to prosecute all meritorious complaints. The complainant may also file a civil action directly, and all the customary civil remedies, including punitive damages, are available. See §2.56.

© The Regents of the University of California

A. California Fair Employment and Housing Act

§2.49 1. Scope

The California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) is a comprehensive fair housing law that is similar to the Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631; see §§2.30-2.40). Indeed, HUD has determined that the FEHA is substantially equivalent to the Fair Housing Act and therefore refers complaints that it receives to California's Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH). Categories protected under the FEHA (Govt C §12955) are essentially the same as those under the federal law, with a few additional protected classes:

- race;
- color;
- religion;
- sex, including "gender" as defined by Pen C §422.56(c), and pregnancy, childbirth, or medical conditions related to pregnancy or childbirth (Govt C §12926(p));
- marital status;
- national origin;
- ancestry;
- familial status, including pregnant women, foster parents, and persons in the process of securing legal custody of a child or of becoming foster parents (Govt C §12955.2);
- source of income;
- disability, including any physical or mental disability as defined in Govt C §12926 (Govt C §12955.3; see §2.26); or
- sexual orientation.

In several important respects, the California Act is stronger than the federal Fair Housing Act:

(a) The FEHA adds gender identity and gender-related appearance and behavior, ancestry, disability, marital status, and sexual orientation to the list of protected classes (see cases in §2.50);

(b) The FEHA does not exempt small, owner-occupied buildings and the rental of single family dwellings;

(c) Under the FEHA, proof of intent is not necessary to establish a violation, and a landlord must show business necessity to rebut a prima facie case of disparate impact; (Govt C §12955.8);

(d) The FEHA unequivocally establishes liability when a landlord has both discriminatory and legitimate reasons for refusing to rent (Govt C §12955.8);

(e) The exemption for senior housing that may discriminate against families with children is generally more restrictive under the FEHA than under federal law (Govt C §12955.9); and

(f) The FEHA requires that when representing complainants' interests, DFEH must comply with attorneys' professional code of conduct, and must provide zealous representation of complainants' interests (Govt C §12989).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.50 2. Prohibited Forms of Housing Discrimination

§2.50 2. Prohibited Forms of Housing Discrimination

"Discrimination" under California's Fair Employment and Housing Act includes, with respect to its enumerated protected categories, refusing to rent; refusing to negotiate; denying availability; providing inferior terms, conditions, privileges, facilities, or services; canceling a rental agreement; or providing segregated accommodations. Govt C §12927(c). Discrimination on the basis of the enumerated categories includes discrimination based on "a perception that the person has any of those characteristics or that the person is associated with a person who has, or is perceived to have, any of those characteristics" (Govt C §12926(m)) or "when an individual is erroneously or mistakenly believed to have any physical or mental condition that limits a major life activity" (Govt C §12926.1(d)).

"Discrimination" also includes the refusal to permit reasonable modifications, at the expense of the person with a disability, of existing premises if the modifications are necessary to afford that person full enjoyment of the premises. When reasonable, the landlord may require the tenant to agree to restore the interior of the premises to the condition that existed before the modification, excluding reasonable wear and tear. Finally, "discrimination" includes the refusal to make reasonable accommodations in rules, policies, practices, or services when the accommodations may be necessary to afford a disabled person equal opportunity to use and enjoy a dwelling. Govt C §12927(c).

In the design, construction, or improvement of multifamily dwellings, "discrimination" includes the failure to design and construct the dwelling in a manner that allows access to and use by disabled persons, including required features, such as the installation of accessible routes and utility systems, wide doorways, special kitchen and bathroom modifications, and elevators for specific types of buildings. See Govt C §12955.1.

An owner may not make any oral or written inquiry regarding the protected classifications, engage in discriminatory advertising, retaliate against any person who has sought the protection of the FEHA, or "otherwise make unavailable or deny a dwelling based on discrimination because of [protected class status]." Govt C §12955(b)-(c), (f), (k). A real estate broker may answer factually and in good faith an inquiry from a prospective purchaser regarding the racial composition of a neighborhood, but illegal discrimination occurs if the broker's intent is to aid in the continuation of a segregated neighborhood. 58 Ops Cal Atty Gen 154 (1975).

A "housing accommodation" is any building, structure, or portion of a building or structure that is occupied, or intended to be occupied, as a residence by one or more families, and any vacant land offered for sale or lease for the construction of such a building, structure, or portion. Govt C §12927(d). Unlike the federal Fair Housing Act (see §2.31), the FEHA does not exempt small, owner-occupied buildings and the rental of single family dwellings.

The FEHA permits discriminatory advertising on the basis of gender "where the sharing of living areas in a single family dwelling unit is involved." Govt C §12927(c)(2)(B). The FEHA does not prohibit post-secondary educational institutions from providing separate housing for male and female students, for married students, or for students with minor dependents. Govt C §12995(a)(2).

The FEHA exempts religious organizations to the extent that they give preferences, in noncommercial rentals, to persons of the same religion, unless membership in the religion is restricted on account of race, color, or national origin. Govt C §12955.4.

In Brown v Smith (1997) 55 CA4th 767, 64 CR2d 301, a landlord's sexual harassment of a tenant was held to be a form of gender discrimination prohibited by the FEHA.

In Halprin v The Prairie Single Family Homes of Dearborn Park Ass'n (7th Cir 2004) 388 F3d 327, the plaintiff failed to state a cause of action for violation of the Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §3604(c) (discriminatory statements)) because the alleged harassment by neighbors did not occur in the context of a sale or rental of a dwelling. The purpose of §3604, the court explained, was to address the practice of a refusal to sell or rent homes to minority groups, not to address the future problem of how the members of minority groups were treated once they were included. 388 F3d at 329.

The Halprin holding has not been applied to FHA cases in the Ninth Circuit, although practitioners should be prepared for such an argument. The FEHA, with its independent status and differently worded definition of "discrimination," should avoid such a narrow reading. The prohibition of housing discrimination under Govt C §12955(a) does not limit such discrimination to a sale or rental, and the types of discrimination deemed unlawful under Govt C §12927(c)(1) include "post acquisition" conduct such as "harassment in connection with those housing accommodations" and refusal to permit reasonable modification or accommodation. See Brown v Smith (1997) 55 CA4th 767, 782, 64 CR2d 301 (upholding claim for housing harassment that occurred during tenancy and noting that basic principles applicable in employment cases should also apply in housing context).

The FEHA's prohibition of housing discrimination based on marital status, which is broader than that afforded by most fair housing laws, was examined by the California Supreme Court in Smith v FEHC (1996) 12 C4th 1143, 51 CR2d 700. The court held that a landlord cannot use religious belief that unmarried cohabitation is a sin as a basis to refuse to rent an apartment to an unmarried couple. The court held squarely that Govt C §12955 bans discrimination against unmarried couples. Applying the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (42 USC §§2000bb—2000bb-4), the court held that Govt C §12955 does not impose a substantial burden on the landlord's religious beliefs: She is free to put her capital in other investments if she wishes to avoid renting to unmarried couples. (The Religious Freedom Restoration Act was amended in 2000, and no longer applies to state laws. 42 USC §2000bb-3(a), as amended by Pub L 106-274, 114 Stat 806. Arguably this amendment eliminates one possible compelling state interest issue in the analysis involving the Act's effect on California law.)

Subsequent to Smith v FEHC, supra, a Ninth Circuit panel held that enforcement of a similar statute in Alaska violated the free exercise clause of the U.S. Constitution. When the Ninth Circuit reheard the case en banc, however, it ordered dismissal of the action, stating that resolution of the constitutional issues was premature because no enforcement agency had investigated the landlords' rental practices or brought a civil or criminal action against the landlords under the challenged law. See Thomas v Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n (9th Cir 1999) 165 F3d 692, vacated (9th Cir 2000) 220 F3d 1134.

Until there is further guidance from the courts, deciding whether a particular landlord's marital-status-based discrimination is legal or illegal will require a critical analysis of the landlord's motives and the compelling state interest protected by the FEHA. Allowing a landlord to violate the FEHA would seriously harm prospective renters, who would be denied equal access to housing accommodations. See also Hess v FEHC (1982) 138 CA3d 232, 187 CR 712; Atkisson v Kern County Hous. Auth. (1976) 59 CA3d 89, 130 CR 375. Several other states have addressed this issue and support the right of landlords to refuse to rent to unmarried couples based on religious exercise protections. See The Conflict Between Religious Exercise and Efforts to Eradicate Housing Discrimination Against Nontraditional Couples: Should Free Exercise Protect Landlord Bias?, 53 Wash & Lee L Rev 351 (1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.51 3. Enforcement

The FEHA requires the DFEH to investigate all complaints based on discrimination against the classes protected under the Act and to prosecute meritorious cases. Govt C §12980 (see §§2.52-2.55). A complainant may also independently file a civil action without exhausting administrative remedies. Govt C §12989.1 (see §2.56).

© The Regents of the University of California

a. Administrative Relief

§2.52 (1) Filing Administrative Complaint

To initiate an action under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA), an aggrieved person may file a verified complaint with the Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH). Govt C §12980(a). A complainant is not required to exhaust administrative remedies before filing a civil action under the FEHA. Govt C §12989.1 See §2.56. The state Attorney General or the Director of the DFEH may file an administrative complaint. Govt C §12980(b). The complainant must file an administrative complaint within 1 year after the alleged violation occurred or terminated (Govt C §12980(b)) but has 2 years in which to file a civil action (Govt C §12989.1).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.53 (2) DFEH Action on Complaint

The Department of Fair Employment and Housing must serve the complainant with notice of time limits, rights of the parties, and choice of forums. When a complaint is filed, the DFEH must commence a prompt investigation, serve a copy of the complaint on the property owner, and attempt to eliminate any violation through conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Govt C §§12980(c), 12963, 12986, 12963.7. See §2.54. The DFEH may not dismiss a complaint unless the complainant withdraws it or the DFEH "determines after a thorough investigation that, based on the facts, no reasonable cause exists to believe that an unlawful housing practice … has occurred or is about to occur." Govt C §12981.1.

The DFEH has broad discovery powers to investigate the complaint (Govt C §§12963.1-12963.4), and superior courts have jurisdiction to enforce these powers (Govt C §12963.5). For example, in DFEH v Superior Court (2002) 99 CA4th 896, 121 CR2d 615, the DFEH petitioned the trial court for an order to compel the landlord and property manager to provide the agency information about former tenants and applicants, in order to aid in investigating alleged discrimination based on race and marital status. The trial court refused. On appeal, the court granted a peremptory writ for the DFEH, holding that the information was reasonably requested for relevance, and that disclosure would not unduly infringe on privacy rights.

Pending completion of the investigation, the DFEH or the California Attorney General may obtain temporary restraining orders to prevent the property owner from taking any action with respect to the rental, lease, or sale of the property. Govt C §12983.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.54 (3) Conciliation or Mediation

After investigating a housing discrimination complaint, the DFEH may offer the parties a confidential conciliation process to help resolve the complaint before litigation. See Govt C §12963.7. See also http://www.dfeh.ca.gov/DFEH/Complaints. This program is important not only to landlords and property managers but also to real estate-related employers (e.g., brokers, licensee associations, local boards of realtors, homeowner association managers), title insurance companies, and the like.

If the violation can be resolved through conciliation, all the parties must sign a written agreement approved by the DFEH. Govt C §12964. The department must approve any settlement to which the respondent and complainant agree. Govt C §12980(j). The settlement is a public document unless "otherwise agreed by the complainant and respondent and [the DFEH] determines that the disclosure is not required to further the purposes of the act." Govt C §12980(i). The DFEH must confirm compliance with the agreement within 1 year of its effective date. Govt C §12964.

At any time after the complaint is filed, the DFEH may request the FEHC to conduct mediation of the complaint pursuant to Govt C §§12960, 12961, or 12980. The DFEH may, however, withdraw a request for mediation at any time to pursue an investigation.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.55 (4) Prosecution of Complaint If DFEH Finds Reasonable Cause

§2.55 (4) Prosecution of Complaint If DFEH Finds Reasonable Cause

If the complaint is not resolved through conciliation or mediation and the DFEH finds that reasonable cause exists to believe that a violation has occurred, it must do the following (Govt C §12981(a)):

- Issue a written accusation that identifies the nature of the charges; and
- Serve the accusation and verified complaint on the respondent.

After the accusation is issued, either party may "opt out" of the administrative forum and into civil court by notifying the DFEH within 20 days. Within 30 days of receiving that notice of election, the DFEH will dismiss the accusation and file a complaint in state court. Govt C §12989.

Attorneys for the DFEH or the Attorney General will represent the complainant at no cost; they must comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct of the State Bar of California in representing the aggrieved person's interests. Govt C §12989. The Department becomes the plaintiff in the lawsuit and the complainant is named as the "real party in interest." The Department represents the interests of the state as an exercise of its police powers. See Govt C §§12920-12921. In addition, the Department represents the interests of the real party and is authorized to recover the full range of available relief on behalf of the real party. See Govt C §12987. An attorney-client relationship with the real party is not established, however. The real party has a right to intervene in the action with his or her own attorney. Govt C §12989(c)-(d).

If the FEHC finds a violation, it may order the respondent to cease the illegal discrimination. Govt C §12987(a). In addition, it may take these actions:

- Issue orders regarding the rental of the property if it is still available;
- Award "actual damages" to the complainant; and
- Provide for other appropriate affirmative relief.

Govt C §12987(a)(1), (2), (4). "Actual damages" include not only quantifiable out-of-pocket restitutive damages but also damages for emotional distress. See Konig v FEHC (2002) 28 C4th 743, 123 CR2d 1, in which the supreme court reviewed the FEHC's authority under this section and held that the FEHC may award damages for emotional distress in housing discrimination cases. The supreme court effectively overturned Walnut Creek Manor v FEHC (1991) 54 C3d 245, 284 CR 718, by finding that 1992 FEHA amendments granting the FEHC broad remedial authority, but providing parties with the option of a civil remedy, preserved judicial power under the California Constitution.

The FEHC may order payment to the complainant of a civil penalty of up to $10,000 for the first violation, up to $25,000 for a second violation within 5 years, and up to $50,000 for a third or more frequent violation within 7 years. It may also order payment to the prevailing party, other than the state, of reasonable attorney fees and costs, including expert witness fees. Govt C §12987(a)(3). A party aggrieved by the commission's final order may seek administrative mandamus review. The limitations of CCP §1094.5(f) do not apply, so that the superior court has broader discretion to modify the administrative decision. Govt C §12987.1(a). The superior court may (Govt C §12987.1(b)):

- grant temporary relief, including a TRO, or
- affirm, modify, set aside, or remand the order (and may enforce the order to the extent it is affirmed or modified).

The DFEH must conduct a compliance review within 1 year of the effective date of every final order or decision, and if necessary it may file an action in superior court to enjoin any continuing violation. Govt C §12981(d), (f).

Any person who files a complaint with the DFEH may simultaneously pursue any other judicial remedies without prejudice (Govt C §12993), but the DFEH must terminate its proceedings on entry of a final judgment in an action filed under CC §52, unless the judgment is a dismissal entered at the complainant's request. Govt C §12980(a). Conversely, the complainant is not entitled to any remedy from the FEHC unless he or she signs a written waiver of the rights and claims available under the Unruh Act. Govt C §12987.

The FEHA also provides an administrative remedy for violations of the Unruh Act. CC §52(f). See §§2.57-2.59.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.56 b. Civil Action

§2.56 b. Civil Action

The Fair Employment and Housing Act provides that an aggrieved person may file a complaint to initiate a civil action on a housing discrimination claim directly, without exhausting administrative remedies. Govt C §12989.1. The statute of limitations is two years.

Unlike civil actions based on violation of the federal Fair Housing Act, however, a party may be collaterally estopped from bringing an action based on violation of the FEHA if the DFEH found against the party in an administrative proceeding and the party failed to challenge the decision by filing an administrative mandamus action. See Johnson v City of Loma Linda (2000) 24 C4th 61, 99 CR2d 316, overruling the Second District case of Swartzendruber v City of San Diego (1992) 3 CA4th 896, 5 CR2d 64, and holding that a former employee was estopped from pursuing a FEHA claim for employment discrimination because he failed to timely prosecute a mandamus action. (The employee's federal damage claim under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 USC §§2000e—2000e-17) survived because the court found that allowing state agency findings to have a binding effect on Title VII claims would be inconsistent with the intent of Congress that federal courts apply de novo review to those claims.) Collateral estoppel applies to "quasi-judicial" administrative proceedings, and not to internal grievance procedures (Ahmadi-Kashani v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008) 159 CA4th 449, 71 CR3d 556) or grievance procedures under a collective bargaining agreement, which settle contractual, rather than statutory, disputes (Ortega v Contra Costa Community College Dist. (2007) 156 CA4th 1073, 67 CR3d 832).

In a civil action, the court may award:

- actual and punitive damages,
- injunctive relief, or
- other appropriate relief.

It has the discretion to award the "prevailing party, other than the state, reasonable attorney's fees and costs." Govt C §12989.2. With respect to attorney fees, the court may include a lodestar and possible multiplier as in Serrano v Priest (1977) 20 C3d 25, 141 CR 315 (Serrano III), and its progeny. See Graham v DaimlerChrysler (2004) 34 C4th 553, 21 CR3d 331, and companion case Tipton-Whittingham v City of Los Angeles (2004) 34 C4th 604, 21 CR3d 371 (requiring that plaintiff make prelitigation demand for settlement in order to recover catalyst theory attorney fees under FEHA). See also Vasquez v State (2008) 45 C4th 243, 85 CR3d 466 (clarifying that prelitigation settlement negotiations not required for non-catalyst theory recovery of FEHA attorney fees). Flannery v California Highway Patrol (1998) 61 CA4th 629, 71 CR2d 632. See also Flannery v Prentice (2001) 26 C4th 572, 110 CR2d 809 (supreme court held that attorney fees awarded under Govt C §12965 (exceeding fees already paid) belong to attorney, not client, unless their agreement provides otherwise). On the effect of "contingent risk" as a factor the court considers in its calculation of a multiplier or enhancement, see Ketchum v Moses (2001) 24 C4th 1122, 104 CR2d 377; Horsford v Board of Trustees of Cal. State Univ. (2005) 132 CA4th 359, 33 CR3d 644; and Greene v Dillingham Constr. (2002) 101 CA4th 418, 124 CR2d 250.

The court may also award expert witness fees as a component of costs under a 1999 amendment to §12965(b), superseding the decision in Davis v KGO-TV (1998) 17 C4th 436, 71 CR2d 452.

For a discussion of what constitutes a prevailing party for purposes of the FEHA, see EEOC v United Parcel Serv. (9th Cir 2005) 424 F3d 1060; Hon v Marshall (1997) 53 CA4th 470, 62 CR2d 11 (decided under parallel statute on attorney fee awards in employment discrimination actions). A successful defendant is not entitled to attorney fees unless it is established that the plaintiff's case was frivolous, unreasonable, or lacking foundation. Rosenman v Christensen, Miller, Fink, Jacobs, Glaser, Weil & Shapiro (2001) 91 CA4th 859, 110 CR2d 903.

The FEHA precludes a complainant from obtaining concurrent remedies under the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) and in an administrative proceeding under Govt C §12980. The DFEH must terminate its proceedings when it is notified of entry of final judgment in an Unruh Act action (Govt C §12980(a)), and it may not grant a remedy in an administrative proceeding unless the complainant waives all rights and remedies under CC §52 (Govt C §12987).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.57 B. Unruh Civil Rights Act

§2.57 B. Unruh Civil Rights Act

Because of the amendments to the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) in 1992 and 1993 (see Govt C §§12955.1-12955.6, 12989-12989.3) (see §2.49) and the decision in Harris v Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C3d 1142, 278 CR 614, the housing discrimination protections of the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) (Unruh Act) have become less significant for the classes that the FEHA covers. The Harris decision established that a victim of housing discrimination must prove intent in order to establish a violation. (This is a difficult burden that complainants filing under the FEHA do not bear. See Govt C §12955.8.) There are a few exceptions; for example, a showing of intentional discrimination is not required under the Unruh Act when violation of the Act is premised on violation of the federal Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 USC §§12101-12213). Munson v Del Taco, Inc. (2009) 46 C4th 661, 94 CR3d 685; Lentini v California Ctr. for the Arts (9th Cir 2004) 370 F3d 837.

NOTE: Technically, the Unruh Act consists only of CC §51. Stamps v Superior Court (2006) 136 CA4th 1441, 39 CR3d 706. However, amendments to the Act implementing its policies and providing further remedies are found in CC §§51.1-51.6 and 51.8-52. In practice, attorneys regard these sections as collectively representing the full Act, but the Legislature has never given its attention to this detail.

The Unruh Act expressly prohibits any business establishment from discriminating on the basis of (CC §51)

- sex (including "gender" as defined by Pen C §422.56(c), and pregnancy, childbirth, or medical conditions related to pregnancy or childbirth as defined in Govt C §12926(p)),
- race,
- color,
- religion,
- ancestry,
- national origin,
- disability (as defined in Govt C §§12926, 12926.1),
- medical condition (as defined in Govt C §12926(h)),
- marital status, or
- sexual orientation (as defined in Govt C §12926(q)).

Civil Code §51.2 requires that the Act also be construed as prohibiting business establishments from discriminating on the basis of age in the sale or rental of housing. A rental housing accommodation will generally be a business establishment within the meaning of the Act. Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 731, 180 CR 496. Like the FEHA, the Unruh Act does not exempt small, owner-occupied buildings or other landlords.

Persons protected under the Unruh Act include those who are perceived to have any particular characteristic of the listed classes in the Act or who associate with persons who have, or are perceived to have, any particular characteristic of the listed classes. CC §51(e)(5).

Registered sex offenders are not a "protected class" under the Unruh Act. 89 Ops Cal Atty Gen 85 (2006).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.58 1. Application

§2.58 1. Application

The Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) prohibits all arbitrary discrimination based on personal characteristics, not just discrimination based on the classifications enumerated in it (see §2.57), which have been deemed illustrative only. See uncodified declarations of legislative intent in Stats 2005, ch 420, §2; Harris v Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C3d 1142, 278 CR 614; In re Cox (1970) 3 C3d 205, 90 CR 24. Determining whether discrimination is arbitrary may not be an easy task. In Cox, the court held that the Unruh Act "forbids a business establishment generally open to the public from arbitrarily excluding a prospective customer." 3 C3d at 217. The court pointed out the individual nature of the statutory right afforded to "all persons" by CC §51 and stressed the property owner's duty to serve all customers on reasonable terms without discrimination. While the scope of the Unruh Act's non-enumerated (arbitrary) classes was limited by the cases of Gatto v County of Sonoma (2002) 98 CA4th 744, 756, 120 CR2d 550 and Hessians Motorcycle Club v J.C. Flanagans (2001) 86 CA4th 833, 103 CR2d 552, more recently courts have been receptive to construing Unruh more expansively. See Koebke v Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 C4th 824, 31 CR3d 565 (marital status discrimination by country club); Butler v Adoption Media, LLC (ND Cal 2007) 486 F Supp 2d 1022, (marital status, sexual orientation, and sex); Sisemore v Master Fin., Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 1386, 1405, 60 CR3d 719 (occupational status (home day care provider)).

To what extent discrimination that would be arbitrary for the owner of a retail establishment under In re Cox, supra, will also be found arbitrary for the owner of rental housing is not clear. One certainty is that the individual nature of the right afforded by the Unruh Act prevents a landlord from excluding an individual on the basis of class or group affiliation. Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 740, 180 CR 496.

The individualized nature of the rights under the Unruh Act may prohibit discrimination against an entire class, even when such practices proceed from a motive of rational self-interest. In Marina Point, the supreme court specifically rejected the "rational self-interest" standard of Newby v Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 CA3d 288, 131 CR 547, as too broad. The Marina Point court reasoned (30 C3d at 740 n9) that > [A]n entrepreneur may pursue many discriminatory practices "from a motive of rational self-interest," e.g., economic gain, which would unquestionably violate the Unruh Act. For example, an entrepreneur may find it economically advantageous to exclude all homosexuals, or alternatively all nonhomosexuals, from his restaurant or hotel, but such a "rational" economic motive would not, of course, validate the practice.

The court pointed out that discrimination based on age by housing complexes designed for the elderly, however, is grounded on the "compelling societal interest" to provide for the special housing needs of senior citizens. 30 C3d at 743.

Effective January 1, 2006, persons protected under the Unruh Act include those who are perceived to have any particular characteristic of the listed classes in the Act or who associate with persons who have, or are perceived to have, any particular characteristic of the listed classes. CC §51(e)(5).

In addition to the factors specifically enumerated in the Unruh Act, discrimination based on the following has been held to be arbitrary, or is likely to be considered arbitrary, under the Act:

- Sexual Orientation. Hubert v Williams (1982) 133 CA3d Supp 1, 184 CR 161 (eviction because of tenant's homosexuality); Stoumen v Reilly (1951) 37 C2d 713, 234 P2d 969 (exclusion of homosexuals from public bar or restaurant prohibited under predecessor statute to Unruh Act). In 2005, the Act was amended to expressly prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. See CC §51(b); Govt C §12926(q); Stats 2005, ch 420. Sexual orientation is defined in the Unruh Act as meaning heterosexuality, homosexuality, and bisexuality. See CC §51(e)(6); Govt C §12926(q); Stats 2005, ch 420.
- Unconventional Personal Appearance. In re Cox (1970) 3 C3d 205, 90 CR 24 (exclusion of individual from shopping center because of long hair and unconventional dress). FEHC v Marion's Place (2006) (FEHC Decision 03-04-070, Feb. 1, 2006) 2006 CAFEHC Lexis 1 (exclusion of transgender individual from nightclub for failure to conform to dress code that prohibited men from wearing dresses or skirts).
- Immoral Reputation. Orloff v Los Angeles Turf Club (1951) 36 C2d 734, 227 P2d 449 (exclusion of individual from racetrack under predecessor statute to Unruh Act). See §2.8.

- Welfare Recipients. 59 Ops Cal Atty Gen 223 (1976) (termination of tenancy or refusal to rent on ground that tenant receiving welfare benefits), cited with approval by Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson, supra. Although the California Supreme Court in Harris v Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C3d 1142, 278 CR 614, ruled that the Unruh Act does not prohibit discrimination based upon financial characteristics, considering the residential tenant applicant's source (rather than amount) of income alone is arguably arbitrary discrimination without evidence that the exclusion is based upon business necessity or compelling societal interest. See §2.9 and 52 C3d at 1168 n14. See also discussion in §2.23 of disparate impact claims under the federal Fair Housing Act, based on a "no AFDC" policy on families with children in Gilligan v Jamco Dev. Corp. (9th Cir 1997) 108 F3d 246, 248.

NOTE: In November 2009, as urgency legislation, California amended the Unruh Act to provide that any discount or other benefit offered or given to a consumer or prospective consumer by a business because the consumer "has suffered the loss or reduction of employment or reduction of wages" will not be considered arbitrary discrimination under the Act. CC §51.13.

- Marital Status. Koebke v Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 C4th 824, 31 CR3d 565 (registered domestic partners); 58 Ops Cal Atty Gen 608, 613 (1975) (exclusion based on marital status without evidence that exclusion is reasonable and rationally related to services performed and facilities provided). Effective January 1, 2006, the Act was amended to expressly protect this class. See Stats 2005, ch 420. See discussion in §2.50 on conflict between Ninth Circuit and California Supreme Court on whether enforcement of FEHA's prohibitions against marital status discrimination may violate constitutional rights of landlords whose religious beliefs forbid unmarried cohabitation.
- Occupation. Sisemore v Master Fin., Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 1386, 1405, 60 CR3d 719 (occupational status (home day care provider)).
- Families With Children. Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson, supra (nonrenewal of lease with family who gave birth to a child during tenancy violates Unruh Act).
- Association With Person in Unruh Act Protected Class. Compare Kotev v First Colony Life Ins. Co. (CD Cal 1996) 927 F Supp 1316 with Cloutier v Prudential Ins. Co. (ND Cal 1997) 964 F Supp 299.

In Brown v Smith (1997) 55 CA4th 767, 64 CR2d 301, a landlord's sexual harassment of a tenant was held not to be prohibited by the Unruh Act, although it was held to be a form of gender discrimination prohibited by the FEHA. See §2.50. Civil Code §51.9 (enacted later) expressly prohibits sexual harassment as a form of gender-based discrimination and allows a civil action for damages for sexual harassment against a landlord or a property manager. See §3.70A.

For further discussion of protected classifications and comparison of coverage by existing state and federal laws, see §§2.7-2.27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.59 2. Enforcement and Remedies

The state Attorney General, any district or city attorney, or any aggrieved person may bring a civil action against any person or group engaged in a pattern or practice of resistance to a person's full enjoyment of the rights protected under the Unruh Act. CC §52(c). This authorization is similar to the power of the U.S. Attorney General to file an action in a "pattern or practice" case under the Fair Housing Act (42 USC §3613). See §2.40. The action may be filed in any appropriate state court (including small claims court if the asserted damages do not exceed the jurisdictional limits of the small claims court; see CC §52.2). The complaint must describe the facts relating to the pattern or practice, and request the preventive relief necessary to protect the complainant's full enjoyment of the rights secured under the Act. CC §52(c). On the statute of limitations that applies to Unruh Act actions, see §2.69.

Alternatively, the Department of Fair Employment and Housing may enforce the Unruh Act under the administrative remedy provided in the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA). In addition, the FEHA incorporates CC §51 into its protections against housing discrimination pursuant to Govt C §12955(d). However, the court in FEHC v Marion's Place (2006) (FEHC Decision 03-04-070, Feb. 1, 2006) 2006 CAFEHC Lexis 1 held that the Department may not claim a trebling of damages in cases brought before the Fair Employment and Housing Commission.

Any person who denies or aids in denying a person's full enjoyment of the rights secured under the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51), or commits any discrimination prohibited in the Act, is liable for the actual damages suffered by the aggrieved party. CC §52(a). Actual damages are synonymous with compensatory damages under CC §3333, and include damages for humiliation, indignity, embarrassment, shock, apprehension, terror, or ordeal. Capelouto v Kaiser Found. Hosp. (1972) 7 C3d 889, 892, 103 CR 856; Deevy v Tassi (1942) 21 C2d 109, 130 P2d 389. The court may also award the aggrieved person an amount equal to three times the amount of actual damages, but not less than $4000. CC §52(a).

Whether this statutory penalty limits the amount of punitive damages allowed under CC §3294 is uncertain. Unpublished federal decisions held that it does, citing De Anza Santa Cruz Mobile Estates Homeowners Ass'n v De Anza Santa Cruz Mobile Estates (2001) 94 CA4th 890, 114 CR2d 708 (when statute provides remedy that is punitive, plaintiff may not recover additional punitive damage award). See, e.g., Doran v Embassy Suites Hotel (ND Cal 2002) 2002 US Dist Lexis 16116; see also Freeman v Alta Bates Summit Med. Ctr. Campus (ND Cal 2004) 2004 US Dist Lexis 21402. The Unruh Act statutory penalty, however, does not require a showing of fraud, oppression, or malice as required by CC §3294; therefore, it is arguable that an aggrieved person may be entitled to recover both the statutory penalty and punitive damages. See Greenberg v Western Turf Ass'n (1903) 140 C 357, 73 P 1050. If the aggrieved person was a victim of violence or threats of violence because of race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, political affiliation, sex (including pregnancy, childbirth, and gender identity and gender-related appearance and behavior), or position in a labor dispute, he or she may be awarded $25,000 in addition to any actual damages. CC §52(b). See also Govt C §12926(p); Pen C §422.56.

The aggrieved party is entitled to recover reasonable attorney fees (CC §52(a)), the court having discretion to determine only the amount. Engel v Worthington (1997) 60 CA4th 628, 70 CR2d 526. The court may also award injunctive relief even though the Unruh Act does not expressly provide for such relief. Burks v Poppy Constr. Co. (1962) 57 C2d 463, 20 CR 609; Don Wilson Builders v Superior Court (1963) 220 CA2d 77, 33 CR 621. But see Doran v North State Grocery (2006) 137 CA4th 484, 491, 39 CR3d 922 (plaintiff's acceptance of CCP §998 offer precludes recovery of attorney fees because there is no finding of defendant's liability under the Unruh Act).

Under CC §51.6, a business establishment may not discriminate on the basis of gender with respect to the price charged for services of similar or like kind (see §2.58). The remedies for violation of §51.6 are those provided in CC §52(a), but an action under §51.6 is independent of any other remedy that may be available to an aggrieved party.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.60 C. Equal Access Requirements for Persons With Disabilities

Civil Code §54.1, a provision separate from the Unruh Act (see §2.57), provides protections to disabled persons that are similar to those provided in the FEHA (see §2.26). Individuals with disabilities (including medical conditions specified in Govt C §12926(h)) are entitled to full and equal access to all housing accommodations that are offered for sale or rent. CC §54.1(b)(1). A "housing accommodation" includes any real property used or intended to be used as a home, residence, or sleeping place. CC §54.1(b)(2). Exempted are single-family residences in which no more than one room is rented. CC §54.1(b)(2).

A violation of CC §54.1 occurs when:

(1) The landlord refuses to lease to a disabled person because of the use of a guide, signal, or service dog; or

(2) The landlord refuses to allow the tenant to keep the dog on the premises.

CC §54.1(b)(6). The landlord may, however, establish reasonable rules regulating the presence of such dogs on the premises. CC §54.1(b)(6)(B).

Note, however, that the FEHA provides more protections for tenants with disabilities in this area, since case law has interpreted the reasonable accommodation provision to include tenants who need companion animals for psychiatric disabilities, whereas CC §54.1 is limited to "guide", "signal", or "service" dogs,. See Janush v Charities Hous. Dev. Corp. (ND Cal 2000) 169 F Supp 2d 1133; Auburn Woods I Homeowners Ass'n v FEHC (2004) 121 CA4th 1578, 18 CR3d 669.

A violation also occurs if the landlord refuses to lease to a disabled person because he or she is partially or wholly dependent on the income of a spouse who is a party to the lease. CC §54.1(b)(7). The landlord may consider the aggregate financial status of the disabled person and the spouse. CC §54.1(b)(7).

A violation of an individual's rights under the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 (ADA) (42 USC §§12101-12213) also constitutes a violation of CC §54.2, and nothing in CC §54.1 may be construed to limit an individual's access in violation of the ADA. CC §54.1(d). Consequently, to prove a violation of CC §54.1, a plaintiff need not prove intentional discrimination, because the ADA requires only a showing that the landlord's conduct denied equal housing accommodations as a result of a failure to accommodate the disability (see §§2.21, 2.23 for discussion of Presta v Peninsula Corridor Joint Powers Bd. (ND Cal 1998) 16 F Supp 2d 1134 and other cases).

Anyone who denies a person with a disability equal access to housing is strictly liable for actual damages, a statutory penalty of up to three times the actual damages but not less than $1000, and attorney fees awarded by the court. CC §54.3. The damages provisions of §54.3 are more limited than those of CC §52(a), but the plaintiff does not need to prove that the discrimination is intentional. A person aggrieved by a violation of CC §§54-54.2 may file a verified complaint with the Department of Fair Employment and Housing (see Directory) under Govt C §§12930-12955. CC §54.3(b).

Any aggrieved person, the district or city attorney, the state Department of Rehabilitation (see Directory), or the state Attorney General may bring an action to enjoin violation of the equal access laws. CC §§55-55.1. The prevailing party in an action for injunctive relief brought by an aggrieved person is entitled to recover reasonable attorney fees. CC §55.

© The Regents of the University of California

VII. PROSECUTION OF A RENTAL DISCRIMINATION CASE

§2.61 A. Establishing Illegal Discrimination

The plaintiff in a rental discrimination case has the burden of proving that the landlord committed an illegal discriminatory act. Burris v Wilkins (5th Cir 1977) 544 F2d 891. A landlord that engages in illegal discriminatory practices, however, rarely does so directly, e.g., by expressly refusing to rent to a prospective tenant because of his or her protected class status. With the addition of familial status and disability to fair housing law, however, there has been a marked increase in cases involving overt discrimination because many landlords either do not understand the law or refuse to accept that it applies to their housing practices.

Individuals usually claim unlawful discrimination in one of several common situations:

(1) The landlord overtly discriminated on the basis of protected class status (overt discrimination);

(2) The landlord intentionally discriminated but asserts that he or she used a legitimate factor to deny tenancy (disparate treatment);

(3) The landlord intentionally discriminated by using both legitimate and illegitimate factors to deny tenancy (mixed motives);

(4) The landlord did not intentionally discriminate but used criteria applying to all applicants that have a disparate impact on members of a protected class (disparate impact);

(5) The landlord provided housing under more adverse terms than to others (exploitation).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.62 1. Overt Discrimination

Establishing overt discrimination requires direct evidence of the discriminatory conduct, e.g., that the landlord applied more stringent qualification standards to an applicant who is a member of a protected class than to other persons. Another example of overt discrimination is a housing provider's spurious assertion of an exemption from fair housing law, such as housing for older adults, as the basis for discrimination.

A landlord can rebut a claim of overt discrimination by proving that no discriminatory conduct occurred or by claiming that the law entitled him or her to discriminate.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.63 2. Disparate Treatment

Disparate treatment occurs when members of a protected class are treated adversely and others, not members of that protected class, do not experience the adverse treatment in similarly situated transactions. To establish disparate treatment, the plaintiff must rely on indirect evidence of discrimination. The courts evaluate disparate treatment cases at trial by considering whether the plaintiff has proven a prima facie case of discrimination and, if so, whether the landlord has successfully defended it.

Under a disparate treatment analysis, if a prima facie case exits, the landlord has the burden of producing evidence to show that plaintiff was rejected for a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason. This is a limited burden, because the housing provider is merely required to articulate, not to prove, the existence of a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the action. The housing provider must, however, use admissible evidence. See Texas Dep't of Community Affairs v Burdine (1981) 450 US 248, 67 L Ed 2d 207, 101 S Ct 1089.

If the housing provider meets this burden, the plaintiff has a final opportunity to show that the purported reason was merely a pretext. See, e.g., Soules v HUD (2d Cir 1992) 967 F2d 817 (housing provider had legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons for not renting apartment and plaintiff failed to prove the reasons were pretextual); HUD v Hacker, supra (although plaintiff established a prima facie case of discrimination based on familial status in rental housing, charge was dismissed because plaintiff failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that housing provider's legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons for actions were pretextual). A housing provider may also present evidence that it has a legitimate safety concern, not based on stereotypes, that justifies the discrimination. See Community House, Inc. v City of Boise (9th Cir 2007) 490 F3d 1041, 1050, citing International Union v Johnson Controls (1991) 499 US 187, 204, 113 L Ed 2d 158, 177, 111 S Ct 1196.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.64 3. Mixed Motives

In mixed motive cases, the evidence shows that the landlord's refusal to rent was motivated by both legitimate and illegitimate factors. For example, a landlord does not want to rent to a Latino family because of prior bad experiences with Latinos but also has legitimate questions about the applicants' ability to pay the rent.

Under California law, the plaintiff is required to show only that discrimination toward a protected class played some role in the landlord's decision. "A person intends to discriminate if [protected class status] is a motivating factor in committing a discriminatory housing practice even though other factors may have also motivated the practice." Govt C §12955.8.

This standard eases the plaintiff's burden; proof of the landlord's use of an illegitimate factor should be sufficient to establish liability, although damages may be limited if the applicant was otherwise unqualified. This formulation of "mixed motives" is similar to the federal rule, which follows the "Price Waterhouse standard" enunciated in Price Waterhouse v Hopkins (1989) 490 US 228, 104 L Ed 2d 268, 109 S Ct 1775. If any motive is discriminatory among other nondiscriminatory motives, the act is discriminatory. However, actions that would have occurred anyway in the absence of intent are not the basis of liability (e.g., tenant can still be evicted if tenant does not pay rent). See HUD v Denton (HUD ALJ 1992) 05-90-0012-1:

> One of the most difficult problems posed by a case involving mixed motives is to determine the extent to which any particular motive was a cause of a respondent's action. Delving into an individual's mental processes to determine causation in terms of the degree and the timing of multiple motivations is an exercise in metaphysical abstraction. However, Price Waterhouse does not require a determination of the relative weight an unlawful motive had in a respondent's decision, nor does it require a determination whether the unlawful motive preceded or followed the lawful motive. All it requires is a finding… that it is more likely than not that… familial status played a part in that decision, and that they would have evicted [tenants] even if they had not allowed familial status to play a role.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.65 4. Disparate Impact

In a disparate impact case, an applicant is not required to prove intent to establish illegal discrimination but only that "an act or failure to act … has the effect, regardless of intent, of unlawfully discriminating." Govt C §12955.8(b). The plaintiff typically establishes this proof by statistical evidence showing the impact of a particular policy either on the relevant population of protected class members or on a particular subgroup of class members. Betsey v Turtle Creek Assocs. (4th Cir 1984) 736 F2d 983 (impact on African-American and Latino tenants in a building). See generally Schwemm, Housing Discrimination: Law and Litigation (2001); Relman, Housing Discrimination Practice Manual (2006).

Under California law, the landlord has a stringent burden of rebuttal: The landlord must show that the policy having a discriminatory effect is "necessary to the operation of the business and effectively carries out the significant business need it is alleged to serve." Govt C §12955.8(b). If the landlord does not justify the criterion under this standard, the policy violates the law. Moreover, the court will also consider "whether or not there are feasible alternatives that would equally well or better accomplish the purpose advanced with a less discriminatory effect." Govt C §12955.8(b)(1).

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords should be advised to document carefully all of their rental policies regarding tenant screening criteria and house and community rules. The documentation should not only establish criteria or rules, but what business necessity they are designed to further.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.66 B. Use of Testers

A common method of establishing a case of illegal discrimination is to use testers. After an alleged discriminatory act, a member of a class that is not the target of the discrimination is sent to repeat the experience. For example, an African-American person calls to inquire about an apartment advertised for rent, is informed that it is still available, but on arrival is told that the apartment has just been rented. A white tester of similar age and the same sex is selected to pose as a prospective tenant with a similar background and family composition. The tester visits the premises to inquire about the apartment and is informed that it is still available for rent. Sometimes multiple tests are conducted to establish a clear discriminatory pattern. If the landlord offers housing to the white testers, but denies it to the minorities, a prima facie case of illegal discrimination is established. Smith v Anchor Bldg. Corp. (8th Cir 1976) 536 F2d 231, 233.

Tests are designed to expose discrimination patterns. There can be many variations, including the numbers of testers sent, their demographic features, and the order in which they are sent. Single-person tests, as described above, were first accepted by the early Fair Housing Act case of Bush v Kaim (ND Ohio 1969) 297 F Supp 151. With paired testers, the minority tester appears first to replicate the experience of an aggrieved party and obtain time priority. That tester is followed by a control tester who usually replicates the demographic characteristics of the housing provider. Testers sometimes go in the "sandwich" format where a control tester is followed by a minority tester, who in turn is followed by another (or the same) control tester, as was accomplished in Richardson v Howard (7th Cir 1983) 712 F2d 319 and Blockman v Sandalwood Apartments (7th Cir 1980) 613 F2d 169. Tests can expose complex discrimination patterns. See Gresham v Windrush Partners (7th Cir 1984) 730 F2d 1417; Davis v The Mansards (ND Ind 1984) 597 F Supp 334. Testing evidence is absolutely essential in some cases. See "Measuring Racial Discrimination in American Housing Markets—The Housing Market Practices Survey," HUD-PDR-444, May 1979; "Housing Discrimination Study: Analyzing Racial and Ethnic Steering," HUD-1325-PDR, Nov. 1991; "Housing Discrimination Study: Synthesis," HUD-1318-PDR, Oct. 1991 (methodology discussions point out limitations in paired testing, which intrinsically must compare results in order to uncover disparities in treatment).

The courts have long accepted the use of testers as an appropriate method of proving illegal discrimination. See Havens Realty Corp. v Coleman (1982) 455 US 363, 71 L Ed 2d 214, 102 S Ct 1114; Phiffer v Proud Parrot Motor Hotel, Inc. (9th Cir 1980) 648 F2d 548; Bush v Kaim (ND Ohio 1969) 297 F Supp 151; U.S. v Youritan Constr. Co. (ND Cal 1973) 370 F Supp 643, remanded on other grounds (9th Cir 1975) 509 F2d 623. See also FEHC v Prunty's New Beginnings (2006) (FEHC Decision No. 04-05-046, June 6, 2006) 2006 CAFEHC Lexis 3. Courts have acknowledged the difficulty of proving illegal discrimination without the use of testers. See Hamilton v Miller (10th Cir 1973) 477 F2d 908.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/2 Fair Housing Considerations/§2.67 C. Standing

§2.67 C. Standing

Courts interpret standing requirements liberally in actions brought under the Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981-1982) and the Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631). A party has standing if the allegations show that he or she has suffered a distinct and palpable injury as a result of the defendant's actions. Havens Realty Corp. v Coleman (1982) 455 US 363, 71 L Ed 2d 214, 102 S Ct 1114; Gordon v City of Cartersville (ND Ga 1981) 522 F Supp 753. Clearly, any direct victim of illegal discriminatory practices will have standing. See Harris v Itzhaki (9th Cir 1999) 183 F3d 1043; Denny v Hutchinson Sales Corp. (10th Cir 1981) 649 F2d 816; Grant v Smith (5th Cir 1978) 574 F2d 252; Johnson v Jerry Pals Real Estate (7th Cir 1973) 485 F2d 528.

Standing has been extended under the Fair Housing Act to numerous categories of plaintiffs. They are as follows, stated in terms of widening scope:

- Bona fide home seekers or consumers are clearly covered.
- Members of the household who are injured by actions against another member. U.S. v Forest Dale (ND Tex 1993) 818 F Supp 954 (wife of deceased disabled tenant who was target of discrimination held to have standing in her own right as aggrieved party).
- Residents who are denied interracial association with a potential neighbor who was denied admission. Trafficante v Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (1972) 409 US 205, 209, 211, 34 L Ed 2d 415, 93 S Ct 364.
- Household member and guest when the guest is the subject of discrimination. 24 CFR §100.60(b)(5) (evictions due to protected status of tenant or "guest"); 24 CFR §100.65(b)(4) (limiting use of privileges, services, or facilities based on protected status of "owner, tenant or a person associated with him or her"); U.S. v L & H Land Corp. (SD Fla 1976) 407 F Supp 576, 580; Olzman v Lake Hills Swim Club, Inc. (2d Cir 1974) 495 F2d 1333 (Civil Rights Act of 1866; prohibitions also extend to discriminatory guest policies for clubs or other amenities associated with housing).
- Resident denied sale of a mobilehome for ex-daughter-in-law because she had children. Sandoval v Mazer (D NM 1997) FH-FL ¶16,197.
- Broker who is denied commission. Crumble v Blumthal (7th Cir 1977) 549 F2d 462.
- Disabled tester who observes inaccessible features of a dwelling. Smith v Pacific Props. (9th Cir 2004) 358 F3d 1097.
- Fair housing organization that expends resources helping injured members. Havens Realty Corp. v Coleman (1982) 455 US 363, 71 L Ed 2d 214, 102 S Ct 1114; Smith v Pacific Props., supra.
- Member of the same neighborhood. Havens Realty Corp. v Coleman (1982) 455 US 363, 71 L Ed 2d 214, 102 S Ct 1114.
- A city denied minority residents. Village of Bellwood v Dwivedi Realty (7th Cir 1990) 895 F2d 1521.

Testers, who have no real intention of purchasing or renting property, have standing under the Civil Rights Act of 1866 (Meyers v Pennypack Woods Home Ownership Ass'n (3d Cir 1977) 559 F2d 894, overruled on other grounds in Goodman v Lukens Steel Co. (3d Cir 1986) 777 F2d 113) and under the Fair Housing Act (Havens Realty Corp. v Coleman, supra; Harris v Itzhaki, supra). A nonprofit corporation formed to provide equal opportunity in housing has standing because the alleged violation of the Fair Housing Act impaired the organization's ability to conduct or provide other community services, such as counsel low- and moderate-income homeseekers. See Havens Realty Corp. v Coleman (1982) 455 US 363, 71 L Ed 2d 214, 102 S Ct 1114; Fair Hous. Council of Marin v Combs (9th Cir 2002) 285 F3d 899. See also Central Alabama Fair Hous. Ctr. v Lowder Realty Co. (11th Cir 2000) 236 F3d 629; Ragin v Harry Macklowe Real Estate Co. (2d Cir 1993) 6 F3d 898. See also FEHC v Prunty's New Beginnings (2006) (FEHC Decision No. 04-05-046, June 6, 2006) 2006 CAFEHC Lexis 3 (fair housing agency is aggrieved person within meaning of Govt C §12927(g)). However, a fair housing agency must allege more than a frustration of its fair housing mission or a general diversion of its resources. At minimum, it must allege that, due to the defendant's discriminatory conduct, it has diverted resources from other specific activities such as counseling or mediation. Fair Hous. Council of Marin v Combs, supra. A fair housing agency also has standing under the Fair Housing Act and the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) when a local government cancels its contract with the agency in retaliation for enforcement of the fair housing laws. Walker v City of Lakewood (9th Cir 2001) 263 F3d 1005. Such an action may also violate the requirement imposed on every recipient of federal assistance to affirmatively further fair housing. See 42 USC §3608(d), (e)(5).

Other persons who are not members of a protected class, but who suffer injuries because of discrimination, have standing to bring actions under the Fair Housing Act Halet v Wend Inv. Co. (9th Cir 1982) 672 F2d 1305 (white plaintiff had standing under the Fair Housing Act to challenge facially neutral policy having a racially discriminatory impact); Walker v Pointer (ND Tex 1969) 304 F Supp 56 (white tenant evicted for entertaining African-American friends) and under 42 USC §1982 (Sullivan v Little Hunting Park, Inc. (1969) 396 US 229, 24 L Ed 2d 386, 90 S Ct 400 (white lessor expelled from community recreational organization for renting property to African-American tenant); Walker v Fox (SD Ohio 1975) 395 F Supp 1303 (landlord's discriminatory rental practices caused white tenant to move and incur increased rental expenses); Williamson v Hampton Mgmt. Co. (ND Ill 1972) 339 F Supp 1146 (white lessee frustrated in attempts to sublease to African-American tenant).

However, in Reycraft v Lee (2009) 177 CA4th 1211, 99 CR3d 746, a mobilehome park's rules required guests of tenants to register and pay a fee to use the park's pool. The plaintiff, a disabled guest of a mobilehome park tenant, did not have standing to state a claim under CC §54.3 for monetary damages due to lack of compliance with accessibility guidelines under the Disabled Persons Act (CC §§54-55.2), because she did not register as a guest or pay the guest fee and did not suffer any actual damages. The court did state, however, that if the plaintiff had pursued injunctive relief she could have established standing because a plaintiff may sue under CC §55 if "aggrieved or potentially aggrieved by a violation of Section 54 or 54.1." 177 CA4th at 1219.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.68 D. Owner's Responsibility for Agent's Discriminatory Acts

A property owner is liable for discriminatory acts committed by the apartment manager, rental agent, broker, or other agent under the common law doctrine of respondeat superior, or, what the Supreme Court refers to as "traditional theories of agency liability." Meyer v Holley (2003) 537 US 280, 154 L Ed 2d 753, 123 S Ct 824 (the Ninth Circuit issued a new opinion in Holley v Crank (9th Cir 2004) 400 F3d 667); Cleveland v Caplaw Enters. (2d Cir 2006) 448 F3d 518; U.S. v Youritan Constr. Co. (ND Cal 1973) 370 F Supp 643, 649, remanded on other grounds (9th Cir 1975) 509 F2d 623. As long as the agent acts within the scope of the agency, the owner is liable even if the acts are negligent, intentional, or malicious (CC §2338; Hudson v Nixon (1962) 57 C2d 482, 20 CR 620), or are contrary to instructions from the owner (DeMirjian v Ideal Heating Corp. (1954) 129 CA2d 758, 278 P2d 114; Rosenberg v J. C. Penney Co. (1939) 30 CA2d 609, 623, 86 P2d 696, 704). Admissions by an agent of discriminatory practices may be attributed to the owner. Harris v Itzhaki (9th Cir 1999) 183 F3d 1043.

Officers of a corporation cannot ordinarily be held personally liable for their failure to ensure the corporation's compliance with the Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631), except when an agent acts under the authority of a licensed real estate broker or if the corporate veil can be pierced. See Holley v Crank (9th Cir 2004) 400 F3d 667.

Even tenants who fill vacancies for absentee landlords may have an agency relationship with the landlord that can subject the landlord to liability under the Fair Housing Act. Marya v Slakey (D Mass 2001) 190 F Supp 2d 95. In Marya, the court held that federal law, not state law, controls the issue of agency in cases alleging liability under the Fair Housing Act.

Conversely, an agent is liable for any illegal discriminatory acts even though they were committed on the owner's advice. Jeanty v McKay & Poague, Inc. (7th Cir 1974) 496 F2d 1119. An owner may be directly liable for negligence in failing to adequately supervise his or her agents, or to establish standard rental procedures. U.S. v Youritan Constr. Co., supra.

An owner may be liable for punitive damages because of an agent's acts if the owner authorized or participated in the acts. Restatement (Second) of Agency §217c(a); Walker v Todd Village, LLC (D Md 2006) 419 F Supp 2d 743; Williamson v Hampton Mgmt. Co., supra; Walker v Pointer (ND Tex 1969) 304 F Supp 56, 64. Approval or ratification of an agent's acts may be found by an owner's failure to respond to a complaint about the agent's conduct or the owner's retention of the agent after the commission of a wrongful act. Caldwell v Farley (1955) 134 CA2d 84, 285 P2d 294; Farvour v Geltis (1949) 91 CA2d 603, 205 P2d 424; McChristian v Popkin (1946) 75 CA2d 249, 171 P2d 85.

An owner who rents an entire building to a third party and retains no control over subleasing is not liable for the third party's discriminatory practices. The third party is considered to be an independent contractor and not an agent of the owner. Walker v Fox (SD Ohio 1975) 395 F Supp 1303. See also Northside Realty Assocs. v U.S. (5th Cir 1979) 605 F2d 1348.

Landlords of a realty office were liable for noncompliance with the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 USC §§12101-12213) despite a provision in the commercial lease shifting the responsibility to the tenant-realty office. Botosan v Paul McNally Realty (9th Cir 2000) 216 F3d 827.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.69 E. Statute of Limitations

Statutes of limitations act to strictly prohibit the filing of claims after the statute of limitations period runs, calculated from the injury to the plaintiff. AMTRAK v Morgan (2002) 536 US 101, 110, 153 L Ed 2d 106, 120, 122 S Ct 2061. Statutes of limitations should be distinguished from statutes of repose, which are legislative acts cutting off exposure to liability based solely on an act of the defendant unrelated to the plaintiff's injury. Lyon v Agusta S.P.A. (9th Cir 2001) 252 F3d 1078, 1084 (statute of repose runs from date of first transfer from manufacturer; statute of limitations runs from date on which injury occurs).

The administrative remedy available through HUD has a 1-year limitations period. 42 USC §3610(a)(1)(A)(i). A private action has a 2-year limitations period. 42 USC §3613(a)(1)(A). Under the Fair Housing Act, an action may be filed within the applicable limitations period after a discriminatory housing practice "has occurred or terminated" or the "occurrence or termination" of a discriminatory housing practice. 42 USC §§3610(a)(1)(A)(i), 3613(a)(1)(A). The limitations period begins to run at the time of the discriminatory act, not when the act is discovered. Havens Realty Corp. v Coleman (1982) 455 US 363, 380, 71 L Ed 2d 214, 102 S Ct 1114; Moseke v Miller & Smith, Inc. (ED Va 2002) 202 F Supp 2d 492, 503.

To identify when a statute of limitations begins to run, the attorney must first identify what statutory right the plaintiff is seeking to redress. Because the date of an injury is closely tied to the categorization of the injury, the statute of limitations calculation depends on corresponding concepts of standing and subject matter jurisdiction. Consequently, court decisions on standing or subject matter jurisdiction can determine what statute of limitations applies for a given statute. A cause of action does not become "complete and present" for limitations purposes until the plaintiff can file suit and obtain relief. Bay Area Laundry & Dry Cleaning Pension Trust Fund v Ferbar Corp. (1997) 522 US 192, 201, 139 L Ed 2d 553, 118 S Ct 542. See Meyer v Holley (2003) 537 US 280, 285, 154 L Ed 2d 753, 123 S Ct 824 (Fair Housing Act claims are tort actions that Congress has legislated against background of common law principles).

Statutes of limitations are subject to exceptions and may be shortened or extended by applying equitable theories of waiver, laches, estoppel, tolling, and fraudulent concealment (Zipes v Trans World Airlines, Inc. (1982) 455 US 385, 71 L Ed 2d 234, 102 S Ct 1127):

- Laches defense is available to defendants for relief from equitable remedies sought by plaintiffs who lacked diligence in asserting their claim, and who prejudiced the defendant by their lack of diligence. AMTRAK v Morgan (2002) 536 US 101, 122, 153 L Ed 2d 106, 127, 122 S Ct 2061.
- Equitable estoppel supposes that, through acts of the defendant, the plaintiff was induced to not file the action in time. Bell v Fowler (8th Cir 1996) 99 F3d 262.
- Equitable tolling will apply when there is no allegation of wrongdoing by either party, but the plaintiff even through due diligence could not become aware of the existence of his or her cause of action until they did file. Chakonas v City of Chicago (7th Cir 1994) 42 F3d 1132, 1135. Equitable tolling is read into every federal statute of limitation. Holmberg v Armbrecht (1946) 327 US 392, 397, 90 L Ed 743, 66 S Ct 582, 585.
- Fraudulent concealment is sometimes used to describe equitable estoppel (See Cada v Baxter Healthcare Corp. (7th Cir 1990) 920 F2d 446, 451), but may be distinguished as a rule that applies when the defendant fraudulently causes the plaintiff to be unaware of actionable conduct that cannot be discovered through due diligence. Curtis v Conly (1921) 257 US 260, 42 S Ct 100, 66 L Ed 222.

Laches may shorten the time otherwise allowed by a statute of limitations for a plaintiff. In suits brought seeking both equitable and legal remedies, courts generally follow the applicable statute of limitations. Holmberg v Armbrecht (1946) 327 US 392, 395, 90 L Ed 743, 746, 66 S Ct 582. When "unusual conditions or extraordinary circumstances" result in a prejudicial unexcused delay, courts have applied laches to establish a shorter time than that provided for by an otherwise applicable statute of limitations. Kelley v Boettcher (8th Cir 1898) 85 F 55, 62. But the laches doctrine is limited to equitable remedies. Russell v Todd (1940) 309 US 280, 288 n1, 84 L Ed 754, 760 n1, 60 S Ct 527 (laches may bar equitable remedy before local statute has run); AMTRAK v Morgan (2002) 536 US 101, 121, 153 L Ed 2d 106, 112, 122 S Ct 2061 (limitation of application of laches to only equitable remedies not stated in rebuttal to concerns that defendants in hostile environment cases in general will be prejudiced by application of continuing violations doctrine). Laches cannot supplant the time limitation stated in a statute of limitations if only legal remedies, and not also equitable remedies, are sought. Morgan v Koch (7th Cir 1969) 419 F2d 993, citing Cope v Anderson (1947) 331 US 461, 91 L Ed 1602, 67 S Ct 1340; Swan v Board of Ed. (2d Cir 1963) 319 F2d 56, 59. Laches is also generally not applicable to "the sovereign," although this doctrine seems to be eroding under the rationale of "providing relief to defendants." Costello v U.S. (1961) 365 US 265, 281, 5 L Ed 2d 551, 562, 81 S Ct 534 (citing numerous Supreme Court cases in which U.S. was party); Illinois v Kentucky (1991) 500 US 380, 388, 114 L Ed 2d 420, 430, 111 S Ct 1877 (in context of interstate compact case, "the laches defense is generally inapplicable against a State"). But see HUD v Sparks (HUD ALJ 2003) 05-92-1274-8 (equitable remedy used to relieve respondent from HUD's unjustifiable and prejudicial delay in investigating and litigating Fair Housing Act case).

The statute of limitations for continuing violations of the Fair Housing Act may not begin to run until the violations terminate. Havens Realty Corp. v Coleman (1982) 455 US 363, 380, 71 L Ed 2d 214, 102 S Ct 1114 (because racially discriminatory acts were continuing violations, plaintiffs were allowed to obtain remedies for injuries caused by entire sequence). An aggrieved person may commence a civil action "not later than 2 years after the occurrence or the termination of an alleged discriminatory housing practice." 42 USC 3613(a)(1)(A). The last discriminatory event in a series of discriminatory events is the one that triggers the statute of limitations. Moseke v Miller & Smith, Inc. (ED Va 2002) 202 F Supp 2d 492, 502; Inland Mediation Bd. v City of Pomona (CD Cal 2001) 158 F Supp 2d 1120. There may not be an overt act by the defendant at the time of injury if the defendant acted to discourage plaintiffs from asserting rights that would have been a futile gesture to assert. The futile gesture doctrine was first applied in Title VII cases, beginning with International Bhd. of Teamsters v U.S. (1977) 431 US 324, 52 L Ed 2d 396, 97 S Ct 1843, and extended through subsequent decisions. See, e.g., U.S. v Gregory (4th Cir 1989) 871 F2d 1239, 1242. The futile gesture theory was first applied to housing discrimination cases in Pinchback v Armistead Homes Corp. (4th Cir 1990) 907 F2d 1447.

A statute of limitations does not begin to run again when the effects or consequences of a defendant's act occur. Delaware State College v Ricks (1980) 449 US 250, 66 L Ed 2d 431, 101 S Ct 498. (plaintiff notified of termination but offered a 1-year "terminal contract" under which he could continue to work; date plaintiff was notified of termination triggered running of statute of limitations). See also Electrical Workers v Robbins & Myers, Inc. (1976) 429 US 229, 50 L Ed 2d 427, 97 S Ct 441 (timely filing requirement not tolled because plaintiff had been pursuing grievance procedure set up in collective bargaining agreement). A freestanding violation may always be charged within its own charging period regardless of its connection to other violations. Ledbetter v Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. (2007) 550 US 618, 167 L Ed 2d 982, 997, 127 S Ct 2162. See also Bradley v Carydale Enters. (ED Va 1989) 730 F Supp 709 (last act in long series of acts after initial termination notice was last actionable conduct triggering limitations period).

When an individual applicant is denied admission, and either is or should be aware of the event, the limitations period begins to run and is not a continuing violation or subject to equitable tolling. Havens Realty Corp. v Coleman (1982) 455 US 363, 381, 71 L Ed 2d 214, 102 S Ct 1114; Meyers v Pennypack Woods Home Ownership Ass'n (3d Cir 1977) 559 F2d 894, 903 n27; James v Hafler (ND Ga 1970) 320 F Supp 397. Where denial of admission cases involve published discriminatory policies, the notice of these policies to an applicant/plaintiff with standing is actionable conduct as a discriminatory statement, notice or advertisement as of the date of statement, notice, or publication (42 USC §3604(c)), and no further act is required under the futile gesture rule for the applicant/plaintiff to be able to allege a denial of rental or sales if he or she is looking for such housing (42 USC §3604(a)).

If discriminatory terms and conditions are imposed by the contract, i.e., established at the beginning of the tenancy, the earliest date the limitations period can start to run is the formation date of the agreement. However, each time such a discriminatory term or condition is imposed is new actionable conduct. Concerned Tenants Ass'n v Indian Trails Apartments (ND Ill 1980) 496 F Supp 522. The aggrieved party may file actions for subsequent violations after earlier initially suffering discrimination in terms and conditions. Bazemore v Friday (1986) 478 US 385, 92 L Ed 2d 315, 106 S Ct 3000. See Ledbetter v Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. (2007) 550 US 618, 167 L Ed 2d 982, 997, 127 S Ct 2162 (plaintiff alleged that defendant initially adopted a system in order to discriminate and later applied the system to her within charging period).

It is illegal to "make, print, or publish, or cause to be made, printed, or published any notice, statement, or advertisement, with respect to the sale or rental of a dwelling that indicates any preference, limitation, or discrimination."

42 USC §3604(c). Statements, notices, or advertisements can communicate discreet acts or events, or they can communicate a continuing series of events or a continuing policy. Pinchback v Armistead Homes Corp. (4th Cir 1990) 907 F2d 1447. Violations under 42 USC §3604(c) can be discreet acts. For example, if a discriminatory term or condition is proposed prior to its going into force over the plaintiff, it remains a fleeting statement, and is a discrete, non-continuing act that triggers the applicable statute of limitations. U.S. v Pelzer Realty Co. (5th Cir 1973) 484 F2d 438 (cause of action completed when disparate term was demanded, no continuing violation discussed). On the other hand, when a sign is up over a drinking fountain in an apartment complex that states "Whites Only," the violation occurs each time a non-white who wishes to drink from the fountain reads the sign. This process continues as long as the sign is up over the fountain. HUD Handbook 8024.01, §3-2(D).

There are competing legal theories as to how to calculate the limitations period for evictions. One theory is that the last actionable event is when the notice was served, since all that follows is a mere consequence. Delaware State College v Ricks, supra. This theory is not supported by a careful reading of the Ricks opinion, since the limitations period in Ricks was triggered by the final decision reached by the college board of trustees after a long process involving years, numerous procedural stages, and several earlier notices. See Benders v Bellows & Bellows (7th Cir 2008) 515 F3d 757 (limits application of Ricks to terminations following substantial, predefined procedural requirements); Bradley v Carydale Enters. (ED Va 1989) 707 F Supp 217 (Ricks held to establish that limitations period began when defendant caused last injury, which in Carydale was when defendant served second notice of eviction).

Another theory is that the date the final decision was made and communicated to the tenant is the date of trial. See HUD Handbook 8420.01, §3-2(C). Two Fair Housing Act cases assert that the last date of discrimination is the date of dispossession. In Harper v Union Sav. Ass'n (ND Ohio 1977) 429 F Supp 1254 and in Radecki v Joura (8th Cir 1997) 114 F3d 115, the courts held that the date that actionable discrimination occurred was when the residents were dispossessed. See 42 USC §3604(a).

Decisional law on the statute of limitations for actions under the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) is confusing. The period for filing may be 2 years, under the assumption that such actions are equivalent to personal injury claims. See West Shield Investigations & Sec. Consultants v Superior Court (2000) 82 CA4th 935, 98 CR2d 612; Mitchell v Sung (ND Cal 1993) 816 F Supp 597 (both cases held Unruh Act claim is equivalent to personal injury action under common law; see CCP §335.1, effective January 1, 2003). But see Gatto v County of Sonoma (2002) 98 CA4th 744, 759, 120 CR2d 550 ("no single statute of limitations applies" to all Unruh Act protections; personal injury rule applies to remedies that evolved from common law and 3-year rule for liability created by statute under CCP §338(a) applies to remaining remedies); Prudential Home Mortgage Co. v Superior Court (1998) 66 CA4th 1236, 1245, 78 CR2d 566 (claim based on statute providing mandatory recovery of damages in addition to actual losses (e.g., treble damages) is penal, thus subject to 1-year limitation in former CCP §340(1); now CCP §340(a)).

For statute of limitations on actions under the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996), see §§2.28, 2.52.

© The Regents of the University of California

3

Rights and Duties During Tenancy

Ted Kimball
Nancy C. Lenvin
Myron Moskovitz

I. INTRODUCTION §3.1

II. LANDLORD'S LIMITED RIGHT OF ENTRY
- A. Nature and Extent §3.2
- B. Procedure for Entry; Notice Requirements §3.3
- C. Form: Notice of Landlord's Intention to Enter Dwelling Unit §3.3A
- D. Remedies §3.4

III. IMPLIED COVENANT OF QUIET ENJOYMENT
- A. Nature §3.5
- B. When Is Covenant Breached? §3.6
- C. Remedies §3.7

IV. LANDLORD'S DUTY TO MAINTAIN AND REPAIR PREMISES §3.8
- A. Express Promise to Repair §3.9
- B. Housing Code Enforcement
  - 1. Enforcement Process §3.10
  - 2. Housing Statutes, Regulations, and Codes
    - a. Statutory Tenantability; CC §§1941, 1941.1 §3.11
    - b. Door and Window Locks; CC §1941.3 §3.11A
    - c. Toxic Mold and Other Health and Safety Statutes §3.11B
    - d. Department of Housing Regulations §3.11C
    - e. Uniform Housing Code §3.11D
  - 3. Certificate of Occupancy Violations §3.11E
- C. "Repair-and-Deduct" Remedy; CC §1942
  - 1. Statutory Basis §3.12
  - 2. Procedure §3.13
  - 3. Waiver Not Permitted §3.14
  - 4. Commercial Tenancies §3.15
- D. Statutory Action for Damages and Abatement; CC §1942.4 §3.15A
- E. Constructive Eviction Action §3.15B
- F. Nuisance Action §3.15C
- G. Implied Warranty of Habitability
  - 1. Development §3.16
  - 2. Application
    - a. Single-Family Homes §3.17
    - b. Commercial Tenancies §3.18
    - c. Government-Owned Housing §3.19
    - d. Common Areas §3.20
    - e. Premises Uninhabitable at Inception of Tenancy §3.21
    - f. Premises Become Uninhabitable After Tenant Is Required to Vacate §3.22
  - 3. Waiver §3.23
  - 4. Breach of Warranty of Habitability
    - a. Actionable Defects
      - (1) Defects Covered by Housing Codes or CC §§1941.1 and 1941.3 §3.24
      - (2) Defects Not Covered by Housing and Building Codes §3.25
      - (3) Defects Caused by Tenant §3.26
      - (4) Severity of Defects §3.27
      - (5) Evidence of Defects §3.28
      - (6) Notice of Defects §3.29
    - b. Reasonable Time to Repair §3.30

c. Sale of Premises §3.31
d. Remedies for Breach of Implied Warranty
(1) Defense to Unlawful Detainer Suit
(a) Summary of Procedure §3.32
(b) Complaint Need Not Allege Compliance With Implied Warranty §3.33
(c) Protective Orders §3.34
(2) Actions for Damages; Statutes of Limitations §3.35
(a) Statutory Damages; Abatement §3.36
(b) General Damages
(i) Difference in Value or Percentage Reduction §3.37
(ii) Discomfort and Annoyance §3.38
(iii) Personal Injury Damages §3.38A
(c) Special Damages §3.39
(d) Punitive Damages §3.40
(e) Costs and Attorney Fees §3.41
(3) Injunctive Relief §3.42
(4) Termination and Rescission §3.43
(5) Declaratory Relief §3.44
5. Tactical Considerations §3.45
a. Contract or Tort Action §3.46
b. Gathering and Preserving Evidence §3.46A
c. Availability of Insurance Coverage §3.47
d. Monetary Versus Equitable Claims §3.48
H. Form: Complaint for Damages for Breach of Warranty of Habitability and Related Torts, Specific Performance, and Injunctive Relief §3.48A

V. ASSIGNMENT AND SUBLETTING
A. Transfer of Leasehold Interests §3.49
B. Assignment and Subletting Distinguished §3.50
C. Effect of Transfer §3.51
D. Rights and Liabilities Following Transfer
1. Assignment
a. Assignee and Landlord §3.52
b. Assignor and Landlord §3.53
2. Subletting
a. Sublessee and Landlord §3.54
b. Sublessor and Landlord §3.55
E. Restricting Transfer of Leasehold Interests
1. Lease Covenants Restricting Transfer §3.56
2. Waiver of Covenant §3.57
3. Landlord's Withholding of Consent §3.58
4. Subleasing in Jurisdictions with Rent Control §3.58A
5. Interaction With CC §1951.4 Remedy §3.59
F. Effect of Tenant Bankruptcy on Lease Assignment §3.59A

VI. EXTENSION AND RENEWAL OF LEASE
A. Tenant's Right to Extend or Renew §3.60
B. Covenants to Extend or Renew
1. Legal Requirements §3.61
2. Exercise of Election to Renew §3.62
3. Automatic Renewal; Required Language in Lease (CC §1945.5) §3.63
C. Holding Over §3.64

VII. CHANGING TERMS OF TENANCY
A. Periodic Tenancy
1. 30-day Notice of Change in Terms §3.65
2. 60-day Notice of Residential Rent Increase Over 10 Percent §3.65A
3. Effect of Notice §3.65B
B. Fixed-Term Tenancy §3.66
C. Terminating Government Rent Subsidy Contracts in Rent Control Jurisdictions §3.66A
D. Rent Increases Under Government Subsidy Contracts §3.66B

VIII. LANDLORD LIABILITY FOR PERSONAL INJURY AND PROPERTY DAMAGE
A. Liability to Tenant

1. Negligent Failure to Correct Defects §3.67
2. Failure to Maintain Common Areas §3.67A
3. Injuries Caused by Criminal Acts of Third Parties §3.68
   a. Public Housing Projects §3.68A
   b. Privately Owned Apartment Buildings §3.68B
   c. Privately Owned Commercial Buildings §3.68C
   d. Public Buildings §3.68D
4. Exculpatory Clauses §3.69
5. Strict Liability §3.70
6. Liability for Sexual Harassment §3.70A

B. Liability to Third Parties
1. Liability for Negligence Regardless of Plaintiff's Status §3.71
2. Liability for Acts of Tenant §3.72

IX. TENANT LIABILITY FOR PROPERTY DAMAGE AND PERSONAL INJURY
A. Duty to Repair §3.73
B. Injury to Third Parties §3.74

X. IMPLIED COVENANT OF GOOD FAITH AND FAIR DEALING §3.75

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.1 I. INTRODUCTION

During the term of the tenancy, the rights and duties of the parties are governed primarily by the lease or rental agreement between them unless the state legislature, a local governing body, or the courts adopt standards that override the contract terms. Because leases function as both conveyances of real property interests and contracts, practitioners should first review the lease or rental agreement to determine what rights and duties it creates. In the absence of an agreement, and in certain areas of overriding public importance, the attorney must consult both statutory law (state and local) and case law.

PRACTICE TIP: Practitioners should be aware that some property owners continue to use older forms of preprinted leases or rental agreement forms that may not comply with current law.

© The Regents of the University of California

II. LANDLORD'S LIMITED RIGHT OF ENTRY

§3.2 A. Nature and Extent

California law permits a landlord to enter premises rented to a tenant, but only in specified situations, at certain times, and, in many cases, after giving the tenant written notice. CC §1954. Rights created by §1954 cannot be waived in advance or modified except as provided in §1954. See CC §1953(a)(1). Under CC §1954, the landlord may enter the premises only:

- in an emergency;
- to make necessary or agreed-on repairs, decorations, alterations, or improvements;
- to supply necessary or agreed-on services;
- to exhibit the unit to prospective or actual purchasers, mortgagees, tenants, workers, or contractors;
- to make an inspection under CC §1950.5(f);
- when the tenant has abandoned or surrendered the premises; or
- under a court order.

Presumably, the landlord also may enter without fear of liability when the tenant initiates or consents to the entry at the time of entry.

The landlord may enter the premises only during "normal business hours," except in an emergency or when the tenant has consented to an entry during other than normal business hours at the time of entry or when the tenant has abandoned or surrendered the premises. CC §1954. This statute is often a source of disputes between landlords and tenants. "Normal business hours" are not defined by either statutory or case law, leaving open the issue of whether weekends fall within the definition and whether real estate agents showing the property fall within the permitted class of admittees.

DRAFTING TIP: The parties should include a definition of "normal business hours" in the rental agreement. The tenant might indicate any hours that might be out of the ordinary (for example, a tenant who works a night or swing shift might prefer that repairs be performed in the afternoon), and the landlord may obtain agreement that entry would be permitted on a Saturday morning or afternoon.

Apparently, California law does not authorize landlords to enter rental premises purely for the purpose of inspecting them (even though it may be required periodically under the landlord's liability insurance policy), because inspection is not listed as one of the reasons for entry in CC §1954. Accordingly, a landlord must claim that the purpose of an inspection is connected to providing services, improvements, repairs, decorations, or some other authorized basis for entry.

PRACTICE TIP: Rental agreements could detail types of agreed services that would justify entries (e.g., inspect smoke detector annually to replace batteries, allow pest control services).

A landlord, however, may enter a rental unit for inspection under CC §1940.5(f), which authorizes an owner or the owner's agent to inspect a waterbed after it has been installed by the tenant and "periodically thereafter" to ensure that the installation complies with the requirements of that section.

In Sachs v Exxon Co., U.S.A. (1992) 9 CA4th 1491, 12 CR2d 237, the tenant operated a filling station on the premises, and a lease provision required the tenant to comply with all laws. The court read into this provision a requirement that, unless the tenant can otherwise provide reasonable assurances, the tenant must permit the landlord to inspect the premises for illegal soil contamination due to gasoline leakage (9 CA4th at 1498):

> In leases, as in contracts, a covenant of good faith and fair dealing has been implied. [Citation.] The covenant requires that neither party do anything which will have the effect of destroying or injuring the right of the other party to receive the benefits of the lease. [Citation.] One of the benefits provided to the Sachses by this lease is the promise of the defendants that they will not violate governmental laws and regulations which apply to the leasehold. This assurance is of little benefit to the Sachses if they are precluded from assuring themselves that no such violations are taking place, particularly in circumstances in which they reasonably suspect violations.

Similar reasoning might be used in a residential context, e.g., when the landlord reasonably suspects that illegal narcotics are being used or sold on the premises, as long as the lease contains a provision similar to that present in Sachs, although landlords should be careful about relying on Sachs for this purpose. For further discussion of this problem, see §§4.43-4.44, 7.60.

A landlord may not enter a rental unit to interfere with tenant organizing activities. To address problems that tenant organizers may encounter in attempting to meet with tenants at the tenant's unit, CC §1942.6 prohibits guests from being arrested as trespassers and prohibits unreasonable restrictions on guests coming into buildings containing rental housing units. For further discussion, see §5.33A.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.3 B. Procedure for Entry; Notice Requirements

The legislature substantially amended the notice procedures in 2002 and 2003. The landlord must give the tenant reasonable notice of intent in writing to enter the premises (see §3.3A) and enter only during normal business hours. The notice must specify the date, approximate time, and purpose of the entry. CC §1954(d)(1). No written notice is required when the tenant and the landlord agree orally to an entry for the purpose of making repairs or supplying services that the tenant and the landlord have agreed on, but the oral agreement must specify the date and time of entry, which must occur within one week of the agreement. CC §1954(d)(3). No notice is required at all if the landlord enters in response to an emergency, if the tenant is present and consents to the landlord's entry at the time of entry, or after the tenant has abandoned or surrendered the premises. CC §1954(e). On what constitutes an abandonment or a surrender of the premises, see §§8.8-8.18.

WARNING: Amendments to CC §1954, effective January 1, 2003, deleted the exception to giving notice before entry based on "when it is impractical to give advance notice."

The written notice of entry may be mailed, but the presumption of reasonableness of the notice will not apply unless the notice is mailed at least 6 days prior to the entry. Alternatively, the written notice may be personally delivered to the tenant or left on, near, or under the usual entry door of the premises in a manner in which a reasonable person would discover the notice. CC §1954(d)(1).

Special advance notice procedures may be used to facilitate showing the unit to prospective or actual purchasers. In that event, the landlord may give oral notice, in person or by telephone, with at least 24 hours being presumed reasonable, if the landlord or its agent has given the tenant notice in writing that the property is for sale within 120 days before the oral notice. The oral notice must specify the date, approximate time, and purpose of the entry. CC §1954(d)(2).

The landlord may not abuse the right of entry or use it to harass the tenant. CC §1954(c). This language appears to be intended to cover situations in which entry is authorized under CC §1954 but the frequency of the landlord's entry has become excessive or unreasonable.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/3 Rights and Duties During Tenancy/§3.3A C. Form: Notice of Landlord's Intention to Enter Dwelling Unit

§3.3A C. Form: Notice of Landlord's Intention to Enter Dwelling Unit

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

Notice of Landlord's Intention to Enter Dwelling Unit

Pursuant to Civil Code §1954, this is to notify you that I, _ _[Landlord's name/Agent's name]_ _, intend to enter your dwelling unit located at _ _[address]_ _ on _ _[day/date]_ _ at approximately _ _[time]_ _ for the purpose of _ _[e.g., making necessary or agreed-upon repairs]_ _. If this date or time is inconvenient for you, please contact me at _ _[contact information]_ _, within _ _[e.g., 48 hours]_ _, so that we may arrange a mutually acceptable date and time.

Date: _ _ _ _ _ _ __[Signature]__
_ _[Typed name]_ _

Comment: For full analysis of CC §1954, see §§3.2-3.3. On lease provision and drafting tips, see §1.66 and its comment. See also §4.43.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.4 D. Remedies

In enacting and amending CC §1954, the legislature established standards (see §3.2) and procedures (see §3.3) for the landlord's entry into the premises, but did not specify in §1954 any remedies available when these rules are violated. The only express statutory remedy that allows for the recovery of damages and penalties for a "significant and intentional violation of CC §1954" is in CC §1940.2. See §8.150A. Proving an intentional violation is difficult.

If the landlord complies with the notice provisions of CC §1954, but the tenant refuses to allow access to the premises, the landlord's remedies similarly are unspecified. If the tenant occupies the property under a month-to-month tenancy, the landlord may simply elect to terminate the tenancy by giving a 30-day or 60-day notice to quit (see §8.69). Even in jurisdictions with eviction controls or in the case of federally subsidized housing programs, the tenant's refusal to permit the landlord reasonable access to the premises is often one of the enumerated good causes for eviction. If the lease contains either a covenant to comply with all laws or a covenant to allow access for the reasons specified in CC §1954, the landlord may serve a 3-day notice to perform the covenant or quit. If the tenant fails to comply within the 3-day period, the landlord could initiate an unlawful detainer action. A landlord who needs to obtain access to the premises before an eviction can be completed may have to seek a court order requiring access. Section 1954 specifically authorizes entry under a court order, as well as in other situations (see §3.2).

Litigation is often not an economically viable means of enforcing CC §1954 for either the landlord or the tenant. In some cases, a small claims court action for damages might work to induce compliance, but inserting an unrecognized claim for damages into a small claims action might also cause problems for the parties and the court. For discussion of options available in advising tenants or landlords generally, see §§4.1 (landlords), 5.1-5.4 (tenants).

© The Regents of the University of California

III. IMPLIED COVENANT OF QUIET ENJOYMENT

§3.5 A. Nature

Under CC §1927, every lease or rental agreement contains the landlord's implied covenant of quiet enjoyment (Chandler v Hart (1911) 161 C 405, 119 P 516; Lost Key Mines, Inc. v Hamilton (1952) 109 CA2d 569, 241 P2d 273; see Petroleum Collections, Inc. v Swords (1975) 48 CA3d 841, 122 CR 114), unless the agreement contains specific language to the contrary (Kushner v Home Serv. Co. (1928) 91 CA 692, 267 P 555; Georgeous v Lewis (1912) 20 CA 255, 128 P 768).

By renting the property, the landlord covenants that the tenant will not be evicted or disturbed in his or her possession by the landlord or anyone deriving title from the landlord. Carty v Blauth (1915) 169 C 713, 147 P 949; Lost Key Mines, Inc. v Hamilton, supra. Thus, the covenant protects the tenant from acts of the landlord that disturb the tenant's peaceful possession of the premises, either by legal action (e.g., leasing part of the same premises to someone else; see McAlester v Landers (1886) 70 C 79, 82, 11 P 505) or by physical action (e.g., renovating adjacent premises in such a way that the leased premises become uninhabitable; see McDowell v Hyman (1897) 117 C 67, 71, 48 P 984).

Originally construed to protect the tenant only against physical interference, the covenant has evolved to insulate the tenant against acts or omissions of the landlord that interfere substantially with the tenant's right to use and enjoy the property. Petroleum Collections, Inc. v Swords, supra. The perpetrator of the interference with the tenant's quiet enjoyment need not be the landlord personally; an actionable breach may occur if the interference is caused by a neighbor and the landlord does not take reasonable action to remedy the interference. Andrews v Mobile Aire Estates (2005) 125 CA4th 578, 590, 22 CR3d 832. The implied covenant might provide a cause of action for a tenant whose landlord abuses the right of entry under CC §1954 to the extent that it physically interferes with the tenant's use (see §§3.1, 3.4). See Dwyer v Carroll (1890) 86 C 298, 304, 24 P 1015; Levitsky v Canning (1867) 33 C 299. But see North Pac. S.S. Co. v Terminal Inv. Co. (1919) 43 CA 182, 185 P 205 (mere passing trespass, even by landlord, does not amount to breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment). An unsuccessful suit brought in bad faith to evict the tenant also constitutes breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment. Levitsky v Canning, supra. But see Stockton Theatres, Inc. v Palermo (1954) 124 CA2d 353, 268 P2d 799 (good faith ejectment action not breach of covenant).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.6 B. When Is Covenant Breached?

Determining whether there has been a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment generally depends on the facts in a particular case. Stockton Dry Goods Co. v Girsh (1951) 36 C2d 677, 682, 227 P2d 1. Breach can take many forms, including actual or constructive eviction. See, e.g., LaFrance v Kashishian (1928) 204 C 643, 644, 269 P 655 (plaintiff evicted from leased premises by one who established paramount title); Guntert v City of Stockton (1976) 55 CA3d 131, 126 CR 690 (arbitrary and unreasonable termination notice); Goldman v House (1949) 93 CA2d 572, 576, 209 P2d 639 (attempt to evict by wrongful and malicious means (utility cutoff) with knowledge of probable injury).

A landlord who does not take reasonable measures to remedy substantial annoyances of a tenant may be liable to a neighboring tenant who resides on the same property for breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. Andrews v Mobile Aire Estates (2005) 125 CA4th 578, 22 CR3d 832. While this case involved a mobilehome park owner, who had special rights and duties under express provisions in the lease and the state's Mobilehome Residency Law (see chap 6), the court relied in part on CC §1927 and the common law, which imposes the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment on all landlords. When such substantial annoyance is present, "the covenant of quiet enjoyment requires a reasonable response by the landlord, which may include conducting an investigation and thereafter, taking appropriate action, which may include, inter alia, the issuance of a warning to the offending party, the pursuit of injunctive relief against the tenant to enjoin the violation [under the Mobilehome Residency Law], or, if necessary, the commencement of eviction proceedings." 125 CA4th at 597.

California authorities disagree on whether there must be an actual or constructive eviction (see §§3.15B, 8.19) to constitute a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment, i.e., whether the tenant must vacate the premises to be able to maintain a cause of action for breach. In Petroleum Collections, Inc. v Swords (1975) 48 CA3d 841, 122 CR 114, a commercial tenant sought to defend an action for unpaid rent by claiming that the landlord had breached the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. The court held that the landlord's improper installation of a sign, in violation of local codes, could serve as a basis for the tenant's claim, but no breach of the implied covenant could be claimed unless and until the tenant vacated within a reasonable time (i.e., until a constructive eviction occurred). Then, if the landlord sued for rent accrued before the constructive eviction, the tenant could claim as an offset any damages arising before and from the eviction, or bring an affirmative action for such damages. The complaint form in §3.48A may be modified to assert a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment.

In Guntert v City of Stockton (1976) 55 CA3d 131, 126 CR 690, the court refused to follow the decision in Petroleum Collections, Inc. v Swords, supra. The Guntert court held that a tenant asserting a breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment may elect to keep the lease in effect, remain in possession, and sue for damages. In addition, the court held that the landlord's service of an invalid notice of termination (which the court characterized as "arbitrary and unreasonable") constituted a breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. 55 CA3d at 141. This holding was followed in Marchese v Standard Realty & Dev. Co. (1977) 74 CA3d 142, 148, 141 CR 370. In any event, under a statutory remedy for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment (CC §1940.2(a)(3); see §§3.7, 8.150A), the tenant need not even "be actually or constructively evicted in order to obtain relief" if the landlord uses or threatens to use force, willful threats, or menacing conduct to influence a tenant to vacate.

In Beliveau v Caras (CD Cal 1995) 873 F Supp 1393, applying California law, the court held that the covenant of quiet enjoyment is breached only by an eviction, actual or constructive. (The court apparently overlooked Guntert v City of Stockton, supra.) Accordingly, the court held that the tenant, who was sexually harassed by the resident manager and remained in possession, had no cause of action for breach of this covenant. (The tenant did, however, have a valid claim for violation of the federal Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631; see §§2.30-2.40) and California's Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) and Ralph Civil Rights Act (CC §51.7); see §§2.57-2.59.)

Note that the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment is similar to the implied warranty of habitability (see §§3.16-3.48). Courts that allow a residential tenant to assert a breach of the warranty of habitability (offensively or defensively) impose no requirement that the tenant first vacate the premises. See, e.g., Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704; Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194. But see discussion of dependent versus independent lease covenants in commercial leases in California Eviction Defense Manual §19.11 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.7 C. Remedies

Tenants have statutory, contract, and common law tort remedies for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment. Under CC §1940.2, a tenant may sue the landlord for wrongful and illegal acts committed for the purpose of influencing the tenant to vacate the dwelling. Prohibited acts under CC §1940.2(a) include the use, or threatened use, of force, threats, or menacing conduct constituting a course of conduct that interferes with the tenant's right to quiet enjoyment of the premises that would create an apprehension of harm in a reasonable person. The aggrieved tenant is entitled to a civil penalty of not more than $2000 for each act. CC §1940.2(b). For further discussion, see §8.150A.

A tenant suing for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment may recover contract damages under CC §3300, which may include damages for lost profits, lost business goodwill, and moving expenses, or under CC §3304, which prescribes difference in value damages (suggesting that a rent reduction may apply). See Andrews v Mobile Aire Estates (2005) 125 CA4th 578, 591, 22 CR3d 832.

Under the well-established common law rules in Guntert v City of Stockton (1976) 55 CA3d 131, 126 CR 690, and Marchese v Standard Realty & Dev. Co. (1977) 74 CA3d 142, 148, 141 CR 370, the tenant may stay in possession and sue for damages for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment. If the decision in Petroleum Collections, Inc. v Swords (1975) 48 CA3d 841, 122 CR 114, is followed, however, the tenant must vacate to state a cause of action for breach. Of course, the tenant then may sue for damages for "constructive eviction" if that approach appears preferable. See also Pierce v Nash (1954) 126 CA2d 606, 272 P2d 938.

Under either line of authority, the tenant may seek injunctive relief. In Guntert v City of Stockton (1976) 55 CA3d 131, 151, 126 CR 690, the court noted that the trial court had granted an injunction against the landlord's interference with the tenant's quiet enjoyment of the premises. In Petroleum Collections, Inc. v Swords (1975) 48 CA3d 841, 847, 122 CR 114, the court stated that the tenant could "remain in possession and seek injunctive or other appropriate relief."

If the breach actually excludes the tenant from a portion of the premises, it may constitute an "actual partial eviction," in which case the tenant may retain possession of the remainder and stop paying rent. Giraud v Milovich (1938) 29 CA2d 543, 85 P2d 182. But see Dussin Inv. Co. v Bloxham (1979) 96 CA3d 308, 157 CR 646, in which the defense was rejected because the court found that the tenant had not been evicted from a "substantial" portion of the premises.

In addition to contract claims for breach of the covenant, a tenant may recover in tort for wrongful eviction, trespass, negligent and intentional invasion of privacy, negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and negligence. See Spinks v Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments (2009) 171 CA4th 1004, 90 CR3d 453.

A related theory for redressing a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment is nuisance. See §3.15C. For discussion of an owner's rights and obligations concerning abating illegal use of firearms and drug-related activity in residential housing, see §§4.44, 8.59, discussing CC §§3485-3486 and the Narcotics Nuisance Abatement Act (Health & S C §§11570-11587). The Act defines drug dealing on the premises as a nuisance, authorizes abatement actions, and imposes penalties on property owners. In addition, CC §§3485-3486 permit city attorneys in selected jurisdictions in California to file an unlawful detainer action against a tenant on the basis of an arrest report (or on another action or report by a regulatory or law enforcement agency) if the owner fails to do so after 30 calendar days' written notice from the city. The tenant must also be notified of the nature of the action and possible defenses. CC §§3485(a), 3486(a).

For further discussion of remedies for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment emphasizing commercial tenancies, see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 19 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.8 IV. LANDLORD'S DUTY TO MAINTAIN AND REPAIR PREMISES

Attorneys for both landlord and tenant should be aware of the respective legal rights and obligations concerning maintenance of the premises. The landlord's duty to maintain and repair the premises has several statutory and common-law sources. Under California law, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary (see CC §1942.1), the lessor of a building intended for human occupation must maintain the building in a tenantable condition, repair any dilapidation that renders it untenantable, install dead bolts on doors, a telephone jack with wiring, and window locks, and comply with various fire codes regarding exit doors. CC §§1941-1941.4.

The landlord's statutory duty to maintain and repair is expressly conditioned on the tenant's performance of the following affirmative obligations:

- Maintaining the premises and disposing of all waste in a clean and sanitary manner;
- Operating all fixtures properly;
- Not damaging or destroying the property; and
- Occupying the premises as the tenant's abode.

See CC §1941.2; see §§1.57, 4.1. One court of appeal has opined that the landlord's duty to maintain and repair is not conditioned on the tenant's payment of rent. See Fairchild v Park (2001) 90 CA4th 919, 928, 109 CR2d 442 (held landlord's obligation to provide habitable residence is independent of tenants' obligation to pay rent). (For analysis and criticism of Fairchild, see Moskovitz, The Danger of Dicta, 24 CEB Real Prop L Rep 253 (Oct 2001).)

A landlord might also claim that a failure to remedy uninhabitable conditions is excused by the tenant's denial of reasonable access to the premises that "interferes substantially" with the landlord's efforts to make the necessary repairs. CC §§1941.2; 1954; see §§3.13, 3.67. A landlord might also rely on CC §1929, which imposes on tenants a duty to repair any damage they cause to the premises.

The landlord's duty to maintain and repair also arises from the warranty of habitability that the courts have held to be implicit in rental agreements, at least for residential premises (see §§3.16-3.48). Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704. A duty may also be found in an express promise to repair in the rental agreement (see §3.9). On duty to repair in commercial tenancies, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§19.11-19.17 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

Depending on the circumstances of the particular case, various remedies may be pursued to obtain enforcement of the landlord's duty to maintain and repair the premises:

(a) The tenant may notify local administrative agencies that have authority to enforce the local housing or building code or order a rent rebate or decrease (see §§3.10-3.11D, 5.11, 5.14).

(b) If the cost of necessary repairs does not exceed one month's rent, a tenant of residential property may undertake the repairs and deduct the cost from the rent under CC §1942 (see §§3.12-3.15, 5.13).

(c) The tenant may assert breach of the warranty of habitability (see §§3.16-3.48), either as a defense to an unlawful detainer action after withholding rent (see §§3.32-3.34, 5.15), or as part of an affirmative suit against the landlord (see §§3.35-3.42, 5.16).

(d) The tenant may bring a statutory action for damages and abatement for violation of the tenantability statute or assert it in an unlawful detainer action as an affirmative defense (see §3.15B).

(e) Another remedy available to the tenant living in substandard premises arises from the common-law doctrine of constructive eviction (see §§3.6-3.8, 3.15B, 8.19).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.9 A. Express Promise to Repair

A lease is considered a contract as well as a conveyance, and the statutory rules for interpretation of contracts apply to leases. Strecker v Barnard (1952) 109 CA2d 149, 152, 240 P2d 345. In Sieber v Blanc (1888) 76 C 173, 18 P 260, the court construed a lease provision requiring the landlord "to repair" to mean that the landlord must repair within a reasonable time after receiving notice from the tenant. See also McNally v Ward (1961) 192 CA2d 871, 884, 14 CR 260.

With all the attention devoted to implied warranties (see §§3.16-3.48), counsel may overlook the duty of repair imposed on the landlord by the rental agreement or other express promise or covenant to make repairs. Enforcing an express covenant may be the only avenue open to a tenant if the alleged breach affects a commercial tenancy (see, e.g., Butler-Rupp v Lourdeaux (2005) 134 CA4th 1220, 36 CR3d 685) or does not affect the unit's habitability. Suppose, for example, that the landlord of a luxury apartment house fails to repair the heater in the swimming pool or the clothes dryer in the laundry room. It probably would be difficult for the tenant to convince a court or jury that swimming pools and clothes dryers are essential to the habitability of the premises. A landlord who expressly promised to make repairs or to provide those facilities, however, might be held to have breached the express warranty. Unless the lack of repair rendered the unit uninhabitable (see Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, or the lease allows the tenant to cure any failure by the landlord to comply with repair obligations and deduct the cost from rental obligations (see Golden Eagle Ins. Corp. v Cen-Fed Ltd. (2007) 148 CA4th 976, 981, 56 CR3d 279), it is arguable that the breach of express warranty would not allow the tenant to withhold rent or otherwise take advantage of the remedies created by the landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability. But see Leslie G. v Perry & Assocs. (1996) 43 CA4th 472, 490, 50 CR2d 785 (stating in dicta that tenant may withhold rent when landlord fails to keep premises safe from criminal acts of third parties). In any event, the tenant could file an ordinary civil action for damages based upon the landlord's breach of lease. See Golden Eagle Ins. Corp. v Cen-Fed Ltd., supra.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords' attorneys should advise their clients to include language in their rental agreements to the effect that providing specified amenities that do not affect habitability is within the landlord's discretion, and the reduction or removal of such an amenity is not a material breach of the agreement.

An express promise to repair, however, may be made well after the rental agreement is signed. An oral promise that accompanies or follows a written lease (and is not superseded by the lease) is not in conflict with the statute of frauds if the oral promise is to be fulfilled within 1 year of its making. CC §1624. Section 1624 applies to the leasing of real property only if the term of the lease is greater than 1 year. CC §1624(a)(3).

Traditionally, California courts followed the doctrine of "independent covenants" under which the tenant was not relieved of the obligation to pay rent merely because the landlord breached a covenant of the lease. The duty to repair and the duty to pay rent were considered independent covenants (Arnold v Krigbaum (1915) 169 C 143, 146 P 423), so the landlord's breach of an express promise to repair could not be raised as a defense to an unlawful detainer action. In Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, the California Supreme Court held that breach of the implied warranty of habitability applicable to residential tenancies may be raised as a defense to an unlawful detainer action for nonpayment of rent and was not barred by the doctrine of independent covenants. Much of the court's reasoning was based on its analysis of the realities of the modern residential rental market. 10 C3d at 622. The tenant contracts for, and expects to receive, habitable living space, not land. Deprivation of habitable living space constitutes a sufficiently serious breach to amount to a failure of consideration. For further discussion of Green, see §3.16.

In a residential tenancy context, it is unclear whether the landlord may transfer any or all of the duty to repair to the tenant, particularly in light of CC §1942.1, which prohibits waivers of a tenant's repair and deduct remedy (see §3.15; see also §3.24). The enforceability of such a clause might depend on the context in which it was made and whether the repair was one that the tenant could perform readily.

Drafting an appropriate clause in a rental agreement to describe the parties' intentions concerning their respective obligations to repair is often difficult. Depending on the circumstances, whether a court will enforce a repair obligation that has been shifted to the tenant may depend on how well the clause was drafted. This problem is illustrated by two contemporaneous California Supreme Court cases involving virtually identical "compliance with law" clauses in commercial leases that required the tenants to maintain the premises and to pay all costs of complying with laws. In Brown v Green (1994) 8 C4th 812, 35 CR2d 598, the court held that the tenant was required to pay for government-ordered asbestos abatement; in Hadian v Schwartz (1994) 8 C4th 836, 35 CR2d 589, however, the court concluded that the landlord had to pay for earthquake retrofitting. Despite unambiguous "compliance with laws" clauses in each case requiring the tenants to pay for compliance costs, the court held that the issue of whether the landlord or the tenant must pay for government-mandated alterations is be "context dependent" based on a list of enumerated factors. See also Prudential Ins. Co. v L.A. Mart (9th Cir 1995) 68 F3d 370 (tenant not required to upgrade building to prevent potential earthquake damage, if building is otherwise in good condition and in compliance with applicable building and safety codes).

For discussion of covenants to repair and independent versus dependent covenants in commercial leases, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§19.11-19.17 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993). On available causes of action when an owner breaches an express covenant to repair in a commercial lease, see Butler-Rupp v Lourdeaux (2005) 134 CA4th 1220, 36 CR3d 685. For a discussion of the scope of a commercial landlord's express and implied promises to repair, and whether they allowed the tenant to recover the cost of repairs from a former landlord who has sold the property, see Del Taco, Inc. v University Real Estate Partnership V (2003) 111 CA4th 16, 3 CR3d 311.

For discussion of "compliance with laws" clauses in commercial leases, see Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 15 (Cal CEB 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Housing Code Enforcement

§3.10 1. Enforcement Process

One possible remedy for the landlord's failure to repair is for the tenant's attorney to complain to the city or county housing or building inspection department if contacting the landlord does not resolve the problem. See §§5.10-5.16. The name of the department varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. The department sends a building inspector to determine if there are housing code violations on the premises. If violations are found, the inspector sends the landlord a letter listing the violations and demanding that they be corrected. If the repairs are not made, the inspector may refer the case to the city or county attorney for a civil abatement lawsuit or to the district attorney for criminal proceedings. On enforcement of housing codes, see Health & S C §§17960-17992, 25 Cal Code Regs §§48-70, and applicable local ordinances.

If substandard residential housing substantially endangers the health and safety of residents or the public, a local enforcement agency may give the owner a notice to repair or abate. If the owner fails to comply with the notice, the agency may file an action seeking judicial appointment of a receiver to manage the property and remediate the violations or take other appropriate action, including demolition. Health & S C §§17980.6, 17980.7. See City of Santa Monica v Gonzalez (2008) 43 C4th 905, 76 CR3d 483 (holding that technical noncompliance with prelitigation notice provisions did not invalidate local entity's action for receivership and court order authorizing demolition). Section 17980.7 also gives tenants and tenant associations the right to seek a court order for the appointment of a receiver for a substandard building. The receiver may collect rents, manage the building, and use rents and loans to rehabilitate the building. The receiver may also make relocation payments to tenants who must move during repairs.

When property is contaminated with methamphetamine, Health & S C §§25400.10-25400.47 require stringent remediation and record-keeping obligations for any property owner who has been notified by a local health officer that the property is contaminated.

Similarly, for illegal firearms and drug abatement proceedings under CC §§3485-3486 and the Narcotics Nuisance Abatement Act (Health & S C §§11570-11587), the city attorney or city prosecutor must first notify the landlord concerning the nuisance activity and allow the landlord 30 calendar days to bring an unlawful detainer action. CC §§3485(a), 3486(a). For full discussion, see §4.44. Sometimes the local health department also enforces certain regulations involving immediate health dangers (such as rats), and may act more quickly and effectively than the building inspection department.

The effectiveness of local administrative remedies depends on many factors, including the diligence and budgets of the inspection departments and attorneys, the landlord's willingness to cooperate, and the calendars and attitudes of the courts. Results vary from locality to locality; many municipalities have poor records for remediation.

There are, however, several reasons for making a complaint to the local building inspector. First, there is normally no charge for code-enforcement proceedings; if the tenant cannot afford to litigate, local government will usually bear the expense of enforcement. (Note, however, that Health & S C §17951(b)-(c) does authorize cities and counties to impose fees to defray code enforcement costs, as long as the city or county has followed the procedures set out in Govt C §66016 for setting such fees, and that a few entities apparently charge such fees to tenants.) Second, if a diligent building inspector undertakes enforcement against a particularly egregious landlord, the results are sometimes quick and impressive. Third, if counsel intends to pursue one of the remedies discussed in §§3.32-3.48, it will be helpful to have a neutral expert such as a building inspector available to testify about the existence and extent of the violations and the landlord's efforts (or lack of effort) to repair them. Fourth, among the prerequisites for a statutory warranty of habitability suit by the tenant against the landlord (see §§3.15A, 3.35-3.36) are that a housing code enforcement office must have sent a written notice to the landlord requiring repair of the defect and the landlord must not have repaired the defect within 60 days of the notice.

Nevertheless, complaining to the building inspector is potentially risky. Landlords' attorneys can subpoena building inspectors to testify that the condition complained of was caused by the tenant or that the problem was minor and did not constitute a code violation. The inspector should always be interviewed before being called to testify (see §3.48). If the building is in very bad condition, the effect of enforcement might be the initiation of condemnation proceedings under 25 Cal Code Regs §§50-70 (see Uniform Housing Code §§1101-1104), and the tenant might lose the housing altogether.

In Flatford v City of Monroe (6th Cir 1994) 17 F3d 162, a city inspector found defects which posed an immediate risk of fire or electrocution, and he ordered the building vacated within two and one half hours. The tenant and his family complied with the order, and later sued the official under 42 USC §1983 for violation of their rights to due process of law. The court held that the official was entitled to qualified immunity for failure to give an opportunity for an administrative hearing before the order was issued, as the official reasonably determined that an emergency existed. However, the official had no such immunity regarding his failure to offer an administrative hearing to the tenant after the order was issued, as "fundamental fairness" requires the opportunity for such a hearing, especially where the official made his initial decision quickly and might have made a mistake. See Lutton, Tenants' Rights in Eviction Proceedings Brought Under Local Housing Codes, 29 Clearinghouse Rev 967 (Feb. 1996).

If the tenant or the tenant's guests, invitees, or licensees caused the code violation, the landlord could serve a 3-day notice to perform a covenant of the lease or quit if the violation is curable (see §8.53). If the violation cannot be cured within the 3-day period, the landlord could initiate the eviction process by serving a 3-day notice to quit based on an incurable breach of the lease (see §8.54).

Landlords should be aware that failure to cure code violations that have become the subject of a formal notice of violation or other local code procedure may cost them the right to claim certain tax deductions. Under Rev & T C §17274, no deduction of interest, taxes, depreciation, or amortization is permitted to an owner who derives income from substandard housing, which is defined as housing that contains code violations that the owner has not taken reasonable steps to repair.

Rights to tenantable housing may also be affirmatively enforced by the "repair-and-deduct" remedy prescribed by CC §1942 (see §§3.12-3.15), by a private right of action under CC §1942.4 (see §3.15A), or under the common-law implied warranty of habitability (see §§3.35-3.48A).

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Housing Statutes, Regulations, and Codes

§3.11 a. Statutory Tenantability; CC §§1941, 1941.1

Attorneys for both the landlord and the tenant should familiarize themselves with the applicable housing codes that may come into play when the tenant complains to a local enforcement agency (see §3.10) or the tenant's attorney invokes the warranty of habitability, a key tenant remedy (see §§3.16-3.48A). One source of habitability obligations, CC §1941 (see §3.8), requires a landlord to

- put a rental unit into a condition fit for human occupation, and
- repair all subsequent dilapidations that render it "untenantable" except those caused by the tenant's lack of ordinary care.

The list in CC §§1941.1, 1941.3 (see §3.12) supplies the standard for what makes a unit untenantable under CC §1941. The list is also applicable to implied warranty of habitability actions or defenses. See, e.g., Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 171 CR 707, in which the California Supreme Court held that a tenant may be entitled to a jury instruction on habitability based on the language of CC §1941.1, if appropriate under the facts of the case. See also Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 176 CR 112.

Fines for failure to comply with notices of violation may be assessed against the owner. In City & County of San Francisco v Sainez (2000) 77 CA4th 1302, 92 CR2d 418, the court upheld the constitutionality of fines of $1000 per day assessed over almost a two-year period of noncompliance.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/3 Rights and Duties During Tenancy/§3.11A b. Door and Window Locks; CC §1941.3

§3.11A b. Door and Window Locks; CC §1941.3

All owners of rental units intended for human habitation must install dead bolts and window locks. CC §1941.3. Tenants are obliged to notify landlords if a tenant becomes aware of an inoperable dead bolt lock or window security or locking device, and landlords are not liable for a failure to correct any such defect until after a reasonable time has been allowed for such repair. (Compare standards and authorities discussed in §§3.13, 3.30.) A tenant has identical remedies for a landlord's failure to comply with §1941.3 as the tenant has for a breach of CC §1942, §1942.4, or §1942.5 and is expressly authorized to bring an action for damages and injunctive relief. See complaint form in §3.48A. Under CC §1941.3(c), a tenant may raise the violation of the statutory lock requirements as an affirmative defense in a nonpayment-of-rent unlawful detainer action. Housing units owned by the Department of Transportation and those that have been designated as historically significant by an appropriate government agency are exempt from the lock and deadbolt requirements. CC §1941.3(f)-(g).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/3 Rights and Duties During Tenancy/§3.11B c. Toxic Mold and Other Health and Safety Statutes

§3.11B c. Toxic Mold and Other Health and Safety Statutes

The presence of mold in residential or commercial buildings can affect tenantability and sometimes cause personal injuries (e.g., allergic symptoms and asthma). Some mold infections can be very serious or even fatal (i.e., toxic). To address the statewide proliferation of toxic mold, the California legislature authorized the state Department of Health Services (DHS) to identify toxic molds and determine permissible exposure limits to them. See Health & S C §§26100-26156. Six months after the DHS completes its study and adopts standards and publishes exposure guidelines, a residential landlord's obligation under Health & S C §§26147-26148 to disclose the presence of mold that exceeds the guidelines, or that poses a health threat, becomes effective. Although Health & S C §§26142-26145 initially required commercial and industrial landlords, and sometimes tenants, to make specific written disclosures and remediate the presence of mold as well as chronic water intrusions and flood conditions, a 2002 amendment to §26142 postponed these obligations until 6 months after the DHS adopts standards and publishes exposure guidelines. For discussion, see McCormick, The Toxic Mold Protection Act—When Will It Be Implemented?, 20 Cal Real Prop J 24 (Summer 2002); Jauregui & Brown, A New Real Estate Issue: Toxic Mold, 25 CEB Real Prop L Rep 40 (Jan. 2002).

WARNING: Independently of this legislation, the residential tenantability statutes and the implied warranty of habitability already provide relief in the form of damages and remediation of mold conditions that affect the tenantability of dwelling units or the health and safety of tenants. See CC §§1941-1942.4; Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704 (cited in §§3.16, 3.25). See complaint form in §3.48A. On litigating these claims, see Handling Mold Litigation in California (Cal CEB Action Guide September 2009).

For a property owner who has been notified by a local health officer that the property is contaminated by methamphetamine, Health & S C §§25400.10-25400.47 mandate stringent disclosure, remediation, and record-keeping obligations. Arguably, a residential tenant who is damaged by such contamination would have a viable claim for a breach of the implied warranty of habitability. See other state and local codes mentioned in §§3.10, 3.11C-3.11D as possible bases for habitability claims.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.11C d. Department of Housing Regulations

The California Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) is required to adopt housing maintenance regulations that are "substantially the same" as the most recent edition of the Uniform Housing Code (except its definition of "substandard building") and of other international building codes. Health & S C §17922(a)(1). The HCD has adopted the 1997 edition of the Uniform Housing Code (UHC) (see §3.11D), adding a few requirements of its own. See 25 Cal Code Regs §§32-46. An example of an HCD modification is 25 Cal Code Regs §42, which requires that every apartment building with 16 or more apartments must have a resident manager, a requirement not found in the UHC. See Directory for HCD's address and phone number. Counsel may verify the currently applicable version of the UHC by checking the adoption provision in 25 Cal Code Regs §32. The UHC is available from the International Conference of Building Officials (ICBO), listed in the Directory. (Although the ICBO replaced the 1997 UHC with the International Residential Code (IRC), California has not yet adopted the IRC.)

The standards established under the UHC, as amended by the HCD regulations and adopted by reference under Health & S C §17922(a)(1), generally preempt local occupancy ordinances. Briseno v City of Santa Ana (1992) 6 CA4th 1378, 8 CR2d 486. A municipality can modify code provisions, but only if the modifications are necessitated by local climatic, geological, or topographical conditions and the municipality makes an express finding that such conditions exist. Health & S C §§17958, 17958.5, 17958.7. In Briseno, Santa Ana's ordinance was found invalid for failure to comply with these requirements. 6 CA4th at 1383.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.11D e. Uniform Housing Code

The Uniform Housing Code (UHC) (see §3.11C) contains numerous provisions, including protection against insect and rodent infestation and standards for clean and safe common areas (UHC §§1001.1, 1001.2(12)); adequate room size (UHC §503); light and ventilation (UHC §504); bathroom fixtures (UHC §§505.4, 505.5, 505.7); kitchens (UHC §505.3); hot and cold running water (UHC §1001.2(5)); heating (UHC §701.1); electrical outlets, light fixtures, and wiring (UHC §§701.2, 1001.5); emergency exits (UHC §§801, 1001.12); and fire resistant materials and fire extinguishing systems (UHC §§901, 1001.9, 1001.13).

Most cities and counties have simply adopted a specific version of the Uniform Housing Code by local ordinance (parts of which may be preempted by state regulation; see §3.11C). Other cities have adopted more stringent housing codes when permitted. Counsel should always check the local ordinances and the particular version of the Uniform Housing Code adopted by the city or county. Copies of the latest editions of the Code may be obtained by writing to the International Conference of Building Officials (ICBO); see Directory for address. (Note that the ICBO replaced the 1997 Uniform Housing Code with the International Residential Code, which individual cities and counties may have adopted but has not been adopted by the state.)

Regarding the size of appropriate civil penalties for housing code violations, see City & County of San Francisco v Sainez (2000) 77 CA4th 1302, 92 CR2d 418.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.11E 3. Certificate of Occupancy Violations

Many local jurisdictions require landlords to obtain a certificate of occupancy indicating that the premises comply with local housing codes, before leasing the premises. These codes typically make it unlawful to lease, use, or occupy a building or structure unless a certificate of occupancy has been issued by the building department. In Espinoza v Calva (2008) 169 CA4th 1393, 87 CR3d 492, the trial court awarded judgment for possession in favor of the landlord in an unlawful detainer action and entered a money judgment for reduced rent because of the untenantable condition of the premises. The court of appeal reversed the money judgment, holding that the absence of a certificate of occupancy for the residential unit rendered the lease illegal and void. The appeal on the judgment for possession was moot because before the hearing, the tenants vacated.

Similarly, in Lyke v Pursley (1959) 171 CA2d 417, 340 P2d 709, an action for rescission, the court of appeal held that a tenant operating a motel under a lease owed no rent because the landlord had failed to obtain a certificate of occupancy or a license for the motel and that the lease was unenforceable and void as a matter of public policy. The court also upheld the remedy of rescission and restitution, but the remaining details of that remedy were not at issue in the appeal.

The holding in Lyke was followed in Gruzen v Henry (1978) 84 CA3d 515, 148 CR 573. The court of appeal in Gruzen ruled that the landlord's failure to obtain a certificate of occupancy from the city before entering into a rental agreement rendered the agreement void and unenforceable as contrary to public policy even though the local housing code was silent on the effect on leasing of the owner's failure to obtain the certificate. Thus, the landlord could not recover rent in the unlawful detainer action, but the court affirmed that portion of the judgment awarding the landlord possession.

Although it appears that the action in Gruzen was premised on a 3-day notice for nonpayment of rent, the court stated that it did not mean to imply that persons in the situation of the tenants may, "without compensation," continue to occupy premises because the landlord had not obtained a certificate of occupancy. Noting that in Lyke, the tenant not only denied the obligation to pay rent but also elected to rescind the lease, the court in Gruzen held that the landlord was "entitled to an order of eviction, but not to an award of rent." 84 CA3d at 519. Although this outcome appears contrary to well-established law governing evictions following 3-day notices (see §§8.37-8.38), an award of possession to the landlord is proper if the court declares that the rental agreement is void.

The question whether the tenant is ever liable for any kind of monetary compensation if rent cannot be collected under a void lease has not been directly ruled on in any reported case. In Salazar v Maradeaga (1992) 10 CA4th Supp 1, 12 CR2d 676, the tenant succeeded in defending an eviction in a rent controlled jurisdiction because the landlord had not paid required relocation expenses, even though the unlawful detainer action was based on a city order to vacate an illegal garage apartment. The court noted that the tenant was not at fault and had the continued right to occupy the garage under a "landlord-tenant relationship" until relocation benefits were paid; the court stated the following in dicta (10 CA4th Supp at 6 n5):

> This relationship gives rise to an obligation to pay the reasonable value of the use and occupancy of the premises under a privity of estate theory, even if the lease agreement is considered void because it contemplates an illegal use of the property. [Citations] The same result would be reached under a contractual theory where the circumstances of the illegal use constituted a breach of the implied warranty of habitability, obligating the tenant to pay only the reasonable value of the use and occupancy of the premises in its defective condition. [Citations] In this case the trial court, by awarding appellant no money, impliedly found that the premises had no value.

Under this reasoning, a trial court could order a tenant to pay the reasonable value of using the premises even if contract damages in the form of rent are not awardable. For further discussion of certificate of occupancy violations, see §10.62.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. "Repair-and-Deduct" Remedy; CC §1942

§3.12 1. Statutory Basis

Under CC §§1941-1942, a residential tenant may make repairs and deduct the cost from the rent under certain circumstances. This is not the exclusive remedy for correcting defects. CC §1942(d). See Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 629, 111 CR 704.

The "repair-and-deduct" remedy applies only to dilapidations that render the premises untenantable. CC §1942(a). A dwelling is "untenantable" if it

- contains lead hazards as described in Health & S C §§17920.3 or 17920.10 (i.e., deteriorated lead-based paint, lead-contaminated dust, lead-contaminated soil, or disturbing lead-based paint without containment, if the amount of lead exceeds the permissible levels established by law and is likely to endanger the health of the public or the tenant), or
- "substantially lacks" any of the following affirmative standard characteristics (see CC §§1941.1, 1941.3):
- effective waterproofing and weather protection,
- proper plumbing or gas facilities,
- hot or cold running water with connection to sewage disposal system,
- proper heating facilities,
- proper lighting or wiring,
- clean grounds or adequate garbage cans,
- floors, stairways, or railings in good repair,
- operable dead bolt locks on the entry doors, or
- locking mail receptacle for each unit in residential hotel, as required by Health & S C §§17958.3.

Under CC §1941.2, the "repair-and-deduct" remedy does not apply to any dilapidation caused or made irreparable by the tenant's "substantial violation" of any of the following duties:

- keeping the unit clean;
- disposing properly of garbage and other waste;
- properly using electrical, gas, and plumbing fixtures, and keep them as clean "as their condition permits";
- not willfully damaging the premises (or permit any other person to do so); and
- using the portions of the premises for their intended purposes (e.g., sleeping or cooking).

If the landlord agreed in writing to perform cleaning and garbage disposal, these duties do not apply to the repair-and-deduct remedy. CC §1941.2(b).

The repair-and-deduct remedy may not be used for any dilapidation covered by CC §1929, which imposes on the tenant a duty to repair any deterioration caused by his or her lack of ordinary care (CC §§1941, 1942(c)), nor if the tenant's conduct interfered substantially with the landlord's efforts to effect repairs (CC §1954; see §3.8).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.13 2. Procedure

The tenant must give the landlord notice of the dilapidations before using the repair-and-deduct remedy. CC §1942(a). Section 1942 does not expressly require that the notice state that the tenant intends to repair and deduct if the landlord fails to repair (although mentioning the remedy in the notice might induce the landlord to make the repairs). Notice may be given orally, but it is better to give written notice and keep a copy in case it is later necessary to prove that notice was given.

After giving notice, the tenant must give the landlord a "reasonable time" to make the repairs before undertaking to repair and deduct. CC §1942(a). If the tenant makes the repairs after the 30th day following notice, it is presumed that the tenant acted after a reasonable time. The tenant may repair and deduct on shorter notice, however, if "all the circumstances" require it. CC §1942(b). For example, the tenant should not have to wait 30 days during winter to have a valve replaced to turn on the heat.

PRACTICE TIP: A landlord who has received a notice under CC §1942 should immediately respond to the notice in writing stating his or her intentions to make the repairs within a reasonable time. Besides indicating the intention to make repairs, written notice should help to avoid misunderstandings concerning a "reasonable time" to make repairs. Unless there is such a response, the tenant could make the repairs prematurely, thinking that the landlord was unwilling to make the requested repairs within a reasonable time.

Several questions arise from the language in CC §1942(a) providing that the tenant may use the repair-and-deduct remedy to make repairs only when "the cost of such repairs does not require an expenditure more than one month's rent":

(a) If the "cost of such repairs" is $310 and the rent is $300, may the tenant deduct $300?

(b) If the cost of materials is $50, but the tenant takes four hours to perform the work himself or herself, may the tenant deduct his or her labor cost from the rent? (At the minimum wage, his or her usual wage, or a journeyman plumber's wage?)

(c) If the cost of repairing the central heating system is $1000, may four tenants pool their $250 rents to have the work done?

Although there are no reported cases addressing these questions, tenants' attorneys might argue that issues involving the scope of the repair-and-deduct remedy should be resolved in favor of encouraging tenants to use it. Landlords' attorneys could counter that the legislative intent was to limit the amount and frequency of the total repairs to two months' rent and twice in any 12-month period to eliminate the potential abuse of this remedy to make major, questionable repairs.

Instead of repairing and deducting, the tenant may vacate untenantable premises and be discharged from further obligation to pay rent. CC §1942(a). The tenant may not invoke the repair-and-deduct remedy more than twice in any 12-month period. CC §1942(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.14 3. Waiver Not Permitted

A tenant's agreement to waive or modify the repair-and-deduct remedy is void as contrary to public policy. The parties may agree, however, that the tenant is responsible for improving, maintaining, or repairing all or part of the premises "as part of the consideration for rental." CC §1942.1. In this situation, the court would probably have to determine whether the covenant imposing duties on the tenant was a waiver of the tenant's rights under CC §1942 and whether the tenant knowingly agreed to be responsible for the obligation to repair transferred under the rental agreement.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.15 4. Commercial Tenancies

Civil Code §1942, by its express language, does not make the repair-and-deduct remedy either applicable or inapplicable to commercial tenancies, and there is no reported case on the issue. Tenant advocates argue that CC §1941, which imposes the basic duty to repair on the "lessor of a building intended for the occupation of human beings," could include a commercial building intended to contain people (e.g., an office building, but perhaps not an automated warehouse). Moreover, CC §1940(d) provides that the Chapter containing CC §§1940-1954 is not intended to apply only to dwelling units, unless a section specifically so states. The section imposing standards of tenantability (CC §1941.1), however, begins, "A dwelling shall be deemed untenantable for purposes of Section 1941…", implying that only residential buildings are covered. Practitioners will usually find that commercial leases contain a waiver of CC §1941, which is not prohibited by CC §1942.1.

The repair-and-deduct remedy is contained in Chapter 2 of Title V of the Civil Code (CC §§1940-1954.1). In CC §1940(a), the legislature provided that Chapter 2 applies to "all persons who hire dwelling units," but CC §1940(d) provides that §1940 should not be construed to limit application of any code section in Chapter 2 to dwelling units unless that section is so limited by its own terms. This last subsection appears to leave it to the courts to interpret the contradictory terminology of CC §§1941 and 1941.1, and to determine whether the repair-and-deduct remedy applies to commercial tenancies.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.15A D. Statutory Action for Damages and Abatement; CC §1942.4

In addition to the affirmative relief discussed in §3.35, a residential tenant may bring an action for both damages and abatement under CC §1942.4 if the landlord demands or collects rent or issues a rent-increase notice or a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit under CCP §1161(2) when the rental unit is untenantable. See complaint form in §3.48A. An action under §1942.4, however, is available only if specified housing code enforcement steps have been taken, i.e., all the following conditions must exist before the landlord's demand or notice (CC §1942.4(a)(1)-(4)):

- The unit substantially fails to meet any of the habitability requirements of CC §1941.1 (see §§3.8, 3.11, 3.12), violates Health & S C §17920.10, or is deemed and declared substandard as defined in Health & S C §17920.3 because conditions listed in §17920.3 exist in the unit to an extent that "endangers the life, limb, health, property, safety, or welfare of the public or the occupants";
- After inspecting the unit, a housing code enforcement official has sent a written notice to the landlord or the landlord's agent requiring abatement of the nuisance or repair of the defect;
- The landlord has not abated the nuisance or repaired the defect within 35 days of service of the notice and the delay is without good cause; and
- The defect was not caused by the tenant's lack of ordinary care under CC §1929 or violation of duties under CC §1941.2.

Under these facts, the landlord is liable to the tenant for (CC §1942.4(b)):

- actual damages (including emotional distress damages; McNairy v C.K. Realty (2007) 150 CA4th 1500, 59 CR3d 429);
- "special" damages of $100 to $5000;
- costs of the suit; and
- reasonable attorney fees.

A court awarding such damages may also order the landlord to abate any nuisance and to repair any substandard conditions that "significantly or materially affect" the occupants' health and safety, in which event the court may reserve jurisdiction to monitor compliance. CC §1942.4(c).

NOTE: Civil Code §1942.4 may be used defensively in unlawful detainer actions. Any landlord who brings an unlawful detainer action based on nonpayment of rent, and who is found to have violated §1942.4, is liable for reasonable attorney fees and costs of the suit, in an amount to be fixed by the court. CCP §1174.21.

An action under CC §1942.4 may be filed in small claims court if the claim does not exceed that court's jurisdiction (currently $7500 if the tenant is a natural person). CC §1942.4(e); CCP §116.221.

For private rights of action available to tenants under the Narcotics Nuisance Abatement Act (Health & S C §§11570-11587), see §4.44.

Abatement is not available in a commercial lease. Underwood v Corsino (2005) 133 CA4th 132, 34 CR3d 542 (trial court's abatement of commercial tenant's rent reversed even though tenant had successfully defended unlawful detainer action based on theory that landlord's conduct had frustrated purpose of lease).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.15B E. Constructive Eviction Action

Another remedy available to a tenant occupying substandard premises arises from the common-law doctrine of constructive eviction (see §§3.6, 8.19). This applies whether the tenancy is residential or commercial. A constructive eviction results from the landlord's interference with or disturbance of the tenant's possession so that all or a portion of the premises are rendered unfit for occupancy or the tenant is deprived of beneficial use of the premises. Groh v Kover's Bull Pen, Inc. (1963) 221 CA2d 611, 34 CR 637; Pierce v Nash (1954) 126 CA2d 606, 272 P2d 938. Failure to repair and maintain the premises in a condition suitable for the purpose for which they were rented is a well recognized basis for a claim of constructive eviction. Groh v Kover's Bull Pen, Inc., supra; Butt v Bertola (1952) 110 CA2d 128, 242 P2d 32. The tenant must vacate the premises within a reasonable time after the failure to repair or maintain in order to claim constructive eviction. See Pierce v Nash, supra. Having vacated the premises, the tenant may then use the constructive eviction doctrine as a basis for a suit for damages against the landlord (Groh v Kover's Bull Pen, Inc., supra; Pierce v Nash, supra) or as a defense to the landlord's claim for any rent accruing after the constructive eviction (see Kulawitz v Pacific Woodenware & Paper Co. (1944) 25 C2d 664, 670, 155 P2d 24; McAlester v Landers (1886) 70 C 79, 11 P 505).

If the tenant unjustifiably fails to pay rent, the landlord may, of course, terminate the tenancy and seek to regain possession of the premises through the unlawful detainer process. Note, however, that a landlord who fails to exercise the right to terminate must continue to comply with landlord duties under the lease. Kulawitz v Pacific Woodenware & Paper Co., supra.

For discussion of insurance coverage for constructive eviction, see Gerchick, Reader Alert: Insurance Coverage for Constructive Eviction, 21 Cal Real Prop J 22 (Summer 2003).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.15C F. Nuisance Action

A developing remedy for conditions on the premises that affect the health or safety of tenants and their families is nuisance. See, e.g., Birke v Oakwood Worldwide (2009) 169 CA4th 1540, 87 CR3d 602 (overruled demurrer to complaint requesting abatement of public nuisance created by owner's failure to limit secondhand smoke in outdoor common areas; apartment tenant sued on behalf of minor daughter, who suffered from asthma and chronic allergies); Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194 (complaint alleging private nuisance and breach of implied warranty of habitability and requesting injunction to abate nuisance in addition to damages). See also City of Santa Monica v Gonzalez (2008) 43 C4th 905, 76 CR3d 483 (local entity action for receivership and court order authorizing demolition of substandard residential building), cited in §3.10.

For statutes authorizing public or private nuisance actions, or both, and discussion of owners' rights and obligations concerning illegal activities in residential housing, see §§3.10, 3.15A, 3.24-3.25, 3.68-3.68D, 4.44, 8.59. For comprehensive discussion of nuisance actions, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 11 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

© The Regents of the University of California

G. Implied Warranty of Habitability

§3.16 1. Development

In Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, the supreme court approved the holding in Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 102 CR 661, and held that there is an implied warranty of habitability in residential rental contracts that may be raised as a defense in an unlawful detainer action. In confirming the implied warranty doctrine, the Green court traced the common-law rule that the landlord had "no implied duty to repair" to its agrarian origin. The court noted that the rule developed at a time when most leases were agricultural, with structures "incidental" to the land and easily repairable by the "jack-of-all-trades" tenant-farmer. 10 C3d at 622. The court explained, however, that the majority of today's leases are for urban dwelling units. The modern tenant has neither the skills nor the finances to provide the ordinary elements of a home, and instead enters into a contract with a landlord who supplies those elements. In considering whether a warranty of habitability is implied in that contract, the court took note of the following (10 C3d at 623):

(a) The scarcity of adequate low-cost housing leaves tenants little bargaining power to negotiate for proper maintenance and repair (see Henrioulle v Marin Ventures, Inc. (1978) 20 C3d 512, 519, 143 CR 247);

(b) Widespread enactment of comprehensive housing codes shows legislative recognition of the landlord's duty to maintain habitable premises;

(c) There was a surge of development in the law of consumers' rights generally (including the application of implied warranty theories to real estate transactions); and

(d) The implied warranty doctrine was adopted by other jurisdictions.

In Green, the court rejected the contention that the repair-and-deduct remedy provided in CC §§1941-1942.1 (see §§3.12-3.15) was intended to be exclusive. It noted that these statutes limited repairs to an amount not exceeding one month's rent and (at that time) could be invoked only once in any 12-month period. As such, they were useful only for minor repairs. 10 C3d at 629.

Finally, the court held that implied warranty can be raised as a defense in an eviction action based on nonpayment of rent for the period during which the warranty was allegedly breached. The court noted that affirmative defenses are allowed in eviction actions if they determine the issue of possession. Formerly, the tenant's duty to pay rent and the landlord's duty to repair were held to be independent covenants. In modern urban settings, however, the issue of habitability is essential to the agreement; a landlord who breaches the warranty is not entitled to the full rent and thus has no justification for repossessing the premises. 10 C3d at 631.

In Fairchild v Park (2001) 90 CA4th 919, 928, 109 CR2d 442, a court of appeal stated in dicta that "the landlord's obligation to provide a habitable residence to the tenants is independent of the tenants' obligation to pay rent." For analysis and criticism of this dicta, see Moskovitz, The Danger of Dicta, 24 CEB Real Prop L Rep 253 (Oct 2001).

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Application

§3.17 a. Single-Family Homes

The decisions establishing the implied warranty of habitability (Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704; Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 102 CR 661) both involved apartments, and Green stressed the problems of urban apartment dwellers. Although neither Green nor Hinson expressly stated whether the implied warranty covers single-family homes, in Fairchild v Park (2001) 90 CA4th 919, 109 CR2d 442, the implied warranty was applied to a single-family residential lease.

At least two of the major considerations invoked by the Green court (see §3.16) apply equally to single-family homes:

- Such homes are covered by housing codes, which affirm the landlord's duty to maintain habitable premises; and
- Tenants in single-family dwellings face the same scarcity of adequate low-cost housing, leaving them with as little bargaining power as apartment dwellers to negotiate for proper maintenance and repair.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.18 b. Commercial Tenancies

In Schulman v Vera (1980) 108 CA3d 552, 166 CR 620, the court held that the implied warranty of habitability may not be raised by a commercial tenant as a defense to an unlawful detainer action based on nonpayment of rent. Similarly, in Underwood v Corsino (2005) 133 CA4th 132, 34 CR3d 542, the court ruled that the rent abatement provisions of CC §1942.4 do not apply to commercial tenancies. For discussion of habitability in the commercial leasing context, see Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease §§17.20, 18.5 (Cal CEB 1996) and California Eviction Defense Manual §§19.11-19.17 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.19 c. Government-Owned Housing

In California, a public housing authority (see Health & S C §§34200-34380) must covenant expressly in its rental agreements with low-income tenants to maintain the housing in accordance with local building codes. Health & S C §34332(a). Accordingly, state-owned or locally owned public housing should be covered by an express warranty of habitability. If not, such housing probably would be held subject to an implied warranty of habitability. As the court noted in Hubbs v People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works (1974) 36 CA3d 1005, 1009, 112 CR 172:

> In the absence of a specific statute so declaring or agreement so specifying, plaintiffs, as tenants, do not lose any of their rights merely because their landlord happens to be the State of California.

In City of New York v Rodriguez (Sup Ct 1983) 461 NYS2d 149, the court held that the fact that the landlord is a municipality does not exempt it from application of the doctrine of implied warranty of habitability.

For public housing funded or subsidized by the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), the local public housing authority is required to covenant in the lease to perform a number of specified maintenance functions. 24 CFR §966.4(e). The HUD-administered Section 8 program for privately owned housing with rent subsidies also requires lease provisions specifying the landlord's maintenance obligations. 24 CFR §§880.601(b); 881.601(b); see 24 CFR Part 882. Thus, for federally financed or subsidized housing, there is usually an express warranty of habitability in the lease.

When HUD owns rental housing, there is a federal implied and limited warranty of habitability under which HUD must take "reasonable, affirmative steps toward making the necessary repairs" that will put a rental property in "decent, safe, and sanitary" condition. Conille v Secretary of HUD (1st Cir 1988) 840 F2d 105, 117. When HUD fails to satisfy this obligation, the tenant may recover "restitution of rental payments made during the period of the breach, representing the difference between the value of the premises in a 'decent, safe, and sanitary' condition… and the value of the premises in their deteriorated condition." 840 F2d at 117. The court indicated that the value of HUD-owned premises in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition is the rent that the tenant had agreed to pay.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.20 d. Common Areas

The implied warranty of habitability may cover defects in common areas of the building as well as in the tenant's apartment. See Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 70, 102 CR 661. Common areas covered might include hallways, lobbies, stairways, parking areas, laundry rooms, and so forth. An important aspect of maintenance of common areas is the much-litigated issue of the extent of the landlord's duty to provide security against crime. For discussion of the cases on this issue, see §§3.25 and 3.68-3.68D.

A landlord may also be liable on a negligence theory for failure to exercise due care for tenants' safety in common areas (see §3.67A).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.21 e. Premises Uninhabitable at Inception of Tenancy

When the California Supreme Court established the implied warranty of habitability in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704 (see §3.16), it expressly raised the question of whether the warranty applies if the premises are uninhabitable at the beginning of tenancy. That question was resolved in Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 171 CR 707, in which the court held that a tenant may invoke the warranty of habitability as a defense even if the tenant did know of the defective condition at the time of occupancy. After analyzing Green v Superior Court, supra, and CC §§1941-1942.1 (see §3.12), the Knight court concluded that policy considerations underlying the warranty of habitability prohibit holding that a tenant has impliedly waived the warranty by knowingly occupying defective premises. Those policy considerations include the inequality of bargaining power between landlord and tenant, California's severe shortage of low- and moderate-income housing, and the impracticality of imposing a duty on tenants to inspect increasingly complex modern apartment buildings. 29 C3d at 52.

The Knight court disapproved parts of Quevedo v Braga (1977) 72 CA3d Supp 1, 140 CR 143 as inconsistent with its decision. 29 C3d at 55 n7. The Quevedo court had stated in dictum that a tenant's suit for damages must allege (1) that the defects were unknown to the tenant at the time of occupancy, and (2) that the effect of the defects on habitability was apparent on reasonable inspection. See Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194, decided before Knight v Hallsthammar, supra, in which the court upheld a complaint for damages for breach of the implied warranty, even though the defects were present at the outset of the tenancy, but unknown to the tenant at the time of occupancy.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.22 f. Premises Become Uninhabitable After Tenant Is Required to Vacate

It is unsettled whether the implied warranty of habitability applies if the premises become uninhabitable after expiration of a termination notice based on the tenant's breach of the rental agreement. Suppose, for example, that the tenant fails to pay rent, a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit is served and expires, and then the heating fails. The tenant's attorney may argue that the tenant remains a tenant until he or she is removed by judicial action or vacates voluntarily, and should still be entitled to the benefits of the lease. See Kulawitz v Pacific Woodenware & Paper Co. (1944) 25 C2d 664, 670, 155 P2d 24. Note, however, that the decision in Kulawitz was based on the doctrine of independent covenants, which was overruled in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704 (see §3.16). Thus, a court might hold that the landlord's duty to maintain the premises is dependent on the tenant's duty to perform under the rental agreement. The landlord's attorney could also argue that the implied warranty of habitability had not been breached when the notice was served and the only remedy for the tenant would be a claim of constructive eviction if the landlord failed to provide services during the eviction process. See §§3.6-3.8, 3.15B, 8.19.

For a more extensive discussion of this problem, see Moskovitz, The Implied Warranty of Habitability: A New Doctrine Raising New Issues, 62 Calif L Rev 1444, 1448 n20 (1974).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.23 3. Waiver

In Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 625 n9, 111 CR 704 (see §3.16), the court stated that "generally" a residential landlord may not use superior bargaining power to compel the tenant to waive implied warranty rights in the lease or rental agreement. Out-of-state courts agree. See, e.g., Fair v Negley (Pa Super Ct 1978) 390 A2d 240, in which the court held that the implied warranty could not be waived, even though the lease stated that the tenant knew the roof was leaking, but took the premises "as is."

Several courts have shown a reluctance to find an implied waiver of the warranty of habitability. In Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 171 CR 707, the court held that a tenant's failure to vacate the premises after learning of defects does not constitute a waiver of the implied warranty defense. See §3.21. See also Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 110, 176 CR 112; Murillo v Rite Stuff Foods, Inc. (1998) 65 CA4th 833, 848, 77 CR2d 12 (employee need not quit job to bring action for sexual harassment).

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Breach of Warranty of Habitability

a. Actionable Defects

§3.24 (1) Defects Covered by Housing Codes or CC §§1941.1 and 1941.3

In Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 637, 111 CR 704 (see §3.16), the supreme court stated:

> In most cases substantial compliance with those applicable building and housing code standards which materially affect health and safety will suffice to meet the landlord's obligations under the common law implied warranty of habitability….

The court noted that the standards for "tenantability" in CC §1941.1 (see §3.12) may also provide some helpful guidance in determining the extent of the implied warranty. 10 C3d at 637 n23. There are numerous sources for housing maintenance and building codes in state and local law See, e.g., §§3.10-3.11D. See complaint form in §3.48A.

Minor code violations that do not affect habitability, however, must be considered de minimis and, if standing alone, would not constitute a breach of the warranty of habitability. See Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 102 CR 661.

Tenants raising the issue of a breach of the implied warranty of habitability are entitled to a jury instruction based on standards set forth in CC §1941.1, if relevant to the facts of the case, and §1941.1 is not limited in its application to use of the repair-and-deduct remedy in CC §1942 (see §3.12). Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 171 CR 707.

In a tenant's action for damages for breach of the implied warranty, it is proper to instruct the jury that it must find the building to be a "nuisance" if the building is substandard because violations of the Uniform Housing Code (see §3.11D) endanger the tenant's health, safety, property, or welfare. Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 113, 176 CR 112. In Smith, the court also held that the trial court erred in refusing to give an instruction clarifying the relationship between housing codes and the warranty of habitability. A proper instruction would have advised the jury that the landlord's failure to comply with applicable code standards that materially affect health and safety constitutes a breach of the warranty of habitability, but that minor violations do not constitute such a breach. 120 CA3d at 109.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.25 (2) Defects Not Covered by Housing and Building Codes

In Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704 (see §3.16), the court described the scope of the implied warranty of habitability to include those items that are basic to decent, safe, sanitary housing; it did not limit its holding to situations in which defects in the premises constitute housing code violations. Although stressing enactment of the code as an expression of public policy, the court also noted that "substantial compliance" with the code would be enough in "most cases." 10 C3d at 637. The issue in an implied warranty case is whether premises are habitable; serious code violations are simply one way of showing uninhabitability. See Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 171 CR 707. See also Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194.

Constructive eviction (see §§3.6-3.8, 3.15B, 8.19) can be shown even if no code violations are present. See, e.g., Groh v Kover's Bull Pen, Inc. (1963) 221 CA2d 611, 34 CR 637; Sierad v Lilly (1962) 204 CA2d 770, 22 CR 580. Several out-of-state cases suggest that the implied warranty of habitability is not limited to code violations. See Todd v May (Conn Cir Ct 1973) 316 A2d 793; Boston Hous. Auth. v Hemingway (Mass 1973) 293 NE2d 831; Timber Ridge Town House v Dietz (NJ Super Ct 1975) 338 A2d 21, 24; Academy Spires, Inc. v Brown (NJ Dist Ct 1970) 268 A2d 556; Amanuensis, Ltd. v Brown (Civ Ct 1971) 318 NYS2d 11.

It is unsettled whether a landlord's obligation to provide security against crime raises implied warranty of habitability issues if the defects are not code violations. Housing codes do not require extensive security measures such as adequate common-area lighting and burglar-proof windows and doors (although state law (and some local ordinances) require deadbolt locks and window security accessories or other similar devices; see §3.11A).

In a number of cases, courts have imposed tort liability on landlords for failing to maintain premises reasonably secure from crime and other physical injuries (see §§3.67-3.68D), but there are no reported decisions imposing liability for breach of the implied warranty of habitability when injury results from criminal acts. Some cases seem to suggest, however, that the implied warranty of habitability may have been violated as well. For general discussion of landlords' tort liability, see §§3.67-3.72.

Failure to provide reasonable security is a breach of the implied warranty of habitability that may be raised as a defense to an unlawful detainer action based on nonpayment of rent. See Secretary of HUD v Layfield (1978) 88 CA3d Supp 28, 30, 152 CR 342 (citing Kline v 1500 Mass. Ave. Apartment Corp. (DC Cir 1970) 439 F2d 477, 485). The landlord had issued a handbook and letter falsely assuring tenants that around-the-clock security guards would be provided. After acknowledging the potential applicability of the implied warranty, the court remanded for a determination of whether there had been a breach of the implied warranty or of an express warranty to provide security. 88 CA3d Supp at 31. For a standard jury instruction entitled "Business Proprietor's Liability for the Negligent/Intentional/Criminal Conduct of Others," see CACI 1000-1005 (similar to BAJI 8.22, "Duty of Landlord To Protect Tenant from Criminal Acts of Third Persons"). See also Knight v Hallsthammar, supra, on jury instructions on habitability.

Tenants may find that an action for nuisance can be effective in obtaining the landlord's protection from criminal acts. In Lew v Superior Court (1993) 20 CA4th 866, 25 CR2d 42, neighbors of defendant landlord each filed separate nuisance suits against him in small claims court, claiming that they were disturbed by drug dealers working from and around the landlord's property. After consolidating the actions, the small claims court awarded $218,325 to the plaintiffs. The court of appeal upheld the award, relying on Health & S C §11570, which makes every building used for drug dealing a nuisance. The court allowed the plaintiffs to recover for mental suffering, because a finding of nuisance allows compensation for discomfort and annoyance. Although the Lew plaintiffs were neighbors, the same form of action would appear to be available to tenants. For further discussion of landlords' problems in dealing with criminal activity on the premises and available remedies, see §4.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.26 (3) Defects Caused by Tenant

Several courts have stated that there may be no breach of the implied warranty if the tenant's wrongful action or abnormal use of the premises caused the defects, because it would be unfair to permit the tenant to benefit from his or her own wrongdoing. See, e.g., Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 70, 102 CR 661; Boston Hous. Auth. v Hemingway (Mass 1973) 293 NE2d 831, 843; Mease v Fox (Iowa 1972) 200 NW2d 791, 796; King v Moorehead (Mo Ct App 1973) 495 SW2d 65.

Note that the tenant similarly cannot invoke the repair-and-deduct remedy for defects brought about by his or her own wrongful conduct. CC §1941.2 (see §3.12).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/3 Rights and Duties During Tenancy/§3.27 (4) Severity of Defects

§3.27 (4) Severity of Defects

Decisions involving the implied warranty of habitability have neither delineated the standards for habitability to be applied by trial courts, nor quantified the severity of defects necessary to constitute a breach of the implied warranty.

In Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 171 CR 707, the court held that the tenant is entitled to a jury instruction based on relevant standards set forth in CC §1941.1 (see §3.12), if appropriate to the facts of the case. The court declined to further delineate the standards, noting that there is an imperfect correlation between statutory or regulatory requirements and habitability. In Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, the court stated that the landlord need not provide premises in "perfect, aesthetically pleasing condition," but must provide "bare living requirements." The court added that substantial compliance with applicable housing codes will usually suffice. 10 C3d at 637. In Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 109, 176 CR 112, the court held that a proper instruction on habitability should advise the jury that the landlord's failure to comply substantially with applicable building and housing standards that materially affect health and safety would constitute a breach of the warranty of habitability, but that minor violations would not. See also CCP §1174.2, discussed in §3.32.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords' attorneys should stress the Green "bare living requirements" standard to rebut a warranty of habitability claim. For example, if one toilet in a rental unit is not working, but another working toilet is available in the unit, the attorney can argue that the warranty has not been breached.

The best way to gauge the degree of severity the courts will find sufficient is to consider the facts and holdings of reported cases. In Hyatt v Tedesco (2002) 96 CA4th Supp 62, 117 CR2d 921, for example, the undisputed evidence at an unlawful detainer trial showed that the roof leaked to the extent that leaking rain damaged the inside walls of the property, the windows were not waterproofed, water leaking in the bathroom had damaged the wall, and the thermostat did not work. The trial court found that the breach was not substantial, but reduced the rent by $200 and entered judgment for possession in the landlord's favor. The appellate court reversed and directed the trial court to enter conditional judgment for the tenant (see §3.32), holding that the breach was substantial because the defects were not merely cosmetic or aesthetic, but affected the "health and safety of the tenant." 96 CA4th Supp at 68.

Other courts have held that allegations of the following specific defects were sufficient to state causes of action for breach of the implied warranty:

(a) Hole created by dry rot in bathroom floor caused tenant and son to fall; leaking toilet caused foul odors and required tenant to mop floor continually; improperly fitted glass in front door caused constant draft in apartment. Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 102 CR 661.

(b) Collapse and nonrepair of bathroom ceiling; continual presence of vermin; lack of heat in four rooms; plumbing blockages; exposed and faulty wiring; illegally installed and dangerous stove. Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 621, 111 CR 704.

(c) Screens and storm windows broken or missing; windows broken and boarded up; several radiators missing; holes in floors and walls; falling plaster; some electrical fixtures inoperative; sewage backup in cellar; vermin; unfit furniture; insufficient heat. Berzito v Gambino (NJ 1973) 308 A2d 17, 18.

(d) Rat infestation kept tenant and family from sleeping for three nights. Lemle v Breeden (Haw 1969) 462 P2d 470, 472.

(e) Filthy premises; inadequate wiring; kitchen sink, toilet, furnace, and handrail on stairs in disrepair; no screens on doors and windows. Pines v Perssion (Wis 1961) 111 NW2d 409, 411.

(f) Toilet ceased to function. Jackson v Rivera (Civ Ct 1971) 318 NYS2d 7, 8.

(g) No bathtub or shower. Gillette v Anderson (Ill App Ct 1972) 282 NE2d 149, 150 (cited in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 637 n22, 111 CR 704).

(h) Excessive air leakage around front door and windows; kitchen countertop and bathroom floor tiles in disrepair. Steele v Latimer (Kan 1974) 521 P2d 304, 306.

(i) Failure to repair or replace broken front door locks. Brownstein v Edison (Sup Ct 1980) 425 NYS2d 773.

(j) Failure to remove strong odor of cat urine. Kekllas v Saddy (Dist Ct 1976) 389 NYS2d 756.

(k) Lack of heat, hot water, and elevator service for a substantial portion of rental period; inadequate cleaning and maintenance; no lobby furniture; broken front door lock; irregular garbage collection. 111 E. 88th Partners v Simon (Civ Ct 1980) 434 NYS2d 886, aff'd as modified (NY Sup 1985) 489 NYS2d 139.

When the evidence regarding the nature and effect of the defects is undisputed, the appellate court is not bound by a finding of the trial court that defects in the premises were not "substantial." The appellate court may make its own findings and reverse a trial court judgment for the landlord. Hyatt v Tedesco (2002) 96 CA4th Supp 62, 117 CR2d 921.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.28 (5) Evidence of Defects

If the tenant alleges certain code violations constituting the breach, the local housing code itself should be introduced into evidence. For most California cases, this will be the Uniform Housing Code (see §3.11D). Most cities and counties have incorporated the Code by ordinance. Before being introduced into evidence, copies of the Code and ordinance should be certified as true copies by the city or county clerk. See Evid C §1530(a)(2).

The court is required to take judicial notice of the Uniform Housing Code as incorporated in the state housing law, Health & S C §§17910-17995.5. See Evid C §451(a). See also Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook §49.15 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). The court is permitted to take judicial notice of the Code when it has been incorporated by local ordinance (see Evid C §452(b); see also Jefferson's Evidence Benchbook §49.18). Nevertheless, the tenant's attorney should introduce the local housing code into evidence to facilitate the court's determination of whether code violations occurred.

Usually the best way to prove that existing conditions violate the housing code is through evidence of an inspection by a city or county code-enforcement official. See, e.g., Boston Hous. Auth. v Hemingway (Mass 1973) 293 NE2d 831, 843 nl5. Inspection reports are public records that can be inspected and copied at the enforcement agency's local office. Govt C §§6253, 6254.7(c). Because such reports are official records, they may be introduced as evidence despite their hearsay nature. See Evid C §1280. See also Jefferson's Evidence Benchbook §5.1. They may be authenticated through the personal testimony of the official (see Evid C §§1400-1401), although authentication may be unnecessary if the official certifies copies of the records as true copies, and if the court is willing to take judicial notice of the official's position and the authenticity of the signature. See Evid C §1280. See also Jefferson's Evidence Benchbook §§5.2-5.3. The Best Evidence Rule does not preclude introduction of the copies. Evid C §1530. See also Jefferson's Evidence Benchbook §32.9. If the inspecting official would make a good witness for the tenant or the landlord, he or she should be served with a subpoena to testify and a subpoena duces tecum for the inspection records. CCP §1985. The testimony of other people (including the tenant) who observed the defective conditions may also be used to prove the code violations. Photographs may be introduced to confirm their testimony. See Evid C §§250, 1400-1401. See also Jefferson's Evidence Benchbook §31.29. Witnesses may also testify regarding other factors bearing on whether there was a breach of warranty, e.g., the effect of the defects on the tenant's health and safety, the length of time that the defects persisted, and whether they were caused by the tenant's abnormal use. See also strategies discussed in §§5.10-5.12.

In mold exposure claims, proving or disproving the defective conditions nearly always becomes a battle between the landlord's and the tenant's experts. See Handling Mold Litigation in California (Cal CEB Action Guide September 2009).

If the tenant claims the alleged defects still exist at the time of trial, one of the most effective ways to determine the existence or severity of the alleged defects is a personal visit to the premises. In California, the judge may visit the premises (see Union Oil Co. v Reconstruction Oil Co. (1937) 20 CA2d 170, 66 P2d 1215) or order a jury viewing of them. CCP §651. See 2 Witkin, California Evidence §§25-31 (4th ed 2000). If a statement of decision is required and a finding is supported by a viewing, the statement must include the court's observations at the viewing. CCP §632.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.29 (6) Notice of Defects

After adopting the implied warranty doctrine, the court in Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 70, 102 CR 661, stated in dictum that the "tenant must also give notice of the alleged defects to the landlord…." The court cited no authority for this assertion and gave no explanation for it. In Quevedo v Braga (1977) 72 CA3d Supp 1, 8, 140 CR 143, this dictum was repeated. Quevedo cites as authority for this point the decision in Pollard v Saxe & Yolles Dev. Co. (1974) 12 C3d 374, 380, 115 CR 648. In Pollard, the court held that a buyer's action for breach of the implied warranty in the sale of an apartment house was barred by his failure to give notice of the defects in a reasonable time. There is no indication in the court's opinion, however, that the seller knew of the defects from other sources. Additionally, in the sale of an apartment building, one can assume equal skill and knowledge on behalf of the buyer and seller, whereas exactly the opposite is true between landlord and tenant.

In Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, however, the supreme court made no mention of any notice requirement, even though the court cited other aspects of Hinson v Delis, supra, with apparent approval. In Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 55 n6, 171 CR 707, the court left open the questions of whether and when the tenant must give notice of the defects. The dicta in the Hinson and Quevedo decisions may simply be another way of saying that the landlord must have actual or constructive knowledge of the defects for the implied warranty of habitability to apply.

PRACTICE TIPS:

- Under existing California case law, the tenant should give the landlord a written and dated notice of the defects and retain a copy to introduce at trial. The notice should be sent by certified mail, return receipt requested, so that its receipt by the landlord can be proved. Oral notice is sufficient if its existence can be established by testimony.
- Landlords' counsel might argue that the tenant's failure to give notice indicates that the defect is not severe and that the defense is being used to delay the unlawful detainer action. Landlords often become aware of an alleged habitability defect when they receive the tenant's answer to an unlawful detainer complaint. Through bank statements and testimony, the attorney might attempt to show that the tenant's financial difficulties led to the 3-day notice to pay rent or quit, rather than the alleged defect and the subsequent rent withholding.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.30 b. Reasonable Time to Repair

Some language in early implied warranty of habitability cases suggested that a tenant invoking the warranty would be required to allow the landlord a reasonable time to make repairs. See Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 70, 102 CR 661; Quevedo v Braga (1977) 72 CA3d Supp 1, 140 CR 143. In Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, however, the court made no mention of a reasonable time requirement.

In Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 55 n7, 171 CR 707, the supreme court expressly disapproved language in Hinson v Delis, supra, and Quevedo v Braga, supra, that suggested that exercise of the implied warranty depends on whether the tenant gave the landlord a reasonable time to make repairs. Rejecting an instruction given by the trial court, the court noted (29 C3d at 55):

> At least in a situation where, as here, a landlord has notice of alleged uninhabitable conditions not caused by the tenants themselves, a landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability exists whether or not he has had a "reasonable" time to repair.

Thus, the court left open the questions of whether and when notice of defects must be given (see §3.29).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.31 c. Sale of Premises

The fact that the uninhabitable conditions existed before the current owner acquired the premises does not bar the tenant from invoking the implied warranty of habitability as a defense to an unlawful detainer action. Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 171 CR 707. In Knight, the plaintiff-landlords acquired the building and the next day served the tenants with notice of a substantial rent increase. The tenants withheld rent because of existing physical defects, and unlawful detainer proceedings eventually were begun. The supreme court held that the trial court's instruction on the issue of preexisting defects might have confused the jury into thinking that uninhabitable conditions existing under a previous owner might not be a defense against the current owner. 29 C3d at 57. At least when the unlawful detainer is based on rent currently being claimed due, the present owner is in breach of the warranty if the premises are uninhabitable. The change of ownership is an event over which the tenant has no control. 29 C3d at 57.

© The Regents of the University of California

d. Remedies for Breach of Implied Warranty

(1) Defense to Unlawful Detainer Suit

§3.32 (a) Summary of Procedure

Code of Civil Procedure §1174.2 prescribes procedures for residential unlawful detainer actions after default in payment of rent in which the tenant raises a breach of the landlord's obligations under CC §1941 or of any warranty of habitability as an affirmative defense. If it finds that a substantial breach has occurred (see, e.g., Hyatt v Tedesco (2002) 96 CA4th Supp 62, 117 CR2d 921, cited in §3.27), then under CCP §1174.2(a):

(1) The court must determine the reasonable rental value of the premises in its untenantable state to the date of trial;

(2) The court must deny possession to the landlord and adjudge the tenant to be the prevailing party, on the condition that the tenant pay the rent owed within a reasonable period not exceeding 5 days from the date of the judgment, or within the time set forth in CCP §1013 if the judgment is served by mail;

(3) The court may order the landlord to make repairs, in which event jurisdiction continues to ensure compliance;

(4) The court must order that the rent be limited to the reasonable rental value of the premises until repairs are completed; and

(5) The court must award costs and attorney fees to the tenant if provided by statute or contract.

If the tenant fails to pay all rent accrued to the date of trial, or if no substantial breach has occurred, the landlord must be awarded possession, granted judgment, and adjudged the prevailing party for purposes of awarding costs or attorney fees under any statute or contract. CCP §1174.2(b).

This procedure applies only to unlawful detainer cases premised on a tenant's alleged failure to pay rent. It has no bearing on unlawful detainer actions based on other grounds (e.g., failure to vacate after 30 days' or 60 days' notice), in which habitability may be raised as a defense only to the amount of damages owing to the landlord. See, e.g., North 7th St. Assocs. v Constante (2001) 92 CA4th Supp 7, 11 n1, 111 CR2d 815 (even though breach not defense to unlawful detainer action, it may be asserted to reduce amount of daily damages for period after 30-day notice expires). Similarly, if the landlord alleges other bases for the eviction together with nonpayment of rent, the habitability defense applies only to the amount of damages; it is not a defense to possession in such joined actions if the trier of fact finds that the landlord is entitled to possession on any basis other than nonpayment of rent. For commercial tenancies, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§19.11-19.17 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.33 (b) Complaint Need Not Allege Compliance With Implied Warranty

In De La Vara v Municipal Court (1979) 98 CA3d 638, 159 CR 648, the tenant demurred to an eviction action based on nonpayment of rent, on the ground that the complaint failed to allege compliance with the implied warranty of habitability. The tenant argued that the action was based on contract, and that the plaintiff must allege compliance with conditions precedent to the defendant's duty to perform.

The court rejected this argument, noting that although the court in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, held that breach of the implied warranty may be raised as a defense, a complaint need not negate anticipated defenses. The essential elements of an unlawful detainer complaint are set forth in CCP §§1161 and 1166, and do not include an allegation of compliance with the warranty of habitability. 98 CA3d at 642. (See §9.37 on essential elements of an unlawful detainer complaint.)

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.34 (c) Protective Orders

In Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, the supreme court approved the procedural device endorsed in Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 102 CR 661, of requiring the tenant to make rental payments at the contract rate into court as they become due, for as long as the tenant remains in possession. The court in Green stated that "[s]uch a procedure can serve as a fair means of protection of landlords from potential abuses of the proposed warranty of habitability defense." 10 C3d at 637. (Note that both courts appear to have overlooked CCP §572 and the decision in In re Elias (1962) 209 CA2d 262, 25 CR 739, which limit the situations in which protective orders are allowed.)

Requiring the tenant to pay the contract rent into court when due serves two purposes:

(1) Such payment removes an incentive for the indigent tenant to raise the implied warranty defense frivolously; and

(2) It protects the landlord from eventual loss of rent if the defense turns out to have no merit.

Protective orders and turnover orders are discussed more extensively in Moskovitz, The Implied Warranty of Habitability: A New Doctrine Raising New Issues, 62 Calif L Rev 1444, 1473 (1974). For discussion of procedural aspects of protective orders, see §11.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.35 (2) Actions for Damages; Statutes of Limitations

In Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 624, 111 CR 704, the court treated leases and rental agreements as contracts, not merely as conveyances of estates in land. Therefore, all normal remedies for breach of contract should apply, including an action for damages. See Fairchild v Park (2001) 90 CA4th 919, 109 CR2d 442 (cited in §§3.8, 3.16); Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194 (action by tenant for damages for breach of warranty upheld along with numerous tort causes of action). See also Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 176 CR 112. See complaint form in §3.48A.

In a suit for damages for breach of the implied warranty, special damages should be recoverable (as discussed in §3.39), and general damages should be recoverable on one of the theories discussed in §3.37. Note, however, that in Stoiber v Honeychuck, supra, the court held that the tenant could claim general damages for discomfort and annoyance by framing a cause of action in terms of the tort of failure to provide habitable premises. See §3.38. The landlord's management company also might be liable under this theory if the company was responsible for maintaining the premises. Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 929, 162 CR 194.

Damages based on the theories of nuisance and intentional infliction of mental distress might also be claimed in an action based on breach of the implied warranty. See Stoiber v Honeychuck, supra; Smith v David, supra. Each of these theories will support a claim for punitive damages under appropriate facts. Stoiber v Honeychuck, supra. The Stoiber court also approved a negligence theory (101 CA3d at 922), but it does not appear that much is gained by adding this theory in a complaint pleading causes of action under the intentional tort and warranty theories, except that negligence is an insurable risk while intentional torts are not (see §3.47).

Breach of warranty and various tort theories are alternative remedies and cannot be used to give the tenant double recovery. 101 CA3d at 931. See also Fairchild v Park (2001) 90 CA4th 919, 109 CR2d 442.

A tenant may bring an affirmative suit for breach of the implied warranty of habitability even after stipulating to give up possession in an unlawful detainer action. In Landeros v Pankey (1995) 39 CA4th 1167, 46 CR2d 165, the court held that a settlement of an unlawful detainer action between landlord and tenant did not collaterally estop the tenant's later action for damages for breach of the implied warranty; the settlement neither referred to the breach of warranty claim nor provided that the settlement resolved all disputes between the parties.

PRACTICE TIP: Because settlements are common in unlawful detainer actions, it is important for both parties to consider whether or not to include a release of all claims in the stipulated judgment.

The statute of limitations might restrict recovery under some theories more than under others. Nuisance and intentional infliction of mental distress are torts, as is intentionally failing to provide habitable premises, outlined in Stoiber v Honeychuck, supra. Under these theories, the tenant can recover personal injury damages only for 2 years preceding the filing of the action under CCP §335.1 and property losses for the preceding 3 years under CCP §338. The implied warranty, however, is inserted by law into the lease or rental agreement. Under an oral agreement, the tenant can claim economic (i.e., rent reduction, property damage, and other out-of-pocket) damages for up to 2 years (CCP §339); if the agreement is in writing, the limitation period is 4 years (CCP §337).

In addition to the sections that follow, on recoverable damages for breach of the warranty of habitability, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§15.38-15.50 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.36 (a) Statutory Damages; Abatement

In addition to the affirmative remedies discussed in §3.35, CC §1942.4 provides that a residential landlord who demands or collects rent, issues a notice of rent increase, or serves a 3-day notice, after being notified of a substandard condition by a housing code enforcement official may be required to abate the condition and may be liable to the tenant for actual damages, "special" damages of $100 to $5000, costs, and reasonable attorney fees. An action under §1942.4 may be preferable to one for breach of the implied warranty of habitability if the lease or rental agreement does not have an attorney fee clause, but certain prerequisites must be met for a §1942.4 action. For further discussion, see §3.15A. Civil Code section 1942.4(b)(1) permits an award of "actual damages." Actual damages includes damages for emotional distress. McNairy v C.K. Realty (2007) 150 CA4th 1500, 59 CR3d 429.

A landlord may also face liability, and potentially even a forced sale of the property, under the Narcotics Nuisance Abatement Act (Health & S C §§11570-11587), which may be considered as a potential cause of action in an implied warranty of habitability affirmative suit. For further discussion, see §4.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

(b) General Damages

§3.37 (i) Difference in Value or Percentage Reduction

A tenant who establishes a breach of warranty still must pay a "reasonable rent" for the period of the breach. The amount of "reasonable rent" depends on the damages caused by the breach of warranty (i.e., contract rent minus damages equals "reasonable rent"). Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 638, 111 CR 704. The Green court mentioned two approaches to the damages problem. The first bases damages on the difference between the fair rental value of the premises as warranted and the actual market value during the breach. Green v Superior Court, supra. See Quevedo v Braga (1977) 72 CA3d Supp 1, 8, 140 CR 143. The second approach estimates the percentage reduction in use caused by the landlord's breach and applies the reduction to the agreed-on rent. Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 639 n24, 111 CR 704. See Cazares v Ortiz (1980) 109 CA3d Supp 23, 168 CR 108 (percentage reduction of one third).

The difference-in-value approach, which depends on proving the fair market value of the premises under different conditions of repair (one of which is hypothetical) could require expensive expert testimony. See Cazares v Ortiz, supra. The percentage-reduction-in-use test seems to invite an overall estimate of the impact of the defects.

In Green v Superior Court, supra, the court did not endorse either method of determining damages. The only reported cases (Quevedo v Braga, supra, and Cazares v Ortiz, supra) were decided by superior court appellate departments. Logically, it seems that neither approach can reduce the rent to zero. Green mentions the possibility, however, that the landlord's breach may be total, and that the tenant may owe no rent at all. 10 C3d at 639. See also Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 112, 176 CR 112; Acadia, Cal., Ltd. v Herbert (1960) 54 C2d 328, 337, 5 CR 686.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.38 (ii) Discomfort and Annoyance

Discomfort and annoyance have been rejected as compensable damages for breach of implied warranty by the California courts. See Quevedo v Braga (1977) 72 CA3d Supp 1, 9, 140 CR 143; Cazares v Ortiz (1980) 109 CA3d Supp 23, 168 CR 108. See also Golden Gateway Ctr. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1999) 73 CA4th 1204, 87 CR2d 332 (discomfort does not entitle tenant to reduction under rent control law). In Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 916, 162 CR 194, however, the court approved damages for discomfort and annoyance caused by the landlord's failure to make repairs, when one of the tenant's causes of action was based on the tort of failing to provide habitable premises. The Stoiber court distinguished Quevedo v Braga, supra, on the ground that "no cause of action in tort was pleaded" in that case. 101 CA3d at 916. Similarly, CC §1942.4 (see §§3.15A, 3.36) permits an award of "actual damages" in actions to remedy untenantability, and that term includes damages for emotional distress. McNairy v C.K. Realty (2007) 150 CA4th 1500, 59 CR3d 429.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.38A (iii) Personal Injury Damages

Some habitability violations may be severe enough to substantially affect the health of the occupants. On premises liability for personal injuries, see §§3.67-3.70A. See also California Tort Guide, chaps 1, 10 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996). On litigating personal injury claims caused by mold exposure in rental housing, see Handling Mold Litigation in California (Cal CEB Action Guide September 2009). For comprehensive treatment of personal injury tort litigation and damages, see California Personal Injury Proof (Cal CEB 1970); California Tort Damages, chaps 1-3, 6, 15 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

NOTE: A California court of appeal invalidated a rental agreement provision that required the tenant to submit to binding arbitration personal injury suits against the landlord. See Jaramillo v JH Real Estate Partners, Inc. (2003) 111 CA4th 394, 3 CR3d 525.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.39 (c) Special Damages

The tenant should be able to recover, as special damages, various expenses actually incurred as a result of the landlord's breach of the warranty of habitability. In Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 913, 162 CR 194, the court held that a complaint for damages for breach of the implied warranty stated a cause of action by alleging "property damage and economic loss including but not limited to water damage to furniture, mattress and curtains." See also Moskovitz, The Implied Warranty of Habitability: A New Doctrine Raising New Issues, 62 Calif L Rev 1444, 1488 n196 (1974).

On special damages available in mold exposure actions, see Handling Mold Litigation in California (Cal CEB Action Guide September 2009).

In Fair v Negley (Pa Super Ct 1978) 390 A2d 240, 242, the court held that, when the implied warranty of habitability is breached, the tenant may sue and recover

- the difference between the rent paid and the reasonable rental value;
- any amounts the tenant spent to try to make the premises habitable; and
- any increase in the tenant's utility bills due to the uninhabitable condition of the premises.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.40 (d) Punitive Damages

The tenant may be able to recover punitive damages in an action for breach of the implied warranty of habitability if the landlord's conduct was willful, oppressive, or malicious. See CC §3294. For discussion of tactical considerations relating to a claim for punitive damages, see §3.47. See also California Tort Damages (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

In Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194, the tenant alleged causes of action based on theories of breach of the warranty of habitability, nuisance, intentional infliction of emotional distress, negligent violation of statutory duty, constructive eviction, and injunctive relief from unlawful business practices. The court held that:

(1) The tenant can sue in tort for damages resulting from a breach of the implied warranty of habitability (101 CA3d at 918); and

(2) The plaintiff's prayer for punitive damages was proper because she had alleged that the landlord's conduct was willful, oppressive, and malicious (101 CA3d at 920).

Thus, it appears that a cause of action for breach of the warranty may support a prayer for punitive damages under CC §3294. In any event, a tort cause of action can often be joined with a cause of action for breach of the implied warranty. 101 CA3d at 913.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.41 (e) Costs and Attorney Fees

When a lease or rental agreement provides for an award of attorney fees to the prevailing party in an action on the contract, and the tenant brings an affirmative action for breach of an express or implied warranty of habitability, attorney fees and costs are governed by CC §1717. See Fairchild v Park (2001) 90 CA4th 919, 109 CR2d 442. The prevailing party is generally the party who recovered a greater relief in the action on the contract. The court may determine, however, that there is no prevailing party on the contract for the purpose of CC §1717. CC §1717(b)(1).

If a prevailing tenant wins exclusively on a tort theory, i.e., is awarded punitive damages based on the landlord's tortious failure to provide habitable premises (see §3.40), attorney fees would not be recoverable, unless the contract expressly provides for recovery of fees by the prevailing party in a related tort action. See Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 71 CR2d 830; Fairchild v Park, supra. See also §§3.46, 13.25-13.33. For specific analysis of tort versus contract theories for awarding attorney fees and costs in an affirmative suit for breach of the implied warranty of habitability, see Fairchild v Park, supra.

In an affirmative suit brought by a residential tenant for damages under CC §1942.4 (see §§3.15A, 3.36), available in certain circumstances when the premises are untenantable, the prevailing party is entitled to reasonable attorney fees and costs. CC §1942.4(b). See Galan v Wolfriver Holding Corp. (2000) 80 CA4th 1124, 96 CR2d 112 (court ruled that defendant was not prevailing party after plaintiff voluntarily dismissed statutory untenantability action). Civil Code §1942.4 may also be used defensively in an unlawful detainer suit. A tenant who prevails in the suit (by proving that the landlord has violated CC §1942.4) is entitled to recover attorney fees and costs. CCP §1174.21.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.42 (3) Injunctive Relief

Injunctive relief might be available to a tenant for a landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability under certain circumstances. If the complaint includes a cause of action for nuisance as well as for breach of the implied warranty, proper relief may include injunctive relief directing the landlord to abate the nuisance under CCP §731 in addition to damages. See Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194. See also Birke v Oakwood Worldwide (2009) 169 CA4th 1540, 87 CR3d 602 (complaint requesting abatement of public nuisance created by owner's failure to limit secondhand smoke in outdoor common areas survived demurrer). Moreover, if the tenant remains on the premises and thus has standing to sue, or alleges a claim on behalf of the general public, injunctive relief might be available with respect to all the landlord's rental properties under Bus & P C §§17200-17209, which establish an injunctive remedy against unfair business practices. See Stoiber v Honeychuck, supra.

On injunctive relief available under statutory habitability law in the form of abatement of untenantable conditions, see §§3.15A, 3.36. On injunctive relief available under the Narcotics Nuisance Abatement Act (Health & S C §§11570-11587), see §4.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.43 (4) Termination and Rescission

Under traditional contract law, a material breach of contract permits the innocent party to terminate, i.e., to refuse to perform further. See 1 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Contracts §852 (10th ed 2005). The tenant must show that the defects were "serious" in order to prove a breach of the implied warranty (see §3.27). Such a showing may also enable the tenant to terminate the lease or rental agreement on grounds of material breach and to vacate the premises. Under CC §1942(a), the tenant may vacate and be relieved of any further obligation under the rental agreement if the conditions described in CC §§1941-1942 are present. See §3.12.

Rescission goes beyond termination, extinguishing the contract as if it had never been made. CC §1688. (On rescission generally, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).) Because rescission treats the contract as if it never existed, the parties must restore to each other anything they received under the contract. CC §1691(b). This feature of rescission limits its usefulness in the landlord-tenant context. Presumably, the tenant would be required to restore to the landlord the "reasonable rental value" of the premises for the time of occupancy, and the landlord would be required to return to the tenant all rent paid under the rental agreement or lease. Thus, this remedy is often called "retroactive rent abatement." See Berzito v Gambino (NJ 1973) 308 A2d 17, in which the court awarded such relief (contract rent minus reasonable rent), but did not term the relief "rescission." Rescission seemingly offers the tenant no particular advantage over an action for damages for breach of the warranty of habitability for the time that the tenant lived in defective premises. It presents one disadvantage: The recovery may not exceed the total amount of rent paid. See Moskovitz, The Implied Warranty of Habitability: A New Doctrine Raising New Issues, 62 Calif L Rev 1444, 1489 (1974).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.44 (5) Declaratory Relief

Declaratory relief may be advisable when the tenant wants to withhold rent, but is not sure that the landlord is breaching the implied warranty (e.g., the defects are of borderline seriousness). Even a tenant who withholds rent in good faith runs a substantial risk of being evicted if the court does not find a breach of the implied warranty. Declaratory relief can enable the tenant to obtain a judicial determination of the materiality of the breach without risking eviction.

In Hinson v Delis (1972) 26 CA3d 62, 71, 102 CR 661, the tenant sought a declaratory judgment that she was obliged "to make rental payments only after the defendant complies with his duty to substantially obey the housing codes and make the premises habitable." The court held that this relief was proper. See Moskovitz, The Implied Warranty of Habitability: A New Doctrine Raising New Issues, 62 Calif L Rev 1444, 1492 (1974).

Declaratory relief may usefully be invoked by either landlords' or tenants' attorneys in a "test case" filed as an unlimited civil case, so that the issue is more likely to be resolved by a reported decision on review by a district court of appeal. Moreover, an action for declaratory relief has precedence on the superior court calendar. CCP §1062.3. Such considerations were involved in the tenant's decision to file an action for declaratory relief in Hinson v Delis, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.45 5. Tactical Considerations

A tenant's attorney must take a number of factors into account when preparing a lawsuit for breach of the warranty of habitability. As discussed in §§3.32-3.44, several causes of action are potentially available. Considerations in choosing among these causes of action are discussed in §§3.46-3.48.

Some attorneys prefer to take a "shotgun" approach to the action, joining as many potential claims a possible on the theory that one or more of them will be successful. Other tenant advocates prefer to tailor each action to its particular facts, limiting the action to the one or two causes of action that best apply and that have the best chance of success.

Different considerations may dictate the choice of causes of action for a particular case. When preparing a breach of warranty action, it is well to remember that habitability cases rarely turn on legal theories; these cases almost always turn on their facts, and the goal in preparing the action and drafting the complaint is to get the case before a trier of fact so that evidence of the habitability defects can be presented. If the complaint contains a number of legal theories, the tenant's attorney must be prepared to counter various demurrers and motions designed to eliminate causes of action, particularly in the case of unusual damage claims being defended by the landlord's insurance carrier (see §3.47).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.46 a. Contract or Tort Action

Habitability claims may sound primarily in contract (breach of the warranty, whether express or implied) or tort (negligent maintenance of the premises, resulting in violations of housing and safety codes, regulations, or ordinances), or they may be brought as statutory claims under CC §1942.4. See, e.g., causes of action in complaint form in §3.48A. Depending on the tenant's circumstances, one or the other of these causes of action may be preferable in a given case. If the action sounds primarily in contract, attorney fees should be available to the prevailing party under CC §1717 (see §13.25). Attorney fees are usually not available in a tort action, although they may be awarded in a tort action if the contract provides for recovery of fees in a tort action or if the plaintiff prevails on underlying issues on a contract cause of action and the contract has an attorney fees provision. See Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 71 CR2d 830.

Thus, the attorney must consider the tenant's potential liability for a substantial attorney fee award if the action is unsuccessful, weighed against the possibility of recovering attorney fees if the action is successful.

If the action sounds in tort, the tenant may be able to recover damages for discomfort and annoyance. See Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 916, 162 CR 194, discussed in §3.38. In some cases, the potential for recovering such damages may be important.

For discussion of tort versus contract theories in litigating mold exposure claims in landlord/tenant situations, see Handling Mold Litigation in California (Cal CEB Action Guide September 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.46A b. Gathering and Preserving Evidence

Before the tenant's attorney decides which course of action or legal remedy is best suited to achieving the goals of getting the repairs made at minimal expense and risk to the tenant, as well as obtaining compensation for the tenant's damages, the attorney should gather and preserve evidence and document the defective conditions and notice to the landlord in the manner described in §§3.27-3.30, 5.10.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.47 c. Availability of Insurance Coverage

Most breach of habitability actions are tendered to the landlord's insurance carrier for defense, whether they are primarily contract or tort actions. The availability of insurance coverage may be an important consideration for the tenant's attorney. If the tenant pleads only intentional torts, however, or seeks to recover punitive damages by alleging that the landlord's conduct was willful, oppressive, or malicious (see §3.40), the insurer will deny coverage, although it might pay for the defense (see §§9.28-9.29). The absence of an insurance carrier deprives the tenant of a potential source of recovery; also, the landlord might become an extremely obdurate opponent and litigate the case aggressively.

Tenants' attorneys must weigh these considerations when deciding what causes of action to allege. If the tenant wants to have the insurer involved for coverage or to promote settlement opportunities, the attorney should consider including a negligence cause of action. If a negligence claim is alleged, the carrier will have a duty to defend as to that cause of action and to defend the suit. See §9.29. See, e.g., MacKinnon v Truck Ins. Exch. (2003) 31 C4th 635, 3 CR3d 228, which held that the "pollution exclusion" provision in a landlord's comprehensive general liability insurance policy will not preclude coverage for the landlord's defense and indemnity in a tenant's suit for injuries from exposure to pesticides negligently applied by the landlord to the premises. See also Golden Eagle Ins. Corp. v Cen-Fed Ltd. (2007) 148 CA4th 976, 56 CR3d 279 (no coverage for judgment for economic loss damages against landlord for breach of lease by failing to keep premises in good condition).

For further discussion on liability insurance, see Sullivan, Landlord Liability Insurance: Why an Old Lease May Need to Learn New Tricks, 26 Cal Real Prop J 22 (Vol 26 No 2, 2008). For discussion and strategies on third party insurance coverage in mold exposure actions, see Handling Mold Litigation in California (Cal CEB Action Guide September 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.48 d. Monetary Versus Equitable Claims

Most breach of warranty of habitability actions are filed after the tenant has vacated the premises, and they thus seek a monetary recovery. Accordingly, many of these cases are not worth a great deal of money, and in some jurisdictions, attorneys often refer tenants to small claims court for redress of their claims.

If the tenant still occupies the premises, it may be possible to pursue causes of action to compel the landlord to make the desired repairs, e.g., an action under CC §1942.4 (see §§3.15A, 3.36), an action to abate a nuisance (see §3.42), or an action to enjoin an unlawful business practice (see §3.42). Compelling repairs and enjoining unlawful business practices are available only in a limited number of cases. Abatement of a nuisance is risky for the tenant, because a trier of fact that finds the premises sufficiently defective to constitute a nuisance might also order them condemned—an outcome that will result in the tenant's ouster from the premises. In an action to abate a nuisance under the Narcotics Nuisance Abatement Act (Health & S C §§11570-11587), relocation assistance may be available to innocent tenants. See §4.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/3 Rights and Duties During Tenancy/§3.48A H. Form: Complaint for Damages for Breach of Warranty of Habitability and Related Torts, Specific Performance, and Injunctive Relief

§3.48A H. Form: Complaint for Damages for Breach of Warranty of Habitability and Related Torts, Specific Performance, and Injunctive Relief

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

_ _[Name of attorney; State Bar number]_ _
_ _[Address]_ _
_ _[Telephone number]_ _
Attorney for Plaintiff(s), _ _[Name(s)]_ _

Superior Court of California, County of _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _[_ _ _ _ _ _ District/Division]_ _
_ _[Limited/Unlimited Civil Case]_ _

_ _[Name(s)]_ _, Plaintiff(s)	)	No. _ _ _ _ _ _
	)
	)	COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES
vs	)	FOR BREACH OF WARRANTY
	)	OF HABITABILITY AND
_ _[Name(s)]_ _, Defendant(s)	)	RELATED TORTS, SPECIFIC )	PERFORMANCE, AND
	)	INJUNCTIVE RELIEF
_____	)

Plaintiff alleges:

FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION
(Damages for Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability by Plaintiff(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _ against Defendant(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _)

1. At all relevant times Plaintiff _ _[name]_ _ is and was an individual residing in the County of _ _ _ _ _ _, State of California.

2. Plaintiff does not know the true names, capacities, or basis for liability of defendants sued in this action as Does I through X, inclusive, and will amend this complaint when the same is ascertained. At all relevant times each defendant, including any defendant fictitiously named, was acting as the agent, servant, employee, partner, or joint venturer of each other defendant in doing the things alleged herein, and is responsible in some manner for the damages claimed herein by the plaintiff.

3. At all relevant times, defendant _ _[name]_ _ and Does I through V, inclusive, were the owners ("defendant owners") of the premises located at _ _[address]_ _ in the City of _ _ _ _ _ _, County of _ _ _ _ _ _, California ("the premises").

4. On or about _ _[date]_ _, plaintiff took possession of an apartment in the premises under a _ _[oral/written]_ _ _ _[month-to-month tenancy agreement/lease for a term of, e.g., one year]_ _ ("agreement"), entered into by plaintiff and defendant owners, and each of them, for a monthly rent of _ _[dollar amount]_ _, payable on the _ _ _ _ _ _ day of each month. _ _[State additional relevant facts, e.g., plaintiff has lived in the premises with four children for the applicable number of years until the present]_ _.

5. On or about _ _[date]_ _, certain defective conditions on the premises began to develop in that _ _[specify each defect and the code provision it violates, e. g., toilet constantly leaked water on the bathroom floor causing foul odors, growth of mold/toxic mold, mildew, and a slippery surface that endangered/seriously affected the health or physical well-being of plaintiff, members of plaintiff's family, and guests; defendants' failure to correct this condition violated Uniform Housing Code section 100(f)]_ _.

6. Defendant owners had actual or constructive knowledge of each defective condition and failed to correct them.

7. The defective conditions were not caused by the wrongful or abnormal use of the premises by plaintiff or anyone acting or present on the premises under plaintiff's authority.

8. By failing to correct the defective conditions, defendant owners breached their contractual warranty of habitability, implied by law into every residential tenancy agreement.

9. As a direct and proximate result of defendant owners' failure to correct the defective conditions, the premises were not habitable and had either reduced or no rental value. During the time the defects existed, plaintiff paid a total of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ as rent to said defendants. Therefore, plaintiff suffered damages measured by (a) the difference between the fair rental value of premises if they had been in the condition as warranted and the fair rental value as it existed with the defective conditions, (b) a percentage reduction of use, i.e., a reduction of plaintiff's rental obligation by the percentage corresponding to the relative reduction of use of the premises caused by the defendant's breach, or (c) any other measure allowed by law, in an amount to be determined by proof at trial.

10. As a direct and proximate result of defendant owners' failure to correct the defective conditions, plaintiff suffered property damage and economic loss as special damages in the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ as follows: _ _[specify, e.g., leaking roof/toilet/shower/sink and resulting moisture and growth of mold/toxic mold damaged plaintiff's carpet, furniture, clothing, and other personal possessions]_ _.

11. The agreement between plaintiff and defendant owners provides that the prevailing party is entitled to recover reasonable attorney fees if litigation is necessary to enforce its terms. Therefore, if plaintiff prevails in this action, plaintiff will be entitled to reasonable attorney fees for prosecuting this action, in an amount to be determined by the Court.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION
(Specific Performance of Rental Agreement/Lease by Plaintiff(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _ against Defendant(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _)

12. Plaintiff incorporates in this cause of action the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 11 of the First Cause of Action.

13. Plaintiff remains in possession of the premises and desires to reside there _ _[indefinitely/until the expiration of the lease term]_ _. The defective conditions continue to exist, and defendant owners do not intend to correct said conditions, as indicated by their _ _[statements/conduct]_ _.

14. The premises are situated in a unique location that provides certain social, educational, and economic benefits to plaintiff and members of plaintiff's family. The premises are plaintiff's home. Relocation would sever plaintiff's and the family's social, educational, and economic ties with their community that cannot be compensated adequately by monetary damages. Moving also would cause plaintiff and the family inconvenience, trauma and disruption of their lives that cannot be compensated adequately by monetary damages.

15. If defendant owners' failure to correct the defective conditions continues, plaintiff will continue to suffer damages as alleged in paragraphs 9-11 and 21, inclusive. Plaintiff will have to bring multiple actions to recover for those damages.

16. The consideration to be paid by plaintiff under the agreement is adequate, and the agreement is just and reasonable as to defendant owners.

17. Because plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law and would be required to bring multiple actions, plaintiff is entitled to an order compelling defendant owners specifically to perform obligations owed under the agreement and the implied warranty of habitability by correcting the defective conditions.

THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION

(Tortious Failure To Provide Habitable Premises by Plaintiff(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _ against Defendant(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _)

18. Plaintiff incorporates in this cause of action the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 10 of the First Cause of Action, except for paragraph 8.

19. At all relevant times, defendant(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _ and Does VI through X, inclusive, ("defendant managers") were acting as agents and representatives of defendant owners in the management of the subject premises, and assumed the responsibility of maintaining the premises in a habitable condition.

20. By failing to correct the defective conditions, defendant owners tortiously breached the warranty of habitability, implied by law into every residential tenancy agreement. Because defendant owners and defendant managers all failed to correct the defective conditions, they each are liable to plaintiff for the nature and the amount of damages set forth in paragraphs 9-10, inclusive.

[Insert one or more of the following damages options]

[Option 1: Fear of future harm; relocation costs]

[21.A.] As a further, direct, and proximate result of the above-described acts and omissions by defendants, plaintiff is in constant fear of imminent harm and has been compelled to change his place of residence _ _[at periodic times/permanently]_ _, from the subject premises to a place of safety at great expense and to pay rent for another dwelling, resulting in damage to plaintiff, the exact amount to be determined by proof at trial.

[Option 2: Discomfort and annoyance; emotional distress]

[21.B.] As a further, direct, and proximate result of the above-described acts and omissions by defendants, plaintiff has suffered discomfort and annoyance and endured mental suffering caused by the fear for his own safety and that of his family. As a result of such injury, plaintiff has sustained damage in an amount to be determined by proof at trial.

[Option 3: Personal injury; emotional distress]

[21.C.] As a further, direct, and proximate result of the above-described acts and omissions by defendants, plaintiff has been hurt and injured in his health, strength, and activity, sustained injury to his body, and endured shock, anxiety, and injury to his nervous system and person, all of which have caused plaintiff great mental, physical, and nervous pain, distress, and suffering. As a result of such injury, plaintiff has sustained damage in an amount according to proof at trial.

[Option 4: Personal injury; medical costs; physical disability]

[21.D.] As a further, direct, and proximate result of the above-described acts and omissions by defendants, plaintiff was required to obtain medical services and treatment and will, in the future, be compelled to incur additional obligations for medical treatment in an amount according to proof at trial. Plaintiff is informed and believes and thereon alleges that he has suffered permanent loss in that _ _[specify nature and degree of permanent health impacts]_ _ as a proximate result of the nuisance created by defendants, the value of such loss to be proved at trial.

[Option 5: Lost wages, past and future]

[21.E.] As a further, direct, and proximate result of the above-described acts and omissions by defendants, plaintiff has suffered a loss of earnings in the past, and plaintiff's earning capacity in the future has been impaired, in monetary amounts to be determined by proof at trial.

[Continue]

22. Said defendants' failure to correct the defective conditions and their conduct in dealing with plaintiff was tortious, knowing, intentional, and willful or was in conscious disregard of the rights of plaintiff(s). Defendant(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _ had full knowledge or should have known of the damage that this failure would cause plaintiff.

23. Furthermore, said defendants' conduct was malicious and oppressive, in that _ _[allege specific facts supporting malice or oppression, such as, said defendants and each of them knew that the municipal building department has inspected the premises and found it violated numerous building and safety codes, and defendants neither informed plaintiff nor undertook any action to remedy the conditions of the premises, despite repeated, separate, and independent requests by plaintiff, who informed defendants in detail that the conditions were causing plaintiff extreme physical inconvenience and severe emotional distress]_ _, and therefore plaintiff is entitled to punitive damages in an amount according to proof.

FOURTH CAUSE OF ACTION
(Damages for Negligence by Plaintiff(s) _ _[*name(s)]_ _ against Defendant(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _)

24. Plaintiff incorporates in this cause of action the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 10 of the First Cause of Action, and paragraphs 19 through 21 of the Third Cause of Action.

25. As a proximate result of said defendants' negligent failure to maintain the premises in a habitable condition, defendants are liable to plaintiff for the nature and the amount of damages set forth in paragraphs 9-10 and 21, inclusive.

FIFTH CAUSE OF ACTION
(Damages for Nuisance by Plaintiff(s) _ _[*name(s)]_ _ against Defendant(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _)

26. Plaintiff incorporates in this cause of action the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 10 of the First Cause of Action, and paragraphs 19 through 23 of the Third Cause of Action.

27. The defective conditions constituted a nuisance, endangering plaintiff's life, limb, health, property, safety, or welfare, and impeding comfortable use of the premises.

28. Defendant owners and managers were required by law to abate the nuisance, but failed to do so. As a direct and proximate result, said defendants are liable to plaintiff for the damages set forth in paragraphs 9-10, 21 and 23, inclusive.

SIXTH CAUSE OF ACTION
(Abatement of Nuisance by Plaintiff(s) _ _[*name(s)]_ _ against Defendant(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _)

29. Plaintiff incorporates in this cause of action the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 10 of the First Cause of Action, 13 through 15 of the Second Cause of Action, paragraphs 19 through 23 of the Third Cause of Action, and paragraphs 27 through 28 of the Fifth Cause of Action.

30. This nuisance continues to exist, and defendant owners and managers have indicated by their statements or actions, or both, that they do not intend to abate it. Unless defendants are enjoined to abate this nuisance, their failure to abate it will continue.

31. Plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law, and thus is entitled to an order compelling defendants to abate the nuisance.

SEVENTH CAUSE OF ACTION
(Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress by Plaintiff(s) _ _[*name(s)]_ _ against Defendant(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _)

32. Plaintiff incorporates in this cause of action the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 10 of the First Cause of Action, 13 through 15 of the Second Cause of Action, paragraphs 19 through 23 of the Third Cause of Action, and paragraphs 27 through 28 of the Fifth Cause of Action.

33. As a direct and proximate result of the failure of defendant owners and managers to correct the defective conditions, and of their conduct in dealing with plaintiff, plaintiff suffered extreme emotional and psychological distress, severe harm, and anguish in that _ _[*specify physical or other manifestations of distress and the extent to which plaintiff's day-to-day physical comfort was affected by the defective conditions of the premises]_ _, all to plaintiff's general damage for the entire period that the defective conditions persisted, in a total amount according to proof.

34. Said defendants' failure to correct the defective conditions and their conduct in dealing with plaintiff was knowing, intentional, and willful, because they had full knowledge or knew with substantial certainty of the extreme emotional and psychological distress, severe harm, and anguish that their conduct would cause plaintiff or any person of ordinary sensitivity. Said conduct was outrageous and intended to cause harm and emotional distress to plaintiff as further set forth in paragraph 35, below.

35. Furthermore, said defendants' conduct was outrageous, intentional, malicious and oppressive, in that _ _[allege specific facts supporting malice or oppression, such as, said defendants and each of them knew that the municipal building department has inspected the premises and found it violated numerous building and safety codes, and defendants neither informed plaintiff nor undertook any action to remedy the conditions of the premises, despite repeated, separate, and independent requests by plaintiff, who informed defendants in detail that the conditions were causing plaintiff extreme physical inconvenience and severe emotional distress]_ _, and therefore plaintiff is entitled to punitive damages in an amount according to proof.

EIGHTH CAUSE OF ACTION
(Damages for Violation of Statutory Warranty by Plaintiff(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _ against Defendant(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _)

36. Plaintiff incorporates in this cause of action the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 10 of the First Cause of Action, 13 through 15 of the Second Cause of Action, paragraphs 19 through 23 of the Third Cause of Action, and paragraphs 27 through 28 of the Fifth Cause of Action.

37. Plaintiff's apartment substantially fails to meet certain standards of habitability established by _ _[e.g., Civil Code §1941.1]_ _, in that _ _[specify each defect and the code provision it violates, e.g., toilet/shower/sink constantly leaked water on the bathroom floor causing foul odors, growth of mold/toxic mold, mildew, and a slippery surface that endangered/seriously affected the health or physical well-being of plaintiff, members of plaintiff's family, and guests; defendants' failure to correct this condition violated Civil Code §1941.1(b) and (c)]_ _. Defendant owners had actual or constructive knowledge of each defective condition, as described in paragraph 38, and failed to correct them.

[Insert one of the following alternatives]

[Alternative 1: Public entity gave notice]

38. On or about _ _[date]_ _, the housing code enforcement department of _ _[e.g., city or county]_ _ sent a written notice to defendant owners requiring repair of the substandard conditions described in paragraph 37. Under Civil Code §1942.4(a), more than 35 days have elapsed since the department sent notice, and said defendants have not repaired the substandard conditions, and their delay in doing so is without good cause.

[Alternative 2: Tenant gave notice]

38. On or about _ _[date]_ _, said defendants and each of them knew that the premises violated numerous building and safety codes, and after that plaintiff made numerous repeated, separate, and independent requests to repair the substandard conditions described in paragraph 37.

[Alternative 3: Both public entity and tenant gave notice]

38. On or about _ _[date]_ _, the housing code enforcement department of _ _[e.g., city or county]_ _ sent a written notice to defendant owners requiring repair of the substandard conditions described in paragraph 37, and plaintiff made numerous repeated, separate, and independent requests to repair them. Under Civil Code §1942.4(a), more than 35 days have elapsed since the department sent notice, and said defendants have not repaired the substandard conditions, and their delay in doing so is without good cause.

[Continue]

39. The substandard conditions were not caused by the lack of ordinary care or a violation of statutory duties on the part of plaintiff.

40. Defendant owners were required by law to repair the conditions, but failed to do so. As a direct and proximate result, said defendants are liable to plaintiff for the damages set forth in paragraphs 9-10 and 21, inclusive. _ _[Add if all statutory Civil Code §1942.4 requirements have been met: Defendants are additionally liable to plaintiff for statutory damages and attorney fees under Civil Code §1942.4(a)-(b)]_ _.

NINTH CAUSE OF ACTION
(Injunction to Abate Violation of Statutory Warranty by Plaintiff(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _ against Defendant(s)

_ _[name(s)]_ _)

41. Plaintiff incorporates in this cause of action the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 10 of the First Cause of Action, 13 through 15 of the Second Cause of Action, paragraphs 19 through 23 of the Third Cause of Action, paragraphs 27 through 28 of the Fifth Cause of Action, and paragraphs 37 through 40 of the Eighth Cause of Action.

42. The substandard conditions continue to exist, constitute a continuing nuisance, and significantly or materially affect the health or safety of plaintiff and plaintiff's family who reside in the premises. Defendant owners have indicated by their statements or actions, or both, that they do not intend to make repairs.

43. Unless defendant owners are ordered to abate the nuisance and repair the substandard conditions, their failure to do so will continue. Plaintiff is entitled to an order compelling said defendants to abate the nuisance and repair the substandard conditions under Civil Code §1942.4(c).

TENTH CAUSE OF ACTION
(Injunction Against Unlawful Business Practice by Plaintiff(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _ against Defendant(s) _ _[name(s)]_ _)

44. Plaintiff incorporates in this cause of action the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 10 of the First Cause of Action, 13 through 15 of the Second Cause of Action, paragraphs 19 through 23 of the Third Cause of Action, paragraphs 27 through 28 of the Fifth Cause of Action, and paragraphs 37 through 40 of the Eighth Cause of Action.

45. Defendant owners own various residential rental properties in _ _ _ _ _ _ County, and are engaged In the business of seeking to rent such premises to the public. Unsafe and unsanitary conditions similar to those alleged above are also present on each of these other properties. Defendants have had actual and constructive knowledge of such conditions and a reasonable time to repair them, but have failed to do so and do not intend to do so. Unless defendants are enjoined from engaging in this practice, they will continue to do so.

46. This failure constitutes an unlawful business practice and unfair competition in violation of California Business and Professions Code §§17200-17209. Therefore, plaintiff is entitled to an order enjoining defendants from continuing to engage in such practice.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff requests judgment as follows:

a. For general damages in the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _;

b. For special damages in the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _;

c. For exemplary damages on the Third, Fifth and Seventh Causes of Action in a sum according to proof;

d. For reasonable attorneys' fees on the First, Second, Eighth, Ninth, and Tenth Causes of Action;

e. On the Second Cause of Action, for an order requiring that defendant owners specifically perform their duty to maintain the premises under the implied warranty of habitability;

f. On the Sixth and Ninth Causes of Action, for an order requiring that defendant owners and managers abate the nuisance and repair the substandard conditions found to exist in the premises;

g. On the Tenth Cause of Action, for an order enjoining defendants from engaging in their unlawful business practice;

h. For statutory damages on the Eighth Cause of Action

i. For costs of this action, and

j. For further relief that the Court considers just and proper.

Dated: _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _[Name of Firm]_ _
By: __[Signature of attorney]__
_ _[Typed name of attorney]_ _
Attorney for Plaintiff _ _[name]_ _

Copies: Original (file in state court when summons issued); copies for service (one for each defendant party); office copy; client copy.

Comment: See Cal Rules of Ct 2.112, which requires each cause of action to be separately numbered, to state the legal theory, and identify each party on whose behalf and against whom the cause of action is asserted. On preparing and serving complaints, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 14-18 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). On captions for court papers, see Civ Proc Before Trial, chap 11.

On litigating mold exposure claims in landlord/tenant situations, see Handling Mold Litigation in California (Cal CEB Action Guide September 2009).

First Cause of Action. A dwelling is uninhabitable if it substantially lacks any of the items listed in CC §§1941.1, 1941.3, including dead bolt locks on all entry doors. For additional lists of actionable defects, see §§3.12, 3.27. If tenant gave notice of defects, or if code violation reports were filed, tenant should so allege in ¶6. Such notice should not be required, however, if landlord otherwise had knowledge of defects. See §3.29. Also, breach of warranty of habitability may be found whether or not landlord had reasonable time to repair. Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 55, 171 CR 707. See §3.30. On damages alleged in ¶10, see Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194. See §§3.38, 3.39. If the lease contains an attorney fee clause for either party (¶11), the party who prevails may recover attorney fees despite the language of the clause. CC §1717(a). See §§3.41, 13.25-13.33, 13.40.

Second Cause of Action. Required elements of a claim for specific performance are discussed in California Real Property Remedies and Damages §§5.6-5.15 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002). The tenant may also allege in ¶14 an inability to move because decent housing is not available. Such an allegation is not, however, a prerequisite to specific performance.

Third Cause of Action. A contract action for breach of warranty of habitability is not the only remedy available against a landlord for failure to repair. The tenant may also sue in tort for damages resulting from breach of warranty and get additional damages for discomfort and annoyance. See Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 913, 162 CR 194; §§3.40, 3.46. The tenant may also recover personal injury and other tort damages. See §§3.67-3.67A.

Tort actions on defective premises may be stated against the landlord's agents in ¶19, when the facts support the allegation. See §3.40; Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 928, 162 CR 194.

On the factual and legal grounds for punitive damages alleged in ¶23, see §§3.40, 3.47. All facts showing malice and oppression should be alleged, e.g., the tenant may have been unable to find other decent housing and the landlord knew of this fact.

Fourth Cause of Action. A tenant may also sue on a negligence theory for damages resulting from uninhabitability. See Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 913, 162 CR 194; §§3.40, 3.47. Including a cause of action for negligence is wise when intentional torts are alleged. Negligence requires a lesser burden of proof and may trigger defense of the action by the landlord's insurer.

Fifth Cause of Action. Defective condition of the premises, depriving the plaintiff of safe, healthy, and comfortable use of the premises, may form the basis for an action for nuisance under CCP §731. See Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 176 CR 112; Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 919, 162 CR 194; Spaulding v Cameron (1954) 127 CA2d 698, 274 P2d 177. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages §§11.2-11.16 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002). See also private right of action for nuisance available under the Narcotics Nuisance Abatement Act (Health & S C §§11570-11587), discussed in §4.44. This cause of action may be modified to assert a public nuisance, such as in Birke v Oakwood Worldwide (2009) 169 CA4th 1540, 87 CR3d 602 (apartment tenant allowed to sue on behalf of daughter, who suffered from childhood asthma and chronic allergies, to abate public nuisance created by owner's failure to limit secondhand smoke in outdoor common areas).

Sixth Cause of Action. See Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 176 CR 112; Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 928, 162 CR 194.

Seventh Cause of Action. See Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 176 CR 112; Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194.

For a discussion of the law supporting the eighth and ninth causes of action, see §§3.15A, 3.36.

Tenth Cause of Action. An action to enjoin any unfair business practice (see Bus & P C §§17200-17209) may be brought by a member of the public on behalf of the public generally. See §3.42; Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 926, 162 CR 194; Barquis v Merchants Collection Ass'n (1972) 7 C3d 94, 101 CR 745.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. ASSIGNMENT AND SUBLETTING

§3.49 A. Transfer of Leasehold Interests

Assignment and subletting are the two common methods of transferring leasehold interests. The rights and obligations of landlord, tenant, and transferee of the interest vary, depending on how the transfer is characterized (see §§3.50-3.55) and on what provision the lease or rental agreement makes for such transfers (see §§3.56-3.59).

In the absence of a lease provision to the contrary (see §3.56), a tenant has the right to transfer the leasehold interest either by assignment (Kassan v Stout (1973) 9 C3d 39, 106 CR 783) or by sublease (Chandler v Hart (1911) 161 C 405, 414, 119 P 516). See also Little v Guadron (1986) 187 CA3d Supp 1, 4, 232 CR 516. The same rule applies to commercial leases. CC §1995.210(b). When a residential lease provides that the tenant may assign the tenancy, or sublet any portion of the premises, only with the landlord's consent, arguably that consent may be refused only when the landlord has a reasonable objection to the proposed assignment or subletting. See Kendall v Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 220 CR 818. (On commercial leases, see CC §§1995.240-1995.270 and Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 24 (Cal CEB 1996). See also California Eviction Defense Manual §19.9 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).) A lease may, however, preclude assignment and subletting altogether. 40 C3d at 499 (citing Restatement (Second) of Property §15.2(2) (1977)); see CC §1995.230 (commercial leases).

PRACTICE TIP: In rent-controlled jurisdictions, many landlords' attorneys advise their clients to prohibit assignment and subletting in their rental agreements so that tenants will be unable to transfer their rights under the agreement as a method of avoiding vacancy decontrol provisions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.50 B. Assignment and Subletting Distinguished

Whether a transfer is characterized as an assignment or a subletting may have significant consequences in terms of the rights and obligations of the parties. See §§3.51-3.55. The form of the transfer and the label given it by the parties are not determinative; the legal character of the transfer is determined by its substance and effect. Williams v Hinckley (1930) 109 CA 574, 293 P 644; Kendis v Cohn (1928) 90 CA 41, 265 P 844.

The distinction between an assignment and a sublease turns on the extent of the interest transferred. An assignment is the transfer of the entire unexpired interest in the leasehold with no reversionary interest remaining in the transferor. Hartman Ranch Co. v Associated Oil Co. (1937) 10 C2d 232, 73 P2d 1163; Reed v South Shore Foods, Inc. (1964) 229 CA2d 705, 40 CR 575. A transfer is not an assignment if it includes only a portion of the remaining term (Ericksen v Rhee (1919) 181 C 562, 185 P 847; Jordan v Scott (1918) 38 CA 739, 177 P 504) or if the transferor reserves a right of reentry (Hartman Ranch Co. v Associated Oil Co., supra). Consequently, a sublease is a transfer of less than the entire remaining leasehold interest. Thus, if the transferor retains a right of reversion (Williams v Hinckley, supra) or transfers an interest in only a portion of the premises (Ericksen v Rhee, supra), the transfer is a sublease and not an assignment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.51 C. Effect of Transfer

The effect of a transfer of a leasehold interest is determined by the laws governing a conveyance of an interest in real property, as well as by the terms of the lease agreement. As discussed in §§3.52-3.55, a transfer of the leasehold interest affects the rights and obligations of all the parties.

A valid assignment (i.e., a transfer of the tenant's entire interest (see §3.50)) terminates the privity of estate that existed between landlord and tenant. Barkhaus v Producers Fruit Co. (1923) 192 C 200, 219 P 435; Gilman v Nemetz (1962) 203 CA2d 81, 21 CR 317. By itself, the assignment has no effect on the privity of contract between the landlord and the tenant-transferor (see Samuels v Ottinger (1915) 169 C 209, 146 P 638; Schehr v Berkey (1913) 166 C 157, 135 P 41), although related events such as the assignee's assumption of the transferor's obligations under the lease, or the landlord's release of the transferor from all obligations under the lease (see §§3.52-3.55), will affect the terms and continued existence of the contractual relationship between the landlord and the original tenant. When an assignee takes possession of the premises, privity of estate is created between the landlord and the assignee. Realty & Rebuilding Co. v Rea (1920) 184 C 565, 194 P 1024; Samuels v Ottinger, supra; K & M, Inc. v LeCuyer (1951) 107 CA2d 710, 238 P2d 28. Without a new contractual arrangement, however, there is no privity of contract between the landlord and the assignee. Bonetti v Treat (1891) 91 C 223, 27 P 612.

Because a sublessor retains a reversionary interest in the leasehold estate (see §3.50), the subletting alone terminates neither privity of estate nor privity of contract between the landlord and the sublessor. Hartman Ranch Co. v Associated Oil Co. (1937) 10 C2d 232, 73 P2d 1163; Webb v Jones (1927) 88 CA 20, 263 P 538. There is no privity of estate between the landlord and the sublessee because the sublessee is merely in possession of the premises for the sublessor. Johnson v Couch (1961) 189 CA2d 687, 11 CR 645. If the sublessee assumes the tenant's obligations under the lease, however, courts treat the landlord as a third party beneficiary of the assumption agreement (Hartman Ranch Co. v Associated Oil Co., supra), and the sublessee as a third party beneficiary of the lease agreement (Marchese v Standard Realty & Dev. Co. (1977) 74 CA3d 142, 141 CR 370; see also Cordonier v Central Shopping Plaza Assocs. (1978) 82 CA3d 991, 147 CR 558).

Although concepts of privity of estate and privity of contract are somewhat archaic, they retain importance because they affect the rights and obligations that exist among the landlord, tenant, and assignee or subtenant. See §§3.52-3.55.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Rights and Liabilities Following Transfer

1. Assignment

§3.52 a. Assignee and Landlord

The assignee's relationship to the landlord is based on the privity of estate that is created by the assignment. See §3.51; Realty & Rebuilding Co. v Rea (1920) 184 C 565, 194 P 1024; K & M, Inc. v LeCuyer (1951) 107 CA2d 710, 238 P2d 28. The assignee succeeds to all the tenant's interest in the leasehold estate (Scheerer v Goodwin (1899) 125 C 154, 57 P 789), and to the benefit of all covenants and agreements of the landlord that run with the land (CC §§1460-1471; Laffan v Naglee (1858) 9 C 662). Most leasehold covenants run with the land. See Laffan v Naglee, supra. Thus, the assignee may enforce against the landlord those rights that attach because of privity of estate and may enforce covenants of the lease such as covenants of warranty and quiet enjoyment. CC §§1462-1463. Moreover, the tenant (and therefore the tenant's assignee) is expressly given power to enforce the terms of the lease agreement against the landlord and the landlord's assignees, except for covenants against encumbrances or covenants relating to title or possession of the premises. CC §823.

By virtue of privity of estate, the landlord can enforce against the assignee all covenants implied by law and running with the land, including the covenant to pay rent. CC §§822, 1463; Realty & Rebuilding Co. v Rea, supra; Ericksen v Rhee (1919) 181 C 562, 185 P 847. No privity of contract is created by an assignment, however, and the assignee is bound only by obligations that arise from actual possession or privity of estate. Realty & Rebuilding Co. v Rea, supra. The assignee's obligations continue only during his or her occupancy, and terminate on abandonment of possession or reassignment of the lease. Hartman Ranch Co. v Associated Oil Co. (1937) 10 C2d 232, 73 P2d 1163; Realty & Rebuilding Co. v Rea, supra. If the assignee expressly assumes the tenant's obligations under the lease, however, the landlord is viewed as a third party beneficiary of that assumption, and the assignee becomes liable to the landlord for covenants such as payment of rent for the lease term. Realty & Rebuilding Co. v Rea, supra; Rosenkranz v Pellin (1950) 99 CA2d 650, 222 P2d 249.

Because a covenant to pay rent is a covenant running with the land (Salisbury v Shirley (1884) 66 C 223, 5 P 104), the landlord can recover rent from the assignee by virtue of the privity of estate between them for as long as the assignee remains in possession of the premises. Timm v Brown (1947) 78 CA2d 609, 178 P2d 10; Salisbury v Shirley, supra. The assignee's liability to the landlord for rent is not released by payment of rent to the assignor. Jordan v Scott (1918) 38 CA 739, 177 P 504. Because the obligation to pay rent arises from privity of estate between assignee and landlord, the assignee is not liable for rent accruing after he or she surrenders possession of the premises, unless the assignee has expressly assumed the lease obligations or otherwise covenanted to pay rent. Treff v Gulko (1932) 214 C 591, 7 P2d 697.

Whatever remedies the landlord has against the original tenant for breach of a lease agreement or for recovery of possession also exist against the assignees of the tenant for any cause of action accruing while they were assignees. CC §822.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.53 b. Assignor and Landlord

The assignor does not escape liability to the landlord merely by assigning the leasehold interest; privity of contract between the landlord and the tenant-assignor continues even though privity of estate terminates on assignment. See Peiser v Mettler (1958) 50 C2d 594, 328 P2d 953; De Hart v Allen (1945) 26 C2d 829, 161 P2d 453; Samuels v Ottinger (1915) 169 C 209, 146 P 638. The assignor's liability continues to the expiration of the lease term even when the landlord accepts the assignment and the assignee assumes the lease obligations. Peiser v Mettler, supra; De Hart v Allen, supra; Munzinger v Caffrey (1942) 49 CA2d 180, 121 P2d 13. The assignor is relieved of liability under the lease only if the landlord agrees to rescind the original lease and enter into a new agreement with the assignee (see Douglas v Schindler (1930) 209 C 616, 289 P 625), or to release the assignor from liability (see Beckjord v Slusher (1937) 22 CA2d 559, 71 P2d 820). The assignor's liability extends only to cover the original lease term; the assignor is not liable for any period that the assignee holds over after the lease term. Meredith v Dardarian (1978) 83 CA3d 248, 147 CR 761.

The assignor's continued liability most often arises in connection with the issue of payment of rent. The assignor's obligation to pay rent survives an assignment by virtue of privity of contract, even if the landlord accepts rent from the assignee. Schehr v Berkey (1913) 166 C 157, 135 P 41. See also Triest & Co. v Goldstone (1916) 173 C 240, 159 P 715. The assignee becomes a surety for the rent obligation to the assignor, but the assignor remains the primary obligor for the payment of rent to the landlord. De Hart v Allen, supra. Thus, if the assignee defaults in payment of rent, the assignor is liable to the landlord (along with the assignee; see §3.52), but also has a right of action against the assignee for reimbursement of any amounts actually paid to the landlord.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Subletting

§3.54 a. Sublessee and Landlord

Neither the sublessee nor the landlord can enforce the covenants of the lease against the other merely by force of the sublease. Hartman Ranch Co. v Associated Oil Co. (1937) 10 C2d 232, 73 P2d 1163; Webb v Jones (1927) 88 CA 20, 263 P 538.

If the sublessee expressly assumes the original tenant's obligations under the lease and the landlord accepts the sublease, however, then both the landlord and the sublessee can enforce the lease covenants against each other. The landlord is treated as a third party beneficiary of the assumption agreement (Hartman Ranch Co. v Associated Oil Co., supra), and the sublessee is treated as a third party beneficiary of the lease agreement (Marchese v Standard Realty & Dev. Co. (1977) 74 CA3d 142, 141 CR 370; see also Cordonier v Central Shopping Plaza Assocs. (1978) 82 CA3d 991, 147 CR 558).

Thus, the landlord has no right of action against the sublessee for rent unless the sublessee has expressly assumed the covenants of the lease or a third party beneficiary contract has been created. Lesser v Pomin (1934) 3 CA2d 117, 39 P2d 451; City Inv. Co. v Pringle (1925) 73 CA 782, 239 P 302. See also Dorcich v Time Oil Co. (1951) 103 CA2d 677, 230 P2d 10.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.55 b. Sublessor and Landlord

A sublease does not terminate the mutual obligations of the sublessor and the landlord; they remain in privity of contract and privity of estate. Hartman Ranch Co. v Associated Oil Co. (1937) 10 C2d 232, 73 P2d 1163. Thus, the sublessor remains liable for rent under an express covenant despite the landlord's acceptance of rent from and acknowledgment of the sublessee. Brosnan v Kramer (1901) 135 C 36, 66 P 979. The sublessor may also be liable in damages to the landlord for the sublessee's improper use of the premises. Smith v United Crude Oil Co. (1919) 179 C 570, 178 P 141. Conversely, the sublessor may maintain an action for damages against the landlord for wrongfully evicting the sublessee in breach of the covenants of the lease. Haddad v McDowell (1933) 131 CA 565, 21 P2d 616.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/3 Rights and Duties During Tenancy/ E. Restricting Transfer of Leasehold Interests/§3.56 1. Lease Covenants Restricting Transfer

E. Restricting Transfer of Leasehold Interests

§3.56 1. Lease Covenants Restricting Transfer

A lease or rental agreement may prohibit assignment or subletting absolutely or may condition the exercise of the right to sublet on the landlord's prior written approval. If the landlord's consent must be obtained, such consent may not be withheld unreasonably. Carma Developers (Cal.), Inc. v Marathon Dev. Cal., Inc. (1992) 2 C4th 342, 6 CR2d 467; Kendall v Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 220 CR 818. After the Carma and Kendall decisions, the legislature adopted CC §§1995.010-1995.340 to specify the conditions under which assignment and subletting may be restricted in commercial leases. See Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 24 (Cal CEB 1996). See also California Eviction Defense Manual §19.9 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

For examples of lease provisions, see §1.54; for discussion of judicial construction of such provisions, see §§3.58, 14.50.

PRACTICE TIPS:

- To avoid liability, residential landlords, like their commercial counterparts, often specify the conditions under which an assignment will be approved and what steps a tenant must take to secure that approval. Such clauses often further provide that if the tenant fails either to follow the set procedure or to meet the standards and conditions set forth in the rental agreement, any denial of consent will be considered to have been reasonable.
- When a tenant has filed a petition for relief in bankruptcy (see chap 14), restrictions on lease assignment may be disregarded by the bankruptcy court in approving a lease assignment under certain circumstances (see §14.50).
- In rent-controlled jurisdictions, many landlords' attorneys advise their clients to prohibit assignment and subletting in their rental agreements so that tenants will be unable to transfer their rights under the agreement as a method of avoiding vacancy decontrol provisions.

Because of their restrictive nature, covenants limiting assignment and subletting are strictly construed against the landlord. Karbelnig v Brothwell (1966) 244 CA2d 333, 53 CR 335; Licht v Gallatin (1927) 84 CA 240, 257 P 914. Thus, for example, a covenant against assignment is not breached by a sublease or an assignment of a sublease given by the original tenant. Cross v Bouck (1917) 175 C 253, 165 P 702. Similarly, there is no breach of a covenant against subletting when a mortgage is placed on the leasehold (Chapman v Great W. Gypsum Co. (1932) 216 C 420, 14 P2d 758), or when one tenant assigns the lease to a cotenant (Buck v Cardwell (1958) 161 CA2d 830, 327 P2d 223). Neither is transfer of equity interests in a business enterprise prohibited by such a covenant. Ser-Bye Corp. v C.P. & G. Markets (1947) 78 CA2d 915, 179 P2d 342 (sale of tenant's corporate shares); Richardson v La Rancherita (1979) 98 CA3d 73, 159 CR 285 (sale of partnership interest).

A restriction against assignment or subletting is a personal covenant and does not run with the land (i.e., it binds only the original tenant, and not an assignee or sublessee, unless there is an express provision to that effect). Crowell v City of Riverside (1938) 26 CA2d 566, 80 P2d 120; Kendis v Cohn (1928) 90 CA 41, 265 P 844.

PRACTICE TIP: If the tenant wrongfully attempts to assign or sublease the premises, the landlord may serve a 3-day notice to perform a covenant of the lease or quit on the original tenant and on any subtenant in actual possession. CCP §1161. If the tenant and subtenant fail to comply with the notice, the landlord may file an unlawful detainer action.

In Carma Developers (Cal.), Inc. v Marathon Dev. Cal., Inc. (1992) 2 C4th 342, 6 CR2d 467, the California Supreme Court ruled that a recapture provision in a commercial lease, under which the lessor might terminate the leasehold on the lessee's request for permission to sublet or assign, was not an unreasonable restraint on alienation or a prohibited restriction on transfer. Carma appears to be limited to commercial tenancies. See also Ilkhchooyi v Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 45 CR2d 766, in which the court held unconscionable a clause that entitled a commercial landlord to 75 percent profits from a covenant not to compete on a sale of the tenant's business and subsequent assignment of the lease.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.57 2. Waiver of Covenant

An assignment executed in breach of a covenant against assignment is not void, but merely voidable; the leasehold passes to the assignee or sublessee subject to the landlord's right to declare a forfeiture of the lease. Karbelnig v Brothwell (1966) 244 CA2d 333, 53 CR 335; Randol v Tatum (1893) 98 C 390, 33 P 433. The covenant is for the landlord's benefit (Taylor v Odell (1942) 50 CA2d 115, 122 P2d 919), and it may be waived by the landlord (Spangler v Spangler (1909) 11 CA 321, 104 P 995). The landlord's right to declare a forfeiture has been considered waived under the following circumstances:

(a) The landlord did not object at the time of assignment, and demanded rent of the assignee and sued to recover it (Spangler v Spangler, supra);

(b) The landlord permitted the assignee to enter the premises and remain in possession (Buchanan v Banta (1928) 204 C 73, 266 P 547); and

(c) The landlord accepted rent from the tenant (Goodwin v Grosse (1922) 56 CA 615, 206 P 138) or the assignee (Trubowitch v Riverbank Canning Co. (1947) 30 C2d 335, 182 P2d 182).

The landlord must have actual knowledge of the assignment or sublease in order for there to be a waiver. German-American Sav. Bank v Gollmer (1909) 155 C 683, 102 P 932.

The perennial problem of determining when the landlord has waived the right to object to an assignee or sublessee was addressed for rent control jurisdictions by the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535). As provided in CC §1954.53(d)(4):

> Acceptance of rent by the owner shall not operate as a waiver or otherwise prevent enforcement of a covenant prohibiting sublease or assignment or a waiver of an owner's rights to establish the initial rental rate unless the owner has received written notice from the tenant that is party to the agreement and thereafter accepted rent.

For further discussion of the Act's effect on assignment and subletting, see §§3.58A, 4.40-4.40B, 7.25-7.28. See also Cobb v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2002) 98 CA4th 345, 119 CR2d 741, discussed in §§7.25, 7.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.58 3. Landlord's Withholding of Consent

When a lease provides that the tenant may assign his or her interest, or sublet any portion of the premises only with the landlord's consent, that consent may be refused only when the landlord has a reasonable objection to the proposed assignment or subletting. Kendall v Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 220 CR 818. Although the holding in Kendall was partly codified and partly limited with respect to commercial leases (see CC §§1995.210-1995.270), arguably the decision still applies in residential tenancies, which enjoy protection under the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing equally with commercial tenancies. See authorities cited in §3.75.

When a commercial lease provision does not prohibit outright assignment or subletting but requires the landlord's consent, the lease may specify an express standard or condition for withholding consent, but if no standard is expressed, the landlord may not unreasonably withhold consent. CC §§1995.240-1995.260. For full discussion of this issue in commercial tenancies, see Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 24 (Cal CEB 1996); California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 19 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

Whether the landlord's withholding of consent is reasonable is a question of fact to be determined by an examination of the circumstances surrounding the transfer. See Reuling v Sergeant (1949) 93 CA2d 241, 208 P2d 1046; Bedford Inv. Co. v Folb (1947) 79 CA2d 363, 180 P2d 361; Richardson v La Rancherita (1979) 98 CA3d 73, 159 CR 285. See also Ilkhchooyi v Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 45 CR2d 766.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.58A 4. Subleasing in Jurisdictions With Rent Control

In tight housing markets with rapidly escalating rents, landlords owning rent-controlled buildings often face a problem with tenants attempting to pass on their rent-controlled apartments. Additionally, tenants in larger rent-controlled units who need roommates to meet the rent, and who cannot readily move to smaller quarters because of high rents, often have a succession of individuals who move in and out of the unit. These situations often present problems for landlords who have difficulty controlling who is living in a building and ascertaining when they have obtained a "vacant" or decontrolled unit.

The Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535) was adopted in 1995. The Act outlawed vacancy control and included provisions regarding subleasing in order for landlords to determine when they have the right to raise the rent beyond the controls established by the local agency.

In particular, CC §1954.53(d) states that no law may prohibit a lease or rental agreement from establishing the rental rates if the unit is sublet. In addition, it provides: "Where the original occupant or occupants who took possession of the dwelling or unit pursuant to the rental agreement with the owner no longer permanently reside there, an owner may increase the rent by any amount allowed by this section to a lawful sublessee or assignee who did not reside at the dwelling or unit prior to January 1, 1996." The section then provides that this right does not apply to partial changes in occupancies where an original occupant who entered into the original lease agreement with the owner remains in possession. In addition, the section further provides that acceptance of rent does not constitute a waiver of the owner's right to set a new rent level unless the original tenant who was an actual party to the original rental agreement gave written notice to the owner and the owner thereafter accepted rent. The wording of the section is not clear as to the party from whom rent must be accepted. Because an owner cannot prohibit a sublease when there is no prohibition against subleasing in the rental agreement, and because §1954.53(d) does not deal with evictions, it seems that the only reasonable interpretation of this language is that the rent that must be accepted (for there to be a waiver) must be rent paid by the subtenant.

On the effect of the Costa-Hawkins Act on an unauthorized rent increase in a rent-controlled jurisdiction after the landlord has accepted rent from the subtenant, see Cobb v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2002) 98 CA4th 345, 119 CR2d 741, cited in §§7.25, 7.28. See also landlord drafting tips in §4.40B.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.59 5. Interaction With CC §1951.4 Remedy

Under CC §1951.4, the landlord may continue the lease in effect even though the tenant has breached the lease and abandoned the property, and hold the tenant responsible for rent due under the lease as it comes due, if the lease allows the tenant to assign or sublet the premises, subject to reasonable standards or with the landlord's reasonable consent. CC §1951.4(b)(1)-(3). For detailed discussion, see §8.15. Thus, if the landlord wishes to use the CC §1951.4 remedy, the lease must contain such a covenant and the landlord must not terminate the tenant's right to possession. For further discussion, see Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 24 (Cal CEB 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.59A F. Effect of Tenant Bankruptcy on Lease Assignment

The Bankruptcy Code may preempt many of the contractual and state law provisions on assignment and restrictions on assignment of leases. For discussion, see §§14.35, 14.43, 14.49-14.52.

© The Regents of the University of California

VI. EXTENSION AND RENEWAL OF LEASE

§3.60 A. Tenant's Right to Extend or Renew

A tenant has no absolute right to extend or renew a lease (Ferry v McNeil (1963) 214 CA2d 411, 29 CR 577) and is normally obligated to surrender the premises on expiration of the specified lease term (Coburn v Goodall (1887) 72 C 498, 14 P 190; Schilling v Holmes (1863) 23 C 227). Such a right may be created, however, by a covenant or condition in the lease (see §§3.61-3.63) or by the conduct of the landlord and tenant after expiration of the lease term (see §§3.65-3.66).

The courts distinguish between extension and renewal. Extension is the continuation in time of the original lease, "stretching" or "spreading out" the term of the original lease. Burroughs v Ben's Auto Park, Inc. (1945) 27 C2d 449, 164 P2d 897; Smith v Arthur D. Little, Inc. (1969) 276 CA2d 391, 81 CR 140. A renewal, on the other hand, creates a new and distinct tenancy. Burroughs v Ben's Auto Park, Inc., supra; Smith v Arthur D. Little, Inc., supra. Neither extension nor renewal interrupts possession under the original lease. When a renewal is executed before expiration of the original term, the tenant is entitled to continuous possession. Reynolds v McEwen (1952) 111 CA2d 540, 244 P2d 961.

Option to extend provisions may be unenforceable if another clause in the lease governs the circumstances. See, e.g., 11382 Beach Partnership v Libaw (1999) 70 CA4th 212, 82 CR2d 533 (premises destroyed by fire; cancellation provision in lease prevailed over tenant's option to extend term).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Covenants to Extend or Renew

§3.61 1. Legal Requirements

Covenants or options to extend or renew leases are very common. See Glenn v Bacon (1927) 86 CA 58, 260 P 559. They need not be set forth in the lease itself (Braun v Leo G. McLaughlin Co. (1928) 93 CA 116, 269 P 191), and they may be entered into after execution of the original lease (see, e.g., Bard v Kent (1942) 19 C2d 449, 122 P2d 8).

In a lease that will be extended or renewed for more than one year, the covenant or option falls within the statute of frauds (CC §1624) and therefore must be in writing. If the option or covenant is executed after execution of the original lease, it must be supported by new consideration (Bard v Kent, supra); if incorporated in the lease, it should be supported by the consideration for the lease.

Any ambiguity or uncertainty in the renewal provisions will be construed against the author of the renewal language, usually the landlord, who will be considered responsible for the uncertainty. Buck v Cardwell (1958) 161 CA2d 830, 327 P2d 223; Erickson v Boothe (1947) 79 CA2d 266, 179 P2d 611. Whether the provision will be interpreted as made for renewal or extension is determined by the parties' intentions (Smith v Arthur D. Little, Inc. (1969) 276 CA2d 391, 81 CR 140), and not by the technical meanings of the terms (Howell v City of Hamburg Co. (1913) 165 C 172, 131 P 130). The provision must be enforceable; one that is indefinite or uncertain will be considered void. Ablett v Clauson (1954) 43 C2d 280, 272 P2d 753; Morrison v Rossignol (1855) 5 C 64. If the covenant does not specify the terms of the extension or renewal, the terms of the original lease are presumed to apply. Such a covenant has been held sufficiently definite and certain to be enforceable. Penilla v Gerstenkorn (1927) 86 CA 668, 261 P 488. A covenant that provides an ascertainable standard for determining the rent for the extension or renewal period will be held to be sufficiently definite, and the court will fix the amount of rent if the parties do not. Chaney v Schneider (1949) 92 CA2d 88, 206 P2d 669.

Unless otherwise clearly stated in the lease, a provision for extension or renewal will be construed as being exercisable only once. Becker v Submarine Oil Co. (1921) 55 CA 698, 204 P 245. The courts have usually upheld and enforced provisions giving the tenant the right to perpetual renewal of the lease. Fisher v Parsons (1963) 213 CA2d 829, 29 CR 210; Becker v Submarine Oil Co., supra. The preferred view seems to be that a perpetual renewal provision does not create perpetuities problems because the lease vests in all respects on its execution, and rights under it (although exercisable in the future) do not have the characteristics of a contingent or future estate. See Fisher v Parsons, supra. But see Shaver v Clanton (1994) 26 CA4th 568, 31 CR2d 595 (commercial lease with perpetual options to renew construed to be limited to 99 years and thus not to violate the rule against perpetuities).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.62 2. Exercise of Election to Renew

A lease provision for extension or renewal usually requires that the tenant give notice of the election to renew. See, e.g., Howell v City of Hamburg Co. (1913) 165 C 172, 131 P 130. The tenant must give notice of intent to renew in unequivocal and unqualified terms. Hayward Lumber & Inv. Co. v Construction Prods. Corp. (1953) 117 CA2d 221, 255 P2d 473.

Courts require rather strict compliance with the terms of the lease on matters such as giving notice before expiration of the original term in the manner and on the terms specified in the lease. Simons v Young (1979) 93 CA3d 170, 155 CR 460 (lawyer-tenant barred from renewing for not giving notice within the required 90 days from expiration of term despite improvements made in converting apartments to law offices); Hayward Lumber & Inv. Co. v Construction Prods. Corp., supra. If the lease does not specify the manner in which the option to renew may be exercised, any reasonable conduct that communicates to the landlord the tenant's intent to renew is sufficient. See Cicinelli v Iwasaki (1959) 170 CA2d 58, 338 P2d 1005.

When a lease does not require the tenant to give notice of an intent to exercise an option to renew, the tenant's continuing in possession after the end of the original lease term shows that intent. ADV Corp. v Wikman (1986) 178 CA3d 61, 223 CR 262. However, when the lease requires the tenant to give notice to exercise an option to renew and the tenant fails to do so, the fact that the tenant has made substantial improvements to the property just before the option date does not satisfy the notice requirement or entitle the tenant to equitable relief. Bekins Moving & Storage Co. v Prudential Ins. Co. (1985) 176 CA3d 245, 221 CR 738. Bekins illustrates the importance of precisely complying with the terms of the option.

Unless the lease specifies otherwise, exercise of an option to renew is effective when the tenant deposits it in the mail. Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 113 CR 705. When a lease requires a notice of exercise of option to be sent by certified mail and the tenant complies with the lease by sending a certified letter in the mail, the tenant cannot be held responsible for loss of the letter by the post office. Jenkins v Tuneup Masters (1987) 190 CA3d 1, 235 CR 214. The court reasoned that when there is actual receipt by the mail carrier, the notice has been properly sent. At that point the risk of loss falls on the landlord.

Under certain favorable facts, a court may exercise its equitable power to hold that a new term has vested despite the tenant's failure to comply literally with the requirements of the lease. See Streicher v Heimburge (1928) 205 C 675, 272 P 290. In Leonhardi-Smith, Inc. v Cameron (1980) 108 CA3d 42, 166 CR 135, the court held that the tenants effectively had renewed their lease despite their technical noncompliance with a lease provision requiring them to give written notice more than 90 days before expiration of the term. The tenants had given oral notice more than 90 days before expiration, and written notice within the 90-day period. The landlord had accepted rent from them and knew that they were making substantial improvements to the premises.

When the tenant's right to renew depends on performance of conditions or covenants in the lease, nonperformance or breach of those conditions defeats the right to renew. Swift v Occidental Mining & Petroleum Co. (1903) 141 C 161, 74 P 700; Behrman v Barto (1880) 54 C 131. A tenant is not entitled to renew when he or she is in default in rent even if payment is not an express condition of renewal. Payment of rent is an implied condition that must be satisfied before an option to renew can be exercised. Nork v Pacific Coast Med. Enters. (1977) 73 CA3d 410, 140 CR 734.

An option to renew usually can be exercised by an assignee of the tenant (Spangler v Spangler (1909) 11 CA 321, 104 P 995; Penilla v Gerstenkorn (1927) 86 CA 668, 261 P 488), but not by a subtenant (Ablett v Clauson (1954) 43 C2d 280, 272 P2d 753). Even an assignee may not be able to exercise the option if the right to renew is limited to the tenant named in the lease. Standard Oil Co. v Slye (1913) 164 C 435, 129 P 589.

Options to renew are specifically enforceable. Mitchell v Exhibition Foods, Inc. (1986) 184 CA3d 1033, 229 CR 535. On the remedy of specific performance, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 5 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.63 3. Automatic Renewal; Required Language in Lease (CC §1945.5)

Some leases provide for automatic renewal or extension for all or part of the full term of the lease if the tenant remains in possession after expiration of the specified term or fails to give notice of intent not to renew before the expiration date. Under such a provision, the tenant has the burden of preventing renewal and remains bound by the covenants of the lease, including the obligation to pay rent (as opposed to damages in the form of reasonable rental value). Shenson v Shenson (1954) 124 CA2d 747, 269 P2d 170.

Many leases provide that the tenants must give notice to the landlord of their intent not to renew the lease, usually 30 days before the lease's expiration date, and that the lease will continue on a month-to-month basis thereafter. The tenant's failure to provide this notice would cause the tenant to be liable to the landlord for any damages incurred as a result of the breach. Tenant attorneys could argue that these provisions are voidable if they do not comply with the automatic renewal provisions outlined in CC §1945.5.

To be binding, an automatic renewal provision must be printed in at least eight-point boldface type where it appears in a residential lease. The lease must also contain an eight-point boldface statement above the tenant's signature line that the automatic renewal provision appears in the body of the lease. CC §1945.5. Without these protections, the lease is voidable by the party who did not prepare it (usually the tenant), and any attempted waiver of these protections is void as against public policy. CC §1945.5. If the required provisos are included in the lease in the manner specified, the presumption of CC §1945 applies (i.e., that the parties have renewed the lease on the same terms). CC §1945.5. See §3.62.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.64 C. Holding Over

The tenant must surrender the premises to the landlord on expiration of the lease term. A tenant who holds over without the landlord's consent is a tenant at sufferance (Colyear v Tobriner (1936) 7 C2d 735, 742, 62 P2d 741; Moon v Marker (1938) 26 CA2d 33, 37, 78 P2d 460). When the tenant holds over without permission, the landlord may bring an unlawful detainer action (see chaps 9-13) without serving a termination notice (see chap 8) or taking any other action to terminate the tenancy. CCP §1161(1); Lee Chuck v Quan Wo Chong & Co. (1891) 91 C 593, 28 P 45; Ryland v Appelbaum (1924) 70 CA 268, 233 P 356.

If the tenant holds over after expiration of the term and the landlord accepts rent from the tenant, it is presumed that they have renewed the rental on the same terms and for the same length of time (not to exceed 1 month, if rent is payable monthly, or in any case 1 year) as under the original lease. CC §1945. A hiring of real property for an unspecified term is legally construed as being renewed on the same terms at the end of the term implied by law. CC §§1946, 1946.1.

Thus, the duration of a tenancy implied from a holding over is determined by the rental period. Skaggs v Elkus (1872) 45 C 154; Blumenberg v Myres (1867) 32 C 93. For example, if the rent was payable monthly under the lease, the new tenancy implied from acceptance of rent is from month to month (Renner v Huntington-Hawthorne Oil & Gas Co. (1952) 39 C2d 93, 244 P2d 895), or a renewal for 1 month (Kaye v M'Divani (1935) 6 CA2d 132, 44 P2d 371). But see The City v Hart (1985) 175 CA3d 92, 220 CR 349 (CC §1945 implies landlord's consent to new tenancy only when landlord accepts rent after expiration of term; landlord's acceptance before expiration of term, of rent that covered periods both before and after expiration, did not create new tenancy when landlord had claim against funds for other payments due under lease and had told tenant lease would not be extended).

When the landlord refuses to renew or accept rent during a holdover period, there is no presumption of a renewal under CC §1945. Swithenbank v Wood (1929) 99 CA 341, 278 P 496. A mere holding over, without acceptance of rent or other conduct of the landlord from which acceptance can be inferred, does not renew the tenancy. Canning v Fibush (1888) 77 C 196, 19 P 376.

If the lease contains an express renewal provision, that provision controls and the CC §1945 presumption does not apply. Vavuris v Pinelli (1957) 147 CA2d 390, 305 P2d 149; Hull v Laugharn (1934) 3 CA2d 310, 39 P2d 478. For discussion of automatic renewal provisions, see §3.61.

© The Regents of the University of California

VII. CHANGING TERMS OF TENANCY

A. Periodic Tenancy

§3.65 1. 30-day Notice of Change in Terms

Methods of modifying the terms of a periodic tenancy are governed by statute. Stoppelkamp v Mangeot (1871) 42 C 316. Under CC §827(a), the landlord may change the terms of a periodic tenancy by giving notice in writing of the change to the tenant, to take effect at the end of a period at least as long as the term of the tenancy itself. In most situations for a month-to-month tenancy, the notice must take effect "at the expiration of not less than 30 days," but the lease or rental agreement may provide that notice changing the terms of the tenancy may be given not less than 7 days before the expiration of the term, to take effect on expiration of the term. If a state or federal regulation, or a contract, provides for a longer period of notice of a rent increase, however, the notice must be served according to the longer period. CC §827(c).

The method of serving a 30-day notice changing the terms of a tenancy varies, depending on the exact nature of the notice. Under CC §827(b)(1)-(2), the notice of a rent increase (of 10 percent or less) for a residential tenancy may be given by either of the following:

- Personal delivery to the tenant; or
- First-class or express mail under CCP §1013.

Mailing the notice under §1013 requires an extension of the notice period by adding on a prescribed number of days depending on the method of mailing (e.g., express mail delivery requires adding on 2 court days to the notice period under §1013(c)). (See Warning in §3.65A.) The same service methods apply to notices of residential rent increases over 10 percent, but the notice period is 60 days instead of 30 days. See §3.65A.

Notice of all other changes in terms of a tenancy requiring a 30-day notice must be given in the manner specified in CCP §1162 (see §§8.62-8.65). CC §827(a). (Note, however, that a 30-day or 60-day notice terminating a month-to-month tenancy may be served either as provided in CCP §1162, or by certified or registered mail as provided in CC §§1946 and 1946.1. See §§8.69, 8.74.)

WARNING: A landlord may not demand that a tenant pay rent or security deposit payments in cash unless the tenant has previously attempted to pay the landlord with a check drawn on insufficient funds or the tenant has instructed the drawee to stop payment on a check, draft, or order for the payment of money. Even then, the landlord may only demand a cash rental payment or security deposit payment for 3 months following the tenant's attempt to pay with a check on insufficient funds or instruction to stop payment on the check. CC §1947.3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.65A 2. 60-day Notice of Residential Rent Increase Over 10 Percent

A landlord must give a 60-day notice of a rent increase for a residential tenancy if the increase is greater than 10 percent of the rent charged to the tenant during the 12 months preceding the increase. CC §827(b)(3). The legislature's uncodified declaration of intent states that the 60-day notice is "not intended to constitute rent control, nor is it a statement of public policy regarding acceptable or unacceptable levels of rent increases," but the longer notice period was necessary because of the "tight rental market conditions" in some communities. Stats 2000, ch 680, §1.

A former city ordinance requiring 60 days' notice of a rent increase was held preempted by CC §827. Tri County Apartment Ass'n v City of Mountain View (1987) 196 CA3d 1283, 242 CR 438. But see Roble Vista Assocs. v Bacon (2002) 97 CA4th 335, 118 CR2d 295, in which a Palo Alto ordinance that required residential landlords to offer a 1-year lease to tenants was held preempted by CC §827 by the trial court but reversed on appeal. The court of appeal held that no state law preempted the ordinance because it addressed the minimum duration of a lease and not the amount of notice that must be given to terminate a tenancy.

Apparently because of difficulties in applying the 60-day notice requirement to landlords providing rental housing under the federal Section 8 program, this requirement does not apply to a rent increase caused by a change in a tenant's income or family composition as determined by a recertification required by statute or regulation. CC §827(b)(3).

A 60-day notice of a rent increase of greater than 10 percent for a residential tenancy under CC §827(b)(1) and (3) may be given by either of the following:

- Personal delivery to the tenant; or
- First-class or express mail under CCP §1013.

Mailing the notice under §1013 requires an extension of the notice period by adding on a prescribed number of days depending on the method and place of mailing (e.g., regular mail delivery to a California address requires adding on 5 calendar days to the notice period under §1013(a)). See §8.29 on additional §1013(a) allowances.

WARNING: This seemingly innocuous mailing alternative is, in fact, a trap for unsuspecting landlords. First, a notice of rent increase cannot be served by the method of post and mail. Second, under CCP §1013, for the notice to be valid, it must bear a notation of the date and place of mailing or be accompanied by an unsigned copy of an affidavit or certificate of mailing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.65B 3. Effect of Notice

When served on the tenant, the notice creates and establishes the changed terms as part of the lease if the tenant continues to occupy the premises after the notice takes effect. CC §827(a). A modification raising the rent may be waived by a subsequent agreement for lower rent that is executed by payment of the lower rent and its acceptance by the landlord. Alden v Mayfield (1912) 164 C 6, 127 P 45. Depending on the nature of the lease and the effect of the modification, the modification itself may need to be in writing. See CC §§1697 (modification of oral contracts), 1698 (modification of written contracts); Grant v Aerodraulics Co. (1949) 91 CA2d 68, 204 P2d 683.

WARNING: In rent-controlled jurisdictions, landlords should be cautious about exercising their right to modify the lease terms under CC §827, because if a tenant vacates after receiving such a notice, the vacancy decontrol or total exemption provisions of the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535) may not apply. See §7.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.66 B. Fixed-Term Tenancy

When a tenancy is for a fixed term, the rent usually cannot be raised, and other conditions of the lease cannot be modified, by giving notice under CC §827 (see §§3.65-3.65B). Colyear v Tobriner (1936) 7 C2d 735, 62 P2d 741; Canning v Fibush (1888) 77 C 196, 19 P 376. Some leases allow the landlord to raise the rent if the tenant enters into an unapproved sublease.

A tenant under a lease for a fixed term who holds over after expiration of the term is not liable under CC §827 for increased rent, but only for the reasonable rental value of the premises as a tenant at sufferance. Colyear v Tobriner, supra. Some lease provisions predetermine the reasonable rental value of the premises if the tenant holds over after expiration of the lease term. Others provide that a holdover after expiration is, in effect, a periodic month-to-month tenancy, in which event a rent increase may be achieved by giving notice described in §§3.65-3.65A.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.66A C. Terminating Government Rent Subsidy Contracts in Rent Control Jurisdictions

The Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535) provides for additional notice and protections for tenants living in subsidized housing when the owner of the housing elects to terminate its contract with the governmental entity. In 1999, the legislature added CC §1954.535 to provide that tenants must be given 90 days' notice of the effective date of the termination. In that event, the tenant is not required to pay more than the tenant's share of the rent, as calculated under the contract or recorded agreement with the government entity that is being terminated, for 90 days after receipt of the notice. The legislature also added other restrictions on future rents that may be charged by landlords in rent control jurisdictions who terminate such contracts. These are discussed in §§7.25-7.28, 7.53-7.79.

In Apartment Ass'n, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (2006) 136 CA4th 119, 38 CR3d 575, the court held that CC §1954.535 preempts a local ordinance that prohibited a landlord from charging the tenant more than the tenant's portion of the rent under the terminated Section 8 contract with the housing authority.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.66B D. Rent Increases Under Government Subsidy Contracts

Many government programs provide financial assistance to landlords and tenants. For tenants, most programs require that a tenant's rent be limited to some percentage of the tenant's gross income; therefore, tenants must qualify to participate in such programs. The Section 8 program (see §1.36), for example, requires that landlords enter into contracts with the local housing authority, which then pays a portion of the contract rent to the landlord and the tenant pays the balance of the rent. Other programs result in rents being limited unless the government entity approves a rent increase. In all programs, there is typically a procedure that a landlord must follow to secure an increase in rents; some local jurisdictions control rent increases in such programs that are state-run. Landlords can therefore find it difficult to deal with the agencies to obtain increases in the rental ceilings and choose a proper legal remedy if the application for a rent increase is denied. In 3*00 DeHaro St. Invs. v Department of Hous. & Community Dev.* (2008) 161 CA4th 1240, 75 CR3d 98, a property owner with a contract with the California Department of Housing & Community Development (HCD) had rehabilitated the property with public funds and then rented to low-income tenants, as contracted. The owner later sought to have rents increased and followed the procedures set forth in HCD regulations but, without a hearing, HCD denied the owner's application. The owner sued HCD for damages for breach of contract and for declaratory relief. The trial court dismissed the action on the basis that the owner's sole remedy was administrative mandamus under CCP §1094.5. The court of appeal reversed and held that because there had been no hearing at HCD, and the regulations did not provide for a hearing of any kind, mandamus was not the appropriate remedy and the owner could pursue declaratory relief and relief for breach of its contract.

On special considerations governing evictions from government-assisted housing, see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

VIII. LANDLORD LIABILITY FOR PERSONAL INJURY AND PROPERTY DAMAGE

A. Liability to Tenant

§3.67 1. Negligent Failure to Correct Defects

Under CC §1714, the general duty-of-care standard, everyone is liable for an injury to another caused by his or her want of ordinary skill or care in the management of his or her property. Despite this general rule, California courts had long held that a landlord was not liable to the tenant for injuries caused by the defective condition of the leased premises (Priver v Young (1923) 62 CA 405, 216 P 966), except in case of fraudulent concealment of the defect (Shotwell v Bloom (1943) 60 CA2d 303, 140 P2d 728); existence of an express covenant to repair (Singer v Eastern Columbia, Inc. (1945) 72 CA2d 402, 164 P2d 531); or existence of a statutory duty to repair (Gustin v Williams (1967) 255 CA2d Supp 929, 62 CR 838).

In Rowland v Christian (1968) 69 C2d 108, 70 CR 97, the California Supreme Court broke with that rule and applied CC §1714 to impose liability on possessors of land for injuries incurred on the premises. Although this case was a suit by a guest against a tenant for injuries incurred on the premises, the Rowland rule has been applied in subsequent court of appeal decisions to hold landlords liable under CC §1714 for injuries caused to tenants by defective conditions on the premises. Brennan v Cockrell Invs., Inc. (1973) 35 CA3d 796, 111 CR 122 (defective railing); Evans v Thomason (1977) 72 CA3d 978, 140 CR 525 (fire caused by defective plug); Minoletti v Sabini (1972) 27 CA3d 321, 103 CR 528 (defective repair of window). See Barnes v Black (1999) 71 CA4th 1473, 84 CR2d 634, holding defendant landowner had not negated finding of duty by proving that injury to tenant occurred in public street at foot of steep driveway on landowner's property.

In Chapman v Silber (2001) 734 NYS2d 541, 760 NE2d 329, New York's highest court held that a tenant's child could recover for injuries caused by lead-based paint chips when the landlord was aware that the premises (due to its age) probably contained lead-based paint, that ingestion of chips from such paint posed a health hazard to young children, that young children resided on the premises, and that there had been complaints about chipping paint.

In Brennan v Cockrell Invs., Inc., supra, the court noted that the landlord's possession and degree of control over the premises are significant factors to be weighed in determining whether the landlord met the duty of care imposed by CC §1714, but held that no legitimate public interest would be served by maintaining a general immunity for landlords from the statutory standard of care. A landlord must act toward a tenant as a reasonable person, taking into account all the circumstances, including the likelihood of injury, the probable severity of injury, the burden of reducing or avoiding the risk, and the degree of control over the risk-creating defect. 35 CA3d at 800.

Landlords' attorneys should argue that inspections can be made only in accordance with rules governing landlords' entry (see §3.3), and that entry solely for purposes of inspection is not permitted when the tenant is in possession of the premises. CC §1954. In Becker v IRM Corp. (1985) 38 C3d 454, 213 CR 213, the supreme court held that a landlord has a duty to inspect the rental premises to determine whether they are safe and may be held liable to the tenant for injuries incurred from a defective condition whose existence would have been disclosed by a reasonable inspection. Becker was overruled in Peterson v Superior Court (1995) 10 C4th 1185, 43 CR2d 836, to the extent that Becker held that a landlord may be strictly liable to a tenant for a defective condition on the premises (see §3.70). The tenant may still proceed with a negligence action against the landlord and with strict liability claims against manufacturers, distributors, and retailers of defective products. See also McCarthy v Martinson (1996) 51 CA4th 632, 684, 59 CR2d 149, holding that the Peterson decision applies retroactively.

A landlord may incur liability for tenant injuries sustained on property over which the landlord openly and affirmatively exercises control but neither owns nor uses for commercial benefit. In Alcaraz v Vece (1997) 14 C4th 1149, 60 CR2d 448, the tenant was injured when he tripped over a broken water meter box located on a narrow, city-owned strip of land running between the sidewalk and the landlord's property line. Opposing the landlord's motion for summary judgment, the tenant alleged that the landlord maintained and controlled the strip of lawn on which the meter box was located and that after the incident the landlord enclosed the entire lawn in front of the property, including the city-owned strip of land. The supreme court held that these allegations raised a triable issue of fact as to whether the landlord exercised control over the city's strip and thus had a duty to warn the tenant or to protect him from the hazard in question. However, in Contreras v Anderson (1997) 59 CA4th 188, 69 CR2d 69, the court affirmed a summary judgment in favor of the owner of a residence for injuries sustained by a passerby who fell on a slippery brick pathway between the curb and the sidewalk in front of the residence. The court found that, to predicate liability under Alcaraz v Vece, supra, the adjoining landowner would have to be seen as making a "dramatic assertion of a right" usually associated with ownership or possession, and that acts of "neighborly maintenance" of such property did not meet that standard and the "control" required by Alcaraz v Vece.

A landlord also may be liable in tort for a tenant's injuries caused by defective conditions on the premises that constitute a breach of the implied warranty of habitability (see discussion in §3.25). Stoiber v Honeychuck (1980) 101 CA3d 903, 162 CR 194. By analogy, a tenant may argue that a landlord is liable in negligence (on a derivative tort theory) for injuries caused by conditions that do not meet the tenantability standards of any housing statute, regulation, or code. See §§3.11-3.11D.

If plaintiff's damages derive solely from breach of contract, plaintiff may not recover damages for emotional distress arising solely from property damage or economic injury, as contrasted with personal injury. Stating the cause of action on a theory of negligence does not avoid this rule. Butler-Rupp v Lourdeaux (2005) 134 CA4th 1220, 36 CR3d 685. In contrast, CC §1942.4 (see §3.15A) permits an award of "actual damages" in actions to remedy habitability, and that term includes damages for emotional distress. McNairy v C.K. Realty (2007) 150 CA4th 1500, 59 CR3d 429.

NOTE: A landlord does not necessarily have a duty to prevent an injury on the premises caused by a tenant's negligent act. See Pineda v Ennabe (1998) 61 CA4th 1403, 72 CR2d 206 (unsupervised child fell out of screened, second-story apartment window while bouncing on bed placed under window by parent). (For additional discussion of a landlord's liability for acts of tenants, see §3.72.) Nor does a landlord have a duty to protect tenant children from dangerous conditions on an adjacent street. See Brooks v Eugene Burger Mgmt. Corp. (1989) 215 CA3d 1611, 264 CR 756.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.67A 2. Failure to Maintain Common Areas

A landlord's duty to exercise due care for tenants' safety in common areas "includes within its scope adopting reasonable precautions to prevent young children from toppling out of windows in common areas of the building." Amos v Alpha Prop. Mgmt. (1999) 73 CA4th 895, 898, 87 CR2d 34. The court distinguished the holding in Pineda v Ennabe (1998) 61 CA4th 1403, 72 CR2d 206 (see §3.67), because in Amos, the window was in a common area and parental negligence was not an issue.

In Birke v Oakwood Worldwide (2009) 169 CA4th 1540, 87 CR3d 602, the court held that an apartment tenant with a child who suffered from asthma and chronic allergies was not precluded from suing to abate a public nuisance created by the landlord's failure to limit secondhand smoke in outdoor common areas.

On additional rulings on liability for injuries in common areas and areas over which the owner has or exercises control, see Alcaraz v Vece (1997) 14 C4th 1149, 60 CR2d 448; Barnes v Black (1999) 71 CA4th 1473, 84 CR2d 634; Brennan v Cockrell Invs., Inc. (1973) 35 CA3d 796, 111 CR 122; all cited in §3.67. See also Leslie G. v Perry & Assocs. (1996) 43 CA4th 472, 50 CR2d 785; Medina v Hillshore Partners (1995) 40 CA4th 477, 46 CR2d 871; and other cases on common-area injuries caused by criminal acts, cited in §§3.68-3.68D.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.68 3. Injuries Caused by Criminal Acts of Third Parties

Determining the liability of a property owner for a tenant's injuries resulting from criminal conduct by a third party if often difficult given the varied circumstances and conflicting public policies involved. The trend of supreme court decisions (see, e.g., Castaneda v Olsher (2007) 41 C4th 1205, 63 CR3d 99; Delgado v Trax Bar & Grill (2005) 36 C4th 224, 30 CR3d 145; Saelzler v Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 C4th 763, 107 CR2d 617; Sharon P. v Arman, Ltd. (1999) 21 C4th 1181, 91 CR2d 35; Ann M. v Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 C4th 666, 25 CR2d 137) has been to scrutinize the issues of duty and causation in the context of summary adjudication, treating these issues as questions of law, rather than fact, and to cut back on landlord liability for personal injuries. See, e.g., Imre, The Civil Side of Crime: The High Court's Changing Approach to Liability for Another's Criminal Acts, 24 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 186 (Aug. 2002). Some courts, however, show a reluctance to have cases determined by summary judgment motions and find that there are triable issues of fact relating to causation of the plaintiff's injuries. See Raven H. v Gamette (2007) 157 CA4th 1017, 68 CR3d 897.

Some courts continue to recognize that even if an owner has no duty to provide security, it may still owe a duty, by having special knowledge or by virtue of a special relationship, to take other protective measures. See reported cases in §§3.68A-3.68C. In Castaneda v Olsher (2007) 41 C4th 1205, 1214, 63 CR3d 99, the supreme court adopted the description of the required risk analysis stated in Vasquez v Residential Invs., Inc. (2004) 118 CA4th 269, 280, 12 CR3d 846:

> The duty analysis… requires the court in each case (whether trial or appellate) to identify the specific action or actions the defendant had a duty to undertake. "Only after the scope of the duty under consideration is defined may a court meaningfully undertake the balancing analysis of the risks and burdens present in a given case to determine whether the specific obligations should or should not be imposed on the landlord."

On the narrow issue of property owner liability for allowing a nuisance caused by drug activity, the legislature has created numerous remedies, including abatement proceedings, disclosure requirements, and monetary penalties. See, e.g., private right of action available to persons under the Narcotics Nuisance Abatement Act (Health & S C §§11570-11587), discussed in §4.44.

PRACTICE TIP: When considering a potential suit, an attorney must compare the facts to those in the numerous authorities on this subject, assess duty and causation issues carefully, and assist the client in deciding whether monetary damages or abatement is more important for the particular action.

The following sections focus on landlord liability in reported decisions on common law, personal injury actions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.68A a. Public Housing Projects

In Zuniga v Housing Auth. (1995) 41 CA4th 82, 48 CR2d 353, the plaintiffs' complaint for damages alleged that they were tenants at defendants' public housing project, that the project was plagued with drug dealers, that plaintiffs had asked defendants to protect them but defendants failed to do so, and that drug dealers retaliated by burning down plaintiffs' apartment, killing five members of plaintiffs' family. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint, but the court of appeal reversed because the owner was aware of the problems and did not warn the plaintiffs. The decision in Zuniga was criticized in a later supreme court decision, Zelig v County of Los Angeles (2002) 27 C4th 1112, 119 CR2d 709, cited in §3.68D.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.68B b. Privately Owned Apartment Buildings

The California Supreme Court addressed liability issues of landlords to their residential tenants in two important decisions: Castaneda v Olsher (2007) 41 C4th 1205, 63 CR3d 99, and Saelzler v Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 C4th 763, 107 CR2d 617.

In Castaneda, the supreme court reversed the court of appeal and reinstated the trial court's ruling in a case in which a mobilehome park tenant was inadvertently injured by an altercation involving gang members who lived in the same park. The court affirmed summary judgment in favor of the park owners because facts known to the owners did not make a violent gang episode sufficiently foreseeable as to impose on them the duty to take measures to protect other tenants. Accordingly, the court held that the owners were not liable for renting to known gang members, for failing to evict known gang members, or for failing to hire security guards or install additional lighting. With regard to the issue of requiring landlords to screen tenants, the court stated (41 C4th at 1216):

> [W]e are not persuaded that imposing a duty on landlords to withhold rental units form those they believe to be gang members is a fair or workable solution to this problem, or one consistent with our state's public policy as a whole. Absent circumstances showing extraordinary foreseeability, we decline to recognize such a duty.

In addressing the issue of whether the owners were liable for failing to evict the gang members after they had begun to annoy residents, the court noted that undertaking an eviction cannot be considered to be a minimal burden, particularly if evictions are regulated by the Mobilehome Residency Law (CC §798.56) or local eviction control ordinances. The court ruled that the two prior incidents at the park involving the discharge of weapons (one where the perpetrator was unknown and the other involving a different set of occupants from the ones causing plaintiff's injuries) did not show that it was "highly foreseeable" that the gang member who injured the plaintiff would be involved in a violent gang confrontation and cause injury to the plaintiff.

In Saelzler, the plaintiff was assaulted on defendants' premises, an apartment complex, by unknown assailants after she attempted to deliver a package. The court upheld the trial court's grant of summary judgment because the plaintiff failed to show, as a triable issue of fact, that defendants' failure to provide either additional security guards or functioning, locked security gates actually caused her injuries. In analyzing the causation issue, the court rejected the plaintiff's expert testimony as speculative and stated that a general finding of the foreseeability of future injury or assault on the premises does not inevitably establish that the defendant's omission caused the plaintiff's injuries. "Actual causation is an entirely separate and independent element of the tort of negligence." 25 C4th at 778. For discussion of the causation issue in the context of a legal malpractice case arising from a premises liability action, see Ambriz v Kelegian (2007) 146 CA4th 1519, 53 CR3d 700 (concluding causation may be triable issue of material fact when circumstances show likelihood of foreseeability of injury).

Castaneda was distinguished in Tan v Arnel Mgmt. Co. (2009) 170 CA4th 1087, 88 CR3d 754. The Court of Appeal reversed the trial court, concluding that plaintiffs presented substantial evidence of prior similar incidents of a reasonably foreseeable risk of violent criminal assaults on the property, so as to impose on defendants a duty to provide relatively minimal security measures. The test is prior "similar" incidents, not prior "identical" incidents. 170 CA4th at 1100. Plaintiffs demonstrated three prior incidents of sudden, unprovoked, increasingly violent assaults by a stranger in the middle of the night, on people in ungated parking areas on the apartment complex's premises, causing great bodily injury. Because plaintiffs asked for only relatively minimal security measures—ones already taken by defendants in another portion of the property—the degree of foreseeability required was not especially high. Because the prior assaults were sufficiently similar to make the attack foreseeable and to place a duty of care on defendants, the trial court erred in ruling that defendants had no duty of care.

Saelzler was distinguished in Raven H. v Gamette (2007) 157 CA4th 1017, 68 CR3d 897. Plaintiff was raped in her apartment by a man who was not a tenant in the building. Plaintiff claimed that the rapist was able to enter the building because the landlord had knowingly failed to maintain the front door (in a high crime area), and that the rapist was able to enter her apartment because the landlord failed to provide security measures (which the landlord had provided to other tenants) that allowed her windows to be left open safely on hot evenings. The trial court granted summary judgment for the landlord, ruling that the tenant had failed to provide sufficient evidence to establish that these failures caused the rape. The court of appeal reversed, holding that a plaintiff need show only that the landlord's failures were a "substantial factor" in causing the rape, and that she had presented sufficient evidence to permit a jury to rule in her favor.

Sufficient evidence raising a triable issue of fact was found to overturn summary judgment in favor of the landlord in Madhani v Cooper (2003) 106 CA4th 412, 130 CR2d 778. In Madhani, the injured tenant could identify the perpetrator causing the plaintiff's injuries and there was evidence that the injured party had complained about the conditions or prior conduct. The court concluded that the landlord had a duty to protect the tenant from the aggressive tenant and that given the facts "it is up to the jury at trial, not the court on summary judgment," to decide whether it is reasonably probable that installing a security camera or removing the aggressive tenant from the building or other feasible remedies could have prevented the other tenant's injuries. 106 CA4th at 418.

Similarly, in Vasquez v Residential Invs., Inc. (2004) 118 CA4th 269, 12 CR3d 846, quoted with approval by the supreme court in Castaneda, the landlord, after notice, failed to replace a broken glass pane in the door to tenant's apartment. The tenant covered the space with a plywood board, which a jealous boyfriend broke to achieve entry and murder his girlfriend. The court reversed a summary judgment for the landlord, holding that the landlord had a duty to replace the pane, because the burden of doing so was minimal compared to the foreseeable danger of entry by criminals. Because this risk was foreseeable, the murder was not a "superseding cause" of the death, although the jury might apportion the bulk of the responsibility to the murderer. See also Barber v Chang (2007) 151 CA4th 1456, 60 CR3d 760 (summary judgment not appropriate when aggressive tenant had exhibited prior similar threatening conduct and landlord did not undertake minimally burdensome measures to address known threat).

In Medina v Hillshore Partners (1995) 40 CA4th 477, 46 CR2d 871, the court held that the owner of an apartment complex had no duty to protect members of the public using adjacent public streets from gang members who congregated at the complex, even though the owner had notice of the gang activities. See also Rosenbaum v Security Pac. Corp. (1996) 43 CA4th 1084, 50 CR2d 917.

In Leslie G. v Perry & Assocs. (1996) 43 CA4th 472, 50 CR2d 785, a tenant was raped in a parking garage under the apartment building. The rapist was never caught. The tenant sued the landlord for negligence, claiming that he had failed to repair a broken security gate. The landlord moved for summary judgment, and in response the tenant submitted the deposition testimony of a crimes expert who had opined that the rapist was attracted to the garage by the broken gate. The trial court granted the motion, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that, even assuming that the landlord had a duty to fix the gate, the tenant had failed to raise a triable issue of fact on the element of causation, as the rapist might have entered the garage by some means other than through the broken gate (e.g., through another door, or by following a tenant through the gate). The court also stated that when there is evidence that the crime could have occurred "even in the absence of the landlord's negligence," causation cannot be proved by an expert's opinion based on speculation, conjecture, and inferences. The court noted that remedies such as "withholding rent" are available to tenants whose landlords fail to perform contractual duties to protect against crime.

In Pamela W. v Millsom (1994) 25 CA4th 950, 30 CR2d 690, the court relied on Ann M. v Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 C4th 666, 25 CR2d 137 (see §3.68C), in rejecting a residential tenant's lawsuit against her landlord for negligence, breach of the implied warranty of habitability, and nuisance after the tenant was raped by a man who had been stalking her. The court held that the crime was not foreseeable because, even though the complex was in a "high crime area," the tenant presented no evidence of prior assaults in the complex.

Earlier cases in which courts upheld tort claims for failure to provide security or take other action in residential buildings include Penner v Falk (1984) 153 CA3d 858, 200 CR 661 (upheld cause of action for negligence when landlord knew of previous crimes on premises, but failed to take corrective measures in response to tenant's complaints; denied cause of action for breach of warranty of habitability, because no allegation of uninhabitability or housing code violations); Kwaitkowski v Superior Trading Co. (1981) 123 CA3d 324, 176 CR 494 (landlord who knew of similar incidents in common hallway but failed to repair defective door lock liable in tort to raped tenant); O'Hara v Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 CA3d 798, 142 CR 487 (tort cause of action upheld when landlord knew other tenants had been raped and falsely told plaintiff premises were patrolled). See also Rosales v Stewart (1980) 113 CA3d 130, 169 CR 660; Uccello v Laudenslayer (1975) 44 CA3d 504, 118 CR 741.

In the following cases, however, the courts rejected claims based on failure to provide security: Riley v Marcus (1981) 125 CA3d 103, 177 CR 827 (complaint that failed to allege prior violent crimes on premises insufficient to state cause of action); 7735 Hollywood Blvd. Venture v Superior Court (1981) 116 CA3d 901, 172 CR 528 (tenant, raped by intruder, failed to state cause of action by alleging merely that landlord knew of crime in area and failed to replace burned-out light bulb); Totten v More Oakland Residential Hous., Inc. (1976) 63 CA3d 538, 134 CR 29 (allegation that landlord knew of recent violent crime in neighborhood insufficient to sustain cause of action for plaintiff's injuries caused by two gun-wielding strangers).

Generally, a landlord has no duty to warn a prospective tenant of the presence of a vicious dog in the neighborhood. Wylie v Gresch (1987) 191 CA3d 412, 236 CR 552. Cases have consistently refused to impose liability on landlords to protect against dangerous conditions off the premises or dangerous persons or animals over which the landlord has no control, or that come onto the property in a location or manner over which the owner has no control. 191 CA3d at 419. See also Mata v Mata (2003) 105 CA4th 1121, 130 CR2d 141, cited in §3.68C. But if the landlord knows that a tenant harbors a vicious dog in the landlord's building, the landlord must order the tenant to get rid of the dog or, if that fails, must evict the tenant. Donchin v Guerrero (1995) 34 CA4th 1832, 41 CR2d 192.

For further discussion of landlord liability and a jury instruction addressing the landlord's duty (CACI 1006), see §§3.68C, 13.33D.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.68C c. Privately Owned Commercial Buildings

In the context of a commercial landlord's responsibility to take security precautions on behalf of tenants (and their employees and guests), the California Supreme Court has held that the issues of the landlord's duty and the foreseeability of harm are questions of law to be determined by the court. Sharon P. v Arman, Ltd. (1999) 21 C4th 1181, 91 CR2d 35; Ann M. v Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 C4th 666, 25 CR2d 137. See also Kentucky Fried Chicken, Inc. v Superior Court (1997) 14 C4th 814, 824, 59 CR2d 756. This means that many cases can be disposed of on a summary judgment motion before trial. See, e.g., Ericson v Federal Express Corp. (2008) 162 CA4th 1291, 77 CR3d 1.

In Ann M., for example, an employee of one of the shopping center's tenants was raped in the tenant's shop. She sued the shopping center for negligence, claiming that the defendant breached its duty of care by failing to provide security guards to patrol the common areas (a provision not required by the lease with the tenant). There was no evidence that the landlord had knowledge of any previous, similar violent crimes on the premises. The court noted that "a high degree of foreseeability is required in order to find that the scope of a landlord's duty of care includes the hiring of security guards" (6 C4th at 679), and held that, because there had not previously been a violent crime similar to the rape in the shopping center, the rape was not sufficiently foreseeable to impose such a duty on the landlord.

The Ann M. court suggested (in dicta) that the degree of foreseeability required might be relaxed if:

(1) The rape had occurred in a business that was next door to a substantially similar business that had experienced violent crime on the premises; or

(2) The rape had occurred in a business that is inherently more dangerous (e.g., an all-night convenience store or parking garage). 6 C4th at 679 n7, 680 n8.

In a later decision, however, the supreme court rejected the view that covered or underground commercial parking garages are inherently dangerous, and denied a claim for negligence against a landlord brought by a woman who was raped in a subterranean garage, because there was no evidence of similar crimes in the area. See Sharon P. v Arman, Ltd. (1999) 21 C4th 1181, 91 CR2d 35. The facts in Sharon P. indicated that even if the landowner had undertaken security measures, they would not necessarily have deterred or prevented the crime. The only factor the court found compelling in a determination of landowner's liability is repeated instances of criminal conduct in the place where the plaintiff is injured. (For further discussion of a commercial landlord's duty to provide security, see California Tort Guide §§10.6-10.7 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).)

The supreme court frequently reiterates that the foreseeability of the conduct of third parties is crucial in determining whether a landowner has a duty to employ security guards or implement physical protective measures. See, e.g., Delgado v Trax Bar & Grill (2005) 36 C4th 224, 30 CR3d 145; Wiener v Southcoast Childcare Ctrs., Inc. (2004) 32 C4th 1138, 12 CR3d 615.

Even if a proprietor has no duty under Ann M. and Sharon P. to provide a security guard or undertake expensive preventative measures, it may still owe a duty, by virtue of a special relationship, to take other measures to protect a customer, such as warning the customer. In Delgado v Trax Bar & Grill, supra, one patron followed another one (plaintiff) to the parking lot of a Trax restaurant. He then picked a fight and called to 12-15 friends lounging nearby to aid in beating and kicking plaintiff, stopping only after plaintiff had been knocked unconscious with a baseball bat. Trax employees did not warn the plaintiff, although they knew that the assault would likely happen. Plaintiff sued Trax and others; the only surviving cause of action against Trax at trial was for "premises liability." Although there was no evidence of prior criminal assaults on the premises or in the vicinity, the court ruled that the proprietor had a special relationship with the plaintiff because it served intoxicating drinks to its customers for consumption on the premises. Because the proprietor had actual notice of an impending assault against the plaintiff, it had a duty "to take reasonable, relatively simple, and minimally burdensome steps" to attempt to avert the danger. 36 C4th at 250. The supreme court stated that when the "burden of preventing future harm caused by third party criminal conduct is great or onerous," the injured party must demonstrate heightened foreseeability, evidenced by prior similar criminal incidents or other indications of a reasonably foreseeable risk of violent criminal assaults in that location. "By contrast, in cases in which harm can be prevented by simple means or by imposing merely minimal burdens, only 'regular' reasonable foreseeability as opposed to heightened foreseeability is required." 36 C4th at 243 n24.

Following Delgado, the supreme court in Morris v De La Torre (2005) 36 C4th 260, 30 CR3d 173, ruled that a special relationship may extend not only to a proprietor's customers but also to its invitees, such as someone waiting in the parking lot for companions who are inside making purchases. The court noted that such a relationship may give rise to a duty to call 911 or take other similar measures that are appropriate and reasonable under the circumstances.

The negligent undertaking doctrine applied when an employee was assaulted by a customer in a store where the store owner had hired a security guard service. In reversing a summary judgment, the court held liability may be found if the security services are provided in a negligent manner and the injury was caused by the failure to exercise reasonable care in providing the services. Mukthar v Latin Am. Sec. Serv. (2006) 139 CA4th 284, 42 CR3d 563. The failure to demonstrate causation justifies summary judgment for the defendant. Rinehart v Boys & Girls Club (2005) 133 CA4th 419, 34 CR3d 677.

The duty of a landlord to prevent injuries to third parties is limited if a tenant is in exclusive possession of the property. The court in Delgado v Trax Bar & Grill (2005) 36 C4th 224, 250, 30 CR3d 145, stated that an injured third party plaintiff seeking to hold the proprietor of a business liable must show "defendant had actual notice" of the dangerous condition in question, and if so, then "its special-relationship-based duty included an obligation to take reasonable, relatively simple, and minimally burdensome steps to attempt to avert that danger." See §§3.71-3.72. Determining whether the landlord has the right to enter and inspect commercially leased premises while pursuing an unlawful detainer action against the tenant raises a different set of problems. In Stone v Center Trust Retail Props., Inc. (2008) 163 CA4th 608, 77 CR3d 556, for example, a slip and fall case resulting from the tenant's negligence in maintaining the premises, the court of appeal ruled that the date on which a landlord obtains a judgment for possession of the premises is the date on which the landlord becomes liable for the condition of the premises. For further discussion of Stone, see §§3.72, 13.33D.

NOTE: Although the court's stated desire to find a "bright line" for such liability is understandable, the court chose too early a time; a landlord is not legally entitled to physical possession of the leased premises until a writ of possession is issued and executed by the local sheriff or other officer enforcing such writs. This is especially problematic in residential buildings, where entry by a landlord is restricted by CC §1954.

In 2008, the California Judicial Council amended CACI 1006 to summarize these judicially created duties regarding the safety of rental property as follows:

- A landlord must inspect the premises before leasing and on renewal to ascertain and correct "unsafe conditions."
- After a tenant has taken possession, the landlord must use reasonable care to correct an unsafe condition in an area under the landlord's control if the landlord knows or reasonably should have known about it.
- After a tenant has taken possession, the landlord must use reasonable care to correct an unsafe condition in an area under the tenant's control if the landlord has actual knowledge of the condition and the right and ability to correct it.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.68D d. Public Buildings

The California Supreme Court further limited landowner liability when the landowner is a public entity. In Zelig v County of Los Angeles (2002) 27 C4th 1112, 119 CR2d 709, the court held that Los Angeles County had no liability for injuries suffered as a result of a criminal homicide in its courthouse and no duty to adopt security measures to protect the public from such conduct. The court based its analysis on the governmental immunity provisions of Govt C §815, narrowly construed Govt C §835, and made §835 the exclusive remedy for public entity liability for dangerous conditions of public property. As part of its discussion, the court criticized and distinguished the decision in Zuniga v Housing Auth. (1995) 41 CA4th 82, 48 CR2d 353 (cited in §3.68A), which held a public housing authority liable for the deaths of tenants who had been victimized by gangs operating in the housing project on the basis that the authority had been aware of the problems and had failed to warn plaintiffs of the problems. For further discussion of Zelig and its effect on Zuniga, see Nellis, Comment, 24 CEB Civ LR 207 (Aug. 2002).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.69 4. Exculpatory Clauses

A landlord may not disclaim liability for injury to persons or property caused by his or her negligent failure to correct defective conditions. Any clause that purports to excuse the landlord from the duty to exercise care in preventing personal injury or property damage is void as against public policy. CC §1953(a)(5). See §1.27.

In Burnett v Chimney Sweep, LLC (2004) 123 CA4th 1057, 20 CR3d 562, the court held that an exculpatory provision did not bar a commercial tenant's negligence lawsuit for damages caused by mold. The provision purported to cover property damage and personal injury, but did not expressly mention negligence, and therefore under settled law it did not shield the landlord from liability for "active" negligence as contrasted with "passive" negligence. Thus, if the landlord was actively negligent in refusing to remediate leaks, water intrusion, and mold, then it may be liable under the theory of "active negligence."

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.70 5. Strict Liability

In Becker v IRM Corp. (1985) 38 C3d 454, 213 CR 213, the California Supreme Court held that a landlord could be strictly liable for a tenant's injuries caused by a latent defect that existed when the unit was rented to the tenant. Becker was overruled in Peterson v Superior Court (1995) 10 C4th 1185, 43 CR2d 836, to the extent that Becker held that a landlord may be strictly liable to a tenant for a defective condition on the premises. The tenant may still proceed with a negligence action against the landlord and with strict liability claims against manufacturers, distributors, and retailers of defective products. The Peterson decision applies retroactively. McCarthy v Martinson (1996) 51 CA4th 632, 634, 59 CR2d 149.

See Bernhardt, Sticky Bathtubs and Slippery Rules, 18 CEB Real Prop L Rep 278 (Oct. 1995); Babcock, Peterson v Superior Court: What Happened to the Paramount Policy?, Pac L J 373 (Winter 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.70A 6. Liability for Sexual Harassment

Under CC §51.9, a landlord or a property manager may be liable to a tenant in a civil action for damages for sexual harassment. What the tenant needs to prove was substantially liberalized by amendments to CC §51.9(a)(1) in 1999. The tenant must show that (1) there was a business or service relationship, which not only includes that of landlord and property manager, but also an agent acting on behalf of the landlord or property manager; (2) the defendant made sexual advances, solicitations, requests, or demands, or was guilty of physical, verbal, or visual conduct of a sexual nature or of a hostile nature based on gender; (3) the conduct was both unwelcome and either pervasive or severe; (4) there was an inability on the part of the tenant to easily terminate the relationship; and (5) the tenant suffered or will suffer economic loss, disadvantage, or personal injury that specifically includes emotional distress or the violation of a statutory or constitutional right. Sexual harassment under CC §51.9 was added to CC §52(b), which prescribes the remedies available to persons whose rights under CC §51.7 or §51.9 are violated. These remedies include civil penalties and compensatory and exemplary damages.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Liability to Third Parties

§3.71 1. Liability for Negligence Regardless of Plaintiff's Status

Historically, a landlord's duty of care to third persons was dependent on the plaintiff's status as a trespasser, licensee, or invitee. Oettinger v Stewart (1944) 24 C2d 133, 148 P2d 19. A trespasser is a person who enters the premises without a privilege to do so; an invitee is a business visitor invited onto the premises for business dealings; a licensee is a person who is privileged to enter the premises with the possessor's consent (e.g., a social guest). 24 C2d at 136. The general rule was that the landlord owed a duty of care to invitees, but not to trespassers or licensees. 24 C2d at 136.

In Rowland v Christian (1968) 69 C2d 108, 70 CR 97, the court held that a possessor of land has a duty of care and may be liable for injuries incurred by another, regardless of the plaintiff's status as a trespasser, invitee, or licensee. Rowland involved an action for damages brought against the tenant by a guest whose hand was injured when a cracked faucet broke. The supreme court held that the tenant, as a possessor of land, has a duty of care under CC §1714 regardless of the plaintiff's status as a licensee. Although the plaintiff's status as a trespasser, invitee, or licensee may be one factor in determining liability, the court held that it is not determinative. The CC §1714 duty of care has also been imposed on landlords who are not in possession of the premises. Brennan v Cockrell Invs., Inc. (1973) 35 CA3d 796, 111 CR 122; Evans v Thomason (1977) 72 CA3d 978, 140 CR 525; Minoletti v Sabini (1972) 27 CA3d 321, 103 CR 528.

In Resolution Trust Corp. v Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 CA4th 93, 40 CR2d 328, the court held that defendant landowners were not liable to an adjoining landowner for fuel leaks originating from a leased gas station on defendant's property. Defendants had not actively caused or contributed to the contamination. Although they had a right to enter the leased premises, they had no duty to the plaintiffs. Although the plaintiff's status is no longer determinative, it usually has some bearing on resolution of the issue of the landlord's liability. Rowland v Christian, supra. Thus, earlier case law concerning the plaintiff's status may be consulted for guidance in determining whether the landlord acted reasonably in exercising the duty of care imposed by CC §1714. Issues for which earlier case law might be relevant in a given case include:

(a) Which party had use and control of the premises (Beeston v Lampasona (1960) 182 CA2d 519, 6 CR 531; Yazzolino v Jones (1957) 153 CA2d 626, 315 P2d 107);

(b) Whether any common areas were under the landlord's control (Yazzolino v Jones, supra);

(c) The nature and normal use of the premises (Hayes v Richfield Oil Corp. (1952) 38 C2d 375, 240 P2d 580);

(d) Whether use of the premises was public or private (Hayes v Richfield Oil Corp., supra);

(e) The parties' knowledge of defects on the premises (Shotwell v Bloom (1943) 60 CA2d 303, 140 P2d 728; Dorswitt v Wilson (1942) 51 CA2d 623, 125 P2d 626);

(f) The nature and use of fixtures installed on the property by the tenant (Goodman v Harris (1953) 40 C2d 254, 253 P2d 447);

(g) The extent of the third party's invitation onto the premises (Johnston v De La Guerra Props., Inc. (1946) 28 C2d 394, 170 P2d 5; Donnell v California W. Sch. of Law (1988) 200 CA3d 715, 246 CR 199; Sockett v Gottlieb (1960) 187 CA2d 760, 9 CR 831); and

(h) Whether the tenant's activities were subject to the landlord's control (Mundt v Nowlin (1941) 44 CA2d 414, 112 P2d 782).

Although the general standards of duty and causation continue to evolve (see supreme court cases discussed in §§3.68-3.68D), case law clearly imposes on owners and occupiers of land the duty of exercising reasonable care in maintaining the premises, and imposes liability regardless of the plaintiff's status. Avoiding liability may be especially difficult if the plaintiff is a child and is injured by someone whom the landowner knows to have criminal propensities. See Romero v Superior Court (2001) 89 CA4th 1068, 107 CR2d 801. Accordingly, landlords should maintain adequate insurance coverage for tort liability on the premises. See Sullivan, Landlord Liability Insurance: Why an Old Lease May Need to Learn New Tricks, 26 Cal Real Prop J 22 (Vol 26 No 2, 2008).

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords' attorneys should advise their clients to include a provision in the rental agreement specifying that the landlord's liability insurance is carried for the landlord's benefit to avoid a claim for indemnification by the landlord for the tenant's tortious liability.

A landlord who sells his property is not liable to third parties injured after the sale, even if the injury was caused by the landlord's negligence before the sale — unless the landlord concealed the defect from the new owner. It would be unfair to hold the landlord liable in this situation because he had no right to go back onto the property and fix the defect or warn potential victims or to obtain insurance against liability for such lawsuits. Lewis v Chevron U.S.A. Inc. (2004) 119 CA4th 690, 14 CR3d 636.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.72 2. Liability for Acts of Tenant

A landlord may be held liable for injuries to third parties caused by a tenant if the landlord knew of the tenant's dangerous propensities and rented the premises to the tenant anyway, or failed to terminate the tenancy or take other protective measures after acquiring such knowledge. See, e.g., Barber v Chang (2007) 151 CA4th 1456, 60 CR3d 760; Madhani v Cooper (2003) 106 CA4th 412, 130 CR2d 778, discussed in §3.68C. See also Rosales v Stewart (1980) 113 CA3d 130, 169 CR 660 (child killed by bullet fired from adjoining premises; sufficient cause of action against perpetrator's landlord for parents to allege that landlord knew of tenant's dangerous propensities before renewing lease); Uccello v Laudenslayer (1975) 44 CA3d 504, 118 CR 741 (minor social guest attacked by tenant's dog; landlord with actual knowledge of dog's vicious tendencies has duty to third persons to order tenant to remove dog from premises). See also Portillo v Aiassa (1994) 27 CA4th 1128, 32 CR2d 755 (commercial landlord's duty includes inspecting premises to discover dangerous guard dog kept on premises by tenant).

In Sturgeon v Curnutt (1994) 29 CA4th 301, 34 CR2d 498, the court held that a landlord was not liable to a tenant's guest for injuries she suffered from an accidental shooting by the drunken tenant, because the guest failed to show that the tenant had previously injured anyone because of alcohol or firearms or that he had previously handled guns unsafely while drunk.

The landlord has no duty to inspect the premises to discover dangerous conditions created by the tenant. See, e.g., Pineda v Ennabe (1998) 61 CA4th 1403, 72 CR2d 206 (unsupervised child fell out of screened, second-story apartment window while bouncing on bed placed under window by parent). To incur liability in these situations, the landlord must have actual knowledge of the dangerous condition, as well as a right to have the danger removed from the premises. Uccello v Laudenslayer, supra. In Uccello, the court noted that removing the dangerous condition does not impose an extensive burden on the landlord. The landlord can readily obtain insurance to protect against liability to third parties, or require that the tenant obtain such insurance before renting the premises. 44 CA3d at 514. Under some circumstances, a landlord may have a duty to inspect for a dangerous conditions. Portillo v Aiassa, supra.

Whether the landlord has notice of the dangerous condition is often crucial. In Yuzon v Collins (2004) 116 CA4th 149, 10 CR3d 18, for example, an invitee who was bitten by a tenant's pit bull dog sued the landlord for his injuries. The court upheld summary judgment for the landlord, finding no substantial evidence supporting an inference that the landlord knew of the dog's vicious propensities. But in Donchin v Guerrero (1995) 34 CA4th 1832, 41 CR2d 192, the plaintiff was attacked by the tenant's dogs four blocks from the leased premises, and the court held that there were triable issues of fact concerning (1) whether the landlord knew of the dogs' vicious propensities, and (2) whether the landlord had the ability to prevent the attacks. Some evidence indicated that the landlord knew of the dogs' vicious propensities. On the second question, the landlord argued that he had no duty to prevent attacks away from the property. The court rejected this argument, holding that the landlord could have prevented the attack by serving a 30-day notice on the tenant to get rid of the dogs or to vacate the premises.

The duty of a landlord to third parties when the landlord is in the process of evicting a tenant who has been negligent in maintaining the premises is more complicated. See, e.g., Stone v Center Trust Retail Props., Inc. (2008) 163 CA4th 608, 77 CR3d 556, in which the court ruled that a duty to inspect commercial premises may attach when the landlord obtains a judgment for possession. In the residential context, it is likely that no duty will attach for liability arising out of the condition of the leased premises unless and until a writ of possession has not only been issued but has also been executed by the proper authorities and the landlord has been physically restored to possession. Entry simply for inspection purposes is not permitted by CC §1954. Residential leases do not reserve the right to inspect as did the commercial lease in Stone; such a provision would violate §1954. Once the landlord has possession, the landlord may have a duty to inspect residential premises and make changes to ensure that the premises are safe and will not cause injury to third parties. See also CC §2929.3, which requires owners to maintain vacant properties obtained after a foreclosure sale. For further discussion of Stone and a jury instruction addressing the landlord's duty, see §§3.68C, 13.33D.

© The Regents of the University of California

IX. TENANT LIABILITY FOR PROPERTY DAMAGE AND PERSONAL INJURY

§3.73 A. Duty to Repair

A tenant has no general duty to correct defective conditions on the premises, although the lease or rental agreement can shift the duty to repair to the tenant. The tenant does have a duty to use ordinary care to preserve the premises in a safe condition, and to repair deterioration caused by lack of ordinary care. CC §§1928-1929; see Glenn R. Sewell Sheet Metal, Inc. v Loverde (1969) 70 C2d 666, 75 CR 889; Lynn v DePue Warehouse Co. (1962) 198 CA2d 742, 17 CR 841.

On termination of the tenancy, the tenant must return the premises to the landlord in the same condition as at the inception of the lease, allowing for normal wear and tear. Haupt v La Brea Heating & Air Conditioning Co. (1955) 133 CA2d Supp 784, 284 P2d 985. The estimated cost of repair is a proper method of measuring damages resulting from the tenant's breach of the covenant to restore, even if the lessor fails to make the necessary repairs. Polster, Inc. v Swing (1985) 164 CA3d 427, 210 CR 567 (instead of repairing premises after former tenant vacated, landlord accepted lower rent from new tenant because of premises' condition). The tenant's duty to use ordinary care to preserve the premises does not extend to areas over which the tenant has no control. Rathbun Co. v Simmons (1928) 90 CA 692, 266 P 369.

The tenant has no right to reimbursement for any repairs or improvements made without the landlord's consent (Whipple v Haberle (1963) 223 CA2d 477, 36 CR 9), except for the limited right to apply one month's rent to such repairs under the repair-and-deduct remedy set forth in CC §1942 (see §§3.12-3.15). A residential landlord is excused from the statutory duty to repair dilapidations on the premises (CC §§1941-1941.1) if the tenant is in substantial violation of one of several enumerated affirmative obligations, and the violation contributes substantially to the dilapidation or to the landlord's inability to repair it. CC §1941.2. The tenant obligations enumerated in CC §1941.2 are the following:

- keeping the part of the premises tenant occupies as clean and sanitary as its condition permits;
- disposing of all rubbish, garbage, and other waste in a clean and sanitary manner;
- properly operating all electrical, gas, and plumbing fixtures, and keeping them as clean and sanitary as their condition permits;
- refraining from willfully or wantonly destroying, defacing, damaging, impairing, or removing any part of the structure or facilities, and not permitting any person on the premises with the tenant's permission to perform any such acts; and
- occupying the premises as his or her abode using those portions designed for living, sleeping, cooking, and dining only for the purposes for which they were intended.

PRACTICE TIP: The landlord can use the tenant's breach of these duties to rebut the defense of breach of the implied warranty of habitability in an unlawful detainer action. See §§3.32-3.34.

To recover damages for breach of a covenant to repair, the landlord normally would be required to show the condition of the premises at the beginning and termination of the tenancy. When the premises are surrendered in a damaged condition, however, the landlord has proved a prima facie case, and the tenant must show that the damage was due to a cause not covered by the covenant. Markowitz v Ikemoto (1958) 159 CA2d 242, 323 P2d 513.

Under the usual covenant to repair, the tenant is not obligated to rebuild when part of the premises is destroyed through no fault of the tenant. See ASP Props. Group v Fard (2005) 133 CA4th 1257, 35 CR3d 343 (lease requiring tenant to maintain and repair roof may not reasonably be construed to require tenant to totally replace roof).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.74 B. Injury to Third Parties

Historically, the California rule was that a tenant or other possessor of land owed a duty of ordinary care to an invitee, but was not liable for injuries to a trespasser or licensee except when caused by the tenant's willful or wanton conduct. See Palmquist v Mercer (1954) 43 C2d 92, 272 P2d 26. (On these categories of visitors to the premises, see §3.73.)

In Rowland v Christian (1968) 69 C2d 108, 70 CR 97, the California Supreme Court abrogated this rule and held that a tenant owes a duty under CC §1714 to maintain the property with ordinary care and skill in order to prevent injury to others, without regard to the plaintiff's status as a trespasser, invitee, or licensee. See §3.73. Rowland involved an action by a social guest of the tenant against the tenant for failing to warn the plaintiff of the dangerous condition of a cracked faucet handle. Thus, a tenant is clearly held to a duty under CC §1714 to exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to his or her guests. Under this rule, a tenant also owes a duty of care to a trespasser, although the plaintiff's status as a trespasser still might be a factor in determining the tenant's liability. See §3.73.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.75 X. IMPLIED COVENANT OF GOOD FAITH AND FAIR DEALING

Every lease and rental agreement includes an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing that neither party will do anything that will have the effect of destroying or injuring the other's right to receive the benefits of the contract. Carma Developers (Cal.), Inc. v Marathon Dev. Cal., Inc. (1992) 2 C4th 342, 371, 6 CR2d 467; Andrews v Mobile Aire Estates (2005) 125 CA4th 578, 589, 22 CR3d 832.

In Northridge Hosp. Found. v Pic 'N' Save No. 9, Inc. (1986) 187 CA3d 1088, 1100, 232 CR 329, for example, the sublessee had an option to extend the lease, but he could not effectively exercise the option unless the sublessor exercised his option to extend his master lease with the owner. Citing Kendall, the court held that the sublease contained an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, which required the sublessor to exercise his option to renew the master lease.

To date, no published opinion has allowed an implied covenant of good faith to be used as a defense to eviction, although in other contexts (see, e.g., Edmond's v MacDonald Group, Ltd. (1985) 171 CA3d 598, 217 CR 375) the covenant has been allowed as the basis of an action for relief by the tenant against the landlord, just as many other causes of action are allowed against a landlord that are disallowed as eviction defenses. See also Cordonier v Central Shopping Plaza Assocs. (1978) 82 CA3d 991, 147 CR 558; McWilliams v Holton (1967) 248 CA2d 447, 451, 56 CR 574. In John Hogan Enters. v Kellogg (1986) 187 CA3d 589, 231 CR 711, the court applied the doctrine in favor of a commercial landlord who refused to consent to assignment of a lease that provided for rent as a percentage of gross sales because the assignee projected lower gross sale than the existing tenant. It should be noted that all the cases cited above involved commercial leases. See also California Eviction Defense Manual §19.20 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

4

Counseling the Landlord

Nancy C. Lenvin

I. INTRODUCTION §4.1

II. RETAINER AGREEMENTS
- A. Written Fee Agreement §4.2
- B. Limited Scope Representation
  - 1. Applicable Law §4.2A
  - 2. Checklist: Landlord Fee Agreement §4.2B
- C. Disclosure Regarding Professional Liability Insurance §4.2C

III. SOLICITING AND CHOOSING TENANTS
- A. Advertising Vacant Units §4.3
- B. Identification of Tenant §4.3A
- C. Screening Applicants
  - 1. Purpose §4.4
  - 2. Written Rental Applications §4.5
    - a. Format of Application §4.6
    - b. Information Requested in Application §4.7
    - c. Checklist: Tenant Information §4.8
    - d. Credit Checks and Other Investigations §4.9
    - e. Form: Application to Rent (California Apartment Form 3.0-R Association) §4.10
  - 3. Screening Fees §4.11
  - 4. Verifying Application §4.12
  - 5. Responding to Inquiries §4.13
  - 6. Evaluating Application and Selecting Tenant
    - a. Antidiscrimination Requirements §4.14
    - b. Occupancy Limits §4.15
    - c. Minimum Income Standards; Verification of Income §4.15A
  - 7. Retaining Application §4.16

IV. MANDATORY DISCLOSURES RE ENVIRONMENTAL AND OTHER HAZARDS §4.16A
- A. Lead §4.16B
- B. Methamphetamine Contamination §4.16C
- C. Mold §4.16D
- D. Pest Control Disclosure Notice §4.16E

V. RENTAL AGREEMENT
- A. Advantages of Written Over Oral Agreement §4.17
- B. Use of Printed Rental Agreement Forms
  - 1. Advantages §4.18
  - 2. Disadvantages §4.19
- C. Drafting Considerations and Strategies
  - 1. Term Provisions: Periodic or Fixed-Term Tenancy
    - a. Distinctions §4.20
    - b. Anticipating Tenant's Failure to Vacate at End of Term §4.21
    - c. Effect of Rent Control §4.22
  - 2. Security Deposits
    - a. Characterization §4.23
    - b. Amount of Security Deposit §4.24
    - c. Interest on Security Deposit §4.25
    - d. Limits on Residential Landlord's Use of Security Deposits §4.26
    - e. Replenishment and Increase of Deposit During Tenancy §4.27
    - f. Return of Security Deposit §4.28
      - (1) Residential Tenancies

(a) Notice of Right to Inspection §4.28A
(b) Return of Deposit §4.28B
(2) Commercial Tenancies; Return of Deposit §4.28C
(3) Drafting Tips §4.28D
g. Effect of Termination of Landlord's Interest in Premises §4.29
3. Key Money; Commercial Tenancies §4.29A
4. Rent Provisions
a. Manner of Receiving Rent
(1) Form of Payment
(a) Personal Check or Cash Equivalent §4.30
(b) "Labor-for-Rent" Arrangements §4.31
(2) Date of Payment §4.32
(3) Mode of Delivery §4.33
b. Establishing Rent for Vacant Units §4.34
c. User Fees §4.35
d. Rent Increases §4.36
5. Federally Required Lead Disclosures and Abatement §4.37
6. Restrictions on Use of Premises §4.38
7. Waiver of Tenant's Rights §4.39
8. Parties to Lease; Occupants; Guests §4.40
a. Assignment and Subletting §4.40A
b. Vacancy Decontrol and Roommates §4.40B
9. Options to Renew §4.41
10. Utility Charges and Ratio Utility Billing
a. Jurisdiction §4.41A
b. Water and Sewer Billing Methods §4.41B
c. Gas and Electricity Charges §4.41C
d. Other Charges §4.41D
e. Miscellaneous Regulatory Issues §4.41E
11. Other Provisions
a. Attorney Fees §4.42
b. Landlord's Right of Entry §4.43
c. Late Fees §4.43A
d. Insurance §4.43B

VI. COPING WITH DRUG-RELATED AND FIREARM ACTIVITY ON THE PREMISES §4.44

VII. PROPERTY MANAGEMENT §4.45
A. Resident Property Managers
1. Employee or Independent Contractor? §4.46
2. Compensation §4.47
3. Termination and Eviction §4.48
B. Landlord's Liability for Acts of Manager §4.49
C. Making Repairs; Code Compliance §4.50
D. Security Deposit Issues on Termination of Tenancy §4.51

VIII. PRESALE AND DEVELOPMENT ISSUES §4.52

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.1 I. INTRODUCTION

Although advising landlords used to be a somewhat simple task with a readily accessible body of law, it has become a highly technical area fraught with traps for the unwary. This is particularly true in jurisdictions that have adopted residential rent and eviction controls (see chap 7). Advising landlords has become further complicated by seismic concerns that have triggered legislation requiring retrofitting of buildings, insurance coverage issues, and environmental issues, including the requirement that the landlord disclose the presence of toxic mold and lead (see §§3.11B, 4.16A-4.16D, 4.37, 4.43B).

The practitioner must have a clear understanding of the landlord's level of sophistication and goals. Moreover, the attorney must be aware of all local ordinances and of changes (both adopted and proposed) in state and local law and able to translate management concerns and potential problems into workable solutions. Even very experienced property owners often are not aware of uncertainties and potential problems concerning their rental properties. The practitioner should thus be sensitive to the existence of other problems that the client may experience, and must raise those issues with the client, even if they are not part of the problem that caused the client to seek legal assistance.

Balancing advice with advocacy is often difficult because many owners of residential rental units and management companies are reluctant to incur legal costs for anything but evictions. This reluctance is usually caused by depressed markets and psychological barriers. Nonetheless, the exposure for attorneys who fail to raise these issues may be substantial; attorneys must devise strategies for transmitting the necessary information to the client or confirming that the client has declined this advice.

© The Regents of the University of California

II. RETAINER AGREEMENTS

§4.2 A. Written Fee Agreement

As in other matters of legal representation, attorneys representing landlords should use written retainer agreements. The scope of the employment should be described in detail, whether the client is about to purchase real property, seeks management advice, or wants to pursue an eviction.

Under Bus & P C §6148(a), when the client is charged a fee on other than a contingency basis, a written agreement is required if:

- The client is not a corporation; and
- The total expense to the client is reasonably foreseen to exceed $1000.

The written agreement must:

- Specify any basis for compensation including but not limited to the hourly rate, statutory fees, or flat fees and other standard rates, fees, and charges applicable to the case; and
- Describe the general nature of the legal service to be provided and the responsibilities of the attorney and client.

When the agreement is entered into, the attorney must provide the client with a copy of the agreement, signed by all the parties. Bus & P C §6148(a). Failure to comply with §6148 renders the agreement voidable at the client's option; if the contract is voided, the attorney is entitled to collect a reasonable fee, presumably based on the value of services rendered. Bus & P C §6148(c). Such written agreements are considered confidential for purposes of the attorney-client privilege. Bus & P C §6149.

The eventual scope of representation is often unclear at the beginning of the attorney's employment. Given the complexity of the area, sound practice calls for the attorney to cover many topics in the initial discussion with the client and then to write a confirming letter setting forth the agreed scope of the work to be performed and the areas in which the client has declined assistance.

For evictions, the attorney should advise the client that the process may either be relatively short and inexpensive or long and expensive and that this is often beyond the control of the attorney or the client. Many attorneys require larger retainers for unlawful detainers than for other cases, because the attorney may have to invest substantial time in the case before the client receives the first bill.

Some attorneys charge set fees for particular work, such as preparing a rental agreement or prosecuting an uncontested unlawful detainer case. Setting a fair flat fee is difficult because the attorney can easily underestimate the number of hours that will be required. If the attorney charges a set fee for an eviction that is likely to be uncontested, the retainer agreement should specify the precise scope of the work covered by the fee. For example, the agreement should specify whether the fee includes:

- Court appearances;
- Briefs necessary if the case becomes contested; and
- Collection of a judgment.

The agreement should identify all persons to be evicted, and it should explain the consequences of failing to name a party who might later assert a claim of possession. See §9.35. In addition, the attorney should specify the number of consultations, in person or by telephone, that are included in the fee, and their length.

The retainer agreement should also provide that representation of the landlord in the unlawful detainer action does not obligate the attorney to defend the landlord if the tenant brings an affirmative action against the landlord. Similarly, the agreement should not provide that the attorney must take all action necessary to regain possession for the landlord, because this might compel the attorney to complete a second proceeding, or to pursue appeals, writs, or other procedural options. Such additional actions should be undertaken only with the client's full understanding of, and agreement to, the time and expense involved.

For a compendium of fee agreement forms along with useful comments to those forms and discussion of relevant law and ethical considerations, see Fee Agreement Forms Manual (2d ed Cal CEB 2007), which contains a sample fee agreement for representation of a residential landlord in an unlawful detainer action. On representation agreements generally, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 3 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Limited Scope Representation

§4.2A 1. Applicable Law

Limited scope representation (sometimes called "unbundling") is a "relationship between an attorney and a person seeking legal services in which they have agreed that the scope of the legal services will be limited to specific tasks the attorney will perform for the person." Cal Rules of Ct 3.35(a). It is increasingly used in landlord-tenant and family law cases. In most limited scope representation, the attorney and the client agree on which specific tasks the attorney will perform, which will thus be within the scope of the representation, and they agree that the client represents himself or herself in all other aspects of the matter. Less commonly, attorney and client agree that the attorney will handle one or more discrete issues from start to finish, and the client will assume responsibility for the other issues.

NOTE: The applicable Cal Rules of Ct 3.35-3.37 and accompanying Judicial Council Forms MC-950, MC-955—MC-956, and MC-958 became effective January 1, 2007.

Unlawful detainer actions are a prime area for unbundled services, both for tenants and landlords. While tenants traditionally have been unable to afford full representation, many practitioners find that low income landlords also need limited scope assistance to successfully pursue their remedies. Due to the procedural complexities of landlord-tenant law, the benefits of paying for some professional assistance becomes more obvious to litigants, as it significantly increases the likelihood of success and can save a litigant both time and money. As a result, landlord-tenant assistance can be a profit center for attorneys who can efficiently prepare a case for presentation and effectively coach the litigant. Since the laws governing this area of practice are highly localized and complex, this is a prime area where a qualified attorney can provide valuable assistance to a self-representing litigant.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.2B 2. Checklist: Landlord Fee Agreement

§4.2B 2. Checklist: Landlord Fee Agreement

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

Services that lend themselves to limited scope assistance for the landlord in the unlawful detainer context include:

- Identification of the elements of a claim and the evidence required to prove them.
- Preparing (or, at a minimum, reviewing) all pleadings and exhibits that will be filed in court, including the complaint, cover sheets, summons, request to set case for trial, and request for entry of default (or summary judgment motion). (A case can be delayed or thrown out for insufficient facts (or mistakes) in pleadings (see California Eviction Defense Manual §13.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993)), and this can be very costly in unlawful detainer actions.)
- Explaining state law that allows only parties to review court files and copy pleadings in the court file in unlawful detainer actions. Parties must always bring identification to court to examine the file. See CCP §1161.2.
- Determining whether pretrial discovery is required and whether counsel must assist in taking depositions or preparing interrogatories or demands for production of documents.
- Organizing the documentary evidence in a binder in the order of presentation, together with any foundational requirements.
- Scripting of the elements of the presentation.
- Scripting of cross-examination questions for the opposing side and other witnesses.
- Preparing an evidence binder for the judge, as well as a proposed judgment.
- Outlining procedural requirements and deadlines.
- Providing copies of statutes or other legal authorities, and/or drafting a trial brief.
- Attending or coaching in settlement conferences, including helping the client analyze the financial and other costs/benefits of any particular settlement option or term.
- Assisting with (by preparing or reviewing all court-filed papers in connection with) writs of execution and other postjudgment collection remedies.

Many attorneys use checklists to memorialize their discussions with the client and define the scope of the limited representation. The checklists are then attached to and incorporated into the fee agreement. If the parties make a change in the scope of the representation after entering into the initial agreement, the checklist should also be revised or replaced to document the changes that have been made. For a compilation of resources on limited scope representation, see the California Courts website at http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/programs/equalaccess/ethiss.htm#limited.

WARNING: Because it is necessary to describe the scope of the attorney's services specifically in writing, counsel should not use a full-service fee agreement when providing limited scope representation. See sample forms and checklists in Fee Agreement Forms Manual, chap 9 (2d ed Cal CEB 2007). If it becomes necessary during the case for counsel to substitute in as counsel of record under a full-service agreement, the form Substitution of Attorney—Civil (Without Court Order) (Judicial Council Form MC-050; Mandatory) must be used.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.2C C. Disclosure Regarding Professional Liability Insurance

§4.2C C. Disclosure Regarding Professional Liability Insurance

An attorney must disclose in writing the absence of professional liability insurance directly to a client at the outset of the attorney-client relationship when it is reasonably foreseeable that the total amount of time to be used in representing the client will exceed 4 hours. An attorney who does not provide this notice must inform the client in writing within 30 days of the date that the attorney subsequently knows or should know that he or she no longer has professional liability insurance. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-410.

© The Regents of the University of California

III. SOLICITING AND CHOOSING TENANTS

§4.3 A. Advertising Vacant Units

The rental of residential housing is regulated by state and federal laws prohibiting discrimination at every stage of the rental process, including the landlord's efforts to obtain tenants through advertisements. The Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631) prohibits any advertisement that indicates preference, limitation, or discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status, or national origin. 42 USC §3604(c); Holmgren v Little Village Community Reporter (ND Ill 1971) 342 F Supp 512 (advertisements soliciting tenants who speak specified foreign languages violate 42 USC §3604(c) by indicating preference based on national origin). The California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) prohibits advertising that discriminates on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, national origin, source of income, ancestry, marital status, familial status, or disability. Govt C §§12926(p), 12955(c). Under Govt C §12927(c)(2)(B), advertising for housing limited to persons of one sex to share living areas in a single dwelling unit is exempt from the prohibitions of Govt C §12955(c). For detailed discussion of state and federal laws prohibiting discrimination in housing, see chap 2.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.3A B. Identification of Tenant

There are times when a landlord is asked to rent a unit to one person but to allow a different person to occupy the unit. For example, a parent may request that the landlord rent the unit to the parent but allow the parent's child to be the occupant, or an employer may ask a landlord to rent it a unit and allow its employee to be the sole occupant of that unit. These situations, while initially attractive from a financial perspective, must be analyzed very carefully, or unexpected difficulties may arise during or at the end of the tenancy.

Attempting to withhold tenancy status from the occupant, even if the occupant is not a rent payer, may create significant liabilities for the landlord. In Spinks v Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments (2009) 171 CA4th 1004, 90 CR3d 453, the rental agreement was between an out-of-state employer and the landlord, and the occupant was in possession of the premises due to her employment. When the employment terminated, the occupant was instructed by her employer to vacate. When she failed to do so, the tenant-employer instructed the landlord to change the locks and remove the furniture, which the landlord did. The court held that a triable issue of fact existed as to whether the occupant was a third party beneficiary under the rental agreement between the landlord and tenant, which if found to exist would expose the landlord to claims for damages for breach of that contract, for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, as well as compensatory and punitive damages sounding in tort for disturbing the occupant's peaceable possession.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords should be advised never to use self-help to evict an occupant. In addition, landlords should consider characterizing the status of such an occupant as a subtenant and provide for notice, and even perhaps for the payment of rent, in the event the tenant named in the rental agreement fails to pay rent. In jurisdictions with just cause eviction controls, removing such an occupant might be extremely difficult. Therefore, it should be made clear in the rental agreement that the occupant has an obligation to pay the reserved rent, thereby providing the landlord a remedy against the occupant, as well as against the tenant, in the event the rent is not paid or some other breach of the rental agreement occurs.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Screening Applicants

§4.4 1. Purpose

The primary goal of the screening process is to find a desirable tenant, typically a stable occupant who is a good credit risk and will not damage the premises or disturb other tenants.

In depressed housing markets, landlords and management companies are often willing to accept less-than-qualified applicants to reduce their losses from vacant units. To assist the client in assessing the costs of a vacancy and of accepting an undesirable tenant, the attorney should be prepared to provide reasonable figures for the expense of evicting an undesirable tenant, particularly in jurisdictions with eviction controls where evictions for nuisance tenants are not only expensive and difficult, but often produce damage claims against a landlord if the suit for any reason is not successful. In tight markets, where rents are rising and vacancies are few, landlords should be cautioned not to appear biased in any way in their efforts to obtain the very best tenant for the highest rent.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.5 2. Written Rental Applications

The most common method of obtaining necessary information regarding prospective tenants is to use a written application. A written application signed by the applicant must be obtained before a landlord can obtain a credit check. It also benefits the landlord by providing a record of representations made by the tenant to obtain the rental unit. If the unit will be occupied by more than one adult, the landlord should obtain a separate application from each occupant to verify his or her financial capability and character. Since any court records in unlawful detainer actions are not available for checking until 60 days after the filing of a complaint pursuant to CCP §1161.2 (and never available if the defendant has "prevailed" in the action within that 60-day period), a written application that asks about prior evictions and the reasons why an applicant is seeking to move becomes even more crucial.

DRAFTING TIP: The rental agreement should incorporate the application by reference, and it should provide that the landlord may terminate the agreement on discovering that the tenant has made a material misrepresentation in the application. See §1.69.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.6 a. Format of Application

Preprinted rental application forms may be obtained from a variety of sources including local apartment owners associations (which are members of the statewide California Apartment Association) and stationery stores.

PRACTICE TIP: Clients should be cautioned to ensure that the tenant signs not only the application but also the actual rental agreement before moving into the unit. A rental agreement not signed by the tenant could be ineffective under the statute of frauds (if the lease is for a period of more than 1 year; see §4.17), or the tenancy could be found to be an unrestricted "oral tenancy."

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.7 b. Information Requested in Application

§4.7 b. Information Requested in Application

The information requested in a rental application should be tailored to meet the goals of the screening process, such as determining the applicant's ability to pay the rent, stability, responsibility, reputation, and character. In addition, the application should contain the applicant's express authorization for the landlord to:

- Contact all persons or firms named as references, former landlords, or employers; and
- Verify the contents of the application, including obtaining a credit report on the applicant.

Many landlord's attorneys urge their clients to obtain not only an express authorization, but also an express release of the landlord from any liability incurred in connection with the landlord's investigation of the applicant.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.8 c. Checklist: Tenant Information

§4.8 c. Checklist: Tenant Information

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

A written rental application form should request the following information regarding the prospective tenant:

- Current employer (including address and telephone number), salary, and length of employment;
- Sources of income (other than salary);
- Current liabilities;
- Previous landlords (including addresses and telephone numbers), length of prior tenancies, and reasons for leaving;
- Credit references;
- Names and dates of birth of all persons who will occupy the premises;
- Names of relatives or others to contact in case of emergency;
- Authorization for the landlord to contact references and verify the contents of the application; and
- Signature of the applicant and date of application.

See residential rental application form in §4.10. Note that the landlord may not use a tenant's source of income as a basis for rejecting the tenant. See §§2.49, 4.14, 4.15A.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.9 d. Credit Checks and Other Investigations

§4.9 d. Credit Checks and Other Investigations

The Consumer Credit Reporting Agencies Act (CCRAA) (CC §§1785.1-1785.35) and the Investigative Consumer Reporting Agencies Act (ICRAA) (CC §§1786-1786.56) impose requirements on landlords who use consumer credit or investigative reports as a basis for accepting or rejecting tenants. The CCRAA governs reports with information on a tenant's creditworthiness and the ICRAA governs reports with information on a tenant's character.

Within 3 days of requesting an investigative consumer report, the ICRAA (CC §1786.16(a)(3), (b)(1)) requires the landlord to:

- Disclose to the applicant that an investigative consumer report will be prepared on the applicant's character, general reputation, personal characteristics, and mode of living;
- Provide the applicant with a written form on which the applicant may request a copy of the report; if requested, the copy must be sent to the applicant within 3 business days of receipt; and
- Provide the applicant with the name and address of the agency preparing the report and a summary of the provisions of CC §1786.22, which govern the applicant's right to inspect the agency's files that contain information about the applicant.

A court of appeal held that the ICRAA is unconstitutionally vague as applied to tenant screening reports containing unlawful detainer information because a reasonable person cannot determine whether such information "constitutes 'character' information governed by the ICRAA or 'creditworthiness' information governed by the CCRAA." See Ortiz v Lyon Mgmt. Grp. (2007) 157 CA4th 604, 611, 69 CR3d 66. Accordingly, a landlord who obtains a screening report containing unlawful detainer information for the purpose of assessing a rental application does not violate the ICRAA if the landlord does not comply with CC §1786.16(a)(3), (b)(1).

PRACTICE TIP: Because the scope of the ruling in Ortiz is unclear, it is more prudent to advise landlord clients to comply with the ICRAA when ordering investigative reports on applicants. The Ortiz decision has extensive analysis of the interplay between the CCRAA and the ICRAA and the legislative history of both Acts.

If the landlord rejects the applicant or the rent is increased based on an investigative report, CC §1786.40(a) requires the landlord to include the name and address of the investigative reporting agency in the notice of rejection or rent increase sent to the applicant or tenant.

No prior notice is required under the CCRAA to access an applicant's credit report. But if the applicant is rejected because of information in the credit report, disclosures are mandated under CC §1785.20(a). Along with the notice of rejection, the owner must immediately send to the applicant:

- the name, address, and telephone number of the credit reporting agency;
- a statement that the decision to reject the applicant was based wholly or partially on information in the credit report;
- a statement that the applicant has a right to obtain, within 60 days, a free copy of the credit report from the agency and a right to dispute the accuracy of the information.

PRACTICE TIP: A landlord intending to report a defaulting tenant to a credit reporting agency, however, must give notice to the tenant, prior to or within 30 days after the landlord transmits the negative credit information, by personal delivery or first class mail to the tenant's last known address. CC §1785.26(c). See §§1.29, 13.75. Prospective notice should also be included in the rental agreement. See §1.43.

Under the CCRAA, a credit reporting agency must adopt reasonable procedures to assure the accuracy of information contained in the credit reports and investigate all consumer disputes. CC §§1785.14-1785.16. See §5.25A. Landlords should promptly respond to inquiries from credit reporting agencies, because a failure to respond will result in the disputed item being removed from the report. Similar dispute resolution procedures exist under the ICRAA for investigative reporting agencies. See CC §§1786.10-1786.30.

NOTE: A consumer has the right to place a security freeze on his or her credit report that prevents the agency from releasing the report without the consumer's consent. See CC §§1785.11.2, 1785.11.6. There are numerous exceptions; e.g., a freeze does not apply to public record data about the consumer collected by the agency.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.10 e. Form: Application to Rent (California Apartment Association Form 3.0-R)

§4.10 e. Form: Application to Rent (California Apartment Association Form 3.0-R)

APPLICATION TO RENT

❒Tenant
❒Guarantor

(all sections must be completed) Individual applications required from each occupant 18 years of age or older.

Last Name	First Name	Middle Name		Social Security Number
Other names used in the last 10 years		Work phone number ( )		Home phone number ( )
Date of birth	E-mail address			Mobile/Cell phone number ( )
Driver's license number	Expiration	State	Other ID

1.	Present address		City	State Zip
	Date in	Date out	Owner/Agent Name	Owner/Agent Phone number
	Reason for moving			Current rent $ /Month
2.	Previous address		City	State Zip
	Date in	Date out	Owner/Agent Name	Owner/Agent Phone number
	Reason for moving
3.	Next previous address		City	State Zip
	Date in	Date out	Owner/Agent Name	Owner/Agent Phone number
	Reason for moving

Proposed occupants List all in addition to yourself	Name	Name
	Name	Name
	Name	Name

Will you have pets?	Describe	Will you have a waterbed?	Describe

I ❒ am ❒ am not a member of the Armed Forces (including the National Guard and Reserves)

A.	Present occupation or source of income		Employer name
	How long with this employer?	Supervisor's phone number ( )	Employer address
	Name of your supervisor		City, State, Zip
B.	Prior occupation		Employer name
	How long with this employer?	Supervisor's phone number ( )	Employer address
	Name of your supervisor		City, State, Zip

Current gross income $ Per	Check one ❒ Week ❒ Month ❒ Year	Please list ALL of your financial obligations below.

Name of your bank	Branch or address

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

RECEIPT FOR TENANT SCREENING AND/OR CREDIT CHECKING FEES

On _____, Owner/Agent received $_____ from the undersigned, hereinafter called "Applicant," who offers to rent from Owner/Agent the premises located at:
(Date)

_____ , Unit # (if applicable) _____
(Street Address)

_____ , CA _____.
(City) (Zip)

Applicant authorizes verification of information supplied by Applicant via methods which may include, but are not limited to, tenant screening and credit checking.

California Apartment Association Approved Form
www.caanet.org
Form 3.0-R – Revised 1/07 - ©2007 – All Rights Reserved*
Page 1 of 2

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

Print

Name of Creditor	Address	Phone Number	Monthly Pymt. Amt.
		( )
		( )
		( )
		( )
		( )
		( )

In case of emergency, notify:	Address: Street, City, State, Zip	Relationship	Phone 1.
2.

Personal References:	Address: Street, City, State, Zip	Length of Acquaintance	Occupation	Phone 1.
2

Automobile: Make: _____ Model: _____ Year: _____ License #: _____

Automobile: Make: _____ Model: _____ Year: _____ License #: _____

Other motor vehicles: _____

Have you ever filed for bankruptcy? _____ Have you ever been evicted or asked to move? _____

Have you ever been convicted of selling, distributing or manufacturing illegal drugs? _____

Applicant represents that all the above statements are true and correct and hereby authorizes verification of the above items including, but not limited to, the obtaining of a credit report and agrees to furnish additional credit references upon request. Applicant consents to allow Owner/ Agent to disclose tenancy information to previous or subsequent Owners/Agents.

Owner/Agent will require a payment of $_____ , which is to be used to screen Applicant with respect to credit history and other background information. The amount charged is itemized as follows:

1. Actual cost of credit report, unlawful detainer (eviction) search, and/or other screening reports $_____
2. Cost to obtain, process and verify screening information (may include staff time and other soft costs) $_____
3. Total fee charged (cannot exceed $30 per applicant, which may be adjusted annually with the CPI as of 1-1-98)$ _____

The undersigned is applying to rent the premises designated as:

Apt. No. _____ Located at _____

The rent for which is $ _____ per _____. Upon approval of this application, and execution of a rental agreement or lease, the applicant shall pay all sums due, including required security deposit of $_____, before occupancy.

_____ _____

Date Applicant (signature required)

CALIFORNIA APARTMENT ASSOCIATION CODE FOR EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

The California Apartment Association supports the spirit and intent of all local, state and federal fair housing laws for all residents without regard to color, race, religion, sex, marital status, mental or physical disability, age, familial status, sexual orientation, or national origin.

The California Apartment Association reaffirms its belief that equal opportunity can best be accomplished through effective leadership, education, and the mutual cooperation of owners, managers, and the public.

Therefore, as members of the California Apartment Association, we agree to abide by the following provisions of this Code for Equal Housing Opportunity:

- We agree that in the rental, lease, sale, purchase, or exchange of real property, owners and their employees have the responsibility to offer housing accommodations to all persons on an equal basis.
- We agree to set and implement fair and reasonable rental housing rules and guidelines and will provide equal and consistent services throughout our residents' tenancy.
- We agree that we have no right or responsibility to volunteer information regarding the racial, creed, or ethnic composition of any neighborhood, and we do not engage in any behavior or action that would result in "steering."
- We agree not to print, display, or circulate any statement or advertisement that indicates any preference, limitations, or discrimination in the rental or sale of housing.

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

Payment is to be used to screen "Applicant" with respect to credit history and other background information. The amount charged is itemized as follows:

1. Actual cost of credit report, unlawful detainer (eviction) search, and/or other screening reports $_____
2. Cost to obtain, process and verify screening information (may include staff time and other soft costs) $_____
3. Total fee charged (cannot exceed $30 per applicant, which may be adjusted annually with the CPI as of 1-1-98) $_____

_____ _____

Date Applicant

_____ _____

Date Owner/Agent

California Apartment Association Approved Form
www.caanet.org
Form 3.0-R – Revised 1/07 - ©2007 – All Rights Reserved*
Page 2 of 2

Unauthorized Reproduction of Blank Forms is Illegal.

Comment: Each adult occupant should complete a separate rental application.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.11 3. Screening Fees

Under CC §1950.6(a), a landlord may charge an applicant for a residential rental a nonrefundable "screening fee" to cover the cost of obtaining information about the applicant, including personal reference checks, credit reports, screening reports, and other data. The screening fee is expressly excluded from the definition of an "advance fee" under Bus & P C §10026. CC §1950.6(j).

The amount of the screening fee is limited to the landlord's out-of-pocket costs of gathering the information, not to exceed $30 per applicant, and it may include the cost of the credit check and the reasonable value of administrative costs of the landlord or the landlord's agent. CC §1950.6(b). The $30 limit may be increased by the same percentage increase as that of the Consumer Price Index, beginning January 1, 1998. A landlord who knows or should have known that no rental unit is available may not charge a screening fee unless the applicant consents in writing. CC §1950.6(c). The landlord must provide the applicant with a receipt itemizing the expenditures and the time spent by the landlord in obtaining the information (CC §1950.6(d)) and, if requested, a copy of the credit report (CC §1950.6(f)). A landlord who does not perform a personal reference check or obtain a credit report must return any unused portion of the fee. CC §1950.6(e).

Before CC §1950.6 was enacted, tenants claimed that the application fee became part of their security deposits once they were accepted as tenants. Civil Code §1950.6 allows landlords to charge nonrefundable application fees without concern about claims that the fee is part of the security deposit, provided that all requirements of §1950.6 have been met. Fees not expressly sanctioned by §1950.6 are probably suspect. See amendments to definition of "security" in CC §1950.5(b), made under Stats 2002, ch 1061, §1, discussed in §4.23.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.12 4. Verifying Application

The landlord should be aware that California's Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) prohibits the owner of a housing accommodation (as defined in the Act) from making or causing to be made any written or oral inquiry regarding the race, color, religion, sex (which includes pregnancy, childbirth, and gender identity and expression), sexual orientation, source of income, marital status, national origin, ancestry, familial status, or disability of any rental applicant. Govt C §§12926(p), 12955(b). Therefore, when verifying a rental application, the landlord must not solicit such information from any persons contacted.

In light of changes in credit reporting disclosure requirements (see §4.9), a landlord should keep good records on information obtained about prospective tenants, including actual reports from a credit reporting agency or an organization that provides information on unlawful detainer actions.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords should be counseled to minimize the risk of liability (based on fair housing and application denial disclosure laws) by establishing written application criteria, forms, and procedures and follow them consistently with all applicants. Recommend keeping records for a period of four years after the acceptance of the first qualified applicant.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.13 5. Responding to Inquiries

A landlord who is asked to provide a reference for a tenant or information about a tenant must be careful to provide accurate, truthful information.

A landlord who provides false information that causes another landlord to reject an applicant tenant, or that otherwise injures a prospective tenant, could be liable to the tenant for defamation. CC §46(5). When the information is given in response to a query from a prospective landlord, the communication is probably entitled to a qualified privilege (i.e., the communication is actionable only if the landlord acted with malice). See CC §47(c). See also Lesperance v North Am. Aviation, Inc. (1963) 217 CA2d 336, 341, 31 CR 873, (communication from plaintiff's former employer entitled to qualified privilege when given in response to request from prospective employer).

If a former landlord misleadingly gives a good recommendation about a defaulting or problem tenant primarily to get rid of that tenant, under basic tort principles the landlord may be liable to the new landlord who relies on the information and is damaged. As under employment law, a landlord may refuse to give a reference if the landlord's policy is to provide neither good nor bad references and only to confirm that the tenant lived in the premises and the dates of occupancy.

© The Regents of the University of California

6. Evaluating Application and Selecting Tenant

§4.14 a. Antidiscrimination Requirements

When devising a method of evaluating rental applications and selecting a tenant, the landlord must be aware of the federal and state laws that prohibit discrimination in residential housing. These laws, discussed in detail in chap 2, are the following:

- Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981-1982), which prohibits discrimination in housing on the basis of race (42 USC §1982; see §§2.41-2.47);
- Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631), which prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status, or national origin (42 USC §3604; see §§2.30-2.40); and
- California's Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996), which prohibits discrimination on the basis of marital status, disability, gender identity and expression, sexual orientation, source of income, and ancestry, as well as on the bases enumerated in 42 USC §3604 (Govt C §§12926(p), 12955; Pen C §422.56; see §§2.49-2.56).

In addition, the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51), which expressly prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex, gender identity and expression, pregnancy, childbirth, race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, disability, medical condition, marital status, or sexual orientation, prohibits all arbitrary discrimination, even when it is not based on one of the classifications listed in or incorporated into CC §51. See uncodified declarations of the legislature in Stats 2005, ch 420, §2; In re Cox (1970) 3 C3d 205, 90 CR 24. See also §§2.57-2.59. Persons protected under the Unruh Act include those who are perceived to have any particular characteristic of the listed classes in the Act or who associate with persons who have, or are perceived to have, any such characteristic. CC §51(e)(5).

On screening tenants using income information other than "source of income," see §4.15A.

NOTE: The City of Escondido, California passed an ordinance in 2006 that penalizes landlords for renting to undocumented immigrants. If a written complaint is filed with the City alleging an undocumented immigrant is living in a property, the landlord is notified in writing of the complaint. If the City verifies that the resident is not legal, then the landlord must correct the violation. Failure to correct the violation will result in the loss of the landlord's business license. The ordinance has been challenged in the courts. See chap 2.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.15 b. Occupancy Limits

Practitioners should advise their landlord clients of the risks associated with setting limits on the number of tenants who can reside in the premises and the criteria used to make those determinations. Such limitations may be held to constitute discrimination against families with children in violation of the Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601, 3604(a)); HUD regulations (see 24 CFR §§100.50-100.90); the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51), and many local ordinances. See, e.g., Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 180 CR 496. In Pfaff v HUD (9th Cir 1996) 88 F3d 739, the court held that a reasonable numerical occupancy limit established by the landlord rebutted a prima facie case of discrimination. The court further held that HUD had acted arbitrarily and capriciously and ordered the administrative procedure dismissed. Pfaff may provide some comfort to landlords who establish reasonable occupancy limits, but the cost of asserting and proving reasonableness is probably prohibitive for most property owners.

Landlords should encourage and track efforts at the state and national level to have legislation passed that would establish "safe harbor" numerical occupancy standards. Such standards would prevent arguments that building code occupancy standards (which permit an unusually large number of persons in dwelling units) should be used to determine whether discrimination against families has occurred. The real estate industry is seeking the enactment of a reasonable occupancy standard, i.e., two persons per bedroom, that would be presumed to comply with the fair housing laws. For further discussion of occupancy limits, see §2.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.15A c. Minimum Income Standards; Verification of Income

The Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996), which prohibits discrimination on the basis of a tenant's source of income (Govt C §12955; see §§2.49, 4.14), does not prohibit a landlord from establishing reasonable income standards (see §2.9). Minimum income standards were upheld in 1991 by the supreme court in Harris v Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C3d 1142, 278 CR 614. Nor does the FEHA require a landlord to accept a tenant for whom the government will pay rent in the form of a subsidy directly to the landlord, such as a tenant with a Section 8 voucher (see §2.17). But if the landlord accepts a Section 8 tenant, the landlord must follow established guidelines for nondiscrimination in applying minimum income requirements for the tenancy. See §2.9A.

A landlord may verify a tenant's length of employment and the source and the amount of the tenant's income. The FEHA, however, requires the landlord to consider the combined income of each tenant applying for the unit together on the same basis as the landlord considers the aggregate income of married persons living together. Govt C §12955(n). See §2.9C.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.16 7. Retaining Application

Landlords should be encouraged to retain the rental application for at least 10 years as part of their regular record keeping and to update the information. Such record keeping may assist in finding and serving a defaulting tenant. See generally Debt Collection Practice in California (2d ed Cal CEB 1999).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.16A IV. MANDATORY DISCLOSURES RE ENVIRONMENTAL AND OTHER HAZARDS

§4.16A IV. MANDATORY DISCLOSURES RE ENVIRONMENTAL AND OTHER HAZARDS

Heightened awareness of problems that can arise from various substances has resulted in additional regulation of matters that must be disclosed to a tenant prior to the tenant signing a rental agreement and taking occupancy of a rental unit. Additionally, there are other community issues that also sometimes come to the forefront and require disclosure to tenants. See §§4.16B-4.16E. See also §1.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.16B A. Lead

For all buildings that were built prior to 1978, the federal Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) requires that all owners of residential property that is to be rented to others disclose any known lead-based paint and related hazards. Additionally, each owner is required to provide to each tenant a copy of the EPA pamphlet "Protect Your Family From Lead in Your Home." The tenant is obliged to sign an acknowledgment of receipt of the pamphlet and the owner is required to keep a copy of that acknowledgment. See §§1.29, 1.77, 4.37 for more details on federal requirements.

Many localities, particularly those with many pre-1978 buildings (e.g., San Francisco), have adopted similar rules about disclosures and have prepared booklets that must be given to tenants. These booklets often advise both owners and tenants to be extremely careful about making repairs to walls, windows, or doors that probably contain lead-based paint.

There is increasing litigation over damages caused to children by lead-based paint and frequent attempts to obtain statewide regulation governing contractors, building maintenance, and health issues related to lead-based paint. See, e.g., Health & S C §§105251-105257, which establish as crimes certain activities relating to lead-related construction courses, lead-related construction work or abatement, and lead hazard evaluation. Note that the definition of "untenantable" in CC §1941.1 includes the presence of lead hazards as described in Health & S C §§17920.3 or 17920.10.

PRACTICE TIP: Owners should check their insurance policies for coverage of claims for injuries sustained as a result of lead contamination, make sure that all employees are trained in how to handle repairs where lead-based paint is involved, and hire contractors who have obtained special certification and training in handling both painting and repairs if there is a high degree of likelihood that lead-based paint is present.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.16C B. Methamphetamine Contamination

§4.16C B. Methamphetamine Contamination

Effective January 1, 2006, Health & S C §§25400.10-25400.47 established disclosure, remediation, and recordkeeping obligations for a property owner after the owner has been notified by a local health officer that the property is contaminated by methamphetamine. Effective January 1, 2010, the level of methamphetamine allowed on an indoor surface of the premises to be considered safe for human occupancy was increased from 0.1 micrograms per 100 square centimeters to 1.5 micrograms. Health & S C §25400.16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.16D C. Mold

Mold and the related health problems that can occur have been the subject of increased attention by lawmakers at both the local and state levels. See §3.11B. Increased publicity about health problems that arise from mold have made tenants more aware of the problem. There are different strains of mold, each having different effects. The problem seems to be worse in newer buildings that have been constructed in a way that seals the interiors of the structures so that air cannot travel between the interior spaces and the outside. Most mold grows in spaces where moisture cannot escape so that the spaces do not become fully dry.

Landlords are well advised to check their insurance policies to determine whether there is coverage for mold-related claims from tenants. Moreover, landlords should treat complaints about mold very seriously and respond in appropriate ways to remove the substance and to ensure that all bathrooms and other areas are both well ventilated and sealed from water intrusions (e.g., around windows, sinks, showers, and bathtubs). In addition, landlords should provide instructions to tenants about ventilating bathrooms and kitchens and require that tenants report to the landlord or manager any signs of mold.

At present, there is no mandatory statewide requirement to disclose mold issues on residential or commercial buildings, but any mold growth that causes personal injury or property damage is actionable. See §§3.11B, 3.48A. Some local jurisdictions have adopted regulations. There are experts in the field who will come to inspect an apartment or a building that has experienced a mold problem. A list of such experts may be available from local health departments or the California Apartment Association. Training classes also exist to teach maintenance personnel and owners how to deal with mold problems.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.16E D. Pest Control Disclosure Notice

§4.16E D. Pest Control Disclosure Notice

Before the tenancy begins, each new tenant must be given a copy of the notice provided by a registered structural pest control company under Bus & P C §8538 if the owner has executed a contract for periodic pest control service for the premises. See §1.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. RENTAL AGREEMENT

§4.17 A. Advantages of Written Over Oral Agreement

Written rental agreements benefit all parties, because having a written document often removes areas of dispute. If the term of a lease is more than one year, the statute of frauds requires that the lease be in writing. CC §1624(a)(3). Although an agent of either party may sign the writing, the agent must have written authority, subscribed by the principal, to do so. CC §1624(a)(3). (For further discussion of the applicability of the statute of frauds to residential leases, see §1.13.)

Using a written agreement also allows inclusion of an "entire agreement" provision (see §1.78), which makes it difficult for a tenant to claim the existence of representations, oral agreements, or lost contemporaneous written agreements concerning the tenancy.

Presumably, an oral lease could include a provision for attorney fees, but proving the existence of such a provision would be difficult. A written agreement allows the landlord to obtain attorney fees in an action for unlawful detainer or breach of the agreement, although it also entitles the tenant to attorney fees if the tenant prevails in an unlawful detainer or other action (see §4.47).

In a jurisdiction with an ordinance that permits only "good cause" evictions, or that lists permitted causes for eviction (see §§7.54-7.76), a written rental agreement may be especially advantageous to the landlord. Many local ordinances that restrict evictions permit eviction for a breach of the rental agreement. See §7.57. Therefore, the landlord should include in the written rental agreement all covenants and restrictions that apply to the tenancy. See §§1.31, 4.38. Some local ordinances enumerate permissible grounds for eviction, such as "habitual late payment of rent" or "interference with comfort, safety, and enjoyment of landlord or other tenants in the building." The landlord may include in the rental agreement these by requiring that the tenant comply with all laws or may include them in the language of the local ordinance.

DRAFTING TIP: For important provisions, for which the landlord is prepared to go to the expense of an eviction, the rental agreement should recite that breach of the provision will be considered a material breach of the agreement. In addition, if the standard for eviction in the local ordinance is vague, the rental agreement may set forth a detailed standard for material breach. For example, if "habitual late payment of rent" is a permitted ground for eviction, the agreement could provide that the parties agree that the late payment of rent three times in any 12-month period will constitute such habitual late payment of rent.

Regardless of the provisions of local ordinances, it may be difficult for a landlord to evict a tenant for a minor breach. Although in Hignell v Gebala (1949) 90 CA2d 61, 66, 202 P2d 378, the court held that it would not examine the extent of a breach in an unlawful detainer action if the tenant's breach is willful, it also held that a willful breach does not in itself preclude a tenant from obtaining relief from forfeiture (90 CA2d at 71). See also McNeece v Wood (1928) 204 C 280, 285, 267 P 877 (trivial breach will not support forfeiture). Another practical danger is that a landlord who attempts to evict a tenant for a trivial breach is vulnerable to a charge that the dominant motive for the eviction is an unlawful one, camouflaged by the allegation that the tenant has committed a minor breach.

Finally, certain intended restrictions will not apply to the tenancy unless they are set forth in the rental agreement. See Keating v Preston (1940) 42 CA2d 110, 115, 108 P2d 479, 482. Important examples include prohibitions against assignment and subletting and restrictions on use of the premises. Proving that such restrictions were agreed to may be an impossible task; in the absence of a lease provision to the contrary, a tenant is free to assign or sublet. See Kassan v Stout (1973) 9 C3d 39, 43, 106 CR 783 (assignment); Chandler v Hart (1911) 161 C 405, 414, 119 P 516 (sublease).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Use of Printed Rental Agreement Forms

§4.18 1. Advantages

Preprinted rental agreements prepared by associations of landlords, notably those from the California Apartment Association (CAA) and its constituent member associations, are usually more than adequate to meet the needs of most property owners and have been tailored for rent control jurisdictions in which lawyers have developed means for providing protection to property owners under the local ordinances. While most large owners still use forms prepared by their own lawyers and that are tailored for their particular buildings, the CAA preprinted forms (see §§1.25-1.26, 1.80-1.81) are often very useful because they represent the industry standard and are very convenient to use.

PRACTICE TIP: The technique of providing definitions in a lease form for terms found in local rent control ordinances has proven extremely helpful. For example, most eviction control ordinances allow an eviction when the tenant has been "habitually late" in paying the rent. Placing a reasonable standard in the rental agreement for what constitutes "habitually late payment of rent" gives tenants notice of what may occur if they undertake certain conduct and provides a contractual standard most courts will uphold if and when such a case goes to trial. This may avoid the problem of the landlord's having to convince a court what the term "habitually late" means.

Preprinted lease forms commonly used by landlords are reproduced in §§1.80-1.85. Attorney-drafted lease clauses are in §§1.37-1.79.

A landlord may adapt a printed lease form by adding, amending, or deleting specific provisions. Such forms generally have space for additional terms and provisions. If the space is insufficient, the landlord may type additional provisions on an addendum to the lease.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.19 2. Disadvantages

The most common and dangerous pitfall in the use of older printed rental agreement forms, or those not produced for the California residential market, is that the forms frequently contain outdated, or unenforceable, provisions. This problem is diminishing with the depletion of merchants' stock of older printed forms, but it continues to exist because not all publishers have deleted illegal provisions or kept up with changes in the law. A landlord who innocently relies on a form containing invalid provisions may take actions prejudicial to his or her interests on the apparent strength of the rental agreement. Therefore, landlords' attorneys should encourage their clients not only to submit forms to them for an initial review, but to obtain periodic updates, as well.

Provisions that are wholly or partially unenforceable, but that commonly appear in printed lease forms, include:

- the landlord's right to enter a rental unit at will, without notice to the tenant or without cause (see §§3.2-3.4);
- the tenant's waiver of several statutory rights or the right to withhold rent for breach of the implied warranty of habitability (see §3.14);
- the landlord's, but not the tenant's, right to recover attorney fees (see §§4.42, 13.25); and
- restrictions on the number of tenants who may occupy the unit (see §4.40).

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Drafting Considerations and Strategies

1. Term Provisions: Periodic or Fixed-Term Tenancy

§4.20 a. Distinctions

In addition to deciding whether the rental agreement will be written or oral, the landlord must determine whether the tenancy term will be periodic (e.g., from month to month) or fixed (sometimes referred to as a "term for years"). A key distinction between the two is the manner in which the terms may be renewed or terminated.

For a periodic tenancy, the term is presumed to be equivalent to the period chosen by the parties for the payment of rent. CC §1944. For example, the tenancy is presumed to be from month to month if the rent is paid monthly and there is no evidence of an agreement for a term of another length. A periodic tenancy is renewed automatically if the lessor accepts rent from the lessee unless either party gives notice of termination at least equal to (a) the term of the hiring, or (b) as provided by statute, whichever is less. See CC §§1945, 1946, 1946.1. See §§1.9, 8.69.

A fixed-term tenancy terminates at the end of the term unless the lease provides for automatic conversion to a month-to-month tenancy or the tenant holds over and the landlord accepts rent. There is no presumption of renewal if the landlord does not accept rent from a tenant who stays in possession after the tenancy terminates. CC §1945. See §1.10. In jurisdictions without eviction controls, the landlord may institute an unlawful detainer action immediately if the tenant holds over past the end of the fixed term, without notifying the tenant before filing the action. In jurisdictions with eviction controls, the mere fact of "holding over" after expiration of the term is probably not just cause to evict, and the landlord will probably be required to have some other good cause for seeking to evict the tenant. See §7.54.

If the landlord accepts rent from the tenant after the fixed term has expired, the tenancy is presumed to continue on the same terms and conditions as under the fixed-term lease except that the duration of the tenancy is determined by the pattern of rent payment (e.g., monthly payments create a month-to-month tenancy) and is limited to one year. CC §1945; Renner v Huntington-Hawthorne Oil & Gas Co. (1952) 39 C2d 93, 244 P2d 895. See §3.64.

DRAFTING TIP: It is helpful for landlords to provide in the lease that on expiration of its term the tenancy converts to a month-to-month agreement only with the written consent of the landlord. This gives the landlord the option to renew the lease by service of written notice, or to allow the lease to terminate by its own terms, in which case the tenant would become a tenant at sufferance and subject to an unlawful detainer action. See §1.44. Otherwise, under CC §1945.5, a clause in a fixed-term lease that provides for automatic renewal or extension of the lease if the tenant remains in possession after the lease terminates, or fails to give notice of intent not to renew, is voidable by the party that did not prepare the lease unless the clause meets certain requirements regarding type size and location and contains a separate statement that such a clause is in the lease. A tenant may not waive this protection. CC §1945.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.21 b. Anticipating Tenant's Failure to Vacate at End of Term

For both periodic and fixed-term tenancies, the landlord should anticipate the problem that the existing tenant may hold-over, thus making the landlord unable to deliver possession of the premises to a new tenant on a certain date.

DRAFTING TIP: This problem can be solved by providing in the new rental agreement that there is no liability to the new tenant if the landlord is unable to deliver possession of the premises and that the inability to deliver is not the fault of the landlord. Such clauses usually provide, however, that the tenant may terminate the rental agreement if the landlord is unable to deliver possession of the premises within a specified number of days. See §1.72.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.22 c. Effect of Rent Control

The existence of a rent control ordinance ordinarily should not affect a landlord's decision whether to rent for a fixed term or on a month-to-month basis. If a fixed term is selected, however, the landlord should include in the rental agreement a provision entitling the landlord to increase the rent during the term by any increases that might be approved by the local rent control authority. Although local rent control ordinances supersede rental agreements on such matters as maximum rent increases and grounds for eviction, they do not affect contracts that have set the rent for a period of time.

Under the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535), most landlords can raise rents when an apartment becomes vacant. In a jurisdiction that (on or before January 1, 1995) had adopted a vacancy control type of rent control, however, the landlord may not raise the rent to market rate if the landlord (1) terminated the prior tenancy by a notice under CC §1946 or §1946.1; (2) effected a termination by canceling a government rent subsidy contract or giving a notice changing the terms of tenancy under CC §827 (see §§3.65-3.65B); or (3) received a notice that the dwelling unit contains serious health, safety, fire, or building code violations that have been unabated for at least 60 days after governmental citation. CC §1954.50. See §§4.34, 7.4, 7.25-7.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Security Deposits

§4.23 a. Characterization

Landlords should be encouraged to require and retain an adequate security deposit and to characterize it as a "security deposit" in the rental agreement. The laws on security deposits, screening or application fees, and key money that can be levied by a landlord vary greatly between residential tenancies (see CC §§1950.5-1950.6) and nonresidential tenancies (see CC §§1950.7-1950.8).

All payments, fees, deposits, or other charges (except for regular rent installments and screening fees (see §4.11)) paid by a residential tenant that are imposed "at the beginning of the tenancy to be used to reimburse the landlord for costs associated with processing a new tenant," or that are imposed "as an advance payment of rent, used or to be used for any purpose," are considered to be "security." CC §1950.5(b). More importantly, "nonrefundable" security is prohibited for residential tenancies. CC §1950.5(m).

All payments intended to be held as security for the performance by the tenant during the tenancy are considered to be a security deposit and fall under the provisions of CC §1950.5. Such payments (e.g., cleaning fees, key deposits) are subject to §1950.5 and may not be characterized as "nonrefundable." Up-front fees to compensate the landlord for costs incurred in the leasing process (other than the $30 screening fee allowed by CC §1950.6 (see §4.11)) are also within the scope of §1950.5. Early cases held that any money taken from a person who becomes a tenant was subject to CC §1950.5 (see, e.g., People ex rel Smith v Parkmerced Co. (1988) 198 CA3d 683, 244 CR 22). Then the California Supreme Court, in Kraus v Trinity Mgmt. Servs. (2000) 23 C4th 116, 96 CR2d 485, held that only money taken "to secure the landlord against future tenant defaults" was subject to §1950.5. 23 C4th at 141. The expanded definition of "security" in CC §1950.5(b) (see Stats 2002, ch 1061, §1), however, includes money collected at the beginning of the tenancy for reimbursing the landlord for new tenant processing costs, and supersedes that particular ruling in Kraus. See also discussion of statutory framework in §§8.167-8.169.

Commercial tenancies have different rules on security deposits, and the law prohibits the collection of key money unless it is disclosed in writing. See CC §§1950.7-1950.8, discussed in §§4.28C, 4.29A, 8.167-8.176.

DRAFTING TIPS:

- All advance deposits should be called "security deposits" so that the landlord's use of the deposit is limited only by the provisions of applicable law. If, for example, the deposit were characterized as "last month's rent," it could not be used toward the cost of repairing any damage caused by the tenant.
- It is also advisable to provide that the security deposit may not be used by the tenant for the last month's rent to ensure that the funds will be available for repairs or other uses at the expiration of the tenancy.
- If an evaluation of a landlord's standard lease reveals provisions that violate CC §1950.5, the client should be advised to revise them (including giving a 30-day notice to effect the change) to avoid a class action suit by tenants. See, e.g., Granberry v Islay Invs. (1984) 161 CA3d 382, 207 CR 652.
- From a tax standpoint, the landlord generally benefits by labeling deposits as "security" rather than "last month's rent." See Clinton Hotel Realty Corp. v Commissioner (5th Cir 1942) 128 F2d 968.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.24 b. Amount of Security Deposit

The total security demanded or received by a landlord for a residential rental may not exceed an amount equal to two months' rent on an unfurnished unit and an amount equal to three months' rent on a furnished unit. CC §1950.5(c). Rent paid in advance by the tenant toward the first month of the tenancy does not count toward the maximum security permitted. Civil Code §1947.3 provides that a landlord may not demand cash for a security deposit. See §1.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.25 c. Interest on Security Deposit

State law does not impose any obligation on the landlord to pay interest on tenant deposits (Korens v R.W. Zukin Corp. (1989) 212 CA3d 1054, 261 CR 137) or to segregate them from other assets.

Some local ordinances, however, require payment of interest on deposits, regardless of whether the deposit is characterized as a security deposit or as last month's rent. Such ordinances typically require that a tenant be given the unpaid accrued interest either in a direct payment or as a credit against the rent.

DRAFTING TIP: The rental agreement should specify either the manner in which interest on the security deposit must be paid or that no interest will be paid. Any such provision should also provide that payment of interest will continue only as long as it is legally required.

A direct payment is preferable to a credit because the landlord's check creates a written record that may serve as evidence if a dispute arises in the future. Some ordinances provide remedies for failure to pay interest and the failure to pay may affect the validity of a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit. See §8.37. Tenants often argue that the landlord's failure to pay interest entitles them to a rent offset and may even assert the defense in an unlawful detainer action. This argument may be significant when the landlord serves a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit, because such notices must state the precise amount of rent due. See §8.37. If the landlord neglects to take his or her failure to pay interest into consideration, the notice may actually overstate the amount of rent due.

PRACTICE TIP: There are no reported decisions upholding the validity of such a defense as applied to interest on deposits, but landlords can avoid the defense altogether by attaching a check for the unpaid interest to the 3-day notice to pay rent or quit.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.26 d. Limits on Residential Landlord's Use of Security Deposits

Civil Code §1950.5 is subject to opposing interpretations by residential landlord and tenant attorneys and judges. It is generally agreed that this section is poorly written and ambiguous; i.e., it is unclear on the purposes for which the landlord may use a security deposit. See the dissenting opinion in People ex rel Smith v Parkmerced Co. (1988) 198 CA3d 683, 244 CR 22. Tenant lawyers argue that CC §1950.5(e)-(f) limits the use of the deposit to the following:

- Rent defaults;
- Repair of damages to the premises, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear, caused by the tenant or the tenant's guest or licensee;
- Cleaning of the premises on termination of the tenancy; and
- Remedying tenant defaults in any obligation under the rental agreement to restore, replace, or return personal property or appurtenances, exclusive of ordinary wear and tear, if authorized by the rental agreement.

Landlord attorneys, on the other hand, argue that because subdivision (b) describes the deposit as being "used or to be used for any purpose, including, but not limited to, any of the following" before listing the above-stated specific uses (see CC §1950.5(b)), the legislature implied that the security deposit may also be used for other unpaid monetary obligations of the tenant arising out of the lease, e.g., late charges, insufficient check charges, attorney fees, and litigation and other costs. Landlords should use the lease or rental agreement to clarify intentions regarding use of the security.

Although neither the legislature in Stats 2002, ch 1061, §1 (expanding the definition of "security;" see §4.23) nor the supreme court in Kraus v Trinity Mgmt. Servs. (2000) 23 C4th 116, 141, 96 CR2d 485, addressed this issue directly, this distinction made by the court in Kraus arguably supports the narrow interpretation of CC §1950.5(e) urged by tenant attorneys (23 C4th at 141):

> Subdivision (e) specifies the only uses to which such fees may be put by the landlord, again confirming that the "fee, deposit, or charge" which may be a security within the subdivision (b) definition is one held by the landlord to ensure reimbursement for future tenant defaults.

The ambiguities in CC §1950.5 affect two crucial areas on the collection and refund of security deposits, namely:

- How broadly the scope of the term "security" is defined for characterizing as "nonrefundable" fees and deposits (other than rent) collected by the landlord (see CC §1950.5(a)); and
- The actual uses to which the landlord may apply the fees and deposits at the application stage, throughout the rental term on the tenant's default, or at the end of the tenancy (see CC §1950.5(e)).

Because these issues are essentially two sides of the same coin, the legislature or the courts must eventually reconcile the provisions of subdivisions (a), (e), and (f), which directly contradict each other despite the 2002 and 2003 legislative reform. See also §§8.167-8.168, 8.172A, 8.173A.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.27 e. Replenishment and Increase of Deposit During Tenancy

Some rental agreements include covenants by the tenant to replenish any security applied by the landlord during the tenancy to rent defaults or repair of damage caused by the tenant. Enforcement of such a provision would ensure that the landlord holds the maximum security permitted under CC §1950.5(c) throughout the tenancy. Some agreements also provide that, on 30 days' notice, the landlord may require that the security be increased to the maximum amount permitted by law. This provision would allow the landlord to increase the security whenever rent for the unit is increased. See §1.50.

CAUTION: Replenishment of deposit clauses have been challenged by tenant advocates on the argument that they constitute a rent increase in rent-controlled jurisdictions or violate the spirit or actual interpretation of CC §1950.5. Careful drafting of the rental agreement may avoid such arguments. See chap 1. On demanding cash payment of security deposits, see §4.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.28 f. Return of Security Deposit

§4.28 f. Return of Security Deposit

The security deposit laws require substantial documentation and notices to tenants, especially in residential tenancies.

© The Regents of the University of California

(1) Residential Tenancies

§4.28A (a) Notice of Right to Inspection

Within a reasonable time after one party gives the other notice of termination of a residential tenancy, or before the expiration of the lease term, CC §1950.5(f) requires the landlord to

- notify the tenant of the option to request and attend an inspection that allows the parties to identify the deficiencies in the premises caused by the tenant; and
- if the tenant requests the inspection, provide the tenant with an itemized list of potential deductions from the security, excepting ordinary wear and tear, and give the tenant an opportunity to remedy the identified deficiencies.

The inspection requirement does not apply to terminations caused by the tenant's default in the payment of rent (CCP §1161(2)), the tenant's breach of a covenant or condition of the rental agreement (CCP §1161(3)), or the tenant's committing waste or nuisance or subletting in violation of the agreement (CCP §1161(4)). See CC §1950.5(f)(1), (q).

For practice tips and further details and discussion of the inspection process, and a form notice of right to inspection, see §§4.51, 8.172A-8.172B.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.28B (b) Return of Deposit

In residential tenancies and within three weeks after a tenant who has paid a security deposit vacates the premises, CC §1950.5(g) requires the landlord to

- deliver to the tenant, by personal delivery or first class mail, an itemized statement, including expense receipts, of the amount of, and basis for, any security retained; and
- return any unused portion of the security to the tenant.

NOTE: A preliminary itemized statement, separate from the one described in §1950.5(g) is required if the tenant requests an inspection before vacating the premises; see §§4.28A, 8.172A.

These deduct/refund obligations in residential tenancies, including extensive documentation of the landlord's expenses, involve detailed procedures that were made even more complex by legislation enacted in 2002 and 2003. See discussion of CC §1950.5(e)-(k) in §§8.172-8.173F.

As a practical matter, it may be difficult for the landlord to comply with CC §1950.5(g), particularly if damage to the premises is substantial. The landlord may know or believe that the damage exceeds the deposit, but may not be able to obtain a job order or final bill within the 3-week period. If so, the landlord should at least obtain or make a good faith estimate for the repairs and follow procedures in CC §1950.5(g)(3), discussed in §§8.173D-8.173F. The supreme court held that a landlord who in good faith failed to comply with the 3-week refund period in CC §1950.5 could set off amounts due for unpaid rent, repairs, and cleaning costs against any money due the tenant as a refund of the security deposit. Granberry v Islay Invs. (1995) 9 C4th 738, 38 CR2d 650. The court reasoned that the remedy provided in §1950.5 for a landlord's bad faith retention of a security deposit (see §8.174) implied that the legislature did not intend to penalize landlords for good faith retention.

On remedies for landlord's breach, see §8.174. On effect of retained security on unlawful detainer actions, see §8.176.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.28C (2) Commercial Tenancies; Return of Deposit

In commercial tenancies, an itemized statement of the disposition of the security deposit must be sent and a refund must be made within 2 weeks or 30 days after the tenant vacates (depending on whether the deduction is made only for unpaid rent or for a combination of rent, repairs, and cleaning), and there is no right to an inspection. See CC §1950.7(c)-(e), cited in §§8.172-8.173F. After a tenant abandons the lease, the landlord may withhold from the deposit only unpaid rent that has accrued as of the date the deposit is required to be refunded, but may not withhold or offset future rent damages the landlord may later recover under CC §1951.2. 250 L.L.C. v Photopoint Corp. (2005) 131 CA4th 703, 32 CR3d 296.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.28D (3) Drafting Tips

§4.28D (3) Drafting Tips

- Laws governing the timing and manner of refunding security deposits are subject to change. The rental agreement should provide that the deposit will be returned "in accordance with law that is applicable at the time the tenancy terminates."
- If the agreement provides for a shorter period of time to account for the deposit, e.g., 14 days, the landlord is still bound by the terms of the agreement.
- Difficulty in locating the tenant or in determining when the time to return the deposit begins to run can also be solved in the agreement, by providing that the deposit will be sent to the premises unless the tenant leaves a forwarding address and that the time will run from the date the tenant turns in the keys or otherwise surrenders possession to the landlord.
- With cotenants who may change over time, a provision that describes and identifies the persons to whom the deposit will be returned by name will compel successors to resolve the issue among themselves. Landlords should not deal with individual cotenants but only with the group or its representative to avoid such problems as needing to evict only one of the cotenants or getting caught in the middle of a roommate dispute.
- In commercial tenancies, a waiver of any or all of the tenant's security deposit statutory rights must be expressly, clearly, and unambiguously stated in the lease. See §4.28C.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.29 g. Effect of Termination of Landlord's Interest in Premises

Under CC §1950.5(h), a landlord whose interest in residential rental property terminates by sale, assignment, death, appointment of a receiver, or otherwise may be released from liability for the security deposit in one of two ways:

(1) The landlord may transfer the security deposit (less lawful deductions) to a successor and notify the tenant (a) of any claims made against the security and (b) of the transferee's name, address, and telephone number; or

(2) The landlord may return the security deposit (less lawful deductions) to the tenant, with the itemized statement required by CC §1950.5(g). (Note that this second option is contradicted by an amendment made to §1950.5(g) in 2003 restricting the time frame or triggering factor for the deduct/refund procedure; see §8.173B.)

If the landlord uses the first option, the transferee then has all the rights and obligations of a landlord holding the security. CC §1950.5(k). See §8.172.

If the seller elects to refund the deposit at the time of sale to a tenant whose lease provides that the deposit is for the last month's rent, that tenant presumably loses the ability to claim that the deposit constituted full prepayment of the last month's rent despite any interim increases in the monthly rent. See §4.23. It is unclear whether the purchaser may demand deposits from existing tenants whose deposits were refunded by the seller under CC §1950.5. Civil Code §1950.5(j) creates joint and several liability between a purchaser and the selling landlord if the landlord did not transfer the deposits to the purchaser.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.29A 3. Key Money; Commercial Tenancies

The attorney drafting the lease should describe in the lease or rental agreement all payments contemplated by the parties. Side letters or verbal agreements should be avoided. For example, some landlords or master tenants demand, as a condition of initiating, continuing, or renewing a lease, that a tenant pay undocumented "key money" (i.e., an up-front bonus payment made by the tenant to secure the tenancy). However, CC §1950.8 prohibits the landlord in nonresidential leases from demanding "key money" or the landlord's attorney fees incurred in preparing the lease, unless the amount is stated in "the written lease or rental agreement."

A court of appeal in the Second District interpreted §1950.8 and held it is not unlawful for a landlord merely to make a demand for key money as a condition of renewing a lease. The court noted from legislative history that the purpose of §1950.8 was not to prohibit demand or collection of key money, but to eliminate underground or under-the-table pressure tactics used by some landlords of requiring cash payments of key money that are not documented in the lease. The court ruled that "the written lease or rental agreement" described in §1950.8 refers to the prospective contract for the new tenancy period to which the demand applies. For liability to attach under §1950.8, the tenant must prove that the landlord (a) made a demand for key money as a condition of initiating, continuing, or renewing a lease or rental agreement, and (b) failed to state the amount of the demanded payment in the resulting written lease or rental agreement between the parties. See Edamerica, Inc. v Superior Court (2003) 114 CA4th 819, 7 CR3d 921.

The penalty for violating §1950.8 can equal three times the amount of actual damages, plus costs, including attorney fees, in obtaining the penalty. CC §1950.8(c). Exceptions are the following (CC §1950.8(d)-(f)):

- The landlord and the tenant may agree to the advance payment of rent in the lease or rental agreement;
- The landlord may charge reasonable amounts for "conducting reasonable business activity in connection with initiating, continuing, or renewing" the tenancy; and
- The landlord may increase the rent to recover building operating costs if the right to the rent, the method of calculating the increase, and the time period covered by the increase are stated in the lease or rental agreement.

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Rent Provisions

a. Manner of Receiving Rent

(1) Form of Payment

§4.30 (a) Personal Check or Cash Equivalent

Determining how a landlord wishes to receive payment of the rent is an issue to be decided when the rental agreement is drafted. The rental agreement should also set forth the landlord's remedies in case of nonpayment of rent (see §§1.40-1.43, 1.67-1.68).

Civil Code §1947.3 provides that "a landlord or landlord's agent may not demand or require cash as the exclusive form of payment of rent or deposit of security," subject to certain exceptions. CC §1947.3(a)(1). Cash payment may be required if a past check has been drawn on insufficient funds or the tenant has stopped payment. CC §1947.3(a)(2).

DRAFTING TIPS:

- It is usually advisable to require that rent be paid by check, money order, or other negotiable instrument. Not dealing in cash helps to avoid lost payments and also facilitates the landlord's accounting. Anecdotal reports indicate that some trial courts interpret the refusal of a cash payment of rent offered within 3 days after the service of a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit as precluding the landlord from successfully prosecuting an unlawful detainer action, even if the lease prohibited cash payments.
- The agreement should also specify the types of payments that will not be accepted. Some landlords prefer not to accept cash; most will not accept credit cards, third-party checks, etc.
- To avoid problems under CCP §1161(2) (see §8.38), the rental agreement should provide that rent payments will be applied to the earliest period for which rent is due.
- Many rental agreements provide that repeated tenders of checks for insufficient funds is a ground for terminating the lease or the rental agreement. To meet the requirement that a breach be material, the number of such defaults that would justify terminating the tenancy should be specified.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.31 (b) "Labor-for-Rent" Arrangements

Landlords sometimes enter into "labor-for-rent" arrangements under which the landlord agrees to offset a tenant's rent in return for specified labor. This practice, which seems so convenient, is fraught with problems and should probably be avoided unless the landlord can consistently and accurately monitor the number of hours the tenant works. For discussion of rent credits for resident managers and eviction of employees, see §§4.45-4.48.

If the tenant-employee does not exercise discretion or independent judgment in performing the labor, and if the labor is valued at less than $1150 per month, the tenant's minimum wage, hours, and working conditions (among other things) are regulated by 8 Cal Code Regs §11050. See 8 Cal Code Regs §§11050(1)(B)(1), 11050(2)(F). The amount of rent that the landlord may charge is also limited. 8 Cal Code Regs §11050(10)(E). See §4.47. If the employee is a resident manager, the landlord may be able to charge the employee a higher rent than the landlord could charge another employee (e.g., a caretaker), as long as any credit given for rent on the unit is not used to meet the landlord's minimum wage obligation to the manager. Lab C §1182.8. See §4.47.

Labor-for-rent arrangements may produce disastrous results for landlords. When a landlord requests that certain labor be performed at a specified rate of compensation in exchange for an offset against rent, but the landlord and tenant disagree over the amount of work actually performed, the landlord may face insurmountable problems proving the amount of rent owed by the tenant. Determining the exact amount of rent due also poses problems when the landlord decides to serve a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit, because the notice must specify the amount of rent due. Baugh v Consumers Assocs. (1966) 241 CA2d 672, 50 CR 822.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.32 (2) Date of Payment

§4.32 (2) Date of Payment

The rental agreement should specify the date on which the rent payment is due each month.

DRAFTING TIP: Rent is not due in advance unless this practice has been established by custom and usage. See CC §1947. Accordingly, the rental agreement should specify an advance due date for receipt of rent. Landlords can also avoid this problem by using printed lease forms, which invariably state that rent is due in advance on a specified day of each calendar or rental month. See §§1.40, 1.81-1.84.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.33 (3) Mode of Delivery

Landlords should not specify the manner in which the rent is to be delivered. If the tenant remits rent in the manner specified by the landlord, the landlord bears the risk of loss. See CC §1476. Thus, if the rental agreement specifically permits payment by mail, the landlord must bear the loss for a payment lost in the mail. Although a check or money order lost in transit would not constitute payment of the obligation, a tenant might have mailed (or claim to have mailed) cash. If the rental agreement specifically permitted payment by mail, the landlord presumably would bear the loss of the cash in transit.

Civil Code §1947.3 provides that "a landlord or landlord's agent may not demand or require cash as the exclusive form of payment of rent or deposit of security," subject to certain exceptions. CC §1947.3(a)(1). Cash payment may be required if a past check has been drawn on insufficient funds or the tenant has stopped payment. CC §1947.3(a)(2).

DRAFTING TIP: In a written lease, inclusion of the landlord's zip code in the address designated for payment could be regarded as specific permission to pay by mail. To avoid this problem, the lease might provide that (a) the tenant bears the risk of loss or delay of any payment made by mail; and (b) the landlord must receive mailed rent payments by the date specified for payment.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.34 b. Establishing Rent for Vacant Units

§4.34 b. Establishing Rent for Vacant Units

Some rent control ordinances have restricted the landlord's ability to establish rent for a vacant dwelling or unit. This type of restriction, commonly known as "vacancy control" (see §7.4), is now outlawed in all jurisdictions by the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535) (see §§4.21, 7.25).

The Costa-Hawkins Act contains limitations on when owners of rental dwellings or units (in cities previously subject to the vacancy control type of rent control) may bring a vacant unit to market rents and, as of January 1, 2000, restricts owners who terminate certain government subsidies for tenants from re-renting a unit for more rent than the market rate set under the government program.

The vacancy decontrol benefits accrue only if the prior tenancy was not terminated by a notice under CC §1946 or §1946.1, or by a change in terms of the tenancy noticed under CC §827, unless the change is one that was permitted in the amount of rent or fees. See CC §1954.53(a)(1). (Note: CC §§1946 and 1946.1 require either a 30-day or 60-day notice for the termination of a month-to-month tenancy (see §8.69); CC §827 requires a 30-day notice for most changes in the terms of a month-to-month tenancy, and a 60-day notice for specified residential rent increases (see §§3.65-3.65B).)

The Costa-Hawkins Act also contains an exception if the owner had contracted with a public entity for direct or other assistance in producing lower income housing pursuant to Govt C §65915. The benefits will not accrue to any owner who terminates a Section 8 contract, and the inability to increase to market rent lasts a full 3 years. See CC §1954.53(a)(1)(A).

WARNING: As originally enacted, the Costa-Hawkins Act is difficult to understand, and experts disagree concerning its scope and meaning. Practitioners should be extremely cautious before advising a landlord that any particular rental unit has become exempt from the rental amount controls of a local ordinance.

Although landlords in all rent control jurisdictions were granted the right to rent vacant apartments at full market rents by the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535), that statute as originally passed and with subsequent amendments imposed limitations on that right. For owners in jurisdictions that enacted the vacancy "control" type of rent control, a landlord may not rent a vacant unit at market rents and must rent the unit at the previous tenant's rent if:

(1) the preceding tenant's tenancy was terminated by a notice from the landlord under CC §1946 or §1946.1;

(2) the preceding tenant moved because the tenant did not wish to comply with a change in the terms of the tenancy imposed by the landlord pursuant to a notice given under CC §827, unless the increased financial obligations were permitted by the local rent control ordinance;

(3) the preceding tenant vacated because the owner terminated a contract or recorded agreement with a government agency under which the tenant received a government subsidy for the payment of the contract rent;

(4) the preceding tenant vacated because the owner failed to renew or terminated a government contract or recorded agreement that provided for a rent limitation to a qualified tenant (3-year limitation on rent restrictions in this situation); or

(5) the dwelling unit has been cited by a proper governmental agency as having serious health, safety, fire, or building code violations that existed for at least 60 days before the vacancy and had not been abated by the time of the vacancy and had remained unabated for at least 60 days.

With regard to item (5), CC §1954.53(f)(3) specifically provides that the 60-day limit may be extended by the government agency that issued the citation. It is understood that landlords who have encountered delays or problems beyond their reasonable control in abating any such violations may obtain relief from the government agency.

PRACTICE TIP: Most agencies enforcing building codes are understanding if an owner is moving diligently to correct problems and will, if requested to do so and the owner can demonstrate diligence, provide the necessary relief. In some jurisdictions, these delays may occur because of permit delay problems in the agencies themselves, and it would not be fair to penalize a landlord who has promptly applied for necessary permits but cannot do the work because the permit has not been issued or the completion of the work is delayed because of the delay in issuance of the permit. It is therefore very important to maintain a good relationship with local inspectors, keep good records, and obtain necessary relief if the 60-day period is about to run.

Landlords who wish to terminate a government subsidy contract must give the tenant 90 days' prior written notice of the termination, and the tenant is obliged only to pay the tenant's portion of the rent during the 90-day period. CC §1954.535.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.35 c. User Fees

§4.35 c. User Fees

When landlords wish to market rental units at a lower rent (e.g., when a landlord owns a large rental complex and must fill vacancies quickly to maintain adequate cash flow), they sometimes label certain charges as "user fees" rather than as "rent." For example, the landlord might provide a parking space to tenants who pay a user fee, rather than including "rent" for the parking space in the overall rent.

Although this approach is an excellent marketing tool, it will probably cause problems in any jurisdiction that has implemented rent controls. Many rent-controlled jurisdictions consider all charges for services or facilities related to the dwelling unit to be subject to the ordinance's monetary controls. Leases which separate rental charges for refrigerators or washers and dryers may also have difficulty in unlawful detainer actions if they include these charges as rent in a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit because they may be considered personal property and not fixtures. In those cases, the landlord should argue that they are fixtures as a matter of law, or, under an additional rent clause, a proper part of the rent.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.36 d. Rent Increases

Market conditions will obviously affect a landlord's decision whether to impose a rent increase. In rent-controlled jurisdictions, the provisions of those ordinances will govern the permissible amounts and frequency of rent increases (see chap 7). Notice requirements are dictated by state law for month-to-month and other tenancies that do not have a fixed term (see §§3.65-3.65B).

If a tenancy is for a fixed term (e.g., a two-year tenancy), the lease governs the landlord's ability to raise the rent, and may also specify the manner of giving notice of the increase. In the absence of government regulation, the parties may agree to automatic rent increases at stated intervals in the lease. In rent-controlled jurisdictions, the rent control ordinance will probably limit the landlord's ability to schedule rent increases in the rental agreement or lease.

DRAFTING TIPS:

- In a rent-controlled jurisdiction, rent increase provisions should state only that the rent may be increased to the maximum amount permitted under applicable ordinances. Even though the ordinance allows periodic rent increases, if a lease for a term of years does not provide for such increases, the lease contract will supersede the increases that would have been allowed under the local ordinance.
- The rental agreement should provide for other increases to which the landlord may be entitled during the term (e.g., rent increase for a capital improvement pass-through).

A step-increase lease that was entered into before a rent control ordinance became effective may be exempt from the ordinance under federal and state constitutional prohibitions against impairment of contracts. US Const art I, §10; Cal Const art I, §9. But see Rue-Ell Enters., Inc. v City of Berkeley (1983) 147 CA3d 81, 194 CR 919 (city may require one-year reduction in rents on existing commercial leases, measured as a percentage of the tax savings realized by landlord as a result of Proposition 13 (Cal Const art XIIIA)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.37 5. Federally Required Lead Disclosures and Abatement

The federal Residential Lead-Based Paint Hazard Reduction Act of 1992 (42 USC §§4851-4856) and its implementing regulations (24 CFR pt 35 and 40 CFR pt 745, subpt F) went into effect for owners of buildings containing more than four dwelling units on September 6, 1996 (24 CFR §35.84(a)), and for owners of buildings with four or fewer dwelling units on December 6, 1996 (24 CFR §35.84(b)). All owners of residential property built before 1978 must make certain disclosures to new tenants in writing. 24 CFR §35.80.

The tenant is required to acknowledge receipt of the disclosure statement, which should be kept by the owner for as long as the tenant is in the building, or for three years, whichever is longer. 24 CFR §35.92. For further discussion and a disclosure form to include in the rental agreement, see §§1.29, 1.77. On California legislation, see §4.16B.

An EPA pamphlet that includes the required disclosure statement is available from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency or the National Lead Information Clearinghouse at (800) 424-LEAD. In addition, several organizations have obtained and copied the EPA pamphlet. These include the California Apartment Association and its local affiliates. See Directory.

All existing tenants must be given this disclosure information when they renew their leases. What this means for month-to-month tenants is unclear, but the safer practice is to give all renewing tenants the required notice.

Practitioners who have an opportunity to discuss this issue with their landlord clients should suggest that owners take steps to remove or encapsulate lead paint when units become vacant. Doing such work in occupied units is extremely difficult and expensive.

In federally assisted housing, the landlord must repair deteriorated lead-based paint and control dust associated with it, in addition to making the required disclosures to tenants. 24 CFR §35.92. See also related transitional regulations for dust testing, effective September 15, 2000, in 65 Fed Reg 54858 (Sept. 15, 2000).

WARNING: Those most at risk from lead and other environmental hazards are pregnant women and children six years of age or younger. Landlords should be cautioned, however, that antidiscrimination laws (see chap 2) apply, and a landlord may not refuse to rent a dwelling unit to a pregnant woman or a family with children under six years of age.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.38 6. Restrictions on Use of Premises

To prevent the tenant from using the premises for certain purposes or performing certain activities on the premises, the landlord must enumerate each prohibited use or activity in the rental agreement. See §§1.55, 1.57-1.64. The agreement need not specifically prohibit uses or activities that are prohibited by law, e.g., maintaining a nuisance under CCP §1161(4), or that are inconsistent with use of the premises as a residence.

DRAFTING TIP: With an increase in the number of tenants who have computers and who use their computers at home for business purposes, the paragraphs of the lease covering liability issues and insurance coverage become more important. The landlord may want to require that tenants obtain insurance coverage for their own equipment (see §4.43B), to make the tenant responsible for the cost of maintaining telephone lines in the unit, and to restrict the number of telephone lines that may be installed in the unit.

Other prohibitions frequently sought by landlords have been regulated by legislation. For example, a landlord is prohibited from refusing to rent to a tenant who possesses water filled furniture (CC §1940.5; see §1.63), and from refusing to rent to a tenant who owns a seeing-eye dog or signal dog for the hearing impaired (CC §54.1(b)(6)(A); see §1.62).

Landlords should be cautioned, however, that a court may grant a tenant relief from forfeiture based on breach of an immaterial or unreasonable provision. See Hignell v Gebala (1949) 90 CA2d 61, 71, 202 P2d 378. In addition, unreasonable restrictions may be prohibited by local rent or eviction control ordinances. See §7.54.

In rent control jurisdictions where attempts by tenants to sublease their rent controlled apartments often create problems, the landlord should consider adding a provision in the lease that the named original tenant must use the premises as his or her principal and primary residence and make the unit the place to which the tenant returns on a regular basis except for temporary absences such as absences for military service, vacations, hospitalizations, family or friend emergency or care, Peace Corps service, academic sabbatical or other reasonable temporary or seasonal periods of absence, such as travel for education or work related assignments. See San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization And Arbitration Board Rules and Regulations §1.21; Santa Monica Rent Control Board Regulation §3304. Before adding such a provision, landlords should determine if it might violate any relevant local rent or eviction control ordinances. For further discussion, see §§7.23A, 7.24, 7.38A.

For covenants restricting changes in use for commercial tenancies, see CC §§1997.010-1997.270, discussed in California Eviction Defense Manual §19.10 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.39 7. Waiver of Tenant's Rights

Older printed lease forms often contained unenforceable waivers of tenants' rights. A common provision was the waiver of tenants' rights and remedies regarding the dwelling's habitability under CC §1941. Any waiver or modification of the rights conferred by CC §§1941-1942 is void as contrary to public policy (CC §1942.1), except under the narrow circumstances described in the following paragraph.

In Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, the leading case on the warranty of habitability, the court held that the warranty generally cannot be waived; consequently, the tenant generally may not waive the right to withhold rent if repairs are needed. 10 C3d at 625 n9. See also Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 54, 171 CR 707, 711. The Green court noted, however, that a waiver might be valid if reached by arm's-length bargaining between landlord and tenant. Green v Superior Court, supra. The court referred to the first paragraph of CC §1942.1, which states that the lessor and lessee may provide that the tenant will be responsible for improvements, repairs, or maintenance of the rented premises, as part of the consideration for the rental. Given the unequal bargaining power between the residential landlord and tenant, however, it is unlikely that a court would uphold such a lease provision, particularly if it appeared as a "standard" clause in all leases offered by the landlord. (For discussion of additional pitfalls in labor-for-rent arrangements, see §4.31.)

Civil Code §1953 prohibits the tenant's waiver of several rights, such as (a) the right to sue the landlord for future injuries, (b) rights granted by CC §1950.5 with respect to security deposits (except as allowed by CC §1950.5(g); see §§8.173E-8.173F), (c) the right to notice and hearing as required by law, and (d) procedural rights during litigation concerning the tenancy.

DRAFTING TIPS:

- Despite these prohibitions on tenant waivers, proper drafting can limit a landlord's liabilities. One such method is to require written notice from the tenant of defective conditions about which the landlord would have no knowledge.
- The tenant may agree that certain conduct on the part of the landlord does not constitute a waiver of the landlord's rights. For example, the agreement might provide that the landlord's acceptance of rent does not constitute a waiver of any breach by the tenant. See §1.75. The rental agreement might further provide that the only way the landlord may waive a right is by a document signed by the landlord or the landlord's duly authorized agent.

WARNING: Many rent control ordinances contain very broad prohibitions against tenant waivers of any rights under the rent control ordinance. These often may prohibit enforcement of private agreements resolving disputes regarding rent levels or other problems.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.40 8. Parties to Lease; Occupants; Guests

Landlords should identify in the rental agreement all persons who will reside in the rental unit, so that all persons claiming a right to possession of the premises can be named and served in any proceeding to regain possession of the premises. See §§1.45-1.46, 13.70. The lease should name each occupant and specify (1) that the rental is limited to the named persons, and (2) that substitute or additional occupants are prohibited without the landlord's prior consent. To further protect against claims to possession by nontenants, the lease should include provisions limiting the length of time that a tenant may permit guests, boarders, and lodgers to remain on the premises without violating the occupant limitation provision. See §1.46.

If more than one adult will occupy the rental unit, each should be named as a party to the lease. Each adult should execute the lease, assuming joint and several liability for all obligations under it. See §1.46. If the landlord consents to additional occupants after execution of the lease, the landlord should either obtain a new lease signed by all the occupants as "cotenants," or have the new occupants sign a separate agreement by which they assume joint and several liability as "subtenants" for all obligations under the lease.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.40A a. Assignment and Subletting

The landlord must consider whether (a) assignment and subletting are to be prohibited completely, (b) the right will be substantially limited but in compliance with local regulations imposing restrictions on blanket prohibitions (see, e.g., San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §§37.2(g) and 37.9(a)(2)), or (c) to permit the tenant to transfer his or her interest only with the landlord's prior consent (which should always be required to be in writing). Case law used to be uncertain as to whether an owner of commercial property could completely prohibit assignment or subleasing, but this issue was resolved with enactment of CC §§1995.210-1995.260, which does not apply to residential dwellings. Arguably, a landlord should be able to prohibit residential lease transfers completely unless such a provision is expressly prohibited by federal, state, or local law. See detailed discussion of assignment and subletting in §§3.49-3.59A, 5.28-5.32, 7.62. See also §§1.3-1.3D, 1.7-1.7B. On assignments in commercial tenancies, see Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 24 (Cal CEB 1996). See also California Eviction Defense Manual §§19.8-19.9 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

If transfers are prohibited completely by the rental agreement, the landlord may not use the remedy provided in CC §1951.4 (see §§3.59, 8.15).

DRAFTING TIP: If assignment and subletting are permitted with the landlord's consent, the lease should specify what conditions will result in denial of consent, such as the subtenant's failure to meet the specified financial standard; to complete the landlord's standard application or pay the screening fee; or to provide a favorable recommendation from a previous landlord, due to, e.g., having avoided previous eviction proceedings.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.40B b. Vacancy Decontrol and Roommates

§4.40B b. Vacancy Decontrol and Roommates

Knotty problems may arise in rent-controlled jurisdictions about when a vacant apartment exists so that the landlord may increase the rent to market level. Despite the existence of vacancy decontrol on the state or local level (see chap 7), landlords often found that they were unable to raise the rent because the original tenant, who had vacated the premises, took in roommates who then became protected tenants for whom no rent increase was permitted. This problem was addressed by the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535) (see §§7.25-7.28). The Act supersedes any contrary rules adopted by local rent control boards.

The Act in CC §1954.53(d) expressly provides that an owner may increase the rent by any amount allowed under the section to a sublessee or assignee when the rental agreement prohibits assignment and subletting, or prohibits assignment and subletting without the owner's consent, and the original occupant or occupants who took possession pursuant under the rental agreement with the owner no longer permanently reside there. Section 1954.53(d) further provides that acceptance of rent will not operate as a waiver of a landlord's right to enforce a covenant against subletting, unless the landlord has received written notice that the original tenant has sublet the apartment and the landlord thereafter accepts rent.

DRAFTING TIP: In rent-controlled jurisdictions, landlords should consider adding a provision to their rental agreements prohibiting assignment altogether or adjusting the rent if the unit is sublet or assigned. See Cobb v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2002) 98 CA4th 345, 119 CR2d 741, discussed in §§7.25, 7.28.

A landlord in a rent controlled city may encounter difficulties in renting to more than one person and permitting revolving roommates. In DeZerega v Meggs (2000) 83 CA4th 28, 99 CR2d 366, e.g., the landlord entered into a lease agreement with one master tenant that prohibited subleasing, but permitted the master tenant to have roommates who completed and submitted to the landlord various application forms setting forth required information about the individual. Only the master tenant paid rent. When the master tenant gave the landlords a 30-day notice and moved out, the roommates remained. The landlords attempted to evict the roommates, alleging the basic rule of law that termination of a master lease will terminate all subleases. The court of appeals held that the roommates were entitled to the "just cause" eviction protections of the local rent control ordinance. The landlords ended up with the roommates as their tenants.

Although it is unclear from the opinion what circumstances would have altered the outcome, landlords should attempt to protect themselves from this situation when renting to more than one individual tenant. First, if there is an absolute prohibition against subleasing and local law permits such an absolute prohibition, the landlord should not allow roommates or a substitution of roommates or any subleasing. Second, the landlord may want to consider a covenant to prohibit partial terminations and to require that any termination of the hiring must be signed by all tenants. Again, if there is such a provision it must be enforced. Third, each original occupant should sign the lease and any permitted subtenant must be obliged to sign a subleasing agreement that at a minimum requires the subtenant to abide by the terms and conditions of the original lease and prohibits further subleasing. Third, if subleasing occurs without the landlord's prior consent, the landlord should enforce the no-subleasing covenant or reach an agreement with the sublessees after the fact. Failure to do so may create the type of problem the landlords faced in DeZerega.

If there have been multiple and serial roommates, the landlord may be left with only the remedy of a Costa-Hawkins rent increase after an original tenant vacates, because it may be impossible to evict unless the landlord has just cause to do so under the local ordinance.

DRAFTING TIP: In approving any nonoriginal occupants, it is advisable, and some local ordinances attempt to so require, that the landlord advise the nonoriginal occupants that their rights to the rent controlled rent amount are different from the original tenant, and that if the original tenant no longer permanently resides in the unit the landlord may be able to raise the rent of the remaining occupants. Also, a statement that the landlord will not accept rent from the nonoriginal occupants is advisable, as is a statement that any acceptance of rent does not waive the landlord's right to increase the rent if the original occupant no longer permanently resides in the unit.

See Cobb v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd., supra, discussed in §§7.25, 7.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.41 9. Options to Renew

§4.41 9. Options to Renew

Options to renew a tenancy arise only in fixed-term tenancies; periodic tenancies are renewed automatically at the end of each rental period. See §1.9. Options to renew are common in commercial leases because commercial tenants generally have strong economic motives for renewing a lease (e.g., maintaining the goodwill attached to a particular location, obtaining a reasonable return on investments in permanent fixtures, avoiding the costs of moving and ordering preprinted business forms with a new address). Although renewal options are relatively unusual in residential leases, an option to renew might be important to residential tenants in certain situations. For example, a tenant who wants to make a substantial investment improving a unit, but could never hope to own the unit, would probably want an option to renew his or her lease. An option to renew might also be advantageous to a tenant who wishes to keep a child in a local school through graduation. Similarly, options to renew are important in areas (e.g., some coastal developments in Orange County) where landowners grant ground leases, rather than sell fee interests in the property.

An option to renew must set forth the major terms of the renewal tenancy. A common drafting error is for the landlord to specify the length of the renewal term, but to provide that all other terms of the renewal tenancy will be negotiated when the tenant exercises the option to renew. An option drafted in this manner is unenforceable for uncertainty, because there is no way to resolve disputes if the landlord and tenant fail to agree on the remaining terms. See Ablett v Clauson (1954) 43 C2d 280, 272 P2d 753.

Even if the amount of the renewal rent is the only term left to the future agreement of the parties, the option may be unenforceable. In Chaney v Schneider (1949) 92 CA2d 88, 206 P2d 669, the court enforced an option that provided that the parties would agree on the renewal rent (as well as other terms) when the option was exercised. The court also held that the superior court properly may determine a reasonable rent if the parties are unable to agree. Most attorneys in California relied on the decision in Chaney as authority for the rule that an option is enforceable if the renewal rent is the only term that the parties must determine at the time of exercise. Although the California Supreme Court criticized the Chaney decision for enforcing an option in which all terms were left to future agreement, it did not question the enforceability of an option in which only the renewal rent is left to future agreement. Ablett v Clauson (1954) 43 C2d 280, 286, 272 P2d 753 (explaining the theory on which courts rely to enforce renewal options). In Etco Corp. v Hauer (1984) 161 CA3d 1154, 208 CR 118, however, the court held that an option agreement that leaves the renewal rent to the future agreement of the parties is unenforceable for uncertainty unless the agreement provides an ascertainable standard by which rent can be determined if the parties fail to agree. 161 CA3d at 1162.

To minimize problems of unenforceability, and still maintain flexibility, landlords may grant options to renew that leave future rent to the agreement of the parties, but that include an ascertainable standard (e.g., the prevailing fair market rent for comparable units in the building when the option is exercised) or specific remedies (e.g., arbitration) for establishing the rent if the parties fail to reach agreement.

Another dangerous, but common, error is for the landlord to draft an option to renew that provides simply: "Tenant has the right to renew this lease for an additional five years." Many landlords believe that this language creates an option to renew for a specified term, with all other terms subject to good faith negotiation when the option is exercised. Without proof that a different meaning was intended, however, the courts interpret such language as creating a right to renew the tenancy for the specified term on the same terms and conditions as the original tenancy, including the amount of rent. See, e.g., Penilla v Gerstenkorn (1927) 86 CA 668, 261 P 488. Assuming continued inflation, an option drafted in this manner will generally produce a windfall for the tenant.

An estoppel certificate may affect the enforceability of an option to renew. In Miner v Tustin Ave. Investors, LLC (2004) 116 CA4th 264, 10 CR3d 178, the tenant sued to enforce an option to renew (after accepting an estoppel certificate when the property was sold), and the trial court granted a summary judgment in favor of the new owner. The court of appeal, however, concluded that the lease and estoppel certificate constituted the contract to be interpreted and, read together, were ambiguous on the question whether an option existed. Because neither party offered extrinsic evidence to explain the ambiguity, the court construed the ambiguous contract against the owner, whose predecessor had drafted both documents, and reversed the summary judgment.

DRAFTING TIP: The lease must specify the time at which the tenant may exercise the option, and the manner of exercise. To avoid problems of proof, the option should provide that service of exercise of the option must be made by certified mail, return receipt requested, to a specified address. The option should also require that the certified mail receipt itself be postmarked by a postal station to prevent the tenant from filling in, perhaps "inaccurately," the date of mailing. Any subsequent estoppel certificate should clarify the continued viability of the option.

For further discussion of options to renew, see Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease, chap 10 (Cal CEB 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

10. Utility Charges and Ratio Utility Billing

§4.41A a. Jurisdiction

It is becoming extremely common for landlords to charge tenants for utility charges not directly billed to tenants from the local utility. This billing is generally done through the use of individual submeters or allocation formulas, commonly known as "Ratio Utility Billing System" (RUBS). Because California law has required, since 1997, that all apartment units in the service territories of utilities regulated by the California Public Utilities Commission ("CPUC") be individually metered by the local utility for gas and electricity (see Pub Util C §2791(c)), the majority of activity in landlord-tenant utility billing disputes involve water and sewer billing.

Water and sewer tenant utility billing is not directly regulated by any California statute. Tenants' rights groups have argued in the past that the CPUC should have jurisdiction over these utilities. However, in its decision for Investigation No. 98-12-012, the CPUC held that it has no jurisdiction in the vast majority of landlord-tenant billing relationships. In its decision, the CPUC focused on the dedication to the public principles established by several cases, including Story v Richardson (1921) 186 C 162. Using the dedication doctrine, the CPUC ruled that a landlord would have to actively and intentionally dedicate itself to the public in order to fall under the jurisdiction of the Commission.

Gas and electric tenant utility billing is allowed under CC §1940.9 and is regulated by the CPUC and several California statutes, including Pub Util C §739.5, and the tariff provisions of most gas and electric utilities (e.g., San Diego Gas & Electric Rule 19, available online at http://www.sdge.com/tm2/pdf/ELEC_ELEC-RULES_ERULE19.pdf). The relevant statutes and tariff provisions establish a specific billing scheme that must be used. See §§4.41C-4.41D.

PRACTICE TIP: Lacking direct regulation or guidance from the CPUC or statutory law, it is important to ensure that all facets of a landlord-tenant billing system are agreed to in writing by the tenant, including billing methods (see §§4.41C-4.41D) and miscellaneous charges (see §4.41E). For forms, see §1.56.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.41B b. Water and Sewer Billing Methods

Water and sewer billing is generally performed utilizing one of three billing methods: submetering, hot-water metering, or Ratio Utility Billing System (RUBS). Traditional submetering occurs when all the water consumed by a tenant is measured by a submeter, in which case bill calculations are relatively simple as consumption is multiplied by a water and sewer rate to derive a monthly total. In older properties where building construction makes it infeasible to install one submeter that measures all water consumed by a tenant, a landlord may install a submeter on the hot-water line to the tenant's unit. The tenant is then billed a portion of the landlord's water and sewer bills based on the percentage of hot water the tenant consumes compared to the total amount of hot water consumed by all tenants residing at the property. Finally, in properties where no submeters are installed, tenants are commonly billed using a RUBS formula. Under a RUBS system, tenants are billed a portion of the landlord's water and sewer bills based on specific criteria, such as square footage ratios or number of occupants in each unit. Additionally, landlords frequently pay for a portion of the water and sewer bills before they are allocated to the tenants to account for common area usage.

The billing method chosen by the landlord may determine the applicability of environmental regulations (such as safe drinking water laws) or other consumer laws and regulations. See, e.g., Policy Memorandum published by the federal Environmental Protection Agency, 68 Fed Reg 74233 (2003). See http://www.epa.gov/fedrgstr/.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.41C c. Gas and Electricity Charges

§4.41C c. Gas and Electricity Charges

As discussed above, Pub Util C §739.5 establishes specific criteria for gas and electric submetering charges. Under Pub Util C §739.5(a), a landlord is exempt from CPUC regulation if it charges "each user of the service at the same rate which would be applicable if the user were receiving gas or electricity, or both, directly from the gas or electrical corporation." Additionally, §739.5(a) establishes a submetering discount for landlords that is designed to cover some of the costs associated with the system.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.41D d. Other Charges

§4.41D d. Other Charges

A landlord operating a water or sewer billing program frequently chooses to charge tenants a variety of additional fees designed to cover the landlord's costs associated with operating the billing program or to encourage timely payments. Specifically, landlords commonly charge tenants administrative, set-up, or move-out fees associated with the billing program. In addition, the landlord typically charges late fees if the tenant fails to make timely payments. Conversely, a landlord operating a gas or electric submetering program may only charge the specific amounts authorized by Pub Util C §739.5 and the tariffs of the providing utility (thereby eliminating the ability to charge additional fees).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.41E e. Miscellaneous Regulatory Issues

§4.41E e. Miscellaneous Regulatory Issues

The California Department of Weights and Measures ("Department") asserts jurisdiction over submetering equipment under Bus & P C §§12500-12548 and the regulations promulgated thereunder by the Department (although its jurisdiction is questioned by some billing companies, as there is no case law directly on point). Under Bus & P C §§12500.5 and 12501.1, all submeters installed in California must be approved by the Department prior to their installation.

As discussed in §4.41A, there is no statewide regulatory scheme governing water and sewer landlord-tenant billing practices. However, it is important to recognize that local or federal regulations may affect a landlord's ability to operate billing programs. For example, the City of Santa Clara has an ordinance that prohibits landlords from using a Ratio Utility Billing System (RUBS). Some cities prohibit a landlord from billing gas and electricity or water unless the building has a submeter for each unit. Other issues may arise that affect a landlord's ability to implement billing programs, such as rent control or subsidized housing. The water billing method chosen by the landlord may determine the applicability of federal environmental law to the property. See §4.41B.

PRACTICE TIP: Many third-party utility billing providers that property owners contract with have legal departments that can provide relevant information on RUBS. Local utility regulation departments would have information about ordinances or regulations that require submeters or other preconditions for using RUBS.

© The Regents of the University of California

11. Other Provisions

§4.42 a. Attorney Fees

Landlords must be aware that they may be liable for the attorney fees of a tenant who prevails in a landlord-tenant dispute. Even if the lease provides that only the landlord is entitled to attorney fees in an action to enforce the lease, a prevailing tenant can also recover fees. CC §1717. See §§13.25-13.34, 13.40.

In rent-controlled jurisdictions, or if a landlord wishes to avoid the threat of affirmative lawsuits, it is often wise to remove the attorney fee clause. Although many practitioners favor keeping the clause for specified disputes to limit the occasions in which a tenant could recover, having no attorney fee clause in the agreement is probably wise as a general practice. Limiting attorney fees to unlawful detainers is of limited value when one considers the likelihood of actually collecting from a tenant who has defaulted on rent payments. Also, in some instances, CC §1717 overrides the terms of a fee clause that conflict with §1717. See Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 71 CR2d 830, discussed in §13.27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.43 b. Landlord's Right of Entry

The circumstances and manner in which a landlord may enter an occupied rental unit are limited by CC §1954. See §§1.30, 1.66, 3.2-3.4. The legislature substantially amended the notice procedures in 2002 and 2003. See §§3.3-3.3A. Unless there is an emergency or the tenant has abandoned or surrendered the premises, the entry may be made only after reasonable written notice to the tenant and during normal business hours. CC §1954. Amendments to §1954, effective January 1, 2003, permit the mailing of a notice, but provide that the presumption of reasonableness of the notice will not apply unless the notice is mailed at least 6 days before the entry. A written notice may also be personally delivered to the tenant or left on, near, or under the usual entry door of the premises in a manner in which a reasonable person would discover it. Oral notice is allowed in limited situations. See CC §1954(d)(2)-(3), discussed in §3.3. The tenant may not waive in the rental agreement the rights conferred by CC §1954 (CC §1953(a)(1)), but may consent to the entry, without written notice and outside of normal business hours, at the time of entry.

Landlords have at least a limited implied right to be assured that the tenant is not violating any laws. Unless the tenant can otherwise provide reasonable assurances, the landlord may enter and inspect the premises for this purpose. See Sachs v Exxon Co., U.S.A. (1992) 9 CA4th 1491, 1498, 12 CR2d 237 (commercial landlord's right to enter premises and conduct environmental testing in reasonable and unobstructive manner). Landlords, however, should not use the right of entry to harass the tenant. Effective January 1, 2004, a tenant has additional remedies (including a $2000 penalty for each act) for a landlord's wrongful acts committed for the purpose of influencing the tenant to vacate the dwelling, including abusing the right of entry granted by CC §1954. See CC §1940.2, explained in §8.150A.

One of the major problems for landlords with CC §1954 is that it does not define "normal business hours." The minimum acceptable range is probably 8 a.m. through 6 p.m., Monday through Friday. Unfortunately, these hours are usually the least convenient for the nonprofessional landlord who is employed in another business that maintains standard office hours, or for real estate brokers who find, for the same reason, that it is most advantageous to show property on Saturdays and Sundays.

DRAFTING TIP: To avoid this controversy, the landlord might invoke the spirit of CC §1954, which appears to permit the landlord and tenant to establish hours for inspection that are reasonably convenient for both parties. See rental agreement provision in §1.66, allowing the normal business hours to include Saturdays.

It is unclear whether "normal business hours" will be interpreted as including weekend hours. For definitions of "business days" and "holidays" applicable to the performance of acts required by law or contract, see CCP §§12a-13b and CC §§7, 9.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.43A c. Late Fees

Late fee provisions (as liquidated damages in rental agreements and leases) are governed by CC §1671. See CC §1951.5. For the supreme court's analysis of legislative intent concerning CC §1671, see Ridgley v Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 73 CR2d 378, discussed extensively in California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 8 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

Attorneys for landlords argue that a charge to compensate landlords for costs occasioned by the late payment of rent by a residential tenant may be added to a rental agreement as liquidated damages provided the precise provisions of CC §1671(d) are met and the parties agree that the amount in fact bears a reasonable relationship to the actual costs and damages incurred by the landlord because of the late payment. (In commercial tenancies, the presumptive validity of the late charge is arguably established by CC §1671(b).) See §§8.39-8.40. Tenant attorneys assert in either situation, however, that such fees (at least in actions for possession) are governed entirely by the unlawful detainer statutes and are, therefore, nonrecoverable. See CC §1671(a); Jack v Sinsheimer (1899) 125 C 563, 566, 58 P 130.

The contention that late fees are always void was rejected by the appellate department of the Los Angeles Superior Court in Orozco v Casimiro (2004) 121 CA4th Supp 7, 17 CR3d 175. However, in that case the court overturned the trial court's judgment for possession and statutory damages in favor of the landlord because the landlord had sought a $50 late fee on a $601 per month rent and had failed to plead and prove that damages on account of the late payment of rent were impracticable or extremely difficult to prove. The court did not state that the written agreement between the parties contained the standard language of CC §1671 although it seems likely that it did not and there is no indication whether the pleading and proof requirement would have been required had the lease contained the necessary agreement of the parties. See form clause in §1.41. The opinion is instructive in that at least this court believed that landlords wishing to collect a late fee in an unlawful detainer action must plead and prove that actual damages were impracticable or extremely difficult to prove and that the amount was reasonable.

PRACTICE TIP: With respect to the reasonableness of an amount, attorneys should pay particular attention to the actual dollar amount demanded and determine whether the landlord wishes to run the risk of including the late charge in an unlawful detainer action. Additionally, in counseling a landlord on the amount to be placed in a lease, the suggestion that using no more than the amount authorized as a late fee in residential mortgages by CC §2954.4 might provide a safe harbor.

In any event, attorneys for landlords should caution their clients that a liquidated damages clause may not be used to penalize a tenant unreasonably for the late payment. See Kraus v Trinity Mgmt. Servs. (2000) 23 C4th 116, 124 n7, 96 CR2d 485 (see also superseded court of appeal opinion in Kraus at 57 CA4th 709, which affirmed trial court's judgment that liquidated damages for early termination of lease were unlawful).

NOTE: The issue of late fees is one that continues to surface in landlord-tenant matters. Several tenants' attorneys have successfully argued that if a landlord has consistently charged "excessive" late fees that were paid by the tenant, then those "excessive" sums must be credited to rent payments, thus invalidating a 3-day Notice to Pay Rent or Quit. Although no reported California case warrants the application of excessive late fees to rent, landlord attorneys should be aware of the argument.

For further discussion on whether late fees may be demanded in a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit, see §§8.39-8.40.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/4 Counseling the Landlord/§4.43B d. Insurance

§4.43B d. Insurance

Given the age of some properties, increased hazards due to earthquakes or a deterioration of a neighborhood, many form leases now warn tenants that the tenant may want to carry renter's insurance since an owner's policy may not cover all losses suffered by a tenant. Some practitioners advise that landlords may want to require that tenants maintain their own policies to cover the tenant's personal property located in a rental unit, particularly if there is any indication that the tenant may be bringing items of high value such as art, jewelry, high-end computer equipment, or bicycles.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.44 VI. COPING WITH DRUG-RELATED AND FIREARM ACTIVITY ON THE PREMISES

Landlords potentially face serious consequences if a tenant is suspected of dealing drugs or using firearms on the rented premises. Landlords have typically found it difficult to evict tenants who are believed to be engaged in drug-related or firearm activities on the premises. Notwithstanding their limited right of entry to inspect for criminal activity (see §4.43), landlords must be cautious in this area. Landlords may find some assistance under CC §3479 (which defines "nuisance" to include the illegal sale of controlled substances), CC §§3485-3486 (which define "nuisance" to include illegal conduct involving weapons or ammunition or the manufacture, cultivation, possession for sale, or sale of controlled substances), and CCP §1161(4) (which allows an eviction action based on the nuisance activities defined in CC §§3485-3486). For further discussion, see §§1.58, 8.59.

A landlord may face liability, and potentially even a forced sale of the property, under the Narcotics Nuisance Abatement Act (Health & S C §§11570-11587). Health and Safety Code §11570 defines as a nuisance "[e]very building or place used for the purpose of unlawfully selling, serving, storing, keeping, manufacturing, or giving away any controlled substance" specified in the Act. Under Health & S C §§11571, 11571.5, a district attorney, city attorney, or private citizen may bring an action to abate such a nuisance against both the landlord and the tenant. Thus, neighbors or other tenants who are bothered by drug dealing on the premises may bring an action to abate the activity. Preliminary injunctive relief is available and an abatement order after trial may result in severe penalties for the property owner, including

- closure of the building for 1 year,
- requiring the owner to reside in the property until the nuisance is abated,
- relocation assistance to innocent tenants,
- making the injunctive order applicable to subsequent owners and requiring disclosure of the order to prospective purchasers and commercial lessees,
- monetary penalties not exceeding $25,000, and
- attorney fees.

See Health & S C §§11573, 11573.5, 11581. In 2009, the legislature added Health & S C §§11571.1 (see Stats 2009, ch 244, §7), which declares that the state law is not preemptive of local ordinances relating to drug abatement and that state law remedies are not intended to prevent a tenant from asserting relief against forfeiture under CCP §1179.

In addition to or in lieu of an abatement action, any city attorney in Los Angeles, Long Beach, Palmdale, San Diego, or Oakland may bring an unlawful detainer action against the offending tenant, which must be based on an arrest report or other action or report by a regulatory or law enforcement agency. CC §3486(a). This eviction remedy will sunset in 2014. CC §3486(h).

In Lew v Superior Court (1993) 20 CA4th 866, 25 CR2d 42, neighbors individually filed separate nuisance complaints against the landlord in small claims court, claiming that they were disturbed by drug dealers working from and around the landlord's property. The small claims court consolidated the actions and awarded the plaintiffs $218,325. The court of appeal upheld the award, relying on Health & S C §11570 and its definition of drug-related activity as a nuisance. The court also allowed the plaintiffs to recover for mental suffering, because a finding that an activity constitutes a nuisance permits recovery of damages for discomfort and annoyance.

If a locality were to enact ordinances giving the police or other agency powers to compel landlords to deal with alleged drug abuse in rented property, landlords should still be very cautious and review the provisions of such an ordinance very carefully, particularly in jurisdictions with eviction controls. In Cook v City of Buena Park (2005) 126 CA4th 1, 23 CR3d 700, the Court of Appeal held unconstitutional on due process grounds a local ordinance in a non rent control jurisdiction giving the local police chief discretion to force a landlord to evict tenants suspected of illegal drug activity. The Court found that the landlord was given insufficient information or time to prevail in an eviction action and was required to prevail in the action to avoid criminal penalties.

In 2007, CC §3485 was added to California general nuisance law, and in 2009, it was amended and expanded. It authorizes any city attorney in Los Angeles, Long Beach, San Diego, Oakland, or Sacramento to bring an unlawful detainer action against a tenant who unlawfully possesses or uses weapons or ammunition on the premises. In 2009, CC §3486 was added to California general nuisance law to replace former Health & S C §11571.1. It authorizes any city attorney in Los Angeles, Long Beach, Palmdale, San Diego, Oakland, or Sacramento to bring an unlawful detainer action against a tenant who unlawfully manufactures, sells, possesses, or uses controlled substances on the premises.

The action must be based on an arrest report or other law enforcement agency report. CC §§3485(a), 3486(a). Before bringing the action, the city attorney must first give 30 calendar days' written notice to the landlord and tenant about the nuisance activity, and the landlord must either bring an unlawful detainer action and provide the city attorney with the details of the action or assign the right to bring the unlawful detainer action to the city attorney. The notice to the tenant must meet statutory requirements regarding content and translation into specific languages. It must also include prescribed information about the nature of the unlawful detainer action, potential defenses, and where to find legal assistance to defend the action. CC §§3485(a)(1), 3486(a)(1). The statute requires each participating jurisdiction to report specific information about evictions on an annual basis to the California Research Bureau. CC §§3485(g), 3486(g). This eviction remedy will sunset in January 2014, except for in Los Angeles County, where the law as it pertains to controlled substances will remain in effect indefinitely, except as specified. CC §§3485(h), 3486(h). See Stats 2009, ch 244, §3, re-enacting CC §3486, effective January 1, 2014, only for Los Angeles County if certain conditions are met.

PRACTICE TIP: Neighbors may fear retaliation and may not be willing to be called as witnesses for the landlord. As long as CC §§3485-3486 exist (they are both scheduled to sunset in 2014), a landlord who needs evidence to support the unlawful detainer action may either inquire from the local police department about whether the tenant has been arrested for the illegal activities or invite the city attorney to formally request that the landlord bring an eviction action.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.45 VII. PROPERTY MANAGEMENT

Many landlords find that the services of a property manager are extremely helpful and that a professional manager can maximize income and protect the owner's investment in the property. There are also risks associated with hiring a manager, however, and formal contracts must be negotiated for the work. For properties consisting of 16 units or more, a resident manager, janitor, housekeeper, or other "responsible person" is required. 25 Cal Code Regs §42. Local ordinances may impose parallel or more stringent obligations. Whether this required resident manager performs functions other than providing emergency services and a direct link to the property owner varies depending on the interest and abilities of the landlord.

Preparing or reviewing a property management agreement is not a simple task because these agreements blend elements of real property and employment law. Most property management companies have their own standard agreements.

At a minimum, a property management agreement should clearly specify the manager's duties, which typically include the following:

- locating tenants for vacancies;
- collecting rents;
- maintaining and improving the property;
- solving tenant problems;
- handling lease renewals;
- keeping records;
- purchasing supplies;
- hiring staff;
- paying bills, including loan payments, and taxes;
- handling property insurance; and
- preparing financial statements.

PRACTICE TIP: A property manager who enters into a lease or rental agreement as the lessor (not as agent for the landlord) can bring unlawful detainer actions in his or her own name. Paragraph 3 of the Judicial Council Unlawful Detainer Complaint Form provides for someone other than the landlord to appear as plaintiff. See §9.31. A delegation of this duty must be clearly spelled out in the property management agreement.

Civil Code §§1961-1962.7, which apply to any dwelling structure of one or more units, require the landlord to notify the tenant of the names of the manager and owner or agent for service of process and receipt of notices and demands. If the landlord fails to comply with this requirement, in any dispute arising out of the tenancy the tenant may effect service of process by registered or certified mail at the address at which rent is paid. CC §1962.7.

© The Regents of the University of California

A. Resident Property Managers

§4.46 1. Employee or Independent Contractor?

Large residential complexes are usually managed by a person who lives in the apartment building and is employed as a manager-caretaker by either the property owner or a management firm retained by the landlord. If the manager is hired by the landlord directly, a resident manager or other onsite person may be either an employee or an independent contractor. If the owner exercises control only over the result of the work, and not over the means for achieving the result, the manager may be an independent contractor. See Tieberg v Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1970) 2 C3d 943, 88 CR 175. Most resident managers do not exercise sufficient independence and discretion to qualify as independent contractors.

If the manager is an employee of the owner, the attorney must counsel the landlord on laws governing resident apartment manager wages and work hours (8 Cal Code Regs §11050(3)-(4); see §4.47), social security payments and deductions, income tax withholding, unemployment insurance, disability insurance withholding, and workers' compensation insurance. See generally Advising California Employers and Employees, chaps 1-2, 5, 7-8 (Cal CEB 2005). If the landlord retains a management firm, the landlord should insist that the resident manager be employed by the firm, rather than by the landlord, so that the landlord will not bear the costs and responsibilities of an employer.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.47 2. Compensation

Whether employed by the owner or by a management firm, an apartment building manager who is required to live on the premises is subject to many state employment regulations affecting the amount of rent that may be applied toward an employer's minimum wage obligations and the amount of rent that may be charged.

If the manager's monthly compensation is $1150 or less, and the manager does not exercise independent judgment or discretion in his or her duties, the employment relationship is probably governed by 8 Cal Code Regs §11050, which applies to apartment-house employees (see 8 Cal Code Regs §§11050(1)(B)(1), (2)(P)(3), as modified by Lab C §1182.8).

The maximum rent and rent credit for apartment-house employees are strictly controlled. If a rent credit is used to meet part of the landlord's minimum wage obligation to an employee (under a voluntary written agreement), the credit may not exceed two thirds of the fair market rental value of the apartment (but no more than $381.20 per month for a single person, or $563.90 per month for a couple (effective January 1, 2002; adjusted yearly) when both are employed by the landlord). See 8 Cal Code Regs §11050(10)(C). If the employee must live in the apartment building as a condition of employment, the landlord may charge him or her only two-thirds of the fair market rental value of the apartment, but not to exceed the credits respectively allowed for a single person or a couple employed by the landlord. 8 Cal Code Regs §11050(10)(E).

A landlord may charge a resident manager up to two-thirds of the fair market rental value of the apartment (without the ceiling imposed by 8 Cal Code Regs §11050(10)(C)) if no rent credit is used to meet the landlord's minimum wage obligation to the manager (under a voluntary written agreement). Lab C §1182.8.

If a resident manager is not required to live in the apartment building, but chooses to do so, the landlord may apparently charge the full fair market rental value of the apartment. See 8 Cal Code Regs §11050(10)(E), which limits the rent that may be charged only if the employee is required to reside on the premises as a condition of employment. Labor Code §1182.8 provides that an employer does not violate any applicable order of the Industrial Welfare Commission (i.e., 8 Cal Code Regs §11050), as it relates to rent and rent credits, by charging a resident manager two-thirds of the apartment's fair market rental value, subject to the conditions discussed above. If 8 Cal Code Regs §11050(10)(E) does not apply because the manager is not required to live on the premises, then no statute or regulation appears to restrict the maximum rent that may be charged to the manager. The amount of rent credit that the landlord can use to satisfy his or her minimum wage obligation to the manager, however, would be limited by 8 Cal Code Regs §11050(10)(C).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.48 3. Termination and Eviction

A person who as compensation occupies premises belonging to the landlord/employer generally has no right to remain in possession after the employment relationship has been properly terminated. Eichhorn v De La Cantera (1953) 117 CA2d 50, 255 P2d 70. This principle has been applied to the employment termination of a tenant-employee. Karz v Mecham (1981) 120 CA3d Supp 1, 174 CR 310. See also CCP §1161(1), which provides that a person is guilty of unlawful detainer if he or she became the occupant of the premises as an employee but continues in possession after the employment relationship is lawfully terminated. This provision should apply even in rent-controlled jurisdictions that regulate evictions. See Tapp v Lieberman (1983) 145 CA3d Supp 19, 23, 193 CR 514, in which the court held that San Francisco's rent control ordinance was inapplicable to a nonresident tenant who leased units and provided them to his employees only for the duration of their employment and further held that the ordinance was inapplicable to the tenant's employees. See also Chan v Antepenko (1988) 203 CA3d Supp 21, 250 CR 851 (property manager entered into occupancy as a licensee of the owners and could not, by refusing to vacate on expiration of his employment, convert his status into that of a tenant who would be entitled to protection of San Francisco's rent ordinance).

Termination of the employment relationship might not terminate the manager's right to occupancy, however, if the manager occupied the apartment before assuming the position of manager. In that instance, the tenancy must also be terminated, something that may not be possible in jurisdictions with rent control ordinances that restrict evictions.

The threshold issue for the owner is whether to hire an existing tenant as a manager. The attorney should advise the owner of the various advantages and disadvantages of such a choice, including the potential inability to remove the individual if the employment is terminated. A management agreement with an existing tenant must be carefully drafted to accommodate all situations and should include a provision stating what the rent will be if the manager reverts to the status of tenant.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.49 B. Landlord's Liability for Acts of Manager

A landlord will almost always have some liability for acts committed by the property manager within the scope the manager's employment or agency. See CC §2338. If the landlord authorizes or ratifies a wrongful act, the landlord may be liable for punitive damages. See CC §2339; Farvour v Geltis (1949) 91 CA2d 603, 205 P2d 424.

If the manager is an employee of a management firm that, in turn, is the agent of the landlord, the landlord still may be liable for the manager's acts but should have indemnification rights against the management firm, unless they were expressly waived in the management agreement. See CC §2351 (lawfully appointed subagent represents the original principal; original agent is not liable for acts of subagent). See also Bond v Pitzer (1958) 163 CA2d 1, 5, 328 P2d 1009 (CC §2351 applied to exempt apartment manager from liability for tort of subordinate employee).

Even if the manager is an independent contractor, the landlord may be liable for the manager's acts or omissions if the landlord negligently hired an incompetent manager. See Golden v Conway (1976) 55 CA3d 948, 128 CR 69.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.50 C. Making Repairs; Code Compliance

Landlords should be advised to respond promptly to requests for repairs and to maintain good records of all requests for repairs as well as all responses to such requests. Maintaining consistent and regular business records is critical if there is a dispute about whether an owner or a manager received a request from a tenant to correct a problem within a rental unit and whether the repairs were made. Such record keeping is much more difficult for smaller owners who may manage only one or two units and are somewhat informal in their relationships with their tenants. However, if a dispute occurs or if a need to evict a tenant arises, having good written records will be invaluable to the owner if the owner has in fact met all of the owner's responsibilities. See chap 3.

If an owner receives a formal complaint from a city official charged with enforcing state or local building codes, the practitioner should advise the owner that such a citation is extremely serious even if the problem appears to be minor. There are increasingly severe consequences for an owner's failure to correct defects that are the subject of a notice of violation from a local building or housing inspector. These consequences include the inability to demand rent, collect rent, or commence an unlawful detainer action after a rent default (CC §1942.4(a)), obtain the benefits of vacancy decontrol in rent control jurisdictions (CC §§1954.52(d), 1954.53(f)), or take interest, taxes, depreciation, and amortization paid on the property as deductions from income for state income tax purposes (Rev & T C §§17274, 24436.5). When substandard housing is unsafe to occupy, a local enforcement agency may obtain judicial appointment of a receiver to manage the property and remediate the violations or take other appropriate action, including demolition. City of Santa Monica v Gonzalez (2008) 43 C4th 905, 76 CR3d 483. In addition, a long-term failure to comply with housing or building codes may also subject an owner to penalties, sanctions, and attorney fees and costs. See, e.g., City of Santa Paula v Narula (2003) 114 CA4th 485, 8 CR3d 75. For further discussion, see §§3.10-3.11D.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.51 D. Security Deposit Issues on Termination of Tenancy

Civil Code §1950.5 mandates that if either the landlord or the tenant terminates the tenancy, the tenant must be given the opportunity to have an inspection of the rental unit no earlier than two weeks before the end of the tenancy so that the tenant has an opportunity to correct any defects that might result in a deduction from the tenant's security deposit. See details in §4.28. Landlords are required to give tenants a notice of their right to request such an inspection, their right to be present during the inspection, and the date and time of the inspection. In addition, the landlord must give to the tenant at the inspection a written list of defects or must leave such a list in the rental unit at the end of the inspection. The inspection option does not apply if the tenancy is terminated by the tenant's default in the payment of rent (CCP §1161(2)), the tenant's breach of a covenant or condition of the rental agreement (CCP §1161(3)), or the tenant's committing waste or nuisance or subletting in violation of the agreement (CCP §1161(4)). See CC §1950.5(f)(1), (q).

The tenant may decline the opportunity to have such an inspection.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlords must keep a record of the result of the inspection, including details about areas that were not able to be inspected (i.e., under a carpet or behind pictures on the wall or behind any wall-attached cabinet or entertainment unit). This record keeping may be difficult, since the list must be left at the time of the inspection. Short lists can simply be copied by hand, although using a multicopy form with treated paper or reverting to carbon paper may be desirable.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.52 VIII. PRESALE AND DEVELOPMENT ISSUES

It is beyond the scope of this treatise to discuss sales and development of property that had once been rental property. With increasing frequency, however, practitioners who advise landlords are called upon to advise an owner undertaking a conversion of the property to condominiums, selling the property to multiple owners who will own as tenants-in-common, or selling the entire parcel as a rental property. The efforts to sell rental properties to those who will own and occupy them seem to occur most frequently in jurisdictions with stringent limits on owner move-ins and escalating home purchase prices.

Some rent control ordinances provide a just cause for eviction (see chap 7) in connection with a condominium conversion. See, e.g., San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.9(a)(9).

Disclosure during a sale is a critical part of any transaction. Standard real estate sale forms often provide that a buyer will assume title subject to all tenant rights. Those rights are often difficult to explain in rent control jurisdictions. In localities where there are many sales of apartment buildings and where apartments are being converted to tenancies in common or condominiums, rent control ordinances provide added protections to tenants. In San Francisco, for example, in 2008, the city amended its ordinance to require both buyers and sellers of buildings in which tenants reside to deliver to those tenants statements of basic tenant rights under the ordinance and under state law. see San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.9(j).

In addition, if the buyer is making the purchase in order to occupy all or some of the rental property, local rent control ordinances must be consulted to determine if such occupancy is allowed. In this regard, a buyer may need to determine, and therefore a seller may need to disclose, whether there have been prior evictions from the property, a fact which may impact a buyer's right to occupy. In addition, prior evictions may affect a buyer's right to increase rents in accordance with a local ordinance. See, e.g., Oakland Mun C §8.22.080. In some jurisdictions, sellers who transfer a building in which one or more of units is to be delivered vacant must disclose the specific legal grounds for the termination of any tenant from the vacant unit. See, e.g., San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.10A(i). For a discussion of purchasing real property subject to leaseholds, see California Real Property Sales Transactions §§4.73-4.75 (4th ed Cal CEB 2007).

The conversion of buildings with five or more units to condominiums or the sale of such buildings to five or more tenancy-in-common owners is subject to regulation by the California Department of Real Estate. That state agency must issue a permit, often referred to as a White Paper, approving the division of the property into five or more interests. Although there is yet a reported appellate case, practitioners should be aware that evictions have been denied, even if the owner has complied with all other laws and local ordinances, when such a permit has not been issued. See Bohbot v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2005) 133 CA4th 456, 34 CR3d 827.

For further discussion of the eviction of tenants in anticipation of a condominium conversion, see California Eviction Defense Manual §17.14 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

5

Counseling the Tenant

Myron Moskovitz
Sonya Bekoff Molho

I. COUNSELING INDIVIDUAL TENANTS
- A. Overall Strategy
  - 1. Developing a Tenant Profile: The "Big Picture" §5.1
  - 2. Devising a Strategy §5.2
    - a. Litigation as an Option §5.3
    - b. Settlement as an Option §5.4
- B. Limited Scope Representation
  - 1. Applicable Law §5.4A
  - 2. Checklist: Tenant Fee Agreement §5.4B
- C. Enforcing Tenant's Rights During Tenancy
  - 1. Defeating Rent Increase §5.5
    - a. Retaliation Prohibited §5.6
    - b. Discrimination Prohibited §5.7
    - c. Improper Service of Notice of Rent Increase §5.8
    - d. Landlord in Breach of Warranty of Habitability §5.9
  - 2. Remedies for Uninhabitable Conditions; Preserving Evidence §5.10
    - a. Informing Building or Health Inspector of Conditions §5.11
    - b. Contacting the Landlord §5.12
    - c. "Repair-and-Deduct" Remedy §5.13
    - d. Petitioning Rent Control Board for Rent Decrease §5.14
    - e. Rent Withholding §5.15
    - f. Action for Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability §5.16
  - 3. Redressing Illegal Landlord Entry
    - a. Possible Remedies §5.17
    - b. Changing Locks §5.18
  - 4. Protection Under Anti-SLAPP Statute §5.18A
- D. "Breaking" a Lease §5.19
- E. Lockouts and Other "Self-Help" Evictions §5.20
  - 1. Recovering Possession §5.21
  - 2. Amount of Damages §5.22
  - 3. Joining Claims §5.23
- F. Legal Eviction Procedure
  - 1. Unlawful Detainer Action Required §5.24
    - a. Required Notices §5.24A
    - b. Summary Remedy §5.24B
    - c. Unlawful Detainer Judgment §5.24C
  - 2. Stipulated Judgments §5.25
  - 3. Effect on Tenant's Creditworthiness §5.25A
  - 4. Landlord Actions In Propria Persona §5.26
  - 5. Representing Occupant Not Named in Eviction Action §5.27
- G. Roommates §5.28
  - 1. Landlord's Consent §5.29
  - 2. Nature of Relationship; Right to Evict §5.30
  - 3. Effect of Local Rent Control Ordinance §5.31
  - 4. Written Occupancy Agreement §5.32

II. COUNSELING TENANT ORGANIZATIONS
- A. Attorney's Role §5.33
- B. Right to Organize on Premises §5.33A
- C. Strategy and Tactics §5.34
  - 1. Obtaining Information About Landlord §5.35
  - 2. Petitioning the Landlord §5.36
  - 3. Picketing and Publicity §5.37
  - 4. Rent Strikes §5.38
  - 5. Lawsuits Against Landlord §5.39
  - 6. Negotiations §5.40
  - 7. Agreement Negotiated Between Landlord and Tenant Union
    - a. Parties; Effectiveness §5.41
    - b. Form: Sample Collective Bargaining Agreement §5.42

© The Regents of the University of California

I. COUNSELING INDIVIDUAL TENANTS

A. Overall Strategy

§5.1 1. Developing a Tenant Profile: The "Big Picture"

The attorney should begin counseling a tenant client by obtaining information on the larger factors affecting the tenant's life apart from the legal details immediately at issue; essential questions are these:

(a) What are the tenant's overall goals in terms of the future of the tenancy? That is, does the tenant wish to remain in the unit but only if some problem is corrected, such as a habitability defect or entries by the landlord? Or does the tenant want to vacate the unit but needs some time to do so.

(b) How would the tenant's total relationship with the landlord be described?

(c) How do the tenant's goals about the future of the tenancy fit the overall circumstances of the tenant's life, both financially and emotionally?

(d) What does the tenant really need?

EXAMPLE: A tenant whose problem was a rent increase that the attorney is able to have rescinded will not be pleased with the attorney's services if a notice of termination follows the next month (even though the tenant could probably defeat the retaliatory eviction under CC §1942.5(c) (see §8.109)). Accordingly, the attorney should discuss the advantages of relocation; the tenant may have outgrown the unit, or may genuinely be overextended financially, and might therefore benefit from taking the opportunity to move to larger or more affordable accommodations. In such cases, the attorney does the tenant no favor by winning the right to possession of a home that is no longer suitable for the tenant's overall needs. The better solution may be to offer the landlord the business opportunity of a voluntary surrender at an agreed on future time, including a mutual waiver of all claims (including rents otherwise payable to the date of surrender).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.2 2. Devising a Strategy

The attorney's goal should be to devise a strategy for resolving the tenant's immediate problem that minimizes the risk of:

- jeopardizing the tenant's "security of tenancy" (i.e., the tenant may remain in the rental unit);
- prompting the landlord to increase the amount of rent that the tenant currently pays; and
- aggravating the emotional strain that inevitably arises in a dispute over the tenant's home.

It is the attorney's obligation to raise those issues, even if the client does not.

EXAMPLE: A tenant consults an attorney about the landlord's failure to make repairs and the attorney determines that the landlord has probably violated the implied warranty of habitability (see §3.16). Under these circumstances, the tenant may have the right to stop paying rent until the repairs are made. See §3.32. Before advising the tenant to withhold rent, however, the attorney should consider the risk involved and discuss this with the tenant. If the tenant withholds rent, the landlord sues to evict, and a jury or court finds that the tenant failed to sustain the burden of proving that the landlord breached the implied warranty, the tenant will be evicted. On the other hand, if the defects are so serious that the attorney can reasonably conclude that the landlord has little chance of prevailing, rent withholding is likely to promote corrective action by the landlord.

Faced with any risk of eviction, the tenant may prefer to continue paying the rent and to file an action against the landlord for damages (and, perhaps, for specific performance) for breach of the implied warranty. See §§3.35-3.41. The landlord then might serve a 30-day notice of termination on the tenant (see §8.69), however, if the tenancy is month-to-month and eviction controls are not in effect. Although the tenant should be able to defeat the notice on the ground that it was given in retaliation for suing the landlord (see §8.109), resolving the problem through litigation will be expensive.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.3 a. Litigation as an Option

Litigation may be the only viable strategy open to a tenant, and it can be an important method of establishing or defending tenant rights. In most cases, however, litigating landlord-tenant disputes simply is not feasible economically for either the landlord or the tenant. The tenant may have little to gain in an action against the landlord, unless the landlord's actions:

- effectively evicted the tenant;
- caused actual injury to the tenant or to his or her property; or
- were so egregious that the tenant might recover substantial punitive damages.

If the tenant loses the action, he or she will probably have incurred substantial attorney fees in the process and may be liable for the landlord's attorney fees as well if the lease or rental agreement contains an attorney fee provision. See §1.74.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.4 b. Settlement as an Option

Although litigation is sometimes the only tool with which to achieve the tenant's goals, the attorney's counseling objective should generally be a negotiated settlement (or a new lease), whether or not litigation is pending. Settlement not only resolves the immediate problems but also gives the tenant "security of tenancy" and an assurance that the rent will not be increased. Although any single tactic may appear to have a narrow goal (e.g., the tenant withholds rent to force the landlord to make repairs, or the tenant brings a suit for damages to collect money from the landlord), the tactic also might be the catalyst for a negotiated settlement that protects the tenant's broader, long-range interests. In a dispute over the landlord's failure to make repairs, for example, a fair settlement might be as follows:

(1) The landlord does some or most of the demanded repairs on a specified timetable (and suffers rent abatement for failure to meet the timetable);

(2) The parties enter into a two-year lease at the present rent; and

(3) The tenant releases the landlord from all liability for past damages for breach of the implied warranty of habitability.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Limited Scope Representation

§5.4A 1. Applicable Law

Limited scope representation (sometimes called "unbundling") is a "relationship between an attorney and a person seeking legal services in which they have agreed that the scope of the legal services will be limited to specific tasks the attorney will perform for the person." Cal Rules of Ct 3.35(a). It is increasingly used in landlord-tenant and family law cases. In most limited scope representation, the attorney and the client agree on which specific tasks the attorney will perform, which will thus be within the scope of the representation, and they agree that the client represents himself or herself as to services that the attorney does not agree to provide. Less commonly, attorney and client agree that the attorney will handle one or more discrete issues from start to finish, and the client will assume responsibility for the other issues.

NOTE: The applicable Cal Rules of Ct 3.35-3.37 and accompanying Judicial Council Forms MC-950, MC-955—MC-956, and MC-958 became effective January 1, 2007.

Although tenants traditionally have been unable to afford full service representation, unlawful detainer actions are a prime area for unbundled services, both for tenants and landlords. Because of the procedural complexities of unlawful detainer law, the benefits of paying for some professional assistance become more obvious to litigants, as it significantly increases the likelihood of success, and can save a litigant both time and money. As a result, tenant assistance can be a profit center for attorneys who can efficiently prepare a case for presentation and effectively coach the litigant. Since the laws governing this area of practice are highly localized and complex, this is a prime area where a qualified attorney can provide valuable assistance to a self-representing litigant.

Since most unlawful detainer courts are high in volume, relatively little time is allocated to each case. Therefore, a litigant with a well-organized presentation enhances his or her chances for success. Law and procedure can vary from one jurisdiction, or even venue, to another, and this can often be baffling to litigants. By steering the litigant through the procedures and deadlines, an attorney can significantly increase the likelihood of success. By actually representing a litigant on a limited basis for the more technical aspects of the claim or defense, the attorney provides an invaluable service which is demonstrably beneficial to the client.

WARNING: An attorney must disclose to the client in writing the absence of professional liability insurance at the outset of the attorney-client relationship when it is reasonably foreseeable that the total amount of time to be used in representing the client will exceed 4 hours. An attorney who does not provide this notice must inform the client in writing within 30 days of the date that the attorney subsequently knows or should know that he or she no longer has the insurance. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-410.

The benefits to representation in court for tenants are obvious in cases in which the tenant has a legal defense. Practitioners report that with increasing numbers of immigrants and seniors renting property to tenants, there is a pool of low- and middle-income landlords who also require assistance to navigate the often confusing and technical local ordinances governing evictions and habitability. Attorneys who develop models for effective landlord-tenant assistance will find a ready market for their services.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/5 Counseling the Tenant/§5.4B 2. Checklist: Tenant Fee Agreement

§5.4B 2. Checklist: Tenant Fee Agreement

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

Services that lend themselves to limited scope assistance for the tenant in the unlawful detainer context include:

- Identifying available defenses and the evidence required to prove them.
- Preparing (or, at a minimum, reviewing) all responsive pleadings and exhibits that will be filed in court (whether law and motion or answer to complaint), as a case can be thrown out for insufficient facts (or mistakes) in pleadings (see California Eviction Defense Manual 13.1 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993)), and the stakes are high for tenants who have valid defenses but lose the unlawful detainer action.
- Explaining state law that allows only parties to review court files and copy pleadings in the court file in unlawful detainer actions. Parties must always bring identification to court to examine the file. See CCP §1161.2.
- Determining whether pretrial discovery is required and whether counsel must assist in taking depositions or preparing interrogatories or requests for production of documents.
- Organizing the documentary evidence in a binder in the order of presentation, together with any foundational requirements.
- Scripting of the elements of the presentation.
- Scripting of cross-examination questions for the opposing side and other witnesses.
- Preparing an evidence binder for the judge.
- Providing copies of statutes or other legal authorities, and/or drafting a trial brief.
- Attending or coaching the client for settlement conferences, including helping the client analyze the financial and other costs/benefits of any particular settlement option or term.
- Coaching the client on how to make an oral motion at the end of trial for relief from forfeiture because of hardship, including a complete list of facts and authorities required for that motion.
- Appearing in court to represent the client, particularly if more technical issues are presented, such as habitability defenses and the like.

Many attorneys use checklists to memorialize their discussions with the client and define the scope of the limited representation. The checklists are then attached to and incorporated into the written fee agreement. (For discussion on need for written fee agreement, see §4.2.) If the parties change the scope of the representation after entering into the initial agreement, the checklist should also be revised or replaced to document the changes. For a compilation of resources on limited scope representation, see the California Courts website at http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/programs/equalaccess/ethiss.htm#limited.

WARNING: Because it is necessary to specifically define the scope of the attorney's services in writing, counsel should not use a full service fee agreement when providing limited scope representation. For sample forms and checklists, see Fee Agreement Forms Manual, chap 9 (2d ed Cal CEB 2007). Even if the attorney will provide full services, a written retainer agreement should be used. See §4.2. If it becomes necessary during the case for counsel to substitute in as counsel of record under a full service agreement, the form Substitution of Attorney—Civil (Without Court Order) (Judicial Council Form MC-050; Mandatory) must be used.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Enforcing Tenant's Rights During Tenancy

§5.5 1. Defeating Rent Increase

In the absence of rent control, a landlord generally may change any term (including the rent) of a month-to-month tenancy by giving the tenant 30 days' notice of the change. CC §827(a), (b)(2). If the rent increase exceeds 10 percent of the rent charged in the previous 12 months, however, 60 days' notice is required in residential tenancies. CC §827(b)(3). A 60-day notice is not required if the increase is caused by a change in the tenant's income or family composition as determined by a recertification (see §§1.36, 2.16) required by statute or regulation for government-assisted housing. See CC §827(b)(3). See §§3.65-3.65B. The landlord's power is limited, however, as discussed in §§5.6-5.9. Additionally, if the landlord raises the rent to pass through certain utility costs to the tenants, the increase may violate Pub Util C §739.5. See Hillsboro Props. v PUC (2003) 108 CA4th 246, 133 CR2d 343 (mobilehome park's assessed annual rent increases, although authorized by municipal rent control ordinance, increased rates for submetered utilities in violation of Pub Util C §739.5).

When evaluating the options available to challenge a rent increase, the tenant's attorney must consider and discuss with the client the risks involved and the potential impact on the tenant's relationship with the landlord. A tenant who simply refuses to pay the rent increase, believing it to be invalid for one of the reasons discussed in §§5.6-5.9, risks eviction. On the other hand, if the tenant pays the increased rent, reserving the right to challenge the validity of the notice or the increase, the burden will be on the tenant to institute an action against the landlord to recover damages. Furthermore, if the rent increase is substantial, the tenant may not be able to afford the option of paying the increase and challenging it later. The tenant also must understand that he or she may be liable for the landlord's attorney fees if litigation is unsuccessful.

The tenant's attorney also should evaluate the problem with a view toward negotiation. The tenant may be willing to pay increased rent (even if the increase was imposed improperly) if, for example, the landlord makes certain repairs, replaces dilapidated furniture or appliances, or provides a parking space for the tenant. If the increase was clearly (or even arguably) improper, a letter to the landlord that points out the defects in the increase, but also states that the tenant is willing to accept the increase if certain concessions are made, may secure benefits for the tenant that outweigh the burden of the rent increase.

PRACTICE TIP: If improper service was the only defect in the increase, the attorney's letter to the landlord should probably state that the increase was defective, but not spell out the landlord's mistakes. If the attorney specifies the procedural errors, the landlord can use the information to serve another notice correctly.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.6 a. Retaliation Prohibited

The landlord may not increase the rent to retaliate against the tenant because the tenant:

- utilized the "repair-and-deduct" remedy (CC §1942.5(a));
- reported housing code violations to a city agency (CC §1942.5(a));
- joined a tenants' union (CC §1942.5(c)); or
- "lawfully and peaceably exercised any rights under the law" (CC §1942.5(c)).

See §8.109.

A tenant may be protected against a landlord's adverse action even if retaliation is not the sole, or dominant, motive behind it. See §8.129-8.132. Retaliation must be found to be a "motivating factor" prompting adverse activity (such as a desire to punish the tenant for engaging in a protected activity). See Mt. Healthy City Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ. v Doyle (1977) 429 US 274, 287, 50 L Ed 2d 471, 97 S Ct 568. But see Western Land Office, Inc. v Cervantes (1985) 175 CA3d 724, 220 CR 784.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.7 b. Discrimination Prohibited

The Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) (Unruh Act) prohibits discrimination on any "arbitrary" basis and thus might prohibit a landlord from increasing the rent of one or more tenants when not increasing the rent of other tenants. See In re Cox (1970) 3 C3d 205, 216, 90 CR 24. See also Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 732, 180 CR 496. See §§2.22, 2.57. However, a city may deny a rental subsidy to a lessee of city property that discriminates on the basis of sexual orientation. Evans v City of Berkeley (2006) 38 C4th 1, 40 CR3d 205. If the tenant can establish that the landlord arbitrarily increased the tenant's rent because of his or her race, sex, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, disability, medical condition, marital status, including gender identity, appearance and behavior, sexual orientation, or other protected characteristic, the tenant may be able to enjoin the increase and even recover damages for the discrimination. See §§2.57-2.59. Persons protected under the Unruh Act include those who are perceived to have any particular characteristic of the listed classes in the Act or who associate with persons who have, or are perceived to have, any such characteristic. CC §51(e)(5). Moreover, it is not necessary for a person to demonstrate that a request for nondiscriminatory treatment was made and refused in order to state a claim under the Unruh Act. Angelucci v Century Supper Club (2007) 41 C4th 160, 59 CR3d 142. But see Reycraft v Lee (2009) 177 CA4th 1211, 99 CR3d 746 (tenant's guest failed to establish standing under California Disabled Persons Act (CC §54.3) when she did not follow mobilehome park rules in seeking access to facilities).

A tenant who seeks damages under CC §52 for a violation of the Unruh Act because of a violation of the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 (ADA) (42 USC §§1210-12213) is not required to prove intentional discrimination. Civil Code §51(f) added ADA violations to the protection of the Unruh Act. The ADA does not necessarily require a showing of intentional discrimination. Civil Code §52 provides statutory damages for all categories of discrimination covered by CC §51 even if the particular discrimination is not required to be proved intentional. Munson v Del Taco, Inc. (2009) 46 C4th 661, 94 CR3d 685.

"Arbitrary" has been defined (in cases not decided under the Unruh Act) to include an action by a landlord "when it lacks substantial support in the evidence, and when the facts do not reasonably justify the conclusion." Guntert v City of Stockton (1974) 43 CA3d 203, 210, 117 CR 601; Hollon v Pierce (1967) 257 CA2d 468, 478, 64 CR 808. Some tenants' attorneys argue that, as case law under the Act evolves, the courts may interpret the Act as prohibiting a landlord from raising rent or taking other action adverse to the tenant for any "arbitrary" reason. For example, if the landlord serves a rent increase notice that states a reason for the increase (which it need not do), and the stated reason is false or "lacks substantial support in the evidence," the increase could be considered arbitrary and thus invalid under the Unruh Act. To date, however, decisions under the Act have concerned only arbitrary discrimination based on class characteristics.

PRACTICE TIP: If the tenant suspects discriminatory practices in the landlord's choice of tenants to whom the rent increase is applied, the tenant may be able to obtain production of rental records for other tenants in the building. See Department of Fair Employment & Hous. v Superior Court (2002) 99 CA4th 896, 121 CR2d 615 (DFEH entitled to obtain rental records, including current and former tenants' rental applications; the state's interest in preventing discrimination outweighs the intrusion on privacy interests of third party tenants).

Housing discrimination issues may also be brought before the Fair Employment and Housing Commission under the FEHA (Govt C §§12900-12996). The Commission has authority to award emotional distress damages in housing discrimination cases. Konig v FEHC (2002) 28 C4th 743, 123 CR2d 1. For further discussion, see chap 2.

In an en banc decision, the Ninth Circuit ruled in Fair Hous. Council v Roommates.com, LLC (9th Cir 2008) 521 F3d 1157 that a website operator whose on-line questionnaire required subscribers to disclose their sex, family status, and sexual orientation engaged in discrimination under the Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §§3601-3631) and was not entitled to immunity under the Communications Decency Act of 1996 (47 USC §§230-231).

WARNING: As it becomes more common for tenants to post "roommate wanted" advertisements online, tenants should be advised of potential liability for publishing information online that violates fair housing laws. See §§2.30-2.31.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.8 c. Improper Service of Notice of Rent Increase

Procedures for raising rent must be followed strictly. Landlords often serve a rent increase notice by simply mailing the notice to the tenant. That procedure is allowed under amendments to CC §827(b) (see §§3.65-3.65B) allowing rent increase notices in residential tenancies to be served by:

- Personal delivery to the tenant; or
- First-class or express mail under CCP §1013.

All other notices under CC §827(a) must be served "in the manner prescribed by Section 1162 of the Code of Civil Procedure." Code of Civil Procedure §1162(3) permits service by mail only if the landlord cannot ascertain the tenant's places of residence and business, or if a person of suitable age and discretion cannot be found at either location. Furthermore, a landlord who serves the notice by mail must also post a copy of the notice on the property and deliver a copy to a person residing on the property (if one can be found). CCP §1162(3).

A rent increase might be effective even if notice was improperly served if the tenant actually received the notice or paid the increased rent. Actual receipt of the notice may cure any defects in the manner of service. No court has so held in any reported case, but several cases have indicated that actual receipt of a 3-day or 30-day notice to vacate cures the defect in service. See, e.g., Valov v Tank (1985) 168 CA3d 867, 214 CR 546; Wilcox v Anderson (1978) 84 CA3d 593, 148 CR 773. See also §8.66. Similarly, a tenant who pays the increased rent without protest or reservation of the right to challenge the notice probably has accepted a modification of the rental agreement and has waived the right to complain of defects in the manner of service of the notice.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.9 d. Landlord in Breach of Warranty of Habitability

If a landlord has breached the implied warranty of habitability (see Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704), the tenant has the right to cease paying any rent, including the rent increase, until a court determines a "reasonable rent" for the premises. See §§3.36, 5.13. If the tenant asserts this right, the landlord might be persuaded to rescind or reduce the rent increase.

If the defects are serious and continuing, and the landlord refuses to correct them, the landlord risks a substantial penalty. The city may sue the landlord for violation of the city housing code and obtain a substantial verdict (a fine of $1000 per day imposed on a landlord for serious, continuing housing code violations was held constitutional in City & County of San Francisco v Sainez (2000) 77 CA4th 1302, 92 CR2d 418). The city's action does not foreclose the tenants from also suing for actual damages, including damages for emotional distress (see McNairy v C.K. Realty (2007) 150 CA4th 1500, 59 CR3d 429), and fines up to $100 per day under CC §789.3.

A tenant who signs and delivers an estoppel certificate stating that the premises are in good repair may be prohibited from claiming a breach of the warranty of habitability unless the problem arises after the estoppel certificate is signed. See Plaza Freeway Ltd. Partnership v First Mountain Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 616, 96 CR2d 865 (commercial tenant who signed and delivered estoppel certificate as required under lease was bound by certificate's declarations even though they failed to list option to renew as permitted by lease, and gave wrong termination date for initial lease). See also Miner v Tustin Ave. Investors, LLC (2004) 116 CA4th 264, 272, 10 CR3d 178 (an estoppel certificate signed by the tenant created an ambiguity because, although the tenant failed to list the option, the estoppel certificate stated that the lease remained in full force and effect, and the lease contained the right to the option; held: the option was not extinguished, distinguishing Plaza Freeway).

PRACTICE TIP: Many residential landlords deliver an estoppel certificate to tenants during escrow or just before escrow is opened. Unless the rental agreement specifically requires that the estoppel certificate be completed, signed, and returned, it is dangerous to do so under Plaza Freeway Ltd. Partnership v First Mountain Bank, supra, because the tenant will not be permitted to contradict the statements in the estoppel certificate even if they are erroneous.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.10 2. Remedies for Uninhabitable Conditions; Preserving Evidence

When the landlord fails to make necessary repairs to the premises, the tenant has several remedies. See §§3.9-3.10, 3.12, 3.15A, 3.16, 3.32, 3.35, 5.11-5.16. The tenant's attorney must determine which course of action or legal remedy is best suited to having the repairs made at minimal expense and risk to the tenant. See §§3.45-3.48. In any case, the attorney should always document the conditions in the following ways:

(a) Take photographs of the problem (three copies should be made for future use as trial evidence). Video may also be useful at trial, depending on the nature of the defects (e.g., if the problem is a roof leak, have photos taken of the water-stained ceiling, walls, and carpets, as well as any personal property damage, and also of, e.g., dripping water, buckets, tarps draped around the room).

(b) Instruct the client to itemize losses and estimated costs of repair or replacement on paper, together with receipts (e.g., for dry-cleaning bills) and copies of written estimates (e.g., for repair or replacement of electronic equipment, furniture, clothes, books, restoration of water-damaged photographs).

(c) If the defective conditions are substantial and causing personal injuries so severe that the tenant must leave, as is sometimes required in toxic mold situations (see §3.11B), engage an appropriate expert to inspect and conduct tests before the tenant vacates, so that access to the unit will not be difficult. Crucial evidence is sometimes destroyed during remedial work that is done shortly after the tenant leaves.

(d) Obtain copies of all previous communications between the tenant and the landlord, managers, or building inspectors.

(e) Always have the client review any correspondence from the attorney to the landlord for accuracy. Misstating or overstating the situation may anger, rather than persuade, the landlord.

(f) While the tenant is still residing in the unit, attempt to have the premises inspected by the appropriate Building and Safety Department, Code Enforcement Unit, and/or Health Department. A certified copy of a citation from a governmental agency is excellent evidence at trial or during negotiations with a recalcitrant landlord.

(g) If the unit is subject to rent control, consider filing a petition for a rent decrease based on lack of habitability or removal of amenities. A landlord faced with a reduction in rent or government citations has a financial incentive to fix substandard conditions.

For further discussion of gathering and preserving evidence of defects that make a rental unit uninhabitable and selecting appropriate experts, especially if there is substantial personal injury or property damage due to mold exposure, see Handling Mold Litigation in California (Cal CEB Action Guide September 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.11 a. Informing Building or Health Inspector of Conditions

If the tenant's unit is in need of structural repairs and, as a result, the building does not meet building code requirements, the attorney should consider calling the applicable city or county building inspection department. Inspectors might exert enough pressure to force the landlord to make most or all of the repairs. These departments, however, are often understaffed and overworked, as is their ultimate enforcement arm, the city or county attorney. Many sophisticated landlords know this, and may avoid or manipulate the code-enforcement system (e.g., by performing a few inexpensive or cosmetic repairs, and promising to "get to" the more expensive ones). See also §3.10.

PRACTICE TIP: The attorney should consider hiring an expert witness, such as a retired building inspector or an instructor from a local owner-builder center to inspect the premises and to write a report. If this inspection is performed competently and is well presented, the report can be provided to the official city inspector, both to bolster the tenant's case and to bring attention to items that city personnel might otherwise have overlooked.

If the defects present an immediate threat to the tenant's health or safety, contacting the city or county health department may produce better results. However, inconvenience that results from repairs and maintenance done by the landlord that does not substantially interfere with the tenant's right to live in the premises does not entitle the tenant to a rent decrease. Golden Gateway Ctr. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1999) 73 CA4th 1204, 87 CR2d 332. When major disruptions have continued for a lengthy period, the tenants may be entitled to a rent decrease but must individually petition the local rent control board. Ocean Park Assocs. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2004) 114 CA4th 1050, 8 CR3d 421 (major disruptions ongoing for almost 3 years, but the rent board could not reduce rents on behalf of individual tenants who did not file their own decrease petitions). Inadequate heat in winter may cause children or the elderly to become sick, and rats in the building or around garbage cans can spread disease throughout the neighborhood. In such situations, the health department might respond more quickly and firmly than the building inspection department. For further discussion, see chap 3.

If the landlord responds to the tenant's complaints to government agencies about numerous code violations by suing the tenant, the tenant may be able to file a special motion to strike under CCP §425.16 on the ground that the landlord's suit is a strategic lawsuit against public participation (SLAPP). See §5.18A.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.12 b. Contacting the Landlord

The owner is required to disclose the name, address, and telephone number of the person or entity to whom rent payments are to be made and of those who are authorized to receive service of legal process. CC §1962. See §1.21A. As a result, an attorney who decides to deal directly with the landlord should first deliver a letter to the landlord and other designated person or entity, specifying the defects that should be fixed, the date by which the tenant expects the repairs to be completed, and the remedies that might be invoked if the defects are not fixed by the stated date. A letter setting forth such information should satisfy the notice requirements for the "repair-and-deduct" remedy (CC §1942) or for assertion of a breach of the implied warranty of habitability. See Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704; §3.17.

PRACTICE TIP: The attorney's letter should warn the landlord of the dangers of filing an unlawful detainer action and should discourage the landlord from initiating litigation over the right to possession without first discussing the situation with the attorney. It may also be appropriate to suggest to the landlord that the claim be tendered to the landlord's property insurance carrier for contribution, if not full coverage. The tenant's attorney, however, should be careful about providing legal advice to the landlord, particularly about the potential for insurance coverage for (or defense of) an affirmative suit by the tenant. Not all claims will be covered by the landlord's property insurance. Swain v California Cas. Ins. Co. (2002) 99 CA4th 1, 120 CR2d 808 (insurer not required to defend landlord policyholder against tenant's suit for wrongful eviction under general liability insurance policy).

The letter should be delivered personally to the landlord (or the landlord's agent, as defined in CC §1962(a)). A copy of the letter should also be sent to the landlord as required in the "Notice" provision in the lease, which commonly provides that notice must be given to the landlord at a specified address (not always the address of the property manager) via certified mail, return receipt requested. If the lease contains no specified method for providing notice to the landlord, a copy of the letter should be sent via regular first class mail, which is known to be highly reliable. First class mail is generally faster than return-receipt mail, and it avoids the problem of a landlord who is unavailable, or who fails or refuses to sign for a return-receipt letter. If the landlord has a fax number or an e-mail address at home or at work, those methods of delivery should also be used.

If the attorney anticipates a lack of response or fears a retaliatory response, he or she should consider sending courtesy copies of the letter to:

- the manager's supervisor and management company;
- all owners of record of the property (available from the county assessor or recorder);
- the local rent control agency or board, if applicable;
- the city or county building department;
- the landlord's attorney if one is involved; and
- the client (if the attorney writes the letter) or the attorney (if the tenant writes the letter).

Sending multiple copies lets the landlord know that others are aware of the problem and reduces the chances that the landlord will falsely claim not to have received the letter.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.13 c. "Repair-and-Deduct" Remedy

The statutory "repair-and-deduct" remedy (CC §1942) may be satisfactory for some defects. The remedy is limited, however, to repairs that cost no more than one month's rent. CC §1942(a); see §3.12. Furthermore, the remedy may be asserted only twice in a 12-month period, although it may be asserted in consecutive months. Tenants might be able to undertake repair of major common defects (e.g., a central heating system) by pooling their rents, but this approach has not been sanctioned yet by statute or case law.

Tenants considering the repair-and-deduct approach must also consider their potential liability for the repairs. If repairs are made improperly, the tenant might be responsible for any injury to the landlord's property. Moreover, if repairs are made negligently to common areas or equipment, the tenant might be liable for injuries to third parties (e.g., other tenants, guests, passersby). For example, negligently performed repairs to a central heating system might cause a fire, or repairs to a roof might cause a leak and ruin a tenant's furniture.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.14 d. Petitioning Rent Control Board for Rent Decrease

In some rent-controlled jurisdictions, a tenant may petition the local rent control board for a decrease in rent on the ground that a decrease in services or a failure to maintain the property in a habitable condition decreases the fair rental value of the property. See §§7.39-7.40. In Sterling v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1985) 168 CA3d 176, 214 CR 71, the court of appeal upheld the authority of the Santa Monica Rent Control Board to order a rent decrease for code violations and uninhabitable conditions, rejecting the contention that state law preempts local regulation of the problem. See also Richman v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1992) 7 CA4th 1457, 9 CR2d 690. Individual tenants must petition the rent control board for the rent decrease; the rent control board may not reduce rents on behalf of individual tenants who do not file their own petitions. Ocean Park Assocs. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2004) 114 CA4th 1050, 8 CR3d 421. However, inconvenience that results from repairs and maintenance done by the landlord that does not substantially interfere with the tenant's right to live in the premises does not entitle the tenant to a rent decrease. Golden Gateway Ctr. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1999) 73 CA4th 1204, 87 CR2d 332.

As of August, 2006, a San Francisco landlord must have "just cause" to remove or sever housing services such as parking or storage. San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.2(r). The San Francisco Rent Control Board declined in March, 2007 to adopt regulations to implement this legislation, thereby leaving it up to the courts to interpret the provisions. The Rent Board did, however, amend Regulation 12.20(a) to allow landlords to evict for a tenant's breach of an obligation or covenant of the tenancy after a substantial decrease in housing services involving garages, storage space, or access to common areas, so long as the tenant received a commensurate rent reduction for loss of the service.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.15 e. Rent Withholding

If necessary repairs will cost more than one month's rent, rent withholding (see §3.32) may be a suitable option. An attorney who recommends rent withholding should advise the tenant to put the rent money in a separate bank account.

PRACTICE TIP: Some attorneys recommend that tenants place the funds in the attorney's client trust account. Others are reluctant to do so, and prefer that the funds remain beyond the control of the attorney to minimize any ethical dilemmas that may arise (e.g., when the attorney represents to a court that the funds are available, but a tenant then decides to vacate and demands that the attorney return the funds).

If the landlord responds with an eviction action, which the tenant wins with the defense of breach of the implied warranty of habitability, the money in the account will provide a fund for immediate payment of the "reasonable rent" determined by the court. A tenant who is not prepared to tender immediately the rent set by the court will be evicted despite the successful defense.

Withholding rent involves a substantial risk for the tenant. If the landlord sues to evict for nonpayment of rent and the tenant fails to prove a breach of the implied warranty, the tenant will probably be evicted. Even if the rent was withheld in good faith, the defense was raised in good faith, and the tenant is now willing and able to pay the rent, these facts will not provide a defense to eviction. Such facts may be relevant and helpful, however, on a motion for relief from forfeiture under CCP §1174(c) or §1179. See §§13.49, 13.56.

WARNING: An additional factor that tenants and their attorneys should consider is the possibility that an eviction lawsuit will be picked up by the Unlawful Detainer Registry from the court file or a credit report. See §5.25A. See also §4.9.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.16 f. Action for Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability

If the risk of eviction is unacceptable to the tenant, the attorney should consider suing the landlord for damages for breach of the implied warranty of habitability, including damages for emotional distress (see McNairy v C.K. Realty (2007) 150 CA4th 1500, 59 CR3d 429), and for nuisance. See §§3.35-3.48A. The tenant will continue paying rent and accordingly cannot be evicted for nonpayment. Moreover, filing a lawsuit will often bring the landlord's insurance carrier into the picture, providing another source of funds for resolution of the dispute. In a jurisdiction without eviction controls, there is a danger that the landlord will serve a 30-day or 60-day notice of termination (of a month-to-month tenancy; see CC §§1946, 1946.1) in retaliation for the action. Such retaliation, however, is barred by CC §1942.5(c) and, under some circumstances, may violate the Unruh Act (CC §51). See §§5.6-5.7, 8.118-8.121.

An affirmative lawsuit may put much greater pressure on a landlord than rent withholding. Although rent withholding may cost the landlord rent for the entire period of withholding, an affirmative lawsuit raises the stakes much higher, making it possible for the tenant to recover actual damages (including damages for emotional distress and for "discomfort and annoyance" or personal injuries if the complaint alleges a cause of action in tort), punitive damages (if the landlord's conduct was willful, oppressive, or malicious), an order for specific performance of the implied warranty or abatement of the nuisance, and (possibly) attorney fees. See §§3.35-3.47. Willfulness may be shown if the landlord knew of an unsafe or hazardous condition and made no reasonable effort to attempt correction. See Rick's Elect., Inc. v Cal OSHA Appeals Bd. (2000) 80 CA4th 1023, 95 CR2d 847. Furthermore, if the suit attracts the attention of the media, the resulting publicity may put additional pressure on the landlord to negotiate.

PRACTICE TIP: A tenant for whom such a lawsuit is not feasible could instead file in small claims court, which can order specific performance and award damages of up to $7500 (CCP §§116.220(a)(1), (b), 116.221). However, because collateral estoppel precludes the issue decided in small claims court from being relitigated (Pitzen v Superior Court (2004) 120 CA4th 1374, 16 CR3d 628), it may be unacceptably risky to have a tenant litigate a complex issue without counsel as required at the first stage of small claims court.

Before filing any action, a thorough review of the lease or rental agreement is crucial. Some landlords attempt to limit their liability for personal injuries by including mandatory arbitration clauses in their leases. A California court of appeal invalidated such a provision that required the tenant to submit to binding arbitration personal injury suits against the landlord. See Jaramillo v JH Real Estate Partners, Inc. (2003) 111 CA4th 394, 3 CR3d 525. See also Gatton v T-Mobile USA, Inc. (2007) 152 CA4th 571, 61 CR3d 344 (high degree of substantive unconscionability arising from a class action waiver rendered an arbitration provision unenforceable). See also Stiener v Apple Computer, Inc. (ND Cal 2008) 556 F Supp 2d 1016, action stayed pending appeal (ND Cal, Apr. 28, 2008, No. C-07-04486 SBA) 2008 US Dist Lexis 90335 (class arbitration waiver unconscionable, and therefore unenforceable; because waiver could not be severed from arbitration agreement, arbitration agreement was held unenforceable). On enforcing or invalidating arbitration clauses in real property agreements, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 14 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Redressing Illegal Landlord Entry

§5.17 a. Possible Remedies

A landlord's right to enter premises occupied by the tenant is strictly circumscribed by CC §1954, which sets forth the reasons for which the landlord may enter, the hours during which the landlord may enter, and options for giving advance notice before entering. The legislature substantially amended the notice procedures in 2002 and 2003. See §§3.2-3.4, 4.43. Nevertheless, illegal entry by landlords continues to be a common problem for tenants. The only express statutory remedy that allows for the recovery of damages and penalties for a "significant and intentional violation of CC §1954" is in CC §1940.2. See §8.150A. Proving an intentional violation is difficult.

Almost invariably, filing suit to stop violations of CC §1954 is simply not feasible financially. The landlord's actions are irksome to the tenant, but potential damages generally are not substantial enough to warrant the costs of a lawsuit. The attorney might consider filing suit, however, if the violations of CC §1954 are clear on the facts, if there is clear evidence that the landlord was warned and ignored the warning, and if the lease or rental agreement provides for attorney fees. Even if the agreement provides for fees only in favor of the landlord, a tenant who prevails may be able to recover fees under CC §1717. See §1.74.

PRACTICE TIP: Less expensive and faster than a lawsuit is an effort to persuade the landlord to stop the illegal entries. The tenant's attorney might begin this process by sending the landlord a letter that (1) explains CC §1954 (with a copy of the statute enclosed), (2) points out the landlord's potential liability for violation, and (3) puts the landlord on notice that the tenant may take legal action if the violations continue.

Another inexpensive alternative is for the tenant to sue the landlord in small claims court for damages for past violations of CC §1954. Although small claims courts have no authority to enjoin future violations of §1954, a modest damages award might persuade the landlord to stop violating the statute.

If despite warnings in writing from the tenant, the landlord again violates §1954, the tenant can sue for damages or, in the case of a continuing violation, for injunctive relief. In addition to relief under CC §1940.2, one or more of the following causes of action might be invoked in repeated, extreme, or abusive situations, although there are no reported decisions approving their use for a violation of §1954:

- breach of implied covenant of quiet enjoyment if landlord's illegal entry physically interferes with tenant's use (see §§3.5-3.7);
- invasion of privacy (see 5 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Torts §§651-692 (10th ed 2005));
- relief from harassment under CCP §527.6;
- trespass (see 5 Witkin, Summary, Torts §§693-698);
- intentional infliction of emotional distress (see Newby v Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 CA3d 288, 297, 131 CR 547); and
- a derivative statutory tort based on CC §1954 itself.

Before recommending or pursuing any remedy for the illegitimate entries, the attorney must consider the risk of making the landlord angry. If the tenant has no lease, and if no local ordinances restrict evictions, the landlord might respond with a 30-day or 60-day notice to vacate (if a month-to-month tenancy; see CC §§1946, 1946.1) or a notice that the tenant's rent will be increased (see CC §827). Civil Code §1942.5(c) appears to prohibit such retaliation, but litigating the point may be more than the tenant could handle and may be risky. The landlord's probable response to the available remedies should determine the tenant's choice of which of them to pursue, and the tenant may know enough about the landlord's personality to advise the attorney on which approach will be most productive.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.18 b. Changing Locks

The tenant almost certainly will suggest another remedy for the landlord's unauthorized entries: changing the locks. Even if the tenant does not raise this option, the attorney should advise the tenant that changing the locks might violate a lease or rental agreement provision prohibiting alteration of the premises without the landlord's permission. Violation of the rental agreement is a ground for eviction under CCP §1161 and under most eviction control ordinances (see §7.54), but there is a chance, of course, that a court would allow as a defense the landlord's violation of CC §1954. (It is unlikely that changing the locks would be considered waste under CCP §1161(4) because the action probably would not substantially or permanently diminish the market value of the property. See Rowe v Wells Fargo Realty Servs. (1985) 166 CA3d 310, 212 CR 374.

Changing the locks also presents a significant, and potentially dangerous, practical problem. In an emergency (e.g., a fire), even an officious landlord needs entry. If changed locks prevent the landlord from entering or substantially delay his or her entry, the tenant could be liable for any increased damage that occurs. A tenant who insists on changing locks or modifying existing locks should consider installing a small chain lock that opens with a key. This should keep the landlord from wandering in, but, because the chain can be broken fairly easily, will not prevent the landlord from entering in a real emergency.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.18A 4. Protection Under Anti-SLAPP Statute

An important defense tool for retaliatory lawsuits brought by landlords against tenants is the anti-SLAPP statute (CCP §425.16), forbidding "strategic lawsuits against public participation." (See Making and Opposing Special Motions to Strike Under the California Anti-SLAPP Statute (Cal CEB Action Guide March 2009).) See also Ketchum v Moses (2001) 24 C4th 1122, 104 CR2d 377, cited in §10.38A, in which the tenant successfully defeated an unlawful detainer action on a motion to strike under §425.16. See also Dowling v Zimmerman (2001) 85 CA4th 1400, 103 CR2d 174, cited in §13.40A, in which the defendant attorney defeated the landlord's defamation action by showing that the action was brought against the tenants and their attorney because they exercised their protected rights of free speech. The tenant attorneys in both Ketchum and Dowling were entitled to recover awards of fees and costs under the mandatory provisions of CCP §425.16(c). Partial attorney fees are recoverable if the defendant prevails on some but not all of the claims attacked in its motion to strike. ComputerXpress, Inc. v Jackson (2001) 93 CA4th 993, 113 CR2d 625. However, defendants must achieve a practical benefit with the anti-SLAPP motion. See Mann v Quality Old Time Serv., Inc. (2006) 139 CA4th 328, 42 CR3d 607 (one cause of action eliminated by anti-SLAPP motion, thereby narrowing the scope of the lawsuit, limiting discovery, reducing potential recoverable damages, and altering the settlement posture of the case; attorney fees awarded) and Endres v Moran (2006) 135 CA4th 952, 37 CR3d 786 (attorney fees denied where defendants' success in striking one cause of action did not affect factual allegations or change possible recovery or work involved in trying case).

A suit for declaratory and injunctive relief that challenges the landlord's entitlement to charge market rate for rentals restored to residential use after Ellis Act evictions (see chap 7) is not a SLAPP suit; the suit is based on the alleged act of charging unlawful rent, not on the landlord's act of filing documents with the local rent control board. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. v Pearl Street, LLC (2003) 109 CA4th 1308, 135 CR2d 903. Likewise, a lawsuit brought by a former tenant against a landlord who fraudulently evicted the tenant under a rent control ordinance in order to have a family member occupy the premises was not subject to an anti-SLAPP special motion to strike. Clark v Mazgani (2009) 170 CA4th 1281, 89 CR3d 24. The tenant's complaint was not based on the landlord's protected activities in initiating and prosecuting the eviction but on the removal of the apartment from the rental market and fraudulent eviction of the tenant. In Delois v Barrett Block Partners (2009) 177 CA4th 940, 99 CR3d 609, the landlord, without filing suit, entered into a settlement agreement with the tenant requiring the tenant to vacate the property. After the landlord raised the tenant's rent for breaching the settlement agreement, the tenant vacated and sued the landlord in tort and contract, alleging he was forced to vacate his unit in violation of the local rent control act. The landlord brought an anti-SLAPP motion claiming that its actions were protected because they arose from a settlement agreement that was entered into to avoid litigation. The court held that the landlord's actions were not the basis of the plaintiff's lawsuit but merely preceded it and denied the anti-SLAPP motion.

However, an anti-SLAPP motion may be used to challenge a petition for injunctive relief under CCP §527.6 (landlord petitioned for injunctive relief against civil harassment by tenant who demonstrated with others at the landlord's church). Thomas v Quintero (2005) 126 CA4th 635, 24 CR3d 619.

An addition to the anti-SLAPP statutes, CCP §425.18, operative October 5, 2005, limits the use of anti-SLAPP motions to strike in SLAPPback malicious prosecution actions by setting different standards and procedures for motions to strike in those actions. The legislature adopted the separate procedure to protect the exercise of free speech and to minimize the misuse in SLAPPback suits of the existing anti-SLAPP procedure in CCP §425.16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.19 D. "Breaking" a Lease

Under some circumstances, a tenant may have a valid need to "break" a lease, e.g., when in the middle of the lease term the tenant's employment is transferred to another city. The lease may provide for such a contingency. See §§1.73, 1.85. If it does not, however, the tenant cannot terminate the lease obligation. A tenant who does so is in breach of the lease and will be responsible for any damages caused by the breach. The attorney's advice to a tenant who has no choice but to breach the lease should focus on minimizing the damages caused by the breach and, if possible, on avoiding litigation that may subject the tenant to liability for the landlord's attorney fees.

Under CC §1951.2(a)(1), a tenant who breaches a lease is liable for past-due rent following the breach. The landlord may recover rent coming due from the time that the tenant vacates until the date of judgment, less any rental loss that the tenant proves "could have been reasonably avoided." CC §1951.2(a)(2). Civil Code §1951.2(a)(3) authorizes recovery of "the worth at the time of award" of rent due for the remaining term of the lease (after the date of judgment), less rental value that the tenant proves "could be reasonably avoided," but only if the lease expressly provides for such recovery or if the landlord relets the premises before judgment and proves that in reletting he or she "acted reasonably and in a good-faith effort to mitigate the damages." CC §1951.2(c)(2). The landlord also may recover "[a]ny other amount necessary to compensate the lessor for all the detriment proximately caused" by the tenant's breach, which apparently includes any expenses incurred in reletting the premises, such as advertising, credit checks, and cleaning. CC §1951.2(a)(4).

In an appropriate case, a landlord may be able to recover selling expenses. See, e.g., Millikan v American Spectrum Real Estate Servs. Cal., Inc. (2004) 117 CA4th 1094, 12 CR3d 459, in which the court ruled it was foreseeable that a landlord would sell leased property rather than bear the burden of a vacant building indefinitely after the tenant had abandoned the lease. A commercial tenant is not entitled to credit for profits generated by a landlord who takes over ownership and/or management of the business. Lu v Grewal (2005) 130 CA4th 841, 30 CR3d 623.

Civil Code §1951.4(b) gives the landlord a more drastic remedy if it has been written into the lease: The landlord may hold the tenant liable for the rent as it comes due during the balance of the term, apparently with no obligation to make any effort to relet the premises. This remedy is allowed only if the lease gives the tenant the right to sublet or assign his or her interest, either on reasonable conditions or subject to the landlord's consent (when the lease provides that the landlord may not unreasonably withhold such consent). CC §1951.4(b). The remedy is not available if the landlord has terminated the tenant's right to possess the premises. CC §1951.4(b). See §8.15.

PRACTICE TIP: To minimize the landlord's damages, a tenant who breaks a lease should make efforts to assist the landlord in reletting the premises because, under CC §1951.2(a)(2)-(3), the tenant is not liable for any loss proved to have been reasonably avoidable. For example, the tenant could find two or three creditworthy, responsible applicants and convey information about them to the landlord. A tenant who presents to the landlord qualified applicants who can move in and begin paying rent as soon as the tenant leaves may be able to prove that the landlord failed to mitigate damages if they are rejected. If the landlord accepts one of the applicants, the tenant's liability for damages should be minimal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.20 E. Lockouts and Other "Self-Help" Evictions

Landlords sometimes attempt to shortcut the eviction process by resorting to "self-help." A self-help eviction can take many forms: changing the lock on a unit, adding a lock without providing keys to the tenant, cutting off utilities, and forcibly entering the rental unit and refusing to permit the tenant to reenter. These practices have one thing in common: to oust the tenant from possession without complying with the legal requirements for eviction.

Many remedies are available to a tenant who has suffered a self-help eviction. A landlord who changed the locks or cut off utilities with the intent to terminate the tenancy is liable to the tenant for actual damages, a statutory penalty not to exceed $100 for each day of violation or part thereof (but not less than $250), and attorney fees. CC §789.3(c). See §§8.147-8.149. Effective January 1, 2004, a tenant has additional remedies (including a $2000 penalty for each act) for wrongful and illegal acts committed by a landlord for the purpose of influencing the tenant to vacate the dwelling. CC §1940.2. See §8.150A. A landlord who used force to enter the premises and to prevent the tenant from reentering is guilty of forcible entry and detainer and may be liable for actual and statutory damages of up to $600 if the action was malicious. CCP §1174(b); see Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 12 CR 488. See also §§8.138-8.146. Forcible entry or detainer may also subject the landlord to criminal liability. Pen C §§418, 602.5. See §8.152. Finally, the ouster may give the tenant a cause of action for the common law tort of wrongful eviction. See §8.150.

PRACTICE TIPS:

- Each remedy has different merits, and the tenant's attorney should consider carefully which one or which combination of remedies best fits the circumstances of the case and the client's needs. The attorney should also bear in mind that, if the tenant recovers possession but is in default in payment of rent, restoration of the premises to the tenant probably will be temporary unless the illegal eviction can serve as leverage with which to negotiate an acceptable resolution (or prevention) of an unlawful detainer action.
- It appears that a landlord does not escape liability for an illegal eviction simply by restoring possession to the tenant; CC §789.3 is not qualified in any way that suggests that restoration of the premises "cures" the landlord's unlawful act. The attorney may be able to gain bargaining power for the tenant by reminding the landlord of this fact. The attorney might propose in a letter, for example, that the tenant will release the landlord from liability for the eviction if the landlord restores possession to the tenant immediately, waives some or all of the past-due rent, and permits the tenant to pay any remaining past-due rent in installments over a reasonable period of time.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.21 1. Recovering Possession

The attorney for a tenant whose primary need is to recover possession of the premises quickly and at minimal expense might consider taking the following actions:

(a) Call the police department to determine if it has a unit specializing in landlord-tenant or consumer disputes. Some large, urban police departments have such units. Advise the police of the client's situation, and ask them to enforce the provisions of Pen C §§418 and 602.5. Although police departments are frequently reluctant to file charges in civil disputes of this kind, they might be inclined to remind the landlord that the law is being violated, and to encourage the landlord to readmit the tenant to the premises.

(b) Write the landlord a firm letter, advising that "self help" evictions are illegal and that potential damages are accumulating while the tenant remains out of possession. Copies of CC §789.3 and the decision in Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 12 CR 488, may be enclosed for effect. The letter should be hand-delivered, and should specify a date and time by which the landlord should readmit the tenant or indicate his or her intention not to do so. A copy of the letter should also be sent via regular first class mail, or, if the landlord has a fax number or an e-mail address at home or at work, by those delivery methods. Courtesy copies should also be sent to:

- the manager's supervisor and management company, where applicable;
- all owners of record of the property (available from the county assessor or recorder);
- the local rent control agency or board, if applicable;
- the district attorney's office;
- the client, if the attorney writes the letter, or the attorney, if the tenant writes the letter; multiple copies let the landlord know that others are aware of the problem and may be called upon to enforce the client's rights.

If those informal tactics fail and litigation becomes necessary, the tenant's attorney may bring a forcible entry and detainer action (CCP §§1159-1160) against the landlord to recover possession (see §§8.138-8.146). Civil Code §789.3 may also be invoked if the landlord has changed the locks, removed the tenant's property, or cut off utility service to deny the tenant possession of the premises. See §§8.147-8.149. It is not clear which of these statutes provides the most efficient method of restoring the tenant to possession. Forcible entry and forcible detainer are summary actions, involving a 5-day summons and priority on the trial calendar. CCP §§1167-1167.5, 1179a. Nevertheless, delay tactics by the landlord are possible, including the demand for a jury trial, which could delay the trial several weeks. Under CC §789.3(d), on the other hand, the tenant suing for a violation of CC §789.3 may seek "appropriate injunctive relief" while the action is pending. Courts hearing limited civil cases may issue temporary restraining orders and preliminary injunctions. CCP §86(a)(8). Such relief may put the tenant back into possession even faster than a forcible entry and detainer action. Some courts are reluctant, however, to issue an injunction that disturbs the status quo pending trial, thus effectively resolving the contested issue of possession. See Martin v Danziger (1913) 21 CA 563, 132 P 284, discussed in §5.38.

If a lockout occurs after the tenancy has been terminated (e.g., after expiration of a 3-day or 30-day notice), an action seeking restoration of the premises will serve only to delay the eviction, unless the tenant has a valid defense to an unlawful detainer action. Furthermore, if the tenant has no legal right to possession because the tenancy has been terminated, a court might not consider injunctive relief to be "appropriate" under CC §789.3. On the other hand, a tenant's attorney can argue that the purpose of CC §789.3 is to prevent self-help evictions, and that denying the tenant the right to regain possession effectively sanctions a landlord's resort to self-help. A landlord who evicts the tenant under a writ of possession that is later found to be invalid, however, is not liable for forcible entry and detainer. Glass v Najafi (2000) 78 CA4th 45, 92 CR2d 606. Similarly, a landlord who has a valid writ of possession may proceed to evict a tenant who files a bankruptcy after the unlawful detainer judgment. Lee v Baca (1999) 73 CA4th 1116, 86 CR2d 913, cert denied (2000) 529 US 1020. But see Westside Apartments v Butler (In re Butler) (Bankr CD Cal 2002) 271 BR 867 (CCP §715.050 is preempted by federal bankruptcy law and is therefore unconstitutional). See further discussion of Lee and Butler in chap 14; their inconsistent holdings may be affected by higher federal courts interpreting the Bankruptcy Code.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.22 2. Amount of Damages

Compensatory damages to cover injuries sustained by the tenant should be recoverable whether the action is brought under CCP §§1159-1160 (see §8.144), CC §789.3 (see §§8.149-8.150), or as a common law tort (see §6.131). The client should be instructed to keep all receipts and to document all expenses and inconveniences in a running diary of the event. Actual damages could arguably include such out-of-pocket costs as:

- hotel bills;
- reasonable restaurant expenses;
- taxi or rental car reimbursement (if the client's vehicle or keys are locked inside the premises);
- laundromat costs (if laundry facilities locked inside premises);
- exercise club fees (if personal fitness equipment locked inside premises);
- reasonable clothing purchases;
- lost wages for missed work time as a result of the incident;
- moving costs (movers, boxes, insurance, locator fees, etc.); and
- fees for professional counseling services for emotional distress.

A tenant cannot recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress if the tenant bases the claim on the landlord's negligent performance of contractual duties. The tenant may only recover economic losses caused by the landlord's breach of contract. Butler-Rupp v Lourdeaux (2005) 134 CA4th 1220, 36 CR3d 685.

Punitive damages also may be recovered under all three actions, but the maximum and minimum amounts vary. In forcible entry and detainer actions, statutory damages may be awarded if malice is shown, but such damages are limited to $600 (see CCP §1174(b)); there is no minimum recovery. Civil Code §789.3(c)(2) establishes both a maximum and minimum recovery: up to $100 for each day of violation, but not less than $250 in total. Although the $100-per-day figure represents a limit on damages (and a court may limit the total statutory penalty if it concludes that the full penalty would be excessive (see, e.g., Hale v Morgan (1978) 22 C3d 388, 149 CR 375)), this remedy might be better for the plaintiff than the other remedies because (a) it is not based on actual damages (which might be difficult to prove), and (b) it gives the attorney a statutory figure on which to base an argument to the factfinder. In tort actions, there is no maximum or minimum award of punitive damages.

Only CC §789.3 provides for attorney fees to the prevailing party. Attorney fees are usually not recoverable in forcible entry and detainer or tort actions unless they are provided for in the lease or rental agreement (and thus are recoverable under CC §1717. See §§13.25-13.33.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.23 3. Joining Claims

If each remedy for a self-help eviction has its own advantages, should the tenant's attorney simply join all of them in one action? It appears to be possible for the attorney to join in one action a cause of action for wrongful eviction (see §8.150) and a cause of action for violation of CC §789.3 (see §§8.147-8.149). In fact, CC §789.3(d) expressly contemplates the pursuit of other available remedies. Because of its summary nature, however, an action for forcible entry or detainer may not include other causes of action. See §8.137. For this reason, a judgment obtained in such an action probably would not preclude a later action alleging causes of action that could not be raised in the forcible entry and detainer action. See Vella v Hudgins (1977) 20 C3d 251, 142 CR 414.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Legal Eviction Procedure

§5.24 1. Unlawful Detainer Action Required

Tenants often believe that if they miss their rent payment or their lease expires, their landlord may walk in, throw them out, and padlock the premises. To allay these fears (or, conversely, to correct the impression that a tenant is entitled to longer notice than is statutorily required), the attorney should briefly explain eviction procedure to a tenant who is, or may be, facing eviction.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.24A a. Required Notices

Tenants should be advised that they cannot be evicted without receiving at least: (1) a 3-day notice to pay or quit (CCP §1161(2)), a 3-day notice to perform covenant or quit (CCP §1161(3)), a 3-day absolute quit notice (CCP §1161(3)), or a 30-day or 60-day notice to terminate tenancy (if a month-to-month tenancy; see CC §§1946, 1946.1); plus (2) a summons and complaint; and (3) the 5-day sheriff's notice required by CCP §§1174(d) and CCP §715.010(b)(2). See §§8.26-8.84, chaps 9-13. A notice under CCP §1161 is not necessary if a fixed-term lease expires by its own terms. See §§1.8, 8.2.

The tenant should also receive a notice mailed by the court clerk stating that an unlawful detainer action has been filed, giving the case number of the lawsuit, and providing specified information on legal services organizations that might advise on the defense of the action for low-income persons. CCP §1161.2(c).

The attorney should also explain what the notices will look like (so that the tenant will recognize them when received), what information the notices will contain, and what effects they will have. The tenant should be instructed to notify the attorney immediately after receiving a summons and complaint, because an answer must be filed within 5 calendar days, not counting legal holidays (unless the last day for filing is a Saturday or Sunday, in which case it is extended through the next court day). CCP §1167. Although the only notice that justifies panic is the 5-day sheriff's notice to vacate (which is often printed in red ink) (see §13.69), the tenant should be cautioned that any notice is very serious and that a summons and complaint represent a court action and should be answered in a timely manner.

WARNING: If a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit does not give an address that allows the tenant to personally deliver the rent (e.g., the notice lists a post office box but no street address) and the tenant mails the rent to that address, the rent is conclusively presumed to have been paid on the date posted if the tenant shows proof of mailing. See CCP §1161(2), discussed in §8.37B.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.24B b. Summary Remedy

If an unlawful detainer action is already underway, or appears to be imminent, the attorney should inform the tenant of the usual timetable for such actions in the jurisdiction in which the suit will be filed. Under CCP §1170.5, unlawful detainer actions generally must be set for trial within 20 days after the date of the request to set the case for trial. See chap 11. This requirement probably minimizes variation among jurisdictions in the amount of time that elapses before an unlawful detainer action is tried. The attorney should inform the tenant about the date that the trial is likely to occur, using both "worst case" and "usual case" scenarios.

PRACTICE TIP: Tenants who consult an attorney about a pending or imminent unlawful detainer are stressed and may not remember information given to them orally. It is helpful to have a short written explanation of the procedures in an unlawful detainer, complete with timetables for each stage. The tenant should be encouraged to take this document home and read it at a less stressful moment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.24C c. Unlawful Detainer Judgment

The attorney should caution the tenant to prepare for the worst. Even if the tenant seems likely to prevail, unlawful detainer actions are notoriously unpredictable. Although some judges diligently attempt to apply the law, others tend to gloss over defenses and ask simply, "Did the tenant pay the rent?" Juries, of course, are inherently unpredictable, but careful voir dire examination and clear, precise jury instructions can help to some extent in obtaining a desirable outcome. See §§12.41-12.63.

A tenant facing eviction and a judgment for damages will be legitimately concerned about liability for a money judgment. The landlord might try to enforce the judgment by garnishing the tenant's wages, however modest, or by executing against the tenant's automobile or other property. Generally, however, when a tenant breaches a lease by failing to pay rent, the landlord's primary goal is to regain possession of the premises, and money damages are decidedly of secondary importance. A tenant's attorney should recognize that a landlord will often waive a portion or even all of the tenant's money obligations in exchange for an enforceable agreement by the tenant to vacate the premises on or before a specified date.

PRACTICE TIP: Tenants should be advised to obtain tenants' insurance if they can qualify for it and can afford it. Insurance will protect the tenant in case of theft and damage to personal property and will also provide protection against liability to third parties or the landlord in many cases. If the landlord sues in unlawful detainer or in an action for damages or a cross-claim based on a habitability dispute, the claim should be tendered to the tenant's insurance carrier for contribution or full coverage.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.25 2. Stipulated Judgments

A common mechanism for assuring a landlord that the tenant will vacate the premises (which is often the landlord's primary goal when the tenant is behind in rent payments; see §5.24) is to enter into a stipulated judgment. A stipulated judgment typically includes the tenant's monetary obligations, provides that the tenant will vacate by a specified date, and also specifies a date on which the landlord may have the sheriff or marshal physically evict the tenant if the tenant fails to vacate as agreed. In order to ensure case records remain restricted 60 days after the complaint is filed (CCP §1161.2), thereby protecting the tenant from being reported by credit reporting agencies, a dismissal should be part of the stipulated judgment, with a provision for the trial court to retain jurisdiction under CCP §664.6 for enforcement of settlement. See §9.19 for a stipulated judgment form.

PRACTICE TIP: In Los Angeles County, many courts will also seal the file if both parties agree. Tenant attorneys should routinely request that this be done to protect tenants.

The advantage to the landlord of a stipulated judgment is that it avoids the expense of trial and obtains the assurance that the premises will be vacated by a certain date. The tenant benefits in being able to bargain for sufficient time in which to locate new space and to complete the move. The tenant might also persuade the landlord to stipulate that judgment will be entered only if the tenant fails to vacate by the agreed-on date, i.e., that if the tenant vacates as agreed, there will be no outstanding judgment on record that could be reported by a credit bureau. See §§5.25A, 9.18.

Signing a stipulated judgment is a serious step for a tenant. Once the stipulation is signed, the tenant will have no right to further hearings, and the sheriff or marshal will have the authority to enforce the writ of possession. A stipulated judgment may have a serious impact on the tenant's credit rating, so the tenant's attorney should try to avoid entering into one whenever possible.

After a stipulated judgment has been signed, if the tenant or another person who claims a right to possession retains an attorney, this attorney has limited means to circumvent the judgment. If the attorney's client did not sign the stipulation, but has a legitimate claim to possession, then the client may be able to defeat eviction under a "claim of right." See §5.27. If the client signed the stipulation, the attorney may attempt to have the stipulation nullified on the ground that it constitutes an uninformed or unintentional waiver of the client's right to due process. When a person enters into a stipulated judgment without the advice of counsel, some courts will not enforce the judgment without an express, written waiver of the person's right to due process, notice, and a hearing. See also Little v Sanchez (1985) 166 CA3d 501, 213 CR 297 (stipulated judgments voidable when obtained by extrinsic fraud, and facially void when tenant waives due process rights with respect to future action by landlord).

A stipulated judgment has a collateral estoppel effect only as to those issues actually resolved in it. In Landeros v Pankey (1995) 39 CA4th 1167, 46 CR2d 165, the court held that the tenant was not barred from bringing an action for damages for breach of the warranty of habitability by the fact that a previous unlawful detainer action resulted in a stipulated judgment and vacation of the premises by the tenants. For discussion, see §12.37.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.25A 3. Effect on Tenant's Creditworthiness

Tenants and their attorneys should consider the likelihood that an eviction lawsuit will be picked up by the Unlawful Detainer Registry and may make it difficult for the tenant to rent another unit. The tenant may correct misleading and incomplete information in the Registry's report, however. Schoendorf v Unlawful Detainer Registry, Inc. (2002) 97 CA4th 227, 118 CR2d 313. The Unlawful Detainer Registry may report truthful credit reports from public records. U.D. Registry, Inc. v State (2006) 144 CA4th 405, 50 CR3d 647. Credit reporting agencies are not required to do more than check the trial minutes and the register of actions, but they must exercise reasonable diligence in examining court records to determine whether an adverse judgment has, in fact, been entered against a tenant. See Dennis v BEH-1, LLC (9th Cir 2007) 504 F3d 892 (although parties to unlawful detainer filed stipulation that no judgment would be entered, court's register of civil actions noted that judgment was entered; register subsequently showed that dismissal in tenant's favor was entered). If the defendant prevails in the unlawful detainer within 60 days after the complaint is filed by either dismissal or judgment, access to the eviction lawsuit court file is permanently blocked to persons other than the parties and their counsel. CCP §1161.2. For further discussion, see §4.9.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.26 4. Landlord Actions in Propria Persona

A landlord who cannot afford an attorney, or who believes the eviction to be straightforward, may choose to act as his or her own counsel in a limited civil case, on the assumption that the action will be uncontested, or that any defense raised by the tenant will be patently frivolous. A tenant who has access to the advice of counsel may have a distinct advantage over the pro per landlord. The landlord may believe the case to be a simple one, but may not realize that service of required notices or pleadings was defective, or that a tenant who missed a rent payment still may have a defense to eviction. When confronted with a demurrer or an answer that alleges several affirmative defenses (e.g., breach of the warranty of habitability), a landlord may consider negotiation with the tenant as an alternative.

Counsel for tenants should anticipate certain problems in dealing with a landlord who is not represented by counsel. By the time that a landlord-tenant dispute reaches the litigation stage, relations between the landlord and tenant obviously have broken down. An angry landlord, especially one who wants to make an example of a tenant, may resist making even minor concessions or may even refuse to talk with the tenant's attorney. When both parties are represented by counsel, however, their attorneys can suggest rational settlements that angry clients could not have reached on their own. Furthermore, a landlord who is inexperienced in eviction or debt collection may assume that he or she will be able to collect any money judgment by garnishing the tenant's wages or by other means. The tenant's attorney may have a difficult time convincing the landlord of the futility of proceeding against a judgment-proof tenant.

Tenants who wish to represent themselves in a limited civil case might be advised to read Portman & Brown, California Tenants' Rights (16th ed 2005) and Warner, Everybody's Guide to Small Claims Court (15th ed 2003).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.27 5. Representing Occupant Not Named in Eviction Action

In an action to regain possession of real property, unless a prejudgment claim of right to possession has been served on occupants in accordance with CCP §415.46, any occupant not named in the judgment for possession who occupied the premises on the date the action was filed may object to enforcement of the judgment against him or her by filing a claim of right to possession under CCP §1174.3. On evicting unnamed occupants, see §§9.51-9.55, 13.65, 13.70-13.73.

When the claimant has no defense to eviction, asserting a claim to possession permits the Unlawful Detainer Registry to pick up the claimant's name and report him or her out as a tenant against whom an unlawful detainer has been filed. If a judgment is subsequently issued against the claimant, both the Unlawful Detainer Registry and other credit-reporting agencies will so report, thereby causing the claimant difficulty in renting other housing. See §§2.9, 4.9, 5.25A. The claimant may correct misleading and incomplete information in the Registry's report. Schoendorf v Unlawful Detainer Registry, Inc. (2002) 97 CA4th 227, 118 CR2d 313.

At times, a tenant who asserts a claim of right has a legitimate claim to possession and a defense to eviction. For example, a claimant who is a sublessee either approved by the landlord or permitted under the master lease has a legitimate claim to possession and is entitled to receive a 3-day notice so that he or she may cure a default in the payment of rent. If the landlord failed to serve the notice and the sublessee is willing and able to cure the default, the sublessee can establish a defense to eviction. Furthermore, if an unlawful detainer judgment against the original tenant was premised on nonpayment of rent, the claimant might be able to establish breach of the warranty of habitability as a defense to eviction (if the defense was not litigated on the merits by the defendant in the unlawful detainer action). See §§3.32, 13.70.

Valid claims of right may also arise from persons taken in by the original tenant as roommates. Whether or not the lease or rental agreement between the landlord and the original tenant prohibited additional occupants, such persons may not be evicted without notice and a hearing if they were in possession on the date that the unlawful detainer action was filed. See CCP §715.020(d). Furthermore, a landlord who has accepted rent from an occupant may have created a month-to-month tenancy with that occupant and, absent breach by that tenant, probably cannot terminate the tenancy except on 30 days' or 60 days' notice. See CC §§1946, 1946.1. See also §§1.7, 1.9, 8.69.

When representing a tenant who asserts a claim of right, the attorney must determine whether the claim is legitimate and whether the claimant has a valid defense to eviction. If the claim is not legitimate, the attorney cannot ethically advise the claimant to assert it or assist the claimant in asserting it. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-200.

PRACTICE TIP: Although from the tenant's perspective, assertion of the claim has the advantage of postponing eviction, the attorney should consider that doing so might anger the landlord to the extent of seeking reasonable rental value from the claimant for the period of delay, or even damages for trespass, notwithstanding that these actions seem unlikely given the landlord's primary objective of recovering possession of the rental unit as quickly as possible.

If the claim of right is legitimate, but the claimant has no apparent defense to eviction, the only advantage of pursuing the claim is to delay the eviction. For a claimant who knew nothing of the proceedings until seeing the sheriff's notice, a delay of a week or two may provide sufficient time to locate other housing. The attorney may be able to buy even more time for the claimant by offering to stipulate to the eviction if the date of eviction is postponed. Because a stipulation allows the landlord to avoid the cost of a hearing, the landlord may be willing to allow the tenant a short amount of additional time to vacate. When the claimant has no defense to eviction, however, asserting a claim to possession presents the risk that the landlord will seek statutory damages against the claimant for malicious holding over under CCP §1174(b). See §12.32.

If the claimant has a reasonably sound defense to eviction, the landlord may be receptive to settlement negotiations when faced with the cost and delay of a hearing on the claim of right to possession and the strong possibility that (1) the claimant will prevail, and (2) the landlord either will be unable to evict the claimant (if the lease is for a term of years or if eviction controls are in effect) or will be required to begin again with another termination notice.

Under such circumstances, the attorney might consider a settlement providing, for example, that the tenant will vacate by a specified date if the landlord pays the tenant's moving expenses, plus an amount that will cover any deposits on a new rental.

When a claimant has a valid defense to eviction and desires to continue the tenancy, the attorney should make certain that the claimant is prepared to cure any defaults that prompted the eviction of the person named in the unlawful detainer judgment. For example, if the judgment was premised on nonpayment of rent, the client should place in a separate account funds sufficient to cover all rent due, including rent due from the date that the tenant notified the sheriff of his or her claim, to the date of the hearing on the order to show cause.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.28 G. Roommates

To ease the burden of rising rent and utility costs, tenants often desire to share housing. When a group of tenants jointly applies for occupancy, the landlord probably will demand that each tenant execute the lease or rental agreement and agree to be jointly and severally liable for the obligations under the lease. Under this arrangement, each tenant is in privity with the landlord, and only the landlord can terminate the tenancy and evict one or more of the tenants. See §§1.7-1.7B.

A single tenant occupying a rental unit who desires to take in additional occupants should be advised of:

- the necessity or advisability of obtaining the landlord's consent (see §5.29);
- the advantages and disadvantages of having the roommates execute a lease with the landlord (see §5.30);
- the possible effects of any local rent control ordinance (see §5.31); and
- suggestions for minimizing the practical problems that can arise among roommates (see §5.32).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.29 1. Landlord's Consent

Often a lease or rental agreement restricts occupancy to the person or persons named in the original lease and requires the landlord's consent for any additional or substitute occupants. See §1.46. In this situation, the tenant should be advised to obtain the landlord's consent before taking in additional occupants. Failure to do so probably would constitute a material breach of the lease justifying eviction, even in a jurisdiction with eviction protections (see §§7.53, 7.62).

A landlord may be unable to enforce such a lease restriction, however, if formerly the practice had been to permit the tenant to choose roommates or subtenants without giving notice to the landlord and without obtaining the landlord's consent. A landlord who was aware of the changes in subtenancy and continued to accept the rent without objection may have waived the right to enforce this restriction or may be estopped from asserting it. See Kern Sunset Oil Co. v Good Roads Oil Co. (1931) 214 C 435, 444, 6 P2d 71; Thriftimart, Inc. v Me & Tex (1981) 123 CA3d 751, 754, 177 CR 24; Schultz v Superior Court (1956) 143 CA2d 781, 782, 300 P2d 275.

However, if a roommate or subtenant vacates, the tenant may have to obtain written consent from the landlord for a new roommate or subtenant in light of the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535). Acceptance of rent by the landlord does not waive or otherwise prevent enforcement of a covenant prohibiting sublease or assignment unless the landlord has received written notice from the tenant who signed the agreement, and the landlord has thereafter accepted rent. CC §1954.53(d)(4). This would not apply if the new roommate is the original tenant's spouse or domestic partner, and the city in which the unit is located provides that a tenant may install his or her spouse or domestic partner regardless of language in a lease that limits occupancy of a rental unit. Santa Monica and West Hollywood, for example, provide such protection in their Municipal Codes. Under the Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance, tenants in rent-controlled units may move in one adult tenant beyond the number of occupants listed on the rental agreement, but the landlord has the right to approve or disapprove the prospective additional adult tenant, provided approval is not unreasonably withheld. See Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance §151.09.A.2(b).

In West Hollywood, a "surviving tenant" (domestic partner, spouse, or certain relatives who live with the named tenant for at least one year before the tenant's death) is protected from eviction if the tenant dies. Pick v Cohen (2000) 83 CA4th Supp 6, 100 CR2d 839. This rule is counter to the one in Miller & Desatnik Mgmt. Co. v Bullock (1990) 221 CA3d Supp 13, 18, 270 CR 600, that under CC §1934, a month-to-month tenancy is terminated by notice of the tenant's death; further, the tenancy ends 30 days after the deceased tenant's last rent payment.

Even if the rental agreement does not prohibit additional occupants, the tenant probably should notify the landlord of the intent to take in roommates. Trying to conceal the fact from the landlord may create ill will and provoke a termination of a periodic (i.e., month-to-month) tenancy when the landlord discovers the additional occupants. The tenant may be able to set the stage for cooperation from the landlord by providing information about the prospective tenants in advance, e.g., their names, places of employment, and any other information that might allay the landlord's concerns.

When the landlord has consented to the tenancy of a "roommate" and the original tenant vacates, the landlord may not evict the remaining person without "just cause" if a rent control law requiring just cause exists in the jurisdiction. DeZerega v Meggs (2000) 83 CA4th 28, 99 CR2d 366. See §4.40B.

For further discussion of the various problems arising in roommate situations with assignment or subletting, see §§3.49-3.59A, 4.40-4.40B, 5.30-5.32, 7.28, 7.53, 7.55, 7.62.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.30 2. Nature of Relationship; Right to Evict

A roommate who enters into a lease or rental agreement with the landlord (e.g., the original lease is amended to include the roommate as a tenant, or the roommate and the original tenant both sign a new lease) probably will be jointly and severally liable for the full amount of the rent under the agreement (unless the lease expressly limits the tenant's liability to a pro rata share of the rent; see CC §§1659-1660) and will be in direct privity with the landlord. For the original tenant, the advantage of having each roommate sign the lease is that the roommates take on direct liability for rent. If the roommates do not execute a lease or rental agreement, the original tenant will continue to bear full responsibility for the lease obligations. The disadvantage is that the original tenant loses control over the composition of the household and has no right to insist on the eviction of one or more of the roommates. Because there is no landlord-tenant relationship between the tenants, only the landlord can terminate the tenancy and evict one or more of the roommates.

If the roommates do not sign a lease or rental agreement, they are probably "lodgers" of the original tenant. See §1.7. Although they are not in privity with the landlord and, strictly speaking, are not "tenants," they are probably entitled to the protections of state landlord-tenant law, including the prohibitions against "self-help" evictions (see §§5.20-5.21, 8.137-8.153) and the right to notice and hearing (through unlawful detainer proceedings) before termination of their right to occupy the rental property. Presumably, unlawful detainer proceedings could be instituted by either the landlord or the original tenant. (If the landlord decided to evict all the occupants, he or she probably would be required to name the roommates in an unlawful detainer action to avoid having the roommates assert a post-judgment claim to possession. See §5.27.) The advantage of this arrangement is that the original tenant retains control over the co-occupants and if personality conflicts or other problems arise probably can "evict" the roommate for reasons that would not trigger eviction by the landlord.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.31 3. Effect of Local Rent Control Ordinance

Local eviction controls might possibly extend to a tenant's eviction of a roommate. See §7.54. Given the underlying purpose of rent control and eviction control ordinances to secure to tenants reasonable rents and protection against arbitrary eviction, the courts might interpret eviction protections as extending to persons such as roommates, even though they are not per se "tenants." The tenant's attorney must review carefully the definitions and exemption provisions of any ordinance in effect in the jurisdiction in question.

Some rent control ordinances may define "landlord" and "tenant" broadly enough that the original tenant would be "landlord" under the ordinance and the roommate would fit the definition of "tenant." Other ordinances might exempt from the ordinance's coverage rental units in residential property where the landlord shares kitchen or bath facilities with the tenant and the landlord occupies a unit in the same property as his or her principal residence. Still others specifically exempt roommate evictions by providing that a landlord who resides in the same rental unit with a tenant may evict the tenant without just cause.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.32 4. Written Occupancy Agreement

A written agreement between tenant and roommates might provide a foundation for eviction (even in a jurisdiction with eviction protections), and will serve other practical purposes. Under most eviction control ordinances, a landlord may evict a tenant for breach of the rental agreement. See §7.57. If eviction protections are extended to roommates, a roommate's breach of a provision in the agreement with the original tenant (as opposed to the tenant's lease or rental agreement with the landlord) might justify eviction by the original tenant. An agreement that formalizes "house rules" also forces the occupants to discuss and resolve many issues that can arise in group living arrangements (e.g., how and when the roommates will contribute their share of rent and utilities, division of responsibilities for cleaning and other household chores, use of common areas, use of other occupants' property (e.g., stereos, televisions, vacuum cleaners), entitlement to parking space, and the minimum notice a roommate must give before moving out).

The agreement between roommates and an original tenant who desires to maintain the lease solely in his or her name should provide that the roommates may not pay their portion of the rent directly to the landlord. A landlord who accepts rent from a roommate might have created a month-to-month tenancy with that roommate, eliminating the original tenant's right to evict the roommate. See §1.9. For a sample agreement, see Portman & Brown, California Tenants' Rights (16th ed 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

II. COUNSELING TENANT ORGANIZATIONS

§5.33 A. Attorney's Role

Tenant organizations take many forms and reflect diverse goals. Some organizations are ad hoc and short-lived, e.g., a handful of tenants in the same building with a landlord who won't provide enough heat, or a larger group of tenants fighting a rent increase with a rent strike and fearing mass eviction. The size and complexity of the problems facing these groups may vary, but their primary objectives are short term: to resolve the immediate problem in their favor, and then disband and resume their normal lives. Class action lawsuits have become a fairly common tool to achieve these tenant objectives. See, e.g., Little v Sanchez (1985) 166 CA3d 501, 213 CR 297; Rich v Schwab (1984) 162 CA3d 739, 209 CR 417.

Other tenant organizations have broader, more permanent goals. Some groups wish to form a tenant union, which will deal with the landlord on behalf of all its members, and to negotiate a collective bargaining agreement that establishes binding procedures for resolving disputes with the landlord. Still others consist of tenants from several different buildings, who have joined together to deal with neighborhood or citywide problems, such as high rents or deteriorating housing. See Baar, Rent Control in the 1970s: The Case of the New Jersey Tenants' Movement, 28 Hastings LJ 631 (1977).

The attorney's proper role varies with the nature and objectives of the tenant organization. For example, if the group has only short-term goals, the attorney's responsibilities will not vary significantly from the traditional attorney's role in representing an individual client: to handle litigation, negotiate with the landlord or the landlord's attorney, and try to resolve the underlying dispute in the tenants' favor while protecting the tenancies.

If the group has long-term goals, however, the attorney should think more carefully about an appropriate role. The group's objectives may be achieved more quickly or easily through political solutions (such as rent control) than legal ones. If so, litigation might not directly achieve the group's goals, but might serve as a vehicle for publicizing and dramatizing certain issues in the community. If the group is not well established and must develop leaders whom the members will respect, the attorney probably should advise the leaders privately and present a low profile at group meetings and negotiations. Playing a traditional attorney's role can sometimes do more harm than good to a budding tenant organization.

The attorney should keep in mind that the group might not have given sufficient thought to the type of tenant organization that it wants to be or to the full range of goals that it wants to achieve. The attorney should urge such tenants to convey their thoughts and decisions regarding these questions so that the attorney can devise a strategy that will serve the group's interests.

The leaders of the tenant group may find it helpful to read Portman & Brown, California Tenants' Rights (16th ed 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.33A B. Right to Organize on Premises

In response to reported problems that landlords have interfered with residential tenant organization meetings on the premises, the legislature enacted CC §1942.6. It provides that any person entering the premises on the invitation of a tenant to provide information about tenants' rights "or to participate in a lessees' association or association of tenants or an association that advocates tenants' rights" shall not be either criminally or civilly liable for trespass. The meeting may occur "during reasonable hours" or otherwise under "emergency circumstances." The statute provides that it is declaratory of existing law. See discussion on picketing and unsolicited assembly or organizing in §5.37. Presumably, any court action brought by the landlord in violation of §1942.6 would also be subject to attack under the anti-SLAPP statute, CCP §425.16. See §5.18A.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.34 C. Strategy and Tactics

Whether the tenant group's goals are long term or short term, the group must develop an overall strategy for dealing with the landlord. Before filing a lawsuit, calling a press conference, or withholding rent, the group and the attorney must consider the effect of these actions on the group's ultimate objective.

The strategy should generally be designed to put enough pressure on the landlord to force negotiation with the group and agree to terms acceptable to the group. The choice of tactics depends on:

- applicable law and the remedies that it provides for the tenants' problems;
- the personalities of the landlord and the tenants;
- the landlord's vulnerability to certain tactics; and
- the tenants' vulnerability to possible countermeasures by the landlord.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.35 1. Obtaining Information About Landlord

Before deciding what tactics to use, the group should obtain as much information about the landlord as possible. What kind of personality does this particular landlord have? Hot-tempered, reasonable, timid, stingy, greedy, or politically ambitious? What types of people might best put pressure on the landlord (e.g., members of his or her church, building inspectors, business acquaintances)? Other information can be useful when dealing with either an individual or a corporate landlord. Is the landlord sensitive to pressure from political figures or government agencies, or to attention from the media? What is the landlord's financial situation, and how critical is cash flow to the landlord's operation? Is the building for sale? Is the landlord averse to hiring lawyers?

Because attorneys often deal with government and private agencies or organizations, they are in a good position to inform the tenants about how to obtain helpful information from these sources. When seeking information regarding a landlord, the following sources can be useful:

(a) Tax assessor. The county tax assessor keeps track of each parcel of property by address and can furnish the name and address of the person who pays the property tax. The assessor can also provide the assessed value of the property and the amount of the tax, which might be useful in negotiations. Some county assessors keep an alphabetical list of taxpayers that discloses the location of all real property that the landlord owns in the county. If the attorney has access to DataQuick, information concerning all property owned by the landlord in the county can be obtained quickly and without leaving the attorney's office. With this information, the tenants can try to expand their organization to include tenants in the landlord's other buildings.

(b) Secretary of State. The office of the California Secretary of State in Sacramento will provide the names of the officers of any corporate owner of the building.

(c) County recorder; title insurance company. The county recorder's office has records of mortgages, deeds of trust, liens recorded against the property, and the names of prior owners. Although the attorney or the tenants can inspect recorded documents, this procedure can be time-consuming. Generally, a title insurance company will obtain the information from the county recorder's office, and provide it on request for a fee.

(d) Real estate broker. A friendly real estate broker might provide information on whether the building has been listed for sale recently. If the building has been listed for sale, a "multiple listing" book can provide useful information regarding the landlord's income and expenses on the building.

(e) Building inspection department. The city or county building inspection department can be a good source of information on the condition of the building and the landlord's efforts to repair it. Because the landlord must obtain a permit to make alterations, the attorney can find out when the landlord last made substantial repairs. The attorney also can determine whether tenants have complained to the department about the condition of the building and examine any inspection reports on the building. Such reports are public records open to inspection. Govt C §6253.

(f) Local rent board. The local rent control agency or board should maintain a file on the property that contains:

- the owner's identity, by name and address;
- any other regulated properties under the same ownership;
- the identity of the management company, if known;
- any penalties imposed or claims made against the owner;
- rent histories for the property;
- legal rent ceilings for the property; and
- any housing services provided with the property.

Public records may be inspected during normal office hours of the state or local agency; a copy of records that are not exempt from disclosure must be made available for photocopying on payment of duplicating costs or a statutory fee, if applicable. Govt C §6253. The public agency has 10 days to decide if the request seeks disclosable public records and to notify the requester of the agency's determination and the reasons therefor. The agency must also state the estimated date and time when the records will be made available. Govt C §6253. If the government agency has the public record in an electronic format, it must provide a copy of the electronic record on payment of the cost of production, subject to several exceptions. Govt C §6253.9. The government agency may withhold any public record if the record is exempt or if, in the particular case, the public interest served by not disclosing the record clearly outweighs the public interest served by disclosure. Govt C §6255. Also, a denial, in whole or in part, of a written request for inspection or copies of public records must be in writing. Govt C §6255(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.36 2. Petitioning the Landlord

Preparation and submission of a formal petition to the landlord concerning the group's grievances has several advantages. The drafting process forces the tenants to specify their demands. In addition, the need to sign the petition encourages the tenants to make a commitment. Finally, the petition informs the landlord that the tenants are united, aware of their rights, and determined to achieve their demands.

The petition should be polite, but firm, and should clearly set out the tenants' demands. Threats of rent strikes should probably not be explicit, because this might antagonize the landlord and discourage discussion. The tenants may wish to make a general allusion to possible remedies, however, to suggest what the landlord might face if the dispute is not settled by negotiation. The petition should conclude with a request for a meeting between the tenants and the landlord, not the landlord's manager. If the tenants' attorney will attend the negotiating session, then the petition (or an accompanying letter) probably should disclose that fact. This information will eliminate the possibility that the landlord will be surprised at the attorney's presence and walk out of the meeting.

PRACTICE TIP: The attorney's involvement in drafting a petition should probably be limited. Too much reliance on the attorney at this early stage may harm the group. Moreover, if the language of the petition reveals that an attorney wrote it, the landlord might conclude that an outside agitator is the true instigator of the dispute, rather than the tenants. Although the attorney should counsel the tenants on the tone and content of the petition, the tenants should draft the petition themselves, even if the result is unsophisticated.

Presumably, any court action brought by the landlord in retaliation for the tenants' petitioning the landlord with valid grievances would be subject to attack under the anti-SLAPP statute, CCP §425.16. See §§5.18A, 5.37.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.37 3. Picketing and Publicity

Picketing and other means of gaining publicity for the tenants' grievances can often be useful tactics for a tenant union. Such actions help to sustain the group's spirits, and often put a shy or prominent landlord in a mood to negotiate. Legal problems can arise, however, and the attorney should be prepared to advise the group on how it can avoid trouble.

There are few reported cases in California on publicity-seeking activities by tenant unions. In Golden Gateway Ctr. v Golden Gateway Tenants Ass'n (2001) 26 C4th 1013, 111 CR2d 336, the supreme court held that a tenants' association does not have a constitutional right to distribute leaflets door to door in a privately owned apartment complex. The court distinguished Robins v Pruneyard Shopping Ctr. (1979) 23 C3d 899, 153 CR 854, aff'd (1980) 447 US 74, 64 L Ed 2d 741, 100 S Ct 2035, based on the "public character" of the Pruneyard shopping center. The apartment complex, in contrast, specifically restricted public access, allowing entry only to residential tenants and their invitees. Similarly, in Albertson's, Inc. v Young (2003) 107 CA4th 106, 118, 131 CR2d 721, the court held that a free-standing market whose customers come to purchase groceries and leave was not the functional equivalent of a traditional public forum and could, therefore, prohibit solicitation of signatures at the entrance to the store. In Fashion Valley Mall, LLC v NLRB (2007) 42 C4th 850, 69 CR3d 288, however, the court ruled that a shopping mall could not prohibit persons from urging customers to boycott a store in the mall because the mall was a public forum in which persons can exercise their right to free speech under Cal Const art I, §2. But see CCP §527.3, which limits a court's ability to enjoin peaceful picketing and other labor union activities, and CC §1942.6 on the right to assemble for a tenant association meeting on residential premises if an occupant invites the meeting (discussed in §5.33A).

In addition, there are a number of decisions from other states. In New York, tenants have been enjoined from peaceful, truthful picketing and other publicity on the ground that the tenants should have sued the landlord instead, because the dispute was based on a contract. Roosevelt Hosp. v Orlansky (Sup Ct 1977) 400 NYS2d 663; Springfield Bayside Corp. v Hochman (Sup Ct 1964) 255 NYS2d 140. In another New York decision, however, the court held such reasoning to be unconvincing, because denying a tenant the right to picket unduly restricted his or her right of free speech. Dicta Realty Assocs. v Shaw (Sup Ct 1966) 270 NYS2d 342.

In Hibbs v Neighborhood Org. to Rejuvenate Tenant Hous. (Pa 1969) 252 A2d 622, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court reversed an injunction against tenants' picketing at a landlord's home because the landlord kept his place of business secret. See also Carey v Brown (1980) 447 US 455, 65 L Ed 2d 263, 100 S Ct 2286 (statute prohibiting peaceful residential picketing, but allowing picketing in other areas, violates equal protection clause of Fourteenth Amendment). In Jacobs v Clark County Sch. Dist. (9th Cir 2008) 526 F3d 419, the Ninth Circuit refused to find that a school district's requirement that students wear uniforms violated the First Amendment rights of students to communicate written messages on their clothing or to engage in expressive conduct via their choice of clothing.

An ordinance prohibiting all picketing that occurs in front of a residence and that is focused on that residence was upheld on its face in Frisby v Schultz (1988) 487 US 474, 101 L Ed 2d 420, 108 S Ct 2495. Rejecting the argument that the ordinance was facially overbroad in its regulation of free speech, the court was careful to state that the ordinance as written did not prohibit all picketing in residential neighborhoods or picketing in front of a residence used for a business or public meeting. See also Klein v San Diego County (9th Cir 2006) 463 F3d 1029, which upheld an ordinance outlawing picketing within 300 feet of a residence because it functioned as a narrower prohibition than the ordinance at issue in Frisby. On the constitutionality of restrictions on the right to picket, see Hill v Colorado (2000) 530 US 703, 147 L Ed 2d 597, 120 S Ct 2480 (upheld content-neutral ordinance creating bubble around facility to separate customers from protestors); Madsen v Women's Health Ctr., Inc. (1994) 512 US 753, 129 L Ed 2d 593, 114 S Ct 2516 (state court injunction provisions restricting activities of antiabortion protesters held partially constitutional and partially unconstitutional); Foti v City of Menlo Park (9th Cir 1998) 146 F3d 629 (ban on signs on public property that exempted open house signs and safety, traffic, and public informational signs was content-based and, therefore, violation of First Amendment); and City of San Jose v Superior Court (1995) 32 CA4th 330, 38 CR2d 205 (ordinance that outlawed picketing within 300 feet of targeted residence held constitutional).

The Rhode Island Supreme Court held that a landlord had no cause of action for invasion of privacy against a tenant group that handed out leaflets at the landlord's church and fraternal organization, accusing him of "slum-landlordism." Kalian v People Acting Through Community Effort, Inc. (RI 1979) 408 A2d 608. In Inganamort v Merker (NJ Super Ct Ch Div 1977) 372 A2d 1168, the court refused to enjoin tenants from distributing leaflets in the building to other tenants, because the tenants had rights "incidental" to their lease to do so. In California, a tenant who demonstrated with others at the landlord's church because of the landlord's alleged patterns of improper evictions and refusal to make needed repairs was served with a petition for injunctive relief under CC §527.6. The tenant's anti-SLAPP motion was denied by the trial court, but permitted by the court of appeal. Thomas v Quintero (2005) 126 CA4th 635, 24 CR3d 619.

The attorney must consider California's libel, slander, and trespass laws when advising the group on their publicity-seeking activities. California also has criminal statutes prohibiting picketing at a courthouse with intent to interfere with or obstruct justice or to influence a judge or a witness (Pen C §169); obstruction of a sidewalk, street, or public place (Pen C §647c); sit-ins (Pen C §647(j)); stalking (Pen C §§646.91-646.91A); and unlawful assembly (Pen C §§407-409). When advising tenant groups about these laws, the attorney must keep in mind Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-210, which provides that a member of the California Bar "shall not advise the violation of any law, rule or ruling of a tribunal unless the member believes in good faith that such law, rule or ruling is invalid."

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.38 4. Rent Strikes

A rent strike by most or all of the tenants in a building can place significant pressure on the landlord, especially if the landlord needs regular rent payments to meet mortgage payments, so the prospect of a rent strike may put the landlord in the mood to negotiate. See §§3.16-3.48 on the circumstances under which tenants may withhold rent. Nevertheless, because unlawful detainer litigation is unpredictable, a rent strike is risky. If the landlord succeeds in evicting only one tenant, that victory may frighten the other tenants into paying their rent and abandoning the tenant union. The group must be warned of the risks involved in a rent strike not just to individual tenants, but to the group itself. If the group's first act is a rent strike that results in the eviction of one or more tenants, the group may never recover its unity or morale.

A group that decides to call a rent strike should collect rent from its members as rent becomes due, and keep the funds in a trust account with a financial institution. (Although a trust account often is called an "escrow account," it is not a true escrow account because the group retains the right to withdraw the funds at will.) The attorney should advise the group to designate at least two members who must sign together to make withdrawals from the account. All members of the union should be required to deposit their rent in the account. If one or more members are given a "free ride," morale will suffer and the group may disintegrate.

Although tenants who withhold rent or participate in a rent strike are not required by law to maintain a separate rent account, the account may help persuade the judge that the tenants are not trying to avoid paying rent, but instead are responsibly trying to resolve a legitimate dispute. In addition, the account may help demonstrate to the judge that a protective order is unnecessary. See §§11.56-11.61. Having a rent fund available might be particularly helpful if the tenants lose the unlawful detainer action and then seek relief from forfeiture under CCP §1174(c) or §1179. See §§13.49, 13.56. If the tenants successfully defend an unlawful detainer action by proving the landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability (see §§3.32, 10.64), they must pay a "reasonable rent" to avoid eviction. The trust account could provide such funds.

The landlord probably cannot compel the tenants to release the account funds. In Dorfmann v Boozer (DC Cir 1969) 414 F2d 1168, 1171, a landlord obtained an injunction compelling a tenant union to turn such funds over to him, but the court of appeals reversed the trial court's decision, holding that the legislature had already set up a comprehensive statutory scheme for eviction and attachment, which the landlord could not undercut by obtaining injunctive relief. No California court has decided whether a landlord may obtain injunctive relief to compel tenants to release such funds. In Martin v Danziger (1913) 21 CA 563, 132 P 284, however, the court held that in an action to determine the right to possession of real property, an injunction is improper if its effect is to oust one party from possession while the litigation is pending. 21 CA at 566. The Martin decision might support an argument that an injunction is improper if it effectively resolves a contested issue (e.g., the landlord's right to the rent specified in the lease) while litigation on that issue is still pending.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.39 5. Lawsuits Against Landlord

One or more members of a tenant organization might have personal causes of action against the landlord that are not shared by the other members. For example, the landlord might have locked one tenant out, committed one or more retaliatory evictions, or breached the implied warranty of habitability with respect to certain tenants only. Under such circumstances, the tenant organization itself might have standing to file suit for injunctive relief on behalf of the affected members. See Crescent Park Tenants Ass'n v Realty Equities Corp. (NJ 1971) 275 A2d 433 (tenants' association has standing to sue over matters of common interest to tenants). A tenant association could sue in its own name (CCP §369.5), but it is unclear whether it could recover damages in addition to damages awarded to individual members. Nonetheless, a lawsuit costs a landlord attorney fees (unless the landlord's insurer has a duty to defend the landlord), and exposes the landlord to liability for damages. Therefore, a legitimate suit can be an added inducement to the landlord to settle the underlying dispute.

If substandard residential housing substantially endangers the health and safety of residents or the public, a local enforcement agency may give the owner a notice to repair or abate. If the owner fails to comply with the notice, the tenants or a tenant association may file an action seeking judicial appointment of a receiver to manage the property and remediate the violations. Health & S C §§17980.6, 17980.7. The receiver may collect rents, manage the building, and use rents and loans to rehabilitate the building. The receiver may also make relocation payments to tenants who must move during repairs.

If a lawsuit against the landlord affects tenants' rights to possession, they may record a lis pendens against the property, putting potential purchasers and encumbrancers on notice of the pending action. See CCP §405.20; Parker v Superior Court (1970) 9 CA3d 397, 88 CR 352. The notice could affect the landlord's ability to sell or mortgage the building, and therefore might encourage him or her to negotiate with the tenant association. However, if the landlord moves to expunge the lis pendens, and the court finds that the recording of the lis pendens was improper, the tenants could be liable for the landlord's attorney fees and costs. CCP §405.38. On lis pendens procedures, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 13 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

As in an action on behalf of an individual tenant, the attorney should never file an action on behalf of a tenant organization solely for delay or harassment. To do so may lead to disciplinary action against the attorney (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-200) and to an action for malicious prosecution of a civil action. See Weaver v Superior Court (1979) 95 CA3d 166, 156 CR 745; Tool Research & Eng'g Corp. v Henigson (1975) 46 CA3d 675, 120 CR 291. (On the issue of alleging malicious prosecution for an attorney's failure to investigate before taking over a case, the Tool Research & Eng'g Corp. decision was overruled in Sheldon Appel Co. v Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 C3d 863, 254 CR 336). The tort of abuse of process does not apply to the mere filing of a lawsuit (Oren Royal Oaks Venture v Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma, Inc. (1986) 42 C3d 1157, 232 CR 567; Seidner v 1331 Greenfield Owners Ass'n (1980) 108 CA3d 895, 904, 166 CR 803), or to the recording of a lis pendens (Woodcourt II Ltd. v McDonald Co. (1981) 119 CA3d 245, 249, 173 CR 836).

In Rubin v Green (1993) 4 C4th 1187, 17 CR2d 828, the supreme court held that the litigation privilege set forth in CC §47(b) protects a law firm representing mobilehome park tenants concerning park defects from being sued for communicating with tenants concerning an anticipated lawsuit.

If the landlord sells the building while litigation is pending, the suit may be maintained against the successor landlord. See Rosales v Thermex-Thermatron, Inc. (1998) 67 CA4th 187, 78 CR2d 861.

PRACTICE TIP: Before filing a lawsuit against the landlord, the attorney should consider carefully the effect of the lawsuit on the tenant organization. When suit has been filed, tenants often begin to rely too heavily on the lawsuit and their attorney to solve their problems. Their other efforts may slacken, including their efforts to reach a negotiated settlement, and the group may gradually fade away. The attorney should discuss this problem with the tenants before filing suit, and encourage the group to schedule meetings or other activities that will continue while the litigation is pending. If it appears that the group's cohesiveness will suffer when an action is filed on behalf of the group, the attorney might suggest that each tenant file his or her own action for damages (up to $5000) against the landlord in small claims court. However, because collateral estoppel precludes the issue decided in small claims court from being relitigated (Pitzen v Superior Court (2004) 120 CA4th 1374, 16 CR3d 628), it may be unacceptably risky to have a tenant litigate a complex issue without counsel as required at the first stage of small claims court.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.40 6. Negotiations

Without the exercise of tact and restraint, a tenants' attorney who is experienced in negotiations with other attorneys and opposing parties can easily dominate a negotiating session with a landlord. If the attorney dominates the session, the effectiveness of the union and its leaders might diminish substantially.

Before a negotiating session begins, the attorney should discuss the following questions with the tenant group:

(a) Who will do the talking?

(b) What role will the attorney play?

(c) What demands will the tenants make?

(d) Which of these demands may be "traded away"?

(e) What is the minimum settlement that the tenants will accept?

A "dress rehearsal" in which the group's negotiators assume the roles of the various participants can bring the main issues into focus and provide some negotiating experience. The attorney should advise the tenants to avoid unnecessarily threatening or antagonizing the landlord, but should also remind them to make the landlord realize their power and intention to take legal or other action against the landlord if he or she fails to come to an agreement with them.

Finally, it is usually a good idea for the attorney to help the tenants prepare an agreement in advance, which the parties will sign at the meeting if they come to an agreement. If an agreement is not prepared until after the meeting, the landlord could change his or her mind, deny certain concessions made at the meeting, or try to extract additional concessions from the tenants.

PRACTICE TIP: Because the landlord will feel most comfortable in his or her own "territory," the negotiating session should not be held in the landlord's office. If the landlord sends a manager or other agent who has no authority to reach an immediate, binding agreement at the negotiating session, the tenants should walk out. By sending someone else to meet with the tenants, the landlord is probably merely trying to "feel out" their position and is not yet ready to negotiate in good faith.

© The Regents of the University of California

7. Agreement Negotiated Between Landlord and Tenant Union

§5.41 a. Parties; Effectiveness

A settlement between a tenant union and a landlord may take the form of a collective bargaining agreement. Such an agreement is similar to a labor union's collective bargaining agreement in that it involves three parties: the landlord, the tenant, and the tenant union. Such an agreement is only as effective as the continued willingness of the union to make it effective. If the tenants have little inclination to continue the union, the attorney probably should recommend that each tenant sign a new lease, rather than use a collective bargaining agreement.

The sample collective bargaining agreement presented in §5.42 has been reproduced with permission from Nolo Press, publishers of Portman & Brown, California Tenants' Rights (16th ed 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/5 Counseling the Tenant/§5.42 b. Form: Sample Collective Bargaining Agreement

§5.42 b. Form: Sample Collective Bargaining Agreement

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENT

I
Parties

The parties to this Agreement are _____, hereinafter called "Landlord," and _____, hereinafter called "Union." The property covered by this Agreement is located at _____.

II
Purpose

It is the general purpose of this agreement to provide a better means of communication between Landlord and his tenants, through Union, their bargaining agent, to assure a continuous, harmonious relationship and an orderly method of resolving differences and grievances, which will result in a stable tenancy, reduced expenses through greater tenant concern, and a better community.

III
Dismissal of Pending Lawsuits

All lawsuits currently pending between Landlord and Union or Landlord and any member of Union shall be dismissed, including the following: _____

IV
Recognition of Union

Landlord recognizes Union as the sole collective bargaining agent for its members who are tenants at the property covered by this Agreement on all matters relating to their tenancies, the building, and their dealings with Landlord in his capacity as owner.

V
Union Security

Landlord shall in no way discriminate against or take reprisals against any person because of his involvement or sympathy with Union. Nor shall Landlord promise or give any benefits to any person conditioned on such person's quitting, failing to join, or refusing to assist Union in any way.

VI
Tenant Responsibilities

Union agrees and recognizes that each tenant has certain obligations and responsibilities, including the following, and Union agrees to take no action to discourage tenants from complying with these obligations and responsibilities:

1. To pay rent promptly when due (except where provided otherwise by law, this Agreement, or agreement between Landlord and a tenant;

2. To pay for and correct any damage to the premises or Landlord's furnishings caused by any intentional or negligent act of a tenant or any person occupying the premises with his permission, excepting damage due to normal wear and tear;

3. To place his garbage and refuse inside the containers provided therefor;

4. To refrain from acts which unduly disturb his neighbors;

5. To obey all state and local laws and regulations relating to the occupancy of residential property;

6. To comply with his obligations under his lease or rental agreement.

VII
Leases [or Rental Agreements]

A standard form Model Lease or Model Rental Agreement Is attached to this Agreement and labeled "Exhibit A."

Within 7 days of this Agreement, Landlord shall offer to sign such Model with each tenant who is a member of Union. Landlord shall make the same offer to each new member of Union within 7 days of being notified of such membership by Union.

The provisions of this Agreement shall be considered incorporated into and a part of each such Model signed.

VIII
Rents

1. Rents. The following monthly rentals shall apply to the following units:

Apartment number (specify furnished or unfurnished) Rent

_____

2. Appliances. Landlord shall, without extra charge furnish every apartment with a satisfactory stove and refrigerator, which he shall maintain in good working order.

3. Utilities. Landlord shall provide and pay for the following utilities, without adding to the monthly rent: gas, electricity, water, garbage collection, trash removal, and sewer charges.

4. Late Charges. No late charges or fines shall be imposed.

5. Rent Increases. There shall be no rent increases during the term of this Agreement.

6. Back Rents. Back rents in the amount of _____ now held by Union shall be disposed of as follows:

_____

IX
Repairs and Maintenance

1. Maintenance. Landlord shall maintain the building and grounds in a decent, safe and sanitary condition, and shall comply with all state and local laws, regulations and ordinances concerning the maintenance of residential property. In addition, as specific maintenance problems have arisen in the past, Landlord specifically agrees to provide the following maintenance services:

Example: (a) Check the coin-operated washing machine and dryer at least once a week to see that they are in good operating condition; (b) repair broken mailboxes upon notice by affected tenants.

2. Security. Landlord shall take reasonable measures to maintain security in the building and grounds to protect the tenants and their guests from burglary, robbery and other crimes.

3. Repairs. Landlord shall complete the following repairs by the following dates:

Repair	Date

4. Failure to Comply. Union shall have the right to inspect the building at reasonable times to insure compliance with this Section. if any repair is not completed by the date specified, or if Landlord fails to comply with any maintenance duty for 7 days or longer, the tenants of the building may thereafter, until completion of repairs or resumption of maintenance, pay their rent into a bank account held by Union. Union shall use the money to make the repairs or perform the maintenance, remitting the balance to Landlord after repairs are completed and maintenance resumed. This remedy shall be in addition to any remedies provided by law or contract for tenants receiving inadequate maintenance or repair.

X
Grievance Procedure

1. The term "grievance" shall mean any dispute between Landlord and a tenant or between Landlord and Union involving the interpretation, application, or coverage of this Agreement or any lease or rental agreement, except that any claim for personal injuries exceeding $500 shall not be considered a "grievance" subject to this procedure.

2. Any tenant having a grievance may present his grievance, by himself or through Union, to Landlord or his agent.

3. If the grievance has not been resolved to the satisfaction of the tenant within 10 days after being presented, a grievance meeting shall be held between the tenant, Union and Landlord within the next 5 days, or as soon thereafter as the parties may agree. At such meeting, the parties shall attempt to resolve the grievance to everyone's satisfaction.

4. If Landlord has a grievance against any tenant, or against Union, he may present such grievance to Union, which shall attempt to resolve the grievance as soon as possible.

5. If Landlord's grievance has not been resolved to his satisfaction within ten days after it has been presented to Union, the grievance meeting provisions of subsection 3 above shall apply.

6. If the grievance meeting produces no resolution of the grievance, the aggrieved party may then file suit in any court of competent jurisdiction for final determination of the matter in dispute.

XI
Enforcement

The provisions of this Agreement may be enforced through appropriate legal action by Landlord, Union, or any affected person. As the amount of damages attributable to violation of any provision of this Agreement be difficult to ascertain, the parties agree that these provisions may be specifically enforced by an appropriate court.

XII
Severability

In the event that any provision of this Agreement is deemed invalid by any court of law, it Is mutually agreed that such determination shall not affect any other provisions of this Agreement and the Agreement shall remain binding on all parties hereto.

XIII
Union's Right to Information

In order to enable Union to maintain a continuing interest in the present and future condition of the building and to adequately represent the interests of the tenants, Landlord shall furnish Union with information and allow Union to examine Landlord's records and books, upon reasonable notice by Union, relating to the following matters:

1. Expenses of maintaining the building;

2. Income received from the building;

3. All other financial information relating to the building including mortgages or deeds of trust on the building; and

4. All taxes affected by the building.

XIV
Duration

This Agreement shall remain in full force and effect from the date it is signed by both Landlord and Union and until _____.

On _____, Landlord and Union shall be in negotiations for a new agreement to go into effect at the expiration of this Agreement. Such negotiations shall continue in good faith until a new agreement is reached or this Agreement expires.

WHEREFORE, We, the undersigned, do hereby execute and agree to this Agreement.

	For the Landlord:		For the Union:
1	Signature: _____ Title: _____ Date of signature: _____	1	Signature: _____ Title: _____ Date of signature: _____
2	Signature: _____ Title: _____ Date of signature: _____	2	Signature: _____ Title: _____ Date of signature: _____

Comment: This agreement is included for illustrative purposes only. When drafting a collective bargaining agreement, attorneys representing tenant unions must consider the particular needs and demands of the union members, as well as the historical relationship between the tenants and their landlord. Attorneys should make certain that the agreement addresses all points necessary to confirm any settlement reached by the parties. CEB thanks Nolo Press for its cooperation in permitting reproduction of the agreement.

© The Regents of the University of California

6

Mobilehome Tenancies

Ronald S. Javor
Terry R. Dowdall
Robert S. Coldren
Linda J. Lester

I. INTRODUCTION §6.1

II. APPLICABILITY OF MOBILEHOME RESIDENCY LAW (MRL) §6.2
- A. Type of Structure §6.3
  - 1. Mobilehomes §6.4
  - 2. Recreational Vehicles §6.5
  - 3. Factory-Built Housing §6.6
  - 4. Commercial Modulars §6.7
  - 5. Multifamily Manufactured Homes §6.8
- B. Location of Mobilehome §6.9
  - 1. Installation in Park §6.10
  - 2. Installation on Individual Lot §6.11
- C. Parties to Rental Agreement §6.12

III. OTHER LAWS AFFECTING MOBILEHOMES
- A. State Legislation Specific to Mobilehomes §6.13
- B. Landlord-Tenant Statutes §6.14
- C. Antidiscrimination Statutes §6.14A
- D. Local Ordinances Regulating Mobilehomes §6.15
- E. Public Rental Assistance Programs §6.15A

IV. DECISIONAL LAW GOVERNING MOBILEHOME TENANCIES
- A. Implied Warranties §6.16
- B. Retaliatory Eviction Protections §6.17
- C. Adults-Only Restrictions §6.18

V. CREATION OF TENANCY
- A. Types of Tenancies §6.19
- B. Resident and Mobilehome Admissions Criteria §6.20
- C. Lease or Rental Agreement §6.21

VI. MOBILEHOME PARK RENTAL AGREEMENT
- A. Legal and Practical Considerations §6.22
  - 1. Term of Agreement; Initial Disclosures
    - a. Homeowner's Options §6.23
    - b. Reporting and Disclosure Requirements §6.24
    - c. Limits on Renewal §6.25
  - 2. Rent and Rent Increases §6.26
    - a. Notice of Rent Increase §6.27
    - b. Methods of Rent Increase in Long-Term Agreements
      - (1) Objective Factors §6.28
      - (2) Pass-Throughs §6.29
    - c. Inclusion of Utilities or Taxes in Rent §6.30
    - d. Statutory Limitations on Rent, Fees, and Charges §6.31
    - e. Impact of Local Rent Control Regulations §6.32
  - 3. Fees, Service Charges, and Utilities §6.33
    - a. Permissible Fees
      - (1) Common Area Landscaping and Maintenance Fees §6.34
      - (2) Fees Imposed by Governmental Entities §6.35
    - b. Limitations on Fees

(1) Supplying Lease §6.36
(2) Pets §6.37
(3) Occupancy §6.38
(4) Installation, Development, and Initial Landscaping §6.39
(5) Awards Against Management §6.40
(6) Enforcing Park Rules and Regulations §6.41
c. Amortization of Fees §6.42
d. Utilities Charges §6.43
4. Security Deposits §6.44
5. Park Rules
a. Adoption and Amendment of Rules §6.45
b. Limitation on Park Rules §6.46
6. Park Management Responsibilities §6.47
7. Fixtures and Alterations §6.48
8. Uses and Changes of Use, Zoning, or Master Lease
a. Disclosures §6.49
b. Change of Use
(1) Definition §6.50
(2) Implementation §6.51
(3) Failure to Follow Procedures §6.52
c. Sale of the Park §6.53
9. Sale or Lease of Mobilehomes
a. Management Rights and Duties §6.54
b. Form: Information for Prospective Homeowners §6.54A
c. Limitations on Right to Withhold Approval §6.55
d. Failure to Execute Rental Agreement §6.56
e. Management's Role in Sales or Listings §6.57
f. Seller Disclosures §6.57A
g. Required Removal of Mobilehome After Sale §6.58
10. Cotenants, Sublessees, and Subsequent Tenants §6.59
a. Cotenants §6.60
b. Sublessees §6.61
B. Statutory Remedies in Mobilehome Park Tenancies
1. Termination of Tenancy
a. Scope of MRL §6.62
b. Permissible Grounds §6.63
(1) Failure to Comply With Laws §6.64
(2) Conduct Constituting Substantial Annoyance §6.65
(3) Conviction for Specified Crimes §6.66
(4) Failure to Comply With Park Rules and Regulations §6.67
(5) Nonpayment of Rent or Charges for Services or Utilities §6.68
(6) Condemnation of Park §6.69
(7) Change of Use of Park; Closure of Park §6.70
c. Impermissible Grounds
(1) Grounds Established by MRL §6.71
(2) Retaliation §6.72
(3) Expiration of Stated Term §6.73
(4) Lapsed or Suspended Permit to Operate §6.73A
d. Notices of Termination §6.74
e. Special Concerns When Secured Lenders Are Involved §6.75
2. Eviction; Execution of Judgment; Lien Enforcement
a. Procedures for Eviction §6.76
b. Execution of Money Judgment Against Mobilehome §6.77
c. Prohibition on Acquiring Lien or Security Interest in Mobilehome §6.78
d. Warehouse's Lien
(1) Definition §6.79
(2) Warehouse's Lien Procedure §6.80
(a) Termination Notice §6.81
(b) Response Options to Termination Notice §6.82
(3) Foreclosing a Warehouse's Lien §6.83
e. Judicial Declaration of Abandonment (CC §798.61) §6.84
3. Additional Remedies
a. By Tenants
(1) Public Nuisance §6.85
(2) Management's Willful Violations and Illegal Business Practices §6.86

(3) Other Remedies §6.87
b. By Management §6.88
c. Attorney Fees and Penalties §6.89
C. Form: Mobilehome Park Rental Agreement
1. Initial Information
a. Form: Park Name/Address and Space Number/Address §6.90
b. Form: Identity of Homeowner and Residents §6.91
c. Form: Identity of Park Owner and Management §6.92
d. Term
(1) Form: Beginning of Term §6.93
(2) Form: Length of Term §6.94
e. Form: Amount of Rent §6.95
f. Form: Services §6.96
g. Form: Facilities §6.97
h. Form: Chart Showing Fees for Utilities and Services §6.98
i. Deposit
(1) Form: Amount §6.99
(2) Form: Payment of Deposit Amounts §6.100
j. Form: Zoning and Land Use Disclosures §6.101
k. Form: Mobilehome Ownership Information §6.102
l. Form: Other Information §6.103
2. Form: Agreement to Lease §6.104
3. Form: Term of Agreement §6.105
4. Rent and Rent Increases
a. Form: Indexed Rent Increases (Long-Term Rental Agreement Only) §6.106
b. Form: Due Date of Rent Payments; Notice of Increase §6.107
c. Form: Tender of Rent §6.108
d. Form: Charges for Late Payment of Rent §6.109
5. Form: Fees, Service Charges, and Utilities §6.110
6. Form: Security and Default Deposits §6.111
7. Form: State Law and Park Rules; Procedure for Amending Park Rules §6.112
8. Form: Park Management Responsibilities for Physical Facilities, Services, Utilities, and Compliance With Law §6.113
9. Form: Fixtures: Ownership, Maintenance, and Liability §6.114
10. Form: Right of Entry §6.115
11. Form: Changes in Zoning, Use Permits, or Master Lease §6.116
12. Form: Sale or Subletting of Mobilehome §6.117
13. Form: General Prohibitions (Residential Use, Guests, Abandonment, Subletting, and Assignments or Encumbrances) §6.118
14. Form: Termination and Eviction §6.119
15. Form: Waivers §6.120
16. Form: Notices §6.121
17. Form: Consultation With Homeowner §6.122
18. Form: Liability Indemnification §6.123
19. Form: Management's Right to Make Payments §6.124
20. Form: Ownership of Mobilehome §6.125
21. Form: Multiple Mobilehome Ownership §6.126
22. Form: Enforcement of Agreement §6.127
23. Form: Attorney Fees §6.128
24. Miscellaneous Provisions
a. Form: Time of the Essence §6.129
b. Form: Interpretation and Severability §6.130
c. Form: Entirety of Agreement §6.131
d. Form: Alterations or Amendments §6.132
25. Acknowledgments.
a. Form: Acknowledgment Is Voluntary; Caveat §6.133
b. Form: Inspection Made to Corroborate Management's Representation of Space and Facilities §6.134
c. Form: Receipt and Understanding of Mobilehome Residency Law §6.135
d. Form: Charges for Month-to-Month Agreement §6.136
e. Form: Charges for Term Agreement §6.137
f. Form: Acceptance of Commercial Goods or Services Not Required §6.138
g. Form: Consent to Entry §6.139
h. Form: Attachments §6.139A
26. Form: Execution §6.140

VII. RULES AND REGULATIONS
A. Importance §6.141
B. Checklist: Common Provisions §6.142

VIII. MANAGEMENT-TENANT RELATIONS
A. Tenant Organizations §6.143
B. Management Organizations §6.144

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.1 I. INTRODUCTION

Legal representation of an owner or occupant of a mobilehome or manufactured home, or of a landlord with a mobilehome or manufactured home on his or her property, requires knowledge of the various special laws dealing with mobilehomes and mobilehome parks and a determination of which of these and other general laws may apply. The most important law affecting the landlord-tenant relationship in a mobilehome tenancy is the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10). Among other matters, the MRL regulates the following:

- Contents of the rental agreement;
- Types of charges that can be imposed;
- Grounds for eviction; and
- Eviction procedures.

An attorney representing either a landlord or a tenant of a mobilehome must first determine whether the MRL applies. See §§6.2-6.12 for discussion of application and provisions of the MRL.

In addition to the MRL, numerous other laws regulate one or more aspects of mobilehomes. The most significant include the Manufactured Housing Act of 1980 (Health & S C §§18000-18153), which regulates construction and alteration of manufactured homes, mobilehomes, and recreational vehicles, registration, titling, sales practices, escrows, and dealers; the Mobilehome Parks Act (MPA) (Health & S C §§18200-18700), which regulates the construction and operation of mobilehome parks; and the Special Occupancy Parks Act (Health & S C §§18860-18874), which regulates the construction and operation of recreational vehicle parks.

Mobilehomes, recreational vehicles, park trailers, recreational vehicle parks, and mobilehome parks are regulated by the California Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD). Health & S C §§18015-18160 (mobilehomes, manufactured homes, park trailers, and recreational vehicles); Health & S C §§18200-18700 (mobilehome parks); and Health & S C §§18860-18874 (recreational vehicle parks). Enforcement of mobilehome park and special occupancy regulations may be assumed by a local city, county or city and county. Health & S C §18300(b). Consequently, an attorney representing a mobilehome owner or a person on whose land a mobilehome is located must also be familiar with HCD regulations. Health and Safety Code §18151 provides for a "Mobilehome Ombudsman" within the HCD to help resolve disputes involving the MRL, except for disputes involving rental agreements, leases, or rents.

Title 25 of the California Code of Regulations includes HCD regulations (25 Cal Code Regs §§1000-5668) that add specificity to the substantive and procedural requirements of the Mobilehome Parks Act (div 1, ch 2) and of the Special Occupancy Parks Act (div 1, ch 2.2); construction requirements for factory-built housing and mobilehomes (div 1, ch 3); mobilehome occupational licensing regulations (dealer and manufacturer licensing and sales practices (div 1, ch 4)); and regulations on registration and titling of manufactured homes, mobilehomes, and commercial modulars (div 1, ch 5).

The Recreational Vehicle Park Occupancy Law (RVPOL) (CC §§799.20-799.79) and CC §§1866-1867 govern the landlord-tenant relationship in a recreational vehicle park (see Health & S C §18862.39). The RVPOL regulates the content of registration agreements and rental agreements (CC §§799.43, 799.45), removal of "occupants'" recreational vehicles (see CC §799.28, defining "occupant"), terminating tenancy of a "tenant" (see CC §799.32, defining "tenant"), and terminating tenancy of a "resident" (CC §799.31, defining "resident"). The RVPOL does not apply to mobilehomes or manufactured homes (CC §799.41). The Manufactured Housing Act of 1980 (Health & S C §§18000-18153), and the Special Occupancy Parks Act (Health & S C §§18860-18874), contain statutory requirements for recreational vehicles, park trailers, and recreational vehicle parks, other than matters covered by the RVPOL.

Although numerous laws govern such matters as the sale, construction, safety standards, taxation, and registration of mobilehomes, this chapter primarily discusses regulation of the landlord-tenant relationship in mobilehome park tenancies.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.2 II. APPLICABILITY OF MOBILEHOME RESIDENCY LAW (MRL)

A mobilehome tenancy subject to the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.8) creates a landlord-tenant relationship that is significantly different from that in conventional rental tenancies. The MRL contains many provisions that regulate the landlord-tenant relationship in mobilehome tenancies, the most significant of which regulate the contents of the rental agreement (CC §798.15) and the termination of the tenancy (CC §§798.55-798.60). To determine whether the MRL applies to the tenancy, the attorney first must review the definitions in the MRL (CC §§798.2-798.12) on the type of structure in which the tenant resides (see §§6.3-6.8), the type of community or park in which the residence is located (see §§6.9-6.11), and the type of legal relationship, if any, that the tenant has with the mobilehome park owner (see §6.12).

The MRL defines the terms "mobilehome" (CC §798.3), "mobilehome park" (CC §798.4), "park" (CC §798.6), "rental agreement" (CC §798.8), "homeowner" (CC §798.9), "resident" (CC §798.11), and "tenancy" (CC §798.12). Each of these definitions is crucial in determining whether specific aspects of the mobilehome park landlord-tenant relationship is subject to the MRL.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.3 A. Type of Structure

§6.3 A. Type of Structure

Before giving any legal advice or undertaking any representation, the attorney must determine the type of structure in which the tenant resides. The familiar silver trailer towed behind the 1950 family sedan has been replaced by a wide variety of manufactured residences, ranging from compact motorized homes to two-story, 2000-square-foot mobilehomes and even multifamily manufactured homes (Health & S C §18008.7; see §6.8).

In response to these changes, the legislature no longer treats or classifies mobilehomes as vehicles. See Health & S C §18008. Mobilehomes may be:

- Installed on permanent foundations (Health & S C §18551);
- Taxed as personal property (Rev & T C §5810); and
- Subject to special landlord-tenant laws when installed and used in mobilehome parks (CC §§798-799.8).

The MRL applies, however, only if the structure is a mobilehome as defined in CC §798.3. CC §798.1. See §6.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.4 1. Mobilehomes

A mobilehome (often called a "manufactured home") is defined in the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) as a structure "designed for human habitation and for being moved on a street or highway" under a Vehicle Code permit. CC §798.3. The Vehicle Code permit requirements apply, with narrow exceptions, to loads over 102 inches wide (Veh C §35100) or 40 feet long (Veh C §35400). The MRL definition of "mobilehome" explicitly excludes recreational vehicles (as defined in CC §799.29 and Health & S C §18010; see §6.5), except as provided in CC §798.3(b), trailers or other recreational vehicles located in recreational vehicle parks governed by CC §§799.20-799.79, and commercial modular units (as defined in Health & S C §§18001.8, 18015.1; see §6.7).

The MRL definition of "mobilehome" specifically includes both manufactured homes (as defined in Health & S C §18007) and mobilehomes (as defined in Health & S C §18008). See CC §798.3. The Health & S C definitions of "mobilehome" and "manufactured home" were amended, effective January 1, 2008. The definition of "manufactured home" in Health & S C §18007 is limited to single-family units constructed on or after June 15, 1976, which comply with building standards imposed on that date by the US Department of Housing and Urban Development. Under Health & S C §18008, "mobilehome" is defined as a single-family unit built before June 15, 1976, and which complies with state standards in effect at the time of construction. The changes in definitions, however, are intended by the Legislature to have no substantive effect with respect to the treatment of these units by any law. See Health & S C §§18000(b)(4), 18007(b) and 18008(b). Notwithstanding these new statutory distinctions, this chapter will use the term "mobilehome" when referring to mobilehomes or manufactured homes.

NOTE: The Health and Safety Code definition regulates the physical standards, sale, taxation, and registration of mobilehomes; the Civil Code definition controls only which units are subject to the MRL.

Although the terms "mobilehome" and "manufactured home" are often used interchangeably, the term "factory-built housing" as defined in Health & S C §19971 does not include mobilehomes as defined in Health & S C §18008. Presumably, factory-built housing would not come within the definition of "mobilehome" in CC §798.3 either, and factory-built housing installed within a mobilehome park would not be subject to the MRL. See §6.6.

Another factor that may be significant is how the mobilehome is installed (i.e., whether it rests on piers or related methods of attachment to the ground under Health & S C §18613, or is permanently affixed to a foundation system under Health & S C §§18551 and 18551.1). In most cases, this distinction is irrelevant because the MRL relates to whether the residence is a mobilehome without regard to whether or not it is attached or affixed. As a practical matter, however, a court might treat the forfeiture of a lease involving a mobilehome that is permanently affixed differently from one that is sited on piers.

Permanent affixation of mobilehomes must conform to park rules and regulations (Health & S C §18611), and such rules rarely address permanent affixation. A mobilehome that is not permanently affixed to a foundation system in a mobilehome park is personal property for most purposes, and not real property. For example, such a mobilehome is not susceptible to mechanics' liens for work related to the park and is foreclosed against or executed on as personal property. Health & S C §18037.5; CCP §700.080.

Special provisions govern the disposition of mobilehomes abandoned in mobilehome parks. See CC §§798.56a, 798.61, discussed in §§6.79-6.84. Note that a claim of exemption or homestead protection attaches to a mobilehome as a residence and not as a vehicle or other form of personal property. CCP §704.710. Foreclosures on mobilehomes are governed by Health & S C §18037.5. On execution of a judgment against a mobilehome, see §6.77. This hybrid legal structure has many other consequences beyond the scope of this chapter.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.5 2. Recreational Vehicles

Recreational vehicles and park trailers comprise a range of structures or vehicles that may look like mobilehomes when installed, but are not mobilehomes as defined in the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10). A recreational vehicle may be a motorhome, a slide-in camper, a travel trailer, a truck camper, or a camping trailer (with or without motive power) that is designed for human habitation for recreational, emergency, or other occupancy. Health & S C §18010. A park trailer is designed for recreational or seasonal occupancy only. Health & S C §18009.3.

Recreational vehicles and park trailers located in recreational vehicle parks (or in the recreational vehicle portion of a mobilehome park) are subject to the Recreational Vehicle Park Occupancy Law (RVPOL) (CC §§799.20-799.79). This law governs the contents of registration agreements and regulates the removal of recreational vehicles and park trailers of defaulting occupants, tenants, and residents. In addition, CC §§1866-1867 permit summary removal of vehicles, including recreational vehicles.

The RVPOL distinguishes among "occupants," "tenants," and "residents":

- "Occupants" have occupied space in a recreational vehicle park for 30 days or less (CC §799.28).
- "Tenants" have been occupants in the park for more than 30 consecutive days (CC §799.32).
- "Residents" are tenants who have occupied the recreational vehicle park for 9 months or more (CCP §799.31).

Under the RVPOL, a defaulting occupant need be given only 72 hours' notice of termination. CC §799.55. A tenant who has resided in the park for less than 9 months must be given at least 30 days' notice of termination. CC §799.66. Tenancies of residents who have resided in the park continuously for 9 or more months may be terminated only in accordance with the MRL (see CC §798.56) if the recreational vehicle occupies a site in a mobilehome park for the time periods set forth in CC §798.3(b) and otherwise only in accordance with CC §799.70, which governs recreational vehicles in recreational vehicle parks.

Pursuant to CC §1866, special occupancy park management may summarily evict an occupant and remove a vehicle. In recreational vehicle parks, if the occupant fails to leave a campsite, camping cabin, lot, or other rental unit at the posted check-out time, park management may summarily evict if a series of specified conditions are met. CC §1867 permits special occupancy park management to require an occupant to move from one space to another if an imminent danger, as defined, is present.

In interpreting the definition of a recreational vehicle, the attorney may encounter two other structures that may appear to fit the MRL definition of "mobilehome." Special factors determine whether either should be treated as other than a recreational vehicle subject to the RVPOL. First, many travel trailers that have been installed in mobilehome parks for many years are no longer mounted on wheels, because the wheels have either deteriorated or been removed along with their axles. Even though they are lived in permanently, rather than being used for recreational or emergency use, these trailers are subject to the MRL if they meet the timing and location factors in CC §798.3(b); otherwise, they are subject to the RVPOL. Second, a park trailer is a newer, travel trailer that either may be up to 14 feet wide with up to 400 square feet of living space or may have "pop-out" rooms that, if permanently extended, would result in more than 400 square feet of living space (Health & S C §18009.3). It is not constructed to the applicable federal or state standards (Health & S C §§18007, 18008, 18027.3). Some park trailers even have lofts, but they can be occupied in parks or rented by park owners only if they comply with Health & S C §§18009.3 and 18033.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.6 3. Factory-Built Housing

Factory-built houses are prefabricated or modular homes, not mobilehomes, manufactured homes, or recreational vehicles. They are defined in Health & S C §19971 as residential buildings or dwelling units manufactured in such a manner that concealed parts or processes cannot be inspected before installation at the building site without disassembly, damage, or destruction of the parts. Factory-built housing conforms to state building code requirements, rather than to federal mobilehome standards. The definition in Health & S C §19971 specifically excludes mobilehomes, recreational vehicles, and commercial coaches. Mobilehomes affixed to permanent foundations also should not be considered to be factory-built housing.

Health and Safety Code §18611 permits installation of factory-built housing in mobilehome parks under the following conditions:

- The housing is no more than two stories high and consists of no more than four dwelling units per structure.
- The housing is placed on lots specially designated for that purpose.
- The permit to construct the park is issued on or after January 1, 1982.
- A special zoning designation or use permit is obtained for the purpose of installing factory-built housing.

Factory-built housing is not covered by the MRL because such housing does not come within the definition of "mobilehome," even when it is located in a mobilehome park, and because "tenancy," by definition, covers sites with mobilehomes. CC §798.12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.7 4. Commercial Modulars

Another form of manufactured structure intended for human occupancy, a commercial modular or coach, may be used only for industrial, professional, or commercial purposes. Health & S C §18001.8. Some commercial coaches are used for residential purposes, such as dormitories. Commercial coaches are not subject to the MRL, however, because they are explicitly excluded by CC §798.3(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.8 5. Multifamily Manufactured Homes

"Multifamily Manufactured Homes" are a type of manufactured home that may be placed in mobilehome parks by park management or even homeowners. These are similar to manufactured homes (see §6.4), but they are equipped for two dwelling units including a dormitory or efficiency unit, or three or more dwelling units. Health & S C §18008.7. All provisions of law that apply to manufactured homes apply equally to multifamily manufactured homes. Health & S C §18008.7. Practitioners representing park management should ensure that parks that would not welcome multifamily manufactured homes have entry criteria in their rules and regulations that govern the use of these structures in a manner that is not unreasonable, arbitrary, or inconsistent with any other relevant statute. The rules on what types of multifamily homes can be placed in what types and ages of parks are in Health & S C §§18551.1 and 18611.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.9 B. Location of Mobilehome

After ascertaining that a residential structure is a mobilehome as defined by the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10), the attorney must determine whether it is located in a park. The MRL specifies three types of "parks."

(1) A "mobilehome park," which is "an area of land where two or more mobilehome sites are rented, or held out for rent, to accommodate mobilehomes used for human habitation." CC §798.4.

(2) A mobilehome "subdivision, cooperative, or condominium" or a "resident-owned mobilehome park," to which most of the provisions of the MRL apply by virtue of CC §799.1, if the resident does not have an ownership interest in the subdivision, cooperative, or condominium, or resident-owned park; for those with the requisite ownership interest, only article 9 of the MRL applies, unless otherwise explicitly stated. See §6.11. (It is unclear, however, why CC §799.1 states that article 9 of the MRL (commencing with CC §799) applies only to "rights of a resident," but does not mention "obligations of management or owners.")

(3) A "manufactured housing community," which according to CC §798.6 is defined in Health & S C §18210.7, and which is similar to a rental or ownership mobilehome park, except that the manufactured homes must have been constructed after June 15, 1976 (when federal standards took effect), or the mobilehomes must have two or more units in them.

The type of installation should not be a relevant factor in determining the type of park because:

- The MRL applies only to the rental of a space or site within a mobilehome park for a mobilehome (CC §798.12).
- Health & Safety Code §18551.1 explicitly permits installation of mobilehomes in certain mobilehome parks on foundation systems that are subject to the requirements of Health & S C §18551.

For a mobilehome to be installed on a foundation system, Health & S C §18551 requires that the mobilehome owner either:

- Hold title to, or be in the process of purchasing, the real property where the mobilehome will be installed; or
- Hold a lease for 35 years or more, or for a mutually agreed-on term (if less than 35 years), if the lease is transferable and subject only to revocation for specified cause.

If a mobilehome is located in a mobilehome park, the MRL's restrictions on management and various tenant protections apply (including the special eviction protections), as well as state-mandated construction and operation requirements. Local ordinances may also govern use of the mobilehome park, tenant relocation requirements when a park is converted to a different use, and limitations on rent increases.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.10 1. Installation in Park

To be subject to all of the provisions of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10), a mobilehome must be installed or affixed in a mobilehome park. Under the MRL, a mobilehome park is "an area of land where two or more mobilehome sites are rented, or held out for rent, to accommodate mobilehomes used for human habitation." CC §798.4. This definition is similar to the definition of "mobilehome park" in the Mobilehome Parks Act (MPA) (Health & S C §§18200-18700; see Health & S C §18214), which governs health and safety requirements in mobilehome parks. The attorney can determine whether the mobilehome is located within a mobilehome park by contacting the local enforcement agency or the Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) because all mobilehome parks must receive an annual permit to operate (Health & S C §18506). All parks are listed on HCD's website, which differentiates mobilehome parks from special occupancy parks and provides other information. See Directory for web address.

The MRL does not define "recreational vehicle park," which is instead defined in the Recreational Vehicle Park Occupancy Law (RVPOL) (CC §§799.20-799.79), with a cross-reference to Health & S C §18652.39, where it is defined as an area of land, or a separate designated section within a mobilehome park, where two or more lots are rented or held out to rent to owners or users of recreational vehicles, park trailers, or tents. CC §799.30.

Mobilehomes are often found, however, in an area within a mobilehome park set aside for recreational vehicles or older travel trailers, or within an area that is not clearly defined. Although the courts have not clarified this situation, it appears that the mobilehome and its resident should be treated as being in a mobilehome park, rather than in a recreational vehicle park, because placement in that area was an act of the park's management rather than of the tenant. Note that many travel trailers in mobilehome parks have explicit protection under CC §798.3(b) and that placement of travel trailers and other recreational vehicles within a mobilehome park developed after January 1, 1982 (and after 75 percent of the spaces have been rented for the first time) is prohibited unless the recreational vehicles are located only within designated areas. CC §798.22.

Yet another situation that sometimes creates confusion concerning application of the MRL to residents or owners of mobilehomes, park trailers, or recreational vehicles in mobilehome parks or recreational vehicle parks arises when the residents and the property are subject to the Employee Housing Act (Health & S C §§17000-17062.5). The definition of "mobilehome park" in Health & S C §18214(b) excludes areas zoned for agricultural purposes where two or more lots are rented or leased to accommodate 12 or fewer manufactured homes, mobilehomes, or recreational vehicles used for housing agricultural employees. This exclusion expressly applies only to Health and Safety Code permit and fee requirements for owners. The Health & S C §18214 definition is not cross-referenced in the MRL definition, and the MRL would therefore apply in these situations. On the other hand, a similar exclusion exists in Health & S C §18215's definition of "recreational vehicle park," and because the RVPOL specifically cross-references Health & S C §18215 (CC §799.30), the RVPOL would not apply to these accommodations. A special rule, in CC §798.13, exempts from the MRL any areas owned, operated, or maintained by the state for the purpose of providing employee housing or space for a mobilehome owned or occupied by a state employee. However, 60 days' notice of termination for any reason is required.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.11 2. Installation on Individual Lot

Because the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) defines a mobilehome park as an area of land where two or more mobilehome sites are rented or held out for rent (CC §798.4), a single mobilehome placed on a single rented property is not subject to, or protected by, the MRL. CC §798.1.

The term "area of land" may seem rather vague, however, when the attorney encounters more complicated situations. For example, it may be more difficult to determine whether a mobilehome is located in a mobilehome park when it is situated on rented space in a conventional subdivision, cooperative, or condominium. If the development does not sell out immediately, however, and the developer rents two or more isolated lots to individuals with their own mobilehomes, the rented area arguably is a mobilehome park subject to the MRL. It can be even more complicated when two owners each own one lot within such a subdivision ("an area of land"), and they both rent their respective lots to persons who reside in their own mobilehomes. In addition, special rules in CC §§799-799.8 apply to subdivisions, cooperatives or condominiums for mobilehomes and resident-owned mobilehome parks. In such common-interest subdivisions, the mobilehome owner owns title to the land on which the mobilehome is located, owns shares in a stock cooperative with an exclusive occupancy right for the mobilehome space, or owns the airspace over the mobilehome space. Before these sections were enacted, it was unclear whether such developments were mobilehome parks at all because sites are not merely held out for rent.

Civil Code §799.1 provides that article 9 of the MRL governs the rights of a resident of a subdivision, cooperative, condominium for mobilehomes, or resident-owned mobilehome park, who has an ownership interest in the space, subdivision, cooperative, condominium, or resident-owned park in which his or her mobilehome is located or installed. A resident of a subdivision, cooperative, condominium for mobilehomes, or resident-owned mobilehome park, who merely rents or leases a space on which his or her mobilehome is located or installed, and who does not have an ownership interest in that subdivision, cooperative, condominium for mobilehomes, or resident-owned mobilehome park, is governed by articles 1-8 of the MRL (CC §§798-798.88).

There is no case law interpreting the applicability of the MRL to traditional common interest subdivisions, but it may be of some guidance to examine determinations of the Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) regarding applicability of the Mobilehome Parks Act (MPA) (Health & S C §§18200-18700; see Health & S C §18214) to mobilehome parks. As the administrative agency regulating the licensing and physical operation of mobilehome parks, the HCD considers such areas to be mobilehome parks subject to the MPA only if they include a significant number of rented spaces or lots. See also 77 Ops Cal Atty Gen 214 (1994). Application of the MRL should be analogous to HCD's application of the MPA.

Another potential issue impacting the rights of homeowners and park owners is the nature of the park owner's legal interest in the park real property. If the park owner is a ground lessee, its rights and ability to sublet to homeowners is limited by the terms of the ground lease. It may be merely a concessionaire. In Qualls v Lake Berryessa Enters., Inc. (1999) 76 CA4th 1277, 91 CR2d 143, the park operator was merely a licensee of the county, operating a park on land owned by the federal Bureau of Reclamation. This limited the rights of a homeowner to sue a neighbor for trespass and nuisance, but allowed the homeowner to sue the park operator for breach of contract when the park operator changed lot lines to accommodate the neighbor's larger mobilehome.

When interpreting other complicated situations, the attorney may wish to examine whether HCD required the owners to obtain a mobilehome park permit and appropriate zoning from the local government agency. HCD commonly issues such orders when an owner leases space for two or more mobilehomes on a single lot or on adjoining lots outside a subdivision for mobilehomes governed by CC §§799-799.8. Attorneys may order departmental determinations by mail from the office of the General Counsel, Department of Housing and Community Development. See Directory for address.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.12 C. Parties to Rental Agreement

§6.12 C. Parties to Rental Agreement

Once an attorney decides that a residence is a "mobilehome" (see §§6.3-6.8) located in a "mobilehome park" (see §§6.9-6.11), ascertaining whether the tenancy is subject to all provisions of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) is based on what parties entered into the rental agreement with the mobilehome park management. As defined in the MRL, a "[t]enancy is the right … to the use of a site within a mobilehome park on which to locate, maintain, and occupy a mobilehome." CC §798.12. A "homeowner," whose legal relationship with the park management is subject to the MRL, is defined by CC §798.9 as "a person who has a tenancy in a mobilehome park under a rental agreement." In some situations, a tenant's residency in a mobilehome will distinguish that tenant as the homeowner, regardless of actual ownership of the residence. In other situations, the actual owner of the mobilehome will be considered to be the homeowner, no matter who resides in it. Consider the following three situations:

(1) Resident owner of mobilehome. When the owner of a mobilehome leases space from mobilehome park management on which to reside in the mobilehome, the legal relationship between the owner and the management is subject to the MRL. The resident owner is a "homeowner" as defined by CC §798.9, who has a "tenancy" as defined by CC §798.12.

(2) Nonresident owner of mobilehome. When a mobilehome owner rents space from mobilehome park management, and sublets the mobilehome to another person who resides in it, the legal relationship between the nonresident owner and the management is subject to the MRL. The owner is a "homeowner" under CC §798.9 and has a "tenancy" under a rental agreement with the park management as defined by CC §798.12. Because the nonresident owner would be required to move the mobilehome if evicted from the park, he or she would be entitled to the special notice and pleading requirements of CC §§798.55-798.60 regarding termination of the tenancy.

NOTE: In this situation, the actual resident of the mobilehome is a "resident" as defined in CC §798.11, but is not a "homeowner" as defined in CC §798.9. A resident who is not a homeowner is entitled to many of the protections of the MRL, but the special restrictions on termination of the tenancy apply only to the rental agreement between the park management and the homeowner, and not to the agreement between the resident and the homeowner. If eviction of the resident is necessary, the park management must rely on the nonresident homeowner to evict the tenant or, when a notice to the homeowner does not result in that requested action, it may terminate the tenancy of the nonresident homeowner, as permitted under CC §798.56, in order to evict the resident.

(3) Nonowner resident of mobilehome. Any person who enters into an agreement with mobilehome park management to "locate, maintain, and occupy" a mobilehome and mobilehome site is a "homeowner" as defined in CC §798.9, regardless of the actual ownership of the mobilehome. Note, however, that management has the right to require that a mobilehome purchaser be the registered owner of the mobilehome (CC §798.75). Otherwise, the purchaser may be an "unlawful occupant." Thus, when a person who is not the registered owner of the mobilehome enters into an agreement with the park management, if permitted under management policy, to "locate, maintain, and occupy" the mobilehome, he or she is a "homeowner" entitled to the full protection of the MRL, including the special controls on termination of the tenancy. To prevent subleasing, many park management attorneys draft a rental agreement clause that requires at least one prospective homeowner of a sited mobilehome to take title as a registered owner and to reside in the mobilehome on a permanent or full-time basis, except as permitted by CC §798.23.5 (see §6.61) in cases of "medical emergency" or "medical treatment."

NOTE: However, when a nonowner resident rents a mobilehome from the park management, the legal relationship between the resident and the management is not subject to the special eviction requirements of the MRL because no tenancy has been created as defined in CC §798.12. A "tenancy" is defined in CC §798.12 as the right of a homeowner to "locate, maintain, and occupy" a mobilehome, not merely the right to reside in one. Eviction of a resident who leases both the mobilehome and the space would be governed by conventional landlord-tenant notices and rights (CCP §§1161-1179a), because such a resident does not bear the additional burden of owning the mobilehome and having to move it on eviction.

PRACTICE TIP: Because some courts may not distinguish between a nonowner resident who rents a mobilehome with the space and a resident who leases only a mobilehome from the park, many attorneys still provide the notice and follow the cause standards set forth in the MRL. The MRL procedure for termination of tenancy must be followed if the resident is leasing the mobilehome from the mobilehome park owner and has entered into a rental agreement that provides for "good cause" termination under CC §798.56. On termination and eviction generally, see §§6.62-6.84.

Rent for the mobilehome is considered to be rent for the lot it occupies, i.e., the premises. Health & S C §18214(a). Thus, the park management may not circumvent any locally imposed rent ceiling under a rent control ordinance by purporting to "split" or separately charge rent for the lot and mobilehome. On the other hand, a mobilehome park landlord's rental of a "park-owned" mobilehome may not fall within the ambit of the local rent control law if the ordinance protects only mobilehome homeowners. See §6.32.

© The Regents of the University of California

III. OTHER LAWS AFFECTING MOBILEHOMES

§6.13 A. State Legislation Specific to Mobilehomes

In addition to the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10), several other state laws regulate various aspects of mobilehomes. See §6.1. The most important of these laws are the Mobilehome Parks Act (MPA) (Health & S C §§18200-18700) and the Special Occupancy Parks Act (Health & S C §§18860-18874), which regulate the construction and operation of mobilehome parks and recreational vehicle parks, the requirements for installing or affixing mobilehomes inside and outside of mobilehome parks, and standards for "substandard" mobilehomes, accessory structures, and park common areas. Regulations of the Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) under the MPA are found in 25 Cal Code Regs §§1000-1758. Other legislation regulating mobilehomes includes the Manufactured Housing Act of 1980 (Health & S C §§18000-18153), which regulates the registration, titling, and sales of mobilehomes. The preemptive nature of the HCD statutes was reaffirmed in County of Santa Cruz v Waterhouse (2005) 127 CA4th 1483, 26 CR3d 543. See §6.15. For another detailed discussion of the preemptive nature of HCD and the state's authority, see Sequoia Park Assocs. v County of Sonoma (2009) 176 CA4th 1270, 98 CR3d 669.

In addition, local fire departments and districts may enforce local fire codes within a park, including ordinances related to fire hydrants, parking, weed abatement and, starting January 1, 2010, combustible brush and vegetation that create an imminent fire hazard, hazardous material storage, and open fires or burning. Health & S C §18691; Stats 2009, ch 586.

Mobilehome owners and mobilehome park operators are subject to the Methamphetamine Contaminated Property Clean-Up Act of 2005 (Health & S C §§25400.10-25400.47) and are responsible for the costs of remediation of methamphetamine storage areas and laboratories. Health & S C §§25400.19-25400.47.

Requirements governing mobilehome park operations also may be found in other codes. A number of Vehicle Code sections apply to mobilehomes and, thus, to mobilehome park operations. See, e.g., Veh C §21107.9, which permits cities and counties to impose and enforce speed limits in mobilehome parks after complying with specified procedures, including posted notices. Certain rules governing the conversion of mobilehome parks to another use may also apply. See, e.g., Govt C §§65863.7, 66427.4, especially a provision in Govt C §65863.7(j) that triggers the protection of the MPA (Health & S C §§18200-18700) if a park closes or changes use as a result of an order by an enforcement agency.

Under Pub Util C §739.5, park owners who submeter their residents for utility services may not charge a rate that exceeds the rate that would be applicable if the resident were receiving utilities directly from the utility provider. A state Public Utilities Commission (PUC) administrative decision on utility pass-through fees was acknowledged by a court of appeal in Rainbow Disposal Co. v Escondido Mobilehome Rent Review Bd. (1998) 64 CA4th 1159, 75 CR2d 746, as the controlling authority for a rent board decision that denied rent increases based on certain utility-related capital costs; the PUC decision held that the mastermetering discount to park owners who submeter their residents under Pub Util C §739.5 covered the owners' costs of maintenance and improvements related to the utility systems. See also Hillsboro Props. v PUC (2003) 108 CA4th 246, 256, 133 CR2d 343. In addition, in 2004, the PUC in Yucaipa Mobilehome Residents' Ass'n v Knollwood Mobilehome Estate, Ltd. (CPUC Decision 04-05-056, Oct. 28, 2004; http://www.cpuc.ca.gov/published/final_decision/37078.htm) overruled the local rent review commission and ordered that the $111,445 in trenching costs for a trench containing water lines (not subject to the PUC) and master metered electric and gas lines (subject to PUC rules) be apportioned out of the rent increase pass-through because the latter costs were included in the approved utility fees as costs related to the repair and maintenance of the submetered gas and electric utility systems. It also prescribed the method of allocation by noting that the trench was three feet deep rather than two feet deep because of the electric line requirements, and therefore the electrical line work caused the bulk of the costs (at pp. 16-17). The park resident association's request for attorney fees was denied because fees are authorized only for intervenors under Pub Util C §§1801-1812 (at pp. 20-21). Additional clarity as to costs which may be passed through in rent occurred as a result of a two-phase PUC hearing process, resulting in Decision 04-04-043 (costs for serving the common areas, the submeter, the pedestal, and other specified costs) and Decision 04-11-033.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.14 B. Landlord-Tenant Statutes

The extent to which state statutes governing conventional landlord-tenant relationships apply to mobilehome park tenancies has not been conclusively established, although their application usually appears to be appropriate. Such laws include not only those beneficial to tenants (e.g., statutes on "repairing and deducting" (CC §1942) and "lock out" (CC §789.3)), but also those beneficial to landlords (e.g., abandonment procedure (CC §1951.3). Security deposits for mobilehome tenancies are governed by CC §798.39 (see §6.44), and the abandonment of a mobilehome in a mobilehome park is governed by CC §798.61 (see §6.84). The applicability of the retaliatory eviction law (CC §1942.5) to mobilehome park residencies was firmly established by Rich v Schwab (1998) 63 CA4th 803, 75 CR2d 170 (see §§6.17, 6.72).

In Palmer v Agee (1978) 87 CA3d 377, 150 CR 841, the court held that the 60-day notice procedure of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) preempted the 3-day, pay-or-quit procedure of CCP §§1159-1179a. This decision, however, should not be relied on to support the MRL's preemption of other tenant remedies. The basis of the decision was the court's interpretation of the legislature's intent in the MRL to protect mobilehome park tenants. 87 CA3d at 384. The court found that elimination of a tenant protection, such as the lengthy opportunity to cure a rent default provided in the MRL, was contrary to such an intent. The court noted that the MRL is a remedial statute, which must be liberally construed to protect its beneficiaries: mobilehome owners. In 1979, however, the legislature overruled the interpretation of the court of appeal by amending CC §798.56 to provide that the homeowner need be given only 3 days to cure a default in the payment of rent, utilities, and reasonable incidental service charges. (The legal owner, the registered owner (if different from the homeowner), and junior lienholders all have 30 days in which to cure the homeowner's default.) Even if the default is not cured within the 3 days, however, the homeowner still must be given 60 days' notice to sell or remove, at the homeowner's election, the mobilehome from the park. CC §798.55(b)(1). Both the 3-day and 60-day notices may be given at the same time. CC §798.56(e).

There are several other reasons for concluding that general landlord-tenant statutes also apply to tenancies subject to the MRL. First, as for any statute, the MRL can preempt only matters that are explicitly covered by its provisions. Areas of law that the MRL does not address (or that do not conflict with its provisions) must be considered to apply to the mobilehome tenancy relationship. Mobilepark W. Homeowners Ass'n v Escondido Mobilepark W. (1995) 35 CA4th 32, 41 CR2d 393; Gregory v City of San Juan Capistrano (1983) 142 CA3d 72, 191 CR 47, overruled on other grounds in Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 686 n43, 209 CR 682.

Second, cases in which the courts have interpreted statutes governing the landlord-tenant relationship distinguish between conventional tenancies and mobilehome tenancies only when a specific distinction is required by statute. See, e.g., Rich v Schwab, supra, a retaliatory eviction case in which the court held that the retaliatory eviction protections of CC §1942.5 applied to MRL tenancies because mobilehome parks were not explicitly excluded from §1942.5 and because the MRL is intended to provide more, rather than less, protection to mobilehome park tenants, and Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 743 n11, 180 CR 496, a case concerning discrimination against families with children in which the court distinguished between conventional housing and mobilehome parks by acknowledging the "adults-only" rules in the MRL.

Third, it is generally assumed that the legislature is aware of other statutes when it enacts new laws. To preempt other laws, the legislature would have had to address them directly in the MRL, by clarifying or modifying their provisions in relation to the new mobilehome requirements. In fact, to eliminate any ambiguity, the legislature provided in CC §798.60 that the statutory scheme in the MRL governing termination for cause "shall not affect any rights or proceedings" relating to unlawful detainer (see CCP §§1159-1179a) "except as otherwise provided herein." The legislature also modified conventional lease and termination notice requirements because of the special burdens of mobilehome ownership.

Another example of this lack of clarity is the questionable applicability of CC §1946.7, which became operative September 27, 2008. The section was added to the general landlord-tenant laws and allows a tenant who is a victim of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking to provide a written notice of lease termination within 60 days of specified court orders or police reports and be liable only for a maximum of 30 days' rent from the date of the written notice, unless the unit is re-rented during that period. While it would be consistent with the remedial nature of the MRL to acknowledge the special needs of the victims in these circumstances, the MRL expressly requires 60 days' notice of termination (CC §798.59), and the new law does not expressly state that it is applicable to MRL notices. On the other hand, CC §798.59 specifically addresses only the time for a homeowner notice of termination; it does not expressly specify the obligation to pay rent for up to 30 days after providing that notice. Ultimately, clarification on this law's applicability to MRL homeowners may require further action by the legislature or a judicial interpretation.

Code of Civil Procedure §1161(4) was also amended, effective September 27, 2008, to add a provision that a person's commission of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking of a resident on the premises creates a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof that the person has committed a nuisance and is subject to the 3-day notice to quit authorized by §1161(4). Given the clear specificity and limitations on the permitted grounds for eviction in CC §798.56, this amendment likely does not create a new basis for eviction under the MRL.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.14A C. Antidiscrimination Statutes

A panoply of fair housing laws, both federal and state, that prohibit discrimination in housing accommodations apply to mobilehome owners and park establishments. See, e.g., U.S. v Plaza Mobile Estates (CD Cal 2003) 273 F Supp 2d 1084. See generally chap 2. These laws protect a number of classes of individuals, such as disabled persons (see §§2.19-2.28), and also require mobilehome owners and parks to make reasonable accommodations that promote the disabled person's full use and enjoyment of the premises. See, e.g., Jankowski Lee & Assocs. v Cisneros (7th Cir 1996) 91 F3d 891, cited with approval in U.S. v California Mobile Home Park Mgmt. Co. (9th Cir 1997) 107 F3d 1374, 1381.

A district court's dismissal of an action that alleged, inter alia, discrimination and retaliation based on the plaintiff's gender, and that was therefore subject to the federal Fair Housing Act, 42 USC §§3601-3631, was reversed in Edwards v Marin Park, Inc. (9th Cir 2004) 356 F3d 1058. The district court had held that the plaintiff's complaint failed to allege her engagement in a specifically protected activity with adequate specificity. The court of appeals held that her allegation that defendant "targeted … a disproportionate number of women" met the relaxed pleading standards of Fed R Civ P 8(a) for pleading discrimination claims, even though she was expressly seeking relief for retaliation, not discrimination. 356 F3d at 1062.

Civil Code §798.20 prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, marital status, national origin, ancestry, familial status (except for parks designated for seniors), source of income, disability, or sexual orientation for membership in any private club or organization that is a condition for tenancy in a park. CC §798.20(a). Sex discrimination includes discrimination on the basis of pregnancy, childbirth, or medical conditions related to pregnancy or childbirth, gender, gender identity and gender-related appearance and behavior. Govt C §12926(p); Pen C §422.56.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.15 D. Local Ordinances Regulating Mobilehomes

§6.15 D. Local Ordinances Regulating Mobilehomes

Currently, more than 100 local jurisdictions have enacted mobilehome rent regulation or rent mediation ordinances (see §7.11) and ordinances governing displacement of residents, relocation payments for residents, management requirements, and other requirements or restrictions related to local public health, safety, and welfare. These ordinances may affect more than just the amount of rent that park managements may charge; they often govern other areas of the landlord-tenant relationship as well, such as the grounds for eviction (see §§7.53-7.76). Practitioners should be sure to check for local ordinances applicable to a given mobilehome park.

Some cities and counties have enacted ordinances regulating the physical operation of a park which are directly or indirectly governed by the Mobilehome Parks Act (MPA) (Health & S C §§18200-18700) and the Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) regulations. These ordinances relate to issues such as paving roads or driveways, manufactured home size and siding standards, and set-backs or separations between manufactured homes. In County of Santa Cruz v Waterhouse (2005) 127 CA4th 1483, 26 CR3d 543, the court of appeal held that a county ordinance regulating the installation of two-story manufactured homes in a mobilehome park was preempted by the applicable HCD laws. It also held that localities were limited to the authority specifically enumerated in Health & S C §18300. Local ordinances regulating change of use or conversion of parks to resident ownership have been successfully challenged because of state preemption. See §6.51.

The decisions challenging and interpreting rent control ordinances fall into several categories and depend on whether they are facial challenges or as-applied challenges. The as-applied challenges may deal with due process violations in administration, ripeness, illegal pass-throughs, or other federal or state law violations.

In Yee v Mobilehome Park Rental Review Bd. (1998) 62 CA4th 1409, 73 CR2d 227, e.g., a court of appeal upheld a rent control ordinance of the City of Escondido and denied compensation to a mobilehome park owner for an alleged regulatory taking, reaffirming that rent control ordinances are like zoning and do not create a compensable taking unless all beneficial uses of a property are denied. Rental agreements for mobilehomes located in mobilehome parks are exempt from local rent control ordinances if they meet certain criteria. CC §798.17. Under CC §798.21, a further exemption from local rent control is provided for mobilehome space located in a mobilehome park that is not the principal residence of the homeowner and has not been rented by the homeowner to another party, unless the homeowner, a realtor, or a mobilehome dealer actively and in good faith markets the mobilehome for sale.

A facial challenge in Hacienda Valley Mobile Estates v City of Morgan Hill (9th Cir 2003) 353 F3d 651 claimed a "taking" because, with vacancy control of rents, the seller of a mobilehome allegedly obtained a "premium" in value because the government restricted rents available to the buyer. The district court held that a premium challenge was a facial rather than an as-applied challenge, relying on Levald Inc. v City of Palm Desert (9th Cir 1993) 998 F2d 680. The court of appeals held that if the case were a facial challenge, it would be barred by the statute of limitations because the case was brought nine years after the ordinance was enacted. It also held that the as-applied taking challenge was not ripe under the Williamson County test (Williamson County Reg'l Planning Comm'n v Hamilton Bank (1985) 473 US 172, 186, 87 L Ed 2d 126, 139, 105 S Ct 3108) because the plaintiff had not pursued state remedies and had not demonstrated that recourse to these remedies would be futile. See also Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v City of Carson (9th Cir 2004) 353 F3d 824, for a similar ripeness decision, and Ventura Mobilehome Communities Owners Ass'n v City of San Buenaventura (9th Cir 2004) 371 F3d 1046, which found lack of ripeness in both the facial and as-applied challenges, dismissed the plaintiff's due process claim as a disguised taking claim, and dismissed the equal protection claims because it found that the ordinance was rationally related to a legitimate state interest. Whether or not federal or state courts are the correct forums for facial or as-applied challenges of a rent control ordinance is an issue that spawned a series of federal and state court lawsuits between one jurisdiction and one park owner, culminating in a decision in Los Altos El Granada Investors v City of Capitola (9th Cir 2009) 583 F3d 674. The court held that a litigant may reserve federal claims for hearing in federal court and that a state court rejection of those claims does not have preclusive effect on the federal court action.

The opposite result initially occurred in Cashman v City of Cotati (9th Cir 2004) 374 F3d 887. Plaintiff park owners challenged a recently enacted rent control ordinance with vacancy controls as a facially unconstitutional regulatory taking because it did not substantially advance the city's interests, since park tenants could impose a premium on a sale price based on the rent control ordinance and then keep the premium. The district court rejected this assertion, and also concluded that the facial challenge was barred by the statute of limitations because the recently amended ordinance had the "same effective and operative provisions" as the older ordinance. The Ninth Circuit reversed, finding that the recently amended ordinance was a separate, new enactment It thus held that the case was timely filed. It also held that the ordinance was facially unconstitutional because it did not provide a mechanism to prevent the capture of a premium, and that the city did not present sufficient evidence showing that the premium did not occur, thus not demonstrating that it was substantially advancing a legitimate government interest. Despite the Cashman decision, the court in MHC Fin. Ltd. Partnership v City of San Rafael (ND Cal, Dec. 5, 2006, No. C00-3785) 2006 US Dist Lexis 89195, in rejecting the City's summary judgment motion and allowing for further hearings on both regulatory takings and private takings theories, found that a similar "premium" may violate the park owner's substantive due process rights. The court also ruled against the City's defenses of res judicata and statute of limitations because the court found that the City had made substantive changes to its ordinance.

Later, in Lingle v Chevron U.S.A., Inc. (2005) 544 US 528, 161 L Ed 2d 876, 125 S Ct 2074, the Supreme Court held that a Fifth Amendment taking no longer could be based on whether the government regulations "substantially advance a legitimate government interest." This takings test was overruled in the context of regulatory takings because, as commonly applied, it did not address the effect of a regulation on private property but, instead, only its underlying validity. 161 L Ed 2d at 891. As a result of the Lingle decision, and in response to Cotati's petition for rehearing and rehearing en banc, the Ninth Circuit withdrew its prior opinion and affirmed the District Court's decision. See Cashman v City of Cotati (9th Cir 2005) 415 F3d 1027. See also Galland v City of Clovis (2001) 24 C4th 1003, 103 CR2d 711 (discussed in §§7.14-7.14A; supreme court restricted park owners' ability to recover under 42 USC §1983 for lost rent and other damages resulting from due process violations). See also Los Altos El Granada Investors v City of Capitola, supra.

Since Lingle v Chevron U.S.A., Inc., supra, several decisions have addressed both facial and as-applied constitutionality issues and takings. In Stardust Mobile Estates, LLC v City of San Buenaventura (2007) 147 CA4th 1170, 55 CR3d 218, the court dismissed the takings claims by citing Lingle but also independently finding that there was no regulatory taking under the three-prong test of Penn Central Transp. Co. v New York City (1978) 438 US 104, 57 L Ed 2d 631, 98 S Ct 2646. In addition, while the court upheld a 50 percent of CPI rent indexing standard, it did remand for consideration of whether facts existed for a modification of the base rents, generally known as a "Vega adjustment." 147 CA4th at 1191. See also Vega v City of W. Hollywood (1990) 223 CA3d 1342, 273 CR 243; Kavanau v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1997) 16 C4th 761, 784, 66 CR2d 672; MHC Fin. Ltd. Partnership v City of San Rafael (ND Cal, Dec. 5, 2006, No. C00-3785) 2006 US Dist Lexis 89195 (distinguishing Lingle to find triable substantive due process claim). For further discussion of "as-applied" due process challenges under Kavanau, see §7.14.

In a subsequent decision in a companion case to MHC Fin. Ltd. Partnership, supra, also unpublished, MHC Fin. Ltd. Partnership v City of San Rafael (ND Cal, Jan. 29, 2008, No. C00-03785) 2008 WL 440282, the court avoided the Lingle test by, among other things, finding that there was a substantial loss in value functionally equivalent to an unconstitutional taking as result of the rent control ordinance. It also held that the ordinance violated the takings clause protection espoused in Kelo v City of New London (2005) 545 US 469, 162 L Ed 2d 439, 125 S Ct 2655, by virtue of the transfer of premium value to the residents. The 98-page opinion also allowed arguments as to whether there were due process violations, characterizing this issue in the Lingle decision as "dicta," but ruled that the San Rafael ordinance did not violate the federal due process clause.

In Equity Lifestyle Props., Inc. v County of San Luis Obispo (9th Cir 2008) 548 F3d 1184, the appeals court rejected a claim related to a rent indexing formula of 60 percent of CPI, upheld vacancy controls, and denied various takings, due process, and equal protection claims. The takings (as-applied) claim was rejected as not being ripe because Equity Lifestyle had not first attempted, under Kavanau, to obtain relief through the state process to compensate for rent control losses. The facial challenge was rejected for lack of standing because the injury was suffered by the previous landowner, not the plaintiff, and because the claim was filed outside the statute of limitations. The substantive due process claim was rejected because the court found that the rent control ordinance was "rationally related to a legitimate public purpose." 548 F3d at 1194. However, in the 2008 US District Court decision in MHC Fin. Ltd.

Partnership, supra, the court rejected the Kavanau adjustment as being an inadequate remedy and held that the plaintiff park owner should not be required to seek this or any other state court remedy prior to filing the federal claims, holding that the remedy was both futile and inadequate as it did not provide for a fair return. (For additional discussion of state remedies and the Kavanau adjustment, see §6.51.)

In Manufactured Home Communities, Inc. v County of San Luis Obispo (2008) 167 CA4th 705, 84 CR3d 367, the state court companion case to Equity Lifestyle Props. Inc. v County of San Luis Obispo, supra, the court held that the 12-month leases that allowed for rent increases upon 90 days' notice were facially valid because the lease provision expressly included the caveat "as allowed by state and local laws," which the court held incorporated the local rent control ordinance's rent increase restrictions. The court declined to review the lower court's determination that plaintiff MHC's takings claims were not ripe because MHC had not pursued the hardship remedies under the ordinance, but it reversed and remanded due to the failure of the rent board to allow MHC to cross-examine witnesses at the rent board hearing on MHC's proposed rent increase.

In MHC Operating Limited Partnership v City of San Jose (2003) 106 CA4th 204, 130 CR2d 564, plaintiff MHC, owner of Westwinds Manufactured Home Community, claimed it was denied a fair return because the hearing officer misinterpreted and misapplied the rent control ordinance to the evidence. The court established the standard of review as a "substantial evidence test" because no fundamental vested right was affected by the administrative hearing, and exercised independent review of the ordinance interpretations by the administrative hearing officer. It accorded the hearing officer deference with respect to the officer's interpretation of the ordinance. It then found that there was substantial evidence for the hearing officer's determination, and that MHC failed to carry its burden of showing that the hearing officer's construction of the ordinance was neither reasonable nor lawful. 106 CA4th at 220.

A second round of litigation involving the same parties was initiated by MHC in federal court, alleging eight "counts" of substantive and procedural defects. The District Court dismissed or declined to exercise jurisdiction over all the "counts," and in MHC, Inc. v City of San Jose (9th Cir 2005) 420 F3d 1022, the Court of Appeals affirmed. It held that the fair return challenges were barred by res judicata of the state court decision (citing San Remo Hotel, LP v City & County of San Francisco (2005) 545 US 323, 162 L Ed 2d 315, 125 S Ct 2491) and that other claims were unripe (because MHC had not pursued and exhausted its administrative remedies) or were barred by the statute of limitations.

In Karrin v Ocean-Aire Mobile Home Estates (1991) 1 CA4th 1066, 2 CR2d 581, an Oxnard mobilehome rent control ordinance allowed park owners to pass through capital improvement costs (with the consent of more than 50 percent of the tenants). The court held this provision to be invalid because it conflicted with CC §798.31, which prohibits owners from charging tenants "a fee for other than rent, utilities, and incidental reasonable charges for services actually rendered." The majority held that the park owners could have sought a rent increase to cover capital expenses in lieu of seeking the pass-through. Rent stabilization ordinances commonly provide landlords a means for recovering capital improvement costs. See §7.35.

In Hillsboro Props. v PUC (2003) 108 CA4th 246, 133 CR2d 343, the city of Novato allowed a rent increase to include the pass-through of costs related to trenching and conduit for streetlights and $23,884 related to the repair and replacement of electrical pedestals. A tenant appealed this to the PUC, which held that it had jurisdiction and that the pass-through of these costs violated Pub Util C §739 because the tenants were being charged more for utilities than direct metered consumers (e.g., the cost of submetered utilities should include utility repairs). See http://www.cpuc.ca.gov/Published/Final_decision/9424.htm. See also Directory on how to obtain PUC Decisions. The appellate court held that the PUC decision and order did not usurp the city's rights under its rent control ordinance or constitutional authority and that the PUC had jurisdiction under Pub Util C §739 to review the allowed charges and to determine whether or not they should be included in the discounted utility rates (as opposed to a separate amortized fee or in increased rent), and to order the park to provide refunds.

See also Morgan v City of Chino (2004) 115 CA4th 1192, 9 CR3d 784, in which the court held that due process and the city's rent control ordinance merely require the city to take into account the costs related to capital improvements (along with other expenses and income) when determining whether the owner is receiving a fair rate of return, rather than granting a rent increase to allow recovery of the cost of a capital improvement and a fair rate of return on that expenditure. It specifically held that if existing rents are adequate to provide a fair rate of return on the overall development, even after a capital expenditure, then there is no due process obligation to raise rents to cover the cost of that improvement.

In Robinson v City of Yucaipa (1994) 28 CA4th 1506, 34 CR2d 291, the court held that CC §798.31 did not preempt an ordinance that allowed mobilehome park owners to pass capital improvement costs through to tenants as part of their rent rather than as a separate fee. The court distinguished Karrin on the basis that the ordinance in that case expressly provided that such charges were not to be considered part of the rent and were to be billed separately.

In Cacho v Boudreau (2007) 40 C4th 341, 53 CR3d 43, the supreme court ruled that the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §798.49(d)(4)) does not preempt local rent control ordinances to the extent that they allow mobilehome park owners to separately charge park residents for property taxes imposed on park land.

See also H.N. & Frances C. Berger Found. v City of Escondido (2005) 127 CA4th 1, 25 CR3d 19, in which the court reviewed a rent board decision to approve a rent increase based on averaging three different rent increase rates proposed by experts. The court held that this formula was invalid, not because of the formula itself, but because two of the three rates were not within the range of reasonable rents based on a fair rate of return standard.

In Village Trailer Park, Inc. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2002) 101 CA4th 1133, 124 CR2d 857, the court of appeal ruled that the local rent control board was authorized to determine whether the park's long-term leases were subject to, or exempt from, the rent control ordinance. Even though it was a question of law interpreting the state MRL statute, the initial determination could be made by the board, with judicial review of its decision. The court also approved several remedies and punishments, including determining that the landlord is not entitled to advance notice of the rent control ordinance violations before being assessed for violations, that the board could award the tenant interest on the excess rents collected by the park, and that the board could withhold annual rent increases to induce the landlord to comply with the ordinance.

The Village Trailer Park decision also invalidated the park's effort to add an arbitration clause "with respect to the provisions of this agreement and tenancy in the community" to the lease in order to avoid access to, or oversight by, the rent control board. The court held that not only would this allow every landlord to "announce a personal exemption from the law," undermining the legitimate exercise of local government authority, but the local ordinance voids any provision in a rental agreement which purports to waive a tenant's right to pursue a claim under the ordinance. An arbitration clause in a conventional rental housing lease, its ostensible authority being CC §§1942.1 and 1953, was invalidated in Jaramillo v JH Real Estate Partners, Inc. (2003) 111 CA4th 394, 3 CR3d 525, the court of appeal holding that the clause was both unconscionable and a contract of adhesion despite public policy in favor of arbitration as a speedy and less expensive means of dispute resolution. See §1.30.

Hillsboro Props. v City of Rohnert Park (2006) 138 CA4th 379, 41 CR3d 441 addressed remedies when a rent control ordinance is found unconstitutional. The park owner sought a rent increase as compensation for rent increases lost during a period in which the ordinance was in effect. The city's ordinance allowed rent increases to achieve a fair rate of return, but plaintiff only claimed an increase for the retroactive loss under the so-called "Kavanau adjustment" (Kavanau v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1997) 16 C4th 761, 66 CR2d 672; see §§7.14, 7.14B). The court of appeal sustained the city's refusal to consider the adjustment because plaintiff did not prove he was denied a fair rate of return. See also Equity Lifestyle Props., Inc. v County of San Luis Obispo (9th Cir 2007) 505 F3d 860 (discussion of due process adequacy of the Kavanau adjustment). For further discussion, see Baar, Fair Return Standards Under Mobilehome Park Space Rent Controls: Conceptual and Practical Approaches, 29 CEB Real Prop L Rep 333 (Sept. 2006).

In Griffith v County of Santa Cruz (2000) 79 CA4th 1318, 94 CR2d 801, the court of appeal upheld a local rent control ordinance that regulated recreational vehicle parks. The park owner alleged that the statutory ban on commercial rent control applied because a recreational vehicle park was a commercial activity and CC §1954.25 explicitly exempted only mobilehome parks. The court held that "mobilehome" in the MRL explicitly included "recreational vehicles" and that the Recreational Vehicle Park Occupancy Law (RVPOL) (CC §§799.20-799.79) treated 9-month recreational vehicle park residents like MRL homeowners. Therefore, the park was more like a residential activity than a commercial activity.

In addition to the traditional facial and as-applied challenges, rent litigation unsuccessfully challenged the procedural aspects of the adoption and amendment of a rent control ordinance. In MHC Fin. Limited Partnership Two v City of Santee (2005) 125 CA4th 1372, 23 CR3d 622, the court of appeals reversed a trial court decision dealing with the ordinance's adoption. The rent control ordinance was adopted by the City Council after presentation of an initiative petition, and then amended with retroactive effect by the Council to correct inadvertent and insignificant errors. The Court found that adoption of the second ordinance did not violate any applicable laws and that the council had the authority to amend the legislatively-adopted ordinance even though it arose from an initiative petition.

In TG Oceanside, LP v City of Oceanside (2007) 156 CA4th 1355, 68 CR3d 320, the local rent control ordinance allowed three options for rent increases:

(1) A "permissive adjustment" based on the Consumer Price Index (CPI);

(2) An "alternative adjustment" based on net operating income; or

(3) A "special adjustment," which a park owner could seek if it contends that neither of the above options provides a just and reasonable return on investment and if it adequately rebuts the presumption that the other options provide a just and reasonable return.

In TG Oceanside, LP, the park owner did not attempt to rebut the adequacy of the permissive or alternative adjustments, but merely sought the special adjustment based on an assertion that it was entitled to a "return on investment" standard rather than one based on costs of operation. The court held that the first two options met constitutional requirements for local rent regulation, and that the park owner was required to comply with the ordinance to prove their inadequacy rather than merely substituting a different return-on-investment standard.

In Guggenheim v City of Goleta (9th Cir 2009) 582 F3d 996, the court ruled that the park owners were entitled to just compensation as a result of a facial challenge. The court found ripeness in favor of the claimants because it held that, in a facial challenge, there was no requirement to actually seek and be denied just compensation in state court, noting that this requirement often results in a ruling on the merits in state court, which has a preclusive effect on a later federal court action. The court also ruled that the ordinance produced a detrimental economic impact on the claimants, and it characterized the government action as being a "discount" that was a form of "expense-shifting" in which a few persons provide an otherwise public benefit to many other private individuals. The court rejected, after significant analysis, the due process and equal protection claims by the park owners and remanded for further proceedings to determine compensation for the taking.

For further discussion regarding local rent control ordinances and utility rates, see §§6.32, 6.43.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.15A E. Public Rental Assistance Programs

Many park owners have sought and obtained funds from various federal, state, and local programs for construction or rehabilitation loans or grants, operating cost reductions, or rent write-downs. All of these programs generally include special restrictions on rents, on types of renters who are eligible, on grounds for lease termination and eviction, and other procedures that otherwise are included in the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10). Some of these residency restrictions resulting from affordable housing programs have been challenged as being inconsistent with other laws generally applicable to specific housing activities. However, because of the overriding purposes of the affordable housing finance laws, they generally have been upheld. See, e.g., City of Oceanside v McKenna (1989) 215 CA3d 1420, 264 CR 275 (owner-occupancy restriction upheld); Barrientos v 1801-1825 Morton LLC (9th Cir 2009) 583 F3d 1197 (HUD rules related to property owners opting out of Section 8 program and allowing rents to exceed rent control levels do not preempt local rent controls).

Some of the state programs that have financed mobilehome parks include the Mobilehome Park Purchase Fund (Health & S C §§50780-50786.5), the Rental Housing Construction Program (Health & S C §§50735-50771.3), the Multifamily Housing Program (Health & S C §§50675-50675.14), and the Farmworker Housing Grant Program (Health & S C §§50517.5-50517.11). The most common sources of local government funding for mobilehome parks and their residents, in order to provide replacement housing for relocation or to increase the supply of affordable housing, are city or county redevelopment agencies. See Health & S C §33334.2(e)(10), and the time restrictions in Health & S C §§33334.3 and 33413.

PRACTICE TIP: It is critical for management to include the applicable terms and conditions of the transactional documents or CC&Rs in the lease or rental agreement, or management will not be able to terminate the tenancy of a resident who is not eligible for the assistance or is violating any other provision of the assistance (such as leasing out the premises). See §6.67.

© The Regents of the University of California

IV. DECISIONAL LAW GOVERNING MOBILEHOME TENANCIES

§6.16 A. Implied Warranties

The implied warranty of habitability doctrine, first enunciated in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704, is discussed in detail in §§3.16-3.48. The decision in Green clearly applies to the landlord-tenant relationship under the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL). The problem of habitability arises less frequently in mobilehome parks because the residence is usually owned by the tenant, but habitability issues do arise with respect to the park management's responsibility to maintain common areas, to provide utilities, and to deliver other services affecting quiet enjoyment, peaceable possession of the premises, or necessities of life. See Secretary of HUD v Layfield (1978) 88 CA3d Supp 28, 152 CR 342, and Knight v Hallsthammar (1981) 29 C3d 46, 171 CR 707, in which the courts extended the warranty of habitability to common areas. Habitability issues (often called "failure to maintain" cases in the industry) could arise in a mobilehome park, for example, as a result of park management's failure to remedy health and safety violations promptly or reasonably (e.g., leaking effluent, improper drainage from the lots of adjoining mobilehome owners or residents, utility black-outs or brown-outs, water pollution, standing water, and hazardous conditions caused by residents or facilities). On the tort responsibility of property owners and managers, see CC §1714. The standards to be applied would be those of the Mobilehome Parks Act (MPA) (Health & S C §§18200-18700) and the MRL obligations in CC §798.15 rather than local building codes.

Under CC §798.84, mobilehome park homeowners must give the park owner 30 days' notice of intention to sue before filing an action based on the owner's "alleged failure to maintain the physical improvements in the common facilities in good working order or condition or alleged reduction of service." This notice is not, of course, required for commencement of an action alleging common law or statutory claims that do not arise under the MRL. Trial judges may deal with the omission of such notice as a "plea in abatement" that merely forestalls prosecution of the action for the statutory 30-day period. Mobilehome park residents other than homeowners are presumably not subject to this limitation and can invoke the implied warranty of habitability under Green and its progeny. To the extent that physical defects violate the MPA and the Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) regulations, residents may also seek correction using the Unfair Business Practices Act (Bus & P C §§17200-17208). See People v McKale (1979) 25 C3d 626, 159 CR 811; but see Farmers Ins. Exch. v Superior Court (1992) 2 C4th 377, 383, 6 CR2d 487. For discussion, see §6.86.

The substantial failure of management to properly maintain physical improvements in the common area and a substantial violation of a mobilehome park rule are deemed public nuisances, which may be remedied by a civil action or abatement. This action may be brought by a park resident, the park management, or in the name of the people of the State of California by a district attorney, county counsel, city attorney or city prosecutor, or the Attorney General. See CC §798.87; Health & S C §18402.

If HCD or a local enforcement agency identifies and cites defects or violations of the Mobilehome Parks Act and the park does not correct them within the specified time period, HCD or the local enforcement agency may suspend the park's permit to operate (Health & S C §§18510-18518) and issue a notice to residents stating that, until the permit is reinstated, the park owner cannot demand or collect rent, because Health & S C §18214(a) defines "mobilehome park" as "any area where two or more lots are rented or leased, held out for rent or lease." In Espinoza v Calva (2008) 169 CA4th 1393, 87 CR3d 492 (cited in §§3.11E, 10.62), the court of appeal reversed an order for payment of past due rent, holding that the absence of a certificate of occupancy in conventional housing rendered the lease illegal and void.

In the case of Patarak v Williams (2001) 91 CA4th 826, 111 CR2d 381, the court held that residents were entitled to actual damages and $44,000 in penalties for the owner's willful violations of the MRL as a result of the failure of the septic system and lease violations. The landlord claimed that the acts were not "willful" and therefore she was not liable for the penalties imposed pursuant to CC §798.86. The court upheld the trial judge's determination that "willful" does not require intent to violate the law or to injure another and that it was equivalent to "deliberate." It ruled that:

- The penalties were appropriate because although the landlord "did not have the specific intent to achieve septic system failures, these occurrences resulted not from accident or simple negligence" (91 CA4th at 830).

- The legislature did not intend that the section require "oppression, fraud or malice" as part of "willfulness" (91 CA4th at 831).

Park management may also have obligations with respect to resident safety and quiet enjoyment. In Andrews v Mobile Aire Estates (2005) 125 CA4th 578, 22 CR3d 832, two renters made dozens of complaints against each other to management and police, eventually resulting in a physical altercation. The court held that the park had a contractual duty to intervene under several theories: CC §1927 created an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment in the lease agreement; the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing required management to make a reasonable effort to try to maintain peace; and the lease itself said that the park "will try to maintain the peace and quiet…." It also held that the MRL did not preclude appropriate responses by the management, citing CC §798.56(b). But see Castaneda v Olsher (2007) 41 C4th 1205, 63 CR3d 99 (supreme court affirmed summary judgment in favor of mobilehome park owner because facts known to owner did not make violent gang episode sufficiently foreseeable as to require owner to evict offending tenants or be liable for failing to take action). For further discussion of implied warranties and landlord duties and liabilities, see chap 3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.17 B. Retaliatory Eviction Protections

The retaliatory eviction protections of statutory and common law, interpreted and reaffirmed in Barela v Superior Court (1981) 30 C3d 244, 178 CR 618, also apply to tenancies that are subject to the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL). See Rich v Schwab (1998) 63 CA4th 803, 75 CR2d 170. Even if the protections against retaliatory eviction in CC §1942.5 did not apply to mobilehome tenancies, the supreme court's reaffirmation in Barela of the common law protection against retaliation for tenants' exercise of rights guaranteed by law would clearly apply to an eviction under the MRL.

In Rubin v Green (1993) 4 C4th 1187, 17 CR2d 828, a law firm representing mobilehome park tenants wrote to the park owner about defects in the park. The park owner then filed an action against the tenants' law firm, seeking to enjoin the firm from "stirring up animosity" among the tenants and from soliciting nonclient tenants. The supreme court held that the owner's action should be dismissed. Concerning the "stirring up animosity" claim, the court held that the litigation privilege granted by CC §47(b) protects the law firm from liability for communications concerning an anticipated lawsuit, i.e., meeting and discussing the lawsuit with potential clients. Concerning the solicitation claim, the court held that the evils accompanying retaliatory suits based on litigation-related communications would be promoted by permitting the landlord's action to go forward. To the extent that any allegations of solicitation have merit, the court held that the state bar disciplinary system is adequate to deal with the problem. See also Edwards v Marin Park, Inc. (9th Cir 2004) 356 F3d 1058, discussed in §6.14A.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.18 C. Adults-Only Restrictions

Historically, mobilehome parks were often considered to be retirement communities or adult communities. In Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 180 CR 496, the California Supreme Court held that the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) prohibits discrimination against families with children in residential rental housing. In a footnote to that decision, however, the court acknowledged the existence of provisions in the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) that permit mobilehome park management to require mobilehome owners to comply with regulations limiting residence to adults only. 30 C3d at 743 n11. The legislature amended CC §§798.76 and 799.5 in 1992 to require that any mobilehome park rule or regulation limiting residency based on age requirements for housing for older persons comply with the federal Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 (Pub L 100-430, 102 Stat 1619; see 42 USC §§3604, 3607). In 1996, the legislature further amended CC §798.76 to require that it comply with later amendments to the federal Fair Housing Act adopted in Pub L 104-76, 109 Stat 787. For discussion of California law on families with children and senior communities, see §§2.22-2.25.

In Colony Cove Assocs. v Brown (1990) 220 CA3d 195, 269 CR 234, the court rejected constitutional and statutory challenges to a mobilehome park owner's requirement limiting residence to people 55 years of age or older, but "grandfathering" all present residents. The court held that compliance with the federal exemption from "familial status" discrimination (see 42 USC §3604(b)-(c)) for "older persons" (defined as 55 years of age or older; see 42 USC §3607)) was not required. (Compare Colony Cove with Gibson v County of Riverside (CD Cal 2002) 181 F Supp 2d 1057, 1094 n34, cited in §§2.25-2.25A.) The legislature's 1992 amendment to CC §798.76 required compliance with federal law in enforcement of any rule limiting residence to adults. It is an open question, therefore, whether the park owner would have the burden of proving compliance with the federal "older persons" exemption, if noncompliance with federal law were asserted as an affirmative defense in an unlawful detainer action. Management's attorney could argue that the basis for the Colony Cove decision remains controlling and that the amendment to CC §798.76 merely clarified that the legislature's phrase ("to adults") was not preempted by the federal bar against "familial discrimination." Residents' counsel could argue that the amendment to CC §798.76 was substantive and must be read plainly to require proof of compliance with the federal exemption, and that interpretation of the statute is unnecessary because the legislature's words are clear and unambiguous. In light of the 1992 amendment to CC §798.76, the decision in Schmidt v Superior Court (1989) 48 C3d 370, 256 CR 750, in which the supreme court upheld a mobilehome park's rule limiting occupancy to persons 25 years of age and older, no longer appears to be good law.

In U.S. v City of Hayward (9th Cir 1994) 36 F3d 832, a park owner dropped its "adults-only" policy in response to a federal prohibition against discrimination based on familial status. Acting under its rent control ordinance, the city ordered the park owner to reduce its rents, on the ground that ending the "adults-only" policy was a reduction in services, and the value of those services should be deducted from the rent. The federal government sued the city to compel it to rescind its order, arguing that the city had violated the Fair Housing Amendments Act (42 USC §§3601-3631), by penalizing the owner for complying with federal law. The court ruled for the United States, holding that the "adults only" policy was illegal discrimination that had no value as a housing service. See also U.S. v City of Hayward (ND Cal 1996) 1996 WL 61114 (consent decree).

In Covey v Hollydale Mobilehome Estates (9th Cir 1997) 116 F3d 830, modified (9th Cir 1997) 125 F3d 1281, the court of appeals held that discrimination against families with children that allegedly occurred in 1993 had to be adjudicated under the regulations in effect in 1993 that required "significant facilities and services" for seniors. This distinction was critical because the park probably would have qualified as a seniors-only park at the time of trial based on later 1995 HUD rules. See §2.25A.

In Taylor v Rancho Santa Barbara (9th Cir 2000) 206 F3d 932, plaintiff was prohibited from occupying a mobilehome he purchased in a senior mobilehome park because he was 35. Citing the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourth and Fifth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution, he challenged the authorization of seniors parks in the MRL and in the Fair Housing Act (see §§2.25-2.25C). The court affirmed that the MRL did not arbitrarily give disparate treatment to mobilehome parks for older persons, and that the federal and state Acts did not violate the equal protection clause because the laws were rationally related to legitimate state interests.

The Attorney General ruled, in 87 Ops Cal Atty Gen 148 (2004) that a local government may adopt a zoning ordinance or issue a conditional use permit to promote the development and preservation of senior parks despite the prohibition in Govt C §65008 on local government actions to discriminate on the bases of, among other things, age. The opinion notes that Health & S C §18300(g), in the Mobilehome Parks Act (MPA) (Health & S C §§18200-18700), authorizes local governments to exercise their authority to establish "senior mobilehome parks" and that this is a more specific section than the general prohibition in the Government Code Planning and Zoning Law. Practitioners should be aware that this Opinion does not address the restrictions related to local government actions and mobilehome parks in Govt C §§12955(l) and 12955.9, or applicable federal nondiscrimination laws.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. CREATION OF TENANCY

§6.19 A. Types of Tenancies

The four most common types of mobilehome park tenancies are entered into between park management and

- a resident of an owner-occupied mobilehome;
- a resident of a park-owned mobilehome;
- a nonresident owner of a mobilehome who rents it to a resident tenant; and
- a resident who has an ownership interest in the park that is a subdivision, cooperative or condominium for mobilehomes, or a resident-owned mobilehome park.

See §§6.9, 6.12.

The first type of tenancy, that of a resident of an owner-occupied mobilehome, is the most frequently encountered situation in mobilehome parks. In these tenancies, the park management rents space to the mobilehome owner or a subsequent purchaser of the mobilehome. All the provisions of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) apply to such tenancies, including the special tenancy termination requirements. See §§6.62-6.84.

In the second type of tenancy, in which a tenant rents a park-owned mobilehome and space from park management, the MRL does not apply and the rental agreement with the tenant in this arrangement need not be the same as for a tenant who owns his or her own mobilehome. However, use of consistent leases (except for the special termination clauses) will probably enhance tenant relations and simplify park management by eliminating distinctions that could result in charges of illegal or arbitrary discrimination.

In the third type of tenancy, rental of a mobilehome by a nonresident owner, the nonresident mobilehome owner enters into a lease or rental agreement with the park management, but then rents the mobilehome to another tenant. The agreement between the park management and the mobilehome owner is subject to the MRL, but the agreement between the owner and the actual occupant of the mobilehome is governed by conventional landlord-tenant statutes (see CCP §§1159-1179a). The MRL does not prohibit subletting, but it does acknowledge it in CC §§798.23.5, 798.70, and 799.1.5. The arrangement to sublet the space, however, is generally subject to prior permission under the rental agreement between the management and the nonresident mobilehome owner. If subleasing is permitted by the rental agreement, the sublease and the subtenant may also be regulated by the rental agreement. It is the mobilehome owner who is primarily bound by the agreement to park requirements—unless an alternative arrangement is made between the mobilehome owner and park management. See Rancho Santa Paula Mobilehome Park v Evans (1994) 26 CA4th 1139, 32 CR2d 464 (it was unreasonable for park management to bar subleasing under new park rule after having permitted it on previous occasions). See §6.12.

Even if the rental agreement prohibits subleasing, CC §798.23.5 permits a mobilehome owner to sublet for specified time periods in cases of "medical emergency" or "medical treatment." See §6.61.

The fourth type of tenancy is, of course, not a tenancy at all but a right of ownership subject to the documents and laws governing the specific type of park. However, the relationship between homeowners and management sometimes is analogous to those of tenants and management. As the number of these parks continues to increase, acts or omissions by management or residents are governed by increasing numbers of provisions in article 9 of the MRL and the applicable rules, regulations, and laws.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.20 B. Resident and Mobilehome Admissions Criteria

§6.20 B. Resident and Mobilehome Admissions Criteria

A mobilehome park management's right to discriminate among persons applying for tenancy generally is subject to the same restrictions that apply to other residential landlords. See chap 2. The Fair Housing Act of 1968 includes mobilehome sites in its definition of "dwelling" (see 42 USC §3602(b); U.S. v Grooms (MD Fla 1972) 348 F Supp 1130). The Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§799-799.10) also contains some additional limitations on tenant selection:

- Civil Code §798.20 prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, marital status, national origin, ancestry, familial status (except for parks designated for seniors), disability, source of income, or sexual orientation in any private club or organization that a prospective tenant must join to obtain tenancy in a mobilehome park. See CC §798.20(a). Sex discrimination includes discrimination on the basis of pregnancy, childbirth, or medical conditions related to pregnancy or childbirth, gender, gender identity and gender related appearance and behavior. Govt C §12926(p); Pen C §422.56.
- Civil Code §798.76 permits park management to require that the purchaser of a mobilehome that will remain in the park comply with any rule or regulation limiting residence to older persons. (For similar rules that apply in mobilehome subdivisions or resident-owned parks, see CC §799.5.)
- Civil Code §798.34 provides that a homeowner living alone may share housing with one person, to be treated as a guest, and a person may share housing with any adult who provides live-in health care and supportive care under a written plan prepared by the homeowner's physician. (For similar rules that apply in mobilehome park subdivisions or resident-owned mobilehome parks, see CC §799.9.)
- Civil Code §798.33(a) applies to lease agreements entered into, modified, or renewed on or after January 1, 2001, and provides that no lease agreement may prohibit a homeowner from keeping specified types of domestic pets, subject to reasonable rules and regulations. These rules are subject to the "reasonable accommodation" requirements of the federal Fair Housing Act; see §2.27.

Federal law and case law, however, may place limits on the creation or maintenance of adults-only mobilehome parks. See §§2.22-2.25, 6.18. For discussion of the limitations on tenant-selection standards that may be considered when a potential tenant buys a mobilehome from an existing tenant, see §§6.54-6.56. Although the tenant's "ability to pay rent" is a permissible standard of review, the method park management uses to determine ability to pay may run afoul of antidiscrimination laws. See Harris v Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C3d 1142, 278 CR 614; §§2.21, 2.57. Several 1999 amendments to the Fair Employment and Housing Act prohibit discrimination based on source of income and require aggregation of a household's income. See §§2.9B, 2.20, 2.48-2.49.

Castaneda v Olsher (2007) 41 C4th 1205, 63 CR3d 99 extensively addressed general principles related to whether landlords could discriminate in renting on the basis of suspected gang membership by potential tenants. The decision notes that if the mobilehome park owner had refused to rent on the basis of suspected gang affiliations, the owner might have been subject to liability for violating CC §798.74, which does not include gang affiliation as a permitted basis for rejecting a rental applicant.

Park management can limit the type and size of mobilehomes that will be permitted in the park, if the restrictions are set forth in the park's rules and regulations or rental agreement, at least as to existing homeowners. Many parks permit only certain sizes of mobilehomes (e.g., double-wide mobilehomes or the largest mobilehome that can be accommodated on the lot) or mobilehomes with certain physical characteristics (e.g., eaves, wood sidings, unitized awnings, composition roofs). These distinctions conform all mobilehomes in a park to specific aesthetic standards that affect the in-place value of other mobilehomes in the park. Although such requirements have generally been accepted in the past, their legality might be challenged as a violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51), if they are not reasonable.

Some mobilehome park owners operate so-called closed parks that permit persons to become resident homeowners only if they purchase particular brands of mobilehomes or mobilehomes from specific dealers. Such practices have been questioned as illegal restraints on trade or "tying" agreements. People v Mobile Magic Sales (1979) 96 CA3d 1, 157 CR 749; Jomicra, Inc. v California Mobile Home Dealers Ass'n (1970) 12 CA3d 396, 90 CR 696. They also may violate unfair business practices statutes, such as Bus & P C §§17200-17209. See People v McKale (1979) 25 C3d 626, 159 CR 811. Management also may not, as a condition of resale or approval of a buyer, require a selling homeowner to authorize management, or any other person, dealer, or broker, to act as seller's agent in the sale of a mobilehome. CC §798.71(c).

In SC Manufactured Homes, Inc. v Liebert (2008) 162 CA4th 68, 76 CR3d 73, plaintiff mobilehome dealer alleged that a mobilehome park and specified dealers were involved in an illegal tying arrangement and alleged violations of the Cartwright Act (Bus & P C §§16720-16770) and the Unfair Competition Law (Bus & P C §§17200-17210), as well as tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. After a detailed analysis of the underlying facts, applicable laws, and judicial decisions, the court held that the facts did not support the causes of action. Management also may not require a first right of refusal for a mobilehome sold in the park to a third party in rental agreements entered into or renewed on or after January 1, 2006. CC §798.19.5.

An applicant's unwillingness to accept a particular rental agreement cannot be used to deny residency. See CC §§798.17-798.18; §6.21. Civil Code §798.75(b), however, provides that a mobilehome purchaser in the park who fails to sign the "rental agreement" has no right of tenancy. See Mobilepark W. Homeowners Ass'n v Escondido Mobilepark W. (1995) 35 CA4th 32, 41 CR2d 393.

Note that CC §798.37 prohibits mobilehome park management from requiring that a homeowner or prospective homeowner "purchase, rent, or lease goods or services for landscaping from any person, company, or corporation."

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.21 C. Lease or Rental Agreement

The basis of the relationship between the homeowner and the mobilehome park management is the lease or rental agreement, which is defined in CC §798.8 as the agreement between the homeowner and management. This agreement, unlike other landlord-tenant agreements, must be in writing, must include an attached copy of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10), and must contain a list of provisions set forth in CC §798.15. The agreement cannot waive rights granted to the homeowner by the MRL. CC §798.19.

Because mobilehome parks, mobilehome tenants, and park management firms differ from place to place, leases and rental agreements differ according to management goals, styles, and needs. In drafting and executing a rental agreement, however, park management should follow some simple rules. The form should be self-explanatory so that park managers have little trouble filling out the lease with the tenant. In addition, the document should be as simple and unambiguous as possible, to prevent differences of opinion over the contents.

Practitioners should exercise extreme caution in advising park management concerning the form and content of the rental agreement and should consult any applicable local ordinances or federal or state laws that may apply, as well as public agency loan and grant documents, regulatory agreements, and conditions, covenants, and restrictions.

Because ambiguous terms are construed against the drafter (usually the landlord) and may open the door to admission of parol evidence, practitioners must exercise caution when drafting all residency documents. Moreover, residents' counsel often argue that mobilehome park rental agreements constitute classic examples of "adhesion" contracts imposed on unsophisticated consumers. Care should therefore be taken to avoid ambiguity, inconspicuous terms, and unfair surprise.

Park management should be certain that both parties complete all signatures and acknowledgments on the form and initial any changes in the rental agreement. Both the management and the tenant must be given fully executed copies of the agreement. In addition, the tenant should be given copies of the MRL and all park rules and regulations. Civil Code §798.16(b) requires that management return an executed copy of the rental agreement to the homeowner within 15 business days after management has received the rental agreement signed by the homeowner. To avoid later disputes, all park requirements should be explained in advance to potential and renewing tenants.

A mobilehome park rental agreement is exempt from local rent control provisions if it meets the criteria specified in CC §798.17(b). CC §798.17(a). See also §798.21. In Mobilepark W. Homeowners Ass'n v Escondido Mobilepark W. (1995) 35 CA4th 32, 41 CR2d 393, the court held that a municipal ordinance regulating mobilehome park leases was preempted by CC §798.17 and that the ordinance was an invalid attempt to amend a statewide initiative. But see Equity Lifestyle Props., Inc. v County of San Luis Obispo (9th Cir 2007) 505 F3d 860, for a discussion regarding whether a residency document was a "12-month rental agreement" or merely a month-to-month agreement subject to the rent control ordinance.

In Rothman v Vedder Park Mgmt. (9th Cir 1990) 912 F2d 315, mobilehome park tenants claimed that the park owner violated the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) (18 USC §§1961-1968) by using fraudulent and extortionate tactics to get them to sign their leases. The court rejected this claim, holding that the complaint failed to allege facts showing fraud or extortion.

However, in People v Beaumont Invs., Ltd. (2003) 111 CA4th 102, 3 CR3d 429, the court of appeal sustained judgments of $525,000 in restitution and $525,000 in civil damages in favor of the residents of two mobilehome parks and against the two mobilehome parks and a mobilehome dealer who entered into long-term leases favorable to the park management and then sold the new mobilehomes subject to these leases. The park management, which offered the "option" of new long-term leases for those not wanting to assume the dealer's leases, claimed that these long-term leases exempted the park spaces from local rent controls, but the trial court and the court of appeals found that these were unfair business practices and did not exempt the spaces from the local rent control ordinance. The damages included repayment of several years of "excess" rent payments.

Local ordinances, rules, and regulations may not prohibit or limit the duration of rental agreements or leases in mobilehome parks and manufactured housing communities newly built or held out for rent after 1992. Govt C §65852.11.

A mobilehome park owner must disclose in writing to any applicant for a space that the mobilehome may be subject to a school facilities fee, if the pad was built after September 1, 1986, and no other mobilehome has occupied the pad. CC §§798.82; 799.8.

© The Regents of the University of California

VI. MOBILEHOME PARK RENTAL AGREEMENT

§6.22 A. Legal and Practical Considerations

Sections 6.23-6.89 address the legal and practical considerations that underlie the form mobilehome park rental agreement set forth in §§6.90-6.140, which is for use in connection with mobilehome park tenancies. Practitioners should be aware that rental agreements for manufactured housing subdivisions or resident-owned parks or recreational vehicle parks would differ in some particulars.

© The Regents of the University of California

1. Term of Agreement; Initial Disclosures

§6.23 a. Homeowner's Options

Civil Code §798.15(a) requires that the term of a mobilehome park rental agreement be stated, and CC §798.18 requires that a homeowner be offered one of the following three options:

- A 12-month lease;
- A shorter-term lease, including a month-to-month lease, if the homeowner requests such a term; or
- A longer-term lease (of more than 1 year), if mutually agreed on by the homeowner and management.

In effect, the homeowner has the option to choose the duration of the rental agreement, at least for a period of 1 year or less.

PRACTICE TIP: This option to chose the term of the rental agreement is such a crucial requirement of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) that counsel should include in the rental agreement an acknowledgment by the homeowner that the option was given. See §§6.136-6.137 for form acknowledgments. Many park landlords and their attorneys take the position that these choices need be offered only to existing residents, because a new buyer technically is not yet a "homeowner" as defined in the MRL.

See also §6.105.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.24 b. Reporting and Disclosure Requirements

Offering rental agreements to mobilehome homeowners for a term of more than 5 years is subject to the reporting and disclosure requirements of the Subdivided Lands Act (Bus & P C §§11000-11200) if such agreements are offered as a mandatory prerequisite to tenancy. Bus & P C §11000.

Civil Code §798.74.5 imposes notice obligations on park management. If it has been advised that a mobilehome is for sale, management must provide a statutory notice entitled "INFORMATION FOR PROSPECTIVE HOMEOWNERS," as specified in CC §798.74.5(a) (see form in §6.54A), to prospective purchasers within 2 business days of a request.

Additionally, park management must provide each prospective homeowner with a completed, written disclosure about the condition of the mobilehome park. The disclosure must be delivered at least 3 days before execution of either a rental agreement or a statement that the parties have agreed to the terms and conditions of the rental agreement. CC §798.75.5(a). The management must update the information annually, or in the event of a material change, at the time of the change. The form is set forth in CC §798.75.5(b).

For seller disclosures required on the sale of a mobilehome, see CC §§798.74.4, 1102.6d, cited in §§6.54, 6.57A, subject to the requirements and exemptions in CC §§1102-1102.3a.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.25 c. Limits on Renewal

Under CC §798.18(c), no rental agreement for a term of 12 months or less may allow either party to extend or renew the agreement unilaterally for an additional term longer than 12 months. In addition, under CC §798.17(g), no rental agreement of more than 1 year in length which qualifies as being exempt from rent control may contain a unilateral option to renew.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.26 2. Rent and Rent Increases

Rent increases in mobilehome parks are one of the most sensitive management relations problems. It is essential that management understand the legal restrictions on rent increases for mobilehome parks.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.27 a. Notice of Rent Increase

Civil Code §798.30 requires that a minimum 90-day notice be given of an increase in rent. This period is strictly construed. In Rich v Schwab (1984) 162 CA3d 739, 209 CR 417, the court held that a 58-day notice was void under the previous law, which required 60 days notice.

PRACTICE TIP: Park management should review local rent regulation ordinances and public agency financing restrictions before preparing any rent increase notice. See §§6.15, 6.32.

© The Regents of the University of California

b. Methods of Rent Increase in Long-Term Agreements

§6.28 (1) Objective Factors

Management commonly ties annual rent increases in long-term rental agreements to objective factors such as the median income figures issued by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development or the California Department of Housing and Community Development, or to a percentage of the Consumer Price Index issued by the U.S. Department of Labor for specific areas, states, or the entire country. See §6.106.

However, even an objective factor such as "a percentage of the Consumer Price Index" can be qualified by a subjective factor, such as unique or extraordinary circumstances in which such increases would not result in a reasonable rate of return because of unusually low base rents assumed from a prior owner whose financial situation allowed it to keep rents below market levels. See Concord Communities, LP v City of Concord (2001) 91 CA4th 1407, 111 CR2d 511, in which the court of appeal held that a city's finding that base rents were not significantly below market was not supported by substantial evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.29 (2) Pass-Throughs

One method of increasing rent is by passing through to the homeowner certain costs, including increases in taxes and insurance and the cost of capital improvements to the mobilehome park.

WARNING: In passing through costs to the homeowner, the management must be careful not to violate CC §798.31, which limits the fees park management may charge. See §6.106.

In Vance v Villa Park Mobilehome Estates (1995) 36 CA4th 698, 42 CR2d 723, the court held that a lease that provided for rent increases in the amount of certain "pass-throughs" for increases in the cost of government services and improvements, property taxes, and insurance, did not impose "disguised fees" that would be barred by CC §798.31. The provision was not "unconscionable" because the tenant had the right, under CC §§798.17 and 798.18, of refusing the lease and choosing instead a 12-month lease or month-to-month tenancy. See also Cacho v Boudreau (2007) 40 C4th 341, 53 CR3d 43 (CC §798.49(d)(4) does not preempt local ordinances that allow mobilehome park owners to separately charge park residents for property taxes imposed on park land).

In Dills v Redwoods Assocs. (1994) 28 CA4th 888, 33 CR2d 838, mobilehome owners challenged a park owner's rent increase because it included an amortized portion of a capital improvement expense (to repair roads in the park). The lease provided for capital improvement pass-throughs as part of "base rent adjustments." The court held that the rent increase was not barred by CC §798.31 because capital expenditures have otherwise been a traditionally recoverable component of rent, and nothing in CC §798.31 prohibits the imposition of rent broken down into separately calculated base rent and capital expense components. The court both distinguished and disapproved Karrin v Ocean-Aire Mobile Home Estates (1991) 1 CA4th 1066, 2 CR2d 581, discussed in §6.15, rejecting "the inevitable implication of its ruling that [CC §798.31 proscribes] any effort to recover capital costs explicitly as opposed to an implicit component of rent." 28 CA4th at 893.

See also Robinson v City of Yucaipa (1994) 28 CA4th 1506, 34 CR2d 291, discussed in §6.15, in which the court analyzed the validity under CC §798.31 of local ordinances that permitted pass-throughs of capital improvement costs, and Rainbow Disposal Co. v Escondido Mobilehome Rent Review Bd. (1998) 64 CA4th 1159, 75 CR2d 746, which rejected a mobilehome park owner's effort to pass through certain utility maintenance and capital improvement costs that were already compensated under Pub Util C §739.5.

In Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v City of Carson Mobilehome Park Rental Review Bd. (1999) 70 CA4th 281, 82 CR2d 569, the court sustained several trial court determinations related to pass-throughs, including the finding that the board reasonably could allocate an operating expense—remediation of contaminated wetlands—over three years, because to do otherwise would be inconsistent with the intent of the rent control law. It also ruled that attorney fees related to that remediation could not be treated as regular operating expenses used as the basis of setting rents. Other decisions related to pass-throughs are discussed in in-depth in paragraph 6.15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.30 c. Inclusion of Utilities or Taxes in Rent

Some mobilehome parks include many utilities or service fees in the rent. If any of these utilities or fees are later eliminated or billed separately without an equal reduction in rent, such an action would be considered to be an increase in rent requiring 90-days' written notice under CC §798.30. A 60-day notice would be required under CC §798.32 if the charge was not described in the rental agreement. Under CC 798.41(a), commencement of a separate billing procedure does not constitute a "rent increase" under a local ordinance if the base rent is simultaneously reduced by the same amount.

Some parks include in the monthly rent one-twelfth of the annual prorated increase in park property taxes and other government fees. Other parks include a requirement that the homeowner pay on a prorated basis all federal, state, local, or other taxes (other than property taxes or income taxes) that are levied on the use and occupancy of the park. See, e.g., Cacho v Boudreau (2007) 40 C4th 341, 53 CR3d 43, cited in §6.15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.31 d. Statutory Limitations on Rent, Fees, and Charges

Civil Code §798.18(b) requires that a homeowner be offered a lease establishing charges during the first 12 months of a one-year lease for rents, service charges, or utility fees that are the same at the inception of the lease as those that he or she would have been offered on a month-to-month basis. This statute would not prevent an increase in a month-to-month homeowner's rent during the first 12 months, even though a rental agreement was offered without provision for increase, as long as the initially offered terms were the same. In addition, CC §798.18(b) does not affect more than one homeowner at a time. If one lot is near a transformer, and the other is near the recreation center, management does not have to offer both at the same rent.

PRACTICE TIP: Attorneys representing management should warn their clients to show new homeowners that the month-to-month and one-year rental agreements have identical charges. The minimal benefit of differential charges is far outweighed by the costs that could accrue as a result of civil litigation because of a violation of CC §798.18(b).

Management may charge a fee for a rental agreement with a term longer than 12 months, however, if the fee is mutually agreed on. CC §798.31.

Civil Code §798.51 prohibits charging homeowners or residents a cleaning deposit to use the park clubhouse or recreation hall for resident organization meetings or for any of the purposes stated in CC §798.50 or §798.51, even if guests or visitors will attend the activity, if the meeting or activity is hosted by a homeowner or resident and all park homeowners or residents are permitted to attend. Park management cannot require the hosts to obtain liability insurance, unless alcoholic beverages are to be served in the common area facility; however, management may enforce rental agreement or park rules governing consumption of alcoholic beverages in the facility and may also enforce rules restricting vehicle parking or maximum occupancy for the clubhouse or recreation hall.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.32 e. Impact of Local Rent Control Regulations

Unless exempted, rent increases under mobilehome rental agreements are subject to local rent control ordinances (comprehensively covered in chap 7). Civil Code §§798.17 and 798.21 exempt from local rent regulation

- any mobilehome space rental agreement that has a term of more than 12 months, and
- any mobilehome space that the homeowner does not use for his or her principal residence (as defined in §798.21) and has not rented to another party, but local rent control applies for as long as the homeowner, a licensed real estate agent, or a mobilehome dealer actively and in good faith markets the mobilehome for sale if the homeowner has moved out.

Civil Code §§798.17 and 798.21 provide other specified protections for the homeowner, including the right to contest informally a determination by the park owner that the park space is not being used by the homeowner as his or her principal residence.

In addition, any newly built mobilehome space that was initially offered for rent after January 1, 1990, is exempt from local rent control ordinances. CC §§798.7, 798.45. Many local ordinances prohibit park owners from requiring a tenant to sign any rental agreement (i.e., one with a term of more than 12 months) that would exempt the tenancy from local rent control. See §6.15.

Long-term tenants of mobilehome parks (i.e., 9 months or more) residing in recreational vehicles are protected by local rent control ordinances. See Griffith v County of Santa Cruz (2000) 79 CA4th 1318, 94 CR2d 801 (discussed in §6.15).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.33 3. Fees, Service Charges, and Utilities

The Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) limits fees and charges to rent, utilities, and "incidental reasonable charges for services actually rendered." CC §798.31. For services to be actually rendered, the homeowner must request the service or at least be willing to accept it. A park owner may not impose a charge for a service the homeowner did not want and the benefits of which the homeowner did not receive. Greening v Johnson (1997) 53 CA4th 1223, 62 CR2d 214. Any other fees or charges (e.g., for guests or pets) must be explicitly permitted by statute. See, e.g., CC §§798.33-798.34, which regulate fees for pets and guests. Even if the park owner renders a service, a fee may not be charged unless the service is listed in the rental agreement or the homeowner has been given at least 60 days' written notice before management imposes the charge. CC §798.32(a). Thereafter, the fees and charges must be listed separately in periodic billings, and any fees for a specified duration must have an expiration date listed in each billing. CC §798.32(b). Under CC §798.36(b), park owners may charge a reasonable fee for cleaning or clearing a resident's lot if the resident fails to do so after notice. Owners may remove and store resident personal property after specified determinations and procedures, and may charge the residents actual and reasonable costs of removal and storage. Disposal and sale are permitted if the property is not claimed and costs are not reimbursed within 60 days after notice. The cost related to removal and storage also may be collected under CC §798.56 in a nonpayment notice.

PRACTICE TIP: The statutory requirements in CC §798.36(b) related to initial notice, removal, storage, notice subsequent to removal, and sale are very detailed and extensive. Attorneys representing park management should ensure that their clients comply with these requirements if they choose to utilize this process.

Civil Code §798.25(e) provides that a new fee added by an amendment to the park's rules and regulations (that has not been expressly agreed on by the homeowner and management in the written rental agreement or lease) is void and unenforceable. An uncodified finding by the legislature (Stats 1999, ch 323, §2) provides that the intent of §798.25(e) is to prohibit park owners from imposing new fees and charges by amending park rules and regulations; it is not intended to limit the authority of owners to impose fees and charges under CC §§798.30-798.44.

For charts and forms indicating permissible fees for utilities and services, see §§6.98 and 6.110.

© The Regents of the University of California

a. Permissible Fees

§6.34 (1) Common Area Landscaping and Maintenance Fees

A fee may be charged for common area landscaping and maintenance, just as for any other common area service. Park rules may impose reasonable landscaping and maintenance requirements for individual sites (CC §798.37), and a reasonable fee may be charged for management's performance of those services if the homeowner fails to perform them after having been served with a 14-day notice to perform (CC §798.15(g)).

However, for leases entered into or extended on or after January 1, 2001, management is solely responsible for maintenance or removal of trees on spaces or in common areas, and repair of root damage to driveways installed by management and foundation systems, unless the homeowner voluntarily agreed otherwise in a pre-2001 rental agreement. CC §798.37.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.35 (2) Fees Imposed by Governmental Entities

If certain new or increased fees or assessments imposed by a state or local entity are billed by the number of spaces in the park, management may separately charge homeowners for such amounts under CC §798.49, unless they are excluded under CC §798.49(d). These fees may be imposed on homeowners after 60 days notice under CC §798.32; they are exempted from operation of local rent control ordinances by CC §798.49.

© The Regents of the University of California

b. Limitations on Fees

§6.36 (1) Supplying Lease

Park management may not charge a fee for supplying a homeowner with a lease for a term of 12 months or a lesser period. CC §798.31. A fee may be charged, however, for a lease of more than 1 year if the fee is mutually agreed to. CC §798.31.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.37 (2) Pets

Management may not charge a fee merely because a homeowner keeps a pet in the park, unless special services or facilities are provided for the pet. CC §798.33. If a fee is charged, it must reasonably relate to the cost of the services or maintenance of the facility and the number of pets kept in the park. Because the statute requires a pro rata division of the cost per pet, a flat fee not related to the number of pets would violate the statute.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.38 (3) Occupancy

Under CC §798.34(c), no fee may be charged for occupancy by an adult who provides live-in health care to a senior homeowner under a written treatment plan prepared by the homeowner's physician. A homeowner may not be charged a fee for guests who do not stay with the homeowner for more than 20 consecutive days or a total of 30 days in a calendar year. CC §798.34. In addition, management may not charge a fee based on the number of members in a homeowner's immediate family (including the homeowner, his or her spouse, parents, children, and minor grandchildren). CC §798.35. A homeowner living alone who wishes to share his or her mobilehome with one person may not be charged a fee. CC §798.34(b).

Civil Code §798.34(d) authorizes a senior homeowner (defined as 55 years of age or older) who is living in a mobilehome park reserved for "older persons" (55 years of age or more under 42 USC §3607) to share his or her mobilehome with any person over 18 years of age if that person is a parent, sibling, child, or grandchild of the senior homeowner and requires live-in health care, live-in supportive care, or supervision pursuant to a written treatment plan prepared by a physician. Management is prohibited from charging a fee for this person, who shall have no rights of tenancy; and management shall not be required to manage, supervise, or provide for the person's care (except to make "reasonable accommodations" for a disability). This person also must comply with the park rules and regulations, and a violation of the rules and regulations by this person is expressly deemed a violation by the homeowner. (See also CC §799.9, for mobilehome subdivisions and resident-owned parks.)

A mobilehome park landlord may be required to assume reasonable financial burdens to accommodate the disabled child of a tenant. U.S. v California Mobile Home Park Mgmt. Co. (9th Cir 1994) 29 F3d 1413. Making reasonable accommodation does not, however, require park management to waive guest and parking fees for the caretaker of a resident's handicapped daughter, if the resident does not show that use of the caretaker's automobile is necessary to provide services to the daughter. U.S. v California Mobile Home Park Mgmt. Co. (9th Cir 1997) 107 F3d 1374.

Both CC §798.35 and CC §798.34(d) restrict rights and privileges based on "blood relationships"; these types of restrictions by government entities were held to be unconstitutional in City of Santa Barbara v Adamson (1980) 27 C3d 123, 164 CR 539. In addition, CC §798.34(d) restricts the residency of children based on their ages, which may violate the federal Fair Housing Act. No reported cases have challenged either of those statutes.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.39 (4) Installation, Development, and Initial Landscaping

No fee may be charged for the entry, installation, or hook-up of a mobilehome (except as required by local ordinance or state regulations) nor a fee for the development of the park as a whole. CC §798.37. Management may not charge a homeowner for initial landscaping on the space nor require the homeowner to purchase, rent, or lease goods or services from any person or entity for that landscaping or for remodeling or maintenance. If a park provides landscaping, remodeling, or maintenance services, however, the homeowner may voluntarily pay for such services on the space. The rental agreement in this chapter includes an acknowledgment that the homeowner has not been required to accept these services. See form in §6.138. For tree care fees, see §6.48.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.40 (5) Awards Against Management

Management may not charge a homeowner any fee or increase in rent based on the cost to management of any fines, penalties, money damages, or fees assessed or awarded by a court of law against management for a violation of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL), including attorney fees and costs. CC §798.39.5(a). The burden is on the homeowner to prove that the increase or fee is a violation of CC §798.39.5(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.41 (6) Enforcing Park Rules and Regulations

Under CC §798.36, management is prohibited from charging a fee for enforcing park rules and regulations. This does not prohibit management from charging a homeowner for the cost of actual services rendered to remedy a violation of a rule or regulation (e.g., failure to maintain the homeowner's landscaping), but merely forbids charging all homeowners a general fee to pay the cost of enforcing rules or correcting their breach by one or a few residents. No fee for correcting a violation can be charged until the homeowner has been given 14 days written notice to correct the specified condition (the notice must include an estimate of the charges if management makes the correction).

On legislation limiting the ability of park management to increase certain fees by a unilateral amendment to park rules and regulations, see CC §798.25(e), discussed in §6.33. For authority to clean lots and charge costs of removal and storage, see CC §798.36(b), discussed in §6.33.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.42 c. Amortization of Fees

The legislature clearly intends to limit the amount and nature of fees that may be charged to homeowners in mobilehome parks. In general, it is in the management's interest to "amortize" the cost of services within rent as much as possible. When particular services are used by only a few homeowners or residents, however, the charges should be separately stated or billed. Civil Code §798.31 requires that the costs be "reasonable" according to the service provided. Management's inability to justify the reasonableness of such costs may have severe consequences, for example:

- An eviction based on a homeowner's failure to pay a fee could be defended against on the basis of improper fee charges; or
- An improper fee could be challenged as a violation of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10), including the homeowner's request for the court to award attorney fees and levy the penalty provisions of CC §798.86.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.43 d. Utilities Charges

When management provides both master meter and submeter utility service, the amount of utility charges is controlled by CC §798.40(a), which requires park management to post in a conspicuous place the "prevailing residential utilities rate schedule" published by the utility. In addition, the billing notice must separately state the cost of each charge, along with the opening and closing readings of the homeowner's meter. If a third-party billing agent prepares utility bills, CC §798.40(b) requires management to disclose specified information about that agent in each resident's billing. When a rental agreement does not provide otherwise, management may bill separately for utility fees and charges. Procedures, amounts, and other requirements are prescribed by CC §798.41.

Public Utilities Code §739.5 establishes certain requirements and rights regarding mastermeter customers and users. Under Pub Util C §739.5(a), park owners who submeter their residents for utility services may not charge a rate that exceeds the rate that would be applicable if the resident were receiving utilities directly from the utility provider. Under Pub Util C §739.5(g), the PUC must accept and respond to complaints regarding those obligations and rights. Under Pub Util C §739.5(h), the PUC may not deny eligibility for the California Alternative Rates for Energy (CARE) Program on the basis that some residential units in the park are not submetered. Under CC §798.43.1, park management must give annual notices to submetered homeowners and park residents about potential eligibility for the CARE Program.

A special rule applies to parks regulated by the MRL who supply and charge for liquefied petroleum gas (LPG). If the management of a park does not permit mobilehome owners or park residents to purchase LPG from someone other than the management, the management may not sell the LPG at a cost that exceeds 110 percent of the actual price it paid for the LPG and it also must post, in a visible location in the park, the actual price it paid. CC §798.44(a).

This rule also applies when federal, state, or local law directly or indirectly (e.g., through set-back requirements) prohibits homeowners from purchasing LPG, even if management permits the residents to buy their own LPG. CC §798.44(e).

NOTE: A service characterized as a utility under CC §798.41 may not be a utility for purposes of CC §798.31, which permits the homeowner to be charged for rent, utilities, and services actually rendered. See §6.33 and Greening v Johnson (1997) 53 CA4th 1223, 62 CR2d 214.

In Rainbow Disposal Co. v Escondido Mobilehome Rent Review Bd. (1998) 64 CA4th 1159, 75 CR2d 746, the court of appeal held that these rates included normal maintenance and capital expenditures, based on a state Public Utilities Commission decision interpreting Pub Util C §739.5. The court of appeal in Hillsboro Props. v PUC (2003) 108 CA4th 246, 133 CR2d 343, further reinforced the PUC's authority by holding that it supersedes a local rent control ordinance when that ordinance's operation resulted in submetered park residents paying more for utility services and park utility improvements than they would have if directly metered. An interrelated issue addressed by the court is what utility-related capital costs cannot be passed on to park residents and which costs must be absorbed by management because the PUC allows park management a "discount" (the difference between the amounts submetered residents pay for utilities and the amount that the master meter park management then pays to the local utility) in order to cover the capital costs the utility otherwise would be responsible for. In 2003, the PUC began both investigatory and rulemaking proceedings to establish a list of items to be included in and excluded form the PUC discount.

Improper termination of utilities at a master meter may expose management to penalties under CC §789.3 if the termination was undertaken with the intent to terminate the tenancy (see §8.147).

PRACTICE TIP: Management should carefully word the notice of utilities termination to avoid this consequence, by stating that termination of utility service is due to nonpayment of utility charges. Civil Code §798.42 establishes special notice requirements for nonemergency utility terminations in rental parks, and CC §799.7 provides analogous protections in manufactured housing subdivisions or resident-owned parks.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.44 4. Security Deposits

Under CC §798.39(a), the management of a mobilehome park may demand a security deposit only on or before the initial occupancy. The deposit may not exceed two months' rent, charged at the inception of the occupancy, in addition to any rent for the first month. This provision applies to all security deposits collected on or after January 1, 1989, and includes special rules related to return of those deposits. The return of deposits collected before that date are governed by CC §§798.39(c)-(d) and 1950.5.

PRACTICE TIP: Although the law does not explicitly require management to do so, it would be wise to treat the deposits as a trust fund and not commingle them with other income.

Civil Code §798.39(f) provides that management is not required to pay interest on security deposits. If funds are used to rectify a default or correct damages, management should give the tenant written notice to replenish the fund. See §6.111. Civil Code §798.39(a) expressly prohibits an increase in the total amount of a security deposit.

Unlike conventional housing security deposits, park residents may demand that park management return the deposit within 5 days after the resident has paid all rent and fees for any 12-consecutive-month period or on resale of the mobilehome, whichever comes earlier. CC §798.39(b). A similar provision applies to security deposits collected before January 1, 1989, on extension or renewal of a rental agreement or lease. CC §798.39(c).

Although improper use of a security deposit may be subject to challenge under the enforcement provisions of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) for those aspects that are subject to the MRL, similar enforcement rights (including the right to a statutory penalty) are provided in CC §1950.5 for other security deposit violations. See §§8.173A, 8.174.

NOTE: Civil Code §1950.6 authorizes landlords to charge a nonrefundable "screening fee." See §§1.51, 4.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

5. Park Rules

§6.45 a. Adoption and Amendment of Rules

By following the procedure established in CC §798.25, management can adopt new park rules and regulations without homeowners' consent after 6 months' written notice, or 60 days after written notice if they are applicable to recreational facilities. The court limited this right in Rancho Santa Paula Mobilehome Park v Evans (1994) 26 CA4th 1139, 32 CR2d 464, by holding that a park owner could not retroactively enforce a new rule that prohibited subleasing against a nonconsenting mobilehome owner. The court held that rules adopted without consent under CC §798.25 must be reasonable, and a prohibition against subleasing, not contained in the lease or not adopted with the homeowner's consent, was unreasonable. It also held that a rule or restriction that affects "the very nature of the holding" and may cause the eviction of the homeowner, when applied retroactively against a homeowner whose lease does not contain that rule or restriction, is unreasonable as contrary to the stated purpose of the MRL. 26 CA4th at 1147.

Under CC §798.25(d), management may avoid the resident consultation requirement and the 6-month notice period when homeowner consent is not granted if the rule amendment is mandated by a change in law, ordinance, or government regulation. In that event, the change is effective upon homeowner consent or not less than 60 days after written notice without homeowner consent.

PRACTICE TIP: Management should encourage homeowners to read the agreement, park rules and regulations, and the Mobilehome Residency Law in their entirety. If changes must be made to the agreement or park rules, they should be interlineated and initialed on both the park management's and tenant's copies. Use of the expedited rule implementation process in CC §798.25(d) requires citation to the applicable law, ordinance, or regulation (including its section number) that necessitates the expedited amendment to the park rules and regulations.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.46 b. Limitation on Park Rules

A park rule is void and unenforceable if it purports to deny homeowners their right to a trial by jury or to mandate binding arbitration of any dispute between management and homeowners, if the rule was adopted unilaterally by management and was implemented without consent of the homeowners. CC §798.25.5.

A mobilehome park owner may not, by means of rental agreement, rule, or regulation, prohibit tenants from displaying political signs in the windows of mobilehomes; such a rule is against the public policy established by the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10). See 74 Ops Cal Atty Gen 122 (1991). This rule was codified by enactment of CC §798.51(e) (and in CC §799.10 for certain joint-ownership or resident-owned parks) regarding the nature, location, size, and duration of the posting of political campaign signs. This rule is not intended to restrict any form of political expression not associated with an election or political campaign. See Stats 2003, ch 249, §4.

For discussion of the decision in U.S. v California Mobile Home Park Mgmt. Co. (9th Cir 1994) 29 F3d 1413, holding that a park owner may be required to waive certain rules, regulations, or policies to accommodate disabled residents, see §§6.38, 6.141.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.47 6. Park Management Responsibilities

Civil Code §798.15 requires the mobilehome rental agreement to include a provision stating that park management is responsible for providing and maintaining physical improvements in the common facilities. In the event of a sudden breakdown, the management must act as soon as possible if the problem affects a health or safety condition, and generally within 30 days for other situations. CC §798.15(d). If the management substantially fails on this obligation, a private right of action for a public nuisance or an action by a designated public agency may be filed. See CC §798.87. Rules and regulations governing standards for the physical condition of common areas, and administrative remedies to rectify breach of this responsibility, are found in the Mobilehome Parks Act (MPA) (Health & S C §§18200-18700) and 25 Cal Code Regs §§1000-1758 and include an obligation to post a sign in a conspicuous place in the clubhouse or other public place identifying the name, address, and telephone number of the mobilehome ombudsman. Health & S C §18253.5(a). See §6.13. See also §6.54.

By September 1, 2010, park operators must adopt an emergency preparedness plan that includes the following:

- Posting specified emergency procedures and plans in the clubhouse or other conspicuous place;
- Providing residents with notice on how to access the park's plan; and
- Providing residents with direction to individual emergency preparation information sources.

Failure to comply is deemed an immediate risk to life, health, and safety. Health & S C §18603.

Several other provisions regulate management conduct or options. For example, management has responsibilities under the MRL regarding the maintenance of trees and driveways damaged by tree roots. See CC §§798.26, 798.37.5. See also §§6.34, 6.48. On enforcement of extracontractual duties owed by park management, see §§6.16 and 6.85-6.87. For special rules for the removal of vehicles from a homeowner's or resident's driveway or designated parking space, see CC §798.28.5(b).

Under CC §798.26, park management may not enter a mobilehome without prior written consent of the resident but may enter without consent in the event of an emergency or abandonment. Similar approval is necessary to enter an "enclosed accessory structure" on a lot. Management may enter a mobilehome lot only for specified maintenance at a reasonable time and without interfering with a resident's quiet enjoyment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.48 7. Fixtures and Alterations

Some physical improvements, e.g., trees that mature and extend into other lots or over common areas and retaining walls and gardens that change ground water flows, may create maintenance problems. Under the Mobilehome Parks Act (MPA) (Health & S C §§18200-18700), management is initially responsible for correcting any violations of the Act, and will be able to seek reimbursement only if the homeowner's obligation is clearly set forth. See §6.114.

Under leases entered into, renewed, or extended after January 1, 2001, CC §798.37.5 mandates that management is solely responsible for the maintenance or removal of all trees, including repair or root damage to streets or foundations. Residents may plant trees only after obtaining written permission from management, and residents may voluntarily (with a specified written agreement) undertake the care of trees located within their park spaces.

NOTE: Under all leases, park management may require that homeowners obtain permits from the Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) for alterations or improvements to their manufactured homes, or from HCD or the local enforcement agency for improvements to the lot (such as new cabanas, garages, etc.), and also obtain park approval of those permits if the improvements would have any impact on park operations. See, e.g., Health & S C §§18029, 18500(b). See also CC §798.16(a). This would affect, for instance, the addition of air conditioners or other significant energy using equipment, or fences and patios that may not properly follow lot lines.

Under CC §798.29.6, management must permit a homeowner or resident to install disabled access accommodations on a lot or space if they comply with the applicable building code and are installed with a permit, if required. Management may require that the accommodations installed be removed at the time the mobilehome is removed from the park or pursuant to a written agreement between the current homeowner and management prior to the completion of the resale of the mobilehome in place in the park. (For similar rules that apply in mobilehome park subdivisions or resident-owned mobilehome parks, see CC §799.11.)

© The Regents of the University of California

8. Uses and Changes of Use, Zoning, or Master Lease

§6.49 a. Disclosures

Both CC §§798.27 and 798.56 require that specific notice be given to potential homeowners before the start of the tenancy regarding the status of zoning, use permits, or changes in the master lease. The disclosure provisions in §6.101 should suffice, as long as they clearly provide the required notices, as the law is amended periodically. See also §6.57A.

© The Regents of the University of California

b. Change of Use

§6.50 (1) Definition

What constitutes a change of use of the mobilehome park, and how management should notify homeowners and other residents of the change, are among the greatest points of contention between management and park residents. That is not surprising, considering the possibility that a homeowner's investment in his or her mobilehome may be completely lost unless the mobilehome can be moved to another park, which may be more or less attractive and costly to the homeowner.

"Change of use" is defined in CC §798.10 as the management's use of any part of the park for other than the rental of sites for mobilehomes, including, but not limited to, changing to forms of space ownership such as condominiums or cooperatives. A "change of use" does not mean the adoption, amendment, or repeal of a park rule or regulation. Nor is it the vacating of one space resulting from the eviction of the tenants of that space. Keh v Walters (1997) 55 CA4th 1522, 65 CR2d 42. Some examples of acts that might be considered to be changes of use are the following:

- Closing the park and letting the land revert to open space;
- Seeking to rezone the land to industrial use;
- Allowing a renewable conditional use permit to expire and thus letting the land revert to its original zoning;
- Eliminating spaces for a swimming pool, or vice versa;
- Adding a designated area for recreational vehicles; and
- Adding factory-built housing, manufactured homes, or multifamily manufactured homes that may require a zoning change or conditional use permit under Health & S C §18611.

PRACTICE TIP: As noted in §6.13, a change in use also triggers local government impact requirements. Under Govt C §65863.7(j), a "change in use" also includes the involuntary closure of a park as a result of a local enforcement agency's decision to suspend the park's permit to operate. In that situation, however, providing the notices required by the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) is not feasible, since the notice of suspension may involve no more than 30 days' notice by the enforcement agency. See Health & S C §§18510-18518.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.51 (2) Implementation

§6.51 (2) Implementation

Implementation of a change of use is governed by CC §§798.27 and 798.56(g). If park management is not careful to observe the minimum requirements of these sections, it may face liability, be unable to evict homeowners at the termination of their rental agreements, or be prevented from proceeding with the change. See Keh v Walters (1997) 55 CA4th 1522, 65 CR2d 42. An effort to keep homeowners informed of the change may result in more cooperation as the change occurs. Notice requirements vary, depending on the type of change intended:

- Change of use that does not require local government use permit or zoning amendment. Notice to homeowners must be given 12 months before the change. CC §798.56(g)(2). The written notice must disclose and describe in detail the nature of the proposed change of use.
- Change of use that requires local government use permit or zoning amendment. Different notices are required at three separate stages of the conversion process (see form in §6.116):
- Management must give the homeowners at least 15 days' written notice that it will appear before a local government board to request a permit for the change in zoning or use. CC §798.56(g)(1). If several hearings are required for such a procedure, management should provide a new 15-day notice for each hearing.
- Management must give homeowners 30 days' written notice of the change in zoning or use. CC §798.27(b).
- If the use permit or zoning change will require termination of the tenancy, management must provide at least 6 months' notice of the termination of the tenancy. CC §798.56(g)(2). This notice may not be given, however, until all required permits have been approved. CC §798.56(g)(2).
- Change in, or termination of, a master lease. The Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) explicitly requires management to give 30 days' notice to all homeowners regarding a change in a master lease (under which the management operates the park). CC §798.27(b). However, the rental agreement must clearly disclose any anticipated changes or the termination date of the master lease.

If management intends to change the use of part of the park, the same procedures should apply.

Some local jurisdictions have enacted special mobilehome park conversion ordinances to govern the rights and responsibilities of park owners and homeowners. These may require payment of fair market value to displaced homeowners or the taking of additional steps concerning displacement and relocation. These ordinances may also impose certain physical maintenance or improvement standards as a condition of conversion. See Information Bulletin 2008-10, "Validity of Local Ordinances Relating to Installation of New Manufactured Homes and/or Sale or Conversion of Mobilehome Parks" (Apr. 21, 2008), issued by the state Department of Housing and Community Development, challenging the authority of local governments to impose these standards (http://www.hcd.ca.gov/codes/mp/info_bulls/IB08-LocalOrdinances-4-21.pdf).

A change of use to "resident ownership" may be initiated by the owner of the park or the residents. The consequences of such a conversion on residents, e.g., losing the protection of rent controls and/or not being able to afford to buy into the park, can be significant. Previously, local governments used their authority under Govt C §§66427.4 and 66427.5 to mitigate these impacts both during and after the conversion period. In El Dorado Palm Springs, Ltd. v City of Palm Springs (2002) 96 CA4th 1153, 118 CR2d 15, the court of appeal ruled against such ordinances when conversions to resident ownership occur. It held that §66427.4 applied only to changes of use to nonmobilehome park uses that displace the existing park residents and require relocation of mobilehomes, and that §66427.5 applied only to subdivisions created to convert a rental mobilehome park to a resident-owned mobilehome park, without regard to which party initiated the conversion. It also held that the conversion was complete on the sale of the first lot, cutting off the protections of the local rent control ordinance at that time.

The El Dorado Palm Springs decision, however, was expressly overruled by the legislature (see Stats 2002, ch 1143, §§2-3) in amending Govt C §66427.5 to require a "survey of support" of the residents (according to prescribed procedures) for submission to the local government. Uncodified legislative findings state:

> SEC. 2. It is the intent of the Legislature to address the conversion of a mobilehome park to resident ownership that is not a bona fide resident conversion, as described by the Court of Appeal in El Dorado

Palm Springs, Ltd. v City of Palm Springs (2002) 96 CA4th 1153[, 118 CR2d 15]. The court in this case concluded that the subdivision map approval process specified in Section 66427.5 of the Government Code may not provide local agencies with the authority to prevent nonbona fide resident conversions. The court explained how a conversion of a mobilehome park to resident ownership could occur without the support of the residents and result in economic displacement. It is, therefore, the intent of the Legislature in enacting this act to ensure that conversions pursuant to Section 66427.5 of the Government Code are bona fide resident conversions.

SEC. 3. The changes in law enacted by this act shall not apply to any application for parcel map approval for conversion of a rental mobilehome park to resident ownership approved by the local agency under Section 66427.5 of the Government Code prior to January 1, 2003.

In Surf & Sands, LLC v City of Capitola (ND Cal, Feb. 13, 2008, No. 07-05043) 2008 US Dist Lexis 14640, the park owner challenged several city ordinances regulating mobilehome park rents, closures, and conversions. Holding that the challenges to the rent control and closure ordinances were barred by the statute of limitations, the court also held that the challenge to the conversion ordinance was not ripe because the park had not sought compensation through state procedures (see §6.15). It also held that the claim was not ripe because the park had not complied with the prescribed preconversion requirements, such as the resident survey.

In Sequoia Park Assocs. v County of Sonoma (2009) 176 CA4th 1270, 98 CR3d 669, the park owner challenged an ordinance that imposed procedural and substantive requirements in excess of those in Govt C §66427.5. While acknowledging the county's laudable goals and that the county's construction of §66427.5 had "some plausibility," the court held that the ordinance was both expressly and impliedly preempted by the state statute and therefore invalid. 176 CA4th at 1301.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.52 (3) Failure to Follow Procedures

Because the legislature requires detailed notices for changes in the status of parks, it might be appropriate for a court to enjoin a change of use, rather than to grant a mere award of statutory penalties or to deny an eviction, if management fails to follow any required procedures. If the park has been expanded, or factory-built housing or a swimming pool has been added, such an injunction would be an expensive penalty for the negligent or intentional failure to give proper notice of the change.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.53 c. Sale of the Park

Under CC §798.80, the owner of a mobilehome park who lists or offers the park for sale must provide written notice by first class mail or personal delivery to a qualified resident organization that has furnished the owner or park manager with written notice that the park residents are interested in purchasing the park. The notice must be given not more than 1 year nor less than 30 days before the listing or offer to sell. Failure to provide the required notice may subject the owner to a civil action under CC §§798.85-798.87, but does not affect the validity of a transfer of title to the park. Specified types of transfers are excepted from the provisions of CC §798.80 under CC §798.80(e)(1)-(7).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/ 9. Sale or Lease of Mobilehomes/ §6.54 a. Management Rights and Duties

9. Sale or Lease of Mobilehomes

§6.54 a. Management Rights and Duties

Civil Code §798.71(a)(2) gives park management the right to require a homeowner to advise management in writing if his or her manufactured home or mobilehome is for sale.

Civil Code §798.74 gives park management the right to require

- prior approval of a prospective homeowner's purchase of a mobilehome that will remain in the park; and
- notice of the sale by the selling homeowner to management before closing the sale.

Subject to the exception discussed in §6.58, management may not require removal of a mobilehome from the park if sold to a third party during the term of a rental agreement or, beginning January 1, 2004, during the 60-day period of a notice of termination issued under CC §798.55(b). For a discussion of removal of a mobilehome after sale, see §6.58.

Civil Code §§798.73(d) and 798.83 allow management to require a seller to make repairs or improvements to a park space or property owned by management if there is damage that was caused by the actions or negligence of the homeowner or an agent of the homeowner. The management may only require the seller to make repairs, rather than the buyer, and repairable items must be an exterior part of the mobilehome or its accessory structure, and must be based on an enforceable rule, ordinance, statute, or regulation. Within 10 days of a seller's request for a summary of repairs or improvements that management requires, management must provide the list. CC §798.73.5.

Management may withhold approval if the sale would violate a park rule limiting residency to adults. CC §798.76. But see §6.18 for discussion of decisions construing CC §798.76.

Often, the sale of a mobilehome will result in the "pull-out" of the existing mobilehome and its replacement with a new mobilehome. Management may impose reasonable requirements regarding the size, design, electrical amperage requirements, and nature of the new mobilehome (see CC §798.56(d)) if these standards are in the park rules and regulations and are disclosed to the potential purchaser (see CC §§798.24, 798.74.5, 798.75.5). See also 25 Cal Code Regs §1031(c) (requiring park operator's approval for installation of, or alterations to, units that affect the park's electrical, fuel, gas, or plumbing systems). No new mobilehome may be installed in a park unless management signs and approves the plot plan accompanying the installation permit submitted to the Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) or the local enforcement agency that, among other things, certifies that the home and its installation comply with all applicable laws and regulations. See 25 Cal Code Regs §1020(a)(4)(B). If the park is in a state or local government-established high fire hazard severity area, management should disclose this to the prospective buyer and mandate compliance with the applicable ignition-resistant construction requirements for the home and accessory structures. See 25 Cal Code Regs §§1032(b)-(c), 1322, 1426. For mapping information, see http://www.fire.ca.gov/fire_prevention/fire_prevention_wildland.php; for construction requirements, see the "Wildland Urban Interface" requirements and information at http://www.hcd.ca.gov/codes/mhp/. Because these regulations create only minimum standards (25 Cal Code Regs §§1322, 1426), park management may impose higher ignition-resistant construction requirements for the mobilehome or accessory structures than may be required by laws and regulations, if those requirements are reasonable and are disclosed in the park rules and regulations. CC §§798.24, 798.56(d).

If a prospective purchaser so requests, park management must reveal what information the purchaser must furnish to be accepted as an occupant. Within 15 business days of receiving the information, management must notify, in writing, both seller and purchaser of the management's acceptance or rejection of the purchaser and the reasons for any rejection. During these 15 days, the purchaser must comply with management's request for a personal interview. CC §798.74(a). See lease clause in form 6.117-1.

The size, content, and location of "for sale" and "open house" signs are explicitly regulated by the MRL, CC §798.70. See also CC §799.1.5 for analogous requirements in manufactured home subdivisions and resident-owned parks.

If park management has been advised that a mobilehome is for sale, management must provide a statutory notice entitled "INFORMATION FOR PROSPECTIVE HOMEOWNERS," as specified in CC §798.74.5(a) (see form in §6.54A), to prospective purchasers within 2 business days of a request. On that request, management also must provide a copy of the park lease or rental agreement, the park rules, and the MRL. CC §798.74.5. This is in addition to the disclosure requirement of CC §798.75.5. See §6.24.

NOTE: Under CC §798.76, any mobilehome park rule or regulation limiting residency based on age requirements for housing for older persons must comply with the federal Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 (Pub L 100-430, 102 Stat 1619) (see 42 USC §§3604, 3607), which prohibits discrimination against families with minor children (see §§2.22-2.25, 6.18). Under CC §798.76, mobilehome park rules must also comply with further amendments to the federal Fair Housing Act (Pub L 104-76, 109 Stat 787).

Under CC §798.19.5, a new or renewal rental agreement entered into on or after January 1, 2006, may not include a provision that grants the park owner a first right of refusal for a manufactured home being sold in the park to a third party. However, a separate agreement may be negotiated for this purpose.

See also CC §799.5 for similar provisions on mobilehome subdivisions, cooperatives, condominiums, and resident-owned parks.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.54A b. Form: Information for Prospective Homeowners

§6.54A b. Form: Information for Prospective Homeowners

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

INFORMATION FOR PROSPECTIVE HOMEOWNERS

As a prospective homeowner you are being provided with certain information you should know prior to applying for tenancy in a mobilehome park. This is not meant to be a complete list of information. Owning a home in a mobilehome park incorporates the dual role of "homeowner" (the owner of the home) and park resident or tenant (also called a "homeowner" in the Mobilehome Residency Law). As a homeowner under the Mobilehome Residency Law, you will be responsible for paying the amount necessary to rent the space for your home, in addition to other fees and charges described below. You must also follow certain rules and regulations to reside in the park.

If you are approved for tenancy, and your tenancy commences within the next 30 days, your beginning monthly rent will be $_ _[dollar amount]_ _ for _ _[park space number]_ _. Additional information regarding future rent or fee increases may also be provided.

In addition to the monthly rent, you will be obligated to pay to the park the following additional fees and charges listed below. Other fees or charges may apply depending upon your specific requests. Metered utility charges are based on use.

[Describe in a list fee(s) or charge(s) and good faith estimate of each fee or charge]

Some spaces are governed by an ordinance, rule, regulation, or initiative measure that limits or restricts rents in mobilehome parks. Long-term leases specify rent increases during the term of the lease. By signing a rental agreement or lease for a term of more than one year, you may be removing your rental space from a local rent control ordinance during the term, or any extension, of the lease if a local rent control ordinance is in effect for the area in which the space is located.

A fully executed lease or rental agreement, or a statement signed by the park's management and by you stating that you and the management have agreed to the terms and conditions of a rental agreement, is required to complete the sale or escrow process of the home. You have no rights to tenancy without a properly executed lease or agreement or that statement. Civil Code Section 798.75.

If the management collects a fee or charge from you in order to obtain a financial report or credit rating, the full amount of the fee or charge will be either credited toward your first month's rent or, if you are rejected for any reason, refunded to you. However, if you are approved by management, but, for whatever reason, you elect not to purchase the mobilehome, the management may retain the fee to defray its administrative costs. Civil Code Section 798.74.

We encourage you to request from management a copy of the lease or rental agreement, the park's rules and regulations, and a copy of the Mobilehome Residency Law. Upon request, park management will provide you a copy of each document. We urge you to read these documents before making the decision that you want to become a mobilehome park resident.

Date: _ _ _ _ _ _

_ _[Name of Park Manager]_ _, a _ _[specify entity, e.g., California corporation]_ _

By: __[Signature]__
Name: _ _[Typed name]_ _
Its: _ _[Title]_ _

Acknowledgment of Receipt by Prospective Homeowner:

Date: _ _ _ _ _ _ __[Signature of Prospective Homeowner]__
_ _[Typed name]_ _

Comment: This form must be printed in 12-point type or font, is completely separate from the mobilehome park agreement, and is required to be given to prospective purchasers by park management under CC §798.74.5(a) when a mobilehome installed in the park is being marketed for sale. See discussion in §6.54. It became mandatory on October 1, 2004.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.55 c. Limitations on Right to Withhold Approval

Civil Code §798.74 also limits the grounds on which management can withhold approval for a sale to either of the following:

- The purchaser does not have the financial ability to pay the rent and charges of the park.
- Management reasonably determines, based on the purchaser's prior tenancies, that he or she will not comply with the rules and regulations of the park.

The rights of surviving heirs and joint tenants to sell the mobilehome are protected by CC §798.78; the rights of repossessing legal owners are governed by CC §798.79. (Note that CC §798.79 requires a foreclosing legal owner or junior lienholder to fulfill the prior homeowner's rent and other financial responsibilities. (Additional rights and obligations of legal owners and junior lienholders with respect to notice requirements and financial obligations after a default declared by park management are provided in CC §798.56a.) See also Castaneda v Olsher (2007) 41 C4th 1205, 1218, 63 CR3d 99, which cautions mobilehome park owners on their duty regarding the selection of tenants and the lack of authority to withhold approval of tenants because of suspicion of gang affiliation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.56 d. Failure to Execute Rental Agreement

Under CC §798.75(b), a purchaser who fails to execute a rental agreement has no "rights of tenancy." Unfortunately, the reference to "no rights of tenancy" is ambiguous. Does it mean that the purchaser and his or her mobilehome are trespassers? Is the purchaser a tenant at will, subject to a 30-day termination notice? Because CC §798.75 does not acknowledge a landlord-tenant relationship between management and the purchaser, an unlawful detainer action cannot be used to remove the purchaser and the mobilehome. The Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) requires service of an antecedent 5-day notice to quit (see CC §798.75(c)), and it is believed that the proper procedure is to pursue a forcible detainer action (the "unlawful occupant shall be subject to the proceedings set forth in Chapter 4 (commencing with Section 1159) of Title 3 of Part 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure" (CCP §§1159-1179a)) as the proper summary remedy to evict the unlawful occupant. If the purchaser refuses to execute a new rental agreement or to move the mobilehome (see §6.117), an action for ejectment of the purchaser and the mobilehome is also available, but such an action is more time-consuming, costly, and cumbersome than the forcible detainer remedy.

PRACTICE TIP: Because courts and attorneys are generally unfamiliar with forcible detainer procedures, management's counsel should brief all issues carefully for trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.57 e. Management's Role in Sales or Listings

Management may not show a manufactured home or mobilehome or list it for sale without first obtaining "the owner's written authorization. The authorization shall include the terms and conditions of the showing or listing." CC §798.71(a)(1). Although this language is ambiguous, it presumably means the registered owner's authorization, rather than the legal owner's. Management also may not prohibit the listing or sale of a manufactured home or mobilehome in the park, and may not, as a condition of approval of the buyer, require that the selling homeowner, the homeowner's estate, or joint tenant authorize the management, or any other specified broker, dealer, or person, to act as the agent in the sale of a home. CC §798.71(b)-(c). Beginning January 1, 2010, park management may not require a homeowner who is replacing a mobilehome on a space in the park to use a specific broker, dealer, or other person as an agent in the purchase or installation of the mobilehome. CC §798.71(d).

The extent of management's involvement in any sale is also limited, unless management or its agent is licensed as a "salesperson" or a "dealer" under Health & S C §§18045-18066.5. This limitation is generally interpreted to mean that management may provide service in a sale, but may not involve itself in the "business" of selling mobilehomes without a license. In general, if the service fee accrues to the park, the management's assistance is considered to be a "service"; if the fee accrues to the manager, the assistance is viewed as a "business." For more specific licensing requirements, management should contact the local office of the Department of Housing and Community Development.

Management may not charge a purchasing or selling homeowner, heir, joint tenant, or personal representative a transfer or sales fee as a condition of the sale, unless management performs a service in the sale. CC §798.72. See also People v Mel Mack Co. (1975) 53 CA3d 621, 126 CR 505. No such services may be performed without a written request by the homeowner or his or her agent. In Vance v Villa Park Mobilehome Estates (1995) 36 CA4th 698, 42 CR2d 723, the court held that a provision in a lease increasing rent on assignment did not constitute a transfer fee in violation of CC §798.72.

If the park manager assists the seller in the sale of the mobilehome, management should be careful that there is no suggestion of illegality in the use of "net listings." In a net listing, the seller sets the price at which he or she is willing to sell the property, and the agent's compensation is any amount received over the specified figure. Net listings are strictly regulated under Health & S C §§18014.5 (defining "net listing") and 18060.5(i) and (l) (establishing the written disclosure requirements for licensed mobilehome dealers or persons acting as dealers without a license). See California Real Property Sales Transactions §§2.63 and 2.136 (4th ed Cal CEB 2007) for discussion of brokers' net listings.

Management should not use sales of mobilehomes to avoid the application of rent controls. One park owner was found liable for over $1 million in restitution and penalties as a result of forcing buyers to assume "sham" leases of a local mobilehome dealer who never lived in the park but executed long-term leases with mandatory built-in rent increases significantly in excess of those allowed by the local rent control law. See People v Beaumont Invs., Ltd. (2003) 111 CA4th 102, 3 CR3d 429.

PRACTICE TIP: In the event of misrepresentation or fraud or several other specified statutory violations in the purchase or sale of a mobilehome or manufactured home, the seller or buyer may be entitled to reimbursement from the Manufactured Home Recovery Fund ("MHRF") for actual and direct losses plus court costs and attorney fees. The substantive and procedural requirements are set forth in Health & S C §§18070-18070.7, and claims against the fund have a 2-year limitations period.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.57A f. Seller Disclosures

Most sellers of manufactured housing units or mobilehomes must disclose to the buyer specific information about the condition of the unit. CC §§1102(b), 1102.6d. The seller of a mobilehome located in a mobilehome park is required by CC §798.74.4 to comply with the mobilehome disclosure requirements in Article 1.5 (commencing with §1102 of the Civil Code, including but not limited to the disclosure statement form in CC §1102.6d. See also §6.24.

Delivery of the disclosure statement may not be waived in an "as is" sale (CC §1102.1(b)), and the requirement explicitly applies to sellers who are not licensed salespersons (CC §1102.1(c)). Transactions exempt from this requirement are listed in CC §1102.2, and requirements related to the timing of the disclosure and required rescission period are in CC §1102.3a.

Even without a disclosure, however, the sale of a substandard mobilehome or manufactured home is illegal. Health & S C §18025. A substandard mobilehome or manufactured home cannot be occupied or used in a park. Health & S C §18550.

Sellers must provide a declaration as part of the sales transaction that there is an operable certified smoke alarm in every sleeping room of a mobilehome or manufactured home. Health & S C §18029.6. Under Health & S C §18031.7(d), hot water tanks must have warnings on them distinguishing those that use natural gas from those that use liquefied petroleum gas. The code also requires that water heaters in mobilehomes or manufactured homes be seismically strapped, anchored, or braced and that regulations be adopted to ensure compliance. Health & S C §18031.7(e)-(g).

Disclosure of a mobilehome's age, condition, and ability to remain in the park created a new issue after September 1, 2008. All new mobilehomes installed, and most existing mobilehomes relocated or altered, in mobilehome parks that are in specified high fire hazard areas must meet new Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) ignition-resistant construction standards. See 25 Cal Code Regs §§4200-4216.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.58 g. Required Removal of Mobilehome After Sale

Park management may not require the removal of a mobilehome from the park in the event of its sale to a third party during the term of the homeowner's rental agreement or within the 60-day period following a termination notice given under CC §798.55(b)(1). See CC §798.73. As many parks "upgrade" to newer or double-wide mobilehomes and remove substandard units, however, the problem of requiring purchasers to remove mobilehomes that do not conform can be critical. Under CC §798.73, management's discretion in removing homes after sale to a third party is limited to those that are:

- Not "mobilehomes" within the meaning of CC §798.3;
- More than 20 years old (or more than 25 years old if manufactured after September 15, 1971), 20 feet wide or more, and not in compliance with specified construction and safety standards prescribed by the Health and Safety Code following inspection by the appropriate enforcement agency, as defined in Health & S C §18207; or
- More than 17 years old (or more than 25 years old if manufactured after September 15, 1971), less than 20 feet wide, and not in compliance with specified construction and safety standards prescribed by the Health and Safety Code following inspection by the appropriate enforcement agency, as defined in Health & S C §18207.

After receiving notice from a mobilehome owner of the anticipated sale of the mobilehome, park management may require its removal on sale if it is "in a significantly rundown condition or in disrepair." CC §798.73(d). Effective January 1, 2008, management is prohibited from requiring a mobilehome's removal unless management has provided the homeowner with a notice "particularly specifying" the condition that permits requiring removal of the mobilehome. CC §798.73(e).

WARNING: This subjective determination of the condition of the mobilehome may lead to litigation or a frayed relationship between management and the seller, or between management and the seller's friends in the park.

What will constitute a condition that is significant enough to allow removal (as well as adequate specificity of that condition in the notice) will ultimately be decided by the courts. Civil Code §798.73(d) requires that management use "reasonable discretion" and bear the burden of proof in establishing the condition of the mobilehome. In determining whether a mobilehome can be removed because it is in a significantly run-down condition or in disrepair, management may not consider repairs and improvements needed for park space or property owned by management, except for damage caused by the homeowner. CC §798.73(d). Courts are likely to rule that a mobilehome would have to be a serious health hazard to be removed on this basis. See §6.117.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.59 10. Cotenants, Sublessees, and Subsequent Tenants

New homeowners have no statutory right to assume the benefit of an existing rental agreement by subletting, assignment, or otherwise, but a homeowner may rent out or sublet his or her home under CC §798.23.5 in the event of particular exigencies and subject to specified requirements. See §6.61. Although the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) prescribes the rental application requirements that apply to a new purchaser of a mobilehome remaining in a park (CC §798.74; see §§6.54-6.56), no statutes govern park management's acceptance of cotenants, subleases, or subsequent tenants after sale of a mobilehome. For discussion of sublessees, see §6.61. Civil Code §§798.34-798.35 merely limit fees prescribed for certain co-tenants, guests, or members of a family. It seems clear, however, that management may require guests or additional members of a tenant's family to execute a rental agreement if they remain on the premises as tenants. See also §§6.20, 6.117-6.118.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.60 a. Cotenants

An argument can be made that management cannot require that the pre-existing rental agreement be supplemented with the addition of further persons merely because they are residing on the premises. It is likely that the unstated contemplation of the parties in the first instance was that additional guests would be permissible or even expected to reside in the mobilehome. Assuming that there was no original understanding that additional guests would be required to become bound to the terms of the rental agreement, there may be a "pre-existing duty" issue that would render any demand for additional obligors' agreement to a lease to be unenforceable. It is also arguable that even a demand that additional persons assume the duties of the agreement would be impermissible.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.61 b. Sublessees

Although many park rental agreements prohibit subleasing, mobile-home owners have the right to rent out or sublet their homes if a medical emergency or medical treatment requires an owner to be absent from his or her home and the medical conditions are confirmed by an attending physician. CC §798.23.5. This right is subject to several specific requirements, including generally limiting the term to 6 to 12 months and allowing park management to require approval of a prospective renter or sublessee consistent with CC §798.74, restrictions on the amount of rent the homeowner may charge, and other restrictions.

PRACTICE TIP: Both homeowner and park management attorneys should be careful in implementing this section, given several ambiguities and the financial penalties that may accrue for willful violations. For example, it is unclear whether the "attending physician" must be an M.D., whether the 6-to-12-month terms can be extended or renewed if the medical condition continues, whether maintenance and park fees—in addition to space rent—may be charged by the homeowner, what a "legal representative" is for the purpose of the information to be provided to management, and how to ascertain that the home is the "primary residence."

In other situations, the terms of the rental agreement should probably be renegotiated before a sublessee takes possession, if the right to sublease was not within the scope of homeowners' general rights at the inception of the rental agreement; otherwise, the new occupant could be denied a rental agreement and thus status as a homeowner. On the other hand, a periodic tenancy may be amended on proper notice. Thus, under CC §827 (for the rental agreement) and CC §798.25 (for rules and regulations), some attorneys representing park management argue that management is free to amend both types of residency documents to require additional terms. Although this may be the case for park rules and regulations, counsel representing homeowners argue that CC §827's applicability is preempted by the Mobilehome Residency Law's coverage of rental agreements (periodic and otherwise). See Gregory v City of San Juan Capistrano (1983) 142 CA3d 72, 191 CR 47, overruled on other grounds in Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 686 n43, 209 CR 682. It must be remembered, however, that rules cannot be changed unilaterally unless the amendment is reasonable and management agrees to meet and confer with homeowners, except when the rule change is mandated by a change in a law, ordinance, or regulation. CC §798.25; see §§6.45, 6.112, 6.141-6.143.

PRACTICE TIP: Because this standard is unclear, attorneys should be cautious about advising landlords and tenants concerning unilateral modifications of residency documents.

Management's ability to change the terms of a rental agreement may be critical when a cotenant or sublessee becomes part of an existing long-term lease in which the terms are no longer favorable to management. In Rancho Santa Paula Mobilehome Park v Evans (1994) 26 CA4th 1139, 32 CR2d 464, the court held that park management could not retroactively enforce a new rule prohibiting subleasing against a nonconsenting mobilehome owner. The court rejected management's argument that the rule was valid because new park rules can be adopted without the mobilehome owner's consent under CC §798.25. The court held that rules adopted without consent under CC §798.25 must be reasonable and that a prohibition against subleasing, not contained in the lease or adopted with the homeowner's consent, was unreasonable. See also §6.112.

PRACTICE TIP: A landlord may inadvertently assume significant liability for undertaking illegal actions to support a homeowner's eviction of a sublessee or other third party beneficiary of a lease. See Spinks v Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments (2009) 171 CA4th 1004, 90 CR3d 453.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Statutory Remedies in Mobilehome Park Tenancies

1. Termination of Tenancy

§6.62 a. Scope of MRL

The Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) governs the relationship between a park resident (defined by CC §798.11 as "a homeowner or other person who lawfully occupies a mobilehome") and the mobilehome park. "Mobilehomes" are defined at CC §798.3, and "mobilehome parks are defined at CC §798.4. See §§6.1-6.4. The tenancy termination provisions of the MRL (see CC §§798.55-798.60) apply to evictions of persons defined as "homeowners" of mobilehomes installed in mobilehome parks, i.e., those who have entered into rental agreements with the park management to locate mobilehomes within the park. The MRL limits the reasons for termination and requires a longer notice period (see §§6.63-6.74) than in an ordinary termination (see chap 8).

The eviction protections given to homeowners in the MRL do not apply to an occupant of a mobilehome who does not have a tenancy agreement with the park. A resident-subtenant who occupies an installed mobilehome under an agreement with the owner of the mobilehome, rather than with the park management, may be evicted by the mobilehome owner only under the unlawful detainer statutes (CCP §§1159-1179a; see chaps 8-9), and management's remedy is to terminate the homeowner's tenancy and evict the homeowner (in accordance with the MRL and the unlawful detainer statutes) in order to evict the subtenant.

WARNING: An owner of a recreational vehicle or park trailer located in a recreational vehicle park is entitled to eviction protections if the vehicle has been in the park pursuant to a tenancy that is continuous for 9 or more consecutive months. See CC §§798.3(b), 799.70.

Park management's failure to observe the tenancy termination provisions of the MRL strictly may result in dismissal of an unlawful detainer action and force management to begin the 60-day notice procedure over again. Moreover, attorney fees may be assessed against the losing party. CC §798.85.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.63 b. Permissible Grounds

The permissible grounds for eviction of a homeowner are specified in CC §§798.56(a)-(g). See §§6.64-6.70.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.64 (1) Failure to Comply With Laws

Eviction is permitted if the homeowner or resident fails to comply, within a reasonable time after notice of noncompliance by a government agency, with a local ordinance, state law, or regulation relating to mobilehomes. CC §798.56(a). Common examples of this type of noncompliance include:

- Creating or permitting the existence of defective conditions in or around the mobilehome;
- Installing an illegal structure; and
- Creating a nuisance.

Eviction on the ground of failure to comply with the law requires prior notice to the homeowner by a government agency, and management must also allow a reasonable time after notice for repair or correction of the breach. Notice should also be provided to the registered owner of the mobilehome if the mobilehome has been sublet to the resident.

PRACTICE TIP: An attorney recommending use of this ground for eviction should ensure that the homeowner or resident has in fact failed to comply with government orders. Health and Safety Code §18420 and the implementing regulations (25 Cal Code Regs §§1600-1758) provide numerous opportunities for hearings, appeals, and extensions of compliance dates (for causes such as weather conditions, illness, lack of availability of repair persons, or lack of available financial resources) deferring the date of a default in compliance.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.65 (2) Conduct Constituting Substantial Annoyance

Conduct of a homeowner or resident on park premises that constitutes a substantial annoyance to other tenants is also grounds for eviction. CC §798.56(b). This ground for eviction does not give the homeowner an opportunity to cure the breach. Accordingly, this ground should be used only in situations where the homeowner's conduct is so outrageous that it would not be appropriate to give the homeowner a "second chance." Since this ground for eviction requires proof that the homeowner's conduct constituted a substantial annoyance to other residents, it should not be used unless affected tenants are willing to testify at trial. However, given the "unique protection" finding expressed by the legislature in CC §798.55(a), if the "substantial annoyance" is not considered substantial enough by a judge seeking to mitigate this forfeiture, some tenant attorneys argue that the judge could find the tenant should have been given an opportunity to cure the breach.

The intention to provide "unique protection" to mobilehome tenants may influence a court to deny forfeiture or termination of a mobilehome term tenancy or month-to-month tenancy. When subjective grounds are the basis for an eviction (e.g., conduct constituting "substantial annoyance" to other tenants), a higher standard of proof may be required than otherwise anticipated. See CC §798.56(b). Attorneys should be prepared to provide adequate proof of "good cause" for eviction. See §7.54.

PRACTICE TIP: Some park attorneys advise park owners to give the offending homeowner notice and an opportunity to cure even though it is not required under §798.56(b). This documents the occurrences of "substantial annoyance" and makes the unlawful detainer action much more difficult to defend.

A related issue, the basis for determining a park owner's duty and liability to a tenant or third party due to another resident's behavior, is similarly affected by the restrictions in CC §§798.56-798.57. See Castaneda v Olsher (2007) 41 C4th 1205, 1219 n4, 63 CR3d 99, discussing the shooting of one park resident by another resident alleged to be a gang member and the burden of a "good cause" eviction. The court affirmed summary judgment in favor of the park owner in a liability action by the injured resident; the court held that facts known to the owner did not make a violent episode sufficiently foreseeable as to require the owner to evict the gang member.

WARNING: There is no indication in Castaneda that the court intended to apply the tort standard used in liability actions as a minimum standard for eviction based on substantial annoyance under CC §798.56(b). Castaneda deals with traditional tort standards and whether conduct—or potential conduct—is reasonably foreseeable so as to impose liability for harm to a third party, whereas evictions occur within established landlord-tenant law standards, such as whether the conduct—or potential conduct—results in a duty by the owner to mitigate a breach of quiet enjoyment for other tenants. If the same standard were to apply to both, park owners might not be able to exercise the remedy of eviction until harm actually occurred.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.66 (3) Conviction for Specified Crimes

A homeowner or resident may be evicted if convicted of prostitution, certain specified violent crimes, or a felony controlled-substance offense and if the act was committed anywhere in the park, including within a mobilehome. However, the tenancy may not be terminated if the person convicted of the offense permanently vacates the mobilehome. CC §798.56(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.67 (4) Failure to Comply With Park Rules and Regulations

Failure of a homeowner or resident to comply with a reasonable park rule or regulation (see §§6.45-6.46, 6.141-6.142) also provides grounds for eviction. CC §798.56(d). This could include violations of park rules applicable only to homeowners receiving assistance under public affordable housing or replacement housing programs. Consistent with loan or grant requirements imposed on the park operator, these may include noncompliance with certain income standards (e.g., the low income housing tax credit program, Health & S C §§50199.4-50199.18), not maintaining employment in certain occupations such as agricultural labor (Health & S C §§17021.6, 50517.5), or violating loan program requirements prohibiting subletting when benefits are specific to individuals, such as federal Section 8 vouchers. Failure of the resident to comply with these requirements may also subject management to potential penalties under the housing programs in which resident compliance is the responsibility of the housing operator. See §6.15A for a discussion of the relationship between the federal Section 8 program and local rent control ordinances if the park owner seeks to terminate participation in the Section 8 program.

The rule or regulation must be reasonable and must be stated (or incorporated) in the rental agreement or later amendments to the agreement. Management must provide the homeowner with a 7-day notice to cure the breach. After three notices have been given in 1 year for the same breach, no written notice to cure the breach is required for a subsequent violation of the same rule or regulation.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.68 (5) Nonpayment of Rent or Charges for Services or Utilities

§6.68 (5) Nonpayment of Rent or Charges for Services or Utilities

Failure of a homeowner to pay rent, utility charges, or reasonable incidental service charges is grounds for eviction. CC §798.56(e). However, rent may not be "due" or "late" if the park's permit to operate is suspended or has lapsed. See §6.16. A 3-day written notice to cure the breach must be given to the homeowner. The legal owner, any junior lienholder, or the registered owner of the mobilehome, if other than the homeowner, has the right to cure the breach on behalf of the homeowner for 30 days, but has that right only twice during a 12-month period. Thereafter, the mobilehome will be subject to eviction. The 3-day notice to cure a default in rent, utility charges, or reasonable incidental service charges is not required if the homeowner has received such a notice at least three times during the preceding 12-month period; in that event, management may give a 60-day, noncurable notice.

NOTE: Under CC §798.56(e)(1), a 3-day nonpayment notice to pay rent or quit (see, e.g., §8.41) must contain the following paragraph at the top of the notice in at least 12-point boldface type and with the blanks filled in.

WARNING: This notice is the _ _[e.g., first/second/third]_ _ three-day (3-day) notice for nonpayment of rent, utility charges, or other reasonable incidental services that has been served on you in the last 12 months. Pursuant to Civil Code §798.56(e)(5), if you have been given a 3-day notice either to pay rent, utility charges, or other reasonable incidental services or to vacate your tenancy on three or more occasions within a 12-month period, management is not required to give you a further 3-day period to pay rent or vacate the tenancy before your tenancy can be terminated.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.69 (6) Condemnation of Park

If the park is condemned, homeowners and residents may be evicted. CC §798.56(f).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.70 (7) Change of Use of Park; Closure of Park

If there is a change of use of the park or any portion of it, homeowners and residents may be evicted. CC §798.55(g). For discussion of special notice requirements, see §6.51. See also Keh v Walters (1997) 55 CA4th 1522, 65 CR2d 42 ("change of use" as implied by this subdivision does not arise when owner merely evicts tenant to create vacant space); Sequoia Park Assocs. v County of Sonoma (2009) 176 CA4th 1270, 98 CR3d 669 (authority of cities and counties to enact ordinances related to conversion of parks to resident ownership). With certain exceptions (see, e.g., Govt C §65863.7(f)-(g)), when a government agency causes the closure or change of use, the government agency, and not the park owner, is required to prepare the necessary relocation impact report and provide the relocation benefits, if any. See, e.g., Govt C §65863.7(i). See also §§6.13, 6.50.

If a government agency causes the change of use and requires the park management to provide less than 1 year's notice, the government agency may mitigate the management's liability to the homeowners for the shorter notice. For example, homeowners may be entitled to relocation benefits if the closure is a result of redevelopment agency activity (Health & S C §§33410-33418), activities with certain state or local government financing (Govt C §7260), or a stipulation in an eminent domain action in which the condemning entity agrees to pay relocation benefits to the homeowners. However, a park closure as a result of code enforcement activity because park management has not complied with public health and safety requirements does not impose any relocation obligations on government agencies, because it is the park management's failure to comply with legal requirements that resulted in the closure of a park with less than 12 months' notice. (For analogous obligations of property owners to provide relocation benefits in the event of code enforcement displacement, see Health & S C §§17062, 17980.7.)

© The Regents of the University of California

c. Impermissible Grounds

§6.71 (1) Grounds Established by MRL

Civil Code §798.58 expressly prohibits termination of a tenancy for the purpose of making a homeowner's site available for a person who purchases or proposes to purchase, or rents or proposes to rent, a mobilehome from the park owner or its agent. Other impermissible grounds for eviction are not stated in the MRL, but may be found in a variety of other laws. See, e.g., §§6.14-6.18, 6.72. For permissible grounds peculiar to mobilehomes, see CC §798.56. See §§6.64-6.70.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.72 (2) Retaliation

An eviction in retaliation for a tenant's exercise of protected rights would clearly be impermissible. See Barela v Superior Court (1981) 30 C3d 244, 178 CR 618; Rich v Schwab (1998) 63 CA4th 803, 75 CR2d 170; §6.17. The prohibition against evicting a tenant for complaining about a landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability should also apply to mobilehome parks. See Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704; see §6.16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.73 (3) Expiration of Stated Term

Contrary to the rule in conventional landlord-tenant law (see §8.82), expiration of a rental agreement's stated term is not grounds for eviction. In such a case, the homeowner continues in the tenancy, because the tenancy can be terminated only for the causes specified in CC §798.56 (see §§6.64-6.70), and there is no requirement in the MRL that homeowners sign subsequent rental agreements. See CC §798.55(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.73A (4) Lapsed or Suspended Permit to Operate

When a park's permit to operate has lapsed or been suspended, failure of a homeowner or a park tenant to pay space rent to the park operator during the period without a valid permit to operate may not be grounds for eviction. See Espinoza v Calva (2008) 169 CA4th 1393, 87 CR3d 492. But a judgment for possession in favor of the park owner may ensue if the lease is declared void as against public policy because of the lapsed or suspended permit. See §§3.11E, 10.62.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.74 d. Notices of Termination

All notices of termination must be in writing and must be served in the manner required by CCP §1162. CC §798.55(b). All notices must be given at least 60 days before the termination date, with copies sent to the legal and registered owners of the mobilehome and junior lienholders within 10 days after notice to the homeowner. The prescribed method of service is set forth in CC §798.55(b).

A conditional right of sale during the 60-day period is authorized by CC §§798.55(b)(1), 798.73. See §§6.54, 6.58. But if the homeowner sells the mobilehome after being served with the 60-day notice, the homeowner must pay all rent and utilities in default. CC §798.55(b)(2).

The specificity of termination notices is governed by CC §798.57. They must state the facts that constitute the grounds for the eviction, rather than offer general allegations. The facts must be specific enough to allow determination of the date, place, witnesses, and circumstances of the grounds for termination. This statutory requirement implies that no facts or grounds other than those set forth in the notice may be raised at trial as a basis for eviction.

A notice of termination resulting from a change of use of the mobilehome park must be preceded by the notices required by CC §798.56(g) (see §6.51). If the attorney does not incorporate valid notices into the unlawful detainer complaint, the complaint may be subject to demurrer. See chap 10.

A 60-day notice of termination based on nonpayment of rent, utility fees, or reasonable incidental service charges must be preceded by a 3-day notice that the homeowner must pay the amount in default or vacate the premises. The 60-day notice may be given at the same time as the 3-day notice, but payment within the 3-day period cures both notices. One purpose of the additional time given by the 60-day notice is to provide the homeowner an opportunity to move the mobilehome off the space (or sell it in place under specified terms). See CC §§798.55(b)(1), 798.73. Language required to be included in the 3-day notice can be found at CC §798.56(e)(1). See §6.68. Under CC §798.56(e), the 60-day notice must also be given to the legal and registered owners of the mobilehome (if not the same as the homeowner) and to any junior lienholders, who may cure the default within 30 days of notice. This cure may be exercised by right only twice each 12-month period during the tenancy. Civil Code §798.56(e)(4), (6), gives legal owners, junior lienholders, and registered owners of a mobilehome who are not financial institutions or mobilehome dealers an additional opportunity to cure a default within 30 calendar days under specified circumstances. See §6.75.

A 60-day termination notice based on the failure of a homeowner or resident to comply with "reasonable" rules of the park must be preceded by a 7-day notice to comply. CC §798.56(d). The breach may be cured within that period, but management is not specifically authorized by statute to serve both notices at the same time. The apparent implication of this difference is that they cannot be served simultaneously. See also §6.119.

A resident who remains in a mobilehome park after service of a notice of termination remains subject to the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) and park rules and regulations, and no lawful act by management to enforce the MRL or park rules and regulations after service of the notice will waive or otherwise affect the notice of termination. CC §798.55(d)-(e).

NOTE: Special rules in CC §798.78 apply to terminations when the homeowner has died and the mobilehome is owned by an heir, joint tenant, or personal representative of the estate.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.75 e. Special Concerns When Secured Lenders Are Involved

Lenders secured by an interest in the mobilehome (legal owners) have certain specified rights, which include the following:

- The right to be sent the notice (CC §§798.55-798.56) (only the 60-day notice is required, but the 3-day and 60-day notices are typically served on the tenant together and sent to the legal owner together);
- The right to cure on behalf of the tenant (CC §798.56(e)(3));
- The right to pay the arrearages and resell the mobilehome in place in the park to a third party acceptable to park management (CC §798.79);
- The right to advise the park it will pay rent and pay for the unlawful detainer (CC §798.56a); and
- The right to tell the park it will pay the rent and foreclose (CC §798.56a).

These rights do not create a tenancy in the lender, and the lender does not have the rights of a homeowner.

The lender may elect to foreclose on the mobilehome, on the basis of the 60-day notice of termination of tenancy, and pursue its own unlawful detainer action pursuant to CCP §1161a. The foreclosing lender will then have the right to sell the mobilehome in place, subject to the requirements of CC §§798.56a and 798.79.

WARNING: Lenders should be careful to insure they are properly on title to the mobilehome, and that they comply in a timely manner with the strict timelines preconditioning exercise of their rights. Lenders and other parties can obtain a current title report for a mobilehome from the Manufactured Home Registration and Titling Program either online or by mail from the Department of Housing and Community Development. See Directory for address, telephone number, and website.

An assignment of an interest in the mobilehome to a lender may create risks for management, unless:

- Management acts promptly and serves the notice required by CC §§798.56 and 798.57, and the lender or other lienholder performs its obligations under CC §798.56a.
- The lender can sell the mobilehome, less outstanding obligations to the management for the homeowner's rent liabilities, for more than can be obtained from a wholesale buyer or other buyer who will pay more to remove the mobilehome from the park. CC §798.56a. In this case, there is no obligation by the lender to reimburse management for any rent.

The lender is not required to advise the park owner of this possibility until 60 days after the termination notices are served on the tenant by the park. CC §798.56a. Thus, for example, if the lender can obtain a better price for the mobilehome from a third party than could be obtained from sale proceeds on sale of the mobilehome in place (less the delinquent rents and other charges), the lender will waive the duty to pay rent (required to preserve the right to keep the mobilehome in place), and sell for "pull-out." In this case, the park owner may, at best, have a 2-month security deposit (see §6.44) to which to resort. Because the lender is not obligated to advise the park owner of the intent to pay the rents and keep the mobilehome in the park until the expiration of the 60-day termination notice (at which time at least 3 months' rent is then due), the park owner will have no security for damages equal to at least 1 month (assuming application of a 2-month security deposit). Therefore, by the time the lender is required to act, the management is already unsecured by at least 30 days' past rents.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Eviction; Execution of Judgment; Lien Enforcement

§6.76 a. Procedures for Eviction

The unlawful detainer action (see chap 9) is the remedy for enforcing a termination of the tenancy, removing the occupants of the mobilehome, and recovering possession of the space. (Other procedures are required to obtain title to the mobilehome: execution on money judgment, warehouse's lien, or petition for declaration of abandonment of mobilehome. See §§6.77-6.84.)

After all required notices have been given to the homeowner or resident, and if the homeowner or resident does not voluntarily vacate the premises, termination of the homeowner's or resident's tenancy in the park is enforced by an unlawful detainer court action undertaken by management under CCP §§1159-1179a. See §§6.67, 9.35. The unlawful detainer complaint should name all known residents, as well as the "homeowner," for the eviction to apply to them. A prejudgment claim of right of possession should also be served pursuant to CCP §415.46, for the eviction to apply to "all unknown occupants." See chaps 9-13. (Antecedent eviction notices are not required when the abandonment remedy described in §6.84 is utilized; under CC §798.61 at least 60 days' rent must be due, and management must hold a "reasonable" belief that the mobilehome has been abandoned.)

The unlawful detainer provisions should be followed except when the MRL specifically provides other termination requirements. CC §798.60; Palmer v Agee (1978) 87 CA3d 377, 150 CR 841. See §§6.14, 6.62. A successful unlawful detainer results in a judgment for possession (under which the sheriff will remove the occupants) and a money judgment. The sheriff will remove the occupants of the mobilehome even if the park does not own the mobilehome.

NOTE: Code of Civil Procedure §1166(c)(1)(B) requires that a copy of the written lease and all addenda or attachments to it be attached to the unlawful detainer complaint. The clear language of this law appears to require attaching even "park rules" and a copy of the MRL, which are incorporated by reference in most park leases or rental agreements.

Lenders secured by an interest in the mobilehome (legal owners) may evict the homeowner and any resident-subtenant under the procedures described in §6.75.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.77 b. Execution of Money Judgment Against Mobilehome

Execution on a money judgment against the mobilehome is one way for the park to satisfy a money judgment against the owner of the mobilehome and to obtain title to the mobilehome. It is not a substitute for the termination of tenancy requirements of CC §§798.55-798.56.

The mobilehome may be vacated by the occupants voluntarily or by eviction of the occupants under a writ of possession issued under an unlawful detainer judgment. After entry of a money judgment, the mobilehome may be seized and sold by park management if it has not been removed from the premises by the homeowner or the lender. The judgment creditor (management) obtains a writ of execution (CCP §699.510), and then the levying officer serves a copy of the writ of execution (CCP §700.010) on the mobilehome occupants or, if no occupants are present, posts the notice of intended sale (CCP §700.080(a)). The notice may be served at the same time as the writ of execution. CCP §700.010. At the time of service or thereafter, a keeper may be placed in charge of the mobilehome (CCP §700.080(b)), and a court order may be obtained to remove any occupant who remains on the property (CCP §700.080(c)). An execution lien is created at the time of levy under a writ of execution. CCP §697.710. The priority of the execution lien creditor is governed by the provisions of Health & S C §18106.

The mobilehome may be sold 10 days after notice of sale. CCP §701.530(b). The execution sale extinguishes any lien subordinate to the execution lien. CCP §701.630. The purchaser at the execution sale acquires the interest of the judgment debtor in the mobilehome, if any. CCP §701.640. The levying officer will provide a certificate of sale to the purchaser. CCP §701.650(a)(1). The lien sale purchaser then files the certificate of sale with the Department of Housing and Community Development. Health & S C §18100.5(d).

Execution of a judgment lien against a mobilehome is a complicated and difficult endeavor. Before seizing the mobilehome, the executing officer will require proof (i.e., a copy of a title report obtained from the state Department of Housing and Community Development) that the mobilehome is owned by the debtor, and payment of a sizable deposit. The issue of whether a "keeper" will be required or the judgment creditor will be permitted to maintain custody until sale must also be resolved with the levying officer (marshal or sheriff). For example, the levying officer may improperly demand a deposit for a keeper, although CCP §700.080(b) provides for a keeper "[i]f the judgment creditor so instructs."

If the management merely wants to relet the premises, the sheriff cannot enforce an unlawful detainer judgment for the space itself. Instead, management must move the mobilehome at its own expense and store it, like other personal property that has been abandoned.

PRACTICE TIP: Local practice varies with respect to the costs of the execution, which may approach or exceed the market value of the mobilehome. Excessive costs of execution may make it impractical to have the levying officer seize and sell the mobilehome. Further, this remedy is not available if the judgment debtor is not the registered owner of the mobilehome. In that case, the only methods for disposing of the mobilehome or removing it from the premises are either to obtain a warehouse's lien under CC §798.56a or to follow the abandonment procedures in CC §798.61. See §§6.79-6.84.

NOTE: The optional provisions of CC §§1980-1991, regarding disposition of personal property remaining on the premises at termination of tenancy, are made inapplicable to mobilehomes by CC §1981(c). Until management obtains a judgment for storage costs, it has the same responsibility for the stored mobilehome as it does for other abandoned personal property. See §§8.154-8.160.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.78 c. Prohibition on Acquiring Lien or Security Interest in Mobilehome

Civil Code §798.38 prohibits mobilehome park management from acquiring any lien or security interest in a mobilehome other than an interest arising from enforcement of a judgment, unless mutually agreed on by the homeowner and management. Any billing and payment on the obligation securing the interest must be kept separate from the current rental obligations. Mobilehome park management may face occupational licensing requirements—and financial penalties for failure to comply—if it is "in the business of" buying and transferring mobilehomes; owners should review their activities with the California Department of Housing and Community Development, Division of Codes and Standards, to obtain advice and information. See Directory for telephone number.

© The Regents of the University of California

d. Warehouse's Lien

§6.79 (1) Definition

A warehouse's (or warehouseman's) lien is another means for the park to recover monies owed to it or to obtain title to the mobilehome. It is not a substitute for the termination of tenancy requirements of CC §§798.55-798.56. A warehouse's lien may be granted to the park owner for storage, utilities, unpaid maintenance charges, and costs of dismantling and removing the mobilehome if this is done. CC §798.56a(e). Park management is entitled to a warehouse's lien after appropriate notice if:

- Neither the legal owner nor a junior lienholder exercises one of the options described in CC §798.56a(a) following the homeowner's default on the obligations to park management; or
- The registered owner of a mobilehome that is not encumbered by specified liens fails to comply with a termination notice and is either legally evicted or vacates the premises.

At least 3 months' rent will be due before the park owner is entitled to pursue a warehouse's lien. (Note that antecedent eviction notices are not required when the abandonment remedy described in §6.84 is utilized; under CC §798.61 at least 60 days' rent must be due and management must hold a "reasonable" belief that the mobilehome has been abandoned.)

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.80 (2) Warehouse's Lien Procedure

The warehouse's lien may be enforced "either after the date of judgment in an unlawful detainer action or after the date the mobilehome is physically vacated by the resident, whichever occurs earlier." CC §798.56a(e). This procedure is attractive to park management because court proceedings are not required. The remedy dovetails with Commercial Code remedies and is triggered by operation of CC §798.56. Park management is entitled to the lien after the homeowner's default and after giving notice as required by CC §§798.56 and 798.56a if the legal owner and others having specified interests fail to exercise their statutory options. See §§6.79, 6.82. The park's lien is superior to all other liens except the state's lien for taxes and licensing fees on the mobilehome. The park may sell the mobilehome by complying with the steps specified in CC §§798.55, 798.56, and 798.56a (see §§6.81-6.83).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.81 (a) Termination Notice

Management must have served 60-day termination notices on the homeowner, legal owners, and junior lienholders as specified in CC §§798.55, 798.56, and 798.56a. See §6.74. It is recommended that any additional persons or entities involved with the mobilehome or suspected to be owners, lienors, or claimants in any capacity (for example, loan servicing companies) also be served and that their addresses be verified.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.82 (b) Response Options to Termination Notice

The legal owner or junior lienholder must respond within 65 days from the mailing of the 60-day notice if the right to sell the mobilehome in the park is to be preserved and in order to avoid a warehouse's lien. This protects the security interest in the mobilehome's value. The legal owner or junior lienholder must notify the park by certified mail, return receipt requested, that it is selecting one of three options specified in CC §798.56a(a):

Lienholder opts for management to pursue termination. If the lienholder exercises the option to allow management to pursue termination of the homeowner's tenancy, it must offer to reimburse all reasonable attorney fees and other court costs incurred by the park, and must do so before the earlier of 60 calendar days after receipt of written notice from management of these costs or the date the mobilehome is resold. CC §798.56a(a)(3).

Lienholder opts to sell obligation to park. If the lienholder exercises the option to sell the obligation to the park, the park has 15 days following receipt to accept or reject the offer and notify the lienholder by certified mail, return receipt requested; thereafter the lienholder has 10 days to exercise the second or third option and must notify the park by certified mail, return receipt requested. CC §798.56a(a)(1).

Lienholder opts to sell in place. If the lienholder exercises the option to sell the mobilehome in place, the lienholder must fulfill the obligations listed in CC §798.56a(b)(1)-(3). The lienholder must pay the homeowner's "responsibilities and liabilities" (CC §798.56a(b)(1)) for the 90 days immediately preceding the service of the notice of termination of tenancy and must thereafter satisfy the homeowner's responsibilities and liabilities as they accrue until sale to a third party pursuant to CC §798.79. Payment for the 90-day obligation is due within 30 days after the written election, but not later than 65 days after the notice of termination of tenancy was served on the legal owner to preserve the lienholder's rights; other payments are due as they accrue. The lienholder must also undertake and complete certain repairs and corrective actions within specified time periods; this may be difficult when the homeowner still resides in the mobilehome and refuses to cooperate or to leave voluntarily, and the lienholder may request a time extension from park management to accomplish these actions. Failure by the lienholder to comply with any of the statutory substantive or procedural requirements results in park management being entitled to the warehouse's lien and sale of the mobilehome and extinguishment of the lienholder's security interest (as well as being able to sell the mobilehome in place).

If the legal owner or junior lienholder does not respond adequately or at all to the notice provided by management, the lienholder's rights under CC §798.56a are lost and management may either remove the mobilehome from the premises and place it in storage or store it on the premises.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.83 (3) Foreclosing a Warehouse's Lien

The procedure for foreclosing a warehouse's lien, summarized from Com C §§7209-7210, includes the following steps:

- Components of lien. The lien must be drafted to include a statement of the elements of the claim, including a statement of the amount due; a description of the mobilehome; a demand for payment within a specified time not less than 10 days after receipt of the notification; a statement that unless the claim is paid within that time, the mobilehome will be advertised and sold at a public sale; and the time and place of any public sale. Com C §7210(b)(2). The sale must be conducted at the nearest suitable location. Com C §7210(b)(4).
- Delivery of lien. The lien and notice must be delivered by mail, personal service, or verifiable electronic mail to all persons known to claim an interest in the mobilehome. Com C §7210(a), (b)(1).
- Location, publication of sale. The sale must be held at the nearest suitable place to the mobilehome's location, which may be the park office or the mobilehome itself. After expiration of the time in the notice, an advertisement of the sale must be published once a week for two weeks consecutively in a newspaper of general circulation where the sale is to be held (or if no such newspaper exists, posted at least 10 days before the sale in not less than six conspicuous places in the neighborhood of the proposed sale). The sale must take place at least 15 days after the first publication and must comply with the terms of the notice. Com C §7210(b)(5).
- Presale satisfaction of lien. Before any sale, any person claiming an interest in the mobilehome may pay the amount necessary to satisfy the lien and the reasonable expenses incurred. While payment stops the lien procedure, it does not reinstate any right to sell the mobilehome in place, but only the right to remove the mobilehome from the park. Com C §7210(c).
- Sale and title transfer. The park owner may purchase the mobilehome at the sale and may credit-bid the debt. Com C §7210(d). A buyer has no right of tenancy and no right to keep the mobilehome in the park, and must remove it after the sale as demanded by the park owner. The park management shall provide the buyer with evidence of the sale, as specified by the California Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD). On request by the buyer, HCD shall register title to the mobilehome in the name of the buyer, whether or not a legal owner or junior lienholder held an interest in the mobilehome. CC §798.56a(e). Commercial Code §7210(e) provides that a bona fide purchaser for value obtains clear title despite noncompliance with the statutory requirements by the warehouse.
- Park's retention of sale proceeds exceeding lien amount. The park owner may keep the proceeds of the sale up to but not exceeding the amount of the lien and reasonable expenses, and any balance must be made available to the legal owner along with an accounting of the sale. Com C §7210(f).

NOTE: Review the notice and sale procedures carefully; the warehouse's lien procedures were repealed and re-enacted in 2006 by Stats 2006, ch 254, §49. A pattern of noncompliance by park management with the lien procedure could be asserted as an unfair business practice (see §6.86). Under Com C §7210, the warehouse is liable for damages caused by failure to comply with the requirements for sale and, in case of willful violation, is liable for conversion. Com C §7210(i).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.84 e. Judicial Declaration of Abandonment (CC §798.61)

§6.84 e. Judicial Declaration of Abandonment (CC §798.61)

An alternative to execution on a money judgment and enforcement of a warehouse's lien, which is available under circumstances specified in CC §798.61, is a petition for declaration of abandonment, under which mobilehome park management sells an abandoned mobilehome and its contents for delinquent rent and other charges if it is abandoned and no rent has been paid for 60 days. For an alternative procedure when a mobilehome is vacated by its resident, see §§6.79-6.83 relating to sale and disposition under a warehouse's lien.

To obtain a judicial declaration of abandonment under CC §798.61, park management must take the following steps:

- Posting of notice. After determining that the mobilehome or recreational vehicle (CC §798.61(a)(2)(A)) is "abandoned" (defined as rent unpaid for 60 days, unoccupied, and reasonably believed to be abandoned), management must post a 30-day "notice of belief of abandonment" on the mobilehome and serve it on the homeowner and registered owner(s) at all known or believed addresses by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested.
- Petition. Thirty days after posting, management may file a petition as a limited civil case in superior court seeking a judicial declaration of abandonment. Copies of the petition must be posted on the mobilehome and mailed to the homeowner and registered owner(s) by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested.
- Default judgment. If no answer is filed, management may take a default and obtain a judgment declaring the mobilehome to be abandoned. Some courts may require a proof to obtain early judgment, and some courts require a noticed motion despite the statute's provisions authorizing a default procedure.
- Judgment after contested hearing. If an answer is filed (of course, unlikely), trial should be set. Note that the statute provides that the petition can be defeated if a claimant establishes an ownership interest in the mobilehome. This arguably applies, however, only if the claimant had appropriately claimed an interest in response to the 30-day notice of belief of abandonment; if there was no response to the notice, it is arguable that the abandonment of the mobilehome is a matter that is conclusive and cannot be changed by proof at trial to the contrary. See CC §1951.3. If park management prevails at trial, the court should enter judgment declaring the mobilehome abandoned.
- Presale inventory and notice. Within 10 days after entry of judgment, management shall enter the mobilehome to inventory the contents and then file the inventory with the court. At this time, management must post and mail the "notice of intent to sell" the abandoned mobilehome and its contents; this notice must announce the date of sale and must be served and mailed like the "notice of abandonment."
- Presale acknowledgment of satisfaction of judgment. At any time before sale of the abandoned mobilehome, the homeowner or resident or heirs and personal representatives—anyone with a right of possession—may remove the mobilehome and possessions after payment of all rent and other charges due, including amounts due under the judgment. If this occurs, management must immediately file an acknowledgment of satisfaction of judgment. (If the claimant wants only the possessions, the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) does not appear to restrict him or her from removing personal property from the mobilehome before its sale.)
- Sale. Not less than 10 days after the notice of sale, management may conduct the sale of the abandoned mobilehome and personal possessions. Publication is not required but is recommended. Management may offset its bid to the extent of amounts due, but any excess received must be turned over to the county treasury. Management must provide the purchaser at the sale with a copy of the judgment of abandonment and evidence of the sale, such as a bill of sale. The sale passes title to the purchaser free of any prior interest, including any security interest or lien, except the liens imposed for taxes and registration.
- Accounting. Within 30 days after the date of sale, management must submit to the court an accounting of the moneys received from the sale and the disposition of the money and the inventory of contents.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Additional Remedies

a. By Tenants

§6.85 (1) Public Nuisance

Under CC §798.87, park management's "substantial failure" to keep the physical improvements and common facilities in good order is a "public nuisance," as is a substantial violation of a park rule. Section 798.87(c) provides that park residents or the local district attorney, county counsel, city attorney or city prosecutor, or the State Attorney General may bring a civil action to correct the public nuisance. See also §6.88.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.86 (2) Management's Willful Violations and Illegal Business Practices

Civil Code §798.86 provides damages for violations of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) and currently authorizes a penalty not to exceed $2000 for each willful violation of the MRL by management "in addition to damages afforded by law." In De Anza Santa Cruz Mobile Estates Homeowners Ass'n v De Anza Santa Cruz Mobile Estates (2001) 94 CA4th 890, 114 CR2d 708, the court of appeal rejected a punitive damages award of $6 million, holding that a plaintiff suing under the MRL is limited to the statutory formula of actual damages, the statutory penalty for each willful violation, and attorney fees and costs. The ambiguity that was litigated in De Anza was resolved by an amendment to CC §798.86, adding a new subdivision (b), which limits a homeowner or former homeowner who is a prevailing party in a civil lawsuit to either punitive damages pursuant to CC §3294 or the statutory penalties in CC §798.86(a). On attorney fees, see §6.89.

If management is responsible for willful violations of mobilehome residency standards or mobilehome sales requirements, it may be liable for federal and state civil and criminal penalties under the Manufactured Housing Act of 1980 (Health & S C §§18000-18199). Violations of the Mobilehome Parks Act (MPA) (Health & S C §§18200-18700) could result not only in civil and criminal penalties, but also in suspension of management's permit to operate the mobilehome park. Finally, unlawful business practices may be enjoined and penalized under Bus & P C §§17200-17209. See also People v McKale (1979) 25 C3d 626, 159 CR 811; People v Beaumont Invs., Ltd. (2003) 111 CA4th 102, 3 CR3d 429 (see §6.21). But see Kraus v Trinity Mgmt. Servs. (2000) 23 C4th 116, 96 CR2d 485; Farmers Ins. Exch. v Superior Court (1992) 2 C4th 377, 383, 6 CR2d 487.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.87 (3) Other Remedies

To the extent that the repair-and-deduct (see CC §1942), retaliatory eviction (see CC §1942.5), lock-out (see CC §789.3), and security deposit (see CC §1950.5) provisions apply to mobilehome residencies, penalties or actions under these statutes may be pursued (see §§1.51, 4.11, 6.14 and chaps 3-5, 8, and 10). A homeowner or resident who is prevented from exercising rights concerning homeowners' meetings under CC §798.51 may seek appropriate remedies under CC §798.52. Special provisions govern "failure-to-maintain" lawsuits by homeowners against management. The procedures for notices and opportunities to cure are set forth in CC §798.84. On authority to not pay rent if the park's permit to operate lapses or is suspended, see §§6.16, 6.73A.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.88 b. By Management

The substantial violation of a mobilehome park rule is deemed to be a "public nuisance" under CC §798.87 and may be remedied in a civil action. See also §6.85. Civil Code §798.88 permits park management to seek injunctive relief against a homeowner or other resident who commits a "continuing or recurring violation of a reasonable rule or regulation of the mobilehome park." In Rancho Santa Paula Mobilehome Park v Evans (1994) 26 CA4th 1139, 32 CR2d 464, the court held that injunctive relief under CC §798.88 was not warranted because the park owner had tried to enforce an "unreasonable" rule.

Management may regulate parking within the park and may remove vehicles under Veh C §22658, if it has posted specified signs. CC §798.28.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.89 c. Attorney Fees and Penalties

A homeowner who prevails in an action under the MRL may be awarded attorney fees in addition to other specified damages and damages "afforded by law." CC §§798.85, 798.86. Civil Code §798.85 provides for attorney fees for the prevailing party whether the party prevails on a judgment or dismissal. On procedures for recovery of attorney fees, see chap 13.

A homeowner or prior homeowner who prevails in an action under the MRL may be awarded up to $2000 for each willful violation of the MRL, or punitive damages under CC §3294, in addition to damages allowed by law. CC §798.86(a). See Patarak v Williams (2001) 91 CA4th 826, 111 CR2d 381 (upheld award of $44,000 in penalties for willful denial of access to common areas and willful failure to maintain park's septic system).

WARNING: The court in Palmer v Agee (1978) 87 CA3d 377, 150 CR 841 (see §6.14), interpreted the meaning of an action arising under the MRL broadly, so that any claim of a right under the MRL could trigger these penalties.

However, in SC Manufactured Homes, Inc. v Canyon View Estates, Inc. (2007) 148 CA4th 663, 56 CR3d 79, involving a dispute between a mobilehome dealer and a landlord, the court denied attorney fees because the matter did not arise out of the MRL. See also Cruz v Ayromloo (2007) 155 CA4th 1270, 66 CR3d 725, which interprets an attorney fee clause in a lease "if civil action is instituted in connection with this Agreement" holding that it was broad enough to encompass causes of action for both breach of the lease as well as tort causes of action.

© The Regents of the University of California

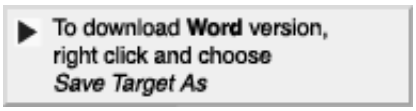
Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/ C. Form: Mobilehome Park Rental Agreement/ 1. Initial Information/§6.90 a. Form: Park Name/Address and Space Number/Address

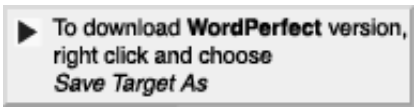
C. Form: Mobilehome Park Rental Agreement

1. Initial Information

§6.90 a. Form: Park Name/Address and Space Number/Address

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.90-1 Park name, address; homeowner space number/address

1. Park Name and Address: _ _[specify]_ _.

2. Homeowner Space Number or Address: _ _[specify]_ _.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.91 b. Form: Identity of Homeowner and Residents

§6.91 b. Form: Identity of Homeowner and Residents

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.91-1 Identify of homeowner and residents

3. Homeowner(s): _ _[name(s)]_ _;

4. Other Resident(s): _ _[name(s)]_ _.

Comment: Both park management and the homeowner should ensure that all residents' names are included in the rental agreement. Under the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10), all persons entering into the rental agreement with management are considered to be "homeowners." Therefore, that terminology is used throughout this form. "Resident," as the term is used in the MRL, includes homeowners as well as others who reside in mobilehomes located within the park. CC §798.11. See also §6.12.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.92 c. Form: Identity of Park Owner and Management

§6.92 c. Form: Identity of Park Owner and Management

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.92-1 Identity of park owner and management

5. Park Owner's Name, Business Address, and Business Telephone No.: _ _[specify]_ _.

6. Park Manager's Name and Address: _ _[specify]_ _.

Comment: Civil Code §798.28 requires that management disclose in writing the name, business address, and business telephone number of the mobilehome park owner, on request by a homeowner. (There is no requirement that this information be disclosed in the rental agreement, but there is no practical reason not to do so.)

Health and Safety Code §18603 requires that a person be "available" in every mobilehome park for operation and maintenance. In every park with 50 or more units, this person or his or her designee must reside in the park and must know how to repair utilities and common facilities.

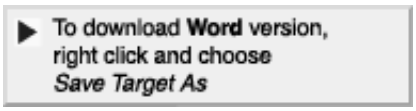
© The Regents of the University of California

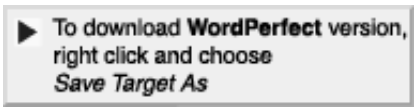
Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/ d. Term/§6.93 (1) Form: Beginning of Term

d. Term

§6.93 (1) Form: Beginning of Term

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.93-1 Beginning of term

7. Date When Term Begins: _ _[specify]_ _.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.94 (2) Form: Length of Term

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.94-1 Alternative: Term—specified number of months

8. The term of this Agreement shall be for _ _[specify number of months of tenancy]_ _.

6.94-2 Alternative: Term—month to month

8. The term of this Agreement shall continue on a month-to-month basis.

Comment: Civil Code §798.15(a) requires that the rental agreement state the term of the tenancy. Civil Code §798.18 requires that the homeowner be offered specified options regarding the lease term. See §§6.23-6.25, 6.105.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.95 e. Form: Amount of Rent

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.95-1 Amount of rent

9. Initial Monthly Rent: $_ _[amount]_ _.

10. Increased Monthly Rent: $_ _[amount]_ _.

11. Date of Rent Increase: _ _[specify date when increase takes effect]_ _.

Comment: Civil Code §798.15(a) requires that the rental agreement state the amount of rent. See §§6.26-6.32, 6.106-6.107.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.96 f. Form: Services

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.96-1 Services

12. Services To Be Provided by Management for Homeowner(s): _ _[specify services]_ _.

Comment: Civil Code §798.15(f) requires that the rental agreement contain a provision listing the services that management will provide for the term of the tenancy and the fees, if any, to be charged for those services. See chart in §6.98; for fees provisions, see §6.110. Services may include such items as utilities, care of park facilities, gardening, pet care, and special equipment. See §§6.33-6.43, 6.110.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.97 g. Form: Facilities

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.97-1 Facilities

13. Facilities To Be Provided by Management for Homeowner(s): _ _[Specify facilities]_ _.

Comment: Civil Code §798.15(e) requires that the rental agreement describe the physical improvements to be provided during the tenancy. Facilities may include, e.g., nonexclusive use of park common areas and lawns, barbecue or public facilities, streets and unrestricted parking areas, recreational facilities, pools, recreational and meeting buildings, laundry facilities, offices, and pet care areas.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.98 h. Form: Chart Showing Fees for Utilities and Services

§6.98 h. Form: Chart Showing Fees for Utilities and Services

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.98-1 Chart showing fees for utilities and services

14. Fees for Utilities and Services:

	Present Cost	Homeowner Pays Utility Co.	Management Bills Homeowner	Included In Rent	Unavailable
Natural Gas
Electric Water Trash
Sewer
Cable TV
Community Room
Pets
Guests*
Landscaping
Other
Other

In residence over 20 consecutive days or 30 days in a calendar year.

Comment: Any fees for services to be provided must be set forth in the rental agreement (CC §798.15(f)), although a charge may be made for services actually rendered that are not listed in the rental agreement if the homeowner is given at least 60 days' written notice before the charge is imposed CC §798.32. See §§6.33-6.43, 6.110.

© The Regents of the University of California

i. Deposit

§6.99 (1) Form: Amount

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.99-1 Deposit amount

15. Amount of Deposit: $_ _[specify amount]_ _.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.100 (2) Form: Payment of Deposit Amounts

§6.100 (2) Form: Payment of Deposit Amounts

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.100-1 Payment of deposit

16. _ _[All/Part]_ _ of the sum due as deposits will be paid when the rental agreement is executed _ _[, with the balance to be paid on _ _[date]_ _]_ _.

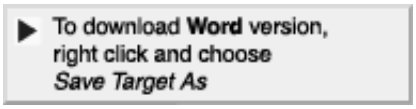
Comment: The purpose of this form is to permit partial payment of a deposit when the parties sign the rental agreement, with the balance to be paid at an agreed-on time. See §§6.44, 6.111. See also §§1.51, 4.11, 8.167-8.176 on security deposits.

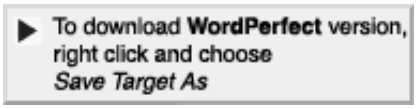
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.101 j. Form: Zoning and Land Use Disclosures

§6.101 j. Form: Zoning and Land Use Disclosures

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.101-1 Zoning and land use disclosures

17. Zoning and Land Use Disclosures:

a. The nature of the zoning or land use permit of this park is _ _[specify]_ _.

b. The conditional use permit or other permit under which this park operates includes the following conditions and expiration or renewal date(s): _ _[specify]_ _.

c. The duration and ending date of any lease under which Management is a lessee for this park or any part of it is _ _[specify]_ _.

d. The following change concerning the zoning or use permit has occurred within the past 30 days: _ _[specify]_ _.

Comment: This information must be provided as a written notice to all homeowners and prospective homeowners under CC §798.27(a) (although it need not be in the rental agreement). Civil Code §798.27(b) appears to impose an independent and additional notification requirement, set forth in subparagraph d. For further information concerning changes of use, see §§6.49-6.53, 6.116.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.102 k. Form: Mobilehome Ownership Information

§6.102 k. Form: Mobilehome Ownership Information

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.102-1 Mobilehome ownership information

18. Mobilehome Ownership information:

a. Make of mobilehome: _ _[specify]_ _.

b. Model of mobilehome: _ _[specify]_ _.

c. Year of manufacture: _ _[specify]_ _.

d. License or decal number _ _[specify]_ _.

e. Vehicle identification number: _ _[specify]_ _.

f. Registered owner(s) name(s): _ _[name(s)]_ _.

Address and city: _ _[specify]_ _.

Telephone no.: _ _[specify]_ _.

Address and city: _ _[specify]_ _.

Telephone no.: _ _[specify]_ _.

g. Legal owner(s) name(s): _ _[name(s)]_ _.

Address and city: _ _[specify]_ _.

Telephone no.: _ _[specify]_ _.

Address and city: _ _[specify]_ _.

Telephone no.: _ _[specify]_ _.

h. Junior lienholder(s) name(s): _ _[name(s)]_ _.

Address and city: _ _[specify]_ _.

Telephone no.: _ _[specify]_ _.

Address and city: _ _[specify]_ _.

Telephone No. _ _[specify]_ _.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.103 I. Form: Other Information

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.103-1 Other information

19. Parking Space No. _ _[identify]_ _.

20. Storage Space No. _ _[identify]_ _.

21. Pet Identification: _ _[specify]_ _.

22. Other: _ _[specify]_ _.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.104 2. Form: Agreement to Lease

§6.104 2. Form: Agreement to Lease

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.104-1 Agreement to lease

23. Agreement To Lease. The owner and management of the mobilehome park named in paragraphs 5 and 6 of this agreement (Management) and the homeowner(s) listed in paragraph 3 of this agreement (Homeowner) agree to the lease of the space listed in paragraph 2 of this agreement, according to the terms and conditions of this agreement.

[If applicable, add the following option; see §6.15A]

The terms and conditions of this agreement include special provisions related to the receipt of financial housing assistance or other consideration from a public agency. The special provisions may supersede standard provisions of this agreement related to the term, the rent, rent increases, occupancy restrictions, or other matters. The special provisions are contained in _ _[e.g., the document that is attached hereto as Special Attachment A]_ _.

Comment: This paragraph sets out the underlying premise of this document: It is a lease of real property between a landlord and a tenant. As such, it is subject not only to the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) (see §§6.2-6.12), which provides unique protection to mobilehome park residents and homeowners, but also to a number of other laws affecting the landlord-tenant relationship (see §§6.13-6.18).

The optional language is inserted if the lease agreement must incorporate special terms and conditions related to public financing or assistance to ensure that management complies with the requirements and to allow eviction of residents in violation of management's obligations under the financing documents.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.105 3. Form: Term of Agreement

§6.105 3. Form: Term of Agreement

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.105-1 Term of agreement

24. Term of Agreement. This agreement begins on the date specified in paragraph 7 of this agreement, and is for the term specified in paragraph 8 of this agreement.

Comment: Civil Code §798.15(a) requires that the term of the rental agreement be stated. Civil Code §798.18 requires that a homeowner be offered specified options regarding the term of the agreement. See §§6.23-6.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/ 4. Rent and Rent Increases/ §6.106 a. Form: Indexed Rent Increases (Long-Term Rental Agreement Only)

4. Rent and Rent Increases

§6.106 a. Form: Indexed Rent Increases (Long-Term Rental Agreement Only)

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.106-1 Rent and rent increases (long-term agreement)

25. Rent and Rent Increases. The rent set forth in paragraph 9 is the rent until the rate in paragraph 10 takes effect on the date set forth in paragraph 11. Beginning 12 months after the date set forth in paragraph 11 (or 12 months after the date set forth in paragraph 7 if no date is set forth In paragraph 11), and unless a later agreement is executed, Management may increase the rent for each successive 12-month period by any one or a combination of the following factors:

a. The same proportion as the _ _[specify economic or income factor, e.g., Consumer Price Index]_ _ for January of the year of increase bears to the same _ _[specify economic or income factor]_ _ for January of the previous year _ _[, but in no event less than _ _[percentage]_ _ nor more than _ _[percentage]_ _ of the current rent]_ _. _ _[Define factor in detail, if necessary]_ _.

b. Homeowner's proportionate share of any increase in _ _[e.g., real property taxes, assessments, governmental charges]_ _ during the 12 months after the date set forth in paragraph 11 (or paragraph 7, as applicable), and during each successive 12-month period, over the amount of such costs in the monthly rent during the preceding 12-month period.

c. Homeowner's proportionate share of any increase in operating costs to cover _ _[e.g., utilities for recreational or administrative facilities, other common areas, and mobilehomes]_ _ during the 12 months after the date set forth in paragraph 11 (or paragraph 7, as applicable), and during each successive 12-month period, over the amount of such costs in the monthly rent during the preceding 12-month period.

6.106-2 Optional addition to 6.106-1: Capital improvement pass-throughs

[d.] Homeowner's proportionate share of any capital improvements incurred by Management. Capital improvements are defined as follows: _ _[Insert definition of capital items to be included and excluded as negotiated between management and homeowner]_ _. The amount of increase in monthly rent for reimbursement of capital improvements shall equal the total cost of each capital improvement incurred by the Management during each 12-month period commencing with the effective date of this agreement, and amortized over a _ _[insert number of months for amortization or refer to formula for determination of schedule]_ _ month period and prorated among the number of spaces in the Park. After the amortization period has expired, the monthly rent will be reduced by the amount of the charge for that item.

6.106-3 Optional addition to 6.106-2: Deduction for management's unreimbursed contribution Management shall first deduct the amount of $_ _[amount]_ _ from the total cost of each capital improvement as management's unreimbursed contribution thereto.

6.106-4 Optional addition to 6.106-2: Limitation on pass-through amount; extension of amortization period

The maximum rent increase charged for capital improvements shall not exceed _ _[percentage]_ _ of the then current total monthly rent charged, and the amortization period shall be extended as needed to continue such rent increases for reimbursement of such capital improvements.

Comment: Under CC §798.31 and the cases set forth in §6.29, any provisions such as those above must be designated as "rent" to be valid; the rental agreement cannot set forth these charges separately from rent. Any capital improvement reimbursement provisions in a mobilehome park lease should be drafted with extreme caution to avoid violating CC §798.31, which limits the fees park management may charge, and Pub Util C §739.5 if the pass-throughs relate to maintenance or repair of PUC-regulated utilities. See §§6.26-6.43.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.107 b. Form: Due Date of Rent Payments; Notice of Increase

§6.107 b. Form: Due Date of Rent Payments; Notice of Increase

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.107-1 Alternative: Month-to-month agreement

26. Rent Payment. Homeowner must pay the rent specified in paragraph 9 on the first day of each month. Any change in rent will be preceded by at least 90 days' written notice.

6.107-2 Alternative: Term agreement

26. Rent Payment. Homeowner must pay the rent specified in paragraph 9 on the first day of each month. The amount of rent will be changed on the date listed in paragraph 11 to the amount set forth In paragraph 10 (if paragraphs 10 and 11 are completed). After the term has expired, rent may be changed following at least 90 days' written notice.

Comment: The rental agreement must state the amount of the rent. CC §798.15(a). A number of commonly used lease forms and rental agreements include a statement that rent must be paid "without set-offs or deductions." The addition of this statement essentially restates existing law (see §10.57) and would not affect the homeowner's rights under the implied warranty of habitability (established in Green v Superior Court (1974) 10 C3d 616, 111 CR 704; see §§3.16-3.48, 6.16) or the homeowner's right to repair and deduct under CC §1942.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.108 c. Form: Tender of Rent

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.108-1 Tender of rent

27. Tender of Rent. Rent must be paid in cash or by cashier's check, money order, or personal check at the _ _[e.g., park office]_ _.

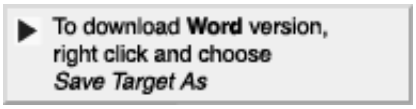
Comment: Although this provision permits payment of rent in cash, some mobilehome parks prohibit payment in cash to reduce the incidence of robbery. For such prohibitions, management should adjust the lease accordingly. Cash payment may not be required, except as permitted by CC §1947.3. See §4.30.

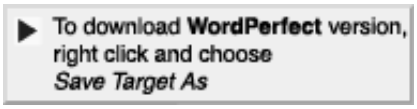
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.109 d. Form: Charges for Late Payment of Rent

§6.109 d. Form: Charges for Late Payment of Rent

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.109-1 Charges for late rent payment

28. Late Fee and Charges. If the full amount of rent, including all fees and utility costs, is not paid to Management by the end of the fifth day following its due date, Homeowner must pay a late fee of $_ _[amount]_ _. If Homeowner's check is dishonored or returned to Management by the bank for any reason, Homeowner must pay Management a charge of $_ _[amount]_ _.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.110 5. Form: Fees, Service Charges, and Utilities

§6.110 5. Form: Fees, Service Charges, and Utilities

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.110-1 Fees, service charges, and utilities

29. Fees, Service Charges, and Utilities. Fees, service charges, and utilities must be paid at the time of payment of rent according to the chart in paragraph 14, for the period noted in the bill. When such charges are billed by Management and due other than at the time for payment of rent, they must be paid within 5 days after the billing date. Utility costs for personal use may vary as permitted by law.

Comment: See §§6.33-6.43.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.111 6. Form: Security and Default Deposits

§6.111 6. Form: Security and Default Deposits

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.111-1 Security and default deposits

30. Deposits. Homeowner must deposit with Management at the agreed-on time(s) the sum set forth in paragraph 15. If Homeowner is in default with respect to any category of deposit, Management may use any portion of the deposit to cure the default or to compensate Management for any damage sustained by Management resulting from Homeowner's default. Homeowner must pay to Management, immediately on demand, a sum equal to the portion of the deposit expended or applied by Management, in order to maintain the security deposit at the amount initially deposited with Management.

If Homeowner is not in default at the expiration or termination of this agreement, or on request for a refund as allowed by law, Management will return the unexpended deposit(s) to Homeowner. The deposit is subject to Civil Code §1950.5, and, if applicable, Civil Code §798.39.

Comment: As noted in §6.14, it is unclear to what extent general landlord-tenant rights and responsibilities not specifically addressed in the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10) apply to mobilehome park tenancies. If they do apply (because they are not preempted by express modification in the MRL), the language in Form 6.111-1 is consistent with the letter and spirit of CC §1950.5. In addition, the MRL specifically provides special requirements for refunds of security deposits, depending on whether they were collected before or after January 1, 1989. CC §798.39. See §6.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.112 7. Form: State Law and Park Rules; Procedure for Amending Park Rules

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.112-1 State law and park rules; amending rules

31. State Law and Park Rules; Homeowner Participation in Park Rules Amendment Process:

a. The park rules and regulations (attached to this agreement as Exhibit A), the Mobilehome Residency Law (attached to this agreement as Exhibit B), and other applicable state and local laws and regulations are incorporated In this agreement as though set forth in full. Homeowner and Management agree to comply with all provisions of these authorities, as they now exist, and new or amended rules that Management may issue in the future as required by law.

b. When Management proposes an amendment to the park's rules and regulations that is not mandated by a change in the law, Management shall meet and consult with Homeowners in the park, their representatives, or both, after written notice has been given to all Homeowners in the park 10 days or more before the meeting. The notice shall set forth the proposed amendment to the park rules and regulations and shall state the date, time, and location of the meeting.

c. Following the meeting and after consultation with Homeowners, the noticed amendment to the park rules and regulations may be implemented as to any Homeowner with the consent of that Homeowner, or without Homeowner consent on written notice of not less than 6 months, except for rules and regulations applicable to recreational facilities, which may be amended without Homeowner consent on written notice of not less than 60 days.

d. If the change to park rules and regulations is mandated by a change in statutory law, regulation, or ordinance, management need not consult with Homeowners and may implement the change immediately as to any Homeowner who gives consent, and after 60 days' written notice as to all Homeowners with or without their consent.

Comment: The rental agreement must include a copy of the mobilehome park rules and regulations (CC §798.15(b)) and of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10), which must be attached (CC §798.15(c)). Incorporating them as attachments to the rental agreement complies with this requirement. In order for certain provisions to be effective, they must be included in the park rules and regulations. For example, CC §798.70 allows management to prohibit for-sale signs on mobilehomes only if such a prohibition is included in the rental agreement or the rules and regulations.

Civil Code §798.23(a) mandates that the park owner and the owner's employees be subject to the rules and regulations that govern homeowners and other residents and their guests.

Civil Code §798.25 governs amendments to park rules and regulations. Section 798.25 also permits written notice of amendments to a new homeowner before the start of the tenancy. See §§6.33, 6.41, 6.45-6.46, 6.61, 6.141 on adoption, amendment and legal limitations on park rules. See §6.142 on the recommended contents of park rules. See §6.45 for the special conditions related to automatic amendment of rules and regulations if mandated by statute, ordinance, or regulation.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.113 8. Form: Park Management Responsibilities for Physical Facilities, Services, Utilities, and Compliance With Law

§6.113 8. Form: Park Management Responsibilities for Physical Facilities, Services, Utilities, and Compliance With Law

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.113-1 Management responsibilities

32. Responsibilities of Management:

a. It is the responsibility of Management to provide and maintain common facilities in good working order and condition. If common facilities suddenly or unforseeably break down or deteriorate, Management shall have a reasonable period of time, which is as soon as possible in situations affecting a health or safety condition, and shall not exceed 30 days in any other case except when emergency circumstances justify a delay, starting after Management knew or should have known of the condition in which to restore the facilities to good working order. Management shall provide and maintain these improvements with rent proceeds and not with other fees.

b. Management will provide the physical facilities described in paragraph 13.

c. Management will provide the services and utilities set forth in paragraphs 12 and 14, for the charges described in paragraph 14.

d. Management will comply with all other requirements of law.

e. Management may charge a reasonable fee for services related to the maintenance of the land and premises on which a mobilehome is situated in the event that the Homeowner fails to maintain the land or premises in accordance with the rules and regulations of the park after written notification to the Homeowner and failure of the Homeowner to comply within 14 days. The written notice shall state the specific condition to be corrected and an estimate of the charges to be imposed by Management if the services are performed by Management or its agent. If the service involves removal and/or storage of personal property from the Homeowner's lot to achieve compliance with park rules and regulations or state law, all notices and actions related to removal, storage, and disposal will comply with the minimum requirements of Civil Code §798.36(b).

Comment: The language in subparagraph a. above fulfills the minimum requirements of CC §798.15(d). The reasonable period granted by the statute begins at the time the landlord knew or should have known of the breakdown or deterioration. With regard to subparagraphs b. and c., CC §798.24 requires that common area facilities be open for use at all reasonable times, with hours posted, and with no insurance requirements for specified activities. Although not explicitly required by the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10), subparagraph d. provides for an implicit requirement of which management should be reminded and the homeowner should be informed. See §6.47. Subparagraph e. is authorized by CC §§798.15(g) and 798.36(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.114 9. Form: Fixtures: Ownership, Maintenance, and Liability

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.114-1 Fixtures

33. Ownership, Removal, Maintenance, and Liability for Permanently Attached Fixtures:

a. All items or structures permanently attached to the premises will become the property of Management when installed. These include fences and storage sheds, all permanent ground covers such as patios or decks, and all plants or trees.

b. Such fixtures may not be installed or removed after installation unless Management gives prior written consent, which must be requested at least 10 days before the installation or removal.

c. Homeowner is solely responsible for the maintenance, care, and use of such fixtures, even though they have become the property of Management, except for trees on the Homeowner's lot.

d. On termination of the tenancy, or if the fixtures' presence or condition violates this agreement or the park rules and regulations, Management may require their removal at Homeowner's expense.

e. After construction or repair on the premises, Homeowner will record the appropriate notices of completion. Homeowner may not permit any lien, claim, or demand of any nature arising from the construction or repair to be foreclosed against the park. If Homeowner contests any such lien or demand, he or she must post an adequate bond to prevent foreclosure of the lien if Homeowner is unsuccessful. Homeowner further agrees to hold Management harmless, and to indemnify Management for all costs incurred by or levied against Management, in connection with all such liens and claims.

f. If disabled access accommodations are installed pursuant to the MRL, CC §798.29.6, Management may require their removal by Homeowner at the time of resale or removal of the mobilehome.

Comment: This common lease provision is a carryover from laws governing hiring, and is seldom used for exercise of ownership. It does provide controls, however, on the installation and care of attachments and structures. All attachments that are structures (e.g., patios, steps, and storage sheds) require permits and approval before installation.

Special rules in CC §§798.26 and 798.37.5 govern management's responsibilities to maintain trees (see §§6.34, 6.47-6.48).

Because structures installed with a mobilehome can cost thousands of dollars, homeowners may reasonably wish to retain ownership of these structures so that their value may be included in the value of the mobilehome if sold "in place" at a later date. Because of this, management may prefer to provide that the ownership of such structures remain with the homeowner, by omitting subparagraph a. and the final clause in subparagraph c. Homeowner ownership of fixtures may also eliminate management's potential responsibility for maintenance or removal costs or for liability for accidents caused as a result of a defect in the structure. See §6.48.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.115 10. Form: Right of Entry

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.115-1 Right of entry

34. Right of Entry:

a. Unless Homeowner provides written consent by an acknowledgment in paragraph 52, g. Management has no right to enter a mobilehome or enclosed structure on the lot without the prior written consent of the resident. The written consent provided in paragraph 52, g., or provided at the time of entry, may be revoked by the resident at any time, but only by another written document.

b. Despite this limitation on entry, Management has a right to enter the mobilehome or enclosed structure on the lot without the resident's prior written consent in an emergency or when the resident has abandoned the mobilehome.

c. Management has the right to enter the mobilehome space or land at any reasonable time without unreasonably disturbing the resident for:

(1) maintenance of utilities, trees, and driveways;

(2) maintenance of the premises in accordance with the park rules and regulations when Homeowner or the resident falls to maintain the premises; and

(3) protection of the mobilehome park.

Comment: This form restates the language of CC §§798.26 and 799.2, which provide that management must obtain the homeowner's prior written approval to enter a mobilehome or enclosed accessory structure. The form provides for the homeowner's prior written approval in an acknowledgment of approval at the end of the rental agreement (see §6.139). This acknowledgment should not be considered to be a waiver of rights granted under CC §798.19, because the introduction to the acknowledgments specifies that the homeowner may exercise discretion in signing each one.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.116 11. Form: Changes in Zoning, Use Permits, or Master Lease

§6.116 11. Form: Changes in Zoning, Use Permits, or Master Lease

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.116-1 Changes in zoning, use permits, or master lease

35. Changes In Zoning, Use Permits, or Master Lease:

a. Paragraph 17 describes the current zoning and use of the park. Management will give Homeowner at least 15 days' written notice before appearing before a local government entity to request a permit for a change of use of the park. If no government permit is required for the change, Management will provide Homeowner with 12 months' notice of the proposed change.

b. If a change occurs in the zoning or use permit of the park, or in the lease that Management holds for the park, Homeowner will be provided written notice within 30 days of the change. If a change in use approved by a government entity will result in termination of Homeowner's occupancy, Management will provide at least 6 months' notice of the termination of tenancy.

Comment: See §§6.49-6.53, 6.101.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.117 12. Form: Sale or Subletting of Mobilehome

§6.117 12. Form: Sale or Subletting of Mobilehome

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.117-1 Sale or sublease of mobilehome

36. Management Rights on Homeowner's Sale or Subletting of Mobilehome:

a. Homeowner, or Homeowner's surviving heir cotenant, personal representative of an estate, or agent of any of these persons, may sell his or her mobilehome at any time, subject to the rights and limitations imposed by state law. The seller must inform Management at the time that a sale may be made.

b. Management retains the right to approve a purchaser. Denial of a prospective purchaser will occur only if he or she does not have the financial ability to pay the rent and charges of the park, or if Management reasonably determines from the purchaser's prior tenancies that he or she will not comply with the rules and regulations of the park. Management will make written notice of approval or denial to Homeowner within _ _[e.g., ten days]_ _ of the seller's notification to Management of the prospective purchaser, including the reasons for denial.

c. If the purchaser wishes the mobilehome to remain in the park, the selling Homeowner must ensure that the purchaser completes an application for residency and executes a rental agreement before the close of sale. The new agreement and park rules and regulations may differ from those previously in effect. Seller must deliver the documents to Management before closing the sale.

d. After receiving notice of anticipated sale, and until the closing of the sale, Management may require the removal of a mobilehome in order to upgrade the quality of the park. Such removal may be required if (1) the mobilehome's width, age, or condition is consistent with the requirements of CC §798.73; (2) it is in a rundown condition or disrepair; or (3) It is allowed under a law enacted after this rental agreement is signed. If the condition of the mobilehome is in dispute, Management and Homeowner agree to submit to the results of an inspection by the enforcement agency prescribed by state law, each to pay half the cost of such an inspection.

e. If a homeowner has a confirmed medical situation under CC §798.23.5(a)(2), and has resided in the park for at least one year as his/her primary residence, the homeowner may rent or sublet the space and home for not less than 6 months, and not more than 12 months (unless other terms are approved in writing by Management), on approval under CC §798.23.5(b)(2), including payment of fees allowed by statute, and subject to all other requirements of CC §798.23.5.

f. If Management gives its approval in writing for any person other than a purchaser (e.g., a sublessee of Homeowner) to be a homeowner or resident of the park, such approval will be governed by rights and procedures generally permitted by law, rather than the provisions of subparagraphs a and b of this paragraph.

Comment: Subparagraphs a. and b. fulfill the state statutory obligations prescribed by CC §§798.70-798.79 and 799.1.5, which specifically govern sales in place. To prevent inappropriate pressure from a seller, management may wish to specify in subparagraph b. the number of days for management review. The period specified should be long enough for management to complete a credit check and related investigations.

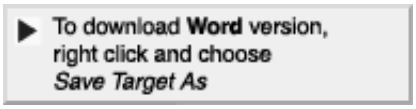
Subparagraph d. provides for park management and the tenant to agree in advance to an objective means of determining the condition of the mobilehome (e.g., sharing the cost of inspection by a state or local mobilehome inspector). This may eliminate the cost of litigation and the statutory penalty authorized by CC §798.86 if a court determines that management's assessment of the mobilehome's condition was not "reasonable." See §§6.54-6.58.

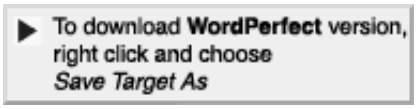
For discussion of subparagraph e., see §6.61.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.118 13. Form: General Prohibitions (Residential Use, Guests, Abandonment, Subletting, and Assignments or Encumbrances)

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.118-1 General prohibitions

37. General Prohibitions Concerning Use, Guests, Abandonment, and Sublease, Assignment, or Encumbrance of Mobilehome:

a. The mobilehome, mobilehome space, and common areas may be used only for private residential purposes, unless prior written consent is obtained from Management.

b. No person other than those listed in paragraphs 3 and 4 or authorized by the Mobilehome Residency Law (see Exhibit B), and no guests who remain for more than 20 consecutive days or 30 days in any calendar year, may reside on the premises without the prior written consent of Management.

c. It is a violation of this agreement to vacate the premises during the term of the agreement or its renewal without providing 60 days prior written notice.

d. Except for subletting consistent with Paragraph 36 of this agreement, Homeowner may not sublet or otherwise rent any portion or all of his or her mobilehome, or the premises on which it is situated, without prior written consent of Management.

e. Homeowner may not assign or encumber his or her interest in this rental agreement or the premises without prior written consent of Management. An assignment subject to this subparagraph may be voluntary, involuntary, or by operation of law.

f. Management's consent to a subletting, other rental, assignment, or encumbrance will not be considered a waiver of this paragraph. Consent may not be withheld unless (1) the new resident refuses to sign the rental agreement or does not have the financial ability to pay the rent and charges of the park, or (2) Management reasonably determines from the resident's prior tenancies that he or she will not comply with the park rules and regulations.

Comment: Subparagraph b. reflects the guest limitation requirements of CC §798.34. Note that CC §798.34 specifically prohibits a requirement that guests register with management, making it difficult for management to determine how many days a guest has been present. See §6.75 for a discussion of problems created by an assignment to a lender.

A new homeowner has no statutory right to assume the benefits of an existing rental agreement by subletting, assignment, or otherwise. Subparagraphs d. and e. above permit management to require execution of new agreements before such changes in homeowners. (But see §§3.56-3.58 for discussion of limitations on a landlord's right to refuse consent to a subletting or assignment.)

Subparagraph f. describes the criteria governing management's consent to such an assignment of interest (which is the same as the criteria used in approving prospective purchasers). Civil Code §798.79 requires a repossessing creditor to satisfy the former homeowner's recent rent and utility liabilities (not those earlier than 90 days before the eviction notices are served (CC §798.56a(b)(1)(A)) or while the mobilehome is subject to the bankruptcy court or trustee (CC §798.56a(d)) before selling the mobilehome to a third party. See also §§6.59-6.61.

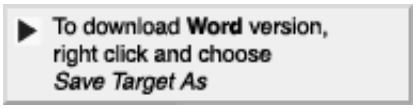
Abandonment of a mobilehome and the remedies for abandonment are discussed in §§6.79-6.84.

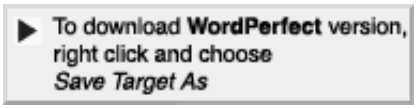
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.119 14. Form: Termination and Eviction

§6.119 14. Form: Termination and Eviction

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.119-1 Termination and eviction

38. Termination and Eviction:

a. This agreement may be declared to be forfeited, and Homeowner's tenancy and right to possession may be terminated, if permitted by law and after Management provides 60 days' written notice to Homeowner, including the facts on which the termination is based.

b. A term tenancy other than a month-to-month tenancy terminates automatically at the end of the term. If Homeowner remains in possession without executing a new agreement after expiration of the term and without Management's consent, continued possession will be considered to create a month-to-month tenancy that may be terminated under subparagraph a if permitted by law. In addition, after 60 days' written notice, Management may amend the costs of rent and fees by any amount permitted by law.

c. Homeowner may terminate a month-to-month tenancy only after 60 days' written notice to Management before termination, or as otherwise permitted by law.

d. Homeowner is and will remain responsible for all performance and consideration required by this agreement for its duration, or for the 60-day notice period required for termination of a month-to-month tenancy, or any period thereafter until the mobilehome is removed, whether Homeowner continues to occupy the space or sublets the mobilehome to someone else.

Comment: See §§6.1-6.2, 6.13-6.18, 6.62-6.84.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.120 15. Form: Waivers

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.120-1 Waivers

39. Waivers. Management's waiver of, or failure to take any action in response to, any breach of a provision of this agreement or the park rules and regulations will not be considered to be a waiver of that provision. Management's subsequent acceptance of any sum due and payable by Homeowner (a) will not be considered to be a waiver of any previous breach of this agreement or the park rules and regulations, or of Homeowner's failure to pay any sum due, regardless of Management's knowledge of the breach or failure to pay; or (b) will not reinstate or extend the term of this agreement or effect any notice, suit, or demand under this agreement.

Comment: This is a standard provision in all residential leases. However, a homeowner's waiver of any of the provisions of the MRL should not be included in the rental agreement or in the park rules and regulations. Such waivers are considered to be void as contrary to public policy. CC §§798.19, 798.77.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.121 16. Form: Notices

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.121-1 Notices

40. Notices. Notices to Management must be provided in writing to the park office during normal business hours. In an emergency, they may be provided to the manager at his or her address. Notices to Homeowner terminating the tenancy (including a 3-day notice required by Civil Code §798.56(e)) must be in writing and must be served on Homeowner in the manner described in Code of Civil Procedure §1162. Notices to legal and registered owners of a mobilehome, if other than Homeowner, must be provided under Civil Code §798.55(b)(1). Except as otherwise required by law, Homeowner agrees that service of any other notice (including, but not limited to, notice of rent increase, notice of noncompliance with park rules and regulations, and notice of any meeting to discuss amendments to park rules and regulations) will have been validly served if the notice is mailed to Homeowner at his or her address (provided in paragraph 2 of this agreement) via first class United States mail, with prepaid postage. Homeowner agrees that any notice served In this manner will be considered to be served 5 days after its mailing. Homeowner agrees that service of amended copies of the Mobilehome Residency Law may be served in the same manner.

Comment: Inclusion of this paragraph may prevent later disputes over the appropriateness of the service of any notice. The provision "Except as otherwise required by law" in this paragraph refers to the posted notice required by Veh C §21107.9 for local government adoption of mobilehome park or mobilehome community speed limits subject to public enforcement. See §6.13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.122 17. Form: Consultation With Homeowner

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.122-1 Consultation with homeowner

41. Consultation With Homeowner. Management will meet and consult with Homeowner within 30 days after written request (individually, collectively, or with representatives of a group of homeowners who have signed a request to be so represented) on at least the following matters:

a. Resident concerns regarding existing park rules that are not subject to Civil Code §798.25;

b. Standards for maintenance of physical improvements in the park;

c. Addition, alteration, or deletion of services, equipment, or physical improvements; and

d. Rental agreements offered under Civil Code §798.17.

Any collective meeting will be conducted only after notice of the meeting has been given to all the requesting homeowners at least ten days before the meeting.

Comment: Civil Code §798.53 requires that management meet and consult with homeowners, within 30 days of written request, about resident concerns regarding existing park rules that are not subject to CC §798.25. See §§6.45, 6.141. Civil Code §798.53 includes rental agreements under CC §798.17 as one of the subjects on which mobilehome management must consult with homeowners and their organization or representatives. For discussion of CC §798.17, see §6.143.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.123 18. Form: Liability Indemnification

§6.123 18. Form: Liability Indemnification

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.123-1 Liability indemnification

42. Liability Indemnification. Homeowner agrees to indemnify and hold Management harmless from, and on account of, any property damage or personal injury to any property or any person that (a) arises as a result of any willful or negligent act or omission related to the tenancy in the park by Homeowner, (b) arises from any act or omission of Homeowner resulting in a defect or deterioration in the condition of the mobilehome or leased site, or (c) arises from the negligent or intentional acts or omissions of Homeowner and his or her family or guests. This indemnification does not cover any injury or damage that is the fault of Management.

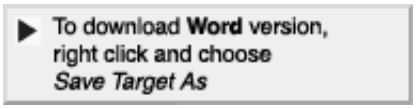
Comment: Some parks require homeowners to acquire liability insurance as a condition of residency. Management may wish to include a provision in this Form 6.123-1 to require the homeowner to do so, but management may not require homeowners to obtain liability insurance in order to use common area facilities for specified purposes (CC §798.24).

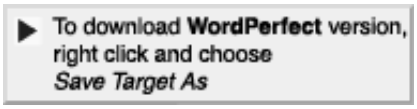
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.124 19. Form: Management's Right to Make Payments

§6.124 19. Form: Management's Right to Make Payments

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.124-1 Management's right to make payments

43. Management's Right To Make Payments:

a. If Homeowner falls to pay any tax; assessment; lien; claim or demand arising out of construction, repair, or damages; or other charge or claim that Homeowner has agreed to pay under this agreement, Management may pay the amount, or settle or discharge any action for such amount, if Homeowner fails to do so (or to post bond for such amount) after 30 days' written notice by Management.

b. All reasonable and actual costs and other sums incurred by Management in connection with such action must be paid by Homeowner to Management on demand, together with interest at the prevailing prime rate, from the date of payment until repaid.

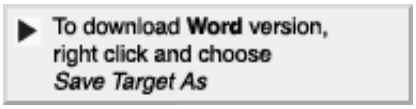
Comment: If a mechanics' lien is imposed on the park for fixtures added by a homeowner, or a homeowner does not pay the cost of an assessment passed through to homeowners on a per-space basis, management may pay the cost and then sue the homeowner for a money judgment (with interest) instead of evicting the homeowner for nonpayment of the obligations.

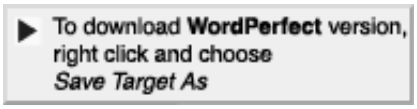
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.125 20. Form: Ownership of Mobilehome

§6.125 20. Form: Ownership of Mobilehome

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.125-1 Ownership of mobilehome

44. Ownership of Mobilehome. Corporate ownership of the mobilehome, or multiple ownership other than by a husband and wife (or, if either or both of them die, their adult children), on the leased site is not permitted except on prior written approval of Management.

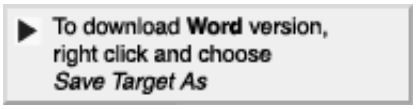
Comment: This form may be important if management anticipates a "normal" turnover in ownership, as is often the case in mobilehome parks located in vacation areas.

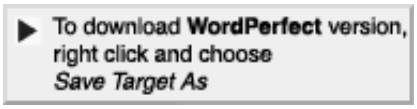
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.126 21. Form: Multiple Mobilehome Ownership

§6.126 21. Form: Multiple Mobilehome Ownership

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.126-1 Multiple mobilehome ownership

45. Multiple Mobilehome Ownership. Direct or Indirect ownership by Homeowner of more than one mobilehome in the park is not permitted without the prior written approval of Management.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.127 22. Form: Enforcement of Agreement

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.127-1 Enforcement of agreement

46. Enforcement of Agreement: Fees; Notice; Abatement by and Reimbursement of Management; Homeowner's Right To Repair and Deduct:

a. Management may charge a reasonable fee for services relating to maintenance of the land and premises on which the mobilehome is located if Homeowner fails to maintain the land or premises in accordance with the park rules and regulations within 14 days of written notification. The written notice must state the specific condition to be corrected, and must include an estimate of the charges to be imposed by Management if the services will be performed by Management or its agent.

b. Management retains the right to repair or rectify any defects or deficiencies caused by Homeowner in the common areas, and to bill Homeowner the reasonable cost of these services.

c. Homeowner retains the right under Civil Code §1942 to repair and deduct (as permitted by law in effect at the time of notice to Management) any defect in common areas and leased areas, individually and jointly with other homeowners.

Comment: Civil Code §798.15(g) requires inclusion of subparagraph a. in the rental agreement. See §6.34.

Subparagraphs b. and c. provide respective limited "self-help" remedies to rectify limited defaults by the tenant or management. Availability of such remedies may discourage both parties from defaulting, as well as permit prompt rectification of serious problems.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.128 23. Form: Attorney Fees

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.128-1 Attorney fees

47. Attorney Fees. In any action arising out of the tenancy, this agreement, or the provisions of the Mobilehome Residency Law, the prevailing party will be entitled to reasonable attorney fees and costs at the time of entry of judgment In the action.

© The Regents of the University of California

24. Miscellaneous Provisions

§6.129 a. Form: Time of the Essence

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.129-1 Time of the essence

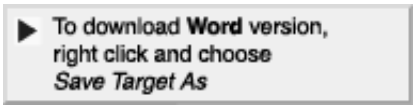
48. Time of the Essence. Time is the essence of each provision of this agreement.

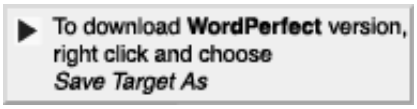
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.130 b. Form: Interpretation and Severability

§6.130 b. Form: Interpretation and Severability

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.130-1 Interpretation and severability

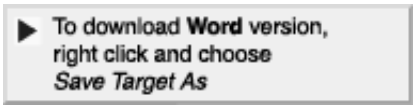
49. Interpretation and Severability. Each provision of this agreement is separate, distinct, and individually enforceable. If any provision is declared to be unlawful or unenforceable, the validity of all other provisions will not be affected.

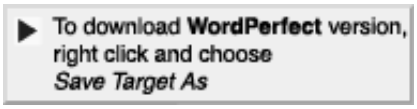
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.131 c. Form: Entirety of Agreement

§6.131 c. Form: Entirety of Agreement

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.131-1 Entirety of agreement

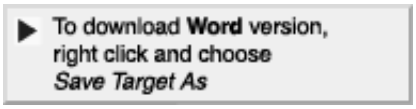
50. Entirety of Agreement. This agreement contains the entire agreement between Homeowner and Management regarding tenancy in the park. This agreement supersedes any prior written or oral negotiations or agreements, unless they are set forth in writing in this agreement.

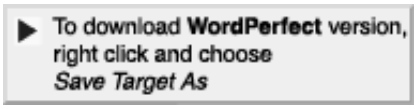
© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.132 d. Form: Alterations or Amendments

§6.132 d. Form: Alterations or Amendments

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.132-1 Alterations or amendments

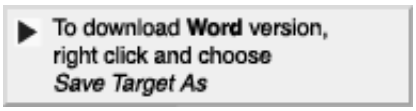
51. Alterations or Amendments. This agreement may be altered or amended by Homeowner and Management only by written alteration or amendment (signed by all the parties) or by operation of law.

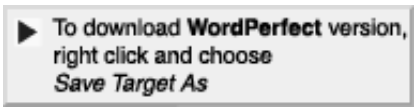
© The Regents of the University of California

25. Acknowledgments

§6.133 a. Form: Acknowledgment Is Voluntary; Caveat

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.





6.133-1 Voluntary acknowledgments; caveat to homeowner

52. Acknowledgments. Note: Initialing the acknowledgments in subparagraphs a. through g. is voluntary. Approval should be given only after careful consideration and review of each one.

Comment: Placed for convenience at the end of the lease, the acknowledgments in §§6.134-6.139 provide a record of the homeowner's understanding of important agreements made with management.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.134 b. Form: Inspection Made to Corroborate Management's Representation of Space and Facilities

§6.134 b. Form: Inspection Made to Corroborate Management's Representation of Space and Facilities

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.134-1 Homeowner acknowledges inspection, satisfaction that facilities are as represented

a. By initialing this subparagraph, Homeowner agrees (1) that he or she has carefully inspected the rental space and the park's facilities; and (2) that the space and facilities are in every respect as represented by Management to Homeowner, either orally or in writing. To the extent that the space and facilities are not exactly as represented, either orally or in writing, Homeowner accepts them as they are. _ _[Provide space for Homeowner's initials]_ _

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.135 c. Form: Receipt and Understanding of Mobilehome Residency Law

§6.135 c. Form: Receipt and Understanding of Mobilehome Residency Law

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.135-1 Homeowner acknowledges receipt and understanding of Mobilehome Residency Law

b. By initialing this subparagraph, Homeowner agrees that he or she has read, understood, and received copies of this agreement, the Park Rules and Regulations, and the Mobilehome Residency Law. Homeowner understands that by executing this agreement he or she will be bound by its terms and conditions. _ _[Provide space for Homeowner's initials]_ _.

Comment: Civil Code §798.15(b)-(c) require that the rental agreement contain the rules and regulations of the park and a copy of the provisions of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10). Subparagraph b. above acknowledges receipt of these documents, which have been incorporated by reference by paragraph 31 in §6.112.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.136 d. Form: Charges for Month-to-Month Agreement

§6.136 d. Form: Charges for Month-to-Month Agreement

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.136-1 Homeowner acknowledges charges for month-to-month agreement

c. By accepting a month-to-month agreement and initialing this subparagraph, Homeowner acknowledges that (1) he or she has been offered a 12-month agreement; (2) agreement did not contain terms or conditions regarding charges for rent, utilities, or incidental reasonable service charges differing from the terms of this agreement; (3) Homeowner declined to enter into such an agreement; and (4) Homeowner instead requested and elected to sign this agreement. _ _[Provide space for Homeowner's initials]_ _.

Comment: See comment in §6.137.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.137 e. Charges for Term Agreement

§6.137 e. Charges for Term Agreement

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.137-1 Homeowner acknowledges charges for term agreement

c. By accepting a term agreement and initialing this subparagraph Homeowner acknowledges that this agreement does not contain terms or conditions regarding charges for rent or utilities or incidental reasonable service charges other than those that would be offered to Homeowner on a month-to-month basis. _ _[Provide space for Homeowner's initials]_ _.

Comment: Civil Code §798.18 requires that the homeowner be offered a rental agreement for a 12-month term or for a lesser term at the homeowner's request, and that the initial provisions for charges be the same as for a month-to-month agreement. This subparagraph c. and the alternative version of subparagraph c. in §6.136 provide for an acknowledgment that these alternative terms were available.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.138 f. Form: Acceptance of Commercial Goods or Services Not Required

§6.138 f. Form: Acceptance of Commercial Goods or Services Not Required

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.138-1 Homeowner acknowledges that management has not required acceptance of commercial goods or services

d. By initialing this subparagraph, Homeowner acknowledges that Management has not required Homeowner to purchase, rent, or lease goods or services for landscaping from any person, company, or corporation. _ _[Provide space for Homeowners initials]_ _.

Comment: Civil Code §798.37 regulates fees for hook-ups and landscaping. Subparagraph d. provides an acknowledgment that management has not violated the provisions of this statute.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.139 g. Form: Consent to Entry

§6.139 g. Form: Consent to Entry

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.139-1 Homeowner consents to entry of mobilehome

e. By initialing this subparagraph, Homeowner provides prior written consent for entry into Homeowner's mobilehome, understanding that such permission may be revoked in writing at any time. _ _[Provide space for Homeowner's initials]_ _.

Comment: Civil Code §798.26 regulates management's right of entry into a mobilehome. See also §6.115.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.139A h. Form: Attachments

§6.139A h. Form: Attachments

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.139A-1 Attachments to agreement

If checked below, the following attachments were entered into concurrently with executing this agreement.

Pet Agreement:	___Included	___Not Included
Tree Maintenance Agreement:	___Included	___Not Included
Park Rules and Regulations:	___Included	___Not Included
Emergency Preparedness Information:	___Included	___Not Included
Other:_____	___Included	___Not Included

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.140 26. Form: Execution

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§6.90-6.140.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

6.140-1 Execution

53. Execution

Date: _ _ _ _ _ _ By _ _[Name]_ _
Management

Date: _ _ _ _ _ _ By _ _[Name]_ _
Homeowner

Date: _ _ _ _ _ _ By _ _[Name]_ _
Homeowner

Comment: The rental agreement should be signed by each adult who will reside in the mobilehome. Similarly, each acknowledgment should be initialed by each adult resident.

© The Regents of the University of California

VII. RULES AND REGULATIONS

§6.141 A. Importance

Given the nature of mobilehome parks, the needs of management, and the explicit requirements of the Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (CC §§798-799.10), the drafting and use of rules and regulations are critical factors in the operation of a mobilehome park. These rules must comply with the "reasonableness" requirements of CC §798.56(d) in order for their breach to be enforced by termination of the tenancy, but they also must be tailored to the specific needs of the park, its residents, and its management.

The rules and regulations are particularly important in mobilehome parks that grant long-term leases. Because CC §798.25 permits management to amend the park rules and regulations unilaterally in most situations (see §§6.33, 6.41, 6.45), management benefits from including in the rental agreement only items required by law, leaving the park rules to govern the rest. Tenants, of course, benefit from the opposite strategy. Rules and regulations that are mandated by statute, ordinance, or regulation and those that apply to recreational facilities may be amended after 60 days' written notice, if the tenant does not consent to the changes. Other amendments require 6 months' written notice if the tenant fails to consent and the notice complies with CC §798.25.

The rules and regulations that apply to park residents and their guests generally apply to owners and employees of the owner as well. CC §798.23(a).

A park owner may be required to make reasonable accommodations in park rules, regulations, and policies to accommodate disabled tenants. In U.S. v California Mobile Home Park Mgmt. Co. (9th Cir 1994) 29 F3d 1413, the mobilehome landlord denied the request of a tenant, mother of a disabled child, for a waiver of guest and guest parking fees for her daughter's health care aide imposed under park rules and regulations. The court held that landlords must absorb certain costs under the Fair Housing Act (42 USC §§3601-3631) to allow handicapped persons equal opportunity to use and enjoy housing, as long as the costs are not unduly burdensome. In a later decision in the case, however, the court affirmed a judgment in favor of the landlord, holding that the tenant had failed to show that use of the caretaker's automobile was necessary to provide services to the disabled child. U.S. v California Mobile Home Park Mgmt. Co. (9th Cir 1997) 107 F3d 1374.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/6 Mobilehome Tenancies/§6.142 B. Checklist: Common Provisions

§6.142 B. Checklist: Common Provisions

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

The following topics, in alphabetical order, are usually covered by mobilehome park rules and regulations. When the rules repeat or interpret the terms of the rental agreement, they should be consistent with the agreement. All rules and regulations should be reviewed every year to ensure that they do not violate amendments to the Mobilehome Residency Law and cases interpreting it.

- (1) Accessory buildings and lot maintenance. Specify general lot maintenance standards related to trash, storage of personal property, hazardous materials, or attractive nuisances. Specify size, maintenance, decor, and appearance of adjoining buildings (e.g., cabanas, ramadas, carports). Note whether homeowner must make prior written request for management's approval of installation or modification of such buildings and obtain required Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) or local enforcement agency permits before work is commenced. See §6.48.
- (2) Additional residents. Specify number of additional residents permitted and for how long. Note whether homeowner must have prior approval of management. List fees for guests. See CC §798.34. Under CC §798.35, no fees may be charged for homeowner's immediate family, which includes the homeowner, his or her spouse, their parents, their children, and their grandchildren under the age of 18. Occupancy limits (e.g., two persons per mobilehome bedroom plus one additional person) are sometimes stated. Such standards may be subject to attack, however, as illegal discrimination against families with children. See §§2.22-2.25.
- (3) Adjoining facilities. Specify rules and regulations of mobilehome park-owned or -operated recreational facilities (including, e.g., fees, storage of boats or golf carts, hours of tennis court use). Some attorneys advise that management put these provisions in a separate agreement so that the facilities do not fall under rent control provisions.
- (4) Age. Specify minimum age of residents (e.g., senior citizen only). If limiting the park to senior citizens, management should note whether both spouses must be senior citizens. (See discussion in §§2.22-2.25, 6.18 on age restrictions.)
- (5) Amendments to rules. Specify how amendments to park rules will be carried out (e.g., timing, service of notice, places of posting).
- (6) Antennas, satellite dishes, or cable requirements. Specify limitations on size and placement of antennas and satellite dishes. Note whether cable television hook-ups may be made.
- (7) Arbitration. Without the consent of the homeowners, management may not unilaterally adopt a rule or regulation that attempts to deny homeowners' right to trial by jury or that requires binding arbitration of disputes. CC §798.25.5.
- (8) Associations; residents or homeowners. Describe park requirements, if any, for resident or homeowner associations.
- (9) Commercial uses. Specify permissible commercial uses (if any) of park, common areas, or individual homes. Keep in mind that many senior citizens supplement their incomes with commercial enterprises, and that a blanket ban may promote poor landlord-tenant relations.
- (10) Common areas. Specify care and use requirements of common areas (e.g., speed limits in the park, consumption of alcoholic beverages, hours of use of laundry rooms).
- (11) Community room. Specify requirements for use of community room (e.g., hours, prior approval of use by residents or management, liquor prohibitions, insurance riders, post-use cleaning, use by outside organizations). See §6.20.
- (12) Conduct. Specify rules governing resident and guest conduct, hours of gatherings, noise, and guest use of facilities.
- (13) Guests. Specify rules governing registration, fees, and ages of guests. (Note that CC §798.34 prohibits charges for guests who stay not more than 20 consecutive days or those who stay 30 days or less in any calendar year. Registration requirements for such guests are also prohibited.)

- (14) Hitches, axles, and wheels. Specify requirements regarding removal, storage, sale, and covers of mobilehome hitches, axles, and wheels.
- (15) Mobilehomes. Specify limitations on size, appearance, and upkeep of mobilehomes. Describe types of interior and exterior installations that are permitted. Note whether earthquake protection devices are required. Specify whether specific fire-resistant construction of mobilehomes or accessory structures is required. See §6.57A. Require park approval for any repairs or alterations which may impact park operations, and obtain Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) permits when required. See §6.48.
- (16) Parking. Specify rules governing approval, installation, appearance, and maintenance of leased-site parking area and other assigned parking areas, including registration and fees (if any).
- (17) Patios and awnings. Specify requirements for prior approval, installation, appearance, and maintenance of patio and awning areas.
- (18) Pets. Specify size, number, and type of pets allowed. Describe registration and fees for services, rules concerning pets' conduct, and locations where they may be kept or walked. But see CC §798.33 for leases signed on or after January 1, 2001.
- (19) Repairs. Specify the procedure for requesting repairs (e.g., where such requests must be made, rules governing emergency situations).
- (20) Sales. Specify applicable rules in addition to state laws (e.g., whether a for-sale sign may be placed on the coach).
- (21) Space. Specify rules for, e.g., landscaping, upkeep, items requiring prior approval. Management's right to charge for premises maintenance may be repeated in the rules. See CC §798.15(g).
- (22) Special rules. Specify special rules incorporated in the park rules and regulations (e.g., regarding the swimming pool) that may be amended without 6 months' prior notice.
- (23) Storage. Specify registration, fees, and use requirements for park-owned storage. Describe site requirements, rules for approval, installation, maintenance, and appearance of storage sheds and storage areas. Note what may and may not be stored in storage areas or on the site (e.g., second cars, boats).
- (24) Traffic rules. Specify any traffic rules, e.g., speed limits, park stop signs, street parking. See §§6.13, 6.121.
- (25) Trash. Specify rules regarding, e.g., trash pick-up, appearance and up-keep of containers. The rules should prohibit spilling, depositing into trash containers, and other improper handling of environmentally hazardous waste materials. Auto repairs and maintenance such as changing motor oil (or any other automotive fluids or grease) and storage of automobile batteries should be prohibited within the park.
- (26) Miscellaneous rules. Specify other rules necessary for park operation.

© The Regents of the University of California

VIII. MANAGEMENT-TENANT RELATIONS

§6.143 A. Tenant Organizations

In most mobilehome parks, the homeowners or residents form a local association that represents them in meetings with park management. Civil Code §798.51(a) specifically requires that management permit resident meetings to take place in the park's community or recreation hall. Under CC §798.51, mobilehome park rental agreements, rules, or regulations may not deny or prohibit homeowners or residents from meeting for any lawful purpose, from inviting public officials, political candidates, or representatives of mobilehome owner organizations to speak on matters of public interest, or from canvassing and petitioning owners and residents for noncommercial purposes regarding mobilehome living, public elections, or the initiative, referendum, or recall processes. Any homeowner or resident may bring an action to enjoin enforcement of any rule, regulation, or policy that prevents exercise of these rights. CC §798.52.

Civil Code §798.53 requires that management, within 30 days of a tenant's written request, meet and consult with homeowners and their organization or representatives regarding changes in park rules, services, or maintenance.

Rental agreements under CC §798.17 are listed among the subjects on which mobilehome management must consult with tenants and their organization or representatives. CC §798.53(d). For discussion of CC §798.17, see §6.32.

In Tenants Ass'n of Park Santa Anita v Southers (1990) 222 CA3d 1293, 272 CR 361, the court held that an unincorporated association representing mobilehome park residents had standing to sue the park owner for injunctive relief, abatement of nuisance, statutory fines, and legal fees. The association did not have standing, however, to sue for damages for emotional distress and personal injuries of particular residents.

The state has established a mobilehome "ombudsman" within the Department of Housing and Community Development to provide assistance in taking complaints and to help resolve and coordinate resolution of complaints regarding various aspects of living in mobilehomes and manufactured housing, including:

- Mobilehome titling and registration;
- Installation;
- Warranties;
- Financing;
- Sales;
- Park or mobilehome inspections; and
- Accessories and other improvements.

See Health & S C §§18150-18153. However, the ombudsman may not arbitrate, mediate, negotiate, or provide legal advice on mobilehome park rental disputes, lease or rental agreements, or disputes arising from lease or rental agreements, but may provide information on these issues. Health & S C §18151(c). Civil Code §798.29 requires park management to post a sign in a conspicuous public place regarding contacting the ombudsman.

There are three statewide mobilehome park tenants' organizations. The Golden State Manufactured-Home Owners' League, Inc. (GSMOL) is a mass membership organization, with chapters at a number of parks. It provides services to mobilehome owners, including statewide and regional attorneys, a legislative advocate, and staff and publishers for various publications. A subscription to its monthly newsletter, the Californian, may be obtained by writing the GSMOL at the address listed in the Directory. The California Mobilehome Resource and Action Association (CMRAA) provides similar benefits. Its newsletter and other assistance can be obtained by writing or calling the CMRAA; see Directory for address and telephone number. The Coalition of Mobilehome Owners-California ("CoMoCal") provides information and advocacy for park residents; see Directory for address and telephone number.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.144 B. Management Organizations

The primary mobilehome park management organization in California is the Western Manufactured Housing Communities Association (WMA). Like the Golden State Manufactured-Home Owners' League, its paid staff includes attorneys, legislative advocates, and publishers. It publishes not only a monthly newsletter (the WMA Reporter), but also a notebook of laws applicable to mobilehome operation and a variety of forms, leases, and other documents. Information regarding the WMA may be obtained by writing to the address listed in the Directory. Other park owner organizations are California Mobilehome Parkowners' Alliance and the Manufactured Housing Educational Trust (MHET); see the Directory for their addresses and phone numbers.

© The Regents of the University of California

7

Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws

Nancy C. Lenvin
Myron Moskovitz

I. INTRODUCTION
- A. Overview §7.1
- B. Resources §7.2

II. BASIC CONCEPTS §7.3
- A. Vacancy Control or Decontrol §7.4
- B. Base Rent §7.5
- C. Retroactive Application of Enactments §7.6

III. HISTORICAL BACKGROUND AND LEGAL CHALLENGES
- A. Wartime Rent Controls and the "Emergency Requirement" §7.7
- B. Rise of Peacetime Controls §7.8
- C. Facial Challenges §7.9
  - 1. Constitutional Challenges §7.10
  - 2. Mobilehome Park Rent Control Ordinances §7.11
  - 3. Other Bases for Facial Challenges §7.12
- D. Fair Return Issues §7.13
- E. "As Applied" Due Process Challenges §7.14
- F. Damage Actions Under 42 USC §1983 §7.14A
- G. Kavanau and Galland Decisions Applied §7.14B
- H. Actions Regarding Rent Controls §7.14C

IV. EXEMPTIONS §7.15
- A. Single-Family Homes, Condominiums, and Small Buildings §7.16
- B. Owner-Occupied Dwellings §7.17
- C. New Construction §7.18
- D. Federally Assisted Housing §7.19
- E. Care Facilities §7.20
- F. Hotels §7.21
- G. Luxury Units §7.22
- H. Substantially Rehabilitated Units §7.23
- I. Tenants Who Do Not Make the Unit Tenant's Principal Residence §7.23A
- J. Other Exemptions §7.24

V. VACANCY DECONTROL: COSTA-HAWKINS RENTAL HOUSING ACT
- A. Preemption of Local Vacancy Controls §7.25
- B. Phasing Out Existing Local Vacancy Controls §7.25A
- C. Preemption of Local Laws Affecting Collateral Rights Under Costa-Hawkins §7.25B
- D. Subletting and Assignment: When Does a Vacancy Occur? §7.26
  - 1. Former Law on Subletting §7.27
  - 2. Subletting After the Costa-Hawkins Act §7.28
  - 3. Eviction Issues After Costa-Hawkins §7.28A

VI. RENT INCREASE MECHANISMS
- A. Base Rents
  - 1. Determining Base Rent §7.29
  - 2. Changing Base Rent §7.30
  - 3. Base Rents for Newly Covered Rental Units §7.31
  - 4. Evidentiary Problems in Establishing Base Rents §7.32
- B. Annual Base Rent Adjustments §7.33
- C. Individual Adjustments

1. Increases in Operating and Maintenance Expenses §7.34
2. Utility and Capital-Improvement Pass-Throughs §7.35
3. Cost of Professional Services to Prove Need for Rent Increase §7.36
4. Limits on Individual Increases §7.37
5. "Fair Return" Adjustments §7.38
6. Tenant Does Not Occupy Unit As Principal Residence §7.38A

VII. TENANT PETITIONS FOR RENT DECREASES OR REFUNDS
A. Reductions in Services §7.39
B. Inadequate Maintenance §7.40
C. Refund of Rent Overpayments §7.40A

VIII. PRACTICING BEFORE RENT CONTROL BOARDS
A. Introduction §7.41
B. Powers of Rent Boards
1. Rule Making §7.42
2. Adjudicating Petitions §7.43
3. Registration of Rental Units §7.44
4. Registration of Rents §7.45
C. Representing Clients at Administrative Hearings §7.46
1. Evidence §7.47
2. Preservation of Record §7.48
3. Costs of Preparing for and Attending a Hearing §7.49
4. Findings and Conclusions Required §7.50
D. Judicial Review: Administrative Mandamus §7.51
E. Arbitration §7.52

IX. RESTRICTIONS ON EVICTIONS
A. Overview §7.53
B. Just Cause for Eviction or Termination of Housing Services §7.54
1. "Good Faith" Requirements §7.55
2. Protection for Subtenants §7.55A
C. Permissible Grounds for Just Cause Evictions
1. Tenant's Breach
a. Failure to Pay Rent §7.56
b. Failure to Cure Violation of Rental Agreement §7.57
c. Conduct Constituting a Nuisance §7.58
d. Use of Premises for Illegal Purpose §7.59
e. Refusal to Permit Access to Landlord §7.60
f. Refusal to Execute New Lease §7.61
g. Improper Subletting §7.62
2. Renovation or Rehabilitation §7.63
3. Demolition or Conversion Under Ellis Act §7.64
a. Constitutionality of Ellis Act Upheld §7.64A
b. Basic Provisions of Ellis Act
(1) Allows Withdrawal of Housing Accommodations From Market §7.64B
(2) Authorizes Local Restrictions on Subsequent Rental §7.64C
(3) Requires Reasonable Review of Permit Applications and Fair Return on Demolished and Reconstructed Units §7.64D
(4) Does Not Prohibit Multiple Owner Occupancy Use §7.64E
(5) Notice and Reporting Requirements §7.64F
c. Eviction Actions Under Ellis Act §7.64G
d. Local Requirements and Restrictions on Evictions §7.64H
4. Occupancy by Owner or Owner's Relative
a. Typical Ordinance Provisions §7.65
b. Statutory Provisions; CC §1947.10 §7.66
c. "Good Faith" Intent to Occupy §7.67
d. Counseling Potential Buyers Who Plan to Occupy Rented Premises §7.68
D. Grounds Not Set Forth in Ordinance
1. Tenant Eviction Not Allowed After Foreclosure §7.69
2. Termination of Manager §7.70
3. Tenant Gives Notice of Termination But Fails to Vacate §7.71
4. Death of Tenant §7.72
E. Notice and Pleading Requirements
1. Eviction Notices §7.73

2. Must Compliance With Ordinance Be Alleged in Complaint? §7.74
F. Burdens of Proof and Presumptions §7.75
G. Defenses to Evictions Provided by Local Ordinance §7.76
H. Required Payments to Tenants on Eviction §7.76A

X. CIVIL DAMAGES AND OFFSETS FOR ORDINANCE VIOLATIONS
A. Damages for Rent Overcharges §7.77
B. Damages for Unlawful Evictions §7.78
C. Attorney Fees §7.79
D. Liability of New Owner §7.80

© The Regents of the University of California

I. INTRODUCTION

§7.1 A. Overview

California has no statewide law controlling rents or rent increases. Each municipality is free to decide whether and, within certain limits, how to regulate residential rents. State law, however, imposes limits on the type of rent controls that a locality may enact. The Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535) outlaws rent controls on vacant apartments and exempts newly constructed units and, under certain conditions, single-family homes and condominiums from controls on rents (see §§7.4, 7.25-7.28). With these limitations, many municipalities have adopted some form of regulation on the amount of rent a landlord may charge and some have further adopted limits on the right of a landlord to evict a month-to-month tenant.

The ordinances, as well as the local rules adopted by administrative agencies (charged with enforcing the controls), vary widely. Knowledge of one ordinance does not mean the practitioner will know another. Moreover, many jurisdictions frequently amend their ordinances and their administrative rules. Rent control has also spawned litigation, and a range of state and federal court decisions have had an impact on the interpretation of local ordinances. As a result, practitioners often find it a daunting task to ascertain the current status of applicable law or to determine the propriety of historical rents.

Historically, the state legislature has been called on to address some of the more difficult problems posed by rent controls for property owners, particularly those in jurisdictions that controlled rents even on vacant apartments. Legislation that continues in force includes the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7), but amendments are frequently proposed and sometimes enacted in response to court decisions. With the passage of the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act, earlier statutes regulating local rent control ordinances, such as CC §§1947.7-1947.11, although remaining on the books, may not apply.

Struggles between landlords and tenants for control of local rent boards have resulted in rules, regulations, and unwritten practices that might not seem wholly consistent with the intent of the rent control ordinance as it was originally written. Landlords and tenants may not, however, enter into a private settlement agreement that determines whether the property is subject to a rent increase under a rent control ordinance. Gombiner v Swartz (2008) 167 CA4th 1365, 1372, 85 CR3d 83.

Because local rent control schemes vary so greatly and are amended so frequently, this chapter does not discuss some issues that are peculiar to particular local ordinances. Practitioners should be sure to obtain the current version of their local ordinance and a copy of all the current rules and regulations, and they should determine whether any amendments are being considered by the local legislative body or rent control board.

Courts in other states—especially New York and New Jersey—have considered rent control issues similar to those that arise in California. Some of these cases are cited in this chapter, although as authority they should be viewed with caution because the laws applicable in such cases may differ from California or local laws.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.2 B. Resources

In addition to the printed texts of the local ordinance and rules, it is often helpful to consult agencies and groups whose primary function is assisting either landlords or tenants. The staffs of these organizations are often knowledgeable about proposed legislation and the status of pending cases. The State Bar of California's Real Property Section has a Landlord Tenant Committee.

The California Apartment Association located in Sacramento, local apartment owners' associations, and local boards of realtors and their state and national organizations are excellent sources of information for attorneys representing property owners. See the Directory for addresses and phone numbers of these organizations.

Local legal services organizations and community-based tenant groups are excellent contacts for tenant advocates. Local rent boards frequently maintain rosters of professionals who can be of assistance to both landlords and tenants.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.3 II. BASIC CONCEPTS

Local "rent control" ordinances are designed to control the amount of rent increases that a landlord may impose. These "rent increase" limitations are typically tied to a "base rent" (see §7.5). Whether the base rent applies to a particular apartment or a particular tenant depends on the type of rent control originally enacted (see §7.4).

Most ordinances permit annual rent increases in the base rent, often referred to as "general" increases or adjustments (see §7.33). Additional increases ("individual adjustments") requested by the landlord are also usually authorized by local ordinances (see §§7.34-7.38). Tenant petitions for rent decreases are also allowed (see §§7.39-7.40).

Generally, rent control ordinances provide a mechanism for handling tenant complaints that a landlord has violated the ordinance or regulations (see §§7.41-7.52). Many also contain restrictions on a landlord's ability to evict tenants, including "good cause" requirements (see §§7.54-7.72). An improperly set rent level will affect a landlord's ability to evict for nonpayment of rent. See §7.56.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.4 A. Vacancy Control or Decontrol

For most units as of January 1, 1999, there are no controls on the amount of rent that may be charged a new tenant, provided that the old tenant vacated the unit voluntarily, abandoned the unit, or was evicted for a breach of the rental agreement. See CC §1954.53(a)(1). This result is mandated by the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535), originally enacted in 1995. Before the enactment of this statute, rent controls in several jurisdictions (notably Berkeley and Santa Monica) had imposed rent controls on apartments regardless of who lived in the unit and whether it was a new or existing tenancy.

WARNING: Practitioners in jurisdictions where there has been vacancy control need to be particularly careful in determining what is the proper base rent for tenants.

The issue of when an apartment is voluntarily vacated may be fraught with problems because the statute provides that the rent may not be increased to market rate if the landlord has given a 30-day or 60-day notice under either CC §1946 or §1946.1 (see §§8.69-8.77) or CC §827 (see §§3.65-3.65B), except for a change permitted by law in the amount of rent or fees. CC §1954.53(a)(1). The lack of precision in the drafting of the statute makes practice under it difficult.

The state authorization to landlords to set rents on vacant apartments is also limited if the owner has entered into a contract with a government entity that provides rental assistance and the owner attempts to terminate that contract. CC §1954.53(a)(2). Similarly, owners of units with unabated building or housing code violations are also denied the right to bring rents on vacant units to market. CC §1954.53(f).

The foregoing limitations must be evaluated carefully before a practitioner gives any advice on the amount of rents that may be charged or collected by a landlord.

WARNING: In cities such as Santa Monica and West Hollywood, where there was limited or no vacancy decontrol prior to Costa-Hawkins, landlords must register the new base rent to obtain a Costa-Hawkins vacancy rent increase. If the landlord fails to register the new base rent or does so incorrectly, succeeding rent increases may violate the local rent control law. Practitioners should check filings, particularly in the context of an eviction for nonpayment of rent.

For further discussion of the details of the Costa-Hawkins Act, see §§7.25-7.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.5 B. Base Rent

Rent control ordinances usually establish a base rent from which future legal rent levels are calculated, in such amounts and at such times as the rent control ordinance permits. In jurisdictions that have (or had) controls on the amount of rent a landlord may charge a new tenant for a vacant apartment (vacancy control; see §7.4), this base rent will probably have been established as of a particular date, typically some time before the ordinance was adopted. See §§7.29-7.32. In vacancy decontrol jurisdictions, the base rent is the initial rent charged the tenant. The base rent may be increased by general adjustments or other permitted increases over the term of the tenancy.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.6 C. Retroactive Application of Enactments

Frequent amendment of rent control ordinances and rules raises the questions of whether such enactments are retroactive and to whom they apply. Courts have upheld municipalities' authority to roll back rents to determine base rents under newly enacted rent controls. See Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley (1976) 17 C3d 129, 130 CR 465; Berman v Downing (1986) 184 CA3d Supp 1, 229 CR 660. For purposes of retroactivity, courts have often viewed rent controls as involving important state interests, and they are therefore reluctant to hold that a landlord's vested rights have been breached. See Rue-Ell Enters., Inc. v City of Berkeley (1983) 147 CA3d 81, 84, 194 CR 919 (Berkeley commercial rent control ordinance).

Courts will hold that a landlord's vested rights have been breached, however, under certain conditions. See Palacio de Anza v Palm Springs Rent Review Comm'n (1989) 209 CA3d 116, 257 CR 121, in which a landlord sought to compel the rent board to grant a request for a hardship rent increase based on the costs of purchase-money financing for the property, as provided for in the board's regulations at the time the landlord acquired the property. The court upheld the landlord's argument (209 CA3d at 120):

> The Guidelines and rent-control ordinances did not create a statutory "right of action" in Palacio. Rather those enactments created land-use property rights which became vested in Palacio when the financing of the apartment purchase was undertaken in reliance on the existing rent control laws. In this sense, Palacio enjoys a situation analogous to that of one who has established the right to pursue a nonconforming use on land following a zoning change.... Any attempt to retroactively apply the repeal of the Guidelines' debt financing cost allowance to Palacio's vested rights would constitute an invalid impairment of an established economic/property interest without due process of law.

© The Regents of the University of California

III. HISTORICAL BACKGROUND AND LEGAL CHALLENGES

§7.7 A. Wartime Rent Controls and the "Emergency Requirement"

Rent controls were first adopted in the United States by many localities at the end of World War I. In keeping with the substantive due-process doctrines of that era, the Supreme Court held that rent controls were constitutional only in emergency situations. Block v Hirsh (1921) 256 US 135, 65 L Ed 865, 41 S Ct 458; Marcus Brown Holding Co. v Feldman (1921) 256 US 170, 65 L Ed 877, 41 S Ct 465. By 1924, all state and local rent controls had been terminated except in New York City, where controls for low-rent units continued until 1929.

Rent controls were reintroduced in 1942, when the federal government adopted price controls that continued in effect until 1953. During that era, the Supreme Court relied on the existence of an emergency as a basis for upholding rent controls against due process claims of "confiscation," and therefore did not address the issue of whether an emergency was still a constitutional prerequisite to the regulations. Woods v Cloyd W. Miller Co. (1948) 333 US 138, 92 L Ed 596, 68 S Ct 421.

A number of California appellate department cases decided in this era may be helpful in interpreting modern rent control requirements, particularly eviction requirements. See §§7.55, 7.74.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.8 B. Rise of Peacetime Controls

In the 1970s, rent controls not justified by a wartime emergency became widespread outside New York for the first time in United States history, due primarily to steeply rising real estate values, including:

- single-family dwelling prices, which caused increased demand in the rental market;
- multi-unit rental property prices, which translated directly into higher rental rates; and
- unusually high inflation, increasing the financing costs of rental property, which owners passed on to tenants in the form of higher rental rates.

Those three factors, which increased demand and limited supply, resulted in sharp increases in rents. When these factors were combined with a third factor, increased political activism of tenants, growing out of the consumer movement, rent control laws were enacted rather suddenly. Washington, D.C., Miami Beach, Boston and several neighboring cities, approximately 100 cities in New Jersey, and several California communities adopted various forms of rent regulation.

The rise of peacetime rent controls brought challenges to those enactments on various grounds, such as state preemption and lack of an emergency. The high courts of California, Maryland, and New Jersey ruled that the emergency requirement was a throwback to the era of substantive due process and that it had no place in modern judicial standards of review of price controls. Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley (1976) 17 C3d 129, 157, 130 CR 465; Westchester W. No. 2 Ltd. Partnership v Montgomery County (Md 1975) 348 A2d 856, 865; Hutton Park Gardens v Town Council (NJ 1975) 350 A2d 1, 12. For history of the emergency requirement for rent control laws, see Baar & Keating, The Last Stand of Economic Substantive Due Process, The Housing Emergency Requirement for Rent Control, 7 Urb Law 447 (1975).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.9 C. Facial Challenges

From the mid 1970s until the early 1990s, most rent control challenges attacked the ordinances as written, i.e., "on their face." The courts generally upheld communities' right to enact both price and eviction controls, as long as an ordinance provided a system for permitting an owner to obtain a fair return on investment and did not erect unreasonable procedural barriers to obtaining permitted rent increases.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.10 1. Constitutional Challenges

The first and perhaps most important California case was Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley (1976) 17 C3d 129, 130 CR 465, in which the supreme court ruled that:

(a) California cities had the power to adopt rent controls under their police powers—even in the absence of an "emergency";

(b) The state had not "preempted" the field of rent regulation;

(c) No state enabling legislation was needed for local governments to enact rent controls; and

(d) Rent controls could be adopted by the initiative process.

Nevertheless, the court held that the Berkeley ordinance under review was unconstitutional because its cumbersome rent-increase procedures (which required a board hearing before approval of any rent increase) were "not reasonably related to the [rent control initiative's] stated purpose of preventing excessive rents" and would prevent most landlords from obtaining any rent increases for years. 17 C3d at 173.

The Birkenfeld court held that cities could regulate substantive grounds for eviction, but could not impede the summary nature of state eviction procedures. The court struck down a requirement that a landlord obtain a certificate of eviction from the rent board before filing an unlawful detainer complaint. 17 C3d at 150.

In a challenge to the subsequent Berkeley rent control ordinance, the supreme court ruled that the ordinance did not violate state or federal anti-trust laws. Moreover, the court held that rent controls do not constitute a taking or a denial of due process merely because they reduce appreciation or actual property value. Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045. When a city's rent control ordinance contains an evidentiary presumption that existing rent adjustment formulas in the ordinance provide a fair return, to obtain an individual rent increase, the owner must demonstrate that the returns provided by the CPI and NOI standards are so unreasonable and unfair as to be confiscatory. TG Oceanside, LP v City of Oceanside (2007) 156 CA4th 1355, 68 CR3d 320.

Defects in a rent control ordinance proposed by an initiative petition may be cured by a second ordinance enacted by the City that is made retroactively effective to the effective date of the initiative petition. MHC Fin. Limited Partnership Two v City of Santee (2005) 125 CA4th 1372, 23 CR3d 622 (ruling on mobilehome ordinance).

A due process challenge to the Escondido mobilehome rent control ordinance was rejected in Yee v City of Escondido (1990) 224 CA3d 1349, 274 CR 551. The court held that a reasonable price regulation does not become an unconstitutional "taking" merely because the rent control ordinance transfers value from the landlord to the tenant, in the absence of evidence that the ordinance has deprived the property owner of a fair return.

The court of appeal decision was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court in Yee v City of Escondido (1992) 503 US 519, 118 L Ed 2d 153, 112 S Ct 1522. The Supreme Court rejected the mobilehome park owners' contention that the Escondido ordinance, viewed against the backdrop of California's Mobilehome Residency Law (CC §§798-799.8), constituted a "taking," thereby requiring compensation under the Fifth Amendment. The court noted that there are two primary classes of cases interpreting the takings clause: physical takings, in which the government authorizes a physical occupation or actually takes title, and regulatory takings, in which the government merely regulates the use of property. The court held that the petitioners had not established a physical taking, and it noted that, although the petitioners might prevail on their claim of a regulatory taking, that issue was not before the court because it was not fairly included in the question on which certiorari had been granted.

A constitutional challenge to rent control in commercial tenancies was heard in Lingle v Chevron U.S.A., Inc. (2005) 544 US 528, 161 L Ed 2d 876, 125 S Ct 2074, in which the United States Supreme Court reversed a summary judgment in favor of an oil company that challenged a state rent cap on gasoline franchises. Instead, the Court held that there was no unconstitutional taking in violation of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. A legislative act restricting rents is not an unconstitutional taking of private property requiring just compensation merely because it fails to substantially advance a legitimate public policy aim. To demonstrate a governmental taking that requires just compensation, there must either be a physical invasion or direct appropriation of private property by the government, or the governmental regulation must be the functional equivalent of a direct appropriation or ejection from private property (e.g., when the regulation completely prevents the owner from putting the property to any economically beneficial use).

Following Lingle, the Ninth Circuit recognized that landlords can challenge the rationality of land-use regulations as a denial of substantive due process. See Action Apartment Ass'n v Santa Monica Rent Control Opinion Bd. (9th Cir 2007) 509 F3d 1020. However, the court concluded that the facial due process Fourteenth Amendment claim was time barred, and that the as-applied due process claim was unripe. A landlord may challenge, for lack of due process, a rent board ruling that is based solely on the testimony of tenants on which the hearing officer denied the landlord the right of cross-examination. Manufactured Home Communities, Inc. v County of San Luis Obispo (2008) 167 CA4th 705, 84 CR3d 367.

For an analysis of Lingle and for district courts' discussion of the application of Lingle to challenges to mobilehome rent control ordinances, see S.G. Borello & Sons v City of Hayward (ND Cal, Nov. 20, 2006, No. C03-0891) 2006 US Dist Lexis 86293 and MHC Fin. Ltd. Partnership v City of San Rafael (ND Cal, Dec. 5, 2006, No. C00-3785) 2006 US Dist Lexis 89195 (see subsequent history in §6.15), both of which permitted substantive due process claims to proceed.

In Stardust Mobile Estates, LLC v City of San Buenaventura (2007) 147 CA4th 1170, 55 CR3d 218, the court approved use of a maintenance net operating income formula with a partial inflation index but rejected the landlord's takings claim because the landlord failed to meet the Lingle test (neither a physical invasion of the property nor an economic regulation deprived the owner of all economically beneficial use).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.11 2. Mobilehome Park Rent Control Ordinances

As prices of conventional "stick-built" housing rose in the 1970s, many people sought the cost advantages of factory-built housing, i.e., mobilehomes. Finding a spot to place the mobilehome was not easy. Most cities and counties severely restricted the number of mobilehome park spaces they would allow, for aesthetic reasons and because mobilehomes were not affixed to the land and thus did not increase property tax valuations. Increasing demand and a limited supply put park owners in a position to charge high rents for the few spaces available, and mobilehome owners reacted by banding together politically to cause the enactment of local mobilehome park rent control ordinances. Park owners responded by filing lawsuits challenging the validity of the new ordinances. For further discussion of mobilehome parks and their regulation, see chap 6.

Some lawsuits challenged the constitutionality of some aspect of the ordinances. In Sandpiper Mobile Village v City of Carpinteria (1992) 10 CA4th 542, 12 CR2d 623, e.g., the court upheld the constitutionality of the Carpinteria mobilehome park rent control ordinance, and it further indicated that the absence of vacancy decontrol did not result in a taking of the owners' property.

In Adamson v City of Malibu (CD Cal 1994) 854 F Supp 1476, the court upheld a mobilehome park rent control ordinance's restrictions on rent increases, a 3-year rent moratorium while the city considered enacting the ordinance, and provisions that restricted rent increases on purchasers of mobilehomes to 10 percent. The court, however, invalidated provisions allowing an 8-year rent rollback and a 3-year rent freeze, and restrictions on increases in base rent.

In Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v City of Carson (9th Cir 1994) 37 F3d 468, a park owner claimed that the combination of the city's prohibition on raising rents on new tenants and the state's restrictions on termination of tenancies of old tenants denied him due process, because it gave existing tenants the power to exact a premium from new tenants in the selling prices of the mobilehomes, which bore no rational relationship to the goal of preventing excessive rents. The court rejected this argument, holding that the legislative bodies also intended to protect mobilehome owners' investments in their homes.

A constitutional challenge may be rejected if the claim is not ripe for adjudication. In Hacienda Valley Mobile Estates v City of Morgan Hill (9th Cir 2003) 353 F3d 651, e.g., the court held that the takings claim was not ripe because the landlord had failed to pursue available state remedies before filing a federal lawsuit. See also Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v City of Carson (9th Cir 2004) 353 F3d 824; Los Altos El Granada Investors v City of Capitola (2006) 139 CA4th 629, 43 CR3d 434 (trial court correctly sustained demurrer to inverse condemnation, due process, and equal protection claims because park owner had not exhausted administrative remedies; case remanded to allow park owner to amend complaint after "as applied" takings, equal protection, and due process claims were ripe).

A 2005 Supreme Court case significantly altered the landscape of takings claims under the United States Constitution. After Lingle v Chevron U.S.A., Inc. (2005) 544 US 528, 161 L Ed 2d 876, 125 S Ct 2074 (discussed in §7.10), a California court of appeal found no taking when the mobilehome park was denied recovery of the cost of driveway improvements, a Vega adjustment (Vega v City of W. Hollywood (1990) 223 CA3d 1342, 273 CR 243), and a discretionary rent increase. Stardust Mobile Estates, LLC v City of San Buenaventura (2007) 147 CA4th 1170, 55 CR3d 218 (approved use of maintenance net operating income formula with partial inflation index and remanded case to trial court).

In Cashman v City of Cotati (9th Cir 2004) 374 F3d 887, the Ninth Circuit had held that because the city's mobilehome space rent control ordinance does not prevent incumbent tenants from capturing a premium on sale, it does not substantially further the city's legitimate interests (including that of maintaining affordable housing), and therefore constitutes a "taking." But after the decision in Lingle v Chevron U.S.A., Inc., supra, and in response to Cotati's petition for rehearing, the Ninth Circuit withdrew its opinion and affirmed the District Court's decision. See Cashman v City of Cotati (9th Cir 2005) 415 F3d 1027.

In Montclair Parkowners Ass'n v City of Montclair (1999) 76 CA4th 784, 90 CR2d 598, the court rejected a claim that a mobilehome space rent control ordinance mandating "vacancy control" (i.e., prohibiting rent increases on the sale of mobilehomes) was an unconstitutional "taking." The court held that the test for examining whether a mobilehome space rent control ordinance is a "taking" is not whether the regulation substantially advances a legitimate government interest and whether it deprives the owner of all economically viable use (see 76 CA4th at 791; see also §7.14), but whether the regulation was "arbitrary." Applying this test, the court held that the restriction was not arbitrary, because it protected current mobilehome owners' equity in their homes and protected prospective mobilehome owners from excessive rents. The court refused to follow Richardson v City & County of Honolulu (9th Cir 1997) 124 F3d 1150, which applied the other test to a mobilehome rent control ordinance.

Montclair and Richardson were invalidated by the Supreme Court's ruling in Lingle v Chevron U.S.A., Inc., supra. See, for example, S.G. Borello & Sons v City of Hayward (ND Cal, Nov. 20, 2006, No. C03-0891) 2006 US Dist Lexis 86293, in which the district court noted that Lingle "eviscerated the 'substantially advances' theory of takings jurisprudence that the Ninth Circuit had developed in a series of cases," thereby limiting a landlord's remedy to a due process challenge to rent control regulations. To succeed on a due process claim, however, the landlord must show that the governmental body enacting the legislation lacked a legitimate reason for its decision.

In Village Trailer Park, Inc. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2002) 101 CA4th 1133, 124 CR2d 857, the court held that the state's Mobilehome Residency Law (MRL) (see chap 6) does not "preempt" Santa Monica from applying its rent control law to mobilehome park spaces, and that an arbitration clause in mobilehome park leases does not prevent the local board from enforcing its ordinance against the park owner.

> First, Village cannot exempt itself from the operation of local law by simply announcing that its leases are subject to arbitration. If this were the case, every landlord would similarly announce a personal exemption from the law, thereby undermining a local government's legitimate exercise of its police power. [Citation omitted.] Second, the Board is not a party to the leases and is not bound by any arbitration clause or declaration of exemption from rent control.

In an evidentiary hearing before a rent control board to determine whether the tenants' rental agreements are subject to the rent control law or the MRL, the landlord must be permitted to cross-examine the tenants who testify. Failure to permit such cross-examination is a denial of due process. Manufactured Home Communities, Inc. v County of San Luis Obispo (2008) 167 CA4th 705, 84 CR3d 367.

On other challenges to mobilehome park ordinances, see cases cited in §§7.10, 7.12. On the question of what constitutes a "fair return" for mobilehome park owners, see Carson Mobilehome Park Owners' Ass'n v City of Carson (1983) 35 C3d 184, 197 CR 284; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v City of Carson Mobilehome Park Rental Review Bd. (1999) 70 CA4th 281, 82 CR2d 569; San Marcos Mobilehome Park Owners' Ass'n v City of San Marcos (1987) 192 CA3d 1492, 238 CR 290; and Oceanside Mobilehome Park Owners' Ass'n v City of Oceanside (1984) 157 CA3d 887, 204 CR 239.

In Concord Communities, LP v City of Concord (2001) 91 CA4th 1407, 111 CR2d 511, a mobilehome space rent control ordinance was enacted soon after plaintiff purchased two mobilehome parks. The city rejected the owner's petition to increase the base rents, but the court held that the city had abused its discretion by ignoring evidence that rents were significantly below market because of "unique or extraordinary circumstances": the prior owner's refusal to raise rents because he had no debt on the property, paid "pre-Proposition 13" property taxes on it, and wanted to keep rents low to avoid "government involvement." Similarly, in Stardust Mobile Estates, LLC v City of San Buenaventura (2007) 147 CA4th 1170, 55 CR3d 218, the Court denied the mobilehome property owner's constitutional claims, but remanded the case for a trial court determination as to whether the base year rents had been set at an artificially low level.

Some mobilehome park owners have attempted to avoid the state courts and sought relief in the federal courts. For discussion of procedural problems attendant upon such efforts, as well as a discussion of the application of Lingle v Chevron U.S.A., Inc., supra, see S.G. Borello & Sons v City of Hayward (ND Cal, Nov. 20, 2006, No. C03-0891) 2006 US Dist Lexis 86293. Furthermore, in MHC Fin. Ltd. Partnership v City of San Rafael (ND Cal, Dec. 5, 2006, No. C00-3785) 2006 US Dist Lexis 89195, the federal district court denied the City's motion for summary judgment in part and allowed a substantive due process challenge to a local mobilehome ordinance that contained vacancy control provisions.

In Guggenheim v City of Goleta (9th Cir 2009) 582 F3d 996, mobilehome park owners challenged a rent control ordinance as facially unconstitutional. The ordinance provided that rent could be increased annually at 75 percent of the consumer price index and park owners could arbitrate for more rent to cover actual expenses. The park owners argued that the ordinance forced them to rent their property at 80 percent below market value, thereby enabling the tenants to sell their mobilehomes at ten times their purchase price. The court found a regulatory taking, stating that the ordinance "effects a transfer of the right to rents for the use of the property from the Park Owners to the tenants." While the park owners own the property on which the mobilehomes rest, as a result of the ordinance, the tenants have the right to convey the home with the right to remain on the site at a much-reduced rent. The court, however, denied the park owners' due process claim, finding that the ordinance makes some allowance for profit on the investment and not merely an offset for the cost of the improvements.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.12 3. Other Bases for Facial Challenges

After the decision in Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley (1976) 17 C3d 129, 130 CR 465 (see §7.10), the courts rejected facial rent control challenges that raised a variety of issues:

(a) Rent control ordinances need not comply with the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) (Pub Res C §§21000-21178.1) when they are enacted by the initiative process. Stein v City of Santa Monica (1980) 110 CA3d 458, 168 CR 39.

(b) Mobilehome park rent controls are not preempted by state law, despite extensive state regulation of landlord-tenant relations in mobilehome parks (see CC §§798-799.8). Gregory v City of San Juan Capistrano (1983) 142 CA3d 72, 191 CR 47, overruled on other grounds in Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 686 n43, 209 CR 682; Palos Verdes Shores Mobile Estates, Ltd. v City of Los Angeles (1983) 142 CA3d 362, 190 CR 866. See also Griffith v County of Santa Cruz (2000) 79 CA4th 1318, 94 CR2d 801 (long-term mobilehome park tenants residing in recreational vehicles enjoy protection under local rent control ordinances despite CC §1954.25's ban on commercial rent control).

(c) Rent control ordinances are not unconstitutional because they impair preexisting contractual arrangements. Interstate Marina Dev. Co. v County of Los Angeles (1984) 155 CA3d 435, 202 CR 377; Rue-Ell Enters., Inc. v City of Berkeley (1983) 147 CA3d 81, 194 CR 919.

(d) An ordinance is not unconstitutionally vague if it simply lists factors that must be considered in determining allowable rents, without stating how they should be considered. See Carson Mobilehome Park Owners' Ass'n v City of Carson (1983) 35 C3d 184, 197 CR 284. The Carson ordinance specified various factors for consideration in setting rents (35 C3d at 188 n2):

- The consumer price index;
- Government wage-and-price guidelines;
- Rents for comparable mobilehome park spaces;
- The length of time since the last rent increase;
- Changes in operating expenses; and
- Changes in lease payments by mobilehome park master lessees applying for rent increases.

See also H.N. & Frances C. Berger Found. v City of Escondido (2005) 127 CA4th 1, 25 CR3d 19 (determination of fair rent by rent board need not follow any specific formula; mobilehome rent control ordinance enumerated 11 factors the board might consider in making its determination).

(e) An ordinance is not void if its defects are cured by a later-enacted ordinance that is made retroactively effective to the date of the first ordinance. MHC Fin. Ltd. Partnership Two v City of Santee (2005) 125 CA4th 1372, 23 CR3d 622.

In 2004, a successful challenge was made to San Francisco's ordinance. In response to allegations that landlords attempt to circumvent notice requirements (and other consequences of evicting tenants from rent controlled units), San Francisco added provisions to its eviction control ordinance that punish both civilly and criminally a landlord who (1) requests that a tenant move or threatens to recover possession either verbally or in writing, unless the landlord has a good faith intent to evict and does actually go forward with the eviction, (2) seeks or obtains a tenant's agreement not to cooperate with an investigation by the city for violations of the ordinance, and (3) seeks or obtains a tenant's waiver of rights under the ordinance. The ordinance also provided that any such waiver by a tenant would be void as contrary to public policy unless the tenant was represented by independent counsel. These provisions were held to be an unconstitutional denial of free speech and contrary to a tenant's rights to self-representation in legal proceedings. Baba v Board of Supervisors of the City & County of San Francisco (2004) 124 CA4th 504, 21 CR3d 428.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/7 Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws/§7.13 D. Fair Return Issues

§7.13 D. Fair Return Issues

Many rent control ordinances, particularly mobilehome park ordinances, use a vague "fair return" requirement to determine whether a landlord is entitled to raise the rent. The California Supreme Court has stated that an ordinance need not contain a specific formula as long as it provides a method of regulating rents that avoids confiscatory results. Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 680, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045. It is enough that the ordinance permits the rent board to "approve such rent increases as it determines to be fair, just and reasonable" without providing a specific formula or procedure for determining rents. H.N. & Frances C. Berger Found. v City of Escondido (2005) 127 CA4th 1, 25 CR3d 19 (the ordinance enumerated 11 factors the board might consider in making its determination). See also Stardust Mobile Estates, LLC v City of San Buenaventura (2007) 147 CA4th 1170, 55 CR3d 218 (approval of maintenance net operating income formula with partial inflation index).

PRACTICE TIP: An attorney's understanding of the fair-return issue will help him or her to make a rational and persuasive presentation to the rent board in an individual-adjustment hearing and to present the evidence necessary to sustain a challenge if the board fails to provide an adequate rent increase.

There are three principal, and somewhat conflicting, types of fair return standards that have been discussed by courts in constitutional challenges to rent control ordinances:

- return on value;
- return on cash investment; and
- maintenance of net operating income.

See §7.38. See also Baar, Fair Return Standards Under Mobilehome Park Space Rent Controls: Conceptual and Practical Approaches, 29 CEB Real Prop L Rep 333 (Sept. 2006).

If an ordinance provides the landlord with adequate procedures for obtaining a timely rent adjustment, and if the adjustment mechanism is flexible enough to authorize a sufficient increase to provide a fair return, the courts are unlikely to strike down an ordinance merely because its language limits rent increases. Courts of appeal have ruled that the state and federal constitutions do not require that rent control legislation guarantee owners a fair return on the value of their property, citing the reasons set forth in Helmsley v Borough of Fort Lee (NJ 1978) 394 A2d 65 and its predecessor cases. See Oceanside Mobilehome Park Owners' Ass'n v City of Oceanside (1984) 157 CA3d 887, 204 CR 239; Cotati Alliance for Better Hous. v City of Cotati (1983) 148 CA3d 280, 195 CR 825; Palos Verdes Shores Mobile Estates, Ltd. v City of Los Angeles (1983) 142 CA3d 362, 190 CR 866. But see Gregory v City of San Juan Capistrano (1983) 142 CA3d 72, 191 CR 47, overruled on other grounds in Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 686 n43, 209 CR 682, in which the court held that owners are entitled to a fair return on the value of their property. In Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045, the supreme court disapproved the portion of the Gregory decision that would have required an ordinance to provide for a fair return on value to withstand a facial challenge. 37 C3d at 686 n43.

The United States Supreme Court has held that use of a fair-return-on-value standard in the regulation of utility companies is not constitutionally required. See Duquesne Light Co. v Barasch (1989) 488 US 299, 308, 102 L Ed 2d 646, 657, 109 S Ct 609. See also 20th Century Ins. Co. v Garamendi (1994) 8 C4th 216, 32 CR2d 807, in which the California Supreme Court held, "There is no constitutional or other requirement that all reasonable expenses and prudent investments must be allowed" (8 C4th at 258) and, indeed, that a "regulated firm has no constitutional right even against a loss" (8 C4th at 321) and "has no constitutional right to a profit" (8 C4th at 294).

Garamendi was distinguished in Action Apartment Ass'n v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2001) 94 CA4th 587, 114 CR2d 412, in which the court upheld the right of landlords to challenge the city's imposition of a 3 percent interest rate on tenant security deposits. The landlords contended that, to the extent that they had to pay tenants 3 percent while only being able to obtain less than 3 percent interest on the mandated account, the city was "taking" from them under the Fifth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and article I, §19 of the California Constitution. The court of appeal agreed, holding that neither of the administrative problems asserted by the city (uncertainty and changeability of legal interest level; necessity for court to micromanage this matter) was so insurmountable that all relief should be denied. But see Small Prop. Owners v City & County of San Francisco (2006) 141 CA4th 1388, 47 CR3d 121 (San Francisco ordinance requiring landlords to pay tenants 5 percent interest on security deposits held for more than one year did not result in taking of landlords' property because ordinance did not require landlords to place deposits into accounts paying interest below rate they had to pay tenants).

A rent control ordinance need not assure a landlord of a fair rate of return on the current value of the property; it passes constitutional muster if it adopts a "fair rate of return on initial investment standard." Palomar Mobilehome Park Ass'n v Mobilehome Rent Review Comm'n (1993) 16 CA4th 481, 20 CR2d 371 (citing Fisher v City of Berkeley, supra). See also Yee v Mobilehome Park Rental Review Bd. (1993) 17 CA4th 1097, 23 CR2d 1.

Santa Monica's rent control ordinance was upheld in Baker v City of Santa Monica (1986) 181 CA3d 972, 226 CR 755. The court relied on Fisher v City of Berkeley, supra, in holding that a local rent control ordinance need not provide a landlord with a fair return on market value and need not preserve the appreciated value of the property. An evidentiary presumption that existing rent adjustment formulas in the ordinance provide a fair return will be upheld; the owner must demonstrate that the returns provided by the CPI and NOI standards are so unreasonable and unfair as to be confiscatory in order to obtain an individual rent increase. TG Oceanside, LP v City of Oceanside (2007) 156 CA4th 1355, 68 CR3d 320. Oceanside's mobilehome park ordinance was upheld against challenges to its evidentiary presumption that its existing rent adjustment formulas would provide a fair return. The presumption affected the burden of producing evidence and was not, therefore, preempted by Evid C §500.

In San Marcos Mobilehome Park Owners' Ass'n v City of San Marcos (1987) 192 CA3d 1492, 238 CR 290, the court interpreted the San Marcos mobilehome space rent control ordinance as requiring the rent review commission to consider both the current market value of the property and its operating costs.

Following the doctrine that the method for computing rate of return is immaterial if the result is reasonable, appellate courts have not held that return-on-investment standards are unconstitutional. The courts have noted, however, that the conceptual problems associated with use of such standards effectively limit their viability. In Helmsley v Borough of Fort Lee (NJ 1978) 394 A2d 65, 72 n8, the New Jersey Supreme Court stated: "Although an investment-based standard may not be as easy to apply as some income-based criteria, there are no obvious theoretical obstacles to using an investment based standard." However, the court also stated that a standard that results in differences in allowable rents because of differing mortgage rates "serves no legitimate governmental purpose." 394 A2d at 81.

In Cotati Alliance for Better Hous. v City of Cotati (1983) 148 CA3d 280, 195 CR 825, the court of appeal concluded that a return-on-initial-investment standard would not operate in a reasonable manner in an inflationary era. Therefore, the court held that a return-on-investment formula would be reasonable only if the original investment were indexed to reflect changes in the purchasing power of the dollar since the time of acquisition. In Fisher v City of Berkeley, supra, the California Supreme Court approved this view (37 C3d at 683):

> [A]lthough defendants' ordinance may properly restrict landlords' profits on their rental investments, it may not indefinitely freeze the dollar amount of these profits without eventually causing confiscatory results.

Although the court indicated that return on original investment or net operating income may not be frozen indefinitely, it did not specify what rate of growth must be permitted or how long it would be reasonable to freeze net operating income.

In Cotati Alliance for Better Hous. v City of Cotati, supra, the court implied that allowing inflation increases on the cash investment, but not on the financed portion of the investment, would be reasonable. Such an approach would result in heavily financed owners being entitled to smaller rent increases than owners who had made substantial cash down payments. The court suggested that the investment could be imputed in cases in which the return-on-investment approach was problematic (e.g., if property was obtained by inheritance or gift). The court concluded (148 CA3d at 294):

> No specific formula can or should be developed since the Board, in making general rent adjustments and acting upon petitions for individual increases, must consider a variety of factors, some of which may be personal or individual to a particular landlord or rental property.

A mobilehome park that tried to pass on the costs of electrical upgrades to common areas was denied relief by the City and told that the PUC has exclusive jurisdiction over the electric system so that the City could not award a rent increase. Although the landlord was forced to bear additional cost without recourse to recovery, the District Court found that the landlord had not clearly elected the legal theory on which it was proceeding and gave leave for the landlord to file an amended complaint. S.G. Borello & Sons v City of Hayward (ND Cal, Nov. 20, 2006, No. C03-0891) 2006 US Dist Lexis 86293.

Whatever standard a local jurisdiction has adopted to assess whether an owner is receiving a fair return, courts have required that an owner specifically address and present evidence as to why the system in operation fails to provide a fair return. TG Oceanside, LP v City of Oceanside (2007) 156 CA4th 1355, 68 CR3d 320.

In an evidentiary hearing at which testimony is taken, the parties must be allowed to cross-examine witnesses. Failure to permit such cross-examination is a denial of due process. Manufactured Home Communities, Inc. v County of San Luis Obispo (2008) 167 CA4th 705, 84 CR3d 367.

Arguments that a different valuation system or methodology should have been employed by the local rent control government entity are usually not a successful means for challenging an unfavorable administrative ruling. See, e.g., TG Oceanside, supra.

NOTE: Practitioners should be careful to utilize the nomenclature in any particular enactment in presenting arguments, since a failure to do so may be interpreted as a failure to address evidentiary standards required by the local ordinance.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.14 E. "As Applied" Due Process Challenges

Beginning in the late 1980s, litigants in land use cases achieved successes in the United States Supreme Court with challenges to local regulations as applied to the particular landowner, on the basis that the regulation as applied worked a taking of the owner's property in violation of due process of law. Dolan v City of Tigard (1994) 512 US 374, 129 L Ed 2d 304, 114 S Ct 2309; Nollan v California Coastal Comm'n (1987) 483 US 825, 97 L Ed 2d 677, 107 S Ct 3141; First English Evangelical Lutheran Church v County of Los Angeles (1987) 482 US 304, 96 L Ed 2d 250, 107 S Ct 2378.

Successes in the area of land use controls led landlords to begin to challenge local rent control enactments as applied to the individual owner on similar theories, with some success. In Westwinds Mobile Home Park v Mobilehome Park Rental Review Bd. (1994) 30 CA4th 84, 35 CR2d 315, the court held that a $4 per month increase was not adequate to provide a fair rate of return to the property owner. Although the court read Nollan v California Coastal Comm'n, supra, more narrowly than the property owner did, it analyzed the financial data provided by both sides and determined that there was insufficient evidence to support the Board's finding that the increase provided the owner a fair return.

In Apartment Ass'n of Greater Los Angeles v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1994) 24 CA4th 1730, 30 CR2d 228, the court rejected as too broad a rent board regulation that denied individual rent increase petitions filed by all landlords who purchased their buildings after enactment of the rent control ordinance.

The United States Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a San Jose rent control ordinance that allowed the landlord to raise rents up to 8 percent per year, 5 percent per year plus certain costs, or certain debt service costs (whichever were highest) in Pennell v City of San Jose (1988) 485 US 1, 99 L Ed 2d 1, 108 S Ct 849. Landlords had claimed that the ordinance was unconstitutional because it provided that a hearing officer must consider seven factors when ruling on a rent increase application, including "the hardship to a tenant." The Court rejected the argument that the ordinance, as applied, resulted in an unconstitutional taking, citing the lack of evidence that a hearing officer ever relied on the hardship provision to reduce rent and noting that the ordinance required only that the hearing examiner consider the hardship factor. The decision strongly suggests, however, that a landlord who is denied an otherwise justified rent increase on grounds of tenant hardship may have suffered an unconstitutional taking. The Court also held that the ordinance did not violate the equal protection clause, ruling that a rational basis existed for treating landlords differently depending on whether they have hardship tenants.

In Kavanau v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1993) 19 CA4th 730, 23 CR2d 724, the court held that a rent control ordinance, as applied, was confiscatory. The landlord, who had recently purchased the building, applied for permission to raise building rents by $35,000 to maintain net operating income, because of needed repairs. The hearing examiner found that this increase was needed to enable the landlord to make a fair return on investment, but nevertheless reduced the increase to $5184 in the first year (with higher increases thereafter), because the rent board had adopted a regulation limiting annual increases to 12 percent. The court of appeal held that the regulation was unconstitutional as applied. See 19 CA4th at 736 n7. The board's amendment of the regulation to allow a waiver of the 12 percent cap "in extraordinary circumstances" saved the regulation from facial unconstitutionality, but the board's application of the cap was unconstitutional, because it was limited to instances of insolvency or acts of God, and it thus deprived the landlord of a fair return on investment. The fact that the board allowed the landlord to increase rents by the full $35,000 over a period of several years was held to be inadequate, because the landlord would lose the interest he might have earned on the denied increases in early years, and he could not take other allowed increases because he would already be at the 12 percent cap. See 19 CA4th at 735.

A later appeal in the Kavanau case raised the issue of whether a "taking" had occurred. In Kavanau v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1997) 16 C4th 761, 783, 66 CR2d 672, the supreme court ruled that although the landlord was denied due process by the Santa Monica Rent Control ordinance, no taking occurred because the landlord had an adequate remedy for his interim losses through an adjustment of future rent under the rent control regulations.

The court expressly rejected the argument that a taking requiring just compensation must be based on a total loss of the economic benefits of the property. 16 C4th at 774. Although it declined to prescribe a single analytical method for all cases, the court suggested that a two-part test for finding a regulatory taking in a rent control case is that the ordinance both deprives the owner of a fair return on the property and fails substantially to advance legitimate state interests. 16 C4th at 776. The court did not decide, however, whether a rent regulation that deprives a landlord of due process necessarily constitutes a taking, but held that "a remedy for the due process violation, if available and adequate, obviates a finding of a taking." 16 C4th at 782. The court cautioned (16 C4th at 784):

> The state and federal Constitutions require only a fair process that reasonably takes into consideration the landlord's interests, and a landlord's return need only fall within a "broad zone of reasonableness." [Citation omitted.] Accordingly, courts are in no position to determine the appropriate rent ceiling for an apartment as a means of assessing damages. We strongly resist any rule that would impose on a reviewing court the impossible task of finding somewhere in the penumbra of the Constitution a stipulation that a particular apartment in a particular building should rent for $746 per month rather than $745.

The ruling in Kavanau that a remedy for a due process violation will obviate the finding of a taking was applied by a court of appeal in Yee v Mobilehome Park Rental Review Bd. (1998) 62 CA4th 1409, 73 CR2d 227, to deny a landlord's claim that he had suffered a taking based on a substantial financial loss during the time the board had refused to give him a proper rent increase. The court further denied the landlord's damage claims on the basis of governmental immunity. On rent control applicable to mobilehome parks, see §§6.15, 7.10-7.11.

A month before the supreme court rendered the Kavanau decision, a court of appeal reversed a trial court decision dismissing a challenge to the City of Cotati's rent control system as an unconstitutional taking of the landlord's property. 152 Valparaiso Assocs. v City of Cotati (1997) 56 CA4th 378, 65 CR2d 551. The city had argued that the landlord must allege and prove that there could not be a taking unless the rental property had lost all economic value as a result of rent control, an argument rejected by the appellate court (independently of the Kavanau decision). The case was remanded to the trial court to determine whether the Cotati system was confiscatory as applied and whether it substantially advanced a legitimate state interest. Rather than address these problems, the parties to the action agreed to put the issue of whether the rent control system should be repealed to the voters, and in 1999 the voters repealed their city's rent control ordinance.

Following the analysis in Kavanau, a landlord claimed that Santa Monica's rent control ordinance had become an unconstitutional taking because it no longer substantially advanced legitimate state interests. The claim was rejected by the supreme court in Santa Monica Beach, Ltd. v Superior Court (1999) 19 C4th 952, 81 CR2d 93. The landlord alleged that the preamble to the ordinance said that it was intended to benefit low-income tenants, minorities, students, young families, and senior citizens, but in fact the numbers of those tenants living in Santa Monica since the ordinance was enacted had decreased. The supreme court held that the trial court properly sustained a demurrer to this complaint.

First, the court held that there is no constitutional requirement that an inquiry into whether legislation serves legitimate goals be limited to the legislation's stated goals. Here, the ordinance now serves the legitimate goals of stabilizing the community and protecting tenants not included in the stated groups—even if these goals are not stated in the preamble and even if the goals stated in the preamble are no longer served. (The court noted that there was, in fact, some broad language in the preamble that might encompass these other goals.) Second, the court noted the practical problems posed by the landlord's challenge to the ordinance based on subsequent events: "How long would a court, or a litigant, have to wait to give the law a 'fair chance' to work before declaring that it is a failure and therefore unconstitutional? There is no answer to this question that would not be arbitrary and would not put courts in a distinctively legislative role." 19 C4th at 973. Finally, the court held that "with rent control, as with most other such social and economic legislation, we leave to legislative bodies rather than the courts to evaluate whether the legislation has fallen so far short of its goals as to warrant repeal or amendment." 19 C4th at 974. Three justices dissented; one of their opinions was more than 25 pages long.

Despite the foregoing, challenges to rent control laws continue. In Montclair Parkowners Ass'n v City of Montclair (1999) 76 CA4th 784, 90 CR2d 598, the Fourth District Court of Appeal upheld the validity of an amendment to the City of Montclair's mobilehome rent control law, which for the first time imposed continuing controls on rents charged to a non family-member purchaser of a mobilehome. The court affirmed the dismissal of a suit brought by two park owners holding that a municipality's regulations would only be found to be facially unconstitutional or a taking of property if the regulations arbitrarily regulated an owner's rights. Protection of a homeowner's equity and providing protection for prospective buyers was found to be within the scope of legitimate government interests and therefore not an arbitrary regulation of the owner's rights.

In Galland v City of Clovis (2001) 24 C4th 1003, 103 CR2d 711, the landlord sued a city in state court under 42 USC §1983, claiming that the city's mobilehome park rent control board denied the landlord due process of law by (1) confiscating the landlord's property by denying a requested rent increase needed to give the landlord a fair rate of return, and (2) denying substantive due process by imposing costly, arbitrary, and unreasonable burdens on the landlord during the administrative process.

On the first issue, the court held that, before bringing suit under §1983, the landlord must first challenge the rent board decision via a petition for writ of mandate as allowed by California law. The court noted that the landlord's burden of showing denial of a "fair rate of return" is a heavy one (24 C4th at 1026):

> Although the term "fair rate of return" borrows from the terminology of economics and finance, it is as used in this context a legal, constitutional term. It refers to a constitutional minimum within a broad zone of reasonableness. As explained above, within this broad zone, the rate regulator is balancing the interests of investors, i.e., landlords, with the interests of consumers, i.e., mobilehome owners, in order to achieve a rent level that will on the one hand maintain the affordability of the mobilehome park and on the other hand allow the landlord to continue to operate successfully [citation omitted]. For those price-regulated investments that fall above the constitutional minimum, but are nonetheless disappointing to investor expectations, the solution is not constitutional litigation but, as with nonregulated investments, the liquidation of the investments and the transfer of capital to more lucrative enterprises.

On the second issue, the court reiterated the rules that "only the most egregious official conduct" can be said to be arbitrary in the constitutional sense (24 C4th at 1031) and that substantive due process is denied only if the rent board "deliberately" flouts the law (24 C4th at 1034). The demands for information and other procedural demands must be so excessive and irrelevant to the case as to lead a court to conclude that they were imposed to obstruct or discourage landlords from either requesting or obtaining reasonable rent increases. The court stated (24 C4th at 1036):

> We emphasize, however, that something more than mere "bureaucratic bungling" is required. Rent control boards, like other regulators, have need of information from those regulated, and the act of requesting information is itself a legitimate government activity. Even if, for example, the information requested is in retrospect excessive in relationship to the relevant inquiry, that does not of itself constitute a due process violation compensable under section 1983.

For further discussion of Galland, see §7.14A. For discussion of constitutional challenges relating to eviction controls, see §§7.64A, 7.64H, 7.68. However, see also 300 DeHaro St. Invs. v Department of Hous. & Community Dev. (2008) 161 CA4th 1240, 75 CR3d 98, in which an owner entered into a regulatory agreement directly with the Department of Housing and Community Development. The agreement provided that rents could be raised only with the Department's permission, based on operating costs or financial need. The city denied the owner's requests to raise rents, and the court held that the owner's remedy was to sue the Department for breach of contract. The regulatory agreement is a contract even though it incorporates statutes and regulations, thereby entitling both parties to contractual rights, including remedies for breach. Administrative mandamus is not available, as that applies only to contest administrative decisions made in legally required hearings before an administrative tribunal.

Several courts of appeal in the Ninth Circuit examined the constitutionality of mobilehome rent control ordinances on both facial and as-applied bases, but rejected the claims on procedural grounds. See Hacienda Valley Mobile Estates v City of Morgan Hill (9th Cir 2003) 353 F3d 651 (facial challenge barred by statute of limitations, and as-applied taking challenge not ripe); Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v City of Carson (9th Cir 2004) 353 F3d 824 (similar ripeness outcome); Ventura Mobilehome Communities Owners Ass'n v City of San Buenaventura (9th Cir 2004) 371 F3d 1046 (lack of ripeness in both facial and as-applied challenges). See §6.15.

In Action Apartment Ass'n v Santa Monica Rent Control Opinion Bd. (9th Cir 2007) 509 F3d 1020, the constitutional challenge of an individual landlord to eviction requirements added to the Santa Monica rent control law was held not yet ripe for review. The mere existence of the statute was not sufficient to sustain an as-applied due process challenge. The government action under review was the anticipated enforcement of the amendments protecting a particular tenant in the landlord's building, which action had not yet occurred.

In San Remo Hotel, LP v City & County of San Francisco (2005) 545 US 323, 162 L Ed 2d 315, 125 S Ct 2491, the United States Supreme Court rejected the arguments of an owner who sought review of a federal takings claim de novo in federal court after litigating and losing the federal takings claims in the California courts. The Supreme Court refused to create an exception to the full faith and credit statute in order to provide a federal forum for litigants seeking to advance federal takings claims. The owner was barred by issue preclusion because the California courts had decided the owner's state takings claims under an interpretation of California takings law that was coextensive with federal takings law. See also MHC Fin. Limited Partnership v City of San Rafael (ND Cal, Dec. 5, 2006, No. C00-3785) 2006 US Dist Lexis 89195 (city's mobilehome ordinance not an unlawful taking and does not violate substantive due process).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.14A F. Damage Actions Under 42 USC §1983

Although a remedy for violation of substantive due process is theoretically compensable under 42 USC §1983, the California Supreme Court refused to sanction §1983 relief in the form of monetary damages to the landlord of rent-controlled property in Galland v City of Clovis (2001) 24 C4th 1003, 103 CR2d 711. Instead, the court imposed new restrictions on the landlord's remedies for substantive due process violations under §1983. The landlord had obtained a significant damage award under §1983 against the City of Clovis as a result of the landlord's assertion that its substantive due process rights had been violated because (1) the City of Clovis failed to grant rent increases, which resulted in confiscatorily low rents, and (2) the landlord was compelled to pay excessive costs and suffered unreasonable delays in obtaining the inadequate rent increases. In reversing the decision of the court of appeal, which had affirmed the award granted by the trial court, the supreme court announced different standards to be applied to the two separate bases for award of the claimed civil rights damages.

With respect to the confiscatorily low rents, the court held that a damage action under 42 USC §1983 would not be available until the landlord had demonstrated both that confiscatory rent ceilings had been imposed and that the local rent board had been given an opportunity to provide for appropriate rent levels through future rent increases and had failed to do so, as required by the court in its earlier decision in Kavanau v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1997) 16 C4th 761, 66 CR2d 672 (referred to by the court as a "Kavanau adjustment"; see §7.14). As to the determination of whether the rent ceilings were in fact confiscatory, the court noted that there was a broad zone of reasonableness for judging whether rent ceilings were constitutionally confiscatory, thus adding to the difficulty of determining when rents provide a fair return to the owner. However, the court did require that the administrative agency, when determining whether rent increase levels are confiscatory, take into account attorney fees and other expenses incurred by the owner to obtain the rent increases. With respect to the Kavanau adjustment, the court concluded that a §1983 damage claim would lie only if such an adjustment were not possible or if the adjustment would not provide adequate rents over a reasonable time period. 24 C4th at 1021.

With respect to the damages allegedly suffered by the landlord because of the excessive delays and unreasonable information demands made by the administrative agency, the court held that only conduct which "deliberately flouts" the law and results in substantial infringement of rights gives rise to a claim for damages under §1983. The court made it clear that mere bungling, pettifoggery, negligence, or inefficiency does not meet the announced standard. Moreover, the court opined that landlords had an obligation to object to unreasonable demands and take prompt steps to challenge them in court so that unreasonable costs would not be incurred.

The combination of Galland and Kavanau leaves landlords with little relief other than to pursue administrative remedies followed by writs of administrative mandamus if the administrative process fails to provide adequate rents. For further analysis of Galland, and strategies for preserving rights to damages under §1983, see Pope, Galland v Clovis: New Restrictions on Due Process Challenges to Rent Control Procedures, 24 CEB Real Prop L Rep 217 (Aug. 2001). For further discussion of the constitutional issues in Galland, see §7.14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.14B G. Kavanau and Galland Decisions Applied

The first significant reported case in which a landlord attempted to obtain relief by applying the supreme court's decisions in Kavanau v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1997) 16 C4th 761, 66 CR2d 672 and Galland v City of Clovis (2001) 24 C4th 1003, 103 CR2d 711 is that of Hillsboro Props. v City of Rohnert Park (2006) 138 CA4th 379, 41 CR3d 441, in which the landlord asserted that its substantive due process rights were violated because it was denied additional rental income by application of an unconstitutional law. It sought to recover damages incurred when the city prohibited it from collecting its increased rents. The court held that the landlord was not denied substantive due process simply because it was affected by a constitutionally defective ordinance. A denial of due process arises only if application of the defective measure deprives the landlord of a constitutionally protected right. The court held that Kavanau and Galland do not provide a constitutionally protected right to demand as much rent as a property owner wants, thereby making enforcement of an invalid rent ceiling a deprivation of a constitutionally protected right. It is necessary to prove that the landlord was deprived of a fair rate of return on its investment.

The propriety of joining causes of action based on constitutional claims with a petition for a writ of administrative mandamus was affirmed in Los Altos El Granada Investors v City of Capitola (2006) 139 CA4th 629, 43 CR3d 434. There the court held that causes of action for relief based on constitutional claims could be joined in the same action with a petition for writ of administrative mandamus. The court remanded the case ruling that there could be a trial on the constitutional claims even after the denial of the writ of administrative mandamus. The trial judge had improperly applied the "substantially advances formula test," which the Court stated was applicable only to due process claims, to the plaintiff's takings claim. See Lingle v Chevron U.S.A., Inc. (2005) 544 US 528, 161 L Ed 2d 876, 125 S Ct 2074, discussed in §§7.10-7.11. See also Stardust Mobile Estates, LLC v City of San Buenaventura (2007) 147 CA4th 1170, 55 CR3d 218 (when park owner joined petition for writ of administrative mandamus with claim for declaratory relief, court remanded to trial court for further hearings).

However, in 300 DeHaro St. Invs. v Department of Hous. & Community Dev. (2008) 161 CA4th 1240, 75 CR3d 98, the owner could sue for breach of contract and for declaratory relief, but not petition for administrative mandamus, after the Department of Housing and Community Development denied the owner's requests to raise rents. The owner had a regulatory agreement, a contract, with the Department and, therefore, had recourse to ordinary contractual remedies.

In Action Apartment Ass'n v Santa Monica Rent Control Opinion Bd. (9th Cir 2007) 509 F3d 1020, the Ninth Circuit addressed facial and as-applied constitutional challenges to amendments to Santa Monica's rent control ordinance adopted in 2002. First, the court rejected the takings claims based on the Fifth Amendment; although the ordinance and its amendments served a legitimate public need, the amendments were not rationally related to those purposes. The court said that such an argument could not succeed unless the legislature's chosen methodology involves an "impossibility" or "is palpably without reasonable foundation," citing prior Supreme Court and Ninth Circuit decisions. 509 F3d at 1024. The court then acknowledged that the plaintiffs had a substantive due process claim based on Lingle v Chevron U.S.A, Inc., supra, since Lingle held that while an arbitrary or irrational deprivation of real property would not constitute a taking, it might be so arbitrary and irrational as to violate the substantive due process clause. However, the court refused to analyze or rule on the apartment association's claims because they failed, in their argument on substantive due process, to mention the 2002 amendments; therefore, the argument was time barred. 509 F3d at 1027. On the as-applied arguments by the individual plaintiff, the claims against the rent ceilings were time barred because the ceilings existed since the original enactment in 1979, and the other claims were not ripe because none of the amendments had been enforced against the individual plaintiff.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.14C H. Actions Regarding Rent Controls

Some practitioners have attempted to seek judicial relief in lieu of seeking determinations at the local rent control board or when those procedures seem not able to provide needed relief. Courts have evidenced an inclination to force litigants to exhaust all reasonably available administrative remedies. In DeLaura v Beckett (2006) 137 CA4th 542, 40 CR3d 253, the court of appeal affirmed a trial court ruling that a demurrer to a complaint for declaratory relief was proper in a situation where the plaintiff sought a court determination whether a particular tenant was in a protected class (senior or disabled). The court held that no justiciable controversy existed because the owner could petition San Francisco's rent board for such a determination even though such a petition was not expressly provided for in the local ordinance. See also Los Altos El Granada Investors v City of Capitola (2006) 139 CA4th 629, 43 CR3d 434 (sustaining a demurrer for failure to exhaust administrative remedies, but allowing an amendment to permit constitutional challenges to proceed after the administrative remedies had been exhausted). However, in Apartment Ass'n Inc. v City of Los Angeles (2006) 136 CA4th 119, 38 CR3d 575, the court of appeal affirmed the right of an association to challenge a local ordinance by declaratory relief because liability arising from any violation of the ordinance would entail significant penalties.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.15 IV. EXEMPTIONS

Virtually every apartment rent control ordinance exempts some rental units from its coverage. The specific exemption language varies considerably among ordinances. Some exemptions are automatic; some require approval by the rent control board.

The courts have consistently rejected the argument that coverage of some units and exemption of others constitutes a denial of equal protection. Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045; Marshall House, Inc. v Rent Control Bd. (Mass 1971) 266 NE2d 876.

Typical exemptions are described in §§7.16-7.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.16 A. Single-Family Homes, Condominiums, and Small Buildings

Some rent control ordinances exempt all dwellings (or parcels) with fewer than a specified number of units. The Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535) (see §§7.25-7.28) requires exemption of certain single-family homes and condominiums from local rent control under specified conditions, but the effect of the Costa-Hawkins Act in some situations is uncertain because it is ambiguous, inconsistent, and vague.

Section 1954.52(a)(3)(A) provides that "[n]otwithstanding any other provision of law," a landlord may establish the initial and subsequent rent on any unit that "is alienable separate from the title to any other dwelling unit or is a subdivided interest in a subdivision as specified in [Bus & P C §11004.5(b), (d), or (f)]." This definition includes single-family homes and condominiums, but it was amended in 2001 to allow local entities to control rents on condominium units that have not been sold separately by the subdividers to bona fide purchasers for value. CC §1954.52(a)(3)(B)(ii). In City of W. Hollywood v 1112 Invs. Co. (2003) 105 CA4th 1134, 130 CR2d 168, the court, although holding that the 2001 amendment was not retroactive, ruled that the City of West Hollywood could control rents on defendants' rented condominiums because the owners had failed to keep in effect the public reports required by Bus & P C §11010.

The Costa-Hawkins Act also does not preempt the application of local rent controls to single-family homes and condominiums "where the preceding tenancy has been terminated by the owner" by notice under CC §1946 or §1946.1, or "has been terminated upon a change in the terms of the tenancy" under CC §827. CC §1954.52(a)(3)(B)(i). See City of W. Hollywood v 1112 Invs. Co., supra.

Complete exemption of these units began on January 1, 1999, after the unit was voluntarily vacated, or if the tenant rented the unit after January 1, 1996. At that time, the landlord was permitted to establish initial and subsequent rents for all existing and new tenancies, if the tenancy in effect on or after that date was created between January 1, 1996 and December 31, 1998. CC §1954.52(a)(3)(C). On January 1, 1999, the landlord could also establish initial and subsequent rents on all new tenancies "if the previous tenancy was in effect on December 31, 1995." CC §1954.52(a)(3)(C). It would appear that if the tenant's predecessor terminated his or her tenancy before December 31, 1995, the statute does not apply, and the city may continue to regulate the rents on this unit.

Despite the foregoing, CC §1954.52 does not limit a locality's power "to regulate or monitor the basis for eviction." CC §1954.52(c). Thus, local "good cause for eviction" requirements for single-family dwellings and condominiums remain valid. Similarly, landlords are not empowered by this legislation to raise rents (1) in violation of a contract with a public entity, such as the Section 8 program run by local housing authorities (CC §1954.52(b)), or (2) when the unit contains serious health, safety, fire, or building code violations (CC §1954.52(d)).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/7 Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws/§7.17 B. Owner-Occupied Dwellings

§7.17 B. Owner-Occupied Dwellings

Some ordinances provide exemptions for smaller owner-occupied dwellings. Provisions on the owner-occupancy exemption vary considerably from ordinance to ordinance. Questions that arise concerning these provisions include the following:

- What constitutes "ownership"? If an exemption exists, a local enactment may provide a definition of an "owner." Many require an owner to have a minimum percentage interest in the property, ranging from as low as 10 percent to as high as 51 percent. Local ordinances also often change and may present knotty legal issues involving retroactivity and knowing which percentage to apply. See, e.g., Garber v Levit (2006) 141 CA4th Supp 1, 46 CR3d 348 (if section is amended by two different acts, passed at different times, last amendment repeals first and operates as sole amendment to original section).
- Does the property become decontrolled immediately on owner occupancy, or must the owner reside on the property for a specific period of time before the property becomes decontrolled? Some local ordinances, for example, provide that the exemption does not apply unless the owner actually resides on the property for a minimum of 3 years. Others require 1 or 2 years of owner occupancy to validate the exemption.
- Does the ordinance define "owner" for purposes of the owner-occupancy exemption in the same manner as it does for purposes of eviction for occupancy of an owner or an owner's relative? Under some ordinances, a landlord who is not an owner of record might be able to evict a tenant in order to occupy the unit, but would not be considered an owner for purposes of exemption from the ordinance. Some ordinances restrict the definition of "owner" to natural persons, so that corporations, limited partnerships, and trusts that hold title cannot evict for owner occupancy.
- Is the exemption automatic, or must the owner file for the exemption with the local rent control agency? Some cities, such as Santa Monica, require that the landlord file a petition for exemption with the rent control board and obtain a decision providing the exemption.

PRACTICE TIP: Practitioners should always check local rules or directly with staff of the local rent control board to determine if there is a rule or a practice regarding ownership interests held by an entity. For example, in San Francisco, the local board rulings have determined that a family trust used for estate planning purposes will satisfy the "natural person" requirement if title is held in the name of the trust or the trustee.

Similarly, there may be an issue if the ordinance requires ownership of record and the owner is buying the property under an installment land contract. If so, the practitioner may want to ensure that the purchaser's interest under the contract is recorded, even if the ordinance does not expressly state that an interest under an installment land contract satisfies the ownership of record requirement.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.18 C. New Construction

Most local rent control ordinances exempt all units that were constructed after a specified date. Under the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535; see §7.16), any building that has a certificate of occupancy issued after February 1, 1995, or that was exempted by a local ordinance on or before February 1, 1995, as newly constructed housing, is permanently exempted from local rent control restrictions. CC §1954.52(a)(1)-(2).

In City of Los Angeles v Los Olivos Mobile Home Park (1989) 213 CA3d 1427, 262 CR 446, a 1979 rent control ordinance exempted housing accommodations located in a structure for which a certificate of occupancy was first issued after October 1, 1978. The court held that this exemption applied to a mobilehome park for which a statement of installation acceptance was first issued by the city in 1980, because such a statement was the functional equivalent of a certificate of occupancy.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.19 D. Federally Assisted Housing

Federal laws require exemptions for many types of federally assisted units. 24 CFR pt 246. See National Housing Law Project, HUD Housing Programs: Tenants' Rights (3d ed 2004). Copies of this book are available from the National Housing Law Project. See Directory for mailing address, web address, and phone number.

Most exemption language in rent control ordinances identifies federally assisted units in language similar to the following: "Rental units owned or operated by any government agency or whose rent is subsidized by any government agency." This language has been interpreted to exempt Section 8 units (see 42 USC §1437f, discussed in §2.18), even though federal law does not require that they be exempted. The language does not extend, however, to units that have federally insured mortgages but do not receive a federal subsidy.

In communities with very tight housing markets and rapidly escalating rents, there is a trend to attempt to include Section 8 units under any local rent ordinance.

Similarly, in rent controlled cities where landlords are terminating contracts with the federal government for rental housing mortgage subsidies, there is a trend to protect tenants from excessive rent increases after the subsidies end. One such ordinance in Los Angeles provided that below-market rents landlords had charged while participating in a federal program could not be raised until existing tenancies terminated. It was challenged on preemption grounds under the federal Low-Income Housing Preservation and Resident Homeownership Act of 1990 (12 USC §§4101-4147). The Ninth Circuit held it was not preempted, because the ordinance did not restrict or inhibit the prepayment of federally subsidized mortgages and was exempt from the express preemption provision in the Act. Topa Equities, Ltd. v City of Los Angeles (9th Cir 2003) 342 F3d 1065.

In Barrientos v 1801-1825 Morton LLC (9th Cir 2009) 583 F3d 1197, a landlord subject to the Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance (LARSO) served notices of eviction on tenants whose rent was subsidized by the government, because it desired to raise the rent on the apartment units. Although LARSO prohibits eviction for that purpose, the landlord asserted that federal regulations permit the eviction of an assisted tenant during the lease term for good cause, which may include the desire to lease the unit for higher rent. The Ninth Circuit held that the federal regulations did not preempt LARSO and affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the tenants, permanent injunctive relief, and award of attorney fees.

In Independence Park Apartments v U.S. (Fed Cir 2006) 449 F3d 1235, the court ruled that HUD regulations preempt local rent control laws only during the period that the properties are subject to federal regulation. Neither the federal regulations nor the mortgage subsidy program preempts local rent control laws as applied to properties that are no longer subject to federal regulation.

The Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535) (see §§7.4, 7.25-7.28), however, provides that (1) terminating a Section 8 tenancy subsidy contract will not create a "vacancy" under the Act and (2) terminating all tenancies participating in the program may also restrict the landlord's ability to take advantage of vacancy decontrol for a period of 3 years. Moreover, the law provides that a notice period of at least 90 days must be given to the tenant. CC §§1954.535; Wasatch Prop. Mgmt. v Degrate (2005) 35 C4th 1111, 29 CR3d 262 (Section 8 tenants are entitled to 90-day notice prior to eviction rather than standard 30-day notice in general use; court did not address whether 90-day notice applies in termination for cause). Civil Code §1954.535 preempts a local ordinance that prohibits a landlord, after termination or nonrenewal of a Section 8 housing contract, from ever charging the tenant more than the tenant's portion of the rent under the Section 8 contract. Apartment Ass'n, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (2006) 136 CA4th 119, 38 CR3d 575. The federal court in Barrientos v 1801-1825 Morton LLC, supra, did not consider the effect of the Costa-Hawkins Act, because the landlord did not raise that issue in a timely manner.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.20 E. Care Facilities

All ordinances contain exemptions for various types of care facilities. In Ocean House Corp. v Permanent Rent Control Bd. (1983) 147 CA3d 395, 195 CR 147, the court of appeal ruled that Health & S C §§1500-1567.4 preempt local rent regulation of community-care facilities licensed under those sections. For discussion of the applicability of the Los Angeles rent control ordinance to a retirement residence, see Klarfeld v Berg (1981) 29 C3d 893, 176 CR 539.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.21 F. Hotels

Most ordinances exempt hotel rooms that are rented to transient guests. A typical clause exempts units in any hotel, motel, inn, tourist home, or boarding house that are rented primarily to transient guests for a period of less than a specified number of days. Some ordinances frame the exemption in terms of whether the unit has been occupied by the same tenant for more than a certain number of continuous days (e.g., 14 or 32 days). A landlord cannot move a transient guest or seek the voluntary removal of a transient guest from one room to another in an attempt to avoid a rent control ordinance that would apply to a transient guest after a continual occupancy for that certain number of days. Practitioners should check the applicable local ordinance.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.22 G. Luxury Units

Some rent control ordinances exempt luxury units (see, e.g., Beverly Hills, Los Angeles, and Palm Springs ordinances). "Luxury" is typically defined in terms of unit size and rent on a specified date before adoption of the ordinance. The right to the luxury exemption may be conditioned on the landlord's obtaining an exemption certificate.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/7 Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws/§7.23 H. Substantially Rehabilitated Units

§7.23 H. Substantially Rehabilitated Units

A few ordinances exempt substantially rehabilitated units. Stiff requirements are usually imposed to qualify for these exemptions. A unit might be required to meet a minimum renovation cost or to meet applicable housing code standards.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.23A I. Tenants Who Do Not Make the Unit Tenant's Principal Residence

Several jurisdictions faced with severe housing shortages have begun to deny protection for the amount of rent that a landlord may charge during the tenancy if the tenant does not make the rental unit the tenant's principal place of residence. See, e.g., San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Board Rules and Regulations §1.21; Santa Monica Rent Control Board Regulation §3304. The Santa Monica regulation was upheld as a valid exercise of the rent board's rule-making authority in Bisno v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2005) 130 CA4th 816, 30 CR3d 441. A subsequent court has held that a landlord may not evict a nonresident tenant who pays the rent, as such tenants are still protected by the just cause eviction protections of the Santa Monica rent control law. Borten v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2006) 141 CA4th 1485, 47 CR3d 178. The landlord's right to make a general adjustment may be affected if the landlord received a rent increase because the tenant no longer occupies the unit as the tenant's principal residence. See, e.g., Santa Monica Rent Control Board Regulation §3030(c)(2). For further discussion, see §§4.38, 7.24, 7.38A.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.24 J. Other Exemptions

Other common provisions include certain exemptions for units rented to lodgers or boarders and for units maintained by nonprofit institutions. The terms "lodger" and "boarder" also include persons who share the rental of a single unit with a landlord or with a tenant who has entered into a rental agreement with a landlord.

Under most other ordinances, even if such a shared-rental situation were not exempt from the ordinance, the sublessor-tenant probably could evict the lodger or boarder for owner occupancy of the premises as the "landlord" vis-à-vis the subtenant. Most apartment rent control ordinances define "landlord" as "an owner of record, lessor, sublessor, or any person entitled to receive rent for the use and occupancy of any rental unit."

Exemptions for units maintained by nonprofit institutions often lead to litigation, because such organizations have varying types of nonprofit status. The problem is particularly complex when a nonprofit organization operates a rental business for profit or when the form of ownership of the property is changed after passage of the rent control ordinance (possibly for the purpose of obtaining exempt status).

Although such units remain subject to eviction protections, rent-controlled units in Santa Monica where the tenant of record does not occupy the unit as his or her principal residence are subject to rent increases upon petition by the landlord. Bisno v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2005) 130 CA4th 816, 30 CR3d 441; Borten v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2006) 141 CA4th 1485, 47 CR3d 178.

When a local rent control ordinance prohibits the tenant from waiving any provisions of the ordinance, a landlord and a tenant may not agree to exempt a housing unit from the rent increase limits of the ordinance. Gombiner v Swartz (2008) 167 CA4th 1365, 85 CR3d 83.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. VACANCY DECONTROL: COSTA-HAWKINS RENTAL HOUSING ACT

§7.25 A. Preemption of Local Vacancy Controls

As discussed in §7.4, the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535) prohibits jurisdictions that did not have a vacancy control ordinance as of January 1, 1995, from enacting a vacancy control form of rent control. Where vacancy control formerly existed, the Costa-Hawkins Act phased it out under specified conditions (see §7.25A). Unfortunately, the act is not a model of clarity and careful reading is required.

Under CC §1954.53, "[n]otwithstanding any other provision of law" (i.e., presumably local rent control ordinances), a landlord may establish the initial rent for a unit (CC §1954.53(a)) unless the landlord terminated the previous tenancy by notice under CC §1946 or §1946.1, or "upon a change in the terms of the tenancy" noticed under CC §827, except a change permitted by law in the amount of rent or fees. CC §1954.53(a)(1). Thus, if the landlord terminated the prior tenancy by giving a notice in compliance with the local ordinance, or the tenant vacated on account of a change in the terms of the tenancy (e.g., permission to keep a pet) or was removed by the giving of a notice changing the terms of the tenancy, the rent for a new tenant may not be raised if the local rent control law would not otherwise have permitted such an increase.

The Costa-Hawkins Act was held to invalidate a section of the San Francisco rent control law that required owners (who wished to evict a tenant in order to occupy the unit in which the tenant had lived) to offer any other unit owned by the evicting owners to the tenant at essentially the same rent the tenant had been paying in the rent controlled apartment. In Bullard v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization Bd. (2003) 106 CA4th 488, 130 CR2d 819, the court of appeal based its refusal to exempt San Francisco law from the Costa-Hawkins Act on a narrow interpretation of CC §1954.53(e), which allows local public entities to control the grounds for evictions from rent controlled properties. It does not, however, allow controls on posteviction rents and a landlord has the right to set the initial rent on the replacement unit at market rate.

The Costa-Hawkins Act also preempted a Los Angeles ordinance that prohibited a landlord, after termination or nonrenewal of a Section 8 housing contract with the Los Angeles Housing Authority, from ever charging the tenant more than the tenant's portion of the rent under the Section 8 contract. Apartment Ass'n, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (2006) 136 CA4th 119, 38 CR3d 575.

A landlord may waive the preemptive effect of vacancy decontrol under the Costa-Hawkins Act if the landlord delays in asserting it. In Cobb v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2002) 98 CA4th 345, 119 CR2d 741, a landlord rented an apartment to a woman, who occupied it for some time before her son moved in with her, without obtaining the landlord's permission. About 2 years later, the mother moved out. The next month, the son began paying rent directly to the landlord. More than a year later, the landlord demanded a rent increase directly from the son beyond the amount allowed by the local rent control law, claiming that this was permitted by the vacancy decontrol provisions of CC §1954.535. The court disagreed. Because the landlord had already accepted rent from the son, thereby treating him as a tenant, the son was not a new tenant at the time the landlord attempted to impose the rent increase.

A landlord who has failed to remedy code violations in the vacated unit for 60 days after being cited may not take advantage of the Costa-Hawkins Act. CC §1954.53(f).

If a low-income tenant leaves because the owner terminates or fails to renew a contract with a local housing authority to provide "Section 8" housing, the owner may not raise the rent on a new tenant for 3 years. CC §1954.53(a)(1)(A).

If a landlord demolishes residential property subject to a rent control law and builds new residential rental units on the same property within 5 years, the new units are also subject to rent control if the city has enacted an ordinance providing for this scenario. Apartment Ass'n of Los Angeles County, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (2009) 173 CA4th 13, 92 CR3d 441. The City of Los Angeles enacted such an ordinance under CC §7060.2(d) (part of the Ellis Act). The Apartment Association argued that §7060.2(d) was impliedly preempted by CC §1954.52(a), the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act's exemption of newly constructed residential units from rent control. The Court of Appeal held that CC §7060.2(d) is an exception to CC §1954.52(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.25A B. Phasing Out Existing Local Vacancy Controls

Between its enactment and January 1, 1999, the Costa-Hawkins Act provided for a "phase out" of local vacancy control provisions. Until that date, the landlord could raise rents for new tenants, only if the old tenant "has voluntarily vacated, abandoned, or been evicted pursuant to [CCP §1161(2)]" (which authorizes eviction for nonpayment of rent). CC §1954.53(c). In such a case, however, the rent increase was limited to 15 percent of the rent, or 70 percent of the "prevailing market rent for comparable units" (as defined in CC §1954.51(a) and (c)), whichever is higher. CC §1954.53(c). The landlord could not invoke this interim rent increase more than twice. CC §1954.53(c). The initial rent established under §1954.53(c) was in addition to any increase permitted by the rent control ordinance.

Civil Code §1954.53 does not empower the landlord to raise any rents in violation of a contract with a public entity, such as the Section 8 program run by local housing authorities. CC §1954.53(a)(2). Nothing in §1954.53 may be construed to affect a public entity's authority under an eviction control ordinance. CC §1954.53(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.25B C. Preemption of Local Laws Affecting Collateral Rights Under Costa-Hawkins

The preemptive effect of the Costa-Hawkins Act (see §7.25) has been broadly interpreted by some courts. In Bullard v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization Bd. (2003) 106 CA4th 488, 130 CR2d 819, e.g., a court of appeal held that the Act prohibited San Francisco from forcing an owner seeking to evict a tenant (to allow the owner to move into that tenant's rental unit) to offer any other rental unit owned by the owner to the evicted tenant at the same rent the tenant was paying in the rental unit from which the tenant was being evicted. While the court recognized that the Costa-Hawkins Act expressly permitted localities to control the grounds for evictions, it reasoned that San Francisco's eviction regulation went too far and therefore violated the Act when it forced an owner to rent a vacant apartment at a rent below market rate. See also discussion of Bullard in §7.25.

Another court of appeal held that the Costa-Hawkins Act preempted a Los Angeles land use plan that imposed affordable housing requirements on certain residential and mixed-use development projects of more than ten dwelling units per lot. See Palmer/Sixth St. Props. v City of Los Angeles (2009) 175 CA4th 1396, 96 CR3d 875. The plan would have required the developer to either comply with the plan's housing replacement and inclusionary dwelling provisions or pay to the city an "in lieu" fee.

In Apartment Ass'n, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (2006) 136 CA4th 119, 38 CR3d 575, a court of appeal held that the Costa-Hawkins Act preempted a Los Angeles ordinance that prohibited a landlord, after termination or nonrenewal of a Section 8 housing contract, from ever charging the tenant more than the tenant's portion of the rent under the Section 8 contract.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.26 D. Subletting and Assignment: When Does a Vacancy Occur?

Even prior to the passage of the Costa-Hawkins Act (See §7.25) in jurisdictions with vacancy decontrol, and certainly after that enactment for all jurisdictions with rent controls, owners and tenants were faced with complicated issues regarding when an eviction would lie for a subletting without the landlord's consent and when an apartment would be deemed "vacant" so that the landlord could raise the rent without reference to the local ordinance's controls. Tenants frequently attempt to sublet their rent-controlled apartments, either to save the benefits for themselves after a temporary absence, or to transfer the benefits of rent control to others (either with or without compensation) and often fail to seek their landlord's approval. When one of a group of original cotenants moves out and is replaced with another tenant approved by the landlord, whether the rent can be raised on account of the change in some of the tenants is often in dispute. If the remaining tenants have failed to obtain their landlord's approval, difficult issues often arise regarding the remedies available to the landlord.

On the effect of the Costa-Hawkins Act in residential tenancies, see §§7.27-7.28A. For general discussion of assignment and subletting, see §§3.49-3.59A, 4.40A-4.40B.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.27 1. Former Law on Subletting

Before the Costa-Hawkins Act became effective, many municipalities had enacted rent control rules and eviction controls that were designed to restrict landlords' ability to interfere with the rights of individuals who became subtenants. In Parkmerced Co. v San Francisco Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1989) 215 CA3d 490, 263 CR 617, the court rejected a landlord's argument that a subtenant, listed by the original tenant as an occupant on the landlord's form, was not protected by the ordinance after the original tenant vacated. The court reasoned that a "tenant" under the ordinance was anyone who legally occupied the rental unit and that the occupancy was legal because the landlord had accepted rent from the subtenant.

In Little v Guadron (1986) 187 CA3d Supp 1, 232 CR 516, another multiple tenant case, the landlord was prohibited from raising rents after the original tenant vacated because the tenancy agreement was oral and did not prohibit subleasing and because members of an extended family had lived in the unit for years.

Even when a lease prohibited the tenants from subletting without the landlord's prior written consent, a rent increase implemented after the last original tenant has vacated might still have been invalid. See Getz v City of W. Hollywood (1991) 233 CA3d 625, 284 CR 631.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.28 2. Subletting After the Costa-Hawkins Act

To address vacancy control and sublease problems in rent-controlled jurisdictions, CC §1954.53(d), a section of the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (see §7.25), allows a landlord to establish in the original lease the amount of rent when the premises are sublet. It also permits the landlord to increase the rent "by any amount allowed by this section" to be paid by a sublessee or assignee if the last of the original occupants no longer resides on the premises and the lawful assignee or sublessee did not reside in the unit before January 1, 1996.

No rent increase is permitted, however, under §1954.53(d) if one or more of the original occupants remains and sublets part of the premises with the landlord's consent.

A landlord's acceptance of rent does not waive the landlord's right to raise the rent after a total assignment or sublease if the last original tenant no longer lives in the premises unless the landlord received a written notice from the tenant and thereafter accepted rent. To make sense from the language of §1954.53(d), it is logical to assume that the writing from the tenant needs to contain information about the occupancy of the subtenant and that the rent acceptance must therefore be acceptance of rent from the subtenant, not the original tenant. See discussion on subletting and creating tenancies by a subtenant paying and a landlord accepting rent in §§1.7, 4.40, 5.29.

The timing of a landlord's action to seek the benefits of the Costa-Hawkins Act may be crucial because issues of waiver and novation may arise if the owner delays. For example, a landlord may lose the right to increase rent under the Costa-Hawkins Act if rent is accepted directly from the subtenant or assignee after the original tenant moves out. In Cobb v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2002) 98 CA4th 345, 119 CR2d 741, the court of appeal held that the landlord could not raise the subtenant's rent to market rate because the landlord had already raised rent once beyond the controlled limits, accepted rent directly from the subtenant after the original tenant had vacated, and treated the subtenant as a tenant. See §7.25.

PRACTICE TIP: The Cobb decision may raise problems for property owners because of its language, and practitioners are cautioned to read the facts of the case carefully. The offending rent increase was the second increase noticed by the owner, not the first after the original tenant had vacated, and came more than one year after the original tenant had vacated. Nonetheless, landlords should be alert not to accept rent from persons or occupants who are not original tenants, should provide notice to any subtenant that the owner does not intend to waive Costa-Hawkins rights, and should act reasonably promptly to raise the rent after an original tenant vacates. For lease drafting tips, see §4.40B.

However, there remains a question whether certain condominiums that were created prior to the effective date of the Costa-Hawkins Act would be subject to Cobb.

Whether an occupant is a subtenant or a cotenant will affect the parties' rights under both the Costa-Hawkins Act and the eviction controls in local ordinances. See, e.g., DeZerega v Meggs (2000) 83 CA4th 28, 99 CR2d 366, which held that if a landlord prohibits subleasing in the lease, but agrees to occupancy by a roommate, characterizing the occupancy as a subtenancy does not prevent application of the local ordinance's "just cause" eviction requirement. Although DeZerega involved an eviction rather than a rent increase, the result turned on distinctions between "cotenant," "subtenant," and "roommate."

It should be noted, however, that the initial rent-controlled rent applies by the language of Costa Hawkins to "authorized subtenants." The issue therefore often becomes not only whether a landlord accepted rent but also whether in fact the subtenant was an authorized subtenant. See Cobb v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd., supra; DeZerega v Meggs, supra.

PRACTICE TIPS:

- Section 1954.53(d) probably supersedes the holding in Getz v City of W. Hollywood (1991) 233 CA3d 625, 284 CR 631 (see §7.27), although practitioners should be aware that the legislation neither removed all issues involving waiver and estoppel nor altered state law that provides that unless there is a prohibition against assignment and subletting, a tenant is free to assign or sublease the rented premises.

- Because §1954.53(d) does not address the consequences of a tenant's failure to request the landlord's consent or the landlord's withholding consent, it can only be presumed that if consent is required, a tenant may not sublet or assign unless consent was sought or the landlord afterward waived the right to object or by conduct is estopped from complaining that consent was not obtained. See §§3.57-3.58.
- In the commercial context, landlords are permitted to withhold consent to subletting or assignment, even unreasonably, if the lease so provides. But if the lease requires the landlord's consent, it may also specify an express standard or condition for withholding consent, but if no standard is expressed, the landlord may not unreasonably withhold consent. CC §§1995.250-1995.260. For discussion, see §§3.56-3.59, 3.75.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.28A 3. Eviction Issues After Costa-Hawkins

It should be noted that the Costa-Hawkins Act does not regulate evictions. However, whether a tenant is a protected tenant depends on the language of the local rent control ordinance, the language of the lease or rental agreement, and the actions taken by the landlord with regard to the subtenants. See, e.g., DeZerega v Meggs (2000) 83 CA4th 28, 99 CR2d 366. In addition, particular attention should be paid to the requirements of local rent control enactments which may provide a standard as to what tenants are required to do in order to secure the landlord's approval. Some local ordinances or rules adopted by the local rent board provide procedures to be followed by tenants and landlords in dealing with subtenants. Additionally, landlords should pay attention to the issue whether a tenant who has subleased without a landlord's approval in contravention of a provision in a rental agreement requiring such approval must give the tenant an opportunity to cure the default. Code of Civil Procedure §1161(4) provides that if there is a subletting or assignment in violation of a lease, the lease is terminated and the landlord may regain possession of the premises by the giving of a 3-day notice to quit. See §§8.50, 8.56.

© The Regents of the University of California

VI. RENT INCREASE MECHANISMS

A. Base Rents

§7.29 1. Determining Base Rent

The starting point for calculating a permissible rent increase is the "base rent": i.e., the rent selected and charged by the landlord at a time specified in the ordinance, the "base year." The date for setting base rent may be the date the ordinance was enacted, or it may be a "rollback" date some months before the date of enactment, selected to discourage landlords from raising rents in anticipation of the enactment to establish a higher base rent. In vacancy decontrol jurisdictions, a new base rent is established each time a new tenant takes occupancy.

Courts tend to defer to administrative decisions on establishing the proper base year. See, e.g., MHC Operating Ltd. Partnership v City of San Jose (2003) 106 CA4th 204, 130 CR2d 564.

Determining the proper base rent may be difficult, particularly in jurisdictions that do not require registration of units (see §7.44) and that do not issue some type of certificate to a property owner stating the amount of rent that may legally be charged. Owners frequently lack complete records because of improper recordkeeping or problems created by a predecessor-in-interest.

An attorney should determine the proper base rent for all units in question before advising the client, whether landlord or tenant. Most ordinances provide relief to a tenant whose base rent has been increased improperly, regardless of the nature of the proceeding before the local rent board and of the time that has elapsed since the improper increase. Moreover, any rent paid by the tenant in excess of the proper base rent counts as a credit against future months' rent, and there is no statute of limitations on asserting the offset. See Minelian v Manzella (1989) 215 CA3d 457, 263 CR 597; Nourafchan v Miner (1985) 169 CA3d 746, 215 CR 450.

A successor landlord is liable under a rent ordinance for overpayments charged to the tenant by a predecessor landlord. Baychester Shopping Ctr., Inc. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2008) 165 CA4th 1000, 81 CR3d 341. Any rent overpayment that can be asserted by the tenant against the landlord who overcharged may, likewise, be asserted against a new owner who has just bought the building. The remedy for the new owner is to seek recourse against the prior owner who overcharged.

However, if the tenant brings a civil suit against the landlord to recover any improper increases as well as punitive damages, the tenant is subject to applicable statutes of limitation. CC §1947.11(c).

EXAMPLE: A landlord who applies for a rent increase on the basis of completed capital improvements may find that the board will review and decrease any and all rents not found to be at their proper levels. Similarly, tenants in an eviction proceeding based on nonpayment of rent may defend on the basis that the amount demanded in the 3-day notice to pay rent or quit is not the proper amount if it is higher than is permitted under the local ordinance. In light of these problems, a purchaser of rental property in a rent-controlled jurisdiction should always obtain a proper rent roll.

PRACTICE TIP: In addition to the rent roll, a prospective purchaser should be advised to obtain estoppel statements from the tenants that include the following information:

- the amount of the monthly rent;
- the date of the last rent increase;
- the number of occupants of each apartment;
- the names of the occupants; and
- whether the rental agreement is oral or written.

The purchaser should also obtain a signed statement from the seller setting forth this information, and stating whether any tenant is subject to a temporary rent increase or pass-through that might have a sunset date, and whether any tenant has had an "additional tenant" rent increase.

WARNING: From the tenant's point of view, estoppel statements can be dangerous, since there is no way to correct a mistake or add an item inadvertently omitted. Unless the tenant has a written rental agreement that requires that the tenant complete and return an estoppel statement, the tenant cannot be compelled to fill out the statement.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.30 2. Changing Base Rent

Some rent control ordinances permit landlords who had not increased rents for a specified period of time (e.g., 12 to 24 months) before the ordinance was enacted to increase base date rents by a set percentage over the amount permitted under the ordinance. The base rent figure is then increased to reflect this amount.

Similarly, some ordinances permit owners to petition for an adjustment of the base date rents if they are artificially low. Courts have consistently held that rent control ordinances utilizing a maintenance of net operating income (MNOI) formula are constitutional so long as they provide an owner the opportunity to obtain an adjustment of the initial base date rents. Kavanau v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1997) 16 C4th 761, 772, 66 CR2d 672. See Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley (1976) 17 C3d 129, 165, 130 CR 465. The owner must demonstrate that the base date rents did not reflect comparable market conditions at the time they were established. Vega v City of W. Hollywood (1990) 223 CA3d 1342, 1351, 273 CR 243.

But there is no constitutional entitlement "to an increase in base date rents predicated on market conditions." Apartment Ass'n of Greater Los Angeles v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1994) 24 CA4th 1730, 1737, 30 CR2d 228. The court ruled that because the local ordinance did not allow a post-rent control purchaser "to petition for a base rent increase on any ground," but the ordinance permitted pre-rent control owners to challenge the base rents under the MNOI formula, the ordinance was invalid on its face and "could have unconstitutional results in particular cases." 24 CA4th at 1739.

In Vega v City of W. Hollywood, supra, the court upheld the granting of a writ of administrative mandamus to an owner who had proven at the administrative hearing, through use of an appraisal, that the initial base rents for the subject property were below comparable rents at the time the local ordinance was adopted. The court overturned an effort by the local board to require submission of comparative operating and expense data rather than just comparable rental data. The ordinance in question required that the owner not only demonstrate that the base rents were disproportionately low but also that the low rents were due to peculiar circumstances.

Not all ordinances require a showing of peculiar circumstances to obtain a base rent adjustment. In Stardust Mobile Estates, LLC v City of San Buenaventura (2007) 147 CA4th 1170, 55 CR3d 218, for example, although the court overruled the landlord's constitutional claims, it remanded the action for a determination of whether the owner's initial base rents were below market, suggesting that it would be unreasonable for the agency or reviewing court to impose the "peculiar circumstances" requirement of the ordinance at issue in Vega rather than using the standard in the applicable San Buenaventura ordinance. 147 CA4th at 1184.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel for property owners should review the Stardust decision carefully, noting the evidentiary problems that confronted the owner. Although an owner is entitled to a base year adjustment when rents in a base year had been set at an artificially low level, it is often extremely difficult to meet evidentiary requirements to demonstrate that rents were set at such low levels. Since technical hearsay requirements are often relaxed at administrative hearings, petitioners should endeavor to ensure that the evidence of low rent levels is introduced at the administrative level, and make a clear administrative record if the agency unreasonably fails to consider such evidence.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel for both property owners and tenants should endeavor to make sure that cross-examination of all witnesses is always available. See Manufactured Home Communities, Inc. v County of San Luis Obispo (2008) 167 CA4th 705, 84 CR3d 367.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/7 Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws/§7.31 3. Base Rents for Newly Covered Rental Units

§7.31 3. Base Rents for Newly Covered Rental Units

Most ordinances permit the landlord to charge market rent when a unit has not previously been rented. Similarly, most ordinances provide for establishing base rents for units that are once again controlled by the ordinance after a period of exemption (e.g., when units become exempt through owner occupancy, but become subject to the ordinance again when the owner moves out, or if a locality removes a previously established exemption). Some ordinances, however, do not permit the rent to be raised to market to the first tenant after an owner has vacated the unit if a previous tenant was evicted in order for the owner to occupy the unit. See, e.g., Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance §151.06.C.2.

PRACTICE TIP: Because most ordinances and rules have been amended over time, a practitioner may need to determine the state of the law at the time the unit first came under a particular rent control ordinance in order to advise the client concerning the appropriate base rent.

In Vega v City of W. Hollywood (1990) 223 CA3d 1342, 273 CR 243, a landlord who had charged low rents for many years increased rents in 1984 and was required under a rent control ordinance enacted in 1985 to roll back rents to their former level. The city's rent stabilization commission denied her petition to increase her base rents because she had failed to prove the expenses and the rate of return of comparable buildings and therefore had failed to show that the rate of return on her building was unreasonably low. Relying on a statement (in Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley (1976) 17 C3d 129, 169, 130 CR 465) that base rents at the time a unit comes under rent control should "reasonably be deemed to reflect general market conditions," the court of appeal held that a landlord must be permitted to start rent calculations with a base rent at the time the unit is subject to control similar to other comparable properties.

In Apartment Ass'n v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1994) 24 CA4th 1730, 30 CR2d 228, the court interpreted Vega as applying to situations in which the base rent is artificially low due to special circumstances. But see Stardust Mobile Estates, LLC v City of San Buenaventura (2007) 147 CA4th 1170, 55 CR3d 218 which follows both Vega v City of W. Hollywood, supra, and Apartment Ass'n but suggests that "special circumstances" may not always be required for a base rent adjustment.

PRACTICE TIP: When evaluating comparable properties in applying the Vega test, practitioners should begin by consulting with the local rent board, which can generally provide a listing of all registered rental properties in the city with the same number of bedrooms for rent in the base year of the property in question. (Notably, properties that have come on the market since the base year nearly always reflect a higher base rent.) Once the universe of possible properties is known, practitioners should next narrow the list to the same or similar neighborhoods.

After a manageable number of potentially comparable properties has been selected, practitioners, their clients, and, when feasible, an experienced real estate consultant or expert should view each property. For making a useful record, a photograph of each property, taken from the street, can be very helpful. A walk-through of the unit may also provide useful information about the following issues when comparing the units to the property in question:

- What is the condition of the unit—walls, floors, and fixtures?
- Does the unit have hardwood floors or wall to wall carpeting?
- Does the kitchen have modern appliances, built-ins, garbage disposal?
- Does the bathroom have up-to-date plumbing; does it have a bathtub or only a shower?
- How many full bathrooms? How many half-baths?
- How many actual bedrooms (formal dining rooms are sometimes registered by landlords with the board as a closetless, walk-through bedroom)?
- Is there a formal dining room, den, enclosed patio, or porch?
- Are laundry facilities or hook-ups provided or available?
- Is there on-site storage available—attic, basement, garage?

- Is off-street parking available, and, if so, is it covered or open?
- Does the unit have a front yard, a back yard, fenced, paved, grassy, landscaped?
- Does the unit have decks, balconies, or a view?
- Is the street and neighborhood residential or commercial? Is it near public transit?
- Is it in a triplex or a huge complex?

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.32 4. Evidentiary Problems in Establishing Base Rents

One of a practitioner's most difficult problems may be determining the actual base rents. Owners may not have complete records, particularly if the building has been transferred. Tenant estoppel certificates may provide some information, but practitioners should be cautious about relying on them, because most ordinances prohibit waiver by a tenant of any rights the tenant may have under the local ordinance. Many ordinances permit the introduction of hearsay evidence, although some do not. Even if the ordinance permits the introduction of hearsay evidence (see, e.g., Santa Monica Rent Control Board Regulation §8044; West Hollywood Rent Stabilization Regulation §60014), the hearing examiners usually have a stated policy that they will not base a finding of fact solely on hearsay. If hearsay is not admissible, facts regarding base rent might be elicited from the tenants if they attend the rent board hearing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.33 B. Annual Base Rent Adjustments

Most ordinances contain provisions for automatic annual rent increases ("general adjustments"), as well as procedures for individual rent adjustments (see §§7.34-7.38). Annual general adjustments are the primary rent-increase mechanism; only a small percentage of landlords seek individual adjustments. All California apartment rent control ordinances contain some type of annual general adjustment provision. In contrast, most mobilehome ordinances do not provide for general adjustments because of the small number of mobilehome parks in any given jurisdiction. Mobilehome park owners must petition individually for rent adjustments, unless a majority of the tenants in a mobilehome park agrees to an adjustment.

Rent control ordinances usually provide for annual general adjustments in one of three ways. An ordinance may:

(1) Specify a maximum percentage by which rents may be increased annually;

(2) Link automatic increases to a percentage of the increase in the consumer price index; or

(3) Provide that the amount of the annual increase be determined by the rent control board, based on criteria outlined in the ordinance.

Some ordinances permit landlords to "bank" (i.e., to save) general-adjustment increases that they have not taken in previous years and to implement these increases in future years. For example, if a general adjustment of 5 percent were authorized and the landlord raised rents by only 3 percent, the 2-percent difference (translated to a dollar amount) could be "banked" and the landlord could raise rents in the future by the dollar amount of the unused 2 percent. Some ordinances, such as the Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance, do not permit "banking." Under such an ordinance, the rent may be raised only by the percentage allowable when the increase is taken.

Although a "banking" provision permits a landlord to increase current rents to the level at which they would be if the earlier authorized adjustment had been fully taken, it does not permit the landlord to recoup the past rent for the period during which the maximum authorized rent was not charged. Some ordinances restrict the manner and timing in which "banked" increases may be permitted.

PRACTICE TIPS:

- Tenant advocates might argue that a landlord should not be permitted to recover for past months in which the tenants' actual contract rent was below the rent ceiling for the unit. To permit this practice would arguably effectively permit a landlord to retroactively increase the past contract rent, violating principles of contract law by denying the tenant the benefit of the rental agreement. See CC §827, which restricts increases in the terms of rental agreements and specifically prohibits increases in the rental rate without proper notice. A landlord may increase rents only on service of a proper 30-day or 60-day notice of a rent increase. See §§3.65-3.65B.
- When a unit's rent has been established under the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (see §7.25), the landlord may lose "banked" increases if the new rent is less than the maximum that would be allowable under the rent control ordinance.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Individual Adjustments

§7.34 1. Increases in Operating and Maintenance Expenses

Under some ordinances, owners are permitted to demonstrate that the annual adjustments allowed do not cover actual increases in the cost of operating and maintaining the building and the rental units. To obtain a rent increase based on such grounds, the owner will usually be required to prove the costs that were incurred in the year in which the increases occurred and also the expenses in a comparison year.

PRACTICE TIP: Practitioners must be mindful of this requirement and must ensure that proper evidence of such expenditures is submitted. See §7.47. Because of the contentious nature of disputes between landlords and tenants in many jurisdictions and the tendency of some rent control boards, hearing officers, and their staffs to assume that landlords will attempt to obtain greater rent increases than those to which they are entitled, the degree of proof required may be greater than originally anticipated. A tax return schedule showing expenditures may be admissible in some proceedings, but copies of canceled checks, bills, and other documentation may be required. Computers make compiling and presenting the evidence simpler, but practitioners should not overlook the need to present the underlying data in proper form.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.35 2. Utility and Capital-Improvement Pass-Throughs

Some ordinances permit landlords to pass on to their tenants the costs of completing capital improvements or increased utility costs, either with or without having obtained permission from the local rent board. Some ordinances provide that these costs are in fact "pass-throughs" and thus do not become part of the tenant's base rent. Such pass-throughs often terminate after a period of time or when the costs decrease at a future date. The existence of pass-throughs that do not become a part of a tenant's base rent frequently cause owners to miscalculate base rents, either because of a misunderstanding about the applicable ordinance and rules or because a predecessor in interest made the error. On the importance of calculating base rent correctly, see §7.29.

In Morgan v City of Chino (2004) 115 CA4th 1192, 9 CR3d 784, the court held that regulatory agencies are not constitutionally required to grant a rent increase for every capital improvement. Instead, the agency must take capital improvements into account when evaluating whether the owner is receiving a fair return. "If the existing rents are sufficient to provide the owner with a fair return on the overall project even after the capital improvement, then due process is satisfied." 115 CA4th at 1201.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.36 3. Cost of Professional Services to Prove Need for Rent Increase

Under CC §1947.15, the cost of professional services incurred by a property owner to prove the need for a rent increase must be included by the board as an item of cost recovery in the decision that allows the owner to increase the rent. In §1947.15(j) the legislature expressed its intent not to interfere in any way with the power of a local agency "to set its own fair return standards or to limit other actions under its local rent control program" other than those expressly stated in §1947.15. Note that §1947.15 applies only in jurisdictions that have a vacancy control rent control ordinance or require registration of rents. CC §1947.15(b). Because of the passage of the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535), which outlawed rent control on vacant apartments and newly constructed units (see §§7.4, 7.25-7.28), §1947.15 was declared inoperative unless the Costa-Hawkins Act is repealed. CC §1947.15(k).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.37 4. Limits on Individual Increases

When an ordinance permits an individual rent increase due to an increase in the landlord's operating and maintenance expenses, capital improvements, or utility cost increases, it may impose a limit on such increases to prevent the landlord from passing the full amount of the increased costs on to the tenants. In Fox v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1985) 169 CA3d 651, 215 CR 565, the court upheld provisions of the San Francisco rent control ordinance that limit any rent increases in excess of the annual general adjustment, including a restriction that no single increase could exceed a tenant's base rent by 30 percent in any one year. See also Kavanau v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1993) 19 CA4th 730, 23 CR2d 724, discussed in §7.14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.38 5. "Fair Return" Adjustments

Most rent control ordinances ensure that landlords may obtain a constitutionally mandated "fair return on investment" by providing a method for landlords to maintain the net operating income that they received before rent control took effect. Starting with the base rents selected by landlords (see §7.29), these ordinances permit rent increases to account for cost increases and inflation, thus preserving net operating income. Most ordinances restrict this right to seek adjustments to landlords who are in compliance with the requirements of the rent control ordinance.

A few ordinances use a vague "fair return" standard for adjudicating individual petitions. Because a vague standard precludes general adjustments for all landlords and requires an individual hearing for each landlord seeking a rent increase, it is appropriate only where the number of units or landlords regulated is relatively small. Thus, such ordinances are most often used to regulate mobilehome parks and should pass constitutional muster, because an ordinance need not contain a specific formula to withstand an attack on its facial validity, as long as it permits those administering it to avoid confiscatory results. Fisher v City of Berkeley (1984) 37 C3d 644, 209 CR 682, aff'd (1986) 475 US 260, 89 L Ed 2d 206, 106 S Ct 1045. See also Kavanau v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1997) 16 C4th 761, 66 CR2d 672 and Hillsboro Props. v City of Rohnert Park (2006) 138 CA4th 379, 41 CR3d 441, discussed in §7.14B.

The courts have discussed three principal types of "fair return" standards in constitutional challenges to rent control ordinances:

- return on value;
- return on cash investment; and
- maintenance of net operating income.

The "return on value" theory has been criticized as circular because income property is generally valued by capitalizing its income. Cotati Alliance for Better Hous. v City of Cotati (1983) 148 CA3d 280, 195 CR 825. Many of the cases involve application of rent control ordinances to mobilehome parks. For discussion of decisions evaluating the validity of various fair return standards, see §7.13.

Practitioners should be mindful of the various theories underlying the fair return concepts and should attempt to present a complete administrative record of the owner's financial condition. The absence of a complete record demonstrating that the owner is suffering losses or that the annual general adjustment did not cover costs of operating the building plus a fair return on investment may result in the landlord losing a claim that should have been won. See, e.g., MHC Operating Limited Partnership v City of San Jose (2003) 106 CA4th 204, 130 CR2d 564. See also TG Oceanside, LP v City of Oceanside (2007) 156 CA4th 1355, 68 CR3d 320. Given the amount of time necessary to collect and present such data, attorneys should attempt to educate their clients to prepare most of the needed paperwork and to organize their records to make future petitions or applications more routine and less burdensome.

PRACTICE TIP: Practitioners should be alert to evidentiary presumptions in rent control laws, e.g., a presumption that existing rent adjustment formulas in the rent control ordinance provide a fair return. Failure to rebut the presumption effectively ends the landlord's challenge. See TG Oceanside, LP v City of Oceanside, supra.

In an appropriate case, the landlord may be able to sue the administrative agency for breach of contract. See 300 DeHaro St. Invs. v Department of Hous. & Community Dev. (2008) 161 CA4th 1240, 75 CR3d 98 (landlord contracted with Department of Housing and Community Development and was denied right to raise rents).

For further discussion of fair return issues, see Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L Rev 723 (1983); Baar, California Rent Controls: Rent Increase Standards and Fair Return, 8 CEB Real Prop L Rep 97 (July 1985); Baar, Fair Return Standards Under Mobilehome Park Space Rent Controls: Conceptual and Practical Approaches, 29 CEB Real Prop L Rep 333 (Sept. 2006).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.38A 6. Tenant Does Not Occupy Unit As Principal Residence

Many local ordinances provide that the rent increase limitations only apply to "tenants in occupancy" of units falling under the rent controls and then by local rule have defined "tenants in occupancy" to mean tenants who make the rent controlled unit their principal or primary residence. See, e.g., San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Board Rules and Regulations §1.21 and Santa Monica Rent Control Board Regulation §3304. The Santa Monica regulation was upheld as a valid exercise of the Rent Board's rule making authority in Bisno v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2005) 130 CA4th 816, 30 CR3d 441. The Bisno decision suggested (but did not decide) that it would be unfair to force landlords to subsidize tenants who did not actually reside in units located in areas where rent controls were justified because of a housing shortage. For further discussion, see §§4.38, 7.23A, 7.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

VII. TENANT PETITIONS FOR RENT DECREASES OR REFUNDS

§7.39 A. Reductions in Services

Most rent control ordinances authorize rent reductions if the level of services is reduced. For example, a reduction in services occurs if parking spaces that were previously available are withdrawn or made available only at an additional charge. Without such a provision in an ordinance, a landlord could effectively increase rents by reducing services. Standards for calculating the amount by which to reduce the rent for a reduction in services are necessarily vague.

Under most ordinances, reduction in maintenance constitutes a reduction in services, but inadequate maintenance would not qualify unless it constituted a reduction from previous levels. In Sterling v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1985) 168 CA3d 176, 214 CR 71, the court held that a local rent control ordinance could authorize rent reduction for reductions in maintenance and that the state "repair-and-deduct" remedy did not preempt this field.

Courts have held that a rent overcharge may result from a reduction in base amenities or from imposition of an unauthorized charge for base amenities, and that local rent boards have the authority to determine which amenities are properly included in the base rent for a unit. Richman v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1992) 7 CA4th 1457, 9 CR2d 690; 301 Ocean Ave. Corp. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1991) 228 CA3d 1548, 279 CR 636.

In Golden Gateway Ctr. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1999) 73 CA4th 1204, 87 CR2d 332, the board required a rent decrease when the landlord's repair of decks outside tenants' apartments interfered with the tenants' use of the decks. The court set aside the board's order, holding that if the landlord is not engaging in "furtive tactics" to decrease services but is trying to provide required services, an unavoidable temporary interference with housing services that does not interfere with the right of occupancy does not warrant a rent decrease.

Santa Monica's rent ordinance does not authorize its rent board to bring actions for individual rent reductions on behalf of tenants who did not come forward on their own initiative to protest a landlord's construction project that made certain facilities unavailable. Ocean Park Assocs. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2004) 114 CA4th 1050, 8 CR3d 421.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.40 B. Inadequate Maintenance

Although a reduction in maintenance is generally a ground for obtaining a rent reduction (see §7.39), inadequate maintenance might not constitute a ground for a rent reduction. Tenants might rely on other remedies, such as the repair-and-deduct provisions of CC §1942. Practitioners may find, however, that rent control boards sometimes attempt to expand their jurisdiction into other areas of the landlord-tenant relationship by issuing regulations concerning maintenance and repair. A tenant, however, cannot recover a rent reduction for discomfort caused by disruptive repairs to the premises. See Golden Gateway Ctr. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1999) 73 CA4th 1204, 87 CR2d 332.

Rent boards may condition the right to general or individual adjustments on compliance with housing code requirements and with the implied warranty of habitability. In Berman v City of W. Hollywood Rent Stabilization Dep't (1988) 197 CA3d 837, 243 CR 144, the court rejected a landlord's constitutional challenge to a rent control ordinance that required landlords to paint apartment units once every 4 years or to face a rent reduction. The court considered the ordinance "to be a proper, rational means to implement the valid purpose of effectuating affordable, well-maintained rental housing units available to the public." 197 CA3d at 841.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.40A C. Refund of Rent Overpayments

Most ordinances provide relief in the form of a petition to the rent board for a refund for a tenant whose base rent has been increased improperly, regardless of the nature of the proceeding before the board and of the time that has elapsed after the improper increase. Many ordinances provide that any rent paid by the tenant in excess of the proper base rent counts as a credit against future months' rent; in some ordinances, there is no statute of limitations on asserting the offset. See Minelian v Manzella (1989) 215 CA3d 457, 263 CR 597; Nourafchan v Miner (1985) 169 CA3d 746, 215 CR 450. Excess rent paid to a prior owner may be recovered against the current owner if the local rent ordinance provides for successor liability. See Baychester Shopping Ctr., Inc. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2008) 165 CA4th 1000, 81 CR3d 341. But a board may not issue an order directing a tenant to withhold a portion of the monthly rent as restitution for past overpayments, nor may it declare that such withholding may not form the basis of an unlawful detainer action. Such orders represent "an unwarranted intrusion" into the power of the courts. McHugh v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 C3d 348, 377, 261 CR 318.

© The Regents of the University of California

VIII. PRACTICING BEFORE RENT CONTROL BOARDS

§7.41 A. Introduction

The importance of a careful reading of the applicable rent control ordinance cannot be overemphasized, and practitioners should also be sure to read the rent board's rules and regulations, which often provide specific answers to questions that may arise. Many rent control ordinances are either vague or laden with terms of art. It is often difficult to determine how a rent control ordinance actually operates if the ordinance has highly subjective rent-increase standards, such as provisions that require rent boards to determine the value of property or to decide what constitutes a "fair return," without defining those terms with specificity.

PRACTICE TIPS:

- An attorney should not prepare a petition for filing with the rent board, or give any advice to the client, without first reviewing the board's rules and regulations and other directives or unwritten policies. It is often useful to contact rent board staff for information on how the board or its hearing officers have ruled in the past on similar matters, although practitioners should be aware that orally conveyed information, and even written communications, may not be binding.
- Practitioners should be aware that in almost every case, the rent board must determine whether the tenant's current rent exceeds the maximum allowable rent (the first legal rate charged to the tenant plus all subsequent lawful increases). Whether the owner seeks a "pass-through" of certain costs, or the tenant believes that a particular increase is inappropriate, most rent boards will make a preliminary assessment of the correctness of the rent being charged. A base rent that is too high, or the landlord's failure to register the unit (see §7.44), may have significant unanticipated adverse consequences for an owner and may produce some added benefits for the tenant.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Powers of Rent Boards

§7.42 1. Rule Making

The details of applying a rent control ordinance are often left to rent board regulations or unwritten policies. In jurisdictions that have had rent control for many years, the regulations have become an independent body of law, and they often appear to differ substantially from what a literal interpretation of the ordinance would suggest.

Administrative bodies, including rent boards, are often authorized by statute or ordinance to promulgate rules and regulations. Administrative law provides a useful context for evaluating the legality and applicability of such rules and regulations.

Rent control ordinances have been held to be remedial legislation that should be construed liberally to effect their purposes. See, e.g., Parkmerced Co. v San Francisco Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1989) 215 CA3d 490, 495, 263 CR 617. Nevertheless, rent board rules and regulations themselves must be consistent with the enabling statute and not in conflict with it, and they must be reasonably necessary to effect its purpose. Da Vinci Group v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1992) 5 CA4th 24, 29, 6 CR2d 461. See Govt C §11342.2.

In Abramson v City of W. Hollywood (1992) 7 CA4th 1121, 9 CR2d 507, the landlord sought a rent increase under the city's rent stabilization ordinance. Even though the requested increase was valid under the express terms of the ordinance, the rent stabilization commission denied the application, apparently based largely on policy concerns that duplicative rent increases, contrary to the purposes of the ordinance, might result if the ordinance were applied as written. The trial court upheld the commission's ruling, but the court of appeal reversed, stating (7 CA4th at 1128):

> The fact that City's rent control scheme has unintentionally created the potential for undesirable duplicative rent increases does not provide a valid basis for the introduction of a new procedure which seeks to avoid this undesired effect.
> We are mindful of the general rule that City's contemporaneous construction of Ordinance is entitled to great deference. We are also mindful of the policy arguments advanced by City throughout these proceedings regarding the protection of tenants from excessive increases in rent. But no matter how great the deference or how strong the policy, we are unwilling to read a procedure into Ordinance which does not exist.

In City of Berkeley v City of Berkeley Rent Stabilization Bd. (1994) 27 CA4th 951, 33 CR2d 317, the court rejected a contention that rent board regulations that raised rents were not authorized by the rent control ordinance. In H.N. & Frances C. Berger Found. v City of Escondido (2005) 127 CA4th 1, 25 CR3d 19, the court held that a determination of fair rent by the rent board need not follow any specific formula, but it must be supported by a proper evidentiary record.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.43 2. Adjudicating Petitions

In addition to promulgating rules and regulations, rent control boards typically conduct rent adjustment hearings and issue opinions in matters brought before them (or before hearing officers or other personnel trained to hear the individual cases). Most boards have an administrative staff that conducts the board's routine business. An outline of the board's duties and hearing procedures is typically included in the rules and regulations.

The power of local rent boards to adjudicate excess rent claims (by ordering a monetary award to the tenant of the amount of previously paid excess rent) was upheld in McHugh v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 C3d 348, 261 CR 318. The court rejected arguments that such adjudications violate the judicial powers clause (Cal Const art VI, §1) or the right to a jury trial (Cal Const art I, §16). The court also held that:

(a) No rent board may enforce any excess rent claim for 30 days after the final decision, so that an aggrieved party may petition a court for a writ of administrative mandamus and obtain a stay of the board's order (49 CA3d at 377 n44); and

(b) An administrative board may not award treble damages for a landlord's overcharge or other violation, because making such an award is a judicial function (49 CA3d at 378).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.44 3. Registration of Rental Units

In municipalities that require landlords to register their units and to provide relevant information such as base-date rents, current rents, and amenities, a landlord's right to obtain a rent increase may be contingent on compliance with registration requirements. Some ordinances limit an owner's right to demand or accept rent on premises that are not registered with the rent board. Failure to register might be an affirmative defense in an eviction action based on nonpayment of rent. This defense is not subject to any statute of limitations. See, e.g., Minelian v Manzella (1989) 215 CA3d 457, 263 CR 597; Searle v Berkeley Rent Stabilization Bd. (1988) 197 CA3d 1251, 243 CR 449; Nourafchan v Miner (1985) 169 CA3d 746, 215 CR 450. See also Baychester Shopping Ctr., Inc. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2008) 165 CA4th 1000, 81 CR3d 341 (current owner liable for rent overcharges by owner's predecessor).

If there is a problem or a defect in registration of a unit, CC §1947.7, which limits the nature of the penalties assessed by a local agency when there has been "substantial compliance" with the registration and rent level requirements, may afford some relief. "Penalties" within the meaning of CC §1947.7 may refer only to treble damages because the statute provides for restitution of the excess rent even when the landlord is in substantial compliance with applicable legal requirements.

A provision in Berkeley's rent control ordinance that allowed the rent board to authorize rent withholding for tenants whose landlords fail to register was held unconstitutional in Floystrup v City of Berkeley Rent Stabilization Bd. (1990) 219 CA3d 1309, 268 CR 898, on the ground that the provision impermissibly permitted the board to exercise judicial powers. A 5 percent penalty for late registration was held to be permissible, however, in 301 Ocean Ave. Corp. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1985) 175 CA3d 149, 158, 221 CR 610, although the court held invalid a prohibition against rent increases for three months after late payment of fees, because it was not reasonably necessary to achieve the purpose of the ordinance.

In West Hollywood Concerned Citizens v City of W. Hollywood (1991) 232 CA3d 486, 283 CR 470, a group of landlords claimed that a registration fee increase of $48 per year per unit that could not be passed through to tenants was "confiscatory," because it effectively reduced the annual inflation adjustment of base rents allowed by the ordinance. The court disagreed, holding that, because the base rents may well have been more than the minimum needed to provide a fair return, the $48 increase would not necessarily cause profits to fall below a fair return.

In Alpha Epsilon Phi Tau Chapter Hous. Ass'n v City of Berkeley (9th Cir 1997) 114 F3d 840, the local rent board found that plaintiff's units were covered by the rent control ordinance and therefore plaintiffs owed registration fees and penalties for failing to register. Plaintiff sued in federal court, claiming that the board's ruling violated the due process clause, because the board had not adjudicated this dispute impartially, as the board's funding was dependent on registration fees. The court disagreed. While board members had some institutional (not personal) interest in ruling that units were covered, that interest was not large enough to violate due process, as less than five percent of the board's budget came from disputed fees and penalties, and the board could cover any budgetary shortfall by raising registration fees in subsequent years.

If the rent board requires landlords to furnish the name and any other information about a tenant or former tenant, the board must keep such name and information confidential. CC §1947.7(g). In other respects, public access to landlords' registration forms varies among jurisdictions. In some cities, only tenants in applicable units have access to registration forms; in others, the public has access to only part of the information on these forms. Rent board restrictions on public access to registration forms have not been tested in the courts.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.45 4. Registration of Rents

Landlords (especially those who bought buildings after the enactment of rent control) have often had difficulty learning the correct base rents for all units. Although landlords often consider rent registration a nuisance, it does assist landlords in determining the proper base rent in vacancy control jurisdictions.

To help resolve potential disputes about base rents, the legislature enacted CC §1947.8, which provides that any rent control ordinance or regulation in effect on January 1, 1987, that requires registration of rents, must provide for the establishment and certification of permissible rent levels on or before January 1, 1988, including completion of all appeals and administrative proceedings. CC §1947.8(b). If the ordinance was adopted on or after January 1, 1987, the ordinance or regulation must provide for establishment and certification of rent levels within 1 year after adoption. Upon request, the local agency must provide the landlord or the tenant with a certificate of permissible rent levels for a rental unit. CC §1947.8(b). The landlord or the tenant may appeal the determination of permissible rent levels stated in the certificate within 15 days after it is issued, and the local agency is required to give written notification of its decision on the appeal within 60 days. CC §1947.8(c).

A local agency may not enact or enforce local regulations that are inconsistent with the intent of CC §1947.8 and may be compelled to comply with CC §1947.8 by a writ of mandate under CCP §1085. Sego v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1997) 57 CA4th 250, 67 CR2d 68.

Under CC §§1947.7-1947.11, in a jurisdiction that requires registration of rent, restitution of overcharges to the tenant and recovery of registration or filing fees are the exclusive remedies for a landlord's failure to register when a landlord is in "substantial compliance" with the ordinance. No other penalties may be assessed against such a landlord. CC §1947.7(b).

In rent-controlled jurisdictions that require registration of rent, once a certified rent has been established (see CC §1947.8), any landlord who charges rent to a tenant in excess of the certified rent ceiling must refund the excess rent to the tenant on demand. If the landlord refuses to refund the excess rent and a court finds the landlord willfully charged the tenant rent in excess of the certified lawful rent ceiling, the court must award the tenant a judgment for the excess amount of rent and may treble that amount. The prevailing party is entitled to attorney fees and costs. CC §1947.11(a). The remedy under CC §1947.11 does not prohibit any other remedy that might be available to a party aggrieved by rent in excess of a certified level. CC §1947.11(b). Most rent control ordinances also provide for civil remedies in excess rent cases, and these remedies might not be limited by CC §1947.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/7 Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws/§7.46 C. Representing Clients at Administrative Hearings

§7.46 C. Representing Clients at Administrative Hearings

The hearing process for an individual rent adjustment is similar to the process for most administrative hearings. Hearing officers are usually hired by the rent board or the program director, either as employees or on a per diem basis. They are often, but not always, attorneys.

Rent control ordinances or regulations usually contain provisions governing:

- notice to parties;
- timetables for hearings, decisions, and appeals;
- access to records;
- recording hearings;
- consolidation of petitions concerning the same property;
- representation (many ordinances permit representation by any person, not just by attorneys); and
- filing fees (which may be substantial).

PRACTICE TIP: The attorney should prepare as carefully for an individual adjustment hearing as for any other administrative hearing. Whatever the reason for the requested rent adjustment, complete and accurate records of revenues and expenses for the years in question must usually be presented at the hearing.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/7 Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws/§7.47 1. Evidence

§7.47 1. Evidence

The party who has the burden of proof must be prepared to present full and complete evidence to make his or her case. Under some ordinances, copies of all supporting documentation must be submitted with the petition so that the hearing officer or rent-board staff can review the file before the hearing. In addition, if the issue is a rent increase beyond annually permitted increases in jurisdictions that require special evidence to demonstrate that the increases are warranted, attorneys should pay special attention to the language and burdens contained in the rent ordinance. In Action Apartment Ass'n v Santa Monica Rent Control Opinion Bd. (9th Cir 2007) 509 F3d 1020, 1027, the failure on the part of the plaintiff to have made a showing in the wording of the ordinance was fatal to the plaintiff's claim that it had not received a fair return.

Attorneys should determine the applicable rules of evidence in advance of the hearing. Strict rules of evidence, such as the secondary evidence rule (Evid C §1521), may not be applied. Hearsay is generally admissible, although a finding cannot be based solely on hearsay. See California Administrative Hearing Practice §§7.67-7.69 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). The business records exception to the hearsay rule (Evid C §§1270-1272) may help to support a finding. In any case, the attorney should bring supporting documents, such as invoices and canceled checks, to the hearing. The landlord should be prepared to testify in support of documentary evidence that is introduced, unless the parties have stipulated to the accuracy of the evidence.

CAUTION: If there is any likelihood that the matter will be appealed to the full board or pursued in court, the attorney should be careful to prepare and present a complete record of all facts necessary to sustain the client's case.

The fact that many rent control boards do not possess subpoena power creates some difficulty for a party who may require testimony from a third party or even an opposing party.

PRACTICE TIP: Most rent control boards possess subpoena power, but some do not. If a witness cannot be subpoenaed, the attorney may have to rely on affidavits and declarations. Introducing hearsay evidence may provide a partial solution to the absence of subpoena power, but the attorney should be mindful of the basic rules of evidence and should strive to present all the basic facts with evidence that would be admissible in court. Although many rent boards do not apply strict rules of evidence, the attorney cannot simply assume or hope that the hearing officer will admit hearsay evidence.

The adverse consequences that may arise when an attorney who does not comply with a rent board rule or a hearing officer direction (even though the evidence would never be admitted in a court proceeding) was highlighted in MHC Operating Limited Partnership v City of San Jose (2003) 106 CA4th 204, 130 CR2d 564. In that case, the mobilehome park owner who did not own the park in 1985, the year when net operating income was to be established, and who had received no documentation regarding net operating income from the seller, was held to be required to attempt to estimate that income and expense data from other sources.

PRACTICE TIP: Those who buy rent-controlled property should obtain, as part of the sale, all documentation necessary to support future rent increases, and their attorneys should review the local ordinances to determine what information to obtain.

Expert witnesses may prove to be essential to provide economic analysis in rent control hearings. In jurisdictions with vague "fair return" standards (see §7.38), the landlord must be able to present coherent economic and financial data to demonstrate entitlement to a rent increase. Similarly, a tenant who claims a breach of the landlord's duties must present evidence concerning the dollar value of the loss.

In King v Mobile Home Rent Review Bd. (1989) 216 CA3d 1532, 265 CR 624, the rent review board required the landlord to furnish his federal income tax return as part of his petition for a rent increase. The court of appeal held that such returns are privileged unless the board is able to show some public policy basis beyond administrative convenience for requiring them.

In Whispering Pines Mobile Home Park, Ltd. v City of Scotts Valley (1986) 180 CA3d 152, 225 CR 364, the court limited the rent board's ability to rely on the knowledge and expertise of its own members, demonstrating the importance of expert testimony presented by the parties themselves. The court also held, however, that a board may rely on its own members if it informs the parties of this procedure and gives them an opportunity to respond before determining the allowable increase. In H.N. & Frances C. Berger Found. v City of Escondido (2005) 127 CA4th 1, 25 CR3d 19, the court held that the rent board's determination of a fair rent was not supported by substantial evidence. The board rejected both the recommendation of its own rent control expert and that of an independent appraiser it had retained and arrived at a lower figure than either suggested. The court found that the figures used by the board were not within the range of reasonable rents.

In TG Oceanside, LP v City of Oceanside (2007) 156 CA4th 1355, 68 CR3d 320, the court validated the rent control ordinance's evidentiary presumption that existing rent adjustment formulas in the ordinance provide a fair return. Because the landlord failed to put on evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption, his rent increase was denied.

PRACTICE TIP: If a problem is encountered obtaining testimony at the hearing, the attorney should request that the hearing be continued or that the hearing record be left open. If the matter is to be appealed or subjected to judicial review, a complete administrative record will be needed (see §7.48).

In a reconsideration hearing on a matter before the rent board, the board may take additional evidence or rely on the existing record. Whispering Pines Mobile Home Park, Ltd. v City of Scotts Valley, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.48 2. Preservation of Record

Because reconsideration or judicial review of rent board decisions is usually based solely on the administrative record (see §§7.47, 7.51), the attorney must present all necessary evidence at the hearing and should attempt to present evidence that complies with the hearsay and secondary evidence (Evid C §1521) rules, regardless of whether those rules are applicable in the administrative hearing. See, e.g., strategies in Pope, Galland v Clovis: New Restrictions on Due Process Challenges to Rent Control Procedures, 24 CEB Real Prop L Rep 217 (Aug. 2001).

If judicial review is contemplated, the attorney should also ensure that an accurate record of the proceedings is maintained. Although most hearings are tape recorded, the sound quality may be poor. Consequently, the attorney may wish to furnish his or her own tape recorder or to arrange for a certified shorthand reporter. In that case, the attorney may be required to furnish copies of the transcript to the board and the opposing party. If no secondary recording method is used, the taping system should be checked periodically during the hearing to ensure that it the sound quality is adequate.

The quality of the documentary evidence presented may overcome any problems with oral testimony, and the attorney should take care to see that it is introduced and marked properly.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/7 Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws/§7.49 3. Costs of Preparing for and Attending a Hearing

§7.49 3. Costs of Preparing for and Attending a Hearing

Practitioners and their clients may be surprised at the cost of preparing for and attending a hearing to obtain or oppose a rent increase.

PRACTICE TIP: Practitioners should discuss the cost issue with their clients at the earliest opportunity, so that the parties may be afforded an opportunity to assist in preparing the case and the necessary evidence.

Civil Code §1947.15 provides that landlords who obtain a rent increase may recapture the cost of professional services (such as legal and accounting services) employed in the effort to obtain the rent increase. This rule applies only in jurisdictions that do not have vacancy decontrol (CC §1947.15(b)), but the rule is inoperative as long as the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §§1954.50-1954.535) (see §§7.4, 7.25-7.28) remains in effect (CC §1947.15(k)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.50 4. Findings and Conclusions Required

After a hearing officer's decision or a decision of the board is received, the attorney should review it carefully to ensure that it contains appropriate findings of fact and conclusions of law, both of which are necessary for any challenge to the decision. In Parkmerced Residents Org. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1989) 210 CA3d 1235, 258 CR 774, however, the court held that the rent board's findings that there was good cause for an exemption and that the exemption was in the interests of justice was a sufficiently specific finding of ultimate fact.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/7 Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws/§7.51 D. Judicial Review: Administrative Mandamus

§7.51 D. Judicial Review: Administrative Mandamus

An unsuccessful party may challenge a rent board decision by filing a petition for a writ of administrative mandamus under CCP §1094.5. The scope of judicial review under §1094.5 is limited to determining whether the board has "proceeded with or in excess of jurisdiction; whether there was a fair trial; and whether there was any prejudicial abuse of discretion." Abuse of discretion is established if the board failed to act in a manner required by law, the decision is not supported by the findings, or the findings are not supported by the evidence. CCP §1094.5(b).

In most cases, the petitioning party must order the administrative record, pay for its preparation, and cause the record to be lodged with the court. Obtaining the administrative record is usually an expensive undertaking. Whether the entire administrative record, including a transcript of all the hearings, must be prepared depends on the basis for the challenge to the rent board's decision. A challenge based on an interpretation of the ordinance or rule, when the facts are not in dispute, may require only limited portions of the record. In cases that involve questions requiring interpretation of the evidence, the entire record, including a transcript of all proceedings, may be required. The better practice is to provide the complete record. See, e.g., Buckhart v San Francisco Residential Rent Bd. (1988) 197 CA3d 1032, 243 CR 298.

In some cases, new evidence may have been discovered since the administrative hearing. In administrative mandamus proceedings, evidence beyond the administrative record is ordinarily not admissible. There are, however, limited exceptions to this rule. CCP §1094.5(e). See California Administrative Mandamus (3d ed Cal CEB 2003). For extensive discussion of the admissibility of evidence from outside the record, see Practice Under the California Environmental Quality Act §§23.48-23.58 (2d ed Cal CEB 2008).

Except for jurisdictional and legal issues, when reviewing a rent board's decision at an individual adjustment hearing, the trial court must apply the substantial evidence rule, not the independent judgment test. San Marcos Mobilehome Park Owners' Ass'n v City of San Marcos (1987) 192 CA3d 1492, 238 CR 290. When the administrative decision substantially affects a fundamental vested right, however, the independent judgment standard of review applies. Goat Hill Tavern v City of Costa Mesa (1992) 6 CA4th 1519, 8 CR2d 385; 301 Ocean Ave. Corp. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1991) 228 CA3d 1548, 279 CR 636. In Goat Hill Tavern, the court used the independent judgment standard of review in setting aside the city's denial of a conditional use permit because the tavern had operated for 35 years as a legal nonconforming use, the owner had invested $1.75 million in refurbishing the property, and the owner had a fundamental vested right. But see Jaramillo v State Bd. for Geologists & Geophysicists (2006) 136 CA4th 880, 39 CR3d 170 (where an administrative decision does not substantially affect a vested right, the trial court will consider only whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence). For further discussion of these tests and their ramifications, see Practice Under CEQA §§23.32-23.38.

If the trial court vacates the rent board's decision, it may not set the amount of a rent increase but must remand the case to the rent control board. Carson Gardens, LLC v City of Carson Mobilehome Park Rental Review Bd. (2006) 135 CA4th 856, 37 CR3d 768.

Many ordinances contain statutes of limitations within which administrative mandamus review must be sought. In the absence of a provision in the local ordinance, the time period specified in CCP §1094.6(b), (f) is 90 days from the date that the rent board sends notice of the final administrative decision. See Liang v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2004) 124 CA4th 775, 21 CR3d 715. (The decision in Liang resulted from a filing clerk's rejecting a timely filing of the petition because the petition did not comply with local rule requirements.)

Under CCP §1094.6(d), if the petitioner requests the administrative record within 10 days after the date the decision becomes final, the period within which the petition must be filed is extended to 30 days after the petitioner's attorney has received the record. Although a period of months may thus ensue before the petition must be filed, it may have to be filed within 30 days if the decision concerns an excess rent claim. McHugh v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 C3d 348, 261 CR 318. In such a case, a petition should be filed immediately so that a stay can be sought from the superior court.

PRACTICE TIP: Attorneys should be aware of some special challenges presented in practice before local rent control boards. The petitioner will often want to proceed by the noticed motion procedure rather than to obtain an alternative writ with an order to show cause, because the motion procedure affords adequate time to obtain the record and permits a better briefing schedule. As discussed above, the petitioner's need for a stay of the decision may affect timing and strategy in the early stages of the proceeding.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.52 E. Arbitration

Some rent control ordinances provide for arbitration of disputes. Arbitration requirements may not be binding in the rent control context, however, unless the parties are given an opportunity to seek review of the arbitrator's decision. In Bayscene Resident Negotiators v Bayscene Mobilehome Park (1993) 15 CA4th 119, 18 CR2d 626, the court considered Chula Vista's mobilehome park rent ordinance, which provided for negotiation between the landlord and tenants and, if that failed, binding arbitration by an arbitrator who was to provide the landlord with a "just and reasonable return on property." The court held that this procedure denied landlords due process, because it provided no review of the arbitrator's decision by the city council and no trial de novo or judicial review of whether the arbitrator's decision was supported by substantial evidence.

A landlord cannot avoid the police power of a rent control board or its adjudicatory functions by inserting a clause in a lease or rental agreement requiring binding arbitration of disputes. See Village Trailer Park, Inc. v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2002) 101 CA4th 1133, 124 CR2d 857, in which the court held that the California Mobilehome Residency Law does not "preempt" Santa Monica from applying its rent control law to mobilehome park spaces, and that an arbitration clause in the mobilehome park lease did not prevent the local board from enforcing its ordinance against the park owner.

© The Regents of the University of California

IX. RESTRICTIONS ON EVICTIONS

§7.53 A. Overview

Local rent control ordinances may limit the grounds and conditions for eviction, but they may not conflict with the summary nature of state eviction procedures. Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley (1976) 17 C3d 129, 147, 130 CR 465.

Under state law, landlords may evict residential tenants at the end of the tenancy term without stating or proving a reason, although the eviction may be barred if the tenant can prove that the landlord is motivated by specifically prohibited reasons (e.g., racial discrimination, retaliation for the exercise of one's rights). See chaps 2, 8. Most rent control ordinances alter the nature of tenants' tenure substantially by requiring just cause for eviction. See §7.54. Some ordinances specify additional procedural requirements for evictions, such as requiring the landlord to send the rent board a copy of the notice to terminate. Because these requirements do not interfere with the summary nature of state eviction proceedings, they do not appear to conflict with the decision in Birkenfeld v City of Berkeley, supra.

In Danekas v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2001) 95 CA4th 638, 645, 115 CR2d 694, the court explained why evictions are regulated by San Francisco's rent control ordinance:

> Regulating the grounds for eviction is integral to the success of the statutory framework, because the Rent Ordinance permits unlimited rent increases whenever a rental unit becomes vacant. (Rent Ord., §37.3.) As soon as an original tenant no longer permanently resides in a rental unit, the rent for that unit is temporarily decontrolled, allowing the landlord to boost the rent as high as the market permits. Once the unit is re-rented, it again becomes subject to the Rent Ordinance under a regulatory concept known as "vacancy decontrol/recontrol." Under this framework, governing the grounds for eviction is essential to the successful implementation of the Rent Ordinance, lest landlords circumvent the rent limitations by expelling tenants in order to raise rents. To prevent this activity, section 37.9 of the Rent Ordinance enumerates the acceptable grounds for tenant eviction.

San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.9(j) requires both sellers and buyers of rent-controlled properties to notify tenants in writing of various rights, including that the fact of the sale does not permit the tenants to be evicted, the rent to be raised, or the terms of the rental agreements to be materially changed.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/7 Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws/§7.54 B. Just Cause for Eviction or Termination of Housing Services

§7.54 B. Just Cause for Eviction or Termination of Housing Services

Under just cause eviction standards, a landlord is prohibited from evicting a tenant except for one or more of the reasons stated in the ordinance. Most rent control ordinances that contain eviction controls set out the permissible reasons.

PRACTICE TIP: Although lawyers customarily negotiate agreements that alter statutory provisions, such waivers may not be enforceable in rent control jurisdictions because most ordinances prohibit provisions waiving tenants' rights. See Gombiner v Swartz (2008) 167 CA4th 1365, 1376 n4, 85 CR3d 83 (acknowledging that partial waiver of right to complain to governmental agency in mutually agreed settlement of specific issue may be enforceable).

Grounds constituting "good cause" generally break down into two types: tenant breaches (see §§7.56-7.62) and the landlord's need for possession (see §§7.63-7.68).

In April 2004, for example, the city of San Diego adopted what has become known as a Just Cause Ordinance. The ordinance applies only to the city of San Diego and only if a tenant has resided in the property for over two years. The ordinance lists the following as acceptable reasons for asking a tenant to vacate the premises:

- Failure to pay rent;
- Violation of obligation or tenancy or covenant of the tenancy and/or failure to cure such violation after receiving written notice;
- Committing a nuisance in the rental unit or around the rental community;
- Permitting the rental unit to be used for an illegal purpose;
- Refusing to renew the lease on the rental unit;
- Refusing to provide reasonable access to the rental unit as prescribed in CC §1954;
- To allow for owner/relative/resident manager occupancy;
- To make necessary repairs to or construction on the rental unit; and
- To withdraw all the rental units on the parcel of land from the rental market.

In 2002, the City of Glendale enacted a Just Cause and Retaliatory Evictions law which restricts the grounds for eviction and requires relocation fees in cases where the tenant is not at fault (e.g., good faith occupancy by owner or designated relatives or resident manager, permanent removal from rental housing use). Glendale Mun C Chapter 9.30.

In November 2002, the City of Oakland adopted the Oakland Just Cause for Eviction Ordinance, which likewise restricts the grounds for eviction. A group of landlords sought a writ of mandate to prohibit the ordinance. The court struck a provision that purported to create a presumption of violation if the owner recovered possession on the basis of an owner-move-in eviction but maintained continuous occupancy for less than 3 years. The provision was an invalid presumption affecting the burden of proof in conflict with Evid C §500 and was preempted. Rental Hous. Ass'n of N. Alameda County v City of Oakland (2009) 171 CA4th 741, 757, 90 CR3d 181.

In at least one jurisdiction, just cause eviction controls apply also to separate housing services such as parking spaces or storage. See, e.g., San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.9(a)(2). In the event of a dispute, a lawsuit must be filed so that the court may determine whether "just cause" exists. Following the removal or severance of the housing service, however, the rent board will determine the amount of a corresponding rent reduction upon petition by either the landlord or the tenant. San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.2(r). In March, 2007, the San Francisco Rent Board declined to adopt regulations to implement the requirement of good cause to sever the housing services. Until such time as the Rent Board enacts such regulations, it is up to the courts to interpret the provisions.

WARNING: Practitioners should determine if a city has enacted a just cause eviction law if they only sporadically handle cases involving property in a given city.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.55 1. "Good Faith" Requirements

Some ordinances require that an evicting owner be acting in "good faith" in addition to stating and proving "good cause." Although good faith is most typically a requirement for evictions based on the owner's desire to occupy the premises (see §7.67), it may be a requirement of other grounds for eviction as well. The issue is important for attorneys because such a subjective standard seems to require a factual determination in every case.

PRACTICE TIP: Several ordinances define the elements of "good faith," either in the body of the ordinance or in regulations, and it is important for the practitioner, whether representing the landlord or the tenant, to know these elements.

Efforts to expand local ordinances to specifically define certain conduct often necessary to prosecute an eviction action as constituting "bad faith" have been challenged. Most importantly, in Action Apartment Ass'n v City of Santa Monica (2007) 41 C4th 1232, 1249, 63 CR3d 398, the supreme court held that the litigation privilege of CC §47(b) conflicts with, and thus preempts, a section of the Santa Monica tenant anti-harassment ordinance that authorizes civil and criminal penalties against a landlord who files an action to recover possession of a rental unit without a reasonable factual or legal basis. The litigation privilege, however, preempts only partially the ordinance provision regarding the service of an eviction notice. Because an eviction notice is a communication regarding prospective litigation, whether it is subject to the litigation privilege is a question of fact. 41 C4th at 1250. A landlord who merely serves an eviction notice is only protected by the litigation privilege if litigation is contemplated in good faith and under serious consideration. 41 C4th at 1251.

Similarly, in Bisno v Douglas Emmett Realty Fund 1988 (2009) 174 CA4th 1534, 95 CR3d 492, the court of appeal applied the reasoning in Action Apartment Ass'n and held that the litigation privilege barred the tenant's claims for wrongful eviction under the Santa Monica just cause eviction control law arising out of the service of an eviction notice and subsequent unlawful detainer action. On the issue of whether the litigation privilege also protected the landlord in its service of a rent increase notice, the court of appeal permitted a retrial because whether the privilege applied was a question of fact, and the jury had not considered this defense.

In Baba v Board of Supervisors of the City & County of San Francisco (2004) 124 CA4th 504, 21 CR3d 428, a court of appeal held sections of the San Francisco eviction control ordinance addressing "owner move-in" (see §§7.65, 7.67) and Ellis Act (see §7.64) evictions to be unconstitutional. See §§7.12, 7.64F. The court invalidated provisions making it unlawful for a landlord to:

- Request that a tenant move unless the landlord in good faith intended to recover the housing unit;
- Seek or obtain a tenant's waiver of rights under the ordinance; and
- Obtain a tenant waiver unless the tenant was represented by independent counsel.

Despite the ruling in Baba, a court of appeal held that even by a mutual agreement with the tenant, a landlord cannot circumvent the local rent control ordinance setting maximum rents. See Gombiner v Swartz (2008) 167 CA4th 1365, 85 CR3d 83.

PRACTICE TIP: Practitioners representing landlords should document the good faith intention of the property owner or manager in instituting litigation, and those intentions should be recited in any settlement agreement. Practitioners representing tenants should investigate whether there are any facts that might lead a tenant to conclude that the owner had no basis in fact for the preparation and service of the eviction notice.

California courts have provided some guidance on the meaning of "good faith." In Four Seas Inv. Corp. v International Hotel Tenants' Ass'n (1978) 81 CA3d 604, 146 CR 531, the court upheld a directed verdict in favor of the landlord on the issue of retaliatory eviction, although the court accepted as fact that there had been a long history of disputes between the tenants and the former owners. The court noted that knowledge of those events would not create the necessary "retaliatory" motive, because it was clear that the new owners had intended to demolish the hotel from the date of their purchase. In so ruling, the court stated: "[M]otive is ordinarily a factual issue to be resolved by the trier of fact, but such an issue cannot be submitted to the jury unless substantial evidence appears in the record to support it." 81 CA3d at 610.

Federal regulations in effect during World War II provided that owners could evict tenants in order to occupy the premises themselves, but only if they did so in "good faith." Several California cases held that "good faith" meant "honestly; without fraud, collusion or deceit." See Janise v Bryan (1948) 89 CA2d Supp 933, 201 P2d 466; Gibson v Corbett (1948) 87 CA2d Supp 926, 200 P2d 216; Bumgarner v Orton (1944) 63 CA2d Supp 841, 146 P2d 67. Each of those decisions, which still appear to be good law, noted that to defeat the eviction, any ulterior or improper motive must have had some direct relationship to defeating the purpose of the rental price regulations. See also Gross v Superior Court (1985) 171 CA3d 265, 275, 217 CR 284, noting that cases interpreting wartime regulations continue to have "precedential value" because the "problems addressed by rent control legislation are the same whether those problems are the result of a wartime or peacetime housing shortage."

Another way of looking at the issue is that because the landlord may only evict a tenant to move in himself or herself or move in a family member in "good faith" under the various rent control ordinances, the landlord must plead and prove "good faith" as one of the elements of the landlord's case. See Lester v Isaac (1944) 63 CA2d Supp 851, 146 P2d 524. The landlord must prove the element of "good faith" to a preponderance of the evidence, the normal civil standard.

Tenant advocates might also argue that "good faith" determinations should be analogized to "retaliatory eviction" cases, in which the burden of proof may not require that the tenant prove that the absence of "good faith" is the sole or dominant reason for the adverse action, but simply that lack of good faith is a "substantial" or "motivating" factor. See Mt. Healthy City Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ. v Doyle (1977) 429 US 274, 50 L Ed 2d 471, 97 S Ct 568; Western Land Office, Inc. v Cervantes (1985) 175 CA3d 724, 220 CR 784. For discussion, see §8.130.

In its original form, CC §1942.5 proscribed adverse action against tenants when the landlord's "dominant" purpose was retaliatory. In amending the statute, the legislature's deletion of the word "dominant" brings the test for retaliatory motive in line with the analogous rule established by the courts in the employment arena, i.e., whether retaliation was a "substantial" or "motivating" factor.

PRACTICE TIP: A tenant's attorney taking a good faith issue to trial should draft a special jury instruction on this point, for example:

Although a lack of '"good faith" must be found to be a "motivating factor," lack of good faith need NOT be the "sole" nor "dominant" motive prompting the adverse action. The jury must determine whether the adverse action (e.g., termination of the tenancy) was taken because of a valid reason alleged by the landlord, rather than out of desire to punish the tenant for a protected activity.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.55A 2. Protection for Subtenants

Many rent control ordinances define "tenant" broadly enough to include subtenants; in that event the landlord must have just cause to evict a subtenant—even when the original tenant has given the landlord notice of intent to terminate the tenancy. See, e.g., DeZerega v Meggs (2000) 83 CA4th 28, 99 CR2d 366 (interpreting Berkeley's law). Other ordinances have been amended to provide added protections for subtenants or occupants who have moved into the rental unit after the original tenant took occupancy. See, e.g., West Hollywood Rent Stabilization Ordinance §17.08.010(21); San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.9(a)(2); San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Board Rules and Regulations §§6.13-6.14, 6.15A-6.15C. See also San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §§37.2(t) and 37.9(j) (buyers of rent-controlled properties must notify tenants in writing that any tenants, subtenants, or roommates who were lawful occupants at the time of the sale remain lawful occupants). The West Hollywood ordinance was upheld against a constitutional challenge in Pick v Cohen (2000) 83 CA4th Supp 6, 100 CR2d 839. But see Coalition Advocating Legal Hous. Options v City of Santa Monica (2001) 88 CA4th 451, 105 CR2d 802.

Some jurisdictions also provide relocation assistance to subtenants in good cause evictions when the subtenant is not at fault. See, e.g., San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.9C (for no-fault evictions, each authorized occupant is entitled to relocation assistance of $4500, with a maximum payment of $13,500 per unit, and each tenant aged 60 or older or disabled, and each household with minor children, is entitled to additional payment of $3000).

Perhaps unforeseen protection for approved occupants under local eviction controls was provided in DeZerega v Meggs, supra. There the landlord permitted serial roommates even though the lease agreement prohibited subleasing. One master tenant signed the lease and had the only formal, written contractual relationship with the landlord. Roommates came and went, but filled out forms provided by the landlord, although none signed a rental agreement with the landlord. The master tenant gave the landlord notice that he was vacating the premises, but his two roommates remained. The landlords instituted an eviction action against the roommates based on the notice. The court of appeal held that when co-occupants, whether or not characterized as subtenants or co-tenants, occupy a rent-controlled dwelling with the landlords' knowledge and consent, that occupancy cannot be disturbed, even if the original tenant terminates the master tenancy, unless the landlord has "just cause" to evict the remaining approved occupants.

The court refused to find that the notice from the master tenant bound the other occupants. Instead, the court extended the just cause eviction protections to the remaining occupants based solely on the notion that the landlord knew of their occupancy and had approved of it. It is unclear from the case whether under Berkeley's rent control ordinance a landlord may enforce a 30-day notice given by a tenant. Often such ordinances do not permit such enforcement and no court has directly addressed this point. See §7.71. On lease-drafting ideas, Practice Tips, and strategies in dealing with group tenancy situations, see §4.40B. For further discussion of DeZerega, see §§4.40B, 7.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Permissible Grounds for Just Cause Evictions

1. Tenant's Breach

§7.56 a. Failure to Pay Rent

All eviction control ordinances permit the landlord to evict a tenant for failure to pay rent, under CCP §1161(2), which permits such evictions under state law. See §§8.26-8.45.

Some rent control ordinances, such as the Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance, require that the landlord register the unit and serve the tenant with a copy of the certificate of registration as a precondition to demanding rent. Failure to comply with this requirement is a defense to an eviction for nonpayment of rent. Under the Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance, registration or service on the tenant of a copy of the Statement of Registration of Rental Units after service of a 3-day notice to pay rent or quit will not save the notice or the lawsuit based on the pay or quit notice. Both registration and service of the Statement of Registration of Rental Units must be accomplished by the time the notice to pay rent or quit is served. If the tenant previously paid excess rent, the landlord will be unable to evict for nonpayment of rent. Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance §§151.05.A, 151.09. See §7.29.

PRACTICE TIP: In jurisdictions that require proof of compliance, the landlord may wish to attach a copy of the rent registration certificate to the eviction notice and include the certificate on the proof of service of the notice. In jurisdictions with requirements similar to those in Los Angeles, if the landlord pays the registration fees after serving the notice and provides the tenant with proof of payment, some landlord attorneys have successfully argued this constitutes "substantial compliance" with the ordinance under CC §1947.7. Tenant attorneys may argue in response that (1) Section 1947.7 does not apply to eviction controls, and (2) because the Statement of Registration must have been served on the tenant as a precondition to demanding rent, payment of registration fees after service of the notice (and proof of same to the tenant) may not save the notice. At that point, the notice period may have expired, and the landlord was not entitled to rent during the notice period.

The tenant's failure to pay rent may be defended if the tenant can show that the landlord has collected overcharges, even if more than 3 years in the past. Any rent paid by the tenant in excess of the proper base rent counts as a credit against future months' rent, and there is no statute of limitations on asserting the offset. See Minelian v Manzella (1989) 215 CA3d 457, 263 CR 597; Nourafchan v Miner (1985) 169 CA3d 746, 215 CR 450. Moreover, excess rent paid to a prior landlord may be counted as a credit against the current landlord if the local ordinance provides for successor liability. Baychester Shopping Ctr., Inc. v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2008) 165 CA4th 1000, 81 CR3d 341.

Although there are no California cases on point, in 447 Assocs. v Miranda (NJ 1989) 559 A2d 1362, the court held that a late payment of rent that is the result of an unreasonable change in the lease terms does not constitute good cause for eviction.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.57 b. Failure to Cure Violation of Rental Agreement

Eviction control provisions usually authorize eviction under CCP §1161(3) if the tenant has failed to perform a condition or covenant of the rental agreement. Ordinances generally require notice to the tenant and an opportunity to cure the breach. These requirements may create a dispute over whether a particular violation can be cured and therefore whether an opportunity to cure must be given.

Some ordinances attempt to restrict the landlord's right to evict for breaches of covenants not only by requiring notice and an opportunity to cure, but also by limiting the right to evict to "substantial" breaches of "material" terms that are "reasonable and legal." For discussion of case law on the materiality requirement of CCP §1161(3), see §8.48.

A lease or rental agreement should set forth everything that may be important to the landlord and the tenant as a condition or a covenant. Restrictions that a landlord wishes to place on the use of the unit or the common areas, or on the tenant's conduct, must be included in the agreement in order to form the basis for a later eviction. See §1.31. A landlord is permitted to change a month-to-month agreement by serving a 30-day notice of change of terms of tenancy under CC §827, except for a change in terms and conditions that may be governed by an applicable rent control ordinance (e.g., decrease in the level of services to the tenant without a corresponding decrease in the rental amount). See §7.39.

Some rent control ordinances do not, however, permit a landlord to unilaterally change the terms of the rental agreement and then evict the tenant for violation of the changed term unless the tenant has agreed in writing to the additional covenant. See, e.g., Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance §151.09.A.2(c); Santa Monica Rent Control Board Regulation §9007(a), San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance §37.9(a)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.58 c. Conduct Constituting a Nuisance

Most eviction control ordinances permit evictions if the tenant commits a nuisance by causing substantial damage, or by disturbing the occupants of adjoining property or the immediate neighborhood. Some ordinances have crafted a special category of nuisance of conduct associated with drug dealing.

Unlike evictions for breaches of covenants, evictions based on breaches for damage, disturbance, or creating a nuisance do not always require an opportunity to cure. As a practical matter, the landlord may want to give the tenant an opportunity to cure the breach in order to establish a stronger case. A tenant who has willfully done substantial damage to the premises, however, could probably be evicted without an opportunity to cure.

PRACTICE TIP: Landlord: A tenant may be using the premises for an "illegal purpose" (e.g., storage and sale of stolen goods, storage and sale of drugs and controlled substances, prostitution) that clearly constitutes an illegal use (see §7.59). Nevertheless, it may be wiser to proceed to evict on "nuisance" grounds, based on the comings and goings of strangers at odd hours, yelling, fights, banging on doors, police activity, the appearance of illegal activities that disturb tenants, and the like. Typically, this conduct has already distressed the other tenants and thus cannot be cured.

PRACTICE TIP: Tenant: If the tenant is facing both an eviction for nuisance and a criminal case based on the same conduct, the tenant's attorney should seek a stay of the unlawful detainer case until the criminal case concludes to avoid having the tenant waive Fifth Amendment protections.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.59 d. Use of Premises for Illegal Purpose

Most rent control ordinances permit evictions if the premises are used for illegal purposes. In jurisdictions where illegal use of the premises is not a specific ground for eviction, the landlord may wish to provide in the lease or rental agreement that the tenant may not use the premises for an illegal purpose. Breach of this covenant might then be an independent ground for eviction. See §7.57.

Most ordinances that permit eviction for illegal use do not specifically require that notice of termination include an opportunity to cure. If the lease or rental agreement also contains a covenant against illegal use, then notice and an opportunity to cure probably would be required if the landlord elects to proceed on the basis of a breach of covenant. See §7.57. Some ordinances, such as the Santa Monica Rent Control Charter Amendment, require that the tenant be convicted of using the premises for an illegal purpose before the landlord is entitled to evict.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.60 e. Refusal to Permit Access to Landlord

Virtually every eviction control ordinance permits the landlord to evict if the tenant refuses to permit the landlord access to the premises as permitted under CC §1954. The landlord's rights of access include the rights to (CC §1954(a)):

- enter in case of an emergency;
- make necessary or agreed on repairs;
- make necessary or agreed on decorations, alterations, or improvements;
- show the unit to a prospective tenant or a prospective or actual lender (or lender's agent such as an appraiser);
- show the unit to contractors or workers when the tenant has abandoned or surrendered the unit; and
- enter under a court order.

A landlord's right of entry is not delineated exclusively by CC §1954. Other laws may dictate when a landlord has access. For example, fire codes may require a landlord to enter the premises periodically to check and maintain smoke detectors and security-bar quick-release mechanisms. See also Sachs v Exxon Co., U.S.A. (1992) 9 CA4th 1491, 12 CR2d 237, cited in §3.2.

For discussion of limitations on landlords' right of entry and notice procedures, see §§3.2-3.4. For landlord strategies, see §4.43.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.61 f. Refusal to Execute New Lease

Most rent control ordinances permit eviction if the tenant, who had a written lease or rental agreement that terminated after the effective date of the ordinance, refuses, after written request or demand by the landlord, to execute a written extension or renewal of the lease for a further term of like duration and having the same terms as the lease which has terminated. A landlord may neither make the terms of the tenancy more onerous nor shorten the term of the tenancy. If no new lease is created, the tenancy simply continues as a month-to-month tenancy on the same terms and conditions. CC §1945.

This ground for eviction does not, however, permit a landlord to refuse to execute a new agreement at the expiration of a fixed-term lease and then evict because the lease has expired.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.62 g. Improper Subletting

Most eviction control ordinances permit eviction if the tenant holding possession at the end of the tenancy term is a subtenant who was not approved by the landlord. Under such language, a landlord may evict an unapproved subtenant at the end of a fixed-term lease. Whether an unapproved subtenant could be evicted before the lease expires depends on the terms of the lease. Under CC §§1995.010-1995.270 and applicable case law, if a lease or rental agreement does not prohibit subletting without the landlord's approval, a tenant in a rent-controlled jurisdiction should be free to sublet. If the lease requires the landlord's approval of an assignment or sublease, the tenant's failure to obtain the landlord's approval before subletting should constitute a violation of the lease that would be good cause to evict (see §7.57). For discussion of the statutory and case law on assignment and subletting, see §§3.49-3.59.

Subletting may create a different problem for a tenant who sublets. Under some ordinances, a tenant who sublets for a fixed term (e.g., a three-month vacation) may not be able to evict the subtenant at the end of the subletting. This would be the case if only persons with a specified record interest in the property have the right to evict for owner occupancy. The tenant (the sublessor) would not be able to evict the subtenant to reoccupy the premises because the sublessor is defined as a "landlord" in the ordinance, but not as an "owner." (If there is no other cause to evict, the owner-landlord could not evict the subtenant unless he or she planned to occupy the unit.)

A tenant who takes in a roommate by subletting must be distinguished from one who takes in a roommate who becomes a cotenant. The cotenant becomes a tenant of the original landlord rather than a subtenant of the original tenant. In the cotenant situation, the original tenant has no right to evict the cotenant. Only the landlord may do so. For further discussion of issues arising in roommate situations, see §§1.7, 4.40-4.40B, 5.28-5.32, 7.28, 7.55A.

NOTE: The Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act in CC §1954.53(d) (see §§7.25-7.28) contains provisions on subleasing that may preempt local ordinances that conflict with the Act. In particular, §1954.53(d) provides that no law may restrict the amount a landlord charges in the event of a sublease, provided the sublease results in a total change of occupancy of the dwelling unit, and also mandates that a landlord's acceptance of rent does not operate as a waiver of a covenant prohibiting subleasing unless the acceptance occurs after the tenant provides written notice to the landlord.

In Danekas v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (2001) 95 CA4th 638, 115 CR2d 694, the court held that San Francisco's rent board did not exceed its authority under the San Francisco rent control ordinance by enacting regulations preventing a landlord from claiming breach of a lease provision against subletting where a new roommate replaces a vacating roommate. The court also held that the regulation could be applied retroactively to preexisting agreements. This did not create an unconstitutional impairment of contracts because the impairment of the landlord's interests was not substantial and the impairment promoted the significant public purpose of protecting tenants from the rent increases that would be caused by vacancy decontrol.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.63 2. Renovation or Rehabilitation

Some rent control ordinances permit a landlord to evict a tenant in order to rehabilitate a unit. The ordinance might limit this right to situations where the work is necessary to bring the building into compliance with applicable health and safety codes. Some ordinances require that the work cost a certain amount and take limited time to complete to allow a landlord to evict for this reason. Such evictions are usually conditioned on the landlord's obtaining all necessary permits before the eviction. Frequently, the ordinance will give the tenant the right to:

- occupy any vacant unit that the same landlord owns within the city; and
- reoccupy the vacated unit on completion of the rehabilitation work.

Relocation assistance is usually required to be paid in such evictions. The amount of relocation assistance and the timing of payment vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, and the rules may change suddenly. See, e.g., San Francisco Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance Section 37.9C; Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance Section 151.09.G.

In Aguirre v Lee (1993) 20 CA4th 1646, 25 CR2d 367, the court upheld the validity of a San Francisco ordinance that provided that, when a tenant has been evicted so the landlord can make repairs to the unit, the landlord must offer the unit to the same tenant on the pre-repair terms within 30 days of completing repairs.

For a decision defining "good faith" in the context of an eviction for rehabilitation of the unit under federal rent stabilization, see Dargel v Barr (Emer Ct App 1953) 204 F2d 697.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/7 Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws/§7.64 3. Demolition or Conversion Under Ellis Act

§7.64 3. Demolition or Conversion Under Ellis Act

A landlord may wish to terminate rental agreements and evict the tenants if the landlord plans to remove the rental units from the rental housing market, to demolish the units, or to convert them to some type of common-interest ownership (such as a condominium complex or a tenancy-in-common arrangement). In these situations, the landlord may evict only after obtaining all necessary city or county permits or approvals for the demolition or conversion. Some rent control jurisdictions, such as Berkeley and San Francisco, restrict demolitions and conversions. In Nash v City of Santa Monica (1984) 37 C3d 97, 207 CR 285, the California Supreme Court held that a landlord had no constitutional right to evict tenants in order to go out of business if he or she retained the right to sell the property.

In response to the Nash decision, the legislature enacted the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7), which preempts conflicting local ordinances and permits a landlord, subject to certain restrictions, to evict tenants in order to go out of business. The legislature expressly intended to overrule Nash to the extent that it conflicts with the Act. Govt C §7060.7. As stated in Bullock v City & County of San Francisco (1990) 221 CA3d 1072, 1097, 271 CR 44, the core of the Ellis Act is that no public entity shall, "by statute, ordinance, or regulation, or by administrative action implementing any statute, ordinance, or regulation, compel the owner of any residential real property to offer, or to continue to offer," the property for rent or lease. See Govt C §7060(a). In other words, the Ellis Act prohibits municipalities from enforcing local ordinances that prevent landlords from evicting tenants to go out of business. The Ellis Act, however, exempts (i.e., does not preempt local entity control over) conversion of guestrooms or efficiency units in residential hotels if they meet certain conditions. See Govt C §7060(a), cited in §7.64B. See also San Remo Hotel, LP v City & County of San Francisco (2002) 27 C4th 643, 117 CR2d 269.

Under the Ellis Act, the landlord's power to evict may be limited by specified requirements, e.g., recordation of restrictions (Govt C §§7060.1(a), 7060.3), mitigation of adverse impacts on displaced tenants (Govt C §7060.1(c)), re-rental requirements (Govt C §7060.2), and notice requirements before eviction (Govt C §7060.4). See §§7.64C-7.64F, 7.64H. Despite the Ellis Act, some cities continue to restrict the total number of conversion of rental units to condominiums and impose requirements allowed by the Act. See, e.g., Berkeley Mun C §21.28.050. However, tenants have no right to insist that compliance with the Subdivided Lands Act (Bus & P C §§11000-11200) be undertaken as a precondition to an eviction based on the Ellis Act, and a landlord does not violate the Subdivided Lands Act by selling partial interests in a building withdrawn from rent or lease under the Ellis Act. Daro v Superior Court (2007) 151 CA4th 1079, 61 CR3d 716.

Although preventing municipalities from compelling owners to continue renting, the Ellis Act does allow them to impose certain requirements and controls (see §§7.64C, 7.64H) with respect to units withdrawn under the Act. But under cases interpreting it (see §7.64H), the Act has been held to prohibit municipalities from enacting unauthorized restrictions on (or imposing obstacles to) an owner's right to obtain the benefit of the Act. For instance, the city may not record Notices to Comply against hotels being withdrawn under the Ellis Act that refer to the city's ordinances related to sprinklers, hotel conversion, and demolition. An owner of a hotel that is being withdrawn from rental housing use need not comply with requirements imposed by the city's sprinkler ordinance, nor need the owner first obtain a permit to convert or demolish the building. Reidy v City & County of San Francisco (2004) 123 CA4th 580, 19 CR3d 894. The landlord may not be required to notify tenants about their rights to receive relocation payments and to state the amount of payment that the landlord believes to be due. Johnson v City & County of San Francisco (2006) 137 CA4th 7, 40 CR3d 8 (placing burden on landlord to state belief as to tenant's entitlement to assistance creates substantive defense in eviction cases not contemplated by the Ellis Act).

In cities where required by local ordinances, however, relocation assistance must be paid. Failure to pay the relocation assistance in a timely manner is a defense to an Ellis Act eviction. See Govt C §7060.1(c). The amount of relocation assistance and the timing of payment vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, and the rules may change suddenly. See, e.g., San Francisco Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Ordinance Section 37.9C (Proposition H), applicable to notices served on or after August 10, 2006; Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance Section 151.09.G, with higher amounts applicable to notices served on or after April 11, 2007.

Allowable local restrictions on residential hotels have been separately addressed by the Ellis Act following cases in which owners of those hotels have been able to go out of the residential hotel business. For example, following the trustee's filing in Reidy, but before the case was finally decided, the Act was amended to allow local governments in cities having a population of over 1,000,000 (i.e., San Francisco, San Diego and Los Angeles) essentially to prohibit most residential hotel owners from going out of the residential hotel business. See §7.64B.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.64A a. Constitutionality of Ellis Act Upheld

The City of Santa Monica challenged the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) in City of Santa Monica v Yarmark (1988) 203 CA3d 153, 249 CR 732. The court held that the Act was valid, effectively occupied the field, and preempted local rent and eviction control ordinances that sought to force landlords to continue to make units available for rental housing.

Santa Monica brought the action because it had passed an ordinance that (1) required landlords to obtain a removal permit before evicting and (2) authorized issuance of a permit only when rental units were uninhabitable or when the landlord planned to replace the units with a rent-controlled multifamily building. The city argued that its procedures were not subject to the Ellis Act or, alternatively, that the Ellis Act was an unconstitutional attempt by the legislature to deprive a charter city of its rights to regulate under the "municipal affairs" and "police powers" provisions of the state constitution. Rejecting these arguments, the court held that the Act was valid and that Santa Monica's removal controls were preempted. The preemptive ruling in Yarmark was modified by a 1999 amendment to the Act, codified in Govt C §7060.7(b). See §§7.64D, 7.64H.

For further discussion of the Ellis Act, see §§7.64B-7.64H. For detailed Ellis Act defense strategies, see California Eviction Defense Manual §§17.14, 17.25-17.49 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

© The Regents of the University of California

b. Basic Provisions of Ellis Act

§7.64B (1) Allows Withdrawal of Housing Accommodations From Market

The Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) states that "accommodations" may be withdrawn from rent or lease, and defines accommodations as the residential rental units in any detached physical structure containing four or more units or, with respect to a structure containing three or fewer units, the units in that structure as well as the units in any other structure located on the same parcel of land. Govt C §7060(b). Effective January 1, 2004, however, the Ellis Act exempts from its definition of "accommodations" guestrooms or efficiency units in a residential hotel if it (Govt C §7060(a)):

- Is located in a city and county (or in a city with a population of over one million);
- Had an occupancy permit issued before January 1, 1990; and
- Did not deliver to the public entity an Ellis Act notice of intent to withdraw the units from rent or lease before January 1, 2004.

This amendment was intended to supersede the ruling in Bullock v City & County of San Francisco (1990) 221 CA3d 1072, 271 CR 44.

Under the definition of "accommodations" in Govt C §7060(b), an owner of two four-unit buildings on the same parcel may assert rights under the Act with respect to only one building, for example, while continuing to rent the other. If the Act is invoked with respect to a smaller building, then all units on the same parcel must be withdrawn. There is no requirement that an owner "go out of business" with respect to any other property or any other units. Similarly, a landlord does not need to comply with the Subdivided Lands Act (Bus & P C §§11000-11200) if the owner has sold partial interests in a building withdrawn from rent or lease under the Ellis Act prior to evicting tenants from the withdrawn property. Daro v Superior Court (2007) 151 CA4th 1079, 61 CR3d 716.

The Ellis Act does not permit the owner of a single condominium in a multi-unit building to withdraw his unit from the rental market. Valnes v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1990) 221 CA3d 1116, 270 CR 636. The Act does not authorize owners to avoid other obligations that may arise as a matter of contract, such as leases or agreements with public entities. Also, local governments retain whatever power they may have with respect to the granting and denying of entitlement to the use of real property through planning, zoning, and subdivision map approvals. See Govt C §7060.1. See also §§7.64, 7.64H.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.64C (2) Authorizes Local Restrictions on Subsequent Rental

Prior to amendments enacted in 2002, the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) itself did not impose any requirements on property owners; it merely authorized local jurisdictions to adopt specified requirements. Effective January 1, 2003, Govt C §7060.2 was amended to require that, in all rent control jurisdictions that had adopted processes to facilitate rental housing owners going out of the rental business, all owners who offer those units for rent within 5 years after filing any notice of intent to withdraw the rental units, regardless of whether that notice is withdrawn or rescinded, are prohibited from renting the units at market rates, and must rent them at the lawful rent in effect at the time the notice of withdrawal was filed with the public entity. Government Code §7060.2(b) provides statewide requirements that if the units are again offered for rent or lease within 2 years, the owner is liable to both the displaced tenants and the public entity for actual and exemplary damages. The provision contains its own statute of limitations and requires that any such suit be brought within 3 years of the withdrawal of the units from rent or lease. Additionally, if the units are to be rerented within the 2-year period, the owner must not only offer the units to the same tenants provided the tenants have indicated in writing that they would like to be able to reoccupy the withdrawn units, but the owner must also offer to reinstate the old rental agreement for those tenants. Many cities have amended their laws to be in accordance with Govt C §7060.2. See, e.g., West Hollywood Rent Stabilization Ordinance §17.52.010(15)(c); Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance §151.25; Santa Monica Rent Control Board Regulation §1629.

These requirements are in essence designed to provide a disincentive to owners who rescind the notice of withdrawal once all the tenants have been evicted.

On strategies for the evicted tenant when a withdrawn unit is rerented within the 2-year limitation, see California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 17 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

In Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. v Pearl Street, LLC (2003) 109 CA4th 1308, 135 CR2d 903, the rent board sued to enjoin the landlord from entering into sham tenancies in order to evade the recontrol provisions of the Ellis Act. The landlord claimed that the suit was a strategic lawsuit against public participation (SLAPP) based on his filing with the board notices of intention to rerent. The court disagreed, holding that the suit was based primarily on whether the landlord was entitled to charge market rents.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.64D (3) Requires Reasonable Review of Permit Applications and Fair Return on Demolished and Reconstructed Units

Under Govt C §7060.7(b), the Ellis Act expressly states that it is not intended to preempt local environmental or land use regulations, procedures, or controls governing demolition and redevelopment of residential property. See also Govt C §7060.1(b) and cases confirming a city's right to restrict demolition permits, e.g., Lincoln Place Tenants Ass'n v City of Los Angeles (2007) 155 CA4th 425, 66 CR3d 120; First Presbyterian Church v City of Berkeley (1997) 59 CA4th 1241, 69 CR2d 710. Landlord advocates have argued that local restrictions based solely on the desire to avoid removal of rental units should be disallowed under the Act. See 59 CA4th at 1249. For discussion of local regulation of Ellis Act evictions, see §§7.64C, 7.64H.

A city may violate the Ellis Act if it unreasonably delays in making a decision on an application for a demolition permit. See Ali v City of Los Angeles (1999) 77 CA4th 246, 255, 91 CR2d 458, which observed that the city's delay was so unreasonable "as to be arbitrary, not in furtherance of any legitimate governmental objective, and for no other purpose than to delay any development other than for an SRO hotel."

If a landlord withdraws housing units from the market under the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) and then demolishes the units, any replacement housing units constructed on the same property and offered for rent or lease within 5 years after the withdrawal are subject to rent control despite their status as new construction. See CC §7060.2(d). Such a result is not preempted by the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (CC §1954.52(a)). Apartment Ass'n of Los Angeles County, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (2009) 173 CA4th 13, 92 CR3d 441. Under the Ellis Act, the landlord may have the initial rent set for replacement units "on the basis of a fair and reasonable return." Govt C §7060.2(d). On fair return issues generally, see §§7.13, 7.38.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.64E (4) Does Not Prohibit Multiple Owner Occupancy Use

Although the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) authorizes removal of property from residential rental use and allows restriction of re-rental (see §§7.64B-7.64C), it does not preclude multiple owners from occupying the property even if, as a tenants-in-common group, the owners grant each other the right of exclusive possession of different units in consideration for proportionate payment of maintenance and mortgage expenses. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. v Bluvshtein (1991) 230 CA3d 308, 281 CR 298.

In Bluvshtein, the defendants purchased a building as tenants in common and then invoked the Ellis Act to evict several tenants. Defendants then moved into the vacant units and entered into an oral agreement among themselves, granting each partner exclusive occupancy of certain units and each partner agreeing to pay certain amounts toward the property purchase and maintenance. The rent board sued the defendants, claiming that their agreement created a landlord-tenant relationship between the partnership and each partner, thereby constituting reentry into the rental market within 1 year of withdrawal, which would exempt the property from the Ellis Act. Citing the first edition of this text, the court ruled that the agreement did not create a landlord-tenant relationship because defendants did not agree to pay "rent."

The Subdivided Lands Act (Bus & P C §§11000-11200) does not provide a defense to Ellis Act evictions. In Daro v Superior Court (2007) 151 CA4th 1079, 61 CR3d 716, six owners (two persons and four LLCs) purchased a six-unit residential apartment building in San Francisco. The six owners executed a tenancy in common agreement which provided that each owner would have an undivided percentage interest in the property and the exclusive right to occupy one of the six units. The LLC owners purchased their interests as investments to repair and remodel, then sell to owners who would occupy the units. At the time of sale, all units were occupied by tenants. The owners served Ellis Act notices terminating tenancy. The tenants sued for injunctive relief under the Unfair Competition Law (Bus & P C §§17200-17210) alleging that the owners had violated the Subdivided Lands Act. The trial court agreed with the tenants; the court of appeal reversed, holding that the tenants were not among the class of persons the Subdivided Lands Act was intended to protect.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Landlord-Tenant Practice/7 Practicing Under Rent and Eviction Control Laws/§7.64F (5) Notice and Reporting Requirements

§7.64F (5) Notice and Reporting Requirements

An owner wishing to withdraw an accommodation from the rental market may be required to give advance notice to the public entity and tenant under Govt C §7060.4. If a city enacts such notice provisions, then the rental units are deemed withdrawn 120 days after the delivery of the notice to the city. The notice requirements are exacting, and failure to comply is a procedural defect that can be asserted as a defense to an eviction. See Govt C §7060.6.

In addition, a city that enacts the advance notice provisions in Govt C §7060.4 must allow seniors and disabled individuals (who have lived in the affected units for at least 1 year) the right to extend their occupancy and delay the withdrawal of their units for up to 1 year after the date the notice is delivered to the public entity, provided that the tenant or lessee notifies the owner of the extension within 60 days after that delivery date. If a senior or disabled person exercises this right, the owner has a corresponding right to extend the withdrawal of the other units on the property for the same period. Govt C §7060.4(b).

A city may require official recordation of a notice that the Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) procedure has been used. Govt C §7060.4(b). This requirement is consistent with the fact that subsequent owners must also comply with the obligations imposed on the evicting owner. Govt C §7060.3. In addition, the landlord must periodically report to the rent board regarding the status and use of the unit for 5 years after withdrawal. Govt C §7060.4(a).

WARNING: The Ellis Act has a number of ambiguities and internal inconsistencies, including whether the 120-day withdrawal notice completely supersedes the usual 30-day termination notice, and if not, whether the 120-day notice must precede or succeed the 30-day notice. See, e.g., Practice Tip in §8.22. See also California Eviction Defense Manual, chap 17 (2d ed Cal CEB 1993).

In response to alleged abuses of the Ellis Act, San Francisco added provisions to its eviction control ordinance that punish both civilly and criminally a landlord who (1) requests that a tenant move or threatens to recover possession either verbally or in writing, unless the landlord has a good faith intent to evict and does actually go forward with the eviction, (2) seeks or obtains a tenant's agreement not to cooperate with an investigation by the City for violations of the ordinance, and (3) seeks or obtains a tenant's waiver of rights under the ordinance. The ordinance also provided that any such waiver by a tenant would be void as contrary to public policy unless the tenant was represented by independent counsel. These provisions were held to be an unconstitutional denial of free speech and contrary to a tenant's rights to self-representation in legal proceedings. Baba v Board of Supervisors of the City & County of San Francisco (2004) 124 CA4th 504, 21 CR3d 428.

PRACTICE TIP: The effect of the ruling in Baba on the ordinance's general "non-waiver" provisions is probably narrow. But there is (and has been for years) some disagreement among practitioners on the meaning and extent of the "non-waiver" provisions in many local ordinances, which do not allow a tenant to give an advance waiver of a rent control or eviction control provision. For example, a lease cannot require the tenant to waive the protections of the ordinance. However, in the event of a dispute and a settlement of that dispute for adequate consideration, there can be a concurrent waiver of a particular provision. Attorneys regularly negotiate (either as part of litigation or to avoid litigation) moveout settlements with such waivers.

However, in Gombiner v Swartz (2008) 167 CA4th 1365, 85 CR3d 83, in which the landlord and tenant entered into a settlement agreement that effectively exempted the property from a rent control law, a trial court hearing a civil case for retaliatory eviction and excess rent concluded that the parties could exempt the property in this manner. The court of appeal reversed, explaining that an agreement that violates the rent increase provisions of the law is void and unenforceable.

In Johnson v City & County of San Francisco (2006) 137 CA4th 7, 40 CR3d 8, the court held that the Ellis Act preempted an ordinance requiring landlords seeking to evict under the Ellis Act to notify a tenant of the right to receive relocation payment the landlord believes to be due to the tenant. In those jurisdictions where an ordinance requires it, however, relocation assistance must be paid. Failure to pay the relocation assistance in a timely manner is a defense to an Ellis Act eviction. See Govt C §7060.1(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.64G c. Eviction Actions Under Ellis Act

After a rental unit is "withdrawn," an eviction suit may be necessary to actually recover possession. Ellis Act (Govt C §§7060-7060.7) evictions proceed the same as any other eviction, but the tenant cannot assert rights under local rent control ordinances or regulations as a defense to the eviction.

Under Govt C §7060.1(d), the Act does not supersede CCP §§1159-1179a (governing evictions) or the various provisions relating to landlords and tenants in Title V of the Civil Code (commencing with CC §1925). Whether a defense such as discrimination may be raised against Ellis Act evictions is an unsettled question.

Government Code §7060.6 provides that a tenant may assert the landlord's noncompliance with the Ellis Act as a defense to an Ellis Act eviction. In addition, a closely divided California Supreme Court held that the defense of retaliatory eviction is available to tenants who are being evicted because the property owner has withdrawn the residential units, but that the defense may be overcome by the owner showing that the withdrawal was undertaken in "good faith" (i.e., with bona fide intent). See Drouet v Superior Court (2003) 31 C4th 583, 3 CR3d 205. The decision overturns the court of appeal decision, which had held that the defense of retaliatory eviction was simply not available as a defense to an Ellis Act eviction. The majority opinion suggested that trial courts might first want to determine whether, under CC §1942.5(e), the landlord's withdrawal of the units under the Ellis Act was bona fide, since the finding of such bona fide intent would overcome the statutory defense of retaliatory eviction set forth in CC §1942.5(a), (c). The three dissenting justices (1) disagreed with the majority's analysis that CC §1942.5(e) permitted a landlord to demonstrate that the withdrawal of the units was bona fide, and therefore defeat the defense of retaliatory eviction, and (2) stated that the Ellis Act does not permit a landlord to evict a tenant for a retaliatory purpose, and therefore would permit a tenant to defend such an eviction on the ground that the landlord's purpose in withdrawing the rental units was to retaliate against the occupying tenant.

Tenants may file actions for declaratory relief to determine whether landlords are entitled to Ellis Act evictions. In Marlin v Aimco Venezia, LLC (2007) 154 CA4th 154, 64 CR3d 488, the landlord sent Ellis Act notices to residential tenants. The tenants then sued the landlord for declaratory relief, claiming that the landlord was not entitled to rely on the Ellis Act. The landlord filed an unlawful detainer suit and responded to the tenants' action by filing an anti-SLAPP motion. The trial court granted the anti-SLAPP motion and dismissed the tenants' action. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the tenants' suit was not based on the landlord's filing and serving of the notice, but instead was based on the tenants' claim that the landlord was not entitled to invoke or rely on the Ellis Act.

